At three months pregnant now, Harry’s morning sickness had hit him with full force, but he didn’t suffer as badly as he had with Braiden or the quintuplets, he didn’t know if it was because he just wasn’t eating enough or if this pregnancy was just better than the others, but he was thankful that he only felt queasy in the mornings until he’d eaten a few ginger newts to settle himself, though sometimes if he ate something with a powerful taste or smelt something with a strong odour then he would vomit in the afternoons or evenings, but he was holding his stomach better than he’d been able to before.

Blaise’s birthday ended miserably and Harry felt terrible for that, but Leolin’s condition had worsened and the frustration and the anger had swelled to breaking point. Blaise had finally snapped and shouted at them that he didn’t want to celebrate or receive any well wishes and that the one thing that he wanted was his son out of the hospital and no one could give that to him. He shouted that he didn’t want books or clothes, that he didn’t want to receive any sort of gift while Leolin was a hairsbreadth away from death, which made them all feel dejected and miserable.

Harry had cried then, softly and silently at first and then huge, body wracking sobs from a combination of pregnancy hormones, the stress and worry over Leolin, the anguish of being told that his little son had worsened yet again and having someone, anyone, shouting at him for any reason at all and he had just crumbled.

He had clutched at Blaise tightly and cried onto him, much to said man’s distress and guilt; Harry had surprised his mates with his outburst as they hadn’t been expecting it. He had been strong, silent and stoic these past few days, but the effort had cost him dearly and now being shouted at, not even personally, but just hearing someone shouting, had snapped his resolve and welled up his emotions and he couldn’t stop crying as he buried himself in Blaise’s robes and released all the emotions he had had pent up through his cutting tears.
He was aware that he was being held tight, that he had more than one person holding him as he stood, drained and sniffing with a sopping wet face. He didn’t release his tight hold on Blaise.

“I’m sorry, Innamorato, so sorry.” Blaise murmured. “I didn’t mean to shout, I never wanted to upset you. We’re all going through a terrible time; I know… I’m so sorry. Perdonami per favore.”

Harry rested on Blaise and let his mate hold him, his weak body quivering and Blaise realised the danger as he swept Harry up into his arms and sat with him on the settee, Harry securely in his lap where he couldn’t fall.

“I got you a cup of tea.” Max said a bit uncertainly, as if he didn’t know if Harry would drink it or throw it in his face, cup and all.

Harry wrapped his hands around it and sipped. He didn’t care anymore if there was a calming draught in it or not. He didn’t care about anything anymore.

“Are you okay?” Draco asked softly.

Harry nodded slowly, he felt detached from himself.

“I know you wanted me to have a good birthday, but I just can’t enjoy myself, Prezioso, I just can’t. I’m sorry.”

“It’s not that.” Harry croaked out bitterly. “It’s everything, Leolin getting worse, the pregnancy, everyone’s stress and then I heard shouting, it didn’t matter if it was at me or not, you could have been shouting at the table and I would have reacted the same, it just broke something in me and I couldn’t stop the flood of emotions.”

“That’s okay, getting it all out is good.” Nasta said petting his hair lovingly. “Do you want an early night?”

Harry just nodded. No fighting, it would do no good. Nasta may have made a pretence of asking him, but he knew that if he refused then Nasta would have insisted and he’d end up in bed anyway. It was easier to save all of his strength and energy for Leolin.

Harry had assumed that it would be just him going to bed, it was only ten in the night and they would use his pregnancy against him, but when he was tucked up in the bed and covered over and just dozing lightly...his mates slid into the bed with him after they’d changed and gone through the motions of cleaning themselves. It seemed that they all needed an early night after the early start yesterday and the broken sleep coupled with the highly stressful day.

His lovers held him tightly and threw arms under and over one another, moving legs to fit in and get comfortable and they moved with one another until they were all pressed close and holding one another, but were comfortable enough to sleep where they were without any errant elbows or knees digging into anyone else or any loss of circulation to any limbs.

Harry fell asleep quickly and easily when they were all still and settled, exhausted after such an emotionally draining day and lulled to darkness by the soft, even breathing and strong heartbeats that surrounded him.

The five of them didn’t see or hear from Myron or Richard for the next week and they never seemed to be home when Max floo called them, which put pressure on Aneirin and Marianna to be there to watch the five babies around their work commitments while they went and visited with Leolin, though neither of them made any sort of murmur or complaint.

The five of them all assumed that it was something to do with Amelle and her nest, that perhaps something had happened that needed them to floo over to America to be there for her and Caesar, but when they turned up at midday on the twenty-first of October, they were both exhausted but very happy.

“Ashleigh went to see a mind Healer.” Myron informed them proudly, his chest practically exploding from how puffed up he was. “She’s been checked into a hospital, but she’s finally realised that she doesn’t want to lose her entire family. Her Father, Thomas, is incredibly disappointed in her, but it was her Uncle Todd’s horror at what she’d done that finally got through to her. He’s the only other Dracken currently alive in Ashleigh’s family and having him on board with us really gave Ashleigh the boot she needed to sort herself out.”

“It took her long enough.” Richard grumbled. “It only took both of our sons and all of our daughters taking her from their birth certificates and the man who helped ground her in childhood showing his abhorrence of her actions, but maybe now she can become the woman that we both fell in love with again.”

“Even Alayla took Mum from her birth certificate?” Max asked surprised. He had shared with them that he didn’t think his youngest sister would ever go through with the plan, even if it wasn’t her real birth certificate.

Myron nodded. “She was crying as much as your Mother was, but she did it. I think that along with not being able to be here for Leolin and losing all of her children and the knowledge that she wouldn’t be able to see any new babies as Amelle has now nested with her newest grandchild… it was the last straw for her and she agreed to talk to a mind Healer, who made her see that she really did need the help. Four days later she was packing a suitcase to go to the hospital. I’m so proud of her. Perhaps now you would reconsider putting your Mother back on your birth certificate, where it belongs?"

“How is Amelle?” Harry asked as the tense silence stretched on for long minutes, Max saying nothing.

“Still nesting.” Richard nodded, looking uncomfortable and upset that Max had refused to say anything on the birth certificate matter. “She’s doing well from what Caesar said, she’s eating well and she’s preening, she almost killed one of her brothers, but she’s ready to give birth any day now.”

“I hope Ashleigh gets better.” Harry said softly.

“She’s been frantic over Leolin being in the hospital, I had to forbid her from flooing over to see you.
I didn’t think you needed it.” Myron said eagerly, as if he wanted Max to see how much his Mother had changed.

Harry nodded. “You’re right of course; the last thing I want is anyone demanding to see Leolin when I have such limited time with him myself and being clamoured is the last thing that I need. He’s getting worse and worse.”

Myron closed his eyes and let out a sharp breath. “How bad is it?”

“Bad.” Max said breaking his own silence now that the topic was back on Leolin, though his face crumpled with worry and fear with the topic change. “He’s so weak from continually fighting that he hasn’t been off the ventilator in nine days. He hardly ever wakes up anymore and he’s drinking less and less. We’ve been called in the middle of the night more times this last week than the last month he’s been in the hospital.”

“He will get through this.” Harry said, but even to his own ears he sounded defeated, clutching at straws and he closed his eyes against the world. His arms ached to hold Leolin again, he hadn’t been able to pick him up in two weeks and he was feeling the strain of it now more than ever.

“I am so sorry, Harry.” Myron said strongly.
“He’s not dead!” Harry burst out. “Not yet.”

Myron looked taken aback at his sudden exclamation, but he nodded respectfully.

“I need lemon.” Harry sniffled.

His mates looked at him as though he’d announced his intentions to go on a skiing holiday to Switzerland.

“I need lemon!” He shouted at them and Max’s face scrunched up in confusion, but he went into his kitchen and came back a few minutes later with a glass of lemonade.

“Thank you.” Harry said as he drained the glass.

“Was that…was that a craving? You want lemon flavoured things?” Draco asked.

Harry frowned. “I think so. I want something else too, but I don’t know what.”

Harry was distracted by his disturbed, unhappy son as Braiden woke up early from his nap. He’d barely been down for half an hour and it was beginning to show as his happy, sweet boy had turned into a short tempered, grouchy grump.

Harry cradled him to his chest, even as Braiden cried and fought him off, almost making himself sick with his tears.

“Pass him here, love, you don’t need him playing up in your condition.” Draco offered but Harry shook his head as he clamped Braiden tightly to himself.

“I’ve got him.” Harry said sadly as he listened to Braiden crying and grizzling against his chest, his fists clenched and his feet kicking. Harry had thankfully turned him to the side so he was kicking at the air and not kicking at his pregnant belly.

He sat down and shushed Braiden gently, rocking him on his lap. It didn’t take long before he was calm and sniffling against Harry’s shirt.

“Mama.” He whimpered softly.

“I know, sweetheart, everything’s turned upside down and you don’t know what’s going on, but this will all be over soon, I promise and then everything will be back to normal and you’ll have me and your Daddies here all day with you.”

“Mama.” Braiden repeated softly, cuddling in tight, his body sagging as he drifted off to sleep, tear tracks still wet on his face.

Stuck on the settee and with nowhere to go for a couple of hours, Harry drifted off to sleep along with Braiden while his mates spoke softly with one another and with Myron and Richard.

The next few days crawled by at a snail’s pace and Harry was stunned when he flooed home from the hospital on the twenty-eighth to find Amelle sat happily on his settee, Caesar flapping around her like a caricature vulture asking if she needed or wanted anything. She steadfastly ignored him.

“Amelle!” Harry said happily surprised as he moved to greet her and the newborn baby that she was holding in her arms.

His mates who flooed in behind him were just as surprised to see her as he was as they turned and greeted Amelle and Caesar.

“I thought that this might help you, just a little.” Amelle said tiredly as she handed Harry her newborn baby.

Harry cuddled up next to Amelle on the settee and looked at the absolutely beautiful baby in his arms; he could tell immediately that the baby was already a few days old though.

“When did you…?”
“The twenty-fourth, the early hours.” Amelle answered. “Six pounds and one ounce, nineteen inches and with very healthy lungs.”

Harry’s face paled and he felt light headed.

“Oh…oh I’m so sorry! I didn’t mean it like that, I swear. I just didn’t think.” Amelle said thoroughly embarrassed and abashed.

“I…I know, it’s okay.” Harry said with a dry mouth. He swallowed painfully.

“Did you have a boy or a girl?” Max asked, breaking the mounting tension.

“That’s a lovely name.” Harry forced himself to smile. “Eleonora and Beatrice. Is Nora excited to be a big sister?”

“I think she is.” Caesar said with a smile as he dangled Nora, upside down, in front of their faces. She was screeching in happiness.

“Caesar!” Amelle said panicked, snatching her daughter from the air and cradling her tightly.

Harry laid a hand on her arm. “It’s okay.” He soothed. “I know it seems scary, but it’s not. Max does it to the kids all the time, they’re okay, they actually like it! I think they take after him in the brains department.”

That made Amelle laugh softly and her arms loosened around Eleonora until she was holding and supporting her daughter on her lap and not clutching at her. Caesar mouthed ‘thank you’ behind Amelle’s head and Harry smiled tiredly.

“How’s Leolin?” Myron asked.
Harry’s mouth dropped into an anguished grimace. He shook his head. “He’s gotten even worse. He’s…he’s listless, his eyes are dull and he doesn’t recognise us, not even me. It’s like…like he’s looking right through me!” Harry said, his voice cracking as he sobbed. “It’s like he’s given up and he’s just waiting to die. He’s suffering and there’s nothing that I can do.”

Amelle patted his back as he cuddled with her newborn daughter, Beatrice. The little girl made a soft noise and wriggled in his arms, one arm flopping back jerkily as she tried to move, her head twisting to face his chest.

Harry took her tiny little hand and tucked it back into her blanket and after a soft press of his lips to a plump cheek, Harry handed her back to Amelle, he had a feeling that Beatrice was hungry and Amelle breastfed her children, so he didn’t want a baby trying to latch onto his nipples in search of milk.

He excused himself to go into the kitchen. He made tea, making a whole pot just for himself, drizzling in some honey and squeezing the juice of a whole lemon into it. His craving for lemon had not abated in the slightest.

He opened the cupboard to pull down the guest mugs and he spied a box of Oxo cubes. He had the instant and insane urge to put one in his mouth. He bit his lip and looked through the kitchen door and into the hallway…no one was there and he could hear everyone talking softly in the living room, cooing over baby Beatrice and praising Amelle.

He barely noticed that his hand had been closed around the box before he’d even fully decided he that was going to pop one into his mouth. Just to try it of course.

He unwrapped the foil around the little cube and he licked it. His tongue tingled at the salty taste. He popped the whole thing into his mouth and let it crumble and melt on his tongue as he broke it up against the roof of his mouth. He shivered and he took out several more and put them in his pocket before he replaced the box and got out more cups. He made up the tea and took it back into the living room, handing out the tea to everyone.

He sat down to drink his own tea, but he didn’t realise that he was unwrapping another Oxo cube until Draco drew attention to it.

“What in the name of Merlin are you eating?” He asked.

Harry blinked as everyone turned to look at him. He blushed and lowered his hands to his lap.

“It’s…uh…”

“That’s an Oxo cube, why the hell are you eating Oxo cubes?!” Max asked aghast. “They taste vile.”
Harry frowned and lifted the cube to his mouth and flicked his tongue over it. That shiver at the salty taste happened again and he pressed against one corner to make it crumble into his mouth, the granules making his tongue tingle and caused his mouth to fill with saliva.

“I want it.” Harry said softly. “I need it.”

“You’re craving Oxo cubes? Of all things to crave. They’re not even food!” Max argued.

“They’re edible.” Nasta conceded.

“ Barely! They’re used to flavour stuff and make gravy, not to eat on their own!”

“What did he say?” Draco asked as he frowned at Blaise and then looked questioningly to Nasta as their family translator.

“He told Max to leave his little lover alone and then told Harry that he loved him and that he was his beloved.” Nasta said with a smile.

“Ti amo, Blaise.” Harry smiled as he popped the cube into his mouth and let it melt on his tongue.

“Do I need to get in extra Oxo cubes now as well as lemons?” Max asked him, defeated.

Harry nodded. “Please. It’s what I’ve been craving. The missing one that I couldn’t work out.”

“They have no nutritional value! How can you be craving them? What can you be craving from them?”

Harry shrugged. “I just want them.” He replied simply.
Their guests left them at three in the afternoon, when Healer Cole flooed them and told them that they couldn’t go back for their afternoon visit. He didn’t say much more, only that Leolin needed to go for more tests and that he needed to get back.

Harry felt himself just stop and stick where he was, his thoughts wouldn’t move, he felt floaty and robotic as he moved around stoically, waiting for that dreaded floo call to tell them that Leolin had passed on, but he refused to think about it, he held strong for Leolin, sent him all the strength that he could spare and as a result of his worry and stress and the exhaustion that he felt, he collapsed.

He woke up with a cool hand on his cheek to the horrified, concerned face of Draco, who was shouting for Nasta, who was there what seemed like a second later, making Harry’s world spin at the sudden appearance, even though he was already lying flat on his back, and causing his head to sear and pulsate in pain originating from the back of his skull and pounding behind his eyes, white washing his vision.

“Harry? What happened, Draco?!”

“I don’t know, I came up to use the bathroom and found him in a heap on the floor!” Draco replied.

“Harry, can you hear us?”

“Yes.” He replied quietly, barely above a whisper, trying to sit up, but a huge hand that could only be Max’s pressed him back to the floor and held him there to prevent him from trying to move again.

“What happened, love?” Draco asked him panicked.

“I…I don’t know.” He said as he pressed a hand to his head.

“Did you hit your head? Do you have any pain?” Blaise asked him.

“I…the back of my head hurts.” He admitted, still a bit out of it.

Max’s other hand, the one that wasn’t pressing him to the carpet, slipped around to finger the back of his head. He hissed.

“You’ve got a hell of a bump, love. Can you try and sit up?”
“Maybe if you took your hand from my shoulder.” Harry teased weakly.

He was eased up and his vision deteriorated into white star bursts. He reached out and groped blindly for something to hold onto and he found a bicep. He dug his fingers and his nails in to anchor himself, but hands were suddenly supporting him from all sides.

“I collapsed.” He said with a groan. He wasn’t going to get another moment of peace for the rest of this pregnancy thanks to this incident.

“Were you hungry, thirsty, tired?” Nasta questioned gently.

“I…I don’t know.” He said as he pressed a hand to his temple, trying to ease the throb of pain behind them. “I was thinking about Leolin and the next I knew Draco was above me shouting for you.”

“Were you dizzy?” Max asked, checking his pulse with his fingers pressed into his wrist.

“I was when I woke up; I don’t think I was before I collapsed. I don’t remember.”

“Blaise, go and get a glass of water for him, please.” Nasta instructed and Blaise rushed away.

Harry was eased to his feet and Nasta held him tightly around his back at his upper rib cage with one hand, just under his armpit and his other arm rested across his stomach to hold his hip, prepared in case Harry fell forwards or backwards. He looked as worried as Harry had ever seen him, stressed too. Tired, paler than usual and the pressure of being the top dominant in these circumstances was showing through clearly, but he was still strong and calm, the voice of reason and he always knew what to do, a rock in the turbulent sea.

“Think for me, Harry, please, this is important, we need to find out why you collapsed so that we can prevent it from happening again, especially with these two.” Nasta said seriously, laying a hand over Harry’s belly, which had ‘popped’ in the last week and he was finally showing, just enough for his mates to have something to cup in their palms.

“I…I’ve been tired lately.” Harry said, which he knew was an understatement; all of them were exhausted and emotionally drained.
“You’ve been getting a good amount of sleep, even if some of those hours were due to the influence of potions.” Draco said worriedly.

“Not that kind of tired.” Harry said with a sigh. “I’ve been exhausted, mentally, physically, emotionally, I’m tired of this and I just want it to be better.”

“Come on, let’s get you…”

“If you say bed I’m going to hit you.” Harry said weakly.

“To the settee then, but you are lying down.” Nasta finished sternly.

Harry didn’t fight, he just gave in with a sigh and he let Nasta carry him down the stairs and into the living room, tucking him up on the settee with a blanket. Blaise handed him a glass of water. Harry drank deeply and he actually felt so much better for it, he drained the entire pint glass in half a minute. He couldn’t remember the last time he’d drank something and he looked at Nasta sheepishly.

“What?” His top dominant asked curiously. “You have that look on your face again, the one where you want to apologise, but don’t want to tell me what’s wrong.”

“I can’t remember the last time I had something to drink.” He admitted with a wry frown.

Nasta sighed. “Blaise, bring in the jug of water please.”

Blaise was already halfway out of the door.

“I’m sorry, I just didn’t realise…it didn’t seem important.” He said, lowering his head to the cushion.

“You need to take better care of yourself…you will take better care of yourself, or I’ll have no choice but to do it for you.” Nasta said seriously.
Harry nodded. “I just…I’ve eaten, I had toast this morning and Max made me a sandwich and I did eat that…I just forgot to drink anything with it.”

“You had juice with breakfast.” Draco said. “But I don’t think you drank all of it, we were running late for the hospital.”

“I’m sorry.” Harry sighed.

“Get some rest, sleep if you want, but stay there and drink some more water.” Nasta said sternly and Harry rolled his eyes behind Nasta’s back as he stood and turned away. “I saw that!”

“You did not!” Harry complained.

“I can see you in the mirror.”

Harry looked up at the mirror over the fireplace and groaned at Nasta’s smirk. He pulled the blanket over his head and of course, that entertained his babies, who were scattered on the floor with a sea of toys and they clapped and gurgled at him.

Harry popped his head out of the blankets and seeing Regan startle like Harry had burst a balloon or something had him laughing. Braiden giggled and clapped his hands at him.

“Peep-o!” He called out to them before ducking his head back under the blanket.

“You’re supposed to be resting, not playing.” Draco told him.

“I am resting. I’m lying down aren’t I?” Harry challenged as he played peek-a-boo with his babies. Regan startled every single time Harry’s head popped up from under the blanket.

“He’s such a scaredy cat!” Max laughed. “Where’s that Jack-in-the-box?”

Max then went to search through an entire spare room that was filled with toys, all the birthday and Christmas presents, for the errant Jack-in-the-box that had been given to Braiden last Christmas as Blaise set up the camcorder with a smirk.
Max came back into the living room with it and his grin was a mile wide as he sat the box in front of Regan.

“If he cries, you’re dealing with it.” Harry told him seriously.

Farren, who was sat near Regan, shuffled over to watch as Max encouraged Regan to open the lid of the box, which would trigger the soft puppet inside to spring out.

The two boys watched in avid attention as Regan peeled open the lid, Blaise recording their reactions for future blackmail material, not that he’d tell Harry as such.

The lid opened and the puppet on the spring leapt out and Regan startled so badly that he toppled backwards, but Farren’s reaction was the one that surprised them the most. He hadn’t startled or leapt back, jumped or even cried out in surprise, his first instinct had been to lash out and he slapped the puppet hard as it leapt out of the box, catching it in the air and hitting it to the floor.

The three of them burst out laughing and Harry felt like he couldn’t breathe through his laughter.

“Tell me you got that on camera!” He demanded of Blaise, struggling to speak through his laughter.

Blaise nodded. “Oh yeah, I got it.” He laughed back.

“What is going on? Harry, you’re supposed to be resting!”

“Farren…Farren!” Harry choked out on his laughter.

Nasta misunderstood and picked up an angrily chattering Farren, sniffing him for injuries.

“He’s…is he actually angry? What happened?” Draco asked as he had followed Nasta back into the living room.

“He does not like the Jack-in-the-box.” Max laughed. “Watch.”

Max set the box back up and took Farren from Nasta, sitting him in front of it. He opened the lid himself and once again as the puppet sprang out, Farren lashed out to hit it and slapped it to the floor.
“I’m not sure I like us encouraging him to be violent.” Harry said after he’d calmed down and wiped away his laughter tears.

“It’s not violence per se.” Nasta said, looking at Farren carefully. “I think it’s the fight or flight instinct…most people would be inclined to startle and jump back, his instinct is to fight it.”

“I don’t like that either.” Harry frowned.

“It may save his life one day, Cariad. If Farren turns out to be a submissive Dracken I’ll eat my left testicle. He’ll need those instincts to survive the meetings and all the better if those instincts are honed and leaning more towards fight. His hand-eye coordination is amazing for his age too!”

Harry licked his lips and picked Farren up and rested him on his chest. Farren had grown taller and heavier than all his other sac siblings and he was closing in on Braiden quickly. He was gaining three to four pounds a month and he’d grown four inches since Harry had checked last month, he wasn’t crawling much and he wasn’t even trying to stand, so where the three other quintuplets and Braiden were rushing around, crawling, climbing, their weights were levelling out and they were gaining a pound or so a month, but Farren was content to continue letting himself grow and gain weight.

“Oh you’re getting heavy.” Harry huffed and then waved away Max who tried to take Farren away from him. “You take away my baby and you’re a dead man.” He threatened with a slightly hiss.

Harry cuddled up with Farren and they both took a nap, at least until Farren started whining for food and woke Harry up from his little nap. Max happily gave them a snack of scrambled eggs and bread, but the smell of the eggs had Harry rushing for the downstairs bathroom, even if he hadn’t moved from the settee and Max was feeding the kids in kitchen, he could smell it as strongly as if Max was waving them under his nose.

Draco came with him, but if it was one thing Draco had a problem with, it was vomit. He winced every time Harry heaved and he flinched when the vomit hit the water of the toilet.

“Just go away, Draco, you’re making it worse.” Harry groaned. “I want tea, go and make me tea. Put lemon in it. Lots of lemon.”

Draco nodded and left him, all but running from the bathroom, seemingly without noticing that Harry was upset with him.

Nasta came in just a minute later. Him, Harry liked having around when he was being sick and as those big, strong hands moved him into a better position and rubbed firm circles on his back, brushing his hair away from his sweaty forehead, he felt better. He made Harry feel calmer, made him feel cared for and that was why Harry trusted him as his top dominant. Nasta cared and he was calm in a crisis.

Nasta sorted him out, helped him wash out his mouth and then settled him back onto the settee; his promised cup of tea from Draco was on the coffee table.

“Was that…?” Nasta asked.

“The smell of the eggs.” Harry grimaced. “It just sent me running.”

Nasta nodded as he handed Harry his tea. He lay his hand on Harry’s belly softly.

“It seems these two are giving you the run around.”

“Not really. It’s not too bad actually; remember the morning sickness with Braiden? I thought I’d never be able to eat anything again and the pain and discomfort with the quintuplets is nothing compared to this, but then this time during my last pregnancy I was just a week or two from going into sudden labour with them, that pain was bad. This is okay…manageable.”

Nasta smiled just as the floo flared to life and out stepped someone that Harry had given up the hope of seeing.

Remus Lupin was cradling a little boy to his chest, Harry’s heart about stopped. His supposed Godson would be six months old already and Harry hadn’t seen him once before now. His hair was bright green, like blended peas.

Nasta stood from the settee and deliberated with himself, trying to tear himself in half, did he stand in front of a pregnant Harry who had just been very sick, or the door that led to his children? He chose Harry, trusting that Max, Blaise and Draco, who were feeding the children in the kitchen, would be sufficient to protect them.

“I…I couldn’t say all that I needed to in a letter, I had to see you face to face.” Remus said nervously, breaking the stunned silence.

Harry blinked. “And bringing your son is going to achieve what? Act as a shield or a deterrent to prevent us from attacking?”
“I just thought that you’d like to finally meet him.” Remus said mildly. “I’m not here to fight and hopefully no one will attack anyone.”

“Pass him here then. It’s you I’m angry with, not him.”

Nasta took the little boy from Remus and handed him carefully to Harry, who smiled at the little boy, who grinned back. He already had five teeth that he could see, for a six month old that was impressive.

“His name is Edward, after Tonks’ Father, but to us he’s just Teddy.” Remus said and he didn’t seem to know where to put his hands now that they were empty of his son.

“Hello Teddy, how are you?” Harry asked happily and he watched as those blue eyes changed to completely match his own. He laughed. “I think he likes me.”

He turned Teddy to show Nasta and Remus that Teddy’s eyes were now the same deep, dark green that his own were. They clashed terribly with his green hair.

“He likes taking the colours from everything around him; he made himself look like a tree when Dora took him through the forest around our home the other day. Greyish-brown skin like bark, two tonal orange and brown hair like the leaves.”

“That must be hell to hide. How do you stop him from doing it in public without using magic on him?” Harry asked concernedly.

“We can’t take him out into the Muggle world, not until he has a bit of control over what he’s doing and has more understanding of why he can’t do it around Muggles. Have you taken your children into the Muggle world?”

Harry nodded. “Max goes to the supermarket every two weeks, he usually takes at least two babies with him and he alternates them depending on their mood really. Why are you here?”

Remus looked at the floor, before looking back up determinedly. “To explain myself.”
“I don’t think there is anything to explain, I think I understand perfectly.” Harry said icily.

“Who are you talking…to. Oh.” Max said curiously as he came into the living room with a coughing Calix on his arm.

“I read that two of your children were in St Mungos, I don’t put much stock in the Daily Prophet, but that cough doesn’t sound good.”

“Calix is alright now, but he was in the hospital and he was readmitted shortly after he was released when it became apparent that he wasn’t getting any better, but it’s just his cough now. Leolin… Leolin hasn’t come out of the hospital yet. Eight weeks and counting.”

“I am so sorry, Harry.” Remus said sadly. “Do the Healers know what caused it?”

“Calix contracted Bronchiolitis, he passed it to Leolin before we…before I could separate them and they were both hospitalised. None of the other four got it, just my two youngest, weaker babies.”

“I don’t think it’s fair to say that they’re both weak, Harry.”

“I didn’t mean it like that.” Harry insisted. “But neither of them were breathing at birth, they were both premature and now they both get lung infections…it can’t be a coincidence!”

“Why can’t it?” Remus asked him simply.

“Why not any of the others? Why just Calix and Leolin?”

“Perhaps all of your children had the virus, but the four older children were able to fight it off.”

“Then Calix and Leolin are weaker.”

“They’re fighting, Harry, if they were weak, they wouldn’t be fighting, weaker they may be, but not weak.”
“Leolin…he’s…I think he’s starting to give up.” Harry said softly. “Every day he’s getting worse, more listless, more pale, more exhausted…he sleeps for almost twenty hours a day now.”

“Perhaps he just needs something to remind him to keep fighting. Maybe he doesn’t want to see his Mother and Fathers so pale and tired and stressed themselves, maybe he wants what he’s used to and not this pale, worried and forced shell.”

Nasta let out a warning growl, but Harry placed a hand on his arm.

“Not with children in the room, love.” He said softly. “Do you really think we’re making Leolin give in quicker?”

“It can’t hurt to try, Harry. Get more sleep, eat more, try and be happy around him without being forced, I know that will be difficult, nearly impossible given the circumstances, but he will be able to read that your attitude is forced and he won’t know why and it’ll upset him. I’ve been reading a lot of baby behavioural books and anything that I can get my hands on really since Teddy was conceived.”

“We haven’t been able to see him this afternoon.” Harry said sadly. “He took another bad turn.”

“I’m sorry to hear that, I am.”

“Where have you been?” Blaise demanded angrily. “Do you know how upset you’ve made Harry?”

Harry looked to see him stood beside Max, Braiden and Regan in his arms. Draco was behind him again, framed in the doorway with Tegan in his arms.

“I came to explain.” Remus told him.

“I don’t hear much explaining.” Draco said sarcastically.

Remus sighed.
“All of you sit down.” Harry ordered. “I feel weird being the only one sat down and Nasta won’t let me get up.”

“Is that…”

“This is Teddy, Remus’ son.”

“Your Godson, if you still want him to be.” Remus said quietly.

“Of course I do.” Harry said softly, pressing a kiss to Teddy’s cheek and watching him burble happily. “I never gave my children Godparents, I didn’t see the point. I don’t plan on dying and the chances of all five of us being killed together is slim and if we are, our children will go to family… together of course. I would burst out of my grave in angry vengeance if they were all split up from one another.”

“You are pregnant again?” Remus asked, spying the bump as he took the armchair behind him as his mates sat on the settee, Max sitting on the floor with the babies as they crawled over one another to reach their toys.

Harry sighed and nodded. “I conceived on the twentieth of July. I’m due in February and currently I’m three months pregnant with twins. We don’t know the gender yet.”

Harry nodded. “Two babies, one placenta. They’re identical, as if I needed any more stress, I get two babies that are going to be identical to one another and knowing my luck, they will end up being like Fred and George! Which reminds me, I haven’t told Mrs Weasley yet.”

“We’ll send an owl to her tomorrow.” Nasta nodded. “Hedwig has been a little restless lately; she’s attacking Esmeralda and Jasmine.”

“She likes Saracen.” Harry chuckled, giving a look to Draco, who rolled his eyes.

“I do not want to referee the sex lives of our owls, it’s not my fault that I liked the male eagle owl the most and you have a female owl and Max has two female owls!”

“If he gets all three of them pregnant…” Blaise warned.

“We can sell the eggs to the bloody owl emporium.” Draco said folding his arms over his chest.

Harry laughed and shook his head. “Let’s just leave them to it for now, the attic is their domain.”

“We’re getting off track.” Blaise pointed out, glaring at Remus. “You have upset my submissive mate; you’ve ignored him, hurt him, now you come into our home and expect us to just accept you?”

“Let him explain, Blaise.” Nasta said softly.

Remus licked his lips and sat forward in the chair. “I was…I was selfish. I’m a very selfish man, I’ve come to realise this. I was selfish when I left Harry at only fifteen months old because I couldn’t bear to look at him and see James. I use my…condition as an excuse to wallow in misery and then I use that self-created misery to do things for myself. I’ve held Dora at arm’s length for months and then I gave in to her and I became possessive. Nothing else really mattered except for her, I forgot about you, Harry and I know that sounds terrible, but I swore that I wouldn’t lie to you when I came to explain everything to you and that’s the truth. You were happy and well cared for, you had your mates and your children, so once again my selfish side came out and I thought of myself, of what I wanted…it didn’t even occur to me to invite you to the wedding. I convinced myself that you’d be too busy, that you wouldn’t want to come, so I never asked and for that I’m sorry. Dora is helping me become a better man, a better person and she’s making me realise exactly how selfish I am.”

“And Teddy?” Harry asked softly. “Why didn’t you tell me about Teddy? Not even a note that Tonks was pregnant, you just sprung it all on me at once!”

“Again, because I’m a selfish man. I wanted to keep it to myself, just for me. I told Tonks that I’d sent out the owls to everyone, including you, when I hadn’t. She was my Wife, she had my child growing inside her, I didn’t want anyone else to know. I didn’t want anyone taking her attention away from me, I wanted it to be our secret and I honestly didn’t think anyone would mind me taking that time to just be there for the both of them. I realise now how very wrong I was.”

“Why didn’t you tell me this when I sent you a letter asking?” Harry demanded.
“It wasn’t…it wasn’t something that could be said in a letter, Harry and I was busy with Teddy and with Dora. Andy has been around every day too to help Dora, I love her, but she is definitely not blessed with any homemaking skills. I can do that easily enough, but with Teddy too and juggling the full moon and the aftermath of it as well, it’s difficult.”

“Tonks is back in work.” Harry said as he realised what Remus was saying between the lines. “You’ve been at home with Teddy all day.”

Remus looked a bit startled and he nodded. “Being who I am…I can’t actually find work, Tonks is the one who works, I’m a house-husband.”

“It’s not too bad.” Harry said with a small smile. “Though I have nothing to complain about, I get to play with my babies all day and sit on my arse being fed by hand by my loving partners.”

Max snorted and shook his head.

“Max does all of the cooking.” Harry said, poking the back of Max’s head with his socked toes. “Nasta keeps everything clean and tidy, Blaise is job hunting to provide for us and me and Draco are being lazy Lords of the family.”

That got him a laugh from everyone and he smiled, glad that the tension was gone. He had more than enough tension to deal with without anyone adding to it.

“So all of this…everything that’s happened, is because you’re selfish?” Nasta asked seriously.

Remus nodded. “I didn’t understand why anyone would be upset that I’d kept it to myself…I know now, Dora has very much made me see the error of my ways, she was disgusted that I hadn’t told you about anything, Harry. She wanted to come today, probably to make sure that I actually came, but she’s in work all week, she told me to send her best to you for the baby in the hospital. The Daily Prophet still doesn’t know the names or genders of your children, so we didn’t know which two were admitted or why, the Prophet is just speculating, there was a different reason in every article, though they have stopped all mentions of you or the children.”

“It’s going to stay that way too.” Harry sniffed. “Lucius and Myron are suing them.”

“I had heard that too. I very much enjoy the Quibbler.” He said with a sly smile.
Harry smiled too. He remembered the article about Sirius, he’d enjoyed the Quibbler since then too and that one of his good friends was the editor, or co-editor rather, just made him enjoy it all the more and it gave Hedwig something to do now that they’d cancelled their Daily Prophet subscription in protest of their treatment by the media, maybe now, after the lawsuit had been successful, he’d pick it back up, he knew that Draco liked being kept in the loop, but their house was so filled with magazines it was a wonder that they could move.

Nasta got subscriptions from all over the place, monthly subscriptions to Magical Menageries, Creatures Criteria, Flying Beauties: A Monthly Journal for Dragon Handlers, Linguistics for the Logical Wizard and Flames, Claws and Scales as well as The World News newspaper which came every morning. Max had a monthly subscription to The Practical Potioneer that Esmeralda dealt with along with several medical journals and a subscription to The Daily Dose, a magazine for Healers and pharmacists and Blaise had his own subscription for an Arithmancy magazine; Theory of Numerology, which Harry used to swat at the occasional fly and he stole some of Nasta’s linguistic magazines on occasion too. Draco only had two subscriptions, one for Finical Finances and the second for Magical Business Growth. They had so many magazines that Harry wondered where the hell they found the time to read any of them, as he never actually saw his lovers reading them, but they then turned around and quoted from them. More than once he’d wondered if his mates shared a time tuner behind his back.

“I thought you liked me, I thought that you cared for me.” Harry said softly as the silence stretched awkwardly. “Why wouldn’t you want to tell me?”

“I didn’t want to tell anyone.” Remus said uncomfortably. “It was selfish of me, I know. I am sorry, Harry, I didn’t…it wasn’t my intention to hurt anyone with my actions, but I always seem to be doing just that, intentional or not.”

“Max, I think we need tea.” Harry said with a sigh. “Lots of tea. Does Teddy need anything?”

Remus shook his head. “I fed him just before we left the house.”

“Is he okay to move around?”

“He’s crawling.” Remus said with a nod.

Harry placed Teddy carefully on the floor and watched as he moved around slowly, exploring and touching everything in this new environment, a bit wary of the five babies playing with a pile of toys, but unlike Remus, Teddy took the plunge and crawled over to them and sat down, just on the edge of the pile of toys and the circle the five babies made.
Harry watched with pride and love as Braiden looked up and saw him, he tilted his head curiously and looked to Harry.

“Mama?” He questioned and pointed to Teddy.

“That is Teddy, Braiden love, be nice to him he’s only little.”

Braiden grinned as if he understood and he picked up a plastic, musical ball and handed it over to Teddy, who screeched happily and grabbed it between both hands, the ball jingling merrily as its buttons were pressed by Teddy’s clenching hands.

Max came back in with the tray of tea and he served Harry first and the smell of lemon was so powerful that Harry’s mouth was watering before he’d brought the cup up to his lips for the first sip.

“This is perfect; you have to make it like this all the time.” Harry said.

“Tomorrow you’ll want more or less.” Max teased him with a wry smile.

“I know, but today, this is perfect.”

Harry settled down and watched as Max played the host, serving Remus his tea, though he was a bit stiff on the conversation. He sighed, this was by no means the end of things, he knew that, but he hoped, that at least in his case, it was a step in the right direction.

Remus had told him before that he was a selfish man; Harry hadn’t blamed him for that. He hadn’t blamed Remus for leaving him with the Dursley’s as a baby because of his resemblance to his Father, but this, this was one in the same…Remus hadn’t told him, or anyone it seemed, that he’d gotten Tonks pregnant because he wanted to keep it to himself. It actually made him wonder if it was a werewolf trait, a bit like the submissive Dracken’s need to keep the species of newborn babies to themselves, just for a little while, even though everyone around them, including their mates, were dying to know if the baby was a Dracken or not.

He sighed, it was going to be a long road for everyone involved to walk, but if they kept together and kept going, then they could make that walk together and he hoped that at the end of it, they didn’t head off in separate directions.
Wednesday the eighteenth of November marked his seventeenth week of pregnancy, he and Remus were exchanging owls and he brought Teddy over every Saturday for a playdate, but it was slow going and they were still a little stilted and awkward around one another. Harry couldn’t just forget that Remus hadn’t wanted to tell him about his marriage and baby just because he hadn’t wanted to, but he sucked it up, Remus hadn’t told him about it, he had self admittedly been selfish and now Harry had to get over it. What was done was done and couldn’t be changed, so they had to put it behind them and move on. If only his mates were as easy to convince, but none of that mattered to him at that moment, as the eighteenth held such a huge surprise that Harry almost cried.

“Are you sure?” He warbled out as he clutched Leolin to his chest, free of wires as of three days ago and off the ventilator for the last two weeks.

“Yes, we feel that he’s strong enough now that he’s finally managed to fight off the virus with the aid of certain spells and some mild potions. He’s doing well, his vitals have picked up over the last few weeks, he’s eating more and he’s got some colour back to his cheeks, we’re happy to let him go home with you.”

Harry was so happy and so relieved that he started crying as he cradled Leolin to his heart.

“Ma.” His baby said softly, making Harry cry all the more.

“Yes love, you get to come back home with us.” Harry sobbed out through his happy tears.

Draco wrapped his arms around Harry’s waist tight and rested his chin on Harry’s shoulder.

“I’m so happy.” Harry cried out. “Thank you so much for everything you’ve done for him, thank you for saving his life, you’re both miracle workers!”

“If there is anything that we can do.” Max said sincerely.

“I just can’t wait to sleep in a proper bed.” Healer Cole said with a smile and a hand to his back. “Those transfigured beds aren’t good for my eighty-six year old back.”

“I’m spending a week in bed with my Wife.” Healer Almus said with a naughty grin that made him look ten years younger and infinitely less tired. “We’ve both accumulated three weeks holiday with all the hours we’ve pulled.”
“We’d be incredibly happy to send you both and your families to the Maldives.” Harry said seriously. “After everything that you’ve done for us, I’d send you both for the year.”

“We were doing our jobs, Harry; we’ve come to love this little guy, grumpy scowls and all.” Healer Almus told him as he took Leolin’s hand and waved it gently.

“We still want to do this for you.” Nasta said just as seriously. “You deserve the break.”

“They aren’t going to accept, just buy them non-refundable tickets and shove it in their hands.” Max said. “But before that, let’s get Leolin home. I’ve kept his bedding freshly laundered for the last several weeks ready for when he came home.”

“You can’t do…!” Healer Almus started in shock, but Nasta cut him off.

“Our son means the world to us and you have inarguably saved his life and made him healthy and strong enough to be able to come home with us today, we owe you more than a holiday, but as I cannot give you my beating heart, our submissive has decided to give you a break away from this hospital, I will allow this as we take our son home for the first time in almost eleven weeks, we owe you more than we could ever give you, let us do this for you to show how very grateful we are.”

“We do this for every patient.” Healer Cole said sternly. “We were doing our jobs.”

“How often do you spend every single moment of your time, for eleven straight weeks, monitoring a patient in quarantine for twenty-four hours a day just to keep him alive?” Draco asked them seriously.

“I admit that this has been a rather unusual situation and Leolin has needed a continuous level of upmost care, but it is still our jobs to look after him and we get paid to do so.”

“You have lived in this hospital, in this room and the office next door, for eleven weeks while you’ve been caring and nursing our vulnerable son back to health and strength, if anyone deserves a holiday it’s you both.” Harry said firmly. “So we will send you and your families on holiday, we’ll send your tickets to your partners if we must, but it’s our gift to you both for the dedication that you’ve shown our son.”
Healer Cole shook his head. “Get him home, I’m sure you have family waiting patiently to see him again.”

Harry nodded and he was escorted out of the hospital room. They didn’t have anything to help them get Leolin home, no blankets, no carrycot to keep him safe, Harry contented himself with Nasta’s strong, solidly muscled arms wrapped around him and Leolin tight, their son between them as Nasta protected them both through the floo network until they reached their home.

Harry peered tearily at Myron, Richard, Alexander and Aneirin who were sat talking softly.

“You were gone for barely an hour; Leolin hasn’t taken another turn has he?” Richard asked with a sad look.

“Why are you crying, Harry?” Aneirin asked with a sort of soft horror.

“I’m so happy.” Harry said with a sniff and Nasta broke away from him and Harry showed Leolin to the four men, his golden eyes back to their previous vibrancy and he let out a soft burbling giggle as he recognised where he was.

“You were allowed to bring him home?” Myron said stunned, even as he leapt up and came to hover over Leolin.

“Yes, the Healers said that the virus has passed through him and he’s back to good health, he’s eating again, he’s got the colour back into his face, now we just have to keep him this way.” Harry said determinedly.

“I’ll go and grab his bassinet, he must have missed it after so long in that hospital issued bassinet.” Max said, more for something to do as they all knew that there was no way that Harry was letting Leolin go.

Harry sat down in the middle of the settee so that he could have people sat on both sides to see his little baby.

“I must go and tell Kimberly.” Alexander said excitedly. “It’s wonderful to see him home.”

Harry couldn’t let Leolin go, even when he was urged to by his mates so that they could have a cuddle. He apologised and told them that he couldn’t let him go and they understood, they sighed and grumbled, but they understood.

“You need sleep yourself, so you will put him down for bed, he needs his sleep.” Nasta said sternly.

Harry nodded. “I just…I need to hold him for a bit.”

“Ma.” Leolin said sleepily.

“I’m so happy that he recognises me again.” Harry said softly as he pressed his cheek to Leolin’s.

“Let him sleep, Harry.” Max said as he shook Leolin’s tiny duvet into its cover. “He should be napping right about now.”

“Leolin cat naps through the day, you know that he doesn’t keep to the same schedule as the others.” Harry said.

“I thought we were trying to keep him on a regular schedule so that he felt less anxious about changes.”

“After being in that hospital room for eleven weeks, I think he needs a bit of doing what he wants to do for a little bit. He’s happy to be back here, can’t you see that?”

“Don’t push him too hard, Harry, he needs rest and recuperation now.”

Harry nodded. “I know, of course I know that. I just want to hold him.”

Leolin raised a hand to Harry’s face and pressed a tiny hand against his chin and he babbled softly. Harry grinned at him.

“I’m so happy you’re home.”
“Ma.” He agreed softly before he pulled his hand back and the first knuckle went into his little mouth as he sucked on it.

Harry held him as he fell asleep and only then did he let everyone have a hold of him before Nasta tucked him up in his bassinet, obsessively smoothing out his duvet and making sure that it was tucked in around Leolin’s body.

“Cysga’n dawel.” He said to Leolin softly and laid a soft kiss on his cheek. “Rwy’n dy garu di.”

“What did you say to him?” Harry asked when Nasta came to sit next to him.

“I told him to sleep tight and that I loved him.” Nasta replied, a bit gruffly.

Harry twisted his body to rest up against Nasta and he cuddled in tight.

“I love you.” Harry said softly.

Nasta smiled down at him and kissed his forehead. “I love you too, Cariad.”

“I think today is the best day I’ve had all year.” He said in a whisper.

Nasta nodded. “I know what you mean, we’ve had a lot of trials and obstacles to get over this year and more to come in the next year, but we will get over them together, I will always be here for you, Harry, for all of us. I love you all too much.”

Harry smiled to himself and he rested his head over Nasta’s heartbeat. The strong, even thud under his ear helped relax him and soothe him and before he knew what was happening, he’d been lulled into sleep, his first, deep and peaceful sleep for many months.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

They had a stream of visitors over the next two days and Harry was happy to welcome Amelle back into his home as he let her cuddle his son as he cradled Beatrice.
“How are you little Bea?” He asked softly as those baby blue eyes traced every inch of his face.

“Is little bumblebee a Dracken?” Max asked Amelle curiously. “Or are you doing a Harry and keeping it to yourself for several months first?”

Harry rolled his eyes. “Of course she’s keeping it to herself; Beatrice is not even four weeks old yet.”

Amelle smiled a bit uncertainly, as if she didn’t know how long she was supposed to be keeping the secret for.

Harry went and laid his hand on her forearm.

“You keep it a secret for as long as you feel you need to.” He said seriously. “It’s something personal to you, let Caesar beg and wind himself up, but only tell others when you want to.”

Amelle grinned at him and nudged him with her shoulder.

“When have you got to go back to the hospital?” She asked.

Harry grimaced. “Soon. I’ve had more than enough of that hospital.” Harry laid a hand over his pregnant belly. “I’ll be glad when these two are born, but not any when soon, I don’t want another panic like I did with the quintuplets.”

Amelle smiled in sympathy and nodded. “I understand why you don’t want any more premature babies; you must have been so frightened.”

“It was terrifying.” Harry admitted with a nod. “My second ever pregnancy, it was with five babies and I had no clue what was happening to me.”

“Sanex said he heard the rip from across the room.”

Harry nodded. “Yeah, it took a few moments for me to take in the pain of that and several more before I realised what had happened.”
“Was it very painful?”

“The worst.” Harry said with a grimace. “I don’t remember much, I went feral very quickly afterward and the memories come in random bursts, but I do remember the first incision…all the amniotic fluid just came gushing out and because my sac was already ripped, Farren just fell through very soon after, tearing the edges of the incision I’d made because I didn’t have time to make it any bigger before he fell out of me. I made myself almost sick with worry during the first few days after I’d given birth when I thought back to what might have happened if I’d caught his head or back with a claw, he was so close to my abdomen, if he’d been in any other position…” Harry shook his head, dislodging those thoughts quickly. “No, I pushed away those thoughts quickly afterward, but I wouldn’t wish that sort of labour on anyone.”

“I hope I never have a pregnancy like that, I’m paranoid as it is with just singletons.”

“Hopefully these two will be happy to stay where they are for a few months more.” Harry said happily, patting his belly.

“Have you found of if they’re girls or boys?” Amelle asked. “I kept up my end of the deal; you need to boost the female numbers as well.”

Harry laughed. “That’s very true, but no, we still have no idea, the one is spooning the other, who has their legs pulled in tight to their chest. Still no gender, but I have another scan soon, so maybe we’ll find out on this next scan.”

“My hope is that you have two girls.” Amelle said with a sly smile. “If only to boost our numbers over the boys of the family.”

“You’ve gone and said it now, watch; I’ll turn around and have identical twin boys.” Harry teased. “It won’t be so bad to have boys I suppose, as long as they’re healthy, I don’t care.” He said sombrely as he looked over his shoulder to Leolin.

Amelle pulled him into a hug and took Beatrice from his arms. “Leolin is strong, he has too much of you in him, take the advice you gave to me…he got through it, he’s fine, let him enjoy his life without smothering his every move. It’s difficult, Merlin I know that, but you have coached me through my urges, now let others help you, don’t smother him for this, enjoy him, but let him run free and enjoy himself.”
Harry let out all the breath in his body and pulled a fresh one into his lungs. He nodded sharply.

“I know, the urge to just clamp him into my arms and never let him go is insane, though.”

“As you taught me, breathe through the urge, let it come and then let it pass, ignore it.”

Harry nodded again and breathed harshly. He kept doing it until the urge to crush Leolin to his heart abated.

“Thank you, I just…I don’t want to leave him; it’s his first night home.”

“I understand.” Amelle said with a knowing smile.

Harry said goodbye to the stream of guests as five in the afternoon approached and he settled himself by the head of the bassinet, which was beside the settee, he refrained from touching a sleeping Leolin as he kept his hands busy by playing his hands over his pregnant belly and contenting himself with the small shifts of movement from within. His twins were strong and were growing well, he was very happy with them and he couldn’t wait until they were born and he could hold them in his arms. He knew that his mates were excited about it too, but then to a dominant Dracken, babies were a sign of fertility and prowess, so they happily gloated to one another over it. He was sure that part of the Dracken meetings in May was so the dominants could gloat about how many more babies they had and the submissives could rub other submissives faces in their perfect newborns, it made him snort in incredulity when he saw it happening at the meetings.

“I’m not like that.” He assured his belly and the babies within. “You two can run around and cause terror all you like and I’ll look on proudly and tell everyone within hearing distance that you’re mine, my little twins. Just stay put for a little longer, okay? I don’t want another sudden labour and you have to wait to at least January before you come. I’m busy in December.”

Harry smiled as he dropped his head back against the arm of the settee and rested; his hands still stroking and rubbing circles on his belly.
Things levelled out for all of them as the days went by, everything slipped into an easy routine to encompass everything, they settled and they carried on, worried and fearful though they were, they took everything one day at a time and there was no lack of hugs and kisses.

As November slipped by them, they had news from Ashleigh at the hospital that she was settled in and Myron and Richard visited her often and relayed information to the family. She was doing well, she was seeing mind Healers daily and she had unlimited support at all hours of the day and night. She had sent him a personal, heartfelt letter as part of her recovery programme outlining what she had done wrong, how she had felt and how she had gone about showing those feelings in the wrong way, but most of all, she had finally apologised to him in a way that Harry believed was actually real and sincere and not a bluff just so that she could come to see the babies. He had sent her back his own letter, a letter that he had poured over for hours over several days to express his own emotions and thoughts and how she had made him feel with her actions, but he wished her well at the end of it and told her that he hoped that she found what she needed from the Healers and he assured her that when she got a clean bill of health and came home, there were grandbabies waiting for their Grandma Ashleigh.

Richard’s fiftieth birthday on the twenty-seventh of November was much more lively than the three birthdays that had come before it, Max and Blaise had had their birthdays ruined and Ashleigh’s fiftieth birthday on the fourth of November was not only ruined by Leolin in the hospital, but by her being in the hospital herself. Myron and Richard had gotten to visit her, but she hadn’t come out of the hospital for the day, which she insisted was for the best.

At four months pregnant, Harry was taking things a bit easier than he normally would have and he was finding it difficult to pick up his children, especially Braiden and Farren, as his back was in agony every time he bent down to pick them up. But he grimaced through it regardless, though Nasta complained about it and the effects on his pregnancy, but Harry tuned him out, he steadfastly refused to stop holding and hugging his children just because his pregnant belly was in the way or his back was twinging uncomfortably.

“I wish that you would just take it easy.” Max sighed as Braiden clamoured at Harry’s feet for attention, going up on his knees and reaching up for him and naturally Harry bent right over and picked him up, a brief flash of pain marring his expression from the pressure on his spine.

“I am taking it easy.” Harry said as he straightened up and cuddled Braiden to his chest.

“I don’t like seeing or knowing that you’re in pain.” Max replied with a worried look.

“It’s honestly not as bad as you think.”

“Don’t lie to me, Harry; we can see the pain on your face as you bend to pick them up.”
Harry groaned in aggravation. “Seriously, Max, I’m fine; one of the twins is lying back to back with me, that’s all.”

“How do you know?”

“Because I can damn well feel it!” Harry replied, placing his hand over his belly. “One is head down, back to my belly; the other is head up, back to my back.”

“So…you’re saying that our twins are in the sixty-nine position?” Max said with a grin.

Harry blinked at the sudden turn of the conversation and then he huffed and turned away, hiding his smile from Max.

“I can’t deal with you in this mood.”

“Just because you’re gagging for it but find it too uncomfortable to have sex.” Max teased him. “We could do the sixty-nine you know…a bit of mutual release for both of us, I reckon I could get you off first.”

Harry looked over just in time to see Max waggle his eyebrows and he couldn’t help laughing.

“Later.” Harry said with a smile. “We’ll go to bed an hour or so earlier and we can have some fun, but for now, it’s almost dinner time and these little guys are getting hungry.”

Max groaned. “There’s my cue to leave you and your luscious, edible body and go into the kitchen to make food.”

Harry laughed and shook his head. “I’ll come with you; just let me get the rest of these hungry babies.”

“Just herd them towards the kitchen.” Max waved away.

“They’re not sheep!” Harry said sternly.
“No, but you can’t carry them all and you already have Braiden.” Max said, even as he stooped to pick up Calix and Tegan. “Come on you two, into the kitchen.”

Harry was shocked to see Max nudge Regan and Farren with his foot.

“Don’t do that!” He said aghast.

“It’s just to get them moving!” Max defended as Farren and Regan started crawling, being directed by Max’s soft nudges towards the kitchen, Regan infinitely faster than Farren, who was unhappy to be forced to move.

They reached the kitchen and Harry set Braiden down in his highchair and secured him in.

“Don’t get them!” Max burst out as Harry went to bend down to pick up Regan. “Take Calix and let me get those two.”

Harry sighed and took Calix from Max, kissing him softly and setting him in another highchair as Max bent and scooped up Farren easily, setting him in his chair and clipping him in before bending back over to pick up Regan.

Harry sat down in a chair and entertained the five babies as Max heated up the food that he’d made for them yesterday afternoon.

“Did you remember to send your letter off to Remus after your nap?” Max asked as he dished up the babies dinner onto little plastic plates.

Harry nodded. “Yeah, he’s still being careful around me with what he says and he’s keeping me updated of every move that Teddy makes to try and make it up to me for not telling me about him in the first place, but Tonks has been sending me letters too, I just want her to stop apologising, it wasn’t her fault and married or not, she shouldn’t have to apologise for him and besides the point, Remus already apologised, I’m getting sick of hearing ‘sorry’.” He complained as he took a plate from Max and started feeding Calix.

Blaise walked into the kitchen, his best robes already being yanked off and Harry knew immediately that his job search hadn’t gone well. He hadn’t had a good interview since the one that he had ran out of when Calix and Leolin had first been admitted to the hospital.
“Are you…?” He started but Blaise cut him off harshly.

“Don’t.”

“Hey!” Max said angrily. “You do not get to take your bad mood out on us! I don’t care how bad a day you’ve had or how bad you feel, we’re your partners, your mates, you do not treat us like shit because we do not deserve it.”

Blaise flumped into a chair and slumped over the table.

“It’s just all the same!” He complained. “No one want’s a newly graduated student and they all want someone with more experience! How am I supposed to get more experience if no one will give me a chance in the first place?!”

Harry had no idea what to say and he felt terrible for his partner.

“It took me getting an apprenticeship before I could get a job.” Max said casually. “From eighteen to twenty, when I actually got my apprenticeship, I could not find a single job. I even applied to clean out the owl shit in a postal office and I was declined. You need to keep at it, Blaise, or you need to find an apprenticeship.”

“Do you think I could?” Blaise asked a little uncertainly. “Get an apprenticeship that is.”

“Of course you can.” Harry said. “You’re incredibly intelligent and you know what you’re doing, Blaise. Find what you want to do and then get yourself into an apprenticeship.”

“I know what I want to do.” Blaise said tentatively. “I just don’t know how to go about doing it.”

“Then do it yourself.” Max encouraged. “If you know what you want to do, take the plunge and open your own business.”

“No one will want to do business with a nineteen year old with no training or experience!” Blaise cried out in distress.

“Not with that attitude they won’t.” Harry said with a frown. “Max is right, if you want to do it and you know you want to do it, us four will support you, Blaise, of course we will. Set up your own business, we’ll find you a place to operate from, we’ll have it advertised…if you want to do it, love, we’ll make it happen.”

Blaise actually looked teary and Harry forced himself to stand up to go to him and hug him.

“We love you, Blaise.” Harry said softly. “If this is something that you want to do, do it and we’ll be right behind you all the way.”

“Damn right, what Harry said. Sort out what you need, get everything in order before you set up, talk to my Dad if you need help, he has a business from my Granddad, they can both help you if you need it. My Grandfather set that business up on his own, from absolutely nothing. My great-great-great Grandfather set his business up from his garden shed. It can be done if you have the right attitude and a lot of determination, you can do it, Blaise.”

“Thank you.” Blaise said softly.

“Do you feel better?” Harry asked gently.

Blaise nodded. “I’ll see what I can do, I’ll talk to Myron and Alexander, maybe Aneirin too and see what they think and I’ll look at my finances to see if it’s doable.”

“I said before that we will support you, that includes financially.” Harry said firmly.

Blaise shook his head. “No, the last thing I want to do is to haemorrhage money from our family when we have babies and more on the way, I won’t do that, if I can’t afford to do it myself, then I’ll put it on the backburner and I’ll wait until I can afford to do it.”

“Go talk to my Dad then, he doesn’t work weekends and my Dad Richard is probably driving him ballistic since it was his birthday two days ago. He still gets as excited as a kid at Christmas.”
“You don’t mind?” Blaise asked as he looked at the babies who were finishing off their dessert of peeled, stewed plums.

“Of course not, we’ll finish these off now; we’ll bathe them and then tuck them up into their cots with a story.”

“Where’s Leolin?”

Harry looked across to the baby monitor that he was carrying around.

“He had his dinner early, he ate two full ounces of milk before he fell asleep, I think he’ll be asleep now until at least ten or eleven.”

Blaise nodded. “Then I’ll be back as soon as I can. Thank you, both of you!”

Blaise rushed back out as quickly as he’d come home, shrugging his robes back on as he went and Harry shared a look with Max. They both started laughing before taking muslin cloths to the babies’ hands and faces and getting them out of their highchairs and ready to have their baths.

Two hours later Harry and Max were cuddled up together and were watching the end of a TV programme when Draco flooed home and joined them. He’d gone to visit his parents and he looked happy and content with himself, Harry was so happy that Draco was finally coming to terms with himself and coming to enjoy his life. It made him happy and he snuggled into Draco and Max and continued watching the TV programme until it finally went off and two minutes after that Nasta flooed home covered in dirt and dragon dung, but he was grinning tiredly.

“How can you be so happy when you smell so rancid?” Draco demanded with a wrinkled nose.

“He’s a Dragonologist, it’s what they do.” Max said with a grin, mentioning proudly Nasta’s very recent promotion from senior dragon handler to Dragonologist.

“What, roll around in dragon shit and then compare with one another?” Harry teased.

“Exactly!” Max said with a laugh.
Nasta rolled his eyes, but he was too happy to take their teasing to heart.

“I’m going for a quick shower, I’ll be back soon.” He told them instead.

“The babies are all asleep, use the downstairs bathroom.” Harry all but ordered and Nasta smiled at him and nodded.

True to his word, Nasta was back not twenty minutes later, clean and pink, still a little damp, but still happy, though he was much more tired than he’d been before. He squeezed onto the settee with the four of them and it was only then that he seemed to realise that someone was missing and the tension poured into his muscles as he sat upright again.

“Where is Blaise? He should have been home by now.”

“I was thinking that too.” Draco added. “Has he gone to wallow upstairs?”

“No, he came home at five and then he went to see my Dad.” Max said, pushing Nasta back against the settee.

“His job hunting was unsuccessful?” Draco asked.

Harry nodded. “Yes, the same story, they want someone with more experience, but the only way he can get that experience is by working, so he’s stuck really, so we suggested that he set up his own business. He’s gone to talk to Myron about the idea.”

Nasta pondered on that and he nodded. “I’m sure that we could support him through that.”

“We already offered, but he refused and said that if he couldn’t afford it himself, he would wait for a few years.”

“The whole point of being in a mateship is to support one another.” Draco said with a sneer. “I have more than enough money to support a business venture and I’m sure that Father would be interested in it as well.”
“Together all of us can support Blaise and have enough for everything that we need.” Nasta said. “I can’t believe that he would be worried about money when we love him so much. It’s like he’s shutting himself off, shutting off his finances for just himself when he should take into account all of our finances, we can support him opening his own business.”

“He said he didn’t want to take our money when we have babies.” Harry said as he rested a hand over his growing belly.

“Ridiculous.” Nasta scoffed. “We have more than enough.” He said.

Draco nodded. “We do. I check all of our finances regularly, as my Father taught me to do when I was very young, and we have more than enough for anything and everything that we want to do. I’m not saying we go on lavish holidays every month or go on shopping sprees for things that we don’t even need, because then we’ll eat away at all of our savings, but if Blaise wishes to start his own business, we can do that easily. It’s an investment; he will start paying back into our funds as soon as he’s set up.”

“I’ll speak to him later, or even tomorrow.” Nasta said as he sat back with a groan. “Until then, I want to cwtch up with my mates and I want to enjoy my evening. Today was hard work; those juveniles are getting a handful.”

Harry readily got onto that idea and with a heart heavy with worry and concern over Blaise, over Leolin, over his pregnancy, over everything…he snuggled into Draco’s muscular bulk and he settled down to watch a film with three of his four mates, even if Draco did complain over the Muggle entertainment and insisted that everything would have been so much easier if they used magic, which Max pointed out wasn’t the point of the film and that Muggles didn’t know that magic was real.

Draco just huffed and Harry pressed his head over that strong heartbeat and smiled. He loved that Draco still didn’t understand some of the Muggle terminology and nuances, he loved all of Draco’s little quirks and as one large hand came to rest over his pregnant belly, rubbing against it softly, Harry fell into a light doze surrounded by his mates, lying on Draco with the blond’s hands on his baby bump and the sounds of the TV playing in the background. He couldn’t wait for nineteen-ninety-nine to start and he hoped that the New Year brought him some good news, because this year had been nothing but bad news after bad news and though things were slowly improving, they were by no means fixed just yet.

--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X
A/N: Almost to the New Year! Which means one thing really, or two things, a fresh start and E and A are finally nearly here! I’m definitely revealing the gender in the next chapter and I’m planning on them being born in the chapter after, so we have one/two chapters more to go before they’re born, so if you want to guess at genders, paternity or names, you go right ahead because they’ll be here very soon! I’m so excited.

I hope you’ve enjoyed reading, don’t forget to play at guessing for the identical twins, they’ll be born soon and I’ll see you lovelies very soon,

StarLight Massacre. X
Seasonal Stress

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Harry readily got onto that idea and with a heart heavy with worry and concern over Blaise, over Leolin, over his pregnancy, over everything...he snuggled into Draco's muscular bulk and he settled down to watch a film with three of his four mates, even if Draco did complain over the Muggle entertainment and insisted that everything would have been so much easier if they used magic, which Max pointed out wasn't the point of the film and that Muggles didn't know that magic was real.

Draco just huffed and Harry pressed his head over that strong heartbeat and smiled. He loved that Draco still didn't understand some of the Muggle terminology and nuances, he loved all of Draco's little quirks and as one large hand came to rest over his pregnant belly, rubbing against it softly, Harry fell into a light doze surrounded by his mates, lying on Draco with the blond's hands on his baby bump and the sounds of the TV playing in the background. He couldn't wait for nineteen-ninety-nine to start and he hoped that the New Year brought him some good news, because this year had been nothing but bad news after bad news and though things were slowly improving, they were by no means fixed just yet.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Eighty-Seven – Seasonal Stress

-

December was cold and bitter when it arrived. Harry was buried under owl order catalogues as he searched for Christmas presents for his mates, Christmas presents for all of the family, presents for his six children and birthday gifts for his quintuplets too. What did you buy five one year olds, one of whom was the equivalent of a baby only a few months old, when they already had every toy under the sun?

He was sat on a cushion on the floor, up to the coffee table as he poured over piles of catalogues and magazines, his babies all around him with toys. Calix was in Braiden’s ball pit bashing around with his little hands, giggling infectiously, Leolin was in the bassinet beside Harry and he had a plate of freshly made lemon cake from Mrs Weasley who was very, very happy with the news that she was getting two new twin grandchildren and had immediately taken up the challenge of chef when she’d learnt that Harry was craving all things lemon.

The lemon cake she’d made for him was so tart, so zesty and citrusy that no one else could even eat it, as they’d found out when Max had taken a big bite out of a slice and had immediately dived for the tap of cold water. Harry however, absolutely loved it, even if it did make his tongue feel like it was shrivelling up if he ate too much in one go.

Max came to look in on him, as he’d thrown them all out and told them to leave him alone to pick their gifts without ruining the surprise.

“Do you need anything?” He asked.

Harry leant back on his hands and sighed as he let his head fall backwards on his shoulders. “A break, a headache reliever and another cup of tea.”

Max laughed and came to kiss his forehead. “Put these away, take your break for a bit and I’ll get you tea and that potion, I’ve got more than enough of them at the moment.”

Harry did just that as he sat on the settee beside the bassinet, he checked in on Leolin, worried that he might have stopped breathing in the hour since he’d last peeked in on him, a constant, continuous worry that he’d had since Leolin had come home from the hospital just three weeks ago.

He was eating well, sleeping well and he was back to recognising him, and now his mates too, as he reached a tiny hand out to them as well, but the only word he would say still was ‘Ma’ which Harry was secretly smug about. He did want Leolin to grow and develop, of course he did, but he just couldn’t help but want to keep his baby to himself, at least for a little while longer.

“What’s this?” Max said as he came in with two cups of tea. “Is our sweet boy doing something interesting?”

Max peered into the bassinet and caught sight of Leolin’s face. He laughed.

“Oh now that is a face and a half.” He laughed as he placed down the two cups and came back to chuck Leolin under the chin with a gentle fingertip.

Harry picked Leolin up out of his bassinet and as soon as Harry had him upright and face to face with him, Leolin broke out into a wide, gummy grin.

“Ma.” He said happily.

“He is so attached to you.” Max said with a grin as he threw himself onto the settee and made Braiden bounce, which made him giggle.

“Up! Up! Dada ma, up!” Braiden held his arms up to Max and clambered into his lap, standing all over him and coming close to stomping a little socked foot into delicate areas, but Max avoided that by pulling Braiden into the air and setting him safely on his huge thighs. Braiden started bouncing and Max made it that much more fun by grabbing his waist and with every other bounce he was lifting Braiden into the air.

Harry shook his head at them with a laugh and turned away; he sat down and pulled Leolin onto his chest, sitting him on his bump. He couldn’t put into words how amazing it felt to be sat in his own home with Leolin stretched out on his body, awake and looking around curiously and not a single wire in sight.

Draco joined them with a glass of pumpkin juice when he saw that it was safe to come in without having his head torn off and he eased himself to the floor with a groan and pulled Tegan onto his lap, bending to grab the nearby hairbrush.

“Give her, her penguin, Draco, she’ll cry otherwise.” Harry advised before taking a sip of his sharp, lemon tea. He’d stopped putting honey in it when the lemon had started overpowering the taste of it, making it redundant to put it in in the first place.

Draco bent forward again, Tegan giggling and clapping tiny hands together as he did so before she squealed when Draco handed her, her stuffed penguin.

“I love you sweet girl.” He said softly to her.

Harry smiled at them both as Draco brushed her hair as Tegan chattered nonsense to her penguin. Tegan got bored of not being able to move after just fifteen minutes and Draco let her go with a sigh before he dragged Regan onto his lap to brush his hair, unwilling to let his victims get away from him and his hairbrush.

Regan didn’t even last five minutes as he had been happily crawling around with a huge, chunky truck, a truck which ended up going into Draco’s shin in frustration.

Max laughed uproariously, which made Braiden laugh along with him. Draco took it all into his stride as he let Regan go and pulled a complacent Farren onto his lap and brushed his soft dark brown hair gently.

Half an hour later Draco was forced to stop brushing the silky strands of Farren’s hair as their second oldest son had fallen asleep on him, bright yellow dummy in his mouth. Draco shifted himself back and up onto the settee and relaxed against the back of it with a groan, Farren cuddled up on his lap.

“Anyone want a tea top up?” Max asked as Braiden had gotten bored with the bouncing game and had climbed down off his lap and crawled over to the toys and Regan.

“No, if I drink anymore I’ll need a tap fitted.” Harry complained.

“Not for me.” Draco said. “I’ve still got juice left.”

“Just me then.” He said with a laugh, but before he could leave the room, the warning for their floo sounded softly and they turned to look at the fireplace as a head appeared.

“Ah, just the man I wanted to see.” The head said jovially. “Max, can you come in for a few hours, please? I’m begging you here. We’ve had an outbreak of flu and it’s set to spread; we’ve got infant patients and elderly ones too, more infant ones though. We’ve got distressed and panicked parents demanding potions, four of our clinics have run clean out of Pepper Up and the infant suspension and that was all before midday and six more of our clinics are running critically low. We need all hands on deck.”

Max sighed. “Yeah, I can come in for a few hours. You two don’t mind do you?”

Draco shook his head.

“No.” Harry said. “Just don’t work too hard; you were up early this morning.”

“Oh, I didn’t see you there, hello to you too, Mister Potter.”

Harry blinked, having never seen or met this man before in his life.
“Ignore him.” Max said with a good natured eye roll. “This is Harvey; he’s a proper fan girl of yours, Harry. He almost passed out when he learnt that one of my new boyfriends was you.”

Harry could see Harvey blush even though he was just a head in the flames.

“It was nice to meet you, Harvey.” He said softly with a smile. “I don’t get to see Max’s work friends very often.”

“That’s because he’s all jealous and possessive over you and won’t let us come over anymore; we used to have a poker night and a football night every week and we used to be around all the time during Quidditch season.”

“I told you all before, I have six children, soon to be eight. I can’t have the noise here, I won’t have the drinking and I won’t have the gambling.”

“We’ve moved them to Patrick’s place; you can come over to spend an hour or two with us, it wouldn’t kill you to socialise every now and then.”

“Of course he can.” Harry said. “If that’s what he wants to do he can, but right now, isn’t there some sort of emergency breakout that you need to work on?”

“Yeah, that’s got to be the priority here; I’ll see you in a minute, Harvey.” Max said as he checked himself over to make sure that his clothes were work appropriate, he made sure that he had his wand before he turned to kiss all six children, Draco and then Harry. “I’ll see you in a few hours.”

“They only want you because they know that you’re the best they have.” Draco said with a smirk.

Max smiled at him and winked. “Of course that’s why they want me there; I’m the only Potions Master the company has, the rest are trainees or apprentices. That’s why I can get away with having so much time off, they can’t afford to replace me. There has been a shortage of Potions Masters for the last decade and more and more apprenticeships are failing because those undertaking it just aren’t prepared to put in the dedication or the work that it requires. All I remember of my apprenticeship is falling into bed late at night, completely exhausted, aching and smelling of all sorts and then getting up before dawn every morning, still tired, still aching and still smelling of whatever ingredients I’d been preparing the day before. The apprentices these days just aren’t dedicated enough to do that, so there’s a lack of them now.”
“Just go to work.” Harry said with a smile. “The sooner you go, the sooner you can come back.”

Max saluted him and moved to grab a handful of floo powder.

“Oh! And find out about those poker nights, you need time with your friends as well!” Harry said quickly as Max threw the floo powder into the fire, turning the flames green.

“Will do! I’ll see you all later, don’t miss me too much.”

“No chance of that happening.” Draco chuckled as Max left.

Harry moved over to the settee that Draco was on then and with Farren sleeping on his lap and Leolin slowly starting to doze on Harry’s chest, his heartbeat calming and relaxing his little Faerie son, they cuddled up as much as they could and just enjoyed the peace that was only broken by babies at play.

Draco picked up his book from the side table and started reading and Harry just stared at Leolin, tracing his features and running gentle fingers over his tiny hands, arms and legs. They were content and happy for the moment and Harry had never seen Tegan so well behaved before as she played quietly between Braiden and Regan, Calix was napping in the ball pit, they could barely see his little body in amongst the brightly coloured balls.

Nasta came down almost two hours later, his face pinched and pale. He was hunched over holding the side of his head with one hand. He looked ill.

“Are you still not feeling better?” Harry asked softly, hyper aware that Nasta had a severe headache. “Max left another dose of potion on the counter next to the kettle, would you like some tea with it?”

Nasta nodded without saying anything and Harry stood up, ushered Nasta to sit where he’d been and handed him a sleeping Leolin as he went to make tea and get the headache reliever for Nasta, who had been in bed since that morning with a headache so severe that it made him feel physically sick to look at bright lights.

“Where’s Max?” He heard Nasta ask as he came back into the room.

“Emergency at work.” Draco answered.
“A flu outbreak.” Harry nodded as he passed the small vial to Nasta. “They begged him to go in for a few hours; he’s been gone for three so far.”

“You’ve been okay without him?” Nasta asked as he drained the vial in one swallow, grimacing as he did so, and then sipped at his cup of green tea to take away the vile taste.

Harry nodded. “Fine. It’s been very quiet. The kids played for a bit, had their naps, then played a bit more.”

“Did you get your shopping done?”

Harry shook his head. “Not all of it, but some. I’ll send the forms off later and finish the shopping next week, for now I want to take care of you.”

“I’m okay, much better than I was this morning. Damn headaches.”

Harry sat next to Nasta and kissed his prickly cheek. He hadn’t shaved that morning because he had felt so bad and his stubble was thick and spiky, just the other side of being an actual beard.

With Harry cuddled on one side and Draco on the other, Nasta allowed himself to sit back and just relax, resting his head against the back of the settee and hope that this second dose of potion knocked back his headache, he couldn’t take much more of the dull throb in his temples.

Harry’s five month scan found him with an unfamiliar Healer conducting his check-up. Good to his word, Harry had sent both Maximillian Almus and Jasper Cole and their families on holiday, sending their respective wives the non-refundable tickets and, rather large, thank you cards detailing all the work they’d done and how much it meant to him that they’d shown such a dedicated level of care and concern to his fragile, vulnerable son and thus he was thanking them with a holiday.

Healer Carmentis Paion was a fifth generation Healer, her great-great grandmother had been a Healer and her daughter had been a Healer, and her daughter and both her sons had been Healers and it had become a family profession.

The nervous woman checked him over, checked his weight against his height to the size of his bump and rambled about her family as she told him that her own son was just starting out as an orderly and that she hoped that soon he would be elevated to a nurse and then on to become a Healer. Harry hoped that he didn’t talk as much as his Mother did; it was doing nothing to elevate his confidence levels in his new temporary Healer.
Blaise was annoyed by her rambling too. Harry could see it on his face the more that Healer Paion spoke, telling them that her name, Carmentis, actually meant Healer in Latin, the angrier Blaise got.

“It’s just the ultrasound now?” He asked a while later as he had his heartbeat checked and all of his vitals looked over.

“Yes, I’d like to do a Doppler scan too, just to check that their hearts are beating well as they’re identical twins and then we should be done.”

“Thank Merlin.” Blaise hissed under his breath as the Healer turned away from them to set up the equipment.

“Shush, be good.” Harry chastised.

Blaise just gave him a look and huffed, crossing his arms over his chest. Harry braced himself for the cold goo; goo that he was sure was the same lubricant that he and his mates used at home. He flinched as it went onto his belly and shivered, at which point Blaise’s arm slipped under his neck to support and comfort him.

“I’m sorry it’s cold.” Healer Paion said with an apologetic smile.

“That’s okay; I’m very used to it by now.”

Harry smiled as he heard the fast rush of blood that was his twins heartbeats, it seemed impossibly fast to him, but he was used to that as well, he knew that babies heartbeats were much faster than an adult’s.

“Oh, I think we can see the gender of one twin here. Would you like to know?”

“Yes!” Harry said excitedly as he sat up as much as he could to see the screen better. Healer Paion hovered over little legs and the area between, which was flat and smooth. “Is that…does that mean?”

“A little girl.”
Harry laughed happily. “Identical twin girls, Blaise!”

Harry looked at him to find his first mate misty eyed and staring at the screen. He smiled and clutched at Blaise’s hand.

“Everything seems to be fine, everything is coming within normal levels, you have two healthy, growing girls.” The Healer told them with a smile as she wiped Harry’s belly clean and handed him the photos that she’d printed off.

“Thank you.” Harry said as he stood up with Blaise’s hands all over him, eager to help him. “Come on, I can’t wait to tell the others!”

Blaise escorted Harry through the hospital, his arms around him possessively as he basked in the joy of finding out that they had two little girls on the way.

They flooed home to find that Nasta was home from his lunch with his brother Sanex and that Max was back from work, they were anxiously waiting in the living room with Draco, who had stayed behind to watch the babies.

Harry was grinning from ear to ear and he cackled at them.

“Did you find out the gender?” Max asked, unable to take it anymore.

Harry laughed louder and nodded. “Yes, we found out the gender.”

“Come on, Harry; don’t keep us in such suspense!” Draco said anxiously as he twisted his hands together.

Harry held out the scan photos. “Girls. We have two identical twin girls on the way.”

Max hooted in joy and picked him up, cuddling him tightly.

“They’re healthy and growing well, they’re perfectly formed, their heartbeats are within normal range and the placenta is doing its job properly of feeding them both, though one twin is just slightly bigger than the other.” He informed them as he clung to Max happily.

“I can’t believe that we’re getting two new daughters!” Max said happily.

Harry nodded and was passed to Draco and then to Nasta as they hugged him and wound themselves up with excitement.

“They still aren’t coming for another two months!” Harry laughed. “We have Christmas and the quintuplets’ birthday to come first.”

“Don’t forget nesting time.” Nasta told him seriously. “How are you feeling about that in relation to your last birth?”

Harry frowned. “Alright I guess, I haven’t really thought of it, I know that my last pregnancy was far from smooth, hell it was practically traumatic with everything that happened, but I know it was because of exceptional circumstances and that the chances of it happening again are slim, especially with only two babies. I don’t feel insecure or frightened or anything about my upcoming birth, I remember nesting and birthing Braiden well, but…maybe we could start doing the blood bottling a little earlier, just in case?”

Nasta smiled at him and nuzzled his face. “You truly are remarkable. Yes, we will start bottling our blood now before Christmas.”

“I don’t want to miss Christmas or the quintuplet’s birthday.” Harry said stubbornly.

“You may not have a choice, Caru, but we’ll film the whole thing for you if it does happen and when you’re recovering from the caesarean, you can watch it all, every single moment of it.”

Harry smiled and then sighed. He knew that was the best that he could hope for and really, he was just glad that he had four amazing, wonderful mates who were willing to record these events for him to watch back, he couldn’t help but think of all the horror stories that he’d been told since he’d found out that he was a Dracken, about all the bad dominants out in the world who wouldn’t have given a shit and wouldn’t have cared for the thoughts or feelings of their submissive. He smiled at his four; he truly was the luckiest man in the world to have, not just one, but four amazing dominant mates. He loved them more and more as each day passed.
With their quintuplets now eleven months old and just weeks from their first birthday, Harry was rushed off his feet as Calix picked up a new level of speed crawling. He’d bumped his head several times in the last week and he had an egg on his forehead from where he’d gone into the bookshelf the other day.

Braiden was cruising now at a sprint, but he still wouldn’t let go, Harry was watching him more than normal, he had a feeling that Braiden would be taking his first, unsupported, steps any day now that he was sixteen months old.

Tegan was up on her feet and she was exuberantly happy about it as she cruised around and happily used Braiden’s trampoline, a little penguin bouncing around her feet as she jumped.

Regan was up on his feet too and he was frustrated with his lack of being able to move further away from the furniture. He’d already tested taking a few steps without the furniture, but as soon as he let go, he fell to his knees without the support to hold him up.

Farren was shuffling himself around the floor to where he wanted to go, but he was still very content to sit and watch everyone and everything as he grew bigger and heavier daily. He was twenty-two pounds and thirty inches and growing steadily still. He weighed nearly the same as Braiden, who was just a pound heavier and there was half an inch between them. Farren would overtake Braiden in height and weight in the next few months, he’d bet money on it.

Leolin looked now like he was four months old, he’d been set back by his long stay in the hospital, but he was back to gaining some weight and he was now giggling up a storm whenever anyone said or did anything with him, whether Max played silly faces with him, if Nasta gave him a kiss and nuzzled him a bit, if Draco brushed his thin, black hair or nibbled on his fingernails to groom him, if Harry spoke to him or read to him from a book, but he definitely giggled the most when Blaise changed his nappy. He laughed so hard that the first time that he’d done so that they’d actually thought that he was choking.

Calix’s cough had trailed off bit by bit until they’d turned around one day and realised that it had been two days since he’d last coughed and his throat was back to being pink and healthy looking. He’d had one rash in that time when he’d urinated in the night and hadn’t cried to let them know that he needed a change, but even that was healing up nicely with Max’s new paste.

Harry was happy and content as he sorted out Christmas and he made sure that he and all his mates sat down one evening to write out a full shopping list for everything that they needed for the week of Christmas, he didn’t want any of them to have to leave the house for several days over Christmas exempting a crisis or emergency. Max and Blaise took Tegan, Regan and Farren to the supermarket the week after.

It was Monday the twenty-first of December when the first urge hit him. Harry was doing the laundry washing and he picked up a clean, warm jumper of Nasta’s that he’d just been about to fold and he brought it to his nose and inhaled deeply, despite being through the washer and dryer, he could still detect a hint of Nasta in the fabric and that was it. He clocked where his mates were before he snuck out of the house and trudged through the snow to find a suitable nesting site.

He knew that he was against the time, it wouldn’t take long for his mates to realise that he was missing; he couldn’t have them finding his nest before he even started building it. His feet led him through the orchard and into the forest at the back of Max’s house, he weaved through it and out the other side and into the field beyond and it was there that he found a small hole in a mound of snow covered earth. He sniffed at it and scented for danger, before he used his claws to make the hole bigger.

He slipped into the hole, like an underground burrow and the first thing that he did was reinforce it with magic. He warded it and cleaned it out, not that there was much in there, before he made it bigger and used his hands and his claws to make a good, solid nest for himself, rubbing his scent over it to keep away animals that would use his hard work for their own nests.

He put Nasta’s jumper in the back of his nest and climbed back out of the hole and used the earth that he’d pushed out to make a rim over the entrance to prevent water from getting into his nest before he rushed back to the house, cleaned himself up quickly and went in through the back door quickly.

He listened hard, scented for his mates and nothing had changed, he could hear his mates talking quietly, could hear his babies at play and he let out a relieved sigh. He went back into the laundry room and finished off folding the dried clothes.

He left the little room loudly and made his way to the downstairs bathroom, again loudly. He didn’t want his mates to think that he’d been anywhere other than in that little room folding clothes and towels.

He checked himself in the mirror, checked every inch of his clothes for something that his magic may have missed, anything that would make his mates suspicious, but there was nothing. He sighed in relief. Now he just needed his cold reddened cheeks to calm down and he would be all set.

Someone knocked on the door and Harry looked at it panicked.

“Harry? Are you okay, are you being sick?” Nasta’s concerned voice asked.

Harry flushed the toilet and turned on the tap.

“No, one of our girls kicked my bladder and if I’d waited a second longer then I would have made a puddle on the floor.”

Nasta chuckled softly. “Alright, do you want a cup of tea?”

“Please, with lots and lots of lemon!”

“If you eat any more lemon then those girls will come out bitter.” Nasta joked.

Harry laughed. “I don’t think it works like that. I’m eating lemon because our girls need it for some reason. Maybe they want the acid?"

“More like the vitamin C, but of course you couldn’t just eat an orange, no, you gravitate towards the lemon.”

Harry did a final check in the mirror, nodded at his appearance before he unlocked the door and walked into Nasta’s body, holding him around the middle.

Nasta laughed at him and wrapped his arms around him in a huge hug.

“Did you finish the washing?” Nasta asked.

“Just about.” Harry said with a smile.

“Go sit down then, I’ll get the tea.”

Harry nodded and broke away from Nasta and went into the living room. He actually felt guilty for keeping his nest a secret from his mates, he hated keeping anything from them, but as he beamed around at the living room, decorated to perfection with Christmas baubles, tinsel and sparkly decorations that kept his children’s interest for hours, he knew that he’d have to keep this secret for a while more, he couldn’t have anyone knowing where his nest was before it was ready, there was too much of a chance for strangers to find him and he couldn’t put his twins in such danger, not his baby girls.

The snow had piled down and around the house to the point where Max had to shovel it away every morning just so they could open the front and back doors. Harry’s nest was just a mound of snow and he liked it like that, it provided an extra layer of coverage and camouflage and as he stuffed two towels, a wicker basket and a faux fur blanket that he’d found in the back of a wardrobe into the hole, he realised that his nest was coming on nicely and it was cosy and comfortable. He liked being down here.

His mates had started making up a bottle of blood for him every morning for the past two days and he felt secure enough that if he started nesting, then he’d have a bottle to hand, though they were each taking a blood replenisher potion with their breakfasts. So he was doubly secure in the knowledge that even though they were losing a bit of blood daily, they were still topped up and healthy and able to protect him and his babies if it was needed.

Christmas had been relaxed and really slow paced. Harry had woken up first, mainly because a baby was squirming in his sac, partly because Blaise’s knee had been jabbing into his back, and he’d had a shower and dressed himself in the dress robes that Draco had laid out for him the night before.

He had checked in on his little babies and had a peek into Calix’s nappy because his second youngest son could happily sleep in a wet nappy before he went to start breakfast and lure his mates out of bed with tea and coffee.

The morning had been filled with helping their children open the plethora of gifts that they’d been given before cleaning up and leaving them to play as Max went to start on Christmas dinner.

Harry was happy and content and now the thirty-first was rapidly approaching and it was a rush to rip down Christmas decorations in preparation for the quintuplets first birthday. Harry was almost ashamed to steal one of the tiny knitted jumpers that Mrs Weasley had gifted to his children for his nest and when she came around for the quintuplets’ birthday a few days later and asked about them, Harry made some excuse about an accident with breakfast to explain away the one missing jumper.

The house was filled to bursting, almost to the point where there was no room to move, they definitely needed a bigger house, but every time he brought it up, Nasta smiled at him and told him that it wasn’t time yet. Harry had no idea what that meant but he was starting to feel cramped in his own home and with the birth of the twins now a little over two months away, they’d have a lack of bedrooms too, they’d already turned one spare bedroom into a nursery and they couldn’t keep Braiden and the quintuplets all in the one bedroom when they were older and even then what if they had more babies too? They needed a bigger house and he was going to have to start really working on his mates to get them to move, he wouldn’t have a lack of space for his babies.

Harry weaved as nimbly as he could through the guests, dodging around Marianna and Narcissa, ducking under Myron’s arm and around the back of Aneirin, between Sanex and Caesar and he had to squeeze past Mrs Weasley and Kimberly, all just to reach the downstairs bathroom before his bladder took matters into its own hands.

At four in the afternoon they put all five babies into high chairs, Leolin stayed in Harry’s arms, as Max put a little cupcake onto all of their trays as Draco cut the huge birthday cake for the guests. Harry couldn’t believe that all of his children now were a year old or older. It made a strange feeling build inside him, he wanted more babies to cuddle, honestly, the twins couldn’t be born soon enough in his opinion. He couldn’t wait to hold them and the excitement he only got when he was so close to birth settled in his belly, he was almost six months pregnant, his girls were strong and healthy and though a Dracken baby could be viable at the far end of four months, six months was when they were viable with a strong chance of survival.

Farren lowered his head to his cake before they’d finished singing happy birthday, flicking his tongue out to lick and slobber all over it before taking a bite. Harry couldn’t help laughing along with their guests.

Braiden pulled his to pieces and ate the chunks, Tegan lowered her head to nibble her cake and Regan pulled his cake to his mouth and nibbled it. Calix was uninterested in his food as he instead twisted and turned in his highchair, trying to stand up and, panicked and concerned, Draco rushed to secure him and hold his little shoulders, even as Calix complained and chattered angrily.

“No, da!” He whined.
“You can’t stand up in your chair, Calix.” He said sternly.

“Up!”

Draco sighed and unclipped him, picking him up and holding him up against his shoulder and Calix clapped his hands together, peering around at everyone interestedly.

“Dada day.” Calix said patting Draco’s cheek.

Draco chuckled and held a little hand, bringing it to his mouth. “I love you.” He said easily and in front of everyone too, Harry was so proud of him.

After all of them had had some cake, it was time to say their goodbyes as Blaise and Max got the babies ready for their bath as Nasta and Draco played hosts. Harry supposed that made him the hostess, but as he was sat on his arse stuffing cake into his mouth, he didn’t think that he counted. He took a swig of tea and smiled to himself, cradling Leolin gently as his youngest boy slept.

He accepted the hugs and kisses goodbye from everyone who wanted one, let the family run soft fingertips over Leolin’s sleeping cheek, through his hair or over his hand and then suddenly, they were alone in their house that didn’t seem as cramped or as small as it had an hour before.

“I’m so glad that’s over and done with.” Nasta sighed. “So much hassle for one day.”

Harry nodded. “I know what you mean. They won’t even remember it, I wouldn’t mind if they were older, but all that hassle and rushing around for a day they won’t even remember.”

“At least we’ll have the memories of it.” Nasta smiled.

Harry grinned. “And we can show them that we gave them a good day through photos and the video footage. I can’t wait to show a grownup Farren how he used to lick his cakes.”

Nasta smirked. “I can’t believe that Calix refused to even touch his.”

“He did have one too many biscuits after his dinner.” Harry allowed. “He probably wasn’t hungry.”
“Well they’ll have their baths now, we’ll let them play for a bit, give them a story and tuck them up into their cots. Then maybe we can have a bloody rest.”

“We still have the clean up to do.” Harry reminded with a groan.

“I think it can wait one night.”

“Draco won’t think so.”

“Then Draco can damn well clean up.” Nasta groused. “I just want to sit down and relax for an hour.”

Harry smiled. “I know that feeling, especially with these two.” He said as he laid a hand on his baby belly.

“Have I said before how gorgeous you look pregnant with my children?” Nasta said huskily, his voice deepening. “I can’t wait until you give me two new baby daughters.”

“Fred and George are beside themselves with glee, you know that these girls are going to be born terrors?”

Nasta chuckled. “I say Uncle Fred and Uncle George should have their own babies and stay away from our twins.”

Harry laughed. “Oh, they’re looking forward to meeting the girls; they told me that they were going to start on them early, as if we need more trouble making identical twins in the family.”

Nasta helped him up and escorted him into the disaster zone that was their living room; there were piles of toys, clothes and books everywhere. They’re tried to keep them into their separate piles according to who had been given what, but when the kids had all started digging into one another’s gifts and playing with anything that came to hand, they gave up, especially when a very interested Braiden had gotten involved with a giggling Eleonora and a very forward Teddy.

Nasta pulled a face at the sight of everything.
“You know, I’d forgotten how bad this room actually was, I guess we will be cleaning up after all, there’s no floor space and all these toys are just going to wind the kids up when they come back down.”

“I’ll take Leolin up for his bath so that you can use magic.” Harry said with a smile as he forced himself back to his feet.

Nasta kissed him. “Thank you!” He said happily and gratefully.

Harry shook his head as he made the climb up the stairs to hand Leolin off to a very wet Max, taking an armful of dried and dressed Tegan and Farren.

He went back down the stairs and the living room was perfect and it made him feel more relaxed as he put Tegan and Farren down, groaning as his back twinged painfully as he stood back up.

“Sit down.” Nasta admonished him, sitting beside him and digging his thumbs into Harry’s lower back, massaging away the tension.

Harry groaned again but for a completely different reason this time. Nasta kissed his neck and Harry shivered.

“I love you so much.” He sighed.

Nasta chuckled and his voice had gone deeper again as he whispered how much he loved him into his ear.

“Not getting too hot and bothered in here are you?” Max teased with a grin as he came into the room with a sleepy Regan and a babbling Braiden.

“Nas is making my lower back feel better.” Harry said softly and with another pleasured groan.

“He’s making something feel better.” Max laughed.
He put the two boys in his arms down on the floor and then sat in front of Harry, one hand started rubbing his pregnant belly and the other cupped the back of his neck and those large, strong fingers kneaded the tension away from his neck and shoulder muscles. He groaned louder and allowed his body to let go of all the tension that he had and he sunk down in the chair.

Blaise just laughed when he came in with a yawning Calix and Draco shook his head, though he was very pleased to see that the room was clean and that the babies were content to snuggle with stuffed animals instead of crying for their more noisy, stimulating toys.

Harry flopped back onto Nasta and he cuddled in, he was exhausted after such a hectic few weeks, there had been so much to do and now…now there was nothing left for them to do, it was all over and Harry felt so very good about that.

He was handed a cup of tea and a slice of birthday cake and as they were sat down talking softly, that was when his attention was caught by Braiden standing up against the coffee table. He shushed his mates urgently, which brought their attention to Braiden too, Max dived for the camcorder they had been using all day which was on a side table.

“Mama?!” Braiden called out, hitting the top of the table with a flat hand.

“What’s the matter, sweet one?” Harry asked.

“Up!”

“You have to come here, Braiden, I can’t stand up, your baby sisters are in here and they make it hard for me to move.”

“Mama!”

“Come on.” Harry encouraged, sitting forward and opening his arms. “You can come here, just let go and walk towards me, you’re sixteen months old now, almost seventeen months, it’s time for you to take a step out on your own.”

“Ma ma, up!” Braiden said slapping his hand back onto the table.

Harry chuckled. “I’m not coming to get you, I’m too big, Braiden, you come here if you want a cuddle.”
“Nah!”

“Then you stay over there.” Harry said simply.

Braiden’s bottom lip trembled, but Harry really didn’t think that he could get himself up off the chair, even if his boy started crying. Then Braiden sniffled, rubbed his eyes with a little hand and cruised around the table; he reached the edge and leant away from it, his hand still firmly on the top of it.

It would take him just four or five steps from the table to reach Harry, who was sat on the edge of the settee, his arms open wide.

He smiled at his oldest son and gave him an encouraging nod.

“Come for a cuddle, Braiden, you’re such a big boy, you can take a few steps to me, can’t you?”

Braiden looked unsure, but he teetered on the edge of the table, before he nodded and his hand slid over the surface of the table and he put one foot in front of the other and he took his first ever unsupported step towards him. Harry would have been severely proud of Braiden just for taking that one step, but his son kept going, one baby step after another.

It took six steps before Braiden reached him and Harry pulled him up onto his lap and peppered his face with kisses.

“I am so proud of you, Braiden!” Harry said with a proud grin. “You’re growing so quickly and I can’t believe you have finally taken your first steps, maybe now you’ll start walking a bit more often.”

Nasta slipped an arm around Harry and pulled him back to rest against him, Braiden coming with them and Nasta ruffled Braiden’s hair as Max recorded them.

“I think that mop needs a trim.” Max said from behind the camera.

“You think so?” Harry questioned as he run his fingers through Braiden’s hair and let it slip back into place. “It doesn’t cover his eyes yet, I think he’ll be okay for another few weeks.”

Nasta ruffled Braiden’s hair again and their son giggled happily and clapped little hands together.
“I think on that accomplishment from Braiden it’s time to settle them down for bed.” Blaise said as he came to take Braiden from Harry and Nasta, kissing him hard and cuddling him tight much to Braiden’s delight.

“Oh I just want to sleep.” Harry said with a sigh. “These two are buggering up my insides.”

“They better bloody not be.” Max said as he put the camcorder down. “That’s my job.”

Harry rolled his eyes. “Stop being a pervert and carry me to bed. I want to go to sleep.”

“Now who could refuse that offer?” Max said sarcastically. “Way to see in the New Year, Harry.”

“Fuck the New Year, I’m heavily pregnant and I want my bed.”

“Do as he says.” Nasta said. “He’s right, his health comes before anything, Max and we’ve had a busy few weeks, this is the first time that we’ve had to breathe and it’s the first night that we’ve had the option of going to bed early.”

“It’s six o’clock.” Draco pointed out.

“Still heavily pregnant.” Harry said back. “My body doesn’t care what time it is or what day it is, I didn’t have a chance to have a nap today like I have for the last few days and I’m paying for it. I can’t help being tired!”

Blaise picked him up and kissed him. “Ignore them, they wanted to see the New Year in together, but we all know how taxing pregnancy is on you, perhaps we can celebrate tomorrow, or even next year.”

Harry nodded. “I don’t mean to be a killjoy, you can stay up, of course, I just can’t stay awake for another six hours…I’m exhausted and the last thing that I want to do is collapse again, I worry for our girls. I’ve already had two big falls in this pregnancy; I don’t need a third, especially not in my sixth month. I’m so close to birthing them and they’re viable, if I lost them now…” He trailed off, his throat clogged with emotion.
On that dropped bombshell, Blaise carried him up the stairs as Nasta instructed Max and Draco to herd up the children to get them into bed. Harry knew that he wouldn’t sleep the whole night, he knew that he’d likely be awake at two or three in the morning, but he didn’t care, he knew himself and he knew not to push himself in such a late stage of pregnancy, he was exhausted now, he wouldn’t last even another hour. He knew that.

True to his prediction, when Harry woke up it was still dark outside and he was surrounded on all sides by four deeply sleeping men.

Harry tried to get back to sleep, but he knew that it was pointless when his mind started working coherently and he groaned mentally, sitting up and slipping as carefully out of the duvet and over the bed as he could, not easy given that he was six month pregnant, but he made it to the edge of the bed and found the floor with his foot without waking any of his mates, though Nasta did let out a soft growl, which Max answered just as softly.

He grabbed his clothes, made sure that he had everything that he needed, set up some towels and he took a long, luxurious bath, hoping to eat up an hour or two while relaxing himself in the warm water. He hadn’t had anything but quick, convenient showers for the past month; it felt oh so good to have a long, relaxing bath when he knew that he had absolutely nothing to do for the next several hours.

He dressed in a jumper and jeans and he checked in on Leolin in his bassinet, who was sleeping peacefully, before he left his bedroom and went to the nursery next door. He checked on his babies, checked Calix’s nappy and noticing that he was wet, he took him out of his pine cot and changed him gently, his year old son murmuring gently as his lower body was jostled around as he slept.

Harry gave him a kiss and lowered him back into his cot and secured the side back into place. He went down the stairs and had a cup of tea to wake himself up fully, he had a good breakfast and a good hour and a half to himself to just sit and relax, but then it hit him, the urge to leave his home and go to stay in his nest.

He went up the stairs and dug through his babies’ dressers, getting out some of the new bodysuits that had never been used, he got nappies and spare bottles, formula powder, a big bottle of water before he found the cord clamps that Max had gotten for the quintuplets that he’d never gotten to use in the kitchen drawer and he slipped the bottle of blood his mates had made up yesterday morning into the backpack last, right on the top so that he knew that he had it, it was the most important thing that he needed to bring with him. He left through the back door without even looking back.

He dug the freshly fallen snow from the entrance to his nest and he pushed the backpack into the hole first and then climbed in after it, his belly only just fitting. He took off his clothes and shivered in the cool air, but he used his clothes as a barrier over the opening to his nest and he snuggled himself down in the many fur blankets that he’d found and lined his nest with.

He had everything that he needed for the moment, so he pulled out all of his Dracken attributes, keeping his wings folded into his back as he didn’t actually have the room to stretch them out in his little burrow and he settled himself down for his nesting period. He’d have his baby girls in his arms soon, until then, he needed to preen and prepare himself for his coming labour.
A/N: Harry is nesting and his mates don’t even know it! That’s going to be a shock for them when they wake up and find him missing.

So we’ve found out now that Harry is having identical twin girls! Anyone want to change their guesses now? We will have the birth in the next chapter, I’m not sure when it’ll be up, but I’m hoping now in the next few weeks, I need to sort out my other fics too, Damaged Bodies, Lycan Factory and I’m hoping to work on The Pride of the Lions too, it’s been too long and I’ve given Drackens too much of my focus and attention, so hopefully I’ll get something for those out too, but until then I’ll see you soon,

StarLight Massacre. X
Chapter Notes

A/N: Wishing a happy birthday to Heidi, one of the Facebookers. Happy Birthday lovelie, I hope you have a wonderful day and that you enjoy the chapter.

Last Time

He dug the freshly fallen snow from the entrance to his nest and he pushed the backpack into the hole first and then climbed in after it, his belly only just fitting. He took off his clothes and shivered in the cool air, but he used his clothes as a barrier over the opening to his nest and he snuggled himself down in the many fur blankets that he’d found and lined his nest with.

He had everything that he needed for the moment, so he pulled out all of his Dracken attributes, keeping his wings folded into his back as he didn’t actually have the room to stretch them out in his little burrow and he settled himself down for his nesting period. He’d have his baby girls in his arms soon, until then, he needed to preen and prepare himself for his coming labour.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Eighty-Eight – Savage Parturition

Draco was woken up by the faint, hysterical crying of a baby and he blinked several times before the noise filtered through his brain and he actually registered what it meant.

He snapped upright and flung the duvet from his body, the cold air immediately making his almost hot skin break out in goosebumps. He rushed into the nursery next door and scooped up Regan, who was crying his heart out with a livid red mark on his brow, just above his right eye. Draco surmised that he’d been bouncing in his cot and he’d slipped or fallen and hit his head against the side of the cot. Harry was going to go ballistic.

“Is he okay?” Nasta’s groggy voice asked from the door.

Draco nodded. “He’s okay, he’s got a bad bump just above his eye, but he’s okay.” He answered as he bounced Regan in his arms as his boy calmed down slowly.

Nasta picked up Tegan and Calix as Blaise came to pick up Braiden and Farren.
“Why do I have the two biggest and heaviest?” He complained.

Nasta immediately took Farren into his arms as well. “Better?” He asked.

Blaise nodded. “Hand me Calix, I won’t fall with him.”

“I got them.” Nasta insisted.

“Where’s Max?” Draco asked.

“He’s getting Leolin. He was awake in his bassinet, but he was just staring at his mobile, he was transfixed with it.”

“Where’s Harry?” Max asked as he peeked his head around the nursery doorframe, Leolin looking like a doll in his huge arms.

“I thought he was in the bathroom.” Nasta said with a small frown.

Max shook his head. “No, the bathroom’s empty, I thought he was in here with you lot.”

Nasta looked worried then and he let Blaise take Calix, handed Draco Farren and then passed Tegan to Max on his way out of the nursery as he went looking for Harry.

The three remaining mates took the babies down into the kitchen for their breakfasts, though they kept an ear on Nasta’s movements as he checked everywhere for their missing submissive.

“I can’t stand this.” Draco growled. “Where is he?!”

“He’s not in the house and his scent is faint at best on the air, he hasn’t been here for some hours.”

“He wouldn’t have flooed to family, would he?” Max asked. “Not again, not after what happened
“He didn’t take any babies this time, maybe he thought that it would be okay.” Blaise said.

“He’s pregnant!” Draco hissed.

“I know that!” Blaise hissed back. “But maybe Harry thought it would be okay as long as he didn’t take any kids, though that doesn’t sound like him, he’s been so much more careful with the twins since he had those two knocks.”

“I’ll go and check first, you sort these six out.” Nasta said sharing a look with Max before he left.

“What was that look?” Blaise asked.

“He was warning me to hold down the fort in his absence. He’s worried, he thinks something has happened.”

“Harry’s most likely with the Weasleys and he’s lost track of time.” Draco waved away.

“And if he isn’t?” Max demanded. “What then?”

“No one could have gotten into the house without us hearing! They couldn’t have snatched Harry from our bed; we would have scented the danger before they’d even reached the second floor.”

“And if Harry was downstairs at the time? He went to bed very early, he would have been up early too.”

“What do we do?” Blaise asked.

“What Nasta told us to do, we sort the kids out.”
“But if Harry’s in danger…”

“And if he isn’t?” Max asked. “It’s a dangerous line to walk. He could very well have lost track of time with family, or something else might have happened to him, we don’t know yet. We need to wait for Nasta to come home.”

“But if Harry is in danger then anything could be happening to him! He could be hurting; he could be moving further away from us with our unborn girls!”

“You’re forgetting one thing. Harry hasn’t given a distress call. No one could have snatched him from our bed, so he would have had to be downstairs, up and awake, if he was in any trouble, he would have called us, which stands to reason that wherever he went, he went on his own.” Max pointed out as he handed out bowls of orange flavoured baby cereal.

Braiden’s bowl went onto his tray with his spoon and he happily fed himself clumsily, Farren’s also went onto his tray, but Farren ate with his hands, not a spoon and Tegan’s went onto the tray with a spoon, she wasn’t as neat as Braiden, but she could at least get most of her cereal into her mouth, even if some ended up all down her front and onto the floor.

Blaise fed Leolin a bottle of milk as Max started feeding Regan, whose brow was going red and puffy from his bump and Draco fed Calix, who had the tendency to throw his food more than eat it if his bowl and spoon was left on his tray within his reach.

Max was washing up the bowls, spoons and the lone bottle as Blaise wiped up the highchair trays and the odd speck on the floor while Draco settled the babies in the living room with their toys, securing Leolin onto his beanbag chair and snuggling a stuffed rabbit into his little arm for him when Nasta finally came home.

“He’s not at any of the family houses and they haven’t seen him at all today.” He announced, a thread of panic in his voice.

Aneirin flooed in directly behind his son and placed his hands on Nasta’s shoulders.

“When did you last see him?” He asked seriously.

“He went to bed really early, at about six, he didn’t take his hour or two nap in the afternoon because of the quintuplets birthday, so he was exhausted. He must have woken up early.”
“Has he started nesting?” Aneirin asked.

The three of them looked at one another and Max came in to the room with a frown, drying his hands on a dishcloth.

“I haven’t noticed anything going missing.” He said with a frown. “He took curtains, tea towels, carpet, rugs, the bathroom mat, all the duvets and even my oven gloves for Braiden’s nest, nothing has gone missing.”

“But you can’t be certain?” Aneirin asked. “Have you tried calling to him to see if he’ll answer?”

“Would he answer?” Nasta asked with a frown.

“If he’s just nesting, then yes, he’ll answer you.”

“There is almost a foot of snow outside!” Max said aghast.

The floo flared to life and Myron stepped out, he was wearing very smart robes over a smart suit, he’d been in work.

“Richard called me, he said that Harry was missing.” He said by way of explanation. “He couldn’t leave; he has a preliminary hearing with the judge and defendants for Harry’s case to attend in five minutes. He said he’ll be here as soon as it’s over.”

“We’re just going to check to make sure that he’s not nesting.” Aneirin nodded to Myron. “Nothing could be amiss.”

Nasta took a deep breath and let out a guttural noise that stopped all of their babies short; they huddled up together and stilled completely, just watching, their eyes wide, not making a single sound.

Tense minutes passed, hearts were pounding and blood was rushing through their ears and Nasta called twice more, before finally, a small call echoed back to them. Harry’s call.
He could hear his top dominant calling for him and it annoyed him. He just wanted to rest in the cocoon that he’d made for himself. His top dominant should know that he was nesting and that he needed peace and calm to birth their new children, not this aggravating disturbance. His dominants didn’t need to do anything now, this was his time, he knew what to do, he just needed to be left alone in order to do it, they should know that.

After the third call he realised that his top dominant was likely worried and wasn’t going to leave him alone. He called back, a soft, happy sound to let his mates know that he wasn’t distressed or in any trouble. He didn’t care if they knew where he was now, as long as they left him alone and didn’t try to get into his nest, he didn’t want to hurt his mates, but he would if they tried to enter his nest, they’d give away his position to other predators, he wouldn’t have it.

He scented them from the outside and they made noises that he couldn’t understand. He trilled at them angrily, letting them know that they weren’t making any sense and that he didn’t appreciate them being there.

His top dominant growled to him and he hissed back, warning him to stay away and out of his nest. He shifted his body and rolled around in his cocoon before he settled in another comfortable position and he stroked his belly, being very careful of his claws around his twin babies.

One of his dominants stayed outside his nest, the others left and Harry chattered angrily, they would give away his nest site if they sat at the entrance! They’d give away his nesting site to predators!

He squawked and hissed trying to get them to understand, but the mate outside his nest didn’t leave. Huffing and fluffing himself up like an angry bird; he settled himself down and closed his eyes. If his dominant gave away his position, he needed to be ready to defend himself, but one thing was for certain, the moment that he went into labour, his mates had better be prepared to surround his nest, he’d be so very vulnerable at that time and he wouldn’t be able to protect himself or his newborns. He’d need them then, but it was stupid of them to give away his position before he had even gone into labour.

“He built his nest in the fucking ground!” Draco hissed angrily back at the house. “In the damn ground!”

“It’s not unheard of.” Myron insisted logically. “Drackens naturally prefer to be on higher ground and they like being in open nests so they can fly away if they need to, but in such cold weather, it is normal for a Dracken to build a nest in a cave, a mine, a hollow tree or an abandoned burrow, it protects them from the elements. Harry wouldn’t survive if he had to spend a month or longer in the rain, snow, winds and ice of winter, he has some protection in Dracken form, but if his core temperature drops below thirty-five degrees…well you should know what will happen.”
Draco paled at the reminder of how sick Harry had been when his core temperature had dropped to just thirty-three degrees. None of them wanted to feel that level of worry again, Harry had been very sick.

“The biggest concern would be if the blood that he has taken with him freezes, but his instincts would tell him to protect it at all costs. He’s likely keeping it close to his body to share his body heat with it.”

Max paled and rushed into the kitchen. He ripped open drawers, rifling through them to look for something. He found a sterile bag of little plastic clamps, he counted them. He let out a sigh of relief.

“He’s taken four cord clamps.” He informed Nasta, who nodded.

“Why four of them when he only needs two?” Draco questioned.

“Just in case one is defective and doesn’t work or in case there is an extra baby that the scans didn’t pick up on, it can happen, it’s doubtful, but possible.” Nasta informed. “It’s better for him to overcompensate than to end up with an extra baby when he has nothing to clamp the cord with.”

“He took the bottle of blood from yesterday too. Not that I expected anything different.” Max said with a small amount of relief. “I hope he remembered everything that he needed.”

“I’m very sure that he picked up everything he would have needed. He would have learnt from Braiden’s nesting what he needs more of and what he needs less of.” Aneirin told them.

“It doesn’t look like he took any food with him.” Max said worriedly as he checked his cupboards.

“Take that as very high praise.” Myron said deeply. “It means that you fed him sufficiently when he was nesting with Braiden and he trusts you to do the same this time. Ashleigh didn’t trust Richard and I to feed her until she was nesting with Talia.”

“Lowri didn’t trust me until Nasta.” Aneirin said fondly. “She kept insisting it was because I wouldn’t give her, her favourite biscuits. Or at least not enough of them.”
“What were her favourite biscuits?” Nasta asked softly.

Aneirin looked at Nasta with a soft smile and pulled him into a hug with an arm wound around his neck. The others left the kitchen to give them some privacy, going into the living room to check on the children.

“The same as yours.” Aneirin whispered gently back to Nasta. “Bourbons.”

Nasta swallowed heavily and breathed out raggedly. “I wish I’d had the chance to know her.”

“Know that she loved you, Nasta. She loved you with everything that she had and she would be proud to the point of tears at the man you have become.”

“Would…would she like Harry?”

“She’d love Harry from the top of his hair to his tiny toes, she’d love your subordinates and to say that she’d love the kids would be a severe understatement. She was a good woman, a loving mate and an amazing Mother and I loved her fiercely. I miss her more and more each day, but you and Sanex, you remind me so much of her that I always know that pieces of her survived and live on in you both. It makes me happy to know that even though she isn’t here to see you both, that she is still here within both of you.”

Nasta crushed his Dad in a hug and subtly wiped his eyes on his Dad’s shirt, though the hand cradling the back of his head let him know that his Dad at least knew that he was crying.

“It’s alright, Nasta. Calm yourself down.”

“It’s just, I lost her before I even knew her, she didn’t even get a chance to hold me before she died and then…then losing Anga…”

“I know. It makes me more determined to keep you and Sanex healthy and well, I worry for you working with those dragons.”

Nasta laughed and stood up, brushing away his tears. “The dragons aren’t the dangerous part of my job; it’s facing Harry when I come home with a new burn. You’d think I was a toddler running with a kitchen knife.”

“I don’t blame him.” Aneirin said darkly.

“Are you okay?” Blaise asked, he was stood by the backdoor awkwardly.

Nasta grinned at him. “I’m fine. Who’s watching Harry?”

“Draco, he seemed very eager for the job.”

“He really needs to learn to deal with emotions.” Nasta muttered.

Blaise came and hugged Nasta tightly, squeezing him around the shoulders and pressing a kiss to his temple.

“I love you, if you need to talk about anything then you can come to me.”

“I’m alright. I just had a wobble.”

Blaise nodded. “I understand perfectly.”

Nasta knew that he did too. Blaise had lost his Father shortly after his birth as well and Harry had lost both his Mother and Father at a little over a year old, yet he seemed to be able to hold everything together so much better than he or even Blaise could and they both still had a parent left to them. It made him make a mental reminder to talk to Harry to gauge how he was feeling once he had recovered from giving birth.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

He shifted again and whined in the back of his throat. He wanted meat and he had none. Someone approached his nest and he growled as he smelt Dracken, he didn’t want anyone near his nest, but then a huge lump of meat rolled into his nest and the Dracken backed off again.
He sniffed the meat excessively, checked it and dug into it with his claws, prodding at it, but he could see or scent nothing wrong with it and he happily tore into it, blood coating his claws, fingers and chin as he ate messily with his fangs and little teeth, chewing minimally as he almost gULPed the meat down to fill his grumbling belly.

He cooed happily and threw the remains back out of his nest before he covered himself over in his many blankets and snuggled down.

He had been nesting for a while now and he felt safe and secure in his nest, especially as he’d seen off those Drackens that had been sitting outside his nest several days before. They only came back every now and then, he was surprised that they were giving him food, he didn’t know why they would, but he didn’t care as he rolled and made himself comfortable.

He stroked his belly and cooed to his growing children within. It wouldn’t be long now and he’d have them in his arms.

He shivered in the icy gust of wind that carved through his warm, cosy nest. He had found that he really did not like nesting in winter. It was so cold that he had to stay wrapped up and covered and he kept losing the feeling in his fingers and toes. He was just so cold, he hated it.

He rolled around again, trying to get himself warm, but on every exhale his breath misted in front of him in a white torrent and his lungs burnt with every inhale of icy air. He really, really hated nesting in winter.

________________________________________________________________________________________

The whole family were waiting patiently as the weeks passed. Harry had been nesting for over two weeks so far, longer than he had with Braiden, but not by much. It was the seventeenth of January and it was hell trying to handle the babies, who all cried out for their Mother, especially Leolin, who had stopped sleeping properly and cried most of the time that he was awake, repeating the word ‘Ma’ over and over, at least until Draco had had the incredible idea to give Leolin a picture of Harry, which Leolin gripped in his little fists tightly. It wasn’t the same and he still cried and called out for Harry, but he became transfixed with the moving picture of Harry long enough to at least drink a bit of milk, but it was safe to say that they really just wanted Harry to give birth already, but he wasn’t due until February, so they had some weeks to go before Harry went into labour, or so they’d thought.

They had a steady stream of visitors to come and help them out or to just keep them company. They’d given up guarding Harry in his nest after he’d tried to attack them numerous times, hissing like an enraged snake and snatching at them with his claws. He’d gone into such a feral state that he didn’t recognise them from any other Dracken and he was treating them as threats, so they’d backed off a little, just to ease down Harry’s obvious stress at them being so close to him and his nest.

They made sure that Harry was very well fed, and by the partially eaten remnants that he was throwing out of his nest, they were feeding him exceptionally well, but still Nasta didn’t let up on delegating himself and the others to hunt, they hadn’t had such an influx of meat in a year or more and the more animal side of themselves were very happy with their new, high prey diets, but Harry trusted them to feed him while he was nesting and Nasta would be damned before he failed his submissive mate in any way.
“Mama?”

Nasta looked over to Calix who was cruising around the furniture, a frown on his face as he called for Harry.

“Mama!”

“Calix, your Mother isn’t here at the moment, he’s outside nesting, he’s going to give you two new baby sisters.”

“No!” Calix screamed, slapping his hand down. “No baba!”

“You don’t want two new baby sisters?” Nasta asked him as he hefted Calix up and onto his lap.

“Mama.” Calix said sadly.

“You just want your Mum, huh? Well don’t worry, I’m sure he’ll be out soon; he knows his little babies love him and he’ll want to get back to you as soon as he can. But until then, we’ll be here for you.”

Calix looked up at him and Nasta got the impression that his little son had understood him as he latched onto the front of his shirt and snuggled in tight, hiding his face against his chest. Wrapping an arm around Calix’s tiny body, Nasta held him in place as he tried to do some paperwork while Calix was snuggled into him, while keeping an ear out for any danger with Harry outside and watching the other little babies on the floor. It was just his luck that he’d been given a shit load of paper work yesterday morning, just when he didn’t need any more work to do.

“Are you okay?” Draco asked as he came into the room with Leolin in his arms.

“Yeah, Calix and I are having some Father and son time. He misses Harry.”

“They all do.” Draco sighed. “The first thing Leolin does when he’s in a new room is check it for Harry; I barely managed to get him to sleep.”

“Why don’t you put him in his bassinet and catch up with your book? We don’t need to do anything until Harry goes into labour.”

“I never thought I’d say this, but I hope Harry goes into labour soon.”

“I know exactly what you mean. I didn’t realise they were this attached to Harry.”

Draco nodded as he slipped Leolin into his bassinet with an ease of having done the same action a hundred thousand times before. He covered the tiny boy over with a cellular blanket and tucked him in, gave his thin cheek a kiss before he came to sit next to Nasta and he picked up his book from a side table, let it open on his bookmark and he settled down to read, placing his right ankle on his left knee and leaning slightly on Nasta’s shoulder.

Calix turned his head and shifted his body so that he was still clutching at Nasta’s shirt, but he was facing Draco and peering out at him with those curious jet black eyes.

Draco run one long, slim finger down his little pert nose and gave him a smile before settling down and sinking into his book, picking up immediately where he’d left off in terms of how tense he was as he read a suspenseful, penultimate moment that he had been forced to leave right in the middle just the day before.

He was disturbed only five or six minutes later, when Braiden pulled himself up onto the chair next to him and butted his way under Draco’s arm and onto his lap.

“Mama?”

“Your Mother isn’t here right now, Braiden.” Draco explained patiently as he slipped an arm around Braiden and tugged him down.

“Baba Ca.”

“Yes, your brother Calix is here.” Draco said with a smile. “Your brother Leolin is over there in his bassinet.”

“Baba in.” Braiden nodded.
“Your brother Farren is down here by Daddy Nasta’s feet.”

“Baba Fah.”

“Your sister Tegan.”

“Baba Tee.”

“And your brother Regan.”

Braiden frowned as he stared hard at Regan who was giggling and playing happily, babbling to himself.

“Regan.” Draco said slowly and carefully.

“Baba Ee…we.” Braiden shook his head sending his mop of hair in all directions, it fell right back into place only slightly mussed.

“Regan.” Draco said again, louder and clearer.

Regan stopped playing and looked over as he heard his name. He crawled over, chunky aeroplane in his hand as he climbed up with him and Braiden. He sat on his own, but right next to Draco as he started playing with his toy up on the settee.

“Baba Ee…Ewee…Baba Ee. Nah!” Braiden exclaimed in frustration. “Baba gan!” He nodded and leant over Draco to pat Regan on the head. Hard.

Regan scowled at his brother and smack his hand away. “No!” He snapped back.

“Play nice.” Nasta cut in authoritatively.
Braiden and Regan both frowned, but they turned away from one another and after a few minutes, Braiden climbed back down to the floor and pulled himself up with the coffee table, he then took several steps around with its help before he tried stepping out on his own. He toddled from the coffee table to the armchair, then from the armchair to the toy box, where he sat down and dug out some toys to play with.

“He’s getting much better at toddling now.” Draco pointed out to Nasta.

“We’re going to have to make sure that the house is completely safe now that he’s on his feet.” Nasta nodded even as he continued writing on a long piece of parchment, Calix tucked into his chest, legs splayed over his lap and still clutching at him tightly.

“Dada Day, mama!” Tegan demanded as she tugged on the leg of his trousers.

“Your Mother isn’t here right now, Tegan.” Draco said with a sigh, he was beginning to sound like a broken radio.

“Mama!” Tegan shouted.

Calix jumped and turned to look over his shoulder down at his sister.

“Nah, baba Tee!” Braiden admonished. “Ne gah abba ta!”

Tegan turned on him as quick as a flash and before anyone could do anything, she’d flung her arm over her head and thrown the cardboard book in her hands at Braiden’s head.

Nasta was up a second later, Calix placed to the side of where he’d been sat and Tegan went straight into the travel cot behind the settee, Nasta didn’t say a word to her as he came around the settee and picked up a crying Braiden. The book had smacked him on the top of his head, but thankfully it had been the flat of the book and not a corner.

“That’s the first time she’s acted out since…”

“Since Harry shouted at her when Leolin was in the hospital.” Nasta finished gruffly. “It seems to me like she understood that Harry wasn’t here and wouldn’t be for a while, so she’s started with her bad behaviour again.”

“Please hurry up, Harry.” Draco sighed.

He was so cold that he felt like he’d never be warm again. He snarled angrily as he wriggled tighter into his cocoon of fur blankets, the next time he went into labour in the winter, he was finding somewhere warmer!

Trilling softly to the dominant Dracken outside his nest, he tried to get them to leave him alone without moving from his warm position, if he did then he knew he’d be cold again and he didn’t want to be cold anymore.

The tender midsection of an animal rolled into his nest and he hissed angrily. He didn’t want to move, not even to eat, he was too cold.

He reached one arm out and snagged the meat, sniffing it over before he started eating, keeping as much of his body under the warm blankets as he possibly could while he did so. At least it was a fresh kill so his meat was warm in the middle and that made him feel warmer inside as his food settled in his belly.

His two babies were moving about restlessly and he knew that the time to take them out would be soon, his spine hadn’t stopped aching since he’d woken up that morning and he was developing a pain in his abdomen, just under his tight, solid bump.

He mewled softly and wriggled in his cocoon. He sat up and checked on everything, making sure he had everything he needed, laying it out within easy reach. It was almost time.

He ate a little bit more before he threw the remains out of his nest to make space, he lined the wicker basket thickly with soft, clean blankets ready to receive his newborns and he washed his claws with water to make sure there was no more meat or blood on them from his meal.

The pain got progressively worse as time passed and it got so bad that he started warbling with every exhale, only quietly, but he was getting louder and louder with each minute that passed until just an hour later he was screaming loudly.

He heard the reassuring growls from his dominant mates, they were close by, but he couldn’t scent them, he wanted them where he could scent them, but just knowing that they were there when he knew that there were also other dominants hanging around reassured him and he let them know that as he let out a harsh call which ended in a scream. It was time.

He checked his claws again, making sure they were still as clean as he could make them before he got onto his knees, he spread them out so that his baby bulge was between his thighs and he felt underneath it gently, pressing his finger knuckle into the flesh there to check where his babies were lying and for the perfect incision site. He let out his loudest scream yet and took a few deep breaths while letting the growls of his dominants steady him and calm him. He’d done this twice before, he could do it again.
His index claw sunk into his stomach, through flesh, fat and muscle, his middle claw slipping in behind it to make the incision wide enough for a baby to get through and clean enough to ensure a quick recovery.

He screamed through the agony of it, his eyes blurring with tears of pain as he felt around inside himself for the membrane of his sac, he pressed on it, feeling for the position of the precious babies within. This was such a delicate part of the process, he would not catch either of them with his claws, he refused to put them in any danger and especially not from himself, never from himself.

His hand and wrist now covered in blood, he found an area of his sac that had a little space between it and the baby on the other side, so with the very tip of his index claw, he slit open the sac with a smooth, swift movement, his other arm up, his hand poised to guide a head through his sac and out into the open.

He pressed gently, slipping his hand against his sac and tentatively fingered around inside himself for a head, he found one and cupping the back of it with his hand; he guided the bloodied baby out of his sac and onto the blanketed ground, freeing his first baby girl and welcoming her into the world.

He checked her over, just enough to ascertain that she had no injuries or obvious deformities that needed to be immediately addressed before he reached back into himself and eased his second girl out into the world, his wrist got entangled with the umbilical cords, because they were both attached to the same placenta, the one was now crossed over the other, so it took some manoeuvring on his part and a lot of pushing them out of the way, but he finally cupped the back of his baby’s head and eased her body from his, laying her next to her sister before reaching out and grabbing two cord clamps. He checked them over and made sure they were physically alright before he snapped them low down onto the cords and severed them, only then did the two wet wails of newborns fill his nest.

Grunting with exertion, he let out a hoarse scream that hurt even his ears as he pulled out the single placenta and dumped it down into a waiting towel. He made sure his insides were clean and he’d left nothing amiss inside himself before he snatched up the bottle of his mates’ blood and gulped it down. It was cold, icy and thick, but he didn’t care as the damage he’d done to himself to get out his baby girls slowly knitted itself back together, leaving behind a livid red line that would scar badly.

Only after he’d done that did he check on his newborns, wiping them free from blood and hoisting them onto his shoulder in turn to pat their backs to free any fluid from their lungs. He checked them over more critically, counting fingers and toes, making sure their noses and throats weren’t blocked; he checked their eyes, which were both a stunning shade of cornflower blue, but were a little wet and gluey from being surrounded by fluid for so long. He checked on their cords and made sure the clamps were tight before he checked their more intimate parts. They were both definitely little girls.

Once assured that they were perfectly fine, he put them in clean nappies and dressed them in sleepsuits that were a little big and baggy on them, but would keep them warm, before he tucked them into the wicker basket and covered them over with three blankets, placing little hats and scratch mitts on them while he was at it and then he took a moment to breathe.

He threw the placenta and bloodied blankets out of his nest and croaked tiredly to his mates, letting them know that they had to remove them before it attracted predators, before he curled up and fell into a deep, deep sleep.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X
They were all anxious, they had removed the blood soaked blankets and the placenta from outside Harry’s nest and disposed of them yesterday afternoon, covering the bloodstains over with fresh snow merely to appease Harry as they knew that no predator would dare go near his nest site.

Max was brewing a scar reducer, more to keep busy than anything as they waited and waited anxiously for any noise or sound from Harry, but there was nothing and though they were tempted to just go into his nest and bring him and the babies into the house and out of the cold snow, they knew that after birthing Harry needed time to come back into himself. He would still be feral for a while afterwards and he’d come to them in his own time, but the waiting was agony, but at least Harry had stopped screaming, that had brought them a small amount of relief. Hearing the one that they loved so very, very much screaming in such heart wrenching agony hurt them deeply and the need to go to Harry, to protect him and comfort him was incredibly strong, but they had been unable to do so and that had made them all angry, grouchy and anguished in equal measures. Of course it didn’t help that their babies had all started to scream along with Harry once they’d heard him, even little Leolin, who had cried himself to sleep and cried his lungs raw in the process.

Blaise almost thought that Harry had the best part of this situation, then he thought about digging his own claws into his own stomach to take out two live newborns and he felt queasy, there was no way that he could do what Harry did to birth their children into the world. He’d have to have those babies pulled from him forcibly as he was under the body bind curse after he’d been caught and dragged back kicking and screaming and likely with a trail of bodies littering the way.

Regan cruised around to meet him and patted his knee.

“Mama?”

“Hello to you too, Regan.” He sighed as he held those slim shoulders with both of his hands.

“Mama?”

“He’s not here Regan, sweetheart.” Blaise said sadly. “He’s with your new baby sisters.”

“Dada Blay, mama.”

Blaise sighed and picked Regan up, sitting him on his hip as he moved to the kitchen. Max was still brewing a scar reducer on the counter, they’d put two bassinets in the kitchen at the opposite end of the table to Leolin’s, ready for the newborn twins. Draco was feeding Leolin far enough away so that if by some freak, clumsy accident Max knocked over the cauldron then he’d have ample time to turn his back to protect their little baby from any splashes.

“Regan really want’s Harry.”
“They all do.” Draco groused. “You’d think that we were convenient moving statues that fed and changed them.”

“All babies have a deep connection with their Mother; Dracken babies are no different, Draco.” Max said from the counter.

“But it’s like we’re nothing to them.”

“Of course you’re not, they call you Daddy Day don’t they? They know who you are, they’re just closer to Harry and I’d like to think that they’d act like this if any of us went missing for two and a half weeks. I mean, no offense to you Max, but they were a wreck when you left, they called for you constantly too.” Blaise answered. “So I don’t think it’s a reflection on us that they’re calling for Harry so much, they obviously have a strong bond with him and two and a half weeks is too long for him to be gone, but they acted the same when Max left us, so though they have a strong bond with Harry, they have a bond with us as well.”

“I still want Harry to come home.” Draco grumbled.

“I’m clock watching at the moment.” Max sighed proving his point by looking at the wall mounted clock. “He went the whole night without making a sound, this morning Nasta heard movement, but Harry didn’t call out and he didn’t make any move to come out, so Nasta fed him and left.”

“I want to meet our girls so badly.” Draco sighed. “They’re a day old already and I don’t even know what they look like.”

“Sometimes it takes a submissive a while to settle down after labour, especially if it was a normal, uneventful birth. Take the quintuplets for instance; Harry’s worry for Leolin overruled his instincts. He wanted to get Leolin to the hospital so badly that it took just hours for him to come around and invite us into his nest, but with Braiden it took about a day before he came out of his nest, so I think that we should just be relieved at the fact that it means there isn’t anything immediately wrong with our twin girls.”

“I know, but the wait is killing me.” Blaise said anxiously, looking as the clock ticked over to four in the afternoon.

“Mama.” Regan sat patting Blaise’s cheek.
“He has to come out soon or these kids are going to drive me mad.” Blaise said as he walked away with Regan again, taking him back to his brothers and lone sister who were being watched over by Richard and Aneirin.

“No news?”

“Nothing. Harry’s incredibly quiet; we have no idea what he’s doing.”

“You likely never will.” Aneirin said. “What little he’ll remember of his labour and birthing he may not feel like sharing, at least not immediately, but if I had to hazard a guess then I’d say that he was forming a bond with the two girls, settling them down and himself and just resting. Opening up your own stomach and removing two babies and the placenta…he’s not going to recover overnight, Blaise, he’s likely hurting, at the very least he’s very sore and aching.”

Blaise nodded as he put Regan down on the floor and watched as he stared hard at everyone in the room.

“Mama?” He asked curiously.

Blaise wanted to hit himself in the head.

“Go and play, Regan.” He encouraged instead as he sat back down and threw his head over the back of the settee. “This waiting is agony.”

“I remember this waiting.” Richard said with a fond smile. “Always waiting on eggshells for Ashleigh to come out of her nest holding my new son or daughter. It was bittersweet really, it was agony, but I always forgot it the moment that my baby was placed in my arms.”

Nasta walked into the room with a grizzling Braiden, who’d had a hell of a tantrum and had vomited from his crying, all because Harry wasn’t there.

“How is he?” Blaise asked, holding his arms out for his son.
“Better, but he’s still whinging.” Nasta replied, placing Braiden into Blaise’s arms.

“There’s no news from outside.” Blaise reported. “Harry’s still quiet.”

Nasta nodded. “I expected as much, he has double the amount of newborns as he had the last time he had an uneventful birth, he’s likely run ragged from the night feeds, but remember, he only has a limited supply of nappies and formula. He’ll have to come out and soon.”

Blaise nodded and held Braiden to him, his shirt soaking through with his son’s tears. This had gone on long enough now.

Max finished up his potions, bottled them and then cleaned up before he started dinner, Blaise envied him for having something to do, something to take his mind away from the long wait.

They fed their babies and bathed them, getting them ready for bed as they took away their stimulating toys and left them with soft, quiet toys that would calm them down. Aneirin had Leolin tucked into one arm as he read a picture book to him quietly, making up a story to go with the pictures.

They all heard Max’s happy exclamation and Harry’s tired voice from the kitchen and as one, six babies turned towards the kitchen and Calix was just gone, crawling as fast as his little hands and knees could take him, burbling happily with a soaking wet chin from his dribble.

Nasta scooped him up and carried him into the kitchen to see Max ushering a very pale, tired looking Harry into a chair. He had two heavily wrapped bundles in his arms. He could just see a pale tuft of hair sticking out of one blanket; he would bet that hair had been darker yesterday from the fluid.

“How are you feeling?” Nasta asked and he tried to hold onto a squirming, fighting Calix.

“Tired, achy and sore.” Harry croaked, but he smiled at his babies as everyone in the kitchen tried to keep a hold on them. “I missed you all.”

“How are those two?” Draco asked as he stared at as much of them as he could see.

“How are those two?” Draco asked as he stared at as much of them as he could see.

“Loud.” Harry chuckled as he looked down at them. “And hairy as hell, they were born with their hair stuck straight up, there’s at least two inches of the stuff. It was darker when they were born too, but the more it dries the lighter it’s going.”

“They’re adorable.” Richard said with a grin. “I told Myron that he’d miss their homecoming, but he’s in work until six.”
“Pass them here, you must be exhausted.” Max insisted.

Harry handed the twins over and then grinned tiredly as he got a hold of the babies that he’d missed while in his nest, holding Leolin and Regan while the others knelt on the table where he could hold them and kiss them.

“I missed you all too.” Harry said hoarsely as the babies all babbled over one another.

“What colour are their eyes?” Blaise asked.

“Cornflower blue at the moment, but that could change easily in the coming months.” Harry nodded. “But their eyes are a gorgeous colour.”

“Have you thought of names?” Draco asked as he was cradling a little girl with a misty eyed look on his face as he looked down at his daughter.

“Of course he hasn’t!” Nasta cut in. “He’s just come out of his nest, give him a minute to eat and get some proper sleep first.”

Harry nodded happily at that idea. “I feel like I haven’t slept in a month. I have a few ideas for names from before their birth, but I don’t like any of them now, but one thing is certain, I want one of them to be named after your grandmother, Max. I decided on that the day of the scan when we found out that they were girls. I knew the first girl born would have the middle name Evelyn, you don’t mind do you?”

Max passed the baby he was holding to Blaise and pulled Harry into a tight hug, babies and all.

“That means so much to me, Harry. That you would name one of our newborn daughters after a woman who I loved so much, thank you. I love you.”

“Love you too.” Harry said right before he let out a jaw shattering yawn.
“Max has dinner on; as soon as you’ve eaten you can climb into bed.” Nasta said with a smile and a soft caress to Harry’s cheek.

“That sounds like heaven.” Harry declared, even as he bent to kiss Braiden’s mouth and raised a hand to stroke a finger back and forth over Farren’s cheek.

“Can you hold on for a bath too, or do you want to wait for tomorrow to deal with that?” Draco asked, even as he continued to gaze at his daughter.

“Tomorrow.” Harry said firmly. “They’re half an hour apart.”

“What do you mean?” Blaise asked as he rubbed noses with the little girl in his arms.

“One will wake up for a feed so I sort her out, burp her, check her over and then put her back to bed, then half an hour later the other one will wake up and it’s the same all over again, they’re not synchronised, they’re on their own schedules, I’ve had barely any sleep, though thankfully they only woke up every three hours, not every two or I’d have had no sleep at all.”

“Which one is which?” Max asked.

“That one is the youngest. Four pounds and eight ounces.” Harry said looking critically over the one baby in Draco’s arms. “She wakes up first for her feeds, and that one is the older twin. Four pounds and six ounces.” Harry said as he nodded to the baby that Nasta was currently cradling. “She wakes up half an hour after her sister drops back off to sleep for her feeds. They were born seven minutes apart as far as I remember; I think I caught my wrist between the umbilical cords, because they were attached to the same placenta it was awkward to manoeuvre around them, so I had to sort those out before I could take her out and it took me a while to do it.”

“Your dinner’s burning.” Richard said happily.

Max turned around and cursed, diving for the food that he was cooking and taking the saucepan from the hob.

“I think that’s our cue to leave. It’s wonderful to see you again, Harry, congratulations on your two new baby girls, they’re beautiful.” Aneirin praised.
Harry grinned tiredly, but proudly from under his pile of children, some of whom were getting drowsy.

Nasta saw their guests out as Max dished up dinner onto waiting plates.

“It’s going to be impossible to get these monsters into bed now.” Blaise sighed as he cradled the baby that Nasta had handed back to him.

“I’m sorry for not coming home later.” Harry teased in a croak.

Blaise chuckled and pulled him into a kiss. “I love you and I’m glad that you’re home, it hasn’t been the same without you around, plus the kids really missed you.”

“I was worried about that before I nested, but I just didn’t think about it when I went feral.”

“Next time you go and nest, let us know about it! We almost had heart attacks when we woke up and found you missing.”

“Sorry, the urge came suddenly and I didn’t think of anything other than gathering up what I needed and getting to my nest.”

“We found you alright.” Nasta said as he helped move the babies off the table and into the two travel cots that he’d brought back with him from the living room.

“Did I miss anything?” He asked, gathering up the courage. He’d be devastated if he missed anything.

“Regan cut a back tooth, Braiden’s getting stronger at walking and Tegan has decided to read aloud, it doesn’t seem to matter that the book was upside down and it’s just nonsensical babbling, but she’s very happy to read her books to us.” Blaise said with a grin.

Harry laughed. “Did you get it on tape for me?”
“Of course, it was too adorable not to tape.” Max answered as he put a heaped plate in front of Harry and gave his cheek a solid kiss.

“On the subject of Tegan, she started playing up when she realised that you were gone and weren’t coming back. She threw one of her books at Braiden and it hit his head.”

“Those books are chunky and have sharp edges!” Harry said as he turned to Braiden and checked his head.

“The flat of the book caught him, but while we’re on the subject of injuries Regan had a black eye for a few days too.” Nasta informed him.

“How the hell did he get a black eye?!” Harry demanded aghast.

“He fell in his cot and he must have caught his brow on the side bar, it wasn’t a bad black eye, just a slight bruising around his eye socket. It looked worse than it was, I promise.” Max assured.

Harry nodded, but he still stood up and went to the travel cots, staring hard at Regan, turning his head every which way before placing a kiss to his forehead. He couldn’t detect even a hint of bruising which helped settle him back down.

“Come back here and eat something.” Nasta chastised. “Don’t overwork yourself either, you need rest.”

Harry sighed, but he smiled too. He’d missed his mates while he’d spent two weeks in isolation. He couldn’t remember the full weeks that he’d been in his nest, but he remembered bits and pieces and this caring and fussing comfort from his mates was making him feel very settled and happy.

He ate his first cooked meal in weeks and he relished it happily and when his youngest newborn girl started wailing at the top of her lungs, it was absolutely lovely when Draco dived from his chair to see to her and Max all but run to the kettle to get her a bottle made up. He could just relax and sit back on his arse and do nothing but stuff his face and it felt absolutely fucking amazing.

“I know you said they had hair, but damn that’s a mop and a half.” Max laughed happily as he handed the bottle over to Draco and uncovered the little girl’s head from her blanket covering, running his thick fingers through the little girl’s thick mass of pale hair.
Harry grinned. He couldn’t wait to tell his mates that both of his newborn girls were Drackens, but not yet, he wanted to keep that to himself for a while longer, but they were going to be insanely happy and proud of him and their girls, he loved them dearly already, but he would adore them if they’d just let him get a couple more hours of sleep a night. He’d grown so used to it over the last few months with all of their babies sleeping through the night, as it was rare now that Leolin woke in the night for a bottle, that these next few weeks where their girls would wake them every three hours for a feed was going to be a torturous hell. He was already exhausted and they were only a day old.

“Come on you, let’s get this potion on your scar and tuck you up into bed with the kids. You look like you need a good fourteen hour sleep.” Max said as he waved a jar of familiar scar salve at him.

“I can’t do stairs.” Harry said as he held up his arms to be carried. “Trying to get out of my nest with two newborns and all the uneven ground to get over was severely painful, even just getting over the step to the back door almost killed me.”

“All you have to do is ask.” Max almost sung as he picked Harry up carefully, being mindful of the now empty baby bump as he carried Harry from the kitchen and up to their bedroom.

Max laid Harry gently on the bed and Harry groaned happily as he wriggled around in ecstasy. “Oh you have no idea how good it feels to be in a BED!”

Max laughed and pinned him down and took the dirty pair of maternity jeans from Harry, the only article of clothing that he was wearing and if Max had to guess, he’d say they were the same pair that Harry had likely worn into his nest two and a half weeks ago.

The scar was long, thick and livid and Max winced to see it. He couldn’t even imagine cutting himself open with his own claws and looking at the scar, it had been a wide cut, but he manned up and applied the scar reducer thickly and copiously. Harry fell deeply asleep before he was even halfway finished.

Placing a strip of gauze over the paste, Max plastered it down so that it wouldn’t move or rub off on the sheets and then he slipped Harry gently and carefully into his arms and pulled back the duvet before he placed Harry in the centre of the bed. He kissed Harry’s slack lips and tucked him back over.

He could hear Blaise and Nasta in the nursery next door and then Draco came in with Leolin to place him in the bassinet. Two more had been added to the bedside on the opposite side of Leolin’s, like a mirror image from the kitchen only a bed separated them in this room and not a long table.

“Who’s watching the girls?” He asked.
“They’re alright for the moment.” Draco whispered. “The younger twin was fed and burped; now we’re waiting for the older girl to wake for her feed. They’re absolutely gorgeous, Max.”

Max nodded with a grin. “I know. I’m so damn proud of him, after the horror that was the quintuplets birth I expected him to go overboard or to panic and cock something up, but he didn’t, he pushed aside the past birth and focused on what he needed to do and what he knew he had to do and he birthed them without issue. Well almost no issue, he did mention that tangling with the umbilical cords, but other than that, he said that nothing went wrong. That takes bravery, guts and a dash of maturity too. I can’t wait until he’s more rested and less exhausted so that he can hopefully remember a bit more, but for now, he really needs his sleep.”

Draco nodded as he bedded Leolin down and tucked him in before they both left the bedroom together. They went back down the stairs and into the living room, where Draco had moved the girls after dinner and they sat down and just looked at them sleeping peacefully, their little faces angelic in sleep and their little hands drowned in too big scratch mitts. They were almost mirror images of one another, the only difference in them and their position was that one girl had her head to the left, the other to the right so that though they were in separate bassinets, they were both facing one another.

“I wonder who’s they are.” Draco sighed wistfully.

“I have an idea, but I want to wait for Harry to wake up to confirm it.” Nasta said as he came into the living room and joined them on the settee and sat with them, all three of them gazing at the sleeping girls in front of them.

“You didn’t leave a space for me.” Blaise complained as he came in.

Max grabbed him quick as a flash and dragged him down onto his lap, holding him around the hips and nuzzling the back of his neck with his lips.

“There we go, now we can all baby gaze together.” Max said happily.

“They’re amazing.” Blaise sighed. “Our newborn girls. A day old. Merlin, how much I want to thank Harry for everything that he does, puts up with and goes through just to give us these adorable children.”

“They look like Braiden.” Max said with a grin, squeezing Blaise’s middle. “They’ve got the same chin.”
Blaise laughed. “Yeah, they do have Braiden’s chin, but Braiden has Harry’s chin.”

“They look like they have Harry’s eyes.” Max said consideringly.

“The one I fed opened her eyes for a few moments, they’re more rounded than Harry’s eyes, but they do have an almost almond shape to them. They’re just more rounded almond.” Draco told them.

“I don’t think we’ll really know until Harry wakes up.” Nasta said. “But one thing’s for certain, whatever the outcome, I have two new baby daughters and I’m currently the happiest man in the world.”

“I can agree to that.” Max said and twisted so that he rested against Nasta, Blaise reclining against him. “I love those girls already and I don’t care which one of us is the Father, I will be teaching them how to cause mayhem.”

“You certainly will not!” Draco hissed. “My daughters will not be forced to cause trouble when they may be as good as gold.”

“Stop the fighting.” Nasta said, swatting at them both lazily. “It’s too late in the day and I’m just glad to have Harry and my newborn girls back under this roof and out of that snow.”

“I can agree to that.” Blaise said with a sigh. “After all the waiting, the worrying and the anxiety and tension, I’m just happy that all three of them are home and safe. I feel exhausted myself.”

“An early night then. I have a feeling that these two are going to keep us sleep deprived for the next several weeks; we need all the sleep that we can get.” Nasta nodded.

“What about Leolin?” Draco asked. “He’s going to have his sleep disturbed every single night.”

“We’ll have to put up a one way ward to help keep him sleeping as much as possible, Harry won’t allow him to leave our bedroom just yet, he’s the equivalent of a four month old, it’s too soon.”
Nasta smiled as one of their daughters shifted in her sleep, but that didn’t last when she opened her tiny pink mouth and started wailing. Loudly, very loudly. He looked at the clock and sighed with a smile as he saw that Harry was dead on, she was exactly half an hour behind the schedule of her younger sister. These next few weeks were going to be a huge strain and challenge on them all if their two newborn girls continued with their different schedules.

Chapter End Notes

Well I hope you’ve enjoyed reading this chapter, the next one will be around soon, but I want to try and get something for Lycanthrope Factory and Damaged Bodies out too, maybe the second chapter of Pride of the Lions too, until then enjoy,

StarLight Massacre. X
A/N: Happy belated birthday to Louise, one of the Facebookers. I’m so sorry I couldn’t get this out for your birthday or manage to get you that Scaled Bits chapter, I hope this helps make up for it.

Last Time

Nasta smiled as one of their daughters shifted in her sleep, but that didn’t last when she opened her tiny pink mouth and started wailing. Loudly, very loudly. He looked at the clock and sighed with a smile as he saw that Harry was dead on, she was exactly half an hour behind the schedule of her younger sister. These next few weeks were going to be a huge strain and challenge on them all if their two newborn girls continued with their different schedules.

Chapter Eighty-Nine – Saints Patience

Nasta felt like he’d been beaten to within an inch of his life and then served up cold the next morning. He had known that the girls being on different schedules would be hard to manage, but he’d had absolutely no idea exactly how hard it would have been to deal with. Every three hours, first one baby would wake them up for a bottle and then just as they were all drifting back to sleep after sorting her out and getting her back to sleep, the other one would wake up. So even though the twins woke every three hours, the four of them only got an hour and a half, maybe two hours’ worth of sleep if they were lucky in that time and through it all Harry slept like a rock. He never stirred; he didn’t so much as twitch, not even once, at the ear piercing wails just beside the bed.

Not that Nasta held it against him, of course not, Harry had done his part amazingly well and he was happy to take over for a couple of days while Harry recovered and rested after his ordeal. It was more that he was surprised that Harry could sleep though all the feedings, he had been correct after all, the girls were loud, incredibly loud, in their demands for their milk.

He’d been worried that he might have to ward the nursery next door so that none of their other babies were woken up with the noise, but amazingly no matter how loudly one baby cried, she never woke up her twin, the other baby slept peacefully through it all just next to her screaming sister, just like their Mother. He wanted to know their secret to blocking out the noise.

Nasta was the only one awake at the moment and he had both twins with him and six babies crawling around his feet after he’d done the breakfast feedings all on his own…well, Leolin wasn’t crawling about anywhere, but he was on the floor for once, flat on his back in a padded baby gym. He hadn’t moved an inch, his arms still straight by his sides, but the shiny shaped mirror floating over his head was holding his avid attention. He’d managed to feed and supervise all eight of them and the worst that had happened was Braiden getting the yolk of his soft boiled egg in his hair along with a smear of butter from his little toast soldiers. Nasta considered that a success.

Now he had one twin in his left arm, he’d long since forgotten if she was the older or the younger twin, they were completely and utterly identical to his eyes, though he was sure that as he got used to them and they aged he’d get better at telling them apart, but for now, it was impossible until one of them opened their mouth to scream for a feed.

“Dada Nah?” Braiden asked as he toddled unsteadily over to him.

“Are you alright, Braiden?” He asked softly.

“Mama?”

“Your Mother is upstairs sleeping, Braiden.”

Braiden nodded his head, but his indigo eyes looked to the baby in his arms curiously.

“Oo at?” He asked and Nasta wished fervently that he had a video camera to hand, Braiden was growing by the day and his vocabulary in particular was picking up after suffering a lapse when Braiden had first found his feet. It was stunning to see the advanced effect that the Dracken genes had on his development.

“This is your new baby sister.” He told him softly. “You need to be very quiet and gentle with her.”

Braiden, who had been reaching out a hand to touch the baby, pulled it back sharply and looked up at him unsurely. Nasta smiled and took his still tiny hand in his own and held it as he helped Braiden pet his new sister, his little finger tips barely brushing her skin and soft hair.

The girls’ hair had gone paler still this morning and Nasta grinned to see it, curling a lock of it around his finger; they really did have a lot of hair for newborns. It was a soft, pale brown at the moment and it was starting to curl as it dried. He’d known it would go curly ever since Harry had said that they’d been born with their hair stuck straight up.

Max shuffled into the room and he looked at him blearily.

“Good morning.” Nasta greeted with a smirk.
“How are you even awake?” He groaned as he flumped next to him and immediately robbed one of the little girl’s from his arms. “They’re so loud! My ears are still ringing.”

“I’m up out of necessity, our children needed their breakfasts, one of us had to get up to sort them all out and it wasn’t going to be anyone else but me, Harry hasn’t moved all night.”

“I need to reapply the scar reducer salve to him soon. Merlin it was bad this time, Nas.”

Nasta nodded. “It’s been a while since he was last pregnant and with the quintuplets birth, what with his sac ripping, that was a bad birth and even with the scar reducer he still had a faint scar left behind, he’s just ripped through it yet again, it’s bound to make it a look a little worse.”

Max nodded thoughtfully, but his eyes were all for the little girl in his arms. He was completely smitten, just like the rest of them.

“She’s gorgeous.” Max whispered reverently.

Nasta nodded his agreement, but his attention was diverted by Blaise coming into the room.

“I feel like death warmed over.” He said miserably.

“You look worse.” Max relied with a grin and Blaise gave him a solid thwack, which made him laugh all the more.

“Behave yourselves.” Nasta said with a long suffering sigh.

“You’re asking the impossible there.” Draco said just as he walked into the room.

“Dada Day!” Calix called out and immediately went up onto his knees and lifted his arms high above his head.

Draco chuckled but bent down and hefted Calix up under his arms and held him against his chest, settling him into his arms, giving him a morning kiss when Calix demanded it.
“Have you been alright this morning, Calix?” He asked, his voice still a little gruff around the edges from sleep.

Calix went into a stream of babbling and burbling, an odd word thrown in here or there for good measure, but Draco just nodded seriously and hummed at intermittent points.

“Was Harry still asleep when you woke up?” Nasta asked.

Draco nodded to him. “Like a rock, I think he’s going to sleep for another several hours at least. He didn’t even stir when I unwrapped myself from him.”

Nasta nodded. “That’s alright, let him rest and recover. He ate before he went to sleep, so I’m not too concerned about him missing a few meals. He ate well in his nest too, we fed him well.”

“How are the girls?”

“Sleeping at the moment, we need to get some new sleepsuits and bodysuits for them, the ones we have are either too small or too baggy, it’s not too much of a problem as they are going to grow, but the oldest girl, or at least I think that one is the oldest, she pulls her legs to curl up to her chest, but because the sleepsuit is so baggy, her legs come out of the leg parts and then when she stretches out again, both legs go into the same leg hole and then she gets stuck.”

Max laughed at that. “That’s just begging for an accident to happen, I’ll pick some up today after work, I have to go in, just for an hour to oversee a shipment. I just have to check on the quality of the potions we’re shipping out.”

“Remember that Harry will not have any sort of slogan on them.” Blaise warned.

Max nodded. “I don’t like it either, so no problems there.”

“Do you think we will be able to send the birth certificates off today? Hedwig is back to attacking Esmeralda over Saracen; one of them needs a flight.”
“It depends on whether Harry is up to naming our girls later.” Nasta said. “But if he’s not then just let him rest.”

It took a further three hours for Harry to wake up at half past one in the afternoon. All of their babies were down for their naps after their lunches and Max had left for work after fending off his insistent, excited family members who wanted to visit the newborn twins.

Harry shuffled slowly into the kitchen, being careful of his very sore stomach, to where Nasta was doing paperwork and Blaise was cooing over one girl as Draco fed the other, his shirt sleeves rolled to his elbows and his solid forearm muscles were bulging as he cradled a tiny four pound baby to his chest, leaning his lower back against the counter like some eye candy model for a Mother and Baby magazine.

“How are you feeling?” Nasta asked, shoving his paperwork aside as he stood up to come to Harry and hug him.

“Like I slept for a week.” Harry chuckled.

“Not quite a week, but a good analogy all the same.” Blaise nodded.

Nasta got him to sit down and made him a cup of honey tea and a plate of lightly buttered toast.

Harry ate like a starved man so Nasta tossed him a pear as well and Harry saluted him with it, before tearing into it like it was a prime steak.

“Max left instructions for you to have a bath or a shower, though a bath would put less pressure on your muscles and then you are to let me apply that scar salve.”

“Where is Max?” Harry asked. “Work?”

“He had to go in for an hour or so, just to oversee a quality assessment before a large shipment of potions is sent out to various clinics and apothecaries all over Britain. He’s going to pick up some sleepsuits on his way home too.”

“I hope you told him no stupid slogans, I don’t want any slogans on any of them.”
“He remembered.” Draco said with a smirk as he burped the little girl in his arms.

“Let me hold her.” Harry demanded.

“You need to go and have a bath first.” Draco argued. “You’re filthy and my little queens have already been bathed today.”

Harry cocked an eyebrow. “Queens?”

Draco nodded. “They’ll be treated better than royalty!” He declared seriously.

“He’s been doing this all morning.” Blaise chuckled. “I think he’s in love.”

Harry laughed, but it made his stomach muscles throb so he stopped abruptly and pressed a hand to it.

“But Nasta was already packing his paperwork up and away before Harry could even answer. Harry went to the downstairs bathroom and started running a hot, deep bath. He was looking forward to this, he hadn’t bathed or even washed in nearly three weeks, he felt dirty and grubby. He was dirty and grubby. Smelly too.

Nasta came in with a collection of potions in his hands and Harry stared at them.

“Let me guess, Max’s orders?” Harry said with an indulgent smile.

Nasta nodded as he tipped two of the potions into the water. “Yes, a muscle relaxant to help with any aches and pains that you have and an antibacterial potion to help kill any viruses or bugs that are on your skin, it was Max’s idea to use the latter, just in case, so we don’t spread anything to Leolin.”

Harry nodded seriously, sobered up with that thought and he pulled off the plasters stuck to him with a grimace as they were glued to the tiny hairs of his belly, all but ripping out the soft black hairs that went from his belly button to his groin, even catching the tops of his pubic hair which were also ripped out when he tore off the plasters and made his eyes stream with tears. He peeled back the gauze with an even bigger grimace at the state of the scar on his body and the mess that the salve had made before he stepped into the hot, soothing water with Nasta’s help to wash it off along with the almost three weeks’ worth of filth and grime.

Nasta stayed with him, on his knees, his shirt sleeves rolled up, like how they bathed the babies, only Harry wasn’t going to soak him from head to toes.

“I’m so proud of you, our girls are absolutely perfect.”

Harry smiled as he lay back and just let Nasta wash the two and a half weeks’ worth of dirt, dried sweat and even odd patches of dried blood from his skin as he happily relaxed in the medicated water.

“They’re adorable, what do they look like now that they’re two days old? I barely got a glimpse of Draco’s queens before I was arm wrestled into a bath before I could even hold them!”

“Their hair is a pale brown and it’s going curly now that it’s mostly dry. They’ve gone a pale pink too; they’ve lost their red flush and the swollen cheeks from their birth.”

Harry grinned. “I can’t wait to hold them again, my arms ache for them.”

“Once you’ve had your bath and I’ve sorted out the salve.” Nasta said with no room for any argument.

Harry laughed. “How did the night go? Please tell me that you didn’t sort them both out every single time. You look run down and exhausted. You’ll make yourself sick.”

“Not every time, Max sorted them out a few times and I kicked Blaise out of bed once, but I did the morning feed and the kids’ breakfasts, I’ve been awake since then.”

“Go and have a nap then.” Harry encouraged seriously. “Max will be back soon, I’ve got Blaise and Draco, go and get an hour or two while it’s going to be quiet. It’s only going to get worse come tonight; you may as well sleep while you have the chance to.”
Nasta pulled a face, like he was going to fight or argue about it.

“Nas, please love. You need to get some sleep, just a small nap. The kids will be asleep for the next hour and a half, the twins are well in hand, the nights are going to be the worst, we already know that from past experience and they’re on a different schedule, which only makes it harder, we might as well take advantage of the time that we do have and you’re tired. Go and get some sleep.”

Nasta sighed and Harry knew that he’d won and he fought to keep the grin from his face as Nasta gave in with a nod.

“If I can’t sleep though, I’m getting up.” He swore.

“Something tells me that as soon as your head hits the pillow and you’re in a quiet, dark room, you’ll be out like a light.” Harry replied, grimacing as he looked at the filthy water that he was swimming in. “Fuck I was dirty. Who would have thought I’d get so dirty from spending two and a half weeks in a hole in the ground?”

Nasta chuckled as he washed Harry’s greasy, filth matted hair with gentle fingers.

“It’s a wonder that Draco didn’t have a heart attacking seeing this.” Harry grumbled as he reached up to tug at a knotted twist of hair.

“He was enamoured with his two new daughters.” Nasta said. “I don’t think he noticed.”

“I can’t believe I have to pry my own daughters from him and Blaise. All I wanted was a cuddle!”

Nasta chuckled and kissed his soapy neck with soft lips.

“They’re Max’s girls aren’t they?”

“You couldn’t tell?! If I’d thought that you couldn’t scent it on them then I would have said yesterday.” Harry insisted, eyes wide and beginning to get upset. “You knew immediately with Braiden, so I just assumed that you knew with the twins.”
“No, your nest was enclosed this time, love, they smell like you and blood and meat and dirt and that was before all of us touched and cuddled them, we couldn’t tell anything from scenting them, only that they’d been held against your stale sweaty chest for too long. Draco was almost frantic to bathe them this morning.”

“Well damn. I would have said yesterday if I thought that you didn’t know, I really would have!” Harry said with a sharp nod.

“I know, love, so they are Max’s?”

Harry nodded. “I suppose you guessed from the curly brown hair if you couldn’t scent it on them?”

Nasta grinned. “He’s going to freak, he hates his curly hair.”

“It might look better on a girl than a boy. Alayla carries it well when she’s not straightening it down with potions and spells. I was surprised to see it so pale though.”

“You have to remember, love that half of Max’s family are blonde, half of his Uncles have blond hair, his Mother and Grandmother are both blonde and one of his sisters too. Then there is Talia, who has blondish-brown hair, just like our girls.”

“I think their hair will get darker as they get older though, you told me before that sometimes people with dark brown hair are born white-blonde and it gets darker as they get older. That could happen here.”

“It could very easily and Max’s family has such a variety of hair and eyes colours that those girls could come out with a selection of any of them.”

“Like Calix looking like a carbon copy of Myron.” Harry nodded. “I love his eyes; they’re so intense and different.”

Nasta chuckled. “I think Calix took your body build more than Max and Myron’s though.”
Harry pulled a face. “Here’s hoping he doesn’t hold that against me when he’s older.”

“Of course he won’t!” Nasta said quickly, but truth be told he’d never actually thought of that. Would their children dislike taking Harry’s slender shape and small stature when they had four tall, muscled Fathers? He’d have to keep an eye on that and nip it in the bud before it even started, if indeed it did ever happen and become an issue, but he hoped that it never did.

Harry sat down carefully on the settee as he had both of his girls in his arms as his other children ran riot around his feet, just happy and excited to see him there and know that he was in the room with them. He smiled at them as they babbled and talked to him, showing him things and handing him toys before rushing away to get something else to hand to him. He had a seat full of toys and teddies next to him. It was adorable.

Harry had told Blaise and Draco that the girls were Max’s, but it was just bad luck that the one who had Fathered them was the last to know as he was still in work, it seemed his quality checks were taking longer than he’d estimated they would.

Harry was settling into home life again happily after almost three weeks away as he checked everything over with his children, checking their little teeth, of which there were many now, Braiden had fifteen teeth, Farren had ten, Tegan had eight, Regan had five and Calix had ten. Leolin of course still didn’t have any, but Harry was very happy to see him reaching up and stretching to try and grip at the shiny mirror floating just out of his reach on the baby gym. He was getting stronger and more active and after his recent set back with his hospitalisation, it was amazing to see him doing something other than eating, sleeping or just lying awake and not moving.

Though of course he’d only been awake for a mere few hours before Draco brought up the inevitable Dragon Pox vaccinations that the four older quintuplets needed this month, he’d actually booked them while he had been in his nest for the following week.

“They need those vaccinations.” Draco said stubbornly.

“You know they always cry for me afterwards.” Harry said in exasperation. “I’m glad that you want them vaccinated, but at least try to make it a bit more comfortable for them, Draco. They like me being there with them and holding the vaccinations back by a couple of weeks is not going to ruin the other vaccines they’ve already had or endanger them in any way.”

“I just don’t want them to…”

“I know and after the scare with Leolin and hearing about what happened to those poor children at the Faerie City…it has terrified me too, but it still could have waited a few weeks until after I’d given birth and come out of my nest to go with them.”

“You’re out of your nest now.” Draco pointed out.

“I am, which has saved you from four tantrums and possibly from being thrown up on too.” Harry deadpanned.

Draco kissed him and tried to take one of the baby girls, but Harry lifted the corner of his upper lip back and growled, holding the baby tighter.

“Just five minutes, please.” He begged.

Harry frowned consideringly. “I’m trying to fit names to them, so you had better make it just five minutes.”

“Anything you can give us a hint on?” Blaise asked from where he was lying on the floor, Calix crawling all over his back and Regan building a tower with Blaise’s help in front of him.

Harry grinned and shook his head. “Not yet, but I have some good ideas, none that I want to share yet though.”

Harry looked at the baby in his arms, the smallest baby, or rather the lightest baby as both girls had been sixteen inches long, his oldest girl, who was already named for Max’s great-grandmother, the great-great grandmother that this little girl was now never going to meet, was lighter than her sister by a mere two ounces.

He sighed and wondered if he could get away with naming the baby with the letter E to match her middle name of Evelyn, but he wasn’t sure naming the baby something like Emily Evelyn was going to do his daughter any good when she was in school.

He huffed out a sigh again and it was only ten minutes later that he snapped at Nasta to go and get him his baby name book. All credit to Nasta he just lifted one black eyebrow and put aside his paperwork and did as Harry had asked. He’d only been up for less than half an hour too, he’d gone for his nap after sorting out Harry’s scar and the new plasters after his bath and he’d grabbed a refreshing and rejuvenating two hour nap. He looked less like he would drop down unconscious at any moment and more like the alert, watchful gorgeous man that they knew and loved so very much.

Harry grabbed his arm and pulled him into a kiss when he came back with the huge book that looked more like an encyclopaedia.
“I’m sorry, I just don’t want to name them something stupid and have them stuck with it for life, or at least until they’re seventeen and can legally change it, I want their names to be perfect and it’s doing my head in. I didn’t mean to snap at you.”

Nasta cupped his chin and kissed him back, pecking at his lips until Harry couldn’t help but smile into the kisses.

“It took you days to name all of the quintuplets, don’t push yourself so hard so soon, after all they’ve only just been born, the perfect name will come to you, it always does.”

“It helps me to stay still and sitting down.” Harry pointed out with a cheeky grin.

“Then by all means sit right here and pore over this book until you’ve found a name, just be careful, I don’t want you upset either.”

“I know what sort of name I want, at least I have an idea, a tentative idea, but it’s just not coming to me! I need some inspiration.”

“You need the patience of a saint.” Blaise laughed from the floor.

“Especially with those two, they cry like a bloody siren.” Max said as he came into the living room.

“Where the hell did you come from?” Draco demanded.

“The front door.” Max said with an eyebrow up near his hairline. “I went shopping remember, I Apparated home.”

“Hi, Max.” Harry greeted softly.

Max came and kissed him hard and deep and when they broke apart Harry was panting and laughing.
“I missed you too, how was work?”

“Boring stuff today, just quality controlling, it didn’t take me more than an hour and a half.”

“You’ve been gone for nearly five hours!” Blaise said incredulously.

“I had to make sure that what I was getting for my girls’ was perfect!”

“Looks like you bought out half the baby shops in London.” Harry laughed with a nod to the several bags wrapped around Max’s left wrist.

“Nothing’s too much for those little girls.” Max grinned as he dropped the bags to the floor.

“Let’s see what you bought then.” Draco said as he stood up and went to go digging through the bags. Max stole the baby girl from Draco’s arms and gave her a big kiss as he sat down next to Harry and cradled her, ignoring the evil glare that Draco was giving him for taking the baby from him.

“They are your girls too, you know.” Harry said softly, watching Max closely.

“Of course they are, I love them so much.” Max replied with a sappy, lovey-dovey look at the baby in his arms, not really listening to what Harry was saying.

Harry laughed. “No, they are yours, as in biologically.”

Max blinked at him. “They are?” He questioned as he looked from the baby in his arms to the baby in Harry’s.

“Yes.” Harry nodded happily. “Really, who else’s could they be with all this blondish-brown, curly hair.”

“Their hair isn’t curly!” Max denied, even as he pulled the hat gently from the head of the girl in his arms to spy, just as Harry had said, blondish-brown curly locks. “They…they really are mine.”
“Like I told you, they’re yours, two more little Maxie Maddisons running around. Just what we, and the world, need.”

“I can’t believe they have curly hair! Of all the traits my grandmother passed on into the genes it had to be curly hair!”

“I think they look sweet.” Harry said with a smitten smile at his newborn babies.

“Can I tell the family the good news? Do we have names yet?”

“You can tell them, but no visitors until tomorrow. Harry needs his rest and he doesn’t need the fuss.” Nasta said firmly.

“And no names just yet, I’m working on it.” Harry said as he patted the huge, thick book which was opened on the letter E’s.

Max grinned. “I’ll be back when my Dads stop trying to strangle me and let my head go!” He said excitedly as he handed Nasta the little girl that he was holding and flooed to his family home.

Harry shook his head. “He needs something to calm him down.”

“He’s got a good eye for fashion though.” Draco said happily as he pulled out the mountain of clothes that Max had bought from their respective shopping bags.

Harry looked at the tiny dresses, the little skirts and tops complete with miniature tights and leggings and the more practical bodysuits and sleepsuits in pale pink, white and a soft pastel purple that Harry really, really loved.

“That colour, what is it?” He asked Draco curiously; who as their most fashion orientated lover was more likely to know the answer.

Draco looked at it. “Purple.” He said as if Harry was being ridiculous.
Harry gave him back an unimpressed glower. “What kind of purple, I can already see that it’s purple, what shade is it?!”

Draco pulled a face as if he couldn’t believe that he hadn’t understood what Harry had meant with his question. “It’s one of the pastel purples; I think it might be pastel violet.”

“I really, really like it. I think I want their bedroom in that colour, at least until they’re old enough to decide for themselves.”

“Is this another hint for us to get a new house?” Nasta asked him from over his paperwork.

Harry sniffed. “I’m not hinting any more, I’m telling you that we need a bigger house. Braiden will need his own room soon, the twins will need their own room and the quintuplets might need two or even three rooms, that’s five extra bedrooms, Nasta. We only have two spare, though we could always shove the quintuplets in a room together or make them share with Braiden and demolish the upstairs bathroom and convert that into a bedroom, we’ll still have our en suite and the downstairs bathroom, but by the time that’s finished I could have had even more babies and then we’ll be back to square one, we need a bigger house!”

Harry stubbornly refused to hear anything else about it, he didn’t particularly want to move, he loved this house and it held some amazing memories for him, but it was becoming a necessity. They needed more space and more bedrooms.

“At least settle with those two first.” Blaise encouraged. “We can start looking at houses in the spring.”

“I agree with Blaise.” Nasta said and Harry gave him a look.

“Fine, but we will find a new house as soon as possible, Braiden’s getting older and with the twins now we’re lacking space.”

Harry indicated how cramped it looked in their living room with the four of them sitting in it with five children roving the floor, one lying in the baby gym on the floor and the two newborns and that was without Max there, Max who was huge, broad and dominated any room that he was in by his sheer size alone without factoring in his larger than life personality.
“This is no way to live! We can’t even have guests around anymore, the quintuplets birthday was a squashed up hell with everyone in this house, a tin of sardines doesn’t even cover how cramped it was in this house. I had enough of being crammed into small spaces when I was forced to sleep in a cupboard as a chi…!” Harry cut himself off and he shut his mouth, looking at his lap. “Sorry.” He said softly.

The settee dipped after a moment and Nasta threw his arm around him, a soft, but scratchy kiss was pressed to the side of his head.

“I’m sorry this room reminds you of your childhood, Harry.” Nasta said softly.

“It’s not…it’s not the same as the cupboard.” Harry said. “I’m not lonely for a start, but the lack of space, it is getting to me a bit. I don’t want it to and I do try not to think about it and not to let it get to me, but sometimes it still does.”

“We’ll sort it, I promise, just a little longer.” Nasta swore.

Harry nodded and looked at the girls, both sleeping, both silent and still.

“Eva.” He said softly.

“Sorry?” Blaise asked as he perked his head up.

Harry showed Nasta the page that he was looking at and pointing out the little tidbit underneath.

“That should appease Max’s family tradition and I like the name.” Harry said with a smile.

“Welcome to the family, Eva.” Nasta said, kissing the baby in his arms.
Harry laughed. “This one is Eva, not that one.” He said, indicating the baby in his own arms.

“I thought this one was the older twin.” Nasta said with a frown.

Harry checked them over critically. “Nope, this one is the older twin, that one’s the younger.”

“I’m going to buy them bracelets or necklaces or something to tell them apart.” Draco complained.

“And then when they get older and start swapping them over just to confuse us because we’ve become reliant on looking at the bracelets to tell them apart, what then?” Harry asked. “No, you learn to tell them apart from the subtle differences in their appearance and their personalities.”

“They’re two days old! They haven’t got any personalities.” Draco grumbled.

“I just realised, Max isn’t here again, he was the last to know they were actually his biologically and now he’s the last to know the first born girl’s name.” Blaise pointed out.

Harry’s eyes went wide. “Oh, I didn’t realise! I just…it just came to me and it fit and it was perfect so I said it out loud, I didn’t mean…”

“We know.” Nasta said soothingly. “He’ll just be excited to welcome Eva into the family. He won’t care, just like he never when he found out they were his.”

“Now our youngest needs a name.” Harry said as he placed his hand over the head of the baby in Nasta’s arms.

“Don’t push yourself; do you want to break for a snack?”

“I could use some tea to help me think.” Harry said with a grin.

Nasta laughed as he stood up, placing the baby in his arms into the bassinet beside Harry, he went into the kitchen, taking orders from Blaise and Draco on the way past.
Max came home exuberant and joyful as he pulled the baby immediately from the bassinet and into his arms. Harry shook his head as his biggest mate kissed the baby wetly and loudly and sat down to cradle her. These two were never going to get a moment of peace and the bassinets were a waste of space as it seemed that they were never going to get to use them.

“Do you like the clothes?” Max asked.

“They’ll suffice.” Draco said haughtily.

“I love them.” Harry said with a smile. “We need to swap babies too.”

“Why, has your twin wet a nappy?” Max asked, even as he moved to do as he was asked.

“No, at least I don’t think so. Oh I hope they don’t turn out to be two more Calix’s.” Harry fretted.

Max checked the baby in his arms. “No, she’s fine. Why did we have to swap?”

“Because I wanted you to meet your oldest daughter, Eva after the saint of Liege. Eva Evelyn Potter-Maddison.”

“You named her? We were just talking baby names and what you might call them, none of us guessed Eva though.”

“Do you like it?” Harry asked a bit quietly.

“I love it. What’s the other one’s name?”

“I haven’t decided yet.

“So we have Eva and unnamed.”
“Unnamed for now.” Harry grinned.

Nasta came in and he handed everyone a cup of tea, he’d obviously heard Max come home as there was a cup for him too.

“Did he tell you the news?”

“He did, I love it!” Max declared happily. “Little baby Eva.” He all but whispered as he cradled her gently.

“Dada Ma? Baba ba.”

“This is your new baby sister Braiden, this is Eva.”

“Baba Va!” Braiden said with a grin, his mouth of teeth on show.

“You’re so clever and you’re the very bestest little boy in the world.” Max declared to him softly, which made him shriek in laughter and clap his hands…right next to Eva’s head.

The loud crying of the baby made all of his children stop and look over at the noise as Max shushed her and tried to comfort her after she’d been startled.

Harry’s attention was taken from a crying Eva and was instead grabbed by Regan, who stood up against the table and toddled from the table to the settee that Max was sat on without help and unaided.

“Please tell me that I wasn’t the only one to see that!” He burst out as he quickly got up, put the unnamed baby girl into her bassinet and rushed as fast as his sore, aching muscles allowed him, to Regan to praise him.

“What did he do?” Max asked.

“He just took his first steps!” Harry said excitedly before he rained kisses all over a giggling Regan.
“What, unaided?” Max asked.

Harry nodded. “He pulled himself up with the table and then toddled from the table to here on his own!”

“Well done, Regan.” Blaise said happily as Nasta came and picked him up, kissing his little mouth.

“You’re getting to be a big boy now, Regan; you’ll be running around before we can catch up soon.” He told his son with a proud grin.

“Put him down and see if he’ll walk for the camera.” Draco insisted as he set the Muggle contraption up how Harry and Nasta had shown him.

Nasta did as he asked, putting Regan down next to the table as he hunched down a little way away and held his arms out to encourage him.

“Come on, Regan, come to me.”

Regan giggled at him like it was a game and Calix crawled right over to Nasta and demanded his attention, which made Max laugh.

“Mama?” Regan called out softly, looking around the room for Harry.

“I’m by here, love.” Harry said from behind him and Regan turned around and gurgled at Harry, clapping his hands happily.

He once again used the table to pull himself to his feet and he rushed to Harry as fast as his unsteady, toddling steps could manage and he all but fell into Harry’s arms.

“You’re going to be a little terror on your feet, I can tell.” Harry said as he cuddled Regan close and bent him over his knee to tickle him, which resulted in baby giggles.

“Mama, usk.”
Harry looked at him consideringly.

“Usk is a river in Wales isn’t it?” Max asked Nasta.

“It is, but I don’t think that’s what he’s saying.”

“He wants a Rusk.” Harry said simply and Regan clapped his hands together happily once again.

“Usk!” He cried with a grin.

Blaise went out into the kitchen and came back in with the box of Rusks. He threw one at Harry, who caught it and handed it to Regan as Blaise gave Farren one, which was grabbed off of him immediately by Tegan.

Blaise took it back from her and handed it back to Farren before he could start crying and handed Tegan her own biscuit before handing one to Calix who was continuously crawling around his feet, babbling non-stop, waiting for his turn to be handed a biscuit.

It was silent when all the babies had a biscuit and Harry took a moment to just breathe, cuddling Regan on his lap still. He loved moments like this, where his growing babies had done something new and accomplished and he happily looked around at them all as they nibbled and licked on their Rusks while they all just took a moment to absorb the short lived silence.

----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

The next morning, the twenty-first of January, Harry slept late yet again and when he came down the stairs in a clean pair of pyjamas, because his muscles still ached too much to even contemplate stuffing himself into a pair of jeans, Max was in the fire, talking heatedly to someone.

“What’s going on?” He asked softly.

“He’s arguing with his family, we agreed that they could come over today, but Max refused while you were still in bed.” Nasta explained.
“I’m not in bed now.” Harry said.

“They can come over in an hour.” Nasta said firmly and Max relayed the messaged. “After you’ve woken up a little and had something to eat and had a chance to hold the girls before they’re passed around from pillar to post.”

Harry nodded and he went into the kitchen to get some cereal and a cup of tea. Blaise came with him, Farren cocked out on his hip.

“Muma, wusk.” Farren said as he looked around for the familiar red and orange box.

Harry shook his head. “Do you want a mid-morning snack?”

He found the Rusks in the cupboard and pulled one out for Farren and handed it to him, smiling happily as he watched Farren wiggle and squirm in utter enjoyment as he gnawed and sucked on the hard biscuit.

“If he gets any heavier I’ll need back support to carry him.” Blaise laughed.

“You leave him alone.” Harry said without bite. “It’s wonderful that he has an appetite and with genes like Max’s then he was always going to be big.”

“Calix isn’t.”

“Calix takes more after me, or did you forget that my genes made him too?”

“Sorry.” Blaise said softly, but his tone alone told Harry that he didn’t really know what he was apologising for and was doing so just to appease him and keep him happy. It made him huffy instead.

Harry ate his cereal and drank his tea before he made another cup to take with him into the living room. He carried it carefully, but when he ran into Calix in the hallway, obviously on his way to the kitchen to see him, he couldn’t help but grin.
He bent down and picked Calix up, but the resulting pain in his stomach made him drop his cup of tea to use that arm to support Calix before he dropped him instead. The cup shattered on the floor and had Nasta there in three seconds flat, if that, to sweep him off his feet and up into his arms, taking Calix with them.

“Are you alright? What happened?” He asked as he stepped carefully over the broken china and carried him into the living room.

“I dropped a cup.” Harry told him. “I picked Calix up and I guess my stomach wasn’t ready for the bend and lift and I thought it better to drop the cup than to drop Calix.”

“I’ll clean it up now, just be careful, Harry, don’t push yourself, you’re still recovering.”

Harry nodded as he was placed onto the settee, lying down on his back and he sat Calix up on his chest, away from his empty bump and the sore caesarean scar.

Max came over and took Calix from him and bent to put him on the floor and Harry was about to get angry and demand his son be given back when Max sat down on the few inches of settee that wasn’t taken up by Harry’s body, facing away from him and he lifted his shirt to reveal the plaster covered gauze.

Max was checking on his scar and was likely going to change the salve and coverings. Harry huffed almost silently. It would have been nice if his biggest mate had told him so beforehand instead of just taking his son from him without any sort of explanation, he wasn’t a mind reader and he never would be if how poorly he grasped at the mind arts was any indication.

He lay back and let Max do what he wished as he watched his babies at play, of course Calix hadn’t been happy to be moved from Harry to the floor, so he hadn’t gone far. He was kneeling up against the settee by Harry’s head and he was babbling to him furiously as Harry groomed his hair with his fingers.

“I know sweetheart, Daddy Max moved you didn’t he?” Harry cooed as Calix paused. “I can’t decide if you’re acting like a furious cat or an angry bee.”

“Angry bee, definitely.” Max said as he threw a huge grin over his shoulder. “With all that angry buzzing going on behind me I thought I’d have to bring out the fly swatter.”

Harry laughed. “Oh, ow! Stop making me laugh!” He demanded. “You know I can’t laugh just after birth, the pain is almost as bad as being punctured by a Basilisk fang!”
“That’s the second time that you’ve alluded to that incident. What happened?” Nasta demanded as he came back into the living room with a fresh cup of tea for him.

“The Basilisk, you mentioned it when Leolin was in the hospital that you’d gone up against a sixty foot Basilisk when you were twelve, you’ve just said that you were punctured by a Basilisk fang, what happened?”

“Nothing really.” Harry shrugged uncomfortably.

Nasta gave him an unimpressed scowl. Harry groaned. “Why do you have to make such a huge deal out of it? It happened six years ago!”

“If it’s not a big deal then tell us about it.” Nasta challenged with a smirk that Harry refused to admit made his belly tighten painfully in lusty desire.

He groaned theatrically which made his babies laugh at him.

“It was second year, something about the Chamber of Secrets being opened, Heir of Slytherin, students being petrified, follow the spiders, blah, blah, blah, almost got eaten by a nest of Acromantula, Hermione figured out about the pipes, something about a diary. Ginny got taken down into the Chamber so naturally I went to rescue her because I figured out that the entrance to the Chamber must have been in a bathroom because of Moaning Myrtle, went down, killed the Basilisk and rescued Ginny and got a special award for services to the school for it.” Harry rattled off quickly before sitting up and drinking his tea.

“Would you like to tell us the full version now?” Nasta asked with the bite of a growl in his voice.

“That is the full version.” Harry said.

“I think Nasta means for you to fill in the blanks and tell us what happened, when and how in detail.” Max explained as Nasta flushed a horrible red. “We take your safety seriously and Nasta’s top dominant instincts are likely ripping his brain to pieces at the moment over this.”
“It happened six years ago!” He said firmly. “How can you keep me safe from mere memories?”

“Harry, we love you and we want to know everything about you, the good and the bad.” Blaise put in. “Nasta could just order you to tell us and you’d have to, but he’s trying to hold back to give you a choice, do you understand how painful that is for him? How difficult it is for him to hold back the instinct to order you to just do as he says? We love you so much; please just tell us what happened?”

“I don’t want you to be angry with me.” Harry tried to explain.

“We will be angry if you try to keep secrets from us, love, especially secrets to do with your safety, even past safety.” Max explained. “As you said, it happened six years ago, so it’s not like we can punish you for it, we just want to know what happened to you.”

Harry sighed and made himself comfortable. “Wait until the kids have gone down for their nap at least, I don’t want them overhearing this; they’re at an age where they absorb everything.”

“My family will be here then; do you want me to get rid of them at lunch?” Max asked, looking at the clock, it was only half ten in the morning, but his family would be here at eleven, that left just an hour for them to meet and greet the newborn girls.

“As long as Myron promises not to spank me, they can stay. They heard about my first year, why not the second too? Besides I’ve already told Richard.”

“Wait, wait, wait. You told my Dad? When?! Why does he know before me?” Max asked, pouting at him.

Harry sighed. “The fang that went through my arm left a scar; I had to tell him about it to rule it out of the Muggle evidence for the court case.”

“I can’t believe he never told Dad about it!” Max grinned. “My Dad Richard has never kept anything from my Dad Myron. He’s going to freak and go ballistic on his arse, not yours.”

“Good.” Harry grinned back. “Now hand me my girls, I want a cuddle before I have them stolen from me later.”
Nasta handed first one girl to him and then the other. They were wearing their new, perfectly fitting, sleepsuits, one in powder blue and the other in the pastel violet that Harry had loved.

He stared at them hard and then one baby moved a hand to rub over her own ear and he knew immediately that she was the unnamed baby, so that meant that the baby in the powder blue sleepsuit was Eva.

“Good morning, Eva.” He greeted her softly and pressing a kiss to her head, inhaling the soft, clean scent of newborn baby from her skin and hair. “Good morning, sweet girl, I know you don’t have a name yet, but you will soon. I promise.” He said to the other as he kissed her too.

“How in the name of Merlin did you tell them apart just by looking at them? We had to wait for their feed to put them in different colours to tell them apart.” Draco said incredulously.

“The younger baby plays with her right ear to soothe herself, she first did it just a few hours after birth. Every forty minutes or so she’ll lift a hand and play with her ear.”

“And Eva doesn’t do that?” Nasta asked, looking at the baby in the powder blue.

Harry shook his head. “She plays with the hair behind her ears. She’ll tug on it lightly and carefully, more like running her hair over her fingertips. I’m not sure if she likes the feeling of her hair sliding over the tips of her fingers or if she likes the feeling of her actual hair.”

“I’m going to be on the lookout for that now.” Blaise said with a grin.

“How do you tell them apart when they’re not awake and not self-soothing?”

“I just can.” Harry shrugged. “They smell different to me, they act differently, they look exactly alike for now, but they’re not the same. Does that make sense?”

“I understand it.” Nasta nodded. “They have subtle differences in smell, but it changes depending on everything around them, so I can’t tell them apart from it. Currently they smell like Draco to me because he refused to put them down all morning.”

Harry laughed at that. “Just don’t forget our older babies.” He said seriously.
Draco snorted and indicated Tegan, who was perched in his lap with one of her favoured cardboard books, babbling under her breath as she flipped the pages over and then back again.

Harry grinned at the sight of it. Regan was sat close to them both too, but he had a crude knitted ballerina doll that Hermione had made for Tegan for Christmas, Regan didn’t care as he bashed it about happily in play with a doll house.

“You need to tell Granger to stop with the knitting projects, it’s not working.” Draco said with a sniff, following where Harry was looking.

“She’s getting better.” Harry smiled. “She started making hats for the house-elves when she first started knitting and Ron came out with that they looked more like woolly bladders so they didn’t count as clothes. I miss those days.” He said sadly.

Max slipped an arm around him and cuddled him in close, pressing a kiss to the side of his head.

“He didn’t deserve to know you and what he did to you was wrong and unforgivable.” Max said.

“I’m glad that you made up and that you agreed to be civil, but I would have been too angry, too upset if you had become friends again. I wouldn’t have been able to get over what I’d seen him do to you, how upset he’d made you, nor the damage that he’d done.” Nasta added.

“We would never have been friends again. He almost killed Braiden, every time I’d see him he would have reminded me of that almost miscarriage and that foul concoction that I had to drink to save Braiden’s life before it had even really begun. Civility I can stretch to, but friendship…no, never again. Too much happened between us, too many things were said that can never be unheard; there’s simply too much water under the bridge to ignore it. No amount of time will ever fix the damage done.”

Their distraction came with the floo warning sounding a minute before Richard flooed into their living room with a grin. He stepped over the low fire gate and came straight to him to peer at the two girls.

“I’ve heard so much about them, but this is the first time that I’m getting to actually see them.” He said pulling Harry’s head to his lips for a kiss. “They’re gorgeous, I’m so proud of you!”
Myron came in just behind Richard and he too stood over the gate and he forcibly moved Richard out of the way so that he could greet Harry and get his first look at the newborn girls.

“Ah da!” Braiden exclaimed as he pulled himself up with the table and toddled on unsteady feet to Myron’s leg, clutching it tightly, bouncing on his feet still gripping Myron’s leg. “Ah da, ah da!” He repeated holding his arms up to Myron, who stooped all the way down, having to go to one knee to get low enough, and picked him up, holding him up on his shoulder so that they could have eye contact, cocked on the side of his ribcage where most would have sat Braiden on their hips, but Myron was not most men and he was not the size of most men either.

“Is he saying…?”

“Granddad, we’ve been working with him to get him to recognise his granddads’ through pictures, it seems that you stuck in his mind.” Draco said with a smirk.

“I can’t believe he’s walking! He’s getting much better at it too.” Richard said as he patted Braiden’s back gently.

“Regan took his first steps yesterday afternoon too.” Harry said proudly.

“Really?” Richard looked around and then he swooped down and pulled Regan up into his arms, the boy laughing happily as he was hefted up high quickly, dropping his knitted ballerina in favour of clutching at Richard.

“I hear that our new granddaughters are Max’s or is he just pulling our legs again? He’s been insufferable with his boasts about how virile he is.” Myron said as Max refused to be embarrassed and grinned proudly, his chest puffed up and out.

“They’re Max’s; they have his curly hair to prove it.” Harry said with a grin of his own as he pulled Eva’s little hat off to show the brownish-blonde curls that she was sporting.

“I do not have curly hair!” Max denied with a pout.

“Only because you keep sheering it off so that it’s too short to get curls in it.” Harry said flippantly.
That’s adorable; Max had the most cherubic little curls as a child.” Richard said teasingly, looking at Max while making it look like he was looking at the baby. “He got them from Ashleigh’s Mother’s genes. I was displeased when he got older and started cutting his curls off himself and so short too! Not a single wave was left to show that he’d ever had curly hair and he’s still the same now.”

Marianna came over next and she immediately took one little girl from him.

“Oh, sweetheart, she’s lovely!” Marianna exclaimed as she held the tiny baby up and she kissed the baby softly.

“If I’d known that we could take the babies I would have done it sooner.” Myron said, right before he took the other baby from Harry, Braiden still in his other arm.

Harry shook his head with a laugh just as Aneirin flooed into their living room, he was happy to pick up Tegan and stand beside Marianna and Myron to look at the new arrivals.

“You did an amazing job; I hope there were no problems or complications?” He asked with a soft, proud smile at Harry which automatically made him puff up with pride.

“No, nothing. It all went really smooth and quickly. The only trouble I had was getting around the umbilical cords, I got my wrist caught between them, but that’s all, nothing serious.”

“Do they have names yet?” Richard asked.

Harry smiled at the floor before shooting a look to Max, who was all but bouncing in excitement.

“One has so far.” Harry strung out, teasing a little.

“Which one?” Myron asked.

“The baby in powder blue is the one who has a name.” Harry said happily, looking at them as they looked at him, obviously waiting for him to continue.
“Don’t tease them, Harry.” Nasta’s hand landed in his hair and stroked it lightly through strong fingers.

Harry laughed. “Her name is Eva. Eva Evelyn Potter-Maddison. Named of course after Saint Eva of Liege and after a wonderful woman who these two will now never meet.”

“That’s a lovely name.” Marianna praised.

“Oh, did I miss the name?” Narcissa asked as she stepped gracefully and elegantly out of the fireplace, brushing the soot off of her cloak, just catching the end of the conversation.

“Eva.” Harry said softly as Lucius flooed in behind her.

“Ga ma.” Braiden called out and reached for her over Myron’s shoulder.

“Did he just…?”

“He called you grandma. We’ve been teaching him with photos. So far he recognised Myron as his grandfather and you as his grandmother.”

Harry blinked as he realised what he’d said and he looked at Marianna to see how she’d taken the news that her biological grandson was calling another woman grandma, but she was smiling still and she was rocking Eva gently. Dracken families truly were as fluid as water, it seemed.

Narcissa was beside herself in happiness as she plucked Braiden from Myron and kissed all over his face, leaving small smears of her pale lipstick on his cheeks and chin as she praised him and told him how smart he was.

“I better get their lunches on or they’ll be eating late and then they definitely won’t be happy, Farren especially.” Max said with a grin.

“I’ll come with you, goldilocks.” Richard teased as he moved into the kitchen with Max to their shouting argument about Max’s curly hair and all the names that Richard could think of to call him to tease him about it.
Harry shook his head. “I think they look sweet.”

“They do.” Narcissa assured him. “They look adorable, sweetheart. Now does this other little darling have a name?”

Harry shook his head again. “No, I haven’t found any suitable names yet, I did think of Ava, but… well Eva, Ava, a bit too similar for my liking. There is the possibility of getting tongue tied when calling them and I never want to call one of my children by the name of a sibling, especially not an identical twin.”

“Understandable.” Aneirin nodded as he bounced Tegan on his forearm as she giggled and babbled happily. “Why not try a similar name but one that doesn’t have a single letter difference and is pronounced differently?”

Harry cocked his head, thinking hard and deeply. Of course he was disturbed by the twin girls waking for their feed and he sighed. He didn’t want his one girl to go so long without a name, but he just couldn’t think of anything and he didn’t know how to do everything he needed to and keep the Maddison tradition.

He blew out a deep breath and pulled Calix up onto his lap when his son hit at his knee. Calix laughed and bounced on him, Harry could only keep that up for a minute or so before his stomach muscles started searing in agonising pain.

“I can’t bounce you anymore, Calix, sorry.” He explained. “My muscles hurt too much, sweetheart.”

Calix bounced on him some more, but when Harry didn’t join in and stopped making him bounce harder and higher, he started crying and kicking out his feet in the beginnings of a tantrum.

“Pass him here.” Nasta insisted as he hefted Calix up from Harry’s lap, which stopped the temper tantrum in its tracks as Calix giggled happily at the fast, sudden movement and clapped his tiny hands together in joy.

They all moved to the kitchen for a little more space and better access to the kettle for tea and baby bottles and when Mrs Weasley flooed over, he called out to her and her husband to draw them to the kitchen from the empty living room, he was unsurprised to see Ginny with them, a little surprised to see the twins had come to visit, but downright shocked to see Charlie and Bill, who had a stunning blonde on his arm who Harry hadn’t seen in years, it really had been too long since he’d taken the time to go and see and talk to Bill’s Fiancée.
“I wasn’t sure if you’d like this, but I wanted to introduce you…not that you don’t know who she is, of course.” Bill said a little nervously.

Harry looked closely at the woman, noting the changes from her eighteen year old self to her twenty-two years before he laughed happily and went to embrace her.

“Of course it’s fine. Fleur, it’s been far too long, how have you been?” Harry asked. “Why are you still with Bill?”

“Hey!” Bill exclaimed as he cuddled the woman close with a mock glare to Harry.

“Are you two still engaged? When’s the wedding, can I come to this one? Do you have any babies on the way yet?”

“We were going to marry last year and the year before that, but we thought it would be best if we had a long engagement. The date has been set for this coming August though, but not near Braiden’s second birthday, of course.”

“I’m very happy for you both.”

“You were always so sweet, ‘Arry.” Fleur said throatily as she hugged him and gave him a kiss to each cheek. “Pregnancy suits you well, you are glowing!”

Harry laughed. “I can’t seem to stop having babies.”

“Maybe you should try contraceptives?” Charlie said with a wink.

Harry huffed. “I don’t want those drugs and potions, I want more babies. I’ll be very happy if I have a hundred babies.”

“Don’t you think that’s a little extreme?” Ginny said curiously with a wink. She knew that he was a Dracken and couldn’t control it. Bill and Fleur, however, didn’t know yet.
“No.” Harry answered shaking his head. “I’ve been…I’ve been denied a family for so long. I just want to make my own now that I can. I want to make fifteen Quidditch teams out of my children and I want to do that with these four, amazing men of mine.”

“Aww, we love you too.” Max said as he pulled Harry into a deep, scorching kiss that made his toes curl in his socks. “As long as you give us about twenty-six babies each, you will have your wish, but if Nasta gives you fifty, I’m suggesting that we chain him up and make the numbers more even.”

“You’re the one with the most babies so far!” Harry pointed out laughingly.

“If I get those fifty babies then I retain the right to gloat and try to get you with more.” Max said seriously.

Harry laughed and swatted at Max. “Get these babies their lunches before Farren eats through his highchair tray.”

“The little girls are Max’s?” Mrs Weasley asked, even as she cradled the unnamed baby close to her chest.

Harry nodded his head with a smile. “They are, which brings his total up to four babies.”

“I’m going to have to start pulling away now.” Max smiled. “I’m going to have to get in there quick next time again or my Grandfather will have at me.”

Harry shook his head. “Where is Alexander?”

“He didn’t want to overwhelm you or fill the house around the newborns. He’ll leave you be for a few days, maybe a week before he comes to clamour you and meet the girls. His hand was mostly forced anyway, Ellien has gone onto her heat, he’s babysitting her five children.”

“Aunt Ellien has gone onto a heat period?” Max asked in surprise.
“Yes, her first for eleven years.” Myron said for Harry’s benefit when he blinked in confusion. “Her youngest, Shane, is now twelve.”

“Shouldn’t they be in school?” Draco asked.

“Aunt Ellien is a bit of a snob.” Max said with a face. “Only the best tutors will do for her little darlings. She won’t let them out of her sight either despite Granddad’s attempts. I think that’s why it’s so rare that she goes onto heats, she’s fifty-six and we already have more children than her.”

“How did that happen?” Blaise asked. “Her being a snob that is, hardly any of the Maddisons are like the typical submissives clogging up the meetings.”

“She’s the one that slipped through the net; she was always jealous and possessive, even as a child.” Myron said as Max served the babies their lunches of teeny tiny cubes of chicken, creamed potatoes and peas. It was going to be a messy lunch and those peas were going to be everywhere by the end of the meal.

“She’s a bitch.” Richard said flatly. “If you don’t think her babies are geniuses then she tries to curse you. The real kicker is that her babies aren’t geniuses, they’re smart, don’t get me wrong, but they’re not geniuses, Braiden is definitely more advanced than any of Ellien’s babies were at his age.”

Harry puffed up uncontrollably. He couldn’t help it and he grinned right along with everyone else for his behaviour.

“You have a lot to be proud of.” Aneirin told him, nudging his shoulder. “But bringing down the mood a little, Dain and Kailen want to come and see Leolin now that he’s out of the hospital and the contagion in the Faerie City has been contained and has now run its course. They swear they won’t bring any diseases or illnesses into the house or they wouldn’t dare ask to come and visit.”

“We’ve got to have time to settle in to a routine with the twins, Harry needs his rest to recover and the quintuplets have their third Dragon Pox vaccine next week.” Nasta said stiffly.

Aneirin sighed exasperatedly. “I’m very sure that you could make a million excuses to hold it off for the next year and a half, Nasta, but they’re cooperating with us, they’re accommodating us and now they’re even worse because of the tragedy that’s hit them. We need to keep them sweet, Nasta and Leolin is the way to do it.”
“Aneirin’s right, we can’t afford to make enemies of the Faeries.” Harry said softly, touching Nasta and resting against him. “Think of Leolin, love. He might choose to live with them when he’s older and we’ve all gone, we can’t make that any more difficult for him than it is already going to be because he’s not a full blooded Faerie.”

Nasta gritted his teeth and ground them together. He nodded sharply. “In three and a half weeks then, after those injections, after my birthday and after Valentine’s Day and not a day sooner.”

Harry hugged him and grabbed him by the collar of his shirt and pulled him down and into a kiss.

“I love you.” Harry declared with a grin.

“You’re insufferable.” Nasta said, smirking to take the bite from his words and to show that he didn’t really mean what he’d said.

“You love me and everyone knows it.” Harry said airily, turning to go back to his babies, but two strong, solid arms wrapped around his waist tight and pulled him back against a matching solid chest. Plush lips mouthed around his neck, sucking gently and teeth lightly nipping. Harry’s head automatically fell to the side to give Nasta more room to move and better access to his vulnerable neck.

“Alright, alright, break it up.” Mrs Weasley clapped her hands. “Parental adults and young babies are present, gentlemen.”

“Mum!” Ginny whined sadly as Nasta stood up and just held Harry to him and Harry groaned.

“I was enjoying that.” He said with an exaggerated pout.

“Behave yourselves.” Narcissa said with a smile before she sighed wistfully. “Oh to be young and in love.” She rested against Lucius, who wrapped an arm around her back and held one of her hands in his own.

Harry was almost shocked. It was the most loving and intimate that he’d ever seen the Malfoys, Draco looked unsurprised and barely took notice of his parents’ actions and behaviour, perhaps Lucius and Narcissa acted like this all the time out of the public eye. He pondered on that and he smiled as he realised that it likely meant that they were getting more comfortable with him and the others in order for them to show this side of their relationship, of themselves, in public and that made him insanely happy.

“So does my other little granddaughter not have a name?” Richard all but begged.

Harry smiled and shook his head. “I can’t think of one, give me some time.”

“Don’t you push him.” Max mock glared at his Dad. “He’s doing amazingly well so far.”

“It did take him a few days to name the quintuplets.” Ginny pointed out, happily getting a cuddle from Eva. “She’s gorgeous, Harry.”

“That’s Eva.” He said with a nod.

“I love the name choice too.” Ginny winked at him.

“They are just beautiful.” Fleur said happily as she cuddled with the unnamed twin.

“Thanks, Fleur, when are you and Bill going to have some beautiful babies?” He teased.

“After thee wedding, of course.” She laughed and Harry grinned.

“Your English is getting better.” He praised her.

“Bill has been ‘elping me, though thee French is still prevalent.” She nodded with a beatific smile.

“I bet he has.” Harry winked. “I remember how fun it was to try and teach Nasta Parseltongue.”

“Is it difficult to learn?” Fred asked with a face.
“Very.” Nasta answered. “Harry gave me a written booklet for Christmas that he’d made for me. I still haven’t got a clue what it says and I can’t pick out any patterns either. It’s an impossible language to learn.”

“I told you that it’s probably because it’s a snake language and snakes don’t write. I don’t think Parseltongue was ever meant to be written down on paper.” Harry explained.

“You still have that ability?” Arthur asked, sharing a look with his Wife.

Harry nodded with a frown. “Yes. I got so used to knowing it was there and ‘seeing’ it with my mind’s eye that I retained the ability even after Voldemort’s soul fragment was destroyed from within my head.”

“Wait, what?” Myron demanded sharply. “What soul fragment in your head?”

Harry sighed. “After the kids are down for their nap.” He said defeatedly shying away from the furious glare that he was getting from his mates.

“I still remember how to speak it.” Ginny said softly. “He possessed me for a couple of months and I still know how to say the words that he taught me perfectly. I think that once you hear it and know what it means, you just don’t forget it. Ron only heard Harry say open once and he knows how to say that one word too.”

“He does?” Harry said confusedly.

Ginny nodded. “I was explaining to him why I could speak the words I’d learnt, even if I could never understand a snake like you could or hold a conversation with one, but he realised then that he knew how to say open after listening to you speak it.”

“Have you tried to have a conversation with a snake since you lost the soul fragment in your head?” Aneirin asked.

Harry nodded. “Yes, I can still understand them and hold conversations with them.”
“Are you sure it’s actually gone?” Aneirin asked again.

Harry nodded vehemently. “Definitely.”

Max made the tea after he had washed up the plates from the kids lunches as Nasta, Draco and Blaise put the babies down for their nap, Harry was forced onto the settee and he had one of his girls pressed on to him to keep him sat down. He could stand up by himself with his arms free, but with something in his arms, especially one of his fragile babies; they knew that he’d be unable to get up.

“Sneaky, nasty people.” He huffed.

“What’s the matter?” Richard asked.

“I can’t stand up properly yet, I need both arms to do so and even then it’ll be painful. With my arms full, there’s no way I can get up.”

“They just want to keep you safe and well.” Mrs Weasley said with an approving nod. “You shouldn’t be moving just yet.”

Harry rolled his eyes and made Charlie laugh.

“I’m fine.” He said. “Coddling me isn’t going to help anything.”

“Did you, or did you not almost drop Calix because you pushed yourself too hard?” Blaise asked as he walked into the room and sat beside him.

“No, I dropped a cup; I kept my hold on Calix.” Harry corrected. “He’s getting heavier too. I need to start weight lifting to keep up with them.”

Max snorted as he came into the room with a tray of filled tea cups.

“They aren’t that heavy.” He brushed off.
“Not to you!” Harry pointed out with a laugh. “You’re three times bigger than I am.”

“I know.” Max said smugly with a grin.

Harry rolled his eyes just as Nasta and Draco came back into the room. They settled down and looked at him patiently.

“What first?” He asked sullenly.

“What was that about soul fragments in your head?” Myron repeated.

“Horcruxes. Voldemort had six of them that he knew about and a seventh that he didn’t know about. He used his old diary, the Gaunt family ring, Slytherin’s locket, Hufflepuff’s cup, Ravenclaw’s diadem, his snake Nagini and me. I was unknowingly keeping him alive and that is why we always repelled one another. It was why he was so drawn to me and so obsessed with me, I was a part of him. His soul fragment wanted to go back to him, it didn’t want to be inside me, so it tried to get back to him and though he didn’t know it, Voldemort was drawn to me because I had a piece of him inside me.”

“Horcruxes are powerful and dark soul magic.” Aneirin explained. “Not much is known about them, but I learnt about them from four different wizards, one in Croatia, one in Serbia and the other two in Greece. Just the unspeakable evil needed to split the soul in the first place would have most people baulking in disgust. To make six knowingly is completely despicable and would leave the remaining soul unstable. They’re nearly impossible to destroy as well. Basilisk venom and Fiendfyre are about the only ways to completely destroy one, how did you do it?”

Harry sighed. “Back to the Basilisk.”

Aneirin gave him a look. “What Basilisk?”

“His second year, my first.” Ginny said softly. “The Diary, which we know now was a Horcrux, was in my belongings from a second hand book store.” Here she paused and looked at Lucius, but she said nothing to or about him. “I started writing in it and it wrote back. I thought it was so cool and I was really lonely and homesick, so I continued pouring my heart out to the diary.”
As she put her soul into the diary, the Horcrux within it got stronger. There were messages left all over the school ‘The Chamber of Secrets has been opened, enemies of the Heir beware.’ And other such things.” Harry took over as Ginny went pale and silent. “Students were being petrified by Slytherin’s rumoured monster that he kept in the Chamber of Secrets. It was a pure stroke of luck that no one died that year.”

Here Harry gave his own look to Draco, who had the grace to flush an embarrassed pink.

“I was young, I didn’t actually want anyone to die, it was all bravado in front of my friends.” He said quietly. “It was all twelve year old bluster. I would have been horrified if anyone had actually died in the school that I was attending.”

Anyway, things started happening, the school governors got involved as student safety was questioned and Hagrid, who had been blamed fifty years ago for opening the Chamber of Secrets the first time around and was subsequently expelled for it, was blamed again without any proof and he was taken to Azkaban.”

“That’s why he was expelled?” George asked wide eyed.

Harry nodded. “Only it was Voldemort both times, once when he was a student at the school, the second time he managed it through Ginny. But Hagrid told us to follow the spiders before he was taken away; Ron and I did this as Hermione had already been petrified by Slytherin’s monster this time.”

“Please tell me that you weren’t so stupid as to follow them, how can you be so reckless with your own life?!” Myron snapped at him.

Harry sighed. “We were young, Hermione had been petrified and she could have died. I got hold of the diary after Ginny had tried to get rid of it in the abandoned girls bathroom and I worked out how to use it and once we got talking, it took me into a memory of the day that Hagrid had been blamed for the opening of the Chamber and the death of a student, so we went to talk to Hagrid about the Chamber, just as he was arrested.”

“I was there that night.” Lucius cut in. “I surely would have seen you.”

Harry scratched his nose and grinned as he held his newborn daughter tighter. “I have an invisibility cloak. Ron and I were in the corner, watching you and Fudge, but Hagrid told us that we’d get the answers we needed if we followed the spiders, so we did.”

“Spiders are naturally afraid of Basilisks.” Aneirin cut in smoothly, displaying his intelligence and learned knowledge from all over the world. “For a creature with eight eyes to come up against a Basilisk who has a killing stare if caught with a direct gaze…it’s very reasonably their worst nightmare.”

“Add in that spiders don’t have eyelids and can’t close their eyes, it makes sense that they’d flee from a Basilisk.” Nasta nodded and Harry grinned, they were like two peas in a pod. Two very handsome, muscular peas.

“Ron and I followed the spiders as we’d been told to do, right into the forbidden forest and straight into a nest of Acromantula.”

“You did what?” Mrs Weasley demanded in a soft, horrified whisper, her face pale and her hand gripping Arthur’s arm tightly.

Harry rubbed the back of his neck. “Well at least they could speak English. We were able to talk to Aragog, Hagrid’s pet from when he was a child.”

“How many were there?” Max asked.

“Oh hundreds, from tiny little ones the size of my finger tip, slightly bigger ones the size of dogs, some that were the size of horses and then there was Aragog, who was just huge. We spoke with him as the others were his children and they deferred to him as their patriarch.”

“What happened?” Charlie asked interestingly, sitting forward with his curiosity. Harry remembered that that it wasn’t just dragons that Charlie loved, but all magical creatures. No one could get near an Acromantula, let alone actually speak to one, and that had spiked his latent curiosity.

“Aragog told us what he knew, how Hagrid wasn’t the perpetrator and that he wasn’t the monster in the Chamber and that a student had been killed in a bathroom.”

“What then?” Richard asked.
“He told his children to eat us. If it hadn’t been for the car that we’d stolen at the start of term and crashed into the Whomping Willow then we’d likely be dead.”

“You stole a car?” Nasta demanded. “At the age of twelve!”

“It was Mister Weasley’s car and technically Ron was the one who opened it and drove it, I didn’t know how.”

Fred and George sniggered and Harry smiled at his lap.

“So you got away from the killer spiders, what then?” Blaise asked.

Harry sighed. “We knew the spiders feared whatever the monster was, we knew that it had killed in a bathroom the last time the monster was released from what Aragog told us, I worked out that the student killed was Moaning Myrtle, who never leaves the first floor girls’ bathroom. So naturally we tried to sneak away into the girls bathroom to talk to her, we were caught by McGonagall and told her some sob story about wanting to see Hermione, so she led us to the Hospital Wing to see her, that’s when we noticed that Hermione had a piece of paper scrunched up in her hand as we sat with her petrified body.”

Harry shook away the shiver that travelled down his spine at the memories of seeing Hermione lying so still, stiff as a board in the hospital bed.

“Of course, clever little miss that she was, she already knew what it was. The piece of paper was a page from a book called Most Macabre Monstrosities, the page was on Basilisks. Everything fit; we knew then that Slytherin’s monster was a Basilisk and Hermione had written pipes underneath it all. It was using the plumbing of the school to move around unseen, which helped the bathroom theory.”

“What did you do then?” Myron asked, his face etched into false calm, obviously expecting the worst.

“We went to the staff room to wait for a teacher; we hid in a wardrobe of spare robes when we heard the call for all teachers to report to the staff room. That’s when we found out about Ginny.” Harry said nodding to her. “Ron was devastated. I don’t think I’ve ever seen him so pale, not even when we walked into the Acromantula nest and he absolutely hates spiders.”
“So you went down into this Chamber alone?” Myron demanded.

Harry shook his head. “No. We went to Professor Lockhart, he was the Defence teacher that year and he was apparently this legendary wizard who’d defeated all of these fantastic beasts and ghouls, we went to him with what we knew.”

“So you got a Professor to go with you this time?” Lucius asked interestedly.

Harry sighed. “Well, not exactly. He was packing to leave the school as we found him. We confronted him and he admitted to being a complete fraud. He’d get the full story and all the details of what these other amazing witches and wizards had done and then he used the Obliviate charm on them and then he passed their heroic deeds off as his own, of course he then turned around and he tried to attack us and wipe our memories to stop us from ratting him out. In his words ‘he’d never be able to sell another book’ if we told anyone.”

“That’s totally illegal!” Nasta burst out, utterly appalled. “To use the Obliviate curse upon two twelve year old boys for such a selfish reason! What happened to him?” Nasta asked, looking very much like he wanted to rip him to pieces.

“Oh he more than got his just desserts. I disarmed him and then forced him to come with us at wand point.” Harry sighed. “I found the entrance to the Chamber in the first floor girls’ bathroom, it could only be opened by a Parselmouth, so either me or Voldemort, who had possessed Ginny so that she could go back and forth through the Chamber, could even open the entrance. I pushed Lockhart down first…just in case.”

Max snorted in amusement and Harry smiled as he looked at him from under his lashes.

“I went down next and then Ron. It was just a carpet of small animal bones in an underground cavern that was so deep under the school that it was even underneath the lake. That’s when we found the skin.”

“The skin?”

Harry bobbed his head.

“The shed skin of the Basilisk. It was sixty feet long and a horrid, dark poisonous green. That’s when Lockhart attacked us again after he’d pretended to faint after seeing the skin. He grabbed Ron’s broken wand because we’d thrown his out of a window after the first time he’d attacked us. The wand backfired when he tried to perform the memory charm on us again and knocked him back into a wall which caused a rock fall. He wiped out his own memories and I believe he’s still in Saint Mungos recovering.”

“Good.” Draco muttered. “I hated him, he was a terrible teacher and I learnt nothing, absolutely nothing in that year.”

“Yeah, I think the only thing that I learned was to never open a full cage of Cornish Pixies in a classroom full of students.” Harry laughed. “But the rock fall now separated me from Ron and Lockhart, I carried on alone, he stayed to clear a path through the rocks.”

“Oh here we go!” Myron snarled. “I was wondering when you’d get to the part where you went into a dangerous situation on your own.”

“I was not going to let Ginny die!”

“For all you knew she was already dead!” Myron answered back.

Harry had no answer for that, they hadn’t known and the message had read ‘her skeleton’ which had pointed to her already being dead, but neither of them had wanted to think about that at the time.

“I wasn’t going to leave her down there.” He said in the silence. “Dead or not, I was not going to leave her there.”

Ginny stood and came over and sat next to him and Harry held her hand with his free one and he smiled at her.

“She was still alive when I reached the Chamber.” Harry said softly. “But she was being drained by Tom Riddle, he set the Basilisk on me to give him more time to drain Ginny and get stronger.”

“How are you still alive?”
“Luck really.” Harry shrugged. “Fawkes, Dumbledore’s phoenix came and blinded the Basilisk so it couldn’t kill me with its gaze and it brought the sorting hat with it too. I put it on and begged for help and I almost got knocked out by the sword of Gryffindor.”

Harry shifted the baby in his arm and Ginny read him like a book, reaching forward to snag the only cup of untouched tea left on the coffee table, holding it out to him. The taste of the honeyed tea soothed and settled him, even if it was a little cool.

“The next thing that I happened to do was pure stupidity, I know that, but with the adrenaline and the fear, you just have to act. Stopping and thinking things through would have meant my death and likely Ginny’s too. The Basilisk was angered, it was in pain, it was thrashing around and lunging unpredictably, so naturally, the little idiot that I was, I climbed up the giant statue of Salazar Slytherin to face it.”

The looks of shock and horror he got almost amused him if he hadn’t realised in hindsight how dangerous and suicidal he had actually been. All it would have taken was one slip or misstep on the age smoothened, wet stone and he would have plummeted to his death.

“The Basilisk could smell me, even blinded and half mad with pain, it lunged for me and I thrust up with Gryffindor’s sword and it went through the roof of her mouth, into her brain and out the top of her head. She went into death throes and died half in a pool of water and half on the walkway of the Chamber.”

“Where does the ‘being punctured by the Basilisk fang’ come into it if you’d killed it?” Nasta asked.

“That was on your notes.” Richard nodded. “One of the photos had to be discarded because the scar at your elbow was magically created.”

“You knew he’d been bitten by a Basilisk?” Myron demanded.

“He’s obviously fine!” Richard insisted stubbornly.

“I am fine. When I stabbed the Basilisk through the top of her head, her fang went into my arm.
Naturally I knew that I was dying, but…”

“Knew you were dying!”
Harry nodded. “Well yeah, it was a little hard to ignore the fuck off huge snake fang in my elbow! Plus my vision was going blurry and the edges were going black, my very blood was burning and I was dizzy and confused. Not to mention the sizzling of the puncture site.”

“What did you do, how did you save yourself?” Bill asked.

“As I sat there listening to Riddle lay out what was going to happen, how I had mere minutes left at the most, how he was going to drain Ginny to death so he could become solid and corporeal, Fawkes came to lay his head on me and he shed tears over my wound…”

“The healing properties of phoenix tears.” Nasta said with a smirk.

Harry nodded. “Fawkes saved my life and I picked up the fang that had gone through my arm and I stabbed it through the diary, one of the only things to destroy a Horcrux…”

“Basilisk venom. Genius really.” Aneirin said, though his face was still pale and tight from anger and a touch of fear.

“Not that I knew it was a Horcrux at the time, but like I said, I survived from luck. With the Horcrux destroyed, the shade of Riddle that lived within it was destroyed and with the drain gone, Ginny woke back up. I took the sword, the diary, the sorting hat and the fang to Dumbledore along with Ron, Ginny and Lockhart. Ron and I were given awards for special services to the school and I still have the Basilisk fang upstairs with Gryffindor’s sword and that was my second year at school.”

“Did you ever have a normal year?” Lucius asked him with a concerned look.

Harry nearly glowed at that look directed at him, things were slowly improving between them and their relationship, despite its downright frosty start and rocky, patchy middle, was getting better all the time and Harry was so glad. He didn’t want Draco to be caught between his parents and his lovers, it wasn’t a fair position to put him in and with the improving relationship came a relaxed air and trust was beginning to form, not a lot just yet, but Harry was sure that if he and Lucius continued to work at it, with the help of Draco and the tight handed guidance of Narcissa, then things would end up being better in the near future.

Lucius was already quite content to sit Tegan on his lap or hold Braiden’s hand as he toddled around his knees and he’d even had a cuddle with the newborn twins without anyone having to dump them on him. It made him smile and it made him insanely happy and his life was all but perfect at the
He shook his head to Lucius question though before he answered him. “No, not before I got with these guys, if you can call getting into a relationship with four men and falling immediately pregnant normal and then of course I fell pregnant with the quintuplets and now only a mere year later I have identical twins as well.”

“You really are going well with the babies.” Mrs Weasley said happily.

Harry relaxed as the women took over and started talking babies and the air just relaxed and everyone started talking and cooing over the babies again. Harry sighed happily and rested back against the settee, baby still in his arms. He still needed a name for this one and it was driving him insane. He just knew that he was going to get more grumpy and irritable the longer it took for him to find her a name.

The kids woke up soon after their naps and they had water and weak juice in little sippy cups as the adults had their tea cups refreshed and they got to have a light snack of poached pears as they hadn’t had their desserts and then there was no time for anything else, no time to talk as the kids started playing and shouting and laughing and moving everywhere and climbing on everyone. It was adorable really and Harry watched it all with an indulgent smile from where he sat cuddling with his newborn daughter, at least until Marianna stole her from his arms that was.

He didn’t mind as he stretched himself out and rotated his shoulder. He assisted Braiden up onto the settee when he climbed up to sit with him, cuddling into his one side, Harry was curled against the arm of the chair and Braiden was curled against him. He hadn’t meant to fall asleep, but he did, he never noticed the photos being taken of him by his adoring mates.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Took me a while to get this one out, I’ve had problems focusing this last week and the plagiarism report for The Tribulation of the Blue Moon had to be dealt with, which has ended happily with the offending story being pulled down, but I lost a day there dealing with that, but I finally got this up and out and I’m now going to try and get a chapter out each for Lycanthrope Factory and Damaged Bodies, which will be a treat for those reading them, but I have no idea or any guesses as to how long that may take.

I hope you have all enjoyed this chapter, I’ll see you all…not soon I don’t think, maybe in a month, perhaps a little longer due to the work I want to do on my other fics, but definitely not too long away, but until then,
StarLight Massacre. X
The Romance of Valentine's

Chapter Notes

Last Time

The kids woke up soon after their naps and they had water and weak juice in little sippy cups as the adults had their tea cups refreshed and they got to have a light snack of poached pears as they hadn’t had their desserts and then there was no time for anything else, no time to talk as the kids started playing and shouting and laughing and moving everywhere and climbing on everyone. It was adorable really and Harry watched it all with an indulgent smile from where he sat cuddling with his newborn daughter, at least until Marianna stole her from his arms that was.

He didn’t mind as he stretched himself out and rotated his shoulder. He assisted Braiden up onto the settee when he climbed up to sit with him, cuddling into his one side, Harry was curled against the arm of the chair and Braiden was curled against him. He hadn’t meant to fall asleep, but he did, he never noticed the photos being taken of him by his adoring mates.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Ninety – The Romance of Valentine’s

Harry was able to bend and lift easily three weeks later. It was the twelfth of February and they’d barely been left alone by members of the family since the twins’ birth.

Nasta’s thirty-ninth birthday on the third of February had been quiet and spent together as the growing family that they were. Nasta had gone out in the night with his friends from the Dragon Reserve when they had begged him to come celebrate with them however, but only after asking several times if it was alright if he did and only if they were absolutely sure that they didn’t mind him going out for a few hours, especially with the newborn twins. Draco had all but shoved him out of the front door in the end and told him to go and enjoy himself for once.

He’d come back four hours later, without touching a drop of alcohol, in such good spirits and in such a brilliant mood that Harry, Blaise and Draco were walking funny the next day and Max was happily nursing a sore lower back with a smug grin on his face. Nasta had broken the headboard of their bed with how enthusiastic he had been with the four of them.

He’d come back four hours later, without touching a drop of alcohol, in such good spirits and in such a brilliant mood that Harry, Blaise and Draco were walking funny the next day and Max was happily nursing a sore lower back with a smug grin on his face. Nasta had broken the headboard of their bed with how enthusiastic he had been with the four of them.

It was now just two days from Valentine’s Day and they were getting offers on all sides to babysit for them, but Harry already knew exactly what he wanted to do and working his mates over to his way of thinking had been very easy and required nothing more than a soft plea and wide eyes.

Nasta and Draco were already in ‘negotiations’ about what they were doing to ‘surprise’ him, but Draco was so adamant about getting his own way that he often started shouting, which Harry could hear perfectly throughout the house.

Draco wanted to go to the world famous magical ballet again, like they had two years ago, but Nasta wanted a quiet, romantic meal so that Harry wasn’t excited too much while he was still recovering.

Harry looked down at his bump; it was smaller, much smaller now than right after he’d given birth, but he still had it, not that it bothered him and any lingering doubts about his mates not finding him attractive still with the belly had been thoroughly abolished in the last few weeks as they lavished loving attention and sex on him in equal measures.

“Mama.”

“Hello, Calix sweetheart, how are you feeling?” Harry asked smiling.

“Ba nah, appa gee tah nub uh.”

Harry blinked at him, but he nodded and tried to look interested, but he was just stunned. Usually he could decipher a little bit about what his babies were saying, but he hadn’t understood anything he’d just heard.

Calix giggled and Harry stood up and hefted him up and onto his hip.

“Come on big boy, let’s go find Daddy Max, I don’t know about you, but I think dinner is taking too long.”

“Almost done!” Max insisted as Harry carried Calix into the kitchen before he could say a word. Farren was sat at Max’s feet, tugging insistently on his trousers and making sad, upset noises. “Why did I choose today of all days to try them on something new and go adventurous? I should have started this an hour before I did!”

“Don’t worry, are you almost done?”

“Yes, five minutes, can you move Farren though? I hate him around my feet when I’m cooking. I’ve moved him five times; he just keeps coming back, even when I put him in the playpen, he just climbed over the top. He’s getting more and more used to being on his feet.”

Harry nodded and slipped Calix into his highchair before grabbing the other four from the space they were kept when not in use between the fridge and the wall and setting them up in a line. He grabbed Farren from the floor and hefted him up and into his highchair.

“You are getting far too big, baby.” He complained as he secured Farren to the chair. “I think you’ll be in a booster seat soon, these highchairs are getting entirely too small for you.”

“Do you think that it’s a little soon for that?” Max asked as he looked over his shoulder at him.

Harry shook his head. “No, he can sit up fine on his own and most booster seats now have five point straps and the seats strap to the chairs as well and it’s not like we leave them alone when they’re being fed. He’s just not going to fit in these chairs for much longer, look, his thighs already touch both sides of it. He’ll get stuck one of these days.”

Harry went off in search of more babies and only when he had Tegan tucked up under one arm and Braiden by the back of his dungaree straps did he go back into the kitchen with assurances from Blaise that he had Regan and Leolin and that Draco had their two girls.

Harry got Braiden and Tegan into their highchairs just as Max was serving Farren and Calix. Blaise got Regan into his highchair just as Max put a little plastic plate onto the tray and he wiped his forehead with an exhausted sigh.

“There we go, five meals on their trays, only forty-eight minutes late.” He groaned as he collapsed back into a chair.

Harry watched as Blaise set up the bottles and cooled them down with a mild spell before he started feeding Leolin as Draco fed Eva.

Harry picked up his youngest baby from the bassinet where she had been left and he kissed her softly.

“Pass her bottle to me.” He asked, holding a hand out for it.

Blaise passed the bottle over and Harry tested the temperature out of habit, before he stroked his daughter’s cheek with the nipple and watched her root happily for it. He smiled as she latched on and started suckling strongly.

“She’s going to pull the teat right out of the bottle one of these days.” Harry laughed. “She’s so much like Farren with their eating habits.”
Harry went back to watching his beautiful daughter, now almost a month old, suckle down her milk. Both of their hair had gone even curlier now that they were older, but it was darker now too, going a more solid brown than the blondish-brown damp wisps they’d had at birth, but those curls were already touching their ears and the middle of their necks at the back.

Alexander absolutely loved their curly hair and Amelle had spent the day with him and the girls just after they’d been born talking quietly as they both cuddled with a baby each, the swarm of older children all over the floor as they patted and poked at Eleonora, who truthfully was enjoying the attention from the other babies as Braiden toddled all over the room collecting his favourite toys and dumping them into Nora’s lap. It had been then that he had named his youngest daughter, as he and Amelle had been talking, cooing over Braiden’s actions and Nora’s preening.

He’d named his youngest daughter Ave. Ave Amelle Potter-Maddison. Amelle had cried, Caesar had teared up when Harry had explained to him why his mate was crying so hard that she couldn’t even speak through her sobs, after he’d come running from the kitchen that is, and Max had kissed him breathless and stupid. She had been named Ave after the Saint Aventine to match her sister, the both of them named after Saints and the both of them named for a family member who had touched Harry’s life in some way, Evelyn and Amelle.

“Pass Ave to me, Leolin wants you.” Blaise sighed as he held onto a squirming Leolin who was chanting ‘Ma’ over and over, close to tears.

Harry sighed and passed Ave to Max first to securely pick up Leolin and then Max passed Ave onto Blaise with her bottle before he went back to supervising dinner.

“When does Nasta get home?” Draco asked as he burped Eva gently on his broad shoulder, spit up cloth flung over the same shoulder, just in case. If it was one thing Draco hated, it was vomit in any form, even just spit up milk.

“I don’t think hounding him as soon as he comes in from work is going to get you your own way.” Blaise warned him.

Draco looked affronted at the very idea. “I merely wish to ask him something, don’t jump to conclusions, Blaise, it makes you look stupid.”

“Stop it.” Max warned them in a growl before anything started, but Harry watched as they started sizing one another up and he knew they would continue the argument later.

Shaking his head, Harry bounced Leolin against his shoulder, one hand cupping the back of his head as his tiny, fourteen month old son clenched his hands in his shirt, nuzzling his collarbone with his small, sharp nose and wet lips, sucking on Harry’s skin with a toothless, drooling mouth.

“I’ll tell you something, if Dain and Kailen don’t lay off, then Nasta’s going to blow like Mount Vesuvius.” Max said with a headshake as he watched Harry with Leolin.

“They just want to see Leolin; they want to see him alive and well.” Harry said patiently. “He is their several times great-grandson.”

“And so is Nasta and Sanex.” Max said with narrowed eyes. “Hell, so is Aneirin and his brother Idris and his sister Nerys, yet they didn’t give two fucks about any of them. Not even when their several times great-granddaughter died, they didn’t fucking care then either.”

Harry glared dangerously at him as Braiden picked his head up from his plate. “Fu…foo…fuff.”

“If he says that word, Max, then you’re a dead man.” Harry said calmly, but his eyes were spitting fire at his biggest mate, who was a little pale at the thought of teaching his oldest son a swear word. Not only would Harry kill him, but Nasta, Blaise and Draco would kill him and after that, his Dad would kill him.

Max dived to distract their eighteen month old son with his dinner, which thankfully, and luckily for Max, worked.

“I know that what Dain and Kailen did to Nasta and his family was wrong, no one needs to tell me that and I will always stand by Nasta even if he decides that he wants to hate them forever, but I will not let that impact badly on Leolin. Like it or not he is a Faerie and he is going to need to socialise and maybe even live with the Faeries and if that means putting up with Dain and Kailen then I damn well will, for Leolin’s sake. He is potentially going to outlive everyone in this room; I don’t even want to think on how much pain that will cause him later in life, if he has friends, a lover, maybe even children of his own who are going to live just as long as he is, then maybe that will help support him when we all inevitably die. Don’t ever think that I’ll forgive them for hurting Nasta, because I won’t, but if it helps Leolin in whatever small way, then you can bet your last goddamned Knut that I’ll do it regardless!”

The kitchen was silent after that but for the sounds coming from their children as they were fed dinner, fed their desserts and then taken away to be bathed. Harry was cuddled up with Eva and Ave on the soft settee in the living room, so he was the first to greet Nasta when he flooed home, covered in muck and filth and soot. He had a new burn on his left side, which Harry could easily see because his gorgeous, hunky mate wasn’t wearing a shirt and his bare muscled chest was displayed to his perusal, even if it was dripping in sweat and caked with soot it was a beautiful sight, but the burn, covered in a bright orange burn paste, worried him, as ever, despite knowing that as a Dracken that Nasta would be healed in a few days at the very most. It was a very large area that was covered with the orange paste.

“It’s nothing, Cariad.” Nasta insisted as he caught sight of where Harry’s worried look was directed. “One of the juveniles trying to show everyone who’s boss. He couldn’t even generate enough flame for a complete fireball; it was more like a quick spurt of heat that caught me and another Dragonologist. The keepers couldn’t calm him, so they called us and a few handlers over to his pen. He was seriously agitated. How was everything here?”

Harry smiled. “Except for Max almost teaching Braiden to say fuck, everything was fine.”

Nasta raised an eyebrow. “Why was Max trying to teach Braiden how to say fuck?”

“He wasn’t trying to teach him, he almost taught him. He said the word in front of Braiden and he tried copying it, thankfully Max distracted him with his dinner, but this has to hammer home exactly how careful we have to be now, he’s picking up new words so fast.”

Nasta nodded and sighed. “I’m going for a shower and I’ll be back out soon. I could use a cwtch.”

“Take a bath instead, love.” Harry insisted. “Draco wants to ambush you about my supposed Valentine’s surprise again.”

Nasta groaned. “I think it would be less hassle to just ask you what you want for your surprise.”

“A quiet meal with my lovers sounds perfect to me, keeping up with all those gorgeous waiters offering me food was more effort than I think I could expend at the moment.”

Nasta gave him a look, then he smiled and kissed his head, he knew that Harry was only teasing.

“I’ll fight your corner then, there will be no giving in and not an inch over to Draco on this matter. Now I’m going for that nice, long soak in the bath, then I want to cuddle my little girls and then later, after dinner, I want you on my lap.”
Harry grinned. “Oh really? What position would you like me on your lap?”

Nasta’s cheeks pinked a little. “Not like that!” He insisted, kissing Harry’s mouth this time before going to run his bath.

Harry laughed and snuggled his daughters. “He’s a wonderful man is your Dad Nasta, easy to rile up sometimes, but oh so very wonderful.”

He lay back and smiled to himself, closing his eyes for a moment. He hadn’t had to do a single night feed since the girls had been born and he counted himself lucky for that, but that didn’t mean that he wasn’t woken up three times a night, every night. He still had ears after all and the girls were just so loud and he was always tired lately.

“Is Nasta home yet?” Draco demanded suddenly.

Harry snapped upright and peered around owlishly, his face pulled into a confused frown.

“Wha’?”

“I’m sorry, love, I didn’t realise that you were sleeping.” Draco said as he sat beside him and pulled him to rest on one broad shoulder.

“It’s okay.” Harry said with a yawn, checking on his daughters. “Nasta is home, he was filthy though, so he’s taking a bath. He has a new burn on his side, so I definitely want Max to take a look at it.”

“I need to look at what?” Said man asked as he came into the living room, just catching the tail end of the conversation.

“Nasta, he’s got a new burn on his side.” Harry said.

Max huffed out a sigh. “That man needs his goddamned head checked, putting up with such injuries, working with dragons of all things, coming home with bites and burns and claw marks. Idiot mate of mine! One of these days he’ll come back missing an arm or his bloody head, then what would he Max was still muttering as he left to the kitchen to get the burn salve that he’d made himself, boasting that it worked better than the weak, mass produced gunk that people dived for when they received a burn. He came back in with his potion’s case and started setting everything up with a scowl on his handsome face.

Nasta rolled his eyes and groaned when he came into the living room almost forty minutes later, squeaky clean, pink skinned and in a pair of clean pyjamas to see Max sitting stiffly, a frown on his mouth, waiting for him with a glower on his face.

“You had better not have covered that damn injury again!” Max growled. “Sit here, now.”

Nasta blew out a breath and stared at Harry with betrayed hazel eyes.

Harry shrugged. “I had to tell him, you know I hate any of you being injured and Max is the first aider of the family.”

Nasta subjected himself to Max’s attentions, reclining down on his back, head resting on the arm of the settee, his legs over Max’s lap as Max prodded around the burn on his side.

“Twist onto your side for me, Nas.” Max instructed, helping Nasta turn on the settee so that his burned side was more exposed. It looked vaguely sexual from where Harry was sat watching them as Max twisted himself as well to look more closely at the burned skin, his groin pressed to Nasta’s arse and Nasta’s legs curled around his waist.

“It’s not too bad, it was only a juvenile.” Nasta insisted, breaking Harry from his fantasy.

Max didn’t even bother answering that as he prodded around the edges of the burn wound, inspecting it closely and carefully.

“This will last for at least two days.” Max told him unhappily.

He sat back and unscrewed the lid off of the burn paste he made special for Nasta and after scooping a generous amount out, he applied it with gentle fingertips, but still Nasta hissed in pain through clenched, gritted teeth.
“Well it’s your own fault.” Max growled, but he eased the pressure off of his fingertips until he was merely skimming Nasta’s skin, just touching enough to get the salve to cover the burn.

When he was finished Max cleaned his fingertips on a wet wipe and moved Nasta’s legs so he could stand up, before placing them back down on the settee.

“Stay exactly where you are.” Max told him. “You don’t want to know what will happen to you if I find out that you’ve moved or touched that salve.”

Max left the room with his potions things and the soiled wet wipe and Harry smiled as he left. He loved watching his dominants care for one another, he didn’t know why it made his stomach feel all fluttery, but it did.

“I guess this means that I’m not having my cwtch after all.” Nasta sighed. “I swear he’s a bigger mother hen than my Dad ever was.”

Harry laughed and eased himself up, he took his girls over to Nasta and eased one of them into his arms and Nasta grinned, cuddling Ave tightly to his chest, laying a bristly kiss to her head.

“Which one is this? I still can’t tell them apart, though she does smell like Blaise.”

“That one’s Ave, she smells like Blaise because he’s had her for most of the day. He kept stealing her from everyone.”

“To be fair I thought I was stealing time with both of them.” Blaise said with a bashful shrug. “I can’t tell one from the other yet and you insisted on keeping them in their nighties today.”

Harry sat back down and cuddled into Draco again, the both of them cuddling Eva and sharing her weight between them.

“They didn’t need to be dressed and yesterday all they did was spit up on their clothes, keeping them in their nighties is easier.” Harry defended with a sniff.
Max came back into the room and he scowled at Nasta.

“I didn’t move.” Nasta insisted.

“You had better not have.” Max grumbled, but he still fussed around Nasta and made sure he was comfortable and settled, moving the cushions, settling his legs more comfortably.

“Alright Max, I’m fine.” Nasta said sleepily as he snuggled with Ave.

“Do you want to go up to bed, love?” Max asked. “You must be tired, or are you hungry? I could start dinner early.”

“I’ll help you.” Harry said as he shifted Eva fully to Draco and went to stand up.

“Don’t you dare move. You stay right there, I’ll do dinner.” Max said.

Harry rolled his eyes and stood up regardless and he stretched happily. “After how long the kids waited for their dinner, I think it might help for me to come and give you a hand.”

Harry smiled to show he was teasing, but Max sighed and nodded. “Come on then, but if you start feeling any pain, you sit down immediately.”

“Fine, but I doubt I will. I’m getting better at being able to stay up on my feet for longer.”

Harry helped Max in the kitchen and he enjoyed himself. He loved cooking with Max and they danced around one another easily, unless they were snatching passionate kisses, which was quite often, but they got dinner done and Blaise set the table as Max helped Nasta, who didn’t even need help or support, but acquiesced to it regardless while Draco took Eva and Ave to their bedroom to put them down in their bedside bassinets.

Dinner was mostly quiet, but Nasta did tell them what he’d done in work and likewise they told him what had happened at home and with the kids while he’d been away.

Blaise did the washing up while Max was busy getting Nasta to bed. It was eight o’clock in the night, but an early night sounded like heaven to Harry, who followed them up and got under the duvet with Nasta and cuddled into him.
“I got my cwtch after all.” Nasta said with a grin.

“You did, just wait for the others to join us; we can have a group cwtch then.”

“I love you, so much.” Nasta told him in the ensuing silence as Max went down to help lock up the house.

“I love you more.” Harry teased as he rolled over and buried his head under Nasta’s armpit, his mouth and nose resting against his mate’s ribs, laying soft, nuzzling kisses to the skin under his lips.

“I’m not even tired.” Nasta said with a slight chuckle.

“I am, but then even a small amount of exercise tires me out, the string of pregnancies close together has left me unfit.”

Nasta did laugh at that, softly though so he didn’t wake up the sleeping twins.

“You’re just recovering from being pregnant and having the girls cut out of you, you’ll be fine in a month or so and if you are unfit, I’m sure I could help you with a nightly fitness regime.” He said into Harry’s ear, flicking his tongue out to lick the outer shell.

Harry shivered and he let out a shaky laugh. “I am unfit. Very, very unfit. You’ll need to help me at least twice a night for the next ten years to help get me back into shape. Maybe even more than that.”

“If that’s what it takes.” Nasta breathed huskily. “I’d be more than happy to dedicate my time to help you with your fitness, even if it takes us fifty years to get you fit and healthy again.”

Harry had to close his eyes and he had a full body shiver that had goosebumps rising on his arms. Then Nasta rolled on top of him and Harry couldn’t stop the reaction that had him arching into Nasta’s body eagerly.

“You’re hurt.” Harry said sadly, raising his legs to cradle Nasta’s body only to drop his right leg away from Nasta’s left side.

“If you think a little burn from a juvenile of all things is going to stop me from loving on you, you have another thing coming! If it had been an adult female, then I might not be able to ravish you as I’d perhaps like to as I’d probably be knocked out on pain potions, but not from a male juvenile.” Nasta told him and as Harry opened his mouth to reply, Nasta slanted his over Harry’s and pushed his tongue in, stopping Harry’s reply at the source before Nasta wrapped his arms around him, one supporting the back of his neck and he rested some of his weight onto Harry, aware that they were both recovering and that dropping his full weight onto his mate would likely result in them both howling in agony and if there was any howling going to happen tonight, then it was going to be from pleasure and not from pain.

Harry wiggled out of his clothes and Nasta kicked off his pyjama bottoms, Max having refused to let him put his pyjama top back on after having applied the burn paste after his bath.

“We’ll have to be quick.” Harry panted, his body clenching tight in anticipation. “There’s no way that Max will let us do this with your burn. He’ll be very protective of you for a while because he’s in top dominant mode. He might even spank me.” Harry said, perking up a little at that.

Nasta chuckled and he rolled Harry onto his one side and slapped one bum cheek lightly. Harry breathed out in a harsh sigh and he groaned in pleasure.

“You know I love it when you do that.” He said shakily.

“Oh?” Nasta said with a light tone. He slapped Harry’s bum again and Harry’s cock just went rock solid and he rolled back onto his back and lifted his left leg only to grip at Nasta’s back.

“Fuck me.” He demanded. “Quickly, before Max comes back up and tries to stop us.”

Nasta smirked at that, his mouth splitting into an evil grin. “I can do that. If you want a hard, fast quickie, I’m more than happy to oblige.”

“You’d better not hurt yourself either, because then I’ll feel all guilty and I don’t like feeling guilty when we’re having sex.” Harry said with a grin.

Nasta grinned back before he reached over and pulled the bottle of lube from their bedside table, he popped the top off and using just his elbows to support himself, he squirted some of the scented, edible lube onto his fingers.
Harry’s body clenched and his breath came faster as he watched Nasta rub the lube between his fingers to warm it before he pushed two fingers straight into Harry. He threw his head back and bit at his own forearm to keep in the pleasured scream that wanted to escape.

Nasta’s hazel eyes darkened and the pupils expanded as he watched Harry writhe quietly on the bed, panting and moaning softly, biting his own arm to keep himself quiet.

He pushed in another finger and Harry’s legs shot back to his chest and he almost winded himself, but he groaned and rolled on the bed, his head dropping to the side before snapping to the other side as Nasta touched his prostate. He pressed against that firm, smooth lump and watched as Harry’s face screwed up and his back arched out of his control. He loved how Harry reacted, he loved watching him and it tightened something in his gut as Harry keened softly.

He pulled his fingers free and he gripped himself hard and tight to ease himself away from the edge of orgasm, he stroked himself to get the feeling back into his cock before he pressed himself against Harry’s entrance. He held Harry’s hips to keep him still while increasing the pressure of himself pressed to Harry.

“Are you okay?” He asked gruffly.

“Yes, damn it yes!” Harry told him, still wiggling on the mattress. “This is the longest quickie ever.” He declared and Nasta smirked.

He surged into Harry with one long, sinuous thrust and held himself still as Harry writhed and rolled as much as he could while Nasta was inside his body and holding his hips tightly.

He waited for Harry to calm down, for him to keep still, though he was still panting and breathing heavily under him and only then did he pull himself out of Harry, he waited with just the head of himself still inside Harry until he felt that he could control himself adequately and then he pushed himself back into the warm, tightness of Harry’s clenching body.

He repeated this until his thrusts were smooth and Harry was digging his short nails into his shoulders and squeezing his eyes closed, his plump bottom lip caught between his teeth to keep himself from crying out in pleasure. Then Nasta found his rhythm and using his one hand to roll Harry’s hips to an angle and his other to cup the back of Harry’s head, he lost himself in the pleasure of his mate’s body.

He rolled his hips and used every muscle in his body, every last drop of his energy to bring them to a hard, fast, gut clenching orgasm within minutes.

Nasta rode out Harry’s orgasm and his own and made sure to fall to the side of Harry, to the opposite side that he usually fell on due to his burn injury and he concentrated on slowing his breathing, on just recovering from the quickly built, explosive orgasm that he had experienced with his submissive mate.

“We should get cleaned up.” He said once he had his breathing back under his own control.
“Can’t move.” Harry grunted through a sore throat.

“I can’t either.” Nasta said with a smug grin.

Harry laughed and moved, with a lot of grumbling, protesting and jerky muscles, to turn and cuddle into Nasta’s body. He grunted when something moved and caused an ache in his spine, but other than that, he was content to just lie where he was, very pleasantly sated and now very sleepy.

Nasta managed to grab a few baby wipes from the bedside table and he cleaned himself and Harry off as best as he could with Harry being boneless and unhelpful before he dragged the duvet over them both and he yawned. He was definitely tired now.

They were both fast asleep when Max came back up with Blaise and Draco once everything had been cleaned and put away and locked up.

“Did they…? They actually had sex!” Blaise hissed. “You kept me downstairs cleaning when I could have been up here getting in on an orgasm!”

Max blinked stupidly before he covered his face with a hand. “I knew I shouldn’t have left them alone! Nasta is injured for fucks sake!”

“Apparently he wasn’t that injured.” Draco told him before he went into the bathroom to wash himself up for bed.

Max sighed. “I’ll kill them both in the morning, or at least chew their ears for an hour or so.”

Blaise chuckled and he followed Draco into the bathroom, leaving Max holding two bottles ready for when the twins woke for their feed. They were still on a different schedule, though they were apart by only twenty minutes instead of half an hour, they were getting more in tune to one another, it was just taking a long time.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry was spoiled rotten for Valentine’s Day, he’d gotten four rounds of sex, breakfast in bed with his mates, a baby cuddle pile when he’d ordered Blaise to go and get their awake, older babies to put them into the bed with them. He’d gotten chocolate, a pendant for his platinum bracelet that Blaise had given to him for their very first Christmas together, back when it was just the both of them. He got a new pair of jeans and four sappy, clichéd cards filled with declarations of love and protection and desire. He felt very, very spoiled, but then he’d bought cards and gifts for his mates too and they’d all bought gifts and cards for one another as well, so they were all spoilt today and they had a lot of fucking cards up on display.

Harry cooked lunch, kicking Max out of the kitchen, much to his whining displeasure, but Blaise kept him happy by crawling onto his lap and straddling him. They had kissed passionately for several minutes, slowly, teasingly, their lips lingering together, their tongues playing and their hands stroking and gripping.

They had disappeared up the stairs and Harry grinned every time he thought of it, he had looked at them all throughout lunch, sated, happy, Blaise with a livid love bite on his neck that he didn’t even bother hiding and Max with a scored line of nail marks that went from his back over his shoulder that was just visible under the edge of his jumper.

Harry looked at himself in the mirror, he looked good and he grinned as he turned and critically looked at himself, noting the tight trousers made his bum look more pert and the flared shirt was tight around his shoulders and chest, which made him look nice and slim, but was flared over his belly so that the stubborn pouch of remaining baby weight from his last pregnancy wasn’t visible. He wasn’t vain by any definition of the word, but he did want to look nice for his mates tonight, no matter what they’d say about him always looking nice and not caring that he still had some baby weight around his waist.

It was only four in the afternoon, but they were going early because of the obligations they had with their children. Harry grinned as he made sure that nothing was out of place and he went to show his mates how he was dressed. He absolutely loved teasing them.

He got his answer when he walked into the living room and his mates turned to him and their eyes widened or their pupils dilated. He felt like the most gorgeous person on Earth with those four handsome, stunning men looking at him like they wanted to undress him and eat him while doing terribly wonderful things to his body and he grinned widely at them.

“Are the kids all ready?” He asked casually as he caught Braiden, who toddled to him with his arms out, giggling and babbling and Harry picked him up and kissed his little mouth. “Apparently not.”
He chuckled as he answered his own question.

“You look gorgeous, Harry.” Draco said huskily.

Harry smiled. “You always do.” He answered, exaggeratedly roving his eyes over Draco, who was dressed in tight, pale grey trousers and a slightly darker grey shirt with a tie that matched his trousers.
It brought out his silver eyes into stark contrast and made them seem more grey than blue or silver, but Harry had seen those eyes up close every single day for the last two years, he knew they were silver, edging the line perfectly between grey and blue.

“Come on love birds, let’s get these little monsters over to Malfoy Manor and then you can eat one another with your eyes at the dinner table.” Max teased, but his eyes kept flitting from Draco to Harry and then over to Blaise, who looked stunning in all black, to Nasta, who looked casually gorgeous in black trousers with an untucked pale blue shirt with no tie. Max looked like he couldn’t decide who looked better or which one of them he wanted to strip naked and fuck first. Harry loved that, it made him smile.

Harry snuggled Braiden, his eighteen month old baby boy, in his arms and covered his face in his shoulder as he flooed over first to Malfoy Manor. He had been adamant that Lucius and Narcissa would be babysitting for them today and he greeted Narcissa happily and smiled as she waved her wand over him and Braiden to remove the soot from the floo from their clothes and with one last kiss to Braiden’s soft cheek, he handed his baby over.

“Are you sure you don’t mind doing this?” He asked concernedly.

“It’s no trouble at all.” Narcissa said. “You gentlemen need a night to yourselves and if no one else is available for the evening, then of course Lucius and I are happy to look after the children.”

Did he mention that he’d lied a little to get the elder Malfoys to babysit for him tonight? He grinned internally as his mates turned up one by one with the children in carry cots, except for Farren, who was too big and was cocked out on Max’s hip.

“What time are your dinner reservations, darlings?” Narcissa asked. “Do you have time for tea before you leave?”

Harry nodded. “That would be lovely; we wanted to come a little early, just to make sure that the kids settle, where is Lucius?”

“He’s in his study finishing off some last minute reforms. Draco, be a dear and go and get your Father, he’s been burying himself in his work since finding out that we were having the children tonight.”

Draco put down the two carrycots that held Leolin and Ave and he kissed his Mother as he passed her and then he went to find his Father in the labyrinth that was Malfoy Manor.

Harry and his three other mates settled the children down and those who were awake were let out of their carrycots and Narcissa told them that she’d had a house elf completely baby proof the one front room so that the babies would be very safe as they played.

Max and Nasta set up the eight travel cots as Harry explained that Eva and Ave would wake up only for a feed or a change and that Leolin would sleep when he wanted, but was usually asleep for the night by sixish and the other five were to be put to bed at six thirty, seven O’clock at the very latest.

Lucius came in with Draco and he looked a little too pale to Harry’s eyes.

“We should be back by ten or eleven.” Harry said with a soft smile.

“You take your time.” Narcissa said with a smile. “We haven’t had a chance to babysit for you yet and Braiden is almost two years old! We’re excited to have this chance to spend some time with all of them, you boys don’t take nearly as much time as you deserve for yourselves.”

Harry couldn’t help but think that Lucius was not sharing his Wife’s enthusiasm and he looked terrified as Braiden giggled and toddled around one of his many living rooms, despite it being baby proofed.

“He seems very happy to be up on his feet.” Narcissa said with a loving look to Braiden.

“He’s gotten much better at it in the last few days; he’s almost completely stopped crawling now.” Draco said proudly as he touched the top of Braiden’s head as he toddled past where Draco was sat, sipping at his tea.

“Have any of the others been up on their feet?” Narcissa asked.

“Regan is up on his feet and Farren knows how to stand and how to climb, Tegan is still cruising, but Calix is very happy crawling still.”

“Has Leolin made any attempts at moving?” Lucius asked at an attempt to show interest.

Harry shook his head. “No, but that’s normal, he won’t be even attempting to move himself until he’s at least three years old.”

Lucius nodded, but he looked a little awkward and terrified of being left alone with these eight little people.
“We’d better get going.” Draco said as he checked his pocket watch. “Eva and Ave have been fed and will need to be fed again in three hours, this rabble won’t need feeding, but they may want snacks, we’ve packed them some rusks and Nasta insisted on putting in some fruit slices too. They have their sippy cups, they’ve got their names on them so that you know which one is which and Leolin has a bottle, his are bigger than Eva and Ave’s, I think that’s everything.”

Narcissa was smiling at him.

“Go and have fun, I have had a child before.” She told him as she patted his cheek lovingly. “We’ll be completely fine, I’m sure they’ll be absolute angels.”

Lucius tried to hide how worried he was about this whole evening as he said goodbye to his son and his son’s lovers. His mates. He was getting more and more used to that the longer he had to think about it and making up with Draco had helped everything immensely.

As the oldest boy, Braiden, crawled up into his lap and sat down facing the table, his one arm wrapped around his tiny waist automatically as long past memories of Draco doing something similar at this age plagued his mind. He did what he’d done then too and held the boy securely and shifted his chair further under the table so that Braiden could reach the table top. The little boy bashed little hands against the surface until Narcissa handed him a toy, which was then happily played with. Perhaps this wasn’t going to be so difficult after all and he was worried for nothing.

He looked around at the eight children that were for all intents and purposes, his own grandchildren, five grandsons and three granddaughters. He…cared for them, he couldn’t say that he loved them, not yet, but he did care and he wouldn’t want any of them to ever be hurt. When he’d found out that the little ones, Calix and Leolin, were in the hospital, he remembered how his heart had jumped, how his guts had clenched tight at the thought of those two little boys dying, how crushed his son, Draco would be and that had upset him too.

He looked to Calix now, happy, healthy, pink cheeked in his excitement as he rushed around the hardwood flooring on his hands and knees, little socked feet working to push himself faster as he chased after a soft, foam ball that Narcissa had enchanted to slowly roll around the floor.

He was in fine health, but he did remember seeing him unnaturally pale, with fever red spots of colour on his cheeks. He hadn’t been allowed to visit him or Leolin in the hospital, none of the grandparents had been allowed to visit, which he believed had made things harder, but when Calix had been released, he remembered thinking then that the boy still didn’t look well, that maybe the Healers had released him too early and he had been right and he’d never been more angry or more afraid than getting the news that Calix had been readmitted to the hospital. It was then that he realised that these little children had inched their way into his heart. It wasn’t love, not yet, though he was sure that would come given time and evenings like this, where he and Cissa were alone to bond with them, but he most definitely cared about them and just the threat of them being sick, hurt or hospitalised made him very angry and admittedly a little fearful too. He didn’t want to lose a single one of them.

“Are you alright, darling?” Narcissa asked him.
He looked up at his Wife and he smiled softly at her, his heart swelling with love for the woman he cared for, the woman that had given him their beloved son. He nodded “Perfectly fine, dear.” He answered as he shifted Braiden into his lap more fully.

“Would you like a cup of tea?”

He nodded his assent and it was a minute or so before he realised that Narcissa had left the room and had left him on his own with all eight of the children. He looked around him, at Calix who was all over the floor, crawling faster than he could ever remember Draco being, to Tegan who was dragging the cushions off of his settee and throwing them at whichever brother was closest, Farren who was lifting himself up with the side of Eva’s, or was that Ave’s?, carrycot, as it rocked and tipped ominously.

He stood up quickly and dropped Braiden to the floor as hurriedly as he dared before he caught the carrycot with one hand and eased Farren to his feet with the other, he picked up the cushions and stacked them on the floor, away from Tegan and he caught Calix around the waist before he bumped his head on a chair. He sighed; he couldn’t wait for them all to go to sleep. This was not going to be as easy as he’d hoped just minutes before.

Harry was very happy with just dinner and then a stroll through a park, arm in arm with Nasta and Draco as Max had Blaise thrown over one shoulder. His first ever mate had drunk too much. Far, far too much and, helpless sleepy drunk that he was, he was fast asleep.

It had been hilarious really, one minute he’d been fine, then he’d found a bench and sat down, a minute later he was fast asleep and only grunted and groused when they’d tried to wake him.

“This is the last time I promise that he can drink whatever he wants.” Nasta shook his head. “We’d best get him home and then pick up the kids; it’s getting to the tail end of when we said we’d be home.”

Harry smiled. “I’ve had a lovely night, thank you.”

“I wanted to take you to the Ballet again, you enjoyed it the last time and we missed out last year.”
Harry squeezed Nasta’s hand and hid a grin.

“Thank you, Draco. I did enjoy it, perhaps next year?”

Draco nodded and he smiled and bent to kiss Harry. “I just want you to be happy, Harry.”

“With you four with me, how can I not be happy? Especially when Blaise is so entertaining.” He chuckled.

Max laughed. “He’s out of it, seriously out of it. Poor bastard is drooling down the side of my neck.”

“If he’s drooling down your neck, then why is he the poor bastard and not you?” Draco asked curiously.

“Because he looks ridiculous doing it and I look like a strong, handsome, kind and caring man by putting up with it.” Max said with a wide grin.

Harry laughed and they reached the end of the park and they slipped down an alleyway. They Apparated home first and Max took Blaise up to bed while he, Nasta and Draco went over to Malfoy Manor to get their kids back and likely rescue Lucius from hell on Earth.

Everything was quiet as Draco led them through the labyrinth and to the room that they had left the kids in. Narcissa was reading quietly and Lucius was in the process of dipping his elegant quill into a pot of ink open on his right side, Calix was sleeping in his lap facing him, little mouth open as he snuggled lightly into Lucius’ robe.

“Oh darlings, did you have a good night, are you all happy? Where are Blaise and Maximilius?” Narcissa asked, marking her page and sliding her book to the side table. Eva was in the crook of her arm sleeping peacefully.

“Blaise drank too much, Mother; he fell asleep on a park bench of all things! Max has put him to bed.” Draco told her as he took Eva from his Mother and kissed her full on her tiny little mouth.

“Is he alright?”
“Yes, Mother, he’ll sleep it off and if Max is in a favourable mood then he’ll give him a headache reliever and a stomach settler tomorrow morning when he wakes up after a night of having the twins screaming in his ear.”

“Max put him in the spare room.” Harry said with a shake of his head. “So he wouldn’t be disturbed.”

“He’ll want to get out of that habit; we won’t always have a spare room to put him in, unless he’d rather sleep on the settee.” Nasta said with a shake of his own head.

“The kids were alright, weren’t they?” Harry asked as he looked around, trying to find anything out of place, but everything was perfect; all the babies were in the travel cots, except for Eva now in Draco’s arms and Calix still on Lucius lap.

“They were little angels.” Narcissa gushed happily.

“Curious little angels.” Lucius added with a smirk. “They wanted to get into everything, particularly Calix, who even refused to go to sleep because he wanted to know what was behind every cupboard door and in every drawer before he would rest.”

Harry shook his head. “That boy is definitely going to become an explorer. He didn’t break anything did he? He broke one of Draco’s knick-knacks last week.”

“They are not ‘knick-knacks’” Draco said pompously. “They’re collectable figurines.”

“Whatever they are, Calix broke one of them. I told you not to leave them on the bottom shelves of the bookcase!”

“How was I to know that he’d climb three shelves to reach it?! I thought they would be safe on the fourth shelf.”

“Well they weren’t.” Harry said simply. “So other than a bit of snooping around, they were okay?”

“Braiden missed you a lot.” Narcissa said, looking a little worried about that fact. “Leolin too. He…”
he cried himself to sleep, darling. I’m sorry, I couldn’t calm him.”

Harry sighed. “It’s okay, we knew there was a chance of that happening, he’s very…”

“He’s very attached to Harry.” Nasta answered as Harry waffled a bit for the word he wanted.

Harry nodded. “I don’t know why but we share a very strong bond, he calls for me, the only word he says still is ‘Ma’, he has to see me before he’ll go to sleep, if he wakes up and I’m not there he cries. I’m not sure if it’s normal or what to do with him as he’s a Faerie.”

“I’m sure it’s normal.” Nasta said thoughtfully. “I’m sure I read that most Faerie babies do become more attached to their primary carer because they feel safe with them as they’re around them more.”

“We’re going to have to start putting him around the rest of you.” Harry said softly. “I don’t want him thinking that only I’m safe when all of you are as well.”

“We’ll sort it, love, for now, let’s just get them home and settled and then we can talk more about it later.” Nasta insisted.

It took three trips for them to get all of the babies home and all the stuff that they’d taken for their children too with only three of them and Harry’s abdomen muscles ached when he was on the second trip back to their home, he was carrying both Farren and Regan on his shoulders to get them home and into bed as quickly as possible and when he arrived in the living room he had to put them on the settee, get onto his knees, spread his legs and then massage his stomach to try and ease the pain that was even threatening to have him vomit.

“Are you alright?” Draco demanded as he flooed home, he dropped the three packed up travel cots he had been carrying and rushed to Harry.

Nasta flooed in just behind Draco with the remaining travel cots and two backpacks and he dropped them too and rushed to Harry where Draco was crouched in front of him.

“What happened?” He asked as he sat behind Harry and added his hands to the massage. The bigger, harder, firmer hands had Harry’s less effective hands slipping away and he went onto his hands and knees, lowering his chest and pushing his arse up and he sighed happily as those expert hands took away his pain.
“I think carrying both Farren and Regan was too much for my stomach muscles, I’m sorry.”

“You have nothing to be sorry for.” Draco told him firmly. “You’re still recovering and today has been busy and exciting, you need to rest now.”

“Draco, can you carry him up the stairs for me? I’ll leave the cots and bags where they are for now and sort it tomorrow. I’ll get Farren and Regan to bed.”

“I’m sorry.” Harry repeated.

“Stop apologising, love.” Draco told him as he got Harry into his arms and then stood up. “Your body is recovering from pregnancy and birth, that’s fine, you’re going to have a few wobbles, give yourself some credit, Harry.”

Harry just snuggled up into Draco’s arms and wrapped his own arms around Draco’s broad shoulders. He kissed a pale, baby smooth cheek and settled himself as he was carried up the stairs.

“I love you.” He said sincerely.

“I love you too; now let’s get you into bed.”

Harry laughed at that and they met Max, who was, surprisingly, changing the bed sheets.

“Did you have a little solo accident?” Harry teased.

Max blushed. “No!” He stressed. “Ave spit up on me when I was burping her on the bed, some got on the covers, so I thought it best to change them.”

“Good, Draco would have given you the cold shoulder for a month for chancing leaving them on.” Harry giggled.
Draco went to dump him on the bed, then he seemed to remember that Harry had been hurt and that was why he was carrying him, so he gripped Harry’s body again, but the aborted movement had him overbalancing and they both tumbled onto the bed.

“Are you alright? Did I hurt you?” Draco asked.

“I feel like I’m missing something, what happened?” Max asked concernedly as he watched them.

“I had a moment that’s all. My incision site hurt for a few minutes when I tried carrying Regan and Farren together. Nasta is being over protective and had Draco carry me up to bed, which I like, but I don’t think it’s going to end in the way that I like the most.”

“Of course not.” Max said as he pulled Harry’s shirt off for him and examined the residual scarring. “Sex right now will crunch up your belly and your stomach muscles, which is exactly what you don’t want.”

“Max is right.” Nasta said as he came into the bedroom sans Regan and Farren. “No sex tonight, love.”

Harry sighed. “Okay, fine, but only because I’ve already had lots of sex this morning on top of an amazing day and I really am in quite a bit of pain.”

“Do you need a pain reliever?” Max asked even more concernedly as he undid Harry’s belt and pulled off his trousers, and not in a way that usually ignited Harry’s blood either as he fought off a grimace of pain.

“No, I just need some rest.” Harry said as he snuggled under the covers in just his boxer shorts and one by one Max, Draco and Nasta joined him. “How’s Blaise?” He asked sleepily.

“He’s fine; he’s fast asleep in the spare bedroom.” Max answered through a yawn. “Now get to sleep, when I wake up for the bottle feeds I’ll check on him too, but he should be fine until the morning.”

Valentine’s had been a wonderful day, even though it hadn’t ended all steamy and sweaty under the sheets, but Harry didn’t mind. He couldn’t help that he had given birth recently or that his body was still healing. He had enjoyed his day though and despite the lack of sex during the night, he’d had more than enough that morning, and the lack of sex at the end of the romantic day didn’t bother him in the slightest as he had never felt more loved, nor more in love than he was in that moment as he lay snuggled into Draco’s bulk with Max pressed right up against his back and Nasta’s hand over Max’s waist and between him and Draco, cupping the remaining bulge of his belly, his fingers drawing sleepy, soft patterns over the scar tissue. It sent him right to sleep in a warm bubble of love and contentedness. The only thing missing was of course Blaise, but that couldn’t be helped tonight, Blaise would sleep better on his own and being so far away from Eva and Ave, he was less likely to wake up with his head feeling like it was being torn in two. Harry smiled as he stillled himself and let his body relax. He lived for days like today, where he felt loved by the men that he had chosen as his mates, where he truly felt like he had his own family to love and to cherish for the rest of his life. He lived for his family and anything that threatened his family was going to meet a very painful, messy end.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Today we celebrate three years! Yep, The Rise of the Drackens is exactly three years old today and was first posted up, exactly three years ago today, where the hell did the time go?

Now to clear some things up, this fic is not abandoned, I do not have writer’s block, I’m not purposefully denying you chapters to ruin your day or any other of the ridiculous things that have been thrown around since the last update. Straight up, pure and simple, I just did not want to write for it, it’s as simple as that. I didn’t want to write for this fic, so I didn’t and while I’ve been away, my stress levels have plummeted and some of my back burner fics have been getting some much needed attention, which has overall made me very happy.

Just because I don’t update for a few weeks or even a few months, does not mean I’m abandoning the fic or that I have writers block, it means I’m doing other things, focusing on other stories and I would like for you to respect that as readers, though I know that a handful of readers either won’t respect me as a person and will carry on their selfish behaviour, or they just won’t read this message. I’m very happy to know that more than half of you will and do respect me and see me as a person and I thank you all for that, this update is for all of you who have waited patiently while I updated Damaged Bodies before I came back to this story, love you all, lovelies.

Updated A/N: Thankfully I wrote this chapter a few weeks ago in preparation for the anniversary, my Grancha is very ill in the hospital at the moment and he was taken in on the 11th of May, we were told on the 14th that the fluid on his lungs contained Asbestos. We found out on the 15th that he had lung cancer and that he was looking at weeks, not months, we’ve been told not to expect him to live long past August at the most, so once again lung cancer is going to claim another of my family members and my Grancha is the closest family member I’ve had to see suffer in this way. Between comforting family members and visiting him in hospital, I’ve been drained, completely wrung out and trying to deal with my own fluctuating emotions.

I’m not going to be around much for the foreseeable future, which will only worsen when my Grancha dies. It’s unfair perhaps on you readers, but when I took the break from The Rise of the Drackens to write for Damaged Bodies, I had no idea that in just a few weeks my Grancha would be critically ill in hospital and told that he has terminal lung cancer. That’s just the way it is though, so make this chapter last, I doubt you’ll be getting another one off of me for a while and that goes for all of my stories, not just this one.

Anyway, I think that’s it. I’ve decided that the Myron/Harry will be a side story, I’ve got the first part of that written, so that’ll be out soon as it’s pre-written and I don’t think there’s anything else that needs to be said now, I hope you enjoyed the chapter,

StarLight Massacre. X
Faerie Stories

Chapter Notes

Last Time

He had enjoyed his day though and despite the lack of sex during the night, he’d had more than enough that morning, and the lack of sex at the end of the romantic day didn’t bother him in the slightest as he had never felt more loved, nor more in love than he was in that moment as he lay snuggled into Draco’s bulk with Max pressed right up against his back and Nasta’s hand over Max’s waist and between him and Draco, cupping the remaining bulge of his belly, his fingers drawing sleepy, soft patterns over the scar tissue. It sent him right to sleep in a warm bubble of love and contentedness. The only thing missing was of course Blaise, but that couldn’t be helped tonight, Blaise would sleep better on his own and being so far away from Eva and Ave, he was less likely to wake up with his head feeling like it was being torn in two. Harry smiled as he stillled himself and let his body relax. He lived for days like today, where he felt loved by the men that he had chosen as his mates, where he truly felt like he had his own family to love and to cherish for the rest of his life. He lived for his family and anything that threatened his family was going to meet a very painful, messy end.

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

Chapter Ninety-One – Faerie Stories

-

It seemed that Harry had forgotten how very hard it was to have such young babies. Either that or his girls were ten times more demanding than his previous six children had been and at the moment he was leaning more towards the latter.

They were a little over a month old and they cried for everything, even for absolutely no reason and Harry was sure that they even cried when the house got too quiet as well.

“Mama, de canna no baba bana.”

Harry picked up Tegan and sat her on his lap.

“I know, sweetheart, your little sisters are very loud aren’t they?” He said as another high pitched shriek came from upstairs. “They take after your Daddy Max.”
“Dada Ma.” Tegan repeated and Harry kissed her lovingly.

“Yes baby, your Daddy Max. It seems he makes well behaved little boys, not so much well behaved little girls.”

“We’ll have to ban him from having any more girls.” Blaise agreed as he swaggered into the room, dressed to perfection in one of his brand new sets of work robes.

He’d finally found somewhere willing to take on an inexperienced young man, just out of Hogwarts…well, several months out of Hogwarts now, but they had heard little else other than Blaise’s new job since he’d been owled the news that he’d gotten an apprenticeship position. Max had been right though, no one wanted to hire an inexperienced graduate, Blaise had only gotten a job after he’d been accepted for an apprenticeship.

Of course Harry was bursting with pride for his mate, especially as it made Blaise so very happy, but he needed to focus on more than just Blaise’s new job, especially with Nasta finally giving in and allowing Dain and Kailen to come and visit them and with Eva and Ave’s very first Dragon Pox vaccine later that day, he was stressed. He just knew that it was going to go worse than the four quintuplets fourth vaccine had gone last month. He was glad that they, and Braiden, didn’t need another one now until they were three years old, it was just Eva and Ave to sort out for the foreseeable future and Draco was already stressing about them being so unprotected.

“I don’t think banning him from having girls will work.” Harry said with a smile. “Not only is it actually impossible, but I want baby girls…they’re just so loud!”

“They’re healthy and have good lungs.” Draco commented from the armchair, where he was sat reading a book.

“They do. But I’ll still plug them up with dummies if it’ll help keep them quiet for a few minutes.” Harry laughed as he bounced Tegan on his knee.

“When are those meddling Faeries coming over?” Draco asked with a small sneer.

“After the hospital appointment.” Harry replied. “Now Blaise, have a good day, don’t get too stressed and enjoy yourself.” Harry told him as he stood up to peck his lips and held Tegan up for the same.
He shared a last hug with Blaise and then his mate was gone, half an hour early to his first day of his first ever job, joining Max, who was also already in work, and Nasta, who was only working a half day today so that he’d be home at midday in time for the girls’ vaccinations that afternoon.

“Just me and you now, Harry.” Draco commented.

Harry laughed. “You mean, me and you and eight babies?”

Tegan giggled and clapped her hands together. Harry smiled at his almost fifteen month old daughter, she was always laughing, though Max pointed out that it sounded more like a cackle. Harry flung a cushion at him every time he dared to say such a thing in his hearing range.

Braiden, his almost nineteen month old son, toddled to his leg and tugged on his trousers.

“Mama.”

“What do you want, Braiden?” He asked as he looked down at his sweet son.

Braiden lifted his arms up and Harry smiled, he bent down and picked him up and sat him on his other hip, cuddling him.

“Don’t overdo it.” Draco cautioned as he put his book down and came to take Tegan off of him, cuddling her in his own arms.

“I know, I know. It’s not like I picked up Braiden and Farren.” Harry sighed. “I am getting better and the scar is fading. I’ll be back to normal soon.”

“I know, just take it easy, please.” Draco told him, putting their foreheads together and rubbing their noses against one another, which made Harry smile. “I don’t want to see you hurt.”

Harry chuckled and pecked at Draco’s lips. “I’ll be fine. Now it’s almost nine in the morning, Blaise has just fed Eva and Ave, they’ll need a nappy change soon, I’ll cut up some apples for a snack for the kids and then I’ll start on lunch.”
Draco groaned as he sat back on the settee with Tegan. “What did I just say about overdoing it? Just calm down. I’ll sort out Eva and Ave and the kids’ midmorning snack, you just stop stressing so much or you’ll do yourself an injury.”

Harry blushed a little. “Sorry. I think maybe we need a calendar or a cork board or something so that we know what we’re doing, I need everything written down just so that I know that I’m not forgetting anything; I’d feel awful if I forgot something important just because we have too much to focus on and some things end up slipping through the net.”

Draco closed his book, which he’d left open on the arm of the chair and put it on the side table before picking up a piece of parchment and a self-inking quill and he wrote down a quick schedule of the day while Harry was distracted by Braiden and their quintuplets, as Tegan had immediately moved off of the settee and gone back to Harry when he’d sat back down.

He smiled as he watched Harry being surrounded by five adorable, sweet children. He stood up and checked on Leolin, who was scowling fiercely up at the floating shapes above him, tracking them with his golden eyes. He almost looked like he was sneering and Draco smirked, ruffling the slowly thickening, black hair gently.

He handed the piece of parchment to Harry and went to check on Eva and Ave, he didn’t want to disturb them, they were quiet at the moment and he’d like to keep it that way, but he needed to make sure that they didn’t need a nappy change after Blaise had fed them.

Little feet stomping on the wooden floorboards of the hallway behind him had him peeking over his shoulder to see Regan toddling after him as fast as his bandy legs could take him, a toothy grin on his face.

“Where do you think you’re going, hm?” He asked as he picked his little boy up and sat him on his hip.

He carried Regan up the stairs and went into his bedroom, where Ave and Eva were sleeping peacefully in their bedside bassinets. He had only kept Regan with him because he was their most quiet child, after Leolin that was, and he wasn’t likely to wake the girls up with an ill-timed screech.

He peeked in on the sleeping girls, checked their nappies and changed Eva’s when he found her wet, watched avidly by a fascinated Regan.

“I think it’s time for a midmorning snack now, do you want some apple?” He asked as he picked Regan back up and swung him over his shoulder, getting a soft giggle for his efforts.

He went back down the stairs, closing the baby gates as he went.
“Oh there he is! I was panicking as I couldn’t find him. This schedule is brilliant though, Draco, thank you.” Harry said as he took Regan from him and Draco just smirked and nodded before he went to cut up four apples for the kids to nibble on before their lunch.

Harry snuggled Regan and went back into the living room, where the TV was set onto an infant cartoon channel that was more than a little freaky, but Braiden was engrossed with it, standing against the coffee table, rocking from foot to foot in an adorable little dance to the music as he watched the creepy cartoons.

“You’ll give them bloody nightmares putting that on.” Draco complained as he came in with Farren toddling excitedly behind him.

“They like it and it’s not too bad, just a little…strange.” Harry defended as Draco put a bowl of thin apple slices down on the coffee table. There were four different varieties of apples and they were all different colours, from a solid dark red, a crisp, fresh looking green, a red and green mix and a green that was almost a yellow. Harry smiled approvingly.

Farren grabbed a handful and Harry took a hold of his wrist gently and pulled up his best serious face. “One at a time, Farren.” He said as he held up a single finger and Farren pouted at him, but he used his other hand to pick up one slice from his handful and he used his several teeth to bite into it happily.

“Good boy.” Draco praised as he bent to kiss Farren’s brown hair.

Harry made sure that all the kids had at least one apple slice before he picked up Leolin and went into the kitchen with him, sitting him in a soft seated highchair so that he could recline backwards as he wasn’t good at sitting up unaided and he started on making lunch for his children and for him, Draco and Nasta before they’d have to get the girls ready for their first injections.

Myron and Richard were coming over to babysit for them while they went to the hospital and Aneirin would be over after that for Dain and Kailen’s afternoon visit. He sighed…they were taking on too much, he was sure of it, and now that Blaise had a job to fill in the void as he tried to start up his own business, it was just him and Draco who were unemployed and Draco had started making hints that he was going to start searching for a job soon, which would leave him on his own on some days with all eight of his babies, hell by the time that Draco found a job he could even have nine or more babies and he had to breathe deeply to calm the panic and the stress. Everything would be alright, they had a huge extended family that they could rely on if things got difficult, they wouldn’t truly be alone, even if it seemed like they were at times.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X
Harry had just finished washing the dishes from lunch when Myron and Richard flooed over and Harry happily hugged them both tightly, absorbing the warm comfort that they offered and he pulled back with a sigh.

“Thank you for doing this for us.”

“It’s not a problem, Harry.” Myron told him seriously, pulling him back into another hug and patting his back.

“Well Nasta is having a quick shower, Draco is getting the girls ready and the others are everywhere!” Harry said.

Richard laughed. “Got it. Are they down for their naps?”

Harry nodded and then moved his hand to the reclining high chair where Leolin was sat grumpily. “All of them but Leolin, but then he had a good night last night, he slept for almost nine hours straight, it frightened all of us half to death when we realised that he hadn’t cried for his one O’clock feed or his six O’clock feed, but when we checked, he was just sleeping, but now he doesn’t want to take any naps.”

“That’s okay, you leave him to us, we hardly spend enough time with Leolin because the other five are so active. It’ll be good for the three of us.” Myron told him and Harry watched as Richard pulled faces at Leolin, who scowled even harder.

“The wind will change and your face will get stuck like that.” Richard told Leolin seriously.

Harry looked at Myron and shook his head. “You got one and I got one, we can comfort one another later, after I get back from the hospital and before those pissing Faeries come over.”

“Language.” Myron chastised him with a smirk, but he pulled him into that huge, thick body and gave him a squeeze. “Richard and Max aren’t too bad…though I have to lump Caesar into that group too, you just have to know a good muffling charm so you can’t hear them.”

Harry chuckled. “I do know a good muffling charm.”
“Are you ready?” Nasta asked, his black hair was still damp, but he was dressed and ready to go.

“Draco is still fussing with the girls. He’s put them both in sleeveless dresses so their arms are easily accessible, but now he’s worried about them being too cold so he’s digging around for cardigans and he’s complaining about the lack of matching shoes.”

Nasta let out a long suffering sigh and he turned back the way he’d come and went past the downstairs bathroom to go upstairs to sort out Draco and the girls.

“He looks overly stressed.” Richard commented casually.

Harry hummed softly. “He is...he’s got the most dangerous job out of all of them, he works long hours, he always has a ton of paperwork to do and still he insists that he does the night feeds. He’s doing too much but he pulls top dominant over us, so we can’t do anything about it. I’ll be much happier when the girls start sleeping through the night, but from the way they act thus far, they’re never actually going to sleep through the night.”

“Why do you think that?” Myron asked concernedly.

“They cry for the sake of crying.” Harry told them as he ran a hand through his hair. “They cry when it’s too loud, they cry when it’s too quiet, they cry if they think they haven’t been fussed over for a while and then they cry for no reason that we can figure out. They’re nonstop cryers.”

“I’m glad you’re taking them with you.” Richard laughed.

Harry rolled his eyes and finished cleaning the last of the kitchen before he picked up Leolin and cradled his little boy gently as he took him into the living room.

“We’re going to be late if those two don’t hurry up.” Harry grumbled checking the clock concernedly.

“Pass Leolin to me and go and see what’s taking them so long, surely these vaccinations are more important than if they’re wearing shoes that match their dresses and cardigans.” Myron told him.
Harry heaved out a breath and nodded, handing Leolin over carefully and he went up the stairs to check on what the hell his two mates were doing.

He found them in their master bedroom, a baby apiece dressed like they were going for professional photo shoots.

“What is taking you two so long? We’re going to be late!” He hissed. “Get those girls in their carrycots and get downstairs!”

“It’s too cold for them to go out barefoot and I can’t find any shoes for them.”

Harry made a soft, angry noise in his throat, he strode to the dresser and pulled out two pairs of tiny white, frilly socks, he jerked them apart and wiggled them onto his daughters’ little feet, folding over the frilly tops.

“There…their feet are covered, they don’t need shoes at a month old!”

“Are you okay?” Nasta asked him, putting Ave into his one arm and pulling him into cuddle against his other side.

“I just…I don’t want them to miss this appointment and we’re pushing it here, we have ten minutes to get to the hospital.”

“What?!” Draco raged, looking at his pocket watch. “Our appointment is for…”

“The appointment is for one O’clock, Draco…it’s ten to. It doesn’t matter what they are wearing, how they’re dressed or if their bloody cardigans and socks match their dresses, it’s not important, these vaccinations are important and out of everyone I would have expected you to be more concerned with their health over their appearance.”

“I lost track of the time, of course I care more about these inoculations! I made the appointment for them!”

“Then get Eva into her carrycot and let’s go before we miss it!”
Draco actually listened and Harry took a moment to rest on Nasta, before he took Ave from his arms and followed Draco down to the living room, where his mate was strapping Eva up securely.

“You have six minutes to get to the hospital.” Richard supplied helpfully.

Harry glared at him. “We’re going now.” He hissed as he made sure Ave’s straps were secure and tight around her little body.

Draco picked up one carrycot and Nasta the other, leaving Harry with the already packed and ready nappy bag. He didn’t think they’d need it, but it was better to be safe after all.

The hospital was loud, crowded and busy and they couldn’t find a place to sit down in the waiting room after they’d checked in so they had to make do with standing, which played hell with Harry’s stomach muscles as he shifted from foot to foot agitatedly.

“Rest against me.” Nasta encouraged him and he pulled Harry until he was taking a bit of weight off of his own feet and he sighed, realising that this was why he was so short tempered today, he was in pain and he hadn’t even realised it.

An Orderly in her pale yellow robes called them at almost fifteen minutes past one and that annoyed him too, if they had an appointment for one O’clock, why were they called almost fifteen minutes after their appointment time? He didn’t care how busy they were, they should stick to their given appointment times!

Healer Nasser was waiting for them and Harry almost sighed at seeing the friendly face. If it had been anyone else, he may have just lost his temper, as irrational as it might have been.

“So these are the little ones causing all the fuss?” He said with a smile. “Harry Potter, pregnant for a third time in less than two years, at just eighteen years old, even though he already has six children, what a terrible scandal!” He teased and Harry smiled.

“What can I say, I don’t like contraception and I’m definitely not giving up the night time activities.”

Healer Nasser laughed and he patted the bed with the sides pulled up. Taking a breath, Harry unstrapped Eva from her carrycot and he laid her down on the bed, taking her one arm out of her cardigan ready for the Dragon Pox injection.

Healer Nasser did a few cursory checks on her before he started; checking her length, weight, head circumference, colouring, heartbeat and he took a peek in her eyes, mouth and ears.

“She’s in very good health, she’s a good weight too, wonderful. Is this the oldest twin?”

Harry nodded and the Healer turned and wrote a few more notes down in his file.

“Right then, let’s get this little girl vaccinated.”

Harry watched as the Healer unwrapped a new needle, took out a tiny little bottle of liquid and pushed the needle into the bottle, drew up the liquid and then he turned to Eva. Harry took another steadying breath and rolled his daughter slightly onto her side and he held her arm out for the needle, which slid easily under her soft, pale skin. Healer Nasser slowly depressed the plunger and then withdrew the needle and only at that moment did Eva open her mouth and scream.

Ave woke up and she screamed with her sister as Harry quickly passed Eva over to Draco and picked up Ave, letting Healer Nasser check her over, check her measurements and everything that he needed to before he prepared the injection and Harry held Ave still as she was vaccinated.

Her cries picked up a higher pitch and when Harry picked her up to comfort her, she vomited over his chest, which he ignored as unimportant.

“Thank you, Healer.” Harry said as he watched Healer Nasser discard the used needles into a bright yellow box and then pop the empty vaccine bottles into a white bin on the floor.

“My pleasure, Harry. Despite the tears and the screams, I’m happy to see two new little girls vaccinated against such a vile disease.”

“Have you had an increase in people vaccinating their children?” Draco asked curiously.

Healer Nasser nodded happily. “Yes, we’re seeing an increase every month in those vaccinating their children, it’s common knowledge that your oldest ones are now fully vaccinated and only need booster jabs from now on, so that you’ve given them the full course of vaccine, it’s waking more and more people up to the dangers and the need to have their children vaccinated. I’ve waited a long time to see this happen.”

“Good.” Draco said as he grimaced as Eva’s snotty nose came into contact with his shirt. He quickly got out a handkerchief and dug carefully around in her nose to clear it for her.
“I’ll see you back in two months for their next dose, here is your appointment card. If you can’t make it, just see the welcome witch at the front and she’ll change it for you or if it becomes a problem at a later date, then you can owl the hospital for a different appointment.”

Harry checked the card and handed it to Nasta as he cradled Ave tightly to his chest, ignoring the spit up milk on his shirt for now; there was nothing that he could do about it as his twin daughters continued to scream.

“Do you want to use my private floo? I can’t imagine you wanting to go back out into that waiting room with those two.”

“That would be very appreciated, thank you.” Nasta spoke quietly.

They were led into an office next door and they flooed back home quickly, Eva and Ave still screaming their lungs out after their new and very unappreciated ordeal.

Two hours later and Harry was clinging to Max who had just fed him a wonderful potion which had eased away all of his pain and he could finally relax as his tight, tensed muscles melted with the blissful effects of the potion.

“You should have taken this a couple of hours ago, why didn’t you?” Max clicked his tongue at him as he put the stopper back into the vial and slipped the empty bottle back into his potions case, zipping up the top securely.

“We were at the hospital before I even realised that I was in pain and when we got home we were just trying to settle down Eva and Ave and that took over an hour and their arms are already bruising. I just didn’t think to stop and take it.”

Max shook his head and cuddled him tighter, laying kisses all down his neck and he brushed his hair and his jumper aside to kiss over his shoulder. Harry chuckled breathily.

“Stop that, the kids will be awake soon and Dain and Kailen will be here in an hour or so.”
“I don’t care; you’re too delicious and irresistible. I have to have a taste of you and this luscious skin.”

Harry smiled and cuddled into Max, tilting his head to give him more access to his neck. Eva and Ave were fast asleep after their hour long crying fit, the napping babies would be waking up soon and Leolin was sleeping peacefully, they had come home to find him, like a blot on Myron’s massive chest, sleeping soundly with Richard cuddled in to Myron’s side, a huge arm holding him in place as he stroked a hand slowly and rhythmically down Leolin’s tiny back. It had been so sweet, so domestic that Harry had ordered them not to move an inch as he pushed Ave onto Nasta and then urged him and Draco to hurry Eva and Ave out of the room so that he could take a few quick photographs.

Myron and Richard had gone soon after they’d come home. They were visiting Ashleigh in the hospital today, which is why Harry had been so agitated about the delay to their scheduled appointment time, and Harry had placed Leolin down so that he could carry on sleeping and he’d gone to help Nasta and Draco with the twin girls. Now everything was silent for the minute as he took a stolen moment with Max. It didn’t last long.

Nasta soon came into the room with a yawning Braiden on his hip, his little face still sleep creased from his cot sheets and his hair all mussed up. Harry smiled adoringly at him as he took Braiden off of Nasta and cradled him in his arms and Braiden just snuggled in for a short while before he woke up a bit more.

It took twenty minutes for the quiet calm to turn into piercing screeches, giggles, shouts and the sounds of five happy toddlers at play, Leolin was awake and he was sat on Harry’s lap, the both of them reclined backwards, both watching the room as it descending into complete chaos. It was this chaos that Aneirin flooed into just five minutes later.

“Well they all look happy and boisterous.” He laughed. “How are the girls?”

“They’re sleeping peacefully, but their arms are already bruising.” Harry shook his head. “They hated it, they cried harder and longer than any of the others did.”

“From the noise I came home to, I thought that the Healer had cut off their arms at the elbow.” Max said with a grin. “Instant headache.”

“It was that bad?” Aneirin asked concernedly.

Harry nodded. “It was, we’ve all had to take headache relievers it was that bad. I can still hear their screeches ringing in my ear. Eva wiped her nose on Draco, so he’s very unhappy and Ave threw up all over my front.”
“But they’re okay now?”

Harry nodded. “A bit flushed and a bit warm with the after effects of the vaccine, but they’re both sleeping now.”

“And how is this little boy doing?” Aneirin asked, sitting next to Harry and cupping Leolin’s cheek with a gentle hand.

“He’s doing wonderfully well. He slept for a full nine hours last night and refused to have a midmorning or an afternoon nap after his lunch, but he did fall asleep on Myron and he stayed asleep for a little under two hours, so he’s all refreshed and ready to meet and greet…not that he looks very happy about that, but then he’s always scowling these days.”

“He’s an adorable little Unseelie.” Aneirin praised before his attention was taken by Calix racing over on his hands and knees and rearing back on his knees and lifting his arms up. “Well hello, Calix, how are you big boy?”

“Big boy.” Calix repeated with a wide grin as he was picked up and sat on Aneirin’s lap.

“Well that’s new, how long has he been talking like that?”

“Two days, I sent you an owl, but it must still be travelling.” Harry said with a gooey smile. “He only does it with certain words and phrases, like big boy, good boy, get down, sit down, no and bye.”

“Bye.” Calix said, flopping a little hand at the wrist in an imitation of a wave.

“Bye? Where are you going?” Harry asked him with a smile.

Calix smiled back and curled up with a laugh as Harry tickled him.

“I thought I heard you.”
Harry turned to the door to see Nasta standing tall, dressed casually, but neatly. He was smiling at his Father, but there was a tension that he couldn’t quite hide at his eyes and the corners of his mouth.

“What are you stressing for?” Aneirin asked. “Everything will be fine, Nasta. They just want to fuss over him a little.”

“It’ll be just them, though? Just them.”

“You know that two guards have to escort them, they’re members of the court.”

Nasta’s teeth ground together and Harry slipped Leolin to Max and stood to go and comfort his angry, agitated mate.

“They’re coming for a private, personal visit, not on court business!”

“You know it doesn’t matter…besides this could be classed as court business, Leolin is of great interest to the court after all.”

“I don’t want my home invaded by guards! They’re supposed to be family, they should come here as family!”

Aneirin sighed. “I know, I get the feeling that they don’t trust us yet…the dirty dragons may turn into beasts and injure them while they visit.”

Nasta snorted. “I will injure them if they don’t watch their step.”

“Just…please, don’t start anything.” Harry begged. “I want them to see Leolin and then I want them gone, I don’t want them here for more than an hour. If you start arguing they could be here all afternoon.”

“They damn well won’t.” Nasta all but hissed.
“Max, tea, please.” Harry begged in fragments.

Max stood up and he handed Leolin back to Harry before leaving the room. Harry hoped he had gotten his hidden message and put a drop of calming draught in everyone’s tea. He couldn’t take any more stress.

Harry got Nasta to sit down and he put Leolin onto him, if anything would assure that Nasta would relax and calm himself down it was giving him one of the kids, Leolin especially as he was more delicate and vulnerable and their Drackens instinctively knew that.

Max came in quickly and he gave Harry a long look and Harry almost sighed as he fell on his cup of honey tea. Max had gotten his message and he’d put the calming draught in the tea.

Nasta and Aneirin both drank their tea and nibbled the biscuits—one of which was swiped by a very quick, opportunistic Farren, who had toddled quickly away and hidden, badly, behind a chair to suck and gnaw on it.

Harry laughed at him with his mates and Aneirin, the terrible tension broken. He shook his head softly.

“He’s crazy.” He said with a smile.

“What do you expect; he was made between me and you.” Max said.

Harry gave him an affronted look. “Me? You’re saying this is my fault? Oh no, I won’t take equal blame for that with the likes of you. Calix is my baby, Farren is all you.”

Max roared with laughter and it amused Harry that four babies turned and joined in with their Daddy Max without knowing what they were even laughing at.

Calix crawled from Aneirin, over Nasta, who held Leolin up securely as he let Calix pass over him, and then over Max and he sat himself straddling Harry’s lap. Little hands grabbed his chin and Harry bent down to receive the wet, dribbly, smacking kiss that Calix gave him and he didn’t even wipe a hand across his mouth, he’d done that just once and Calix had cried for ten minutes and then ignored him for half the day.

“What does my baby boy want?” Harry cooed as he wrapped his arms around Calix and rocked them both back and forth.

Calix giggled and clapped his hands. Harry smiled and he cuddled Calix tightly. It was hard to believe that his quintuplets were almost at the same age that he had been when he’d lost his parents and had been orphaned thanks to the attack by Voldemort, it was even harder to believe that Braiden... was older that that.

He immediately stubbed out the thought process of thinking of his children without him and his mates there for them. It wasn’t worth thinking about, he would be there for them and his children would never live the same life that he had as a child. He would never allow it.

“You’ve gone all morose, are you okay?” Max asked as he cupped Harry’s chin and tilted it back so that they could have eye contact.

“Just thinking too hard.” Harry sighed as he rested against Max.

“This visit is going to be fine.” Aneirin assured him.

Harry nodded. “I know, I’m not worried about anything happening, I just can’t switch my brain off.”

“A lot is happening in these next few months.” Nasta agreed with a soft exhale.

Harry swallowed hard as he was reminded forcibly that his court appearance against his own family was in just three months’ time. Richard had everything ready, he’d finally gotten all of his evidence sorted out and his case set up and he was ready to go into a court room and rip the Dursleys to pieces over their past actions, but they knew that the Dursleys also had a lawyer who would have spent the time that they had been gathering evidence instructing the Dursley family on what to do and what to say to get them the lowest possible sentence. It was galling.

He was distracted by Draco coming into the room with both Eva and Ave, who were both wide awake and both mewling unhappily.

“What sort of noise is that?” Max asked as he stood up and went to check on his two daughters.

“The grizzly sort of noise.” Harry replied as he played with Calix’s hair. “Like I said, they’re not happy unless they’re the centre of attention, they grizzle when they’re not.”

“Well, do they want anything?” Max asked curiously.

“They’re not wet, they’re not due a feed and they’ve just woken up from a nap.” Draco told them.
“How are their arms?” Harry asked.

Draco pulled a face. “Badly bruised and getting worse too.”

“Maybe that’s why they’re grizzling.” He said as he stood up with Calix cocked on his hip and made his way over to his girls.

He pulled the blanket from around their bodies until he could see their left arms, the one that the Healer had injected with the vaccine. The injection site was steadily going darker. He sighed.

“Get something to sooth the area, please. Keep it compressed, I heard that keeping the area compressed will help with bruising and recovery.”

“Mama, babas bad?” Calix turned and asked, looking at Harry to his little sisters with a frown.

“Yes Calix, they’re feeling a little poorly at the moment, but they’ll be okay.”

“Ma.”

Just one word, a soft, almost inaudible sound and Harry kissed Calix, placed him on the floor where he crawled off as fast as he could go to where Braiden was playing with several wooden blocks and Harry turned to Leolin, who was staring at him intently from Nasta’s lap.

Harry picked him up carefully, still supporting the back of his head and his neck and he kissed him too and then cradled him in his arms.

“Ma.” Leolin repeated.

“I still think it’s astounding that he’s talking so early.” Aneirin said proudly.

“He’s come on so well.” Harry agreed as he smiled at Leolin, who caught sight of it and grinned widely back with his toothless mouth. “He’s grinning at me again!”
His mates and Aneirin all came to peek at him and they just caught the grin before Leolin saw them and scowled so hard his eyebrows furrowed down.

“He’s so adorable and his puppy love with you is so cute.” Max said.

All of them stopped when the floo warning sounded and announced a visitor who wasn’t tied in to their wards. Harry sat down with Leolin and cradled him as Max stood in front of Harry and Nasta went to stand opposite him to protect their playing children, Draco put Eva and Ave down into their bassinets and stood in front of them as Aneirin tensed, ready to protect his son, sons-in-law and his grandchildren.

Warren flooed through first and he smiled at them warmly, greeting them like old friends and Harry eased down. He liked Warren; he had always been kind to them and helpful too and Harry was happy to see him. Nasta however growled when Dain flooed through after Warren, followed by Kailen and then lastly another guard. The same one who had come to visit the last time, the one that had been rude to them, the one that none of them liked and hadn’t wanted to see again.

“Thank you for coming.” Harry said when the silence stretched on and on uncomfortably. “Take a seat.”

“You’re not pregnant this time.”

“No, I gave birth a month ago.” Harry said with narrowed eyes. “I’m still recovering and I’m still sore, so sit down.”

Dain and Kailen acquiesced without another word and sat down together on the adjacent settee. Warren and the other guard took up positions behind them both, standing behind the settee.

Of course Braiden immediately wanted to know what was happening and who the new people were. He stood up and toddled to the coffee table, he studied the new arrivals intently, making sure that they were actually new and that he hadn’t seen them before, before he looked to Harry with a pouty frown.

“Mama?” He questioned as he pointed to the four people on the settee. The Faeries watched him back even more intently, insanely curious. Faerie babies didn’t walk or talk before they were five or even six years old in some cases; it must have been strange for them to see Braiden doing both at a little over a year old.
“These are our guests, Braiden; they’ve come to see us and your brother, Leolin.”

“Baba in.” Braiden nodded. He toddled around the table and then walked from the table to the settee, where he climbed up and sat straight on Kailen’s lap, watched by four astounded Faeries.

Braiden proceeded to strike up a conversation with Kailen, who had no idea what to do and he rushed to support Braiden and appeared confused as to what he was supposed to say in relation to Braiden’s conversation and what he was supposed to do as he hurried to support Braiden’s head and neck, only to have his hand smacked away angrily by Braiden.

“Braiden is very bold and forward.” Harry said with a smile. “He likes meeting new people and he always makes sure that our guests aren’t left out. Would you like some tea?”

“I…tea…yes. Tea would be lovely, thank you.” Kailen said as he tried to pull himself together and away from his undignified gawping at Braiden.

“How is little Leolin?” Dain asked.

Harry swallowed and he took a breath, he stood up and crossed the distance to Dain and he placed Leolin gently into his arms.

“Leolin is fine.”

“He has no signs of his hospitalisation?” Dain asked in surprised.

Harry shook his head. “None. His and Calix’s coughs have gone, they’re both breathing easier and their check-ups showed absolutely nothing amiss, they’re both fine.”

“Baba in!” Braiden greeted as he placed his hand on Leolin’s head. “Baba, no gee an habba ah.”

“That’s right, Braiden, Leolin is being held by our guest, this is Dain.”

“Ain.” Braiden repeated.
“And this is Kailen.”

“Aien.” Braiden nodded.

Braiden bent his head down and he kissed Leolin gently, before he slipped down off of Kailen’s lap, off of the settee and he toddled back to his brothers and sister and the toys.

“That…that is amazing.” Warren exclaimed, sounding as amazed as he claimed Braiden to be.

Harry laughed. “It must be so strange for you to see.”

Kailen nodded. “Yes…we knew that other species babies were more advanced, naturally, but actually seeing it, seeing this tiny little boy upright and walking, talking and actually understanding what is being said to him at, how old is he, eighteen moon turns? It’s…it’s…” Kailen shook his head, unable to find the word that he wanted to use to describe what he was seeing.

“Braiden is advanced for his age; he’s a Dracken child after all.” Nasta said tonelessly. “But even Leolin took partial Dracken blood.”

Four heads snapped to Nasta at that and then to Leolin, scrutinising him as if they would be able to see any imperfections or blemishes on him that would be a sign of his Dracken blood.

“How do you know?” Dain asked.

“Well he’s our child for starters; we know how he acts and what he does that he’s not supposed to be doing from the books that the court gave to us. He survived being premature and his lung infection for one thing, which points to him being stronger and more robust than full blooded Faeries.”

“That could be a coincidence, a wonderful miracle; it does not mean that he took Dracken blood.”

“Would you be so adverse to the idea if he had?” Aneirin asked sharply, giving them a solid, hard look.
“No, no!” Kailen assured. “It is just that Leolin surviving through his life’s hardships does not prove that he took his parents’ Dracken blood.”

“How about the fact that he understands us, recognises us or that he can talk at fourteen months old or that he’s been doing so for some months now? He first spoke when he was eight months old.” Nasta asked with a smug smirk.

“He…he can speak? At his age?!” The unknown guard asked incredulously.

“Yes, yes he can.” Nasta said proudly.

“This is ridiculous.” Harry sighed. “What the hell is your name?” Harry asked the unknown Faerie. “You’ve been here twice and I still don’t have a clue who you are, it’s rude.”

“Forgive us; this is Auric, one of the guards.” Kailen introduced, looking at the guard as if he was only just seeing him and he was of no importance, which really he wasn’t to Dain and Kailen, they were court members, two of only nine Faeries given such an honour out of the hundreds of Faeries living in and out of the Faerie city, the man behind them was merely a guard employed to be their bodyguard and to protect them with his life. A nobody. Warren it seemed registered more on their radar as he was a friend of theirs through Trefor if he’d understood what they’d told him correctly, this Auric apparently wasn’t anything other than a guard.

Max came back into the room with a tray of tea. He was using his previously unused tea set which included the little sugar bowl, the matching jug of milk and the matching patterned tea cups, saucers and teapot. Harry smiled because he knew that Max had been waiting for such an excuse to break it out and use it since he’d been given it almost four years ago as a gag gift by his brother, before they’d even become mates.

“What does Leolin say?” Dain asked curiously.

“Leolin!” Harry called, clapping his hands gently and waiting until he had his son’s attention before carrying on. “What do you want? Do you want to come here to me?”

“Ma.” He called out softly, one little hand rising up and out to Harry.
Harry hefted him up and kissed him softly.

“I love you, Leolin.”

Leolin held his chin in both hands and clenched his little fingers, his tiny nails pinching Harry’s skin.

“Ma.” He repeated quietly.

Harry laughed and sat down, Leolin sat on his lap and he turned him around to face the room and he held him upright, slightly reclined back to take the weight of his head, because though Leolin could now sit up with help and keep his head from flopping to either side, he couldn’t hold it up himself for very long and if they didn’t support his head, he toppled either forwards or backwards or to either side, even while he was being held.

“He can sit up?” Kailen asked in bewilderment as he saw Leolin sitting up.

Harry nodded proudly. “He’s getting better at it every day. He’s moving his arms and legs more co-ordinately now too.”

“He’s moving as well?”

“Braiden, sweetie, can you bring Leolin’s blue rattle to me please.” Harry asked loudly and clearly, emphasising the toy he wanted and it took Braiden a few moments to process what he had been asked and he turned and went digging through the torrent of toys covering the floor. He found the pale blue ring rattle that had been given to Leolin for his birthday, got himself back to his feet and he toddled over with it.

Braiden waved the toy with a happy giggle in front of Leolin and the frown that took over the Faerie baby’s face made him smile as Braiden giggled and waved the toy at his brother.

“Baba in, attle.” Braiden gurgled as he waved the toy harder; making the plastic beads inside it make the noise that Leolin liked so much.

Leolin giggled with his brother and he reached out for the rattle, which Braiden handed to his brother.

“You’re a good boy, Braiden and a good brother. I’m very proud of you and I love you.” Harry said.

“Kiss!” Braiden demanded.

Harry tilted Leolin sideways, bent down and pecked Braiden’s lips and then his oldest son was off, back to the baby group and the piles of toys they were making from their toy chest.

Harry tugged Leolin back upright and watched as Leolin carefully turned the rattle over in his hands, listening to the rattle make its clinking noise. Over and over and over he turned it, listening before it came up to his mouth and he bit it hard with his soft, pink gums, a tiny, tiny little tongue passed over it, wetting the hard plastic with copious amounts of dribble.

Harry stood and he passed Leolin over to Kailen this time, leaving his son on the Faerie’s lap as he made a cup of tea how he liked it, giving the tea a good squeeze of honey from the bottle on the tray before he sat back on the settee and savoured it, leaning into Nasta as he let the Faeries stare and gawp over his son, who was paying no attention to them as he focused completely on the rattle in his hands. He did notice that Max had sat on the floor, playing with their children happily, but he was sat directly in front of the fireplace, Harry didn’t think that that was a coincidence at all. He approved immensely.

“It…it’s strange.” Kailen said as he continued to stare at Leolin.

“What is?” Harry asked a little sharply.

“He’s so tiny, about the same size any normal Faerie baby would be at fourteen moon turns old, but his mental development is far superior to the level that usual Faerie babies are at this age. It’s amazing to see a Faerie baby acting in this way so young; it gives me hope that he will see adulthood.”

“It is obviously his tainted blood; he should not be allowed or exposed to other Faerie babes, he could infe…”

“You are not here for your opinions!” Kailen snapped hard and quick, furious and as dangerous as an enraged chimera. “Do not forget who I am and that this boy is of my family! That everyone in this room is family of Dain and I!”
Auric clenched his jaw and looked at the floor in furious embarrassment and humiliation at being publically chastened by a member of the court so venomously.

“Are we your family?” Nasta asked sceptically. “You two, who we hadn’t even heard of until Leolin was born and revealed as a Faerie?”

“You do not speak to members of the court that way!”

“You were just warned that you are not here for your opinions!” Dain spun to face Auric and he glared at him. “Keep your mouth shut; this is no business of yours.”

“What do you mean that you don’t believe that we are family?” Kailen asked as he cuddled Leolin tighter.

“As I said, we only heard about you when Leolin was born.” Nasta said bitterly. “You were very content to ignore me, my brother, my sister, my Father, my Uncle Idris, my Aunt Nerys, my grandfather Hywel…none of us have heard of either of you…in fact we had no clue that you were even part of our family or that Trefor had had an affair…you never even tried to get into contact with us!”

Dain and Kailen shared a long look and Kailen sighed sadly before nodding at Dain.

“We were embarrassed.” Dain admitted. “It’s not through lack of interest that we never got into contact with the children of Nesta and it wasn’t because he never had Faerie children either. We raised Kian and Daire, our little grandsons and we loved them fiercely, we loved our great-granddaughters, Prudence, Abigail and Kagan and our Nesta too, but…the pain we felt at Trefor’s loss, we never had time to grieve the loss of our lover and our six children. We put all of our focus; all of our attention was on raising Kian and Daire to the best of our abilities, and having never raised any young children before it was all new and a frightening experience and we were always worried about how we were doing, or if we were even doing it right. Narilla was a huge help to us both as all of our children came to us at eighteen, except for our youngest born daughter, who came to us at fourteen, but they all came to us when they were already grown, we saw a few of them as children, but it was never for long, so we needed the help to raise our grandsons, but when Kian and Daire were grown too…it…it…”

“It hit us quite suddenly that we were alone, that we had lost one that we loved so very much, that six of our children had been murdered by a man who should never have been near them in the first place. Trefor’s Husband, Jediah, was a controlling, abusive man and Trefor was so sweet and gentle, he obeyed his Mother, he obeyed his Husband, his one act of defiance was to fall in love with
“We loved Trefor.” Dain told them with his head held high and no hint of embarrassment over his declaration. “He came to us and he slotted between us so well that it was like the two centuries we had been lovers before him had never happened, like he had always been there between us. Losing all of our children with him…it ruined us, we only had our two grandsons left to us and when they were grown and off making their own families, that is when it hit us and…we couldn’t face anything or anyone.”

“So you shut them out.” Harry said softly.

Kailen sighed and he snuggled Leolin on his lap.

“It wasn’t so much shutting them out, we were still talking to them, still seeing them…but it, it became harder and harder the more that we pretended that everything was fine.”

“We had shut it out for so long as we cared for Kian and Daire that once we had given in and started to grieve, it got harder and harder to pull it back and keep it hidden until one day it all just boiled over.”

Kailen rested his head back against the settee and he closed his eyes. “We had seen Kian happily married to a human woman, he loved her so much that we didn’t dare try to stop him from marrying a human, he loved her so much that we knew that if it came down to it, it would be us losing out, not her, so we made sure not to put Kian in such a position. He and his Wife, they had three stunning daughters, Prudence, Abigail and Kagan and our little Daire had had his beautiful boy Nesta, who was growing up so fast, he was only just a teenager when we…when the grief became too much for me to take any more.”

“Once Kailen had started, I couldn’t support him, I could do nothing but join him and we started our long process of grieving for our lost family members, for the ruined shreds our family was left in when we should have still been creating beautiful children with Trefor, watching as our older children settled and started families of their own, but we couldn’t, we could only visit grave sites.”

“It took too long, far too long for the depression to disperse, the first decade was the hardest, where we couldn’t even sit in on court meetings and we were in danger of losing our seats. Sindri didn’t want to put us out of a job, he didn’t want to replace us, but our presence was needed in the court, our voices were needed for debates and we couldn’t even crawl out of our bed on most morns.”
“Yet we couldn’t allow ourselves or our ancestors to be so dishonoured as to be kicked out of the court, so we went back.” Dain said with a grimace of remembered pain. “We were listless, depressed and hurting so much that we couldn’t even take comfort in one another.”

“I got so bad that at my lowest I even hated the sight of Dain. I hated him for allowing Trefor to be our Fae, for letting him get pregnant with seven children who had all died or been killed, for leading us to this agonising pain. I couldn’t remember how happy we had been together, how wonderful our children had been, how much our family had flourished, now cut down to just us and two little boys, one who had seeded three daughters to a human woman and one who had seeded a lone son to carry on Trefor’s last name.” Kailen admitted, his gold eyes filled with tears. “Dain and I fought at least once every half a moon turn and even attacked one another and it almost destroyed our relationship and at points we almost killed one another in the process. I hated that we were so distant, yet I hated that Trefor and our children were dead even more, so I took it out on Dain and I hated him. We had told Trefor not to go to that funeral! Why should he have gone to that poisonous old woman’s funeral? She brought him nothing but pain and hate and hurt! She hated her own child, she sold him, a beautiful, kind, wonderful Fae, to a spiteful, evil human man three decades older than he was to be raped, abused and kicked about like a stray, unloved dog! Why did he have to go to her funeral?!”

“Because he obeyed her in everything except over us and the kids.” Dain said painfully. “When she died, he wanted to go and make his peace with her grave and the kids went with him, even if Delwyn, Neifion, Darin and Kyrin had only gone to spit on her grave site.”

“What happened?” Harry asked quietly.

“Jediah was lying in wait; he knew that Trefor would go to his Mother’s funeral. That evil cretin should have been dead a thousand times over, but Trefor never wanted him hurt. He always held us back when we would have torn his worthless head from his useless body. Trefor, in a fit of rare rage and courage in the face of the filth that had tried to sell our own fourteen year old daughter Keri, in front of the very man who had raped and beaten him so many times, he snapped and he told Jediah the truth of what he had done, the potions he had taken to ensure that he never conceived with him, that all of the children he thought were his own were in fact ours and had taken on his maiden name of Delericey over his Husband’s name of Constas. That filth went ballistic, he killed Trefor and then he killed all of our children, putting them under the body bind curse and killing them in turn, hoping to wipe out the Delericey name, before he then killed himself, denying us our chance of revenge and justice for his actions.”

“I wished he hadn’t…” Dain said breathing heavily, his hands clenched, his teeth gritted. “What I would have done to him to exact my vengeance, the pain I would have made him feel for every single tear and drop of blood that he made Trefor spill, for killing our children in selfish, cold blood just because they weren’t his…he still raised them until they were eighteen, Keri until she was fourteen, for him to just turn around and kill them all, even sweet Keri and our delicate Rhonwen, our defenceless, terrified daughters.”
Kailen reached over and kissed Dain on the mouth, the very first time that Harry had seen them show any sort of affection towards one another, they didn’t even hold hands or hug or even sit close together, there was a two inch gap between their hips and legs where he was practically sitting on Nasta’s lap he was that close to his top dominant mate.

“Calm yourself, Dain, this way of thinking is useless. He is dead, we got over all of that, we came out of it and we still have family.”

“What were you embarrassed about?” Harry asked them as respectfully as he could in the face of their pain.

“By the time we pulled ourselves back together and had fought off our depression, the little teenager Nesta was a fully grown man who was married to a wonderful man named Urien, who was of Dracken blood even though he wasn’t a Dracken himself, and they had had five children together, two of whom were Drackens, and their first born son, Dai, had even had his own son, Hywel, your Grandfather, Nasta. But all of Kian’s daughters had perished, one in a fire, one of illness and the other of suicide and Kian himself was dead and buried with his Wife. We kept up with all of you, loved you from afar, but we had been gone from Nesta’s life for over three decades, we had never met any of his children, or grandchildren, we felt embarrassed that it had taken us more than three decades to grieve, that we had sunk into depression for so long that we didn’t even know the people in our family anymore. That we had lost a boy we had loved fiercely without knowing about it, that we weren’t there to protect his daughters when it was needed.”

“So you ignored us?” Nasta asked.

Kailen sighed heavily. “It seems like we ignored you, but we kept up with everything that you did, we know all of your achievements and what you have done in your lives, we just never let on that we knew you. We thought it would come across as strange or even perverted if we let on that we were watching you all, but never approaching.”

“But when Leolin was born and he turned out to be a Faerie, you couldn’t hide from us, because we had to go to the city and we had to go to the court and the both of you sit on the court. You couldn’t hide anymore and you were randomly, out of the blue, suddenly confronted with the family that you felt alienated from because of your period of grief.” Harry nodded.

“Three decades was a long time, a very long time to be out of touch with our own family. Three whole decades.” Kailen said with a pained tone. “Everything had changed, the family had grown up, there had been several births, a few deaths, marriages, we didn’t know them anymore and at that time we felt that we had no right to intrude on their happy lives with our lingering misery. We still feel that way, the pain and the loss is always there and we are still miserable, we still feel like we have no right to intrude upon you all, as we did when we found out that you and Nasta had all but married. and started having children, another generation to our family that we felt that we could never approach. We wanted to meet you, to be a family, but we felt that we couldn’t, that we had no right to intrude after so much time had passed.”

“Until you found out about Leolin. You couldn’t hide from us when Aneirin took the news to the court or when Nasta and I brought him to the city, but when you realised that no one knew that you were related to the Delericey’s…you tried to get off onto the right foot by being extra helpful.”

The both of them nodded. “We had planned to wait, our thinking was that if we got to know you and then told you Trefor’s story of what had happened all those decades ago, to explain ourselves, then things might go smoother, but you found out before we had the chance.”

“That would have been my doing.” Aneirin cut in with a heavy sigh. “My brother Idris and I went hunting through the family archives and we found mentions of Daire being brought up by his paternal grandfathers with his older brother Kian, which had been listed down as you both. Idris and I worked out then that Trefor must have had an affair and that at least his eldest son Delwyn had been the son of one of you two, thus making Daire your grandchild and of our line, the main line of the Delericey family, essentially of your own line. We had no way of knowing the true story or what had actually happened or why, but we knew that it had happened for whatever reason.”

“Call Uncle Idris, he needs to hear this.” Nasta said as he stood up and left the room.

“He has every right to be angry with us.” Kailen said sadly to his lover as Dain all but deflated at Nasta’s exit.

“He isn’t angry; Nasta is a man of very few words.” Harry explained to them both. “He left because it’s almost time for our month old daughters to have a feed; he’s making up their bottles and giving himself time to digest everything that he’s just heard.”

“Why do you only pay attention to Leolin?” Max asked suddenly. “I know he’s a Faerie, but if you have been watching all of your family, then you do know that that includes all of these babies now, don’t you? Tegan and Regan, those two almost identical kids by there, are also Nasta’s blood children regardless that they have no Faerie blood and despite not sharing blood, Nasta sees every single baby here as his own, so really they’re all your several times great grandchildren.”

“We…we knew that he had two other blood children and that he saw all of these children as his own, he said as much in the city when he came to see the court with Harry and Leolin, we just feel a little…”
“Awkward.” Kailen supplied for Dain as he waffled a little trying to find a suitable word. “We feel awkward around them as we have only ever been around Faerie babes, so human babes and the babes of Drackens are an unknown to us, so we really do not know how to look after them or what they might need or want, so it felt best to us to watch them, but have no interaction with them, that way we can’t possibly harm or upset them.”

“What rubbish.” Harry snorted. He stood up, walked to his group of children in their mountain of toys and picked up Regan by the back of his dungarees and deposited him onto Dain’s back.

Regan screeched and wrapped his arms tight around Dain’s neck and started bouncing on him.

“The best thing about human and Dracken babies is how active and how strong they are.” Harry said with a smile. “As long as you use common sense and don’t start throwing them about, they’ll be fine, just watch your hair, some of them like pulling.”

Dain caught Regan and tugged him around the side of his body so that he was sat in his lap and Regan clapped his hands happily at the action.

“It is frightening to see them being played with so rough.” Kailen said with wide eyes. “But they are unhurt and happy still…even though they are so tiny, they are so active, it’s a…a conundrum!”

“Not really, this is just the difference between Faeries babies and other babies, don’t worry, you’ll be coming over every other Wednesday from now on, so you’ll learn quickly how to deal with them.”

“You’d…you’d let us have regular, prolonged contact with them all, not just Leolin?”

“Every single one of them. All eight so far and many more to come.” Harry nodded.

Harry found himself wrapped tight in two pairs of arms, Regan up by his neck, Leolin down by his chest and Harry laughed.

“It’s fine. You shouldn’t be embarrassed to have taken time to grieve and family should be with family. You have explained what happened and your thoughts and feelings, what you had both gone through and how strong you were to push off the grief that you felt to raise Kian and Daire to adulthood and I at least accept that and will allow you to be in the lives of your several times great grandchildren.”

“I feel the same way.” Nasta said simply and to the point as he walked in with two bottles and Farren toddling after him, hoping that he had a biscuit.

Nasta looked down at him and smiled, taking out a packet of Rusks from his pocket.

“Dada Ta, Usk!” Farren all but begged, latching onto Nasta’s leg and tugging on it.

Nasta opened the packet and handed Farren the biscuit and Farren squealed happily, dropping onto his bum so that he could eat his biscuit immediately.

“Make sure they all have just the one, I don’t want their dinner to be ruined.” Max told Nasta seriously.

“There are only five in a packet.” Nasta reminded him.

“I’m just saying.” Max said.

“I know you were, but I know not to ruin their dinners with snacks.”

“Don’t you take that tone with me.” Max growled.

“I’ll take any tone I like!”

“Will you two knock it off already before I throw you both out in the back garden.” Harry complained. “You sound like an old married couple.”

“I love seeing my nephew being kept on such a short leash.”
Harry turned and did a double take at the man standing tall next to Aneirin. He was absolutely gorgeous and Harry grinned.

“Well, Nasta certainly never told me about you!” Harry said as he went to greet the new man.

“I tell you about my Uncle and Aunt all the time.” Nasta replied confusedly.

“You never told me how gorgeous he was!” Harry denied as he cuddled right in to Nasta’s Uncle Idris, who laughed and shoved Harry’s head down while ruffling his black mop of hair. It was getting a bit too long again.

“And Aneirin and Nasta never told me how very beautiful you were, or how funny!” Idris replied in a deep, pleasant voice that had Harry grinning.

“Oh Nasta, how could you keep this man away from me for two years!”

“It has been two years hasn’t it?” Idris sighed. “It’s utterly criminal that it has taken me this long to come and see my new family members, are all these kids yours? Damn you boys are busy. Nye, you want to teach your son some control before they have so many kids they’ll have to start populating Mars.”

Max fell onto his back and laughed hard and Harry had to sit down, but both Aneirin and Nasta wore identical scowls.

“Merlin, you two are such serious killjoys! Where is my fun nephew? Sanex would have laughed at that. He always laughs at his cool Uncle Idris’ jokes. If I had a son then he would definitely be a copy of Sanex.”

Braiden made his way over curiously, toddling on unsteady, turned in feet, to see the new arrival.

“Has it really been so long that this little one is already walking? Damn I need to take more time off of work!”

Idris bent right down and scooped Braiden off of his feet, holding him under his arms and attacking his face with kisses, making eating noises while claiming that he was going to eat up all of Braiden and swallow his adorable, tiny feet whole, before cradling him in his one arm and tickling him mercilessly with the other.

“I honestly wondered what had gone wrong with Sanex and why he was so different to you and Aneirin. Now I know.” Harry replied as he watched and listened to Braiden screeching in utter delight, giggling and laughing, squirming and twisting.

“I hadn’t ever wanted to subject you or the kids to Uncle Idris, but I suppose it was going to happen eventually.” Nasta sighed.

“You act older than I am!” Idris complained. “Nye, you gave seed to a little old man!”

Max was beside himself with laughter, so much so that tears were streaming down his cheeks as he laughed so hard that no sound was escaping.

“Please tell me your Aunt isn’t like this too?” Harry pleaded.

“No, my Aunt Nerys is more level headed, though she scales the tallest buildings in the world as a hobby.”

Harry shook his head. “Crazy…all of them crazy.” He turned back to a horrified looking group of Faeries. “Maybe it was a good thing that you didn’t want to be involved with this family, I don’t blame you and I’m a part of it.” He laughed.

“Is that little boy, Braiden…is Braiden alright?” Warren asked concernedly.

Harry turned back to find Idris dangling Braiden upside down by his ankles, Braiden screeching in downright joy, his shoulder length black hair sticking straight down as he wiggled as Idris pretended to bite his belly, blowing raspberries on his bare skin as Braiden’s shirt fell down to reveal his pudgy little belly.

“He’s fine.” Harry said, waving a hand at Idris and Braiden. “Braiden loves it.”
“It seems so dangerous!” Dain hissed.

“Dracken baby, remember?” Harry reminded him.

The four Faeries drew back in horror and Harry turned around quickly to find Idris was only holding Braiden’s one ankle as he used his free arm to support Braiden’s back and then turn him right side up again and cradled the eighteen month old boy in his arms securely.

Harry let out a breath and rolled his eyes. Idris was so much like Sanex it was easy to see who Sanex took after and between Nasta and Aneirin, it was very, very easy to see that they were very alike in personality, but where Sanex looked more like Aneirin, Nasta looked more like his Uncle Idris. It made Harry ache with curiosity to see his mate’s Aunt Nerys to see what she looked like too.

“So those are the stick up the arse Faeries?” Idris asked his older brother with a scrunched up nose.

“You swear again and I’ll throw you off of the roof.” Harry said seriously.

“He’s so mean, Nasta! How do you love such a cold bas….barbarian?” Idris stopped and corrected himself when Harry snapped his head around and gave him a cold glare.

“Ba ba un!” Braiden repeated happily.

“Example A of why you will be going off of the roof if you swear in this house.” Harry said as he used both hands to indicate Braiden, who continued to repeat his new word with increasing volume.

A high pitched wail broke the peace of the room and they all turned to the two bassinets, where Ave had woken up for her feed.

Draco, who had been silent and observant all throughout the visit, moved for the first time as he took one of the bottles that Nasta had made up and tested it against his forearm before scooping up Ave carefully and rubbing the bottle teat on her little, rosy cheek.

“You gave birth!” Idris exclaimed happily to Harry. “I thought that you were still pregnant when I saw you, you should have said I had a new great-niece, Nye!”

Harry’s head dropped to the floor and his hands fell against his will to the baby bump he still had a month after birth and he felt it self-consciously.

Max was there then, smelling of sage because of the headache relievers and the scar reducers he had been brewing and he was holding him tightly and kissing him as Nasta ripped into his own Uncle over upsetting his submissive mate.

“I’m okay, I’m fine!” Harry stressed. “I do look like I’m still pregnant with this baby pouch and really I only gave birth a month ago, I’m not surprised that it’s still there. Just calm down and get me tea.”

“I really do love seeing my brother get chastised by you, Nasta.”

Harry looked up at the new person in his living room. He studied the pretty woman with her silky looking black hair and her beautiful hazel-gold eyes. He smiled as he realised that this must be Aneirin and Idris’ younger sister Nerys, Nasta’s aunt.

“You’re supposed to take my side!” Idris whined.

“When you just insulted a submissive who gave birth a month ago? No.” Nerys said with a sniff. “Nasta, are you not going to greet me? Get your cute little behind over here and give me a hug.”

Nasta smiled and he hugged his tall, slender aunt and he kissed her cheek with genuine affection.

“It’s good to see you, Aunt Nerys.”

“You look so well!” She commented as she seized his head and tipped it this way and that. “You look happy and I must say that I’m so glad that you started to keep up with your shaving, as your Aunt I feel I have to tell you that you look like a scruffy tramp when you don’t shave.”

Max laughed loudly and Harry chuckled as Nasta flushed red and groaned in embarrassment.

“These must be three of your four mates, Harry I can tell as your submissive, I would recognise Myron Maddison’s only son anywhere, and the son of Lucius Malfoy too, so it is Blaise who is missing.”
“He’s in work, his first day.” Harry said with a smile. “He’ll be home soon.”

“Now for what I really want to do, come and introduce me to these gorgeous, adorable little munchkins wandering around my feet.” Nerys cooed as she tugged on Nasta’s arm to get him moving.

“Are we waiting on many more people?” Dain asked as he obsessively made sure that Regan was on the floor before letting him go when he squirmed to be put on the floor. Kailen was still cradling a tiring Leolin, who was yawning widely and showing off his toothless mouth.

“No. I called my brother and my sister, our Father refused to come.” Aneirin said.

Dain swallowed and Kailen closed his eyes from the pain of having one of their family members reject them so obviously and firmly.

“If what Nye tells me is true and you have a legitimate reason for ignoring our family for so long, then I will sit him down and make him listen, but our Father and Grandfather don’t know either of you, they didn’t even know that you were members of our family, you have ignored us for a hundred and thirty years, that is not going to be turned around overnight.” Nerys said, standing tall even with Calix and Tegan in her arms.

She sat on the settee and Harry grinned as he saw how similar she and Tegan were, both with black hair and hazel eyes, though Nerys’ had the gold hint that both her brothers and her nephew Nasta shared, Tegan had a gold hint, but it wasn’t as strong or as pronounced.

“Now, tell me what you told my brother to convince him that you deserve to even speak to us.” Nerys said sternly and primly as she sat, looking all but regal in her smart, pencil skirt suit with two fourteen month olds on her lap.

Nasta made his Aunt a cup of tea with half a spoon of sugar and a drop of milk in one of Max’s new cups and he handed it to his Aunt with a matching saucer and Harry knew then that if Tegan turned out to be as no nonsense and as stern as Nerys then he’d be a very happy man and a very proud Mother.
A/N: I love these Faeries so much, and Idris...Idris is awesome. This chapter carries on where it left off in chapter ninety-two, so more Faerie action to come and things are about to get very, very interesting and a little...hmm, well I expect to be lynched, so it’s that sort of interesting.

We have a scheduled update for next week, it will be for this fic as I’m focusing a little more on this one after the eight updates I put in for my other fics, so I have some time to dedicate to it, but the Scaled Bits and Damaged Bodies will still be having a bit of work done to them, but until then, I’m sticking with this fic for a while.

Tammy Azrael Malfoy: Ave is pronounced like the word knave or save. There is emphasis on the A so it’s pronounced like Ay, and there is none on the E, so it’s almost silent.

Sara: No, squibs cannot carry the gene, they don’t have any magic, thus the magical creature gene is not present in their blood because it needs magic in order to carry it. All Drackens have to have a Pureblood in their lineage somewhere, even if they are no longer considered Purebloods.

Anyway, it’s been a while, so it’s painful for me to say that my Grancha did die very quickly after he fell ill, the cancer was very aggressive and it spread very quickly through the rest of his body and he died only days after being released from the hospital. His funeral hit me very hard so I took some time away, but I’m much better now, thank you all for your support and kind words, the family have been getting better and life carries on as it always does, we’re doing well and now nine weeks after he died, things seem to be almost back to level ground and I just want to carry on now and forget the pain and sadness, which is why I haven’t stopped writing and updating for several weeks now, but yeah, I want it all behind me and I never want to think of him that way again.

I’ll be focusing now on this fic for a few weeks, then I’m going on holiday for the first time in four years, so I’m looking forward to that, but until next week lovelies, I hope you’ve enjoyed this chapter, I’ll see you soon,

StarLight Massacre. X
Chapter Notes

A/N: This chapter is dedicated to Jane, for the amazing review that was given to me for this story on AFF.

Last Time

She sat on the settee and Harry grinned as he saw how similar she and Tegan were, both with black hair and hazel eyes, though Nerys’ had the gold hint that both her brothers and her nephew Nasta shared, Tegan had a gold hint, but it wasn’t as strong or as pronounced.

“Now, tell me what you told my brother to convince him that you deserve to even speak to us.” Nerys said sternly and primly as she sat, looking all but regal in her smart, pencil skirt suit with two fourteen month olds on her lap.

Nasta made his Aunt a cup of tea with half a spoon of sugar and a drop of milk in one of Max’s new cups and he handed it to his Aunt with a matching saucer and Harry knew then that if Tegan turned out to be as no nonsense and as stern as Nerys then he’d be a very happy man and a very proud Mother.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Ninety-Two – Familiar Repeat

Harry sat through Dain and Kailen retelling their story of pain and anger and the embarrassment they had felt and still felt to this day, decades later, and through it all he held Blaise’s hand tightly. His mate had come home ten minutes after Dain and Kailen had started their retelling and he had stayed in the living room to hear the story instead of going for a shower and to get changed into something more comfortable.

Max was in the kitchen making dinner for the kids and Leolin was on Harry’s lap, after calling out for him and then falling fast asleep on him after a little bottle of milk. Eva had been fed and both newborn girls were sleeping peacefully and their older children were calming down a little as the smells of their dinners wafted through to the living room. Farren was naturally out in the kitchen with Max hurrying him along with the continuous reminder that he had hungry children to feed.

“I see.” Nerys said simply when the Faeries had stopped speaking, not giving away any of her thoughts or emotions.

“Stop teasing them, Rissy.” Idris waved a hand as he lounged on the floor, Regan and Calix climbing all over him. “It’s good enough for me, welcome back into the Delericey fold!”

Nerys sighed. “I suppose that Idris is right. The pain you must have felt in raising your two grandsons, knowing that your lover and children were all dead. I wouldn’t wish to go through such a terrible trauma.”

Aneirin sighed. “I will speak to my Father and Grandfather; expect an owl in the coming days, a week at the most. They will want to meet with you as well I expect.”

“How dare you presume to speak to members of the prestigious court that way! They will set up the meetings and you will be there!”

Aneirin sighed, Idris laughed and Nerys raised a perfectly plucked eyebrow with an almost feral smile on her mouth.

“Oh really?” She let out a little laugh. “Well that doesn’t work out for us, so we’ll just have to say our goodbyes here and now.”

“Warren, please would you do the honours?” Kailen asked icily.

Warren bowed at the waist. “My pleasure, Kailen.”

Harry wondered what was going on until Warren turned and seized Auric in a headlock and dragged him out into the passageway and then out of the front door. Idris almost choked he was laughing so hard.

Max poked his head around the door, a cutely befuddled look on his handsome face.

“Did I just see what I thought I did?” He asked.

Harry nodded with a grin.

“Warren was just removing some filth from your home.” Dain declared with a haughty sniff. “He has annoyed me all day, this last infraction could have lost us our family and we will not stand for such from a lowly guard. He is no friend of ours and he should have kept silent; we put no stock in his opinions so he should not have voiced them.”

“Nerys was just making a point.” Aneirin assured them. “Ordering any of us anywhere will not be the best way to prove that you want us to be a family. You can request us to visit, but ordering us to go to the city and present ourselves to you will be steadfastly ignored.”

“We wouldn’t even have thought to order you anywhere, all orders from the court come direct from Sindri himself, we have no say or even any previous knowledge of the summons that Sindri sends out, he is the Head of the court, but all of us understand your wish to keep Leolin safe and thus we understand the need to not take him travelling so often and after the Dragon Pox outbreak in the city...most are just pleased to hear that there is at least one Faerie babe still living, even if he isn’t living in our city.”

“Is Ezrah okay?” Harry asked.

“You asked after him on our last visit, is he a friend of yours?”

Harry shrugged. “We’ve sent a few owls to one another and he wanted to see all of my children so I sent him a photo. I wouldn’t call us friends yet, but I could definitely see myself being friends with him given some time and some more interaction. I want to invite him around for a morning so that he can mingle with the kids, because he’s frightened of finally having a baby and then not being able to look after it properly because he’s never been near any children before.”

“You are very kind to him.” Kailen told him.

Harry shrugged. “Why wouldn’t I be?”

“Ezrah’s Father was disgraced for crimes against citizens of the Faerie city. He was selling orphaned Faerie babes and even desecrating the graveyard for bodies to sell to wizards for potions ingredients. He was executed when Ezrah was only nine.”

“That isn’t Ezrah’s fault!” Harry defended hotly. “Why is he being punished for his Father’s crimes?!”

“He is the seed of his Father.” Dain sighed. “It is not us personally who persecute him, though we don’t have much interaction with him, but many others do hold him accountable for his Father’s crimes and they even tried to prevent him from bonding to Lathen, his very respectable, well liked Valkyrie lover.”

“They tried to mess up his marriage?” Harry asked, absolutely disgusted.

Kailen nodded. “The court had to intervene and we even had to post guards around Lathen’s house during the bonding ceremony to ensure that nothing interfered. Ezrah’s Father, Ezile Seneca, was a very hated man, some saw the truth of it, like us, especially when Ezile tried to sell Ezrah several moon turns after his birth, his own son, but many will not forget or forgive him for the sins of his Father.”

“That’s awful!” Harry said. “I really want him to come over now. Your society is seriously messed up!”

“Harry!” Aneirin chastised.

“Well it is!” Harry said unashamedly and unrepentantly as Idris laughed uproariously. “If I go out and kill a hundred people tomorrow then that is on me, those are my actions, my fault, what does it have to do with my babies? Or even my mates for that matter?! Nothing! So they shouldn’t be blamed for it and neither should Ezrah be blamed for what his Father did. His Father sounded like he was an utter prick.”

“We are not saying that what the Faeries of the city believe is right, just that that is what they believe.” Dain explained patiently.

“You have to remember, Harry, that the average age of the citizens of the city is five hundred years old.” Nasta told him just as patiently. “They think differently to us.”

Harry huffed. “Well they should think more like us, poor Ezrah! I’m going to send him an owl right now; he can come and visit us whenever he wants to!” Harry decided as he strode off to the attic, where their owls had made their home, and to the small writing desk that they kept there stocked with parchment, ink and quills so that they could send letters quickly and easily.

Harry wrote a short letter detailing to Ezrah that he could come and visit in the morning of any day that he chose and that Harry would love to show him his children personally and that Lathen was welcome as well if he wanted to join them.
He couldn’t believe that anyone would blame Ezrah for what his disgusting Father had done. Those Faeries needed to realise that this was the twenty-first century now and that they couldn’t ostracise Ezrah just because his Father had been an utter bastard. Though he knew that the chances of them even taking any notice of him was next to non-existent. He couldn’t even entertain the thought of living in the Faerie city; he didn’t know how Ezrah did it day after day.

Poor Ezrah had been nine when his Father had been executed for his crimes and that was a Faerie nine and not a human one too, his books said that the human equivalent of a Faerie nine year old was a little over five years old. Ezrah had had the understanding and abilities of a five year old and those fucking Faeries had still painted him with the same brush as his vile Father. It wasn’t fair and Harry felt so sorry for Ezrah having to live in that city knowing that the people there didn’t accept him and had even tried to prevent him from marrying to the man that he loved and who loved him just as much in return, Lathen was one of the very few who saw Ezrah as a person and not as the reincarnation of his messed up Father.

“Hedwig!” Harry called to his beautiful snowy owl and she preened and strutted away from her place huddled next to Draco’s owl, Saracen and glided down to him. “Are you up for a trip? I need this delivered to Ezrah in the Faerie city, you may have trouble getting in again, but I trust you to deliver it for me, as I have done the last several times.”

Hedwig puffed up at that and gently nipped at his hand with real affection and Harry stroked her breast after he had tied on the letter and carried her to the open window. She gave Esmeralda and Jasmine a warning squawk before she fluttered her wings and took off. Harry really needed to prepare for the next coming weeks now.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Draco groaned as he rolled over Max’s back and got to the floor, walking blind to the bassinets that held his almost two month old daughters, he blearily groped around until he felt a neck and a bum and hefted the screaming baby to his chest, before making his way to the door and going down into the kitchen, fumbling the latches on the baby gates as he went down the stairs carefully.

He turned on the little dim lamp that Max had plugged into the corner of the kitchen counter units for this reason and he was able to see what he was doing without searing out his eyeballs as he set the kettle to boiling and waited for it to click over as he set up the bottle, the formula powder and then stood waiting for it as he shushed Ave and cradled her gently to his bare chest.

He was falling asleep standing up when an ear piercing screech jerked him awake again and he groaned, turning around and sorting out the bottle, pouring in the hot water and then cooling it with a weak spell, he tested it against his under forearm and then offered it to the screaming baby, who blessedly shut up when the bottle teat was stuffed into her little mouth.

Draco sighed and snuggled the feeding baby tightly, aware that he’d have to do this again in fifteen or so minutes with the elder twin, Eva. Like Harry and his other beloved mates, he couldn’t wait until they were synchronised together, he could have brought them both down with him and sorted them out together and then taken them back up to bed and gone to sleep again, instead he had to bring the one down, sort her out, feed her, burp her, check her nappy and then get her back off to sleep and then wait for the other one to wake up and repeat the process before he could climb back into bed and he was already so tired that it felt like his eyes were bleeding from the rough sandy, grit stuck in them.

Groaning he checked his little devil and sighed as he saw her still sucking strong.

He rested back against the counter and let his head drop backwards. He hadn’t missed this part of having children and he was counting the months down until they would start to sleep all the way through the nights. He was looking forward to having a decent, uninterrupted night’s sleep, though he knew that the first time any of the babies slept through the whole night was always filled with panic when they woke up the next morning, the mad rush to the bassinets to check on the baby’s breathing, but as they got more used to it, that blessed full night’s sleep was utter heaven to all of them.

Draco put Ave over his shoulder and patted her back with his eyes closed and after the small noise escaped her, signifying that she’d brought up her wind, he carried her back up the stairs. He laid her on the changing table in their bedroom and flipped her nightdress up and checked her nappy, grumbling when he found it almost sodden.

He changed her as quietly as he could, listening to the soft sounds of his mates breathing and Max’s soft, but prolonged, snores. Their biggest mate must have been pinned on his back; he only ever snored when he was stuck on his back.

Tossing the soiled nappy and the used wipes into the bin beside the changing table, Draco made sure that Ave was comfortable, that her nightdress was straight and not twisted and he checked on her scratch mitts to make sure they were still in place before he tucked her back up in her bassinet and then picked up Eva and slouched back down the stairs with her.

He was glad that it was six in the morning; it meant that the next feed was someone else’s responsibility, his night shift of feeding was over and the morning feeds would start, it was Blaise’s turn this morning to get up with the babies at eight.

He switched off the lamp on his way back up the stairs after feeding Eva, closed all the baby gates and made sure they were securely latched and almost had a heart attack at the top of the stairs when he turned around and saw a sleepy Braiden was sat on the landing staring at him in the dark.

“What are you doing up? How are you out here?” He asked curiously, his heart beating in fear and with worry.

He picked Braiden up one armed and took him back into the nursery and placed him back into his cot, tucking him back over and he watched with a furrowed brow as Braiden yawned and snuggled back into the stuffed snake that he’d gotten for him last Christmas.

He checked the sides of the cot and found them all secured and latched. He wondered how the hell Braiden had gotten out of his cot and out onto the landing and as he made sure that Braiden was asleep again, that the other four were still asleep too and he made a mental note to tell his mates that morning at breakfast.

He closed the nursery door tight this time, instead of leaving it ajar like they usually did and he took Eva back into the bedroom, placed her on the changing table and checked her nappy, kissing her happily when she was unsoiled and bone dry. He made sure her nightdress wasn’t twisted and that her scratch mitts were in place before he put her back into her bassinet, checked on their Leolin and then he climbed back into the bed.

His spot had long since been swallowed up as his inconsiderate, sleeping lovers who had all moved closer together to close up where he’d been sleeping, but he kicked and nudged at Max until the huge man grunted and twisted off of his back and onto his side, dislodging Nasta, who had been sleeping on his chest. Their top dominant rolled right over onto his other side and threw an arm over Harry, but not only did him prodding Max onto his side stop his hideous snoring, but as Draco slid up tight to Max’s back, he smirked happily as he took Max’s warm spot. He could sleep now for a further two or so hours before he would have to force himself out of the bed for breakfast, but until then, he was too tired to stay awake for any longer and he had nothing else that needed his attention. It was time to just sleep.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

Harry frowned with worry as he listened to Blaise telling them that he’d found Braiden sleeping on the nursery floor in a pile of stuffed animals.

“How do we keep him safe if he’s climbing over the side of his cot?” He asked as he tugged at his hair.

“Stop that.” Nasta chastised him as he unwound his hand and kissed the spot that he had been tugging on. “He’s fine. He’s a curious little boy and he’s fearless at his age, he’s going to climb out of his cot and all he did was sleep on his teddies, it’s not like he was climbing over the baby gates on the stairs.”

“Don’t, I feel sick with just the thought of him doing that.” Harry said as he shivered, watching as Braiden spooned the last bits of his porridge into his little mouth with improving coordination, though four times out of ten he scraped the spoon across his cheek before he got it into his mouth, but even that was an improvement from the nine times out of ten it used to be.

Draco came down all groggy and looking half asleep still. Harry grimaced and looked at him with concern. He’d done all of the night feeds by himself as Max, Nasta and Blaise were all in work today and it looked like it had taken a serious toll on him.

“Come and sit down, have a cup of tea.” Max insisted as he sat Draco down and tucked his chair under the table like he was a dainty woman in a fancy restaurant.
Draco just rolled his eyes and slumped onto the table.

“Are you sure we can’t just silence them?” He groaned tiredly.

“I’m sure.” Nasta told him, bending over his back to kiss a milk pale, non-stubbled cheek.

Draco made a noise and swatted a hand at Nasta to get rid of him, turning the other way so that his kissed cheek pressed into the arm he was resting on the table. “Leave me to die in peace.”

Harry chuckled. “Stop being so overdramatic, I thought you’d grown up a bit since Hogwarts.”

“Being overtired makes him over grumpy and even more overdramatic and diva-ish than usual.” Blaise commented from over the rim of his coffee mug.

Max bent over Draco and kissed his other cheek and Draco smacked him away too.

“Hey, you can’t hit me! I brought you over a cup of tea to wake you up a bit.” Max said with the laughter clear in his voice.

“He needs more than waking up; he needs a good jolt of something to liven him up.”

“He looks a bit like a dead and decaying zombie.” Max joked.

“Oh shut up, all of you.”

“Dead people don’t talk, Draco.” Blaise told him. “Do the walking dead talk?”

“No.” Harry replied with a shake of his head. “They just grunt and moan a bit.”

“Are you sure you were watching zombies and not porn?”
“I’m sure.” Harry said with a nod. “Though there’s not much difference.”

The five of them shared a laugh over that.

“Daddy Dayco!”

They all looked over at Braiden as he held his arms out to Draco, porridge spoon still in his hand, though his bowl was now empty.

“He’s getting so much better with his words.” Harry said proudly and he kissed Braiden’s cheek, pulling him out of his highchair and handing him over to Draco, taking the spoon from his hand as he did so.

“Good morning, big boy.” Draco greeted kissing his cheek as well.

“Bo da!” Braiden repeated.

“Did he just…?” Max said speechless.

Harry looked to a tearfully stunned Nasta and he grinned.

“I think our little boy just greeted Draco in Welsh, Nasta.”

Harry had been a little sceptical when every morning Nasta greeted their children in Welsh and then in English, repeating the same line to them all every single morning ‘Bore da, Braiden. Good morning, Braiden.’ For all six of them, which even included Eva and Ave now that they were born. He’d always done it and Harry had been worried that mixing up four different languages, English, Welsh, French and Italian, would confuse them and they’d end up at a disadvantage, but he had to hand it to his mates, hearing Braiden speaking Welsh…it made his heart flutter in all consuming pride.

Nasta took Braiden from Draco and hugged him tightly, kissing all over his face and swaying with him.
“Bo da, Daddy ast!”

“Bore da, Braiden. Good morning.” Nasta repeated as he hugged his oldest son happily.

“Blaise found him out of his cot this morning, sleeping in his teddy pile.” Harry told Draco and he watched as Draco’s eyes widened and he swallowed his mouthful of hot tea quickly and a little painfully.

“That reminds me! When I was doing the six O’clock feeds for Eva and Ave, I was just bringing Eva back up to bed and I found Braiden on the landing.”

“What?!” Harry all but screeched. “He was actually out on the landing?!”

Draco nodded. “I tucked him back up into his cot and he fell asleep again, he must have heard me taking the girls downstairs, but I made sure to close the nursery door tight after that.”

“I was wondering why it was shut tight when I went to get them this morning. I almost head butted the door because I was expecting it to be open.” Blaise nodded. “We’re going to have to put up wards to stop him from going near the stairs.”

“I’ll make sure we do that, but if he’s climbing, we’re going to have to keep an extra close eye on him, he’s not going to limit himself to just climbing out of his cot.” Nasta told them.

They all nodded and Harry sighed as he watched Nasta clean Braiden’s face and hands off with a cloth while murmuring to him in Welsh.

“You need a haircut.”

Harry looked to Draco who was considering Harry’s hair like it was a particularly large rat that had leapt onto his overpriced plate of food and made off with his prime piece of steak.

Harry fisted his hair and grimaced.
“I know. It’s far too long and far too much hassle to deal with. I can’t be bothered to comb it some days.”

“Like this morning.”

Harry nodded with a grin. “Like today.”

“I’ll cut it for you when the kids go down for their midmorning nap.” Max offered.

“Just don’t take too much off of it like you did the last time that you did my hair for me!” Harry said sternly. “It’s my hair; you will take off how much I want, not what Draco tells you to take off! I looked ridiculous.”

“You looked like a shaved cat…all spiky and tufty.” Blaise told him with a cheeky smile.

“Shut up you, you’re not allowed to say anything; your Mother still cuts your hair.”

“She does a better job than Max.” Blaise grinned.

“My haircuts are passable!” Max pouted.

“For men trying to hide their curly hair, maybe.” Harry whispered to Blaise. They both started laughing together.

“What did you just whisper?!” Max mock glared.

“Nothing!” Harry insisted.

“You said something, I heard you whispering!” Max insisted. “I’ll force it out of you!”

“You can’t hurt me.” Harry pointed out smugly. “I’m still on light duties while I recover.”
“I’m warning you, I’ll sing!”

“Oh dear Merlin, not that. You better tell him, Harry.” Draco said seriously. “I already have the beginnings of a headache.”

Harry looked at Blaise and they started laughing again.

“I love all of you.” Harry declared before he stood up and proceeded to clean up the splash zone now that all of the kids had finished their breakfasts and were chattering to one another and themselves.

“Time to move the rabble to the living room to unleash them on their toys.” Max smiled as he picked up Farren and hefted him onto his hip.

“Make sure he’s clean.” Harry told him sternly.

“Farren’s always clean, what doesn’t make it into his mouth on the first try will be scraped off and will get into his mouth on the second attempt.”

Harry rolled his eyes, but he couldn’t argue with that as it was true, Farren always sucked his fingers clean after a meal.

“Come on, Princess.” Harry groaned as he hefted Tegan out of her highchair, cleaned up her hands and face, untied her bib and threw it at the washing machine.

He took her into the living room and sat her on the nice, clean floor free of all toys and mess. It took five minutes… just five measly minutes for most of the toy chest to be emptied onto the surrounding floor as Tegan and Regan dug around in it for whatever they wanted, if they even wanted anything to begin with.

“Make sure you do your studying.” Nasta told him sternly and Harry groaned, very unhappy to be reminded that he had to take his potions exams that spring.
“Can’t I just give up and not do it?” He complained.

“No, now that you’ve given birth and we know that you aren’t pregnant, you need to take those exams and get a mark in them to finish your formal education before you fall pregnant again.”

“Better make it quick then.” Harry grumbled. “My track record is against me, the longest I’ve gone without getting pregnant is the scant months after the quintuplets. What was it…seven months?”

Nasta cupped the back of his head and pulled him in to kiss his forehead. “Just relax, you’ll be just fine. The kids will be alright playing, then they’ll have a mid-morning nap, you can get some theory done and Max said he’ll help you with some practical later on tonight.”

Harry nodded as he went to the sideboard and took out the revision books that his lovely mates had put together for him…mostly Draco and Max, as the experts that they were, Max more so than all of them, being a qualified Potions Master and all that, but Blaise had added in some input having been competent enough to prevent Harry from blowing off his head when it had been just them in the potions classroom.

He sat on the floor with the study materials and flipped them open unhappily on the coffee table.

“It’s too early in the morning for this.” Harry grumbled.

“We’d be in our first lesson of the day if we were still in Hogwarts.” Draco told him.

Harry looked at the clock on the mantelpiece. Draco was right; they’d already be in lessons in Hogwarts as it was already ten past nine in the morning. How the hell had he ever survived school and being a Mother at the same time? Studying and babies did not mix together very well.

“I have to go. I’ll see you all later; I should be home at five.” Blaise said as he caught every kid and kissed their mouths, caught Draco and kissed him, came to Harry and kissed him quickly and then got Nasta and finally Max, before he was gone through the floo and Harry smiled widely.

“How long do you think this exuberance will last?” Harry asked the others.

“Give it a month or so.” Max answered. “I was excited for my first apprenticeship too, at least until it had worn me down to nothing and I was so tired, so exhausted, that I couldn’t dredge up enough energy to form opinions on it anymore.”

They all laughed at that and then Nasta was sighing and regretfully saying goodbye to them as well.

“When will you be home?” Harry asked.

“Late.” Nasta grumbled. “I had to skip on half a day yesterday because of the girls’ injections; I’ll be making up the time today, so I wouldn’t say I’d be back any earlier than seven.”

Harry frowned and he clamped Nasta in a tight hug, kissing all over his forehead.

“You be careful, you have a higher chance of getting injured when you’re on long shifts when you’re tired.” Harry said with concern.

“I know, that’s why I really couldn’t do any of the night feeds last night or I would have assuredly had an accident today, but I’ll take extra care in work so that you don’t worry.” Nasta promised as he kissed Harry repeatedly, his rough skin scratching on Harry’s face and he smiled at that. Nasta had shaved just that morning and already his facial hair was rebelling and growing back in, making his face bristly.

“Stop hogging him, Harry!” Max complained. “I want hugs too.”

Nasta grinned and with a last kiss he moved over to their biggest mate and he and Max embraced exaggeratedly and Max even swung Nasta into a swoon and bent to kiss him like Nasta was a maiden who he was wooing from decades ago.

“And you say that I’m the youngest of us all!” He shook his head.

“You are.” Draco reminded him.

“Not mentally.” Harry grinned.

Nasta caught Draco and then their children and with a groan and a pinch of floo powder, he was gone and they wouldn’t see him again for at least ten or more hours.

“When are you due in work?” Draco asked as Max sat on the settee.

“Ten.” Max answered as he reclined back for twenty or so minutes.

“Help me with this then.” Harry grumbled as he sat back down and shoved his book at Max.

“Right, come here you hopeless case.” Max scooted over until Harry was between his legs and he could peer over his shoulder. “Let’s start you on the theory of the Draught of Living Death, that potion will be on your exam and it’ll be the potion that you’ll make for your practical exam, so if I can teach you to brew it inside and out, you should be good.”

“I almost killed Blaise with this potion.” Harry said conversationally.

“So he’s said, numerous times. You also tried to kill your entire class with the sleeping draught; didn’t you blow a hole in the floor?” Max grinned. “Now, I want you to memorise all the ingredient preparation today. Just focus on that and I’ll test you later tonight. I’ll be home at four, so I’ll sort out dinner, I’ll cut your hair afterwards as we’ve lost track of time for this morning and then we can clean up and get you preparing the ingredients right.”

Harry nodded and went to work on memorising the ingredients and their preparation. It sounded easy, but with eight babies in the house, five of them old enough to be walking, talking, making noise, making mess, throwing toys and tantrums, needing sippy cups and snacks and continuous supervision…just memorising the list of ingredients was difficult, let alone how they were prepared. He was glad that three of them went straight down for their midmorning nap, leaving just Farren, who rarely napped, and Braiden, who was refusing to go down for his nap and was instead splashing about in his ball pit.

“Have you gotten anywhere?” Draco asked as he brought him a cup of tea.

Harry snorted incredulously. “No. This is not only hopeless, it’s impossible.” He declared.

“Take a break.” Draco offered and Harry didn’t need to be told, he shoved his books away, slid up onto the settee next to his mate and took a long drink of his tea.
“I’m never going to be good at potions.” Harry sighed.

“You don’t need to be good.” Draco told him. “You just have to make the examiner think that you’re good by excelling in the one potion that we know they’ll test you on. The N.E.W.T. level potion is always the Draught of the Living Death and because it’s such a hard potion to prepare and brew correctly, it doesn’t matter that everyone knows what it is beforehand. We just have to get you preparing and brewing it perfectly, to the letter, to convince the examiner that you aren’t a hazard to all living things when near a cauldron.”

Harry rolled his eyes and sighed. “At this rate I won’t even be able to do that.”

“You will.” Draco told him. “I have faith that you’ll be able to do it.”

“I’m just hoping that I don’t blow up the examiner at this point.” Harry groaned.

Draco chuckled and kissed him gently. “Take advantage of the lull in sound and get to memorising those ingredients. You’ll need to know what ingredients you need because you won’t have any instructions at all when you get into the examination room, but you will have a fully stocked cupboard with of all sorts of ingredients that you won’t even need. A consequence of everyone knowing what potion the exam will contain beforehand.”

Harry thumped his head onto the coffee table. “Of course they couldn’t give instructions or even an ingredient list, bloody evil, masochists.”

Draco just smirked and went back to his novel. This was really the only time that they could do anything for themselves, as Harry wasn’t even going to try and tackle the mountain of laundry they had to do. If he was revising, then he wasn’t going to do the washing as well, that could wait…or he could dump it all outside and burn it. He liked the latter option better, that way he wouldn’t have any washing to do at all, but there would be a serious lack of clothes and towels afterwards.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Of course things got harder as Harry was forced to admit that he was just useless at potions and after a week he couldn’t ignore the state of the house any longer. His mates did bits and pieces where they could, the kitchen was always spotless thanks to Max and Draco kept the living room and their bedroom clean, Blaise kept the two bathrooms clean and clear and Nasta made sure everything else was tidy, but none of them had time to do the laundry, the situation of which had gotten so dire that they’d even run out of room to put the dirty washing in. The kids were running out of bibs and Blaise didn’t have a single clean shirt for work so he’d had to go out and buy a new one along with four new sleepsuits for Eva and Ave as they’d grown too much to justify squashing them into the smaller sized suits any longer.

Harry groaned as he dumped yet another armful of washing into the mass of dirty clothes already on the kitchen floor and he started separating it out into piles of whites, colours, darks, jeans and delicates. He shoved the white things in first, there were at least four loads of washing for it and it contained Blaise’s shirts and most of the kids’ sleepsuits, night dresses and bibs. This washing was going to take him a couple of days to wash, dry, iron and put away, there was too much of it and he’d even woken up at four in the morning just to sort it all out and start it.

It was now gone five, it had taken him an hour to empty all of the hampers and collect up all the dirty clothes around the house, separate it, treat the badly stained clothes and then put the first load in. He was not going to be doing anything else now for a while.

He had both Eva and Ave down with him, if he was already up then he saw no point in having the girls remain upstairs in the bedroom, waking up his mates when they needed the rest. He’d offered himself up for all the night feeds and Draco and Max had leapt at the offer, but Nasta had taken both the ten O’clock feed and the midnight feed too, not letting Harry do too much. Yet Harry had been the one to do Leolin’s one O’clock feed, Eva and Ave’s three O’clock feed and he’d gotten up to settle Leolin back down when he had wet a nappy at four in the morning too, which is when he’d decided to stay up to tackle the washing. So his mates had had a decent night of sleep for once, he’d been awake for most of the night and the early hours and he was up at four in the damn morning doing the washing just so that his babies had bibs and Blaise had clean shirts for work, though it was terribly strange to see Max wearing his smart, work trousers during his days off and Nasta lounging in tracksuit bottoms and gym clothes as they’d both run out of jeans to wear.

He’d had enough of the laundry situation and he was fed up of Draco complaining about it and Blaise buying new shirts for work was ridiculous when he had eight perfectly good shirts already. His mates weren’t going to get a break, Max, Nasta and Blaise were working hard, Max had only had three days off in the last fortnight and Nasta had only had a half day off in the last two weeks and that had been for the girls’ vaccinations and he’d made up the time off the next day. Draco had absolutely no clue how to do laundry and it would take longer to teach him how to do it and he’d probably turn all of their whites into colours in the process or ruin the delicates. So that left just him to do it and he didn’t care how much he needed to revise for his upcoming exam, the laundry needed to be done and he needed a break from the gruelling revising and practice that Max was putting him through. He knew all of the ingredients that he needed for the potion and even as he sorted out the sink to hand wash some of the delicates, he run through the list in his head.

Draco had been invaluable with a piece of advice that Harry knew was going to help him. He told him that whenever he was working with potions he put the prepared ingredients to the side in the order in which they were put into the potion, Max had jumped on the idea when he saw how much it would help him and he was getting Harry to memorise the list of ingredients in the order in which they were put into the potion and Blaise had jumped in and reminded them to split the ingredients into the quantities they were used in, obviously remembering Harry dumping in the whole bowl of lacewing flies in their sixth year, so a handful of the ingredients appeared in his list twice, but he knew he knew which ones he needed.

He wrote the list down on a piece of spare parchment and he checked it over twice, changing a few things that looked like mistakes to him, and then he left it on the kitchen table for Max to look over.
He went back to it five times between washing loads and wringing out the delicate clothes which he had draped over the kitchen radiator, just to check that the list was still correct.

He had finished one load of white washing and was putting on the first load of jeans when Blaise joined him in the kitchen, he’d prioritised the washing and he’d done Blaise’s work shirts, the bibs and nightdresses and a load of jeans first so that it would all be dry sometime later today instead of tomorrow.

“How long have you been up?” Blaise asked when he dodged through the twelve or so piles of clothing still on the kitchen floor, looking to the full radiator and the three clothes horses that were loaded up with drying clothes that couldn’t go into the tumble dryer.

“Hows.” Harry said as he made sure he had biological powder and softener in the machine, turned the dial and started the next load of jeans off. “Your shirts should be dry soon. I’ll iron them for you when they’re dry.”

“You didn’t have to, I bought two shirts the day before yesterday, I still have one left to wear.”

Harry shook his head. “If I don’t do this now then I’m going to have to throw it all in the garden and set fire to it, there’s already too much of it. If I leave it for any longer then I’m never going to finish it. Even now I don’t think I’ll finish, each load takes about two hours to wash, I’ve got twenty-six hours’ worth of washing on this floor and that’s without adding in today’s loads of washing too or the drying and ironing. Though I am bumping off some of the hand wash only things now.”

“Take a break, love.” Blaise told him as he got Harry sitting down, before he filled up the kettle and set it boiling for a cup of tea for Harry and coffee for himself.

Harry nodded. “I’m alright for an hour or so, I’ve pre-treated most of the sleepsuits and tops because of the stains, so that needs some time to work in, so my next load of hand washing will wait until I’ve had a cup of tea at least.”

“Have you had these angels down with you as well?” Blaise asked.

Harry nodded. “No point in me being up at four in the morning and leaving them upstairs to wake you lot up at six, I fed them, burped them, changed them both and then started the washing, it took me an hour just to sort it all out.”

Blaise made him a cup of tea, squeezed a good glob of luscious honey into it and handed it to Harry before making himself a mug of coffee and all but falling onto it.

The two of them sat directly opposite one another, two little girls sleeping peacefully in their bassinets next to them and they not only twined their free hands together, but their legs under the table too, giggling as they did so, laying kisses on one another’s hands and talking softly as they savoured the peace and the quality time together alone.

At least until a murmur came over the baby monitor and a thump sounded above their heads from the nursery. Harry was just gone, not even stopping to open the baby gates, but vaulting over them, ignoring the pain that it caused his recovering stomach and he made it to the nursery to see Braiden stood on the floor, playing with Calix through the bars to Calix’s cot.

Harry sighed in relief and picked them both up, noticing that all of his babies were awake.

“I really thought that he’d hurt himself.” Blaise said breathlessly, having followed Harry up to the nursery.

“I know, I was so scared, but he’s fine. Go and get Leolin for me please.” Harry told him. “He must be awake by now, but be quiet, Max and Nasta don’t have to be awake for another hour. It’s only eight.”

Harry took three trips up and down the stairs to get the kids into their highchairs from upstairs and his stomach was a burning agony by the time that he got Farren down into the kitchen.

Blaise was eating toast when Harry made it back down, he was in work really early today, he only had fifteen minutes before he had to leave, but he’d still made up the porridge for the kids and left them to eat, all except Calix, who couldn’t be trusted.

Harry took over; leaving Farren to feed himself as he went to spoon porridge into Calix’s waiting mouth. Blaise moved around him and the piles of washing to get to the sink and to the door before coming back into the kitchen ten minutes later dressed for work.

“I’ve got to go, Prezioso.” Blaise said regretfully. “I love you, and take it easy a bit.”

“I love you too.” Harry said as he turned to get a kiss from Blaise, who took it one step further and wrapped his arms around Harry and snogged him passionately.

“That will see me through work today.” Blaise grinned.

Harry shook his head. “Get going!” He said without heat. “Ti amo.”
“Ti amo, Prezioso!” Blaise called out as he left the kitchen for the living room and the fireplace.

Harry sighed and turned back to Calix, spooning more porridge into his open and waiting mouth.

“I love that man so much.” He told his children. “Your Daddy Blaise is very good to us.”

Harry left the kids in their highchairs as he went into the living room to grab the playpen, he dragged it into the kitchen and unwound it, stretched it out and hooked it onto the latches that Max and Nasta had stuck to the kitchen wall, making a safe place for his children to play in before he went to get the travel box of toys and put that into the segregated area too before putting his babies into the area one by one after cleaning off their faces and hands.

He made sure that they were all alright before he sorted out the mess left over from breakfast, cleaning off the bowls and spoons, drying them and putting them away, before tackling the high chair trays and the highchairs themselves when he realised that Regan had been messier than usual before he folded them up and put them away into the pantry just off from the kitchen before he boiled the kettle for Leolin’s breakfast. His little Faerie baby would be waking up soon for another feed.

While he was waiting for that he cleaned up the floor and then took out the washed jeans and moved them to the utility room where the tumble dryer was kept. He set that off before shoving in the next load of jeans, setting that up and off before he made up Leolin’s bottle and checked on the kids to make sure they were all alright still and playing nicely together.

It was now ten past nine and Harry checked the schedule that Draco had started writing up for him. He smiled as he picked up the piece of parchment that was for now being spelled stuck to the wall in the kitchen. Max had promised to get a cork board to pin it to.

Max wasn’t in work until midday, Nasta was due in work at half ten in the morning. Nasta could sleep for another half an hour if he wanted a shower and breakfast before work, but Max could sleep for another hour or two. Draco could get up whenever he wanted really, but he’d promised his Father that he’d go around in the afternoon for a visit.

Leolin made a soft whine in his throat and Harry smiled as he put the schedule back on the sticky patch of wall and tested the bottle against his forearm and cooled it to Leolin’s preferred temperature, he had it ready just as Leolin’s whine turned into a cry.

Harry scooped him up carefully and cradled him as he sat down in his vacated chair and fed his tiny little boy his breakfast.

The Faeries had been so impressed with Leolin and that he could talk and understand what they were saying and they promised that they’d tell Sindri and the rest of the court about Leolin’s achievements and development. Harry was so proud of him as he watched Leolin suckle down his milk. Harry couldn’t wait until Leolin tried some solid foods, but at the moment he was very happy with just milk and he had not even a hint of a tooth coming through his soft, pink gums.

“Have you done all this by yourself?” Nasta’s disapproving voice came from the doorway.
Harry looked up at him and sighed. “Someone has to do it, Nas.”

“Did Blaise get off to work alright?”

Harry nodded. “He had a coffee and some toast and then he had to go.”

“So he didn’t help you with the washing or the kids?”

“The washing, no, but he did make up the breakfasts for the kids.”

Nasta sighed. “What do you need me to do?”

“Just sit down. I’ll get you a cup of tea and something to eat now, just let me sort Leolin out first.”

Nasta did not like that at all it seemed as he walked to the kettle and boiled it himself, standing in front of it, leaning against the counter, facing Harry as if challenging him to put Leolin down and to wrestle him over the kettle.

“Do the kids need anything?” Nasta asked after a few minutes of watching Harry feed Leolin while he let the tea brew in the cups.

“No, they’ve been fed and cleaned up, it’s just changing them into their day clothes and changing any of them who need a nappy change, but they haven’t cried or given any indication of having a wet or soiled nappy, so if you want to check on Calix, just to make sure, I’d appreciate that.”

“You’re supposed to be revising.” Nasta told him as he walked over to the opposite side of the kitchen where the corner was penned off for the kids and he dragged Calix to him and checked on his nappy situation.

“I know, but I can’t leave the washing for any longer, Nas. Look at it all!”
“You’re not going to get all of that lot done today.”

“I know. It’ll take me two days to wash it all, maybe three to dry and iron it and then the pile can start growing again, but when Blaise doesn’t have a single shirt for work so he has to go out and buy some more and you and Max don’t even have a single pair of jeans left between you, it’s time to do something. I ran out of clean boxers the other day too, I have to do it.”

“What have you been wearing instead?” Nasta asked curiously.

Harry burped Leolin and gave Nasta a coy grin. “Why don’t you come over here and find out for yourself?”

Nasta did just that after assuring himself, and Harry, that Calix did not need a nappy change and Harry had put Leolin in his bassinet. Nasta pulled him into a hug and kissed him lingeringly as his hands groped at Harry’s bum. One hand rose and slipped down the back of Harry’s last pair of clean jeans and Nasta grinned wider and he chuckled deeply.

“Oh Harry, you naughty boy.” He cooed into his ear as he touched bare skin and stroked around the silky smooth cheeks, his fingers teasing the cleft, but Nasta stayed away from his entrance, it was too early in the morning for that.

“If you’re going to do anything, get the hell out of my kitchen, you’ve made enough of a mess of it already.” Max grumbled tiredly.

“I need to do the washing, Max, it will only be for a little while.” Harry said as evenly as he could, torn between being upset and angry with a natural lean towards the latter and a hormonal lean towards the former due to his lingering pregnancy emotions.

“I’m sorry, Harry. I didn’t mean to snap, I’m angry at myself, not you. I’m just upset that I can’t do more to help when I see all of this lot.” Max groaned throwing his arms out to encompass the washing piles that Harry had made all over the kitchen floor.

“It’s okay. I don’t mind doing it.”

“But you’re supposed to be revising, not doing the housework.”
Harry grinned and moved away from Nasta, who had removed his hand when Max had walked in on them.

Harry picked up his list and handed it to Max.

“I have been revising while doing the washing, is this right?”

He was a little nervous and he was fidgeting as Max looked it over while Nasta went and made a third cup of tea for Max.

“Did you copy this out of your book?” Max asked.

Harry shook his head. “No, I was running through the list in my head as I was sorting the washing and I wanted to know if I had it right so I wrote it down, I’ve checked it over several times, but I think it’s right, I mean…I could have missed something, but I’m sure I did it right.”

“It’s exactly right, even down to the quantities, well done, Harry. I’m so proud of you.”

Harry couldn’t have guessed how amazing hearing those words would be as he puffed up happily without his own consent, it was just an automatic reaction and he leapt at Max and cuddled him, taking his list back and looking it back over.

“I was so sure that I’d done something wrong and I was worried about the order of the sloth brain and the sopophorous bean juice, I wanted to change them over twice, but I left it as it was because the list in my head had them that way around and then I was worried about the quantity of valerian root I’d put down, I changed it once, but then I changed it back to how it was when it didn’t feel right.”

“No, that’s perfect, leave it just like that.” Max told him before dragging him into a hug and giving him a kiss.

One large hand went down the back of his jeans, making Harry jump as one thick finger prodded at the entrance to his body.
“So this is what Nasta was so intrigued with.” Max murmured. “Going commando are we?”

“I have been going commando for the last three days.” Harry said with a wink. “I ran out of clean underwear.”

“You have been walking around with no underwear on and you never told me?!” Max demanded. “I would have spent the evenings with a hand down your jeans playing with you.”

Harry rolled his eyes. “Which is why I never told you. It’s your own fault that you never noticed, Blaise did.”

Max looked horrified. “So that’s why he’s been sitting you on his lap every night! That tight lipped traitor.”

Harry laughed. “We’ve been having a lot of fun together, last night in particular.”

“I knew that you two were doing something strange! That position you were in wasn’t natural! What was it?”

Harry grinned widely. “Let’s just say it was an exercise in self-control and that you, Nasta and Draco were too engrossed in that dull film.”

“Please…please tell me that you two weren’t having sex in that chair while I was watching that stupid film!”

Harry winked and licked his lips. “My jeans were pushed under my bum cheeks and Blaise’s trousers were open over his lap. Movement was difficult and keeping quiet was worse, but we were both very happy afterwards.”

“You bastards!” Max groaned as he smacked his head into the kitchen table.

Harry laughed loudly and checked on his washing, before checking on the kids and smiling as he saw that Calix was asleep in the corner with Farren, who was actually sleeping for once, but Harry was sure it was only because Calix was using him as a pillow.
Tegan was asleep on a teddy, but Regan and Braiden were still awake and playing together. Harry smiled at them.

“Don’t you two want to get some sleep too?” He asked them softly.

They looked at him and Regan stood up on wobbly legs and walked to him, his arms up. Harry hefted him over the fence and snuggled him, smiling as Regan yawned, showing off his teeth. He grimaced when he caught sight of something that clued him into why Regan might not be sleeping this morning.

“Regan has a new tooth coming in.” He informed Max and Nasta even as he raised a hand to press it over Regan’s forehead to check if he was feverish. He wasn’t.

“Has he got a fever?” Nasta asked as Max stood and went to get his potions case down.

Harry shook his head. “No, he seems fine, but his gum is all inflamed around the emerging white dot and his left cheek is flushed.”

Max clapped his hands gently from where he was sat back in his chair and Harry handed Regan over to him, where he already had the little tube of infant teething gel ready. It was kept safely in his potions case out of sight and reach of little babies.

Harry sighed and drank his cup of tea; he wondered where the hell Draco was and why he wasn’t awake when it was coming up to ten in the morning.

“Was Draco okay when you woke up?”

“He was still asleep, why?” Max asked.

“I’m worried, he never sleeps this late, but then we have had a hard couple of months, it’s likely nothing.”

“He hasn’t been the same since that night when he did all of the night feeds by himself.” Nasta said. “It’s why I didn’t want you doing all of them last night. What time were you up?”
Harry sighed. “Four. I got up when Leolin needed a nappy change and I brought the girls down with me. I started the washing off and now six hours later, I’ve done all the hand wash things and three loads of washing.”

Nasta shook his head. “I’ve got a week off coming up soon; I swear you won’t be lifting a damn finger during that one week. How is your stomach?”

Closing his eyes Harry knew that he couldn’t lie, but he also knew what was coming as he laid a hand over the caesarean scar.

“Hurting. Quite badly too. I vaulted both baby gates at eight this morning when me and Blaise heard a thump coming from the nursery. Braiden had climbed out of his cot and dropped to the floor, he was completely fine, but it scared both me and Blaise into rushing up to him. I wasn’t thinking of what I’d do to my belly, only what was happening to my babies.”

Max handed Regan to Nasta and went digging in his potions case again; Harry accepted and swallowed the familiar pain reliever under his mates’ watchful gazes down in one go.

“Thank you.” He said softly.

“You can’t take any more now until later tonight. So take it easy.” Max warned him.

Harry nodded, even though he knew that he wouldn’t be taking anything easy today. It was coming up to March, it being the last week of February and he had a lot going on in March, what with Ezrah’s visit, Henley’s visit, Kimberly’s ninety-second birthday which was on the tenth and Sanex’s forty-first which was on the eighteenth.

“Did Ezrah owl you back?” Max asked.

Harry nodded. “He’s coming on Wednesday the third of March for a couple of hours; he chose a day where Lathen isn’t working, so he’ll be coming too.”

“I got the feeling that he didn’t like us as much as Ezrah.” Nasta mumbled.
“I don’t think it was that. After what Dain and Kailen told us about how Ezrah is treated, I think he’s just overprotective and suspicious of everyone who goes near him. I mean how would you react if it was me who was being spat on in the street every time I dredged up the courage to leave the house? If it was me who was called horrible names and avoided like I was diseased and thrown out of shops just because my Father had done terrible things before I was even old enough to know what he was doing?”

Nasta sighed. “I’d probably be worse than Lathen.” He admitted softly.

Harry nodded. “So just calm yourself down, Lathen doesn’t mean anything by it, he just wants to protect the man who he loves so very much. We’d do no less if we were in their boat.”

Harry went back to the washing and Max and Nasta ate their breakfasts, forcing Harry to eat something too when he’d distractedly, foolishly, admitted that he hadn’t eaten anything yet as he sorted out the swap over of the washing. He couldn’t wait until it was all gone.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Another two hours and Nasta was gone, Max was preparing to go to work and there was still no sign of Draco.

“Are you sure you don’t want me to stay for a while longer?” Max asked.

Harry rolled his eyes. “Just get going before you’re late. Its midday already, Draco must have caught up on his sleep by now, I’ll go and give him a nudge in a minute and lure him out of bed with a cup of tea. You’ve helped me with lunch, you’ve fed the kids and made sure the kitchen is as spotless as it can be with all that washing on the floor and the kids are down for their nap, all eight of them are currently sleeping for once, I’ll be just fine.”

Max nodded. “I only have to go in for a few hours today; I’ll be back at three.”

Harry nodded his understanding and he kissed Max goodbye, ignoring the hand that slid down his jeans and groped at him. He was glad that he hadn’t told his mates he was going commando for the last few days, he’d have a bruised bum by now for sure.

Max was gone then and Harry took a deep, cleansing breath as he looked around and smiled at his spotless living room. The kids had only been brought in here to nap today, so they hadn’t had a chance to mess it up with their toys yet, but he was sure that by the time their dinnertime rolled around it would look like a bomb had hit it.

Harry checked on the washing situation, he’d done a few more loads, but he was still swarmed with dirty clothes everywhere.

Groaning he cleaned up the area that he had penned the kids in, removed the playpen and put it back in the living room folded up, collected all of the toys into the chest and put it back into the living room. That took him an hour to do and his pain potion was starting to wear off, he could feel the small twinges building back up to actual pain, but he ignored it. He was good at doing that.

He dragged the washing out of the tumble dryer and dumped it into a washing bucket before he got the wet washing from the washing machine and moved that to the tumble dryer, set that off and set another load of dirty washing off, he was finally on his last load of whites before he could start on the several piles of coloured clothes and then it was only the darks left.

He sat in the living room and folded the bucket of washing up before moving the bucket back to the utility room before he boiled the kettle, everything was done for now, he just had to wait for the washing to finish yet again, for the kids to wake up and he had to take the folded things upstairs to put it away.

While the kettle was boiling he did just that, taking the folded washing up the stairs and he put it all away, leaving the things for their bedroom for last as he meticulously put everything away before he went into the master bedroom to put away all of their clothes and the newborn clothes too and went to check on Draco. It was unusual that he had slept this late, especially when he hadn’t done any night feeds, but Nasta was right, the whole night doing all of them the other week had changed him and he was still suffering for it, so Harry didn’t blame him for catching a decent twelve, thirteen hour sleep where he could.

That all changed when he sat on the side of the bed and touched Draco’s arm to give him a gentle shake. Draco’s skin was burning. Panicked he put his hand over Draco’s forehead. He was even hotter there.

“Draco! Wake up!” Harry said loudly, shaking him vigorously.

Draco moaned weakly. “‘Arry, don’t feel so well.”

Harry nodded jerkily. “I know, love. I’m going to go and get you a glass of water and something to help with the fever.”

“Don’t leave me.” Draco croaked out weakly.

“It’ll be just fine, Draco. I’m not leaving you; I’m just going to get you something to help.”
Harry rushed down the stairs and the first person he thought to floo call was Aneirin. He knew that Myron was in work, he knew that Richard was busy setting up the court case for him, Marianna was on a heat period, Molly Weasley would have been too overbearing and would insist on helping Draco too, which his mate would absolutely loath, but Aneirin was just home from a business trip, he was going to come and visit them tomorrow anyway.

Harry explained what had happened and Aneirin agreed to come over right away, Harry didn’t wait as he rushed to the kitchen and got a cool glass of water and used his wand to summon the potions case down from where Max had put it, digging around for a fever reducer. He was dismayed to find only the one vial. Max hadn’t had a spare day to replenish their personal potions stock.

“Harry?” Aneirin called out quietly.

“In the kitchen.” He called back.

“Are you okay? You sounded terrified.”

“I am, Draco’s burning up, I’ve never felt a fever so high before! I’ve got so much to do today and if I have to stay with Draco, then there’s no one to look after the kids. This is our only fever reducer, and I…I don’t think it’ll be enough, I think it’s too weak a dosage. I think Draco needs the hospital.”

“Don’t worry about the kids, I’ll sort them out. If you think that Draco needs the hospital then take him now, it could help him more than keeping him in bed and feeding him potions that aren’t going to help him.”

Harry nodded and he rushed up the stairs with the water and he helped Draco sip at it, but it became increasingly obvious that something was really, seriously wrong when Draco’s head lolled backwards; his body too weak to even hold himself upright to take a few sips of water.

Harry wasn’t taking any chances or risks with his mate and he ripped the duvet from Draco’s fever flushed body and quickly used a feather light charm so that he could actually pick Draco up. His stomach muscles still protested fiercely.

He rushed down the stairs, almost falling down them in his haste and he shared a panicked look with Aneirin, who checked on Draco and shook his head.

“Get him to the hospital, now.” Aneirin ordered.

“Can you call the others, Nasta, Max and Blaise, they should be with us. Max is due home in forty minutes anyway. Oh and Draco’s parents, call them too.” Harry said even as he fumbled the jar of floo powder on the mantel piece.

“I will as soon as you’re gone.” Aneirin promised calmly.

Harry nodded and then he was gone, lost to the sea of fireplaces and falling out gracelessly, holding Draco tightly and cradling him on his lap, despite Draco being bigger and heavier, it was very awkward and Draco was bulky, but he didn’t care as he forced himself back to his feet after his graceless floo exit.

“I need a Healer, now.” He said as he reached the welcome witch, glad that the hospital wasn’t that busy at quarter past two in the afternoon. “He’s dying.” He said melodramatically, but the welcome witch took note and put out an immediate call for a Healer.

It took a minute, maybe two, but it felt like an hour to Harry as he was ushered away quickly to a private room and he placed a moaning Draco down on the bed and tried to comfort him as a Healer waved his wand blurringly fast on the opposite side of him.

He felt Nasta calling to him, asking where he was so that he could follow, but Harry couldn’t call with the Healer right next to him, so he was anxious and bouncy as he watched the Healer work on an unresponsive Draco.

“I need you out…”

“I’m not leaving him!” Harry hissed.

“Just for a while, I can’t work with you in the way, I’m sorry, but you have to leave. There is a waiting room just next door, as soon as I know anything, you’ll be informed immediately.”

Harry nodded and kissed Draco’s too hot cheek gently before he went next door, at least this way he could call to the frantic Nasta.

He let out the call and felt it rumble back from his three mates. It took six minutes for them to arrive and Lucius and Narcissa were with them.

“What happened?” Three men demanded all at once and Harry burrowed into Max, the only mate who hadn’t started shouting at him the moment they’d seen him.
“I don’t know anything. Draco was sleeping longer than usual, we thought he was just catching up on his missed sleep, but I went up to call him at two O’clock and he was so hot, we only had the one fever reducer and it wouldn’t have been strong enough. I brought him straight here, no messing about. I called Aneirin, told him to call all of you and I got Draco here. The Healer said he’d come and let us know what was happening as soon as he could.”

“You did the right thing.” Nasta assured him.

“I knew it was strange that he was sleeping for so long, I didn’t…I never thought for a minute that he was sick.”

“Perhaps you should have.” Lucius sneered through gritted teeth. “Draco has never in his life slept past nine in the morning, not even during the holidays, you should have known that something was wrong, perhaps then my only son wouldn’t be in a hospital!”

“I understand that you are upset, but you will not speak to Harry like that.” Max growled threateningly, his body language screaming aggressive. “We all love Draco here and none of us wanted this to happen, but it has. Harry did exactly the right thing the moment he found out that Draco was sick. We’ve all been tired lately, you can’t imagine the exhaustion of looking after eight children, two of them only five weeks old and waking up every three hours for food, it’s tiring and if we’re by some miracle given the chance to sleep a few extra hours, we take it. Draco is no different regardless of his childhood sleeping patterns, he’s a Father now, everything has changed and I will not stand here and listen as you blame this on us, we couldn’t have prevented this or known that it would happen, we aren’t Seers.”

Harry huddled with his three mates as they waited desperately for news on Draco with two silent, pinched faced Malfoys. It was taking too long and Harry was starting to feel sick with worry, nerves and the anticipation of the wait.

It took hours and hours, the clock on the wall ticking by slowly, seemingly not moving at all as Harry stared at it unblinkingly. He couldn’t believe that he was back in the hospital just months after the catastrophe that was Leolin and Calix’s illnesses, only today he was facing the very real possibility of losing his beloved mate.

Five hours it took, five incredibly long, agonising, silent hours before someone came to see them. Harry felt his lungs constrict and his whole body went icy cold just from the look on the Healer’s face.

“I’m sorry. It’s not good news.” The Healer told them and Harry fell backwards into Nasta’s arms, his knees collapsing on him. This couldn’t be happening to his family. Not again.
Chapter End Notes

A/N: I loved this ending, the perfect pay back in my eyes. Again we’re looking at a week before the next update, so I won’t be leaving you on this cliffhanger for long.

That’s it for this week, I will see you lovelies next week, I hope you’ve all enjoyed this chapter and the fruits of my evil plotting, this was a long time coming and I should have done it sooner, but it decided to come out later than I’d planned, but there we go, I got it done eventually, enjoy the wait for the next chapter,

StarLight Massacre. X
Love and Care

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Harry huddled with his three mates as they waited desperately for news on Draco with two silent, pinched faced Malfoys. It was taking too long and Harry was starting to feel sick with worry, nerves and the anticipation of the wait.

It took hours and hours, the clock on the wall ticking by slowly, seemingly not moving at all as Harry stared at it unblinkingly. He couldn’t believe that he was back in the hospital just months after the catastrophe that was Leolin and Calix’s illnesses, only today he was facing the very real possibility of losing his beloved mate.

Five hours it took, five incredibly long, agonising, silent hours before someone came to see them. Harry felt his lungs constrict and his whole body went icy cold just from the look on the Healer’s face.

“I’m sorry. It’s not good news.” The Healer told them and Harry fell backwards into Nasta’s arms, his knees collapsing on him. This couldn’t be happening to his family. Not again.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Ninety-Three – Love and Care

“What do you mean you can’t find anything at all wrong with my son?!” Lucius demanded of the Healer, who was fending off questions left, right and centre.

“He is fevered, dangerously so, but we can’t find the cause, which is why we have taken so long in coming to inform you of his condition, we can’t find anything wrong with him, though something is definitely wrong, we just can’t find what it might be.”

Harry was up in Nasta’s arms, his knees having given out on him and Nasta was unwilling to let him stand back on his feet, not that Harry blamed him as his legs were quivering like leaves still, he didn’t think his knees would hold him up.

Knowing that something was wrong with Draco, yet hearing that the Healers didn’t know what it was, was killing something inside of him and all the thoughts and worry from those months of having Leolin in the hospital came rushing back like a lead weight.

Myron and Richard had been told and they were keeping Aneirin company with Alexander and Kimberley. Molly had been informed and she’d popped in to check on the kids and she had taken one look at the washing all over the kitchen floor and had taken it upon herself to take care of it with Kimberley’s help, huffing all the while that men pushed things to the way side and couldn’t do laundry properly.

Harry was thankful that he wouldn’t have to go home to a house filled with dirty clothes, as all of his attention was now on Draco and the little niggle of worry in the back of his mind about Leolin, who had spent the night in their bedroom with them, in the same room as a sick Draco, maybe it was time to move Leolin to his own room, perhaps this was the last wakeup call that they needed. If they got sick, then because Leolin slept in their room, they were risking his very life by keeping him so close to them. They needed a bigger house and Leolin needed to be as isolated as possible to minimise the risk of him getting sick.

They stayed all night in the hospital, just waiting for the Healers to do more tests and find the cause of why Draco was so sick. Harry caught a nap on Max’s lap. He was snuggled in tightly, sleeping in the crook of Max’s arm like a little child, but he didn’t get much more than an hour before he was awake and pacing the waiting room tiredly.

“I wish they’d tell us something.” Harry said hoarsely. He’d been crying silently on and off all afternoon and for most of the night too.

“They don’t know anything to tell us.” Max told him from where he was sat with his head in his hands between his spread knees.

Harry nodded. “I know.” He said softly as his whole body quivered.

“Come here.” Nasta coaxed him gently.

Harry did as he was asked and he was pulled to sit on Nasta’s lap, snuggled in and Harry cuddled in and readily accepted the cwtch from Nasta. He fell asleep again quickly for another hour in the silent and excruciatingly tense waiting room, but he couldn’t stay asleep for any longer than an hour. He was too worried and not even breathing in Nasta’s calming pheromones had helped in calming him down. He was too stressed, too worried and the tension was like a thick, suffocating blanket. Waiting was the one thing that he didn’t want to be doing, but it was the only thing that he could do. The only thing that any of them could do. They had to wait for news…they had to wait for Draco.

----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

After another two full days where they only got to see Draco a handful of times in which their mate was lying listlessly in a bed, always fast asleep and the Healers still had no clue what was wrong. Lucius Malfoy had started threatening legal action if they didn’t find out what was wrong with his son and heal him. Typical of him really, Harry had expected him to start doing so sooner, but the good news was that Draco’s dangerously high fever had finally broken and he was now sitting up and talking with them.

“Honestly, I can’t remember anything, I can’t even remember feeling sick before the day that you woke me up.” He insisted to them when they gently questioned him.

“A fever wouldn’t come on that quickly.” Max said with a thoughtful frown.

“Well obviously it did and you missed it!” Narcissa hissed as she clutched at Draco’s hand tightly.

“Mother.” Draco chastised sternly. “I am telling you that I felt fine before I woke up that day. I went to bed feeling fine and healthy. I was fine, a bit tired, but fine. I didn’t even know that I was sick, how could they have known when I didn’t even know myself?”

Narcissa stuck her nose up, but Draco pulled his hand from hers and clutched at Blaise’s instead, giving her a serious look.

“Are you feeling okay now?” Harry asked tearfully. “Do you need a drink? Can I get you anything?”

Draco smiled. “I’m fine, love. I promise. I feel absolutely fine.”

“The Healers are happy with the progress that you’ve made and they’re going to release you today.” Nasta said walking back into the room after grilling the poor Healers.

“They don’t know what caused it yet!” Harry said.

“Do you not want me back home?”

“Of course I do! But how can they just release you when they don’t know what caused your fever? It could happen again!”
“We’ll keep a close eye on him.” Blaise said with a nod. “I got fired so between us both we can keep everything sorted.”

“You got fired? What did you do?” Draco asked interestedly.

The four of them shared a look and Blaise sighed. “Because I’m only an apprentice and a new one at that, my supervisor didn’t like that I took these last two days off from the grunt work that he had me doing or that I left work early when you were rushed into the hospital. He called me into work yesterday specially, just to ask me to choose, well, he shouted his ultimatum at me really, spraying me with spit in the process, that I could either be a family man or a businessman, that I couldn’t be both. I told him exactly where he could shove those thoughts, that I would always choose my family over anything else, and then I scooped up a handful of floo powder and came straight back home and I won’t be going back.”

“You got fired because I was stuck here? Blaise, you should have just gone in to work.” Draco groaned.

“Of course I wasn’t going to go to work while you were in the damn hospital with a fever so high that you weren’t even conscious and you couldn’t even remember your own name.” Blaise scoffed. “There is nowhere that I’d rather be than right here by your bedside while you recover.”

“Have any more of you lost your jobs over this?” Draco asked with a sigh.

“No.” Nasta said simply. “I’ll have some paperwork to catch up on, but they can’t afford to lose one of the only remaining Dragonologists they have at the Brecon Reserve. They know that even if I am fired, as long as it’s not for something serious like negligence towards a dragon or stealing and smuggling out the dragon eggs, then I’ll only be snapped up by another reserve within the week and they’d have to go through the gruelling process of trying to find another Dragonologist to replace me with quickly or they risk the dragons suffering.”

Max shrugged. “Highly qualified Potion’s Master here.” He reminded them. “They wouldn’t fire me if I blew up the offices on purpose. I carry that little firm on my shoulders, or haven’t you noticed that if something goes wrong or if there is a huge outbreak they run straight to me? They wouldn’t have dared suggest that I go in while my lover is in the hospital sick and they definitely would not have been foolish enough to shout out an ultimatum at me because they know exactly what the answer would be and I’d just go to a rival firm and they’d lose business. Hell, not to be arrogant or anything but they might even have to close down if I left and went to a rival firm, because nearly all of the contracts they have with little clinics and pharmacies around Britain are actually in my name, so they’d be coming with me to my new firm.”
“My job is secure too.” Harry piped up. “All eight children are ready and waiting for me when we get back home. Xerxes and Enrique are looking after them today.”

“I think it’s too soon.” Narcissa said with a soft quiver in her lips and chin.

“You all worry too much, it was a fever. That’s all.” Draco insisted.

“I’m fine, Harry. I swear.”

“It was a further two hours before Draco was officially released from the hospital and, as they’d said, they were taking no chances, Max went through the floo first, Nasta went through the floo with Draco afterwards, followed Blaise and then Harry, but without a mate to hold him up as neither Blaise or Max had thought to go through the floo with him, Harry flew out and landed on his back, cracking his head against the fireguard and then the floor as he did so.
He groaned pathetically as he was swooped up from the floor, all the way up from it and when he first opened his eyes, he thought Myron was holding him.

“When did you get here, Myron? I thought you were in work.” He asked before he realised that he wasn’t looking at Myron, but Xerxes.

“Do we have to go back to the hospital now?” Draco groaned. “I just got home!”

Harry blinked and found himself looking at Max. He frowned and looked back over to Xerxes, then back at Max.

“I just took you from my Uncle, Harry.” Max explained slowly and carefully, patiently.

“Is he going to be okay?” Blaise asked.

Max poked and prodded around Harry’s head before using his thumb to lift his eyelids to check his eyeballs.

“Nuh, nuh, nuh. I’m fine.” He said as he wriggled, trying to get down.

“He’s fine.” Max said, even as he held Harry tighter so that his wriggling didn’t get him anywhere. “His pupils are both even and they’re dilating and contracting normally. We’ll just have to keep an eye on him too.”

“Why didn’t one of you take him through? You know that he can’t land after magical forms of travelling.” Nasta demanded.

“You know, I just didn’t think.” Max said with a sigh, pushing his fingers through his hair. “It’s always you who carries him through, so it never crossed my mind.”

“I didn’t either.” Blaise groaned. “I’m so sorry, Harry.”

“It’s okay. I’m fine.” Harry insisted. “Anyone could mistake Xerxes for Myron at a quick glance.”
Harry was sat on the settee next to a newly emerged Marianna, who was looking tired but happy after her recent heat period. She was snuggling with Braiden, who was fast asleep on her chest.

Tea was passed around and Harry noticed that Lucius and Narcissa kept looking at Draco as if expecting him to drop dead at any moment, but they were a little warmer towards the rest of them now that Draco was finally out of the hospital. Harry felt the same as they had; they’d all been scared when hearing about Draco’s hospitalisation.

They may not have known what was wrong with Draco, but he was home for now and Harry counted that as a positive thing as Draco chuckled happily at a joke that Enrique had just told them. Everything seemed fine, the house was back in order, all the washing was done, the house was spotlessly clean and the kids were all clean and happy. It was like the last three days hadn’t happened, like Draco hadn’t been in the hospital with a dangerously high fever. It was a strange feeling and Harry didn’t like that Draco had been released from the hospital before the Healers knew what had caused his fever in the first place. It seemed wrong, but the Healers believed it to be just a fever that had taken a while to break, Harry wasn’t so easily convinced and he made a mental note to keep a very, very close eye on his big, blond mate.

March came in a hail of heavy rain and Harry was now secure enough to stop checking Draco’s temperature twice a day, much to his mate’s relief. Leolin hadn’t shown even the slightest hint of any fever or illness, but Harry had moved him into his own room regardless.

He had barely slept during the first night that they had moved him into the last remaining spare bedroom through the worry that he felt over his little boy being in a separate room and he had checked on him every hour or so, despite the baby monitor that was right next to his ear, but Leolin had been absolutely fine all night and he had been fine every night since.

Sighing over the slight bit of independence that he was allowing Leolin, Harry made sure that the living room was clean and well presented. It was Wednesday the third of March, the day that Ezrah was coming to visit them with Lathen and it was two weeks since Dain and Kailen had come to visit, so they were coming back around to visit them today as well. It would be an all Faerie reunion.

True to his word, Nasta finally had a week off and Harry had barely lifted a single finger since. Max was off too and Blaise no longer had a job, but he was using the small amount of money that he’d made to go further into his own business venture. Nasta had kept his promise and he had not allowed Draco to go job hunting, in fact Draco had barely been able to move a few feet before Nasta was hanging over him asking him what he wanted or needed and why he was up and walking.

Even as Harry cleaned up a few of the toys that had been thrown across the room, Draco got up from the settee and like a homing missile; Nasta appeared at the doorway a few seconds later.

“Do you have a charm on me or something?” Draco demanded.
“Where are you going?”

“I need the bathroom!” Draco snapped. “Leave me alone, I’m fine! The Healers have been back and they’ve said that I’m fine! It was a simple fever, Nas, I feel better than ever. Just give me some space.”

“Nasta.” Harry called out. “I can’t lift the table on my own; can you do it for me?”

Draco winked at Harry behind Nasta’s back as Nasta immediately came to pick up the coffee table and he moved it over to underneath the window to give them more space for their guests. Harry was still recovering from his self-caesarean almost two months ago so he couldn’t have moved the table on his own, but Draco knew exactly why Harry had chosen that moment to distract Nasta and he was very grateful it seemed.

“I am being a bit…overbearing, aren’t I?” Nasta sighed. Of course Nasta knew exactly what was going on, not a lot got past their top dominant.

“A little.” Harry answered honestly. “But I understand where you’re coming from. I want to swaddle him up, I want to swaddle up Leolin too, but I can’t. Draco is a grown man and he knows when he’s sick or not and he’s not. I have to let Leolin go in order for him to grow and gain independence. I don’t like it, but I still have to do it.”

“I thought that you’d never let Leolin leave our bedroom.” Nasta said with a smile.

“He’s coming up to fifteen months old now. I have to let him have a small amount of independence, even if it is just his own room. I’d never forgive myself if, after this, I kept him in our room and one of us got sick again and passed it onto Leolin. We got lucky with Draco, if one of us got ill and Leolin…if he died because of that, I would live with that heavy guilt until the day that I died. So it’s time I think, to give him his own room, but Nas, please. We need a bigger house. We have no spare rooms left now and Eva and Ave will need their own room soon enough…We won’t fit seven cots in the one room.”

“I know, love, a month or so more, then we can talk about it, I promise.”

“My court date is in a few months.” Harry said softly.
“That’ll be over and done with soon, Richard will take care of you and when you come home, we’ll look after you too. We won’t let anything happen to you. When do you have to see the mind Healer again?”

“Couple of weeks.” Harry muttered unhappily.

He’d had a few more visits with his mind Healer since the first time back in early September and he’d stopped having certain nightmares, but the stress of the upcoming court appearance was bringing out certain fears and Harry often found himself down in the kitchen at two in the morning shakily drinking a cup of tea while the cold sweat dried on his body. Nasta had encouraged him to get into contact with his mind Healer about the new nightmares and Harry had given in and his next appointment had been moved forward a couple of weeks. He wasn’t looking forward to that appointment, he always felt picked apart after a visit to his mind Healer.

At exactly nine in the morning Dain and Kailen flooed over, with only Warren as a bodyguard, Auric was nowhere in sight and Harry was glad of that.

“How are you?” Harry asked. “Please sit down, the kids are just finishing up a nap, some of them are awake and Leolin is very stubbornly refusing to sleep.”

Kailen smiled at that. “Where is the little Unseelie?”

“At annoying his Daddy Blaise.” Harry said with a grin. “He soiled a nappy and five minutes after being changed into a clean one, he wetted it.”

“He’s just showing his individualism.” Nasta insisted.

“He’s doing it on purpose because he’s rebelling.” Harry said with a decisive nod. “Where’s Ezrah?”

Dain and Kailen shared a look and sighed almost together. Harry’s brow creased.

“He’ll be following shortly, but he had trouble propositioning the court with his reason to leave the city. Some did not like the idea of him coming to see a Faerie babe; they seemed to believe that he would…make off with Leolin.”

“What utter bollocks.” Harry snapped. “I swear I’m going to go and slap every vile fucker on that stupid court, starting with that fucking Alston.”

Warren chuckled. “I would laugh for the next decade if you did.”

“Let me guess. It was Alston, Zuzana, Donella and Siusan who didn’t want him to come?” Nasta bit out.

Dain nodded. “Kailen, Narilla and I immediately said that he should be allowed to leave as he wished, that he should not even have to proposition the court to visit friends, Eitri agreed with us and Sindri agreed as well, so it was ruled that Ezrah could come and visit, though I have a letter to you from Eitri. I believe that he wants to come and visit you as well. He is very lonely. It’s not right for a Fae a little over a century old to be so lonely.”

Harry took the letter and opened it, smiling at the slightly sharp letters. He didn’t know why but, as stupid as it sounded, he’d expected Eitri’s letters to be as soft and curly as his hair.

“He’s asking to come and visit as soon as it’s convenient to us.” Harry told Nasta. “I’d like to see him again.”

Nasta nodded. “We’ll find a day where we’re all off again so he can come around, for now, let’s get those kids in here to ruin all the cleaning we’ve done today.”

“You have removed your table.” Dain observed.

Harry nodded. “We thought it would give the kids more room to move around.”

The floo flared up again, making the minute warning sound that let them know that someone not tied into their wards was coming through and then Ezrah was there, smiling happily, but now that he looked, Harry could see the sadness in his eyes, the tension around his mouth and the lines on his forehead.
“Thank you so much for inviting us, even after Dain and Kailen told you my story. I’ve been giving messages of health for your little babe every day since I met him, twice a day when I heard that he was unwell.”

Harry smiled back at Ezrah as Lathen came through, still strong, still tall and he looked angry. Harry reasoned that it must have been the meeting with the court and what they must have said to and about Ezrah that had him so visibly angry.

“Where are your babes?” Ezrah asked curiously. “Are all of them well? You had six babes, yes?”

“I’ve got eight of them now.” Harry sighed. “I gave birth seven weeks ago to two new Dracken daughters. But they’re all fine, they’re just waking up from their midmorning naps, but a few of them are pestering one of my other mate’s, Max, in the kitchen. Would you like tea?”

“Tea would be lovely, thank you.” Ezrah replied with a sweet smile.

The formal ice was broken when Calix came rushing into the room on his hands and knees as if the hounds of hell were after him, little hands and knees and feet working as fast as they could to get him moving as quickly as possible.

Max walked in behind him with Regan on his arm and he grinned at the newcomers.

“Hi, I’m Max.” He greeted.

“They don’t care who you are.” Harry teased with a laugh. “They’re here for our angels.”

“We don’t have any.” Max teased back.

Harry laughed and bent to pick up Calix, who had crawled to his feet and had reared back on his knees, his arms up as he chanted ‘Mummy’ over and over.

“Is that one of your Dracken sons?” Ezrah asked. “Lathen says that they’re more advanced than most babies.”
“No, this is Calix, he’s a wizard, but he might seem advanced, but he’s actually a little behind his other siblings because he refuses to walk, the others are all up on their feet, but this little one has absolutely no interest. Here.”

Harry thrust Calix into Ezrah’s arms and watched in slight amusement as the Fae rushed to do everything that he thought he needed to, to support and hold Calix securely, his face a wash of panic.

“Please sit down.” Harry offered. “Max, tea please, my love.”

Max laughed and swooped Harry up into his arms and into a passionate kiss before setting him down and going back into the kitchen. “Anything for you, my sweet!”

“You two are so childish.” Draco sighed as he came back into the room.

Ezrah and Lathen stared at him and looked at one another with shock and surprise.

“He looks a lot like Eitri, doesn’t he?” Kailen said with a smile. “It took a while to get used to him too.”

Draco snorted and Nasta settled him back on the settee and sat next to him, making Draco groan.

“Muma.”

Harry turned and hefted up Regan, kissing him and he sat on the one chair and sat Regan with him.

“Toon.” Regan said, pulling on Harry’s sleeve.

“You want to watch cartoons? Come here then.”

Harry got back up and sat Regan on one of the little tiny chairs that was clustered around several other tiny chairs in various colours and turned on the TV, watched with fascination by the five Faeries as he put the creepy cartoons on a low volume for Regan.
As soon as Calix heard the jingle for the cartoons he screeched and wriggled right off of a panicked Ezrah’s lap, to the floor, where he crawled to sit next to his brother, clambering into his own tiny chair and he clapped his hands and turned to Harry and pointed at the TV.

Harry laughed at him and ruffled his hair before he went back to the room, where the Faeries were sat down and watching the cartoons with a sort of horrified fascination as Regan and Calix spoke to one another, spoke to the TV and wiggled their little bodies to the music.

Blaise walked in and the star of the show was finally in the room. Leolin was scowling heavily, looking like the epitome of the sinister baby who would stab out your eyes in your sleep as he all but glared at everyone.

“What’s that face for?” Harry chided with a smile and as soon as Leolin caught sight of him, he gave a gummy grin and reached one arm out for him.

“Ma.”

Harry took Leolin from Blaise and hugged him tightly, kissing him and tucking him into his arm.

“He speaks?” Lathen asked with amazement.

“He took some Dracken blood from Nasta and I.” Harry explained. “He’s a little more advanced, he’s sitting up a bit, he’s speaking and he understands certain things that are said to him.”

“Has he come on any more since we saw him half a moon turn ago?”

Harry pulled a face. “He improves daily.” Harry said. “But there’s not really anything that stands out as being any major new development that we can put into words.”

Harry handed Leolin over to Ezrah when a sleepy Braiden toddled into the room. He was so wonky on his feet that Harry went to him, just in case he fell over.

“I can’t wait until I have babes.” Ezrah sighed wistfully as he cradled Leolin. “Thank you for inviting me over. I haven’t seen any babes in so long now.”
“It’s fine. I can’t believe that you thought you wouldn’t know what to do with one, you’re a natural.” Harry told him as Max came back in with a tray of tea.

“What did you do with my table?” He demanded. “Stop stealing my tables!”

“It was in the way!” Harry insisted. “Use the side table. There are five tables in this room, five!”

“If you had it your way there wouldn’t be any.” Max huffed.

“They clutter the place up, stop buying tables!”

“I like tables.”

Harry staved off the blush that that purposefully emphasised comment caused. He knew exactly why Max liked tables, or rather why he liked any and all flat surfaces.

It took a couple of minutes before Farren and Tegan were in the living room too, Tegan was cruising around the room, using people’s legs and the settees in place of the coffee table and Farren joined his brothers watching the cartoons on the TV. He only just managed to fit in one of the tiny chairs.

Eva and Ave were being passed around, one on Lathen, who looked seriously uncomfortable with her in his arms and the other on Dain, who was getting more comfortable with all the babies around.

“Will you be coming back to the city with Leolin at all?” Ezrah asked him.

Harry nodded. “Sindri would like to see him more, but we didn’t want to travel too often with him, it seemed like a needless risk to us, so we’ll go a few times a year to the city with him, the rest of the time the courts can come to visit us here if they wish, though Dain and Kailen are welcome whenever they like as they’re family.”

“Family?” Lathen asked with a frown.

Harry cocked his head. “Yes, they’re Nasta’s several times great-grandfathers, which makes them the same to Leolin. It’s where Nasta’s Faerie blood comes from and how we managed to have a Faerie babe in the first place.”
“What is your last name?” Lathen asked Nasta curiously.

“Delericey.” Nasta answered.

Lathen smiled then and Ezrah chuckled. “Definitely of Faerie blood, the Delericeys were well known Faeries.”

“Until Trefor and our children were all killed.” Dain said coldly.

“I…I meant no offence.” Ezrah replied in a small, meek voice, averting his gaze, hunching his shoulders and shifting immediately closer to Lathen for security and comfort.

“Enough of that.” Harry snapped. “You are all guests in my home, you’ll behave as such. Ezrah meant no offence and you shouldn’t have taken any. I suppose it’s well known in the city what happened? Obviously it’s not as well known that there are surviving Delericeys and I doubt any of it came out before Leolin was introduced to the courts just after his birth.”

“I didn’t…I wasn’t directing that statement at Ezrah.” Dain said insistently. “It was more directed at myself.”

“You can stop that too.” Harry sniffed. “You couldn’t have known what was going to happen; you had no idea that that filth was going to be at that funeral also.”

“I should have, we should have gone with him, we just didn’t want to sit and pay our respects to a woman who had sold the man that we loved to a piece of filth who hurt him so badly.”

“You had no way of knowing.” Harry said forcefully. “It is no one’s fault, just Jediah’s; he is the one who killed Trefor and your six children. It is on his head that the blame should rest. You’ve been needlessly carrying around this guilt for hundreds of years, it wasn’t your fault.”

“It’s hard not to feel guilt over something when others make you feel the weight of the guilt.” Ezrah said quietly. “I have been paying for my Father’s crimes for as long as I can remember. I don’t even know what he looked like or what he did, I only have what others have told me to go on and the court reports that I’ve read. Otherwise I wouldn’t even know. I was too young to understand, too young to remember, but still I feel the press of the guilt pushed onto me.”

“You shouldn’t feel guilty either.” Harry said as he folded his arms over his chest firmly.

“I know, Lathen tells me every morn and eve that I shouldn’t, but the situation in the city…they won’t let me forget what my Father did.”

“Why don’t you live outside of the city then?” Blaise asked.

Both Ezrah and Lathen reared back and looked at one another as if they had never thought of living outside of the city.

“It could make you happier.” Kailen told them kindly. “You wouldn’t have to deal with such prejudiced behaviour or the spitting and sneering.”

“The courts would never allow me to leave. They want me close so they can watch me, they are always watching because the other residents in the city worry that I’ll do something.” Ezrah said sadly, as if fearing to get his hopes up.

“Before today you were worried that the courts would never let you come out of the city to visit Harry, yet they allowed you, perhaps it would be better if we lived outside of the city.” Lathen said.

“But your job, your house.” Ezrah said.

“None of that is as important to me as your health and happiness.” Lathen insisted.

“You can still keep your job.” Dain told him. “You’d just have to travel to and from the city.”

“Would the courts really allow me out of the city?”

“They have no good reason to keep you inside the city.” Dain said firmly. “If they try, then Kailen and I will fight for you, Eitri will fight for you too and Narilla adores you.”
Ezrah seemed happier and he turned that blinding, beaming smile to Lathen.

“Can we, please? Do you mind?”

Lathen sighed and he pulled Ezrah into his arms and held him tight.

“I would do anything to keep you safe and happy, honestly it was only a matter of time before I lost my temper and I ended someone’s miserable life for the things they say and do to you, the only thing that stops me is the thought of you being alone, of having to deal with those beasts alone without me. It’ll be good for us both to get away.”

“I’ll find you a suitable place to live.” Warren offered. “I’ve done so for several others. Perhaps without the stresses of the city you might finally start your family.”

“Do you think?” Ezrah said excitedly.

Harry smiled at him and shared a look with his mates, because he knew they would do anything to make him happy, as he would do anything to make them happy and he still remembered how very happy he’d been to have Braiden, his very first baby. He felt so bad for Ezrah, because he wanted a baby so badly and he’d be such a good Mother, he just couldn’t get pregnant. He hoped that it was just the stress of the city and living with peoples hate and spite that was preventing his much wanted pregnancy and not anything medical.

Lathen loved and cared for Ezrah so much that Harry had to go and seek out his mates for a hug, grinning as he watched the couple with Leolin between them. They’d be such good parents, he knew it, they just needed the chance to prove it.

The morning passed quickly and easily, the babies moving around to play with their toys once the cartoons went off and they didn’t go back once the next cartoon came on, so Harry turned the TV off and let them play, sitting down with a groaning grunt, holding his belly, so that he could sit and build a tower with Braiden and Regan, taking the blocks they handed to him once it got too high for them to reach the top, it was only still standing because of a light charm he’d put on it so that it wouldn’t wobble or fall.

That charm however didn’t stand up to a head diving Farren, who tripped over his own feet and went head long into the tower.

“Baba Fah, no! No!” Braiden cried out and he smacked Farren hard, which set the sniffling Farren to full out crying.
“No, Braiden.” Harry chastised sternly. “You do not hit.”

Braiden threw his head back and he screamed, throwing himself back on the floor and kicking his arms and legs, almost catching Regan twice, who was watching Braiden blankly.

Harry cradled Farren and combed his hair with his fingers soothingly as Nasta tackled Braiden’s tantrum, picking him up and pinning his body so that he wasn’t kicking out or hitting him and he removed him from the room.

“He’s having more and more tantrums the closer to two he gets.” Draco observed.

“They don’t call it the terrible twos for no good reason.” Max said. “They’ll all be at it soon, tantrums, rebellions, downright defiance and ‘no’ will become their favourite word. We’re in for a rough time.”

Harry sighed as he rocked Farren. “I’m not looking forward to that. Tegan started early with her particular dislike of Braiden, but that’s mostly stopped, I don’t want all of them acting like that.”

“Where’s Nasta?” Blaise asked.

“I suspect that he’s staying in the room with Braiden now that he’s climbing.”

“I’m going to go and start lunch.” Max said as he stood and checked on Harry and Farren, who was calming down now as he was rocked on Harry’s lap.

“I think that’s our cue to leave.” Dain said with a smile. “Thank you for inviting us for the morning and we hope to see you again soon.”

“As Dain said, thank you for letting us come and visit, your children are all adorable.” Ezrah told him and Harry hugged him.

“Thank you, I’m very proud of all of them and despite their tantrums and their antics, I love them fiercely.”
Their guests were gone then and Harry felt himself relaxing a little more. It’s not that he disliked any of the Faeries; he was just a little uncomfortable being himself around people who he’d only just met.

“Now we just have to get though Henley’s visit.” Blaise said.

“Oh I liked Henley, he was no trouble, he was my little crack addicted puppy.”

“He’s grown up since then, he has two babies.”

“Baby Harry.” Max snorted as he came in wiping his hands on a tea towel.

Harry rolled his eyes. “So what if he named his son after me? It’s sweet.”

“It’s creepy.” Blaise insisted. “The baby dom naming his first born son after the submissive that he couldn’t get? It’s a bit like unrequited love. It makes me wonder if his submissive knew why he wanted to name their son Harry and why she’d allow it if she did.”

“Don’t be so ridiculous, Henley knew we weren’t mates.”

“That doesn’t mean that he still didn’t want you to be his mate.”

Harry rolled his eyes. “I’m not listening to this rubbish.”

Harry took Farren out into the garden. It had been raining earlier that day, but it wasn’t raining at the moment.

Harry walked around the rain speckled garden and let Farren touch and play with the flowers and leaves that were just starting to bud. From his laughs and giggles, Farren enjoyed it, despite getting a face and his hands full of water.

Harry stayed outside only for as long as it took for him to keep his emotions in check and afterwards he took Farren back inside, washed both of their hands and then sat him in his highchair with his brothers and sister as Max was dishing up dinner.
“Nasta says we have to apologise.” Blaise said. “So I’m sorry.”

Harry clenched his hands into fists and breathed in deeply to keep himself calm.

“If you have to be told to do it, then it doesn’t mean anything.” Harry hissed through gritted teeth. “Where is Leolin?”

“He’s in the living room still.” Nasta said even as he stared at Blaise.

Harry nodded and went into the living room to his little boy and he sat with him on his lap. He heard Nasta telling the others to leave him alone and to stay in the kitchen. Harry was sure that Nasta knew exactly why he had gotten upset and why he got so riled up over Henley naming his son after him. He was honoured, touched that Henley had named his baby son after him, Max, Draco and Blaise were spoiling that by chatting so much shit about why Henley had done it when he was sure it was only supposed to be a marked show of respect that showed how much Henley was grateful that he had helped him with his confidence back when he was a newly turned sixteen year old.

Harry didn’t want Henley’s self-esteem to be damaged or his confidence to be shattered if his mates said anything about his name choices for his son in front of him. He was sure that Henley would be humiliated if they did and he didn’t want that for him at all, he wanted them to shut their damn mouths.

“Such a mess, Leolin. What am I going to do with your Daddies, hm? I love them so much, but god do they get on my nerves sometimes. Poor Uncle Henley, he already had problems with self-esteem, confidence and even his sense of self, he was hiding who he really was behind a mask of what he thought others wanted to see, it wasn’t fair. I was horrified when he started speaking, when I realised that he was hiding his true self under this mask.” Harry sighed. “That was his Father’s fault too. I’ll never treat my babies like that, and I won’t let your Daddies treat you like that either.”

Leolin looked up at him with those gorgeous gold eyes and Harry smiled at him.

“You babies are very precious to me and you Leolin, are always going to be my little Faerie baby. I’m sure your Daddies feel the same way too.”

“Da.”

Harry’s breath stopped in his chest and he swallowed through the tightness in his throat. His first instinct was to yell out excitedly to his mates, but he remembered how badly that had gone the last time he’d done so when Leolin had said his first ever word, now he had a new word and Harry calmed himself, took a deep breath as he continued smiling at Leolin as he stood up and went into the kitchen and slipped Leolin straight into Nasta’s arms.

“What is it?” Nasta asked as he looked to Harry’s shocky, ghost pale face to Leolin, who was scowling up at him.

“He said Da.” Harry told them.

Nasta’s head snapped back to him in complete surprise. “He did?”

Harry nodded. “I was just talking to him, I…I said Daddies several times and he just came right out and said Da.”

“Da.” Leolin repeated as he looked from Harry to Nasta.

Nasta moved his arms to give Leolin a proper tight cwtch and he kissed his cheek, leaving his lips against the soft skin as his fingers played with his son’s hair.

“I can’t believe how well he’s coming on.” Draco said with a grin.

“I can’t believe he did this just an hour after Dain and Kailen left and we’d told them that he hadn’t developed enough to report anything new.” Harry said as he wrapped his arms around Nasta’s neck and kissed his stubbled cheek. “I love you.”

“You are the best thing to ever happen to me.” Nasta replied with a smile.

“As long as we’re being so loved up. I adore you and I agree with Nasta, you’re the best thing to ever happen to me.” Max told him, dragging Harry backwards into a passionate kiss filled with tongue.

“I think we can all agree that Harry is the best thing to happen to all of us.” Draco said as he hugged Harry. “But right now we have five hungry babies to finish feeding.”
Harry was so pleased, so happy that he forgot all about his worry over Henley and baby Harry and instead he focused his attention on his little Leolin, who, though they might not see it, was developing mentally and physically day by day in his own way. Harry couldn’t have been prouder and as soon as the kids were down for their afternoon nap, he rushed up to the attic to send out Hedwig, Esmeralda, Jasmine and Saracen to Dain and Kailen, Alexander and Kimberly, Mr and Mrs Weasley and Lucius and Narcissa Malfoy. Nasta had gone to visit his Father in person and Max was floo calling Myron and Richard.

He couldn’t believe that Leolin now had two words in his arsenal. It didn’t seem like much and other parents might laugh at him that his almost fifteen month old son couldn’t walk, couldn’t eat solids, couldn’t even sit up unaided and only spoke two words, but to him, Leolin had crested a new milestone, because Faerie babies his age couldn’t talk at all, they couldn’t sit up and couldn’t understand what was happening around them, some year old Faerie babies couldn’t even open their eyes all the way and instead they just slitted them open to peer up uncomprehendingly at what was above them. Not his baby Leolin, not his clever, special little Faerie baby who had almost certainly taken some of his and Nasta’s Dracken blood to be as advanced as he was. Harry was so very, very glad.

Two days after Ezrah had come to visit them, Henley and his beautiful, if a bit dense, mate Anabel came to visit with their two children, Claudia and baby Harry. Amelle had popped over for a spur of the moment visit too with Eleonora and Beatrice. So the house was filled to bursting with eight adults and twelve babies.

“I can’t believe how many you have!” Henley said after introducing himself and his family at lightning speeds, hardly stopping for a breath.

Harry grinned widely, Henley hadn’t changed one single bit and he was so happy. He was less pleased that Anabel was staring at him with red cheeks and a very heavy dose of hero worship in her eyes. It made him very uncomfortable and clued him in a little more as to why Henley’s mate had allowed him to call their first son after him. He liked that idea less than Blaise’s suggestion that Henley had an unrequited love interest with him.

Harry introduced everyone, including Amelle, who was doing her best to reign in her snobby side with the newly introduced, unfamiliar submissive. She was doing very well and Harry made sure to tell her so under his breath so as not to embarrass her by announcing it to the world. Anabel wasn’t even trying to reign in her instincts as she stuck her nose in the air and kept her gaze on Harry.

“So eight of them are yours?” Henley asked.
Harry nodded. “This gorgeous, seriously clever little girl is Amelle’s and this little Princess is Amelle’s too, the others are all mine.” Harry said as he run his fingers through Eleonora’s gorgeously thick auburn hair and then indicated to Beatrice who was getting a huge cuddle from her Uncle Max.

“How old is Eleonora?” Henley asked.

“Yes, she’s almost two now, in four months, Braiden will be two in five months. I seriously don’t know where the time went, it’s like I’ve completely lost track of it.” He sighed.

“Claudia will be two in December.” Henley said, shaking his head. “It has seemed to have flown by, but then you had five more in the same December didn’t you?”

Harry nodded “Yes, the quintuplets were born at the very end of December, the thirty-first.”

“Then you had the two girls recently?”

Harry nodded again. “They were born in January. They’re seven weeks old.”

“They’re absolutely adorable.”

“So is this little guy.” Harry said as he looked at his namesake.

Henley had wrestled the little baby boy from his mate’s arms and passed Harry over to Harry. The little boy was five months old now, just a few weeks older than Amelle’s little Beatrice, and his beautiful chocolate brown eyes matched his Father’s as well as the copper brown coloured hair. He was an almost carbon copy of Henley, but he had his Mother’s softer face.

Baby Harry giggled and reached for Harry’s hair, tugging at it as he drooled all over his neck.

“Sorry, he’s teething.” Henley apologised as he watched his son drool all over him.

“Henley, I have eight babies, trust me I know all about drool, spit up, snot, vomit and all other manner of things and noisome fluids. We’re all very used to it here.” Harry said kindly as he bounced baby Harry in his arms.
“Don’t overdo it.” Nasta warned him.

Harry rolled his eyes. “I’m fine, this little fella isn’t going to cause any harm to my muscles when I’ve been hefting Farren around all morning.”

“I know, I’m just saying, don’t overdo it.”

Harry sighed and nodded. It was easier just to agree sometimes than to argue about it.

“Tegan, play nice with Eleonora and Claudia!” Harry chastised as he saw his daughter stewing over the two new girls playing with the dolls and pushchair set that Marianna had bought for her for Christmas.

The two other girls were older than Tegan and they were bigger and better on their feet than Tegan was, because despite Claudia being only a few weeks older, she had been carried to term and Tegan had been one of quintuplets who had been born three months premature and putting Tegan next to Claudia, hell putting any of his quintuplets next to Claudia, that fact was very obvious as she was almost on a size with Eleonora, Braiden and Farren, which meant she almost dwarfed their Tegan, Regan and Calix, who all looked dainty next to her. It was no wonder that Tegan was hesitating in the face of these two new, larger ‘opponents’.

“Come here.” Blaise sighed as he picked Tegan up and sat her on his hip.

Harry watched as he sat down next to Claudia and Eleonora and held her on his lap. He watched as Tegan huddled into Blaise, all but cowering away from the bigger girls, until she got bolder, reassured by the presence of her Daddy Blaise and she hit out at Claudia.

Blaise took hold of her hand before she could make contact but Anabel acted as if Tegan had beaten seven shades of shit out of her precious daughter as she leapt up and snatched Claudia away.

She even slapped Blaise across the face, which had Amelle diving for Eleonora to pick her out of the fight and Draco gripping a hold of Anabel and dragging her away from Blaise, his face twisted into unfathomable rage as he gripped Anabel’s wrist so tightly that Harry knew it would bruise, and badly. He was sure the only reason he hadn’t actually hit her was the fact that she had Claudia on her hip.

Nasta took control of the situation by biting the back of Draco’s neck and letting Henley take Anabel from Draco’s hold before he sat Draco on the settee and went to check on Blaise’s face, which was a bright red from the sudden slap.
“I seriously hate submissives.” Harry sighed.

“I’m so sorry.” Henley cried. “I had no idea she’d act like that, I swear.”

“It’s alright, Henley.” Harry assured. “I’ve dealt with this and worse before. Really we should have been expecting it.”

“She’s not normally like this.” He defended weakly.

“It’s because there are two other submissives here and children that aren’t hers.” Nasta explained patiently. “Most submissives see that as either a challenge or a fighting ground where they have to prove that they’re the best, that their mate is the best and their children are the best, it’s pathetic.”

Harry laughed. “I’ve felt those sorts of feelings, felt the urges and instincts, I just never paid them any mind and I pushed them all away.”

“I’m so glad you’ve never acted like that.” Max said as he hugged Harry tightly, giving him a big kiss.

Henley looked embarrassed and Harry sighed.

“Let’s all calm down and sit down. I made cookies.” Harry said. “Someone go and get my cookies and more tea, we need more tea.”

Max went into the kitchen for him and Harry eased himself down onto a seat; he couldn’t remain standing any longer. Blaise scooted along the floor to sit by his legs and Harry cradled his head on his lap and stroked his red cheek where Anabel had hit him.

“Damn women.” Blaise muttered. “I can definitely live without them, especially if I have you.”
Harry rolled his eyes. Max came back into the room and everyone took a biscuit, Farren naturally took a huge handful and before Harry could tell him only one at a time, Farren handed the biscuits out to his siblings.

Harry watched stunned as he passed out a cookie each to Braiden, Regan, Calix, Eleonora and Tegan. He popped one up into Leolin’s bassinet, gave one to baby Harry and little Beatrice and held one out to Claudia like a peace offering, even though it left him with no more cookies.

Claudia took the cookie and munched on it happily, but Farren seemed to realise then that he had none left and he turned to Harry with the saddest face that Harry had ever seen him make.

Harry laughed and he picked a cookie from the plate and he handed it to Farren with a kiss.

“I love you little boy.” He said softly as he ruffled his hair and sent him off with a biscuit.

“He’s a good boy, sharing like that.” Henley smiled.

“Claudia shares.” Anabel sniffed.

“Not like that, Ana and you know it.” Henley said. “If she had taken those biscuits she maybe would have given one to our Harry, but she would have sat in the corner and eaten the rest. Farren gave a cookie to our children and Amelle’s. Claudia wouldn’t have done that.”

“Henley, can you help me please?” Harry asked as he stood and moved to the door.

Henley immediately jumped up and followed him out into the kitchen. Harry turned and faced him as he came in.

“Henley, you do know that the worst thing that you can do is to tell your submissive that other submissive’s children are better than your own, don’t you?”

Henley looked a little startled. “What?”

“Anabel is already feeling out of her depth. She can’t help that she feels that her children are better than mine or Amelle’s, you turning around and saying that they aren’t is going to raise her hackles up further.”
“But…I was just saying the truth.”

“I know, but sometimes the truth isn’t always best said aloud, especially not when she’s already lost control once. It’s best not to say anything at all.”

“I just…I wanted you to know that I don’t care about things like that. I’m not going to turn on you just because I’m mated now.”

Harry smiled. “I know that. I know. Just ease down and praise your own babies too and stand by your submissive. She’s yours, Henley and yours alone, you won’t get another one of her, so don’t alienate her, but don’t you dare pick on any of my kids or Amelle’s for that matter, no pointing out faults or flaws, because that’ll have us jumping at your throat too.”

Henley bobbed his head. “Got it.”

Harry hugged him and turned to get a plate of cakes and handed it to Henley.

“You have to help me with something.” Harry shrugged as Henley looked at him with confusion and Henley laughed at that and they made their way back into the living room.

Harry was happy to see that it was still intact. He suspected that it was because Anabel was fighting with a struggling Claudia, trying to keep her on her lap when the little girl just wanted to be on the floor with the mass of new and exciting toys and new playmates.

“Ana.” Henley sighed. “You said that you wouldn’t do this today. Claudia is fine and she’s safe.”

Henley put the plate down and wrestled his daughter from his mate and put a happy Claudia on the floor. He sat next to Anabel and took her hands, whispering in her ear.

Harry averted his attention and cooed loudly over Eva and Ave to give them a bit of privacy. He was distracted by Beatrice, who was fed up of Max and pushed a tiny hand up into his face.

“Hey! I’m your Uncle!” Max declared. “You can’t show the hand to me, what happened to unconditional love?”
Amelle giggled. “She’s just hungry.”

“Oh…oh! Hell, well you aren’t getting any milk from my glorious pecs; you better go back to your Mother.”

Harry laughed with his mates and Max looked indignantly at them.

“What are you hyenas laughing at? I have pecs!”

“Maybe, under the store of fat.” Draco teased.

“He’s got a bigger bra size than most women.” Blaise pointed out.

“I’m not speaking to any of you for the rest of the day!” Max declared. “You’ll be sorry when you have nothing to eat for dinner!” He added when they cheered his declaration like immature children.

“Harry can cook.” Blaise pointed out.

“Harry can’t stay on his feet for longer than an hour.” Max reminded them with a sniff as he folded his arms over his massive chest.

“You might want to loosen your arms a bit more, I can see cleavage.”

Harry couldn’t stop the laugh that bubbled out and even Nasta had to turn his face away to hide his grin.

“I know when I’m not wanted!” Max huffed and he left the room to a storm of laughter.

“Is he going to be okay?” Anabel asked, her previous feelings and animosity forgotten in the face of her curiosity.
“Of course, he knows we’re only teasing, he’s probably gone to sulk a bit, then he’ll be back.”
Draco told her.

“We can’t help teasing him a bit.” Harry said. “But he’ll be fine; we’ll make it up to him later.”

Things settled down for them then. Anabel was less hostile, Henley stopped trying so hard and Max did come back after half an hour and he sat on the floor and was happily swarmed by babies.

Harry was happy. He had his mates, his babies, he had friends old and new and he had new family, for the first time he truly realised that he had a proper, loving family and that did not include the Dursleys, whatever he may have felt for them at any point, those feelings were now well and truly demolished. They weren’t his family, he had been forced to live with them and rely on them for so long, but he had his own family now. He’d made his own family, he didn’t need them and he was alright with that. He was happy.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry kept up correspondence with Henley and with Amelle and Ezrah and Lathen as well and Dain and Kailen too. It was tiring speaking to so many people and the owls hardly ever got a break, which Hedwig was rebelling about, but there was little that Harry could do about it.

His court date was creeping ever closer and with it came the nerves and hidden fear of the unknown. He’d never had to do anything like this before and his only other court appearance, back in the summer between his fourth and his fifth year at Hogwarts wasn’t helping to settle his nerves as that had been a witch hunt, out to discredit him and get him into as much trouble as possible and expelled from Hogwarts to boot. It didn’t inspire much trust in people, but he trusted Richard, who had worked hard and tirelessly on his case and had built it up and up and up until he was sure that he could get the maximum sentence possible for sustained and prolonged child neglect and abuse from when he was just a baby until he was a sixteen year old and had gotten away from them for good with the help of his beloved mates.

Of course that was driven out of his mind when he woke up suddenly in the middle of the night, lying in bed listening to the silent house, wondering what the hell had woken him up and laying a hand to his forehead to check himself for sweat, wondering if he’d had another nightmare that he just couldn’t remember.

He was fine as far as he could tell, just a little hot. In fact it was sweltering in the bed. It was usually hot in their bed because there were five of them sleeping very close together, but this was the uncomfortable, sticky heat that they usually only found in the middle of summer. It was the middle of March, it wasn’t hot enough outside to make Harry feel this hot, sticky and gross.

He rolled over and pushed himself to sit up, getting a groan from Blaise as he did so, Blaise was hot too, Harry could see the pink flush on his body.

Frowning he checked on his other mates and his heart about stopped when he saw that unnatural red flush was back on Draco’s skin that had gone that horrid, sickly pale grey colour again. A hand to Draco’s forehead and Harry knew that his mate had that fever again. He was too hot to touch.

“Nasta! Nasta, wake up!” Harry said loudly as he got to his knees and rolled Draco onto his back to help ease his laboured breathing.

Nasta jerked up and immediately took over. One minute he was fast asleep, the next he was just there, up, awake and alert as he took one look around to take everything in and to make sure that there was nothing there that shouldn’t have been before he stood up, scooped Draco into his arms and rushed for the floo, still half naked and only in a pair of pyjama bottoms.

Max and Blaise were also immediately awake and alert from his shout for Nasta and they rushed around the bedroom getting dressed, picking up clothes for Nasta and pyjamas for Draco and Harry swallowed as he realised that he was going to have to stay at home with the kids as it was the middle of the night.

“We’ll be back with news as soon as we have it, love.” Max said breathlessly as he jerked on his jeans and a tee shirt, Blaise doing the same and Harry nodded weakly.

“Just go, be with him and let me know the minute that you hear anything, anything at all, please.”

“We will.” Blaise promised before he pulled Harry’s head to his with a hand at the back of his neck and he kissed him soundly on the mouth.

“If he gets worse…let me be with him and tell him that I love him!” Harry called after them as they rushed down the stairs to the fireplace.

Harry sat back on the bed weakly and he felt the sweat damp sheets under the palm of his hands. Whatever those Healers said, Draco wasn’t right, something was very wrong and he wouldn’t accept that they didn’t know what was wrong with him. He would not give up until he had answers, until he knew what was wrong with his dominant mate. He would not fail Draco.

He stripped the bed and changed the sheets, duvet and pillows before going down into the kitchen to put them into the washing machine while he made tea for himself. He was never going to sleep now, he’d just have to find something to do, something to keep him occupied until he heard some news or until morning came and he could call someone to come and babysit so that he could go to the hospital.

This wasn’t right; Draco shouldn’t be like this, as Drackens they were supposed to be immune to all deadly, dangerous sicknesses and diseases. They shouldn’t have been able to get anything worse than an infection or a cold!
Harry didn’t like this fever, it was different to most fevers, it was hotter, it came on too quickly, its effects on Draco were quick enough to prevent him from letting them know beforehand and debilitating in the extreme, enough to inhibit him from speaking or moving. Draco hadn’t even been conscious when Nasta had rushed him to the hospital. This…illness, whatever it was, it was quick, virulent and destructive. They had to find out what it was, what caused it and how to treat it for good, otherwise Harry wasn’t sure what would happen to Draco and the thought of that had tears welling up in his eyes before he viciously staved them off, he wouldn’t let go of Draco…Draco was his and nothing, not even some unknown sickness, was going to take his mate away from him. He wouldn’t let it.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I’m planning just one more update for this fic, for next week, before I go on holiday, when I get back I’ll be switching back to Damaged Bodies, so it might be a while before the next update for this fic comes about as I want Damaged Bodies done and finished by this winter so I can bring out my Bruce Banner/Harry Potter crossover fic. I’m also nearly done with my threesome Hobbit fic, so when I get a spare moment I want that posted up too, maybe in the New Year…I seriously have far too many new fics that I want to post and work on and I want to share them, but I don’t have the time to update them all regularly enough, so they’ll have to wait for now.

Anyway, I’ll see you lovelies with the next update, I’m writing furiously to get it ready in time for next week, fingers crossed that I can manage it,

StarLight Massacre. X
Anniversaries

Chapter Notes

A/N: This chapter is for RainbowDuck, happy birthday lovelie! I hope you like this chapter.

Last Time

Harry didn’t like this fever, it was different to most fevers, it was hotter, it came on too quickly, its effects on Draco were quick enough to prevent him from letting them know beforehand and debilitating in the extreme, enough to inhibit him from speaking or moving. Draco hadn’t even been conscious when Nasta had rushed him to the hospital. This…illness, whatever it was, it was quick, virulent and destructive. They had to find out what it was, what caused it and how to treat it for good, otherwise Harry wasn’t sure what would happen to Draco and the thought of that had tears welling up in his eyes before he viciously staved them off, he wouldn’t let go of Draco…Draco was his and nothing, not even some unknown sickness, was going to take his mate away from him. He wouldn’t let it.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Ninety-Four – Anniversaries

Just like the last time, Draco’s fever broke and he was sat up, talking, laughing and being normal just two days after being rushed to the hospital in the middle of the night.

He insisted that he felt perfectly fine and the Healers were completely baffled as to what had happened, what was causing the fever in the first place and what exactly the fever was if it was going to keep coming back. They’d never heard of it before and that had them all worried, though they tried not to show that around Draco, who, a full week after he had been admitted to the hospital, was being cautiously released again.

Of course Draco was complaining about how long he’d had to stay in the hospital when he was ‘fine’, but Harry wasn’t sure that the hospital should be releasing him again when, yet again, they didn’t know what was wrong with him.

The Healers insisted to Lucius Malfoy that Draco just had a fever, nothing worse than that, but they didn’t know why he was getting the fevers or what was causing them, which had Harry very scared.

Eva and Ave were now two months old and growing by the day, they were only ten minutes apart from one another in their schedules now and getting closer to being fully synchronised as the days passed.

Apart from that and Draco’s mystery illness, not much had happened, March had been a quiet month, which Harry was thankful for as he could focus his all on Draco and on his Potions studying, which he was being all but forced to do.

He slid his gaze across to Draco, who was wrapped up on the settee, Nasta sat in the chair near him to ensure that he didn’t get up. Despite insisting that he was absolutely fine, Nasta wasn’t having any of it as he sat in the chair doing the paperwork that he had taken on for the Brecon Reserve instead of going in to do the physical work with the actual dragons. They all knew how much Nasta hated paperwork, but still he had put himself on paperwork duties just so he could stay home and ensure that Draco was alright and that he didn’t move.

Draco was stuck reading books all day every day, not that he minded, he just felt like he was being useless and wasting his time as Harry rushed about around him, chasing after children and doing the cleaning and the washing, but until they found out what was wrong with him, Nasta was not going to let him push himself even a little bit.

“Mama, eh bana essa nahba ga.” Calix said and Harry stared at him blankly.

“Are you speaking in a different language, baby? I can never understand a word you say.” Harry replied as he picked Calix up and tickled him to hear baby screeches and giggles.

“Baba ca, no.” Braiden frowned as he shook his head, little hands touching his ears.

“Calix is being a bit loud, isn’t he, Braiden?” Harry said as he cuddled Calix and set him on his hip.

“Do you want tea, Draco?”

“I want to get up and get it myself.” Draco growled. “My legs are aching.”

“You aren’t getting up.” Nasta replied immediately, not even looking up from his paperwork.

“I feel fine!” Draco argued.

“You said that you felt fine the last time, I’m not taking that chance again. You stay where you are.”

“For how long?” Draco demanded. “The rest of my life? I feel absolutely fine!”

Harry sighed and went to get the tea. He felt for Draco, he couldn’t imagine how mindless and torturous it would be to be forced to stay wrapped up on the settee when he felt absolutely fine. He’d snap and go ballistic, he was sure and he would have done so sooner than now if it had been him, but then he was more restless than Draco was and he fidgeted terribly. He had to be doing something or he couldn’t sit still.

He rubbed his head and rubbed out the tension lines in his forehead. He was so worried for Draco that it was eating him up inside. He knew his mates felt the same way, they were all worried for a seemingly ‘fine’ Draco, but he had had this fever and been fine once before and then he’d gotten sick again…they didn’t know what to do anymore and Nasta was only doing what he thought was for the best, but the truth was, none of them knew what was wrong with him and they didn’t know what to do for the best. It was a horrible situation and until the Healers found out what was wrong with Draco and they could start treating him for whatever it was that was making him sick, then they were unlikely to relax again.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

However weeks passed slowly and Draco was fine and well and they eased off of him slightly, to where he wasn’t confined to the settee for hours on end. They kept him sat down at Kimberly’s ninety-second birthday, but eight days later they let him stand for a little while at Sanex’s forty-first birthday as Harry was teased mercilessly by Caesar, Sanex and Idris, who was staying in England for a while as he took an extended break from his work place, which ended with Harry hexing all three of them and leaving them stuck to a cluster of trees and denying all knowledge of where they were for an hour and a half until he decided to put them out of their misery as Sanex was supposed to be the birthday boy.

But Draco really did seem fine and he didn’t relapse at all as March slipped slowly and calmly into April. Dain and Kailen came around to visit, Ezrah came back a few times, Amelle came to visit with Eleonora and Beatrice, Remus brought Teddy over for a few playdates…everything was normal, but Harry was waiting for the other shoe to drop as they went to Caesar’s thirty-first birthday, which had been held at Myron’s huge, lavish home.

It was worse than walking on eggshells as they were waiting for their mate to fall ill, but he never did and with the court case starting next month, Harry found himself being stretched very thin on all fronts as he tried to do everything by himself but found that he just couldn’t, but still he tried his best to do so.

He took Eva and Ave, now three months old, for their check up with the health visitor, he made sure that the house was running smoothly, that no one forgot anything that they needed. He saw Nasta and Max off to work each morning, he wished Blaise good luck as he went out to sort out his business venture and he kept Draco relaxed and stress free, but it was taking its toll on him now and the fear and nerves of the upcoming court date had him feeling sick and left him unable to sleep.

He’d had his visit with his personal mind Healer, but that just made him feel worse as he felt ripped apart at the seams and he honestly believed that he was heading for a real breakdown soon; he just hoped that he wouldn’t have it in the actual court room.

His Braiden was now twenty months old and Harry could really see him becoming a little person now, the way he acted, the things he did, how he behaved. He was much better up on his feet, he was interested in everything that everyone was doing, he was striving for more and more independence as he happily broke away from his siblings to do a wooden puzzle in the corner by himself and his words were becoming more and more understandable. Harry could really believe that he was almost two years old now and on his way to becoming a proper toddler. It was exhilarating.

His quintuplets were sixteen months old and the change in them as well was noticeable as they scribbled on blank paper with crayons or sat with Max for an hour as he encouraged them to point out his chin or nose or mouth and he watched as they all understood and did as Max asked them to do and little fingers were happily pushed into the body part that he’d named.

Leolin of course was still very much exempted from this as he was more on par with Eva and Ave than his actual sac siblings. He still only had a two word arsenal, but he was using those two words now to great effect, instead of just crying or whimpering over the baby monitor in the mornings, he clearly called for ‘Ma’ and ‘Da’ instead and that made Harry very happy. Still not sitting up properly on his own, Leolin was happiest on his back or belly, the former where he could reach up to the mobile they hung above him and stretch to reach the floating shapes or the latter where he could push himself, rocking from side to side as if he wanted to roll over, holding his head up off of the blanket to see what was happening around him…it brought a tear to Harry’s eye to watch him and Dain and Kailen were more than impressed with Leolin’s progress and strength as they got to watch him displaying his newfound talents when they visited.

Eva and Ave were developing too, now three months old; the twins were completely in tune to one another and woke up within minutes of each other for a feed, which they very much took advantage of during the night as they weren’t sleeping right the way through yet, so it made it easier on them all.

Eva had surprised them one morning by saying ‘Ma-ah’ and Ave had surprised them by rolling from her belly onto her back and then right over back onto her belly. Harry was overjoyed by this, but it made him a little sad to realise in such terms exactly how far behind Leolin actually was.

“It’ll be fine.” Nasta told him as Harry was caught yet again staring at Leolin struggling to get his skinny little arms under his body to push himself up.

“I know, it’s just…I feel a little bad for him. He wants to move so much, he’s trying so hard, yet Ave can move easily and has a blast when she rolls herself right over. I don’t want Leolin to be discouraged when he sees her doing it when he can’t.”

“I doubt he rationalises it that much in his mind, Cariad. He likely doesn’t even realise that Ave is younger than him. She’s just another obstacle to his mind.”

Harry nodded sadly, aware that Leolin’s mental development was unknown and that they had no idea how he saw his older brothers and sister or his younger sisters or even if he realised that they were older or younger than him or that they were anything to do with him at all. It was quite upsetting.

“It’s almost the nineteenth.” Nasta said softly.
Harry smiled and turned to Nasta with a knowing look. “If you want something, just ask.” Harry replied.

Nasta squared his shoulders and looked at him firmly. “Would you like to spend an evening with me?”

Harry’s smile morphed into a grin. “Mister Delericey, I’d love nothing more than to spend our anniversary together with you.”

Nasta swooped him up into a cwtch and kissed him until they either had to break apart or learn another way to breathe that didn’t include their noses or mouths.

Harry gasped and panted in Nasta’s arms and when he’d caught his breath, he looked up at Nasta with a grin.

“You know, I think if we tried hard enough we could conceive another baby on the nineteenth.” He said conversationally.

“There’s no harm in practising.” Nasta said with a grin of his own that was part smug smirk.

“None whatsoever.” Harry agreed. “So where are you taking me for this planned evening?”

“You’ll have to wait and find out. I wasn’t sure if you’d say yes, so I didn’t book anything in advance.”

“Of course I’d say yes. Did you honestly think that I wouldn’t say yes to spending time with you on our anniversary?”

“It’s not that…it’s more to do with everything else that’s going on.”

“Draco’s fine and the court case isn’t for another couple of weeks. I think I’ve revised more than enough for my Potions exam and I could use the distraction…frankly I really need it. So yes, I want to celebrate our anniversary together, please. Make it good!” Harry shot back over his shoulder as he left Nasta in the living room to go into the downstairs bathroom. He didn’t need to use it; he just wanted to grin at himself in the mirror like a loon. Nasta could be the sweetest person in the world sometimes, but he could also be quite dense too. Harry loved him for it.
The nineteenth of April was the day in which Harry had chosen Nasta as his final mate, his grounding mate, two years ago now. The gorgeous, handsome, kind man had been his mate for two exact years today and Harry was sat opposite him in a downscale, homey feeling restaurant as he perused the menu happily, his one foot tangled around Nasta’s leg.

They were in smart jeans and shirts, so they were comfortable, but not out of place, this restaurant wasn’t a tuxedo and evening gown kind of place and Harry was happy about that. He didn’t feel like dressing up too much.

“Do you want wine?” Nasta asked.

Harry shook his head. “Not tonight. I want that Mango smoothie that caught my eye.” He announced as he flipped to the drinks menu and pointed it out.

Nasta nodded and gave him a kiss on his way to the bar to order their drinks in. Harry got the feeling that Nasta was happiest when Harry wasn’t drinking alcohol, so he could easily stick to fruit smoothies for tonight, for Nasta. He had three other mates who would order him wine if he asked for it and he really wasn’t that big of a wine drinker to begin with, so for tonight at least, with his top dominant who hated seeing him or the others ruining their health in such blatant ways, he’d skip the wine and the inevitable hangover tomorrow morning.

Nasta came back with a bright yellow concoction and Harry smiled and took a sip. It was gorgeous and he offered a taste to Nasta, who readily agreed with him that it was nice.

They ordered their food and sat talking and touching, on top of the table as well as under it as they held hands and twined their legs. Nasta laughed deeply when Harry’s foot slid up to his thigh.

“Save it for after dinner.” He whispered.

“Think of it as an appetiser.”

“I don’t need a sampler, I know exactly what I’m going to be eating afterwards and I have to say, it’s one of my favourites.”

Harry flushed a bit at that, but he laughed happily and stroked his foot over Nasta’s thickly muscled thigh harder.
Their meals came and conversation was soft and slow as they ate and Harry liked this one on one time with Nasta…or really any of his mates, he wasn’t fussy which one, but he was glad that this day two years ago, that he chose this beautiful, wonderful man to be his and that said strong, amazing man had said yes.

He was feeding from Nasta, there was no other way to describe the way he was feverishly kissing and licking at his mate’s lips as he was carried into a lavish hotel room. Apparently Nasta had cleared it with Max, Draco and Blaise and all three had agreed that it would be best if they got a hotel for tonight instead of coming home and possibly waking up Eva and Ave.

“Won’t they feel left out?” Harry asked, his chest heaving as he tried to breathe around Nasta’s mouth and tongue.

“I’m sure Max will keep Blaise and Draco entertained. In fact he promised me that he would.”

Harry laughed breathlessly. “So we’re here having sex and Max is back at home terrorising our other two mates?”

“I suppose Max’s advances could be classed as terrorising, but I don’t think Draco or particularly Blaise will see it like that, you know how much Blaise likes having all the pleasure to himself.”

Harry grinned. It was why his first mate hadn’t fought Max or Nasta for the top dominant position, his first mate liked being fucked as much as he did fucking and being a relatively new dominant, he hadn’t realised that even if he was the top dominant then he could still submit during sex, as Nasta did on occasion. He’d thought that it would mean that he wouldn’t be able to do what he liked, so he hadn’t fought the hierarchy, he knew better now, but he still didn’t care enough to cause a fight, he just loved the pleasure of being sandwiched between two lovers. Harry did too, but in a different way to Blaise.

He grinned and latched his mouth onto Nasta’s neck, suckling and biting gently as large hands cupped his bum and squeezed.

“I love you.” He declared to Nasta as he moved his mouth up a stubbled chin to plush lips.

“Love you too.” Nasta panted as he turned and bounced Harry on the large, soft bed.
“These linens are going to be ruined tomorrow.” Harry said breathlessly.

“Don’t care.” Nasta replied shortly as he unbuttoned Harry’s shirt and popped the button on his jeans open quickly, stripping him bare and kissing every inch of revealed skin, licking and nibbling before latching onto a small, pink nipple and sucking.

Harry wriggled on the bed and wrapped his bare legs around Nasta’s waist. Nasta pulled back and forced Harry’s legs down as he sat up and all but ripped his open shirt off of his shoulders before getting out of his own jeans as fast as he could.

“I love watching you do that, it makes me throb.” Harry told him and Nasta groaned.

“That mouth of yours is going to have me cumming before I even get close to pleasuring you.” He sighed as he gripped himself tightly.

“Just looking at you pleases me.” Harry declared.

“I’m going to have to gag you.” Nasta said seriously.

“If that pleases you, go ahead.”

Nasta groaned harder and he left the bedroom to go into the bathroom.

“You better not gag me with soap! I will not enjoy that!” Harry shouted after him.

Nasta came back in with a clean, dry flannel and Harry cocked his head.

“How are you going to tie that around my head? It won’t reach.”

Nasta walked over as he rolled the flannel into a tube.
“Open.”

Harry opened his mouth and Nasta tugged the flannel between his teeth and wrapped it around his head. Harry was right and the ends didn’t meet enough to be tied together, but Nasta smirked and pulled out his wand and tapped the ends and Harry found that the flannel gag was fused together and he couldn’t get it out of his mouth. His body hummed with arousal and his erection throbbed and he whimpered behind the gag.

“Is that comfortable for you?” Nasta couldn’t help but ask. “Do I need to loosen it, or maybe rip it in half? It is a little thick.”

Harry couldn’t answer, so he just laid himself back on the bed and spread his arms and legs open in invitation. He got to watch as Nasta’s eyes darkened and his pupils dilated, his mouth opened as he breathed deeper and more raggedly.

Nasta climbed over him and nibbled around his chin and neck and Harry sucked in a breath through his nose as he wrapped himself around Nasta and arched into him.

His mate kissed and licked over his body and Harry couldn’t even tell Nasta that he loved what he was doing to his body as all that came out was a muffled grunt.

Harry was reduced to grunting and groaning, writhing on the bed as Nasta opened him up slowly with his fingers and a lot of lube from the several sachets that he’d kept in his wallet.

Harry was bucking and trying to push himself onto Nasta when his mate finally pulled his fingers back and opened a new sachet to cover his hard cock. Harry swallowed as much as he could around the flannel in his mouth and squeezed his eyes closed as Nasta pushed into him and then held still.

“Fuck…I love this moment. Where I’ve just pushed into you and your muscles randomly clench around me. It feels amazing. I love you.”

Harry grunted back his love and Nasta smirked at him.

“Seeing you in a gag is very arousing, it makes me want to tie you up to the headboard too to see what that looks like.”

Harry smiled as much as he could around his gag and he raised his arms above his head, crossing his wrists over and Nasta was all but drooling.

He turned and swiped his own shirt from the floor and tied it around Harry’s wrists and tied him to the headboard, all without slipping out of him and Harry moaned when Nasta pulled back slowly and eased back into his body. This is the part that he loved the most, though he had to say that he just loved sex, but this moment, where his mates first started moving, making sure that their glide was smooth inside his body, probing around, moving slowly so that he felt the movement of every single last inch, this was the part that he loved the most.

It never lasted long though and all too soon Nasta was picking up the pace and moving harder and faster, Harry never complained though, because this is the part where he felt overwhelming pleasure, where he forgot his own name under the onslaught of utter pleasure that his mates gave to him, the pleasure that they unselfishly strived to give him as he rocked, writhed and thrashed as his hands were tied to the headboard and his breathing and noises were restricted and muffled by the gag as Nasta moved harder and faster, rolling his hips into his body and his vision whited out as his orgasm exploded with the heat and ferocity of an enraged dragon.

Nasta collapsed on top of him and Harry held him with his jelly like legs, the only thing he could hold his mate with.

At least until Nasta propped himself up and tugged the shirt free from his wrists and used his wand to release the flannel they were using as a gag from his mouth.

“I don’t think we’ll be using that again.” Nasta commented gruffly as he threw it away.

“Why?” Harry replied hoarsely.

Nasta smirked at him. “I loved seeing you in it, don’t get me wrong. I just love being able to kiss you more.”

Harry smiled as Nasta bent down and sealed their mouths together, lips and tongues moving together in a passionate kiss that had Harry twitching tiredly. Nasta could be so sweet sometimes. He loved it.

Harry was sore, tired, but exceedingly happy the next morning, after several rounds of incredible sex, alone in a very nice hotel room. He snorted as he caught the look on Blaise’s face as he walked into the kitchen. Harry would guess that he and Blaise were both feeling fucking wonderful this morning.

“I see you’re walking funny.” Blaise greeted.

“I notice that you aren’t sitting properly.” Harry replied.
They both looked at one another for a heartbeat and then burst out laughing. Nasta shook his head at them and he greeted Blaise properly, with a lot of lips and tongue and Harry grinned as he watched them, feeling his spent cock twitch in his jeans. He was too tired to properly react though and he moved to the kettle to get tea. Nasta had most definitely sexed him out last night.

Draco came wincing into the kitchen and Harry grinned at him.

“You too?” He asked. “Damn Max was having a good time last night; maybe we should have come home, Nas.”

Nasta chuckled and kissed Draco as he had Blaise.

“Where are my babies?” Harry asked.

“Max is in the bathroom.” Draco replied easily.

Harry gave him a look and Nasta chuckled. “I suspect the kids are down for their morning nap already, it is nine O’clock, we woke up a little late.”

“Did they have their breakfasts?”

“Of course.” Blaise replied as he cradled his coffee between both hands like it was a child.

Harry smiled and eased himself down slowly and gingerly.

“What did you do to my boy?” Max demanded as he strode into the kitchen like a king and saw Harry moving delicately.

Harry didn’t even get to sit down fully before he found himself up in Max’s arms and being kissed.

“I missed you last night.”
Harry laughed. “Draco and Blaise didn’t keep you satisfied enough?”

“No, I could have done with one more gorgeous boy underneath me…or straddling my lap, riding me, I’m not that fussy.”

Harry laughed happily. “Your anniversary will come around again soon enough.”

Max snorted. “A whole year away!”

“Well…we do have an anniversary to celebrate together coming up, but then Draco’s birthday is before that in June and then my birthday is in July…I’m not sure about Draco, but I know exactly what I want to do for my nineteenth birthday.”

Max laughed and kissed him soundly before gently putting him back onto his chair.

“Everything was alright while I was gone?” Nasta asked Max, who had been the acting top dominant for Draco and Blaise while he and Harry had been away.

“Absolutely fine, I would have let out a call to you otherwise. Nothing more exciting than a soiled nappy all night and I had Draco and Blaise passed out by two in the morning.”

“Nasta and I made it until gone four.” Harry said with a grin, his eyes glinting.

“No wonder you’re back so late and why you can’t even sit down properly.”

Harry smiled widely, completely unfazed.

“I could do with a nap myself.” Harry said as he yawned, gratefully accepting the cup of tea Draco handed to him.

“Go and get your head down then.” Max encouraged. “We have nothing to do today, do we?”
Harry gave him a look. “Did you happen to forget that today is my baby godson’s first birthday? We have to go to Remus and Tonks’ for Teddy’s party this afternoon.”

“That’ll only be for a few hours though.” Nasta said.

Harry nodded. “I know, but I want to make sure the kids are alright and we have to travel with Leolin. How are you feeling, Draco?”

The big blond rolled his silver coloured eyes. “Fine, absolutely fine. I just had my brains fucked out, I really don’t think that fever will be coming back now. It was a phenomenon, an odd two fevers, that’s all; I’ve been fine for the last month now. I’m fine, so stop worrying.”

Harry nodded, but he’d keep an eye on Draco regardless while they were over Remus’ for Teddy’s birthday. He was not letting his guard down even a little bit when it came to the health of one of his mate’s.

Remus’ house was a gorgeous two storey cottage and the grounds outside were several feet of grass and beyond that was just miles of forest. It was picturesque and Harry could really see how Remus would be very happy here.

Unfortunately Harry, his mates and all eight of his babies were not going to fit in the little cottage, and that was without all of the other guests too, so Remus and Tonks had set up a series of picnic benches outside and thankfully it wasn’t raining as they’d laid out several blankets for the babies to play on. Leolin was in the pram that they’d brought with them, safely tucked in, but outside in the fresh air and he was more alert and happy outside than he had been inside and he made soft, sweet noises and kicked his legs and waved his arms happily.

Andromeda and her Husband Edward, Teddy’s namesake, were also there and Harry was happy enough to strike up a conversation with them and the Weasleys who were also invited over, including Ron, who stayed well away from Harry’s mates, who were giving him not so subtle glares that promised pain or death if he wandered away from the group that he was stood with or went anywhere near Harry or the babies.

“You will come to our wedding, won’t you, Harry?” Bill was asking and Harry turned his attention from surveying the grounds back to Bill and he smiled.

“Of course I will. I wouldn’t miss Fleur finally making an honest man of you.” Harry teased. “When are you going to have babies?"

Bill and Fleur shared a look and Harry’s grin slipped and he looked from one to the other. His grin came back tenfold as it kicked up to a hundred watts.

“No way! No fucking way! When? How long?” He asked.

“Shhh!” Bill shushed him quickly. “No one else knows yet, we found out yesterday.”

Harry grinned smugly at them. “I told you it was only a matter of time. How far along are you, Fleur, are you alright?”

Fleur nodded with a smile. “I’m about two months along. I ’aven’t had any morning sickness yet.”

“Well, I suppose I’m happy enough to say congratulations to you first. When are you going to tell everyone else?”

“Fleur wants to keep it quiet for a little longer, you know how my Mum is, she’ll immediately take over and try to tell Fleur what to do. She means well, but we just want some peace, so I think we’ll announce it when it can no longer be hidden.”

“My lips are sealed shut, not even my lovers will hear it from me.” Harry promised with a wink.

“I ’ope to have girls just like your beautiful little ones.” Fleur told him as she hugged a sleeping Ave.

Harry laughed. “You don’t, trust me on that one. They’re only quiet when they’re sleeping. They take too much from Max.”

“If I had a man like that I wouldn’t even care.” Ginny declared as she wrapped her arms around Harry’s neck and hugged him from behind.

“Trust me, Gin, when those two are screaming in your ear at one, four and six in the morning, you’ll change your mind.”
“The sex with a man like that would more than make up for it.”

Harry laughed, more at Bill’s horrified face than anything else.

“You want to get out there a bit more then.” Harry said.

“You said that Max had a brother.” Ginny said with a pout.

“A younger half-brother, Caesar, who is all but married and has two daughters. If you go after him, I’ll have to bury you alive, Amelle is a friend.”

Ginny sighed. “Does Nasta have any brothers?”

“One, an older brother, Sanex, who just turned forty-one. He has a girlfriend.”

“I guess I’m just going to have to go out and find one the old fashioned way.”

“Can we please get off of this topic, please.” Bill said with a raised hand.

Charlie wandered over, drawn by his older brother’s loud plea and he sat next to Harry.

“What’s going on?” He asked.

“We’re talking about Ginny’s sex life.” Harry told him and Charlie’s face blanched pale and his eyes all but bugged out of his head.

Harry and Ginny laughed.

“She wants a boyfriend like Max; do you have any friends you can push at your baby sister, Charlie?” Harry teased.

Charlie went from pale to green and he shoved Harry off of his seat and onto the floor with such a fierce expression on his face that Harry was almost scared that he’d crossed a line that he shouldn’t have. He knew Charlie too well though and he just laughed and picked himself back up.

“Are you alright? What happened?” Nasta asked as rushed over and he helped Harry off of the floor.

“Charlie shoved me off of my chair!” He complained indignantly.

Harry caught the snap of Nasta’s neck as he turned to glare at Charlie.

“You do know that he is recovering from giving birth in which he had to cut himself open to pull out our twin daughters, don’t you?” Nasta said coldly, threateningly.

“Oh shove off, Nas.” Harry laughed. “I’m fine. Charlie was just touching me up, I’m sure.”

Nasta growled under his breath and Charlie recoiled as Nasta released his dominant pheromones.

“I wasn’t!” Charlie insisted.

“He was.” Harry said as he grinned at Charlie, who was squirming uncomfortably.

“Who’s touching up my man?” Max demanded.

“He is.” Nasta growled, his eyes pinned to Charlie.

“You touch him again and I’ll break you over my knee.” Max said happily.

“Thank you, loves.” Harry smiled, giving them both a kiss and sending them off to wrangle up their older children, who were going berserk in the garden of Remus’ cottage.
“That’s not fair, calling in the lovers.” Charlie huffed.

Harry grinned. “If I have them to use, why not use them?”

“Because you’re going to get my arse kicked for me.”

“Then don’t push me off of a chair in a garden where they’re all watching.” Harry said smugly.

Ginny laughed and clapped Harry on the back, just as Braiden toddled over on quick legs, he wasn’t quite running, but it was close.

He patted at Harry’s knee and lifted his arms above his head and Harry groaned as he hefted his heavy boy onto his lap. He was a happy twenty-six pounds in weight and thirty inches tall. Farren had finally overtaken him, as they’d all known would happen eventually, their big boy was twenty-nine pounds and thirty-three inches tall and he was only going to get bigger from here on out.

Harry sat him on his lap and snuggled him tightly, kissing him to hear giggles.

“He is very cute.” Charlie insisted as he dug a callused, burnt finger under Braiden’s neck and wiggled it, making Braiden screech in joy.

“Here.” Harry dumped Braiden onto Charlie and watched him fumble around. If it was one Weasley who didn’t know how to handle kids, it was Charlie.

Bill laughed at his brother, who was holding Braiden out from his body, staring at the almost two year old boy with a pulled, pinched face.

“What do I do with him?” Charlie asked desperately.

“Go and play with him!” Harry encouraged. “Look at Max.”

The table looked to Max who was rolling around the grass with a joyous Regan in his arms being rolled with him.
“He’s such a good Father.” Ginny sighed.

Harry grinned. “I know. He’s not all good though, Gin, you know that right? There’s no such thing as a perfect man.”

“What’s wrong with him?” Ginny asked interestedly.

“He snores when he’s on his back.” Harry told her. “And don’t get me started on his morning breath and he’s more likely to throw a tantrum than Braiden is. He’s happy go lucky most of the time, but damn can he sulk.”

“What are the faults with the others?” Ginny asked. “Nasta seems pretty perfect to me, all rough and ready.”

“Nasta?” Harry laughed. “Mister I don’t want to see you drinking coffee, pop or alcohol and don’t even try to eat a greasy burger in front of him because he always looks like he might puke over the table. Oh and he counts how much chocolate we eat or how many sweets we have and if he deems us to have had enough he takes it off of us and hides it!”

“I’d have punched him in the face.” Ginny declared.

“I feel like it sometimes, but I love him, so I don’t want to hurt him over something so petty, but it is annoying when all I want is a good chocolate binge.”

“Blaise?”

“He sulks too.” Harry said with a grin. “He has a temper to rival mine as well, so when he gets going, we can shout one another hoarse. We’re both stubborn and now that I think about it, Blaise and me…we’re actually quite alike in personality, only he has the tendency to start shouting at me in languages that I can’t understand so I never know if he’s insulting me or declaring undying love. I tend to go with the former and respond accordingly.”

“Draco?”
Harry snorted incredulously. “He’s self-explanatory, he’s a Malfoy. Pompous, arrogant, he always has to be right, he likes these god awful, ugly knickknacks that he insists on filling the house with and then he sulks and whines for hours when the kids break one, he won’t let me leave so much as a sock on the floor and god help you if you don’t use a coaster on the coffee table.”

“I bet they have just as many things to say about you too.” Bill pointed out with a grin.

Harry grinned right back. “I’m the worst of them!” He readily admitted. “I leave my wet towels all over the floor, I don’t use a coaster, I leave dirty cups on the counter instead of swilling them out or washing them, I put my freezing cold feet into the small of their backs in bed just as they’re falling asleep, I drop my dirty clothes all over the bedroom floor on my way to bed, I’m stubborn as hell and won’t give an inch, my temper can apparently blow off the roof according to Max and I hardly ever listen. I’m a bad, bad man.”

The table roared with laughter and Harry laughed with them. He knew his mates had faults, but he also knew that he had his faults too. No one was perfect and it was the fact that they could all see past those faults and small flaws to love the people that they really were underneath, bad habits and all, that made them a stronger family and despite all the fights, stubborn arguments, sulking, god awful knickknacks and the stolen chocolate, he loved his mates very dearly and he’d never give them up.

They annoyed him on occasion, sure, but he was also equally sure that he annoyed them too, so he was content to call it quits and carry on loving them just as much for the kind, wonderful men that they were, annoying, maddening little quirks and all.

The twenty-fourth of April…the day that Harry had killed Voldemort for good exactly three years ago now. It had started like a normal day; he got up, fed his babies their breakfasts, changed them into their day clothes and set them down to play, he cleaned up around them, did some laundry before sitting down with a cup of tea, paying a Knut to the post owl who delivered their morning newspaper.

That was when he had first realised that it was the third anniversary of the day that he had become an actual murderer. The front page was dedicated to him as The Chosen One and he was gawping at all of the theories that others had come up with on how he had killed Voldemort that day, including the use of the killing curse, muggle weaponry, and even one theory that insisted he’d killed Voldemort with his bare hands wrapped around that pale throat. He felt sick and shocky.

“Harry!”
He startled and looked at his four cautious mates and he blinked, feeling the slide of hot tears down his cheeks. He swiped the tears away furiously, growling as he did so.

“What’s wrong?” Nasta asked softly.

Harry shook his head and threw the paper at him. Blaise took one look at the front page and came to sit next to him.

“Don’t listen to that shit.” He declared. “They have no clue.”

“I forgot that it was today.” Max admitted.

“So had I until I saw that!” Harry sniffed. “It's bad enough that I am a murderer without it appearing on the front page every single year reminding everyone! What if the kids see it when they’re old enough to read and they start asking me questions about it? About how I killed another person at just fifteen years old!”

Nasta sat next to him and pulled him into a hug. He kissed Harry’s temple and rubbed those huge hands over his back.

“You shouldn’t worry about such things. The editors of these damn papers have been warned time and time again to leave you and our children alone…this is a step over the line, to actually be theorising about something like this!”

“My Father will just sue them again.” Draco said. “This time he won’t go easy on them.”

Harry sighed. “At this point I’m wondering if it's worth it. They’re not going to listen and it seems like a waste of time.”

“If you let it slide, then they’re going to take it as permission to do more.” Blaise told him.

“Let my Father do it.” Draco insisted. “He likes doing these sorts of things; it’s a hobby of his.”
“How did I know that your Father would like suing people as a hobby?” Harry said with a small smile.

Draco shrugged, but he was smiling too. “Just let him do it, he’s been in a foul mood since I was in that damn hospital, he could use something to vent his frustrations on.”

Harry sighed, but he nodded. “Not one theory in here is even close to the truth…it was love that killed Voldemort, love and my own magic…I didn’t kill him with my bare hands or use muggle weapons or the killing curse…it’s all wrong.”

“We know how it happened, love, we know and we accept you and what you did. You had to do it, Harry love, if you hadn’t, then he would still be here.” Max said softly. “Would you want him here, targeting you still, targeting us because we’re your mates, targeting our children?” Max shook his head. “It’s better that he’s gone for good.”

Harry nodded. “I know. I would have hated to pass that opportunity up…the guilt would have been too much, just thinking of how many people he could have killed before another chance like that came up and it happened just three months before my inheritance and I fell pregnant with Braiden soon after I met Blaise in October. I wouldn’t want him here now; it’s bad enough that there are still Death Eaters lurking around.”

“The Lestrange brothers still haven’t been caught.” Draco said quietly.

“Fenrir Greyback is still out there too.” Harry said.

“Greyback would have gone underground.”

“The Lestrange brothers however, they have nothing left to lose, the entire world is on alert for them both.”

Harry shivered. “If they’re going to attack, I’d rather they just did so and got it over with. The more they wait, the bigger the risk to the kids.”

“I’d rather they did nothing.” Nasta said with narrowed eyes. “I hope they’ve fallen into a ditch somewhere and had the decency to stay down there and just die.”
“The chances of that are slim. A man with revenge in his heart and nothing else, won’t stop until he’s had his pound of flesh and pint of blood.”

“I won’t let them.” Nasta swore.

Harry smiled and kissed Nasta’s stubbled chin.

“Now let’s stop this heavy talk, get rid of this ridiculous paper and get some tea down you.” Max declared as he took the paper and scrunched it up tight into one large fist.

“Extra honey!” Harry called after Max.

“Mama, baba Gan, no give.”

Harry looked to Braiden and then to Regan, who was holding a toy aeroplane away from Calix, who was frustrated as hell and just wanted his aeroplane back as he stretched up for it as much as he could before he stopped, sniffled twice and smacked Regan so hard in the face that the sound of it had Harry’s heart stopping.

“Dear Merlin, these kids will be the death of me.” Draco declared as he picked up a screaming Regan and cradled him to his chest as Blaise did the same with Calix.

“You’re a good boy telling us what was happening, Braiden.” Harry told him, petting his fluffy black hair gently.

Braiden nodded and he toddled off back to play with Farren, the toy aeroplane that Regan and Calix had been fighting over was lying on the carpet, completely forgotten.

Max came back in and he shook his head.

“I heard the commotion, what was it over this time?”

“That stupid aeroplane that Caesar got Calix for Christmas. Regan took it off him and wouldn’t give it back, so Calix hit him.”

“I hate that they’re trying to sort everything out with violence.”

“It’s the way that they sort everything at this age.” Nasta sighed. “They’re experimenting with what happens if they do, do it and if it’ll be the same every time they do it. I’m not looking forward to when they start biting, kicking and hair pulling either.”

“We’ve been there and done that with Tegan.” Max pointed out as he put the tray down and handed Harry a very sweet cup of tea, which he happily gulped down instead of sipping and savouring it.

“Tegan is just one baby, imagine them all doing it.” Nasta replied.

Max shivered in exaggerated horror. “Please, don’t frighten me like that, I’m getting older, my heart won’t be able to take it!”

Harry laughed happily and pulled Max into a kiss. “You’re not that old, don’t be silly. Save it for the Dracken meeting in two weeks when we have to unleash eight babies on those poor Counsel members.”

“Those poor, poor people.” Max sighed sadly, shaking his head.

Harry couldn’t keep back the grin and he got the feeling that Max was being silly just to make him smile. It was working and his heart swelled with love for these four men, who were trying their all to make him feel better on today of all days.

“How are we going to protect the kids in those halls?” Draco asked.

“We don’t have to.” Harry said. “They’re old enough now to stand up and walk, we’ll keep Leolin and Eva and Ave with us, but the other five can go into the crèche. They’ll have the time of their lives in there with all those ball pits and trampolines.”

His mates looked at him with surprise. He gave them a solid look.
“It’s going to be impossible to keep eight babies with us and I don’t see the point. They’ll be under armed guards, no one can hurt them or take them out of the crèche…I’m very happy to leave the older five there and keep the younger three with us.”

“I’m so proud of you.” Nasta declared.

Harry rolled his eyes. “You lot are insufferable.”

“We’re not that bad.” Max denied with a wide grin.

Harry just rolled his eyes again and chuckled. He loved them all, but they were insufferable sometimes. He couldn’t wait until the court case was over though. He wanted all of that, the Dursleys, Voldemort…he wanted it all behind him and gone. He wanted to live for the future, not for what was in his past and the sooner he didn’t have to think about any of that, the happier he’d be.

When May rolled around, Harry felt like a nervous wreck. He had gone in for his Potions exam after some last minute spurts of hard revision courtesy of Max. He didn’t think he’d done too badly on the practical; at least it had actually looked like The Draught of Living Death when he’d finished with it, but the theory paper could have gone a lot better in his honest opinion. He was now waiting on eggshells for the results of his exam to come back and he was begging for it to at least be a pass grade so that he wouldn’t have to take the exam again, because he knew that if he had anything less than an ‘A’ in this exam, then his mates would make him take it again, Max especially would be insistent on him resitting the exam as he’d taught Harry himself and it was a point of pride for him, so if Harry got anything less than a pass grade, then he was going to be either upset or embarrassed, maybe even both, and Harry didn’t want Max to be feeling that way just because he was completely rubbish at Potions and couldn’t be taught.

The yearly Dracken meeting had gone pretty much how Harry had expected it to. Nasta had been hit on, Draco had been hit on, Max had been physically wrestled away when he’d gone to get drinks at the bar to meet some flimsy little fifteen year old brat wearing next to nothing who had told Max that he should be honoured that she had liked the look of him and wanted him as her own and Harry had happily let his babies roam the crèche while he had kept his twin girls and little Leolin with him and with the family. Not much else had happened in the very few hours that they’d been there, they’d talked to family, with friends, Harry had spent twenty minutes talking to Elder Trintus and then they’d come home early to put the kids to bed and get an early night themselves.

Eva and Ave were now four months old and they had gone in for their second Dragon Pox vaccinations with the wonderful, experienced Healer Nasser. They’d been just as bad as their first vaccines, if not worse as they screamed themselves sick and refused to calm down as their bruised arms went purple. They clung to him, the both of them, and he’d spent the afternoon sat on the settee with two sniffing, grizzling girls on his lap who refused to let him go and when they’d calmed down and he tried to move them, they whined a soft, sleepy ‘Muma’ and started crying again as they woke up. This was as terrible as Harry had ever seen his children after a vaccination; he hated the thought that his girls needed yet another vaccination in just five more months. ‘It’s to keep them safe’, he repeated as a mantra as he spent the afternoon cuddling them close to his chest.

Harry’s court case was starting in just a week and he was getting worse and worse with his nerves. He couldn’t help it and he was seeing more and more of Richard the closer it came to the seventeenth of May.

It just kept playing over and over in his head and his mind drifted off over and over again until it sometimes took several tries for his mates to get his attention. Damn it, he just wanted to fast forward this part. This court case had been playing on his mind ever since it had all come out and now that the time had come for it to start; he just wanted it all over with.

“Come on, love. Eat something, please.” Max begged as Harry sat staring out of the window, his fork prodding his food, but not actually eating anything.

Harry startled and looked at his mates and he sighed. “Sorry. I’m a million miles away.”

Harry started eating his cold food with a grimace and he realised that his mates were already finished their own dinners. He’d done it again and he was worrying them needlessly because he couldn’t stop his mind from whirring.

“There is nothing to worry about.” Blaise told him.

“That’s easy for you to say! It’s not you who has to face the people who hurt and abused you for fifteen years!”

Harry sat back down gracelessly when he realised that he’d jumped to his feet in anger and bashed his head against the table top.

“I’m sorry, Blaise, I’m not angry with you. I’m just…I’m scared and I hate admitting that, but I am.”

“We know.” Nasta said softly, coming to hold him. “We love you and we will support you through this in any and every way that we can. Even if you need to shout at us to release some pent up anger and frustration. We may not be able to go to the court with you, but you will have Richard right beside you and we’ll be right here with you when you come home every afternoon.”
Harry nodded. “I know…I just keep thinking of worst case scenarios and I just…this court case is going to be the death of me.”

“It won’t, we won’t let it.” Draco told him.

“It’s just difficult.” Harry said softly.

“We will do everything that we can to make this less of a strain on you.” Nasta said firmly, his wonderful, needed pillar of strength.

“I love you. All four of you. I don’t know what I’d be doing if I never had you four with me. I’m so glad that I’m a Dracken, I’m so glad I have the four of you and I’m so glad that we have a family together.”

“Come on, I don’t think you’re going to eat any more of this.”

“I’m sorry, Max, it was nice. Thank you.”

Max sighed and took his almost untouched plate away. “It’s alright, love. I know you’re feeling stressed and out of it. Do you want tea and biscuits?”

Harry just nodded as Nasta carried him into the living room. Normally he would have insisted that he could walk there himself, but today he could use the attention and the comfort as he wrapped himself around Nasta and snuggled in tightly.

Nasta sat on the settee and Harry stayed wrapped up on his lap, straddling his thighs and resting on his chest, his ear pressed over Nasta’s strongly beating heart. Blaise sat next to them and rested himself on Nasta’s shoulder, facing Harry and smiling at him as they held hands.

Draco went to his armchair and cracked open his book and everything was hushed and peaceful, the kids were all in bed, it was eight O’clock in the night and it was peaceful. Harry pushed all his thoughts away and he refused to think of anything else as he rested on Nasta and absorbed the peace. This would all be over soon. This stress would be gone, this fear would be gone and this worry would all just be gone. It would all work out in the end and then he would be fine and happy and free to live his life and expand and love his family. That’s all he wanted in life, it’s all he’d ever wanted.
Chapter End Notes

A/N: This will be my last update now for at least three weeks; I’m going away to Minehead now next week, I’m so excited for my first proper holiday in four years. It’s not very far away, not like when I went to Italy, but it doesn’t matter, I’m still excited. I’ve made sure not to leave you on a cliffhanger this time around, it’s mostly filler as I wrap up the Spring months and draw closer to the court case, which will be starting in the next chapter when I get around to writing it.

nicki valentine: This has popped up so many times, Marianna even had a heat period back in chapter twenty-six. Her Dracken runs on instinct alone, it doesn’t have rational thought, it doesn’t realise it’s barren, so it still puts her through heat periods because to her Dracken, she can still have babies even though she actually can’t. Barren or not she will still go through a heat period until the end of her natural fertile years are over.

That’s all for now, I’m so excited for my holiday! I’ll see you in a couple of weeks, I’ll try not to drive you all mad with a blow-by-blow account of everything I did, but more exciting than that, the court case starts in the next chapter, but please try and go a little easy on me, especially if you are an actual judge, lawyer, barrister, whatever, because I’ve never set foot in a court in my life and though I’ve done as much research as I can given the time limits, there are still bound to be things I get wrong, so you’ll just have to take it all with a pinch of salt and a bucket of patience.
I hope you’ve all enjoyed this chapter, I’ll see you lovelies soon,

StarLight Massacre. X
Expertise

Chapter Notes

A/N: Dedicated to Syaza, one of the Facebook fans. Happy Birthday lovelie! I hope this chapter is a good enough present for you.

Last Time

Nasta sat on the settee and Harry stayed wrapped up on his lap, straddling his thighs and resting on his chest, his ear pressed over Nasta’s strongly beating heart. Blaise sat next to them and rested himself on Nasta’s shoulder, facing Harry and smiling at him as they held hands.

Draco went to his armchair and cracked open his book and everything was hushed and peaceful, the kids were all in bed, it was eight O’clock in the night and it was peaceful. Harry pushed all his thoughts away and he refused to think of anything else as he rested on Nasta and absorbed the peace. This would all be over soon. This stress would be gone, this fear would be gone and this worry would all just be gone. It would all work out in the end and then he would be fine and happy and free to live his life and expand and love his family. That’s all he wanted in life, it’s all he’d ever wanted.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Ninety-Five – Expertise

Things got infinitely worse for them all when four days before the start of the court case Draco came down with a third fever in just a handful of months.

It was Max who had found him this time, when he came back from feeding Eva and Ave their bottles at three in the morning. He had tucked the freshly changed and soundly sleeping little girls back into their cots and he’d slid into the bed carefully, so that he didn’t wake any of his mates up, but he’d just so happened to brush against something that felt like a red hot poker in the bed and he’d immediately turned on the bedside lamp and seen Draco, flushed and sweating, delirious with his fever as he convulsed around in the bed, but he was firmly unconscious again.

He had scooped him up and smacked Nasta on his way past, which had jolted him awake, becoming immediately alert, just in time to see Max leaving the bedroom with Draco in his arms.

He sighed heavily and with a sinking heart, he woke up Blaise and Harry.

“What’s ‘appening?” Harry slurried sleepily.
“Max has taken Draco to the hospital.” Nasta informed them.

He watched sadly as Harry and Blaise shot up and started moving around. It was only just gone three in the morning.

“Not again.” Blaise sighed. “How can they keep saying that nothing is wrong with him? Something is damn well wrong with him!”

“Do you think it’s a Dracken thing?” Harry asked softly. “Maybe that’s why the Healers can’t find anything, maybe we’d be better off getting him to a Dracken Healer.”

Nasta started at that and he pulled Harry into a kiss.

“You’re a genius! That has to be what it is. I’ll contact the Counsel Halls immediately and I need you to call Lucius and Narcissa, get Lucius to discharge Draco from the hospital and get him back here so that the Dracken Healer can examine him. Why didn’t I think of this before?”

“Because Drackens hardly ever get ill.” Blaise soothed him. “This is no one’s fault and we’ll sort it now.”

Nasta nodded, but he still felt the heavy weight of guilt. Draco had been ill for all this time; this was his third, dangerously high fever in just a few months. He felt the guilt like a white hot brand pushed between his shoulder blades.

“I…I’ll stay here then. Blaise, you get to the hospital and take clothes for Max.” Harry said softly, shakily. “Nas, you get that Healer here now, I’ll call Lucius afterwards and get him to discharge Draco, we need the Healer here first though, ready and waiting for Draco to arrive. I want this sorted, now.”

Nasta nodded at the logic of that and he helped Blaise get some of Max’s clothes together before he flooed through the network to the hospital to tell Max of their thoughts and what they were planning on doing.

Nasta immediately called the Counsel Halls as soon as Blaise was gone as Harry boiled the kettle to make some calming tea. He needed his head on his shoulders; he couldn’t help Draco at all if he was panicking worse than a headless chicken.
“The guards are calling one of the night Healers, she’ll be here soon.” Nasta said as he came out into kitchen.

Harry was rubbing the tears from his face. Nasta sighed and pulled Harry into his arms.

“It’ll be alright, everything will be fine. We’ll set up a clear space for the Healer to work in, we’ll find out what’s wrong with him. Do you want me to call Lucius and Narcissa?”

Harry shook his head. “No, I’ll do it now.”

Harry took a deep breath, took a gulp of tea and went into the living room just as a small, willowy woman flooed into the living room with a large leather case.

“I am Healer Anika Chapman. Where is the patient?” She asked briskly, all professionalism.

“He isn’t here just yet.” Harry told her.

Her eyebrows drew together in confusion.

“He’s at Saint Mungos hospital, we only just realised that his illness could be Dracken related after he’d been admitted. We’ll get him discharged here as soon as possible.” Harry elaborated.

“You told the guards that this isn’t the first fever like this that he’s had?”

“No.” Nasta replied smoothly as he came through the doorway. “This is the third and the Healers at Saint Mungos can’t find anything wrong with him.”

Harry left Nasta to explain what was happening with Draco to the Healer as he flooed over to Malfoy Manor, he thought that this would be better said in person rather than in a floo call.

A house elf in a crisp pillow case appeared a second after Harry arrived.

“Go and call Lucius and Narcissa, now.” Harry said, not giving the poor creature a chance to greet him or tell him to go away.

“Master and Mistress were not wanting to be disturbed.”

“I’m telling you to get them here now or I’ll go and get them myself.” Harry said dangerously, his patience running thin as his voice rose uncontrollably. His beloved mate was back in the hospital for a third time and every minute that he was there, the worse he would get until that damn fever broke. This Dracken Healer could be the difference that Draco needed to finally find out what was wrong with him.

“What is going on here?” Lucius Malfoy’s sharp, silky voice cut right through Harry’s loud and angry argument with the house elf.

He was dressed in a pristine set of pyjamas which he was in the process of tying a floor length dressing gown over the top of.

“It’s Draco.” Harry said with a face that was crumpling with worry and sadness.

“He is fevered again?” Lucius bit out, his body immediately tautening with anger and worry.

Harry nodded. “We need you to discharge him from the hospital, we…”

“We think that the problem is Dracken related, so we called the Counsel Halls and the Dracken specialist Healer is at our house waiting for Draco. We just need him released from the hospital.” Harry cut in. He was so not in the mood for Lucius’ superior bullshit today.

“Why didn’t you think of this before?” Lucius demanded in a hiss.

“Do you not realise exactly how hard it is for a Dracken to get seriously sick?” Harry hissed back. “We can get colds, infections, little debilitating illnesses that make us need a bit of extra rest for a few days, but nothing like what Draco has. We’re hoping that the specialist knows what’s wrong with him, because if she doesn’t, then that’s it…the Healers at Saint Mungos can’t even find anything wrong with him at all, this Healer is our last chance of helping Draco, so get to that damn hospital and get him discharged and get him to our house and to that damn Healer before he gets worse or before he actually dies!”

Harry turned on his heel and threw a handful of floo powder into the ornate fireplace and he called out his destination, ignoring the inevitable pain in his knees as he landed, actually pitching forward until he needed to use his hands to keep from face planting the floor, before he stood up and angrily strode across the living to his mate and he all but threw himself into Nasta’s arms, ignoring the Healer who was meticulously setting up her work space.

“Do I need to go and convince Lucius to do as we’ve asked?” Nasta asked, a dangerous growl working its way out of his throat.

Harry shook his head. “He’ll do it. He cares too much for Draco not to; I still don’t see why we can’t discharge him ourselves. Draco’s a grown man, he’s almost nineteen, we’re obviously his lovers, everyone knows it.”

Nasta sighed. “Unfortunately wizarding law is strange, unless he’s married, then he’ll still default to his parents when he’s unable to express his wishes himself. Unless his parents are dead, then he could default to us if he’s been living with us for more than ten years.”

“Stupid law.” Harry muttered.

Nasta nodded. “I know, love, but it is what it is. At this moment in time we need Lucius to discharge Draco for us.”

It took a further half an hour before Blaise flooed home and just behind them was Max all but cradling an unconscious Draco in his huge arms. Lucius and Narcissa flooed in after Max, but the Healer had already started, indicating that Max should put Draco down on the transfigured bed that they’d put in a cleared space in the living room for the Healer to work in.

It was tense, really, really tense as they sat on the settees, just watching and waiting, trying not to get in the way or interrupt the Healer, and Narcissa broke that hideous silence by politely asking for a cup of sweet tea. Max leapt up as if he’d been severely burnt and he rushed into the kitchen to get tea, Blaise on his heels to ‘help’ him.

Harry didn’t move, he didn’t think he could as his gaze was glued to Draco, who was being checked over by an experienced, knowledgeable hand. He just wanted to know what was wrong with his mate once and for all and if the Dracken Healer couldn’t find anything wrong with Draco, then that meant it was over, there was nothing else that they could do and they were then dealing with something unknown, which meant that the longer it carried on without them finding a cause, the more all of them were being exposed to whatever it was that Draco had, the more their children were being exposed to whatever it was that Draco had.

Of course just because they were in the midst of a crisis, didn’t mean that they could stop or put everything on hold. Their little girls still woke up at six in the morning for their bottles, Leolin woke up at twenty past six for a nappy change and Braiden woke up, and woke up all of his brothers and his sister as well, at ten past seven.

They were forced to feed and dress their children as normal while the Healer conducted her tests and examinations on Draco and then they penned them all up in the playpen in the kitchen with their toys while taking it in turns to sit and watch them.

Harry was the one in the kitchen when his children dropped off to sleep for their midmorning nap and he sighed in relief as he set up the baby monitor, picked up Farren who refused to go to sleep, as per usual, and carried him into the living room to sit with his mates, who had Eva and Ave with them. Leolin was sleeping in a bassinet in the kitchen, the further away he was from sickness, the more chance he had of not picking anything up. Though they all knew that if Draco was seriously ill, then there was no place in this house that they could put Leolin to keep him safe.

“They all down?” Nasta asked, more for something to break the silence than anything else and Harry nodded as he put down the baby monitor on a side table.

“May I hold Farren, Harry?” Narcissa asked quietly.

Harry handed the big, heavy boy over to her and he sat himself down and pressed himself into Blaise and cuddled in.

“He’ll be fine.” Blaise whispered to him. “The Healer will find out what’s wrong and then we can help him get better, this will all be in the past soon enough.”

Harry gave him a small smile, Blaise was trying and Harry appreciated his effort, even though they were just pretty words as none of them knew what would happen in the future, none of them knew if Draco was going to be alright and they didn’t know that the Healer could help, if she even found anything wrong with Draco at all in the first place.

“May I ask a…personal question?” The Healer asked them, breaking the terrible silence that had fallen.

“Of course, Healer.” Nasta replied promptly. “Anything that could help Draco, just ask it.”
“Has Draco fathered any children?”

They all looked at one another.

“I…no.” Harry said with a frown. “Not yet.”

She nodded. “Did he by any chance take one of the suppressant potions for any reason?”

Harry felt his body blanch as he remembered what Draco had done to him under the effects of that evil potion, the potion that had almost ruined their mateship before it had even really begun.

“He…he took the most powerful one for several months.” Blaise said quietly. “He didn’t realise the damage that it could cause, but he went through a complete detox, it should all be out of his system!”

“It is.” The Healer said comfortingly. “But it’s left behind some lingering damage. Draco’s antibodies are attacking the damaged areas, which is causing him to break out into these seemingly random fevers.”

“Can you fix it?” Harry asked desperately.

Healer Anika Chapman nodded and then sighed. “I can stop his body from attacking the lingering damage and thus stop the fevers, but…I’m not going to be able to reverse the damage that has already been done by the suppressant potions. He was taking them for a very prolonged period of time, the damage is irreversible.”

“Where is this damage?” Nasta demanded.

The Healer looked at them with pitying, doleful eyes. “His reproductive organs.” She answered them respectfully, with a hushed voice, and the bottom dropped out from under Harry as he realised what he was being told and why the Healer had asked if Draco had fathered any children.

The damage had been done to his testicles and the damage couldn’t be reversed, his mate was sterile and likely had been since before they’d even mated. It was no wonder that his Dracken had readily rejected Draco in favour of Max. It made a lot more sense to him now, his Dracken had been able to sense that Draco wouldn’t be able to give him babies and thus it had rejected him and it had just so happened to coincide with the overly harsh punishment, which had acted as a cover to the real reason that his Dracken hadn’t wanted Draco as a mate and his Dracken had readily moved onto Max, the first Dracken that he’d seen after the rejection of Draco. His second mate was infertile and wouldn’t be able to ever give him children.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

The Healer had administered several potions that Max had immediately set to researching and dissecting, talking shop with Healer Chapman and then he’d done the same with the pharmaceutical witch behind the desk at the clinic where they had gone to pick up Draco’s potions.

Lucius and Narcissa had demanded to know what was going on, so they’d sat down and they’d explained everything that had happened over two years ago now, from the potion that Draco had been taking and its effects, how Draco had actually found the potion and then brewed it himself in his bedroom, exactly why he was taking it, which had been his fear of himself and the fear of his parents reactions when they found out that he was not actually a Pureblooded wizard but an illegal, outlawed dragon creature and how they (Harry and Blaise) had helped him by putting him into Severus Snape’s care for a full body detox and training on how to control himself and his urges and instincts. The elder Malfoys had left their house with a lot to think about and a lot more understanding as to why Draco was currently sick, they hadn’t been back yet. Harry didn’t blame them; it had been a hell of a lot of information to take it and to find out that your son was this seriously ill because he’d been afraid to tell them that he’d had a creature inheritance must have hurt, but to also find out that their son was never going to make them official grandparents, that had to have hurt as well. Narcissa had looked devastated at the news.

It took a further three days of tests and Healer visits and they found out a lot of information in that short amount of time, some very welcomed, some less so, before Draco’s fever finally broke under the effects of the new potions that he was taking, which were preventing his body from attacking the damage done to the soft tissues of his testicles and thus making everything several times worse.

He was awake and sat up, looking a little groggy, but no worse than he usually did when he came out of a fever when Harry checked on him at six O’clock the next morning.

“Draco, you’re awake! Are you okay? How are you feeling?” Harry asked as he saw that Draco was actually sat up and awake.

“This is our living room, why aren’t I in the hospital?” He asked in a soft croak.

Harry hugged him and kissed him and he was just so glad that Draco was awake again.
“We got your Dad to discharge you. We realised that the problem might be Dracken related, which is why the Healers at Saint Mungos couldn’t find anything wrong with you when we all knew that there was something wrong.”

“What’s wrong with me?” Draco asked hoarsely.

“Sip some water first; it’ll help with your throat.”

Draco did as Harry had asked, sipping on the glass of water through a straw that Harry had picked up from the coffee table.

“Right, I’ve had some water, what’s wrong? Stop stalling now because you’re making me more anxious.”

“It…I’m sorry, Draco, it was the suppressant potions that you were taking.”

“But I stopped taking it, I went through the detox with Professor Snape, it shouldn’t still be in my system.”

“It’s not in your system, but love, remember what we found out? About it causing deposits in the soft tissues of your body?”

Draco nodded his understanding, but he looked slightly green and like he was going to pass out at any minute.

“Your body started attacking the damaged areas, trying to get rid of them but the damage is irreversible, the more your body tried to attack the damage, the more antibodies you created and it was this that was causing your fevers, but we’ve been giving you potions to help with that, to stop the fevers, so you shouldn’t have any more of them now.”

“Is the damage really permanent?” Draco asked quietly.

Harry licked his lips and swallowed. “It…it is, yes. It’s impossible to reverse the damage already done, but it isn’t going to get any worse now either.” Harry was forced to tell him.
“Where is the damage? Snape told me that my kidneys were heavily damaged by me taking that potion, is it my kidneys that are permanently damaged?”

“No, it’s not your kidneys, it’s…I’m so sorry, Draco; please know that I love you dearly.”

“You’re frightening me now, Harry. Where is the damage?”

“It started laying down deposits in your soft tissues, Draco, it…it affected your testicles first.”

Harry watched as Draco stilled, his face leeching of all colour, before he threw himself back onto his pillows as he finally worked out what was being said to him, too weakened by the shocking news to remaining sitting upright.

“That’s why I haven’t given you any children, isn’t it? I’m…I’m not able to, am I?”

“I love you, Draco, that’s not going to change because of this, but we don’t know yet if you’re able to or not. Your Father tried to get in all sorts of fertility specialists, but we said no, we wanted you to be awake first. The Dracken Healer thinks that with fertility potions you might be able to conceive children, but that wasn’t important to us, we just wanted to make sure that you knew that you were safe and loved.”

“And what the fuck is that going to do when I’m the last of my family name?” Draco roared at him.

Harry took a step back in fright from the sudden noise and a few moments later Nasta was there, his strong, bare chest against his back, holding him and wrapping him up tight, looking for intruders.

“What’s going on?” Blaise asked from further back, his voice strained with adrenaline.

“I think Harry has told Draco what’s been going on.” Max said with a sigh. “I’ll get us tea.”

“Tea is not going to help the situation!” Draco snapped. “I’m fucking sterile!”
“The Healer has done tests, Caru. You’re not completely sterile.” Nasta told him. “You’re on potions to keep the damage from getting any worse and it wasn’t extensive enough to completely render you sterile. One of your testicles is measuring much lower than your other though, the Healers don’t think that there’s anything they can do about that, but the potions should help boost the sperm count of your remaining testicle enough for you to get a child. So you’ll still be able to have children; you just need the help of fertility potions to boost your sperm count from your damaged testicles in order to do so.”

“So, I can have children?” Draco asked unsurely.

The four of them all nodded.

“Yes, I can start you on the fertility potions immediately if you want. I’ve got a full week’s worth ready, I wasn’t going to start tipping potions that you didn’t need down your throat though, despite your parents’ insistence.” Max said. “Harry could have a heat period at any moment though, it’s best to be prepared.”

“I better bloody not have a heat period soon.” Harry grumbled as Draco nodded.

“So, I’m going to be fine? The damage won’t get any worse, I can father children with the help of potions and these fevers will stop?”

“Yes.” Nasta replied as he went to Draco and hugged him. “If you keep taking your potions, everything will be fine, Draco.”

“If I’d taken any more of that potion…” Draco said.

“Don’t.” Max said firmly. “Don’t think about it, Draco. Fuck being sterile if you’d taken any more of that potion, you could have damn well died from it! I read the reports that Professor Snape had on your toxicology, that potion almost destroyed your kidneys before he forced you into detoxification, Draco. Be thankful that you’re actually still alive and that the damage you did to yourself was fairly minor compared to how long you were taking that potion, even after Harry’s pheromones rendered it completely useless you were still taking it. The damage you did to your kidneys was thankfully fully reversed with your detox and the damage to your testicles is again minor compared to what it could have been…you might need the help of potions to conceive a child, but at least you still have both testicles, even though the one doesn’t work well enough for it to produce sperm, and you’re still alive. That potion can eat away at organs and soft tissues, once it started on your kidneys and laid down deposits in your testicles you could have died from the effects of what that potion can do.”
Draco was very pale, but he swallowed heavily and nodded.

“Just focus on the positive things.” Blaise encouraged. “You’re alive, these fevers are going to stop, we know now what was wrong and how to help you with it and to top it off, with these fertility potions you’re going to have an influx of children.”

“Don’t say that!” Harry moaned as he pressed a hand to his stomach which still ached on occasion when he was on his feet all day, bending and lifting. “You can all have one baby, just the one at any one time. I can’t take another multiple birth. It’s been four months and this is still hurting when I push myself.”

“I only want the one, just one.” Draco sighed. “I love our children, but I do want a child of my own, to pass my name to, even if that one is the only child I ever get to have given recent revelations, I don’t care.”

Harry sighed. “You will have a baby, Draco, of course you will. With these potions your sperm count is going to be so high, the others aren’t going to get a look in.”

“It’s not how many you have, but how fast they swim!” Max declared.

Harry snorted in laughter and turned to grin at his biggest mate. “You’re terrible.” He told him. “Where’s that tea you promised?”

Max pulled him into a hug and picked him up for a big kiss before going to sort out tea.

“Since we’re all awake we might as well get ready for today.”

“What’s today?” Draco asked.

Harry went green at the reminder and he stumbled to Nasta and clutched at him.

“You’ve been out of it for four days.” Blaise said. “Harry’s trial starts today.”
“That’s why you were up so early.” Draco accused.

Harry nodded, still clutching at Nasta’s waist, nuzzling his nose into that bare chest and inhaling the scent of clean skin. His hands played over Nasta’s back muscles and he smiled, laying soft kisses to that glorious chest.

“It’ll be alright.” Nasta told him. “You’ll be with Richard and he’s been working so hard on this case, he’ll get you through this and you’ll never be apart from him for any reason. We’ll be right here waiting for you when you get back.”

“I’m so sorry that you’ve had to worry about me when this case is so close.” Draco said.

“He can’t help it, you see. You can’t help being sick, Nasta.” Draco told him, nudging him to the side of the bed. “Don’t, Draco. Please don’t apologise for being sick, you couldn’t help it and really it stopped my mind from lingering too long on the court date as I looked after you. You’re more important to me than the Dursleys. Looking after you was more important to me than them.”

“You’ve been agonising over this court date since it was first announced that Richard had enough evidence to take them to court, nothing now is more important than this.” Draco told him.

“It’ll be over soon.” Harry said, trying to convince himself that it wouldn’t be that bad and that next week it could all be over for good.

“It will, just keep yourself calm, let Richard handle everything, answer politely and factually and you’ll be just fine. They’re guilty after all, no matter how hard they try to fight or lie, the truth will come out.” Nasta told him, kissing his head and clenching him tighter to his chest, those large hands wrapped around his back and stroking gently, in a way that comforted him instead of arousing him.

Harry nodded, feeling sick. He didn’t want to do this, but he knew that he had to; his therapist had said that it could help him with his recovery, which meant that the hideous nightmares would finally start to ease off his tortured mind. He still said that the best option was to have left it all alone and have it remain forgotten in the past. He wouldn’t be feeling this awful then if he had done things that way.

“Just calm down. The first day isn’t going to be anything to worry about.” Max promised him as he brought in a tray of tea for them all. “Today will be the initial accusations, that’s all. My Dad will be the one speaking, you might have to confirm your name, but that’s all. I keep telling you, love, that this case will mostly be the lawyers and barristers fighting one another. You in contrast will have to do very little; you don’t even have to be there for most of it, just when you have to take the stand.”

Harry shook his head. “No. I want to be there for all of it, I feel like I need to do this for it all to be finally resolved. I’m just…I’m petrified of the whole thing for some reason.”

“Because it’s new, you’ve never had to do anything like this before.”

“I have. I told you I had that trial in my fifth year.”

Max snorted. “Yeah, that should never have happened either. A full fucking Wizengamot court for underaged magic of all things, those idiots are lucky that you never knew enough to counter sue them. This court case will be done professionally; it will be done right, which means it’ll be very different to the supposed court case when you were fifteen, love.”

Harry nodded his understanding, but he didn’t think he could talk and as Nasta escorted Draco to the kitchen, who insisted that he was perfectly fine to walk on his damn own, Harry followed them, subdued and quiet, taking his honey tea with him. This week was going to be torturous, but he prayed that it didn’t last any longer than a week, please, please don’t let it last any longer than that, he begged mentally as he took a seat at the kitchen table and sipped at his tea while Max, who had dashed off to get dressed at some point when Harry was preoccupied with his own thoughts, started making them breakfast.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry hadn’t been able to eat anything and his hand shook so much as he drank cup after cup of tea that he’d sloshed half of his last cup over his shirt and had had to run and change it quickly.

He was so nervous that he was even biting his tongue when he tried to talk, so he gave up and remained quiet, hoping against hope that he didn’t do that in the court room when he was required to speak.

“Please calm down, love.” Max all but begged, looking visibly upset at Harry’s obvious distress. “Do you need a drop of calming draught, just to help you relax and stay calm?”

Harry nodded, almost latching onto Max’s front at the offer of a potion to help him deal with his current level of stress. Max carried him to the kitchen and sat him on the counter as he got his potions case down.
“Because it’s not going to be in a liquid, it’s not going to be diluted, so you’ll only need a drop on your tongue.” Max explained as he uncorked the vial and gently held Harry’s chin. “Head back and poke that sexy tongue out at me, lover.”

Harry couldn’t help but smile at that, giggling a little as his tongue was stuck out at Max, who smiled softly at him before he tilted the vial with a steady hand and carefully let one controlled drop of potion fall onto Harry’s exposed tongue.

The effect was immediate as Harry screwed up his face and made disgusted noises, using a hand to scrape over his tongue, looking at Max with a sort of betrayal.

“Hey, don’t give me that look, all potions are disgusting, that’s why we dilute them in our favourite drinks, you’ll never find a potion that has to be drunk neat that tastes nice. They all taste like poison, here.”

Max handed him a glass of pumpkin juice and Harry gulped it all down happily to try and get the taste of the calming draught off of his tongue.

Max swiped him off of the counter and carried him back into the living room where their babies were slowly dropping off one by one for their midmorning nap; it was almost nine in the morning, the time when Richard was coming to get him so that they could be in the court for half past. His court case started at ten sharp. He felt sick.

“You’re going to be just fine.” Nasta assured him as he came to kiss him gently. Harry was sad that his top dominant had gotten dressed, but he still slipped his hands under the tee-shirt that Nasta was wearing to touch bare skin.

“I know, I don’t know why I’m so nervous.” Harry said weakly, even as his fingers roved over dips, curves and muscle contours.

“It’s normal to be afraid of the unknown.”

The floo flared suddenly and Richard stepped gracefully into their living room dressed to perfection in a designer suit. Harry was also wearing a smart, brand new designer suit with a soft grey tie that had been bought just for this occasion weeks ago. Draco insisted that it was important to look respectable in this sort of situation, but Harry felt so uncomfortable and out of place. He actually whimpered when Richard stepped over the fireguard.
“It’ll all be over soon.” Richard comforted him gently. “Just a few hours and then you’ll be back here with your mates.”

“Remember that we love you and that nothing is going to happen to you.” Max told him.

“Stay with Richard.” Nasta told him seriously. “We’ll be ready to pamper you when you come home.”

“Please, just relax and try not to worry so much.” Blaise said as he gave him a last hug, pulling him away from where he was playing with Nasta’s skin.

“You’re going to be fine.” Draco told him from where Nasta had confined him back to the transfigured bed that was still in the living room after he’d forced him to eat some bland, unsweetened porridge for breakfast.

Harry sucked in a deep breath and squared his shoulders. He smiled to his mates, even though he didn’t want to be smiling at this moment, in fact he felt so far away from wanting to smile that he had to bite his lip to keep from frowning unhappily. But he didn’t want his mates to be so worried about him when they were going to be stuck here, not knowing what was going on, so he smiled and kissed them all goodbye. His children were all down for naps now, so he didn’t kiss them goodbye, he didn’t want to disturb them, even if he could really do with a baby cuddle right about now.

He allowed himself to be held by Richard as they went into the fireplace and then he was swept away, back to Richard’s home, and then he was ushered into the huge kitchen where Myron was stood by the kitchen table, in his smart work robes, draining a mug of black coffee in large, quick gulps.

“Harry.” He greeted gruffly as he pulled him roughly into a tight hug, his mug still in his hand. “You’re going to be fine, I trust Richard with you and this nightmare will all be over soon.”

Harry nodded slowly, his tongue stuck to the roof of his mouth. Myron chuckled and bent to kiss his forehead.

“Take care of him today, Richard.”

“What a thing to say!” Richard replied, outraged. “Of course I will, you know I will. This is Harry we’re talking about! Our baby son, Myron! You’re despicable, hurry up and go to work already.”
Myron gave a smirk and he chuckled before he went back to his coffee, tipping his head back, his strong throat working as he gulped it down quickly.

“I’m going.” He assured Richard as he deposited the empty mug into the sink. “Work hard and keep our boy safe and calm.”

Richard nodded as they shared a hug and a quick peck on the lips. Myron hugged Harry again and neatened his hair for him, running both, huge hands over his head to try and flatten his hair somewhat.

“It’s not going to work. Draco and Nasta have already tried.” Harry said with a weak smile.

“You’re going to be fine.” Myron told him. “I’ll smuggle you some of that sickly chocolate that you like when you get home. I’ll visit Honeydukes on my way home from work.”

That made Harry smile for the first time, a real smile and not a forced sort of grimace.

“There we go, I knew that would get a smile from you. I’ll come over later with it; it’s been a while since I’ve seen those new girls of ours. They’re four months old now, aren’t they? The time is passing by far too quickly for my liking.”

Harry’s soft smile widened at that. It had been a while since Myron and Richard had come over to see Eva and Ave, with Ashleigh in the hospital it was hard for them to get the time to come and see them because they were allowed to visit her as much as they pleased now, apparently she had made vast improvements and thus she could have visitors every other day. A luxury that Myron and Richard were taking advantage of, they missed her greatly, it was plain to see and Harry was so, so glad that she was improving, that she was taking in the advice and the help that was being given to her. He hoped that she was home by Christmas; he would love to share that with her and to, of course, thrust Eva and Ave onto the only Grandmother that they had yet to meet. They’d be nearly a year old by Christmas.

There was a lump in his throat when he was side along Apparated to a small alleyway behind a café by Richard. He stumbled and almost went to his knees after the landing, Richard sweeping him up and setting him back onto his feet once his knees felt solid enough to support his weight. He hated magical forms of travelling.

The two of them walked out onto the busy street and Richard looked at his watch before he led Harry into the café that they were stood outside of.
“Do you think Nasta would skin my arse if I offered you coffee?” He asked with a cheeky grin.

“Cappuccino?” Harry looked at Richard pleadingly. “Please?”

Richard grinned wider and he went to the counter, Harry a silent shadow under his arm, and he ordered two coffees to go, including Harry’s frothy cappuccino with extra sprinkled cocoa powder over the top.

They walked for five minutes until Harry saw the High Court building and all of his nerves flooded back.

‘Should have gotten a second drop of that foul calming draught’ He thought with a shaky sigh.

“Just stay with me, today will go smoothly. I always get what I want.” Richard told him in a calm, soothing voice.

Harry smiled weakly, but it was more of a grimace as he huddled closer to Richard than maybe he otherwise might have.

Harry licked his lips as he looked around the building, it was busy, bustling with lots of people and the building was made up of lots and lots of glass, everywhere he looked he could see the outside and he wondered if that was done purposefully as he relaxed a little bit. He didn’t feel closed in and he didn’t feel trapped in the building and he liked that, it helped him relax, it helped him feel better. He wondered if that was a Dracken thing or just a people thing.

“Keep your calm and reign in your temper, no matter what is said in this room and remember that no matter what happens, nothing is going to happen to you.”

Harry swallowed and he nodded understandingly as he followed Richard to a posh, luxurious corridor with gleaming marble floors and tasteful artwork on the walls. It felt more like a museum than a court. Richard sat him on a highly polished, wooden bench and they waited.

Lots of people came up and greeted Richard, laughing and joking like old friends as they spoke and congratulated one another on things that Harry didn’t understand. Some people just glared at him from afar…Harry assumed that the latter group of people were always on the opposite side to Richard when in the court room.

He knew from Max and Richard that there were always two sides…the prosecution and the defence. Harry was the plaintiff, or the accuser in layman’s terms, so Richard was the prosecution and the Dursleys were the party being accused, so they were the defendants and their lawyer would be the defence, as Harry had made the original claim of child abuse and neglect it was up to the Dursleys now to defend the claim and to try and prove it false and for Richard to make sure that the defence didn’t have the manoeuvrability to do so.

It was all complicated and foreign to him, he still didn’t fully understand what was going to happen, despite having all of it explained to him and despite all of the preparation work that Richard had done with him to explain how everything was going to work, it hadn’t calmed him down or made him understand any better.

Harry worked on automatic when he was led into the actual courtroom when an announcer read out Potter versus Dursley. The Dursleys were already inside the court room and Harry swallowed. He hadn’t seen them in two years. It seemed that prison life had not been good to them.

Harry stood on the far side of Richard, almost cowering as the severe, evil looking Judge came into the room and when he sat down, the rest of the court did. Harry almost missed his chair he was that nervous.

Everything was formal and there were a lot of people, it was a closed court, so there were no members of the public or members of the press present, but there were still a lot of people and as the court attendant carried on, lining out the charges against the defendants in precise, clinical tones, Harry felt like he was suffering from a nervous, mental breakdown.

How on Earth could anyone stand this sort of high pressure situation? How did Richard do this day in day out and still be the fun loving, slightly childish man that he was at the end of the day? He felt like he was losing his mind already and it hadn’t even been ten minutes yet.

Richard eased him to his feet and he was asked to confirm his name, age and current address. He did so with a thick tongue and a dry throat, but he got out all the relevant information without stumbling over his words or biting his tongue or his cheek. He sat back down feeling sheer relief that he hadn’t made a complete and utter fool out of himself not even fifteen minutes into the first day of the proceedings.

He found his gaze wandering to the people who he had once called family. Petunia looked like she’d aged ten years and as she had never appeared very youthful to begin with, that was saying something as he looked over her frail frame in the conservative, designer dress with a matching cardigan. She was thin, wrinkled and gaunt.

Vernon didn’t look any better either. He was half the man he’d been when Harry had last seen him and he had virtually no hair left and what he did have was grey and wispy around a large bald spot at the crown of his head.

He was wearing a designer suit that was wrapped around a much leaner body that was oddly misshapen, he had obviously lost the bulk of his body weight rapidly and his skin hadn’t caught up with the rapid change in body shape. He too was gaunt and wrinkled and he had saggy, black bags under his small and beady, piggy, blue eyes.

Dudley wasn’t there. Harry didn’t know why, but he’d ask Richard when the business was over for the day as his Father-in-law was busy with whatever he was doing with the Dursley’s lawyer. He tried to follow the thread of the conversation, but he didn’t really understand and he got lost with the onslaught of ‘court speak’ that was just giving him a major headache.

Richard was laying out every single charge they were making against the Dursleys in excruciatingly minute detail and the Dursleys lawyer was firing back counter claims, stupid little things like property damage, scare tactics, mental distress, intimidation and criminal behaviour.
Harry’s hands clenched into fists as he heard what they were claiming that he’d done. He couldn’t believe that they’d even try something like that in a court of law, that they could lie to a court of law when they knew damn well that he’d done nothing of the sort!

Richard’s hand brushed his shoulder and Harry relaxed his tensed stance, letting go of the breath he was holding and unclenching his hands. He’d been warned numerous times that any sort of outburst from him could ruin the entire case and he wasn’t about to do that to Richard after the amount of time and work he’d given to put this case together for him.

He swallowed down the rage he felt at the injustice of them trying to claim that he was a delinquent criminal, he’d hoped that they wouldn’t, but he couldn’t say that he was overly surprised that they had, they were going to be out to look after their own skins, where he was here for justice.

Any and all sympathy he’d had for them or gained from seeing them in that court room, shells of their former, horrible, selves vanished in that instant and he hardened himself. They’d abused him, they had, and they’d neglected him and they had treated him like a slave, like a punching bag and if they couldn’t be bothered with him, they had locked him away and ignored him, and he deserved the justice owed to him for the things that they’d subjected him to when he was just a child.

It was all over in a couple of hours or so, much quicker than Harry would have thought and now it would take a few days to a week before they had to come back to court, the Dursleys were to spend that time in prison; apparently they’d been denied bail countless times before because they were flight risks.

Harry wanted to actually cheer when he got out into the open air, he felt relaxed and his nerves were just gone, like a click of the fingers, he felt freed and he happily let Richard take him back into the little café to get him a treat for being ‘such a brilliant boy in court’ Harry didn’t even care that Richard was teasing him with that shit eating grin of his, he was just glad that it was all over…at least for the moment.

Richard bought him a large cappuccino and a giant blueberry muffin; he said that Nasta couldn’t complain about it because it contained fruit. Harry was willing to bet that Nasta could tear the choice of his treat to pieces and the ingredients inside it would not be redeemed just because it had a few blueberries studded through it. But he also knew that anything that he wanted today, be it coffee, a muffin or a binge on his favourite fudge chocolate, Nasta would allow him to have it, because he wanted him happy and after the stress of today, of the last several days actually with Draco’s mysterious illness being solved and the pressure of caring for a sick loved one, Nasta was going to indulge his every whim.

Richard took him behind the alleyway again and they Apparated straight to the front garden of his home, or rather Max’s home, but technicalities didn’t really matter anymore, as they’d all made it their home now and they all saw it as theirs, for now at least. Max’s little blue car was in the driveway, just off to the side of the house and Harry smiled as he saw it, remembering the time that Max had pinned him to the bonnet after their shopping trip and they’d been caught in the act by the whole family.

He opened the front door and immediately he was assaulted by the giggling cackles of his babies. It made him smile and the lingering tension in his neck and shoulders just melted away and he felt lighter than he had in months.

He went straight into the living room to take in his beautiful babies and his mates, who were a little on edge, he could tell, from their tensed muscles and clenched jaws. He just knew that it was because of his court date and that they were anxious to get news about him. As his dominants it went against all of their instincts to let him go off on his own, even if he was with Richard, to a place where they knew that he was going to be distressed and upset, when they couldn’t immediately comfort and protect him. They had to let him do it on his own and Harry just knew that they hated that.

But he was home now and very happy to be home and he just wanted those baby cuddles that he couldn’t have that morning. It was a laid back, lounging Farren who saw him first.

“Muma!”

“Mummy isn’t home yet, Farren.” Draco told their son automatically, with the air of someone who’d had to say the same thing several times today already.

“Actually, I am.” Harry said with a grin as he stepped forward and scooped Farren up with a grunt. His second born son was really quite heavy now.

“You lot need to be more observant! Harry and I could have been anyone coming into your house which has your children in it!” Richard scolded them.

Harry rolled his eyes and held his muffin away from Farren’s grabby hands.

“This is not for you; you’ll ruin your dinner!” Harry chastised gently.

“He needed a pick me up; I thought the poor boy was going to pass out in the courtroom.” Richard defended himself from accusations that never came.

“I wasn’t that bad.” Harry pouted.

“No, you did brilliantly. Now I’ll deal with the back and forthy bit, they’ll have us back in court to actually start the trial now. You won’t be doing much again, you don’t even have to be there, but you will be called up to the stand at least once, I’ll question you on what happened in your opinion and then the defence will cross examine you. They’ll try to confuse you and muddle you up to get you to say things that you don’t mean or to ‘admit’ to things that are of no relevance that they can twist to their purpose. So keep a cool, calm head and think about what you want to say before you say it. It doesn’t look bad if you take a moment to think about what you want to say, even if the defence try and claim that it does, don’t worry about that and don’t listen to them, remember, they want you to slip up so that they can exploit you for the Dursley’s benefit and thus their own benefit.”
Harry nodded. He’d been through this before, about how the defence would try to turn things on him, how they’d try to twist everything that he said and get him to rush his answers without thinking about what he was actually saying. He wasn’t looking forward to it, but they weren’t going to confuse him, because he knew the truth of what had happened and he had the memories of what had happened, so he wasn’t confused over what had happened. But Draco had been teaching him to recognise the signs of a word trap, as he’d called it, and with the help of Richard and Myron, his mates and Aneirin and even Lucius, he knew how to reasonably avoid falling head first into these sorts of traps that would allow the defence to twist his words or meaning and turn the tables on him. He wouldn’t let them.

“Are you okay?” Blaise asked him softly.

Harry nodded as he snuggled with Farren, rocking him from side to side, still keeping the half-eaten muffin out of his reach.

“It wasn’t too bad. It was absolutely terrifying, but I had very little to do, so I didn’t have a lot of opportunity to make a complete fool out of myself.”

“You were alright seeing them?” Max asked him softly.

Harry grimaced. “Yes and no. I was alright, I felt nothing really, but seeing what these last two years in prison have done to them, I thought Siri…Sirius was how he was because he was in Azkaban, but now I’m not too sure, I think it might be all prisons. They were husks of their former selves, like Sirius was. It just makes me certain that I never, ever want to be imprisoned for any reason. I’d rather die.”

“Don’t say things like that.” Nasta growled as he launched himself up and took the few, huge strides he needed to reach Harry so that he could pull him into a tight hug.

“I would. To be turned into such a shell of myself, I wouldn’t want to live. So we’re just going to have to keep an eye on one another and make sure that there are no opportunities for any of us to end up like that, right?”

“Exactly right.” Draco nodded. He was still cuddled up, but the transfigured bed was gone and he was back on the one settee with a blanket around him. Nasta was still being very overprotective of him it seemed, despite them now knowing what was wrong with him and the fact that Draco was now on potions to make him better. He did have Leolin napping on his chest though, one large hand stroking rhythmically over his tiny back, fingertips going between the two miniscule wings that they had gotten so used to over the last year that they just knew exactly where they were in order to avoid “Right, you’re in good hands. I’ll keep in contact. Myron wants to come over later, so I’ll likely come back over with him too.”

“Why does he want to come over?” Max asked a little suspiciously.

“What’s this? Your poor old Dads’ can’t come to visit their oldest son anymore? We miss you; you used to always be over at our place before these monsters came along and stole you away from our loving breasts!”

Harry laughed hard at Richard’s theatrics. He felt better already after that morning and he was glad that the mood had been lifted from the anxious tension that had been lingering in the room.

“Stop being a diva, why are you really coming over?”

“To see our new granddaughters of course, we had enough of seeing you over the years, those two new cuties are all the rage at the minute, of course it’s for them. They’re four months old and Myron and I have barely seen them. It’s been a busy couple of months and with your Moth…Ashleigh being allowed more visits, it has been a little difficult, but that’s no excuse and we’ll be over to see those babies when your Dad gets out of work later this afternoon.”

With that Richard was gone. He’d stumbled over saying ‘your Mother’ to Max because he, along with Caesar and his sisters had all ‘removed’ Ashleigh from their birth certificates, thus disowning her as their Mother. It had been the kick up the arse that Ashleigh had needed, losing not only access to her grandchildren, but also losing the children who she had birthed and raised, to get her to seek the help that she really, truly she needed.

What she, or Myron and Richard, didn’t know, was that the birth certificates that Max and his siblings had erased her name from were very intricate, very well made forgeries and weren’t the real thing, thus their official certificates were untouched and remained the same.

They hadn’t wanted to tell Myron or Richard just in case they told Ashleigh and they still hadn’t mentioned that the certificates had been fake just in case Ashleigh discharged herself from the hospital too early and thus went back to her old ways. They would tell her, and their Fathers, when Ashleigh was willingly released from the hospital and was declared mentally stable after her ordeal where she’d lost her unborn baby son, Theodric.

“Are you feeling better?” Nasta asked him.
Harry nodded. “Fine. I could do with some tea though, all this coffee doesn’t agree with my stomach.”

“There’s something wrong with you.” Blaise told him while Nasta scowled.

“Just how much coffee have you had?”

“You promised that you wouldn’t start.” Max growled.

“I’m not starting anything; I asked him a simple question!” Nasta growled back.

“Stop it, this fighting is not what I want to hear right now. I’ve only just got back into the house after being mentally tortured in a court room for a couple of hours, fighting is the very last thing I want to hear thank you very much! I’ve had two cappuccinos from a café. One before entering the court, one after I left. The muffin is the only thing I’ve eaten today, so the very last thing I want to hear is you lot fighting, so if that is going to happen, you can go outside and fight and leave me in peace.”

The room fell silent on the adult front as Harry slipped to his knees and joined his babies on the floor, setting Farren on his lap as his boy still wasn’t a fan of playing with anything that wasn’t edible.

A cup of tea was offered to him a few minutes later like a peace offering and Harry smiled.

“Thank you, Nasta.” He said softly.

“Do you want lunch? I kept you some.” Max said.

“In a bit, let me have my tea first and get these kids down for their afternoon nap.”

“They should be dropping off anytime now.” Blaise said. “Like Draco.”

Harry looked over when Draco remained silent after that slur, only to realise that Draco actually had dropped off to sleep with Leolin.
“He’s been doing that all morning.” Max said with a smile as he moved to tuck Draco in more tightly. “It’s the potions, they’ll make him a bit sleepy and lethargic until he gets a little more used to them.”

Harry smiled at the picture that Draco made napping with Leolin before his attention was caught by Regan, who was handing him a spit soaked rag.

“Thank you, Regan.” He said clearly as he took the wet cloth and tried not to visibly grimace.

Just five minutes later and Tegan and Calix had drifted off to sleep, Harry had rocked Farren to sleep and Regan was wavering.

Harry put Farren down on a blanket and smoothed his dark brown hair from his face, kissing his chubby cheek before he went into the kitchen, where Max was busy heating up a plate of food for him.

“Here you go, my dearest love!” Max declared as he served Harry with a flourish.

He chuckled. “Thank you, Max. This looks gorgeous.”

“Like its wonderful, incredibly talented chef then.” Max winked.

Harry smiled before he dug in. He was suddenly starved and he knew that it was because the adrenaline rush caused by his fear and nervousness that morning had finally dropped away, meaning that his stomach wasn’t tied in knots anymore.

Harry got seconds and pudding down him and Max was very happy as he carried Harry back into the living room, telling the others that Harry had eaten enough for seven men. Nasta was very happy for that and Harry actually felt proud that his mates were happy and proud of him just because he had eaten something. It was completely ridiculous, but he couldn’t help but grin like a lunatic.

“Here you go, have a baby.” Blaise said as he dumped Eva…no, Ave onto his lap.

Harry brought her up to his nose and he inhaled deeply. Definitely his Ave.
“Hello Ave, sweetie. Have you been a good girl today? Your granddad Myron and granddad Richard are coming around to see you and your sister Eva later, that’ll be nice, won’t it? You’ll have to save some spit up for them.”

His mates sniggered at that and Harry grinned. All of them had been spit up on by Ave at some point, she was having a bit of a problem with reflux lately and it was usual for her to dribble a bit of her milk back out onto their shoulders.

Harry dived straight back into family life, now that he had nothing to stress over, nothing to worry about, he could just enjoy himself. Draco was going to be just fine; his fevers wouldn’t be coming back and the damage done to him was not going to get any worse, even if it would never get any better either, but his babies were all fine and well, the initial fear of the court had gone and everything was fine. He felt like he could sing.

He fed his babies their dinners with an energy that he hadn’t had for months now. It was like a great weight had been taken from him and had reinvigorated him. He felt like he could fly, in fact, that’s exactly what he wanted to do.

Myron and Richard flooed over after the kids had had their bath and were sat playing with their ‘quiet’ toys. Harry rushed to them and hugged them tightly; Richard laughed and hugged him tightly, swinging him around.

“How are you?” Myron asked him.

“I feel so much better. It’s like a weight has been lifted off of my back.”

“Max! I told you that you’d hurt your poor submissive if you laid on top of him! Stop damaging his fragile back!” Richard declared.

Max laughed before he hefted himself up and he and Myron did the whole, complete embrace and kiss to the mouth that they always did and then Max turned to Richard with an evil glint as he dragged his shorter, more slender Dad into his arms and off of his feet, giving him a back breaking hug that made Harry wince.

“Here, I got this for you.” Myron handed Harry a very large bar of Honeydukes fudge chocolate that he’d taken from the inside pocket of his robes and Harry’s mouth automatically started watering at the sight of it.

Harry took the bar, hugged Myron yet again, tore off the corner of the packaging and he snapped off a bite and popped it straight into his mouth. He could almost feel Nasta’s glare boring into his back.
“Harry, you haven’t had dinner yet.” Nasta told him calmly, but Harry could almost hear the strain in his voice.

“I know, but if I put this down, you’re going to hide it. I still haven’t found the one that Professor Dumbledore gave me for my birthday last year that you hid away.”

“I swear he makes a stash of all our sweets and chocolate and then when we’re sleeping he eats it all.” Draco grumbled. “I’m still missing eight ice mice from my last birthday that you took.”

“If I promise not to take it, will you at least wait until after dinner?”

“Yes, but you can’t go within three feet of it, or I’m going to do the whole hamster thing and stuff it all now because I actually want chocolate today and I don’t want it taken from me.”

“Fine.” Nasta replied shortly and he left the room.

Harry groaned. “Why is it such a struggle just to have chocolate? Why am I the one feeling guilty?”

“That’s Nasta’s innate power, the power to make you feel guilty when you shouldn’t.” Max said as he slung an arm around Harry and hugged him. “Don’t worry about it, just eat your dinner, get into your pyjamas and pig out on your chocolate.”

“Gwanda Ion.”

Harry turned to see Braiden stood by Myron’s knees, arms up beseechingly, calling for Myron.

“Well, isn’t he a little talker?” Myron commented as he got down onto one knee and scooped Braiden up for a tight hug.

“His words have really come on in the last week, it seems like it happened overnight almost. He just started talking in little sentences and he recognises people and things and he knows where he put his toys and where everything is kept. It’s amazing.”
“Who is such a clever boy!” Richard cooed.

“Me!” Calix answered as he stopped playing with his ball to look at Richard.

All of them laughed.

“Aneirin taught him that.” Harry said. “He kept calling him good boy, and saying that he was such a clever boy and now when he hears those he’ll think that you’re talking about him.”

Richard snatched up Calix and cuddled him. “He obviously took your smarts, Harry. There’s no way that this little genius could be Max’s.”

“I’m your child!” Max declared incredulously.

“Nope, you’re Myron’s.” Richard said with a wink. “Those three clever girls we have, those are all mine. You and Caesar are definitely your Father’s boys.”

Myron gave a look to Richard and the man winced.

“I’m in trouble now, aren’t I?”

“Yes.” Myron told him plainly.

“I’d think it was the other way around.” Harry said thoughtfully. “Myron’s obviously the most intelligent out of you both, so wouldn’t that mean that the girls were Myron’s and Max and Caesar were yours? That makes much more sense to me.”

Richard was slack jawed, Myron, Draco and Blaise all laughed and Max let out an indignant ‘hey!’ while Harry chuckled, moving to check on Leolin.

“How is little Leolin?” Myron asked. “You said he learnt a new word? That’s very impressive.”
Harry nodded. “Yes, he’s saying ‘Da’ now as well. Dain and Kailen were so surprised that we invited them over so they could hear it for themselves.”

“Aneirin says that you’re all getting on much better with the Faeries, I’m glad.”

Harry grinned. “Yes. Everything is calmed down and everyone is interacting, it’s lovely. Here, take a seat. Max will get you tea.”

Max was used to this by now and he just snapped to attention and gave off a very authentic looking salute before turning on his heel and marching into the kitchen. Harry just shook his head.

“I swear he’s taking something.” Blaise sighed. “He’s not normal. It’s all those potion fumes he inhales at work.”

Harry laughed. “Leave him alone, he makes me smile. Now you wanted to see Eva and Ave, yes?”

Harry went to the bassinets and he pulled out Eva and took her over to Richard, transferring the baby over easily as he took Calix from him and dropped the boy to the floor before he went back to get Ave and handed her to Myron, taking Braiden from his arms and hefting the almost two year old up and onto his hip.

“They’ve gotten so big, are they…are they actually bigger than Leolin?” Richard asked.

“Eva is thirteen pounds and eight ounces at twenty-four inches and Ave is fourteen pounds three ounces at twenty-four and a half inches. They haven’t quite caught up to Leolin yet, but I think it’ll only take a month more before they do.”

“They’re beautiful, I particularly love their hair.” Myron said with a smirk. “How does Max feel about it?”

“He loves it, he think it looks lovely on the girls…he just doesn’t like it on himself.”
“I noticed he managed to get his hair cut.”

Harry nodded. “Yes. He finally found a spare moment to shear it all off. We have been quite busy lately with the girls.”

“They’re absolutely gorgeous, look at their little faces. Their eyes haven’t changed yet?”

“They have.” Harry said with a nod. “They got slightly darker, but I think that they’re going to keep their blue eyes.”

“Blue eyes and chestnut brown, curly hair…yep, you boys are going to have to get those sticks ready for when they’re teenagers.”

“Oh behave.” Harry scoffed. “I have every faith that my children are going to have the strong, intelligent minds to know what they want and that they’ll be strong enough to stop anything they don’t want from happening. They won’t need us hovering over them with sticks; they’ll be able to do it for themselves.”

“I love you so much.” Max declared as he wandered back in with a tray of tea to hear Harry’s passionate statement.

“You are very mature.” Myron said, even as he gazed lovingly at little Ave in his arms.

“No one will be touching my daughters.” Draco sniffed. “Not until they’re legal adults. That goes for our boys as well.” He added.

Blaise laughed and pulled Draco into a hug, sprouting something off in French. Draco looked affronted and shoved Blaise off, replying to him in French.

“Hey, non-French speakers over here, switch back into English.” Max told them.

“Blaise is agreeing with Draco about not letting anyone with ‘ill intentions’ near our children and he offered a chastity pact to be sealed with a hug.”
Harry looked at Nasta who had Regan cocked on his hip. He looked fine, nothing to suggest that he might be angry or feeling ganged up on.

“There will be no pact making!” Harry insisted. “If my children want to have crushes and dates, then they can, I’ll just have to trust that they’ll be sensible and make intelligent decisions, but I will not rule their lives for them. I will not become a tyrant to them and dictate what they can or cannot do with their lives or hell, even themselves and I won’t allow any of you to do it either. I won’t do it. I had a girlfriend once when I was fifteen…it was thanks to her that I started entertaining the idea that I might be gay. I did have a girlfriend, does that mean I was depraved and some sort of sexual deviant? Of course not, I kissed her several times and held hands on the way to Hogsmeade…that was it. So no, I won’t stop them from exploring themselves or their love lives, that’s their business, not ours.”

“This girlfriend, it was that Cho Chang you told us about, wasn’t it? The one who kept crying on you and the one who you tricked into crashing into the ground during that Quidditch match that we all watched and you almost gave the entire crowd heart attacks in.” Max said thoughtfully.

Harry nodded with a grimace. “I think she was trying to replace Cedric with me because she knew I liked her. As for the match, no one gets in my way during Quidditch, not girls who cried on me and not Blaise either.”

“I still don’t like hearing or remembering that you had a girlfriend.” Blaise said with a scowl. “I like the idea of my pure, submissive mate.”

“I was your pure submissive mate; just because I had a girlfriend doesn’t mean anything.” Harry shrugged. “We never even kissed with tongues, I did that with you first, that’s why I was so bad at it.”

“You weren’t bad at it.” Blaise insisted.

“If you’re going to keep on this topic of conversation then we’re leaving.” Myron told them sternly.

“Speak for yourself; I’m enjoying all this juicy gossip.” Richard laughed.

“Okay, we’re drawing a line under it.” Harry said with a slight flush. “I don’t like speaking about those things.”
“You don’t like mentioning it in front of your mates.” Myron said with a smile.

Harry shifted uncomfortably. He nodded. “Yeah, I don’t like mentioning past girlfriends because I hate hearing about their past lovers, who were actual lovers I might add.” He said with a growl.

Nasta’s hand dropped to his hair and his nails scratched gently against the top of his scalp and Harry all but purred in delight. He turned and snuggled straight into Nasta as those short, straight nails moved down to the back of his head.

“Myron, we have to try that. I want to know if it works.” Richard said. “It looks good.”

Myron chuckled and kissed the side of Richard’s head, he whispered something that had Richard laughing joyously.

“I won’t have any of that talk over my baby girls!” Harry said sternly. “They’re awake and they’re listening to you!”

Myron and Richard shared a grin, but they sat back away from one another and went back to cradling the four month old girls.

“I can’t believe that you told those Faeries that they were Drackens before us! We’re their biological grandfathers!” Richard pouted.

Harry rolled his eyes. “I told you, it just slipped out. I’d already told my mates the week before, but I hadn’t gotten around to telling anyone else.”

“You could have sent us a message.” Richard pouted.

“Oh yeah, I can just imagine that message going astray. To Myron and Richard Maddison, our new girls are Drackens! Come over and see them soon, all my love, Harry. That isn’t happening.” Harry deadpanned.
“I see your point.” Richard sighed. “But still, you could have flooed over to tell us.”

“How about this, our next Dracken child and I’ll tell you both first…after my mates, obviously.” Harry added quickly when Max opened his mouth to complain. “They’ll naturally be told first when I feel ready to divulge such information.”

“You actually announced it quite early this time around.” Blaise said.

Harry shrugged. “It felt right. I let Braiden slip, so I over compensated with the quintuplets, but with the girls, it felt right.”

“I can’t believe we have identical, Dracken daughters.” Max said as he looked to his two girls a bit gooey eyed.

“Just remain aware that they could be dominant and submissive, or even both dominant. Your Aunt Kyra thought that she was a submissive for all of her childhood and early teenaged years. It came as a nasty shock then when she was a dominant, so don’t put those sorts of expectations on them, because anything could happen.”

Harry nodded. “We’ve been having a few talks about that, about what age to break it to them, at least the ones we have now, because I’m sure when we have teenaged Drackens strutting around, the younger ones will know and understand at a much earlier age. But we’re planning it as best as we can.”

Myron nodded his approval. “Good. We planned Max’s talks too, giving him little bits of information so that he’d understand, yet not overwhelming him. We were forced to do it young because he liked playing rough and we were worried about Caesar and the girls, but he accepted it all with good grace.”

“He took after me in that way.” Richard grinned.

Harry smiled at that and when Regan came and wrapped himself around his leg, Harry hunched down and checked on him concernedly. It was then that he noticed the time.

“Oh hell, these kids should have been in bed half an hour ago!” He said as he picked up Regan, who was so tired that he was getting upset.
“Then that means I should be starting dinner for us.” Max said as he hefted up Farren and cradled his son, kissing his little face.

“I think that’s a subtle way of telling us to leave.” Richard said with a grin.

“It is, but feel free to come back again tomorrow if you have a spare moment. We aren’t doing anything for the next two days and then it’s Talia’s birthday. Which reminds me, Max, did you get the gift?”

“Of course, it just needs to be wrapped. It’s up in our bedroom.”

Harry nodded as Draco took Eva and Ave from Myron and Richard. They said goodbye to the two men and then they set about getting their overtired children into their cots and settled down. Tegan was already asleep, so was Eva, Ave and Leolin, but Braiden was grizzling, Farren didn’t want to go to sleep, Regan was too tired to sleep and Calix was throwing a screaming fit.

“We are never breaking their routine again.” Harry growled as he tried to settle Regan to sleep by rocking him slowly, his little boy sniffling and whining softly, getting quieter and quieter as he was rocked, shushed and had his back rubbed until he slipped off to sleep, the tears still wet on his face.

Harry put him down into his cot and he took Braiden from Max.

“Go and sort out dinner, love, otherwise we won’t be eating today. We’ll sort these out.”

“Are you sure?” Max asked. “I don’t like leaving you in the middle of a crisis like this.”

“I’m sure. I’ll get these kids to sleep in half an hour.” He swore.

An hour later and Harry was regretting his words as Calix had cried himself sick, the noisome fluid getting all over his sleepsuit and Harry’s shirt and Harry had to give his seventeen month old son a quick bath because the vomit had gotten all over Calix’s hands, his hair and it had gone down the neckline of his sleepsuit.

The warm water seemed to calm Calix more than his rocking or shushing had and Calix was yawning as Harry cuddled him dry in his arms while Draco passed over a clean sleepsuit, bodysuit and nappy.

Finally all of the kids were sleeping and Harry was able to go down and eat his dinner, stifling a yawn as he did so.

“I am really not looking forward to those terrible twos.” Harry sighed.

“None of us have anything to do now for two days, we don’t have to go out, we don’t need to do a food shop, do we, Max?” Nasta asked their biggest mate.

“No, I have all of our meals planned out for the next week, the kids have enough formula powder and we’re well stocked on nappies and wipes.”

“What about the fresh fruit?” Draco asked.

“I buy some of the berries and things in frozen punnets. I defrost them the day before I need them and then blend them into pastes for the baby food jars. Apples and oranges keep for a while, so the kids will have snacks, but if we need grapes or plums or other stone fruit, then I can easily pop to the supermarket for half an hour to get them some more.”

“I’m on top of the washing, I’ve done my Potions exam and I’m not due back in court for a few days to a week. We have nothing to do.” Harry grinned. “This little break is going to be very welcome; you and Max are still off work, yes?”

His two mates nodded.

“You two won’t be looking for work in the next two days?” He asked Blaise and Draco.

“I’m not allowed to.” Draco huffed.

“I can stop for a couple of days.”

“This is going to be brilliant, I can’t wait! We all need this little break.”
“I second that.” Max said as he stretched, before he stood up and took the empty plates to the sink.

“Go sit down, I’ll do those.” Harry offered.

“You get out of my kitchen or I’ll lock you outside until I’m finished.” Max growled.

“It’s cold outside!” Harry frowned.

“All the more reason to back away, then.” Max said as he started cleaning the dirty dishes.

“Come on, mio Prezioso. Leave him to his dishes. Let’s go and see what we can do together on that rug that you love so much.”

“Don’t you have sex on that rug without me!” Max shouted out after them. “I mean it! You two have already had sex in that chair without me; you won’t have sex on that rug without me too!”

Harry and Blaise laughed as they fell onto the mentioned rug and started kissing.

“They are having sex on the rug without you.” Draco called out.

“Damn it!” Max cursed.

Harry couldn’t stop laughing. “Okay, stop now.” He said. “We’ll have sex tomorrow, but tonight I just want to cuddle, is that okay?”

“Of course.” Nasta said as he picked him up and settled him onto the settee. “Please don’t feel the need to suffer through anything sexual just because you think you have to, because you don’t.”

“Of course not.” Blaise agreed. “I want to have sex with my willing lover, not someone who’s pretending to enjoy it when they aren’t.”
Harry grinned. “I just feel tired and achy today and with all the stress, I don’t feel good.”

“This break has come too late, it seems.” Max said as he came in with a tray of tea, putting it on the coffee table and collapsing down on the settee.

“Maybe, but we do have eight children we have to look after. It’s not as simple as just taking a holiday from work, we can’t do that with our children and really speaking, I don’t want to do that to them.”

“Agreed.” Nasta said as he twisted himself so that he could recline on Max, who shifted his shoulder and sent Nasta sprawling over his lap where he grinned down at him and started grooming his hair with his fingers.

Nasta went from tensed and a little irritated to settled and relaxed as he shifted himself a little to make himself more comfortable on Max’s lap, putting his shoulders at a more comfortable angle against Max’s muscled thigh.

Harry grinned as he watched them, before he stood up from the other settee that he’d been sat on and he went to sit right on Nasta’s lap, wriggling around to get himself comfortable.

“You said that you didn’t want sex today, I suggest that you don’t wriggle around or you’ll be sleeping down here for a few hours while I ravish the others.” Nasta warned him.

Harry chuckled. “Okay, I’ll sit still. You just looked so comfy, I couldn’t help it.”

“Admit it, you just like sitting on people’s groins.” Blaise told him as he went to the sideboard and got out a case and a notebook. Harry groaned.

“If you’re going to be doing that then I’m getting out of the firing zone.” Harry said seriously. “You threw an inkpot at me the last time you got that shit out.”

“I told you, I didn’t mean to throw it at you.”

“You shouldn’t be throwing anything in a house with eight babies!” Harry huffed.
“We only had six the last time I got this out.” Blaise corrected as he took the ancient book out of its protective coverings.

“It’s no wonder they like throwing things, they’re copying you!” Harry huffed.

“How? I only get it out after they’ve gone to bed.”

“Your fault!” Harry insisted.

Blaise chuckled and Nasta reached up and yanked Harry to lie down on him, playing with his hair, even as Max reached a hand over to play with his and Nasta’s hair, scratching along his scalp. Harry immediately started purring.

“I love that noise.” Max chuckled.

“It’s right up there in the top five of noises Harry makes that we all love.” Draco laughed. “Right next to that little squeak when he’s caught off guard and the sweet mewing noise during sex.”

Harry laughed. “Do you all discuss this when I’m not around then?”

“We have in depth discussions over our favourite noises that you make, yes.” Draco said. “We even discuss favourite positions.”

“That was only once.” Max said. “We get very bored when you’re in your nest and we miss you lots and lots, so we need to talk about these things to make it more bearable when you’re gone.”

Harry laughed harder and he felt Nasta rumbling in his chest underneath him.

“I’ll say if you start discussing the noises I make and the best positions you like me in.”

“Nasta, what does this word mean?” Blaise cut in.
Nasta groaned and he sat up, rolled Harry into the warm groove where he’d been lying and went to sit behind Blaise, peering over his shoulder as he petted that layered, fluffy hair, his mouth moving silently as he read whatever Blaise was stuck on.

“This is disgusting.” He declared suddenly several minutes later. “Why does your family want this book?”

Blaise shrugged. “They just do. My Grandfather Bastien would sell his organs for this book.”

“Well, tell him that if I can have his abdominal muscles, he can have it.” Harry said.

Draco snorted. “Don’t be ridiculous, your muscles will heal.”

“It is getting better.” Harry agreed with a smile. “I can bend down now without pain and I can walk without it aching, it’s if I push myself too much that I start feeling pain.”

“He might have to sell his organs for this book, or at least harvest them.” Nasta grimaced. “That word means, to my understanding, ripen. You have to wait for the liver to ripen, which I believe might mean mature, and then you need to cut it out with a silver blade, taking care not to cut through the hepatic artery.”

“What the hell sort of book is that?” Max asked.

Harry shrugged. “It was in my family vaults, there are hundreds of books in there. Blaise had mentioned that his family had been looking for it for generations, so I asked the goblins where to find it and they actually told me it was in my family vaults. I gave it to Blaise as a present for our first Christmas together.”

“Why would your family have such a book?” Draco asked interestedly.
“My family are related to the Blacks, I assume there are lots of books like that in my vault.” Harry reminded him. “Besides that book was ‘married’ into the family, it came into Potter possession when one of my ancestors married a Greek witch. It’s been in my bank vault, untouched for seven hundred years.”

“That still doesn’t explain why Blaise’s family want it.”

Blaise just smirked. “They’ve always wanted this book, my Grandfather is going to lose his head when he realises that I’ve found the book that his great-great grandfather spent his life looking for.”

“It’s an ugly book.” Nasta sneered at it as if it could see him. “I don’t like it being here, in the same house as our children.”

“It’s hardly the monster book of monsters.” Harry placated. “It’s not going to actually bite one of our kids like that book would if it got loose.”

“This book is black.” Nasta said.

“I know it is and I admit that, but I’m hardly going to start harvesting unsuspecting people to perform these rituals. I just want to translate it.”

Nasta nodded. “I understand that, which is why I’m helping you, but I don’t like that book, at all.”

“Duly noted.” Blaise said as he took a gulp of the tea he was keeping well away from the ancient book that was so dry, it creaked when it was moved or so much as picked up.

“Draco, can you help me tomorrow?” Harry asked.

“Sure, what do you need?”

“I want another family portrait done now that the girls are born and they’re a little older, I need to find some dresses for them, I want cute, adorable dresses, non-matching, that doesn’t look like they’re going to a wedding or something, they will need shoes that match their dresses and Tegan needs a dress too and you’re the best at digging out the cutest, most appropriate dresses at any store.”
Draco smirked. “I can definitely do that.”

“Good, I’ve got all the owl order catalogues, I just need to sit down and find something that I like and then I need all your opinions on the dresses and then I need to somehow find matching shoes.”

“Do you want the boys in mini tuxes again?” Max asked. “Because I really don’t think Braiden or Farren will fit into their old ones…in fact I know that they won’t.”

“I know I need to get them bigger sizes; I’ve already got them ordered.”

“This picture is going to take us several hours to get done and if Ave doesn’t spit up on her new dress, it’ll be a miracle.” Blaise said as he translated another line.

“I know. I know it’s going to be difficult, but I want it done. Every time we get a new family member, I want a new picture done and I want them all over the house.” Harry declared. “I want to frame some of our older photos too; I just need some time to go through them all.”

“Good luck finding that time.” Draco laughed.

Harry glared. “How would you feel if I asked your parents to have them overnight?” He asked. “That way we could all do it.”

Draco all but choked. “I wouldn’t trust my Father with all eight of them! He barely survived when we had him babysitting the last time and Eva and Ave were only newborns, they’re more mobile now and more demanding.”

“I know.” Harry said with an evil, shit eating grin.

“My granddad would do it.” Max said with a shrug.

“My Mother would kill for the chance.” Blaise offered.
“Hmm, it has been a while since Marianna has had them.” Harry said. “If Narcissa and Lucius can’t mind them, then Marianna can have them. I want to do those photos. We’ll naturally keep Leolin here.”

“Oh Harry, my beloved! A whole day with only one baby, I love you!” Max declared.

Harry laughed. “The last time we let someone babysit for us was Valentine’s Day, before that it was actually the heat period that we conceived Eva and Ave. I don’t like pushing our kids onto other people, but we do need a break now and then and the kids need to spend some time with their grandparents, so tomorrow, I want to sort out the photos and the dresses for Eva, Ave and Tegan.”

“I’ll talk to my Mother tomorrow morning, I’m sure she’ll be delighted, she’s been asking, almost begging really, when she can have them for an afternoon.”

“I’ll pack up their nappy bags then, Max, can you sort out snacks, bottles and things?” Harry asked.

“Of course, lover. Don’t forget to pack their dummies though.”

Harry nodded as he started packing a bottomless nappy bag with the exact number of nappies his babies used in one day, adding in several spares with a pack of wipes, he made sure their dummies were inside it, their favourite toys, blankies and spare clothes and anything else he could think of.

He was so excited for tomorrow, not because he was getting rid of his children, but because he’d been wanting to sort out these photos for months now. He wanted some of them framed and put up along the walls of their house, others he wanted to send to family and he definitely wanted to do this current, up-to-date family portrait before he had another heat period and fell pregnant again. It didn’t help that he’d been feeling a pull towards cereals in the mornings. He was not ready for another heat period, but of course his Dracken didn’t really care, it just wanted to reproduce like it was programmed to do. He hoped at least that his first few were dry heats…he couldn’t handle another multiple birth right now.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I hope that you lovelies are happy with this chapter and the beginning of the court scenes. I’m immersed at the moment with my new fic, The Beguile and Devotion of a Black Heir, but I am still going to update my other fics, especially as Damaged Bodies, Growing Lives, Building Families is very close to being finished, I think I'll update that one next and stay on The Black Heir for a while, just to secure it in as my new fic, but I will still be updating this fic, just not often, that's just how it'll be for a little while.

StarLight Massacre. X
Hormonal Break

Chapter Notes

A/N: Please be aware that there are triggers in this chapter that may upset some readers. Please read with caution.

Last Time

Harry nodded as he started packing a bottomless nappy bag with the exact number of nappies his babies used in one day, adding in several spares with a pack of wipes, he made sure their dummies were inside it, their favourite toys, blankies and spare clothes and anything else he could think of.

He was so excited for tomorrow, not because he was getting rid of his children, but because he’d been wanting to sort out these photos for months now. He wanted some of them framed and put up along the walls of their house, others he wanted to send to family and he definitely wanted to do this current, up-to-date family portrait before he had another heat period and fell pregnant again. It didn’t help that he’d been feeling a pull towards cereals in the mornings. He was not ready for another heat period, but of course his Dracken didn’t really care, it just wanted to reproduce like it was programmed to do. He hoped at least that his first few were dry heats…he couldn’t handle another multiple birth right now.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Ninety-Six – Hormonal Break

Blaise had been right, Marianna was absolutely delighted that they’d asked her to babysit and though Harry had wanted Lucius and Narcissa to have them, to get them a little more used to their non-biological grandchildren, especially now that it had emerged that Draco needed fertility potions to have any hope of conceiving one, he didn’t want to jeopardise his children’s time with all of their grandparents by only pushing them at the one set.

They’d settled the children and then left Marianna to watch over them, they all had tea at the kitchen table, Leolin had had a bad night’s sleep, so he was in his bassinet at the head of the table, catching up with his missed sleep and they’d spread hundreds upon hundreds of photos across the table surface and Harry was making several different piles. Photos he liked, photos his mates liked, photos they all liked, photos that were duplicates and ones that were ‘maybes’, but the photos were absolutely everywhere, a stack of baby books and family photo albums at the ready, while Draco sat near them, putting his input onto every photo shown to him, while he circled dresses that he liked from the catalogues that Harry had stacked up high for him to look through.

“What about this one, I really like it.” Max said in such a way that Harry immediately looked over.
He blushed to the roots of his hair as he saw the naked photo of himself.

“We are not framing that, give it to me!” He demanded.

“I think we should frame it.” Blaise said with a grin. “We could keep it on our bedroom wall.”

“When did you even take that photo?” He hissed.

“I took it.” Draco informed him, not even having the good grace to look up from the current catalogue that he was perusing. “Max and Blaise were teasing you and I got them to draw back away from you together, you never even noticed; you were too lost in your own pleasure.”

“I can see that, give the photo to me! Imagine if someone found it!”

“No, it’s going in the sex album.”

“What sex album?” Harry demanded.

“We have a photo album filled with sexy, naked pictures of ourselves.” Nasta explained calmly, as if it were completely normal to have a sex album, as he showed him another raunchy photo of Draco and Max together before handing it over to Max.

“Where is this album?” Harry demanded. “How come I didn’t know about it?”

“It’s heavily warded, no one but us will ever even find it.” Blaise assured him. “We were going to give it to you on your birthday as a present.”

“I want to see the photos that you have in there.”

“Later.” Max winked.
“No, now!”

“Later.” Nasta insisted. “We have to sort all this out and we only have a few hours to do so.”

“What do you think about this dress?” Draco asked, distracting Harry.

He looked at it and considered it. “For Tegan, yes?”

Draco smirked and nodded. “I knew you’d be on my wave length for this one. I’ll mark it as a maybe, just in case I find something better for her.”

Harry nodded and he sighed. Going back to the piles upon piles of pictures. He would find that ‘sex album’ and he swore that if there was anything in there that he didn’t like or was overly embarrassing; he was going to burn it. It would serve his mates right for taking pictures of him in such vulnerable positions and keeping them without telling him. Maybe he should get revenge on them for doing so. He grinned to himself, he liked that idea a lot.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

They had found three dresses that they all liked for their little girls, Draco had checked the sizes and then sent his Saracen out with the order, and they’d finished with the mound of photos and had had lunch by two O’clock in the afternoon. They didn’t have to pick the kids up until later that night, so while Max was washing the dishes from their late lunch and Nasta and Draco were cleaning up while they could, Harry slipped away up the stairs to change.

He dug out Ginny’s wonderful box of toys from where he kept it safe from his mates and he went digging through it. He found a lot of things that made him blush still, a lot of clothes that he didn’t even know how to put on and the few skirts…he didn’t feel like a skirt or the corset today. He passed over all the dresses and he frowned as he realised that most of the clothes in the box were women’s, or at least styled like women’s clothes as they had extra bits to support his male parts. Now he had nothing against women, or cross dressing on certain occasions, but he wanted something different today, something that wasn’t a dress or a skirt, and he kept on digging until he unearthed a pair of blue shorts that were more like micro pants than anything else, he was sure that there was more material in one of his socks than in these ‘shorts’ but they were going to serve his purpose as he found the matching top tagged to them…if the little coloured collar could be called a top.

He grinned as he dug out some white stockings and a pair of matt blue heels. For kicks he picked up the little tube of clear lip gloss.
“I’m taking a bath while we have some free time.” He yelled down to his mates.

“Alright!” Max yelled back. “Pamper yourself a little, you deserve the relaxation time.”

Harry smiled at that, then he grinned widely to himself. He was going to bathe, pamper himself, oil himself up and then slip into this little outfit. If his mates wanted sexy photos, he’d damn well give them something to photograph. They were going to regret giving him the time to set all of this up.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

“He’s been a really long time; maybe you should go up and make sure that he hasn’t fallen asleep in the bath again.” Blaise said worriedly.

“He’ll be fine, when is the last time that he got to take an hour long bath?” Max waved away.

“Probably a few months after the quintuplets were born, but certainly not after Eva and Ave.” Draco pointed out.

“Exactly, so leave him be, he needs some pamper time to himself.”

“I very much enjoyed it too.”

Harry grinned as his mates turned to face him and the four of them just stared at him and they continued to stare at him silently. It was this more than anything that made him feel loved and attractive, because he was still carrying a few ‘extra’ bits from Eva and Ave, including the caesarean scar, but his mates eyes were glued to him, even as he walked, slowly and surely, in the matching blue heels. He’d have liked to have strutted, but that was shifting into the realm of him breaking an ankle…very unsexy.

He sat down on the settee and made sure his legs were spread a little bit, just enough so that his thighs weren’t touching, but nothing too obvious or obscene.

“Stop staring at me!” He demanded a minute later.
“I’m sorry, Harry, but in that getup I really don’t know what else you expect me to do.” Nasta told him honestly.

Harry scoffed. “Isn’t it obvious that I want you to come and touch me?”

As if they’d been waiting for verbal permission, all four of his mates jumped him, snatching him from where he was sat and he found himself on Max’s lap, chest to chest with him as he straddled his biggest mate, his back arched, up on his knees and his bum pushed out, his body held tightly even as his head was grabbed and angled backwards so that Blaise could kiss him passionately.

“I did say that I wanted sex today.” He said breathlessly when they took a moment to breathe.

“I thought you’d forgotten, or that you meant later tonight when the kids were in bed.”

“No.” Harry said as he shook his head. “I meant I wanted you as many times as we could physically manage before we’d have to force ourselves apart to go and collect our kids.”

“I can manage that.” Max said gruffly as he snapped his hips up into Harry’s, proving exactly how hard he was in his jeans.

“Oh.” Harry sighed softly as he gripped at Max’s shoulders, fisting his shirt in his hands.

There were hands touching him all over, mouths licking over his skin, taking in the edible oil that he’d used, which was also from the box of toys. He’d oiled his entire body with the semi-solid butter and he’d stretched himself when he’d gotten out of the bath. He grinned into Max’s neck before he slipped his tongue out and slowly dragged it over Max’s neck, up to his earlobe, which he took into his mouth and sucked.

Max growled deeply and the pair of hands on his bum, feeling the edge of the tiny shorts where they met the skin of his upper thighs, squeezed tight.

Someone fingered around the tops of the gartered stockings and caressed his thigh where the lace tops met his skin. He shivered, which vibrated over Max’s groin. His biggest mate groaned and pushed Harry away and off of his body.

Harry found himself watching as Max almost tore his jeans off of himself, but that’s about all he saw as he was held fast around the waist and Blaise was suddenly at the front of his body, already mostly naked and the kiss he gave him had Harry closing his eyes on reflex.
He writhed on the lap that he was sitting on as his nipples were played with and rolled gently, a rough palm glided over his side and he moaned again. He was loving this edible oil and if the mouths that kept kissing and licking at him were any indication, then his mates liked the coconut flavour of it too.

Max was back and he manhandled everyone out of the way and took Harry back onto his naked lap, he hadn’t even just taken off his jeans, but everything so that he was completely naked and he was very unbothered by that fact too.

Harry was back in his lap, that hard, naked cock pressed right up against Harry’s, separated only by the thin piece of material that made up the tiny, tight shorts.

Harry was suddenly pitched forward when Max went backwards, having had Draco yank him down from behind by the shoulders so that Max was on his back and Harry was on top of him. It allowed his three other mates to touch and kiss him more freely.

Harry felt like he was going out of his mind as he was touched and kissed, random parts of his body were licked and then bitten, teeth scraping over his skin, leaving marks and love bites while hands squeezed him and nails scratched at him. Every touch built him up and up and he pushed against Max to give himself some space.

“I need…I need these shorts off.” He panted breathlessly, trying to get his brain to work. “I’m not going to last much longer; I don’t want to go in…I want to touch you all skin to skin.”

Blaise breathed into his ear, it was all in French and he had no hope of understanding what it was that was being said to him, but the little shorts were peeled down his slick legs…the collar, the stockings with their garters and the heels were left on.

Fingers prodded at his entrance and he heard Nasta’s deep chuckle.

“What’s funny?” Draco asked throatily.

“Harry stretched himself.” Nasta said simply, before suddenly a warm mouth was on him and a tongue was pushed into his body, eating the edible, coconut oil that he’d used to prepare himself with.

Harry sucked in a deep breath and pushed himself at Nasta, rubbing himself over Max as he did so, the both of them rumbled lowly in the backs of their throats as Harry gasped and repeated the movement.

Harry lay flat on Max and writhed as Nasta’s tongue didn’t let up, someone was kissing along his shoulder and he could feel someone’s hair at his side as they kissed Max underneath him.
“This oil tastes gorgeous.” Nasta declared as he pulled back to catch his breath. “Where did you get it?”

“Box…it was in the box of toys.” Harry whined as his head was pulled into a kiss by Max.

“He’s wearing lipstick too.” Max grinned as he smacked his sticky lips together.

“Gloss.” Harry corrected. “Clear stuff.”

“I like it.” Max growled possessively.

Harry was pulled off of Max and his biggest mate snarled furiously.

“Oh, shut up.” Nasta said easily. “Stay where you are.”

Harry’s head was pushed into Max’s groin and he chuckled at the very unsubtle gesture as Nasta got him up onto his knees and forced his back to arch until Harry could feel the stretch in his muscles and the pull in his spine. He didn’t care as he licked and kissed around Max’s cock and balls, listening to his mates all around him, their moaning, their grunts, their hard swallows. He loved each and every one of those noises from each and every one of his mates.

He found Draco and Blaise with his eyes as he licked and sucked on and around Max and he grinned, already knowing that the impatient bastards would be fucking now that Nasta had moved Harry into position. They were still only eighteen years old after all and they’d been lifelong friends, Draco knew that Blaise liked being fucked and Blaise wholly encouraged it.

Harry moved to the head of Max’s cock and licked over it, grinning when the big man all but whimpered and flexed his hips.

Nasta nudged at him and Harry spread his legs further and took the tip of Max fully into his mouth and when Nasta pushed into him, the vibrations from his moaning went straight to Max, who cursed and slipped a hand into Harry’s hair, gripping it tight, fisting it in his huge hand and Harry slipped his mouth all the way down onto him, better at this now than he once had been.

Max held him in place with that fist in his hair and Nasta pulled out of him slowly, Harry whimpered as he heard Blaise groan deep in his throat from somewhere to his left.

Nasta pushed back into him and Harry gurgled around Max’s cock, which had his biggest mate flexing his hips up to keep his cock in his throat. Harry alternated between pushing back on Nasta and bobbing his head over Max’s lap, sometimes going against that tight fist in his hair, which made his eyes water, but he still didn’t care as he felt his toes curling in pleasure.
He swallowed around Max and moaned as Nasta started a smooth rhythm that left him dribbling over Max and trying to suck and breathe as he moaned and hummed as he was stimulated and pleasured.

Max spasmed and Harry swallowed the cum in his mouth as his biggest mate yelled out his orgasm, just as Nasta hit Harry’s prostate and sent Harry spiralling into his own orgasm, which forced him to release Max and scream to the ceiling, the last drops of Max’s cum which he hadn’t had time to swallow slid over his bottom lip and down his chin in a single line. Nasta collapsed onto his back and he crushed Harry between himself and Max, not that Harry cared as he breathed hard and fast, licking his lips to clean them. He missed his chin.

He rested for a bit, feeling happy, loved and nerve tinglingly pleasured, at least until Nasta was pushed off of him, his oldest mate grunting as he hit the carpet and Harry grinned as he was swept up by Draco, who had worn Blaise out and was looking for round two.

Harry took over and sat himself over Draco and kissed him, they stayed still for a moment, each adjusting to the new sensation before Draco forced him onto his back and started fucking him, Harry refused to let go of his neck and instead he wrapped both arms around it and kept kissing at Draco, tugging his silky, blond hair out of place. He arched his hips and used his feet on the floor as leverage to fuck himself on Draco and he was panting heavily from the exertion within minutes.

His orgasm hit him quicker than it had before and he dragged Draco with him, his big blond mate biting hard into his neck to muffle his screaming, very high up his neck he added, Harry chuckled tiredly, he was not going to be able to hide that particular love bite come tomorrow.

Harry stayed wrapped around Draco and they kissed and chuckled together as Draco stayed inside him. Neither of them cared as they watched Max grip Nasta’s hips and thrust into him hard and remain inside him as he shouted out his second orgasm, or was that his third as Blaise had moved from where Draco had left him and he was curled up in a happy ball of sated bliss nearer the two older men.

“He looks so contented.” Harry giggled.

“Sometimes I think that he should have been a submissive, he likes being fucked too much.” Draco said as he snuggled into Harry more.

“There’s no such thing as being fucked too much.” Harry told him.

“Is that so?” Max asked him.

Harry startled and went to look behind him, only for Max to pull him away from Draco at the same time that Nasta did the same to Draco. Harry could almost see the evil smirk that Max was sure to have on his face.

Harry chuckled as he found himself being hugged tight as Max licked and sucked on his pleasure sensitised skin, it turned into a moan when Max caught his nipple in his mouth.
Harry found himself shoved up onto the settee and he was a little confused until Max touched his knees and slid his hands up the inside of his thighs, spreading his legs as far open as they could go, pinning them open with his massive forearms as his hands gripped at his hips. Max slid his mouth down Harry’s cock and took the entirety of it into his mouth as he sucked and licked at it and Harry screamed, bucking in Max’s hold, having his body held firmly in place by his bigger mate.

Max didn’t let up on the suction as his throat rippled around the head of his cock and Harry couldn’t catch his breath as he gripped at as much of Max’s hair as he could, pulling at it and clenching his fingers with every hard suck. He mindlessly tried to wrap his legs around Max, but he couldn’t move them, even with his thigh muscles straining and pushing against Max’s arms, they didn’t move as Max’s fingers stroked his sides and his hands massaged his hips.

“I love you!” Harry screamed out as he yanked on Max’s head, trying to control his orgasm, but in the end, he cummed hard into Max’s mouth and watched through glazed eyes as Max swallowed hard, twice before he pulled slowly off of his cock, sucking gently and licking him with little flicks with the tip of his tongue before he pulled Harry down into his lap and kissed him.

He turned around and lay down in the pile that Nasta, Blaise and Draco already made and the five of them cuddled together with aching muscles. Harry let out a soft giggle as he snuggled into Blaise’s naked, sweaty back.

The five of them fell asleep together in a big heap on the middle of their living room floor, Harry was still wearing the collar, the stockings and garters and one of the blue heels, the other had flown off during one of his orgasms when he'd flicked his foot a bit too sharply and suddenly.

Nasta woke up an hour later and he groaned tiredly. He extracted himself from the pile of bodies and he couldn’t help but laugh at the state of all five of them.

He pulled the only remaining bright blue high heel off of Harry’s foot. He was currently digging it into Max’s thigh, which couldn’t be comfortable for the big guy, especially not as it had left a vivid, red indent. Nasta grimaced, that might actually bruise later.

He quietly and carefully cleaned up the living room around his sleeping mates, folded all of their clothes and took his own to go and have a shower. He felt better than he had in a while though, relaxed and invigorated, like his body had been reset. This had been exactly what he needed to destress himself.

He washed himself quickly, dried and dressed himself and he went out into the kitchen, checking on his little son as he did so. Leolin was sleeping peacefully, as he knew that he would be. He hadn’t had a good night last night and he and his mates had been back and forth to his room all night to settle him back down, so it was inevitable that Leolin was going to sleep a lot today. It was just as well really, he thought wryly.

He boiled the kettle to make himself a cup of green tea and he took this moment to just relax. and breathe as he listened to the absolute nothingness around him, it was completely silent. He smiled as he sat at the table and slipped his arm under Leolin and pulled him out of his bassinet and up to his chest.

He sipped at his tea as he traced every inch of his son’s face with his eyes. Leolin was coming on so wonderfully well that he couldn’t help but be proud of him and Harry, of course, who was such a nurturing parent that he had absolutely no worries about leaving Harry alone with his children.

Some of the submissives that he’d seen over the years had him shivering in remembered revulsion.
He would never have been able to rest again and he would have definitely had to quit his job if the Mother to his children had been Miette Solange or Ameena Dewan. He wouldn’t have ever been able to entrust the submissives that he’d met in his past with his little Leolin. He thought that maybe that might have been the reason that he had rejected them without even speaking to some of them.
Thinking about it just made him appreciate and love Harry all the more.

He kissed Leolin’s face and held him closer to his chest. It was so peaceful that he hardly recognised it as his own home and he absorbed that peace while he could. It would be fleeting and the next opportunity might be months away, so he took what he could get when he could get it.

It took another half an hour before the silence was broken and it was a soft noise from the baby in his arms that finally disturbed the peace. Nasta looked down at him and smiled as tiny hands reached up to rub at tired eyes. Leolin blinked open his sleepy gold eyes and Nasta smiled at him softly.

“Hello Leolin.” He greeted softly, quietly and he kept the smile up as Leolin traced every inch of his face with a critical eye, his adorable scowl already on his face.

It seemed that Leolin recognised him…at least a little, as he stopped scowling so hard and he slipped into a more neutral expression. Nasta stayed with Leolin, holding him and giving him eye contact, even when Leolin moved his gaze to elsewhere.

It’s not like he had anything else to do, there were no distractions, no other babies to give his attention to, everything was silent, so he could give this whole attention to Leolin, who seemed to be enjoying it as he kept looking back at him every so often and his mouth pulled into a smile every time he caught Nasta staring at him.

“I think you might be a little egotistical, grinning like that when you find someone looking at you.”
Nasta teased Leolin. “Attention seeking, I think it’s called. I believe you get that from your Daddy Draco.”

“Da.” Leolin repeated quietly.

Leolin raised a hand to pat at his face, like he did to Harry and Nasta felt his heart soar, to even be considered on the same level as Harry by Leolin was a huge honour. He felt a little weepy as Leolin stared hard at him, as if truly recognising him for the first time and he repeated another soft ‘Da’ to him and he brought Leolin slowly up to kiss him. He swore that he would make more time to spend one-on-one quality time with his son, even if he had to take him upstairs, into a quiet room and spend just fifteen minutes bonding with him, but this feeling of Leolin actually, truly knowing who he was, it was unfathomable, it was unmatched by almost anything else, he couldn’t help but crave more of it, he wanted Leolin’s attention and recognition.

“Are you okay?”

Nasta looked over at a sleepy Harry who was stumbling around, still wearing the stockings, garters and the little collar, and nothing else. He couldn’t help but look at Harry’s body appreciatively.

“Your Mummy definitely has a body to die for, Leolin.” Nasta told his son with a smile. “You came out of that body.”

“Alright, alright.” Harry laughed. “I really need a drink, then I’ll be hopping into the shower and getting dressed. My throat is killing me though, that was taking Max all the way into my throat. He’s just too big.”

Nasta chuckled and he couldn’t help but reach out a hand to caress Harry’s bare bum as he walked past him to the counter to get a glass of water.

“Oi, you’ve had more than enough of that for one day.” Harry told him before he gulped the water down before walking back to where Nasta was sat, getting ready to go and have a quick shower.

Nasta bent down and kissed one of Harry’s naked bum cheeks. “I can never get enough of this.” He declared. “I love you so much and I don’t say it nearly enough.”

“You don’t need to, I know that you love me, I can see it in your eyes.” Harry told him.

He took Leolin from Nasta and kissed his baby son all over his little face.

“Ma! Ma!” Leolin wriggled excitedly and Harry chuckled.

“Oh I love you, so much!” Harry declared as he nuzzled Leolin’s belly. “Here, go back to your Daddy, I need to go and have a shower.”
“Ma.”

“Yes baby, Mummy needs a shower, so you stay here with Daddy Nasta.”

“Da.”

“Yes!” Harry said with a smile and with a last kiss to Leolin and then Nasta, he went to the bathroom to clean his body.

Nasta shook his head and he stood with Leolin and he went to boil the kettle, if Harry was awake, then the others wouldn’t be far behind, Harry was not the quietest or the most graceful upon waking up, if he hadn’t kicked or stepped on at least one of the others then he’d be very surprised.

As if to prove him right, Blaise wandered into the kitchen, still half asleep. He was rubbing his ribs.

“Did Harry step on you?” He asked with a grin.

Blaise snorted. “No, he stepped on Draco, lost his balance and he sat on me. I am the smallest person next to Harry and Max is the biggest, yet he completely misses Max’s bulk and sits on me!”

Nasta chuckled and kissed Blaise’s forehead.

“Where is the klutz?” Blaise grumbled.

“In the shower.” Nasta said with a smile. “Sit yourself down; I’ll get you a coffee.”

“I think I’m still asleep, because I swear I just heard you say coffee.”

“I did, you look like you need it.”

“Ti amo.” Blaise declared gratefully and passionately.
Nasta chuckled. “I love you too, get some rest and wake yourself up a little.”

Draco came into the kitchen and he sighed. “That man is a hazard.”

“Are you hurt?”

“No, but that was not the way I would have chosen to be woken up after the way we’d fallen asleep.”

“One time he kneed my balls trying to get out of the bed.” Blaise grumbled. “We need to teach him more grace.”

“And how to be quieter when waking up.” Max groaned as he stumbled into the room. “He must have moaned loudly several times in my ear before he decided that he was actually awake and got himself up. Then of course he stood on our Draco and sat on our poor Blaise, he’s dangerous.”

Nasta couldn’t stop the laugh that came out of his mouth. He loved these four men so much that the thought of anything happening to them hurt his heart. He would always do everything that he could, as a man and as their top dominant, to protect them and keep them all safe. If he did less than that, then he didn’t deserve to have them in his life as his mates.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry looked at the newly erected framed photos that now lined the walls of their home and he smiled. Pictures even from before Braiden was born now adorned the walls and it made him smile, but it also made him realise just how far he and his mates had come, how much he’d grown in the last two years under the love and attention of the four wonderful men who he’d chosen to share his life with.

He had all of his babies back under his roof and he’d given Marianna a selection of photos that she absolutely adored and which she assured them more than made up for her several hours of high activity that she was no longer used to.

Harry spooned a small portion of pasta into Calix’s mouth and watched him as he chewed and swallowed. He opened his mouth wide and Harry put another little spoonful into his mouth.
“More.”

Harry turned and smiled as Max wasn’t moving fast enough for Farren, who had chewed and swallowed before Max could get anything more onto the spoon.

“I told you that it would be better to let him do it himself.” Harry said as he put the little spoon into Calix’s mouth and watched his little boy take the food into his mouth.

“He can’t keep the pasta on the spoon. Not even Braiden can.” Max said as he indicated to where their big boy was sat, waiting for Blaise to feed him.

Harry smiled. “I love the baby pasta, it’s so tiny.”

Harry chuckled. “That’s true.”

“We’ll have to give you a new baby so that you can start gushing over tiny fingers and toes again.” Blaise laughed.

“I think we have more than enough at the moment.” Harry said, though he averted his gaze and ducked his head.

The urge to eat cereals and other grains was growing…he believed that he was in at least his third or fourth week of his cycle. Another four or five weeks and he’d be having his heat period. He could be pregnant again when his little twins were only four months old. He didn’t know what would be worse, being pregnant again, or having a heat period every two months until he fell pregnant. The first trimester was fine, he usually had a bit of morning sickness or maybe some dizzy spells and he wouldn’t have any heat periods, but things got a little worse in his second trimester and then the third…no, he couldn’t do that again so soon, but he didn’t have a choice in the matter, his body had already decided for him.
“Are you okay?” Nasta asked him. “You look a little out of it.”

Harry smiled. “Just thinking back to our wonderful afternoon together.” He lied, distracting his mates in the process.

Max snorted. “I still ache.”

“Are you actually complaining?” Blaise teased.

Max laughed loudly. “Never, but I do ache. I’m going to need a hot bath later.”

“I’d join you, but we’d likely end up more sore than we already are.” Harry laughed.

“You’ve had an hour long, pamper bath today!” Blaise told him.

Harry grinned. “I know, I can go straight to bed and know that I’m squeaky clean and well sated.”

“Mama.”

Harry turned to Braiden, who had the simple, basic tomato sauce that Max had made to cover the pasta smeared all over his face.

“This one on the other hand, could really use a pamper bath.”

“He’s even put it in his hair.” Blaise complained as he dropped Braiden’s empty bowl into the sink with Farren’s.

“Typical, it’s because he has so much hair. I told you, he needs it cut back neatly.” Draco lectured.

“We’ll get around to it eventually.” Max waved away.
“When it’s gone past his shoulders!” Draco complained.

“You do it then.” Harry said simply.

“You…you would let me do it?”

“Of course, you’re his Father too, just don’t do it too short!” Harry warned seriously. “I mean it, Draco, if I can see his scalp, it’s too short. Just cut it neatly to his ears, just so the shell of them is visible and then leave it.”

Draco nodded and he picked up Braiden and carried him to the bathroom.

“Was that such a good idea?” Blaise asked.

“He has to learn.” Harry replied easily. “More importantly, where is my tea?”

“It’s coming.” Nasta assured him as he messed around with five cups at the counter. “Get the kids into the living room.”

Harry nodded as he picked up Tegan and Calix and carried them into the front room. Calix went right down onto the floor, his squirming little boy, but Tegan had her hands clenched into his shirt and didn’t want to go on the floor, despite his urging.

He sat down and settled Tegan over his chest, patting her nappy covered bum gently as he played with her ever growing hair. He yawned and settled himself further against the arm of the settee. He was so tired when it was only just five in the afternoon because of the amazing sex that he’d been engaged in only a few hours before; it had really worn him down.

“Wake up.”

Harry startled and blinked his eyes. He yawned widely and looked up at Nasta, who was smiling above him. Tegan was fast asleep on his chest.
“That’s just mean.” Harry frowned.

“She needs to go to bed.”

“What time is it?” Harry asked in shock.

“It’s half six, you’ve been asleep for an hour or so.” Nasta smiled softly. “Your tea went cold.”

“Oh, I’m sorry. I didn’t mean to waste it.”

“That’s okay, I’ve sent Max to get you a fresh one, but this little girl needs to be changed and settled in her cot.”

Harry nodded as he eased himself up with Tegan and he kissed her sleeping face gently before Nasta eased her up and into his own arms as he carried her up to bed.

Harry rubbed his face and sat up with yet another yawn.

“You don’t normally nap.” Blaise told him with a smile.

“You sexually aggressive beasts wore me out.” Harry laughed. “I need a nap and a good sleep tonight…I hope Leolin settles.” He added worriedly.

“He went to sleep just lovely.” Max told him as he came in with a cup of tea for him. “Here, get this down you.”

“He’s getting attached to Nasta.” Draco told him. “All he had to do to go to sleep tonight was see Nasta’s face.”

Harry smiled. “I’m glad. He seems to be striving for more independence lately and if he switches his attachment to you guys as well instead of just me, then I’ll be happy. How was Braiden’s haircut?”

“Nerve wracking, but it looks a lot better.” Draco assured him.
Harry looked the Blaise.

“It really does look better; I think Draco could become a hair dresser…if he would listen to what other people want instead of just doing what he pleases.”

“Did you at least keep his hair to his ears?” Harry asked. “I won’t have him with a shaved head.”

“Its four inches long around his head and two inches at the back.” Draco told him. “He looks good, sophisticated.”

“He’s not even two!” Harry laughed. “He doesn’t need to look sophisticated or snobby.”

Draco snorted. “Of course he does. I will not have a son who looks unkempt.”

Harry rolled his eyes and drank his tea.

“It’s a Pureblood thing.” Max told him. “Like submissive Drackens, they try to outdo one another, an unkempt, scruffy child reflects badly on the parents. Every little detail is scrutinised, their outfit, their hair, their face, if they have clean, smooth fingernails, clean socks and unblemished skin. It’s all a load of rubbish, but the hardcore Purebloods take it very seriously, so naturally Draco will and maybe even Blaise.”

“Aren’t your family Purebloods?” Harry asked.

Max nodded immediately. “And Nasta’s, every single Dracken can link their family back to a Pureblood line, because the Dracken blood is only in the Pureblood lines, Harry. In fact, all creature blood is in the Pureblood lines, magical creatures are very picky about blood, particularly the vampires, naturally. Only the purest will do.”

“Really? I never knew that…but then the Blacks are related to a lot of people.”

“All the Pureblood lines are intertwined.” Draco told him. “There are less than sixty Pureblood families worldwide and the Blacks have links to nearly all of them.”

“I thought it was only Britain that did the whole Pureblood thing.”

All three of his mates just looked at one another and then laughed. Harry rolled his eyes and drank another mouthful of tea.

“No, love. The Malfoy family is relatively new to Britain; my ancestors were originally from France.” Draco told him.

“The Zabinis are a very old Italian Pureblood line.” Blaise shrugged. “But my Mother is French too, the Lavelle line, my Mother’s maiden family, are old French Purebloods.”

“The Maddisons are originally Greek. Way, way, way back, I’m not even talking generations, but a couple of centuries. We came over to England and we stayed, I think we still have family back in Greece, probably all over the world, but they’re no longer recognised as blood related, our Drackens certainly wouldn’t see us as related.”

“I wonder what the Potters were.” Harry said thoughtfully. “I never really thought about it before.”

“They’re English through and through, at least as far back as the records go. They sprouted from the Peverell line, which is also English as far back as the records go.” Draco informed him.

“There are…twenty-eight Pureblood families in Britain?” Harry asked.

Draco shook his head. “Twenty-nine now because you were officially accepted back into the Pureblood fold after you ‘married’ four other Purebloods. Our children are all considered Pureblood too, well, except for Leolin, he’s classed as a Faerie, but then the Faeries reject all notions of blood purity.”

“I think I remember Parkinson saying something about that.”

“She told her parents, who took it upon themselves to verify the information and then they rounded up all the other Pureblood families and they had an in depth discussion about it. You’re officially welcomed back.”

Harry snorted. “It’s a political thing, I’m sure.” He said. “Because of the defeat of Voldemort, they want to be seen supporting me and not Voldemort now that he’s gone for good.”

Draco nodded in agreement. “It likely is, yes, but that’s besides the point, your family is a Pureblooded one and our children are Pureblooded.”

“Don’t the Purebloods have a get together like the Drackens?” Nasta asked, just appearing out of nowhere, but he’d obviously been following their conversation for a while.

“If you can call it that.” Draco scoffed. “Its afternoon tea with a heap of aggravation, politics, sneering, gloating, boasting and one upping everyone else there. Mother took me a few times when I was a child to show off how well groomed, eloquent and educated I was.”

Max snorted. “What happened?”

Harry laughed and Draco just sneered, raising a pale eyebrow. He didn’t dignify Max’s comment with a verbal response.

“Shouldn’t you be going to one of those?” Blaise asked.

Draco shrugged. “I’m invited every other month, I always decline, we’re always too busy and all five of us going and taking all eight kids, that would be a disaster.”

“So just go by yourself and take Braiden or Farren with you, they’re well behaved…or even Leolin, he won’t cause any sort of fuss. Then Regan doesn’t fuss either, it’s mostly just Tegan, because she likes talking and holding conversations and Calix because he just won’t keep still and wants to get into everything.”

“Eva and Ave are too loud.” Harry said with a smile. “I definitely recommend Braiden, he loves you and he likes going places.”

“I don’t like going to afternoon tea with those people.” Draco sniffed.
“It’s rude to ignore so many requests.” Harry said. “I’ll go, should I wear my brown jumper or the yellow one.”

“You said that you’d binned those!” Draco hissed in repulsion. “You promised me that you’d thrown them out!”

“I’m not throwing away perfectly good jumpers just because you have a too high a standard of clothing.”

“They’re four sizes too big for you, they’re full of holes, the brown one is fraying at the hem and they’re both hideous colours!”

“Alright, calm down, you’ll give yourself a stroke if you carry on.” Max said. “Instead of focusing on the bad points, focus on the good!”

“Good? What good?!” Draco almost exploded.

“The brown jumper is bigger than the yellow one and it shows off this absolutely delectable shoulder.” Max said as he pulled Harry’s shirt aside and he nibbled along the skin. Harry laughed and squirmed as Max’s mouth tickled him.

“Actually, if Harry pulls that jumper up to cover this shoulder, it’s so big at the neckline that the other shoulder pops out to say hello.” Max said as he moved to kiss and nibble along Harry’s other shoulder, making him laugh and squirm harder.

“The yellow jumper has more holes too; one particular hole that I like is on the front, it shows this pretty, pink nipple, doesn’t it?” Max asked Harry as his hand went up Harry’s shirt to play with his right nipple; abused from that afternoon and ringed with a set of teeth marks that he thought might have been Nasta’s. In fact, it probably was Nasta’s, his top dominant would always have his biting fetish.

“You’re just teasing me now.” Harry said with a smile as he tilted his head back to see Max’s face.

Max kissed him on the mouth, then did so again and then a third time. “Maybe just a little.” He answered with a smile filled with love as he pulled Harry back with him to sit on his lap.

Harry shuffled around, swinging his legs sideways so that he could cuddle in fully and he gripped Max’s shirt. It smelt of their fabric softener. He pressed his ear against that strong heartbeat, smiling as Max laughed under his head, his chest shaking with his laughs. He was asleep within minutes; he didn’t remember being carried to bed or being tucked in a few hours later.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry forced a smile as he slipped away to the table of drinks and light finger foods at one end of the huge, rented, function hall. Talia had invited a lot of people to her twenty-eighth birthday and she was having a grand time, Harry just wished that she hadn’t invited so many young, single men. Young, single men who seemed to think that he was a woman. When he’d gone to complain to his mates, Draco and Max had almost broken a rib each trying not to laugh and Harry had stormed away again.

He smoothed down his shirt, which met his jeans seamlessly; his dragonhide boots were masculine in design, what the hell made these inebriated men think that he was a woman?

He played with his hair and though it was a little long, he didn’t think the messy, odd tufts were at all girly and his face certainly wasn’t. He clenched his hands, those damn idiot strangers didn’t know what they were talking about, it had to have been the free flowing drink from the open bar.

He made his way to the bar now and hailed a bartender.

“What can I get you?” The man asked.

“Something…anything.” Harry said aggravately.

The man laughed. “That bad?” He asked sympathetically as he got a little shot glass and filled it with something before dumping it into a bigger glass of something else. “Here, this will help.”

Harry sipped at it and screwed up his face at the almost acidic burn. It hit his belly just right though and he smiled.

“Thanks for this. I need something to take my mind away from the idiots here.”

The bartender laughed. “I’m Paul.”
“Nice to meet you, my name’s Harry.”

The man pulled back a little, looking shocked. Harry groaned.

“Not you too!” Harry sighed. “Half the idiots here think I’m a woman, you can piss off too.”

Paul laughed. “It’s your eyes. They look feminine, you have very long, thick eyelashes and with how big and bright they are…I don’t think anyone else is looking anywhere other than your eyes, I know I never, so we just come to the conclusion that you’re a girl.”

“Well I’m not. I want another one of these!” Harry demanded as he drained the glass and pushed it back at Paul.

Paul laughed. “How about dinner, say tomorrow night?”

Harry laughed. “You are seriously barking up the wrong tree.”

“Come on, being with another guy is fun.” Paul insisted.

“I know that, I’m completely gay, but I have four lovers.”

Paul’s eyes widened. “Four of them?! Do they know about one another? You, you’ve really surprised me saying that.”

Harry laughed harder. “Of course they know about one another! We live together. We have eight children too.”

“How old are you?!” Paul demanded.

“Eighteen.” Harry smiled. “I’ll be nineteen in two months.”
“Wow, you really don’t look that old, to have eight children so young!”

Harry nodded. “I had one boy, then I had quintuplets, four boys and a girl and then I had twin girls in January.”

“Ah, so it was because of the set of five that threw you so high? Why did you have more after you already had six?”

“I’ve always wanted a big family; I don’t see the point of contraception, so I won’t use it. Thus I get pregnant often, not that I mind. I’ll probably have another baby some when soon.”

“Don’t you think that’s a bit much?” Paul told him.

Harry snorted. “I hardly care. I want what I want; I don’t care about other people or their opinions. I’m happy, my four lovers are happy, what else matters?”

“Well you certainly need four of them to help you out with eight children.” Paul laughed. “Do you want another drink?”

“I better not. I’m already feeling a little blurry and light headed. That is some strong stuff.”

“Go on, have one more. It’s a birthday party after all.”

Harry nodded. “I like Talia, she makes me laugh.”

“She’s a popular girl. She knows all sorts of people, including you.”

Harry nodded as he accepted his third, very strong drink. He said goodbye to Paul and wandered away, he never noticed the man nod to a group of other men, who nodded back and followed him.

He didn’t know where he was meandering to, only that everything was starting to blur much worse than it should have from only three drinks. He stumbled and almost fell, but someone held him under his arms and chuckled in his ear, holding him around the chest.
“Easy there, are you okay? Do you need a moment to wash your face? I think you had a bit too much to drink.”

The person was speaking too fast, he couldn’t understand and he just grunted, trying to understand what was being said to him. He found himself suddenly in a bathroom and he heard the door close and then lock. He panicked.

“Woah, come on, we just want a bit of fun. Paul thinks that you’ll be fun.”

Harry felt a Portkey jerk at his navel and he tried to think, but his brain was fuzzy…there was something else in those damn drinks that shouldn’t have been.

He fell flat on his face on the landing, he was dizzy, queasy, he didn’t know where he was or what was happening. The first thing he heard was a terrified woman screaming for help.

“What sort of woman did you bring?” A man grunted. “The other one is no fun.”

“A cute one, amazing eyes. Paul picked her.”

Another man snorted harshly. “That isn’t a woman, that’s a guy.”

“What?”

“No tits and a shirt done up to the collar. That makes two guys now, tell Paul to send some more bitches!”

“But Paul…”

“Likes it both ways.” A man further back answered. “Doesn’t matter to me like, a hole is a hole. Looks like we get two boys to play with, Kirk came back with another one a couple minutes before you. At least this one is small and pretty, the other one looks older and he’s muscled and more handsome than pretty. You lot know I like the pretty boys better.”
A hand touched his boot, presumably to pull it off and Harry had a moment of clarity where everything fell into place and he kicked out with his other leg, smashing his boot into a man’s face, feeling the crunch of cartilage.

“You little fucking shit! I’ll kill you!”

Harry staggered to his feet and swallowed hard, he tried to follow where everything and everyone was, but he couldn’t and he inevitably got punched in the face. He hit the floor again like a stack of bricks.

Both boots got taken from him and his jeans. He screamed in wordless denial and he lashed out again, but he was held down and he heard men sniggering and laughing at his lumbering attempts to save himself. A woman in another room screamed again. He thought of his mates and then in another moment of clarity, he screamed again, hiding a distress call within it.

He felt three confused rumbles and he screamed at them harder as he fought to get his hands free. One call came to him much closer though…in the other room and he felt bile in his throat as he realised that one of his mates was in the same situation as he was. The other man who had been brought here was one of his own mates. One of his mates had been drugged and kidnapped too and might, even now, be being raped in the other room.

He was punched in the stomach and he roared in fury, wriggling his legs and bashing his knobly knees into as much flesh as he could that was the man on top of him.

“Stop fighting so hard, you really do want this. I’ll even prepare you, so just lay still and then we’ll be done in a couple of hours, after we’ve all had a turn.”

Harry heard men sniggering again and he wanted to kill them all. Every single last fucking one of them. He flexed his fingers and his claws were just there, tearing through the hands that were pinning him to the floor.

The man started screaming as fast and as loudly as he could draw breath, cradling his ruined hands as Harry’s venom went to work…he’d be dead within minutes.

If he wasn’t quite so drunk, perhaps he might have realised how paramount his actions were, how dangerous for him and his family, but he didn’t as he leapt onto the man who had been on top of him, stabbing his claws in deep and tearing.

He stumbled to a door and barged it open and inside were more men and a passed out woman. He dodged the attempt that the tired, sated men made to grab him and stumbled through another door. Here he found even more men and a bloodied, partially naked Blaise. He screamed in absolute rage and he flew at the man on top of his mate and he went straight for his neck, biting into it hard with his fangs.

He was grabbed from behind and hit in the face, a knee catching his chest as he hunched over in pain. He heard his first mate roaring in anger off to his right as Blaise tried to fight off the men holding him down, trying to reach him to help him.
Harry’s silk shirt was ripped and he snarled in fury, it had been a present from one of his mates, his blond mate. He screamed at the remaining three of his mates again, they snarled back at him, comforting him, they were on their way and they were angry.

“Right you little bastard, hiding fucking knives in your damn sleeves!” The new man on top of him shouted in his face, pinning him back to the floor as stars danced in his vision from the last punch to the head.

“Get the fuck off of me!” He screamed, letting out another distress call.

“Stop fucking screeching you little bitch!”

“Get off him or I’ll rip out your fucking throat!” His mate roared.

He was forced to watch, pinned down as he was, as his mate was beat upon and thrown back to the floor on wobbly legs that had lost their trousers. He’d been drugged too.

Another man came and held his arms down, this time he pinned his wrists, not his hands and Harry couldn’t break free. He screamed as loudly as he could, letting out his most distressed call yet as he realised that if his mates didn’t come here in the next few minutes then they’d never be able to have any more children. He screamed again and he felt a dozen comforting grumbles come back to him. The family were on their way to him, as fast as they could, he just hoped that they got here in time before anything happened to him or Blaise.

“No one can hear you, this place is warded! Stop making so much fucking noise you little slut!”

An arm went across his windpipe and just like that, his breathing was cut off as an immense pressure was pushed onto his neck. His legs kicked out, but they couldn’t reach the man who had spread his thighs and was sat between them hunched over him and he couldn’t get his hands free from the other man. A click had him bucking his body in rage; someone was taking photos of him like this.

His vision was going white and his body became heavy, lethargic as the lack of oxygen started affecting his body, he tried to breathe, but that arm pressed harder against his windpipe, almost crushing it. That was when the door flew off its hinges and the weight was just suddenly gone from his body. He rolled into a ball and sucked in huge, gasping breaths. Someone touched his hair and he flinched away.

“It’s alright, sweet one. It’s Alexander.” A soothing, calming voice told him and Harry felt tears leak out of his eyes and suddenly he was sobbing his heart out.
His hair was stroked and his back was rubbed and Harry found himself vomiting. Alexander moved him away from the noisome fluid and sat him up, keeping up his soft words and comforting touches.

Nasta was there then, hunched in front of him, cupping his chin, checking him over and snarling at every injury that he could see and all of those that he could scent out.

“Let me get you home…”

“Blaise! How is Blaise?!” Harry demanded.

Nasta looked away behind him and Harry peeked around Nasta to see a bloodied Blaise, naked from the waist down, tearing the fuck out of what he assumed had once been a man.

“He’s alright, he wants to get revenge for you, not himself. That was the man that was pinning you down. I got the one who had you by the throat.” Nasta explained.

“The…the camera.” Harry said. “One of them had a camera, he was taking photos…I don’t, I don’t want anyone to have them.”

Harry heard Max roar at that and he stalked over to where Harry was looking, to a man dead against the wall. He started searching him for the camera. He looked magnificent in his full Dracken form. His shirt in tatters as his giant, bright blue wings stretched to their fullest, the tips fluttering, almost vibrating, angrily.

He found the camera and took out the roll of film. He then smashed the camera against the wooden floor and stomped on it.

“Get Harry and Blaise home. We’ll clean this up.” Myron said seriously, he was in full Dracken form too, his jet black wings out and hovering behind him like spectral shadows, his arms were covered with blood almost up to his elbows.

Nasta eased him into his arms and stood up; Harry clung to him, still a little dizzy and nauseous.

“Claire is waiting back at your home, to check them both over.”
Nasta growled deeply, roughly in his throat, even as he nodded his agreement. He took one last look around, held Harry tighter and then spun on the spot, Apparating them both back home.

Harry didn’t remember much of what happened once he got back, only that their living room was filled with Max’s relatives, who had all been at the party. Nasta hovered over him like an overprotective bear and watched Claire’s every move like a hawk.

Harry drifted in and out of consciousness as it emerged that he’d been heavily drugged and likely would have been completely helpless if he hadn’t been a Dracken and that his neck and the left side of his face would likely heavily bruise. He was unconscious when his other three mates came back home with Alexander and Myron. Blaise was being carried, much to his ire, by a very, very angry, overprotective Max, but Harry was dimly aware of a conversation about those men not being invited to Talia’s party.

“Tender!” Harry choked out, his voice gratingly rough.

“Hey, calm down. It’s alright, you’re home now, you’re safe.” Nasta soothed patiently as he turned around to face him immediately and smoothed his hair out of his sweaty face with gentle hands.

Harry blinked at him. He was sat on the edge of the settee that Harry was laying on, protecting and shielding him from the rest of the room.

“Bartender.” Harry repeated. “He…he did this, invited his friends and slipped them in so they…they could steal girls. They wanted a girl, they thought I was a girl…told you those men weren’t right when they called me a girl.”

“You’ve been drugged, Harry, you aren’t making any sense.” Nasta told him kindly.

“No, he is.” Max said as he shoved his fingers through his hair. “He came to me and Draco, a group of men were heckling him because they thought that he was a woman, but we just laughed. I didn’t think it would be this serious, I just thought a few of Talia’s friends were a bit too drunk and had confused Harry for a woman.”

“Which bartender, Harry?” Myron asked him calmly.
“Paul…his name was Paul. He wanted…wanted dinner with me.” Harry said dreamily as he slipped back out of consciousness. He was dimly aware of Blaise groggily telling them that he’d also been served by the same bartender, a man named Paul, who’d hit on him and offered him a date.

When he next woke up it was morning, probably late morning at that or even noon if how bright it was, was any indication. He was in his bed, soft and warm in his cotton pyjamas, which were done up to the collar and the drawstring bottoms had been tied so tightly that there was no way they could even accidentally slip off his hips. He was snuggled up tight to Blaise.

He frowned into the pillow as memories of the previous day worked through his rapidly awakening brain. Talia’s birthday, giving her, her present that afternoon and then later in the night they had gone to her party. That was when his mind made the leap and he shot up.

“Woah, are you okay? Are you going to be sick?”

Harry looked at Max, who was sat happily in the rocking chair by the bedside. He was panting heavily and he put a hand to his head.

“I think I’m okay.” He croaked out. He moved a hand to touch his sore throat, but Max stopped him with a gentle hand.

“It is badly bruised, I’ve applied a bruise salve to it, so it’s best not to touch it.”

“Why does it always have to be me, Max?” He asked.

“You’re a little trouble magnet, that’s why.”

That made Harry smile tiredly as he eased his aching body back down into the bed.

“Did you get the kids back from Mrs Weasley?”

Max nodded. “She was horrified and upset when we told her what had happened to you and Blaise. We didn’t give her the exact details, only that you’d both been attacked at the party, she made you some chicken soup. It’s a good idea with how painful it’s going to be for you to swallow.”
“I want some.” Harry said. “My mouth feels like cotton wool.”

“That would be the drugs you were given. You’ve been sweating them out all night.”

“Potion?” Harry asked.

Max’s eyebrows lowered as he considered what he might be asking.

“Drugs in potion form?” Harry clarified. “I didn’t see tablets.”

“They were pills, Harry. It’s common for the bartender to keep you talking, so that you don’t look at your drink, or mostly to stop you noticing the fizzing tablets in the bottom of the glass.”

“I feel like a fool.”

“Don’t, none of this was ever your fault, or Blaise’s for that matter, you were both specially targeted by a group of men who had obviously done things like this before. But don’t worry they can’t hurt anyone anymore.”

“I killed two of them.” He said.

“Yes, you did and between us, we killed the other eleven and my Dad went to pay the bartender a little visit too. You’re safe now.”

“Should have stayed by you and the others.”

“Don’t be ridiculous. This sort of thing doesn’t happen every day and you certainly don’t need to stay by our sides all day every day just to feel safe, you shouldn’t have to. Nasta called your mind Healer though, he’s booked you in for an emergency appointment so that you can talk this through with him, between him and us, you’ll be fine.”

“Blaise?”
“He’s woken up, he’s just angry that he couldn’t do more to help you. He was very heavily drugged. I’m surprised that he was still conscious when we arrived. Of course we’ve told him that and explained that he was drugged too, but he feels like a failure as a dominant, so he’s going to need your adoring attentions for a while, but he’ll be just fine. You arrived just after him from what we can tell, no one managed to do anything of that sort to either of you.”

Harry nodded. “I still want that soup.”

Max smiled and kissed his forehead. “I’ll go and get you some, maybe some chilled juice as well, it’ll help your throat. You need some potions too, now that you’re awake.”

Harry nodded sluggishly.

“Don’t move too much, you’re still hurt and Nasta will have my balls on a plate.”

Harry smiled tiredly even as he closed his eyes and rested some more. His body felt too heavy. This attack reminded him of Theodore Nott and Astoria Greengrass, hell he hadn’t thought of that in a long while…he hoped that soon this would be the same and it would just be a distant memory that he never had to think about, he couldn’t believe that Blaise had been targeted and attacked too.

He turned to his sleeping mate and kissed his cheek, laying himself back down and shifting closer to Blaise and pressing against him gently.

Another event in his life that he didn’t want to think about and wasn’t ever reminded about. He couldn’t help thinking, as he drifted off to sleep, that this attack was somehow different. Nott’s attack had been personal; he’d known the motivation behind it, he’d known why Nott had attacked him. Somehow, just being a victim of a random attack that could have happened to anyone, where he’d been targeted for no real reason and with no motivation behind it, it just seemed worse.

---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

He was treated with kid gloves for the next few days, his mates spoke softly and quietly around him, even Blaise who had been attacked with him, they didn’t let him do anything, he hadn’t even been able to move out of the bed for the first two days, where he’d been hand fed soup and helped to drink juice and tea and encouraged to rest and sleep, though he was appeased slightly that Blaise was subjected to the same treatment, but the others never spoke to Blaise like he would break, only him.

Draco, Max and Nasta hadn’t let him out of the bed and had even escorted him personally to the bathroom, remaining with him and blocking all his attempts to look at himself in the mirror before hurrying him back into bed. It was infuriating.

The pain potions worked a treat and the bruise salve meant that just three days later, on the twenty-third, no bruising remained on his face, body or neck. He hadn’t been able to see exactly how bad it had gotten, but he knew just from their faces and how long it had taken to heal with potions that it had been very bad.

He could now eat semi-solids, things like jellies, mashed up vegetables and yoghurts, he felt like one of the kids as he was served a mashed up meal and a small bowl of yoghurt that he’d only been allowed to eat himself by wrestling the spoon away from Blaise, who’d been too worried about hurting him further to actually put up a real fight for the spoon. Of course his mate was allowed to eat by himself and he was being treated as normal, though perhaps a little more gently, but still pretty much normal. Harry felt sympathy for Draco now, who’d been treated like this after his fevers, only Harry had helped him out a bit by taking Nasta’s attention away from the blond, Draco was not repaying the favour.

“Just don’t push yourself. Claire said to take it easy.” Blaise told him.

“I hardly think spooning baby food into my mouth counts as exerting myself.” Harry said dryly as he picked at his unappetising food. “Besides, you were drugged and attacked too, why aren’t you sat here next to me having baby food spooned into your mouth?!”

“I’m completely fine. I’m not even sore.” Blaise told him.

“I’m fine too!” Harry insisted.

It was hard to believe that less than a week ago he’d been sorting through photos of happy memories and dressing up in little shorts to entice his mates into sex. It was like a bad dream and he dropped his head into his hand. He was glad that those bastards were all dead, even Paul the bartender, because if they hadn’t been, he would be out there right now, hunting the fuckers down so that he could strip their flesh from their bones.

“I don’t want this.” Harry said as he pushed the tray away from himself. “I want meat, go hunting for me?” He asked Blaise.

“I…I don’t know, love, your throat…”

“Works perfectly fine now, thank you. I want something I can sink my teeth into; I want warm flesh and blood, please.”
Blaise nodded and he left the room. Harry took his untouched tray back into the kitchen where his babies were being fed what looked like exactly the same thing that he hadn’t wanted to eat and he picked up Leolin.

“Harry, maybe you should…”

“If you try telling me what to do for one more minute I am going to find something to hit you with.” He swore seriously. “I’ve had enough of the kid treatment; I want things to go back to normal.”

“Can they?” Max asked him. “Can things really go back to how they were now?”

“Yes, of course they can, you lot just need to let go and let me and the mind Healer sort everything out. You treat Blaise the same, so give me the same respect and consideration.”

“How is it going with him, he’s never called you in on consecutive days before.” Nasta said worriedly.

“Things are going fine, I’m working through the thoughts, feelings and emotions I had that night…not that I remember much of them thanks to that drug, but he wants to see me so often because we’re making good headway and he doesn’t want to ruin that. It’s Talia you need to be talking to, she feels awful about this even though it’s not her fault…the bartender came with the venue, it’s not her fault that that place was as big as she needed for her birthday and I know now that though I didn’t ruin her party, as I didn’t know Blaise and I were going to be attacked, neither did she. No one knew that was going to happen and really, if it hadn’t have been me and Blaise, it would have been someone else…like Alayla, Amelle or even Talia herself.”

Max snarled ferociously at that thought and at once, eight babies went still and silent. Max calmed himself and blew out a huge breath.

“I know, I need to keep better control, but those pieces of slime really piss me off.”

“Language.” Harry chastised, in a complete imitation of Myron that made all three of them laugh.

“If you’re truly feeling better, then we’ll back off, but please don’t hide any pain or hurt that you’re feeling over this, we want to help you get better, with the mind Healer’s help.”

Harry nodded. “I know I’m going to be a bit messed up for a while. At least with certain things, but I don’t like this tiptoeing around me, the soft, lowered voices as if I’m some untameable, wild animal that’s going to lash out at any moment. It makes me feel worse. And no more baby food!” He added. “Claire said that my throat is fine, I can swallow normally, thank you.”

“Okay, no more mashed up food. Do you want something else instead?”

“I’ve already got it on order.” Harry said with a smile.

“You ordered take away?” Nasta asked.

“Eh, sort of. Blaise has gone hunting; I just want to tear something up with my teeth.”

“You sent out Blaise?” Nasta demanded.

“He’s fine, we’re both fine.” Harry stressed. “He wanted to hunt for me and he’s perfectly capable of bringing down a deer for us to eat. I need to rip up something.”

His two mates just looked at him. He rolled his eyes. “I am aware that this has links to the filth that attacked me and Blaise, I want to feel flesh under my teeth, hot blood and warm meat, but it has also been a while since any of you lazy bums have hunted for me.”

“Bum!”

Harry looked at Regan in shock and he groaned. “What are the chances of him not shouting that out the next time we take him shopping?”

“About twenty percent.” Max told him.

“Bum!” Regan repeated happily, and loudly.
“Make that zero.” Max amended.

Harry just shared a look with the two other men and all three of them burst out laughing.

The kid treatment had only just stopped when he was told by a concerned Richard that their trial was starting back up the next day.

“I really don’t think that you need this right now, Harry.” Richard told him when Harry insisted that he was going to court.

“No, you’re wrong. I need to do it; I’ve always needed to do it. I was randomly, senselessly attacked, I know. But those people abused and neglected me throughout my childhood, I need to see them get what they deserve, I need to hear with my own ears what they’re saying about me, I need to hear what possible excuses they can come up with for how they treated me.”

“How’s it going with the mind Healer?”

“Good. We’ve been focusing more on the recent attack than my past issues, but he’s definitely helping to soothe me and calm me down over the whole thing, he’s suggested that I take self-defence classes, he says that it might help me relax more and feel more in control and able to protect myself.”

“Max is good with fighting; he had too many Uncles wrestling with him as a child.”

“Max has been a huge help with it.” Harry said with a smile towards his biggest mate. “He even lets me actually get a hit in now and then.”

Richard chuckled a bit before he sighed and ran a hand through his hair. “Are you sure you want to come to the court?”

Harry nodded adamantly. “Yes. I think it’ll do more harm to me than good if I stop going to the court. It’ll be too much like hiding away and like I’m not facing my past issues. I’ve come this far in my recovery, I can’t jeopardise it now.”

“Then I’ll be back for you tomorrow morning at half nine again. We’ll get you a little something at the café before we go in, but it will last a little longer this time, now that the trial is actually starting. We’ll have a break for lunch though and we should be done for the day in the afternoon.”

Harry nodded and took a shaky breath. He could do this. His mind Healer, Sebastian Vasey, was adamant that seeing through the court proceedings would help him to face the rest of his lingering issues and he would see this through. He could and he would face his issues and he would get better, from what the Dursleys had done to him, to what those monsters had done to him last week. He would not only get over this, but he would face it, heal it and put it behind him. As his mind Healer said, he was a strong, independent man and he could do anything that he put his mind to with the right help and support that he needed.

They said goodbye to Richard and Harry sighed, mentally preparing himself for seeing the Dursleys tomorrow. He was going to be just fine, after this attack and through this court case, because he had all the support that he needed from his lovers.

He looked at his four mates; elegant, regal Draco. Suave, handsome Blaise. Strong, entertaining Max and stern, dependable Nasta. His rocks, his support, his beloved mates. They would see him through this, he knew they would and he trusted them to support him, to hold him up when he needed them to. He would get through this; he knew he would, because he had the best support system in the world.

“Come on, dinner’s about ready.” Max coaxed him off of the settee, shimmying him into the kitchen.

Harry grinned at him and allowed himself to be hurried to the kitchen table.

“I made lamb today; I know it’s one of your favourite meats.” Max told him, nuzzling his face with his nose.

Harry laughed and sat himself down. Max was always making him laugh these days, since the attack. It relaxed all of his mates to see him laughing and they always broke him out of anything that looked remotely like pensive brooding. They didn’t let him think too hard about anything that had happened and for that, he was equal parts grateful and frustrated.

Nasta was in a good mood as well as he talked about their children and about the translations that Blaise had done from the hideous black book that Harry had given to him, Blaise had done a lot of translating in the past few days when he was stuck on bed rest with him.

Max spoke of potions, of the latest letter that Caesar had sent to him, regaling them with stories of what Eleonora and Beatrice were up to and the conversation was kept well away from the court case, the attack, Harry’s mind Healer and Harry found himself smiling as he cut up his food and ate happily. He got a surprise after dinner though, as Nasta had left the kitchen saying that he’d heard something over the baby monitor that none of them had heard.

He came back ten minutes later, as they were just getting ready to settle in the living room with the tea that Draco had made because he hadn’t wanted Blaise to get up and do it, he had naturally slipped Blaise a cup of coffee over tea in Nasta’s absence.

“Max, put a spell on those dishes. One night won’t hurt anyone. I’ve got a surprise.”

“I knew that you never heard anything over that monitor!” Harry accused. “You’re just being all sneaky.”

Nasta grinned as he pulled Harry into a hug and pulled him into the living room. Harry’s mouth dropped. The entire coffee table was covered with sweets and chocolate, including Draco’s missing Ice Mice and Peppermint Toads and Harry’s half eaten missing bar of fudge chocolate.

“You’re not well, Nasta!” Harry declared as he teasingly felt his mate’s temperature.

“I’m fine, but I’ve come to the realisation that I need to loosen up a little. So once a month we’ll be sitting down after the kids have gone to bed, we’ll watch as many films as we can stay awake for and we can have a binge on chocolate.”

“You’re my favourite person in the whole wide world.” Harry declared as he wrapped his arms around Nasta and snogged him.

“I thought I was!” Max pouted.

“Obviously I’m only telling Nasta that to get chocolate.” Harry stage whispered. “You’re still my favourite really.”

Max laughed deeply as he swiped Harry and carried him to the chocolate stash, where Harry immediately seized his ‘stolen’ fudge chocolate bar and bit into it. He moaned happily.

The others joined them and they all squashed themselves onto the same settee, Harry sat on Max with his legs thrown over Draco’s lap and Blaise sat on Nasta’s lap.
“What film do we watch first?” Blaise asked.

“There was one that Max wanted to watch the other day, but we never had the time, put that one on.” Harry declared as he bit off an absolutely huge chunk of chocolate, chewing on it and sucking slowly to get the maximum flavour.

If Nasta kept this new routine up, then Harry could definitely see him being an incredibly happy man in the coming months. He wasn’t completely fooled. It wasn’t a coincidence that this ‘idea’ had struck Nasta on the same day that Richard had come to tell him about the court case resuming just a week after he and Blaise had been viciously attacked, no.

Nasta had done this on purpose just to keep him happy and contented and he was glad that his mate had thought to do this for him, because it did make him happy. He just hoped that when the court case was over and done with and the attack and the Dursleys were just nightmares of his past, that Nasta still kept up this…sort of mini date night, even if it was only once a month, because if Nasta was doing this just until the end of the court case, then Harry would be very unhappy when he had this quality time, shared and spent with his mates, taken away from him. He didn’t want that, especially not when his heat period was coming ever closer.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: It’s bonfire night tonight, which means lots of fireworks. My poor Jethro is terrified of fireworks, so he’s having lots of cwtches and treats today, but there’s not much else I can do for him, my poor little boy.

I hope you’ve enjoyed this chapter, a little bit of smut, some fluff and an added touch of angst. Next chapter we have the continuation of the court case, so lots of Richard and a bit of Myron…I do like Myron.

Anyway, I hope you’ve all enjoyed this chapter, I’ll see you all soon. I believe Lycanthrope Factory is going to be updated next on the schedule, until then,

StarLight Massacre. X
Justice Beginnings

Chapter Notes

Last Time

If Nasta kept this new routine up, then Harry could definitely see him being an incredibly happy man in the coming months. He wasn’t completely fooled. It wasn’t a coincidence that this ‘idea’ had struck Nasta on the same day that Richard had come to tell him about the court case resuming just a week after he and Blaise had been viciously attacked, no.

Nasta had done this on purpose just to keep him happy and contented and he was glad that his mate had thought to do this for him, because it did make him happy. He just hoped that when the court case was over and done with and the attack and the Dursleys were just nightmares of his past, that Nasta still kept up this…sort of mini date night, even if it was only once a month, because if Nasta was doing this just until the end of the court case, then Harry would be very unhappy when he had this quality time, shared and spent with his mates, taken away from him. He didn’t want that, especially not when his heat period was coming ever closer.

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

Chapter Ninety-Seven – Justice Beginnings

Harry was on a high the next morning, walking around with Eva slung over his shoulder, his baby daughter still not dressed as she gurgled wetly as he rushed into this room and that one, taking her with him.

He believed that he was still on a hyperactive run from all the chocolate that he’d eaten last night, but proving Nasta wrong, he did not have a belly ache from it and he’d even managed breakfast today, he just couldn’t sit still.

“You’ll make that baby sick.” Draco warned him even as he made tea for everyone at the counter.

Harry laughed as he patted Eva’s nappy clad bum under her nightdress.

“She’s fine; she’s a robust, hardy little girl.” He boasted as he once again left the kitchen for the living room after picking up a cup of tea…he knew that Max had put a calming draught in there because he’d heard Nasta beg him to calm him down somehow. He didn’t mind.
“Do you want to change?” Blaise asked him, holding out Ave. “I need to get Eva bathed and dressed.”

Harry nodded as he put his cup down and switched babies, handing over Eva and putting his other beautiful little girl over his shoulder and picking up his tea again.

“Sit down with Ave.” Nasta told him. “She spit up this morning, I don’t think her belly will take you walking her around in circles.”

Harry did as he was told and he almost felt the calming draught in the tea taking effect as he sighed, his body calming from the buzzing hyper activity of minutes before.

“That’s some potent potion.” He chuckled as he snuggled with Ave and nuzzled her little ear. She burbled at him.

“Ah ma.”

Harry grinned at his little girl and kissed her cheek gently as she stared at him.

“You seem better this week that you were the last time.” Max told him.

Harry shrugged. “As horrible as it is, that attack really helped me. There is only one time in my life that I have ever been more afraid than I was in that shitty warehouse and that was when I had that shit fit nightmare at Myron’s house. Being that scared, thinking that I was about to be violated and the thought that I might never be able to have children again…it’s made me realise that this court case is nothing. Why should I be so afraid? Nothing can happen to me, no one can hurt me. It’s just memories and memories shouldn’t be able to hurt me, because they’ve already happened. I’ve lived through that before, why should I be afraid of it now when I know that I can’t be hurt?”

Nasta came and kissed him and Harry smiled.

“I’m so happy that you’ve come to this conclusion.” His top dominant told him as he kissed Harry again while his fingers played with Ave’s curly hair. “Your memories can’t hurt you if you don’t let them and not a single one of us would let you go anywhere if we thought that you’d be hurt.”
Harry nodded. “Looking back, I can’t believe that I was so scared of something that can’t even hurt me.”

Blaise smiled at him. “It’s alright to be afraid of the unknown.” He parroted. He’d said something similar the first time that Harry had had to go to court.

“I know what to expect now, it wasn’t as bad as I thought it would be. I should be alright today, but it’s going to be longer and I’m going to miss you all.”

“We’ll be right here waiting for you, and I think you’ve spent more than enough time with the kids to tide them over until you get back.”

“I can never spend enough time with them.” Harry declared passionately.

Nasta chuckled and kissed him again. “Go and get yourself ready, Richard will be here in half an hour and you haven’t even showered yet.”

Harry nodded as he passed over a very happy Ave to her adoring Daddy and he went to go and shower and dress himself. He took in several deep breaths. He could do this, he was going to be just fine and nothing was going to happen to him. He couldn’t be hurt by them anymore.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

He and Richard kept to the same routine as they had before. Richard collected him from home and took him back to his place, they had a small pep talk and a run through of the basic time schedule they were going to be keeping and then they said goodbye to Myron, who hugged him tightly before going to work himself and from there, he was Apparated to the alley behind the café where they both got cups of coffee to go and then they made their way to the court room.

“You’re going to see a lot of photos today, Harry.”

“The ones from the house showing the cupboard and my bedroom?” Harry asked.
Richard nodded. “Some others as well if we can get around to it, but I want you to be prepared to see them.”

“The ones of my body?”

Richard nodded and Harry steeled himself. He could do this, he’d seen those pictures before, he’d lived through the events of those pictures. He could do this. He would do this. He was entirely determined that those people would not get away with what they’d done to him, with what they’d put him through throughout the years. He hadn’t wanted to do this at first, he’d been dead set against it, but now that the proceedings had started, he wanted to see it through to the end. He wanted justice for himself, for the scared, unloved little boy that he’d been, living in a cupboard, starving, isolated, in broken glasses and second hand clothes. He wanted the Dursleys to face up to what they’d done to him and face the consequences, the punishment, for those actions.

They were called into the court room and Harry sat in his chair beside Richard. He didn’t look at the Dursleys and they didn’t look at him. He swallowed and touched Richard’s hand under the table. The man took hold of his hand and squeezed comfortingly.

“You’re going to be fine.” Richard told him softly. “Completely fine. Just think of all the treats you’ll get after this, chocolate, sweets, hugs and kisses when you want them…lots of sex.”

Harry ducked his head and giggled as softly as he could so that no one would hear him and think that he was being inappropriate.

“That’s better. You just stay there and let me sort this out. It’ll be over soon.”

The session was called to order and Richard slipped on his court persona as everyone greeted one another curtly, a man that Harry barely recognised but would have been afraid of if he didn’t know the fun loving goof behind the mask. He could definitely understand why no one wanted to be on the opposite side to Richard in the court room as he kicked everything off with a stern face and a sharp tone of voice.

Harry tried to follow the court speak again, especially as Vernon was on the stand, being asked all manner of questions, some of them completely inane sounding to him, but he trusted Richard and he let him ask all sorts of questions that Vernon answered curtly. Harry still got lost around some of the strange words as their meaning flew completely over his head though. He couldn’t help the clenching of his hands when Richard directed the jury’s attention to the screen though, where he indicated a reel of numbered photographs to be shown.

“This is a lovely home, Mister Dursley. Very clean, very neat and pristine. A four bedroomed home I believe?”
“That’s right.” Vernon grumbled.

“This home shows how very wealthy you and your family were, there were five televisions, each with their own DVD player, there were three computers and two games consoles. You had a brand new car sitting in the drive way. It is a very nice house indeed. So tell me, Mister Dursley, if you were wealthy enough to afford all of these lovely things and your lovely house, which has four bedrooms, why was my client, your own Nephew, forced to sleep in the cupboard under the stairs?” He asked with a hard, biting edge to his words.

“He was never forced to stay in that cupboard.” Vernon growled and Harry bit the inside of his cheek to prevent himself from saying anything as he silently fumed.

“Oh?” Richard let out a short, sarcastic chuckle. “Forgive me; you are trying to say that a young boy willingly locked himself in a cupboard?”

“The boy liked it in that cupboard. We were hard pressed to get him to come out most days.”

Richard hummed thoughtfully and indicated that the next photo should be shown. It was a photo of his dirty little nest, made up of ratty blankets and his own clothes, which were Dudley’s hand-me-downs.

“You are trying to get this court to believe that a perfectly normal little boy wanted to spend all of his time in this tiny cupboard?”

“He wasn’t normal, he’s never been normal.” Vernon growled.

“Alright, Mister Dursley, let’s say that I believe that Harry wasn’t a completely normal little boy, why then didn’t you ever get him help?” Richard asked. “A little boy who was orphaned very young in violent circumstances who would rather spend his time curled up in a tiny cupboard, surely that set alarm bells off in your mind? Why not get him to a doctor?”

“He wouldn’t go!” Vernon insisted.

“So you’re saying that a four, five year old child was too much of a handful for you to take him to a medical centre to be assessed by professionals who could have helped him?"

“He was violent, even at that age.”

“You are trying to tell this court that a man of twenty-six years couldn’t handle a four year old little boy?” Richard asked sceptically.

Vernon said nothing and Harry hunched in on himself a little, squeezing his shoulders into his body. He wasn’t a violent person, he never had been, and he hated that the Dursleys were painting him as this violent, problem child that was mentally abnormal.

“I can see that you aren’t going to answer that question.” Richard said sharply. “So if Harry wouldn’t go to see a doctor himself, why didn’t you ever have a doctor call around to your home to assess him? You must have been worried and doctors will make a house visit if asked.”

Vernon again remained silent and Harry had to force himself not to glare at the hateful man.

“Mister Dursley, I asked you a question.” Richard rebuked sternly, as if Vernon was being particularly difficult or slow minded. “Why didn’t you ever have a doctor come and assess Harry in the home if you were so worried about him spending all of his time in a cupboard? Actually, while we’re on this topic, why does Harry not have any medical records after his parents’ death in nineteen-eighty-one?”

“He wouldn’t go to the doctor.” Vernon repeated.

“So you admit that you never had Harry vaccinated or ever seen to by a doctor? He has no dental records either, can I assume that you never took Harry to the dentist either? Oh, excuse me; you’re going to say that he wouldn’t go there either, aren’t you?”

“He wouldn’t.” Vernon said through gritted teeth.

“There is no need to get angry, Mister Dursley. I am merely asking you to answer the questions. Would you say that you have often had problems with controlling your anger?”
“No. I am a family man!” Vernon insisted.

“A family man, yes. I can see that with the way that you left your Nephew in a cupboard and never took him to the doctor or to the dentist. I don’t believe that a man in his mid-twenties would be outmatched by a mere toddler. I think that you not only made Harry sleep in that cupboard, but you locked him in there when it was convenient for you.”

“We never locked him in that cupboard!”

“I don’t believe you.” Richard said simply. “You hated that a new baby had been thrust onto you after Harry’s parents were killed and you hated him for intruding on your perfect life. You hid him away in that cupboard and you treated him worse than an animal.”

“That’s a lie!” Vernon raged.

“Then please, tell me what happened usually, on a day to day basis?”

“I don’t understand the question.”

“Okay, let me rephrase my question in a way that you might understand. What did you do every day, what was the routine that you kept?”

“I’d wake up every morning, shower, have breakfast and then I’d go to work for eight O’clock on weekdays.”

“So your Wife was the one who spent all day at home with Harry, your Nephew?”

“Yes.”

“So by your own admission, you left a violent four year old that you yourself couldn’t handle or control, alone with your Wife and son while you went out to work each day?”

Harry watched as Vernon realised his slip up and he coloured rapidly.
“Do not play me for a fool, Mister Dursley. You weren’t worried about Harry doing anything to your Wife because he wasn’t a violent boy at all, was he? You locked him in a cupboard and he was terrified of you, so it was perfectly alright for you to go to work each day, knowing that if Harry wasn’t locked up in a cupboard, then he was so afraid of you that he wouldn’t dare do anything to earn a punishment.”

“Objection! My client worked hard to provide food and a roof over his family’s heads, he needed to work in order to provide for them.”

“I was merely questioning why, if Harry was such a violent child that Mister Dursley couldn’t even handle him, to the extent that he couldn’t even get a four year old to see a doctor when he needed one, why would he then go out each day, leaving his Wife and son in the same house with said violent child? It is a perfectly feasible question.”

“Answer the question, Mister Dursley.” The severe looking Judge said curtly.

“I needed to work, if we left the boy alone to do as he pleased, then his outbursts were few and far between.”

“You let a toddler do as he pleased around a dangerous home?” Richard asked in over exaggerated surprise.

“Our home was not dangerous, we had our own son to care for, he was only a few months older than Harry.”

“All houses are dangerous, Mister Dursley, especially to little four year olds who are left to do as they please with no supervision.”

Harry watched Vernon colour up further and it was hard to keep his tongue in check. He wanted so badly to deny the accusations being thrown around about him, but he couldn’t risk ruining his only chance at justice. He needed to trust Richard and he needed to trust the Judge and the Jury.

He sneaked a peek at the jurors and folded his hands together nervously. The twelve people were all random, a mix of genders and ages, from all races and ethnicities and they were all listening and watching the proceedings intently.
“If we take your version as the truth, Mister Dursley and Harry was violent and unmanageable to the point where he wouldn’t go to the doctor or the dentist, how were you then able to get him to go to school?”

“The boy liked school.” Vernon grumbled.

“So Harry, our violent and unmanageable little boy is now five years old, he’s in school, was he still the same? Did his violent outbursts increase or worsen?”

“They worsened as he got older, he became more aggressive, more unruly.”

“Yet all of his teachers, through every single year that he attended his infants and primary schools, have all said that Harry was a sweet, but shy little boy, who was always polite and kind to the other children. You see, your story here, Mister Dursley, does not add up to the eight teachers that taught Harry through his primary education.”

“He was good at pretending and manipulating other people.”

“A toddler was able to ‘pretend and manipulate’ qualified teachers to such an extent that he was a completely different boy when he was in school to when he was at home? Perhaps you think that your Nephew has a dissociative identity disorder, Mister Dursley.”

“It wouldn’t surprise me, there’s definitely something wrong with that boy!”

Harry’s body stiffened and he had to bite hard on his tongue to keep it from moving. He breathed deeply and evenly to calm himself down as his sheathed wings vibrated hard against his spine.

“I would like to point out to this court that though my client is in therapy for the abuses that he suffered as a child at the hands of the Dursleys, he has passed a full psychological examination and was found to be perfectly sane and free of all mental disorders, just in case the Dursley family were going to try to falsely claim him as such.”

“Mister Potter, can you state the name of the psychologist who administered the evaluation of yourself for the record of the court.” The Judge told him brusquely.
Harry looked to Richard, who gave a small, encouraging nod and Harry stood up shyly with everyone’s eyes currently on him.

“Sebastian Vasey, your Honour.” Harry said clearly.

“Thank you, Mister Potter.” The Judge said just as curtly as before and Harry sat back down and squeezed his shoulders in tight to try and hide himself.

The court was silent for a moment, before Richard straightened the papers in front of him and drew the attention of the court back to himself and to the questioning.

“Now, we have ruled out any sort of psychological illnesses, are you still insisting that Harry behaved like another person once he was at home? That he would go from a quiet, sweet, but clever little boy into an uncontrollable, aggressive and violent boy who refused to come out of a cupboard? No one here believes you, Mister Dursley, just admit that you locked Harry in that cupboard to keep him out of the way of your perceived perfect family and we can move on.”

“We never locked him in that cupboard!” Vernon said angrily.

“Okay, I can see that this is not getting us anywhere, so we’ll move on for now. Tell me about Harry’s teenaged years.”

“He was a violent, aggressive, delinquent! We had even seriously considered sending him to St Brutus’ Secure Centre for Incurably Criminal Boys.” Vernon imparted with all the mannerisms of a man who thought that such information would turn the tides in his favour.

“Yes, Harry told me that you had threatened to do as such throughout his teenaged years. Such a thing alarmed me, so I contacted the school in question directly to schedule a meeting. I was granted such and I took an impartial representative of this court with me to the meeting to record all that was said and on the day of that scheduled meeting, between myself and the Governor of the centre, he informed me that you had never once contacted them, Mister Dursley. But not only that, after given a detailed biography about Harry, including the results of his psychological evaluation and his completely non-existent criminal record, they would never have considered taking him into their facility in the first place as he didn’t need to be there! You threatened Harry with the belief that he would be sent to a place that was for violent, hardened criminal boys who were repeat juvenile offenders who needed that facility to rehabilitate and teach them, and perhaps even worse than that, you convinced him that he deserved to be there! Harry doesn’t even have a criminal record, Mister Dursley, he has been evaluated as completely clinically sane, why would he need to go to such an institute? He is not a criminal and he has nothing that needs curing, except perhaps your family’s hideous mistreatment of him.”

“That boy terrorised us!” Vernon raged. “He intimidated us and frightened us!”

Richard made a point of looking at Vernon and then to Harry.

“Come here for a moment, Harry.”

Harry stood up and keeping himself hunched in because of all the eyes on him, he made his way around the table to Richard. Two, soothing, comforting hands were placed on each of his shoulders and he relaxed a little.

“Are you talking about this boy here?” Richard asked incredulously. “This tiny, skinny, wraith like boy intimidated and terrorised you when he is half your size, less than half your weight and was found to be very malnourished and starved. A boy who was away at a boarding school for ten months of the year and has been said to be kind and sweet by everyone who has ever met him, except for your family?”

Richard made a point of showing exactly how small and slender Harry was by standing directly behind him, showing the court their height difference and how soft and lithe Harry was compared to Richard’s lightly muscled body.

“Thank you, Harry. You can sit back down now.” Richard told him kindly, rubbing his shoulder for a moment in a comforting gesture.

Harry sat back down and breathed deeply and calmly, watching Richard as he looked at the huge, thick folder in front of him. He had so much evidence against the Dursleys that it was going to take a month to get through it all.

“You cannot possibly expect me to believe that a boy who you kept starved and locked in a cupboard intimidated and terrorised you when he is half your size.” Richard said sharply.

“He did!”
“Then why did you never call the police?” Richard asked lightly. “We have already established that Harry has no criminal record at all, why didn’t you ever call the police, Mister Dursley?”

Vernon remained silent again, yet Harry was learning as he observed that silence could be as incriminating as words. By failing to answer such questions, Vernon was digging himself, and his family, into a deeper hole.

“Perhaps you misheard me.” Richard said after the silence stretched onwards and a member of the jury muffled a cough. “Why, Mister Dursley, if your nephew Harry was so intimidating and frightening, who in your own words was an aggressive, violent delinquent, did you never phone the police to have such behaviour logged for a moment such as this?”

Harry watched silently as Vernon went puce in the face, but though his moustache twitched, he didn’t say anything.

“Your Honour, if I might suggest that we break for lunch a little early while Mister Dursley finds his tongue?” Richard said acidly.

The Judge nodded and agreed and Richard packed up all his papers and folders into his briefcase and hurried him out of the courtroom. He didn’t speak again until they reached the little café where they had bought coffee earlier that morning.

“That man is very frustrating.”

Harry couldn’t help laughing. He knew all about that, after all.

“Order what you want, Harry. We’ve got enough time to get a bite to eat.”

“Is the case going well?” Harry asked uncertainly.

“It might be very frustrating, but it’s definitely going in our favour at the moment.” Richard said. “Silence is definitely not golden in a court room. Not answering a question can be as bad as an admission of guilt. So yes, while it is frustrating, it’s also good for us because while he refuses to answer, the Judge and Jury are coming to their own conclusions and they’re going to be reading the silence as an admission of guilt.”
Harry nodded and breathed out a sigh.

“How are you feeling?” Richard asked him.

Harry shrugged. “I don’t know. Better than my first trip to the court, but it’s still… I don’t know, weird I guess, to have all of these bad memories of my life laid out in front of all these people. I don’t like it.”

“You’re doing wonderfully well.” Richard told him kindly as he stood up, patted him on the shoulder and got his order and went to the counter to get their early lunch.

Harry put his elbows on the table and rested his head in his hands. He wondered what his mates were doing right about now with their children. He missed them so much. It would be about time to give Eva and Ave a bottle and Max would be making the kids lunches. He would give absolutely anything to be back at home with them right now.

Richard set a glass of lemonade down for him and eased himself into the chair opposite him. Harry lifted his head and thanked him quietly as he took a sip.

“Thinking about the kids?”

Harry nodded with a smile. “They’re all coming on so well. I miss them. You know that Ave is going to be standing up for the first time any day now? I could miss that while I’m here, she could have already done it and I don’t know about it.”

“I am sorry that you might miss it, but this does need to be sorted and we’re ready for court now. It’s been pushed to the side and put off for too long already. I want you to have the justice that you deserve. It’s not right for them to live in their luxurious four bedroomed house like the snobs that they pretend to be after what they did to you, Harry. You were a child, it’s not right and I will not let them get away with it.”

“I hate all the lies they’re telling.” Harry said sadly. “Painting me to be some criminal who hurt and frightened them. That’s not me and the thought that even one person believes them, that they believe that I’m that sort of person, I hate it.”

Richard patted his hand. “Harry, sweetheart, if one person in that court believes the rubbish that that man is spewing from his mouth, I’ll eat this table. I doubt that even his lawyer believes him, he’s just representing him for the money.”

The waitress brought over their plates of food and Harry felt a little better and he ate his simple, yet delicious tomato and basil pasta as he thought about everything that he’d been told. Once they were done eating, Richard checked his watch before he ordered them a cake and a coffee each.

“Only a few more hours to survive now, Harry. I doubt very much that it’ll go past three in the afternoon. You’ll be home in time to catch play time with your kids before they have their dinner and are put to bed. Did I get their routine right?”

Harry chuckled as he picked apart his iced bun. “Yeah, but the older five have a bath after their dinner and an hour of down time with their quiet toys before they have a story and then bed.”

“Is Braiden reading yet?” Richard asked with a wink.

Harry laughed. “No, but Tegan thinks that she can. It’s adorable.”

“You boys are doing so well.”

Harry smiled and finished off his bun and coffee before he stood up and stretched. Richard did the same, left a note on the table as a tip for their waitress and then he left, carrying his briefcase and leading Harry back to the court house.

“We’ll carry on much the same as we did before hand, so not a lot for you to do, but then I suppose that’s preferable to you, isn’t it?”

Harry nodded. “I just don’t want to make a fool of myself.”

“You won’t. You’re going to be just fine.”

They made it to the court building easily enough and they reclaimed their seats in the court and Richard set up all his folders and notes again and Harry watched him as he talked happily to some of the people milling around that he obviously knew, leaving Harry to settle himself and mentally prepare for the next few hours.

They passed quickly and very much exactly as that morning had gone. Richard asked questions, Vernon either called Harry a liar, a criminal or a violent delinquent or he remained silent when Richard poked holes in his declarations. He also remained silent when Richard slipped in odd, seemingly out of place repeated questions about Vernon keeping him locked in the cupboard or asking him why he never took him to the doctor or dentist, trying to get Vernon to slip up and admit to his guilt. Vernon was getting incredibly wound up and angry, but also increasingly more silent as Richard carried on, obviously afraid that he was going to say something to incriminate himself or his family. He obviously thought that silence was his best policy, Harry knew different, the truth was eventually going to come out and these unanswered questions were going to come back to bite him.

“I need an answer, Mister Dursley.” Richard said sternly. “These clothes are not fit for a little boy to be wearing. They are ill-fitting, dirty, ripped and full of holes. Why did you never give Harry his own clothes that did fit him properly and weren’t full of holes and tears? Clothes that would actually be able to protect him from the wind and rain? Harry’s teachers even told me that Harry never had any sort of coat or jacket, not even in the winter when it was snowing.”

Vernon used his favoured tactic of remaining silent and Richard sighed heavily so that everyone in the room could hear him.

“Can I assume then that this was yet another tactic to humiliate and subdue your already beaten down nephew?” He asked. “Coupled, of course, with you not spending so much as a penny on him?”

Vernon’s face, already red from Richard’s intrusive and unrelenting questioning and insinuations that he was an abusive monster, went almost purple. It must have been killing him on the inside to keep silent. He was not a man used to holding his tongue after all.

“We’ll go with that view then.” Richard said as he made a show of writing something down on the A4 notepad in front of him. “So, if you used ragged clothing as a way to humiliate Harry, if you allowed him to leave your home and wander around in these clothes, then why didn’t anyone notice? Why didn’t anyone call social services? You had neighbours, they must have had concerns, Mister Dursley and as Harry’s teachers all saw him without a coat, they must have had concerns, Mister Dursley and as Harry’s guardians they would have brought those concerns to you. What did you tell them?” Richard all but demanded.

Vernon infuriatingly stayed quiet. He hadn’t answered a single question in ten minutes now. Even Harry was getting frustrated and he was just sitting down and watching everything, he had no idea how Richard was holding himself back from leaping over the table and throttling Vernon to make him answer the questions, but it seemed that the Judge had finally had enough as well.

“We will leave the case here for today.” He said irritably, the permanent scowl on his face had deepened to something fiercer and more terrifying. “I would suggest that you instruct your client to answer the questions that he’s being asked, Mister Chorley.” He said, addressing the Dursleys’ lawyer. “Court is dismissed for the day, to be reconvened here tomorrow at nine in the morning. Perhaps an overnight break will help you remember to answer the questions asked of you, Mister Dursley.”

Harry bit his lip to keep from grinning as Vernon looked like he’d explode. He waited while Richard packed up his papers again and they left. This time for home. It was about two in the afternoon and he was very happy that he wouldn’t be missing much of his children’s routine. They’d just be waking up from their afternoon naps.

Richard Apparated him to his front garden again and Harry held on a bit longer than he usually would have.

“Thank you. For everything.”

“Are you going to hug me and thank me every time we come back from court? Myron might get jealous when I snatch you up and run away with you.”

Harry laughed and rubbed at his eyes. “Myron would kill you.”

“Harry, I’m planning on it.” Richard said with a naughty wink.

Harry grinned widely as he opened the front door and walked into his home, he stopped dead at the sight that greeted him. A naked Calix screeched happily from where he was sat in the hallway, a wooden spoon in his hand that he bashed excitedly on the wooden floor when he saw Harry walk in.

Harry just sighed and shook his head as he bent down and picked up his seventeen month old son. Obviously his mates couldn’t keep track of all of them at the same time and Calix, the usual suspect, had slipped away from his watchers, had stripped himself bare, had somehow managed to get a wooden spoon from the kitchen and get himself into the hallway with it without anyone even noticing. He wondered if it would be a good idea to wire every inch of the house up with monitor cameras.

“Mama, spoo.”

“Have you got a spoon?” Harry asked with a smile. “I bet you’ve been making lots of noise and having a lot of fun with that, haven’t you.”

“Is that you, Harry?”

“Yes. Why is Calix naked in the hallway playing with a wooden spoon?”

“What?”

Blaise came out of the living room and he just stared. He looked behind him into the living room and then looked back.

“Nasta!” He called out.

Nasta came down quickly from upstairs, a bit panicked until he saw them and he smiled when he saw Harry. He came to kiss him, resting a hand on his back comfortingly. Then he saw a naked Calix in Harry’s arms. It was hard to miss him when he bashed the top of Nasta’s head with the spoon in his hand.

“Spoo!” He called out with a grin.

“Why is he not wearing anything and where did he get a spoon?” Nasta asked even as he rubbed the top of his head.

“I have no idea. I can’t even find his clothes or his nappy.” Blaise replied, scratching his head in confusion.
Harry rolled his eyes and he went looking for Calix’s clothes before he had an accident.

“Get him a clean nappy.” He said as he handed Calix over to Nasta.

He went into the kitchen to see Max surgically wiping down his counters and cupboards. Calix’s clothes and nappy were in a strewn pile on the other side of the island.

“Hi Max.” Harry greeted happily.

“Harry, you’re earlier than I thought you’d be. Are you alright?”

“Completely fine, but would you mind explaining this?” Harry asked as he bent down and picked up the clothes and the nappy.

Max blinked and he came around the island.

“I have no clue. I couldn’t tell you how they got there. Calix was wearing that tee shirt though.”

Harry nodded. “Yep. He was naked in the hallway bashing around one of your wooden spoons when I came home.”

Max turned and opened a cupboard, pulling out a drawer, obviously looking for his wooden spoon.

“That sneaky little monster. He must have taken it after I’d washed it and before I’d put it away.”

“How the hell could he have crawled in here, stripped off all his clothes and his nappy, taken a wooden spoon, gone back into the hallway and started bashing it about without any of you noticing?”

“I love this part.” Richard said as he stood in the doorway grinning.
Harry huffed and he relaxed his shoulders. He breathed out a sigh and just let it go. He went into the living room and handed Nasta the little jeans and tee shirt, he took the spoon and handed it to Max, who had followed him.

“You might want to wash it again. It looks like he’s had it in his mouth.” Harry said when he saw the tiny teeth marks in the spoon.

“You little monkey.” Max said as he hunched down and dug his fingers into Calix’s belly.

Calix screeched and wriggled around, turning onto his belly to get away from Max’s fingers, even as Nasta tried to get him dressed.

“No, Dada.” Calix insisted with a giggle.

“Come on you, we need to get you dressed again. And here I thought that it was only Regan who didn’t like having his clothes on.” Nasta sighed.

Harry laughed happily and watched as Nasta wrestled a giggling Calix back into his clothes.

“Muma!”

Harry turned to smile at Farren who was in Draco’s arms. Harry took a reaching, grasping Farren and kissed Draco lovingly.

“He actually went down for a nap? Who’s such a good boy?!’ Harry turned to coo at Farren, who held Harry tight around the neck and refused to come out to look at him, which was unusual.

“He’s been grouchy all day, he even left some of his lunch.”

That concerned Harry as he turned to Farren, who just held him tighter and kept his head burrowed in Harry’s neck.

Harry sat down on the settee and he was even more concerned when Farren whined and stood up, a foot on either side of Harry’s hips, and kept his arms clamped around his neck, a wet face buried into the side of his neck.

“Farren, baby, are you okay?” Harry asked as he tried to get a look at him.

Nasta picked Farren up from behind and pulled him away and that’s when Farren started full out crying, rapidly working himself up to hysterical. Harry stood up quickly and he checked on Farren, checking how he looked, checking his temperature.

“I can’t see anything wrong with him.” He said. “Do you think we should get a Healer for him?” He asked.

“I think he just missed you.” Max said as he used his wand to check Farren over. “He seems fine as far as I can tell. There’s no temperature, no signs of injury or infection, he hasn’t hurt himself today, no bumped head…nothing.”

Harry took Farren back from Nasta and those arms wrapped tight around his neck again and Farren snuffled his face back into his collar. Harry cuddled him tightly and sat back on the settee and kicked his shoes off.

“So how was it?” Draco asked as Farren calmed down with Harry’s hand rubbing soothing circles on his back.

“He did wonderfully. Honestly, this case is going to be a long one, but it’s going in our favour and it’ll stay that way.” Richard said in a pleased tone of voice. “Harry was getting upset though, so you boys look after him and show him some love.”

With that bombshell, Richard said goodbye to them and flooed out of their home after catching Ave, Tegan, Leolin and Calix for a kiss.

“What did he mean?” Blaise asked. “What upset you?”

Harry sighed. “I knew they were going to do it, but hearing them paint me as a vicious, violent delinquent with mental problems was upsetting. They actually said that I was the one hitting and hurting them and that I intimidated them and that they were afraid of me! I just didn’t like it.”
“They won’t get away with lying in court.” Max assured him.

“The truth will come out and then you will have the justice that you deserve and that you need to move on and you can put it all behind you.” Nasta said soothingly. “When are you going back?”

Harry sighed. “Tomorrow. Nine in the morning. Vernon wasn’t being cooperative, he barely answered any questions at all and the ones that he did answer were all lies about me. That’s why we’re back early, I think even the Judge got fed up in the end.”

“That’s a very bad sign.” Max said. “For them I mean!” He clarified when Draco glared at him. “My Dad always said that silence is golden everywhere except in a courtroom and the bedroom.”

That startled a laugh from Harry. It was exactly something that Richard would say, though he couldn’t imagine Myron being very impressed with Richard for saying such a thing to their young children. It made him laugh harder.

“Have you had anything to eat?” Max asked.

Harry nodded. “I had pasta and a cake for lunch. I could do with tea and biscuits though.” He said with a wide eyed pleading look.

Max grinned, bent over and kissed him. “You don’t even need that look to get me to do anything you want.” He said huskily. “You just have to ask.”

“I know, I just like seeing your reaction when I do make that face.” Harry said with a wink.

Max laughed and Harry could sense that Nasta was rolling his eyes next to him. Harry looked at him and smiled.

“I saw that.” He said.

“Saw what?” Nasta asked.
“You rolling your eyes at me.”

“Impossible.” Nasta answered as he pulled Harry into his side.

“It’s my sixth sense. Some people can see dead people, others claim they’re psychic or that they’re seers. I know when you’re rolling your eyes at me.”

“Seems to me like you got the short end of the stick.” Blaise teased.

Harry shifted Farren, only for him to whine and clutch at him closer. He sighed.

“How bad has he been?”

“All of them have been calling out for you all day, but Farren wouldn’t let anyone else touch him and when we picked him up, he lashed out at us and started pushing us away. He had a tantrum at lunch and he refused to eat anymore of his food, so we took him upstairs for an early nap. He screamed for ten minutes, but he tired himself out and when we took the others up after they’d finished eating to put them in bed, he was fast asleep.” Draco told him.

Harry nodded as he carried on rubbing soothing patterns onto Farren’s back, even as he watched Calix zoom around the floor on his hands and knees, thankfully with his clothes and nappy still on this time.

“Where are Braiden and Regan?” He asked.

“Still napping. Leolin’s in the kitchen bassinet and Eva’s in that one by there, they’re still sleeping as well.”

Harry nodded as he watched Tegan stand up with her favourite penguin in hand and she pushed a book up onto the settee and hauled herself up after it. She sat down in the corner, penguin tucked meticulously into her side as she readjusted it several times before she was happy with its position and then she opened the book and started babbling aloud, reading the book to her penguin, whose eyes were facing the pictures of the book. Harry grinned as he watched her.
“She is so adorable.” He sighed lovingly.

“She hit Regan earlier.” Max said as he came back into the room.

“Really?” Harry asked in surprise.

Max nodded. “He tried to take one of the books off of her, so she swung it at him. It caught his thigh.”

“Bruised?” Harry asked and then nodded when Max did. “Alright, we can deal with that.”

Harry took a sip of tea and he bit into a biscuit. He used said biscuit to try and coax Farren out from his neck. It didn’t work as it always had before.

Harry tickled him instead and he kept at it when he heard Farren’s little giggles and huffs of air into his neck. Eventually, after twenty minutes of having Farren latched around his neck, his little son peeked out and Harry grinned at him, darting in to peck a kiss to his little drooly mouth. Farren laughed at that and he turned to face Harry, who was very happy to repeat the process.

Farren eventually sat on Harry’s lap, facing him of course, and was happy to play with him. Harry was very happy to see his lively boy back as he played with Farren, feeding him little broken pieces of biscuit.

Braiden and Regan woke up near enough within a minute of one another, Eva was brought out of the bassinet to wriggle around the floor and Leolin was handed to him when Farren was comfortable enough to wriggle himself onto the floor to play with Braiden and Calix.

“I didn’t like seeing him like that.” He told his lovers as he watched Farren laugh hysterically with Braiden as they built a tower only to repeatedly knock it over.

“This court case won’t last forever.” Nasta reminded him as he petting Leolin’s black hair softly.

“I know, but if he’s this distressed over me leaving for the day and if I have to go to court everyday now, then he’s going to be distressed all day, every day.” Harry said miserably.

“It won’t be every day.” Max said soothingly. “It’ll be four days a week, no weekends and it won’t be all day either. Like today it’ll be a couple of broken hours. We’ll get through this, Harry. We will. It’s going to be fine.”
Harry nodded even as he bit his lip nervously.

“Come here.” Blaise said as he moved to sit next to him. He pulled him into a hug and Harry smiled as he cuddled in with Leolin. “Everything is going to work out, you’ll see, Prezioso.”

Harry twisted onto his back and put his head in Blaise’s lap and his feet in Nasta’s as he cuddled Leolin on his chest. His little Faerie baby scowled at the movement but when he caught Harry’s green eyes, his golden ones lit up and he grinned gummily at him.

“Ma.” He chanted over and over until Harry kissed those tiny lips with a smile.

“I love you too, Leolin. You’re my special little boy and you are doing so fantastically well. Mummy and your Daddies are all very proud of you.

“Ma da.” He repeated and Harry nodded as he softly patted his nappy clad bottom.

“I’m going to go start their dinners.” Max said as he finished his tea and hefted his huge body out of his seat. “Maybe now that you’re here Farren will eat all of his food.”

“I hope so. It’s strange to hear that he hasn’t eaten everything in front of him.” Harry answered.

“Not as strange as knowing that you’ve eaten and I haven’t made it for you.” Max said.

“Your pasta is better.” Harry said with a smile. “You’ve ruined me for any other food. Even restaurant food isn’t as nice as yours.”

Draco and Blaise both scoffed and heckled at him.

“You suck up.” Blaise accused with a grin.

“I’m not sucking up, it’s true!” Harry said. “I really like Max’s cooking.”
“I love you.” Max said as he bent over him to give him a long, passionate kiss with lots of tongue. It only stopped when Max jumped and moved away carefully, Leolin’s hand was fisted tight in his hair, tugging hard.

Harry carefully lifted a hand to worm between Leolin’s tiny fingers. He freed Max’s hair and Max sighed in relief.

“Thanks, love.”

“Go while you still can.” Harry laughed.

Max grinned and patted Leolin’s back before he left for the kitchen happily, humming under his breath.

Harry laughed before he turned back to Leolin and cuddled him in tightly.

“When are Dain and Kailen coming back to see him?” He asked and he felt Nasta stiffen under him.

“I haven’t asked them.”

Harry sighed and dug the heel of his foot into Nasta’s leg.

“They’ve explained, Nasta. Not even you can hold such a thing against them. We’re all doing so well and the kids are coming to know them better too.”

Nasta said nothing and Harry sat up and snuggled back into his side. He kissed under his chin, feeling the scratch of his stubble against his skin which made him smile.

“They’re trying. They’re trying so hard, you need to try a little too. Please?”

Nasta grunted and Harry took what he could get. He passed Leolin over to Nasta and stood up and stretched before he settled himself back on the floor. He joined in a game with his children and he smiled as Ave crawled over his knee and Tegan put her book down to toddle over to him to play as It was loud, boisterous and Harry loved it as he laughed and played long with his beautiful, wonderful children. He’d missed them so much while he was at the court and he was upset that he’d have to do it all again tomorrow.

He really couldn’t wait for this all to be over and he could just hole himself up with his children and stay with them for as long as they needed him. He felt a lot more confident that the court case was going to go in his favour, Vernon hadn’t instilled any sense of fear in him with his continued silence on such important and telling questions. He just hoped that when it was his turn that he could answer all of the questions asked of him without making a complete fool out of himself. He knew that the trick was to take a moment to think his answer through first, to breathe and not let his mouth take over in a nervous, panicked ramble. He’d been practicing with Draco and he was feeling better about taking the stand, but it would not be an experience that he’d ever want to repeat.

Max called them to say that the kids’ dinners were ready and Harry stood up and clapped his hands.

“Come on babies, into the kitchen!” He called and he moved off, waiting to see if his kids followed him.

Braiden stood up and hurried to his side, as did Tegan. Calix crawled ahead of him and went right into the kitchen to meet Max and Farren stood himself up and toddled over.

Regan just stared at him however and Eva and Ave played with one another on the floor.

Draco scooped up Regan and Blaise took Eva and Ave and Harry moved off into the kitchen, where Max had already gotten Calix into his highchair and was waiting for the others.

“Baby exercise! No more being carried for you!” Max teased them as he hefted them up into their seats.

Farren and Braiden had now progressed to being in booster seats at the table, which gave them much more room to move and they liked it much better. Tegan and Regan hadn’t liked it at all and Calix had kept trying to slip himself out by standing up, which he could do more easily in a booster seat than in a highchair, so for safety, they’d kept him in his highchair for now.

Harry sat opposite Farren and Braiden and when Max put their little plates down, Farren looked at him with wide eyes and Harry picked up the little fork and filled it with food to offer to Farren, who grinned and ate happily, even as his older brother fed himself, a little awkwardly and clumsily, but nonetheless he could feed himself and he was improving all the time. Harry smiled as he watched all of his family in one room. He wanted this damn court case done and over with. He wanted more days like this.
Harry continued feeding Farren, but his attention was caught by Max, who was at the counter and he was peeling vegetables and chopping them up.

“Why are you starting dinner so soon?” He asked as he watched Farren eating his food.

“I’m doing a roast today. A nice family dinner. I know they’re one of your favourites.” Max answered.

Harry grinned at that, because it was true. He’d said something similar a long time ago. It made him happy to know that Max had remembered such a random piece of information.

“What meat?” He asked as his belly rumbled.

Max shot him a grin over his shoulder. “Beef. Nice and rare and tender, just how you like it.”

“He wouldn’t even give me a bit.” Blaise pouted. “He drove us all crazy slow cooking it all day and then he wouldn’t even let me try the tiniest piece!”

Harry laughed and even Nasta managed a smile as he fed Leolin a bottle at the counter adjacent to Max. He really loved days like these. He was going to make the absolute most of it before tomorrow, when he’d be back in court. His family deserved that much at least.

---

Chapter End Notes

A/N: It’s been a while, I know. I’ve been busy with my new fic, The Beguile and Devotion of a Black Heir. It has been going really well and I have it up to 6 chapters, so I decided to stop writing that one to get this chapter out for you all. Next up will be a chapter for Damaged Bodies and then back to Black Heir, so I have a full schedule in these next coming days, but I turn 25 in two days! So I’ll be taking that day off to myself, I want to catch up with my knitting projects and filling my belly with chocolate and cake and probably a take away and a film fest! I’m going to enjoy myself!

StarLight Massacre. X
A/N: A shout out to DJinTheHOUse who turned 18 in March.

Last Time

Harry laughed and even Nasta managed a smile as he fed Leolin a bottle at the counter adjacent to Max. He really loved days like these. He was going to make the absolute most of it before tomorrow, when he’d be back in court. His family deserved that much at least.

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

Chapter Ninety-Eight – Virulence

Harry’s much needed sleep had been completely disturbed by an unsettled Eva. She had been rudely woken up by her twin sister and she had not gone back to sleep, so at five in the morning Harry found himself downstairs, lounging on the settee in a half doze with his four month old daughter crawling all over him. She was grabbing and tugging on everything, particularly the drawstrings of his pyjama bottoms, which she found very interesting and had her utterly captivated.

She really hadn’t settled at all after her three in the morning feed and an hour and a half later, Harry had had enough and he’d gotten up, picked up a grizzling Eva and carried her down to lay with her on the settee, hoping that perhaps she’d settle down if she was in the living room. He’d been wrong, she wasn’t even settling down here as she was playing with everything that she could find, crawling over him and screeching when it got too quiet.

He sighed and kept his arm around her at all times so she didn’t fall or tumble from the settee and he closed his eyes for a minute. He didn’t get more than five minutes rest, he was just drifting off into another light doze, and then Eva started crawling all over him again and a dribbly mouth was lowered to his chin and started sucking.

Harry groaned and unlatched Eva and tucked her back into his side and tried to keep her still. She was moving before he’d even settled his body back down to try and get some more sleep.

“Allright, I’m up.” He sighed as he sat up to Eva’s excited screeches and giggles. “I suppose it doesn’t matter to you that I’m in court today, does it, missy?”

He got up and went into the kitchen to make himself a coffee. He needed the extra boost to wake himself up. He was nervous enough as it was about the coming court proceedings without piling on lack of sleep as well, but unfortunately he was a Mother to eight very young babies, sometimes it “What time were you up?” Blaise asked as he came in with a whining Ave flung over his shoulder.

“Don’t ask.” Harry grumbled as he gulped down the coffee.

When Blaise realised what he was drinking he sighed and took Eva from him.

“What have you done to your Mummy?” He asked her and she giggled and reached out for a lock of hair that had been twisted and flattened where Blaise had been sleeping on it. “Have you had any sleep?”

“A bit.” Harry answered around a yawn.

“Go back up now, I’ll stay down here with these two.” Blaise said as he put them both down into their bassinets to make up two bottles of milk for them.

“Thanks for the offer, Blaise. But I don’t think I could sleep now anyway. I tried to get my head down on the settee, but Eva wasn’t having any of it. So I’m just wide awake.”

Blaise sighed as he shook up the first bottle for Ave before he pulled their youngest child back into his arms from her bassinet and offered her the cooled milk.

“You can’t go to court when you’re exhausted, Prezioso.”

“I’m going to have to, Blaise. I said all along that my children will always come first, even before this court case. It’s bad enough that Farren misses me so much when I’m gone without ignoring them all when I’m at home too.”

“You should have given Max a kick. He was on baby duty last night.”

Harry smiled. “He did grumble a bit and it seemed like he was getting up, but after getting up twice to check on her and finding out that she didn’t actually want or need anything he just stayed asleep.
afterwards. After about an hour and a half of her continuous grizzling and gurgling, I’d had enough and I brought her down here because she was starting to disturb Nasta and he has work today. The last thing I need is to spend the day worrying in court because Nasta went to work with those damn dragons while half asleep.”

“So you’d rather go to court half asleep yourself?”

Harry smiled and nodded. “At least I can’t be bitten in half or burnt to a cinder while in court.”

Blaise rolled those indigo eyes at him, but said no more as Harry swallowed the last few gulps of hot coffee and shook up the bottle for Eva, who was still whinging and fussing in her bassinet.

He picked her up and snuggled her into his chest, before laying her into the crook of his arm and he fed her as Blaise burped Ave and settled her down before making two new cups of coffee.

“Nasta will kill me if I drink that.” Harry said with a wide grin.

Blaise winked. “Do you care?”

Harry laughed. “No, I could do with a spanking, it might wake me up.”

Blaise smothered a loud laugh. “You’d be better off going to Draco then.”

“He’d just complain through the whole thing this early in the morning.” Harry said. “It wouldn’t be as fun.”

Blaise just shook his head and drank his unsweetened, black cup of coffee in several gulps. He’d try to drink as many as possible before Nasta woke up and then try (and fail) to convince him that he’d only had the one.

He had drained his first cup in just five large swallows before he made up his second cup.

Harry picked up his own second cup of coffee and sipped at it, slumping down in his chair and he tried determinedly to convince his brain that it was a good idea to wake up and stay awake.

“Let’s go into the living room, Bello.” Blaise said as he picked up Eva and carried her and his new cup of coffee into the living room. Harry picked up Ave and followed him, settling the girls onto the floor and collapsing onto the settee to snuggle with Blaise and his coffee.

They watched in contented silence as the girls crawled slowly around the floor, playing with some of the soft, stuffed toys that Blaise had scattered about for them. They babbled to one another and screeched and giggled and Harry smiled softly as he watched them. They were much more active now that the floor space wasn’t taken over by their five older, more mobile, siblings.

“I love mornings like this.” He admitted.

“Even with the lack of sleep?” Blaise asked with a smirk.

Harry nodded. “Yes, even with the lack of sleep.”

“Let’s make it even better then. I’ll go see if any of the others are up.”

“Didn’t you bring down the baby monitors?” Harry asked curiously.

“I wasn’t planning on staying up. Then I smelt coffee and I had to have one.” Blaise winked.
“Besides, Calix and Leolin never cry when they wake up. They just lie there in their cots until someone comes to get them.”

Harry stayed on the settee as Blaise went to collect any awake babies and to get the baby monitors from their bedside table.

He came down with his arms full to bursting. Harry laughed and he stood to pluck an unhappy, wriggling Calix from Blaise’s arms and his mate happily put Regan and Farren on the floor.

“Damn kids will be the death of me.” Blaise groaned as he massaged his back before collapsing back onto the settee. He pulled Harry back to perch on his lap.

Harry kissed him and settled in with Calix, who may have been awake, but he wasn’t fully awake just yet as Harry cradled him in his arms between his and Blaise’s chests. He was curled into a sleepy ball and was very happy to be cuddled between them.

They stayed cuddled together for over twenty minutes as Calix rested his ear against Harry’s chest and he yawned with his tiny, pouted mouth, rubbing at his jet black eyes with tiny fists and just resting as he woke up very slowly between them.

“This one is definitely one of the cuter ones.” Blaise said with a laugh as he watched Calix as his eyes and nose crinkled up with another adorable yawn.

Harry hummed sleepily.

“He looks just like you, like this.” Blaise carried on. “All sleepy and curled up like this. It’s obvious that he’s copied you with that behaviour.”

Harry smiled and lifted a hand to pull Blaise’s head down to his lips for a passionate kiss.

“Hey, hey, hey! Where’s mine?”

Harry broke apart from Blaise and grinned at Max, who was far, far too awake and alert for Harry’s liking.

“Come here.” Harry answered.

Max bent to kiss him, but Blaise grabbed his head and snogged Max first. Harry burst out laughing and was even more amused when he heard little babies joining in.

Max broke apart slowly from Blaise before he turned to him and Harry closed his eyes as Max’s lips touched his in a slow, very passionate kiss.

Harry was breathing heavily when they finally broke apart.

“What was that rule we made? Don’t start something if you aren’t going to finish it!” Harry panted.

“Oh, love. I’d take you upstairs right now, kick Nasta and Draco out of the bed and utterly ruin you, but unfortunately these little kids need their breakfasts.”

Harry groaned and let his head loll back over Blaise’s arm. Calix giggled and clapped his little hands together.
“Are both of my boys awake?” Max exclaimed in false shock as he took hold of Calix’s tiny hands and wiggled him, making his whole body shake. He made a noise and Max wiggled him harder and Calix stopped his noise to take a breath and he burst out laughing and just like that, he was wide awake as he lifted his arms up to Max and clenched his little hands.

“Dada ma, up.”

Max picked Calix up and kissed him before he slung his son over his shoulder like a sack of potatoes and tickled him.

“What are you two doing up anyway? I was on the night shift.”

“I got up with Eva.” Harry said.

“She was a damn pain all night. She didn’t want to sleep at all after her bottle, she kept pulling on my hair and screeching.” Max complained. “I finally got her to sleep at three and then Ave woke her back up again! I think she fell asleep again after that because I didn’t hear her again.”

“No.” Blaise answered. “Harry brought her down here and he’s been down here since.”

Max sighed. “Harry, you’re in court today. She would have fallen asleep eventually.”

“It was an hour and half after you’d fed her. I couldn’t take it anymore, so I brought her down. I thought that maybe she’d settle down here, but she never.”

“I’ll get you a Pepper-up potion. It’ll help keep you more alert at least. Better than that coffee.” Max nodded to the cups on the coffee table and winked. “I won’t tell Nasta, but each of you owes me a favour.”

“Why do I get the feeling that those favours are sexual in nature?” Blaise asked.

“Because we know him too well.” Harry said with a laugh. “Max’s favours are always, always, sexual in nature.”

“I’d rather tell Nasta myself.” Blaise laughed.

“Tell me what?” Nasta’s gruff voice came from just beyond the door. Nasta walked into the living room, gloriously bare chested, with Leolin in his arms.

“Harry’s been awake since three in the morning.” Blaise said quickly.

Max burst out laughing and Nasta looked from one to the other in sleepy confusion. His gaze landed on Harry.

“Why have you been awake since three? I thought you were better now with the anxiety of court.”

“I am. Eva wouldn’t settle, so I brought her down to see if she’d settle down here.”

“Did she?” Nasta asked.

Harry shook his head. “No.”

“You were on the night feeds.” Nasta turned to Max.

“I fed her at three, she fell asleep, but when I fed Ave she didn’t fall asleep right away, so she woke Eva back up, fell asleep herself, but then Eva was awake and wouldn’t settle and she wouldn’t sleep. My plan was to just leave her to fall asleep on her own.”

“I left her for an hour and a half before I brought her down. She wasn’t settling and she was starting to get louder. She was starting to disturb you and I didn’t want you to wake up when you’re in work today.” Harry insisted.

“How is she now?”
“She’s still not settling.” Harry answered as he looked to Eva wriggling around on her belly. “She’s been awake all night and she’s still wriggling around.”

“She’ll be Draco’s problem today.” Max said with a grin.

“You watch, I’ll go off to court and leave her with Draco and she’ll sleep all bloody day.” Harry said with a smile as he watched Eva crawl over to Farren and flump onto his legs.

Farren laughed and touched her hair gently. He’d been getting much better lately with ‘gentle hands’ as they practiced with teddies, getting him to stroke them instead of just slapping at them or hitting. Harry watched him with a soft smile and he felt so proud of him as Farren petted Eva like one of the teddies and Eva burred as she lounged in his lap.

“She isn’t tired at all.” Max said with a shake of his head.

Calix wriggled in his arms and his little legs kicked out, trying to get down so Max dropped him to his feet and then down onto his bum. Calix set off immediately to the pile of toys and he started ‘talking’ to Regan.

“You’ve got a few hours, why don’t you go and sleep now?” Nasta said as he came to sit next to him. Leolin was scowling sleepily in his arms.

“I don’t think I’d be able to sleep at the moment, Nas and if I did, having a few hours’ sleep will likely make me feel worse in the long run. It’s only for a few hours and then I’ll be back home.”

Nasta sighed and bent forward to kiss Harry’s forehead. This tilted Leolin and he caught sight of Harry and his scowl immediately morphed into a grin.

“Ma!” He called out demandingly, a tiny little hand raising to reach out to him.

Harry, who had opened his mouth to ask Max to put the kettle on, let the breath out with a sigh and he grinned.

“Good morning, Leolin.” Harry said.
“Bore da, Leolin.” Nasta repeated, as he did every morning.

“Bo da.” Regan copied from the floor and the four of them just looked at him.

“Did he just…?” Blaise asked softly.

“Yeah. Your language lessons really work, Nasta.” Harry said with a proud grin.

“Of course, babies learn through repetition.” Nasta told him as he handed Leolin over to Harry and went to kiss and cuddle with his firstborn son.

Harry watched as Nasta started murmuring to Regan in Welsh and he turned his attention back to Leolin in his arms.

“Hello, Leolin.” He said with a wide smile, watching as Leolin’s mouth stretched wide to copy him.

“Ma! Ma!”

“Oh, I know, you’re excited to see me.” Harry cooed to him as he nuzzled that little face.

Leolin burbled softly and gripped tight at Harry’s hair, but he didn’t mind as he allowed his Faerie baby to tug and pull on his hair.

“No, just leave him.” Harry said as he kissed at Leolin’s face, making him giggle.

A cry came through the baby monitor and Blaise groaned, standing up to go and collect Tegan from her wooden prison.

Harry sat back up when Leolin yawned and his tiny hands slipped through Harry’s hair. He tucked his boy against his chest and watched his family, well…most of it, squirm around the floor. He couldn’t believe that Eva was still awake and active, he felt like he could sleep for a week.

Blaise came back into the room with their two missing babies, Tegan and Braiden, both of whom were snuggled into Blaise’s neck.

“Draco is dead to the world. He is not moving.” Blaise said with a grin.

“Is he sick?” Harry asked immediately, sitting up in worry.

“No.” Blaise shook his head. “I made sure to check thoroughly. He’s just being lazy and there’s nothing up there to disturb him now.”

“I’ll wake him up when I go into work, you and Nas will be gone before me.” Max said as he came back into the living room and hefted up Farren. “Their breakfasts are ready and Leolin’s bottle is cooling.”

Harry nodded as he stood up and went into the kitchen. He took control of Leolin’s feed, sitting down at the table and watching the chaos as two grown men tried to wrangle five babies into eating smooth porridge with banana pieces. Blaise had stayed in the living room to watch over Eva and Ave.

Harry shook his head slowly before he gave his attention back to Leolin, who was staring at him as he suckled on his bottle.

“Hello, love. How are you this morning?” He asked quietly as his Faerie baby suckled his milk. “I’m alright today, a little tired because your little sister, Eva, kept me awake for half the night. She didn’t understand that it was sleep time and not play time, but I’ve got to go to court today, so I won’t see much of you or your brothers and sisters, but I will be back later on and I’ll give you some more cuddles then.”

Leolin suckled steadily and Harry smiled at him as he watched, looking up now and then just to watch his mates as they fed his older children their porridge.

“Pracorn.” Braiden told them, looking at the three of them. “Mama, want pracorn.”

“The hell is a pracorn?” Max asked with furrowed eyebrows.
Harry shook his head. He hated this language barrier between him and his children. Sometimes he could pick out words, other times he could work out what they meant, but every so often they would say something that completely stumped him.

“Let me ask Blaise.” Harry said as he took a happily fed Leolin back into the living room.

He winded his Faerie baby, a practiced hand avoiding the tiny, fragile wings before he sat him down on his special beanbag chair.

“Blaise, Braiden’s asking for pracorns, does that make any sense to you?”

Blaise scrunched up his face. He shook his head and Harry sighed.

“That means absolutely nothing to me.” He admitted. “Pracorns?”

Harry nodded and watched as Eva and Ave shuffled around the living room floor.

“Could he mean popcorn?” Blaise suggested. “But then, who would have given him popcorn?”

“He might have just heard us talking about it. Hold on, let me check.”

Harry went back out into the kitchen and he saw that Braiden was still asking for pracorns.

“Braiden, sweetie, do you want popcorn?” He asked clearly.

Braiden pouted at him. He shook his head, sending his black hair flying. “No, Mummy, pracorns.”

Harry sighed. “Blaise suggested that he might have heard us mentioning popcorn, he’s out of ideas.”
“I can’t even think what pracorns are.” Max sighed. “I’ve been running through everything that I’ve given them and nothing is similar.”

“Maybe it’s not something that you’ve given to them.” Nasta suggested. “Get his book out.”

Max blinked and then he went to his counter and pulled open one of the drawers, getting out one of the five books that they kept to track what they’d tried the babies on. He already had two blank books ready for Eva and Ave when they tried something other than formula milk.

Max groaned and thumped his head against the cupboard door.

“The last entry, Draco took Braiden to his parents’ house and tried him on prawns. He loved them so much that Narcissa gave him a small bowl to himself and he scoffed them. He want’s prawns!”

“Is that what you want?” Harry cooed to Braiden. “You want prawns?”

Braiden clapped his hands and grinned. “Want pracorns!”

“Well, I guess I know what I’m doing for lunch.” Max said with a grin.

“Do we even have prawns here?” Harry asked.

“No, I’ll go out and get some before I have to go to work.” Max told him.

“You’re only in as an overseer today, aren’t you?” Harry asked him.

“Yeah, two in the afternoon until six.” Max grimaced. “Damn newbies. They’re never as good as they think they are and they always, always, mess something up. I need to be sharp and catch their mistakes before they make them.”

“Be careful.” Harry told him seriously and Max smiled, coming to pull him into a hug.
“You know that I will be. I’ve been doing this job for far too long. I can almost predict what mistakes they’ll make just from looking at them.”

“Pracorns!” Braiden demanded from his booster seat, hitting the table with his hands, and the three of them looked at him.

“Surely he can’t still be hungry.” Harry fretted.

“Hold on.”

Max went to the counter and ripped a small bunch of grapes off of the larger bunch. He washed them, dried them and then pulled out all of the stalks and cut them in half, digging out any seeds in the supposedly seedless grapes as he did so.

He gave a handful to each baby and Farren immediately dug in and after staring at the grape halves for a moment, so did Braiden. Calix was the only one who didn’t touch his grapes as he tried to escape the confines of his highchair, tugging on the straps over his shoulders and around his waist.

“Alright, alright. Come here.” Max sighed as he unclipped Calix and picked him up. “You want to go off on your travels again, don’t you?”

Max had to put Calix down when he all but wriggled out of his shirt to reach the floor. As soon as he was down, Calix was off, racing on his hands and knees towards the passageway.

“He has so much energy. I was thinking of taking them to a farm or a zoo, one of the little local ones, just so they can run around for a few hours.” Nasta said as he watched Calix bang against the front door with his hand.

“The next time that we’re all off, then.” Harry nodded his agreement.

Draco came down the stairs and Calix screeched in happiness at seeing him. Draco swung him up and kissed his mouth before murmuring to him.

“Is he trying to make his escape again?”
Harry grinned. “Yeah. He didn’t want his after breakfast grapes.”

Draco chuckled sleepily and sat down at the table and held Calix on his lap, nuzzling his brown hair and resting his sharp chin on the top of his little head.

“Daddy, pracorns.” Braiden insisted as he looked at Draco.

“It’s prawns, Braiden.” Draco corrected. “You can’t have prawns for breakfast.”

“He’s having them for lunch.” Max said as he put a cup of tea in front of Draco and kissed his forehead.

“My Mother gave me prawn sandwiches and Braiden kept picking them out and eating them.”

“It’s about time that we tried them on seafood.” Harry said as he cleaned up Regan’s hands.

“You need to start getting ready.” Nasta told him.

Harry groaned. “I know.”

Checking on his babies one last time, he went upstairs for a shower and he got dressed in his smart suit. He checked on himself in the mirror as he tried to comb his hair into some semblance of order. Once he deemed himself as presentable as he could get, he went back down the stairs, where Max had a cup of tea, a plate of toast and a pepper up potion waiting for him.

“Just remember that it’s only for a few hours.” Max told him as he pulled him forward to kiss his forehead softly.

Harry nodded as he nibbled on his toast, just watching as his mates got themselves ready for their own day. Nasta had already changed into his dragonhide work clothes that offered more protection against burns, though not by much, and he was eating his own toast standing up as he looked over their schedule.
“What time are you looking to be back, Blaise?” He asked.

“Early afternoon.” Blaise answered. “I want to be home before Harry is and to give Draco a little break.”

“So you’ll be back around the same time that Max leaves for work?”

Blaise nodded. “I’m aiming to be, but I could run over a little.”

“I don’t know when I’ll be back.” Harry said. “It seems to differ every day.”

“You don’t worry.” Nasta told him. “We know that your court days are going to be a little unpredictable and we’re prepared for it.”

Harry smiled as he drank his tea before he downed the Pepper-up potion. He trailed his hand over Blaise’s back as he walked past him, leaving the kitchen for the living room, where Draco was watching seven babies at play, Leolin was just watching, a teddy tucked into his arms and he was frowning at all of his siblings as they screeched, giggled and played.

At a year and a half old, he was still so very tiny. It was no lie when they observed that Eva and Ave, their four month old girls, were almost bigger and heavier than he was. It seemed preposterous, inconceivable, that Leolin, who was the size of a four month old baby, was still solely on milk and slept for most of the time, was actually seventeen months old and rapidly closing in on his second birthday.

His little Faerie baby still didn’t have any teeth, wasn’t speaking outside of his two word vocabulary, which was apparently an unheard of achievement according to Dain and Kailen, and he was not at all mobile past gripping objects that were handed to him or occasionally reaching up a hand to touch someone’s face.

His severe illness last September, which had lasted until the end of November, had not helped his development at all. Those eleven weeks in the hospital, on the brink of death, had set Leolin back months in his development, but arguably, Harry was just glad that he was alive.

Of course Draco was sat on the floor, brushing hair as he clamped a very unhappy Ave onto his lap to try and tug a comb through the gorgeous, chestnut curls that she and her twin shared.

“Having trouble?” He inquired with a grin.

Draco huffed and let Ave go, their daughter made a very quick escape, which only made Harry laugh more.

“Those two are impossible.” Draco complained. “I’ve never known any baby to fight against having their hair combed as much as those two.”

“Take it as a sign that they’ll be tomboys and leave them be.” Harry suggested. The glare he got for that remark made his grin widen further.

He kissed all of his babies and got a cuddle from Regan before he called out his goodbyes and he flooed over to Myron and Richard’s home by himself. He was confident enough to walk from the receiving room to the kitchen, where he found Myron and Richard locked in a passionate embrace, snogging. Myron’s large hand was slipping dangerously low on Richard’s back while the other one was cradling the entire of the back of Richard’s skull.

He wolf whistled and then laughed when they broke apart to look at him.

“You’re early.” Myron said with a hint of resignation that Harry had caught him in such a compromising position.

“I annoyed Draco by implying that Eva and Ave were tomboys, so I made a hasty getaway.” Harry grinned.

Richard matched his grin and came to hug him tight, kissing the top of his head.

“You’re not angry that I came over, are you?” He asked, knowing that the answer was no and would always be no.

“Of course not.” Myron said as he took Harry from Richard and held him tightly, pressing his own lips to Harry’s forehead. “You’re always welcome here, always.”

“Alayla slept over her Granddad’s last night. So we’ve just been having a bit of fun with the house to ourselves.” Richard said with an exaggerated wink.

“And suddenly I’m afraid to sit down or touch anything.” Harry joked with a suspicious look to the kitchen table.
Richard’s laugh filled the kitchen as Myron scowled.

“I have no idea what you do in your own kitchen, but in this house no such thing has occurred!” Myron told him.

“That he knows about.” Richard added in a stage whisper and another wink.

That made Harry laugh again as Myron just looked at his Husband, trying to figure out if he was joking or not.

“You had better be joking.” He added when he couldn’t determine if Richard was or wasn’t.

Richard just smiled innocently. If such a devilish look could be considered innocent.

“I mean it!” Myron insisted sternly.

“You sound so much like Max.” Harry said with a smile. “Or would that be he sounds just like you?” He added thoughtfully. “The idea of anyone doing anything like that in his kitchen fills him with horror and dread.”

“So it should. It isn’t sanitary.” Myron insisted.

“He’s no fun at all.” Richard sighed wistfully. “It seems like my baby boy isn’t as much fun either.”

“Oh no, Max is very fun…just not in the kitchen.” Harry said with a grin.

“Enough of this topic.” Myron demanded. “How are my grandchildren?”

“Good…really good in fact. Braiden’s crying for prawns for breakfast, Calix wouldn’t eat his grapes and Eva had me up at three in the morning because she wouldn’t sleep and I stayed with her downstairs all night.”
“And that’s considered really good?” Richard asked with raised eyebrows.

“Yes, because I’m not the one at home for the next several hours.” Harry said with a wide grin.

Myron just sighed heavily, as if put upon and he didn’t know what to do with either of them, but Richard laughed happily.

“You’ve started taking after me!” He said proudly as he pulled Harry back into his arms for a hug.

“Merlin help us all.” Myron complained as he picked up his coffee mug and took a swig.

“You love him and you know it!” Richard challenged him.

Myron smiled softly then, those black eyes glittering with love and affection.

“Of course I do, however that doesn’t mean that I have to put up with any behavioural issues from any of you.”

“What are we, dogs?” Richard demanded.

The look on Myron’s face then was utterly sinful, and Harry, and too late Richard, realised that Myron had baited Richard into saying just that, leading him expertly into his word trap.

“I don’t wish to know about our children’s sex lives, but you were definitely on your hands and knees last night, dear.”

Harry had to clutch at his ribs and crouch down on his knees because he was laughing so hard at Richard’s stunned look.

“Be good now while I’m in work or I’ll have to collar you out in the garden.” Was Myron’s parting shot as he sent Richard a smirk over his shoulder as he left for work.
That got Richard moving. “No! You come back here right now!” Richard shouted through the house, storming after his Husband.

Harry had to crawl to a chair and sit in it before he started rolling on the floor in a bid to release all of his laughter.

“I can’t believe him!” Richard said as he came back into the kitchen as Harry was wiping his damp eyes, obviously having failed in his attempt to catch up to Myron before he flooed out of the house.

“That was hilarious.” Harry said as he finished wiping his face of tear tracks and calmed his breathing, letting out a soft, almost girlish giggle that he couldn’t entirely suppress.

Richard shook his head and smiled himself. He drained his own cup of coffee and then put his and Myron’s mugs into the sink.

“Come on, son.” Richard pulled him up and into a hug and then, with the tight squeezing sensation of Apparation, they found themselves behind their usual café and a short walk from the court.

As to their usual routine, they went into the café and ordered coffees to go and then they made their way to the court.

“You said that you’d been up at three?” Richard prompted.

“Yeah, with Eva. She had her three O’clock feed and went to sleep, but Ave woke her back up again and after that she just didn’t settle again. Max got up twice to check on her, but after that he just left her and stayed asleep. I was lying awake just listening to her wriggling around, I couldn’t sleep and after a while it just got frustrating, it was more annoying to lie in bed listening to her grizzling and burbling, so I took her downstairs hoping that she’d settle down there, only she never. So really I have been awake since three.”

“I’ll try and keep today as brief as possible then.” Richard told him gently.

“Max gave me a pepper-up before I left and the coffee is helping a little. I want to do this. I will do this.” He said determinedly.
Richard smiled at him proudly and he placed a hand on his shoulder as they made it to the courtroom and Harry sat back down in the seat that was his and he drank some more of his coffee. He refused to look to his right, to the Dursleys who were talking in hushed voices with their lawyer.

“Right, are you feeling okay?” Richard asked him.

Harry nodded with a smile. “I’m okay. A little anxious to just get it all over and done with, but other than that, I just wish it would start.”

“It won’t be long.” Richard said with a glance to his watch. “A couple more minutes. Just remember that I’m here for you and you alone, and I won’t let anything happen to you. Not ever.”

Harry smiled at him. “I know. Thank you for being here and for taking my case.”

“Of course I did, love. You’re my son and after hearing and seeing everything that you’ve been through...there’s no way that I would have let those beasts get away with what they’ve done to you. One way or another they’ll be punished.”

Harry understood the meaning behind that as his mind floated back to what Myron had once told him. If the Dursleys, by some miracle, were found not guilty, then he’d go after them himself and he’d kill them so that they wouldn’t get away with what they’d done to him.

The Dursleys had better pray that they got sent to prison and that they went down for long enough to appease Richard and Myron, because if they didn’t, then they would be meeting a very angry, adult Dracken and Myron was not a small Dracken at that. He was the tallest person that Harry knew outside of Hagrid, who was actually a half giant, and he had the shoulders to go with it. Anyone would choose prison over going up against a murderously angry Myron, even the Dursleys, as dull and self-serving as they were.

The next couple of hours of his life were painful and frustrating as he had to sit through another session of Vernon Dursley’s complete and utter lies about him. His hands were clenched under the table and he was sure that he was glaring holes into the table top as he was forced to sit silently and listen to the filth that was being spewed about him.

He didn’t know why he’d thought that he’d be tired in the court room, the anger that he felt ate away all of his previous feelings of exhaustion and kept him breathing hard and clenching his fists and jaw
“So, let me test my understanding here, Mister Dursley.” Richard said in such a sceptical tone that Harry’s lips twitched. “You believe that your nephew, Harry, was being made even more dangerous than you already perceived him, by his boarding school?”

“He was a danger to everyone near him.” Vernon raged, going decidedly red in the face and panting like a wounded rhinoceros.

“So you put bars on his window and locks on his door so that he was essentially a prisoner in his tiny room?”

“I had to take measures to protect my family!” Vernon blustered, trying to argue a valid reason for why he’d put bars and locks on an eleven, twelve year old’s bedroom.

“From a short, skinny twelve year old boy?” Richard asked in such a way as to imply that Vernon was deranged. “This picture, Mister Dursley, clearly shows the room that you kept Harry in.”

Harry looked to the screen that was showing his neat and orderly bedroom for the court. The tiny, bare bed, the battered wardrobe and dresser, the scrubbed clean carpet and all of Dudley’s old, broken toys littered around.

“It looks pretty normal, besides the bed that is obviously too small for a boy of Harry’s age and height at the time.”

Harry hid his smile. He knew what was going to happen next as Vernon puffed himself up and declared about the price of taking in a boy that wasn’t his own and providing as much as he could for him.

“Oh yes, I can readily see your sacrifice when I compare this bare, little room to the rest of your house. Though, after seeing the cupboard that you locked him in, we decided that we needed a closer look at things in his bedroom, so we asked the investigating police to rip up the carpet when we smelt cleaning fluid in Harry’s little room.”

Harry watched with vicious satisfaction as Vernon went pale.
“You see, the thing about cleaning fluid is, it cleans up the surface stain a real treat so nothing can be seen at first glance, but blood and other things leak through carpets to stain the floorboards underneath and cleaning fluid doesn’t get down that far as it’s always absorbed by the carpet fibres.”

The next picture that came onto the large TV made several people in the room gasp. The picture showed the rust brown spots on the bare wooden floorboards with the yellow numbered plaques beside them. There were twenty-two of the rust brown stains and seeing the picture blown up on a big screen made it seem all the worse to Harry as he stared at the blooded floor, particularly the very large stain in the one corner.

“These blood stains have all been dated by independent forensic specialists, you should all have had a copy of their report. These patches range from nineteen-ninety to nineteen-ninety-six. When Harry was between the ages of ten and sixteen, which is the age that he left the Dursley residence for good.”

“He was clumsy.” Vernon growled. “Always hurting himself! Tell them, boy!”

Richard’s face went ice cold while Harry’s heart missed a beat as everyone turned to look at him.
Richard moved to stand in front of him.

“You will not intimidate my client in this court!” Richard hissed angrily. “My client is a man in therapy for what you have done to him. He is the little child that you hurt and abused throughout his life and I will not allow you to intimidate him or pressure him to lie in this court by shouting at him and frightening him.”

There was silence for a moment afterwards and Richard broke it by moving back to his briefcase and his papers and he smartened them up by snapping the edge of the pages against the table.

“Did you know, Mister Dursley, that threatening or intimidating someone in court carries a maximum five year prison sentence?” Richard asked calmly. “My client is not on the stand, you are. Now, answer the question without frightening my client. Where did all this blood come from?”

“He was clumsy.” Vernon answered, looking everywhere but at Harry or Richard.

“He was clumsy. So your nephew, Harry, would…what? Give me an example.” Richard insisted.
Vernon blustered for a minute or two before he stumbled out a very unconvincing lie about him tripping over and landing on things, like a garden rake. Harry clenched his hand into a tight fist, Vernon remembered the rake incident then and the man damn well knew that he hadn’t tripped over and fallen on it.

He had obviously not covered this with his lawyer, having not expected the photos of the bare floorboards covered in blood stains, this had rattled him and that was good for them if Richard could take advantage of this situation.

“He’d fall down the stairs or he’d jam his fingers in the doors!” Vernon added.

“And you think that we believe that a fall down the stairs or jamming his finger in a door or a drawer would make all of those bloodstains? We even found urine stains on those floorboards, where you’d locked him up for so long that Harry had wet himself.”

“He was a freak!” Vernon exploded. “He was dangerous and abnormal! He was likely wetting himself and cutting himself in his room of his own volition!”

“Oh, so Harry wetting himself had nothing to do with the several locks on his door preventing him from leaving his room to get to the bathroom?” Richard demanded.

Harry couldn’t look up as he was sure that his face was burning with embarrassment. He wanted the floor to open up and swallow him whole. He knew that it was going to be brought up, everything that had ever been said or had happened to him was going to be brought up in this court case, but that didn’t mean that he liked hearing about it or that he wanted a room full of people to know about it.

He didn’t relish being called a freak again either. He hadn’t even heard that word in a year or more and having it suddenly flung at him again, like a barbed weapon, had made him automatically flinch. It was as if he’d never been away from them, as if the last three years hadn’t even happened and he’d never been away from them as his shoulders tried to hunch in to protect himself.

He forced his back straight and jutted his chin up. He would not be afraid. He would not cower away from them any longer. They couldn’t hit or hurt him at all here, not only would it destroy their own court case, but Richard would never let them. He fully trusted that Richard would protect him, because he trusted Richard implicitly.

When Vernon devolved into screaming and blustering until he was purple in the face and Richard couldn’t even get a word in edge ways, let alone ask a question, the court was suspended for an hour long lunch.

Harry stood up and allowed Richard to escort him out and back to the café and he was smiling grimly in satisfaction. Harry guessed that to mean that despite the fact that he hadn’t been able to ask many questions, things were going really well.

Harry ordered chicken and vegetable wraps for his lunch, along with a glass of cloudy apple juice and he sat quietly as Richard tore into his own lunch while making marks and notations on his court papers.

“Things are looking much better.” Richard finally said, leaning back from his notes with satisfaction. “I knew that once I wound that man up then he’d explode and show the court that volatile nature that you told me about and now that the court has seen it, they can’t unsee it.”

Harry smiled then as he realised that it had all been a game play by Richard to prove that Vernon was a bad tempered man who didn’t take criticism well. Harry replayed the last three hours and he realised that Vernon had shown his true colours. Or rather just the one, purple. He’d shouted and raged and at the end, just before the lunch break, he’d been shouting so loudly that Richard hadn’t even been able to talk. It looked bad for the Dursleys.

“We’ve proven today that Dursley is an irrational man and one that’s easily driven to anger.” Richard said happily as he made a last notation with a flourish. “This case is in the bag.”

Harry was happy to hear that and he ate the cake that Richard had ordered for him along with another cup of coffee.

“How much is Nasta going to kill me if I get you another coffee to go?” Richard asked thoughtfully, as if considering his options.

Harry grinned. “While I’m in court? He won’t even scowl at you. I get anything I want at the moment, he even let me stuff myself full of chocolate the other day and he said that it’s going to become a new monthly ritual and he won’t say anything. He even joined in!”

“Yeah, he was only eating dark chocolate, but still, he didn’t say a word about me or Max, Draco and Blaise eating anything that we wanted. We spent the whole evening sharing treats and watching two films.”

“I’m glad that you’re having a little fun to balance this stressful time. Are you due a week long holiday anytime soon?”
It took Harry longer than he cared to admit to understand that Richard was talking about his heat period and he finally made an ‘O’ of understanding.

“Yeah, I think a holiday is on its way. Maybe a month to go.”

Richard’s eyes widened. “Really?” He asked.

Harry nodded. “I’m three or so weeks in.” He replied quietly.

“So, some when in late June or early July?”

“Early July.” Harry nodded.

Richard nodded. “I don’t think this case will last that long, but if it does, I’ll ask for a two week break which will usually be granted because you are the victim in all of this, Harry. You can have your holiday and be back without missing court. Do your lovers know?”

Harry shook his head. “They haven’t noticed yet. I don’t think they expect it to have been so soon.”

“Have you dismantled your nest from the twins, then?”

“I didn’t need to. As soon as my magic left the hole, it collapsed. I went out there to see it several weeks ago now to see what I could salvage when Max told me that it had caved in.”

Richard chuckled. “Let’s hope it’s not another set of quintuplets.”

Harry groaned. “It better not be.” He complained. “I want a nice, easy singleton, like Braiden.”

“That’s right, he’s your only singleton, isn’t he?” Richard grinned.
Harry huffed. “It’s because of those quintuplets! If I’d only had a singleton, I’d only have four babies right now, not eight, but I couldn’t ever wish them away now that I have them.”

“It seems like you’ve had more than three pregnancies because Farren’s so big, Calix is so tiny and Leolin is our special boy. It’s because they’re all so different and in different stages of development that makes it seem like you’ve had more than you actually have.”

Harry nodded. “It is strange when you think that Farren and Leolin are exactly the same age, that they were conceived and born at the same time. Farren is more than four times the size and weight of Leolin.”

“He’s a big bruiser like our Max was.” Richard said with a chuckle. “Absolutely gorgeous mind you, you’re going to have some trouble keeping girls and guys away from him, like Myron and I did keeping them away from our Maxie. Like hell were we going to let some harpy dig her claws into our baby.”

Harry scowled as he remembered Rebecca Silvermoss, who had tried her hardest to get Max to agree to mate to her. She’d even gone so far as to try to snatch Braiden from him, declaring that Braiden should be her baby. He still didn’t know what Myron had said to her, but whatever it had been, he’d frightened her enough to keep her away from him and his babies, though she had tried to go after Max again. He was more than capable of looking after himself though and he’d done just that.

“Right, come on you. We’ll get another coffee to go and we’ll make our way back.”

“Cappuccino?” Harry asked with a smile.

Richard grinned and ruffled his hair. “You’re too cute. Yes, you can have a cappuccino, extra chocolate sprinkles.”

They made their way back to the court, Harry happily sipping on his cappuccino. He sat down in his seat and once again he ignored the Dursleys sat at the table beside him. At least Vernon seemed to have calmed down, his face was red and not purple any more.

At dead on one O’clock the court reconvened and Richard became serious again, taking a moment to set out his papers once more.

“Are you suitably calm now, Mister Dursley?” He asked first and foremost. Reminding the court that they had stopped because Vernon had lost his temper during questioning.
“I believe that we got as far as you using the cat flap, seen in the pictures of the bedroom door leading into Harry’s room, to feed him small amounts of food.” Richard reminded.

“He put that in himself for his damn owl!” Vernon replied, his moustache bristling with the effort it took him to control himself.

“The owl that you locked up the moment that he came home from school?” Richard queried immediately after Vernon had stopped speaking. “The same owl that you viciously threatened to kill in front of Harry, a mere boy of twelve?”

“That is a lie!” Vernon raged.

“Which part?” Richard asked curiously. “That you locked the owl up or that you threatened to kill her in front of your nephew?”

“Both!”

“Oh? But her cage had a large padlock on it.”

“That was not my doing!”

“Then you’re actually trying to suggest that Harry padlocked his own owl into her cage?” Richard asked sceptically.

“I wouldn’t be at all surprised.” Vernon all but snarled.

“Harry is an animal lover, he still has his owl and she is in optimum health. Harry welcomes the decision of the court if they wish to have her looked over by an independent veterinarian.” Richard said confidently. “Harry has never mistreated his owl and he resents the insinuation that he was the one to lock her up during the summer months.”

Richard let that sink in for a moment before he walked the length of the table and then back again.
He picked up another stack of papers and flipped to the page that he wanted.

“Tell me about your hatred of all animals, Mister Dursley.”

“I do not hate animals!” Vernon growled, his face going a brighter red. “My sister breeds bulldogs! She always brought her favourite dog with her when she visited!”

“Oh? So it was just Harry’s owl that you hated?”

“I didn’t hate or hurt his blasted owl!”

“How did your Wife feel about Harry’s owl?” Richard asked out of the blue.

Vernon blustered and mumbled before he finally answered, which in on itself was very telling. Vernon had never been a good liar, he was much more used to saying whatever vile thought or opinion came to his mind.

“She never had a problem with the owl!”

“She didn’t? Then perhaps your son? One of you had a problem with Harry having an owl because that padlock was placed on the owl’s cage and Harry was not allowed the key. In fact, I know it was your Wife who hated animals, because Harry has told me so. She didn’t even like your sister’s dog, did she? Harry has informed me that she would flinch if the dog so much as barked. But you, Mister Dursley, you really had a problem with Harry’s owl, didn’t you? Was it because an owl is not a nice, normal, pet for a young boy to have?” Richard asked, hitting the nail on the head in Harry’s opinion.

“I never had a problem with that damn owl!”

“We have a quote from your neighbour, who heard you yelling late at night in the summer of nineteen-ninety-five. ‘No more effing owls!’ is what he heard you screaming, Mister Dursley, would you care to explain this yelled comment? Especially when your neighbour was under the impression that you and your Wife did not permit animals into your house and that you had no pets, not even an owl.”
Harry could see Vernon grinding his teeth and he wondered how he was going to answer without making himself seem like an irrational, insane fool by mentioning magic.

“Are we going back to not answering questions, Mister Dursley?” Richard asked curiously. “Can I assume that you resented Harry having such a unique pet as an owl and thus you locked her up to stop the neighbours from seeing her?”

Vernon’s whole head bypassed purple this time and went puce and he was clenching his teeth so tightly that Harry reckoned that he could hear his jaw cracking.

Richard refused to allow the subject to be changed and he stayed on the mistreatment of Hedwig for the next hour and a half, threatening Vernon and Petunia with the added charge of animal cruelty on top of child negligence, cruelty and abuse.

It was gone three O’clock when the Judge, Mister Justice Brais, called an end to the proceedings and Richard packed up his papers and snapped his briefcase closed. He stayed and spoke to several people, laughing and looking completely at ease, but Harry could see the tension around his mouth. He was playing at being this calm, confident, happy man because it showed the people around him that he was at ease and confident with how things were progressing.

Richard took five minutes to do this before he came and placed a hand on his shoulder and escorted him out of the room just before the Dursleys were taken back to their cells.

“You’ve done so well.” Richard praised him.

Harry nodded. “I just want to get home now.”

“I can imagine.” Richard nodded. “At least you don’t have to go back for the rest of the week now. Next Monday and Tuesday though we’ll finish off your evidence and then we’re off again on the Wednesday. Then the Thursday and Friday will see Mrs Dursley on the stand. Of course that’s only if everything progresses smoothly and no one digs their heels in, otherwise this could take longer.”

Harry nodded and he breathed a little easier. He was glad that Draco’s birthday, coming up next week, was on a Saturday, so that his court appearances wouldn’t interfere with his birthday.

“Will…will the Monday and Tuesday sessions focus on the pictures of my body?” Harry asked quietly.

Richard’s hand touched his shoulder and squeezed. “Yes, love. I’m sorry, but the court needs to see them, the Judge and Jury need to see what those beasts did to you.”
“I know.” Harry nodded. “I just want to be prepared for when they come up. I’m glad that my mates won’t be there to see them. I’m not sure if I could trust them to control themselves.”

“Once those monsters are safely behind bars, then if you’re up to it, you can share the photos with them. I know what you mean about the worry about them controlling themselves. I couldn’t show them to Myron, even though he asked. I didn’t trust him not to go and hunt down the Dursleys.”

Harry smiled thinly as they made it behind the café and Richard held him tightly before Apparating back to the driveway of Max’s house.

“Well, here we are again. I’ve got to get back, Myron’s home early today because we’re going to visit Ashleigh.”

“Is she alright?”

“She’s alright. She’s doing so much better and she’s making so much progress. She’s more like the woman who we both mated to again. We’re all much happier.”

Harry smiled then. “I’m glad. Thank you for helping me so much in court.”

“Don’t mention it, you’re our baby boy now. We’d do anything for you, love.”

Harry hugged him and Richard saw him into the house and stayed just long enough to see the front door close before he Apparated away to his home, the home that Myron had bought just a year before he had mated to him and Ashleigh. It was so much like home now that he barely thought about it being Myron’s. It was their home, where they’d raised their five children. He loved it here.

“Is Harry alright?” Myron asked as Richard walked into the kitchen, already taking off his tie.

“He’s alright.” Richard said with a smile. “I saw him home safe. I could kill that lying Dursley though. I want to ram my claws through his fucking belly and slice up his rancid insides. The gutless prick.”
“More lies today about our Harry, then?” Myron growled.

Richard snorted. “Yeah, saying that Hogwarts had made Harry more dangerous and tried to justify locking Harry up and barring his windows as protecting himself and his vile family. He even said that Harry had abused Hedwig himself! That boy treats that owl like one of his fucking kids!”

“There is no justification for locking him up so often that has to urinate in a corner!” Myron growled. “Those beasts treated him like a wild animal and I won’t have it, Richard! I won’t.”

“No one will.” Richard reminded him sternly. “I’m going to nail the lids to their coffins myself, legally, Myron! Trust in me. I can do this, I am doing this. With the way that things are progressing in that court room, they’re going down for a long time, Myron.”

“They had better be.” Myron grumbled. “I won’t have my Harry hurting because of them.”

Richard smiled and slipped his arms around Myron’s neck. He kissed his chin.

“I love you, you know. You’re sexy when you’re being all protective and fatherly to our babies.”

Myron bent his head and kissed him properly, one hand dipping low down his back.

“I love you too. I feel so protective over Harry at the moment, he’s going through such a horrible time. I want to wrap him up and smother him.”

“I don’t think our Maxie would be too happy with you if you did.” Richard teased.

Myron snorted and slapped Richard’s arse. “Go and get changed. Ashleigh will fret if we’re late. She wants to hear about the case and she wants more information on Alayla’s new boyfriend. She doesn’t like him either.”

“Only because everything she knows about him has come from you and you don’t like him either.”

Myron scoffed and crossed his large arms over his thick middle. “He’s not good enough for our baby “Admit it, you don’t like him because he drives a motorbike and works as a photographer.”

“It’s not a real job!” Myron hissed. “He takes deplorable photos and then sells them on the internet! It’s an unreliable source of income and our Laya deserves much better!”

“Let her make up her own mind.” Richard encouraged.

“No.” Myron groused. “I will not let that filth linger around, threatening her life with that contraption that he drives far too fast!”

Richard chuckled and he went to drop off his briefcase and court papers and get himself changed. He couldn’t wait to see Ashleigh again and tell her how everyone was. He hadn’t lied to Harry, she really was getting much better lately. He was hopeful that soon she’d be able to leave the centre for a couple of hours, just so that she could come home for a bit, but he wouldn’t push her if she didn’t feel ready. He just wanted her to get better. He wanted his mate, his Wife, back to how she used to be, back when she laughed fully, flinging her gorgeous sheet of blonde hair over her shoulders. Back when her blue eyes sparkled with joy and she would dance to the Wizarding Wireless Network with a baby cocked on her hip.

He hoped that she could become that woman again, smiling, laughing, joking, dancing with her grandchildren, but most of all, he hoped that she could be happy again. He just wanted her to be happy again.

-------------------------------------------- X

Harry closed the front door and kicked off his shoes, almost breaking his neck when he stood on a hard plastic ball as he pitched forward, clinging desperately to the banister to keep his feet.

“Fuck!” He cursed loudly.

“Harry?”

“Who else would it be?” He huffed. “Who left this plastic ball out here? I almost smashed my face into the banister.”
“Did one escape?” Max asked as he crawled into the passageway on his hands and knees, a screeching Braiden on his back.

Harry just stared at him for a moment before he laughed loudly.

“Come on, climb on, I’ll take you to the settee.” Max said as he shuffle crawled on his hands and knees to him and head butted his hip to get Harry to sit on him.

Harry laughed deep in his belly as he sat on Max’s back behind Braiden, wrapped his son up and squeezing his knees to keep his seat on Max as he turned full circle and crawled back into the living room.

“What are you doing home anyway?” Harry asked him. “I thought you finished at six today?”

“I was supposed to. One of the newbies almost killed themselves and blew up half the clinic, so I got to come home early.”

“Are you okay?”

“I’m absolutely fine, my sweet, gentle submissive. Containment wards are wonderful. I saved myself and most of the other newbies, but a few of them got singed and the idiot who made the mistake had to be shopped to St Mungos. It means that I got to come home three hours early and I’ve been playing all afternoon.”

“I can see that. Where’s Draco?”

Max remained quiet and Harry slipped off his back, pulling Braiden with him.

“Max, where is Draco?”

“At the hospital with Blaise.” Max sighed, sitting back and looking up at him.
“He didn’t have another fever did he? Max, those potions were supposed to make him better! They were supposed to stop the damage from getting worse.” Harry said frantically.

“The potions are working and he’s fine for the most part. He got scalded.”

Harry deflated a little. “Scalded?”

“Yeah, a hot teapot on the coffee table.”

Harry’s gorge rose as he realised what was being alluded to. He looked around, his eyes taking in all the babies and automatically counting them. There were two missing.

“Where are Eva and Ave?” He asked in a whisper. “Where are my baby girls?”

Max sighed. “At the hospital, love. I came home to find Narcissa here, she told me what had happened. I went to the hospital to catch up to Blaise and Draco and got the story from them. I didn’t call you or Nasta because both the girls are fine and will be back in an hour or so.”

“What happened?” Harry hissed.

“It happened when all the kids were down for their afternoon nap. Eva and Ave didn’t want to nap, so they were playing on the floor. Ave stood up with the help of the table. Draco wasn’t expecting it as she is only four months old. He rushed to grab the teapot, but Ave knocked it off onto Eva. Draco got scalded the worst, they took Ave just to be sure, but she was unhurt.”

“And my Eva?” Harry demanded.

“She’s wrapped up with burn salve, but the doctors are keeping an eye on her for the moment, just in case she goes into shock or has any complications. But at least she’s sleeping now.”

Harry felt like he couldn’t breathe and he clutched Braiden to his chest.

“Please tell me that she’s going to be okay.” Harry choked out.
“She’s going to be fine, like I said, Draco was hurt the worst. We’re going to have to start calling Eva and Ave, A and E though.” Max laughed. “For Accident and Emergency.”

“That’s not funny.” Harry told him.

“It is a little funny.”

Harry nibbled on his lip when he felt it quivering.

“Oh, love. I didn’t mean to upset you, I swear. Come here.”

Max pulled him down into his lap and wrapped those solid, warm arms around him tight and Harry burrowed in.

“Eva is going to be just fine, she’s my daughter too and I was seriously worried when Narcissa told me. I ran right off to the hospital, but I promise you that she’s fine. It doesn’t seemed to have bothered her at all and Ave is fine, she’s just fussing to come home.”

“Should we…should we call Nasta?” Harry asked from the cocoon of Max’s arms. “He’s our top dominant and I sort of want him here.”

“If you need him here then I’ll floo call the reserve and see where he is.”

Max put him on the settee and then did as he said he would and floo called the dragon reserve.

“Mama, baby took milk!” Braiden told him and Harry smiled and nodded to him.

“He helped Blaise feed Leolin his bottle. He loved doing it apparently.” Max told him. “They’ve sent a junior handler out to look for Nasta.”

“Baby ‘eoin was on leg, Mummy!” Braiden continued, pointing to his own leg.
“You are talking so well, you are so cute I could eat you.” Max cooed at him as he went out of the living room and into the kitchen.

“Did you have your baby brother on your leg and feed him his bottle, Braiden?”

“Yes, Mummy. Baby dranked his milk!”

“Did you have your prawns too?”

Braiden screeched excitedly and clapped his hands. “Pracorns! Pracorns!”

“Damn that boy likes his seafood!” Max laughed as he passed him a cup of honey tea.

“What did the reserve say?” Harry asked after taking a deep drink.

“I told you, they’ve sent someone out to find Nas, but it might take a while, he’s with his girl, Caronwyn.”

“Is she okay?”

“Yeah, she gouged one of the males who tried mounting her, so Nasta is calming her down so that she doesn’t go on a rampage while the other handlers contain the injured male, who’s thrashing around and incinerating everything that goes near him. So pretty much a normal day’s work for Nas.”

Harry smiled and he couldn’t help but feel grateful that Nasta was with Caronwyn, his most favourite dragon, rather than with the male that she’d injured. He would have worried much more if he’d been with the rampaging injured male.

“Mummy, baby is awake.”
Harry looked over to see Leolin rubbing at sleepy golden eyes.

“Good boy, Braiden, you go and play now.”

Braiden grinned and ran over to a beach ball, clutching his arms as far around it as he could before throwing it. It barely moved several inches, but Braiden screeched as if he’d thrown it a mile as he ran to the ball, picked it up and threw it again.

Harry plucked Leolin up from his beanbag, just as the floo flared and Blaise came through with Ave.

“Is she okay?” He asked before Blaise had even gotten his bearings back.

“She’s alright, Bello. Ave didn’t even get a single blister, despite being the one to knock the teapot all over Draco and Eva.”

Harry took her into his free arm and kissed her curly head.

“Ma na.” Ave cooed at him.

“Ma!” Leolin demanded from the other side, striking a hand out to hit at his face.

“No, Leolin! You don’t hit.” Max told him sternly as he took Leolin from Harry and cuddled him on his own lap while Blaise cradled Harry’s cheek in his hand.

“It’s okay.” Harry told him. “He barely hit me. I guess he wanted my full attention. I didn’t mean to pay more attention to Ave, sweetie.” He told Leolin, who reached out both hands and pressed them to both of Harry’s cheeks.

“Ma.” He sniffled.

Harry swapped Ave for Leolin and he snuggled his Faerie baby in his arms as Draco flooed in with Eva.
“Are you both okay?” Max asked before Harry could.

“Eva’s going to be fine. Healer Almus said that the one dose of burn salve will be enough to completely heal her.”

“Really?” Max asked. “Damn that tea must have barely touched her for her to only need one dose.”

“It barely touched her skin.” Draco sighed. “Her clothes and bodysuit absorbed most of the tea and she only had a little red patch of skin on her back. Healer Almus said it’s more a reaction to the heat than a blister. She’s going to be fine before tomorrow.”

“What about you?” Harry asked.

Draco grimaced and moved Eva to show a heavily bandaged arm.

“I saw Ave standing up and I went to move the teapot, but she knocked it before I could get there and when it tipped, I caught most of it on my arm.”

“Do you have a prescription or did they send you home with a salve?” Max asked.

Draco sighed and pulled a jar of orange paste out of his pocket. Max took it and read the instructions and the dosage.

“It needs to stay in the fridge. I’ll put it in my potion’s storage cold cupboard, this isn’t going in my fridge.” He said. “You come to me when you need another dose.”

Draco rolled his eyes and nodded before he collapsed onto the settee and cradled a sleeping Eva on his chest.

“You should take some blood from Nasta too.”

“Oh, he doesn’t know does he? The last thing I need is to be tucked up on the settee and unable to move under his hawk like watch again.” Draco complained.
“We sent a message to the reserve, he’ll be back as soon as they find him.” Max told him.

“That reserve is massive, hopefully they won’t find him.” Draco groaned.

“I’m sorry, I needed him. He’s our top dominant, I wanted him here.” Harry said and he bit his lip.

“That’s normal after the day that you’ve had.” Blaise told him, sitting next to him and kissing him.

“Ma.” Leolin interrupted.

Harry smiled at him and sat him on his lap more securely, getting his Faerie baby upright and looking at him. Harry had sat him facing him and he held tightly onto Leolin’s arms.

Leolin giggled and Harry wiggled him slightly, which made Leolin giggle more.

“Ma! Ma!” He chanted with a gummy grin.

“Who’s my big boy?!?” Harry praised with a wide grin. “This boy is adorable.”

“He sure is, just don’t let him hit you.” Max said as he went to put Draco’s salve into his storage.

“Leolin, do you want to try banana mush?” Harry asked. “Are you ready for something more than milk?!”

“Do you think he is? It’s so strange to see all of the others eating near enough normal food and he’s still just on milk.” Blaise said thoughtfully.

“I’m not sure. We’re really winging it with Leolin.” Harry sighed. “He still doesn’t even have a peek of a tooth and I’m afraid of giving him solid foods and making him sick or something.”

Max came back into the room with more tea, he set the tray down on the coffee table and he sat down on the floor with a groan and pulled Calix onto his lap.

“Dada Ma!” Calix giggled.

Max kissed Calix loudly and blew a raspberry on him, much to the enjoyment of their son, before he rolled Calix over his leg and their son screeched in sheer joy before he crawled back around and lifted his arms up. Max rolled Calix over his leg again and Calix screeched and laughed so happily that Harry couldn’t help but smile as he watched them.

Calix rushed around to Max’s lap again and Max rolled him over his leg, again and again and again, over and over and over and Calix never got tired of it and Harry couldn’t stop watching as he snuggled with Leolin and sipped his tea.

The floo flared and a frantic Nasta landed on the rug and he looked at them all with wide eyes. Max whistled at him, bare chested, muddy and sweaty with a trickle of blood running down his one arm.

“You had better not have called me home from that disaster for no reason.” He growled. “Caronwyn is very agitated. I got your message that I was needed at home as soon as possible.”

“I’m sorry, Nas. I…I wanted you here.” Harry said quietly.

“Was it the case, are you okay?” Nasta asked, his frown clearing as he came to sit next to him, holding him tight.

Harry shook his head. “Draco and Eva were injured this afternoon.”

Nasta’s head swung to the two of them, Eva sleeping on Draco’s chest and Draco’s bandaged arm wrapped around her little back.

“What happened?” Nasta demanded as he went to sniff at Draco and Eva.

“I got scalded and so did Eva.” Draco told him.

“Scalded by what?” Nasta asked as he declared Draco suitably cared for and picked up the sleeping Eva to lick at her flushed cheek to check for fever or something that someone might have missed.
“Tea.” Draco said. “Ave stood up for the first time today, but she was really wobbly and unstable and she knocked the teapot flying. I had already started moving to catch it, but my arm got scalded and so did Eva’s back, seeing as she was underneath Ave when it happened.” Draco explained.

“Has she been given anything?” Nasta asked.

“Burn salve, but the affected area is so small and barely there, so Healer Almus said she only really needed the one dose.”

“And you?” Nasta asked seriously.

Draco sighed. “Max has the salve that I need to apply and I should be fine in a few days if I take blood.”

Nasta nodded and then suddenly his fangs were just there and he bit into his own arm before offering it to Draco, who held Nasta’s arm still and sucked gently at the offered wound while the rest of them just watched.

“Do you feel better?” Nasta asked when Draco pulled back.

Their blond mate nodded with a sigh. “Yeah, that feels much better. Thank you.”

“Don’t thank me for taking care of you.” Nasta told him as he pulled Draco forward to kiss his pale pink lips. “Harry, how was your day in court?”

“Frustrating, upsetting, anger inducing, take your pick.” Harry sighed. “He tried to say that I had been abusing Hedwig!”

“What?” Max demanded. “How did Hedwig even come into it?”

“He used to lock her up so that I couldn’t let her out to hunt and fly so that the neighbours wouldn’t see her and think that I was even more abnormal than they already believed I was. Richard’s trying to add animal abuse to their sentence too.”

“And he tried to say that you locked her up yourself? Like he said that you locked yourself in a cupboard of your own volition?” Max demanded.

Harry nodded miserably.

“No one is going to believe him.” Draco said angrily. “You love Hedwig!”

Harry nodded. “That’s what Richard said.” He told them. “But I don’t like hearing it, I don’t like the thought of anyone thinking that I could hurt Hedwig, or anyone else. I was just a kid.”

“Exactly.” Nasta told him as he sat back next to him and pulled him to rest against his bare shoulder, brushing a thumb over Leolin’s scowling face. “You were a child, Harry and they hurt and abused you. The court will be able to see that, they are people trained in finding the truth and they’ll be good at it. Half cobbled together lies are not going to fool them. You’re going to be fine and no one is going to believe that you hurt them, or Hedwig.”

Harry smiled thinly and turned his head into Nasta’s neck, ignoring that he was covered in soot, sweat, blood, mud and what smelt like dragon dung. He had wanted Nasta here and now that he did have him here, he wanted to cuddle with him.

“What are you doing home anyway, Max? Weren’t you in until six today?” Nasta asked, looking at the clock which read a quarter past five. “Did you get called in when Draco and Eva went to the hospital?”

“No, Draco and Blaise went right to the hospital with the twins after a quick call to Narcissa to babysit. I came home and got the story from her, went to check on them at the hospital before I came back to take over the childcare once I was assured that they were alright and in competent hands.”

“Why did you come back early?” Nasta asked. “Are you alright?”

Max sighed. “I’m fine. I told you that I hated those newbies though. One of them wasn’t paying attention and decided to blow up half the clinic. I threw up a heavy containment ward, but still several of them needed medical help and the one who blew up his cauldron needed the hospital. So I got to come home after only an hour and a half of work.”
“But you’re unhurt?”

“Completely fine.” Max smiled. “I’ve been playing with our wonderful children all afternoon.”

Nasta sighed. “When are you back in court, Harry?”

Harry smiled happily then. “I’m off for the next four days. I go back on Monday.”

Max cheered and lurched from his place sat on the floor to hug him, nuzzling his face into Harry’s body, moving up to bury his nose in his neck before leaning back to maul his mouth.

“That looks frankly indecent.” Draco sneered.

“No one asked you!” Max pulled back to tell him. Harry was breathing hard and almost panting from his kiss and he laughed happily, copied by several babies.

Leolin, however, did not like Max being so close to his Mum and he smacked Max while he was distracted.

“Leolin!” Harry said shocked, moving his son away from Max.

Max shook his head. “That’s twice today that he’s lashed out.”

“Really?” Nasta asked as he took Leolin from Harry’s lap and settled him on his own.

“Yeah, he hit Harry earlier when he was paying more attention to Ave. She’d just come home from the hospital so Harry was checking her over and Leolin didn’t like that Harry wasn’t paying any attention to him. So he lashed out.”

Nasta frowned. “I’ll go for a shower and take him with me and I’ll spend five minutes with him in the bedroom. He might need some undisrupted contact to settle himself.”
Harry nodded and Nasta went upstairs with Leolin to grab a quick shower and a five minute cuddle.

Taking in a deep breath, Harry finished off his tea and slipped down onto the floor and he grabbed the nearest body to him, Regan, and dragged him onto his lap and tickled him.

“Tickle tickle.” Regan screeched with a wiggle. “Mummy, tickle!”

“Are you being tickled?” Harry asked him. “Are you?”

Regan screeched again and giggled, rolling to his knees and standing up, wrapping his arms around Harry’s neck and hugging him.

“Aw, do you love your Mummy, Regan?” Max asked.

“Yes.” Regan answered as he hugged Harry tightly.

“Why don’t you give Mummy a kiss?” Blaise asked him.

Regan pulled back and kissed Harry’s mouth and Harry hugged his little boy tightly.

“I love you, Regan.” He said.

“Love, Mummy.” Regan said back before he was gone, toddling off to Braiden and joining in his game of playing with their, rather large, collection of chunky cars.

Harry smiled as he watched him. His wonderful children, they were getting so big now at seventeen months old, they were so smart and joyful. He could see them as the children that they would grow to be. Especially his twenty-one month old Braiden. He was just two months away from being a whole two years old and Harry really couldn’t believe that his little boy, his first ever child, was almost two years old already.

“Were my Dads’ alright?” Max asked him as he stretched his legs out in front of him with a groan as he accepted Tegan onto his lap with one of her books and she started reading to him, her favourite penguin not far behind.

“They were fine, they’ve gone to see Ashleigh and according to Richard, she’s doing much better lately. I won’t tell you the horrors they told me about enjoying a free house together this morning.”

Max made a face. “Ah, no, please don’t. Keep that to yourself.”

“Myron said something about collaring Richard on his hands and knees…”

“STOP!” Max demanded as his face screwed up. “No, just no, Harry. I’m sorry I asked.”

Harry laughed happily and went to see what Farren was up to as Calix played with his Dad Blaise by peeking his head out from under the coffee table and then ‘hiding’ by ducking his head back under it, laughing at Blaise’s, very fake and exaggerated, surprise every time he stuck his head out.

He was going to enjoy the next four days, where he didn’t have to go to court and as Farren included him in his game of block building, Harry hoped that being at home all day for the next four days reassured his children, especially Farren, that though he might leave them for a few hours, he would always come home for them, because nothing, nothing in this world, would ever keep him away from his children. Nothing. Not ever.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: The court scenes are coming along well, or at least they are in my opinion. As I said in the last chapter, I am not a lawyer, a law student or anything of the sort. I did research and that is the extent of my knowledge of what happens in court cases. I did say that there would be mistakes, so please, just accept that and take them on the chin and realise that I was never going to get it a hundred percent correct to the letter of the law. I can’t help that, but I’m trying my best.

Thank you all for your continued support, lovelies. I would like to take this time to point those of you who haven’t added me on Facebook, towards the Wikia page if you wanted more information on the Dracken universe. You can find it here:

http://riseofthedrackens.wikia.com/wiki/Home
For those of you NOT following the Scaled Bits, the only part of this Wikia you don’t want to look at is the list of grandchildren from the Scaled Bits, otherwise this Wikia is up to date with the main fic, not the Scaled Bits.

I think this is it from me, I’m working on a new Dracken fic to add to my Dracken universe, but other than that, it’s Rise of the Drackens, Lycanthrope Factory and The Black Heir on my list, oh and finishing off Damaged Bodies, but until then, I hope you’ve enjoyed this chapter,

StarLight Massacre. X
Temper Tantrums

Chapter Notes

A/N: This chapter is for every single one of you. Today we celebrate four amazing years of dedicated writing on my part and dedicated reading and reviewing on your part, lovelies. It has been four years to the day since I started this fic and over those four years, we’ve had a LOT of mishaps and obstacles to get over, but we have persevered together to overcome it all. I am truly honoured to have shared this experience with you all, lovelies, whether you’re new readers or old who have been with me from day one, thank you for always trusting in me and thank you for always sticking by me, no matter what. Thank you.

Warning: This chapter contains scenes of a bloody, gory and distressing nature that may upset some readers. Please, please proceed with caution and navigate carefully through the scenes if you are easily upset or have certain triggers.

Last Time

Harry laughed happily and went to see what Farren was up to as Calix played with his Dad Blaise by peeking his head out from under the coffee table and then ‘hiding’ by ducking his head back under it, laughing at Blaise’s, very fake and exaggerated, surprise every time he stuck his head out.
He was going to enjoy the next four days, where he didn’t have to go to court and as Farren included him in his game of block building, Harry hoped that being at home all day for the next four days reassured his children, especially Farren, that though he might leave them for a few hours, he would always come home for them, because nothing, nothing in this world, would ever keep him away from his children. Nothing. Not ever.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter Ninety-Nine – Temper Tantrums

It felt nice to have a lie in for once, Harry thought lazily as he rolled around in the large bed that was abandoned except for him, luxuriating in having it all to himself for a change. He settled back down and he let out a deep, disgruntled sigh as the warmth of the bed became slightly stifling now that he was awake. It was almost June and the sun was streaming through the edges of the curtains warming everything up. He was too hot and he was sweating under the heavy duvet, likely the reason that he’d woken up in the first place.

He knew that it was gone breakfast just from the feel of the house. It was too quiet and there was no one rushing around anywhere, no screeches or giggles from small children and no shouted questions to mates in other rooms. It was completely silent, peaceful. If he had to guess, he’d say that it was midmorning and the kids were all down for their naps.
With a groan he sat up and pushed the heavy duvet away from his body and swiped his sweat soaked hair back, away from his face. He slid from the bed and he padded barefoot to the bathroom to relieve himself, brush his teeth and have a quick shower, but not the usual dart it, get wet and get back out routine he usually kept to with so many babies clamouring for his attention that he had to look after.

He cleaned himself up, taking the time to thoroughly clean himself and luxuriate as much as he could in the shower, he did prefer baths, but showers were still very nice when he’d been as sweaty and grimy as he’d been when he’d woken up. He dressed himself in whatever came to hand first from his drawer in their shared dresser, after a quick spell to dry himself off of course, before he went down the stairs, peeked into the empty kitchen, before going into the living room. He found Draco stretched out across the settee, sat up reading his book in the living room, but no one else.

“Where is everyone?” He asked with a grin. “I feel like I’m in the wrong house.”

Draco startled in surprise and looked up from his novel.

“Well the kids are down for their nap, Max was recalled to sort out the aspiring potions apprentices, minus the one who actually caused the accident yesterday, and Nasta went to work an hour early to check on his Caronwyn.”

“Blaise?” Harry asked as he went to lie down on the settee, resting his upper body in Draco’s lap and keeping eye contact with him.

Draco pushed his hand, attached to his newly bandaged arm, through Harry’s hair to get it out of his eyes and Harry moved and stole a morning kiss from his blond mate.

“Blaise went to talk to the goblins at Gringotts.”

“Was he okay?”

“Nervous, but he’s excited too. He really wants this to work.”

“He’s damn good at it!” Harry said passionately. “He should be able to set up his own business in this. It’s not like he has any competition!”
Draco smiled and bent forward to kiss him, before wrapping his good arm around his back and pulling his upper body down to rest against him. He went back to his book and Harry yawned and rested on his mate, letting himself rest some more while allowing his brain to wake up slowly.

When he wanted his first cup of tea for the morning, he pushed up and kissed Draco again before he wiggled away from his body and stood up to stretch. He went into the kitchen and boiled the kettle while he got down two mugs and a bowl so that he could have some cereal. Nasta would kill him if he didn’t at least try to eat breakfast and he really wanted cereal, it made him sigh. He really was in the fifth week of his cycle, just four more weeks and he’d have a heat period. He really needed to tell his mates about that soon.

He made tea for himself and Draco, scoffed his cereal and washed up his bowl, before taking the tea into the room, handing one cup off to Draco, who thanked him gratefully.

“Were the kids okay?” Harry asked, smiling apologetically as Draco put down his book yet again. He rarely had the time to read it, so Harry was loath to interrupt him, he just couldn’t help it when it came to his babies.

“They were fine. They’ll all be awake soon.” Draco told him. “They all ate their breakfasts and even Farren went down for his nap. Blaise was on the night shift and he said that there were no problems and that he only had to get up at three to feed Eva and Ave and the once for Leolin at four. He checked on the other kids too and they were all fine. Tegan was wet, so she had a change, but Calix was bone dry.”

“So no rashes?” Harry asked.

Draco shook his head. “He still wants to crawl around naked though.”

Harry chuckled. “If he wants to crawl around naked in his own home, let him.”

Draco hummed, but he didn’t answer and he cheekily stuck his legs into Harry’s lap. Harry just laughed and started massaging his calves, knees, ankles and feet as he sat quietly on the settee and lost himself in his thoughts with his cup of tea, leaving Draco to his book as they enjoyed the comfortable silence that they both knew wouldn’t last for much longer.

He knew that Draco had a problem with the kids being naked, he believed that it was inappropriate and that they’d be hurt easier if they didn’t have a protective layer of clothing on. The accident with Eva had only solidified his belief, because if Eva had been naked yesterday, her burns would have been a thousand times worse than the small patch of reddened skin that she had gotten. But Harry firmly believed that they couldn’t live in fear of accidents that could happen. He recognised and understood that they couldn’t protect the kids from every single little accident or injury that might happen and he also knew that he couldn’t wrap his children up in cotton wool and stand on guard over them for the rest of their lives. They needed to learn and to grow, to come into their own persons and a part of that was taking an injury or two. It was as Nasta said, what was childhood without a few grazed knees?

Draco needed to learn that the kids would get hurt, it was inevitable. Of course none of them would ever wish their children to be hurt and Harry shuddered at the nightmarish thought of having to deal with his first broken bone or serious injury to his little babies, but he also knew that there was nothing that he could do to prevent it. If it was going to happen, and it would sooner or later, then it was going to happen and he just needed to prepare to act when it did happen. Swaddling his children was going to achieve nothing but them despising him or even making a situation or injury a million times worse as his children would have never had to deal with such a thing before and they would panic and could easily injure themselves even worse. No, he needed to be prepared to act, his mates needed to be prepared to act and his sweet little sons and daughters would get bumped heads, grazed knees and knocked elbows. As much as he hated, absolutely hated, the thought of his babies being hurt, he knew that it was going to happen one day. It really was completely inevitable.

They stayed there in the silence, Harry thinking about anything and everything as Draco read, still having his feet and legs massaged by an almost mindless Harry. It was as Harry was thinking of maybe broaching the topic of his approaching heat period when a soft rustling came over the baby monitor that was sat on the coffee table and a baby made a small grunt.

“Mummy?” The sleepy, tinny voice came over the monitor and Harry smiled, stopping his massages and patting Draco’s legs to move them as he stood up and went to fetch his wakening children.

He found Regan blinking hazel-gold eyes at him, his face creased from his nap, but he was sat up in his cot, or at least he was until the door opened and Harry walked in, then he pulled himself up and he lifted his arms up.

“Mummy, up.”

“Good morning, Regan. Did you have a good nap?” He asked softly.

Regan nodded his head as he fist at his sleepy eyes.

“Do you want teddy?” Harry asked as he picked up the teddy that Regan used as his comfort toy after his traumatic fall down the stairs months before.

Regan nodded his head again and reached out a hand for the teddy and Harry checked on the other napping children before taking Regan back out into the living room, being extra careful on the stairs.
“Is it only Regan?” Draco asked.

Harry nodded. “At the moment, yes. Farren seems to be deeply asleep, was he alright during the night?”

“He was fine. He’s just catching up on all the missed naps over the last few days. We had to take him into the bedroom and show him that you were still in bed for him to go to sleep.”

“I didn’t hear a thing.” He frowned.

“Nasta put a silencing bubble around you so that Farren wouldn’t disturb your much needed lie in.”

Harry sat back down and cradled his seventeen month old son in his arms, holding the teddy too as Regan was very attached to it.

Draco put his book down and shifted so that he could see Regan. Harry smiled at them both as they started talking to one another and Regan seemed to come out of his sleepy shell without any other baby in the room with him, especially his fraternal twin, Tegan, who definitely liked taking control of everything and everyone around her.

Harry handed Regan over to sit on Draco’s lap as he had an idea and he bent down into the pile of toys by the side of the settee that he was sat on and lifted out what he wanted.

“Regan, what colour is this?” Harry asked as he held up a blue shape.

“Bue.” Regan told him and Harry clapped his hands as Draco praised their son.

“What colour is this one?” Harry asked as he held up a yellow block.

“Ellow.” Regan said clapping his hands as Harry did.

“Well done, Regan.” Draco told him, kissing the back of his head, nosing into his jet black hair.

“Do you know this colour?” Harry asked him, holding up a red car.
“Red.” Regan told him and Harry grinned, bending forward to kiss Regan’s forehead.

“This one?” He asked holding up a green car this time.

“Geen.”

“Primary and secondary colours, he’s coming on so well.” Draco smirked proudly as he listened to Regan.

“I don’t think he’ll know purple or orange.” Harry frowned. “We haven’t done those colours as much.”

He reached down and picked up one of the shapes from Braiden’s old shape sorter and held it out.

“Regan, what’s this?” Harry asked, holding up an orange shape.

“Ronge.”

Harry and Draco shared a look and Harry grinned. “That was close enough for me.”

Harry found something purple, a scrap of fabric that looked to have come from one of Tegan’s dolls, and he showed it to Regan.

“What’s this one?”

“Bue!” Regan screeched and clapped his hands.

“No. No, Regan. This one is purple.”
“Bue.” Regan insisted.

“No, this one is blue.” Harry told him, picking up the blue shape again and putting it next to the purple fabric so that Regan could compare them. “This one is purple.”

“Purpa.” Regan frowned as he reached out for the scrap of fabric and stared at it. “Purpa.” He repeated as he petted the fabric.

“Close enough.” Draco chuckled as he pulled Regan further back onto his lap.

Regan was having none of it, however, and he shifted himself forward and then climbed down to the floor and he started playing, only every time he picked up a toy, he’d say the colour that it was and look to them for praise, which they readily, and enthusiastically, gave to him.

It was only five or six minutes later when a snuffle came over the baby monitor and a soft and sleepy, slightly confused exclamation of ‘Ma’ was heard.

“I think our Faerie baby is calling for you.” Draco told him.

“He’s going to want a bottle, can you boil the kettle for me please?”

“Oh course.” Draco answered as he stood up and stretched his back and shoulders as Harry left the living room to go and collect Leolin from his cot, in his own separate nursery.

Harry opened the nursery door, to the room that was directly opposite their bedroom. He walked to the cot and he smiled down at the sleepy scrunched up face of his Faerie baby, lying flat on his back and unable to move.

“Ma! Ma!” Leolin chanted happily and his little arms lifted themselves slowly as if they were actually leaden weights, but still he lifted them for a hug.

Harry lifted him up and cradled him close to his neck, feeling teeny, tiny hands clenched into his skin, tiny nails biting in, but he didn’t mind.

He hugged Leolin tightly and he picked up the fleecy blanket from the cot before he carried Leolin down to the living room. There was a bottle made up and ready on the coffee table and Draco was trying to pull a brush through Regan’s hair while he was distracted with his toys.

Harry sat down on the edge of the settee and he turned Leolin gently down into the crook of his arm, being very careful with his tiny wings.

He checked the milk against his inside forearm, mostly out of habit instead of any distrust that Draco hadn’t cooled it properly, before he rubbed the teat over Leolin’s cheek and he watched as his baby son turned his head to wrap his lips around the teat, taking as much of the bulb into his mouth as he could before he started suckling.

Harry watched him, completely entranced, as Leolin stared at him with his gold eyes as he drank. Harry drew in a deep breath and he let it out again happily as he watched his son feeding.

He was disturbed by a cry over the baby monitor, but it was Draco who hefted himself up to go and get the awakened babies, leaving Harry to finish feeding Leolin while keeping an eye on Regan, who was playing very happily now that his Daddy Draco had stopped dragging a brush through his hair.

Harry looked up when Draco came back in, herding their remaining children. He had to smile as he saw Braiden up on his feet and walking, clutching onto Draco’s leg.

“I carried him down the stairs.” Draco assured him as he set Calix and Tegan on the floor. “But he wanted to go down as soon as we’d passed the stairs.”

“Where’s Farren?” Harry asked when he realised that one was missing.

“He’s actually still asleep.”

Harry frowned. “Is he okay?”

“There’s no sign of fever and I couldn’t scent anything out. I think the last few days have just taken it out of him and he’s just catching up with some needed sleep.”

“Okay, but I’ll check on him in....”

“Mama!” Calix interrupted loudly and enthusiastically, crawling to his legs and sitting back on his knees to reach up to him. “Mama! Mama!”

Leolin did not like the disruption and he turned a glare onto his older brother, even as he continued feeding, though at a much slower rate than he’d been suckling at before.
“Good morning, Calix.” He greeted with a smile. “Did you have a good nap?”

“Mama, pick up!” Calix beseeched him.

“In a minute, Calix.” Harry said gently. “Your brother needs his milk, first.”

Calix pouted and when that didn’t work, his lower lip started trembling.

“Draco, he’s going to start crying.” Harry warned as Calix’s eyes grew damp with unshed tears.

Draco looked over and took four large strides before swooping Calix from where he’d slumped onto the floor. A belly tickle and an upside down trip over Daddy Draco’s broad, muscular shoulder and Calix was giggling in happiness and clapping his hands together and Harry was able to resettle Leolin and re-establish eye contact to get their bonding moment back while Leolin fed, going back to larger mouthfuls and a faster pace of suckling.

With all the other babies though, playing, screeching, giggling and playing, Leolin got distracted much more easily and he was frowning at all of the noise and he soon abandoned his bottle and refused to drink any more. Harry sighed after Leolin turned his head away from the bottle teat once again and he gave it up, putting the bottle on the coffee table and hefting Leolin over his shoulder to wind him.

“How much?” Draco asked him.

“Three and a quarter ounces.” Harry shook his head. “Ave drank more than that last night.”

Draco looked worried too. “He’s seventeen months old. I know he’s a Faerie, but can we realistically expect that he’s going to be completely fine drinking just three ounces of milk several times a day? It just doesn’t seem enough! It’s like us living off of a bowl of soup a day!”

“Nasta said its fine.” Harry replied. “I know that none of us were expecting Leolin and I know that Nasta, or Aneirin, have never had to care for a Faerie baby before, but I trust them to know what they’re doing. Dain and Kailen said that he’s eating fine too and they were alive two hundred years before the Ministry of Magic was founded! I trust that between the four of them, that they have the right information to care for Leolin because the only alternative is that we’re caring for him wrong and we could be doing him irreparable harm and I can’t believe that.”
“Any sign of a tooth?” Draco asked hopefully.

Harry carefully pushed back Leolin’s lips and checked his pink gums for any dot of white that would signify an emerging tooth or even just a red area of inflamed gum which would be a clue to him teething, but there was nothing and all rooting around in Leolin’s mouth did was make him scowl heavily.

“No, nothing.” He said as he shook his head. He sighed. “Nasta did say from about eighteen months was the normal average.”

“Next month then.” Draco said with a nod. “At this rate, Eva and Ave will be teething before him too.”

Harry grimaced and put Leolin down on the settee, propping him up against the arm of the settee and a stack of cushions.

“Do you want tea? I’m going to make one while I log Leolin’s feed down in his book.” Harry asked.

“Sure. I’m going to try and get their hair into some semblance of order.” Draco sighed heavily as he looked around at the mass of bed heads.

Harry grinned. “Good luck with that.”

Harry went into the kitchen and started boiling the kettle before he opened the counter drawer and found Leolin’s book and he flipped it open. He noted that Leolin had taken an ounce at four in the morning before he’d gone back down to sleep for four hours, that he’d taken just half an ounce at eight in the morning before going back down to sleep and then Harry filled in his information. That Leolin had woken up at ten past ten in the morning and he’d taken three and a quarter ounces.

He bit his lip and nibbled on it. Draco was right, it just didn’t seem enough when Leolin’s log book was compared to Eva or Ave’s, but he pushed it out of his mind, his girls were Drackens and Leolin was a Faerie. There was no fair comparison between them.

He made a cup of unsweetened white tea for Draco and his favoured honey tea for himself before heading back into the living room to hand Draco his cup. He was wrestling a brush through Braiden’s hair and it made Harry smile as Braiden wriggled and squirmed away from him, batting at Draco’s hands and the brush and being very vocal about his dislike of the brush.
“This could be their punishment when they’re older. Misbehave and suffer five minutes of Daddy Draco brushing hair.” Harry laughed.

“You’re not funny.” Draco huffed.

“I am. I’m hilarious.” Harry said with a grin as he sat back down next to Leolin, who was surprised that he was sat completely upright. “Draco, look at his face!” Harry chuckled.

Draco shifted away from Braiden to look at Leolin’s surprised, yet very pleased face.

“Where’s that camcorder?” He asked. “Where did Max leave it?”

“I don’t know.” Harry frowned. “Is it in the sideboard?”

Draco went to the wall cabinet and went through the drawers and he made a sound of triumph and he pulled out the camcorder. He set it up overly cautiously, still not that used to using Muggle technology, but he now knew how to turn the TV on and how to flick it through the cartoon channels for the kids and how to get onto the Muggle news channels. He was learning and Harry was very proud of him.

“There!” He said happily. Harry had to smile at him.

“So, this is our Leolin at seventeen months old, and sitting completely upright for the first time.” Harry narrated to the camera with a smile.

He turned back to Leolin and smiled at him, getting a grin back. “Ma! Ma!” He cried happily.

Harry took his tiny hands and he bounced on the settee, making Leolin move. He made a soft, fearful noise, but Harry stroked his thumbs over Leolin’s tiny hands and smiled to reassure him. He bounced again and Leolin, still looking unsure, watched him.

As Harry bounced more, Leolin got used to it and he let out a huffy sounding giggle.
“Try and get him to bounce with you.” Draco told him.

“I don’t think that’s a good idea.” Harry said. “It’s one thing for me to bounce, but another thing to get him to do it. He isn’t that steady.”

“Hold him under the armpits.” Draco encouraged. “That way if he does go to fall, you can catch him.”

Harry nodded and he slipped his hands from Leolin’s and up under his armpits. He barely moved Leolin as he made him bounce on the settee. Leolin actually squeaked and it made Draco laugh and Harry smile.

“That’s a new noise.” Draco said.

“He’s never been bounced before.” Harry said with a smile.

“He enjoys it, do it again.”

Harry laughed and this time he bounced with Leolin, who let out more of his huffy giggles.

“You’re growing stronger every day!” Harry praised his tiny son. “You’re growing and developing and as soon as you start teething, we’ll try you on some mushed up fruit puree.”

“I can’t wait until he’s on something, anything, other than formula milk.” Draco said.

Harry nodded his agreement. “I know what you mean. It’ll be such a milestone for him.”

The floo flared green and Harry smiled as Blaise stepped out gracefully, well aware of how many steps he could take upon landing to avoid colliding with the fire guard.

“Daddy Bway! Daddy Bway!”
Blaise’s face broke into a huge, gorgeous smile as he stepped over the fire guard and swept the clamouring babies into a hug with his long arms.

“I missed you all too.” He said softly before he realised that one was missing. “Where is Farren?”

“Still down for his nap. I’m going to go and check on him now.” Harry said.

Blaise came over and sat next to him, nuzzling into his neck and kissing his face. Harry chuckled and turned his body to put his legs over Blaise’s lap and he pulled his mate down into an impassioned kiss.

“Hey! That’s enough in front of the camera, we aren’t making dirty recordings!” Draco complained as he turned the camcorder away and switched it off.

Harry burst out laughing and Blaise joined him, followed by several babies who copied them.

“Speak for yourself.” Blaise said with a cocky smirk. “Harry and I are much more open minded, aren’t we, Bello?”

Harry couldn’t stop laughing, but he nodded regardless. He calmed himself and took in a deep, gasping breath.

“Hello, Leolin.” Blaise greeted as he saw Leolin behind Harry. “He looks so strange sitting up like a proper baby. I’m more used to seeing him from above as he’s usually always on his back.”

“I know, but he’s doing so well. He’s propped up firmly and he isn’t flopping over. His core muscles are getting so much stronger.” Harry pinched Leolin’s cheek so gently it was more like he was resting his finger and thumb on his cheek, but Leolin giggled regardless.

“What are they having for lunch?” Draco asked as he put the camcorder down on a side table.

“Max left their lunch menu on the corkboard.” Blaise told him.
“How was the meeting at Gringotts?” Harry asked him.

“Frustrating and productive in equal measure.” Blaise replied with a sigh.

“Does that mean that they agreed with your proposal?” Draco asked interestedly.

“I really think I won them around.” Blaise said with a smug grin. “Trying to get gold for an investment off of a goblin is difficult, trying to wrangle the start-up money for a new business venture is near impossible, but I really think I managed it.”

“Well done, Blaise.” Harry said, hugging him and giving him a solid kiss. “I’m so proud of you.”

“Nothing is set in stone yet!” Blaise tried to protest.

“I don’t care, you’ve done so well and you’ve done exactly as you wanted to and you’re not going to give up on this venture. Even if you have to start out from this very room and selling on word of mouth alone. You’re damn good at what you do and as soon as you get started, your business is going to grow and then all of us together can set you up in a permanent residence. If the goblins don’t see this as the amazing venture that it is, then we can set it all up for you and prove how wrong they are.” Harry said sincerely.

“Merlin, you make it sound so simple.” Blaise laughed.

“It is simple.” Harry told him, pulling him into a kiss. “Now, I’m going to start lunch for these little toe rags, but first, I’ll go and check on Farren. Keep an eye on Leolin and make sure that he doesn’t fall forward and when Eva and Ave wake up, put them in the playpen for a bit, they need time alone to wake up without the older kids being rough and boisterous around them.”

Harry did as he had said he would and he climbed the stairs and he went into the second nursery that housed his five oldest children. Farren was still asleep in his red cot, blanket over his chunky legs and his arms wrapped around a stuffed giraffe.

Harry rested his folded hands on the side of the cot and he smiled as he watched Farren sleeping. He sighed as he soaked in the peace before he stood up again and reached into the cot to stroke Farren’s dark brown hair out of his face.
“Farren, love. Do you want to wake up?” He called out gently.

Farren made a small, soft noise and he shifted and Harry had to smile widely at him as he woke up slowly from his extra-long nap.

“Muma.”

“I’m here, Farren.” He said gently.

Farren blinked open his greeny-blue, teal coloured eyes and shifted around some more in his cot and Harry just watched him as he woke up slowly, in his own time, and got his bearings back.

“Muma, up.”

Harry smiled wider and he picked up his hefty boy and cuddled him into his neck. He was glad that he was off for four days now. It would help him to reconnect with his children and it would go a long way to reassuring them that even if he left for a couple of hours, he would always come back for them.

He carried Farren from the nursery and down into the kitchen. He checked the corkboard and found Max’s baby menu and he couldn’t help but smile as his always fun-loving, childish mate had drawn little pictures of food around the edge of the menu. He chuckled and shook his head. He was missing Max and Nasta, he hadn’t seen them at all today and though he knew that they had more than likely kissed him before they’d left, he’d been asleep for it and had no memory of their kisses. He just really wanted to hug them and give them each a kiss.

He kept Farren with him, cocked on his hip as he got all the ingredients out and started preparing them, putting Farren’s bottom on the counter when he needed to use both of his hands, but keeping his son snuggled against his chest.

Farren soon woke up properly and he was very curious about where he was and what was going on. Harry let him handle the food, especially the onion, which Farren tried to get into his mouth and couldn’t.

Harry prepared the food, keeping the one knife that he was using well away from tiny little fingers, all the while Farren was picking everything up and even taking bites out of things, as he found out when he picked up the red pepper and found tiny teeth marks in it.

“Did you eat my pepper?” Harry asked in a high, questioning voice.
Farren looked up at him and shook his head and Harry had to laugh.

“We must have mice, then.” He joked as he pulled Farren into a hug and went back to cooking lunch.

He was almost done when Blaise brought Leolin out for his own lunch.

“Watch him with that knife.” Was Blaise’s first comment.

“Must we keep the knives away from him?” Harry asked, a hard edge to his voice. “I thought I’d teach him how to use one early.”

“There’s no need to be so passive aggressive, Harry, I was just saying.” Blaise muttered.

“I am their Mother!” Harry told him. “Don’t you think I know not to let them near the damn knives?”

Blaise sighed and held up his one hand in surrender. He boiled the kettle and Harry went back to wrestling an unused carrot from Farren’s mouth as his son chomped on it with his teeth.

Harry didn’t know why he was being so crabby, but then, thinking about it, it was likely a combination of missing Max and Nasta and his looming heat period. A month more and he’d be thrown into a heat period and he would potentially end up pregnant. His hormones were surging in preparation and he was experiencing some mood swings, particularly being quicker to anger. His coming heat was weighing very heavily on his mind now the closer it got and it didn’t help that the court case might not be over at that time. How was he supposed to handle that stress and frustration while in the early stages of pregnancy? How did anyone expect him to deal with all of that?

He sighed as he dished up several plates of food and he shifted Farren to his booster seat and took his little plastic plate of food over too, so he wouldn’t fuss while he wrangled up the rest of the babies.

“Draco, lunch is up.” Harry told him as he quickly picked up Calix and Regan and made his way back to the kitchen, just in case Farren choked.

“You made food for us too?” Draco asked.

“Yep, it’s lunchtime for us too.”
“Technically it’s breakfast for you.” Draco told him.

“It’s not. I had a bowl of cereal while I was making the tea.” Harry told him with a grin.

“That could only be considered brunch.” Draco sniffed.

Harry chuckled as he settled Regan into a booster seat to see how he handled it and clipped Calix into his highchair.

Blaise finished feeding Leolin and settled him into the bassinet for another nap while he wrote in the baby log book. Draco carried in Tegan and Ave while Braiden was walking behind him, his arms outstretched for balance. He looked so happy being up on his feet and walking that Harry had to smile at him.

Harry clapped his hands and swept Braiden up, kissing him and praising him before settling him into his own booster seat. He went back into the living room for Eva and settled her into her highchair too. She and Ave were eating a smooth paste that had just been heated up, at four months old, they weren’t eating proper solids yet, but they were having their first tastes. Today they were being spooned a pale orange goo that was nothing but blended sweet potatoes, pumpkin, broccoli and carrots made lovingly by Max a few days before.

Harry tried to feed the both of them together, but it was difficult when Calix was doing his best to paint with his pasta Bolognese. He flinched again as a tiny little cube of carrot and red pepper and a lot of sauce splattered up his arm.

Blaise wrestled the spoon from Calix and then started feeding him normally, so Calix’s food didn’t end up as an artwork instead of actually in his mouth.

Lunch was always messy and each child looked like they’d bathed in their food instead of eating it once they were done and they started ‘talking’ to one another, content to stay where they were for a moment, leaving Harry, Draco and Blaise to eat their own lunches.

Harry finished first, having scoffed his lunch as quickly as he could, and he just smiled at the state of his babies before he gave them a bowl of berries and a small spoonful of natural yoghurt each for dessert before he went back to his twin girls.

He cleaned off Eva and Ave as best as he could before peeling off their clothes and taking them to the downstairs bathroom to bathe them both quickly. He dressed them in clean leggings and different coloured smock tops before he carried them to the living room, leaving Blaise and Draco to wrestle with the five older, messier, kids. He went and got a sleeping Leolin from the kitchen and put him into the living room bassinet before getting onto the floor and playing with his two girls.

“Mama.” Eva cooed at him from where he’d put her, propped up against a stack of cushions. He had Ave propped up against his own body.
Harry dug out a soft toy that his girls both loved. Thankfully they both had one as their Uncle Caesar and Aunt Amelle had sent one each over to them from America.

They were butterflies, though apparently they were supposed to be fireflies, but every part of the stuffed creature was made in a different colour with a different fabric, from felt, to soft, fluffy fleece, faux fur and even a fabric that was crinkly. The girls just loved touching and gumming on their butterfly slash fireflies and it helped that it had things attached to it, from a little mirror, to a cord that had a plastic teether on it and little rings that Ave in particular liked twisting her fingers around. It also squeaked when it was squeezed, which was Eva’s favourite part of the soft toy as she bashed it around and giggled at the squeak, squeak, squeak that it made.

Harry joined in with their play and clapped his hands at everything and anything they did, from making the toy squeak, to putting the teether into the little pocket on the wing of the butterfly and taking it back out again and squeezing the one wing that made the crinkly noise.

The floo flared and Harry automatically moved his arm to shield Eva as he shifted in front of her and Ave, but he jumped up with a happy, excited exclamation when Max stepped through. He’d tackled his mate into a large bear hug before he’d even fully regained his bearings, the fireguard between them, and Max laughed deeply, happily, as he squeezed Harry back tightly, automatically shifting his head down to aim for a kiss.

Harry craned his head back and kissed Max passionately for long minutes, trying to convey how much he’d missed him and how much he’d wanted to see him, hold him and kiss him over the course of the day.

They broke apart, Harry panting and Max laughing breathlessly.

“I missed you too, love.” Max told him huskily.

“I didn’t like waking up to find you, Blaise and Nasta not here. I like my morning kisses and cuddles.” Harry said with a grin.

Max swung him up and kissed him again. When they broke apart this time, Harry was sitting on Max’s lap on the settee, their girls at Max’s feet with their butterfly/firefly things.

“It’s too quiet, where are the rest of them hiding?” Max asked. “Have they had their lunches or do you want me to go and…”

“Sit back down.” Harry ordered as Max went to stand up while still talking. “We’ve all had our lunches, Eva and Ave loved their orange goo that you made for them and I gave them their bath and changed their messy clothes and currently, Draco and Blaise are giving the older kids a bath…giving them Bolognese sauce to play with was definitely going to be a messy experience.”
Max laughed and relaxed back on the settee and pulled Harry to crush him against his chest, kissing his forehead and then his face, before catching his lips.

They broke apart when one of their girls, Ave, started giggling. They both looked down at her, to see her and Eva holding hands and rocking back and forth, their soft toys abandoned to either side.

“They are so adorable. Where’s that camera?”

“It’s over there somewhere, Draco had it on Leolin earlier.”

“Was he being cute too?” Max asked as he shifted Harry to the side and hefted himself up to get the camera.

“He was.” Harry said with a smile. “You can see after you’ve recorded a bit of the girls.”

Max saluted him and aimed the camera at the girls, who were still holding hands and rocking back and forth, giggling.

“They have tremendous skills to be doing this at four months. I know they’re almost five months old now, but still.” Max chuckled.

“Is it because they’re Drackens?” Harry asked.

Max nodded. “That definitely helps. They’re stronger than human babies, so they’re able to do things like this.” He said, waving his hand at the two girls playing. “Ave’s already trying to get up on her feet, I wouldn’t be surprised if they were walking at eight months.”

“But Braiden wasn’t really walking until he was much older and Farren still isn’t really walking and they’re both Drackens too.”

“That’s because Braiden was more interested in learning to speak than getting up on his feet and Farren’s a happy chunk. These two girls just want to be motoring around and it helps that they can see their older brothers and sister up on their feet, because they’ll try their best to copy them. I think that’s how Ave got up onto her feet in the first place, even if she did tip a teapot over Eva and Draco in the process.”

“I hope you realise that you just called Farren a chunk on camera and he’s going to see those tapes one day, when he’s older.”

“Bollocks.” Max cursed.

Harry laughed and he had to laugh harder when Max turned the camera to face himself and started talking into it.

“Farren, I’m sorry baby, I didn’t mean it, okay? You’re a gorgeous little chunk and I love you. Stop laughing, Harry!”

Harry couldn’t stop though and he hunched over, holding his middle.

“What’s the matt…oh. I should have guessed that you were home from the noise.” Draco said as he put down a bathed and clean Braiden and Calix. They were both just wearing nappies.

Even as they watched, Calix sat down and tugged at the ties of his nappy, pulling them off and he started off crawling again, leaving his nappy behind.

“Please tell me you got that?” Harry asked with a giggle that he couldn’t entirely suppress.

Max nodded with a chuckle. “Yeah, I got our little boy stripping on camera.”

“Don’t say it like that.” Draco demanded furiously.

Draco picked up Calix and tried to cover him back with his nappy, but Calix squirmed and cried out.

“He doesn’t want it on, Draco. Just let him go and let his skin breathe.” Harry told him.
“I don’t want him naked on camera.” Draco insisted.

“He’s our child, Draco. What do you think we’re going to do with these tapes, sell them?” Max demanded as he put the camera down. “Merlin, you need to learn how to just calm the fuck down and have some fun once in a while. Try taking the stick out, that might help.”

“If you’re going to start fighting, get the hell out of this house.” Harry demanded, ice cold and furious. “Our babies are in this room!” He added as he hauled Calix into his own arms and putting himself between Max and Draco and Braiden, Eva and Ave.

“It’s not going to come to that, is it, Draco?” Max asked, putting emphasis on Draco’s name that made the blond’s jaw and fists clench.

“Get out in the garden and cool off, now!” Harry ordered.

“You are not the dominant in this relationship!” Draco exploded. “I tell you what to do, not the other way around!”

Harry tried to control himself, but he was hurt by that comment and unbelievably pissed off by it.

“Get out.” He hissed. “I don’t even care where you go, just leave, now.”

Draco snarled at him and his silvery-blue wings popped out and Harry stooped down to put Calix behind him and brought out his own white, multi-coloured scaled wings. He launched for the bassinet to try and get the sleeping Leolin out of the way, but Draco shoved him before he could grab his baby.

Max intercepted Draco and threw him back and away from Harry and the babies. Harry just gaped as Draco went through the door and out into the hall way, taking part of the wall with him.

“What the fuck is going on down there?” Blaise roared from up the stairs.

Harry gasped and hunched over his babies as Draco flew back at Max, debris from the wall flying with him as Draco knocked through the now damaged wall. Harry felt wood and bricks hitting his back and he flinched, smelling blood.
He was desperate to reach Leolin, but it was when the bassinet was knocked off its stand that he became frantic and panicked as he watched his tiny Faerie baby roll out of the bassinet and onto the floor where his two dominants were fighting. He scrambled on his hands and knees to where Leolin lay in a crumpled heap, crying, and he saw stars when a fist connected with the top of his head and then a knee jawed him into biting through his tongue and lip. He cradled his son to his chest, managing to get away when Max threw Draco into the bookcase.

He couldn’t pick up all five of his babies and he couldn’t leave two of them in the room unprotected as Draco and Max fought behind him, one of them going through the coffee table this time, splinters of wood stabbing into his body, making him clutch at his babies tighter. One of them cried out in pain and then started crying hysterically and Blaise flew into the room and he took a moment to look around in utter shock at what was happening and he immediately went to try and split Max and Draco up.

Harry took the small lifeline to shift himself and the babies into the furthest corner of the room and he pressed himself against them, shielding them, wrapping his wings around the sides of them as he listened to the snarls and screeches behind him as his two injured babies cried.

A crack and a meaty thud and Harry couldn’t stop himself from looking over his shoulder to see Blaise spread eagled on the floor and Max launching a new, ferocious looking attack at Draco, whose knuckles were bloodied and swollen.

Harry screamed long and loud, calling to any and all family members for immediate help. The first to respond to him was Nasta, Harry felt his responding call reverberate deep in his belly and he felt so reassured. His top dominant was coming back to him. He’d put a stop to this.

Something smashed on the wall over his head and he screamed again in fear, calling out again to all family members as he heard something heavy tip over. Too many calls to count reverberated back to him and he cried out in pain when something sharp dug at his exposed wings.

He flinched and curled around his babies tighter for fear of something happening to them, but as he did so, a horrible pain flared in his leg and he whimpered. He called out for help a third time. He just needed his babies to be safe, he could hear his three other babies crying for him from up the stairs and he couldn’t move to reach them. He couldn’t leave his other five unprotected to reach the three left upstairs.

Someone pressed against his back and curled around him and the babies and he heard shouting and more growls than there should have been as he tried to shush his hysterically crying Braiden. Leolin had gone quiet.

He peeked out and caught sight of dark green wings with slightly paler green scales. Alexander. He risked peeking out into the room and found Myron…no, Xerxes wrestling with Max and the twins, Nico and Ceph, wrestling with Draco. It was comforting to know that even though he’d almost killed Cepheus, he still came when he let out a distress call.

Alexander’s face was like carved stone and when he turned his head slightly when Richard, dressed in a jumper and jeans, arrived just a heartbeat before Myron, who was in a smart suit and tie overlaid with an expensive robe, Alexander’s eyes glinted like stone. Richard jumped right into trying to restrain Max alongside the struggling Xerxes, Myron took a moment to remove his robe and tie first, before he joined his brother and his mate in restraining Max, doing better than the both of them as he gripped Max around the chest and flattened him to the floor with his own, considerable, body weight, pinning him down and restraining his arms while Xerxes grappled with his kicking, thrashing legs. Richard went to sit by his head, trying to talk him down as Nasta finally arrived home. He froze to the spot, looking at Alexander shielding him and the children against a wall in the corner of the room, to Max still snarling and Draco still fighting with the twins and the living room in ruins.

“What happened?” He asked in a soft, quiet voice that thrummed with his anger and authority.

All activity stopped and Harry huddled down into himself to prevent his dominant from seeing him. He’d never known Nasta to be so angry before, he could feel that anger, he could practically taste it in the air.

“I asked a question!” He exploded, his voice echoing off of the broken walls of the living room.

Harry huddled down further, shifting his aching, hurting body behind Alexander, who was holding him and protecting him still.

“We heard Harry’s call and responded accordingly. Max and Draco were already fighting when we arrived and Harry was here, curled up against the wall protecting the children. We don’t know why the fight started or how.” Alexander answered.

Nasta nodded before he spotted Blaise, knocked out on the floor and partially covered in debris and he strode to him, kneeling down and checking his pulse before shifting broken bits of wood and brick off of him and hauling him into his lap.

Standing up, Nasta deposited the unconscious Blaise carefully onto the one settee that was still standing, even if it had been knocked out of place.

“I will not ask again.” He snarled gratingly, directed at his mates this time. “What happened?!”

Max bucked under Myron and growled back at Nasta, still in his feral state and Draco went to launch himself at Max, sensing an easy target as he was already pinned down. Nasta caught him around the waist with one arm and used his other hand to grip that blond hair, forcing Draco’s neck to his teeth, sinking them in over the jugular vein.

Nasta threw the blond to the floor in a heap.

“WHAT HAPPENED?!” He shouted furiously, his voice echoing off of the broken walls, looking completely deranged with his mouth smeared with Draco’s freshly spilt blood.
“It’s Harry’s fault!” Draco shouted at him.

Harry felt rage build within him so quickly that he didn’t even think.

“How dare you try and blame this on me!” He screamed, ripping himself from Alexander’s hold and moving to confront Draco. “I was trying to protect our babies!”

He took two angry steps forward before his left leg folded on him and he hit the floor. He was almost sick with shock as he saw the state of his left leg. There was a large, sharp splinter of wood stuck right through his lower leg and he could see the bone.

“Get out!” He screamed at Draco. “You get the fuck out and don’t come back! How dare you do all of this and then try and blame it on me! It was all you! Why do you always have to pick a fight? Look at what you’ve done!”

Harry swept an arm to encompass the whole room before he pointedly turned his back on Draco and crawled back to his babies to check them over now that the fighting had been stopped. He was hyperventilating and close to tears because of his anger. The pain of his injuries hadn’t hit him just yet, he was still thrumming with adrenaline and he was in shock.

He saw red however when he found the open, profusely bleeding gash on his baby Braiden’s leg. He screamed in fury, enough to rattle the windows, and he got his feet under him and he launched himself at Draco, getting in two good swipes before Draco hit him back. Feeling the stabbing sensation of claws digging into his belly, Harry hit the floor and then Nasta was there, throwing Draco through the front window.

Unable to contain the fury of Max, who was enraged by being forced to helplessly watch as his submissive was gutted in front of him, Myron was thrown off of him and Max followed Draco through the window to restart their fight on the front lawn.

Harry tasted iron on his tongue and he gagged, spitting out a mouthful of blood onto the already ruined carpet.

“Shit, you really need a Healer.”

Harry looked up at Xerxes, who looked so much like Myron and he tried to speak, only to spray out more blood.

“Myron, go and get Julius and Claire.” Xerxes ordered his youngest brother. “Nico, floo call Saint Mungos, Harry’s Healer is called Almus, if I remember correctly.”
“Maximilian Almus.” Alexander confirmed as he used his own shirt to put pressure on the gash on the sobbing Braiden’s leg.

“Ceph, we need boiled water and towels.” Xerxes carried on.

“Baiden.” Harry spluttered, trying to reach out for his crying son.

“He’ll be fine, just stop trying to move and stop talking.” Xerxes ordered. “Myron, go and break those boys up, quickly. The last thing we need here is a fatality.” He added when Myron appeared back in the living room with his shocked brother, Julius, and his sister-in-law, Claire, who gaped at the sight before her before brushing it off and getting to business. “Julius, get upstairs and look after the three up there, take those three babies with you and send Aneirin back down to help outside.” Xerxes carried on.

Julius nodded and picked up the two girls and the still naked Calix and took them up the stairs, leaving Alexander with the crying Braiden and a shocked, scared looking Leolin, whose golden eyes were as wide as saucers with fear. The little Faerie was as stiff as a board and he was completely silent and still, like a statue, as his tiny chest rose and fell rapidly as he hyperventilated.

Aneirin didn’t even bother coming down the stairs, he jumped out of the window and flew to where Max and Nasta were trying to beat Draco into submission and Myron and Richard were trying to stop them and calm them down. They were too far gone into their feral mind sets to even recognise anyone around them, which was only adding fuel to the volatile fire.

Healer Almus arrived next and he froze on the spot as he took in the damage, to Harry dribbling blood from his mouth and the bleeding baby. Claire had taken one look at Harry’s wound and she’d sent Nicodemus straight to the Counsel Halls to get the senior Healer, Alfred Grant.

Healer Almus went to Braiden and removed the shirt to see the gash underneath as the sounds of growls, snarls and roars from outside trailed off into an eerie silence.

Harry gagged on more blood and Xerxes wiped it away from his chin without comment with his own sleeve as Claire did her all to stem the blood from Harry’s belly wound with a damp towel that Cepheus had rushed to give her.

“Someone put out a floo call to Jasper Cole.” Healer Almus told them as he caught sight of Leolin. “This baby is in shock.”

“Leelin.” Harry choked out, spraying more blood everywhere.
“Stop speaking.” Xerxes told him sternly, shifting him on his lap and wiping his mouth again.

Another Healer arrived and Harry peered blearily up at the ancient looking man, with his fluffy white hair and his withered skin. Harry had never actually seen a Dracken so old, but the Healer still moved as well as a man half his apparent age as he bent down quickly to take over from Claire, barking out orders to her. His knees hadn’t even clicked all that much and his hands were very steady as they prodded around his open belly.

Nasta was back and he looked no worse for wear, but Harry could almost see the visible haze of anger around him as he dropped down in front of him and raised a hand to stroke his cheek so gently. It was at complete odds to the way that he looked, but it went a long way to reassuring him that Nasta wasn’t angry with him.

“Are you his dominant?” The elderly Dracken asked, his pale green eyes narrowing on Nasta.

“I am.” Nasta replied strongly, glaring at the Healer before turning soft eyes back onto Harry.

“I would suggest giving him your blood. It’s not going to completely fix him at this stage, but it’ll help with his back, head and facial injuries. I want him fit enough to travel to the Healing Halls.”

Nasta used his already bloody fangs to tear into his blooded arm and he held it out to Harry. Harry tentatively latched on and sucked. It took moments for the tightness in his face to relax as his bashed up face was healed. It barely made a difference to his belly wound or his ruined leg, but it did help a little.

“You, take this young man to the Healing Halls.” The Healer directed at Xerxes.

Nasta looked over and Harry saw his eyes flash dangerously in anger. He got up and went right to where the two babies were, with Healer Almus and Healer Cole.

“What happened to the two babies?” Healer Cole demanded.

“I tried to protect them and I couldn’t.” Harry sobbed. “I couldn’t cover all of them and Braiden got hit with bits from the coffee table and Draco knocked Leolin’s bassinet off its stand before I could get to him. I couldn’t protect them.” He sobbed, feeling useless and worthless.

“You need to get to the Healing Halls. Maddison, get him there now.” The elderly Healer demanded again, standing up with more clicking of knees before giving Xerxes several kicks to get him moving.

“My babies!” Harry called out in protest.

“They have enough family members to look after them, you are going to die if you aren’t treated. Your stomach and intestines are hanging out of the gaping wound in your belly and you’re losing too much blood.”

The Healer didn’t even try to sugar coat anything and Harry tried to look down, only to have his head pinned back by Xerxes and he felt the sickening sensation of Apparation. He vomited so hard upon landing that he blacked out.

Nasta was pissed. He had never been so absolutely angry before in his life and as he surveyed the damage done to his home, he felt a flare of rage build up within him again.

Two of his sons were injured, Leolin had been rushed to the hospital by Healer Cole, Claire going with them to keep a familial eye on him as well as to offer a helping hand. Xerxes had rushed Harry off to the Dracken Healing Halls with Healer Grant and he was in a really bad way and Blaise still hadn’t regained consciousness. Healer Almus was worried about a bad concussion and possible brain damage as not even a strong revival spell was stirring him.

“He needs to go to the hospital too.” Healer Almus told him sternly. “He’s not waking up, he needs to have a fully body check, particularly his head. This is not a good sign.”

Nasta felt sick as he looked to the huge, blossoming bruise on the top of Blaise’s forehead. It was going purple and it was bleeding underneath the skin where blood vessels had burst from the force that he was hit with. Harry’s insides were hanging out and Blaise might be brain damaged and he wasn’t waking up.

He closed his eyes and tried to keep himself calm.

“Take him to the hospital, contact me if you need any relevant paperwork signed, his Mother is
“We really need his Mother to do the paperwork, you aren’t married, so it’s a muddied area…”

“She’s on a heat period and doesn’t even know that her son might die!” Nasta hissed, glaring at the Healer. “You will accept me as his guardian and allow me to make all of the decisions regarding his care or I will kill you and eat your remains to dispose of your body. I will not have my subordinate mate die because of you and your stonewalling. It’s a ridiculous fucking law and everyone knows it! You will not stand in my way of looking after him…I will not let you stand in my way.”

No one said a thing, they just stood there, staring at him in a new light, but he didn’t care. He meant what he’d said. He would not lose Blaise because of stupid hospital regulations that failed to recognise their mateship and thus needed Blaise’s parents to sign everything. It had been the same with Draco when he had been sick and unconscious in the hospital too and he would not put up with it. Not now, not in this dire situation.

Blaise’s Mother was a Dracken and on a heat period to boot and Maximiliano was dead. He would not allow Blaise to die just because his parents were unavailable to sign the necessary hospital forms for him. He’d take matters into his own hands if he was forced to, but he would not let his family crumble in this way. He would not allow Blaise to die because of mere hospital regulations.

He sent his Father with Blaise and he went to see Braiden, who had dried tear tracks on his face and dried blood on his leg still, where a piece of wood had gashed it. He picked his son up from Alexander’s arms and he sat on the settee that Blaise had just been taken from.

He calmly took a wet wipe out of the changing bag, it had been kicked halfway across the room during the fight from its usual place under a side table and it was liberally covered with plaster dust from the ruined walls. He carefully and gently cleaned off the blood from Braiden’s healed leg, being extra gentle and comforting his son with soft, soothing words and encouragement. There wasn’t a scar or even a mark to speak of on him, but Nasta’s memory could clearly bring up the sight of the bleeding gash that had opened up Braiden’s leg. He didn’t blame Harry one bit for launching himself back at Draco after seeing it, the one person that his submissive saw as the reason for Braiden’s injury. That in itself was very telling. Harry’s submissive blamed the fight solely on Draco.

“Daddy.” Braiden sniffled, holding his chubby little arms out for a hug and Nasta’s anger surged, making him go light headed as a ringing noise filled his head, even as he pulled Braiden to his chest, holding him close.

Little arms hugged around his neck, little hands curling into his hair, even as Braiden dribbled over his neck, either from his mouth or nose, Nasta didn’t care as he held the hurt little boy in his arms.

Max strode back in, his bare chest displaying his wounds of battle as he wiped at the bleeding cuts with a towel.
“Is Blaise okay?” He asked gruffly.

“Blaise is at the hospital. He hasn’t regained consciousness, not even with a revival spell and Healer Almus is worried about brain damage. Harry’s insides are on the outside and Leolin’s in the hospital.”

Max’s face went bloodless and his legs went like jelly as he collapsed down to the floor, right where he was standing.

“What happened?” Nasta asked with an edge to his voice. “Draco said it was Harry’s fault, but Harry said it was all Draco.”

“I’ve been wondering about that myself.” Myron said as he folded his arms over his chest.

“It was Draco and probably me as well, with likely a touch of Harry.” Max answered. “I was recording the girls on the floor and Draco brought in Braiden and Calix. They were both in just their nappies as they’d just been bathed. Calix took his straight off, he didn’t want it on and Draco took offence to me recording Calix while naked. I felt like I was being accused of something, especially after the start of our mateship and being accused of paedophilia while with Harry. Draco tried to dress him again, but he didn’t want his nappy on and Harry told him to leave Calix alone and things got a bit heated and Harry told us to go out in the garden if we were going to fight.”

“What happened to that idea?” Nasta demanded.

“You know that you do not fight around your submissive or your children.” Myron growled.

“I’ll deal with this!” Nasta hissed at him aggressively.

“Draco started, that’s what happened.” Max interrupted before his Father and his top dominant could start on one another and yet another fight broke out. “He told Harry that he was only a submissive and to know his place. That he had to do as he was told and not give the orders. Harry was visibly hurt, but then he just clenched his jaw, got a murderous look on his face and he demanded that Draco left. Draco brought the hostility up by snarling and bringing out his wings. Harry put Calix down and behind him and brought his own wings out to protect the kids and he tried lurching forward to get Leolin from his bassinet, but Draco launched at him too, forcing Harry to move back and I intercepted Draco and threw him away bodily. I don’t remember much of what happened afterwards, my Dracken took over.”
“One of you knocked Leolin’s bassinet over before Harry could get him out and he landed in a heap on the floor and Harry almost had his head kicked in trying to get him to safety. Someone went through the coffee table and the fragments of that are what gashed Braiden and a splinter of the table went right through Harry’s lower leg.”

“This wasn’t meant to happen.” Max sobbed. “Harry and I were getting on just fine until Draco got involved. Why does everything with Draco have to be a fight?”

“Harry said something similar.” Nasta sighed. “I think its past time that Draco went for those anger management classes. If this ever happens again, I’ll kill those who were involved. Our children were injured today, Blaise and Harry might die from what happened here today. How can that not be a wakeup call?”

“What do you want to do about the house?” Alexander asked as he cradled a tearful Tegan in his arms.

Nasta looked around sadly, at the ruined furniture, the destroyed walls and the smashed photo frames and he shook his head.

“The foundations need to be checked before we even think of repairing it and with Harry, Blaise and Leolin in the hospital, I don’t even want to think about it. The build of the new house is finished. I was waiting until the end of the court case to move in, because I didn’t want Harry to be stressed by the move as well as the court case.”

“I think he’ll be more stressed with the repair of this place and having to come back here with the memories of the fight and the injuries.” Max said. “Let’s just pack up some things for us and the kids and move in, we can move Harry and Blaise back in when they’re released from the hospital.”

No one mentioned, though all of them were fully aware of, the underlying ‘if’ that followed that statement. None of them wanted to be the one that said it aloud, even though all of them were thinking of it…seeing Harry with his insides hanging out of his belly and Blaise not even responding to revival spells, there was a big chance that one of them, perhaps even both of them, were not going to be coming home.

Nasta buried his face in his baby boy’s hair and he inhaled deeply. When he’d heard the distress call from Harry, he’d dropped everything and he’d run to the Apparation point at the Dragon Reserve. Hearing two additional distress calls, he had never run so fast in all his life and when he’d arrived back to find his home in the state it had been, when he’d seen his mates fighting and his submissive and children cowering in a corner…he’d lost it. His anger was so paramount that he couldn’t even breathe properly. He still couldn’t get a handle on his anger, even now he was struggling and it was pounding inside of him, trying to find a way out, trying to find a release.

He inhaled deeply again and controlled himself. He’d already had his outburst, now he needed to control himself. He needed to face Draco again and he needed to keep his head or he’d end up killing his subordinate for what had happened here today.

“I’ll go and pack up the kids’ stuff.” Max said as he stroked the back of Braiden’s head before getting up and swiping his bloodied towel back over his bleeding chest and arms.

“Come here first.” Nasta ordered, he bit back into his own arm and held it out.

“I deserve these…”

“Drink my blood, immediately. I am holding onto my anger by a thread, do not push me.” Nasta growled dangerously.

Max responded to the growl and submissively cocked his head back, exposing his throat for a handful of heartbeats before he followed the issued order and sealed his mouth around the four puncture holes in Nasta’s forearm and sucked.

His smaller wounds closed up after the first swallow of blood and after several more mouthfuls, his larger, deeper cuts had all closed up, leaving him in perfect condition once again. He licked Nasta’s arm and thanked him softly and then he left to go and pack up their children’s nursery.

All of the toys and things in the living room would have to be disposed of and they needed a new bassinet for Leolin after…after the one downstairs had been broken. He felt sick as he thought of his little Leolin being knocked flying. He lost the battle with his stomach and he rushed to the bathroom to vomit.

He didn’t even try and stop the tears from falling as he sobbed. He should have tried to control the situation better, he should have grabbed Draco and dragged him out of the house before things had gone that far…hindsight truly was a curse as he thought of a hundred different ways that he could and should have controlled the situation better as acting top dominant.

He pulled himself together as best as he could and he went into his bedroom and got out several suitcases and, using magic, he packed as much into them as he could, which considering they were magically expanded, was more than enough room. He left the full suitcases on the landing and took the others into his babies’ nursery to pack up all their things ready to move into their new house.

This was supposed to be a happy occasion. Nasta had started the plans for this house just months after mating to Harry. He had found out about it all by accident, after he’d come home early one afternoon to find Nasta in talks with an estate agent about buying a massive plot of land just outside a quaint little neighbourhood and Nasta had let him in on the plans and had even allowed him to adjust any designs of the house that he wanted. Of course he’d gone and given himself a much bigger kitchen and made the utility room separate and he definitely made doubly sure that Harry had a lot more room in each of the planned rooms.

The official build had been started a month after the design had been finalised and they’d gotten the planning permission that they needed and Max had been so excited, but Nasta had made him swear not to tell any of the others. It was going to be a massive, joyous surprise.

The house had finally been finished at the start of the year, just after the girls had been born and he and Nasta had gone to survey it and check it over. It was absolutely perfect and he couldn’t wait to get into his new, massive, kitchen and start cooking for his growing family.

He and Nasta had decorated and furnished the house themselves and they’d set everything up ready for them to just pick up and leave, all they needed were their clothes, the kids toys and all of their homey, sentimental possessions. It was going to be the best surprise to Harry ever. Only now they were moving in because this house had been ruined thanks to Draco. It took the magic of it away.

Max hated Draco, and himself, for ruining this surprise for Harry. Harry who had been begging for a bigger house for almost a year now. It had taken all of their persuasion skills to keep Harry from looking for a house on his own, and to keep their own mouths shut about the house that was being built especially for him and their growing family that backed onto a small forest and was situated on the edge of a beautiful, friendly neighbourhood.

The more Harry asked for a bigger house, almost begging on occasion, the more they felt terrible about keeping the house from him. Perhaps if they’d told him about it before now, regardless of the stress of the court case, they wouldn’t have had to have ruined their own surprise. But now Draco had ruined it for them. Almost two years they’d kept this secret, all throughout the designing and the planning and then the actual build and the final viewing, through the papering and carpeting, the furnishing and the final clean-up. The house was perfect and ready for them to move in, but they had decided to wait until after the court case to minimise the stress on Harry and now Draco had ruined two years of planning because of one stupid fight over Calix crawling around their own home naked.

He piled the rest of the suitcases on top of the other ones and levitated all of them down the stairs and he put them down gently by the fireplace, ready to be transported to the new house.

“All of our clothes are packed up.” Max told Nasta subserviently. The last thing anyone needed right now was a clash between dominants because Nasta, as the top dominant, thought that he wasn’t showing enough respect.

Nasta nodded. “I packed up some of the things that could be salvaged from this room. Especially the photos, the food in the kitchen needs to be moved too.”

Max nodded. “I’ll go and do that.”

Nasta watched Max go and fisted at his own hair. He had the feeling that he was going to be grey through stress very soon. Braiden had fallen asleep and he’d given him over to Richard to hold as he packed up what he could save. He was just thankful that the wards that Blaise had put on the incredibly rare and delicate book were strong enough to have saved it from being damaged in the fight. Blaise would have been completely devastated if the book had been in any way damaged.

“You never mentioned that you had a new house, though I knew that you boys were planning to move.” Alexander said as he calmed down the sniffling Tegan, who had been brought down from upstairs with Farren and Regan.

“It was going to be my gift to the mateship.” He answered softly. “I had it planned out and I bought the land. Max found out early on, when he came home early to find me finalising the deal with the estate agent over the land that I was buying. So it became a joint project. It would be our gift to our much younger mates. He looked over my initial design and altered and improved it and then we got the planning permission that we needed and then the building started. It was finally finished earlier this year, in early February. We were waiting until after the court case to tell the others, it was going to be a surprise for Harry after the stress and bad memories of the court case.”

“I’m sure he’ll love it.” Richard said. “He’s been begging for a bigger house since Braiden’s first birthday and now he’s almost two and you have twins on top of that now too. I did say to Myron that you boys were beginning to look more and more like sardines in an ever shrinking tin.”

Nasta couldn’t bring himself to smile. He just put the bags he’d packed on top of the suitcases that Max had prepared and he tried to figure out how he was going to get all his children to the new house safely. Dain and Kailen were going to be livid when they found out that Leolin was in the hospital due to a fight between his Dracken parents. The court were going to be right on his back and he’d have to deal with them too. Damn Draco to hell for putting them in this position.

“I should have handled it better. I’m thirty-two and I was acting top dominant in your place! I should have just grabbed Draco and dragged him outside before Harry and the kids were ever put into such a position of danger.”

“Hindsight and such.” Nasta said with a humourless smile. “I understand, you did what you could at the time. We need to pull it together for the kids. The new house was baby proofed, wasn’t it?”

Max nodded. “I covered all the sockets and put the cupboard and door locks on myself. The baby gates need to go up, though.”

“We’ll get the kids to the house first, then we’ll take it in turns to get the stuff and move it.”

“If you need any help, boys, all you need to do is ask for it.” Alexander offered as he cradled a now sleeping Tegan.

“Help would be appreciated, thank you.” Nasta replied. It would stop him from blowing up or hiding himself away. Not to mention that it gave everyone something to do other than agonising over what had happened this afternoon.

“Where are we going to first?” Richard asked. “We didn’t even know that you had this massive project going on, let alone where exactly that it is.”

Nasta took a hold of Richard and Myron’s arms, after Richard had given a sleeping Braiden to Max, and Apparated them to the driveway of the house and he finally broke a smile at the looks on their faces.

“This…this is incredible!” Myron said astonished, looking up at the three storey, absolutely beautiful house.

“It’s four storeys if you include the attic space, five if you include the basement too.” Nasta told them as he led them into the house, tapping the lock with his wand to open the door in lieu of his key, which was in an envelope back at the old house along with the deeds and all the relevant paperwork.

“You had this built?” Richard asked.

“From the very foundations. It was just a huge grassy plain when I bought it, overgrown and derelict. No one wanted it because of the half a mile area of forest that surrounded the field of grass on all three sides, but for me, for us, it would be perfect. The council here were thinking of making it a picnic area as no one was interested in buying it, but it’s too far from the actual neighbourhood and they already have a children’s play park, so the plans fell through as it would have likely been rarely used. They were overjoyed when I told them that I planned to build a house, without cutting down any of the forest and thus ruining the natural landscaping. They gave me planning permission almost immediately. I made sure to have runes and wards layered through the entire foundations and around the property line. It’s as strong, as private and as safe as I can make it.”

“This is amazing. It’s huge!” Myron said as he looked at the hardwood flooring in the hallway.

The front door led straight into a massive, wide corridor and he could see that it led all the way down to the open kitchen at the back of the house.

“I can see what Maxie meant.” Richard laughed. “Does that kitchen take up the entire back of the house?”

Nasta smiled a bit. “Almost. The family room is on the left and there are two empty rooms that are going to be studies on the right from where we’re standing. There’s an empty room to this side of the house, a small room that’ll be a home gym and a storage closet and this room is a massive downstairs bathroom and the beyond that is the living room.” Nasta told them, pointing right and then left to the doors set to either side of the corridor they were standing in.

“Right, where do you want the kids? We can stay with them while you get what you need to.”

“The family room isn’t connected to the floo, only the living room next door to it is, so while Harry, Blaise and Leolin are in the hospital, I want to stay close to the floo connection.”

Nasta walked down the corridor to where it branched off into two more long corridors on either side. The corridors were actually set in a cross shape in, near enough, the middle of the ground floor, leading to more rooms on either side of the house.

“The stairs to the upper levels and down to the basement are down that way.” Nasta told them, pointing down to the right corridor. “As well as the small gym that Max wanted.”

They went down the left corridor and passed another door. “This is just another entrance to the bathroom and this is the living room.”

They came out into a massive sitting room with an empty fireplace and plenty of windows, there were three settees and a gorgeous rug, but other than a coffee table and an empty bookcase, it was quite bare.
“It’s not lived in yet and it’s hardly homely, but eight babies and Harry will soon sort that out.” Nasta said as he took out his wand and ignited the fire.

“Where does that door lead?” Richard asked, pointing to the closed double doors on the right.

“That door leads into the larger family room. I did worry that it was too big, but Max loves the space. Then I think he’s just happy that the kitchen is the biggest room in the house. Though he did want to make the master bedroom bigger, but I beat him down on that. Harry likes the bedroom to be smaller and cosier, more intimate.”

“I like how Harry thinks.” Richard laughed. “Now, let’s get those babies here. You can make the rounds at the hospital then.” He added more seriously.

The three of them Apparated back to the living room of the old house and nothing much had changed. Max was cuddling a naked Calix and Farren to keep them both off of the debris strewn floor and the twins, Nico and Ceph, had their arms full too.

“Take those two to the new house, Max.” Nasta asked before taking Eva and Ave into his own arms and Apparating after Max.

He landed directly in the new living room and put the two girls down onto the floor. Max had done the same to Farren and Calix and the naked Calix screeched in excitement and he was off exploring the new space excitedly.

Myron arrived holding Regan and Alexander’s arm. The older man still had a sleeping Tegan, and now also a sleeping Braiden, cuddled into his chest.

“This room is beautiful.” Alexander complimented. “Harry will love it.”

Nasta nodded and he felt his chest tighten. He furiously pushed away thoughts that Harry and Blaise might never see this house. That they might never get to bring their Leolin here.

They watched Calix for a while as he crawled around everywhere, pulling his naked self up to look into everything before he sat knocking on the door that led into the family room.

“Well, he’s much happier. They can actually move around now and have their own space to play in without getting in each other’s way.” Max said as he took a suitcase from his Uncle Nicodemus, who had been Apparated there by Richard along with Cepheus.

“This is definitely a massive step up from the old house. It’s so much bigger.”

“I’m going to go to the hospital and check on Blaise and Leolin. Then I’ll go and see Harry at the Counsel Halls and I’ll be back.” Nasta said, unable to wait any longer. “Max, the kids need their dinner, it’s getting late. If you don’t feel up to cooking, just give them jars, but we can’t break their routine when they’re in a new house, the routine needs to stay the same to help comfort them.”

Max nodded his understanding as he watched Nasta leave through the floo. He still couldn’t believe that this had happened. It hadn’t quite sunk in yet as it all seemed too surreal. He just wanted to go back to that morning and redo the entire day all over again. He wanted to fix this and do things completely differently to prevent all of this from ever happening. It really should never have happened.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Aneirin sat next to the nearly comatose nineteen year old and he sighed heavily with anguish. He looked to the serious bruise taking over Blaise’s face and head, which had had to be shaved with a spell. Draco had not only punched the front top of Blaise’s head, he’d also punched him in the side of the head, right on one of the fault lines of his skull. That was the reason that Blaise wasn’t waking up.

“How is he?”

Aneirin shot up, nearly on complete automatic as he heard Nasta’s voice, and he pulled his son into a tight hug.

“How are you?” Aneirin asked.

Nasta just shook his head. “Leolin seems to be alright. The preliminary tests are all coming back good and there’s no damage done to his head, neck or back. The Healers were worried about spinal injuries, but those worries were unfounded. He’s alright, he’s just in shock. Healer Cole is keeping him in for observation and more tests, just in case, but everything’s looking alright for him. I told them to do anything and everything that they could to help him and keep him safe. How is Blaise?”
“I’m so sorry, Nasta.”

Aneirin watched as Nasta’s face went as pale as chalk.

“What’s wrong?” He asked breathlessly.

“It seems that Draco hit him on a fault line of the skull, right between the two plates at the top side of his head. As you can see, the Healers had to shave his head in order to do a close scan without his hair in the way of their wands and he’s already been force fed several potions.”

“They never asked me to sign anything.”

“I signed it.” Aneirin assured him. “You frightened Healer Almus into compliance, so he let me sign the needed paperwork to get it done and Blaise treated as soon as possible. Blaise had swelling to his brain and a slow bleed too, the Healers need to work quickly. It was a hell of a punch, Nassa, right to the side of the skull and to the top front of his head. He might still be brain damaged and he might have amnesia as well.”

Nasta put his head into his hands and sobbed. “I can’t…I can’t believe this.”

“How’s Harry?”

“In a bad way. He blacked out after being Apparated to the halls and he hasn’t regained consciousness either. There are three of them working on him right now and I couldn’t stay for long.”

Aneirin comforted his son as best as he could, but there wasn’t much that he could do or say.

“At least Leolin is alright.” He settled for saying and Nasta nodded and sucked in a deep breath and pulled himself together visibly.

“I need to go and tell Max.”
“How is Max?”

“He’s being really subservient and submissive.”

“He’s trying to make things less stressful for you by staying out of your way.” Aneirin told him shrewdly. “Just be fair to him and don’t take your anger or frustration out on him without just cause and he’ll start poking out of his shell again soon enough. He’s wary of you at the moment because of the situation, he’s expecting your anger and a punishment, so he’s trying to lessen it by behaving himself and rolling over for you.”

Nasta nodded and dried his eyes, sniffing hard. He cleared his throat and went to Blaise and he kissed his slack lips. He hated that all he could think about as he kissed Blaise was that he’d been drinking too much coffee again as his lips were really dry and chapped. He hated more that it was the most normal thought he’d had since that morning.

“I’ll stay here and watch over him, you just do what you need to.”

Nasta nodded and handed over a small slip of parchment. “Our new floo address. The old house is ruined, physically and in our memories. We’ve got the kids at the new house and it’s where we’ll be waiting.”

Aneirin nodded and read the slip of paper. “I’ll give it to Healer Almus and to Healer Odell, who’s in charge of Blaise, when I next see them, so they know where to find you if it’s needed.”

Nasta nodded and left again, going back to check on Leolin before going back to Harry and then finally back to the new house and to Max.

Aneirin sat down and looked back to the battered nineteen year old lying in the bed and he sighed. Blaise was too young for this sort of horror, unfortunately it was a typical situation for Drackens. This sort of occurrence was commonplace and it was devastating for those left behind when they came back from their feral mind set and they finally realised what they’d done in its entirety. Draco was going to be distraught when the weight of the situation finally settled on him. Aneirin just hoped that he was apologetic as well for all that he’d done today, because if he wasn’t, then he might not ever be forgiven.

He looked back at Blaise lying straight and floppy in the bed, his head shaved and his face severely bruised. He had to wonder that even if Draco was genuinely apologetic, would any of the others ever forgive him for this.
Max found himself lost in thought as he rolled the vegetable and fish mixture he’d cooked up into small balls. He’d mashed up sweet potato and mixed it up with a bit of cooked onion, sweetcorn, peas, grated carrot, flaked white fish and vegetable stock soaked risotto rice and he was in the process of rolling the mixture into small balls before egg washing them and rolling them in breadcrumbs.

The familiar act of cooking was working to settle him down, but the joy he had been dreaming about for nearly two years, of finally cooking in his brand new kitchen, was absent. He was worried, upset, stressed and he felt sick and miserable. His heart was pounding with worry for Leolin, their fragile, delicate little Faerie baby. For Harry, his sweet, strong Harry whose guts had only been held in by his Uncle Xerxes’ hand. For Blaise, who had bravely jumped in between him and Draco and was only trying to split them up. He didn’t deserve what was happening to him, none of them did.

“Max!”

He jerked and almost put his hand through the porcelain bowl. He cursed and turned to see his Dads’ behind him, looking concerned.

“What is it?”

“You’ve been spaced out for nearly ten minutes.” His Dad, Richard, told him worriedly.

Max sighed and wiped his forehead with his shoulder and he went back to making little balls with his mixture.

“What did you want?” He asked gruffly, his throat emotion clogged.

“Are you sure you want to cook?” His Dad, Myron, asked.

“I’m sure.” He answered tersely. “Has Nasta come back yet?”

“No, I’m sure you would be the first person that he seeks out when he does come home.”
They fell into silence as Max finished coating the last ball in breadcrumbs and he got a clean frying pan out of the cupboard and splashed a little bit of oil into it.

“This kitchen is amazing, Max. It’s huge.” Richard said to break the awful silence that had descended. “It’s beautiful too, the entire house is.”

“We wanted it to be big and beautiful for Harry.” Max said in a rather fragile voice.

Myron strode forward and turned his slightly shorter son into a tight hug, pressing a kiss to his worry wrinkled forehead.

“I’m not going to lie to you and tell you that everything is going to be fine, because it’s not going to be.”

“Myron!” Richard snapped.

“No. You and I both know that this is a delicate situation sitting on the edge of a knife blade.” Myron replied sternly. “Harry and Blaise are in a very bad way. Leolin was knocked from his bassinet and was in a heap on the floor and that’s before we get to the situation with Draco.”

“Don’t mention his name.” Max snarled.

“You’ve just proven my point exactly, Max. I cannot lie to you and say that things are going to be fine when you can’t even bear to hear your subordinate mate’s name. Things have changed now, they’re different and none of you can go back to how you were before.”

Max took a moment to absorb that before bursting into tears, which startled both Myron and Richard, who rushed to comfort him.

“You’ll get through this, love.” Richard told him, rubbing his son’s back.

“How?” Max sobbed. “How can I get through this when everything has fallen apart?”
“I’ll get you through it.”

Max looked up as a new set of hands pulled him into a tight hug and he all but fell onto the shorter Nasta and inhaled the comforting scent that surrounded him.

“How are they?” He asked, all but begging for news.

“Leolin is going to be fine. Healer Cole says that he’s no worse for wear and though he’s staying in overnight, it’s only a precaution as he is in shock. He’ll be home tomorrow morning.”

“Oh, thank Merlin! Miracles do happen.” Max clutched harder at Nasta and tried to absorb some of his amazing strength. He didn’t understand how Nasta was so put together when he felt like he was falling apart at the seams. “What about Harry and Blaise?”

“Sit down, Max.” Nasta told him.

“No. No.” Max shook his head in denial. “No, tell me that they’re both alright!”

“Just…sit down. Please.” Nasta coaxed him as he pulled him to their new kitchen table and got him sitting down.

“Harry blacked out as soon as he arrived at the Healing Halls.” Nasta started gently. “He’s in a bad way, but he’s being well looked after. He has three Dracken Healers around him and two trainees and Claire playing runners for anything that the Healers need. I’ll go back after the kids are in bed and check up on what’s happening, but I was told just now, in the last five minutes, that they expect Harry to make a full recovery after a lot of rest to recuperate. His abdominal muscles have been all but destroyed, so sitting up and even moving is going to be impossible for him for some time, so we need to prepare for that.”

Max’s head hit the table and felt his eyes welling up, even as he breathed a sigh of relief. He didn’t care if he had to carry Harry around for the rest of his life, just so long as he was going to survive.

“It’s Blaise, Max.” Nasta told him, cutting his relief short. “The blow to his head was with such a force that it caused his brain to swell inside his skull. He has a slow bleed into his brain too, Draco hit him where two plates of his skull meet together, right on the fault line. There is a high chance that he has amnesia, brain damage, or that he just won’t wake up at all.”
“He was….he was only trying to break us up.” Max said weakly. “He was trying to get between us to split up the fight. He wasn’t even a part of it.”

“I’m going to go back and see what’s happening a bit later.” Nasta said, taking Max’s hands and squeezing them. “I’m going to get us through this, Max. Just keep yourself calm and keep the kids happy. They know something is wrong and they’re already calling for Harry, just…just feed them, keep to their routine and then get them into bed and then we can do what we need to.”

“I need Firewhiskey.” Max warbled.

Nasta nodded. “I have a bottle. It was going to be for the first night that we moved in, a house warming present for all of us to share. When I bought it, I was imagining all five of us sharing it together, laughing and joking, our kids in bed as we tried to sort the packed boxes out to get our new house into some semblance of order as we started a new chapter in our lives. I never thought that we’d be drinking it in this house, our son and two mates in the hospital and one mate gone.”

“So that’s it, Draco’s gone?” Myron asked.

Nasta sighed heavily. “That’s got to be up to Harry, we are his mates first and foremost and if he feels that he can move past this, then the rest of us can work on it too, but it’s Blaise that I’m most concerned about. Draco almost killed him and he still might have yet. I don’t think Harry would forgive him if anything more serious had happened to Leolin and I can’t see him forgiving Draco if Blaise dies as a result of this. But on top of that, if Blaise can’t get over what happened to him, I can’t see Harry siding with Draco over Blaise. So it depends on what happens now and how Blaise and Harry feel once they’re out of the hospital and back home.”

Max swallowed painfully and he nodded his understanding. He stood back up and put the food balls into the now searing hot frying pan and he browned them off.

“Get the kids in here. They need their dinners.” He said with a lump in his throat.

Max put five of the fried balls into each plastic bowl and put them on the table as Myron and Richard set up the brand new high chairs and booster seats.

Max went back to the boxes of food that he’d packed up and brought from the old house and he dug around in them to find what he wanted. He finally dug out a pot of natural yoghurt, a lemon and vanilla essence, finding the small bottle right at the bottom of the box that had come from his top cupboard.

He got out another bowl as his babies dug into the new food that they were trying. Of course Calix thought his food was a projectile and he was using his Great-granddad Alexander as a target.

Braiden was very morose however and he was just squashing his rice balls up in his hand, watching as it oozed out between his fingers. Nasta sat next to him and cleaned off his hand before he sat and encouraged Braiden to eat, cooing at their son to get him to try his food, smiling and being so happy that Max wanted to shake him and demand how he was keeping it together, how he could be so normal in this situation.

Getting out a baking tray, he lined it with baking parchment and using a teaspoon, he made drops of the yoghurt mixture onto the parchment and once he’d filled it, he shoved it into the empty freezer in the absolutely massive double doored fridge freezer that he’d picked out for his kitchen himself.

He stood and he washed everything up, keeping his back to the happy kitchen, to his happy, giggling babies who didn’t know that their parents’ mateship had all but fallen apart in the space of an hour.

Hearing Nasta laughing was the last straw and he made a quick escape down the corridor and into the huge downstairs bathroom. He slumped to the tiled floor and he cried. Huge wracking sobs that shook his entire body as he tried to breathe, but thinking of Harry and Blaise had his misery overflowing again and he almost choked on his own tears.

Someone sat next to him and pulled him bodily into a hug and he inhaled Nasta’s scent. He turned into Nasta and crushed him in his arms, sobbing hysterically.

Nasta murmured to him continuously in Welsh until he was more calm and Max swallowed heavily and huffed through his sobs, trying to breathe as normally as he could to regain control of himself.

“I was…I was only…only trying to…to protect them!” He sobbed into Nasta’s neck.

“I know, Cariad. I know.” Nasta soothed him. “You did as you were supposed to, to protect our Harry.”

“I want this to be a nightmare. I want to wake up now.”

Nasta closed his eyes and hugged Max tighter to himself.

“Me too, Max. Me too.” He murmured as he stroked Max’s hair and planted a kiss on his temple, holding his mate crushingly tight. “I love you and we will get through this, one way or another and do you know why?”

Max shook his head miserably.
“Because we have children to think of.” Nasta told him sternly. “We have eight little babies to look after, Caru. We cannot abandon them just because we’re upset.”

Max swallowed heavily and his arms clenched around Nasta, his muscles bulging, even as he buried his face in Nasta’s neck. Neither of them cared that he was wiping his eyes on Nasta’s shoulder.

“We can break down later, Max.” Nasta promised. “We can sit in front of the fire, restlessly and fearfully waiting for a fire call to come through as we share a bottle of Firewhiskey and bawl our eyes out with our misery, but for now, we need to pull it together. I need you to pull yourself together, because our children need us to. We have to look after them and we can’t make them any more unsettled than they already are.”

Max sniffed hard and he sat up, wiping the last of the tears from his gritty, red raw eyes. He pulled up his best smile, dipped at the edges, dimmed at his eyes and wet from his tears, but it was the best that he could manage.

“Then let’s get back to those kids. They need something for dessert.”

“What about that yoghurt stuff you made up?”

Max shook his head. “Those are snacks for tomorrow. They need some apple slices or half a nectarine for today.”

Nasta stood up and held out both hands to Max, who took them and allowed himself to be pulled to his feet. He walked to the sink and washed his face, using his shirt to dry himself as they didn’t have any towels out yet. He took a deep breath and turned back to Nasta.

“I’m not sure how long I can keep this up.” He admitted.

“That’s okay, Max. Stay strong for as long as you can, we just need to wait a few more hours and then they’ll all be in bed and we can do what we need to. But if you can’t keep it up for a moment longer, then don’t…I’ll be strong enough for us both if needs be.”

Max pulled Nasta into a final hug. He was so grateful to Nasta for being here, for being so strong when he himself felt like a complete wreck. His love and appreciation for Nasta had just jumped up tenfold.

“I love you.” He said with a passion that was completely unbridled. “I’m so glad that you’re here.”

Nasta kissed him and they left the bathroom, back into the kitchen where their children were just finishing off their dinners. The next several hours were going to be incredibly trying for them both. They just needed to get through the next two, to see their babies safely into their cots and then they could focus on just getting through the night. They would drink Firewhiskey while waiting for a devastating floo call from a Healer, they would sit and support one another, even if he had to have Max resting on him all fucking night, he didn’t care. He would get them both through this trying time and whatever the outcome, he would always support and protect his family.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Aneirin was shocked out of his deep thoughts by a siren sounding by his head and with wide eyes he looked beside him to see that Blaise’s chest had stopped moving. Blaise had stopped breathing.

Before he could really react, the room was bustling with people and he was shimmied out of the room by an orderly in her pale yellow robes as the room was flooded with Healers in lime green and nurses in pale blue. He swallowed heavily and he closed his eyes, sending out a heartfelt prayer for Blaise, a plea that he was going to be alright.

He walked down the corridor and, like he was in a daydream, he went into the office of the head Healer on Blaise’s ward and he flooed to the new house, the one that he hadn’t seen before. It was late, the kids were all in bed and Nasta looked to be getting ready to leave. Aneirin ignored the open bottle of Firewhiskey on the coffee table. Some situations called for a bolstering drink and this was definitely one of them.

“You’re supposed to be with Blaise.” Nasta accused him. Aneirin could see the panic in his son’s eyes. The recognition of what it meant that he was here and it terrified his son. There was nothing that he could do and no way to soften the almighty blow that he was about to administer. It would hit both Max and Nasta like a hammer, right to the rib cage over their hearts. He hated to be the one to deliver it, but they needed to know.

“I’m so sorry, Nas. I was pushed out of the room, the Healers needed the space.” He said gently.

“What’s happened?” Max asked him so quietly and weakly that Aneirin barely recognised him.
“I’m sorry, Blaise has flat lined. He just stopped breathing.”

There was silence. The awful kind of silence where it was so sudden and shocking, that it left the ears ringing and feet frozen to the spot. No one wanted to move, clinging to the hope that if none of them moved, if none of them acknowledged the words that had been spoken, then it would mean that they weren’t real…that they weren’t true.

“He’s dead?” Max asked in a whisper, finally breaking the stunning silence.

“When I left, yes, he was. I came to tell you immediately. I thought that you’d like to be with him.”

Nasta took Max’s hand and pulled him, almost dragged him as Max refused to move his feet properly, to the fireplace and they flooed away together. Aneirin took a deep, steadying breath and sat with Myron, Richard, Alexander and the recently arrived Caesar.

“Is it…?” Richard trailed off a little unsurely.

“It’s not looking good.” Aneirin said with a sigh and a twinge of pain in his heart as he thought of his son-in-law, Blaise.

“He just stopped breathing?” Myron prompted.

Aneirin nodded. “Out of the blue. The Healer had just been by to check on him, reported no change and then ten minutes later the sirens started going off and Blaise had flat lined.”

“Has the swelling in his brain gone down at least?”

Aneirin nodded. “Yes. The potions worked to lessen the swelling and the senior neurological Healer was able to stop the bleed. Things had been looking good until this point. The boys are going to be devastated.”

“Did Nasta tell you that Leolin is going to be fine?”
Aneirin nodded. “Yes, at least that’s one weight off of their minds. How is Braiden? Nasta said that he was doing alright.”

“He was a bit fussy over dinner and very clingy when Max tried to put him to bed, but he eventually went down and he hasn’t woken up again. Or at least, he hasn’t yet.”

“Where is Draco?” Caesar asked.

“I escorted him to his parents.” Aneirin told him emotionlessly. “He was half dazed and the boys had done a number on him too, but I explained the situation to Lucius and Narcissa and they understood enough. They definitely weren’t pleased to have their son returned to them in such a state though.”

“I don’t think I would be either.” Myron said. “I’d understand, but that doesn’t mean I’d want to see my son beaten half to death.”

Aneirin nodded. “It’s difficult to understand what has actually happened here. I knew they were a volatile bunch, five men living together in one small, four bedroomed house, how could they not be? But this situation has gone beyond anything I would have expected from any of them.”

“What did happen? I don’t really understand what triggered them.” Caesar said with a frown. “Max doesn’t lose control like that for no good reason. He’s always exerted control over himself and his Dracken, ever since we were kids. I just don’t understand how he lost it so bad with Harry and the kids in the room.”

“Draco went to attack Harry, Max leapt in front of him and intercepted him and the fight went from there.”

“Draco tried to attack Harry?!”

“Draco’s the one who gutted Harry.” Myron said in a bass growl. “He did it right in front of us, while we all watched.”

“I don’t understand what was going through his head.” Richard croaked out, the scar tissue on his throat tightening with his rising emotion.
Myron’s arm shot out and curled around Richard’s shoulders, pulling him closer as the other hand rose to massage the front of Richard’s neck, easing away the tightness and making the scar tissue suppler to help Richard breathe easier. He pressed a kiss to Richard’s temple and pulled his mate and Husband even closer, silently urging him to rest against his body.

“The boy has anger issues.” Alexander growled. “To attack Harry in such a way, he could have killed him if his claws had perforated Harry’s intestines or stomach! He may have already killed Blaise and to do all of that in a room full of babies….I don’t know what that boy was thinking.”

“Things could have been so much worse.” Aneirin said, thinking of Leolin and Braiden. “How are Calix and the two girls?”

“The girls are restless and Calix is acting out more than normal. He hit out at me when I tried to put him to bed.” Myron sighed unhappily.

“He kicked me in the ribs when I was dressing him for bed.” Richard added.

“It’s hardly surprising.” Aneirin said thoughtfully. “Not only did they have the upheaval of today, but they’re in a new environment too.”

“They’re going to be unsettled for a while.” Alexander nodded his agreement.

“They’re coming up to two years old as well.” Caesar added. “Nora has been acting out lately too. She scribbled over the wall with her crayons, put her blocks in the fish tank and painted Beatrice’s head with tomato sauce.”

“She takes after your Father.” Myron snorted.

“I’ll have you know that I was a perfectly well behaved child!” Richard huffed.

“And I was born with three feet.” Myron answered.

“Why didn’t you ever tell me that?” Cesar demanded, his face the picture of seriousness.
Richard started laughing and Aneirin couldn’t prevent the chuckle of amusement that had built inside him. Myron just sighed heavily, as if he was fighting a losing battle.

Looking at Alexander, Richard and Caesar laughing at Myron’s expense, Aneirin could well believe that Myron was well outnumbered.

A shrill cry came over the baby monitor that was sat on the solid wooden coffee table between them all on the settees.

“Mummy!” A little voice called out before screaming again. “Mummy, pick up!”

Aneirin expelled all of the air in his lungs as he watched Myron immediately move to go and collect the distressed child, who had to have been Braiden. He had been expecting this, it would have been too good to be true if they didn’t have a bit of trouble with the kids after the day that they’d had and as another, shriller cry came over the baby monitor signifying that Braiden had woken up at least one of his other siblings with his screaming, all Aneirin could think was ‘It has begun.’ The hard night from hell was about to start and they’d all need to pull together and support one another to make it through. Draco had been told to stay the hell away, Harry was in a bad way, Blaise was currently dead and was being furiously worked on by a room full of Healers, Max and Nasta were emotionally battered and drained and now the children were going to start too.

Aneirin couldn’t really blame them as Myron brought a tear stained Braiden into the room with a thrashing Calix being held securely on his other shoulder. The trauma of the fight and Braiden being injured and in pain too, he was surprised that Braiden had even gone down to sleep at all.

He mentally prepared himself to stay awake all night. His son needed him, his grandchildren needed him and like all the others in this room with him, he needed to be a pillar of support for Max and Nasta when they eventually came home and he needed to be a soothing presence for his grandchildren, who needed all the comfort that they could get at this moment in time and as another cry came over the baby monitor, it was he who stood up to go and collect the unsettled child. It was going to be a very long, devastating night for them all.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Happy fourth anniversary, lovelies. It’s still hard for me to come to terms with the fact that I’ve been writing this fic for exactly four years today. It’s been a long, heartfelt ride and it’ll only become more so as there are at least another 100 or so chapters to come!
I know this chapter is very emotional and heart breaking, but please continue to trust me as you have done over the last four years. I’ve never steered you lovelies wrong before and I don’t plan on starting now. I’ll get us all though this, I’m like Nasta, just trust me, I always know what I’m doing, for good or for worse, I’ll get you through to the other side.

Thank you to all of you for reading and for sticking by me, I really appreciate it. Our massive milestone marker of chapter 100 will be out very soon, as I don’t want to leave you hanging, especially with this ending, so I’m aiming for about 2 weeks, maybe 3, but no more than that. I’ll see you all very soon,

StarLight Massacre. X
A/N: Happy early birthday, Rebecca, lovelie! This one’s for you.

Last Time

The hard night from hell was about to start and they’d all need to pull together and support one another to make it through. Draco had been told to stay the hell away, Harry was in a bad way, Blaise was currently dead and was being furiously worked on by a room full of Healers, Max and Nasta were emotionally battered and drained and now the children were going to start too.

Aneirin couldn’t really blame them as Myron brought a tear stained Braiden into the room with a thrashing Calix being held securely on his other shoulder. The trauma of the fight and Braiden being injured and in pain too, he was surprised that Braiden had even gone down to sleep at all.

He mentally prepared himself to stay awake all night. His son needed him, his grandchildren needed him and like all the others in this room with him, he needed to be a pillar of support for Max and Nasta when they eventually came home and he needed to be a soothing presence for his grandchildren, who needed all the comfort that they could get at this moment in time and as another cry came over the baby monitor, it was he who stood up to go and collect the unsettled child. It was going to be a very long, devastating night for them all.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred – Adaption

Xerxes was hunched forward in a comfortable, if a bit stiff, armchair that was right beside Harry’s hospital bed, elbows on his knees. He was staring at his clasped hands between his spread legs. Being here, in the Dracken Healing Halls, was a very different experience for him, where all he had to do was sit here and think endlessly about anything and everything, most particularly about tiny Harry, who was younger than all six of his grandchildren. His twenty-seven year old Yasmina, his twenty-five year old Raina and his youngest grandchild, twenty year old Suria, by his oldest son, John. The twenty-six year old Madeline by his only daughter, Hannah and Clora and his only grandson, Corbin, were the twin, twenty-three year old children of his youngest son, Joel.

He remembered hearing Harry’s distress call, the immediate internal panic that it had caused him and the overwhelming urge to protect him. He had dropped everything that he’d been doing and when Harry had called a second time, he’d rumbled to him through the bond created between them by Max, assuring Harry as much as he could that he was on his way. That he was coming to help and protect him.
When he’d arrived in that disaster zone, smelling the blood, hearing babies crying and seeing Blaise flat out on the floor...he’d frozen for a moment. His twin brothers had arrived very soon after him, and his Father was there too, immediately taking stock of everything and he’d moved straight over to Harry, hunching down behind him and bringing his own wings out to curl around Harry’s own, bleeding, white wings.

He had leapt into action then, grappling with Max as best as he could, which was very difficult as Max was bigger, heavier, bulkier and younger than he was. He was thankful when Richard and Myron had arrived to come and help him and he happily let Myron take over grappling with Max, though he did automatically pin down Max’s legs when he snarled and tried to kick out after Myron had gotten him on the floor and pinned down his hands.

The destruction of just one fight was shocking and all at once devastating. One dead, one seriously injured in the hospital, two babies injured and the others traumatised. Not to mention one house destroyed. Xerxes watched his hands clench together tighter and he flexed his fingers, even as his jaw muscles bulged because of how tightly he was gritting his teeth. How had it come to this?

He was so deep in his thoughts, therefore, that he jolted in surprise when a small hand touched his arm and he quickly looked to the side of himself, to the large, soft bed and into the heavy lidded, glassy green eyes of Harry, whom he had been watching over all night.

Harry’s dominant mate, Nasta, had been by every couple of hours to check on him, all through yesterday afternoon and all through the night too, ever since Harry had been admitted to the Healing Halls, and the last couple of times he’d come, Max had been with him too. He could tell that his emotional nephew had been crying, and crying hard, just from looking at his pale, drawn face and his sore looking, red rimmed eyes. Their subordinate mate, Blaise, had died last night. Harry didn’t know that yet. He was in no fit state to either hear such news, or to retain it.

Harry was being kept heavily drugged by potions while the senior Dracken Healers, Alfred Grant and Jackson Moore, tried to fix him up as best as they could. Even now Harry’s leg was going to feel leaden, heavy and cumbersome, as if it was completely asleep, as it had been badly broken and the thick piece of wood had pierced right through the muscle. He would be unable to stand on it for at least another week and even then he would only be able to put his weight upon it for a few moments at a time. Given another week he would be able to walk a little more normally, but he’d need to take baby steps or the leg would give way underneath him. His stomach injury on the other hand was going to stop him from sitting up for a long while. It had been healed, but not perfectly, and the pain and soreness was going to remain for a while longer as Harry’s organs shifted back into their rightful place and the muscles healed from the trauma of being ripped open. At least when Harry gave birth the muscles were shifted out of the way by the swollen sac. Submissives were sore and pained enough by giving birth without ripping open their muscles too, he couldn’t imagine how much pain Harry had been in when he’d received the serious injury. It was bad enough currently if the way he was grimacing and pulling faces was any indication and he was on the strongest pain potion that could be given to him and at the highest dosage that his slight weight allowed him to take.

“How are you feeling?” Xerxes asked him softly.

“Don’t ‘member ‘at happened.” Harry croaked out, trying to sit himself up, before finding that he was unable to. He then tried to move himself, but he found that it was too painful and he stopped.
“You’re at the Dracken Healing Halls, Harry. You were very badly hurt.”

“Don’t ‘member, Myan.”

“I’m Xerxes.” He told Harry gently, with a smile.

Harry peered at him owlishly, he nodded after several moments of staring at his face. “Not Myan.”

“Just stay still, you won’t be able to move for a while.”

“I’m sore.” Harry told him, looking up at him from the big bed with such wide, pathetic eyes.

Xerxes smiled at him and laid a hand on the top of his head, stroking the thick, black hair comfortingly.

“It’ll be alright. The Healers will be back to see you soon.” Xerxes assured him, petting his hair some more. It was very soft and fluffy…he’d expected it to be more coarse because of how messy it always was, but it was almost completely weightless despite how thick it was.

Harry drifted in and out while they waited, sometimes he was lucid, other times he was so out of it that he started talking about eating mud and giving birth to centaurs while trying to dig the ‘snakes’ out from under his skin with his nails, snakes that Xerxes assumed were Harry’s visible veins.

It was quite amusing and he would laugh for a moment or two, but then Xerxes would remember why Harry was so drugged up that he was talking this way and he would remember why this tiny, slip of a boy was here and he would sober up and go back to being morose as Harry babbled about being mated and eaten by Acromantula and living underground like a worm.

“Where are my babies, Xerxes?”

Xerxes looked to the bed to find Harry awake once again, but it seemed that he was more lucid this time around.

“They’re safe, at home.” He said calmly.
He didn’t need to lie about that either. Nasta had been by earlier and he’d told him that Leolin had been given a clean bill of health and that he’d been released early that morning by Healer Cole with a dire warning that they had been incredibly lucky this time around and that the next time could prove fatal to Leolin. His warning was clear…that there was never to be a next time.

“I want my babies.”

“Soon, Harry. I promise. You just need to be cleared to leave.” Xerxes explained to him yet again.

He didn’t think Harry had been in a state of mind capable of taking in his explanation the first time around. The fact that Harry didn’t actually remember him explaining this before only proved that he hadn’t been entirely lucid or in his right state of mind at that time.

“I miss them.”

“I know you do, I’m sure they’re missing you too, but you need to be cleared by the Healers.”

Harry nodded and then grimaced when it pulled on something. Xerxes felt for the boy, if merely nodding hurt him, then he was in no fit state to be doing anything.

One of the Healers entered Harry’s room and smiled at seeing him awake. Xerxes had been telling them that Harry kept waking up, as he’d told Nasta that morning, but he’d been out of it every time that they’d made their rounds to check on him and the healed wounds.

“Hello, Harry. It’s nice to see you finally awake. I’m Healer Jackson Moore.”

“Hi.” Harry croaked.

“Here, take a sip or two of water.” The Healer instructed, picking up the cup that Xerxes had been offering to Harry on a regular basis throughout the night and the subsequent morning.

Harry slurped and coughed into the water, but he managed to get a bit of it down his throat, though most of it did go over his front and the sheet covering him.
“I want my mates.” Harry said.

Xerxes shared a quick look with the Healer. “Max is watching the babies at your home, but Nasta has been around to see you twice today already. I’m sure he’ll be back soon.”

“If I can’t have my babies, I want at least one of my mates.” Harry compromised stubbornly.

Xerxes sighed. “I’ll go and see what the situation is.”

He stood up and left Harry in the capable hands of Jackson Moore and he came out of Harry’s room and into a corridor filled with similar doors. He knew that some of them were patient rooms, like Harry’s, but others were the offices of the Healers, observation rooms, birthing rooms and one room was a surgery room, as rarely used as it was, it was still sometimes needed and it was there, just in case.

He made his way down the corridor and into the reception slash waiting area and nodded to the young receptionist who sometimes had absolutely nothing to do all day. It was rare that a Dracken needed a Healer at all, least of all a specific Dracken Healer. He’d never had need for one in all of his seventy years, all of his injuries had been healed by regular medi-personnel or Healers at Saint Mungos. Harry was the first one in a while who he’d actually known to need a Dracken specific Healer, except for the debacle with Draco and the damage he’d done to himself by taking the suppressant potion…he knew all about that and he wasn’t surprised that the boy had flown off the handle after how much of that potion he’d taken. He didn’t care what anyone said about detoxification and being weaned off of it, those potions were dangerous and they were heavily regulated for a reason. Merlin only knew how the boy had gotten his hands on the recipe for it in the first place!

He went through the floo, using the lone fireplace in the waiting room, to the new address that Nasta had given to him yesterday afternoon, when Harry had first been brought to the Healing Halls.

The floor no longer looked like a sea of wriggling babies as he landed. He remembered arriving at the old house and struggling to find a place to put his feet that wasn’t tiny fingers or brittle ankles, but in this, much, much larger house, there was at least three feet of space between each baby and there was still plenty of room to walk around in without the fear of stepping on one of them with his large feet. It helped him to relax.

“How is Harry?” His nephew, Maximilius, asked in a strained tone.

Xerxes could see the sheer terror behind his dark blue eyes at the possible reason for his sudden, and unannounced visit, when he was supposed to be with Harry for another few hours and he felt so sorry for Maxie. No mateship ever deserved to go through something like this.
He smiled to ease down their stress and fear. “He’s demanding to be released. He just wants his children. Though I’m here to collect whichever one of you is free…Harry’s compromise is that if he can’t have his babies, then he wants one of his mates with him. He’s being very stubborn and uncooperative.”

“I’ll go.” Nasta said immediately. “He needs to know what happened and I don’t want you to have to go through that, Max.”

Max, who had opened his mouth, perhaps to argue, closed it again and he swallowed hard. He nodded miserably.

“He doesn’t remember what’s happened. He’s been too drugged up. He talks bollocks half the time that he’s actually awake. This morning he’s talked about having sex with Acromantula and then being eaten after he’s been mated, he’s also mentioned giving birth to centaur babies and then said something about becoming a worm and living in the mud. He’s definitely a strange one.”

Max cracked a weak smile and collapsed back on the settee with a sigh, but at least he had actually smiled, even if it was a small one.

“Is he alright apart from that, Zerry?”

Xerxes glared at his baby brother. “I told you to stop calling me that forty years ago.”

His shit of a baby brother just smirked at him, those jet black eyes, completely identical to his own, danced with amusement.

“Harry’s fine other than the fact that he can’t move an inch without it hurting and the fact that he doesn’t remember why he’s there. The Healers say it’s the fault of the potions that he’s being given for the pain, they knock him for six.” Xerxes had turned away from Myron to address Nasta and Max.

Nasta nodded and then he flooed out of the house. Xerxes collapsed into a convenient seat and smothered a yawn.
“Do you want me to take over the rest of your shift?” Myron asked.

“You look as tired as I feel.” Xerxes answered with narrowed eyes.

“I’m twenty years younger than you.”

“You look ten years older than me at the moment.”

“I wouldn’t go that far.” Myron’s mate and Husband, Richard, piped up.

“You just sit and look pretty, Richard.” Xerxes teased.

Myron growled lowly at him, one massive fist clenching. If it was one thing that his brother hated, it was anyone, absolutely anyone, either looking and lusting over his mates or putting either one of them down or disrespecting them.

A sharp smack to both of their heads and the tension was cleared away immediately.

“We’ve had enough fights and enough devastation to last a lifetime without you two starting, do I make myself clear?” Their Father told them, staring hard at each of them in turn and they both hunched down and rounded their shoulders, as if they were still small boys who’d been caught sneaking away biscuits and sweets before their dinners.

Without waiting for an answer, Alexander strode around the settee and picked up a clamouring Tegan, who had rushed to get to her feet the moment she’d heard Alexander’s voice and had toddled to him, arms up in the air so that he didn’t have a hope in hell of misunderstanding what she wanted.

“Hello, sweet girl.” He cooed to her, giving her puckered mouth a kiss when she searched for one.

“Gadad.” Tegan babbled. “He nano batha.”

“I’m sorry sweetheart, I’m just not as good as your Mother at deciphering your words.” Alexander had to say after Tegan stared at him, obviously expecting an answer.
“Mammy.” Tegan said and then looked around, peering at every face around her before realising that Harry wasn’t there.

Her face pulled into a frown and she pointed at Max. “Daddy Mass.” She pointed at the fireplace next. “Daddy Nasa.” She looked around again and shook her head. “No mammy.”

Max held his arms out and Alexander handed her over, letting Father and Daughter have a moment as Max tried to explain to the seventeen month old where Harry was. Alexander was completely amazed that she actually seemed to understand, then he’d been very impressed that she knew that Nasta had gone through the floo.

He sighed and tried to be a pillar of strength for his family, but the pressure was immense after the events of yesterday afternoon and last night. He was tired…old and tired. He felt every single one of his (almost) ninety-four years and they weighed heavy on him. This devastation had aged him, had aged them all, of that he had no doubt.

Harry was so happy to see his mate walk into the room that he was lying in that he actually trilled in delight, which made Nasta smile in the way that Harry loved. He tried to sit up and couldn’t and he tried to raise an arm and he couldn’t.

“Stay still, Caru.” Nasta soothed him, nodding to Healer Moore as he left the room silently, closing the door behind himself.

“I missed you. They wouldn’t let me have my babies. I can’t move to get to them.”

“The babies are all at home, Harry.”

Harry nodded and then grimaced as it pulled on something.

“Lay still.” Nasta said again as he came and sat by Harry’s bedside, pulling the chair right up until his knees were flush with the bed. He picked up Harry’s tiny hand and squeezed it between both of his own, just touching his mate and staring into those open green eyes. He reminded himself yet again that Harry was going to be just fine. He just couldn’t help worrying, not after what had happened last night with Blaise. He needed to touch Harry, to talk to him and hear him, see him breathing. He needed Harry to be at home, where he could look after him himself without having to leave him for hours on end in a hospital.
“I just want to come home.” Harry told him, frowning at him. “Me and my babies want to come home.”

Nasta’s stomach did a neat flip when he heard that and he swallowed, Harry wasn’t actually his Harry at the moment. He was still caught in a potion induced delusion.

“Our babies are already at home, Harry. All of them.”

Harry frowned harder and then looked around Nasta and then back at him.

“My babies are by there.” Harry told him. “They’re sleeping at the moment.”

Nasta couldn’t prevent himself from looking to where Harry was directing his gaze, despite knowing that there was nothing or no one in the room with them.

“Nothing is there, Harry. You’re hallucinating.”

“Everyone says that.” Harry said bitingly. “They are my babies and I will not have anyone hurting them!”

Nasta nodded dutifully and Harry’s scowl turned into a smile. It pained him to see Harry like this. Dosed up so heavily on the strongest of pain potions, and still feeling some degree of discomfort if the way he kept grimacing was any indication, that he was hallucinating. He had become so scared in the early hours of the morning that he hadn’t even been able to bare having him or Max touching him. He’d been afraid of them, his own dominant mates! It had shattered something within him to see Harry in such a way, sobbing and screaming, not recognising any of them as he curled up to try and get away from them, crunching his recently healed, but still agonising, stomach muscles as he did so. He’d only calmed down after he’d passed out.

“Where are the Faeries?” Harry asked him.

Nasta frowned. “I’d imagine that they were in the Faerie City, Harry. I informed Dain and Kailen of what has happened, but I neglected to mention that we’d moved house.”
“The Faeries are funny. They have dragonfly wings.”

Nasta should have known that Harry wasn’t thinking clearly and he could have answered that the Faeries were in space for all the notice that Harry took of what he’d said.

“How do they fly with dragonfly wings?” Harry asked, pouting his lips in thought. “Aren’t they too heavy for their tiny little wings? Maybe they can’t fly at all! They just want people to think that they can.”

Harry nodded as if everything that he’d just said had made perfect sense and Nasta’s smile was thin and shaky. He clenched his fist and firmed himself. On a subconscious level Harry needed him, he needed to know that his mates were here for him, to support him and look after him, but seeing Harry like this was devastating and watching him flinch and grimace with the pain that he was in, his face pale and sweaty, was steadily grating on him and his Dracken, who was getting angrier.

“Do you think the Faeries eat rainbows?” Harry asked him in a way that was reminiscent of an innocent, curious child.

Nasta’s chin wobbled with the urge to cry. “I’m sure they do, Harry.” He said as strongly as he could manage. Harry didn’t notice either way.

“I like rainbows.” Harry’s eyes widened and he looked at himself. “Maybe I’m a Faerie! Am I a Faerie?” He asked.

“No, Harry. You’re a Dracken.”

“I’m a dragon!” Harry said excitedly. “Are you a dragon too?”

Nasta nodded and he had to stop himself from clenching his hand around Harry’s. He needed more Firewhiskey. The bottle he’d shared around last night in the fire lit living room was not enough to deal with this. How was he expected to deal with this? He felt sick and on the edge of tears. He just wanted to clutch Harry to his chest and cry, but he couldn’t. Not only would it hurt Harry to move him while he was healing, but he needed to be strong. He needed to hold it together to support his family. He’d never hated being the top dominant of his mateship more than in this moment.

He wanted to breakdown, he wanted to cry and rage and sob his heart out. He wanted to breakdown and curl up with a bottle of Firewhiskey and emerge on the other side and find that it had all been a dream, or that someone else had dealt with it all for him, but he couldn’t. He was the top dominant and he had to stay strong for all of them. For Max especially, whose grief over Blaise’s death and his all-encompassing guilt over how he had acted instead of how he should have acted during the fight was completely draining him.

Max had had a spectacular breakdown last night after being forced back home from the hospital three hours after finding out about Blaise’s death. Nasta remembered every agonising minute of Max hanging around his neck, all out bawling onto his shoulder, begging him to fix everything while he’d just stood there, murmuring false promises that he knew that he couldn’t realistically keep.

Max had cried so hard and for so long that he’d vomited bile all over him, having had nothing to eat for over twenty-four hours. Nasta had ignored it as he’d shushed Max and tried to calm him down.
Max had eventually cried himself into a restless, nightmare filled sleep and he woke up every forty or so minutes, searching for him, needing soothing and comfort, meaning that he himself couldn’t go to sleep because he needed to stay awake to soothe Max when he woke up from yet another nightmare and that was without factoring in the children too, all of whom were restless and had woken up often throughout the night, needing his attention and comfort.

He was exhausted himself and when the sky had started lightening through the massive bay window in the living room, he’d roused himself, getting up from where he was sat by a dozing Max’s head, and he’d gone to sort out breakfast for the kids, pulling up a mask of smiles and happiness when he really just wanted to shut himself away and mourn for everything that he’d been through, everything that he was still going through and everything that he’d lost in such a tiny amount of time. Twenty minutes. Just twenty minutes and from that came this wrecked devastation. From twenty minutes had come ruin.

He’d given those staying at the new house with him rooms to sleep in, even as he and Max had stayed in the living room, waiting, waiting, waiting. Nasta had half expected to get a floo call to tell them that Harry had died in his potion induced haze, or that Leolin had taken a turn for the worst or that they’d found something wrong with their baby that they’d initially overlooked in their preliminary examinations.

He had his Leolin back home now, as of eight O’clock that very morning, he was being cradled and cuddled and soothed by numerous, willing family members who were babysitting for them. Leolin had fed once, with his eyes closed as if he still thought that he was in the hospital, and this theory was supported by the one and only time that Leolin had woken up fully just an hour ago, as he had looked around himself, at all the faces around him, and then he had screamed, properly screamed, for Harry. Harry who was away in the Dracken Healing Halls and couldn’t soothe their hysterical Faerie baby, Harry who couldn’t even support his own body and wouldn’t be able to pick up or hold their children for a long while yet. Leolin had cried himself back into an exhausted sleep.

“Nasta?”

Nasta turned to Harry and those hazy, glassy eyes were clear for once.

“Harry! How are you feeling?” He asked, feeling like he was actually talking to Harry for the first time in days.
“Hurt. I ache, Nas. I can’t move either.”

“You were very hurt, Harry. Do you remember?”

Harry nodded minimally and still his face pinched and went a shade paler, making him look an unhealthy, sickly grey.

“Where’s Max?” He asked, peering around the room, frowning as if he remembered that he’d seen things, but not why he’d seen them.

“You’ve been hallucinating.” Nasta told him and Harry’s expression cleared and he sighed heavily.

“I feel like I need to apologise for that.” Harry said ruefully.

Nasta smiled and he bent forward to kiss him. He had felt wrong kissing Harry when he wasn’t in his right mind and talking bollocks, so he hadn’t done it. Kissing Harry now felt like a heavy weight had been lifted off of his chest.

“I love you.” He declared seriously, passionately.

“I love you too, but where is Max?” He repeated.

“He’s at home, love.”

“Is he okay? I wanted to see him.”

“He’s alright.” Nasta lied through his teeth. Max was far, far from alright.

Harry nodded. “My babies? Is Leolin okay?”
“Leolin is completely fine and he’s back home getting some much needed attention from his adoring grandparents, Aunts and Uncles.” Nasta didn’t think he needed to mention that even though Leolin was getting all the attention and love that he could ever wish for, he was screaming for Harry throughout it.

Harry smiled then. Tiredly. Very, very tiredly as he sort of sagged into his pillow.

“How’s Braiden, is his leg better?”

“All better, I promise. There isn’t even a tiny mark on him. It was healed right up.” Nasta told him. Again he didn’t think he needed to mention that Braiden was silent. That he hadn’t said a single word since he’d been injured or that he wasn’t eating properly. Nor did he mention Calix’s tantrums or how he was acting up and lashing out. They were all very unsettled and unhappy at the moment, they’d all been traumatised by what had happened, even Regan, Farren and Tegan, who hadn’t actually been in the living room at the time, but he didn’t want Harry to worry, so he said nothing. He could shoulder the burden of that too. The one thing that he felt that he couldn’t lie about was Blaise and he could see that that was what Harry was working up to, though he hadn’t once asked after Draco, not even when he was delusional on his pain potions.

“How’s Blaise?” Harry asked quietly, proving Nasta right and he took in a deep breath, mentally preparing to tell Harry everything that had happened while he’d been out of it.

“He was hit very hard in the head, twice. He had swelling of the brain and a slow bleed. He died last night, Harry, at ten O’clo….” Nasta started and before he’d even finished the first sentence Harry’s eyes had widened and he had started struggling, trying to force his damaged muscles into making his body sit up. He ended up with a face full of sweat and a green tinge to his cheeks from the pain of him struggling to move.

“No!” Harry screamed, interrupting him.

“Calm down, Harry, please. Let me explain!” Nasta insisted as he climbed onto the bed and tried to hold Harry as he screamed and cried.

“Blaise!” Harry screamed, his hands raising to fist into Nasta’s shirt as Harry forced himself to move them, needing the comfort more than he cared about the pain of moving parts of his body. The grief and emotional pain far outweighed the physical as he screamed and screamed, trying to wind his body closer, tighter, around Nasta’s.
Nasta couldn’t calm Harry back down and his mate vomited hard, just like Max had done last night, and Nasta tried to ignore that Harry had thrown up on his chest and in his lap as he tried to talk to Harry, to calm him down.

Harry started hyperventilating and panicking and Nasta was shocked to realise that Harry was having a panic attack in his arms. The ward on Harry went off and in less than five seconds, three of the several Dracken Healers were in the room with them.

“Calm down, Harry!” Nasta pleaded, trying to tell him more of what had happened, but Harry either couldn’t hear him through his panic, or he wasn’t willing to listen as his panic attack continued as he choked in sharp gasps and panted like an overheated dog.

Nasta was forced to cradle his mate, trying to get Harry’s face into his neck, but Harry was struggling to breathe and all at once, he collapsed down and went floppy in his arms.

The Healers were there then, helping him, and with a swish of a wand, Harry’s sick was vanished and the Healers were talking to one another calmly and Nasta felt pushed out and banished to the side lines. He didn’t know what to do any more. Perhaps it had been a bad idea to try and explain what had happened to Blaise to Harry, he’d just decided that Harry had deserved to know exactly what had happened throughout yesterday.

He put his face in his hands and he rubbed at his eyes, pushing his fingers in hard as he tried to ignore the headache that he had and the gritty feeling he felt from lack of sleep. Maybe if he’d grabbed an hour or two he would have handled this situation better, or at the very least he would have been able to explain it all better. He should have started by telling Harry that Blaise was fine, but that he had had swelling of the brain and a slow bleed that a senior Healer had been able to control and eventually correct. He was too tired and now he felt absolutely awful for what he’d just put Harry through needlessly. Hindsight really was a fucking curse.

Aneirin was back in Saint Mungos with Blaise. He was bone tired, but he didn’t care as he touched the hand of the almost comatose Blaise, his fingers finding the pulse in his wrist, just to reassure himself that the boy was still alive after the heart wrenching, gut churning fear last night when Blaise had officially died for six and a half minutes.

He’d never seen Max or Nasta so scared looking, nor so relieved when they’d arrived back at home, three hours after they’d gone to the hospital, to tell them that the Healers had been able to revive Blaise after a very tense and fear filled six minutes. Blaise had still not regained consciousness.

Aneirin looked to the drawn face of one of the boys that he’d come to love as his own, through his son, Nasta, and his heart clenched again at seeing Blaise like this. It wasn’t right.

A choked, gagging, gasping noise had Aneirin snapping his head back to Blaise’s face, to see glassy indigo eyes opened and darting around in fear.
“Blaise.” Aneirin said softly, slowly, even as the ward on Blaise sent a jolt to Healer Almus. “Blaise, it’s alright, just stay calm. You need to stay calm.”

“Where my?” Blaise asked, his throat so dry that he croaked, his eyes fluttering, almost rolling back into his head.

“You’re at the hospital, Blaise.” Aneirin told him, just before the door opened and Healer Almus came striding in.

Blaise’s eyes showed no recognition of Healer Almus and Aneirin’s heart skipped in fear. Did Blaise not recognise him either? Had Blaise’s memory really been that affected that he couldn’t remember the specialist pregnancy Healer that Harry had been seeing since he was pregnant with the quintuplets?

“Do you remember your full name?” Healer Almus asked, obviously coming to the same conclusion that Aneirin had, even as he lighted the tip of his wand and peered into Blaise’s eyes, checking the reaction of his pupils to the light.

“Blaise Mariano Zabini.” Blaise croaked.

“How old are you, Blaise?”

“Nine…nineteen?” Blaise said, but Aneirin swallowed. That answer had come out more of a question and had had a lilt of uncertainty to it.

“Are you asking me or telling me?” Healer Almus asked shrewdly.

“I don’t know. I don’t know what day it is.”

“When is your birthday?”

“October the twelfth.” Blaise said with no hesitation. “Nineteen-seventy-nine.” He added.
“It’s currently May, nineteen-ninety-nine.”

Blaise nodded, as if he’d suspected just that.

“Do you remember who you live with?”

Blaise’s face pulled into a frown and he just stared at them both, going from one to the other.

“Are you being serious?” He croaked.

“Deadly.” Healer Almus insisted.

“I live with four other men.” He said as if they were stupid. “Harry, Max, Draco and Nasta. Your son.” He added to Aneirin. “You should remember that.”

Aneirin chuckled, mostly in sheer relief.

“Do you remember how many children, if any, that you have?” Healer Almus asked, not relenting even the smallest bit.

Blaise blinked, his glassy eyes getting clearer now the longer he was awake and interacting with others.

“You should know, you’ve been inspecting them since they were born. I have one biological son, but seven other children too.”

“Can you tell me the date?”

Here Blaise looked a little uncertain again, which was hardly surprising as he had missed a full day being completely unconscious.
“Perhaps I should rephrase that for you. Can you tell me the date of the last day that you remember?”

Blaise frowned and looked thoughtful. “May the twenty-sixth. Harry was in court and Draco got scalded. I brought him here with our twin daughters to be healed. I don’t remember anything after that. Is he okay? Is he here too? What about the girls?”

Aneirin closed his eyes and breathed in and then out to calm himself.

“It’s the afternoon of May the twenty-eighth today, Blaise. You’ve missed a couple of days.”

“Oh, have I been here the whole time?” Blaise asked.

“Not exactly. You were admitted into the hospital yesterday, on May the twenty-seventh.”

Blaise frowned and he lifted his hand to touch at the hideous bruise at the front of his head, as if there was a sensory memory that he remembered, even if he couldn’t remember what had caused it. His eyes widened, not because he touched the bruise, but because he realised that his head had been shaved and his hand rubbed over the entire of his head and he looked devastated, not because he was in the hospital or because he couldn’t remember the last two days, but because he no longer had any of his hair.

“What happened to my hair?” He demanded shrilly, his voice breaking as his throat was too dry to get the words out at any sort of higher volume.

“Here.” Healer Almus waved his wand over a Styrofoam cup and it filled with small chips of ice. “Take a few of these into your mouth, let them melt and suck on them. It’ll really help your throat, Blaise.”

“Where did my hair go?” Blaise demanded stubbornly, accepting the cup, but not putting anything in his mouth.

“It was charmed off.” Healer Almus said simply.

“Why?!” Blaise hissed.
“Take some ice chips, perhaps it would be best if your mates were here?”

Blaise tried to sit up straighter then, at the mention of his mates, and he nodded.

“Take some ice chips first.” Healer Almus compromised and Blaise tipped a few little balls of ice into his mouth immediately, his arm shaking from the effort it took to lift the cup to his mouth.

Aneirin took the hint and he stood, bending forward to kiss Blaise’s brow. He got the strangest, most horrified look that he could have imagined, but he didn’t care. He loved Blaise as his own and he wanted to show it as he did to Nasta. It was just a shame that it had taken such a devastating tragedy for him to grow the balls to realise it.

“I’ll go and get who I can. It’s like a mad house over there.” He said before he left, leaving Healer Maximilian Almus to do whatever tests he needed to do.

The neurological Healer needed to be called too, just to check on Blaise and to assess whether Blaise’s lost couple of days was just because he was a bit disorientated after waking up or whether it was something a little more sinister. Aneirin didn’t frankly care, he was just infinitely glad that Blaise was now awake.

He flooed over to the new house yet again and as soon as he landed, he saw Max’s wide eyed, devastated face and he heard Nasta, his beautiful, youngest son, inhale sharply, painfully. Nasta had come home after his visit to Harry earlier that day to tell them that he’d been the trigger of a massive panic attack that had caused Harry to pass out. Aneirin felt for all of them, his boys really were having no luck lately.

“It’s okay. Everything’s okay.” He assured them quickly as he stepped over the fireguard and raised his hands as if he could take away the fear, the utter terror, that all of them were exhibiting with just a few gestures.

“Blaise isn’t…he hasn’t…” Max stuttered.

“He’s awake. He’s awake and he’s okay.”

There was a loud, collective sigh of relief and several of them sagged into the settee.
“Is he really okay?” Nasta asked. He looked completely exhausted and Aneirin knew that he’d been awake all day yesterday, all night and all of today too. His son needed some sleep or he was going to run himself into the ground. He couldn’t help anyone if he was too exhausted to think straight, as he’d already proven with his mishandling of Harry.

“He’s alright, very angry and devastated to find out that he’s now bald.”

That got him several laughs. Myron Maddison was not one of them as he studied him and his body language.

“I sense a but.” He interrupted gruffly.

“There is a but.” Aneirin sighed tiredly. “Blaise doesn’t remember any of the past two days. His last memory is of taking Draco and the twins to the hospital. He doesn’t remember anything after that point, not even coming home from the hospital that day. He believes that he never left the hospital, that he arrived with Draco and the twins and that he woke up there today. He’s asking after Draco and demanding to know if he’s okay.”

Nasta let out a shaky breath and Aneirin felt awful for him. Harry had been so devastated to find out about Blaise that he had had a massive panic attack and he had blacked out again in grief. Nasta had been the one to break that news to Harry and he’d been the one who’d had to sit with him and hold him as he screamed, cried himself sick and then eventually passed out through lack of oxygen. Now he had to go and tell the same to Blaise, about the fight that had landed him in the hospital, what had happened to him, what had happened to Harry and to Leolin and to Braiden too.

“I’ll go and see him.” Nasta said.

“I need to see him awake.” Max said quietly.

Nasta nodded. “I understand. I do, Max, but he needs to know what’s happened and why he’s in the hospital. I don’t want you to go through that. How about you go and tell Harry that Blaise is awake? Maybe he’ll actually listen to you and you can explain what happened properly.”

Max looked torn.
“Harry deserves to know.” Nasta tried and Max sighed heavily, nodding. “I fucked up trying to tell him, he deserves to know what actually happened.”

“Okay. But I want to see Blaise while he’s still awake.”

Nasta nodded. “That’s fair. I’ll explain it to Blaise and see how he reacts, only if the Healers believe that it’s a good idea, of course. If they don’t think it is, then I’ll come and get you and we can swap places. Harry is going to want to see Blaise too.”

“It’ll be a bit difficult for him when he can’t even move his head from left to right.” Max said with a tired, weak smile.

“Are all the kids down for their naps?” Aneirin asked.

Max nodded. “Yeah, Braiden still isn’t eating like he used to and Farren screamed half the morning away for Harry. They’re really unsettled at the moment.”

“This is a trying time for you all.” Alexander said comfortingly. “Just go and see to Harry and see to Blaise. They both need their mates around them. We’ll look after the kids and you can resettle them once everyone is out of the hospital, but until then, none of us are going anywhere.”

Nasta nodded and he went through the floo first, arriving at the hospital, in the office of the head neurological Healer, Aeneas Narkissos Odell. He made his way from the office, down the ward corridor and then into Blaise’s room and the all-encompassing relief he felt at seeing Blaise sitting slightly upright and awake almost knocked him off of his feet. He ignored Healer Odell checking results on a piece of parchment.

“Blaise.” He called out, his voice barely a whisper, as if this were all a dream and that if he spoke too loudly it would shatter, and he’d be in this room and Blaise would be comatose again.

Blaise looked up at him and he smiled tiredly.

“Hey, Nas. The Healer says I’ve been here for over twenty-four hours.”
Nasta nodded as he went and pulled Blaise into a tight hug. He kissed Blaise’s forehead and then he couldn’t stop himself from peppering his face with little butterfly kisses as he rested his own face against Blaise’s.

“I love you. So very much.”

“I’m okay.” Blaise assured him. “First your Dad and now you. What the hell happened to me? Why did I just collapse?”

Nasta looked at the Healer, who inclined his head ever so slightly.

“You didn’t just collapse, Blaise.” Nasta told him as he sat on the bed and swung his legs up.

“I’ll give you both some privacy.” Healer Odell told them. “I’ll be just down the hall in my office.”

Nasta pulled Blaise to rest against him and he kissed him again as Healer Odell left them, shutting the door quietly and firmly behind himself.

“If I didn’t collapse then what actually happened to me?” Blaise asked confusedly.

“It was a fight, Blaise. A very bad one and you weren’t the only one who was hurt.”

Nasta held Blaise more securely against his chest. “Harry was very badly hurt. He’s in the Dracken Healing Halls.”

“He needed the Healing Halls?” Blaise asked, trying to get up.

“Blaise, just calm yourself down, this was all very early yesterday afternoon. Harry is fine and awake and Max has gone to see him.”
“So…so he’s okay?”

“He’s okay.” Nasta assured.

“So me and Harry were the only ones who were hurt?”

Nasta grimaced. “Well…you, Harry, Braiden and Leolin.”

Nasta had to clamp his arms around Blaise to keep him in the bed.

“You never said that the kids were hurt too!” Blaise exclaimed as he fought his hold, trying his hardest to get up.

“Leolin was the only one admitted to hospital and it was only as a precaution because he was in shock, he was released this morning. Braiden was healed up at the house without needing to be admitted to the hospital.”

“They’re both okay too?” Blaise asked, peering up at him and Nasta kissed him again.

“Yes, love. It was just you that we were so worried about.”

“Why? I was only knocked out, wasn’t I?”

Nasta sighed and made himself comfortable, bringing Blaise down with him. “Not exactly, Caru.”

“What do you mean?”

“You were hit very hard in the head…twice. Your brain started to swell in your skull and you had a slow bleed too.”

Blaise gaped at him. “What?!”
“It’s why your head has been completely shaved, Blaise. You’re in the neurological ward of Saint Mungos…the Healers had to control the bleed in your brain and reduce the swelling quickly. It’s why you can’t remember what happened over the last couple of days.”

“I…I’m brain damaged?!” He demanded in a sort of shocked horror.

“So far, it doesn’t look like it, Blaise.” Nasta said reassuringly. “You just can’t remember yesterday or the day before. You’re only awake now because you’re a Dracken and I gave you my blood.”

Blaise looked completely shell shocked and Nasta felt Blaise’s hand tighten its grip on him. He tightened his own hold on his mate in answer and he tilted his head slightly away from Blaise, allowing him to turn his own head to bury his nose into Nasta’s neck, so that he could inhale the calming, soothing scent that he was emitting through his pheromones.

“There’s something else too, Blaise.”

“What more could there be?” Blaise demanded.

“There’s no easy way to say this, but you did die, Blaise.” Nasta said gently. “Only for…”

“I died?! Properly died?!” Blaise all but screeched, his voice breaking as it was unused to speaking so shrilly, especially recently.

“For six minutes and thirty-eight seconds. I felt it, deep in my heart, but I didn’t recognise it. I’ve never felt anything so painful before, I thought at the time that it was just an accumulation of everything that was happening. Then my Dad came and told me that you’d officially died and that the Healers were trying to resuscitate you. I knew then that what I was actually feeling was your death through my top dominancy bond. Thankfully Harry was unconscious at the time, so he didn’t feel any of the all-encompassing pain that I felt in my heart.”

“I could have been brain dead!” Blaise hissed.

“You’re not.” Nasta told him. “You’re awake, you’re moving, you’re talking. You might not remember the last couple of days, but you remember everything else. You’re going to be fine.”
“Where is my Mother? She wasn’t here when I woke up.”

“She’s on a heat period, Caru. Remember?” Nasta told him softly.

“So she’d be here if she wasn’t?”

Nasta chuckled. “Blaise, my beautiful mate, I doubt we could have gotten her to leave long enough to eat and sleep if she’d known. She wouldn’t have left your bedside and she’d have threatened anyone who would have tried to make her leave.”

“And you and Max and Draco have been going between me and Harry?”

“And Leolin until this morning. He was only in overnight, but we were allowed to go and give him a short visit every couple of hours.” He answered, controlling the urge to bare his teeth and growl at Draco’s name.

“But he’s completely fine?”

“Absolutely fine.” Nasta nodded. “He’s been asleep all morning, but he has taken a bit of milk. He didn’t fully wake up for it, he sort of suckled with his eyes closed, but he had enough.”

Nasta stayed in the bed, holding Blaise and rubbing his fingertips into Blaise’s skull. It felt strange to do this when Blaise had next to no hair and he looked like a shaved cat, the very short bristles that he did have, felt strange on his fingers, but it calmed and relaxed his mate. It didn’t take long for Blaise to fall asleep and it wasn’t too long after that that the Healer came back to see them.

“Is he going to be okay?” Nasta asked as soon as he saw Healer Odell.

“He’s going to be a bit confused for a time.” The man said carefully. “Especially around the circumstances of what landed him in the hospital, but he should make a full recovery as soon as he’s been up and about. If he’s exhibiting any serious problems or symptoms, however, such as a ringing sound or noise in the ears, blacking out, forgetting where he is, or any sign of blood, particularly from the ears, I want you to bring him straight back here. No hesitating or dithering, straight here.”
Nasta nodded his understanding.

“When can he be released?”

“As early as tomorrow morning, but expect it to be more in the range of Sunday or Monday. I want to keep a very close eye on him.” Healer Odell told him sternly, his incredibly pale blue eyes boring into him. Honestly his eyes were like two chips of ice with only the tiniest hint of blue to them. It made Nasta wonder if in certain lighting the Healer’s eyes appeared completely white.

“I understand.” He answered. “I do want Blaise home, but I want him looked after and healthy too.”

The Healer nodded and then started waving his wand over Blaise, performing more tests and recording his progress on a chart.

“His brain activity has leapt up and has started to smoothen out since he has woken up. This is a very good sign. You’ll find that when his brain activity tapers off onto normal levels and settles down, he’ll be able to remember perfectly well. But until then, expect him to be unsettled and slightly confused for as long as several weeks.”

Nasta nodded his understanding and he went back to stroking Blaise’s skin.

“I’ll leave you be for now, but I will be back soon. I need to run some tests when he’s awake, so I’ll need you to leave for those, just in case you give him any answers that could inflect on Blaise’s own. In order to fully help him, I need to know just how bad the damage done is and how much his memory has been affected.”

“I understand. May I come back after the tests?”

“Absolutely, I wouldn’t dare stand in the way of lovers.” Healer Odell answered before leaving the room. Nasta had to smile.

Nasta stayed where he was for three hours, in which an Orderly had been around twice to check if there was anything that he needed, as well as to check on Blaise and Healer Odell had been around once more to check on Blaise’s progress.
He moved slightly to try and relieve the ache in his back, not to mention the urge in his bladder, but it was all it took for Blaise’s indigo eyes to blink open and his hands to clutch deep and tight to him.

“Don’t leave me.” He begged, like a frightened child, and immediately Nasta let out a soothing rumble from deep in his chest to reassure his mate that all was well and that he was still here, on guard over him.

“I’m not going anywhere.” He said strongly and seriously. “I’m still here.”

“I don’t want to be alone.” Blaise insisted in a small voice.

“You’re never going to be alone, Blaise. I’m here for you. I love you.”

A knock on the door and Nasta growled. A high whine came back and immediately, Nasta knew that it was Max.

“Come in, Max.” He called out gruffly.

Max slipped into the room and shut the door and he carefully made his way over.

“You’re supposed to be with Harry.” Blaise told him. “Is Draco with Harry?”

Max darted a look to Nasta, begging him to say something, anything to fix this. They both knew that Draco was being kept at Malfoy Manor, that it was Sandor who was standing guard over Harry at the moment.

“We wouldn’t leave Harry unprotected, don’t worry so much.” Nasta said calmly and soothingly.

Blaise nodded and he didn’t even think to question why neither of them had so much as mentioned Draco. He naturally assumed that it was Draco who was with Harry and he took a breath and rested back onto Nasta’s chest.

“Max is going to take my place for a moment, Blaise. I need the bathroom. I will be back.” He swore Blaise nodded and as Nasta shifted and rolled away, Max took his place and wrapped a massive, heavy arm around Blaise and held him lovingly, bending down to kiss him.

“I missed you so much.”

“Nasta said it was only a day.” Blaise answered tiredly.

“It was. But I still missed you. At least we could have a conversation with Harry, well, sort of. We couldn’t with you because you were unconscious.”

“Wasn’t Harry unconscious too?”

Max shook his head. “No, the Healers had to put him to sleep while they were working on him, but he was awake afterwards, he’s just been very heavily drugged. Sometimes I think it might have been easier if he was unconscious, I asked him how he was feeling and he babbled something about how I should replace my eyeballs with oranges. From there he decided that he was hungry and he started demanding that I hand over my eyes, or in his words my ‘oranges’, for him to eat.”

Blaise laughed and it shook Max’s chest and made him smile. Seeing Harry in such a state was terrifying. That he was so delusional and hallucinating because of the exceedingly strong pain potions that he was being given was frightening to witness, but seeing Blaise so happy soothed over his worry. He would likely be laughing at the things that Harry was saying in a couple of weeks’ time, when he had them both home and he’d stopped trying to smother them with tender love and care. For now though, he was upset with and scared of the things that Harry was saying and seeing and his heart was aching at seeing Blaise with a shaved head and so very tired. It was strange that he was being so cuddly and clingy, it wasn’t like him and it upset something within him to see Blaise this way.

Nasta came back a long while later and he had a bottle of ice cold water, an apple and two muffins. Nasta had been here for hours, Max knew that he’d not only gone to the bathroom and to get a drink and something to eat, but he’d gone for a short jog around the corridors too, to stretch his legs and to clear his head.

Nasta didn’t try to move him or tell him to get out of the way and Max was thankful for that. Nasta sat in the chair next to the bed instead and put his hand on Blaise’s, where he was holding onto Max’s shirt.

Nasta ate his muffins, feeding small morsels to Max as Blaise slipped back off to sleep. After finishing the small amount of food, Nasta stood back up and moved his chair around to the other side of the bed and he rested his hand on Blaise’s back instead.

“Everything’s going to be alright.” He said aloud, reassuring himself as much as he was trying to reassure Max.

“Draco’s not….”

“I know that.” Nasta interrupted. “But Harry and Blaise are going to be fine. That’s all I care about at the moment. We can deal with Draco later.”

“I’ll deal with him alright.” Max growled.

“We’ve had enough fighting.” Nasta told him.

“More than enough.” Max agreed with a sigh, relaxing his body back down and letting go of all the anger, the deep seated rage, that he felt towards Draco. He didn’t need to deal with it. Nasta would deal with it, he trusted Nasta to deal with it.

“How was Harry?”

“Scary.” Max answered before telling Nasta the story about his eyes and the oranges. “I hate seeing him like that. I hate seeing the both of them like this.”

“It won’t be for much longer. The Healers want to lower Harry’s dosage later tonight and Blaise is going to be released in the next few days.”

“Is he okay to be released?”

“They want to do some more tests first, but he should be okay, just unsettled for a few weeks while his brain recovers from the trauma and he regains his memories. He is still a Dracken though and I got my blood into him pretty fast after he was knocked out.”

“I’m so relieved that everyone’s come out okay.” Max made a strange, half aborted sob and Nasta moved his hand to clutch at Max’s, around Blaise’s shoulders.

“I’m going to go and see Draco tomorrow afternoon, after the kids have had their lunches. He needs to be properly punished and he will be going to these anger management classes. If Harry and Blaise forgive him, I don’t want this to ever happen again. I’m still trying to get over how he tried to attack Harry to begin with.”

Max shook his head. “I was expecting him to come after me, not Harry. I wasn’t prepared for it. Harry was only trying to reach Leolin.”

“As Harry’s dominant mates, there is no way in hell that we should be trying to attack him. Draco is going for those anger management classes.”

Max nodded his agreement. “Do you…”

“What?” Nasta prompted after Max fell silent for several long moments.

“It’s a stupid question.” Max admitted ruefully.

“It’s only us here, Max and you know that I won’t laugh at anything you say and I won’t judge you for it either. Just ask.”

“I was just thinking out loud.” Max said quietly.

“I can’t help if you don’t actually ask the question.” Nasta told him after another pregnant pause.

“I already know the answer.”

“Will you please just get this off of your chest, it’s obviously bothering you.” Nasta said sternly.

Max sighed. “I was just going to ask if you thought that maybe we might be able to heal after this…if everything could be forgiven and we could move on. But I know that’s just a fantasist’s dream.” Max said bitterly. “There’s no way that we can get over something like this and even if we could, there’s no guarantee that Blaise or Harry will, they were severely injured and they could have both died…hell Blaise did die from this.” He said emotionally.

“Only time will tell. You know that Harry’s going to be wound up over Braiden and Leolin, that’s why he attacked Draco a second time, after he saw the state of Braiden’s leg. Blaise is already concerned about Harry, then he doesn’t really know what’s happened. He knows now that he was attacked, that Harry, Leolin and Braiden were hurt too, but he still doesn’t know that it was Draco who started the fight and Draco who technically killed him for six and a half minutes.”

“Please…please don’t say it.” Max begged, clutching Blaise tighter and placing two fingers over his neck to check for his strong, steady pulse.

Nasta looked at him softly in understanding and he nodded.

“If Blaise can get over it and Harry can move on, then there is every chance that we can move on too, with a lot of work, and as I said, Draco will have to go to those anger management classes. It’ll be a condition that he has to complete before he even returns to our house. I won’t have him there otherwise.”

Max nodded. “I agree with you. We just have to see if Harry and Blaise agree.”

Nasta smiled as he continued to stroke Blaise’s back, watching as Max cuddled with him and eventually slipped off to sleep along with Blaise. Nasta stayed and watched over them both for a while, guarding them and rumbling back to Max when he subconsciously sought out any danger that might be lurking around in the unfamiliar environment.

Nasta sat and he thought long and hard about what had happened and how he felt about it. He felt sure that he could get over the fight, but only if Draco went to a specialist to help him control his terrible temper. It was another thing to be seen if Harry and Blaise could both get over what had happened. Nasta hoped that they could, he wanted his family to stay together after all, but ultimately the decision was completely up to Harry as their submissive. Only he had the power to cast any of them out of the mateship, he may already have cast Draco out after what had happened without even realising it, he hadn’t mentioned Draco once since the fight had happened, but only time would tell. They would see what was going to happen now in the coming days.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Nasta steeled himself as he flooed directly into Malfoy Manor. He usually would have announced his visit, or even Apparated over to knock on the door, but no. Not in this situation. Draco was his mate and he would not be blocked or allow the elder Malfoys to stand in his way of dealing out the needed punishment.

He scented out Draco before anyone could track him down and he sent the poor house elf who tried to get him to wait in the Malfoy’s receiving room running. He would rather not be doing this, but as the top dominant of his mateship, again it fell onto his shoulders to deal out punishments where it was needed.

He went into Draco’s bedroom, not knowing what to expect and not knowing how he would react. He knew that if Draco had been doing anything at all normal, like reading or doing his favoured hobbies, then he’d have completely lost it and torn his throat out right then and there.

Draco was not doing anything normal. His bedroom was a total disaster, the bed was in a splintered mess, the mirrors were in broken shards and every piece of furniture was destroyed. Draco himself was curled up in a ball in the middle of his bedroom floor, his back to the door, his hair was unwashed and a complete mess, he was wearing pyjamas in the middle of the day, pyjamas that looked like he’d slept in them for the past two days, and he smelt like he hadn’t bathed since he’d left the house after the fight two days ago…he was still scabbed and bloody from where he’d been beaten and hurt. He hadn’t healed them or allowed anyone else to heal them.

Nasta shut the bedroom door and he warded it strongly to keep out anyone and everyone.

“Go away, Mother. I don’t want to eat.” Draco croaked without looking at him.

“I’m not your Mother.” Nasta said, making his voice deeper and more authoritative.

Draco picked himself up on his arms and turned his upper body to look at him as if he didn’t quite believe that he was there. His face was puffy and swollen and the skin around his eyes was almost purple from crying. His top and bottom lip were swollen and scabbed over, the bottom one worse than the top.

Nasta clenched his jaw and he firmed himself as Draco stumbled to his feet and rushed at him, throwing his arms around his chest and hugging him bone crushingly tight. He forced himself not to react, ignoring Draco’s babbled questions of how everyone was. Nasta had given him no news at all in the last few days and he knew that Max hadn’t come here. Max hadn’t even wanted to see Draco.

“You know why I’m here.” He said, cutting across Draco’s questions, gripping his forearms and pushing him backwards a step, separating himself from Draco.

Draco looked devastated at the separation more than the coming punishment and Nasta had to harden his heart. This needed to be done. Draco needed a formal punishment, he needed to understand why he was being punished and then Nasta would sit down with him and lay out the terms. If Draco couldn’t accept those terms, then he was done. He would leave the Malfoy house and he would never come back to it, he would never tell Draco where their new house was, he would remove him from the wards and he’d put up an owl block. If Draco couldn’t accept his terms, then he would not be allowed to even try to come back. It was that simple.

“Get on your knees.” Nasta ordered, not using the full weight of his top dominancy bond, but putting enough inflection on it so that Draco knew that he was not playing around and that this was not open for discussion. He didn’t use the full weight of the order because he fully believed that Draco needed to do this willingly...that he had to do it willingly or he would never get the message, so he controlled himself and the urge to just order Draco to do what he wanted.

Draco didn’t argue, he just got on his knees and tipped his head back and to the one side, perfectly displaying his throat and the carotid artery and jugular vein. Nasta hunched down on his haunches, he didn’t go onto his knees, the act would be too submissive for what he wanted to achieve here. He purposefully dug his claws into Draco’s head, being rough through his hair and ripping at the knots his fingers found without caring. He’d never seen Draco so dishevelled or unkempt. He didn’t like it.

He tipped Draco’s head further back and he sunk his teeth into the side of his neck slowly, making everything more painful. He bit down deep and hard, keeping his jaw clenched and holding his teeth in Draco’s flesh causing as much pain as he possibly could. He was incredibly angry and every inch of him wanted to tear the lump of flesh between his teeth out of Draco’s neck, tear out both the carotid artery and the jugular vein, letting Draco bleed to death at his feet, but he controlled the urge.

He stayed there for long minutes, listening to Draco trying to stifle small noises of pain, holding him still as he wriggled from knee to knee with the agony that he was in, and still he kept his teeth in Draco’s neck. He couldn’t bring himself to let go, to un latch his jaw. He wanted Draco to feel just a modicum of the horrendous pain that he and Max had been feeling over the last few days, through Braiden’s sullenness and silence, through Calix’s restless tantrums, through Harry’s delusions and hallucinations, through Blaise’s death...his jaw clenched a fraction tighter and Draco whimpered, his hands coming up to clutch at Nasta’s upper arms for more support.

Nasta realised then that if he didn’t let go right now then he ran the real risk of killing Draco here and now, in his own bedroom. It took considerable effort on his part as he forced his jaw to release Draco’s neck, holding the blond’s head incredibly still as he slipped all four of his fangs out so that Draco didn’t cause himself additional harm by trying to pull away too soon.

Draco collapsed to the carpet and he sobbed like a small child. Nasta watched him, forcing himself not to react when all he wanted to do was sweep Draco into his arms and comfort him. It didn’t take much to knock those thoughts out of his head, all he needed to do was pull up the memories of Harry at his worst, of the moment that he’d seen Blaise’s lifeless, dead body for the first time as the Healers tried desperately to revive him and all thoughts of comforting Draco vanished.

“On your knees.” Nasta growled commandingly, enunciating every single word with a hard edge.

Draco was very unsteady, his neck a red ruin, his blood soaked into the dirty pyjama top that he was wearing, but he still climbed shakily to his knees, huddling down so as not to attract his ire. It was far too late for that...two days too late. Draco already had his sole focus and the full weight of his anger.
“You know why I’m here.” He stated.

“I started the fight.” Draco said quietly.

“Yes, you did. There was fault on all sides from my understanding. Max took exception to you insinuating that he was acting like a paedophile with his own son, so he lashed out verbally. Harry was angry and fearful for his children, so he lashed out angrily and ordered you both into the garden, an order that you should have followed! Anyone would have expected him to act in such a way in order to protect his children, but you…you are the one who turned things hostile and physical. You attacked Harry, our submissive mate! What were you THINKING?!” Nasta shouted the last word into Draco’s face.

“I wasn’t thinking, I was just angry.”

“Did I ask you to make excuses?” Nasta demanded in a growl. “I don’t care if you were so fucking angry that you couldn’t see straight, he is our submissive! You are mated to him, you are only alive to PROTECT him! At any and all costs, even if it means your own life.” Nasta hissed furiously. “Like the rest of us would in a heartbeat. He shouldn’t need protecting from his own dominants!”

“He launched at me first!” Draco said and Nasta’s fist flashed out less than a second later to punch Draco in the face, bursting his scabbed over bottom lip.

“He was trying to get Leolin out of his bassinet!” Nasta yelled at the top of his voice. “He was trying to protect our son from you!”

The room was silent. Nasta was panting, his chest heaving with his intense anger as he let those words sink in. Sinking in they were too, he could see Draco’s shocked face, he could see him replaying the start of that fight over and over in his mind and he saw it when he finally, finally, realised that Harry had been diving forwards, and slightly to the right side, to where they always placed the bassinet. He saw the exact moment that Draco realised that Harry had been launching forward to try and shield their son and not to attack him.

He had to root himself to the spot to prevent himself from hitting Draco again as the blond fell forward and started crying as he finally realised that the fight had been his fault.

“How…how is Harry?”

Nasta considered not answering just to be cruel, but that wasn’t what he was here for, he reminded himself, calming down and taking several deep breaths.

“You’re not going to ask about Leolin?” He demanded viciously.

Draco’s face showed his confusion and Nasta had to seriously work not to smack it off.

“Harry failed in his attempt to get to Leolin because you attacked him. Leolin was knocked flying from his bassinet and he landed in a heap on the floor under yours and Max’s feet.”

Draco’s pale face went grey and Nasta took satisfaction in letting that sink in for a long moment.

“Leolin was admitted to the hospital and I’ve been going to see him every two hours, Max too. He’s very fortunately completely fine, otherwise you would already be dead for harming my son. He was in shock as his brain couldn’t process what had happened to him as it all happened too quickly for him to understand. He was hurt, but thankfully only a few minor bruises and bumps. He had no broken bones, no serious knocks, his head, neck and spine are undamaged and he is back home as of yesterday morning.”

Draco huddled over, putting his face to the carpet and he sobbed in relief. Nasta didn’t let him relish that relief for longer than a heartbeat.

“You completely gutted Harry.” He said. “Part of his intestines and part of his stomach were hanging out of the rip that you put in his belly.”

Draco snapped upright and stared at him, as if hoping that he’d say that he was joking.

“I’m not lying. Harry is at the Dracken Healing Halls still, with several senior, specialist Dracken Healers working to heal him, to recover from the damage that you did to him. Max and I are giving him doses of our blood daily to try and help.”

“Is he going to be okay?” Draco croaked.

“Harry is very fortunately going to make a full recovery given enough time to fully recuperate. He and Blaise are both coming home tomorrow.”
“What happened to Blaise?”

Nasta set his jaw and clenched his hands, trying to remember that Draco had been fully feral when he’d hit Blaise, that it was usual for feral Drackens to not remember exactly what they’d done. It didn’t really help his anger, but it helped enough that he was able to prevent himself from beating Draco to a pulp as he remembered the pain and the loss in his heart when Blaise had died.

“You hit him in the head, twice. His brain started to swell and he had a slow bleed, both of which were carefully attended to and healed by a senior neurological Healer at Saint Mungos.”

Draco looked relieved. “So he’s okay too?”

“Not exactly. He died the day before yesterday, on the twenty-seventh.” Nasta told him, enunciating each word so that Draco couldn’t miss a single one of them. “He died for an excruciatingly long six and a half minutes and he had to be resuscitated by Healers. I have never felt such pain before, I have never been so devastated nor so scared as I was in that hospital corridor, knowing that one of my mates was dead on the other side of the wall, watching through a window as Healers tried to revive him. You did that to him. You killed him.”

“I didn’t. I didn’t know…I didn’t mean to.”

“I accept that you didn’t mean to kill him, but you still did!” Nasta said in a hard tone. “It doesn’t matter if you didn’t mean to do it or if you didn’t expect him to die from what you did, he still died, Draco!”

“I’m sor…”

“What good is an apology?!?” Nasta demanded furiously, exploding with his overwhelming anger. “What good are mere words when you gutted our submissive, killed another subordinate and injured two babies?!”

“T…two babies?” Draco asked in a wavering voice.

“Braiden was also injured in the fight. Imagine that, you could have killed Father and son and ended the Zabini line in the space of one afternoon. Thankfully Braiden’s injury was relatively minor and he was healed without needing to go to the hospital.”

Draco swallowed and he was still crying, sagging on his knees by his feet.

“Can I see…?”

“Absolutely not.” Nasta cut off immediately. “How could you even think that I’d allow you near any of them after what you did to them? Why do you think I ordered you not to go near them? I’m not taking that sort of risk with their lives. Leolin screams every time that he’s awake. Braiden isn’t eating and has yet to say anything since he was injured and if you think that the others were unscathed just because they weren’t physically hurt, allow me to alleviate you of your delusions.” He said bitingly. “Calix is acting up and lashing out at anyone who comes near him, Farren is having nightmares, Eva and Ave wake up several times a night for reassurance and comfort, Tegan wanders around every room looking for Harry and Regan has separation anxiety, we can’t even put him on his booster seat so that he can eat, he has to be on someone’s lap and he has to be spoon fed. You have mentally scarred every single child that we have! Harry is delusional and hallucinating because the pain potions that he needs, because of what you did to him, are so strong they alter his sense of reality and Blaise has amnesia. Why would I even consider allowing you to go anywhere near them ever again?”

“Please.” Draco sobbed. “Please don’t cut me off.”

“Why?” Nasta demanded furiously. “Why shouldn’t I? You killed Blaise for however long, almost killed Harry and could have killed our children! Why would I bring you back into my family, my home, and give you the opportunity to do this again?”

“I won’t! I swear that I won’t!” Draco sobbed, crying openly and wrapping his arms around his chest as if to hold himself together.

“I can’t take your word for it and I can’t take the risk.” Nasta said simply, dispassionately.

“Please! I’ll do anything. I love them! I love you all, please!” Draco cried.

He made a strange keening noise in his throat before he heaved and like Max and like Harry before him, he brought up bile and stomach acid and as it went over Nasta’s one shin and both shoes, he couldn’t help thinking that, thanks to Max and Harry, this was the third time in less than twenty-four hours that he’d been vomited on by a mate. The things he put up with for all of them.

He hunched back down onto his haunches and seized Draco’s shoulders when he flinched away, obviously expecting a reprimand for vomiting on him, or maybe another punch. Nasta did neither.

“You will go to anger management classes. This is non-negotiable, it is not up for debate. You will go to these classes or I will never let you back into our lives again. If that means that I have to kill you to prevent it, then so be it. You will have no contact with anyone other than myself while you go through these classes and if you don’t complete them, that’s it. There is no second chance here, Draco. You get yourself help to control your temper, you complete these classes no matter what. I don’t care if you hate the classes, hate the people there or the instructors. If you do not go and you do not take in what they’re teaching you, then that’s it, you’ll lose all of us for good.”

“I will, I’ll do it!” Draco said, latching onto the lifeline that he was being presented with, with both hands. “Just please don’t keep me away from my family.”

“When the time comes that you complete these courses, then we can start negotiating terms for you to come back into our lives, but be warned, if Harry does not want you back, then there is nothing that anyone can do. If Blaise can’t accept you back, Harry will not take your side over his, do you understand me? The severity of what you have done has far reaching consequences, Draco and you have no one to blame but yourself.”

Nasta stood up again and he left Draco where he was, dirty, unkempt, purple eyed, bleeding, crying and now dribbling bile too. He stopped at the door and he turned back to Draco.

“Remember, you need to complete your anger management course before you have any hope in hell of coming back to us. Get yourself sorted.” He snarled before taking down the wards and leaving Draco’s bedroom, shoving himself past the elder Malfoys as he did so.

Narcissa went straight into her son’s bedroom, but Lucius caught his arm and swung him around, ice cold grey eyes boring into him.

“What did you do to my son?”

Nasta snatched his arm away and glared back.

“What has he told you?” Nasta growled.
“Nothing, he won’t even speak to us. Your Father all but threw him at us, his face a blooded pulp, bruises and bleeding cuts all over his body and all Aneirin told us was that there had been a fight and then he left again. Draco won’t eat, he hasn’t been sleeping, he won’t bathe or even change his clothes from the pyjamas that his Mother charmed onto him.”

“Am I right in thinking that you assume that the fight was against Draco and that he was an innocent victim in all of this?” Nasta hissed.

“His face and body was a blooded mess, what else am I supposed to think?!” Lucius demanded.

“Your son started everything. He attacked Harry in our small living room that held five of our children. Max attacked Draco for attacking Harry.” Nasta summarised bitingly. “Draco injured Braiden and Leolin, gutted Harry and he then killed Blaise. Forgive me for feeling angry about it!” He snapped sarcastically before turning to leave again.

“Blaise is dead?” Lucius demanded in shock.

“Not any more, thankfully the Healers were able to revive him or Draco would be dead in that room. The massive blow to the head, however, which caused an internal bleed and swelling to the brain, not to mention the lack of oxygen when he officially died, has had its consequences. Blaise is amnesic, at the moment he can’t remember the last few days, I am hoping that this is as far as his memory loss goes, but the Healers are still testing him and they may uncover more damage.”

“Harry is delusional and hallucinating, but this is due to the incredibly strong pain potions that he’s on. His insides are back where they belong, but his muscles are traumatised by the damage done to him and Harry can’t move by himself. He won’t even be able to hold our children when he comes home tomorrow.” Nasta said, calming down as it seemed that Lucius Malfoy was actually listening to him. “Braiden was healed at the house after his leg was split open by flying debris, but he hasn’t spoken a word since and he’s not eating. Leolin came home from the hospital yesterday morning and he’s physically alright, but he’s only woken up fully a handful of times and every time that he does he screams himself back to sleep. Calix is lashing out, Farren has nightmares, the twins are not sleeping through the night anymore, Regan is regressing back to babyhood and Tegan is completely lost.”

Lucius swallowed and looked back to the open door that led into his son’s bedroom. “Is this it?” He asked. “Has Draco been banished?”

Nasta clenched his jaw. “For now he has been, perhaps indefinitely if Harry or Blaise don’t want him back after what he did to them and the children, but I’ve told him that he has to go through anger management courses before I’ll even consider letting him back. Even if Harry and Blaise could get over what he did and they want him to come back, I won’t allow it, I won’t even consider allowing him back, if he hasn’t completed these courses. This can never happen again. I will not take the risk with my family.”

“And you’re sure that he started the fight?” Lucius asked.

“There is partial blame on Max for verbally reacting to Draco’s anger. He took exception to being likened to a paedophile for filming his own son, but Harry was just trying to protect the children. It was Draco who brought the hostility up and it was Draco who started the physical fight that led to the children being injured and traumatised, he was the one who delivered the massive blow to Blaise’s head and he is the one who gutted Harry. The blame of this rests on Draco and he knows it.”

Lucius was still and quiet for several moments before he nodded his head curtly. “Narcissa and I will be around to come and see the children tomorrow, as well as Harry if you’ll allow us to, you said that he was home tomorrow?”

Nasta nodded curtly. “If you wait until the afternoon, Blaise is also coming home tomorrow.”

“I will speak to you more on this tomorrow. Rest assured that I will make sure that Draco goes for these courses. I would never have imagined that he’d hurt the children, nor harm his own lovers so grievously.”

Nasta nodded and his shoulders dropped. He had been expecting a fight or an uphill struggle to get the very overprotective elder Malfoys to accept that Draco had been the one to blame for the fight, but it seemed that they’d come on a lot more than he’d previously believed.

“That would be a big help, thank you.” He said sincerely.

“Then I shall see you tomorrow.” Lucius told him, turning to go to see Draco.
“We’ve moved house.” Nasta told him. “The old house is in ruins and I’m not entirely sure that it’s still structurally safe, so I refused to allow my children to remain there. The house was going to be a gift to the mateship once Harry had finished the stress of the court case. We’ve had to move in early.”

Lucius reached into the pocket of his robes and he brought out a small pad of paper and he summoned a self-inking quill from his office.

Nasta wrote down the new address and he tore off the piece of paper.

“Draco is not to know of this address until I say that he can.” He said sternly. “Am I understood?”

Lucius nodded once, curtly and Nasta let go of the piece of paper and he handed over the pad and the quill.

“Thank you for your cooperation. I’ll see you tomorrow afternoon.”

Nasta left, feeling even more drained and tired. He wanted a shower, he really needed a shave and he wanted some sleep, but he knew that he’d probably not get either with the way the kids were at the moment. Every time they tried to put Calix down into his cot, he screamed and kicked out at them. Farren was having nightmares and he woke up crying throughout the night, the twins woke up crying several times a night and that was without adding in Leolin, who was about to spend his second night at home since he’d been hospitalised. Nasta hoped that it went better than last night, Leolin had cried himself into an exhausted sleep after screaming half the night away for Harry.

Nasta made a few stops before he flooed back to the house and when he arrived home, he walked straight into a war zone. As soon as he stood over the fire guard, Tegan threw a chunky, plastic aeroplane at him, glaring and red cheeked. Leolin was screaming, Regan was hanging around his brother’s neck as Sanex bent down to pick up a crying Farren. Calix was kicking Myron’s stomach and yanking on his hair as the older man tried to stop him. Braiden was nowhere to be seen and the twin girls were all over each other.

“What in the hell happened?” He demanded as he picked Tegan up and put her in the playpen for a time out for throwing things at him before he extracted Ave from Eva and carried her over to the other end of the room where he took Farren from his brother.

“It’s been like a one sided battle since we tried to get them down for their afternoon naps. None of them went down and since he woke up, Leolin hasn’t stopped screaming.” Max said as he came back into the room pulling a clean shirt over his head. “Ave spit up over me.” He said as if he felt the need to explain himself.
“Where is Braiden?” He asked as he cradled Farren, stopping his crying and listening to him sniffling and snuffling as he calmed down.

“In that cupboard.” Max told him, pointing to the currently empty sideboard. “He pitches a fit every time we try to pull him out.”

Nasta sighed and he started swaying with Farren, turning him down into his arms and rubbing in circles on his back. Farren fought every moment of sleep, but eventually Nasta got him sleeping and he walked up the stairs to the first floor, where the master bedroom and the nurseries were located.

The five brand new matching cots, all with different bedding, were set up around all four walls with a changing table taking the sixth spot. He dropped Farren into the cot with the yellow blankets depicted with cute, fluffy sheep.

He went back down to dig Braiden out of the cupboard. It wasn’t healthy for him to hide himself away in a cupboard and that was without thinking about the repercussions it was going to have on Harry mentally if he saw his own son sleeping in a cupboard.

He slipped Braiden out carefully without waking him up and he carried him up to his own cot, slipping him in and tucking him in gently.

Max had taken the two younger girls to bed, they were still sleeping in their bedroom at night, and he’d taken Regan from Sanex to try and get him to bed. It wasn’t getting Regan to sleep that was the problem, he slipped off to sleep easily and without fuss, it was putting him down in his cot. He would wake up as soon as he was taken from the chest of the person that he was resting against and he would clutch at their hair, their shirt, their fingers, anything that he could grab and keep a hold of, and if they somehow managed to extract themselves from him, he’d start crying and they’d have to pick him up again and then they’d be right back to where they’d started from.

Nasta picked Tegan up this time and he sighed in utter exhaustion. He just wanted a shower and some decent sleep. This was the third day that he’d gone without sleep now.

Calix was still fighting and lashing out, Leolin was still screaming and was refusing the bottle that Richard was trying to feed him and as Tegan smacked him in the face, Nasta realised that getting these three to sleep was going to be much, much harder than the previous five.

An hour later and he’d gotten Tegan and Calix to sleep and he was trying to calm Leolin down by stripping him down to his nappy and giving him skin to skin contact, stroking his tiny back with his fingertips. At least he’d stopped screaming.

“Ma?” He called out tiredly.

Nasta shushed him gently and kept rubbing. At least he’d managed to get his bloodstained shirt off, even if he’d never gotten his shower or the shave that he desperately needed. He really was starting to look like a tramp now.
“Ma!” Leolin called out demandingly. “Ma! Ma! Ma!”

“Hush, Leolin.” Nasta said as softly as he could, which was still quite gruff as he was bone tired now. It had been three days and he hadn’t slept once and if this continued on with Leolin then he’d have no sleep tonight either.

It was just a shame that giving him a picture of Harry didn’t work as it had when Harry had nested with their twin girls, it seemed that he had developed just enough in four months to realise that the moving picture of Harry was not actually his Mother and that Harry still wasn’t there. It had silenced him for a few minutes though, as his little brain worked furiously to work out what he was seeing and he had come to the right conclusion that the picture waving at him was not actually his Mother and now if he was handed a photo of Harry he dropped it immediately and he started screaming all over again.

“Ma!” Leolin screeched, all four little limbs flailing.

Nasta grimaced when tiny little toenails dug into his belly and scored downwards, but he ignored it and shushed Leolin again, stroking his back as the tiny little boy squalled like a newborn.

“Pass him here.” Max took his own shirt off and took Leolin from him, sitting down and cradling him to his own chest.

Leolin settled down long enough for them to sigh in relief, then his tiny hands touched Max’s chest and he craned his head back to look up. Gold eyes met bright, sapphire blue, a heartbeat passed and then Leolin started all over again.

“Ma! Ma!” He cried hysterically.

Nasta dropped his head into his hands and he scrubbed vigorously. He stood up and he went light-headed immediately. A moment later he collapsed to his knees and then he fell sideways, into a heap on the floor.

“Nasta!” Max gasped out, shocked and panicked.
Myron got to him first and he rolled him over and checked him over. He shook his head.

“He’s passed out. He didn’t sleep at all last night or the night before and I haven’t seen him eating. He’s exhausted.”

“Will he be okay?”

“He’ll be fine, he just needs some rest. I’ll go put him up in your bedroom.” Myron said, hefting Nasta into his arms and carrying him out of the living room.

Max sunk back down with the screaming Leolin and he felt the burning in his eyes start again. It was all he’d been doing over the last few days and he was feeling gritty, tired and grumpy.

“You need to go to the hospital in half an hour to relieve Ollie from guarding Blaise. Are you still alright to do that?” Richard asked him.

Max nodded. “Yeah. I got some sleep earlier. I’ll be okay. Just keep Nasta asleep. He needs it.”

“We can’t keep him asleep, but we can keep it quiet and hope that he stays asleep.” Alexander sighed.

“I feel awful that I was the one who kept him awake the night before last, he could have gotten some sleep then.” Max said quietly, trying his hardest to ignore Leolin screaming in his ear, even as he stroked and drew patterns on his back.

“You were having nightmares, he chose to stay awake with you as your mate. It isn’t your fault. He could have left you to deal with it on your own, but he chose not to because he loves you. He’s sleeping now and you shouldn’t feel guilty.” Myron told him coming back into the living room. “Now give me that baby and go and take a shower. You smell worse than you did when we took you to that petting zoo and you slipped into the urine soaked straw.”

Max sniffed himself and then looked back to his Father. “I don’t smell that bad!” He insisted.

“You’re offensive to everyone’s sense of smell. You stink, now go and bathe or poor Blaise will be Max scoffed as his Father took Leolin from him and then sat back between Richard and Alexander. Max pulled himself to his feet and grumbled.

“What was that? What have I told you about mumbling? If you have something to say, say it!” Myron chastised him.

“I said I’d rather sleep than shower.”

“I can see that! Now go and wash your armpits at least! No wonder Leolin is crying so hard being so close to yours and Nasta’s pits.”

“We raised you to be cleaner than this.” Richard added with a teasing grin.

“Fine, I’ll wash them with a flannel. I haven’t got time for a full shower, I want to see Blaise.” Max grumbled.

“Make sure you throw the flannel you use into the bin afterwards.” His Grandfather joined in. “Otherwise it’ll walk itself into a dark corner and start growing toxic mould.”

Max crossed his arms over his chest and he stomped to the downstairs bathroom to wash himself down in the sink. He didn’t care how badly he stank, he just wanted Harry and Blaise home. He wanted all of this anger and strife to go away. He wanted the peace and the love to come back into their family.

First things first though, he needed to go and sit with Blaise, even if he was sleeping. He needed to be close to his mate, his mate who had actually died. He couldn’t even bear the thought of it. He couldn’t wait for this time tomorrow, when Harry and Blaise would both be back home and he could watch them both together without having to pick between one or the other. If it was one thing that he absolutely hated about having Blaise in the hospital and Harry at the Healing Halls, without stating the obvious, it was that he had to pick between them. He really couldn’t wait until tomorrow.

Harry came into consciousness suddenly and with his heart beating in his throat and he peeled his eyelids apart. Grunting, he wriggled around and blinked into the bright whiteness of the light.

“Harry, are you okay? You’re not going to be sick again, are you?”

“Uh?” Harry grunted, turning towards the noise, but not seeing anything. He might have been on his belly, his entire body felt like it had been steamrollered when he tried to get onto his side.

Something loomed into his line of vision and he startled, flailing his arms and kicking out with his legs, which caused him excruciating, agonising pain.

“Hey, hey. Calm down. It’s Cassander, Harry.”

“Uh?” He grunted again.

“Cassander.” The indeterminate shadow answered.

“Where…?”

“You’re at the Dracken Healing Halls, remember?”

Harry thought he was frowning, but when he ducked his head, his hand got wet. He was dribbling. Someone wiped his mouth for him and he tried to roll away, only for his stomach to lurch painfully as the sensation of falling encompassed his mind.

“I see what you mean, Cass!” Someone grunted as they caught him just before he hit the floor. The person groaned and stood up, placing him gently back into the bed.

“Thank fuck you’re here too, Al.”

“At least he hasn’t been sick, yet.”
“The Healers said the new potion would make him drowsy and sick, but I’m just glad that he’s no longer talking about eating legs. Though I do wish that I’d been here for the talk about the graphic sex with centaurs and Acromantula. Apparently Max almost splintered the spine of one of the apprentices for getting hard from what Harry was babbling yesterday.”

“You damn well would have wanted to listen to that! But no, this potion is weaker than the other one, he’s no longer hallucinating to that extent anymore.”

Harry was confused. “Where the two?” He babbled.

“We’re right here.”

“Two.”

“Yes, there are two of us. Cassander and Alaric.”

“Want ‘Asta.”

“It’s the middle of the night, Harry. Nasta is sleeping for the first time in three days…he all but collapsed.”

“Max?”

“Max is sleeping at the hospital with Blaise.”

Harry started crying and, scared, Cassander and Alaric shared a panicked look, right before Harry gave out a distress call.

“No, hush, Harry. It’s okay! Everything’s fine and you’re safe.”

Harry just cried harder and the two men had no idea what was going on. They were still trying to calm Harry down when Nasta burst into the room looking half crazed, his wings spread and his fangs bared.
He rushed to Harry and scooped him up, sitting on the side of the bed and cradling Harry in his arms, curling over him in an effort to protect all of him.

“What happened?” He demanded in a bass, gruff growl.

“We honestly don’t know. He was a little confused when he woke up, as he was the last time, but he wasn’t sick this time, so we thought that he was going to be fine. But he just seemed really, really confused and he just started crying.”

“I didn’t want the Skrewts to eat me.” Harry sobbed into the bare skin of Nasta’s neck.

Nasta deflated all at once and he shushed Harry and started rocking him.

“I thought he was over the hallucinations?” Alaric questioned.

“A side effect of the new potion he’s on is vivid nightmares.” Nasta said gruffly.

“He only started crying after we told him that you and Max were sleeping.”

“He was looking around a lot though, Cass.” Alaric said worriedly. “And he would have wanted his mates here to protect him.”

“He jumped when he first woke up too, when I came into his line of vision.” Cassander said in realisation.

“Why are you the only one to arrive?” Alaric asked.

“Draco is on lockdown, I ordered him not to come near Harry or Blaise when I went to punish him yesterday afternoon. I was visiting Max and Blaise when Harry’s call came, I told Max to stay with Blaise.”

“You were supposed to be sleeping.”
Nasta just shook his head, still rocking Harry.

“Are you not sleeping?”

“Not at the moment.”

“You collapsed though, Richard told me.”

“I barely slept for an hour and a half.” Nasta told the older men. “I just want my family back home, where I can keep an eye on them both at the same time without having to floo from one place to another. I want them both together where I can look after them both.”

“Harry’s being released in the morning, how about Blaise?”

“He’s being released in the afternoon. They’re both being released within hours of one another. I’m just going to be grateful to get them both home. I’m going to make up a bed for them using two settees and a lot of blankets and pillows.”

“You know we’re all going to be on hand to help you too.” Alaric promised. “We’re not going to leave you boys alone to deal with all of this by yourselves.”

Nasta nodded. “Thank you for all your help. I don’t know how I would have coped if I didn’t have you all to help. I wouldn’t have been able to leave the kids on their own and I wouldn’t have been able to leave either Harry or Blaise unguarded for a moment either.”

“We’re always going to help you boys, we do love you all, not just our Max.” Alaric insisted.

“Where are my centaur babies?” Harry asked seriously, interrupting them and looking up at Nasta curiously. “They were here yesterday, but today they’re gone.”

Nasta held back his tears as his eyes prickled uncomfortably and he pushed Harry’s head back into his neck.
“You were hallucinating, Caru.” He explained gently. “You have Dracken babies, not centaur babies.”

Nasta felt Harry’s mouth working against the skin on his neck and he smiled tiredly, caressing the soft, fluffy hair and inhaling Harry’s scent deeply. He smelt like the lime body wash that he was currently using. Nasta buried his nose in deeper and he inhaled deeper, thankful that Harry didn’t smell like disinfectant or hospitals in general. He still smelt like his beautiful Harry. It was comforting.

“I’m sure I had centaur babies, I remember giving birth to centaur babies. I remember being mated by centaurs.”

Nasta chuckled. “Max isn’t that big, Harry and he’s not that much of a stallion either.”

Harry frowned. He looked around and then he looked again. “Where is my Max?”

“He’s with Blaise, remember?”

Harry frowned harder, his forehead wrinkling. “Are they okay?”

“They’re both fine.” Nasta told him, holding Harry tighter. “Everyone is fine.”

“Can I come home?” Harry asked, looking up at him with wide, hopeful green eyes.

Nasta’s heart broke a little as he cradled Harry, who found it difficult, and painful, to move his own body, and would for some time to come too.

“Not just yet, Cariad. Tomorrow, at around mid-morning. You and Blaise are both coming home.”

“With my centaur babies? Are they coming too?” Harry asked and Nasta felt his heart breaking further. Like Max, he couldn’t stand seeing Harry or Blaise this way.
“You don’t have centaur babies, Harry.”

“I do!” Harry insisted, his eyes welling up with tears and Nasta hugged him tight.

“Okay…okay, they can come too.” He relented. Harry wouldn’t be on these strong potions for much longer. He would stop talking about having sex with others and having babies by them then.

Harry’s entire face lit up and he latched onto him. “I love you, dragon.”

Cassander aborted a snort of laughter when Nasta swung around to glare furiously at him.

“I love you too, Harry.” He said as he cuddled his mate.

“Is he calm now?”

Nasta looked up to the massive hulk of the trainee Healer on duty tonight. His name was Georgio Alessandri and he was easily as big as Max and Myron in both height and broadness, but he was younger than them both. He was mated to the older sister of Harry’s friend, Henley.

“Grawp! You’ve come to visit me again!”

Nasta had no idea why Harry called Georgio, Grawp, and Harry wouldn’t elaborate, he just pointed confusedly at Georgio and insisted firmly that his name was Grawp.

“Hello again, Harry.” Georgio greeted as he moved from where he’d been standing just inside the room and he came to check Harry over, taking the change of name completely in his stride, not letting Harry or the things that he was saying faze him. Nasta liked that about him.

“What are you doing outside of the forest, Grawp? You’ll be caught!” Harry insisted.

Georgio prodded around Harry’s stomach and he didn’t answer as he concentrated on carefully playing his fingers over the place on his belly where Harry was injured.
“Ow. Grawpy, no!” Harry frowned.

“I think you need another potion.”

“Can’t he go on the lower dosage ones?” Nasta asked desperately.

Georgio shook his head as he held Harry’s one leg in his huge, spade like hand and lightly squeezed his calf muscles with the other. Harry gasped in pain and kicked out in reflex and turned more into Nasta’s body “No. The belly wound was very serious and it’ll be hideously painful for him if he isn’t kept on regular potions. The leg muscle is still tight and tender too. It’ll have him screaming in agony if we lower the dosage too soon and I assure you, that’ll be much worse to bear than seeing him like this.”

Nasta nodded as he realised that it definitely would be worse and he held Harry impossibly closer to his chest, kissing his cheek.

“Harry, can you drink this for me?” Georgio asked him. “I made it strawberry flavoured for you.”

Once again, for the eighth or ninth time, Harry fell for the trick and he turned around interestedly, opening his mouth for Healer Alessandri to tip the potion into his mouth. He swallowed it automatically and then gagged and spluttered.

“That wasn’t strawberry, Grawp!” Harry cried out.

“I know. I’m sorry. I just needed you to take the potion.” Healer Alessandri said sadly.

“Bad, Grawp.” Harry chastised him before turning to cuddle back into Nasta.

“This should send him back to sleep.” Georgio insisted. “He was due a potion when he woke up. He is healing though, at least he can wriggle a little and roll around now. He couldn’t do that not even a handful of hours ago. I’m still sure that he’ll be released tomorrow. Healer Grant is going to sign him off in the morning and we’ll do some final checks, get him a week’s supply of potions to send home with him and we can finally release him at around ten or eleven tomorrow morning.”
“Thank you.” Nasta said heartfeltly. “I just want him home now.”

“Once he falls asleep, you can put him back down.” Georgio said before leaving the room.

“Bye, Grawp.” Harry called out softly.

Harry nuzzled into his neck and his hands slipped under his shirt and played with his skin.

“You need to take your shirt off.” Harry told him.

“Why?” Nasta asked him. “Do you want skin to skin contact? Would it make you feel better?”

“I like you better with no clothes.” Harry told him and this time Cassander couldn’t abort the laugh that burst free.

“You can leave now.” Nasta told them in a growl. “I can watch him from here.”

“Aw, but I want to see you with no clothes on. I bet your body’s all tight and muscled from working on that reserve for ten hours a day.” Cassander eyed him up and down and Nasta snarled at him outright.

“Come on, Cass. Let’s leave them be, preferably before you get your head torn off.” Alaric said quickly, all but dragging his older brother out of the hospital room.

Nasta settled on the bed and he pulled his shirt off, letting Harry snuggle into his skin.

“I like your skin. I want to peel it off and make it into a pillow so I can always have it to touch.”

Nasta would have been less scared of that comment if Harry didn’t have razor sharp claws that he could bring out at will.
“You don’t have to peel it off to make it into a pillow, you can just use me as a pillow instead.”

“Oh.” Harry said before nodding against his chest. “I like that idea more. Your heartbeat’s nice and that’s under your skin.”

Thankfully Nasta didn’t need to hold himself strong for much longer as the potion finally made Harry drowsy enough to put him to sleep. Nasta couldn’t wait until Harry was on the lower dosage potions. He’d thought that this potion would be better than the one that Harry had been on just yesterday, and it was really, at least with this potion Harry only talked nightmarish bollocks directly after he’d taken the potion instead of every moment that he was awake, but he was now suffering with nightmares that were terrifying him and if Nasta had to choose between being scared of the things that Harry was saying or Harry being petrified of the things that he was seeing in his dreams, he’d take the former every single time. Unfortunately it wasn’t him who made that sort of decision, it was the Healers and all he could do was hold Harry and try to assure him that the nightmares that he was having were not real.

“I love you, Harry.” He said before kissing his head.

He settled himself back against the pillows and as he held Harry close, he couldn’t entirely prevent himself from closing his eyes…just for a moment or two. It wouldn’t hurt to catch a small nap with Harry and he was truly exhausted and drained. A small nap wouldn’t end the world, all he needed was a small rest just to recover a small amount of energy because he knew that he couldn’t carry on as he’d been doing. He’d collapsed earlier and he couldn’t afford for that to happen when he had babies to care for and two mates in separate places to stand guard over. He just needed to close his eyes for a small while, that’s all.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Nasta had slept for three hours with Harry before his submissive had screamed in his ear as he woke up, terrified, from another nightmare. He’d calmed Harry down, with the help of the Healers, and Harry had gone back off to sleep easily enough.

Enrique had been there when he’d woken up, but he had decided against waking him up as he believed that Nasta needed his sleep. Once Harry was fast asleep again, Nasta had let Enrique take over and he’d made the decision to go home. He’d had a bit of sleep now, so he wasn’t feeling as bad as he’d been earlier, but he had a lot he needed to get ready for later in the day, when Harry and Blaise would be coming home.

Only when he arrived back home it was to the hysterical screaming of his baby, Leolin. Myron looked to be at the end of his tether and Richard was sat beside him like a lost sheep, a bottle in one hand, a dummy in the other and a lap full of toys.
“Pass him here.” Nasta demanded as he stepped over the fireguard and held his arms out for Leolin. “Has he slept at all?” He asked.

“He cried himself to sleep and he stayed asleep for two hours. He woke up, suckled three quarters of an ounce of milk before he realised that we weren’t Harry and then he started screaming anew.” Myron told him.

“Get yourselves to bed.” Nasta told them. “I’ve had a couple of hours, I’m alright.”

“Are you sure?” Richard asked, completely exhausted.

Nasta nodded. “Go on. I’ll calm him down and I’ve got several things to do and then I want to go and check on Blaise and Max if I can manage it.”

“Are they okay?”

“I expect that they’re both sleeping. I left them in bed together.” Nasta said as he hefted his Faerie son over his shoulder and cradled the back of his skull gently, rubbing his fingers through Leolin’s jet black hair.

Myron stood up and stretched and Richard put the bottle and the specially shaped dummy on the coffee table and he shifted the pile of toys away and he accepted Myron’s hands to help him up.

“Night.” Nasta called out as he paced around the living room with Leolin screaming in his ear.

“If you need us, call us.” Myron said sternly and he waited until Nasta had nodded his understanding before he took Richard’s hand and they left for the guest room that they’d been staying in for the last few days…what little they’d actually seen of it that was.

Nasta slowed his pace and he started humming softly. It took over ten minutes before Leolin’s cries started tapering off and he stopped flailing. He grizzled and he whined, but eventually, he had to give in and Nasta was so relieved as he bent to put Leolin into his bassinet…for all of a minute at least. As soon as Leolin’s back hit the bassinet mattress, he was awake and he screamed.
Nasta had him back up against his shoulder and was shushing him again, even as his shoulders sagged in exhaustion and he started up his humming again.

Half an hour later saw him collapsed on the settee with a sleeping Leolin and he rolled his son onto a cushion next to him and he held his hands over him, his face screwed up as he fervently hoped that Leolin stayed asleep. He did. He eased himself up slowly, oh so slowly. He breathed a massive sigh of relief as Leolin, on his belly spread over the cushion, stayed asleep.

He moved quickly to the kitchen and made himself a cup of tea, and if he splashed some Firewhiskey into it, who the hell could blame him? He drank the cup of tea down in several large swallows before he looked at the empty cup and then the bottle of Firewhiskey before he decided that a small swig from the bottle wouldn’t hurt. He just didn’t care anymore, he wanted this awful ordeal to be over. He wanted to drink himself into oblivion and wake up and find that none of this had happened and that everything was back to how it was supposed to be.

He didn’t do anything of the sort when he reminded himself harshly that he had eight babies to guard over, one of whom was in the other room, and he needed to be ready to run to Harry or Blaise if they called for him. He took a long, deep drink from the bottle, the alcohol burning his tongue and his throat, all the way down into his belly before he made himself another cup of tea and he went into the living room to set everything up ready for later that day, when he’d finally have his Harry and his Blaise back home.

Something relaxed in his chest as he repeated that again in his head. He would have them both home later today. He took a deep breath and he started to move all of the toys and baby things into the bigger family room next door. The kids would be in this room tomorrow, leaving the smaller room for Harry and Blaise to rest in, while still having access to the floo, just in case either of them needed a Healer quickly.

He pushed the one settee against the wall, moving it out of the way, before he pushed the second one to face the third settee, the one that Leolin was still sleeping on, and after making obsessively sure that none of Leolin’s limbs or appendages were going to be caught between the two settees’ he pushed them flush together.

He left the room, going up the stairs to the master bedroom and he stripped the bed of the duvet and its pillows. He peeked in on Eva and Ave in their bassinets by the side of the bed, but they were still sleeping for now. He had the baby monitors downstairs so he’d hear them if they woke. It was Farren who was going to be the problem now, because if he had another nightmare, then he’d wake up all three of his brothers and his sister and it would be hell to get them all back to sleep. He prayed that Farren slept through the night, he was too exhausted to get all five of them back to sleep when he already had to feed Eva and Ave and get them back to sleep and he had to deal with Leolin, who would wake up for a feed at about four in the morning and then he’d start up his screaming for Harry again and that wouldn’t stop until the tiny boy was so exhausted that he drifted off to sleep which bordered on passing out.

He put the pillows on the settee opposite Leolin and he folded the huge, king sized duvet up as much as he could and put that on the settee too, far away from Leolin.

He moved the bassinet into the other room and he made sure that the family room was safe and that nothing was left lying around. He made sure to lock all the cupboard doors so that Braiden couldn’t hide in them. If he tried to get in them tomorrow or pitched a fit because they were locked, he’d have to see what he could possibly do to help him, even if he had to ask Healer Almus about it.

The last thing he did was shut the two double doors and lock them. He warded them with a heavy silencer. He did not want Harry and Blaise to be disturbed tomorrow and he didn’t want them getting up. He wouldn’t dream of keeping the babies from them, but they’d only see them one at a time so he could monitor how much they were doing.

Harry could seriously injure his recently healed muscles if he tried to pick up one of the children. He couldn’t allow that to happen and it would be easier if he took away the temptation for Harry to reach down for a crying, clamouring child. If he only allowed one child in at a time and he had that baby in his own arms at all times, there would be no chance for Harry to injure himself further. Maybe knowing that Harry was back in the house would be enough to help soothe his children. If it wasn’t then he’d just have to carry on dealing with their tears and tantrums as best as he could. He wouldn’t allow anything or anyone to impact on Harry or Blaise’s recovery, even if it meant separating his babies into a different room altogether.

He went back into the kitchen and he boiled the kettle, eyeing the bottle of Firewhiskey considerably. He ignored the urge to drink while he made up two bottles, but once he was done, he gave in to his desire and he took another deep drink, relishing the burn that went all the way down his throat and into his belly. He sighed out contentedly and he shook both of the baby bottles vigorously and left them to rest, ready for when Eva and Ave woke up.

He rubbed his head and he got down a bowl and he poured out some cereal. He needed something to eat, even though he really didn’t feel like eating anything, or the Firewhiskey would go right to his head and he’d put his babies at risk via his negligence.

He forced spoonful after spoonful of his favourite muesli down, not even tasting it as he just chewed and swallowed repeatedly until it was gone. It was one of the most unpleasant of experiences that he’d ever forced himself through, but several minutes later, he felt better. More awake, less woolly headed, more energetic and more alert. When was the last time that he’d actually eaten anything? He couldn’t remember.

He was able to sort out Eva and Ave when they woke for their feed and he didn’t feel quite as exhausted, and he felt much more able to deal with their crying as they fought sleep for as long as they could. He eventually got them down and sleeping again but he only got to relax for several moments before he heard a shrill cry from the next room. Farren had had another nightmare.

Nasta hurried into the next room, only to close his eyes and curse as he saw Calix’s head pop up through the bars of his cot and he heard Braiden grunt before he rolled over onto his belly and pushed himself up to look around as Farren continued to cry. Braiden stood up in his cot and he started crying too.

“Come on.” Nasta sighed as he picked Farren up and held him close, even as Farren wrapped his arms tight around his neck and curled his legs up. “It was just a bad dream, Baban.” He said soothingly. “It’s alright, nothing’s going to harm you here. Not with me here with you.”

Nasta had to close his eyes and sigh when he saw Braiden climbing over the bars of his cot. His oldest son came toddling to him, arms outstretched and in floods of tears.

Of course all the noise woke Regan and then after another minute or two of all of them crying, Tegan popped her head up too.
“Of course all of you are awake.” Nasta sighed.

“Daddy! Daddy, pick up!” Calix cried from his cot and, realising that he couldn’t get one of them down to sleep while all four of the others were screaming, he let Calix out of his cot too as he continued to soothe Farren, who was refusing to be moved from where he’d buried his face into his neck.

“Daddy, we go down?” Braiden asked, clutching onto his leg and pointing a little finger at the door.

“No, we’re not going downstairs, Braiden.” Nasta told him as he tried to cling onto Farren as he rescued Regan from where he was trying, and failing, to get out of his cot. He’d been a minute or two away from falling flat on his back on the floor.

“Want go down!” Braiden stomped a foot and Nasta breathed deeply, trying to mentally prepare himself for this coming battle. He was not prepared for this, at all. Not physically or mentally or emotionally.

“No.” He said sternly.

Braiden screamed and dropped to the floor, kicking his legs and flailing his arms and Nasta closed his eyes and counted to three. Tegan, who had been self-soothing and had lain back down to go back to sleep, popped her head back up, frowning and fist at her sleepy eyes as she was woken up yet again.

Nasta picked her up, left the nursery and he took her into the nursery that he and Max had set up for Eva and Ave, ready for them to use in a few months’ time.

He popped Tegan into the one cot and shushed her, easing her down whilst stroking her gorgeously thick, black hair, Farren still clutched to his front, but at least he was quiet now, even if he was still snuffling.

The quiet was just what Tegan needed and not more than five minutes later she was asleep again with her favourite penguin tucked up by her face. Hindsight was hitting him with a hard, cruel lesson. He should have put Tegan and Braiden in this nursery to begin with. They were the two most likely to stay asleep all night.

He couldn’t put Farren down without him whining, but he couldn’t take him back into that nursery because it would only wind him up again. He did the only thing that he believed that he could do. He went down the hallway, opened a door and he walked into a guest room that had been set up and chosen by Richard and Myron because it was the closest to the nurseries.

Myron was already moving to sit up before he’d even gotten halfway across the room. He let out a warning growl, still mostly asleep, before sitting fully upright, one arm moving to shield the still sleeping Richard, who was stirring.

“It’s Nasta.” He identified himself, waiting for Myron’s human mind to take over from the Dracken.

“What’s happened?” Myron asked, moving to get up.

“Nothing, everything’s alright, I just need… all five of the kids are awake, I got Tegan sleeping in a separate room, Farren’s calming down, but if I take him back into the other room, he’s going to be wound up again.”

“You want him to sleep with us?”

“If that’s alright.” Nasta nodded.

Myron settled himself back down and held his arms out. Nasta passed over the snuffling Farren and he said his goodnights again, going back to tackle Braiden, Calix and Regan. As he turned to close the door, he smiled tiredly as he saw Farren settling down between his two Grandfathers’, a little hand holding onto Myron’s fingers as if worried that he would vanish if he let go. That was two kids sorted, now all he needed was to sort out the other three and hope that Leolin was still sleeping.

He opened the nursery door to find the three babies sat where he’d left them, looking at one another as if wondering why their crying wasn’t bringing their Daddy running.

When Braiden saw him, he threw himself backwards and started screaming again. Nasta picked him up and placed him back into his cot, ignoring his tantrum as best as he could while he cradled the clingy Regan to his neck.

Calix was circling around his feet, tugging on the jeans that Nasta was still wearing four days later and he had to close his eyes and think, think of something, anything, that could help him to settle these three down.

It took him an hour just to stop them from screaming and in that time, Braiden had cried himself sick, Regan had fallen asleep twice in his arms and had either been woken back up by Calix or Braiden, or he’d woken up when Nasta had tried to put him into his cot.

“Just go to sleep.” He muttered under his breath and he looked at his watch to find that it was just past four in the morning. Leolin would be waking up now, any when in the next half an hour for his feed, if he wasn’t already awake that was.

He started humming and pacing with Regan, before starting to sing. He was probably the world’s worst singer and he was hopelessly tone deaf, but if it would get these kids to sleep, he’d warble his way through every lullaby that he knew thrice over.

After yet another shaky, pitch breaking rendition of Hushabye Mountain, he had Regan sleeping and Calix drifting, but Braiden was all but glaring at him from where he was back in his cot. Every time he climbed out, Nasta had picked him up and put him back in, sometimes even before his little feet had touched the carpet.

He carefully eased Regan back down into the cot and breathed out a massive sigh of relief when he stayed asleep, either because he had been very gentle and Regan hadn’t realised that he’d been put down or because he was so tired now that he just needed to stay asleep.

Nasta turned and picked up the sagging Calix and turned him down into his arms, rubbing at his back as he started a third recital of Twinkle Twinkle Little Star and another, countless, circuit of the room. Braiden tried his luck once more while his back was turned, but Nasta had swept him up before he’d even made it over the top bar of the cot and had plonked him back down on his bum.

Calix gave in at half four and Nasta was able to put him down and tuck him back in before turning his sole attention onto Braiden, who at least was laying down having given up trying to get out of his cot after his many failed attempts.

Nasta stood over him and stroked his hair and back until those indigo eyes, the eyes that completely tore at his heart because of their likeness to Blaise’s, closed and they stayed closed. He tucked Braiden in, checked on Regan and Calix before he left their nursery, went to peek in on Tegan, who was still fast asleep, before checking on Eva and Ave, who were also still asleep. He didn’t bother checking in on Farren, he knew that if there was any hint of a problem then Myron would deal with it. He trusted Myron to deal with it.

Instead he went down the stairs to the raucous wailing of Leolin and he knew then that Leolin had been awake and crying for a while. He really couldn’t handle this on his own anymore. He wanted to tag out and just go to bed and sleep.

Leolin was exactly where he’d been left, in exactly the same position, not that Nasta had expected any differently seeing as Leolin couldn’t even roll himself onto his side yet.

“Come here, Baban.” He said softly and Leolin stopped crying so furiously to listen. “It’s alright, I’ve got you.”

“Ma!” Leolin cried in something that Nasta almost wanted to call delight.

He felt terrible when he picked Leolin up and those bright gold eyes caught sight of him and the smile turned into the most ferocious scowl that Nasta had ever seen Leolin make before. He did feel completely unappreciated as a Father when his own son looked at him in such a way. He felt even worse when Leolin sagged in his arms and started crying anew. Nasta, now with a splitting headache, a combination of the Firewhiskey that he’d knocked back and half the night with babies screaming in his ear, didn’t even try to stop Leolin from crying, he just carried him through the corridors to the kitchen to boil the kettle to make him up a bottle. He resisted the urge to take a swig of Firewhiskey from the bottle. He had his son in his arms and he knew that he’d already had more than enough for one night.

He cooled the milk before plugging up Leolin’s mouth with the teat. The blessed silence was like heaven to his ears and to his pounding head. He fed Leolin and held his tiny hand between his fingers and he rubbed and stroked, reassuring Leolin that he wasn’t alone, even if he wasn’t the parent that Leolin wanted right now.

He walked back into the living room and he shifted himself into the little nest made by the two settees being pushed flush together and he stretched out on them, glad that they were both five seaters as he would be able to lie down without being too uncomfortable, which meant that Blaise would be able to lie on it comfortably and Harry definitely would be able to.

He burped Leolin and savoured the few sleepy moments after he’d just finished a bottle where he was completely full and drowsy. Then inevitably Leolin called out for Harry.

“Ma.” Leolin called out sleepily. “Ma.”

“Shhh, Leolin.” Nasta said softly.

“Ma!” Leolin cried out more demandingly.

Nasta lay down and he rested Leolin on his chest. He pulled a pillow under his head and yanked the duvet over his legs and hips, stopping at Leolin’s waist. He rubbed and petted gently at Leolin’s back, thankful that Leolin was calming down quicker on a full belly and with an ear against his heartbeat.

“It’s alright, Caru.” He said gently. “I love you, your Mum will be back in just a few hours and he’s going to want to cuddle you all day. You just need to sleep for a little longer.” He said under his breath, in an almost whisper. “It won’t be long now.”

“Ma.” Leolin said defiantly, but with a definite waver of sleepiness thrown in now.

“I know, it’s hard on you. You don’t really know what’s going on or how to handle all these sudden changes. How can anyone expect you, or your brothers and sisters, to deal with these changes when we, the adults, are struggling with it all too?”

“Da.” Leolin said quietly, little hands clenching and releasing, clenching and releasing, into the skin of Nasta’s neck.
“I’m here for you, Baban.” Nasta assured him softly, nosing into his hair and kissing Leolin’s head. “I love you so much. This will never happen to you again. None of us ever wanted to see you hurt or sick and in the last several months you’ve been both.”

Leolin remained quiet as he listened to Nasta speaking and his fingers stopped clenching and just rested against him as Nasta breathed deeply and slowly, which seemed to be working miracles for Leolin. It was only then that he remembered that if Leolin was being overly fussy that Harry would lie down with him, place him on his chest with his ear over his heart and talk him to sleep, letting Leolin feel and hear him breathing deeply. He could have screamed at himself for not remembering that before now.

He relaxed and kept his breathing slow and steady, taking in deep breaths that lifted Leolin on his chest, held it for a moment, before releasing, lowering Leolin back down. The soothing motion, his voice, soft and light as he spoke to Leolin, the regulation of his breathing and his steady heartbeat seemed to be too much for Leolin, who gave into sleep without too much of a struggle this time. Nasta could have cheered, but he settled for throwing his head back and breathing out in utter relief.

He readjusted himself and he closed his eyes, turning his head on the pillow, but not his body, before he finally slipped off to sleep himself. The baby monitors, three of them, were on the settee next to his head, Farren was well cared for, Leolin was in his arms, Harry was being guarded by Enrique and Max was sleeping soundly for once. Nasta would keep an ear out for his distress call, just in case he had another nightmare, but he wasn’t expecting it tonight.

Everything was fine for the moment, he could sleep in peace without worrying. He had a lot to do later today, he needed this sleep in order to help him to be prepared for what was to come. In just a few hours’ time, Harry would be home and it was going to be hard enough to control the kids, even harder to keep Harry lying down and away from all of them or reacting to their cries and demands for his attention. He needed to get at least another few hours’ sleep or he wasn’t going to have the strength or the mental capacity to deal with what was to come, and with Leolin now sleeping on his chest, he finally allowed himself to drift off. It had been a rough three days, they would never be the same again thanks to what had happened, during the fight and during the aftermath of it, but maybe, given some time and a lot of work, they could eventually heal from it.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Well I’ve finally reached the massive milestone of one hundred chapters. With a fic that was only supposed to be thirty chapters. Funny how the muses work sometimes! This is also the longest chapter of The Rise of the Drackens to date too! Oh, I’ve been nominated for four fanfiction awards, two of the nominations are for this fic! Please vote for me, it’ll be a wonderful present for the hundredth chapter!

http://fanaticfanficsawards.blogspot.co.uk/p/voting_30.html
I’m so happy to be nominated! And that Rise of the Drackens and Blue Moon have been nominated. Oh, speaking of Blue Moon, I’m finally writing the catch up future chapter that you lovelies reading that fic wanted. It’s going really well!

I think this is all of it, I hope you lovelies have enjoyed it, we reached our hundred milestone and it almost killed me to get this chapter, at this length, to you lovelies so soon! I’m exhausted! But damn was it worth it! I hope you lovelies enjoy it, that you review and vote for me please! I’ll be back as soon as I can with chapter one hundred-one, but first, I think I need to focus on The Black Heir for a bit and see what I can do with that first, but I’ll be back soon,

StarLight Massacre. X
Settling Down

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Everything was fine for the moment, he could sleep in peace without worrying. He had a lot to do later today, he needed this sleep in order to help him to be prepared for what was to come. In just a few hours’ time, Harry would be home and it was going to be hard enough to control the kids, even harder to keep Harry lying down and away from all of them or reacting to their cries and demands for his attention. He needed to get at least another few hours’ sleep or he wasn’t going to have the strength or the mental capacity to deal with what was to come, and with Leolin now sleeping on his chest, he finally allowed himself to drift off. It had been a rough three days, they would never be the same again thanks to what had happened, during the fight and during the aftermath of it, but maybe, given some time and a lot of work, they could eventually heal from it.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-One – Settling Down

Harry had barely woken up, in pain as per usual, when Nasta had come into his private room, all smiles and joyful delight, ready to finally take him back home. Harry wanted to hit him for being so cheerful when he was in so much fucking pain.

It was almost unbearable before he had gulped down a pain potion, but he hated the way that the potions made him feel, not to mention the awful, horrific things that they made him see and believe. He didn’t remember all of what he’d seen or said during his stay at the Healing Halls, but he remembered enough to know that he didn’t like it, so he had refused to take one of the potions this morning, knowing as he did that he’d be going home to see his children today. He couldn’t subject them to the sight of their Mother all drugged up and delusional, he just couldn’t.

“Are you ready to come home?” Nasta asked him, bending forward to kiss his forehead. “I’ve got your prescription, the Healers have signed you off, you’re all set. Do you feel strong enough to go by Apparation, or would you prefer the floo?”

“Either.” Harry grunted curtly. “Just get me home already.”

Nasta’s smile dimmed a bit and Harry felt like a complete bastard for that, he took a calming breath and closed his eyes to reel his rampant negative emotions back in. He made a bit more of a visible effort, wrapping his arms around Nasta’s neck as his oldest mate picked him up gently and pecking at his lips, even if the slight movement made him feel like he was going to be sick all over Nasta’s front. Again.

Nasta scooped him up and held him close, keeping him as straight as possible due to his very tender, healing stomach muscles and Harry was at least grateful for that. If he’d curled up at that moment he really would have been very, violently sick.

“Bye, Harry. Hopefully I won’t be seeing you again soon.” The ancient, head Dracken Healer, Alfred Grant, said to him, patting his knee when Nasta carried him past.

“Thank you for looking after me.”

“I was more than happy to. Now remember, you’re not to move at all while you’re at home for at least another day or two, otherwise you’ll find yourself right back here.” The Healer warned.

Harry nodded miserably and he held on tight to Nasta as they said their final farewells and went through the floo.

Harry was in agony just from the short journey through the floo network and he was grateful when Nasta put him gently and carefully down on a settee that smelt like his oldest mate and covered him over with the huge, tent like duvet from their bed. The familiar scent of his mates was soothing and calming and it made him feel instantly better.

He didn’t notice that he wasn’t at their home right away, to be fair he was in some pain and he was trying to prevent himself from vomiting after the trip through the floo, but it was the smell of the place that clued him in first, once he took his nose from the duvet that was, as it just didn’t smell like home. He opened his eyes to see a very unfamiliar ceiling. He looked around as much as he could without moving before looking back to the smiling Nasta, who had been watching him closely.

“Where are we?” He asked, very confused.

Nasta’s smile grew as he sat on the arm of the settee by his head.

“This is our home, Cariad.”

“I’m not that drugged up that I’m imagining a new house. Where are we?”

“This is our home, love. Our new one. Max and I planned it, had it built and furnished and it was going to be a gift once your court case was over with.”

Harry’s eyes widened. “That’s why you stopped me from looking for a house for us and kept telling me to wait a bit longer!”

Nasta grinned and he nodded. “Yes. I couldn’t have you buying a house when I knew that this one was being custom made from the very foundations, just for us and our family.”

“I want to see it! All of it!” Harry demanded excitedly.

“You’re in no fit state to see anything.” Nasta told him sternly.

“But…you can’t tell me that I’m in a new house and then not let me explore it, Nas!” Harry cried out in dismay.

“You’re in too much pain and I just want you to rest for a bit. How about I carry you through to the kitchen and give you a bit of a tour later on?”

Harry bit his lip, but it was the sharp twinge in his belly that ultimately made up his mind. He grudgingly nodded.

“Alright, but how many rooms are there? How big is it? Does it have enough space for us and the kids?”

“And the many, many more that we’re going to have later. We’re not going to need to move ever again. This house is more than big enough for us to set up a permanent home. We can stay here for the rest of our lives.”

Harry grinned in excitement and Nasta felt the pressure ease off of his shoulders. Seeing Harry so happy and excited helped to calm him down.

“This is the ground floor that we’re on, there are nine main rooms on this floor and a couple of small storage rooms.”
“Nine?!”? Harry asked, his eyes bulging with disbelief.

Nasta chuckled. “Yeah. You were always so unhappy with the lack of space, so I made sure that you would have plenty in this new house of ours.”

“Oh, Nasta, thank you!” Harry cried out in such sincere gratitude that it almost had Nasta bursting into tears, even as Harry lifted his arms for a hug.

Nasta hugged him, but tucked his arms back under the duvet as he did so.

“Don’t move.” He said sternly. “If you want something, you ask for it.”

“You need a shave.” Harry told him. “You could have baby dragons nesting in that beard and not know it. Maybe I should get Max to floo call the reserve to see if they’re missing any hatchlings, just in case.”

Nasta grimaced and tugged his fingers through the long hairs on his cheeks, chin and neck. He hadn’t found the time to shower in the last four days, let alone the time it would require to hack off the impromptu beard that he’d grown.

“I’ll grab a shower now, but only if you promise not to move an inch.”

Harry hummed noncommittally.

“I mean it, Harry.”

Harry sighed heavily. “I want my babies. I can’t stand lying here when I know that they have to be here somewhere too.”

“If I go and get Leolin for you to cuddle with, do you promise not to so much as wiggle while I go and get rid of the beard that you don’t like?”
Harry nodded furiously. “Yes, I promise. I just want to see all of my babies.”

“Leolin first and then the others when I come back, okay?” Nasta said sternly.

Harry nodded again. “Yes.”

“Stay right where you are.” Nasta warned as he left the room and took the long way around to the family room via the kitchen. He didn’t want Harry knowing that the double doors were just behind his head and led into the room with all eight of the children inside.

He believed that the best policy here would be to keep all the temptation away from his submissive mate, not dangle it right under his nose. Harry was a curious sort, which is why Nasta had laid him down with the doors behind his head so that he couldn’t see them and wind himself up with his thoughts of what might be behind them, because he knew that it would eventually get the better of his mate and he’d get up and he’d look because he wouldn’t be able to help himself. Then, as soon as Harry realised that his babies were right next door, he’d never be able to get Harry to lie down and rest again. No. Harry could not see those doors and he could not know that their children were right behind his head.

He came back into the smaller living room with the sniffling Leolin, who’d been screaming his head off for poor Caesar and Amelle, who’d brought the almost two year old Eleonora and the seven month old Beatrice around for a play date with their baby cousins.

He’d managed to calm him down by sweeping Leolin up and hefting him over his shoulder, which had surprised his tiny son into silence as his underdeveloped brain tried to process what had happened. He’d carried him down the corridor and into the living room before Leolin had time to gather his bearings and start screaming again. The last thing he needed was for Harry to see and hear Leolin having a screaming fit and work out that all of their children were in the same boat and behaving in the same way. He was going to have enough of a struggle keeping Harry lying down as it was, it would be absolutely impossible if Harry thought that their children were in any way upset or distressed.

“Leolin, look who’s here for you.” Nasta cooed and before Leolin could cry or so much as sniffle, he’d turned the tiny boy around in his hands and presented him to Harry.

Gold eyes stared at bright, emerald green and Nasta got to see first-hand the gummy smile that broke out over Leolin’s face as he finally recognised who he was looking at several seconds later.

“Ma! Ma! Ma! Ma! Ma!” He chanted over and over, reaching out as best as he could for Harry, who shifted and went to sit up automatically to reach for his clamouring baby when Nasta quickly knelt on the little nest bed that he’d made and pushed him back down.
“You promised that you wouldn’t move.” Nasta told him sternly.

He put Leolin on Harry’s chest before either of them could throw a fit and he watched as Leolin hefted himself up as much as he could to stare at Harry’s face, one tiny hand reached out to pat at Harry’s cheek, as if Leolin couldn’t quite believe that he was there as Harry’s hands held their son around the chest, helping to prop him up.

“I missed you, Leolin.” Harry said softly, smiling at the little Faerie baby on his chest.

“I’m going to go for that shower and a shave, you don’t move.”

“I’ll make sure that he doesn’t.”

Nasta nodded gratefully to his Father, who was stood just inside the door.

“It’s nice to see you again, Harry.”

“It feels so good to be home. Even though I’m not entirely sure where home is or what it looks like yet, but they say home is where the heart is and my heart will always be with my children and my mates.”

Nasta teared up a little at that and he went back to Harry and bent over his head to kiss him. He got a smack from Leolin for his trouble.

“He’s definitely lashing out more.” Aneirin said with a frown. “It’s like he’s possessive of you, Harry.”

Harry sighed. “There’s not much we can do at the moment, but we’ll see about breaking the habit now that I’m home. I don’t like him lashing out at anyone, especially not at his Fathers.”

Harry hefted Leolin further up his chest and cuddled him down, kissing his head and nuzzling his hair. Nasta kissed him again.
“Will you go and shave? It feels like I’m being attacked and molested by a brillo pad.”

Aneirin laughed and Nasta couldn’t quite stop the chuckle that came out. He’d missed Harry so much and he felt just so much better, so much more relieved to have Harry home. He left Harry with Leolin and with his Father and he went to have the shower and shave that he’d desperately needed for the last four days.

Harry took the next ten minutes to cuddle and reconnect with his baby, who looked up at him every other minute to make sure that he was still there, and if his eyes were closed when he looked, Leolin would slap his cheek or dig his teeny little nails into his neck, cheek or chin.

“I’m awake, sweetie.” He’d say to him every time. “I’m just resting.”

He’d start up the rubbing of Leolin’s back again, or he’d stroke his hair, or gently massage a little thigh to ease his Faerie son back down and closer to sleep.

“I’m surprised that Dain and Kailen aren’t here.” Harry said sleepily to Aneirin as he cuddled his yawning son.

“Nasta didn’t tell them where the new house was. He was under enough stress as it was, he didn’t want to add to it needlessly.” Aneirin told him.

“Ah.” Harry nodded. “Understandable. But they do need to be told, they must be going out of their minds with worry. Leolin is sort of their million times great grandson.”

“Give it a few days, Harry. For you and Blaise to recover.” Aneirin insisted. “You are in no state to welcome them after what’s just happened. You’ve only just been released from the hospital.”

“Can you send them a letter then, please? Just to let them know that Leolin is actually alright.”

Aneirin nodded at that idea and he agreed to do just that when Nasta finished in the bathroom.

“Has he really been very bad?” Harry asked, trying to move so that he could see Aneirin’s face better.
“Don’t move, Harry.” Aneirin told him sternly. Like Father like son.

Harry lay back down and settled his body, moving his massage on Leolin’s legs up and over his hips and to his sides.

“Nasta has been stressed and restless over the last few days. He did actually collapse. He hasn’t been taking care of himself, but thankfully he ate a proper breakfast this morning and he’s having a shower for the first time in four days. He slept for longer last night too. Myron found him right where you are now, with Leolin sleeping on his chest. He woke up himself when Leolin wanted his breakfast at twenty to nine this morning.”

Harry smiled and nodded. “I’m glad that he’s better now. How has Max been?”

“More of the same.” Aneirin told him sadly. “They’ve both been stressed and upset. We’re all just infinitely glad that you’re home.”

Harry grinned. “Me too. Even though I’m not sure where exactly home is any more, as long as my mates and babies are here, I’m sure I’ll adapt to it.”

“It’s much bigger than you’re used to. Though after going to school in a castle, it shouldn’t be too hard to adjust to and you did want a bigger house.”

Harry smiled. “I did. Max’s house was just too small and I have a heat period coming up soon.”

“What?”

Harry grimaced and he looked up at Nasta, who was towelling his black hair, a look of surprise on his face.

“Um, yeah, I might have forgotten to mention that.”

“When?” Nasta asked him desperately.
“I’m not too sure on the exact date, but…well, less than a month.”

“Less than a month?!” Nasta asked in shock. “How much less?”

“First week of July.” Harry said uncomfortably.

“Why didn’t you say anything?!” Nasta asked.

“I just… I didn’t want to worry anyone.” Harry said softly. “What with the court case and everything. I was going to mention it closer to the actual heat period, but then all of this happened.”

Nasta sighed and came to kiss him, his face baby smooth for all of two minutes and Harry made sure to touch and stroke his cheeks and chin, even rubbing himself against Nasta’s face to show his appreciation of the clean, smooth shave.

“I love your face like this.” Harry said with a smile. “All smooth and soft and you smell nice too.”

Nasta chuckled and Harry liked hearing it, he liked seeing the stress all but drain from Nasta’s face as he smiled and laughed. It made him feel better as a mate, better as a person, that he could lift the burden from Nasta’s shoulders, even a little bit.

“I just love your face.” Nasta told him, kissing his face all over and touching him.

Harry chuckled and tried to stay still as he was lavished with love.

“I love you.” Harry said softly as he cradled Leolin closer to his chest. His little Faerie baby had dropped off into an exhausted sleep while Nasta was still in the bathroom.

“I love you too. Please get better soon.”

“I will. You know I will. I’ll keep up with all the nasty, vile potions that the Healers are forcing me to take and I’ll stay lying here for as long as I can stand it.”

“You’ll be up and about before dinner then?” A voice called out to him.

Harry grinned and he went to sit up excitedly, but Nasta anticipated his movement and held down his shoulders.

“Max!” Harry cried out and instead of sitting up, he moved an arm to silently demand a hug. “You’re supposed to be with Blaise!”

“The Healers are just giving him a final check over, I wasn’t allowed to stay in the room while they were performing the tests, so I decided to come home to see you while I waited. I’d only be pacing in the hospital corridor otherwise.” Max said as he moved further into the room and hugged him as tightly as he dared with Leolin on his chest. “I’ve missed you.”

“I missed you too.” Harry said almost tearfully. “It’s good to be back! Especially as I don’t know where I am. I’ve heard about what you two have been up to, you sneaky people!”

Max laughed. A huge, massive, loud, booming burst of laughter that clenched Harry’s gut in pleasurable ways and made him grin in happiness, just because Max was happy.

“We’ll show you around later.” Nasta insisted. He was smiling too, he was happy that Max was so happy as well.

“What are the nine rooms?” Harry asked excitedly. “What could you possibly have put on the ground floor? I assume there are no bedrooms down here? How high is the house?”

“Slow down.” Max laughed, bending over to kiss him soundly. “It’s three storeys, though technically five.”

Harry’s eyes widened almost comically as he heard that. “How is it five storeys...five, seriously?”

“There are three main storeys and a basement and attic.” Nasta told him, enjoying his shock and surprise.
“I want to see it all!”

“And you will, just not now.” Nasta said sternly.

Harry frowned up at him. “But I want to know what’s here! I don’t even know the layout of the house!”

“You will soon enough. But for now, you, and Blaise when he gets here, are not going to move and you’re going to recover and get better first.”

“Healer Grant said I only had to rest for another day.” Harry complained.

“No. He said that you had to stay lying down for a day or two or you’d be back in the Healing Halls, you need to rest for the next week or two.” Nasta told him, very unimpressed with his attempt to push himself before he was fully healed.

“You’ve been home for all of an hour, love. Let’s try not to send you straight back to the Healing Halls, okay?” Max said placatingly as he nuzzled Harry’s face and neck with his mouth and nose.

Harry sighed and nodded, before wincing as his excitement over being home, in a new house at that, with his mates and children gave way before his pain.

“When was the last time that you had a potion?” Max asked with a frown.

“He refused to take one this morning.” Nasta told him disapprovingly.

“I wanted to be awake and aware to see my babies.” Harry said stubbornly. “You promised to get the rest of them after you got out of the shower.”

“You can see them one at a time.” Nasta warned him. “Let me take Leolin now that he’s asleep.”
Harry reluctantly gave up Leolin to Nasta and he allowed Max to shift him further up the arm of the settee so that he wasn’t completely flat on his back, yet he wasn’t scrunching up his stomach muscles either. He could see more like this and he grinned around at the absolutely enormous room that he was in, or at least what he could see of it as he couldn’t turn to look at what was behind him. Turning to either side, even minimally, was utter agony and near impossible for his newly healed muscles to cope with.

“I really like this room!” He declared. “It’s so big! I can’t wait to roll around the floor with the kids.”

“There will be no rolling around the floor for you anytime soon.” Nasta told him seriously as he came back into the room sans Leolin.

“The other family room is twice the size of this and the kitchen is bigger again.” Max told him with a grin.

Harry grinned back excitedly. “You couldn’t resist giving yourself a massive kitchen, could you?”

“Definitely not! It’s glorious, Harry. I can’t wait to show you.”

“I can’t believe you two, doing this and keeping it from me for all this time too!”

“Well it was Nasta who started the whole thing.” Max told him, nudging Nasta with his elbow. “I was supposed to be in the dark too, but I caught him out when I came back early from work and caught him with the estate agent. I’ve been involved since then. But honestly, he couldn’t have chosen a better location for our family house! Secluded, but not isolated. It’s stunning and offers us a lot of privacy, everything we need is a short walk away and there is a nursery and attached school here for the kids when they’re older. It’s perfect.”

“I love it already.” Harry declared passionately.

“The best thing is, it was built especially for us.” Max told him, bending down to rub their noses together. “Right from the foundations, every room was carefully measured and if we have fifty children, we can house them all.”

Harry’s grin widened and he giggled almost deliriously. “I’m so happy. I can’t wait to explore every room.”
“Almost all the upper floor rooms are bedrooms.” Nasta told him. “But there is a bathroom on every floor, a study each for us, just so that we can have our own space if we want it, and the biggest play room that you’ve ever seen.”

“You’re just making me more and more excited!” Harry said as he tried to sit up, only to have Max’s hand push and hold him back down.

“Stay still.” His biggest mate commanded.

“Can I have another baby?” Harry asked.

“Of course, which one do you want?”

“Don’t make me choose. I can’t pick any one of them over another, I’ve missed them all. Just grab who comes to hand first.” Harry said seriously. “I want to see every single one of them before I take another potion and slip back into those delusions and nightmares.”

Nasta nodded and he left again, going back around the long way to the other living room to pick up another screaming, unhappy child. Harry looked back at Max and pulled his biggest mate down to kiss him again.

“I’ve missed you too, you know.” He said with a smile and Max smiled back, his arms supporting his weight on the settee as he hunched over him and kissed him properly, bending himself almost in half so that Harry didn’t have to move a muscle to get the kisses that he wanted. He did lift his arms to wrap around Max’s neck though, playing with the longish curls that were just forming at the base of his neck.

“I love your curly hair.”

“Don’t.” Max groaned. “I’ve been so worried about you and Blaise and so busy going between you both and looking after the kids that I haven’t even thought of cutting it.”

“I bet your Dads’ are happy.” Harry said with a grin.
Max snorted. “I can’t understand why they like seeing me with all of this curly hair.”

“It’s cute.” Harry told him.

“I’m not meant to be cute! I’m your mate, I’m supposed to be big, strong and sexy.”

“Oh you’re definitely that. That goes without saying.” Harry said with a massive grin.

“Knock it off.” Nasta warned them as he carried a sniffling Farren into the room.

“Farren!” Harry called out happily.

Farren’s head twisted to look at him and Harry had the pleasure of watching his son’s face light up with joy as his teal eyes almost bulged out of his little head.

“Mummy!” Farren called out as he struggled furiously against Nasta until he had to put Farren down on his feet or risk dropping him after a particularly hard kick to the gut.

Harry lost sight of Farren, but he could hear the patter of his little feet on the floor and he smiled when Max bent down and hefted Farren up onto the settee. The next moment, Harry had a tearful little boy snuffling into his neck. It broke his heart.

“This can never happen again.” Harry said as he wrapped both arms around Farren and stroked his beautiful brown hair.

“I’ve taken care of it.” Nasta swore seriously. “It will never happen again, I promise you.”

Harry nodded silently and he went back to his little son, who clung to him so tightly that Harry feared that if he had just a little more strength then he could have easily strangled him.

He tried to adjust Farren, but his son wailed into his ear and his little legs kicked repeatedly, making Harry gasp in pain as his belly clenched hard with the movement. Max picked Farren up and plucked him from Harry’s grasp as Nasta placed a calming hand on Harry’s middle and urged him to lie still.
so that he didn’t do more damage by rolling around with the pain.

Max struggled to hold Farren, who had turned in his arms, throwing himself backwards in order to see Harry again, reaching out for him and all but screaming his misery.

“Pass him back.” Harry ordered, holding his arms out while Nasta kept a hand on his belly.

“He’s just going to hurt you again, Har…” Max tried, but Harry cut him off and shook his head.

“No. He’s just going to be worse until he’s settled down. Give him back.”

Max looked torn and ultimately, he looked to Nasta to tell him what to do. Nasta looked at Harry’s stubborn, determined face, before looking to the kicking and screaming Farren and he wasn’t sure it was a good idea to lay the furious Farren back on an injured Harry.

“Give him to me before he cries himself sick.” Harry said sternly. “If you don’t give him to me, I’m going to get up and go to him.”

That made up Nasta’s mind and he sighed heavily, wearily, before nodding to Max, who clamped down Farren’s kicking legs and laid him back at Harry’s side, holding his ankles in one hand to control the kicking until his son had calmed down enough to stop kicking his own Mother in his desperation to get impossibly closer to him.

Harry started humming gently and stroking Farren’s hair. It took long minutes for Farren to stop wriggling and lashing out, enough for Max to let go of his ankles, and he huffed and snuffled as he listened to the song that his Mother was humming, snuggling in tight, but calming down.

“Because of how big you are, Farren, I think that sometimes we all forget that you’re only seventeen months old.” Harry murmured softly.

“Muma.” Farren sniffled.

“I know. But it’s going to be fine now, baby.” Harry insisted. “Who’s watching the others?” He directed at Max and Nasta.

“Caesar and Amelle brought Nora and Bea for a visit to help out.” Max told him.
“Myron and Richard are also still here and Alexander keeps coming around with food that Kimberly has made for everyone.” Nasta added. “Aunt Nerys was here this morning to help get everything ready for you and Blaise coming home and my Dad is still here too.”

Harry nodded as he held his son to his chest, nuzzling his nose into Farren’s hair.

“I’ve got you, love.” He whispered quietly, never ceasing his stroking of Farren’s back as he finally calmed down and lay still, enjoying the tight hold of his Mother as he fought sleep at every moment to stay awake.

Eventually though, Farren did slip off to sleep and Nasta was able to gently take him and put him in his cot upstairs for some much needed rest.

“Do you want something to drink? Something to eat maybe?” Nasta asked him as he sat on the arm of the settee by Harry’s head so that he could look down at his mate and caress that nest of jet back hair, made worse because Harry was constantly laying down and rubbing it on the pillows as he turned his head in every which way to look around.

“Tea would be wonderful, Nas. Next baby too, the sooner I go through them all and have a hold, the sooner I can take that nasty potion that’s due.” He added when it looked like Nasta would argue.

Nasta blew out a breath and he looked to the floo. Max had gone back to the hospital to see if Blaise was ready to be discharged. He nodded.

“Okay, the girls will be needing a feed soon, they should fall asleep in your arms afterwards.” Nasta conceded with a sigh. He wanted Harry to stay where he was and he wanted him to take his pain potions, but Harry was going to refuse to do both until he’d seen and held all eight of their children.

He went into the kitchen and boiled the kettle, setting out several mugs and two bottles. It had become a mindless task to make tea and coffee for everyone, a rare moment of peace for whoever did the job from the hysterical screaming of eight children who had been hurt and traumatised from the fight a few days ago and wanted nothing more than their Mother’s reassuring presence back, especially as they were in a new house and a new environment. They were feeling very out of sorts.

Nasta rested his head against the cabinet door and took a moment to breathe. It was almost midday and already he was bone deep exhausted and he wanted nothing more than to crawl into bed and sleep. These last several days had been incredibly trying, on everything that he was, his patience, his strength, his love, his endurance, his determination to hold everything together for his family, his perseverance as he carried on looking after everyone, he just didn’t know how much longer he could take the stress and pressure bearing down on his shoulders. It was too much, even Max was looking to him to tell him what to do. How was he supposed to take a few minutes to himself and let Max take over for a bit when his second in the family hierarchy, the one who he was supposed to be able to depend on for a small break if things got too much, was second guessing himself and looking to him to direct him like a puppeteer? Who was he supposed to turn to now?

“Nasta. Come here, Caru.”

Strong arms wrapped around his shoulders and turned him, pulling him into a tight hug and Nasta held back just as tightly, if not more so, as he buried his face into his Father’s shoulder and took a moment to revert back into a child again, when a hug from his Dad made everything better again. Such childish delusions didn’t work in this situation, not when it was his own family in turmoil, but just pretending made him feel marginally better.

“Stop beating yourself up, Nasta.” Aneirin told him sternly. “You can’t do everything by yourself.”

“It feels like I’ve been abandoned and left to do everything by myself. Draco isn’t here, Blaise is injured and still in the hospital and I can’t rely on Max. I’m on my own and I can’t stand it. Why did this happen?”

“Because Draco lost his temper.” Aneirin told him calmly. “Draco incited a fight and Max responded. Blaise was collateral damage and Harry was in the wrong place at the wrong time. You are not alone, Nasta. You have family around you who are here to help, please, let us help you.”

“I feel like a failure.”

“You’re not a failure, Nasta. Far from it.” Aneirin told him, a hand rising to tug through the black hair at the nape of Nasta’s neck. “You’ve done so well, you’ve held everything together so well. Could you see anyone else doing as you have? Can you see anyone who has the strength to punish the dominant responsible for this without killing them? The dominant who can go between two mates in the hospital and look after eight babies at home? Don’t sell yourself short, Nassa, Caru. You don’t deserve to beat on yourself for how you’ve acted. You’ve done brilliantly.”

“You…you were able to carry on after Mum passed.” Nasta hiccupped.
Aneirin chuckled wryly. “You were a tiny, wrinkled newborn. You have no memory or inkling as to what I was like after your Mother died. I relied heavily on your Aunt Nerys and Uncle Idris, as well as your Grandparents and Great-Grandfathers. I allowed them to rally around me and support me. I still took care of you and your brother and sister, but I was definitely not functioning half as well as you are and you have twice as many babies as I did.”

“You’d just lost a mate, your only mate.” Nasta defended.

“And you could have lost two.” Aneirin said sternly. “Three if you’d taken revenge for their deaths out on Draco. It’s not a competition, Nasta. You haven’t failed at anything, nor have you failed anyone. You’ve been wonderful and I’m proud of you for that, but please, let us help you. Tell me what you’re thinking.”

“I just….I can’t carry on like this. I can’t hold it together and…and staying this strong for this long without a break…I need a break.”

“So take one.” Aneirin told him simply. “Go upstairs, lie on your bed, or even in a guest bed, and stay there until you feel better.”

“I can’t…with Harry home and Max getting Blaise, I just can’t. Harry’s not going to stay still and he won’t take his pain potions until he’s seen all of the kids, Blaise isn’t going to stay still and Max can’t cope on his own, he keeps asking me what to do or looking at me for permission and…”

“Take a breath, Nasta.” Aneirin ordered. “I will watch over Harry until Max and Blaise get back and then Max is going to have to step up. It’s his place to step up. Blaise and Harry are his mates too, you are his mate and he has a responsibility to them and to you and his children.” He said sternly. “Go upstairs and lie down, now.”

Nasta bit his lip indecisively and got fingers snapping in his face as a consequence, focusing him back on his Father.

“That was not an option choice, Nasta, Caru. It was an order. Now go before I force you up there and restrain you to a bed.”

Nasta swallowed and he took one step and then another one. It got harder to keep walking when he passed the living room where Harry was lying, but he kept walking. He climbed the stairs and he kept waking until he was in a guest room. It was unfamiliar to him, but that’s what he wanted, it’s what he needed at the moment, unfamiliarity. He slid under the duvet and he rested his head against the pillow. His thoughts were whirring at a hundred miles per hour and he promised himself that he’d stay here, like this, for ten minutes only, then he’d go back to his duty as the top dominant of his family unit.

Or at least, that was his plan. It took just four minutes for him to be dozing and another couple of minutes before he was fast asleep. He would not wake up again for another couple of hours and that had definitely not been a part of his plan.

“Where has Nasta gone?” Harry asked as soon as Aneirin came into the room that he’d been stuck in since he’d arrived.

“He’s gone for a lie down.” Aneirin said calmly.

“Is he alright?” Harry asked in blatant concern, moving to get up, only to be pushed back down by a firm hand.

“He’s fine, Harry. He just needs a lie down. He’s been on the go since all of this happened.”

Harry nodded. “As long as he’s alright.”

“He’s going to be fine. Now what’s this about you not taking your pain potions?”

“You need to take them.” Myron said sternly as he walked in through the door to back Aneirin up, holding the identical twin girls, one in each arm.

“I will, as soon as I’ve seen all of my children.”

“We can see that you’re in agony, Harry. Why do you do this to yourself?” Aneirin asked.

Harry sighed. “As I told Max and Nasta. I want to see my babies before I take it. They do horrible things to me, those potions, and I want to actually see my babies first. I don’t want to be hallucinating or talking about those sorts of things when I’m trying to have five minutes with my baby. They don’t need to see me like that and they definitely do not need to hear what I start saying under the influence of those potions.”

Aneirin sighed. “Well that does make a bit of sense at least, but as soon as you’ve seen all of the children, you will be taking that potion and getting some more rest. You were very badly hurt, almost fatally so.”

Harry nodded and held his arms out for his baby girls. Myron gently eased one baby onto Harry’s left side and then placed the other at his right side and Harry grinned at the sleepy little worms that wriggled against him.

“Have they been alright? They were in the room with me on that day.”

“They’ve been fine, Harry. They’re only four months old, they’re very resilient.” Myron assured him, pressing a kiss to his forehead before standing back up to his full height of six foot ten.

Harry cuddled with his two girls and played with their curly, chestnut brown hair with a smile. It was so much like Max’s at the moment.

He was in quite a bit of pain by now, almost wrestling with Farren hadn’t helped, but he was serious when he said that he would see all eight of his children before he started seeing those hellish things again. Hellish things completely caused by the pain potions that he was being forced to take.

Ave fell asleep before Eva did and Aneirin took her from him after a last kiss to her chubby, rosy cheek and Harry turned slightly to cuddle better with his Eva. She gave in only a few minutes after her sister and Harry handed her to Myron, who took her to her bassinet so that she could have her afternoon nap while Aneirin brought in Tegan, who was already yawning.

“Mummy! Oh, naga be home mama.”

“I know, sweetheart. I’m home now and I’m not leaving.” He assured her as she burrowed into him and pressed a kiss to his mouth.

Harry grinned and kissed her face as she pulled away and she giggled happily, sliding her hands into his hair and playing with it.

“Well she can’t make it look any worse.” Myron grunted as he hovered over them, ready, just in case
Tegan put a knee or a foot to his healing abdomen or Harry thought about sitting up.

He needn’t have worried about the latter, Harry didn’t think he’d be able to even attempt to sit up anymore, his stomach was protesting heavily and the dull throbbing pain was growing to a sharp ache. It was becoming a struggle to keep saying no to the pain potion when he knew that it was in a case, just behind his head on a side table. But he firmed himself, he would see all of his children before terrifying himself and his babies with his horrific delusions.

Tegan fell asleep, her arms wrapped around Harry’s neck and her face resting against Harry’s head. It was a struggle to extract her from Harry without waking her, but between them, Harry, Myron and Aneirin got her free and carried her carefully to go and have a nap.

Myron went and got Regan, who was already asleep, so Harry had a quick cuddle and a kiss, inhaling his scent deeply, before he let Myron take him to his cot and then his baby Calix was there, crawling all over him and digging a knee into his belly and grinding it down as he moved and that almost made Harry scream as his eyes rolled back into his head and a wave of bile swept up his throat to coat the back of his tongue unpleasantly.

Myron hefted Calix back up and let Harry have a moment to recover from the pain.

“Are you okay?” Aneirin asked.

“Mummy! Mummy, cuddle me!” Calix demanded.

“I’m okay. Hand him back.” Harry insisted breathlessly as he shifted up the tiniest bit.

“Don’t move.” Myron told him sternly.

“I wasn’t moving, I was shifting.”

“Oh? Silly me, I thought shifting was movement.” Myron said with a sarcastic tone that was reminiscent of the late Professor Snape.

Harry scowled at him and held his arms out for Calix.

“Will you stop moving!” Myron growled as he laid Calix back over him.
“Let me have my son and I will!” Harry hissed, mostly from a mix of pain and frustration, but he cuddled Calix anyway, holding him still so that the seventeen month old didn’t injure him further.

“Mummy, I build blocks.”

“Were you playing with your blocks? Who’s a good boy?” Harry cooed, trying to keep his face and voice free from the unbearable agony that he was feeling.

Calix giggled and snuggled into him as Harry hummed lightly and stroked his hair and back.

“I missed you all so much.” He said, holding Calix just a fraction tighter and pressing a kiss to his forehead.

“That they missed you too goes without needing to be said.” Aneirin chuckled, standing with Harry’s cup of tea in his hands. “Nasta said you liked honey in your tea, but I wasn’t sure how much you liked.”

“Just a blob.” Harry said as he cuddled the drifting Calix into his one side and accepted the cup of tea with his free arm. He took a sip and he had to struggle with himself to prevent a grimace of distaste appearing. “It’s fine.” He insisted.

It was definitely not like he usually had it, but it was drinkable and he was a little parched, so he’d suffer with it for now. Max would be back soon and he’d make his tea exactly how he liked it.

Harry had just started his cuddle with Braiden, after Aneirin had taken the sleeping Calix to go for his nap, when the floo flared and Max stepped out carrying a very disgruntled looking Blaise.

“This isn’t even necessary! It was my head that was hit, not my damn legs, Max. I can walk, the Healer said that I was fine to walk!” Blaise complained.

“I’m not taking any chances with you, love.”

“Welcome to our existence for the next week or two.” Harry called out in greeting as Max took long strides to reach the two settees pushed together to make the little nest.
“You cannot be serious!” Blaise hissed angrily. “I’m not ill, I’m not injured. I’m fine!”

“You are not fine!” Max argued as he placed Blaise gently onto the settee nest.

“Daddy!” Braiden called out from Harry’s arms.

Blaise’s face softened as he looked at his mirror image and he moved himself over to lie next to Harry, letting Braiden snuggle between them.

“Where are the other kids?” Max asked.

“They’re all asleep.” Myron told his son. “Harry lulled them all into a nap.”

“Wonderful, I might actually be able to sort some things out.”

“What do you need to do?” Harry asked, looking up from Braiden’s conversation with him and Blaise.

“I need to move some more things over from the old house.”

Blaise’s head snapped up then and he took a very long, good look around.

“I thought something was off about this place! It’s not our house!”

“It is.” Max said with a tired smile. “Nasta set it all up and had it built for the mateship, it was going to be a gift to the mateship once Harry was out of the court, but the fight moved along his plans a bit. The old house was ruined. It’s technically structurally unsafe now, we couldn’t stay there.”

Blaise went to stand up to explore, but Max’s eyes widened and he rushed around and held Blaise down.
“Will you get off?! There’s nothing wrong with me! You were there when the Healer said as much!”

“I don’t…just please, rest for today at least. You’ve only just been released from the hospital!”

“Max is right, Blaise. You don’t want to push yourself too hard and end up back in the hospital.” Aneirin chipped in.

“Plus I need someone to keep me company, I’m not even allowed to sit up for another two days.” Harry said with a grin.

Blaise blew out a deep breath and he grunted. “Fine, but only for today. Tomorrow I’m getting up and exploring this house and going back to normal.”

Max nodded immediately, probably already thinking up ways that he could keep Blaise lying down tomorrow too, but for now, he joined them in their little nest bed, watching their legs as he sat at the opposite end of the settees, by their feet.

“We’ll give you a bit of space.” Aneirin said as he and Myron left the three of them alone with the very chatty Braiden, who was telling them all about the adventure that his teddy had gone on that morning.

When Max noticed that he was grimacing every half minute though, that was when Harry was flung into a battle over taking the potion or not taking it, especially as Max was begging him and holding out the vial of wonderfully numbing pain potion just inches from him, but Braiden was still there and he was still awake.

“Please, Harry.” Max begged, almost on the verge of tears. “I don’t want to see you in so much pain, please.”

“I’ve said, I don’t want to take it while Braiden is here.” Harry hissed, trying desperately to hold out, though he was almost licking his lips as he stared at the familiar dullish red coloured potion. He wanted it so badly, the pain had escalated to sharp, shooting, stabbing pains all throughout his chest and abdomen and he’d started breathing in sharp gasps as the pain made him breathless. He really wanted the potion, but the things that he saw and spoke about was nothing he ever wanted his son to see or hear. He never wanted his children to see him in such a state.
Max’s arm lowered and he and Blaise helped him to settle Braiden down, but his oldest son still wasn’t any closer to taking an afternoon nap and Harry was finding it difficult to concentrate and harder to keep from writhing in agony. His gorge kept rising, like he was going to vomit and his vision kept blurring with white starbursts as the pain finally reached a new level and became blinding.

“Please, just take the potion.” Max begged him as Blaise was sat up rocking Braiden, who was almost asleep, but not quite.

Harry nodded. He couldn’t hold out any longer, this pain was too much to bear any longer and Max breathed out a sigh of relief, slipping his arm under Harry’s head and lifting him up, putting the vial to his lips before Harry even had a chance to change his mind.

Harry swallowed the vile potion down in four large swallows that had him spitting and groaning in disgust.

“Where’s Draco anyway?” Blaise asked suddenly as Braiden curled a little hand into his pyjama top, slowly being lulled into sleep.

“Yeah, he should be here.” Harry agreed. “I wanted to shout at him, but he hasn’t been here. Are you hiding him in the dungeon? Does this house have a dungeon?’’

Harry went from lucid to not so lucid in the space of one sentence and when his pain melted away, he hefted himself into a sitting position.

“Harry! Lay down!” Max said in panic.

“S’okay, I can’t feel nothing.” Harry slurred.

“That’s not the point.” Max forced Harry back down again and he blinked, suddenly looking up at the ceiling.

“I fell over!” Harry declared before he giggled. “I’m dizzy.” He said with a frown, squinting up at the ceiling.

“I see what you meant.” Blaise said sadly as he watched his submissive mate.
“I’m going to take Braiden up to his cot, can you keep Harry laying down until I get back?” Max asked. “Or should I call Myron or Aneirin?”

“No, I’m fine, you were there when the Healer said that I was fine, Max. I can look after Harry.”

“I was there when the Healer said not to push yourself.” Max snarked as he took the sleeping Braiden from Blaise’s arms and hurried out of the room and up to the first floor, where the nurseries were kept.

He took a quick, quiet peek in on Nasta while he was at it and found him sleeping like a rock in the bed. He wasn’t even moving in his sleep, but Max heard a quiet growl when Nasta detected his scent in the room. He rumbled back soothingly and Nasta relaxed back in the bed and Max closed the door quietly, not willing to disturb his beloved mate from his desperately needed sleep.

He went back down to the living room and peeked in on Blaise and Harry. Harry was telling Blaise about his centaur lovers. It was a favourite delusion of Harry’s. Max swallowed. He couldn’t listen to that again. He went into the kitchen with the excuse of making tea for everyone, and a coffee for Blaise as a sort of unspoken bribe to keep him resting in the settee nest, for today and tonight at least.

He took the beverages back to the living room and handed Blaise his coffee and helped Harry to sip at his tea without him sitting up, which he tried to do several times, each time claiming that he was fine and that he couldn’t feel anything. At least he was no longer in any pain, Max could count that as a plus at least.

“Coffee? You are trying to butter me up.”

“There are several sexual responses that I’d like to give to that statement, but at the moment, I’m really not feeling all that sexy.” Max answered with a small pained smile as he watched Harry dribble out a mouthful of warm tea while trying to swallow. He used one of the baby’s spit rags to dab the drooled tea away.

“He really is bad, isn’t he? I got a first-hand look at his ‘fantasies’ and I didn’t like it. I’m fucking jealous of an imagined centaur.”

Max chuckled. “I was too when I first heard him talking, the novelty wears off quickly. I almost killed one of the assistant Healers because he actually got hard from listening to Harry’s babbling while he was supposed to be caring for him.”
“I would have too!” Blaise insisted, furious at the assistant for putting his mates through even more unneeded stress. “What a fucking creep.”

“That’s what I said to Nasta when I told him that I’d attacked one of the trainees. I didn’t want anyone who could get sexually aroused while seeing Harry in so much pain and having such delusions while he was drugged up anywhere near him!”

Max panted after he’d finished his furious rant and he tugged a hand through his hair, grimacing at the slight curls at the ends of his hair. He calmed himself down and reminded himself that he’d dealt with that trainee and he now had his submissive back in his home, surrounded by family and with himself right there to protect him. He had both of his mates home now and he could protect them both at the same time without going between them and without leaving his children either.

Max bent forward and kissed Blaise. “I’ve missed you so much. You and Harry, and Nasta too if I’m honest.”

“Where’s Nasta gone to? I was expecting him to be here, hovering over me and Harry. He hasn’t collapsed again has he?”

“No. He is sleeping though. He really needs a decent eight hours.”

“Someone slipped him a sleeping potion? Damn he’s going to be pissed when he wakes up.”

“No, no. No one’s slipped him anything, he went up on his own. I think he was only expecting a short, several minute break, but he must have fallen asleep. It’s a good thing too, he was looking worse for wear the longer that he forced himself to stay awake.”

“Where are my babies?” Harry asked, moving to sit up.

“Harry, stay lying down, love.” Max coaxed as he splayed a hand over Harry’s chest and pressed down just enough to keep Harry on his back.

“But my babies are lost in the woods and they’re crying for me! I need to go and get them!”
“Do you think the obsession with babies is because he knows that Braiden and Leolin got hurt?”

Max nodded. “We think so, but we can’t actually be sure if it’s that or just his Dracken side trying to fixate on the babies because of the submissive’s nature and the drugs adding in the delusions of them being lost or hurt somewhere.”

Blaise nodded and he looked sadly to Harry, his beautiful mate, and he sighed.

“You never did answer me about Draco. Where is he?”

Max growled and clenched a large hand into a fist.

“You didn’t kill him, did you?” Blaise asked uncertainly.

“No. He’s at his parent’s house.” Max said. “Enough talk about him.”

“He is still our mate, Max.” Blaise said.

“I know that.” Max snapped. “I’m too angry at the moment. I don’t want to even think of him while seeing you and Harry like this knowing that he was the cause!”

“There is nothing wrong with me!” Blaise insisted.

“Why aren’t you angry with him too?”

Blaise swiped a hand over his almost bald head with a glare. “Do you actually need reminding that I can’t remember anything that’s happened? How am I supposed to feel anything, especially anger, over something that I can’t remember?”

“I want Grawp.” Harry said, interrupting Max and Blaise’s glaring match.

“It’s what Harry called one of the Healers at the Halls, Healer Alessandri. He’s mated to Henley’s older sister, Clara.” Max answered, glad for the topic change. “Grawp isn’t here, Harry.”

“Grawp always gives me strawberry potions.” Harry told them.

“You’ve already had your strawberries today.”

“Have not!” Harry denied furiously.

“You have, that’s why you aren’t in any pain.” Max tried to explain.

He needed Nasta here to deal with this, he didn’t know what to say and as Harry went red in the face, like he was going to explode in rage, he actually considered going to wake him up. He just didn’t know what to say or do in this sort of situation.

“Bello, calm down, it’s alright. We’re here with you.” Blaise soothed, handing Max his empty mug and lying down with Harry. “Do you want to sleep with me?”

Harry nodded shyly with a slight blush to his cheeks, as if this was the very first time that he was seeing Blaise and he couldn’t believe that someone so handsome wanted to lay down with him of all people. He curled tentatively into Blaise’s body, touching in short brushes and pats, as if he didn’t know if he was allowed to touch him. Blaise laid Harry back out straight and then curled himself into Harry to keep his submissive lying flat, so he didn’t bunch up his abdominals while under the influence of the pain potions and accidentally cause more damage to his healing muscles. He made sure to get as much skin on skin contact as possible, holding and touching Harry intimately and Harry’s pink cheeks went fully red and he smiled happily and he giggled like a shy little girl who’d been kissed by a good looking bloke, but very soon he was yawning and he fell asleep very quickly under the influence of the potion, allowing Blaise to sit back up and stretch.

“Thank you for that, I had no idea how to handle him.”

“It’ll be fine, Max. He won’t be on these potions forever and he only needs to stay like this for a day or two more, right? It’ll pass so quickly.”
“He’ll have nightmares now too.” Max said sadly. “He’ll wake up screaming, maybe with a distress call.”

“I felt them in the hospital. If you hadn’t been with me then I would have torn out of that room to get to him.”

“It’s not real, none of the things he sees are real, but he’ll fully believe that they are.”

“His mind Healer isn’t going to be happy.”

“Nasta’s already floo called him and gave him the details. He’ll know what to expect when Harry visits him next.”

Blaise nodded. “Am I allowed to use the bathroom by myself, or do you want to come and hold my dick for me while I piss?” He asked as a joke.

Max actually looked torn. “Nasta didn’t say how to handle this, I think he planned to be here so one of us could stay with Harry too, but he is sleeping, it’s just in case he wakes up or starts thrashing with the nightmares, he could hurt himself.”

“Oh for fucks sake.” Blaise rolled his eyes and crawled out of the settee nest and walked to the door before realising that this was a new house and he didn’t know where he was going. “Which way is the bathroom?”

“Just let me go and get Myron to watch Harry so I can go with you and I’ll show you.”

“Never mind, I’ll find it myself.” Blaise insisted as he walked out and followed the corridor.

He went up the stairs before Max could chase him down and he went searching. The house was absolutely huge and every room he came to was carpeted, curtained and wallpapered, but completely empty.
“Come on, there has to be a bathroom here somewhere! Who makes and designs a house with no fucking bathroom?” He asked himself.

He opened the next door angrily, before his heart stopped as he peeked into a room with five cots around the walls. Five very occupied cots.

He took a few deep breaths and peeked in at the five sleeping babies, who all had blankets or stuffed toys clutched in their arms, except for Tegan, whose penguin was clutched tightly in one hand, and Braiden, who wasn’t holding anything.

He walked back out of the room and closed the door quietly. He was getting closer, if he’d found the baby nursery, then the bathroom had to be close. Besides he’d opened nearly every other door up on this floor and he knew that there had to be a bathroom on this floor. If there wasn’t and he had to go up another floor, he’d smack Nasta and Max himself for their poor house design.

He opened the next door quietly and he found the master bedroom, Nasta was not in the bed. In fact the bed looked like it wasn’t slept in at all, despite not having a duvet or any pillows. The two bassinets however, were occupied by the tiny four month old twins, Eva and Ave. He went and gave them both a kiss before heading off to find another room to search for a bathroom. He was going to be here all day searching at this rate and he cursed Max for being so stupid and not telling him where the bathroom was…wanted to accompany him for a piss his arse.

Max was in a dilemma. He really wanted to go after Blaise, but he couldn’t leave Harry, nor call out for fear of waking him. He cursed himself for not bringing his wand with him so he could get through the double doors into the other family room.

He was getting really antsy when the floo flared and his Dad came in, still in his work suit.

“Dad! Can you stay here with Harry, I need to go and find Blaise!”

“Whoa, whoa, calm down, care bear.” Richard encouraged, slightly startled by his wild eyed, panicked son. “What’s happened? Where is Blaise?”

“He went to the bathroom!”

“So?”

“On his own!” Max elaborated.
“Oh no! Let me call the Aurors, we can organise a search party!” Richard rolled his eyes. “He’s gone to the bathroom, Max. Not to Mars. Leave him be for a few minutes.”

“I didn’t tell him where the bathroom was!”

“That was horrible of you.” Richard snorted. “Is he lost? I’ll go see if he needs directions. You stay here and leave him be.”

Richard dumped his briefcase, kicked off his shoes and went to find Blaise, who was lost somewhere on the upper floors.

He ran into him almost as soon as he stepped off the stairs on the first floor. Blaise was backing carefully out of a guest room as if a sleeping lion was nestled within it.

“Are you okay?” He asked, making the young man jump out of his skin.

“Yeah, yeah I’m looking for the bathroom.”

“That’s a guest room.” Richard told him unhelpfully.

“I know that now. Nasta’s sleeping in there.”

That was news to Richard, but it did explain why Blaise had creeped out of the room as he had at least.

“Come on, the bathroom is over here.” Richard pointed a few doors down and Blaise all but ran to it. He chuckled and turned, going back down the stairs. Blaise didn’t need an audience while he was doing his business.

He went to go and find his own mate and happily fell into Myron’s lap, throwing his arms around that thick, strong neck and kissing him.

“Are you alright?” Myron asked him gruffly.
“Perfectly fine. I just missed you is all. Max hounded me as soon as I flooed through. Blaise went walk about on his own and Max couldn’t leave Harry.”

“Why did Blaise go walking around?” Aneirin asked as he bounced Caesar’s oldest daughter, Eleonora, on his knee.

“He needed the bathroom.” Richard said simply. “I got the impression that Blaise all but ran out of the room after Max said that he wanted to accompany him to the toilet. Poor bas….boy.” Richard grimaced as Myron slapped his thigh, reminding him to change his swearword to something else in the face of their two little Granddaughters, even if baby Beatrice was sleeping in her Mother’s arms. “You didn’t need to hit so hard.” He complained.

“You should watch your mouth.”

“You like my filthy mouth when….mmmm!”

Richard was cut off midsentence when Myron’s hand clamped around his mouth tight and hard.

“No talk of that when there are others around, my love, especially our Grandchildren.” Myron said sternly before releasing Richard’s mouth.

“When are the Malfoy’s arriving?” Caesar asked, grinning as he watched his Dads’.

“Later in the afternoon, I’d imagine. Nasta wanted Harry and Blaise to be settled in first.” Aneirin answered him, chuckling at Eleonora, even though he technically wasn’t anything to do with her.

It showed, at the very least, exactly how far Amelle had come in controlling herself and her Dracken side. She was allowing him to hold her daughter, play with her, and she wasn’t even bothered by it anymore and she actually seemed happier in herself, which could only be a good thing.

Sudden screaming from next door had Richard, Myron, Aneirin and Caesar running as fast as they were able towards the sound as a distress call wormed its way into the second scream.

Max was already cuddling Harry, soothing him as they got in the room. Blaise clattered in soon after and then a disorientated Nasta stumbled into the room a few moments later. He didn’t even stop before he crawled into the settee nest and helped Max soothe Harry through whatever horror he was
“It’s alright, Harry.” Max said softly. “It’s not real. It’s not real.”

Aneirin went to Blaise and helped support him, wrapping an arm around him for comfort. It was the nineteen year old’s first time seeing and hearing first-hand what Harry’s nightmares were like and he was wide eyed and shocked as he watched Harry thrashing and writhing in Max and Nasta’s grip, not recognising them and cringing in fear as he was touched and held down as he was caught in the aftermath of his nightmare.

It took just four minutes for Harry to calm down and realise where he was and who was around him and when he did, he buried his face in Max’s neck as he clung to his dominant mates for comfort, but they were the longest four minutes any of them could remember. They all heard Harry sobbing and hiccupping as Max and Nasta tried to calm him down and soothe him through whatever horrors he’d seen this time.

“Are you feeling better?” Max asked Harry gently when he finally went quiet.

A soft nod against his chest was his answer.

“Do you want a cup of tea?” He tried.

Another nod against his chest had him moving and propping Harry fully on Nasta before sliding out of the nest and going to the kitchen.

“Where is Blaise?” Nasta asked. “He should have been home by now.”

Aneirin steered Blaise from behind Myron’s back and let Nasta see him.

“You shouldn’t be standing up. Come here.”

Blaise sighed, but aware that Harry was the higher priority here, he walked to Nasta and allowed his primary dominant to settle him back on the nest bed. Harry cuddled into Blaise and sniffled, holding him tight. Nasta hovered over both of them, like a huge, breathing shield.

Max came back in with tea and a cup of coffee for Blaise, bribing him yet again to stay still. Nasta said nothing as he allowed Max to hand out the cups and he took his own green tea. He had no idea that there was a splash of calming draught in it and he didn’t realise that the potion was the reason that his muscles relaxed ever so slowly the longer that he sipped at it.

“Caesar, Amelle is worried about you.” Max said softly.

Caesar nodded and slipped out of the room and back to his mate and daughters to let them know that everything was being handled and that he was alright.

“How are you feeling, Blaise?” Nasta asked, nuzzling the side of his head and inhaling his scent deeply.

“Fine. The Healer said I was going to be alright to walk around as normal, but I might get a bit confused from time to time until I’m fully healed…it really doesn’t help that I’m in a house that I’ve never seen before. I’m going to need a tour and a couple of days to memorise where everything is, but after Hogwarts, this house is going to be a breeze. At least none of the staircases move…unless you let Max plan those.”

Harry giggled softly from where he was sandwiched between Blaise and Nasta and it brought a soft, happy smile to Nasta’s face as he laid down fully to rub noses with Harry, who grinned at him.

“How are you feeling?” Nasta asked Harry.

“Confused.” He answered honestly. “I’m still trying to separate what was just a nightmare and what were parts of actual memories. It’s getting more and more difficult to remember things that have happened or what’s being tainted with nightmares that haven’t ever happened.”

Nasta’s face crumpled in distress and he slipped an arm around Harry to hold him.
“You won’t be on these potions for much longer.” Nasta tried to comfort him.

“None of the kids are awake.” Aneirin reported as he came back into the room. “They’re all getting some much needed rest.”

Nasta nodded and sat himself up, moving Harry to lay completely straight, but with his body between his own splayed legs, Harry’s head pillowed on his lower abdomen. He started stroking Harry’s messy hair and massaging his scalp.

“Who’s Grawp?” Blaise asked curiously.

Harry narrowed his eyes on him.

“How do you know about Grawp? No one’s supposed to know about him.”

“Max said that he was your Healer.”

Harry startled at that. “No, Grawp is a giant.”

“A real giant?” Richard asked. “Or one that you thought you’ve seen while on potions?”

“No, he’s real. He lived in the Forbidden Forest for a time in my fifth year, he’s Hagrid’s half-brother, they shared the same giantess Mother.”

“Are you…are you actually being serious?!” Myron demanded. “You were exposed to a real giant?!”

“Grawp wasn’t that bad.” Harry insisted. “I was mostly just educating him for Hagrid after Umbridge got him kicked out of the school.”

“Edu…educating him?” Nasta asked faintly.
Harry bobbed his head gently, mindful of his healing muscles.

“Grawp really liked Hermione.”

“Your school years are sounding very concerning.” Myron said. “What else have you left out about your time as a boy?”

“Much more, but I don’t want to just dump it on all of you in one go. It’s much safer for me if I reveal it a little bit at a time. I have good memories of my school years, but really, they were all quite bad and very dangerous. I had a bad time at school and a worse childhood. I never felt safe.”

“But, you feel safe now, with us?” Nasta asked almost desperately, afraid of the answer, but needing to know.

Harry hesitated and that just about killed Nasta on the inside as he pulled Harry into a crushing hug.

“I love you.” He declared passionately. “We all love you and we would die to protect you.”

“Yet it was almost me who died to protect our children.” Harry said quietly. “They should never have been at risk in the first place, they’re our babies.”

“Agreed.” Nasta said quickly. “But we love you, Harry. Please feel safe with us.”

“I can’t. I almost died, Nasta. I saw my guts on the outside of my body, I saw Xerxes’ hand holding them in place. It’s hard to forget something like that when you still feel the pain of it, when you can still see it. I need time.”

Nasta nodded and he sniffed hard, holding back his tears as he held Harry to him. If Harry never got over this attack, if he never felt safe with them again, then he would never forgive Draco and he would kill him for making Harry feel so unsafe that he no longer trusted them. Such a thing was devastating to him and it made his Dracken rage inside of him.

He was the top dominant of their family unit, he should be implicitly trusted and relied on. The thought that his own submissive didn’t trust him, that he didn’t feel completely safe while he was right there next to him, holding him, it made him feel physically sick and he had to swallow hard to prevent himself from vomiting sour tasting bile.

He let out a shaky breath and kissed Harry’s head and cuddled him tightly.

“Whatever time you need.” He heard himself promise. “I love you and I will do anything and everything for you. You only need to say the word.”

Not even he himself knew exactly what he was promising, but it felt right and he meant every word. If Harry clicked his fingers, he’d jump. There was no end to the things that he’d do for Harry, his own submissive, and he would die before he allowed this to happen again.

He pulled Blaise into his side as he kissed his subordinate mate’s forehead. He needed them both close to him at the moment. He needed to settle himself down, his Dracken side down. Harry was right though, it was hard to forget what had happened when Harry wasn’t allowed to move and was in so much pain and Blaise’s head was still shaved and he only had the bare minimum of spiky fuzz. The physical, visible reminders wouldn’t allow him to forget.

“Max, come here.” Nasta ordered and Max immediately climbed onto the nest bed and snuggled into his other side, throwing a huge arm over all three of them as he kissed Nasta’s neck.

“I love you. I love you all.” Max declared passionately.

Harry’s answer was a soft snore and the three of them shared a small, quiet laugh.

“When does he need another dose?” Blaise asked.

“Not for a while. They’re strong potions. He’s had the delusions, he’s had the nightmares, now it’s plain sailing until he needs another dose in several hours after the one he’s taken has worn off.”

“Dad, can you check on Leolin?” Nasta asked softly.

Max laughed. “They left to give us some privacy when you went all flowers and poetry on us.”

“Oh.” Nasta frowned and tried to look around and he couldn’t see much. “No wonder Harry is so annoyed and frustrated being stuck down here.”
“Be more patient with him.” Blaise told him. “He knows that he can’t get up, but he’s bored and he wants his children after what has happened. The last time he saw them was in the aftermath of the fight, he hasn’t seen them since as he’s been stuck in the Healing Halls and on the last day that he saw them they were all scared and crying, two of them were injured and he needed to see them again to make sure that they were all still here and alright. He should be better now.”

“Getting through those kids was hell on him.” Max sighed. “Calix almost sent him back to the Dracken Healing Halls by crawling all over him.”

“They should be calmer now that Harry’s home.” Nasta said, half hoping that he was right and that they did calm down now. He couldn’t handle anything close to the last couple of days. He just needed peace and calm now. They all did after what they’d been suffering through for the last couple of days. They deserved some peace and Nasta would damn well make sure that they got it, even if he had to force them all to be calm and force the peace, he’d do it.

--------------------------------------------------------

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I only just finished this chapter in time for the update this week. Thankfully the next chapter of Tainted Blood is already done, so I’ve survived posting a chapter a week for the entire of September, I just need to sort out October now and I’ll be all done with my two month madness. Good thing too, I’m exhausted and stressed already!

Thank you all for reading and reviewing, lovelies. I hope you’ve enjoyed this chapter. It was a little shorter than I would have liked, I needed to cut two planned scenes from the end to make sure I got it ready in time for this scheduled update, but those scenes will be in the next chapter now.

StarLight Massacre. X
Chapter Notes

Last Time

“Be more patient with him.” Blaise told him. “He knows that he can’t get up, but he’s bored and he wants his children after what has happened. The last time he saw them was in the aftermath of the fight, he hasn’t seen them since as he’s been stuck in the Healing Halls and on the last day that he saw them they were all scared and crying, two of them were injured and he needed to see them again to make sure that they were all still here and alright. He should be better now.”

“Getting through those kids was hell on him.” Max sighed. “Calix almost sent him back to the Dracken Healing Halls by crawling all over him.”

“They should be calmer now that Harry’s home.” Nasta said, half hoping that he was right and that they did calm down now. He couldn’t handle anything close to the last couple of days. He just needed peace and calm now. They all did after what they’d been suffering through for the last couple of days. They deserved some peace and Nasta would damn well make sure that they got it, even if he had to force them all to be calm and force the peace, he’d do it.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Two – At Ease

Harry groaned as he woke up slowly. He was lying on someone, he could feel his body move gently, up and then down slightly as the person that he was lying on breathed deeply and evenly. Opening his gluey eyes revealed that he was on his back between someone’s legs with his back and head resting on their body. Big arms that were wrapped securely around his waist prevented him from rolling or moving much, as he found out when he tried to move himself to the side and those arms tightened around him immediately, reflexively, and kept him still and clamped to the person’s front.

“Are you awake?” A sleepy voice asked him.

“Nas?” Harry questioned, moving his hand to rub at his eyes.

“Hold on, let me get you down so that you can see me.”
Harry was moved so carefully and gently that he had to smile as he was laid down in the warm groove that Nasta had created and he had his very handsome mate leaning over him, checking him visually for pain.

“Are you okay?”

Harry nodded minimally to prevent any aforementioned pain. “How long have I been sleeping? It looks like it’s still day time, unless I slept all night through.”

“No, it’s still day time, you’ve only been asleep for forty minutes or so.”

“Did I wake you up?” Harry asked softly.

Nasta chuckled. “It’s a good thing that you did, I wasn’t supposed to be asleep in the first place, but I didn’t want to move you, so I took a nap myself.”

Harry chuckled. “Where is everyone else?”

“No idea. But I think that it’s about time that you saw the new kitchen. Do you want a cup of tea?”

Harry nodded eagerly. “I’d love one. Can I sit up for a little bit? Just until I’ve had a drink and gone to the bathroom? I can’t do either lying on my back.”

“Do you need the bathroom now? It’s right outside this room, the first door on the right.”

Harry shook his head. “Tea first, please.”

Nasta eased him into his arms and stood up. Harry wrapped his arms around Nasta’s neck and he tried to keep himself as still and as straight as possible. It was awkward, but Harry was just glad to be looking at things from an, almost, upright position as he was carried through one hallway and then taken down another hallway that was at a right angle to the first, and then into the big, bright, sparkly kitchen that was filled with people sitting around the incredibly large kitchen table, including his two missing mates, Myron and Aneirin.
“Harry!” Max cried out happily as he saw him.

Harry grinned as he caught sight of the full, brand new kitchen and he whistled, there were so many windows on the one outside wall that the sun almost blinded him. There were other windows, false, magically charmed windows that were also streaming in false sunlight.

“Damn, Max, you did good with this.” He said. “I take it you picked out all the appliances and the design? I really want to bake a house warming cake.”

“No baking for you until you’re better.” Max told him, coming to kiss his lips. “You need a drink.”

“Do I have chapped lips?” Harry frowned.

Max nodded to his question and he went to boil the kettle for him. Harry noted that it was also brand new and it seemed to boil in half the time of their previous kettle too. Nasta sat down slowly so that he wouldn’t jar Harry’s healing body and once he was down he held Harry on his lap, like one of their children, but Harry didn’t care as he snuggled in and greeted everyone around him. He happily took his cup of tea when Max handed it to him.

“You have a bit more colour to you at least.” Myron told him, accepting a mug of coffee from his son as Nasta quickly grabbed Harry’s cup of tea, helping him to sip at it when Harry’s shaky hands threatened to throw it over the both of them.

“Sorry. I’m sorry.” Harry insisted, utterly mortified, as he dribbled his tea over Nasta’s arm.

Nasta kissed the side of his head and ignored the tea on his arm as he held the cup steady for him to sip at. It was Max who cleaned up Nasta’s arm, and Harry’s chin, with a clean tea towel.

“It doesn’t matter, Caru.” Nasta told him softly. “Just drink what you want, when you want it.”

“I’m dribbling on you!” Harry said embarrassedly.
Nasta chuckled and kissed him again. “You’re under the effects of a very strong pain potion and there is a bit of a lag between your brain and your muscles. We know this and we don’t care.”

Harry blew out a breath and he tried to drink again, making absolutely sure that he’d swallowed what was in his mouth this time before moving his mouth away from the cup.

“I hate this.” He growled.

“I know.” Nasta said sadly.

“Where are my children?” Harry asked.

“Leolin woke up for a bottle while you were asleep, but he was much calmer and quieter. He didn’t open his eyes as he ate and he went right back to sleep. The girls are in the living room with Molly and the others have yet to wake up.” Aneirin told him.

Harry sighed and he nodded. “Did you send off that letter after?”

Aneirin nodded. “I did.”

“What letter?” Nasta asked, looking between Harry and his Dad.

Harry looked at him. “The one to Dain and Kailen, letting them know that Leolin is at least still alive and well after his trip to the hospital.”

Nasta nodded and he didn’t argue. He didn’t even grimace or pull a face this time and Harry didn’t make a fuss or draw any attention to it. It was progress in Harry’s book and progress was sorely needed when it came to his stubborn mate and the Faeries. Nasta accepted Dain and Kailen’s story and their reasoning behind their total separated absence, but it was going to take him some time to get over the news that he was actually blood related to them when he, and his whole family, had believed that they were related to someone else, Jediah Constas. Though from what Harry had learnt about the man from Dain and Kailen, how abusive and vile he’d been, to Trefor and to Trefor’s children, the children that he’d believed were his own and had raised as his own, Harry was glad that Nasta wasn’t related to him, and on the same page, he was so very glad that Trefor Delericey had found Dain and Kailen to love him and to give him his beautiful children, though the tragedy that had followed when they were grown was unthinkable. Jediah Constas had been a real piece of work and Harry truly was glad that the man he loved, the man he had mated to, had not a single drop of that man’s blood in his veins.

Harry went back to his cup of tea, still being held by Nasta, but he gave up trying to drink anything after he almost choked when he’d inhaled the tea instead of swallowing it and he had to be carefully winded like their babies in order to breathe again.

“This…just get the tea away from me before I injure someone or myself.” He grumbled. “Can’t even fucking drink properly.”

No one chastised him for his language and Nasta nuzzled him and bit at his neck with his lips pulled over his teeth, so that it tickled him more than it hurt and Harry chuckled, which made Nasta do it again.

“Stop it, it tickles.” Harry giggled.

“The Malfoys will be here soon.” Myron reminded them, which was news to Harry and he perked up a little.

“Today?” Harry asked. “Is that where Draco is?”

“Yes.” Nasta answered blandly, trying not to inflect upon any one emotion.

“Good. I wanted to yell at him.” Harry nodded.

“He’s not coming back, Harry.” Max said as calmly as he could manage, knowing that getting angry and shouting at Harry would definitely not be a good thing to do. His hand was clenched into a fist under the table in order to control himself.

“Why not? Does he…does he not want to come back, doesn’t he care about us? About what he did to us?” Harry asked quietly, feeling inexplicably sad about that.

“It’s not that.” Nasta assured him quickly, unable to take Harry’s hurt, devastated expression over something that wasn’t true. “He wants to see you and the kids, but I won’t let him. I thought…”
“Why not? They’re his kids too!” Harry questioned, trying to keep his temper as his eyebrows lowered in confusion and the beginnings of anger.

“Technically they’re not his.” Max cut in fiercely.

“Since when did we start caring about such technicalities?” Harry demanded, his anger being stoked further.

“Stop.” Nasta ordered harshly. “The last thing any of us need right now is more fighting!” He growled. “Draco is not coming back, Harry. I’ve ordered him to stay away until such a time that he can control himself. I made a promise to you, remember? This will never happen again. You made me promise that and I’m making sure of it!”

“He can’t do it on his own.” Blaise said calmly, drinking yet another mug of coffee. Nasta wasn’t commenting on that either and it was very unusual, so not normal and it made Harry feel skewed. He felt off axis, as if things weren’t normal and he needed normal more than anything else right now. He just wanted everything to be normal and it wasn’t.

“I’ve told him to take anger management classes. Lucius agreed to the terms when I went to speak to him and he found the very best therapists with the highest success rates. Draco is going for his first class tomorrow and he is seeing no less than three different therapists. He is not coming back here, near my mates and my children, while he can lose control enough to almost kill you!” Nasta growled.

“What if he can’t do the classes?” Harry said worriedly.

“Then he’s never coming back.” Nasta said simply.

“You can’t do that!” Harry exploded. “That’s my choice to make not yours. He is my dominant mate, not yours and…”

“You are my submissive!” Nasta shouted, his voice echoing in the large kitchen. “I am the top dominant of this family and I say who goes near you or not and Draco is not going near any of you until he’s proven to me that he can control himself! He almost killed you, Harry and he did kill Blaise!”
“Still alive.” Blaise put in snidely, still staring into the depths of his coffee cup as if it would give him the answers that he was looking for.

“But you weren’t alive, we watched you die!” Max said desperately. “Do you have any idea what that did to us, Blaise? We...we had to watch you die, we had to watch as the Healers worked non-stop to revive you. You were dead for over six minutes and they were the longest six and a half minutes that I’ve ever lived through. Do you not understand how much that hurt us? How upset and devastated we were to receive the news that you’d actually died, no matter if it was temporary? We had to stand there and see you dead, Blaise.”

“I don’t remember any of it.” Blaise sighed.

“Because you were suffering with serious head trauma, because you’d actually, literally died!” Max insisted. “He killed you!”

“I don’t remember much of anything either.” Harry said with a frown.

“You’re on very strong pain killers, Harry. You’re just not sure what’s what at the moment.” Nasta told him patiently, striving for calm after his loud outburst. That too wasn’t normal, Nasta was the calmest, the least likely to shout and hearing him shouting so loudly, so angrily, drove into Harry harder that everything around him was just completely abnormal at the moment. He didn’t like it in the least.

Harry nodded. “I do really want to shout at Draco though, I need to get my own thoughts and feelings off of my chest so that I can feel better. Can I go and see him?” He tried to compromise.

“Absolutely not.” Max growled. “You’re not going anywhere near him.”

Harry sighed and tugged at his hair. “This isn’t ever going to be resolved if we don’t even try to fix it, Max.”

“Very wise words.” Myron told him approvingly.

Max clenched his teeth and his hands and he tried to breathe past his anger. “I can’t even look at him at the moment, I don’t want to.”
“You don’t have to. Let me.” Harry insisted.

“No.” Nasta said firmly.

“I have my own anger to work through!” Harry turned to tell him, trying to remain as calm as he could. “If I can’t work through this anger in my own way, then it’s going to fester. Keeping me from Draco is going to do more harm than good in the long run, Nasta! What do you think he’s going to do to me? He’s not going to take one look at me and just attack!”

“I’ve said no.” Nasta growled, a hint of his Dracken peeking through.

Harry’s eyes narrowed and his anger ramped up to fury. He bit his tongue, but a torrent of words wanted to fall out still, he wanted to use his words, to fling them around like sharp weapons with an outburst of abuse aimed at his two oldest mates, but he stopped himself…just.

He clenched his teeth and breathed deeply, letting those words flow through his mind, but not out of his mouth. Shouting wouldn’t help the situation at all and it would likely only make him dizzy or cause him pain. Instead he remained silently fuming, planning what to do next as it was very unlikely that he was going to get his way by talking things through with his two oldest mates, he had to act instead. At the moment he hadn’t been ordered to stay away from Draco and he could still leave of his own volition and he was going to do just that, as soon as he was able to.

The tensed, strained atmosphere that was left in the kitchen was broken by grunting over the baby monitor that was in front of Max.

“Mama?” A small, tinny voice called out over the monitor and Harry automatically went to stand up, but Nasta held him firm around the hips and kept him still as Max stood and went to get the awakened baby himself.

Harry instead remained sitting in Nasta’s lap and he planned his little escape jaunt and he planned it for tomorrow morning. No one would expect him to be up and moving so soon, especially not travelling through the floo. It was going to be painful, but he didn’t frankly care. He just needed to get rid of Nasta and Max first, maybe even Blaise too, though his first mate seemed to be more accepting of seeing Draco, it was just his two older mates who were being the problem and he had to remove them as the obstacles that they were first, before he could do anything.

Max walked in with Regan and as soon as his son saw him, he reached out with both hands, grasping for him, he’d been asleep when Harry had cuddled with his children earlier, so his little boy hadn’t known that he was home. Max sat Regan on the table in front of him and Harry leant forward to hug him.
“Mama, no go way.”

“I’m not going anywhere, Regan.” Harry insisted softly as he cupped his son’s face in both hands and bent forward to kiss his little mouth when he smacked his lips, wanting a kiss.

Harry rubbed Regan’s back gently, tickling his fingers over the back of his son’s onesie, smiling at Regan’s giggles.

“I’ve missed all of you.” He said softly, hugging Regan tightly, kissing all over his cheeks, listening to his son giggling happily.

“Come on, let’s get you a bit more comfortable. You’ve been sat up too straight for too long.” Nasta said gently as he stood up.

Harry was taken into the very large family room, still in Nasta’s arms, and he gasped at how large it was.

“This is…it’s the size of a Quidditch pitch!” He said in amazement.

Max laughed. “Not quite.” He said as he cuddled up to him, still sat sideways in Nasta’s lap, but on a settee this time. He was reclined backwards slightly, to take the pressure off of his abdomen.

Blaise walked in unaided, but Aneirin was sort of hovering just behind him protectively. Regan was placed on the floor by Max, but their son was content to sit at Nasta’s feet and play with Harry’s bare toes. It made Harry feel so sad that his son was that uncomfortable moving away from him, that he couldn’t go to the neat pile of toys just a few feet away to play.

“How are you, Mrs Weasley?” Harry asked with a tired smile from Nasta’s lap.

“Harry, dear. I was so worried when I heard what had happened.” Molly said as she supervised Eva and Ave playing on the floor. “Are you alright?”
“I’m alright.” He insisted. “If Voldemort couldn’t kill me, no one else will be able to.”

He ignored the slight flinches around him at Voldemort’s name, and the growling of his mates at the mention of the monster who had tried numerous times to kill him dating back to his babyhood.

He yawned widely and sunk back onto Nasta more securely and he snuggled in, tucking his arms between their chests and just resting. Nasta and Max approved of his actions if the two, different sized hands stroking him was an indication, Nasta’s hand on his back and Max’s on his face and head.

“If you need to sleep, Caru, just sleep.” Nasta told him. “You need the rest.”

Harry nodded, but he didn’t sleep. He just needed to stay still for a little while as his body rested. The tightness in his belly was not something that he was used to. It was a different pain altogether from what he had come to consider as normal from his experiences in giving birth. He wasn’t used to not being able to move his own body, he’d thought that this would have been like giving birth, just without the baby…but it was completely different.

When he gave birth, he didn’t cut through any muscles for a start, his insides didn’t spill out to dangle on the outside of his body for another. He sighed and rubbed his head over Nasta’s chest until he found his heartbeat and he rested his ear over that strong, soothing beat. It was nice and even, Nasta was relaxed and calm, as always, and that went a long way to ease him down, to reassure him that not everything was out of the ordinary.

“Are you okay?” Nasta asked him quietly.

Harry nodded. “I wanted to hear your heartbeat.”

“Do you want skin to skin contact?”

Harry considered that for a moment before he nodded. He did want skin to skin contact, he wanted it a lot.

“Max, can you help me please?” Nasta asked.

“Course.” Max answered as Nasta sat forward and eased Harry away from his body as Max pulled up Nasta’s shirt and helped him to slip his arms out one at a time while Nasta juggled Harry’s body with his other.
Nasta sat back against the settee and Harry laid his head back on his chest, his ear to that strong heartbeat and his hands and face touching warm, bare skin. He smiled and closed his eyes, everything was much better when he could touch any of his mates’ skin.

He didn’t mean to fall asleep, but he must have dozed off at some point as a scream had him jerking awake and flailing around in shock and then almost landing on the floor as he yelled out in agony and he tried to move his body away from the pain, which only caused more pain.

He writhed in Nasta’s arms as his mate tried desperately to get him to stay still, but the pain was too much for Harry to handle, it made him almost mindless as he was caught in the pain, and he wriggled and writhed and it made the pain so much worse, but he just couldn’t stay still.

Max grabbed his legs with one arm and held his hips down and as still as he could with the other and between the strength of Max and Nasta, they were able to hold him still as he cried helplessly through the waves of burning agony. He couldn’t help himself, he cried like a baby from the pain that he was in and once he was still and Nasta had picked him up into his arms again, he buried his face into Nasta’s neck and he cried messily, wrapping his arms around Nasta and holding on tight.

“Here, Harry. Pain potion.” Max said shortly, sounding like he was near tears himself.

Nasta helped Harry to drink the potion down and he held him through all the grimaces of distaste, the spluttering and the heaving at the taste of the vile potion as Harry had to sip it as he was huffing and hiccupping from his crying too much to knock it back in one as he usual would have.

“Are…are you alright, darling?”

Harry looked up at the voice of Narcissa Malfoy and he nodded minimally, silently, his face still wet from his tears and dribble.

“Who screamed?” He asked in a voice as rough as sandpaper.

“Leolin.” Nasta sighed. “He’s alright, he was having a feed and if we’d known that he was going to look around instead of feeding with his eyes closed as usual then we would have fed him in the kitchen, but he just caught sight of you and he immediately wanted your attention and he kicked off when he was refused. Myron’s taken him for some air.”

Harry nodded once, but he moved his head too much and he gasped from the pain that it had caused him and then he stayed as still as he possibly could while the pain potion did its job. Nasta stroked his hair repeatedly while holding him close to his bare chest to try and help comfort him.
“I was just saying that Draco is going for his first anger management class tomorrow.” Lucius Malfoy told him. Tegan was ‘reading’ a book on his lap, babbling to herself as she turned the pages. She had Lucius’ bulky Malfoy crest ring clutched in one hand and it made Harry smile as Lucius had obviously taken it off for her to hold and play with.

“How is he?” Harry asked concernedly.

“He’s regretful, of course.” Narcissa told him. “He’s missing you and the children terribly too. He keeps wondering aloud what you might be doing or he’ll turn around and say that Braiden would be having his bath at that time or Leolin would be due a feed.”

It was obvious that Max or Nasta, maybe both, had already warned the two elder Malfoys not to say anything that would obviously upset him. He realised then that Draco must be in a bad way, much worse than what everyone around him was letting on, and it made him more determined to go and see him tomorrow morning. He needed to get all of his anger and pain out at what Draco had done to him, to Blaise and to their children and Draco needed to know that he still cared. That he was still loved and cared for, despite everything that had happened, or he wouldn’t be able to get through the classes at all. He needed to know that he still had something to fight for or he wouldn’t apply himself one hundred percent to the classes. After all, why would he even try when he had already lost what he was supposedly working towards?

“I miss him too.” Harry said, a little slurred as the powerful pain potion started working. “Can’t let this happen again, though.” He said softly, almost to himself.

“We completely understand. This definitely cannot be allowed to happen ever again.” Narcissa agreed immediately. “We’ve already told Draco as such and he is going to these classes, we’re not even forcing him, he wishes to go to them and more than that, he is very enthusiastic about going. He doesn’t want this to happen again either.”

Harry was completely gone by this point thanks to the potion and he blinked languidly and sluggishly. He peered around with glassy, bleary eyes and he hummed confusedly, seeing things that only he could see.

“Where are my babies?” He asked, looking right past Calix, Regan, Ave, Eva and Tegan, who were all in the room with him and he instead looked around for something which clearly wasn’t there.

“Please, don’t do this again, Harry.” Max pleaded with him, near tears.
“I want my centaur babies. Where have you put them, what have you done with them?” He cried out, looking around with increasing alarm and panic.

“You don’t have any centaur babies, Harry.” Nasta said sadly.

“I do! What have you done with them?! I want them back!” He insisted, fighting against Nasta’s hold on him. “I want them back right now!”

“Is that the effect of the potion?” Lucius asked worriedly, very alarmed at the rapid change in Harry’s behaviour and the decline of his mental faculties.

Max nodded. “It is ridiculously strong. I actually protested him being given it at first, because of how very powerful it is, but the alternative was another potion not being strong enough for the level of pain that Harry was experiencing and thus making it a waste to give him the potion in the first place. Then Harry would have still been in pain and unable to take any more potions and that was unacceptable. He’s on milder potions now for managing his day-to-day pain, but we have a handful of the powerful potions still, just in case he has an episode like he did earlier, where he experiences very strong pain.”

“He’s going to be like this for a few hours now.” Nasta said as he held a struggling Harry against his chest and stopped him from going to hunt for his missing centaur babies. Just because Harry could no longer feel the pain that he was in, did not mean that he wasn’t causing any damage by moving around as he was.

“Because he’s not in any pain, in fact he can’t actually feel anything at the moment, he doesn’t think that he’s hurt.” Max said, almost reading Nasta’s mind. “So he actually does more damage by wriggling and moving around as he is because he can’t feel a thing, his body is completely cut off from his pain receptors, and he thinks that he’s completely fine when underneath the numbing effect of the potion, his body is screaming with pain.” Max explained sadly.

Harry stayed in his painless bubble, upsetting his mates, ignoring his babies as he tried to search for his centaur babies and he was talking rubbish for most of the afternoon, including recounting a very steamy, passionate encounter with ‘his centaur’ in his nest. It was almost a relief to all those present when, after a few hours of this behaviour, he eventually went quiet, only mumbling unintelligible words now and then, before he fell asleep on Nasta’s chest again. He was then carefully placed back into the little nest of a bed made up on the settee in the other, much quieter room, and he was left to just rest and sleep while those remaining tried to push what he’d said from their minds, trying futilely to block it from their memories.
When Harry next woke up several hours later, it was pitch dark in the room and he was not alone in his little settee nest, Blaise was wrapped around him, fast asleep and lightly snuffling, but the overprotective Mothers’, Nasta and Max, were nowhere in sight.

He tested his body a bit and then, when no agonising pain ripped through him, he sat himself up slowly and carefully. He got up and tentatively put one foot in front of the other and he made his way to the door in the darkness. He opened it as quietly as he could manage and he carefully padded down the corridor, to the first door on the right, where Nasta had pointed out the bathroom to him.

The room behind the door couldn’t even be called a bathroom. It was huge and included a full sized bath that would have fit him and two other mates comfortably, as well as a large shower, that could have again fit himself and two other mates with elbow room. The room had beautifully carved counters along the one corner of the room, a beautiful, smooth sink sunken into the top of the one counter closest to the toilet. All of them were latched and couldn’t be opened by any wandering toddlers. Well, he had to go digging through the cupboards and drawers as his curiosity got the better of him and he found mostly baby cleaning things, baby shampoo, baby bubble bath, bath toys and so on, but in one cupboard, the one under the sink, he found clean flannels, shaving foam, a massive pack of disposable razors (which made him grin) and spare boxes of soap and toilet paper.

He used the toilet and washed his hands as his eyes took in every inch of his new home. He came out of the bathroom and headed further down the corridor and he then turned left to go down another corridor to the massive kitchen. Max really had done well with the kitchen, it was beautiful and there were even false windows that had been charmed to reflect the weather outside, as there was only the one exterior wall.

He boiled the kettle and snatched a mug from the mug tree next to it. They were all brand new and they were three different colours, white, pale grey and pale blue. They matched the same colours as the soft, pale and very open and spacious kitchen.

He made himself tea, trying not to overdo it, but he felt no pain as he was still being covered by the pain potion that he’d taken earlier. He really did hate that potion, but he couldn’t deny that its effects were outstanding. He almost felt completely normal, completely himself again.

He went back to the living room, padding quietly past Blaise and he sat himself back in the nest next to his mate and he sipped at his tea quietly, trying not to move too much, but he really was not feeling much of anything.

“Are you alright, Prezioso?”

Harry turned, almost choking on his sip of tea at the voice in the dark and he coughed a little before answering. “Fine, I just woke up and I needed a drink. You should go back to sleep.”

Blaise did the opposite and he sat himself up and mirrored him, resting their bodies beside one
“Are Nasta and Max in bed?” Harry asked, wondering why they’d been left alone.

“I convinced them to leave you to me so that they could focus on the kids. It took an hour of arguing before they agreed that we’d be fine down here on our own for the night. Nasta did cut off the floo access to anyone who wasn’t immediate family though, just in case.” Blaise rolled his eyes to show just how ridiculous he thought that idea was.

Harry chuckled as he drained his tea and he put the empty cup down on the side table and he turned on the lamp that he found there too, just so that they weren’t straining their eyes so much in the dark, as Drackens did have a good level of night vision, before he turned to cuddle into Blaise.

“Can I have skin contact, please?” He asked quietly, a little unsurely.

“Of course you can, Bello. I’d never deny you anything that you wanted…within reason of course.”

Blaise immediately stripped himself off and he helped Harry take off his pyjama top too and they laid together, bare skin against bare skin. Blaise drew patterns on Harry’s back with his fingers and Harry sighed, rubbing his thumb across Blaise’s skin, dipping his thumb into his belly button and smiling as he encountered the slight patch of hairs that Blaise had on his lower belly.

He turned his head and craned it back and he puckered his lips up at Blaise, who chuckled and obliged him by kissing him. Then they kissed again…then again. Their soothing touches became harder, stroking instead of teasing, their kisses became something more as one of them, neither would remember who, added their tongue to their kisses. It had been so long since they’d last had contact of this kind, and with Max and Nasta being so very overprotective, it was likely that neither of them would get contact of this kind in the near future while their two older mates were being so paranoid and overprotective.

They probably should have controlled themselves, they probably should have reeled themselves in, but neither of them did and very soon Blaise was over Harry, kissing him deeply and passionately while his one hand was inside his pyjama bottoms, stroking Harry to full hardness.

Blaise pulled back with a curse and Harry realised that he’d been trying to kick off his own pyjama bottoms, but they’d gotten caught around his knees. Blaise yanked them off of his lower legs and threw them over the side of the settee before turning to pull off Harry’s bottoms too. Then they were both naked, neither of them thinking straight or about any consequences as Blaise moved back over him, sliding his body along Harry’s, as he lined up their mouths for another kiss as his hands touched as much skin as he could.
Harry moaned softly and rolled his hips gently up into Blaise. “That feels so good.”

“Are you in any pain?”

“I just said it feels good, pain doesn’t feel good.” Harry groaned. “Or at least it doesn’t to me…not too much of it anyway. I like being spanked and a bit of hair pulling or biting, anything else is a no.”

Blaise chuckled and he moved down to his neck and he kissed the soft skin twice, then he bit him lightly. Harry moaned and he arched himself up into Blaise.

“I don’t have any lube.” Blaise complained. “Nasta has both of our wands safe upstairs. I think he was worried that we’d start duelling down here without him to watch over us or something.”

Harry chuckled at the absurdity of that, shaking his head at Nasta’s overprotectiveness, before he gave Blaise a very sexy, naughty look and he took Blaise’s hand and he sucked two fingers into his mouth, licking them and putting as much saliva onto them as he could manage. He kept eye contact with Blaise as he did so, watching as those indigo eyes darkened and Blaise groaned deeply.

Blaise pulled his fingers free and replaced them with his tongue. The saliva coated fingers played around the entrance to Harry’s body and one slid into him slowly and gently.

Harry moaned into the kiss and he thrust his tongue back into Blaise’s mouth, holding his mate’s head still by holding onto the back of Blaise’s head. It was disconcerting to touch Blaise’s head and not feel his silky, layered hair, only short, stubbly bristles, but Harry ignored it as he held Blaise’s head and kissed him furiously.

“Oh! Ooh” He moaned as one of those long, elegant fingers found the little nub inside his body and Blaise teased it mercilessly.

“Keep your body as straight as you can, Bello.”

Harry nodded and he knew why, him yelling out in pain really would be a mood killer…and it would probably bring Max and Nasta running and then he and Blaise would never get any peace again as those two men would hover over them, especially if they were caught in such a compromising position.

Blaise kissed down his chin and then down to his neck, he nibbled and bit before he carried on down to his collar bone, he licked and kissed at it before going down even further to flick his tongue over his left nipple. Harry gasped and then moaned happily.
Blaise continued to tease him with his fingers inside his body and his mouth on his nipple, switching over to pay the other one attention too as he prepared him for something that they probably shouldn’t have been doing. Max and Nasta would kill them both and then likely separate them like naughty children, but Harry didn’t frankly care as he pushed Blaise away from him.

“Now.” He said, his chest heaving with the sensations he was feeling. “Now, please.”

“I’ve only used two fingers.” Blaise told him.

“I know. I’m ready, Blaise. Listen to me, please.”

Blaise smiled. “I always do.”

Blaise slipped back and he spat quietly into his own hand, moving it down to touch himself. He made a soft noise before he rolled his hips forward. He lay down and kissed him, hard, burning with passion as he lifted one hand to push it through Harry’s hair to anchor his head where he wanted it as he twisted his own head to kiss him deeply.

He used his other hand to guide himself to the entrance to Harry’s body. He kissed harder and pushed himself into him in one slow, smooth, long thrust and Harry moaned into the kiss. Blaise held still within him and focused purely on kissing and touching him, lightly pressing Harry’s nipple between his finger and thumb before he let go of it and rubbed his thumb over the hardened nub.

“Better?” Blaise asked, pulling back to look at his face.

Harry’s eyes were half lidded, his mouth slightly open and he nodded. “Yes. Yes, please, Blaise. Please, my love. I need this. I need this so much.”

Blaise nodded and he pulled back slowly, carefully. He waited, with just the head of himself inside Harry’s body, for a short moment before he pushed back in slowly and gently.

“Ti amo tanto.” Blaise whispered, nuzzling his cheek.

“Ti amo, Blaise.” Harry said back raggedly as he tried to hold onto the pleasure of the slow, sweet thrusts that Blaise was making him feel.
Blaise kissed him harder and he pushed back into him with a bit more pace, pulling out a little quicker and pushing back in without pause. Harry groaned and rolled his hips minimally up into Blaise to try and make those sensations last for longer.

“I can’t help it.” Harry complained with a moan. “It feels so good.”

“No pain?”

“None. Are you in pain?”

“Fuck no.” Blaise chuckled, which made them both moan. “You feel so amazing. Ti amo.”

“Please move.”

Blaise did as Harry had asked him and he moved quicker. He by no means moved as roughly as he could, nor did he go as fast or as hard as he usually would have. Instead he kept things smooth and slightly shallow. It was more gentle than they were used to and it felt so intimate, so loving and Harry sighed softly, happily at the sensations that were building up so slowly within him.

“I love you so, so much.” Harry said as he wrapped his arms around Blaise’s neck and tried not to move his legs or his hips as Blaise did all of the work in pleasuring them both.

Blaise grunted and he lowered his head to kiss him, hard and passionately, with a lot of forceful tongue. Harry rather thought that he was transferring all of the energy that he wanted to be using in his thrusts into the kiss. Harry kissed back just as passionately, shoving his tongue into Blaise’s mouth like he wanted to be doing with his hips.

The sensations grew slowly, oh so slowly, each slow thrust pushing him closer and closer to orgasm and the slow build up was so deliciously painful that his gut was squirming pleasantly. Blaise’s breathing was becoming ragged and he started panting, their kisses became quick and furious clashes of tongues and lips as the both of them rapidly became breathless and overwrought with pleasure.

Harry made a soft noise, then another and then the sounds came continuously as his pleasure spiked and he grunted, covering his mouth with his hand to prevent the scream that wanted to come out as he orgasmed hard, spilling himself over Blaise and his own belly.

He was sweaty and sated, panting hard to try and catch his breath as Blaise forced himself with a steel will to keep to the slow, shallow thrusts as Harry’s body clenched around him, massaging him as he pushed in and pulled out gently.

Blaise grunted and threw his head back as he orgasmed and he juddered on top of Harry for a moment before he sighed and laid himself carefully back onto Harry, snuggling for a moment. Once they’d both caught their breath, Blaise rolled to the side and he groaned.

“Maybe that was a bad idea after all. My head is pounding.” He said with a chuckle.

“I’m alright.” Harry said with a grin. “Until later today at least. Do you regret it?”

Blaise scoffed and shook his head gingerly. “Never.” He insisted firmly. “I’ve never regret making love to you, you are everything to me, Prezioso.”

Blaise cuddled up to Harry, rolling over to spoon against the side of him, head on Harry’s chest as Harry had to lay straight. Harry lifted a hand and he rubbed his fingers over Blaise’s stubbly head, stroking his thumb over his temple to try and ease away the pounding headache that had been caused by Blaise’s strong orgasm.

They fell back to sleep, naked, still covered in cum, snuggled up to one another, Blaise wrapped around Harry the way that Harry was usually wrapped around his mates. He couldn’t wait until he was completely healed and this horrible nightmare was behind them...completely behind all five of them. He was not giving up on Draco, he was not going to lose one of his mates over this, regardless of what had happened. He was going to give Draco the chance to go to these classes and sort himself out, but first, he was going to wake up early, floo over to the Malfoy house and he was going to get his anger and frustration off of his chest before it could fester and become a problem in the future.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Harry felt no shame in sneaking into the Malfoy house. It was early morning, so if they weren’t already up, then they would be soon. He had decided against getting dressed, he wanted to do what he needed to and then get back as quickly as possible and getting dressed would have been a painful waste of time. He had instead just slipped back into his pyjamas and forced on his old, battered trainers and he’d come as he was, tousled sex hair and all.

Harry ignored the little house elf that had popped immediately into the room after his arrival and had tried to stop him from going any further into the house. He knew where he was going, he could follow the way to Draco’s bedroom as he could smell it.
Harry followed the scent of Draco through the house and he pushed open a door on the far side of the first floor. Draco was in his bed sleeping, his face was still bruised and his bottom lip was scabbed over. His eyes looked purple from a mix of lack of sleep and too much crying. It broke Harry’s heart.

He shut the door quietly and he warded it tight, tapping into his Dracken side to manage it without his wand, to prevent anyone from coming in and disturbing them. He sat on the edge of the bed and he sighed. He stroked the silky, baby fine, blond hair that he had missed and he sighed heavier. Why had this happened? How had it come to this? It should never have come to this, it should never have happened.

Everything had changed and they were never going to forget this incident, but he did hope…he wanted for it all to be forgiven. He wanted to go back to having his four mates and his babies around him. He was due a heat period soon, it was going to be hell on him if just one of his mates were missing, he knew that from the heat that he’d experienced when he was bonding to Draco, when he hadn’t known that Max needed to be there too.

Harry had expected to feel incredibly angry when he saw Draco again for the first time, but he didn’t. He felt pained knowing that this man had hurt him, had hurt Blaise and their children and their family, but the anger that he’d been feeling since the incident was gone. He felt tired. Tired and inexpressibly sad. Maybe he shouldn’t have come here today after all, not just because his fucked up leg was slowing him down and aching fiercely, but because he still didn’t know what to think or feel over everything that had happened and he didn’t know if he could control his own emotions. He didn’t know how to feel, so therefore he had no idea how he was going to act.

Draco sighed and his silver-blue eyes fluttered open as his Dracken sensed that something was wrong around him. Harry had a moment of looking into his eyes, wondering if he wanted to smile at him or smash his fist down into those perfect teeth, before Draco’s eyes closed again.

Harry knew what Draco was thinking though and he needed to speak to him before Max and Nasta came hunting for him. They’d know immediately where he’d come after their talk yesterday if they woke up and found him missing.

“You’re not dreaming, Draco.” He said softly.

Those eyes snapped open and Draco reached a hand out to touch him. Harry took that hand into his own and squeezed it gently.

Draco sat bolt upright and pulled him into a huge, crushing hug and he started sobbing onto his shoulder.
“Nasta said that I wasn’t allowed to see you or the kids.” Draco whimpered.

“Nasta doesn’t know that I’m here, but I had to see you. I had to tell you that I still love you.” Harry said, feeling like he was a hundred years old.

“How can you after what I did?” Draco asked him seriously.

“I didn’t fall in love with you overnight, Draco, and I won’t fall out of love with you overnight either. It’ll take time and I know that if I’d followed Nasta and Max’s wishes and not come here, if I’d let the anger and rage fester, then I could have easily fallen out of love with you, maybe I’d have even come to hate and resent you for what you did, given enough time away from you. That’s why I’m here. I don’t want that to happen. I fought for you once, to be my mate. I chose you more than I chose any of the others, because I had to fight to keep you. Now you need to do the same. You need to fight for me, Draco. You need to fight for me, for Max and Blaise and Nasta, for our beautiful children and all the ones that will come later in our lives. You need to fight for us, for your family, or you’re going to lose us.”

“I will do whatever it takes.” Draco swore to him seriously. “I love you. I love you so much, all of you and the kids too, of course. I can’t believe I did something so awful to you all.”

“You need help.” Harry said even more seriously.

Draco nodded. “I don’t know what you’ve been told, but I’m taking anger management classes, all with different therapists. My first one is actually later today.”

Harry pulled his legs up and he lay down in Draco’s bed, mostly because he couldn’t stay sat up for a moment longer. Draco looked really worried at his behaviour.

“Are you alright?”

“No, Draco I’m not alright. I’m not going to lie to you, you seriously hurt me and it was almost fatal.” Harry said, not sugar coating anything. “I’m having trouble sitting up for any length of time because it starts putting too much pressure on my core muscles and there is a very real danger of my gut opening up again. My leg was also very badly injured, so I can’t really walk at all. It took ages just to get here and the floo was absolute agony.”
Draco’s hand hovered over him and finally touched his face, cupping his cheek.

“I’m so sorry.”

“So you’ve said. There is nothing more that you can say now, Draco. You need to show it. You need to show us that you’re willing to change. You need to show that you’re sorry. You can’t keep holding onto this anger and maybe it was the suppressant potion that you were taking that first set you on edge and made you so aggressive, but you are no longer on that potion, Draco. It’s no longer in your system, you were properly detoxed and it is no longer in your system.” He stressed for emphasis. “The deposit it laid down is not an excuse. You need to get rid of this anger, of all this aggression, Draco, before it tears us all apart, before you do actually end up permanently killing one or more of us.”

Draco lay down next to him and wound an arm around him, holding him tight and pressing every inch of Harry against himself as if he was memorising the feel of his body, being careful of his aforementioned leg and belly.

“I didn’t see it as you.” He said softly. “When I dug my claws into you, I wasn’t seeing you. I swear it.”

Harry nodded. “That may be so, but it was me. I can’t have a dominant who attacks me, Draco, not for any reason. I can’t have a dominant who hurts my children.” He said with a bite of a growl to his voice.

“I will get better. I’ll learn how to control myself. I will.” Draco swore determinedly. “I love you. I’m just scared that I’ve already ruined it. Nasta was so angry and Max and Blaise haven’t even come to see me.”

“Blaise is still injured too.” Harry defended easily. “He’s having a bit of trouble with his memory. He keeps getting names mixed up and he doesn’t remember the fight at all, so he doesn’t really know what happened and thus he has no emotions linked to the event.”

“So he doesn’t hate me?” Draco asked with a hint of hope.

Harry shook his head. “He still loves you, we all do, Draco. As I said, none of us are going to fall out of love with you overnight, we still love you, you’re still our mate. But we’re also very angry, Max in particular. He’s scared and hurt and he’s angry, so all together he’s not willing to forgive you just yet. He needs some time to calm down first. He’s feeling guilty, because he was right there when the fight started. He thinks that he should have done more to protect me, to protect Blaise and the kids and it’s eating him up inside and he’s channelling that into rage so that he doesn’t completely breakdown. It just so happens that you’re a very convenient target for that rage after what you did.”

“I don’t know how to fix this.” Draco said tearfully.

“Just get better.” Harry said firmly. “Show us, prove to us, that you want to get rid of your anger and the aggressive behaviour. Show us that you love us enough to work hard for us, because we still love you and regardless of what’s happened, we can get over this. We can.”

“How? What I did was unforgivable and I hurt Braiden and Leolin too! How can you even stand to look at me?”

“Enough.” Harry said sternly. “This woe is me attitude is not going to get you through these classes, Draco. I forgave Max when he was so angry with me that he couldn’t stay in the same house as me, his own home! I almost killed Cepheus, remember? I almost killed a member of Max’s family and he forgave me for that! And I forgave him when his leaving left me alone with the kids and then Leolin and Calix were so very sick…I thought they were going to die, Draco. I thought that my two babies were going to die and Max wasn’t even there. I forgave him for that, we all did despite how angry we were with him at the time. It doesn’t last, Draco, but you have to work hard for us, like Max did.
You can’t just give up on us because things get difficult, we still love you and we will forgive you in time.”

“I will work hard for you, I swear it.”

Harry smiled. “I love you, but I think I need to get back before Max and Nasta find me missing and panic.”

Draco nodded and he sat up, helping Harry sit up too, but Harry let out a pained gasp at the small movement regardless. Draco looked so upset just from that, but Harry ignored it. Draco’s upset or apologies were not what he needed right now. He needed his mate to be better, so this would never happen again.

Draco helped him down the corridor and carried him down the stairs so that Harry didn’t have to endure the agony of it. They met the elder Malfoys waiting for them in the receiving room.

“You should not be here.” Lucius told him firmly. “You haven’t yet recovered.”
Harry nodded. “I know. But I needed to be here, just to lend a bit of extra support.”

“Shall I assume that Nasta and Maximilius do not know that you’re here?” Lucius asked him shrewdly.

Harry snorted. “As if they would have let me come if they did know. That’s why I came so early, before they woke up. Blaise and me stayed in our settee nest last night.” Harry smiled, but fought off the blush at the memory of just what he and Blaise had done in that settee nest. Perhaps that was why he was so sore today and not actually because he was pushing himself too hard. Max and Nasta would never have had sex with him in his condition, but Blaise had taken him at his word and had listened to him. Blaise had always listened to him and done what he wanted. Always.

“You need to get back.” Draco told him, but Harry could tell from the tone of his voice that he didn’t want to let him go. “I don’t know when I’ll be seeing you again.” He said sadly, confirming Harry’s suspicions.

“I know. Nasta will order me not to see you again when I get back, if he finds out that I’ve been here that is and I have no intentions of letting him know about this little visit, but that’s why it was so important for me to see you today, before the idea occurred to him to order me not to come to see you. It won’t be forever, Draco, not if you work hard.”

“I will, I promise.” Draco sighed and he held Harry closer for a moment before carefully setting him on his feet.

Harry kissed him gently on the lips and shooed him away to get ready for his classes. He gave a meaningful glance to Lucius and Narcissa and then he went back through the floo to the new house. The house that Draco didn’t know about yet.

Everything was silent and quiet when he arrived back home and Harry relaxed fractionally. Blaise was still fast asleep and Harry contemplated joining him again, but he needed to be absolutely sure that his little jaunt over to see Draco had not been noticed. He kicked his shoes off and he padded out into the hallway with bare feet and he took the left turn to the kitchen. It was in darkness. Relaxing further, he turned back around and he headed down a new corridor, one that he hadn’t been down yet, and he found the stairs, climbing them carefully and slowly.

He cursed under his breath as he saw how many doors were up here and he tried to remember what Blaise had been saying yesterday, when he’d went on the hunt for a bathroom on the first floor. He was sure that Blaise had said the first door off of the landing was a guest bedroom and then opposite each other, to either side of the corridor, were nurseries, and the biggest room, next door to the nursery on the right side was the master bedroom.
Harry eased open the door to the master bedroom, thankful that it was brand new and didn’t make even a whisper of sound, as he peeked in on Max and Nasta, who were both still asleep, and he smiled to see them all cuddled up and cozy together in the bed, wrapped around one another in a tangle of interwound limbs.

The room was absolutely massive, the bed a monstrosity with a thick, solid wooden headboard that had to have been custom made. The carpet squished under his bare toes and it made him smile as it tickled. He couldn’t really see colours, it was too dark in the room with the only light coming in through the open doorway from the hallway, but he thought that it might have been red. Blaise and Draco would not like that, he thought happily.

He padded on soft feet, made easier by the very thick, plush carpet, to the large bed and he took his wand carefully from the bedside table, where it lay in a bundle with Blaise, Nasta and Max’s wands, and he was thankful that Nasta and Max had chosen to sleep more on the opposite side of the bed as he quietly whispered the incantation for a scent remover, sweeping his body with his wand to remove Draco’s scent from his clothes and body, before he quietly replaced it, his eyes always on Max and Nasta in the bed.

Once he was done with his practical business, he turned his back to the bed, and to the sleeping Max and Nasta, and he padded quietly over to the twin bassinets at the bedside which held his twin daughters, Eva and little Ave. They could fit several bassinets side by side easily in the space between their bed and the far wall and for some unexplainable reason it made him well up with happiness. It made him and his Dracken happy to know that their mates had been so thoughtful as to make so much room for their newborns, even if they didn’t need quite so much room or ever use all of it, it made him force back a happy trill to know that they had been thinking of their growing family when building their home regardless.

He kissed both Eva and Ave softly before he just stood there and smiled at them. He touched their little hands, tucked them in more firmly and smoothed their curls from their sleeping faces.

“Why are you up here?” A soft voice demanded from behind him.

Harry startled, his heart turning over with fright, and he peered back over to the bed, to Nasta, who’d cracked an eye open at the disturbance in the air caused by his presence. Nasta pushed himself up on his arm, taking in Harry’s pyjamas and bare feet with apparent approval. Harry knew then that it was the right decision to keep his pyjamas on to go and visit Draco.

“I woke up suddenly and thought that it might be one of the kids.” He lied convincingly. “I was just coming to check on them, but I don’t know my way around up here. I found four empty rooms, one looked to be a guest bedroom, but I must have missed the nursery, unless it’s the door down the bottom of the corridor, but I never reached that far as I found the master bedroom before the nursery, so I came to check on my baby girls first.”

Nasta groaned and he laid himself back down before he extracted himself carefully from Max’s body without waking the bigger man and he stretched out before he sat back up and then got himself up and out of the bed. He came to kiss him and held him loosely around the waist.
“You shouldn’t have struggled up the stairs, Harry. How is your leg?”

“Aching.” He replied truthfully. “But my babies always come first, Nas. You know that.”

Nasta sighed and he herded him to the other side of the room when Harry went to make his way out into the corridor. Harry was confused when Nasta opened a door, of what he had assumed was a bathroom or a wardrobe, only to be pleasantly surprised when he walked in to find himself in a nursery, right next door to the master bedroom, connected to it by the door. It was again a very large room, but there were five cots around the walls, a changing table too, and Harry could see all the occupants of the cots from the door, he loved that he was able to do that.

Only Calix was awake, sitting in his cot quietly, holding his toes and rocking back and forth with a grin. He giggled when he saw them and he hefted himself up with the bars of his cot and he reached out for them.

“Mummy.” He called out. “Pick up.”

“This is why I woke up!” Harry declared as he reached down into the cot.

Nasta however picked Calix up before Harry could and placed him on his hip. Harry sighed and shook his head, but he still smiled. Nasta picked him up too, carefully and gently, and carried him and Calix out of the nursery, through another door that led onto the hallway, before carrying them down the stairs.

“Blaise is still asleep.” Harry told Nasta, who veered off into the kitchen instead and through to the larger family room.

Harry got placed on one of three large, five seater settees and a squirming Calix got placed on the floor. He hauled himself up to his feet and he toddled right over to the toy box and he started digging. Harry smiled adoringly at him.

“Did you grab the baby monitors?” He asked distractedly.

“I need the bathroom, so I’ll grab them on my way back down. Just don’t move.”
“Not moving.” Harry replied. “Unless Calix needs me, then no promises.”

Nasta looked like he’d argue with him, but he just sighed and nodded.

“I’ll be back soon.”

“I love you.” Harry said quietly.

Nasta’s entire stance softened and he smiled. “I love you too, Harry. So very much.”

His oldest mate came back over to him and he cupped his face in his hands, fingers pressing gently across his jaw and into his cheeks before he bent and kissed him.

He pulled back, but Harry slipped his fingers into Nasta’s black hair and tugged him back down and into a more passionate kiss that left them both breathless and chuckling.

“Kisses!”

Calix’s shriek broke them apart as he hurried over to them on little legs and their son lifted his arms right up over his head.

“Want kisses too, Mummy!”

“You are so adorable, I can’t stand it!” Harry cooed as Nasta swept their son up and kissed him.

Nasta presented Calix to him and Harry kissed him soundly on the mouth, Calix making a smacking noise as he did so.

Harry chuckled in joy at Calix’s antics as Nasta placed him back on the floor and Harry watched him toddle off yet again, back towards his toys.

“When do you think we should start toilet training them?” He asked. “They’re old enough to start trying I think.”
“Braiden definitely is. I was going to bring it up when we were more settled, but he’s almost two. It’s about time that we introduced him to that potty that we bought for him.”

“I’m so excited to try him on it.” Harry said with a grin. “He’s been hiding while he’s going in his nappy recently. If that’s not a sign that he’s ready to try then I don’t know what is.”

“Speaking of potties. I’ll be right back.” Nasta said with a small grin before leaving the family room.

Harry sighed and he relaxed back, letting his muscles unclench and lose all tension. Nasta was none the wiser about his visit to Draco and he hoped to keep it that way.

He settled on the settee, trying to ignore the ache that was getting fiercer in both his leg and his abdomen. He breathed through it and he watched Calix. He had no idea if it had been his jaunt to Malfoy Manor or the sex that he’d had with Blaise, but his leg and stomach were killing him. He’d over done it and now his body was punishing him for it.

“You’re in pain.”

Harry tipped his head back on the settee to see Nasta looking at him, two baby monitors in hand.

“Yeah. I think I need a potion, not one of the strong ones, but one of the other ones.” Harry said, grimacing.

Nasta came around the settee and put the monitors down on the coffee table, reaching out to cup his cheeks. Harry got a kiss and then Nasta went back into the kitchen, through the top door. Harry noticed that there was a set of double doors to the left side of him and he wondered where they went.

Nasta came back with a pain potion and a cup of tea, sitting by the side of him and uncorking the slim vial.

“Where does that door go?” Harry asked as Nasta was sorting out his potion for him.

Nasta looked over to the double doors and his face scrunched up. He got that look on his face where he didn’t want Harry to know something.
“It goes into the smaller living room, doesn’t it?” He asked as he realised that the other room would be beside this one, but he already knew the answer. “Why didn’t you say yesterday, I could have seen the kids and…and that was why you didn’t tell me. You didn’t want me seeing them, did you?” He demanded.

“Drink your potion.”

Harry narrowed his eyes. He allowed Nasta to tip the contents of the vial down his throat and he swallowed hard, getting it all down in one go. It made his eyes water and he stuck his tongue out in absolute disgust.

Nasta smiled gently at him and he held the cup of tea out for him to sip at to remove the taste from his mouth.

“It’s so disgusting.” He complained as he wiped his eyes dry.

Nasta cupped his cheeks and used his thumbs to catch the tears that Harry had missed. He kissed him again and pulled him in to rest against him quietly as Calix played on the floor. At least it was quiet until a shrill cry came over one of the baby monitors.

“I got it.” Nasta said, making to stand up, but they heard Max grunting over the monitor and lumbering out of bed instead.

“I guess Max has it.” Harry chuckled before he lay back on Nasta’s chest.

“A good thing too, I’m very comfortable right where I am.” Nasta smiled as he drank his own morning cup of green tea.

Harry smiled and relaxed himself as the potion got to work, erasing his pain and melting the tension from his muscles.

“Better?” Nasta asked him once he felt Harry relax fully.

He nodded carefully and then sighed when there was no pain. “Yeah, that’s better now.”
“You should know better than to take on the stairs by yourself.” Nasta lectured him.

“I know, I know. I can’t always help it though, if I think that my babies need me, then that’s it, nothing else matters to me. I’d struggle up those stairs for my babies if both of my legs were severed at the groin and I had to crawl up them with just my arms.”

Nasta tried to remain calm as he heard that and he nodded. He had to try and understand things from Harry’s point of view. He was a submissive Dracken, of course his children were going to come first for him, just like Harry came first for him because he was a dominant. It wasn’t Harry’s fault, it was just his inherent instincts and no matter how hard he tried, he could never change them, it was a fundamental characteristic of a submissive Dracken and like it or not, he had to accept it.

“Here you are. I saw that Blaise was still asleep and I panicked a bit when I realised he was alone.” Max sighed as he hefted in the twin girls.

“Are they okay?” Harry asked, trying to peer at the two girls from against Nasta’s chest.

“One woke up the other, as usual.” Max groaned. “But other than that, they’re fine. Ave needed a nappy change.” He explained when Harry looked at the girls critically. “She’s all clean and fresh.” He smiled, trying to lighten the mood.

Harry smiled back and held his arms out for her, before looking to Nasta, as if seeking permission and that hurt Nasta’s heart too. It had been what he’d wanted…or so he had thought. But now that it had actually happened, it was all wrong. It felt wrong for Harry to ask his permission for something, for anything. Harry was his mate, his lover, not his child. Harry didn’t need his permission to do anything, he refused to be such a controlling, domineering mate.

He refused to answer the non-verbal look that Harry had given him and Max, possibly feeling the tension in the air, laid Ave in Harry’s outstretched arms. When Nasta didn’t say anything, Harry smiled widely and he pulled her into his chest, cooing over her and tickling her tummy. It was natural for him to be like this, it was normal to see Harry with a baby in his arms. Perhaps that was what they needed now…normal.

Nasta put his hand on Harry’s knee and he squeezed gently. “I’m going to go and check on Leolin.” He said as he stood up.

“Nasta.” Harry called out softly. “Thank you.”
Nasta had to close his eyes and breathe deeply through the pain of having his submissive thank him for letting him hold his own child with no fuss. They really did need normal in their lives and routines again if this is what they’d sunk to.

He left the room without saying a word and he went to check on his remaining children, particularly on Leolin, who were all fast asleep still.

He went back down to the ground floor and he didn’t know what to do for the best, he didn’t know what would make things better, but he knew that they couldn’t carry on like this.

He made everyone a cup of tea, squeezing a good glob of honey into Harry’s cup and he stirred it vigorously for a minute before heading back into the family room and handing out the tea to each person.

“We’re going to need to have a sit down and we need to talk this through.” He said softly, almost randomly as he broke through Harry and Max’s conversation about getting new sleepsuits for the rapidly growing girls, but his mind was working furiously as he tried to figure out how to put his family to rights again.

“What is there to talk about?” Max asked, almost too calmly. Nasta could see the flash of anger in those blue eyes and he sighed. This would be so much easier if he didn’t have Max fighting against him too. He needed to get Max to see things from an outlook perspective, he needed to get Max on board with him. Things would be so much easier if he and Max were working together on the same page. If all of them, every single one of them, were all on the same page and were working together, then things could actually get done and things would be sorted much quicker and much easier. They might actually be able to become a family again if they all worked towards the same goals together, as they supported one another towards those goals. They needed to be strong now, to pull together and work hard to salvage this situation.

“Don’t make this any more difficult than it has to be.” Nasta said softly, keeping his temper so that he didn’t ignite another fight. “You know that we need to talk about how to proceed from here.”

“Calmly and with no shouting.” Harry said. “I’ve had enough of fighting, I’ve had enough anger and shouting.”

“We’ll do it calmly.” Nasta nodded. “Like the adults that we are.”

They heard a low moan from the room next door in the strained silence created by the heavy topic. It was followed closely by a second, louder moan.

“Is that Blaise?” Harry asked worriedly. “He was a little dizzy last night and his head was hurting.”
“Why didn’t you say sooner?” Max demanded as he ran to the double doors and flung them open into the other room, going to attend immediately to Blaise.

“Did I…did I do something wrong?” Harry asked in a quiet, unsure voice that wavered with upset. “Was I supposed to call you, or a Healer, if Blaise was a bit dizzy? He said that he was okay.”

Nasta controlled himself and he touched Harry’s cheek. “No, my love. Blaise has been signed off by a Healer, he likely only has a bit of a headache.”

Nasta kissed Harry’s mouth and smiled at him, even though his Dracken wanted to run over to Blaise and sniff every inch of him. Harry needed him too, especially after Max’s unthinking, hurtful outburst.

“Oh, get off, Max.” They heard Blaise complaining. “I have a headache, nothing else.”

“Why are you naked?” Max asked him.

“Why are you dressed?” Blaise answered back lecherously, as quick as a snap.

Harry chuckled softly and even Max, as fretful as he was, saw the funny side of things as he helped Blaise sit up.

“You have…Blaise, what is that?” Max’s good humour had slipped away as quickly as it had come and his voice was like thunder.

“You know what it is, don’t even try to pretend that you don’t. That’s going to hurt like hell to get off now that it’s dry.” Blaise sighed and too late, Harry remembered that Blaise still had their fluids from last night on his body. They had never cleaned up afterwards.

“Are you talking about what I think you are?” Nasta asked far too softly as he stood to see for himself. His eyes flashed as he saw the patch of dried cum on Blaise’s belly. “Did you do this yourself or did you have help?” He asked as he turned to stare at Harry.
Harry sighed. “Alright, so we fucked last night, big deal!”

Harry could almost see Max inflating with anger.

“It is a big fucking deal!” He roared. “You’re both injured!”

His shouts startled Calix, who flinched and looked up worriedly and that made Harry angry as it obviously caused Calix to remember bad memories as he huddled up to make himself appear smaller. Harry saw red.

“Stop shouting, now.” He demanded quietly, furiously angry, but his children came first and he refused to raise his voice.

“I can’t even…what were you thinking?!” Max shouted again.

“I’m warning you!” Harry glared as he stood up and went to Calix, cooing gently to him, trilling gently to reassure him.

Max shoved a hand through his hair as he realised why Harry wanted him to stop shouting, his heart breaking as he caught sight of Calix’s terrified, worried face, but he was so angry, so afraid, that he wanted to shout and rage until Harry and Blaise understood what they’d done and why it was such a bad idea.

“Max, go out to the tree line, have a good shout and scream, and then come back.” Nasta offered and Max nodded tightly, going to do just that.

Harry kissed Calix and distracted him with his toys again, before he stood and put Ave down in the bassinet next to her sister.

“We had sex because we both felt fi…”

“You are not fine.” Nasta said tightly. “You are both very far from fine.”
“I didn’t allow him to move.” Blaise shrugged.

Nasta inhaled audibly and he breathed out again, very forcibly. “His insides were on the floor, Blaise. That sort of damage does not heal overnight. There are internal injuries that could have been aggravated by you being inside him.”

“We understand why you’re worried.” Harry said calmly. “We did let things get a little out of hand, we never intentionally set out to have sex. It just happened when we both woke up in the early hours, but we were very careful and it was soft, gentle love-making, Nas. It certainly wasn’t a hard, rough fuck.”

“Can I sniff you?” Nasta asked, his arms shaking with the pressure of holding his Dracken side back from doing just that. He didn’t know how he would react if Harry refused to allow him to do as such.

Harry nodded though, well aware that Nasta was trying. He hadn’t rushed at him and just sniffed him without asking as he usually would have done and Harry rewarded that by agreeing to subject himself to Nasta’s Dracken side.

Nasta held him so gently that Harry relaxed and allowed Nasta to sniff every inch of his skin, particularly down by his belly and lower abdomen, for a full ten minutes as his dominant was very thorough in his inspection.

“Are you in any pain?” Nasta asked him as he finally finished.

Harry shook his head. “I feel fine today, Nas, honestly. I’ve taken my potion and it was enough. I’m glad that Blaise listened to me, I feel so happy to know that he will take me at my word and not refuse me things out of hand or because he thinks that he knows better. Blaise has always loved and respected me enough to believe me when I say that I’m fine or that I’m ready, he doesn’t question it and I love him so much for that. I know my own body, I know my own limitations and I know myself better than anyone else.”

“You truly love and respect Blaise more than anyone else?” Max’s quiet voice asked from the doorway to the kitchen.

Harry looked over his shoulder and he sighed at the hurt look that Max was trying to hide.

“Blaise loves and respects me back. He respects me and my opinions so much that when I tell him something that I perceive as important, he doesn’t question it and he doesn’t try to make me feel stupid for my own thoughts. Instead he listens to me intently, without judgement, even if he doesn’t give the same idea or thought the same amount of importance as I do or even if he thinks it’s stupid or ridiculous, he understands that I find it important and he is willing to listen to what I have to say just because I think it’s important. Blaise has always respected me in such a way and it’s hard not to love someone like that.”

“That doesn’t really answer the question.” Max pointed out.

Harry sighed. “I love all of you…all four of you!”

“But do you love Blaise more?” Max asked persistently.

Harry shoved his own hand through his hair and he dissected how he felt. “No, I don’t think so. I love you all equally, just in different ways as you’re all separate people who each bring your own unique qualities to our mateship. I chose you all for different reasons and thus I love you all for different reasons. But the thought of losing any one of you is like a punch to the gut…or like losing a limb. But because Blaise respects me more than any of the rest of you…I think I seek him out more for his opinions on things more or if I want to say something without being laughed at or I want someone to listen to me without scoffing or telling me that I’m wrong for thinking a certain way. It’s the same if I have a thought that I want to share without being judged or seen as stupid, I’ll go to Blaise, because I know that he respects me enough to understand that I have my own thoughts, feelings and opinions and he doesn’t try to make me think that I’m wrong or stupid or childish just for thinking differently or seeing things differently.”

“Is that truly how we make you feel?” Nasta asked, feeling like he’d had a hole punched through his heart.

“Not all the time.” Harry said at the same time that Blaise said a simple ‘Yes.’

“You do it to me too.” Blaise said to elaborate when Max and Nasta looked at him. “You think that because I’m subordinate that I need controlling or telling what to do when I don’t. Harry and I are young, yes, but we are not your children. We are fully capable of making decisions or opinions by ourselves, we don’t need to be told what to do and yes, we had sex together, but Harry told me that he felt fine and I felt fine. I trusted him and he trusted me and we had a good time and we reconnected our bond after the disaster of the last week. We’re both unharmed and I actually feel more relaxed than I did yesterday because I’ve resettled my bond with him.”

“I feel better too.” Harry said with a smile. “I don’t love anyone more than someone else, but you don’t exactly make it easy when you ignore my thoughts or opinions or you disregard my feelings as if they mean absolutely nothing to you. Like I mean absolutely nothing to you.”

“Of course that isn’t true.” Max replied, slightly strangled by the sadness that he felt as he listened to Harry and Blaise speak as if he and Nasta were uncaring, controlling monsters. “We love you, of course your thoughts and feelings mean everything to us.”

“But just yesterday you disregarded my feelings and you overrode my opinions with your own just because you thought that you knew better than I did. You treated me like I was just a stupid child who couldn’t make decisions for myself about my own thoughts and feelings, about my own wellbeing.”

“When?” Max asked, aghast.

“When he wanted to go and see Draco.” Blaise replied simply as Harry hesitated.

Harry sighed heavily. “It’s true. I told you both that I needed to see him, to speak to him, in order to work through my own anger and grief and you just brushed that off as if it was nothing, as if my emotions and the way that I need to work through them are inconsequential to you and your own thoughts and feelings. You thought nothing of the pain that it would cause me to carry around that anger because I wasn’t given the chance to get rid of it. You thought nothing of my mental wellbeing at being stopped from seeing my own mate when I needed to, you just believed that you knew what was best for me and that was that, my thoughts and opinions were shut down and ignored as if I were a child who didn’t know any better. You didn’t care that you were hurting me by denying me the chance to offload my anger and grief over the attack, because that’s not how either of you deal with anger or grief, so you don’t understand or respect me enough to take my word for it that that is how I need to deal with such things. You didn’t even give me the courtesy of explaining to you that that was what I needed, you just automatically shut me down and stopped me from speaking my thoughts. As long as you were doing what you thought was right for me, that was it, neither of you cared about what was actually right for me as long as you were both happy with what was happening. Neither of you respected me enough to put your own thoughts or feelings aside in favour of my own, neither of you so much as thought that, just maybe, I might know what I need better than the both of you do.”

Max and Nasta shared a saddened look of utter guilt and Nasta sighed, reaching out to Harry and pulling him into a cwtch, kissing his forehead.

“I’m so very sorry.” He said genuinely and it brought tears to Harry’s eyes.

Max swallowed and brushed at his own damp eyes. “I am too. I’m just so angry and I feel so guilty for not throwing him outside sooner. I keep thinking that if only I’d grabbed him and thrown him out of the house that you and Blaise and the kids would have been spared from this fear and pain and I can’t stop thinking about all of the things that I should have done and didn’t.”

“You’re taking your guilt out on Draco.” Blaise said simply. “It isn’t fair. You’re angry with him, I get it, but cutting him out of our lives isn’t your anger speaking, it’s your guilt and your inability to face it, to face Draco. So you’re trying to convince us, me and Harry, that cutting him out is for the best. You’re trying to force us into your way of thinking because you don’t like, or rather you can’t face, the fact that we don’t think the same way as you do, but the reality is that we don’t think the same as you do. We don’t want to cut Draco out of our lives for something like this. You forgave Harry for almost killing your Uncle, we forgave you for running out on us when we all thought that Leolin was going to die, I was forgiven for running out on Harry and the kids when the stress of school and a growing family became too much for me, why can’t Draco be forgiven also? The anger will fade given time, your guilt will not and it will drive a wedge between all of us and it is that that we can’t allow to happen.”

“We can’t let that happen, Max.” Harry reiterated softly. “I’m not sure if it’s different for you three, but for me the thought of losing one of my mates is driving me crazy. I remember when I was mating to you and Draco for the first time, the heat where you needed to be there and you weren’t…it was agony, Max. Not having you there was so confusing, it felt wrong, like a part of me was missing. I knew that I needed something else to get my first child, but I didn’t know what it was and it was maddening. I can’t go through that for every single heat from now on for the rest of our lives, it was so distressing and you were missing for perhaps half an hour, how can I survive six to ten days of that? I’d be completely mentally unstable afterwards, it would drive me insane. You just don’t understand how wrong it felt not to have one of my mates there with me and that’s the reality that I’m facing if you try, and succeed, in cutting me off from Draco.”

“It’s not like that for us.” Blaise told him. “I felt like everything was fine on that heat, but when Max joined us, I just moved out of the way. I didn’t feel any pain or wrongness at all on that heat, it seemed fine, normal to me. It was the same as the first heat with just me and you, but I also didn’t feel threatened or any need to protect you when Max arrived like I would if someone else walked in on us.”

Harry shook his head. “I can’t go through that pain again and I’d hope that you wouldn’t want to put me through that sort of agony, that distress, heat after heat.”

“Harry, of course not. Of course we won’t!” Nasta insisted and Max nodded. “I had no idea that it hurt for submissives to have a mate missing from their heat periods.”

Max picked Harry up off of his feet and hugged him gently, supporting him, and he kissed him on the mouth.
“I’ll work on the guilt I feel.” Max said as he hugged Harry and held him gently, touching him and kissing his face and head repeatedly. “For you I’ll do anything and I’m sorry that we’re all in this position. I should have acted…”

Harry pressed his fingers to Max’s mouth to stop him talking.

“Blaming yourself is not working on your guilt, Max, it’s heightening it.” Harry said seriously. “You have nothing to feel guilty over, none of us knew that this was going to happen, how could we? If we’d known about this happening, then we would have stopped it entirely. It’s easy now to say that I should have done this or that, because of hindsight, but you didn’t know back then what you do now. Please stop blaming yourself.”

“I should have…”

“We all should have done things differently, Max.” Harry insisted again, much more firmly. “Maybe I shouldn’t have challenged him, maybe I shouldn’t have shouted at him, maybe I should have rolled over and showed him my neck like a good little submissive should have, but I have never been that sort of person and I refuse to change when I’ve done nothing wrong. I am entitled to have an opinion, I am entitled to have my own thoughts and emotions and I am not some sort of obedient pet to be smacked around and brought to heel. We all make mistakes, Max, but feeling guilty over them is not going to help us get over them. I need you to get over this, I need you to let go of the guilt that you shouldn’t even be feeling. I love you and I still love Draco, and truly, you do to.”

Max nodded slowly. “I do. Of course I do, but I can’t stop seeing you blood splattered and my Uncle holding your guts in your body with just his hand and a tea towel. I can’t stop having nightmares, ones where you die from your injuries, nightmares of when Blaise died, in my dreams he never… he’s not revived and I keep thinking that I’ll never see those beautiful purple eyes again and I’ve lost you both and I’m all alone and I don’t want…I can’t handle…”

Max’s voice cracked and Harry wrapped his arms around him tightly, squeezing his biggest mate as Blaise and Nasta pulled in closer to lend their support.

“We’re right here, Ciccio.” Blaise said softly. “We’re both alive and breathing. We’re fine.”

Max nodded. “I know. Thank fucking Merlin that you’re both alright, I just can’t stop my mind from travelling to those dark places. I don’t want to think of you both dead, of course I don’t, I just can’t help it.”
Harry stroked Max’s hair, with its slight curls coming through because it hadn’t been cut in so long.

“If holding us and touching us will help…” Harry tailed off his offer suggestively.

“It does help, it really does. I didn’t have a single nightmare last night, so I am getting better and moving on now that you’re both home. It’s just taking some time.”

“We just need to relax and ease up now.” Harry agreed. “That’s why me and Blaise had sex. It’s normal for us to have those feelings for each other, it’s normal for us to act on them and right now I really need normal when everything else is so abnormal that I’m feeling unsettled. I’m in a new house where I don’t even know where everything is, I haven’t even been on every floor yet, let alone in every room, it doesn’t feel like home to me yet, I don’t even know where we are. With everything else going on, feeling settled here and at peace is going to help ease the tension.”

Nasta nodded. “Come on, I’ll show you around. In every fucking drawer and cupboard if you want to look.”

“I’ll start on breakfast.” Max said. “We all need normal and normal for me and the kids at this time is getting them their banana porridge.”

Harry smiled and he touched Max as he was put back on the floor. He turned to Nasta and he smiled.

“Show me my home, Nas. So we can settle in properly.”

Nasta held him around the back, just to support him, and he pulled Blaise in to the other side of himself too. They started off their tour and Harry actually got to see the front door to their home, or rather their two front doors. They were made entirely of frosted glass and the light that streamed through them was dazzling.

“It’s reinforced, its unbreakable glass.” Nasta explained.

“The smaller living room is down that way, so is the bathroom, so...what’s that way?” Harry asked, peering down the opposite corridor. “I saw three doors when I went upstairs.”
“One is large and empty for now, the other, smaller room Max wants as a small home gym.” Nasta explained with a smile as he led them down the corridor. “That door goes down to the basement.”

Harry looked at the door that was beside the stairs that went up to the first floor and he nodded. “Okay, is that the size of the foundations of the house or…?”

“No, it’s smaller than the foundations, but it is still rather large.” Nasta told them. “It’s walled off into three rooms, two smaller rooms and one large, massive space. One of the small rooms is Max’s study, the other is a well ventilated room for his potions lab. The other space will likely be for storage.”

Harry made to step up the stairs, but he was picked up under his armpits from behind and carried up the stairs and he smiled, letting out a small chuckle.

He was put down on the top landing and he made his way automatically to the nursery and he looked in on his children. They were all still asleep, which was unusual, but Tegan was frowning in her sleep, obviously waking up slowly.

“Come on, we have several minutes before they wake up.” Nasta said as he led the both of them out of the room and he carried on the tour. “That’s the master bedroom, there are two nurseries on this floor, one right next door to the master bedroom and one opposite. The bathroom is two doors down and the rest of the rooms on this floor are guest rooms or unused except for the huge room at the very back. It goes from one side of the house to the other and that is the room that Max and I designated as the children’s playroom.”

Harry opened the door and his jaw dropped. “Holy shit!” He declared as he looked at the massive room. It was on par with the humongous kitchen, but it was not as wide as the kitchen was, but it was longer, taking up the space where downstairs was part of the larger family room and the other rooms off of the kitchen…two empty rooms that would become studies and a storage closet if he remembered rightly.

Part of the room was segregated off, less than half of the room, but still a huge space. One half of this segregated section was tiled, the other half was padded with what looked like thick foam.

“This will be a wet area for painting, playdough, that sort of thing.” Nasta told them with a smile. “The padded area will be a soft play crèche for the younger babies. Once we finish setting it up, of course.”
“I love it.” Harry said with a smile.

“All of the rooms on the upper floor are going to be bedrooms for our babies, but there is also another bathroom up there and six bedrooms are en suite.”

“Are there enough rooms?” Harry asked critically.

Blaise smiled from the other side of Nasta and Harry had to smile with him.

“There definitely are. There isn’t enough space for a room each I wouldn’t imagine, but some of the bedrooms are large enough to fit four beds. We will have enough room for our children.” Nasta assured him as they went back out into the hallway and then back to the stairs, they made it up to the third floor and Harry looked around, going off to open doors and peer into rooms.

All the rooms were empty, but clean and carpeted. Everything was brand new and it smelt new and it made Harry happy to think that maybe this would be one of his children’s rooms.

“This one has an en suite, and so do five others up on this floor.”

Harry opened the next door to see a perfectly functional bathroom and he grinned as it was almost a carbon copy of the one on the first floor, but it was a little smaller.

“Are the bathrooms all the same?” Blaise asked. “The one on the floor below is the same.”

“They are the same, all the en suites too. I thought the kids could decorate their own when they have the en suites, a simple spell and all the carpets and wallpaper, the tiles, can be changed to any colour they want, or we could even repaper if they want.”

Harry smiled and he looked around. This bathroom wasn’t used, and likely wouldn’t be used often for another several years, but there was still toilet paper, there were still towels and soap, but not much else. Not just yet. In several years though, this bathroom would be a daily mess, he could almost guarantee it.

They went up to the attic, Harry being carried up, which was the same size as the house and completely floorboarded too. A small section was walled off and Nasta said that he had wanted his personal study to be high up, where he could look out of the skylights and see nothing but the sky. and the tops of trees while he did his paperwork for the dragon reserve. Harry wandered around the absolutely massive, empty space and he chuckled.

“What has made you laugh?” Nasta asked curiously as he kept close beside him.

“Nothing.” Harry said softly. “I was just thinking of how big a house we have, you can really see it looking at this space, and I was thinking, perhaps you had made this space so big because you were going to smuggle dragons home and raise them up here like Hagrid did with Norberta, especially as your study is up here too.”

Blaise chuckled then and Nasta shook his head with a smile. “It’s illegal to smuggle them, Caru. I’d end up with a large, very serious fine and a trip to Azkaban for my troubles if I’m caught and if I’m not, I’ll be facing the possibility of having the dragon burn the house down around us. I would never risk you like that. Not you, not Max, Blaise or Draco and not our children. As much as I love dragons, I love you all more.”

Harry smiled at him and he sighed. “I think we need to head back down. The kids will be waking up and Max can’t leave the kitchen because he has Calix, Ave and Eva down there with him.”

Harry was carried down by Nasta, who was making sure that Blaise was alright going down the rather steep steps to the attic. They got down to the nursery floor and Nasta put him down, letting Harry pad into the nursery and immediately coo at the awakening babies.

Tegan was sat up, her little penguin in hand, and she was ‘chatting’ to Regan, who was sat up also. Braiden was just waking up, his eyes still blinking the last remnants of sleep away as he rolled over and hefted himself upright and Leolin was awake and staring up at the mobile above his head. His gold eyes tracing every image and bold colour floating above his head with a critical frown.

Harry veered straight to his Faerie baby and when he poked his head over the cot, Leolin’s eyes flicked to him and after a few moments, his little brain recognised him and he grinned widely, showing off his gummy, pink mouth and tongue.

“Ma!” He lifted his arms with some serious effort and Harry picked him up and kissed him.

“Is he too heavy? Are you alright?” Nasta asked as he had Farren and Regan as Blaise picked up Tegan and Braiden.

“He’s okay. I’m not feeling too bad.” He said with a smile. “Leolin is small and light enough.”
Nasta was beside him every step of the way and Harry could see that it was killing him to watch as he inched down the stairs one at a time, taking it very slowly as he clutched his baby to his chest.

When it got too much for him, not even a quarter way down the stairs, he cursed.

“Are you okay? Hold on, stay there and I’ll come back for you.” Nasta said.

Harry shook his head. “No, what am I even thinking? I’m a fucking Dracken.” He declared and he slowly brought out his wings halfway, as they wouldn’t fully fit in the stairwell. He fluttered them furiously and he hovered all the way down the stairs, to the raucous amusement of Blaise.

Nasta shook his head, but he was smiling widely.

“Why the hell didn’t I think of that before?” Harry demanded. “I can fly! Stairs are no match for me with wings!”

“What’s happened?” Max asked as they came into the hallway leading to the kitchen. He was poking his head out of the room curiously, wondering what the noise was.

“Harry’s realised he can do the stairs by himself.” Blaise said with a grin as he put Tegan and Braiden down on their booster seats and strapped them in securely.

“You’re too injured to walk down the stairs!” Max said aghast. “Why didn’t you call me?” He directed at Nasta.

“I flew down.” Harry said with a proud grin. “I’m a Dracken and I have wings and it didn’t even pull at a single stomach muscle.”

Max smiled softly and slipped his hand around the back of his head and pulled him into a kiss. “I love you.” He declared.

Harry smiled. “If you love me so much, you’ll get me a nice cup of tea.” He said cheekily.

The smile that lit up Max’s face and eyes made Harry feel so much better for having put the smile there and he slid himself carefully into a seat amidst his babies, opposite Farren and Braiden, the latter was peering around, sitting quietly, the former was banging his little plastic spoon noisily on the table, making enough noise for all of his other brothers and sisters.

“I’m working as fast as I can.” Max laughed, bending over Farren and kissing him, getting a little giggle.

Max went back to the oven, and the saucepan of porridge that he was warming on the hob. He had a chopping board filled with partially mashed bananas ready to add to it once it was dished up.

Harry kept Leolin with him, sitting him on the table so that he wasn’t doing more harm to himself and Leolin was just staring at him.

“You are being very creepy, my love.” He said with a smile as he bent forward, slowly, to kiss that tiny mouth.

“Ma.” Leolin replied.

“Here, Cara.” Nasta said, kissing the side of his head as he placed a prepared, cooled bottle on the table. “Max made it up while we were on the tour.”

“Oh, what’s this?” Harry cooed in over exaggeration. “Is this your breakfast? Come here, my sweetness.”

Harry tipped Leolin down into his arms, making sure his son could still see his face when Leolin let out a very unhappy cry at having his line of sight broken, before presenting him with the bottle teat. He smiled as his Faerie baby wrapped his lips around the bulb of the teat and sucked and swallowed slowly, never once breaking eye contact with him, and Harry made sure to stare into those golden eyes so that Leolin knew that he was here and not going anywhere. Leolin always ate more when Harry was the one to feed him and he ate the most when Harry retained eye contact with him while feeding him.

Max served Farren his banana porridge and Harry saw, in his peripheral vision, Farren tucking in happily with his little spoon. Next to him, Braiden was doing the same. Regan was still spoon fed, but Tegan was just managing to manoeuvre the spoon to her own mouth, she was very messy in doing so however, and Calix could not be trusted with his own spoon. He took more interest in flinging the food everywhere rather than eating it, so Nasta was feeding him while Blaise supervised Farren and Braiden and Max fed Regan while keeping an eye on Tegan.

This is what Harry needed. Normal. Something that they always did and with Leolin in his arms, feeding, a cup of his favoured honey tea by his hand and his mates feeding his babies around him, the only thing that was out of place was Blaise’s shaved head and the lingering pain in his belly and lower left leg.

He could try to convince himself that Draco was just upstairs, was in the bathroom showering or maybe even having a lie in, but it didn’t work for long. Draco had never stepped foot in this house, it was devoid of his scent and on some base level, he could sense that, he could smell it and it was abnormal.

Leolin finished suckling and Harry put the unfinished bottle down and he hefted his tiny boy over his shoulder and rubbed at his lower back firmly, waiting until he heard the, rather loud, burp. Harry pulled him back and looked at his son bemusedly.

“Did you hear that? That burp would have rivalled Caesar.” He chuckled.

“I wouldn’t go that far.” Max grinned. “Caesar’s a complete pig, but it was certainly louder than he usually produces.”

“Who’s such a good boy!” Harry cooed, rubbing his nose against Leolin’s tiny button of a nose.

Leolin giggled and babbled wordless noises for a moment before he reached forward and dug teeny nails into Harry’s cheeks and bent forward to kiss him. He couldn’t pucker his lips, so he just mouthed at Harry’s lips as he did with his bottles and it made Harry laugh as he cuddled Leolin to his chest.

“Do you want to sit back in the family room?”

Harry nodded. “Please. More tea too.”

“Did you want breakfast?” Max asked him.

“Can I have a bit of toast, please?”

“You can have anything you want, my love.” Max declared happily.

“In that case you will serve it to me naked, slavered in butter.”
“The toast or Max?” Blaise quipped.

Harry giggled. “Max, obviously.”

“I don’t think licking up that much butter would be good for your health.” Nasta insisted.

Harry’s pupils widened with lust and his grin could only be described as salacious. He let out a dirty chuckle and looked at Max as if picturing him naked and dripping in melted butter.

“Stop it.” Max said lowly, but he was smiling. “Go in the room, I’ll bring you your toast and tea.”

“Nas, a little help please, gorgeous.” Harry insisted, holding an arm out as he tried to stand up using the table and found that he couldn’t get himself up off of the chair.

Nasta smiled softly and bent right down and scooped both him and Leolin up into his arms. He stood with a small grunt that made Harry chuckle, before carrying them next door, into the family room. Harry was settled down comfortably on the large settee with Leolin in his lap and he breathed deeply.

“This new house is home, now.” He said with a smile, looking down at Leolin when he made a soft noise to gain his attention, regaining eye contact with the golden eyes of his Faerie son. “I love it. We can settle down here. We can have as many children as we want. This is home. Not to say that our old home wasn’t home too, it will always hold a special place in my heart, but…”

“But it’s been tainted now.” Max said sadly as he brought in Harry’s toast and tea.

Harry nodded sadly. “I gave birth to all eight of our babies in that house. It will always, always be special to me. But I am glad that we aren’t living there now. It was much too small.”

“I’m having it fixed up.” Max said with a smile. “We can keep it as a holiday home, or to show the kids where they were born, but I definitely understand never living there again. I don’t want to live there either, not after…not after that.”
Harry sighed and nodded. “Here’s to happier memories here in our new home, because I’m warning you now. I am not moving again! This is our forever home.”

“To our forever home, then.” Blaise said, clinking his mug of coffee off of Harry’s tea cup before he sat down next to him.

Harry chuckled and took a sip of his tea.

“To our forever home.” Nasta echoed softly.

Max bent over the back of the settee and he kissed Harry’s head, then Blaise’s. “To our forever home.” He agreed.

Harry sat back and he rested some more. He had a Healer visit in a few days, just to see how he was healing up, and to check his potion dosage too, though Max had that well in hand. He nibbled on his toast, not able to eat much because of his healing stomach, but he did his best and he drank his tea and then he just rested. He smiled at his children, who had all been brought in one by one as soon as they’d finished eating, as they played on the floor around his feet. They had so much space it seemed that they were all deserted on their own personal desert islands.

He looked down at Leolin and he smiled at the little Faerie, which reminded him that he needed to host the Faeries soon, Dain and Kailen would be furious with them for putting Leolin in harm’s way, but Harry just hoped that they were more relieved that it had only been a bit of shock and not anything more serious, though Harry knew exactly how lucky they had been to escape with just shock and not a broken neck.

He sighed tiredly and hefted Leolin more firmly, more securely, to his chest. He kissed his son before he took a drink of tea. The Faeries wouldn’t be happy, he knew that, but the sooner that he got their angry visit over with, the sooner he could go back to normal and put all of the fight in the past. He would be having a heat period soon, in a month now, and he needed to be ready for that. He needed Draco back for that as he refused to have another heat period without a mate after the one and only time that it had happened. He never wanted to feel that burning pain or confusion again, it had been truly frightening and he refused to do it, so Max and Nasta would just have to get over their anger and guilt and Draco would have to do well at his anger management classes, because anything else would hurt him and if it was one thing that he knew by now, it was that his mates would never purposefully want to hurt him. Even Draco had admitted to not ‘seeing’ him when he attacked. Harry didn’t know if that was what had coined the term ‘blind fury’ but he fully believed Draco when he insisted that when he had gutted him, that he hadn’t been truly seeing him. To believe anything else would be to believe that his own dominant mate had attacked him, had tried to kill him, and that idea was so wrong that even his Dracken denied such thoughts.

He looked around him, at his new home, at his mates and his children, and he breathed deeply and he let go of everything. They could get over this now, because he refused to allow anyone to stand in his way, not even his own mates. They would get over this, because he refused to accept that anything else would happen. They would be completely fine, as they always were, because he would ensure it with absolutely everything that he was and if his mates cared a damn for him or his happiness, then they would do exactly the same too.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I am tentatively moving forward with this fic after a small break from it in which I tried to distance myself from all the stress and bad feelings I’ve come to associate with it.
I believe that this has worked for the moment.
Today is our fifth anniversary, so happy fifth birthday, Rise of the Drackens! I thought that this was the perfect day to come back on and hopefully none of you will be insensitive to the fact that I did take a small break to work on some other fics, it was my choice and there’s nothing that you can do about it.

I hope that you’ve all enjoyed this chapter, lovelies. Oh! Before I forget. I posted up the floor plans for the house on my Facebook page, under Star Mass, but I’ve also put it up on the Wikia page too, for those of you who can’t, or just don’t want to add me on Facebook:

http://riseofthedrackens.wikia.com/wiki/House_-_Layout

StarLight Massacre. X
Visitation

Chapter Notes

Last Time

He looked around him, at his new home, at his mates and his children, and he breathed deeply and he let go of everything. They could get over this now, because he refused to allow anyone to stand in his way, not even his own mates. They would get over this, because he refused to accept that anything else would happen. They would be completely fine, as they always were, because he would ensure it with absolutely everything that he was and if his mates cared a damn for him or his happiness, then they would do exactly the same too.

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

Chapter One Hundred-Three - Visitation

Harry’s leg continued to give him no end of trouble as he tried to carry on as normally as he could, but he rapidly came to realise that he just couldn’t, not yet. It was very upsetting and even distressing for him when all he wanted to do was to go back to his normal routine with his children, who were all back in their own normal routines, thanks on the most part to Myron, Richard, Aneirin, Alexander and Kimberly, who had given them no end of help and support.

The days were passing very slowly and as Harry struggled through the endless hours, trying to rest his stomach muscles while his leg throbbed even if he was sat down, he couldn’t help but wish that he would heal up completely already. He’d had a few Healers come to visit him, while he was much more lucid and able to hold an actual conversation with them about how he was truly feeling and what he was struggling with, and he was now on much milder potions, ones that didn’t completely numb his whole body so that he couldn’t feel a thing. The downside to this was, of course, that he could now feel his healing stomach muscles and his sore left leg at all times. Every single little ache and pain, twinge or pinch and though the new potions took away the sharp, stabbing pains that he felt, the constant grinding pain of walking on his leg, or the dull throb of his stomach muscles if he bent down or picked up his children was wearing on him and running down his overall mood.

Harry sighed heavily, pushing those upsetting thoughts away from his mind as he perched on the edge of the wooden bench, supervising his five oldest children as they ran riot in the garden.

He loved the garden. The kitchen led straight out onto a wooden deck that was like another room on itself. There was a massive table at one end surrounded by chairs and there was a set of stairs leading down onto the lawn, alternately there was also a metal slide going down to the lawn too. There was a smaller slide on the grass, along with a baby swing set, a see-saw, a climbing frame, a little wooden play ‘castle’ and a little sand pit. It was in this area that his children were running around, while he was sat on a small wooden bench just to the side of them, smiling and watching them play and screech as they rolled around in the green grass with an assortment of multi-coloured foam footballs.
Kimberly was inside the house with Eva and Ave, watching over them, and Leolin, who had been out on the grass with his brothers and sister, had wanted a feed, so Max had taken him inside. Nasta had vanished into the treeline some three hours before and he hadn’t come back yet, but he had said that he’d be some time, so Harry wasn’t worried, Nasta needed his own time to calm down too and sort out his thoughts and feelings.

Blaise, who had been struggling with his memory and headaches for the last few days, had gone for a lie down after he’d developed a bad headache that sent shooting pains through his skull. He still did not remember anything of the fight or what had happened to him still, which he insisted was a blessing. Blaise didn’t want to remember what had happened.

“How are they doing?” Myron asked, coming to sit beside him and pulling him in to a hug.

Harry shifted over, trying not to move any muscles in his left leg or his stomach, and he rested on Myron’s soft bulk.

“They’re really enjoying themselves.” Harry said with a smile. “Tegan was the bravest, my little warrior. She went down the slide first. Calix had a look, he even climbed the steps too, but he climbed back down.” Harry laughed.

“Tegan is most definitely the most independent of the five of them.” Myron nodded as he looked proudly at Tegan, who was up on her feet, babbling to Regan and trying to heft him up. Regan who was trying to stand up, bless him, just couldn’t keep his balance and he toppled back over onto his nappy covered bum.

Farren wasn’t even trying to stand up or move, he was sat in the grass, quite happily, and he was just watching his brothers and sister around him. Calix was absolutely everywhere, crawling as fast as he could and imbedding the grass stains deeply into the knees of his little trousers.

Braiden was the one that Harry was watching the most though, as he was firmly on his feet, running as fast as he could, falling to his knees sometimes, but picking himself up again without a murmur of complaint. He was ‘kicking’ a football around and screeching in such utter delight that it brought a smile to Harry’s face.

Max brought Leolin back out, because he was crying and demanding ‘Ma’ over and over to a stressed looking Max.

“Pass him here.” Harry sighed as Max stepped down the several steps to the lawn and approached the bench that Harry was sat on.

Harry took Leolin onto his lap and all he had to do to stop the tears was coo at him. Leolin recognised his voice after a moment or two and he stopped crying to look up at him. He sniffled as gold eyes caught green.

“Ma.” He warbled, reaching out his tiny hands to grip at Harry’s neck with his little nails, almost clawing at him.

Harry pulled him in close to his body, to lessen the pressure of being gripped at by those nails and he hissed.

“Tonight.” He said seriously. “Tonight, after his bath, we cut his damn nails!”

Max chuckled and he helped to remove the little fingers from his neck and he rubbed the tiny hands with his thumbs.

Harry watched as Leolin yawned and his eyes immediately fell to half-mast. Harry kissed him and that sent Leolin into full sleep mode as his eyes closed and he shuffled his little body, getting comfortable in Harry’s arms, before he started drifting off.

Harry looked back up at his five toddlers, Tegan having another go on the slide, Regan was playing with Farren, Calix was crawling under the slide, squeezing his body through the gap and Braiden was staring up at the climbing frame curiously as he held on tightly to the bottom bar. Even as he watched him Braiden took his first step up it and he sucked in a deep breath.

“Max, go and stand by him in case he falls.” He said quietly, not wanting to startle Braiden and cause him to actually fall, nor wake up Leolin in his arms.

Max looked at him, then to where he was looking. “Oh shit.” He cursed and he went to support Braiden, who had climbed another two rungs of the climbing frame by the time that Max got to him.

Max didn’t stop Braiden or his progress, but he did hover over him, his hands ready to snatch the, not quite two year old, boy from the air if he slipped or fell.

The climbing frame wasn’t even that high, it was four metal bars high, that came just over Max’s waist in height, and Harry watched, his heart in his throat, but also welling up with pride, as Braiden reached the top, looked around him, looked at Max, before he swung himself over the top and climbed down the other side, one slow, careful step at a time.

He reached the grass without needing any help and he laughed, before he ran off to the slide and it was like he was on a sugar rush as he ran straight to the slide and climbed the steps with clumsy feet and he slid down it and he hardly waited until he’d hit the grass before he was up and going down the slide again, laughing.
“That was so frightening, but I’m so proud of him.” Harry voiced his feelings as he grinned. “He’s getting so much stronger, so much bigger.”

Max came to him and kissed him hard. “I love you.”

“I love you too.” Harry declared. “I can’t believe that he’ll be two in two months.”

“These last years with you have been amazing, Harry.”

“Not always.” Harry said sadly.

Max sighed. “No, not always, but there has always been love.”

Harry smiled and he nodded. “Yes. You wouldn’t be here if there was no love.”

“Nas…Nasta and I have been talking a lot.”

“I had noticed. Blaise is very paranoid you know. He thinks that you’re talking about him and he doesn’t like it.”

“It’s not about Blaise, but…well, Draco’s been doing really well in his classes and, taking in what you said to us that morning a week ago, Nasta believes that it’ll be a good idea to reward him, as such, for his progress with a short visit to you and Blaise.”

Harry paid close attention to Max’s words, and his body language. He wasn’t happy with the idea, Harry could tell. He had stressed that it was Nasta’s idea, that Nasta had been the one behind everything and from the grimace on his face that he was trying to hide, Harry knew that Max did not share the same thoughts as Nasta, but he was trying. He really had been trying for the last week to overcome his feelings of guilt, but it was not going to be easy, and it would not come quickly.

Harry raised a hand and touched Max’s face, leading him into a soft kiss with his hand.

“Thank you for trying.” He acknowledged gently, smiling. Max needed positive reinforcement too and Harry saw just how much it meant to his biggest mate to have his attempts recognised when he saw a small flash of emotion before Max guarded his expressions.

“I’m… I’m going to go and start on lunch.” Max said as he stood up, taking a sleeping Leolin back into the house with him.

“He’ll come around.” Myron insisted, throwing his arm back around Harry and hugging him. “He always was an emotionally ruled boy. He was prone to fits because he couldn’t handle his own anger or grief, but when he was happy, he was the happiest boy you could ever think to meet.”

“I went to see Draco.” Harry admitted softly. “The day after I got home.”

“I had suspected as much. You were so angry when you were refused to see him. I saw the effort it took you to hold your tongue, to hold your words back. The next day that anger was gone, washed away and I knew then that you had found a way to go and see him, or at the very least that you’d spoken to him.”

Harry nodded, feeling a mite happier now that he’d told his ‘secret’ to someone. “I had to see him. I had to let him know what he was risking if he didn’t go to, or failed, these classes. I had to remind him of how I had fought so hard to even keep him as a mate in the first place after my Dracken had dismissed him. I told him that it was now his turn to fight for me, to fight for his family.”

“Then it is no wonder that he is doing remarkably well with these private lessons.” Myron said approvingly.

Harry smiled, unexplainably proud that Draco was doing really well. It would take longer than a week, naturally, but he was trying so hard and that meant the world to him. His older mates had taken notice too, if they were thinking of letting Draco have contact with him and Blaise again.

“Let’s get these kids back inside. Their lunches will be ready soon, Max always does something quick for lunch.” Harry said as he stood carefully, with help from Myron’s supportive hands, and he went to round up his kids.

“Mammy, up.” Tegan demanded and Harry endured the pain of bending down onto his good knee, holding her tight, and then forcing himself to stand back up, wobbling only slightly.
“Braiden.” He called out, holding his hand towards his oldest child, indicating for him to take it, which he hurried over to do so.

Harry took a deep breath and started climbing the several steps to the decking, looking to Braiden too as he held his hand and watched proudly as his little boy conquered the steps easily, putting both of his little feet on the same step before tackling the next one.

Every step was agony, but he endured it. It was almost time for him to take another potion and then he could have half an hour, maybe an hour, of being completely pain free before the aches started to creep back in.

When they reached the decking, Braiden slipped his hand free and he clapped happily at his own achievement before he toddled of into the kitchen. Harry followed him with a smile as he carried Tegan.

“Are you okay?” Max asked, from where he was cooking, his dark green apron tied around his waist.

“I’ll be better as soon as I take that potion.” He said, shaking his head. “But at least I’m upright and somewhat mobile.” He chuckled as he put Tegan down on her booster seat and strapped her in before ‘encouraging’ Braiden to climb up into his own so that he didn’t have to bend down and lift him. “Who’s a good boy?” He cooed as Braiden sat himself in his booster seat. “Did you climb all the way up here by yourself, you’re getting so big!”

“Yeah.” Braiden answered, giggling happily at the praise as he allowed Harry to strap him in.

Harry scooted them both closer to the table, so that they could reach and he sighed happily.

“Is there anything that you need help with?” He asked, even though he really just wanted to sit down.

“Sit down before you fall down, my love.” Max insisted, seeing right through him.

Harry chuckled and he did just that, sitting himself next to Braiden as Myron came in through the back door and easily bent down and hefted up Farren, sitting him in his booster seat before doing the same to Regan and Calix. Harry envied his ease of movement, when he himself couldn’t even sit down or stand up by himself without careful consideration and a snail’s pace.

Footsteps behind him had him turning his head, only to receive a kiss to the mouth from Blaise.
“How is your head?” He asked softly.

“How is your head?” He asked softly.

“Better.” Blaise smiled, sitting next to him. “I’m still having trouble with memory though, I forgot where I was again.”

“Healer Odell said that that could happen when we asked him about it.” Harry nodded easily. “It’s because the house is new.”

“Healer Odell said that that could happen when we asked him about it.” Harry nodded easily. “It’s because the house is new.”

“Daddy!” Braiden called out, reaching out for Blaise.

“Daddy!” Braiden called out, reaching out for Blaise.

“Hello Farren… Calix…” Blaise frowned, even as his hand held Braiden’s. “I’ve drawn a blank.” He said sadly.

“Hello Farren… Calix…” Blaise frowned, even as his hand held Braiden’s. “I’ve drawn a blank.” He said sadly.

“Braiden.” Harry reminded him gently.

“Braiden.” Harry reminded him gently.

“Braiden.” Blaise repeated and he smiled for their son, but this was now becoming a regular occurrence. Blaise muddled up all of the names of those around him and he went through several names before he found the right one, or, as he had just shown, he drew a complete blank entirely.

“Braiden.” Blaise repeated and he smiled for their son, but this was now becoming a regular occurrence. Blaise muddled up all of the names of those around him and he went through several names before he found the right one, or, as he had just shown, he drew a complete blank entirely.

Harry ignored Max’s pained, upset expression and he instead smiled at Blaise and reassured him that everything was fine. The neurological Healer, Healer Odell, had insisted that this was normal, that it was the sign of a healing mind after the type of injury that Blaise had received and he insisted that it was a good sign. A bad sign, he had told them, was actually losing information instead of just muddling it up. If Blaise ever showed signs of forgetting a day, forgetting who any of them were or who he was, then they were to immediately rush him to the hospital. Blaise did forget sometimes where he was, especially if he fell asleep somewhere and he was moved into a different room. They had stopped doing that as soon as they realised exactly how distressing to Blaise it was and they realised that they were not helping his recovery at all, but rather the opposite.

Farren started banging his spoon against the table and Blaise winced, his long, slim fingers going to his temple.

Farren started banging his spoon against the table and Blaise winced, his long, slim fingers going to his temple.

“Farren, sweetness, don’t do that, please.” Harry said calmly.

“Farren, sweetness, don’t do that, please.” Harry said calmly.

Farren frowned at him, looked at his spoon and then he started banging it again.

Farren frowned at him, looked at his spoon and then he started banging it again.
“Farren.” Harry said more sternly. “I’ve said no.”

Harry’s resolve was tested when Farren’s bottom lip trembled, ever so slightly, but he remained firm, even when Farren dropped his spoon and started crying.

Harry stood up using the table and he unstrapped Farren and took him next door, to the family room, so that Blaise wouldn’t get another headache.

He fell down onto the settee with Farren in his lap and he held his second son as he had a tantrum on his lap. He remained quiet all through Farren’s screaming fit, and once he was all cried out, Harry hugged him close and murmured reassurances to him, kissing him and wiping his eyes dry.

Once calm, Harry took him back into the kitchen, ignoring the pain in his own body, as he got Farren strapped back in.

“Perhaps we could put the cutlery down just before their plates so that they don’t come to see them as toys to play with while they’re waiting?” He suggested mildly as Max plated up the kids lunch.

Max nodded. “I think that’ll be a good idea. How are you feeling?”

“Worse than I did ten minutes ago.” He replied truthfully.

“Just sit and rest.” Max said worriedly as he put down a couple of plates of food for the kids.

Harry watched as his children ate their lunches, Farren a little more subdued in his enthusiasm than usual, but they were all eating and Harry sighed, accepting the cup of tea handed to him gratefully. He was given a small sandwich, as was Blaise, who had also been given a mug of his most favourite coffee.

Harry ate, not because he wanted to, but because he knew that the potion he had to take couldn’t be taken on an empty stomach and his desire for pain relief far outweighed his reluctance to eat anything.

“Are you still having trouble eating?” Max asked fretfully.

“I know you’re a feeder, Max, but calm yourself.” Harry insisted as he poked at his nibbled sandwich. “As you are very fond of pointing out, my guts were trailing along the floor a week ago. I am having a bit of difficulty managing a lot of food in one go. Soups and stews are fine, but anything solid, like this, take a bit more time to eat.” Harry said prodding viciously at the small sandwich.

“You need to eat roughly half to take your potion.” Max said, biting his lip.

“Don’t remind me.” Harry said unhappily as he took another small bite before putting the sandwich back down, waiting for his healing belly to accept the small morsel before he took another one.

If he ate too much in one go, the pain was unimaginable as he got terrible stomach cramps that wouldn’t go away and more often than not, his stomach rejected what he’d eaten and it came straight back up…that always made his belly feel even worse. So he had learnt to take small bites and to wait between each bite to make absolutely sure that his stomach would accept the food before he took another one.

It took him almost half an hour to eat half a tiny sandwich and he happily knocked back the potion in one go. He drained his tea to take away the taste, but he had no appetite to finish the remaining portion of sandwich. He pushed the plate away just as Nasta walked in through the back door.

“Nasta!” He called out happily, holding his arms out for a hug, which made his oldest mate smile happily as he veered to him and embraced him tightly.

“Are you well?” Nasta asked him gently.

Harry nodded. “I’ve just had my potion, so I’ll be fine for the next half hour, hopefully an hour though.”

Nasta kissed his cheek and turned to Blaise, hugging him and kissing his cheek too before he went to Max and did the same.

“Did you finish up your soul searching?” Max asked.

Nasta snorted in amusement, but he nodded. “Yes, I did.”

Nasta went and kissed every one of their children, even the messy Calix, before he sat on Blaise’s other side and kicked off his trainers.

Harry stood up and tested himself, bending, not quite in half, but he did bend at the waist…there wasn’t a hint of pain.

“Oh that’s so much better.” He groaned.

“Don’t push yourself.” Nasta warned him as he accepted a cup of green tea from Max.

“I won’t.” He promised as he made his escape and he went to the smaller living room, where Kimberly was sitting with his twin daughters.

“Harry, how are you feeling?” She asked him with a smile.

“For the moment, great.” He replied with a smile of his own. “How are my girls?”

“Just fine.” Kimberly told him, indicating the one twin, Ave, who was asleep on the settee beside her, and then to Eva, in her arms, who was just drifting off. “They’re getting so big now.”

Harry nodded. “I know. I can’t believe that I’ll be having another heat period soon. I could have another baby by the New Year.”

“It’s best not to dwell on such things, sweetie.” Kimberly told him kindly. “I remember getting half way through my children, I had twelve of them, my twins Sandor and Alaric had just been born on top of the quadruplets, and I had more on the way, thankfully just Philip, and I remember hoping for a break, I begrudged that my children were coming so fast and I remember willing it all to slow down…then…it did slow down, then it stopped and I was so devastated. I felt awful for having wished for no more children and it hurt my heart. Then along came our little boy, Myron.”

Harry aborted a laugh at hearing Myron described as a little boy, as Myron was not little in the slightest, but he covered himself and remembered that Myron was Kimberley and Alexander’s youngest son. He would be their little boy for as long as they lived. He would feel the same about his own children when they were grown too, he was sure of it.

He sighed and looked at Eva and Ave, just four months old and he smiled gently at them.

“I would never want to stop having children, but…at the same time I can’t help but wish my heat cycle was every year or two.”
Kimberly shared an understanding look with him and Harry had never felt so grateful to have another submissive, an older submissive, to talk to about these things. His mates, as dominants, just didn’t understand, Myron, Richard and Aneirin didn’t understand, but Kimberly, Kimberly understood that he wasn’t complaining about his children, that he wasn’t complaining about having more, she understood that he was just a little apprehensive, that he wanted his children to come a little further apart than they currently were.

“I knew a lucky bitch who had a heat cycle every five years. I could have clawed her eyes out after the first decade.”

Harry was startled into laughing, hard. He wiped his eyes free from the tears and checked to make sure that his girls hadn’t woken up at the noise.

“The only problem was, every five years she had quadruplets or quintuplets. She had septuplets one year and I remember thinking that it served her right for having a breeding cycle that was five years apart.”

Harry chuckled and shook his head. “Was it normal to have heat cycles so far apart?”

“Back then, yes, it was more common. Mine was every eight months, but I look to submissives today, having cycles that are only a few months apart, like yourself, and I wince with sympathy for you. It’s to do with the declining numbers of Drackens, I’m sure. We’re having more human children and less Dracken children, so our numbers are still falling, not climbing and the Drackens in us sense that and they are trying to do what they can to rectify it.”

“I don’t see it myself. I have eight children and four of them are Drackens, that’s half. Then there’s Leolin, so over half of my children have creature blood. Only three of them, Regan, Calix and Tegan, are human and Regan and Tegan are Faerie blood carriers.”

“Then perhaps it is your generation that will solve the crisis.” Kimberly pointed out. “Perhaps our species has evolved enough now to finally rectify our declining numbers. If so you may not have that many children, but a higher percentage of them will be Drackens.”

Harry smiled and touched his little Dracken girl in Kimberly’s lap.

“I’m not sure how I feel about having ‘less’ children, but as long as everyone is happy, I’ll be “Happy.”

“There you are.” Max said as he poked his head into the room. “Marianna will be around soon, so don’t get startled.”

Harry nodded, remembering the panic and the fear that he’d felt, screaming out a loud distress call, when Marianna had torn through the front door looking for Blaise three days ago now.

He had been so frightened that he’d almost torn his stomach open again moving around, trying to protect himself. Thankfully all of the kids had been upstairs in bed so he hadn’t made things worse by collecting them all up in his arms and shielding them. He’d just tried to crawl up the stairs to block the path of the ‘threat’ by putting himself in the way and the agony of that had been blinding.

He’d had to take one of his incredibly strong potions to control the pain and he’d been out of it for the rest of the night. He’d been filled in though on how Marianna had ‘felt’ that her child needed her as soon as her heat period had finished. She hadn’t even taken a moment to bathe, or to clothe herself before flying to them, following her scent link to her son. She had torn through their new house, naked and pissed, looking for Blaise and she had been aggressive and hostile to everyone in her way. Especially as Harry’s distress call had brought all dominant members of the family running, thinking that perhaps another fight had broken out.

Nasta had thrown her out and barred her entrance to their home in his anger at her for what she’d done to Harry, frightening him and sending him into such movements that he’d almost put himself back in the Draken Healing Halls. Today, she was calmer, she was going to be bathed and dressed and she wouldn’t act like an enraged submissive protecting her child with the body and fighting instinct of the dominant that she was. Harry was grateful for that, he thought to himself, as he laid a hand over his belly, feeling a phantom pain of what had been an agonising level of activity.

“Hey, do you need a potion, are you okay?” Max asked, coming to him after seeing him grimace and seeing his hand over his belly.

“No. I’ve taken my potion already, Max.” Harry insisted, shaking his head. “I was just remembering Marianna’s first visit. That really hurt.”

“I could have killed her myself for that.” Max said seriously, sitting next to him and pulling him into a hug.

“I’ll just leave you boys be.” Kimberly said with a gentle, genial smile as she placed Eva next to Ave, tucked them in and then kissed Harry and Max on the forehead. “You boys be kind and good to one another.”
“We will.” Harry agreed.

“Of course, Nana.” Max smiled.

Kimberly chuckled softly before she went through the floo, leaving them alone for a bit while she went and caught up with her mate and husband, Alexander.

Harry turned and grinned at Max, leaning in for a proper kiss. Max pulled him, gently and carefully, onto his lap and manoeuvred him into the perfect position that would put as little pressure on his belly as possible. It came almost as second nature to his mates now to sit him like this if they wanted a cuddle because Harry could sit like this all day, supported upright and with little pressure on his belly or his healing leg.

Max peppered his face with sweet butterfly kisses that made Harry laugh. Max nuzzled at his face and neck and he even snuffled into his hair and it made Harry laugh harder as he looped his arms around Max’s neck and stroked his fingers through the soft hair at the nape of Max’s neck. It was still curly as Max still hadn’t cut it…the curls were getting more defined and his biggest mate was now looking more like a creepy, roided up twelve year old cherub with his curly brown hair. Max was right, he really did look better with short hair, but Harry would never say as much as he twirled his fingers around the curls while they were there. Perhaps it was because he had only known Max with short hair, but he looked wrong with longer, curly hair and though he had looked sweet and utterly adorable as a child with those curls, they didn’t fit the man that he’d become. He couldn’t wait to see their own children with those same curls, though.

Max nipped over his neck and Harry sighed softly, feeling a stirring of arousal and he buried his own face into Max’s strong neck and kissed and licked at the tanned skin.

“I meant to relax you, not stir you up.”

“It’s too late for that now, my love. You have to deal with what you’ve created.” Harry purred.

“Absolutely not.” Nasta’s stern voice came from the doorway and Harry groaned. “It’s too dangerous, especially after Marianna’s last visit. Come here.”

Nasta picked Harry up gently and he ignored Harry’s obvious arousal pressing into his belly, he carried him through to the family room next door via the open double doors.

“Max, get those girls up to the bedroom.” He ordered and Max grumbled, his own arousal was visible in his jeans as he stood up. He tried to adjust himself to make it seem less obscene, but the outline of him was still bulging out his jeans.
Harry laughed as he watched Max adjust himself again, squeezing the length of his bulge and trying to hide himself and failing again as he still showed just as obviously. He grunted, threw his head back in disbelief, and then gave it up as impossible and he was forced to leave it, turning and picking up their two daughters instead to take them up to the master bedroom so that they could sleep in peace without any disturbances.

Harry was gently lowered to the settee and he smiled as he lay back and put his head in Blaise’s lap. Blaise who immediately sunk his long, slender fingers into his messy hair and tugged gently, caressing his scalp and making him groan.

“That’s not going to make my erection go away.” He declared with a smirk.

“That’s enough.” Myron growled.

Harry’s eyes snapped open and he turned to look at Myron on the other settee.

“Damn, I didn’t realise you were here.” He said with an unrepentant grin. “Where’s Richard? He would have appreciated my oversharing.”

Myron smirked at the mention of his mate and he shook his head in exasperation.

“He’ll be here soon. He’s visiting Ashleigh.”

“How is she doing?” Harry asked sincerely.

“Very well. We should have done this decades ago and that fault lies solely with me as I ignored the signs of her pain and distress when I should have forced her to go to therapy. She's more like the woman that I mated to again. The change is unbelievable.” Myron said happily, overjoyed that Harry was genuinely interested in his submissive mate, even after their slip up.

“I’m so glad that she’s doing so well.” Harry said with a smile.

Myron beamed like a fool, just like Max did when Harry did something that made him proud and happy, and it brought an answering smile from Harry. Myron had been looking old and tired lately, he was too stressed, too much bad was happening around him, he had little to no control of everything that was happening and he felt useless as he couldn’t help, but that simple smile took a decade off of his lined face and his shoulders rose a little, unburdened a little of the massive weight pressing down on them.

Harry felt awful for adding to that burden…as it did seem to be him and his mateship that was causing the majority of the problems, from his fight with Ashleigh and his insistence that she was not allowed near him or his children, the almost fatal fight that had destroyed their home and quite possibly their mateship too. Everything seemed to go wrong around him, swinging from one extreme to the next. He supposed it was only natural that they would clash from time to time, there were five of them…five full grown adult Drackens who all had their own thoughts, feelings, opinions and ways of dealing with different things, but this…surely this wasn’t normal, even with five of them. This anger, this aggression was tearing them apart, and it truly would be fatal if they didn’t sort it out.

Marianna poked her head through the door and she smiled a little sheepishly.

“May I come in?” She asked huskily.

“Of course.” Nasta invited graciously.

Marianna immediately sat next to Blaise and pulled him into a crushing hug while she sniffed at him, as she had done on her first visit, though she’d been less gentle and a lot more feral the last time.

“Hello, Marianna.” Max greeted as he came into the family room. His, rather large, problem had been dealt with and Harry sent him a naughty grin from Blaise’s lap as he vividly imagined all of the ways that Max could have dealt with such a problem by himself, his imaginings getting more and more detailed and lewd as his mind provided graphic images of Max ‘dealing with’ his problem in increasingly pornographic ways.

“Stop it.” Nasta told him seriously. “I can see what you’re doing.”

“What’s he doing now?” Myron sighed wearily.

“I’m trying to sit up.” Harry lied. “I’ll stop now.” He said with a saucy wink at Max.

“You had better.” Myron warned him. “You are in no fit state to be moving around like you are.”

“I’m getting much better.” Harry said happily. “It’s just my leg really that’s stopping me from walking around.”

“How are you feeling today, darling?” Marianna asked.

It took Harry several moments to realise that Marianna was speaking to him and not to Blaise.

“I’m actually alright today.” He said with a smile. “We had some outside time with the kids, Leolin was overjoyed to touch the grass, then they had lunch and I had a very lovely, hilarious talk with Kimberly as she told me how she wanted to gouge out the eyes of a submissive who she only identified to me as ‘lucky bitch’ who had a five year breeding cycle.”

“Harry!” Myron chastised.

“What? It was your Mother who said it! I was just quoting her, if you want to have a go at anyone, it should be her!” Harry pouted.

Max chuckled and he came to kiss him. His blue eyes were dark and wide and he was still aroused. Harry wondered then if he hadn’t dealt with himself, but had just…tied himself down. That made his breath catch in his throat and his imagination went haywire.

Max sat by his feet and pulled them onto his lap and he used both of his hands to massage Harry’s feet and, carefully, his calves. Harry moaned happily as the tight muscles of his healing leg were carefully, very gently, massaged to aid the healing.

“Thank you. You’re a god.” He said with a happy smile and his eyes closed. “You’re both gods.” He amended as Blaise went back to caressing his scalp and running his fingers through his hair.

Leolin took that moment to wake up and Harry heard him snuffling in upset as Harry’s face wasn’t immediately in his line of sight.

“Ma! Ma!” Leolin sobbed and then he screeched and Blaise cursed and moved a hand to his head.

Harry got up, ignoring his own pain, and he hurried to the bassinet, elbowing Nasta out of the way with a pointy, bony elbow, and he picked up Leolin and cradled him tightly, in a position where Leolin could easily see his face.
He looked at the pile of sleeping children that Nasta and Myron had settled down after their lunches and none of them woke up, even though Calix snuffled himself and Tegan stirred before settling back down.

“What’s the matter?” Harry said softly, soothingly.

His voice broke through Leolin’s little crying fit and he stopped for a moment, cracking open wet, gold eyes. Harry knew that if Leolin had seen anyone other than him in his line of sight at that moment, that crying fit would have worked up to a complete meltdown, but it was his green eyes that Leolin saw first and he sniffled and snuffled, but he settled down.

“Are you alright, my sweet child?” Marianna asked Blaise, holding him as he cradled his head in his hands.

“I’ll be fine, Mother. It’s just a headache.” Blaise complained.

“I can’t believe Draco has done such a thing. It’s a good thing that you won’t tell me where you’re keeping him.”

“Enough of that.” Harry insisted sharply. “Draco is still our mate and I will not stand to hear him threatened.”

“But it is fine that he killed my child, is it? That he almost killed you and your children?” Marianna snarled. “He should already be dead for what he has done, if you boys weren’t so soft and had actually done as was warranted then I wouldn’t have need to step in and…”

“How dare you!” Harry hissed. “How dare you try and interfere with my mateship! It is not your place to decide what happens with my mateship!”

“Harry is right.” Myron said sternly. “It’s not your place to step in and deal with anything. They have decided to move past what has happened. They are going to forgive Draco and…”

“Yes.” He said simply. “I love him and he is trying. He is in anger management classes and he is doing much better now…”

“I don’t care what classes he’s taking! I won’t have him near my son!”

“That isn’t your decision to make.” Nasta said with narrowed eyes. “It is Blaise’s decision and his alone. He’s a grown man and he can decide for himself if he wants to forgive Draco or not.”

Marianna looked to her son, still massaging his temples slowly.

“He isn’t in the right mind to…”

“Do not insult his intelligence or his own thoughts and feelings.” Harry snapped. “He knows what he wants and he doesn’t need you, or anyone else for that matter, trying to tell him what he wants or what he should be doing or feeling. Nasta’s right, he’s a grown man who is capable of thinking and doing things for himself.”

Blaise smiled at him, giving him a relieved, grateful look that had Harry straightening his back, ready to take that weight to support his mate if it was needed. He would defend all of his mates to the back teeth if they needed him to.

“Harry is right, Mother. I am perfectly able to make my own decisions and I am happy to allow Draco the chance to prove that he is able to overcome this. If I had been in his place I would have at least wanted to know that my mates were willing to give me a chance to prove that I was willing to be better for them. Draco deserves to have that same chance.”

“He killed you, Blaise!”

“So people keep telling me but I don’t care!” Blaise roared, getting angry himself now. “It was an accident. He did not set out to kill any of us! If I had seen the punch coming and ducked out of the way in time then it might have been me who had killed him in that fight and I might be the one disgraced and vilified and it could be Narcissa threatening to kill me. Draco deserves the same respect and chances that we all do. Why should he be the only one not given the same chance as everyone else?”

“Calm down or your head will start throbbing again.” Max soothed, shifting over, closer to Blaise so that he could sit next to him and he started running those large, thick fingers over his stubbly head, moving the skin of his scalp in a soothing way that rose goosebumps on Blaise’s arms and neck.

Harry hushed Leolin and rocked him, looking into those golden eyes and a small hand rose and gripped at his cheek, those teeny nails biting in.

“Oh, fuck!” Harry cursed, his eyes watering. “We are cutting his fucking nails!” He insisted for the seventh time that day.

Nasta chuckled. “Pass him here, I’ll bite them down now. Find the file though or his nails will be twice as bad and they’ll break the skin, his own and ours.”

Blaise was far too content to snuggle up to Max’s bulk and Max was far too busy massaging Blaise’s head. Nasta now had a squirming Leolin, already nibbling the teeny, tiny fingernails. Harry went to find the baby grooming box, but he realised quickly that this was a new home and he had no clue where the grooming box was kept.

He went back into the family room. “Where is the grooming box? I don’t even know where to start looking.” He asked.

“Oh, sorry, love. It’s in the downstairs bathroom, in the cupboard.” Max told him as he looked up from Blaise, but he never stopped his head massage.

Harry nodded and he went to the bathroom and went digging in all the cupboards until he found their grooming box, buried right at the back behind baby shampoo and bubble bath. He took it back into the family room and placed it down, opening it and finding the tiny baby nail file. He handed it over to Nasta and he picked up Leolin’s other hand, got eye contact with his son so that he would settle more and he started biting the nails on Leolin’s other hand.

Leolin giggled and wriggled on Nasta’s lap as he was groomed. Harry left Nasta to file down the shortened nails while he picked up a soft bristled brush and he gently brushed Leolin’s thickening, black hair, which made Leolin giggle more as he watched Harry’s face as he brushed his hair.

“You are getting more and more adorable as the weeks pass.” Harry told him. “Yes you are.”

“He’s certainly getting a little more mobile.” Nasta smiled as he splayed his hand on Leolin’s little belly to keep him still while he filed down and smoothed his ragged nails.
Harry finished brushing his hair and he instead started pulling faces at Leolin, stroking his, still rather thin, cheeks and that gummy mouth opened and he laughed the hardest that he had ever laughed in his little life. It made Harry laugh with him.

“He’s laughing so well.” Marianna said, trying to change the subject after the little dispute.

“He’s come on so well.” Harry said, pulling more faces at Leolin. “I almost can’t recognise him from his newborn self.”

Nasta finished filing down his nails and Harry picked Leolin up. The first thing that his little Faerie baby did was clench his fingers back into Harry’s cheeks.

“Is that better?” Nasta asked with a smirk.

“Not really, but it doesn’t feel like he’s gouging my skin with a razor blade anymore.” Harry laughed as he shuffled himself on his arse and spread his legs comfortably, making room for his injured left leg.

Harry placed Leolin down on his own bum and he carefully, slowly took his hands away. Leolin sat there for a heartbeat, and then two, before he slowly tilted to the side and then rapidly lost his balance and tipped completely over.

Harry caught him and soothed him gently, letting Leolin see that he was safe, kissing his face and running a hand over his back before Harry sat Leolin back down and then used his own legs to support Leolin upright.

“He’s not ready to sit unaided yet. He still hasn’t got his balance.” Harry sighed as he wrapped his hands around his son and let him play with his fingers.

Draco was not mentioned again while Marianna visited with Blaise, who endured her overprotective smothering in silence.

It was awkward, but Harry ignored it all as he focused on Leolin, spending some quality time with him as, with the rowdier, more active kids, they usually took all the attention and Leolin was usually left with his mobile to entertain him. He always got so enraptured with it that sometimes, when they picked him up, it took him a moment or two to realise that he’d actually been picked up and moved away from it.
Marianna was still thrumming with anger, but Blaise, still snuggling with Max, wouldn’t allow her to change his mind or to ruin his peaceful time with his family.

Marianna however wanted to rant, she wanted to tear into Draco for what he’d done and she was only getting angrier the longer they remained calm and happy. In her opinion they should have risen up and killed Draco for what he’d done to her son, and Harry would have felt exactly the same if it was his child who’d been involved, but like this was up to him and his mates to sort out, so it would fall to his own child to sort out such an issue for themselves too. It wouldn’t be his place to step in and interfere in such a way with his children’s mateships. As such he understood Marianna’s anger and worry, but he would not allow it to influence him or his decisions. Draco would be given the chance to make this right first, before he was completely cut off from them.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

They’d said goodbye to Marianna after the kids had all had their dinner and had been through their bath times, and not a moment too soon either as not several minutes later, Lucius escorted Draco through the floo.

It was the fifth of June…Draco’s nineteenth birthday. According to Lucius, who had floo called Nasta to finalise the plans and to make sure that it was all still going ahead, Draco had refused to celebrate at all. Draco hadn’t been told that he was coming to see them today and his face when he saw them said it all really as he aborted an automatic move to come to them and bit hard into his bottom lip.

Harry stood first and he went to Draco, hugging him tight and nuzzling his face into Draco’s robes.

“Happy birthday.” He said softly.

Draco held him tightly to himself and Harry felt two spots of water drop onto his head…tears. Draco was crying.

Harry broke away from the hug, separating them a bit, and he cupped Draco’s face in his hands and pulled him down for a kiss.

“Are you okay?” Blaise asked from above him. Harry tipped his head back and saw that Blaise was stood just behind him.

Draco just nodded, unable to speak as he reached out for Blaise, but he didn’t touch him, allowing Blaise to make up his own mind and that made Blaise smile as he went to Draco, who was just slightly taller, and he hugged him tightly.
“I’ve missed you. The house just isn’t the same without your patented brand of specialised wit.” Blaise told him with a smile.

“I’m not sure if I’m offended or not.” Draco said with a weak smile.

“Let’s show you around.” Nasta said calmly, blandly. He was exercising a steel control over himself, but he and Max had been preparing for this for a few days and thus they were behaving, as was Draco, who was the only one who hadn’t known about this little visit.

Draco looked around then and a frown marred his face a little.

“The old house was ruined.” Harry said softly. “It was structurally dangerous and the kids couldn’t stay there. Did you know that Nasta planned and had this house built especially for us?” He said excitedly, giving Nasta a loving look.

“No, I had no idea.”

“Only Max and I knew, it was going to be a surprise to our mateship after Harry finished with the court case.”

“How…how is that going?” Draco asked him.

Harry shook his head. “I haven’t been back yet. Richard has been carrying on without me for now. It wasn’t what I wanted, but there’s little that I can do about it. Apparently, now that I’m not there, they’ve gotten more confidence and they’re ripping me apart and apparently my not being there is very ‘telling’ towards my lies and guilt.”

“I’m sorry, this isn’t going to ruin the case, is it?” Draco asked unsurely.

Harry shook his head. “No, of course not. Richard is very able to handle them and he is handling them very well. He’s calling them all sorts because they’re picking on me due to my ‘accident’ and he is assuring them that I’ll be back soon enough, when I’m a bit stronger.”

“Are you well enough to go back?” Draco asked worriedly.
Harry smiled and nodded. “Yes. I’m getting better by the day now. I’m taking some blood daily too, in the night just before I go to sleep. That’s helping to take away all the little aches and pains. I can stand up now, as you can see, and though eating is still a little difficult at the moment, I’m getting better.”

Draco just held him, not saying anything, as truly there was nothing that he could say, but he held tight and strongly. Harry smiled into that tight hold. They were going to be just fine. To believe anything else was to give up all hope and he refused to do as such.

“Come on.” Nasta encouraged. “We’ll show you the ground floor first, then we can sit down and talk.”

“This is the living room.” Harry said with a smile, taking Draco’s hand and pulling him to the door.

Blaise chuckled as he mirrored Harry and took Draco’s other hand. “That’s a bathroom.” Blaise pointed to their right.

“It can’t be called a bathroom though.” Harry insisted as Nasta and Max followed close behind with Lucius, who was here just in case things kicked off again, though what he could do as a human was very limited with brawling Drackens. Though perhaps he could talk down the situation before it actually got to a physical fight. Lucius, with his sharp, silver tongue, was incredibly good at doing that.

“What would you call it?” Draco asked him.

“A bath suite.” Harry said with a smile. “Or perhaps a bath mansion.”

Max chuckled behind him and Harry gave him a smile over his shoulder, giving him another saucy wink. He’d been teasing Max all day and his biggest mate was getting more and more sexually frustrated. He’d need a release sooner rather than later. Harry bit his lip as he thought of Max and Nasta christening their new bed in their new master bedroom without him, Blaise and Draco. It was a bittersweet fantasy, because Max and Nasta having sex was unbelievably arousing, but on the other hand, them christening the new bed without all five of them there seemed very wrong.

Blaise opened the bathroom door and Draco’s mouth dropped.
“I agree with Harry.” He said. “That’s more of a bath suite than a bathroom.”

“You see!” Harry cawed out. “I was right!”

“You’re always right.” Blaise told him with a smile.

“Thank you.” Harry smiled. “I also agree that I’m always right.”

That made Max laugh again and he felt a large hand grope his bum. He shifted himself back a little, putting his bum more into Max’s hand and he heard his mate groan under his breath.

“That room is empty for the moment.” Nasta pointed out as they carried on, sending Max and Harry a warning look. Harry just grinned back. “The room next to it, right down the bottom by the stairs, is going to be a small home gym when Max moves his equipment from the old house to this one and the room opposite that one is a storage closet.”

Harry tugged Draco down to the left. “Come and see the kitchen, Draco! It’s magnificent.”

Draco actually gasped at the size of the kitchen.

“This is…it’s huge!” He said in wonder.

“It’s brilliant, isn’t it?” Harry grinned. “Come and see the family room too.” Harry said excitedly, pulling him to the left without giving him much time to look at anything else.

“What’s that way?” Draco asked. “And through those two doors.”

“That’s the utility room, that one’s the pantry.” Max said, pointing to each room off of the kitchen, and Harry could have snogged him for trying.

“Through there are two empty rooms that will be studies.” Nasta added as Harry tugged Draco in the opposite direction, into the family room, where their children were playing under the supervision of Myron, Richard and Aneirin, who were here just in case.
“Daddy Day!” Tegan exclaimed happily, excitedly, as she hefted herself up to her feet and ran to him on unsteady legs.

Draco was in tears as he crouched down to hug Tegan close to his chest, his face buried in her hair as he run his fingers through the lengths of it.

Their moment was ruined by four other kids clamouring around them as even Farren got to his feet to come and greet Draco, who wrapped his long arms around all five of them and squeezed them close as they all chatted and jostled each other, each trying to tell their Daddy Draco their own little stories.

“We’ve all missed you.” Harry said softly.

“Sit on the settee.” Nasta encouraged and Draco moved, to much displeasure from the kids, who followed him, chattering and shrieking around his legs.

Draco sat down and lifted the kids up one by one, though Braiden climbed up easily himself, not content to wait to be lifted up, and Draco ended up having two kids on one side of him and three on the other. Not happy at all with this arrangement, Tegan clambered over her brothers and sat proudly on his lap.

Draco laughed and bent to kiss her, letting the kids talk to him and chatting back to them. He had very evidently missed them a great deal too and watching him be with them for the first time in almost ten days was painful and very emotional to witness. It seemed much longer than that, but a lot had happened in such a very short space of time.

Harry went to check on Leolin, but after the two and a half ounces of milk that he’d drank for his dinner, he was down and out for the count.

Harry picked him up and cradled him gently, kissing his cheek. The other kids soon migrated back to the floor after they’d finished telling their Daddy Draco their stories, even Tegan though she was the last to leave Draco, and they started playing with their quiet toys before their bedtime. Harry was then able to pass Leolin over to Draco for a cuddle.

“Is he alright?” Draco asked, obviously referring to his recent trip to the hospital.

“He’s absolutely fine. We have to deal with the Faeries tomorrow though.”

Draco snapped his head up. “I forgot that they would get involved. They…they can’t take him from us, can they?” He looked over to Nasta as his arms wrapped more firmly around Leolin’s tiny body.
“They can damn well try.” Max snarled. “I’ll throw every single one of them out of this house in pieces, one by one, piece by piece if I have to.”

“It won’t come to that.” Nasta insisted gently, calming everything back down. “It’ll just be Dain and Kailen and Eitri as an impartial court representative.”

“I did like Eitri.” Harry said softly. “He was kind and he was fair to us. He’ll be the same again, won’t he?” Harry asked uncertainly.

“He will.” Nasta nodded. “They’re all going to be angry initially, but once they see that Leolin is fine and unharmed and that we’ve taken steps to make sure that this will never happen again, they should settle down. We won’t allow them to take Leolin from us. He is our son and they can’t take him if we don’t let them.”

Harry nodded firmly. He agreed with that at least, his Dracken too, no one was going to take his son away from him.

“I think we have seen enough fighting, enough violence.” Blaise said. “I don’t think I could survive another incident.”

“It won’t happen.” Max said strongly standing up and striding to Blaise and hugging him tightly. “Never, ever again, my love.”

Blaise sighed and he clung to Max and Harry truly saw then how much this had taken out of Blaise. He was trying to be strong, but he was just as affected as the rest of them.

“If…if it helps, I’ve made good progress.” Draco said quietly. “My therapist has gone right back to my, rather spoilt, childhood. I’m not used to sharing things and sometimes…sometimes that can lead to angry outbursts. I’ve never been challenged in such a way before, so I don’t know how to react normally. I’ve never had siblings or cousins or anything to interact with as a child. My things were mine, everyone’s attention was always on me and that was ingrained deeply from my childhood onwards. I expected others to pay me attention and to always focus on me. I’m being taught to change that mind set now and it is difficult, but it is also working. I’m seeing things from a new perspective, I’m actually thinking from your point of view now instead of just my own.”

“We’re very proud of you.” Harry said, snuggling up tighter to Draco, who was still cradling Leolin.
“We are.” Nasta said, adding weight to Harry’s words. “Carry on as you have been and we’ll allow you to move back in with us. You will be closely monitored, however.” He warned, as Max bristled slightly at that declaration.

Hearing that, Max settled down approvingly, but Harry was ecstatic that his older mates were seriously considering allowing Draco back and not just brushing him off and keeping him at arm’s length.

“I felt that surely you’d never allow me back ever again.” Draco said softly, slightly choked.

“We love you.” Blaise said. “We want you to be better because we want you back. Nothing has changed in that respect, Draco.”

Harry felt Draco’s breathing hitch and he sat up and kissed him on the mouth.

“You will get better.” Harry told him sternly. “You will fight for us and you will not ever give up on us, your family. We love you and you will get to come back once you’re better. You just need to work towards it and then we all need to work together to sort this once and for all.”

“I will.” Draco said. “I’m determined to do this.”

“Then we will fully support you.” Nasta insisted. “But one more incident like this, Draco and I will not let you live again.”

Harry’s heart iced over and tears prickled at his eyes. He turned to Draco and held onto him.

“Please never do this again. I don’t think I’d survive if I lost one of my mates.” He said sadly.

Draco freed up one arm and he put it around Harry’s shoulders, pulling him in tightly. “I’m getting help and things are going well.” He insisted gruffly. “It won’t happen again.”

“Good.” Harry replied.
“Ma.”

Just one sleepy little word and everything eased down. Harry looked down into Leolin’s little, sleep wrinkled face and he smiled gently.

“You should be sleeping.” Harry told him with a soft smile.

“Ma!” Leolin replied more demandingly and Harry sighed.

He had to pick his little boy up and snuggle him into his neck and he smiled softly as he felt a tiny mouth nuzzle into him.

“Here.” Max was trying very, very hard as he handed over a sleeping Eva and Ave to Draco.

“Thank you. How are they?” Draco asked as he cradled a baby in each arm.

“Good, they’ve been good.” Max said. “They’re still trying to get up on their feet, but then that’s baby Drackens for you. They’re not talking very well, but their movements are phenomenal. My big, strong, baby bodybuilders!”

“Did you…did you just call my sweet, baby girls bodybuilders?!” Harry demanded.

“They obviously get it from Max’s side of the family.” Blaise quipped.

“Myron is definitely a bodybuilder.” Richard said with a grin. “Our Maxie was a baby bodybuilder too.”

“My daughters are not bodybuilders!” Harry hissed as he cradled Leolin against his shoulder.

“They might be.” Draco said tentatively. “Weren’t you the one always saying that they can be whatever they want to be? What if they want to be bodybuilders?”
Harry just looked at Draco silently, before he smiled and moved to kiss him hard.

“I’m so proud of you! You’re right, they can be whatever they want to be, but they aren’t bodybuilders at the moment and I will not have them called as such.” Harry said. “As punishment, Max…”

“Why am I being punished?” Max pouted.

“Because I said so…and I want tea. So your punishment is to go and make us tea!”

Max huffed, but Harry could see that he was happy and his eyes were smiling.

“Can we have takeaway tonight?” He asked.

“They’re not very healthy, Harry.” Nasta worried.

“They use fresh ingredients and it’s not anything that they wouldn’t cook at home anyway.” Harry insisted.

“What do you want, pizza, Indian, Chinese?” Max asked.

“Indian.” Harry grinned.

“I’ve always wanted to try Indian cuisine.” Blaise said interestedly.

Nasta wavered and he looked unsure as both of his recovering mates wanted the same thing.

“Max makes a mean curry.” Richard insisted. “Better than any takeaway place!”
“I do, but if my Harry wants a takeaway, then he gets a takeaway. My two lovers get what they want.” He said kissing Harry’s head and then Blaise’s.

“I thought neither of you liked spicy food.” Draco cut in worriedly.

“There are milder curries.” Max told him calmly. “Ones that use yoghurt or coconut to temper the gorgeous spices so they’re still full of flavour, but not so much heat. So boys, how are we for curry for dinner? Nas, you must have had a thousand curries on your numerous visits to India.”

“I do like curries. There was one that I did really like, a local specialty from Mumbai.” Nasta smiled. “Do you remember, Dad?”

“Was that the very hot one that you and Sanex forced me to try and had me gulping a pint of milk every other bite?” Aneirin asked with a fond smile.

“Yeah, I think for those two weeks that was the only curry that I ate.” Nasta laughed.

“I like the coconut ones.” Harry said.

“I’ll find the local takeaway, it’ll be alright as a treat, Nas.” Max insisted. “We have something to celebrate, after all.”

“No meat for me.” Harry called out.

That stopped Max short and he looked at him curiously.

“Are you…do you feel like you want to stay away from meat?” Blaise asked him.

Harry pulled a face. “I forgot that I hadn’t told you that I was having a heat period.”

“What!” Max said in shock. “When?”
“Yeah, in three weeks.” Harry told them.

“Three…three weeks!” Max echoed weakly.

“Yeah, so gear up for it, we might be getting more babies soon.”

Harry patted Leolin’s back as he looked out over to his five others, who were being incredibly good as they played with their quiet toys and each other.

“I…I…I can’t even believe it.” Max stammered. “Why are you always so calm?! How can you be calm now, after hearing that?!”

Harry thought for a moment that Max was talking to him and he looked over to his biggest mate to see him looking instead to Nasta.

“I already knew. Harry told me last week.” Nasta replied easily.

“And you didn’t think to tell me?!” Max demanded.

“We were a lot more highly strung last week. I didn’t want to put any more pressures on any of us. We still have time to prepare.”

“How will it be handled?” Draco asked worriedly.

“Harry’s coming heat is part of the reason why I set up this meeting and allowed this visit to come about so soon after you’ve started your therapy.” Nasta said. “We owe it to Harry to make his heat period as comfortable and as painless as possible.”

“It’s painful to have a heat period without all of my mates there with me.” Harry said quietly.

“It is?” Aneirin asked and Harry became painfully aware that Aneirin had been incredibly young when he’d lost his own mate and that, as Lowri’s only mate, Aneirin had more than likely stayed with his mate from a few days before her heat period was due. Lowri wouldn’t have ever suffered with having one mate with her and one missing as she’d only had the one dominant.

Harry nodded. “When I had that fu…muck up with Draco and Max, for the first part of the first day of that heat period, it was painful because Max wasn’t there with me. It felt wrong, I was confused and distressed and the burning of the heat was unbearable until Max finally arrived. I have no doubts that it’ll be exactly the same if any of my mates are excluded. So we’re making sure that they’re all going to be there with me.”

“I had no idea.” Aneirin said.

“I was at work when Ashleigh went onto her heat period once.” Richard said. “It was an unavoidable case and I thought that she’d be fine with just Myron for a bit longer, so though my Dracken was going ballistic, I held on for half an hour to finish up the case and get back home before letting my Dracken out. She made me swear to never leave her like that ever again. Do you remember, My?”

“I remember. That’s when we learnt that it was physically painful and mentally unsettling for a submissive to be on a heat without all of their mates.” Myron nodded his head.

“So we need to be ready and at the least not tearing chunks out of one another for Harry’s heat period in three weeks’ time.” Nasta sighed. “So we’re trying, we’re all calm and we’re trying.”

“I appreciate it very much.” Harry said with a smile. “But Max, I wanted that tea ten minutes ago, I haven’t forgotten your punishment!”

Max laughed then. His big, booming laugh that tightened things low in Harry’s gut and brought an uncontrollable smile to his face.

Five babies stopped what they were doing and looked over at their Daddy Max before they laughed, giggled and shrieked themselves and that made Harry laugh too.

“Ma ma.” Leolin burbled into his neck.

“Are you still awake?” Harry cooed in a funny voice that made Leolin scowl. “Oh you do not like me changing my voice, do you?” He said normally and Leolin’s scowl melted back into neutral. “Go back to sleep, Leolin.”
“I know. I’m still here.” Harry assured softly, rubbing his back through his sleepsuit.

A baby shrieked and he looked over quickly to find that Calix had found that he could whack Farren with a soft teddy.

“Braiden, no!” Blaise chastised. “Don’t hit Calix! No, I mean…Calix don’t hit Reg…Te.”

“Farren.” Nasta said helpfully as he hefted Farren away from the teddy that Calix was whacking him with and he handed him to Richard to snuggle. “Calix was hitting Farren.”

Blaise’s fist clenched and he nodded. “My mind went blank.”

“You got the link that it was Calix.” Harry pointed out. “That’s progress.” Harry praised him.

Blaise rubbed at his head, sneering as his hand encountered only less than half an inch of stubble. “How am I supposed to be a productive member of society if I can’t even remember the names of my own children?”

“You’ll get better, Caru.” Nasta insisted gently. “It’ll be for a few weeks, but until then, don’t strain yourself, it’ll only make things worse.”

Blaise sighed, his shoulders sagging. “That’s more difficult to practice than it is to just say, Nasta.”

“I know, Cariad. I know. But you will get over this.”

Nasta hugged Blaise tight and Max walked in with a tray of tea.

“I’ve ordered dinner. It’ll be about an hour.” He said before realising the sombre mood of the room. “What happened?”
“Calix was whacking Farren with a teddy bear.” Harry replied helpfully.

Max groaned and picked up Calix. “You are such a little trouble maker!” He insisted as Calix giggled. “It’s not funny! You’re going to be so much trouble, you’re like a little Caesar.”

“Oh, hark at him, Myron!” Richard laughed. “You’d think he never got into trouble for a single day of his life!”

“I didn’t!” Max insisted, adopting an offended tone and a hurt look. “It was always Caesar! Him and his harebrained schemes always got us into trouble.”

“Then maybe you shouldn’t have joined in and encouraged him.”

“I was being a responsible older brother and going along with him to make sure that he didn’t get hurt!” Max insisted, sticking his nose into the air and sniffing haughtily.

Harry burst out laughing and Max shot him a mock hurt look that had Harry laughing until tears streamed down his face.

“You’re my submissive mate!” Max cried out. “You’re supposed to be on my side and defend me from such attacks on my honour and integrity!”

Harry, who had been calming down, was thrown into another fit of hysterics and he started laughing so hard that his face turned red. He waved at Nasta and pointed at his chest and then his top dominant was there, a smile on his own face, as he helped Harry to breathe by rubbing his back.

“Please, Max. Do try not to kill our submissive with laughter.” Nasta mock chastised.

“I don’t even see what was so funny!” Max huffed.

“Probably that Harry knows that you have no honour or integrity.” Richard pointed out and Harry let out several soft giggles.
“How dare you!” Max threw his nose back into the air. “I’ll have you know that I’m the most honourable man of the utmost integrity in this whole damn country!”

Harry about collapsed at hearing that, wiping his streaming eyes and trying to control his breathing. He lost the battle when his children looked over to see him laughing so hard and they joined in.

“I’m going to wet myself.” He managed to get out between bursts of hysterical laughter.

“Good!” Max declared. “It’s no less than you deserve!”

Harry shook his head and he handed Leolin to Nasta before standing and he wobbled his way down the corridor and to the bathroom, trying to squeeze his legs closed so that he didn’t wet himself. He heard Max’s ‘outraged’ shouts all the way to the bathroom.

He took a minute to calm down once he’d emptied his bladder and he washed his hands and face and he took a moment to regain his breath. Of course it would have been Max who would have reduced him to a hysterical mess.

He shook his head and then grinned to himself as he thought of payback. He stole into the smaller living room and grabbed the pot of floo powder off of the mantelpiece and he threw a pinch into the flames. He carefully got down onto his knees, watching his injured left leg, and he called out for The Burrow before sticking his head through the flames.

“Oh, Harry dear, are you alright, do you need me to come through?” Mrs Weasley fretted as she turned from where she was making the Weasleys dinner.

“No, no, it’s okay, Mrs Weasley. Everything’s fine.” He insisted. “I just wanted a chat with Ginny. Is she around?”

“Of course, dear. One moment.”

Mrs Weasley left the kitchen and Harry heard her yelling through the house for Ginny.

“Harry wants to talk to you!” Harry heard her calling out and then there was loud clattering as if a horse were running over a rickety, wooden bridge. It made him chuckle.
“Harry! Are you okay?” Ginny asked him. “Mum told me everything!”

“It’s alright, Gin, I just have a favour to ask of you.” He said with a wink. “Only you can do this for me.”

Ginny looked around herself a moment then turned back to him. “More toys?” She whispered.

Harry nodded. “Preferably clothes. We’ve moved house and I’m pretty sure that Max would have burnt the other stuff too.”

“I have just the thing.” Ginny told him. “I was looking for new stuff for your birthday next month. I’ll give you something early, but aren’t you too injured?”

Harry shook his head. “No, Gin. I’m up and walking now. I just need to take it easy for another couple of days, but my mates won’t give me what I need unless I force them to. Hence why I need a couple of items.”

Ginny’s smile almost split her face and she cackled. “I have just the thing in mind, do you want it now, or should I send it with Pigwidgeon?”

“Can Pig handle it?”

“Yes, it’ll be rather light.”

Harry nodded. “With Pig then, I can’t take it now, we have company over and the Faeries will be by tomorrow, so it’ll have time to get here.” Harry chuckled. “Thanks, Ginny. You’re the best.”

“Of course I am, now go, quickly before they find you and blow your cover.”

Harry was still laughing as he pulled his head free of the flames. He stood up, brushed the soot from his head and hair thoroughly before he headed back to the family room via the kitchen.

“Are you okay?” Nasta asked.
“No accidents?” Max tacked on.

Harry grinned manically. “No. I just needed a moment to relearn how to breathe. I will pay you back for that though.” He said, thinking of all the things that Ginny could possibly send him.

“Yeah, yeah.” Max scoffed with a wink.

Harry grinned wider. Max wouldn’t know what hit him when Harry dressed up for him. He couldn’t wait to see what Ginny would send him this time.

“Right, let’s get these kids to bed.” Harry instructed. “By the time we get them all in bed it’ll be their bedtime. They’ve all had their teeth brushed, haven’t they?”

“Yep, they’re all in fresh nappies too.” Max told him as he hefted up Farren from Richard’s lap along with Calix.

“What story do they need tonight?” Nasta asked as he passed Leolin back to him carefully.

“Tickly Tiger.” Harry told them. “Let Tegan hold the book though.”

Max and Nasta nodded as they took the five oldest kids, Max with two, Nasta with three, up to their nursery for a bedtime story.

“I’ll take the girls up.” Aneirin said with a smile, taking the sleeping Eva and Ave from Draco and following Max and Nasta.

Harry sat back on the settee and snuggled up to Draco with Leolin, letting Draco take their Faerie son as he took several deep gulps of his honeyed tea. Everyone else had already finished theirs.

Blaise was sat on Draco’s other side and he too rested himself on the blond, absorbing his presence while they actually had it.

“Are you both truly okay?” Draco asked them both as he kissed Blaise’s shaved head and then turned to the other side to kiss Harry’s brow.

“We’re going to be fine.” Blaise told him. “It’s you who needs to get better now.”

“It has only been a week, but I am making progress already. I always knew that I was spoilt, I just never knew what that would mean when I finally had a family of my own. I just never realised that I had no idea how to compromise or how to really get by when everything wasn’t always about me. I bluff my way through two years, and it was difficult, but I managed. Then finding out that I nearly made myself infertile through my own stupidity, well, I found it a lot more difficult to manage my stress and anger levels after that and every little thing just grew until I finally exploded over something relatively minor.”

“But it won’t happen again, will it?” Harry asked.

Draco turned more towards him, cupped his face and kissed him. “No, it won’t. I’m being taught ways to control my anger, ways to use it productively and how to recognise when I’m getting to the limit of my anger and patience so that I can separate myself from the situation and go to cool off. I’m learning and I’ll go to these classes every single day if I have to, to get you all back. I do love you all, so very much, and I’m willing to do absolutely anything to prove it to you.”

Blaise moved and kissed Draco’s cheek while Harry kissed his forehead and they both lavished their love upon Draco while they had him. Their bigger, blond mate had no idea what to do or which way to turn as he was sandwiched between them and they were kissing all over his face and neck. It was Blaise who claimed his mouth first and snogged him while Harry sucked a bruise onto his pale neck to mark him.

“We are still here.” Myron grunted.

“Don’t interrupt them, I’m enjoying the show!” Richard complained. Lucius said nothing, but he was paler than usual.

“Why don’t you all go into the kitchen and give us a minute.” Harry complained. Blaise didn’t release Draco’s mouth from their kiss, so neither of them said anything.

“Leolin is between you.” Lucius said.
“He sleeps beside our bed, he’s seen and heard much worse. This is nothing new to him.” Harry pointed out, much to Richard’s amusement.

“Pass him here.” Myron stood up and he took Leolin from Harry’s arms before herding Richard into the kitchen. Lucius didn’t need to be told, he had been the first one through the door. “Nothing more than kissing.” Myron told them sternly before he shut the door on them.

“Fuck, I thought they’d never leave.” Harry growled as he moved to swing his good leg over Draco’s lap and he sat on him, keeping his healing left leg straight, gripping that perfect blond hair and snogging his blond mate himself.

Harry felt an arm wrap around his waist, he felt Blaise by his side, he could hear moans and small groans and then Blaise forced his own tongue into their kiss and suddenly they were having a three way French kiss.

He didn’t care how much time has passed, but Harry found himself with his own love bites, a hand under his shirt playing with one of his nipples and he was unbearably hard. They did not stop their snogging for longer than it took to gasp in some much needed air, or when one of them broke off to suck at a neck, leaving bruises and marks all over each other.

“Oi! Knock it off.” Max growled from above them and they split apart like naughty boys and they all looked up at him standing over the back of the settee. “That’s better.”

He grabbed their heads one by one and snogged them himself, all of them, even Draco, before standing back and licking his lips.

“Damn, you three taste good.” He said deeply.

“You taste like curry.” Harry grinned.

“I taste tested the takeaway, just in case.” Max winked. “Nasta has sent everyone away so that we can eat in peace, but if you’d rather stay in here and maul one another.”

“We would.” Blaise answered, moving back to kiss Draco.

Max laughed and he hefted Blaise up and over the back of the settee, setting him down on his feet before picking up Harry and keeping him in his arms.

“Kitchen, now. You can snog after you’ve eaten.”

Harry groaned theatrically and it made Blaise laugh as he waltzed into the kitchen with Nasta.

“The pale curries are for you three, the red ones are mine and Nasta’s, seeing as your little sensitive taste buds can’t handle real curries.”

“I like a different sort of heat.” Harry winked as he was set down in front of a plate with a smooth sauce that had no diced meat in it like the others.

“So I noticed!” Max laughed. “They were kissing so heavily, Nas they didn’t even hear the door opening.”

“I can imagine.” Nasta smiled softly as he ate his own food.

“You started without us!” Harry complained as he grabbed his fork to catch up. He had a significantly smaller plate than everyone else, but that was fine as he couldn’t handle eating a lot, yet he hated leaving anything on his plate. His mates knew that, so they’d given him less to eat on his plate to begin with for him. If he could eat more then there would be more for him, but if he couldn’t eat more, then he would have cleared his plate and that was fine.

“We would have all started together if you’d come when you were called and didn’t become so absorbed with snogging that you were deaf to our voices.” Nasta winked.

Harry chuckled and he took the first bite and he smiled as he watched Blaise and Draco eat their own food. There were an assortment of side dishes between the five of them and Harry tried bits and pieces of everything, but not too much as he had to keep stopping now and then to wait for his belly to accept what he’d already eaten before carrying on. It was annoying when all he wanted to do was gorge himself on everything in front of him and enjoy being in the company of his four dominant mates for the first time in almost two weeks.

It was peaceful, normal. It was just the five of them in the kitchen, eating dinner, all the kids were asleep in their cots. It was normal and Harry actually felt relaxed and calm for the first time in weeks. This is what he’d truly needed and he would not forget just how hard Max was trying, he would not forget the unhesitant kiss that he had given to Draco, nor how relaxed and joy filled he’d made the evening with his jokes and laughter. Harry would pay him back for that because it had been everything that he’d needed today and he was incredibly grateful.

Harry barely managed to finish his plate and even then it had been a massive struggle, but his belly was distended and he groaned as he pushed away from the table.

“I’m not going to be moving for days.” He complained.

“Good!” Max laughed. “Maybe now you can stay where you are and heal up a bit.”

Harry stuck his tongue out, but he couldn’t do much more. He instead sat back and groaned happily.

“Any pain?” Nasta asked him seriously.

“A little.” Harry said and Max stood up and went to his potion’s case, which was near enough in the same place that he’d had it at the old house, up in the highest cabinet in the kitchen. “That’s just cruel to keep it up there away from me.” Harry pouted.

“It just means that you have to ask for things when you need them.” Max smiled as he got out one of Harry’s mild potions and placed it by his hand. “Let me get you a cup of tea before you take it.” He insisted as he put the case back and turned to the kettle.

Harry sat up a little straighter and he got the potion ready to go down as quickly and as easily as possible while Max got his cup of honey tea ready.

“Draco, you’re the closest, stick honey on the shopping list for me.” Max said as he looked at the almost empty bottle. “I don’t want Harry or Blaise moving.”

Draco stood up and he went to the massive, double doored fridge, where there was an A4 piece of paper stuck to the front with a fridge magnet. He picked up the pen that had a magnetised strip attached to it so that it could also live on the fridge door, and he wrote down honey before coming back to the table.

Harry knocked back the potion and then gulped a quarter of the tea down before he stopped to take a gasping breath.

“Fuck that’s gross.” He complained.
“Blaise, do you still have a headache?” Nasta asked after supervising Harry taking his potion.

Blaise shook his head. “It trailed off into nothing.” He said simply.

Harry sighed happily and he stood himself up.

“Where are you going?” Nasta asked him.

“To the smaller living room so I can sit down in comfort and relax.” He said with a smile.

“Come on then.” Max said as he walked over to him, bent down and picked Harry up by the back of his knees, before sitting him on his hip and he used his other hand to grab his cup of tea.

Harry chuckled, but he allowed himself to be carried into the living room and to the little settee nest. Max placed him down gently and Harry wriggled around and settled down with a yawn. Blaise crawled in next to him and he wrapped Harry up in his arms.

“You’re not staying down here alone, again!” Max told them.

“You’re just jealous that you weren’t invited.”

“What happened?” Draco asked.

“They had sex together when we left them down here alone almost a week ago, when the both of them were still very injured.”

Draco shook his head but Harry grinned unrepentantly.

“I’m going to sort the dishes.” Max grumbled.
“Already taken care of.” Nasta said. “I put a charm on the dishes and threw everything else in the bin.”

Nasta climbed into the nest bed and he lay down and pushed his arm under Blaise and Harry’s heads.

“Get in here, the both of you.” Nasta ordered. “Settle down and let us resettle our bond while we can.”

Max didn’t need to be told twice as he climbed into the settee nest, but Draco hesitated.

“Get in here, now!” Harry ordered.

“Don’t upset him.” Max warned seriously.

Draco climbed in then and he laid himself down on Nasta’s side, not Max’s, somehow sensing that Max was the one who had the biggest problem with him, after all, they had been the ones mostly fighting that day.

Harry was very happy and he started mumbling and chatting about anything and everything, his new home, his day outside in the garden, the kids, how much he’d liked the takeaway treat. He was so happy that he rambled about everything that he could think of and he barely gave his mates time to answer or say anything.

Max eventually ended up laughing. “Slow down and take a breath, Harry, my love.”

“I can’t, I’m so happy.” Harry said with a grin.

Max kissed him. “I’m glad that you’re so happy, but stop talking our ears off and let us get a word in once in a while.”

Harry huffed and he snuggled himself between his mates, inhaling deeply and regularly so that he could smell Draco’s scent around him. He smiled to himself, letting his mates’ voices wash over him, as now that he’d stopped talking, they could start.

He was happy, relaxed and everything felt right. He could ignore everything that had happened, he could ignore his injuries and little aches and pains, because right in this moment, everything felt so completely right.

“Harry, what do you think?” Max asked. “Harry?”

Nasta laughed as he looked at his quiet submissive and saw the closed eyes, the slack mouth and the soft, even breaths. “He’s asleep.”

“That’s just fucking charming. He talks our ears off and then when we start talking, he falls asleep!” Max complained without heat, smiling softly.

“He did eat a lot.” Blaise said. “That usually makes him mellow and sleepy.”

“Let me get him up to bed, those girls won’t be waking up until much later and he could use the uninterrupted sleep.”

Nasta removed himself from the nest and he picked Harry up carefully and he carried him lovingly up to the master bedroom.

Harry mumbled as he was placed onto the bed and Nasta shushed him gently. “Just rest, Caru.” He said softly. “You need to sleep now.”

“Nas? Bed is cold.” Harry complained, his eyes still closed.

Nasta got out his wand and a quick spell heated up the sheets and blankets for Harry and his submissive smiled, still partially asleep.

“Is everything okay now?” Harry asked.

“Everything’s going to be fine, Harry. Just go to sleep and rest.” Nasta insisted.

“Draco.”
“Draco is still downstairs, he’ll be going back to his parents soon, but he will be back.”

“Hmm…good.” Harry mumbled, rubbing his one ear across the pillow and pulling the duvet up to his chin.

Nasta smiled at him and tucked him in more firmly and he kissed Harry’s cheek, watching as Harry pulled a face in his almost asleep state and he couldn’t help but smile wider at him. He watched Harry drift back off to proper sleep before he left the bedroom and he went back down to the living room. He had made the right decision in his mind. Harry had needed to see Draco, to see them making an effort and now Harry could rest and recover properly. Hopefully Blaise could too, he hadn’t shown any discomfort or adverse reaction to Draco being here either, just the opposite in fact as he walked back into the living room and he saw Blaise snuggled up with Draco, Max holding the both of them in his arms, Blaise sandwiched happily in the middle.

He smiled and his shoulders relaxed and he breathed in deeply. Their mateship wasn’t entirely destroyed and with a lot of work, from all of them not just Draco, this could be forgiven and they could move on from it.

Nasta climbed back into the nest and he pressed himself up against Draco’s back, linking his arms around Draco and Blaise to grip at Max.

“Is Harry okay?”

“He was mumbling about the bed sheets.” Nasta smiled as he wriggled himself around and shoved his hips forward into Draco’s. “He’ll be fine, just destress and reaffirm our bond.”

“It feels wrong not to have Harry here.” Blaise said.

“He couldn’t cuddle like this anyway. Not yet.” Max grumbled as he shifted the arm under Blaise and Draco’s heads…the arm that he was losing the feeling in as his mates cut off the blood to his hand. He didn’t care.

“We could have been gentler.” Blaise insisted.

Max clenched the arm that was tucked over the two younger men and they both gasped and rubbed their ribs.

“But I like clutching you tight to me.” Max insisted with a smile.
Nasta chuckled too and he moved his hand until he felt the edge of Max’s shirt and his hand easily slipped under to touch bare skin. He smiled and he closed his eyes. He wasn’t going to sleep, it was only eight O’clock, but lying here in the quiet, it was the perfect way to re-establish their bond to one another, more so since Harry wasn’t there which is why he’d taken him up to bed in the first place.

It was one thing to bond around their submissive, an entirely different thing to bond with one another without Harry there. It was just them together, four dominants and no submissive. It was more intimate, more meaningful that they were doing this together without Harry and that was what he’d wanted because they needed to be able to do this without their submissive holding them together. They needed more, much more, than just Harry in common with one another or their relationship would never work as they’d be relying completely on Harry to hold them together and that wasn’t fair on their youngest member.

Nasta opened his eyes and he smiled at Max as he caught those blue eyes looking at him over Blaise and Draco’s heads.

“We’re going to be just fine.” He told Max quietly, tightening his one arm around Draco’s waist and stroking Max’s skin with the other.

Max looked at him for a few moments and then he nodded, before he smiled too. They really were going to be just fine. They just needed to survive the visit from the Faeries tomorrow. How Nasta wished they had never revealed to him what they had. He had been happier not knowing that the man he had thought was his ancestor was an abusive murderer and that Trefor Delericey had had an affair, and several children, with two Valkyries. He was glad that Trefor had found an escape from his abusive, pig of a Husband, he just wasn’t sure on what to make of having relatives who were over five hundred years old and had known that they were related and hadn’t done anything about it. It felt like…like they were ashamed of him and his family, like they didn’t want to get to know them because they were Drackens and not Faeries and to him at least, it still felt like the only reason they had come back into their lives was because of Leolin.

He couldn’t help but wonder, if Leolin had not been born a Faerie, would Dain and Kailen have ever come into their lives and told them the truth of what had happened to Trefor and his children? He got the feeling that the answer to that was a resounding no, they would never have bothered with them if it wasn’t for Leolin and that was very painful to digest. He sighed and pushed it from his mind. He did know about the truth of his ancestors and Leolin was a Faerie, there was nothing they could do about it now. They just had to accept it and move on, just like they had to do with Draco and the fight.

It wasn’t going to be easy, but then nothing worth doing was easy, but he was certain that they’d manage it as long as they stuck together. Their love would hold them together and his strength of will would stop him from immediately lynching the Faeries on sight tomorrow.

As for how the rest of the visit progressed, well that would be entirely up to the visiting Faeries and how they behaved tomorrow, but at the first sign of trouble or the first mention of taking Leolin away from them, that would be it, the final straw. He would kick them out of his home, bar them from ever coming back and deny them the chance of seeing Leolin grow. He was often told by others that he had the tolerance and patience of a saint, but truly now, that tolerance, his patience was wearing severely thin.
He had had more than enough of others interfering with his mateship and enough was enough, he would not take it any longer. He was the top dominant for his mateship and he would pull them all back into order and keep them there while blocking any attempts by any outsiders to interfere, whether that was the Faeries, Marianna or anyone else. It was his job to sort out this mess and he would sort it, in his own way and to hell if anyone didn’t agree with him or his methods and Merlin help anyone who tried to interfere, because now, after today, it would not be accepted or tolerated. He was done and things would be handled his way from now on, and those who disagreed with him could damn well leave them all alone. It was no one else’s business but their own, they were all grown men and Harry was right, they could make up their own minds about what to do and they had made up their minds. It wasn’t for anyone else to try and change them now.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Not much to say, only happy birthday, Draco! We are moving along quickly and I have part of chapter 104 written too, but there are several fics to update between now and chapter 104, which gives me some time to actually get it written. Lycanthrope Factory is now finished, I just need to update the last chapter and then finish it off with an epilogue. The Dragons’ Rebirth needs its epilogue too and then both of those will be completely finished. I’ve got a chapter for Tainted Blood, two for Pride of the Lions and Dracken Memoirs is coming on well too, still a way to go before an update for that one though. The start of the sequel to Blue Moon is also coming on really well and I’m so happy to be back visiting with Fenrir/Harry and the pack.

Anyway, I hope you’ve all enjoyed this chapter, lovelies! Until the next one,

StarLight Massacre. X
Harry was feeling great the very next morning and he was sat down on the floor, Leolin in his lap and a massive pad of paper on the extended coffee table in front of him, several boxes of crayons around him as he encouraged his kids to scribble and scrawl over the paper. Even Leolin, who was fascinated by the bright, bold colours and the thick, chunky crayons that were easy to grip and hold, was joining in and it made Harry’s heart burst to see him enjoying himself as he made doodles with his brothers and sister.

Nasta had gone to the Faerie city to escort the Faeries who were coming to visit them to their new home, so that they didn’t have to go to the old, ruined house and see exactly what Leolin had been caught up in. Not to mention the old house had been blocked off to everyone bar family since the fight.

“Ma!” Leolin cooed, turning to pat at him before looking back at his white page with the brightly coloured lines all over it.

“I can see your wonderful picture, Leolin. You’re brilliant, my sweet one.”

Harry heard the hushed hiss of the floo from next door and he held Leolin tighter, making sure that his Faerie baby’s back was to his front to support him.

Max looked up and he breathed deeply, making sure that he was in the prime position to protect Harry, Leolin, Blaise and their other children from the Faeries if it was needed.

There was one more Faerie than they’d been expecting…Dain and Kailen were first through the door after Nasta, their stances were angry and they immediately scanned around the room, but Harry’s back was to them and he was hiding Leolin with his own body, even as he looked at their guests from over his own shoulder. Eitri, the golden Fae who looked so much like Draco, wandered through the door next, relaxed and neutral, his peaceful face giving away nothing, and behind him came Warren, the Faerie guard.

“Where is Leolin?!” Dain snarled, his body tensed and bunched up with a barely concealed fury.

“Hello to you too.” Harry sneered back over his shoulder. “Sit down and greet us like normal people or you’ll be leaving as quickly as you’ve come! Don’t forget that you are only here, in our home, at our invitation, and that that invitation can be revoked at a moment’s notice!”

Eitri snorted in amusement. “Good morning, Harry Potter. Thank you for welcoming us into your very lovely home.”

“Welcome, please call me Harry.”

“Splendid. Please call me Eitri. May I?”

He indicated to a free space at the coffee table, opposite Harry and next to Braiden, who was scribbling with all the concentration he could muster.

“Feel free.” Harry insisted.

Eitri walked around to the free space and he sat at the table and it was only sitting opposite Harry that he saw Leolin for the first time, sat upright and drawing just like his brothers and sister.

“This is never Leolin.” He exclaimed in shock. “The same babe that you brought to see the court? He shouldn’t be this…he’s seventeen moon turns, isn’t he?”
“That’s right. He’ll be eighteen months in a few weeks.” Harry said with a smile as he kissed Leolin’s black hair.

“Ma!”

“I know sweet one, I can see.” Harry cooed back.

Dain and Kailen moved with Warren shadowing them so that they could see Leolin for themselves and they all but gaped.

“Are you holding him upright or is…is he…” Warren asked, completely stumped.

Harry moved backwards a little and Leolin was sat up on his own, unsupported for a moment before Harry moved back and slipped a hand over his lap as he wobbled a little.

“He can stay upright for only a moment.” Harry said proudly. “After that he’ll list off to the side and fall, but he can support his upper body on his forearms when he’s on his tummy and he loves his crayons.”

“He’s…I can’t believe it! He’s only seventeen moon turns.”

Leolin caught sight of Nasta and held his crayon out to him. “Da!” He declared before putting the crayon back to paper and drawing more squiggles.

Nasta bent down and kissed Leolin’s black hair.

“He’s better than fine.” Eitri declared. “May I?” He asked, holding his arms out.

Harry pulled a face.

“Only for a moment.” Eitri insisted and Harry sighed.
“He won’t like it.” Harry warned as he passed Leolin over gently. Those gold eyes narrowed as his underdeveloped brain registered movement and Leolin looked up at the person holding him and gold eyes caught gold eyes and the scowl that took over Leolin’s face was his worst ever and he hit Eitri with the crayon in his hand repeatedly.

“Ma! Ma! Ma!” He called out, wriggling until he could see Harry and then he reached out to him. “Ma! Ma!” He carried on, kicking with his legs at Eitri until, with a laugh, the Fae had to hand Leolin back.

“A true little Unseelie.” He complimented with a happy smile.

“He is very attached to Harry.” Nasta said as he sat behind Harry and framed his body with his own as Harry got Leolin settled back onto his lap.

“Ma.” Leolin cooed as he looked up to make sure that the eyes he was looking at were green.

“I’ve got you, sweetness.” Harry murmured as he tapped the paper to get Leolin’s attention back onto it.

Leolin dropped the crayon in his hand and picked up the bright blue one and he drew more scribbles onto the page.

“Mummy, look!” Braiden called out, thrusting his picture at him.

“That’s lovely, Braiden. Well done!” Harry praised heavily.

“May I see?” Eitri asked from Braiden’s side.

Braiden looked at him and then frowned. “Daddy Dayco?” He asked, as if knowing that it wasn’t his Father, but not knowing who else it could be.

“This is Eitri, Braiden.”
“Eatery.”

Max snorted with suppressed laughter, but Eitri took it all in his stride as he smiled and took the paper that was handed to him. It was a mess of lines, swirls, squiggles and blocks of colour, but he smiled as he handed the page back.

“That is wonderful work.” He praised easily. “You are very talented.”

Braiden squealed happily and he stood up, clambering onto Eitri’s lap before seizing his perfectly golden, curly hair and giving him a wet, dribbly kiss. Harry wondered if Braiden still thought that Eitri was Draco as he delivered this show of affection or if their oldest son truly was that affectionate towards strangers.

Eitri laughed then, happily, naturally, and the three Valkyries sat behind him looked at him as if they’d never seen him before as Eitri trailed off to a high, girlish giggle as Braiden rubbed noses with him.

“Is this little one seventeen moon turns old too?” He asked, those gold eyes sparkling like the true precious metal.

“No, that’s our Braiden, our oldest. He’s twenty-two months old. His second birthday is the beginning of August.”

“He is remarkable, truly remarkable.” Eitri praised genuinely as he listened to Braiden talk to him like a real, miniaturised person. “He is speaking! Truly speaking to me.”

“He wants an answer from you too.” Harry told him as Braiden looked at Eitri expectantly.

“I…oh.” Eitri said, looking a little blank as he looked at the tiny boy, who he hadn’t expected to be speaking, much less requiring an answer.

Harry laughed. “Go back to your drawings, Braiden.”

“Okay.” He said as he turned and picked up more crayons.
Leolin screeched and stabbed his crayon down onto the page and scored it down the paper, creating a nice big, bold line. He looked at it, utterly fascinated with the stark colour against the white paper. He giggled and then repeated the process, stabbing and scoring the paper with his blue crayon, before dropping it and picking up the red one.

A cry from one of the bassinets startled their guests, but Max turned and picked up one of his identical daughters.

“That’s never one of the ones that were newly born?” Kailen asked. “She’s so big!”

Max smirked. “Yeah, they’re Drackens so they get bigger quicker and these ones, at just four and a half months old, are already mobile.”

“Truly?” Eitri asked, his eyes glimmering with happiness.

The baby in Max’s arms, who had settled down as soon as she was picked up, wriggled and squirmed like a snake.

Max rolled his eyes and then put the baby girl, Ave, onto the floor. She cooed and then got her arms under her and she pushed up with her maximum effort. She commando crawled across the floor, kicking her feet, digging them into the carpet to propel herself forward, but she mostly crawled with her elbows until she reached her favourite toy. She grabbed it and then rolled onto her back so that she could play with it, gumming and gnawing on the hard plastic.

“She is amazing.” Eitri complimented genuinely. “To see such a tiny baby, only four moons old, moving so…so…she’s brilliant.”

Harry puffed up automatically with pride and he couldn’t stop grinning. Eva soon woke up and she wanted to join her sister on the floor and they moved around like babies twice their age as Eva immediately crawled to the three Faeries on the settee and flumped onto their feet.

“Oh, oh! She’s fallen! Dain, is she alright?” Kailen fretted as Dain automatically surged forward to pick Eva up and his frantic eyes visibly checked her over.

“That wouldn’t have harmed her at all.” Blaise insisted calmly as he sipped at his coffee on an adjacent settee.

“So…so she’s fine?” Kailen asked as he took the little girl from his lover and cradled her softly, gently, as if she were the most delicate, precious thing in the world.

“She’s fine.” Harry smiled.

Leolin threw his crayon away and turned in Harry’s arms. “Ma.” He declared.

“What’s the matter, love?” He asked.

Leolin forced himself upright and he lifted his arms as if they were weighted down. Harry hugged him and wrapped his arms around his youngest son’s back, being careful of his little wings.

Leolin kissed him, he still couldn’t pucker his lips, so he mouthed wetly across Harry’s lips. Harry helped him out by puckering his mouth and kissing him repeatedly and then blowing raspberries on him. Leolin let out the amazing, huffy giggle that Harry adored hearing from him.

“Is he…laughing?” Eitri asked, stunned.

Harry looked at the Faeries with his own grin. “Yeah. He laughs when he’s really happy or amused.”

Harry blew another raspberry on Leolin to be followed by another round of huffy giggles that had Harry laughing too, just from the shared joy of hearing Leolin giggling.

Calix crawled over and he hefted himself up using Harry as a support. Harry held a hand out to help him and then Calix popped his head over to look at his baby brother.

“Leo kiss.” Calix cooed, bending to kiss his brother.

Leolin remained neutral. No huffy giggles, but he wasn’t glaring as usual and that was progress in Harry’s books.

“How are his wings?” Eitri asked him.

Harry smiled. “Much better now that they’re covered over.”
Harry sat Leolin on the floor and he pulled off his little shirt and his little bottoms too before laying him down and unzipping his bodysuit and tugging that off gently, leaving Leolin in just a nappy and Harry shifted him away from the table and he placed him on the carpet on his belly.

Leolin squirmed on his belly and he looked around. Harry looked to the little wings on Leolin’s back and Eitri aborted a move to touch those tiny wings.

“They are beautiful.” Eitri said. “No Faerie has ever had such a colouring. Our wings are usually brown, green or yellow. I can’t fathom where such a colouring came from.”

Harry grinned and he pulled out his own wings, being careful not to knock into Nasta. “From me, and Nasta too.” He said happily as he looked to Leolin’s tiny white and gold wings.

“I see. He will be highly coveted for those colours. You’ll need to keep a very close eye on him.”

Harry nodded as he tucked his own wings back in and he looked to Leolin, who was frowning as he laid on his belly, his head turned to the side.

Harry chuckled at him and he slipped his hands around Leolin’s hips and pulled his bottom into the air. Leolin giggled as he flattened himself out again and Harry repeated his actions and pulled Leolin’s hips back into the air just to hear him giggle.

“Mummy.”

Harry turned to see Calix beside him still and Harry swept him up and kissed him, to much stronger baby giggles.

“Are you okay, Calix?” He asked.

“Want bicket.”

“You want a biscuit?” Harry corrected.

“Yuh.” Calix replied, looking at him expectantly.
“I got it, it’s about time they had their snacks.” Max said.

Of course Farren, having understood what was going on, stood up and he ran out after Max, causing the rest of them to chuckle.

“He…he just ran! I saw him running!” Eitri said, utterly amazed.

“They can all stand up and when they want to, they can run.” Harry explained. “The obvious exception being Ave, Eva and Leolin, of course. Calix does prefer crawling still, and Regan won’t stay on his feet for long, but other than that, they are all very mobile.”

Farren preceded Max into the room, biscuit already in hand and a beaker in his other and Max came back in behind him with a grin on his face and a tray of biscuits, beakers and tea cups. He was using his good set of china, gifted to him as a joke by Caesar that Max actually loved. It was bone white with silver accents and embellishments, the matching pattern was meticulously inlaid with real silver and Max only brought it out when they had company around to entertain.

He left the Faeries to make their tea how they wished, using the matching sugar bowl and milk jug, as he handed out beakers of juice to their five oldest with a biscuit each.

“Ma.”

Harry turned back to Leolin, who was still on his belly, but even as he reached for his Faerie son, to sit him back up on his lap, Leolin used all his strength to push up his upper body, lifting his head so that he could see around him.

Harry grinned proudly as the four Faeries gawped at him like they’d never seen anything like him before in their lives.

Harry placed a hand under Leolin’s chest, to catch him when he would inevitably fall, but he allowed Leolin to remain holding himself up, strengthening himself, until he couldn’t any more.

It took about a minute before Leolin fell and Harry caught him and swooped him up to kiss him and praise him.

“Baba in, eh cana abba.” Tegan babbled.

“That’s right, Tegan. Baby Leolin held himself up for longer than he ever has before!”
Tegan clapped her hands together and Harry grinned at her. He was sure that she understood everything that they were saying, she just didn’t say words as they understood them. She had her own language almost. He was starting to notice it more and more as her brothers started saying recognisable words, but despite having an arsenal of words that only she understood, Tegan also knew a dozen more words than her brothers did and she used them as if she were having a proper conversation with them. Which again was more than her brothers did, as though they were saying recognisable words, they could only string two or three words together in a sentence where Tegan would use five or six of her own words and though they couldn’t really understand her, Tegan knew what she was saying and she was, in her mind, having a proper conversation with them.

Leolin was exhausted from his tummy time and when he yawned and drifted off to sleep in his favourite position, against Harry’s chest with lots and lots of eye contact, Harry handed him over to Kailen to have a cuddle.

He was under the effects of one of his milder potions, so he wasn’t aching just yet, but as he looked at the clock, he knew that it wouldn’t be long before the grinding ache came back and he’d have to live with it for the next couple of hours, until lunchtime, and then he’d be able to take another potion to relieve the pain.

Harry stayed where he was, even as his babies got bored of their colouring and crawled off, looking for their toys to play with. He did collect up all their scribble pictures though.

“You’re not going to keep those, are you?” Max grinned.

“They’re proof of their development!” Harry said seriously as he took a pencil and wrote a name and a date on the back of the pictures. “Of course I’m keeping them. I’m putting them in their own little boxes.”

“Is that what those things are?” Blaise asked.

Harry nodded. “Yes, and these pictures are going straight into each box.” He said proudly.

Nasta kissed the side of his head and Harry smiled.

“I love you.” Harry said easily.

“Love you too, Cariad.” Nasta replied, before he got distracted by their children, who were toddling around beside and behind him.
“Is he truly okay?” Kailen asked as he cradled Leolin, refusing to give him up to Dain.

“He’s absolutely fine and we have taken rather extreme measures to ensure that it does not happen again.” Harry said seriously.

“I notice that one of your lovers is missing. Where is Draco?”

“At his parents’ home.” Harry said mildly, giving nothing away and not willing to air his dirty laundry in front of the Faeries.

“What happened? You were very vague in your letter.” Dain asked.

“What happened is in the past.” Harry said firmly. “We can’t change what happened, no matter how much we all want to. It is already going to take years to get over this and it will never be forgotten without anyone else getting involved. It is our business and our business alone and we have dealt with it.”

“Leolin was injured…!” Dain started but Harry cut him off with a loud, aggravated growl.

“He was not injured!” He hissed. “There was not even a scratch on him. He went to the hospital as a precaution, because we were worried, not because he was injured. You can see him for yourself, he is fine, he is happy, he is growing well and he’s developing so fast that even you are surprised by how well he’s coming on! I will not have it said that he was injured when he wasn’t.”

Nasta nuzzled into the back of his head and kissed him.

“Harry’s right. Leolin wasn’t injured, his overnight trip to the hospital was a mere precaution on our parts to make absolutely sure that he was alright as we’ll take no chances with his health. It was an accident. No one, absolutely no one, set out to purposefully harm or injure him in any way and I am sorry to say that accidents do happen.”

“We more than understand.” Eitri said diplomatically. “It was a mere coincidence that led to us losing eleven babes in our very secure city. Such a thing was thought to be impossible, yet it has happened. It was a devastating accident, but an accident nonetheless. I suppose that we are all so…upset over this incident because Leolin is one of just three babes we have left to our knowledge and he is still the youngest. We want for him to be safe and happy and for him to reach adulthood. The entire city is sending up prayers of health for him and the other two remaining babes.”

“So…” Max began, bringing the attention to himself with Regan climbing his back and Farren sat happily between his legs. “You’re saying that because there are only three Faerie babies left to keep an eye on, that you now have more time to bother us about Leolin?”

Everything was silent for a moment and then Harry laughed and there was suddenly no tension to speak of. Harry could always count on Max to rid the room of any stress or tension. Harry loved him for that.

The Faeries blushed a little and Harry sent a covet wink to Max, who kissed the air in return.

“We just like knowing that he is well and thriving and he is.” Kailen said as he lowered his face to Leolin and pressed a soft kiss to his forehead. “We were so scared when we got the letter that said that he was in the hospital. We thought that…that…”

Kailen trailed off and Harry knew exactly what he’d thought. Leolin being in the hospital had already brought back memories of the first time he’d been admitted. When their little boy had almost died. The two Faeries, who were Leolin’s several times great-grandfathers, had obviously been thinking the worst and Harry understood that.

“He’s going to be fine.” Harry said soothingly. “He went to the hospital as a precaution, you can see for yourselves that there is nothing wrong with him.”

Kailen nodded happily as he gazed at Leolin’s peacefully sleeping face. Dain finally managed to get a cuddle when Kailen was distracted by Tegan clambering up the settee with one of her books and Kailen allowed Dain to take Leolin so that he could quickly hover over Tegan. It made Harry smile before he rested back against Nasta.

“How are you feeling?” He whispered softly. “Are you in pain?”

“A bit.” Harry said easily. “But it’s manageable.”

“Are you sure?” Nasta asked seriously.

Harry just nodded as he smiled at all eight of his children as they played, or slept in Leolin’s case, all around him. He was just so happy and so grateful that they’d all come through that horrifying event with no lasting damage done. It could never, would never happen again. He would die first…though he’d come awfully close to dying this time around and his children had been hurt and terrified. He shook his head. It shouldn’t take him almost dying for them all to realise that what had happened was unacceptable. Thankfully it seemed that his mates had all worked it out on their own while he and Blaise had been hospitalised. They knew that this couldn’t happen again, that they couldn’t risk their children in such a pointless, blatant way. In the end, what had they achieved? Heartache, pain, loss, guilt and what for? Nothing. Absolutely nothing. It had been a pointless fight about nothing and it had led to this…never again.

He would do his all to make it so that they could let this fight go, so that they could remain together as a family, as he’d always wanted, but he’d be damned if this ever happened again. Not to his precious children.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Stretched out on the living room floor with napping children tucked into every part of his body, Harry was able to just relax, even if the Faeries were still hanging around because they weren’t ready to leave just yet.

He didn’t mind. Dain and Kailen were okay, he supposed, but Eitri was hilarious and Harry was truly enjoying his company. Even now his head was pillowed on Eitri’s lower leg and the Faerie didn’t complain at all, instead he was fussing over Tegan, tucked into Harry’s neck, the top of her head touching Eitri’s knee.

“Is he asleep, Eitri?” Harry heard Nasta ask.

A slim hand touched his face, but Harry was content to just lie there.

“I cannot tell.” Eitri answered.

“Harry, love?” Nasta called him softly.

Harry just hummed happily.

“Oh, you are awake.” Nasta said happily. “It’s time for your potion, do you want to be extracted, or would you rather wait a little longer.”
“I’m happy here.” He insisted. “At least for a little while longer.”

“Are you sure?”

Harry just hummed again and he smiled when Eitri’s soft hand slipped into his hair and petted him for a bit before he turned back to Tegan, whom he’d taken a particular liking to after she’d plonked herself in his lap with one of her books and had ‘read’ a story to him. She, like Braiden, had also confused him for Draco for a little while, before realising that Eitri was not her Father, but she liked Eitri all the same. He was someone new for her to read to.

“Harry?” Eitri asked softly, seeing if he was awake but if he wasn’t, he didn’t want to wake him up.

Harry hummed again in question.

“Are you truly going to have more babes very soon?” He asked, as if the possibility was so farfetched that he couldn’t believe it.

Harry hummed again in agreement. “I have a heat period during the first week of July.” He said quietly. “I could get pregnant from that, but if not, it’ll be another two months before I have another heat period. That’ll carry on until I do actually fall pregnant. A heat period every two months.”

“I…could you have another set of five?”

“I bloody well hope not.” Max answered for him and Harry chuckled.

“I could do, yes, but as Max said, I bloody hope not. I believe, when we talked it over, that we wanted nothing more than twins this time.”

“We’d stretch to triplets.” Nasta teased.

“No, my love, I would stretch to hold the triplets.” He joked to a round of genuine laughter.

“We love every single child that you stretch with, that you birth for us.” Blaise insisted from where he was sat on the one settee still.

He was being bribed with coffee and his favourite biscotti and chocolate frogs to keep him sat down and still on that settee. He knew exactly what Max and Nasta were doing now, he’d cottoned on incredibly quickly, and he was playing them at their own game as he made to stand up yet again and, as he’d known that he would, Max leapt up and asked him if he wanted another coffee and more biscotti.

Blaise would sit down again and Max would bring in his coffee and biscuits, a handful of chocolate frogs on the side and it would keep Blaise occupied for at least half an hour while he ate and drank his treats.

It wouldn’t last for much longer and Harry assumed that Blaise knew this too, as Harry could almost see Nasta twitching to take the treats away, he could feel him stressing over how many coffees Blaise had had today, which had to have been in the double digits by now, and paired with the almost full box of chocolate frogs and pack of biscotti that he’d eaten with all those coffees, this would likely be the last time that Blaise got away with his little game. Harry had no idea how he hadn’t needed the bathroom yet with all of those coffees, Blaise must have had a bladder of steel.

Harry grinned as not half an hour later Blaise stood up and he stretched.

“No more coffee today.” Nasta said immediately as Max went to automatically offer it.

“I don’t want anything more.” Blaise said. “I need the bathroom.”

With that he walked out easily and without strain, but then it wasn’t his body that was broken, just his memory and despite that little hiccup, Blaise was perfectly fine to get up and behave as normal. If only their other dominants could understand that beyond their primary response of panic and worry for their injured mates.

Harry did doze off then and he woke when Farren did, as his little boy rolled onto him and pinched his skin between his hand and the carpet. He hissed through his teeth and Nasta was immediately there, gently picking up Farren and handing him over to Max before sorting him out.

“Did he touch your wound, are you okay?”

“No, he didn’t touch the wound, thank god. He caught my skin between his hand and the floor and it pinched.” Harry said drowsily.

“You’ve gone an hour over your time for the potion. How is your pain level?” Max asked him.
“It’s actually not bad.” Harry said consideringly. “I can feel it more now than I could before, but it’s not overwhelming or blinding.”

Max beamed at him proudly and his grin was infectious, Harry couldn’t stop himself from smiling back, even though he was a bit sleepy still.

“It’s a good sign that you can go over your dosage time without feeling too much pain, but I don’t want to push you, so we’ll wake you up with this lovely cup of tea, get you a bit of a late lunch and then you can take the potion before the pain becomes too bad.”

Harry nodded and he carefully sat himself up with Nasta’s help, avoiding all of the still sleeping babies. He was picked up and sat on the settee next to a napping Blaise with a cup of honey tea for him to sip on.

“Did the Faeries leave?” Harry asked, rubbing his eyes.

“Yes, love. They had a prescheduled meeting for one in the afternoon, they left a bit after you finally fell asleep, then Blaise went to sleep too in the quiet. It gave me and Max some more time to get to the old house and move stuff over, though one of us was always here, in this house.” He assured quickly, as if Harry would tear him a new one for leaving him, Blaise and the babies sleeping on their own...actually, thinking on it, he probably wasn’t that far from the truth. The thought of being left alone with only the one, injured, dominant while he, also injured, and his babies slept, it made his belly flip over and his Dracken growled inside him.

“Good call.” He said instead with a small smile.

Nasta pulled him into a hug and kissed him on the mouth. “Neither of us felt comfortable leaving you both. We know that you’re both capable of protecting yourselves, but...”

“But neither of us are at full health or full strength.” Harry pointed out as he drank more tea. “We both know it and we needed the extra, awake and alert, support of you and Max. Thank you.”

Nasta kissed him again before taking his drained mug from him and ushering him into the kitchen, where Max was putting a bowl of soup on the table for him, Farren clamouring around his knees, begging for a biscuit.
“Where’s my gorgeous boy?” Harry cooed.

“Right here.” Max said with a very serious face. “How can you not see me? I’m right in front of you!”

Harry scoffed and rolled his eyes, but he smiled too.

“Muma, bisky.”

“You want another biscuit?” Harry cooed and Farren nodded his head at him, coming to pester about his knees instead. “How many has he had today?” Harry asked Max and Nasta.

“Two.” Max answered immediately.

“Three hours until their dinners. One more won’t ruin his appetite.” He insisted as he went to the cupboard, Farren following him, clamouring to be picked up, but Harry couldn’t quite manage to pick up his biggest, heaviest baby, not just yet.

He took the rusks out of the cupboard and opened the box, Farren getting more and more excited as he realised that he was getting a biscuit after all. Harry handed him the rusk and Farren immediately jammed it in his mouth, gnawing on it with his teeth, biting hard.

“Muma, ta.”

Harry shook his head, but he smiled and bent slightly, as much as he was able, to kiss Farren. Idris had taught the kids to say ‘ta’ instead of thank you. Nasta had told him that it was common in Wales to say ‘ta’ in place of thank you. Harry thought it was adorable.

He sat down to eat his own lunch, a simple bowl of soup, and he was only eating that because he needed to eat something to line his stomach so that he could take his potion.

He was surprised that the pain he felt was not much worse. It was actually rather manageable today and he was doing well, but Max was right, he did not want to push himself. Tomorrow would be another day and if today was just a fluke, then he would pay double for not taking his potions when tomorrow the pain would likely hit him like a two ton weight.

He ate the soup, all of it, and he was so proud of himself that he went in search of praise and love like a toddler himself. A small, simple bowl of soup it may have been, but it was still the very first thing that he’d been able to finish since the incident.

“Well done, love.” Max said happily as he took his empty bowl from him and replaced it with his potion.

“We’re very proud of you.” Nasta told him, knowing exactly what he wanted to hear. “We love you, Harry.”

He grinned like a fool, at least until he swallowed down his potion and gagged on it. Both his mates rushed to ease him through it, lest he ruin his, very recent, accomplishment by throwing up the potion and the food he’d eaten.

One hand rubbed his belly, another his back and he had a hand on his shoulder and another on his neck, two men whispering soothingly to him, calming him down as his gorge kept rising and threatening to undo absolutely every little milestone that he’d made thus far.

Thankfully he managed to calm himself down, with the help of his two dominants, and he kept his stomach where it was meant to be. He felt wrung out and drained afterwards though and he was tucked up on the settee, opposite Blaise, and he was encouraged to rest.

“That could have gone better.” He rasped.

“Shush, you’re doing just fine.” Max told him, placing a cup of tea down on the table and holding out a glass of cool water.

Harry took small sips of water, letting it sooth his throat and stomach. He sighed happily.

“Better?” Max asked with a small, worried frown.

“Better.” Harry agreed.

Max kissed his mouth before putting the water on the table and offering the tea instead.
“Just stay still for me, love.”

Harry nodded and he curled himself back into the settee with his cup of tea and he rested, testing his belly with small sips of tea before he was able to drink it more normally when it didn’t aggravate anything or cause the urge to vomit to rise again. He was getting better, both he and Blaise were recovering and getting better and they were making progress with Max and Draco. It helped that they still loved each other very deeply. This incident had damaged their trust, but it had not ruined their love, not completely, not yet and if Harry had his way, then not ever. This would not ruin them, he wouldn’t allow it.

--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

When his heat drew closer, his Healers were there twice a day to assess him and his recovery, making sure that he wouldn’t do more damage with his heat. It could be held off for a few days, but he would feel like he was caught in an open fire…he remembered the last time that he’d had his heat held back by potions, when he’d almost lost Braiden and he had needed to have his heat held off to stabilise his unborn baby, and he refused to go through that again.

So he had little choice but to sit down and rest as much as was possible. He could browbeat his mates into letting him up and wander around, into letting him hold and play with his children. The Healers on the other hand would not be cowed or moved by his pleading and he couldn’t use sex or allure to move them either. Trying to get up when Healer Alfred Grant was there…Harry shook his head, he had a better chance of being voted the public face of the Drackens of Britain.

“Stop moving.” Jackson Moore ordered.

Harry stared at the man, horrified. “I was just shifting my weight!” He complained.

“Don’t.” The Healer told him sternly as he checked more readings from whatever diagnostic spells he’d already cast.

Harry huffed and he sat perfectly still…for all of a minute.

“Harry, stay still.” Healer Moore looked up to tell him.

“I’m uncomfortable.” He admitted.
The Healer’s eyes narrowed, trying to discern if he was lying or not, but he wasn’t. Jackson stood up and helped Harry to move, lying him down and putting him in the most comfortable position.

“Is that better?” He asked and Harry nodded. “Good, now don’t move.”

Harry couldn’t wait until the Healer left, but Nasta had started taking direction from them and with him, Max followed. He was back to being stuck on a settee and having anything and everything done for him, though he absolutely refused to allow anyone to help him go to the bathroom. That is where he had drawn the line and he would not have it crossed. Not even the strict Healers had been able to curb him of that as he point blank refused them all.

He fell asleep. It seemed all he was doing lately was bloody sleeping, but apparently this was a good thing as blood and sleep helped him to heal much quicker. It didn’t help that it was incredibly boring lying down and not being able to move. He’d tried to watch TV too, but daytime TV was so fucking boring that it often put him to sleep much quicker.

When he woke up again only an hour had passed, but Healer Moore was gone, that was something at least.

“Nasta?” He called out uncertainly. “Max? Blaise?”

“Right here, love.” Max answered, bending over the settee to smile at him. “You look stunning all sleepy and tousled.”

Harry smiled tiredly. “I can’t believe I’ve woken up even more tired than when I went to sleep. It’s not fair.”

“You’re healing, gorgeous. We want you back to full sex strength as soon as possible.” Max winked.

Harry burst out laughing and it tugged on some still sore muscles in his belly. “Oh ow.” He complained, but he was still laughing.

“See! We can’t ravish you like you deserve in this condition!”

That made Harry giggle more, before he rubbed his face and lifted his arms up.
“Tea?” Max guessed.

“Tea.” Harry agreed with a small nod.

Max picked him up, straining no more than if he’d picked up a teacup yorkie, and Max carried him to the kitchen where Blaise was slumped on the table holding his head with Nasta sat beside him looking worried.

“Stop fussing.” Blaise said, his voice very gravelly and rough.

“You’re supposed to be watching Har…oh.” Nasta sighed, seeing him in Max’s arms. “Are you okay, Harry?”

“Yes. Blaise, are you okay, love?” He asked.

“I’ve got a bad headache, it made me sick, which made the headache even worse.” Blaise told him.

Max placed him next to Blaise and Harry snuggled in, kissing Blaise’s cheek before using his slim fingers to massage his mate’s temples exactly how he knew Blaise liked. His first mate groaned happily.

“I tried that and made it worse.” Nasta said.

“Harry’s fingers are smaller and he naturally has a lighter touch.” Blaise explained.

“So…you’re saying I have the magic touch?” Harry said with a grin.

Max laughed, muffling himself in respect for Blaise’s headache. He put two cups of tea on the table and tempted Blaise’s head up with a coffee. Nasta gave him a hard look, but Max ignored him. It seemed his oldest dominants were at odds with one another…again.
Harry had had enough of them being at each other’s throats over such stupid things. Such things never mattered. What truly mattered was love and family. The bond they had with one another, with their child…ren.

“Where are the kids and who is watching them?” Harry asked.

“In the smaller living room with Aneirin, they’re all playing happily.” Max told him. “You have time for a cup of tea and then you can have a second in the room with them. I’m going to get dinner on now that you’re awake.”

“Have they all…”

“They’ve all eaten very happily, nothing new today, and Leolin has taken his bottle, though he left rather a bit, so once he’s seen you, I’ll see if he wants a bit more.” Max explained, nodding to the little bottle on the counter.

“I can get him to eat more.”

“The Healers said not to lift any of them, not even Leolin.” Nasta said softly.

Harry curbed the automatic desire to shout, scream and rage about the very thought of not holding or feeding his own children, but out of love and respect for Blaise he didn’t. Instead he thought of a solution, something they could do to help Leolin to actually eat, but didn’t upset his mates over his recovery and he had an epiphany.

“What if you or Max sat behind me and held Leolin, so that he can see me feeding him and believes it’s me who’s holding him?” He asked almost in a whisper, half expecting to be automatically shot down on principle.

It was quiet for a moment, as Harry remained massaging Blaise’s temples.

“I think that might work.” Nasta said after several silent minutes. “It might just trick Leolin if he hasn’t developed enough to realise the difference between your arm and someone else’s, especially as he’ll be against your chest and looking at your face and eyes. He always looks at your eyes, he loves the colour of them.”
“We all love the colour of them.” Max corrected as he kissed Harry’s temple as he walked past, going to the fridge.

“What’s for dinner?” Harry asked.

“Something light.” Max insisted. “Poached salmon, steamed new potatoes and green veg. I’m making a lemon and parsley sauce for it too. You’ll only have a little portion.” Max assured him as he caught sight of Harry’s face. “Farren’ll have eaten more than you today, I promise.”

“You know the absolute worst thing about all this is?” He declared several minutes later, when he’d finished Blaise’s head massage.

“You can’t play or pick up the kids?” His first mate said.

“Okay, the second worst thing.” Harry grinned.

“No, what?” Nasta asked him.

“I can’t stuff my face like usual.” He lamented. “I can’t have biscuits, I can’t have cakes, I can’t eat my chocolate. I can barely stomach normal food, let alone all my yummy treats. At least I can still have honey tea, otherwise I would have hit the roof.”

His mates laughed and shook their heads at him, but he felt better for having made them laugh. It’s what was needed now, in the last leg of their recovery…laughter, and plenty of it.

Harry finished his tea and Max made him another one and carried him through to the littler living room, to find Aneirin on the floor, babies all around him playing. Harry laughed and it immediately drew every single person’s attention to him.

“Mummy!”

“Muma!”
Of course Leolin was the most demanding in his calls, but the other children were mobile, so they could come to him whereas Leolin couldn’t. When Harry had to hug and kiss every child before him, Leolin got very jealous and he started to cry furiously. When Harry finally got to him and picked him up, he got a hard smack to the face for his trouble.

“Ow!” Harry hissed as Leolin caught his eye.

Max had the baby straight off of him and hefted him over a shoulder, ushering Harry to sit down.

“That might even bruise!” Max declared with a growl that he couldn’t entirely help.

“Bloody Faeries.” Harry chuckled. “That’s what I get for picking him up when I’m not allowed to.”

“Damn right.” Max tried, then frowned at himself and shook his head. “No, I can’t even make light of it…it’s too close to what happened, anything that hurts you, even minorly, I can’t stand. Just…just sit down and let me hold you for a moment.”

Harry did as was asked and he allowed Max to hold him, blocking out Leolin’s cries and screams of anger and frustration as Max pinned him gently in place over his shoulder.

“Let me see him, don’t punish him when he’s too young to understand, Max.” Harry said gently and Max nodded, took a deep breath, before he turned Leolin down in his arms and shifted himself behind Harry, pulling him to rest against his chest and laying a kiss on top of his head, even as his arm held Leolin to Harry’s chest.

Leolin’s brain registered movement and he stopped crying. He slitted open his gold eyes, his eyelashes clumping together with his tears. He saw who was above him and his eyes fully opened. When gold met green he grinned and lifted both hands up to him.

“Ma!” He exclaimed.

“Yes, love. You hurt me so Daddy Max took you away.” Harry told him sternly. “That was naughty and you mustn’t do it again!”

Leolin blinked at him, registering his different tone of voice, and he lowered his arms. He stopped grinning and he just looked at him, before looking down at his own hands.

“I think he truly understands what you just said!” Aneirin said in amazement.

Harry, a little disturbed by this, nuzzled Leolin’s face.

“I love you still.” He said with a smile and once he’d registered that he’d been forgiven, Leolin grinned too.

Max nudged him with the bottle of warmed milk and Harry took it, remembering why they were doing this. He offered the milk to Leolin and encouraged him to drink it, all the while telling his little Faerie how much he loved him.

Leolin fell asleep on the bottle and Harry took it out of his gummy mouth gently and handed it back to Max before he tried to snuggle his son as much as he could when he wasn’t actually holding him.

“Come here, I have an idea.” Max said as he slipped out from behind him with Leolin.

Harry was pushed and dragged until he was lying down and then Leolin was laid over his chest and Harry grinned so widely, so happily, that Max smiled and kissed him.

“Have your cuddle, but then he’s going into his cot. He needs to get used to it.”

Harry nodded his understanding. It had been his idea after all, to put Leolin in his cot, though the entire thing was warded to prevent his tiny son from slipping down the side, between the mattress and the cot bars.

It had been his idea to put the little potty in the middle of the room too. He looked at it and he smiled to see it surrounded by toys and teddies. It was so that his children could get used to it without it being demonised or seen as a horror when the time came to teach his babies how to use it. Braiden would be the first, because he was getting shy about people changing him and he had started to hide when he was filling a nappy, behind chairs, under tables, behind curtains, in the toy box…it was time to get him potty trained.

Harry fell asleep himself, only for ten minutes, but when he woke back up, Leolin was gone and the kids were all gone too. He looked at the time just to make sure that several hours hadn’t passed. They hadn’t.

“They’ve been taken upstairs for their bedtime story.” Aneirin told him, seeing him awake and coming to clue him in.

Harry nodded and waved his arms in the air, one of his non-verbal signs that he wanted to sit up. He’d gotten much better at it now that he was coming to the very end of his recovery and he’d been told that if he did everything that he was supposed to then it would be two weeks at the very most before he was back on his feet and able to bend and lift…it would be some weeks more after this before he was fully back to normal though.

Aneirin chuckled and lifted him up gently and snuggled him into the corner of the settee, resting him back against the arm of it. Harry yawned and rubbed his eyes.

“I was only asleep for ten minutes, how can I be so groggy?” He complained, even when he knew it was the fault of his potions.

“Do you want some tea? Max is in the kitchen.”

“Pumpkin juice, please?” Harry asked. “My throat is really dry.” Again this was the fault of his potions.

“Of course, let me get it for you, love.”

Harry had to wait just two minutes for Aneirin to come back with a tall glass of pumpkin juice and Harry gulped it down in hard swallows, he was that thirsty.

“Do you want another glass?” Aneirin asked him with a smile.

Harry nodded. “Please. I’d get it myself, but I’d probably have my head served to me on a platter.”

“I don’t mind.” Aneirin assured him. “We just want you to be better now.”
“I want that too.” Harry insisted. “It’s just…it’s hard not to automatically pick up my children… when I can’t even hold or hug them. I don’t like it.”

“It won’t be for much longer.” Aneirin insisted. “A month or two and you’ll be back to running around and wrestling and whatever else you do that I have no wish to know of.”

It took Harry a moment to realise what was being alluded to and then he laughed.

“Yes, that is off the cards since Blaise and I got into trouble. Do you know that since then we haven’t been left alone with one another? You’d think that we were sex crazed nymphos or something that rut with one another as soon as their backs are turned.”

Aneirin laughed then too.

“The thing is they’re not entirely wrong.” Harry said with a grin. “As long as I’m in the mood and Blaise is too, of course. It’s usually the beauty of having four mates, if you want sex, there are four of them to ask. If one doesn’t want sex, the chances are that one of the others will. But like this, with Draco at his parents and Max and Nasta treating us with kid gloves, I only have Blaise to turn to. If he doesn’t want sex…I have no one else to turn to.”

“When do I ever not want sex?” Came Blaise’s voice and Harry grinned as his mate came around the side of the settee and into his line of vision.

“It can happen.” Harry replied.

“Not often.” Blaise snorted.

Blaise sat next to him on the settee and pulled him into a tight hug.

“I’ll get you that pumpkin juice, Blaise do you want one too?”

Blaise nodded. “Please. I could use a drink.”
When Aneirin was gone, Blaise turned back to him. “So, when have I ever refused you sex, Bello?”

“There have been a few times that you’ve said no.” Harry reminded him.

“Hmm, I suppose I’ll have to make up for this. I cannot have you going around saying that I do not completely satisfy you.”

Harry laughed and wrapped his arms around Blaise tight.

“As soon as we’re both better.” Harry insisted. “I can’t do anything until my heat period in two weeks. If I compromise any part of my recovery now then it could mean that the heat period is painful and damaging, I can’t risk it. I’ve had enough of this slow, steady recovery, enough of being treated like an invalid. I can’t stand it.”

“I know.” Blaise told him gently. “I feel the same and I wasn’t even sliced open as you were.”

“How is your head now?”

“Much better. The headaches are the worst, yet…if I could change one thing it would be the lapses of memory. I have always prided myself on my intelligence, on my grades and on my memory. I hate saying something when I know that I mean to say something else, when I know what I’m trying to say, but it won’t come out properly or I can’t form the thought into words in my head. It’s so frustrating.”

“Healer Odell is happy with your progress, even if you aren’t.” Harry told him. “We love you and we will always support you through anything and everything. We’re mates, we’re bonded closer together than any marriage. Us four, me, Max, Draco and Nasta, we will always be with you, Blaise. We will always hear one another’s distress calls, I will always call to the four of you on a heat period, we are always going to be a family. This little bump of ours will not change that, we’re all going to recover, given some time, and we’ll all get over it because I said so!”

That last made Blaise go from serious faced, to laughing. “I suppose it helps that I don’t remember anything.” He said once he’d calmed down. “I don’t remember that day, I don’t remember the fight or what happened, to me or to you. I’m angry at Draco for what I’ve heard he’s done, because I can see the aftermath of it.” Blaise said hovering his hand over where Harry’s wound was. “But…but any true emotions linked to the event are not first hand. It would have been much more…much stronger if I’d have remembered, I know that. Whatever emotions I felt that day, throughout the fight, are lost to me and I hope that I never remember. What use are those thoughts and emotions to me now?” He asked.

Harry snuggled in closer and he nuzzled his lips over the fading bruise on Blaise’s head, which was still slightly bumped from the powerful blow it had taken. It was healing, slowly, but it was still healing, as he himself was.

“Are you two okay?” Max asked, bringing in two glasses of pumpkin juice.

“We’re okay. Where did Aneirin go?”

“He was paged so he had to go.” Max said. “So I get to go back to looking after my two beautiful mates.”

Harry grinned at him and took his glass of juice and gulped it down again.

“Aneirin said that you’d done that the first time, are you okay?” Max asked worriedly.

“Just thirsty.” Harry replied. “Those potions taste so disgusting that I don’t really like drinking anything now. So I’m drinking less.”

Max’s eyes widened as he realised the truth of that and he came to hunch in front of him.

“I’m okay.” Harry insisted quickly. “I just hate those vile potions.”

“I never noticed that you were drinking less. As a trained Potions Master I knew that this is sometimes a side effect of prolonged periods of taking potions and I didn’t even notice it in one of the people closest to me. I should have seen it.”

“It’s fine.” Harry insisted.

“I’m going to keep a closer eye on you now that I know.”
“I don’t actually think that’s possible.” Harry said.

Blaise laughed, but Max remained silent and serious.

“I’m not going to take any chances with your health.” He said. “I need to watch your fluid intake now.”

“Why, what’s happened?” Nasta asked as he came into the room.

“Harry’s been drinking less because of the potions.”

Nasta came and kissed his forehead. “We’ll keep an eye on it, but Max, I think dinner’s burning and if I try to help then you know that I’ll only make it worse.”

Max cursed and he leapt up, hurrying into the kitchen.

“I think dinner was ready five minutes ago. Come on.” Nasta smiled, picking Harry up and assisting Blaise.

They were ushered through the hallway, carried in Harry’s case, and they were settled at the table while Max plated up the food, thankfully none of it had burnt or been overcooked, and he served them. He gave Harry a third full glass of pumpkin juice and this time Harry sipped it and savoured it as he ate.

As he was promised, he had the smallest piece of salmon, the smallest amount of potatoes and the smallest serving of peas, broccoli and green beans, but still he struggled to eat everything on his plate. He hated that too…that he couldn’t eat as he wanted to, or even what he wanted to, as he’d said earlier, he couldn’t afford to fill himself with empty calories, such as cakes, chocolate or other sweet treats, he had to fill up on normal, nutritious food as it was all he could eat at the moment. He sighed and played with the few little morsels left on his plate. He couldn’t eat any more or he’d be sick and lose everything that he’d already eaten, but he didn’t want to leave such a small, paltry amount on his plate.

“Give this to me.” Max said, taking his plate from him. “You don’t want it anymore and I don’t want you to torture yourself looking at it.”
“I want to eat that last little bit, you know I hate wasting food, but I’m going to be sick if I do eat it.” He sighed.

Max put the plate down and he used his fingers to eat the last few bits on the plate and Harry was so shocked that he just watched him in silence until he was done and the plate was clean…then he laughed.

“There we go, no more wasting food and you haven’t stuffed yourself to the point of being sick.” Max said with a wide, smug grin at having helped Harry out of his predicament.

“Thank you.” Harry said genuinely.

“No problem my beautiful, little lover.” Max said happily. “Do you want tea or a quiet sit down?”

“I need a quiet sit down for now, please. Just leave me here, I feel like if I’m going to be sick if I move too much.”

Max sighed heavily and he brought down his potions’ case. Harry heard the tinkling and clinking of numerous vials being nudged around as Max’s large hands looked for a specific potion and when it was put down, Harry saw from the neat little label on the front that it was a stomach settler.

Max helped him to drink it down and though it made him gag, it made him feel so much better as it got to work and it got rid of the bubbling feeling in his belly that was making him feel so sick, as if merely moving was going to have him bringing up his dinner.

Max moved him then to the smaller living room with Nasta and Blaise. They were snuggled up in the settee nest and Max placed him down gently and Harry crawled over to snuggle up with his mates. Max joined them only a moment later and they all cuddled up together, Blaise was already dozing, partly asleep, Harry was not too far behind as he was dosed up on potions. It was nice, but not normal and he needed normal more than anything, especially with his heat period just two weeks away.

Draco had had a small slip up with his anger management classes. It was only a small blip, but it still hit Harry hard. He had known that it was never going to be plain sailing, that none of this was going to be easy, but when he saw how hard Blaise was trying to recover, when he saw the stress and strain on Max and Nasta as they tried to do everything that needed to be done while still holding down high demanding jobs, when he knew exactly how hard he was pushing himself to recover, he shook his head in disappointment. It still felt like a blow to the gut…of which he now knew felt incredibly painful.

Draco had gotten up and walked out of one of his classes because he’d gotten so angry that he’d lost all reason it seemed. With his heat period just days away, the blow came more powerful than if it had happened a few weeks ago right at the beginning. Likely because he’d been so happy, so excited for this heat period, hoping that it could mend them all and bring them closer together, now that hope seemed as distant as the moon. Nasta was furious with Draco and Max snarled if his name was mentioned. What was worse was that Blaise was now angry at Draco, because he could remember this incident, he knew how much Draco needed these classes and Draco had just upped and left one.

He was angry himself, but he needed things to be better, so much so that he was trying to calm everyone down and get them to see that a small slip didn’t mean much.

“You’re deluding yourself, Harry.” Max snapped. “If he doesn’t love us enough to do these classes then he doesn’t deserve a family!”

“He walked out of one class!” Harry shouted back. “He walked out of one class and he sent an owl to apologise and insist that he’ll be there the next time! We knew it wasn’t going to be easy for any of us, but he’s had one slip up! You’ll see when he comes tomorrow, you’ll see that he’s better!”

“He’s not coming tomorrow.” Nasta told him.

That knocked the wind from his sails and he blinked, before panic seized his heart and he felt like he couldn’t breathe.

“Wha…you can’t do that! You know he looks forward to seeing us twice a week, you can’t tell him that he can’t come!”

“I’m not rewarding his lack of progress.” Nasta said sternly. “He walked out of a class, he doesn’t get to see us.”

“You can’t punish him like this, it’s cruel!” Harry raged, his breathing coming faster, his heart hammering in his throat.

“I’m not going to reward him for walking out of a class.” Nasta growled. “He knew the deal, if he went to all his classes and actually learnt from them, then he could come and see us, he’s up and walked out of one, Harry. The deal is broken.”
“My heat period is in a few days.” Harry whimpered.

“Which makes his timing all the worse.” Max declared. “If he can’t man up and go to these classes and stick with them, I’ll never forgive.”

“Please.” Harry begged.

“No.” Nasta said and Harry’s heart rate picked up until he could feel the blood rushing through his ears.

He let out a soft pleading noise.

“No.” Max echoed Nasta.

All his muscles contracted all at once and though his heart was hammering, he couldn’t breathe, his mouth was open, but he couldn’t draw in any breath at all. He made another soft sound, this one of confusion, before his vision blurred, and then blacked out as he fainted, hitting his head on the solid wooden coffee table before his startled mates could even try to catch him.

Harry woke up to soft voices and gentle, experienced hands checking him over. He was used to this and he knew that his mates had called to the Dracken Halls for a specialist Healer.

“Harry, can you hear me?” Came the soft, patient voice of Georgio Alessandri. It felt like he was seeing more of the man than his mate, Clara, was.

“Grawp.” Harry smiled, his eyes still closed.

“You see what you’ve done!” Came Blaise’s angry voice little above a whisper. “You’ve made him knock himself stupid! I can’t believe that you both let this happen!”

Harry blinked open his eyes and he hissed as the bright sunlight seared his eyeballs, even as he immediately screwed them closed tight to try and block out the pain.
“Hmm, I suppose that answers the question of whether or not you’re sensitive to light. How is sound for you? Am I speaking too loudly?”

Harry shook his head slowly and carefully.

“How about now?” And Georgio sounded like he’d yelled right in his ear and Harry flinched away, staring at him in utter betrayal. “I’ll take that look as a yes.” He said, back in his soft, quiet voice, noting it down on the clipboard resting on one of those huge, tree trunk thighs.

“What happened?” Harry whispered himself.

“You had a panic attack, Harry.” Georgio explained. “You fainted from lack of oxygen and you’ve hit your head on the table.”

Harry slitted open his eyes for a third time, trying to see past the glare of light and it took a bit of time, but his eyes finally adjusted and Georgio sighed.

“His pupils are different sizes. He has a concussion.” He explained as he wrote something else on his clipboard.

“I feel sick.” Harry said.

“Another sign of serious concussion.” Georgio directed at his mates angrily as he put the clipboard down and rolled him onto his side, conjuring a bucket to put under him. Not a moment later Harry was retching into it. “He has a heat period in a few days.” The Healer said in a furious whisper. “How could you have been so stupid as to deny him access to one of his mates when he’s so close to a heat period?! You’re lucky he just panicked and passed out and didn’t just outright kill you!”

Harry breathed deeply once he’d finished vomiting and he let out a broken sob from the pain in his head and the rawness of his throat.

“There we go, Harry. It’s alright.” Georgio soothed calmly and gently and it actually made him feel better. Wanting more of this nice, calm comfort, he held his arms out to Georgio and the huge dominant pulled him into a soothing hug. Harry clung to him like a limpet, or like a small child who was trying to hide from the monsters under the bed.
Georgio stood up, holding him closer. “Under article nineteen of the Submissive Protection Act, I, a Healer of the Counsel Halls, am hereby stripping you of the care of this submissive in question, Harry James Potter.”

“You can’t do that!” Max burst out, his face stark white.

“Until such a time that you can prove that you can actually care for him and not abuse him, it is my right to remove him from your care if I feel it is necessary. Good day.”

The floo trip made Harry moan, but he soon found himself changed into light pyjamas and tucked up in a soft bed.

“What has happened? It didn’t seem so serious when Mister Delericey called.” Alfred Grant asked Georgio, having followed him from the fireplace in the Healing Hall reception area.

The big man gave him a grave look as he settled Harry down, petting his hair and stroking his face until he drifted off into sleep.

“Why have his mates not come with him?” Aelia Robins, a young trainee Healer, asked cautiously.

“I have stripped them of the care of this submissive, under the Submissive Protection Act.” Georgio explained heavily.

“They’ve had a few downhill slides, but surely this is extreme, Georgio.” Jackson Moore declared.

“They caused him to have a panic attack, their own submissive.” Georgio sighed, scrubbing a hand through his hair. “I just...how many incidents have this one mateship had in just a little over a month? I can’t see him suffer anymore.”

“I’ll send the guards to collect his children.” Alfred Grant sighed.

“I’ll set up the nursery.” Aelia said, turning around to set up six cots and two bassinets in the closed off room that led from the one they were currently in. Georgio had placed Harry in one of the biggest rooms that were always reserved for Submissives with children.

“I suppose I had better go and tell Elder Vipond that he has a guest.” Jackson said, turning and following Alfred Grant out of the room.

“I’m sorry for this, Harry.” Georgio said softly to the sleeping boy. “But you’ve been hurt so often and I just can’t see you hurt again. I’m hoping that this is the kick they need, but if it’s not, then you’ll be better off without such abusive dominants. You’re such a sweet boy, but if you stay with them then I’m so scared that you’re going to end up dead. They need to learn that just because you’re a male, that doesn’t mean that you aren’t still a submissive. They can’t treat you like you’re another dominant because you’re not. Just…just rest now, we’ll get your babies to you soon, the Elders are being informed, everything will work out. I promise.”

Georgio watched Harry sleep, until a group of pinch faced Elders came hurrying into the room.

“What has happened?” The Head Elder, Anthanaric Vipond, asked.

“I have removed this submissive from the care of his dominants until such a time that they learn to look after him properly.”

“Harry, oh sweet one.” Elder Quintalus Trintus gasped. “What has happened, Georgio?”

“They caused him to have a panic attack and he hit his head on the table. I just…I can’t keep seeing him hurt. Something in their mateship is seriously wrong or twisted if they can keep doing this to one another. I would die before I caused my submissive to have a panic attack, I would cut off my own hands before I hurt her…what is wrong with these dominants that allows them to hurt Harry and keep hurting him over and over?”

“They will all go for assessment and we will find the problem.” Elder Vipond said sternly. “Henry, you are likely the best man to get that sorted out…I will inform Myron Maddison myself of his son’s behaviours. Aneirin Delericey and Marianna Lychorinda too. None of them will be happy.”

A group of a dozen guards came in, carrying softly sleeping children, and they were immediately placed into the cots or bassinets. None of them had been awoken.
“How did the dominants take the removal?”

“Badly, as always, but they did not impede us in any way, they knew it was coming and they gave us a bag of things for the children.” One guard, the group leader, answered. “The youngest one begged us not to take them, pleaded for us to bring Harry back. He was held securely by his own dominant. They are all shaken and bone pale. I think this has hit them hard.”

“As I wanted it to.” Georgio nodded. “They can’t keep hurting him or there will be a fatality the next time. It was already too close with his stomach wound, but the way he clung to me when I gave him a kind word, the way he clutched at me as if I were the only raft in the ocean, he didn’t feel safe with them and I don’t blame him.”

“You did the right thing, Georgio. We cannot leave any submissives in an ‘at risk’ home. Those dominants will not get him back until they all pass their assessments.” Anthanaric insisted.

“I’ll go and sort that out then, the sooner the better with the boy’s heat period approaching.” Henry Kirrian said, his face furious and grave. He sent the tiny boy in the bed one last protective look before he turned and stormed out.

“I’ll go and inform the families of what has transpired. With some luck they will be able to cow their children into realising how serious this is before the assessment takes place. If they all pass, then Harry will be back with them soon, if that is what he wishes, of course.”

Georgio was left with Harry and eight very young babies, all under two years old. He sighed and he did feel terrible for removing Harry from his home and from his mates, the children from their home and Fathers, but this couldn’t continue. They couldn’t continue to have a report in about Harry getting injured every week or so and continue to do nothing about it.

Those dominants needed to learn how to look after their submissive properly, or very soon there was going to be a death within their mateship, and, looking to Harry in the bed and the eight babies sleeping peacefully with their Mother, if it was any one in this room, Georgio knew that he would never have forgiven himself if he hadn’t done this and had left Harry and his children in that house and one of them had been killed. This was the best solution…the only solution in his mind, even if it was as temporary as a few days separation.

They all needed to know that this was unacceptable and that they couldn’t treat Harry in such a manner or he would be removed from them and it would be a permanent removal now if they had to invoke the Submissive Protection Act for a second time concerning their mateship. None of them wanted to see that come about to any mateship in this sort of situation, but that didn’t mean that they wouldn’t do it if they felt that it was needed for Harry’s, or his children’s, protection. This could not keep happening, not while he was the one who had to mop Harry up and keep healing his injuries afterwards. It was disgusting sometimes, seeing the damage that dominant Drackens could and did do to their own submissives and their children. He wouldn’t see the same happen to Harry, he was going to nip this in the bud, here and now, before it ever reached that point. Hopefully, after all of this, those dominants would never raise a hand to Harry ever again and they would never cause him such distress as to give him a full blown panic attack either. He had done the right thing, this situation could not be allowed to continue and now, it wouldn’t continue, he had prevented that and everything was going to turn out just fine, of that he truly believed.

----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I just can’t seem to be able to prevent myself from torturing these poor boys. On the last leg of their journey now, though. Harry’s heat period is in the next chapter and that’ll help get them all back on track.

Don’t worry about this little assessment, Georgio was doing it more to prove a point than through any real fear of Max or Nasta being abusive. That Harry felt safer with him, in his arms, as opposed to his own dominants, that is what made up his mind. He’s come to care for Harry a great deal through looking after him, then his mate’s baby brother is one of Harry’s friends too, but he just couldn’t see Harry being hurt anymore, this concussion was the last straw for him after Harry was almost gutted. He never wants to see such an injury on Harry ever again, so he’s nipping it here and now, for good.

Anyway, let me know what you lovelies think, I’ll be back soon with another chapter, but another Scaled Bits chapter first, though before that Lycanthrope Factory, see you then, lovelies,

StarLight Massacre. X
Waiting Games

Chapter Notes

A/N: For Jenny, one of the Facebookers. Happy birthday, lovelie! I hope you enjoy your gift.

Last Time

This could not keep happening, not while he was the one who had to mop Harry up and keep healing his injuries afterwards. It was disgusting sometimes, seeing the damage that dominant Drackens could and did do to their own submissives and their children. He wouldn’t see the same happen to Harry, he was going to nip this in the bud, here and now, before it ever reached that point. Hopefully, after all of this, those dominants would never raise a hand to Harry ever again and they would never cause him such distress as to give him a full blown panic attack either. He had done the right thing, this situation could not be allowed to continue and now, it wouldn’t continue, he had prevented that and everything was going to turn out just fine, of that he truly believed.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Five – Waiting Games

Myron Maddison was not often left speechless, his mate and Husband, Richard, certainly wasn’t used to not having something to say, but truly, what could they say here, in this situation, when they’d just been told that their son was under investigation by the Elders for cruelty and mistreatment of his submissive mate.

“Surely you’re mistaken.” Richard said desperately, his voice strained and wobbly because of his emotions playing havoc with his scar tissue. “Max would never harm Harry! Never!”

“Harry has been injured yet again.” The Head of the Dracken Counsel himself, ancient Anthanaric Vipond, said seriously. “He is once again in the Healing Halls and we cannot allow this to keep happening, you know that. Harry, the poor boy, has a very bad concussion following a panic attack that was the direct result of his dominant mates’ actions. One of our Healers rightly invoked the Submissive Protection Act and thus Harry and the children were removed from that environment.”

“I can’t…I can’t even believe it, so soon after that belly wound.” Richard said softly. “They know what Harry has already been through!”
“We had hoped that you could explain to your Maximilius exactly how serious this is, before the assessment is conducted, so that he has a better chance of passing it. None of us at the Halls want to see a mateship pulled apart if there is an option of reconciliation.”

Myron clenched his fist and he sucked in a huge breath. “You know that I will take him to hand.” He said gravely.

“See that you do, Myron. Another instance like this and Harry could be permanently removed or your son could be executed.”

Myron heard Richard suck in a sharp breath and he offered his hand to support him.

“We will deal with this.” Myron said firmly.

“I must go and inform Aneirin and Marianna. Though as I’m told that her Blaise was not directly involved in either instances of Harry being harmed, then I shouldn’t imagine him being separated from his submissive or children for long.”

Myron saw Elder Vipond to the floo on automatic and after the goodbyes, he turned to Richard with a face of thunder.

“I’ll kill him.” He swore. “I’ll kill that boy myself, Richard!”

“Get in line.” Richard growled. “Working on Harry’s case, going through the court case with him and now on his behalf, hearing those people speak of him as they are, like he’s some sort of mentally subnormal delinquent. You haven’t had to sit there and listen to these people, you haven’t seen the pictures that I have, Myron. You haven’t seen the injuries they gave to that poor boy, the pictures of his scars and injuries, the st…state of his living conditions.” Richard broke off of a sob. “Our own son is abusing an already abused boy. I can’t…what did we do wrong? First Ashleigh, now Max… did we fail at everything?”

Myron strode forward and pulled Richard into his arms, soothing his mate and stroking his back as Richard covered his mouth and nose with a hand and cried into his chest, Richard’s other hand was wrapped around him, holding him desperately.

Myron clutched his mate to his body tightly and offered him silent, calm comfort as Richard cried out the emotions that he was feeling, stroking his hair as he did so and all the while his heart was breaking.
“I need to see him.” Richard said once he’d calmed down.

“I don’t think either of us are in a state to confront Max at the moment, my love.” Myron rumbled. “Give it an hour.”

Myron paused for a moment and then he nodded. “Yes, let’s go and make sure that he and the children are alright.”

Richard pushed away from him, wiped his sleeve over his face, before he hurried to the fireplace and took a pinch of floo powder. Myron followed him through and they met a very red faced Aneirin, who was pacing the waiting room.

“What’s the word?”

“They’re just finishing off a very broad diagnostic spell, I think they’re looking for more signs of mistreatment.” Aneirin said angrily. “When I get my hands on Nasta…” He trailed off.

It was a very tense, emotional wait for the Healers to finish up and then they were allowed to see Harry, who was tucked up to his chin, very pale and small looking in the big double bed.

Aneirin picked up one tiny hand and closed his eyes and Richard touched the tufts of hair at the front of Harry’s head.

“Where are the children?” Myron asked.

“Through here, they’re sleeping too.” Healer Moore told him, pointing to a door beside him. They had been denied unsupervised access to Harry, as they were not biologically related to him.

Myron went through the door, being quiet so that he didn’t wake them, into the dim room beyond. There were three night lights, one on each wall, so that the cots could be easily seen.

Myron critically checked on each of his grandchildren and, naturally, Tegan woke up, sensing that someone new was near her, or perhaps because this was not her own cot, was not her mattress and she didn’t have her little penguin with her.

“Ganda.” She said as she rubbed her eyes before peering up at him with those big, hazel-gold eyes.

“Shh, sweetheart.” He said softly. “Go back to sleep.”

“Pengy.” She said, looking around…she was awake because her penguin wasn’t with her.

“Let’s go and find it, I’m sure it would have been brought with you.”

He picked her up and she snuggled into his shoulder sleepily, her tiny fingers playing with the hair at the nape of his neck as she sung to herself softly. She was very tired, but she needed her penguin to sleep.

“Aneirin.” He called out softly. “Is Tegan’s penguin in that bag?” He asked, nodding to the familiar nappy bag that had been placed beside Harry’s bed.

Aneirin, turning and seeing Tegan on his shoulder, hunched down and looked through the bag. He stood up with the toy in his hands.

“Here you go, sweetheart.” Aneirin said as he tucked the penguin under Tegan’s chin, making sure that her hand had wrapped around it.

“Ta, ganda.” She replied and Aneirin smiled softly at her, bending forward to kiss her soft, sleep creased cheek.

“Are they all alright?” Richard asked, still touching the sleeping Harry.

“Perfectly fine. They’re all asleep, but Tegan wanted her penguin.” He answered as he carried her back into the nursery.

He pulled Tegan from his shoulder and held her flat between both of his hands and he laid her gently into her cot, making sure her penguin was tucked up tight to her chin so that she could feel and smell it and he tucked the light blanket over her hips.

“Go to sleep now, sweetheart.” He said softly.

“Ganda.” She said softly, her eyes dropping to half-mast.

“Everything’s going to be fine.” He insisted to her as she dropped off to sleep slowly, yawning with her tiny mouth and chewing on air as she wriggled around. “Just go to sleep now baby girl.”

He murmured to her softly, gently, as she drifted off, until he was sure that she was sleeping. He checked on the other children once more, made sure that Leolin was still perfectly on his back, before he went back to his mate and to Harry.

“How is he?”

“Badly concussed.” Aneirin answered. “But nothing else showed up on any of the diagnostic scans.”

“He’ll be fine?”

“Just fine.” Healer Moore answered. “We cannot keep doing this, however. Harry cannot keep being hurt in such a way. Accidents do happen, we understand this, but that belly wound was not an accident, this concussion was not an accident. It needs to be sorted.”

Myron sucked in a huge breath. “I am calm enough to deal with them now.”

“I’m going to kill him.” Richard swore as he petted Harry’s hair still.

“Perhaps you should stay here.” Myron offered. The look that his mate gave him could have buried him six feet under if he were any lesser man.

“I’m not staying here while that boy has done this to our son, Myron!”
Myron nodded. “Come on then. Let us go and tell him exactly what he’s done wrong.”

Aneirin fell in beside them and Myron took a huge breath before he flooed over to the boys’ new house…the one that was supposed to mark a new start and a line in the sand, where the past stayed in the past. Instead they had dragged the past and all the pain and hurt with them to this new house and it had been tainted already, in just a few weeks of them starting to live here.

Richard flooed in behind him, and Aneirin behind Richard, but they didn’t need to go searching, they found Max immediately, he was curled up in a ball on the living room floor, crying.

“Get up.” Myron ordered him furiously.

“They’ve taken…”

“We know.” Myron interrupted. “And they were right to take him from you! What is even going through your head?”

“It was a misu…”

“If you say one more word I’m going to punch you in the head.” Richard growled. “How can you possibly misunderstand a panic attack that ended with a concussion? How do you miss the signs of it happening? He was in so much distress, he was panicking so much that he passed out in front of you! Why didn’t you stop and calm him down?!”

Max didn’t answer and Myron’s fists clenched tight.

“You never distress your own submissive to such an extent. There is no excuse for what you’ve done. I have never been more ashamed of you, Maximilius.”

Max’s head dropped as he looked to the floor and his shoulders shook as he started crying again.

“There’s no use crying over it.” Myron told him dispassionately. “Your submissive mate is once again lying, unresponsive in a hospital bed. Did you boys not learn from his stomach wound? The one that he’s still not fully recovered from? How can you even attempt to justify harming him
“It was not an accident!” Richard cut in harshly. “An accident would have been him tripping over the rug and hitting his head. No! You and Nasta distressed him so much between you that he was panicking so hard that he couldn’t breathe and he blacked out! Do you even remember what that boy has already been through? Do you remember that I am representing him in a court of law for one of the most disgusting and serious cases of child abuse that I’ve ever had to deal with in my entire professional career? You disgust me!”

Max started crying in earnest then, great, wracking sobs that tested the both of them, but Myron took Richard’s hand and squeezed it. This was for Harry, their youngest son, who didn’t deserve to be treated in such a way. They needed to get these boys to see that what they’d done was not an accident, that it was not a one off or anything else that they tried to claim. It had been a direct result of their behaviour and it was absolutely not acceptable. It would not be tolerated and it would stop, here, today.

“Stop crying and stand up!” Myron demanded over the noise from next door, as Aneirin took Nasta to hand.

Max ignored him, so he strode forward and dragged his oldest son to his feet.

“You have hospitalised your own submissive.” He hissed. “That blame is on you and Nasta. You need to do better than this if you have any hope of keeping him! He will be taken from you permanently, Max. Is that what you want? To have your mate taken from you, to leave your family with the shame of your actions as you’re executed, leaving Harry widowed and his children Fatherless?”

“Of course I don’t want that!” Max cried out.

“Where is Blaise?” Richard interrupted harshly.

“He had nothing to do with this, he was sleeping up…”

“Did I say that he had anything to do with this? Where is he?” Richard demanded.
“In the kitchen.” Max said miserably.

Richard left the room and he left Max to Myron as he went to see how the injured man was doing. If any of those boys needed support at the moment, it would be Blaise. He found Blaise slumped on the table, crying silently into his arms.

“Blaise.” Richard sat beside him and pulled him into his arms.

“I didn’t even know.” He cried. “I was sleep…sleeping and I still can’t see them.”

“It seems unfair, but it’s a security measure to ensure that the submissive is fully protected at all times.” Richard explained. “You have done nothing wrong, so you should be back with him quickly, as soon as your assessment has been completed.”

“I just…I trusted Max and Nasta to look after him while I slept off a headache, I didn’t even know what was happening.”

“You’re still recovering, Blaise.” Richard told him. “You needed the rest and you should have absolutely been able to trust that Max and Nasta would look after Harry and the kids while you did so. The fault lies with them, not with you.”

“Then why do I feel so guilty?” Blaise demanded.

“Because you are focusing too much on what could have happened if you’d been awake and present at the time. Put it behind you, there is no use in thinking of such things, Blaise. It didn’t happen that way and you have no idea if it would have helped or not. Think to the future now, on when you get Harry back.”

“What if we don’t?”

“Of course you will.” Richard said kindly. “You’ve done nothing wrong and no one truly believes that any of you are hurting him purposefully. This is just the Counsel making a point. This cannot keep happening, but on both occasions, you were not involved, Blaise. They can’t penalise you for something that you haven’t done.”
“Have you seen Harry? Is he okay?”

“He’s unconscious, but the Healers have done all the relevant tests and he’s going to be alright, Blaise.”

“Thank Merlin.” The young man breathed out in relief.

“Where is my son?! If you’ve harmed him again too…” Came the very loud, explosive shout from Marianna Lychorinda in the other room.

“Madre.” Blaise called out, a moment later Marianna was in the kitchen and speaking rapid, angry French to her son.

Richard left them to it, as he couldn’t understand them, and instead he went into the family room to check that Aneirin was laying into Nasta. He wasn’t anymore, but he had done, he could already tell that from the browbeaten look on Nasta’s face.

“How is Blaise?” Aneirin asked him.

“He’s feeling guilty. He believes that if he hadn’t taken the rest that he needed to recover, then he could have stopped Harry from panicking and passing out.”

Nasta looked away, his already buckled shoulders slumping further. Aneirin had well and truly laid into him and he hadn’t needed to resort to shouting in order to do so.

Max came in seeking comfort and Richard swallowed as his son went right to Nasta and held the other man like the kids held their teddies. That had once been him in Nasta’s place, comforting his son and soothing him, telling him that everything was going to be alright.

He took a breath as Nasta wrapped his arms tight around Max and murmured to him softly, their faces nuzzling together.

“How is your Father?” Richard asked, less harshly now that they’d gotten the both of them to understand the seriousness of what they’d done and what the consequences of what they’d done could be if they carried on.
“He’s…he’s gone to tell granddad.” Max said in a defeated tone.

Richard sighed. Alexander Maddison had advocated the protection of submissives and he had strived for it his entire life, pushing forward laws and outlining the need for there to be more safety during all meetings of Drackens, including the yearly meeting in May. He had written proposals, debated with the Counsel about the need for his laws to be passed, he had campaigned tirelessly, exhausting himself until he had achieved what he’d set out to, adding measures to protect both submissives and dominants during mate meetings, setting up the Dracken guards, where mated dominants would volunteer to protect unmated submissives and ultimately he’d set up the Submissive Protection Act, which was now a very fundamental part of their society…Alexander Maddison had meticulously written and campaigned hard for the inclusion of his Submissive Protection Act to become law and it had become so with overwhelming support in nineteen-fifty, the very same act that Harry had been removed under, from the care of his very own grandson.

Myron had reformed the Submissive Protection Act that his Father had passed into law in nineteen-eighty-seven to make it even harder for dominants to abuse their submissives, and again, his own son had been found in breach of this act, this very important, fundamental law of their society. If Max was found guilty and Harry was removed from his care indefinitely, it would make a complete mockery of all the safeguards that the Maddison family had made over the decades, it would undermine Alexander’s life’s work in supporting submissive protection.

“Where are you?” Alexander’s furious voice cut through the almost silent house.

Max swallowed and steeled himself. “In here, granddad.” He called out.

Alexander wrenched open the double doors and strode into the family room. He was starkly pale, but with two high spots of colour on his cheeks. His dark grey eyes looked almost as black as Myron’s in his anger.

“You tell me, right now, that Myron is mistaken.” He hissed, as furious as Richard had ever seen him before in his life. “Tell me that Harry was not removed from this house, from your care, under the very same protection act that I campaigned my entire life to have written into law!”

“It’s true.” Max said, and Richard had to hand it to him, at least he was owning up to what he’d done. He wasn’t sure if he were facing Alexander Maddison at the moment, while that furious gaze was directed at him, that he’d even be able to speak.

“If I was any sort of violent man…” Alexander hissed, trailing off and that he’d even threatened it was enough to shock Richard.
“I’m sorry, grand…”

“My entire life I’ve spent trying to make this society safer for submissive Drakens.” Alexander cut in. “My entire life’s work has been about protecting those who weren’t able to do so for themselves, those who were open to perfectly legal abuse and mistreatment by those who were meant to love them the most, and my own grandson is mistreating his submissive mate! How could you, Maximilius? How could you find it within yourself to harm that poor boy?”

“It wasn’t purposeful.” Max insisted.

“That does not make it better or alright for you to do.” Alexander snapped. “That you didn’t even realise that you were abusing him makes it worse! That you can treat him so appallingly and not realise that its mistreatment makes me feel sick!”

“You will be going for therapy.” Myron said sternly, from his Father’s shoulder. “All of you. It’s a requirement of your assessments anyway, but you will be having private therapy too. This will never, never, happen again. Am I clear?”

Max and Nasta just nodded. They’d been talking about seeking therapy after Harry had been removed from their care. This couldn’t carry on, they knew it. Nasta had known that Max needed help dealing with his guilt from the fight, now he knew that he should have gotten straight on that and gotten Max settled much sooner. Blaise would need therapy to help him get over the shock of finding out that he’d died, that one of his own mates had actually killed him. Now he knew without a doubt that all of them, even himself, needed therapy after the fight that had started all of this.

“We were talking about seeking therapy before.” Max said softly. “Before today even, but now, it needs to be done. I can’t…I need them back. I love him so much, I just can’t believe this has happened.”

“Well it has and once again poor Blaise is being dragged along for the ride, tarred with the same brush as you both.” Alexander said.

“Where is Harry going to stay?” Nasta asked.

“He’s staying with me.” Alexander said. “You will not see him. I will not allow it and I will not break the laws that I wrote just to make an exception for you. He will be staying under my care and you will not see him until you have fully passed your assessments.”

Max and Nasta nodded. “Can we request that Blaise goes for his assessment first? He doesn’t deserve to be apart from Harry and the kids when he hasn’t done anything wrong.”

“I will put forward my thoughts on the matter.” Alexander said. “But the Counsel can do as they wish under these circumstances, Harry is now under their care and their protection, they will decide what to do next.”

Max swallowed and Nasta held him tighter, taking comfort for himself from giving comfort to Max.

“I need to go and set the bedroom up for Harry. I’ll send Oliver and Keanu over to pick up what the little ones need, do not hinder them. Pack what Harry will need for a few days too, clothes, underwear, toiletries and such.”

Alexander said no more, he turned, still pale with fury, and he left.

“I have nothing more to say to you.” Myron said, turning and striding off himself.

Richard sighed and he shook his head. “You boys have a lot of making up to do. What you’ve done is unacceptable and none of us would have ever expected it from you. I would suggest calling your friends and explaining to them what has happened before they hear from others that you’ve had your submissive mate and your children removed from your care for allegations of abuse. This will get out to the public sooner rather than later and it would be better if you got your side of events across first.”

Richard left himself, with nothing more to say. He was so angry with Max for this, but he needed to turn his attentions to his own mate, to Myron, who was going to be smarting from this.

He flooed back to their home and he found Myron pacing in tight, angry circles, his teeth gritted, his fists clenched and a vein throbbing at his left temple.

“We need to tell Ashleigh.” Richard said softly.

Myron didn’t break his stride. “Not just yet. Tomorrow. We’ll go and visit her tomorrow. I’m far too angry at the moment and I don’t want her to think, for even a moment, that she is to blame for that anger. It could set back her progress.”
Richard nodded and he stood, watching Myron as he tried to work out his anger. His top dominant stopped, shook his head and he moved then. Richard followed him, with a leaden heart, to their small home gym. Myron was very angry if he felt the need to work out his anger by punishing his own body.

He sat on one of the weight benches and watched his mate as Myron tugged off his outer robes, all but tore the tie from his throat and undid his shirt while simultaneously kicking off his shoes.

He was still a glorious sight to behold and Richard felt a tingle of arousal as Myron, naked from the waist up, bent down and sorted out the weights on the bar in angry movements. Richard wetted his lips as he saw Myron adding some serious amount of weight to the bar.

His mate started out slowly, taking the bar to his hips, to his chest, then up and over his head, before taking the bar back to his chest, back to his hips and to the floor. He repeated this slowly, carefully, before he found his rhythm and he started taking the bar up faster, pushing the weight above his head and holding before taking it back down, quicker and quicker, the sweat sluicing down his neck and chest and Richard knew that it would also be flowing down his back too.

Myron started slowing down and Richard knew that he was warming down and then, with a final lift, Myron brought the bar down to his chest, down to his hips and then down to the floor and he stood back up without it, stretching his warm muscles, becoming lithe and flexible and Richard couldn’t help himself as he stood and approached his mate and Husband, reaching up to link his arms around his neck, pressing the full length of his body against Myron’s.

“Really, Richard?” Myron grumbled. “After all that has happened today?”

“You know that watching you always arouses me, My. Seeing you all sweaty and warm, your big muscles bulging…I need you.” He whispered into Myron’s ear. “Don’t leave me wanting.”

“I never do.” Myron growled, placing those huge hands on either side of his ribcage, near his armpits, and picking him up. Richard automatically wrapped his legs around Myron’s hips, grinning happily at getting his own way.

“No, this could be what we need, my love.” Richard said.

Myron hummed considering. “Perhaps it is, I’ve always felt better after I’ve taken care of you.”

“So take care of me then.” Richard grinned.

He was surprised when he was tipped backwards and his back hit the bench that he’d been sat on.
“Here?” He asked with a frown.

“Why not here?” Myron smirked.

“And you call me the kinky one.”

Myron snorted. “You are the kinky one, Richard.”

“You love that I’m kinky, Myron, don’t even try to deny it.”

“I wasn’t going to.” Myron said before diving down, on top of Richard, and kissing him hard. “I love that you can keep up with me.”

Richard made himself look affronted. “What was that old man?” He demanded. “I need to keep up with you? Oh no, you need to work to keep up with me, that’s why we have this home gym in the first place.”

Myron laughed then and bent down to kiss Richard again, before pulling back and smiling down at his lover. He took his time unbuckling Richard’s trousers and pulling them down his legs, leaving his mate bare from the waist down.

“Don’t take yours off, just open them.” Richard said, his breath coming faster.

Myron groaned and he did as he’d been asked, just opening his belt, popping his button and pulling down his fly. He pulled himself free and gave himself a solid couple of strokes as he looked down at Richard, who was grinning at him like the little shit that he was.

He kissed Richard, pulling back only when they needed air, to pant heavily over his mouth before pressing their mouths back together. He didn’t give Richard even a moment to recover as he repeatedly kissed him, taking all the air from Richard’s lungs. He loved doing that to his mate.

He had to make do with conjured lube, thankful that he could do that spell non-verbally. Practice really did make perfect.

He played with the entrance to Richard’s body, wetting him with the lube, smirking to himself as he listened to Richard. His mate had always been a very verbal person, if ever Richard wasn’t vocal, he knew that something was wrong or had upset him, nothing good ever came from Richard silently brooding.

“Fuck! Merlin! Stop doing that!” Richard cursed. Myron gave him a sharp slap for his language…it only made Richard moan loudly. “You can do that again, though.”

Myron snorted and smiled down at one of the loves of his life…if only Ashleigh were here with them, but hopefully, very soon, she would be here with them and then he could go back to wrangling in the both of them. He’d never before thought that he would miss chasing after the two of them as they ran around naked, teasing him and tag teaming him until he’d finally catch them both, fling the both of them over each shoulder and run up the stairs with them to the bedroom.

He used to grumble about chasing them all over the house and the garden, about the little games that they played with him whenever he said aloud his desire for sex and they’d immediately make him work for it as he’d be chasing them for an hour just to get them to the bedroom…their record was three hours and seventeen minutes.

Now that Ashleigh was gone, in a live-in rehab centre, he missed their ridiculous games and he almost wished that Richard had run off with a cheeky comment about catching him first, but he understood why he would only play that game with Ashleigh here too. His two mates fed from one another, giggling and cheering the other on as they wound him up and tested him to his limit. He loved them all the more for it.

“Myron, please!” His mate begged.

He smirked down at the flushed form of Richard, almost trapped in his own button down shirt as he had wriggled and writhed around so much on the, rather slim, weight bench.

“What do you want, Richard?” He said with a grin.

“You know what I want you teasing bastard!” Richard groaned.

The sharp slap made his mate gasp and then moan.

“ Fucking evil, slimy…”

Myron slapped him again, knowing well by now what Richard liked and wanted. Richard moaned loudly.
“Please.” He begged again, desperately.

The scar tissue on his throat distorted the plea and Myron eased off slightly, visually checking Richard’s breathing while he caressed his mate’s body.

“I’m okay.” Richard insisted with a smile. “It tightened for a moment and then loosened again.”

Myron nodded, trusting Richard’s word, before he went back to kissing down Richard’s belly.

“Please tell me you’re going to give me an amazing blow job.” Richard said. Myron could hear the grin in his voice.

“Ashleigh is always the best at it.” Myron said.

“Yeah, but you can take me all the way and she can’t…I want you to swallow me.”

“You’re getting bossy now.”

“So?” Richard laughed. “Get your mouth on me.”

Myron held back a laugh and instead he controlled it into a smirk as he did as he had been ordered to do. He took a deep breath and he took Richard all the way down his throat, swallowing around him and holding back his automatic reflex to gag and remove the obstruction in his throat.

He pulled back slowly, controlling the urge to empty his throat quickly and gasp in air. He took a moment’s pause to inhale deeply once more before he slid his mouth back over Richard and once again held him in his throat.

He got his rhythm and once established, he moved his hands to play with the entrance to Richard’s body, using the non-verbal spell to coat his fingers once again in lube. He’d have preferred a bottle of the stuff, but it was upstairs. The conjured lube never lasted as long and it wasn’t as good in his opinion, but it would work in a pinch.

He pulled off of Richard slowly and he caught his breath back as he finished opening Richard up, listening happily to his groans and mutterings of pleasure. One hand reached down and wound into his hair, tugging hard, but Myron ignored it.
“Myron.” Richard whined at him. “Myron, now. Fuck me now.”

Myron gave Richard another slap for his language and the muscles around his fingers clenched hard for a moment in response as Richard moaned loudly.

Standing up, Myron removed his fingers slowly, one at a time and Richard made a soft sound of anticipation. He almost considered getting up and walking out of the room, just to see Richard’s face and hear his shouts, but he made the mistake of looking down at that beautiful, flushed body, into those wide, glassy chocolate eyes and he couldn’t find the strength to walk away from him.

Resting the slightest of his weight on Richard’s hips, he straddled the bench, and Richard’s body and found his balance before shifting back and hooking Richard’s thighs over his elbows.

“Oh!” Richard moaned in anticipation, relaxing his body so that he had an easier time of positioning his subordinate mate where he wanted him.

“Hurry up!” Richard demanded and Myron couldn’t help chuckling at him.

“Alright, my love. Give me a moment to line up with you.”

“Hurry up!” Richard said through gritted teeth.

“I would have an easier time of it if you stayed still!” Myron told him, clamping Richard’s thighs to his own shoulders with his arms in an effort to keep him from wriggling about.

He finally managed to push himself into Richard and he took a moment to savour the large exhale of air that was forced out of Richard’s body. His mate curled up his body and locked his arms around his neck, holding on tight and panting into his ear. Myron loved it when Richard or Ashleigh did that and they both knew it.

He stayed, settled within Richard’s body for long minutes, letting his mate relearn how to breathe, letting him calm himself back down as his handsome Husband panted into his ear, moaning at every slight shift and whimpering his name, then he started slowly easing himself back out of that tight, hot clench of muscles and it caught his own breath as Richard groaned louder.

“Faster, My. More.” Richard urged him, trying to control him by pulling him with his arms and legs…not that he could, but that never stopped Richard from trying.
“Are you trying to tell me what to do, my love?” He asked with a grin.

“Yes!” Richard cried out.

Myron chuckled. “You want me to go faster? Harder?” He questioned.

“Yes, damn it! Stop your fucking teasing.”

Myron didn’t slap him for swearing this time, instead he surged forward in a hard, almost brutal thrust and threw back Richard’s head and had his blunt nails digging into his shoulders.

“Yes! Like that.” Richard said.

Myron bent his head and he kept up the brutal pace, slamming his hips forward into Richard’s body and listening to the scream of pleasure it garnered him. He loved it when Richard was in this sort of mood, not that he didn’t also love slowly teasing his mates to pieces over three or four hours, he did, it was just that he really loved it fast and rough, particularly if he was in a bad mood. Richard loved it the best when he was angry or wound up too. He had often wound him up on purpose, just to get rough sex, though all he truly had to do was just ask, as he’d done today.

“Myron, come on, I need…”

Myron answered with a harder thrust and Richard’s voice cut out on a loud moan. It was a good thing they didn’t have neighbours…or any children to overhear them. Not any more, not that that stopped any of them from teasing their children.

Myron’s breathing stuttered and the warm coil in his gut tightened and he pushed harder and faster into Richard, losing a bit of his technique as his orgasm built inside him.

“Myron!” Richard screamed out as he orgasmed and Myron let himself go with Richard, thankful that his mate and Husband had not tried to hold back as he usually did. If it was one thing that he absolutely hated, it was getting his pleasure before Richard or Ashleigh. They knew that too and they often tried to outlast him, using little tricks to try and get him over the edge first. He never indulged that game of theirs if he could help it. He hated it.
Myron grunted and he stopped all movement, lying on Richard and hugging him tightly. He turned his head so that he could kiss Richard and hold him as they both came down from their high.

“Are you okay?” Myron asked him.

“Much better.” Richard said with a dopey smile.

Myron chuckled and he pulled out of Richard slowly and carefully, uncoupling them as he lifted himself up from the bench.

“Let’s get you cleaned up, my love.” Myron said as he picked Richard up and carried him out of their home gym and up the stairs to their Master bedroom.

“I love you.”

“I love you, Richard.” Myron answered, placing his mate and Husband down on the bed gently before going into the en suite bathroom to clean himself off before taking a damp cloth back into the bedroom to clean off Richard.

“Will everything be okay, Myron?” Richard asked him.

Myron sighed. “I’ll make it so, Richard. I can’t even speak to Max at the moment, but we’ll make this right. I’ll personally make those boys go to therapy if needed. I will not allow this to ever happen again.”

“When I think of Harry in that hospital bed, knowing that Max put him there…it makes me feel sick, Myron.”

“You and me both.” Myron insisted. “We’ll take a few days to calm down, see Harry and the kids alright, and then we’ll take Max to hand. We all know that those boys will pass their assessments, it’s just ensuring that they don’t brush this incident off because they have passed. There will be punishment, to ensure that they receive the lesson that they need to learn from this, so that it never happens again.”
Richard nodded. “Come and lie with me for a bit. I just need…I need a cuddle for a bit. Then we need to go and see Ashleigh.”

Myron sighed and he nodded, climbing naked onto the bed and wrapping Richard up in his big arms.

“Just rest for a bit, Richard. Everything will be alright. We’ll make it so. Those boys will not get away with this and Harry will never again be harmed by their actions.”

Richard nodded in his arms and cuddled in tight to him. Myron just held him and stroked his hair as Richard drifted off to sleep in his arms. Richard was always tired after a bit of rough sex.

Myron slipped his mate from his arms and covered him over, getting out of the bed and dressing himself in clean clothes. He needed to sort out this entire mess, thankful that his Father had offered to take in Harry and the children, as he knew that he couldn’t stay impartial, not while he was still so angry with those boys for doing this in the first place.

He sighed as he made himself a mug of coffee. He sat down to his paperwork, but he found it did not provide an adequate distraction from his thoughts. He found himself so angry that he could barely think past what had happened, of what his own son had done to a boy who he saw as his son.

He found it inconceivable that Max had just stood and watched as Harry distressed himself so much that he had had a panic attack and had passed out. He just…he tried to imagine it with Ashleigh in Harry’s place, but he couldn’t. He couldn’t even imagine it with Richard, his subordinate dominant mate.

He understood that they had been through a terrible time lately, that the fight that had almost resulted in two fatalities had unsettled them all, but it was no excuse really. There was never any excuse for harming a submissive, whether your own or not, but it was just worse that they had led to the injury of their own submissive mate, it was why Harry had been rightly taken from their care. It all boiled down to Harry and he didn’t deserve to be treated in this manner. He didn’t deserve to keep being injured in such a way, it just wasn’t right and he needed to make those boys see that. No…he would make those boys see that. This would never happen again. He would make sure of it.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry woke up groggy and not entirely sure of where he was or what had happened. He recognised the familiar ceiling of the Dracken Healing Halls and he cursed, wondering if he’d pulled his stomach too much when he was so close to being cleared as fit and healthy.

“Harry, sweetness, stay still.”
Harry frowned up at Elder Trintus, wondering why he was there, of all people. He wondered where his mates were.

“Nasta?” He called out, hoping that his top dominant would be there for him.

“Your mates aren’t here, sweet one. You’ve been removed from their care for your own protection.”

“What?” Harry demanded, sitting up too quickly and causing a sharp pain in his gut. It made his head spin and he groaned.

Alfred Grant came running, sprinting incredibly well for a man of three hundred and four years old, as the ward placed on Harry went haywire with his increased heart rate, and he breathed easier at seeing Harry awake and sat up.

“How are you feeling?” He asked.

“I’d feel better if you told me that what I’ve just heard is some sort of joke!” He ground out.

“I’m sorry, sweet one, it’s not a joke.” Elder Trintus said in what Harry assumed was supposed to be a soothing way. It made him feel angry and more than a bit sick. “We take submissive health and wellbeing very seriously, and I’m sorry, but this is the best option. We cannot leave you to suffer with abusive dominants.”

“They’re not abusive!” Harry yelled out.

“They caused you to have a panic attack which led to you getting a concussion.” Healer Grant told him sternly. “What would you call that?”

“An accident! They didn’t know I was going to have a panic attack, I didn’t even know!”

“That is beside the point, they are your dominant mates. They should have realised what was happening and calmed you down, not pushed you harder.” The Healer said.
Harry made a harsh noise of frustration and he tugged on his own hair. “What are you people even doing to me? Why do you do this to me?” He demanded. “What have I ever done to deserve this? I want to be with my mates! I want to be in my own home!” He growled.

Elder Trintus looked shocked at his behaviour, but the Healer looked like he’d been expecting it. Alfred Grant shushed him and soothed him gently. Harry realised that the dominant was releasing his calming pheromones and it reminded him of his own mates and he clenched his hands tight.

He swung himself out of the bed and he forced himself to run. He knew he had to get to the floo with enough time to actually throw the powder into the grate and say his address. He felt such an overwhelming need to be with his mates that the emotion almost choked him.

“Harry!” He heard Healer Grant calling after him, but Harry kept running, down the Healing corridor, right past a startled young woman at the reception desk and he spilled out into the main foyer of the Dracken Halls.

A massive, muscled arm wrapped around his chest and lifted him up off of his feet, holding him gently and shushing him as he started crying, struggling fruitlessly to reach his mates. A distress call slipped from his throat and he was juggled in those arms gently until he was facing a big chest and was held securely and safely.

“Shh, Harry.” Georgio’s voice broke through his distressed cries.

Harry shifted and wrapped himself around Georgio and he snuffled his wet face into the Healer’s neck. Georgio didn’t care as he stroked the back of his head gently, keeping up a stream of soothing noises and murmurings.

“I want my mates.” He cried.

“You can’t see them just yet, but soon, I promise.” Georgio said. “You’ve had a nasty knock to the head, you shouldn’t be running around like this.”

Harry was placed back on the hospital bed.

“I need them.” Harry insisted.
“I know, just let us explain.” Georgio tried.

“My babies!” Harry sobbed. “I can’t be without them, please.”

“You’re not without them, they’re next door being fussed over by our trainee Healer who should be learning medicine, but we can’t pull her away from them.” Healer Grant put in quickly.

Harry was up and gone again before anyone could think to stop him. He burst into the room and he sighed out heavily upon seeing his sweet babies. His heart wrenched in his chest...he’d almost gone back home and left them here. He’d almost left his eight babies here alone, without him. He choked back a sob and instead he dragged up a smile for them instead as they all turned to look at him.

“Mama!” Calix cried out happily, crawling to him on fast hands and knees.

Harry cried out joyously and he sunk to his knees, embracing his baby. It seemed so wrong to see them in such a sterile room. It brought back memories of the hospital and seeing Leolin on the verge of death and that was it, he needed his little Faerie baby.

He hefted up Calix, tiptoed through his other clamouring babies and peered into the three bassinets, his twin girls were in two of them, and Leolin was in the third, all of them sleeping. Harry picked him up too and he held them both tightly, inhaling their soft, sweet scents and he sat down on the floor in relief. They might be in a hospital room, but neither of them were sick.

“You shouldn’t be moving so much.” The trainee Healer told him.

“Leave us alone.” Harry replied back, still holding his two youngest boys and accepting the prods, pinches and pulls of his others as they screeched around him happily as they all dived in for a kiss that he readily gave to them all.

“Be careful, Harry.” Healer Grant told him. “You don’t want to be admitted because of that stomach wound again, take it a little easier. At the moment you’re only here for the concussion that you have.”

Harry blew out a breath. “I want to see my mates.” He repeated.

“Out of the question.”
“Stop trying to tell me what I want!” Harry hissed, easily defaulting back to anger. “Why does everyone insist on telling me what I want or telling me what’s best for me? I know what I want, I know what’s best for me better than anyone else! Stop telling me what to do!”

“There’s the little spitfire I know and love.”

Harry actually smiled as Elder Kirrian came into the room.

“You’re being released into the care of your Grandfather, Alexander Maddison. He is under strict orders not to allow you to see your mates, so don’t ask him or beg him, it will only make you both feel worse.”

“I want to see them.”

“You can’t just yet. Not until after they’ve been assessed.”

“How long will that take? I have a heat period in a few days!”

“If the assessment is not complete by the time you go onto your heat, you will be placed back into your home and then taken again as soon as it’s over while the assessment continues. I know those boys well, they’ll pass the assessment with no problem.”

“Then why is it happening if you already know that they’ll pass it?!”

“Because you were removed from their care, boy.” Elder Kirrian told him kindly. “It was supposed to have happened when you got that belly wound, but they were given the benefit of the doubt because you had a mate in the hospital and an injured baby and another in the hospital and the mate responsible was removed from your vicinity. This incident cannot be overlooked, not when you might be at risk. It’s an automatic response to your injuries, even if we know that they’re not abusive to you, this procedure needs to be carried out fully and to the letter.”

Harry blew out a massive breath.
“Can I not even have supervised contact with them?” He asked desperately.

Elder Kirrian shook his head. “No, as they caused you to have a panic attack that directly resulted in you being hurt yet again, it’s not possible until after the assessment has been completed. It’s for the safety of the submissives involved, in this case you, as your dominants might misuse their hold over you to get you to lie and that would potentially cause us to release you back into an abusive home. We can’t allow any submissive to be placed into such a position, where they don’t want to be in their own home, with their own dominants, yet they’ve been forced to say that they do. It would be a most horrific mistake on our parts to allow such a thing to ever happen again. You can see your mates now as soon as they’re cleared, however. They’re assessed one at a time. We’ve started with your first mate, Blaise, as soon as he’s been cleared, you can see him.”

Harry breathed and he closed his eyes, recognising the need for the complete separation but still not liking it, yet knowing that nothing he did or said would change anything. “How long does an assessment take?” He said as a way of a compromise.

“It could be several hours to a couple of days, depending on how cooperative the dominants’ are with us. We started with Blaise as he was the only one of your mates who was not involved in either instance of you being harmed. He was also the calmest of your mates, he wasn’t shouting over us and demanding you and the rugrats be given back once the Elders went to explain what was to happen next. He alone was quiet. I’m not sure how much of that is his head injury, but we decided to start with him as he seemed the most cooperative at the time.”

“Blaise has always thought of me first.” Harry smiled as he looked to his children around him. “He always puts what I need or want first. He’s always done it.”

“Then it should be a very straight forward assessment and you should be seeing him at some point tomorrow.”

Harry breathed out a sigh of relief. He knew that all of his mates would pass this assessment, no matter what it was or entailed. They loved him and the kids too much.

“What happens if they fail?” He couldn’t help asking. “Not that they will, but hypothetically, what would happen then.”

“They would be assessed again and if they failed that one too, then they’d be evaluated by the Healers, if nothing physically or mentally wrong is found with them, then they’ll be executed to free their submissive from their sadistic cruelty.”
Harry gaped. “None of my mates are cruel!” He hissed.

“Then you, or they, have nothing to fear.” Elder Kirrian said simply. “No one believes that they’re abusive or cruel, Harry, the Healers are just concerned for your high level of injuries within a very short amount of time. It is their job to be concerned for their patients, Harry boy. They were worried for you, so they removed you from the environment that you were in. I’m conducting the assessments myself, I’ll do it as quickly as possible and you’ll be all together again before your heat period hits you.”

Harry smiled then. “Thank you.”

Elder Kirrian smiled back and he sighed. “You just play with these kids and keep them happy. You have absolutely nothing else to do, so spend some time with them. Aelia will help you, as you’re not supposed to be lifting or bending. So you just stay here and play with them and let her sort out everything else.”

Harry looked at the unknown woman and he narrowed his eyes on her.

“I’m a Healer.” She told him softly. “Well, a trainee Healer, but I’m not going to ruin my dreams of working here in these Halls by running off with one of your children, I promise.”

“Aelia is mated, Harry. She has enough of her own brood without adding in any of yours.” Elder Kirrian added helpfully and it made Harry laugh.

“I’ve only got five!” She insisted. “He has more than I do and he’s six years younger.”

Harry grinned. “It’s because I had five at once. If they’d been one baby instead of five I’d only have four babies.”

“I bet that would be strange.”

Harry looked at his quintuplets and tried to imagine four of them missing and he flinched.
“Very strange. I’m used to having them all around. I might wish that perhaps they’d only been one, but they’re five, so I’ve adjusted to it. It’s impossible now to think of them as anything else. I’d die before they became anything else now.”

“You’ve already proved that.” Aelia said, nodding to his belly.

Harry grimaced and nodded. “Despite the pain and the potions, if needed I would suffer through this again if it was in defence of my children.”

Elder Kirrian sighed and patted him. “Well, let me go and see to Blaise’s assessment. If I’m quick enough you can have him back for tonight.”

Harry smiled. “I’d really like that. I want all of them near me, even Draco, but if I could have just one, please let me have that. Also be careful with Blaise, he’s still very confused and he gets muddled and frustrated when he can’t say what he actually means. Just be patient with him and let him speak.”

“Do you offer him words?”

Harry nodded. “Yes, but if it’s not the one that he’s looking for then he gets doubly frustrated as it takes him off the track his mind was on and puts him on something different. He especially muddles up names, so please don’t be offended or draw any attention to it if he calls you by something else. He knows who you are, he just comes out with something different and it embarrasses him as it wasn’t what he meant to say. He’s always prided himself on his intelligence and his memory and having both taken from him, even temporarily, it’s driving him mad.”

Elder Kirrian nodded. “Thank you for telling me. I might be a hard arse, but I’m not going to be cruel or unjust to an injured man.”

“Thank you.”

“Rest and recover a bit, Harry. I’ll be back later, hopefully with Blaise in tow.”

Harry sighed and he set himself to just resting and playing gentle games with his children. He still couldn’t fully believe that this had happened to him, to their family. That he’d been actually, physically removed from his mates and his own home just because he’d passed out. He sighed again, much heavier and he smiled as Leolin woke up slowly between his knees, where Harry had put him when the Healers had reminded him that he wasn’t supposed to be holding them.

Sleepy gold eyes opened and Leolin blinked languidly, then they locked onto green and Leolin grinned slowly, still sleepy and drowsy, and Harry smiled adoringly at him.

“I love you, Leolin.” Harry told him softly.

“Ma.”

“I’m here, love.” He insisted and he breathed deeply, calming himself right down. Regan climbed up his back and popped his head over his shoulder and Harry turned to kiss him with a smile, letting his son just cling to him and babble in his ear.

He was nervous about this so called assessment, because of the threat of execution to his mates, but in the logical part of his mind, he knew, truly knew, that there was absolutely no risk to his mates. They were not cruel men, they were not abusing him or the kids, they loved him and he loved them. He would be reunited with them again, after they passed all of their assessments, he knew deep in his heart that they’d all pass and he’d see them all again soon.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Nasta was climbing the walls with his injured submissive away from him. He was as taut as a drawn bowstring and he was ready to release after the day that he’d had.

He’d endured the removal of Harry, the removal of his children and he’d endured the berating that he’d gotten from his family, from Max’s family, from Blaise’s family, for allowing this to happen. What was worse was that Draco had been the last to know about what was happening and he had berated them too, yelling at them for getting Harry and the kids taken away from them, from where he’d known that they’d been safe to somewhere unknown, without the protection of his dominants. It made them feel about an inch big and absolutely awful for what had happened. It had been over Draco that they’d been fighting in the first place.

Alexander, Myron, Richard, Aneirin and Marianna had browbeaten him and Max, not so much Blaise, who had been up in the bedroom napping when all of this had taken place, for causing Harry to have a panic attack. Harry’s Dracken had been to the very forefront of his mind with his approaching heat, and he’d truly believed that they’d meant to take Draco away from him forever, so with that thought in mind, he had panicked, tried to get them to change their minds, and when he hadn’t been able to do so, he’d had an all-out panic attack which had caused him to faint. Nasta felt terrible for that too. That his submissive would have been so afraid and so distressed that he’d had a panic attack severe enough to cause him to faint right in front of him.

The house was empty. The big house that he’d had specially built was only inhabiting three men at the moment. It was too big, too empty and it was too quiet to. He could hear the clock ticking, the fridge whirring, the kettle clicking after it had just boiled as Blaise had another coffee that he wasn’t supposed to be drinking.

A house of this size, on three storeys with an attic and a basement and with twenty odd bedrooms, it was not meant for three mere men. It had been built with five men in mind, of a large family to come. He couldn’t keep living here if he never got Harry or his children back.

“We will get them back.” Max came to him and hugged his shoulders.

For a moment he thought that he might have spoken aloud, but then he realised that they were all thinking, dreading, the same outcome. It was playing heavily upon all of their minds.

“Have we become so overbearing, so intolerant and cruel that we would allow Harry to become so distressed, by our own actions, that he could panic and pass out right in front of us?” Nasta asked. “Am I that vile a top dominant?”

“No! No, Nasta.” Max told him, sitting beside him and pulling him into a strong hug. “We were just worried and angry. We just didn’t listen.”

“We should have.” Nasta forced out from his tight throat. “He told us just a few weeks ago that we never listened and we swore to change. We haven’t changed at all, Max. We brushed it under the rug again. We need to change and not just say that we will. Words mean nothing if actions don’t back them up.”

Max nodded in agreement. “He was getting more wound up, more desperate. We needed to have stopped there and seen to him, but we were angry ourselves and we didn’t pay close enough attention until it was too late. Anyone could have made the same mistake, Nas.”

“It wasn’t anyone else though, Max! It was us, our mateship, our Harry! How could we have been so blind and inattentive to him? Of course he would have panicked, his heat period is hitting him in mere days!”

“This last month has been the absolute worst.” Max sighed.

“If we don’t get him back…” Nasta trailed off.
“We will.”

“What if he doesn’t want to come back?” Nasta worried.

“Of course he will! Nasta, what are you saying?” Max demanded. “Harry loves us. This is his home. You know he wouldn’t have wanted to have been taken in the first place, of course he’ll want to come home.”

“I don’t know anything at the moment.”

“Snap out of it and pull yourself together, we won’t get him back like this…wallowing in self-pity and misery. Harry’s counting on us!”

Nasta swallowed and closed his eyes. “I let them take him and the kids.”

“What else could you have done?” Max demanded. “Fought off the Counsel? We would have been automatically executed for obstruction of the full enforcement of the Submissive Protection Act. We would have broken the law, Nasta, and for what?”

“For Harry!” Nasta growled.

“For Harry who will be back with us soon enough!” Max growled back. “We’re no use to him dead!”

“What if he doesn’t see it like that?”

“How else can he see it?”

“That we allowed someone to remove him from his home while he was unconscious.”

Max sighed heavily, wearily. He’d never had to hold Nasta’s hand like this through anything before, it was draining. He had no idea how Nasta had done it for all of them numerous times over the last two years. He was gaining a new insight into the burdens that a top dominant took on, and it gave him a new level of respect for Nasta and the innate strength that he had. Perhaps it was that, and not his ‘cooking skills’ as they’d originally thought that had made his Dracken bow out of the top dominancy in favour of Nasta two and a half years ago.

“I love you, Nasta.” Max said strongly. “But use your brain, please. Harry loves us, of course he’s going to want to come home to us and settle the kids back into their home. I bet you he’s shouting and screaming the Dracken Halls down right now demanding to be brought back home. I wouldn’t be surprised if he tried to call for us too.”

Nasta smiled slightly and he chuckled, which made Max feel all sorts of accomplished and relieved.
It buoyed his heart and it took a heavy weight from his shoulders…maybe he could do this, maybe he could have Nasta lean on him a little bit, maybe he could temporarily take over the top dominant role for a short while without everything falling apart.

“I’m telling you, we’ll get him back, even if it’s just because the Elders and Healers can’t take another minute of his whiny bitching. They’ll be begging us to take him back after a few days. He was injured, drugged up and mostly unconscious the last time that he was there, he’s going to be awake, alert and fucking angry when he wakes up there this time. He’ll give them so much hell and he’s so stubborn and unmoving when he wants something that he’ll be back here before his heat period, you’ll see.”

“I hope so, Max.” Nasta said softly. “I miss him so much.”

“We all do and he’ll be missing us too.”

Nasta swallowed then and he took in a deep breath. “You know this means that we have to work things out with Draco, don’t you?”

Max grimaced, but he nodded. “Yes. Harry wants us all together, no matter what. So we have to get over ourselves and actually speak to Draco like he’s a person and not a monster or an obstacle. I’m still not sure that I can do it.”

“You can, for Harry.” Nasta said gently. “He needs us now. You’re right, we need to pull ourselves together to get him back. I’d do anything to have him back, this house is almost like an abandoned haunted house from some cheesy horror film without him and the kids here to liven it up.”

“More likely because you two are skulking around like murdered spectres.” Blaise insisted, walking through the room and sitting on a settee, yet another cup of coffee in his hands.

“How many is that now?” Nasta asked sternly.

Blaise shrugged. “I don’t keep count, that’s your job.”

Nasta made the decision to stop this, here and now. Harry had wanted normal and things hadn’t been normal, even when they’d actively tried to make everything normal, it had still been very abnormal. It stopped now. He would get Harry and the kids back, Draco would go to these anger management meetings and he would come back to them too. He needed to stop his personal pity party and sort out his mateship, because he would be forever shamed if the Counsel had to step in and do it for him. They’d already done more than enough damage by taking Harry and invoking the Submissive Protection Act, that was a brand of shame all by itself that would never go away now, but if they had to resolve the problems in his own mateship for him, all confidence and trust would be lost.

He stood up and he took the mug from Blaise’s hands, he went into the kitchen and he poured it into the sink. He took Blaise’s pot of coffee and he stormed upstairs with it, hiding it in an unused bedroom. Blaise had had more than enough coffee for one day. He’d had enough since he’d come home from the hospital to cover the rest of the year! If things were to get back to normal, he would behave as normally as he could and that included not treating Blaise like he was terminally ill and not cutting off Draco like a dead limb. He was a person, a very beloved person to their mateship, not a piece of driftwood.

“Max, we need the rest of the things from the old house over here, sort that for me. Try and move those bloody owls too, I know they like your attic, but they need to be brought over to the new house, only Hedwig is being cooperative, but she won’t leave Saracen for longer than a night. Blaise, the downstairs bathroom is an absolute mess, go and clean that.” He almost ordered.

“Maybe Blaise should…” Max started worriedly, but Nasta held up a hand, stopping Max in midsentence.

“Blaise is fine and he’s capable of cleaning a bathroom, go to the old house, Max. Salvage what you can, leave the rest. We’ll dispose of it later and then we’ll get the house fixed up and made structurally safe again too.”

Blaise actually grinned at him as he hurried off to clean a bathroom. He’d been missing the normalcy of his life too. They all needed it back, all of them. Nasta breathed in deeply and exhaled loudly, suppressing his urge to hurry after Blaise and wrap him in a blanket and cradle him on a settee. Those instincts would not help them and would not bring Harry back, just the opposite. True normalcy was needed now, not the pretending at being normal they’d been striving for before.
Harry screeched when Elder Kirrian led Blaise into his room and he leapt up, run to Blaise and jumped into his arms.

Blaise laughed happily and pulled him into a searing kiss as Harry held onto him like he was a raft in the sea.

“It’s so good to see you. How are you, are you okay? How is everyone else?” He asked rapidly.

“I’m fine and it is amazing to see you and hold you again.” Blaise answered. “Everyone is calm and holding together well, though your distress calls drove us mental at first. Nasta’s gone back to his usual self…you know, taking away my coffee after my first mug, hiding all the sweets and chocolates, it’s actually good to see him being normal again. Myron isn’t speaking to any of us though, that’s why you’re going to Alexander and not to him.”

“We didn’t think it would be the right environment for you.” Elder Kirrian agreed. “I have to leave, I’m assessing Nasta next.”

“Is Max still being stressy?” Harry asked worriedly.

“He’s the worst one, so to give him time to calm down, I’m doing him last.” The Elder said. “I’m hoping that by giving you more mates, so that he knows you’re better protected and with those whom you love, that he won’t be quite so high strung and temperamental.”

“Thank you.” Harry said seriously as he clung to Blaise like a limpet.

Blaise nuzzled his neck and licked him, making him giggle.

“I missed you so much, Blaise. Ti amo.”

“Ti amo, Bello.” Blaise replied.
Harry grinned. “Come and see the kids.”

He led Blaise to the bassinets by the side of his bed and he let him peer in at the twin girls. Blaise touched them and he sighed happily.

“I’ve missed them all.” He said. “Where are the others?”

“Next door, come and see.”

Harry led him into the room next door and to the swarming kids, who were being fussed over by Joanne, the receptionist for the Healing Halls who was supposed to have finished her shift an hour ago and still hadn’t left.

“Daddy!” Tegan called out, hefting herself up and toddling towards them.

Blaise smiled so happily as he went to his knees to receive her, giving her a big hug and a kiss.

“I missed you baby girl.” He murmured to her right before he was swamped with the others.

“Daddy Blay!” Braiden called out and Blaise embraced his only biological child tightly, laying a kiss to his chubby, rosy cheek.

“Where’s…?” Blaise trailed off, obviously wanting to finish, but drawing a blank over the name.

“Leolin?” Harry supplied, their Faerie baby being the only one who Blaise hadn’t seen yet. “He’s okay, he’s right by here.”

Harry picked him up, out of the bassinet in the room and handed him over, their little boy scowling, to Blaise.

“I love the faces he pulls.” Blaise smiled.
Harry looked around him, seeing they were alone in the room, he snuggled up to Blaise.

“What sort of things were you asked?” He questioned worriedly. “Was it bad, invasive? Do you think the others will pass?”

“No, Innamorato, it wasn’t bad. It was all very basic questions with a psychiatrist present.”

“What? Why a psychiatrist?” He asked.

“To make sure that we aren’t lying or sociopaths hiding behind a normal façade.” He smiled. “The whole point of the assessment is to see if we are a risk to submissives or children, they don’t take anyone at face value, they need to dig deeper, so a psychiatrist is always present at all assessments. Some of them are fucking sadists, but others aren’t so bad. Elder Kirrian made sure that we had the best, an old friend of his.”

Harry hugged him and watched as their children, who had dumped a load of toys into Blaise’s lap, went off about their playing again.

“Do you think Max, Nasta and Draco will pass the assessment?”

“I did, Prezioso. There’s no reason why they can’t pass either. I’m the one with a messed up mind.”

“You’re not.” Harry said hotly, kissing his head gently. “I love you and you passed because you deserved to. You’ve always put me first, you’ve always made sure that what I want or need is first. The others, not so much.” Harry admitted bitterly. “That’s why I’m so worried.”

Blaise kissed him hard and it took Harry’s breath away.

“The others will pass because they’re not abusive or cruel, Bello.”

Harry swallowed and he nodded. He took strength from Blaise and he calmed himself, if Blaise wasn’t worried and was adamant that the others would pass too, having gone through that assessment personally, then Harry would relax himself and take Blaise at his word. If Blaise said that the others would pass, then Harry would wholeheartedly believe him.
“I’ve missed you all.” He said softly.

“We’ve missed you too…that mansion is more like a mausoleum without you or the kids there. It’s so quiet that you can hear the house creaking, you can hear the clocks ticking, and everything has an odd echo to it. It’s horrible there, honestly I was glad to be the first up for the assessment just so I could get away.”

Harry snuggled into him tighter. “If that’s the case then perhaps Nasta should have been left until last. Max doesn’t do well with silence.”

“He doesn’t have to stay at home, he can go to see his brother or sisters. He could go to Myron if he was talking to us. We’re told the time of when our assessments will be held and I had two hours to prepare myself before I had to come here.”

“You were here?” Harry asked.

Blaise nodded. “We have to floo to these Halls to be assessed, Harry. All assessments are performed in the Counsel Halls. It was awful knowing that you were here, but having to go off to a different part of the Halls, but it reminded me, just before I went in, that I was doing it for you and the kids. That really helped me through the assessment.”

Harry sighed. “I’d just finished packing these kids up when you arrived. Alexander is coming in twenty minutes to pick us up. He’s bringing some others to help.”

Blaise nodded and just held him, the both of them watching the kids playing around them. The next disturbance came when Alexander arrived, pale faced and looking stressed.

“Harry, how are you?” He asked, coming to clutch at him. “When I’d heard that you’d been removed for your own safety, oh I could have killed those boys myself.”

“It was an accident, Alexander.” Harry said as he hugged the man back just as tightly.

“It wasn’t an accident and I don’t care if it wasn’t done purposefully, you were still hurt. Are you okay?”
Harry nodded against his chest. “Yes. I’m okay.”

“Come on, I’ve set up one of the big en suite bedrooms for you, there’s a room next door that I had the boys help me clear out earlier and I’ve put the travel cots in there, I’ve sent Nico to get the three bassinets.”

“Oh no, Leolin’s in a cot now.” Harry said proudly.

“Is he? Oh that’s wonderful. Is this a recent transition?”

Harry nodded. “I wanted to see how he handled his own cot, he loves it. His baby mobile works so much better on a cot than a bassinet, he loves being in it.”

“How would he take a travel cot?”

“It would probably be safer than a normal cot because he can’t suffocate.”

“I’ll send the boys’ straight back to get his mobile and put the bassinet back and pop up an extra travel cot.”

Harry gathered up what he needed and he offloaded it off to Blaise before picking up Leolin.

“Come here, love.” He said softly. “Let’s get you to great-grandad Alexander’s.”

Oliver, Enrique and Keanu were outside the door and when Alexander led him out, they went in to pick up the remaining four kids. Alexander himself had the twin girls and that left Blaise with Braiden.

Harry flooed over with Alexander and immediately he had Leolin taken from him by an adoring Kimberly.

“Oh, sweet dove, come here.” She cooed. “Does he need a feed, Harry dear?”
“He’s due one soon.” Harry nodded.

“How about the girls?”

“They’ll need a change before a feed, but they’re due another bottle each in about forty minutes.”

“In that case you sit down, dearest. You need to rest.”

Harry was ushered to the large, dragonhide settee and he sat down with a groan. It was such a comfortable seat and it was so deep and soft and relaxing. His kids were let free on the floor and Kimberly had brought out the toy chest that was kept here for the grandchildren and the great-grandchildren to play with when they visited.

“Shae will be here tomorrow.” Kimberly told him, as she brought in a large tea tray and handed Harry a cup of honey tea. Farren peeked up interestedly and he toddled to the table and he took a biscuit when he saw the saucer on the tray.

“Ah, Farren.” Harry chastised. “You ask if you want something.”

“Muma, bisky?” He held the biscuit out as if questioning if he could have it.

Harry went into the nappy bag and took out the rusks.

“We’ll swap, okay, love? I don’t want you having those small sugary biscuits, this one will fill you up better.”

Farren hurried over and he handed over the bourbon and Harry gave him the rusk with a smile.

“Ta.” Farren said as he was handed the biscuit and he hurried away.

Harry smiled at him adoringly.
“He is such a sweetie.” Kimberly sighed with a smile, sitting down with her own cup of tea.

Alexander had taken the box of rusks from him and he’d handed one to each of the older four before slotting the box away again. They all sat and just watched the kids playing, it was very relaxing and peaceful.

“How are your heads, boys?”

Harry frowned as he realised that that question applied to them both now.

“Mine’s fine.” Blaise insisted, sipping his coffee with relish, knowing that for today, he could drink as much of it as he wanted as Nasta wasn’t there to stop him and neither Alexander nor Kimberly saw anything wrong with coffee.

“I’m okay too.” Harry said softly. “I’ve taken the headache reliever for today and that was the only thing still bothering me.”

“Will you need any for tomorrow?” Alexander asked him seriously.

“I have some off of the Healers, just in case.” Harry admitted. “I packed them in the nappy bag.”

Alexander sat forward and he rooted in the bag until he found the paper bag filled with half a dozen small vials of potion.

“I’ll put these away, next to the kettle so you know where they are when you need them, okay?”

Harry nodded his understanding before he turned to Blaise and cuddled into him. Blaise’s hand immediately went into his hair and started stroking and petting and Harry hummed lightly and he started purring. He heard Blaise chuckle under his breath and it made him smile, even as his eyes closed in contentment. He didn’t mean to fall asleep, but he woke up several hours later in the early morning to Eva or Ave’s incessant crying.

He stumbled up, pushed a cursing Blaise back into the bed and he scooped up his twin daughters, who by now were both awake and wanting their bottles.
He carried them down the stairs and into the kitchen, flicking on the lights and setting the kettle to boiling. He was half blind in the strong light, as Alexander didn’t have a dim lamp in the corner like they did in their kitchen, and he went to put one of the girls in the kitchen bassinet at the end of the table, but his Dracken screeched and he clutched them tighter to his chest automatically, suddenly completely alert and awake. There was no bassinet to receive his baby girl…she would have hit the floor had he dropped her.

He breathed heavily and peered around for the bassinet, but there wasn’t one, instead he put one of his girls down in an empty washing basket to feed her sister before swapping them over and feeding the other girl.

He switched everything off, hefted up the other happily fed girl and he carried them back up the stairs to the bedroom that he’d been shown to yesterday when he’d first arrived, Alexander making absolutely sure that he knew where he was located and where everything else was. The room had a beautiful en suite and had once belonged to one of Alexander’s daughters.

Harry laid the two girls back into their bassinets, checked their nappies before heading next door, into the room that had been turned into a nursery for his older children’s use. He checked on all six of them, checked their nappies and he made sure that Leolin was still happy to sleep in his big cot that made him look like a tiny newborn in the vast amount of space.

They were all fine and there were no issues, so Harry was able to crawl back into his bed happily and he sighed, snuggling into Blaise in the big bed that should have had three more people in it…he would never have thought about it before, but he found it difficult to sleep now, when he wasn’t surrounded and pressed in on all sides, being held and protected through the night as he slept. He made do, but it was ages before he finally managed to slip back off to sleep again. He just wasn’t used to having so much space to wriggle around in while he was sleeping and he wasn’t used to how cold it was with three of his mates missing from the bed. He did not like it.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Nasta joined them at midday the next day and he immediately knew that Blaise had had twelve coffees before lunch in anticipation of Nasta arriving and he was not impressed.

He took the mug from Blaise’s hands and tipped it away before handing him a bottle of water.

“Hydrate yourself, Blaise.” He ordered, watching as Blaise dutifully sipped from the water bottle.

“Nasta!” Harry called out, coming into the room from the bathroom and he threw himself at his top dominant.

Nasta caught him and swept him up into a nice, tight hug that took Harry’s breath away…in a very good way.
“I missed you.” He told his mate.

“I missed you too, Harry. I’m so sorry.”

“It’s okay. I’m just glad that you’re here now. How’s Max?”

“He’s okay, he’s doing much better. He’s been cooking up a feast though and stocking the fridge. It keeps him busy and stops his mind from wandering too much.”

“I can’t wait to get home.” Harry sighed.

“Soon, Caru.” Nasta told him. “Very soon we’ll have you back there, but this will never go away… it will forever be documented that you were removed from our care for your own safety, as we were deemed a risk to you.”

“I hate that.” Harry sniffled.

“It’ll be okay, because this will never happen again.” Nasta swore. “I’ve had enough of all of this. More than enough. It ends now.”

“I’m glad to hear you say so.” Alexander insisted. “Having your own submissive removed from your care for his own safety? What are you boys even thinking? A few more instances like this and Harry and the kids will be permanently removed from you as a best case scenario. The worst case scenario will end with the four of you being executed!”

“We know.” Blaise said softly. “It won’t happen. I’ve agreed to go to therapy.”

“You have?” Harry frowned with lowered eyebrows.

Blaise nodded. “Yes, it was a condition of my assessment. They wouldn’t sign me off until I’d agreed to go.”

“I have too.” Nasta agreed. “I’d do anything for you Harry, to put this right.”
“I don’t think therapy will help any of you. None of you are crazy.”

Nasta chuckled. “It’s not for that, Cariad. Therapy isn’t just for crazy people, it’s for people who need help and support, like Draco. We say anger management classes, but he is truly in therapy for his issues. We will be in therapy for a few weeks to be fully signed off, in that time an Elder will be popping by several times daily to check on you.”

Harry’s cheeks pinked and then reddened in anger. His fist clenched and he drew in a ragged breath, forcing it out harshly.

“That they even dare.” He hissed unhappily. “I won’t have them there!” He growled.

“Harry, Prezioso, they need to make sure that you’re alright.”

“I’m fine! I’ll be perfectly fine with you all!” He snarled as he started pacing.

“We all know that, it’s just procedure.” Nasta said soothingly.

“They will not be there for my heat!” He said adamantly.

Nasta snarled at the very thought and he snatched Harry from his pacing and held him tightly. “No, no they will not be there for our heat period. I will make sure.” He insisted, laying a kiss to his head.

The rest of that day, sat in Nasta’s lap for the most part, was near bliss to Harry after two days of being forcibly removed from his mates. He was still missing Draco like mad, but he knew the reason for that separation, it was the missing Max who hit him harder and he’d already walked into the kitchen twice to speak to Max, expecting him to be there, which only made the absence hit him harder.

It took almost three days for Max to floo to his Grandfather’s house to join them and he arrived very late at night, almost nine O’clock, and he looked haggard and he was unshaved.

“What took you so long?” Harry cried out as soon as he saw him, even as he wrapped him up in a tight hug and lifted his arms to be picked up for a better cuddle.
Max smiled softly and hefted him up, squeezing him gently and rubbing his face against Harry’s.

“They left me until last, they did Draco first.”

“Draco’s assessment took two days?” Harry said worriedly.

“He had to work it around his anger management classes.” Max soothed him gently. “The Counsel were incredibly unfair to him because he was taking anger management classes, but Elder Kirrian said that he actually kept his cool rather well. He didn’t get angry, or at least not visibly, and he didn’t shout… in fact he reverted to cold silence most of the time, not deigning to give their questions a response, and where silence wouldn’t work, he used that biting, sarcastic tongue of his to make them think that they were idiots for even questioning him.” Max laughed. “His classes are going really well, it seems, but because the Elders were so gung ho on his anger management classes, and the wounds that he inflicted on you and Blaise, his assessment took twice as long.”

“Why is he not here? Did he not pass?” Harry asked breathlessly, his Dracken throwing a panic fit inside of his head. “Have they executed him? Have they taken him away from me? I’ll kill them!”

Nasta was there then, dragging him into a tight grip and putting his head in the crook of his neck, forcing him to breathe in his calming pheromones.

“Draco has not been executed.” He said firmly and in such a no nonsense way that Harry and his Dracken automatically listened to him and believed him. “Draco is still staying with his parents, you will see him tomorrow.”

“I can see him?” Harry asked, picking up on that one thing and he drew back to smile happily at Nasta, who smiled back and surged forward to give him a surprise kiss.

“You can see him tomorrow. We’ve all passed our assessments, Harry. You could start your heat tomorrow, so we are going to the house, Draco will join us there, but the kids will stay here with Alexander. He has already agreed to watch them for us while you are on your heat period.”

“Thank you.” Harry turned to say.
“It’s no problem, dearest.” Kimberly insisted. “We’re happy to help you boys in any way that we can.”

With three of his mates with him, Harry was much more secure and visibly happier, as he caught Max up with what he’d missed, talking about mundane things such as the cookies he’d made earlier that day to keep his mind off of things, how Farren had clung to his legs, knowing that food was around.

Harry presented Max with one of his cookies and his mate moaned over it exaggeratedly, quietly though, as his grandparents were in the room too. It made Harry laugh and snuggle into Max, having missed his childish, fun loving mate over the last month. He was glad that Nasta seemed to be more like himself and that Max was back to being normal too. It settled him in ways that he hadn’t even realised had been disrupted, now everything truly felt like they were getting back to normal.

That night, wrapped up in Max’s arms, Blaise right beside him and Nasta, on the other side of Blaise, with his hand on his hip, touching him, he was so secure and his Dracken was basking in happiness with the scent of three of his four mates around him, that he drifted straight off to sleep easily, feeling very loved and very protected in the warm embrace of his dominant mates.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

The next morning Harry had had a very lengthy, and wet, goodbye with his children, as he cried and they dribbled on him, and he was now back home and sorting everything out for his heat period, moving things that might turn out to be dangerous and generally just whittling down the hours.

He actually tackled Draco when he flooed through and his blond mate laughed and hefted him up and kissed him.

“You’re feeling better.” Draco said with a soft smile.

“Much better! But best of all, I’ve been signed off by the Healers, so no one can say anything about me doing shit anymore! I’m a bit stiff and sore still, but that’s mostly because of disused muscles.”

“Just, take it easy, okay, love?” Max all but begged him.

“Nope. I’m all healed, my scar is fading, I’m absolutely fine.” Harry insisted stubbornly. “I’m still taking your blood to make you feel better, but it’s not doing anything because I don’t actually need it. It’s more for your peace of mind than anything else.”

“I just…a few days ago you were still laid up and needing to take things slow, it’s too sudden a transition. It’s worrying us to see you charging around like this, please, just calm down, at least until after your heat, you need to save up your strength and energy.”

“Spoil sport.” Harry teased. “At least Draco’s here now.” He said as he dragged his blond mate to the settee and sat down for the first time in several hours, snuggling into his very well missed mate.

Max actually looked relieved. “I’ll get you some tea.” He said.

“Yes, a wonderful idea.” Harry agreed. “I need to keep up my strength after all.”

Max laughed and shook his head as he went to the kitchen. At least Harry was sat down for the moment, he consoled himself with that.

“How have you been?” Harry asked Draco.

“Very busy, but I’ve missed you and the kids so much.” He said. “I’m so sorry that I had a mini meltdown and walked out of one of my classes. I was just so tired and I was completely drained. I needed to see you and I just couldn’t take it anymore. The next thing I heard was that you’d been removed from the house with the kids for your own safety and that I had to complete an assessment to even go near you again.”

“It’s all over now, we need to move on.” He sighed. “I can’t keep thinking back to this one point in our lives. If we can just get through this heat period, it’ll all be fine. I’m healed, Blaise is improving, you’re getting the help and support that you need and most importantly the kids are all fine and safe.”

“Will your heat hit today?” Draco asked.

“Today, some when in the night or early tomorrow at the latest.” Harry nodded.

“Thank you for letting me be here.”

“Draco, love, I wouldn’t dream of having an orgy without you.” Harry insisted, loudly. He heard Max’s roar of laughter from the kitchen.
“Who’s having an orgy?” Blaise called out. “Am I invited?”

“Of course!” Harry called back. “All of you are. It wouldn’t be an orgy with just me, Draco and Max, it would only be a threesome. It would only be a foursome with you added too Blaise, so I need all of you to make an orgy.”

“I can’t wait for our orgy!” Blaise called out and Harry laughed while Draco, who was underneath him, chuckled.

“The Healers have signed you off for your heat at least.” Max said as he carried in a tray of tea, handing Harry a cup and Draco another, before taking the third for himself and sitting next to Harry happily, with a slight groan of pleasure.

“Is Myron speaking to you yet?” Harry asked.

Max snorted. “He’ll come around once Granddad tells him what happened and how it was quickly and easily resolved. He’s just being stubborn to make a point that it shouldn’t have happened, as if we didn’t already know that!”

“Are you three alright?” Nasta poked his head into the living room to ask.

“Don’t fuss, dear.” Harry told him. “We’re fine, finish off that monster load of paperwork you have saved up before my heat hits, you’ll only regret leaving it.”

“I’m just stretching my legs and I thought I’d check on you all.”

“You came down from your dragon lair just to check on us?” Max asked with a grin.

Harry snorted. “He sweeps in from his dragon cave.”

Nasta rolled his eyes as Harry and Max giggled like children. They had started calling his study, up in the attic, his lair or his cave. He let them have their fun.
“I actually came down for tea.” He insisted. “Hello, Draco.” He greeted as he spotted the blond head. He came and kissed Draco softly, letting his Dracken side grow calm with his scent around them. It was taking a lot of work, but he was settling himself down rather well, and so was Max. He went to get his tea, heading through the double doors into the family room and then into the kitchen. This was going to be their turning point, he could feel it.

Harry sucked in a deep breath and he sighed happily, snuggling more into Draco while he had him there. His heat could hit him at any moment now, he was afraid that when he woke up, usually about a day after his dominants, that Draco would be back at his parents’ manor in Wiltshire and he wouldn’t have another chance to see, hold or speak to him.

“How far have you gotten in your book?” Harry asked him.

“I haven’t touched it.” Draco said. “I’ve been concentrating on my classes.”

Harry frowned. “Have you done anything for yourself?” He asked.

“No, of course not. All that’s important to me is working towards getting back my family.”

“Draco.” Harry groaned. “You need to do things for yourself too! It’s no wonder you got frustrated and blew up at your teacher if all you’re doing twenty-four seven is working on your anger management. You need to take some time for yourself too, so that you can relax and unwind.”

Harry got up and he went to the shelf and he picked up one of the books that Draco had already read. It had been salvaged from the old house.

“I’ve read this one.” Draco told him.

“I know that. I haven’t read it, read it to me.”

Harry handed the book over and he tucked himself up under Draco’s arm, snuggling on his chest so that he could see the words, but he let Draco’s eloquent voice wash over him as his mate scoffed, sighed heavily at reading a book that he had only recently finished, before he started reading to him.
They passed two hours like this and though Harry didn’t care for the book or the story, he did care for Draco bonding with him in such a calm, peaceful way. Max had left them in peace to go and sort out dinner, Nasta was still up in his dragon lair and Blaise was napping off a headache that had developed in the late afternoon. It was all very calm and peaceful, until a hot flush prickled at Harry’s skin and made him catch his breath.

“Oh.” He said, sitting up and disturbing Draco midsentence.

“What? What is it?” He asked worriedly. Max was just there, at the first sound of Draco’s worried tone.

“What happened?” He asked, putting a tray of tea down on the coffee table. He’d been coming to refresh them when he’d heard Draco’s question.

Harry breathed deeply and he turned to them with wide eyes and flushed cheeks.

“Your heat has hit you.” Max said, understanding immediately.

Harry just tugged off his clothes, Draco helping him with his trousers and boxers.

“Nasta! Blaise!” Max yelled out as loudly as he could, even as he undressed himself in preparation.

Harry breathed faster and he moaned as a soft, cool hand caressed up his one side. He heard a crash on the stairs as Nasta hurtled towards where he believed the danger was, but before he could get there, Harry’s heat smashed into him and he released his pheromones, just a moment later Max and Draco were as feral as he was and they were each touching his body and then Max was inside of him and he sighed happily, purring to encourage his mate.

More hands touched him, but one set was missing and he let out a very loud screech, calling his missing mate to him. He heard the answering call and he trilled again, happy that his mate was on his way, but urging him to move faster.

His biggest mate, inside of him, moved to lay him over the soft settee and with his hands freed up, he instead grabbed his thighs to push harder and that made him purr harder, encouraging his mate to keep going as more hands touched him, as he heard and scented his mates all around him.

He whined as soon as his biggest mate pulled out of him, he whined continuously until he was filled by another mate and then he started purring again, enjoying his heat period, enjoying the thought of having another baby, enjoying his mates as they touched him, as they were attentive to him and to his needs. Three of them had gone off to the side with one another though, but that was alright, he only needed the one to keep him happy at any one time, if he thought that he wasn’t getting enough attention then he would call them back to him.

His top dominant finished inside of him and he pulled out, not content with this, he whined as soon as his mate was free of his body. His top dominant moved away and another mate came to see to his needs and a sigh was pulled from his lips as his mates took care of him.

He knew then, after that mate had finished with him and he felt the edges of tiredness, like he needed a rest, that he was only going to be more drained from here on out, even as another mate filled him. He gave a small twitch of interest, but he otherwise laid still, cooing softly instead of trilling, letting his mate know that he was alright and to carry on. He had gotten tired a lot easier than usual and he wasn’t used to such on his heat, but it had become a little more normal recently, he remembered from his human memories.

He didn’t know how long it was before he finally passed out with his four mates around him, snuggling in as they all took a small rest with him themselves. They’d moved a dozen times though and they were now in a soft bed and he appreciated that as he fell into a light doze, not truly sleeping, but not truly awake either as he tried to regain some energy and strength. Before he’d barely had a minute to himself, before he’d barely closed eyes, another amorous mate rolled onto him and pushed into his body and he whined, partly in chastisement for his interrupted rest, but mostly in encouragement as he trilled at his mates to give him more children. A call that they took fully to heart. They wanted more children too and they more than took up his call as they all woke up from their short rests with his call and they petted or touched him. He was moved forward, sat up and pressed over to the mate inside of him, even as another mate pushed in alongside.

He screeched at the stretch, but he trilled in happy encouragement, urging his mates on, urging them to give him a baby. He was almost too tired to respond once those two mates released him from their grasp, but immediately afterwards, another mate pulled him into their body and then pushed into him. He let out a frustrated whine, but he didn’t impede his mate from giving him what he ultimately wanted…their seed to get another child for their mateship.

They all lost track of time and none of them knew when the heat slipped away from them, all they knew was that one moment they were caught up in the heat, furiously fucking to ensure pregnancy, the next they were all in a state of deep sleep that bordered on unconsciousness. They all woke up in their own time, the top dominant was always the first one to wake, as his instincts would allow him to do no less. The others would wake up shortly afterwards, anything from five minutes to a few hours later, but their submissive stayed asleep, deeply unconscious as he recovered from his heat period on top of his recovery from his very nearly fatal injury the month before. They left him to sleep, though they were worried as he stayed in his deep sleep without once stirring. It was a worry, because of his previous injuries, but they tried to remain calm and they weren’t so foolish as to try and wake him up themselves, but the longer it took, the more worried they became. It was almost a relief when Healer Jackson Moore knocked on their front door, in lieu of flooing into their home. He had done the same at the end of six days, but no one had answered and they knew then that Harry was having a fertile heat that would last for ten days.

He gently peeked in on Harry when he was urged to by four very worried dominants, (after Nasta had gone in to make sure that Harry was covered over and decent) but he assured them that he was fine and that it was normal after such a long heat after such injuries. He gave them a very strong painkiller for Harry to take once he did wake up, naturally, he stressed to them sternly, but other than that, he was very happy to report that Harry was having a fertile heat that would last for ten days.

Nasta, once he was fully recovered and not as sore as he’d been when he woke up the day before, went to get his children back from Alexander, and he reported that everyone was fine, that Harry was still sleeping and that he would for a while longer according to the Healers, and then it was a waiting game. There was nothing that they could do, they could only wait for Harry to wake up on his own, no matter how long it took for their Submissive to recover from his fertile heat period.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: We’re actually on a roll with this fic at the moment, lovelies. I have a couple more chapters in the works to be updated, so I’ll be staying with this fic for the month of September it seems. That’ll make a nice change.

Once again, thank you so much for all of your support and opinions, lovelies! Until next week,

StarLight Massacre. X
Harry woke up slowly, in stages, and the first thing that he noticed was that he was terribly sore. In fact he was in a soft sort of agony.

He didn’t wait, he didn’t even try to get out of the bed by himself, he just trilled a call to his mates, asking them where they were and letting them know that he was awake and that he needed some help, that he needed them. His top dominant was the first to reach him a few moments later and Nasta looked very worried.

“Harry, are you okay?” He asked quietly.

“So sore.” He whispered. “Hurts.”

“Shh, just lay still, Max is getting you a pain potion.”

“So bad.” He sobbed as he reached out for Nasta, seeking comfort.

“Shh, Caru. I’ve got you.” Nasta told him, sitting on the bed and letting Harry clutch around his waist, face in his lap. It tore at his heart when Harry started crying.
“I can’t…can’t hold…”

“Can’t hold what, Har…you need the bathroom.” Nasta answered himself as he realised what Harry was talking about. “Don’t hold that back, you’ll cause yourself more pain. We can always strip the bed and get you into the bath afterwards, Harry.”

“Humiliating.” Harry cried.

“No it’s not. We love you and we’ll sort you out. Blaise wet the bed when he woke up too. You won’t be the only one. You were both severely injured and are only recently recovered, this heat period has knocked you both off course and you need a pain potion before you can be moved. Just let go, Harry.”

Harry cried, but ultimately his body made up his mind for him as he started weeing without conscious control. He buried his head further into Nasta’s lap in shame and he cried.

“It’s alright. Do you feel slightly better for that now?” Nasta asked him and Harry could only nod. His full bladder had been adding to the pain and discomfort. He did feel better, he was just highly embarrassed now too, on top of the pain he was feeling.

Max came hurrying into the bedroom with a cup of tea and a pain potion and he stopped dead, his face crumpled with worry as he heard his crying, before he took those last steps to him, kneeling by the side of the bed and stroking his head with gentle fingertips.

“Are you in much pain?” He asked softly, a hint of tears in his own voice.

Harry let out a strangled sob when he tried to talk, so he just nodded in place of words.

“Here, take this, it’ll wipe away everything.”

“Strong one?” Harry questioned, biting his lip and picking up his head enough to spy the familiar dullish red potion.

“The Healers visited and gave me one single dose, for right after you woke up. It’s only the one, love and it’ll take it all away.”

As much as he really disliked the potion and what it did to him, Harry reached out a shaking hand for it. Max reached over the bed and as Nasta pulled him more upright so that he could drink it, Max carefully trickled it into his mouth a sip at a time.

Harry gagged on it and choked, shaking his head at the bitter taste, but he swallowed regardless and he screwed his face up against the lingering aftertaste. Max offered the tea to him and Harry allowed that to be trickled carefully into his mouth too, swallowing great gulps of it to rid his mouth of the taste of the pain potion.

“There we go, just rest.” Max told him.

“Can’t.” Harry wriggled. “I’m lying in my own urine. I’m wet and uncomfortable.”

“Give the potion a minute to work and we’ll get you straight into the bath.”

“I’ll sort that now.” Max insisted as he stood and went to their en suite. Harry heard him fiddling about, opening cupboards, before the water ran and Max came back in and went searching for a pair of his pyjamas in the dressers.

“Damn it, where are the pyjamas?” He cursed.

“In the other dresser, Max.” Nasta said calmly.

Max opened the other dresser and cried out in triumph as he pulled out a pair of pale blue pyjamas and took them into the bathroom.

“You forgot boxers.” Nasta told him and Harry giggled as Max cursed again, much louder and expletively this time, and he came back into the bedroom and dug in the closer dresser and plucked out a pair of Harry’s boxer-briefs.

“There’s the missing buggers.” He exclaimed before going back into the bathroom. Harry chuckled at his biggest mate.
“How are you feeling?” Nasta asked him seriously.

“How tired.” Harry replied honestly. “I feel like I’ve had no sleep whatsoever. How long have I been out for?”

“Four days.” Nasta told him hesitantly.

“Four?!” Harry replied aghast. “The kids! They’ll be beside themselves that we’ve been gone for so long!”

“They’re all here.” Nasta assured him. “We were just waiting on you. Going four days over is unusual, but given the circumstances, it’s not unreasonable.”

“Who’s watching them?” Harry asked. “Blaise isn’t well!”

“Blaise is fine and well able to handle them.” Nasta insisted. “But Draco is with him and so is Myron, Richard, Alexander and Marianna.”

“Has Marianna hurt Draco?” Harry demanded furiously, worriedly, trying to get up. Nasta hurriedly held him down and smoothed his hair and face.

“Blaise gave her a right earful when she started on him and now he is wrapped around him and he was only just waking up when we left him.”

“Did I wake him with my call?” Harry fretted, biting his lip.

“Enough of that, you were in pain and you couldn’t move. I’m glad that you trusted us enough to call out for us. If Blaise is still tired, he can easily go back to sleep.”

“Myron and Richard are speaking to us again, then?” Harry asked.

“It was never you that they weren’t speaking to, but yes, they’ve seen fit to forgive us, but they’re going to keep a closer eye on us and how we treat you.”
“You treat me fine!” Harry growled.

“Fine won’t cut it.” Max said, coming in from the en suite. “You need to be our highest priority, always.”

“The kids always come first.” Harry said sternly.

“For you, love, but you know that dominant Drackens are different to submissives, you know that you’ll always be the most important to us.”

“The thought makes me feel physically sick.” Harry told them.

Nasta sighed. “Let’s get you into the bath.” He said as he rolled off of the bed and picked him up carefully and oh so gently.

“Let me bathe him.” Max almost begged. “You’ve had a fifteen minute cuddle with him, I want some time too.”

Nasta chuckled and slid him over gently to Max, who carried him into the en suite and got down on his knees, trying his hardest not to jar Harry’s body as he did so.

“Ready, love?”

“Yes, just get me clean.” He begged.

Max carefully eased him into the warm, medicated water and Harry sighed.

“I put some relaxant salts in here for you.” Max smiled at him.

“The ones you make yourself?” Harry asked, cracking open an eye to see his mate.
“Of course the lovely citrus ones that I make myself, only the best will do for your luscious body.”

Harry laughed at that and he half-heartedly flicked some water at his mate. “It’s the grapefruit one, my favourite.”

Max bent forward and nuzzled his face. “Mostly grapefruit, a bit of lemon for antibacterial purposes, a hint of orange and just a touch of lime so that you can smell all fresh and tantalising.”

Harry laughed again, but he yawned too and slipped lower in the bath. Max caught him and then held him, just in case he slipped under the water or fell asleep and drowned himself.

Harry came to, having actually dozed off for a moment in the warm water, to find Max washing his body with a flannel. He hummed.

“That’s nice.” He insisted and Max chuckled.

“We’ve got to make sure you’re all clean and fresh.”

“I can usually hold myself better.” He insisted.

“We know, but it can’t be helped when you’re as injured as you were.”

“Did I have a fertile heat?” He asked consideringly.

“Yes, love. You had ten days on heat and then four to recover.”

“I’ve been away from my babies for fourteen days.” He said, his face crumpling.

“It couldn’t be helped.” Nasta said from the bedroom before he appeared at the bathroom door. “Are you feeling better now? The kids are about to wake up from their naps.”
Harry nodded as he heard that and Nasta handed Max the fluffy towel and Max hefted him out of the bath with one arm while wrapping him in the towel with the other. He was rubbed and pet dry like the kids, but he didn’t mind so much at the moment while he felt so tired and as weak as a kitten.

He let himself be dressed, his two mates squabbling silently above him as they realised that he wasn’t going to fight them or insist that he dressed himself, instead he allowed himself to be dressed like a ragdoll, Max getting his boxers and trousers and Nasta buttoning up his shirt and towelling off his hair more.

“I want my centaur babies.” Harry said, looking up at them suddenly with wide, glassy eyes.

Max and Nasta shared a look above him and Nasta let out a controlled breath.

“Where are they?” Harry asked. “Have you hurt them?”

“Remember the Healers said that it’s his subconscious worries and fears coming forward.” Nasta hissed to Max before he turned to Harry. “No one has hurt your centaur babies, they’re being very well looked after.”

Harry smiled then. “I’m so happy. Are they okay?”

“Perfectly fine.” Max said, clenching his fists tight, but having been told that Harry’s mind was thinking of the centaur babies as his only children, that Harry thinking them as being hurt was his mind jumping back to the fight and to when the kids had been injured, he was a lot more understanding of Harry’s fantasies. Telling him that the centaur babies were safe and happy was going to do wonders for him.

“They’re not hurt?”

“Not at all, love. They’re perfectly happy and having lots of fun.”

Harry smiled, in a slow, goofy way as his body tried to catch up to the commands that his brain was signalling.

“Good, I want you to like them.” Harry said.
“We love them.” Nasta said passionately.

Harry smiled and closed his eyes. “I only ever wanted you to love all of them.”

“We do, every single one of them.” Max insisted.

“Love you.” Harry said softly.

“We love you too.” Max and Nasta said as Harry drifted off into one of the most relaxed sleeps he’d ever had.

He hadn’t once tried to get up and go searching for his babies, and all because they finally understood that the potion had warped Harry’s mind into thinking that his own children were centaurs, it was why he always looked right past their actual children to look for his centaur babies. That they had reassured Harry immediately that the centaur babies were fine, happy and well looked after, that they loved all of them, it had settled him down immensely and he hadn’t felt the need to get up and go looking for them to assure himself that they were alright. They were making progress and things were looking up. They left Harry to sleep off the potion in the aftermath of his heat period…at least he was finally awake and they could stop worrying that he was in a coma or something.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

“Are you awake?” A soft voice asked him.

Harry blinked open eyes that he couldn’t remember closing and he hummed confusedly. He peered around himself to see that he was tucked up in bed and Blaise was beside him.

“What happened?”

“You fell asleep as you were being dressed, so Max and Nasta tucked you up and left you to sleep.”

“What time is it?”
“Late…or early if you think of it.” Blaise laughed. “It’s about twenty past seven in the morning.”

It took a few moments for that to filter through and his eyes snapped open. “The kids!” He cried out. “I was going to see them, I let them down.”

“Of course you didn’t, Bello. They didn’t even know that you were awake and now that you’re more recovered you can actually do a little more than just watch them from the settee like I was doing when I first woke up.”

Harry smiled. “Are we the last ones up?”

“Of course, we’re recovering.” Blaise told him with a grin. “Though Draco has only just gotten up, I woke up while he was showering about fifteen minutes ago.”

“I’m glad he’s still here. I was worried that he would be gone when I woke up.”

“I worried about that too, but I think Max and especially Nasta, knew about our fears and strove to prove them wrong. The three of them seemed to be getting on better when I woke up, so maybe they had a heart to heart while we were both sleeping still, I don’t know.”

“I hope so, I hate that we’re split up and that this issue is just continuing, that it’s not being resolved.”

Blaise nodded his agreement. “I know, Innamorato. I feel the same and I think that now, finally, Max and Nasta are taking notice of that.”

Harry smiled. “I hope so.”

Blaise groaned and sat himself up and he held his hands out to him. “Let’s go and see our babies. They should be done with their messy breakfasts and they should have been cleaned up and they’ll be happily playing by now.”

Harry took those hands and he was pulled slowly upright. He still grunted and took an extra moment to breathe, before he stood up fully, and he didn’t care as he went down the stairs in his pyjamas. He was planning on staying in them all day anyway, he didn’t have anywhere to go.

“Harry! Are you okay?” Draco asked, spotting him first and coming to see to him, and to Blaise too when he noticed the other man behind him. “How are you both?”

“Okay.” Harry said.

“Hungry.” Blaise answered.

“That’s what I like to hear from my men.” Max said, coming into the kitchen having heard Draco talking to them. “How do toasted bacon sandwiches sound?”

“Like heaven.” Harry replied, perking up and watching as Max happily started cooking for them.

Harry was given the first sandwich, filled with bacon and brown sauce, but Blaise was given two right off. When Harry demolished his bacon sandwich in just several bites, Max happily made him another two and watched him proudly as he ate, getting butter and brown sauce over his cheeks, but he didn’t care. He hadn’t tasted anything so wonderful in all his life. Blaise managed another one and a half, but Harry easily snatched his remaining half and he ate that too.

“Are you both done now?” Max asked. “Do you want tea?”

They both nodded that they were full and that yes they wanted tea, but Blaise gave Max a sidelong glance, cocking his head in a silent askance and Max just smirked as he dug out a pot of coffee.

Nasta had hidden Blaise’s coffee before his heat period, while he’d been taken prisoner at the Dracken Halls, he’d been told, but since then Max had done a shop and had bought a new one, which he was hiding in the baby cupboard. Nasta almost certainly knew about it however. Not much got past that man.

Harry chuckled and he stood up and took careful, small steps into the living room. There he found Nasta watching over their children.

“Mummy!”
Harry lowered himself to the floor and he accepted hugs, kisses, babbles and half a soggy biscuit. He kissed each child, listened to them and held them, putting the bit of rusk onto the side table behind him.

When they’d had their fill of him and they had assured themselves that he was really there, he stood up with the help of the coffee table and he sat himself next to Nasta, snuggling in and letting that muscular arm wrap around his back to pull him impossibly closer.

Nasta bent to kiss his head and he stroked his back.

“How are you feeling?”

“Much better. Where are the girls and our Leolin?”

“The girls are sleeping in their bassinets and Leolin is napping in his bouncer.”

Harry looked around the room and he spied the two bassinets and then the bouncer by Nasta’s feet, on the other side to him. He smiled, now very secure and assured that all of his children were safe.

Max came in carrying his cup of tea and he handed it to him, watching him drink a bit with a soppy, proud smile.

“What?” Harry asked him curiously, wondering why that look was being aimed at him.

“It’s just…it’s nice to see you handling solid food again. To see you eating normally.”

“How much did you eat?” Nasta asked him in a way that told Harry that the answer was important, for whatever reason, to his top dominant.

“Three and a half bacon sandwiches.” Harry said, feeling rather shy that his mates thought that it was worth celebrating as they shared a proud, happy look over his head.

“The same as Blaise.” Max told Nasta.

Something in Nasta relaxed insurmountably and Harry found himself with a more comfortable cushion and he happily snuggled in further, taking care not to spill his tea on Nasta’s lap.
“It seems that the potion did its job, as well as those salts, Max.” Nasta said.

Max nodded. “Thank Merlin. Maybe things can finally start getting back to normal now.”

“Truly normal?” Harry asked hopefully.

“Yes, truly normal.” Nasta insisted. “You and Blaise will still need support, but you’re both coming on fantastically well and Draco still needs to go to therapy and we’ll of course support him through that too. But we are all working towards normal now, especially as you may well be pregnant.”

Harry hadn’t thought of that and his hand automatically went to his belly. He petted it gently.

“I suppose it’s a good thing that I’m back to eating normally, at least so far. If I am pregnant then I need to eat to give the baby everything it needs.”

“I’m just so happy to see you eating something more than a small bowl of soup.” Max said happily.

“You will be just the one baby.” Harry told his belly. “You will not be any sort of multiple.”

“Do you think that you are pregnant?” Nasta asked seriously.

“It’s impossible to tell, you know that, but it doesn’t hurt to plead our case early.” Harry laughed.

Max laughed with him and swooped forward to give him a big kiss. It made Harry smile.

He accepted all the toys that his children came to give him, smiling as Tegan’s little penguin made it into his lap, he took special care with it as he knew that she wouldn’t do anything without it beside her or in her sight. She even bathed with it, after a handy spell from Daddy Max that made it completely waterproof for half an hour. Harry had gone out and bought a second penguin. It was exactly the same, but it was brand new and still wrapped up in the bedroom. It was just in case Tegan lost her penguin or it fell apart and he could hand her the new penguin to prevent a meltdown.

When his lap was buried with toys, his babies were happy to stay playing with what they had left on the floor, which was still quite a large amount.
“How many toys do they have?” He asked. “I don’t remember half of these toys.”

“Really?” Blaise asked hopefully. “I don’t either, I thought I was having another issue with my memory.”

“No, half of these toys are definitely new.” Harry insisted firmly.

“Thank Merlin.” Blaise sighed, completely, utterly relieved as he fell back against the seat of the settee.

“I’m so sorry, Blaise. If I’d thought that…I should have thought more for you, I’m sorry.” Nasta said. “Max and I spoilt the kids a bit with some new toys to try and make the transition into this house easier.”

“Some new toys?” Harry laughed. “You’ve bought out half the toy stores in Britain.”

“It’s not that bad, some family members brought them toys too.” Max said. “They’re happy with them and it’s a distraction for them as some of their old favourites were ruined or destroyed in the fight.”

Harry nodded. “It’s okay, but it’s a good thing that we have such a large house now.” He giggled. “Or half of these toys wouldn’t fit.”

“It’s easier when we open the double doors and the toys and kids are spread through both rooms.”

“Oh, I bet they love that.” He said. “Especially our little explorer, Calix.”

“Hold on.” Max went to the doors and he opened them, hooking the doors open and out of the way before making sure that the fireguard was in place and he took the lone mug from the other coffee table making sure that the other room was safer. Before he’d even finished a very happy Calix had sped into the new room and he was making a circuit of it.
Max stepped over him and laughed, shaking his head. “If that boy isn’t some sort of explorer when he’s grown up…” He trailed off with a smile.

The kids happily went from one room to another, spreading out as they played. Harry stayed cuddled up with Nasta and his mates moved around the room, playing or chasing babies and then Leolin woke up and they only knew about it because he immediately started crying.

Five babies stopped and looked at him curiously, but he set off a chain reaction and suddenly Regan and Calix were both crying too.

“Oh, not again.” Max sighed as he came in from the kitchen and scooped up the two boys as Draco picked up Leolin.

“To me, Draco.” Harry insisted.

His voice filtered through to Leolin, who stopped crying so hard to listen, huffing.

“Come here, Leolin.” He said calmly.

“Ma! Ma!” Leolin called out, even as Draco handed him over and Harry turned his baby around so that gold could meet green. “Ma!”

Leolin tipped himself forward and mouthed along his chin and mouth, trying to kiss him and Harry hugged him tightly and kissed him back.

Between Draco and Max, Regan and Calix calmed down too and soon they were back on the floor and playing again.

“Has that happened before?” Harry asked, thinking to Max’s comment.

“A couple of times since we woke up off of your heat period and Alexander said it had happened a few times at his home too.” Nasta told him, pulling him in tighter and raising his other hand to touch the back of Leolin’s head.

“Oh, sweet baby, it’s okay.” Harry cooed.
“Ma.” Leolin answered, his eyes tracking all over his face, staring into his eyes and darting to his mouth when he spoke.

“Bo da.” Braiden came over to say to Leolin and Nasta smiled so proudly at their oldest.

“Bore da, Braiden. Good morning.” Nasta repeated, as he did every morning.

Braiden grinned widely, showing off all his teeth. “Bo da, Daddy.”

“Bo da, Mummy.”

“Bore da, Braiden.” Harry said back, his words a little off and not as perfect as Nasta’s, which was no surprise. “Good morning.”

“He’s been doing it all week. He was saying it to Alexander and Kimberly and they had no clue what he was saying until my Dad popped in to visit one morning and Braiden came to greet him. He’s so proud too.” Nasta told him proudly, as Braiden went to say bore da to Blaise, who swept him up and kissed all over his face and told him ‘Bonjour, Braiden. Good Morning.”

“Bo jor.” Braiden repeated and Blaise grinned.

“He got Braiden’s name right.” Harry whispered to Nasta, who looked at him, already smiling having noticed as well. He nodded his head.

“He’s been getting better since we woke up off of your heat.” Nasta whispered back.

“Who says sex isn’t good medicine.” Harry giggled.

“I certainly don’t.” Max said as he hung over the back of the chair behind them, kissing him and then “He’ll be trilingual soon.” Draco said approvingly.

“Quadrilingual.” Blaise said. “I’m teaching them Italian and French and Nasta is teaching them Welsh. All of our babies will be at least quadrilingual.”

“It’ll give them such an edge.” Draco said with a proud, approving smile.

“I have a dozen other languages to teach them, but four for now is fine. I’ll start on some others when they’re a bit older, maybe around four. But I am teaching them all the sounds of several other languages, so that they learn those early.” Nasta said as he stared at Leolin.

“They’ll be so smart.” Harry smiled.

“Just wait until they start shouting at us in languages that we can’t understand.” Max laughed. “It’s only me and you who don’t understand French. It’s only me, you and Draco who don’t understand Italian and then none of us understand any other language that Nasta has up his sleeve. I barely grasp English.”

Harry chuckled, but he smiled regardless. “I don’t care, it’ll give them such a leg up and they’ll be so smart and it’ll open so many doors for them. Compared to that, not understanding their foreign babbling will be worth it.”

“I could always be your interpreter.” Nasta said happily. “But don’t forget, Harry, that it’s you who has one of the rarest languages in the world in your arsenal.”

Harry snorted. “Some good that’ll do our babies.”

He sat forward and turned to Regan, called up a picture of a snake in his mind, and he started hissing and spluttering at him. Regan laughed and clapped his hands, as if Harry were just blowing raspberries on him and not speaking to him.

“You see!” Harry said with a chuckle, reverting back to English. “I have a dead language that is of absolutely no use to anyone for any reason.”

“Oh, I don’t know, I like it.” Max told him with a hint of aroused growl to his voice.

“Oh, you would!” Harry complained. “You’ve had more than enough in the last two weeks to last you a while.”

“Never.” Max declared passionately, nuzzling the back of his head.

Harry chuckled, but he couldn’t deny that it made him feel amazing to know that his mates couldn’t get enough of him. It made him feel sexy when he wasn’t at his best and was feeling frumpy to say the least, sat here in his old pyjamas where they were wearing their tight jeans and tee-shirts that showed the hard, muscled contours of their glorious bodies.

“I’m a bit sore still, it’ll have to wait until tomorrow.” Harry said instead.

“It’ll wait until you’ve been cleared by a Healer.” Nasta told him. “We wouldn’t let them do their check-up tests while you were asleep. We didn’t think you’d appreciate it. We did let Healer Moore look at you, because we were worried that you were in a coma or something, but we were with him the entire time and Max knew which spells he was using, so we knew he wasn’t doing more than we’d asked him to do.”

“No. I wouldn’t have appreciated having those needless tests performed while I was near unconscious, thank you.” Harry said.

Harry sighed and he held Leolin on his chest and he watched his five other babies play and interact on the floor, at least until Ave woke up, they heard her grunting and squirming, and Max straightened up from where he was stood leaning against the settee behind him and Nasta and he went to go and pick her up.

“They should be in the travel cot.” Harry said. “Not the bassinets. They’re mobile now, if they rolled over they could tip it from the stand.”

“They’re warded, love.” Max insisted and he proved it by pushing the empty bassinet and it didn’t so much as wobble. “They’re only in the bassinets down here as they’re more out of the way than the travel cots and we can watch them at all times in case they sit or stand up.”
Harry nodded approvingly. “Have you noticed any changes?”

“They’re more stable while crawling and climbing.” Nasta said immediately. “Ave especially can pick herself up and hold herself off of the floor for several moments before she sinks back down.”

Harry smiled. “They’re so good at moving.”

“Just not so good at speaking.” Blaise said. “They’re the opposite to Braiden. They’re focusing more on moving than talking, where he was the opposite.”

Harry nodded. “They’ll even out once they start getting a bit older.”

“I love them all.” Draco said as he looked at them all.

“We might have a new one to love soon, too.” Harry said. “Even if I’m not pregnant this time, another two months and I could be. It was a fertile heat.”

“We know, just take it easy so that you can recover.” Max said as he placed Ave down and picked up Eva out of her bassinet. She was still asleep, so he kissed her and took her over to the settee and sat down with her in his arms. She looked absolutely tiny, like a little doll, in his huge, bulky arms.

Harry kept an eye on Ave as she slowly squirmed around the floor, but her big brother Braiden had her well in hand as he hovered over her every movement, bending down to touch her gently every time that she stopped and he crouched down on his haunches to speak to her.

Draco did pick her up and turn her around when she went to go through the double doors into the living room however. Their almost nineteen month old Calix racing around the other room was fine, but their newly mobile six month old daughter was another matter.

Harry settled himself on Nasta with Leolin sat in his lap. He’d gotten Blaise to pass him Leolin’s favourite blue ring rattle and it was keeping their Faerie baby mesmerised as he turned it over and over in his tiny hands, listening to the beads hit the plastic with rapt fascination.

He was feeling a little better now that he’d taken that potion and slept a lot, the three toasted bacon sandwiches had really made him feel like he was more normal. He wasn’t feeling any pain, he wasn’t uncomfortable or at all awkward today. He just felt normal, like himself. It was one of the greatest feelings in the world after all the pain that he’d suffered through when he couldn’t even sit up and had to remain on his back at all times. To be completely pain free, even if some of his muscles were still a bit sore, which was usual anyway right off a heat period, was absolutely amazing. He was incredibly happy that they were finally getting over what had happened and they were recovering nicely, very soon it would all be behind them and they would never need to bring it up ever again.

With his own nineteenth birthday approaching and Braiden’s second, Harry was very busy with sending out invitations, buying presents for Braiden and planning two parties, Braiden’s and his own. He was alone with the kids today…or rather his mates weren’t here today, he instead had a very protective Myron hovering around him.

His mates were having individual therapy and group therapy together, today was a group session, so he was being looked after by Myron, who had taken a day off of work so that he could hover around him. Richard would have been there too, except it was a very important day in his court case and he didn’t want to halt the court proceedings any further. Now that he was feeling better, he was going to be back in court soon. He could stand up for an hour at a time now, he could sit down and stand up unaided, he was eating properly, even if he wasn’t quite handling his added treats, he was eating three good meals a day and he could maybe stretch to a dessert after dinner or a few biscuits with his tea, but he was improving and now that his scar was finally fading and his muscles were healing and repairing, he was getting stronger.

“Do you think a bouncy castle for Braiden’s second birthday is a bit much?” Harry asked Myron consideringly. “It’s only a small one, but the quintuplets will want a go too, maybe it’s a bit much for them.”

Myron smirked at him. “You think a bouncy castle is a bit much when your Calix is trying to climb the curtains?”

Harry looked around and he hurried to Calix, who was yanking on the curtains, his feet dangling half an inch from the floor.

“Not again, Calix!” He groaned. “We do not climb the curtains, the sideboard or the bookshelf!” Harry reminded him.

“Mama, no!” Calix cried as he was removed from the curtains.

“God, they’ve all gotten so active now they’re nineteen months old!” He said as he put Calix back on the carpet, only for his son to crawl like lightning back to the curtains.
Harry got there first and he hoisted the curtains up and he put them on the windowsill. Calix stared at them for several moments, realised that he couldn’t reach them, and he started crying. He threw himself backwards and he started rolling on the floor, kicking his legs and thrashing his arms. Harry sighed.

“It seems the terrible twos are upon you a little early.” Myron chuckled.

“Well and truly.” Harry said, shaking his head. “He’ll calm down soon.”

Harry sat back down and he picked up his tea, trying to ignore his son screaming and shouting over by the window, but as Harry had said, Calix did eventually calm down and stop his tantrum and he crawled over to him, sniffing. He reared back on his knees, lifting his arms up with a soft ‘mama’ seeking out comfort.

Harry picked him up and snuggled him into his chest, hugging him tightly, wiping his eyes and nose and giving him a big kiss.

“I love you, Calix.” He said firmly.

“Love you, Mummy.” Calix snuffled against his chest.

“We’re not allowed to climb the curtains. It’s dangerous.” He said just as firmly.

“No.” Calix said, rubbing his eyes.

Harry kissed that little mouth and he sat back, cuddling Calix to him until his little boy calmed and soothed himself. Harry knew that all had been forgiven when Calix squirmed away from his chest, gave him a kiss and then wriggled down to the floor. He crawled off to the toys and Harry breathed in deeply and sat back.

“You handled that incredibly well.” Myron complimented.

Harry smiled. “I can’t pander to their tantrums. I saw how much better it worked when I was injured and physically couldn’t pander to them. It was much better and the tantrum was over quicker when they were left to their tantrums and then had the comfort and reassurance afterwards. When they’re older I hope to be able to head them off before a tantrum occurs.”

“I have also noticed the potty floating around, is it being used?”

“It is, as a toy at the moment.” Harry laughed. “That was my idea, so that it’s not demonised as a massive change when we try and force them to use it. There are three of them floating around, a blue one, a yellow one and a white one. Braiden is ready to start, most definitely, so once he’s a little more comfortable with the potty in the room, we’ll start teaching him to use it.”

“How did he ever get old enough to start being toilet trained?” Myron shook his head. “It seems only a few weeks ago that you laid him in my arms and told me to welcome my new grandson.”

“Then I handed you four new grandsons and a granddaughter just four months later.” Harry chuckled. “Then a year after that our two new little girls and now I may yet hand you another grandchild.”

“You still haven’t found out?” Myron asked.

“Not just yet. The Healers are coming tomorrow to see me. I’ll ask for a pregnancy check then. I might keep it to myself until after Braiden’s birthday if I am pregnant. I have so much to do and I’ll never get it all done if those four start hovering around me. They’re going to be a million times worse than normal and I know what you’re going to say, about the injury and the recovery and not pushing myself too hard, but there’s no need to keep me bedbound like a prisoner. I can still do things for myself even if it’s not as much as I could manage before.”

Myron nodded his understanding and he was then suitably distracted as Tegan climbed up beside him with her penguin and a book. She monopolised his lap, put his hands where she wanted them on her tiny waist and cracked open the book to start reading to him, pointing out the pictures and babbling, turning to look at her ‘ganda’ to see if he understood. He didn’t, none of them did, but they all pretended that they did and that they were following her stories with rapt attention regardless.

This gave Harry the opportunity that he needed to get a few more things sorted out. He was not making his own birthday cake, or Braiden’s for that matter, as Max insisted that he had that well in hand, but that didn’t mean that he couldn’t bake a few fairy cakes for now.

Farren had followed him into the kitchen, as was usual now when someone left to go into the kitchen and Harry pulled up a chair and he got Farren to help him make the little cakes. It was only really getting Farren to bash the mixture with a wooden spoon and making sure that he didn’t put any cake mixture in his mouth, but his son enjoyed it.

Harry distracted him by giving Farren the, almost clean, wooden spoon to suck and bite while he put the tiny cakes in the oven and then he cleaned up everything, taking the wooden spoon from Farren and dropping it into the sink lastly.

“Come on you, they won’t be ready for another eight minutes, just don’t tell Daddy Nasta.”

“Shh.” Farren said, holding a little finger over his lips and Harry nodded, even as he stifled a laugh.

“There you are, where did you go?” Myron asked him. Tegan was laying in the crook of his arm, she wasn’t asleep, but she was staring at her penguin, petting it, kissing it and talking to it.

“I was baking some little cakes for after their lunches.” Harry smiled as he looked at his playing children.

“Nasta wouldn’t approve.” Myron smirked.

“Nasta doesn’t approve of anything fun or tasty.” Harry waved away.

Myron snorted in laughter and shook his head. “Do you need me to do anything for you?”

“No, Max already did as much prep as he possibly could, all I have to do is actually cook it. They’re all back in their routines, so because of his therapy, he misses the kids lunches. We can’t put their lunchtime back, because it’ll affect their nap times too and break their routine, but likewise he can’t be here for them, so I get to do something for a change. He seriously takes over in the kitchen.”

Myron laughed. “He’s always been the same, ever since he was a teenager. He used to kick his Mother out of her own kitchen, especially if we were having guests over, and he’d do everything himself, he wouldn’t even hear of having help. There was a time when I seriously thought that he’d be a chef and have his own restaurant to rival the best. Though I suppose that being a Potions Master and carrying an entire company on his shoulders is close enough.”

Harry chuckled. “I told him that he could go freelance to get some more free time, but he’s happy where he is and he likes his colleagues.”
“More like he can boss them around and get away with murder.” Myron snorted.

“Nothing new there then.” Harry chuckled. “But it’s good that he can cook too. Draco and Blaise don’t know how to as they’re spoilt prats and I think Nasta would kill us via severe food poisoning if he tried. For such a worldly, cultured man who’s been everywhere and tasted everything, he absolutely sucks at cooking.”

“Are they better behaved now?”

Harry smiled softly. He nodded. “Yes. If I say something now, I actually feel like they listen to what I’m saying. They’re not just brushing me off anymore and thinking that they know what’s best. I’m not sure if it’ll last, but at the moment it’s lovely to have control of myself and my own actions. I’m hoping that with the therapy, that it’ll continue, but for now, I’m not counting my chickens.”

“If they look like they’re slipping or they do actually slip, you give me a call, Harry.” He said seriously. “I’ll put those boys back on the right track and remind them of the consequences if they slip back down that route.”

Harry nodded with a smile. “I will. I’m not going to let them slip backwards after all of this, when they’re finally listening to me like an equal person and not like a child. I only want to move forward from now on.”

Myron smiled at him, but the alarm on the oven interrupted them and Harry stood up and made his way back to the kitchen. It took just a few minutes for Farren to toddle into the kitchen after him.

“Muma. Muma!” He said excitedly.

“Stand back, Farren.” Harry said seriously and he had to smile as Farren did as he was told, standing back by the kitchen table, but he was almost bouncing in anticipation.

He took the little fairy cakes from the oven, put the baking tin well out of reach before he closed the oven door and switched off the gas.

He smiled at the dozen little cakes and he put five of them away immediately, for him and his mates later.
“I have one?” Farren asked as he watched Harry putting the cakes away and Harry was so surprised that he almost dropped the tin.

His eyes welled up and he hunched down to clutch his growing boy to his chest as Farren produced his first ever little sentence that he had actually understood. Sniffing and wiping his damp eyes, he reached up to one of the little cakes and he tore it in half.

“We’ll share it okay, baby?” He said as he handed Farren half.

“Ta.” Farren said as the morsel of cake was handed over and Farren chewed on the cake happily.

Harry ate his little bite of cake and he led Farren back into the living room, still rubbing his wet eyes.

“Are you okay? What happened?” Myron asked, shifting Tegan to the seat and standing to tower over him, picking him up and sniffing him over for illness or injury.

“I’m…I’m just being emotional.” Harry insisted. “Farren said his first ever proper sentence.”

Myron slumped, but he chuckled too. “Good boy, Farren.”

Harry handed Myron the last spare cake and it was almost dwarfed in his huge hand.

“I see what you mean about giving them little cakes.” He laughed.

“There was one left over. I kept five for me and the guys, five for these after their dinners and there were two left, Farren and I shared one for baking them and granddad Myron gets the other.”

“Richard will be so jealous.” Myron said with an evil grin.

Harry laughed. “I need to get their lunches on. Where are the girls?”
“Regan put one in the doll’s pram and he’s pushing her around and the other one is right by there, in that pile of teddies. I can still see a couple of curls. Oh, there she is.” Myron said as the pile of teddies exploded as the little girl within raised her arms, creating an avalanche of soft toys.

Harry laughed. “Just make sure that Regan doesn’t tip Eva out of that pram, it’s not meant for real babies.”

“I have had children before, Harry.” Myron teased him. “Juda used to put Alayla in her doll’s clothes all the time and use her as a living doll in place of her actual doll.”

“Of course you have had children…I am mated to your funniest, most amazing, most gorgeous child after all.”

Myron scoffed and ruffled his hair, but he surprised Harry by bending to kiss his forehead too. Harry grinned, liking the feeling of love that came from such an action. Myron pulled him into a hug.

“You’re so easy to read sometimes. We love you, Harry. It’s been two years and we see you as our youngest son and at the moment, we’re on your side, even over Max. You’re our son too and we don’t ever want to see you hurt.”

Harry grinned and he wrapped his arms around Myron’s thick waist and held him tightly.

“Thank you.”

“Anytime, Harry. Remember, if you need help getting any of these boys in line, you come right to me.”

Harry chuckled darkly. “I think I have that well in hand now that I’m getting better and I’m able to move more normally.”

He didn’t mention the package that had arrived with Pigwidgeon the other day. He’d keep his own mates in line now that he could actually move around by himself…and now that Ginny’s little gift had arrived too. He’d had a good root through it already and some of the things in there were enough to make even him blush. He needed to get a hold of the magazine that Ginny owl ordered from, or maybe he could even get Muggle catalogues to order some Muggle things…the clothes weren’t going to be much different after all, even if the toys had a magical twist to them.

“I’m not even going to ask because I don’t want to know, but I’ve seen that look on Richard’s face numerous times…it never leads to anything good. The one time he covered his naked body in honey and ran around the garden. He got covered in so many ants and wasps.” Myron laughed. “I was laughing so much that I couldn’t even help him. I actually got a stitch in my side from laughing so hard and Ashleigh couldn’t breathe properly. I’m glad all the kids were in school that day.”

Harry laughed himself, trying to imagine running around the garden wearing nothing but honey splotches.

“Nasta would do his nut at that…I can hear him now. ‘Harry! What are you doing? Honey doesn’t offer any UV protection!’”

Myron was surprised into a burst of raucous laughter, of which several babies turned and joined in.
Harry giggled before he shook his head.

“I’m not sure streaking around in just sun cream would have the same effect though, I can’t imagine that it’s edible. Speaking of edible things though, I need to get their lunches on.”

Harry darted in to give one last quick squeeze to Myron before he went into the kitchen and he went to the fridge to get out all of the little pots that Max had already prepped. He’d diced all the vegetables, he’d marinated the little slices of chicken breast and he’d left instructions on how to cook the little rice bags that he’d made up. Harry shook his head. All he had to do was grill the chicken and steam the rice and vegetables.

He almost had a heart attack when he turned around and saw Farren, stood by the table, watching him silently.

“Farren, love, Mummy’s heart can’t take you creeping around, okay? What’s the matter?”

Farren pointed to the clock and Harry laughed.

“You know its lunchtime? Of course you do. It won’t be long. Do you want to go and play or do you want to stay here?”
“Stay, Muma.” Farren said as he turned around and he climbed the chair to sit on his little booster seat.

Harry was so proud of him and he was so happy as he carried on making his children their lunches, setting out their own little plastic plates on the counter ready.

“Do you want a drink, Farren?” He asked.

“Juicy.”

Harry smiled as he went to the fridge and got out the jug of diluted apple juice. He poured a beaker half full for Farren and placed it down. He watched with bittersweet joy as Farren picked up the beaker and drank perfectly from it. Where had his sweet little baby gone? He was growing up so fast. It gave him a pang of broodiness. His little twin girls were only six months, yet already he wanted the feel of newborns in his arms again. If he was pregnant from this heat period, his girls would be a year old by the time that he gave birth, if he carried to term that was, and Braiden and the quintuplets would all be two years old.

He sighed as he carried on making the little lunches while keeping an eye and an ear on Farren at the table, who was kicking his legs, sometimes taking a drink of his juice, but was otherwise waiting patiently, as good as gold, for his lunch to be ready.

“Myron, lunch is up!” He called out as he put the tiny plate in front of Farren with his fork and spoon. His little boy dug right in happily.

Harry had all the plates on the table by the time that Myron herded the kids into the kitchen and Braiden, much like Farren had, climbed up into his little booster seat by himself and had started on his little lunch. He’d put their colour coded beakers of apple juice by their plates too, and Tegan took a moment to drink some first, before she started on her chicken, rice and vegetables, her penguin sat in her lap…she would prod chicken or vegetables at its beak every now then.

Harry handed Myron a much larger plate and he sat down to eat his own lunch. It was exactly the same as what the kids were eating, only his chicken breast wasn’t ready sliced and he had more rice and vegetables. Myron finished first and he made the rounds of the kids, helping them eat their food, wiping off their faces, wiping off Calix’s hands…he’d only recently progressed to eating his food and not throwing it, but he preferred to use his hands in place of his utensils. Harry didn’t mind, it was progress in his book and he was content to leave Calix to eat with his hands as long as he did actually eat his food and didn’t throw it at people.

Harry finished his own lunch and he took his and Myron’s plates to the sink and he boiled the kettle for them both, setting out two mugs and grabbing a pack of biscuits. He could only handle a few biscuits, but he was determined to enjoy a few of them with his tea. He set up three bottles and he carefully scooped in the measured formula powder into each bottle, setting them up ready for when Leolin and the girls would want their lunches.

“Farren wants more.” Myron said with a hint of pride as he looked at his beautiful, growing grandson.

Harry looked over his shoulder to see the cleared plate and he smiled happily. He picked up one of the little cakes, peeled off the paper case and he handed it to Farren to dribble and chew on.

He handed out the little cakes one by one as the kids finished their lunches and he left them to relish their treats as he handed Myron a mug of coffee and they shared some biscuits between them, waiting for the kids to finish their desserts.

Harry heard the floo sound and he looked consideringly at the time.

“It’s too early for the guys to be home.” He said with a frown.

Myron immediately stood up and went storming into the smaller living room, the only room in their home that was connected to the floo.

Myron came back a minute later, escorting Healer Alessandri.

“Hi, Georgio. Isn’t my appointment for tomorrow?”

“The Elders have a crisis at the Halls with another mateship, so I’ve been sent to check on you.”

Harry sighed. “It’s not necessary to check on me three times a day!” He insisted.

“Regardless, we’re going to.” Georgio said firmly.

Harry huffed, but he stood up and drained the last inch of his tea.

“Myron, can you watch them for me please? They should go down for their naps now that they’ve eaten and Leolin will want a bottle in the next ten minutes.”

“I’ve got it in hand, Harry.”
Harry nodded and he led Georgio back into the smaller living room and he sat on the settee, waiting patiently as Georgio sat next to him.

“How have you been treated since you were last seen?”

“Oh, you mean since this morning?” Harry quipped. “When they’re not even here?”

“Where are they?” Georgio asked seriously.

“They’re in private therapy, it’s a group session today, so they’ve all gone to deal with one another.”

“They took on private therapy, outside of what the Counsel offered?” Georgio asked, and Harry could detect that he was pleased by this.

“Yes. They wanted to be sure.” Harry answered, calming down a little.

“Do you have any odd marks or bruising?” Georgio asked, his quill poised on his clipboard.

Harry glared at him. “They’re not hurting me!” He hissed through gritted teeth.

“I’m sorry about this, Harry. It’s procedure, these questions are always the same for each case.”

“I know.” Harry said, blowing out all the breath in his lungs. “I just don’t like it.”

“It won’t be for long, they’ll be signed off soon, especially if they’re in private therapy. It shows that they accept that there is a problem and that they’re willing to do something about it.”

Harry nodded and he sighed unhappily.
“So, do you have any odd marks or bruising? I’m content to take your word for this and not scan you with spells or strip you off and look for myself.”

Harry scoffed, but recognising the lesser of two evils, he shook his head.

“No. No cuts, no marks, no bruising. I haven’t had any accidents and they would never hit me, only Leolin does that.”

“Your youngest son? The Faerie.”

Harry nodded. “He’s getting jealous of anyone else taking my attention from him, so when I so much as look at anyone else, he hits me.”

“How long has that been going on?” Georgio asked.

“A few months, why?”

“Did it happen before the fight you had, or after it?”

“Before.” Harry said with a frown.

“Then it’s a Faerie thing?”

Harry nodded. “Yes. Dain and Kailen said that it’s normal Faerie behaviour. They get frustrated and confused because they want things but can’t articulate those wants or needs into words or actions, so they start to lash out more and then there’s the bond between Faeries and their Mothers. He feels connected to me, I am his safe place, his everything and there’s no breaking that bond. So when I hand him over to someone else, he panics and tries to get back to me. When I fuss over the others, he gets jealous that I have a special bond with someone other than him and he lashes out. It’ll lessen as he gets older and he starts to actually understand what is happening around him and who these other people are.”

“Does he only recognise you?” Georgio asked interestedly.
“He recognises those who have been constantly around him, but he doesn’t understand them or why they’re here. He doesn’t have a thought process as developed as his siblings…Eva and Ave are probably thinking better than he is at the moment. All he has is the connection that he has to me because I carried him within my body, that is where the bond starts. As he gets older, he’ll start making more bonds, to his Fathers’ and to his brothers and sisters, to his grandparents and other family members and then to friends and such. But at the moment he is only developed enough to have a bond with me and he panics if that bond is threatened by the introduction of others, because he is entirely dependent on me for everything and he doesn’t want to share me for fear of being left out.”

“That is so…strange.” Georgio said. “Not in an offensive way, of course, I’ve just never heard of such a thing before. He is like a selective newborn. One who, instead of bonding to all people around them for their safety and needs, bonds to just the one, you.”

Harry nodded. “He is always more comfortable with me, but he is learning and growing.”

“Back to your assessment, Leolin has not hit you recently and you have no marks upon you?”

Harry shook his head. “No.”

“Have there been any arguments?”

“Only small things.” Harry answered truthfully.

“Such as what?” Georgio asked, a small bite to his words.

“Max left his socks on the bedroom floor again and Draco hates it. He said, as he picked them up for Max, what is the point of a clothes hamper if we don’t use it. Then Blaise tried his luck with half a dozen mugs of coffee and Nasta was not impressed. It’s all very normal and usual, we’re not going to stop arguing, Georgio, and it’s ridiculous to think otherwise. There are five of us, we’re all different people, of course we’re going to argue and snipe at one another on occasion. It’s normal.” He stressed.

Georgio nodded. “I agree.” He said as he wrote something down. “I had an argument with Clara over the placement of the cushions just this morning, I like four per settee, in a line across the back, but Clara sits with three of them to herself in a little mound. I do understand everyday arguments and they don’t count. Have they forced you to do anything that you haven’t wanted to do?”

“With their dominancy bond? No, I can count on one hand the amount of times that they’ve used that and that’s between all five of them over two and a half years. I was forced to stop shopping for Braiden’s birthday though when I didn’t want to, but I was getting tired.”

Georgio nodded and he noted something down.

“A delicate matter, Harry. Have they forced you to have sex when you haven’t wanted it?”

Harry scoffed. “Are you kidding? I’ve been down on my knees, begging for sex and they refuse me! Does that count?”

Georgio actually laughed. “No, that doesn’t count.”

“How is your wound?” Georgio asked in answer.

“ Healing. I barely feel it anymore. If I push myself then it pulls a little and I know to stop. But I’m eating more normally, I can sleep easily and I can stand up by myself now and I have no problems walking. I haven’t tried running yet.”

“I wouldn’t recommend it just yet. Wait a little while longer.” Georgio said with a smile.

“Am I cleared for a sex life yet?” Harry asked with no hint of embarrassment. He no longer cared, especially not with a Healer. Georgio had already seen him at his absolute worst.

“How are you feeling after your heat period? Is there any soreness still?”

Harry shook his head. “No.”
“Have you tried to stimulate yourself?”

That did make him blush and he laughed his embarrassment off a little. “Yeah I have. I felt fine, more than fine actually.”

“It didn’t pull anything or cause pain?”

Harry shook his head. “No, nothing like that, but I was gentle.”

“Then I should imagine that you were fine for slow and gentle, Harry, but try not to go all out for a while longer.”

Harry nodded with a grin, much happier now. Being cleared for sex was going to make Max’s day. They were standing firmly behind him being signed off by a Healer, and Harry did understand that, despite teasing them and begging, he understood. But now he had been told by a Healer that he could have sex, albeit slow and gentle sex…perhaps that would be a good thing in disguise too, it could help them regain their soft, loving bond.

“Is there anything else that you wanted now? Or are you alright.”

“I’m okay, thank you…oh! No, I wanted a pregnancy check, please. They’re going insane not knowing if I’m pregnant or not.” He laughed.

Georgio smiled and he pulled his wand from his lime green Healer’s over robe. He performed a rather complicated move with his wand and he considered the information his scan had given him. Harry knew the answer when Georgio smiled at him softly.

“Congratulations, Harry. You’re pregnant.”

Harry’s smile took over his face and both hands went to his flat belly.

“We’ll monitor you carefully through this pregnancy, to make sure that it doesn’t rip your newly healed muscles, but as you’re healing well, you should be alright to carry the baby to term with no problems. Of course if you have multiples, then problems could arise from that, even if it is only twins. I would seriously insist upon a selective reduction in that case, Harry, but we’ll know more at your first scan. Do you want me to book you in for that now?”

Harry nodded numbly. He hadn’t thought that having multiples might rip out his healing muscles. He looked down to his belly again. ‘Please be just the one baby, please.’ He begged silently.

“It’ll be alright, we’ll look after you and support you through everything, Harry.” Georgio promised him.

Harry smiled. “I refused a selective reduction when I had my quintuplets…I look at them now and I can’t even imagine not having birthed half of them. I know I’ll feel the same now, if I have to terminate however many babies. I couldn’t do it, Georgio.”

“This is a bit different, Harry. You could die if the babies tear up your insides.”

Harry nodded. “I know, I understand, but that would be preferable to killing off half my children.”

Georgio smiled sadly. “Your submissive instincts are talking now. Death is not preferable when you have four mates and eight children to already look after. They all need you still.”

Harry bit his lip.

“Don’t worry so much about it, we’ll cross that bridge when we get to your scan.” Georgio told him kindly.

Harry nodded. “Okay.”

“I believe that was everything, Healer Moore will be by tomorrow to see you, but later tonight, it’ll be Elder Kirrian. He’ll likely just pop in to say hello and then leave again.”

Harry sighed and he nodded. “Okay. Thank you, Georgio.”
The giant of a man left him to it and he saw himself out, through the floo and Harry sat quiet for a couple of minutes before he stood up and he went the long way around to the bigger family room.

“Is everything okay?” Myron asked immediately. He was sat feeding Leolin, who was trying to reject his bottle, but Myron was holding him and the bottle firmly.

“Yes, fine. I hate these stupid little visits.” He huffed, sitting down and taking Leolin and the bottle from Myron and settling his youngest son down to feed him.

“Did you find out?” Myron asked with a small cluing look to his belly.

“I did and yes, I’m pregnant.” Harry said softly. “There was more talk of a selective reduction if I have multiples. I didn’t like that, but as Georgio assured me, we might not even have to cross that bridge, I might be pregnant with just the one baby.”

“You know that we’re all going to look after you.” Myron said with a smile. “We’re not going to let anything like this happen ever again.”

“It’ll never happen again.” Harry agreed strongly. “We’re going to ensure that. But, please keep the news to yourself for a bit.”

“After Braiden’s birthday?” Myron said knowingly.

Harry nodded. “Yes. I will take it easy, especially knowing that this is going to be a high risk, dangerous pregnancy, but they’re going to drive me insane if I have to put up with them through the parties too.”

“Alright, but I will be coming around more often, just to make sure that you are taking it easy.”

Harry chuckled and he nodded. “After what happened, it won’t be so out of the blue for you to come around to check on us all more.”

“I would have done it anyway after what happened, but now that you’re going to give us another grandchild, I can’t take the risk that those boys aren’t completely settled. Not just yet. You are my priority now, until such a time that I’m convinced that they can look after you as you deserve.”

Harry smiled, taking the bottle from Leolin’s mouth and putting him up on his shoulder and rubbing his back firmly, avoiding his tiny white and gold wings.

He smiled around at the kids on the floor. Braiden and Farren were still playing. Calix was cruising around still, but the others were all napping. Very soon the other three would drop off too and Harry hoped that by that time that his mates would be back.

Leolin drifted off in his arms and Harry placed him down on the settee and covered him over with a blanket before he snatched up Calix and pulled several faces at him. Calix giggled happily.

“Mummy, no.” He giggled.

Harry pulled several more faces and Calix giggled harder. Harry smiled down at him and he started pacing the room, Calix liked movement. If you stopped, then he’d pitch a fit, but if you paced around, he would lie quiet and eventually it would lull him to sleep.

Harry placed Calix on the floor, tucking him up to Tegan, who was pillowed on Regan, her penguin between them both. Braiden had slipped off too, but Farren was just sat, playing quietly. He still didn’t like taking naps and as he never got cranky or grizzly from missing one, Harry was content to leave him be.

“What time are the boys due back?” Myron asked him as it approached two in the afternoon.

“I was actually expecting them back by now, but we were warned that sometimes the appointments could run a little over, especially if they make a good bit of progress during a session. They could be back any minute though.”

“Do you want another cuppa?”

Harry smiled. “Please.”

“I’ll let you do your own honey, Merlin knows that I can never get it right. I see you pulling faces behind your cup.”

Harry laughed. “You’ll never learn if you don’t practice!” He teased.
Harry sat playing quietly with a very happy Farren. He heard the floo sound and he grinned. Not a minute later he heard Max’s voice in the kitchen. Blaise wandered in and Harry scrutinised him critically. He seemed happy enough, he wasn’t jumping for joy, but neither was he angry or upset.

Harry held his arms out and then Blaise smiled as he came to hug him and give him a big kiss.

“Are you alright, Bello?” He asked seriously.

“Yes. Everything’s been fine here.” He said with a smile. “Are you okay?”

Blaise smiled at him and stroked his hair back from his face. “Everything’s fine.”

“There’s my gorgeous lover.”

Harry chuckled. “Hi, Max.”

Max came to give him a big, smacking kiss and it made Harry laugh. Max offered him the tea and then Harry grinned himself. Max had taken over making his tea and the amount of honey was perfect, as always.

“I love you.” Harry declared as he savoured the taste of his tea on his tongue.

“You’ve been busy today, I saw your cakes. Are you alright?” He asked as Nasta came into the living room with Draco.

“Fine. Farren helped me make them and they all had one after their lunches. Those left out there now are for us.”

“I saw that there was no icing.” Nasta smiled.

“No, I don’t think adding so much sugar to their diets so young will do them any favours. They get just plain cakes for now. They loved them too.”
“Is there anything that needs to be done?” Nasta asked him, even as Draco pulled Harry into a kiss.

Harry broke apart from the kiss and he gave a breathless laugh. “No, everything’s done and sorted. The kids have just gone down for their naps, Farren doesn’t want to nap, do you baby? No, and everything else is fine.”

“Did they all eat their lunches?”

“Of course they did.” Harry smiled. “Calix didn’t throw anything either. Overall, chicken, rice and veg goes down really well.”

“Did you like it too?” Max asked.

Harry grinned. “Yes. I liked it.”

“Did you have any problems cooking it?”

Harry gave Max a deadpan look. “No, Max. You practically cooked it for me. All I had to do was steam everything and grill the chicken. I was well able to manage that.”

“Good.” Max smiled at him before sitting behind him and wrapping his arms around him, chin resting on his shoulder as he babbled to Farren as Harry drank his tea.

“I’m going to head off. I’ll be on call if ever you need me.” Myron said.

“Thank you for taking a day off work to keep me company.” Harry said.

“Thank you for the cakes.” Myron laughed. “That more than makes up for it.”

“Don’t tease Richard about it too much.” Harry laughed.
Myron winked and left them to it. Harry let his mates settle down a bit and then he started giving them worried glances.

“Everything was fine.” Nasta told him the moment he caught Harry’s look.

Max tugged his head back by his hair gently to see his little frown. He kissed it away.

“We just sat and talked in a group with a Mind Healer, that’s all. It actually went really well. We were more worried about you.”

“Me, why?” Harry said. “I was here with Myron.”

“Not because of that, love, but because we knew the Elders would be coming and we wouldn’t be here for you. How did that go?” Max asked.

“It wasn’t an Elder this afternoon, they had some sort of emergency that they had to deal with. Georgio came instead. He said that Elder Kirrian is scheduled to see us tonight, but that he’d only be popping his head in.”

“He gave you an examination, didn’t he?” Nasta said seriously.

“No, he took my word for everything and then he left.” Harry said with a smile. “It wasn’t so bad, not like that Elder Messana. I’m sure he’s trying to get me taken from you all again. I’m glad that you were here to stop him from stripping me off and checking my body for marks.”

“There’s no need for it and I won’t have it.” Nasta growled protectively. “If they won’t take your word for it, then they have magical scans, never strip off for them, Harry.”

“Trust me, I won’t.” Harry said seriously. “I told Elder Messana as much. That’s how you knew about it, remember? I started shouting and yelling and you all came running.”

“Of course we did, you were screaming so loudly that I jumped into a table.” Blaise laughed.
Harry smiled and snuggled back into Max’s bulk. His biggest mate just wriggled and held him tighter, squeezing tighter with his massive arms.

“You’re so good at cuddling.” Harry complimented. “Come here baby, you need to get in on this too.”

Harry dragged his big boy between his legs and added him to the cuddle. Farren giggled and stood up, wrapping his arms around Harry’s neck. Max wrapped his arms around both of them, kissed them both and then he stayed smiling, holding them both.

“How have they been?”

“Great. Calix had a tantrum because I refused to allow him to climb the curtains.”

“So that’s why they were on the windowsill!” Draco chuckled as he eyed them up. “I was wondering.”

“Ave is going to start walking any day!” He said excitedly. “Six months old and she’s going to walk soon! Eva is slower on her feet, but still, she’s getting around so well…to think that just last month they were still commando crawling.”

“Still saying nothing, though?”

Harry nodded. “Just Muma and a few odd sounds.”

“Muma.” Farren repeated, turning to look at him.

Harry smiled and kissed him. “I love you, Farren.” He said clearly and Farren grinned at him, understanding his words and their meaning.

Harry rested back against Max and he sighed. “When’s your next assessment?”
“We made good progress, so our next session is next week, on the Wednesday.”

Harry nodded. “The kids are going to Amelle and Caesar on the Wednesday.”

“Oh that’s right, their play date.” Blaise nodded. “You’ll have a free day all to yourself, Harry.”

Harry frowned. “That sounds like hell, actually.” He said.

“You’ll have Eva, Ave and Leolin with you.”

“I won’t have Leolin. He’s going to Dain and Kailen. Remember, we agreed to allow them a couple of hours with him. We planned it for this Wednesday so that we would have an afternoon together.”

“Oh, that’s right! Just you and our little girls then.” Max laughed.

“At least I can catch up with the washing.” Harry sighed. “When are your individual sessions?”

“Tomorrow with the Dracken Counsel.” Max said. “Two O’clock, so I’ll be here for their lunches.”

“I’m up first, nine in the morning.” Draco sighed.

“I’m last.” Blaise nodded. “At five.”

“When’s your next session?” Nasta asked him.

Harry frowned. “In two days. I’m going well, but I wish they’d let me use Healer Vasey. I’ve made so much headway with him that I’m not all that open to having another Mind Healer near me. I’m probably not being as cooperative as I could be, but then I’ve never been all that open about sharing my thoughts with just anyone. Healer Vasey isn’t happy about it either, he thinks that distracting me with a different style of therapy, like this new Mind Healer, when they won’t be continuing my treatment further, is actually going to set me back.”
“It’s because Healer Vasey isn’t on the Counsel’s payroll.” Max said, a small sneer tugging at his lips. “They don’t trust his word as they can’t force an oath on him.”

“Healer Vasey actually offered to take the oath and they still refused.” Harry said. “For whatever reason, they don’t want me with my regular Mind Healer, the one that I’ve spent months working up to trusting fully with my mental health. It’s making me less cooperative. It doesn’t help that the prick they’ve assigned to me is trying to word trap me into incriminating you all. I know word traps now from Richard for the court case.”

“He’s still doing that?” Nasta growled.

“Oh yeah.” Harry told them. “Not that he’ll get very far. As soon as I recognise a word trap things devolve into insults and then silence. I’ve told Elder Kirrian and I know he’s had words…probably more than words if I know him at all, so hopefully this next session won’t be as bad.”

“I hate the thought that this is putting you back in your actual therapy.” Nasta said.

“It’s okay.” Harry said. “I don’t class what the Counsel are doing as therapy anyway, as I said, he’s not even trying to help me, he’s just trying to force me into saying things that I don’t mean. It’s like he can’t help but try to split up other people’s mateships for some sort of sadistic pleasure…I don’t know who his Submissive is, but I feel so fucking sorry for her.”

Harry bent forward and he kissed Farren, who giggled and twisted away from him, moving to play with the big bucket of wooden blocks now that he didn’t have any younger siblings to either prevent him from playing with them, or ruin his attempts to creatively build towers by knocking them over before he was done.

Harry smiled and he sat and he played with Farren, handing him blocks and subtly straightening Farren’s creations when his boy turned to dig out more blocks from the bucket.

His mates were quiet, for whatever reasons, Nasta was definitely stuck in thought, he had that brooding look on his face that he always got when he sunk into his own thoughts, but from the others it was a little more unusual. He had the thought then that perhaps their own therapy sessions were actually going as badly as his own and they hadn’t told him because they didn’t want to worry him.

He frowned himself, then he smiled as he thought of something to cheer them up.

“Georgio told me something else today too.” He said, breaking them all out of their thoughts, their brooding and respective silence as they all looked to him as he spoke.
“What did he tell you?” Max asked, almost in excited anticipation.

“Are you alright?” Draco asked him.

Of course, they all expected him to drop a baby bombshell on them. They’d been trying to hint to him to get a pregnancy check since he’d had a fertile heat, but they had, as yet, not asked him outright. He grinned mentally and he let out a small chuckle. He was going to keep that little bit of baby news to himself for a little while longer.

“I’ve been signed off to restart our sex life.” He said happily.

He almost saw all their bodies relax as one, as they let out the breaths they’d been holding, and then Max whooped quietly, aware of the napping babies, and he surged forward to cuddle him.

“Yes! I can’t wait to lavish you with sex! I’ve been waiting to fuck you properly for what feels like forever.”

Harry laughed. “You’ll have to wait to fuck me properly. I’ve been cleared for sex, but the slow, careful, gentle kind. It’ll be another couple of weeks before I’m healed enough for anything more…vigorous.”

“I don’t care, I’ll take what I can get.” Max declared, pulling Harry back onto his lap and sucking his neck.

Harry was shocked to feel that Max was actually hard. “Where did that come from?” He laughed.

“What? I’m very happy to hear that I can have sex with you.”

“You…that actually made you hard? Just me saying that we can have sex?” Harry grinned.

“Well, yeah. I always get hard when any of you say that we can have sex. Have you seriously never noticed that in two years of being in a relationship with me?”
“I knew you got hard when we would tease you or wind you up, I never knew that just saying it made you spring to life.”

“It’s probably because things haven’t been normal and we haven’t been able to have a normal sex life.” Nasta reasoned.

“Are all of you hard?” Harry asked.

“Semi.” Blaise winked.

That made Harry laugh and he had to wipe away tears of joy as he realised that his mates had wanted sex as much as he had over the last few months, but their love and care for him had always stopped them despite their own physical needs and demands. It made him feel wonderful to know that it hadn’t been through any lack of desire that they had always told him no and he turned quickly to straddle Max’s lap.

“I think tonight we should re-establish our bond.” He insisted, in a low, sultry voice. “Nice and gently…and very, very slowly.” He purred the last and Max let out a long, low moan. “But first, who wants more tea?” He asked brightly as he stood up and swayed to the kitchen.

He heard Max groan louder, this time in aggravation, and he giggled happily. This truly felt like they were back to normal…teasing his mates had always been a part of their relationship, a part that he loved very much. They were getting there, they just had a few more hurdles to clear first, but he couldn’t wait until they reached their end goal. It was going to feel amazing when this was all over and done with at last.

-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I still have another chapter stored up and ready for next week, but chapter 108 is going very well too now that I’ve hit 10,000 words with it, so in another week, that one could be ready for update too, so as per our last update, I’m definitely sticking to this fic over September for at least another week, perhaps two, then we’ll be in October, so it’s definitely RotD month.

That’s all for this week, lovelies! I’ll be back with chapter 107 next week, but until then, lovelies I hope you’ve enjoyed this chapter,

StarLight Massacre. X
Chapter Notes

Last Time

He heard Max groan louder, this time in aggravation, and he giggled happily. This truly felt like they were back to normal...teasing his mates had always been a part of their relationship, a part that he loved very much. They were getting there, they just had a few more hurdles to clear first, but he couldn’t wait until they reached their end goal. It was going to feel amazing when this was all over and done with at last.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Seven – Exploration

Harry’s assessment had started like near torture. A break had had to be called as the therapist hadn’t been able to get a word from him since he’d accused Harry of trying to cover for his abusive dominants. He’d gotten so aggravated and frustrated with his lack of cooperation that he had needed to walk away, so he had called a break.

Harry had been told to stay sat on a bench just outside the door until the Healer got back, but he’d gone off to the Healing Halls to find Georgio instead.

“Harry!” Jo stood up so fast that her seat went clattering to the floor. “Are you okay?”

She hurried around the desk and pulled him into her arms, sniffing him over.

“I’m okay. Who’s here?”

“It’s Healer Grant and Healer Alessandri on duty this afternoon, neither are currently busy. We have no patients.”

“I need to see Georgio.”

“Alright, he’s just through in the break room, you know where that is by now.”
Harry nodded and he left Joanne’s arms to go down the sterilised corridor and he knocked gently on the break room door.

“Come in.” The strong, ancient voice of Healer Alfred Grant made Harry smile as he was asked to enter.

Healer Alfred Grant and Georgio leapt to their feet when they saw him come in and Georgio hurried to him.

“They’ve harmed you again?!” Georgio demanded as his huge hands touched him gently, already searching for injuries.

“What? Oh…no! No!” Harry said. “I’m here for that therapy thing. Healer shit stick threw me out, so I decided to come and see you.”

“Healer Kinnick?” Georgio asked questioningly.

Harry nodded. “Yeah, what’s his fucking problem?”

“Whatever will make you happy, he wants the opposite.” Georgio said furiously. “Why did Elder Kirrian pair you with him?”

“He didn’t. I came in today and was supposed to be seeing Healer Camberly, who I thought was bad enough, only to be told that Healer Camberly wasn’t well and wasn’t here. So instead Elder Messana had paired me up with Healer Kinnick. I never want to see that man again.”

Harry burrowed into Georgio and the huge Healer held him tightly, making him feel like no one would ever hurt him ever again.

“Get Elder Vipond here.” Georgio growled. “I want Healer Vasey put on the Counsel payroll and brought here for Harry’s own good. He already knows that you’re a Dracken?”
Harry nodded. “He’s a specialist for magical creatures or family members of magical creatures, he has Draken blood in his family. We were going to use Nasta’s Faerie blood, and Leolin’s traumatic birth, if the public ever found out I was going there to see him, but they never have.”

“I will ensure that he is the one dealing with these matters, Harry.” Georgio promised him, petting his hair and holding him close. “There is no need for anyone to harm you in such a way, its needless! I’ve always hated that little fucker and the way he treats the submissives in his care, all because he lost his own submissive a year ago.”

“What has happened?” An angry Anthanaric Vipond asked, still brushing soot from his robes, at seeing Harry clutched in Georgio’s arms.

“Surely you haven’t been harmed again, dear one.” Elder Trintus gasped.

Harry shook his head. “No. I never want to see that psychiatrist again!”

“Healer Camberly is perfectly adequate.” Elder Kirrian said confusedly. “What seems to be the problem, Harry?”

“He wasn’t being seen by Healer Camberly.” Georgio explained. “Elder Messana put him with Healer Kinnick.”

“Oh, fucking no.” Elder Kirrian cursed and it made Harry chuckle. “Has he not been fired yet?”

“He has lost his mate, it would be a huge disservice for us to fire him too. His job is all he has left.”

“He is abusing the submissives under his care! He doesn’t do it to the dominants, so only give him dominant patients!” Elder Kirrian hissed. “Harry is the twenty-third submissive patient he has driven from the room, he is causing them more pain, Anthanaric! It is unacceptable!”

“I agree with Elder Kirrian. Harry has been distressed and he has come running to me for protection.” Georgio growled, which Harry thought was taking things a bit far, but if it meant he never had to see Healer Kinnick ever again, he’d roll with it. “This is adversely affecting Harry’s mental health and with his past events, I am going to have to insist that we pull in Healer Sebastian Vasey, Harry’s already established mind Healer.”
“He is known to us, but he is not on the Counsel payroll.”

“So put him on the payroll! Even if it’s just part time or even temporary! Harry needs his established, trusted mind Healer and I am going to have to insist upon it.” Georgio said firmly.

Anthanaric looked at the upturned face of the tiny submissive being dwarfed by Georgio’s bulk and he sighed. Those green eyes had a look of stone in them that promised trouble and a severe lack of cooperation if he did anything other than agree completely. He found himself nodding.

“Yes, we’re going to have to bring him in.” He said. “Henry, perhaps you could contact him for me. Harry, sweetness, I think you’d best go home. We’ll set up another appointment for you and then we’ll call you back, okay?”

“Okay. Thank you, Georgio.”

Georgio sighed and kissed his head. “Get back to your mates, kiddo. I’ll see you again soon.”

Harry nodded and he gave a last squeeze to Georgio’s trim waist and he hurried to the waiting room, where Jo was once again sat.

“Everything sorted?” She asked.

“Oh yeah, Georgio is totally badass.” Harry chuckled. “I knew I could count on him for anything.”

“Helps that he’s gorgeous too. It’s a shame that we’re both mated and so is he.”

Harry laughed and winked at her. “I have more than enough mates, all of them are gorgeous too. I don’t need any more. Though it would be handy having my own personal Healer at home.”

Jo laughed but shook her head at him. “Go on, get.” She chided him.
Harry picked up a pinch of floo powder and threw it into the flames.

“Bye, Jo!” He said, giving her a last wave before calling out his address carefully, remembering to take a big breath before he stepped into the emerald flames.

He was getting better with his landings, so he didn’t smash his face against the fireguard when he landed, but he did still go to his knees.

He was just clambering over the guard when Nasta poked his head in. His frown morphed into a scowl.

“Are you okay? You’ve barely been gone half an hour.”

“Yep, I’m peachy.” Harry said. “The Elders have agreed to bring in Healer Vasey for me after I was abused by the psychiatrist and I had to run to Georgio for protection.”

“What?!” Nasta growled, his hands clenching tight, even as he picked Harry up and held him, sniffing him all over.

“I’m not hurt, just upset. Apparently he abuses every submissive given to him.”

“Why were you given to him then?!” Nasta growled.

“I was supposed to be with Healer Camberly.”

“Yes, as we all are.” Nasta agreed.

“Mysteriously, he wasn’t in today. I got given to Healer Kinnick instead, who apparently lost his own submissive mate, so he wants every other submissive to suffer as punishment or something. He didn’t even try to help me, Nas! I went to find Georgio, who made the Elders see that I need Healer Vasey, they’re going to make me another appointment when they hire Healer Vasey for me.”

Nasta sighed and held him tight. “Let’s get you some tea.” He said, even as he carried him through the right angle corridor and into the kitchen.
“Who was it, Nassa?” Sanex’s voice came from the larger family room.

“Me!” Harry called out happily. “It’s good to see you again, Sanex.”

“It’s been way too long, but I’ve been spending a lot of time with Crista.”

“How is she? Have you brought her with you?”

“No, not today. I wasn’t sure how you’d react to…well, you know.”

“No, I’m fine with women, as long as they don’t try and get into my pants, of course.” Harry said.

Nasta snorted and he couldn’t contain a small chuckle.

“What?” Harry asked loudly. “What’s so funny, Nasta? Are you saying that I’m undesirable to women you complete and utter arse?”

Harry heard several more people laugh and he grinned, knowing that more people had come to visit.

“No! I’m not saying that. You’re stunning.” Nasta assured him as he made Harry’s tea and then carried him and the cup into the family room.

“Crista’s a werewolf, Harry.” Sanex said.

“So?”

“I told you he wouldn’t care.” Nasta snorted.

“She’s in work today anyway, but I wasn’t sure about the invite to Harry’s and Braiden’s birthdays.”
“Of course she can come! I’m sure werewolves like cake as much as everyone else.” Harry said, before pulling a thoughtful face. “Or maybe that’s just Remus. Anyway, Remus is coming to both parties, of course Crista can come too.”

“You don’t mind her being around the kids?”

“Are you worried about her being around the kids?” Harry asked back.

“No.” Sanex shook his head.

“Then I’m not bothered either. Richard, how are you?” Harry asked, moving over to him when Nasta set him down.

“I’m very unhappy with you.”

Harry’s face fell dramatically. “Why?” He asked worriedly.

Myron pulled him onto his lap and cuddled him.

“He’s had a rough day, Richard. Don’t say such things!” Myron chastised.

“How can you give Myron cake and not me?!” Richard whined.

Harry’s body relaxed and the tension drained out of him with a relieved sigh. He cuddled into Myron’s bulk and happily accepted the arm around him.

“Myron was here with me at the time.” Harry said.

“He doesn’t need cake, I do!” Richard pouted.
“You’re home earlier than expected.” Myron noticed, changing the subject with ease.

“Yeah, I was just telling Nasta about the abusive psychiatrist I got lumbered with.”

“I beg your pardon.” Richard said, his voice like ice, going from childish to deadly serious, and furious on his behalf, in a single moment.

“Who was it?” Myron demanded.

“Healer Kinnick. He was a real piece of work and when he wasn’t insinuating that I was a lying brat, he was trying to force me to confess that my dominants weren’t up to the task of looking after me.”

“How did you handle him?” Richard asked with narrowed eyes.

“I refused to answer anything he asked, not even when he tried to tell me that my silence was incriminating my dominants, and he got so wound up and frustrated that he called a break. I was supposed to stay just outside the room, I went to find Georgio instead. He called Vipond and a long story cut short, I now get Healer Vasey.”

“Good.” Myron grunted. “I’m already in the mood to break a few necks after work, his would have been added to the list if you’d been forced to carry on seeing him.”

“Well luckily for him that Georgio was in my corner then.” Harry chuckled. “How have the kids been?” He asked.

“They’re all up in their cots.” Nasta assured him. “They had their lunch easily enough and they went down nice and calmly.”

“Even Farren?” Harry asked surprised.

Nasta nodded with a grin. “Even Farren. So it’s been nice and calm and I actually managed to get a bit more of that paperwork done.”
“Do you have much left?”

“No, just the new bunch that arrived the other day is left now.”

“When are you going to pop back into the Reserve?”

“Once all the therapy is done and out of the way.” Nasta nodded.

“You can pop in for an hour or so. Maverick said that Caronwyn was missing you like mad.”

“I might tomorrow. When Max is here.” Nasta said. “If you don’t mind.”

“No, I don’t.” Harry told him. “I’m fine on my own though, I can manage my own children for an hour or two while you’re all out.”

Nasta pulled a face.

“You don’t think so?” Harry demanded, turning on Myron’s lap to face him, an icy quality to his voice.

“Of course I know that you can look after our own children, Harry. You just shouldn’t have to while you’re still not one hundred percent and there are four of us to help you.” Nasta insisted.

Harry narrowed his eyes and he stared at Nasta, trying to discern if he was lying to cover his tracks or if he meant it.

“I’m telling you the truth. I know that you can look after them, I just fully believe that none of us, not just you, should have to be left alone with them when there are four of us. It’s only Max and I who have jobs. As soon as we’re all done with these therapy sessions, we can start getting ourselves back into a routine too.”

Harry nodded and he rested back against Myron, who shifted him more comfortably on his lap and wrapped him back up.
“Is Caesar still having your oldest five on Wednesday?” Sanex asked.

Harry grinned and nodded. “Yeah, they’re going for a play date with Nora and Bea.”

Richard laughed. “I can’t wait to see that boy’s face afterwards. He thinks he’s hard done by with those two girls of his.”

“Nora and Bea are as good as gold too.” Harry laughed. “Wait until he gets a hold of Calix who climbs everything, Braiden who looks in every cupboard and drawer, Farren who puts everything within reach into his mouth and Tegan who will try to monopolise everyone’s attention. They want to call in the reinforcements now.”

“Is only Regan good then?” Sanex asked.

Harry bobbed his head from side to side in consideration. “When he wants to be, he is usually better behaved when there are strangers around him. He tends to be quieter in strange places and around strange people. So I don’t expect him to give Caesar and Amelle too much trouble…the others though, they’re going to give them the run around.”

“So you’ll be here with the girls and Leolin?”

Harry looked to Nasta, who nodded.

“No, Nasta and I have been talking with the others and we think that we’ve come to a point where we can trust Dain and Kailen to have Leolin for an afternoon, on a trial basis. We’re going to ask if they want to have him for a few hours on Wednesday.”

“Who are you giving the girls to?” Sanex laughed.

“No one, they’re staying with us.” Harry grinned.

“Let me know how the Faeries get on with Leolin.” Richard said.
“They should be alright. I’m going to start sleeping with a blanket now, so that Leolin can have my scent with him. We’re hoping that it’ll keep him a little calmer.”

“That’s a good idea.” Myron nodded as he bumped his knee up and shifted Harry again.

“Am I too heavy for you?” Harry asked concernedly.

Richard actually laughed and Myron looked offended.

“No, you’re a wisp of nothing.” Myron said.

“He…he bench presses five times your weight at home.” Richard giggled, wiping his eyes. “I can’t believe it…too heavy.” He laughed again.

“Oh, fuck you all, I’m going for a bath.” Harry huffed. Myron still managed to swat his bum as he stood up for his language.

He went into the bathroom and he smiled at his reflection in the mirror. He chuckled and run the water in the massive bath that could fit three grown men and he added a glob of lime scented bubble bath. It was running low.

He stripped off and climbed in while the water was still running and he sighed happily. He would only have a small while before the kids woke up from their naps and he wanted to have a small moment to himself, to get clean from the scent of the Dracken Halls and to relax and unwind from the torment of his disastrous therapy session. At least he knew now that the next time he was called in he was going to be dealing with his very well trusted mind Healer, Sebastian Vasey. That was something at least and he already knew the man, he already knew that he could trust him and talk to him about anything. He could trust Healer Vasey to look after him and make everything better and that was what he really needed right now, not some fraud trying to ruin his mateship on purpose because his own submissive had died.

On Wednesday, Harry was in their big house all on his own and he hated it. He had tried to prove a point, that he was well enough, that he was recovered enough, to be alone on his own with his children, even if he did only have Eva and Ave with him at the moment. But he hadn’t expected how very much he would hate being on his own in this big, huge house. His two girls were quiet, or at least things were much quieter than he was used to, as they played together on the floor with unlimited access to whatever toy they wanted without competition from their bigger, older siblings, and he had nothing to do, he was missing his mates and he was missing his older children.

Wandering from room to room, exploring everything that he hadn’t already done so, took him less than half an hour on his own with no distractions. He’d done all the washing, he’d stripped the cots down to wash the babies bedding, he’d changed out all the bins, polished and vacuumed the main living areas and now he was just sitting around, waiting for something to do.

He’d had more than enough and pulling on his trainers, he got the pram from under the stairs, set it up, made sure the locks were in place before he laid his two beautiful daughters inside and covered them with a light blanket…not that that lasted long as they kicked it off not five minutes later.

He packed a nappy bag, shoved that in the basket underneath the pram, made sure that he had his wallet and his house keys, presented to him by a very proud Nasta when he’d been well enough to actually understand what he was being given and why, and he stepped foot outside his front door for the first time. He pushed the pram down the rather large front pathway and he turned to look at the front of his house, smiling at it.

He turned right at their large gateway and he walked down the pavement, exploring the neighbourhood. He was so insanely curious as he looked each way and picked out landmarks for himself so that he would know his way back.

He was stopped not ten minutes later by their nearest neighbour, who was still rather a way away from them, who turned out to be a man, who indicated the big house in the distance.

“So you’re one of the people living in that house. We had wondered if it had been built just to sell it on, though it’s wonderful to see that scrubland finally cleared away and put to good use. It was such an eyesore in this beautiful neighbourhood.”

Harry smiled at the man and nodded. “Yes, I live there with my family.”

“Your parents?”

Harry tried not to let that comment affect him, but he shook his head. “No, my lovers and I and our children.”

“These babies are yours?!” The man asked in shock. “You don’t look old enough!”

“I’m almost nineteen.” Harry said seriously.
“Never!” The man said. “You don’t look old enough to be out of school yet!”

“I graduated a year ago.” Harry told him.

“Well, either I’m just getting old or you kids are looking younger and younger!” The man laughed. “Are you taking a walk around the neighbourhood? There’s a park just down the road. This place is a very quiet, relaxed area, but you head straight down the road, about twenty-five minutes, half an hour away is a supermarket if ever you need anything.”

“Thank you very much.” Harry smiled.

“No problem, if ever you need anything, just come knocking on the door. People these days think asking for a cup of sugar or a pint of milk from the neighbours is rude or overrated, I still hold the belief that neighbours are there to help if you need anything. I can’t imagine that cutting all that grass and forestry is going to be an easy job, so if you need a hand, I’m always happy to help.”

Harry was genuinely touched. “Thank you.” He said sincerely. “Likewise, if ever you need anything, anything at all, just knock.”

Harry and his new neighbour shared a knowing look, that they were kindred spirits of a dying breed, and Harry carried on his way down the road with the pram. Perhaps this wasn’t going to be such a bad place to live after all. Perhaps he wouldn’t have to be afraid of coming out on his own and just taking a walk.

“Oh hi!” A bubbly woman in her twenties bounded over to greet him five minutes later. “You must be the new neighbours! Though I say new, you’ve been moved in for a while now, haven’t you?”

Harry smiled. “That’s right.”

“You look far too young to have your own home, such a massive house too, and to be a Daddy!” She carried on. “But those two little girls are so gorgeous, you must be so proud. I’m Louise.”

Harry laughed. “I am proud, I’m Harry. These are my youngest, Eva and Ave. We have eight children. Five boys and three girls.”
The woman’s face fell. “Eight?!” She cried. “How old are you?”

“I’m nineteen in a week.” He answered.

“I…but, how old were you when you had your first?”

“Seventeen.”

“You had eight babies in two years? How many women did you knock up?!”

Harry’s eyes narrowed and Louise seemed to realise that she had stepped over a boundary.

“Oh, I didn’t mean that to come out as rude as it did, I’m sorry.”

“I didn’t knock up anyone.” Harry told her. “My partners and I used surrogates. We got the one boy, then the one surrogate went and had quintuplets and then we had our two girls here.”

“Partners?” Louise said with a questioning lilt.

“Yes, me and my four male partners live together with our eight children.”

Louise’s eyes went so round and Harry knew then that he’d given her enough gossip to chew on and to share around for the next month.

“It was nice to meet you.” Harry said, dismissing himself as he pushed the pram on. He really would never get over how rude or nosy some people could be. It reminded him of the Dursleys, and that reminded him of the court case. So much for a nice walk around his new neighbourhood. It had started off well enough, then one person had spoilt it.

He came to a small children’s park and he smiled, thinking of bringing his older children here soon, maybe once they were a little older. Braiden was going to be just two in three weeks after all.

He walked on and found the supermarket that was a twenty minute walk from their house. He popped in and picked up another box of rusks and some treats for himself and his mates. After scouring the selection of chocolate he realised that no, Muggles did not do his favourite chocolate fudge, or at least they didn’t here, and he sighed. He’d have to beg his mates to get some for him from Honeydukes.

He paid for his things, let several people coo over his girls, including the cashier, before he started back on his travels. He could still see the supermarket when he first spotted Draco. He stood out like a sore thumb because his platinum white hair caught the sun making his whole head look like a silver homing beacon and he just looked so lost out here with all the Muggle things around him.

“Draco!” He yelled out and waved when his mate turned towards his, very unusual name being shouted out in this Muggle neighbourhood.

Draco came pelting towards him and held him tightly, kissing him and exclaiming his relief.

“I take it you’re all back from your therapy.” Harry smiled.

“Thank Merlin you’re safe.”

“Of course I am. I’m fine.”

“We tried not to panic when we found you missing, but when no one had seen you, then we panicked. Max noticed that your trainers were missing and Blaise went right to the stairs and found the pram missing, so we guessed that you’d come outside, but we didn’t know which direction you’d gone in.”

Harry chuckled, but he turned back and started pushing the pram, going the full circuit around the neighbourhood. He started talking to his girls again, who were both sat up after getting bored of being lying down, their little bubble of privacy having been disturbed by all the people talking over them, making it impossible for them to take their afternoon nap. So now they were sat up and they were looking around themselves at everything.

“And here we have a silver car.” He said, pointing it out to them, waiting until their blue eyes locked onto the silver car. “We have to go past it to get back home, but it’s okay, because Daddy Draco is here with us now.”

The two identical girls, with their chestnut curls, got a lot of attention, especially now that they were sat up and people could see them easier. He heard people gushing and cooing as he and Draco made their way slowly home and it made him grin and puff up a bit in pride.

“There’s Max.” Draco cut into his commentary to his two girls and Harry looked up to see Max pounding the pavement as he run full tilt down a side street.

“Maxie!” Harry called out and his mate almost fell over his own feet to change direction back towards him.

Harry found himself clutched tight to that broad, sweaty chest as kisses were rained down on his face.

“Are you okay?”

“Perfectly fine.” Harry smiled. “Shall we carry on our walk or do you want to run off to hunt down Nasta and Blaise, as I assume they’re out trawling the streets for me too.” He said with a giggle.

“We were worried. We tried waiting for you, but we only lasted out half an hour.” Max explained as he caught back his breath.

“At least you managed half an hour, that’s progress!” Harry said happily. “Especially when you all think that I’m pregnant.”

“You might be and as you won’t have the test…”

“I told you, I’ll take it when I’m ready.” He cut in.

“I know! But I’m so excited. I want to know if I’m going to be a Daddy again.” Max answered and Harry smiled, patted his cheek and then took back the pram and started walking.

It took a further ten minutes to get back home after that, Harry keeping to his mundane commentary for his two girls who looked at him questioningly if he stopped speaking for too long, and as soon as he was in his own home, Harry let out a small, calm little trill to Nasta and Blaise, letting them know where he was and that he was completely fine and safe.
Draco took a yawning Eva and a sleepy Ave from the pram and he went to put them on the living room floor so that they could play with the toys around them without the distraction of their older siblings. They would be taking their nap soon, Harry would put money on it as they had missed their nap earlier when they’d been disturbed by all the people cooing over them.

Harry picked up the nappy bag and his shopping bag and he let Max fold down the pram.

“Oh, what have you been buying, naughty?” Max asked with a wink.

Harry chuckled. “More rusks for the kids and a couple of treats.” Harry winked back and just like that, he had Max’s curious attention.

“What sort of treats?” He asked.

“Nice ones.”

“Harry!” He whined. “Tell me.”

Harry laughed. “Just a few sweets and things, seeing as none of us have been to Honeydukes in a while and I haven’t had my favourite treat for ages…hint hint, Max.”

Max laughed loudly and picked him up, kissing his mouth.

“I’ll get you your chocolate, love. I’m in work tomorrow, I’ll pick some up afterwards.”

Harry grinned and hugged Max tightly. “Thank you, I love you.”

“Love you too, gorgeous.”

Harry was placed down on his feet and he went to make tea and put away his goodies. He’d just finished putting away the rusks when the front door opened and Nasta came into the house. Harry grinned at him from the kitchen, down the corridor to the front door.
“Are you okay?” Nasta asked him.

“Perfectly fine, dear. How are you?”

“A lot better now that I know that you’re safe.”

“I went for a walk around the neighbourhood, I did pop into the supermarket though to pick up a few things. The kids needed more rusks. I’m sure Farren has found a way to get the box from the cupboard, either that or someone is feeding him and not noting it down in his book.”

Nasta came to hug him, squeezing him tight and giving him a big kiss. Blaise opened the front door and he hurried in and he came right to him and Nasta, squeezing himself into their hug.

“Hi, Blaise.”

“Are you okay, Prezioso?”

“Yes, love. Me and our girls are perfectly fine. We had a lovely walk.”

“Thank Merlin.” Blaise sighed and he bent forward to kiss him again. “I need a coffee. Not a word about it, Nas.”

“Not saying a word.” Nasta smiled. “But…”

Harry was shocked into laughing as Nasta spanked Blaise once before going into the family room.

“Did he just…?” Blaise said in amazement, before he turned and went following Nasta. “You are not getting away with that.”

Harry heard Nasta laughing and it brought the biggest smile to his face.
“Hey hey! What happened?” Max asked.

“He spanked me!” Blaise complained.

“Oh, like this?” Harry heard a loud slap and he laughed harder as he went into the living room to see Blaise’s scandalised face.

“Stop hitting me!” Blaise complained.

Max grabbed him and tugged him down into his lap and snuggled him, making eating noises as he gnawed on Blaise’s neck, making the other man laugh and squirm.

“What are you doing?” Blaise giggled. “Stop it, Nas…” Blaise stopped and he stared at Max. They could all see him forcing himself to say the word that was in his mind.

“I love you, Draco.” Max said, rubbing noses with Blaise.

“Max. Your name is Max.” Blaise said very deliberately a moment later.

Max looked exaggeratedly surprised as he brushed his hand over Blaise’s bristly head, which was starting to grow back his hair, though still nowhere near his normal length.

“This hair is black! You’re not Draco! You’re my gorgeous Blaise! Come here, gorgeous!”

Max started his nibbling and licking and sucking again, moving to Blaise’s lips to snog him hard. Harry giggled and he shook his head before going back into the kitchen and finally getting around to getting them all tea, and a coffee for Blaise…well, Nasta had agreed that it was alright after all and Blaise had already been spanked in punishment, he had to have his coffee now.

He handed out the mugs and it was nice to be able to put the plate of biscuits down without any opportunistic kids snatching one, namely Farren or Braiden. Max and Blaise were still kissing and petting.

“Blaise, coffee!” Harry said, waving the mug under his nose with a grin.
Blaise broke away from Max and reached out for the coffee happily.

“Am…is the coffee more beloved than I am?” Max demanded.

“Can you stand coffee flavour kisses?” Blaise asked.

“Of course. I’ve kissed Harry when he tastes of vomit. Nothing stops me from kissing those I love.”

“Then you are both equally loved.”

“I don’t know whether to be offended that I’m on the same level as coffee or just grateful that it doesn’t rank higher than I do.” Max laughed.

“Don’t poke a sleeping dragon.” Draco said as he sipped at his white tea.

“You’re right.” Max declared before swooping in to snog Blaise again, coffee flavoured or not.

Harry watched them happily for a little while, drinking his own honeyed tea before he slid a little closer to Draco, who didn’t notice as he was engrossed with Max and Blaise’s little show. Draco didn’t notice him until Harry slipped himself into the blond’s lap, wrapping his arms around that pale neck and kissing his chin.

Draco grinned at him and lowered his head to snog him too.

“The hell am I being the only one left out.” Harry heard Nasta declare and a moment later his top dominant was on his knees by the side of him, touching him and Draco, nudging his way into their kiss and Harry moaned happily, squirming in Draco’s lap.

“Bedroom.” Harry declared.

“I like the way you think.” Max said as he stood, Blaise in his arms, the younger’s jeans mysteriously open.
“The girls.” Draco said, looking to where he’d put them down…they were both napping.

“I’ll bring the baby monitor with us.” Nasta insisted. “Get Harry upstairs while I put them in the travel cot.”

Draco didn’t need to be told twice as he stood and followed Max up the stairs to their Master suite, where Blaise had already been put down and was half divested of his clothes. His bottom half.

Draco put Harry down next to Blaise and they turned to one another, kissing and rolling up into the other to get closer. Max chuckled deeply and darkly as he watched them.

The bed bounced and Harry turned to see that Max had picked up Draco and had placed him on the bed too. Those dark blue eyes looked down at all three of them with what could only be love and a gleam of possessive lust.

“Do you like all three of us lying on a bed before you?” Harry purred.

Those blue eyes closed. “Yes.” Max moaned lingeringly, closing his eyes.

“It would be better if we weren’t wearing anything, Max.” Harry said teasingly, knowing exactly what to say to rile up his lovers.

Those eyes opened, looking darker than when they had closed a moment before, and Max reached out to tug the clothes from their bodies, lovingly and lingeringly caressing their bodies as he did so. His gaze staring at them all as their differently toned skins were revealed to him, Blaise the darkest of them, Draco the palest and Harry somewhere in the middle, flushed a delicate shade of pink in the heat of his arousal.

“You’re all stunning like this.” Max told them, looking at them all in turn, his voice had dropped deeper still, a hint of a growl turning it gravelly. “So beautiful.”

Nasta chuckled from behind Max and he approached the bed. “You are too.” Their top dominant insisted, reaching around to unzip Max and push his jeans to the floor, making sure to take his boxers with them.

Harry watched Nasta’s hands slowly caress Max’s strongly muscled legs, stroking the tanned skin, playing with hairs and running his fingers along the crease of his groin, but purposefully avoiding everything else.
“I think you should get onto the bed too, so that I can see all of my mates at once.” Nasta said in a whisper that they all heard regardless.

Harry expected Max to argue, but he didn’t. He tugged off his shirt, threw it away and he laid himself down next to Draco and he joined the three of them, staring up at Nasta, who was breathing heavily as he looked at the four of them.

“All four of my subordinate mates.” He purred, doing as Max had done and he touched them all in turn.

Harry wriggled between Blaise and Draco and Nasta’s gaze was drawn back to him.

“Shh, my little submissive.” Nasta said, using both hands to caress both sides of his body. “You’ll be taken care of.”

“Please.” Harry begged, wriggling harder under Nasta’s delicate touch.

Nasta smirked then, knowing that it had been his touch that had caused the increase in arousal and he was very proud of being the cause of it.

Nasta picked him up then, holding him close and kissing him. He turned Harry around and laid him on top of Blaise.

“Blaise, our submissive needs some attention, see to that for me.”

Blaise didn’t wait to be told twice, he rolled over, put Harry underneath him and he shifted himself down between Harry’s legs. Every muscle in Harry’s body tensed when the first lick of that tongue caught his skin and he moaned happily, spreading his legs as far as he could to give Blaise better access to his body.

“Now, for you two.” Nasta said and Harry slitted his eyes open to see them as Nasta turned his attention to Max and Draco. “Draco, why don’t you prepare Max for me, while I see to Blaise?”

Draco grinned and turned to Max, who put his hands behind his head and wriggled around to get comfortable as Draco started kissing his glorious chest, moving slowly down to his belly.

Blaise moaned between Harry’s legs and Harry tore his gaze away from Max and Draco to look down at Blaise. He could just see Nasta’s head beyond Blaise’s body. He knew what was happening around him and it brought his breath faster.

“Blaise, stop neglecting Harry.” Nasta drew back to tell him firmly.

A moment later Blaise’s tongue was back and licking at him. Harry moaned and wriggled, immediately Blaise’s hands clamped down on his thighs, preventing him from moving his lower body.

The bed bounced and Harry turned back to Max and Draco, to see that Max had had enough of being teased and he now had Draco face down on the bed. Harry couldn’t see what was happening, but as Draco was moaning deeply and Max was kneeling up on the bed, Harry could easily guess that Max’s hands were rather busy.

Blaise drew back his attention by sucking on him and when Harry looked back down at him, those purple eyes were looking at him. Blaise had wanted his attention back on himself.

Harry swallowed and his one hand, clutched into what small amount of hair that Blaise had, clenched tighter still and pulled in mindless pleasure.

Draco let out a small breathy sigh and Harry looked back to him again, to find that he was on his back now and they were wasting no time at all, Max was pressing into him slowly and carefully. Harry whined and panted harder, watching them, even as Blaise slid a finger into him.

Harry gasped and he arched his hips, but he didn’t turn his gaze away from Max and Draco. Draco who had relaxed and was now rolling his hips up and Max who had found a nice, steady rhythm and was slowly working his way up to all out fucking. Harry was still on a rough and ready ban, so he had to be subjected to slow and steady torture still.

Harry watched, all the while being prepared and opened by Blaise and Nasta, as Max fucked Draco fast and hard, making their blond mate curse and claw at Max’s back, digging his feet into the mattress, or into Max’s lower back, throwing his head back in his pleasure, until, with a sharp yell, he reached his happy orgasm.

Harry sighed as Draco reached his orgasm and he smiled as Draco dragged Max with him, their biggest mate arching his back while pushing forward his hips to get as deeply into Draco as he could before dropping down onto him and holding him tight as they both calmed and got their breaths back.

“That was a real show.” Blaise laughed deeply.

“Yet you three have barely moved! Get on with giving us two a show now!” Max said deeply and he rolled onto his side and held Draco to him, combing his fingers through the baby fine, blond hair.
“He’s right, Blaise. I think Harry’s had enough now.” Nasta said. “You definitely have.”

Nasta done something then that caused Blaise’s head to fall back and made him grunt.

“I can’t take any more prep.” Blaise complained.

“Move a bit, let me check that Harry’s nice and relaxed and all loose and ready.”

“I am!” Harry insisted.

“I’ll be the judge of that.”

Two fingers pressed their way into his body and Harry moaned as they slid easily into him.

“No resistance, no visible sign of any pain…what do you think, Blaise?”

“He’s ready.” Blaise cried out. “I’m ready, we’re both ready!”

Nasta’s chuckle was pure evil and Harry would have shouted at him, except that at that moment Nasta surged forward and Blaise’s breath caught, his eyes widened before they fell closed and his head shot back to rest on Nasta’s shoulder. It took a moment for Blaise to relern how to breathe and when he did, he moaned continuously.

Harry whined, almost like he would on a heat period when he thought that he wasn’t getting any attention, but unlike on his heat period, he was ignored as Nasta set a gruelling, sharp, random pace that went from slow to blisteringly quick and then back to an almost stop, alternating between quick and hard to slow and smooth.

It had Blaise moaning, unable to do anything else as he was helpless to Nasta’s whims. Harry, stuck underneath Blaise and Nasta, could do nothing but watch them, even as his hand found his cock and stroked it, squeezing just tight enough that he knew he could cum from it if he tried.

Blaise’s orgasm came so suddenly that Harry could see in his eyes that he hadn’t expected it. Blaise screamed and he cummed all over Harry’s chest and belly, his breath stuttering and making odd, grunting noises as he did so. He went boneless in Nasta’s arms, floppy and Nasta held him up, keeping his weight from Harry’s body and Nasta chuckled darkly, waiting a small while for them both to calm down before he moved Blaise gently and put him to the side, with Max and Draco who were still watching lecherously.

Nasta tutted as he looked Harry over. “What has this world come to when you have to masturbate yourself when you have four perfectly capable mates?” He asked Harry, clamping his hand and removing it from himself.

Harry’s hands were pinned above his head and it brought his breath faster, to the point where he was almost hyperventilating in anticipation.

“Oh, you have been wound up.” Nasta grinned down at him. “But don’t worry, Harry. It’s your turn now.”

Harry part moaned, part whined softly, his bottom lip trembling as he rolled his hips up, attempting to get Nasta to notice that part of him.

“It’s alright, Harry. I can see it.” Nasta assured him as he ducked his head down to slide his mouth over his cock. Harry grunted and rolled his hips up more urgently, Nasta just swallowed around him and moved back off of him.

“Please.” Harry begged. “Please.”

Nasta repeated his actions, going down on him slowly, swallowing him once or twice, then slowly pulling back off of him, sucking at his tip, or sometimes flicking his tongue into his slit, before going back down on him.

“No.” Harry cried. “Please. It’s too much. It’s too much!” He sobbed.

Nasta came off of him then, moving up to lay beside him, smoothing his hair and nuzzling his face.

“It’s alright, my love. Are you hurt? Are you in any pain?”

Harry shook his head, but he grasped at Nasta, tugging and pulling on him mindlessly, with no thought to what he was doing or why.
“Please. Finish it.” He begged.

Nasta rolled on top of him and Harry’s breath hitched, waiting, waiting, then Nasta pressed into him, so slowly, so carefully, but Harry was so wound up that he was hyper sensitised and he wriggled and moaned.

Nasta, who’d gotten all of his roughness out with Blaise and his first orgasm, was much more controlled now and he was able to go slowly without the desperation of seeking his own orgasm. He could slide into him and force himself to stay still, against Harry’s clenching, and he could focus purely on him.

Harry stared up at Nasta, willing him to go fast, but knowing that he wouldn’t. He wasn’t cleared for rough sex yet.

Nasta went slowly, but he was so smooth with his thrusts that Harry felt every single inch of Nasta glide into him and it brought his breathing faster, his pleasure just a little higher and he clutched at his mate desperately, clinging to him, sinking his nails into his neck as he moaned continuously, his breath catching with every other thrust that caught him just right and when his orgasm hit him, it was with such a force that he couldn’t even make a noise, he just threw his head back and screamed silently, unable to breathe, unable to do anything except ride out his pleasure until it was over.

He collapsed back to the bed and panted hard, trying to regain his breath as Nasta pulled out of him and started roughly stroking himself, thrusting his hips harder into his hand than he had dared into Harry’s body, until with his own grunt of pleasure, he spilled all over Harry’s groin and thighs.

“Fuck, that cumshot was worthy of a porno, Nas.” Max chuckled.

“You would know.” Nasta smiled at him, squeezing out the last of his orgasm before letting go of himself and taking in several huge, deep breaths. “Well I feel better.”

“I’m sleepy.” Harry said before yawning widely.

“Take a nap, Caru.” Nasta told him.

“But the girls.”

“We’ve got the girls. You stay here and nap with Draco.”
Harry looked over at the lack of complaint to see that Max had actually stroked Draco to sleep. Blaise’s laughing purple eyes caught his and his first mate winked.

“I’m going for a shower.” He said, sitting up. With a lingering caress to Harry’s thigh, Blaise left the bed for the en suite bathroom.

Harry wriggled up to the pillows and he yawned again, letting his eyes drop. Max carefully moved Draco up beside him and Nasta snatched his wand and cleaned them both up.

“That’ll do for now.” He said as he covered them both over with the duvet. “Get a bit of rest. If you’re not up we’ll call you when Caesar and Amelle come back with the kids or when Dain and Kailen bring back Leolin, whoever gets here first.”

“You mean when Caesar crawls back, begging us to never let him agree to having the play date at his house every again?” Max chuckled.

Nasta chuckled too. “Yeah. Come on, let’s go downstairs and leave these two in peace.”

Max scoffed. “Are you kidding? There’s a gorgeous, willing body in that fucking shower. I’m joining him.”

Nasta laughed then, before muffling himself. “Go on then. I’ll check on the girls and get some tea brewing. Black or white?”

“Black.” Max answered over his shoulder as he opened the door to the en suite and walked in, closing it behind him.

Harry chuckled sleepily and Nasta turned back to him. He pushed the hair from his forehead and kissed it. “Get a bit of rest, Cariad. You need to recover your strength.”

Harry giggled. “Might be I wear a skirt to dinner.” He said.

“You’ve had enough sex for one day, don’t you think?” Nasta asked him.
Harry hummed in agreement. “Maybe tomorrow then.” He said, closing his eyes and curling into Draco.

He heard Nasta chuckle. “Tomorrow is a new day.” He heard Nasta say before the bed shifted as his oldest mate stood up.

Harry smiled into Draco’s skin and he shifted again, getting comfortable. Tomorrow was a new day, anything could happen tomorrow…especially if he wore a skirt.

Dain Talarin was so insanely protective of the tiny babe in his arms as he looked down into beautiful gold eyes while they walked through the City. Leolin was only quiet, he was sure, because of the silencing device that Harry had popped into his mouth before they had left. Kailen didn’t like it at all, insisting that it could choke their precious little grandson, but Dain reminded him that Harry was Leolin’s Mother. In this situation, Harry always knew best.

Harry had given them a blanket also, that Leolin was holding to his nose. Harry had slept with this little blanket for two days preceding their trip with Leolin. It had his scent all over it and it was keeping Leolin very calm and docile.

They were stopped by everyone they came across, whether they be guards, shopkeepers, Faes, Valkyries, Seelies or Unseelies. Everyone was curious about Leolin, the Faerie born of two male Drackens who was not cloistered away like a dirty secret. The little Faerie who was growing, learning, thriving…all with his Dracken family, outside of the safety of the City.

“He’s so adorable.” One Fae gushed.

“Very strong too.” A guard who had wandered over to them added.

“That’s because he took some Dracken blood from his parents.” Dain insisted.

He was not ashamed of what Trefor’s line had become and he would not act as if it were some sort of dirty secret that was distasteful or sordid. He had loved his little Nesta as his own babe, he was happy that he had found love, even if it was with the human son of Dracken blood.

Only two of Nesta’s five children had been Drackens, and only one of those, Dai, had gone on to have children, just the two children, which was very unusual for Drackens, but Dai’s mate, Poppy, had died during childbirth to their daughter, Drysi and Dai had never sought out another mate. The babe had not lived either, leaving Dai with just his son, Hywel. The other Dracken, a submissive girl named Saffir, had been killed by a dominant Dracken at her own mate meeting, before she could get her own dominant, or her own child.

Hywel had been a Dracken also, he had mated to Eirian, who had given him three children, two boys and a girl, Aneirin, Idris and Nerys. Only Aneirin, his firstborn son, had been a Dracken. As he understood Eirian had fallen sick shortly after Nerys had been born, when the girl was just ten years old. Eirian had never recovered from this sickness and she had passed away thirty years after contracting her illness having never given Hywel another child.

Then Aneirin had grown and gotten himself a mate, and again tragedy had struck the Delericey family. It truly was as if their entire line was cursed by the gods as their Aneirin had lost his mate, Lowri, to childbirth. She had given their Aneirin three babes also, Angharad, Sanex and Nasta. Angharad had been killed young while doing her job, yet another endless tragedy to strike their family, and their Nasta was the only Dracken born, Nasta who had mated to Harry.

Dain, as awful as it was to admit, kept expecting to hear that Harry had died, either in childbirth or by some other means. It seemed to be the way for their family line…the lovers of Delericeys had all died, ever since their innocent, gentle Trefor had been murdered in cold blood with all of their children. Of course when he’d been informed of the fight and that Harry and Blaise had been fatally injured, he had expected then that they would both die, so as to carry on the Delericey curse, but they had both miraculously pulled through.

Harry had had eight children already, but only three of them were Nasta’s, which stuck to the past Delericeys, but where in the past one had always been a Dracken, this time, with Nasta and Harry, one of their babes was a Faerie.

Dain smiled down at Leolin, his gold eyes wide and inquisitive, which was again unusual for a babe of his young age, and he remained silent as half of his tiny, beautiful face was taken up with the silencing device in his tiny mouth.

“How can you be sure?” The Fae asked, pulling a face before quickly aborting the movement.

“Leolin is the son of two Drackens, are you so foolish as to believe that he has not taken some of their blood when he is of their blood?” Kailen sniped.

Dain smirked. Kailen was usually a lot more agreeable, as per his Seelie nature, but when he was angered, he always took it out on those who insulted his family, even in subtle ways as the Fae had done.

“Leolin is much stronger and more resilient than any Faerie babe we’ve yet seen.” Dain said. “He has already survived being born at four moon turns gestations, he has survived having to grow in the skin on his wings and he has survived a ravaging sickness of the lungs when he was just nine moon turns old. He is an incredibly strong babe and it is not so farfetched to believe that it is because his parents gave him some extra protection with their blood. Anything that keeps this little babe safer and more protected is to be wholeheartedly welcomed.”

“Absolutely.” The young guard nodded, looking down into those wide gold eyes, getting a scowl around the silencing device for his trouble. “A true little Unseelie.”

“He is. The blanket is keeping him docile, usually when he is taken from his Mother the fight he puts up would put half the guards to shame.” Kailen said proudly.

“Are you taking him to Sindri?”

“Yes, Harry gave us permission to bring him to the City for a visit and he said that while we were here, we were to let Sindri have a hold of him.”

“I won’t keep you then, I am supposed to be relieving Diomedes. He’s going to kill me for being so late.”

Dain cradled Leolin gently to his chest as they wound their way through the City, Kailen hovering protectively at his side, as they made their way to the centre of the City, to the Courts, to show their little grandson off to Sindri, who hadn’t seen a babe since the funeral of Niobe. The last time he’d seen a live babe was when he’d been handed the infant Leolin by Harry when he was just six moon turns old, over thirteen moon turns ago now. They were stopped several more times, the only person who did not insult Leolin, them or their family in anyway was when an excited Ezrah elbowed his way to the front of a crowd to see Leolin. He truly was peeking out of his shell now, ever since he’d met Harry, he would never have behaved in such a way just a few moon turns ago, but since he’d been spending quite a bit of time with Harry recently, he was most certainly becoming more outgoing and less scared of those around him. Even as he watched, a Valkyrie went to spit on Ezrah, only for the young Fae to duck behind another Fae to prevent as such. Lathen came storming up behind his lover and he glared at the Valkyrie responsible for trying to disrespect his beloved in such a vile, public way.

“Oh, Leolin.” Ezrah cooed gently. “It seems like forever since I last saw him.”

“Here, Ezrah.” Dain smiled.

Ezrah almost squealed as Dain handed Leolin over to be fussed over, but immediately there was an outcry from those others present.
“Don’t give the poor babe to that creature!” One Valkyrie hissed furiously.

“He’s going to harm the babe like Ezile did!”

“He’ll sell the babe!”

“He’ll infect the babe with his evil taint!”

Dain saw Ezrah pulling back into himself, after so recent an improvement and boost to his confidence, because of all the vile things being said about him. Because of the accusations that he would harm Leolin like his Father Ezile had hurt other Faerie babes, which did actually include Ezrah too.

Ezrah clutched Leolin tight to himself, as if he would never handle another babe again, before handing him back and curling into a furious Lathen.

“Ezrah would no sooner harm Leolin that I would.” Dain cut across all those shouting and spitting at Ezrah. Dain even saw someone kick him and that was it for Lathen, who heard Ezrah’s involuntary cry of pain and pulled him up into the protection of his arms, putting his lover over his shoulder, and he shielded him with his own body.

“Anyone touches him again and I’ll hack your fucking head off.” He insisted so seriously that Dain knew that he would do it, as his hand hovered near the short sword that he was wearing at his hip.

Dain shared a look with Kailen and they knew then that they had to get these two out of the Faerie City and living elsewhere much sooner than they had been expecting. Dain made a mental note to prod Warren into finding them somewhere suitable as quickly as he could manage.

“You would threaten decent citizens over that monster?” One Valkyrie said, challenging Lathen, his hand near his own short sword. “I always thought that you were decent, Buren, until you lost your mind and bonded to that vile creature! He’s got bad blood and I for one am not surprised that the gods have not blessed such a monster with his own babes lest he sell them too!”

“You will not speak of him in such a manner!” Lathen growled.
“I’ll speak of that creature how I please! He is not even fit to wipe my muddy boots on!” The other Valkyrie roared and, as Dain had known would happen, Leolin became frightened and he started crying.

It stopped everyone in their tracks as they all turned to the devastating picture of such a young babe crying in fright, his gold eyes spilling tears.

“Perhaps now you are happy with yourself, Tallis?” Dain demanded from the Valkyrie as he held the crying Leolin tight to his chest, his other hand had caught the silencing device quickly as Leolin’s mouth relinquished its hold on it, lest it hit the ground and become unusable. They had been given a spare one, just in case, but they had been warned that the one Leolin currently had was his favourite. “Leolin is my grandson, he has been given into my care by his Mother and Father for the afternoon and I will decide who goes near him or who sees him or holds him. Harry and Nasta trust their babe with Ezrah, they are good friends and it is not for you to decide otherwise. Leolin is not your babe, he is no relation of yours and you do not get to decide who sees him or holds him.”

“He is a Seneca, he…”

“He is a Buren!” Lathen cut in strongly. “He is my lover, my bonded and he has my name! I will not stand to see him so mistreated when he is innocent!”

“He is not innocent!” One Fae screeched.

“He is!” Lathen snapped. “He was nine years old when his depraved Father was tried and executed, younger when that vile man committed his crimes! Do none of you remember that Ezile tried to sell his own son too, when he was just a few moon turns old and had no inkling as to what was going on?! Ezrah is an innocent in all of this and he had no control over that man’s actions!”

“Guilty by association!” One called out.

“It’s the bad blood!” Another cried.

“He should have been killed with his vile Father to end that cursed line!”

“Put an end to the cursed Seneca blood! Kill him!”
Dain heard the small, petrified noise that Ezrah emitted and he saw Lathen react to that noise immediately.

“You dare touch him and you’ll be missing your head!” Lathen threatened seriously.

“All of you, disperse, get away from here now.” Kailen ordered. “How dare you threaten murder! How dare you call for the blood of the innocent like a pack of wild, savage animals! Get away, now.”

“Lathen, come with us. We’ll hand you and Ezrah to Warren.” Dain whispered.

“I told you to get away!” Kailen said again as people lingered. “I am a member of the Court, you’ll do as I tell you or you’ll spend the time until the next moon in the cells!”

That moved everyone off a little quicker, but some just slipped into shops, watching them, glaring through the windows and gossiping to others about what had just happened.

“Is Leolin okay?” Ezrah asked softly. He was in tears.

“He’s fine.” Dain insisted as he prodded the silencing device back into Leolin’s mouth and rubbed the blanket gently over his nose so that he could smell his Mother. Dain laid him down in his arms and tucked the blanket around him, so that he was surrounded by Harry’s scent. The tears dried up almost instantly, leaving his lashes to clump together as he drifted off into an exhausted sleep because of his crying fit.

Dain started walking and he noticed that Lathen was carrying Ezrah, his hand on the spot that had been kicked. He sighed. A week was not complete unless Ezrah had been harmed or blooded in some way. Dain heard the reports, read out by a Court attendant, that Lathen filled out diligently, without fail, reporting every instance of injury or disruption, and by whom it had been conducted by, for his bonded Ezrah, who brushed off his own injuries and refused to fill in the reports himself.

Since Ezrah had been befriended by Lathen, they had been receiving these reports weekly and despite all the punishments, the time in the cells and even large fines, they had not once stopped and it seemed now that they had even progressed to talk of cold blooded murder of an innocent young Fae. Ezrah and Lathen needed to get out of the Faerie City for their own good because very soon this tension was going to culminate in Ezrah’s murder or Lathen was going to snap and he was going to make good on his promise to behead someone who harmed Ezrah and then he would be the murderer and then he would be executed for that murder, leaving Ezrah alone once again. Something needed to be done, and quickly.

“Ah, and there is our little Faerie of the hour.” Warren greeted with a grin as he stepped forward, looking at Leolin adoringly. He chuckled. “Sleeping, of course.”

“Ezrah was attacked right in front of us, Warren.” Dain said immediately. “The citizens are no longer cowed by the presence of members of the Court and they threatened his murder in front of us. I want you to find them somewhere suitable to live as soon as you possibly can.”

Warren’s handsome face went stern and cold. He turned to face Lathen and Ezrah, his body tensed with unreleased energy. “I was going to come and visit you both after my shift was over today. I’ve found a few residences that I believe are suitable for your needs and I wanted to come and see if you liked any of them.”

“You found somewhere for us to live?” Ezrah asked excitedly, brushing the wetness from his gold eyes. “Truly?”

Warren nodded. “Yes. All that remains now is to see if you like the area and then to get you moved in.”

“I have the funds ready for the purchase.” Lathen insisted. “That will not be a problem as long as they are within the budget we set up.”

“They are, of course.” Warren nodded.

“I shall leave you to it.” Dain nodded. “Sindri expects us, he doesn’t yet know that we have Leolin.”

“Alston is in a foul mood.” Warren warned.

“That is nothing new.” Kailen scoffed.

Dain smiled at Kailen’s cattiness, as Trefor would have described it. He could still hear the light, sweet voice, lilted in shocked surprise at such words spoken in his presence as he berated Kailen for his cattiness towards others. By the gods and all the deities, he missed Trefor more and more as the centuries passed.

Walking into the Courtroom, Dain approached Sindri, who looked up at them and then smiled in utter delight as he spotted the babe in his arms.

“This is such a surprise! How is sweet Leolin?” He asked, forcing his ancient frame to stand.

“He is doing so well.” Dain complimented.

“The dragons just handed you the babe?” Alston asked, peering at the sleeping Leolin. “By all the laws, you could keep him. They have willingly given him over to your care, the laws are…”

“Outdated and ridiculous.” Kailen jumped in. “We have been given some time to spend with our grandson and we are trusted well enough by Harry and by Nasta to look after him. They have trusted us to take him out for the afternoon, do you not appreciate the significance of that? No, we will look after him for the afternoon and then take him back home, to his rightful parents, Alston. He is just here to visit for a few hours.”

“He looks so big compared to when I last saw him, may I?” Sindri asked, extending his arms out.

Dain laid the sleeping Leolin into those ancient, age spotted arms and he made sure that the blanket was still tucked under his nose, so that he could scent Harry in his sleep.

“What is that in his mouth?” Narilla asked curiously.

“It is a silencing device that calms babes when they suck on it.” Dain explained. “All of Harry’s babes have them in various different colours. They call them dummies.”

“What a ridiculous concept!” Donella screeched. “Those dragons will do that poor babe irreparable harm.”

“Yet Leolin is nineteen moon turns old and he’s thriving.” Dain sneered. “Leolin has had this device since he was born and he’s fine. He will cry if you take it out of his mouth.”
“How does he eat?” Donella demanded.

“Are you truly so out of touch with the world outside of the City?” Eitri sighed. “It is a small object and it is used to soothe babies. He won’t keep it in all the time, just when he’s discomforted or distressed. When it is time for him to feed, it is pulled out and replaced with the bottle teat.”

“How does he breathe?” Alston asked.

“He does have a nose.” Eitri pointed out.

Alston went red and Eitri smiled so sweetly, as if butter wouldn’t melt in his mouth, but they all knew the hard, cold steel that lay underneath that smiling exterior. Eitri looked dainty and soft, but underneath his beautiful, delicate appearance, he was not someone to cross, he was not someone that you would want to trifle with. People who messed with Eitri Cassair were often found dead on the side of a road the next morn with not a single clue to link them back to Eitri or an excuse good enough to absolve him from blame.

“You little…” Alston started furiously, but Sindri cut in authoritatively.

“Not in front of the babe.” Sindri chastised them as he cradled Leolin gently. “He is sleeping peacefully and I wish to keep it that way.”

“I am surprised that he is taking being away from his Mother so well.” Narilla smiled.

“Harry slept with the blanket for two nights, it is covered with his natural scent so Leolin believes that Harry is here and thus he is calmer.”

“What a wonderful idea.” Narilla complimented as she stroked Leolin’s black hair.

“What was the injury he suffered?” Suisan asked.

“He didn’t suffer one.” Kailen insisted. “He was taken to the hospital as a precaution only, because Harry and Nasta were worried, not because he was actually injured. He was released without question, with not a mark upon him.”
“That is wonderful news.” Narilla sighed happily.

“I did say that Leolin was brilliant.” Eitri said. “He was sat up and he was colouring in paper when I went to visit.”

“Oh, Eitri, while I remember. Harry says that he wishes for your company again. He says that you can go now whenever you wish to. He has also invited you to celebrate the day of his birth on the thirty-first and to Braiden’s day of birth on the fourteenth of August.”

“He has?” Eitri asked excitedly.

Kailen nodded. “He has invited you personally, the owl should still be on the way to you, but he asked us to invite you ourselves too, while we had the chance to see you ourselves.”

“Tell him that I would love to come and visit him again.” Eitri said eagerly. “Is next week going to be acceptable, before his day of birth?”

“I will ask when I take Leolin back.” Dain said and Eitri smiled then, a true smile, and it lit up his bright gold eyes. He looked so lovely when he was smiling, it was amazing and he looked less lonely, less stressed when he smiled so genuinely.

“I shouldn’t imagine that he’d say no.” Kailen insisted, wanting to keep that smile on Eitri’s beautiful face. “He did ask us to invite you after all.”

Eitri was so happy that it was visible as he sat at the Court table, between Suisan and Narilla. Dain was so happy to see him like this, he was almost a different person, now he just needed to help poor, young Ezrah as well. Hopefully, as soon as they were out of the Faerie City, then he would become a different person too, a more confident, happy person who need never fear being hurt, abused or spat on ever again, or threatened to be killed or fear being murdered on the street or in his own home. It wasn’t right for anyone to live in such a way and he would do his all to see him to safety and to happiness, especially now that his life had been very publically threatened. To do any differently was to condemn the young Fae to his death and such a thing was utterly unacceptable. Ezrah needed to be housed outside of the City as soon as possible, not just for his happiness now, but for his very life.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X
Caesar and Amelle weren’t quite begging to never have their kids ever again, but Harry could sense that they were glad to be giving them back.

“How do you even juggle eight of them?” Caesar demanded.

“You just get used to it.” Max shrugged as he threw Regan into the air before catching him, kissing him, then throwing him back into the air.

“Watch the ceiling!” Harry fussed.

“I’m not going to throw him into the ceiling, Harry.” Max assured him calmly.

“I know, just…watch the ceiling.” Harry reiterated.

“When they’re your own you have to learn to juggle all of them.” Nasta told the couple. “It helps that there’s twice as many of us as there is you.”

“So how was your completely baby free day?”

“It wasn’t baby free.” Max said. “Draco was still here.”

“I will have you know that I am the least childish one in our mateship!” Draco said in that wonderfully scathing tone that he did really well.

Harry chuckled. “We still had Eva and Ave, only Leolin went to Dain and Kailen, we didn’t want to overwhelm them when it’s been centuries since they last looked after a baby.”

“You didn’t take the opportunity to hand the girls over to someone else?” Caesar said in shock. “Well, I find myself disappointed.”

“They slept for most of the afternoon.” Max told his brother with a salacious wink.
Caesar stopped and then he laughed. “Oh, Merlin. I knew you would never have given up an opportunity for sex. Who started it?”

“I’m pretty sure Nasta started it.” Harry smiled.

“I did?” Nasta rose one black eyebrow in question.

“I’m sure you did, love. Was it not you who started spanking Blaise first?”

“Okay okay, we don’t need to hear the nitty, gritty details.” Caesar laughed.

“Speak for yourself.” Amelle giggled.

Harry, who was cuddled up on the settee with baby Beatrice, chuckled and looked around himself at the swarm of babies on the floor. The recently turned two year old Eleonora was running the show and Harry smiled to see her up on her feet, babbling to her cousins.

“Are you getting excited now that your heat periods are back?” Amelle asked him, sitting next to him and speaking quietly as the guys argued over who had started what. Nasta was blaming Max for first tugging Blaise into his lap.

“Between me and you, Amelle, not even Caesar?” Harry asked.

“I swear.” Amelle said, holding up her right hand, her little finger stuck out, hooked.

Harry did the same, hooked his finger around hers, and they squeezed each other’s little fingers.

“I’m already pregnant.” He told her with a wink. “I found out a week ago and now I’m enjoying my last little taste of freedom. I’m going to tell them after Braiden’s birthday.”

“You’ve told me first!” She squealed and giggled.
“Well, Myron knows too. He was here watching over us when the Healer came, but yeah, you’re the first person I’ve told.” He laughed. “No one else is to know.” He said seriously. “I want a bit of freedom to myself.”

“Absolutely, I more than understand.” Amelle said with a smile. “Ooo, I can’t wait now. You’ll be due in February.”

Harry nodded. “I know. I tend to always go early though, especially as I’ve been carrying multiples. When you think about it, only Braiden was a singleton and that’s only because a Dracken’s first ever child is always a singleton, except, of course, in the case of identicals. Thank fuck that Braiden wasn’t an identical twin.” Harry laughed.

“What are you two giggling about?” Blaise asked.

“Sending up prayers that Braiden was a singleton and not an identical multiple.” Harry laughed. “Do you know he’s our only singleton baby and you gave him to me?”

Blaise grinned. “I love you and I love him.” Blaise said, bending forward to kiss him. “I’m glad I’ve given you our only singleton…at least for now.”

“I hope that if I am pregnant then it’s with only the one baby.” Harry smiled.

“For you, I hope so too, Bello. I love you and I don’t want you to be harmed or put under any undue stress. It might be best if the next few heat periods did not lead to pregnancy, but if they do, then we’ll deal with it. But for your recovery, it would be best that you’re not pregnant for another couple of months, but if you are, I hope for just the one baby.”

Harry smiled and kissed Blaise. “I hope so too.”

“Amelle. It’s time we got back, honey. Nora’s getting tired.” Caesar said as he held the yawning girl. “Her nap was disturbed this morning by Amelle’s brother, Silas.” He said for their benefit. “He wanted to see Harry Potter’s children.” He rolled his eyes to show what he thought of that.

“Thank you again for taking them for a couple of hours, we really appreciate it.” Harry said happily as he handed baby Bea back to her Mother.

“We did enjoy it.” Amelle said with a smile.

“Yeah, it was like having our own little crèche.” Caesar laughed. “You can have Nora and Bea next time.”

“Absolutely.” Harry said. “We’d love to have them. We can start our own baby share. Henley’s bringing Claudia and baby Harry around for my nineteenth now, and again for Braiden’s second. We’re ordering a bouncy castle for them, only a little one, but we thought the kids might like them. Shae’s bringing her kids around too and they’re a little older, so they’ll definitely enjoy it.”

“Did you decide on that inflatable slide too?” Max asked.

“I’ve told you Max, it has a weight limit on it. You’re too big.” Harry grinned.

“Aww.” Max frowned and he made a show of looking incredibly upset.

“I’m sure we can reinforce it with magic.” Nasta said with a chuckle.

“Really?” Max grinned before he fist pumped. “Yes!”

“You overgrown child.” Draco teased.

“You’re going down it at least once!” Max said. “Even if I have to throw you down it.”

Draco smirked. “I’m going to take that out of your hands. I’ll go down with one of the kids.”

Max scowled then and turned to Harry.

“You’re not throwing me anywhere.” He said sternly.
“Ah, you can’t hide behind your injury anymore, the Healers have cleared you.”

“I don’t think they had throwing me down an inflatable slide in mind when they cleared me.” Harry giggled.

“No one is throwing anyone anywhere.” Nasta said firmly.

“Killjoy.” Max pouted.

Harry chuckled and he picked up his own little girl, Tegan, and sat her on his lap. She made a soft noise and turned to look at him. Harry kissed her and she laughed.

“Right, we’re making our escape. We’ll see you soon, okay?” Caesar said.

Harry cooed to her, fussing over his little girl as first Caesar, and then Amelle, took a pinch of floo powder and left. He always loved it when they did something so cute, even if it wasn’t new.

“Right, I better get these kids into the bath before it gets too late.” Blaise said after Caesar and Amelle had flooed out of their home.

“I’ll help you with the bathing.” Draco told Blaise as he picked up Farren and Braiden.

“I’ll get our dinner on when they’re having their quiet time.” Max said.

“Here you go.” Harry handed Tegan over to Blaise and he made himself comfortable on the settee.

“Are you going to wait for Leolin?”
“Yes, they should be bringing him through at any moment. He needs his bath too.”

He had tried to play it cool, but he was so anxious and so worried. He needed to see his little Faerie baby. He needed to know that he was alright. He’d taken a massive leap of faith, letting Dain and Kailen have him by themselves, even just for five hours.

When the floo flared not ten minutes later he was almost bouncing with anticipation. When Kailen stepped through with Leolin in his arms, Harry took his baby straight from him and he cooed over him, kissing his face and holding him tightly even as Kailen stepped over the fireguard.

“Oh Leolin, baby, I missed you so much!” He declared. “How was he? Was he okay? Did he get very upset?”

Kailen smiled at him, bent and kissed his head. A first that shocked Harry into stillness for a moment. “He was wonderful all day.” Kailen said as Dain flooed through behind him.

“Really?” Harry asked in surprise.

“Yes, his blanket and dummy worked wonders. Sindri was very happy to see him again.”

“I thought I heard voices.” Max said as he came to hug Harry, giving Leolin a kiss. “How was he?”

“He was wonderful.” Dain insisted. “He was the heart of the City today.”

“I’m so happy he’s okay.” Harry said as he sat down and cradled his baby to his chest, just looking at him.

“Eitri wishes to know if next week is an acceptable time for him to come to visit.” Dain said politely.

Harry looked up. “Yeah, Tuesday is a good day, none of us have any therapy sessions on Tuesday and if it’s good for him, he can come midmorning again. Will it interrupt Court business?”

“No, barring an emergency or a pandemic, Tuesday will be a free day for the Court.”
Harry smiled. “Tuesday it is then. Did you ask about my birthday too?”

“He would be delighted to come and celebrate your day of birth. Braiden’s too.”

Harry grinned. “Ezrah and Lathen have already agreed to come, you’ve agreed to come. You’ll all be okay with so many Drackens around?”

“We are perfectly able to mix company.” Dain nodded.

Harry grinned. “It’s going to be great. The kids will steal the limelight of course, but I don’t mind.”

“You’ll still have lots of cake and sweets and presents.” Max consoled him with a smile.

“That’s almost the best part.” Harry grinned.

“Almost the best part?” Max questioned.

Harry gave him a look and a wink. “Almost.”

Max laughed. “Oh, I love you so much.”

“I believe that is our cue to leave.”

“Won’t you stay for tea?” Harry asked.

“No, we need to go and see Warren.”

Harry nodded his understanding. “Thank you very much for looking after Leolin for the afternoon.”
“No, Harry. Thank you for allowing us to look after him. We cannot express how much this level of trust has meant to us.”

Harry smiled. “I’ll see you on Thursday?”

“For your day of birth celebrations, yes.”

“Say hello to Warren for us.” Harry said and he sighed as the two Faeries flooed out of the living room.

Harry sat quiet for a moment and then he stood and he carried the sleeping Leolin into the kitchen to set him up a bottle just in case he wanted some milk.

He pulled the blanket gently from Leolin’s body and he handed it to Max, who had followed him, for him to put in the washing machine.

Leolin wriggled once the blanket was gone and Harry was ready, smiling down at him, when Leolin whined and started building up to crying, his dummy falling from his slackened lips.

“Welcome home, Leolin.” Harry said calmly.

Those gold eyes opened and peered up at him. “Ma.” He said sleepily, rubbing his eyes and then reaching up to Harry’s chin.

“I love you.” Harry told him. “Do you want some milk?”

“Ma. Ma.” Leolin said softly, waking up slowly.

“Have you missed me?” Harry cooed as Max made up the bottle for him.

Max bent over Harry’s shoulder and he smiled down at Leolin too. “Hey baby.”

“Da.” Leolin declared, stretching his hand as far as he could to touch Max’s chin.
“I think he’s missed us.” Harry told Max with a sniff. “It’s the longest he’s been away from us since he was in the hospital.”

“I know, love. I don’t think he’ll remember that though.” Max said, kissing the side of Harry’s head and handing the bottle to him.

Harry prodded the bottle into Leolin’s mouth and he waited for Leolin to realise what it was, to see if he was hungry or not. Leolin started suckling and Harry relaxed. He smiled and he stood happily, holding Leolin to his chest as his son ate his evening meal.

“I was wondering if he was back yet. Is everything alright?” Nasta asked.

“He’s wonderful. The blanket worked a treat. Dain and Kailen said that he was calm all afternoon because of it.”

“That’s good. Now we know that that trick works, maybe we can take him off on our own for a small while at a time.”

Harry nodded as he watched the milk level critically. It was going down very slowly, but Leolin was still eating.

“Is his bath ready?” Harry asked.

“Yes. All the others are in their pyjamas and they’re with Draco and Blaise having their quiet time.” Nasta told him with a smile.

“The girls?”

“Already in bed. I just finished narrating their story. Eva tried to take the book from me and I allowed her to hold it, before I realised that she only wanted it to smack Ave with it. I wouldn’t let her have it again after that and she got angry.”

“We’re going to have to move them into those cots soon, they’re getting a bit big for the bassinets now, even with the ward to prevent them from wobbling or toppling, they’re going to be sitting up and climbing…a fall from those bassinet stands could really hurt them.”

“So, I’ll set the new cots up in our bedroom tomorrow.” Max smiled, pulling Harry into a hug and kissing Nasta before moving to the fridge and starting the preparation for their dinner.

“How did they get so big as to be moved into their own cots?” Harry frowned.

Nasta chuckled. “We’ll have another newborn soon.” He insisted, laying his hand on his belly gently and for a moment, Harry thought that Nasta knew. “There could be a baby in here already, but if not, another month and a half and you’ll have another heat period and that’ll be another opportunity for a new baby.”

Harry looked up from Leolin’s face and he smiled. “I’ll take the test soon.” He insisted. “Just let me get these birthdays out of the way first.”

“Braiden’s birthday isn’t for another three weeks.” Max complained. “You could be five or six weeks pregnant by then.”

“If I am pregnant, then I’m between two and three weeks.” Harry said. “You can wait another couple to know for sure. I certainly can.”

“I know it seems like we’re pushing, we don’t want to make it seem like that’s all we care about.” Nasta insisted. “We would like to know if we’re getting a new baby, but the sooner we know, Harry, the sooner we can prepare for your pregnancy. It’s going to be a very delicate pregnancy, you know that, we just want to be as prepared as possible.”

Harry nodded. “I know. I understand that this pregnancy will need more care, but again, I will get the test done, just give me until after Braiden’s birthday.”

Nasta sighed and he nodded, bending to give him a kiss. “Okay, but the day after Braiden’s birthday we’re going to the hospital for the test, deal?”

“Deal.” Harry nodded. “I’ll make the appointment myself.”
“Don’t forget.” Nasta warned him.

“I’m not going to forget my own appointment.” Harry smiled.

Leolin let go of the bulb of the bottle and turned his head, removing the teat from his mouth. Harry handed the bottle to Nasta and he placed Leolin on his shoulder and he gently rubbed his back, avoiding the miniscule white and gold wings out of habit.

Leolin brought up his wind and Harry smiled at him, kissing him gently before handing him over to Nasta to bathe him. He sighed and sat at the kitchen table so that he could stay with Max while he cooked.

“Are you feeling okay?” His biggest mate asked him.

Harry hummed. “Yes. I just…it’s insane that we’ve been together for two and a half years now. In just three months it’ll be three years for me and Blaise. It seems…it’s incredible that it’s been so long, that we’ve shared three years of our life together. I just can’t imagine anything different now. I can’t imagine a life where I wasn’t a Dracken, where I’d never met and mated to the four of you, where I had no children. Yet, this time three years ago, I had no clue that in just a week I’d be waking up to find scales all over my body and a huge pair of mucus and blood covered wings hanging from my back.”

“I ask you all the time, but are you happy? Do you regret it?” Max asked softly.

Harry laughed. “Never.” He said strongly. “I’m still happy and still in love. We’ve had our ups and downs…these last two months have probably been the worst in three years, but we’re getting better and I’m more certain now that we can actually overcome what happened to us.”

Max came to hold him close to that massive, muscled chest and Harry snuggled in happily.

“I’m glad that out of everything, that our love wasn’t ruined.” Max said softly.

Harry pulled back from the embrace and he reached up to tug Max down so that he could kiss him.

“It was seriously tested, but I think we’ve pulled through, with a lot of help from family and professionals.” Harry said. “Let’s not test ourselves or our love in such a drastic way ever again,
“Okay?”

“Done deal, gorgeous.”

Harry smiled and he let Max go back to cooking and he slipped back into his own thoughts. He was truly happy still. He would never condone Draco’s actions, as he’d never condoned Blaise’s decision to leave him with a near newborn Braiden while he was pregnant, he’d forgiven them all for their neglect during that time too. He hadn’t condoned Max’s behaviour during his grief at the death of his great-grandmother Evelyn, but he had still forgiven him. He could forgive this too.

Blaise was recovering well and the instances where he was losing his memory or mixing up names was decreasing. His own scars were fading and the anger was lessening its hold on his heart. They might have needed professional help this time around, but they had sought help and it was working.

Every partnership needed work, whether it was just roommates, a business partnership, marriage or a mateship, they needed commitment and compromise to make them work and true, he would admit that most partnerships didn’t lead to the almost death of two members, but it was still the same principle. It took work and he was not just going to give up and let his mateship fall apart if there was something, anything, that he could do to prevent it. Not while he did still love all four of his mates and not while he felt that they still had something to fight for. He loved them all still, so very much, and love was always worth fighting for. Always.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: A bit later than usual this week, I forgot what day it was and started the final read through late! But I managed to get it done with a few minutes to spare. Fingers are still crossed for an update next week too, but at the moment it’s touch and go with the, as yet, unfinished chapter 108.

That’s it for this week, I’ll hopefully be seeing you next week, but our roll has finally trickled out I believe, in favour of Spartacus crossovers. I’ve finally got around to starting that series, on the first one at the moment, though I haven’t seen the prequel yet either…so yeah, Spartacus/HP crossovers to come!

Thank you all for reading, lovelies and I hope that you all enjoyed this chapter and the visit to the Faeries! Plus some bonding with Eva and Ave, who do tend to get lost in the wash of older siblings, so I thought they needed a bit of screen time to themselves. I’ll hopefully be seeing you all next week with chapter 108, but if not, that will be coming soon, it’s not that far off being completed, but a single week might be a bit too much of an ask.

StarLight Massacre. X
Birthday Bumpling

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Every partnership needed work, whether it was just roommates, a business partnership, marriage or a mateship, they needed commitment and compromise to make them work and true, he would admit that most partnerships didn’t lead to the almost death of two members, but it was still the same principle. It took work and he was not just going to give up and let his mateship fall apart if there was something, anything, that he could do to prevent it. Not while he did still love all four of his mates and not while he felt that they still had something to fight for. He loved them all still, so very much, and love was always worth fighting for. Always.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Eight – Birthday Bumbling

The morning of Harry’s nineteenth birthday got off to a bad start. At just ten past five in the morning all five of them were jolted awake by hysterical crying.

Harry sat up, scrambling about in his panicked fear, but it was Draco, who was closest to the side of the bed where their twin girls were sleeping in their cots, who reached them first.

“Shit.” He cursed, all signs of sleep vanished under his sudden alertness. “She must have been standing up.”

Draco hurried her into their en suite bathroom, but not before Harry caught a dark stain and he panicked more, knowing now that she was injured, even if they weren’t under attack.

“Was that blood?” He demanded, forcing his body out of the tangle of limbs. “Is she bleeding?”

He went straight into the bathroom to find Draco holding a damp flannel to their daughter’s face. The sink was full of blood.
“What is it?” Harry asked.

“Her mouth or nose, I couldn’t tell.” Draco said as he peeled back the damp cloth and had a look. “It’s her mouth, she must have hit it against the bar of the cot.”

“Let me see.” Harry said.

“Just calm down and let me sort her out first.” Draco insisted. “Nasta!”

“I’m here.” Nasta said from right behind them. “What do you need?”

“A bit of space.” Draco said and Harry glared at his blond mate, but he turned and walked out of the bathroom himself.

“Here, Harry.” Max distracted him with the other twin, who was perfectly fine and safe, but she had been woken up by her sister’s crying. His biggest mate handed the baby over and then he went into the bathroom, as their first aider of the family it was the best place for him to be.

Blaise was stripping the other cot of its blooded sheets. There truly wasn’t a lot of it, only a few spots, but Harry still swallowed and cuddled his daughter closer, he sniffed her gently and he knew that he was holding his Eva…Ave had been the one to hit her face on the bar of her cot.

“You’re doing so well.” Nasta praised him. “I know you want to see and hold our baby girl. I know that this is tearing you apart on the inside, but she needs to be seen to, not fussed over. I’m so proud of you.”

As stupid as it sounded, Nasta’s obvious pride that he was controlling himself and not hovering over Ave was actually making him feel better and Harry turned to snuggle into Nasta’s naked body.

“Do what you need to.” Nasta insisted firmly and Harry took that as the permission that it was to bite into the flesh at Nasta’s pectoral.
If his arms weren’t full, then he would have clutched at Nasta’s skin with his nails instead, but it made him feel better to hold something, even if it was with his teeth. He didn’t bite hard enough to draw blood, or to even really hurt Nasta, but it made him feel better, it helped him to ground himself.

“That’s it, Caru. Do what you need to. We love you, our baby girl will be fine.”

“Ave.” Harry let go to tell them, before biting down on a different part of Nasta.

“It’s Ave?” Nasta asked. Harry nodded minimally so that he didn’t hurt Nasta.

“She’s fine. She’s stopped bleeding.” Max said as he came out of the bathroom with Ave in his arms.

Harry let go of Nasta and went to take his other baby girl from Max, who handed her over happily. He took one look at her and he started crying over her and he sat back on the bed and held both his girls to his chest, still crying silently, but he couldn’t help it.

Nasta came to sooth him and Harry did eventually calm himself down, especially as both Eva and Ave were calm, one was playing with her own hair, the other was curled up against his chest.

“I suppose going back to bed is out of the question.” Blaise groaned.

“It’s only half five, Blaise. If you get back in now, you can sleep for another two hours, or even for four if you want to wake up at nine.”

Blaise nodded and he crawled back into the bed and under the duvet. Harry smiled at him and he snuggled the two girls on his chest, using just his one arm to hold them in place. He used his free hand to smooth over Blaise’s head.

“Feels nice.” Blaise muttered softly, his eyes closed, a nice smile on his mouth.

“Do you want me to put the girls back to bed?” Max asked.

Harry staved off his automatic denial and he instead took a nice, calming deep breath, looked at his two girls and then he nodded.
“Yes, they’re still tired. Later, we’re padding the bars on the cots.”

“I supposed your birthday breakfast in bed is out of the question.” Max sighed. “This is the second year in a row now! Am I ever going to get to give you breakfast in bed on your birthday?”

“There’s always next year.” Harry laughed as Nasta took the two girls from him and he was able to snuggle back down in the bed with Blaise.

Max bent over the bed and he kissed them both, him and Blaise. Then he stood back up, a thoughtful frown on his face.

“You know what?” Max declared as he lifted the duvet and climbed back in with them. “I’m going to go back to sleep for a bit too.”

Draco slid back into the bed and he grinned. “I suppose I’ll join you.”

Nasta laughed and he shook his head. “I’m too awake at the moment.” He said, even as he climbed back into the bed. “But I suppose I could just lie here and look at you all.”

“That’s fucking creepy.” Max declared.

“Max is right ‘I like watching you while you sleep’ sounds too much like the tag line for a horror film.” Harry giggled.

Nasta shifted his body hard into the rest of them, making them bump one another and Harry giggled again.

“How does it feel to be nineteen?” Draco asked him.

“No bloody different to yesterday.” Harry yawned. “No…actually I’m more tired today than I was yesterday.” He laughed.
“Come here, you.” Max said as he tugged him in tighter to himself.

Harry rolled over and laid himself in Max’s arms, snuggling in.

“Now this is the best way to start a birthday.”

“Naked cwtching?” Nasta grinned.

“Naked cwtching.” Harry agreed with a smile as he rubbed his naked body against Max’s naked body.

“This is going to evolve into something more than just cwtching if you keep rubbing up against me like that.” Max growled playfully.

Harry laughed softly and stayed still. Blaise was breathing softly behind him and Harry knew that he was already asleep. Draco on the other side of him was still and Harry assumed that he was asleep too. He yawned again and he closed his eyes. He was determined to get a couple more hours sleep so that he could actually enjoy his birthday without getting tired later on. He wanted to keep enough energy to enjoy his privacy with his mates when all their guests were gone and their children were happily tucked up in bed. He smiled to himself, tucked up to Max’s body, he was going to damn well enjoy himself today, but first, he needed to sleep for a little longer, it was far too early to be awake.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Harry finally made his way down the stairs at twenty past eight in the morning. Blaise and Max were still sleeping, but Nasta and Draco had both been missing from the bed. He found them both in the family room, watching over their excited kids.

Harry happily slipped onto the settee and snuggled into Draco, worming his way under his arm and pillowing his head on the blond’s chest.

“Are you okay?” Nasta asked worriedly.

“Perfectly fine. I’m just a bit sleepy still. I’m not quite fully awake yet.” Harry said through a yawn. “How’s Ave?”
“None the worse for wear.” Nasta told him. “Nothing’s bleeding and she’s crawling around and trying to stand up as normal.”

Harry sighed and relaxed back, bonelessly flopping over Draco, who snorted with laughter before repositioning him and then holding him gently.

“Do you want tea?”

Harry hummed. “Yes please.”

“Are Blaise or Max awake?”

Harry snorted himself. “No.” He declared. “They’re completely out of it. Max was still snoring when I got up.”

“On his back?” Draco smiled.

Harry nodded. “Blaise and I must have tag teamed him. He was pinned down on both sides.”

“Bo da, Mummy.” Braiden interrupted.

Harry turned to smile at him, reaching forward to cup his cheeks and he kissed him soundly on the mouth.

“Bo jor.” Braiden said next and Harry chuckled.

“Bonjour, Braiden. Good morning.”
“He’s gotten so good at that.” Draco complimented.

“He’s our smart little almost two year old.” Harry smiled.

“Two weeks.” Draco sighed. “Just two weeks and he’ll be two.”

“Then four months later we have five of them turning two.” Harry chuckled.

“Then a month after that, we’ll have our two terrors turning a year old.” Draco laughed.

“And maybe a new baby being born too.”

Draco kissed him at hearing that and his hand splayed over his belly. Harry kissed him back, winding his hands into that baby fine, platinum hair and it was only Nasta clearing his throat some minutes later that broke them apart. Harry panted breathlessly and he giggled.

“Now that was a birthday kiss.”

Nasta lifted a black eyebrow and he smirked. He put one hand behind Harry’s head, cupping the back of his neck and he all but plundered his mouth with that glorious tongue of his and he left Harry breathless and his head swimming.

“I need to have a birthday more often.” He laughed, a little gruffly.

Regan interrupted them this time, standing up and clambering onto the settee and plonking himself on Harry’s lap. Harry’s arms wrapped around him and snuggled him in close. He lifted a hand to play with the fluffy, jet black hair.

“Are you okay, Regan?” He asked.

Regan just nodded and he slumped to rest on Harry’s chest. Alarm bells rang and Harry automatically lifted a hand to press against his forehead.
“Is he warm?” Nasta asked him.

“No.” Harry said, shaking his head. He sat forward and he peered into Regan’s beautiful hazel-gold eyes. “He’s normal temperature, his eyes are normal, he’s alert.”

“Maybe he just wants a cuddle.” Draco insisted.

Harry nodded, but he looked closer at Regan. “Regan, are you feeling poorly?” He asked.

Regan shook his head.

“Something isn’t right, Nasta.” Harry said. “He’s not a loud boy, but he’s never this quiet either.”

“Pass him here.”

Harry handed Regan up to Nasta and their third son started struggling, reaching out for him, kicking his legs.

“Hold on, kid.” Nasta said as he held Regan tight and sniffed him. He sniffed all over his body, but he passed Regan back to Harry with a shake of his head. “Nothing. He smells completely healthy. Maybe he’d just a bit tired still, we’ll see after his nap.”

Harry nodded and he snuggled Regan tightly on his lap again. They didn’t need to wait for lunchtime, or for naptime, as Regan fell asleep on Harry’s lap not fifteen minutes later.

“He must have had a bad night too.” Draco sighed as he brushed a lock of black hair from Regan’s sleeping face.

“I’m going to go and put him in the other room.” Harry said.

“Don’t go in the smaller living room.” Nasta warned him. “Your birthday things are in there.”
“Really?” Harry asked, brightening up and looking at the closed double doors.

“No, Harry. You can wait for Blaise and Max to wake up.” Nasta told him with a grin.

“Aww.” He pouted, but he couldn’t stop grinning.

“Do you want to put him upstairs?” Draco asked.

Harry shook his head. “No, if he goes upstairs then there’s no telling how long he’ll sleep for and that’ll demolish his routine. It’s not that loud, I’ll keep him here with me.”

Harry cradled Regan close, looking at his sleeping face with a smile.

“Where’s Leolin?” He asked.

“In his gym.” Draco said. “Utterly transfixed by that glitter ball attachment.”

Harry craned his head and neck, moving until he could just about see Leolin in the little baby gym.

“Everyone’s okay and happy then?”

“Of course.” Draco said firmly.

“Do you want something to eat, Harry?” Nasta asked.

Harry, who had woken up feeling slightly queasy, shook his head. “No, I’m too excited to eat!” He played off with a grin. “I want more tea though, please, my gorgeous sugar daddy.”

“What did you just call me?” Nasta demanded while Draco laughed.
Harry laughed himself, trying to stay still for Regan’s benefit. Nasta placed his hands on the back of the settee and he bent down to kiss him.

“Never call me that again, it makes me sound so old.” He complained. “Not to mention perverted.”

“What’s he called you?” Blaise asked, stumbling into the family room, rubbing his eyes.

“A sugar daddy.”

Blaise stopped and then stared. “Does that mean something different in the Muggle world, because Harry, that in the wizarding world means that you’re sleeping with him for money.”

“It’s the same in the Muggle world.” Harry giggled.

“Oh, what money is he giving you?” Blaise asked. “I’ve slept with you too, where’s mine?” He demanded of Nasta.

Harry laughed happily as Nasta turned on Blaise and swept him up into his arms and gave him a passionate kiss.

“He pays with love and care.” Harry grinned.

“And phenomenal sex.” Blaise added cheekily.

“Exactly!” Harry laughed.

“You’re both terrible.” Nasta complained as he set Blaise down on the settee.

“We know.” Harry grinned. “Where’s my tea, sexy?”
Nasta snorted, shook his head and he went out into the kitchen to get them drinks.

“Happy birthday, Prezioso.” Blaise greeted him before giving him a gentle kiss.

“I’m not allowed to go into the other room until Max is up.” He pouted.

Blaise laughed and kissed him again before looking down at Regan. “Is he okay?” He asked, kissing a plump cheek.

“He’s alright as far as we can tell. I think he’s just tired.”

“He smells healthy.” Nasta agreed as he came back with a tray of tea, like Max usually did. He handed Harry his honey tea and gave Blaise a coffee.

“Oh, this is what all my wet dreams are about.” Blaise groaned as he took the mug from Nasta and inhaled the scent of coffee deeply before taking a sip and groaning.

Harry laughed happily. “All my wet dreams are about being waited on hand a foot, by my four gorgeous, naked mates who each have a different treat.”

“Oh, what treat do I hold for you?” Nasta asked him curiously.

“Draco holds my honey tea, Max has my fudge chocolate because he’s the one who always buys it for me, Blaise holds out chocolate cake, because that’s my favourite cake ever and you offer me treacle tart, because I would literally sell my body for payment in treacle tart.”

“You’d better not.” A sleepy Max growled from behind him, just catching his last comment.

Harry laughed. “But I love treacle tart. Hey, you know, Max, you’re a bit of a tart, why don’t you wear some treacle for me so I can eat you?”

“I don’t know whether to be turned on or offended that I’m being called a slut. Either way it’s too early and I’m not fully awake…and it’s your birthday too, so I’ll let it slide this once.”
Harry giggled, he was so happy and he looked up at Nasta pleadingly.

“Presents now?” He asked. “You said when Max was awake.”

“You were waiting for me? You should have come up and given me a kick!” He insisted, bending down and kissing him.

“No, I’m able to wait…a bit.” He said with a grin.

“Let Blaise and Max have their breakfasts first.”

“We’ll be having guests soon.” Draco frowned.

“No, they’ve owled their gifts to Harry and they’ll be here in the afternoon.” Nasta countered.

“There are more gifts in there?” Harry asked.

“Wait for Max and Blaise to have something to eat.”

“Just toast for me.” Blaise smiled. “I won’t keep him waiting long.”

“I’ve got it. I want tea anyway.” Max said as he stood back up.

“I’ve got it, sit down.” Nasta insisted.

“It’s Harry’s birthday, not mine.” Max chuckled.

“You’ve just woken up and I can handle toast.”
“Are you sure?” Blaise teased. “It’s not too much for you, is it? I don’t like my toast incinerated.”

“You’re not funny.” Nasta chuckled.

Harry chuckled too and he snuggled further into Draco with Regan and he sighed.

“Are you sure you don’t want anything, Harry?” Nasta asked.

“Maybe just a bit of toast.” He relented. “I’m so excited my stomach is doing flips.”

“You need to eat.” Max chastised him as Nasta went into the kitchen to get them something to eat. “No getting excited before your big present tonight.”

Harry laughed. “I can’t help it, this is my second birthday with you all and my third since I became a Dracken. I’m happy and excited.”

“Get a bit of barbequed toast down you and then we can have presents.” Max told him.

“I heard that!” Nasta called from the kitchen and that made Harry laugh harder.

When Nasta presented them with a plate of toast each, none of them said anything about the slightly charred edges, though there was a lot of covert glances at one another and suppressed smiles. Harry ate his toast happily, Regan still sleeping against his chest and he drained the rest of his tea. He was the last to finish, as usual.

“Presents now?” He asked with a grin.

Nasta chuckled. “Come on then.”

Harry was helped to his feet and helped to the next room, his mates following. Calix made sure that he was the first one through the double doors after Draco opened them.
Harry gasped as he saw the massive pile of presents.

“Seriously?” He demanded. “All of this is for me?!”

“All for you, love.” Max assured him with a grin, falling onto the one free settee, the other one was covered in presents, with just the smallest space left for him to sit.

Harry sat in the small gap and he shook his head. “I can’t believe I have so much stuff!” He said. “Who’s it all from?”

“Everyone you know.” Nasta chuckled. “You even have a gift from the Dracken Healers. I told you that they truly liked you.”

“Seriously?” He cried.

“Yeah, this one.” Max said as he handed over a small wrapped gift. The tag did indeed say that it was from the Healer team at the Dracken Counsel Halls.

Harry opened it as best as he could with Regan still sleeping against his chest and he laughed as he unwrapped a dragon teddy. Someone had taken the time to wrap it up in bandages.

“They’re not funny.” He said, but he giggled regardless.

“Mama!” Calix, who was by his feet, reached out for the teddy. Harry handed it over and watched as Calix turned it over in his hands and then toddled off with it.

“At least that’s one use for it.” Harry laughed.

“Open your cards.” Blaise insisted as he handed over a wad of envelopes.

Marianna and Josiah. Arsenio. Hermione. Seamus. Dean. Neville. Luna. Professor Dumbledore. A million of them were from Max’s Aunts and Uncles, Cepheus had made a rude comment about how much he could fit in his mouth, seriously he was never going to let that incident go. There was a card from the Weasleys, one from someone called Sixten, who was also a Dracken and apparently Nasta’s best friend who worked on a Dragon Reserve in Sweden, and then one from Lucius and Narcissa and another from Remus, Tonks and baby Teddy. Then there were the cards from his mates, one each, each declaring undying love, which made him laugh and then another very large card, from his babies. It was signed with their handprints, which was becoming more of a tradition now since Harry had done it first for Draco’s eighteenth birthday.

“Do we even have the space for all of these?” He giggled happily as he looked at them all.

“Of course.” Nasta insisted as he took them from him and placed them up on the cupboards and sideboards and then all over the windowsill.

Harry looked at them all and he smiled.

“Presents now.” Max said excitedly.

“I don’t know where to even start.” He laughed.

“Mummy.”

Harry looked over the side of the settee to Braiden and he hefted his almost two year old up and sat him down on his knees, being careful of the sleeping Regan.

“You’ll be doing this soon.” He smiled. “Two weeks and you’ll be two years old!”

Braiden clapped his hands and Harry laughed. He picked up the first present nearest to him, he read the tag and saw that it was from Mr and Mrs Weasley.

He opened it up, very awkwardly around the two babies he had on his lap, and he grinned at the home baked fudge and mini treacle tarts. He ate one of the tarts right off.

“She must think that you don’t feed me.” He giggled. Max looked faintly offended and that made Harry properly laugh. He laughed even harder when he saw that all of his mates had taken offence to the thought that others believed that they weren’t providing adequately for him.

He put the box down and swore to keep an eye on it…and the rest of his horde. He would be very disappointed in his friends if they didn’t give him half a sweetshop and he would have to protect it from Nasta.

He was correct in his knowledge of his friends. Neville had given him the biggest box of chocolate frogs he’d ever seen, Seamus and Dean had both given him a collection of specialist sweets, including Pepper Imps, Sugared Butterfly Wings and Treacle fudge…Harry popped a piece of the latter straight into his mouth and chewed happily.

Hermione had knitted him what he assumed was supposed to be a vest, but it had ended up looking more like something that Ginny would have sent him, as he put it on with Blaise’s help and found it rather lopsided on his shoulders and a bit too long, making it seem like he was wearing a knitted dress instead. She’d also given him a Defence book, so he wasn’t too upset with his vest.

He was surprised, and touched, to have received yet another pair of socks from Dobby. One was red with gold lions on it, the other gold with red dragons. Harry immediately pulled off his socks and slipped the new ones on, throwing his old pair onto the floor for Draco to tut over and pick up. It made him grin.

“Do you want me to take Regan?” Blaise asked. “You can’t do this quickly with him on you.”

Harry held his son closer, then realised that he was being unreasonable, Regan smelt fine, he was just tired, so he gave Regan a kiss and handed him over gently to Blaise.

Nasta smiled at him in that happy, proud way and Harry ducked his head in embarrassment. He chuckled a bit and then seized the next present.

It took him forever to unwrap everything, but at least his children were enjoying it, as they had migrated into the smaller living room to play in the sea of wrapping paper. That was making Harry so happy, to see them shrieking and giggling as they tore colourful paper or batted it about.

The first present he picked up from one of his mates was a huge, heavy box…it was from Max.

“I’m scared to open it.” Harry confessed with a giggle, as Max immediately came to help him so he didn’t pull any of his healing muscles.

“You’ll like it.” Max promised with a grin.

Harry giggled again. “Will I like it or will you?”
“You.” Max insisted as Harry tore the paper from the box and draped it around a laughing Farren.

Harry opened the box and then he just stared. A moment later the biggest grin took over his face and he threw himself at Max.

“Thank you. Thank you!” He declared, kissing Max all over his face.

Max laughed. “I knew you’d like it.”

“What the hell has he gotten you?” Draco asked.

“Yeah, I want that treatment when you open my gift.” Blaise laughed.

Harry turned and he opened the box to show his mates that inside had to have been a few hundred chocolate bars…his favourite fudge chocolate bars.

“There has to be three hundred chocolate bars in that box!” Draco said in shock.

“Three hundred and sixty-five.” Max declared happily. “One for every single day until his next birthday.”

Harry made a happy noise and turned to snuggle back into his mate.

“I made sure they were single chocolate bars, as to appease our gorgeous top dominant, but I doubt you mind much.”

“Not at all.” Harry insisted as he plunged his hand into the box and just felt them all.

“If you want I can tip them onto the bed so you can sleep with them all.” Max joked as he watched him.
Harry laughed and turned to kiss Max again. He went back to his remaining presents, unwrapping clothes, books, Quidditch gear, more broom wax, the newest joke items from Fred and George and then he picked up Blaise’s gift and he sent a grin to his first mate and unwrapped it.

It was another box, but this one turned out to be a pamper box.

“Honey?” He said with a grin as he unearthed the jar, it was slightly darker than the usual honey he used. It was also set and not runny.

“Specialist imported honey.” Blaise told him.

Harry opened the jar and smeared a bit on his finger and popped it into his mouth.

“Mmmm.” He said. “I’m going to have to ration this, it’s gorgeous.”

“Better than your usual honey?” Blaise asked.

Harry nodded. “This is going to be special occasion honey.”

“So you’ll put it away until Christmas?” Max chuckled.

Harry shook his head. “It’s my birthday today. All tea made today will be with this. Then Braiden’s birthday is in two weeks, honey for that day too.”

His mates laughed at him as Harry continued looking through the box, finding oils and aromatherapy candles.

“This is spa stuff.” Harry grinned.

“Remember I kept going out in the evenings for twelve weeks?” Blaise said with a grin.

“Yeah, you were going job hunting.”
“No I wasn’t. I was going to evening classes.” Blaise said with a grin. “To learn something that can benefit all of you.”

“You took massage classes, didn’t you?” Harry gasped.

“Well, I didn’t think it was fair that only you know how to give a good massage and you get a shitty one from us back. So I’m now qualified to give proper massages.”

Harry screeched and leapt up to hug Blaise. “Can I have one later?” He asked.

“You can have one whenever you want, Bello. You only need to ask now.”

“That’s so sneaky!” Harry told him. “Telling us you’re going job hunting and going to evening classes! We believed you!”

“Do you like your gift?”

“Do I…? Of course I do!” He giggled. “I get first dibs on your glorious hands, though.” He insisted.

“Of course, it was for your birthday after all. I just hope that I…that I haven’t forgotten anything with the…you know.”

“I’m sure you’ll be fine.” Harry insisted, giving Blaise a kiss. “Just start slowly and let your hands remember everything that you were taught.”

Harry moved back to his now slightly bigger space and he opened more presents, noting what was off of who, and then he unearthed Draco’s gift. He grinned as he opened it and found another pamper box, but full of the gorgeous citrus scented body washes and bubble baths that he loved.

Harry laughed as he saw them, picking out lime, orange, lemon, grapefruit and even pineapple scented body washes, soaps and bubble baths.

“You’re going to be so edible after using those.” Max grinned.
Harry stood up and he kissed Draco and gave him a hug. “Thank you, my lime body wash is running low.”

“I love you smelling of limes.” Nasta declared.

“That’s why it’s running low. You’re the only one who voiced a preference, so I wear lime more than any of the others.”

“I like you smelling of oranges.” Blaise said immediately.

“Lemon or lime.” Draco smirked.

“Grapefruit.” Max winked.

Harry laughed and shook his head. “I wonder if I mixed them then I’d smell like fruit cocktail.”

“I stopped listening at cock.” Max laughed.

“Mummy.” Harry looked to Calix and hefted him up, kissing him and placing him in the middle of all the colourful paper.

Calix giggled and kicked his legs and flapped his arms, sending the paper everywhere. Harry chuckled and he went to finish off the last of his gifts.

When he’d unwrapped the last one, he looked around for any others that he might have missed, moving the mass of paper out of the way and then he sat with a frown when he didn’t find any.

“What’s the matter?” Max asked.

“Surely you got enough?” Blaise asked him.
“I did. I got more than enough.” Harry said distractedly. “It’s just…”

“Just what? What’s wrong?” Draco asked him. “Was there something that you wanted and didn’t get? You only have to say, Harry and it’s yours.”

Harry looked up at Nasta. He didn’t want to sound ungrateful, but Nasta was the only one of his mates who hadn’t given him a gift, but he didn’t want to be presumptuous and ask for it. Thankfully Nasta himself put him out of his misery.

“My gift couldn’t be wrapped.” Nasta told him softly.

“Oh, that’s why he looks like he’s been crushed!” Max sighed. “You never gave him a present, how could you?!?” Max teased. “That’s so cruel of you.”

“As if I would ever not take a chance to spoil you.” Nasta chuckled as he reached into his back pocket and handed over a small envelope.

“Thank you.” Harry said with a shy smile. He opened the envelope and pulled out five tickets. It was only when he read the top ticket that he stood up excitedly. “Is this…?”

“Tickets to visit the England Quidditch team at their stadium and to have a flying experience with them.” Nasta smiled. “They usually won’t do it unless it’s for a special request. As soon as they heard that it was for you however, with your Hogwarts reputation preceding you, they agreed immediately.”

“Nasta, thank you!” Harry stood and hugged him, pulling his head down for a kiss.

“Yeah, Nas, thanks for one upping us all.” Max teased.

“No one has one upped anyone!” Harry hissed. “I love all of my gifts, even the socks off of Dobby. They’re all wonderful and thoughtful in their own way. I love my body pampering kit, I love my chocolate and I love that Blaise went for lessons just to give me a proper massage! I love all of my gifts and I won’t have anyone saying anything about any of them.”
“I was only joking.” Max insisted as he pulled Harry back onto his lap and kissed him.

“Me too!” Tegan demanded from the floor.

Max reached down and hefted her up one armed and he kissed her with a big, smacking sound. She giggled and Harry did the same and snuggled her in close.

“Let me sort out this rubbish.” Draco said. Harry chuckled, he’d wondered when Draco would snap over the rubbish all over the floor.

“I don’t want any of my presents going missing.” Harry directed at Nasta.

“As long as you pace yourself with the edible ones and don’t binge, I don’t care that you have so much.” Nasta insisted. “But for today, you can have as much as you want.” He relented with a smile.

Harry cheered and reached for Max’s box of chocolate. “Max, my love, I need tea.”

“Coming up, gorgeous.”

“Don’t forget this.” Harry said, digging in Blaise’s box and finding the jar of imported honey. “I want to see what it tastes like in tea.”

“Whatever you want today, dear.”

Harry snorted as he tore the wrapper from his chocolate and took a big bite. He moaned happily and fell back against the seat.

“I love this chocolate. It’s my favourite ever.”

“So we’ve noticed.” Nasta chuckled.
“Mummy, bisky.” Farren came over to remind him that it was gone eleven in the morning and that he wanted a snack.

“Do you want some apple too?” Harry asked.

“Gapes!” Farren corrected.

“Oh hell, do we have grapes?” Harry asked, moving to get up.

“I’ve got it.” Nasta said. “Farren, come with me to the kitchen.” He said clearly as he walked off and Farren hurried after him.

Harry smiled after him before he hefted up Braiden as he toddled past and kissed him repeatedly, much to shrieks and giggles.

“Who’s my big boy?!” Harry cooed.

Braiden laughed and pushed at his head. “Mummy, no.”

“Yes, baby.” Harry said as he rolled Braiden over onto his belly and tickled him.

A small whine had him looking over to Regan, who was wriggling and fistimg his eyes. He blinked them open and looked up at Draco.

“Daddy.” He said sleepily.

Draco kissed Regan and slowly sat him up in his lap.

“Are you okay, Regan?” Draco asked him.

“Yuh.” He said as he yawned and then rested back a moment.
“Egan.” Braiden called out happily.

Regan looked over and he giggled as he saw his big brother. “Bay.”

Harry allowed Braiden to climb down from his lap with no help and he went back to his chocolate as Braiden went to sit up with Draco and Regan.

Blaise shifted to his settee and he sat next to him now that there was room and he snuggled in. Harry shifted so that Blaise had more room on his chest and he wrapped an arm around Blaise and kissed his head and he settled in.

“This is nice.” He said. “Only…Max!” He called out. “Where’s my tea?”

“Right here, your highness, please don’t take my head.” Max said as he placed the cup down on the coffee table and got onto his knees, his forehead touching the edge of the settee as he bent down in supplication, his hands raised in a wordless plea.

“It depends which one I fancy.” Harry replied. “There’s a certain head that I do want.”

Max looked faintly shocked as he looked up at him, then he threw his head back and laughed hard.

“Harry!” Draco chastised him. “No smut before the afternoon, it’s too early.”

Harry gave a rather dirty chuckle and Max laughed again before bending over him and kissing him.

“I love you so much.” Max declared.

“Did we have grapes?” He asked.

“Well I’ve got two plums if you want…”
Harry cut the rest of Max’s sentence off with a loud, boisterous round of laughter that left him breathless with tears in his eyes.

“What is it? What happened?” Nasta asked.

“They’re being filthy.”

Harry heard Nasta sigh and he wiped his eyes and looked over the back of the settee at Nasta.

“Did we have grapes for Farren?”

“Yes, I cut them in half too, don’t worry.”

Nasta put a bowl of grape halves onto the coffee table and Regan shifted from Draco’s lap, down to the floor and he toddled to the bowl, grabbing a handful and chewing on them one by one. Harry smiled and sat up, moving Blaise with a lingering kiss. He went into the larger family room and he checked on his twin girls and Leolin.

Leolin was still in his gym, but he’d fallen asleep. Harry left him where he was. The twin girls were awake and grizzling. Harry picked them both up and he took them into the smaller living room.

“Where’s Leolin?” Draco asked.

“Baba Eoin!” Braiden called out, turning to look into the other room.

He toddled off to the baby gym and peered at his brother. Harry waited to see if Braiden would report correctly about Leolin as he came hurrying back.

“Baba Eoin sleeping, Daddy.” He said to Draco.

“Merlin, I love this kid so much.” Max declared, going to his knees and pulling Braiden into a hug and kissing him. “You’re a good boy, Braiden.”
Braiden giggled and broke away, going to play with a bunch of plastic cars. Harry put the two girls onto the floor and he watched them all happily.

Calix was motoring around the floor, Braiden playing, Regan eating grape halves, Farren was sitting out of the way with a biscuit and Tegan was talking to her penguin, three dummies lined up in front of her, she kept pointing to one of them before talking more to her penguin before pointing to another. Harry got the impression that she was narrating a story for the penguin about the three dummies, it was adorable.

He took a deep breath and went to crack open one of his new Defence books. He drank his tea, snuck another couple of Mrs Weasley’s treacle tarts and he occasionally looked up at his children. Nasta had been roped into playing cars with Braiden and Regan, Draco was brushing Farren’s hair and Blaise didn’t take his eyes from the twin girls.

“Does anyone want lunch? I’m doing the kids broccoli and cheese pasta today.” Max called out from behind him.

“Yes!” Harry said, peeking up from his book.

Max laughed. “Okay, birthday boy. You can have some too.”

Harry went back to his book, at least until the floo flared and Caesar came through with Eleonora.

“Hey, Harry. Happy birthday!” He greeted.

“Hi, Caesar. How are you and Nora?”

“Great. This little missy is too.”

Amelle came through with Beatrice and Harry stood to greet her.

“Are we too early?” She fretted.

“Of course not. Thank you so much for my card and gift.”
“Max said that you wanted to spend the morning to yourselves.”

Harry nodded. “Not that it did much good. Ave bumped her chin into the bar of her cot at five in the morning. So we spent the time we were supposed to be together catching up on sleep.”

Caesar laughed then. “So your morning sex was ruined?”

“She’s fine.” Harry said looking around his feet and then going to snatch Ave from the floor. “See?”

Amelle took Ave and handed him baby Bea and Harry cooed over her.

“I thought I heard your droning voice!” Max came in, wooden spoon in hand, dark green apron on over his tee-shirt and shorts, addressing Caesar.

“We are too early!” Amelle said.

“Of course you’re not. I’m just feeding the kids lunch.” Max waved away. “Has Nora eaten?”

“Yeah, but she won’t say no to more.” Caesar chuckled. “What are you making?”

“Only a bit of pasta, there’s plenty there for her.”

“Daddy, put me down.” Eleonora interrupted Caesar as he went to open his mouth. He laughed instead.

“That’s me told.” He said instead, placing Nora on the floor. “You want a hand, Max?”

“Nah, you can keep me company though.” Max said as he headed back to the kitchen.
Caesar followed him and Eleonora immediately went to Farren and sat by him.

“Hi baby.” She greeted him. “Can I play?”

“Muma.” Farren said, seeking him out.

“This is Eleonora, Farren. Your cousin. It’s okay to play.”

Farren nodded and he handed Nora a wooden block. Harry smiled at them and went to the sideboard, getting out his camera. He snapped several photos of them, then of Amelle.

“Oh don’t, I look awful.” She said.

“You look gorgeous.” Harry insisted. “Pose a bit for me.”

Amelle laughed, but did as he’d told her to do. She pulled some rather stupid poses and they both laughed.

“Promise me you’ll destroy the ones that look awful.”

“I promise, but I doubt there will be any.” He said. “Smile, Draco.”

Draco pulled his patented smirk out of thin air and Harry took his photo.

“That wasn’t a smile.” He scoffed. He turned the camera on himself and he pulled the worst face he could think of as he took the picture. He laughed happily afterwards.

“That wasn’t a smile either.” Draco told him.
Harry just grinned, walked over to sit himself on Blaise and he put their heads together and took a photo.

“You’ve probably cut half our heads off somewhere.” Blaise told him.

“Give it here.” Amelle chuckled. She took the camera from him and Harry adjusted baby Bea and he smiled happily. “Say cheese.”

“Why?” Blaise said at the same time that Harry happily said cheese.

“Why cheese?” Draco asked.

“It’s a word that shows off the teeth and because you’re saying a word, it’s more natural than forcing a smile.” Harry told them.

“Oh.”

Harry chuckled and he kissed Blaise before putting Beatrice onto the floor. She crawled off towards the doll house in the corner.

“There are no small parts, are there?” Amelle asked worriedly.

“Nothing smaller than a golf ball.” Harry nodded. “It’s all hard plastic too. Nothing that can be pushed up noses or into ears and nothing small enough, or detachable, so it can’t be swallowed.”

“I should have…I lost my Dracken for a bit then. Sorry.”

“It’s fine. No offence taken. If you needed to be sure, you needed to be sure.” Harry told her kindly.

Amelle smiled at him and Harry smiled back.
“Harry, lunch is up.” Max called from the kitchen.

“Farren, go to the kitchen, love. It’s lunchtime.” Harry told him and his little boy stood up quickly and he ran to the kitchen.

Harry laughed and rounded up the others.

“Braiden. Go to the kitchen, love.” Harry told his oldest child.

Between them, they got all the kids to the kitchen and Harry sat down with his own small plate of pasta.

“I’m surprised you’re still hungry with that mass of candy I saw in the living room.” Caesar said.

“I’m still not used to handling too much food, my stomach stretches painfully if I eat too much, so I save most of the room for normal meals, but I’ve been getting so much better.” He said with a smile. “All those sweets in there will be eaten…even if it does take me to my next birthday to manage it.” He laughed.

He ate his pasta happily, watching his babies as they tried to use forks and spoons to eat their pasta and broccoli. Calix grew bored of using his spoon and not getting any food, so he threw the spoon to the floor and picked up a piece of pasta with his fingers and jammed it into his mouth.

“I saw that coming.” Max said as he picked up the plastic spoon and dropped it into the sink with the saucepan, cheese grater and other bits that he’d used to make lunch. He hadn’t washed up yet because he was busy taking platters from the fridge or from the back of the counter and taking them outside with Nasta’s help.

“He’s still not used to utensils?” Caesar asked.

“No, he really likes using his hands.”

“He likes making a mess.” Harry chuckled before popping more pasta into his mouth.
“Hello?” Someone called out from the living room.

Harry leapt up mid chew and ran to the living room to hug Richard, swallowing hard and barrelling into his Father-in-law.

Richard laughed and pulled him from his feet.

“Myron, help! I’m being attacked by a nineteen year old softie!”

Myron, who was stood just behind his mate, snorted. “You look fine to me.”

“You’re a horrid mate!” Richard declared.

A moment later Myron’s massive arms wrapped around them both and squeezed. Harry laughed, Richard complained and Myron shut him up with a kiss.

“Ah, gross!” Max cried. “Stop slobbering over the top of my poor mate! He doesn’t want you snogging over his head.”

Harry was extracted from Myron and Richard by Max and he had his eyes covered by a large hand and he laughed harder.

“Happy birthday, Harry.” Myron told him. Harry pulled Max’s hand away from his eyes and he grinned.

“Thank you. Thank you for my card and gift!”

“Think nothing of it, love.” Richard told him. “Where are the rugrats?”

“In the kitchen, eating their lunches, like this one should be.” Max answered, carrying Harry back through the corridors to the kitchen, putting him down in front of his plate.
“Baby boy!” Richard cried out, grappling Caesar into a headlock.

“Don’t snap his neck, Richard.” Myron complained before giving up as Caesar gave back as good as he could get and they started wrestling. “How are you today, Amelle?” He turned and asked instead.

Amelle giggled at her mate and Father-in-law for a moment. “Fine thank you, and yourself?”

“I’d feel better if I didn’t have to deal with this.” He indicated to Richard and Caesar. “How are the girls?”

“Nora’s having a second lunch and Beatrice is in the family room with Eva and Ave, enjoying the run of the place for once.”

“Draco’s watching them.” Harry said, just in case anyone thought that they’d left the three youngest babies on their own.”

“I assumed as such when I didn’t see him.” Myron smiled at him, ruffling his hair. “Who do I have to beg for a cup of coffee?”

“Nasta.” Harry said immediately.

“Not today.” Nasta said as he helped Regan eat as their boy was getting frustrated having the pasta continually falling from his fork.

“I got it.” Max insisted. “Harry, do you want more tea?”

“Yes! Don’t forget my special honey!”

“You have special honey now?” Richard asked as he stood and hefted Caesar up from the floor.

“Blaise got it for me for my birthday. Man-something.”
“Manuka.” Nasta said. “Imported all the way from New Zealand just for Harry to enjoy in his tea.”

“It’s gorgeous too!” Harry declared as he finished his lunch and pushed his empty plate away.

“Just don’t let any of the kids get near any honey.” Myron warned.

“We’re always well aware of such things.” Nasta said easily. “It’s kept in the cupboards and it’s never left out.”

“What?” Harry asked with a frown.

Several people turned to look at him and he felt like he was missing something.

“Babies can’t have honey, Harry.” Nasta told him.

“Well, of course not. It’s pure sugar.” He said.

“No, Harry. Honey can sometimes be contaminated with certain spores that are toxic to babies. That’s why they put a warning on the back to never give honey to babies under twelve months old.” Nasta told him.

Harry blinked. “I thought that that warning was because it was just all sugar.” He said, feeling hollow. “Are you saying that that’s not the case?”

“No.” Myron said. “The spores in contaminated honey can germinate in a baby’s gut and release powerful toxins that can cause a variety of problems and eventually lead to full body paralysis. These spores have no effect on adults or babies over a year old. The condition is called infant botulism and it is very rare, but honey is a source of the spore and thus should never be given to an infant under twelve months of age.”

Harry felt like he couldn’t breathe. “Get rid of it.” He said, his heart pounding and his body feeling cold. “All of it, get rid of it, now.”
“Harry, you don’t have to get rid of your honey or any honey related products.” Nasta sat beside him and explained gently. “Babies under a year old are not going to feed themselves honey, they rely on us for everything. Even if they could get one of the jars, there’s no way that they could open it.”

Nasta held him close and held his head by the crook of his neck, releasing his calming pheromones to ease Harry back down and out of his feral Dracken mind-set that only saw a threat to his babies and not the logic behind them not being able to get the jars, or open them. It had been almost two years and Harry had been drinking honey tea before any of them had even met him. Not once had there been an incident with their children even getting close to any honey related products and none of them would have fed them anything with honey in it. Harry might not have known the true reason behind not giving babies under a year old honey, but the warnings on the jar labels was enough to stop most people from giving honey to their infants.

“Nasta is right.” Myron said. “We kept honey around the kids too, and not once did any of them get infant botulism. As I said it is a very rare illness, Harry. There’s no need to fret or to throw away any honey that you have. As long as you don’t force a spoonful of honey into their mouths, they’re going to be just fine.”

Harry nodded, much calmer now that he had been reassured. He just didn’t much like the fact that he had had a potential danger to his babies in the house for all this time and he hadn’t known. He wouldn’t have fed his babies honey, but if any of them had picked up his cup and drank a mouthful of his tea…he would be aware of that now in the future. He would not leave his tea at all unattended with his young girls crawling around and getting into things now that they were finding their feet so early.

Now suitably calm Harry stood up and stretched. He picked up Calix, who was finished eating, and he put him on the floor. His little explorer immediately took off towards the open back door.

“Of course he would want to go outside.” Harry chuckled, trying to get himself back into his happy, joyous mood of that morning, before he’d found out that his love of honey could have caused paralysis to his children if they’d ingested it. “Not until after your nap.” He told his son, picking him back up and carrying him into the family room.

He put Calix down and sat himself behind Draco, who was sat on the floor, playing with Eva while keeping an eye on Ave and Bea. Harry bent forward and kissed his cheek before sitting back with a groan.

“How’s Leolin?”

“He’s still asleep. He must be having a mini growth spurt. He’s been sleeping a lot more lately.”
Harry nodded. He’d noticed the same. “Nasta thinks he might be preparing to get his first tooth.”

“Oh, yes, that should be coming up soon.”

“Yes, eighteen months is average.” Harry nodded. “He’s nineteen now, so it could be any day. I’ve been checking, but he doesn’t look like he’s getting anything through. His gums are still pink, no red spots or peeks of white. I’ll keep checking though.”

“Tea’s up, lovers.” Max said with a grin, coming into the family room with a tray with two cups and three bottles. “Do those girls need a bottle? I think they do!” He cooed to them.

Harry chuckled and he picked up his tea and he moaned around the first sip.

“Good?” Max smiled at him.

“So good.” He said happily. “Thank you.”

“Ah!” Ave declared from his legs and Harry put his cup down and picked her up with a groan, settling her on his lap.

“What’s the matter, trouble?” He asked with a smile. “Do you want your bottle?”

Harry took the bottle handed to him by Draco and he prodded it into her mouth. Ave took the bottle from him and she fed herself and Harry picked up his tea again and he drank as Ave suckled her milk.

Max was feeding Eva and Draco was lost in thought for a moment, so Harry kept an eye on Beatrice, though the nine month old was very happy to crawl around exploring the new room.

Ave slipped from his lap and Harry supported her, lest she fall on the bottle in her mouth and reopen her wound, and she toddled around, drinking from her bottle and Harry sat back and sighed.

“They’re growing so big now.” He said softly.
Immediately Max and Draco moved to comfort him.

“It’s alright, we’ll have a new baby soon.” Max soothed him.

“If you haven’t caught with this heat period there’s always the next one.” Draco told him gently, lacing their hands together.

Harry nodded. “I know, I just…they’re so big, they can feed themselves now, they’re up on their feet. I just can’t believe that they’re coming up to seven months now and they’re coming on so well! Most seven month olds are not this forward or this mobile.”

“It’ll be okay, love.” Max assured him, bending down and kissing him, Eva still in his arms.

“At least we have Leolin. He’s not going to be up on his feet any time soon.” Draco told him.

Harry nodded and he stood and he went to the baby gym, kneeling down and stroking Leolin’s cheek. He was still thin, but he no longer looked skeletal. His time in the hospital was slowly being erased.

At the touch, Leolin’s eyes moved under his eyelids and he wriggled.

“Leolin.” Harry called out gently. “Wake up, love.”

“Ma.” He replied sleepily, his eyes still closed.

Harry smiled and he waited patiently for Leolin to wake himself up.

“I’ve got a nice warm bottle waiting for you.” Harry coaxed.

Leolin’s arms lifted towards him and Harry’s face slipped into an adoring smile as he gently and carefully picked Leolin up from his baby gym, supporting his head and neck on reflex and he snuggled his tiny Faerie in close.

Harry stood and carried his Faerie baby back to the settee and he took the bottle handed to him by Max. He prodded it at Leolin’s mouth gently, waiting for his brain to catch up with what was going on as his lips parted and Harry could put the teat into his mouth, allowing him to feed.

“There you are, Harry. Ezrah and Lathen have arrived.” Nasta said.

“Hi Ezrah, hi Lathen!” Harry greeted happily.

“It is hard to believe you are only just nineteen years of age.” Ezrah laughed as he came to greet him, then he caught sight of what he was doing. “Oh, little Leolin.”

“Yeah, come here, Ezrah, sit by me.”

Ezrah did as he’d been told and Harry easily transferred Leolin over to him, keeping the bottle in his mouth until Ezrah had hold of it. Still the young Fae flapped.

“Oh, you’re letting me feed him? I’ve never fed a babe before, Harry!” He said fretfully.

“And you’d never held a babe before when I let you hold mine and you were absolutely fine. You can hardly do it wrong, Ezrah.” Harry said with a smile. “Leolin does all of the work, you just have to hold the bottle and keep the milk level over the bulb.”

Ezrah nodded with a look of pure concentration on his face and Harry smiled, standing up and moving to the kitchen, Lathen gently touched his arm and bent down to him.

“Thank you.” He said softly into his ear.

Harry smiled at him. “Think of it as a bit of practice for when you have your own.” Harry whispered back with a wink before he waltzed into the kitchen.

“There he is, hello sweetheart. Happy birthday.” Kimberly greeted him, coming to cup his chin and kiss his cheek.

Harry chuckled and hugged her tight. “Thank you.”
“How are the other little ones?”

“Eva and Ave have just finished a bottle, Leolin is having his and Beatrice is rubbing her face all over the back door.” He laughed.

Caesar laughed, but Amelle just rolled her eyes and went to get her daughter, who she insisted took after her Father too much.

“Are the others down for their nap?” Harry asked.

“Yeah, I caught Calix trying to go out the back door again and took him up to his cot, whether they sleep or not is another matter, but a bit of quiet time will do them some good, but we have quite a few guests now, so it’s time to move this party outside.”

Nasta slid open the door onto the back porch and Caesar was the first out and he went straight down the slide.

“I’ve wanted to do that since I first saw it!” He cried out happily from the lawn.

Harry laughed, but he heard Myron groaning and that made him laugh more.

His mates had set up a huge sheet on the grass for the kids with some spare toys, it was close to the little play area they had for the kids near the bottom of the porch, right where Caesar had gone down the slide.

The massive porch, which was like an extra room as it was covered over, was bigger at either end, circular, like a castle tower, so that it could fit two huge round tables that could sit twenty people each. Max had had them custom made and Nasta had ordered the porch to be built around the two tables at either end.

“I’ll never get over the size of this house.” Richard chuckled. “This porch is amazing!”

Harry smiled and he went down to the warded tables that were set up on the grass, careful and slow with the several steps. He used his wand to remove the covers from them to reveal the party food and drinks that Max and Nasta had set up while Harry had been eating with the kids.
Draco carried the two girls out and placed them on the sheet. Ezrah followed with Leolin, but he looked worriedly to the sun and he covered Leolin as much as he could. Harry helped out by popping up the three large patio umbrellas and moving them until the sheet was cast completely in shade.

“Is he okay to go on the floor?” Ezrah asked worriedly.

“Sure.” Harry said as he took his beautiful scowly boy from Ezrah and kissed him.

He put Leolin on his belly, close to the edge of the blanket so that he could feel the soft grass. His Faerie son immediately rested his hands on the grass and rubbed his face on the sheet.

“He loves grass.” Harry smiled. “Sit down with him if you want to, Ezrah.” Harry said with a smile. “If not, he’ll be just fine on his own. He’s not going anywhere.”

Harry went to greet Aneirin with a big hug and an excited noise and he chuckled as he was pulled off of his feet. Nasta had told him that his Father might not be able to come today, because of work commitments, so Harry was extra excited to see him.

“How are you?” Aneirin asked.

“Wonderful!” Harry said. “Thank you for my card and present!”

“It was nothing.” Aneirin told him. “Have those boys been treating you right?”

Harry nodded. “Yes. I’ve been so spoilt.” He giggled. “I thought you were working today?”

“I wouldn’t miss your birthday. I moved some things around.” Aneirin told him.

“The kids are down for a nap at the moment, but the younger ones are being very stubborn and Leolin’s only just woken up.”

“Where is my little grandson?” Aneirin smiled as he went and hefted Leolin up, kissing his little mouth before replacing him back, half on the grass, when he made an angry, frustrated noise and scowled. “That’s me told.” Aneirin laughed.

“He loves the grass. Just don’t give him flowers, he gets the pollen all over his face and he tries to lick it off?” Harry said with a grin.

“Harry!”

Harry turned at the sound of his name and he made an excited noise and went to hug Henley, who had gotten much taller since Harry had last seen him. He was picked up and swung around yet again and he laughed.

“Henley! How are you?! You’ve gotten taller!” Harry said in a rush.

“Happy birthday! I’m great and yeah, I have gotten taller, five inches since I last saw you.”

“I can see that! Where’s Anabel, Claudia and baby Harry?”

“Harry dirtied a nappy, so Blaise directed Ana to the changing station you’ve set up.”

Harry nodded and he pulled Henley over to the drinks table and he got himself a red drink. It turned out to be strawberry flavoured.

“None of these are alcoholic are they?” Henley asked, even as he took a blue drink and sipped it.

“Knowing my mates, no.” Harry smiled. “We’re waiting on baby news.” He added as he placed a hand on his flat belly.

Henley’s eyes widened. “Congratulations!” He said. “How many heat periods have you had, or is that rude of me to ask?”

Harry laughed. “My first one since the girls. It was fertile straight off.”
Henley laughed. “Of course it was, this is you we’re talking about now! I bet you’re pregnant.”

“I’ll owl you.” Harry winked.

Anabel came to stand by her mate and she greeted him with those wide eyes filled with hero worship.

“Hi Anabel.” He greeted politely. “Did you sort baby Harry out okay?”

“Yes, thank you. I wasn’t sure if you’d have his size nappy.”

“We’re fully stocked.” Harry said. “There’s going to be a lot of kids running around, so we made sure to stock a pack of every sized nappy there is.” He laughed.

Henley took his daughter from his mate and he introduced them softly. Claudia hid her face shyly.

“You’re not shy.” Henley teased her gently, working a finger into her belly.

“Claudia, do you want to go in the play area?”

The little girl peeked out at him, then to where he was pointing. She nodded her head.

“Go on then.” Harry encouraged.

She giggled and Henley placed her down and she was gone. She was just a few weeks older than his quintuplets, but she had been a singleton and as such, she was much more developed and forward as she darted past a shocked, terrified group of Faeries and climbed the little castle and happily went down the slide.

A sleepy Braiden toddled out onto the decking holding Max’s hand, who was almost bent double and led him to the slide and sat him on it.
“Max! He’s tired!” Harry said warningly.

Max, who’d looked up as soon as Harry had shouted his name, nodded and he spoke to Braiden and then he hurried down the porch steps and then held his arms out. Braiden shuffled forward and went down the big slide and Max caught him, picking him up and kissing him.

Harry shook his head and got another drink, a green one this time, which turned out to be apple flavoured.

“He didn’t go down for very long.” Blaise came over to tell him.

Harry nodded. “There are too many people here, he knows that something’s going on. Calix will be up next.”

Harry watched as Braiden saw Eleonora on the play area and all remnants of sleep were gone as he too darted past shocked Faeries and went to clamber over the equipment.

Harry had to smile at their shocked, concerned faces as they watched Braiden manoeuvre himself up the steps, over the short, wobbly bridge and then down the much smaller slide. He laughed happily, clapped his hands and then got up off his bum and went back around.

Harry made his way to the Faeries, who looked about ready to panic.

“Thank you for coming.” He said genuinely.

“Thank you for inviting us to the day of your birth.” Eitri insisted with a smile. “It is hard to believe that you are just nineteen, a mere baby to us, yet you already have your own babes, rather a few of them too.”

Harry grinned. “I’m not going to stop at just eight either.” He chuckled.

“Eight babes at nineteen. The gods truly bless you and your partners.”

Harry looked behind him, at all four of his mates, and he sighed happily. “I’m the luckiest person in the world.” He insisted.
“I think you have that the wrong way around. They are the lucky ones, to have you.” Kailen told him.

Harry chuckled. “I don’t see it that way, I’m a nightmare and I know I am.”

“You have that right.” Ginny said as she materialised at his shoulder. “Happy birthday.”

“Ginny! Thank you for coming.”

“As if I would be anywhere else on your nineteenth.” She told him.

“Ginny’s right.” One of the twins came to tell him with a wide grin. “Where else would we be?”

“We had to come and see our favourite pickled toad for his birthday.” The other twin insisted.

Harry groaned. “You’re never going to let that go are you?”

“Never.” They said together.

“Ginny, how could you give them so much material to work with?!” He faux sobbed on her.

“I was eleven!” She defended. “And honestly your eyes are as green as fresh pickled toads.”

“Couldn’t you think of something a little more…I don’t know, flattering to compare me to?! Like summer grass, or I don’t know, emeralds or something, anything?”

“It’s better than the gibbon with two black eyes.” Fred pointed out.

Harry groaned louder, thinking of the portrait that Dobby had given him for Christmas one year.
“Am I really so hideous that my only options are a battered gibbon or a pickled toad?” He demanded.

The twins both nodded gravely. “I’m afraid so.” George told him.

Ginny all but cackled, but Eitri was incensed.

“He is one of the most beautiful boys I have yet seen!” He told them angrily. “How dare you say such things about him, in front of him!”

“Whatever you say, mini Draco.” Ginny smirked and went off towards the drinks table.

Eitri went red with anger and Harry laid a gentle hand on his arm.

“They’re just teasing.” Harry said with a smile. “They don’t mean it.”

“Of course not, we’d never actually hurt our adorable little Harry.” Fred snorted.

Harry rolled his eyes.

“Is this some sort of Dracken etiquette?” Warren asked. “Are such blatant insults a form of… affection?”

“It’s a human thing.” George nodded seriously, but Harry could see that he was fighting back laughter.

“Why would you even engage in such a thing?” Eitri demanded, his gold eyes flashing dangerously.

“It’s not meant to be spiteful.” Harry insisted. “If it was said maliciously, then that is something else entirely, but you can’t laugh at others unless you can laugh at yourself, and I can.” He said with a smile. “It is just teasing, Eitri.”
“I do not understand.” The golden Fae said seriously. “Why would you insult others or accept such people insulting you?”

“Because it’s done affectionately, Eitri.” Harry explained patiently, aware that they lived in vastly different cultures and that despite the fact that Eitri barely looked older than Harry himself, he was in fact a hundred and nine years old. “They aren’t saying it to be cruel and I know they’re just teasing me. Like when I call Draco a ferret.”

“Why do you call him as such?” Dain asked.

Harry chuckled with Fred and George.

“Draco!” He called out across the garden and his blond mate looked up and came right over when Harry beckoned to him.

“What is it, are you alright?” He asked.

Harry nodded. “Yes, but they want to know why I lovingly call you a ferret.”

Draco groaned and slung his arm around Harry’s neck, pulling him into a kiss.

“Did you have to mention that?” He complained.

Harry chuckled. “When we were fourteen Draco was transfigured into this really cute, fluffy ferret. He looked adorable! Ever since he’s been called ferret. Some people use it as a demeaning, spiteful curse, but I use it affectionately. Do you hate me calling you as such, Draco? Do you feel demeaned or belittled?”

“No.” Draco replied. “I still call you scar head and you’re a lovable idiot sometimes.”

Harry laughed before looking back to the Faeries. “You see? It’s just affectionate and it makes us stronger to such things when they are aimed at us maliciously. It takes the sting from the words to hear them affectionately and it makes our skins thicker to malicious attacks, I still love Draco, even if he is a ferret.”
Draco snorted. “I still love you too, even if you are insufferable and entirely reckless with no penchant for your own safety.”

They shared a soft kiss and Harry snuggled into his arms.

“Ergh, get a room.” Fred told them with an over exaggeratedly pinched face.

Harry turned further towards Draco and flicked out his tongue, aiming for a deeper kiss, but Draco pulled away with a chuckle.

“Max! Draco won’t snog me on my own birthday! Come and show him how it’s done!”

Max bounded over with all the enthusiasm of a kid at Christmas as he snatched up Harry and all but plundered his mouth in a kiss that left Harry breathless and shaky.

“Wow, you should kiss me like that more often!” Harry giggled.

“Any time you want, love. Draco, how could you refuse this gorgeous face a snog?”

“You know that I hold no love for such blatant displays.” Draco said. “That sort of thing should be for when we are in private.”

“Snob.” Max accused him with a grin.

Draco huffed and walked away. Harry smiled up at Max happily, much calmer now since the horrifying revelation with the honey.

“Mummy.”

Harry was already looking down automatically when Braiden wrapped his arms around his leg. He immediately hunched down, held Braiden’s hands and looked into those wide purple eyes.
“What is it, love? Are you alright?”

Braiden nodded then turned and pointed at the big slide. “Slide?” He questioned.

Max laughed. “I knew they’d love that slide. Come on.”

Max took Braiden’s hand and walked him up to the top and then sat their oldest son on the top. Braiden didn’t wait this time, but thankfully Blaise was near the bottom to catch him before he shot off the end. Not that Braiden much cared as he laughed hysterically and then hurried up the steps on his own, which freaked the Faeries out again, to meet Max at the top so that he could go down the big slide again.

Of course as soon as Eleonora saw what was happening the kids had to take it in turns as she immediately wanted to go down the big slide too. Thankfully it took the both of them a while to traverse the porch steps, so it gave the other plenty of time to go down the slide without waiting.

The garden was filling up and Harry could barely keep track of who he had greeted or who he hadn’t. He did find Alexander and he excitedly hugged him tight.

“I saw Kimberly earlier, but you weren’t with her.”

Alexander laughed and shot his mate and Wife, over by the drinks table, a loving look.

“I had a few things to take care of and Kimberly was not willing to wait, not even fifteen minutes for me to finish what I was doing. She had to come over right away to see you and the kids.”

Harry chuckled and held on tight, greeting Xerxes and Julius from Alexander’s arms.

“Have you got any baby news to share?” Xerxes asked him.

Harry shook his head. “I’m refusing to even think of doing the test until after Braiden’s birthday in two weeks. I’ve shown no signs though, so we’re going with a cautious no, not pregnant for the moment, but we can’t be sure until I do the test.”
“Why are you refusing?” Julius asked curiously.

“Because he wants a bit of bloody peace, Jule.” Xerxes explained. “As soon as those boys find out that he’s pregnant the kid gloves come out and he would never have been able to have a bit of fun on his birthday or set up Braiden’s birthday.”

Harry narrowed his eyes on Xerxes, who winked. He knew. He actually knew.

“Did Myron tell you?” Harry asked.

“No, I can tell that you are.” Xerxes told him with a smirk.

“You are pregnant?” Julius said.

“Shhh!” Harry hissed. “Not so loud!” He insisted as he looked around for all four of his mates. Thankfully not one of them were close by.

“Myron knows that you are?” Alexander asked him.

“He was here when the Healer visited. Only he and Amelle know.”

“Amelle knows, but not your own mates?” Julius asked, his eyebrows going off into his hairline.

“The last I checked, Amelle wasn’t going to ban me from moving, getting up, lifting my own children or force me to eat my body weight in food at every meal. I will tell them after Braiden’s birthday, until then I want some peace to be in control of my own body.”

“So please just keep this to yourselves for two more weeks. That’s all I’m asking for, two weeks. Nasta’s already had me book an appointment for the day after Braiden’s birthday. I just need to be free to do what I want to do for a little while.”
“Well I’m not going to say anything. I knew as soon as I looked at you that you were pregnant.”

“How?!?” Harry demanded, wondering if he was giving off ‘don’t fuck with the pregnant submissive’ vibes.

“You look a little queasy.” Xerxes said simply. “I’d hazard a guess that you had a little bout of sickness this morning.”

Harry sighed. “No, I did feel really sick though.” He said, casting another glance around at his surroundings to look for his four mates. They were still well out of earshot. “The morning sickness is coming, I just hope I can hold the secret until after Braiden’s birthday.”

“How did you pass it off this morning? Surely those idiots noticed.”

“I played it off as excitement for my birthday. They have no clue.”

“Maybe in two weeks I’ll have a little talk with them.” Alexander said. “You shouldn’t have to lie or feel like you have to keep your condition a secret just to get some peace. I can very well understand the need to protect you and the baby, Dracken pregnancies are rather delicate, but there is no need to stop you from doing any of your normal activities.”

“They just worry.” Harry tried to defend.

“Just worrying is normal.” Xerxes said. “Making you feel like you have to keep your news a secret just to be left alone for a little longer is not. I agree with you, Dad, they need a talking to.”

Harry sighed. “Just wait…”

“Until after Braiden’s birthday. We know.”

“Thank you.” He said genuinely.
“There you are!” Max declared loudly, striding over. “Stop hogging the birthday boy.”

Max wrapped his arms around Harry’s shoulders and bent down to kiss the top of his head.

“The rest of the kids are awake, they refused to sleep for long and I’m sure Farren hasn’t even been asleep, he was just sat all quiet in his cot.”

Harry sighed. That was typical for Farren, he was so contented and laid back that he didn’t move enough to tire himself out for a nap.

Harry went to go and find his children and, unsurprisingly, most of them were wreaking havoc on the little playground, including Farren.

Eva and Ave had been put on the little sheet with Leolin and Beatrice. Not that either of them were staying put. They were both off on their own little adventures, and getting incredibly frustrated when they found themselves back on the sheet.

“Everyone!” He called out and waited until their attention was on him. “The girls want to move around, they don’t like being still, so if you could please just leave them to wander around, but obviously check by your feet before moving! Thanks.” He said and then hefted up one girl off of the sheet and set her free and then did the same for her sister. They couldn’t get to their feet out here, not easily at least, because they needed something to help them stand, which was usually a settee or a coffee table. But they were very happy to crawl around the grass.

The garden was full of kids running around, though there were still several women off to the side who refused to put their children down and were casting suspicious glances at everything and everyone, especially Hermione and the Weasleys and at Remus and Tonks, who had set Teddy free on the playground.

Harry was very clearly enjoying himself and he made sure that his mates saw him eating from the finger goodies that they had laid out. Max even caught him sneaking a taste of his massive birthday cake, he had threatened to spank him…Harry’s reply had been to steal another of the iced decorations from the cake and to eat it obviously and slowly in front of Max so that he couldn’t miss him doing so. Max had promised to spank him before bed. So now Harry had something else to look forward to later.

After an hour or so, Harry was called forward to blow out his candles and he did so with Leolin on his hip. Leolin who wouldn’t let Harry blow out his candles because every time Harry took in a breath and pouted out his lips to blow on the candles, Leolin thought that Harry wanted a kiss and would mouth at Harry’s lips. Harry tried again, only for Leolin to do the same.

“Leolin, I’m trying to blow out my candles! Not kiss you.” Harry laughed, even as he cupped the back of Leolin’s head and kissed all over his face.
While Leolin was laughing in that amazing, huffy way of his, Harry took the distraction to quickly blow out the nineteen candles to the applause of his guests. He went back to kissing Leolin and making him laugh, to the delight of their Faerie guests.

Harry handed Leolin over to Ezrah, who smiled so happily that Leolin looked at him curiously and started touching his mouth, utterly fascinated by the shape of it.

Harry left Leolin in Ezrah’s capable hands, even if the Fae didn’t believe in himself, Harry believed in him, as he accepted the large slice of cake from Blaise and happily took a huge bite.

The little children all had slim slices of cake too, even Farren, who didn’t have a plate and had the piece of cake straight in his hands, was tucking in happily, getting the cake and icing everywhere, buttercream smeared everywhere. It made Harry grin, he couldn’t believe that he’d have to do all of this again in just two weeks though.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry was more excited for Braiden’s second birthday than he’d been for his own. But then he lived for his children and he was awake at six O’clock in the morning, down in his huge, glorious kitchen, getting everything ready for Braiden’s big day.

He’d already started making several batches of fairy cakes and biscuits, with half the amount of sugar so that the babies could actually eat them, and he was so happy and excited as he set out the iced cakes that were for the adults away from those that weren’t iced, those were for the tidal wave of babies that would be coming. There were more cakes that weren’t iced than those that were to compensate for this vast outnumbering of child to adult ratio.

“It’s too early.” Max bemoaned as he wandered into the kitchen just before seven.

Harry grinned at him. “It’s our baby’s second birthday!” He said excitedly. “He’s two years old today.”

“Not until eighteen minutes past midday he’s not.” Max said grumpily.

Harry scoffed. “Details! Today is his birthday regardless of what time he was born, though I’m incredibly happy with you that you remembered the exact time that he was born.” Harry said, moving over to give Max a big kiss, setting a cup of tea in front of him.

“I could hardly forget, he was our first and you were screaming fit to wake the dead. It terrified me at the time and we were all clock watching. We knew exactly when he was born.”
Harry smiled and kissed Max again. “It still makes me happy to know that you remember exactly when he was born.”

“How much baking have you done?” Max demanded suddenly when he took a sip of tea and looked around at the counters full of baked goods. “How long have you been up?!”

“Only an hour.” Harry insisted truthfully. “I love this huge oven! You know I can get two batches of cakes and three trays of biscuits inside it together!” He said happily. “It’s amazing!”

Harry went to kiss Max a third time then, stroking a hand through his hair. “Thank you for picking out this oven and the huge fridge freezer too! I love them.”

Max laughed. “If it gets me that sort of treatment, I’m glad I chose the largest appliances that I could find and then enlarged them a little more with magic, all to provide for our very large, and growing family.”

“I can bake so much in that oven.” Harry said, very pleased.

After two weeks of recovering a little more after the activity of his nineteenth birthday, he was happy to just sit on the floor and play with whichever baby came to hand. At first it had been all of them, but slowly over the two weeks, they’d gotten their confidence back and they were assured that he wasn’t going anywhere and they were happy to go off and play by themselves. An added bonus in the last week was that they no longer cried if he left the room, either to the kitchen or to the bathroom.

Everyone was settling down and Harry was feeling more secure too. He wasn’t quite ready to tell his mates that though, maybe later, once the kids were all in bed, when he was going to tell them that he was in fact pregnant.

He smiled to himself. The sickness had trailed off to nothing, he would sometimes wake up feeling like he was going to be sick, but it never came to anything and a nice cup of tea and a sit down in the morning eased it right off, though he knew that it was only a matter of time before it hit him full force and he wouldn’t be able to hide it, but he’d made it to Braiden’s birthday. It wouldn’t matter if they found out now, because he was planning on telling them anyway, as long as he got these cakes and biscuits baked and got the presents and the lunchtime party sorted. He could tell them then, when the kids had, hopefully, gone down for an afternoon nap after playing for half the day on the massive inflatable slide and bouncy castle that had been set up yesterday afternoon.

He was six weeks pregnant and it was usual for him to just be starting his morning sickness regime. Just two, three more weeks then he’d be done with the first trimester of pregnancy and he’d be in the second. He was due in mid-February.
“You look a bit spacey, are you alright?” Max asked.

Harry smiled automatically. “I’m great. I’m just thinking. My little boy is two already. In just four months we’ll have six two year olds running around and literally weeks after that, our little girls turn one.”

“Come here.” Max said softly.

Harry went to Max and he was pulled onto Max’s lap and kissed softly.

“It’ll be alright.” Max told him. “They’re growing up, but they still depend on us for everything. We’ve only just started potty training Braiden and Tegan. They’re a long way off doing anything on their own. We have time with them.”

Harry nodded with a smile. “I know, I’m just being stupid.”

“How? Are you alright?” Blaise asked, peering blearily at him through almost closed eyes.

“Yeah, I just can’t believe that our little baby is two today, that’s all.”

Blaise smile at him and detoured to kiss him before going to the kettle. “How long ago did this boil?” He asked.

“Not two minutes.” Harry said. “I made tea for me and Max.”

Blaise nodded happily and made himself a mug of coffee before coming over to sit with them.

“You’ve been busy.”

“Not as busy as the amount of baking would belie. That new oven fits massive amounts.” Harry said happily. “I can make up triple batches of everything and it’ll all go in the oven together. I’ve done a triple batch of sponge fairy cakes, a triple batch of chocolate fairy cakes and two triple batches of vanilla biscuits. I’m not done just yet though. With the amount of people coming I need to do some more, but I’ll eat breakfast first.”

“You haven’t eaten yet?” Max asked him.

Harry shook his head. “I’ve just had several cups of tea. I was so excited and so busy making treats that I just haven’t eaten yet.”

“That’s my cue to start my husbandly duty.”

“I thought your husbandly duty was to keep us all sexed up?” Blaise quipped.

“I can very easily do both.” Max grinned, winking at them both and Harry laughed while Blaise snorted.

Max did them crepes, because they were one of Harry’s favourites, and he happily served him and Blaise with little side bowls of slice and diced fruit, an assortment of jams and even freshly whipped cream.

“I love you so much for this.” Harry said as he took three crepes straight off and started filling them with jam before rolling them up with different fruit fillings.

“I missed breakfast in bed for your birthday, then you were so excited that you only wanted toast. Today I can spoil you with crepes.” Max said, eating his own breakfast as he watched happily, and a little proudly, as he and Blaise ate the food he’d made for them.

Blaise kept to his usual favourites of strawberries with freshly whipped cream, but Harry was always more adventurous and he made such strange combinations, trying everything to see if he would like something more than his old favourites.

Nasta came down with Leolin and Farren and their little boy was frantic to reach the table when he realised that there was food on it. Nasta chuckled sleepily and placed Farren down on a chair and Harry handed him the bowl of sliced bananas and Farren immediately tucked into them.

“I wonder if he’ll like crepes.” Harry said consideringly as he pulled another one towards himself, filled it with strawberries and bananas, rolled it up and then sliced it into bite sized pieces.

He put them in front of Farren and smiled as Farren looked at them consideringly before trying them. His whole face lit up and he started chewing them with relish. Harry laughed.

“Oh, I love him.” Harry declared as he supervised Farren eating his crepes as Max went to make some more for Nasta as Blaise made up more strawberry and banana crepes for Farren.

“Ma!” Leolin called out desperately, without seeing him this time, which was unusual, and Nasta handed him over, giving them both a kiss first.

Harry tucked Leolin into his arms and he automatically checked his little mouth for signs of erupting teeth. Leolin was twenty months old now and still had no sign of any teeth…only he did.

“Nasta! Nasta! He has a tooth! He has a tooth!” He said excitedly.

Nasta was suddenly back over his shoulder, peering at the tiny speck of white that had erupted from Leolin’s red gum. One large hand cupped Leolin’s cheek as Harry cuddled his little boy and kissed him.

“We’ve been waiting months for this and finally it’s happened! Oh, I’m so happy!”

Harry almost gave his little secret away when he burst into happy tears, clutching Leolin tightly, but his mates just smiled at him and soothed him and told him that Leolin was growing up well. They didn’t realise that his tears were mostly hormone induced…Harry wanted to keep it that way, at least for several more hours.

“Of all days for him to get a tooth.” Max chuckled. “I always knew he’d be a sucker for attention, but to try and upstage his big brother on his birthday.”

“This…this shouldn’t affect Braiden’s birthday, should it?” Harry asked worriedly.

“He can’t have any of the gels or potions that we used for the older babies.” Nasta reminded him. “He’s going to be on frozen wash cloths and teether only and he’s not going to be happy about it.”
Harry swallowed and looked at his little boy already wriggling in his arms, who had been calling out for him before even seeing him. Nasta was right, today was not going to be a good day for their little Leolin.

Harry was stressed and unhappy as he stayed in the smaller living room with a hysterically screaming Leolin. At least he was the first to greet their guests when they arrived.

Braiden had had his breakfast, after greeting them in three different languages as had become his habit, before he’d opened his presents. Leolin’s pain that accompanied his erupting tooth had held off until then. Harry had been able to feed him his bottle, though Leolin had gnawed on it rather aggressively, which was completely new for their little Faerie, then the bottle had been swapped out for his dummy, which had been dipped in a small amount of water and then frozen solid with a simple charm. Leolin gnawed on this too, so they knew what was coming, but they had been able to watch Braiden open his presents, laughing and clapping all through it, as they praised him for being such a good boy, for being able to open his presents, even if he did need a little help. They had then encouraged him to use his potty, to very exaggerated pleasure and not so exaggerated pride.

The kids were now outside, playing on the bouncy castle and it was a repeat of his first birthday with the trampoline as Braiden jumped and bounced around and refused to get off for his lunch. Nasta had video recorded Max crawling onto the bouncy castle to drag a defiant Braiden off.

Harry was leaving all of that wrangling to the others as he tried to just keep Leolin safe as he thrashed and screamed, gurgling in the back of his throat in pain as the shock of getting his first tooth registered in his brain.

“Oh, what happened, sweet one?” Alexander asked him worriedly.

“He cut his first tooth today.” Harry said worriedly, his face rather pale and drawn with stress. “He’s been like this for hours now.”

Alexander touched the top of Leolin’s head. “I suppose as a Faerie he can’t have any potions or such?”

Harry shook his head. “No. We’re waiting for either Aneirin or Dain or someone to come through. I refuse to believe that the Faeries, who are so overprotective of their babies, would leave them like this! They have to have some trick or something to calm them down, I just want Leolin to eat something! He’s missed two feeds now, he won’t even take the bottle anymore and he hasn’t stopped crying since just after breakfast. He’s going to make himself sick if this carries on.”
“If there is anything that I can do, sweet one.”

Harry smiled. “There’s not. Go on out to the back, the kids have had their lunches and they’ve been set free on the garden again. Nasta’s doing his nut because of the sun, the kids are all refusing to have their naps and Braiden didn’t even want his lunch, Max had to grapple him from the bouncy castle. I’m not sure who has it the worst at the moment, but they have seven babies outside, at least I only have the one.”

“Let me know as soon as the Faeries arrive, if they need anything, I can get it.” Alexander promised and Harry smiled and nodded.

Leolin wailed again and Harry curled his son’s body in tight to his own. He didn’t even try shushing him, it didn’t work, instead he hummed lightly and soothingly. Leolin paid no mind to him and carried on screaming.

Thankfully only several minutes later Ezrah flooed in. As soon as the young Fae realised what was going on, he fell to his knees by Harry’s feet, his hands hovering over Leolin’s little body, his face a picture of abject misery.

“What has happened?” Ezrah asked, his voice breaking in upset.

Lathen flooed through and he blinked at the immediate absence of his lover, before spotting him, then Leolin’s screams filtered through and he strode to stand behind Ezrah and he peered at Leolin critically, taking in the bright red cheeks, the fisted hands and the tears.

In quick succession Harry was surrounded by Faeries all asking what had happened. One, who seemed to be a guard, demanded what he’d done to Leolin and how dare he harm a Faerie babe.

“He’s teething you fool.” Eitri snarled at the guard, who seemed to have come with him. Harry remembered Dain saying that Eitri never went anywhere without a guard, but that guard was usually Warren, who was also there. Harry didn’t understand why there was someone there who hadn’t been invited.

“Do you have any chamomilla?” Dain asked him seriously.

“I don’t even know what that is!” Harry replied, stressed and now angry that he’d been accused by someone who was uninvited of purposefully hurting Leolin.
“I’ll go and fetch some.” Kailen said calmly.

Harry was aware that he had several sets of eyes on him and he hummed self-consciously, as Leolin’s cries picked up a more desperate note when he stopped. Harry reasoned that it was because Leolin was crying so hard that he couldn’t see through his tears, so the only way that he knew that Harry was still there, and not someone else, was to hear him.

“It’ll be alright.” Ezrah soothed him. “We use chamomilla to soothe teething babes. It works wonders.”

“What would you know of such things, monster?”

Harry’s hand clenched. He passed Leolin over to Ezrah and the guard gasped as if Harry had thrown his son into a wall or out of the window.

“Take Leolin next door for me, Ezrah.” He said gently. “If you could hum to him, he’ll never know that it’s not me over the noise that he’s making.”

Ezrah did as told, going to the larger family room and Harry rounded on the guard.

“Who is he?!” He demanded. “Why have you brought him to my son’s birthday?!”

“We did not want to.” Dain insisted. “We were outvoted at the Court. It was Alston’s doing, this is his personal piece of scum.” He paused for a moment and then cleared his throat. “I apologise, I meant to say that he is a guard, he is Alston’s guard.”

“I will be telling him exactly how you handed a mere babe over to that vile beast too!” The guard insisted, as if he’d won some great battle.

“How dare you say as such about Ezrah, I will hack your…” Lathen started, his hand obviously grappling for a sword that he wasn’t wearing.
“Lathen.” Harry cut in sternly. “I will deal with this. Ezrah is your lover, but this is my home.” He said.

The guard snorted at him as Harry was at least a foot and a half shorter than he was. He was obviously seeing Harry as he would a soft, sweet Fae. He didn’t understand that Harry was a submissive Dracken and that not only was he different from a Fae, but he was very dangerous and aggressive, especially with Leolin’s hysterical cries coming from the room next door.

“You will get the fuck out of my house.” Harry said clearly and calmly. “I will do with my own child as I see fit and I love Ezrah as a dear friend and I will not have anyone saying anything against him in front of me! Get out.”

“I am here on the order of the Court, as such…”

“I don’t give a fuck who has ordered you to be here, if I see you again I’m going to tear your face off with my teeth!”

The guard scoffed. “That babe shouldn’t be anywhere near such barbaric, savage beasts. The only thing that you and your lovers are fit for is execution. As soon as I tell Alston, we will have that poor, suffering babe from you…”

Harry’s immediate rage was too much for him to handle and he did not even think of his pregnancy as he threw his full weight behind a punch at the man’s face. It connected with a bone jarring pain all down Harry’s arm, but the Faerie went flying, as if Harry had smacked him in the head with a baseball bat. He had seen Harry as such a lack of a threat that he hadn’t even been expecting an attack and he had not been on his guard or even tensed up as Harry approached him. That was his third biggest mistake, after threatening to take his already upset Faerie son, and then threatening his beloved mates with execution. Harry did not leave it there, however, with the one punch, no. He was too angry, his Dracken was furious, so he tackled the stumbling Faerie, throwing more punches at his head and face. There was shouting, someone tried to gently pull him off of the Faerie, but as soon as Harry had his feet he furiously pulled away from the person, who turned out to be Warren, and he kicked at the guard instead, throwing his full force behind the kicks aimed at ribs and limbs before he fell back on him and started punching again.

“Harry, stop!” Nasta’s voice, filled with his top dominancy order, stopped Harry dead.

He was breathing heavily, but he felt a savage vindication to see the Faerie’s pulped face.
“Get him out of my home!” He snarled at his top dominant, who realised that for Harry to act in such a manner then it was a serious matter and it needed to be dealt with. Nasta just nodded his head and dragged the Faerie bodily from their home via the front door. Draco followed behind him, removing the bloodstains.

“I apologise that you had to witness that.” He said, the bite of a growl still in his voice as his Dracken fought to take control, his chest still rising and falling rapidly as he breathed deeply.

Eitri laughed, a joyous, real laugh and he shook his head. “Do not apologise for such, that was one of the greatest things that I have yet witnessed. You did well.”

Harry smiled a little shyly as he slipped back away from his rage and his Dracken settled back with the Faerie removed from his house.

“I don’t normally act like that.” He insisted. “He was just another level of shit bag and he had to go!”

“As I said, we did not want him to come, but it was Alston’s doing.”

“Maybe I should pay him a visit too.” Harry growled. “How did he manage to even get a majority vote?”

“Sindri has not been well.” Dain said worriedly. “He has had to abstain from court business and it is a worrying time for us all. Without Sindri to cast a vote, all votes were tied and it was the decision of the acting Head of the court, Donella.”

“The spiteful bitch?” Harry asked and Eitri laughed.

“The very same.”

“If…if Sindri has to permanently abstain from the court.” Harry started hesitantly. “Will Donella take over from him?”
“No, that will go to a public vote.” Dain told him. “The citizens of the Faerie city will vote in the next Head of the Court and with all new regimes, it will be a bloody business.”

“Bloody?” Harry questioned, rather alarmed.

“The new Head will remove anyone they dislike or disagree with from power in order to bring in their own friends or family members.” Eitri told him. “Sindri has been the most stable Head of the Court that we have ever had. He does things fairly and justly, but a new Head could mean that we, the current members of the court are exiled at best, but more likely to be executed on grounds of treason.”

“You would have nothing to worry about.” Warren told Eitri.

The golden headed Fae glared at Warren. “If you are about to suggest that being taken from my hard earned position of power and married off like some trophy is better than execution, just because I am a Fae…”

“Is that what would happen?” Harry demanded. “Is it only through Sindri that Faes are allowed on the Court?”

Dain nodded. “He faced so much harassment and resistance at the idea that a civil war almost broke out, but Sindri got his way and Faes were allowed to sit on the Court for the first time. It was ground breaking for equality between the Faeries. If a new Head comes in then they could rescind that law, and all others that Sindri has put into place to protect all Faeries.”

“I will not lose my freedom.” Eitri said firmly. “I will not go back to being sold off for gold as if I am a comb or a book! I am a person and as I live, we will not go backwards in our society.”

“If the law is repealed…”

“Then I will rebel.” Eitri said seriously. “I will not stand idly by and meekly accept any changes made that takes us backwards. I will fight and I will cause my own civil war.”

“You’d be executed.” Warren said, a strange, pained look on his face.
“Then so be it. I will become a martyr for my cause.” Eitri said firmly. “It is not the same for you, being born a treasured Valkyrie.” Eitri snapped, rounding on Warren. “Have you any idea the hardships that I and all other Faes face? The disgrace and humiliation that we are put through? The things that are required of us by law?! That is under Sindri’s leadership too! I am trying to move us forward, to take the laws further, to remove them from our customs and traditions, not take us back to the good old days where a Fae could be stripped for inspection prior to bonding! Where a Fae could not speak out in public nor disagree with their bonded. Or perhaps you want to go back to those times, where this conversation wouldn’t be happening because I would not be able to argue or disagree with any Valkyrie, where I would be cloistered away in the home of my highest bidder and expected to do all asked of me. Is that what you want?”

“No!” Warren growled fiercely. “I am stood beside you in all things, Eitri! I am helping you to repeal all of the laws oppressing Faes. I have worked tirelessly beside you for the same goal! I have always hated the way that Faes were treated, even when I was a mere babe of twenty, under the Headship of Caracellus. I saw my Mother being treated like a slave, my young, just budded Fae cousins sold off to Valkyries near the end of their lives. My Father and brother acted as if nothing was even wrong with it, but it never settled right with me, Eitri. Never! I would not ever want to go back to those times, I am relieved that we have come so far, but I know that we need to go even further. I do not want a change of Court, I do not want to go back to how things were.”

Eitri smiled then. “Good. I am pleased that if needed I can trust you at my back, because I mean it, Warren. With the gods and the deities witnessing my words, I will never allow myself to be used in such a way, even if I have to die a martyr for my beliefs.”

Harry was stunned silent at what he’d heard, he couldn’t think of a single thing to say and it seemed that he wasn’t the only one, so he was thankful when Nasta came back into the room and hugged him tight, pulling Harry’s face to the crook of his neck and Harry inhaled those wonderful, calming pheromones deeply and happily.

“I assume he was saying something along the lines of us being unfit parents and removing Leolin from our care?” Nasta asked him.

Harry nodded. “He was saying shit about Ezrah too and I won’t have it.”

“I gave him an extra kick as I dropped him off at the gates to the Faerie City.” Nasta told him.

“I love you so much.” Harry declared and Nasta smiled at him and bent to kiss him.

“Kailen has given the chamomilla to Leolin, he fell straight off to sleep.” Nasta told him. “Blaise put him up in his cot, so how about you come outside and enjoy our son’s birthday with us?”

Harry nodded happily and he was led outside and to the bouncy castle and slide. The Faeries looked even more astonished at the inflatable monstrosities than Draco had been when the people that they’d hired them from had put them up yesterday evening.

“Have any of the kids been down the slide yet?” He asked.

“Not yet, Max hasn’t given them a chance.” Sanex quipped, his beautiful girlfriend Crista hovering near him.

It was no wonder that she was so timid and unsure of herself with so many submissive Drackens clutching their children and snarling at her like she was a wild beast. Harry wondered why he’d even invited them, much less why they’d even come, especially after his own birthday. It was cruel to the children to bring them to a children’s party with cakes and treats and a massive, inflatable slide and bouncy castle, not to mention the ball pit that Max had enlarged and filled with a million and a half plastic balls, and not let them play and run around…there was no other way to describe it, it was just downright cruel and Harry shook his head sadly. He would never treat his children in such a way.

Calix was in the giant ball pit by himself, all but swimming as he shrieked and kicked about, rolling onto his belly and then over to his back, kicking and thrashing before rolling back to his belly and Harry laughed to see him.

It was swelteringly hot and Harry was only in shorts and a tee-shirt, but still he was too hot. He went to the drinks table and grabbed the jug of iced juice. Nasta had gotten him earlier with a bottle of sun cream and the babies were plastered in the stuff, Farren was even rocking a hat and sunglasses, mostly because he was the only baby sat still and he hadn’t cared enough to take them off. He looked adorable.

Max was indeed throwing people down the inflatable slide, as he’d promised that he would, his latest victim was his own Dad. Richard slid down the slide, laughing and shouting, threatening to kill Max when he caught him. Max’s reply was that Richard was too old to catch him.

“I don’t even understand what I am seeing.” Ezrah said as he watched in a sort of horrified, awed curiosity.

Harry smiled at him. “Come on, Ezrah, let’s go have some fun.” Harry insisted and he took the Fae’s hand and ran over to the slide.

Ezrah was very hesitant, but Harry was insistent and he pulled Ezrah up the inflatable stairs.
“This is very high, Harry, are you sure that it’s safe?” Ezrah asked, his young face pale and worried.

“Come on, Harry!” Max shouted at him. “You’re holding up the line.”

“Just because you want to hog it!” Harry shouted back. “Wait your turn!”

“Well get your cute behind down here already!”

Harry laughed. “Together then?” He offered.

Ezrah nodded and Harry sat down, his legs dangling down the slide.

“Come on, it’s fun, I promise.”

Ezrah nodded again, seemingly beyond words at this point, as he slowly sat next to Harry and they held hands. Ezrah clutched at Harry’s hand as if he were the only thing anchoring him to the ground and Harry smiled reassuringly at him.

They pushed forward and Harry shrieked in laughter as he slid down the thirty foot slide with Ezrah, who just shrieked in what seemed to be utter terror. At least until they reached the bottom safely and Ezrah seemed to process what had just happened. He was shaking and pale still, but he started laughing, light and airily, and Lathen, who had looked about as terrified as Ezrah had, grinned to hear him.

Harry hefted Ezrah off of the end of the slide and they shoved past Max to go up again.

“Oi! It was my turn!” Max told them angrily.

Harry stuck his tongue out at him and blew a raspberry.
“Oh, that is it you are so getting it when I get my hands on you!”

“If you can get your hands on me!” Harry echoed Max’s words to Richard, which made Richard himself laugh.

“You tell him, Harry!” Richard cheered.

Harry and Ezrah managed to slide twice more before Max managed to grab Harry and pull him off of the slide and into a deep kiss. Max put him on the floor and then charged up the stairs while Harry was still dazed and stupid.

“That was cheating!” Harry called out, but he laughed anyway and went to grab a drink and one of his own biscuits.

He mingled a bit, kissed each of his mates, checked in on his babies and then he was determined to win back the slide from Max. He pulled Ezrah and a befuddled Eitri with him and he snuck up on Max, a simple charm had his foot stuck to the floor and as Harry darted past him with the two Fae, Max went to grab him, but found his feet stuck to the floor and he fell over, giving Harry a chance to get up the slide before Max found his feet again.

“I’m the cheater?” Max yelled out. “What do you call this?”

“Payback, my dear!” Harry answered from the top of the thirty foot slide.

“It is high up here.” Eitri said as he looked around with a smile. “It looks fun. Is it as fun as it looks, Ezrah?”

Ezrah actually looked rather intimidated to be spoken to by the other Fae, a member of the court no less, but Harry supposed that that was natural when you were much more used to being hit and spat on by other Faeries.

“It was terrifying the first time.” Ezrah said seriously. “But it is a lot of fun. I have never experienced anything like it ever before.”
“Will you just sit down and slide!” Max yelled. “Stop holding a conversation at the top!”

Harry chuckled. “Come on, let’s see how many times we can push in front of him this time.”

Eitri enjoyed the slide too and he was very quick to get up and dart to the stairs, cutting Max off while Harry and Ezrah laughed and darted past too.

“I swear to Merlin you three are the worst hoggers ever!”

“Why is he calling us pigs?” Eitri asked.

“He’s not. Someone who hogs something is someone who excessively controls something and won’t let anyone else have it. If I took all of the blankets in the bed, then I’d be hogging the blankets. We won’t let anyone on the slide, so we’re hogging it.”

“Oh, I believe that I understand.” Eitri smiled.

They went down again, but Max was waiting and he managed to grab Eitri and the poor golden Fae ended up backwards in the empty ball pit. He came up laughing but Max had already gotten up the slide.

“Are you okay, Eitri?” Harry asked with a grin.

“I have not been manhandled in such a way since I was a very young boy. About the age that you are now.” He said. “I was not expecting as such, otherwise I would have been ready for it.”

Harry offered his hand and pulled Eitri out of the mass of plastic balls and the three of them giggled together and they started planning their next assault on the slide.

Harry greeted more guests, directed them to Braiden if they wanted to see him or give him a gift and he, Eitri and Ezrah took a drink and nibble some snacks as they held what was reminiscent to a full on war meeting.

Calix came hurrying over to them and he tugged on Harry’s shorts and pointed at the slide and Harry grinned as he realised that they now had the most perfect excuse.
“Do you want to slide with us, Calix?” He asked.

Calix nodded. “Yes, Mummy.”

“Come on then, baby. Eitri, Ezrah, let’s go and get that slide back.”

“He is so young, will he be alright on that slide?” Ezrah asked worriedly.

“It’s meant for kids, Ezrah, he’ll be just fine. In fact, he’ll love it.” Harry grinned.

He got Calix’s hand and led the two Faes back over to the slide.

“Max, Calix wants a go on the slide, get down.” Harry ordered.

Max whined and complained, but he did as asked and Harry and the Faeries got control back of the slide as Harry got one of Calix’s hands and Eitri got the other as they led him up the stairs.

“Are you ready, Calix?” Harry asked as he settled his fearless boy between his legs at the top.

As Calix was up here everyone’s attention was upon them, as he was the first child who had shown an interest in it. Not that they cared, Harry was used to being recorded now and he didn’t think the Faeries even knew what the camcorder was or what it was for, much less what it did.

“Yeah!” Calix exclaimed, trying to push forward before Harry was ready.

“Hold on! Hold on!” Harry laughed, tugging him backwards and back between his legs. “You little daredevil. On three.”

The four of them slid together and Calix screamed happily. They reached the bottom and Calix clapped his hands excitedly and he recovered before all of them and he was gone, clambering back up the stairs.
He barely waited to sit down before he threw himself over the top. He slid down, screaming all the way and he landed between Harry and Ezrah, none of them had even had time to get up from the tangle of limbs they’d found themselves in before Calix was back down with them and Harry was so proud of his fearless boy, who got up and charged the stairs to get up again.

“I think Calix is hogging the slide now.” Eitri said with a laugh.

“Yeah, we’ve lost this one now.” Harry laughed as he slid off the bottom of the slide to the floor and went to check on his other babies.

“It’s good to see you having fun.” Nasta told him and Harry smiled.

“We’ve had a trying few months, but I feel better.” Harry said with a wide grin. “My muscles are almost healed now, and they’ve been healing well. My limp has gone, Blaise’s little slips are becoming less and less as we approach autumn and everything’s going well. Braiden is now two, Leolin’s cut his first tooth and Calix has a death wish, what could be better?” He giggled.

Nasta smiled at him softly and kissed him gently.

“Go and get a drink, your lovely lips are dry.” Nasta told him and Harry laughed, swatted Nasta’s bum and did as asked, going to get more juice.

He played with Regan for several minutes, hefted Tegan into the ball pit when she pointed to it and then found his birthday boy bouncing his heart out on the bouncy castle with several other children. He didn’t mind sharing at all, as long as no one tried to make him stop.

Harry didn’t try to make him stop, he joined him and they bounced together and Braiden was so happy with Harry bouncing with him that he hugged Harry around the knees and grinned up at him with all of his tiny little teeth on display.

Harry held Braiden and threw them both backwards, landing on his bum and bouncing back up to his feet and Braiden laughed.

“Again, Mummy! Do that again!”

Harry laughed and did as he’d been told, making sure that no little kids were behind him first. He was able to pull Braiden from the bouncy castle and get a drink for him and Braiden was happy to drink and eat a little cake, because he’d needed them. Though seeing him running around with a little plastic cup in his hands was adorable.

Harry sighed and he rested for a small while, migrating over to Myron and wrapping one arm around his back to lean on him. Myron immediately accommodated him and took some of Harry’s weight onto himself.

“Are you doing okay?” He asked softly.

Harry nodded and grinned up at him happily. “I’m having more fun now than I did at my own birthday. I think next year I’m having a bouncy castle and a slide for my twentieth.”

Myron laughed at him and bent down to press a kiss to his forehead. He took that time to whisper into his ear.

“How is the baby?”

“How is the baby?”

“Wonderful.” Harry answered. “I’m not in any pain, nothing in my lower back or stomach hurts, and I’m having fun and releasing stress. They would not have allowed me to do any of this if they knew. I’m already going to have a fight on my hands later when I tell them and they realise that I knew and that I did all of this today while I knew.”

He sighed heavily. He was not looking forward to that part of dropping the baby news, but he was going to back his own corner. He was doing nothing wrong and jumping around or going down an inflatable slide was not going to do him, or the baby, any harm.

“Seeing you so happy and carefree after all that has happened to you is a great weight off of my shoulders.” Myron told him seriously. “You have been put through so much, by your mates as well as others, to see you smiling and having fun is a relief.”

“I agree.” Alexander told him, coming to stand by them and giving Harry a gentle touch. “Though I heard about your fight, are you alright?”

“I agree.” Alexander told him, coming to stand by them and giving Harry a gentle touch. “Though I heard about your fight, are you alright?”

“Me and baby are completely fine.” Harry insisted. “That Faerie deserved it.”

“What is this about now?” Myron asked.
“Sindri is sick, so the Court is now even, eight Faeries, four on our side, four against us and one of the ones against us gets to decide split votes. She forced an unknown guard to come here today and I was so not having any of that shit.”

“Language!” Myron chastised him. “There are young children around.”

Harry rolled his eyes, but nodded dutifully.

“Anyway, as you know I was in the smaller room with Leolin and when the Faeries flooed in he started by asking how I had harmed Leolin and why he was crying. He obviously has no children of his own and knows absolutely nothing about babies otherwise he would have recognised the signs of teething. So that really pissed me off. Then he started going on about how me and the guys were Dragon scum only fit for execution and that got my Dracon up, then he said he was going to get Leolin from us and I lost it.” He said simply. “I regret nothing.”

Myron snorted and Alexander grinned. “Of course you don’t.” The former said in a long suffering tone of voice.

Draco came out with a screaming Leolin and Harry left the comfort of Myron and hurried to them, taking his miserable son and cradling him. Draco handed him a frozen cloth and Harry used it to press and massage the gums around the erupting tooth and it actually calmed Leolin down, to the point where he was whining and grizzling more than outright screaming.

“Come on, my love.” Harry said gently, going to a sun lounger and reclining on it to cast them both in the shade of the umbrella, holding Leolin to his chest. “You’re alright.”

“Ma.” Leolin snuffled.

“I’m here.” Harry said soothingly, his finger gently rubbing Leolin’s gums and carefully circling the emerging tooth. As Leolin tried to gum on his finger, Harry assumed that it felt really good to his tiny Faerie son.

Nasta came jogging over from the house with a bottle in hand and Harry understood his reasoning. Leolin had missed enough feeds today as it was, it would be best to feed him now, while he was relatively pain free, lest that pain build again and stopped him from feeding again.
“Here you go, baby. Daddy Nasta has some nice milk for you, here, go over to Daddy Nasta.” Harry encouraged.

“Da.” Leolin sniffled as he was handed over and he didn’t pitch a fit at losing contact with Harry. Instead a tiny hand reached up to touch Nasta’s rough, stubbly chin and he opened his mouth for the bottle teat. He was very hungry.

Again he gnawed on the teat aggressively, but Harry left the frozen cloth with Nasta and he forced himself to walk away. It was difficult, especially as he knew that Leolin was upset and in pain, but it was getting easier the more that he did it. His son needed to spend some time with his Fathers, and they needed to spend time with him. Instead he forced a smile and went back to his birthday boy, who was, of course, back on the bouncy castle and showed no hint of tiredness as he jumped and rolled around.

“I’m so proud of you.” Max’s voice breathed in his ear. “Come and slide with me.”

Harry smiled and he took Max’s hand and ran with his biggest mate to the slide, pitching Sanex off of the stairs with a laugh and reaching the top.

Emulating how Harry had held Calix, Harry sat between Max’s legs with his mate’s arms holding him around the chest and Max shoved them over the end, his heavy bulk giving them some serious speed. Harry laughed and shouted out happily, holding on to Max’s knees.

They reached the bottom in a tangle, as they’d shifted sideways during their descent, and Max snogged him there and then. Harry wrapped his arms around Max’s neck and held on.

“Stop ruining the slide for all of us!” Caesar called out. “Nora want’s to have a go, but she’s not going down with you two humping at the bottom!”

Harry broke away from Max to laugh, he gave a grin to Caesar who was holding Nora back from the stairs, even though she seemed desperate to get up them.

Max helped Harry move from the bottom of the slide and Caesar released Nora, who charged up the steps, much like Calix had. Then they were cousins, sort of... they shared a common Grandmother in Ashleigh, but they had different Grandfathers.

Though speaking of Calix, he came rushing back over, dragging poor Regan with him, an angry Tegan following, chattering angrily like a hive of bees, presumably at having her twin taken from her by Calix. Blaise intercepted her and gave the two boys a chance to get away and to play together. Regan was already too passive and quiet as it was.
“Daddy, no!” Tegan demanded.

“Leave your brothers be.” Blaise told her, taking her over to the snack table and giving her a cucumber stick to distract her.

Calix dragged Regan to the stairs and pulled his brother up as Nora went down, Caesar catching her to appease Amelle, who looked a little worried at the height of the slide, but at least she was giving Nora a chance to play, unlike some others at the party with their screaming, red faced children. It was truly cruel and Harry wanted to tell them all to just leave, before they spoiled Braiden’s birthday, they obviously hadn’t wanted to come in the first place.

Harry watched with pride as Calix and Regan slid down together, holding hands. They giggled at the bottom and then they went back up, catching up to Nora at the top. Then the three of them slid down holding hands and Harry cooed happily to the three of them.

At about three in the afternoon, the party started wrapping up. Over half of the kids, those that had been allowed to play that was, were now sound asleep, having tuckered themselves out. Only Braiden and Farren were still awake out of Harry’s kids, Farren was now wandering around now that it was quieter and Braiden was still on the bouncy castle. He had gone down the slide a few times, after Calix had pulled him over to it excitedly, wanting to share his enjoyment with his brothers and sister, but the bouncy castle was his favourite.

Harry was getting tired too and after Leolin’s meltdown that morning, just after Braiden had finished opening his presents, he was ready for bed himself, but he still had to have the fight with his mates, who were gearing up for another heat period in just three weeks, not knowing that Harry was already six weeks pregnant. They had looked for signs of his pregnancy and they’d found none, so in their minds he wasn’t pregnant yet and he’d have a heat period in three weeks. They’d think as such until Harry dropped the baby bomb later that day, as soon as their guests were gone.

It did not take long for them to be alone in their house again. The most difficult had been to get Braiden in off of the bouncy castle, but in the end, a bit of tone deaf singing on Harry’s part and some rocking had their exhausted boy drifting off and he went down with his brothers and sisters for a nap.

Max brought in a tray of tea and some of Harry’s surviving biscuits and they all just sat in silence for several minutes, enjoying the quiet house and the peace for a while. It wouldn’t last for very long, about as long as it took for the kids to wake up off of their naps.

“So…that was a great day.” Max said with a smile.

“It was.” Harry agreed with a grin. “I can’t remember the last time we had so much fun! Oh wait, I can! When we went to Guadeloupe together. I had so much fun back then too, though there was a lot more sex.”
“We can fix that if you want.” Max told him with a saucy wink.

Harry laughed and sat back with his tea, this was actually the perfect lead up to his baby news.

“I loved that holiday. It reminded me a lot of today. Only instead of inflatable slides we were scuba diving and building sand castles.”

“We’ll go on holiday again soon.” Nasta told him, and that really hadn’t been what he’d been angling for, but he’d take it too.

He laughed as he realised that he was going to have to spell it out, there was no way that he could hint at them and have them guess, they firmly believed now that he wasn’t pregnant as he’d showed no signs, so they weren’t going to get it until he straight up told them.

“It’ll have to wait until after the baby is born.” He said before taking another calm sip of tea.

“Of course.” Draco said. “We’ll wait for the next heat period and see if you fall pregnant from that, and then when the baby, or babies, are born, we can see about another holiday.”

Harry snorted. He had himself some very dense mates, but he loved them and there really was no way for them to know. He snorted again, half laughing.

“What’s so funny? I thought that you wanted another holiday?” Max asked him.

“Oh I do. I just…I’m trying to tell you all that I’m six weeks pregnant and you just aren’t getting it.” He laughed.

That stopped the four of them short.

“Are you sure?” Blaise asked.

“Are you actually asking me if I’m sure that I’m six weeks pregnant?” Harry chuckled. “Of course I’m sure. Georgio confirmed it.”
“How long have you known?” Nasta asked him.

“Over a month.” Harry said.

“Why didn’t you tell us?” Draco asked seriously.

“Because I knew that you’d all try to smother me while I was recovering and that wasn’t what I wanted or needed.” He said just as seriously. “I wanted to enjoy my own birthday, I wanted to have fun today and that’s exactly what I did.”

“That’s why you’re telling us now.” Nasta said. “Because Braiden’s birthday is all but over.”

Harry nodded. “Yes. I’ve had my fun, it was time now to tell you. I don’t know how many babies I’m having, but I’m not actually showing yet. So I still have my fingers crossed for just the one.”

“You’re not showing? Can I see?” Max asked excitedly.

“I just said, there’s nothing to see!” Harry said, but he was taking Max’s excitement and the lack of anger all around, as a very good thing, so he was already leaning back and lifting his tee-shirt, showing off the flat, but scarred belly.

Max got on his knees and he laid his lips to Harry’s skin, touching and kissing.

“I can’t believe we have a little baby in here.” He said. “Hello baby, I’m your Daddy Max, one of four Daddies you’ll have once you’re born.”

That actually brought tears to Harry’s eyes and he burst out crying, reaching out for Max and holding onto him tightly. Max made a surprised noise, but held him back tightly, murmuring to him and soothing him as Harry cried and held on tight.

“I didn’t mean to make you cry, love.” Max insisted. “What’s wrong?”
Harry had just accepted it as a fact that he’d have a fight on his hands once he told his mates about the baby and he hadn’t realised just how much he’d been dreading, and fearing, it. After all, the last proper argument that they’d had he’d ended up with his intestines on the floor, the rest of his insides being held in by Xerxes’ large hand as their house was destroyed around him and his tiny children were injured and put in danger.

He had been fearing telling his mates and it was only now, in this moment, that he actually even realised it. He clutched at Max desperately, tightly, almost strangling him in his desperate need to touch his mates as he cried uncontrollably.

“Hey, hey. It’s alright.” He heard Max say as large hands rubbed his back to help calm him down. “We’re not angry, we understand.”

“We do.” Nasta said and Harry actually heard a knee click as Nasta eased down next to them on the floor. It made him giggle wetly. “Of course, hearing me in pain would cheer you up.” He teased.

“You’re getting old now, Nas.” Blaise said with a chuckle.

Harry brushed his eyes clear and he looked around at his four mates with a smile.

“I was so worried that…that…”

“That we were going to shout and scream at you?” Nasta finished and Harry just nodded.

“I was really scared and I didn’t know that I was.”

“Because the last time we argued you almost died.” Blaise finished and Harry nodded again.

“Oh, Harry.” Nasta sighed, playing with his hair. “We’ve been making so much progress with our therapy, of course we weren’t going to start screaming, not without hearing your reasons first.”

“I just knew that…that you’d force me to sit down and stay still when there’s no need this early on in the pregnancy.” He sniffed. “I wanted to have some fun and today, on the slide and the bouncy castle, it was the most fun I’ve had in a while outside of sex.”
“Well if you feel like that then we’ve obviously lost the fun in our mateship somewhere along the way.” Max told him. “We’ll have to work on that and I think from today onwards, we’ll strive to make you laugh as you did today, every day. Seeing you on that slide, screeching and screaming with laughter, you looked beautiful and so happy. We need to make you laugh like that every day.”

Two fresh tears fell down his cheeks and Harry brushed them away with a smile. “Even though I’m pregnant?”

“Especially because you’re pregnant, because you need some relief and some fun.” Max told him seriously, tensing his arms and rocking Harry on his lap. It made Harry chuckle. He wiped his face again before snuggling in tight to all of his lovers.

“I love you all. I hope you always know that.”

“Do you feel safe?” Nasta asked him.

“Yes.” Harry replied after only the smallest of pauses. “I feel safe with all of you now, I feel settled and much happier. Just, try to keep the smothering to a minimum, please. I don’t like it and it’s unneeded.”

“Gotcha.” Max said with a grin. “Now come on, we need to get you and baby some tea. If you drink enough, we’ll get a nice sweet baby.”

Harry giggled, wiping his face clean on his tee-shirt. “I don’t think it works like that.” He said.

“Yes, so far it’s only my baby who is at all sweet.” Blaise said proudly. “So it stands to reason that only if this baby is mine will it be sweet.”

“I have yet to have a child, how do you know that I won’t have a sweet…?” Draco started but Max cut him off with a loud laugh.

“Your baby will come out sneering.” Blaise told Draco seriously.

Draco huffed and rolled his eyes, he stood up, but bent back down to kiss him before going into the kitchen to get some more tea for the five of them.

Harry refused to let Max go. Instead he clung on and Max chuckled at him, lifting him up and sitting back on the settee with Harry snuggled on his lap. Blaise came to rest against them and Max threw an arm around him and Harry laced their fingers together. He sighed happily and he settled. Today had been amazing, he’d had so much fun and he’d been proven wrong. He had been fretting for nothing.

He did feel bad that he’d assumed that his mates would overreact to his baby news, but then they had shown him that they would in the past. He was so happy to be wrong for once and he was glad that their therapy was going so well that they didn’t immediately act with anger when finding out something like this when he’d deliberately kept it from them.

Leolin interrupted them when he started crying and Harry forced himself to remain sitting as Nasta went to get him. Kailen had given them little sachets of powder that Nasta had told him was ground chamomile. It was a herbal remedy for teething babies that the Faeries used in place of medicines, that Faeries couldn’t actually take while so young. It was working a treat with Leolin, who was now back to feeding and was happy as long as he had his gums massaged by a frozen cloth every half an hour or so, but his freezable gel teethers were now his favourite thing and as long as he had one, or three, of them near him for him to chew and gnaw on, he was contented and his first tooth coming through didn’t bother him as much.

Nasta came back with Leolin already feeding from a bottle, they could see their tiny son biting hard on the teat and pulling on it as he fed. Nasta had one of the gel teethers in his hand with a frozen cloth. As soon as Leolin was done feeding, he would have his gums massaged and then he’d be left with his teethers.

Harry let out a sigh, he was a lot more settled now that they knew exactly how to help Leolin and how to look after him as he started teething. His very first tooth. Harry couldn’t have been happier or prouder. Leolin was coming on so well and he was developing in ways that they couldn’t see. Harry was convinced that Leolin was understanding more and more as he aged, even if he wasn’t saying anything more than his usual ‘Ma’ and ‘Da’, he was doing more, he was getting more mobile as he reached out for more things, testing and trying them. He would pull on grass to rip it up, he turned objects over in his hands, he would stare so intently at things that you could almost see his mind working out how they worked or what they were for. Now he was physically developing once more, he had grown a little longer, he’d put on more weight and now he had his very first tooth. Nasta had been right after all, Leolin had been sleeping so much over the last few weeks because his body had been gearing up for this…a growth spurt and a tooth. Harry was so proud of his tiny little son and he couldn’t help but hold his arms out for him when Nasta had finished feeding him.

Nasta smiled at him and kissed him as he transferred Leolin over to his arms.

“Ma.” Leolin declared looking up at him.

“It’s taking him less and less time to recognise who we are.” Max said happily. “It used to take him a minute before he’d realise who was holding him. He does it almost immediately now.”

Harry nodded, so happy and so very proud. “I know. He is developing and learning and I love him so much for it. I can’t believe he cut a tooth on his big brother’s birthday!” He chuckled.

“He has terrible timing.” Max agreed with a grin.

“I don’t believe that he has any control over it.” Draco pointed out.

“Well, he could at least try.” Max teased and Harry chuckled, cuddling his baby, even as he used his finger to massage Leolin’s gums and the one inflamed area surrounding the emerging tooth with the frozen cloth.

“Maybe this means that we can try him on something other than milk.” He said hesitantly, unsure if getting a tooth was a sign that Faerie babies were ready to be weaned…after all, they had no idea when the second tooth would come through.

“I’ll buy some natural yoghurt and blitz up some strawberries and see if he can handle having anything in his mouth. If he pushes it back out, then he’s probably not ready.” Max said. “But there’s no reason why we can’t try every week or so. Just because he’s not ready one week, doesn’t mean that he won’t be ready the next, but we can’t push him.”

“I remember.” Blaise said, perking up. “I remember that with the other kids. If they reject it immediately, we don’t push them.”

“That’s right.” Max said proudly. “If they look unsure, we try them again, but if they immediately look uncomfortable or upset or push the food out of their mouths, we don’t push them.”

Blaise smiled happily and he sunk back into Max’s body and Max kissed him gently. Harry finished massaging Leolin’s gums and gave him one of the teethers.

He sat back against Max and cradled Leolin on his lap, who was rolling the teether in his hands, who would then lift it to his mouth and chomp on it several times and then he’d bring it back down and turn it back over in his hands.

Harry watched him for several minutes, sipping on his tea. When the teether started going soft, losing its coolness, Harry asked Draco if he could please get another one from the freezer, putting the thawing teether back into the freezer.

The kids started waking back up again and the house once again became loud and active. Calix tripped over a stray truck, Braiden wanted to go back on the bouncy castle, so Max pulled out the dreaded trampoline for him to bounce on instead and Regan tried to climb up the sideboard, repeatedly, and when they kept stopping him from doing that, he tried to climb the bookcase, then he tried to climb over the back of the settee.

“Regan, you’re going to hurt yourself you little monkey.” Draco chastised as he plucked Regan off of the settee and placed him back on his feet. Regan laughed as if it were a huge game…perhaps to him it was.

“I think going down that huge slide has given him some much needed confidence.” Harry said happily as he watched Regan take off again, back towards the bookcase.

“No, you little monster.” Max said as he intercepted him, hefted him up and then threw Regan high into the air. Their little boy yelled out in happiness and giggled as Max caught him.

“Agen! Agen, Daddy!”

“Again?” Max cooed. “Up you go then!”

Max threw Regan several times, to much screeches and giggles, but it gained the attention of the other kids, who all wanted to be thrown in the air too.

Harry laughed at his biggest mate as he tried to throw and catch one baby at a time while four others clamoured for his attention at his legs.

“Will someone help me before I’m swarmed!” He laughed.

“Sorry, I’m six weeks pregnant.” Harry said immediately and Blaise laughed, cottoning on.

“I’m still recovering from a serious head injury.” Blaise insisted.

“Draco! Nasta! Help me.” Max pleaded with a laugh as Braiden grabbed his tee shirt and pulled.

Nasta snorted, but he took pity on Max and distracted Farren and Braiden with one of Braiden’s birthday presents, a massive, chunky garage for their plastic cars and trucks. All Nasta had to do was pick up a car and put it on the ramp, watching as it rolled down, and that was it for Farren and Braiden as they ran back to the garage to play.
Tegan was distracted by her penguin, which Nasta picked up from where she’d left it, and he put it in the toy box. Tegan shouted out a loud ‘No, Daddy Nassa!’ and stormed over to take the penguin back out of the box, petting it and stroking down its fuzzy fur.

Nasta then distracted Calix and Regan and that left Max free to fall onto the settee.

“Merlin, I’m getting old!” He groaned.

Nasta snorted as he walked past, but Max pulled him back into his lap and kissed him. It made Nasta properly laugh, then he grunted as Max tipped him backwards and snogged him.

Nasta laughed again once his mouth was free and Max joined him.

“I knew you were my favourite for a reason!” Max declared. “Coming to my rescue and then letting me love on you.”

“I’ll let you love on me whenever you want.” Nasta said. “I think I’ve topped entirely too much over the last few weeks, I haven’t bottomed once, we should fix that.”

“Yes.” Max’s voice cracked and he cleared his throat before trying again. “Yes, we should.” He agreed.

Nasta smirked and slid from Max’s lap. “Unfortunately it will have to wait for these little ones to go to bed.”

“You’re getting as big a tease as Harry!” Max complained.

“If you want to go upstairs for an hour, I’ll watch the kids.” Harry said with a smile.

“You’d do that, why?” Max asked.

“Because I’m tired after today and I’m not really in the mood, I just want to sit here and relax a little. So if you want to go upstairs, it’s absolutely fine with me.”

Max leapt up, grabbed Nasta’s hand and pulled him up the stairs to their bedroom. Harry laughed, especially when Blaise hurried after them.

“Do you not want to go too? I truly don’t mind.” Harry said to Draco.

Draco smiled at him and he moved from the other settee to sit beside him, throwing an arm around him.

“Like you, I’m not really in the mood. I had the night shifts last night and I’m tired. After all the excitement today, I just want some rest and relaxation. So I’m much happier staying here and having you to myself for an hour or so. It’s been a while since we’ve had some time just to ourselves, I’m going to make the most of it.”

Harry smiled at Draco and rested against him, smiling as they watched their eight children playing and wriggling around on the floor, the room only noisy because of how many children there were, while their three other mates enjoyed themselves and released some stress and tension upstairs.

Draco’s hand played along his belly and rested on it often, just feeling, even though there was nothing to feel there yet. He did it anyway and it made Harry smile, even as he knew that Max was in his element, taking both Nasta and Blaise upstairs in their bed. He grinned. He couldn’t wait to hear the delicious, gritty details, but for now, he was just very happy to be sat down, relaxing with some honey tea and some more of his remaining birthday sweets, that he happily shared with Draco, who’d gotten out his latest novel to read, even if he did look up to check on the kids with every turn of the page.

After the day that he’d had it was sheer bliss to just rest on Draco and sit still for a while and truly, not even sex beat this calm, happy relaxation for him, which is why he’d chosen it when given the two options. He regretted nothing, he’d chosen perfectly for his current mood, he could always get sex later if he felt like it. He chuckled to himself and turned his head into Draco’s chest, he was perfectly happy right where he was.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Happy birthday to me! I’m now twenty-fucking-seven. Where the hell does the time go? Anyway, here is our chapter full of birthdays to celebrate my own! So much happening in this chapter and a little bit of foreshadowing for future drama. Gotta love a bit of good drama.
I think this was all for now, lovelies! I’m going to enjoy the rest of my birthday now, until our next update,

StarLight Massacre. X
Harry smiled at Draco and rested against him, smiling as they watched their eight children playing and wriggling around on the floor, the room only noisy because of how many children there were, while their three other mates enjoyed themselves and released some stress and tension upstairs.

Draco’s hand played along his belly and rested on it often, just feeling, even though there was nothing to feel there yet. He did it anyway and it made Harry smile, even as he knew that Max was in his element, taking both Nasta and Blaise upstairs in their bed. He grinned. He couldn’t wait to hear the delicious, gritty details, but for now, he was just very happy to be sat down, relaxing with some honey tea and some more of his remaining birthday sweets, that he happily shared with Draco, who’d gotten out his latest novel to read, even if he did look up to check on the kids with every turn of the page.

After the day that he’d had it was sheer bliss to just rest on Draco and sit still for a while and truly, not even sex beat this calm, happy relaxation for him, which is why he’d chosen it when given the two options. He regretted nothing, he’d chosen perfectly for his current mood, he could always get sex later if he felt like it. He chuckled to himself and turned his head into Draco’s chest, he was perfectly happy right where he was.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Nine – Fruit Fun

Harry was back in court again after Braiden’s birthday. Richard had at least given him an extra day afterwards to relax, but ultimately he couldn’t afford to wait any longer and on Monday the sixteenth of August he was dressed up in a suit and a tie, which it was far too warm for, and he was back under Richard’s care.

It was his own fault that he was here really, he had wanted to be fully involved in these court proceedings when he could have let Richard handle it, though due to extenuating circumstances he had had to stop going for a while, mainly because he’d been in the Healing Halls and unable to think straight, but that was all behind him now and he once again wanted to be involved with the court case, a stinking hot August day or not.

Everyone in the family now knew that he was pregnant too and he knew that several people had actually threatened Richard with bodily harm if anything at all happened to him while he was in the courtroom, sitting across from ‘those monsters’ and surrounded by people. Harry felt offended by this, as if they somehow thought that maybe Richard wouldn’t throw down his own life for him if it came to it when Harry knew, and disagreed with it, one hundred percent that Richard would give up his own life to protect him and the baby.
“You’re frowning again.” Richard told him.

“This decaf tastes like soil.” Harry grumbled.

Richard laughed, loud and happily. He wheezed a little and Harry looked at him worriedly, but Richard calmed himself, took several deep breaths, and regained control of himself.

“What happens if you have one of those attacks?” Harry asked worriedly.

Richard smiled gently at him. “I have the potion I need in my pocket, Harry. Stop fretting. I’ve been living with this condition for two decades now, you don’t need to worry about me, it’s you we need to fret and fuss over.”

“Not really. I’m okay and the sentencing will be soon, won’t it?”

“It will, not long now and all of this will be over.” Richard said soothingly, putting his arm around Harry’s back and leading him on the familiar trek to the courthouse.

The massive glass structure came into view as they rounded the last corner and Harry took in an extra deep breath, his hand placed over his fluttering stomach. He was thankful that he still wasn’t getting any morning sickness…not yet.

“How did they all react to the photos?” He asked quietly.

“As you could well imagine, they did not go down very well with the Judge and jury.” Richard told him. “I explained that you couldn’t be there for the viewing of the photos as the photographic reminders of what those people did to you would complicate your therapy. Healer Vasey was more than happy to sign on such a thing when I went to explain the problem to him.”

Harry nodded. “They are terrible photos, but I lived through it. The photos don’t bother me half as much as the memories.”

“I know, sweetheart.” Richard said sadly, holding him tighter. “Just remember that they are getting what’s coming to them for what they did to you. They are not escaping justice and with your therapy, you’ll be better in no time while they rot in a jail cell for the rest of their miserable, cruel lives.”

Harry blew out a breath and he nodded. “I’m doing really well with Healer Vasey. He was worried about the effect the fight would have on me after my childhood, but I spent most of it in Dracken form, so I don’t really associate what happened with my human brain, if that makes any sense at all. It has bled over into my everyday life, of course. I went through that little while of not trusting them, of not being able to leave my babies, but that’s behind us now. I’m better now.”

Richard pulled him in tighter for a moment and smiled down at him. “I know what you mean about the Dracken and human mind being separated. I barely remember my injury because I was in Dracken form. Everything just seems blurry and detached when you go feral.”

Harry nodded his understanding.

“It was mostly just pain and fear, seeing Myron hovering over me with his hands and arms covered in my blood, but the details of what happened, it’s all just a blur to me. I remember that my Dracken and I were following our top dominant, we knew our pregnant mate was in trouble, in danger, and that made us angry, we were scared for her. We found her and we were fighting and killing those who were hurting her and holding her captive, those who had killed our baby…after that, nothing. I slipped into such a feral state that it was all just blood and killing to protect our submissive. The next I knew I was on the floor, trying to breathe through a ruined throat, Myron frantic above me as he force fed me his blood, from where he tore a chunk from his own arm in his own panic to get his blood into me as quickly as he could.”

“It sounds awful, I’m sorry you went through something like that. Myron and Ashleigh too, of course, especially Ashleigh, but you too because of your injury. You were only doing what your instincts told you to do and you could have died from it.”

Richard smiled down at him again as they reached the courthouse and slipped inside.

“We all do what we can for our loved ones, Harry. It’s just who we are.”

Harry nodded his understanding. In Richard’s mind, he had only been doing what he was supposed to do for his beloved submissive. It would have been the same for him if he’d taken an injury to protect his children. Even if others didn’t think so, it would be worth it to Harry to put his body on the line, his very life on the line if needed, to protect his children.
“I understand exactly.” He said softly.

“I wouldn’t doubt it, not with how very protective you are, of your kids and of those errant lovers of yours.” Richard teased. “I mean, how many fights have you gotten into with complete strangers now just because they had threatened or insulted your lovers?”

Harry snorted. “A few, the most recent was two days ago on Braiden’s birthday, actually. That filthy Faerie guard who threatened to have my mates executed and my baby torn from my arms.”

Richard snorted. “I remember.” He said with a teasing grin.

Harry was directed to sit on the polished wooden bench and he did so, trying to ease away his nerves. He did so by thinking of his new baby. He smiled and splayed his hands over his flat belly and gently rubbed at it, trying to will his love and devotion into his baby, so that the baby, or even babies, would always know, right from the beginning, that he loved them with all that he was.

“You’re not feeling sick?” Richard asked him quietly.

“No.” Harry said. “I’m just trying to convey my love.”

Richard grinned at him and laid a hand on his head. “Carry on then.”

“Is it bad that I’m craving a big, greasy burger?” He said.

“It’s nine in the morning.” Richard said with a grin.

“I know. Nasta wouldn’t let me eat it anyway. ‘Think of your health, Harry.’, ‘What about the baby, Harry.’ He’s such a fucking killjoy.” He sulked. “I might punish him by eating a whole watermelon.”

“How will that punish him?” Richard asked in confusion.

“If I eat it all then he can’t have any.” Harry said stubbornly. “He can’t stop me from eating all of it either, ‘because of the baby’.” He added in a bad impression of Nasta’s voice.

Richard had to laugh. He loved his boys so much, Harry especially. Some of the things he came out with…he just had to laugh at him.

“If you want a whole watermelon, you eat a whole watermelon, baby.” Richard told him. “Do you have one at home?”

Harry shook his head. “I’m going to have to send Max out shopping.”

“We can go to the store once we’re done here.” Richard told him. “That way you can buy all the fruit that Nasta loves and punish him by eating it in front of him and not giving him any.”

Harry’s face lit up. “Yes! That would drive him insane!”

“If you need me and Myron to take the kids for the afternoon, all you need to do is ask.” Richard winked at him.

Harry’s grin widened. “Blaise and Draco are going to take all of them to visit Narcissa, Lucius, Marianna and Josiah for group afternoon tea at Malfoy Manor. It’s going to be just me and Nasta until about three O’clock when Max comes home from work.”

“Oh, now you are going to have fun.” Richard chuckled. “We’ll be finished by two O’clock, that gives you an hour or so to wind up Nasta after we go shopping. Is that enough time for you?”

Harry grinned. “Who says we have to stop just because Max comes home?”

“That’s my baby boy you’re talking about.” Richard said with a wink. “He wouldn’t do anything of that sort!”

Harry giggled at the thought of dirty, perverted Max being chaste and abstinent. “We have four babies together.” Harry pointed out.
“No, I’m not listening.” Richard said, making a point of turning his back to Harry, smiling as he heard the laughter behind him.

“You’re in a good mood, Seppen.” Someone called out, walking down the corridor.

“Why shouldn’t I be?” Richard answered curtly.

“You’re in court today, I would have thought you’d be a little more…serious.”

“I have no need to be when I’m so confident of a conviction.” Richard said easily.

“You cocky narcissist.” The other man sneered.

“I don’t think that word means what you think it does.” Richard replied with an easy smirk. “Then, that’s nothing new for you, is it?”

The other man bared his teeth and Richard easily blocked Harry from view with a shoulder.

“This is a courthouse, not a zoo.” Richard replied mildly. “Take your animalistic behaviour elsewhere. Or better yet, learn to control yourself, you might actually win a single case if you did.”

“You better watch yourself, Seppen. One of these days you’ll take the wrong case, or piss off the wrong people.”

Richard made a disinterested noise in the back of his throat. “Not all of us worry more for our own necks and hides over the rightful justice for the victim. So if that was all you had to say, kindly carry on walking.”

The angry man stormed off and Harry released a breath that he hadn’t known that he’d been holding.

“Who was that man?” He asked Richard. “Why doesn’t he like you?”
Richard turned and smiled at him. “He doesn’t like my conduct outside of the courtroom. He thinks I’m too childish, yet I win ninety percent of my cases and it drives him crazy. He’s usually opposite me in the courtroom and every case we’ve had together, he’s always lost and he hates it. He’s just a bitter little man who likes using big words to make himself sound more intelligent than he actually is. He always tries to show me up in a courtroom, trying to get others to see how ‘childish and unsuitable’ I am to be a barrister. I always show him up in return, especially when he uses his big, fancy words in the wrong context. That always makes me laugh. Well, that and the fact that he comes across as more bestial than me when I am literally part beast.” Richard chuckled.

Harry smiled back, but he frowned again a moment later. “Was he threatening you?”

Richard scoffed. “Probably. It’s a dog eat dog kind of career. I don’t feel threatened by the teacup Chihuahua though, Harry, so I wouldn’t pay any mind to that conversation. I meant what I said, I care more for the justice of the victim than I do about my own neck. I have Myron to cover my neck for me and you need to remember, all of these people are not only humans, but they’re Muggles too, sweetie.” Richard winked at him. “They aren’t going to take on me and win. I’d chew them up and spit out the remains and that’s before I bring out fangs and claws.”

Harry smiled then, having been reassured with the knowledge that he was in a Muggle courthouse, and that everyone around them were Muggles. Of course they could still cause damage, or even death, to a wizard or to a Dracken, but the chances of that happening while Richard had wings, claws, fangs and a wand at his disposal was drastically lowered.

“Potter versus Dursley.” A court attendant called out.

Harry took a huge breath and he took comfort from Richard’s hand on his shoulder, walking him into the courtroom. Richard would look after him.

As before, the Dursleys were already sat at the one table. Harry and Richard sat at the other table, Harry taking the seat furthest from the Dursleys and Richard placing his case on the table and opening it, taking out a stack of papers and snapping them against the table top, neatening them up before laying them down and removing his case from view.

Harry took a nervous sip of his decaf coffee, trying not to fidget, trying not to look as nervous as he felt and trying not to look around him, especially not at the Dursleys.

He stood with the rest of the courtroom when the stern, severe looking Judge Justice Brais entered and Harry sat when the Judge did. The room was called to order and Harry just sat and tried to ignore his pounding heart. It was ridiculous, nothing was going to happen to him, he knew that. He wasn’t going to be hurt, but that didn’t calm his heart and it didn’t stop his nerves. He remembered that he’d been through much worse, this courtroom was nothing, this case was nothing. He was going to survive this and he was going to get his justice on the family who had hurt and neglected him his entire life.
“I would like to remind the court that in our last session we covered the extensive physical torture that the plaintiff, Harry James Potter, endured at the hands of the defendants, the Dursley family that was documented in a series of photographs that was taken by a since deceased neighbour and then later by Mister Potter himself.” A court attendant read out.

There were mutterings and grumblings throughout the courtroom as the photographs were mentioned. Harry felt eyes boring into him from all directions and he sunk down in his seat. Richard touched his back gently in silent support. He would be alright. He was going to be just fine. Today was going to be a few hours of back and forth arguing, like all the other times, everything would be fine.

“Today we will call Mrs Petunia Dursley to the stand to answer the allegations of causing some of the injuries to Mister Potter’s body.” The attendant carried on.

Petunia moved slowly, like a hunched woman going to her own execution. She had already faced Richard in the courtroom before, she clearly did not want to do so again.

Richard touched Harry’s shoulder and bent to whisper in his ear. “I’ll be bringing up some of the pictures for reference, Harry. Will you be okay with that?”

Harry nodded, a little jerkily, but he took a deep breath and straightened himself up. He had nothing to hide, he was not the guilty party, he had not injured himself after all. He was here for justice and he was going to get it. Petunia had hit and hurt him and caused some of the injuries in those photos, she needed to answer from them, as well as Vernon needed to answer for the injuries that he had caused to him too.

Richard’s face changed suddenly, one moment open and caring, kind and loving, the man that Harry knew and adored. The next it was closed off and stern, a perfectly crafted mask that would hide all of his facial expressions and would allow him to keep control of himself. A man that Harry did not know.

“Mrs Dursley.” He started, his voice once again taking on that hard, mocking tone. “You were very uncooperative the last time that you were on the stand, I hope that you’ve had a chance to set your story straight in your mind.”

Petunia said nothing, but her blue eyes took a quick dart to her husband and their lawyer, Mister Chorley.

“I would like to start with pictures eighteen and nineteen.” Richard called out and a court attendant flitted through the photos and brought up the picture labelled as eighteen on a screen that the whole court could see. Picture nineteen was placed on the projector next to it and they appeared side by side.

Harry peeked up at the pictures and he saw that the first showed a wonky, bloody bandage that certainly hadn’t been tied properly or by any sort of professional. Picture nineteen was the corresponding picture, where the bandage that he had tied on himself was removed, showing the deep cut underneath.

“You should remember these photos, Mrs Dursley. Harry has told me all about how he received them, how you hustled him into the bathroom afterwards and threw a roll of bandage at him for him to clean himself up. A boy of nine.” Richard said, his voice icy and chilling.

“I don’t know how he got that injury.” Petunia said, her voice hesitant and unconvincing to Harry’s ears.

“Well, let me remind you.” Richard said coolly, walking back to the table and picking up the top piece of paper, turning back to Petunia. “You had told Harry to make breakfast for your family, all the while knowing that he hadn’t eaten in two days and would be very hungry, and while your husband snapped at Harry to hurry up, Harry took a misstep in his terror. He fell from the footstool that he used to reach the counters and cupboards and he caught himself on the corner of the counter as he fell, which left a long cut in his side, over his ribs. You, very frustrated with Harry’s fall and his subsequent injury, pulled him from the floor by his upper arm, marched him to the bathroom upstairs, threw him inside and told him to clean himself up, before you shut the door and presumably went and finished cooking breakfast for the family. A job that you, or your husband, should have been doing yourselves in the first place, and not making a nine year old boy do as such. And no, we have established that cooking is not an acceptable chore for a nine year old child.” Richard put in venomously. “I would not have allowed my nine year old to cook a full meal, unsupervised. I very much doubt any parent or guardian would.”

“Objection, that is all conjecture and presumption!” The Dursley’s lawyer spat. “My children knew how to cook at a young age, my wife used to cook with them and they enjoyed it!”

“We are not talking about standing a child on a chair and having them ‘help out’ by letting them crack a few eggs into a bowl.” Richard said chillingly. “My children also stood on chairs and ‘helped out’ by stirring sauces and learning how to peel vegetables, but they were supervised at all times, as I’m sure that your wife supervised your children also. Harry was not supervised. He was not just stirring or cracking eggs, he was cooking full meals over an open gas flame often with hot fat and sharp knives. Two dozen of the photos shown to this court over our last three sessions were injuries related to Harry being unsupervised in the kitchen. He’s been burnt, he’s had hot grease leave scars on his hands and arms, he’s cut his fingers and hands with knives that he was never supervised with when using. This is not the same as teaching a child to cook and watching every move they make!”
No one said a word and Richard took a deep breath and then pointedly turned back to Petunia.

“You saw Harry fall hard while cooking for your family. You dragged him from the kitchen as he was bleeding, and you threw him into the bathroom to sort himself out. You knew that he had that injury.” Richard said, jabbing his finger to the screen and the two photos. “You knew that Harry would not be able to wrap his own chest and still you left him there to bleed and patch himself up, but worst still, you made him clean up the bathroom once he was finished. You forced him to clean up his own blood from the bathroom floor while he was injured and in pain.”

Petunia was white, she was breathing heavier than usual, but she was also silent. She seemed to have adopted her husband’s tactic of remaining silent through her questioning.

“You have nothing to say? No, I don’t suppose that you do. What can you say to explain this?” Richard said, waving his hand at the screen. “There is no excuse, nothing that you can say to explain away the blatant child abuse that you not only watched unfold before you, but actively enabled by forcing Harry to cook unsupervised, and then made worse once he was injured from your abusive negligence. Harry is your nephew, your own sister’s son, and you watched as he was injured and you threw him into the bathroom and left him to deal with his injury himself, a nine year old boy.”

Petunia was shaking, as if she were a frail autumn leaf in a gusty breeze, but she still said nothing. Harry wondered if she was angry, or if she was merely scared. He took a bit of savage pleasure in thinking that it was the latter, after all of the pain and fear she had instilled in him over the years, it was about time that she got her due. The both of them deserved it. He looked over to Vernon and then back to Petunia. He had been hurt and abused by those two people for almost his whole life. He hadn’t deserved what had happened to him in his life. He hadn’t deserved to be targeted by Voldemort. He hadn’t deserved to be orphaned as a baby, his own parents sacrificing their own lives willingly and unhesitantly for him. He hadn’t deserved the Dursleys and all the torment that they had inflicted upon him over the years. He hadn’t deserved it and Healer Vasey, and his mates and their families, his family now, were helping him to see that. He hadn’t deserved it and now he was getting justice for all that had been done to him by these people.

He had been a child, a baby when he’d come to them, unable to defend himself, unable to understand, probably missing his parents as he wouldn’t have had any concept of the finality of death at such a young age. He felt tears well up in his eyes, even as he balled up his hands into tight fists to prevent such a thing happening, as it finally sunk in fully. He had NOT deserved such treatment, not merely for being born, not for having magic, not because his parents had died to protect him, not just because he was unwanted. He had been a child, and he knew now, no child should have been treated the way that he had been. The thought of his own children having the same life that he had had, going through the same things, experiencing the same abuse and neglect. One hot tear fell down his cheek and he swiped it away angrily.

Petunia was his aunt. His Mother’s sister. He knew that had the situation been reversed, and Vernon and Petunia had died and Dudley had been orphaned and come to live with him and his parents, he would have had a brother. Dudley would have been raised with love and affection, with discipline and structure. He wouldn’t have been treated any differently to himself. He wouldn’t have been singled out, not because he was a Muggle, not because he was an orphan. They would have been treated exactly the same, given the same punishments and the same rewards. Another tear fell and he again swiped it away.

Richard was talking again, Petunia actually said something back, but Harry didn’t hear it over the volume of his own thoughts.

If Caesar and Amelle were killed, he and his mates would take in Eleonora and Beatrice in a heartbeat, Harry wouldn’t even hesitate to accept them as his own daughters. He wouldn’t even think to treat them any differently and Nora was older than he was when he’d been left with the Dursleys and this sort of treatment had started. That made his breath catch in his throat. His quintuplets were older than he had been when he’d been orphaned and sent to the Dursleys.

The thought came unbidden, of Regan suffering as he had, of Calix being poked and pinched and kicked and no one doing anything to stop it, of Tegan being denied a hug, of Farren calling for ‘muma’ and being ignored or snapped at and he swallowed hard.

A gentle hand on his shoulder made him jump and flinch.

“Harry, it’s Richard.” A soft voice whispered to him. “Are you okay? Do you need a break?”

Harry nodded jerkily.

“I would like to call a small recess of the court.” Richard said, standing up straight and looking behind him.

“Granted, we will take an early lunch and proceedings will continue at noon.” The Judge agreed and Richard quickly put all his papers back into his case and helped Harry to his feet, escorting him out and to a small, empty room down the hall.

“What is it, are you okay?” Richard asked as soon as the door was closed, coming to him and holding him tightly to his chest. “Are you in pain? Was it too soon?”

Harry clutched at Richard’s suit jacket and he cried, hard and messily. Richard said nothing more, he just held him and stroked his hair, making soft, soothing noises until Harry eventually calmed down and quietened.

Richard pulled back and kissed his forehead, swiping his thumbs under his eyes. “What was it?” He asked softly. “The pictures were too much?”
Harry shook his head and swallowed. “I lived through those photos, I know what they show, what every injury felt like, when it was caused and why. No…I just…it was when you said that she was my Mother’s sister. She was supposed to love me. Why didn’t she love me?”

Richard couldn’t answer that question. The only person who could wasn’t saying anything, she was staying silent, denying Harry a chance of closure or at least an explanation, but those people wanted to save their own skin, thus they were denying the charges against them and upsetting Harry even more.

“Do you want to go home, sweetie?” Richard asked him seriously. “You don’t have to be here and if you want to go home, I will take you right now. You can go and sex up Nasta with all that lovely fruit.”

Harry laughed and rubbed at his damp eyes. He shook his head. “I just…I know that if it had been the other way around then my parents wouldn’t have treated Dudley any differently, we would have been raised as brothers. If anything happened to Amelle or Caesar, I would never even think about treating Nora or Bea as anything other than my daughters. I just don’t understand what was so wrong with me.”

Richard pulled him back into a tight hug, before he cupped his face and forced eye contact. “There is nothing wrong with you, Harry, and there never has been. Those monsters out there, the ones going to prison for what they did to you, they are the ones who have something wrong with them to be able to treat a beautiful, wonderful little boy like you the way they did and I hate them for what they’ve done to you, for making you think that there is anything at all wrong with you.”

“My children are older than I was when I went to them in that house.” Harry said softly. “Braiden, Farren, Calix, Tegan, Leolin, Regan. They’re all older than I was when I was orphaned, Richard. When I think of them going through anything similar…” Harry trailed off into sniffling and Richard held him tighter.

“They will never experience what you did, Harry. You and your mates are not monsters. You have your problems, every relationship does, but you love your children. You love those babies so much, Harry and your mates love them too and they adore you to pieces. People don’t act like those monsters out there, that’s why they’re going to prison, baby. The fault lies with them, always with them, not you.”

Harry clung to Richard and just tried not to think.

“It’s going to be so difficult for anyone to understand what you went through, Harry.” Richard said gently. “But we try, we’re here to love you, to support you. We might not ever understand completely, but we all know that what those beasts did to you was not your fault, it was abuse, my love, and they’re going to prison for it.”

Harry nodded. He knew that too. He saw it sometimes, when he would mention something that he’d been through and his mates would get those blank, uncomprehending looks, the furious anger and the promises to hold him close and never let him go. They could never understand what he’d been through, the things he’d experienced, but it was wonderful to know that they cared, that they loved him and would protect him and hold him. He adored them, and he knew that they adored him, regardless of anything else, or what they would go through, such as their fights and arguments, they still loved one another dearly.

“Now, do you want to go home?” Richard asked him seriously.

Harry shook his head. “No. I want to carry on.” He said.

“Are you sure?”

Harry nodded seriously. “Yes, I’m sure. I want to finish this case. I want to finish up here today, and then I want to go home and tease Nasta with fruit.”

Richard smiled at him and bent to kiss his forehead. “Come on then, love. Let’s get back in there and hammer a few more nails into their coffins.”

Harry smiled and he sighed, standing up and letting Richard lead him back into the courtroom, as their called recess would be over in several minutes anyway. He pushed the thoughts of what Nasta’s possible reactions to him eating fruit would be and he instead focused back on the court case, he would be fine for the remainder of this case now. Everything would be fine.

“What are figs?” Harry asked as he picked up the small package with a frown. “I don’t think Nasta eats these.”

Richard scoffed as he bent over the handlebar of the trolley. “That boy eats avocado and aubergine, of course he eats figs. Shove them in.”
Harry put the little package down in the trolley, along with all the other fruits he’d put in, including his one whole watermelon, a mango and a punnet each of peaches and nectarines. Richard was insisting that any fruit that ‘dripped’ would be his best bet. Harry assumed he’d done this before, so he was willing to trust his judgement…if Richard had any judgement left that was.

Harry smiled to himself. He felt drained after his ordeal in court, but he was excited to rile up Nasta with fruit.

“Right, I think you have enough now. If you don’t want him to have any, then you need to buy just the amount you can eat or he’s going to take from what you don’t eat. You craving anything?”

Harry grinned. “I’m not far enough gone to be craving.”

“Okay then, let’s get this bought and paid for and get you home to your lovers.” Richard said happily. “You don’t need chocolate or ice cream?”

“They don’t sell my fudge chocolate here, but thankfully Max bought me a massive box for my birthday, a bar for every day of the year. Though if I eat all of them before my next birthday, he assures me that he’ll buy me more.”

“Good. I’m glad he’s looking after you properly.” Richard said with a grin.

“He is. They all are.” Harry insisted with his own goofy smile. “I’ve never felt so loved and so cared for.”

Richard smiled at him and touched his head. He happily paid for all of the fruit, ignoring Harry’s complaints.

“If I can’t buy food for my son, who can I buy it for?” Richard demanded, handing over the notes to the cashier to pay for the fruit. “Now come on, let’s get you home.”

Harry smiled as Richard wrapped the plastic bags around his wrist and his other arm around Harry, they walked for a short while and then they ducked into an alley. They Apparated to the house and Harry immediately relaxed tensed muscles. He was home.

He pulled out his keys and he unlocked the front door and he walked into silence. Utter silence. It was wrong and unusual, but he knew that only Nasta was here at the moment.

“It’s odd being in this huge house with silence.” Richard said, his voice hushed. “I bet Nasta is making the most of it while he can.”

Harry nodded. “He had a bit of paperwork to sort out, then he was going to just kick back and enjoy the peace.”

“Now you’re going to be naughty with fruit and rile him up.” Richard teased in a whisper with a grin.

Harry grinned back. “Yep.”

Richard chuckled as they made it to the kitchen and he set the bag of fruit on the kitchen table. “Let’s wash all of these off before preparing any of them.” He warned firmly.

Harry helped prepare some of the fruit, slicing them up and removing the stones inside the peaches and nectarines. The huge, flat one inside the mango that Richard had prepared had surprised him as he hadn’t expected it and he watched as Richard took a dessert spoon to it, scooping out the yellow fruit from its green peel and then slicing it. The figs just had the tops cut off of them and then they were quartered, the watermelon was hacked into wedges by Richard with Max’s largest knife and then they were done and Richard left him with the big plate of juicy, dripping fruit.

Harry followed his footsteps to the front door and he flinched a little at the suddenness of the front door slamming closed. Richard had done that on purpose so that Nasta would hear from wherever he was hiding in the house. Probably up in his attic office. Harry got to work putting all the knives in the sink and then taking his plate to the table to eat his fruit, knowing that Nasta would be here quickly.

“Harry? Is that you?” Nasta called out from within the depths of the house.

“Yes!” Harry called out loudly. “I’m home earlier than I thought I’d be. Richard just dropped me off, the wind must have taken the door.” Which was a lie as there was no wind to speak of in the dry heat of August.

Harry sat down with the platter of the fruits quickly, hiding the remainder back in the carrier bag and in the depths of the fridge…only Max knew what everything was and where it was in this kitchen so it was unlikely that Nasta would find it.
He sat at the kitchen table, knowing that for this he would need to let the juice dribble all over his arms and chin, and he started laying out the fruit on the plate, before realising that it would be better if he didn’t have his smart suit on. He quickly took off his tie and his smart shirt so that he wouldn’t ruin them as he heard Nasta on the stairs. He slipped off his belt, shoes and his formal trousers and left himself in just his boxer shorts, sitting at the kitchen table, pineapple juice already dripping from his chin just when Nasta walked in.

Harry didn’t look up right away, he had to play this as cool as he could.

“Court was awful.” He complained as he licked juice from his fingers and gave his mate a smile of greeting. “It was so hot in that stupid suit. I don’t know why I can’t just wear shorts and tee-shirt. Sure Draco and Blaise will have a shit fit, but I am pregnant, I need my comfort.”

“Are you…are you hungry? Did you not have lunch with Richard?” Nasta asked, stumbling over his tongue.

Harry shook his head and sucked at his thumb, which was covered in peach juice. “No, we didn’t have time. I’m starved and I…I don’t know, I just wanted all this fruit. Must be the baby’s idea.” He said with a shrug, biting into the mango and trying not to recoil at the strange taste of it. He’d never eaten a mango before, but the juice went from his chin all down his neck. Richard had been right, it was fucking juicy.

The figs were new too, but they weren’t juicy, likely to throw Nasta off the train of thought that he was doing this on purpose when in truth, he actually was doing it on purpose.

“I’m glad to see you eating something healthy.” Nasta said quietly, his voice low and lusty.

Harry picked up a big wedge of watermelon and bit into it, gnawing on it, the red juice running down his arms and off his elbows. He would give anything at that moment to know legilimency, to see what Nasta was thinking.

“I’m not that bad with food, Nas. Honest.” He said, before licking the trail of juice from his skin. “I just…it’s hard for me to try new things, you know? But I’m trying, I mean, look at this, I’ve never eaten mango before, these little figs are really nice too. Odd, but nice, though Richard said they’re not vegetarian. How is a fruit not for vegetarians?”

“They…all edible figs are fertilised by absorbing a female fig wasp. The wasp is in the centre of every fig.”
Harry stopped in mid chew and gave a long, serious look to his oldest mate.

“Are you shitting me?” He demanded once he’d swallowed his mouthful.

“No. There’s nothing of the wasp left, Harry.” Nasta said, seemingly realising that Harry was getting either upset or angry. “You aren’t going to eat a fig and find a dead wasp inside, or any part of the wasp, but that is how edible figs are fertilised. You can’t have figs without fig wasps.”

Harry looked back to his plate and he picked up the halved fig, almost studying the red insides, but he saw nothing, there was a small hole in the centre, near the bottom, but there was nothing inside it. He popped the half into his mouth and chewed it.

“They taste nice.” He said with a small smile.

“You don’t know what you’re doing to me, just watching you sit there eating all that fruit. No sweets, no chocolate in sight.”

Harry shrugged. “Maybe this baby is yours.” He joked with a grin. “The baby wants to start early with all the healthy foods. Oh no, this means I’m going to be a health nut like you for this pregnancy!”

Nasta smiled and that got him moving, he came to stand behind Harry, wrapping his arms around his naked shoulders. Harry tipped his head back and puckered his lips. Nasta dropped a kiss on him and his smile widened.

“You taste of watermelon.” He said, an edge of breathlessness to his voice.

Harry nodded and he offered a wedge of watermelon up to Nasta, then snatched it away from his mate’s mouth and jammed it into his own around a grin.

“Cheeky.” Nasta told him, nuzzling into his hair.

Harry gnawed on the watermelon and then picked up another quarter of peach, letting the juice run down his chest. It tickled, but it hardened his nipple as the drop rolled very close to it. Nasta noticed…Harry felt him shiver as he was pressed up against his back.

Hands moved from his shoulders to his arms, sliding down slowly, barely touching, but raising all the hairs on him arms and on the back of his neck.

“Nasta, let me and the baby eat.” He complained, but it was half-hearted at best, even as he picked up a quarter of nectarine. It was very juicy and drops rolled down his neck and then down his chest from the very first bite

Nasta just hummed and nibbled along his neck instead. Harry moaned softly and he tilted his head to give Nasta more access, even as he picked up the last, wet slice of mango and sucked on it.

“I love watching you eat healthily.” Nasta told him, watching the yellow slice vanish in between Harry’s lips. “It’s such a turn on.”

“Eating fruit turns you on? No wonder you get through so much in a day.” Harry giggled.

Nasta snorted. “No, seeing you eating fruit, being healthy and taking care of yourself, that turns me on.”

Harry pushed the empty plate away from himself and tipped his head back to look up at Nasta. He smiled and puckered his lips again. Nasta kissed him, then kissed him again.

Harry turned in his chair and knelt up. Nasta picked him up easily and sat him on the kitchen table. Harry grinned.

“Max will kill us if we do anything on this table. In this room.” Harry complained, but his heart wasn’t really in any complaint that he made.

“I don’t care.” Nasta said softly, mouthing around his wet face and then his neck.

Harry giggled and he wrapped his arms and legs around Nasta and pulled him down to his mouth.
Harry laid back, he pulled Nasta over the top of him and snogged him. Nasta immediately reciprocated, pressing into his body hard and nuzzling at his mouth.

“I love you, how are you feeling?”

“Wonderful.” Harry said.

“Even after your day at court?”

“Nas, I’ll tell you about court after, just give me some of your stunning body first, please. I need some love!” Harry complained.

Nasta chuckled and in one quick, smooth movement, Nasta grabbed the waistband of his boxers and yanked them down. In another quick move, before Harry could even follow him or figure out what he was doing, Nasta had moved up and swallowed Harry’s cock into his mouth.

Harry moaned deeply, one hand sinking into Nasta’s thick, black hair and he tugged on it happily with his sticky fingers, his hips rolling gently to move himself in and out of Nasta’s hot, tight mouth.

The house was silent around them, the only sounds were coming from themselves, so Harry was able to hear the sucking and the wet slurping, almost the same noises he’d made while eating the fruits. No wonder it turned Nasta on so much, it likely reminded him of the noises made during sex.

Nasta’s mouth popped off of him with one final, hard suck and Harry made a harsh, frustrated noise, his fingers tightening in all that hair in his hand. Nasta just chuckled and moved his head regardless. Harry tried to pull him back up, until he realised where Nasta was moving to. Once that glorious tongue flicked out over his hole Harry moaned happily and he immediately let go of Nasta’s hair. It was a brilliant decision, the best decision ever, as Nasta’s large hands gripped his thighs and he all but buried his mouth against Harry’s hole to reward him.

“Nassa!” Harry moaned, being forced to use a nickname as his brain shorted out with the pleasure.

Nasta started murmuring in Welsh and Harry groaned in frustration. He loved hearing the foreign words, but not being able to understand what Nasta was saying was just so annoying.

“Open your legs for me.” Nasta said, his words suddenly English again, as if he’d only just realised that he had been murmuring in Welsh and Harry couldn’t understand him.
Harry unclenched his legs and slowly eased them apart, showing off everything he had to Nasta. He moaned as a finger teased and pressed against him, testing him.

“Accio lube.”

Harry blinked and looked up to see Nasta with his wand out, a moment later a familiar bottle was in his other hand and he placed his wand on the kitchen table and focused all of himself on the lube. The pop of the cap opening made Harry quiver in anticipation.

Nasta didn’t keep him waiting long, instead he bent to kiss him, distracting him as those cold fingers pressed against his hole again, easing themselves into his body, made much easier now with the slick glide of the lube.

Nasta was careful, he was gentle, and Harry was wound up and teased beyond his limits and he wriggled and pleaded with Nasta desperately.

At last, at long last, Nasta pulled back slightly and Harry watched him through half-lidded eyes, panting happily as Nasta dropped his shorts to the floor and then moved back over him.

A soft, gentle nudge, a small bit of pressure, and then Nasta slid into him easily and Harry threw his head back, arching his back and he sucked in a deep breath which was let out on a deep moan.

“I love it when you do that, Cariad.” Nasta told him breathlessly. Harry didn’t know if he meant the moan, arching himself back, or clenching around Nasta inside his body. Perhaps it was all three, but Harry didn’t care as his toes curled and he had to wrap himself around Nasta to get closer.

Harry puckered his lips again and Nasta dived on him for a kiss, their tongues playing with one another as Harry’s hands found Nasta’s hair again and Nasta found his rhythm in Harry’s body. Harry’s breathing picked up, he became restless and his legs tensed around Nasta’s waist. He moaned and tugged on Nasta’s hair again.

He started panting harder as his pleasure spiked higher. His breath caught with the next thrust and he threw his head back with a small scream as he reached his orgasm.

“In my fucking kitchen!” Max’s voice yelled at them from the door. “We eat on that fucking table.”

“If it helps…” Nasta panted, sending a smirk up at Max. “I ate him out before I bent him over it.”

“No, that doesn’t help! I’m going to have to bleach this entire kitchen before I start dinner.” Max complained.
“If it helps…” Harry said, tilting his head back and looking upside down at Max, who didn’t look at all as angry as he sounded. “I feel much better after my day in court.”

Max sighed and shook his head. He came over to them and he bent to kiss Harry and then he yanked Nasta into a kiss. Nasta whose hips were still moving hard and quick.

“Aren’t you done yet? I need to clean up after you two.”

“One moment.” Nasta panted breathlessly, his hips moving faster, his rhythm getting erratic and then he stopped suddenly, his cock rammed hard into Harry’s body and with a pleaded grunt, he orgasmed and flooded Harry’s body.

Nasta laid down on him gently, and he rested for a moment. Then he pushed himself back up, kissed Harry and nuzzled him and he slid out of him gently. Harry was picked up and cradled in strong, sweaty arms and Max shooed them both out of the kitchen and into the family room.

Harry heard Max getting out the bucket and the bleach and he laughed softly, safe in Nasta’s arms.

“Put your damn clothes back on too. Those kids will be back soon and I don’t want an earful from Draco or Blaise when I wasn’t even involved.”

“It’s too hot for clothes.” Harry complained, snuggling further into Nasta’s damp arms.

“You know I adore you both, but seriously, you’ve riled me right up now.” Max said, coming in to dump their clothes in a heap on the floor.

Harry was worried that Max meant that he was actually angry, until he caught sight of the considerable bulge in Max’s work trousers.

“Oh! You’re turned on too.” Harry said with a smile. “I thought you meant that you were angry with us.” He admitted in a small voice. Nasta’s arms tightened around him comfortably.

“No, I’m not angry, I’m so hard I’m in fucking agony.” Max said, squeezing himself through his trousers. “You two looked stunning together on that table. You always do, seriously I don’t care that you fucked in the kitchen, or on the kitchen table, only that I wasn’t invited.”
“Nasta jumped me because I was eating fruit.” Harry said.

“Now that I can actually believe.” Max grinned at them.

“He looked gorgeous, Max.” Nasta said, shifting Harry, the both of them still naked, into a more comfortable position. “He was sat in his boxers just eating watermelon, pineapple, peaches, nectarines, mangoes and figs and I just had to have him.”

“Did you not have lunch today, Harry?” Max asked worriedly.

Harry shook his head and Max looked even more worried.

“I…I started crying in the courtroom and an early lunch had to be called. Richard and I spent the time that we usually got lunch talking in a small room about why my emotions got away from me and why I was so upset. It was quite simply because…well I realised that our babies, Braiden and the quintuplets, they’re older than I was when I was sent to them. They’re older than when my torment started and…the very thought of them going through what I went through, or anything even close to it, I couldn’t handle it and I broke down.”

Nasta held him tightly and lovingly, Max hunched in front of him and held his hands lightly and comfortably.

“They never will, Harry.” Max told him. “They will never know those sorts of horrors. We won’t allow it.”

Harry smiled at that and he raised a hand to cup Max’s face.

“Thank you. I never want them to be put in such a position. I don’t want them to be hurt or unloved. I don’t want them to be shut up in cupboards or starved.” He said, sniffing and wiping his face when an errant tear tickled his cheek.

His two mates kissed him, Max on his forehead, Nasta on his neck, but best of all, they just held him and Harry absorbed their comfort like a dry sponge.
“Thank you.” He said again after ten minutes of being held in silence.

“We love you so much. We would do anything for you, to help you through this.” Nasta told him.

Harry nodded. He knew this, of course he did. He rested back in Nasta’s arms, pulling Max’s hand with him so that he held it in his own comfortingly.

“I just don’t like thinking of these sorts of things.” Harry admitted. “They’re painful and they mess me up and I can’t stop crying and I don’t want to be miserable, I don’t want to cry every day. I want to be normal.”

“You are normal.” Nasta told him firmly. “What those people did to you is no reflection on you, Harry. They were the monsters and we are here to support you and get you through this, if that means having sex on Max’s kitchen table, that’s what we’ll do.”

Harry snorted at that.

“You could have waited until I got home.” Max bitched with a pout.

Harry bent forward and kissed him.

“I’m going for a shower now, Max, won’t you join me?” He purred softly.

Max’s blue eyes lit up happily. “Absolutely, my gorgeous man. Let us not dawdle.”

Max took him from Nasta’s arms and stood up with him, hurrying him through the house.

“Nasta!” Harry called out. “You are invited too, of course. If you want to join us!”

Harry heard Nasta laugh, full throated and deep. “I’ll be right with you.” Nasta called out.
Harry grinned to himself and he wrapped his arms tight around Max’s neck. He adored all of his mates. They always knew what to say and how to make him feel better.

An hour later Harry was very pleasantly sore and lying on the family room floor with his babies swarming around him. Draco and Blaise had had a good afternoon showing off their eight babies, even if it was just for family.

Harry was enjoying himself, well, tricking Nasta into sex with fruit and then having some wonderfully rejuvenating sex in the shower with Nasta and Max would do that to a person, but being with his babies, that was where he would always want to be.

He paid attention to all of them, even tiny Eva and Ave, distracted Leolin and laidback Farren. He played little games with them all and he spoke to them all, telling them little stories and encouraging them to speak to him. Braiden was the best to have a conversation with, at two years old now he was gaining a better understanding of the things they said and the things that he wanted to say. He was coming on into a wonderful little conversationalist.

Tegan was still their most chatty baby though, however the things she said were still in her own little language. Harry adored listening to her as she ‘read’ one of her books aloud to her penguin, a line of dummies, or to one of her Daddy’s. She never read to him, she would always push the book into his lap and snuggle into his side, wanting him to read to her.

“You’re sure they already ate?” Max fretted.

“Yes, Max.” Draco sighed. “I fed them at my parents’ house.”

“But…they had enough, right?”

“They had their dinners and their desserts. They’re fine, Max. It was one meal. Well two, but you were in work for lunch, but they’re going to be fine. Take an evening off.”

Harry tried not to smile as Max hounded Draco and Blaise for the food their babies ate that day. He had been looking forward to doing dinner for the kids once they were back, as his own little way to take care of them. He’d had his feathers in a ruffle ever since he’d found out that the Malfoy’s had taken care of the kids dinner.
“No, you still need to be fed at least.” Max said, almost sighing in relief at that.

“I fancy a takeaway.” Harry said from the floor.

“No on your life!” Max growled at him.

Harry couldn’t help bursting into laughter and several babies turned to look at him and then joined in, which just made Harry laugh more.

“I’ve had my fruit quota of the day.” Harry said once he’d calmed down a little. “I could use some heavy and greasy in my diet.”

“No.” Max said stubbornly. “I’ve only made breakfast today! I missed lunch, I’ve missed the kids’ dinner, I am not giving up on making dinner for us too.”

Harry laughed again and he rolled onto his back. “Make us a curry then.” Harry insisted, looking up at Max.

“Fine, I can do that.” Max said happily. “Not too hot, I remember.” He added, though no one had actually said anything. “I’ll go and prep that now.”

“I think you just made his night.” Blaise told him once Max had left the larger family room for the attached kitchen.

“Two mates down, two to go.” Harry laughed to himself as he rolled back onto his belly.

“It’s your night we should be making, you’re the one who needs cheering up.” Blaise insisted. “How about another massage before bed?”

Harry picked his head up at hearing that and he sent a grin to Blaise. “Really?” He asked excitedly.

“Of course, Bello.”
“He just wants an excuse to touch you.”

“Since when have any of you needed an excuse?” Harry asked. “You all have an open invitation.” He added a moment later with an over exaggerated wink.

Blaise laughed, Draco smiled and Nasta, who Harry had lost track of, knelt over his back and nuzzled his face into Harry’s neck.

“Why, hello there.” Harry purred.

“I think Blaise should teach us all how to touch you properly tonight.” Nasta insisted. “So that you can be pampered and looked after properly. That way, we can all touch you together.”

Harry groaned at the very thought of having all four of his mates massaging different parts of his body at once. It sounded heavenly.

“I can give you all a crash course.” Blaise grinned. “Harry deserves some attention from his adoring mates.”

“I’ve already had some decent attention today.” Harry grinned.

“There’s no upper limit on how much you deserve.” Draco told him, Harry was touched by that comment and he smiled happily. He really did have the best mates in the world.

“Let’s get these kids into the bath and into bed, then we can sit back and relax.” Nasta said softly. “We can eat early, then relax together for a small while, then we can retire to bed for a very early night.”

Harry grinned. “I like that idea.”

“Right then, you sit and relax.” Blaise told him. “Think about later tonight, when all of our hands will be on you, touching you, relaxing you. We’ll sort these kids out.”
“I laid out their pyjamas ready.” Harry said a little distractedly. “It’s too hot for bodysuits or vests, just put them in nappies and their pyjamas and then we can check their temperature before we go to bed.”

“You always think of everything.” Nasta praised and Harry puffed up happily without conscious thought. He felt so much better and he happily sat on the settee when told to and he allowed his three mates to grab a handful of babies each and go to bathe them, leaving him to watch over the rest.

“Dinner’s on, gorgeous.” Max told him, coming to sit beside him for a few minutes with a happy sigh as he took the weight from his feet. One large arm immediately came around him and Harry snuggled into Max’s bulk. A kiss was pressed to his head and then Max sighed happily, looking out at the babies on the floor.

“I need to put away those toys and get out the quiet ones.” Harry said.

“Give it another minute.” Max insisted, holding him tighter.

Harry hummed happily and he sighed, relaxing further into Max.

“I love you.” Harry said suddenly.

Max startled a little at the out of the blue comment, but he laughed.

“I love you too, Harry.” Max answered. “So very much.”

Harry smiled happily, feeling so relaxed and so loved, especially after the day he’d had in court. He needed this, and he loved that his mates knew that he needed this.

He did eventually force himself to get up to put away the loud, engaging toys, leaving only the quiet, calming ones. He had only managed to move after Max had had to get up to go to the kitchen so that dinner didn’t burn.

Not long after that Nasta came back down with a sleepy Farren and Harry took his big, heavy boy into his arms and sitting back down, he gave him a cuddle. Farren was asleep before Blaise and Draco came in with Regan and Calix.
“Can you take him up, please?” Harry said with an adoring smile, giving Farren a gentle kiss.

“I got him. Draco, bring up those little girls, they should hopefully be asleep soon.” Blaise said.

Harry passed Farren gently over to Blaise and he sat on the floor this time, encouraging soft, quiet play and shushing his children if they started shrieking or shouting, with a gentle reminder that it was quiet time.

An hour later and all the babies were bathed and in their pyjamas and they were just getting ready to go up to bed as Harry finished a fourth story for Tegan and Braiden. Leolin was already fast asleep, as was Ave. Regan had dropped off in the last five minutes and Blaise had taken him up to his cot, but Eva was not even slowing down.

“I think she’s going to spoil our evening plans.” Harry said as he watched her try to pull herself to her feet with the curtains.

Draco ran to snatch her up before she pulled them down on top of her head. He took her to the settee and he held her in her in his arms, he actually started humming gently and Harry shared a smile with Nasta and he ducked his head away before he started laughing. For Draco to hum to their baby daughter…he really wanted this night of relaxation.

“Haven’t you got those kids in bed yet?” Max complained. “Dinner’s up in ten.”

“Your daughter won’t go to sleep.” Draco bitched as he rocked her.

“Maybe because you’re glaring down at her.” Max bitched right back.

“Please don’t.” Harry begged. “I can’t…not so soon after being in court.”

Nasta stood up as tall as he could, and though not as tall as Max, he was still very intimidating at six foot six. He glared at Max and Draco and he wrapped his arms around Harry and held him tightly, comforting, turning him away from Max and Draco so that he couldn’t see them.

“It’s alright, Harry. They’re just arguing like children, it won’t come to anything.” Nasta soothed him, rubbing his back.

“I don’t want any fighting.” Harry said.

“I know, they should know better too, but it’s just a small disagreement and it won’t come to anything. It won’t spoil our night, or the plans we have for later.”

“What happened?” Blaise asked, looking at them all and the strange silence in the room. He came immediately to Harry and touched him. “Are you alright, Prezioso?” He asked.

Harry nodded and he turned to hug Blaise tightly.

“What happened?” Blaise asked the others again, a harder edge to his voice this time.

“A small disagreement, Blaise.” Nasta said. “We’re all alright.”

Blaise disregarded Nasta and he rested his head against Harry’s and nuzzled into his face.

“Are you okay, Innamorato?” He asked him softly. “Do you want to go upstairs for a little while?”

Harry’s heart almost burst from the onslaught of love that he felt for Blaise and he turned and wrapped him in a hug. He did shake his head though.

“No, I’m okay.” He insisted. “It normally wouldn’t have bothered me and I’d have ignored the sniping, but…being in court, listening to the lies, seeing the photos of what those people did to me. It was too much.”

“Photos?” Max asked, his voice a deadly whisper. “What photos, Harry?”

“Do you have physical evidence of what they did to you?” Nasta asked him his voice very careful.
“That would explain why their sentence has been pushed up so high.” Max said, understanding dawning on his face. “I knew you had damming evidence on them, you had to have it because of the sentence they are facing. You don’t get thirty to thirty-five years without some incredibly convincing evidence, but why did you never tell us about these photos, Harry? What do they show?”

Harry shook his head. He swallowed hard. He hadn’t wanted them to know, because they would want to see, and he’d never wanted them to see what had been done to him, how scarred he’d been before his inheritance. They had never seen him uncovered before his inheritance, Max and Nasta hadn’t even known him until after he’d come into his Dracken inheritance, though like the rest of the community they’d known of Harry Potter, the Boy-Who-Lived, but not ‘just Harry’, the boy behind the name and the legends.

“I can’t. I…I never wanted you to know. I don’t want you to see them.” He said.

“Harry, we’re your mates.” Nasta said softly. “We love you. We want to help you. Holding things like this back, to yourself, it’s going to hurt you more and we don’t want that for you.”

“You’ll only get angry!” Harry cried out. “I don’t want any more anger.”

“I could dose all of us with a strong calming draught. There will be no anger, Harry.” Max said gently. “I can promise that as a certainty.”

Harry shook his head. “Your Dad dosed himself with calming draught and he was still angry. He almost lost it in the restaurant, in public. It won’t work.”

“I can brew the strongest calming draught, Harry. It will work, I promise. We want to share in all aspects of your life, not just the good times, but the bad too. We love you, we adore you, and we want to help you shoulder this burden.”

Harry shot a panicked look to Blaise, who drew himself up tall.

“This isn’t the right time.” He said placatingly. “Max, dinner will burn if we leave it much longer. Draco, Eva needs to go in her cot, even if she does stay awake for a little while longer. We promised Harry a relaxing, pampering evening so that he can calm down and unwind tonight after his stressful day in court and I will not let anyone ruin those plans, even if they do get downgraded to just me and Harry. I will massage every single part of his body by myself if needed, but this talk can wait a few days. Until then we stick to the plans we made this afternoon.”
Everyone was silent for a moment, then Nasta settled his shoulders. “You heard Blaise, Draco, take Eva up to her cot and see if she’ll settle, otherwise just leave her to self-sooth, we can check on her after we’ve eaten. Max, you’ve made a lot of effort to make dinner tonight, don’t let it burn and go to waste.”

The other two looked at Nasta for another moment, then they both moved, Max going to the kitchen, Draco standing and carrying Eva out to the corridor and up to her cot. Harry relaxed and turned further into Blaise. Big arms wrapped around him, kissing his head.

“There will be no more talk of it, Harry. At least not tonight.” Blaise told him. “Tonight is for you now, we will pamper and relax you. We will massage every inch of your skin, every part of your body...every part of it.” Blaise whispered that last right into his ear, and Harry shivered, a spike of lust cutting through everything else.

“Enough of that without me.” Max chastised, in a play at being more normal. “Dinner’s on the table now. It’s not burnt, because I’m just that good a cook, but it was close. Now just don’t let it go cold.”

Harry smiled in acknowledgement of Max’s attempts to put him at ease and he gave a light touch, right across Max’s groin as he went past him into the kitchen.

“That was uncalled for!” Max pouted. “Don’t tease me like that.”

Harry smiled at him and moved to sit in ‘his’ unofficial seat at the table. Before he sat down, Max had rushed him and given his bum a swat.

“Hey!” Harry cried out in surprise.

“That’s what you get for being a tease.” Max told him, before bending down to wrap him up in a hug and giving him a wet, smacking kiss. “You’re lucky I love you so much or I’d turn you over my knee and give you a proper spanking.”

“Promise?” Harry laughed.

“You’re a terrible flirt, Harry. It’ll get you into trouble one of these days.” Max teased him. “Now sit... and eat. It’s a huge turn on for me to see you all eating my food.”

“A bit like seeing me eating fruit is a turn on for Nasta.” Harry chuckled.

“It really is.” Nasta purred softly, looking at him with half-lidded hazel-gold eyes.

Harry’s mouth was suddenly dry. He licked his lips and he gave Nasta a look back.

“Fuck.” Blaise cursed. “At this rate we won’t get through dinner.”

“Calm yourselves down, lovers.” Max said. “I need to get my turn on by seeing you eating. You can’t deny me that after I’ve cooked now.”

Harry grinned, but he ducked his head towards his plate. He picked up his fork and speared a chunk of chicken and popped it in his mouth. He moaned happily.

“This is stunning, Maxie.” He praised, stabbing more chicken, loading some rice onto his fork and putting all of it into his mouth.

Max’s smile was a million kilowatts as he watched Harry eating like a ravenous beast.

“You started without me?” Draco complained.

“You took too long.” Blaise told him with a grin, eating his own food.

Draco huffed, but he took the seat on Harry’s other side, opposite Nasta, and he started eating himself.

Harry was still a little tense, a little wary, but he was happy to eat his food, he was happy to join in the light conversation, mostly about their children and everything they’d done today, so Draco and Blaise dominated the conversation. They all shared a laugh when Draco regaled them with a story of how Calix had climbed a sideboard and thrown everything out of the one drawer before he’d been caught and stopped, shouting out several angry ‘no’s’ as he was put back on the floor.

Max washed up all their plates and utensils with a simple wave of his wand, before he turned to Harry with a predatory grin.

“Calm your tits.” Blaise chastised. “A bit of tele first with tea, so we can relax all together, and then we can get in the mood.”

“But I’m in the mood now!” Max whined.

“You’re always in the mood.” Draco smirked.

Max blinked. “Well that’s true at least.” He laughed. “Alright, tea and some TV, then eight hands pampering Harry upstairs.”

Harry’s stomach clenched in a very pleasurable way and he had to take some deep breaths to calm himself back down. He really couldn’t wait for his bit of pampering, more than pampering if his naughty imaginings became reality.

“I don’t think I can wait.” Harry complained.

“Come on, Harry. Let’s sneak away upstairs and start without the others.” Max immediately jumped on board.

Nasta intercepted Max and scooped Harry up into his arms first. He childishly stuck his tongue out at Max and Harry laughed.

“Get the tea, Max, Caru.” Nasta said with a wink. “We’ll be watching TV in the living room.”

“You’re such a killjoy.” Max groaned, tromping to the kettle and filling it up at the tap. Harry heard it boiling as Nasta carried him through the passageways and into the smaller living room.

Instead of placing him down on the settee, Nasta sat down with Harry in his lap, Blaise followed them and he sat right beside Nasta, almost on top of him, and he snuggled in.

“Come here.” Nasta smiled. He moved Harry over to the one side of his body and he pulled Blaise onto the other side, so they were both cradled in his lap, on a leg each with an arm wrapped around them tightly.

Blaise rested his head on the side of Nasta’s face, Harry, being a little shorter, tucked his head into Nasta’s neck. They rested quietly, at least until Draco came in from upstairs.

“Eva dropped off to sleep. Of course her blankets were everywhere and she’d thrown her pillow out onto the floor.” He chuckled.

Draco sat next to Nasta, and he turned slightly to rest against Blaise’s back. Blaise shifted to face forwards, so that he could touch Draco as well as Harry while he sat on Nasta’s lap. Harry smiled, he was happy to be here, right at this moment. It was made better when Max carried in a tray of cups and joined them. Or tried to.

“You’ve left me no room!” He whined. “Move over.”

Nasta laughed, but he did move over as much as he could to give Max enough room to squash in next to Draco.

“You know what?” Max grumbled. “I’m going shopping, I’m getting us the biggest fucking settee I can find! One that actually fits all of us on it so we aren’t reduced to this! Why didn’t we think of such a thing before, Nas?”

“We did, the larger settees are in the larger room, we decided that this room would look cramped with larger chairs.” Nasta pointed out.

“Screw it.” Max scoffed. “I don’t care if they make this room look like a shoebox, we’re getting bigger settees for this room.”

“Why don’t you just enlarge this one?” Harry asked.

Max blinked as if he hadn’t even thought of it. He bent forward, cupped Harry’s face and kissed him.
“You’re a genius! Why didn’t I think of that?!”

“Because you aren’t a genius, allegedly.” Blaise answered, quick as a snap.

“Shut up.” Max faux growled with a playful glare. He whipped out his wand once more and he carefully enlarged the settee, just enough for all five of them to sit on comfortably. Nasta covered Harry, a bit paranoid really, as magic could adversely affect an unborn baby if used in large amounts. Though Harry’s reserve for magic was rather larger than average, thus he mostly absorbed such little uses of magic into his own body and the baby was never in any danger.

“There we go.” Max said happily, collapsing down heavily onto the settee and reaching for his cup of tea.

Harry only noticed then that the TV was actually on when he reached for his own cup of tea.

“How’s the baby?” Draco asked curiously.

Harry smiled and laid his free hand over his belly. “Fine as far as I can tell. You know I’m not showing, I can’t feel anything yet and I don’t have any morning sickness yet. It’s all too soon.” He said, though he still patted his belly gently.

“We love this little tadpole so much already.” Max said, reaching over all the others to touch Harry’s hand over his belly.

That made Harry’s smile widen. He looked down at Max’s hand over his own on his belly. He liked hearing that he wasn’t the only one who loved their baby, he knew that sometimes it took until a pregnant person was showing before the fathers took any interest, and sometimes not even then, sometimes it took until the baby was actually born, and was a physical thing, not just a concept in their partner’s body for that love and care to come through.

Harry loved his mates so much, he loved his unborn baby with everything that he was, he didn’t care if he wasn’t showing any signs or symptoms of his pregnancy, he had a baby, perhaps more than one, growing inside his own body right at this very moment, and he was overjoyed that his mates loved their baby as much as he did at this early stage of his pregnancy.

The five of them sat quietly, talking softly now and then, as they watched some sort of documentary on lions that Blaise had put on.
“I hope you aren’t going to breed me like that.” He said as he watched the lion pin down the lioness and mount her.

“No, we last longer.” Blaise quipped.

Harry laughed. “I should hope so.” He answered as the lion climbed off after just a few seconds.

Max laughed. “Baby, let me show you how long I can last.” He winked.

Harry grinned. “Come on then, I’m done with my tea and I’m fed up of watching lions mating. The thought of their dicks being barbed makes me feel queasy, so take me upstairs before it puts me off sex.”

“I got you.” Blaise said, picking him up and walking quickly with him to the stairs, leaving a cursing Max and a laughing Nasta behind. Draco was dogging their heels, a smirk on his face.

“Are you going to warm me up with a massage?” Harry asked, his voice breathy and lusty.

“You know I am.” Blaise said back, giving him a smirk too.

“Walk faster.” Harry urged, it made both Blaise and Draco laugh.

They made it to the first floor, and then to their master suite just down the hall. Blaise laid Harry gently on the bed and Harry rolled over and crawled to the head of the bed.

“Draco, light some candles. Harry, where did you put the box that I gave you for your birthday?”

“Under the bed, right by the box of toys.” Harry told him.

“We’re going to have to find a better place to put this stuff once the kids start getting older. I don’t want to come home one day and find one of the kids using our vibrators for swords or pretend wands.” Draco said.
Harry laughed. “We can hide them in the wardrobe when they’re all a little older, now stop stalling and pamper me!”

“Have you not started pampering him yet?” Max complained, coming into the bedroom. “Poor Harry!”

“Come and look after me, Max.” Harry pouted.

“Of course, my love.”

Max got onto the bed with him and laid down beside him, pulling him into a kiss.

“I love you so much.” Max told him.

“I love you too.” Harry replied.

“Love you both.” Blaise replied from under the bed, it was so large that he’d had to crawl under it to get at the boxes stored underneath.

Max chuckled. “I love you, Blaise. I love you too, Draco.”

“I love you all.” Draco declared from where he was lighting candles with his wand and placing them away from the curtains, away from anything flammable.

Blaise popped up from under the bed with a box in his hands and he opened it with a grin. He got out a small wooden bowl and several large bottles of expensive looking oil.

“What do you fancy, Harry? Lavender, rose, cedarwood, jojoba, lemon, bergamot or eucalyptus?”

“Lemon.” Harry said immediately, mostly because he didn’t really know what the others were or what they smelt like.
Blaise took out the one bottle from the line up he’d made and then reached into the box for a huge litre bottle of oil. Harry caught ‘almond’ on the front before Max pulled him into another kiss.

“What’s that one for?” Draco asked. “Harry wanted the lemon oil.”

“You can’t use essential oils directly on the skin.” Blaise said distractedly as he tipped the almond oil into the wooden bowl. “Almond oil is one of the best base oils to use for massages.”

Harry turned to watch as Blaise twisted off the cap to the lemon oil and then carefully squeezed it out drop by careful drop. Max took his attention again by kissing his neck and Harry’s eyes fluttered closed in pleasure.

“What are you adding now?” Draco asked curiously.

“Eucalyptus. It pairs well with lemon and it has benefits for the skin and for healing.” Blaise answered. “I’m using a smaller amount than the lemon, so the scent won’t overpower it, but Harry will still get the benefits.”

“You really learnt a lot, didn’t you?” Max asked, breaking their kiss and looking over Harry’s head at Blaise.

“Of course. It was for all of you, my dearly beloved mates, though I admit that it was mostly for Harry, because he deserves a proper massage after all the ones he’s given to us over these last two and a half years, but it can be enjoyed by all of those people I love most. I went to every class, performed every demonstration, learned everything I could, right down to the oils to use and the right atmosphere to instil, from the right temperature of the room and the oils, to the scented candles and how much light to use.”

“This is going to be the best” Harry declared.

“Where do you want us?” Nasta asked, closing the bedroom door and walking to put the collection of baby monitors on the bedside table.

“Well, if you’d like to get Harry naked and make him nice and comfortable while I finish this…”
Blaise trailed off.

Nasta laughed, but he did as he’d been told. He went to the bed, where he and Max both started slowly undressing Harry, taking the time to lingeringly caress his revealed skin. Naturally they both paid a lot of attention to his belly and the area just above his groin, as that was where their new baby was resting and growing.

Blaise took control when Harry was naked and moaning under the hands of Max, Nasta and Draco, who had finished his job of lighting a million candles and had come to join them. Blaise shifted them away and he got Harry onto his belly and tucked a small pillow under his head.

“Are you comfortable?” He asked softly.

Harry hummed gently. “Yes.”

“Listen up you lot.” Blaise snapped at the other three. “Be gentle, touch with a firm, but not tight grip, like this.”

Blaise touched with just his fingertips, letting Harry know where he was touching, then his hands laid flat over his back, and then the massage started. Every single muscle in Harry’s body was on alert, every bit of skin hypersensitive, waiting for a touch, but as Blaise worked, warming up and stretching each muscle with his hands, one by one, Harry’s muscles loosened and then relaxed. It was utter bliss.

Nasta, ever the quick learner, picked up on Blaise’s movements first and he started on one of Harry’s legs. Max, ever enthusiastic, especially when it came to touching bare skin, started on his other leg very soon after.

Draco took another several moments to watch and learn before he moved up by Harry’s head and he started touching both of Harry’s arms and his shoulders. Everyone stayed clear of his neck and spine, even Blaise wasn’t that confident, but Harry trusted their judgement.

It was quiet in the room, no one spoke, the only noises came from Harry moaning and groaning as a tight muscle was loosened or a knot was worked out. He started purring gently, continuously. That drew a few chuckles from his mates, but he couldn’t help but squirm as every part of his body was touched and stroked. He was so happy, he felt so relaxed and calm, that he started nodding off and waking up only when someone shifted and made the bed dip.

“I’m going to fall to sleep in a moment.” He said drowsily.

“Then I think it’s time to heat things up.” Blaise answered. “Roll over, Bello.”
Harry did as he was told and he rolled over, proudly exposing himself to his mates without care. He smiled as their eyes were glued to him. It took them all a moment to recover, for one of them to speak, and when the silence was broken, it was by a tortured moan from Max.

“Fuck.” Max cursed a moment later, still staring at him.

Max dropped to his belly, pulled open Harry’s legs and he popped one of Harry’s balls into his mouth and sucked gently on it.

Harry moaned desperately and he spread his legs wider, hoping for more attention. He was not disappointed when Blaise’s oiled hand stroked over his hard cock.

He lost track of where everyone was, whose hands were whose, but he felt all of the spine tingling, gut clenching, toe curling pleasure and that was worth not know which one of his mates were where.

Things progressed far too slowly in his opinion, he wanted a cock in his arse right now, he didn’t care whose, he wasn’t fussy, he just needed it right now.

“Please.” He whined, wriggling as much as he could and yanking on someone’s hair. It was baby fine, it was likely Draco’s.

He was ignored as a mouth slid over his cock and someone else’s tongue licked over his hole. He gasped and moaned, he reached out and got another fistful of hair, this one was black, and he yanked on it.

“Ow! Fucking hell, Harry, ease up.” Blaise complained.

“More!” He demanded.

“Alright, alright.” Blaise laughed. “Just let go.”

Harry let go, his back arching as that glorious tongue pushed into him. He moaned lingeringly and reached out, grappling with the air to find something to grab hold of. He regretted letting go of Blaise’s hair.
“Ease up, Nas, before Harry grabs anything else.” Max chuckled.

The mouth and tongue moved away from him and Harry whined unhappily. He opened his eyes to glare at his mates.

“Do something!” He hissed through gritted teeth.

It was Draco who moved first and muscled his way into position before anyone else and with a quick adjustment and a little shuffle forward, Draco slid carefully and gently into Harry.

Harry let out his breath with a soft, happy sigh and he lifted his arms to wrap them around Draco’s neck, holding on as they just both sort of laid still, joined together.

Then Nasta moved, he grabbed Blaise and pulled him over to the clearer side of the bed, lying him down and kissing him.

Max looked at both pairs for a moment, just watching as Draco started shifting and moving inside of Harry and Nasta started preparing Blaise with quick, still oily fingers, and that glorious tongue. It was almost as if Max were trying to decide which group to join.

Harry heard Draco groan and he opened eyes he hadn’t remembered closing to see that Max had chosen ‘their’ group, and he was now preparing Draco, who in his pleasure and distraction, had stopped moving within Harry.

“Well you can multitask.” Harry complained. “Keep moving, Draco!”

Draco started thrusting minimally, but it was enough for Harry, who squirmed happily, breathing quicker and deeper than usual as his pleasure spiked.

“Won’t be long, love.” Max said. “As soon as I have Draco prepped and ready, I’ll ram him into you.”

Both Harry and Draco groaned at that and Draco pushed back onto Max while Harry wrapped his legs around Draco’s back and thrust himself onto his mate. He kept doing this, as it seemed the only way he was going to get the pleasure he wanted, as Draco was too busy moaning and pushing back onto Max’s fingers to pay much attention to Harry clenching around his cock.

Max finally deemed Draco ready and he moved quickly, removing his fingers and moving up and over the both of them. His hand reached out and he dipped it into the wooden bowl of oil that had been left on the bedsheets. He wrapped his hand around his own cock and groaned, low and deep, stroking for a moment before he turned his attention back to Draco.

“Brace, my love.” Max whispered into Draco’s ear, though Harry, wrapped around Draco’s body with his head up by Draco’s, was close enough to hear also and he started breathing heavier in anticipation.

Draco groaned happily and he was pushed forward by Max, into a very anxious Harry, who had been waiting for them both. Harry gasped and then moaned happily, rolling his hips and thrusting himself onto Draco, who was being pleasured from both ends and was caught between Harry and Max.

Then Max took over, as he’d promised that he would, and his hard, powerful thrusts started throwing Draco into Harry, who could no longer focus enough to move himself. He just laid back and allowed Draco and Max to do what they wanted, moaning and enjoying himself throughout, even as his hands and nails scrabbled and scratched at Draco’s shoulders and back, and over Max’s shoulders and arms too.

Blaise yelled from beside them and Harry tipped his head to that side to see Blaise locked in a limb thrashing orgasm, Nasta was hip rolling, holding Blaise’s hips still with his hands and Harry moaned, breathing quicker, and the sight of Nasta and Blaise joined together, of Blaise’s utter pleasure, it threw Harry into his own orgasm and it was so sudden that he couldn’t even scream.

Draco grunted into Harry’s ear as his submissive mate clenched around him, all but pulling his orgasm from him as Max’s teeth set into his neck. He was going to have a terrible bruise there tomorrow, but right at the moment he didn’t care as he released into Harry, who had gone still underneath him, his thin chest heaving with his quick panting.

Max all but roared as he released into a groaning Draco, who was flat out on Harry’s chest, unable to move, and quite frankly not willing to move either. He was very happy to remain where he was, or at least he was until Max’s bulk fell onto his back, pressing him tighter into Harry, who grunted in surprise and a little pain. Draco’s silver eyes widened as he remembered the baby and he immediately propped himself up on his arms, forcing Max’s considerable dead weight up with his back.

“Crawl out, love.” Draco told Harry, who squirmed and rolled out from under him, lying between him and Blaise.

Draco collapsed back down to the mattress, Max still on his back, his cock still inside Draco’s body. Draco groaned and he spasmed under Max.

“Sorry, Draco. Give me a moment.” Max said, his voice hoarse.

“Come here, love.” The beautiful voice of Nasta interrupted, and he thankfully moved Max carefully, laying him down between Draco and Harry, who was clutching Blaise like a teddy bear.

Draco yawned, but he reached out one hand for Nasta.

“What is it? Are you okay?” Nasta asked him quietly. “Do you need a drink?”

“Wanted a kiss.” Draco mumbled.

Nasta let out a pent up breath and then he chuckled, before bending down and giving Draco a soft kiss, both of their dry lips sticking to one another for an extra moment that made their kiss extra special.

“I’ll clean you up now, let me sort out Harry first, he’s covered in cum.”

“No less than he deserves.” Draco muttered. “He’s a filthy boy.”

“You’re one to talk.” Harry’s hoarse complaint sounded from the other side of Max.

Draco chuckled and then yawned. He stretched until several joints clicked and then he snuggled into ‘his’ pillow and yawned again. He was feeling relaxed and very satisfied. He was drowsy and just feeling like he was going to drop off to sleep when Nasta started abusing him with a damp cloth.

Draco groaned and swatted at Nasta. “Stop it.” He whined.

Nasta chuckled from above him and he continued to clean him up quickly and efficiently. Draco sighed when Nasta finished and left him alone. He could hear Blaise and Harry murmuring softly on the other side of Max’s body, but he was too tired to invest any amount of energy in their conversation. Instead he closed his eyes and allowed himself to fully drift on the edge of drowsiness.

He felt Nasta slip back into the bed, heard him talking to Harry and Blaise, but again they kept their conversation considerately quiet and he was able to block them out easily enough.

Max rolled over in front of him and suddenly he had large arms wrapped around him and the deep, even breaths of a sleeping Max in his ear. Draco managed a small smile before he rested his head on Max’s chest. Everything in the bedroom was silent, just soft, even breathing, the rustling of bodies over the sheets. They’d long since done away with the duvet…it was far too hot with five of them in the same bed in August.

Draco heard Harry wriggling and then Blaise’s sharp chastisement came a bit louder as he whined at Harry to keep still, then Nasta shushing them both and that was the last he remembered hearing as he cuddled further into Max and finally let himself drop off to sleep. Tonight had been one of the best evenings he could remember having in a long time with his mates, all four of them, and he was very happy to have spent it as they had, with a dinner cooked by a loving Max, relaxing in front of the TV with a last cup of tea, and then everything that had come after, from the massage all four of them had given to a very deserving Harry, to the mind blowing sex, even if he did still feel a little overheated because of the still, humid heat. He wondered who was on night duty tonight, getting up to feed the twins, and Leolin too if he woke up for a feed, he didn’t really care as he just knew that it wasn’t him, he could stay in bed until the morning, he might even treat himself to a small lie in, that would be wonderful too.

--

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Today is our sixth year anniversary and I was desperate to finish this chapter. Those of you who follow me on Facebook know that I was expecting to get just a small chapter out, just something to post for our anniversary, and I set the bar at 7,000 words. Nine days I’ve been working on this chapter, just nine days and thankfully I managed to get it to where it is here and now, and I’m so pleased that we got a decent chapter! If I can’t get a good chapter out for our anniversary, then when can I?

That said, and this chapter now posted for the sixth anniversary, I’m going to stay with this fic for several months. I’m going to be all about the Dracken universe. I still want to get Broken Wings finished and posted this summer, and I want to finish Dracken Memoirs in the autumn, December at the latest if I can. But other than that, I will hopefully be staying with this fic, and only this fic, for the next couple of months to give it some decent attention and some much needed bulking up.

I believe that this is all for now, lovelies. Thank you so much for staying with me these last six years and supporting me through all the ups and downs! I hope to put out a dozen chapters for this fic and I want to move the timeline on now, past the fight and hopefully to the birth of Harry’s new baby. Fingers crossed!

StarLight Massacre. X
Last Time

Draco heard Harry wriggling and then Blaise’s sharp chastisement came a bit louder as he whined at Harry to keep still, then Nasta shushing them both and that was the last he remembered hearing as he cuddled further into Max and finally let himself drop off to sleep. Tonight had been one of the best evenings he could remember having in a long time with his mates, all four of them, and he was very happy to have spent it as they had, with a dinner cooked by a loving Max, relaxing in front of the TV with a last cup of tea, and then everything that had come after, from the massage all four of them had given to a very deserving Harry, to the mind blowing sex, even if he did still feel a little overheated because of the still, humid heat. He wondered who was on night duty tonight, getting up to feed the twins, and Leolin too if he woke up for a feed, he didn’t really care as he just knew that it wasn’t him, he could stay in bed until the morning, he might even treat himself to a small lie in, that would be wonderful too.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Ten – Maddison Madness

Harry was so very glad to reach a break in the courtroom drama. Things had not improved in the slightest over the last few days. Richard had pressed for a long weekend to be granted and it had been, which meant that today, Friday the twentieth of August, was a free day, which was wonderful, as it was Alexander’s ninety-fourth birthday today and Harry would much rather attend the Maddison get-together than go back to court for a fifth day in a row and listen to more lies about him. Though he’d found that that wasn’t even the worst part of court anymore, it was the frustration more than anything that got to him, the silences, the lack of answers to questions that he’d asked himself over the years. He just wanted answers, and the frustration of not getting those answers, as the Dursleys tried to save every inch of skin on their own necks as they could, was actually getting to him more now than all the lies they were trying to get others to believe about him.

Harry had been up at daybreak, which in August was five in the bloody morning, and he’d been busy getting the kids organised, making sure the half dozen nappy bags were packed, one for Braiden and Farren, who were on larger nappies, one for Tegan, Regan and Calix, who were near the same size as one another and took the same nappies. Leolin of course had his own bag to himself, it was full of frozen teethers and chamomilla powder from Kailen, just in case he cut another tooth today, though his one single tooth was still sore on occasion as it hadn’t actually broken through completely yet, like everything with the Faeries it seemed, the tooth was erupting slowly. The fourth bag belonged to Eva and Ave, the fifth bag was filled with changes of clothes, sun hats and sun glasses and the last bag was filled with food. Snacks, little pots of fruit, a box of biscuits, several pre-made bottles with labels as to whose bottle it was and little food jars for the girls, just in case.

He’d taken all of the baby monitors with him when he’d gotten up and he had Eva, Ave and Leolin down with him at the moment. It was a rare opportunity to spend some quality time with his youngest children as the older kids were just so loud and boisterous and they were everywhere at once and they completely took the attention without meaning to. So he was very happy to spend this time playing with and encouraging his seven month old baby girls and his twenty month old Faerie baby, who was near enough on the same level as the twin girls, though the girls were getting a lot more mobile in recent weeks and Leolin still wasn’t.

He was currently cuddling Leolin in his arms, his Faerie baby had a teething toy in his hands, a chunky plastic set of colourful keys that Harry was sure had once belonged to Braiden what seemed like a lifetime ago now, back in his personal rooms at Hogwarts as his first child started teething. Instead of chewing on the keys however, Leolin kept shaking the ring, listening to the clacking sound it made and giggling in that soft, huffy way of his that Harry loved.

Eva was on her belly, exploring underneath the coffee table and Ave was up on her feet, cruising the furniture, her big blue eyes looking everywhere. She truly was their most active, mobile baby to date. She had been crawling the earliest, and now she was their youngest baby to walk. She was a Dracken baby born of Dracken parents, she had the biggest advantage possible, and she was using that huge advantage to force herself to her feet and walk. It was amazing to watch her cruise around.

“Ma.”

Harry looked back down at Leolin in his arms and he smiled widely at him.

“Are you alright, my love?” He asked softly and slowly, giving Leolin’s brain a chance to recognise that Harry was speaking to him.

“Ma.” Leolin replied. “Ma ma.”

Harry’s smile widened and he puckered his lips, waited for Leolin to recognise what he was doing and then that wet, dribbly mouth opened and Leolin mouthed at Harry’s lips happily. Harry kissed him over and over, exaggerating the kissing, smacking sounds to hear Leolin giggle, even as his Faerie baby mouthed at his mouth and chin some more. Harry got covered in drool, but again, he just couldn’t care, this was what wet wipes were for.

After their little session together, Harry placed Leolin in his little baby gym, where Leolin was effectively distracted, and utterly transfixed, by a dangling mirror ball that reflected the light. Harry watched him reach his hands up and grapple with the ball, pulling at it, hitting it, then going back to just staring at it. Draco was right, something about that ball completely fascinated Leolin, and whatever it was, it had Leolin entranced.

He went to drag Eva out from under the coffee table and he started a game with her, rolling her over his leg, as he used to do with Farren what seemed a million years ago. She giggled and shrieked happily and Harry smiled at her, baby laughter was completely infectious after all.

Shuffling and soft grunts over the baby monitor fifteen minutes later had Harry making sure that nothing was immediately dangerous to his children before going up the stairs to collect his other children. Of course it was Calix who was awake first. He slept the least out of all his children, because he was always so worried that he was going to miss out on something.

“Come on, monster.” Harry whispered, picking Calix up out of his cot.

“Mummy, down stair.” Calix told him.

“Yes, Callie, love, we’re going downstairs now.” Harry insisted as he first took the time to check on his other babies, all in their own cots every few feet around the entire wall. None of them were awake yet.

He left the nursery and he padded down the corridor to the stairs. Calix burbled happily as they went down to the family room and as soon as they entered, he struggled to be put down. Harry placed him on his feet, on the floor, with a small laugh and he watched as Calix went to the toy box and started throwing everything out of it. Of course the toy he wanted was right at the bottom.

Harry sat on the floor this time and though he kept an eye on Leolin, he spent most of his time with Eva and Ave, encouraging them to talk and walk, playing with them and then lightly wrestling with Calix on the rug. Then more grunting and talking came over the monitor and Harry had to smile as he heard Tegan and Regan calling out to one another and then they started a conversation with one another from their cots.

He went back up the stairs to collect them and he found them as he’d expected, sat in their cots, facing one another, just chatting. Regan stood when Harry walked in and he called out to him. Farren was also awake and Harry had a struggle on his hands to get the three of them downstairs, especially as Farren was his biggest, heaviest son. In the end he got Farren walking down the stairs, watching him like a hawk with his heart in his throat as Farren held onto the bannister as directed and went down one step at a time, very slowly. He was only twenty months old after all, Harry would have preferred to carry him, but his arms were full of a squirming Regan, and Tegan, who was chatting at a mile a minute in her own little language while prodding her finger insistently into Harry’s ear.

He only breathed easier when they reached the bottom of the stairs and Harry opened the gate and let Farren step down onto the flat, solid ground. He took a deep breath and let it out again. He shut the gate behind him and he walked with Farren into the kitchen and then into the family room, much happier to have his baby safely back on the floor once more.

“Bisky?” Farren asked sleepily.

“Not just yet, baby.” Harry said. “You need to have your breakfast first.”
“Bisky now?”

“No, Farren.” Harry said a bit more firmly.

“Want bisky.”

“No, Farren. You have just woken up and you need to have your breakfast first.” Harry said sternly.

Farren looked at him for a moment, then his eyes closed and he started crying. Harry closed his own eyes, but he ignored Farren as he put down Tegan and Regan. His nice, quiet morning was now well and truly broken, as he swept the room for Calix, only to find him halfway up the bookshelf.

He plucked Calix from the bookshelf and placed him back on the floor, only to get a smack for his efforts. He was not having that.

He crouched down, so that he was on eyelevel with Calix and he made his face as firm and as serious as he could.

“You do not hit other people, Calix.” He said.

Calix went to hit him again and Harry caught his wrist lightly and pulled it back down.

“No.” He said even more firmly. “You do not hit people.” He stressed.

Calix sniffled, then huffed, and then he joined Farren in having a crying fit. Calix took it further by throwing himself to the floor and lashing out with all of his limbs. He wasn’t near anything that could hurt him, so Harry left him to it as he picked up Ave and kept her out of the way.

Leolin didn’t even notice his brothers having tantrums, he was still grappling for the little mirror ball, reaching out for it, managing to bat it about, before he’d go back to staring at it for a while as the light caught and reflected off of the different discs, and then he would reach back out for it. His muscles were strengthening by the day now. Perhaps soon he might even be able to support his own body upright for a small while, instead of needing someone to hold him up. It would be wonderful to see Leolin sat upright by himself for more than a few seconds.

“What in the world is going on down here?” Nasta asked sleepily as he carried Braiden into the room from the smaller living room and saw Calix rolling around the floor and Farren just sat crying.
“I was going to ask the same thing, what happened?” An equally sleepy Max asked, poking his head into the room from the kitchen, a mug in his hand testament to the fact that he had come down first, ahead of Nasta.

“Farren wanted a biscuit and I said he couldn’t have one until after his breakfast and Calix was climbing the bookshelf and when I took him off he hit me, so I told him off for it.”

The gazes of both his mates hardened as he said that he’d been hit. All of his mates hated anything, and anyone, who hurt him, but after being in court all week, and all four of his mates working so hard to relax him after his time in court, and now knowing about the existence of those photos too, even if they didn’t know the content of them, of which he knew they were all speculating about between one another, anything that hurt him angered them.

“Did he hurt you?” Nasta asked.

“No. He smacked my leg and as I crouched down to tell him off, he went to hit me again, but I caught his hand and told him off again. He started crying and having a fit then.”

Nasta nodded and he placed a squirming Braiden on the floor and he came to kiss Harry, holding him for a moment. Harry heard him inhale deeply and he rolled his eyes, though he said nothing about it, it was fine as long as it was only the once.

“Bo da, Mummy.” Braiden told him.

Harry grinned and he squirmed from Nasta’s arms and he hunched down, taking Braiden’s hands.

“Bore da, Braiden. Good morning.”

“Bo jor, Mummy.”

“Bonjour, Braiden. Good morning.”
“Ciao, Mummy.”

Harry blinked at the added word. “Ciao, Braiden. Good morning.”

Braiden ran off, ignoring his still crying brothers, and he went to the mass of toys that Calix had already put on the floor and he picked up several cars.

“That one’s new.” Harry said. “Who taught him that?”

“Blaise did.” Nasta said with a smile. “It’s Italian. It actually means hello, but as he’s only two, he’s making really good progress. I’m very proud.”

Harry smiled at Braiden and then he turned to Calix and then to Farren. Farren was calming down now.

“Farren, come on, come here.” He encouraged and his big boy stood up and ran to him.

Harry wrapped his arms around Farren tightly and kissed him.

“I love you, Farren.” Harry said clearly, bending and kissing his son again. “I love you so much.”

“Muma.” Farren sniffled, holding onto him.

Calix, not wanting to be left out, came running over to hug him too.

“Love, Mummy.” Calix declared.

“I love you too, Calix. I love you both.” He said.

“Now, are the morning dramas over?” Max asked, sounding more alert and awake.
Harry nodded, holding his sons closer.

“Do you want some tea? Have you had any this morning?” Max asked. “Actually, how long have you been awake?”

Harry chuckled. “I would like some tea. I’ve had quite a bit already as I was up at five. I’ve packed all of the nappy bags, one has spare clothes, as we planned, and one has snacks and food jars.”

“So we’re going to get to go a little earlier than we planned?” Max asked.

Harry nodded with a smile. They were going to spend near enough a whole day at Alexander’s home. It was going to be the first full Maddison get-together that they had attended since their big bust up and he and Blaise had been so severely injured. Draco was naturally very apprehensive about it, but Harry would not accept any cruelty to his mate. Not from Max’s aunts and uncles, nor his cousins. If anything was said or done to Draco, then they would be leaving right away.

“Caesar spent the night there, he needed to because of the time differences, so we’ll be seeing him and Amelle as soon as we arrive.”

Harry smiled happily at that. He was overdue for a good chat with Amelle.

“Okay, who want’s what for breakfast?” Max asked.

“Omelette?” Harry asked unsurely.

“Oh, my love, don’t sound so timid and frightened. If you want an omelette for breakfast you turn around and you say ‘Max, get your gorgeous arse in that kitchen and make me a mouth-watering, fluffy omelette for breakfast’, you got it?”

Harry chuckled. “Okay. I don’t know why, but I just want eggs for breakfast. It’s unusual, this is about the time that smells start affecting me and morning sickness starts.”
“We’ll take it as a good sign and fill you with fluffy omelettes while we can.” Max insisted. “Nasta, what do you fancy?”

“If Harry is fine with eggs then an omelette sounds perfect.”

“I’ll make dippy eggs and toast for the kids.” Max said almost to himself.

“Do the kids breakfast first, as they’re all awake and Farren is hungry. It’ll give Blaise and Draco a chance to wake up by themselves.”

Max nodded and he went right into the kitchen to start breakfast. Harry cuddled with Calix and Farren some more, but ultimately the draw of toys was too much for Calix and he went to join Regan. Harry cuddled Farren tightly, as his big boy was more content to stay sat with him on the floor. Harry didn’t mind.

“Okay, breakfast is up, but I’ll need some help with spooning out eggs once they’ve finished dipping.” Max said.

Harry nodded and he stood, taking Farren to his feet.

“Breakfast is ready, Farren.” He said. “Go into the kitchen.”

Farren grinned, showing off all his little teeth and he was gone, making Harry smile. Braiden toddled past and Tegan followed. It was a struggle to get Calix to leave the toys, but they fought this battle at every meal time, so Harry left Calix to Nasta and he instead went into the kitchen, where a cup of tea was waiting for him, a baby on either side in booster seats, so that Harry could supervise and assist them if they needed it. The smell of the eggs and buttery toast only made his belly grumble, he didn’t feel at all queasy.

He watched happily, proudly, as his babies all dipped slim pieces of toast into their eggs. It made him feel all mushy inside, he couldn’t really help it.

He drank his tea and watched as Max looked after the babies on the other side of the table, helping Regan to dip his toast, then helping Farren to scoop out his egg whites.

“Morning, lovers.” Blaise greeted, then yawned. He was already showered and dressed. His small growth of hair was still damp.
“How are you, Blaise?” Max asked him.

“Fine. Draco was stirring as I got dressed. He shouldn’t be much longer.”

Max nodded. “Are you okay with omelettes for breakfast?”

“Sure, just fill it with cheese and bacon and I’ll be happy.” Blaise said, even as he boiled the kettle to make himself his morning coffee.

“Cheese and bacon for you. Harry, what do you want, gorgeous?”

“Cheese and red onion, please.” Harry said with a happy smile.

“Got it. Hey, Nas? What do you want in your omelette?”

“Peppers and mushrooms, please, Max.” Nasta called out from the family room, where he was keeping an eye on Eva and Ave, and little Leolin in his baby gym. He had all but wrestled Calix into his booster seat and strapped him in and then he’d left him to Max.

It never failed to amaze Harry just how diverse he and his mates were, even when they were eating the same thing they all had vastly different tastes and preferences. It made him smile. He was smiling a lot this morning.

Draco came into the kitchen and though he seemed awake and alert, he was in just a pair of boxer shorts. He hadn’t had a shower yet, he hadn’t even bothered getting dressed. He’d just pulled on his boxers for some coverage.

“Are you okay?” Max asked. “You’re not feeling sick?”

“No.” Draco replied. “I woke up and I was far too hot. It’s stinking up in our bedroom.”

“Ah, so you’ve come to cool off a little in the kitchen first.” Harry nodded his understanding.
“Yes. It seems like the best idea.” Draco said, sitting beside Blaise and taking his cup of coffee and taking a gulp.

Thus ensued a small grappling match for Blaise’s cup of coffee that ended with a snogging session. Harry watched interestedly as his two mates kissed and held one another, Draco holding the mug out of Blaise’s reach and Blaise trying to reach for it.

“It seems the heat has turned you into insatiable beasts.” Max laughed.

“Daddy, no.” Regan frowned at the two of them.

Blaise and Draco separated, the both of them breathing a little harder, but they both grinned at one another and then turned to Regan.

“What is it, love?” Blaise asked him.

“No do that ‘gen.” Regan said from his booster seat opposite them.

Harry laughed in surprise.

“We love one another, Regan. We’re going to kiss and hug.” Draco explained.

“No.”

Max shook his head, bent down and kissed Regan’s cheek.

“Leave him for now, he’ll get used to it. I won’t have my own children dictating my actions towards those I love.” Max said, ruffling Regan’s hair and then helping him to scoop out the last bits of his egg and spoon feeding him.

“What time are we going to your grandfather’s house, Max?” Draco asked.
“You’ll have enough time for a shower.” Max said with a grin.

“So we’re going early?”

Max nodded. “It’s been a while since Caesar and I have had a good catch up.”

“Amelle and I are due a chat too.” Harry said with a smile.

Max hefted Regan down from the table and he ran off towards the family room, Calix followed after as soon as Max hefted him down. Farren and Braiden had half a banana each cut into slices. Tegan wanted an orange and Max peeled that for her, slicing out the centres where there were a few small seeds still. After that was done he started cracking eggs and slicing up vegetables, grating cheese and frying bacon.

“Do you want any help?” Harry asked.

“No.” Max replied easily. “Just make sure you and Draco grab your showers, I want to leave soon after breakfast.”

Harry nodded. “Blaise, can you make up three bottles please and get the tea on? I can rush through a shower now.”

“Of course, Prezioso.” Blaise said, draining the last of his rescued coffee and going to do as asked.

Harry left the kitchen and went to their master suite for a very quick wash down where he mostly just got everything wet, washed his hair and then rubbed himself down with grapefruit scented shower gel. He was in and out within fifteen minutes. A quick drying spell and he padded naked to the bedroom and picked out something light and cool to wear, it was already edging on too hot and it was barely twenty to eight in the morning.

He hurried back to the kitchen, just as Max was placing down a plate of two omelettes at his seat.

“Right on time, lover.” Max grinned at him.
Harry smiled back and slipped onto his seat, picked up his fork and he tucked in. Draco was almost done eating and he would be in the shower next. Blaise, already showered and dressed, took his time with his breakfast and his second mug of coffee. He had handed off the three bottles to Nasta, who was presumably feeding all three babies their bottles.

Nasta was watching all of the babies at the moment, so Harry stuffed his food as quickly as he could without the risk of choking, drained his juice, picked up an apple from the bowl and took that and his cup of tea into the living room so that Nasta could eat his own breakfast and then jump in the shower afterwards.

“My glorious love!” Harry cried out, nudging Nasta and slipping into his lap while simultaneously taking a huge bite of the crunchy red apple.

Nasta smiled at him and held him close, taking his tea from him and then bending them both forward to put it on the coffee table. Harry was cuddled on Nasta’s lap and he offered his apple to Nasta and this time he let Nasta take a bite before he brought it back to his own mouth to take another bite.

“You really are eating healthily with this pregnancy.”

“Perhaps you’re finally rubbing off on me.” Harry said, then he realised the innuendo and he grinned. “In more ways than one. Then you’re a better influence when you reward me for eating this…” He said holding out the apple again. “…with earth shattering pleasure.”

Nasta laughed. “I love you, Cariad.”

“Nasta, breakfast is on the table, love.” Max called out from the kitchen.

“Go on.” Harry smiled. “I’ll eat this, drink my tea and then wrangle these babies into their clothes.”

“I’ll send Blaise in to help you.” Nasta said, shifting him to the side and then kissing him.

“Blaise is more a hindrance than a help, he’ll coo and squeal over tiny toes for half an hour before he gets the first sock on.” Harry grinned. “That head injury wasn’t all bad, I can’t believe he forgot how tiny baby toes are.”
“Blaise? You’re just as bad.” Nasta chuckled.

Harry didn’t deny it, he just grinned wider. He was left alone with his babies, though he could hear his mates in the kitchen, talking to one another, over baby shrieks and giggles from his babies in the room with him. Braiden came running in from the kitchen first, then a few minutes later Tegan came in.

With a groan Harry took the clothes he’d already laid out ready and he started dressing his children for the day…or at least half the day, as they would assuredly get dirty at Alexander’s party.

He started with Eva and Ave, as his youngest babies, they were the easiest to dress, after Leolin that was, but Leolin was contented in his gym at the moment. He still had milk on his chin from his breakfast, it made Harry smile.

He grappled with Regan to get him dressed, endured shouts of ‘no’ as he got Braiden dressed, which it seemed was becoming Braiden’s favourite word of late. He got Tegan into a summer dress, but she refused to wear the matching headband and kept yanking it off whenever Harry managed to get it on her, so he gave up.

He took a break and groaned for several minutes about his plight and then he had an easier time dressing Farren and then Leolin. Then came the worst perpetrator. Calix.

Harry got him undressed perfectly fine, Calix even helped him by pulling his own arms out of his pyjamas, but it was trying to get his clothes back on that was the problem and their little evil child went streaking into the kitchen to avoid Harry redressing him. Harry heard his mates’ surprised laughter a moment later.

Blaise walked into the family room with a naked Calix over his shoulder.

“Do you need an extra set of hands, Bello?”

“Yes.” Harry replied. “Pin him down so I can actually get him dressed. We already have to put him in button dungarees so he doesn’t strip off.”

“I still can’t believe he figured out those clip dungarees.” Blaise giggled.

Harry gave Blaise a smile for the giggling, but he said nothing about it. Instead he turned his attention to getting a nappy on Calix and then getting him into the tee-shirt and short, cotton dungarees.

Calix squirmed and cried out unhappily, but between them, they got him into his clothes and even managed to get him into socks and slip on dappers.

Calix looked at the new shoes on his feet and instead of crying like usual, he giggled and wriggled his feet.
“Oh, do you actually like those?” Harry cooed, looking at the pale blue shoes with the little whales on the front of them. “Max! You were right, Calix likes his new shoes!”

“Told you!” Max called back after a small pause, in which he presumably swallowed what was in his mouth. “Put cute little animals on things and kids will want it.”

“Maybe we should start buying those animal print nappies then!” Harry replied. “He might keep them on if there was a lion on the front.” He laughed.

Draco came into the family room and Harry had to bite his lip to keep from laughing. Draco had a brush in one hand and a comb poking out of his pocket.

“I think I need some more tea.” Harry said quickly and he abandoned ship, all but feeling the glare boring into his back given to him by Blaise.

He made it to the kitchen and he boiled the kettle, collecting up mugs and lining them up in preparation. Max and Nasta were just finishing up their breakfasts when Harry settled down two cups of tea for them, white for Max, green for Nasta. He took a cup of white tea in for Draco and a cup of coffee for Blaise.

Draco had his legs wrapped around an angry Braiden, who was fighting to get away from the brush that Draco was pulling carefully through his hair.

Harry noticed that Calix’s hair was a little smoother and Tegan’s tangles were gone, so it seemed that Draco was on his third child. He’d roped Blaise into combing hair too…Blaise had chosen Eva, Ave and Leolin, the three babies that couldn’t fight back or get away from him.

Harry snorted and he went to get the big pram from under the stairs to set it up ready and that was when he encountered a problem. After spending the week in court, he couldn’t get himself to bend underneath into the storage space to get the pram. He didn’t want to go into the cupboard.

“Nasta?” He called out uncertainly, a little upset, mostly with himself, but at the situation too.

Nasta came hurrying from the kitchen at his call and he immediately wrapped his arms around him tightly.

“What is it? Are you alright, Harry?” He asked, then he noticed the open door that Harry was still holding and he put two and two together. “Why don’t you go and get the nappy bags. I don’t want you manhandling the pram anyway, it is much too heavy for you while pregnant.”

Harry bit his lip, but he didn’t argue, there was no way he could walk through that door and grab the folded up pram. He shivered, turned his head away and he went silently into the smaller living room, where he’d left the half dozen packed nappy bags.

Nasta came in a minute later pushing the assembled pram. He left it in the middle of the room and came to hold him again.

“I know that you’re not alright, but do you need anything?” Nasta asked him.

“Just…just hold me.” Harry said, throwing his arms around Nasta’s chest and squeezing him tight.

Nasta did as asked, holding him and pressing a kiss to his face.

“If you’re not up to this party, you know that Alexander won’t hold it against you.”

Harry shook his head. “No. It’s okay, I’ll be fine. I just…I think it was too soon, we were only talking about the cupboard yesterday and then trying to walk into it, I just couldn’t. It’s not even the same cupboard! It’s stupid, I’ve done it hundreds of times before and it’s a much bigger room than the one I was forced into on Privet Drive, I just…it was too soon after yesterday.”

“That’s alright, my love. Let me go…no, actually, let me call Max to bring you your tea and we can take a moment to ourselves.”

Harry nodded mutely.

“Max?!” Nasta called out. “Can you get Harry’s tea and bring it here, please.”

“Sure thing.” Max called back.

A minute or so later Max found them cuddling on the settee. He had Harry’s cup of tea in his one hand. He sunk next to them on the settee and he laid his large hand over Harry’s back.
“What happened?” He asked gently.

Harry shook his head. “I just…I couldn’t go into the cupboard to get the pram.” He said. “It was too soon after yesterday.”

Max’s hand cradled his head and a gentle kiss was placed to the crown.

“It’s alright, love. If it was too soon, then it was too soon. We’ll look after you, always.” Max told him.

Harry smiled and just allowed himself to rest between Max and Nasta.

“What happened?” Draco asked, coming to find them.

“Nothing, Harry just needed a moment to himself after trying to go under the stairs.”

Draco’s face hardened, then he brought himself back under control and his facial muscles relaxed again. He hunched in front of Harry and offered himself up for comfort. Harry turned in Max and Nasta’s arms and he hugged Draco tight.

“I am okay.” He said softly. “It was just a little wobble. It was really just because I was in court yesterday and the cupboard was brought up, that’s the only reason it affected me at all.”

“Are you going to be okay?”

Harry smiled and he nodded. He proved it by standing up and going to slip the straps of the nappy bags over the bar handle of the pram, to keep them safe. He had to put two of them actually in the pram to keep it from toppling over without a baby inside it.

“Right then, a moment of comfort and now back to business. Let’s get those kids wrangled up and let’s get gone.” Max said.

“Don’t forget your Granddad’s card and present.” Draco warned.
“I won’t forget them.” Max said with an eye roll.

Harry chuckled and he went about gathering up his children into the smaller living room, so he could keep a closer eye on them, taking a break between children to grab a few quick gulps of tea.

Regan had his comfort teddy in his arms, Leolin was toting around the little mirror ball, as he’d screamed when Nasta had taken him away from his baby gym and out of sight of the ball, and Tegan had her closest companion, her penguin, clutched tightly in one hand.

“Are we all ready?” Nasta asked them.

They all looked about and did some last checks and then they nodded one by one.

“Right then, Max, go through with two kids and wait for Harry, hand them off and then come back for the pram, please. Blaise, are you alright with Leolin and Calix?”

“Yes.” Blaise said, holding the two boys tightly, Calix was squirming and wriggling like a snake, but Blaise had his arm through the back of the dungaree straps and had him clamped to his front tightly, holding a chubby thigh.

“Draco, you have Tegan and Regan?”

“Got them.” Draco smiled.

“Harry, I know you want to carry the girls, but please, let us handle this. In your condition floo travel is dangerous enough, you need your hands free in case you face plant the floor.”

Harry sighed, but he nodded. He was getting better with age, and practice, but he would get worse the heavier pregnant he got and his balance was affected by the growing baby, or babies. He understood the need for his hands to be free to catch himself if he did stumble or fall.

Max went through first with Braiden and Farren and Harry followed him. He took Braiden and Farren’s hands and then Max went back through the floo to collect the pram while Harry walked Farren and Braiden through Alexander’s home and out into the garden.
“Harry, sweetheart.” Kimberly greeted him happily, having seen him first. “Oh, Braiden, Farren, look how you’re both growing!” She cooed, getting down on her knees to kiss them both.

“You saw them six days ago.” Harry laughed.

“I know, but they’re so adorable, and they grow by the day, they truly do.”

Blaise came out with Calix and Leolin and with a relieved grunt Blaise happily set Calix free on the garden. He immediately started running towards Myron screaming ‘Gan da’ at him. Harry watched as Myron turned to the noise, smiled the widest grin that Harry had ever seen from him, before he went to his one knee to accept Calix’s tiny body to his own in a big bear hug.

Out of all of Myron’s grandchildren, despite Calix being tiny, he resembled Myron the most. They had the same chestnut coloured hair and the same jet black eyes. Harry had to smile as Calix puckered his mouth at Myron, who happily kissed Calix and then dragged Richard into his side so that Calix could see them both.

Alexander made his way over to greet them, though Draco arrived with Tegan and Regan before he could even say anything.

“You didn’t have any problems I hope?” He asked smiling, touching Braiden’s hair gently.

Harry let go of his hand and hugged Alexander, Braiden was gone a moment later…he ran up to everyone and started greeting them in Welsh, French and Italian, to much cooing, praise and lavish attention.

“I am sorry, these kids are looking to be taking your limelight.” Harry laughed.

Alexander scoffed. “I’ve had ninety-four birthdays, Harry, sweetness. Letting these little treasures of mine have fun is much more important to me now.”

“Gwanda, eh no enta baba.” Tegan said from Draco’s arms, holding her own arms out to Alexander, her penguin clasped in one hand still.

“Come here, Princess.” Alexander cooed, taking her from Draco and giving her a big, squeezy hug.
Harry went to save Myron when Calix clambered up his body to his shoulder and started yanking on his hair.

“Calix!” Harry said in his best authoritative voice. “You do not do that to other people.”

“He’s okay…” Myron started, but Harry gave him a small headshake.

“He’s not, he’s taken to hitting other people. He hit me and when I told him off for it, he went to hit me again. We’re putting a stop to it now. There will be no hitting, no pinching, no kicking, no biting and no hair pulling. He’s older now, he understands and he will be punished if he carries on.” Harry insisted as he pulled Calix from Myron and put him back on the floor. “I’m pregnant now, we can’t accept any of that sort of behaviour, he’s almost two, its time.”

“How is the new clutch?” Richard asked.

Harry smiled and laid his hand over his flat belly. “If I hadn’t had it confirmed, I’d never have known I was pregnant. There’s no aches, no sickness, I had two omelettes for breakfast and nothing. Not even a feeling of nausea. I’m completely fine.”

“Good, that’s good.” Myron said, bending and giving his forehead a kiss. Calix had moved on to terrorising Alayla.

Harry sighed. “He is definitely getting naughty as he gets older.”

“I’ve got him.” Max said as he darted in to kiss his cheek, then dived off to rescue his youngest sister from having her hair ripped out by a very boisterous Calix.

“Is he really getting that bad?”

Harry considered the question seriously. “I don’t think he’s being bad, he’s just naughty. He’s climbing everything and if you dare take him down for his own safety, he’ll hit you. He knows that hitting is wrong now, he understands the word no and what it means, he knows that he shouldn’t be climbing or hitting, yet he pushes his boundaries, like all toddlers do. So I think instead of just being bad, he’s just a normal handful, but he’s old enough now for his boundaries to mean punishment if they’re broken.”
“We will do whatever you feel is right as their parents.” Richard said. “After all, we’re just grandparents.”

“There’s no ‘just’ about it.” Harry denied hotly. “You’re as much invested in their lives as we are as their parents. We do want you on board with our parenting style, but there’s no ‘just’ about being a grandparent.”

“Do we still have the same rules?” Myron asked with a smile.

Harry snorted, but he nodded. “No climbing, no hitting at all, which includes hair pulling, throwing things and biting, no more than four biscuits a day, no sweets or refined sugar. The worst to keep track of is their bedtime routine as there are so many of them.”

“Dinner at four, bath time is between half past four till five, then an hour of quiet play and in bed at six.” Ricard recited happily.

Harry nodded with a smile. “Though bath time differs, usually by as much as twenty minutes over, but we always try to do the most active kids first, to calm them down a little and then to give them more quiet time to settle them down. Leolin should always be near the end, because he doesn’t usually need quiet time, just a five minute cuddle.”

Farren came toddling over to them and he gripped at Harry’s shorts.

“Muma.” He called out.

Harry hunched down to the floor this time to hug him, he could not bend and lift Farren while he was pregnant. He hated it, but he had to make do.

“Are you okay?” He asked clearly. Farren nodded into his chest.

“Want Muma.” Farren explained.
Harry smiled and pulled back to kiss Farren. “I love you very much.” He declared.

Farren puckered his mouth and Harry kissed him on the mouth this time before he stood back up.

“Do you remember Granddad Myron and Granddad Richard?” He asked encouragingly.

“Gwanddad.” Farren said clearly and Harry gasped.

“He’s never said it like that before!”

“Who’s a good boy?!” Richard encouraged happily, bending and picking up Farren how Harry wanted to. Soon, he consoled himself, soon enough he would be healed from what Draco had done to him and he would give birth in February. Earlier if he didn’t carry to term.

“Me, Gwanddad.” Farren replied.

“Yes, you!” Richard said back.

Harry chuckled and he waved and wandered off. He found Blaise and he peeked in on Leolin.

“He’s been stirring, do you want him?” Blaise asked. “I’m going to go see how many coffees I can drink before Nasta notices.” He grinned.

Harry chuckled. “He’ll count exactly how many you have and he’ll punish you for it when we get home.”

“Harry, Bello, I’m counting on it.” Blaise gave him a wink and Harry laughed, watching him walk away.

“Ma.” A small, sleepy voice called out and Harry gave his attention to the just awakened Leolin, whose sleepy gold eyes slitted open to peer up at him. He had cried himself to sleep when Nasta had taken him from his baby gym.
“Hello, sweetheart.” Harry said with a soft voice. “Did you sleep well?”

“Ma.” Leolin said, lifting a heavy hand to rub at his little eyes.

“Let’s find you some shade.” Harry said worriedly, peering up at the burning sun, there wasn’t even any clouds to block the sun for a moment’s reprieve.

Harry went to a group of chairs set under a large umbrella. The cooling effect of the shade was almost instantaneous and Harry sighed happily, tucking his feet up and crossing his legs and sitting Leolin in the gap facing outwards, so that he could rest against his chest, tip his head back and look at him if he needed to, but he was also looking out at others, being more involved and social. A lot of people came over to say hello to him, and to Harry too, because he was looking around at them all and seemed more involved than usual.

“It’s amazing to see him like this.” Xerxes said, coming to sit beside him, easing himself into a chair with a small groan of pleasure.

Harry smiled and nodded, looking down on Leolin proudly. “I know. He’s come so far from the tiny, shrivelled newborn he used to be.”

“It was strange seeing him like that for months after his birth.” Xerxes admitted. Harry wasn’t offended, he’d thought the same and he’d constantly worried that Leolin wasn’t developing enough, that he wasn’t eating enough. Though being a Faerie, he was always going to seem strange compared to his Dracken siblings, and even to his Dracken born human siblings, for though Leolin had also been born to Dracken parents, he was a different species altogether, and the Dracken genes did not like competition with other creature blood.

“I’m just glad that we can see the improvements he’s making now.” Harry said. “Before, we sort of knew that he was developing, but we couldn’t really see it in any tangible way, now though, we can see him taking strides to progress. He’s sitting up, he can still only say two words, but he’s getting quicker at spotting who is who and saying them quicker, he has a tooth now too! Oh, and he’s holding himself up with his hands more if he’s put on his belly, he can hold up his own head and he is getting stronger at lifting and holding up his arms too.”

“He really is coming on strongly.” Xerxes smiled, touching Leolin’s jet black hair with gentle fingers.
Harry smiled at the praise given to Leolin. He bent and kissed his head and watched him watching the other guests. He was staring, glaring almost, at the people milling around.

“How have you been?” Xerxes asked quietly.

Harry smiled, a little sadly, a little wistfully. “I still wish that it hadn’t happened, of course, but I think we’re getting better each day and I’m thankful for that. We need the calm normalcy back after what happened and we’re getting it. With the therapy and all the help we’re getting, we’re more settled. Of course we’re all still worried about Blaise’s head injury, but he hasn’t had any slips in a while and Healer Odell is very pleased with his progress. I’m being fussed over too, but that’s mostly because of the pregnancy now.”

“How is that progressing? They all know now?”

Harry nodded. “As stated I told them all on the evening of Braiden’s birthday. I had to spell it out for them too, they had no clue.” He laughed. “But they all know and the pregnancy is very calm at the moment. If I didn’t know that I was pregnant, I never would have guessed.”

“After what you’ve been through I, for one, am glad that you’re having a calm, easy pregnancy, at least thus far.”

Harry smiled. “It is a much needed break, but the guys still won’t take any chances.”

“Good. You are their submissive mate, the one they all love most, they shouldn’t take any chances with your precious life.”

Harry scoffed. “We might be magical creatures, Xerxes, but we have human rationality too. None of us love one person above any other, we love one another equally. True if we were attacked I would run to my children and they would fight to get me to safety, but in human form, with human emotions and thoughts, we are all equal. Even if they do let me get away with murder.”

Xerxes snorted. “That’s putting it mildly, those boys do let you have the run of things more often than not.”
Harry frowned as he thought of that. “Am I that bad?” He asked a little insecurely. “Am I actually a horror?”

“No. No!” Xerxes said placatingly. “I’m just saying they put you on a pedestal, as all dominant mates do, and sometimes, well, sometimes it means that they let you get away with considerably more than you should.”

Harry’s frown deepened. “I don’t see it.” He said after a pause. “They do insist that I don’t do certain things…”

“You’re not going to see it.” Xerxes cut in gently. “We’re not talking about them stopping you from doing things that they think will harm you, that’s just their instincts stepping in, and yes, Nasta stopping you all from eating sweets and drinking coffee counts under this as he sees it as a danger to your health.”

Harry looked down, but all he could think about now was when he had manipulated his mates into taking him on holiday when he was pregnant with the quintuplets. They really hadn’t wanted to go, they hadn’t wanted him to go anywhere, but he had used his ‘submissive wiles’ to manipulate them into taking a family holiday. He had shamelessly used the Dursleys abuse of him to all but force them into taking him on a holiday they hadn’t wanted to go on. He swallowed painfully.

“Excuse me.” He said in a strangled, choked voice.

“Harry, no. I never meant to upset you!” Xerxes said, shocked by his reaction as Harry stood and hurried away.

He held Leolin tightly and he hurried to a small little alcove in Alexander’s garden created by several rose bushes. He crawled into the centre of them all and he just sat with his knees to his chin, Leolin cradled to his chest.

Had it been wrong of him to manipulate his mates in such a way? Should he have ignored Marianna’s advice to manipulate his way around his mates to get them to take him on holiday? He bit his lip and tried to excuse his own behaviour, but there was no excuse for what he’d done. He’d never thought of it in such a way before and now he felt terrible.

“Harry?!” Nasta’s voice called out. “Love, where are you?”

“Got him?” Draco’s voice asked.
“No, I can scent him, but I can’t find him.” Nasta sighed. “Harry?!”

“I’ll look over here.” Draco said.

Harry rubbed his eyes. “Nasta?”

“Harry?! Where on earth are you?” Nasta asked. “Xerxes told us that he’d upset you on accident, come out and we can have a cwtch to make you feel better.”

Harry crawled out from under the rose bushes, almost at Nasta’s feet, and his saw the surprise, and a little amusement, on Nasta’s face. It made him chuckle a bit and rub his eyes with his free hand.

Nasta stooped and picked him up and gave him a big hug.

“Is it pregnancy hormones?” Nasta asked him.

Harry shook his head. “No. I just…I never realised before that you treat me like I’m beyond reproach.”

Nasta frowned. “We don’t.” He said immediately.

“I…” Harry frowned and he looked at the floor. “I manipulated you.”

“What?” Nasta said. “When?”

Harry swallowed. “When I wanted to go on holiday. Though back then I did really think we were just going to Marianna’s house, I didn’t know she’d booked the trip to Guadeloupe. But I guilted and manipulated you into taking me when you didn’t want to.”

Nasta snorted and sat down against a tree with him and Leolin in his lap.
“Harry, I am your top dominant. I was a thirty-seven year old man at the time. Did you really think that I didn’t know what you were doing? Especially when you were so terrible at it. I knew what you were doing, Caru, almost from the first moment that you started.”

Harry looked at him. “But, why didn’t you call me on it? Why did you let us go on that holiday if you knew I was manipulating you?”

“Because what you said was true, Harry. You weren’t lying to me to get your own way, everything you said was true. You’d never had a holiday before, you’d never experienced that. Despite knowing what you were doing, I still sat and thought about it seriously for long hours, weighing up pros and cons, but in the end I realised that you needed the escape and I decided that we would have a holiday together, pregnancy or not. You needed it and despite how obvious you were about trying to get your own way, I didn’t care. Looking back on the long days we spent in Guadeloupe, seeing how happy you were, how relaxed, how excited, I can honestly say that they are some of my best memories. It was the right choice to go on that holiday. You deserved it.”

“But…but…”

Nasta cut him off with a kiss, expertly dodging Leolin’s furious slap as he dared to kiss his ‘Ma’.

“There are no buts, Harry. You deserved your first proper holiday, we all needed it, and it was the right choice. We had so much fun, we were happy, and truly, I don’t think we’ve ever had that much sex in one week outside of a heat period.” Nasta laughed.

Harry managed a wet little chuckle.

“So you don’t need to get upset over that or feel bad about it. True, it wasn’t the greatest feeling in the world to know that one of those you love is manipulating you, and it wasn’t right, but I understand why you did it, Harry and I don’t hold it against you. That’s why I never brought it up or called you out on it. I understood. I do hope that now we’re older, more settled with one another, that you know now that you can discuss things with us and bring up a suggestion without trying to manipulate us.”

Harry thought about that. He thought of all the strides his mates had made, particularly Max and Nasta, in listening to him without automatically shooting him down.

“I think I do now. Since that awful day.” He said. “It shouldn’t have taken that attack to get you and Max to listen to me, to Blaise too, we’re not children and we shouldn’t be treated like children. But I think we have grown more together over the last two years, with you and Max listening more and not just overriding the rest of us because you think that you know better, I think we can have more level-headed discussions now. I feel that I can trust you to listen to me, so I guess…I guess I don’t feel like I need to resort to manipulating you to get you to listen to me or do what I want.”

“That’s good, really good.” Nasta said with a smile.

“I am sorry that I did it, Nas. I love you.”

“I love you too, Cariad. You shouldn’t have done it and I won’t condone it, but as I said, I understand. Though more to the point you shouldn’t have had to resort to such drastic measures just to get us to listen to you. We were a little hard headed back then.”

Harry smiled and he snuggled into Nasta, his top dominant holding him tight with one arm, the other was stroking Leolin’s hair.

“Are you okay now? No more being upset? You’ve sent all the Maddisons mad.” Nasta chuckled.

Harry nodded. “I feel better now. Just…can you hold me for a little longer?”

Nasta kissed his head, getting an angry screech from Leolin, but he did as asked and held Harry tight.

“You are getting very bossy.” Nasta told Leolin. “I will kiss your Mother whenever I please.”

Harry laughed softly and used his free arm to mop up his face.

“Nasta, we still can’t find…oh.” Blaise came storming over to where Nasta had been last and he caught sight of them on the grass cuddling. “Are you alright, Bello?”

Harry nodded. “I am now that Nasta has given me a cwtch.”
Blaise sunk down beside him and cuddled up to his back, his chin propping out over Harry’s shoulder. Harry had to grab Leolin’s hand to stop him from hitting his Father in the face.

Blaise nuzzled him and Harry nuzzled back.

“I’m glad that you’re alright. I could have killed Xerxes when he said that he’d upset you.” Blaise said.

“It’s okay. He didn’t really upset me, I upset myself after I thought too hard about something he’d said.”

“What did he say?” Blaise asked.

“That as your submissive I’m beyond reproach. That I can do no wrong.”

“Well that’s bullshit.” Blaise said. “We’ve had to punish you in the past, we’ve had fights and stupid arguments. You’re far from beyond reproach, Harry. You’re not flawless, no one is, but still, to me, you’re perfect.”

Harry smiled and tipped his head to kiss Blaise more firmly.

“I agree with Blaise, Harry.” Nasta said. “None of us are beyond reproach. We all do things wrong, we all argue and maybe sometimes we get on each other’s nerves, but that’s just normal, that’s us, and I wouldn’t change any of that. We do not put you beyond reproach, I mean, we all nag at you and I suppose we do chastise you on occasion, none of us are perfect, but we’re good, both together and apart.”

Feeling much better, Harry nodded. Xerxes was wrong, or at least not completely right. His mates might let him get away with certain things, but he was far from getting away with murder. The worst he’d done, as he’d admitted to, was manipulating his mates, particularly Nasta, into taking him on holiday, but now he’d found out that Nasta had known all along and didn’t hold it against him.

“Oh, come on, Prezioso.” Blaise said with a smile. “Alexander will want to see you now, all the Maddisons went crazy when Xerxes admitted to upsetting you.”

Harry nodded and he went to stand up, but Nasta held him tighter and stood up with Harry in his arms.
arms. He was then placed on his feet with Nasta’s arm around his shoulders and Blaise’s around his waist. He smiled from between them.

“Harry! Are you alright?” Draco called out as soon as he spotted him between Nasta and Blaise.

Harry nodded with a smile. “I'm alright. I'm fine.” He insisted.

Draco came to cup his face, looking into his face, into his eyes, to see if he was telling the truth.

“You are definitely alright?”

Harry nodded. “Yes.”

Draco kissed him and Harry smiled at him. Leolin broke the moment by slapping an open palm into Draco’s face.

“Leolin!” Harry chastised sternly. “You do not hit your Fathers.”

“Ma.” Leolin sniffled.

“I know, but you can’t hit people for kissing me, love.” Harry said.

Leolin started crying and Harry sighed, but dutifully cradled Leolin close and soothed him.

“Where’s Max?”

“He went hunting through the house for you.” Draco said. “He knows all the best hiding spots from when he was a kid.”

Harry snorted and he hugged Draco and then moved to Alexander. He was wrapped up in strong arms and held tightly.
“I’m sorry I ruined your birthday.” He said softly.

Alexander scoffed. “It’s not ruined, and if there aren’t several more incidents and altercations then it’ll have been a very drab party indeed.”

Harry smiled and he snuggled in, taking in the fatherly comfort of Alexander.

“Someone go and get a pot of tea.” Alexander ordered, before he led Harry over to the table and chairs he’d been sat in before and he and Leolin were settled down in the shade.

“Thank you.” He said softly as he cradled Leolin closer. Leolin who was much happier now to have no competition around so that he could monopolise Harry’s attention. He’d already stopped crying.

“Are you feeling better?”

Harry nodded. “Yes, now I do. I am sorry I had an episode here. Today is about you.”

“Was it your hormones?” Alexander asked, laying a gentle hand on Harry’s belly.

Harry shook his head. “No. I just got upset.” He said. “Nasta calmed me down though, as it turns out, Nasta already knew what I’d done and why I got upset over it, he knew years ago and I didn’t know that he knew.”

Alexander nodded. “You’ve all said it before, and I can see it too, but nothing gets past your boy, Nasta. He’s always on the ball. Look at him now.”

Harry looked over to where Nasta was. He was talking to Max and Draco, obviously explaining what had been going on, but Nasta’s eyes were flicking everywhere as he spoke. He would look at Max and Draco, but his eyes would then flick to, and track, their children, who were running all over the place. Even as he was speaking, holding a conversation, he was watching their babies running around the garden, and he had no doubts that those hazel-gold eyes would flick to him also.
He smiled and looked back at Alexander. “He’s a good top dominant and…I know he’s your grandson, but I don’t think we could say the same for Max. He’s just…he’s not level-headed enough. He’s quite hot-headed, like I am, and I already know that if I had been a dominant, then I wouldn’t make a good top dominant. I’d be awful at it, I’d probably put my family in danger. I have such a hot temper, I’m a hard-headed fool at times.” Harry sighed heavily. “Maybe I just make a bad Dracken full stop, because I wasn’t raised as one.”

Leolin dribbled down Harry’s neck and Harry shifted him and patted his bum, almost absently taking a soft cloth from his pocket and wiping Leolin’s face.

“You don’t make a bad Dracken, Harry. You’re actually one of the best submissives I’ve ever met, my beautiful mate of course comes top of that list.” Alexander winked at him and Harry laughed. “But you shouldn’t put so much pressure on yourself to be perfect, Harry. You should just be yourself, no one is perfect and truly, I think ultimate perfection is unobtainable. It doesn’t exist purely because one person’s perception of perfect is not the same as another’s. Everyone is different, sweet one, everyone has their own thoughts and their own perceptions, thus true perfection isn’t real, so just be yourself and be your own version of perfect, and those who love you will come to you.”

Harry smiled at that. “Thank you.”

Alexander clapped his knee and then turned his gaze. “It’s about time that tea got here, what were you doing, hand picking the leaves?” He joked as Alexus set the tray down.

Alexander’s third oldest son scoffed. “No, Dad, I was being tactful and letting you and Harry talk for a bit before I brought this over.” Alexus took two of the cups on the tray and he went to give the one to his Mother.

“How is Alexus now?” Harry asked softly.

Alexander pulled a face. “He’s getting better, stronger. He’s had contact with that weasel, Sean, and I think that helped to turn the heartbreak he was feeling into anger. Lexi’s fears were founded in truth it seems, Sean left him for a younger man and he tried to spout out all this nonsense about them growing apart, becoming sedentary and too comfortable with one another, that there was no excitement or passion in their relationship anymore and that this new, young boy brought all those tingly feelings back. The stupid weasel doesn’t realise that being that comfortable with someone is worth so much more than all the butterflies and uncertainty of a new relationship. Sean will come to regret his decision, when his new relationship gets as stagnant and as boring as the one that he complained that he had with Alexus. What will he do then? Leave his new boy for someone else? Keep jumping from person to person, from new relationship to new relationship to seek the fluttery butterflies he says he’s missed? What a terrible, lonely way to spend a life.”
“I feel so bad for Alexus.” Harry said.

“Don’t feel bad for him, Harry. If this is how Sean really feels then Lexi has had a lucky escape in my opinion. He, of course, won’t feel the same way, not yet. He’s still too cut up about it, though now that he’s starting to feel anger about the situation, it’ll start getting easier to move on. I’m sure Lexi will find someone else one day, someone better than Sean. It’s such a shame, I’m usually a good judge of character and I did like Sean before all of this. I never would have thought him capable of such an ill-judged, callous action such as this.” Alexander sighed heavily. “I suppose that no one can truly know what others will do, or what they’re thinking. I’m no legilimens, after all, nor would I intentionally deprive another of their privacy in such a way, even if I were a legilimens.”

Harry nodded. “I was appalling at the mind arts, I couldn’t even learn Occlumency to protect my own mind from Voldemort.”

“I am sorry that that happened to you.” Alexander said gently.

“It seems a lifetime ago now.” Harry admitted, looking out at his mates and his children, at the new family members that he’d gained in all of the Maddisons.

“I suppose it does now.” Alexander agreed. “You have been through a lot since that time in your life. It was actually before your Dracken inheritance, wasn’t it?”

Harry nodded and he patted Leolin’s bum more firmly as his Faerie baby fussed. “It was, I was only fifteen. It was a few months before I had my Dracken inheritance and then all of this came about and it was almost like I had no rest, no time to think in between the two instances. I never really had a chance to come to terms with what I did, nor with the loss of my Godfather, Sirius.”

“I am sorry for the poor timing, sweetness.” Alexander sighed. “I’ve always insisted that sixteen was just too young for such life altering decisions, unfortunately it is very difficult to hold a meeting back for any significant amount of time. We just have to support the submissives as they do go through their meetings, and of course monitor them throughout their lives for signs of depression or even just general unhappiness. We need to act quickly, before the Dracken side of them takes matters into its own hands.”

“Max and Nasta have told me scare stories about submissives turning on their mates and even their own children.” Harry nodded. He couldn’t even imagine such a terrible thing. He held Leolin a bit closer. His Faerie baby was still awake, but he was getting tired, he was silent, but he was mouthing
“It takes a lot for a submissive to turn against their own children, as you could well imagine. That said it does happen if the submissive in question is unsettled or feels deeply unhappy with their life or mateship.”

Harry looked out over the garden at all the Maddisons. He could see the hulking form of Myron over everyone else, he spotted Shae in between moving people, her dozen children were running around, some of them were around his own children’s age, thus they were all playing together, everyone in the garden keeping an eye on all of the children running around. It made Harry smile. Not so much the subsmissives who were excluding themselves or were being difficult or hostile. He didn’t even want to think of those women though, he could never behave in such a way and he was never going to.

“Harry, how are you?” Max came over to ask him, having obviously finished his own conversation with Nasta. He took the sun lounger next to him.

“You don’t need to sound so cautious, I’m fine.” He smiled.

“I’m glad.” Max said, leaning in to kiss him.

It took several seconds before Leolin’s sleepy brain caught up and he started crying.

“Hey, what’s this?” Max asked. “Do you not like being out of your home environment? Why does he always turn on us when he’s in a new place?”

Harry sighed. “Kailen said that it was because I was his safe place, he sees me as utterly safe in his developing mind, thus when he’s in a place that he doesn’t know, he clings to me and lashes out at everyone who approaches. Dain said that when he’s older, I’ll be able to encourage him and reassure him that those around him are safe too.”

Max nodded, remembering that conversation with the Faeries. He gently touched Leolin’s back, as he would have at home and Leolin squirmed. It took long, silent minutes before Leolin calmed and recognised what was happening.

“Da.” He said quietly.
Max bent forward, his hand still flat on Leolin’s back, careful of his little wings, and Max kissed their baby son’s soft cheek.

“I love you, baby.” Max said.

“Da.” Leolin repeated.

“Hold on, I think he’ll let you have him for a moment. I need the bathroom.”

Harry gently took Leolin from his shoulder and Max looked so pleased as he held his hands out to receive Leolin. Harry stayed afterwards, just to make sure that Leolin settled in Max’s arms. He was grinning widely, of course, this was a step forward for Leolin, a small hint of progress, and it made Harry insanely happy as he gave Max’s knee a touch and he stood to go to the bathroom.

“Mummy!” Braiden called out as Harry walked past, his oldest son came careening towards him from behind a group of people.

“Hello, sweetheart. Are you okay?” Harry asked.

Braiden nodded.

“Do you need a drink or something to eat?”

“No, Mummy. I go with you.”

“I’m going to potty, Braiden.” Harry said gently.

“I come too.” Braiden insisted.

Sighing, Harry took Braiden’s hand and he took him into the house with him. Perhaps this would help Braiden’s own potty training, if he saw Harry using the toilet too. Though of course this wouldn’t be the first time that Braiden, or any of his other children, had followed him into the bathroom. He’d even had to bathe with them on occasion, when he’d given into their cries instead of fighting with them and turning their desires into a battle.

They made it to the bathroom and Harry chose to sit on the toilet to wee, like Braiden would do on his potty. He made it a bright, fun experience by being overenthusiastic, even though Braiden seemed to be more interested in digging in Alexander and Kimberly’s bathroom cupboards.

He flushed and then he washed his hands, pulling over Braiden to wash his hands too, making that as fun as he could, all to encourage Braiden to see the bathroom as a fun place. He still wasn’t overly fussed on having a bath, though that had gotten better since he’d started using the ‘big’ bath instead of the baby bath.

He escorted a happy Braiden back outside and watched his two year old happily run off towards Richard, calling out for ‘Ganda Itch.’ Caesar, who was stood nearby, laughed at Braiden’s name for his Father. It made Harry smile even as he went to check on his twin girls napping in their pram.

“Hey, Harry.”

Harry was smiling before he turned around. “Hi, Amelle. How are you?”

“Tired. Beatrice was unsettled last night and Nora had us up before dawn.”

“Ah, I was wondering why Caesar was so quiet today.” He snorted. “I hope it’s nothing serious.”

“It’s not. I think it was because she wasn’t in her own room back at home. We just couldn’t get her to settle, of course she’s fast asleep now.”

“Of course.” Harry grinned.

“How are your tiny girls?”

“Fast asleep too.” He said, looking back at his entwined daughters. “We have to watch them though, they’re standing up now. The last thing I want is for one of them to fall from the height of the pram.” He shuddered visibly at the very thought.

“Bring them over here.” Amelle said, pointing to a group of picnic benches. Her own pram was parked beside one table and Harry could see baby Beatrice sleeping inside.
Harry flipped off the brake and moved the pram as gently as he could over to the bench and he sat with a groan.

“Are you alright?” Amelle asked.

Harry nodded. “I am. You know I can barely tell that I’m pregnant? I’m not showing any signs and really, if a Healer I explicitly trust hadn’t confirmed it, I never would have guessed myself. No wonder my mates didn’t see shit until I’d spelt it out for them.”

Amelle laughed and Harry turned on automatic as little hands grabbed at his tee shirt. He swept up Regan and he sat his son on his lap. Harry rocked him on automatic, his arms around Regan’s little waist comfortingly and securely as Regan’s comfort teddy came with him. He’d been completely attached to it since he had fallen down the stairs when he was just seven months old.

“Are you alright, baby?” He asked, before pressing a kiss to Regan’s head.

“Yeah.” Regan answered, snuggling in.

“He’s very cuddly.”

“Boys usually are, or at least that’s what I’ve found. My boys are absolutely more likely to have a cuddle with me than my girls. Tegan actively pushes you away if you pick her up and try to cuddle her, its worse if you disrupt something that she was doing. Eva and Ave are going the same way. They fight and squirm if they’re picked up and if you still don’t put them back down, they start screeching and wailing.”

“Nora and Bea are the same.” Amelle said. “I can only get in a cuddle when they’re tired, either when they’ve just woken up, or when they’re going to sleep.”

Harry nodded as he looked out at Tegan and Nora, the latter a little taller than her younger cousin, but that no longer put Tegan off or made her feel insecure.

“I suppose that girls are just a little more independent.” Harry mused.
Amelle nodded her agreement, but she was looking consideringly at him and Regan. Perhaps she was finally putting the pain of her lost son to rest, perhaps she was thinking of a son of her own once more, perhaps she and Caesar could enjoy her next heat and pregnancy, instead of suffering through those early months of not knowing if she was having a girl or an unwanted boy.

“Do you want to hold him? He doesn’t mind who cuddles him.” Harry said, even as he stood up and passed Regan over to Amelle without waiting for an answer. Harry kissed Regan’s forehead and watched him sleepily snuggle into Amelle, his comfort bear to his chin.

“Is he okay?” Amelle asked.

Harry nodded. “He’s fine, just tired. He’s usually the first to go down for a nap, especially if he’s been running around outside like today.”

Harry stood and he went to get two drinks from the covered table over by the house. There was food as well and Harry was not surprised to find Farren and Calix over here, each with a sausage roll in their little hands. He smiled at them and handed them both a small finger sandwich each.

“Ta, Mummy.” Farren said happily.

“Ta!” Calix echoed.

He waited until they’d finished eating and he handed them a beaker of weak juice each and then he went back to Amelle, putting a drink in front of her. Regan’s eyes were half closed now. He would be asleep within several minutes.

It was noisy in the garden, as only a gathering of half a hundred people could cause, but still Harry heard Max and Caesar’s laughter above the din. He shared a look with Amelle and they both snorted in laughter.

“They revert back to children when they’re together.” Amelle insisted. Harry nodded his agreement.

“They’re terrible together.” He added. “I couldn’t imagine the frustration they caused together as kids. Poor Myron.”
Both he and Amelle snorted in laughter, giggling together.

“You look happy.” Draco said, placing an arm around Harry’s shoulders and bending to kiss him.

“We are.” Harry said with a bright smile.

“How is the baby?”

Harry sighed, getting fed up with the question, and the constant inquiries about how he was.

“You know I can’t feel anything, Draco.” He said pointedly. “I’m not sick, I’m not showing, the baby won’t be moving for months yet.”

Draco sighed himself. “I know, I’m just excited.”

Harry huffed and blew out a breath. “Be excited in several months’ time when this baby, or babies, are actually born. It’s premature to ask after them right now. I’m seven weeks pregnant, there’s not much that I can see or feel yet. The biggest indicator would be morning sickness, and I haven’t got any of that yet, thank Merlin!”

Draco nuzzled his face and gave him another kiss. It made Harry squirm and laugh.

“Do you want me to get either of you anything while I’m here? I can see you have juice, but do either of you want tea?”

Harry nodded. “I do. Amelle?”

“If you don’t mind.” She said softly.

“I’ll be back soon.” Draco told them, giving Harry another kiss and then leaving again. Harry wondered if Draco’s desire to go in the house, away from most of the people milling in the garden, was actually something to do with his fear of reprisal. He watched his blond mate closely, he noticed that some guests were giving Draco dirty looks.
“Is everything alright between you both now?” Amelle asked, as if reading his mind.

Harry nodded. “Yes. All of us are getting better now with the therapy, it has definitely helped us all get back on track.”

She nodded. “The additional therapy is helping me too. I’m not so afraid to have my own son anymore.”

Harry smiled at her. “You’ve come on so well, Amelle. Truly we both have.”

She nodded her agreement. “It has been hard won, but I think I am right in saying that we have won our battles, mine against my past, and yours with your mateship.”

Harry nodded. Then he grinned as Alexander came over to them.

“Hello, sweet ones.” He greeted, kissing Amelle’s head and then Harry’s. “How are you both feeling? Have you both eaten something?”

“I jammed several sandwiches into my mouth.” Harry grinned. Alexander laughed.

“I’ve eaten as well.” Amelle nodded with a soft smile.

“Draco has gone to get us both some tea too.” Harry added. “We’re being very well taken care of.”

“Good, you two deserve some pampering, and as Caesar is insistently behaving like a young boy again with his brother, I was worried for you being left out, Amelle.”

“No, Harry and his mates have kept me entertained and looked after.”

“Eleonora has fallen asleep in Kimberly’s arms, is this alright?” Alexander asked her.
Amelle nodded immediately. “Of course. She was up very early this morning, the different time zones still affect her and her routine, so I was expecting her to go down sooner. It was all the excitement and all of the people though, she can’t resist pushing herself when something is happening.”

“Calix is the same.” Harry nodded. “He’s usually the last to fall asleep and the first to wake up, all because he fears he’ll miss something, though Farren still consistently goes without any sort of nap during the day.”

“He is one of the more boisterous children.” Alexander said, looking over his shoulder, presumably at Calix…Harry couldn’t see past several bodies that blocked the way.

“Is he behaving? We’ve started implementing discipline for bad behaviour. At the moment it’s a firm no and why such behaviour is not acceptable, when they’re two, like Braiden, they’ll have two minute time outs.”

“No, he’s not being bad, sweet one, just loud and highly active. He’s everywhere at once.”

Harry snorted. “That’s our Calix. Though if they’re in a new place with new people, then they’re most definitely inquisitive, all of them.”

Draco came over with three cups and Harry patted the bench beside him. Draco sat down happily, seemingly much more secure next to Harry in the garden.

“Where’s Nasta?” Harry asked. Nasta had promised to watch over Draco today to stop anyone saying or doing anything to their blond mate.

“Over by the sun loungers, babbling gibberish to Leolin in Welsh. Max handed him over when Caesar begged him to go and play like they’re both five.” Draco answered before taking a sip of white tea.

Alexander laughed. “That’s definitely our Maxie.” He said with a wink to Harry.

Harry shook his head and sighed. “I’d blame Caesar, but he’s like it at home too, though he’s never as bad as he is when he’s with Caesar.”

“Caesar is the same.” Amelle nodded. “Bad at home, especially with the girls, but when he’s with Max…” She trailed off, shaking her head.

“Well, I for one am glad that you both saw past their childishness and chose them as mates to become members of the family.” Alexander said, touching both of their hands.

“Even if the family is utterly mad.” Harry giggled.

“I prefer to think that we’re just fun, and not boring.” Alexander winked, and then he left again, making the rounds of all his family members, to people Harry had never met who he knew from Max were Alexander’s older brothers and sisters who sometimes came to visit him. He’d met some of them over the last few years, but he definitely saw some new faces too.

Harry went to his tea, blowing gently on the top of it and then taking a sip. He had never been happier than when all four of his mates had finally learnt to make his honey tea just how he liked it. He smiled behind the cup.

He heard Leolin’s cries before Nasta found him and handed their Faerie baby to him.

“Leolin.” He cooed gently, not competing with the cries, but still letting Leolin know that he was there.

“We were fine, but he must have started missing you.” Nasta smiled.

“He’s getting better at staying away from me for longer.” Harry said, even as Nasta sat right beside him and pulled him up against his chest, resting his bristly chin on Harry’s shoulder and up against his neck.

Leolin had trailed off his crying and he was looking up at them both, his wet eyelashes clumping together in damp spikes.

“Ma.” He sniffled.
“I’m here, love. You know that your Daddies would never hurt you. You’re safe here, with us.”

“Perhaps not with all these other kids.” Draco added protectively, laying a hand on Leolin’s head from Harry’s other side.

“They’re not allowed near him.” Harry insisted. “If any of them approach, we move him or pass him off, you know that.”

“Those of us who have met you before, and him, know just how delicate he is and we know not to take it to heart if Leolin is moved away.” Amelle said gently. “Besides, who cares about offending anyone when the alternative is any sort of risk to our children?”

“Exactly.” Harry said with a chuckle, cradling Leolin in his arms and trying to ignore Nasta trying to use his own body to cast their Faerie baby in shade.

Ave was the distraction there, when she squirmed and cried out from the pram next to the table. Nasta was forced to turn and pick her up, his hand reaching into one of the half dozen nappy bags attached to, and slipped under, the pram. He found one of the bottles for the girls and he tested it against his arm. It must have still been warm from the thermal pouch, as Nasta deemed it fine and he began to feed Ave without the need for a warming charm.

Harry turned back to Leolin, who was looking up at him. He smiled and Leolin smiled back, a big, gummy grin with half a lone tooth to be seen. Harry’s smile widened at the adorable sight.

Nasta kissed him out of the blue and the scratchy stubble made him chuckle. Nasta had only shaved just before they’d left for Alexander’s.

Harry freed up one hand by pressing Leolin close to his heart, and he rubbed his palm over that spiky stubble.

“I know. I’ll shave again when we get home.”

“Leave it.” Harry purred into his ear. Nasta looked at him with shocked eyes.

“You never want me to leave it. You prefer us all clean-shaven…I prefer to be clean-shaven.”

Harry snorted. “If that were true then you’d wax and have done with it.”
“I tried that before. It was the single most agonising moment of my entire life.” Nasta admitted with a reflexive wince at the memory. “Never again.”

Harry laughed and nuzzled back into Nasta’s cheek. “Just leave it for today. I know that it sometimes makes you sore to shave three times a day.”

“Usually only if I nick myself.” Nasta insisted. “I found a balm that works really well for me.”

Harry nodded. “Take a day off. It’ll be cute to see you with a mini beard.” He laughed.

Nasta snorted, but he nodded. “Okay. I’ll leave it until tomorrow morning, but no one can complain about it.”

“I would imagine that it gets harder to shave it when it’s longer.” Amelle said.

Nasta nodded. “It tugs more when it’s longer. As long as I use shave foam though, it doesn’t make much of a difference, it just takes a little longer. If I left it for a week, however, that’s another matter entirely.”

“He goes from sexy, sophisticated Dragonologist to wild, feral crazy man when he stops grooming himself.” Harry giggled. “It only takes a week for the change to be implemented too.”

“You’re not funny.” Nasta told him, but there was a big grin on his face as he said it.

“Yes I am. Of course I am. The only one funnier is Max.” Harry insisted.

“What about me?” Draco asked.

“You? You have no sense of humour to speak of.” Harry teased.

Draco scoffed, but nudged him gently. Harry kissed him to show that he was only teasing.
“Gather around!” Oliver called out. “The birthday boy wants to blow out the candles! The rest of us just want cake. Everyone grab a kid to keep them still for a minute.”

Harry watched as his babies, and Shae’s, were picked up by those nearest and they all gathered around the huge cake. It honestly looked like a wedding cake it was that big. It must have costed a fortune too.

“I just wanted to say that I couldn’t ask for a better family, for better children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and not forgetting our newest generation, my lone great-great grandchild, Jasmine.” Alexander said, indicating to Xerxes’ oldest granddaughter, Yasmina, who was holding a pink, lacy bundle.

“You’re getting old!” Someone called out from the thick, dense crowd.

“Shut up, Nicodemus.” Alexander threw back with a smile.

“It was Cepheus!” The apparently aggrieved Nicodemus shouted out.

“Was not!”

“I know it was one of you!” Alexander cut in.

Harry laughed with several others. He truly did love being in this family, though not just the Maddisons, but also the Delericeys, the Zabinis and the Malfoys, though the latter could be more accepting and understanding and both former families still had members that he hadn’t met yet. Maybe he should prod his mates a little over that, after all, they had prodded him back when they were newly mated to see the Dursleys, though if he ever found out that any of his mates had been abused as he was then he would have to be locked up before he went on a murderous rampage.

An arm slipped around his waist and he smiled, leaning his body weight onto Draco as they both watched Alexander blow out the mass of candles…the Maddison patriarch had counted every single one of them and plucked out six candles and threw them in the direction of the twins.

“I’m not one hundred just yet!” He had insisted, before taking a breath and blowing out all ninety-four candles in one go. “Now who’s for cake?” He asked, waving his wand and perfectly slicing up the huge cake.
Harry nudged Nasta, stood beside him, and his mate sighed, but smiled, nodding his head and he went to get three paper plates of cake for them. Harry grinned when Nasta was eating his own piece of cake…it was almost as much of a turn on seeing him eating cake as Harry assumed it was for Nasta to watch him eating fruit. They really were an odd bunch, but sometimes odd was good.

He spied his children, sat on the floor with their own little plates, the smallest sliver of cake in front of them that it made Harry laugh and point them out.

“That won’t keep Farren happy.” Draco mused.

“He can have a drink and then some more sandwiches if he’s still hungry.” Harry insisted. “One piece of cake is enough.”

Harry turned back, and he was surprised by a kiss from Nasta. It made him pause to take an extra breath, then he laughed.

“Well, I love you too.” He teased.

Harry sighed happily and rested against Nasta, Leolin still tucked into his one arm. Ave was still tucked into Nasta’s other arm, though not for long it seemed, as she squirmed from his hold and toddled off over the grass, wobbling and needing to put her hands to the floor to steady herself often, but she was off over the grass, being watched indulgently by those in the garden, as she went exploring and making no qualms about gripping onto people’s legs when she lost a little stability. She was always helped back to her feet and set back on her own little way.

“I still can’t believe how well she walks.” Harry said softly.

“She’s getting so strong and she’s growing so quickly. Eva too.” Nasta said happily.

“Very soon we’ll have another little one to look after.” Draco added.

“Just think of all the sleepless nights, two hourly feedings and nappy changes, and eight toddlers on top of that. Who knows, maybe I have twins or triplets.” He said patting his belly gently.

Both his mates groaned. “Why did you have to put it that way?” Draco said.

“Anything could happen.” He said with a shit eating grin. He bent to kiss Leolin’s head. “Though I am fervently praying for nothing over triplets. Three babies on top of eight toddlers is going to be a handful.”

“Both hands full you mean.” Draco sighed.

“All ten hands full.” Harry chuckled. “They already outnumber us. If we have twins, they’ll outnumber us two to one, any more than that, then we’re doomed.”

“We’ll handle it.” Nasta said softly. “We might only have ten hands, but we have unlimited hands with the amount of family members we have, and true, the Maddisons are all mad, but they’re definitely always there when you need them.”

Harry grinned widely as he watched Julius hop onto Max’s back and order him to run down Caesar…Max actually did as asked and he started running around the garden with his Uncle on his back, chasing his brother, who was far too busy laughing to run too far, or too fast.

“They are all mad, but I like it.” Harry said as he looked back at Nasta with a smile. “I never did well with boring and mundane. I think that’s why I chose all four of you. I like…this.” He insisted, waving his hand at the garden and the crazy Maddison family that he loved. “I love them.”

“And we love you.” Draco told him, kissing him.

Harry smiled widely and he looked out at everyone in the garden. He cuddled Leolin and enjoyed the family time together.

“I have never, ever, felt so loved before.” He said softly. “I love this…I love all of you. It’s a good time in my life.”

Harry was hugged and held tightly and he found himself cradled between Nasta’s legs as Draco insisted on going to get them all more tea. He blew out a soft breath and he relaxed, allowing all the love, and madness, to seep into him, as he laughed when several Maddisons set up a sort of ‘war’ together, with one person on the back of another and charging at one another. Max had dumped his Uncle Julius and had teamed up with the smaller, lighter Caesar. Harry cheered for them both and urged them on as they started winning all the ‘battles’ going on. They only lost when Richard wheedled Myron into playing and with Myron in the game, everyone else was flattened. Harry couldn’t remember laughing so much, or so hard, in a very long time. It felt amazing.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: This took me a little longer to get out than I had planned, I’ve been rather unsettled in real life these last several days and I haven’t been able to do anything. I do have a good start on chapter 111, but as a result of this unsettled period the next chapter might take a little longer to get out. Just bear with me through this, please lovelies.

I believe that this was everything, lovelies, I hope that you’ve enjoyed this chapter,

StarLight Massacre. X
Poolside Relaxation

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Harry was hugged and held tightly and he found himself cradled between Nasta’s legs as Draco insisted on going to get them all more tea. He blew out a soft breath and he relaxed, allowing all the love, and madness, to seep into him, as he laughed when several Maddisons set up a sort of ‘war’ together, with one person on the back of another and charging at one another. Max had dumped his Uncle Julius and had teamed up with the smaller, lighter Caesar. Harry cheered for them both and urged them on as they started winning all the ‘battles’ going on. They only lost when Richard wheedled Myron into playing and with Myron in the game, everyone else was flattened. Harry couldn’t remember laughing so much, or so hard, in a very long time. It felt amazing.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Eleven – Poolside Relaxation

The summer was cooling off, finally. It had been raining for the last few days and Harry was able to sleep easier, which was a blessing really, as he was getting as cranky as the kids with the continuous lack of decent sleep each night. Not even cooling charms kept him completely comfortable and he was grateful for the small reprieve that the rain brought, even if it did confine them, and the kids, to the house for the most part, though Max had taken Braiden and Farren with him to the supermarket over an hour and a half ago, just to get them out of the house for a bit.

“You look a little pale, Harry. Are you alright?” Blaise asked him.

Harry nodded, though he was a little uncertain. He wasn’t feeling his best, and though he put it down to the lack of sleep the previous week, he was leaning more towards it being the start of a late burst of morning sickness.

“You’re going to be sick, aren’t you?” Blaise persisted.

“Maybe.” Harry admitted.
“We were expecting this, come on.” Blaise said, helping him to his feet.

“Where are you two going?” Draco asked suspiciously from the other side of the room, which got Nasta’s attention from where he was playing a game with Tegan on the floor.

“Bathroom, Harry’s going to be sick.” Blaise answered. “Get some tea on, Draco. Harry will need something sweet to drink afterwards.”

Blaise supported him to the bathroom and Harry was settled onto the tile floor in front of the toilet, he had a strange feeling in his stomach, his mouth was full of saliva and his throat was burning unpleasantly with bile, but still nothing actually came up.

A knock on the door and Nasta entered. “Are you okay?” He asked gently.

“It doesn’t want to come up, it’s so strange.” Harry moaned, even as Blaise stroked his hair.

“Do you want to move to get some tea and then see what happens? Or do you think it’ll be safer to stay where you are?”

Harry thought about that seriously, but ultimately his body made up his mind for him when he shifted to stand up on his dead feeling knees and his stomach cramped.

Harry dived for the toilet as everything he’d eaten that day came rushing back up…it felt like everything he’d eaten for the entire month came rushing back up, and he sobbed between cramps, barely able to get a breath, feeling like he was suffocating and he let out a distressed whine. Immediately four rumbles came back, even Max, far off in the supermarket. Two mates on either side of him soothed him and supported him through the sickness, though perhaps purging would have been a better, more accurate phrase to describe it.

After a while he started going longer between cramping and vomiting and he was able to catch his breath and calm down, the panic easing away now that he could breathe properly.

“There we go.” Nasta soothed gently. “Keep breathing, Caru.”

“I’m better.” He croaked out. “I think it’s all gone.”
“Let’s get your mouth swilled out.” Blaise said, helping him to stand. Harry cupped his hands under the running cold water and he took some into his mouth, swilling and then rinsing until the bitter, acrid taste had gone as Nasta flushed the toilet for him.

He was shivering, trembling almost, with cold and shock. He was escorted on either side to the kitchen where there was a cup of tea waiting for him and some bland, sweet biscuits. He needed the sugar now to combat the shock.

“Thank you, Draco.” He shouted out in a croak, into the other room, as he was helped into a chair and he sipped delicately at the tea, not drinking too much, lest his sore stomach start cramping again.

He nibbled on a biscuit and he just relished being able to breathe again. It had probably been far too much to hope for that the morning sickness would have been completely absent, but he still hoped that he didn’t have much in the way of sickness.

Harry wiggled himself out of his tee-shirt and he took several moments to just breathe. He was feeling too hot and stifled. He laid his head on the cool table top and he closed his eyes, breathing slowly and deeply to regain control of himself.

“Can someone pull my socks off, please?” He asked, feeling enclosed and not a little bit trapped.

Blaise immediately bent down to peel off his socks for him. Harry flexed his toes and he giggled a little as Blaise gave both feet a quick squeeze and then a little rub down.

“Better?” Blaise asked him.

Harry nodded minimally and then chose to hum his agreement instead. He rested against the table top for long minutes and then he eased himself back up.

“How are you feeling now?” Nasta asked him.

“Better.” He said, sipping on more tea. “I think it’s over, now it’s just recovering a little more.”

Nasta nodded and rubbed his back for him. “Do you want to go lay down upstairs or in the other room?”
Harry shook his head. “There shouldn’t be any need. Though this little one really did stir up a thunder storm in my belly! I hope that doesn’t happen again.”

“If it does, leave my balls out of it, please.” Blaise begged him with a grin.

It took Harry a moment to realise what was being alluded to, then the memory of waking up and accidentally kneeing Blaise in the balls came back to him and he laughed.

“Okay, I’ll try!” He insisted. “No promises though. That goes for all of you too.”

“Harry?!” A forced calm voice called out, though they could all detect the hint of panic underneath as the front door was kicked closed. “Nasta?!”

“Everything’s alright, Max. It was a bout of morning sickness.” Nasta said, just as Max walked through the door, Braiden in one arm, Farren in the other.

“Oh, thank god. You have no idea how worried I was. I was just paying for the shopping when your call came through. You have no idea how much I wanted to drop everything and leave.”

“Well I’m glad you didn’t.” Harry said pointedly, looking at the two boys.

“I wasn’t panicked enough to leave them.” Max shook his head. “I would have picked them up and come back, leaving the shopping.”

“How dare you, I’m almost out of coffee!” Blaise faux complained.

Harry giggled. “I wanted grapefruit too. Did you get me grapefruit?”

“I got you grapefruits.” Max nodded with a smile.

“Good.” Harry smiled. “I wanted grapefruit for breakfast.”
“You have a couple now to try.” Max said, coming to give him a kiss on the cheek. He then went to dump Braiden and Farren in the family room before going back out to the car to grab the shopping, much happier, and calmer, than when he’d arrived now that he was assured that nothing untoward had happened and his family were all still safe.

“Are you still okay to go to the scan later?” Draco asked him gently from the doorway into the family room.

Harry nodded. “I should be fine. Remind me to drink that water though.”

“That’s the worst part, isn’t it?”

“The water and not being able to piss it out? Yeah.” Harry laughed.

“I’m so excited.” Max said, much happier now that he knew the little whimper of a distress call had been nothing serious, even as he carried in a million shopping bags in both hands and settled them all on the floor.

“You knew what we were talking about.” Harry chuckled.

“Of course. There’s only one thing where you need to drink a lot of water and hold your bladder for at least an hour.”

“Over an hour. My appointment time always runs over.” Harry groused.

“We know. But just think, love. We’ll know by the afternoon exactly how many babies we’re getting.”

Harry smiled at that. “I am excited for that, and worried. It’s just so uncomfortable.”

“We know, we’ll be there for you.”
“Max, is Talia sure that she wants them all?” Harry fretted.

“She’s sure, she’s excited, Harry.” Max said. “Leolin’s going to Ezrah and Lathen, and you just know that Alayla will be here too, to be all over them.”

Harry nodded and he looked at the list that he’d made. He didn’t want to sound like a distrustful dick, but Talia and Alayla had never had the babies before, especially not seven of them, so he’d written out the schedule and a list of things that the kids weren’t allowed to do and how to act if they did do things they weren’t allowed to do. Max had said that it was okay, that anything that helped him to feel more relaxed was going to be fine. Harry hoped so, he was just worried about being away with all four of his mates and leaving seven babies with Talia and Alayla. He sighed and sucked it up, they were good enough to agree to look after the kids when they really needed a babysitter on rather short notice. It would be fine, they’d be an hour, maybe an hour and a half tops.

“But of all days for your morning sickness to come through, though.” Draco told him.

Harry snorted a laugh. “You should know how much trouble I get in by now, love. We should have actually expected this.”

“Are you feeling better?” Nasta asked him.

Harry nodded. “Yes. I think it’s over now.”

Nasta kissed the side of his head and stroked his hair. It made Harry smile.

“Do you want something to eat now? Or is your belly still delicate?” Nasta asked.

Harry frowned. “I want grapefruit.”

“Give me a minute.” Max said from where he was packing things away, crossing them off the list he had in his hands. He would tick it in the supermarket, then cross it off when he got home and put it away. It was a habit he had picked up from his Mother, Ashleigh, when she had gotten him and his siblings to help with the shopping as young kids. “I haven’t come across them yet.”
Harry nodded, just watching Max pack everything away. All of them would always offer to help him, but he would wave them away and insist that he’d rather do it himself to make sure everything was there and so he knew where it had all been put away. They still always asked if he wanted help, mostly out of courtesy now as they knew he would always refuse, but Harry felt that that was only polite. He’d hate for Max to feel like he was being taken for granted after all.

“There they are.” Max cried out triumphantly, digging in a new bag and plucking out an armful of grapefruits. “Catch, Nas.”

Harry laughed as Max threw one of the grapefruits to Nasta, who caught it easily and rolled his eyes at Max’s antics. Nasta took the fruit to the counter and started preparing it like an orange for Harry to eat, slicing it into segments.

Harry took the bright red pieces that were offered to him on a plate and he ate the sour segments happily.

“Do you like them?” Nasta asked, watching him with a smile.

“Yes and no.” Harry said. “I want them, this was definitely what I wanted, but it’s so sour. Like eating a lemon. Do we have lemons?” He asked a moment later.

“Yes, why?” Max asked.

“I want a lemon.”

“To eat? I was going to make lemonade for us all, I should have enough for that, but you actually want to eat one?” Max asked.

“Don’t judge my food cravings.” Harry pouted.

Max grinned and came to kiss him. “Never, my love. Just make sure you brush your teeth really well with all this citrus fruit. The last thing you need now when your morning sickness has started is a dose of Skele-gro because you have a cavity.”

Harry grumbled but he nodded. He hated Skele-gro so much and he was adamant that he would never have to take another dose of it ever again in his life. Though the dose for a tooth had nothing on the one he’d needed to take to regrow all the bones in his arm.

“You wanted lemons when you were pregnant with the girls.” Max pointed out.

“I did.” He said, grimacing as he remembered some of his more powerful mood swings when he’d wanted lemon in his tea.

“Do you want it in your tea again?” Max asked him, as he went to the fruit bowl and picked up the plumpest, brightest lemon that he could find.

“No. I want to eat it.” Harry said softly.

“Oh, baby, your face will be a picture.” Max laughed, even as he tossed the lemon to Nasta, who dutifully stood and started preparing it, cutting it into wedges for Harry to eat. Harry started salivating just watching him, even as he ate the grapefruit already on his plate.

“Draco, Blaise? Are you two in need of refreshment?” Max called into the room where the younger two had gone when Harry had declared that he was fine and unlikely to be sick again. They were now watching the boisterous babies. Braiden had found his trampoline in the storage cupboard down by their home gym, and he was refusing to share with his siblings, and he was refusing to come off of it.

“We would like some tasty beverages.” Blaise called back. Harry almost choked on his laughter and he needed Nasta to thump his back to ease his airway.

“Stop trying to kill Harry with laughter.” Max called back. “Can I get your tasty beverage order though?”

Harry laughed again and Nasta chuckled, even as he sat beside him to help him if it was needed.

“I want coffee, if Nasta is agreeable. Draco wants water. Oh and Tegan wants juice.” Blaise called out. “And now apparently all of them want juice. It’s going to be a large order, Max!”

Max was laughing to himself, even as he pulled down half a dozen plastic beakers and started pouring in juice from the jug they kept on the counter. It was easier and quicker this way, to just fill the jug instead of making up five individual beakers of fruit squash.

“Can Blaise have coffee?” Max asked as the kettle boiled and he made tea for himself and for Harry.

“Yes.” Nasta said as he watched Harry eating lemon wedges without even a grimace.

“You want a smoothie?” Max asked.

“Please.”

“That kale, broccoli and apple shit you’re drinking, or the orange, bell pepper and carrot gunk you made up this morning?”

Nasta smirked and looked at Max. “The kale and apple one.” He said, purely because he knew the greyish-green drink made Max queasy.

“How you can drink that sludge is beyond me, Nas.” Max said, going to the fridge and taking out the covered jug of said sludge.

Nasta watched as Max poured the thick smoothie into a glass and handed it over quickly. He was more worried about it making Harry sick, but he was too involved with his citrus fruit at the moment. At least the smell of his citrus fruit should be overpowering enough to cover the smell of the drink. It unfortunately wasn’t and mid-chew Harry looked up at him, his nostrils flaring a little as he sniffed. Nasta prepared to move away, when Harry took his glass from him and drained it. Nasta couldn’t have been more surprised in that moment as he sat still in shock. He would have been prepared for any number of reactions, he would have been less surprised if Max had declared that he was going to grow his hair out to his lower back. If Blaise had declared he was going to give up drinking coffee or Draco declared his love of greased pig herding.

“Are you okay?” Max asked Harry in a sort of soft, disgusted horror, almost as if he were expecting Harry to keel over from the drink.

“I’m fine.” Harry declared. “Sorry I took your drink, Nas. It smelt good. Max, I want one too, please.”
A little green in the face, Max nodded and he poured a second glass of the smoothie for Harry and then topped up Nasta’s glass. Nasta could almost see him praying for this new craving to be a short one, but if Harry’s past cravings were anything to go by, then this new phase was here until the baby was born in another five months.

Nasta watched happily as Harry finished the rest of his citrus fruit and sipped on his smoothie as Max made a quick getaway with a tray to take the drinks into the family room. Nasta wouldn’t be surprised if he didn’t come back out for a while.

Nasta, on the other hand, couldn’t leave Harry alone as he nuzzled up to him and threw an arm about his waist to snuggle him into a tight cwtch. Harry just gave him a smile before going back to the fruit, accepting his affections and coddling without a word. Nasta loved moments like this, of course it was made all the more special by the fact that Harry had drank one of his fruit and vegetable smoothies. They weren’t as healthy as eating the actual whole fruits and vegetables, but it was progress and Harry seemed to be enjoying the new healthy diet that the baby had put him on. Nasta couldn’t wait to see him, her, or them later that afternoon. Their first glimpse at their newest clutch who were due in February of the new millennium.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry was still worried about his children, even as he sat in an uncomfortable plastic seat at St Mungos, his bladder fit to burst from the bottle of water he’d been forced to drink before this scan. It was air conditioned in the hospital at least, the icy breeze of a cooling charm coming from the very walls would wash over him every few seconds and it was utterly blissful.

Draco had dropped Leolin off with Ezrah and Lathen, purely because Dain and Kailen had serious business with the court with Sindri being so unwell. The state of things in the Faerie city were declining rapidly if Harry was reading the situation correctly, which didn’t bode well for Leolin’s future there. He was glad that Ezrah and Lathen had gotten out when they had, because there was now no guarantee that Ezrah wouldn’t have been publically executed, unofficially or otherwise, with the state of the place currently if he’d still be in the city. Leolin was at their new, modest home with them, as Harry (and his mates) absolutely refused to have Leolin taken to the city with it in such turmoil. As again, with the state that it was currently in, there were no guarantees that they’d ever see him again or the actual risk that someone would just try to take him. Not that Dain or Kailen would have allowed it, but they were just two Valkyries, and they would be exiled or even executed for going against the will of the court, and with the both of them gone and two new Faeries on the court, then the chances of Leolin remaining in the care of a family of Drackens, their biological son or not, was very slim. Slimmer if Eitri was removed from the court along with Narilla, both for being opposition Faes, especially with Donella as the acting head of the court in Sindri’s place. Harry knew that if Donella was given the chance, then she would absolutely see Dain, Kailen, Eitri and Narilla off of the court as soon as possible and she would try her all to get Leolin from them. It was all very unsettled and unsettling. Harry wanted to keep Leolin closer than ever because of it.

“You look like you’re going to your death, love.” Max told him. “Breathe deeper and calm down. I know you want to take a leak, I know that you’re worried, but it’ll all be over soon.”
“Why do they even have appointment times?” Harry hissed as he crossed his legs together more firmly.

All four of his mates soothed him and touched him, but ultimately Harry was called by an orderly twenty minutes over his appointment time and he was finally able to get into a bed, with just his tee-shirt removed. Thankfully his appointment was with Healer Almus, or he might have actually kicked off about how uncomfortable he was and how long he’d had to wait in this state.

“Good afternoon, how are we all today?” Healer Almus asked happily as he came into the room.

“I need a leak!” Harry complained.

The Healer chuckled and nodded. “Okay, a quick scan. I understand that you’re pregnant again, how is that holding up with your injury?”

“Alright so far.” Harry said. “The Dracken Healers said it might be a problem if I’m carrying higher multiples, so this scan is very important.” Harry said nervously.

“Okay, well I’m going to do a magical scan today, I don’t want to dig a transducer into your stomach, so I’m going to monitor you through a scan with a wand.”

“I’ve had one before, with Braiden.” Harry said.

Healer Almus nodded. “It’s in your notes. It’s normal procedure to perform a magical scan on a first pregnancy, but we find normal ultrasound works just as well most of the time and it doesn’t drain our magic when we might need it for an emergency. You’d have needed an internal ultrasound if you were a Muggle.”

“If I were a Muggle I wouldn’t be pregnant.” Harry pointed out.

Healer Almus laughed. “Touché, Harry. Right, let’s get started, you lot stand this side so I have room to move around you all.” He said to his mates. “First things first, let’s give you a general check up and see how you’re doing.”
It was easier to ignore his bladder under his excitement of seeing his new clutch, and the lingering worry that he might need to have a selective reduction surgery if he was having anything over twins. He would press to keep all three if he was having triplets, but if he was having quadruplets, or another set of quintuplets, then there would be no fighting the selective reduction. Anything more than triplets would be a serious threat to his own life, and if he got too big too soon, then his babies might not even be viable before his guts ripped open and killed them all.

Draco’s hand on his calmed him down as his blond mate recognised his mental torture and took his hand and held it as small washes of magic flitted over him.

“Your recovery is going really well, Harry. You’re eight weeks pregnant and baby seems to be doing well. Let’s see how many we’re dealing with this time, shall we?” Healer Almus asked softly as he laid his wand horizontally over Harry’s belly. As it was still flat, it was much more secure and didn’t try to roll off as it had when he’d had his first scan of Braiden.

Healer Almus said a short phrase in Latin and suddenly the 3D picture of his insides were visible to them all, though only Healer Almus was moving as he looked at the 3D image from all angles. The wand felt like a thin, heated rod on his belly, making him itch to knock it off, but it wasn’t the slightest bit painful, just uncomfortable and strange.

Harry could barely see anything, or make anything out, but there was one thing that he could make out and his heart jumped in elation.

“That’s just the one baby, isn’t it?” He asked excitedly, unable to stop himself from getting his hopes up.

“Yes, I can see that clearly enough.” Healer Almus said happily, taking down notations. “You’re having a single baby, Harry. No surgery or extra precautions for you.”

Harry could have cried in relief as he sent a blinding smile to his mates. “Just the one baby!” He said, as if they couldn’t hear Healer Almus themselves.

Max kissed him, Draco squeezed his hand, Nasta stroked his hair and Blaise, the furthest away from his head, touched his belly, just above the wand.

“You still need to be careful, Harry. This isn’t an excuse to start getting complacent or reckless. You still need to take care of yourself, but just the one baby is the best news we could have expected. Both you and baby have a high chance of survival of this pregnancy and the subsequent birth, barring any unforeseen complications, of course. Baby seems to be doing very well.”
Harry couldn’t tear his eyes away from the image of just the one baby. His first singleton since Braiden. It was a relief, a huge weight from his shoulders, to know that he was having just the one baby. He wouldn’t be put at additional risk, he wouldn’t need any sort of surgery to reduce the number of embryos he was carrying. This was the best case scenario. He wasn’t completely cursed after all, it seemed.

“Let me get a Doppler on you, Harry, so we can check baby’s heartbeat.” Healer Almus said, more for courtesy as no one was paying him the slightest bit of attention as the baby shifted within the 3D image. Harry felt nothing, even as he watched the baby move.

The rushing sound of blood passing through the umbilical cord sounded in the room and Healer Almus made more notes. He moved the Doppler around and then the whooshing sound that Harry had come to associate with his unborn babies’ heartbeat came through clear.

“One hundred and sixty-eight beats per minute. That’s a little fast for this early gestation, but it’s nothing to be concerned about. Try and rest a little more, Harry.” Healer Almus said, making another notation. “I’ll put a note in your file to check up on that at your next scan and we’ll keep an eye on you, but it’s nothing to worry about just yet.”

“But everything is fine, right?” Harry asked, after a worried look to his mates.

“Yes, baby is perfectly fine for the moment, Harry. Don’t worry and try to destress a little more.”

“Will strenuous exercise affect the baby?” Draco asked.

“No, whatever sexual activities you want to do, you can happily do them.” Healer Almus said matter-of-factly. “That won’t affect the baby, but stress will. I assume it was the stress of finding out how many babies you were carrying and the loom of the maybe procedure of the selective reduction?”

Harry nodded. “I have been worrying about that a lot, especially as the scan date came closer. There’s the court case too, that’s really stressful for me as well.”

“That could be why baby’s heart rate is slightly above average. We’ll monitor it now, but you have just one baby, Harry. You’re going to be fine and the threat to you and your baby has decreased significantly, especially with how well you’ve recovered from your injury. You can let go of all that stress now and then it should stop affecting baby.”

Harry nodded seriously and he blew out a breath. He knew that stress could affect the baby, but to actually encounter it was very worrying. He clutched at Draco’s hand more tightly and he felt an answering squeeze.

“Is that all he needs? Some rest and less stress?” Nasta asked seriously.

“Yes, those are my orders as a Healer. A bit more calm from now on and less stress.”

“This doesn’t mean bed rest, though, does it?” Harry added quickly, for clarification.

“No. There’s absolutely no need for you to stop being active. In fact I encourage it as much as you can manage. I want you to go for nice, short walks, maybe some playtime with the kids, and with your mates.” Healer Almus chuckled. “But nothing too vigorous, so you’ll have to wait to start wrestling and bungee jumping again.”

Harry laughed at that and he nodded, sitting up and placing his hands on his belly. It felt even more real to him now and he smiled.

“Here are some photos for you all.” Healer Almus said. “I’ll book you in now for another scan in a few weeks, so we can check baby’s heartbeat again and maybe for a gender too, if you want to know it, of course, but for now everything is looking good.”

“Just take it easy and have some more fun.” Harry reiterated.

“Exactly. I’ll see you in a few weeks.”

Harry was much happier as Blaise helped him to get dressed again as Max flicked through all the scan photos, a wide smile on his face. Of course he was ‘winning’ on the baby front, with four of the babies being biologically his, only just beating Nasta, who had three biological babies. Not that they made it into a competition, they were all just very proud and it likely had a dash of male pride in there too, or something. Harry didn’t care, he was beating all of them, as he had eight babies…no. No, he had nine babies now. That made him grin happily as he placed his hand back over his belly, nine babies. He would always beat the rest of his mates, as he was the only one of them to carry all their babies. Nine of them.
Harry was escorted out, almost with an honour guard around him as his mates walked on all sides of him. He was so excited that he forgot to be worried about Talia and Alayla left at home with seven of his children, or at least he had until they reached the line for the floo banks of the hospital.

“I hope they’re all okay.” He said softly.

“No stressing, Harry.” Max said. “They’ll be fine, the kids will be running the girls ragged and keeping them on their toes. This will be good for them and they are the kids’ Aunty’s, they need some time with them too.”

Harry nodded. “I know. You can invite them to dinner if you want. In fact, let’s have a dinner party. Invite everyone who can come on such short notice and we’ll announce our new single baby officially.” Harry said happily. “If I need to destress then a nice, easy late summer party could be good. Nas, see if Idris and Nerys can come too!”

Nasta laughed at his enthusiasm. “Alright, Caru. Everyone should be okay for a few hours of family time. It’ll be nice to tell everyone together.”

“The only exception will be Caesar and Amelle, they might be able to come for a little while, but they’ve only just gone home, the time differences really hit the girls hard.” Max said.

“That’s okay, there’s no pressure, it’s just a dinner party.” Harry said, getting excited. “Blaise, are you okay with this? I know you don’t like too much company. Do you need to destress?”

Blaise wrapped his arms around him and kissed the back of his head. “I’ll be fine, Bello. It’s just family and I can always snatch a baby and declare they need a nappy change if I need a moment.”

Harry smiled and kissed Blaise. They reached the collection of several floo banks and Max went through first, then Harry went and he was caught on the other side by Max, who swung him around gently and pulled him up into a kiss.

Harry laughed and he nibbled at Max’s lips before diving in for a proper kiss.

“Stop molesting my brother.” Alayla teased as she came to see who had come through the floo.

“Laya! Don’t tell him to stop. You’re cock blocking me, sis.”
“Good.” Alayla laughed.

“Has everything been alright?” Harry asked as Blaise came through the floo.

“Everything’s been fine, as you said Calix didn’t stay down for his nap and shortly after you’d left he was back up and Farren didn’t drop off for his at all, so he had both me and Talia all over him, but the others were as good as gold. The twins are too cute, they kept pointing out pictures in the books and me and Talia would tell them what it was and they’d stare at us as we repeated the word and then they’d point to something else, it was so cute!”

“Right, I need to take a bathroom break a minute.” Harry said with a sense of urgency. “I’ll come catch up with everything then.”

Harry scurried off and he heard his mates laughing at him, but he no longer cared. His bladder situation had gone over an emergency and was now in the classification of utterly dire. Once he was empty and he had washed up, he felt so much better and it was almost a relief now to be able to stand without the fear of every step forcing his bladder to empty without conscious control. He made his way into the kitchen and then into the family room, where his babies were happily greeting their Daddies. It made him smile as he went and greeted them all one by one before sitting down happily.

“So, what’s this about a dinner party?” Talia asked, her jet black eyes glittering happily at the thought.

“We thought it would be nice to have the family around for a get together. Only an hour or two, so we can share the news we got today.”

“I’ll go tell the family.” Alayla said. “I’m so excited.”

Harry smiled and watched her rush off, Talia following more sedately.

“I’ll go and see what my family are doing.” Nasta said. “Max, are you staying?”
“Yes, I’m going to get our gorgeous mate a cup of tea and then start a feast.”

“Nothing too much, it’s too hot for that.” Harry complained.

“As you wish, Master.”

“Don’t call me that, it sounds awful.” Harry frowned.

Max laughed. “Whatever you want.”

Nasta, Blaise and Draco all left to go and invite their family members to the little dinner party and Harry sighed happily as he sunk down to the floor to play with his happy babies. He felt silly now for ever having worried in the first place, but he couldn’t really help it. Since his scan he felt so much more relaxed and calmer. Knowing that he didn’t have to have a selective reduction, or even think of such a procedure, was a massive, crushing weight from his shoulders.

“Here you go, love.” Max said, bending and passing him a cup of tea.

“Thank you, Max. I love you.”

“I love you too, beautiful. Rest up and drink up. I think a simple chicken salad with pasta and cheese for dinner will do, you okay with that?”

Harry nodded. “Sounds fantastic, Max.”

“Of course it does, I’m cooking it.” Max winked and Harry laughed him out of the door and back into the kitchen.

Harry played with his children, making sure that they were well and that they kept hydrated in the heat. It was cooler today with the rain, as it had been for the last few days, but it was still hot.

Blaise was the first person back, with Marianna and Josiah. Harry wanted to abandon ship then and there. Josiah wasn’t a bad man, he was just so boring that Harry had no desire to get to know the man and as a result, two and a half years on and they were still virtual strangers.
Thankfully Draco arrived less than a minute later with both Narcissa and Lucius, when Harry was just about finishing his own greetings. The two women greeted one another happily enough and Lucius, ever the diplomat and stickler for formalities, struck up a conversation with Josiah, taking the heat right from Harry, who was able to sidle away.

Very shortly after that the house was filling up and Harry laughed as Aneirin showed up with Nasta, Idris at his shoulder.

“There’s the little cutie, hello again, Harry.” Idris greeted as he hugged him tight.

“Hi, Idris. How are you? Thank you for coming.”

“Think nothing of it, baban.” Idris said easily. “I promised I’d come and spend some more time with family and that’s what I intend to do. How are the munchkins?”

“Fine, they’re all fine. They’re all here except Leolin. He’s taking some Faerie time with Ezrah and Lathen.”

“Oh, you let Ezrah and Lathen look after him?” Aneirin asked interestedly.

Harry nodded. “I trust them both and poor Ezrah really needs the confidence boost with little babies, he’ll never be able to get his own if he carries on stressing so much.”

“At least Lathen is more level headed.” Aneirin chuckled. “I did like young Ezrah when I saw him, mind.”

“Yeah, only young Ezrah is twenty years older than you are.” Harry pointed out with a laugh.

Aneirin snorted. “He doesn’t look like it.”

“Well you don’t look sixty either. You’re really good for your age.”

“Nasta! Your mate is hitting on your Father!” Idris called out, loudly.
“He knows.” Harry played off with a grin. “I do it all the time.”

“He really does.” Nasta chuckled as he came up behind Harry and bent to kiss his cheek.

“I really missed you.” Idris told Nasta as they hugged tight. “Being in Korea isn’t the same when I haven’t got you jabbering away at my waist as a little translator.”

“I miss you too, Uncle. You and Nerys should take more breaks from work and come home more often. You know where I’ll be now.” Nasta said, indicating the house.

“I never thought you’d be a homebody.”

Nasta snorted. “I’m a Dracken, Idris. Of course I was always going to be a homebody. I got all my travelling and adventures out of the way early. I love my family too much to even explain adequately. I wouldn’t want to be anywhere else.”

“Except perhaps in bed.” Harry whispered to Nasta, after first pulling him down into a kiss by the sleeve of his tee-shirt.

Nasta laughed and then kissed him again. “There is always that.”

“Mummy.”

Harry looked down automatically to Calix and he smiled without thinking about it as he hunched down on his haunches to pick up Calix when his son raised his arms to him.

“This is Granddad Aneirin and Idris.” Harry pointed them out as he straightened back up.

“Ganda.” Calix said, reaching out immediately for Aneirin.

Aneirin gave him a big hug and Harry shook his head. There had been no point in picking up Calix in the first place. Well, almost none, of course he would always try to pick up his children if he could, even if it was for less than ten seconds.
“Harry, are you alright?” Richard came to ask him, worming his way between Aneirin and Idris. “Only Laya said that you wanted us all here.”

Harry nodded. “Yes. I had my first scan today.” He said.

“Is it good news?” Richard asked immediately.

Harry nodded again. “The best.”

“You’re going to be okay and the new clutch is okay?”

Harry grinned. “Yes.”

Richard let out a soft cheer and hugged him tight.

“That’s wonderful, Harry.” Aneirin said. “Definitely worth a dinner party.”

“We just though it better to announce it to all of you at the same time, instead of chasing up who had been officially told or not.” Nasta said. “This was Harry’s idea of doing things.”

“Though the official announcement won’t come until dinner, but I just wanted you to know its good news, not bad, and I’m going to be just fine.”

“Good.” Richard declared, pulling him forward and bending to press a kiss to his head. “I saw that you put Max to good use. He’s better off in the kitchen.”

“Nah, he makes a wonderful hostess too.” Harry snickered. “Especially when he can use his finest china tea set.”

“Behave.” Nasta chastised him.
“I always behave.” Harry grinned. Nasta flicked his nose and wandered away, over to his Aunt who had gone to see the twin girls.

Richard threw an arm around him and tugged him over to Myron, who had been attacked by Tegan and Regan as soon as they saw him.

“Harry. Are you well?” He asked, bouncing Tegan into the same arm as Regan and pulling him into a tight, loving hug. Alexander popped up a moment later and pulled Harry into his own arms.

“I’m fine. It’s good news. All good news.” Harry said. “We just wanted to share it officially without anyone being left out.”

“Oh, thank Merlin.” Alexander cursed. “When Talia came to ask if I was free for an hour or two for dinner here I got a bad feeling in my gut.”

“No, it’s good news.” Harry smiled.

“So the new clutch isn’t anything over twins?”

“Ah, you have to wait for dinner!” Harry said stubbornly. “Max should be done soon, he’s only doing a chicken salad.”

“I’m just glad I don’t have to cook, or subject myself to Myron’s cooking.” Richard laughed. “We were both too hot and feeling too lazy to make anything. This way, I get a good meal and there are no dishes!”

Myron scoffed and gave his husband a look. “We’re here to share in their good news, Richard.”

“Of course we are. It’s just a bonus that we’re getting fed too.” Richard laughed.

“Nice to know that you still appreciate my cooking.” Max said as he wandered over. “It’s only a simple pasta salad, but it’s too hot for anything else.”
“Plus you might have had plans and we didn’t want to ruin anything just for our news.” Harry said with a smile.

“Your news is important to us.” Alexander insisted. “I can’t wait to hear the good news.”

“Two minutes. I can’t wait until after dinner, so I’m going to tell before we start eating.” Harry said excitedly.

“Get going then, it’s all ready and on the table waiting.” Max said with a grin.

“You shit.” Harry complained. “You didn’t tell on purpose!”

Max laughed and darted away.

“Farren, Braiden, in the kitchen, loves, dinner’s ready.” Max called out clearly. “The rest of you feel free to follow on.” He laughed as he escorted his two sons into the kitchen to help them onto their booster seats. Though Braiden was very capable of climbing into the chair himself.

It took several minutes to get everyone sat at the table, around the kids, who were all in their own seats for their dinners, an adult in between them all.

“Now, I wanted to have this sort of dinner party to share our news.” Harry said once the huge kitchen table, that they only ever really used the tip of, was filled to bursting with family members. “I don’t think I can even wait to tell you, so feel free to take a leaf out of the kids’ book and start eating…” He said with a giggle as he indicated the mess that the babies were already in with their half pasta, half salad dinner. “…but I just wanted to let you all know that I had my first scan today and it’s all good news.”

Everyone cheered. Idris, Sanex and Richard were the loudest and Harry couldn’t help the grin that spread over his face.

“I know. We haven’t had a lot of good news, or good luck, lately, but with the stress of a pregnancy after everything that happened recently, particularly high multiples like these little angels…” He said ruffling Calix’s hair. “…and the very real risk of the death of myself and all the babies I was carrying without a selective reduction, we haven’t really had enough reasons to celebrate this pregnancy, but today we found out that we’re having just the one baby…”

There were more raucous cheers for that and it made Harry giggle.

“…which means! Which means, that there’s no threat to me, no risk to the baby and no need for any selective reduction surgery!” Harry called out to more cheers. “The baby is fine and healthy. We don’t know the gender yet, it was too soon, but there was a slightly increased heartrate, Healer Almus thinks that it’s because I was stressed over the pregnancy, but that’s all gone now. That one scan has taken everything away now and we can just be happy to know that we’re having just one more baby.”

“Nine is enough!” Sanex called out.

“At least for now.” Harry chuckled. “But this is why we called you here, to share in our good news…our brilliant news, and we have scan pictures too.”

At that, Max passed out the scan photos he’d placed by the side of his plate and Harry sat back down, between Calix and the end of the table, where Eva and Ave were sat in highchairs chewing on some scattered sweetcorn and tiny pieces of diced cucumber.

He started eating his own chicken, pasta salad and he watched happily as pictures of his new baby, their ninth child, was passed around everyone. It was a wonderful feeling, to know that this baby was the only one, and that all the scary risks that had been spoken of were now nothing but words and wisps of an idea that would never need to be thought of again. He was having just the one baby. It was the best news he’d ever heard.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Things settled down as September approached, though Harry’s small, cooler reprieve ended with the rain. It got hotter again very quickly, overnight in fact, and Harry had had enough. He snapped at his mates that he’d be back in an hour and he’d taken Tegan with him as he stormed his way to the supermarket that was a twenty minute walk away. He’d bought an inflatable swimming pool. Two of them.

“It is hot out, isn’t it?” The cashier laughed as she scanned both pools.

Harry nodded as he counted out the notes from his wallet ready to pay. “Way too hot and the kids are restless too. I was worried you would have sold out of pools by now. I just wasn’t expecting this second heatwave, I thought it was all over now that it’s almost autumn.”

“No, we got a delivery last night. Those ones are new though” The cashier said, pointing at the one he’d gotten for the kids as she put the several large bags of ice cubes through. “We’re well stocked on ice cubes too.” She laughed.

Harry nodded. “I’m just so hot, I can’t even function properly. I just need something to cool me down. All these ice cubes are going in the pool.”

The cashier was surprised into laughing loudly. Harry had picked up a few more things and he packed them all into the carrier bags, thankful that he’d had the forethought to charm them before he’d come to the supermarket as he hefted them all onto the trolley with no problem.

“Tegan, come back here, sweetheart.” He called out as his daughter’s curiosity got the better of her and she wandered away on quick little feet. She ignored him. “Tegan! Sorry, I’ll be right back.” He insisted as he hurried after her and snatched her up. He carried her back to the trolley and he shook his head. “She’s so curious about everything.”

“How old is she?” The cashier asked.

“She’s twenty months old now, she’ll be two in December.”

“A Christmas baby?”

“Almost, the thirty-first.”

“Your wife must have been so uncomfortable during Christmas.”

“You have no idea.” Harry said with a secret huff of laughter as he handed over the several notes. “Have a nice day.” He said to the poor girl being forced to work on such a hot day as he accepted the change and his receipt. He took Tegan’s hand in one of his own and he pushed the trolley with the other.
He got them outside with no problems, other than Tegan trying to wander off or head towards other people. Harry wrapped the huge, bulky bags around his wrist and he lifted them out of the trolley and he started walking back towards home.

He spoke all the way home to Tegan, who trotted beside him happily, a sun hat covering her head and little pink sunglasses over her eyes as she looked at the new environment. Overall though he was glad to reach home and the coolness of the shaded inside that was charmed cool.

“There you are, are you alright?” Max asked him.

Harry nodded. “I will be in half an hour or so, are the kids still out back?”

“Daddy, juice.” Tegan interrupted.

“Yep, they’re all still outside.” Max answered him as he hefted up Tegan and went to get her a drink.

Harry went right out the back and he set down his shopping bags.

“Ooo, what goodies did you get?” Blaise asked.

“Two bloody swimming pools!” Harry said with a grin, swiping his hand over his sweaty forehead.

“You did? Really?” Max asked, the look of pure joy on his face making Harry laugh as he wandered out back with Tegan drinking from a beaker.

“You can buy a swimming pool in a box?” Draco asked.

Harry was shocked to realise that this would be a Muggle thing that Draco, and maybe Blaise, didn’t know about.

“Oh yes, watch this.” Harry said as he tugged the massive, adventure pool from its box and a quick spell later had it inflated, including the little bouncy castle area, the reason he’d bought this one as he knew that Braiden would love it.
Max had run to get the garden hose and he started filling the pool happily. The look on Draco’s face was of pure amazement and Harry was even more excited now.

“This adventure one is for the kids, obviously. This big, deep one is for us! It even has seats.”

“Seats?” Draco asked as he and Blaise took the huge pool from its box and another simple spell had that pool inflated too, showing off the corner seats.

“It only has four of them, but I figured I’m small enough to occupy a lap.” He giggled and winked.

Max laughed and everyone seemed so much happier and more energetic as Max moved the hose from the baby pool to the adult pool. He left it in the latter and checked the former.

“Uh, Harry, I don’t want to burst your bubble, but we’re only potty training Braiden. The nappies.” Blaise said, looking so apologetic that Harry laughed.

He went back to the shopping bags and he pulled out the packages of swimmer nappies. He tossed one to Blaise.

“Get these babies into the swimming nappies and then unleash them on the pool.” Harry said as he took the other pack and wrestled Calix into one before Nasta wrestled him to get more sun cream onto him, as all he was wearing now was a nappy.

Braiden was the first one into the large pool and Harry smiled as he clambered in over the side and went right to the wet bouncy area. Calix was second on and he went right to the small slide, Draco helping him to climb the little hand and foot holds.

Harry sighed happily as he watched them. This was a good idea.

“Why did you buy a dozen bags of ice cubes?” Max asked as he went looking through the other shopping bags.

“For the pool, Max. I want to be cold.” Harry said as he took one bag, tore it open and dumped the cubes into the adult pool.
Harry pulled off all his clothes and left just his boxers on before he clambered into the pool and sunk into the icy water. Max dumped another bag of ice in with him and Harry groaned happily.

“This is the best.” He declared as he rolled in the water just filling up the bottom of the pool, rolling in ice.

“These kids are going mental.” Blaise chuckled as he watched them sliding, paddling and bouncing.

“Good, let them get soaking wet and tired out. Then we can soak in our pool all night.” Harry laughed. “It might be good for a bit of...bouncing of our own and Healer Almus did say he encouraged it.”

Max’s smile lit up the garden and Blaise’s laugh was infectious and soon all of them were laughing.

“Alright, that’s our night made. Let’s tire these little monsters out first though.” Nasta chuckled from where he was kneeling on the grass beside the end of the slide, catching babies, mostly Calix, as they slid down it and into the pool, splashing Nasta every time. At least that was his way of staying cool in the awful heat.

Of course Leolin was safely tucked in his baby gym in the shade, but even Eva and Ave paddled about in the few inches of water in the paddling pool area.

“Let me go grab the camera.” Blaise said as he hurried back into the house to find a camera, any camera. They had several of them inside.

Harry didn’t even notice Blaise come back out as he swam from one seat to the other in the ridiculously large pool. He’d bought the biggest, deepest pool that he could find for him and his mates. The cold hose water and the hundreds of ice cubes made him feel utterly relieved as he turned onto his back and just floated on the surface like he was in the bath.

“You look so pleased with yourself.” Blaise said, right before he snapped a photo.

“I am pleased with myself. This was a great idea!”
“I wish you’d told us where you were going, I could have run you in the car.” Max insisted.

“It’s a million degrees, there was no way I was getting in a car in this heat!” Harry denied. “Do you want me part boiled and then roasted?”

That made Max laugh uproariously. “You’re not a potato.” He said with a wink.

“I feel like one floating in all this water.” Harry giggled.

“You’re so daft, I love it.” Max told him, taking a leaf from his book and stripping down to his boxers and sliding in with him. “Oh, Merlin that’s cold.” He sighed in relief as the icy water cooled him down.

“Told ya.” Harry grinned.

Max pulled him into a kiss as Harry paddled past before he rested in the one seat of the pool, throwing his head and shoulders over the inflatable side.

They naturally switched around every now and then so that he and Max were on baby watching duty and Nasta and Draco could have a dip in the pool, Blaise was doing his own thing, with the camera, snapping photos, then coming to help with the kids and then going to dip in the pool himself, but Harry was very happy with his idea of getting these pools. He’d even bought little freeze pops. Of course they weren’t ready straight off of the supermarket shelf, but a simple freezing charm and they were and the kids enjoyed those as the icy treats turned their tongues orange, blue, red and yellow.

It was a good afternoon, a really good afternoon and their kids were really tired as they were carefully dried off and then fed a late dinner. They’d already had what amounted to a bath already, so Harry was content to just separate them off into pairs and read them a story in their pyjamas. He got Regan and Calix, Max took Farren and Tegan, Draco had Leolin, Blaise had their twin girls and Nasta had Braiden. They were all in separate bedrooms, reading and calming the kids down and as both the boys dropped off to sleep on him, Harry moved them to their cots one by one.

He smiled and waited for his mates to do the same, tucking himself into the soft, padded rocking chair in the corner of the room. He didn’t mean to fall asleep, but he stirred when someone picked him up. He groaned and clutched tight at the body holding him. Draco chuckled just above him.

“Come on sleepy, let’s get you to bed.”

“No. It’s too soon. Take me downstairs.” Harry whined. “I need a drink.”
Draco sighed, but did as he was told and changed direction from the master suite to the stairs.

“Did he wake up?” Nasta asked.

“Yes.” Harry mumbled. “I wanna drink.”

Nasta chuckled softly. “Take him into the living room, I’ll get us all a drink and we can relax a little. Max is already asleep though.”

“You’ll never get him upstairs.” Harry said, eyes still closed and head tucked into Draco’s neck.

“He’s already upstairs. He fell asleep reading to Tegan and Farren and I went looking for him when he was the only one missing. All three of them were asleep together.”

“Did you get a picture?” Harry asked more seriously, managing to gather the energy to lift his head.

Nasta nodded. “Of course I did. I wasn’t passing that opportunity up. But I got Blaise to get the kids into their cots and then I carried Max to bed myself. Thankfully he was only across the hall. I’m strong, I wrestle with juvenile dragons for a career, but he is heavy and bulky too. A couple of feet more and I might not have made it.”

Harry chuckled and he was carried into the smaller living room, where Blaise was already resting with a drink of his own.

“You woke him up.” Blaise accused Draco.

“He needed a drink.” Draco defended as he sat with Harry curled in his lap.

“Is Max still out of it?” Blaise asked.

“He’s down for the night.” Nasta answered.
“At least breakfast should be early tomorrow.” Harry joked.

There were snorts and chuckles and Harry smiled before he sat up a bit more and stretched. He took the glass from Nasta and took a few sips of the cold pumpkin juice, which woke him up a little more.

“Why is it still so hot?” He complained as he rested the cold glass against his bare chest.

“The heat that has been trapped on all the surfaces during the day is rising now that the air is cooler. It makes it feel hotter and more humid.” Professor Nasta told them as he slouched back on the settee.

Harry groaned and rolled the glass to the other side of his chest to cool it down.

“I feel like I can’t breathe.” He complained. “Like there’s no air.”

A moment later a gust of icy air washed over him and Draco and they both moaned happily. Nasta chuckled at them both, his wand out as he cast a cooling charm on the room.

“I love magic.” Harry declared, basking in the chill air that now surrounded him.

“I just don’t even want to do anything. It’s too hot and too draining to do anything.” Blaise complained.

Harry hummed his agreement. “I know. I just want to lay about and do nothing. It’s not productive, but who gives a fuck in this heat?”

“It’s not like we have anything else to do. Max vanished the water from the pools ready to fill them up fresh tomorrow. The dishes are being washed by themselves with another spell, everything is clean and tidy, what more do we need to do? The kids are all in bed and as long as none of them wake up, we can just sit here and do nothing if we please.” Nasta said.

“Good, I don’t want to move.” Draco groaned.
“Me either.” Harry agreed. “Let’s just stay in this wonderfully cold room for a few hours and then get to bed ourselves. It’s going to be difficult enough to sleep tonight with cooling charms, we could use the early night.”

“You and baby especially. You were very active today.” Blaise told him.

Harry laughed as he remembered splashing his mates, playing with his children, and climbing the inflatable slide and going down it with Ave. Today had been a good day, or at least the afternoon had been a good one. They needed more days like this and more reminders of the love and happiness of their large family. Harry was already scheming with the three other mates in this room for Max’s thirty-third birthday in a few weeks. They’d already ordered the biggest inflatable obstacle course that they could find. It was going to be Max versus everyone else, particularly Caesar. It was going to be hilarious and fun. Harry couldn’t wait.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I’m still rather unwell, lovelies, so this chapter is a shortish one. I’m still off work and not at my best, so I apologise for any mistakes that might have been in this chapter. Real life is really kicking me down at the minute, but hopefully another week and everything will be back to normal and I can beat this condition once and for all. Fingers crossed.

Anyway, this seems to be all, I’m really not concentrating well at the moment, but I’m sorry if I missed anything, until next time, lovelies, and hopefully when I’m well again and not too dizzy to stay sat up for more than an hour at a time, I can do a little more in the way of moving this fic along and getting our new ninth baby born. I can’t wait for that.

Oh, and happy twentieth anniversary to Harry Potter and the Philosopher’s Stone! I was a little seven year old reading this book with my Mam twenty years ago now, we’d each read a page each, one chapter a night, and then years later I found out that when I went to bed that first night she stole the book and read it all the way through without me. No wonder she was never as surprised as me when all the good bits popped up.
StarLight Massacre. X
Cross-Examination

Chapter Notes

A/N: For Steve, one of the Facebookers, happy birthday, lovelie. I hope you enjoy the chapter.

Last Time

Harry laughed as he remembered splashing his mates, playing with his children, and climbing the inflatable slide and going down it with Ave. Today had been a good day, or at least the afternoon had been a good one. They needed more days like this and more reminders of the love and happiness of their large family. Harry was already scheming with the three other mates in this room for Max’s thirty-third birthday in a few weeks. They’d already ordered the biggest inflatable obstacle course that they could find. It was going to be Max versus everyone else, particularly Caesar. It was going to be hilarious and fun. Harry couldn’t wait.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Twelve – Cross-Examination

There was only one thing, in Harry’s humble opinion, that was worse than being stuck in an early September heat wave while pregnant, and that was being stuffed into a formal suit and stuck in a stuffy court room too.

He was on the stand as well, defending himself from the questions and allegations of the Dursleys’ lawyer, Mister Chorley. He wanted to go back a week, when he was lounging around in his garden, dipping in a swimming pool when he got too hot, playing with his babies, laughing with his mates.

“Mister Potter, is it true that you would scream as loudly as you could at night to deliberately wake your relatives?” The lawyer asked him.

Harry took a moment to take a breath. “No.” He answered simply. “I suffered from vivid nightmares which did leave me screaming. It was never deliberate and I never knew that I was doing it until… until I was woken up by Vernon dragging me from the bed.”

“So you deliberately sabotaged their sleep so that they would be constantly exhausted?”
“No, there was nothing deliberate about it.” Harry said, trying to keep his own temper. He had never been more grateful that Richard had told Max to slip him a few drops of calming draught with breakfast.

“But you did wake them up and disturb their sleep on a nightly basis?”

Harry took another moment to breathe deeply and he thought quickly about a way to get the truth out in this word trap of a muddle without the truth getting lost in misleading answers. Draco had told him to never agree with the opposition lawyer, to think about the question and the answer first and in this situation, he couldn’t just agree with the man as it would look bad on him, not the Dursleys, or at least that was the theory behind the action.

“Because of the nightmares I suffered with, yes.” He answered calmly, manoeuvring himself out of the trap nicely.

“Do you have any evidence that you had any nightmares at all? Or is it just on your say so?” The man asked in a drawling tone that perfectly conveyed disbelief and scepticism, but Harry could see his eyes, he could see the frustration behind them.

“Objection, my client is in therapy and the reports of such have been clearly displayed to this court. It is clearly stated in the reports, that this court has seen, that Harry has needed sleep therapy for nightmares as signed off by a trusted, well known therapist.” Richard burst out, less angry and more firm and stern. He was more like a smaller version of Myron and that made Harry smile, to know that Richard was obviously emulating his stubborn husband and mate while in the courtroom.

Everything was quiet for a moment and then Mister Chorley cleared his throat.

“My clients were sleep deprived and on edge. Mister Potter kept them awake all night, screaming.”

“He was psychologically injured and was suffering from nightmares that kept him awake also.” Richard defended. “He was just as exhausted, if not more so, and he was a frightened boy! He needed therapy at that time that wasn’t given to him or even sought after. He was a fourteen year old so traumatised from his situation that he was having screaming nightmares night after night and nothing was done about it, no help was given to him, no help was sought after and my client was left to suffer through on his own.”
“The entire household was suffering from the actions of Mister Potter.” Mister Chorley said evenly.

Harry remained calm as much as he could, once again thankful for the calming draught. He had made a promise to himself that he would answer all the questions posed to him if he could, and not devolve into the incriminating silences as the Dursleys had done, and he would try to remain calm, helped along by the calming draught.

“You were a very disturbed child, weren’t you, Mister Potter?” The lawyer said with a considering look to him, as if he could see the delinquency on his skin. “We have a statement from a Mister and Missus Mason.”

Harry inhaled deeply at hearing that. How could he explain that that had all been Dobby’s fault without saying anything about magic or making himself seem like a lying psychopath?

“They say that they met you once, you would have been twelve, Mister Potter, do you remember?”

“Yes, it was actually my twelfth birthday and I was told to stay in my bedroom and not come down for dinner.” Harry said firmly. He saw immediately that his addition had knocked the lawyer off his stride, if only for a moment.

“I…Mister Mason said that you had thrown an extravagant dessert, that your Aunt had spent all afternoon making, to the floor, smashing the dish and sending the dessert all over the floor, walls and counters. You were introduced as very disturbed and easily upset by strangers.”

“Of course that was what they said.” Harry replied. “They lied to everyone about me, saying I went to a school for criminals and that I was a disturbed delinquent and I wasn’t. What actually happened was I was so hungry that I went looking for food, I tried to be quiet so as not to disturb their dinner party, so that I wasn’t caught and punished for taking food that I wasn’t allowed to have, and I tried to take something small from the fruit bowl behind the pudding and I accidentally knocked it off with my elbow. I was only trying to get an apple because I hadn’t eaten all day or the day before.”

“That is a lie!” Vernon burst out, his face the familiar shade of puce that Harry remembered, and hated, from his childhood. He flinched automatically, unable to stop it, even as his heart jumped in his chest. He could almost feel the colour draining from his face…this was not good for the baby at all.

“Silence in the court.” The Judge demanded harshly. “Mister Potter, are you alright to carry on?”
Harry looked at the Judge, but he had to quickly break eye contact from those stern eyes. He nodded mutely and looked back at his hands.

“Missus Mason then said that an owl swooped into the house and dropped a letter on her head. Would this have been the pet owl of yours that you had perhaps set upon your relatives dinner guests to ruin their evening?”

Harry swallowed and shook his head. “It…it was a friend’s owl.” He stuttered.

“Are you being untruthful? Because it sounds like you are, Mister Potter.”

Harry shook his head, but he was. It had been a Ministry owl telling him that he’d received a formal warning from the Improper Use of Magic office for his use of a hover charm in the presence of Muggles. He couldn’t actually say as such though, not in a Muggle courtroom.

“My…my owl is…she’s a snowy owl. That one would have been a…a barn owl. The Masons can…can confirm the colour.” Harry warbled his way through, his heart pounding in his chest. His hand touched his belly gently as he worried about his baby, who was already affected by his stressing.

“May I suggest a break for lunch?” Richard put in calmly. “My client clearly needs a moment after being terrified out of his wits by Mister Dursley’s outburst.”

“Yes, this is agreeable.” The Judge agreed. “We will convene back here in one hour.”

Harry stood and hurried to Richard, who had already packed away his papers and without any further words, he put an arm around his shoulders and led him straight out of the courtroom, out of the building and into the sweltering air.

“Are you okay?” Richard asked him seriously.

Harry nodded. “Yes, I just…I…”
“It’s okay, take a moment, let’s go grab some lunch and a cold drink and you can gather yourself there. You’re going to be fine. I’d never let anyone hurt you.”

Harry nodded. He knew that. He more than knew that, but it didn’t stop him from reverting back to his childhood, when he was confronted with Vernon’s purple or puce coloured face shoved into his own, maybe pulling on his hair or throwing him into his cupboard, shouting at him, telling him that he couldn’t have anything to eat for a week.

“Come on, sweetness. Do you want a vegetable wrap? Tomato pasta? Or maybe a nice big burger with fries and onion rings?”

That brought a small smile out. “A burger, please.”

“Beef or chicken, precious?”

That made Harry smile more. “Beef, please.”

“Lemonade too?”

Harry nodded. They reached a free table in the café and Richard helped him take his suit jacket off and sat him down.

“Okay, you settle yourself for a moment and I’ll be right back, I’m just over here though and nothing will hurt you.”

Harry sighed and looked down at his hands. He hadn’t wanted to become non-verbal, he knew from watching the Dursleys that it was worse, but he had been unable to get the words out and when he had, he’d stuttered, something that Richard and Draco had told him to try not to do. He’d agreed to be cross-examined when it hadn’t strictly been necessary. Richard had had enough evidence to convict the Dursleys without him even having to be there. But he’d wanted to be there. He’d wanted to testify and he’d agreed to subject himself to cross-examination, all because it would help get the Dursleys a longer sentence.

It was brutal, however. He didn’t want to be called a liar, he didn’t want to be shouted at in the middle of a sentence. He didn’t want to look over at the Dursleys as he recounted all of the horrible ways that they’d hurt him as a child and young teenager. It didn’t feel right having to defend all of the ‘acts of delinquency’ that the Dursleys were accusing him of when they knew full well that he wasn’t the cause, or at least not directly involved. Of course they knew nothing about Dobby, the house-elf had vanished before they’d seen him, so of course it had looked like he’d smashed the dessert on purpose, but he hadn’t and they knew that the barn owl had been from the Ministry of Magic, not his own owl personally, they knew that Hedwig was a snowy owl and that she hadn’t been involved. He just didn’t understand why they were lying to try and discredit him when they knew that they were the ones in the wrong for treating him, a mere child, in the way that they had.

They hadn’t even tried to defend half of the things that they’d done to him over the years, they’d just resorted to silence and refusing to answer the questions directed at them and that was just worse somehow, as if they were robbing him of a part of his healing. Why had they hated him so much? Why had they hated magic so much? Was it truly because they were jealous, or was it something else? Perhaps something rooted in the past that he was just caught up in, or were they truly so petty and small minded that anything different, that anything out of the ordinary, had to be squashed down, hidden or even culled. He didn’t know, and if the Dursleys carried on with their silences and on the same vein of not answering any questions directed at them, then he was never going to know, especially not now that Richard’s time questioning them was over. It looked like he’d never get the peace and the closure that he deserved from all of this…he just wanted to know why.

Richard came back and he settled an iced glass of lemonade in front of him with a small, gentle touch to his shoulder.

“Thank you.”

“You’ve done so well, Harry. So very well.”

“I lost my thread of conversation, you said not to do that.”

“You had that ugly mug shouting at you, that’s not the same thing, Harry. He really frightened you, I saw it, that’s why I called an early lunch, to get you out of there and to remind you that I’d shred his hide if he so much as wobbled his way out of his chair to try and hurt you. You’re no longer a child hidden behind closed doors, Harry. You’re in a courtroom full of people who are going to sentence those monsters to thirty years in prison, they can’t hurt you, they can’t try to hit you, you’re safe.”

“Sometimes the fear takes over. I know they can’t get me, you would stop them, others would step in, there are policemen in that room who would stop them, but sometimes…sometimes the fear just won’t listen.”

“I understand, sweetness.” Richard said in a way that made Harry automatically believe him. “I will always try to petition the court for a break, even if it’s just five minutes for you to calm down, to take a breath and for you to beat the fear back and realise that there is nothing to fear in that courtroom, not anymore. You are not alone in that room, though I’m sure on the stand it feels like it.”
Harry nodded his agreement and sipped at his lemonade.

“Just remember that I’m here for you, no one is going to hurt you, you’ve done so well and I’m incredibly proud of you, Harry. You’ve done great. You make sure those boys pamper you tonight. You and baby.”

Harry chuckled at that and he saw the happy triumph in Richard, who had been angling for a laugh. He smiled.

“They have been pampering me a lot lately. We’re having a lot of fun with the new swimming pools that we bought, the kids adore them, though we’ve had a few tantrums over the slide and who gets what bath toy in the pool, but they’ve all be sharing really well, though Braiden monopolises the bouncy castle area.”

“I can imagine that Max tried to get in on that too?” Richard asked with a grin.

“You know he did, because it’s exactly what you would have done.” Harry laughed. “Don’t tell him, but we’ve ordered the biggest inflatable obstacle course that we could find for his birthday. It’s going to be him versus everyone else. It’s going to be hilarious. Draco was worried about rain, but I said that rain would just make the competition more interesting and we ordered it anyway.”

Richard’s eyes lit up. “I can’t wait for that, you know I’ll be all over that like its Myron spread naked on a bed for me.”

Harry snorted into his glass of lemonade.

“I can’t imagine Myron spread naked for you, the other way around maybe.”

“Hey! That’s so stereotypical of you, Harry, just because he’s big and bulky doesn’t mean he always tops. I’m sure you’ve had some fun with four boys around you.”

Harry grinned. “Of course. Last night for instance, but I don’t know. Myron’s so serious and uptight.”
“Only until you get him on his back.” Richard winked.

Harry laughed again.

“I don’t think I should be telling you that though, with you being our baby boy and all.”

“That’s okay. I’ve never really had a Father or anything, so I’ve never had any of those inappropriate feelings concerning any of that. It’s just, I’ve been so screwed up that things like that, that should be inappropriate, just aren’t.”

Richard sighed and reached over to squeeze his hand. “We understand and we still love you, you’re just too adorable.”

Harry smiled, though they were interrupted by a café waiter, who brought over their two plates, piled high with a thick beef burger in a seeded bun, fries, salad, onion rings and a side of relish.

“The salad is so Nasta can’t whine at you.” Richard laughed.

Harry chuckled and he dug into the meal happily, feeling much happier and a lot more secure. The thought that after this he would have to go back to that courtroom and face more accusations and lies almost made him choke, but he calmed himself and forced himself to chew and swallow. He would be fine, he could do this.

Eitri Cassair was only one hundred and nine years old and already he was orphaned, had been left in the care of a terrible Uncle who had tried to abuse him and then sell him like an object, and he was now completely alone in a world that he couldn’t trust.

He was worried, really, really worried, as he came from Sindri’s room in the healing home. He had had to be moved there from his own home just a few moons ago and things were not looking good. It was not Sindri’s fault that he was sick, he was six hundred and ninety years old, he was just a mere decade from being seven centuries old, and for his generation, of which very few lived past six hundred, that was a very rare thing. But still, Eitri selfishly wanted Sindri to wake up and get up and put things back to rights. The entire City had devolved into mass chaos and he was almost too afraid to do anything anymore. He had been groped blatantly in the street by passers-by, he’d had a Valkyrie try to kick down his front door, and another had tried to carry him off in full view of two City guards, who had just watched as he’d struggled to get himself free, only managing as such when he’d gotten a good piece of flesh between his teeth and bitten down as hard as he could through clothing. He had tasted blood, but he hadn’t stayed still long enough to find out about the severity of the injury, he’d immediately fled back to his home.

Things in the City were going back a few hundred years to when such things were normal and were to be expected, and it had Eitri scared. He wanted to carry on living here, he’d lived in this City for all of his life, and all of his memories were here, the memories of his parents and his Father’s twin brother, the Uncle he had loved as a second Father. He was living in the same house, all of their belongings and personal effects were still in all of the rooms. He didn’t want to give it up, he shouldn’t have to, and he absolutely refused to abandon the younger Faes who had no means of escape if this is what the City was returning to.

But if things truly were going back to how they’d been just a few short centuries before he’d been born, then he would have only one option, and that was to rise up and start a rebellion for the protection of himself, and all other Faes living in the City, or who would be born into it in the future.

He knew the likelihood of success was small, he knew that he would be murdered or even officially executed if things got very bad, but that was the way things were. He would turn himself into a martyr for his beliefs if needed. He would not become some Valkyrie’s plaything, to be paraded around and shown off to all of his bonded’s friends and family like some pretty, little bauble, unable to remove himself from their presence, not permitted to speak up or protest what was happening to him.

He’d already suffered the grievous indignity and humiliation of a virginity test when he was only thirty, when his vile Uncle Culan had demanded it of him when he had become his guardian. He refused to go through such testing again. He should have the only right to do with his own body as he pleased, he shouldn’t be forced to give up the right to decide what happened to his own body for the wishes of others, he should not be forced to deny his own sexual needs because the older generation believed that being a virgin was more valuable and thus worth more, so they could sell their Fae relatives for more, and though he was still a virgin himself, it was not because he placed any value on it at all. It was because he did not trust anyone to come that close to him, to see him that vulnerable and unprotected. He no longer had any sort of hymen, he had made sure to break that himself decades ago, with his own fingers, to stop anyone trying to claim that ‘prize’ from him, such was his fear of other people. It shouldn’t have been needed, he should have been able to say no and have his wishes respected, but there were always vile people within every community, including his own Mother’s brother. Who could he trust if he hadn’t even been able to trust his own blood not to treat him like an object to be sold off to the highest bidder?

“Eitri, are you well?” Warren asked gently. “Has anyone within this building tried to harm you?”

“No, Warren, I am well.” Eitri said distractedly. “It is Sindri, he has not improved overnight.”

Warren looked pale and exhausted too, Eitri reasoned that most people were within this nightmare of Sindri’s declining health.

“Do you want to go home, Eitri?”
He shook his head, ignoring his bouncing golden curls that shone with the high sun. “I wish to go to the house of worship, Warren. I need to send up a message of health for Sindri. Perhaps the gods will listen this time.”

Warren nodded and with a hand on the hilt of his sword, his eyes darting all around and taking in every face they passed, he escorted Eitri out of the healing home and on the walk to the house of worship. It meant walking past the guard barracks and Warren’s jaw clenched, his fist tightened on the pommel of the sword that he was carrying, and a vein ticked in his forehead as some of the off-duty guards, his brothers in arms, shouted out sexual comments and lewd remarks to Eitri, who didn’t even turn his head and made no notice that he could even hear the comments being shouted at him.

“Say that again and I’ll cut your head off!” Warren raged at a particularly vile comment. “Show some restraint and have more respect for a member of the Court!”

“Leave them, Warren.” Eitri said calmly. “There is no reasoning with animals. We truly are in dire straits if things are getting this bad within the City. Order needs to be restored, but Donella is being led by her bonded. He is ruling the Court in her place, using her only as a convenient mouthpiece to set up his disgusting fantasy of the City back to how it was a few hundred years ago and she can’t even see it, even as his words pour from her mouth condemning all Faes, including herself. She has already become his puppet, his plaything, and I refuse to become the same for anyone.”

Warren looked even more stressed then, but Eitri had no time to fret over Warren or his feelings. He needed to focus everything on Sindri and the state of the Court, not just for himself, but for all the Faes who were being threatened and abused. He’d never forgive himself if he let anything distract him from his purpose and a Fae got injured or harmed as a result. He would not lose his objective in this serious matter. To him, this was a matter of life or death, because he could not live with the devolvement of Fae rights, and if he rebelled to change such laws then it would likely mean his death. He was unwilling to compromise, they would not slip backwards in regards to Fae rights, it would not become legal to grope and molest unbonded Faes again, mere children being targeted in the streets. It would not become legal to share a bonded Fae with friends or family members again, and he refused to allow it to become legal once more that a Fae had no rights, no voice, and was legally required to submit to any and all Valkyrie wishes, even those of complete strangers. They would not go back to their past, they would not ever become that ever again. Eitri refused to allow it, he would die for it if necessary.

He steeled his resolve as they reached the house of worship. He took his shoes off before he entered and he stepped into the atrium. He placed his shoes in one of the lock boxes and took the strip of cloth from inside the box and checked it for any damage or tampering. He hiked his trousers up to his knees and then tied the cloth around his own eyes and he stepped forward, into the house of worship proper. He felt Warren beside him and he took half a step closer to him, just in case.

He still jumped when an attendant took his hand and led him slowly to a free grotto. He felt his feet touch the small pool of water and he stepped into it, ignoring the coldness of the icy, clear water that lapped at his ankles.

He reached out and touched the soft petals of the beautiful miniature garden that was grown in these sacred halls. He felt rose, lily, orchid and delphinium under his fingers and he breathed in their mixed scent deeply and the pressure in his chest just eased away, as easily as the wind carried dust. He felt at peace here, and he let that peace wash over him before he thought about Sindri being well again, he thought about his resolve and his need for strength to fight back the creeping darkness. He asked that it never came about, that Sindri recovered from this illness and everything went back to peace and calm, where he wasn’t attacked in the streets, where Faes were not again used for sport or mere fun, just an object to improve the lives or pleasures of the bigger, stronger Valkyries.

He had not been alive back in those days, he was only young, he was only one hundred and nine years old, he had not been subjected to this sort of legal treatment before and it was only getting worse. Of course he had been groped and abused before, but it had not been legal and he had been within his rights to kill those attackers to defend himself. If they went backwards, not forwards, then the opposite would be true. It would be perfectly legal for the Valkyries to touch and grope at him, to do whatever they wanted with him, and he would be executed as a murderer if he killed to defend himself and his honour. He could not live in such a world, he refused to do so, yet he refused to give up or abandon the other Faes to such a fate, those both already born and those who had yet to be born.

He felt a spike of heat coming from the ancient, sacred elder tree in the centre of the little grotto that he was standing in and he smiled. The gods agreed with him. He took a deep, cleansing breath and he thought back his confirmation that he’d heard and understood them. The gods did not wish for the Faerie race of this City to devolve back into such chaos. He would fight with his very life if he needed to, so that he could prevent as such from happening. He felt a longer, warmer spike of heat wash over him and he touched the raised flowers surrounding the tree and he smiled. A small wave of water washed over his feet, wetting the bottom of his shins...there was no wind in the house of worship, nothing in the pool of water with him to create such a wave, and he had not moved himself. He took it as another sign from the gods that he was on the right path, on the path that they wanted of him. He took it as a sign that if he carried on fighting, that all would be well. Though he did hope that Sindri got better too and was able to sort out this mess. The pool didn’t move, the sacred elder tree didn’t heat up, the flowers didn’t stir in his hands. He swallowed hard. The next coming moon turns were going to be difficult and painful. He prayed that he had enough strength to see it through to the end, and that even if he did have to die for his ends to be met, that he did accomplish what he set out to do first, or even as a result of his death. He did not want to leave this world with such unfinished business. He didn’t want to die in vain.

He stood back from the pool, removing his feet from the water and he waited, several moments later an attendant came to take his hand again, leading him out of the house of worship and back into the atrium, where he pulled off his blindfold immediately, blinking and squinting through the harsh, bright light to try and force his vision back to normal.

Warren was already waiting for him, and he relaxed a little as he opened the lock box and took out his shoes, replacing the soft piece of cloth into the box and turning to sit on one of the provided benches so that he could dry his feet and put on his shoes.

Neither of them spoke as Eitri did this, it was considered taboo to ask after the messages given in the house of worship, though the information could be volunteered up easily enough. Eitri did not feel the need to share his messages, nor the replies that he had received from the sacred elder trees, with anyone.

He stood, made sure his trousers were back to rights, and Warren immediately fell into step beside hiss as he stepped forward.

“Where to now?” Warren asked lightly.

“Home, Warren. I’ve had enough of being outside for one day. I need to plan my next move, just in case Donella and her bonded try to pass any more restrictive laws for Faes. How does she not see that what she is doing will also affect her?”

“It won’t, Eitri.” Warren told him. “Most of the new law reforms she is trying to pass only affect non-bonded Faes.”

Eitri made an aggravated noise in the back of his throat. “Only for now.” He snapped. “As soon as those reforms pass into law, Talfryn will have her under lock and key and he will take the head of the Court for himself. You know my words to be true, Warren. Perhaps it is only unbonded Fae like myself for now, but as soon as Donella has done as her bonded wants of her, he will strike and take power for himself and she will realise too late what she has done. It needs to stop now, before it gets so far.”

Warren nodded. “I agree with you, Eitri, you know that I do. Whatever you need, just ask.”

Eitri felt a small flutter in his belly at that, as he always did when Warren declared such things to him, but he ignored it, thankful that his manor home was just at the end of the street to the house of worship.

His home was situated in one of the most affluent, sought after areas of the City, right next to the huge floral gardens that took up a large area of the northwest side of the City. He loved being able to look out of certain windows and see the trees, the flowers, the plants of the gardens right next door.

“Would you come in a moment, Warren?” He asked as they reached his door.

“Has anyone else tried to break in?” Warren demanded, a look of utter fury on his face.

“Not since that one Valkyrie, but I will not feel safe until I have searched all rooms of my home and know for sure that no one has broken in while I’ve been out.”

Warren nodded, a look of furious determination upon his face as he gripped his sword tighter. Eitri adored that Warren took his fears seriously, that he saw unwanted Valkyries in his home as something to cause concern still. He did not want to live to see the day where such a thing was considered normal and to be expected. That he could just come home and there was a stranger in his home waiting to abuse him.

Eitri only breathed easier when all rooms of his home were checked and cleared. He offered Warren some tea and sat opposite him as they both drank.

“What are your plans, Eitri, won’t you tell me?” Warren asked. “I don’t want to see you get hurt, if I know, maybe I can help you, and help protect you from harm too.”

“These are dark and troubling days, Warren. What can we even do to protect the Faes? I could petition to become the head of the Court myself, but I am too anti-social, the people barely know me so why would they cast their vote for me? I know it already, I would not be well received. I am something pretty to look at, and I know many still believe me too young and incapable of sitting on the Court. They will not want me at the head of it. I am too young, too pretty, too controversial and out-spoken about changes that need to be made, yet I’m not social enough for them to know me as a person, and of course, I’m a Fae, one of only a handful that Sindri ever picked to sit the Court and many people still believe it a mistake to have allowed Faes on the Court in the first place, they have no love for me, no reason to vote for me. Our only choice is to convince Kailen to stand, he is the most respected, the more social as a Seelie, and he is well liked by the citizens.”

“He will not do it.” Warren said, knowing his old friend well. “He refused to stand at the last election as well. He does not want the position.”

“He needs to, Warren. We can’t let things carry on in this way and we can’t have anyone else taking the head of the Court. Perhaps if Amarion were to stand, we could have a chance, but he has already told me that he wants to focus his attentions at home, on the Valkyrie son who is not yet grown and a newly pregnant bonded. I tried to use that as leverage, saying that he might have a Fae next, but he just said that he would protect them from such things and left it at that. No one can see how this is going to destroy everything, Warren. No one can see that no one is going to be safe, I should knock some sense into Amarion, who would look after his bonded and children if he were killed? What then? But no one will listen.”

“There must be someone else, Eitri. Azarius or Drennon perhaps?”

“Azarius has been acting suspicious lately.” Eitri shook his head. “I think he’s secretly enjoying this uncertainty and almost panic. Drennon is a possibility, but I do not trust him, Warren. I cannot trust that if I put my faith in him and put my vote behind him that he will not stab us all in the back as the power goes to his head.”
Warren sighed. “Then it has to be Kailen. We have to speak to him, Eitri. We have to make him see that he has to do this for the good of the City. He cannot refuse, not if we bring Leolin into things.”

“What does Leolin have to do with things?” Eitri demanded sharply. “He is just a sweet babe who doesn’t even live in the City and as an Unseelie, he is more likely to be a Valkyrie regardless.”

“Dain and Kailen would do anything to protect him and there is no reason he could not be an Unseelie Fae, look at his Mother, we have been told that male submissive Drackens are very rare, as are Unseelie Faes, but if Leolin’s Mother could become a submissive Dracken, why can’t Leolin be an Unseelie Fae?” Warren said. “Dain and Kailen are still tentative with Nasta and his family, and though Harry is more accepting of them I can guarantee that if anything were to threaten his son, he would turn on them within the beat of a heart. I cannot believe that Harry, the boy I have come to know, would enjoy any of the details that we could tell him about the state of the City currently. He already knows that something is wrong, he is very intuitive, and he’s already showing a divide as he refused to allow Leolin to come here. We could use Leolin as leverage to get Kailen to stand, Eitri. It is not the most honourable way, but if it helps Kailen to realise what he is going to be risking, his own great-grandson…it has to be worth it.”

Eitri considered that and he smiled happily. “This could work if we executed it correctly, Warren. Thank you!”

Warren smiled, happy to have made Eitri even slightly less stressed and worried, but he also felt bad for needing to blackmail one of his oldest, most loved friends into doing something that he clearly didn’t want to do.

He sighed and lamented that this was even needed at all. That their civilisation was so degenerate that just one person’s illness could send them back in the past by three centuries. He worried for Eitri, he worried for the new babes born, for the fate of their City as they went back to what he considered the dark days of the Faerie civilisation, the time that others would call ‘the good old days’.

He hoped that they could talk to Kailen and get him agree to stand without needing to resort to blackmailing him with his own family members, but if it was needed, he hoped that all involved forgave him, but this mess needed to be sorted out and soon. The Faes didn’t deserve to live in fear and they were not objects to be played with and forced to do what the Valkyries around them wanted them to do. They were living people and they deserved all the respect given to others for that alone. They shouldn’t have any restrictions or conditions placed upon them just because of the denomination they were born as. Warren, as a Valkyrie himself, could see this, he just didn’t understand how anyone else could see a Fae and see someone to be used and hurt and then discarded as if they were nothing.

It was very upsetting and distressing for him, he could not even imagine how the Faes felt at the moment, knowing that in several moon turns they could be going back to that way of life, that they could be hurt, abused or silenced on the merest whim of the Valkyries around them and Warren was not sure that enough Valkyries thought like he did to ensure the safety of all the Faes in the City.

Too many Valkyries were over three hundred, too many of them remembered and had lived through this before, back when the Faes were subject to the will of their Valkyrie family members, or their Valkyrie bonded. Warren knew that not all of them wanted to go back to that time, himself included, despite being Valkyries and having all of the ‘power’ so to say, over the Faes, but Warren had never wanted to control another person so wholly and completely. He had never wanted to make himself seem as more by crushing another person underfoot. In fact he believed that doing as such made him seem lesser, and he had always treated Faes as people, the same as he treated other Valkyries.

He saw it as normal, as natural to do so, he saw all people as equal and he absolutely refused to believe that any one person was more or lesser based on their gender or their denomination. Such a thought made him feel sick, to know that people actually believed such things, but it was only through education and progression that such thoughts and beliefs could be changed. Not by going backwards and devolving into what they used to be centuries before. There were just not enough young Faeries, either Fae or Valkyrie, to stand up against the older generations who were more numerous and who had lived through this period of darkness before. Those over three hundred outnumbered those who were under three hundred by a considerable amount, they were too long lived a species for it to be otherwise and with the lack of births, and even less babies born reaching adulthood from a combination of illnesses, epidemics like the dragon pox outbreak just several moon turns ago, and even from the occasional Drow attacks, the numbers of the young Faeries had taken massive blows.

Warren sighed and looked at the furiously writing Eitri, who was putting all of his thoughts and plans to parchment. He was happy to have given Eitri something to work with, a bit of hope, some light in the coming darkness, but that it was at the expense of his friend made everything a little more sour, less palatable. He hated that they would have to force Kailen to stand as the head of the Court in order to protect the Faes of their City, but there was no one else that they could explicitly trust to carry on Sindri’s painstaking, life’s work of equalising the Faes and the Valkyries. Warren hoped that Dain and Kailen forgave him, and he hoped that Harry, Nasta and their family forgave him and Eitri for using Leolin as a leverage tool for blackmail. He sighed, how he wished that none of this was needed, how he wished that the Faerie race had come along more than to immediately go back to past traditions and practices at the first sign of Sindri’s death. It truly said a lot about their species as a whole, and none of it was good.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Harry kept his cool and his calm in the face of all the things being said and thrown at him, and despite the awful, invasive questions, he answered all of them, sometimes with just a small pause for a breath first, but he always answered and there were no more comments from Vernon, who had clearly been told by his lawyer how disastrous his outburst had looked for his defence.

The lawyer, Mister Chorley, had moved on from the pudding incident to when he had ‘attacked’ his cousin Dudley when they were fifteen. Harry assumed this was meant to be the ‘anti-Harry’ Dementor incident.

“Dudley was sick on the way home.” Harry said simply. “I don’t understand how you believe I made him sick when I myself was not sick, or how that would have been my fault even if I had been sick. I came across him as we were both heading the same way and I helped him home.”
“Yes, you helped the boy that you have accused of terrorising you. Why would you do that if it were true, Mister Potter?”

“Objection, this incident shows the caring character of my client and does not prove him to be a liar.” Richard interjected smoothly.

“Dudley was sick. He’d even vomited on his own leather jacket. I just helped him home and tried to explain what had happened…that Dudley had been sick, but they didn’t listen. They were adamant that I had made him that way, but how could I have possibly made him ill?” Harry asked. “They…they threatened to throw me out of the house for that.”

“For context, you were only fifteen at this time, weren’t you? A minor.” Richard asked him gently.

Harry nodded. “Yes, that incident was on August the second, I had turned fifteen two days before.”

Mister Chorley looked very uncomfortable with Richard’s smooth interference. Then Richard’s interjection was not good at all for his clients. It made them look like the monsters they truly were.

Harry remained calm, he made sure to keep his words clear and precise, as Draco had instructed, and he tried not to fall into any word traps or into muddling sentences. If he took a few moments to himself, nothing was said about it. He believed himself to be doing better than the Dursleys had, with their silences or their outbursts, but he truly didn’t know. He didn’t look at the Jury often, though he tried not to look at them at all because they made him nervous, but he couldn’t tell anything from their faces. For members of the public, they were surprisingly good at keeping their thoughts and reactions to themselves.

“Are you not going to answer my question, Mister Potter?” The lawyer snapped.

Harry thought that this was rather rich, seeing as he had obviously coached his clients to remain quiet through most of Richard’s cross-examination.

“I was going to before you rushed me.” Harry answered. He took another moment’s pause to take another breath. “I did not leave the house that night, I left four days later to go to a friend’s house for the rest of the summer.”

“So you were not, in effect, thrown from the house?”
“Because Petunia stepped in and refused to allow him to do it, she said it would look bad if the neighbours saw me. I was locked in my bedroom from that night until I was picked up four days later, on the sixth.”

“Just for clarification, you were not allowed out of your room, and in an emergency, you could not have gotten yourself out of that room, could you?” Richard cut in smoothly.

“No, the padlocks were bolted from the outside, I couldn’t have gotten out.” Harry said softly. “I had to be let out and that was only once a day, to use the bathroom…if they remembered.”

Mister Chorley looked angry at Richard’s questions and Harry remembered the man who had threatened Richard before, when they’d been out in the corridor. It seemed that Richard was rather unpopular with his opposition, and it made Harry worry for the man. He calmed himself and he remembered what Richard had told him about being a Dracken against human Muggles. Richard would be able to take them all, he wasn’t just a mild mannered lawyer with a stern voice. He was a Dracken, he had claws, fangs and wings. He could attack and defend himself, or get away if he needed to. Harry sighed and he cast a quick glance at the watch on his wrist. Court would be concluded soon, it wouldn’t usually go over two in the afternoon and that was approaching quickly.

He wanted to go home, he wanted to cuddle with his babies and have a long Nasta cwtch with all of his mates. He’d had enough of this day, enough of the stress and he was starting to feel sick. This entire court case needed to be over sooner rather than later, before he had an episode of morning sickness, or he started showing his new baby. Thankfully it was just his cross-examination left, then the Jury would deliberate and very soon, Harry hoped that this would be over and he would be free, that he would get his justice and the Dursleys would be in prison, where they belonged.

Thankfully he was correct on the one front and very soon the court was called to a close for the day and Harry was able to leave the stand and go to Richard, as he packed up his work case and then escorted him from the courtroom.

“You did so well, baby.” Richard praised him. “Let’s go and get you home and take some of this stress from you, you were so brave and so strong. I can’t wait to tell those boys of yours, and Myron, just how well you did today on that stand.”

Harry almost puffed himself up in pride at that. Something he usually only did when his babies were praised.

Richard chuckled and hugged him tight.

“Come on, sweetie, let’s get you home.” Richard smiled and led him out and to the alleyway they used as an Apparation point.
It was a relief to Harry to see home again and he took in a deep breath, letting out all the stress and the panic he had felt in the courtroom. He felt better immediately, just by being home.

He got out his key and let himself in and he was immediately greeted by Max’s stern words of ‘No, Braiden, do not play in the bin.’

Harry shared a look with Richard and he shook his head.

“Braiden, I said get out of that bin!” Max said.

Harry walked into the kitchen to see Max up to his elbows in soapy water in the sink and Braiden was indeed playing with the bin. Even as Harry watched Braiden pulled it over, sending rubbish all over the floor.

“Need a hand?” Harry chuckled.

“It’s not funny. I told him several times to leave that bin alone and now look!” Max said.

“I’ve got it.” Harry said as he went and fished Braiden out of the rubbish. He took the two year old straight to the clean corner of the room and sat him on the floor. “Your Daddy Max told you not to play with the bin, you didn’t listen, Braiden, so now you stay here in time out until I come to get you.”

“Mummy, want hug!” Braiden told him.

“No, you sit in time out.” Harry told him, standing up and moving away. Braiden immediately followed him. “No, you stay in time out.” Harry insisted, moving Braiden back into the corner and getting up again. Braiden started crying, but he didn’t move.

“I’ve got him from here, thank you, love.” Max said, wiping his hands on a tea towel as Richard finished putting the bin back to rights with a spell.

“I’m going to get changed. Remember, we said that it had to be two minutes of quiet, it doesn’t count as a time out if he’s crying.”

Max kissed him and then took over Braiden’s time out, though he asked if Richard wanted some tea.
and a chat first and Harry went to get changed into something cooler.

Blaise was in bed when he went stomping into the bedroom and Harry immediately stopped and quietened down. He cursed Max for not telling him that Blaise was in bed.

Harry eased the drawer out and picked up boxers, shorts and a tee-shirt before he tiptoed into the bathroom to get changed. He wasn’t in court tomorrow, so his suit went straight into the laundry bin and he immediately felt the relief of the cool air.

He automatically checked his belly for any bumps, but nine and a half weeks pregnant and he still wasn’t showing. He patted his belly and smiled. Soon, but not just yet.

He left the bathroom and he tiptoed back past Blaise and he shut the bedroom door after himself. He was going to kick Max for not telling him that Blaise was sleeping. He really hoped his mate was alright, it was worrying to know that Blaise was still recovering, as he himself was, but Harry calmed himself, it was likely just another of Blaise’s headaches and he’d gone to bed with a headache reliever.

“Why didn’t you say that Blaise was in bed?” Harry asked Max when he reached the kitchen. He had Braiden on his lap and Richard was sipping his tea, those brown eyes lit up at the hint of a normal family spat.

“Mummy!” Braiden called out as soon as he walked into the room and Max held their son out to him.

Harry put Braiden on his hip, holding him close, but he looked to Max for an answer, Max who actually, physically face palmed himself.

“I was so busy running around that I forgot he was even up there.” Max groaned. “Sorry, Harry. Is he okay?”

“He’s still asleep. Thankfully I noticed him immediately, before I started tearing open drawers. Did he have another headache?”

“Yeah, Calix smashed one of those toy aeroplanes into the back on his head when he was playing with Eva on the floor. The headache came on soon after. Calix did have a time out for that. I know you said not until they were two, but that was a little more than just pushing boundaries, he knew exactly what he was doing and that it would hurt.”

Harry was already nodding his agreement. “Calix is getting so naughty lately. Do you think he’s not getting enough attention?”
“I’m sure this is just normal toddler behaviour.” Max assured him. “We spend quality time with all of them, love. He’s just boundary pushing, like Braiden.”

“Mummy, I want potty.” Braiden told him. Harry was so excited that he almost fell over the chair in his haste to stand up and get Braiden to one of the three potties floating around their house.

He hurried into the family room and he mostly ignored the greetings and screeches from his other babies as he found the white potty in amongst the toys on the floor. He pulled the teddy off of it, placed Braiden down and pulled down his little shorts for him.

Braiden did the rest as an excited Harry watched. Max and Richard had come in with him, Nasta and Draco had looked over and then stood as soon as they realised what was happening and Harry wanted to burst out crying in pride as he heard the soft, little tinkle of Braiden using the potty.

“He’s doing it!” He said tearfully.

“Bay doing potty.” Regan said, looking at Braiden and then to Tegan.

“That’s right, Regan.” Nasta said. “Braiden’s using the potty like a big boy.”

Braiden stood up and Harry smothered him in kisses. He was all but bursting with pride.

“Well done, Braiden.” Harry said, sniffing hard.

Max chuckled behind him and Harry felt a hand rake through his hair, He turned a beaming smile up to Max before looking back to Braiden, who was pulling his own shorts up.

“Let’s go get your hands washed, Baban.” Nasta said proudly, as he took Braiden’s hand and the full potty in his other and he led Braiden to the bathroom.

Harry sniffed again and he wiped at his damp eyes. He was just so proud. Even Draco looked teary at this new milestone.
“He asked after the potty himself.” Harry said, a smile on his mouth.

Max hugged him and Harry pulled him down by the collar of his tee-shirt to kiss him.

“You boys do know that just because he did it once, doesn’t mean it’s all plain sailing from now on, don’t you?” Richard pipped up.

“Thank you, Mister optimistic.” Max said. “We know that, Dad, and though it’s not the first time he’s used it, it is the first time he’s asked to use it himself. He’s getting better at recognising the urge to urinate. He will have accidents, he might even go through a rebellious stage and refuse to use it, but today he asked to use it and we’re very proud of him for that.”

Richard chuckled. “Well, as I was saying to you, I was very proud of how Harry conducted himself on the stand today. He did really well and he deserves some pampering to relax him.”

“Well we can certainly manage that.” Max said, swaying lightly with Harry and bending right down to nibble at his neck. It made him giggle.

“I’ll see you boys later, I’m going to go tell Myron that our Braiden is getting such a big boy and is using the potty by himself.” Richard said, moving to hug Harry, he ruffled Max’s hair and then he left them to it.

Harry heard him say goodbye to Nasta in the hallway, he heard the bright praise for Braiden, and then his mate and oldest son were back in the room, Nasta holding the washed out potty, which was put back on the floor.

“My Dad said that Harry needs rewarding for today, Nas.” Max said. “He did really well under the pressure of being on the stand.”

“Have you offered him tea?” Nasta asked as he came to join their hug.

“Oh hell, no, I haven’t! Harry, I’m sorry.” Max said. “I’ll get that now.”

“Sit down, you’re so out of sorts today.” Nasta said, muscling Max down onto the settee and then chiding Harry onto his lap to keep him sat down. “I’ll get you both a cup of tea. Draco, do you want one, Cara?”

“Please, Nasta.” Draco asked from where he was playing a game with the kids.

Harry wriggled on Max’s lap and he grinned at the groan his biggest mate let out.

“Today has been good.”

“Did you at least have lunch today?” Max asked.

Harry nodded. “The biggest burger you could imagine with all the trimmings.” He said happily. “It was amazing!”

“Your healthy craze is over then?” Max teased.

“No, I don’t think so. But a bit of greasy goodness now and then is needed!”

Max snorted and then surprised Harry with a kiss to the side of the head. Harry chuckled and then he reached down for Calix when their boisterous boy clamoured at Max’s feet for him.

“How have they been?” He asked, even though he knew they’d have been fine.

“Wonderful. Calix has been good, besides smashing a toy into Blaise’s head of course. Farren had a fit when we stopped him from eating Regan’s lunch, Braiden was playing in the bin, as you know, and we think the rest of Leolin’s tooth is pushing through because he went cherry cheeked and started rubbing at his cheeks and chewing on his fingers. A bit of the powder that Kailen brought us did wonders and he’s sleeping it off.”

“I was wondering where he was, is he in his cot?”

Max nodded. “He’s sleeping up in the quiet with Blaise. The poor things, they’re both tuckered out.”
Harry chuckled, but he was distracted by Calix clambering back off of him and back to the floor, where he ran off towards the mass of toys. Nasta came in just a moment later carrying the tea tray. There were four mugs on it and half a dozen beakers of fruit squash.

Harry reached forward and snatched the mug that smelt the sweetest.

“How did you know that one was yours?” Nasta asked.

“It smelt sweeter.” Harry said as he took a big gulp of his honey tea.

“Oh, here comes the elevated sense of smell, no one will be able to get away with farting in bed now.” Max laughed.

“You’re the only one who does that anyway.” Draco was quick to point out.

“Forgive me for being raised by barbarians and not having a proper upbringing.” Max laughed.

Harry snorted into his tea before taking another mouthful.

“So was court okay? Dad mentioned that there was a moment that you were scared.” Max asked him gently.

Harry frowned and looked into the depths of his cup. “Yeah. Vernon shouted at me when I was on the stand and it took me right back to my childhood when he’d shove his flabby, red face into mine and shout at me from an inch away while he’d grip my hair in a fist. I needed to take a break after that, so Richard asked for an early lunch.”

Max petted him, as Nasta and Draco both frowned.

“But you’re okay now?” Draco asked.

Harry nodded. “I calmed down over lunch and Richard got me laughing again. Everything was fine after lunch, there were no more outbursts or anything.”
“I’m glad. We’ll keep everything calm for you now, love.” Draco said. “Just relax. You’re not in court tomorrow?”

Harry shook his head. “No. I was actually relieved to get that damn suit off, my back was actually dripping. It’s so uncomfortable being in that suit, in that courtroom, in this heat, while two months pregnant.”

“Over two months pregnant.” Max pointed out, placing his hand on Harry’s belly.

Harry grinned. “I can’t wait to meet our ninth child.” He said excitedly.

“I’m just happy that it is only the one child, so that the pressure and stress is off of you.” Nasta said, sitting down and snatching his own cup of green tea from the tray.

Harry nodded his agreement. “Very soon this case will be over. Richard thinks another week of the actual case, then will come the sentencing. It could be over before the end of September.” He said nervously.

“You have nothing to fret over. They’re guilty, Harry. This case is literally only to decide how long in prison they’ll face.” Max told him. “It’s not a case of them getting off, or being spared jail, they won’t. You will get your needed justice.”

Harry smiled then, a little nervously still, but he nodded. He was worried about getting too complacent, or getting his hopes up, but he knew, on some level, that this case was purely to determine the length of the sentence, there was too much evidence against them for any of the Jury to find them not guilty. He calmed himself down, everything was fine and everything was going to stay fine, he was sure. It was all going to be alright.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry took the time to relax over the next few days and as Max’s birthday approached, he felt much calmer.

It had gotten hotter again and he was sitting out on the back porch with Farren in his lap, stroking his son’s back as he looked out over the grass as Max and Blaise had a football match with four toddlers. Draco was cradling Leolin next to Harry and Nasta was feeding both girls in the kitchen, Harry could hear him talking to them in both English and Welsh through the open kitchen window behind him.

“Muma.” Farren murmured.

“I know, I’m here. I got lost in thought, I’m sorry.” Harry explained, even as he started up his stroking again, running his hand from Farren’s rather long hair, over his neck and down his back.

“How are you feeling now?” Draco asked him.

Harry grimaced at the reminder that he’d had a bad bout of morning sickness only a few hours ago, shortly after he’d eaten lunch.

“Better now, but that was a bad bout. This new baby certainly is making waves. It feels like a thunder storm inside me.”

“You said that before.” Draco mused. “Maybe you should call the baby thunder.”

Harry laughed. “That would certainly be fitting, and more attractive than calling the baby puke.”

“Please don’t call the baby puke.” Draco begged.

Harry laughed harder. “I won’t, not even my Dracken side could imprint that name to a baby, no matter how forceful or thunderous the morning sickness was. Maybe I should call the baby Thor, you know, Norse god of thunder.” He joked.

Draco saw the funny side of that and he laughed.

“What are you two laughing over?” Nasta asked as he carried the two girls out the back door and over to them at the seating area.

“What we’re going to call the new baby.” Harry said with a smile. “They’re going to be named after my stormy morning sickness.”
Nasta chuckled and shook his head. “How are you feeling now?”

“Better, more settled.” Harry said, even as he carried on stroking Farren’s back.

“Good. Do you want to try sipping some water first?”

Harry considered that. He sighed and shook his head. “Not just yet. I think the thunderer will protest.”

Draco snorted and Harry gave him a grin. Maybe he should start looking up all the different variations of baby names that meant thunder, for boys and girls, just in case the theme stuck. He was certainly growing to the idea of naming the baby thunder, purely because of the rather explosive bouts of morning sickness he was experiencing and the rumbling and crashing of his stomach whenever he had a bout of morning sickness. It certainly wasn’t the best feeling in the world.

“Max, it’s getting late, the kids need to wash up for dinner.” Nasta called out, shielding his eyes to look out over the garden in the bright sun glare.

“Alright!” Max called back as he slowed to a walk from the gentle jog he’d adopted to run the kids about after the football.

“I can’t wait for him to see that obstacle course.” Harry giggled.

“It looks like your fantasy of covering it in washing up liquid in the rain is going to come true.” Nasta said. “It looks like rain is coming in.”

Harry clapped his hands. “It’ll make the competition so much more fun!” He declared.

“It’s a good way to giving someone a broken neck.” Draco grumbled.

“You don’t have to take part.” Harry insisted. “But Max will love it, you know he will.”
“Of course he will.” Draco chuckled. Harry sent him a wide grin.

“Come on, go inside.” Nasta told them. “I’ll get you some tea and I’ll see if Max wants a hand with dinner.”

“I don’t.” Max said as he jogged up the porch steps. “Especially not from you, no offence lover, but you cannot cook.”

“I can cut and peel vegetables and things!” Nasta insisted.

Max laughed and pulled Nasta into a kiss. “You can, but I don’t need help, I promise. Just keep our mates happy, keep our kids happy and I’ll do the rest.”

Nasta sighed, but he smiled and acquiesced with a hand gesture for Max to precede him into the house.

“Alright, but only because I don’t want to ruin dinner and have you start it all over again, or order takeaway.”

“Thank you for the consideration, my love.” Max said with a grin and he headed into the house.

Harry stood and he sighed, watching Blaise herd four toddlers into the house. Harry followed with Farren, Draco brought in a sleeping Leolin and then Nasta brought up the rear with the twin girls both sat on the same forearm. They really were still tiny little things, despite being almost eight months old. They were due for another dragon pox vaccine next month. Draco had booked them in just the other day. Harry was not looking forward to that, not one bit.

He settled on the settee in the larger family room and he placed Farren on the floor. He still run his fingers through his son’s hair, but if Farren wanted to go and play, then the option was there for him without him having to clamber down from the settee too.

Nasta brought in the tea and Harry happily accepted his own mug and drank deeply. He loved days like this, where he didn’t have to do anything, where he could just play with his children all day and do what he pleased. There were no court dates, nothing he needed to do, he could just relax and settle in as a little homebody, with his amazing growing family around him. It was perfect.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X
September carried on bright, but mild as Max’s birthday approached. It was almost impossible to talk about their plans, as Max popped up everywhere trying to listen in, almost like a young child at Christmas.

It was adorable, but Harry was ultimately glad that they had started planning his birthday in August, as he was so excited to know what they were doing that he was going to ruin his own surprise. They’d already roped in Myron and Richard to oversee the inflatable obstacle course being set up, while the five of them had a nice, romantic meal in a very posh restaurant the night before Max’s birthday, on the Saturday. It was not The Garnet Swan, true to their grudge, they had refused to eat there again after the disaster of their Valentine’s meal two years before.

Their children were going to, Merlin forbid, Idris and Aneirin, who had agreed to watch over the kids at Idris’ home, to keep them away from the inflatable work in the garden for Max’s actual birthday, which was on the Sunday. They had already sent out the invitations, this was done easily as Max had had to go to work yesterday for three hours, to invite all the family to the obstacle challenge, they had included strict messages to not tell Max about said obstacle course as it was going to be a surprise. They had left the challenge off of the invite to Caesar and Amelle, not because they didn’t trust Caesar not to tell his brother, but because Harry wanted the obstacle course to be a surprise for him too, so that he would be in the same infectious mood as Max. The two of them were always better when they were on the same page. Harry really, really wanted it to stay a surprise too, he wanted to see Max’s face when he saw it for the first time. He’d have a few hours to play on it, and to assumedly challenge his loving mates, before their guests started arriving.

But for today Harry was staying close to home. Or rather he was staying close to the bathroom, the toilet in particular, as every single smell, every motion was making him feel sick. He was ten and a half weeks pregnant, Max’s birthday was at the end of the week, in just three days, and he could barely take a breath without running for the toilet.

Eggs had been banned, as had fish, cheese, all fried foods and much to Blaise’s ire, coffee. Harry could barely stand to be around any of those smells and he knew that Blaise was sneaking a coffee now and then up in one of the spare bedrooms, trying to get his fix, while still being considerate to Harry’s rather delicate condition. Harry really appreciated the gesture and he made sure that Blaise knew that Harry was both sorry and grateful for his sacrifice.

He’d been in court twice, but even that was getting to be a bit too much as he faced the Dursley’s lawyer as they had faced Richard, going through all the accusations and evidence to try and poke holes in them, to try and prove him a deluded little liar, and all the while he had to try to hold onto his stomach, and his rather haywire emotions too. Thankfully he was able to take as much calming draught as he needed, despite being pregnant, as the potion didn’t affect the baby. Even so, he knew that his mates were worried, he was worried too, about the effect all of the stress was having on their ninth baby, especially after his first scan, when Healer Almus had told them that the baby had an elevated heartbeat thanks to the stress he was under. Because of that he was trying to keep his days as nice and calm as possible, relaxing at home as much as he could. It had been lovely, wonderful to have so much rest and relaxation, but while he was in court, it just wasn’t enough to combat the stress of being on the stand, of defending himself from any attempt to justify the abuse that he had suffered through as a child. He couldn’t wait for it all to be over.

“Would some tea calm the thunderer down?” Draco asked him.
That made Harry smile, it was a small, almost pained smile, as his belly was very tender from all of the vomiting, but it was a true smile nonetheless.

“I’m not sure what will help at this point.” He said miserably.

Draco fluttered around him, unsure what to do, but clearly wanting to do something. All of his mates were doing the same lately. They wanted to help him, to take it away from him, especially when he declared that he didn’t feel well enough to eat, the worst of that had been two days ago, when he’d gone the entire day without eating anything and only sipping on water occasionally. Max had almost been beside himself with worry, but Harry had woken up the next morning ravenous and he’d eaten two bowls of cereal, three rounds of unbuttered toast and half a pack of rich tea biscuits. He’d eaten a sandwich for lunch that day and that had been when the morning sickness had hit him.

That had been yesterday and today was turning out to be more of the same, as he was back to not eating and what little he did eat, only came back up. He had taken to rubbing soft circles on his belly to calm his little thunderer down.

“Do you want some more water?” Draco asked him.

“Yes, okay.” Harry agreed, just so that Draco could feel like he was actually doing something, as he didn’t think that it would help at all. He sighed as Draco went into the kitchen and he pet his belly some more. “You need to settle down, thunderer. You can’t grow big and strong if you don’t let me eat and drink.”

Draco brought him a glass of water and Harry sipped at it, praying that it didn’t set him off again. Everything was rather tentative, but it didn’t bode well for Max’ birthday dinner in a few days. At this rate he would be banning all strong smells and sitting and watching his four mates eating between bouts of dashing to and from the bathroom. He hated the very thought of it, because he didn’t want to ruin Max’s birthday dinner, but as things were now, he just couldn’t see any other alternative. He was struggling to keep water down and Nasta had told him that if it continued, then he’d be calling Healer Almus.

Harry wasn’t too aggrieved at that, if it carried on then he’d call the Healer himself as he was as worried as his mates, but he knew his body well enough by now to know that he wasn’t in any danger just yet. He wasn’t feeling weak or dizzy, he was a little more tired than usual, but he wasn’t worried about that. He was just miserable more than anything. Miserable that he couldn’t eat, miserable that he couldn’t drink anything other than water, miserable that this pregnancy was so unsettling. He once again patted his belly to calm his thunderer down. If this carried on then he would see if Healer Almus could help him, either with some tips and advice, or perhaps with a potion, but he was adamant that he would not ruin Max’s birthday. If the worst came to the worst then he would ask his mates to go without him, at least that way they could enjoy themselves and he could be where he needed to be. Hugging the toilet.
Chapter End Notes

A/N: There’s not much to say, I’m feeling a little better, but I’m still off work, I’ve got another doctor appointment tomorrow and we’ll go from there, until then, please enjoy this chapter and an introduction back into the drama with the court and with the Faerie city too, there will be a lot more to come with the Faerie city now.

StarLight Massacre. X
Obstacle Lunacy

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Harry wasn’t too aggrieved at that, if it carried on then he’d call the Healer himself as he was as worried as his mates, but he knew his body well enough by now to know that he wasn’t in any danger just yet. He wasn’t feeling weak or dizzy, he was a little more tired than usual, but he wasn’t worried about that. He was just miserable more than anything. Miserable that he couldn’t eat, miserable that he couldn’t drink anything other than water, miserable that this pregnancy was so unsettling. He once again patted his belly to calm his thunderer down. If this carried on then he would see if Healer Almus could help him, either with some tips and advice, or perhaps with a potion, but he was adamant that he would not ruin Max’s birthday. If the worst came to the worst then he would ask his mates to go without him, at least that way they could enjoy themselves and he could be where he needed to be. Hugging the toilet.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Thirteen – Obstacle Lunacy

Harry was so excited for Max’s birthday and as the baby had settled down a little more now that he was eleven weeks pregnant, he felt happier about the romantic meal tonight.

They still hadn’t told Max about their plans to go out for dinner tonight, Max who was insanely excited for tomorrow, not knowing that his birthday surprises would start tonight. Harry couldn’t wait to tell him that he wouldn’t need to sort out dinner for anyone and that the kids were going away for their dinner and they were going out for theirs.

They were having the kids back for the evening, but hopefully they would already be asleep, then to distract Max from the kitchen, and more importantly the back garden where the obstacle course was going to be fully inflated and ready for the next morning, they were going to drag him up to bed and thoroughly distract him.

At almost three months pregnant, Harry had only just started to show. It wasn’t much, but there was now a visibly perceivable bump to him and his mates could not be more excited about it as they took to cupping the barely there bump, touching it, kissing it, talking to it. This was rather annoying, as sometimes Harry was only lying in a certain position to quell the nausea and their touches made him shift, which then sent him running for the bathroom. They seemed to be getting the message and they asked him first if they could touch his belly first. Harry hated that, that they felt they needed permission to touch him, because he loved them touching him. In usual circumstances that was. This wasn’t usual circumstances, however, he just couldn’t have them touching the bump when their baby thunderer, or thunderess as Max had teased, played up when he so much as rolled over.

He sighed and nibbled on the piece of bread that he’d dipped in some of Max’s ‘healing’ chicken soup. He wanted to eat, because he was hungry, but he wanted something light, because he wanted dinner later. He hoped that the good day continued and the sickness stayed away. Just a few days, he thought to himself, patting his belly gently.

“You're not feeling sick, are you?” Max asked as he ate his own soup.

“No, I’m okay for the moment.” Harry said. “I’m more pleading with the baby to stay nice and calm and not jump around my sac so I can finish off this amazing soup.”

“I’m glad you’re feeling better.” Blaise said. “You have more colour to you today.”

Harry smiled happily. “I’m just glad to be eating something.”

“I bet.” Max said, walking behind him and kissing his cheek. “I can’t wait for tomorrow!” He said for the millionth time that week.

“Why, what’s tomorrow?” Blaise teased.

Max scoffed and darted around the table to wrap those huge arms around Blaise and he nibbled on his neck.

“You know what’s tomorrow!” Max insisted with a grin, not letting Blaise go. “It’s my birthday!”

“Oh, that’s right, you’re turning three.” Blaise quipped.

Max laughed. “Thirty-three, though I have always told you that I have a mental age of twelve.
Though I think since I became a Father that that’s increased a little, maybe sixteen now?”

Harry and Blaise both laughed.

“You dope, I love you.” Harry said.
“I love you too, stunner.” Max kissed the air at him and then winked and Harry shook his head, but he couldn’t stop smiling.

He was glad now that they’d decided to treat Max to dinner tonight, he really deserved some pampering, some quality time with them all to himself, with all the attention on him. They’d been through a lot in the last several months, Harry hoped that the next several were calmer and more level and if they got the time to spend together, like now, then they needed to take it. They only had Blaise’s birthday left for this year now, out of their mateship that was. Myron’s birthday was in two weeks, their quintuplets were two in December, after the nightmare that was going to be Christmas, and then there was Halloween to survive too. Harry Jackson, Henley’s son, turned one in October, as did Beatrice, Caesar and Amelle’s youngest daughter. Ashleigh and Richard were both fifty in November, Ashleigh just a few weeks before her husband, and then Henley himself turned nineteen in December, along with his daughter, Claudia. It was going to be a very busy couple of months, especially as he himself could go into his nest and have the baby at any time from about November or December. He hoped not, he didn’t want any more premature babies, his heart broke for the struggling newborns who would have to fight for every moment of life. He patted his belly and he hoped that his thunderer stayed put.

“You’re not feeling sick, are you?” Blaise asked worriedly. “You keep doing that.”

Harry looked up and shook his head. “No, I’m fine. I really am just pleading with the baby to hold off for a bit so I can get some decent meals down me. Those potions from Healer Almus are helping too.”

“We’ll monitor you on those.” Max insisted as he came back over with tea and a coffee for Blaise. They watched him closely until they knew that he wasn’t going to run for the hills.

Harry nodded his understanding and he took a delicate sip of tea. Nothing happened and Harry sighed happily, taking a bigger gulp. He hoped that the sickness held off and that he was able to enjoy their meal later tonight and that he could have a bit of fun tomorrow, though not too much physical exuberance…he was going to be worn out after tonight. Harry grinned to himself, he was very much looking forward to distracting Max until tomorrow morning.

“I know that look, what are you thinking?” Max purred at him.

“Naughty things.” Harry said. “I don’t know why, but I’m revved up today, I’m desperate for a fuck.”

Max’s eyes widened and Blaise’s jaw literally dropped.
“Do you both want to come and help me feel better?” Harry asked, lowering his voice and smiling. “I need a shower anyway, this way I can kill three birds with one stone.”

“Three birds?” Max asked curiously.

“I want sex, I fucking stink so I need a shower and I want to feel better.” He added, though the third ‘bird’ was keeping Max distracted and getting him into the shower for later tonight. He couldn’t come out and say that though, not without ruining the surprise.

“Well then, let us help you.” Max said as he helped Harry to stand and then went to help up Blaise, who drained his coffee and followed after Harry quickly.

“You’re not sick are you?” Nasta asked as Harry almost bowled past him in the passageway, Nasta had had to hold him to stop them from colliding.

“No, phase get Max in the shower has begun.” Harry hissed, winking, as Max and Blaise hurried into the hallway too.

Nasta chuckled. “Go on, don’t tire yourselves out, you need to relieve me and Draco of baby duty once you’re done.” He laughed, letting Harry go and waving them to their master en suite.

Nasta went back into the family room and he gave a smile to Draco.

“What was all the noise?” The blond asked.

“Phase one is complete. Harry has convinced Max to have a shower.”

“How?” Draco asked. “I’ve been dropping hints all morning!”

“I believe Harry offered him shower sex.”
Draco blinked, then he sighed and rubbed his forehead. “Of course that would have worked! Why didn’t I think of that?!?”

“Don’t worry. Max is in the shower now. He’s warming up with Harry and Blaise, we’ll get him later tonight. Are the suits all ready?”

Draco nodded. “All clean and fresh pressed and hanging up in our walk-in wardrobe. Did you check the reservation?”

Nasta nodded. “I floo called this morning to confirm and we’ve been assured that they don’t allow photos to be taken on their premises. So we can floo directly there, or Apparate if we prefer, and while we’re in the building no photos of us will be taken.”

Draco nodded. “That will make Harry happy. He hates having his face splashed about the place.”

“There will likely be someone who makes a comment to one of the rags about him being there, so I’d be surprised if there wasn’t at least a small article about it, but they shouldn’t be able to get pictures or anything from the staff as they don’t put up with such behaviour.”

Draco smiled happily. “Hopefully we can have a nice, quiet meal together without anything happening or any mishaps. I just want to enjoy a meal with my lovers, is that so much to ask?”

“No, it’s not.” Nasta agreed, going to kiss Draco. “We’ve done our all now to try and make this meal as good, and as calm as we can. There are no photos allowed, the servers and staff are all professional and respectful of the diners’ privacy, we should have a nice evening.”

“I hope Harry’s sickness stays away.” Draco fretted.

“He’s doing well, but he is pregnant. If he is sick, then it can’t be helped and I made sure to get a table close to the bathroom, just in case. The restaurant understood completely when I explained. If he is sick, then I will bring him home and you can stay at the restaurant with Blaise and you can both make Max’s night and then come back to meet me and Harry at home.”

“Max will likely want to come back too.”
“That will only make Harry more upset. He’ll think that he’s ruined Max’s dinner. He might think that even if I’m the only one who brings him home, you know how he is sometimes. But this isn’t his fault, he’s pregnant.”

“When are those guys coming to put up that inflatable monstrosity?”

Nasta chuckled. “Later tonight, about seven, we should already be on our main course by then.”

“Then when we get home, Harry will want to check on the kids, but after that it’s just dragging Max to bed and keeping him there until morning.”

Nasta winked. “Exactly right, Cariad. It shouldn’t be too difficult in theory. I’ve got the night feeds and nappy changes, we’ll make sure there’s a glass of water for him and Harry on the bedside table, everything should go to plan. Its tomorrow morning that could be the biggest problem, if Max wakes up first and opens the kitchen curtains and sees that ‘inflatable monstrosity’ we could be rumbled.”

“We’ll just have to wake up earlier than him then.”

“Easier said than done when he’s used to waking up early to sort out breakfast every day.” Nasta sighed. “I’ll try though and then I’ll force him into the family room with the kids and keep him in there until the rest of you are awake.”

“I’ll do the same if I’m awake.”

Nasta nodded. “I’ll see Harry and Blaise too, so they know that if they’re awake that they’re to keep Max from the kitchen and away from the garden and the windows.”

“I’m just glad that that thing will fit in our garden.”

Nasta laughed then. “It has nothing on our garden, Draco. Our garden doesn’t stop at the trees, I just made the decision to keep the trees when I bought the land because Harry loved Max’s orchard. We’d fit three of those obstacle course on the back lawn, one to either side of the house and then another two on the front lawn. We do have a lot of land, I think I’m going to start doing something with it now, for the kids.”
“We love you for building this huge house for us.” Draco insisted, bending forward to pull Nasta into a kiss.

“Daddy, no!” Regan insisted, hurrying over to break up their kiss.

“He really has a problem with kissing.” Draco said with a considering frown.

“He’ll be fine. At the moment it’s like when Leolin hits us when we go near Harry. He just wants some attention.” Nasta said as he hefted Regan up and sat him on his lap.

Nasta changed the subject to the kids then, as time went by, just in case Max came down and heard something, but it wasn’t needed. Another hour on top of the hour that they’d already been upstairs and he went to see where they’d gotten to. He found the three of them napping naked, and still a bit damp, in the middle of their bed. Harry’s plan had worked a little too well it seemed.

Nasta chuckled, but he left them where they were. He sent Draco for his own shower as he took some time to play with his children, laughing at their innocent play and some of the things that they came out with while they were playing. Their oldest daughter was the funniest to watch, as Tegan went everywhere with her little penguin and she would strike up a conversation with it.

Draco came down and Nasta had to whistle at him, giving him a once over.

“You look so good.” He said, standing from the floor and going to kiss Draco, making sure to stay away from the sharp, crisp suit. “Very dapper.”

Draco went slightly pink, but he looked pleased. “Grey is definitely my colour.”

“I agree, pale grey or silver goes so well with those stunning eyes of yours.”

“You’re in a very flirty mood.” Draco pointed out.

“I have a reason to be in a flirty mood. Three mates upstairs, sated, naked and resting for later, and one very dapper mate in front of me, looking good enough to eat.”

“Don’t mention eating.” A soft, moan came from the other room a moment before Harry slouched in.
“You aren’t feeling sick are you?” Draco asked in concern.

“No, I’m so hungry I could eat a horse.”

“That’s just the Dracken in you coming through.” Nasta teased.

It took Harry a moment to filter the comment, then he laughed, his face brightening up and bringing a smile to his lips. It immediately made Draco and Nasta take notice and stand up straighter, it made them happier to know that their submissive was happy.

“Maybe, but if I don’t get something to eat I think I will go full Dracken and go scouring the neighbourhood for prey.”

“Well we can’t have that, it’s almost four O’clock now, I’ll get the kids’ dinner on now and then I’ll sort ours out.” Max said as he stumbled in with a yawn. He stared as he saw Draco. “You’re looking so good, Draco. What’s the occasion?”

Harry shared a look with Draco and Nasta and he shrugged before turning to Max.

“You, of course. We’re going out tonight.” Harry said with a grin.

“Tonight? But…” Max looked at all of them for a moment, a confused frown on his face.

“We’ve got more plans for tomorrow, but for tonight, we want you to ourselves.” Harry said softly.

“We’re really going out?” Max asked excitedly.

“Yes, your suit is hanging in the wardrobe, we have reservations in a little over an hour, so best go get dressed.” Nasta chided.

“The kids are going to family?” Max asked.
“No, we thought we’d leave them here alone.” Harry rolled his eyes. “Aneirin and Idris are having them.”

“And we can’t wait!” Idris’ happy voice came from the other side of the double doors which were thrown open wide as Idris made an entrance worthy of the best diva.

“Let’s get them gone then.”

“Nasta, you need a shower.”

“I can be in and out.” Nasta insisted.

“Get going then.” Harry prodded at him. “I’m hungry.”

“I’ve got the kids. Between us we can get them safely to the house.” Aneirin said, watching them with a happy smile, cradling Ave who’d toddled up to him to inspect the new comer.

Harry was hungry, and excited, but he still hugged and kissed his babies goodbye. He still had a problem leaving them, even with family, for such non urgent reasons, even though he’d been told over and over that ‘date night’ was very important to keep their relationship as healthy as possible. He agreed with that, but it was hard to convince his Dracken side to leave their babies behind.

Forty minutes later and all the kids had been moved safely to Idris’ house and they were running around getting ready, checking several times that they all had their wallets, that at least one of them had their keys, just in case, of which Nasta had already sorted out. Draco was making sure that they all looked perfectly presentable, attacking Harry’s hair with a comb, straightening collars and cuffs and Max was like a big kid, bouncing around and demanding to know where they were going.

“You’ll find out when we get there.” Nasta replied for the seventh time.

“Are we having dinner? Because Harry’s hungry and he needs food.” Max wheedled.

“Harry will be taken care of.” Nasta soothed. “Just take a moment to breathe, Max.”
“I can’t! I can’t believe you did this, tricking me the night before my actual birthday! I wasn’t expecting it.”

“There’s a lot you aren’t expecting.” Blaise winked at him.

Max’s excitement, if at all possible, seemed to increase and he tried to wheedle the answers out of Blaise then, about the other surprises that he was getting.

“Alright, we’re going, come on, Max. You need to Apparate with me.” Draco said another twenty minutes later, going to take Max’s arm after they were all ready and was assured that they absolutely had everything.

“What about Harry? Harry needs to go with someone.” Max protested.

“I’m taken care of.” Harry grinned.

“He’s coming with me, Max.” Nasta said calmly, sliding his arm around Harry’s waist.

“Go on now.” Harry shooed with a smile. “Come here, Blaise, we can’t have you going alone. It’s not proper.”

Blaise laughed and came to Harry’s other side, looking very, very handsome in charcoal.

Nasta was the only one who was wearing anything out of the norm, but he looked incredibly good in a dark brown suit. It brought out the hazel-gold in his eyes wonderfully and you could barely see the green hints in them, instead they looked almost amber.

Harry held his breath as they Apparated, and he hoped that his stomach stayed in place. A moment later and soft, gentle music reached his ears and the world stopped crushing him. He took a moment to breathe, to take in several breaths and then he opened his eyes to see Blaise in front of him, Blaise who had stayed with him as he took a moment, while Nasta went to confirm their reservations. They were led to their table and the five of them sat themselves down.

“How are you feeling, love?” Draco asked from his left side.
“Okay at the moment, not great, but it’s not bad. I think it’ll settle in a moment. I just need a minute.”

“The bathroom is right by there.” Nasta said, pointing out a short corridor with a door on either side of the wall. “Just in case you need it, I made sure that we had a table close to it for you.”

“Thank you, but at the moment I just need to sit still for a bit. I’ll be fine.”

Max, sat almost directly opposite him, next to Draco, looked at him consideringly.

“You’re sure? You haven’t been well for a few weeks now.”

“I’m sure. Just a small request though, please. No fish.” He said with a face.

“That’s fair enough. We’ll respect that request.” Blaise said from the other side of Max.

Harry smiled then and he stretched his leg out to touch Max’s. “So, what do you think of our little surprise?”

“I still can’t believe it.” Max said, looking up from the menu he’d been given. “I really didn’t expect you to do this before my actual birthday. It’s such a surprise and I love all four of you for it.”

Harry smiled, feeling much better for having heard that. He looked at his own menu, but he was pretty sure that he was going to go for a steak. Ever since Nasta had said about feeding him raw meat, he’d wanted raw meat.

“Are we ready to order, Sirs?” A waiter came to ask them, his voice soft and respectful.

“I think so.” Draco answered, looking at them all. “Harry, have you decided?”

Harry looked up and he noticed that he was the only one with his menu still open. “Yes, I want a rare, ten ounce steak, please. No sauces.”
“Very good, Sir.”

The five of them ordered, none of them wanted starters, they all wanted dessert, even Nasta, which just made Harry desperate for sex again. He shifted uncomfortably, then again, and the second shift got the attention of all his mates quicker than a gunshot.

“Are you okay?” Nasta asked from the right side of him.

“Yes, I just…” Harry stopped, cast a glance around, then pulled himself to Nasta’s ear. “I want sex.”

Nasta was surprised into laughing, but he kissed him regardless. “Later, love. After dinner.”

“What’s the matter?” Max asked.

“You didn’t tire him out enough.” Nasta said simply.

Max looked worried for a moment, then the penny dropped and his expression cleared. Those dark blue eyes danced with amusement. “I’ll have to do a better job after dinner then.”

Harry winked. “You’d better.”

“It would be my genuine pleasure, my love.” Max said, all male pride and self-satisfaction.

“You had your chance and you failed. It’s my turn.” Draco boasted.

“I’d tire all of you out before an hour was up.” Nasta said simply.

Harry laughed. “That you would, love, but that would have to be an hour each, your glorious hip rolling takes about an hour to smoothen out as you find your rhythm.”
“Ooo, Nas, he’s in need of a personal performance to prove him wrong.” Max chuckled.

“I’ll prove all of you wrong later.” Nasta smirked.

“Now that’s just unfair.” Harry complained. “You know while pregnant I can’t last very long, the sensations are too much for me.”

“We’ll just have to give you multiple attentions throughout the night.” Blaise said, giving him a heated look. “Trust me, it’ll be no hardship.”

“We’re going to scare the waiter if we carry on like this.” Draco said with a grin.

“Let the poor peon be scared.” Max declared. “I like our topic of conversation.”

“Of course you do.” Blaise teased. “Anything to do with sex and you can’t help yourself.”

Harry chuckled. “I can’t wait to see the dessert menu. Only posh places have a separate dessert menu and I didn’t see any on the menu we were given.”

“They have a separate dessert menu, love. We’ll make sure to get you what you want.” Nasta told him with a smile.

Harry was pleased with that and they moved their conversation smoothly onto what desserts they might have here and what they each wanted. Harry was almost drooling at the thought of all the desserts and he couldn’t stop his stomach from rumbling in anticipation.

Nasta gave him a look and smiled, as did Draco.

“I did say I was hungry.” He giggled. “Where is our food? Our neighbours are starting to look appetising.”

His mates all laughed at that, but it was only another ten minutes before they were served. Harry was grateful that his came first and he happily started slicing up his steak. The first bite was for him, the second went to Draco. He gave his mates all a taste of his steak and he got a taste of their chosen plates…if he liked the look and smell of it that was.

They were quiet as they all ate, the sparse conversation was light and happy, and it did inevitably turn to their children and their growing ninth, who was behaving so well today.

When they were done eating, they just settled down for a moment and Harry did have to go to the bathroom, for his bladder though, not for anything else. When he got back, their plates had been cleared away and his mates were all drooling over a rather large dessert menu. Harry all but dived onto his as he retook his seat.

“I can’t decide between the chocolate fudge cake with chocolate sauce or the warm brownie with vanilla ice cream.” Harry complained.

“So get both. Who says you only have to have one?” Max insisted.

Harry looked right at Nasta, who chuckled. “It’s a special occasion and you have been very good with your food lately, and you deserve a treat after all of the morning sickness you’ve been experiencing. Go mad, all of you.”

Harry cheered and he closed his menu, happy that he’d looked through everything several times and that he wanted both desserts he’d chosen…and he’d steal a bite from each of his mates too.

Max once again tried to wheedle the details of what they were doing tomorrow for his birthday out of them, but the rest of them held out, just laughing at his attempts to get the information.

Their desserts were brought over, and this time Harry was out of luck and his mates got theirs first, so he begged for them to feed him their desserts until his arrived. He liked Nasta’s cheesecake, he liked Draco’s lemon and lime posset, whatever a posset was, Harry had believed it to be a vermin animal of some kind, not a dessert, and Max had gotten the same chocolate cake as Harry was getting, along with a separate bowl of chocolate ice cream. It was gorgeous and Harry couldn’t wait for his own to arrive. Blaise had ordered chocolate mint ice cream and coffee…Harry did not want to try that, but thankfully his own two desserts arrived and he happily dived into both.

Another hour and all five of them were very full and very happy. Nasta settled the bill from their joint account and Harry was helped to his feet and escorted to the Apparation point within the restaurant. He and Nasta were going to go first, just in case anything was amiss at home that would clue Max into his surprise for tomorrow.

It was an absolute relief to get home and Harry sat his arse on the settee and he happily kicked off his shoes as he pulled off his tie. Nasta went into the kitchen to make sure the curtains and such were closed and he was going to make tea as an excuse. Harry could hear Idris laughing from the kitchen and the loud greeting of Nasta let Harry know that everything was fine and his babies were all in bed. He’d want to go and check on them all first, but for now, he needed to rest and relax, letting his large dinner and two desserts settle a little.

He pulled Max down with him when his biggest mate came through last, telling him that Nasta was getting the tea and he wanted a cuddle. Draco and Blaise didn’t mind, as they knew that he was doing it to give Nasta more time to check on everything. Harry hoped it was all alright and that things went well tomorrow. He was so excited.

When Blaise came back in and told them go stop being anti-social and to go into the kitchen, Harry knew then that everything was safe and though he made a play of whining, he was happy to coerce Max into carrying him to the kitchen and to his cup of waiting honey tea.

“There he is, hello tiny.” Idris greeted. “And you too, Harry, shwmae.”

Harry laughed at that, as Idris was calling Max tiny, but Max just rolled his eyes.

“You’ll have to do better than that, I’ve heard worse from my own family.” Max laughed as he placed Harry down gently in a chair and sat beside him.

Harry all but fell on his cup of tea and he took a huge swallow. He moaned happily.

“Did you miss your honey tea?” Aneirin asked with a smile.

Harry nodded. “Yes, the restaurant didn’t have honey tea on the menu, and I doubt they would have made it right, just as I like it, anyway. This is the perfect end to a perfect meal.”

“Did you enjoy yourselves then?” Idris asked.

Harry nodded.

“Yes, it was amazing.” Max answered. “The best early birthday dinner, ever.”

That made Harry smile.

“Well, there were no problems with the kids, they all settled fine, they all made a big mess with their dinners and they all dropped off to sleep with a story.” Aneirin told them. “If that was all then we’ll get out of your hair and we’ll see you tomorrow.”
“What’s tomorrow?” Max asked quickly, his excitement almost palpable.

“Your birthday, of course.” Idris winked. “Have a Harry birthday, kid.”

Harry rolled his eyes at the terrible joke. “You’re not even funny.”

Idris pouted. “I am!” He insisted. “Nassa, tell your mean mate that I’m hilarious.”

“My Father taught me to never tell lies.” Nasta said simply.

Aneirin laughed then. “I did teach him that, Idris. You’ll just have to stay very unfunny.”

“But I am funny.” Idris complained. “That was a very good joke considering the amount of times Max is going to be banging Harry tonight and tomorrow.”

“Alright, that’s enough.” Aneirin cut in. “Let’s get you back home before I have to carry you in pieces.”

“At least I have someone to bang me.” Harry winked.

Idris laughed loudly, even as he was chided out of the door by his older brother. Harry looked to Max and he winked again.

“Maybe Idris has an idea, Max. Wanna bang?”

Max about choked on his laugh and he had to bury his face in his arms, head to the table, as he roared loudly with uncontrollable laughter.

“You could ask more politely.” Draco sniffed.

“He’s my mate, I shouldn’t have to.” Harry pointed out. “I should be able to turn around to all of you
“What would you say if I came out with that, though?” Draco asked. “If I just turned around and asked if you wanted to fuck?”

“Yes please, let’s get going upstairs, we only have a few hours to get it all out of our systems and I’m desperate.” Harry answered with a raised eyebrow and a smile.

Max laughed harder into his arms, he actually started wheezing and Harry gave him an amused look, even though his mate couldn’t see him.

“I mean it, all of you get moving. I was desperate in the restaurant, before we even started eating, I’m even more so now. In fact. I’m going up, if none of you are there in five minutes, I’m playing with my toys…actually, I might play with them regardless. Fuck you all.” He declared as he hurried off to the stairs.

He went into the nursery to quickly check on his babies and he tucked them all in, giving each of them a kiss. Then his night truly began and he walked into their master bedroom. His mates were all there waiting, but Max had already gotten their box of toys out and he was rooting through it, looking for whatever toy he wanted.

“You can pick the toy, Max.” Harry said with a smirk. “But I’m using it first. Then if I hand it to you, you can take over. If I feel like handing it over, of course.”

Max moaned and Harry’s smirk widened. He really loved teasing his mates and as he stripped himself off slowly, teasingly, he automatically cupped the bump of his ninth child. Tonight was going to be amazing, but tomorrow was going to be phenomenal, he couldn’t wait to see Max’s face…if it was anything like the one he was currently making as Harry swayed his way towards him, fully naked and cradling their unborn child, well, they would find themselves back in the bedroom very quickly.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry woke up to an insistent, annoying prodding and he groaned, rolling over further into the warm body beside him.

The poking became more intense, and getting angry now, he rolled back over to confront it, only to see Draco.
“What you want?” He slurred tiredly.

“Shhh!” Draco shushed him. Harry felt like finding something, anything, hard and solid and beating in Draco’s face with it.

“How dare you shush me when I was fine sleeping?!” Harry groused.

The body behind him grunted and shifted and Draco looked panicked and like he was fervently praying for something.

“It’s Max’s birthday, his big surprise!” Draco bent forward to hiss into his ear. “You wanted to be downstairs to see his face.”

Harry’s slow, tired mind caught up with the words, and what was happening, and he groaned. “It’s not morning already, it can’t be. We shouldn’t have played so many games last night.”

“You’re the one who kept picking more toys to play with.” Draco pointed out.

Harry grunted. “You weren’t complaining, none of you were. Now help me up.”

Draco snorted softly, but he dutifully pulled Harry upright and helped him to swing his legs over the side of the bed. Harry looked back at the still sleeping Max, who was the only one left in the bed, but then they really had done a number on him last night. He had been the main focus of all of their attentions, especially when midnight came, and it was a wonder that he was actually asleep still and not just flat out comatose.

Harry padded his way to their en suite, he did his business, washed his hands and then he splashed some cold water onto his face. It woke him up better than anything else and he took a big breath and he went back into their bedroom. Draco was waiting for him, watching Max like he was a sleeping dragon, but their biggest mate hadn’t moved since Harry had rolled out of the bed.

“Come on, we’ve got a nice cup of tea waiting for you downstairs.” Draco coaxed and Harry chuckled quietly.
He took Draco’s hand and allowed himself to be pulled from their bedroom, down the corridor and then carefully down the stairs. They made it to the quiet, shut up kitchen, which Max was going to hate, as he always insisted that the first person down was to open the curtains, and if it was hot, then the windows too, and then on into the family room, which was partially shut up. The double doors into the smaller living room were open, as were the curtains on the one side, flooding in light, but it was still rather gloomy as the long, floor length curtains that covered the sliding door out onto the porch were closed still, all so that Max would actually eat something before he went charging off over the obstacle course in the garden.

“Have you checked to see if it’s still up?” Harry asked, even as he scooted around and pulled back the edge of the curtain to look.

“We did check and it seems fine and sturdy.” Nasta told him.

“Mummy!” Braiden called out. “Bo da!”

Harry smiled adoringly at his son. “Bore da, Braiden. Good morning.”

“Bo jor!”

“Bonjour, Braiden. Good morning.”

“Ciao!”

“Ciao, Braiden. Good morning.”

“Ciao!” Tegan copied.

Harry actually gasped in surprise. “Ciao, Tegan. Good morning.”

“Ciao, Tee!” Braiden greeted his sister.

“Ciao!” Tegan giggled.
“What have you done, Blaise?” Harry laughed.

“I’ve successfully taught them a new greeting.” Blaise said proudly, looking at the kids with such a smug look on his face.

“I can see that. They’re all so amazing.” He sniffed, brushing away his eyes. He was so happy that they were growing and learning.

“What they do now?” Max asked, stumbling into the room, scratching his naked belly.

“Tegan is greeting us in Italian.” Harry said. “Happy birthday, lover.”

Max gave him a grin, but Braiden took his attention by repeating his daily morning ritual that included three languages now.

“Why’s it so dark in here?” Max demanded, as they’d known that he would. “It’s eight in the morning, all of these curtains should be open.”

“Breakfast first.” Nasta said.

“Who cooked it? I saw Harry leaving the bedroom not ten minutes ago, so I know it wasn’t him and he’s the only other person in this house who is able to cook.”

“Your grandmother sent over pancakes with Myron this morning.” Nasta said. “She knew we wouldn’t want you cooking and guessed that we would have had a late night.”

“Yes!” Max cheered. “Today is starting to look really good.”

“Harry, do you want some?” Nasta asked as he stood to go in the kitchen.

“No, thank you. I think I just want more tea and a banana please.”
Nasta nodded and didn’t press. He had been doing really well for the last few days, no one wanted to ruin that progress by urging him to eat more and then having that progress ruined by another thunderous bout of morning sickness.

Harry instead watched his mates eating their fluffy pancakes while he nibbled on a banana and sipped at his second cup of tea.

“Are all of those for me?” Max asked, peering into the smaller living room and spying the pile of presents.

“You know that they are.” Blaise teased. “No one else has a birthday today.”

Max stuffed the last of his pancakes and he went charging into the other room, dodging toddlers like a pro.

Instead of penning in the kids, Nasta had had the genius idea of penning in the pile of presents, so Harry had to laugh when Max had to climb over a fence to get to his gifts, but it had stopped the curious, inquisitive babies from destroying his birthday presents.

“Come on! I want to see what you’ve all gotten for me!” Max complained as his mates took an age to reach him.

“You’re so childish.” Draco laughed.

“You knew that when you met me, love! You can’t complain about it now.”

“I didn’t have any part in choosing you, that was all on Harry.” Draco insisted.

“But…you love me, right?” Max asked, a rare glimpse of insecurity poking through.

Draco’s expression softened. “Of course I do. You might be an overlarge, childish prat sometimes, but I adore you still and I wouldn’t change a thing about you.”

“Not even farting in bed?” Max laughed, remembering that talk.
“Okay, maybe a few things, but they’re all relatively minor.” Draco amended.

Harry had to laugh at that. “There’s nothing any of you can do about one another, it was my choice and I chose perfectly.” He insisted.

“That you did, Caru.” Nasta told him. “Max, open your cards.”

Max nodded and he did as he’d been told, still grinning. He would chuckle to himself every now and then, even as he opened and read cards from family and friends. Max had a lot of family members, and he had a lot of friends too, all the cupboards and all the windowsills were covered in cards and it took Max almost half an hour to open and read them all.

In that time Harry had placed both his twin girls in baby walkers, just to keep them safer, had broken up a fight over a doll between Calix and Regan, and drank another cup of tea with Leolin snuggled into his neck.

Max moved on to his presents and again, he had a lot of family and a lot of friends and as a result he had a lot of gifts, from clothes and novelty tee-shirts, to a little plush doll from Julius that looked an awful lot like Harry, right down to the tiny red zigzag on its forehead.

“I love this!” Max declared as soon as he realised that it was a soft, Harry doll. “I’m sleeping with this every night.”

“You’ll have to.” Harry sniffed. “You won’t be getting the real thing.”

Blaise laughed and Max joined in. “Aw, love. Come on, it’s just a gag gift, my family are experts at winding one another up, I mean, Caesar gave me a china tea set!”

“You love that tea set though.” Harry pointed out.

“Yeah, I do, but he didn’t know that I would. He gave it as a gag gift, like Uncle Julius has given me this.” Max said, dangling the Harry doll by its little arm. “It’s meant to garner a reaction, that’s what makes giving gag gifts funny. If you actually show that you love it, it takes all the wind from the person who gave it. Julius is going to be watching later to see how this doll was received, and truly, I do love my little doll, I’m going to keep it in our bed so I can cuddle it always.”
“That is not coming in our bed!” Harry cried out, shivering at the sight of the big, wide green circles that were supposed to be the doll’s eyes. “Put it in the wardrobe, I’ll have nightmares waking up seeing that looking back at me.”

“Ma.” Leolin said, a curious note to his voice. Harry looked down at him, but Leolin wasn’t even looking at him, he was looking at the doll that Max was dangling.

Harry was actually surprised into being silent as he watched Leolin study the little doll. “Ma.” He said again before he reached out for the doll. Max handed it over immediately and they all watched in awed silence as Leolin held the doll and then brought it to his chest to cradle it.

“You see.” Max said, breaking their stunned shock. “Gag gifts always have their place. Leolin now has his favourite person in the world in doll form that he can carry around with him. It’s useful to us, like the tea set is. This will just choke Julius when he sees that Leolin loves that doll.”

Harry bent and kissed Leolin’s head, watching him as he cuddled with his doll likeness. Maybe, like the blanket that he had slept with to cover it with his scent, having a doll version of him that he could always carry around with him would help to settle Leolin down and help him to gain a bit more independence, or at the very least help him to put up with his Fathers’ attentions when usually he only allowed Harry to fuss over him.

“Here, Nasta.” Harry said, shifting forward and gently transferring Leolin over to his arms. Nasta had all but dived forward to receive his son and Leolin went easily and without fuss, or much notice, as he was far too busy staring at the green circles that the doll had for eyes. Harry had to admit that Julius had managed to get the colour almost spot on.

Once Max was done with opening the plethora of gifts, now including books, work journals so that he could write down all his potions notes, potion ingredients, including some rare and obscure ones from Blaise, food, sweets, chocolate and even a very handsome leather case from his grandfathers on Richard’s side that contained a beautiful set of very expensive quills.

“This is the best birthday ever.” Max declared, looking over his horde.

“You say that every year.” Draco pointed out.

“It’s true every year.” Max argued. “My birthdays only get better as I age.”
Harry chuckled. “Well, we do hope that this birthday will be the best ever, the four of us have one final gift for you.”

“Really?” Max asked, his excitement ramping up yet again. “Where is it?”

“This way.” Harry said with a grin, standing up and taking Max’s hand and stepping over the playpen first. “Close your eyes.”

Max excitedly did as he’d been told and Harry led him carefully through the field of toddlers that kept getting underfoot. Blaise had gone right for the camcorder, to record Max’s first reaction, and Draco and Nasta followed them as Harry led Max to the kitchen and a simple wave of his wand had all the curtains rushing open.

Harry grinned at the massive inflatable obstacle course in the garden, even as he unlocked and slid open the backdoor.

“It’s outside?” Max asked curiously.

“Yes, keep your eyes closed.” Harry said sternly. “Left foot up and over.” He directed as he looked at Max’s feet. “This is one day where you don’t want to be nursing an injury.”

“Why not?”

“You’ll never win for me that way.” Harry said sternly.

“Win for you? Win what?”

Harry checked to make sure Draco and Blaise and Nasta were all standing behind him, where all four of them would be able to see Max’s face.

“Okay, open your eyes, love.” Harry said and he watched as Max snapped his eyes open and the confused furrow in Max’s brow eased off as he realised what he was looking at. He stood stock still for a moment, Harry counted eight heartbeats before Max reacted and he got the biggest grin on his face.
“Is that…?” He asked.

“A giant inflatable obstacle course for adults? Why yes it is.” Harry said proudly, with a big grin.

Max let out a loud yell, cheered and he ran straight for it, leaving his four mates still on the porch to laugh at him. Blaise had turned with the camcorder to record Max’s first go on the obstacle course.

“I knew he’d love it.” Harry said with a grin.

“He’s going to be exhausted by the time we go to bed.” Nasta sighed. “Looks like I’ll be doing all of the work.”

“That’s nothing new.” Blaise said.

Harry laughed. “You’re recording all of this for future documentation.” He pointed out. “I don’t think I want to scar our children in the future when they watch these tapes back.”

“All the tapes are ruined.” Draco insisted. “There is always some sort of comment on every scene we shoot.”

Harry snorted. “We clearly have no self-control.” He said, sitting at the massive porch table that seated twenty.

“Done!” Max cried out several minutes later from the bottom of the garden, where the finish was. He jogged back to them in double quick time. “What did I score? What was my time?” He asked.

“Oh, were we supposed to time you?” Draco drawled. “You should have said before you went charging off to start. You’ll have to do it again.”

Harry laughed and shook his head. He watched Max go around once more, before he went back inside to look after the kids. They’d be having guests at about lunch time, and there was no way that Max was getting off that obstacle course at all today. He really was going to be exhausted by tonight.
It was one in the afternoon when they started having their first guests arrive. Harry had sorted out lunch for the kids, assuring Max that it was his birthday and it was completely fine, that no he wasn’t feeling sick at the moment and he was alright to make a bit of lunch for his babies. He only did a bit of chicken breast and vegetables for the kids, stealing bites and nibbles as he helped the kids to eat.

He was still doing this when Myron, Richard and the invited Ashleigh came into the kitchen.

“Harry, darling, it’s so good to see you again.” She said with a soft smile.

Harry smiled back. “It’s great to see you looking so well, Ashleigh.” He insisted, going to hug her tightly.

She had progressed to a place where she was now allowed out of the centre for a day or two, as a sort of little test to check her progress. She had passed such tests before easily, when she was in her own home with her mates, but this would be a bigger test. Harry hoped that she was alright now, that she passed and was finally able to go home with her mates and stay home.

“May I say hello?” She asked a little hesitantly, indicating the eating children.

“Of course, you’re still their grandmother.” He said.

He went to greet Myron and Richard while Ashleigh said hello to the kids.

“Thank you for not holding her breakdown against her, Harry.” Myron told him, hugging him tightly

“She wasn’t well.” Harry said firmly. “If I had gone through the same I would have wanted support and help too and I wouldn’t have wanted it to be continually shoved in my face. My Dracken is calmer around her now too. She needed the help and she got it. It’s now time for her to remember that family can’t be broken so easily.”

Richard hugged him tightly too and Harry moaned. “Not so tight.” He complained. “Thunder hasn’t decided yet if it’s a sick day or not.”
“Thunder?” Myron asked, even as Richard apologised and loosened his hold.

“Thunder, thunderer, thunderess if you listen to Max, though I still say that thunderer is unisex. It’s what we’re calling the baby because of the violent morning sickness he or she is giving me.”

“I…has that name stuck?” Myron asked.

Harry nodded. “Even the guys are calling the baby thunder now. I’m looking through all the baby name books I have for a name that means thunder now.”

“Oh, thank Merlin.” Myron sighed. “I thought you meant the baby’s name would actually be thunder for a moment.”

“It might be yet.” Harry laughed and winked. Richard laughed with him.

“Sweet one!” Alexander called out as he came from the living room. “How are you feeling?”

“Very unsettled and on the borderline of being sick, but I’m okay.”

“Where is our birthday boy Maxie?”

Harry laughed and pointed to the visible obstacle course. “Where do you think? He hasn’t come off that thing since we showed it to him this morning. He’s got Blaise recording him and Draco timing him and he’s roped Nasta into a contest already to see who’s faster. He won’t believe that Nasta keeps winning.”

Richard laughed. “I have to get in on this, I’ve been dreaming of this obstacle course since you mentioned it to me.”

“Go and say hi.” Harry said. “Don’t think you have to wait for permission to go on that thing either, its upper weight limit is ridiculous and it’ll take up to forty people at once. Go have fun.”

“It’s going to rain in the afternoon.” Myron said worriedly.
“I’m counting on it.” Harry grinned. “At the first hint of rain I’m covering that thing in washing up liquid and letting the rain do its thing. It’s going to be amazing!”

Richard laughed and hugged him gently before taking off to the garden, his mates and his in-laws following. Harry heard him shouting his greeting to Max, he heard the challenge to Max and a minute later Nasta came in through the back door, sweaty but happy.

“Did you let him win at least once?” Harry asked.

“No. I was going to as it’s his birthday, but when I dropped off and let him go in front he gloated so badly that I couldn’t let him win after that.”

“Nasta.” Harry sighed, shaking his head. “It’s his birthday! Let him gloat and win a few races.”

Nasta snorted and came to hug him. “How are you feeling?”

“A little sick now.” He admitted. “I don’t think thunder is going to let me go on the obstacle course, not today.”

“I’m sorry the baby isn’t settling.” He said sincerely. “Sit down and I’ll get you some tea.”

Harry nodded and he sat at the end of the table. The kids were almost done eating and Harry monitored them critically for signs that they might choke. Of course there was mess and food everywhere, that had become normal at mealtimes now. Regan even had squashed broccoli in his hair. Harry made a mental note to try and comb that out after lunch and even as he watched, Calix picked up a slice of carrot and squashed it tightly in his fist, giggling as the orange mush was forced through his fingers. He shook his head, it was a lost battle and now he and his mates just left the kids to it, as long as most of their food ended up in their mouths, he didn’t care that his babies wore their food like face paint or hair accessories. It drove Draco mad though, at least until Narcissa had shown him a picture of himself sat in a booster seat and what looked like an entire plate of, what they’d been assured was cottage pie in his hair. He’d calmed a little since then, knowing how polite and mannered he had grown to be, he was now more assured that the kids could be taught too, just not quite so young.

Nasta set a cup of tea down in front of him and Harry sipped at it gingerly, keeping it in his hands so that no flying bits of food landed in his cup. That had happened before and he’d almost choked when he’d swallowed a baked bean that had been floating in his cup.
There as a loud cheer from outside and Harry chuckled.

“I’m glad we got that inflatable monstrosity for him.” He said.

“He’s certainly getting the most out of it, he hasn’t come off yet.”

“Who hasn’t come off of what?” Caesar asked as he walked in with baby Beatrice.

“Oh, Caesar, we’re glad you could come.” Harry said with a grin…they hadn’t told Caesar about the obstacle course either.

“I…I’m actually scared of that look on your face right now, what’s going on.”

“I hope you’re feeling active.” Harry giggled.

“Now I’m really scared.”

“We hired Max an inflatable obstacle course for adults for his birthday.” Nasta said, nodding to the kitchen window where the colourful inflatable was blocking out the sun. “He’s already challenged me, he’s challenging your Dad right now, as soon as you get out there, you’ll be next.”

“That’s so cool! Here, have a kid.” Caesar said, handing Bea over to Nasta and taking off outside.

“What was that?” Amelle asked, carrying Nora into the room just as Caesar ran out. She clocked Nasta with her daughter immediately, but didn’t say anything about it.

“We got Max an inflatable obstacle course…Caesar is obviously just as excited as Max.” Harry giggled.

Amelle rolled her eyes, but placed Nora down when her daughter squirmed and struggled. “He’s going to be like a big kid all day.” She said.
“We’ve set up a crèche area for the kids, taking their playpen outside and penning in the kids play area, so they can’t get hurt or go near the obstacle course, if you wanted to put Nora in there now, she can have the run of it for ten minutes.” Harry said.

Amelle nodded and she took Beatrice from Nasta and then took hold of Nora’s hand and led her out to the garden.

“We’re not going to have any peace.” Nasta sighed. “Wait until Sanex comes over, and Idris. This is utter lunacy.”

Harry chuckled. “It’ll all be over by tomorrow. The guys are coming back to deflate and take that thing away tomorrow afternoon. Until then, Max is happy.”

Nasta nodded and came to sit beside him, kissing him happily. “Is the tea helping?”

“I think sitting down is helping more. Of all days to protest movement, it’s Max’s birthday. At least I baked his cake yesterday.”

“You should have let me order him one. It would have still been special.”

“Nothing is as special as lovingly handmade.” Harry said. “I was feeling fine yesterday too. Even with the afternoon romp and nap, and dinner was amazing too. It’s today that this has started. Maybe I ate too much yesterday.” He said consideringly.

“Just rest for a little whi…”

“Down!” Calix demanded, interrupting Nasta and waving his messy hands about. “Mummy, Daddy, down.”

Harry chuckled and Nasta shook his head, grabbed the pack of baby wipes and he started cleaning a protesting Calix off with several of them before unbuckling him and setting him on his feet. Their son took off over the kitchen floor, much too fast, he fell just before he reached the door. Harry half rose, but Calix was unperturbed by his fall and he just started crawling instead on his hands and knees and out the back door.
“Crazy that boy.” He said with a smile, sinking back into his chair, watching as Nasta took more baby wipes to all of the kids, picking bits of food out of their hair, and in Regan’s case out of his ear, before he set them free one by one, leaving Farren for last, as he’d wanted apple slices after his lunch and none of the other kids had.

Harry hoped that someone had popped them all into the crèche area as they all filtered out of the kitchen one by one. The mental image of that made him giggle and he shook his head when Nasta turned to look at him curiously. He was in a very strange mood today, a rather silly, fun mood. It was a damn shame that he couldn’t act on it.

Two hours later and the kids were all down for their late afternoon naps, all apart from Farren, who wanted to stay with his granddad Myron, and Leolin, who wanted to stay awake with his ‘Ma’ doll and was being fussed over by Kimberly.

The heavens had opened and Harry was as good as his word. He’d kicked everyone off of the inflatable course and he’d used a dozen bottles of washing up liquid that he’d bought just for this moment, to cover every inch of it, from start to finish. At least he’d sort of had a go on the inflatable course as he carefully walked all over it and climbed the obstacles to cover it with the liquid as the rain came down and made the entire thing a slippery, slimy hazard.

“Try and beat the course now!” He’d declared to the grown men and women who were as excited as kids at Christmas.

“Your mate is awesome, Maxie!” Nicodemus declared, getting ready at the start for Nasta to signal the start of the race. “A genius too for thinking of this fun way to use the rain so it doesn’t spoil the day!”

“Don’t I know it!” Max said back, giving Harry a gooey eyed look.

Harry dropped his collection of plastic bottles for the recycling to the grass to pick up later, and he waved at Nasta in the drizzling rain, getting soaked himself, but he didn’t care. He was not missing this for the world.

“Aright, the course is set, please try not to break any bones, it’s a backyard contest and there’s no prize if you win, so don’t kill yourselves or each other.” Nasta insisted. “Feel free to drag down other people and throw them over or off of obstacles, however claws, fangs and wings are not permitted, so keep your Drackens under control.”
“Let us go, Nassa!” Idris whined from where he was bouncing in eager anticipation. “We already know the rules, you’ve been saying them all day.”

It was a shambles and Harry almost pissed himself in laughter as a dozen people took one step onto the inflatable and face planted it when their feet went from under them. Everyone was slipping and sliding, their arms windmilling to try and keep their balance and clinging to some of the obstacles to keep their feet.

Harry couldn’t breathe from laughing and he clung to Nasta, who’d come to join him at the finish to declare the winner, while Blaise was on the porch, in the dry, the camcorder aimed at the inflatable, watching the slipping, sliding people.

“I can’t…I can’t even breathe!” Harry giggled, panting and wheezing as he watched Cepheus slip and take out three other people like dominoes.

“This was definitely the best idea, I’m glad you thought of this.” Nasta laughed himself as they watched Max go sprawling as he slid down a slide and he just didn’t stop at the bottom. He couldn’t get his feet, he couldn’t slow down and he just slid straight into the next obstacle and Harry almost fell about laughing.

“Oh, Merlin.” Harry laughed, trying to catch his breath. “I’m going to call it a draw and watch them go back on again, this is too fun.”

Nasta was full out laughing when his brother hit a patch of washing up liquid and went skidding into Nicodemus and Richard, taking the both of them out. Harry burst out laughing again and the urge to go for a wee grew.

“This was genius, sweet one.” Alexander told him, keeping the main bulk of runners in his sights.

“I can’t even breathe.” Harry laughed, watching as more runners went sliding and tumbling.

“Richard’s getting trampled.” Myron smirked as he watched his mate continually fall and slip, his arm was around Ashleigh as she laughed so hard she had tears streaming down her face as Idris came over the one obstacle and fell on top of Richard. Harry looked for Farren and saw him in Draco’s arms, safe and dry on the porch.

It was anyone’s game when they reached the uphill obstacle, that Harry had emptied three full bottles of washing up liquid over. No one could get up it and despite the ropes to ‘help’ no one could climb up it. Harry was laughing so hard that he couldn’t see through his tears and he had wet himself a little. He just couldn’t stop himself and all of his muscles had relaxed and some wee had dribbled out before he could regain control of himself.

The race finally ended and it was slight, slim Caesar who had won. Amelle had run to him to congratulate her mate and he’d picked her up and spun her around, ignoring his soaking wet, slimy shirt and shorts that were plastered in washing up liquid and soap bubbles.

“Where are my mates to congratulate me?” Max whined when he finally finished.

“You lost!” Draco called out from under the dry porch. “I’m not running out into the rain with you as slimy and filthy as you are to congratulate a loser!”

“I survived!” Max called back. “That should be enough.”

Harry laughed again, wheezing and crying. He wasn’t going to send them back on to the course, he could barely breathe now, round two would have to wait until after the cake. He needed to catch his breath first.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Round two had turned into round three, four, five and six. Caesar had won the first round, Nicodemus had won the second, Max had been absolutely brutal to win the third round, catching up to Richard and throwing his own Father from the top of the obstacle and back down the uphill climb to knock several others over like bowling pins and Richard had had his revenge by yanking out Max’s foot and scaling past him to take the fourth round. Sanex had won the fifth round and then their winner, taking two rounds, was Caesar, who had wormed past both his Father and brother, then taken out Cepheus and then Julius to steal the win.

It was almost pitch black when they had to finally call a stop to the tournament. It was the greatest day many of them had had in a long while, and all the laughter and the fun had definitely been needed.

Harry was settled down with a cup of tea, a fussing Eva in his one arm as she refused to go to sleep, despite the fact that it was coming up to ten at night. He’d tried everything, more milk, a fresh nappy, singing lullabies and reading a story, but she was not happy.
“Is she teething?” Draco asked from the settee adjacent to him.

Harry sat forward and placed his cup on the coffee table and he checked. He hadn’t thought to check her for signs of teething and sure enough, another little dot of white was coming through at the bottom.

“You’re right, Draco, look!” He said as he showed his clamouring mates the little speck of white around the inflamed gum. “Max, go and get some of that gel, please. Maybe she’ll actually sleep if she’s not in any pain.”

“Sure thing, lover.” Max said, putting his own cup down and going to his potions case in the kitchen, where it was in the highest cupboard that no one could reach.

Harry took the tube of gel and he used a baby wipe to clean his finger before he smeared a blob of the gel over the emerging tooth, making sure to rub all the way around it to soothe and massage the gums too.

Eva had dropped off to sleep before any of them had finished their tea now that her pained gum had been soothed and Harry sighed in relief, just happy that his daughter was finally getting the rest that she needed.

“How is the thunderer?” Max asked him.

“Quiet, thank Merlin.” Harry answered. “I feel fine, I feel happy and healthy and not at all sick. It has been a good day.”

“I’ll agree to that.” Max said with a grin. “I’m exhausted and I’ve pulled several muscles that I didn’t even know I had.”

“Serves you right for treating a small backyard game like a conquest of war.” Draco laughed.

“I can’t believe Caesar won.” Max pouted.

“He is smaller and lighter than you are.” Harry soothed. “I saw your muscular weight dragging you back down some of those obstacles and Caesar just flew over them.”

“Yeah.” Max said, smiling a little at that thought. “That must have been it.”

“I’m sure it was.” Nasta agreed.

He and Nasta shared a look and Harry hid his grin. As long as Max was happy, he didn’t care.

“When does it need to be cleaned?” Max asked.

“Tomorrow morning now. You can have a few more hours on it, they aren’t coming until two in the afternoon, so the kids will be hopefully down for their naps and out of the way.”

“Yes!” Max cheered. “I can’t even believe you thought to do this for me. You’re the greatest mates in the entire world.”

“And don’t you forget it.” Harry teased.

“I won’t, not ever. I love you all far too much.” Max declared, coming to sit beside him and kissing him.

Harry smiled softly at him and sighed. “I think it’s time I put this little princess up in her bed. I don’t think I’ll come back down, I’m really not feeling the stairs.”

“I’ll carry you, hold on.” Max insisted, standing again and going to drain the last of his tea. “I’m exhausted after today and I know tomorrow I’m going to be sore. I was playing on that thing for twelve hours.”

Max picked up Harry, who had a hold of Eva and he moaned as his sore muscles protested.

“Don’t you dare drop them or you’ll be sleeping in a guest bedroom.” Blaise warned seriously.
“I’m not going to drop my precious, beloved cargo.” Max insisted. “I might not move from our bed tomorrow, but what’s a few pulled muscles in the bigger picture?”

“A bit of pain after a day of laughter and fun.” Harry answered what was likely a rhetorical question. “Oh, and cake!”

“Your cakes are to die for.” Max said seriously. “I’m glad that you took the time, even when you aren’t feeling your best, to make me a birthday cake. It was fantastic.”

“I was feeling alright yesterday, it’s today that all this has started, our thunderer is adamant that we know that they’re there.”

“We know you’re in there, baby, you just need to calm down a little.” Max whispered to his belly.

Harry smiled and he was set on his feet as Max climbed the stairs and took them into their bedroom. Harry went to the two cots beside their bed and he placed Eva into the empty one.

“Sleep peacefully, sweetheart.” He said gently, tucking her in. He checked on Ave before he started undressing. Throwing his clothes in the direction of the hamper for Draco to pick up when he came up to bed.

Max joined him and the two of them settled almost naked into the bed. They both still had their boxer-briefs on.

“I am so glad today that we did all of that romping last night.” Max said as he just held Harry tightly in his arms. “I don’t think I can move tonight.”

“You don’t want birthday celebration sex?” Harry giggled.

“Technically I had it last night, as we were still going at it at two in the morning. I just don’t think I can handle any more exercise.”

Harry chuckled. “Whatever you want to do, Max. It’s still your birthday and if you just want to cuddle and sleep, we’ll cuddle and sleep. There’s always tomorrow night.”
Max laughed quietly. “I want to have sex. Of course I do, I always want to enjoy my mates and their beautiful bodies, I just don’t think my body is up for it.”

Harry laughed himself and turned onto his side slowly and carefully, so he didn’t startle his thunderer into causing him to vomit, and he cuddled up to Max’s chest.

“It’s okay, I don’t think the baby will let me have at my mates either. I can’t move without feeling sick. So I guess it was the best idea to have dinner and sex yesterday, because I wouldn’t have been able to do either today. I couldn’t even have fun on the inflatable because I was feeling sick.”

Max sighed and bent his head to kiss him. “It won’t last, love. It never does. You’re in the second trimester now, it should ease off in another few weeks.”

“If it sticks to my other three pregnancies, yes, but what if it’s different this time?”

“If it is then we’ll help you through it and support you always.” Max declared firmly. “We’re your mates and nothing is as important to us as you. We will help you, gorgeous, though anything and everything.”

Harry smiled and he closed his eyes, relishing being in Max’s arms and just happy that he’d made his birthday as happy and as entertaining as he could.

“You were wrong, Blaise, they’re both fast asleep.” Harry heard Nasta announce quietly some time later.

“I’m not.” Harry said gently. “My belly is unsettled.”

Nasta came straight to him then and placed a hand on his bare shoulder.

“Do you need the bathroom?” He asked seriously.

Harry shook his head. “No. I think I need to lie on my back, though.”
Nasta carefully, and ever so slowly, helped him to turn until he was on his back.

“Is that better?”

“I don’t even know.” Harry sighed. “Maybe.”

Nasta left him where he was for a moment while he undressed and Harry scooted to the edge of the bed.

“Bathroom?” Blaise asked, coming to hover over him.

“No, but I do think it would be best if I slept on the edge of the bed tonight, just in case I need to make a quick break for our en suite.” He said, looking at the open en suite door which was closest to him.

“That might be the best idea.” Nasta agreed, even as Blaise climbed in behind him, settling between Harry and Max, who was snoring softly. He really had been worn out today.

Harry settled himself and he felt better being on his back and he stroked the bump softly and slowly, soothing the baby within and hopefully his stomach too. Damn raging hormones making him as sick as a dog. He sighed and calmed himself, it was all for his baby.

The bed dipped as Nasta climbed in on the other side of Max, Draco in front of him so that he was on the other edge of the bed, so he could get out quickly if he needed to, to help Harry if he had any sickness or vomiting in the night.

Max was right, Harry thought to himself as he watched all four of his mates drift off while he was stroking his bump to sooth his stomach…he really did have the greatest mates in the entire world.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes
A/N: Another chapter done and posted. I love this chapter too, it’s so fun and I would love to have a go on this course, washing up liquid included, though I likely would break a bone somewhere. Though at least Max enjoyed it, even if Harry couldn’t. He’s not having an easy time of this pregnancy with the thunderer, though it could always be worse.

I have two more chapters now, lovelies, so we’re still going well with our Dracken spree, but it looks like I’ll be back in work now. My sick note runs out tomorrow and I’ll be back in work for the weekend. I’m still not feeling great, but I no longer feel terrible either. I’ve got to try and get back to normal now. So after these two chapters are posted, possibly three as I might finish chapter 116 too, the updates will start slowing up again and we’ll no longer be having one a week, but for now my inspiration is strong and as long as that stays with me, our Dracken spree won’t be ending anytime soon.

StarLight Massacre. X
Chapter Notes

Last Time

Harry settled himself and he felt better being on his back and he stroked the bump softly and slowly, soothing the baby within and hopefully his stomach too. Damn raging hormones making him as sick as a dog. He sighed and calmed himself, it was all for his baby.

The bed dipped as Nasta climbed in on the other side of Max, Draco in front of him so that he was on the other edge of the bed, so he could get out quickly if he needed to, to help Harry if he had any sickness or vomiting in the night.

Max was right, Harry thought to himself as he watched all four of his mates drift off while he was stroking his bump to soothe his stomach…he really did have the greatest mates in the entire world.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Fourteen – Courtroom Crisis

As Harry came up to twelve weeks pregnant, and the court case was coming to its inevitable end, things in the courtroom took a very nasty turn and the accusations against him were coming thicker, faster and harsher. Everything he’d ever done, from being accused of dying his teacher’s hair blue, to climbing school buildings, to scaring neighbours and every accusation of criminal damage that Dudley had committed but he had been blamed for, it was all brought up in court. He tried to defend against all he could, as best as he could, but the stress was getting to him as he hit his fourth consecutive day in court this week and the Dursley’s lawyer, Mister Chorley, was getting him more confused and more muddled by jumping from accusation to accusations, from showing evidence and reading out witness reports and Harry was so confused by the rapid changes of topic that he was getting mixed-up and upset. He did blame his hormones for how easily he was getting emotional, as he was feeling teary lately, but now was not the time to let his hormones, his emotions, win. He needed to remember the three Cs that Draco had taught him in preparation for this trial, be calm, confident and concise. Unfortunately he felt neither calm, nor confident and he was too muddled up, almost to the point of panic, to be concise, or even vaguely clear in the words that he spoke.

Richard tried to soothe him and calm him while they were on their little breaks, and on the longer one that they had for lunch too, but sometimes it just wasn’t enough and the brutal attacks in the courtroom undid every soothing word that Richard had spoken to him.
Harry hated it and despite Richard’s assurances that the Jury would see and know what the Dursley’s lawyer was doing, Harry wasn’t so sure, they were only members of the public after all, what if they didn’t see that Mister Chorley was speaking so quickly, was flinging accusation on top of accusation in order to confuse him? What if they didn’t realise what he was doing and only saw Harry stuttering and stumbling over all of his answers? Or thought that every time he asked for a question to be repeated, listening to Mister Chorley tut and scoff, that he was just stalling for time to think of a suitable answer?

He couldn’t stand the stress, he couldn’t stand the agonising pressure. He didn’t want to do this anymore, but there was nothing to be done about it now, he had agreed to be put through a cross-examination and now he had to stand by that decision. He couldn’t just decide halfway through it that he no longer wanted to do it.

It was so, so difficult though, he wasn’t used to this and he kept getting muddled up and he’d answer yes when he meant no and he would get confused and he would contradict himself, and Mister Chorley would savagely use it to his advantage when Harry needed to correct himself, asking him which story was true, which version of his tale would he like to use, painting him out to be a liar, putting in little quips that reminded the Jury that he had to contradict himself often, or that he kept changing his answer or his mind about what had ‘supposedly’ happened and how he was obviously so traumatised by such events that he couldn’t even remember the details, but it wasn’t true, he was just confused, feeling rushed and pressured, he was panicked and almost breathless and he was getting disorientated and lost. He was ruining his own trial, his own chance at justice and that thought almost broke him.

“Harry.” Richard called out. Harry looked up at him, startled, almost having forgotten that he was even there. “Take a breath please, Harry, you’re going red.”

Harry sucked in a deep breath and his head stopped spinning, the room came back into focus and he realised that he was hyperventilating.

“If I could please insist that the honourable gentleman to my right stops throwing my client into a panic attack.” Richard said with a firm bite to his words.

“Perhaps if your client had kept his made up, wild stories straight he would be able to answer the questions posed to him.”

“Perhaps if you posed your questions in an understandable manner then he would be able to.” Richard said back mildly. “Even I’m getting confused about some of the things you are asking after, and how rapidly you’re asking them.”

Harry saw what Richard was doing, not only clearing things up with the Jury, but giving him some time to catch his breath and calm down. He had needed this moment and he was much calmer, and able to breathe properly, when Mister Chorley harrumphed and turned back to him.
Harry tried to keep his head this time, he tried to keep breathing evenly and he refused to allow the lawyer to muddle him or confuse him, or force him to rush his answers either. He remembered to take a breath, he remembered to reply slowly, in a more concise manner. He remembered Draco’s three Cs. It came easier to him now that he was actually thinking and breathing. He was still stressed, he was still pressured, but he was dealing with it better now that he had had a moment to calm down. He was grateful to Richard for that.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Blaise had to stare at the little face in front of his own for several heartbeats before the name came to him.

“Braiden, eat your peas, please.” He said encouragingly.

“Okay, Daddy.” Braiden replied, smiling at him, before moving his spoon to his untouched pile of peas.

It was getting easier, he was getting less headaches and he hadn’t said the wrong name for a while now, even if it did take him several seconds sometimes for the name to come to mind. He was recovering, he was getting better. And his mates all celebrated his small achievements with him, even if it was just a day without a headache, or putting a name to a face a little quicker than the day before. He still had appointments to keep with Healer Aeneas Narkissos Odell, the specialist neurological Healer at Saint Mungos, but even he was impressed with his progress and how well he was recovering. It had to be because he was a Dracken, and not just an ordinary wizard.

“Daddy, I’ve eated my peas.”

Blaise looked and he took a breath. He’d just had this name, he knew it! He knew he did.

“Well done. Good boy…Braiden!” He called out happily, the name coming to him after another few moments.

He turned back to his little daughter, one of the twins, to spoon bluish-purple goo into her mouth. She had been sat there with her mouth open, waiting patiently for him to notice her and prod the spoon back into her mouth. Eva…her name was Eva.
“Sorry, baby girl. Daddy got distracted.”

“Dada.” Eva burbled, before sitting forward with her mouth open, trying to reach the spoon.

Blaise moved it to her mouth quickly, watching as she took the lumpy goo from the tiny spoon and chewed on it. Whatever the goo was, Max had made it with cooked vegetables and a hand blender. The girls really did love his colourful, vegetable mush.

“Daddy, I’m done.” One baby called out to him and he once again took his eyes from Eva to look at a new face. He flitted through names, trying to fit one to the face.

“One moment, Regan.” He said calmly.

“Down! Down!” Another implored him impatiently.

“In a moment…” He drew a complete blank and cursed himself. He wasn’t entirely on his own, Draco was here, but he was in the other room feeding Leolin, who had been very fussy and had needed a quiet moment away from the others.

Max was in work until four and Nasta had been called to an emergency at the Welsh dragon reserve as a female dragon had started killing her hatchlings and the reserve had called in all hands on deck to save as many of the hatchlings as they could. Nasta would be back as soon as he could, he’d said. Harry was away too, he was back in court and they all hated it. He was going for a scan now that weekend and they all hoped that the baby’s heart rate had come down to a more average rate, none of them liked that Harry was so stressed at the moment that it was affecting the baby.

Blaise knew though that Harry was still very stressed and pressured, in the courtroom especially, and there was nothing that any of them could do about it. They tried to keep him relaxed and happy at home, but there was only so much they could do when he was facing court every day with the end of the trial approaching. This week would be the last of the trial, if everything went according to plan that was, and then Harry would be free, but he wouldn’t truly relax until the Jury delivered their verdict. Blaise just hoped that after all of it was done and those monsters went to prison, that Harry could relax and let go of the stress that he felt, and that it wasn’t too late for the baby to reverse the accelerated heart rate.

“How are you doing?” Draco asked, coming into the kitchen sans Leolin.

“Where’s…?”
“Leolin? He’s down for the count, I put him in the bassinet. Are you okay out here?”

“Yes, I think…Braiden and…Calix! I think they’re done.” He said, happy with himself for putting a name to the little face grinning cheekily at him.

“I think they are. Come on.”

Draco got the pack of baby wipes that they kept in the kitchen for after meal cleaning and he wiped down both boys, one at a time, before hefting them down from their booster seats.

Blaise went back to feeding the goo to Eva and he smiled, very pleased with himself. He was still having some problems with names, but his memories were coming back to him slowly and now it only took a moment of thinking before he put a name to a face. He was getting much better and though frustrating, it was just something that he had to deal with, complaining and grumbling about it never made him feel any better and it didn’t help his recovery in the slightest, he just had to get on with it.

Once they’d gotten lunch out of the way, Blaise cleaned up the kitchen while Draco went to play with the kids a little. He joined them once he was done and he sat on the floor, this time he kept…he kept Calix in his view, as the little monster liked to smash toys into his head and he couldn’t afford to go to bed with a headache reliever now and leave Draco on his own. The blond would never cope with all eight of them alone. Well…seven. Leolin didn’t count now as he was fast asleep. Hopefully the kids would all go down for their naps too, nice and easy so that he could have a bit of a rest. He hadn’t even had time to have a coffee at all in the last three hours and he was gagging for one.

A little girl came and occupied his lap, a penguin coming with her and it took him only a moment to remember her name.

“Hello, Tegan.”

“Daddy, ee ana, ee baska.”

“I’m sure you speak Welsh like your Daddy Nasta.” Blaise told her. “Maybe she’s mumbling in Welsh?”

“Daddy Ast.” Tegan repeated, looking around for the man in question, frowning when she didn’t see him.
Draco chuckled. “I have thought of that before, but I’m sure Nasta would have noticed and mentioned it to us if she were. It’s just her own little language that only Harry seems to understand.”

“He is the only one of us to speak Parseltongue, maybe that’s why he can understand her.”

The both of them laughed at that, knowing that it wasn’t true. She was just a special little girl and she had her own words for things. She would learn, she already was, and soon her little language would fall away, like all baby gibberish did, until then they had to continue to guess at what she was saying.

Thankfully the kids all started dropping off, starting with the younger twin girls and then Regan, then Braiden and Farren, who had had a rather unsettled night, and their Calix was the last to drop off, which was nothing unusual. Draco was the one to carry them up to their nursery as they dropped off one by one and Blaise took the time to grab a coffee, a much needed coffee as he inhaled the deep, rich scent of it slowly, deeply, savouring it and he sighed happily. He’d needed this.

“Got mine?” Draco asked with a smirk as he came into the kitchen to join him.

Blaise reached behind himself and picked up Draco’s mug of tea, handing it over.

“Come on, let’s go and sit in the living room, Leolin’s still in there and its cleaner.”

“I needed this break.” Blaise laughed.

“You and me both.” Draco agreed. “They’re getting quite the handful now that they’re all almost two.”

“Just three more months and we’ll have six two year olds running around. I really think we are crazy sometimes.”

“I’m sure of it now.” Draco agreed, sitting down on a settee.

Blaise chose to sit beside him, curling up his legs and resting against his mate with his coffee.

“One big, happy family.” Blaise chuckled. “With serious emphasis on big. I can’t believe we’re "getting our ninth child in the New Year."

"The baby could come before the New Year. It’ll be viable from November onwards."

"Oh, I hope Harry doesn’t leave us on our own for Christmas and the quintuplets’ birthday." Blaise moaned.

"I would if I were him." Draco laughed. "Out in my nest alone, in the peace and quiet, doing nothing but primping and preening, waiting for the baby to come."

Blaise snorted with laughter. "When you put it like that then it’s almost a certainty that he will. I think I would too with all the excitement and noise that Christmas will bring and with those five turning two as well, then with Eva and Ave turning a year old in January. I wouldn’t put it past him to stay in his nest for those two months to miss out on all the drama and hectic noise."

Draco laughed and squeezed him with the arm around his shoulders and down his chest.

"He wouldn’t want to miss any of that hectic madness, though." Blaise sighed. "We want the quiet, but he welcomes the noise and the mess and the stress. He’s definitely a weird one."

Draco chuckled. "He is, but then aren’t we all? I might need to keep things clean and neat, but I’m fine with the noise."

"I’m fine with the mess, I just need some quiet time now and then." Blaise laughed. "Maybe we are all weird, in our own ways, but we all fit together. We complement each other."

"Except for Max, he’s weird in a lot of ways."

Blaise laughed at that, trying to muffle himself so that he didn’t disturb Leolin.

"He does make us laugh every day." Blaise allowed once he’d stopped laughing.

Draco smiled then, as he thought about it. "Yes he does. I suppose it does take a special person to be able to do that.”

“Very special.” Blaise agreed.

They lapsed into silence, just enjoying their small break while they had it, as it would only last an hour or so.

After their first cups of tea and coffee, they had a second together and they once again basked in the glorious silence of a quiet, peaceful house.

“How are you feeling?” Draco asked him several minutes of peace later.

Blaise considered the question and sipped on his coffee as he thought.

“It’s been a good day.” He answered softly. “I haven’t had too many lapses and I’m getting quicker at putting names to faces. Sometimes I know a name, but I fumble it and I can’t get it out of my mouth, on other times I just go blank and can’t think at all, but I am getting better.”

“I never meant to hurt you.” Draco said sadly.

Blaise smiled. “I know you didn’t. When we go feral, there’s nothing anyone can do about it. I know you didn’t mean to hurt any of us, that’s why you’re still here with us. We’ve forgiven you, and Harry and I will recover in time. We’re getting better day by day and one day we’ll wake up and realise that we’re fully healed and this incident can be fully put behind us at last.”

“I’m so happy that you’re all so forgiving. I was devastated when I came back to myself and realised what I’d done to those I love. Those anger management classes really helped too. Now it’s just the therapy to get through.”

“I’m doing well with that too.” Blaise said with a smile. “I’m going to be signed off soon.”

“Truly?” Draco asked happily.

Blaise nodded. “Another lesson or two and I’ll be signed off. Nasta too, I would imagine. Harry has a lot to talk out, so he might be the last. His Mind Healer is involved now as well and he’s finally getting the support that he needs.”

Their conversation was cut short when the floo flared. They knew it could only be one of their three missing mates, so they weren’t surprised when Nasta came back, covered in dirt, soot and filth. He had a raw and weeping burn on his arm and another one on his bare side, right down to his hip. The one on his arm was actually dripping with a clear fluid…blood plasma. The one on his side was singed at the edges of the wound, as if he had been barbequed.

“Damn it, Nasta, can’t you stop getting burnt?” Draco demanded. “Harry is going to lose his shit when he sees you.”

“I’m going to shower now and try and hide it until he’s settled.” Nasta sighed. “I had to save those hatchlings though, they’re newly born and they don’t deserve to be eaten by their own Mother because the fools at that reserve didn’t feed her because she was up in the mountains. I swear I take a short break to support my family and that place goes to seed.”

“I’ll find Max’s burn salve. It’s a shame he’s not here to apply it too, I don’t know what to do.” Blaise said.

“I’ve watched him enough times, I can do it myself.” Nasta insisted. “Are the kids all napping?”

Draco nodded. “Yes. They went off easily and we even got Farren to sleep, though that’s likely because of his broken sleep last night.”

Nasta nodded.

“Do you want tea too?” Draco asked after looking at him for a short while.

“When I get out of the shower.” Nasta said, accepting the tub of burn salve that Max made especially for him from Blaise and he went off to the downstairs bathroom, just outside the living room to clean himself up and cover his burns.

He hadn’t told his mates that he had another one on his leg too, a burn which was chafing and smarting under his jeans. He should have gotten changed into his flame-retardant dragonhide clothes that he wore as a uniform while at the reserve, but he hadn’t been thinking about himself when he’d gotten the message about the rampaging female eating her own hatchlings.

He hissed as the water hit his abused skin, trying to ignore the stinging pain as he used his hand to gingerly clean himself off. He didn’t use any cloths or soaps, just his hand and the water. That hurt enough and he sucked in air through his teeth.

He didn’t dawdle, once he was clean enough he got out and patted himself dry, taking care with the raw, weeping sores. He hated getting injured at work, not least because it worried his mates senseless, but because it damn well hurt. He dabbed the burn salve onto his burnt skin and tried not to cry at the pain of it as he covered the skinless wounds. As it was it did bring tears to his eyes.

Safe in the knowledge that the kids were all asleep, he padded naked up to their bedroom to get into a pair of small shorts. He had said that he would hide this from Harry until he was more settled, but the only way he could think to do that was to remove himself from the house. Perhaps if he went up to his attic office and claimed to have paperwork to do, which wasn’t entirely a lie, he did have some paperwork to finish off, but he would much rather lie in bed and let his body heal. He hated that taking his mate’s blood wouldn’t heal injuries caused by dragons.

He went back down the stairs and he saw Blaise and Draco clock the paste covered area on his leg.

“You repaired your jeans over the burn.” Blaise said tightly, his face pinched with worry.

“I’m fine, Caru.” He said tiredly. “I think I’m going to go up to the attic though, to give Harry a chance to relax first when he comes home. I am sorry to leave you with the kids.”

“It’s alright, you need to heal.” Draco told him, handing over a mug of green tea. The first sip made him feel much better. “We’ve got the kids covered. Max will be home soon, Harry too, so we’ll be fine on our own for a while. I will take Max aside if Harry is home first and I’ll send him to go look at you. Just in case. We’ll call you when Harry is nice and relaxed.”

“Thank you, Cariad.” Nasta said, taking his mug, giving Leolin a soft touch as he walked past the bassinet, and he removed himself to his attic office.

He hoped that Max didn’t lay into him too hard, he was feeling very tired now and he wasn’t up to an argument. He hoped too that Harry remained calm and that he went back to being relaxed as soon as Nasta reassured him that he was going to be fine by tomorrow morning, as always. Harry truly didn’t need the added stress of this, but he hadn’t done it on purpose and it’d had to be done if those little hatchlings had had any hope of surviving their Mother’s ravenous hunger. He just hoped that he could convince his protective mates of that too, that he’d had no choice but to save those hatchlings, as he couldn’t have allowed them to be eaten in front of him, regardless of the risk to himself, but despite that, he still hadn’t gotten himself injured on purpose and he hoped that his mates realised as such, he hated that he was the cause of their worry, that he could be the cause of Harry’s stress increasing. He would work to settle them down now that he was feeling better and his burns had been tended.
It was going to be a very long day. This was going to be his last day in court, and so he had agreed to stay here, on the stand, until it was finally over. Unfortunately this meant that he probably wasn’t going to get home before four O’clock. He had only seen his babies once today, that morning, when he’d eaten breakfast with them and then gone to get himself dressed and ready for court.

He’d left the house at nine, gone to Richard and Myron’s, though Ashleigh was there now as well, and she’d managed to push more tea and a piece of toast on him while Richard rushed about and made sure that he had everything that he needed in his work case while Myron called him a disorganised sloth. Apparently Richard had been ‘overenthusiastic’ in his joy at having Ashleigh back home and he hadn’t packed his case last night, like he usually did.

They followed their normal routine now, Richard would take his arm and carefully Apparate them to the narrow alleyway, they would walk out onto the street and go to their little café to order a coffee to go, Harry would have a decaf coffee now that he was pregnant, and maybe a muffin or a fruit tart if he was hungry still. They would reach the courthouse for half past and then Harry would sit on a smooth, polished bench that made him feel like he would go sprawling every time he shifted even slightly and they would wait for their case to be called at ten sharp.

It was two in the afternoon now, his babies would be down for their afternoon naps, if they had decided to sleep that was. Farren usually skipped his naps, he always had done, and Calix was impossible to get to sleep and he wouldn’t stay asleep for long either as he was afraid that he would miss something while he slept. He hated not knowing how his own children were. He didn’t like being away from them for the whole day, only seeing them at breakfast and then coming home to them having their dinners. Today was going to be worse if it carried on into the late afternoon. He probably wouldn’t get home much before their bath times. The thought made him want to cry, but he sucked it up and he calmed himself down. This wasn’t the place to show such weakness.

“Now, Mister Potter, we have a statement here from a Miss Marjorie Dursley, your Aunt.”

Harry wanted to deny that she was in anyway related to him vehemently, but he instead sat quietly, watching the lawyer as if waiting for him to continue. He was once again glad for the drop of calming draught that Max had given to him that morning, even if the taste had had him almost running for the toilet to be sick.

“She insists that you were a terror, a delinquent who put a massive strain on her brother, Mister Dursley, and his wife. She says that you were rude, ungrateful and, I quote directly ‘a bad egg’.”

Harry waited for the lawyer to continue, but it seemed that he was waiting for some sort of reaction from him.
“What is your question?” Harry asked politely, after almost a full minute of silence.

“Would you agree with this assessment of your character, Mister Potter?”

“Of course not.” He replied. “Though she would call me all of those things and worse whenever she came to visit.”

“Why was that if it wasn’t true?” Mister Chorley asked in a silky way that reminded Harry of Snape at his most cruel in the classroom.

“For the same reason that the neighbours believed it, because they’d been told a pack of lies about me every day and no one took the time to find out the truth. No one wanted to get to know me as a person and instead of seeing what was actually in front of them, they believed the lies told about me. Marge only came around for one week every summer when I was a teenager, it was the only week in the year that I saw her and she saw me in person, everything else she heard was from them, over the phone.”

“Why would they lie to your Aunt about you?”

Harry took in an extra deep breath and he swallowed hard. It hurt his throat. “They lied to everyone about me, making me out to be emotionally disturbed, a delinquent, a criminal. Someone who others wouldn’t want to be near. It was a way to stop people getting close to me, to stop them from wanting to get to know me so that they wouldn’t see the cuts or bruises, the too large clothing or the trainers that were falling apart. It stopped anyone from seeing how unhappy I was with my home situation. Once they had told their lies, no one wanted to come near that odd Potter boy, they avoided me, they averted their gaze from me, they were blind to me and how I was suffering. It was perfect really, how easily those lies covered their abusive actions, it created a way for them to continue hurting me without anyone noticing, because once you’ve been labelled as a criminal, as mentally subnormal, no one wants to notice you.”

There were low murmurs and Mister Chorley looked nervously to the Jury before snapping his head back to Harry. If he’d thought for one minute that Harry was a weak pushover because he’d been abused, then he was so very wrong. He had four loving, supportive mates waiting for him at home to help him through this. He had amazing in-laws who were willing to treat him as if he was their own son. He was stronger now, more secure, happier. He could do this. He could put his past behind him with the conclusion of this court case, he could finally heal and he wanted that more than anything. He wanted to move forward, to look to his future, and soon, very soon, as short as a day or two according to Richard, he would have that freedom.
“Your Aunt insists that you were always rude to her and would smirk and sneer.”

“That is generally what one does when their dead parents are being insulted.” Harry replied quickly. “She even accused my Father of being a drunk driver and of killing himself and my Mother in a car accident. That was the lie that they told everyone about my parents, trying to discredit them and myself in the process. I didn’t even know how my own parents had died until I was eleven years old. They weren’t killed in a car crash at all, they were murdered by a madman who also tried to kill me.”

“Is that why you were so disturbed as a child? Is that why you had all those nightmares? Not because my clients were ever unkind to you, but because you had survived such a horrible attack that had killed your parents.”

“I was fifteen months old when that happened, would you expect me to remember anything that had happened? As I said, I had no idea how they had died until I was eleven and I was told the truth of it by someone else. Until then I had believed the story that they told everyone else, that they’d died in a car crash.” Harry said a little savagely. “I was not a disturbed child, I was abused and I was having nightmares because I was being forced to live with the people who continually hurt me, padlocked into a room that I couldn’t get out of. It was worse than being a prisoner, because at least prison cells have toilets and their prisoners are fed three times a day. That’s more than I ever got. Some days were so bad that I started rationing what little food I was given, making a cache of bread slices or overripe fruit and only allowing myself to eat a quarter of it, despite how starved I was, just in case the next day I got nothing. There were times when I wasn’t even let out of that tiny room for days on end. That got so bad that sometimes I was forced to urinate in a corner of that locked room like an animal because they refused to let me out, not even when I banged on the door and shouted that I needed to use the bathroom! They just ignored me and left me in that room.”

“May I petition for a short break to give my client a moment?” Richard asked, standing.

“I will allow this.” The Judge said.

Harry only realised then that he couldn’t see, that his vision was blurred and he was crying. Richard came to get him and gently led him out of the room and to another one just down the hall. As soon as the door was closed Harry found himself wrapped up in a tight hug.

“It’s alright, sweetheart.” Richard soothed him, stroking his head and his back, holding him close with one arm around his back.

Harry cried harder and he shook his head. “It’s not. It’s not okay, none of this is okay. I shouldn’t have been treated like that. It shouldn’t have happened and I just want to know why. Why did they treat me like that? Why did they hate me so much that they abused me? Why?"

Richard just held him closer and let him cry, getting out all of the bad feelings and the hurt before they had to go back into the courtroom.

It took Harry long minutes to settle himself down, to get a hold of himself again after his crying fit. He felt lighter, better, once he was done. Though he was sure that he looked a right mess. Richard took out a handkerchief and mopped up his face for him, smiling at him gently.

“Are we feeling better?” He asked gently.

Harry nodded. “I can’t believe I just blurted all of that out. I just… I was just fed up and it all came out on its own.”

“It was the truth, and here, we don’t have the luxury of keeping dignity or false modesty. It does us no good to keep back facts through embarrassment. I know it’s hard to say such things, but the court needs to hear them. They need to know everything that you’ve been through.”

Harry nodded again. “I know, but it doesn’t make it any easier to say. I don’t like this, I really don’t.”

“It’s our last day, sweetie. I know it’s hard, but you only ever have to do this once and today is our last day in court. You will never have to do this again, you will never be questioned about it again. We’ll get through this last session now, a few more hours, that’s all, and then you can go home and never worry about being on the stand again, being questioned or cross-examined ever again and in a few days we will get the verdict and then you will never, ever have to come back. It will all be over and you won’t even have to think about this court case ever again. Just a few more hours, sweetheart, I know that you can do it.”

Harry smiled then, brushing his eyes once more. “Thank you.”

“Think nothing of it, son. Now, are you ready to get back in there?”

“Am I allowed to go to the bathroom first?”

“Of course, come on. You can splash your face with a bit of water too, it’ll help cool you down.”
“And get rid of the puffiness around my eyes that I’m sure is there.” Harry agreed.

Richard smiled sadly. “It won’t be much longer, Harry. He won’t have a lot left to cover now. A few more hours and I’ll tell those boys to spoil you rotten myself. Have you been able to eat any of your chocolate?”

“A fair bit of it.” Harry smiled as they reached the toilets and Harry went to relieve himself.

“Nasta hasn’t started fretting over it?”

“I think he’s just glad that I’m actually eating something, I went through those few days of feeling so sick that I couldn’t eat and I could see that they were all worried, so he’s not been so bad lately. I’ve been on a bit of a health kick too and that has certainly put me in his good books, so he’s more lenient with me and my treats.”

“Oh, now this I’ve heard about.” Richard said, laughing. “Eating Nasta out of his fruits. Did it start with your little revenge plot?”

“It did actually.” Harry laughed, coming out of the stall and going to wash his hands. “The baby got a taste for fruit after that little revenge plot and now I’m on a health kick, interspaced with what I’m calling treat days where all I eat is junk.”

“Max called us and he updated us about you and your health kick. Myron was very approving.”

“I’m sure the baby’s Nasta’s, just from the health kick.” Harry giggled. “I’ve already told him that it’s his fault. Not that he cares, I think he’s rather proud about it.”

Harry cupped his hands under the tap and he splashed some of the water onto his face and he checked himself in the mirror after he’d dried his face with a wad of toilet tissue, making sure that all of the water was cleaned up and that no tissue was stuck to his face.

“Come on, Harry. Let’s get back to the court and get through this last push. If you need another break, just signal to me and I’ll call a break. The Judge won’t say no to you.”
“I just feel like I’m dragging it out more by going for breaks all the time.”

“You’re not. If you need a moment then you need a moment and there’s nothing that anyone can do about it.”

Harry nodded and he took a deep breath to steel himself. “Okay, I’m ready.” He said. “Let’s get this over with. I need cuddles after this.”

“Baby or mate?” Richard teased.

Harry chuckled. “Both.” He insisted.

They made it back to the courtroom door and Harry took another several deep breaths and then he nodded again. He followed Richard back into the courtroom and when Richard sat at the table, he carried on and slipped back onto the stand, his shoulders back and his head held high. He had nothing to be ashamed of, he had been a child, unable to defend or protect himself. He had no reason to be embarrassed over what he had suffered through at the hands of those people, none whatsoever. It had not been his fault, it had been theirs for treating him as they had, as less than an animal and they were not going to get away with it. Not now that he had set his mind to receiving the justice he deserved.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Dain watched worriedly as Kailen paced and raged in their manor home, looking at the letter from Eitri with furious eyes.

“That he dares use Leolin against us, Dain!” Kailen seethed. “I have told them that I do not want the position. I do not want it, so he threatens and blackmails us with our own family!”

“He is desperate, Kailen. The new laws are…”

“I don’t care how desperate he is, Dain! To threaten me, me!”
“Think instead how Trefor would have felt.” Dain said calmly, watching as just the name of their Fae calmed Kailen down and stopped his pacing mid-stride. “How would you feel if he had been here and he was subject to these law changes? How do you think he would have felt about them?”

Kailen grit his teeth. “He would have hated them. I hate them, of course I do! But that isn’t the point, Dain, he has threatened us with the loss of the only family that we have left!”

“Eitri’s methods are…drastic, I admit, but his letter speaks true. You are the only hope the Faes have, Kailen. No one else can be trusted, but I trust you. He trusts you.”

“Why don’t you do it?!?” Kailen demanded, though they both knew the answer.

“I’m an Unseelie, Kailen. I’m not well liked because I prefer to keep myself to myself and all my business private. You were always more sociable, it was always you and Trefor going out to the drinking house and to see shows, interacting with the citizens. I would prefer to stay at home with a book, or in the gardens by myself and if I was to go out, the both of you usually had to drag me reluctantly. I’ve never been much of a people person, Kailen and you know it. I would not win enough votes.”

“I’ve never wanted this responsibility, Dain. I don’t want to do it.”

“I know that you don’t, Kailen, you have more than made your feelings and thoughts clear on the matter, but you are not being given a choice. Can you really say goodbye to Aneirin, Idris and Nerys? To Nasta and Sanex now that we’ve met them and they are talking to us? Could you really turn your back on the first Faerie to be born into our line since Karin?”

“You know that I couldn’t.” Kailen growled, spinning on his heel and setting off his pacing again. “That doesn’t mean that I enjoy being blackmailed, Dain! Surely there is someone else who would be better suited to the position, one who actually wants it?!”

“Kailen, you know that there is not. We can’t pretend anymore that this situation is not dire. We have to assume the worst now. Sindri is not improving, it has been two moon turns already and he has not gotten any better. Someone needs to be ready to slip into his place and we cannot allow it to be Donella or Alston.”

“Alston would never get voted in.” Kailen scoffed.
“He has been asking the citizens for support. Of course it is in bad taste while Sindri still lives, but he is getting others thinking of where their support might lie if the worst does happen. We can send as many messages to the gods through the sacred elder trees all we like, but unless the Healers can do anything, then Sindri will not recover from this illness. We cannot let anyone take over the court who would do harm to our family.”

“Eitri would not dare harm…”

“I am not speaking of Eitri, Kailen.” Dain cut in sharply. “What would happen to us if Donella, or Alston, got the head position?”

“We would be executed as traitors to the court.” Kailen sighed, knowing it to be true.

“So we would lose our lives and our family, but worse than that, Kailen. What would happen to Leolin then? They would try to take that babe from his own family and keep him here, he would be raised by strangers, perhaps ill-treated because of who his parents are, or should I say what they are, much like young Ezrah. He could die as a result of the upheaval.”

Kailen sat down then, heavily, and he put his head into his hands.

“They would never get to Leolin.” Kailen tried.

“But what sort of life would he have being an outcast of his own family’s City? He would never be able to come here, he would never see the graves of his family, he’d never be able to live here, and if anything went wrong and Harry and Nasta needed information, or a Healer, they wouldn’t be able to get it. Leolin would never get to see the house of worship or be inducted into the faith, he’d never find a Faerie partner to settle with, would you put him through that? Even without Eitri’s threats to tell Harry and Nasta, we would have still had to do something, Kailen, because if they win, Leolin would be lost to our City and we would be lost to him.”

“I’m not good enough to do it, Dain.” Kailen fretted.

“You are, dear heart.” Dain soothed. “You are one of the very best Valkyries in this entire City! You are kind and caring, to both Valkyries and Faes and that is what is needed. You are the most like Sindri in thought and action, you need to carry on his work in his absence.”
Kailen swallowed. “But what if I try and I fail?”

“It can never truly be a failure if you have tried and given your all.” Dain told him sagely.

Kailen sighed, his shoulders slumping. “I have no choice.” He said simply. “I am truly being held at sword point to do something I do not want to. I might even fail to achieve the objective of this farce and then what? Will Eitri carry out his little threats to tell Harry and Nasta?”

“You are well liked, Kailen.” Dain soothed.

“I don’t have what it takes to lead a City!” Kailen said.

“You’re more capable than you think.” Dain told him.

“I don’t want to do this, Dain.”

“I know, my dearest, I would do it if I could, in your place, but I am not well liked, it is the nature of the Unseelie. You’re brighter, and yes, you snap and snipe at times, but only at those who deserve it. You are more liked than I am, you are more sociable, more caring. The people will respond to you, Kailen, in a way that I could not achieve. I will help you, of course. We have supported one another for how many centuries now? I would never think of abandoning you at this time, dear heart. You are my everything.”

Kailen smiled then. “I have no choice. I cannot lose my family so soon after reconnecting with them. Not Harry and Nasta, not Maximilius, Draco or Blaise, not Aneirin or Sanex, Idris or Nerys. Hywel and Dai have been in contact recently and even Nesta’s husband, Urien is curious to meet us. Leolin will need us too, we cannot lose them, or allow them to lose their link to our City. I have to do it, but I am so glad to hear that you will stay beside me through this.”

“I love you, Kailen, I have for many centuries now, I would not leave you to go through this alone, and neither will Eitri.”

Kailen’s hand clenched tight at just the thought of the golden headed Fae.
“You may not like his methods, Kailen, but it needed to be you and no one else, he is intelligent enough to have realised that. He is putting all of his support in you, he would vote for you, and for Eitri to show that level of trust in anyone, why, you should be honoured.” Dain teased.

Kailen snorted softly in laughter. “I do not want his trust to be misplaced in me, I could yet fail. You know that not everyone is adverse to this devolvement back into the old way of life and the older generations outnumber the younger.”

“Kailen, trust that you can do this.” Dain said, reaching forward and taking the hands of the man he loved so fiercely. “I know that you can do this, believe it yourself. I will help you, our friends will help you and we can make Warren your personal guard if you wish. He has ever been a friend to us both. You will be cared for and protected and we will still support and love you, but you need to do this, for our City, for our family…for Leolin.”

Kailen sighed and his head dropped as he looked at his hands in Dain’s.

“I have no choice but to do as instructed. I cannot lose our family, but if you ever leave me to struggle through on our own, I will exile you to the furthest reaches of this planet that I can find.”

Dain laughed and pulled Kailen forward so that he could kiss him.

“I would never leave you to struggle through alone. We have been through far too much, dearest heart. I would never forgive myself if I abandoned you to this workload, this pressure, alone.”

Kailen nodded. “I will still pray that Sindri recovers, but in the meantime, we must plan, Dain. As you said, Donella cannot take the head of the court using the words of Talfryn and we cannot ever allow Alston to take the head of the court. If no one else is willing to step up to do what is right, then we have to, for the sake of the Faes and our Leolin, who Eitri correctly points out in his letter could be a Fae himself. We had an Unseelie Fae for a son, the combination runs in our blood and Leolin could turn out to be a Fae himself. We cannot allow these laws to continue passing unopposed when our own grandson could be subject to such laws in the future.”

“Harry and Nasta would never allow him to come here with the City in such a state. Eitri is right again with such observations.”

Kailen swallowed heavily and he took in a deep breath. “I will do it, but I will need you by my side, Dain. I am more sociable, but I never know what to say in such situations.”
“I will never leave you, dear heart.”

Kailen smiled then. “I love you Dain Talarin.”

Dain chuckled. “And I love you Kailen Aldaren.”

Things were changing so rapidly, it was almost too quickly to process for them. As Faeries they were more used to doing things nice and slow, this rapid change of terrible events and even worse laws being passed through the courts, it was too much to take in and their City was changing too much, far too quickly.

It was very unsettling, more so for their Fae citizens, who were now back to being oppressed and silenced after enjoying their freedom and their rights. They knew that Eitri in particular had been attacked several times already since Sindri’s illness had become widely known. A dozen other Faes had reported similar treatment and now many of them were too afraid to leave their homes, but even there their Valkyrie Fathers and brothers were oppressing them, in some cases at least. It was time for this to stop, once and for all.

Kailen would take the head of the court, if he was voted in by the citizens of course, which he would be as in Dain’s opinion there was no one better for the position, and he would make safe the City for all citizens, Dain was sure of it, no matter their gender or denomination, for as long as he could. Kailen was five hundred and three now, he had the potential to live for another two hundred years or so. Then they would have to find another who would look after all citizens, not just the Valkyries, and not just the Faes either, but both denominations and all citizens of all ages, Faes and Valkyries, Seelies and Unseelies, males and females of all combinations. It was only right, and it was needed. He just wasn’t too happy that it had to be Kailen, who did not want to do it, but he understood the reasoning behind such blackmailing and coercion on Eitri’s part, and despite disliking it, neither he nor Kailen would be able to hold it against the golden Fae. He was very young, he was scared and he had been attacked numerous times already, he just wanted to be safe in his own home, in his own City, and he truly trusted Kailen to keep him safe, enough so that he would back Kailen and put his vote to him. It truly was a high honour from the reclusive, distrustful Fae and despite the underhanded way that Eitri had gone about this whole thing, Dain did understand his thinking and why he’d done it. He would be able to forgive Eitri for this, because he believed in Kailen and he loved his family, and because he understood why Eitri had felt the need to do as such. He was five hundred and sixty-five, he had lived for a long time, he knew such desperation that drove Eitri to threaten his friends, he had hoped that it would not be needed, but Kailen had needed a push. Dain agreed with Eitri full heartedly, there was no one else that they could trust to carry on Sindri’s great work. It had to be Kailen, it had just taken Kailen a while to understand that as well as the rest of them.
It was coming up to four in the afternoon and Harry was well and truly fed up and completely drained. He’d had two more small breaks in another room with Richard because of emotional breakdowns and he had a headache from his tears. He just wanted to go home and cuddle with his mates, but he was still on the stand, still being accused of being a liar and a delinquent, from the Masons, to Marge, to some of Dudley’s old friends, the rat like Piers Polkiss and big, blond, stupid Gordon.

“Now, tell me again why you had these big, intimidating men threaten my clients in a train station?” Mister Chorley asked.

“They were friends of my parents. They found out that I was being locked up in my bedroom when they came to get me on the second of August nineteen-ninety-five and I told them why and a little of what had been happening to me. They convinced me to pursue a criminal court case against them when I was too scared to do so and unsure about everything. It has been really intimidating being here, telling the life I lived through to strangers, but it’s also the right thing to do, because those people deserve to go to prison for what they did to me. It won’t make up for the horrors that I was put through, nothing can ever erase those memories or make up for what I suffered through during the time I was with them, but seeing them punished for what they did is a start, and it will help me gain closure on that part of my life. A part that should have been fun and happy and filled with laughter and adventure and the innocent wonder of all children, but for me, it was a daily nightmare of being scared and abused. Thanks to those people I never had a childhood. All the things I should have experienced, I never got to. I spent my earliest years locked in a cupboard, I was forced to do chores that were not only beyond my ability, but were also dangerous. As I got older, and too big for the cupboard, I was moved into Dudley’s second bedroom and I got locked into that instead. As I got older I started being hit more often, I got less food and more time confined in my room. They were supposed to look after me and keep me safe, and I don’t know why they didn’t do that, I don’t know why they took one look at me, a fifteen month old baby, and locked me in a cupboard. I never knew why they hated me so much or why I was abused and mistreated. Why? Why did you do that to me? What could I have possibly done that warranted that sort of treatment from you?” He pleaded with the silent, pale faced Dursleys. “What did I do as a fifteen month old orphan that made you want to hurt me and lock me away?”

Harry brushed more tears away, but he no longer cared about crying. He had cried more times on the stand in the last four days than he had throughout the entire trial. It really was brutal and emotional and being three months pregnant didn’t help in the slightest.

“That was not what I asked you, Mister Potter.” The lawyer told him, trying to salvage what he could of what was left of this case. “I asked why you set a dozen men onto my clients in a train station, now answer the question.”

“I believed I had.” Harry sniffed, trying to regain control of himself. “They were friends of my parents and they found out about the abuse I was suffering through. I would also like to point out that there were three of them, not a dozen, and one of them was a woman. I never asked them to talk to the Dursleys. I never wanted anyone to know such awful, humiliating things about me, but they found out anyway and I had to tell them something, so I let them know a small bit about my home life, that I was locked in my room for days at a time and they didn’t like that I was being treated in such a way. I imagine it must be a terrible thing, to find out that a child you know is being mistreated and abused by their own family. They warned the Dursleys off and I never went back to that house. Instead I was taken away and I wish I had said something years before, when I was still a kid, but I was too scared to say anything. I was sure that other people knew what was happening and just didn’t care. I thought that they knew about it, that they could see what was happening, and that no one cared. I wish now, looking back, that I had been able to gather the courage to say something sooner, but I was a child and I didn’t know any better and I kept begging that it would stop, that I would be treated as their own son was, that I would be loved and it…it never happened. When I was sixteen, I realised that nothing would change, they were always going to treat me terribly, they were always going to abuse and hurt me, so I left. I knew that I would have to see them again in court, but since I left them that day in the train station, after I’d come home from school, I hadn’t seen them until the start of this case.”

Harry stared at the lawyer, daring him to say that he hadn’t answered the question this time. He was fixated on that incident in the train station, as if being spoken to by Mrs Weasley, Max and Nasta about the terrible treatment he had endured somehow made up for everything that they had done to him over a decade and a half. It didn’t. It didn’t even come close.

“If you are done with my client.” Richard cut in after a rather lengthy pause.

The lawyer looked at Richard, then to Harry, then to his clients. He seemed to shrink and Harry knew what was coming. He had utterly failed in his attempt to get the Dursley’s a lower, more lenient sentence and he knew that he had failed.

“No further questions, Your Honour.” Mister Chorley said heavily and Harry almost sunk into his seat with a sighed breath of utter relief. It was now after four O’clock, he couldn’t wait to go home.

Richard gestured to him and Harry stood and he left the stand, going back to Richard and sitting back in the chair at the table. He all but ignored the closing words, then the Judge telling the Jury to go away and deliberate on their verdict based on the evidence that they had seen in the courtroom.

Not too long after that they were dismissed and Harry wanted to cheer so badly that he ducked his head to prevent it. Richard packed up so quickly that there was no way that he had packed anything in his case away nicely, or in any semblance of order. He stood and Harry stood with him and Richard placed a hand on his shoulder and steered him out.

“I bet this feels good.” Richard said as he led him out into the daylight.

“So good.” Harry said happily. “I hate that it’s half four now. I’ve almost missed out on the entire of “We’ll get you home now, Harry.” Richard said gently. “I know it isn’t ideal and not what you’d want to be doing, but it’s all over now. You only have to come back to hear the sentencing, and even then you don’t have to go, I could come back and tell you.”

Harry shook his head. “No, I came through all of that. I’ve done the hardest parts, I’m not going to hide away from the easy bit.”

Richard snorted and smiled. “Sometimes the verdict can be the worst part, or certainly the most nerve-wracking. No one would dare say anything if you wanted to skip it.”

“I would be nervous if I was there or not, at least if I was there it would be several minutes less fretting as I’d hear it immediately, directly and I wouldn’t have to wait for anyone to come back and tell me. I want to see this through to the end, no matter how nerve-wracking.”

Richard nodded and pulled him into a sideways hug as they walked.

“How about a treat? Do you want a muffin or a coffee to take home with you?”

Harry thought about it, but he shook his head. “I’m too tense to eat, I think. I just want to hug all of my babies and kiss each of my mates. I want to go home and know that I never have to do that ever again. I want to sit on my settee, with my honey tea and relax for what will feel like months.”

Richard smiled and they walked right past the café. “Whatever you want now, Harry. It’s time for you to relax and know that you never have to do that again. You can relax until the verdict is announced, and then it will finally be over for good.”

Harry heaved a huge sigh and he smiled. “I feel lighter already.”

Richard held him tightly as he side-Apparated him back home. Harry almost bounded up the porch steps and he got out his key from his pocket and he opened the large front door, Richard laughing behind him.
“Harry, is that you, Bello?” Blaise called out.

“Who else?” Harry replied. “How are you? Where are you?”

“Living room.” Blaise called out and Harry backtracked, going down the left hand corridor and to the smaller living room.

“Where are the kids?” Harry asked, looking around for any of his babies, he even peeked into Leolin’s bassinet, only to find that it was empty.

“They’ve been fed and now Draco is doing the last of the baths. It’s been a hell of a day. Come sit down, I’ll get you tea and we can swap stories. Would you like one, Richard?”

“Only a small one, son. Myron will want me home in time for dinner. He hates eating alone and Ashleigh had to spend overnight at the hospital. She is improving greatly, but they won’t let her out full time until they sign her off.”

“I’m so glad that she’s getting better. She was so excited to see Eva and Ave.” Harry smiled as Blaise went to go make the tea.

“She didn’t stop gushing about them all day.” Richard laughed.

“Hopefully she’ll be better in time for Christmas, or the quintuplets’ birthday at least. I’d like her there.”

“We’re actually hoping for before that.” Richard said with a wide smile. “She’s improved so much in the last few weeks that we’re all hopeful that she’ll be home before her birthday.”

“Really?” Harry asked. “That’s great!”

“Yeah, we’re trying not to get our hopes up, but it really is coming to the end of her rehab now. She’s so much better for it too. She’s more like the vibrant young woman who attracted me and Myron in the first place. The woman who would tease Myron until he was red in the face and laugh with me as we rolled around the floor with our kids. We’ve missed her so much, we just…we never really realised that she’d slipped away from us until she’d gone and couldn’t come back. It was so subtle, across so many years, that we only realised that she wasn’t herself when she got the help she needed and the woman she once was came back out. These last several weeks with her have been amazing.”

“I’m so happy for all of you, and I’m very proud of Ashleigh for all the work she’s done to get herself back to how she should be. I’m so glad.”

“Here you go.” Blaise said, coming back in several minutes later with a tray of tea.

“Where are Max and Nasta?” Harry asked. “Why aren’t they helping? Or at least down here keeping you company?”

Blaise sighed. “Please stay calm, but the both of them were injured in work.”

“How? Nasta wasn’t even in work today, what happened to him?” Harry asked, trying to keep his voice nice and even, trying to keep calm and not give in to his fear that wanted him to go run around looking for his mates. He was sure if he weren’t so emotionally drained and exhausted after his last day on the stand, and his last day in court, then he would have immediately leapt up and gone to chew out both of his mates.

“Max had a cauldron blow up in his face and Nasta got called into an emergency and he has the usual burns from the rampaging dragons. He’s put the burn salve on himself and he’ll be fine by tomorrow, as he normally is. Max went to peek in on him, and to score some blood, and he says that Nasta will be fine by tomorrow. Max is resting from his ordeal, but the blood cleaned him right up, he’ll be fine with a little more rest.”

“Where is he?” Richard asked. “I believe you, I just want to check on him.”

“The both of them are up in bed, Max dragged Nasta there as soon as he came home, but don’t worry, they really aren’t up for anything at the moment. They’re both in pyjamas and resting, keeping one another company.”

“I’ll go and check on them. Drink some tea, Harry. You’ve earnt a rest and you’ve done so well.” Richard told him.
Richard was worried as he climbed the stairs to the first floor, but not so worried that he was going to go feral or go tearing through his sons' home to find Max. He knocked on the door to the master suite and he walked into the massive bedroom. It truly was a masterpiece in design, size and comfort. Richard was completely jealous and he smiled to himself.

The two boys were sat up in bed together, both looking as miserable as an old crone.

“I heard you boys had an unfortunate day.” He teased as he walked in and he went straight to his baby, looking at his bruised face.

“Is Harry home? He doesn’t know about this, does he?” Nasta asked, looking so worried.

“He is home and he does know, yes. He asked where you both were as soon as he got through the door. Blaise couldn’t lie.”

“How is he?” Nasta asked, sitting upright and moving to get out of the bed.

“Stay where you are if you like your balls being attached to your body. Harry’s fine. He’s calm and he’s relaxing with tea.”

“He…he’s really alright?” Max asked.

“Well, he’s not alright with you both injuring yourselves, of course not, but there’s not much he can do about it as both of you knuckleheads insist on having dangerous jobs and injuring yourselves in said jobs. Truly though I think today was incredibly hard on him and he’s just emotionally drained. He cried a lot today in court. He did so well, he was amazing, but there were a lot of tears and we needed to stop for several breaks, which is why we’re back so late. Thankfully the case is over now, it’s just the verdict, so please, try and look after yourselves a bit more and pamper the shit out of that boy. He’s going to be nervous enough, dreading the wait until the verdict, without you two idiots going and getting yourselves blown up or incinerated.”

“I didn’t ask to have a cauldron blown up in my face.” Max huffed.

“I know, neither of you asked for it, but still, all Harry wanted when he got home was a hug from all of his babies and a kiss from his mates. He can’t have either as half the kids are already in bed asleep and two of his mates are laid up in bed, injured.”
“We can still walk and move about, it’s just, you know, a little painful.” Max shrugged. “I’ll go give him a massive hug and a kiss now. I’m only bruised and I won’t put the bruise salve on until I go to sleep.”

“I’m fine too. Max checked me over and the burn salve is making everything feel much better.”

Richard looked at the three patches of bright orange paste and he shivered. “It looks nasty.”

“I’ll be healed by the morning.” Nasta insisted. “I saved eight hatchlings today, from their own mother. I did my job and I won’t apologise for it. Of course I wish I hadn’t gotten hurt, the pain almost brings tears to my eyes and I hate worrying my mates when they see the burns, but I won’t give up a job I love, nor the fulfilment I feel from doing such a thankless job and looking after the dragons, just because it’s dangerous and I get hurt sometimes.”

“It still looks nasty.” Richard chuckled.

Nasta ignored him and he slid from the bed, being careful not to smear any of the orange paste on top of the duvet as he moved.

“Hold up, I’m coming too.” Max insisted. “We were only up here to give him a chance to relax and unwind a little after the court case, but if he knows, it seems terrible to keep him in his misery. He’ll only be torturing himself with mental images.”

Richard followed the two boys down and he hoped that Harry stayed nice and calm. For his own sake more than anything, his unborn child had dealt with enough stress in recent months, without his own mates adding on top of it.

“Are you both okay?” Richard heard Harry ask in a small, uncertain voice and he sighed. So much for him not stressing so much.

“We’re going to be fine, Harry.” Max said, sitting on one side of his submissive. “These bruises will clear up in a few days.”

“You know these burns will be gone by morning.” Nasta added gently, sitting the other side of Harry.
“I know, but that doesn’t mean that I like seeing either of you injured. Just like you hate seeing me hurt and in pain after I’ve given birth. You know I need to do it and go through it, but none of you like it.”

Max sighed heavily. “That’s true enough. I am sorry that this happened now, of all times. It just makes it worse that both of us got injured on the same day, your last day in court too.”

Harry nodded, but he smiled too and he reached forward and gently cupped Max’s chin, trying to avoid the bruises, as he led his mate into a deep, but rather chaste kiss. He turned and he did the same to Nasta and then he heaved out a huge sigh and sunk down into the chair, suddenly looking much more exhausted than he’d been before. Richard really felt for him in that moment.

“What even happened?” Harry asked then, looking at them both.

“The idiots I’ve left at the reserve didn’t feed one of the hatchling mother’s because they never saw her. Instead of leaving her food near her hatchling nest, they assumed she was catching her own food in the mountains and didn’t bother. She got so hungry that she started eating her own hatchlings. They’re just lucky that she never started eating them. I was called into the emergency, trying to save as many of the hatchlings as possible and calm down the crazed dragon. We threw nine sheep carcasses in a pile to distract her and then saved as many of the hatchlings as we could. Out of the fifteen hatchlings she had, we saved eight of them, just over half.” Nasta sighed unhappily. “If only they’d been more thoughtful and left just a sheep or a cow for her near her site. I’ve put all of them on probation anyway, for their serious lack of judgement.”

“I was dealing with an outbreak of measles in Scotland, I had several recently signed off newbies with me. The one idiot was jealous that I’d told the girl next to him that her potion was perfect, so he threw in extra ingredients when she wasn’t looking, I saw what he did and I moved immediately to haul the poor woman away before she got injured without knowing anything about it, and I did what I was supposed to do, I put a containment ward on the contents of the cauldron as usual, only the entire cauldron went flying, exploded into pieces which then hit me in the face. I got some deep cuts that taking some of Nasta’s blood cleared up, these bruises were a million times worse before then too, but a bit of bruise salve and a few days and I’ll be back to my gorgeous self again. I did not put the idiot who did such things in my lab on probation, I fired him on the spot and put the incident down in his Potions journal for all other employers to see. Such juvenile behaviour has no place in a dangerous, professional lab in my opinion.”

“I’m glad he’s gone and can’t hurt you, or other people, again.” Harry said, hugging Max.

“Don’t you worry about me, love. I’m a tough nut and it’ll take more than an idiot trying to sabotage his peers to take me out.”

“Just be careful, the both of you.”

Richard laughed. “I have a feeling that this was them being careful.” He said.

Harry chuckled with him, putting a smile back on his face and Richard was glad to see it.

“Right, you boys look after him now. He did incredibly well for his last day on the stand. Give him everything he wants, and I mean everything.” Richard demanded.

Harry properly laughed then and Richard winked at him.

“I’m going to go keep my own mate company, he really hates eating alone.”

“Say hi to Dad from me.” Max said.

“Course I will. Love you, Max, try not to make yourself even more hideous than you already were.”

“Oi! I’m fucking stunning!” Max shouted back and Richard laughed, taking a handful of floo powder and throwing it into the grate.

“You wish you were! Unfortunately you’re from your Dad’s genes, not mine, so you can never be as good looking as I am!”

Richard flooed away to the shouts of his oldest son and he arrived at home laughing.

“Are you alright?” Myron asked, hurrying out of his little study that connected right to the front room as he heard him.

“Max is far too easy to wind up, he gets that from you.” Richard said. Myron rolled his eyes and his tense shoulders dropped and relaxed. “He says hi.”

“How was court? Is Harry alright?”

Richard fake gasped. “You care more for him than our own son!” He accused.

Myron sighed, as if put upon. “Harry is mated to Max. He is our son. Now how is he?”

“Stressed and emotionally drained.” Richard said, letting go of his laughter and becoming serious for a moment. “He did so well, but a lot of emotions came out today and he’s exhausted. It took us so long because he really wanted today to be his last, and we had to keep stopping for breaks, just so he could take a moment and clean up his tears. It was terrible, that vile boob, Chorley, kept trying to confuse him. He was speaking so fast during the morning, and changing topics so rapidly, that I could barely keep up, let alone our poor Harry. He had an anxiety attack I think, right there in court, so I demanded a break and took him for a sit down and a cuddle. All so that bastard could try and get those monsters a more lenient sentence, he drove our Harry to tears and into panicking so much that he started babbling and he stopped breathing, I had to remind him to take a breath.”

Myron’s huge fist clenched and Richard could see the exerted control on his top dominant not to go seek out Mister Chorley and cave in his face.

“Is Harry alright now that it’s over?”

“It’s not over just yet, My. He’s fretting over the verdict, as we knew that he would. I just hope it doesn’t take the Jury too long to review the evidence and reach a decision. There is a lot of evidence though, I would imagine we’re looking at three to four days at least, and that’s if they all agree that they’re guilty, which of course they should. Those monsters have guilt written all over them.”

“We’ll go and see him tomorrow, love. Take his mind off of things by visiting our grandchildren.”

“Speaking of children, Nasta and Max were both injured in work, which isn’t helping Harry’s stress levels.”

“Injured how?!” Myron demanded with a growl.
“Nasta almost got himself incinerated. He had three nice, big weeping burns covered in burn salve on his body and our idiot son almost got his head blown off by another idiot who he was working with who thought it acceptable to sabotage someone else’s work. Max dived in to save the woman who’d been sabotaged, but the cauldron blew up into a hundred pieces and struck Max’s face and shoulders. Some blood and he was fine, he’s just bruised up like a neglected apple.”

Myron’s head turned so quick towards him that Richard fancied that he’d heard his mate’s neck crack. He smiled and wandered into their kitchen.

“A neglected apple? You are comparing our son’s injuries to an apple.”

“A very bruised apple.” Richard nodded.

Myron laughed then and Richard grinned. He loved that sound so much.

“How does Chinese sound?” He asked as he took the menu from the side of the fridge. “It’s getting late and I really can’t be bothered to muddle through cooking anything. I want to relax with you and let someone else deal with the cooking.”

“Sure.” Myron agreed. “Do you want your usual?” He asked, even as he picked up the phone and started dialling the number he knew off the top of his head. Of course his amazing mate knew the number for their favourite Chinese restaurant off by heart, he was just that amazing.

“Absolutely. Get me a side of Peking ribs too, I’m feeling in the mood to sink my teeth into meat and bone.”

“Do you want me to go hunt instead?” Myron asked, covering the mouthpiece of the phone.

Richard hummed. “No. Chinese tonight, tomorrow we can both hunt.”

Myron nodded and went back to ordering their meal. It had been a long, busy day. Richard just wanted to relax and bask in the knowledge that he had done all that he could for Harry, his beautiful, youngest son. There was no way on this Earth that after that trial that the Dursleys were getting out of prison, he had helped him to recover and put aside his past by standing next to him and getting him justice for all the horrors he had suffered through, now if only he could pass some of his confidence over to Harry and put an end to his agonising misery over the verdict, then they would both be much happier, and their Harry would be a lot less stressed. Just a few more days, that was all it would take, just a few more days and it would all be over for good and Harry would finally be able to move on with his life and let go of all the past hurt. It wouldn’t be long now, but he was sure that it would feel like an eternity for Harry as he waited for his justice to be served…as he finally got the closure he deserved.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry sighed as he tried not to think about his aching bladder. He was back in the hospital for his twelve week scan and he already knew that he had failed to remove all stress from his life and he knew that Healer Almus would not be pleased, but with the court case it was incredibly difficult for him not to stress over it and now that it was over and there was nothing else that he could do about it, only sit and wait for the Jury to deliberate and then deliver their verdict, he was even more stressed now than when he’d been on the stand.

At least Max’s face had healed up and Nasta’s burns had been completely healed by the next morning, he didn’t even have any burn scars. The both of them were sat with him in the waiting room, Blaise and Draco were too, all of them anxious, just waiting for his name to be called.

They were actually in luck and almost dead on their appointment time, just a minute over, his name was called and he leapt up as if he’d been electrocuted. He was so highly strung at the moment that he couldn’t help it.

He groped for a hand and found Blaise’s first, he held on tight and Blaise squeezed his hand back, trying to comfort him as they walked into Healer Almus’ room and Harry set to taking off his shirt and getting some help up onto the examination bed.

“How have you been, Harry?” The Healer asked him, looking him over visually, before waving his wand over him and jotting down the readings with his other hand.

“Alright.” He said simply.

“No trips, slips or falls?”

“None.”

“Any pain or discomfort?”

“No.”
“How is the morning sickness now? Did you take all of the potions I gave you?”

“It’s eased off a bit now.” Harry answered. “I have four of the potions left.” He said, looking to Max for confirmation. Max nodded.

“So you’ve been eating and drinking a bit more?”

“A lot more.” Harry chuckled.

“Good, your weight has picked back up again after those few days of being unable to eat, so the potions have done their job. Now, how have you been stress wise?”

Harry grimaced at that question and he ducked his head. “Not great, I’ll admit. The court case finished on Thursday, but…but now I’m awaiting the verdict, which should be out early next week.”

Healer Almus sighed heavily. “Right then, let’s check on baby.”

Harry was having another wand scan, as again Healer Almus didn’t want to dig a transducer into his healing belly, so he laid his wand on the small bump and Harry tried not to move, knowing that it would send the wand tumbling to the floor if he did.

A short phrase in Latin later and Harry’s heart swelled with love as he saw his growing baby once more. Their thunderer had certainly grown since Harry had had his eight week scan too, a month ago now.

“Well, as you can perhaps see, baby has grown well since your first scan. I can’t see any danger signs or anything that would make me think that baby is in distress. So that’s good.”

Harry was smitten as he looked at the moving baby.

“Have you been feeding your submissive your fluids?” Healer Almus demanded of his four mates while he examined the baby.
“Of course.” Max replied, affronted. As always he was the one, out of all of his mates, who took such accusations of not feeding him properly to heart. “He takes what he wants, when he wants it. We couldn’t stop him even if we tried.”

Healer Almus nodded. “I have no idea how that part of the pregnancy works, I just know that he needs one particular, or even all of your fluids to keep the baby healthy.”

“He’ll bite us if he needs blood. He did it the other day.” Draco said. “We were cuddling and he just turned and bit into my arm. We’re used to it by now.”

Harry chuckled. “I’ve told you all, the Dracken takes over when I want fluids, I have no warning myself. At least blood is all I want off of you…for now.” He added ominously.

Healer Almus snorted in amusement before moving around the image. The baby moved and Harry got a shock as he caught sight of his baby for all of a moment.

“That was what I thought it was, wasn’t it?” He asked excitedly.

“What did you see?” Blaise asked curiously.

Healer Almus laughed. “That was exactly what you thought it was. Congratulations fellas, you’re getting a boy.”

“You saw him displaying?” Max asked excitedly and Harry and Healer Almus both nodded.

“Clearly and proudly, for all of a heartbeat.” Harry chuckled, looking on with love as his new son squirmed within him.

“One moment is all it takes.” Healer Almus told him. “But speaking of heartbeat’s, let’s see if his has come down at all.”

It was this that Harry was most nervous of and he reached back out to take a hand. He got Max this time and he held onto that huge hand tightly.
The fast whooshing that he knew was baby’s heartbeat filled the room loudly. Harry was devastated to hear that it was almost one continuous sound, it hadn’t slowed down at all, if anything it had increased.

Healer Almus sighed. “Baby’s heartrate has increased, we expect this for the second trimester, but baby’s heartbeat is now one hundred and seventy-three beats per minute. It has increased since I last saw you.”

“What does it mean? Is the baby okay?”

“Baby is okay, but likely feeling the effects of your stress. You don’t have any swelling of the legs or ankles, do you Harry?”

“I…no. I’ve only ever had it in the last trimester, usually in the week or so before I nest.” Harry answered.

Healer Almus nodded and he took his wand back from his belly, breaking the link so the picture of the baby vanished, and he waved his wand several more times.

“Everything seems fine, you’re perfectly healthy, but try for some more sleep. I know saying that while you already have eight babies at home is a laughable concept, but at least try for a nap during the day. It will help your stress too.”

Harry nodded. “He will be alright, won’t he?”

“We will monitor you very closely for any changes now. I want to see you in two weeks, not four, just to make sure that baby is doing better.”

Harry nodded and he allowed Max to help him sit up.

“Baby is a good size, nothing is wrong with him at all, only that elevated heartrate, you don’t seem to be suffering with any conditions, or gestational diabetes, so I’m happy about that. Just carry on as you are, Harry, I know sleeping a bit more will be difficult for you and I know you’re going to be stressed for a few more days at least, but just try to relax a little and aim to laugh every day, laughter really does help remove stress.”
Harry nodded his understanding as Nasta helped him to get his shirt back on.

“Thank you, Healer Almus.” Nasta said for him.

“My pleasure, boys. You look after him and keep him happy, you hear me? That baby’s heart rate needs to come down.”

The five of them all nodded and Harry slipped from the examination bed. He held Nasta’s hand this time and they all said their goodbyes and left for home again, a new stack of photos coming with them.

“I can’t believe we have a boy and only you saw it.” Max chuckled.

Harry smiled. “I couldn’t take my eyes from him, that’s why I saw him. I really hope that once the verdict has been given his heart rate will go down to normal.”

“Don’t think about it, Bello.” Blaise told him. “We’ll get you home now and you can rest up and just watch while those kids run everyone ragged.”

Harry laughed. “I just can’t wait to announce that we have a boy on the way.”

“I’m so proud of you.” Blaise said gently.

Harry smiled and pulled Blaise into a soft kiss. “I love you, Blaise. I love all of you.”

“We love you too, Caru.” Nasta said.

The hospital didn’t seem as busy this afternoon and Harry was glad as he just wanted to get home. There was barely a queue at the fire banks for the floo and Harry went through with Max this time, now that there wasn’t a reason to keep him back to check on his birthday surprise.

He sighed happily as he landed in his own home and he immediately went through the two corridors to the kitchen, and then on to the family room, where Myron, Richard and Ashleigh were watching over the kids. Harry hadn’t felt the slightest hint of apprehension at leaving his children with Ashleigh, not like when she had still been ill, from before she’d gone into the medical rehab centre.

“No problems?” He asked mildly, moving to scoop up Regan, who had run to him as soon as he saw him.

“Only Calix, he tried hitting me.” Richard said. “We practiced what you’d told us, he went into time out for a minute and a half.”

Harry nodded. “He is playing up a lot lately, but you did good, that’s what we would have done.”

“How was the scan?”

Harry shook his head as he sat down, Blaise coming to sit beside him.

“The baby’s heart rate is still really high, it’s gone up since the last time.” He said worriedly. “I need to rest more now, and sleep more, but I’m hoping that after the verdict that my stress levels will go down and will stop affecting the baby.”

“Here, have some tea.” Max said. He hadn’t come into the family room with him, instead he’d immediately started making tea for everyone. Harry got his first.

“Thank you.”

“Can I tell them?” Max asked excitedly as he handed out more tea.

Harry laughed and waved his hand. “Go on then. Give them the news.”

“I take it this is good news from your tone?” Myron asked, Leolin looking like a tiny doll in his massive arms. Their Faerie baby was fast asleep…with the Harry doll clutched to his chest.

“We’re having a boy!” Max burst out, his chest thrown out happily.
“He was displaying?” Ashleigh asked excitedly.

Harry laughed. “For a moment, as he shifted position. I was smitten with his image, so I was staring at him, but the others were looking elsewhere, so I was the only one who saw it...well, Healer Almus saw it too, so he could officially confirm it. We are definitely having just one baby, and he’s a boy.”

“Congratulations on your new boy.” Myron said with a smile.

Harry beamed. “I’m glad he’s growing, but I need to stop the stressing.”

“It won’t be long, sweetheart.” Richard told him. “A few more days and you will know their fate and all of this will be over.”

Harry nodded and he took in a huge breath and held it for a moment, before slowly letting it out. He took a gulp of tea and sighed. It was going to be difficult, but there was nothing that he wouldn’t do for his baby. He would do as Healer Almus had suggested. He would try to stop his worrying, he would try to relax more and sleep more. Nothing was going to harm his baby, not even himself. He would try his hardest now to keep things calm and relaxed. He was still fretting over the Jury’s verdict, he couldn’t help that, but during the next few days while they waited, he could try and do his utmost to keep everything else calm. He would sleep more, he would sit down and relax more, he would try to curb his thoughts or fretting over the court case. His unborn son needed him to do as such and Harry had always done everything that was best for his babies. He took in another deep breath. He could do this, for his little thunderer, he could do almost anything.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: So, I am finally feeling good again and, though being back in work is absolutely exhausting, especially in the last few weeks, I’m finally getting back to normal and I believe all this awful illness is finally behind me at last.

I’ve been on a Spartacus kick for the last few weeks too, of the Starz series version, and those of you on my Facebook page will know exactly how reluctant I was to break that stride, I’ve added approximately 60,000 words to that fic in just two weeks, which is phenomenal. As a result of that this new fic should be posted up in 2018, I expect it to be 15 chapters long, or thereabouts, of which I already have 11 chapters over 130,000 words currently. It is going to be the first of three planned fics and I’m really looking forward to sharing it with those of you who are interested in reading it.

A/N 2: Since writing and preparing this chapter my beloved cat, Jethro, has been diagnosed with end stage heart disease. He’s only six so it has come as a huge shock and it is incredibly distressing to watch him as he is now, post-op and with irreversible damage to his heart after he collapsed on the kitchen floor, out of the blue six days ago. The vets don’t know how long he has, but the prognosis isn’t good. The focus is now on his quality of life, rather than quantity. He is at home with me currently, and he’s stable for now, which is all I can ask for, he’s on a lot of medication and I have to monitor his breathing every few hours, so I’m not getting much sleep and I’m emotionally drained as I prepare to say goodbye, prematurely, to my beloved boy. I will likely be able to update chapter 115 as well, as that is completed too and Jethro is stable and doing as well as can be expected in his condition, but if anything at all happens, then fanfiction will not be a priority and I might go quiet for some time depending on how well I deal with my grief once he does inevitably pass from this incurable disease that is wasting him away in front of me.

StarLight Massacre. X
Harry nodded and he took in a huge breath and held it for a moment, before slowly letting it out. He took a gulp of tea and sighed. It was going to be difficult, but there was nothing that he wouldn’t do for his baby. He would do as Healer Almus had suggested. He would try to stop his worrying, he would try to relax more and sleep more. Nothing was going to harm his baby, not even himself. He would try his hardest now to keep things calm and relaxed. He was still fretting over the Jury’s verdict, he couldn’t help that, but during the next few days while they waited, he could try and do his utmost to keep everything else calm. He would sleep more, he would sit down and relax more, he would try to curb his thoughts or fretting over the court case. His unborn son needed him to do as such and Harry had always done everything that was best for his babies. He took in another deep breath. He could do this, for his little thunderer, he could do almost anything.

The morning came like any other. Harry had slept in late, waking up twice and choosing to roll over and go back to sleep instead of getting up. He slept a further three and a half hours this way and he finally woke up and got up at twenty past nine, instead of his usual six am. He blamed it on all the fun he’d had yesterday at Myron’s fifty-fifth birthday party, Richard had certainly kept them all well entertained, or completely horrified in Max’s case. He and Caesar, and their younger sisters, had spent most of the day screeching and covering their eyes or ears as Richard and Ashleigh both took turns in snogging the face off of Myron or describing how they were going to give him the best night of his life. They’d turned it into a game and to Harry’s understanding of this game, the one to get the biggest reaction from the party guests won, or at least that was what he’d deduced, but it might also have been which one could rile up Myron the most and get him to explode, either with embarrassment or anger, it didn’t seem to matter which. That had naturally been Richard, who always pushed too far.

He finally decided to get up, out of bed and he padded to the master en suite and took care of several pressing matters before he walked down the stairs and he went into the empty kitchen and from there he followed the baby screeches and giggles into the family room. He took a moment to survey his family, then he was noticed by Farren, who hefted himself up and came running.
Harry smiled and he hunched down and braced himself as Farren bowled into him. He hugged his son tightly and he pulled back to give Farren a kiss.

He then had to turn to the horde of other children who had come running from all over the room to greet him.

“Bo da, Mummy!” Came Braiden’s usual three language greeting as Harry answered him happily.

“Ma! Ma! Ma!” Came Leolin’s demands from Max’s arms and Harry had to laugh as he sent the kids back to their games and made his way over to Max and sat beside him, accepting Leolin into his arms. He noticed immediately that Leolin was holding the creepy Harry doll, it was almost a permanent attachment these days.

“Would you like some tea, my glorious, gorgeous mate?” Max asked him.

Harry laughed happily. Max had been doing this since Healer Almus had told them that laughing every day would help to relieve his stress. Max had been wonderful in taking up that mantel and doing his utmost to keep Harry laughing all day, every day. He was incredibly apt at doing so and he relished the chance to make a clown of himself for Harry’s health. As he insisted, he now had the perfect excuse to be as entertaining as he liked.

“Please, love.” Harry agreed before turning his attention to his Faerie baby, who’d been laid in his arms.

Leolin reached up and placed a teeny, tiny hand against his chin, looking into his green eyes with his own huge golden ones, grinning up at him with his own single tooth. He looked adorable to Harry.

“Why, hello there.” He greeted enthusiastically. “How are you today, Leolin? Mummy’s alright. He’s just been a lazy bones and stayed in bed all morning, so your Daddies had to look after you, didn’t they?”

“We didn’t mind.” Draco said with a snort of amusement at his antics.

“Not in the slightest.” Blaise agreed. “Me especially, I only got up forty minutes ago myself. I wanted to stay in bed with you for longer.” He laughed.

Harry grinned too. “You should have woken me up, lover. Nothing drains stress quite so much as some shared alone time in bed. Naked alone time.” He added in a soft purr.

Blaise laughed. “I’ll keep that in mind for tomorrow morning.” He winked.

“If that’s the case then I’m not getting up either.” Draco insisted. “We just won’t tell Max or Nasta.” He added in a conspiratorial whisper. “They can get up and look after the kids.”

Harry laughed loudly at that. “How diabolical of you. How very Slytherin.”

Draco looked proud of that and Harry chuckled before looking back down at his entranced baby. He bent his head and he kissed Leolin, whose golden eyes went cross-eyed as he watched Harry’s face come closer to his own. It took him several seconds to react and refocus his eyes when Harry pulled away and Harry smiled at the adorable sight that he made.

Max came back with his tea and gave him a loud, smacking kiss for good measure. Harry had to laugh again and he bent forward to kiss Max properly, on the lips.

He sat back to enjoy his tea and the rest of his morning as he cradled Leolin and watched his other children play on the floor. The only thing that was missing was Nasta, who had been called into work to deal with the fools that he’d put on probation. Being the only senior Dragonologist at a reserve did have some drawbacks, it went with the larger wage packet. Things took a bad turn when they heard the chime on the floo, indicating that someone they knew was coming into their house, someone who wasn’t Nasta.

“Boys, where are you?” Richard’s voice called out.

“I thought you were going to enjoy your morning with Dad?” Max called out. “You scarred me for life telling me how you were going to treat him for his birthday yesterday and how it would mean you’d spend the day in bed today.”

Richard came into the family room and Harry’s heart almost stopped as he saw Richard in an expensive, designer suit.

“The Jury have decided, haven’t they?” He asked, barely recognising the strangled words as his own
“Yes.” Richard nodded. “Do you have your suit waiting?”

Harry nodded and with his heart in his throat and his stomach dangling down by his knees somewhere, he passed Leolin to Blaise and he stood on shaky legs, putting his half full cup of tea on the coffee table.

“It’s alright, Harry, I’ll be with you, as always, it won’t even take ten minutes once we’re there, I promise.” Richard soothed. “Just go and get dressed and we’ll go straight there and we’ll be coming almost straight back. It’s almost over with now, I promise.”

Harry swallowed and he nodded, moving to go and get ready. Draco came with him and Harry was strangely grateful as he felt like he was moving on automatic.

Draco helped him to get dressed, sorted out his hair for him, fixed his tie and his collar and even tied his shoes for him.

“You’ll be fine, Harry. We’ll get you all your favourites for when you come back, tea, chocolate, I could even poke Blaise into giving you a massage if you wanted.”

Harry smiled at that.

“Poking Blaise into a massage it is.” Draco nodded.

Harry laughed then and he stepped forward and wrapped his arms around Draco, hugging him tightly. “Thank you.” He said gratefully.

“Anything for you, love. You know that.”

Harry nodded. He did know, but he often forgot and he needed reminding. He loved his mates so much.

Draco led him back down the stairs, where Richard was waiting for them with Max in the smaller living room.
“You’ll do just fine, Harry. Stay with Richard and we’ll see you soon.” Draco told him, bending to kiss his forehead.

“You really will.” Max insisted as he pulled him from his feet in a backbreaking hug. “We love you and we’ll be here when you come home. I’ll floo Nasta now, once you’re gone, and tell him what’s happening and he can wrap up his tongue lashing and dole out punishment and he can get his fine arse back here.”

Harry chuckled weakly at that and he held on tight to Max for a moment.

“Okay, I’m ready.” He insisted, even though he didn’t really feel like it.

Richard took his arm and they went through the floo rather quickly. They landed in Myron’s home and Harry was led to the kitchen where the man himself was sat at the kitchen table with a newspaper and a coffee, in a pair of jeans and a tee-shirt, looking like a sexy, older version of Max. He had the entire week off because it had been his birthday yesterday.

“I’m sorry for ruining your plans.” He said immediately.

Myron, who hadn’t noticed them, startled slightly before he folded down the newspaper to look at him.

“Don’t be ridiculous now, Harry.” He said in a gruff voice that spoke of him only recently getting out of bed. Harry wondered what exactly his trial had interrupted, and he blushed.

Myron stood and hefted him right from his feet, as easily as if he’d been Calix or Ave. He was hugged tightly and held even tighter.

“We love you and this trial has gone on for long enough, it’s time that you get the closure that you deserve.” Myron told him.

Harry managed a small smile. “I want it to be over with too. I want to move on with my life now. I never even wanted to do this in the first place, I wanted to just leave it all alone, it was the guys who convinced me to prosecute them.”
“Good, you can’t let people who hurt you get away with it, Harry. They deserve to be in prison for what they did, for their vile way of thinking and the atrocities that they committed. No one deserves to be treated in such a way, no one, for any reason. I’m glad that you’re so brave and so courageous as to go through with this trial and see justice done. You know that we’ll be here for you, Harry. Always.”

“I love you.” Harry declared, burying his face into Myron’s neck and holding onto him tight.

“We love you too, son.” Myron told him, cradling the back of his head with one huge hand. “I’m not doing anything today, I’ll go over to yours and wait for you to come back, your boys will likely need a hand with the kids as they’ll be distracted too.”

“They were already out of it when we left.” Richard agreed. “Go on over now. Harry and I are Apparating to the court anyway.”

Myron nodded and set Harry back on his feet gently. A kiss to the forehead, Richard got a kiss to the lips, and then Myron was gone. Richard huffed.

“He never cleans up his damn cups!” Richard muttered as he took Myron’s coffee cup and dumped it into the sink. “Right come on then, sweetie, the sooner we get there, the sooner we can leave and celebrate!”

Harry took heart from Richard’s confidence and he breathed more normally, patting his barely there bump to remind himself why he had to stop stressing. Soon, very soon, and this would all be over and all stress would be gone. Well, the stress from this court case would be gone.

He took Richard’s arm and tried to keep his stomach in place at the sensation of Apparation. They arrived at their usual spot, in the alleyway behind their favourite café.

“Do you want a decaf coffee, sweetness?” Richard asked him.

Harry nodded. “A muffin too, please, I never had a chance to eat breakfast. I got up late because the Healer said to sleep more. I’d only just come downstairs when you arrived.”

Richard grimaced as he heard that. “Two muffins and a bacon roll then, can you eat bacon?”
Harry nodded. “I can’t stand the smell of it cooking, but I can eat it fine.”

“It won’t be long either. You’ll see.”

Harry sat down for a few minutes while Richard ordered, it didn’t make sense to stand up and put pressure on himself when he could easily sit in a chair for ten minutes and try to relax a little.

Richard came back all too soon and Harry wrapped his hands around the large roll that was overflowing with bacon. Harry smiled as his stomach growled as loudly as his Dracken side did. Richard laughed.

“You weren’t kidding about the missing breakfast.”

“ Nope.” Harry said before taking a huge bite, barely chewing and swallowing. “I didn’t even have time to finish my first cup of tea before you arrived, I’d only managed half of it. This is great though, thank you.”

“Think nothing of it, love.” Richard said, taking bites out of his own bacon roll.

They’d finished the rolls before they even reached the courthouse, and Harry was happily eating a blueberry muffin, washed down with the decaf coffee, when they arrived at the glass building.

“Come on, sweetie, you’ll be just fine. You’ll take your seat at the table, and you won’t have to see or say anything else. Ignore the press too.”

“What press?” Harry asked, his heart jumping.

“Unfortunately this case has been high profile in the Muggle world, and the magical world alike. The press has been following it and it has appeared in the papers. With the verdict being today, they might well be outside waiting to hear the sentencing but let me handle it if that’s the case, sweetie, okay?”

Harry nodded, about a million times more nervous now than he had been before and a million times more stressed too. He hated this, and he couldn’t wait until it was finally over for good.
They made it to the little benches outside of the courtroom and Harry sat on the nearest highly polished bench, that made him feel like every shift was going to send him to the floor, and he sipped on his coffee, trying to keep himself calm. He kept his hand on his little bump, reminding himself that he couldn’t stress himself overly much, he needed his baby to be safe and healthy.

Harry had finished both muffins and half his large cup of coffee before they were called into the room and he took a moment to touch Richard, almost like a grounding stone, just to anchor him to reality and to remind himself that he was safe here, with Richard, and he was finally going to get the justice that he deserved, the justice that his younger self had needed a decade ago.

It was true he hadn’t been hit all that often, though stupid pushes had often led to him falling and being injured, injuries that were never looked at or tended to properly, and then there were the ridiculously dangerous situations that he’d been put in needlessly, such as cooking unsupervised, but there were the odd backhands, the slaps from Petunia, having his head yanked around by his hair, but the emotional and mental abuse had been much worse than even he’d realised. It hadn’t been until he’d gone to a Mind Healer that he’d even realised how fucked up keeping a child in a cupboard for ten years was, it had just been normal for him, and that was what was the most fucked up about all of this, that it had become normal for him.

How all the missed meals had contributed to his small height and overly thin frame. Then there were the lies about him that they’d spread, the lies about his parents, the neighbours all thinking that he went to some secure school for incurable criminals and being frightened of him. Never being allowed to go on holiday or the little day trips. Going with them to Dudley’s eleventh birthday trip to the zoo had been the very first time that he hadn’t stayed at home with Mrs Figg and her cats. It had been the last time too after the snake incident. He hated that he’d missed out on so much purely because the people he’d been left with as a baby were so vile and cruel and he hoped that the Jury had seen that. He hoped that he would get the justice that he needed to move on from all that they’d done to him.

The Judge had been talking, and Harry hadn’t been listening, but he swallowed hard and tuned in as soon as the stern looking man turned his gaze to the members of the Jury.

“On the count of mental abuse towards a minor, how do you find the defendants?” He barked at the presiding juror.

“We find the defendants guilty.” The man said firmly, his head high and his back straight.

There were actually cheers from some of the court attendants and Harry had to look at Richard to see if he’d heard rightly, and wasn’t just hearing what he wanted to hear. Richard was looking very pleased and satisfied.

“On the count of physical abuse towards a minor, how do you find the defendants?” The Judge asked again.

“We find the defendants guilty.”
“On the count of incarcerating a minor, how do you find the defendants?”

“We find the defendants guilty.”

“On the count of negligence towards a minor, how do you find the defendants?”

“We find the defendants guilty.”

Just like that, it was over. Harry felt like he was in shock, he couldn’t breathe. He looked at the grey faced Dursleys and he knew that they were going to prison for all that they’d done to him, from the bullying, the mental and emotional abuse, the physical abuse, the neglect he’d suffered and all the pain and tears that they’d caused him over the fifteen years that he’d been stuck with them.

“Mister Vernon and Missus Petunia Dursley, you have been found guilty of all charges brought against you.” The stern Judge told them, his eyes glaring down at them. “This case has been one of the most disturbing and horrific cases of child abuse that I have seen in my many years as a Judge and it has been a great pleasure to bring justice to your young victim, who somehow found the strength of character and the courage to bring these allegations forward against you. It is my hope now that he can continue with his therapist and overcome the heinous things that you did to him in his formative years. It is my absolute belief that you set out, on a single-minded path, to completely destroy the boy who had so trustingly been given into your care. You sought to crush everything that he was for reasons that you refuse to mention in this court, cruelly denying your victim the closure he deserves for all that you’ve done to him. For this clear-minded, singular mission of utterly breaking one so young, for showing absolutely no remorse or repentance for what you did to him, and for refusing to ease the recovery of your victim even slightly it is my belief that nothing less than a life-sentence is warranted.”

Harry watched as Petunia swayed where she stood, looking to be on the verge of fainting. Even Vernon looked shell-shocked, as if up to now, he’d thought that he and his wife would get off scot-free.

He listened with bated breath as the Judge outlined the years they were getting in prison for all that they’d done to him and he was almost hyperventilating from shock. He tried to add up the years in his head, but he couldn’t focus properly, it was like he’d turned to stone. Richard wrapped an arm around him and rubbed his back, trying to ease his breathing. It did help and he was able to breathe more normally as he watched the Dursleys get sentenced to prison when he hadn’t even been sure that this court case would fall in his favour. There had been a niggle of doubt, a voice in the back of his head telling him that no one could see what he had, no one could know of what had happened to him, and his lies about the magical aspects of everything would be caught out and no one would believe him.
“…As a result of these offenses, I sentence Missus Petunia Dursley to life in prison, with a tariff of twenty-two years before being eligible for parole.”

Petunia made a soft sound, like a mouse being trodden on, and she wobbled backwards, her legs going from under her as she collapsed into her chair. Her reputation would never survive being handed a twenty-two year life sentence, even when she got out, at the age of sixty-four, no one would want to associate with her now that she was a convicted criminal of offenses against a minor. Harry thought this was a rather sweet victory, as they had spent so much of his life painting him as a criminal, as a delinquent who went to a school for criminal boys, but now they were the ones with a life sentence hanging over them, now they were the ones who were convicted criminals.

“I sentence Mister Vernon Dursley to life in prison, with a tariff of twenty-nine years before being eligible for parole, as though I see the both of you as bad as one another, I have no doubts that the majority of the heinous injuries seen in this courtroom over the course of this case have been at your own hands.” The Judge said, glowering down at Vernon, who had shrunk into himself as he heard the sentences placed on him and his wife.

Harry watched as the Dursleys were handcuffed by police officers. It all felt like a dream. Like he should be waking up at any moment, still in his cupboard, or perhaps even locked in his small bedroom with all of Dudley’s broken toys, back to bleeding all over the place, urinating in that one corner, and not being fed enough to feed a bird.

“Mister Potter.” The Judge called out to him and Harry snapped back into reality to look up at the Judge, who didn’t seem quite as fearsome as he had before. “It is my genuine hope that you continue to show the courage, confidence and defiance that you exuded in this courtroom. It is my hope that you continue with your therapy and you live a long, happy life from this point onwards. I want to hear that you have overcome all that they’ve done to you by denying them the total destruction of your person and character. They tried their hardest to stamp you out and crush you underfoot, now I want you to stand tall and deny them what they had tried for so long to do.”

Harry smiled then. ‘I’m doing well with my therapy and I have surrounded myself with those who do truly love me and care for me. I’ve needed their support and they’ve given it to me and they gave me the strength I needed to pursue this case when I was too scared and too nervous to do so on my own. I was always stronger than those people, I was never going to let them keep me down and now that I have the closure that I came for, I can carry on working towards putting everything that I went through behind me, moving forward with my life.”

He actually got a round of applause for that as the Dursleys were led away, back to the holding cells before they would be transported to the prisons they would be staying at…their new homes for the next two decades, just a single year off of three decades in Vernon’s case.
Richard was practically beaming and Harry felt almost boneless with relief and now that the adrenaline had worn off, he needed to sit down or he was going to fall. Soon, very soon he would be home and he’d never have to come back here ever again. He was done. It was finally over.

Richard chatted to several people, while Harry relearted how to breathe, and then they were making their way out of the courthouse. Harry had completely forgotten about the mentioned press being outside waiting, so he was startled when as soon as he appeared on the steps that voices started shouting out to him.

“Stay by my side, but don’t worry, this will be quick and easy.” Richard said, pulling a piece of parchment from his top pocket, clearly prepared for this eventuality.

Richard stepped forward one step, so that he was in a better position for all the swarming press to hear him and he cleared his voice, getting them to quieten down.

“My client wishes to express his joy that today, justice has been done.” Richard started loudly and firmly, in his clear, slightly stern courtroom voice. “The Dursleys have both been sentence to life imprisonment, by the judicial system of this country, for the heinous crimes committed against my client, who was a minor at the time that the crimes were carried out. My client wishes to thank you all for your patience and your respect of his privacy as he went through this difficult period. My client wishes to thank also the Judge and Jurors who gave him the closure that he sought, the police officers who were so prompt and professional when he first made his claims against the Dursley family and to those witnesses who heard of this case and came forward with new evidence to help him receive the justice that he deserved. My client now wishes to live his life in peace as he overcomes what was done to him and he finally heals from the events of his past. Thank you.”

Harry was surprised that the press let him walk through them all without once accosting him or shouting out questions as Richard steered him through them and then down the road. He was grateful that they didn’t try to question him, as at the moment he was having trouble walking, let alone stringing together a sentence. His heart was racing, he couldn’t truly comprehend what had just happened, it was like all of his dreams had finally come true and the scared, abused little boy he had once been was finally set free from the cupboard under the stairs. He could finally, fully let go of his past, he could truly forget about the Dursley family and all that they’d put him through. One tear slid down his cheek, quickly followed by another, and he sniffled.

Richard looked at him when he heard the noise, then he did a double take when he realised that Harry was actually fully crying.

“What is it, Harry? Are you okay?” He asked in alarm.

“I never thought I’d see this day.” He said, brushing away his tears.
“Come on, silly, let’s get you home and to your mates.” Richard said, understanding the cause of the tears and putting an arm around Harry’s narrow shoulders to comfort him. It likely was very overwhelming to the young man to finally have this all over with, especially when Richard knew he’d had his doubts throughout the trial and had fretted over every question and answer given.

Harry nodded and brushed away more tears, but they kept falling. He couldn’t stop crying, so that when he and Richard landed in the front garden of his home, he was almost all out bawling.

Richard went to his one knee and rubbed his thumbs under his eyes.

“Thank you.” Harry said thickly, through his tears. “I couldn’t have done it without you. You should have put yourself in that list of people I thanked in that letter to the press, you were always the one beside me, helping me.”

“Oh, hush now.” Richard told him. “You’re my son, I see you as my own, and I would do anything for you. All of us would. You deserved the chance for justice and closure, you needed it more than you ever thought that you would, especially in the beginning when we were trying to convince you to prosecute them in the first place. We love you, we adore you. You’re one of us now, a part of our family, and we’re not letting you go. So get used to it.”

That made Harry laugh and he huffed and snuffed, moving to the door and fishing out his key. He unlocked the door and made his way through the straight corridor to the kitchen. He could hear a lot of voices in the family room, so he headed there. He needed his mates.

“Did it not go well?” Myron demanded as soon as he walked into the room and Myron saw that Harry was crying. He sounded so angry, so protective, that Harry’s heart almost stopped.

“They’re happy tears!” Richard soothed his angry mate quickly. “Happy tears for justice.”

Harry chuckled again and wiped his face, but Nasta reached him first and swept him up into his arms, holding him tightly. Harry just started crying again, hard and messily. He couldn’t stop as he got rid of all the stress of the case, the nerves over the verdict, the pain of his past and the fear of being found to be a liar when he actually wasn’t one.

“They got life sentences.” Richard was saying over Harry’s cries. “She got twenty-two years, he got twenty-nine. They’ll be in their sixties and seventies before they get out, if they don’t die before that. A lot of people take exception to child abusers, even in prison.”
“Max, can you get Harry some tea?” Nasta asked, sitting down on the settee with Harry in his lap, Harry’s head still buried in his neck, sobbing on him, as he clutched at his top dominant desperately.

“Sure thing.” Max said gently, stroking Harry’s hair a little more before moving to get him tea.

Harry knew that Nasta was releasing his calming pheromones because he was calming down too quickly for it to be entirely natural, but he was grateful for it. His tears were making his head throb and the last thing he needed right now was a headache.

Several hands were stroking his body, from his head, to his back, his arm, his leg. He kept his face in Nasta’s neck, holding onto his top dominant like a lifeline.

They let him cry himself out, talking to him softly, in gentle voices to help calm him down. Once he was all cried out, he sat quietly on Nasta’s lap, in his arms, his mates all touching him and he absorbed what had just happened.

He peered up, peeling his face from Nasta’s wet neck and he looked around him, at all of his mates.

“There you are, hello.” Max greeted him and Harry chuckled wetly, mopping his face up with his hand. “Here is your tea.”

Harry shifted a little to turn outwards, so that he could drink his tea without the risk of spilling it over himself or Nasta.

“Do you feel better?” Draco asked him.

Harry nodded, gulping his tea down in several large swallows, until the cup was empty. “I just…I think there was still a small part of me that was worried that they’d get off, so when it finally sunk in that they were being prosecuted, it was a shock.”

“It’s alright, it’s all over now and we have you, we’re not letting you go either.” Nasta told him, hugging him with those strong arms wrapped around his waist while Max took his empty cup from him and placed it on the coffee table. He refilled it with the teapot that was on a tray before handing it back.

“I’m glad it’s all over and they got what they deserved.” Harry said, sniffing hard before sipping on his fresh cup of tea.
“They got exactly what they deserved.” Richard told him. “You can just relax and celebrate now. You have the justice that you wanted and now you can heal with the help of Healer Vasey.”

“He’ll want to see me tomorrow.” Harry said with a sigh.

“I’ll make the appointment for you.” Draco told him, taking his hand from Harry’s knee and standing to go to the living room, to make the floo call for his appointment.

Max waved a chocolate bar at him and Harry let out a weak, watery chuckle as he took it and opened the wrapper, nibbling on the chocolate bar.

“Where are the kids?”

“Farren’s by there.” Blaise told him, pointing out Farren who was sleeping on the floor wrapped in a blanket. “The others are all up having naps. Farren didn’t look like he was going to go down, neither was Braiden for that matter, but they both gave in, though we decided to leave Farren down here. You just know he’ll wake up if we try to move him.”

Harry nodded and he settled himself against Nasta, calming himself down by breathing deeply and nibbling his chocolate and sipping his tea. Draco came back into the room with another tray of tea, including another teapot, and the jar of imported honey that Blaise had gotten him for his birthday, just in case.

“You were right, Healer Vasey wants to see you tomorrow.” Draco told him. “He said that your usual time of half one in the afternoon was alright when I asked, so you can go while the kids are down for their naps.”

Harry smiled at that. “Thank you. I would rather go when the kids won’t miss me. I’ve missed so much since this court case started. I don’t like it.”

“Just think though, Harry.” Richard told him. “It’s over with now. You never have to go back and you got the justice that you deserved for what they did to you. You’re free from them now, and they’re in prison, where they belong.”

Harry smiled wider. “I’m glad it’s over and that they were sentenced. Hopefully our thunderer can settle down too.”
Several hands touched his belly, including his own, and he laughed, a little too loudly it seemed as Farren stirred and wriggled in his blanket wrap. He twisted and rolled, fighting to get free.

“Daddy!” He called out sleepily when he realised that he couldn’t get himself free from the twisted blanket.

Harry shifted from Nasta’s lap, put down his tea cup and the chocolate bar on the coffee table, and he hurried to where Farren was struggling and grunting.

“Daddy!” Farren called out again, more desperately.

“I’m here, baby.” Harry said, picking Farren up and setting him on his feet, unwinding the blanket that had wrapped itself twice around his body.

Once free Harry picked Farren up and cuddled him tightly, giving him a big kiss.

“Mummy!” Farren said happily, wrapping his arms around Harry’s neck and squeezing.

“Oh, wow, your grip is getting tight.” Harry chuckled.

He moved Farren to his lap and he sat flat on the floor so he wasn’t putting so much pressure on his body.

“We should celebrate your justice, Harry.” Richard told him.

Harry laughed at that. “You just want another party. I don’t think I could deal with it though. I’ve been so stressed and so uptight about this, I just want to relax in the quiet now. I couldn’t stand the excitement at the moment.”

Richard sighed, but he agreed. “Fine, we’ll have a party in your honour.”
That made Harry laugh harder. “Carry on. I’m staying at home today. I want my kids all around me and I want the comfort of my mates, I…oh, Nas, do you have to go back to work?” He asked, remembering that the verdict had interrupted his work day.

“No, I cleared everything up. If you want us here, we’re not going anywhere.”

Harry nodded and smiled happily.

“We’ll leave you to it then, boys.” Myron said.

“Yeah, is it alright if we spread the word around, or would you rather do it yourself?” Richard asked.

“I’d rather you do it for me, please. I’d rather not be disturbed right now.”

“Wonderful. To your Father’s house, Myron!” Richard urged, giving his mate and husband a poke.

Myron just sighed and stood. He came to Harry first and hunched down, wrapping him and Farren in his huge arms.

“Take care of yourself, Harry.”

“I will.” Harry smiled, accepting the kiss to the forehead. Myron kissed Farren’s forehead next.

“Gwanddad.” Farren declared.

Myron chuckled and he ruffled Farren’s dark brown hair. He went to say goodbye to Max and Nasta, Blaise and Draco and Harry waved goodbye one last time and Max saw his Fathers’ out.

Harry cuddled with Farren and tried not to think too much. The case had gone in his favour, the Dursleys had been locked up for their awful treatment of him and at last people would know the truth about them, especially all the neighbours who had once believed their lies about him, as they would assuredly see it in tomorrow’s newspaper, or on the evening news later. That was what the greatest thing about this court case was, after getting justice for himself obviously, and it was that people now knew the truth about what the Dursleys were like, what liars they were, and how vile and cruel they had been to a young child that they were supposed to have loved and looked after.

He held Farren tighter and rested his chin gently on the top of Farren’s head. Everyone would know the truth soon, when all of the details of the trial came out, including his mates. He sighed heavily, there was nothing else for it, he would have to sit them down and tell them. He didn’t want them getting half a story from a newspaper article, he still remembered the rubbish that Rita Skeeter had written about him in his fourth year, and for every nugget of truth she had written, there were five mistruths or downright lies to go with it. His mates deserved the actual truth, from his own lips. He would have to tell them, but not today. Today was for him to savour the victory in the courtroom, over the Dursleys and his past demons. Today was for him to let go of everything that had happened to him, moving seamlessly from his horrible, abusive past with his blood relatives and onto his bright and love filled future with the family that he had created for himself. Today was for him, and he was going to enjoy it.

__________________________________________________________________________________________

October came wet and overcast, but now three and a half months pregnant, Harry didn’t much care what the weather was doing as he spent all of his days inside. He didn’t feel the need to go out and he spent all of his time with his children as the weather stayed wet and windy and his mates trudged in and out of work.

Nasta was by far the worst, as he worked outside mostly, and on some days he came back bone cold and sodden. They had all known that it was only a matter of time before he came down with a cold or the flu and he had been taken from the nightly baby duties, as Harry refused to allow him near Leolin when he could be harbouring an infection or a disease. Nasta didn’t fight this restriction, he’d actually tried to fight them into letting him check into a hotel until the illness he could feel creeping upon him passed, but none of his mates had agreed.

‘We have no idea how long it could take for you to fall sick, nor how long it’ll stay once you have it. I am not being apart from one of my mates for that long! This is your home, you stay here, where we can damn well look after you.’ Harry had raged to Nasta, and after that, no one had said anything more, and Nasta hadn’t brought up leaving for a hotel again either.

But, it came as absolutely no surprise that a few days after that, on the seventh, just the day after they’d flooed back from Australia for Harry Jackson’s first birthday (which was technically on the seventh of October, but as he lived in Australia, they were a day ahead, so they’d gone on the sixth to celebrate his birthday at his home), and just four days before Blaise’s twentieth birthday, Nasta woke up with a headache, a sore throat and a fever sweat.

Draco had gone up to check on him, as they’d been doing every hour since he hadn’t woken up that morning, and he’d come back down to tell them that Nasta was awake and that it looked like he had the flu, and to send up Max, who as their first aider was in the best position to actually help Nasta and not just fuss over him.

Max had come back down and he’d confirmed what they’d all already known, that Nasta did in fact have the flu.
“Always during the wet season.” Max had groaned as he got out his cauldron and started brewing more headache relievers. The strongest one that he knew, as Nasta was going to be going through them like water for the next few days. He also started a cauldron of stomach settlers and another one which he was using to brew fever reducers. Max wasn’t an expert Potions Master for no good reason as he kept an eye on all three potions brewing at once.

“Always in the autumn you mean.” Harry sighed, bouncing Eva on his hip.

“The cold, rainy season.” Max nodded, watching the three potions, giving this one a stir, giving another one a tap with his wand, before he added a sprinkling of…something.

Harry bounced the fussy Eva a little more, ignoring her tiny heels digging into his ribs as she tried to climb him. Her little toes dug into him and her teeny nails scored his skin, but he held her securely and let her grizzle.

“See if she’ll eat anymore prunes, love.” Max said, looking at her as she made little pained noises. “Of all days for her to be constipated.” Max shook his head. “If she won’t take any more then I’ll brew her something to help, once all of this is done.”

Harry nodded. He hated to add to Max’s work load, but Eva hadn’t dirtied a nappy in two days, and he was worried. Since they had been weaned, both she and Ave had been dirtying a nappy a day, sometimes twice a day. This was a break in the routine and Harry had noticed immediately. He’d then noticed Eva straining more, as she was doing now, her face going red and her toes and feet digging in to him.

They’d realised that she was constipated and they had offered her more fruit, especially apples and prunes to try and boost her fibre intake, but thus far it hadn’t worked.

Harry took the bowl of pureed prunes, that Max had made himself, from the fridge and he sat at the table with Eva on his lap and he offered her the spoon. As before she pushed away the spoon, cried, whined and grizzled, kicking out her little feet.

“Come on, sweetie.” Harry cooed. “Just a few spoonfuls, you’ll feel much better.”

He prodded the spoon into her mouth as gently as he could. She spat the spoon back out, dribbling the prunes back out of her mouth and all over her bib.

“Come on, Eva. Just eat a bit of these lovely prunes.” He said, prodding the spoon back into her mouth as she screamed and struggled on his lap.

“No luck?” Blaise asked, bringing out Leolin’s empty bottle.

Harry sighed. “No. She’s not eating the prunes, she might need to have that potion after all.”

Blaise nodded and he picked up one of the chairs and placed it on the end of the table, he took the spoon from Harry and he tried to prod more prunes into her mouth, but as she had done for Harry, she pushed it back out of her mouth with her tongue and grizzled harder.

“She’s in so much pain.” Blaise sighed unhappily, frowning as he tried again, encouraging her to eat.

“I think she’s afraid of eating because she knows it can’t come out.” Harry said.

“I’ll get her a laxative now.” Max said as he ladled out one of the cauldron’s contents into premeasured vials, that were already labelled, that he’d lined up on the island counter behind him.

Once done, he scoured the now empty cauldron with a simple spell and he measured out an exact amount of water and he set it to boiling as he went searching for more ingredients, his daughter’s heart wrenching screams in his ear.

He kept his eye on both the other cauldrons as well, but he was a dab hand these days at brewing multiple potions at once, he wasn’t worried and he knew exactly what he was doing with each of the potions and what steps came next, even as Blaise tried to spoon more prune mush into Eva’s mouth with little success.

“She’s not having it, it’s just upsetting her more.” Harry sighed as he sat her forward and pulled off her bib, using it to wipe her mouth before he threw it at the door to the utility room. Her messy top followed and so too did the little leggings, leaving her in just her little white bodysuit.

“Pass her here, I’ll wipe her face and then get her into something clean.” Blaise said.

Harry let his mate take Eva from him and he stood to go and wrap his arms around Max’s waist, nuzzling his back.
“Everything will be alright, love.” Max told him, patting his hands and carrying on brewing.

“It’s just…well, a bit of bad timing I suppose.” Harry sighed. “Nasta sick with the flu, Eva being constipated, Blaise’s birthday is in four days, Eva and Ave’s dragon pox vaccines are next week too, the week after that it’s Beatrice’s first birthday, then Halloween will be upon us. It’s just, it’s a full month.”

“You’ve seemed to have a bit on your mind too, these last few days. Are you alright?” Max asked, looking over his shoulder and down to Harry pressed against his back. “Is it our thunderer?”

“No, he’s fine as far as I can tell. I just…I wanted to talk about the trial, after I banned the papers from the house because I wanted to explain what had happened myself, in my own words, but I needed to work up to it, then all of this has happened and I still haven’t had a chance to explain.”

Max turned then and hugged him tight. “Nasta will be feeling better by the morning, if you wanted we could hand the kids over to their grandparents and have a morning where you can talk about everything you want to talk about and get it all out.”

Harry sighed and he nodded. “I know I need to explain, I wanted to do it last week, but I wanted to straighten out everything I wanted to say first. Then Nas got sick.”

“I’m fine.” Nasta groaned as he hobbled into the kitchen.

“What are you doing out of bed?!” Harry shrieked.

“I needed the toilet and then I wanted a drink.” Nasta explained. “I’m fine.”

“No, you’re not.” Max said sternly. “Here, headache reliever.” He thrust one of the newly stoppered vials at him.

Nasta took it gratefully and he knocked it back with barely a grimace. His headache must have been really bad for him to all but pounce on the potion.

“Has anything happened while I was in bed? How’s Eva?”
“She’s still constipated. I’m making her a laxative.” Max said as he went back to the three cauldrons, lining up more empty vials, these ones smaller than the ones he’d used for the headache relievers.

“Nothing else has happened, thankfully.” Harry said as he pushed Nasta back into a chair and got him a glass of water.

Nasta sipped the water, but as he couldn’t breathe through his blocked nose, he had to stop often to gasp in some air as he drank. Harry’s heart ached to see it as he stroked Nasta’s back lightly and encouraged him to drink some more.

“Do you want some soup?” Harry asked lightly.

Nasta grimaced, but he nodded. “I know I need to eat, but it’s the last thing in the world that I want to do.”

“I suppose it is when you’re so sick, but it does help though, I swear by homemade chicken soup.” Max said. “I made some up this morning.”

“I’m sorry I’m causing you so much work.” Nasta groaned.

“Think nothing of it, between you and Eva I’m getting in some much needed practice, you’re keeping me on my toes.”

Harry started heating up the soup, ignoring Max and his three cauldrons on the counter, with their little fires burning underneath. Apparently the cooker hob didn’t get hot enough for some potions. Max had explained that some potions even required being placed over certain wood, like cypress or hazel, so the kitchen hob was out of the question. Harry had pointed out that Max had a fully functioning potions lab downstairs, but he had insisted that he didn’t want to leave them up here on their own with a sick Nasta and a pained Eva, he wanted to be close at hand, so he was using the kitchen counter.

Harry laid out two bowls and two spoons, puttering around to get everything ready before Max held him still for a moment and Harry looked over his shoulder to see that he was ready to ladle out another one of his potions.

“Do you want bread, Nasta, or do you just want to have the soup?” He asked as he waited for Max.
“Just soup, Harry.” Nasta said thickly from the table.

Harry nodded and he watched the soup simmering, listening as Nasta sneezed and coughed behind him, groaning and struggling to breathe.

“You’ll feel better after Max’s magic soup.” Harry insisted. “It always makes me feel better.”

“The potions will help too. Take this one.” Max handed another of the newly dosed out vials to Nasta and he knocked that one back too with a visible, prolonged shudder this time as the fever reducer iced up his insides.

When the soup was bubbling, Harry turned off the heat and he doled out two bowls full of the chicken soup. He took Nasta’s over to him before he went back for his own. He sat next to Nasta and snuggled up to his side.

“I don’t want you to get sick too, Harry.” Nasta said, before turning away and sneezing.

“If I do, then I do. We sleep in the same bed, love. Just let us take care of you.” Harry said firmly.

“Harry’s right.” Blaise said, carrying in a red faced Eva. “We want to look after you, Nas. Hey, Max, is that laxative ready? She’s really straining now, she’s going to hurt herself…or pull a muscle.”

“Ten minutes, lover.” Max said, stirring both potions at once in opposite directions. He stopped stirring the one, but carried on with the other. “See if she wants something to drink.”

Blaise nodded and he sat Eva on his hip and got down a bottle from the cupboard, filled it with water and then brought it over to the table so that Harry could screw on the teat for him. He offered it to Eva, and she actually latched on and took a drink.

Harry finished his soup first and he turned to fuss over Nasta a little. His oldest mate thought he didn’t know that he liked to be fussed, especially when he was sick, but Harry knew and he enjoyed fussing his mates.
“Let’s get you back up to bed, love. Come on.” Harry chided, poking at Nasta. “You shouldn’t have even gotten up, I could have brought you your soup in bed. Now get your gorgeous bum up those stairs and into bed.”

“You’ve been told.” Blaise chuckled. “Go on, get.”

Nasta managed a tired smile, but Harry escorted him up to their bedroom and got Nasta tucked in with a glass of water on the bedside table.

“I don’t want to leave any of you to struggle.” Nasta said weakly.

“You’re not and we’re not struggling. Draco’s got the kids, he will only be alone with them until Max is finished with the potions and then they can both watch over them. Blaise has Eva and she’ll be fine in an hour, as soon as that laxative has worked and you know that I’m fine.”

“You’ve still got morning sickness.”

“Yeah, but you just watched me eat, it literally is morning sickness at the moment, just after I wake up. I’m fine throughout the day, I promise. Since all that stress has gone, I’ve been feeling much better. Hmm…I wonder if stress contributes to morning sickness or something or if it’s a coincidence. Either way I feel fine, Nasta. I’m worried for you, I’m worried for Eva, but I know that you’ll both pull through and that in a few days you’ll all be better.”

Nasta smiled and rested back against the pillows. “If you need anything…”

“Then I’ll call in the in-laws, not you.” Harry said sternly. “You will not move from this bed unless it’s to use that bathroom.” He said, pointing at the en suite. “You will not be disturbed, you will rest and you’ll get better because I love you and I can’t live without you. I need you.”

Nasta smiled then and he patted the bed next to him. Harry shuffled up and he laid down next to Nasta, stroking his sweaty hair from his forehead. The sweats would be stopping soon, with the fever reducer in his system. He would be feeling better by that evening, and completely healed in a few days.

“I love you so much, Harry. I will get better, it’ll just take a little while.”
“We know. Until then we’ll look after you and baby you a little.” Harry chuckled. “We don’t have much chance to look after you, you’re always the strongest, the most together of all of us, so when we get the chance to look after you, we’ll do it in spades. I’m sure Max will be up as soon as your last potion is done. He’s going to baby you too.”

Harry continued stoking Nasta’s hair, murmuring to him gently, mostly about nonsense, but after every blink, Nasta’s eyes stayed closed for just a little longer each time. It took only seven minutes for him to be snoring softly through his mouth, his nose still being blocked up.

Harry sighed and kissed Nasta’s cheek, tucking him in more firmly and making his way carefully off of the bed and then back down the stairs. Max was just stoppering the last of the potions when Harry entered the kitchen.

“How’s our baby?” Max asked him.

“He’s sleeping right now.” Harry answered with a smile. “He’s having trouble breathing though.”

“I’ll go and check on him in an hour. I’ll see if he needs a decongestant, I’ll brew that this evening if he does.”

“How’s Eva?”

Max laughed. “She’s just given Blaise the biggest, most explosive poo to deal with after taking that laxative. Poor Blaise was almost sick. He’s in the downstairs bathroom with her, trying to clean her off. Her nappy leaked, it went all over her legs, she needs another change of clothes.”

“I’m glad I missed that one!” Harry laughed. “I don’t think our thunderer would have let me get off scot-free from that.”

“How has he been since breakfast? Are you feeling better?”

“Much better.” Harry answered. “He’s actually been quiet today, it’s almost like he knows that his Daddy is sick and needs my attention.”
Max went to his knees and kissed Harry’s belly. Harry snorted a laugh. “Go and sit down. You’ve been brewing potions all day. I want some tea, do you want some?”

“Sure, let me just put these away safe.” Max said, turning back to the potion vials, putting them into his potion case and then tucking it away on the highest shelf while Harry filled the kettle and set it to boiling.

Max put a single vial up by the kettle, right at the back of the counter.

“That’s for Nas as soon as he’s awake.” Max explained.

“Alright, now go and support poor Draco. I’ll bring you both some tea.”

Max chuckled and swatted Harry’s arse and then strutted to the family room. Harry heard little baby screeches, calling out for their Daddy Max. It made him smile.

Blaise came back into the kitchen with a newly dressed Eva.

“Do you want a coffee, my big brave man, for dealing with such, in Max’s own words, an explosive poo?”

Blaise snorted. “I had no idea so much could come from such a tiny body. I need several coffees after that.”

“I’ve got it, go and settle in the room, Nasta’s fast asleep so he’ll be alright for an hour or so.”

Harry finished off the four cups, got them onto a tray, got a plate of biscuits and a pack of rusks, adding two extra for Eva and Ave, and he sorted out two bottles of water and five beakers of juice from the jug on the counter.

He carried it all into the family room and he smiled happily at the swarm of playing kids. He placed the tray down, handed out tea, and the lone coffee, and then handed out rusks to his babies along with the beakers of juice.

“Are you okay?” Draco asked him as Harry sat next to him with a groan.
“Yes, I just need a moment on my arse.” He chuckled. “A little tea break is just what the Healer ordered.”

“I’ll go up to see Nasta next.” Max insisted. “I’ll take the potion up and if he’s not awake, I’ll leave it on the bedside table. Whoever goes up next, if he’s awake, jam it down his throat for me.”

Harry rolled his eyes, even as Blaise snorted with laughter. He took a deep sip of his tea and he let out a breath happily. This was definitely what he’d needed, a sit down and some tea.

“Ma!” Leolin called out from his baby gym. He’d rolled over onto his belly and he was pushing up with his hands, looking up at him.

“Ooo, look at you, sweetie.” Harry said moving immediately to get to his knees in front of Leolin’s little baby gym. He hefted Leolin up by his underarms and he moved back to the settee…and his cup of tea.

He sat Leolin up on his lap, reclining only slightly, so that Leolin was supported, but he could also support himself up a little bit too, and thus make himself stronger little by little, without putting too much pressure on his body.

“I love it when he does that.” Blaise said, leaning over to stroke one of Leolin’s soft cheeks. “Sitting up I mean. He looks like a proper little baby sitting up.”

“I know what you mean.” Harry said. “It’s good to see him doing something, anything, other than lying on his back or in our arms.”

Blaise nodded his agreement and smiled at Leolin, who scowled back.

“I wish his little scowly face wasn’t his thinking face. I keep thinking that I’ve done something wrong.” Blaise laughed.

Harry smiled then and kissed Leolin’s head, waiting for his Faerie baby to catch up to the movement and peer up at him. Harry moved back just as Leolin grinned widely, showing off his lone little tooth.
“Now that grin is just adorable.” Max insisted. “At least he seems okay.”

Harry nodded worriedly. “He’s alright at the moment, but we don’t take any chances, okay? He’s not allowed in that bedroom and Nasta’s not allowed out. This time last year he and Calix were severely ill and it is almost the anniversary of him coming home from the hospital and I never want to go through that again.”

His three mates nodded seriously. Draco sat forward and cupped Leolin’s cheek and then his forehead and then his neck. He got a scowl for his efforts.

“He isn’t any warmer than usual.” Draco told them. “But one of us is to have eyes on him at all times until Nasta is better, no exceptions. We can’t take our eyes off of him because those fevers can hit him so quickly and as soon as that happens, he needs to go to the hospital. We can’t afford to miss those signs and let any illness take hold of his body.”

Harry nodded seriously and he held Leolin a little closer to his chest and he bent for another kiss, which got him another grin.

“We’ll look after you, baby.” He promised. “Your Daddy too, because he’s really not well either.”

“Da.” Leolin echoed. Those big gold eyes turned to the three men beside them, looked at each one of them and then seemed to look for a fourth.

Harry’s breath caught in his throat. “He...he’s looking for Nasta! He knows how many of us there are!”

“That’s amazing.” Max said with an excited grin on his face.

“I don’t think it’s counting, per se.” Draco said. “He looked us all in the eye. He knows the colours of our eyes and that’s how he identifies us. We all have different eye colours!”

Harry’s grin was so wide it hurt his mouth, but he didn’t care. “I can’t wait to tell everyone else! I wonder if he can recognise his brothers and sisters in the same way. Tegan and Regan might be a bit difficult, as they have the same hair and eye colour, the same with Eva and Ave, because they are actual identical twins, but I wonder if he could recognise the difference between Braiden and Farren, or Calix.”

“If he does tell us apart by our eye colour, what will that mean for Braiden and Blaise? Is it only the eye colour he notices? Or does he see height and age too?”

“I… I don’t know. I’ll have to ask Dain and Kailen.” Harry said. “They’re due a visit, they missed last week because of all that court business, that they are going to tell me about when I ask!” He said firmly. “If something is going on in the city, I want to know what it is.”

“And if they won’t tell you?”

“There’s always Eitri or Ezrah.” Harry said. “But I will find out what’s happening. I won’t have Leolin going there if there’s trouble.”

“You know that we agree with you wholeheartedly.” Draco insisted. “We don’t want him going there if there’s any danger to him either.”

Harry nodded and he cuddled with Leolin and used his free hand to pick up his tea.

“I’m going to go check on Nasta and then I’ll sort out the kid’s lunches. I’m thinking dippy eggs and toast soldiers, something nice and quick to get them down for their naps so we can concentrate on Nasta a little more. He needs the fussing.”

Harry nodded and looked at the kids happily playing on the floor, or climbing all over the settees in Calix’s case, and then to the clock. Nasta needed to be checked on and the kids did need their lunch soon. It was going to be a busy few days.

Harry had just finished drinking his tea when he heard Max clattering around in the kitchen cupboards.

“Where are the egg cups?” He demanded a few minutes of banging and rummaging later. “Who’s messed with my cupboards?”

Harry sighed and stood up, he handed Leolin over to Draco and he went to give Max a hand.
“No one has messed with the cupboards, Max. You moved them to a higher cupboard when Braiden got into the lower one and smashed two egg cups and cut his hand.”

Max ran a hand through his hair and then turned to the higher cupboard and to the collection of small little egg cups.

“I completely forgot about that. I’m sorry for shouting.”

“You’re stressed, Max. Just let me deal with this.”

“Absolutely not. I’m not going to go and do nothing, sitting on my fucking arse while my three month pregnant mate slaves over a hot stove.”

Harry rolled his eyes, but instead of arguing, he set to helping, laying out the little plastic plates and putting an egg cup on each one ready, using a sticking charm so the kids couldn’t move them, as Max set to toasting bread and soft boiling eggs.

“Shit, are you okay with eggs? I didn’t even ask.”

“We’ll find out soon enough.” Harry answered, eyeing the eggs bouncing in the saucepan of boiling water warily. He couldn’t smell them yet, but as soon as they were cracked open, that would change.

“I don’t deal well when Nasta’s ill.” Max moaned, coming to hug him from behind.

Harry patted those muscled arms and kissed a hand. “It’ll only be a few days, a week at most. We’re all alright, you’ve finished all the brewing now and Eva is going to, hopefully, be back to her normal self by tonight. I want Nasta to be better for Blaise’s birthday, but if he isn’t then we’ll deal with it.”

“All of us are getting sick now. You, Nasta, Eva…”

“I have morning sickness, it’s not the same, Eva was constipated, it’s not the same. Only Nasta is sick, Max, and he’s going to be fine.”
“Unless he passes his illness onto the rest of us.” Max mumbled, moving over to lightly butter the toast once it popped from the toaster and slicing each one into little strips.

“We’re all feeling fine, stop fretting, that’s my job.”

Max laughed then and shook his head. “I just…I know I couldn’t be the top dominant, I suppose that’s why I worry so much when it’s Nasta who’s sick.”

“He’s still a Dracken, he’s not going to die from the flu.” Harry said, watching as Max fished out the soft boiled eggs and sat each one into the little egg cup on the plates.

The two of them hit the eggs and removed half the shell and Harry breathed tentatively, but his stomach didn’t so much as waver. He was fine…though looking into the dippy eggs, he just knew that he wouldn’t be able to eat one. Thankfully though, none of them were for him as he took two plates and placed them in front of booster seats.

“Draco, Blaise? The kids’ lunch is up.”

Of course Farren came hurrying into the kitchen first, followed almost immediately by Braiden, who climbed his own chair and sat himself down, picking up his first strip of toast and plunging it straight into the runny yolk. It made Harry smile to see how far he’d come, even as he helped Farren into his own booster seat so that he could eat his lunch.

“How are you holding up?” Max asked, bringing over another two plates and setting them down while Blaise herded in Tegan, Calix and Regan.

“I’m alright. I couldn’t eat it myself, but the smell isn’t bothering me.”

Both he and Max laughed then, when Blaise had to grab Calix and lift him up to stop him from running down the corridor to the front door that Calix liked banging.

“Daddy, no.” Calix complained.
“You need to eat your lunch first.” Blaise said sternly, sitting Calix down on the last booster seat and strapping him in securely so he couldn’t escape.

Calix went to complain some more, but then he realised what was in front of him and he made a soft ‘Ooo’ noise and then dipped two fingers into his egg yolk before putting them in his mouth. Harry sighed. This would be a messy lunch.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry had been right about lunch being messy, by Calix’s hands in particular as he’d dug out his egg with his fingers and eaten his toast separately. By the end he’d been wearing more egg than he’d eaten and Max had spent more time cleaning up from lunch than he’d spent on cooking it.

Calix had gone straight into the bath as the wet wipes were just not effective enough to clean him up. It was almost a relief to drop him into his cot and let him and his brothers and sister go down for their naps. Not that any of them did easily or immediately, but Harry just left them all to it as he went to check in on Nasta.

His top dominant was fast asleep when Harry went to check on him and it made Harry smile. Nasta didn’t often get much rest, he was always up and doing something. It was strange to see him like this, but it was a good thing too. He needed his rest.

Harry checked on him, checked his temperature, which was coming down now with the aid of the potions, and he tucked him in before going back downstairs.

“Are you alright?” Draco asked him.

Harry nodded. “Fine. Nasta’s still asleep and those kids should be dropping off now, even if they do climb out and sleep on the floor with their teddies. The doors are shut, so they can’t get out onto the landing or into the master bedroom.”

“Here you go.” Blaise said, handing over a cup of tea.

“Thank you, Blaise.” Harry said sincerely, taking the tea and gulping.

“Perfect?” Blaise questioned with a smile.

“As always.”
Blaise sat on Harry’s other side and cuddled into him, as Harry rested against Draco. It was always peaceful at this time of day in the house, and it was the only time that they had to relax in such a hectic day. They all looked forward to it, even if Leolin, Eva and Ave were still awake.

After looking after eight babies, six of them hectic toddlers, who were all over the place and into everything, having just three of them awake, one of them who couldn’t even move around by himself yet, it was just blissful.

Eva and Ave were wriggling around the floor, playing with the toys that their older brothers and sister had left lying on the floor and Leolin was back in his little baby gym, this time he was staring at a brightly coloured butterfly. Leolin liked butterflies.

Everything was, sort of quiet. The only noises came from their twin girls, or the sparse conversation they were having between one another. Things were kept light and happy, as with Max’s birthday, they said nothing about Blaise’s in four days, they were going all out this year, because they hadn’t celebrated his nineteenth birthday last year. because this time last year Leolin and Calix had had bronchiolitis and Leolin had almost died from it. This year they were going to go all out and give him two birthdays in one to make up for the one that they hadn’t celebrated properly last year.

“We need more than two hours of this a day.” Draco sighed.

Harry hummed his agreement. “Get used to it, love. Very soon those kids won’t be having naps anymore and we’re getting a new baby in the New Year.”

“Just the one new baby.” Max said happily. “Our little thunderer.”

“Have you looked through any more of the baby name books?” Blaise asked.

Harry grinned at him. “I have and you know I won’t share any thoughts on the matter.”

“You’re a meanie, that’s why.” Max insisted.

That made Harry laugh, breaking the peaceful silence. “You’re terrible. You know I won’t know names until after our boy is actually born. Though at least knowing the gender now I can only look at boys and unisex names.”

“That’s narrowed it down to a couple hundred thousand.” Draco pointed out.
“Only a handful mean thunder or can be associated with thunder.”

“You named Farren after thunder.”

“So?” Harry asked. “He cried loud enough to rattle the windows in their frames. His name fits him. That doesn’t mean I can’t call the new baby thunder too. It’s not like they’re both going to be Farren’s, just their names will both mean thunder.”

“What if the baby is Max’s? Will you stop the Maddison naming tradition?” Blaise inquired.

“No.” Harry said firmly. “I’d call him Thor…or Zeus, or Taranis. Surely gods count in the Maddison naming tradition, doesn’t it?” He added looking to Max.

“Gods and goddess do technically count as rulers, so yes, they count. Though I’m not sure about having a son named Zeus.”

“I was using that as an example.” Harry smiled. “There are some nice names derived from the gods, like Seth from the Egyptian Set, or Indie from the Hindu Indra. It has to be better than the Roman Summanus, though I suppose that could be changed to Summer, though perhaps not for a boy.”

“You’ve been doing a lot of research, I see.” Draco told him.

Harry nodded. “A lot of it. Hermione’s been helping. We really need a computer, she can look up anything she wants in minutes! She looked up all the thunder gods for me and printed them off so I could read about them.”

“Anything that keeps you happy, love.” Max told him from his place on the floor. Ave was stood up in his arms, on her tippy toes, trying to see over his broad shoulder. Max had one hand on her back, to support her on her unsteady feet.

“I want to go look at new bassinet linens too.” Harry said. “Once Nasta is better I want to go shopping. I want some new bits for the baby, we can reuse some of the newer clothes, but he needs to have some of his own too.”
“We can go shopping.” Max nodded. “Do you want to renew the actual bassinet too, or just the linens and the mattress?”

“The actual bassinets are still sound.” Harry said. “We have a lot of bassinets thanks to the quintuplets. I’d be happier if we just replaced the mattress and the linens.”

His mates nodded and Harry settled back.

“I wonder if we can get any linens with lightning on them.” Max mused aloud.

Harry laughed again. “Oh, could we look, please? I’d love that.”

“Of course we can. Our little thunderer needs to sleep in style.”

That made Harry happy and he stood up. “Anyone want tea or coffee or a sandwich?”

“Can I have pumpkin juice instead, please?” Draco asked.

Harry nodded. “Max? Blaise?”

“Coffee for me, you should know better.” Blaise winked.

“I think I’ll have pumpkin juice with Draco.” Max said.

Harry nodded and he went to make up three bottles, a cup of tea for himself, coffee for Blaise and two pint glasses of cold pumpkin juice. He took the latter in while the kettle was boiling.

“Here you go. It won’t be a minute, Blaise.” He said, bending down and kissing Blaise’s mouth.
“I can wait as long as is needed for coffee, mio amore.” Blaise told him with a grin.

Harry snorted. “Of course you can. You can have a couple of days now of getting away with as much coffee as you want, what with Nasta being confined to the bed.”

“I’ll give him a bath later tonight.” Max said. “We can air out the room then before getting him back into bed.”

“I’ll go and check on him now.”

“You’ve already done so.” Draco insisted. “I’ll go now.”

Draco took another several gulps of pumpkin juice and then he stood and went up to check on Nasta.

“Make sure those kids have gone to sleep too!” Harry called out.

He went back into the kitchen to make tea and coffee, making up three bottles and he took those into the room next, letting them cool on the coffee table, then he went back to get the two mugs.

“Here you go, Blaise.”

“Grazie, Bello. Ti amo.”

“Ti amo, Blaise.” Harry said happily, kissing Blaise’s hair. It was coming back nicely now, but it would be some months still before it was back to its original length.

“Sit down, Harry. You need to rest.” Max told him.

Harry nodded and he sat next to Blaise again and drank his tea, enjoying the peace. Or he did until Draco came back with a squirming Calix.
“He wasn’t asleep.” Draco said. “As soon as he heard me on the landing he started knocking on the door and he came barrelling out when I went in to look on the others, you’d think that room was a prison by the way he was acting.”

Harry sighed. “Oh, sweetie, you are going to be grouchy in a few hours.”

Draco placed Calix down and he went straight to the pile of toys, clambering roughly over Eva.

“Callie, please be careful with your little sisters.” Harry said sternly.

Calix stopped, turned around and he hurried back to Eva. He hunched down and he gave her a rough kiss and Harry grimaced as he pulled her head around to kiss her properly. He sighed as Calix dropped her head and went back to the toys. Eva on the other hand looked a little stunned, as if she didn’t know what on earth had happened.

“How is our sleeping Prince?” Blaise asked.

“He’s alright. He was awake when I went in. I helped him to the bathroom, helped him to blow his nose, got him to drink half a glass of water and then I tucked him back in. He was asleep again before I’d finished smoothening the blankets over him.”

Harry smiled, happy that Nasta was resting, and that he was still taking in fluids. It was going to be very difficult now with him being very sick, but they’d manage, even if they had to leave him in bed, where he was going to recover more, then that was what they would do, with no arguments from the poorly Nasta.

The most challenging would be Blaise’s birthday, as Nasta would insist on being there, but in four days he should be much better with the potions he was taking. It might take him a couple more days afterwards for him to start feeling more like normal, but he should be able to celebrate with them a little. Harry hoped that he was feeling better by then, he wanted Blaise’s birthday to be perfect. Not that he thought that Nasta being sick would spoil Blaise’s birthday, of course not, but he knew that it would spoil it for Nasta himself to try and keep up with the rest of them while he was so sick.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X
A/N: The court business is finally over and we have the verdict, as if anyone didn’t already know that those tossers were going to be found guilty, but Harry is finally free of the Dursleys and his past, now we can move on. He still has to tell his mates, including showing them those photos of his past injuries, but that will come after Blaise’s birthday now, once Nasta is better, because bless him, I had to throw in some sick Nasta, it’s too cute.

Speaking of illnesses though, Jethro lost his battle against his illness and his medication started failing, he was on the highest dosage of furosemide that he could take, and it still wasn’t enough. Another heart attack was only inevitable and I made the decision to take the pain and fear away from him. Jethro was euthanised on the 4th of October, almost two weeks ago, and it’s only now, in the last few days, that I’ve started coming back to normal myself. He was cremated privately and I now have his ashes in a beautiful urn in the shape of a sleeping cat. I am always going to remember him, but it’s going to take a long while before I can even think of opening up my heart to anyone else. I shouldn’t have had to say goodbye so soon to my boy who was only just six years old, but at least now he’s resting in peace and I have a memorial to him, along with all of my very fond memories.

Massive thank you to all of you who gave me kind words and support throughout the mere eight weeks of Jethro’s illness, particularly those of you on Facebook who were supporting me daily, I can never thank you enough for helping me through my stress and the grief that has followed, but I hope that now I’m back to updating, that the new chapters will help to show how thankful I am. Thank you, lovelies.

This is all for now, lovelies, I hope that you’ve all enjoyed reading this new chapter and I’m hoping to get more chapters out before the end of the year. There are also more Dracken Universe fics to come, so watch out for those and I’ll see you all again soon,
Harry smiled, happy that Nasta was resting, and that he was still taking in fluids. It was going to be very difficult now with him being very sick, but they’d manage, even if they had to leave him in bed, where he was going to recover more, then that was what they would do, with no arguments from the poorly Nasta.

The most challenging would be Blaise’s birthday, as Nasta would insist on being there, but in four days he should be much better with the potions he was taking. It might take him a couple more days afterwards for him to start feeling more like normal, but he should be able to celebrate with them a little. Harry hoped that he was feeling better by then, he wanted Blaise’s birthday to be perfect. Not that he thought that Nasta being sick would spoil Blaise’s birthday, of course not, but he knew that it would spoil it for Nasta himself to try and keep up with the rest of them while he was so sick.
of his idea. So he’d gone job hunting just in case, to tide him over until the goblins gave him approval, or the news of rejection, of which he was now more certain they were leaning towards because of how long it was taking them to decide.

Blaise had been gone for just fifteen minutes before the floo call from an orderly came through, asking him if he was going to bother with his appointment today, which he was already half an hour late for.

After a desperate, cursory call around the family and not getting any answer, a furious argument with Draco about why he was going alone, because the appointment was important and the kids couldn’t stay home alone with a sick, sleeping Nasta, he had flooed to the hospital by himself, catching himself on a knee, which was now sore and aching.

He didn’t like being here alone any more than Draco did, but what other choice did he have? This was to make sure that their baby thunderer was as well as he could be, especially now that the stress had been taken from him. Of course they could have re-booked the appointment, but it could be another week or two away and Harry couldn’t have that. He needed to know that his unborn son was doing better now that his main causes of stress, mainly the court case and the agony of waiting for the verdict, had been removed.

He still couldn’t believe that he’d forgotten about the appointment, but with Nasta being sick, Blaise’s birthday coming up tomorrow and Eva getting constipated, he’d had a lot on his mind recently. He hadn’t checked their schedule cork board in about a week, and it didn’t look like any of his mates had either, or one of them would have seen the Healer appointment card for his fourteen week scan.

“Harry Potter?” An orderly in her pale yellow robes called out.

People started hissing and talking to one another when his name was called out, and despite being in a hospital waiting room, many of them with newborn babies waiting for routine check-ups, they craned their heads to look at him, younger children squealed and asked to go and touch him, much like a ten year old Ginny had when she’d found out that he was on the Hogwarts Express.

He stood and he walked quickly to the orderly, who gave a stern look to those people in the waiting room, and then turned to escort him to Healer Almus’ rooms herself, just in case anything happened to him on the way. Harry was grateful to her for her staunch professionalism.

Harry had forgotten how much of a deterrent his mates were. People still gossiped and talked, they still craned their heads to get a good look at him, but none of them would dare approach him with four big, muscled men surrounding him and he could forget about the people around him, safe and secure in the knowledge that they couldn’t approach him or hurt him with his mates there. He sighed, today was going to be a doozy, he could already feel it.

“Harry, there you are. No fellas with you today?” Healer Almus asked him worriedly as he entered the room alone and shut the door behind him. “Has anything happened? Is that why you’re late?”

“No. No, nothing like that!” Harry insisted quickly. “A lot of little things have happened, that’s all.
Eva was constipated for a few days and had to have a laxative, Nasta’s got the flu, Blaise’s birthday is tomorrow, we just forgot all about the appointment. It was only me and Draco at home, well, Nasta’s there too but he’s in no state to help, so I’ve had to come on my own today.”

Healer Almus sighed and shook his head. “Climb up then, Harry. Let’s see how baby boy is doing.”

Harry sat on the examination bed and he removed his jumper before lying back and letting Healer Almus check him over.

“How have you been, Harry?” He asked seriously.

“Wonderful since the end of the court case, but with Nasta being sick and Eva having her problems, well, I could still be better.” He insisted.

Healer Almus nodded as he continued checking him over.

“How is the morning sickness?”

“It’s trailed off now. I get queasy in the mornings, when I just wake up, but it’s rare now that I am actually sick, so I’ve been doing much better. Usually a cup of ginger tea, some ginger newts for breakfast and in an hour I’m fine.”

“Wonderful, so you’ve been eating better?”

Harry nodded. “Yes, I’ve been eating more and it hasn’t bothered me.”

“Right then, let’s check on baby.” Healer Almus said, laying his wand flat over Harry’s belly.

Harry was once again smitten with the image of his unborn son and he kept his eyes glued to the shifting, moving baby. He still couldn’t feel anything.

“Well, he’s still very happy where he is, he’s grown well and he’s not showing any signs of distress, so that’s a very good sign.” Healer Almus told him. “Let’s check his heart rate.”
This was what Harry was most worried about as a Doppler was pressed carefully into his skin and then the whoooshing sound of rushing blood filled the room.

“Well, I’m very pleased to say that his heart rate has come down, Harry. Not by much, he’s at one hundred and sixty-six beats a minute, which is still high, but I’m pleased that it’s coming down.”

“Will it come down further now?”

“I want to see you in another two weeks, for your sixteen week scan, so we can check to make sure it is coming down with the removal of your stress. Don’t forget about this one.” Healer Almus teased.

“I am sorry, we have had a lot on and Nasta would have definitely remembered if he’d been in his right mind.”

“Is he going to be alright?”

Harry nodded. “He’ll be fine. He gets the flu once a year, and it’s always in or near October. It’s the cold, wet season for the reserve and because the dragons are breeding and have hatchlings, the keepers have to go out and check on them all. Nasta gets soaked to the bone every single day, so he always gets sick and if it’s not the flu, it’s a chest infection, if it’s not that then he has a raging fever, he just always gets sick around this time of year. Max has him well in hand though.”

Healer Almus nodded and helped Harry get back into his shirt.

“Here are some photos for you and the date and time for your next appointment, Harry.”

“Thank you.” Harry said softly, sliding carefully from the examination bed and making sure everything was where it should be.

“I’ll see you in two weeks.”
Harry smiled and said his goodbyes. He made his way carefully back through the hospital and he hurried through the waiting room to the floo banks. No one was waiting to pounce on him and he was able to make a very quick escape. He flooed home and he caught himself on the fire guard and he breathed happier. He stepped over the fire guard slowly and carefully and he went to find Draco in the larger family room, going the long way around so that he could pin the new appointment to the cork board as he went into the kitchen, glaring at the little card for their missed appointment as he pulled it off and binned it.

“Draco, I’m home.” He called out before he entered the family room. “Nasta! You should be in bed!” He chastised as he saw his oldest mate sat with Draco.

“I feel fine, Harry. Draco told me about the forgotten appointment.”

Harry sighed, but he sat down and he smiled. “We fall apart without you, Nas. We need you fit and healthy. I have another appointment in two weeks. But our thunderer is doing well. He’s grown a bit and his heart rate has come down, just not by a lot. I’ve got some more photos.”

Harry handed them over and watched as Nasta and Draco flipped through them.

“So, everything’s looking good?” Draco asked.

Harry nodded. “Yes. His heart rate is falling, we’ll see if this continues now at my sixteen week scan.”

“I’m feeling better today.” Nasta said. “I think the worst is over and I’ll be completely fine in a few days. How has Leolin been? Any sign of illness?”

“No, we’ve been keeping a very close eye on him, but he’s been fine. He’s actually been sitting up a lot more and we’ve realised that he recognises us from the colour of our eyes.”

“Really? How do you know?” Nasta asked excitedly.

“He was looking for you the other day.” Harry said. “He looked at Draco, Blaise and Max, then he looked for you. There’s no way he could have been counting and Draco said that he knew the colour of our eyes, that he was looking at the colour of our eyes as we all have different colours.”
“He does stare at our eyes more than any other part of the body.” Nasta agreed. “Perhaps he was committing the colour to memory and he now recognises us through that colour.”

“We don’t know what that means for those with the same colour eyes though.” Harry sighed, frowning a little in worry. “Braiden for example, has the same colour eyes as Blaise, and Tegan and Regan look very similar and their eyes are the same green-hazel-gold that yours are. I don’t know if, when the time comes, that he won’t confuse them all together because of the colour of the eyes.”

“We’ll ask Dain and Kailen, if they ever decide to come and visit.” Nasta added with a small sneer.

“If not, we could always invite Ezrah over, or Eitri. They don’t have children themselves, not yet, but they might know.”

Nasta nodded, looking more at ease with that idea and he settled back, closing his eyes.

“You need to be in bed. You won’t get better if you push yourself.” Harry chastised.

“Now that you’re back safe I think I will.” Nasta sighed heavily.

“Come on.” Harry insisted, standing up. “Draco, I want tea when I come back.”

“Yes, Sir.” Draco rolled his eyes.

“Sarcasm doesn’t become you.” Harry said, giving Draco a poke before giving his attention back to Nasta. “Do you have enough water upstairs, Nas, or do you need some more?”

“Another one.” Nasta mumbled, looking like he was going to fall asleep on his feet.

Harry went to get another glass and he filled it before he turned to help Nasta up the stairs and back into bed.
“I hate being sick.” Nasta moaned.

“I know, love. But if you don’t stop pushing yourself, it’ll only take longer to get better.” Harry said, shimmying Nasta into bed and setting his new glass of water on the bedside table for him. “Now, everything is fine, I’m home safe, you just concentrate on you and get better soon. We love you, but you need to stay in bed.”

Nasta nodded and he sighed again, snuggling down and allowing Harry to tuck him in and give his forehead a quick kiss.

“I get bored staying in bed so much.” Nasta complained.

“I know you do. So did me and Blaise when we were on bed rest, none of us like it, we’re active young men, but we need to endure it to get better.” Harry lectured. “It’s not going to be forever.”

“I know. I want to be better by tomorrow, though.”

“I know that you do, and you don’t know, maybe you will be. Maybe you’ll wake up tomorrow and feel much better and stronger, but if you’re not, we’ll pander everything around you.”

“Everything should be pandered around Blaise!” Nasta said furiously.

“Oh, it will be, but I will work it in such a way that it’ll include the both of you.” Harry said sternly. “I won’t have you left out and I won’t have Blaise’s birthday ruined. I will find a way to make this work, Nasta. You’ll see.”

Nasta smiled then. “You’re so determined, I can’t help but believe you. I love you, Harry.”

“I love you too, now quit talking, lie down and get some more sleep. I’ll come and check on you in an hour with another headache reliever.”

Nasta chuckled, but he did lie down more comfortably, and Harry smiled. He kissed Nasta again and he slipped from the bed and he closed the door behind him as he left the room.
He went next door to check on his napping babies and he tucked them in too, making sure comfort teddies were close at hand, or in the case of Tegan’s penguin, actually in her cot, as it had slipped through the bars at some point during her nap. All of them were sleeping soundly today, even Farren and Calix. He left the nursery, went back down the stairs, and into the family room with Draco and their youngest girls. His tea was waiting for him on the coffee table, perfectly made and at a drinkable temperature and it made him smile. Everything was going to work out just fine, he’d make it so.

Max had been furious for forgetting the appointment, despite coming home exhausted and looking a mess, covered in all sorts. Blaise had been furious about it too, as he hadn’t actually needed to go out and he could have accompanied Harry instead, but they had calmed down when Harry had explained that he was fine and hadn’t had any problems in the hospital and told them what Healer Almus had said, and shown them the new photos of their little thunderer. The both of them swore not to forget the next appointment, in fact it looked as though Max had actually memorised it as Harry had caught him staring at the little card, murmuring soundlessly to himself.

Blaise’s birthday dawned the next morning with both Harry and Max getting up early and while Max sorted out breakfast in bed for the five of them, Harry sorted out a fussing Leolin, who wanted his morning bottle an hour earlier than he usually did.

“The kids will be alright in their nursery for a bit while we have breakfast, I know we normally feed them first, but this is a special occasion.” Max chatted to Harry as Harry himself fed Leolin, who was eating much quicker.

“Max, look at this.” Harry said distractedly as he watched Leolin. “Is it just me and some wishful thinking or is he hungrier than normal?”

Max popped up over his shoulder and he watched as Leolin barely stopped to swallow before he suckled in more milk, his eyes closed and his hands resting on his own belly as usual.

“It’s not just you, he is really going for it.” Max said. “I’ll make up a half bottle, just in case he wants some more. Maybe he had a growth spurt overnight.”

“I’ll weigh him after he’s finished eating.” Harry said, excited at the prospect of Leolin having any sort of growth spurt.

He watched in utter amazement as Leolin drank down all of his milk, and then latched onto the second bottle that was offered to him. It was the most he’d ever eaten in one go before.

“Is he going for it?” Max asked, flipping pancakes.

“He really is, I think he might get close to finishing this bottle too.” Harry said excitedly.

“I can’t even believe it, he must have had a growth spurt. Does he look any bigger or feel any heavier?”

“No, not really, but then I’m used to hefting around Farren and Braiden. He’s still our lightest baby, even smaller than the girls. So I won’t know until I get him on those scales.”

“I set them up on the table for you.” Max told him. “I can’t wait to see if he’s gained anything.”

Harry smiled and watched as Leolin continued eating. He’d slowed down now, suckling more normally, but that he was still eating was a huge achievement for him.

When Leolin actually finished drinking, he’d only left a small amount in the bottle and Harry hefted him onto his shoulder with a burp cloth and he winded Leolin, being very careful of his tiny wings.

“There we go, baby.” Harry said once all of Leolin’s wind was up. He laid Leolin in the bowl like dish on the scales and he watched as it displayed eighteen pounds and four ounces. Harry squealed happily. “He’s put on a whole pound, Max!”

“A full pound overnight? Let me see!” Max said excitedly, as he hurried over to look at the scale display. “Well done, Leolin! How tall is he now? Is he still twenty-five and a half inches?”

Harry took out a soft tape measure and he did it by hand, lying Leolin on the table and measuring him.

“No, he’s gained half an inch, he’s twenty-six inches! He really did have a growth spurt, Max!”

“No wonder he wanted more milk, half an inch and a whole pound! He needs the extra milk, he’ll be on the big bottles now.”
Harry was so excited, he wanted to thrust Leolin at his three sleeping mates upstairs and shout the news in their faces, but even he wasn’t that cruel. He was grinning and he couldn’t put Leolin down as he cradled his boy in his arms.

“Ma.” Leolin called out.

Harry looked at him, but his Faerie baby was reaching out to the counter. To the Harry doll.

“I hate that thing.” He said, even as he picked it up and gave it to Leolin, who tucked it into his neck and curled up around it.

“Leolin loves it.” Max said. “He wants to keep his Mummy close.”

Harry rolled his eyes, but he smiled. Leolin, exhausted from early start and his little feast, drifted back off in his arms.

“He must still be growing.” Harry said in amazement. “I’ll keep an ear out for him now, in the next few days. He might want to eat more often.”

Max nodded as he finished stacking the fluffy pancakes onto a plate.

“Come on you, back upstairs, we have a birthday boy to surprise.” Max told him. “We can drop Leolin off in his nursery on the way.”

Harry nodded and he went up first, dropping Leolin off in his own separate nursery, just so that he wouldn’t be disturbed by his more active older siblings, nor put in any danger if they caught something and potentially passed it on to him.

Max had waited for him out in the hallway as Harry laid Leolin down in his cot and covered him over. Harry rejoined Max and together they went into their master bedroom.

Draco was just stirring as they came in and Nasta was sat up, awake and sipping on a glass of water. He put the glass back on the bedside table and he smiled at them as they entered.
“How are you feeling?” Max asked him.

“Better.” Nasta said. “I’m not quite up for wrestling dragons again, but I can actually breathe today.”

Harry smiled, as Nasta didn’t sound as snuffy today as he had in past days. Harry clambered onto the bed, straddled his mate’s lap and he kissed Nasta.

Draco groaned as he got a knee to his thigh. “Harry! What are you doing?”

“Waking you all up! We have Leolin news!”

That had even Blaise turning over to look at him, all of them suddenly awake and more alert.

“Is he okay?” Draco asked.

“He got sick?” Blaise slurred sleepily.

“He wouldn’t be here wasting words if Leolin was sick.” Nasta calmed them, showing why he was their top dominant, and why they’d missed him so much when he was ill.

“He’s had a growth spurt!” Harry said excitedly. “He woke up earlier than normal and he drank all of his bottle and almost half of a second bottle too! He’s half an inch bigger and a whole pound heavier!”

“Really?” Draco asked him, sounding just as excited.

Harry nodded. “He dropped right off back to sleep, so it looks like he has some more growing to do too. I’m so happy.”

“I can’t wait to see him.” Blaise said, rolling onto his back and stretching. He clocked Max at the end of the bed and the tray in his hands. “Is that breakfast?”
Max grinned and he settled the tray at the end of the bed. He handed Draco and Blaise a plate of pancakes and then he handed one to Harry, then to Nasta. He sat on the end of the bed and he ate his own pancakes, but Harry, sat in the middle of the bed, was happy to eat and look at all four of his mates.

“Happy birthday, Blaise! How does it feel to not be a teenager anymore?” Max asked him.

“Wonderful.” Blaise said with a smile. “I might actually be able to get a job now if my potential employers don’t see that I’m a teenager, though I’m still waiting for the goblins to decide on that business proposal that I gave them. I knew it wouldn’t be easy getting money from them, but truly, how long do they need to decide?”

“Floo call them.” Draco said firmly. “Remind them that they owe you an answer, even if it is a notice of rejection.”

“It’ll definitely be a rejection if I hound after them.” Blaise fretted.

“You’re not a teenager any more, Blaise. Take these matters into your own hands instead of looking for an interim job while they yank you about over the decision.”

“You mean Blaise isn’t twenty-teen?” Harry asked with a grin, trying to steer the conversation away from the argument it was heading for.

His mates all laughed, but Blaise reached out and patted his cheek.

“No, you’re adorable though.” Blaise told him. “You’ll be twenty-teen, like Max is thirty-threeteen.”

Harry laughed and grinned up and Max, who grinned back. “That I am! It’s what you get when your mental age doesn’t match up with your physical age.”

“I wouldn’t mind staying a teen for a while longer.” Harry grinned. “It makes me feel old otherwise.”

“Can you believe that it’s almost been three years for us, Harry?” Blaise asked.
“No, it doesn’t seem so long, but then I’ve had so much fun with you all that the time is flying by.”
Harry smiled. “The kids are all growing and can you believe that our baby is twenty-six months old?”

“I still can’t believe it.” Blaise said, looking at him with a loving look. “Our first born, our only child all together, and he’s now sleeping through the night and using the potty more than he is his nappy.
Where was the little, shrivelled newborn that you presented to me?”

“It was over two years ago.” Harry said wistfully and shook his head.

“And very soon another little new one will arrive.” Draco said, bending forward to touch the bump.

Harry smiled and covered Draco’s hand with his own. “Our new little boy. Our thunderer, who has actually been really good today.” Harry said brightly.

“Let’s hope he carries on being good.” Max said as he took Harry’s empty plate and put it back on the tray.

“He’s being good, but he’s hungry.” Harry said with a smile.

“You’re still hungry?” Max asked.

“No, he is.” Harry said with a wink and a grin as he shifted over to Blaise and pulled the duvet from him. “I think he needs some fluids, if you catch my drift.”

“Oh. Oh!” Max laughed then and swatted his bum. “I get you, well by all means, take what you need, lover. Let me get rid of these.”

Harry, who was busy pulling down Blaise’s pyjama bottoms, heard Max shift the tray of empty plates to the floor and out of the way. He smiled up at his first mate.

“Do you want to feed me, birthday boy?” He asked in a low purr.
Blaise’s eyes widened and the pupil’s dilated. He smirked in a very smug, self-satisfied way and he crossed his arms behind his head and watched Harry.

“Carry on, Bello.” He said, his voice much deeper now. “If you need to feed, you can just take without asking, it would be my pleasure to feed you.”

Harry smiled and he ducked his head down to tease at the tip of Blaise, who was hot and hard in his hand. He was aware of the gazes of all of his mates upon him, but he didn’t care. Then he had an idea and he decided to give all of his mates a show as he shimmied out of his own pyjama bottoms and pulled out his own cock, stroking it as he sucked on Blaise. He heard the moans and curses of his mates as he continued sucking on and teasing Blaise, who wasn’t looking quite as cool and relaxed as he had at the beginning.

Harry teased Blaise, and he teased himself, but it didn’t take long before Max snapped and laid down, forcing himself under him and he pulled Harry to straddle his face. Max swallowed Harry down right to the base and Harry popped off of Blaise with a gasp.

“Max! It’s my birthday, stop distracting him.” Blaise whined, moving his hands to Harry’s head and gripping his hair tight, trying to tug him back down onto him.

“Don’t stop!” Harry demanded of Max, to counter any ideas that Max might have had about moving off of him from Blaise’s words.

Max didn’t stop or break his bobbing rhythm and Harry whined happily as a pleasant twist of pleasure spiked through his balls and to his gut. He got used to the feeling and soon he was able to go back down on Blaise, who moaned happily, threading his fingers through Harry’s messy hair to hold him in place, just in case he decided to pop back off of him again.

They moved together to bring pleasure to themselves and to each other, Blaise bucking his hips, pushing his cock into Harry’s mouth and Harry rocked down into Max’s mouth, who would suck strongly on him and swallow. Harry didn’t know where Nasta or Draco were, or what they were doing, but he didn’t much care as he focused everything on sucking Blaise, trying to control himself as Max worked his magic on him. Blaise did orgasm first, but Harry followed almost immediately after with a muffled cry that sent another shockwave of pleasure down Blaise’s spine.

Harry collapsed onto Blaise’s heaving chest and he panted, trying to catch his breath. Max moved from under him and he turned to cuddle up to the both of them, throwing one heavy arm over Harry’s back.

“You’ve got a little something right…” Blaise said, leaning forward and licking a dribble of cum from Max’s lip. “…there.” He finished happily.
Harry chuckled tiredly. He turned his heavy head to look for Nasta and Draco. He was unsurprised to see them fucking, though he was slightly surprised that Nasta was bottoming. But then he had been sick recently and he wouldn’t have much energy, certainly not enough to do his usual hip rolling. So maybe it wasn’t so unusual or surprising that he’d chosen to lie back and let Draco do most of the work.

Harry watched them happily, lazily, stroking Blaise’s hair slowly as Max’s hand gently patted his belly. He was feeling very relaxed and mellow, very sated just from a mutual blow job. He was happily watching as Draco pushed himself to a new level and with a grunt, his hips stuttered and he stayed pressed into Nasta, who sighed happily as he spilled in his own hand.

Harry crawled over and he cleaned up Nasta, sucking on every finger. His mates all groaned and Harry smiled and sat up.

“Baby needed some more fluid.” He said with a wink and a rather naughty chuckle.

Harry laughed fully then and he stood up, going to their massive walk in wardrobe, he opened ‘his’ dresser and pulled out some clean boxers and socks and a clean tee-shirt. He was feeling reinvigorated and he felt like he had energy to spare as he dressed in his underwear and then he took down a hanger with clean jeans on them and he dressed in those too.

“Come on, lovers.” Harry chided, clapping his hands. “Our children need us.”

He opened the nursery door and he had to smile as several little faces turned to look at him. The only one still in a cot was Regan, who was stood up and clutching his comfort teddy.

“Good morning, babies!” He called out cheerfully.

Calix came rushing into their master bedroom and he immediately toddled to the large bed. He immediately tried to heft himself up by winding his hands in their duvet and tugging on it, trying to climb it, though he didn’t get very far and he soon called out for assistance. With a laugh, Max reached over and gave Calix a hand up. He immediately started wriggling and climbing all over his Daddies.

“Bo da, Mummy!” Came the predictable greeting from Braiden.

“Bo jor!”

“Bonjour, Braiden. Good morning.”

“Ciao!”

“Ciao, Braiden. Good morning.” Harry repeated dutifully.

“Ciao!” Calix said happily from the bed. “Morning!”

That had his mates excitébly sitting up and lavishing him with praise. Harry chuckled. “It seems that Italian is the easiest and the most memorable for them.”

“Ciao!” Tegan shouted from next door and Harry laughed.

“I think the morning greetings are going to start taking ten minutes.” He said with a smile.

“Out!” Regan cried from his cot, holding up both arms to him, his teddy dangling from one hand. “Mummy, out please.”

Harry about melted as he went to sweep up his son, kissing him and praising him for correctly using ‘please’ in a sentence. They really were growing and learning every single day.

“I suppose it’s time to get up.” Max sighed. “These little toe rags won’t wait for their breakfasts forever.”

“Give them some fruit and yoghurt and give them a bigger lunch.” Harry insisted. “In fact, I’ll do that now while you lot get dressed. I can handle that.”

“Stop taking my job from me.” Max whined.
“You’ve already cooked breakfast this morning. Besides, it’s only fruit and yoghurt, calm your shit.” Harry winked.

“Watch your mouth in front of the kids.” Draco chastised.

“After what was just done to my mouth, my language is the least of our worries.” Harry laughed. “Come on babies.” He called out a little more loudly. “It’s time for breakfast. Come on Farren, Braiden, Tegan.”

He got the kids all following him out onto the landing and then he got them waiting on the top of the landing by the baby gate. He got himself on the other side carrying Calix and Tegan and he dropped them off at the bottom of the stairs and he went back for Regan while Braiden and Farren slipped down on their bums as he watched them like a hawk, but he was content to allow them another small little taste of independence and coming down the stairs, sort of on their own, was enough for now.

Harry got them to the kitchen and he pulled out their plastic bowls before turning back to help the kids into their booster seats. He got them beakers of apple juice to tide them over before he pulled out the kilo bucket of natural yoghurt that Max bought for the kids and he dolloped a few spoonfuls into each bowl. He washed blueberries and raspberries and added them to the bowls, then sliced in strawberries, a bit of banana and some grapes before handing them over to the kids with a spoon, though he already knew that he’d be wiping most of it up off the floor.

He ate his own fruit and yoghurt standing at the counter, so nothing from his babies’ bowls ended up in his own. It took fifteen minutes before the first of his mates made it down to the kitchen and it was Draco who came in first.

“Do you want tea?” The blond asked him, moving straight to the kettle.

Harry nodded. “Yes please.”

“Eating again?” Draco teased.

Harry shrugged, chewing another mouthful of yoghurt and fruit. “I guess I got hungry again after our bed activities.” He laughed. “Our thunderer needs his daily fruit quota.”

“You don’t know how much I enjoy hearing you say that.” Nasta said as he came into the kitchen. He was dressed in actual clothes for the first time in several days and he looked much better, healthier. Harry was so very, very glad that he was finally feeling better, that he was getting healthier.

“I could hazard a good guess.” Harry grinned.

Nasta came and kissed him.

“Is everything still on for later?” Harry asked quietly. “Do you have the tickets safe?”

“Yes, Caru.” Nasta said. “Everything is prepared, though I’m not sure Draco will enjoy himself.” He said with a smile at Draco’s back.

“Oh, I’m sure he will…once he adapts.” Harry laughed.

Nasta gave him an evil smirk and then moved over to grab his mug of morning green tea. Harry watched him, just happy to have him back on his feet and in relatively good health once again. None of them liked seeing the others sick, but when it was Nasta, their family just sort of fell apart, as they’d proved by forgetting his baby scan appointment.

Harry finished his second breakfast and he went around helping his babies to scoop out the last of their breakfasts, casting a glance every now and then at Max, who had brought down the twin girls and was currently feeding one of them…he hadn’t bothered to get fully dressed yet, he was still shirtless, and he cut a glorious figure bottle feeding a bottle to a tiny little girl who was tucked into his one muscled arm. Harry was getting aroused again.

“You look flushed and glassy eyed, did Nasta pass his sickness to you?” Blaise asked worriedly, breaking Harry’s dazed staring by placing a hand on his forehead.

“Oh, I’m fine. It’s not there that you want to touch, lover.” Harry smiled with a wink and he took Blaise’s hand, and in view of his other staring, worried mates, he placed it over his crotch.

Max laughed, Draco rolled his eyes and turned back to finishing the morning tea, and a coffee for Blaise, but Blaise himself gave Harry a sly grope and a squeeze and Harry gasped, before he turned and followed him like a sex starved sheep.

“No, Bello.” Blaise said with a grin. “We’re up for the day now, you know we don’t slip off for sex when we’re up for the day.”
“Harry’s certainly up for the day.” Max quipped with a grin.

“It’s your fault that I am!” Harry pouted.

“Me? What did I do?” Max demanded.

“You know what you did!” Harry huffed.

“Max, stop teasing Harry.” Nasta tried to be stern, but his lips twitched and they could all hear the laughter in his tone.

“I haven’t done anything!” Max insisted.

“Yes you have!” Harry said back. “Standing there half naked, one of my baby girls in your muscled arms looking like a parenting magazine’s wet dream. You know how I get when I’m pregnant!”

Max seemed to realise then how he looked and he grinned. He flexed a little more, making his arms bulge. Harry groaned and took his honey tea into the family room, removing himself from the tantalising view of temptation.

It didn’t take long before he heard little feet slapping on the kitchen floor and then a horde of barefooted babies came in.

“Can someone get clothes for the kids, please?” He asked as he watched them all hurry to their toy box in their pyjamas.

“Draco’s already gone to sort their clothes.” Nasta called back.

“You come in here and sit down. You need to rest!” Harry nagged.

He heard his mates chuckling and he rolled his eyes.

He was excited for later, it was going to be a new adventure for all of them tonight, as despite their Muggle experiences, neither Max nor Nasta had ever been to a cinema before, neither had he, but Hermione had once told him and Ron of a trip to the cinema she had taken during the summer. Harry had told Nasta what Hermione had told them, that it was like watching a movie on a massive screen, but he had omitted the other things that Hermione had told him, that it was loud, dark and overwhelming. Hermione had enjoyed it, but she had said that it was a little overbearing and took some time to get used to in the beginning. Harry was excited and he was looking forward to it.

He was actually finding it difficult to keep his mouth shut. Only Nasta knew what he’d had planned, the others had been told that it was all in hand. Blaise hadn’t been told anything. But he was so excited and he was looking forward to going to the cinema for the first time.

Nasta did do as Harry had asked though, and he came into the family room after a few minutes to keep him company. They sat with their morning tea and just watched their children destroy the clean, tidy room. Harry didn’t care, he didn’t fret the mess, he was no Petunia Dursley.

“Are you both alright?” Max asked, walking in with both girls in his arms. He set them immediately on the floor, into the chaos of their older siblings.

“Do you have the baby monitor?” Harry asked quickly.

Max reached behind him and he unclipped the monitor from the back of his jeans and he placed it on the coffee table. “Got it.” He said with a smile. “I just couldn’t carry it with the girls, so I had to clip it somewhere where their little feet wouldn’t kick it. In the kitchen you can just about hear him snuffling now and then as he sleeps, he’s not awake yet.”

That automatically made Harry smile.

“Do any of them need a nappy change?” Max asked, pulling the nappy bag from under the side table and sliding the foam changing mat from under the settee.

“Looking at them, I’d say Calix, definitely.” Harry said.

Max shuffled forward on his knees and he caught Calix and hefted him over to his little work station and he started the process of stripping off pyjamas and changing nappies, leaving all of the kids bare until Draco came back down with their clothes for the day.

“What do you have planned for my birthday?” Blaise demanded as he joined them.
“Mind your own business.” Harry teased.

“Who says we’re doing anything?” Max carried on, grinning. “Nasta has only just gotten better and Harry is preggers. Regan, no, stay still, sweetie.” He said quickly as his distraction almost lost him the baby and he had to lean forward and grab a little ankle to heft Regan back onto the mat.

Harry rolled his eyes and laughed. “We owe you two birthdays, we have a lot planned.” Harry winked, as it looked like Blaise was actually believing their teasing that they weren’t doing anything. “Alexander is having the kids overnight, so you’ll be free to ravish me until your heart’s content all night long.”

“You really are up for it now, aren’t you?” Max laughed, being very brave in Harry’s opinion and darting a glance up at him, once again taking his eyes off of Regan.

“I really am, I don’t know what’s wrong with me today, but the very thought of it is making me hot and hard.”

“It must be pregnancy hormones.” Nasta said, throwing an arm around his shoulders and pulling him into a hug. “You can go through a range of different emotions and feelings, including being incredibly aroused. It’s normal.”

“We like it very much.” Max added with a salacious grin.

“Blaise, sweetheart?” A soft voice called out from the other room.

“Madre, in here.” Blaise called out to his Mother.

Marianna came into the room with a wrapped gift in her hands and she swooped on Blaise, taller than him as she was, and all but crushed him in her arms, giving his forehead a big, smacking kiss, leaving behind the dark purple lipstick that she was wearing.

“Bon anniversaire, Blaise.” She said brightly, her thumb automatically wiping away the plum purple stain.
“Merci.” Blaise answered in French, taking the gift and sitting down to open it.

Marianna was immediately distracted by the nearly naked babies, coming to greet her in several languages.

“Oh, aren’t they the adorable little linguists?” She cooed.

“They’re coming on really well.” Harry said with a proud smile.

“I can see.” Marianna laughed, then hefted up Calix, who was the most insistent that she pick him up. “Have I miscounted, you are one short? But, where is Leolin?” She asked, scanning the room.

“He is upstairs. He’s having a growth spurt.” Harry said happily, proudly. “He needed some more sleep.”

“Oh, that is wonderful news.” Marianna insisted with a smile.

Harry nodded with his own smile. “The girls are coming on really well too. In fact they all are, even this one.” He added patting his belly.

“Has his heart rhythm come down?”

Harry nodded. “Yes, since the end of the trial it has. There’s still some more work to be done, but we’re heading in the right direction now.”

“I am very proud of you for coming through that with such grace.” Marianna said with a smile.

Harry smiled and nodded, but his attention was taken by the nearly released Regan coming over to him and lifting his arms up to him. Harry hefted him up and sat him on his lap, giving him a cuddle, smoothing the hair from his face and giving his temple a kiss. Max had moved on to Farren.

It was at that moment that a soft grunting came through the baby monitor and a sleepy ‘Ma’ was heard.
“I got him.” Nasta said, putting down his mug of green tea and going to get their Faerie baby.

“Is he alright to go near Leolin now?” Marianna asked.

“Yes, he’s woken up feeling fine.” Max said. “He’s no longer contagious and we will keep an eye on Leolin, just in case, but the danger is over.”

“Good.” Marianna said shortly.

“Would you like a coffee, Mother?” Blaise asked, after he’d finished examining the coffee set his Mother had gotten him for his birthday. It included actual French coffee beans, a bean grinder, a little coffee press and a new mug.

“I would, Blaise, thank you.”

Blaise went to sort out another round of tea and coffee and Harry sat back and watched over his playing children. At least until Calix, who had been placed back on the floor, came to him and patted his knee.

“Mummy, toon.” He said, pointing at the double doors that led into the other room.

“Do you want to watch cartoons? Come on then.” Harry said, standing up with Regan cocked on his hip and going to throw open the double doors. He found the remote on top of the TV, because the kids thought that they were toys and liked bashing them about or mashing buttons, and he switched on the tele and turned it onto the kids’ channels. He had watched the local news last night before he’d gone up to bed.

“You know we’re going to need to get another TV when the kids are older, don’t you?” He told his mates, after putting down Regan who wanted to watch the cartoons with Calix, and walking back into the family room.

“Why?” Draco asked, having just walked through the door and holding an armful of clothes and a handful of tiny socks.
“We have a lot of kids, we’re going to have many more, what are the chances that they all want to watch the same thing on TV?” Harry chuckled. “Or when the older kids want to watch a movie and the younger kids want to watch cartoons?”

Draco groaned and Max laughed. “A new TV for this room it is, as long as one doesn’t show up in my kitchen, then I don’t care. I never believed in having a TV in the kitchen. The kitchen is for family meals, not gawping at a screen while shovelling in food that you’re not even tasting. I don’t spend hours making my family a meal only to have it unappreciated and eaten as quickly as humanly possible.”

“I agree.” Harry said to appease Max, who settled down again. He still remembered Dudley eating like a gormless zombie in front of the TV in the kitchen, ignoring everyone around him, not taking part in the conversation, Harry would even go so far as to say that Dudley hadn’t even heard anyone around him talking as all of his focus was on the TV. He didn’t want to associate his cruel, overweight, spoilt cousin with his children. He didn’t want them to turn out anything like Dudley.

Blaise brought in a tray with the mugs on them and he handed his Mother a mug immediately. Nasta came back in with Leolin and Harry repressed the urge to automatically hold out his arms. He calmed his Dracken side, their Faerie baby was fine, he was safe.

Nasta sat with Leolin for a few minutes, then he handed him over to Harry and that was the end of anyone else holding Leolin’s attention, as with a shriek of ‘Ma!’ Leolin dug tiny fingernails into his neck and held on. He mouthed at Harry’s chin, in his version of a kiss, and it made Harry smile, it made his mates all laugh.

“Do you need a babysitter for later?” Marianna asked them as she watched Draco and Max dress the fresh, clean babies in their day clothes.

“Alexander has agreed to have them overnight for us.” Blaise explained.

Marianna laughed. “Don’t do anything that I wouldn’t, Blaise.”

Blaise went red and he buried his face in his hands. “Madre!” He complained.

“What? I wish for my son to enjoy an active sex life. There’s nothing embarrassing about that.”

Harry’s lips twitched into a smile, trying to repress his laughter, as his first mate looked about ready to die on the spot.
After several more comments about their sex life and heavy encouragement to take full advantage of the baby-free night, Marianna seemed to realise that she had embarrassed her son more than enough for one day, as she soon excused herself after finishing her coffee, and with a final warning to them all to enjoy themselves that night, she flooed away laughing and left Harry sniggering and Max biting his lip to keep from outright laughing himself.

“Well…she does know us rather well by now.” Max tried.

Harry chuckled to himself. “It wasn’t so long ago that we went on an all-night bender and couldn’t even remember where we were when we woke up.”

Blaise moaned at the reminder. “Don’t mention that. I have never drank so much in my life and I never want to ever again.”

“That was the night that we spent in the nasty little Muggle hovel, wasn’t it?” Draco asked.

“That was the one.” Max nodded. “I still have nightmares about that hideous carpet.”

Harry chuckled, but his attention was caught by Calix in the other room. Calix who had climbed onto the coffee table.

“Calix!” He said sharply. “Get down.”

“No!” Came the defiant answer from the other room.

“I said get down, now.” Harry said, staring his young son down who frowned and pouted at him.

“Don’t want to.” Calix tried.

“It’s dangerous, get down.”

“Time out?” Nasta asked as Harry continued frowning when Calix ignored him.
“Yes, that was three clear warnings. Hold this one for me.” He said handing Leolin over to the nearest person, who happened to be Draco.

“Do you want me to…?” Nasta started, but Harry shook his head.

“No, I noticed him and I started this.”

Harry stood himself up, thankful that he was only three and a half months pregnant and not any further along, even if he was at the halfway point in his pregnancy now, and he went into the other room and he took hold of Calix’s hand and pulled him gently until he shimmied off the table on his own, Harry there as support in case he fell. He was wearing socks, on the polished table, he could have slipped at any point.

He tugged Calix back into the family room and pulled over one of the little chairs that the kids used. He sat Calix in the chair, in a corner and then he crouched down.

“I told you to get off of the coffee table, Calix. You didn’t listen. Now you need to stay here until I come back and get you.”

“Mummy, no!” Calix cried, but he was getting better at understanding the rules of his timeouts now, as he’d had so many of them recently, and though he cried and flailed about in the chair, calling out for him, his bum didn’t leave the seat. At least it didn’t this time.

“He’s so fearless.” Harry sighed as he sat back down, taking Leolin back from Draco and settling him down again from being abruptly placed in his Father’s arms. “He’s going to be trouble when he’s older.”

“What do you mean when he’s older?” Max laughed. “He’s trouble now.”

Harry smiled and looked at Calix, now sat still, but sniffling and rubbing his wet eyes, watching his siblings playing. He was itching to join them, Harry could see it.

After exactly one and a half minutes, Harry went to Calix and he hunched down, Leolin still in his arms, but carefully slung over his shoulder, so he was facing behind him and couldn’t see Calix.

“Calix, I told you to get off of the table and you didn’t listen, that’s why you got a timeout. Do you understand?"

“Yes, Mummy.” Calix sniffled, reaching out to him, but Harry held him outwards, so he had eye contact.

“Say that you’re sorry.”

“Sorry, Mummy.”

“For what?” He asked.

“For climbing table and not get back down.” Calix answered, reaching up and rubbing his eyes again.

Harry nodded and he pulled Calix into a cuddle and kissed his head.

“I love you.” Harry said.

“Love you, Mummy.”

“Go and play, Calix.”

Calix did as suggested, and he took a toy into the living room, where Regan and the cartoons were, and he started playing, occasionally looking up at the TV, but he thankfully stayed away from the coffee table.

Harry got back onto the settee and he chose to sit closer to Draco, so that he could cuddle in and rest on his mate with a sigh.

“This discipline is exhausting!” Harry complained.

“It will be when you’re pregnant.” Nasta said. “You should be taking things easier now that you’re at the halfway point.”
Harry nodded. “I wonder if I’ll go early. I mean, a month from now and I birthed the quintuplets.”

“You shouldn’t do.” Max said. “You’re carrying a singleton, and there were five of the quintuplets, so obviously as they fight for space, food and oxygen from you, you’re more inclined to birth early with multiples. Our thunderer is on his own in there, so he should stay put.”

“I birthed Braiden early.” Harry pointed out.

“He was our first, that’s normal too.” Nasta said. “Not to mention that…that we almost lost him, so he was anything but a nice, smooth pregnancy.”

Harry frowned and nodded. “Do you think I’ll ever have a nice, smooth pregnancy?” He asked.

“It’s doubtful.” Blaise teased. “With our family now getting bigger, there’s always going to be something to cause stress or strife. We’ll just have to deal with it as best as we can and try to limit the stress on you as our beautiful, amazing submissive mate.”

Harry smiled and gave Blaise gooey eyes. He felt a twitch in his lap and he groaned theatrically.

“You need to stop being nice to me!” He complained.

Harry took his hand this time and placed it on his groin.

“Are you seriously telling me that you got aroused just from being called beautiful and amazing? We call you that all the time and sometimes barely get a grunt of acknowledgement for it!” Draco said.

“It’s the pregnancy hormones!” Harry complained. “I can’t help it, it just happens.”

Harry, for a distraction from his current mood, went back to fussing over Leolin, who was staring at the ceiling, as if studying it.

“What are you doing?” Harry asked him, smoothing the hair from his forehead. “I think he needs a haircut, this mop is getting long.”

“I’ll do it in the afternoon.” Draco said, before taking a sip from his tea cup.

“What’s he looking at?” Blaise asked curiously.

“The ceiling.” Harry said, looking up at the ceiling too. “It might be the pattern on it that he’s fascinated by.”

“He gets distracted by the strangest of things.” Max said.

“Says the man who inspects every carrot and potato in the supermarket before he chooses the ones he wants.” Draco snarked with a teasing smile.

“I like feeding my family the best quality produce I can find.” Max defended with a grin.

Harry snorted. “Right, we’ve digressed enough, go and give Blaise our presents. Today is for him and it’s already nearly ten and he hasn’t been given them yet.”

“Yes, it is my birthday.” Blaise teased. “Pay attention to me!”

It was probably the worst thing he could have possibly said, as Max took him at his word and hefted him into his arms and slung him over his shoulder and started giving him attention.

“You should have known better, lover.” Harry laughed at him as Max carried Blaise into the next room.

“I really should have seen it coming!” Blaise shouted back, but he was laughing himself, trying to prop up his upper body using Max’s shoulders.
“You wanted attention, now you get my undivided attention on your glorious body.” Max faux growled as he dumped Blaise on the settee in the living room and ‘fell’ on top of him. Harry watched them with a laugh.

“Get off, I see presents.” Blaise said excitedly.

“Don’t spurn my loving advances in favour of material possessions!” Max complained.

“Max, let him open his gifts, we have a busy day ahead of us.” Nasta laughed.

“Daddy Max, no!” Tegan chastised, hands on her little hips. “Naughty corner.” She told him, pointing to the corner.

Harry laughed so hard that he had tears streaming down his cheeks and he had to hold his belly with his free hand.

“She…she thinks that you’re fighting!” Harry managed to giggle out.

Max chuckled himself and he grabbed Tegan’s hand and pulled her over to him and he pulled her up into the tangle of bodies.

“We’re just playing, Tegan. See, Daddy Blaise is still perfectly alright.”

Tegan looked at her Daddy Blaise, who pulled her to kiss him and he cuddled her.

“I’m okay.” He said. “I love you.”

“Love you, Daddy.” She said.

“Go and play.” Blaise told her.
She nodded and Max placed her back on the floor and she toddled away. Max got off of Blaise with a laugh. He helped Blaise sit up and he kissed him, hard, heavy, passionate and Blaise came away from that a little dazed with a goofy looking smile.

Harry frowned, he stood up and he went to poke at Max.

“What’s that look for, love?” Max asked him.

Harry awkwardly dodged Max’s hands as they went to wind around him and Harry sat heavily beside Blaise and he curled up to him and kissed him. Blaise smiled gently at him, then sent a smug look to Max as he cuddled Harry and pulled him into another kiss.

“I was jealous of you both.” Harry admitted quietly.

“Why?” Max asked.

“I wanted to be kissed.” Harry said. “I was actually, truly jealous that someone other than me was kissed.”

Max shrugged. “Don’t fret, Harry. It’s normal during pregnancy. We’re actually lucky to have escaped it thus far, but your Dracken side is just feeling very protective and possessive of your mates, even with other mates. We should have seen it coming, especially with how...aroused, you’ve been feeling today.”

“I don’t like it!” Harry complained.

“It’s alright, bello.” Blaise assured him. “After tonight, you won’t have any need to feel jealous at all. You’re going to be so well satisfied that you won’t have any room to feel jealous.”

Harry moaned unhappily and he huffed, putting Blaise’s hand back in his lap.

“I only just managed to calm down.” He said.
Max and Blaise both laughed. “You really are in a mood today, love.” Max told him.

Harry nodded. “I don’t like this.”

“It won’t be for long.” Nasta told him, migrating over to the living room. “Such feelings are usually caused by a surge in hormones, once it settles, you will settle again.”

“That doesn’t help me right now, Nas.”

“Stop touching everyone then.” Draco told him.

Harry levelled a glare on him. “Do not tell me that the solution to this is to stop touching and loving on you all, I won’t do it.”

“Calm down, all of you.” Nasta demanded, but it strained his health as he turned away from them and coughed into his hand. “Enough now.” He said, more quietly. “Let’s focus on Blaise and his gifts, not on who is feeling what, or what we think can be done to help, only one thing will help and we’re too busy at the moment to indulge in it. Blaise, open your gifts.”

Harry stayed snuggled up to Blaise, but his first mate moved to take the first present from the pile. Harry watched him indulgently as he opened his gifts, a lot of them coffee related, which made him smile. Max had even gotten him chocolate coated coffee beans, Harry hadn’t known that you could even get such a thing. Blaise seemed to like them though, he hadn’t stopped eating them yet.

“Muma.” Farren called out to him, toddling over.

Harry allowed Max to pick Farren up and pass him over, in place of bending and picking him up himself. Harry cuddled with Farren on one side and Leolin on the other as he watched Blaise unwrap all of his gifts and cards.

Draco cleaned up the wrapping paper, because he couldn’t stand the rubbish being on the floor, and Harry slipped to the floor to play with his children, Leolin sat upright in his lap now that he’d cracked open his gold eyes. Two hours before his usual feed, he started whining for food.

“Max, can you grab him a bottle, please? I actually think he’s hungry.”
“But it’s so soon.” Max said, but he leapt up excitedly and hurried into the kitchen, Leolin’s cries in his ears.

“Are you not done growing yet, little man?” Harry cooed to him, but for once his presence, or his voice, were not enough to soothe Leolin and he just carried on crying.

“Mummy, baby ‘Eoin is sad.” Calix told him, as if he couldn’t hear the baby crying in his lap.

“I know, sweetie, he just wants a bottle. Daddy Max is getting it for him.” Harry explained over Leolin’s crying.

Calix rushed on little feet to the kitchen, where they heard him, brokenly through the crying, chiding Max to go faster. The four of them shared a look and a laugh, but of course, their children were coming on so well in this last month, Braiden especially now that he was two years old, and now Leolin too, who was jumping ahead of their expectations with this sudden growth spurt.

Max came back into the living room, Calix behind him, clapping his hands as they would sometimes do to get the kids into the kitchen for a meal, and Harry had to take a moment to control his laughter enough to take the bottle from Max and prod it into Leolin’s wailing mouth. It was one of the bigger bottles Harry noticed immediately and it filled him with joy and excitement to be giving Leolin this bottle over the smaller ones.

He had an audience as he fed Leolin, who settled into his favoured feeding pose of eyes closed and hands on his own belly. All of his mates were as excited as he was and it made Harry feel so happy, so proud, as he watched Leolin suckling quickly.

He managed to drink all but a scant inch in the bottom and Harry felt like he could burst with joy as he handed Leolin over to Nasta, who winded him as Max took the bottle back into the kitchen. He sat on the floor still, watching his oldest mate pat the tiny little back of their Faerie baby until he burped.

“I love you.” Harry said to no one, and everyone.

What followed was a cacophony of noise as four adults and several babies all declared their love for him. It made him smile as the warm feeling of acceptance washed over him. He laid his hands on his bump and rubbed.

“I love you too.” He whispered softly, giving his belly a little tap for good measure. It took him a moment to realise that the baby had tapped back and he gasped.
“What? What is it?!” Draco asked in alarm, and of course that brought Max running from the kitchen and had Nasta putting Leolin down in his bassinet and hunching down in front of him.

“Here. Here.” Harry said excitedly, taking Nasta’s hand and putting it on his belly. “He’s moving! He kicked me.”

Five hands pressed against his belly, including his own, and they waited. They waited for almost two minutes, vibrating with excited energy, and then their little thunderer kicked out, squirming in Harry’s sac, allowing all of them to feel his movements.

“This is amazing. I love you.” Blaise declared, kissing the side of Harry’s head.

“Mummy, what doing?” Braiden asked curiously.

“Come here, Braiden. Your baby brother is moving, do you want to feel?”

“Yeah.” Braiden said, picking his way through his Daddies and allowing Max to hold his hand to Harry’s belly.

The baby kicked and Braiden’s little eyes went wide. “Baby hurting mummy!” He cried, snatching his hand away.

“No. No, Braiden it doesn’t hurt.” Harry soothed gently. “He’s just letting me know that he’s alright.”

Braiden, looking upset, stared into his eyes, seeking out the truth, and he nodded, looking a little happier. He put his tiny hand back on Harry’s belly, before bringing up his other hand and cuddling Harry’s belly with both arms.

Harry had to smile down at him, and as he did, he caught movement in the corner of his eye and a flash.

“Max!” He complained. “Don’t take photos of me.”
“But I love you.” Max whined. “You and Braiden look gorgeous with our thunderer between you.”

Harry sighed, but he smiled too.

“Halfway there.” Draco said, smiling at him.

“Just the hardest half to go.” Harry added with a laugh as he cuddled Braiden to himself before kissing his head.

“We’ll look after you.” Blaise said.

“You always do.” Harry laughed. “Except when I need attention during the day!”

“You’re still…?”

“Yes!” Harry said in exasperation.

“If we have a free moment to slip away in the afternoon, while the kids are napping, we’ll have a quickie.” Blaise laughed. “It’s my birthday, I get what I want.”

“I love you.” Harry purred happily.

Harry went back to playing with his children, laughing at all of their little comments and their games. The afternoon couldn’t come quickly enough for him, he really, really needed some sort of proper release, the blow job that morning hadn’t been nearly enough.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

They did not get the chance to sneak away for the afternoon. Blaise’s grandparents, Marianna’s parents, had finally come to see them for a surprise visit for Blaise’s birthday. Bastien and Mégane Lavelle knew where they were living thanks to Marianna, and they’d only just come off of a full world cruise, it had taken them three and a half years to finish the full cruise.

They had missed Blaise being mated, they’d missed their first and only great-grandson being born and growing up, and they’d missed the birth of all their other great-grandchildren. They were more than making up for it now as Harry was fussed over like he was a child, Max was almost fighting Mégane off of his muscles without looking like that was what he was doing, and he all but dived on Ave when she started crying, using her as an excuse to get away.

Bastien seemed rather stern, Harry could see how he had put his own daughter, his only child, into a mateship contract instead of allowing her to find love on her own, but Harry refused to bring up the past, because Blaise was so happy, so excited to see his grandparents. He was talking rapidly in French to his grandfather, showing off his children and Harry assumed that he was introducing everyone, but he didn’t understand and he couldn’t get away, as one of Bastien’s arms was around his waist, his large hand patting his pregnant belly proudly.

Braiden had surprised them, by greeting them in English, Welsh, French and Italian, and he was currently cocked on Blaise’s hip, their matching eyes and hair marking them as Father and son.

Nasta finally took charge and he got everyone sat down on the settee, allowing Harry to wriggle away and escape over to Draco, and Nasta sent Max to make tea and coffee.

“It is wonderful to meet you all at last.” Mégane insisted. “We have heard so much about you from our Marianna. Of course if we had had any idea that mon beau chéri was going to be mated so soon we would have held off on our cruise.” She added, patting Blaise’s cheek affectionately. Harry could almost see Draco memorising the nickname to torment Blaise with later.

“You have done very well for yourself, mon petit canard. I could not be more proud of you, or the little family you have for yourself.”

Blaise was going a very special shade of red that was reserved for the ultimate of embarrassments and Harry was feeling very unsympathetic to him or his plight as Draco bent and whispered into his ear ‘it means little duck’ and Harry had to roll his lips inwards and bite on them to prevent the laugh that wanted to spill out. No one had ever called Blaise any sort of pet name like these before, not even Marianna, and to hear Blaise called a ‘little duck’, well, Harry was very hard pressed to control his laughter.

“Thank you, grandfather.” Blaise said. “I love them, and these children, regardless of blood, they’re all mine.”

“Of course they are!” Mégane said joyously, holding Regan on her lap. He was snuggling with his comfort bear, but he was very happy to remain with her and she was happy for it. “They’re all just wonderful.”
Harry puffed up, but Draco just held him tighter as Max came back in with his posh tea set and he started serving everyone, their guests first, and then Harry, because Harry had to have his honey tea or he’d actually start crying. He was rather emotional at the moment, since about midday, when he still couldn’t have sex and he felt fit to burst. Draco had made them tea and he’d brought in Blaise’s coffee and Nasta’s green tea before Harry’s, and he’d just burst out crying. He couldn’t even explain why it had upset him, it just had. So now he had his tea as soon as possible, after that little meltdown. He was still feeling a little unbalanced and very emotional and he couldn’t wait for this phase to pass.

“How was your cruise?” Nasta asked politely.

“Oh, fabulous. Absolutely fabulous.” Mégane told them. “I’m not sure Bastien was as enthused as I was, but there is just something so exciting and exotic about other countries and cultures. I did miss hearty French cuisine after a while though.” She laughed. “Not to mention the wines.”

“I think a shorter cruise would have done.” Bastien said. “A year, maybe a little longer. Three and a half was too long to be away from home and family.”

“It was a once in a lifetime trip, Bassie.” Mégane complained. “When are we ever going to do such a thing again?”

“You would go again tomorrow if you could.” Bastien laughed at his wife.

“Is that an offer?” Mégane smiled, showing a lot of teeth.

“No!” Bastien said quickly. “I want to enjoy my own home, sleep in my own bed and catch up with our only grandchild and the children that he has had, not to mention this little unborn trésor!” He added, looking at Harry’s belly indulgently.

“Mummy, who dis?” Braiden asked him, pointing at the two new people.

“This is your great-grandfather, Bastien, and your great-grandmother, Mégane.” Harry introduced slowly, so that Braiden could absorb the information.

“Gwanddad and Gwandmama.” Braiden nodded.
“Well done, Braiden.” Harry praised.

“So, what are you boys up to later?” Mégane asked with a truly wicked look on her face. She reminded Harry so much of Marianna teasing Blaise over his sex life in that moment that he was absolutely, one hundred percent sure that they were not only Mother and daughter, but truly two peas in a pod.

“Harry and Nasta are hiding something.” Blaise said, a permanent pink tint to his cheeks now. “They have something planned, but they won’t say what it is.”

“It’s a surprise!” Harry frowned. “Stop asking.”

“What time is it, at least?” Draco asked. “I need to know when to get ready.”

“You have time, it’s later. You’ll know when to get ready when we take the kids to Alexander.”

“About five O’clock, Draco.” Nasta said when it looked like Draco would press for more detail. “Be ready for half four.”

“You’re no fun, Nasta.” Harry pouted.

Nasta just gave him a look and Harry laughed.

“Oh, I know that look well.” Mégane giggled. “Then, you boys are very young, you should be at it like…oh, what is that English word, Bastien? Lapin?”

“Rabbit, grandmother.” Blaise told her, looking like he’d rather not answer.

“Yes!” She said, snapping her fingers at him. “You should be at it like rabbits.”

“Judging by how many children they have had in a little over just two years, mon ange, they are at it like rabbits.” Bastien told her. “Our petit canard is being well satisfied, I can guarantee it.”
Harry smiled happily. He did like knowing that he satisfied his mates, and he definitely knew that he was very satisfied with his mates and their attentions. Or he had been until today. He groaned softly and rolled into Draco.

“What is it, love?” He asked softly.

“Guess.” Harry huffed.

“I don’t…oh.” Draco clicked and he threw an arm around him and cuddled him in tighter. “It won’t be long. The kids will be gone overnight, then we can do whatever we want.”

Harry grinned naughtily. “Can’t wait.” He whispered back, moving to kiss Draco’s strong jaw.

“We’ve just got to survive the grandparents-in-law.” Draco laughed.

“They’re not so bad, and Blaise obviously loves them.”

Draco nodded as he looked over at Blaise, practically fawning over his grandparents, but, Harry reasoned, he hadn’t seen them in almost four years because of this amazing, world-wide cruise that they’d gone on. Harry never wanted to be away from his home for that long, not at the moment, he might feel differently when he was older, but he was definitely a home body, he did not want to be away from home for so long, nor did he think he could leave his children for so long, just in case they needed him, but again, it was impossible to know what the future held. Perhaps one day they would go on a cruise, he just hoped that it wasn’t a three and half year one.

-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------X

The trip to the cinema had almost sent Draco into a panic attack and Harry had stolen all of the popcorn from his mates and all but inhaled it. He and Max had almost been caught giving each other hand jobs in their seats and Blaise had almost broken his neck slipping on a spill, but overall, the film had been good and it had been a new experience for all of them, even though Draco was steadfastly refusing to ever go back.

They went to the pizza restaurant over the road and Draco didn’t really like that either, but Blaise really did and as it was his birthday, it was for him. After they’d eaten, Harry dragged his mates to the bowling alley and even that almost ended in disaster…Max was far too strong and he’d almost thrown one of the balls through the wall trying to get a strike that would win him the game. After that game had finished they decided to play it safe and they went to the attached arcade and they had fun acting like teenagers. Well…technically Harry and Draco were still teenagers, but they had fun, even Draco, who had a particular fondness for penny machines.

Blaise had come up to him and proudly handed him a teddy that he had won from the crane machine and Harry tucked it under his arm with a grin. His babies would enjoy it in the morning.

Nasta beat his arse on the air hockey machine, Max was so tall that he could cheat the basketball game just by reaching over and dropping the ball in the hole and at the end of the night, they pooled all the tickets they’d won…Max from cheating at the games and Draco from the penny machines, to get another teddy for the kids.

He was in massively high spirits and by the time they got back home Harry was ready to burst from sexual frustration. He had been wanting sex all fucking day, and now was finally the time to have it.
The house was dark and empty, the kids were away for the night, and he could have his mates’ undivided attention. Everything was perfect.

Harry jumped on Blaise the moment they were through the front door and his mate laughed and swung him around and into a deep, passionate kiss.

“Let me shut the front door first!” Max laughed at them. “We don’t want to give the neighbours a free show.”

“It’s eleven at night and they’re miles away!” Harry complained. “They won’t see nothing!”

Nasta laughed, in very high spirits after their night out, and a wave of his wand had the lights coming on just as Max shut and locked the front door. Nasta put the teddies he was carrying on the side table by the front door that was used for putting letters and things on and he came to steal Harry from Blaise.

“It’s my birthday!” Blaise complained, pressing himself up against Harry’s back while Nasta snogged him.

“For another hour.” Draco said, pulling Blaise into his own arms and distracting him with gentle touches and butterfly kisses.

“It’s still an hour that I intend to use.” Blaise argued.

“Come on then, birthday boy.” Max laughed, picking Blaise up, and using a hand on Draco’s shoulder to steer them to the stairs. “Nasta, come on!” He chided as Nasta stayed downstairs with Nasta broke the kiss and he chuckled. “Come on, Cariad.” He said to Harry. “We’ve been summoned.”

Harry snorted a laugh. “Carry me. I want to suck on your neck.”

He had the greatest pleasure of watching Nasta’s pupils dilate and he grinned as he was lifted up carefully, but he made good on his words and he started licking and gently sucking on the skin of Nasta’s neck. He was bristly and stubbly again, even though he’d shaved just before going out. Harry was definitely going to get beard burn from this, but it didn’t stop him from nuzzling Nasta’s neck and chin, nor did it stop him from kissing him. He’d deal with the beard burn tomorrow, a bit of Max’s aloe healing salve did wonders for his skin and it worked amazingly well for beard burn.

Harry was dumped on the bed with a gasp, but it was a very short fall and Nasta’s hands were still on his back to support him so he didn’t have a heavy landing. Harry giggled and squirmed happily on the cold sheets as he smiled up at Nasta who was hovering over him. He was kissed again and he latched onto his top dominant’s mouth happily. He’d been wanting sex all fucking day, he’d been aching for it, aroused and unsatisfied, but now…now he was finally going to get what he wanted, what he needed, and it was going to be fantastic.

Nasta moved his mouth to Harry’s chin, kissing and nipping lightly with his teeth before moving down to do the same to his neck, teasing and enticing Harry to wriggle and make soft sounds as yet another move had Nasta attaching his lips to Harry’s barely visible collarbone.

Harry ignored everything else, the noises from above him, as he instead stayed in this moment with Nasta, though he did take a quick peek around, arching his back and looking behind him as Nasta shoved up his jumper and moved lower on his body, tongue gliding over Harry’s chest and then to a nipple. Harry slumped back onto the bed with a happy sigh, giving Nasta the opening he needed to tug Harry’s jumper all the way off before going back to suck on Harry’s other nipple. It earned him another soft, happy sound of pleasure.

Nasta was determined to get every little soft patch of skin that made Harry wriggle, sigh or gasp…he knew all of them now and it made everything much more fun, as he sought out those places with his lips, with his tongue and teeth. It was also fun to go after the spots that didn’t do anything for his lovers, if he wanted to tease them beyond reason, but tonight was not one of those nights, Harry had been patient, and he’d been teased enough. He was almost fit to burst from the sexual frustration of today, caused by raging hormones of the baby that lay within his body.

Nasta took a moment to kiss the belly, imagining that he was kissing the baby under the skin. He stroked with his fingers, he kissed the swell of his growing child, murmuring gently in Welsh, taking the distraction to unbutton Harry’s jeans and lower the zip, tugging them, and the boxer shorts underneath, down and pushing them off before he smirked and dipped down lower, going to the hollow of Harry’s hip, he heard the soft sigh and the slight giggle.

“Ticklish?” Nasta asked, pulling up to smile down at Harry, those green eyes blazing heat up at him.
“Your beard on my thigh is.” Harry told him.

“Oh?” Nasta grinned with a questioning lilt, and he ducked his head back down to nibble at the hollow of Harry’s hip, purposefully brushing his bristly chin on the inside of Harry’s thigh.

Harry was torn between sighing and moaning at the licks and sucks to the skin, or giggling at the rasp of stubble against his inner thigh. He tried to do both, siging happily in one moment, then giggling the next, but he couldn’t keep it up and he had to put his hands in Nasta’s hair and stop him.

“No more.” He huffed, still breathless.

“As you wish, Caru.” Nasta said, moving his mouth down to lick over his inside thigh instead of tickling it with his stubble. He sucked in a good mouthful and he bit down on it gently, listening to Harry’s moan of pleasure.

He moved down to the bend of Harry’s knee, knowing how very sensitive it was at the back. He forced his tongue to slip into the little crevice that Harry’s bent leg had left him and he loved how loudly Harry gasped and moaned at the gentle glide of his tongue on skin.

He played with that little patch of skin for a while, just loving how Harry gasped and writhed for him before he moved down to the next arousing spot…the delicate little feet, more specifically the little indent under the ankle bone and the soft arch of the sole of his foot, but the latter did make Harry giggle more than moan if his touch was too soft or gentle, he needed a firmer touch to make it arousing.

He switched to the other foot, biting ever so gently on the side of it and Harry gasped and moaned for him. He loved paying Harry so much dedicated attention. Having Harry’s sole focus on him and the pleasure he was causing. It was a thrill, and seeking out all of Harry’s soft spots was one of his favourite games. He believed that he’d found all of them now, but with his pregnancy those spots changed. Some were too sensitive to be touched and Harry would pull away, other places that had never been sensitive suddenly were, and it was a game to him, to lick and suck and nibble on every spot to find them.

“Stop teasing the poor boy.” Max chuckled deeply. “Look at his face, you’re killing him.”

Nasta popped up from his spot by Harry’s armpit and he looked at Harry’s flushed face, how raggedly he was breathing, the glazed quality to his eyes and the half parted mouth. He grinned, feeling very accomplished and self-satisfied to see what he had reduced one of his beloved mates to.
“Hmm, I don’t know. I think he could handle a little more.” Nasta insisted playfully.

Max laughed and jerked his thumb over his shoulder. “Mind if I join you, those two are off. I swear they’re like rabbits, just as Mégane insisted. I had them both in your little love fest over here with Harry’s body and now they’re after each other.”

Nasta watched as Blaise wrestled and rolled with Draco, each of them trying to get on top of the other…they were going to roll right off the bed in a minute, if they weren’t more careful.

Harry moaned at the suggestion of Max joining them and Nasta grinned. “Of course not, come and help me here. I’ve covered all of the front, but I think his back has been very neglected.”

Harry actually made a soft whimpering noise and it made Nasta smirk. He shared a dark look with Max and the other man smirked back.

“Oh this is going to be fun.” Max chuckled before grabbing two pillows from the top of the bed and stacking them one on top of the other. Nasta pulled Harry up to his knees and kissed him soundly, before turning him (with Harry’s help) and laying him on the stack of pillows, so that it was more comfortable for his baby belly.

“Do you want to do top and bottom, or left and right?” Nasta asked casually, as if they were discussing the weekly shopping list.

“I think top and bottom would be more manageable. Less chance of you trying to poach my half.” Max grinned.

Nasta snorted. “I’ve already done his whole front, I don’t need to poach your half.”

“Maybe you should just let me do his whole back then?” Max challenged.

Nasta actually laughed. “And miss out on touching this gorgeous body? Not a chance in hell, Max.”
“Shut up and touch me already!” Harry screamed between them, finding his voice through the mind fogging lust. His full out arousal was waning now, as he calmed down from having the front of his body teased, but he was aching in a way that he almost wanted to call pain.

“I think he’s upset.” Max said to Nasta.

“Hmm…sure sounds like it. I know just what will make him happy again though.”

Harry was gearing up to scream at them both some more, and half a heartbeat from calling out to Blaise and Draco to take their places, despite the moans from the other side of the bed, behind Max, indicating that they were already busy, when lips brushed right in the back of his knee…one of his most favourite ‘odd’ places to be touched and teased.

“If you don’t…oh.” He ended his rambling on a breathy sigh and he ignored Max and Nasta laughing above him.

More lips and hands touched him and he sunk into the pillows holding up his chest and just enjoyed the touches and the attention. It settled his Dracken down from the awful edge they’d been on all day, wanting sex but unable to sneak off for it.

“More.” He begged when the teasing kisses became too much, when the touches had him jumping from how hypersensitive his skin was.

“Oh, no. Not just yet.” Nasta told him. He tutted then, loudly. “Look at the state of you, lover. All wound up and rubbing against the sheets, you need to learn some patience.”

“No.” Harry whined. “No more.”

“I thought you just asked for more?” Max chuckled, teasing him more.

“More.” Harry complained, barely aware of what he was saying.

“See, he doesn’t even know what he wants anymore.” Nasta said to Max. “I think we just need to interpret what he wants for ourselves.”
“Want more! No more teasing!” Harry burst out in pure frustration.

“Maybe a little more teasing.” Nasta chuckled and it was a nice gruff, deep sound, but it held a darkness to it that made Harry moan in anticipation. It wasn’t often that teasing him also riled up his oldest mate, but whenever it happened, it always meant wonderful, amazing, pleasurable things for him.

“More teasing?” Max asked, and Harry could practically hear the grin on his face, could hear it in the lilting voice. “But where haven’t you already teased yet, Nas?”

“There’s only one spot left. One patch of skin that I haven’t touched yet.”

Harry figured it out and he was already moaning at just the sheer thought of what was about to happen, before Nasta’s mouth touched the entrance to his body, bristly stubble rubbing at his skin and Harry squirmed happily at the feeling, spreading his legs wider to give Nasta more room to work and calling out encouragement, which was more like desperate babbling than anything tangible.

“I love watching you do that.” Max told Nasta. “To any of them really, they all do the happy, squirmy thing and start babbling nonsense.”

“Seem to recall you doing the same thing.” Nasta pulled back to say, shooting Max a smouldering look.

“Oh, I’m not denying it.” Max laughed. “But watching you do it to them is sometimes better than receiving that talented tongue of yours into my body. I get so fucking hot watching them squirm around and plead.”

Nasta chuckled deeply before burying his face again and Max sat and watched happily as Harry wriggled, squirmed and grabbed fistfuls of the duvet and tugged on it, mindless in his pleasure. He would be very sensitive because of his pregnancy…it was glorious to see.

“I don’t think he’s going to last out.” Max pointed out with a grin the next time that Nasta came up for air.
“He’s orgasmed twice from the teasing. Once when I was on the front of his body and just now.” Nasta informed him, much to Max’s shock. “He really is sensitive at the moment.”

“Been waiting all day.” Harry almost sobbed. “Need you…need someone. Anyone.” He pleaded desperately.

Realising that a line was going to be crossed if he continued to hold off, Nasta rubbed at Harry gently, soothingly, whispering to him, but his mate barely noticed as he continued to writhe and writhe.

“What would be more comfortable for you?”

“Back!” Harry managed to call out. “Want to see you.”

Nasta smiled, his mood softened now, as he pulled Harry up gently to his knees, his back to his own chest and he kissed gently at the thin, narrow shoulder as Max took the pillows and laid them back at the head of the bed.

Nasta shuffled Harry up and he eased Harry down on his back, watching thin, knobbly knees tremble and the narrow hips shift and writhe.

He shushed Harry softly and grabbed the bottle of lube from the bedside table.

“As long as you need, Caru. Just a little longer, I promise.” Though for all the notice Harry took of his words he could have been speaking Swahili as his submissive mate continued begging and writhing.

Max laid beside Harry, propped up on one elbow, and he tried to soothe the restless movement and the desperate begging, but only one thing would ease this now, Nasta thought as he slicked himself up.

He used his fingers first, pressing one inside and testing the resistance. He used more lube and then pressed in two fingers, again testing for resistance and spreading the excess lube, looking for the slightest hint of discomfort or hesitance.

“Oh, are you two finally done?” Max shot at Blaise and Draco, as the blond came to lie on Max’s “Blaise needs a rest.” Draco insisted.

“But not you?” Max purred and too late Draco realised what was coming as Max rolled and caught Draco underneath him. “I suppose I could help wear you out, lover.”

“I want to top.” Draco said. “I bottomed to you and Blaise already.”

“Even better.” Max grinned. “I haven’t bottomed yet, though I do seem to recall that you topped Nasta just this morning.”

“That was in the morning, I want to top now.”

Nasta ignored them as he focused his all on Harry. He used yet more lube to slick himself up yet again, before he carefully pressed against Harry, and then used a little more pressure to slide in. He was met with minimal resistance at best, a nice, smooth glide and a wonderful breathy moan of appreciation from Harry.

“How does that feel, love?” He asked, holding himself perfectly still.

“Amazing.” Harry told him. “Been waiting all day! I need it, Nasta. I need you!”

“You’ve got me right where you need me.” Nasta insisted. “It’s alright. You’ll feel so good in a moment, just let your body relax and adjust for a minute.”

“Ready.” Harry told him.

“I know, just give it a moment.” Nasta insisted, waiting until the desperate clenching around him eased off a little before easing himself out in another smooth glide. He loved the new lube they were trying out, it was the best one they’d gotten yet.

The biggest clue he had that Harry was fine and comfortable was that he tried to follow his movements, unwilling to have Nasta removed from his body, not even slightly, and Nasta had to hold his hips, keeping Harry in place, so that he could actually keep his movements steady and slow when it looked like Harry would much rather just rock up into his lap.

He kept up the slow, torturously slow, gliding movements, in and out, until Harry was wriggling and writhing on him, showing no discomfort and his clenching having calmed.

“Rydych yn hardd.” Nasta whispered to Harry.

“Oh?” Harry grunted back, blinking confusedly up at him. It was adorable.

“You’re beautiful.” Nasta repeated, this time in English.

Harry smiled then, a happy blossoming grin and Nasta thought that his heart might have missed a beat or two just from the sheer wonder that this young man under him was his beloved mate. That he could actually lay claim to him, and to their children, and vice versa.

Nasta stayed with the soft, calm movements, making love rather than just fucking, and he held himself low over Harry, their bodies touching, as his mate clung to him, arms around his neck and legs level with Nasta’s hips... then that wasn’t unusual when he was pregnant, he wasn’t as dextrous thanks to the baby belly. It also allowed him to kiss Harry, and to nibble on his neck. He did, unintentionally, give Harry a love bite low on the side of his neck from all his sucking and biting, though he didn’t think his mate would mind. Harry had gotten bites and marks from them all before and he hadn’t complained once... in a joking manner, of course, but he’d never truly told them off for marking him, not even where others could see. Harry just didn’t care, it was Draco, their vain mate, that they needed to be careful with marking.

Nasta’s carefully planned rhythm was sorely tested by Harry’s movements and noises, and truly he was still recovering from his illness and he didn’t have as much stamina as usual. He had happily let Draco top him earlier, to save some energy, but this was pushing things a little and he found his hips stuttering a little more, his leg muscles aching more than usual, and he was panting harder than he usually would.

He was actually thankful when Blaise crawled over and started petting Harry, before his hand curled around Harry’s cock and started stroking him, quickly, completely out of the rhythm that Nasta had set. It threw Harry over the edge almost immediately and Nasta easily let himself fall after that, letting the pleasure spread and he collapsed to the side of Harry and happily let Blaise take Harry’s attention. He needed some rest and some sleep, he was completely done for the night.

He did watched happily, indulgently as Max flipped Draco over with a laugh and they started up again, and as Harry happily moved on to Blaise, lying back and snuggling up to him, kissing and wrapping his arms around Blaise’s neck this time. Them being closer in size it was easier for him, though again his legs didn’t get around Blaise very far. He smiled as he watched them, happy that they were having fun, but he had had too much already, he was definitely tapping out and going to sleep.
“He’s completely out of it.” Harry chuckled, snuggling in post-bliss up to Blaise.

Blaise, exhausted himself, just grunted and forced himself over to Nasta so that he could sleep.

“Come on birthday boy, don’t you want some more?” Max chuckled.

“No. Too much, my fucking stomach muscles hurt.” Blaise complained.

“It’s not his birthday any more either. It’s almost two in the morning.” Draco grinned.

“Good. I’m knackered.” Harry whined, throwing an arm over Blaise and cuddling into him.

“You’re the one who wanted sex so badly.”

“And now I’m very satisfied.” Harry chuckled, before a huge yawn almost unhinged his jaw. “Maybe see tomorrow, wake up early and see if that urge comes back…before we go to get the kids.”

“I love you so much.” Max declared happily, throwing himself down behind Harry and throwing his arm over him and Blaise.

Harry just hummed tiredly.

“Thank you, Draco.” He murmured as the ceiling light went out and soft steps padded back to the bed. It dipped on Max’s side and then there was shifting and Harry felt another hand touch his side and he hummed again, more in acknowledgement.

“You okay on that side?” Max asked, presumably to Draco.

“Yeah, you can be my little spoon tonight.”
Max laughed quietly. “Until I roll over in the night and make you my little spoon. A little like we did tonight.”

Harry snorted a soft laugh.

“Go to sleep now, Blaise and Nas are asleep and it would be cruel to wake them.” Max said, settling down and laying still.

Harry yawned once again and he rubbed his head on the pillow and curled in his toes a moment, before tucking his knees up a little more. He’d gotten what he wanted after all, in the most amazing of ways, though he really hadn’t wanted to wait. Though he had had more fun in the arcade than anywhere else, and he couldn’t wait to show the two new teddies to the kids in the morning when they went to get them back, after a rare lie in and some morning sex. That would go a long way to relieving all of his stress and make him feel much better, but first, he wanted some much needed sleep to recover his strength and energy.

--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------- X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: A little later than planned as I got led astray by a different fandom, but this will be our last update for a while, as I want to focus my all now on my new Dracken Universe fic, Broken Wings, which I want to be posted up in the next few weeks. I’m half a chapter away from completing it and I promised to try to finish it by the New Year, I’m now running short on time and this fic really isn’t a Christmas kind of fic, so it has to be before Christmas, which leaves me even less time to finish it. So yes, a small break from this fic for a few weeks while I finish off Broken Wings and then I’ll be back.

Also, a lot of you are asking about Dudley! I was going to address this a little later in the fic, but there’s no harm telling you what happens, as it’s not particularly important, but he couldn’t be tried as an adult as he was a minor at the times that he caused the injuries to Harry. He is, however, being tried for animal cruelty and other various charges including anti-social behaviour and ABH. Harry is not going to be a witness, nor will he have to go back to court, he doesn’t need to be involved in it. Richard will inform him of the sentence once it happens as he will hear of it through his court connections.
Anyway, I believe that that is all for the moment, lovelies. Fingers crossed and hopefully I’ll see you again in a few weeks, in December,

StarLight Massacre. X
Halloween

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Harry yawned once again and he rubbed his head on the pillow and curled in his toes a moment, before tucking his knees up a little more. He’d gotten what he wanted after all, in the most amazing of ways, though he really hadn’t wanted to wait. Though he had had more fun in the arcade than anywhere else, and he couldn’t wait to show the two new teddies to the kids in the morning when they went to get them back, after a rare lie in and some morning sex. That would go a long way to relieving all of his stress and make him feel much better, but first, he wanted some much needed sleep to recover his strength and energy.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Seventeen – Halloween

October had shaped up to be a hellish month for all of them and Harry would be glad to see the back of it. Eva and Ave, at nine and a half months old, had had their dragon pox vaccines and that day would be remembered as a cacophony of screams and noise from the twin girls. Draco had kept them up in the master bedroom, just lying with them on the bed as they screamed and their arms bruised black from the injection site.

It was thankfully a week after that, and the girls were back to themselves and though still bruised, that was lessening every day, much to their relief, and likely for the comfort of the twins too.

Harry was just starting to be encumbered by his pregnancy and he was finding some everyday tasks a little more difficult than he usually would have. He was four months pregnant now, two days from being seventeen weeks along.

“Harry, do you want anything?”

Harry blinked at hearing Max’s voice and it took him a moment to understand what was being said.

“No, I’m okay.” He insisted. “I just want to sit and rest.”

Max bent over the back of the settee and looked at him, his face concerned.
“Are you okay?” He asked.

Harry nodded. “It has been a hectic month, what with Nasta’s illness, Blaise’s birthday, the girls’ vaccines and two weekly baby scans, I’m just a little run down. I just want to sit here and not move.”

Max smiled then and bent further to kiss him. “Just sit still then, love. The kids are all in bed, you don’t have anything to do, and I’m happy to get you anything you need, so just shout out if you want a tea top-up. How is the thunderer?”

Harry patted his belly, and the baby within kicked out. “Still awake. He’s not going to let me sleep easy tonight.”

“Maybe we should put the wireless on your belly, lull him to sleep with Celestina Warbeck.”

Harry shivered as he remembered Mrs Weasley playing those songs over and over when he’d gone there for one summer.

“I would rather sit awake with him kicking my kidneys all night.” Harry declared.

That made Max laugh loudly, and it made Harry smile to hear him.

“Let me go and get my own tea and I’ll come back and cuddle you.” Max said, dropping another kiss to his head and hurrying to the kitchen.

Harry sighed and rested back against a cushion. He stroked his belly and smiled. He was four months pregnant, he only had three more months to go, and soon, he would start building his nest, and possibly going through his nesting instincts, where he would tear the house apart under the guise of cleaning it frantically, from the corners and crevices, to the skirting boards and the back of the cupboards. He wondered if he would be doing that next month, in December, where it would clash with the Christmas preparations. That was going to be a hectic time too, as he’d be five months pregnant, almost six, when Christmas rolled around. He could be nesting, which would mean he’d miss Christmas, the quintuplets’ second birthday and perhaps even Eva and Ave’s first birthday which was the middle of January. He hoped not, he really didn’t want to miss out on so much, he’d hate it, but he knew that it couldn’t be helped and that frustrated the hell out of him.

Max slumped next to him and took a large gulp from his mug before putting it down and throwing an arm around him, pulling Harry to rest on his bulk. Harry hummed happily and curled up, making himself comfortable.
“You still doing okay?” Max asked him.

“Better now that I have you to cuddle.” Harry insisted. “Is the kitchen all clean and sterilised?”

Max snorted. “Yeah, it’s all ready for breakfast tomorrow.”

Harry fell silent and just snuggled into Max, resting on him and before long he found himself dozing.

“Is he asleep?” He heard Draco ask.

“I’m not sure, I think he is though. Either way he’s relaxed for the first time in days and he’s comfortable.” Max answered.

“Do you want another cup of tea?”

“If you don’t mind. I don’t want to move him.”

“No, it’s fine. It’s good to see him taking a moment.”

“Who’s taking a moment?” Blaise’s voice asked them at normal volume.

“Shh.” Draco scolded. “Harry is, do you want tea?”

“Sure.”

Harry heard Blaise sit down on the other settee with a groan.

“The kids drive you mad?”
“I’ll tell you now, with them getting older they’re giving us more of a run around. What happened to the good old days where we could lay them in their cots and they’d eventually go to sleep? Every time I turned around tonight another one was climbing out and running to my legs…or Nasta’s.”

“Where is Nasta?”

“Grabbing a quick shower. He’s in work early tomorrow.”

“So they’re all asleep?”

“Yeah, even those twin terrors. Thank Merlin we’re only having the one.”

“Don’t let him hear you say that, you know he hates the girls being called terrors and you know he’s sensitive about the clutch number.”

“Don’t misunderstand me, I’m glad he’s only having a singleton for all of our sakes, but especially his. Don’t pretend that we weren’t all worried out of our minds at that scan, waiting to hear the clutch number.”

Max sighed and Harry felt the movement under his head as he rose and fell dramatically.

“I was so worried I couldn’t sleep the night before the scan.” Max admitted. “I was just lying in our bed, all night, staring at the ceiling. Finding out that our little thunderer is all alone in there. Hell, Blaise, it was the greatest news we could have heard. I really don’t think Harry would have ever gone through with a selective reduction, not even to save his own life.”

“I don’t like telling him what to do.” Blaise said. “But when he had the quintuplets, I was all for him having the selective reduction back then, and he was so passionate in his refusal and now look. Could you imagine a life without Calix? Without Leolin and Regan? Because you know that as the smallest, weakest babies, they would have been the ones chosen to be terminated.”

“He was healthy back then.” Draco’s voice broke in and Harry heard him sitting on the settee next to Blaise. “He’s…after what I did to him, he…he’s not in the best position to be pregnant at all, if he had been pregnant with multiples, he would have had to have gone through with the reduction. He can’t leave us.”

“We wouldn’t want him to leave us.” Max said sadly. “That’s something entirely different.”

“I couldn’t imagine life without him.” Blaise said softly.

“It didn’t happen, stop creating scenarios that didn’t happen.” Nasta’s voice joined them and Harry heard him towelling his hair.

“How do you do that? Just turn up and understand what we’re talking about from one comment and then immediately make us all feel better?” Blaise demanded.

“I’m your top dominant for a reason.” Nasta said simply. “Someone needs to care for you all, and stop you from talking about things that won’t happen. We don’t need to talk about selective reductions anymore, it will only upset Harry and tomorrow is going to be difficult enough for him. He’s having just one little boy and we can be thankful for that, grateful, but there is no need to create nightmare scenarios of what could have happened. Don’t torture yourselves, or each other, with things that are not going to happen.”

“I love you.” Max declared.

“I love you too.” Nasta said easily and there was a shadow over Harry’s closed eyes and he heard them kiss above him.

A touch to his shoulder and a sigh.

“How is he?”

“Enjoying the quiet and a sit down. He dozed off about twenty minutes ago.” Max said. “Just a short nap I imagine. He’ll be awake with the next round of tea.”

All four of his mates laughed and then quickly quietened themselves. Harry could almost feel them looking desperately at him, praying they hadn’t woken him.
“That was close. We need to be quieter and let him sleep a little. He deserves a nap after the day he’s had today, and the one he’ll have tomorrow.”

“Leolin is still a little out of sorts, but he is asleep at the moment. He will wake up soon for another bottle, though.”

“I’m surprised Calix isn’t up and causing mayhem.” Draco said.

“He refused both naps today, he was more than ready for bed.” Blaise pointed out.

“He is getting to be a handful.” Draco sighed. “Harry’s worried he’s not getting enough attention.”

“I’m sure he is, it’s just his personality. Caesar was the same, he did naughty things just because he wanted to.”

“Nothing’s changed.” Blaise laughed.

“Not much, at least. He’s just more responsible now, because he’s mated and a Father.”

“Is that what happened to you?” Draco asked.

“I think so.” Max said, and Harry could hear the grin in his voice. “Anyway, I think Calix is fine. He’s just a normal little boy and he likes doing naughty things occasionally. The others will get on board with that soon too. They’ll all be at it once they hit the terrible twos. It’s almost a rite of passage to push boundaries as soon as you’re two.”

“I would like to point out that my beautifully well behaved son is already two and thus far cannot have the word terrible used to describe him.” Blaise said smugly.

“Let’s hope this little boy is yours as well then.” Max chuckled.
“Give Braiden time.” Draco said. “A time will come when he pushes his boundaries too.”

“Draco’s right. He needs to push his boundaries to know what he can and can’t do, otherwise he won’t grow up normal.” Nasta said. “At some point he’s going to start putting a full toilet roll in the toilet, or he’s going to hide our keys or wallets, or try feeding the floor or his teddies, his juice. It’s inevitable, and yes he’ll have to be punished, but as long as were calm and tell him why he can’t do those things, he’ll start learning right and wrong.”

“He’s already had a few tantrums.” Max said. “He’s definitely our little good boy, but damn, have you ever tried to get him off that little trampoline? Or that bouncy castle? He turned into a little monster!”

“You’re a monster.” Harry said, wriggling and moving to stretch.

“Oh course you wake up to hear that.” Max chuckled, moving to sit him up and kissing him.

Harry smiled at him and yawned widely. “Tea?” He asked hopefully.

Max laughed and kissed him again. “Oh course you can have a cuppa, love. Anyone else?”

“Please, Max.” Nasta said gratefully.

“Do you want chamomile?” Max asked him. “Or are you on a safe break from it?”

“I’m on a safe break, especially being in work tomorrow.” Nasta chuckled. “Just regular black tea is fine, thank you.”

Harry held his arms out to Nasta, who took Max’s place and Harry snuggled into him instead.

“You smell nice and clean.”

“I’ve shaved too.” Nasta smiled at him.
Harry peeled open his eyes and looked to see smooth skin. He reached out to touch Nasta’s chin and cheeks and it made him smile.

“I love you all smooth and sexy.”

“You can barely keep your eyes open.” Nasta laughed.

“I’m tired.” Harry said. “I’m four months pregnant now, it’s just getting a little bit more difficult to do everyday tasks and I need to sit down more often.”

“You should take things easier, bello.” Blaise told him.

Harry nodded. “I’m okay. I just need to sit down a little more often throughout the day. My appetite has picked up too.”

“Good. You could stand to eat a little more, and you know it’ll make Max’s night to hear that you’re hungrier than normal.”

Harry chuckled, but said nothing as he turned and rested on Nasta, who was feeling a little bulkier than usual.

“You lifted weights before you hopped in the shower, didn’t you?”

“We have a home gym now.” Nasta shrugged. “It’s easier to just pop in there for twenty minutes, do some time on the treadmill and lift some weight to keep myself in shape. It helps me wrestle those juveniles too.”

“Make sure you stay in shape, you can’t let those dragons get on top of you…that’s my job.” Harry grinned.

His mates laughed and Harry smiled, judging that they’d been successfully distracted from their previous worry about him. He was supposed to be the worrywart of their mateship, though he understood their concern, but Nasta was right, he just really did not want to hear hypotheticals about that dreaded selective reduction, and he really didn’t want to think on whether he’d have actually gone through with it if he’d been carrying multiples. He wasn’t, he was carrying just his little thunderer and he was grateful for that.

He did think sometimes that his Dracken knew when he was in trouble, when he could handle multiples or when he could only handle a singleton. It wasn’t like he had ‘eggs’ or ovaries or anything like a woman did, so he reasoned that him falling pregnant was less about biology and more about magic and if magic was in charge, then why couldn’t it determine how many children he had or put a block on multiples when he could only handle a singleton?

“Here you go, gorgeous.” Max said, distracting Harry from his thoughts as he put the tray down on the coffee table, handing Harry his cup first, well aware of his current pregnancy sensitivities, though Harry was feeling good, and much more stable today.

“Thank you, sexy.”

“Oh, you’re not going through the crazy urges for sex again, are you?”

Harry chuckled. “No. I think at the moment I’m too tired for anything too vigorous…or anything that remotely involves moving myself from this wonderfully comfortable spot.”

Harry snuggled more into Nasta, who chuckled and squeezed his shoulders while drinking his own black tea.

“When do you think those urges will be back?” Blaise asked, and Harry recognised the look in his purple eyes.

Harry laughed. “I don’t know, they’re random, but I don’t want anything tonight, so if you’re riled up, lover, see if anyone wants some fun and go up now. Or just go use some of those toys and make a night of yourself.”

“You’re the best.” Blaise said, standing to come and kiss him. He drained his tea, placed his cup on the tray and looked at the other three. “You heard him, anyone feeling a bit frisky?”

Draco stood and Harry grinned. Blaise walked to Draco, threw his arms around him, and snogged him. Harry sat there and he could appreciate the both of them together, he got a little twitch of interest, but he really was too tired to do much of anything, and the baby was really running him down today, so he watched as Blaise ran off with Draco and he prepared to give them at least an hour together before he went up to sleep.

“Don’t either of you two want to join them?” He asked.

“I’m up early tomorrow, I could do with keeping all of my energy for that.” Nasta smiled to him.

“I’m on baby duty all night, I’m so not going to get up if I go and sex those two up now. You know how tired I get after sex, I could sleep through a rhino rampage.” Max grinned.

Harry smiled and shifted further onto Nasta and patted the seat behind him. Max immediately moved from his settee over to sit beside him and snuggled into him. Harry smiled.

“This is nice. Wanna watch the news?” He asked.

Nasta bent forward and snagged the remote and switched on the tele. None of them were surprised to find it was on a cartoon channel. He switched over to the news, though Harry was more interested in the local news. He believed it was a good thing to keep up with the local outside world. He didn’t want his family to be seen as anti-social weirdos in the big, isolated house at the end of the street.

“Comfy?” Max asked him.

Harry nodded. “Yes, thank you, love.”

“Anything you need, just ask.”

“I will tonight, I just don’t want to move. I’m too sleepy. As long as you don’t mind, of course.”

“Of course not, love. You say jump, we’ll jump.”

Harry scoffed. “I don’t need you all to jump, just maybe fetch me tea or a snack, and then carry me to bed in an hour or so when Blaise and Draco are done.”
Nasta and Max both laughed and Harry got another squeeze.

“I adore you.” Max declared, kissing his cheek.

Harry swallowed another mouthful of tea and smiled at them both, Max first, and then Nasta. He grimaced and patted his belly.

“Calm down, thunderer.” He said seriously. “You can’t go anywhere, you’re stuck in there until you’re born.”

“Is he kicking again?” Max asked.

Harry hummed and rubbed circles on his own belly. “Damn baby is jumping around like Braiden on a bouncy castle. Maybe he is Blaise’s.” He laughed.

“It doesn’t matter whose he is, he doesn’t belong to just two people, he’s ours, all of ours.” Max insisted.

Harry snuggled in, feeling incredibly happy to hear that. Nothing made his heart melt more than hearing that all of his mates saw his children as their own, despite not being biologically related. It was a very wonderful feeling.

Harry started dozing again, between his two mates, and he could sort of feel when someone took his cup from him, when he was pulled to rest more securely on someone’s wonderfully warm body. It was the baby monitor that woke him up this time, when he heard a high pitched whine.

“Leolin.” He called out, breaking immediately from the grip of sleep.

“I’ve got him, Caru. He just wants a bottle. Max has already made that up for him and I’m going to go and feed him now.” Nasta assured him softly.

Harry was pushed gently over and onto Max’s body and Nasta took the bottle and went upstairs. Harry hummed sleepily and rested back on Max.
“Blaise and Draco should be done soon.” Max told him, stroking his hair and back. “Nas is going to check in on them and then we’ll get you up into bed.”

Harry hummed. “Bed sounds really good right about now.”

“You’ve been dozing for the last few hours, you really need to just be snuggled up in bed.”

“I need a wee too.” Harry said.

“Come on then, let’s sort that out now.”

“I don’t want to move unless I know I can climb into bed.”

“You shouldn’t hold yourself like that when you’re pregnant, love.” Max fretted.

Harry hummed his agreement, sighed and he stood up, stretching gently. He put a hand on his belly and wandered just outside the door to the bathroom.

He yawned as he did his business, his eyes watering. He really needed to go to sleep now. Tomorrow was going to be a rather hellish day…or rather the night was going to be. They’d already decided that the kids were too young to celebrate properly, and none of them wanted to break their nightly routines, but that didn’t mean that they weren’t going to get trick or treaters. This was their first Halloween in this house. They’d only been here for a few months and so far they weren’t the most approachable people, and they didn’t actually know the neighbourhood all that well, or even their neighbours.

Harry had been for a few walks out with the pram, the trips to the supermarket that weren’t really all that often, but he was sure that everyone knew all about them. That they were five men who were in a relationship together and they had a horde of children already. People liked to gossip, and Harry had more than set tongues wagging when he’d unashamedly told his neighbours the truth about himself and his lovers.

He flushed, and then went and washed his hands, before he splashed his face with some cold water and patted it dry with a towel. He felt a little better, more awake. He went back to the smaller living room and he snuggled back into Max.

“Are you feeling okay, Harry?”
Harry hummed. “Just tired. Did you sort out the goodie bags for tomorrow?”

“Yes, they’re on the table by the front door. Those kids are going to be so happy when we hand those over, they’ll get more from us than from everyone else on this street.”

“I bet Nasta wasn’t happy with that.” Harry grinned.

“He got outvoted. Draco wouldn’t hear of anyone outdoing us while we’re so rich and Blaise just wants to show off.”

Harry laughed. “Oh, of course that’s what happened. That sounds just so much like them. Snobbish bastards.”

“I’ll have you know that I agreed with them.”

“You weren’t doing it to show off though, you’re doing it just to see the looks on the faces of the kids you hand those goodie bags to.”

Max grinned at him. “Guilty as charged. Anyway, we beat Nasta down by explaining it’s a holiday and if the kids’ parents don’t limit their sugar intake, that’s on them, it’s not for us to dictate to them based on our own rules for our kids.”

“True enough.” Harry nodded. “Nasta is a logical man, he can see that it’s a special occasion and it’s not up to us to interfere in others parenting skills. We have enough of our own babies to look after.”

Max hummed and went back to stroking and playing with Harry’s hair. Harry was sent almost straight back to dozing and when he next woke up, very unhappily this time he might add, Nasta was back.

“Come on, those two have finished with one another, let’s get you to bed, Caru.” Nasta told him, scooping him up.
Harry curled into his top dominant happily and allowed himself to be carried up to bed. The best thing about sending Blaise and Draco up to bed an hour before was that the sheets were already lovely and warm and he could just lie there and snuggle up to Blaise’s naked body.

He was already in his pyjamas. He’d gone for a bath earlier in the evening, when the kids were having their quiet time, and he’d gotten straight into his pyjamas afterwards. He was glad of that now, as he could just curl right up in bed with his mates and he was asleep almost before his head hit the pillow. He was slightly disturbed when Max climbed into the bed and curled up behind him, but it wasn’t enough to stop him from sleeping again, and when he woke up late the next morning, he didn’t remember even being carried to bed.

Halloween was pretty much a normal day for all of them. Nasta had gone to work and was due home in time for dinner, Max was crawling around the floor with the kids, Draco was sat reading happily while Blaise helped Harry sort out laundry.

Getting into the early evening, the kids had been fed and bathed and were having their quiet time when Nasta flooed back home.

“Daddy!” Calix called out and went speeding towards him in his little onesie pyjamas.

Nasta smiled happily and hefted Calix up and kissed him. He was then, of course, inundated with babies all wanting his attention. It made Harry smile from where he was folding up towels on the settee and getting Blaise to ferry them to their respective bathrooms.

“How are you, love?” Harry asked with a smile.

“Much better now that I’m home with the people I love.” Nasta told him, getting over the fire grate and kneeling to hug as many little bodies as he could as all five kids converged on him.

“Did you have a good day at work? Did you settle down Caronwyn?” Max asked, standing from where he’d been abandoned by the kids.

“Yes, she’s wonderful still. I don’t know how she keeps going after all of these years. I suspect she just enjoys putting all the younger dragons in their place.” Nasta said with a grin.

“Do you want some tea, lover? Dinner will be in an hour.” Max told him.
“If you don’t mind.” Nasta answered.

“Of course not. Harry, my terribly gorgeous mate?”

Harry grinned. “Yes please. I could use a cuppa.”

They both agreed and Max smiled happily at being given an excuse to go into his kitchen and Harry folded the last of the towels and sent Blaise up to their en suite with them and he placed the laundry basket on the floor and he settled back with a happy sigh.

“How have you both been?” Nasta asked, coming to sit beside him and he laid a hand on his belly.

“He’s been nice and calm today. He’s had his moments and I’ve done his kick chart for today, but overall we’ve had a good day. It’s almost like he knows that today was going to be difficult for me.”

“And you?” Nasta asked.

Harry smiled and bent to kiss him. “I’ve been very well looked after in your absence, love.”

“Of course we’ve looked after him. He’s barely moved all day, just as it should be.” Draco said. “I haven’t moved much either.” He grinned, indicating the book he’d put to the side.

“I’ve done all the washing, Blaise has happily been ferrying the clean, folded laundry to where it belongs, but…yeah, I’ve had a bit of playtime with these little munchkins, Max and Blaise handled bath time and everything has been calm and pleasant.”

“I’m glad.” Nasta said with a smile, kissing Harry again.

“Daddy, book.”
Nasta smiled at Tegan and hefted her, and the book in her hand, up onto his lap, making sure that her penguin came too.

Tegan opened the book and she started reading to Nasta, looking at him and pointing to the pictures, and he would nod and smile at her, making himself look interested in the stream of babble that was completely unintelligible.

The first of the trick or treaters started knocking and Harry heard the childish voices down the hall where Max pretended to be terrified of the fake masks and costumes, like the dope that he was, before he handed out the rather large goodie bags to enthusiastic appreciation.

“Draco, it’s your turn next!” Max said as he came in with a tray of cups. He handed Harry his cup first and snatched a kiss from him, which made Harry giggle as he sat back and rested on Nasta.

“I don’t mind answering the door next.” Draco insisted.

“Remember to act scared of the costumes. They’re kids at the end of the day and it amuses them to see adults scared of their awful costumes.”

Draco waved that away and Harry knew he wouldn’t make a fool of himself, not even for the kids that knocked for sweets. That was going to have to be Max’s job tonight.

After dinner though, Harry was going to go upstairs and he was going to lay in bed, and he would flick through his photo album while he reminisced. He’d been quiet and a little subdued all day, but today of all days, his mates knew why, and they had been so very accommodating and respectful of his feelings. He’d been very well looked after, from tea, to snacks, to letting him go off to have a moment alone, despite him being pregnant, and he was very grateful that they allowed him his needed moments. He loved them all so very much.

“Right, I think these little beauties need to be in bed.” Max declared, putting his empty cup down and going to hunt down the sleepiest looking babies.

Max took Farren and Regan up first, while Blaise tried to settle Calix, their most active, most alert baby.

Nasta cuddled with Tegan, murmuring to her in Welsh, and Harry slid himself to the floor to take control of Braiden.

“Do you want a story, Braiden?” Harry asked, grabbing a book.
“Yes, Mummy.” Tegan answered, and she slid straight from Nasta’s lap to the floor and came to occupy his lap.

Harry laughed and kissed her while wrapping his arm around her. Of course Braiden came over too and took up the other part of his lap. Harry kissed him too and settled them both in, wrapping his other arm around Braiden and cuddling them in before cracking open the book and he started reading aloud.

The door knocking disturbed them, but Harry paused only for a moment before bringing the kids attention back to the book while Draco got up to go and answer the trick or treaters.

Max came back into the room and he took Calix from Blaise, seeing that Harry was reading to both Braiden and Tegan. Harry smiled at Max gratefully before turning a page and carrying on the story.

It was Blaise’s turn to get the door next, and Draco took the two remaining kids up to their cots and Harry waved his arms at Nasta, who chuckled and lifted him from the floor and sat Harry beside himself.

Blaise came back to them and he settled behind Harry, giving his cheek a kiss for good measure.

“Nas, it’s your turn to get the door next.” Blaise insisted.

Nasta nodded his understanding, but it wasn’t even two minutes later when the door knocked and he had to get up. Harry turned to let him stand and he cuddled with Blaise, smiling up at him and lifting his hand to stroke over Blaise’s head. His hair was growing in nicely now and Harry loved playing with it.

“It’s getting longer.” Blaise smiled.

Harry nodded. “You’re beginning to look like yourself again.”

“How are your muscles holding up?”

“Good. I think I’m almost completely healed. The baby belly isn’t bothering me as much as I thought it might do, either. That’s with our thunderer being rather active too.”

“He’s going to be a wiggly baby, I can already see it. As slippery as an eel and as jumpy as a beached fish.”
Harry laughed. “I’ll be sure to tell him that you compared him to an eel and a dying fish when he’s born.”

“Hey, you two, want to come keep me company in the kitchen?” Max called out, moving to bend over the back of the settee.

“Sure, Max.” Harry smiled standing immediately and letting Max pull him to the kitchen. He had Blaise on his other side too, pulling him along as well.

“It won’t be long. I did most of the prep already.” Max told them as he let go of them both and went to get what he needed.

Harry sat at his seat at the table, Blaise next to him, while Max sorted dinner, something in the oven already smelt heavenly and it made Harry’s belly grumble.

He enjoyed watching Max cooking, it made him feel cared for and loved. At the Dursleys, he’d been forced to cook from a young age, and though he didn’t mind cooking now and again, for his family, there was something special about having Max take care of it all and be so happy to do it as well.

Harry stood, with a little bit of difficulty and help from the table top, and he went to wrap his arms around Max’s waist.

“Hey, hey. What is it? Are you okay?” Max asked, sharing a look with Blaise as he turned around and hugged him.

“Yeah, I just…I love you so much, and I appreciate everything you do.” Harry said tearily.

Max’s face softened with understanding and he hugged Harry tighter and bent to kiss him.

“You having a pregnancy moment?” He asked.

Harry nodded. “I think so.”

“You know I love cooking, Harry. Nothing makes me happier than knowing I’ve looked after my family by preparing a meal for you all knowing that it’ll keep you happy and healthy. I truly do love doing it.”

“I think…I think I just needed to tell you that I appreciate it. That I appreciate you. They…those people forced me to cook all the time, and I was too young and I was often hurt because of it, and no one ever said thank you and I wasn’t even allowed to eat what I’d cooked. I just…I never want you to ever feel as unappreciated as I did.”

“What brought this on?” Nasta asked as he came to lay a hand on his shoulder.

“Pregnancy hormones, I think.” Max told him as he hugged Harry tighter. “Harry, love, not once have I ever felt unappreciated by any of you. Just looking at your faces as you take your first bite of food is enough for me, but you all thank me verbally as well. I love all of you, even those little monsters we call kids. I want to look after you all.”

Harry smiled and calmed himself down from his hormonal episode. Nasta led him back to the table and sat in his seat, pulling him onto his lap and Harry snorted, but said nothing as he snuggled in.

“I guess our thunderer is running you around today.” Blaise said.

“I always get these emotional upheavals while pregnant.” Harry sighed. “I don’t like them, but there’s very little I can do to control them. It comes on so bloody fast and then I just need to cry…or scream.”

Nasta chuckled. “We understand, Caru.”

The door knocking interrupted them and Nasta cursed.

“Max, it’s your turn, go pretend to be scared of five year olds in wigs.” Blaise ordered.

“If you let my food burn I’ll punish you sexually.” Max swore.

“And now I’m going to wait until you’ve left the room to turn up the heat.” Blaise said simply, with a smirk.
“Don’t you dare! I mean it!” Max said from halfway down the hall.

Harry laughed. “He’s such a dick.”

“I think you mean he has an amazing dick, Harry.” Blaise told him.

Harry turned and laughed loudly. “Didn’t you get enough from Draco last night?”

“Harry, love, do you not know me at all?” Blaise grinned. “I can never get enough of you men.”

“I know that feeling.” Harry said. “Our baby here likes turning me into a mess, and I don’t know what it is about this pregnancy, but my Dracken needs more fluids than usual, and only one kind will do where before all cravings were satisfied with blood. Now I just need sex.”

“Some submissives take all kinds of fluids throughout their pregnancy.” Nasta told him. “Blood, sweat, saliva, semen. They crave them all.”

“Maybe I’m craving sweat too then, because I lick enough of it from your bodies during sex.” Harry laughed.

“You also get saliva from our kisses.” Blaise pointed out.

Harry frowned. “Hmm, so really the only fluid I’m missing from any of you is blood.”

“If you want any, all you need to do is ask, bello.” Blaise assured him.

Harry smiled. “Thank you, I know I can always ask, but I just don’t want it. There is no craving for blood at all. Our thunderer just wants to be different from the start. Maybe he is Draco’s.”

The three of them laughed and shared a look.
“Damn, now you’re making me all hot.” Blaise declared, bending forward to kiss him. “I really can’t get enough of you men.”

“That’s what I like hearing from your mouth. Unending love, and not that you’re going to burn my cooking.” Max said, joining them in the kitchen once more, but before he could reach the cooker again the door knocked. “Damn it, I looked down the drive and there was no fucker there!”

“It’s my turn now, seeing as Draco is taking his sweet time with the kids.”

“Ah, Calix is running riot up there. He’s refusing to sleep, as usual.” Max said, waving the knife he was using at Blaise, who rolled his eyes and went to the door.

“Maybe I should go and help him.” Harry said.

“No, leave Draco to handle it, Cariad.” Nasta told him, holding him tighter and slipping a hand around him to rub at his belly.

“He better hurry up, this will be done in ten minutes.” Max said, checking the timer on the oven.

“Are we having lasagne?” Harry asked hopefully.

Max grinned at him. “We are, lover. Good nose you have there.”

Harry snorted. “I’m not little red riding hood.”

“You could try…you know, I’m sure we have a red skirt lurking around here somewhere, and a red hat…we could all pretend to eat you for Halloween.”

“That wouldn’t be scary because I enjoy the four of you eating me.” Harry quipped.

Max just laughed and continued slicing cucumber for a side salad. Blaise came back, but once again the door knocked.

“I’ve got it.” Draco called out from the hall.

“Oh, thank Merlin.” Blaise declared, sliding back into his seat. “I’m sure some of those kids are knocking twice because of the amount of sweets we’re giving them.”

“I told you it was a bad idea.” Nasta said.

“Not tonight, love.” Blaise insisted. “I’m getting the twinge in the back of my head that promises a terrible headache later.”

They all gave him a concerned look.

“You can come and lie down with me upstairs after dinner if you need to.”

Blaise shook his head. “I’ll go to one of the unused rooms, Harry. I will not intrude upon your grieving.”

“It’s less grieving and more reminiscing.” Harry said. “I just look at my photos, run my thoughts around in circles and then cry myself to sleep. If you’re going to be sleeping anyway, that won’t disturb me. You wouldn’t disturb me even if you were awake.”

Blaise shook his head. “I’m sure I’ll be fine.”

“No. You know what, you’re coming up with me. You had a serious head injury, Blaise. You can’t just brush that off. We’re here to look after you and I don’t mind you coming up with me.” Harry said sternly. “I do get upset on Halloween, I do like thinking about my parents and looking at photos, but they’re dead. They’re gone, Blaise and you’re not. You’re here with me and I want to look after you! I’d never forgive myself if I was stuck thinking of the past and not focusing on the present time, or on my future. I don’t want anything to happen to you.”

“Nothing is going to happen, Prezioso. I have a headache, that’s all.”
“Which Healer Odell told you was a warning sign to rest.” Harry said. “You’re not completely healed, Blaise, neither of us are, despite how much we might want to be. We have to look after ourselves.”

Blaise sighed, but he smiled. “I’ll see how I feel after we’ve eaten. Above all else, I would never want to upset you further today.”

“You won’t upset me.” Harry said before he reached over and kissed Blaise.

“Stop eating one another, I’m plating up. Nas, please go and find out what’s taking Draco so long. Maybe those kids have jumped him or something.” Max insisted.

Nasta picked Harry up and the settled him back in the chair before going to find Draco. It was already bad enough that dinner was going to be continuously interrupted by trick or treaters when they usually enjoyed this peaceful time together, eating and talking about the day that they’d all had.

Max served Harry and Blaise first, as the only two sat at the table, and he placed Draco and Nasta’s plates down before getting his own and coming to sit with them.

Draco came into the kitchen first and he just rolled his eyes and sat down opposite Blaise with a sigh.

“A stream of kids came up the driveway, as soon as I handed out goodie bags to those at the door, more came. Hopefully, in another hour, they’ll all be home and in bed.”

Harry looked at the clock and it was gone seven at night. “I would imagine they would be, maybe a few older kids here or there, but it should be wrapping up soon.”

Nasta finally came back into the kitchen and he sat at the last plate and took a drink of water before he started eating with the rest of them.

“So, Nas, how was work?” Blaise asked before popping food into his mouth.

“Not as hectic as usual.” Nasta told them. “All the eggs from spring have hatched, the juveniles that are left are all strong and being cared for by their Mothers. We’ve had a really peaceful rearing this year.”
“That just means you’re in for a shit next year.” Max laughed.

Nasta gave him a smirk. “Possibly. But the females that never laid eggs this year will soon be displaying to the males and we’ll start the breeding season all over again.”

“Is that big, nasty Ukrainian Ironbelly still there?” Harry asked curiously. “The one who tries to impregnate all of the females and kills the other males if he catches them near a female?”

“No, thankfully we sent him back to the Ukraine. He really was a right piece of work.” Nasta said. “More than half the juveniles we have at the moment are hybrid Ironbellies.”

Harry chuckled. “So…he’s the dragon version of Max?”

“Hey! I’ll have you know I would never try to kill these three gorgeous men for going after you.” Max grinned. “I very much enjoy watching them with you.”

Harry laughed along with the others. Of course the door knocking interrupted them. Max sighed.

“I think it’s my turn.” He said, standing up and going to answer the demand for sweets.

Harry ate more of his lasagne and thought about whether or not he wanted a cup of tea afterwards. He looked at Blaise consideringly, noticing how pale he’d gotten and how his face was pinched with pain. Maybe going straight up to bed would be better, Blaise really looked like he needed to lie down. Harry hated that Blaise still got blinding headaches and that there were still reminders of that hideous fight they’d gone through. At least Blaise was getting much better at names and faces. He still said the wrong thing once in a while, but it was becoming less frequent now.

“Damn kids.” Max grinned as he came back to the table, retaking his seat. “One was dressed like a dragon. I could barely keep from laughing out loud.”

“Did you see if there were…?”
“I looked about as much as I could with how dark it is out there now and the groups do seem to be thinning out.”

“Good. I actually want to sit and relax a little.” Draco insisted, already finished with his food, his knife and fork politely placed on the empty plate.

“If you’re done make the tea, Draco.” Max told him.

Draco nodded and stood, taking his plate to the sink before he set the kettle to boiling, laying out five cups.

“I’ve got dessert for you all.” Max said happily. “I never made it, Molly came around to deliver it and told me not to tell you, Harry.”

“Please tell me its treacle tart.” Harry smiled.

“It is treacle tart.” Max told him, watching happily as Harry’s smile widened to a grin.

“I’m going to have to thank her tomorrow.” Harry said. “She knows it’s my favourite.”

“She thought that a little slice of happy today would make you feel a little better.”

Harry chuckled. “A little slice of happy?”

“Well, that’s what it is to you, isn’t it?” Max teased.

Harry chuckled, but he nodded as he finished off the last of his food and folded his knife and fork together on the plate.

“Where did you even hide it from me? My sense of smell at the moment is incredible, I’m sure I would have sniffed it out immediately once it was in the house.”
“I put it in the microwave.” Max told him. “We rarely use it, and it’s usually only me who ever goes in there, so it’s been right here, in this room, all day.”

“That’s evil.” Harry declared, but he couldn’t keep from grinning.

Max hummed with his mouth full, eating the last of his food before standing and taking his own and Harry’s plate to the sink and he went to the microwave as Draco poured the tea. Max pulled out the covered tart and took down a knife from the knife block.

“Do you want a big piece, Harry?” Max asked him.

“What a ridiculous question, love. Cut four little slices and then just give me the rest.” Harry giggled.

Max laughed, but ignored the joked order. He did cut Harry a rather large piece and as Draco handed him a cup of honey tea, Max gave him a piece of tart and a fork.

Harry hummed happily, eating his tart and leaving his tea to cool. He didn’t want to ruin the taste of the tart by drinking his tea now.

“Happy?” Max grinned at him.

“Yes, thank you.” Harry said with a smile. “I do love treacle tart.”

“So we’ve noticed.” Draco smirked.

Harry poked his tongue out at him childishly, but went back to his tart. He was very full when he eventually finished and as he sipped on his tea, he watched Max clear up and get ready to start washing up. First though he got down his potions’ case, the bastard didn’t even need to stretch to reach it while Harry needed a chair, and Max pulled out a familiar potion. It was one of the very strong headache potions that had been given to Blaise. It got rid of his pain but it also completely knocked him out for several hours too.

“It’s too early to take it.”
“It’s not a sleeping potion, you can sleep after the effects of it wear off, Blaise. You need to take this.” Max told him seriously, placing the opened vial by Blaise’s cup.

Blaise sighed and rubbed his head. He was visibly in pain and Harry hated it, but no one looked more guilty than Draco.

“Come to bed with me.” Harry said softly. “Take your potion and you can fall asleep in my lap while I use your head as a book rest for my photo album.”

Blaise was surprised into laughing. “Oh, ow.” He held his head but carried on laughing.

“Please don’t use Blaise’s head as a book rest, Harry.” Nasta sighed. “That’s what Max’s head is for.”

Harry laughed this time and grinned at his two oldest mates.

“I’ve lovingly spent my time making you all a delicious meal and this is the abuse I get afterwards!” Max huffed. “You’re all bastards.”

“It was a lovely meal, thank you, Max.” Harry said with a smile. “Come on, Blaise. Drink that and then come with me. It’s time for me to think about the past.”

Blaise nodded and threw the entire vial back in one go. He shuddered, swallowed hard, then shuddered again before draining his cup of tea.

Harry kissed Max, Nasta and then Draco before taking Blaise’s hand and tugging him up the stairs and to the master bedroom. Harry helped Blaise strip and get into his pyjamas while his head throbbed and spiked with pain every time he bent over, tucked him up before he went to check on his children.

Once assured that they were all asleep and safe, he went back to the master bedroom, checked on his twin girls in their twin cots, before he stripped himself and got into his own pyjamas.

Harry smiled at Blaise before sighing as he went to the bedside table and opened the drawer, pulling out his photo album.

“How are you sure you don’t mind me here?” Blaise asked, watching the flicker of emotion pass clearly across Harry’s face.
“I don’t mind. You’ll be asleep soon anyway.” Harry replied as he climbed onto the bed and settled himself in. He pulled Blaise sideways, so that he was resting his head in Harry’s lap while he was lying on his belly. A small hand immediately fell to the growing hair, stroking through it gently, fingertips massaging soothingly over his scalp.

Blaise let out a breath and in the near silence of the bedroom, only one dim lamp on Harry’s side switched on, and with that one small, miraculous hand stroking his head, Blaise closed his eyes and let the effects of the potion wash over him, chasing away the skull splitting headache he’d developed and easing him into a sleep that bordered on unconsciousness.

Harry watched his mate as his muscles finally relaxed and the furrow in his brow finally smoothened out. He knew then that Blaise was asleep and finally out of pain. It was difficult to bend to kiss Blaise, what with his four month pregnant belly in the way and the awful angle, but he did manage to brush his lips over Blaise’s head at least.

He lay back more comfortably on the pillow propped behind him and he opened his album to stare longingly at the first picture. He again wondered what his parents might think of what had happened to him, the same as he did every year. Would they have cared that he was a Dracken? Would they have accepted the fact that he was gay and in love with four other men? Would they have accepted Nasta’s age considering he would have been the same age as they were? Nasta was a month younger than his Mother and a month older than his Father, would that have bothered them? Harry couldn’t imagine a life without Nasta. He loved him so much, with all of his heart, and he hated the thought that if his parents had been alive they might have convinced him to pass Nasta over as a mate because of his age. The thought of it was like a physical pain.

At one point he would have given anything and everything for his parents back, but now…now that he’d created his own family, he couldn’t wish that things were different without changing what he had now, and he just couldn’t do that. He couldn’t give up his mates, or his children, and it was perhaps that which upset him the most. Knowing that he wouldn’t give anything to have his parents back like he would have when he was younger. He wouldn’t give up his children. He wouldn’t give up his mates. He wouldn’t trade the life he had now for one where his parents would have lived and he felt so guilty for that. It made him feel awful and despicable…another pair of tears rolled down his cheeks.

Would his parents have loved his children? Or would the amount he had now have made them anxious or angry? It was awful not knowing what they would have truly thought, how they would have reacted to everything. Others could tell him how they thought his parents would have reacted, what they believed that his parents would have done or thought about everything, but for him, he just wasn’t sure and it was awful for him.

He took a breath and turned the page, looking at the next two photos. He thought of his mates’ families, all of the Maddisons. Aneirin and Marianna. Even Idris, Nerys, Sanex…hell, Dain and Kailen. Even Lucius and Narcissa were more on board now. He looked at them and surely, surely if they could love their children and their lifestyles, his own parents, who had died for him, just to keep him safe, would have been able to as well. He liked to think so. It helped that Remus and Dumbledore, Hagrid and the Weasleys, they accepted him and his mates, his creature status and his lifestyle.

He blinked and felt another tear roll down his cheek. He hated Halloween. He hated that on this very day, perhaps at this very hour, eighteen years ago his parents had been murdered in their own home.
It had been for nothing, a damn prophecy that had claimed that either he or Neville would be the downfall of Voldemort, and in the end, they had both sort of been involved with his downfall, as Neville had come with him to the Ministry. He had been there that night and it had been for him, and Luna, Ginny, Hermione and Ron that he had fought so hard to kill Voldemort when he’d been possessed. Hermione and Ron had been the only witnesses to his possession, apart from Dumbledore that was, and that had been why they’d turned on him in the end.

Harry bit his lip and laid his hand on Blaise’s head, stroking to calm himself with the reminder that he was loved. He was surrounded by those who loved him and those who depended on him. The past was the past, he meant it when he said he had to look to the future, no matter how much it upset him to let go of his parents. They were no longer here and he couldn’t let their death interfere with his daily life.

He patted his belly and smiled. He had his new baby boy, his little thunderer, coming along in a few months. He was over halfway through his pregnancy and his baby was now viable if he went into labour. His quintuplets had been born at four months gestation and that was why Leolin’s wings had been raw and weeping.

Harry turned another page and moved his hand from Blaise’s head over to his shoulder, stroking gently, even though he knew nothing would wake Blaise at the moment, not for another few hours at least thanks to the potion he’d taken. Blaise didn’t like taking them, no one liked him needing them, because it meant acknowledging that Blaise was still suffering, but sometimes they were necessary.

Harry sighed and turned the page, smiling sadly at the moving pictures. His life had changed drastically on Halloween eighteen years ago. Not least because he was sent to the Dursleys, but even that couldn’t hurt him now. They were in prison. Dudley was being tried soon for a multitude of minor offenses, including animal cruelty, but he couldn’t be tried for anything he’d done to Harry, as he had been a minor at the time. As Harry had said to Richard, Dudley hadn’t been the main issue. That had always been Vernon and Petunia and he had his justice now. He would definitely have to make the time to sit down with his mates and tell them all of it, everything that had been done to him, show them the pictures, and let them know the whole sordid tale. They deserved to know the truth, he knew that, but that didn’t make it any easier.

Harry continued flipping through the photo album until he reached the end. He put the album aside and he went to use the bathroom. He checked in on both nurseries. Leolin on his own to keep him safer and then the five in the other nursery. All of them were sound asleep and he smiled as he tucked them in, making sure that Tegan had her penguin, Regan had his bear and Calix had at least one dummy in the cot with him. He was more likely to stay quiet if he woke up if he had a dummy he could suck on.

Harry went back to the bedroom and he slid himself under the covers. He snuggled up to Blaise, settling his baby belly more comfortably and he sighed heavily. He closed his eyes and tried not to think. At least his little thunderer had finally gone to sleep, or whatever version of sleep unborn babies had in utero. He’d have to look that up tomorrow.

He slipped his arm more securely over Blaise and just absorbed the presence of one of his beloved mates. Perhaps it would be easier to bring one of them into the room with him on Halloween night, especially if they were going to sleep. He benefited from having a living, breathing person with him, but he didn’t feel like he was being watched or judged. He settled himself and he drifted off to sleep. He wondered if having someone here would also ease the nightmares that usually came tonight, because of his heavy thoughts. He hoped so, he hated having nightmares.

Three hours later Nasta eased open the bedroom door and looked into the room, before entering when he saw two lumps under the duvet.

“They’re both sleeping.” Nasta announced at a whisper.

“Good. Does Blaise look better?” Max asked.

“Much better. He’s regained his colour too.” Nasta said, looking critically at them both. “Harry doesn’t even have tear tracks.”

“Do you think he’s finally coming to terms with it?” Max asked.

“Perhaps the sentencing of those Muggle monsters helped with more things than we realised.” Draco said, stripping and finding his own pyjamas.

“I think you might be right. Maybe it’s all falling into place for him.”

“Do you think he’ll ever tell us what happened?” Max questioned.

“He will, one day.” Nasta said surely. “When he’s ready.”

“These girls are out of it, do you think they’ll even wake up for their feed?” Max asked, peering at his twin daughters and looking at how deeply they were both breathing.

“Place the bottles on the bedside table and we’ll see.” Nasta sighed. “I have baby duty tonight, so put them on my side and then climb into bed. I don’t want Harry disturbed.”

“I’ll get behind Blaise.” Max said. “I’m the heaviest and me climbing into bed will be most likely to disturb Harry…Blaise would sleep through me jumping on the bed and dancing the hula.”

Nasta nodded, smiling at the mental image of Max dancing the hula in a grass skirt and a coconut bra.
“Draco, there’s more room over here than behind Harry, climb up.” Max insisted.

Draco, who came out of their en suite, nodded and climbed carefully onto the bed. Harry murmured softly, wordlessly, but he didn’t move or wake up.

Nasta growled to him lightly, letting him know that he was safe and that his mates were around him. Harry’s body relaxed immediately and he didn’t move again. Nasta left out a silent breath as Max managed to safely climb into the bed too. They shifted and wriggled, getting comfortable, before they both settled, Max spooning Draco, who had left a bit of space between himself and Blaise, who was on his front and not easy to snuggle with.

Nasta made sure the twins’ bottles were within easy reach, that both baby monitors for both nurseries were on and registering noise, and he turned off the lamp that Harry had left on. He eased onto the bed, growling reassuringly to try and keep Harry asleep.

He shifted and made himself comfortable and then let out a breath. He curled up behind Harry and carefully slipped an arm over him and onto Blaise’s back. It felt good to touch them both when they’d been up here, away from him, for four hours. It felt good to touch them both, to smell them and reassure himself that they were both fine, despite their respective issues.

Nasta fell to sleep himself, content in the knowledge that his family were safe and that tomorrow, the first of November, everything would be fine and back to normal. All of them were due a good block of complete normalcy after everything they’d been through.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Hi, lovelies. It’s been a while, I know. I was so determined to get Broken Wings finished and posted that it completely drained me of any Dracken inspiration for a while afterwards. No more Dracken spin-off fics for me for a while, I don’t think.

It is also our 7 year anniversary today, so happy 7 years RotD and to all you readers, lovelies. I almost missed this anniversary, as it snuck up on me, as a result this chapter was rather last minute, and as a result it was only written in the last few days. This has had a serious impact on chapter length, and the quality of the editing, so there are bound to be a few mistakes through it, for this I apologise in advance and if you catch one, please leave a message and I’ll fix it. But I just wanted something out for the anniversary, and hopefully this chapter now breaks the block that Broken Wings put on my Dracken inspiration.

A huge thank you to all of you who have read and reviewed thus far, here’s to another year of Drackens, and hopefully a few more chapters than I managed to get out last year.

StarLight Massacre. X
Court Talks

Chapter Notes

Last Time

Nasta made sure the twins’ bottles were within easy reach, that both baby monitors for both nurseries were on and registering noise, and he turned off the lamp that Harry had left on. He eased onto the bed, growling reassuringly to try and keep Harry asleep.

He shifted and made himself comfortable and then let out a breath. He curled up behind Harry and carefully slipped an arm over him and onto Blaise’s back. It felt good to touch them both when they’d been up here, away from him, for four hours. It felt good to touch them both, to smell them and reassure himself that they were both fine, despite their respective issues.

Nasta fell to sleep himself, content in the knowledge that his family were safe and that tomorrow, the first of November, everything would be fine and back to normal. All of them were due a good block of complete normalcy after everything they’d been through.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Eighteen – Court Talks

Harry was nervous that morning, and he knew that his mates could see it. It was now November, and all morning they’d kept shooting him looks, though they hadn’t actually said anything yet, but it was only increasing Harry’s nervousness. He hadn’t said anything to his mates about what he’d planned for today, because he didn’t want to mention it and then back out of it, which was looking increasingly likely as he picked at his lunch, his stomach tied in knots.

He leapt out of his skin and his breath hitched audibly when someone touched his back and he flinched away from them. Max, the one who had touched him, sat next to him, looking worried. Harry couldn’t meet his eyes, instead he stared at the table top.

“Harry, honey, are you feeling okay?” Max asked. “Did you have a nightmare last night?”

Harry nodded truthfully, looking at his plate before dropping his fork and pushing it away. He turned and wrapped himself around Max and thought about what he was planning to do. He knew he needed to do it, he knew he needed to tell them, but that didn’t make it at all easy and it didn’t make him want to rush to tell them either.
“Oh, love, why didn’t you say sooner?” Max asked him gently, clutching him tightly in his big, safe arms. Harry tried to burrow in deeper, squashing himself impossibly closer.

“I don’t want to talk about it just yet.” He said quietly, trying not to disturb his eating children.

“The kids will be going down for their naps soon.” Draco pointed out, trying not to push him, but giving him options if he needed them.

“I know.” Harry replied, keeping his face pressed against Max’s chest.

“Nas, get Harry some tea, please?” Max asked.

“No.” Harry said, and that really worried his mates, as he rarely ever refused tea.

“Harry, you’re worrying us now.” Blaise said, abandoning his own lunch in favour of Harry.

Harry shook his head. “Soon.”

“Soon what?” Draco asked.

“I’ll tell you soon.” He said desperately. “Just not right now.”

“Okay, I think everyone needs to back off.” Blaise said, making a conscious effort to control the urge to smother Harry. “Just…let’s calm down, finish lunch and get these kids up in their cots and down for their naps.”

“No naps.” Braiden took that moment to interject. “Daddy, no.”

That even made Harry peek out from Max’s chest and he managed a very small, weak chuckle.

“Well, I think the after lunch routine just got a little harder…and longer.” Draco said.
“Speaking of last night…” Max trailed off lecherously.

Harry managed a giggle at that and Max actually puffed up a little at managing to make Harry feel even slightly better.

“We won’t have to struggle to put them down today.” Harry said, resting himself back on Max.

“Are you planning on leaving them awake, or have you slipped them some sleeping draught?” Max teased.

Harry snorted. “Neither. Your parents are taking them off our hands for the afternoon.”

“They never said anything about it to me.” Max said, and Harry could actually hear his eyebrows lowering in confusion.

“I told them not to.”

“You wanted to surprise us.” Nasta said.

Harry sighed and looked at the clock. Myron and Richard would be here soon to collect the kids. It was now or never, he was committed and with the nightmare, his mates would be too curious to hide this any longer. They’d want to know why he’d had a nightmare out of the blue, they’d want to know what it had been about, or if anything had set him off. It was already too late to turn back now.

“It’s not so much a surprise, it’s more that I just couldn’t bring myself to say anything.” He admitted.

“Well, you now have our undivided attention. What is playing on your mind?” Draco asked him.

“Our attention is divided still. The kids need us, at least for a little while longer.”

“Do you need the nappy bags packed up?” Max asked by way of a distraction.
“I’ve done it already.” Harry said.

They were all silent, listening to the kids shriek and laugh as they ate their lunches, and played with their food, but they were interrupted by the floo chiming and Harry breathed deeply to calm himself as his heart automatically lurched in his chest.

“Boys?” Richard’s voice called out.

“Ganda!” Tegan shouted out.

“Ganda Itch!” Braiden joined in and Harry had to laugh as all the kids started clamouring.

Richard came jogging into the kitchen, his arms wide and he started making a fuss of the kids. Myron was calmer, but he was smiling at his mate.

“We’ll get them quickly over to ours so you can finish your talk.” Myron said. “Once they’ve finished eating, Richard.” He added as Richard went to take a fussing Calix from his highchair.

“He’s not going to finish eating now.” Richard said, as he undid the straps and Calix immediately got to his feet and stood up so that Richard could pick him up.

“I’m still a little confused.” Max said, still frowning.

“Oh, care bear, that’s not difficult to manage, is it?” Richard teased.

“Don’t call me that.” Max sighed heavily.

“What are you confused over?” Myron asked. “Harry, have you told them why we’re taking the kids this afternoon?”

Harry shook his head, still buried in Max’s chest.
“Do you still want to go ahead with this?” Richard asked as he held Calix securely on his shoulder. “You can change your mind, you know. It’s completely up to you.”

“Now is the right time, but that doesn’t make it easy.” Harry said.

“Is this about the court proceedings?” Nasta asked perceptively.

Harry nodded. Immediately Max held him tighter and his large hand stroked over his back, comforting him.

“I couldn’t say before…I…if I’d said anything about it, I might have backed out. I didn’t want to do that. So I…I sorted this out and set it up so that I could hold my nerve.”

“Right, we’ll get these kids gone now and you can say what you need to. We’ll have them back by seven in the evening.” Myron said authoritatively.

“Just remember, Harry, they’re in prison. They can’t hurt you anymore.” Richard told him as he picked up Tegan and then, with a smile, he left to floo them over to his home, where Ashleigh was waiting.

Myron went for Farren and Braiden, their two biggest boys, and then it was like a production line as Richard came back to collect Eva and Ave, then Myron was back to take Regan and Leolin, while Richard came back a final time to get the nappy bags. He was carrying a large folder and he handed it to Harry with a soft touch to his cheek and a kiss to the forehead.

“Remember your strength, Harry. I know that you can do this.” He said, before shouldering the bags and flooing out, leaving Harry still snuggled into Max, but on the settee in their living room and not in the kitchen.

“Do you want tea now, Harry?” Nasta asked. “Or do you want to just jump right in?”

Harry swallowed hard, which ultimately made up his mind for him as his mouth was so dry that his tongue stuck to the roof of his mouth.
“Tea please.” He forced out, as he clutched the folder in his hands in a white-knuckled grip.

Nasta nodded and went to sort out tea for everyone while his mates all settled around him on the one settee.

Their top dominant came back far too soon with a tray of tea and Nasta forced all of them to take a deep drink, which clued Harry in that he’d given them all a dose of calming draught for this talk. Once they had all settled, putting him in the middle so that they could hear him, and see the folder in his lap, they looked at him expectantly.

“I never wanted anyone to know about this.” Harry said softly.

“They deserved what they got for what they did to you.” Max told him.

Harry nodded. “Now on the other side of the court case, I’m glad that I sought justice. I wanted to forget about it, and about them. I never wanted it all dragged up again, I never wanted to relive those memories, it was painful enough the first time, without doing it all again. But I’m also glad that I’ve seen them punished for what they did to me, for everything they’ve caused me to suffer through during the fifteen years I was with them.”

“When you’re ready, Harry.” Draco told him when he’d fallen silent, reaching out to lay a comforting hand on his knee.

Harry nodded and reached out for his tea, so that he could wet his mouth a little so that he could talk. His mates were patient with him, even though he could feel the anxiousness all but oozing from them, and he was grateful to them for waiting for him to be ready. Or at least a little more settled as he would never fully be ready to do this. He knew the anger was about to seep in and he hated it, but at least telling them the truth of what he’d been through would go a long way to settling his mates and stopping them from thinking of all the awful imaginings that Harry knew they were doing when they thought he couldn’t hear them.

“I’m not really sure where to begin.” He admitted. “But the court case started with…with the bedroom.”

“Wherever you want to start is fine, Harry. We’ll keep up.” Nasta assured him.
They were sat so that they could each have the best view of him and the folder in his hands. Draco and Blaise, as the smaller dominants, were sat to either side of him. Nasta was beside Blaise, and Max was beside Draco.

Richard had told him that he’d left the folder in the order that it had been shown in the court, so Harry thought it would be best to follow the same order.

He opened the folder with a slow, shaking hand, and no one reacted as they saw the perfectly ordinary house. Harry flipped through these pictures quickly, showing all the lavish furniture, the five TV sets, the computers and the three perfectly ordinary bedrooms. He knew what was coming though, and as he flipped the page again he felt all four of his mates stiffen as they saw the door with the large padlocks and deadbolts attached, a little cat flap in the bottom.

Harry flipped the page again after a small pause to let them take it in and he could all but feel the tension in his mates as they saw the large, glossy photo of his plain, carpeted bedroom, so at odds with the rest of the luxurious house. His furniture was obviously second hand, his bed was clearly meant for a toddler and there were odd stains on everything; the carpet, the battered, worn furniture and even the walls. The bed was much too small for a teenager, the pillow was so old and used that it was flat, and he had a thin, ratty blanket for a duvet which wouldn’t have done anything to keep him warm...in fact it hadn’t, which was likely why he insisted on being near the middle of the bed, his mates around him to share body heat, with a nice, heavy duvet over him.

“They had a four bedroomed house, and I only got this spare room when I was eleven, and my Hogwarts letters started arriving.” Harry explained softly, breaking the tense silence.

“It’s too clean.” Nasta said. “It’s been bleached. You can see the paler marks on everything where the bleach has removed the colour.”

“The police saw it right away.” Harry nodded. “Apparently the room smelt so heavily of cleaning fluids they had to open the windows, but...they knew what to look for, and how to look for it. Just...please be calm.”

“I put calming draught in the tea.” Nasta told him. “We’ll be calm.”

Harry sucked in a breath, he could sense Nasta glaring at the others above his head, a silent warning to hold their tempers in check, just in case their emotions overwhelmed the potion in their systems.

Harry sighed and slid his finger under the edge of the page of the folder and turned it slowly to show the same photo that had been put up on the screen for the court. The one of his bedroom with all the carpet ripped up, with all the rust brown spots that had yellow numbered plaques by them that went up to twenty-three. Twenty-two of the marks were bloodstains, the twenty-third was the large stain in the one corner, that he’d been forced to urinate in. He could feel his face flushing with shame as he showed his lovers this picture. He wanted to slam the folder closed and hide from them.

He could see his mates’ eyes flicking through the stains, seeing the numbers going up to twenty-three, but it was the bloodstains that were the most numerous, they were all over the room, and Nasta’s hand reached out to take out the piece of paper tucked in to a plastic sleeve on the page opposite.

“What is this?” He asked, his voice very forcedly calm.

“Results of the independent court forensics.” Harry said quietly. “They dated the blood spots and found that they were all between nineteen-ninety and nineteen-ninety-six.”

Nasta read the report himself and Harry could almost see him checking off each documented numbered plaque and looking at the photo to see where it was located…and how big the stain was.

Richard had written under some of them, for his own benefit, the details of what had caused the bloodstains for the injuries which Harry had remembered. It was less than half, as he had been injured so often that they had all really blended into one, but having them forensically dated had helped him to narrow it down, especially the earlier marks, as the injuries back then had been few and far in between.

Harry touched his growing baby belly. He was almost at the end of the second trimester currently and his son was growing steadily, he wanted it to remain that way and this devolvement back into stress and upset was not going to help his little thunderer, who had already been having problems with his heart rate because of the stress of going through the court case in the first place. He wanted to get this done though, and he really hoped that it was only the one day of upset, he didn’t want this to drag on anymore.

He took the report from Max, who had read it with Draco and he slid it back into the folder before he turned the page.

This picture was of the closed cupboard door, it had a lock on the outside and Harry sighed.

“There’s no need to rush, take a breath.” Nasta encouraged him. “Or a drink of tea.”

Harry nodded and breathed deeply. He repeated the deep breath before he turned the page to show the opened cupboard door, how small and cramped it was, his filthy nest of hand-me-down clothes from Dudley and the one ratty blanket.

“They kept you in there?” Draco demanded, utterly horrified.

Harry nodded. “Until I was almost eleven. I can’t remember a time when I wasn’t…when I didn’t sleep in the cupboard. I spent ten years in here and…and it is the one thing that has always stuck with me most. It’s why most of my flashbacks and nightmares are about the cupboard.”
“Seeing this, no one blames you for that.” Max said, an edge of a growl in his voice.

Harry gave him a worried look, but Max reached out and cupped his chin, stroking his thumb across the skin of Harry’s cheek. It made Harry smile softly.

“They deserved more than they got.” Blaise exclaimed harshly.

“They were brought to justice. They will now lose thirty years of their lives, of their freedom. That’s enough.” Nasta said sternly.

“It’ll never be enough for what they did to Harry.” Blaise argued. “An innocent child.”

Harry turned and kissed Blaise.

“I don’t need more justice, or even revenge.” Harry said. “They did what they did, and it made me who I am today. They have now been brought to justice and I want to bask in that for a bit and then forget the bastards ever existed. I’m better than they are, Blaise. I’ve always been better than they are.”

“You always will be.” Nasta declared. “You have your faults, everyone does, but their faults include child abuse and overall vileness. That automatically makes them worse than most ordinary people.”

Harry breathed out harshly and hunched his shoulders. “I don’t like thinking of any of this, but…I’m glad that you four stuck with me through everything. I don’t think I would have ever gone through with the court case if I never had you to come home to.”

“We would have done anything, given anything, to have supported you through that court case.” Draco told him. “I think that we all wish that we could have done more.”

“You did as much as I needed you to.” Harry told them firmly. “But for the most part, I had to do it on my own and I’m glad that you allowed me to do so, on my own terms.”
“We understood why you wanted to do it on your own. Sort of facing up to your past demons, but we were at least glad that you let us help you when you came home to us.” Nasta told him.

“I needed you all.” Harry said, looking at all four of them seriously. “I needed to come home, shrug off the court proceedings, and just… I don’t know. I just needed to be home, with my lovers and children. I needed the comfort and the normality of being home. You let me do what I needed to do in the courtroom, but you were here at home when I needed you to be too. I appreciated that more than you knew, I should have said more how much it made me feel better, and how it helped me through the long days in court, knowing that you were here for me at the end.”

“We wouldn’t have wanted to be anywhere else.” Max told him.

Harry took a breath and he knew what was next. “Please be calm. This next part is the worst. It…it details the physical injuries done to me over the years. There are photos.”

At once, his four mates all stiffened and he heard one of them swallow painfully, another was breathing fast and hard and Harry kept his eyes on the folder on his lap, trying to work up the courage to turn the page to what he knew was the first of the injuries. The hideous bruise over his little belly when he was six and the small holes in his back after he’d been backhanded and landed on a rake when he was eight years old.

“It…the physical abuse didn’t really start until I was eight and the…the food being withheld started when I was seven.”

“You’re stalling, Caru.” Nasta told him pointedly.

“Sorry, it’s just difficult. I’m trying to gather up the courage to turn the page.”

“You can do it, Harry.” Max told him, rather grave and serious for once.

“Take your time.” Blaise insisted, laying a hand to his lower back. “We’re here with you, and we love you.”

“Ti amo.” Harry said softly. He smiled when Blaise did and he took a breath and turned the page, showing the first of several dozen injuries he’d received as a child and young teenager.
“How did you get that bruise?” Blaise asked him.

“I was six in this photo. Almost seven. It was June, and it was Dudley’s birthday. He’d gotten a new cricket bat and he tested it out on me. I was thrown in the back garden for crying, and ruining Dudley’s day. I was trying to tend to my own injury when…when the neighbour saw me.”

“Wait, someone saw you? When you were six? Why the hell weren’t the police ever called, Harry?” Nasta asked him.

“She was very elderly, she’s the one who took all of these photos. I think that she was too scared to confront the Dursleys, or to get involved. Instead she told me she was collecting evidence. She died of a brain aneurysm before anything was ever done.”

Harry sighed, shaking his head, and he turned the page to show the next injuries and bruises, all of them caused by Dudley, until he got to the photo of his eight year old self, with four holes in his back, closer to his left side.

“What caused those?” Max asked him, making a conscious effort to sound calm.

“A garden rake.” Harry said.

“They hit you with it?” Draco demanded furiously.

“No. I was backhanded and I fell over onto it. It was the first time that I was ever physically hit by them, not Dudley, and it ended up worse than expected, because of the rake.”

Harry flipped through the court folder, clinically telling his mates what had caused his injuries in the photos displayed, or simply saying that he couldn’t remember what had caused it, which was true for most of the pictures.

They’d had to have a break twice throughout the pictures, where tea was refreshed and Harry was held tightly between two mates, while a third played with his hair.

It felt like a relief to get through all the photos of the injuries done to him. It had been hard and it had been difficult, but he had managed it, and now he felt better and his mates were finally in the know about what had happened to him.
“What happened next, Harry?” Nasta asked, after retaking his seat.

Harry sighed, swallowed a gulp of tea and put his cup back down. He laid his hands over his belly and tried to remember what came next.

“Richard made a point of mentioning the room in detail, of mentioning my clear criminal record. Apparently Saint Brutus’ is an actual facility for criminal boys, I should have known it was real, those people didn’t approve of imagination. But Richard told the court that he’d contacted them, and that they never would have accepted me there, when Vernon tried to use the threat of that to defame my character.”

“So he tried to claim that you were a threatening, intimidating criminal again?”

“Oh, absolutely. It was the only paper thin defence they had. That I scared them, that I was violent and unhinged.”

“As if that would have ever stood up in court.” Max scoffed.

“Especially with your Dad at my side.” Harry smiled at him. “But he pointed out that I had no doctor, dental or optician records, and when Vernon tried to say that I was violent and liked hiding myself in a cupboard, he rightly pointed out that I was four, and Vernon was twenty-six, and could have easily just picked me up and took me to a doctor’s appointment. It was also mentioned that if I was so violent and unmanageable, how come I never had a criminal record, why were the police never called?”

“Obviously because nothing of the sort ever happened.”

Harry bobbed his head and reached out for his cup, swallowing some more tea.

“Exactly right. I was never a violent person. It was never me intimidating them, or threatening them. It was all lies and when it came to the pressure and duress of the court, being questioned and watched for every minute movement, those lies crumbled like a house of cards until all that was left was the truth. That I had been locked up and forced to live off of soup, bread or fruit as a teenager without any proper meals. Being forced to…to use a corner of my room as a toilet because I was locked up like an animal.”
Several hands touched him as his voice hitched and words failed him. Two thumbs, Draco’s by the feel of them, run under his eyes gently, to catch the tears from his lashes.

“They abused me, and I never found out why. They refused to answer me in court when…when I asked.”

“They were just evil people, Harry. They didn’t need an excuse. They hated you, perhaps for your parents, for your magic, maybe both.” Max said gently. “But they didn’t need an excuse to hurt you, and they didn’t think twice about it, and for that I’ll never forgive them.”

“I will.” Harry said after a lengthy pause. “I will because I want to forget them. I don’t want anything holding me back and if it’s one thing that Healer Vasey has taught me, it’s that holding onto the past will keep the wound open. I’ve done what I needed to do, I went through the court case, I saw justice being meted out, and now that all is said and done, the wound can be closed and I can move forward with my life. That’s what I wanted most out of this. I wanted to move on. I wanted to forget what happened to me and forget those people. I never wanted to go through the courts, but I realise now that I needed to and now that it’s all over with, this is the final page in this chapter of my life. This was the proper way to do it, and I feel now that I can heal from what they did to me.”

“We’ll help you in whatever way you need, Harry.” Nasta told him seriously.

“Just being here, in our home, with our family. It’s enough for me. It’s perfect. Just be yourselves, let our kids be themselves, and I can forget and I can move on. It’s strange to think about all of this, to talk about it all, but I’m happy. I’m honestly, truly happy.” He said, looking at them all, two at a time, to either side of himself, smiling.

Blaise reached for him first and cupped his cheeks and pressed a kiss to Harry’s smiling lips. That only made Harry’s smile widen.

“We love you.” Draco declared. “We want you happy and we’ll do everything we can now to make sure you’re happy.”

Harry closed the folder on his lap and looked at all four of his mates.

“Then I want to put this behind us. Those people never defined me as a person, and this court case will not define me either. I am stronger than any of them.”
Harry put the folder on the coffee table, picked up his cup and drained the remaining inch of tea. He gave his mates a sly smile and looked pointedly at the clock.

“Now, my wonderful mates. By my estimation we have two whole hours before Myron and Richard return our babies. Does anyone want to come to bed with me?”

“But it’s soo early, Harry. I don’t think I could sleep right now.” Blaise teased.

“Oh, I can think of a few ways to wear you down and make you sleepy.” Harry grinned, kneeling up and reaching for Blaise.

Harry was snatched backwards with a startled gasp, and he giggled and grinned up at Max, who’d picked him up.

“I don’t need to be asked twice.” Max rumbled, his voice noticeably deeper and it tightened Harry’s gut, caught his breath and made his blood start to pool south.

“I was getting a snog then, Max!” Blaise complained furiously.

“Gotta be quicker than that, lover!” Max laughed as he ran from the living room and took the stairs three at a time with his long, powerful legs.

Harry laughed and heard his three other mates giving chase. This was what he wanted more than anything else. This was normality to him and as his back gently hit the bed, Max crouching over him, his big, safe arms wrapped around him as he bent for a passionate kiss that Harry readily gave, all thoughts of the Dursleys and of his court case were wiped from his thoughts. That part of his life had been dealt with and was now over. It was time to look to the future, and as he was surrounded on all sides by his four mates, his immediate future looked like it was going to be extremely, toe curlingly pleasurable.

He wouldn’t have wanted it any other way as he wrapped his arms around Max’s neck, both hands cradling the back of his mate’s head, stroking through the short, bristly hairs as he returned the impassioned kiss. This was his life now, not the one he’d had before, and he could get over what had happened to him, because of these four men around him would help him, and they would always be here with him, as he would always be with them.
Chapter End Notes

A/N: A short chapter because this chapter ended up being a spur of the moment addition. Chapter 119 was the original chapter 118, but I realised that I needed to wrap up the court business and have Harry tell his mates everything first, before moving onto the Christmas chapters.

The upside to this is that chapter 119 is already finished, and is at a more healthy, more average 12,000 words and will be posted in a few days, after editing. I’m hoping that chapter 120 will follow soon after too, but I am still very, very side-tracked by my unposted crossovers. I’ve worked out that I’ve written approximately 350,000 words for just three unposted fics this year, so even if I have been a bit sparse with updates, I have very much been writing and I’m hoping that 2019 will be much better update-wise.

StarLight Massacre. X
Chapter Notes

Last Time

He wouldn’t have wanted it any other way as he wrapped his arms around Max’s neck, both hands cradling the back of his mate’s head, stroking through the short, bristly hairs as he returned the impassioned kiss. This was his life now, not the one he’d had before, and he could get over what had happened to him, because of these four men around him would help him, and they would always be here with him, as he would always be with them.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Nineteen – December Decorating

Harry had been right after all. December was a very hectic time, and worse, the kids seemed to know that something was up. They were all ramped up more than usual and none of them really knew if it was just a normal part of them all getting older or if they truly could feel the excitement in the air.

“Can we postpone sticking the decorations up…maybe until Christmas Eve?” Blaise asked. “These kids are already excited, look at them. You’d think that they understood what Christmas means.”

All five of them looked to the toddling, screeching, giggling mass of children, just in time to see Calix trip on a toy car and fall onto Tegan, who hit him over the head with the doll she was holding.

Nasta swooped in like a massive bird of prey and hefted up the crying Calix, passing him over to Max before picking up Tegan.

“We don’t hit others, Tegan.” Nasta told her sternly.

“Dada Asta, eh banab canah!” She said furiously.

“I really wish I knew what she was saying.” Nasta sighed.

“She’s telling you that Calix was being bad.” Harry answered from where he was curled up on the settee, Ave sleeping on his chest. He was just repeatedly stroking her back, listening to her breathing.
“How do you know that?” Draco demanded.

“Look at her body language.” Harry insisted. “She’s angry, her tone of voice got louder and she pointed to Nasta and then to Calix. She’s trying to tell him that Calix started it, that he fell on her first.”

“So how do we deal with it?” Blaise asked, looking a little nervous. He wasn’t good at dealing with punishments.

“We don’t allow them to hit others.” Harry said firmly. “Calix fell, that was an accident and though he might have hurt or scared her by doing so, she hit him with her doll. We can’t allow that.”

“Come on, Tegan.” Nasta said to her. “You need a time out because you hit your brother with your doll.”

“Daddy, no!” She shouted at him. “Eh! Eh!” She babbled, jabbing her finger at Calix.

“Calix tripped over, Tegan.” Nasta explained. “He didn’t mean to land on you, but you hit him. You need a time out.”

As they’d known would happen, Tegan started crying and Harry sighed. He hated punishing his children, but it was all a part of parenting. They needed to learn that hitting others wasn’t acceptable, and the only way to do that was to punish that behaviour now, while they were young.

Harry sighed again and went back to stroking Ave, nudging her chestnut curls with a gentle finger. Those curls were absolutely adorable, and got his little girls a lot of attention, especially paired with their large, bright blue eyes.

Max had managed to calm Calix down and all too soon their little explorer was ready to slip from Max’s lap and go back to playing. Harry watched him with a smile as he toddled back into the mass of writhing bodies.

“So, back to my original question, do we have to put the decorations up tomorrow?” Blaise asked.

“Yes, twelve days before Christmas is traditional.” Draco insisted. “Those decorations are going up tomorrow.”
“I’m so excited I can’t wait.” Max grinned.

“I’m sure you’re the reason these kids are so excited. They’re feeding from you.” Blaise told Max.

Max just laughed and Harry chuckled quietly so that he didn’t disturb Ave.

“They’re going to be excited, we’ve taken them out, they’ve seen the decorations and lights around town, they’re smart, they know something’s up.” Harry insisted.

“I can’t wait for it to be over.” Blaise sighed.

“As soon as it is, we have five babies turning two.” Max pointed out.

“Merlin, save us.” Blaise declared.

Harry chuckled again.

“Then two weeks later we have our girls turning a year old.” Harry couldn’t help but add.

“We’re not going to survive.” Blaise declared dramatically.

Harry and Max both laughed. Draco seemed to be doing his best to ignore them all completely, his nose in his book.

“Not when you also add in that possibly a few weeks after our girls turn a year old we’ll have a newborn baby.” Harry added with a grin.

“I think you need to stop having babies in winter.” Blaise insisted. “Our Braiden is our only summer baby…can’t you have some more spring, summer, autumn babies?” Blaise asked.
Harry laughed as he realised that Blaise was right. Apart from Braiden, all of their others were winter babies, and their thunderer would be too, as it was doubtful that Harry would go two weeks over his due date and into March.

Ave made a soft sound and Harry immediately stifled himself, going back to stroking her back and shushing her, humming gently to lull her back to sleep. She wriggled on him and then settled and he smiled adoringly at her.

“I love you so much.” He said softly, tucking her curls back behind her ear, even knowing that it wouldn’t stay there and he would have to do it again not two minutes later.

“How are you feeling now?” Max asked him, turning serious for a moment.

Harry looked up. “I’m fine, Max. I feel alright. Those potions are working finally.”

“Good.” Max said, looking at him consideringly. “Has the pain in your back gone?”

“Yes, it hasn’t come back.” Harry answered.

Of course, of all the things Harry could have gotten while pregnant, he had contracted a urinary tract infection. Max had immediately diagnosed him when Harry had complained of certain symptoms and he had started making antibiotic potions for him while Draco had called for a Dracken Healer to come and see him, just to be sure.

Healer Grant had confirmed that Harry had a urinary tract infection and he’d commended Max on diagnosing him correctly and starting on making the potions that Harry needed. It was now three days later and it no longer burned when he had a piss, he was no longer trying to go every twenty minutes, despite the fact that nothing was coming out, but he still had to take the potions until he’d finished the full course, as he was told that the infection might come back if he didn’t. Max was making sure that he took every potion though, on time, so there was no way Harry could wriggle out of taking the potions, his mate was well on top of that and he would ensure that Harry would finish the needed course.

“If you need anything, let us know.” Nasta insisted.

“I will. Our boy is being still and quiet for once, though.” Harry said, patting his bump.

“Any sickness or cravings?” Draco asked him.
Harry shook his head. “No, I’m honestly okay. You don’t need to fuss over me so much.”

“You’re in the third trimester now…” Blaise said.

Harry said nothing. If it had been anyone else he might have snapped off a sarcastic comment, but Blaise had taken to repeating such information often, as he claimed it helped his memory, so Harry gave him more leeway in terms of repeating how far along Harry was in his pregnancy when he was very much aware of that fact.

“Due in…in February?” Blaise carried on, but his statement turned into a question as he frowned at them all.

“That’s right.” Harry smiled. “Two months to go and our baby boy will be born.”

Blaise nodded, but he was pulling a thoughtful face, so Harry sent a look to Nasta.

“Are you feeling alright, Caru?” Nasta asked Blaise.

Blaise blinked and looked up at him. “Yes. I feel fine, I just…I feel as if there is something I’m forgetting.”

Harry hefted himself up, settled Ave securely in his arms, and then he walked over to Blaise and sat next to him. He kissed Blaise’s cheek.

“You’re not forgetting anything, love.” Harry said. “You’ve been doing really well with your memory recently. You know the kids, you know us, you know about our thunderer, how far along I am and when he’ll be born. Don’t put so much pressure on yourself, okay?”

“I suppose I will feel like I’m forgetting things for a while yet.” Blaise agreed, wrapping an arm around him and laying his other hand on Ave’s head.

“You’re getting so much better. I love you.”
“Ti amo, Bello.” Blaise replied immediately.

It made Harry smile and he cuddled up with Blaise, Ave still sleeping peacefully in his arms.

“I want to start writing the list for the food shopping we need for Christmas week. It’s going to be a lot of food, so if I start getting the frozen food and the non-perishable foods now, that would really help.” Max said as they lapsed into silence. Or as silent as things ever got with several playing toddlers at their feet.

“Get some parchment and a quill then.” Harry encouraged. “We’ll brainstorm now.”

Max hefted himself up and went to the sideboard, he got out a self-inking quill and a sheaf of parchment before sitting back down and hunching over the coffee table.

“Right lovers, hit me.” Max said happily.

“If you bring fish or cheese into this house I am divorcing you.” Harry said happily.

“We’re not married.” Max said before poking his tongue out at him.

“I will marry you, then divorce you.” Harry said seriously and Max laughed.

“Okay, no fish or cheese, though I would like to point out that you’ve been very good for the last few weeks.”

“I would also like to point out that if our thunderer kicks me wrong then I vomit up my own body weight.”

“He is very active.” Nasta said softly, looking at Harry’s baby belly.

“It makes me feel nauseous when he’s squirming around so much. I think he’ll be on his feet early, like the girls were.”

They all took a moment to look at Ave snuggled in his arm and they all smiled.

“Right, seriously now, back to the list. I need this done.”

“Essentials then. We need a turkey and all the veg we usually get.” Harry insisted.

Max started his list and Harry watched what he wrote down in case Max missed anything.

“Are you going to be okay with sprouts, Harry?” Max asked.

“Don’t wave them under my nose and don’t put them on my plate and sure. I want to see how our kids do with them.”

Max nodded and added them to the list.

“Christmas pudding.” Draco put in.

“I like Christmas cake too.” Blaise added. “I think…”

“You do.” Harry said, a teasing lilt to his voice. “You ate the entire cake last year, before anyone else could have any. You’d sneek a slice or two every day and when someone finally wanted some and went looking for it, you’d eaten it all.”

Blaise chuckled. “That sounds…I don’t know, it just sounds right.”

“You like it if there are more cherries in it.” Draco told him.

“I do like cherries.”
“I do too.” Harry grinned.

“I remember you like fresh cherries the best.” Blaise told him.

Harry nodded and snuggled into Blaise more.

“I’m really into fruit at the moment.” Harry chuckled. It had become a running joke in the house that he had turned into a mini-Nasta with the amount of fruit he was craving.

“Do you want any now?” Nasta asked.

Harry considered it. “Yes, I want some mango.”

“I’ve got it.” Nasta said happily, standing and kissing Harry, then Blaise, on his way to the kitchen.

“Harry, are you going to do your vanilla cookies, or will you be taking a year off?”

“I’ll see how I feel, but there has to be at least one day where I can get some cookies baked.” Harry answered.

“Cookie.” Farren repeated, and looked up at them expectantly. “Mummy, want cookie.”

“Do you want a biscuit instead?” Harry offered.

Farren nodded, sensing that he would be getting a biscuit or nothing. “Want bisky.”

“Nas? Can you bring in some rusks with you, please?”

“Of course, Caru.” Nasta called back.
“You need to rest too.” Draco fretted. “You’ve been very tired lately.”

Harry nodded. “If he stays put then he’ll be the longest baby I’ve carried, so I can imagine that I will get more tired as time goes on and of course, that UTI hasn’t helped at all.”

“You’re tired?” Nasta asked as he came back into the room with a bowl of cubed mango and a plate of rusks.

“No, not yet, but I have been more so lately. Draco was just saying that I need to rest.”

Nasta nodded and handed him the bowl. Harry very happily dived into it while Nasta handed out the rusks… of course Farren was right in front first, clamouring at Nasta’s legs for his biscuit.

Nasta came and sat beside him, he could never keep away when Harry was eating fruit. Harry, very graciously in his opinion, offered Nasta a cube of mango, holding it up to Nasta’s mouth. He grinned as Nasta’s lips brushed his fingers and he watched as Nasta ate the fruit before he went back to eating it himself.

“I love watching you eat fruit.” Nasta whispered into his ear.

“I can’t…I just really want fruit during this pregnancy. The more the better. The more colourful and flavourful the better.”

“While you’re like this, I’m going to try and feed you as many different fruits as possible, in the hopes that you find one that you really love and keep eating.”

“I already have. I love mango.” Harry insisted happily.

“You love it now, you might not when you’ve given birth.” Max pointed out helpfully, writing several more things down.

“Have you put double cream down?” Harry asked mildly, watching him.
“Damn. I knew I would forget something.” Max said, going to the ‘section’ where he’d written down the fresh foods and he added double cream.

“Add shortbread to the list too. I like shortbread at Christmas.” Draco said.

Max added that too. “I’ll go later today to pick some things up.”

“Oh, did you put Christmas crackers down?” Harry asked.

“Yeah, I got the magical versions on owl order, adult and kid ones.” Max told him, sending him a smile. “Along with the tablecloths, napkins and the plates and silverware that you picked out.”

Harry grinned, being reminded that his choice had been picked for the table setting. He didn’t like thinking that their old tableware had all been broken, or otherwise ruined, in the massive fight in the old house. They had been stored in the living room cabinet that had been demolished.

He had, of course, had the thought that perhaps his mates had chosen his option just to keep him happy, after what had happened to the previous set, but he’d seen their reactions to his ‘find’ first hand, and they had liked his pick the best, he was sure, and they weren’t just placating him by picking the table set that he had wanted.

“Did you add jelly or trifle to the list?”

“Got them both. You wanted chocolate trifle and strawberry jelly, didn’t you?” Max asked Harry.

Harry nodded as he had a mouthful of mango.

“Mince pies?” Draco asked.

“Damn it.” Max cursed, going to his ambient section and adding mince pies.

“This is why we’re brainstorming, Max.” Nasta soothed. “You don’t have to remember everything by yourself, we’re here to help you.”
“I’m really glad of the help. I would definitely forget something. I won’t get it yet, but what fruit do you want for Christmas week?”

“Clementines, dates and the usual fruit for me and the kids…apples, pears and pomegranates are all in season.”

“I’ll grab bananas too, so I can add them to the kids’ porridge in the mornings.” Max said to himself, adding everything down.

“Don’t forget nuts, lover.” Harry put in.

“Oh, I never forget those.” Max said with a grin and a wink.

Harry snorted at the innuendo, but brushed it off and went back to his fruit.

“Mummy, I want.” Farren told him, toddling over and pointing at what he was eating.

“Do you want to try some mango, sweetness?” Harry asked as he picked up the smallest cube he could find in the bowl and he handed it to Farren.

His big boy licked it, squashed it, licked it some more, then popped it in his mouth and chewed it. The five of them watched him as he hummed happily and reached out his hand and made a grabby motion.

Harry chuckled and handed over the whole bowl to him.

“Harry…”

“I’m done.” Harry said. “You know my stomach has shrunk because of the baby. I can only really snack.”

“Is he still pushing up into your stomach?”
“Yeah, it feels like I no longer have a stomach. Or any lungs for that matter, you know I keep getting breathless. Max, did you remember those little savoury cheese snacks the kids like?”

“No.” Max groaned and went back to his ambient section to add the little cheese crackers in.

Their morning passed quietly enough, or rather as quietly as things ever got for them, and soon Max had picked up Calix and Eva and he had gone to the supermarket to start their Christmas shop.

Harry could do little more than snuggle with Leolin this time, as he watched Nasta and Draco entertain the kids, playing with them on the floor. They’d opened both doors, so the kids could roam from the family room into the smaller living room. They were making use of every bit of space, especially while Calix and Eva weren’t here, and Leolin was up in Harry’s arms.

It was peaceful in its own way, or at least Harry thought that it was, as he reclined back against two cushions, listening to the happy sounds of his playful children. It settled him down and relaxed him to hear his children so happy, just being babies and of course it always made him smile to see Braiden toddling around on little legs. He had stopped crawling altogether now and it made Harry so proud to watch him walking and running everywhere.

Harry was looking forward to decorating the house tomorrow. They’d bought all new decorations for this year, to go with the old ones, purely because this house was four times the size of Max’s old house, and the decorations would have been too sparse and sad looking if they hadn’t bought new ones too. Harry had had a lot of fun buying new ones online and having them delivered. He’d even found a website that would engrave handmade glass baubles with his children’s names and any picture that he wanted. He’d uploaded all the pictures of his newborns little footprints, with their names and birthdates. He’d cried when the eight baubles had arrived with perfectly to scale footprints, with the names and birthdates engraved above and below the footprints, and he’d seen how perfect they were. They’d been a surprise for his mates, who loved them as much as Harry did, and he’d caught Blaise studying them, memorising them and just holding the rather large glass baubles between his hands or tracing the outline of the feet and toes with his finger.

“Did you sort out the playpen for tomorrow?” Harry asked softly as he stroked Leolin’s head and back gently, repeatedly.

“Yes, Caru.” Nasta answered him. “It’s under the stairs for now, ready to take out tomorrow. You wanted the kids in the kitchen while we did these two rooms first, right?”

Harry nodded. “I’ll sit out with them, of course. I might try and get those vanilla cookies baked too, if I feel up to it.” He added when Nasta went to open his mouth. His top dominant closed his mouth and nodded instead.

“I will come out and sit with you.” Blaise said. “Healer Odell doesn’t want me climbing yet.” He groused. “I could use magic to pin up some of the decorations, but with you pregnant, and Eva and Ave being under a year old, none of us want to use too much.”

“Blaise, it’s fine. Max, Draco and I can handle the decorations.” Nasta assured. “We don’t want you or Harry doing any of the decorating, your job is watching our children, who can’t be left unsupervised.”

Blaise nodded. Harry smiled and hid it with Leolin. He loved Nasta and his way of diffusing everything. Blaise wanted to feel like he was doing something, like he was helping, because he didn’t want his brain injury to get in the way of anything, so the best way to deal with things was to give Blaise babysitting duties, which truly was a full time job, to make him feel like he was doing something useful.

“I want to decorate the tree, though.” Harry insisted.

“Those baubles will be an amazing addition, Harry.” Draco told him, not for the first time either. Draco really loved the baby baubles.

Harry smiled and cuddled Leolin closer. This Christmas was going to be wonderful. Their first in the new house. He couldn’t wait for all the excitement it would bring.

The decorating was driving their kids mad. Harry had woken up feeling excited and energised, which was rare while he was this heavily pregnant. He had hustled the kids into the kitchen for their breakfasts, before they’d been penned into a corner of the kitchen while Blaise entertained them and Harry baked batch after batch of vanilla cookies that he’d cut into Christmas shapes. He decorated them as they cooled, and other batches baked in the oven, before he packed them all into air tight tubs.

The kids had been let into the living rooms while the tree was being decorated and even Leolin was fascinated by all the bright lights and the shiny, dangling decorations on the ceiling. Their children were now doubly excited and Harry was glad that there was less than two weeks to go until Christmas.

“Nasta!” Harry called out as he was decorating the tree.

His top dominant was just there, his hands fluttering around him, searching for injuries.
“What is it, Harry?” He asked seriously.

Harry pouted at him and held out Braiden’s bauble. “I want it up there, on that branch.” He said pointing. “But I can’t reach.”

Nasta’s shoulders slumped, and he sighed, and then smiled. He took the bauble from Harry’s hands and put it securely on the branch that Harry had pointed at.

“This one?” He asked, just to be sure.

Harry nodded. “Yes. I want Braiden’s highest, because he’s the oldest. Also…I want a smoothie, please?”

Nasta grinned and bent to kiss him. “I’ll get you one now, Cariad.” He promised, cuddling him for a moment, before he went to go and get him a glass of the purple sludge, as Max called it, that he’d made that morning and Harry had been stealing since breakfast.

Their house was now full of Christmas cheer, and eight excited, wound up babies, and Harry smiled as he took a moment to just stand and watch them as they looked around themselves in wonder, all the decorations up too high for them to reach, even the toddling Braiden. Not that it stopped any of them from trying, of course, as they all went up to walls and tried to reach the dangling bits of tinsel that decorated shelves and the mantelpiece, but he and his mates had made absolutely sure that the lower half of each room was undecorated, so that everything remained safe for their babies. The only thing they could possibly reach was the Christmas tree, and Harry grinned as he looked at the kids from the safety of the playpen, which had been put around the tree to keep it safe from little grasping hands…not that they hadn’t taken precautions, of course, because Draco had carefully taken each white bauble from their box that morning and he had cast an unbreakable charm on them, just in case, he insisted.

Harry stepped carefully over the playpen and went to sit on the settee with a groan. Nasta came to hand him a glass of a dullish-purple semi-liquid and Harry’s stomach clenched with want.

Nasta sat next to him and wrapped an arm around him, watching as Harry drank in big gulps that left him breathless. Nasta stroked his back as he drank, slowly and lovingly, and it made Harry feel…something. Something that made him feel warm and comforted and he shifted to rest himself on Nasta’s shoulder, turning to lay a hand over the strong heartbeat.

“You alright by there?” Max asked.
“I’m fine.” Harry said happily, handing Max the empty glass with a grin.

Max rolled his eyes, but took the glass and kissed him, then he kissed Nasta.

“Do you two want tea?”

“I do.” Nasta said.

Harry considered it, but shook his head. “No, the smoothie filled me up. I think I’ll be sick if I put anything else in my mouth.”

“Sit and rest easy for a minute then.” Max told him, bending for another kiss.

Harry smiled and inhaled, turning his face back into Nasta. He sat and he watched his children for twenty minutes, lying securely on Nasta. Blaise had handed him Leolin when their Faerie baby had started fussing and he was tucked into Harry’s other side, just drifting off clutching his Ma doll. That was when the floo flared and a panicked face appeared in the flames.

“Nasta! It’s Llew!” The face cried out desperately. “He’s gone completely berserk.”

Nasta, though rushed himself, he moved Harry gently to the side of himself, easing him upright carefully, and touched his cheek for a moment.

“What happened?” Nasta demanded of the man in the fire.

“We think he has an injury from another bull, he’s attacking the handlers, the other dragons, and setting anything that moves on fire.”

Nasta’s urgency went up as he took out his wand and summoned his shoes.

“How many are down?”
“Four handlers have been taken directly to Saint Mungos and another six are nursing minor wounds. The handler sleeping buildings are all on fire, as is Branwen’s enclosure.”

“She has hatchlings!” Nasta said, shooting the head in the fireplace a horrified look.

“We’ve saved the hatchlings already, but Branwen is refusing to leave the enclosure. She thinks they’re still in there and she won’t budge, Nasta. She’s going to die from smoke inhalation if she isn’t subdued and moved soon and Llew isn’t making it easy for any of us to move her to safety. We’re calling in everyone on this, we need all staff at the reserve.”

“Max.” Nasta shot Max a look and Max just nodded.

“I got them, lover, go and take care of this.” Max answered immediately.

“If I wasn’t the only Dragonologist…”

“We know, Nas, now go. Be careful.”

Nasta stepped over the fireguard and the person inside pulled their head back as Nasta took a pinch of floo powder from the pot on the decorated mantelpiece and threw it in the flames.

“I’ll send you a message when I can.” Nasta said and then he was gone and the four of them exhaled as one.

“I hate it when he has an emergency.” Harry said. “He better be careful.”

“You know he will, love.” Draco said, coming and sitting beside him and taking Nasta’s place, letting Harry turn and rest on him.

“At least we got the decorating done before he left.” Max chuckled. “It would have been just our luck that he would have been called in just as we’d started and he missed the mess and the frustration.”
That made Harry chuckle and he made sure that Leolin was still safely in his lap as he rested on Draco. He was, and he had finally drifted off to sleep too, undisturbed by the frantic emergency that had just taken over their house.

“I still can’t believe he’s almost two.” Draco said, looking at Leolin too.

Harry hummed. “We’ll have six two year olds soon.” He said with a smile, looking out at the other quintuplets. “Twin year olds and a newborn too.”

“One thing at a time.” Draco coached him, kissing the side of his head.

“I hope Nas comes home soon. We were having a nice, relaxing day.” Harry sighed.

“Don’t let it worry you, Harry.” Blaise said gently. “You need to remember that whatever happens, this was Nasta’s choice in careers. He doesn’t want to do anything else.”

Harry nodded. “Max, can I have that tea now, please?”

“Of course you can, dearest.”

That made Harry grin and he chuckled lightly, turning into Draco. He could always count on Max to make him laugh. To make him feel better, even just slightly.

Harry was upset that Nasta was gone all day. He missed dinner even and Harry was getting worried too as he sat on the settee, ignoring the news on the tele, as he stared at the fire burning in the grate, waiting for Nasta to come back.

“He’ll be fine, lover.” Max told him, coming to sit beside him and snuggling him up in his arms.
“He might be injured, or burnt.”

“He knows how to handle burns.” Blaise told him, coming to sit on his other side.

“I know, but I don’t like him being injured and hurt.”

“None of us do, but he knows how to handle himself. He’s a Dracken you know.” Max grinned.

That made Harry smile and he turned to snuggle into Max more fully, but he made sure that he could still see the fire burning in the grate.

“Surely we should have heard back from him by now?” Harry questioned.

“It depends on what he’s doing, Harry.” Max sighed, stroking his back. “It could be he’s just shouting and directing others, trying to keep everyone safe from the rampaging dragon. It takes a lot to subdue a full grown dragon, even with highly trained wizards, without needing to subdue two of them. Nasta is the Dragonologist for the reserve, none of us like it, but he has to be there.”

Harry nodded and he sighed unhappily. “At least the kids are all asleep and didn’t fuss too much.”

“We’ll listen out for Eva and Ave, our Leolin, and for Braiden too.” Blaise assured him.

“What do you think it is that makes him keep getting up?” Draco asked from the other settee, where he was sat with a book that he wasn’t actually reading. He hadn’t turned a page in twenty minutes and he kept staring off at the wall, lost in thought.

Max shrugged. “It could be any number of things. Maybe he doesn’t like being in a room with his four brothers and sister? Maybe he can hear something, or the most likely, as we’re potty training him, he might need to use the potty in the night and he’s getting up to look for it.”

“He’s too young to be moved to a bed, isn’t he?” Harry asked.

“He’s over two years old now, so no.” Max insisted. “We could try to give him a room on his own, with its own bed, and see what he does. I know you can get really low beds, so he can’t hurt himself, and he’ll be able to climb in and out by himself. If he does need the potty, this can really help too, we can teach him early about going to the potty in the night.”

“We’d have to baby proof the family bathroom on the first floor.” Harry said. “Make sure he can’t fiddle with any taps or get into any cupboards.”

“We can put a training seat on the toilet too. No one uses that bathroom anyway.” Max said.

“He’s such a good boy. We’ve been spoilt with him as a first child.” Harry chuckled.

“Farren is a good boy too.” Draco pointed out, finally giving up the pretence of reading and putting his book down.

“Regan is no trouble either.” Blaise added.

“Just all the others then.” Max laughed.

Harry snorted. “The worst by far is yet to come!” He insisted, laying his hand over his considerable belly, which was nicely rounded, but straining forward.

“How is our thunder tonight?” Max asked, also laying his hand on Harry’s belly.

“Still for the moment. I think he’s sleeping. He hasn’t kicked in the last hour. I’m enjoying the momentary reprieve.” Harry smiled tiredly.

“I know you’re going to say no, but don’t you want to go to bed, love? You’ve had a long day, and we can see how tired you are. You might think you’re hiding it well, but you’re not.”

“I want to see Nasta first, to make sure he’s okay.” Harry said stubbornly.

“He might not come home tonight, Harry. You know that sometimes he sleeps at the reserve, especially if a dragon kicks off. It comes with his job title…and the large wage packet.”
“He’ll call us if he’s staying on the reserve. I am tired. I won’t lie about it, but I won’t be able to sleep until we’ve heard from him, whether he’s coming back, or staying on the reserve.”

Max sighed, but kissed the side of Harry’s head and snuggled him back in.

“Okay, but you rest, you hear me?” Max ordered.

Harry nodded. “Yes. I’ll sit here all night if I have to, but I can’t hide the fact that I’m worried. He’s been gone for hours and we haven’t heard anything.”

“We’ll hear something soon, I’m sure.” Blaise soothed him. “Nasta knows that we’ll be worried for him and he’ll send word as soon as he can.”

“I’m sure it won’t be long now.” Max added. “We just need to be patie…”

The floo flared, cutting Max off in mid-sentence, but Harry’s heart sunk, and his stomach flipped, when it was Aneirin who stepped out of the fireplace, and not Nasta.

“Please tell me he’s not dead.” Harry begged, his mind automatically thinking the worst.

“He’s not dead.” Aneirin said, stepping over the fireguard and coming to soothe him. “Settle yourself, Harry, you’re heavily pregnant.”

Harry breathed in deeply, then breathed out slowly.

“What has happened to him?” Draco demanded.

“He’s in Saint Mungos. He’s awake and aware, but he’s got a broken leg. The hospital called me, because I’m still his next of kin. He has to stay in overnight, and he’s got to have his dragon pox vaccine early, just in case, but he’s going to be fine, Harry.”
Harry sat back against the settee and tried to stay calm.

“I need to see him.”

“You can’t go in your state.” Max said. “Do you want me to go and bring back his shirt for you?”

Harry wasn’t happy with that, but he nodded. Flooing while heavily pregnant was awful, and he would likely be sick too.

“Is he really okay?” Harry asked, as Max rushed to get Nasta some pyjamas and a book to read. Blaise rushed out too and Harry watched them both leave, his mind racing with thoughts of Nasta being injured.

“He really is alright. He’s really worried about you, and how this news would affect you in your condition. The Healers are being careful with his break, because it was a dragon that was the cause, but it’ll be healed tonight and he’ll be back to you in the morning.”

“Tell him that we love him, that the kids went to bed with no problems and that me and the baby are fine.” Harry said.

Aneirin cupped his face and kissed his forehead. “Of course, annwyl. You just focus on you and the baby, leave Nasta to me and you can shout at him, or hug him to death tomorrow, whatever you feel like doing.”

“Maybe a bit of both.” Harry chuckled tenuously.

“Whatever you want, I’m sure Nasta will sit and take it.”

“I’ve got everything. I think.” Max said, stuffing an errant sleeve into an overnight bag.

“A change of clothes for tomorrow?” Harry asked.

“Yes. Got it.” Max said.
“You remembered to pack his boxers and socks?” Harry asked pointedly.

“Yes, I grabbed a pair each. I’m sure they’re Draco’s though.”

“Nasta will fit into my clothes, its fine.” Draco insisted.

“Here.” Blaise called out, hurrying back into the room and bringing over a large flask, one that Harry usually used to store his mates’ blood when he was in his nest, from the kitchen. “It’s tea for him.” Blaise explained. “The tea at the hospital tastes like piss.”

“That’s a nice touch, Blaise.” Harry said with a smile.

“I still remember being on the ward.” Blaise said. “The food was nice, but the tea was awful.”

Max kissed Blaise and took the flask, slipping it into the bag and zipping it up.

“Look after him.” Max ordered Blaise, before turning to Draco. “You, look after them both.”

Draco waved a hand. “I’ve got them both. You know they are actually adults and they usually behave themselves.”

Harry giggled. “Usually.” He echoed.

“Be good.” Max pointed at him.

Harry giggled again, but stopped on a gasp as his thunderer kicked him.

“You okay?” Max asked, taking three huge, quick steps to crouch down in front of him.
“Thunderer is awake.” Harry said, and it was all he needed to say to explain the situation.

“Right, Max, you go and sort Nasta out. I’m going to give Harry and our thunderer a belly massage.” Blaise said. “Draco, can you get my stuff for me?”

Draco nodded and stood to get the oil, towels and the bowl that Blaise needed to give Harry one of the very frequent massages that helped with the pain, and helped to settle the baby down.

Max kissed Harry once more and then he was gone with Aneirin and Harry let go of his mask as he fell backwards and bit his lip, trying to stop himself from fretting.

“It’s a broken leg, Harry.” Blaise soothed him.

“It could have been his neck.”

“It could have been, but it wasn’t. He’s in the hospital and he’s going to be fine and he’ll be home by the morning. Now, let’s get you lying down in front of the fire and give you and our unborn son a nice, relaxing massage.”

Harry smiled at that. “Our thunderer likes your massages.”

Blaise hummed. “That’s why you’re getting one, Prezioso.”

Draco came back with an armful of supplies, and though he handed the bowl of oils to Blaise, he kept the towels for himself and he started spreading them out in front of the fire before he helped Harry strip off his jumper and tee-shirt.

Harry was helped to lie backwards and Draco’s hands went into his hair, rubbing and stroking and Harry moaned happily.

“Of all the massage techniques you’ve taught us, this one is the best.” Draco declared.

Blaise smirked. “You keep that up for me, while I help settle down our thunderer.”

Harry felt Blaise’s hands touch his belly and they stayed there for a moment before moving and spreading out, sweeping in gentle motions and immediately the baby writhing inside him stopped moving and settled down.

Harry chuckled at how quickly their thunderer settled under Blaise’s touches, and he enjoyed the attention on his body, and the lack of kicking and punching inside him. Sometimes it would be strong enough, or sudden enough, to take his breath away and sometimes it even made him throw-up.

“You’re going to have to go back for classes, Blaise.” Harry said softly.

“Have I forgotten something?” Blaise asked immediately. “Am I hurting you?”

“Oh love, no. I didn’t mean that.” Harry insisted, wanting to sit and hug his mate, but unable to do so from his back. “I just meant that you’d need to take classes for baby massages. Our thunderer is not going to be happy when he’s born and can no longer have these massages from you.”

“They actually had baby massage classes.” Blaise said, frowning as the words prodded his damaged memory. “I thought about taking them, but I was doing it for you, so you were my priority at the time. I can easily see if they have a space for me to take the class. I know Max already knows a little of baby massage, maybe he’d like to come with me.”

That prodded Harry’s memory, of Nasta’s voice telling a story of Max sat in their room at Hogwarts, massaging their Faerie baby’s belly to help ease his colic pain.

“Your hands have stopped.” Harry complained.

Blaise blinked, then realised he’d stopped his massage and he went right back to it with a wry chuckle.

“I hope Max thinks to ask Nasta if everything was sorted at the reserve.” Draco mused, even as his fingers stroked soothingly over Harry’s skull and down behind his ears before moving back up to the top of his head.

“I’m sure he will.” Harry said sleepily. “Unless Nasta tells him first, he’ll know that we’ll want to know.”
“Draco, brush your thumbs over Harry’s forehead.”

“Show me.” Draco insisted.

Harry moaned when Blaise’s hands stopped moving on his belly, and he frowned at his mate, watching as he wiped his hands on a towel before shuffling up to his head and showing Draco how to cradle Harry’s head, but to run his thumbs over his forehead, dipping to the bridge of his nose, before sweeping up again, over his eyebrows and back to his temples. Blaise repeated the move, in a perfect circuit, until Draco was confident enough to try it himself.

Once satisfied and Draco had the sequence memorised, Blaise moved back to Harry’s belly, dipped his hands back into the bowl of oil, before placing his hands back on the prominent baby belly.

It was an art form to massage a pregnant person, there was only so much pressure that could be used, and a lot of Harry’s inner organs were sore and squashed up, particularly his stomach and lungs as their growing son took up ever more room.

Harry himself fell into a doze several times, only to be woken by a movement, a noise, or the baby squirming inside him, but he felt so relaxed, and so calm and boneless. He was worried for Nasta still, but he was no longer panicked or feeling so stressed.

The floo flared and Draco moved immediately to shield him and Blaise, but it was Max who was grinning down at them from the other side of the fireguard.

“Comfy?” He teased.

Harry closed his eyes and hummed, smiling in a very satisfied way.

“How’s our Nas?” He asked.

“Propped up in a bed, very grateful for the book I packed and the flask of tea that Blaise thoughtfully included. He’s fine, Harry. I swear.”

“The reserve?”

“All calm and under control once more. Llew was injured and lashing out. One of the other bull’s had bitten his damn tail. Nasta said it was so bad that the tail was almost severed, right near the top too. Nasta says Llew must have been sleeping when it happened.”
“Branwen?” Blaise asked, even as his hands continued to glide gently over Harry’s belly and sides.

“Safely knocked out and moved to be in a new enclosure with her hatchlings. Everyone is safe and accounted for, dragons and handlers both. A few, like Nasta, are going to need some time to recover, but will be fine eventually.”

Harry sighed. “I’m glad. Nasta will still be back tomorrow, won’t he?”

“Yeah, nine in the morning according to the Healer. He’ll be very bruised though, so no pouncing on him, any of you.” Max said as he stepped over the fireguard.

“The kids might.” Harry chuckled.

“He’s had his dragon pox vaccine?” Draco asked.

Max nodded. “Hence why he’s so bruised.”

“I’ll make him a nest on the settee.” Harry murmured. “He’ll need to keep his weight from that leg for a few more days, and the vaccine will make him feel ill.”

“You’ll do no such thing.” Max told him firmly. “I’ll do that, while you rest yourself.”

“I feel nice and relaxed and well rested.” Harry insisted.

“I don’t care.” Max told him. “You will rest as much as humanly possible.”

“The bladder infection is gone, Max.”

“You’re still on potions for it, you will rest, Harry.”

Harry sighed and waved at Max. “Whatever you say, love.”
Max breathed out, but he took Harry’s word for it and sat himself down. He had Nasta’s shirt folded in his hands.

“You’re bothered by something.” Draco pestered several minutes of silent massage later. Harry had been drifting again, but his eyes blinked open at the sudden intrusion of noise.

“I just don’t like the thought of Nasta being injured, Draco.” Max insisted. “He looks very pale.”

“Nasta’s always pale.” Blaise pointed out.

“To you he is. We can’t all be tanned, olive skinned descendants of Italians.” Max attempted to joke.

Blaise rolled his eyes, used to the joke by now. “You know what I mean, Max.”

“No, he’s more…ashen. More a grey pale than the white pale he usually is in winter.”

“He was in a highly stressful situation, dealing with a life or death matter, and he had his leg broken by a dragon that could have easily bitten him in half.” Draco pointed out. “I’m sure anyone would have the right to be ‘pale’ after that.”

“Don’t forget the dragon pox vaccine.” Harry murmured softly. “That always makes him feel ill, and he had to have it early because of the dragon. I imagine that having it early makes it ten times worse.”

“The main thing is he’s alive. He’s alive and he’ll be better in just a few days. He’s even coming home in less than fourteen hours.” Blaise told them all sternly. “Max, you might need to take over the top dominancy for a few days, to keep Nasta off of that leg, but he’ll be here. He’ll be awake and alert, the only thing keeping him trapped to a chair is that leg, and Skele-gro is not anything you want to take again by messing up a healing break.”

“Trust me, I more than know that after I had to have the bones in my arm regrown.” Harry insisted. “If I’d used that arm in the few days after they’d grown back, and messed up the settling period of the new bones, they’d have had to be removed again and the process would have needed to be started again from the beginning. Once was bad enough.”
“So keep Nasta off of his leg, ply him with tea and fruit, and basically carry on as normal with him being carried everywhere.” Max said.

“You know that you’ll have to do that, right?” Draco pointed out. “No one else is strong enough to carry Nasta. I’m closest to his height, but he’s taller than I am, and bulkier.”

“Don’t fret about that, love. I’ve got him in hand.” Max promised. “He probably won’t want to be carried anywhere, anyway. I’ll just be a willing crutch to help him hop everywhere.”

“Oh, if that’s what he wants then I can do that.” Draco insisted. “I just can’t carry him.”

“I promise not to try.” Harry chuckled.

“I won’t either. If he stumbles, we’ll both be flattened and that won’t help his leg.” Blaise grinned down at him.

“Are you three done pampering? Do you want a cuppa?”

“Yes please.” Harry said, waving his arms to indicate he wanted to be sat up.

Blaise stopped massaging him slowly, and once his hands were free of Harry’s body, Draco sat him up carefully, slowly.

Harry allowed his body to resettle in an upright position, and immediately their thunderer started squirming and complaining.

“Oh!” Harry moaned unhappily.

“Is he fussing again?” Draco asked.

Harry nodded with a sigh. “I hope he settles down when he’s born, or we’ll be run off our feet. He’ll be one of those babies who cries when they’re put down.”
“You don’t put our newborns down anyway.” Draco teased.

Harry gave him an evil grin.

“That doesn’t mean anything good.” Blaise chuckled.

“Oh, I’m just going to remind him that I can’t do anything for the first several days after I’ve given birth.” Harry said mildly.

“Of course you can’t. You’d have had a self-caesarean and would have spent Merlin knows how long in your nest alone with the baby, bonding. No one expects you to do anything in those first few weeks, love.” Max said sternly, getting the wrong end of the stick from the conversation.

“Oh, no, I was just telling Draco why I wouldn’t be dealing with any fussy newborns and while I’m nicely tucked up in bed, resting and recovering, you lot will be tending to our newborn son.”

“As it should be.” Blaise told him, escorting him to the settee and sitting next to him when Harry all but fell into his seat. He picked up Nasta’s shirt where Max had left it folded on the seat and buried his face in it. It still smelt of Nasta and it comforted him, and settled his Dracken.

“You just rest and recover, dearest. Let us take care of everything.” Max grinned.

“I want that in writing!” Harry teased.

“No need. I promise to remember.” Max insisted, coming to kiss him.

They heard the kettle click from the kitchen and Max snuggled Harry from behind for another prolonged moment, before standing and going to the kitchen to make tea.

Harry moaned and grumbled as his unborn son kicked and writhed, stretched out his little limbs to touch several parts of Harry’s insides at once, and Harry just knew that tonight would be a bad one, with absolutely no sleep for him.
“Is he still kicking you?” Max asked worriedly as he brought in the tea and made sure to pass Harry his cup first, even though it had been weeks since Harry’s hormones had made him kick up a fuss about getting his tea first.

“It’s more than kicking, he’s somersaulting in…” Harry ended his sentence on a breathy gasp as a fist found a lung and knocked his breath away. He moaned and wrapped his free arm around his chest.

A hand on his back rubbed and soothed him, helping him to regain his breath.

“Little demon child.” Harry hissed to his stomach.

“Come on now, love. Don’t be like that. You’ll be fine in a minute and if he came early, you’d be very upset.” Draco chided him.

Harry sighed, and he nodded, recognising the truth of that. He really would be upset if he went into premature labour and his son was born ill. He’d hate himself for that.

He took some tea and tried to hold his stomach in place as his cartwheeling son made him feel sick.

“It’s going to be a bad night.” Harry told his mates with a sigh. “He’ll be bouncing around all night now and he’ll go quiet and go to sleep at six in the morning, when the kids start waking up.”

“I…if you need to, love, stay in bed in the morning.” Max told him. “The three of us can look after the kids, and Nasta when he comes home. You need to rest.”

Harry frowned and sighed. “I might have to if he doesn’t let me sleep. I’ll be too tired.”

At eleven that night, they all went up to bed. Baby thunderer had settled down and had stopped kicking and Harry was hopeful. Until he climbed into bed, settled on his side and snuggled up to his body pillow.

Draco was against his back, Harry could feel his breath against his neck and it made him smile. His mates all drifted off, they’d had a packed day, with the decorating, then Nasta’s emergency, and the trip to the hospital. But it usually took Harry a while to settle with his pregnant belly these days.

Only the moment he settled, his thunderer came awake, kicking and squirming, rolling and stretching, and not even Harry’s body pillow, which supported him in all the right places, helped.
Annoyed and frustrated, he kicked himself free of the duvet, eased himself cumbersomely over the body pillow, and then over the side of the bed. He picked up Nasta’s shirt, and his wand from the pile of them on the bedside table, before he went and checked on his two girls, who were going to be moved to their own room in the New Year, to find them both still sleeping. They were both doing wonderfully well in recent weeks in sleeping through the night. It was Braiden who was the problem, as he didn’t stay asleep and kept waking up through the night. Unfortunately he’d learned which door his parents were behind, and he banged on it with his hand to wake them up at all hours, which usually woke his brothers and sister too, none of whom were at all pleased to be woken up.

Harry went and checked on them, as silently as he could, while breathing hard because his unborn son had a foot in his lung which made him want to vomit.

Braiden was indeed awake. Sat up in his cot, staring at the door to the hallway with teary eyes. He looked over when the bedroom door opened and pulled himself to his feet, warbling and clamouring, even as he started climbing over the bar of the cot.

“Shh, Braiden.” Harry whispered, as he hurried forward and plucked his oldest from the top of the cot. “Come on.”

Harry took him back out of the room, into the hallway, and went to check on Leolin, quickly, only to find his Faerie baby deeply asleep and perfectly fine.

Harry had to put Braiden on the floor outside and he took his hand instead. He led him to a guest bedroom and sat him on the bed.

“Why don’t you want to sleep, Braiden?” He asked.

“I don’t like being in cot!”

“You don’t like your cot?” Harry asked to confirm, and he sighed. They should have just asked Braiden from the start. He could have sent one of his mates out to get a toddler bed ready for tonight.

Braiden shook his head. “Want big bed.”

“You want a big boy bed?”

“Like Mummy and Daddies.” Braiden nodded.
“Okay, will you sleep in your cot tonight, and then Mummy and Daddies will get you a big boy bed for tomorrow night?”

Braiden started crying and he shook his head. “No.” He said stubbornly.

Harry rubbed his head and tried to figure out a solution. If he put Braiden back in the nursery then he’d wake up all the others, his mates too, and they all needed their sleep. He could always put Braiden in a spare cot in the room next to Leolin’s, but the chances that he would stay in it, or actually sleep, was very slim and it made Harry frustrated.

Then he had an idea. He picked up Braiden and took out his wand. He aimed it at the bed and shrunk it right down, so that it looked like a mini version of a double bed.

“There, will you sleep in this room. In this bed?” Harry asked, as Braiden eyed the bed with wonder.

“Yes, Mummy. This my bed.”

Harry breathed a sigh of relief as he put Braiden down on the floor and groaned through the pain in his back. Braiden crawled right under the covers and kicked his legs, giggling.

“Go to sleep now, Braiden. You have your own big boy bed. You need to go to sleep.”

“Yes, Mummy. Tuck in.”

Harry smiled at that, and he tucked his two year old in, laying a kiss to his forehead. He stayed in the room until Braiden stopped kicking his feet, stopped giggling and staring at his own legs in the little bed, and finally went to sleep.

Harry tucked him in again and hoped that Braiden stayed asleep now that he was out of the cot that he obviously no longer liked.

Harry went down the stairs and into the kitchen, making himself a cup of tea and he went to the smaller, more intimate living room, switching on the lights and sinking himself into a seat, while taking a sip of tea with a happy sigh.

Of course the moment he was up again his thunderer decided to be still. He rubbed his belly and felt the writhing movement, like a snake, come from within.
“You are going to be trouble, my little bolt of thunder.” He chuckled.

He drank his tea and tested his thunderer every fifteen minutes, lying down against the arm of the settee, but every time he tipped sideways, his child came to life, kicking, squirming and writhing and Harry was so frustrated and tired now that he snatched all the cushions, snatched the throw from the back of the settee that Mrs Weasley had made him, and he propped himself upright in the corner of the settee and covered himself over with the throw, using Nasta’s shirt like a comfort blanket.

He thought that perhaps it would take him forever to fall asleep, but he started drifting off almost immediately. Within ten minutes he was fast asleep sitting up, and his thunderer was still enough that his slight movements didn’t disturb him.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry was woken up the next morning by a very, very loud screech from the room next door and he blinked open his eyes and stretched carefully with a yawn, dislodging the throw which was still tucked under his chin. Nasta’s shirt was buried under his nose, held there by the side of his face, and it made Harry remember what had happened yesterday.

“Calix, shh.” He heard Draco chastise just from the other side of the double doors. A moment later someone slapped the door with an open hand and Harry grinned as he realised that Calix was knocking to come in.

“Pick him up, Draco.” He heard Nasta’s voice, and that made Harry’s grin widen as he realised that Nasta was back home. He must have slept through his homecoming, unless Max had seen him sleeping in here and had Apparated Nasta home. He suddenly just wanted to burrow into Nasta and he stood himself up and went around to the other family room via the kitchen.

“Mummy!” Braiden cried out and came running the moment he cleared the door. His big boy had been just inside the door, playing with a toy car.

“Harry, are you alright?” Max demanded, fretting and fussing as usual.

“I’m fine.” Harry said as he snuggled Braiden, kissed his mouth, before he caught all the other clamouring babies before going to find his two girls, and then Leolin, who was having a nap in his bouncer.

Only then could Harry go and burrow into Nasta, being careful of the propped left leg that was on a cushion on the coffee table.

“How are you feeling?” Harry asked him, rubbing their faces together, despite the fact that Nasta looked like he hadn’t shaved in two days and was rather spiky and abrasive.

“I feel fine, Harry. Normal. My leg is healed, I just have to be careful not to overdo it and cause complications. This is Max overreacting.” Nasta told him, indicating his leg on a cushion, before pulling Harry more firmly into his arms and hugging him tight. “How are you? Max said you’d gotten up in the night and fallen asleep in the living room.”

“Little thunderer wouldn’t let me lie down again. I got so fed up and I was so tired, that I propped myself up with all the cushions and fell asleep sat up.” Harry grinned. “It must have worked because I didn’t wake up once after that, and considering it’s now gone eleven in the morning, I’ve had a good nine hours of sleep.”

“Did you sort out Braiden last night?” Max asked from where he was sat playing a game with Regan.

“Yes. He was awake when I got up and he was climbing out of his cot. He doesn’t like it apparently and he wants a big bed, like we have. So I took him into the guest room and shrunk the bed in there for him.” Harry shrugged, but then he grinned. “You should have seen him giggling at his own feet as he kicked them under the duvet. We need to seriously sort him out a proper toddler bed. Maybe let him pick out his own so he wants to sleep in it.”

“It was a good idea to shrink the guest bed for him, well done my clever mate.” Nasta told him, nuzzling him.

Harry chuckled and nuzzled Nasta back, kissing him, then kissing him again.

“I missed you last night.” Harry told him.

“Oh? But I heard that you were treated to two massages by two mates, and that you had all the cwtches.”

That made Harry let out a little giggle and he just automatically felt better. “I did, but I had room for one more cwtch.”
“Then let me make it up to you.” Nasta told him, snuggling him up and setting them up for a long, proper cwtch.

“Do you want something to eat, Harry? Or just tea for now?” Max asked him, aware that Harry no longer kept to ‘traditional’ meal times and instead ate what he wanted, when he wanted it.

“Tea and some pineapple.” Harry said, giving Max a smile.

“Right away, dearest.” Max gave him a loud, smacking kiss on his way past and it made Harry smile. He was more settled today, with Nasta back home, and he felt amazing, especially after the good sleep he’d had. It seemed that he would have to use that little trick more and more in the coming weeks, until his thunderer was born.

“You haven’t worried too much?” Nasta asked him.

Harry shook his head. “No, love. I’ve been alright, I was worried before we knew what had happened to you. I was worried when I heard that you were in the hospital, but your Dad reassured me that you were alright, and that you’d be home soon. Your shirt really helped though, so thank you for letting Max bring it to me.”

“I didn’t need it after I got the pyjamas he brought for me, I did fix it up first though, it was a bit ripped and soot stained.”

Harry sighed and tried not to think of it. They could never have a quiet year…right now he’d settle for a quiet month, where none of them were fighting, none of the kids were having problems, he wasn’t so heavily pregnant, and none of his mates were risking life and limb at work.

“I was worried that maybe you’d gone to sleep downstairs because you were worrying so much.” Nasta confided.

“Oh, Nas, no.” Harry said, turning to face him and cupping his stubbled cheeks. “It really was more comfortable. Our baby wouldn’t let me sleep, every time I went to lie down on my side, he started kicking my lungs or bladder, or stretching out the skin on my stomach. He only settled when I was sat upright and I just wanted to sleep.”
Nasta nodded and bent to kiss him. “I’m glad that that was what it was. When Max came to get me and told me that we had to Apparate because you were asleep in front of the floo…I thought then that maybe you’d fallen asleep waiting for me, sat there worrying all night. I’m so glad to hear that that isn’t the case.”

Harry shook his head. “I love you, but you’re daft.”

Nasta snorted and threw his arm back around Harry and cuddled him in. Max came in with a tea tray, and he handed out cups of tea, Harry and Nasta getting theirs before Blaise and Draco, before Harry got a bowl of chunked pineapple.

Harry managed several bits of pineapple, near enough half a bowl, before he turned to Nasta and started feeding him the rest. No one fretted now, they knew that he would eat when he was hungry, and he would stop when he’d had enough. Harry was a dab hand at pregnancies, this was his fourth, despite the fact that he had nine children between them. This little one was fairly easy, he hadn’t had any proper scares, despite that his stress had elevated his baby boy’s heart rate for a while, and he was his first singleton since his very first, his little Braiden.

“Mummy, I want.”

Harry chuckled, of course his little Farren would look up and see him eating. Harry grinned at Nasta and handed Farren the bowl with the bits of remaining pineapple. Farren had already tried pineapple, and he liked it, so he ate the few chunks that were left happily enough, though Harry thought that there would be trouble when Braiden toddled over and took a piece. Farren however, only offered the bowl for Braiden to take another piece and the two of them shared a moment together, and then Braiden was gone again, walking over to Calix, and Farren was left to sit with his bowl of pineapple.

“So, how long is our quiet day going to last?” Blaise grinned.

“Don’t jinx it.” Harry complained. “I want a nice, quiet day. Max, you can open the door to the other room, put some cartoons on too. We have eleven days before Christmas, and there is still so much that needs to be done.”

“I’ve finished the shopping list. I’ll go this afternoon with a few of the kids to help limit the activity here. If I take both Eva and Ave, and put the toddler reins on Braiden, I can take all three of them.”

Harry shook his head. “Take Farren and Tegan instead, Farren hasn’t left the house in a while.”
Max nodded.

“You could even take Leolin in the baby carrier, or is that too risky?” Draco asked.

“Too risky.” Nasta said immediately. “The amount of people who will have colds or the flu in winter almost triples, because the viruses prefer cold, dry air to spread easier. Taking Farren, Tegan and Braiden will be enough. Make sure to take them to the deli counter, Max, get them to try some cheeses or hams. Farren especially will like that.”

“Buy me some fruit tarts too!” Harry piped up. “You know the ones, with the kiwi slices on them?”

Max chuckled. “I remember the ones you mean. I’ll grab you some.”

“Also, get some toddler sheets and a duvet set. Get Braiden to pick which ones, if he can. Don’t worry so much about the bed for now. We can keep the shrunken guest bed in the meantime, but we can try to make it his own a little.”

Max, who had taken out his large piece of parchment with his lists on it, and he started adding things. It was Draco who stood up to open the double doors into the smaller living room, and putting on the children’s cartoons on a low volume. Regan abandoned everything and went to watch, sitting in the little toddler chair that Draco had just set out.

“No, I’m good.” Blaise answered, while Draco just shook his head.

“Nas, you want anything, babe?” Max asked. “You know, besides a new leg?”

Nasta snorted. “Grab me some kale and chia seeds, Max. I want to make up a new smoothie.”

Max pulled a face, but he dutifully added the ingredients.

“I’ll make it for you, I don’t want you standing up.” Max said, which Harry thought was nice of him, considering what he thought of Nasta’s smoothies in the first place.

“Are we okay for tea and milk?” Harry asked.

“We’re good for milk.” Max answered. “I’ll pick up another eight pints, just to be sure, but we need tebags and rusks.”

“I’m good for honey, I think there’s an emergency bottle in the top cupboard.” He grinned.

“I bought it last week, just to ensure we never run out for you.” Max smiled.

“Thank you, lover.”

“My pleasure, dearest. Now, Draco, you’ll be in charge while I’m gone. Look after them all.”

“Nasta is sat right there.” Draco complained.

“Nasta better not move his arse for anything.” Max muttered under his breath.

“I’m not going to move.” Nasta insisted. “I don’t want a broken or mangled leg for Christmas.”

Harry sighed as everything was rushed and time seemed to fly, even as he shared a bonding moment with Nasta. Very soon Leolin was awake and crying for him, because he’d dropped his Ma doll and couldn’t see it. The kids were spread out over two rooms, some being quiet, others rather rowdy and toublesome, Braiden in particular, who they noticed had emptied the contents of the sideboard by climbing it and throwing everything out onto the floor. He’d had a time out for that.

Very soon Max gave up trying to keep everyone happy and the house tidy, and took Farren, Tegan and Braiden shopping, strapping them into their car seats and getting them out of the house. Not that it made much of a difference, with Calix taking over where Braiden had left off and Eva banging her head into the coffee table, then Leolin pitching a fit it was hardly the quiet afternoon that Harry wanted, especially when his thunderer came alive and started squirming and wriggling. He had to run for the bathroom twice to throw up, both times Blaise coming with him, because Draco made him feel worse and despite wanting Nasta there, as the calmest, most competent person, he unfortunately couldn’t move, so Harry was stuck with Blaise. Though that truly wasn’t fair, as Blaise was calming and soothing, but he winced every time Harry heaved, and Harry could feel that stiffness in the hands on his back.

It was just eleven days until Christmas, and it was going to be hell on earth, only to be beaten when their children were older, and understood more about what was happening. Harry would cherish these early years, while Christmas was still mostly a surprise to the toddlers, but he would be looking forward to next year, as he had his fingers crossed tightly that he would not be pregnant at Christmas next year. Braiden would be three years old, his quintuplets would be almost three, and his twin girls almost two. His little thunderer would be almost a year old and thinking that made Harry smile as he curled up into Blaise on the bathroom floor, shivering and shaking from shock and cold of the sudden vomiting.

“Are you alright, Innamorato?” Blaise asked him softly, stroking his hair. He was less tense now that Harry had stopped vomiting.

Harry nodded weakly. “I think I need to lie down for a bit, Blaise.”

“Do you want to go up to bed, or into Nasta’s lap?”

Harry chuckled. “Do you need to ask? Nasta’s lap, please. Misery loves company, after all.”

“You can almost see the little rainclouds hanging over your heads.” Blaise teased, as he hunched on his feet and slipped an arm around Harry’s back and under his knees. Harry wrapped his arms around Blaise’s neck for stability and his mate lifted him up easily, carrying him back into the family room.

“Are you okay, Harry?” Nasta asked immediately, visibly vibrating with the urge to stand up and come to him.

Blaise crouched down and laid Harry gently on the settee, putting his head in Nasta’s lap.

“I’m fine.” Harry said. “I really need to lie down, though. That last…that last purge really wore me out. I feel weak and shaky.”

“You need some sugar. Blaise, go and find him one of those chocolate bars.” Nasta ordered.

Harry grinned. “I think I’m hallucinating now.”
“Oh, be quiet.” Nasta teased with a smile. “I’m not that tyrannical. You had that massive box from Max for your birthday, a chocolate bar a day, and I’ve not said a word about it. But your blood sugar has dropped from the vomiting, you need to eat something sugary to help.”

“Will tea help?” Draco asked, pale and worried.

“It would, thank you, Draco.” Nasta said, even as he stroked his hand through Harry’s hair, brushing his forehead.

Harry was kept happy with a bar of fudge chocolate and a cup of honey tea, but it wasn’t as nice as it could have been, considering that his stomach was very tender, his thunderer was still moving, and he had to eat carefully, delicately, letting the small nibbles of chocolate all but melt in his mouth, lest it make him run for the bathroom again.

He ate slowly, took delicate sips of tea, and carefully monitored himself. He couldn’t wait until this was over. He’d thought that once the morning sickness had trailed off, it would be plain sailing, he hadn’t counted on his son kicking him so viciously it could make him vomit up everything he’d eaten that week. It was eleven days until Christmas…they weren’t going to bloody survive.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Not much to say other than I think this is the first time that I’ve managed to match up the timeline to real life. Normally we get the Christmas chapters in the summer, so it makes a nice change. Chapter 120 is up to 4,000 words and is going well, so I’ll hopefully be getting that up soon, within the next few weeks, but I hope that you’ve all enjoyed this chapter for now.

StarLight Massacre. X
Chapter Notes

Last Time

Harry was kept happy with a bar of fudge chocolate and a cup of honey tea, but it wasn’t as nice as it could have been, considering that his stomach was very tender, his thunderer was still moving, and he had to eat carefully, delicately, letting the small nibbles of chocolate all but melt in his mouth, lest it make him run for the bathroom again.
He ate slowly, took delicate sips of tea, and carefully monitored himself. He couldn’t wait until this was over. He’d thought that once the morning sickness had trailed off, it would be plain sailing, he hadn’t counted on his son kicking him so viciously it could make him vomit up everything he’d eaten that week. It was eleven days until Christmas…they weren’t going to bloody survive.

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

Chapter One Hundred-Twenty – Christmas Chaos

It was halfway through Christmas Day and Harry was exhausted already. They’d gotten to bed late, in the early hours of the morning, and Harry had had a bad night of sleep on top of that. The kids were all wound up, due to the excitement and the small mountain of new toys they’d received, and they would barely eat their dinners, which was how Harry felt, as he could barely touch it either, despite the fact that he really wanted it.

He’d been fine with the soup, he’d declined the fresh baked bread rolls, but it was the main meal that was defeating him. He had a few pieces of turkey, some mashed potatoes, and some peas, carrots and cabbage, and nothing else, but still he was struggling.

Farren had actually found something to eat that he didn’t like, and he had started crying hysterically as he’d bitten into the Brussels sprout and then sat in his booster seat, crying with the vegetable hanging off of his tongue.

Harry had quickly taken a napkin to his mouth and tongue, wiping it away and soothing him.

“It’s okay, baby. You won’t have any more of those.” Harry said, taking the other sprout from Farren’s plate quickly. He considered doing it for the others as well, but Regan had already eaten both of his, and Tegan was happily chewing her first one. It was just Farren who didn’t like them, it seemed. At least at the moment, considering Braiden hadn’t tried any of his yet, and neither had Calix.

“Well that was a surprise.” Max chuckled, holding his hand out for the napkin.
Harry handed it to him while soothing Farren, shushing him and calming him.

“Put it in his book that he really doesn’t like sprouts, Max.” Harry called out.

“Sure thing, lover.” Max called back.

Farren did eventually calm down and Harry coaxed him back to eating, showing him that no more sprouts were on his plate and instead he helped him to use his fork to spear a piece of bitesize turkey.

Harry went back to picking at his own food, but couldn’t manage much more. He could almost feel Max’s disappointment, as he’d worked so hard to make dinner perfect for them all, and truly it was perfect, but Harry just couldn’t eat it. But he swore he’d try again later in the day, when his thunderer eventually settled down for a sleep.

Their living room was a mess of toys and gifts. Draco had already fished out all of the clothes their children had been given and had hung them up to get them out of the way, but still the amount of toys and books on their floor was unbelievable. The family had gone overboard and their kids were so spoilt, it had taken all of the morning and into the afternoon to help the toddlers to unwrap everything. They’d needed a break in the middle too.

“Maybe we should make use of that massive playroom that’s sitting nice and empty upstairs?” Harry giggled, as he led the kids back into the family room after their jelly desserts and unleashing them back onto their toys.

“We can at least put some of these toys up there.” Draco agreed. “We won’t be able to see the floor.”

“It won’t be for long.” Nasta insisted, up on his feet and walking normally. He was fully recovered from the leg break, and the early dragon pox vaccine, and he was his usual self, as he hefted up Regan and wiggled him between his hands, making their little boy laugh.

“A few days of being unable to move and watching our steps, and then we can start clearing up again.” Max nodded, sitting down and patting his full stomach.

Harry missed the feeling of having a large, decent meal and he sighed and moved to sit himself by Max, tipping himself sideways to rest on his mate and he cuddled in. Max moved an arm to wrap it around Harry, large fingers stroking over his shoulder and back.

Harry was asleep within five minutes, snoring softly against Max’s chest.
“Seeing him like this, I’m so conflicted.” Draco sighed.

“Over what, Cariad?” Nasta asked, looking critically to Harry.

“I want him happy and back to normal, but at the same time I want our son to have the best chances for survival.” Draco sighed and shook his head. “He hasn’t eaten enough to feed a mouse in the last week, he keeps being sick, he’s not sleeping properly. I hate what it’s doing to him, but on the other hand he’s carrying our son, and every extra week that Harry carries him makes him bigger, stronger and healthier.”

“We all feel the same way, but Harry himself wants the baby to stay put.” Blaise pointed out, even as he cuddled with Leolin, who was distracted by a light-up ball that he’d been given for Christmas by his Granddad Aneirin. Every time he squeezed it, it would flash a different colour and it had the Faerie entranced.

“I just wish it wasn’t so hard on him.” Draco said quietly.

“He’s going to be fine. Our little boy will be born in six weeks if Harry doesn’t go into early labour. He should have started building his nest by now, or at the very least scouted out the location he wants to use. None of you go searching, you know the drill by now.” Nasta said firmly.

“It’s winter, so it’ll be in the ground again, like with our girls.” Max pointed out. “So stay out of the garden and surrounding forest until he starts nesting. I’ve noticed that my favourite jumper has gone missing too. I can’t find it anywhere, and with him being so close to his due date, I have a pretty good idea that it’s gone into making his nest, so he’s definitely started on it, but at least my oven gloves are safe…for the moment.”

“It helps that our kids don’t want to go outside and play.” Blaise pointed out. “None of us want to go outside either, it’s too cold.”

“Can you blame them with the amount of new toys they had today?” Max chuckled softly, not wanting to disturb Harry sleeping on him.

“No. Not at all.” Blaise grinned. “But they’re so happy, and that makes Harry happy, and that makes all of us happy.”
“Happy’s good.” Max smiled widely. “Even if he is fast asleep on me and snoring.”

“Our thunderer is really giving him the run around.” Draco sighed. “Not letting him eat or sleep, kicking and punching him at all times. I’m worried that Harry will be hurt.”

“He can take Harry’s breath away, and make him feel sick and even cause him to vomit, but I don’t think he’ll cause any lasting damage, Draco.” Nasta said. “Though we can always ask Healer Almus at Harry’s next scan if you’re so worried.”

“He’s been through so much, and, I know we haven’t mentioned it much, just in case Harry overhears us, but going through the court proceedings with him, finding out exactly what he went through and what they did to him, and with…and with what I did to him too, I just never want him to be hurt ever again.”

Nasta went to sit by Draco, throwing an arm around him and hugging him. He pressed a kiss to Draco’s forehead.

“Harry is fine. He’s stronger than any of us, despite being the smallest. Look at the happy, kind man he is, Draco. When most people would be isolated, bitter and angry, Harry is tall, strong, proud and kind. He was right, what he went through will never define him, because he was always stronger than them. It bothers me too, to know what he went through in such exact detail, seeing the pictures of what was done to him and the conditions he was kept in, sometimes it makes me so angry I want to rip through something. But it doesn’t bother him half as much as it bothers us, maybe that says something about us as a whole.”

“I was thinking the same.” Max said softly, stroking Harry’s arm as his little mate snored on him. “That maybe I’m the one who has a problem moving on from it, as Harry has shown that he is fully capable of moving on, but I’m still so terribly angry over it all. Prison is too good for those monsters.”

“We’re going to be angry for a while, until it sinks in and we move on ourselves. Harry had his closure, now we need ours.” Nasta replied. “He doesn’t want any reminders, we owe him that much, to help his recovery, but all three of you, you can always come to me if you need to.”

“And you can come to us.” Blaise insisted immediately. “You might be our top dominant, but you do not have to carry the weight of everything on your shoulders alone. We’re here for you too.”
“We got a bit morbid for the celebrations.” Max pointed out. “Christmas Day is really not the time for this talk, lovers.”

“We really did. I’ll go put the kettle on and cut us all some cake.” Blaise said with a grin. “Even you, Nas. You could use some cake.”

Nasta snorted. “I won’t say no to being served some cake by one of my gorgeous mates.”

Max huffed a laugh and sat back, going back to stroking Harry’s arm, right down to his small hands and little fingers.

He was glad that Harry was getting some rest, especially when it had been pointed out that it was just a matter of weeks now until Harry was nesting and giving birth. Not even a full two months away.

Harry woke up as Max was delicately trying to nibble on his second slice of cake and their submissive made a soft noise and stretched carefully. His eyes blinked open, and when they finally focused, on Max trying to eat cake, he gave a goofy grin.

“Sleep well?” Max asked him with a chuckle.

Harry hummed happily. “Are you enjoying your cake?” He asked with a grin, his voice husky with sleep still.

“Very much. You want a cuppa and a slice?”

Harry shook his head. “No. I want a sandwich.”

“Really?” Max asked excitedly.

Harry nodded. “All of a sudden I’m starving.”

“That’s the greatest gift I’ve received all day.” Max said happily, all but beaming at Harry as he gently shifted him to lie on the other side.
“Eat your cake first.” Harry complained.

“Not a chance. My pregnant mate is hungry, and I’m not going to sit here and eat in front of you.”

Max hurried to the kitchen and Harry watched him go with a giggle.

“I want beef, Max!” He called out.

“I was just about to ask.” Max shouted back, laughing.

“How are you feeling, love?” Draco asked him, moving over to sit by Harry’s feet on the floor, Ave in his arms.

“Hungry.” Harry laughed. “It’s funny how it comes on so quickly, but my stomach has shrunk so much that it needs lots of little meals through the day, instead of a few larger meals.”

“Whatever you need, gorgeous.” Max insisted, coming into the room with a sandwich. “There’s more if you want it, you can eat whatever you want now, in fact I encourage it.”

Harry only had eyes for the sandwich and he took the plate from Max and took a huge bite from the sandwich, happily humming.

“Oh, I adore you.” Max declared, kissing Harry’s head, but otherwise not disturbing his eating mate.

Max went to play with his children now that he was free to do so, and wasn’t snuggling a sleeping mate, and he sat on the floor and pulled Regan to him, sitting his boy on his thigh and picking up a toy to play with him. Regan giggled at him, but Max didn’t care.

Harry was full from just a sandwich, but he knew he would snack some more in about an hour, and instead he took his plate out to the sink and made tea for everyone. He couldn’t carry so many cups however, nor could he carry a tray, so he carried the tea to his mates, two mugs at a time. He’d made Blaise a cup of coffee, after sniffing it a bit first to make sure his stomach stayed in place, and his mate’s purple eyes lit up with joy as he pulled Harry into a snog.
“Merry Christmas, honey.” Harry teased. “You get your coffee today.”

“Grazie, Bello. Ti amo.”

“And I love you too.” Harry giggled, heading back to the kitchen to grab Max and Draco’s tea.

He handed out the two mugs, went to get his own and he finally got to ease back into his seat then, with his own tea, and he took a sip and sighed happily.

“You look so contented.” Max grinned.

“Oh, I am.” Harry told him, grinning back. “I’ve had a nap, I’ve filled my belly and now I can relax with tea. I’m very contented.”

“Contented and relaxed is a very good look on you.” Blaise told him.

“I’m just missing baby cuddles.” Harry joked.

“You can have your pick. Here.”

Draco reached forward and snagged Farren, picking him up and settling him on the settee next to Harry.

“Mummy.”

“Do you want to cuddle with me?” Harry asked, holding out his arms.

“Yeah.” Farren giggled and reached over to him, hugging him tight around the neck.

“Damn, your grip is getting tight, love. We might need to start teaching you not to squeeze.”
“Is it getting bad?” Max asked concernedly. “I remember all through my childhood being taught control. My parents used a doll that was charmed to cry whenever it was squeezed too hard. I’ll ask them for the charm and we’ll see how Farren reacts to it.”

“That might be a good idea with a new baby coming into the house. I know he doesn’t mean it, he just doesn’t know his own strength.” Harry said, holding Farren close to himself, waiting for his baby boy to let go.

“Here, distract him with this.” Blaise told him, passing over a brand new book.

Harry settled back, put Farren next to himself with an arm wrapped around him, and he showed him the book.

“Let’s have a story, Farren.” He said happily, opening it to the first page.

Their afternoon passed very quickly. It was boisterous, loud, but Harry would not have it any other way, as Max topped up the tea yet again and passed Harry a mince pie.

They were going to Alexander’s later on, for a festive family get-together. Nasta assured them that they were not going to stay long, though told Max that he could, of course, stay with his family as long as he wanted, but their kids needed to get to bed on time, and truthfully, so did Harry.

It was relaxing, in the way that their family life always was these days, loud, energetic, with a side of eardrum bursting shrieks and copious cups of tea, with or without snacks. Harry really enjoyed it, having a family of his own, and he was more grateful on days of family celebration than he believed himself capable of putting into words. It almost choked him when he realised that it was Christmas Day, and he was sat in the middle of the room, his family all around him, laughing, playing, enjoying themselves, baby and mate alike. He was no longer the lonely little boy, excluded from everything, locked into his cupboard and forced to listen to Dudley complain that he hadn’t got enough presents, or he wanted more turkey on his plate when Harry hadn’t eaten in a day or two. It hit him right in the chest, making it hard to breathe, but it also made him smile so widely it hurt. His own children would never know a life like his, even Leolin was included and sat up, being held on his Daddy Draco’s lap, still clutching his light up ball. This is what real family was, and it was his family.

------------------------------- X

Taking armfuls of babies over to another house was a military operation for them now, as their children outnumbered them and Harry couldn’t floo anywhere alone because of his pregnancy, and his rather terrible track record with his face planting landings. They did eventually make it for four in the afternoon, they were going to leave at six and get the kids wound down and into bed, and hopefully they would be so worn out that they’d fall straight to sleep. After the busy day that they’d had, that was exactly what Harry was going to do too.

“There you are, we thought you had decided not to come.” Richard greeted them, already rather merry with a glass of wine in one hand.

“Of course we were coming.” Max insisted, going to pull his Dad into a hug and a kiss. “Merry Christmas.”

“I hope you had a good one this year, I know I did.” Richard actually giggled and Max lifted both eyebrows.

“How much have you had to drink, Dad?”

“Too much, I know.” Richard answered. “But I got given seven bottles of wine this year, from colleagues, past clients, friends. I wanted to taste them all and Alexander always has good wine.”

Max chuckled. “You’ll be sore tomorrow.”

“Oh, care bear, I’m fucking counting on it!” Richard declared happily, toasting Max with his glass of wine.

“I…really did not need to hear that.” Max insisted. “Where’s Mum and Dad?”

“Your Mother is…is in the kitchen, last I saw.” Richard told them. “Your Father is talking to your Grandfather, something serious.”

“What’s happened?” Harry asked worriedly.

“Nothing that you should concern yourself about on Christmas, love.” Richard told him sternly.

Nasta took over and herded them into the huge garden that was always used for family get-togethers, because they wouldn’t all fit in the one room, and their children went toddling, or crawling, off to interact with the other children running around…they were mostly Shae’s kids, as she was one of the only submissive’s who didn’t smother her children and she let them just be kids.

It was half an hour before Harry saw Myron or Alexander, he’d spent most of his time with Xerxes, who he had found himself becoming much closer with, since Evelyn’s death and the revelation that they coped with grief the same way, and of course since it had been Xerxes’ hand holding his insides in his body after that horrendous fight, plus he had been the first person Harry remembered seeing after he’d first woken up in the Dracken healing halls. He really liked Xerxes and he was so absorbed with their conversation that he missed Myron sneaking up on them.

“There you are.” Myron’s voice came from behind him and Harry all but leapt from his skin, gasping and immediately moving to slip behind Xerxes for protection.

“Myron!” Xerxes chastised his baby brother. “You know he’s pregnant, what are you trying to do, scare the baby out of him?”

“I’m so sorry, Harry.” Myron said, sounding very remorseful. “I never meant to frighten you, but no one had seen you in a while.”

Harry rolled his eyes and separated himself from Xerxes’ back, moving to hug Myron tightly.

“I’m fine. I know I’m pregnant, but I’m in the garden still.”

“I realise that, I’m sorry. I just haven’t had a chance to greet you today.”

Harry chuckled. “Merry Christmas, Myron.”

Myron gave him a smirk. “Merry Christmas, son.”

Harry was hugged tightly, but it was his throat that was tighter as he clutched at Myron. Hearing Myron or Richard call him their son, it would never get old, and he would never tire of hearing it. Maybe one day he would gather the courage to call them both ‘Dad’, but he was still too uncertain of himself, and he’d never had parents, or any real parental figures, and he was worried of it messing up the relationship he already had with them.
“Did you find him?” Alexander’s voice interrupted. “Oh, you did, wonderful. How are you, sweetness?”

“Fine.” Harry said with a smile. “How are…?”

“Mama.” One of his twin girls called out the moment she saw him.

Harry chuckled and took Eva from Alexander’s arms and snuggled her tightly.

“I didn’t even get five minutes for a cuddle.” Alexander sighed as he relinquished the baby in his arms with a teasing smile.

“They’re coming on so well now that they’re almost a year old.” Harry said, bouncing his little girl.

“Are you all ready for the quintuplets’ birthday in six days?”

Harry groaned. “Stop reminding me how little time I have left to prepare it all. Why did I have to give birth to them just six days after Christmas?”

“I just can’t believe those little ones are all turning two.” Xerxes chuckled, shaking his head.

Harry grinned. “It has been pointed out that I need to have more babies outside of winter.”

“But you have…” Alexander stopped himself as he considered his thoughts, and then he laughed. “Just Braiden. But of course, this is only your fourth pregnancy and he is going to be born in winter too. I forget how few pregnancies you’ve had compared to how many babies.”

“We were having this discussion only the other day.” Harry said. “Only Braiden was born outside of winter, so my loving mates are conspiring together to give me some more autumnal, or vernal, babies.”

“Look at you using posh words. Has Nasta been expanding your vocabulary again?” Xerxes teased.
Harry grinned and nodded. “Yeah, he has. He sat down and taught me what they meant when he used them in conversation and he saw me staring at him blankly. Of course I don’t understand why people don’t just say autumn and spring, but then people usually say things they don’t mean, or use more words than needed to speak, just to show off.”

“Do you know winter and summer too?” Myron asked with a smirk.

“Hibernal and…aestival?” Harry asked, thinking back to Nasta’s words.

“I’m glad that Nasta at least is teaching you new things.”

Harry grinned. “Oh Max teaches me things too, I just wouldn’t want to repeat exactly what he teaches me in present company.”

“You are getting as bad as Richard.” Myron complained, while Alexander laughed and Xerxes just rolled his eyes with a chuckle.

“That’s not an insult.” Harry pointed out with a grin. “I’m actually going to take it as a compliment.”

“Of course you are.” Myron chuckled himself, ruffling Harry’s hair until it was all over his head and sticking up in every which way…it was as if Draco hadn’t combed it for ten minutes prior to coming out.

“Draco will launch at your throat if he sees what you’ve done to his hard work.” Harry giggled.

That sobered all three men and Harry realised that perhaps he shouldn’t have joked about Draco attacking anyone, not to these three men at least, who had been some of the very first to respond to his distress call that awful day. Harry hated that he couldn’t joke about something like that, like normal people could, without that fight springing to mind and ruining the mood.

“How is life at home?” Xerxes plucked up the courage to ask.
Harry’s first instinct was to get angry. It wasn’t as if Draco beat them black and blue on a daily basis, but then his mind flashed back to when he’d first mated to Draco, to the over exaggerated punishment he’d received because Draco’s instincts had been skewed by the potion he’d been taking to hide himself. The anger melted away and with its absence he just felt tired.

He sighed heavily. “I think you would have been among the first to know if anything...untoward had happened at home.” He said tiredly.

“Zerry wasn’t just asking about Draco.” Myron told him, ignoring the glare he got for using Xerxes’ hated nickname. “How have they all been treating you?”

Harry frowned, but realised a moment later that they were talking about the aftermath of the fight, when he and the kids had been taken from their home for their own protection when Georgio Alessandri had invoked the Submissive Protection Act. What a fiasco that had been too.

“Blaise was never involved in any of that. The fight or the aftermath.” Harry pointed out, because though he didn’t like anyone bringing up the fact that his dominants had been declared unfit to look after him, he hated more that Blaise was lumped in with all of that and he’d never done anything wrong in the first place. “But, yeah, things have been good. I have no complaints aimed at them. I wish I could sleep and eat more, I wish I stopped running for the toilet every twenty minutes and I wish little thunderer would stop bouncing around so much, but they’ve all been great. Max waits on me hand and foot, just waiting for me to say I’m hungry before he runs to get whatever I fancy. Nasta will get up at four in the morning to slice me an apple, or a mango, because I’ve woken up in the night craving something. I mean Draco sat up with me for two hours just three days ago, reading to me, because the baby wouldn’t settle and I couldn’t sleep. I have no complaints about any of them, they’ve learnt and we’ve grown as a family.” Harry shrugged.

“Well, I for one, am very glad to hear that.” Alexander told him with a smile.

“I don’t believe for a single second that anything like that fight will ever happen again. I wouldn’t be here if I had any doubts.” Harry said seriously. “If not for myself, then for my children. I would never take any sort of risk with them, and if I thought that a single one of my mates was a risk, or there was any chance of anything like that fight happening again, I wouldn’t be here.”

“Logically we know that.” Myron told him. “We just want to look after you and part of that is making sure you’re okay.”

Harry nodded. “Let us drop this subject now, it’s too heavy for the festive period. I’m fine, the kids are fine, our family is fine. Nothing like that will ever happen again, because if it does, they all know that me and the kids will be gone. We’ve all been through therapy, Draco is continuing his anger management, and I’m still in touch with my mind healer. Everything is going to be fine.”

“Well then, onto happier topics, did you get everything you asked for, for Christmas?” Alexander teased.

Harry was forced to laugh. “And then some. I was spoilt rotten and so were the kids. Even our thunderer got presents and he’s not even bloody born!”

“Who in the name of Merlin bought anything for an unborn baby?” Xerxes asked with a laugh.

“Max, who else?” Harry grinned. “I wanted thunder and lightning style bedding for him, sort of a joke for all the times we’ve called him thunderer, but Max actually went out and found some.”

“We should have known it was Max.” Xerxes grinned at his baby brother.

Myron rolled his eyes. “Of course it was.”

“We’ve had a good day, of course the kids are worn out.” Harry indicated Eva in his arms, now fast asleep. “I wish I could have eaten more for dinner, because Max went all out and it looked amazing, but there’s always next year. I’ve already told them that if I’m pregnant for Christmas next year they’re all being castrated.”

That made the three older men laugh.

“Well don’t come complaining to us that you’re sexually frustrated and they can’t take care of you.” Xerxes joked. He regretted it immediately when Harry gave him a sly, naughty grin.

“They’ll still have hands and mouths.”

“Alright, that’s enough.” Myron chastised and Harry laughed, loudly.

“Am I missing the fun over here?” Max grinned as he jogged over, following the sound of Harry’s
Harry gave him a wide grin, and Max couldn’t help but bend down to kiss him. He loved it when Harry was this happy.

“You wouldn’t be saying ‘fun’ if you knew just what he was talking about.” Xerxes told his nephew.

“Okay, now I’m scared.” Max chuckled.

“I was just saying how I’d castrated you all if I’m pregnant next Christmas.” Harry said innocently.

“Oh, ow, love.” Max grinned. “What would you do without the four of us? Besides, only one of us has gotten you pregnant with our thunderer. Castrate him.”

“It might be you!” Alexander pointed out, laughing.

“My Sickles are on Nasta.” Max said confidently. “The amount of fruit Harry is eating, it can’t be anyone else’s.”

“That’s not an indication of paternity.” Myron said.

“It should be.” Max grinned.

“Besides, Harry says even if you are castrated…”

“Zerry!” That was Myron.

“Xerxes!” That was a laughing Alexander.

Xerxes raised an eyebrow at his Father and brother, before turning back to Max. “He said you’ll still Max blinked, looked down at a grinning Harry, and then he laughed just as loudly as Harry had.

“It’s true.” Harry chuckled, happy to see Max so amused.

“Yeah, but don’t even try to pretend you won’t miss our thighs.” Max winked.

That clenched Harry’s gut, even as the older men all groaned and complained. He thought of the powerful thrusts those thighs could manage. He thought of Nasta’s hip rolling and he shivered, arousal making his blood hot.

“Okay, I’ve changed my mind. You’ve convinced me.” Harry declared to more groans and pleas to stop this conversation.

Harry reached up with his free hand and pulled Max into a snog, his blood pounding in his ears. It was the first time in weeks that he’d felt any sort of need for sex, and it was so strong that he wanted Max, right then and there.

“Steady on, boys.” Alexander chuckled. “You have a baby between you.”

“Looks like I’m not the only one in the mood!” That was Richard’s rather drunken voice chiming in.

“How much have you had now? You’re weaving.” Myron sighed.

“I’m dancing!” Richard declared and Harry stepped away from Max’s chest to look at him, already grinning. “Harry, honey, come and dance with me!”

Harry laughed, hard. “I can’t, Richard. I can barely walk, let alone dance. Our thunderer won’t let me, I’m much too big now.”

“I’ll dance with you, lover!” Came Ashleigh’s voice and Richard turned immediately and opened his arms.
Myron sighed as they both embraced drunkenly and started twisting and spinning together.

“Don’t pretend like you don’t love it, My.” Xerxes ribbed his brother, laughing at his brother and sister-in-law. “You wouldn’t have them any other way and you know it.”

Myron cracked a grin then. “I’m just envisioning myself looking after them both tomorrow morning and how much whinging I’m going to have to listen to.”

“Save that for tomorrow.” Alexander chuckled. “Laugh at them now, in the moment. They’re happy, you’re all together, and you’re having fun.”

“I am wondering how long I’ll leave them before graciously fetching them a headache reliever and a stomach settler, though.”

Harry giggled at that. “I’d leave it for ten, fifteen minutes or so, then grab one for them.”

“I was thinking of leaving them for half a day.” Myron mused.

“No.” Harry shook his head. “It’s still Boxing Day, still a time for family. You can’t miss out on half of that. Besides, they’re your mates, you can’t leave them to suffer.”

“They don’t know that.” Myron winked.

Harry laughed and turned back to Max. “Remember our first Valentine’s Day?”

“Bits of it.” Max grinned.

That made Harry laugh hard and he quickly passed the sleeping Eva over to Max before crouching down.

“Go to the bathroom.” Max chuckled. “You’ll only wet yourself now.”
“What happened? Harry, are you okay?” Blaise asked, hurrying over.

“He’s laughing too much.” Max chuckled at Blaise’s concern. “He’s going to have an accident if he’s not careful.”

“Come on, Bello.” Blaise chuckled, helping Harry to his feet and escorting him over the garden and to the house. “What was so funny?” He asked once they were in the house and going to one of the three bathrooms.

“Richard and Ashleigh drunk dancing.” Harry giggled. “It just reminded me of our first Valentine’s Day together. Do you remember?”

“ Barely.” Blaise said, frowning. “Is that my head injury? I don’t remember it affecting my memories so far back or…”

“No.” Harry said immediately, soothingly. “None of us remember all of it. Just pieces, but we all remember something different.” Harry giggled again. “We got very, very drunk.”

Blaise blinked as that obviously rattled some memory loose. He grinned and then chuckled. “Now I remember. The hideous little Muggle hotel with the ugly décor?”

“That’s the one.” Harry giggled. “We were so drunk, and had so much sex!” Harry laughed again and they had to stop while Harry controlled the urge to release his bladder. “I shouted at the wall!” He laughed.

Blaise laughed now to see Harry like this and they finally made it to the bathroom, where Harry could finally empty his bladder and laugh as much as he wanted.

“Why did you shout at the wall?” Blaise asked, not remembering that part of the night.

“The neighbours didn’t like hearing us as much as we did.” Harry said, then laughed more.
Blaise grinned, unable to help it as he watched Harry all but fall to pieces with laughter.

“Come on, wash your hands. We only have half an hour left of mingling, then Nasta wants all the kids home and in bed.”

Harry was still giggling randomly as Blaise escorted him back down the stairs and out into the garden.

“There you are, I’ve been…what’s wrong?” Nasta asked immediately, coming towards them, and catching sight of the tear tracks on Harry’s face.

“It’s fine, Nasta. Completely fine.” Blaise soothed. “He’s been laughing too much.”

Harry giggled again and held his arms out to Nasta, who hugged him tightly, but pulled back to rub the tracks from his face with cold thumbs.

“What set you off?” Nasta asked with a smile.

“The Valentine’s anniversary that none of us really remember.” Blaise answered, Harry just burst into a fit of giggles.

Nasta grimaced. “Remind me to never drink that heavily again. I felt bad for days afterwards.”

“The people next door kept shouting at us.” Harry giggled.

“We were excessively loud.” Nasta allowed with a smirk of his own. “What made you think of that?”

“Richard’s three sheets to the wind and he was dancing…badly. With Ashleigh.” Harry giggled and then laughed hard.

Nasta chuckled. “Well all of the kids are falling like flies. I think it’s only Farren and Calix still awake. We’ve got about fifteen minutes and then I want them all home and in bed.”
Harry nodded. “We can tidy up a bit and then snuggle together. But I want some of that gateaux that Alexander has first. The one with the cherries.”

“Black forest?” Blaise asked.

Harry nodded. “Yeah, that one.”

“Come on then. Let’s get you some cake and make sure you eat it where Max can see you so he doesn’t fret.” Blaise chuckled.

“He’s worried too much about what I’m eating or not.” Harry huffed. “I know my own body and I know what will make me sick or not. I’ll be nesting soon, and our baby will be here in just six weeks! He can go back to feeding me up then, just not now, because I’m more likely to vomit if I’m too full.”

“I’ll make sure to remind him again.” Nasta told him, bending to kiss him. “Now go and get some cake.”

That cheered Harry back up and he went with Blaise to grab a small serving of the black forest gateaux. Nasta shook his head and went to grab Draco, who was cradling a sleeping Leolin.

“Do you want to take him back, love? I’m going to grab the others and join you. They need to be in their cots.”

Draco nodded. “Where’s Harry?”

“Raiding the cakes with Blaise.” Nasta grinned.

Draco laughed. “Make sure Max sees. Of course if it was one thing that could make him eat just a little more, it would be a good cake.”

“Black forest gateaux in particular.” Nasta added.
“Fresh cream and cherries.” Draco nodded. “A typical Harry combination. Though I had some earlier, and it is particularly delicious.”

“I’ll grab you a slice and bring it home for you, just get some tea going.”

“Had enough of all this wine and champagne floating around?” Draco teased.

“More than enough.” Nasta grinned. “Now go. I’m going to grab one of our sleeping beauties and join you home and I’ll see about getting them all, and then rounding up the wayward mates. If they’re done raiding the cakes.” He added with a chuckle.

It took another twenty minutes to track down all their sleeping children, and the two who were awake, because whenever Nasta had tried to grab Calix, he slipped through someone else’s legs and ran off. It was Nicodemus who had caught him in the end, when he’d seen Nasta trying to catch his son and Calix had tried to go through his legs.

Calix had not been happy and had thrown a tantrum, trashing and throwing his body around in Nasta’s arms. He’d had to curl up around him and hold his wrists tight just to get him safely through the floo. He’d had a time out as soon as he’d gotten home before he was changed and put to bed in a separate room so that he didn’t wake up his brothers and sister.

The last child he’d tracked down was Eva, who was still sleeping, snuggled up in Max’s arms.

“I’ve got her, Caru.” Nasta insisted, taking their daughter.

“Are the kids all home? I heard Calix screaming from here.”

“Yes, all home and dealt with and despite how much fun he’s having, Harry’s getting tired too.”

“He’s been eating a lot of cake, make sure he’s not sick later.” Max said.

Nasta nodded. “Come back whenever you want.”

The two of them kissed and Nasta left Max to it as he went to hunt down his other mates. He passed Eva to Blaise and took Harry himself, who was holding a napkin covered plate of different cake slices.

“I got a gateaux slice for Draco.” Harry said with a smile, and Nasta had to bent and kiss him with that look on his face.

“Let’s get you home and give you a sit down and some tea.”

“Sounds like heaven.” Harry joked.

“It will be.” Nasta swore.

They’d had a wonderful Christmas Day, and now that it was gone six in the evening and all the kids were in bed, it was their time to sit and relax. To enjoy one another and just rest for a bit as they mused on their day. The kids had certainly been excited, and spoilt, but they were all happy and in just six days their little quintuplets were turning two. That was going to be a hectic day too, but as Harry presented Draco with his plate of scavenged cake slices, the four of them sitting down to cwtch together with tea, they didn’t think about six days from now, they only thought about that day, that moment, and the only thing that was missing was of course Max, but none of them begrudged him time with his family, not even as they snuggled together in front of the fire.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------X

“Tell me again why we agreed to throw them a party?” Draco demanded as he took a wet wipe to Regan’s face, which was covered in cake.

“It seemed like a good idea at the time.” Harry said weakly, as he stared at the cake stuck to the ceiling of the kitchen.

“Next year, they aren’t having a party.” Draco carried on.

“I think it was just too close to Christmas.” Harry tried. “They are only two.”

“It’s fine.” Max stressed, even as he cleaned up cake from the floor with a tea towel. “They’re just over stimulated. We should have really seen this coming.”

Harry, who had been forbidden from helping with the clean up now that he was five weeks to his due date, looked around, slightly lost as to what to do. Blaise and Nasta had the wound up kids in hand, Max and Draco were handling the clean-up, and all the guests had left them in peace after the fiasco that was several kids screaming and throwing cake around.

“Two parties and sets of presents less than a week apart was probably a bit much for them.” Harry said, nibbling on his lip.

“Please go and sit in the living room, love.” Max told him, again. “I’ll bring you some tea in now.”

“I’m not hurt. It was a fistful of cake, not a brick.” Harry said.

“Still, please go and rest. You don’t like standing up for too long now you’re in the third trimester.”

Harry sighed and gave it up, and went to go into the living room to sit down. His mates were almost fanatical now that the New Year was at midnight and with it being the start of a brand new millennium, let alone a new year, they were expecting a lot of noise and upset. They’d already warded the kids’ nurseries with Harry’s favourite spell, the Muffliato charm, and blacked out the windows too, in preparation.

Harry had wanted to see in the new millennium with his mates, but he just didn’t know if he could make it until midnight. He’d thought about taking a nap, but how could he leave his mates like this, with several wound up, tantrum throwing babies?

He could hear the kids screaming from upstairs, where Blaise and Nasta were trying to calm them down, and he heard Max going to join them, presumably taking the cleaned up Regan with him as a minute or so after that Draco came to join him in the living room with a tray of tea, with no Regan in sight.

“All clean?” Harry asked.

Draco nodded and sat beside him with a groan. “We never expected that, even if we should have.”

Harry hummed and sipped on the tea handed to him and turned to snuggle into Draco. “All that we need now is for our thunderer to wake up and start beating up my insides, or for me to slip into nesting instincts and run off outside.”
“Is that how you’re feeling?” Draco asked seriously.

Harry shook his head. “You know the instincts will come on suddenly. I get no prior indication, the same with my heat periods. One moment I’m fine, the next I’m not. But our boy is being quiet today, thankfully. I think after the week or two of so much activity that he just has to stop and rest himself. Thank Merlin.”

“If he keeps that up then you might actually have a quiet night in bed.”

“I’m not looking that far ahead, I’m just glad I’ve been able to eat a little more today. The first thing I’m going to do when he’s out, and normal function has been resumed, is sitting down and gorging.”

Someone laughed from the doorway and Max dropped over the back of the settee to grin down at him. Harry grinned back at him and puckered his lips. Max dropped down further and kissed him before vaulting the settee and landing on it.

“Everything sorted up there?” Draco asked him.

“Yeah, Nas and Blaise have it well in hand. It’s only Calix still showing off, but Nasta is getting impatient now. You know what that means.”

“Everyone do as Daddy Nasta says, or the punishments come out.” Harry grinned.

“You could do well in remembering that too, sometimes.” Nasta purred.

“What is with you guys sneaking up on me today.” Harry giggled.

Nasta did as Max had, and popped out from over the settee, even as Blaise slipped around and squeezed himself between Max and Harry, snuggling in.

“Hi there.” Harry grinned.
Nasta kissed him, then moved to kiss Draco and then Blaise.

“Where’s mine?” Max demanded.

“Right…” Nasta kissed Max and smiled. “…here.”

“Come and drink your tea and settle down a little.” Harry encouraged, grinning at them both. “You deserve the rest.”

Nasta squeezed onto the settee with them all and groaned as he took the weight from his feet.

“So…that was a complete disaster.” Blaise commented.

Harry laughed and dribbled a bit of tea down his chin.

“Damn it, Blaise.” Harry giggled, wiping his chin with his sleeve before Draco could get there with his handkerchief.

“Don’t wipe your face with your sleeve.” Draco sighed exasperatedly. He was ignored.

“So next year we skip the third birthday party.” Max chuckled.

“Well hopefully they’ll be better by next year.” Harry pointed out, but his mates could see that he was uncertain and starting to look a little fretful.

“We wouldn’t really not give them a birthday party, Harry.” Nasta soothed, immediately realising the problem.

“Of course not!” Max denied. “Our little terrors need spoiling.”

“Sorry, it’s just…I know how it feels not to have a birthday party, or any acknowledgement of a birthday, and...I never want my babies to know that feeling. I don’t want any of you to ever know that feeling.”

“I hate those bastards so fucking much.” Max growled, even as he reached over and joined the group hug around Harry.

“I’m just a little emotional at the moment.” Harry sniffed. “My babies turning two, heavily pregnant with our ninth baby, our little girls are just a few weeks from turning a year old.”

“Well...at least we’ll get them to a year old before we have another newborn in the house.” Max tried to joke. It fell a little flat, but his mates still flashed him small smiles.

“You’ve gone and jinxed it now, he’ll come the day before their birthday.” Harry chuckled, brushing his eyes.

“Nah, he’s going to be good and stay right where he is.” Draco told him.

Harry grinned then. “No, he’s definitely half mine, there’s no way he’s going to be completely good.”

“Whenever he comes, we’ll be ready. I think tomorrow we should set up his bassinet in our bedroom, just to prepare.” Nasta said.

Harry perked up excitedly. “I’d like that!” He said.

His mates all laughed at him.

“Okay, we’ll sort that. Anyone remember exactly where we put the bassinets?” Max asked with a frown.

“They’re flat packed in the basement storage.” Nasta said.

Draco groaned theatrically. “Not flat packed! Why did we flat pack them and not just leave them as they were?”

“It created more space.” Nasta said. “But there are four of us. We can put up a simple bassinet between us, not only do we have magic, but we’ve done it before.”

“I’ll go out and buy a new mattress too. Our little boy needs his luxuries.” Max told them.

“How is a new mattress a luxury?” Draco demanded.

“He’s been nestling in Harry’s gorgeous body for seven months, nothing is going to compare to that.” Max pointed out with a grin. “So we need to give him luxuries, like a new mattress, to make up for the discomfort of being born.”

“You’re so daft. I love you.” Harry declared with a smile.

“I love you too, gorgeous.”

The heavy talk and the bad feelings were gone and forgotten, and they lapsed into a comfortable silence together. Draco grabbed his book and started reading, Blaise seemed to be dozing against Max, while Max himself was debating with Nasta on the properties of dragon blood in potions, and Harry was content to sit, and not think at all, while he finished his tea.

At least he was until his unborn son came awake with a squirm and a sudden foot to the bladder.

“Oh!” He gasped, shifting forward and putting his cup down on the table and struggling to get to his feet. He had the attention of all four of his mates, who looked on, very concerned.

“Are you okay?” Blaise asked him, putting a hand to his back to help him up.

“Baby’s awake, foot in bladder.” He said shortly as he found his feet and hurried as fast as he possibly could to the bathroom just outside the room.

“That baby is a terror.” Blaise sighed. “Watch him be a plank sleeper when he’s born.”
“It probably means he’s a bigger size than our previous babies.” Nasta said calmly. “The baby’s bigger, so there’s less room, so he’s moving about all of Harry’s organs.”

“But after quintuplets?” Blaise frowned.

“Remember what happened with those quintuplets.” Draco cut in. “They had such little room that they stretched practically out of Harry’s body at just four months gestation. I don’t think any of us would wish that on him again, but our thunderer is a singleton, for him to be alone in there, and still causing such problems, he’s going to be our biggest, heaviest baby to date. It’s a good thing, of course, because it means he’ll be healthier, but it means Harry has to suffer while carrying him.”

“Harry is going to be fine.” Nasta soothed gently. “We’re going to look after him, and once he has had the baby we can let him rest and pamper him.”

“Same as usual, the first week after the baby he doesn’t lift a finger?” Max queried. “Longer if we can keep him lying down and resting, not that it ever works.”

The four of them snorted.

“We can try.” Nasta said with a smirk. “If we ply him with everything he needs, and don’t make him feel like he has to do anything, or that he’s missing out, we should be able to keep him lying down and resting.”

They fell silent when Harry came waddling back into the room…not that they’d ever say that he was waddling aloud, of course, but it was still true.

“Better?” Blaise asked as Harry settled back down beside him.

“Much. Thankfully it was my bladder though and not my stomach. I really don’t want to be sick today, on top of everything else.”

“Do you want more tea?” Max asked him, leaning forward to peer past Blaise.

“Yes, please. Can I have an apple too?”
“You can have what you want, love.”

Max stood and gave Harry a kiss before heading to the kitchen. He came back quickly with the apple while he waited for the kettle to boil and Harry thanked him and bit into it happily. He loved the crisp, crunchy apples the best.

Nasta didn’t move over to sit by him for once, but Harry reasoned that it was because he was sandwiched between Blaise and Draco and Nasta didn’t want to move either of them, but Harry felt those hazel-gold eyes on him regardless. It made him smile to himself, mostly because he knew he would be getting a thorough snog from Nasta while he still tasted of apple. He had made the promise to himself to keep eating fruit after he had the baby, purely to get kisses from Nasta.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Harry was fast asleep on the settee and even though it was coming up to midnight, none of them had the heart to wake him. He’d tried so hard to stay awake, but he’d nodded off near eleven, leaving the four of them to see in the New Year together.

Nasta was sat with Blaise laying on his chest, he was running his hand over Blaise’s back feeling very contented and listening to Blaise breathing. Just beside them, on the opposite end of the settee, Harry was snuffling softly in his sleep. Nasta could hear him and it settled him down more, his Dracken side was happy and content because his home was peaceful and his submissive well cared for, and all of this was despite the fact that four of their five quintuplets had played up at their birthday tea, which had set off the twin girls and woken up Leolin who had been startled and then grumpy because of his disturbed sleep, and everything, and some people too, had ended up covered in smashed up cake.

“How’s quiet up there.” Max said in a whisper as he came back into the living room. “All of them are fast asleep and none of them are wet. I still can’t get over how cute Braiden looks in his own little bed though.”

“They’re all growing up.” Draco pointed out softly. “Six two year olds and two soon to be one year olds. They’re all getting better at talking, they’re all pretty much walking now too. The girls might stumble a little, and Calix will crawl if he falls, but they’re all mobile. Even Leolin is coming on more, though he is the exception to the walking and talking.”

“He’s going to be.” Nasta said calmly. “Being a Faerie, he doesn’t keep to the same schedule as the other babies so it’s useless to compare him to them. But having the others all up on their feet will have us run off of ours soon enough.”
“Especially with the new baby.” Max added. “We’re not going to be getting enough sleep for starters and if we do carry on having a rota for night duties, our sleep will still be disturbed and only one of us will be getting paternity leave, if the baby is even mine or Nasta’s.”

“Calm, Caru.” Nasta soothed. “Everything will work itself out. There are five of us, and we have extended family who are willing to help us, even if it is a play date for a few hours while we catch a nap, or sort out the washing.”

Max groaned in horror as he remembered the state the washing had gotten in just after their twins had been born.

“I hope we never get so behind in the washing ever again.”

“Eight kids all wearing clothes and pyjamas, with Leolin and the girls sometimes needing to be changed halfway through the day, on top of our clothes and workwear, I think we need two washing machines.” Blaise said sleepily.

“Oh, you are awake.” Max said. “I wasn’t sure.”

“I’m awake, just very happy right where I am.”

Nasta went back to stroking over Blaise’s head, neck and back, feeling protective of him all of a sudden as he remembered that he might not have had the chance to do this if things had been different. He hated thinking on that awful six minutes when Blaise had literally been dead and gone. They had him back now, he was doing well, but that still didn’t mean Nasta wasn’t protective and at times rather possessive.

Harry squirmed and all four of them went silent immediately, holding their breaths, just in case, but those green eyes blinked open and that beautiful face scrunched up right before Harry yawned.

“Have I missed it?” He asked softly, blinking the sleep from his eyes.

“No. It’s ten minutes to go.” Max told him, moving to crouch in front of Harry.

Harry hummed. “Good. I didn’t want to miss it.”
Harry sat himself up, with help from Max, but he shivered too and immediately Max wrapped his arms around him, offering himself up for warmth.

“You woke up because you were cold, didn’t you?” Max asked.

“Yeah.” Harry replied, but immediately he had the throw from the back of the settee wrapped around him.

“Are you sick?” Draco asked concernedly.

Harry shook his head. “No. I don’t think so. I was just cold.”

Max sat up on the settee next to Harry and cuddled him up in the blanket, getting a smile for it too.

“We’ll keep an eye on you, just in case.” Nasta said seriously.

“You always do.” Harry chuckled, even as he absentmindedly drew on Max’s chest with his fingers.

“Does anyone want tea?” Draco asked.

“It’s too late for that.” Blaise complained.

“I want juice though.” Harry said. “If you don’t mind.”

“Of course not. Does anyone want water or juice?”

“Nah.” Max said, shaking his head. Blaise just shook his head against Nasta’s chest.

“I’ll have water, please Draco.” Nasta said and Draco nodded and went to the kitchen.
“Are the kids alright? Has anyone been up to check on them?”

“I went up, love. Everyone is fine and accounted for, happily sleeping and they were all dry.”

Harry nodded and snuggled up further in the blanket.

“We’ll get you up to bed now as soon as we’ve seen in the New Year.” Nasta said firmly.

“New millennium.” Harry corrected.

Nasta smiled at him. “The new millennium then, but as soon as we’ve shared a snog and well wishes, we’ll all be in bed.”

“Boo, Nas, where’s your sense of adventure? Where is your sex drive?” Max declared.

Draco laughed as he came in, carrying three glasses, two of water and one of orange squash. Harry was laughing hard, even as Nasta shook his head.

“I said that we’d be in bed, Cariad, I said nothing about sleeping. Of course if you wanted to be a glutton for punishment and want to get in bed for half-twelve and then have sex, and still get up at six in the morning with the kids, of course I’ll personally see to it that you’re indulged.”

“I want to be indulged. Always.” Max grinned.

“I’m not tired.” Draco smirked.

“I can rise to the occasion.” Blaise chuckled, despite the fact that he sounded very sleepy.

“I’ll try.” Harry grinned. “I can’t promise I won’t fall asleep during, but I can try.”
“You’ve fallen asleep on us more times than I want to remember!” Max teased.

“There has always been extenuating circumstances.” Harry pointed out with an exaggerated pout.

Max kissed him. “We forgive you because you’re adorable.”

Harry snorted and accepted his drink from Draco, thanking him and taking a big gulp.

“How long now?” Harry asked Nasta.

“A few more minutes. You’ll know when as there will be a barrage of fireworks.”

“Better not wake up my baby.” Harry grumbled.

“We’ve put a silencing ward around every nursery, Harry.” Draco reminded him.

“I meant this one.” Harry said, patting his bump.

“Does noise bother him?” Blaise asked curiously, his brows furrowed.

“It can.” Harry nodded. “If it’s loud enough it can even damage his hearing, but its noises that cause vibrations that need to be avoided the most. Naturally anything that startles me, like sudden noises, affects him too.”

“Will fireworks be okay?” Max asked worriedly.

Harry shrugged. “Should be. As long as I’m not right next to them, and I don’t plan on staying down here listening to them. As soon as it hits midnight, I want to be upstairs in our blissfully silent bedroom.”

A sudden loud boom made all five of them jump, but the focus was immediately on Harry.
“That.” He said. “That’s what should be avoided.”

“Some moron is forty seconds early.” Nasta growled.

“And now he’s awake. Great.” Harry grumbled to himself, laying a hand on his cartwheeling son.

“Well, look on the bright side.” Max said, and Harry looked at him expectantly. “You won’t be able to sleep for at least an hour.” He waggled his eyebrows and Harry snorted and wormed a hand free of the blanket to give his mate an offhand smack.

“We’ll see.” Harry smirked, knowing full well that he would join in with his amorous mates.

“Ten seconds.” Nasta called out to them and suddenly Draco appeared on Harry’s other side and Blaise and Nasta squashed in on Max’s other side.

They jostled one another, wrapped arms around the nearest body, and when the countdown hit one, Harry found himself in a three-way snog with Draco and Max.

They broke apart and Harry reached out for Blaise, then to Nasta.

“A brand new millennium.” Draco mused.

“A clean slate and a chance to do things better.” Max said, slinging an arm around Draco and pulling him into another kiss, to the earth-splitting booms of fireworks going off outside.

“Things will be better this year.” Harry said with a smile.

“We’ll make sure of it.” Blaise insisted, reaching out to touch Harry’s face.

Harry smiled wider and bent forward to kiss him again.
“Let’s take this upstairs, lovers.” Harry said softly.

Max stood up and picked Harry up, letting the blanket fall to the floor.

“You don’t have to tell me twice, dearest.” Max purred.

Harry laughed happily and reached out to grab a hold of Draco’s hand, tugging him along as Nasta shooed Blaise upstairs and stayed to make sure everything was off and locked up, just in case.

“The babies.” Harry said as they reached the first floor.

“They’re all fine, love.” Draco told him. “They’ll wake up with that maelstrom of noise from the fireworks if we open their doors. The baby monitors are all on, we’d hear them if there was a problem.”

Harry nodded in the face of that logic and he calmed himself. He pushed aside the urge to go and physically check on his babies and instead he threw himself into a kiss with Max.

He was gently, oh so gently, laid on the bed and he chuckled, grinning up at Max.

“What? You’re precious cargo, we have to be gentle with you.”

That made Harry laugh and he reached up to pull on Max’s collar, tugging him down and into a kiss. It was as Max all but slithered up his body that the first stirring of arousal hit Harry. Being so heavily pregnant did nothing for his sex drive, and even if he did feel like sex, sometimes his body made it impossible to manage, and nothing was more unsexy than leaning over the side of the bed and vomiting on the carpet.

But he had just five weeks until his ninth child was due to be born. He would be nesting soon, in as little as three weeks even, if not before then, as realistically it could be any day now, though he wanted, believed that he needed, to be here for his twin daughters’ first birthday. He would be devastated to miss that, but he had zero control over it.

He pushed those thoughts away as Nasta entered the bedroom and shut the door, the booms and screeches of the fireworks cutting off immediately. He was happy, and he was well cared for as one mate sucked a bruise onto his neck before kissing up to nibble on his ear, making him moan softly in want.

This year would be better, much better than their last, Harry knew it. He would work with his mates to ensure it. They would be fine, their family was growing, they were learning, and they would be perfectly fine together because everything would work out. That thought made Harry smile, even as he rolled his hips as much as he could and tugged on someone’s hair. They were going to be just fine, and he’d damn well prove it in any way that he could to anyone who doubted him.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Merry Christmas, lovelies. I hope that you’re all having a good day, whether you celebrate or not. I am certainly enjoying myself and I’ve managed to sort this chapter out for you all now in the post dinner lull where I’m one of the only ones still awake. The read through has had a rush job though, so I apologise for any mistakes. Just point them out to me and I will fix them at a later date.

StarLight Massacre. X
Last Time

This year would be better, much better than their last, Harry knew it. He would work with his mates to ensure it. They would be fine, their family was growing, they were learning, and they would be perfectly fine together because everything would work out. That thought made Harry smile, even as he rolled his hips as much as he could and tugged on someone’s hair. They were going to be just fine, and he’d damn well prove it in any way that he could to anyone who doubted him.

“Alright, fine.” Max forced out a deep breath. “They’ve gotten up and wandered off on their own, I’ll go and buy some more.”

“Is anywhere open at this time of…?” Blaise started to ask, but Max was in no mood.

“The supermarket up the road is twenty-four hours.” He snapped as he pulled his jeans back on and left the bedroom.

“Is he going to be okay?” Harry asked, visibly fretting. Both hands were placed protectively over his large bump. He only had three weeks left until his due date and it was only a week until their twin girls turned a full year old.

“He’ll be fine, Caru.” Nasta told him gently. “He doesn’t mean to snap and I don’t believe he’s angry at any of us, but he had an argument with his manager in work today. He told me, but not the rest of you because he doesn’t want you to worry.”
“What about?” Draco asked, still getting ready for bed, despite the fact that they had no pillows.

“Paternity leave. His manager has told him that if the baby is his, then Max can’t have any more time off because he took paternity leave for the twins last year.”

“He’s legally entitled to it if the baby is his.” Blaise said with a frown.

“Which is exactly what Max said, but he got so frustrated and angry that he’s shouted that even if the baby isn’t his, he’ll take any time off that he wants to support his family.” Nasta sighed.

“Can he do that?” Draco asked.

“He’s technically not allowed to.” Nasta said carefully. “But he runs that company off of his own back, if he left then they’d be fucking lost without him.”

Harry stared as Nasta’s anger showed through clearly. Nasta rarely got so angry at anyone.

“So they owe him?” Blaise questioned.

“They owe him big.” Nasta agreed. “If they can’t make preparations to give him a few weeks off to help with a newborn baby in the family, after everything he does for them, then I don’t think he should be working there anymore. They’ve started taking him, and everything that he does off of his own back for them, for granted. I keep telling him that he’d earn more if he went freelance and he’d be better respected for it too.”

“Freelance work is a less reliable source of income.” Draco said immediately, and he sounded so much like Lucius that Harry had to turn to look at him.

“He’s one of the only fully qualified Potion’s Masters in the country, Draco.” Nasta pointed out. “It would make his working life much more flexible and he could charge whatever the hell he wanted for his services, and he would never be short of work, there’s too much demand for what he can do.”
“Besides, we could support him.” Harry put in.

“Only Max and Nasta have stable jobs.” Draco fretted.

“Draco, love, between me and you we have more in savings than Max and Nasta have made in their lives.” Harry pointed out.

“Don’t forget my savings.” Blaise put in. “My Father left me and my Mother near enough everything that he had and she’s never touched any of it. She kept it for me.”

“If Max wants to go freelance, if it’ll take the pressure and stress from him, that’s better than worrying about finances. I know your Dad drilled it into you to worry about them, to always keep track of them, and I am glad that at least one of us is doing that, I just don’t think it’ll have such a big impact on our daily living costs. Truthfully I think having Max at home more will help, especially once the new baby comes.”

“It’ll be up to Max if that’s what he wants, if his manager doesn’t take his head from his arse. He can’t afford to lose Max, it’ll be the biggest mistake of his life if he doesn’t realise that and do something about it. It’s not as if Max is taking advantage or asking for the damn world! He’s asking for a few weeks off to spend with his newborn son, to help his family!”

“His manager is a prick.” Harry declared. “Of course I’m happy that Max wants to help out, I don’t want him so angry though.”

“He’s only angry because of his manager. No one cares that the pillows have gone missing. I wonder if it was Caesar again. He took them the last time.” Nasta mused.

Harry just hummed in a very non-committal manner, then they had known that he would. He was nest building, and until he actually climbed into his nest and stayed there, he wouldn’t tell them about it. Submissives were terribly secretive about their nests, and with their nesting instincts, and Harry was no different in that regard. If they let on that they knew things were going missing, or questioned him about his nest, then he would either fly at their throats, or rush to dismantle his nest and start building a new one, and none of them wanted to put that amount of stress on their heavily pregnant mate.

Max came back with six brand new pillows, and he seemed to be in a better mood at least as he tore open the plastic and threw the pillows to Nasta, who put them in spare pillowcases before throwing them on the bed.
“Why did you get so many?” Draco asked.

“Just in case someone wants two, or Harry wants a new one as well.” Max smiled as Harry blushed, already pressing his face to a new pillow. “You carry on, love.”

Harry was the only one in the bed, because his back had been aching all day, and he was already snuggled up with his body pillow, and with a new, clean pillow under his head, he felt himself dozing off.

“He’s adorable.” Blaise chuckled. “How are you feeling now, Max? Nas filled us in.”

“Nas, I told you I didn’t want to worry them, Harry especially. His Dracken won’t like the thought that I could lose my job right before he gives birth.”

“They’re all fine. Harry cared more for your stress levels than he did about the money.” Nasta said. “We’ll support you, no matter what you decide.”

“Should go freelance.” Harry murmured sleepily. “No more evil managers stressing you out.”

Max snorted and bent over Harry to kiss his cheek. “Get some sleep, dearest.”

“Need sleep.” Harry murmured.

Max shook his head and stripped himself off yet again. He had kicked himself in the car as he drove to the supermarket. He shouldn’t have reacted so badly to the missing pillows. Of course it was Harry who had taken them. Things had been going missing now for a few weeks, including his favourite jumper, six bath towels, and for a very odd reason, their welcome mat, though Draco still believed that that was the work of the neighbourhood kids and not Harry. Remembering his oven gloves in Braiden’s nest, Max wasn’t too sure. It would be just like Harry to take a welcome mat to ‘welcome’ a new baby into the world.

They hadn’t let on that they knew anything was going missing of course, sometimes they saw Harry side-eyeing them, as if mentally questioning why they hadn’t noticed their stuff going missing, but if they couldn’t find anything these days, they didn’t make any fuss, or ask one another if anyone had seen it, they just assumed that Harry had taken it for his nest and kept silent so as not to stress him out.
Of course they noticed Harry slipping off more too. Like today for example when he had presumably taken four pillows out to wherever his nest was located. At least Max had been right, Harry had been gone too long for a simple bathroom break, heavily pregnant or not.

Then there had been that time four days ago too, when he’d caught sight of Harry in the back garden, slipping slowly, and carefully, between the trees back towards the house. Max had abandoned the tea he had been making and had rushed back into the living room, before Harry had caught sight of him, and explained what was happening to the others. He had resumed the tea after Harry had come back into the room, a little shifty, but otherwise normal, and he had made a point of asking everyone if they wanted tea and made a show of forcing himself to his feet with a groan, making it seem like he hadn’t moved in a while. Harry had relaxed more then and had settled, believing himself to have gotten away with whatever he’d ’stolen’ for his nest this time.

So they knew that Harry was definitely nest building, and if he was still taking ‘supplies’ like the four pillows, then he wasn’t done just yet, which was a good indication that the baby was doing well and wanted to stay put for a while longer.

Max forced his brain to shut up and he turned carefully to his other side, slipping an arm under Draco’s neck and cuddling into the back of the blond. He laid still, but his brain was still active, and that was the only reason that he was awake when he felt the bed dipping.

He stilled completely as he felt eyes on the back of him, and then Harry let out a soft grunt as he eased off the bed. It seemed that he wasn’t done for the day at all as he slipped out of the bedroom to get more supplies.

Blaise snickered from the other side of Draco and Max shushed him.

“Oh, you’re awake too?” Blaise whispered.

“My brain won’t shut up.” Max grumbled. “Or I would have been asleep. You?”

“Nasta’s beard is itchy.”

Max snorted a laugh and then tried to hush himself. “Just push him away.”

Blaise shifted around a little bit and Nasta growled lowly, but a soothing rumble from Max and he settled easily without waking up.

“Better?” Max asked.

“Yeah.”
Max heard Blaise yawn and he automatically followed suit.

“Get some sleep. Harry will freak if he thinks we’re awake.”

“I’m worried about him. It’s freezing out there tonight.” Blaise whispered. “What if he falls and can’t get back up?”

“He’ll distress call us.” Max soothed gently. “He wouldn’t risk the baby.”

“He’s going to get sick.”

“Then we’ll look after him. He’s going to be fine, Blaise. He’s doing what he needs to and he’ll be fine.”

Despite this assurance, Max laid awake, unable to sleep, until Harry finally padded back into the bedroom and Max could almost see him staring at them, making sure they were all still asleep and in the same positions.

He padded almost soundlessly across the carpet, only the rustle of his pyjamas marking his progress through the room, and then the bed dipped again as Harry carefully climbed back into it. He sniffed hard and Max frowned against Draco’s head. Maybe Harry was sick? He’d be sure to check in the morning, the last thing Harry needed at the moment, on top of the baby getting bigger and squashing up more of his organs, was a damn cold.

Max gasped as icy feet were pushed into his back and he rolled over to face Harry, who had stilled in fear.

“You okay?” Max asked, making his voice gruff as if he’d just woken up. “You’re freezing.”

“Needed the bathroom.” Harry lied smoothly. Max had noticed that Harry was only an amazing liar when he was nesting, and he and the others reasoned it was his Dracken’s influence because without it, Harry was a hopeless liar. “The floor is ice cold in there.”

Max hummed sleepily and he reached under the blanket and took Harry’s feet into his hands. Harry’s feet were so cold that Max could almost imagine them bloodless and pale blue and he wanted to check so badly, but he controlled the urge, he couldn’t let onto anything suspicious.
“Damn, Harry. Wear your slippers the next time you go to the bathroom.” He chastised. “Your feet are icy and my nice warm back doesn’t appreciate it.”

Harry just hummed, the little bastard was already drifting off and he buried his ice cold nose into Max’s neck, wakening him up further. Harry was fast asleep by the time Max had sufficiently warmed him back up and he shook his head as he tucked Harry in against his body pillow more securely. It was gone midnight now, and as he laid down and snuggled back up to Draco, he made a mental note to inform the oblivious Nasta of what had happened in the night, and of Harry possibly being sick on top of everything else too. Max really hoped that it was just because he’d been out in the cold and not because he actually did have a cold. Harry would be even more miserable if he was sick as well as heavily pregnant.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry woke up slowly and groggily, rolling against his body pillow and trying to get comfortable again. He’d had a bad night and as he woke up with a blocked nose and a tickly throat, he understood why he’d had such a bad night. He had a damn cold.

He moaned to himself and buried his face back in his pillow. His head felt heavy and achy and he breathed out through his nose in aggravation. He barely managed to do that with how blocked it was and that frustrated him more. This is the very last thing that he needed right now.

At least he didn’t think his mates had realised that everything that had been going missing was down to him. Logically he knew that they had to know that he was nest building, and he cursed his Dracken side for demanding the pillows from the bed. Of course his mates would notice the damn pillows going missing, and it didn’t take a genius to notice that the only pillow left was his own. At least the other things hadn’t been discovered yet, like Max’s favourite jumper. He’d fretted that Max would immediately notice it missing and demand to know where it was, but so far he hadn’t noticed and he’d been wearing his red and green jumpers, still in the festive mood despite it being almost a month now after Christmas. Harry was just glad that his mates weren’t ripping apart the house, or worse, the garden, looking for the stuff that Harry had taken, because surely they had noticed, at the very least, that they had half the amount of bath towels that they usually did.

But they weren’t causing a fuss, which wasn’t upsetting his Dracken, which meant he would get to keep his nest where it was. Which he was grateful for as he didn’t think he had the time now to dismantle it and build a new one from scratch, especially as he would need to scout out the area first. He only had three weeks left until his due date, and that was if he didn’t go early, as he usually did. He just wanted to get the twins’ birthday out of the way, it was only five days away now. Surely he and his baby thunderer could hold on until then. He didn’t care if he went the day after, or even that night, just as long as he saw them on their birthday and he was here for their party, which wasn’t asking a lot, as they had a lunchtime party planned. He really hoped that it went better than the quintuplets second birthday had.

He rolled out of bed and padded straight to the bathroom. He didn’t feel like showering, or even getting out of his pyjamas. He was cold and his head hurt, so he went and used the toilet, washed his hands and then left the bedroom. He wanted a headache reliever and the only one who would get him one of those was Max. He really wanted Max in that moment.

He made it downstairs and saw Max in the kitchen and he hurriedly padded towards him.

“Max!” He called out beseechingly.

Max turned immediately and put the jug of squash he was holding down on the counter.

“Are you alright? What is it?”

“I’m sick. I need soup.” Harry said pathetically, his voice thick.

Max couldn’t help the small chuckle he let out. “Told you to wear your damn slippers to the bathroom. Come on, let’s get you wrapped up and I’ll start making some soup. I’ll have to do a store run though. Anything else you want?”

“Mango.”

“Okay, love. Come on, let’s get you sat down and wrapped up.”

Max picked him up and carried him to the smaller living room. The doors weren’t open and Harry frowned.

“Ah, don’t give me that look. You need to rest without being swamped by kids, and Leolin is next door.”

Max took the throw from the back of the settee and Harry was wrapped up in it securely, until he was almost swaddled like their newborns.

“I want cwtches.”

“I’ll throw you Nasta now, give me a sec.” Max said distractedly as he made sure that Harry was covered and he laid a hand on his head. “Hmm, no fever, so maybe just a cold. I’ll make you some chicken soup, but first, I’ll get you a headache reliever, you must have a headache.”

“I do.”

Max nodded and bent to kiss his forehead. “I’ll be right back, baby.”

Harry laid on the settee, sniffling and rubbing his itchy eyes. His head was pounding and he regretted his many trips out to his nest at night to get supplies to his nesting site. He would join on the bandwagon that his mates were on to give him more babies outside of winter. He’d never had this trouble when he was nesting with Braiden, in the nice, bright summer sunshine.

A hand touched his face and Harry opened his eyes to see a concerned Nasta hunched in front of him.

“Max said that you were sick?”

Harry nodded. “A cold.”

“Headache, blocked nose and sore throat?”

“itchy eyes too.” Harry added, even as he lifted a hand to rub at them again.

“Don’t rub at them, you’ll make them sore. Hold on.”

Nasta was up and jogging away again, and before he could come back Max was back with a headache reliever and Harry’s jar of imported honey, the manu…mana…and something like that.

“It will soothe your throat.” Max answered Harry’s unasked question of why the honey was there without tea. “Come here, sit up for me.”

Harry eased up with Max’s help and was propped against the back of the settee. He downed the headache reliever in one go, but Max was watching him closely, likely to see if he vomited from the taste. He held out a teaspoon of honey, almost like a peace offering, or a bribe to keep him from throwing up.
Harry liked taking that a lot more than he had the potion, and opened his mouth for a second spoonful, like a baby bird begging for another caterpillar.

Max just chuckled and gave him another spoonful before lying him back down and tucking him back in.

“Here, place this over his eyes. It’ll stop them itching.” Nasta’s said as he handed over what looked like a folded up, damp flannel.

“It’s cold, Nas.” Max said worriedly.

“It has to be. Hold on, let me get the fire burning.”

Harry inhaled deeply through his mouth when Max took the cold, damp flannel and laid it over Harry’s eyes. The itching subsided almost immediately, which is the only reason Harry left the damn thing on.

The warm wave of heat from the fire, which had been lit with a simple wave of Nasta’s wand, felt like absolute heaven to Harry and he settled down and yawned.

“If you need more sleep, love, that’s fine, sleep will help you heal. I’ll call you when your soup is done.”

“Had a bad night tossing and turning. It’s getting harder to find a comfortable position, even with the body pillow.” Harry slurred quietly.

“Not long left, though.” Max soothed him, laying a large hand on Harry’s belly. “Three weeks, if that.”

Harry hummed, drifting off. He felt a kiss being pressed to his cheek and he smiled, what was probably a very goofy, half asleep smile, but he didn’t care.

“You mentioned running to the shop?” Nasta asked Max quietly.

Max broke off his staring and looked at Nasta. “Yeah, Harry wants soup and he’d probably benefit from bone broth. I’ll write a quick list and make a run. Is there anything we’re running low on?”
“Rusks. I’m sure Farren has found a way to get at them. I’ve counted up how many we have, to how many their food diaries say they’ve all had, and there are a dozen missing. So unless someone is giving them rusks and not putting it in those diaries, we’ve got a nibbler somewhere in the house.”

“After two years, I don’t think any of us forget to put anything in those diaries anymore.” Max shook his head. “Maybe accidental magic? Perhaps we should ward all of the cupboards and see what happens.”

“Keep a closer eye on all of them.” Nasta grumbled.

“There are six two year olds in this house now, lover, five of them up on their feet and very mobile, keeping an eye on all of them at the same time is now impossible.”

The two of them shared a look and snorted. Harry shifted and they both watched him closely before standing up and leaving the smaller living room and going to the larger family room, before they accidentally woke their sick, sleeping lover.

“How is he?” Draco demanded.

“Is he going to be okay?” Blaise added.

“It’s a cold, guys. He’s going to be fine.” Nasta soothed. “We’ll just have to keep an eye on him for a few days, but colds rarely last longer than a few days.”

“Will it affect the pregnancy?” Blaise asked.

Nasta shook his head. “No. Harry will be even more miserable and uncomfortable, but we’ll look after him.”

“I told you he’d get sick wandering around outside at night.” Blaise huffed.

“It’s not as if we could have stopped him, Blaise. He’s nest building and with only three weeks left before his actual due date, without factoring in his needed nesting time, he’s actually behind schedule and should have had that nest finished by now.” Max pointed out.

“I just didn’t want him to get sick.”

“None of us did, Blaise, but now that he is, we’ll look after him. Max is going to the store now to pick up some things to help Harry.” Nasta said.

“So is there anything you need?” Max asked, even as he jotted down a few more things on his list.

“Rusks.” Draco added.

Max laughed. “Already covered that one, love.”

“Are you taking any kids with you?” Blaise asked.

“I’ll take the twins.” Max said. “Grab their shoes, coats and the car seats for me?”

“Sure.”

Max finished off the list and stood up.

“Let me brush their hair before you take them out.” Draco insisted.

“Okay, but you have until I’m ready to go, Draco.” Max said. “I need to start that soup as soon as possible to have it ready for Harry.”

“We’d all benefit from that soup, if Harry is sick, it’ll be better to boost our own immune systems to prevent us from catching it as well.” Nasta said.

Draco was quickly dragging a brush gently through Eva’s hair while Max made sure he’d put everything down on his list and went looking for his wallet, car keys and his trainers. He grabbed his own coat and stuffed his arms in.

“Make sure that Harry has plenty to drink, Nas. His usual tea will be perfect, as the honey will help his throat and the heat will help the congestion.” Max reminded as he walked back into the living room. Blaise was just closing the nappy bag while Draco was making sure that both girls had their shoes on.

“I’ll look after him. I’ll make sure his headache has gone and that he doesn’t start running a fever.” Nasta assured Max, who was naturally worried about a sick family member as he was their main first aider.

“Are those girls ready?”

“Their coats.” Draco said, reaching for the one pink, puffy coat.

“No, don’t put their coats on in the car, Draco.” Nasta reminded firmly. “The straps of their car seats need to be tight to their body.”

“Oh, of course, I remember.” Draco nodded.

Max picked up Ave and sat her in the one seat, while Blaise was already strapping in Eva.

“I shouldn’t be longer than an hour.” Max told Nasta, even as he picked up the handle of the car seat and made his way to the front door.

“Drive safe and watch out for black ice on the roads.”

“Got it, come on girls.”

“Daddy, I come too.” Braiden told him.

Max blinked down at him, even as Braiden ran to get his shoes, trying to pull them on.
“Well, okay, it seems he’s coming as well. Grab his coat for me?” Max directed at Blaise.

Nasta just laughed as he hunched down and ‘helped’ Braiden get his shoes on.

“I’d love to see the day where they all want to go with you.”

“You can laugh, you’d all be coming with me!” Max grinned.

“Here’s his coat and car seat, Max.” Blaise said. “You want me to go and secure it in the car?”

“Yes, please, love.” Max said, even as he handed over the twins’ coats and picked up the abandoned Eva.

He went out into the bitter cold and shivered. He lengthened his stride and hurried to the car before the girls got too cold, and he settled them down on their own seats facing the rear of the car before starting to secure them in.

“There, is that done properly?” Blaise asked.

Max finished off the girls and then yanked on Braiden’s seat and checked all the straps.

“Yep, well done, Blaise. Now go get inside before you catch a chill too.”

Max cast a warming charm on the car, just to make it more comfortable for all of them travelling and caught Braiden as he came running out, screeching happily.

“Come on, little man. In your seat.” He encouraged, setting Braiden down inside the car and watching him clamber into his seat. He even tried to do the buckles by himself, but Max took over and got him belted in securely.

He tugged on all of their straps, just to be sure and then he shut the door on them. He waved to Nasta on the doorstep and got into the driver’s side.

“Let’s go on a shopping adventure, shall we?” He said cheerily as he started the car and eased them out of the driveway.

It took him ten minutes to reach the supermarket by car and it took longer than that to get the girls into their coats and sitting in the trolley, Braiden into his coat and holding his hand, with the nappy bag hanging on the trolley.

“Okay, that was an ordeal, why did I bring you all again?” He joked.

They finally managed to make it into the store and Max pulled out his list, thankful that he hadn’t bloody forgotten it, because there was no way he was going back home just to get it.

“Right, first things first, baby aisle.” He said, talking to his children as he walked through the store, making sure to slow his steps enough for Braiden to keep up.

He picked up two boxes of rusks, laughing as all three babies lit up at the sight.

“You can have some later.” He laughed. “Let’s just get the shopping done first.”

He went from the baby aisle to the fruit and veg and he picked up all the things he needed for the soup, making sure to get four mangos for Harry and Nasta while also throwing in some citrus fruits.

“Daddy, anana.”

Max looked down at Braiden and then to where he was pointing, to the bananas.

“Bananas, Braiden. Good boy. Do you want one?”

“Yeah.”
“Okay.” Max went to where he knew the free fruit for kids was kept and he picked up two bananas. He peeled the one and handed it to Braiden and then peeled the other and tore it in half for the twins. He put the peels in the little bin provided by the store.

He had to let go of Braiden’s hand because his son was eating with both, trotting next to him with his eyes all for his banana, but Max made sure to walk slowly enough that Braiden could easily keep up and not get lost.

“Down here, honey.” He said, placing a hand on Braiden’s head to direct him.

Braiden didn’t mind in the slightest and went where he was directed easily enough, still eating his banana. Max made a mental note to put the banana into the food diaries, especially after he’d told Nasta that no one forgot to use them.

Max picked up milk and three, kilo buckets of natural yoghurt, so that he could use the lemons and oranges to make his own yoghurts for the kids, before moving on. He noticed the looks he was getting, the looks his kids were getting, but they already knew that the girls were very striking with their curly hair and huge blue eyes. Braiden’s indigo eyes were also rather unusual and got him a lot of attention. He himself also cast an imposing figure at six foot ten, he was towering over everyone else in the store by a good several inches. So they all stood out, but Max tried to ignore it.

“Here, baby, hold this for Daddy.” He said, handing Eva, who had mushed her banana to nothing and was now finished, the shopping list.

“Dada.” She declared a heartbeat before Ave said “Daddy.”

“I love you both.” He said, bending down to give them both a kiss…they both tasted of banana.

Max heard the ‘awws’ from behind him and affected not to notice. He loved his kids, adored them, and he would show them love and affection no matter where they were. Even if people did coo at him for doing so.

“Me too.” Braiden piped up from down by his knees. “Love you too!”

Max chuckled. “I love you too, little man. Come on, we need to get a chicken for Mummy.”
“Mummy poorly.” Braiden said sadly.

Max blinked at him as he realised that he must have heard, and understood, him when he’d told the others that Harry was sick.

“Yeah, but it’s alright, we’ll make Mummy all better with soup and love.”

Max moved them on before the customers behind them died of cuteness overload thanks to his children and he got them to the fresh meat aisle where he selected the largest, plumpest chicken he could find.

“Right, we need to start wrapping this up or we’ll be late home. Braiden, you want up on my shoulders?”

Braiden gasped and clapped his hands. “Yes, yes, yes, yes.”

Max chuckled but picked him up and settled him safely on his shoulders. He pushed the trolley with one hand, while the other held tight to a little leg, just in case Braiden fell. He could walk normally now, at a much faster pace, and the rest of what he needed was thrown into the trolley quickly and easily, and Max made it to a free checkout. He was thankful that he didn’t need to wait in line.

“Hello up there.” The cashier grinned at Braiden.

“Hi!” Braiden chirped back.

“How old is he?” The cashier asked, making small talk as he rang through the items Max was putting on the belt one handed.

“He turned two in August.” Max said. “These two girls are turning one in five days.”

“Really? Have you got a big party planned?”

“We have a lot of extended family, so every party is big.” Max chuckled. “My other five, quintuplets, turned two a few weeks ago. That was a disaster! They got cake over everything, and started throwing it at people, so we had to cut it short.”

“You have five others?” The cashier asked, his eyes going huge.

“Yeah, another one on the way too. A little boy who’s due in February.”

“Damn, that’s a lot of kids!”

“Nine of them.” Max nodded.

“Mummy’s poorly, so we make soup.” Braiden added.

“That’s right, we’re making Mummy some soup.” Max told him.

“I help.” Braiden insisted, tugging on Max’s hair.

“Okay, you can help.”

Max put the plastic divider after his stuff and he picked Braiden up and put him in the actual trolley.

“Stay in there while I bag all of this up!” He chuckled.

Of course his girls turned around immediately to see Braiden behind them and they all started babbling to one another as he packed up the shopping.

“They are just too cute.” The woman who pulled up behind him complimented.

“Thank you.” Max said with a smile.
“How old are they?”

“The twins are turning a year old on the eighteenth and this little man turned two in August.”

“Mummy’s having a new baby!” Braiden told the woman.

“Is she?” The woman cooed, and immediately Braiden frowned.

“Yes, our ninth child. A boy.” Max cut in smoothly.

“Ninth?!” The woman cried.

“We have two year old quintuplets too. They were born in December.”

“How do you cope?”

Max thought this was rather rude, though it probably wasn’t meant to come across as such. He understood that normal families didn’t consider nine children to be at all normal, and that it could be rather shocking. On the other hand though he didn’t believe that there was any need to show such visible shock at the news. What really got his hackles up though was that he caught the woman scanning what he was buying.

“There are five of us.” Max said, loving the look of shock on the woman’s face, and the cashier’s.

“Whatever do you mean?” The woman asked, faking a little laugh.

“I’m in a relationship with four other people.” He said, shrugging. “It’s why we have so many kids.”

“All women?” The cashier asked, almost eagerly, and Max laughed at the eagerness of youth.

“All men.” He said. “How much is that?”
The cashier picked his jaw up, blinked, and checked the total while the woman mouthed wordlessly.

“Oh, it’s thirty-one pounds eighty-nine, Sir.”

Max opened his wallet and found the two notes he needed and handed them over.

“You’re all men?”

Max blinked and looked over to woman.

“Yes, all five of us.”

“How can their Mother be pregnant then?”

“You’re being unduly nosy now, but if you must know we use a very trusted surrogate.”

“But she’s not a part of your…group?”

“Relationship. And no, she’s not.”

“But the children…they won’t know what’s normal!”

Max shot a glare at the woman. “This is normal and it’s none of your business.”

Max accepted the change handed to him with the receipt and he put the bags in the trolley with Braiden and strode off towards the carpark. He couldn’t get over the rudeness of some people, but sometimes people surprised him by being accepting and even genuinely curious of their home life. That woman had not been one of them.

He breathed out and pushed it aside. He refused to allow it to ruin his day. He refused to dwell on it. He forced a smile to his three babies and he put the shopping away first, keeping the trolley close by him, grinning as Braiden ran from one end of the trolley to the other, which made the twin girls shriek with laughter.

The three of them brightened him right back up and he chuckled at them, as he closed the boot and went to the back of the car to settle them into their seats, remembering to take off their puffy winter coats. He tugged on the straps of Eva’s seat, then Ave’s. Then he had to undo Eva again once he registered the smell. He sighed and grabbed the nappy bag, took her coat back off and then changed her in the passenger side of the car.

“Daddy, poo.” Eva told him.

“I can see that you’ve pooped.” He said, chuckling. “Of course you’d go right as I’ve strapped you into the car seat. Though thankfully it didn’t leak from your nappy and end up in your tights.”

Max cleaned his little girl up and put the used wipes in the nappy sack with the soiled nappy. He got a clean nappy out and made a sweep of the car, the trolley and the car park, just in case. Braiden was trying to climb out of the trolley.

“Braiden, honey, stay in there a moment.” He ordered firmly.

“I want come out now.” Braiden argued.

“No, stay there.” He said more sternly, even as he rushed to get the nappy onto Eva and get her dressed again.

“What are you doing, monkey?” An elderly man asked Braiden, as he pushed a trolley to the car that was parked beside theirs.

“I come out now.” Braiden told the man.

“I think you should stay in there. There are cars going past.” The old man told him.

“Car.” Braiden said and he watched as a red car went crawling past.
“Yes, and cars can be very dangerous.”

Max watched Braiden, making sure the man didn’t come any closer, even as he deemed the man not a threat, he was still cautious as he redressed Eva and got her back into her coat. He stood and gave the man a smile, watching him for a moment, but he was only loading up the boot of his car with his own shopping.

He ducked back into the car and got Eva back into her seat and buckled her back in. He tested her straps and then stood back up one he was satisfied.

“Now, do either of you two want to potty?” He asked, faux-sternly, hands on hips, but he was smiling.

“No, Daddy. I come out now.” Braiden said, holding his arms up.

“Come on then, love, climb into your seat.” Max said, picking up his son and putting him into the car.

Braiden clambered up and sat in his seat right between the girls, facing the back of the car, and again he tried to do the straps by himself.

Max snorted and reached over to help. He tugged on the straps to make sure that they were secure and then stood back and looked at the three babies. The girls looked about ready to drop now that they were in the car and he reckoned that he would have a nice, easy ride back and the girls would drop off to sleep and would get their afternoon naps early.

He closed the door and locked the car as he walked the short distance to the trolley bay, taking the tied up nappy sack to pop it into the bin. His Dracken side didn’t like that he was moving away from his defenceless children and rumbled warningly as he got further away, but Max kept the car in sight at all times, automatically scanning for dangers, even as he jogged back to the car and unlocked it again to climb into the driver’s seat. He gave a wave to the elderly man still putting his shopping away and he got a jaunty wave back as he eased back out of the space and onto the road.

He had been wrong about the girls getting to sleep in the car, Braiden had started singing in the back, and they babbled along with him, and he had never wished so hard that he had the camcorder with him than he did at that very moment. Not that he could record them as he was driving, but still, his mates deserved to see the adorable cuteness that was the three kids singing in the back of the car.

He made it home and even as he unstrapped Braiden and hefted him over his shoulder, his son was still singing and it made him smile. He unbuckled the girls’ seats and slipped his arm through both handles.

“Come on, babies, let us go and get you some snacks.”

He set the girls down and dug out his keys. He unlocked the door and picked the girls back up. He carried the three of them down the corridor and into the kitchen, and then through to the family room.

“Hey, hey.” He greeted with a grin.

“You’re home, any problems?” Nasta asked.

“Only from some bi…witch at the checkouts.” He said. “Nothing that wasn’t handled by shocking her speechless and then walking away. I also promised our babies a rusk each when they saw me putting the boxes in the trolley.”

“How was Braiden? You never took the reins.”

“He was perfectly well behaved, he didn’t run off, not even once, and he stayed right by my legs. It helped that I distracted him with a banana, which I will put in their diaries now, just give me a chance to get the shopping in.”

“I’ll come and help you.” Draco said, handing a sleeping Leolin to Blaise.

“How has Harry been?” Max asked.

“Quiet.” Nasta said. “He’s been asleep since you left. I’ve been checking on him every fifteen minutes, but he’s resting.”

Nasta took the girls and started unbuckling them from their seats and Max went out to grab the bags with Draco, and to lock the car back up.
“Where do you want them, Max?” Draco asked.

“Dump them in the kitchen, lover. I need to dig out all the stuff I need for the soup and I need to get the kids’ lunches on.”

Max dug the chicken out first and preheated the oven. It needed to be cooking as soon as possible so that he could strip it of meat and get the bones boiling.

“Does this mean we’re getting chicken for dinner?” Blaise asked, coming into the kitchen from where he’d put the car seats back under the stairs.

“Yeah, I’m going to do chicken risotto for the kids and coq au vin for us.”

“Go easy on the wine, for Harry’s sake.”

“It burns off anyway.” Max whined.

“I know, but Nasta will string you up if you add wine to Harry’s food.”

Max grumbled, but he already knew he couldn’t add wine to anything. His Dracken wouldn’t let him, and he was more obsessive about what he added to Harry’s food now after that fiasco with the chili. His body went cold as he remembered that long ago misjudgement on his part. He’d almost thrown away his entire family, for petty revenge at that. He cheered himself up by thinking of his and Harry’s reconciliation, thinking of the rough, quick sex against an alleyway wall always cheered him right back up. He’d have to get Harry drunk again, once he wasn’t pregnant of course, and see if that dominant trait in his drunk mate came back out to play.

He prepared everything while the chicken was roasting, all the vegetables he needed for the soup, what he needed for the kids’ lunches and he went to check on Harry.

“Oh, you’re awake, why didn’t you call?” Max asked as he hunched beside Harry.

“Didn’t need anything.” Harry said, his voice scratchy with sickness.
“It sounds like you could use a drink and another spoon of honey.”

Harry smiled at him. “Can I have tea and a sit up?”

“Of course, love.” Max helped Harry to sit up and gave his forehead a kiss. His hair was all over his head and the famous scar was showing through. “I’ll be right back.”

“Want more cwtches.”

Max laughed. “I’ll send Nasta back in then. His cwtches are the absolute best though, I’ll give him that. The man knows how to hug.”

“How are the kids?”

“They’re all fine. I’ll get you some tea and tell you all about my trip to the shop with Braiden and the twins!”

Harry grinned at that, but he also had to turn and stifle a barrage of coughs into his hand.

“I bought tissues as well, I’ll grab those for you.”

Max hefted himself up and went to the kitchen to boil the kettle. The others would want tea too. He grabbed the box of tissues from the counter, opened them and took them back to Harry.

“Do you need the bathroom?”

Harry shook his head. “No.”

Max frowned. “Have you been drinking?”
Harry shook his head. “I’ve been sleeping.”

Max nodded. “I’ll get you a glass of juice too. You need to stay hydrated.”

Max went to do just that, and he hurried back to Harry with a pint glass of juice. Harry started sipping, then gulping between desperate gasps of breath because he could only breathe through his mouth, and he drank nearly the entire pint in one go. He gave Max a sheepish look and Max just rolled his eyes.

“I guess I was a little thirsty.”

“You’re impossible sometimes.”

“Only sometimes?” Harry grinned.

Max rolled his eyes again. “Let me go and get you tea and Nasta, so you can actually have a proper cwtch this time. There’s bound to be something on the TV for you to watch too, so you aren’t bored.”

Harry shook his head. “I want to read more of those books I got for Christmas.”

“Alright, I’ll go and grab that from our bedside table. Give me five minutes.”

“Nasta first.”

“Yes, yes, I’ll grab your favourite mate now.” Max teased, then wished he hadn’t as Harry stilled and sent him a horrified look.

“That’s not why I want…I don’t have a favourite mate!” Harry said angrily. Or as angrily as his thick voice and sore throat allowed him.

“I know. I’m sorry, love.” Max said, genuinely sorry that he’d upset his heavily pregnant, sick mate. “Anyone would want Nasta’s cwtches when they feel sick. We all know that, I was just teasing.”
Besides, we all know that your favourite mate is me!”

That made Harry chuckle and he held his arms out for a hug. Max squashed him tight, but remained aware of the large, rounded belly.

“I love you.” Harry whispered into his ear.

Max pulled back and kissed Harry’s cheek. “I love you too, dearest. Now, let me go so I can kick Nasta in here and get you that tea.”

Max went into the kitchen and made up four cups of tea, and a secret cup of coffee for Blaise. Secret because with Harry occasionally retching at certain smells still Blaise had sworn off of coffee until the baby was born, but with Harry being in the other room, Max didn’t see why Blaise couldn’t have a treat too.

He took his and Draco’s tea, and Blaise’s coffee, into the family room and handed them out. Blaise looked at him like he’d made all of his dreams come true.

“Harry’s in the other room, and staying in the other room, he can’t smell anything in there.” Max explained.

“Mummy’s a boy!” Braiden told him, running over as soon as he saw him.

“I know, honey, but Muggles don’t understand.” Max explained.

“What happened?” Nasta asked with a furrowed brow.

“Someone at the supermarket referred to Braiden’s Mummy as a she. He understood immediately and wasn’t happy. Did the whole frowny face thing usually reserved by Leolin. I have no idea how to handle that sort of situation now that the kids are getting older.”

“Harry doesn’t care about being called Mummy.” Blaise pointed out. “It doesn’t emasculate him at all and he has called himself Mummy in front of Muggles before. I think honesty will be better, and easier for the kids. Just tell the damn Muggles that we’re with four other men and that the kids’ Mummy is a man. Harry certainly will.”
“It was awkward, because Harry’s pregnant.” Max explained. “We can’t tell the Muggles that Harry is their Mummy, and a man, but he’s pregnant. I went with the usual surrogate story we usually use. It’s none of their business anyway.”

“Mummy’s a boy.” Braiden repeated firmly.

“That’s right, love. Well done.” Max praised. “Do you still want to help me with the soup?”

Braiden nodded, cheered right back up at the prospect of helping in the kitchen. “Yes, Daddy.”

“Right, I’ll get on with that when the chicken is done. He can help me throw the chopped veg into the saucepan when its time.”

“Has Harry woken up at all?” Blaise asked.

“Yes, he has.” Max replied then turned to Nasta. “Nas, his and your teas are on the counter, he wants a cwtch.”

“He’s alright?” Nasta asked, standing immediately.

“Yeah, he’s groggy as he’s only just woken up, but he’s as well as he can be. He needed a drink, and some tea. Give him a spoon of honey too, his throat could use it.”

“Has he eaten anything yet?” Draco asked concernedly.

“Not yet, but give him time, Draco, his stomach is the size of a pea at the minute. He’ll eat when he’s hungry.” Nasta soothed before making his way to the kitchen.

“Nasta’s right, we have just a few weeks to go before we have our little boy here, after a bit of recovery, he’ll be right back to normal and eating us under the table.”
“Daddy, play with me.” Calix demanded, tugging at Max’s trouser leg.

Max laughed and slipped easily onto the floor. It was only as he went out into the kitchen half an hour later to take the cooked chicken from the oven that he remembered that he hadn’t told Harry about his trip to the supermarket, and he made a mental note to do just that over a bowl of soup as soon as it was ready.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry was insanely happy as he had actually managed to hold on until his little girls’ first birthday, as he sat on the settee, a cup of tea in hand, and he watched as Max helped the girls unwrap their gifts.

They were sat in the playpen, which was keeping the other kids out, and away from opening their baby sisters’ presents, and Harry didn’t know what was better, Max’s enthusiasm, or the twins’ complete lack of it.

He was two weeks from his due date, and he was feeling each and every inch of his baby, from his little feet, to his tiny hands, each of them digging into a separate area of his body at all times of the day. He’d all but stopped eating, and he noticed the worry in his mates, particularly Draco, who had even asked Healer Almus at his last scan a few days ago, about what they could do to help him. The answer had not satisfied his mates at all, as they were told to keep tempting him with things, but to basically butt out and leave Harry to eat as he saw fit, in whatever quantity he could manage, which is what Harry had been telling them all along. They’d also been told that nothing could be done about the baby squashing up Harry’s organs, but they’d been assured that it wouldn’t cause anything more harmful than a bruised feeling, or at worst, a fractured or broken rib, which Harry didn’t have yet, but it would be monitored if he did get one and then easily healed once the baby was born.

He had gotten over his cold quickly, much quicker than he thought he would, and he put it down to Max’s wonderful healing soup, with a side of Dracken genes.

“Come on, Princess, open this one.” Max encouraged Eva, who ignored him and reached out for her sister’s hair.

“I’m sure you wanted to do this because you get to open all of their presents yourself.” Blaise grinned, as he watched Max open the pink paper.

“Shut up, dearest.” Max declared.

“Why have you started calling us all dearest, anyway? Where did you hear it?”
Max shrugged. “I don’t know, I just wanted to.” He said as he revealed a new little rag doll that was personalised with Eva’s name. Ave had a matching one, with her own name stitched into it.

“I like it.” Harry grinned, a little tired and worn down, but he was so happy.

“I love you too, dearest.” Max shot him a grin, and Harry giggled.

“How are you feeling?” Nasta asked him quietly.

“Tired, but that’s nothing new.” Harry answered. “He’s the longest I’ve ever carried a baby. I am sorry though, but I think I’ll sleep for a week once he’s born.”

“So you should.” Nasta declared.

“I’ll still have a pouch, but it’ll be so much more comfortable once he’s out and I can sleep.”

“Almost there. You’ve done so well and I’m so proud of you.” Nasta told him, throwing an arm around him and pulling him into a kiss.

Of course that made Harry swell up with pride and throw his chest out. Nasta smiled at him, kissed him again, and went back to watching Max open up Eva and Ave’s remaining gifts.

“Mama.”

His attention diverted in an instant, Harry turned to look at Regan, holding his arms up, asking for a cuddle.

Nasta picked Regan up, but their little boy squirmed and cried out, putting a hand to Nasta’s chin to push him away while reaching out with his other hand for Harry.

“Hold on.” Nasta chuckled, trying to get Regan over to Harry safely.

“Come here, baby.” Harry said, taking Regan and sitting him on his bump, but reclining back so that Regan rested on his chest. “Was he awake early?” He asked his mates.

“Yeah, he was awake before me this morning.” Max said.

“He needs a nap then.” Harry said, stroking Regan’s back as his son snuggled into his neck, arms wrapped around his neck and holding the back of Harry’s head.

Harry started humming, stroking Regan’s back and rocking him as much as he was able. He was asleep by the time Max had finished opening all of the gifts, with the girls only giving a passing interest in the wrapping paper. Ave was taken with a large rubber ball and Eva was playing with the ragdoll. Harry noticed that it was the doll with Ave’s name stitched into it. Bloody typical.

“I’ll get on with their birthday lunch.” Max said. “We’ll be having guests soon. Let’s hope the cake goes in their mouths this time, and not over everything else.”

Harry snickered. “I made pink, Princess fairy cakes. The kids all get one each, so if they do decide to throw them, it’ll be less mess and less damage done.”

“You should have let me make them.” Max grumbled. “You weren’t feeling well yesterday.”

“Oh shut it, I’m fine.” Harry rolled his eyes.

What he didn’t tell them was that his nest had been completed for a few days now, and he had been worried about missing his girls’ birthday, so making the little cakes, even though he hadn’t felt well and it had almost killed him to do it, was his way of making sure he had a hand in the birthday party, because he hadn’t been sure that he would be here for it.

He’d already wrapped his card and present for Nasta, and given both to Max with strict instructions to not let Nasta find them, and to give them to him on the third of February, for his birthday. It was his fortieth, one of the big milestones that normal people celebrated, and Harry was likely to miss it. He hated the thought, but their thunderer wasn’t due until the fifth, so he would likely be nesting for Nasta’s birthday.

The rest of the morning was spent watching the kids play, while Harry held a sleeping Regan on his chest, ignoring his acrobatic thunderer who had literally no room to spare in Harry’s sac, so was kicking out into Harry’s ribs and occasionally stretching a hand out to punch Harry’s bladder, while Max started laying the kitchen table for the simple birthday party, including a pink, disposable tablecloth and paper plates. Nothing that could be used as a weapon or would harm anyone overly much if it was thrown at them. The quintuplets were never going to live that second birthday down, they would be reminded of it at their own fortieth birthday party, probably by Max. That thought made Harry chuckle quietly to himself.

They started getting guests at half eleven and all the kids were being fussed over, well except for Regan, who was still asleep on Harry’s chest, and Leolin, who was sleeping in Draco’s arms.

“How are you feeling?” Aneirin asked him, sitting beside him and laying a hand on Regan’s head.

“Fit to burst.” Harry grimaced. “Tired too, but I’m almost there.”

“I was expecting to come today to find that you were nesting.”

Harry flinched at that word and his Dracken forced a snarl from his throat.

“Oh, I’m sorry, Harry. I’ve been so long without a submissive that I forgot that that was a forbidden topic. I won’t go outside, and I won’t tell anyone else I brought it up. Our little secret, I promise.”

Harry settled back down again and his Dracken gave a last ruffle, almost like a bird resettling their feathers, and he relaxed his shoulders.

“It’ll be soon.” Harry forced himself to say. “They’ve been storing their blood for a week now, I made cakes because I thought I wouldn’t be here too and it was my way of trying to include myself, in case I wasn’t here. I’m already upset that I’ll probably miss Nasta’s fortieth.”

“The man I raised will not care more for his birthday than he would about his mate and child.”

“He doesn’t. He keeps taking me aside to assure me of that too, but I didn’t want to miss it. I love him, and I want to be here for his birthday.”

“He knows that, but he also knows why you won’t be here. If he were your submissive…”

Harry giggled immediately and Aneirin gave him a grin.
“A little unbelievable, I know, but if he was your submissive, would you hold it against him if he were giving birth and he missed your birthday?”

“No, but…”

“No buts.” Aneirin said firmly. “They don’t hold it against you and believe it or not, but your health, and the baby’s health, come before a birthday party, Harry. Of course it does.”

Harry smiled and nodded, feeling a little better. He knew that Nasta wouldn’t hold it against him, none of his mates would, but that didn’t stop him from holding it against himself. He didn’t want his mates, and especially not his children, to ever experience a missed birthday, and true it wasn’t a real missed birthday, as he was the only one who wouldn’t be there, but it still didn’t stop him from feeling bad about it.

“Gran dad.”

The two of them looked to Braiden, who had his arms up and out to Aneirin, who grinned and picked him up.

“His speech is really coming on, Harry.” Aneirin praised.

Harry couldn’t put his chest forward like he wanted to, because of Regan, but he was preening, visibly, and he didn’t care.

“It really is. He’s using the potty more often than not and I don’t know if Nas told you, but he’s in a bed now, not a cot.”

“I was told, I was even shown pictures.” Aneirin chuckled.

“I suppose we are a bit…overdramatic with every milestone.” Harry grinned. “We just can’t help it.”

“No one minds, I certainly enjoyed seeing him tucked up in his own little bed and it’s great to hear that he’s using the potty more. He’s turning into a proper little child now.”
“They all are, despite the quintuplets being a little behind developmentally because of being multiples, large multiples at that, they’re all doing really well. Leolin excluded because he’s on his own schedule.”

“How has he been lately?”

“How new to report. He is absolutely besotted with that light-up ball that you gave him for Christmas though.” Harry said with a grin.

“Sensory toys are good for Faerie babies. It helps their development more. Anything with bright lights, bold colours, or different textures and he’ll love it.”

“We’ve definitely noticed that he likes touching different materials. The carpet, the cushions, his beanbag, the grass in the summer, all his toys, even the walls. He’ll just keep running his fingers over it and then he’ll touch something else, or two different things at the same time, using both hands, and it’s like he’s comparing them both. He also wants to be sat up a little more now too. It’s like now he’s older he’s decided he likes being able to see everything around him.”

“That’s wonderful news. I take it he is still sleeping a lot though?” Aneirin nodded to where he was fast asleep clutched in just one of Draco’s large arms, a dummy being suckled in his mouth, clutching the dreaded ‘Ma’ doll in his little, stick like arms.

“Yes, compared to the others he still sleeps a lot. He takes at least five naps a day, but he’s also eating more, so we think, hope, that he’s gearing up for another growth spurt.”

“That would be a nice surprise too. Every added centimetre, and ounce, helps to keep him safe. Healthy babies, even Faeries, are less likely to get sick.”

Harry nodded. He’d read that in one of the Faerie development books that was lying around the house. “I hate the winter the most, he always seems to do better in the summer, when he’s outside and touching grass and flowers, smelling the air and feeling the wind.”

“Faeries are very nature orientated, and they’re very sensory too, so it doesn’t surprise me to hear that Leolin does better outside, interacting with nature, but you know, you have a large garden, Harry. He has a snow suit. I don’t think a ten minute walk around the garden will harm him at all, quite the opposite in fact. Faeries do prefer spring and summer, but they also interact with nature during Harry blinked. “I hadn’t thought of that. We don’t like letting him out of the nice, warm house because Nasta says the cold, dry air is what spreads the cold and flu viruses easier, and that’s why those diseases are more prevalent in winter even though they can be caught all year round.”

“Well, Nasta is rarely wrong.” Aneirin chuckled, giving a proud look to his son, who was mingling with Maddisons. “But Leolin will be in your garden, away from other people who might make him sick. Just let him touch some frosty grass, or some tree bark, and he’ll be much happier.”

“He has been extra grumpy in the last few weeks. He’s even started scowling at me if he’s in a mood. Maybe I should take him out, or get one of the guys to do it.”

“What do you need?” Blaise asked, peeking over the back of the settee, resting his arms on it as he leaned down far enough to kiss Harry’s head. “Whatever you want, you know we’ll get it for you.”

“Aneirin thinks that Leolin’s moodiness comes from a lack of interaction with the outside. We’ve had him shut up in the house since October. If we just take him out into our garden, he won’t get sick, but it might improve his mood.”

“That’s a good idea. Once he’s awake and had a feed, I’ll go and dig out his snow suit and see if he wants a walk. He might only want you, though.”

“You can come with me, to stop me from slipping. It’s a bit foggy out there today and it shows no signs of shifting. Knowing my luck I’d walk into the tree because I hadn’t seen it.”

Blaise kissed him again. “Of course, Bello.”

“Daddy!” Braiden called out from Aneirin’s lap and Blaise grinned widely and swept up his son, carrying him off to play.

“Are they still hovering?” Aneirin teased.

Harry groaned. “I know it’s their dominant instincts, but the heavier pregnant I get, the worse they get. Little thunderer is the longest I’ve ever carried before, so naturally they’re hovering like crazy these days. Watch this.”

Harry sat up carefully with the sleeping Regan, and he could almost feel Nasta’s eyes on him immediately. He put one hand behind himself and pushed himself to his feet and in the next moment Nasta and Draco were right beside him.

“What is it?” Draco asked.

“Do you need anything?” Nasta asked him at nearly the same time.

“Potty break.” Harry smiled. “Can you take Regan for me? Try not to wake him.”

Nasta immediately took their son, carefully and gently putting him up on his own shoulder and Harry hurried to the bathroom outside, doing what he called his ‘penguin waddle’ as his legs and hips had fallen asleep from spending all morning sat on the settee, pinned down by his napping child.

He hadn’t actually needed the bathroom when he’d started his little show for Aneirin, but as soon as he’d stood up, he had needed to go, so he took care of business and then made his way to the kitchen, where he found Max putting the final touches to the table.

“Oh, is Regan awake?” Max asked, looking up at him and visibly assessing him with his eyes, but Harry gave him credit as he just carried on placing little plates of nibbles on the table.

“No, I needed the bathroom, so Nasta had to take him. I couldn’t hold it anymore.”

“Uh-oh, no puddles on the carpet, Harry. I thought you were housebroken.”

“Shut up, Caesar.” Harry said, turning and grinning at Max’s baby brother. “I made it in time.”

Caesar came and hugged him, kissing his head, ignoring the small growl he got for it from Max, whose Dracken had gone incredibly possessive in the last few days, to the point where it had to be Max who slept on Harry’s other side in the bed. He was even getting a bit growly when the others touched him.

Harry went to Max and reached up to pull his big mate down, wrapping his arms around his neck and snogging him. Caesar wolf whistled at them, but he was ignored. The two of them split apart and Max grinned at him, Harry winked and then turned to rob a sausage roll from the table.

Max spanked him for it. “No pillaging from the table!” He chastised.

“I’m your heavily pregnant submissive mate!” Harry whined. “I should be able to pillage whatever I want.”

“Yeah, Max!” Caesar agreed. “Let him take what he wants. I’d let him!”

Max growled again, a bit more loudly this time.

“Caesar, stop teasing your brother or you’ll end up dead.” Alexander cut in sharply. “Harry, are you okay?”

Harry nodded. “Perfectly fine, though Max won’t let me take from the table.”

He turned and pouted up at Max, who rolled his eyes and sighed.

“Alright fine, you can take from the table, but I’m going to start cutting off fingers if anyone else dares to touch my table.”

“But you always put on such a delicious spread.” Caesar whined. Harry laughed at his attempt to coax Max into letting him eat.

“And I had better still have a delicious spread on this table when the party officially starts!”

Harry laughed again, and ignoring the adult sized food up the one end of the table, he went for the baby nibbles. He wanted the bitesize sausage rolls and the teeny sandwiches cut into different shapes with a selection of cookie cutters.

“Why does he get to eat the fun stuff?” Caesar complained.
“I really can’t handle too much.” Harry answered, even as he nibbled on a little cheese savoury. “My stomach has shrunk so much that I can’t even eat a whole sandwich. So Max is letting me eat, because he knows no one will even noticed what I’ve eaten missing.”

“I’m letting you eat because you haven’t had anything since lunch yesterday.” Max said.

Harry shrugged. “I wasn’t hungry.”

“And now you are?”

Harry nodded, even as he picked up another little cheese cracker and nibbled on it.

“Sit and eat, gorgeous. You and our thunderer need it.” Max said, laying a hand on his belly and guiding Harry to a seat. Max automatically switched plates around, putting what Harry had been nibbling on within reaching distance. It was the little things like this that his mates did for him that made him love them all so much.

“When will the party start?” Caesar whined.

“When the kids are all awake.” Max said firmly.

“Harry, there you are. How has your day been?”

That was why Harry adored Amelle. She understood. Instead of asking him how he was, a question which he was asked several dozen times a day, she asked how his day had gone, which was essentially the same, but without the automatic obligation to sigh out that he was fine.

“Hi, Amelle. My day has been nice and relaxed so far. I’ve been pinned down by Regan all morning because he fell asleep on me, but I felt a little bit hungry, so I’ve wandered out here to ruin Max’s hard work.”

“You can eat what you want.” Max told him, kissing Harry’s head and putting a glass of orange squash by his hand.

Harry snickered. “How have you been?”

“Run off my feet with my three children.”

It took Harry a moment, and then he laughed.

“Hey!” The offended Caesar cried out, rushing his mate and wrapping his arms around her, swinging her to the side and giving her a big kiss. “You love me like this, don’t even try to deny it.” He told her, nuzzling her face. Amelle giggled and pretended to swat him away.

“Where are the girls?” Harry asked, grinning. “Ruling the roost in the living rooms?”

“Of course.” Amelle grinned. “Though I think Tegan is warming up to Nora, they’re both playing together.”

“Really?” Harry asked excitedly. “I’ve been waiting for her to get along with the boys, but the only one she ever really plays with is Regan. Oh, maybe she’ll get on with the twins when they’re a little older?”

“I’m sure she will. She just wants more girls around, she’s overrun with all you boys about.” Amelle said. “You’re going to add another boy too.”

“He’s going to be big too.” Harry said, patting his straining bump.

“Harry?” Blaise called out.

“Kitchen!” Harry called back.

Blaise had Leolin in his arms, already padded out in his snow suit, and he looked so absolutely adorable that Harry abandoned his food and used the table to stand up.
“Oh, look how cute you are, sweetheart!” Harry cooed, cupping Leolin’s cheeks with both hands and getting a scowl for it.

“Where are you taking him?” Max demanded protectively.

“Aneirin thinks that he’s been so grumpy these last few weeks because he hasn’t been outside since October, so we’re going on a walk around the garden.” Harry said, taking Leolin and heading for the back door with Blaise.

“You’d never think that he was my mate too.” Blaise quipped, right before he shut the back door with a bit more force than necessary.

“You’re all too wound up.” Harry said. “I think you need to have some sex while I watch and lament the fact that I’m too rounded to join in.”

That made Blaise laugh, and he slipped his arm around Harry’s back and while Harry carried Leolin, facing outwards, in his arms, so that the rather harsh wind could touch his cheeks, Blaise held him tight and directed their steps.

Leolin looked amazed and he reached out his hands, as if he could feel the wind. His hands were bare, and Harry stifled the urge to smother Leolin to his chest and run back to the house…well, waddle, he’d waddle back to the house. But Leolin needed his hands to touch nature, and as they reached the first tree, on the opposite side to where he’d built his nest, Leolin reached out by himself to touch the trunk of the tree.

Leolin actually giggled and squealed as he rubbed both hands back and forth over the tree.

“I came prepared for this.” Blaise said, aiming the camcorder at him and Leolin.

Harry gave him a grin. “Thank Merlin for Aneirin knowing everything about Faeries. Come on, love, let’s see if we can’t find you a patch of frosty grass.”

Harry moved Leolin away from the tree, getting a squirm and a cry for it, at least until he placed Leolin down on his bum and let him reach forward and rub his hands over the grass. He giggled again and something in Harry settled. His family would be fine when he left to nest. They’d all be fine and he could preen in his nest and bring back his new baby and everything would be fine. He knew it.

They stayed outside for only ten minutes, and in that time Leolin’s mood visibly improved by the moment. They were wary of keeping him out too long, especially without his little mittens on, but they promised to bring Leolin out at least once a week, possibly twice, just to keep him nice and healthy.

“How did he like it?” Nasta asked as they came through the back door.

“Look at him!” Harry said, beaming, holding out Leolin, who was grinning widely, his one tiny tooth on display.

“So he needed a moment out in nature?”

“A Faerie moment.” Harry giggled. “Has Regan woken up now?”

“He’s just coming around now. Draco’s taken him to wash his hands and face to bring him around.”

“Okay, Max, are you ready?” Harry asked.

“Yes.” He said. “Do you want tea?”

Harry considered it, but shook his head. “No, the food filled me up. I’m okay for the moment, lover.”

“Blaise?” Max tried. It was almost like an apology, or maybe just a peace offering.

“Sure thing, lover.”

Harry sat at the table and left the baby wrangling to Max, who had set the kettle to boiling and gone to wrangle up everyone else. The adults all came in herding the toddlers and soon the booster seats were filled and Harry was nibbling, even as the twin girls, in their own booster seats for the sake of space, sat beside one another at the head of the table, started grabbing fistfuls of food before Max could help them fill their plates.

Harry just sat back and watched everything, as he nibbled on his own food, Narcissa sat beside him. The birthday lunch was messy, and very loud, as usual, but Harry loved it, as he watched them all chatting and babbling together, eating and yes, even throwing food, mostly to one another, but occasionally at the surrounding adults too.

Instead of the large birthday cake the kids, and adults, all had a single fairy cake each, covered in pink icing and edible glitter, and it was much less disastrous than the quintuplets’ second birthday, even if bits of cake did end up on the floor.

At one in the afternoon, their guests were saying goodbye, a lot more amicably than when they had fled the last time, covered in cake with the screaming fits of several wound up babies in their ears, and the kids were dropping down for naps nice and easy.

Harry was able to breathe. Able to sit and relax. He’d done it. He’d managed to see in his twin girls’ first birthday, and now he could go and nest without feeling any guilt or discomfort. His Dracken was calm and he felt himself dozing into a nap himself. He could go and nest, but he didn’t really feel like it, and right now he just really wanted to rest and bask in the success of a perfectly planned day. They’d done well, really well and he was happy.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: Happy New Year, lovelies! A new year full of exciting new writing opportunities and brand new fics. Or at least brand new chapters. Our baby boy is arriving now in the next chapter, which should be up next week, as I’m almost finished with it, and I’m so excited for him to arrive, I love it when they get new babies in the family.

We’ll be getting another chapter for this fic as soon as I can manage it, but until then,

StarLight Massacre. X
Birthday Birthing

Chapter Notes

A/N: Chapter Warning: Graphic depictions of self-harm due to self-caesarean.

Last Time

Harry was able to breathe. Able to sit and relax. He’d done it. He’d managed to see in his twin girls’ first birthday, and now he could go and nest without feeling any guilt or discomfort. His Dracken was calm and he felt himself dozing into a nap himself. He could go and nest, but he didn’t really feel like it, and right now he just really wanted to rest and bask in the success of a perfectly planned day. They’d done well, really well and he was happy.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Chapter One Hundred-Twenty-Two – Birthday Birthing

Draco was the first person to wake up on the nineteenth of January, the day after Eva and Ave’s birthday. He laid in bed for several minutes, just coming around and waking up slowly, before looking at the pocket watch he kept on the bedside table. It was already gone eight in the morning and their kids would be frantic for their breakfast. Draco could manage baby cereal, porridge, or yoghurt and fruit, he was certainly not on the level of Max, but he wasn’t as bad as Nasta either, who tried and tried, and just could not grasp the skill of cooking, it was one of his only faults.

He forced himself up and he blamed his bleary eyes and that he still felt half asleep for the fact that he didn’t notice right away that Harry was missing from the bed. He went into the bathroom and he took an extra minute to splash some water on his face to wake himself up a little more.

It was the sort of day where he wanted to stay in his pyjamas, at least for another few hours, and he considered that it might be better to get breakfast out of the way before changing anyway, the kids were always messy, and though they taught manners at the table, they also didn’t shout or rage over the kids making some mess. Draco had learnt to accept it, especially after the books that Harry had shown him that said that the messier the kids were at mealtimes the better they developed their fine motor skills and that the worse they, the parents, reacted to certain behaviour, the more likely the kids were to repeat it. So he’d learnt to laugh off certain things, like Calix dipping chicken strips in his drink, or Eva up ending her bowl of Bolognese sauce over her head.

He noticed when he re-entered the bedroom that there was a space between Max’s back and the body pillow, Harry’s usual spot in the bed, and he realised that Harry was no longer in the bed. He frowned, but considered that perhaps Harry had woken up just after him and had gone to use the bathroom down the hall, or gone downstairs. If he wanted a nibble sometimes he went to get it himself. It was more likely these days that he woke up Nasta, but with it being morning he could have easily gone down by himself.

Draco went to collect up the kids, who were all awake and playing in their nurseries. Even Leolin was awake, and he was staring up at his baby mobile in rapt fascination, or he had been until Draco picked him up.

“Da.” He complained.

“Your light-up ball is downstairs, how about we fill your belly with warm milk and then you can have your ball, yes?” He asked the Faerie, even knowing that Leolin couldn’t possibly understand, as he carried him back out onto the landing.

“Bo da, Daddy!”

Of course that was Braiden and Draco searched for him in the gaggle of kids.

“Bore da, Braiden. Good morning.”

“Bo jor!”

“Bonjour, Braiden.”

“Ciao!”

“You should be saying buongiorno.” Draco muttered under his breath. “If Blaise is going to teach you Italian, he should at least do it right.”

“Bon jor no!” Braiden repeated dutifully and Draco blinked and looked at him. “Good morning!”

“Yes, that’s right.” Draco said, astonished.

“Ciao!” Tegan piped up.

“Hello, Tegan.”
“Morning!” She replied.

“Bon…bon geo no.” Tegan frowned, as if knowing she hadn’t said it right, but Draco didn’t care.

“Well done, Tegan.” He said proudly.

They reached the stairs and Draco made sure he had everyone with him, but of course they didn’t make that easy, as they wouldn’t stay still.

He picked up the twin girls and juggled them carefully with Leolin to open the gate.

“Now remember, one at a time and hold onto the bannister at all times!” He reminded them, his heart in his throat as all five of their older children navigated the stairs. All it took was for one of them to slip, for one of them to fall.

He walked beside them, against the wall, and he got the gate at the bottom of the stairs and let them down onto the wooden floor of the hallway with a sigh of relief.

“Harry?” He called out.

Of course he knew that there was a chance that Harry was nesting, he just wanted to be sure. He hated the time when Harry was nesting, he hated not being near his lover, and this would be the first time without Harry since he’d been forced to stay away, by Nasta and then by the Dracken Counsel. It was going to be difficult, he knew, but he knew why Harry was away, and he knew that it wouldn’t last forever, just until their baby thunderer arrived, hopefully on time, in two weeks’ time.

There was no answer and Draco sighed, getting the kids into the kitchen and into their booster seats. He laid Leolin in his kitchen bassinet and put the twin girls on the floor. He set up the two high chairs and picked the girls up one at a time, chasing them down as they crawled under the table and all over the place, and strapping them in securely.

He filled the kettle and set it to boil as he dug the plastic bowls from a cupboard and went to find the natural yoghurt that Max kept on hand. There was a bowl of defrosted berries in a large bowl next to the yoghurt and Draco thanked Max for always keeping fresh berries on hand, even in the winter.
when they were out of season, he no longer cared that they were frozen and not fresh, he’d long since stopped caring about such little things.

He put six tablespoons of yoghurt into each little bowl and a handful of mixed berries and served his babies, before making a cup of tea and a bottle up for Leolin, who was still rejecting all forms of solid food, or any weaning food. He wouldn’t even take milk from a spoon, which was a clear indication that he wasn’t ready to be weaned yet.

He kept a very close eye on the kids while they ate, some with spoons, some with their hands, but he affected to ignore that for now. But he remained on hand, even as he fed Leolin his bottle, just in case one of them choked on a blueberry.

Almost forty minutes later he was wiping down faces and hands before herding the kids into the larger family room and unleashing them to make a mess in that room, as he looked at the disgusting kitchen in despair.

He made sure all the kids were safely in the other room before taking out his wand. Max liked to clean by hand, but he certainly didn’t, and a quick wave of his wand had all the bowls going into the sink to be scrubbed by the enchanted dish brush, before a second wave of the wand removed the yoghurt and squished up berries from the floor, the table and the chairs.

He made another cup of tea for himself and while it was brewing he took out the eight food diaries from the kitchen drawer and wrote down that the kids had had yoghurt and berries for breakfast, and that he had given them a rusk each, which he was planning on doing now. All except for Leolin, who had had his usual bottle of milk and would be dropping off for a nap very soon.

He put the books away, picked up his tea and took the aforementioned rusks into the living room for the kids to chew on, or gum up and then squash into the carpet, which is what half of them did with the hard biscuits anyway.

Once the rusks were all eaten, as much as they were going to be at least, Draco left the kids where they were playing and headed back up the stairs to collect their clothes, fresh nappies, and a pair of green briefs for Braiden, who was doing so well with his potty training.

He had to drag the kids to him one by one to change them and get them dressed, though Calix helped immensely by stripping himself off the moment he saw what Draco was doing. Of course he took his own nappy off too and Draco grumbled to himself about using a sticking charm to keep the damn thing on his son.

He did allow Calix to run around naked for a while, leaving him until last as he dressed all of the others first, encouraging Braiden to pull up his own briefs, just to keep him interested in them, and potty training in general, but Draco did all of the rest. He caught Calix, dressed him too, brushed all of their hair and then happily set them free back onto their toys as he went to get another cup of tea, sitting on the settee happily, letting out a grunt and just resting back to enjoy his tea.

Max was the next one to get up and he stumbled into the family room with half closed eyes and he fell onto the settee and grappled for Draco so that he could rest on him.

“Still tired?” Draco snickered.

Max nodded against Draco’s shoulder, yawning. “The kids eaten?”
“Yeah, yoghurt and berries, and a rusk each.”

“Have you and Harry eaten?”

“I haven’t yet, and Harry is nesting.”

“Okay, I’ll sort out our breakfast…”

Max trailed off as Draco’s words sunk in, and then his head picked up and he scanned the room for Harry.

“He’s…he’s nesting?!”

“Yes. He wasn’t in bed when I got up. He must have gone in the night when we were sleeping, or early this morning.”

“Have you called for him?”

“No, I didn’t want to wake anyone else up, and you shouldn’t either. He would have called us if there was a problem, Max.”

“Yeah, I know. I just, I’ve been very…”

“Possessive? Overprotective? A complete arse?” Draco supplied, one eyebrow raised.

Max snorted. “I’ve been feeling a bit worse than normal concerning Harry during this pregnancy. My Dracken is incredibly unsettled and possessive of him. I don’t know if it’s because our thunderer is the longest he’s ever carried before, or because he was obviously so uncomfortable carrying him. I don’t even know if it’s linked to the fight, having the Elders take him away from us, I just know I couldn’t let him go and I needed him with me.”
“You have been very overbearing.”

Max wrapped an arm around Draco’s neck and pulled him into a kiss.

“You’re lucky I love you, but Nasta and Blaise would want to know that Harry is nesting now. Go and wake them up and I’ll start breakfast. It’s getting quite late into the morning.”

Draco sighed, but recognised that it probably was the right thing to do to tell Nasta, their top dominant, that Harry was nesting, he got up and went traipsing up the stairs to wake Nasta and Blaise.

It was Blaise who woke up first to the light shaking that Draco employed to get them both up.

“Was it?” Blaise murmured softly, blinking owlishly at him and stretching with a grunt.

“You need to wake up, Max has breakfast on and you know he hates us not eating on time.”

Blaise groaned and rolled over into Nasta.

“He’s still here.” Blaise pointed out sullenly.

“I’m trying to wake him up too.” Draco insisted.

“Why?” Nasta asked sleepily, cracking open eyes that looked dark brown in the dim bedroom. “Has something happened?”

“Harry’s nesting.” Draco told them both.

“You sure?”

“Well he’s not in the house, so unless he woke up in the early hours and decided to go for a short waddle around the block, yes, I’m sure.”
Nasta groaned and stretched, sitting up, his hair tousled all over his head and looking distinctly rumpled.

“The kids all up and fed?” Nasta asked.

“Yes, they’re all dressed and playing happily too. Leolin’s even into his first nap of the day. It’s almost quarter past ten.”

“Damn, we slept late.” Blaise chuckled sleepily.

“You must have needed it, but Max really will kill all three of us if we don’t go and eat the food he’s made us, so arse out of bed.” Draco ordered.

“You’re getting bossier in your old age.” Blaise complained.

“Hmm. I didn’t think that was possible, but it’s always good to improve one’s self.” Draco imparted, waltzing out of the bedroom door. He heard both Nasta and Blaise laugh at him, and it made him smile.

Harry was now nesting, and it wouldn’t be long before they had a newborn baby back in the house. They needed the lie ins and the laughter now, because as soon as that baby was here, both the lie ins and the laughter would be in short supply. They’d all be grouchy and tired and functioning mostly on autopilot.

That wouldn’t last long though, with nine babies, they more than knew that by now, but still, it would be a shit waiting for the baby to start sleeping through the night and until he did, it would be several feeds and nappy changes throughout the night, every night. Draco reminded himself that it would all be worth it in the end, after all, it just meant one more baby to love.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Nasta had gone outside to call for Harry, and finally Harry had called back sleepily. Nasta almost felt bad for apparently waking him up, but he found the entrance to the nest that had been dug deep down, it was a simple ridge in the ground, and he could just barely see Harry through the blanket he’d hung up to keep out the wind and the weather. Because of this impromptu door they would have to be careful when throwing Harry fresh food, just in case they knocked it down and exposed him, which he obviously didn’t want.

“Where is he?” Max asked the moment he walked in through the back door.

“About a hundred feet into the woods to the right.” Nasta replied. “Away from the neighbourhood, not towards it. We’re going to have to be careful giving him food, he’s somehow managed to put a blanket over the entrance to block wind and stop rain from getting in. I’m not sure how secure it is and I don’t want to knock it down.”

“We’d never hear the end of it if we started pulling down his nest around him.” Blaise agreed. “Is he okay?”

“He was actually sleeping when I called to him, so I feel bad about waking him up, but he seems fine.”

“Two weeks until the thunderer’s due date.” Max said, staring at the clock before shaking his head and standing up. “Anyone want tea? Blaise, you want coffee? Harry’s out of the house now, coffee is back on the menu.”

“Thank Merlin, I was having withdrawals.” Blaise joked, before he sighed. “No, not really, Nasta, it was a joke.” He laughed at the look on Nasta’s face.

“Caffeine withdrawal is a real…”

“Yes, yes, we all know that caffeine is a stimulant and it can cause withdrawal syndrome. I was on a forced abstinence though, and I would never have abstained from it if Harry hadn’t been pregnant, so if I had gotten withdrawal it would have been because of that, and not likely to be repeated…until Harry is pregnant again, of course.” Blaise said. “But to answer your question, Max. I would love a cup of coffee, grazie.”

Draco snorted and came to sit by Blaise, wrapping an arm around him and pulling him to lay on his chest as the kids all played on the floor.

Harry had been sleeping with a blanket in the bed with him, stuffed into the body pillow that he always cuddled up to, and that blanket was now draped over a fussy Leolin, tucked under his chin so that he could smell it, and they knew that that blanket was the only thing keeping him from a meltdown. They were all glad that they’d found the blanket trick before Harry started nesting, and that the smell of Harry could calm Leolin down, along with his Ma doll, which was clutched in his hands, under the blanket.

They’d also had a problem with Tegan already that morning, who had wanted to read a story to her penguin and to her Mummy, and had not been happy when told that her Mummy couldn’t be there for the story. She had instead read the story to Regan, who was feeling much better today, after a good night of sleep.

Braiden was making a mess in the corner with wooden building blocks and Calix was…missing.

“Code red, guys. Calix is missing.” Draco called out as soon as he turned to look in all four corners of the room without seeing his son.

“Damn that little explorer!” Max’s voice cursed from the kitchen. “Check under furniture and behind the curtains.”

“Got him.” Nasta called out from the hallway.

Nasta carried in the laughing toddler over his shoulder. A very naked toddler.

“Grab me a nappy one of you.”

“No. No, Daddy. No nappy.”

They all blinked. “You don’t want a nappy?” Nasta asked him.

“No. Want to use potty like Bay!”

“Do you need to go now?” Nasta asked, thinking that perhaps Calix had stripped off in the corridor to go to the bathroom. He’d been sat right outside the bathroom door.

Calix nodded and Nasta automatically looked around the room for a potty.

“Max! Calix is using the potty!” Draco called out, even as Blaise handed over the blue potty to Nasta.
Max came barrelling into the room to watch, as Nasta sat Calix on the bit of blue plastic and they all watched him expectantly.

“Don’t watch me!” Calix demanded.

That made them all pause and they shared a look before turning around by mutual agreement. A moment later they heard the soft tinkle of liquid hitting the plastic and they all grinned proudly and shared a look at those mates they could see easily, without making Calix think they were peeking.

“Good boy, Cali!” They heard Braiden praise, and they just knew Harry would have hated to miss this.

“Done!” Calix declared and when they turned back around, he was stood up, looking at his handy work.

“Well done, Calix, you’re such a big boy!” Max praised easily.

“Hands now?” Calix asked, looking at his hands and then at his parents.

“That’s right, well done for remembering.” Nasta said. “Come to the bathroom.”

Nasta picked up the potty and followed Calix, who had run out, still completely bare, to the bathroom down the hall.

“Damn he’s adorable.” Blaise chuckled.

“He needs to put some clothes on before he freezes.” Draco grumbled.

“Go and find where he took them off then.” Max encouraged, trying to bite back the automatic response of pointing out how warm the house was and that Calix would hardly freeze. He managed it when he remembered that this was exactly how the big fight had started, and Harry wasn’t here to protect the room full of babies this time. Though Nasta would probably kill him and Draco to stop Blaise came and touched him, wrapping him in a hug. Max held him back and bent to drop a kiss to his head. Blaise’s hair was almost back to the length it had been before it had all been charmed off.

“I saw you biting your tongue. I was going to distress call for Nasta.” Blaise told him.

“The therapy worked wonders.” Max said, snuggling Blaise tighter in his arms. “We’ve all learnt to accommodate more, and the house is warm enough that all of us can run around naked if we wanted, but I don’t want to fight over it. Draco will learn, he’ll get more comfortable with nakedness, we just have to give him time.”

Blaise nodded and Max bent to give him a proper kiss before separating off. He went into the kitchen and brought in a tray of mugs and set it on the table before he sat on the settee and reached for his cup of tea. Blaise sat beside him and grabbed his coffee mug, cradling it and sipping on it happily.

“All clean.” Nasta declared with a smirk, coming back in with the rinsed and dried potty in one hand and Calix holding the other. He was no longer naked, but he was wearing a tiny pair of green briefs.

“He looks adorable!” Max gushed. “Who looks so grown up in his little pants?!!”

Calix giggled and turned away bashfully as he was fusssed over, but Max grabbed him up and sat him on his lap.

“Daddy, no!” Calix giggled, squirming.

“You’re getting such a big boy!” Max praised. “You’re going to be in a big boy bed soon as well!”

“Like Bay!” Calix said excitedly.

“Yes, just like Braiden.” Max said.

“You’re feeding from one another.” Blaise pointed out with a grin.
“But Blaise, my little boy is in pants, look!”

Max thrust Calix at Blaise, who moved the coffee cup out of the way and reached forward with his other arm to hug Calix tight.

“He didn’t want a fresh nappy on.” Nasta told them, sitting down himself and drinking his own cup of green tea.

“I found his clothes and his nappy.” Draco said, coming back into the room.

“Throw the nappy, Draco.” Max said. “Look!”

He held Calix up, putting his feet on the back on the settee and Calix screeched in laughter, clapping his hands.

“He’s wearing pants?” Draco said excitedly.

“Yes, he asked for them himself.” Nasta explained.

“He saw me dressing Braiden this morning and asked me why Braiden wasn’t wearing a nappy.” Draco told them. “I explained that Braiden was a big boy, and because he used the potty he wore pants, not a nappy.”

“Is Braiden wearing green briefs too, by any chance?” Nasta asked. “He wanted to choose his own pants and he picked the green ones.”

Draco just nodded.

“I love that they all look up to Braiden as a role model.” Blaise said.

“It helps that he’s our most well behaved child.” Max chuckled.
“Most of the time.” Nasta laughed.

Draco plucked Calix from Max and laid him on the floor and went through the struggle of trying to dress him. Even when he wanted to be dressed their Calix was not very cooperative, and he did not make it an easy task as he giggled and squirmed, kicked his feet and rolled.

Max, Nasta and Blaise just watched on with amusement, offering no help at all, as Draco struggled to redress Calix. This was a typical event during their day, and one of them would always have to get Calix, and occasional one or more of the other kids, dressed again because they’d chosen to strip off, and it had become a habit now, that while one of them did this horrendous task, the others would just sit or stand around, watching, laughing and not helping…at least not until they were practically begged to help at any rate.

At midday they contacted the extended family to tell them that Harry had started nesting, and then it was just a countdown until Harry went into labour and the baby joined them in the world. They were excited and they obsessively made sure that everything was ready for their thunderer’s arrival. His bassinet had already been set up, the newly laundered sheets were folded back and waiting and they had brand new sleepsuits and onesies for him, along with the newborn nappies they would need.

They had everything ready for Harry too, and Max took some time between lunch and dinner to make the usual potions that he believed that Harry would need, including bath salts, scar salve and muscle relaxants. He also made a laxative, just in case, as after Harry had had the girls, he’d complained of not being able to have a shit properly, because his stomach muscles protested heavily when he pushed. The damage done to those muscles would only increase now as they had more and more children, but they would do anything and everything they could to help keep Harry healthy and comfortable and they would help him to recover post-pregnancy.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Harry was snuggled under so many blankets, lying in a comfortable cradle of pillows that smelt of his mates. He was naked and his wings were folded under his body, cushioning him as he basked in his nest.

His mates were feeding him and were keeping well back, most of the time at least. He’d had to warn them away several times as they got too close or lingered too long.

He was cuddling with the flask of blood that he would need to close up his caesarean wound to keep it from freezing, and thus becoming useless to him.

His baby was still moving within him, and he had everything he needed to give birth, ready and waiting. He was happy, contented, to stay here, resting and waiting for his labour to begin. Days passed unnoticed, with only the sunlight or moonlight filtering into his nest to tell him if it was day or night. He didn’t care, he was preening and waiting, enjoying his hard work.

His human mind kept trying to tell him that something important was coming up, but he squashed it down, this was his time to take control, and he needed to remain in control for their baby. It would be soon, he knew. He could almost feel the differences in his body as it prepared to birth. But until then, he was happy to rest and sleep, to eat when his mates threw him food, but most of his time was spent preening, rubbing his hands over his baby, unable to wait until he could do so in the flesh.

It was to moonlight that he awoke next, to a strong ripple passing through his body. He grunted in discomfort, but knowing what it meant, he was also happy and excited. His next child was ready to come into the world.

He sat up, wrapped a blanket around his shoulders to keep away the chill, and he spread his knees, letting his bump fall between them. He’d been in labour for a while already, if the strength of the ripples was an indication, and he marvelled at how he’d slept through his own labour for so long.

It wasn’t quite time, and he made sure that everything was on hand and within reach. He used his magic to light up his nest, which was very dark, everything silhouetted by the faint moonlight, because it was underground and once that was done he checked the bottle of blood and gave it a swirl, making sure that it was still liquid. It thankfully was and he settled it within reach as he grabbed a clean blanket and made a soft cradle out of it on his other side. He made sure a stack of towels were ready to clean his baby off and that the powder and bottles of water he’d brought in with him were still safe. He made a bottle up ready, knowing he’d be in too much pain to do so afterwards and he settled that in the blanket cradle ready.

The ripples of pain were now making his back spasm and he had to grunt with every one of them. He made a sharp squealing sound with the next ripple, as it bowed his back so hard that he lost his breath. It was almost time and he rubbed the pad of his thumbs over his sharpened claws, they were wet with venom already.

His breath hitched and his back spasmed and the pain moved from his back to the front of his bump and he knew that it was time. He carefully marked out where to cut and with just a single claw on his right index finger he cut into himself with a screech loud enough to echo.

A moment later his four mates called back to him, soothingly, and sleepily. He’d woken them up, and he didn’t care. As soon as he’d screamed once, he couldn’t stop. He screamed continuously, even as his hand remained steady, and his cut smooth.

His mates’ called back, sometimes together, sometimes in stages, but they passed along their comfort, their pride, their love, and it kept him going, kept him strong and steady.

As soon as his body was open he took a moment to breathe. He used a different claw, the middle one on his right hand, to carefully cut open the sac holding his baby and out came a small dribble of amniotic fluid.

He sheathed his claws and reached into his body, searching out a delicate neck before pulling his baby into the world and he wanted to cry at how perfect his new child was.

He placed the baby into a towel in front of him, clamped the cord and then checked his sac, just in case, but after finding nothing amiss he gripped the cord attaching him to his child still and with one claw, he severed it. He wrapped the remainder of it around his wrist and yanked on it with an ear-splitting shriek, pulling it from his body. It was dumped into a towel, tied up, and thrown straight from his nest, even as he turned back to his crying child. The baby was turning blue skinned, and alarmed he picked up another two towels and placed them over the baby, before grabbing the bottle of blood, puncturing it with one claw and sucking it through the hole. It was cold and he hated his blood cold, but he needed it, so he drank it down in large, painful gulps until it was gone, trying not to taste it, trying not to breathe too much.

As soon as the bottle was empty he threw that from his nest and turned immediately to the baby. He picked the baby up and snuggled him, breathing in deeply and ingraining the scent of his baby deeply, so that he would always be able to find his child, no matter where he was in the world.

He rubbed the baby to clean him of blood, making sure that he was going pink now, and not remaining blue. Thankfully he was, and it calmed him down a little more and reassured him that everything was normal and as it should be, and he got the baby into a nappy and dressed, before putting him into the blanket cradle. He started on removing anything that had the slightest blood spot on it, throwing blankets and towels out, ready for his mates to collect and remove. He curled up around his newborn baby and for an undetermined amount of time he just stared at his new baby, waiting for him to get hungry and wake for a feed. In that time he played with the damp, dark hair, the tiny curled ears and brushed over the tiny nose and little lips. He was besotted with the baby and he fell asleep without meaning to.

Max was tense as he strained his ears to hear any sort of sound coming from outside. He was stood in the kitchen with the others, hip cocked against the counter, his arms folded across his chest as he dug his fingers into his own sides to try to control himself. All four of them were only in the boxers they’d gone to sleep in.

He was nervous, excited too, but mostly he was terrified that something would go wrong. It was hard not to think about such awful things with Nasta stood right there. Nasta whose own Mother had died in her nest giving birth to him.

“I think it’s over.” Blaise said, breaking the silence that had descended upon the room for the last fifteen or twenty minutes.

They all let out a collective breath and started moving from their mannequin like state, Blaise’s words breaking the ice.

“It’s just a waiting game now, to see when he comes out of his nest with the new baby.” Max said, stating the obvious, but needing to do so. “Are we going to go back to sleep, or do we all need an espresso or eight to function through the day?”

“We should try and sleep a little longer.” Nasta said. “It’s only two in the morning.”

Max looked at the clock and then he grinned. Then he laughed.

“What’s so funny?” Draco asked.
“Harry gave birth on your birthday, Nas!” Max pointed out. “It’s the third!”

They all looked at the clock and seemed to realise what he had at the same time. It was gone midnight, their new son had been born at one thirty in the morning on the third of February…Nasta’s birthday.

“Happy birthday, lover.” Max said, kissing Nasta’s cheek.

“Damn it! How are we going to upstage that now?” Draco demanded. “He’s gone and given you a new child for your birthday!”

All four of them snorted in laughter.

“There’s no beating that.” Max insisted. “We’ll just have to keep Nasta’s presents for ourselves and plan our next child better! Of course Harry would give birth on Nasta’s birthday.”

“You can still give me presents.” Nasta insisted. “Harry needs time to recover, we won’t be seeing him or the baby for a couple of days.”

Max, Blaise and Draco all laughed.

“Of course we will.” Draco insisted, kissing Nasta himself. “But none of our gifts will compare to Harry’s, though now you will be upstaged every single year by our own child who shares your birthday.”

“That’s fine, it’s likely that over our fertile years we’ll have more double birthdays, I’ll just have to have my fill of you all in the night. When our children are all tucked up in bed.” Nasta purred.

“Oh, now I like that idea, come on.” Max insisted, taking Nasta’s hand and pulling him back up towards their bedroom.

“I didn’t mean right now.” Nasta laughed.
“It’s your birthday, isn’t it?” Max teased as they reached the stairs. He stopped suddenly, spun around and picked Nasta up and slung him over his shoulder.

“Max!” Nasta complained, laughing despite himself.

“What? I’m saving your legs for later.” Max said innocently.

Blaise was surprised into laughing, hard.

“Shhh! You’ll wake the kids.” Draco hissed. “We don’t want them awake for this.”

Blaise stifled himself, and they made it to their master suite with no further noise or issues. Max dumped Nasta onto the bed and immediately flopped onto him, pinning him on his back.

“Tonight, we celebrate a birthday, and a birth.” He said softly. “We have a newborn son, and a lover turning forty.”

“You’re going melancholic, lover. Smile, this is a happy occasion.” Nasta prodded.

“Sorry, I was just thinking about Harry.”

“He’s going to be fine. He hasn’t distress called us, he’s gone silent, as all submissives do just after birth. He’ll be sleeping, recovering from the ordeal. He’ll bond with the baby and then he’ll come and introduce him to us.” Nasta soothed.

“I know, but until I see him again, I’ll worry.”

Nasta reached up and pulled Max to his chest and into a kiss.

“Let us distract you then.” He told Max softly, pushing a hand through Max’s short hair. He’d only recently cut it, and it regrettably wasn’t long enough for him to grab a hold of, his fingers were too Draco slipped onto the bed, already naked and he laid himself against Max’s back.

“We can distract you easily enough.” He whispered into Max’s ear.

Max moved himself and let Draco fall onto Nasta.

“So much glorious skin on show distracts me.” Max grinned. “But it’s Nasta’s birthday, it’s him we’re spoiling.”

“I’m spoilt every day.” Nasta insisted.

“We can spoil you more.” Blaise insisted as he moved to crouch by Nasta’s head. He was also naked.

“I think these youngsters are moving ahead of us, Nas.” Max grinned. “Look at them all naked and ready.”

The two of them shared a look, and at the same time Max grabbed Draco, pulled him to his body and turned to the side to pin him to the bed, and Nasta reached up and tugged Blaise down onto him, rolled them both over, before throwing his leg over the side to turn to face his pinned lover.

“You know I love you doing that, amante.” Blaise said, his voice lowered and very sultry.

“Ti amo, mio amore.” Nasta purred back.

“Don’t go multi-cultural on us. I can’t understand the sexy things you’re saying!” Max complained with a laugh.

Nasta shot Max a grin, and moved over, stretching to kiss Max. They got a little distracted, and more than a little heated, as their kiss grew very passionate.
He should have known better than to trust his crafty mates, and he very suddenly found himself on his back and Blaise was down between his legs, kissing and teasing his thighs with soft kisses and firm touches, just how Nasta liked it.

“I think I prefer you like this.” Max mused, grinning down at him. “Pinned on your back, being teased out of that steel control you hold over yourself. Blaise, go down on him.”

Blaise gave a naughty grin to Max, slipping off the boxers that Nasta had worn to bed, before bending to his task. He didn’t go straight for Nasta’s cock, however, he started at his thighs again, kissing his way up before sliding his mouth just over the tip of Nasta, teasing him.

Draco moved over to sit opposite Max, not disturbing Blaise, but he laid on his belly and propped his chin in his hand. He gave a smile as he surveyed Nasta’s beautiful body.

“You look good, Nas.” Draco told him.

“Feel free to touch.” Nasta invited.

Draco laughed and he braced himself on his forearms and bent to flick the lightest of teasing licks over Nasta’s nipple.

“You taste delicious too.” Blaise told him, but his eyes were all for the hard cock he was holding in one hand.

“He can still speak, Blaise, you’re not doing it well enough.” Max chastised, giving Blaise’s bum a swat.

Blaise laughed, playing and stroking the cock in his hand teasingly. “I suppose I have to try a little harder then, but he looks pretty happy to me.”

Blaise dipped his head back down to lick at Nasta, sucking on him, and Max looked at Nasta, who did indeed look very happy with all the attention he was receiving. It wasn’t often that he got the chance to let go like this, to have all of them focused on him, and Max regretted that. Nasta deserved some spoiling for everything he did for them.

Max reached over to the bedside table and fished out a bottle of lube, he checked that it wasn’t one of the flavoured ones they used on occasion for oral sex, before popping the cap and putting a blob on his fingers.
Max watched as Draco snogged Nasta, as Blaise bobbed on him, and all Nasta could do in response was moan and squirm, those powerful legs tensing and quivering. That made Max smirk, and he reached under Blaise to press his lubed fingers to Nasta’s hole.

He watched Nasta’s reaction, as he had to break the kiss with Draco to gasp and groan, his head falling back as Max eased a single finger into his body, Draco moving simultaneously to kiss down that stubbled throat.

Max really enjoyed teasing his mates, he loved it, and even more so in the bedroom, where he could rile them up and make them explode in the most beautiful, purest of ways. That’s exactly what he wanted to do to Nasta tonight. Make him explode and then melt.

He added a second finger, testing and probing, watching Nasta’s face to see how the added finger had been received. There was a small pinch of discomfort, but it was eased away by a kiss from Draco and a slurp from Blaise. Max snorted softly in amusement, but because of that bit of discomfort, he eased his fingers out, before pressing back in slowly. He repeated this for a moment, just sliding his fingers in and out of Nasta’s body. He groped for the bottle of lube and eased that under Blaise too, and when his fingers were mostly out of Nasta’s body, he added just a bit more lube to make everything more comfortable and smooth. He pressed his fingers back in and listened to Nasta moaning, watched as the muscles in his legs tensed and shuddered.

“I’m ready.” Nasta declared, his voice gruff, as Max spread his fingers inside Nasta’s body, stretching him and preparing him.

“Oh, my dearest sweetie, I don’t care if you’re ready. I’m not.” Max teased, his voice low and sultry.

Nasta groaned throatily, his back arching and the muscles of his stomach rippling as he clenched, hard.

“Oh, ow, lover, that’s not nice.” Max chuckled. “Stop trying to break my fingers to get your own way.”

“I want…want my own way!” Nasta all but babbled.

Max shared a grin with Draco, then with Blaise.

“I think he’s going to cum if you carry on.” Draco pointed out.

“Isn’t that the point?” Blaise questioned. “He can cum more than once in one session, it’s not as if he needs to remain hard for any reason.”
That made Max laugh, as Nasta moaned helplessly.

“Well then, in that case, move over.”

Draco moved down by Nasta’s legs and he and Blaise started duelling over Nasta’s cock…with their tongues.

Max watched, transfixed for while, at the beautiful, if rather amusing sight, that the two of them made before he snapped out of it and went back to stretching and preparing Nasta. He touched the prostate, and he started teasing it, trying to get the little bundle of nerves as sensitive as he could, building up Nasta’s pleasure ready for the main event.

“Please.” Nasta begged breathily. “Please. Os gwelwch yn dda.” He pleaded, losing his language barrier as he was ignored.

“Oh, dearest, we can’t understand Welsh, I suppose we’ll just have to carry on.” Max teased.

“Oh, he’s definitely had enough.” Blaise chuckled darkly, watching as Draco licked at Nasta.

“Who wants him first?” Max asked with a wicked grin.

“I do.” Draco said, shifting up and laying himself over Nasta.

“Hmmm, I guess you’re stuck with me, Blaise. Do you want to top or bottom?”

“As if you need to ask.” Blaise laughed, reaching out to wrap an arm around Max’s neck and letting himself fall backwards on the bed, pulling Max on top of him. “Just let me lie where I can see Draco fucking Nasta.”

“I want to see that beautiful sight too, so we’ll make sure of it, lover.” Max said, doing just that and shifting Blaise’s body so that they both had a better view of Draco teasing Nasta some more with his own fingers, but Max had been very thorough, and after just the merest probe of his fingers Draco was grabbing the bottle of lube to slick himself up.

“Pass that lube here.” Blaise demanded, holding his hand out to Draco, who passed it over with his free hand, while the other stroked over himself.

“Oh, are you going to do that yourself?” Max purred.

“I saw what you did to Nasta, you’re damn right I’m doing it myself.” Blaise laughed, covering his fingers and pressing them to himself to stretch himself quickly and efficiently.

“But I like teasing you all.” Max said, exaggerating a pout.

The two of them were distracted by a breathy moan, and another beg of ‘please’ from Nasta, in Welsh of course.

They watched as Draco flexed his hips forward and seated himself fully in Nasta, who had wrapped those long, powerful legs around Draco’s back and was squeezing him tight to keep him in place.

“Do that to me.” Blaise insisted.

Max looked back to Blaise, to find him with two fingers already buried inside himself.

“You’ve been busy, love.” He growled, incredibly turned on from the sight.

“I want you, now.” Blaise commanded.

“Move your hand out of the way, then.” Max coaxed, taking the lube for himself.

He did what Draco had done, and he tested Blaise himself, with his fingers, just to check that he was truly ready, and wasn’t thinking ahead of himself.

“Max!” Blaise moaned.
“I know, I’m just testing, lover.” Max soothed.

A few strokes of his fingers, and watching Draco drive Nasta into wild abandon, and Max could barely hold onto his self-control.

He pulled his fingers free and quickly replaced them with his cock, sliding into Blaise and holding still for a moment, resting his head on the mattress beside Blaise’s head.

Blaise of course was not happy with this, and he bucked his hips and wrapped his legs around Max’s lower back, arms wrapped around his neck, nails biting into his shoulders and he tried to move himself on Max.

Max growled and took charge, pulling back and breaking Blaise’s hold around his neck, sitting up and leaving Blaise flat on his back on the bed.

“Now, now, lover. Let me.” He said with a smile, his voice deep and gruff with arousal.

Blaise let out a part moan, part whimper, as Max gripped his hips and simultaneously used his hold to pin Blaise down and pull him harder onto his cock.

The room felt too hot, filled with the moans of all four of them, but it was Nasta who could be heard the most, as he moaned and growled for Draco. Despite starting first, it was Blaise who reached orgasm first and Max eased out of him, still hard, and petted his lover, calming him down as they both watched Draco bring Nasta to a screaming orgasm.

“Damn, if we had filmed that then we’d be millionaires by this time next year.”

Max snorted and gave Blaise a kiss.

“Don’t cut things short, Blaise. It’s not over yet.”

Max moved Draco out of the way and nudged him over to Blaise before placing his hands on either side of Nasta’s head.

“Hello there, lover.” He purred, looking down at Nasta, watching as his chest heaved and he fought for breath. He’d cummed all over his own belly and Max’s dick gave a twitch of interest to see it.
“Max.” Nasta murmured, reaching up for him.

Max bent to kiss him, pressing their bodies together and slipping his arm under Nasta’s neck to get a deeper kiss.

“I love you.” Max declared. “Happy birthday.”

Nasta blinked confusedly, as if he’d forgotten what all of this was for.

“I love you too.” Nasta said, giving him a smile. “But for the love of Merlin, come here, right now, because I’m far too wound up and those two are about to drop off to sleep.”

“Am not, I’m watching.” Blaise insisted.

Max gave a look to Blaise and Draco. They were both watching, but Nasta was right in a way, they both looked sleepily content now that they’d both had an orgasm.

“I’ll make this quick then, lover, but I’ll also make it worth your while.”

Truthfully though, Max doubted that he could last very long, as he was the only one who hadn’t had an orgasm, but he wanted to make sure that Nasta was especially spoiled tonight.

He kissed up Nasta’s chest, up his throat to his chin, he nuzzled a little at the stubble there, smiling to himself at the scratch of it. Nasta arched up to connect their lips together and Max kissed him, passionate and deep.

Max stroked his hand over Nasta’s face and into his hair, cupping the back of his head.

“Max, don’t tease any more, you’re as bad as Harry sometimes.” Nasta told him, his voice breathless as he panted hard.

Max grinned. “Nothing is as much as a tease as Harry wearing a skirt.”

“You’re getting close.” Nasta deadpanned, shifting his legs and wrapping them around Max’s hips. “Now for the love of Merlin, fuck me.”
“I love it when you get all demanding on me.” Max growled, bending to kiss Nasta again while shifting his hips and pressing himself into Nasta.

Nasta was very demanding, and very silent, only the slightest groans were audible, as he took control and tried to fuck himself on Max.

“You’re killing me, Nas, stay still a moment.” Max panted, trying to hold Nasta still, but their top dominant was big, muscled and fucking strong.

“Max, I swear if you don’t move I’m turning the tables and I’ll fuck you into the mattress…or maybe that’s what you truly want?” Nasta told him.

“No, I want to spoil you.” Max declared.

“You’re doing a poor job, Caru.”

“Oh, ow. Insulting my male prowess too? Damn you’ve gotten so bitchy lately, lover.”

“Only when you have your cock in my arse and refuse to do anything with it!” Nasta complained.

Max said nothing, but he pulled out and slammed back into Nasta…hard. He got to see Nasta’s eyes roll up into his head and his body go boneless in pleasure, a grunt ripped from his throat.

He refused to stop, or let up. He’d wanted to go a little slower, to savour this moment, to spoil Nasta, but if that wasn’t what Nasta wanted then he would happily indulge him in some hard, rough, dirty sex. That seemed to be more to Nasta’s tastes tonight, as he clung to Max’s shoulders and actually trembled.

Max tried to think of when they’d last indulged Nasta like this, when they’d last let him put down the mantel of top dominant and just took care of him for once. He couldn’t remember and he felt terrible. Nasta liked bottoming during sex, perhaps not as much as Blaise did, but it was something that he enjoyed, giving up all control to others and just experiencing the feelings and sensations. It had been too long since they’d last done something like this for him and Max staved off his own throbbing need, his own desire for an orgasm and he did what Nasta wanted him to do. He fucked him, hard.

His fists were clenched beside Nasta’s head, his legs were trembling, his muscles screaming, but Max grit his teeth and pushed himself harder, faster, Nasta clinging to him like a limpet.
“Max!” Nasta yelled out, his back bowing and his nails digging in deep. They had already bitten into his skin, he could feel the pinch of pain, and he repaid Nasta in kind by biting through his shoulder when his own orgasm hit him and knocked him sideways.

Max couldn’t control his own body, and he was shivering and trembling, laying on Nasta and listening to the thundering heartbeat under his ear. Nasta was trembling too, his chest heaving as he tried to remember how to breathe.

“Why didn’t I get any of that treatment?” Blaise whined.

“It wasn’t your birthday.” Max said tiredly. All of a sudden he felt like he could sleep for a week.

“You better treat me like that on my birthday!” Blaise declared. “I think I broke my dick with how hard I was rubbing it.”

Max picked up his head then, looking at Blaise and Draco. They’d both cummed recently.

“You both got off on that?”

“Are you seriously asking that? Of course we did!” Draco told him. “That was something else. You’ll have to repeat that performance, Harry will never believe us.”

Nasta laughed tiredly and shifted a little, easing out from under Max. Max gave him credit for being able to move, because he certainly couldn’t.

A moment later Nasta hissed and pressed a hand to his lower back. Max laughed softly, it seemed that Nasta couldn’t move as well as he had believed.

“Oh, shut up, Max.” Nasta scolded, but he was smiling. “If I have to waddle tomorrow, I swear I’ll give back twice as good.”

“Promises, promises.” Max said, but he was almost completely cut off by a massive, jaw-breaking yawn. “So tired now.”
“Hold on.” Draco rolled and got his wand from the bedside table, and a moment later there was a slight sweep of magic and they were all clean.

“Urgh, you know my Dracken hates sleeping in magic residue.” Blaise complained.

“Tell him to suck it up for tonight, none of us want to move.” Draco replied, shoving Blaise over, up against Max’s back, before settling down behind him.

Nasta snuggled in against Max’s front and he smiled at his lover, reaching out to stroke away a piece of hair that was stuck to Nasta’s forehead and halfway over his eye.

“Happy birthday, Nasta. I love you.”

“I love you too.” Nasta replied. “I love all of you, but we really need the sleep now, we have to be up in four hours for the kids.”

They all groaned at that and Nasta chuckled tiredly.

“We’ll have to have some stern words with Harry about giving birth in the middle of the night.” Max joked.

Nasta yawned widely, and it set the rest of them off in a chain reaction. They settled down, finding comfortable positions, and arms were wrapped around warm bodies. They drifted on the edge of sleep, each thinking of the day to come, of the birthday to be celebrated, and now the birth that had to be celebrated too. They had a brand new son in the world, nothing seemed to be amiss, so they had even more reason to celebrate and be happy. The New Year had gotten off to a very good start for all of them.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Nasta was enjoying his birthday thus far. He’d gotten everything that he’d wanted, and much more than he’d been expecting from his family. Even the extended family had given him gifts, the Maddisons, the Malfoys, and Marianna too. He felt very spoilt, but his mind kept wandering back to Harry, and their newborn son.
He had done his duty, not that it felt like a duty to him, and he’d gone down to Harry’s nest, as quietly and as non-invasively as he could to remove everything that Harry had thrown out, including blankets, towels, the empty flask of blood (which was now ruined as Harry had seemingly pushed a claw through it to drink the contents instead of opening the top as usual), and the placenta.

He’d gotten rid of everything except the placenta, which he took back to the house to check over, making sure it was intact and checking how much it weighed for Healer Almus.

Harry had been silent during this time, but he’d heard the baby making soft suckling noises, clearly feeding, and he’d heard a small burp before he’d left. All very, very good signs and he’d made sure to tell Draco, Blaise and Max what he’d heard too once he’d gotten back to the house. Though the urge to tell Harry that he loved him in that moment had been incredibly strong, but he’d resisted. Harry wouldn’t understand him and it would likely only rile him up, or distress him, in his feral state and Nasta didn’t want that, so he’d bitten his tongue and left quickly.

His own birthday party was a very mellow affair, as the last thing he wanted was to rile the kids back up when they were already missing Harry so much, but having their favourite aunts, uncles and grandparents around was helping to distract them…all of them except Leolin that was, who was clutching his Ma doll, and the blanket that had long since stopped smelling like Harry, in tightly clenched fists, refusing to allow anyone to touch him or pick him up.

He was lying in his bouncer, reclining back, glaring at everyone around him, clutching his comfort toys and he screamed when anyone approached him. It was a new development for Leolin, just not one that they particularly liked.

“Have you had a good birthday?” His Father asked him.

Nasta smiled. “I’ve been very spoilt.”

“You get to share your birthday now too.” Aneirin teased.

“I don’t mind so much. I’m forty today, I don’t need everyone’s attention on me, all the time, to feel like I’ve had a good birthday. You know me, I much prefer to let others take the spotlight.”

He nodded to Max, who was on his hands and knees, four kids hanging off of him while he pretended to be some wild animal that they were apparently trying to bring down. It involved a lot of noise and screeching.

“Max is certainly one of a kind.” Aneirin chuckled.

“That’s why the kids all love him.”
They were all interrupted by a thud and a slam.

“That was the back door.” Nasta said with a frown. “Is everyone here?”

He and his mates automatically counted their children, even as the submissives pulled back and the dominants all stepped forward.

A small, questioning call came from the kitchen and Nasta felt his heart stop.

“Harry?” He called out, stepping forward, hardly daring to breathe, or believe it. Harry had only given birth that morning, unless something was very wrong with him, or the baby, then he shouldn’t have left his nest for a few more days, at the very least. But that had definitely been Harry’s call, it hadn’t been distressed, just questioning, asking them where they were.

Harry padded into the family room, in full Dracken form, completely naked and uncaring, covered in dried blood, cradling a blanket wrapped bundle in his arms. He was very pale, very tired and sickly looking, and the caesarean scar was thick, puckered and an angry shade of red. Harry had not been ready, or recovered enough to come out of his nest. Which just begged the question of why had he come out so very early?

Harry cocked his head, rather bird-like, as he stared at the people in the room. He inhaled deep enough for it to be visible and audible. His top lip lifted away from his top teeth in a snarl, as he growled deeply in his chest and flashed his fangs.

Everyone who wasn’t a mate immediately stepped back and sat down, making themselves more non-threatening. Typically the humans of the family were moved further back than the Drackens, but that was just common sense.

Nasta stepped forward and those narrowed, green eyes pinned back to him. Harry inhaled again and then stepped forward. He held out the baby to him and Nasta took him, wondering if anything was wrong, if the baby was sick.

“Ha…happy…happy day.” Harry croaked out, trying to force himself to speak when his Dracken side was fully in control. That would have taken some serious control on Harry’s part too, forcing his feral Dracken to speak.

“He’s come out of his nest just to give you your present, Nas.” Max grinned, then laughed.

Harry turned to him. “Ma…Ma-ax.”
“Hey, lover. What are you doing up and about?” He asked, knowing that Harry wouldn’t understand.

His mate just blinked at him, looking adorably befuddled.

“Mummy!”

Harry blinked again, but something in him automatically recognised his babies and he fell to his knees and gathered them all up, as many as he could fit in his arms, and he snuggled them. He inhaled all of their scents, rubbed his face all over them, before pulling back to visibly assess them, his hands, still dangerously clawed, touched little heads, faces and bodies.

“Come here, you can’t parade around like this.” Draco said, tugging off his own jumper and putting it on Harry. It was overlarge, hitting Harry at just above the knee and it covered him perfectly.

Harry however had other ideas and he stared at the jumper covering his body as if it were made of shit, rolling his shoulders and moving in a way that announced just how very uncomfortable he was with wearing it. He shucked it off over his head quickly and tucked his elbows into his chest, curling up his fingers as if he’d touched the most horrendous of things.

“Try a blanket instead of clothes, which will make him feel trapped.” Myron suggested lightly from across the room, sat in front of his human daughters like a living shield.

Blaise went to get the throw from the other room, even as Harry hunched back down to snuggle his children. He would have been extremely embarrassed to be striding around naked in front of their extended family if he’d been in his right mind, but he wasn’t in his right mind, or rather he wasn’t in his human mind, because he’d come out of his nest far too early and he was still most definitely entrenched in his Dracken instincts.

Harry accepted the throw around him, paying more attention to his babies, but he wasn’t concerned with holding it closed, so it did little to give him any more modesty. It seemed to be stressing Draco out, but unless he wanted the tables turned on him, and to feel a claw in his gut, he would have to suck it up, because Harry was still almost fully feral.

“Ma! Ma! Ma!” Leolin screamed from his bouncer, trying to sit up, squirming, thrashing his limbs, trying to gain his Mother’s attention, but Harry didn’t understand words and he did not turn towards Leolin, who was now crying and flailing as much as he could manage.
A small, shrill wail made all of them still, and look in shock to Leolin, who had just let out a Dracken distress call.

Harry’s head snapped up and he lurched towards Leolin so fast that his arms went from under him. He fell flat on the floor, and having only given birth that morning it had to have been absolute agony for him, but Harry used his feet to keep moving forward, even as he got his hands back under him and he crawled to Leolin in an instinctual need to protect his distressed child.

He couldn’t figure out how to work the straps holding Leolin secure to the bouncer, so as any Dracken would do Harry severed them with a swipe of a claw and picked Leolin up, cradling him tightly to his chest and Leolin, who had settled the moment he’d been picked up, snuffled his face into Harry’s dirty, bloody, neck.

“Have any of them ever distress called before?” Aneirin asked them, breaking the shocked silence.

“No, none of them.” Max said, touching the other kids to reassure them that everything was alright after hearing the distress call of a sibling.

Regan lifted his arms, wanting more than a touch to comfort him and Max picked him up and cuddled him tightly.

“Harry!” Nasta called out, trying to get his attention through noise. It worked and Harry turned, looking at him.

Nasta indicated the baby in his arms. “Is he okay?”

“Bay…baby.” Harry said carefully, slowly.

Harry carried Leolin over and lifted the corner of the blanket to look at the baby sleeping peacefully inside.

“Baby.” He repeated, looking at Nasta.

“Is the baby alright?” Nasta tried.
Harry blinked at him, and the foreign look of incomprehension on his face unnerved Nasta a little.

“Does he need to feed?” Nasta tried.

“He doesn’t understand, Nassa.” Sanex pointed out. “Surely he’d be more concerned if anything was wrong though.”

“He would be.” Myron agreed. “Perhaps we should leave and give them their privacy. Harry will not be coming out of his feral state for a few more hours, and all of us being here will delay his human side coming back.”

“I’ve got him.” Max said. “You go when I have him in the bathroom.”

“He won’t like it.” Draco fretted.

“I’m not going to headlock him there, lover. Being feral, he’s running on animal brain cells, not human. It’s easy to trick a feral Dracken.”

Max stood up and he went to Harry, who looked at him expectantly. Max held out his hand and Harry took it immediately and allowed Max to pull him from the room easily, Leolin still up on his shoulder.

“Well, that really was easy!” Caesar laughed. “I need to try that.”

“Don’t waste time, go.” Nasta insisted. “We’ll settle him down, and the new baby, and you can come back for a proper visit.”

“Can we at least see his face?” Amelle asked. “Or do you think Harry wouldn’t like it?”

“I’m sure he’d be fine with it.” Nasta insisted, cradling the baby more securely and pulling the blanket from the baby’s face.

Everyone got a quick peek at the baby before hurrying to the floo in the next room. Nasta thanked them all for coming, as they had been here for his birthday after all, and very soon they were alone again in their home.

“So that was incredibly unexpected.” Blaise said, shaking his head. “Only Harry would have crashed your birthday party, hours after giving birth, to give you your present in person.”

“He literally forced himself to come here in full feral mode just to make it for your birthday.” Draco agreed.

“That’s why I love him.” Nasta said softly, looking down at the baby in his arms, clocking the tiny features and the damp, dark hair. “Our little boy is finally here.”

“Is he actually a boy?” Blaise chuckled.

That made Nasta blink and he laughed. “We should check, just to make it official.” He said.

He sat on the settee and laid the baby on his lap, worming the little limbs free of the blanket Harry had had him in. He eased the nappy away from a little leg and peeked up to check.

“No, he’s definitely a boy.” Nasta said with a smile, covering the baby back over.

“He’s a big boy.” Draco said, sitting next to Nasta and looking at the new baby.

“He’s at least eight pounds, maybe more.” Nasta said, considering the weight in his arms. “Double what any of our others have been.”

Max came back in, pulling Harry’s hand. Harry who looked a bit rumpled and put out, but he was a little cleaner. The blood and dirt had gone from his neck at least.

Harry immediately scanned the room, then inhaled as deeply as he could. They could see his chest expanding as he searched for the people who had been here.

“He, they’re gone, my love.” Nasta said gently.
“Love.” Harry immediately repeated, smiling. “My mate.”

Harry came to him and kissed him, before hunching down, still very naked, and he nuzzled the baby.

“Baby.”

“Let me have a hold, Nas!” Max complained.

“Here.” Nasta said, moving to hand the baby over.

“No!” Harry screeched, blocking the transfer and giving the baby a not so gentle shove back at Nasta. “No. Baby here. Happy day!”

“I guess Harry doesn’t like that idea just yet.” Draco said. “Let me get us tea.”

Harry was sat on the floor, scowling at him, and Nasta gave him a reassuring smile. Harry gave a tentative smile back, and rested his head on Nasta’s thigh. He gave a jaw breaking yawn and Nasta wanted to rush him to bed and tuck him up, he’d come out of his nest much too early.

He held the baby safely in his one arm and used the other hand to stroke over Harry’s head. His hair was greasy and knotty, plastered all over his head and matted with smears of dried blood, but Nasta didn’t care, he carried on touching his submissive, and Harry started purring. Nasta loved it when Harry purred, feral or human, because it was actual proof that Harry was happy and contented.

Draco came back into the room with four cups of tea, two being held in each hand, and he put them on the coffee table.

“Is he going to be okay?” He asked Nasta.

“Harry will be fine. He’s come out too soon and he needs to rest and he needs time to come back into himself. It could take another hour, or it could be another few days, like if he was still in his nest, I don’t know, but he’ll be just fine.”

“I know he won’t eat or drink just yet, but is there anything we can get for him?” Draco fretted, even as he cradled his cup of tea in his hands.
“No, once he goes into labour, all function stops.” Max agreed. “That’ll come back a few days after his human self comes back.”

“Mummy, play with me.” Braiden insisted.

“Braiden, Mummy needs to rest.” Nasta tried, but Harry turned immediately to his clamouring child and despite the pain it must have caused, he picked up their two year old and sat him on his lap.

“Mummy, play!” Braiden encouraged, handing Harry a toy car.

Braiden didn’t seem to care that Harry was half asleep and not playing with him, as Harry rolled the car between his fingers, but then the kids were just happy to have him home, as their two girls came to lay on him and Leolin seemed to be asleep, his little fists clenched in the hair at the back of Harry’s head to stop anyone from moving him from his beloved Ma.

Harry nudged Nasta’s hand with his head and he realised that he’d stopped stroking his hair. He smiled down at Harry and resumed his stroking, and Harry started purring again, very deeply.

The kids were hell to put to bed, and as Harry sat purring next to Nasta, who was feeding the baby because Harry wouldn’t let him pass the newborn off to anyone else, it was up to Max, Draco and Blaise to sort out the screaming, unhappy horde upstairs. Leolin had refused to be passed to anyone else, and he’d fallen asleep on Harry, and only then could he be removed from Harry to his own cot.

Harry was drifting in and out of sleep, and he had been all afternoon, but that couldn’t be held against him. Nasta threw an arm around Harry and pulled him in close, taking this quiet moment to feel thankful that Harry and the baby were both completely fine.

“Mate.” Harry murmured, his green eyes looking up at him.

“My mate.” Nasta murmured back, nuzzling Harry’s face.

“Baby. Happy day.”

“Thank you, my love, for the best present in the world.”

“Baby, for happy day.” Harry repeated seriously.
Nasta blinked, as he realised that Harry wasn’t repeating the same thing because it was all that he could say. He was trying, very hard at that, to communicate with him, trying to tell him something else, and Nasta tried to decipher it.

“What are you trying to tell me, love?” He asked, staring at Harry.

Harry’s eyes dropped to the baby. “Baby, for happy day.” He said, lifting his eyes back to Nasta and Nasta frowned, looking at the baby, and his eyes caught Harry’s hand, rubbing over the black hair of the baby, before Harry reached up to touch Nasta’s hair, smiling.

Nasta’s heart thudded, as he realised what Harry was trying to convey. He reached up to his own hair and caught Harry’s hand, bringing it to his mouth to kiss.

“He’s my baby, isn’t he?”

Harry grinned, showing off all four fangs. “Baby for happy day!” He said excitedly.

“You gave birth to my baby, on my birthday.” Nasta chuckled, finally understanding the semi-legible gibberish that Harry had been sprouting all afternoon.

“Mate. Baby. Happy day.” Harry smiled.

“I love you.”

“Love mate.” Harry replied, tucking back into his side and laying his head over Nasta’s heart.

“Get some rest, you need to rest.”

Harry fell asleep on him while they were waiting for the others to come back down and Nasta savoured this moment of rare peace.
“How are they doing?” Max whispered.

“Both sleeping. Our little boy took his bottle and drifted off, and Harry was only forcing himself to stay awake because we weren’t understanding what he was trying to tell us. Or rather what he was trying to tell me.”

“All he was saying was that he’d had the baby for your birthday.” Max said, his eyebrows lowering in confusion.

“That’s what we thought he was saying. Our little thunderer is mine biologically.”

Max blinked, then grinned, and then he stifled a laugh. “He gave birth, to your son, on your birthday. That’s so extra it’s adorable. But I told you I was fucking right all along, all that fruit he was eating, it had to be your baby!”

“Eating fruit isn’t an indication of paternity.” Nasta repeated, for what felt like the millionth time in the last few months.

“Only it was.” Max giggled.

Nasta rolled his eyes in exasperation, but he smiled too. Max reached down to gently touch the newborn and Nasta watched him as he smiled and went all gooey eyed over the baby. It made his own heart throb with love.

“We’ve never gotten to see a baby on their first day of life before.” Max said quietly. “Even the quintuplets were the next morning, and only then because of Leolin.”

“He wanted to come and give me my present in person.” Nasta chuckled.

Max chuckled with him and dropped a kiss to his head. “Happy birthday, Nas. Do you think that now we’ve finally understood what he was trying to say, and he’s fast asleep, that I can hold our new son for a bit?”

Nasta smiled at Max, then at the baby in his arms.
“Here, Max.” He said, gently passing the baby over.

Max cradled him happily. “Hey, I finally get to hold you little thunderer. Time to see if you’re as much of a squirming worm as you were in your poor Mummy!”

Nasta snorted, but tried to stifle himself for Harry’s sake.

“He’s barely moved at all.”

“Oh, you’re so naughty already!” Max teased, nuzzling the baby gently, just barely brushing his nose along the little face.

“I’m going to carry Harry up to bed, will you be alright for a minute?”

“Sure. Our thunderer is going to need a nappy change soon, then I’ll make us some tea and floo call the anxious family. They’ll want some more news, even if there isn’t much we can tell them, only that our little bolt of joy is yours.”

“I can’t wait to see him in his thunderbolt bassinet.” Nasta chuckled, even as he carefully stood, with a soothing rumble to Harry to keep him asleep. The furrow in Harry’s brow eased immediately as he heard his top dominant’s rumble and when he was picked up he merely snuggled in happily.

Max sat in Nasta’s vacated seat and he got a good look at the new baby boy they had welcomed into the family. He was very sweet looking, with a top lip that was curled upwards into the tiniest pout Max had ever seen and long, jet black lashes that looked much too long were fluttering.

Max held his breath as cornflower blue eyes blinked open to stare up at him. He had a moment of staring into those bottomless blue eyes before they closed again and that perfect face screwed up in discomfort. The little wail built up to a full out scream and the baby in his arms came to life, squirming and stretching out all four limbs, toes pointed, fingers clenching.

“Here’s the squirmy little bug that Mummy complained about, if you were stretching like this inside him then it’s no wonder he was always so uncomfortable!” Max said, even as he got onto his knees and pulled out a changing mat from under the settee. “Let’s get you changed, thunderer.”
“How is he?” Blaise asked, hurrying to him and falling to his knees to watch as Max changed the new baby.

“Look at him!” Max laughed, watching the baby wriggle and squirm as much as his newborn body allowed him. “Poor Harry.”

Max finished changing the baby and handed him to Blaise.

“Do you think we could bathe him now that he’s awake?” Blaise asked Max.

“Sure, just a quick rub down with cotton balls though, Blaise, he needs his rest. He was only born today.”

Blaise followed him into the kitchen and as Max set the kettle to boil, Blaise carefully run a bit of warm water in the sink and stripped the baby off, right after Max had just changed him. Max rolled his eyes, but said nothing. He didn’t care that much, he just placed a clean, fluffy towel over the counter next to the sink for the baby to lie on.

He made four cups of tea and stood, hip cocked against the counter, watching Blaise wash the baby with a bag of cotton wool balls.

“The cord looks good.” Blaise told him.

Max nodded. He’d already checked it when he’d changed the baby. He watched as Blaise dipped another cotton ball and dabbed gently around the base of the cord, cleaning carefully.

“Oh, you’re bathing him.” Draco announced as he came into the kitchen. He went to immediately hang over Blaise’s shoulder, wrapping his arms around Blaise’s waist and looking at the squirming baby. “He doesn’t like that.” He chuckled.

“Told you he wouldn’t like anything that wasn’t being nice and snug in Harry’s body.” Max couldn’t help but joke.

“Harry’s out like a light.” Draco said. “Nasta has bundled him up in the bed, making him a little nest to keep him comfortable, as he should really still be in his nest.”
“Harry wanted to surprise our lover. Thunderer is his.”

“How do you know?” Blaise asked distractedly.

“That’s what Harry was trying to tell us and why he wouldn’t let anyone else touch the baby until we understood. He gave birth to Nasta’s baby on Nasta’s birthday.” Max chuckled again.

“Harry always did like going the extra mile.” Draco laughed.

“There, all clean.” Blaise declared, finishing up with their baby’s genital area and throwing the cotton ball. “Now to cuddle him dry. Draco, do you want to do that part?”

“Of course.”

Draco moved to wrap the fluffy towel around the discomforted baby and picked him up, holding him, all wrapped up in the warm towel, in his big arms.

“Go and sit down, lover. I’ll get your tea for you.” Max smiled.

“Thank you.” Draco said, but he came to him for a kiss first, which Max took from a simple, chaste affair to something more passionate, before swatting Draco’s arse and sending him to the living room.

“Where’s mine?” Blaise demanded, standing in front of Max.

“I don’t know what you mean.” Max teased.

“Max!” Blaise complained.

“What’s happened?” Nasta asked, coming into the kitchen. “Where is the baby?”
“Draco has him in the living room.” Max explained.

“So what’s going on out here?”

“Max refuses to give me a kiss, Nas!”

“Oh, well we can’t be having that.” Nasta said, coming forward and winding his arms around Blaise. “Will I do as a replacement, Cariad?”

“Yes.” Blaise said breathlessly.

Nasta dipped his head, hovering his lips over Blaise’s teasingly, making his mate stretch up to him to connect their mouths together.

Huge arms banded around them both and Max squeezed them tight.

“I was only joking, I would have kissed him!” Max whined.

“Too late now.” Blaise insisted.

“No.” Max complained, kissing all over Blaise’s neck and shoulder.

Blaise laughed and turned to get a proper kiss, reaching up to hold Max’s head in place.

“Nasta, me too.” Max whined at him, and Nasta laughed, reaching forward and pulling Max into a kiss.

“Get the tea, Caru.” Nasta said softly. “Harry is asleep, and will hopefully remain that way, so we have an evening together, with the new baby, so that we can each bond with him.”

“You’ve done enough bonding with him!” Blaise teased. “It’s our turn now.”
“By all means, take all night.” Nasta teased right back.

Max laughed happily at the banter, even as he picked up the cups of tea and moved to the living room. Draco was sitting quietly, murmuring softly to the baby, who had been dressed once again, but in a different outfit, as the one that Harry had put him in had been a bit grubby from being underground in his nest.

“How is he?” Max asked, placing Draco’s tea on the table.

“Sleeping again, now that he’s clean, dry and warm.”

“Make sure you put him in scratch mitts before bed, we don’t need another baby to try and gouge out his own eyes, Calix was enough.” Max warned.

“I will, I left them by here.” Draco said, turning and picking up the scratch mitts from the seat next to him and putting them on the table, next to his tea.

“I just can’t believe he’s finally here.” Blaise said, sitting right next to Draco and looking at their baby.

“We’ll get an early night, tonight. Harry and the baby will need us, and we didn’t get much sleep last night, we weren’t expecting them to come out so soon.” Nasta said.

“We were busy sexing you up.” Max laughed.

Nasta hummed, giving Max a smug look. “Hence why we need the early night, seeing as Harry decided to come celebrate my birthday with a newborn.”

“We don’t even know the baby’s schedule.” Draco despaired.

“Oh, we’ll figure that out soon enough, I’m sure.” Max chuckled.
“He’s new born, so he should be feeding roughly every two hours, but no later than every three hours. He took two ounces in his last feed, so we’ll see now what time he wakes up for his next feed.” Nasta said, before taking a sip of tea.

“Oh, I need to sort him out a food diary.” Max said. “He’s already had a feed here.”

Max was up and gone before anyone could say to leave it until the morning, and he came back with a plain blue exercise book that they’d bought in bulk for cheap. He sat down with a pencil, a quill and a pot of black ink and he set the book up to be the baby’s food diary.

“He took two ounces of milk for his first feed here at quarter past six in the evening,” Max spoke aloud as he wrote. “He was here at four in the afternoon, so either he’s on a longer schedule than two hours, or Harry had just fed him before coming to show him to us.”

“So if he wakes for a feed at around eight, then he’s two hourly, but if it’s closer to nine, then he’s three hourly?” Blaise questioned.

“That’s right.” Max said, inputting information. “Now, do we all remember how to handle the newborn diaries?”

“No matter how tired we are, always document feeds.” Blaise intoned dutifully, as he suspected that it was for his benefit anyway, considering he was the only one who had had memory altering head injury.

“Yep. We never found out where those missing rusks went, but it hasn’t happened again, not in the last few weeks.”

Blaise blinked, and then frowned. “Did anyone ask Harry if he was the one eating them?”

“Why would Harry eat them?” Draco asked.

“He’s been nibbling a lot, and you said yourself that it was the work of a nibbler, only a few of them were going missing at a time. He might not have fancied a full meal, or anything as rich as the biscuits we have, so he’s been eating the low sugar baby biscuits and that’s why they haven’t been documented in the baby diaries.” Blaise pointed out.
Max groaned and threw himself back into his seat. “Of course that’s what’s happened! I can’t believe I blamed poor Farren!”

“We’ll ask him in the morning, if he’s back to himself, just to confirm that he was the one eating them.” Nasta said, smirking at Max’s theatrics. “Until then, we have a newborn baby to watch over, and about two hours to kill before we go up to bed for an early night.”

“I think that new film is about two hours long.” Max said thoughtfully.

Max hummed, and went to the TV to pick up the film they’d been meaning to watch, but hadn’t gotten around to yet. “Yeah, it’s two hours and sixteen minutes long. You fancy it, lovers?”

“Yeah, put it on, Max, I’ll get us some drinks and snacks.” Nasta said. “Keep it low, though.”

“Of course, none of us want to disturb our little thunderer.” Max chuckled, finding the right remote to control the TV.

It was nice, to snuggle on the same settee with one another, watching a film they’d wanted to see for a while now, with their newborn baby in their midst who was sleeping peacefully.

The film ended without incident and still the baby hadn’t woken up for his next feed, so they stood, and stretched, and Nasta, who had his son back in his arms, checked on him to make sure he was alright.

“Does he need anything? A nappy change maybe? Calix always slept through a wet nappy too.” Draco pointed out.

Nasta checked, but he shook his head. “No, he’s fine.”

“I’ll make him up a bottle, if he doesn’t wake for it himself in the next twenty minutes or so, then we could wake him up and see if he’ll be tempted. I don’t want to leave him more than four hours without a feed.” Max said worriedly.
In the end they didn’t need to wake the baby, as just five minutes from the deadline they had set, he started squirming, a wail building in his throat as he screwed up his little face.

“Oh, there we go.” Max said, sighing in relief, as he tested the bottle which had been cooling naturally, and then handed it over to Nasta.

“So he’s three and a half hourly. That’s actually really good for a newborn.” Draco pointed out, as the four of them all watched as the baby latched immediately onto the bottle teat and started feeding.

“He’s a big baby, he’s feeding very well, so he will stay down for longer, but three and a half hours is really good. We’ve ended up lucky with this baby.” Blaise laughed.

“We’ll get him fed now, he should need a fresh nappy soon, and then we can get ourselves up to bed. Harry hasn’t called, so I assume that he’s still asleep, which is also a good sign. We’ll see then what happens tomorrow, but I do hope that the extended interaction that Harry had this afternoon, and the fact that he forced himself to actually speak, will have fast forwarded his human mind-set.” Nasta said, watching his son feed with his eyes closed.

“He actually looks a little bit like a chubbier Leolin like that.” Blaise pointed out.

“He does.” Max agreed. “I was just about to say that he reminds me of Leolin. Minus those gold and white wings, of course.”

“It’s unlikely that we’ll get another Faerie child.” Nasta said distractedly. “Harry and I are both Drackens. It was a miracle that we even got Leolin in the first place.”

“Never say never, lover.” Max warned. “You never thought you’d have Leolin in the first place, and now that you’ve got one, a second one might not be as much of a stretch as you first thought.”

“We’ll cross that bridge if we ever get to it again. Our thunderer is not a Faerie.” Nasta said.

No one said anything after that, and they lapsed into silence, watching as the baby fed. Once the bottle was finished, Nasta winded him over his shoulder and then the living room was cleaned up, the doors and windows were checked, and the four of them headed up to bed.
As they were getting changed and washed, quietly of course, out of respect for their softly snoring submissive mate, the baby wet his nappy and was changed quickly and easily, before he was settled in his fresh bassinet for the first time. He looked impossibly tiny in the large space, with his feet to the bottom and a thunderbolt emblazoned blanket folded over his waist.

“I need to get a snap of that.” Blaise chuckled quietly, going back downstairs to find a camera.

They were enamoured of the baby, and they couldn’t stop staring at him, but all too soon he would be awake again for another feed, the timer had already started counting down for the next three and a half hour feed, and they needed to be ready.

“I’ll take the first night.” Nasta said.

“Just because he’s yours biologically.” Max teased.

Nasta snorted. “No, Cariad, because I’m top dominant.” He said. “But if you want to volunteer so badly then you can have tomorrow night.”

Max laughed and padded over to hug him. “I knew you loved me.”

“Go to sleep.” Nasta smiled, giving Max a kiss. “We’re going to need it.”

Which was a bit of an understatement, their newborn son woke all of them up at midnight, then again at one in the morning, then at half past three, then at quarter past four and at seven O’clock in the morning, when Nasta, who had been the one to force himself out of bed for every bout of crying to sort out the baby, decided to just take him downstairs and keep himself awake for the day. He made himself a very, very strong cup of coffee and tried to focus himself and make himself a bit more alert.

When the baby drifted back off to sleep, Nasta left him in his downstairs bassinet and went to douse himself in cold water, in a very bad imitation of a shower as all he did was soak his body for less than a minute, he didn’t even use shower gel or shampoo before he was getting out again, and using a quick spell to dry himself. He got dressed for the day and went upstairs to collect the other kids, who were all mostly awake, all of them except Farren and Leolin, who he carried downstairs anyway.

He knew that it would be a while before he was joined by any of his mates, so he gave the kids porridge for breakfast, about the only thing he trusted himself to make, and he added some sliced banana to it.

It was going to be a very long day for him, he would definitely be passing the baby over to one of his mates and going for a nap in the afternoon because there was no way that he could last the whole day without some form of sleep. He was tired now, and as he herded the fed, cleaned kids into the family room to play, Farren having of course woken up due to the noisy shouts of his siblings and being able to have his own breakfast, and Nasta collapsed onto the settee, the newborn in the bassinet beside him, and a still sleeping Leolin tucked up against his neck. He couldn’t bloody wait to go for that nap.

Harry was groggy and unsure of where he was when he woke up, and he peered around himself dazedly, trying to force his brain to wake up. It took him a moment, and several blinks, before he recognised his bedroom. That made him even more confused, as the last he remembered, he had been nesting. Had he dreamt that he’d nested?

He placed a hand on his belly, and found it half the size he had last remembered it. He immediately threw the duvet from himself and stood up, using the mattress as support. He tried to poke his brain into wakefulness. What had happened, and why couldn’t he remember it?

He stumbled to the bassinet, and found it empty of the baby he had apparently birthed, but what reassured him was that it was slept in, there was even a milk stain on the thunderbolt sheets. He breathed easier. His baby had been born and was apparently well, he just couldn’t really remember it for some reason. His mates would know why.

He left the bedroom and padded carefully down the stairs, gripping the bannister tight and taking each step one at a time. It was still uncomfortable, and slightly painful, but it wasn’t unbearable.

“Look, Draco, the Falmouth Falcons were slaughtered, five hundred and fifty points to thirty in their last match, their worst defeat in two hundred years.”

“I swear if you tell me this one more time, Max!”

“The Falmouth Falcons were humiliated in their record breaking loss to the Holyhead Harpies, as star Seeker, Vixie the Vixen, made a spectacular mid-air leap for the snitch before rolling safely across the grass, holding the snitch aloft. The Harpies, who only introduced Vixie to the squad this season, have not lost a single match since her debut and are clear favourites to win the League Cup this year.”

“I swear to Merlin, Max, if you don’t stop reading that article over and over I’m going to stuff it down your throat!”

Harry heard a loud, boisterous laugh and it made him smile. He was home, his mates were fine and well, nothing bad had happened if they were laughing and joking with one another, and presumably teasing Draco over his favourite Quidditch team apparently losing badly in their last match.

Harry inched slowly into the kitchen. Draco was sterilising bottles at the counter, and Max was sat with the Daily Prophet open on the table, their newborn baby held securely in one huge arm.

“Max.” Harry croaked out. “Draco.”

His mates both looked up, and what they were doing before was abandoned as they both hurried to him. It was Draco who picked him up and held him securely. Harry could only blink stupidly at the rapid shift in perspective.

He was carried into the family room, and Nasta and Blaise were sat there, with their eight other children playing on the floor happily, cartoons playing in the other room.

“Harry, are you okay?” Nasta asked, standing and taking him from Draco, turning and laying him down on the settee. “How are you feeling?”

“I don’t…don’t remember much, or how I got here. The baby, is he okay?”

“He’s absolutely fine, love.” Max said, crouching down and showing him the baby.

Harry sat up, ignoring his flapping mates, to look more closely at the baby, assessing him.

“We aren’t that bad at looking after the kids.” Max teased.

“It’s not that.” Harry said softly. “I don’t remember having him.”

“Sometimes it takes a while for your memory to come back.” Nasta soothed, laying a hand on Harry’s back to support him.

“How is your stomach?” Blaise asked.

“Sore.” Harry said simply.
“Here, one of you take the thunderer, I’ll sort Harry out with his needed potions.” Max said.

It was Blaise who took the baby and Harry smiled to see them all helping out. It pleased his Dracken greatly.

He was picked up again and taken back upstairs and to their large en suite.

“I put everything you’d need up here. I was expecting you to wake up and call for one of us, not struggle down those stairs all by yourself.” Max explained, sitting Harry on the counter and with a wave of his wand, the plug dropped and the taps came on. “Now, how sore are you, is it any sort of pain, or just an ache?”

Harry shook his head. “Just sore, like I’ve pulled a few muscles.”

“So no pain reliever just yet, but let me know immediately if you need one, okay?” Max told him, as he scooped out a handful of bath salts from a jar and sprinkled it from one end of the bath to the other before he picked up a vial of a muscle relaxant and tipped that into the running water.

Harry inhaled and he smelt lemons, and it made him smile. He liked the citrusy scents.

“Who dressed me?” He asked, plucking at the pyjamas he was wearing.

“Nasta took great care of you.” Max explained, shooting Harry a smile.

“How is the baby? Is he feeding well, has he had his first poo?”

“He’s wonderful, love. He is feeding well, and sleeping well too. He’s taking two ounces of milk every three to three and a half hours. He’s wetting nappies, but he hasn’t pooped yet. We’re still waiting for that.”

Harry nodded, taking in the information and committing it to memory.

“He was feeding well in the nest.” He said, as the words knocked loose a memory. “I wanted to come out early for some reason.” He frowned. “I don’t remember why, but I don’t think it was urgent, there was nothing wrong with me or the baby.”

“Nasta’s birthday.” Max reminded gently. “You wanted to give him his present in person.”

Harry’s eyes widened. “Yes! I remember that. I… I kept telling my Dracken that it was our mate’s birthday, and we went to see him with the baby. We were going to go back into our nest afterwards though.”

Max shook his head. “You fell asleep on Nasta and he carried you up to bed. He did make you a little nest in the bed though, to keep you comfortable. It must have worked because you’ve slept for two days.”

“Two days?!” Harry cried. “I haven’t bonded with my baby!”

“He’s fine, dearest. I swear. I promise you that he’s fine. I’m going to clean you up now, get you into fresh pyjamas, and then you can lay on the settee with the baby all day if you want to. You can bond with him and he will know your voice, your heartbeat. Everything is going to be just fine.”

Harry nodded, and he allowed Max to help him remove his pyjamas and then settle him in the bath. He still felt a little lethargic and lackadaisical, so he allowed Max to sponge him off, holding him safe and steady as he tipped him backwards to wash his greasy, knotty mop of hair. He felt himself drifting again and he felt more than he heard Max giggling silently at him.

“Tired, leave me alone.” Harry murmured.

“You’re in the bath, love. I’m not going to leave you alone in here. Just give me a few more minutes, let me rinse you off and then you can be in your nice, warm pyjamas and downstairs with the baby.”

“Still our thunderer?”

“Until you name him, yes, but I’m afraid he’s always going to be our little bolt of thunder now.”

“Nasta’s baby.”
Max hummed, and Harry could almost see him grinning at him. “We know. Your Dracken self refused to allow anyone other than Nasta to hold the baby until we got it through our thick heads what you were trying to say. We know that he’s Nasta’s.”

Harry nodded and opened his eyes to see the grin aimed at him. It made him smile.

“We’re happy to have you back with us, you don’t appreciate how hard it is to communicate with a feral Dracken until you actually have to do it. I had to pull you from the room and wash you off in the sink to give the family time to leave safely, you really didn’t like them being here.”

“Oh, did I embarrass myself again?”

“No, dearest. They’re Drackens too, well the Malfoys aren’t, but I’m sure Draco has filled them in by now. But everyone knows what it’s like to have Drackens in the family, they know all about the instincts and everything. It’s all fine, but I did find it funny, especially trying to wash you. You really didn’t appreciate my affectionate cleaning, not like you are now.”

Harry laughed. “I don’t know why my Dracken doesn’t like it, probably because it feels too unnatural, but I definitely appreciate it right now.”

Max slowed his hand movements down, stroking just for the pleasure of touching his mate, though he was still cleaning as well. Harry did stink, or he had before he’d bathed, and he really needed to be clean.

“Are we done?” Harry asked ten minutes later, cracking his eyes open.

Max nodded. “Yeah, hair and body is nice and clean, I’ve paid good attention to your pits so Draco doesn’t keel over and…”

He was interrupted by Harry’s laughter, and hearing that bright, happy laugh made Max smile.

“Come on, love, let’s get you out and dried and I can get that scar salve on you.”
Max helped Harry out, got him dried and laying on their bed in just his boxers. He took the scar salve and gently applied it to the thick, puckered red line that showed where Harry had sliced himself open. He watched Harry carefully, to see if he flinched or winced or showed any sign of pain or discomfort. He didn’t and he laid happily on the bed, arms up by his head, and he looked beautiful. So beautiful that Max had to bend down to kiss him. Those hands came up to hold his head in place and Harry kissed him back.

“I love you.” Max said gently.

“I love you too. So much, my mate.”

“Hmm, I thought all of your feralness had gone.” Max teased.

Harry grinned at him. “It has. I’m just feeling a bit possessive of my mates.”

“Come on.” Max picked Harry up and helped him to dress in fresh pyjamas, before picking him up again and carrying him down the stairs, the salve held securely over his scar by a large gauze plaster.

“I want my baby.” Harry said.

“We’ll get the thunderer to you now.” Max assured him, carrying him around through the kitchen and then into the family room.

“How are you feeling, love?” Draco asked him.

“Fine. I’m all clean, I am getting a bit tired again, but I want my baby. I need to bond with him, I came out of the nest early.”

“You did, and you shouldn’t have.” Nasta said firmly. “Though it’s always nice to see you.”

Harry grinned. “I love you too.”

Nasta, who was holding his son, came to crouch next to him. He gave Harry a long, lingering kiss and then gently passed the baby over, laying him on Harry’s chest, being careful of Harry’s abdomen.

“Hi, baby.” Harry said, wrapping his arms around the squirming newborn. His son stilled the moment he heard Harry’s voice, and then two hands reached up to grip tight at Harry’s collar. “Put his ear over my heart, please.”

Nasta adjusted the tiny, delicate head and placed the baby’s ear over Harry’s beating heart. The newborn settled immediately and Harry smiled.

“Are you back to yourself now?” Blaise asked him.

“I think so. I feel good actually. Tired and a bit sore, but not too bad. I think I should have singletons now all the time.” He joked.

“We’ll try and accommodate that for you.” Max told him.

“Mummy.”

Max turned to look at Tegan, and he pulled her up and stood her on his thighs. She looked at the penguin in her hands, then held it out to Harry.

“Thank you, sweetheart.” Harry said, taking the offered toy and tucking it into his neck.

Tegan smiled at him, reached forward and gave Harry a kiss, gave her new baby brother a kiss, patted the penguin and then she was slipping from Max’s lap and she was gone.

“I love that little girl so much.” Max declared, grinning after Tegan as she went to her doll’s house to play.

“She’s definitely the most feisty of our kids, but I love it when she does things like that.” Draco agreed.
“That feistiness will come in handy when she’s an adult.” Blaise nodded.

“Can I have some tea, please?” Harry asked. “My throat is really dry and really sore.” He explained.

Max shot up like he’d been electrocuted. “Of course you can, do you want anything to eat, any water?”

Harry shook his head. “Just tea, and only because my throat hurts.”

Max rushed out and Harry closed his eyes for a moment, savouring the newborn in his arms. His mates had been right, he had bonded with the baby already, but to his Dracken, it wasn’t enough. So he would stay here and cuddle his new son, Nasta’s son, and bond properly with him.

“Here you are.”

Harry peeled open his eyes, and his thoughtful mate had stuck a straw in his teacup, so that Harry could drink it without sitting up.

“You’re the best.” Harry said gratefully, as Max manipulated the straw into Harry’s mouth so that he could drink in small sips while flat on his back.

“Of course I am.” Max preened.

Harry yawned widely after a few sips of his honey tea, made exactly how he liked it, and he hummed gently. He took a few more sips, just because the tea tasted so good after a couple of weeks of just water and blood, cold blood at that, and it tasted so sweet, so amazing, that he wanted more. He was too tired, though, and like their newborn son, he fell asleep mid-sip, with the straw still in his mouth.

“He’s so tired still.” Max sighed, carefully popping the straw from Harry’s mouth and putting the half empty cup on the coffee table.

“He will be.” Nasta said, reaching out to cup Max’s chin. “But he’s also going to be fine. A few more days and normal function will resume, he’ll start eating and drinking as normal. In a few weeks he won’t be so sore and he’ll be healed up properly. We’ll look after him.”

Max nodded and smiled, tipping his head to kiss Nasta’s palm.

“I’m glad that they’re both alright and that nothing untoward happened to either of them.”

“Oh, we’re all glad of that.” Draco agreed. “But our ninth child is here, and we’re almost outnumbered two to one.”

Max snorted. “It’s only going to get worse from here on out, lover. Best get used to it.”

“I know that, I’m just trying to envision us going on holiday, or out for the day, with so many kids.”

“It was always going to be difficult.” Nasta said. “But we’ll manage. We’re Drackens, and there are five of us, mateships have done more than us with less mates.”

“My Granddad among them.” Max grinned. “Can you imagine him and Nana Kim taking all their kids out for a day trip? Especially when Nico and Ceph were little.”

“They’re terrors now.” Blaise laughed.

“It gets easier when the oldest are old enough to help out. Xerxes, Alexus, Benedict and Maribeth were always helping with the little ones, though Cassander, despite being the second oldest after Xerxes, well, he caused more problems than he helped with.” Max laughed. “He was usually a part of the problem in the first place.”

“Did they go on a lot of trips then?” Draco asked.

“Oh, tons. They’ve got pictures and souvenirs from all over the place. I think they were out every week or so.”

“We’re going to have to ask for advice and tips.” Blaise laughed. “We haven’t even taken all the kids out together yet.”
“As I said, there are five of us, and Leolin and our thunderer aren’t going to be going anywhere by themselves for a while yet, we’re not quite as outnumbered as it seems.”

“So…maybe we could take a day trip in the summer, perhaps to a beach or even just to the park for a picnic.” Draco mused. “It would do us some good to get out of the house for a full day.”

“I think Harry would like that.” Max said, giving his sleeping mate a soft smile.

“We’ll plan it properly.” Nasta said. “We’ll all have the same week off of work, we take everything we need, and we do it properly.”

“Of course.” Max nodded. “I’m sure Granddad said that he would plan an outing properly too, that’s why they always had so many and nothing usually went wrong.”

“Usually?” Draco asked nervously.

“Well, that many kids, Draco, you can’t plan for everything. Accidents happen and we will have more than a few scares over the years, but that’s life and we’ll deal with it.”

The four of them looked at each other and nodded. They would plan a day trip somewhere, and they would let their children experience normal situations, it wasn’t good for them to keep them secluded in the house all day, only taking them out occasionally for a trip to the supermarket down the road. They needed to get more confident in their own parenting abilities and start teaching their kids about the world around them, that was their duty as parents. They would have that day trip, they could only hope that Harry agreed with them about it.

------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------ X

Chapter End Notes

A/N: This chapter has come so late because it was giving me some trouble, the entire first scene was deleted and then redone in Draco’s POV, which I think works better, but I have finally managed to get it done and I hope that you all enjoy it.
StarLight Massacre. X
The four dominants had waited until the evening of the next day to tell Harry about the possibility of going out for a day trip in the summer, until he was more himself and less taken by his Dracken instincts.

Far from being worried, or fretful, over the safety of the children, as most submissives were when broached about the subject of taking their children out into large crowds of strangers, Harry was fully on board and seemed to be excited about the prospect of taking the kids out.

“We should take them to the zoo!” Harry insisted, so excited that the four of them had to smile at him. “They’ll love all of the animals, I know it. Braiden especially, he loves animals.”

They looked to where Braiden was playing with a wooden farm, moving the animals around as he played, talking to himself as he did so.

Nasta was a bit troubled though by Harry’s enthusiasm, and how he’d immediately jumped to the zoo, when they had suggested taking them to the park down the road. His mind went to the cruel family who had raised him, and his heart ached as he realised that perhaps Harry had always wanted to go to a zoo, but hadn’t been able to go to one before.

“Harry, have you ever been to a zoo?” Nasta asked softly.

Harry’s face closed off immediately, as it always did when they brought up his past.

Nasta was expecting Harry to shake his head, as he usually went non-verbal when the Dursleys were brought up until he was coaxed into talking, but Harry just sighed.

“Once.” He told them. “It…it didn’t end very well for me.”

“Will you tell us about it?” Blaise asked softly, sitting down next to Harry.

Harry breathed in deeply to calm himself and he closed his eyes, his face a picture of misery. Nasta hated the Dursleys all over again, the rage he felt at them, at what they’d done to Harry, growing even further inside him.

“I was so excited.” Harry said softly. “I’d never been allowed to go out with them before. They’d been on day trips, on holiday, all without me, but this time…this time I was allowed to go, because no one else could look after me. They were forced to take me with them.”

Harry frowned and glanced a look at the four of them.

“They were going to the zoo for Dudley’s eleventh birthday. Dudley took his friend Piers with him. They were hitting and pinching me all through the car drive, but I didn’t care, I was finally going to see a zoo, and I was so happy. I can’t tell you with mere words how happy I felt to be doing something normal.”

“You would have been ten.” Draco said.

Harry looked up at him, and nodded. “Yes. Dudley’s birthday was at the end of June, mine was the end of July. So he was a month older than I was. I…I thought it was the best day of my life, because Vernon, he brought Dudley and Piers a large ice cream each as soon as we arrived, and the nice lady asked me what I wanted before Vernon could hurry us off, so I got a cheap lemon ice lolly.”

“Is…is that why you like them now?” Max asked.

Harry nodded. “Yes. I don’t mind orange ones either, but lemon are my favourite, because it was the first one I had. He bought me a lemon one because he hoped I wouldn’t like it, but I did.”

“You like ice cream, though, don’t you?” Blaise questioned.
Harry smiled then. “Oh, yes, I definitely like ice cream.” The smile fell and Harry sighed. “Anyway, I loved the zoo at first. I was mostly left alone, Dudley and Piers were rushing off everywhere, and I got to do my own thing as long as I stayed in sight. We stopped for lunch at a restaurant.”

“We’re you allowed anything to eat?” Max asked.

“Of course not. I’d already had a lolly.” Harry told them, and all four of them had to swallow back their rage at how blasé Harry spoke about only being allowed one ice lolly to eat in a day. “But Dudley complained that his Knickerbocker glory wasn’t big enough, after he’d already eaten most of it, so they got him another one and I was allowed to finish the rest of the first.”

“That’s all you had that day, wasn’t it? An ice lolly and the remnants of an ice cream sundae.” Nasta asked.

Harry nodded. “Yeah. We…we went to the reptile house after that, and that’s where I found out I could speak Parseltongue for the first time. I had a conversation with a boa constrictor. I…I was caught doing it by Dudley and Piers. Dudley punched me in the ribs to get me out of the way, I hit the floor and I…I was just so angry.”

“Accidental magic?” Draco sighed, knowing where the story was heading.

Harry nodded. “I made the glass from the snake’s tank vanish…they had both been leaning up against the glass, pressing against it, so they fell into the enclosure. The snake paid them no mind, it made a break for freedom, I’m not sure if it was ever caught, but…they hated magic so much, so…”

“You were punished for it.” Nasta said.

Harry nodded. “Of course I was. The best day quickly turned into a bad one, we came straight home after that, without seeing any more of the zoo, and I was locked in the cupboard with no food for a week. I…I was so excited to go to the zoo, but they spoilt it, just like they spoilt everything for me.”

“We’ll go to the zoo in the summer.” Max said decisively. “We’ll make it a much better experience for you too, with all the lemon lollies you want.”
That made Harry smile. “I just want my babies to have all the experiences that I never got to have.”

“You’re never too old to experience new things.” Nasta said firmly. “We’ll plan a trip to the zoo in June, after Draco’s birthday. We’ll get it off work, plan a schedule, everything.”

“I’m so excited already.” Harry said. “Our little thunderer won’t remember it, I doubt the girls will either, but I hope the others have a good time.”

“It doesn’t matter if they remember it or not, love. They’ll all enjoy themselves, and we’ll take photos, and we’ll take the camcorder too. We can film it for them for when they’re older.”

“Will we take Leolin, or not?” Blaise asked.

“That’s something we’ll have to discuss.” Nasta said.

“I don’t think I want to risk it.” Harry frowned. “I don’t want him to miss out, but there will be a lot of people there. People who might be sick, or be carrying germs. I think I’d feel better if he had a Faerie day with Dain and Kailen, or maybe even Lathen and Ezrah, and then we could take him maybe, when he’s older and more able to deal with things. When he could tell us if he’s getting any symptoms of being sick.”

“I think that would be for the best.” Nasta agreed. “He won’t mind, and he liked his Faerie day the last time. As long as he has his Ma doll and you sleep with his blanket beforehand, I’m sure he’ll be fine.”

Harry settled himself then, and he smiled. “I’m so excited for this trip.”

Nasta bent forward and kissed Harry’s head. “We’ll make it perfect for you.”

“For the kids.” Harry corrected firmly.

“For all of you.” Max said. “Now, do you want tea?”
Harry hummed and nodded. “Yes.”

“Still not hungry?”

“Not yet. I had some toast for breakfast, I am eating, I just don’t want a lot. I do want my baby though, I can’t believe he’s already three days old and he doesn’t have a bloody name.”

Draco, who had been cuddling the newborn, begrudgingly handed him over to Harry.

“Sorry, love, but he really needs a name.” Harry said, looking at the baby in his arms.

“I know, I just enjoy cuddling him.”

Harry chuckled softly and he sat back against the cushions that his mates had packed up behind him, reclining back without injuring himself by holding the baby.

“Do you still want to name him after thunder?” Blaise asked.

“Yes, I’ve been looking up Welsh names too, and so far I’ve got Taranis, the god of thunder, but I don’t want to call him Taranis, it sounds too weird.”

“Then name him a variant, Caru.” Nasta said gently, aware that it was Harry’s decision, but offering him help.

“There are variants?” Harry asked.

“Of course, there’s Taranu, Taran, Tarron…”

“Taren.” Harry cut in, looking from Nasta to the baby in his arms.

“Do you like that name? It means thunder.”
“Really?” Harry asked, looking back up at Nasta.

Nasta nodded. “There are several ways of spelling it, T-A-R-A-N is the usual, but it’s also popular spelt T-A-R-Y-N.”

“No, I don’t like Tar-in.” Harry said, shaking his head. “I like Ta-ren.”

Nasta blinked, but he smiled. “Okay, whatever you want, Cariad. How would you want it spelt?”

“T-A-R-E-N.” Harry said, smiling. He lifted a hand and stroked the baby’s face. “My little thunderer.”

“Did I just miss the name?” Max asked excitedly as he brought in the tray of tea.

“Taren.” Harry said, looking up with a grin. “Our little Welsh thunderer.”

Max reached out to gently squeeze a tiny foot. “Love you, Taren.” He said.

Harry almost teared up at that, but he smiled down at the baby and kissed him again.

“Taren Trefor Delericey.” Harry said firmly, nodding.

“Trefor?” Nasta asked, his face falling.

“He was your several times great-grandfather, Nas.” Harry pointed out. “I think it’s a nice touch, and it suits him.”

Nasta sighed, his shoulders slumping. “I’m trying to come to terms with it.”
“I know, and you’re doing so well. It can’t be easy to find out that your family was built on a lie, on such treachery and betrayal. There’s nothing any of us can do to change that, but that you’re trying means a lot to me. Like it or not, we have a Faerie child, who could potentially reach eight hundred years old. He’s going to be lonely, love, if he doesn’t form his own bonds with those who are just as long lived as he is. I don’t want him to be so lonely.”

“And you’re friends with the Faeries yourself.” Max pointed out.

Harry chuckled. “That too, but it’s not the Faeries Nas has the problem with, is it, love? It’s Dain and Kailen for lying, or rather keeping the truth to themselves about the real family history, and the fact that they were the fathers’ of Trefor’s children, and thus related to him, and not that pathetic little prick, Constas.”

Nasta nodded. “That’s the real problem. I still don’t understand why they kept it from us. I heard them explain, I know what they felt, I just…I keep trying to imagine myself in their place, and I just can’t do it.”

“You need to remember that they’re Faeries, not Drackens. Drackens are very, very family orientated, Nas.” Max pointed out. “You’re never going to be able to put yourself in their shoes and imagine yourself not interacting with your grandkids, because a Dracken would never be able to do as they did, and you’re never going to understand that mentality.”

“Therein lies my problem.” Nasta sighed. “I can’t understand why they did it, so I’m finding it difficult to forgive. I’m trying, I just…I just don’t understand and I’m not used to not understanding things.”

“Thank you for at least trying.” Harry said, giving him a smile.

“I’ll make more time for them when they next visit, I think it might help more if I got to know them better.”

Harry smiled at that. “It makes me happy to hear you say that.”

“So, Taren Trefor Delericey.” Nasta smirked. “I’ll have to inform the family, Idris will be upset that you didn’t name the baby after him.”
Harry laughed. “Maybe the next one, after all Regan is named for your Father.”

“Are you sure you want him to be a Delericey, and not a Potter-Delericey? I thought you only wanted one male child to be heir to the family names?” Draco pointed out.

Harry shook his head and swallowed his mouthful of tea. “No, I was thinking about it, and...and I don’t want them to be lonely, so I think I want the first two boys born to each house to take a family name. Of course we had to make allowances for Potter and Black too, but I want our thunderer to be a Delericey.”

“We’ll fill in his birth certificate tomorrow morning then.” Nasta said. “We haven’t touched it yet.”

“Where is it?” Harry asked.

“Healer Almus handed it over when we gave him the placenta to check over.” Max explained. “You were still fast asleep in bed when we did that.”

Harry snorted and sent Max a grin, before a squirm from the baby in his arms took his attention.

“Oh, someone is awake and hungry.”

“Got that covered.” Max insisted, as he took the little bottle of milk from the tray and handed it over.

“Blaise, can you help me?” Harry asked, trying to force his still healing body to cooperate.

Blaise, who was still sat next to him, started moving cushions and he tucked one under Harry’s arm and helped him to lie the baby on it so that he could be fed without Harry straining all his muscles to hold him in the correct feeding position.

“Is that comfortable for you?” Blaise asked, even as he finished tucking the baby’s head towards Harry’s body.

“Yes, that’s perfect, thank you.”
Harry tested the bottle and a slight touch of wandless, wordless magic had it cooling a little more, so it was more comfortable for Taren to drink.

The five of them were silent, all of them watching as their newest child suckled his milk, cradled in a cushion.

“How heavy was he born, love? I don’t think we’ve asked yet.” Max asked him, but his eyes were still all for the baby.

“Nine pounds and two ounces.” Harry said immediately. “Twenty inches long with a thirteen and three quarter inch head circumference.”

“I love submissives.” Max chuckled. “I’ll grab his certificate now, but you’re certain of his name, lover?”

Harry considered the question seriously, but it only took him a moment as he looked at his child. The name had stuck.

“Yes. It’s stuck. Taren Trefor Delericey.”

Max stood and went to the sideboard, taking out the official document from the highest part of the cabinet up top, where Blaise kept the warded, ancient alchemy book that Harry had given to him for their very first Christmas together.

He took out his best quill and a bottle of ink and while Harry watched their feeding son, the others watched as Max filled in the certificate.

“Nine pounds and two ounces, you were right, he was definitely a big baby.” Max chuckled. “You had such a nice, neat bump too, where were you hiding the rest of him?”

Harry laughed. “In my bladder and lungs.”

Max laughed, but pushed the certificate over to Nasta and handed over the quill. “Nas, you need to do this part as the genetic Father.”
Nasta took the quill, read over the information, and then where Max had filled in his full name, he signed underneath.

“Harry, you just need to sign it now, Caru.”

Harry nodded his understanding, but he didn’t take his eyes from the baby. “Let him finish feeding first, and then I will.”

A wail over the baby monitor had all five of them looking to the group of three on the coffee table. They were colour coordinated to the three different rooms that held their sleeping babies.

“That’s Leolin’s room.” Draco sighed. “I told you he wasn’t settling as normal. I’ll go and grab him.”

“See if he can be tempted with a bit more milk, Draco.” Nasta said. “He left an inch or so in his bottle, it’s on the side of his changing table.”

Draco nodded and went upstairs to check on their Faerie baby, while Harry finished off feeding Taren.

“Do you want me to wind him?” Blaise asked, hovering over Harry as baby Taren finished his bottle and Harry eased forward to put the bottle on the coffee table.

“Yeah, take him.” Harry said, passing the three day old baby over and reaching for the certificate and the quill.

Blaise snuggled the baby into his neck, rubbing the baby’s back and patting gently to bring up his wind.

“Is it my turn to be on night duty?” Harry asked, even as he found where Max had written his name under Mother, and he signed his name underneath.

“No, Harry.” Nasta said. “It’s mine. I’m on paternity leave now.”
“I haven’t done a turn during the night though.” Harry said, finishing his signature and flicking his head up to look at his top dominant.

“You’re still recovering, love.” Max insisted. “Until I say you’re fit, you won’t be doing any night feeds.”

“But… I want to help. I want to look after my own baby.”

“You are, Harry.” Nasta stressed. “But you need to look after yourself too. None of us have had to rip ourselves open and pull a baby out. None of us had to carry a baby in our bodies for seven months. You need to take this time to relax and recover. We are well able to do the night shifts until you’re recovered.”

Harry gave them a look, then he smirked. “Will I ever be recovered enough in your view to handle the night feeds?”

“No.” Blaise insisted truthfully.

Harry laughed, but made a pained noise and pressed a hand over his belly. “Oh, don’t make me laugh, love.” He complained.

“You see, you’re not healed enough, and I don’t want you going up and down those stairs so often with your healing cesarean. The stairs are still too much for you, and we want you to be safe and healthy.” Max said. “You had Taren just three days ago, dearest, normally you’re still in your nest with him, you won’t be going up those stairs by yourself for another two weeks if everything heals nice and smoothly, and even then you won’t be carrying anything, or anyone, up or down them.”

Harry sighed. “I was thinking of making up his bottles ready and just heating them with magic when he needs them. Or just keeping him and myself down here for the night.”

“Absolutely not.” Nasta said sternly. “Being in bed, with us, is the best place for you. We will handle the night feeds until you are fully recovered, Harry. There are four of us, Caru, there is absolutely no need for you to force yourself to do anything with us here to look after you.”
“I suppose I can stop being so stubborn for a while, he really took it out of me, and coming out of my nest early messed up my healing process. But just this once.” Harry added firmly.

Harry saw the three of them share smiles, but he affected to ignore it. Instead he rested back in the cushions that had been placed behind him to prop him up and he breathed deeply and calmly.

Draco came back down, but he had a grizzling, whining Leolin in his arms still.

“He really will not settle.” Draco told them. “He seems fine. He’s not fevered, he’s clean and dry, I’ve checked for signs of teething and he doesn’t have any sign. I just don’t know.”

“Pass him to me.” Harry said, indicating that he wanted Draco to put Leolin on his chest, so that he wouldn’t have to struggle to sit up so soon after laying back down.

They were all rather worried when not even being on Harry calmed Leolin down.

“Leolin.” Harry tried, speaking to his son to try and calm him. It was usually Harry’s voice, and his eyes, that calmed Leolin the most, but he continued to grizzle.

Harry shared a look with his mates as he stroked Leolin’s back, taking care with the folded up wings.

“Baby, are you okay?” He asked, doing his own checks to make sure that Leolin wasn’t sick, but he smelt normal, earthy, like all Faeries.

“Was there anything in the development books that mentioned anything like this happening at around twenty-six months?” Harry asked Nasta desperately.

Nasta shook his head. “Do you want Healer Cole? Or do you want Dain and Kailen?”

“Dain and Kailen, just in case this is normal or just another development. If they think he needs a healer after that…” Harry trailed off, his bottom lip trembling. None of them had ever wanted a repeat of the time when Leolin had been in the hospital.

“I’ll go and get them. Blaise, perhaps it might be best to put the baby…to put Taren upstairs in his bassinet.” Nasta said softly.

Blaise nodded and checked that the baby he was cradling was asleep, before standing and leaving the room. Nasta took a pinch of floo powder and threw it into the grate and he was gone a moment later.

“I don’t want anything to be wrong with him.” Harry said, tears welling up.

Max rushed to the seat that Blaise had vacated. “We don’t know that anything is wrong, Harry.” He soothed immediately.

“This isn’t normal behaviour.” Harry stressed, watching as Leolin writhed and grizzled. “He looks like he’s in pain, I can’t stand it.”

“Maybe we should take him to the hospital.” Draco said. “Or at the least call a healer here, surely they have one spare.”

“It could be anything, Draco. Maybe we forgot to add softener to the laundry that his bodysuit went into. Maybe Faeries start having nightmares when they hit two. Let Dain and Kailen see him first, and then if they’re worried, then we’ll take him to the hospital.”

“This should be a happy time, we have a newborn, I can’t see him in that hospital again. Not like before.”

Max laid a hand on Leolin’s back, covering Harry’s hand, trying to comfort them both as Leolin wailed and squirmed. It was early night, it was only just gone nine, but if Nasta had trouble getting into the Faerie city, especially with it being in as much turmoil as it allegedly was, then it could take them longer to get back. Harry hoped that Nasta was allowed into the city, and wasn’t detained, but as the minutes ticked by, Harry was getting more and more worried and wound up.

Leolin eventually settled, perhaps too tired to carry on his wriggling and squirming, and Harry looked at him critically, making sure it wasn’t due to an illness taking him over.

“Ma ma.” He said slowly, his tiny hands clenching.

“I’m here.” Harry said softly, stroking Leolin’s black hair, before turning to Max. “Where the hell is Max bent forward to rest his forehead against the side of Harry’s. “It hasn’t been long enough for him to have even reached their house yet, Harry. Please just try to stay calm. He’s not fevered, and he doesn’t smell sick.”

“I don’t know what else it could be.” Harry said desperately.

“As I said, it could be anything. Maybe there was an extra scoop of formula in his bottle and he’s reacting to that? Maybe he wants to go outside for a Faerie moment? It could be anything, love, it doesn’t mean that he’s sick or in danger.”

Blaise and Draco came to flank them, and they all watched as Leolin looked around, he seemed to be searching for something, and whatever he saw, whether he saw something he wanted, or didn’t see something that he didn’t, he relaxed his whole body and properly settled.

“Ma.” He said more normally, snuffling into Harry’s neck.

“I’m here, sweetie.” Harry said soothingly, patting his back gently.

“Is…is he okay now?” Blaise asked, as they watched Leolin still himself and start drifting off.

“I don’t know.” Harry said. “I want him checked out, just in case.”

It took close to half an hour before Nasta came back, and when he did enter the house again, via the front door, he was in full Dracken form and he was visibly fuming.

All four of them sunk away from him instinctually, which was what made them realise that he was releasing fear-inducing pheromones.

“Don’t be afraid of me.” He told them, his voice harsh and guttural with his Dracken, but he made a conscious effort to rein back his pheromones.

“Would they not come?” Harry asked.
“We are here. We just have a very healthy respect for our angry grandson.” Dain insisted, as he slowly and carefully entered the room.

“Don’t say that the court tried to involve itself in this?” Max demanded.

“Later, we’ll go over that later, please come and see Leolin.” Harry insisted, looking at the two Faeries.

“He seems to have settled.” Kailen pointed out, as both Faeries hunched beside the settee that Harry was reclining on.

“Only in the last ten minutes. He sort of looked around and everything stopped, the wailing and writhing, the crying, he settled and then he went to sleep.”

“Will you tell us the schedule he had today, Harry?” Dain asked, as he gently manipulated Leolin into his own arms and turned him over to check on him.

“He woke up at maybe quarter past seven.” Harry said, looking to his mates for confirmation.

“I was first up, he was still asleep at six when I fed Taren.” Draco said. “He did wake up at about quarter past seven.”

“It might be easier if we got his book.” Harry pointed out.

Max nodded and stood, going to grab Leolin’s book, so that the Faeries could see his eating and napping habits, which had all been documented down so that they could check for patterns, progress, or anything that might indicate that Leolin was not himself.

“We have been letting him have some time outside too, would…would that have made him act like this?” Harry asked.

“No.” Both Faeries said together.
“Being outside is usually what settles an upset Faerie.” Kailen told them, as Max handed Dain the exercise book, open to the right page.

“He’s been doing really well recently.” Draco said. “He’s been going from strength to strength, sitting up more, eating more, we thought he was gearing up for another growth spurt too, before this happened tonight.”

“Aneirin got him a light up ball for Christmas, every time he squeezes it, it flashes a different colour, and he loves it.” Harry chuckled.

“I believe it to be because of the very big change recently. I heard the name Taren, and I can see that you have recently given birth. We were expecting this.”

“Expecting what?” Nasta demanded.

“It is simply sibling jealousy.” Dain told them, closing the book after finding nothing amiss. “It usually starts at this age. He likely saw you fussing over the newly born babe and he didn’t like it. It is for this reason that most Faeries space their babes out, so that the oldest babe does not feel such jealousy towards siblings so soon in their lifetimes.”

“But…Leolin has eight siblings, he’s not even our youngest before Taren was born.” Harry pointed out confusedly.

“The other babes are all moving, you do not need to carry them everywhere, or have them with you at all times like a newly born babe. This is the first babe you’ve had where Leolin is able to see, and understand that he doesn’t have your full attention, and he is jealous.”

“He was looking around.” Harry said to his mates. “He only settled when he saw that Taren wasn’t in the room.”

“Yes, Faerie babes covet their Mother’s attention. It would have been specifically if you had been holding the new babe, or had your attention on the new babe.” Kailen told him.

“I was holding Taren when Leolin was put to bed.” Harry said. “I can’t go up the stairs, or pick up the kids just yet, I only gave birth three days ago, so my mates put all the kids to bed and I was down here with Taren.”

“That is all this is, though?” Nasta asked. “He doesn’t need a hospital, or any medical help?”

“No. None. This is simply Leolin becoming more aware of those around him, and coming to realise that he is not the centre of his Mother’s attentions.”

“Will he learn? I mean, how long does this usually last?” Harry asked.

“Oh, he will learn.” Kailen said. “In perhaps half a decade.”

“What?!”

“Most Faerie babes learn to share their Mother’s when they are several years old, certainly before they reach their first decade.” Dain agreed. “Having so many siblings will hopefully help Leolin to learn sooner.”

“He was acting as if he was in pain.” Harry murmured.

“And you dropped the new babe to rush to Leolin, which is exactly what he wanted.”

Harry blinked. “I never would have believed him capable of such manipulation.”

“Do not think him mentally subnormal because he is not on par with your other babes.” Dain warned. “He is ahead of them in many ways already and he is well capable of such deceptions. It will be up to you to determine if it is real, or if he is trying to gain your attention by behaving as if he is ill or injured.”

“I don’t think he’s mentally subnormal!” Harry said hotly. “I just never realised that he would try to manipulate us by making us think he was hurt and in pain.”

“He knows how to tug on your heartstrings.” Kailen told them, brushing Leolin’s face with gentle fingers. “He is getting better at controlling his own limbs and he is getting stronger. You will find that he’ll do this more often in the future, especially if he is being put in a room on his own when he knows you have the new babe with you, like at bedtime.”

“How do we handle it?”

“You could try to keep him and the new babe with you, but remain aware and vigilant of his attempts to hit his new brother, he will lash out at him.”

“Like he used to do to us when he wanted you to himself.” Max said to Harry, all of them remembering when Leolin used to strike out at them if they went to kiss Harry.

“It will be just like that.” Dain agreed.

“If you were to keep one babe to either side of you, it would compromise Leolin’s reach.” Kailen added. “I remember, back when I was very young, our neighbours had twin babes. They had to be separated from one another too, as they fought over their Mother’s attention and she would hold them to either side of herself, so that they could not reach the other.”

“Twins will fight?” Harry asked in horror.

“Yes, for a time, until they understand that they must share their Mother with others, and that it will not harm them to do so. Once they learn that, then their bond will become one of the strongest we know and they will focus completely on one another for a time.”

“We have already explained to you that he does not like to share you because he feels threatened. He depends on you for everything, and to have your attention not upon him makes him feel threatened, that is why he is doing this, that is why he is jealous of his own Fathers, and of the new baby.” Dain explained. “It does not last for very long, this stage of jealousy. He will become aware that he is not in any danger in his own home, from his own family, and he will then stop lashing out.”

“I’m just glad that he’s alright.” Harry said, sighing in relief.

“He is completely fine.” Dain insisted, passing the sleeping Leolin over to Kailen. “He looks strong and healthy, and he has grown since we last saw him.”
Harry nodded happily. “He’s doing so well, and he’s able to hold things by himself and entertain himself. And as Draco said, we think he’s getting ready for another growth spurt. He’s been eating and sleeping more for the last week or two.”

“How did he handle your nesting?” Kailen asked. “That would have hit him hardest, and sleeping more than usual is a sign of depression in Faerie babes.”

The five of them shared horrified looks. “He could get depression at his age?”

The two Faeries nodded. “If separated from their beloved Mother, it is possible, though rare.”

“He got sulky and sullen, and very angry.” Nasta said. “He was fine for a time, we gave him a blanket that smelt of Harry and played recordings of his voice, but once the blanket stopped smelling of Harry, when he’d gone for a time without actually seeing his Mother, he would scream if anyone else touched him, hit out at us for picking him up…”

“He did start sleeping more then, but he was eating more too.” Max put in.

“He was frightened without the reassurance of his Mother.” Kailen sighed. “He ate more because he was unsettled, and he would have tried to force himself to take in more food as a result. He slept longer because the extra milk would have made him feel sluggish and heavy.”

“So it wasn’t a good sign.” Draco demanded.

“No.” Both Faeries said together.

“It would have been better if you had limited his milk to what he normally ate, to prevent him from hiding away in sleep. He will learn quicker if he has more exposure to being away from his Mother, though frightening and painful for him.”

“I don’t think any of us want him to be scared.” Blaise said angrily.
“It is his mentality, the mentality that all Faeries babes have. Like babes who have lost their Mothers learn to see their Fathers, or caregivers, as safe to them, Leolin will learn too. You are Drackens, and Harry needs to nest to birth new babes. Leolin will need to learn to see all of you as safe, to see his home as safe, and the only way to do that is to expose him to it.”

“So I’m not to drop what I’m doing to rush to him?” Harry asked, very worried and starting to feel a little stressed.

“Not if you want to break this dependence on you.” Dain said seriously. “We are not saying to ignore him all the time, but if you are doing something else, or holding another of your babes, do not stop just to go to him. Allow one of your mates to see to him.”

“It will be painful for all of you.” Kailen added. “Not just from an emotional side, but if he is picked up by anyone other than you, Harry, I believe he will try to hit them.”

“But we need to do it.” Harry said. “Is that what you’re saying?”

“You could just leave him and pander to him, he will eventually learn on his own, just at a later time. But I believe it will be in his best interests to learn this lesson sooner, because you are all Drackens.”

“Right. Right okay.” Harry said, breathing in deeply, because this was mostly on him and they all knew it. “I can try. I certainly don’t want him upset, but I can’t have him lash out at his Fathers, or his siblings, especially not Taren. He’s only three days old.”

“Have we congratulated you for that yet?” Kailen asked with a soft smile.

“No yet.” Harry grinned.

“Well, congratulations, Harry, on the birth of your new babe.”

“He’s Nasta’s, so he’s yours too by blood.” Harry said with a smile. “We only named him this evening. Taren Trefor Delericey.”

Harry saw the effect that the baby’s name had on the two Faeries, and after a moment they turned to each other and touched their foreheads together.

“Thank you, Harry. Trefor would have loved to meet his extended family, and he would have been so excited to hear that he had a grandson named after him.” Dain said tearfully.

“Taren is not a Faerie?” Kailen asked.

Harry shook his head. “No. Would you like to meet him, though?”

“Yes, if we may. We would love to.”

Blaise left without being asked and he went up the stairs to go and fetch their little baby.

“He’s been our biggest born thus far.” Harry said with a smile. “Nine pounds and two ounces.”

“He is healthy and thriving?”

Harry nodded. “He really is.”

Blaise came back down with the sleeping Taren and while a calmed Nasta took Leolin, Blaise handed Taren over to be fussed by the Faeries.

“Now that we know Leolin is fine, I’m going to go put him back in his cot.” Nasta told them, doing just that. All attention was then on the sleeping newborn.

“He is beautiful.” Kailen praised, and Harry puffed up proudly.

“He looks like Leolin.” Harry said. “Just chubbier.”

“He does.” Dain agreed. “Thank you for this, Harry.”
Harry nodded, watching them and smiling, as the two Faeries fusssed over Taren.

“So what did happen at the city?” Harry asked when Nasta came back into the room. His top dominant was calmer, but not calm enough yet to pull in his wings, though the claws and fangs had gone.

“They tried to detain Nasta.” Dain said, when Nasta went back to looking furious.

“What for?”

“Apparently Drackens are no longer welcome in the Faerie city.” Nasta snarled.

“But…what will we do if Leolin has a problem? Tonight turned out to be nothing serious, but what if he had been ill?” Harry demanded.

“They suggested that we take Leolin to the gates, and allow them to take him into the city while we wait outside.” Nasta said, sneering.

Harry scoffed. “That will never happen, they wouldn’t give him back.”

“I said as such to them.” Nasta nodded. “The Faerie city is on shutdown, and they’re being unduly biased against us.”

“The court has not liked you since you came to them with a newborn Leolin.” Kailen said with a sigh. “They do not like that two Drackens gave birth to a Faerie babe.”

“We’re not going to be able to go there again, are we?” Blaise asked.

“I would not risk you all in such a way.” Dain insisted. “I do not know what orders will be given now that Nasta forced himself through the guards.”
“I wasn’t going to let anyone stop me from getting help for Leolin.” Nasta explained seriously.

“What will we do in the future?” Max asked. “We can’t just leave Leolin without that support, and sending an owl would take too long.”

“We’d have to go to Lathen and Ezrah.” Harry said. “And beg Lathen to go to get Dain and Kailen for us. It’s overall longer, but…but we can’t let anything happen to Leolin.”

“We will not give in to the court.” Kailen said fiercely. “We will not bow to them. They will never get Leolin, we would die first.”

Harry nodded. “As would we.”

Harry watched Dain and Kailen, as they snuggled up Taren between them, and he smiled sadly. It was worrisome that the Faerie city, that several of his friends and even family members called their home city, was in such despair. He didn’t like that Lathen and Ezrah had had to leave the city, that Eitri was being threatened and hurt, that Dain and Kailen might lose their lives if…or rather when Sindri succumbed to the illness that had affected him, just because they were rivals with the other members of the court. He was worried for them, and for what it might mean for Leolin too.

Dain and Kailen stayed with them for another half an hour, until Harry was almost falling asleep along with Taren. They thanked the Faeries for coming to see them, even if Leolin hadn’t been ill or in trouble this time. They made a date for them to come and visit again, socially this time, and Harry barely managed to hang on until then.

Draco was the one to carry him up to bed and Harry snuggled into him, murmuring nonsense as he was laid on the bed gently, being tucked up, as he hadn’t progressed yet to getting dressed in the day time and he spent all day in his pyjamas. His mates preferred that he stayed in pyjamas too, because they knew he wouldn’t go outside if he was in his pyjamas and it helped them when they inevitably carried him to bed, as they didn’t have to struggle through changing him, and risk waking him back up.

“Thank you.” He murmured softly, as the duvet was tucked up under his neck.

Draco chuckled. “Get some sleep, love.” He said, but Harry was already asleep and he shook his head before heading to their en suite to get ready for bed himself.

He was in his pyjamas when the others came up, and as they got ready for bed themselves, he went out onto the landing and went to go and check on Leolin, fast asleep in his own cot. He made sure that Leolin was in the centre of his cot with his feet to the bottom, that his blanket was folded over his waist and he had his Ma doll in his arms.

Draco sighed, bent and kissed the little Faerie, and he went back to the master bedroom to slip into the bed right next to Harry before the others could get in. He wrapped his arms around his softly snoring mate and slipped down to tuck his head into Harry’s neck.

“Getting comfy there, lover?” Max chuckled, climbing into the bed and purposefully bumping his groin into Draco’s arse.

“Of course.” Draco said, softly for the sake of Harry. “I have to fight to get the good part of the bed.”

“I think I did well tonight.” Max laughed, throwing an arm over him and Harry, snuggling in tight.

“It’s only Nas who has to stay on the edge of the bed. He’s on night duty again because you’re in work tomorrow.”

Max groaned. “Don’t remind me!” He whined. “A four day old baby at home and I have to go into bloody work.”

“Everything will be fine. Taren is doing well and we know how to look after Harry. The family will come later in the day, after you get home from work, so that you can be there. Everything is going to be fine.” Nasta said, herding Blaise into the bed, on Harry’s other side, before sliding in after him. “Now all of you get to sleep, Taren will be waking up in less than two hours as it is.”

Max turned off the lamp on his bedside table and Nasta did the same on his side. Draco yawned in the sudden. Soothing dark and he shoved his head back into Harry’s neck. He was asleep himself in just ten minutes.

The next afternoon was a bad, headache inducing day. Harry was snuggling Taren in his arms, making use of Leolin’s little beanbag chair that he rarely used anymore to prop up his back against the settee as he’d chosen to sit on the floor, his legs out in front of him, so that he could be more hands on with his children.

The problem was that Leolin did not like this, not even as he was sat in his bouncer, right beside Harry and holding one of his hands. He kept clamouring, he kept trying to reach out for Harry, but he was unable to move himself in the bouncer, so he kept screaming for him.

It was the hardest thing Harry had ever had to endure, but he persevered. He would turn to Leolin, touch his face, smile at him, but he did not pick him up. He did not put Taren down and he could almost see the cloud of rage building around Leolin.

“Come here, Baban.” Nasta said calmly, soothingly, as he bent and undid the repaired straps to the bouncer, picking Leolin up.

They had more than learnt their lesson, and Nasta held Leolin away from his face, so that their Faerie son couldn’t strike him. Not that Leolin didn’t try, he did, but he still tired very easily with such activity and soon he slowed his attempts to hit Nasta and lay quiet, still calling sleepily for Harry, but Nasta had him well in hand, rubbing his back between his wings just how he liked, and he started drifting off against Nasta’s shoulder, too tired to keep fighting, too upset to do anything other than sleep. Harry hated this.

“Do you want to cuddle him?” Nasta asked. “Will having both of them be too much for you?”

“No, I’m feeling better today, as long as I don’t have to move I’ll be fine, but if I’m not, I’ll tell you.”

Nasta nodded and took his word for it, as he gently passed the drifting Leolin over. Leolin’s body relaxed as he sensed he had been passed over to his Ma and he snuffled his wet face into Harry’s neck.

Harry held him against his chest with one arm, the other cradling a peacefully sleeping Taren. It was a bit of a struggle, and he couldn’t move at all now, but his babies had gotten used to him being back in the house, and they were content and settled with him sat on the floor with them, though it did make him smile when Regan toddled over to him, fell against his chest and puckered his lips at him.

Harry chuckled and bent to kiss him, and then Regan was gone again and Harry watched him go with a smile.

Max walked through the door, still in his work clothes, and he threw his work case onto the settee and fell to his knees his arms open, as he called out to the kids and was completely swarmed. Harry laughed as much as he was able, aware that his stomach would protest heavily if he laughed too hard and that he had two sleeping babies in his arms.

Max’s attention was monopolised for ten minutes as the kids all wanted to show him this or that, wanted cuddles or kisses, and then Max broke free and he first snagged Draco into a kiss, then Blaise, then he stood to snog Nasta and he turned to Harry last, smirking at him as he was sat prone on the floor unable to move or escape, not that he particularly wanted to, of course. Max hunched beside him and cupped his face.
“Hello, lover.” Max greeted softly, before bending forward and snogging him.

Harry was dazed and feeling happy as they broke apart, but he chuckled as Max snagged Taren from him and cuddled him himself.

“He’ll wake up soon for a feed.” Harry said, shifting Leolin to hold him with both arms.

“I’ll get that well in hand.” Max said. “I’ve missed him and his milky smell.”

“You’ve just got in, at least let me do this feed and get you a cup of tea.” Nasta insisted. “I’m on paternity leave, remember?”

“Boo, Nas.” Max complained. “I’m not so old that I can’t handle a round of tea and a bottle. Nor is my job so physically demanding as yours.”

“You weren’t brewing today, were you?” Draco asked knowingly.

“No, those rats put me on stock controlling. Making sure nothing had been stored improperly, or any seals had been broken, or had spoiled in any way. Out of the five thousand odd potions we stocked, I found two that I didn’t like the look of. Two! It was the most boring day ever, and now I want to cuddle our newborn son, feed him, I’ll even take nappy changes, because I’d rather do that than what I had to suffer through at work today.”

Harry chuckled at his dramatic mate, but Nasta just shook his head and sat down, waving Max off to make the tea. Then Nasta had been on his feet all day, and he’d taken all the night feeds and changes too, he must have been exhausted.

“They only did it to punish me.” Max carried on complaining as he came back into the room five minutes later, baby Taren in the crook of his arm and a full tea tray balanced on the other hand.

Blaise took the tray and set it down on the coffee table, even as Max fell gently into a seat.

“Because you said about taking time off for Taren?” Draco asked.
Max nodded. “Exactly. So now they’re making my life a misery.”

“Go freelance.” Harry told him. “It’s the best option. Then maybe, in several years, you can set up your own rival company and hire your own apprentices. That way you won’t be stuck with teaching all the dangerous, half-cocked ones who don’t have brains that your manager hires and then pushes onto you.”

“If they carry on punishing me when the rookies can check the quality of the stocked potions, when I’m much more use actually brewing, as an actual qualified Potions Master, then they’ll leave me no choice.” Max said, relaxing back on the settee, one ankle crossed over the knee of his other leg, Taren cradled in his arms.

Harry carefully sat himself up with Leolin in his arms. He sat still for a moment, to decipher the feelings from his own body, but when he decided that he felt fine, he shuffled forward on his bum and reached for his tea.

“Are you okay?” Blaise asked, laughing at him.

Harry nodded. “Fine, I was just making sure.”

Harry took a deep drink of tea and sighed happily.

“Have these dick bags been looking after you?” Max teased.

“Who, in the name of Merlin, are you calling a dick bag?” Draco demanded.

“Of course we have!” Blaise insisted.

Nasta said nothing, so Harry shot him a look and a grin, only to find his top dominant fast asleep, head resting back against the settee.

Harry laughed, shook his head and turned back to Max. “I’ve been very well looked after, Max, as you well know. My salve is still in place, I needed a pain reliever with lunch, but that’s it.”

Max nodded, but he was grinning at the sleeping Nasta. “Aw, bless him. He’s getting too old for these new babies.”

The four of them snorted a laugh at Nasta’s expense.

Harry went back to his tea, being careful with Leolin snuggled into his neck, as he didn’t want to drip hot tea onto him, and he relaxed and enjoyed this time of peace. Well, as peaceful as things ever got with seven babies screeching and playing on the floor with a mass of toys.

Taren woke with a whine, and Max sat forward, put his tea cup down and picked up the bottle, automatically testing it against his bare arm, before prodding the nipple at Taren’s little lips. He latched on and started feeding and they all watched him for a moment with a smile.

“When are the family coming over?”

“Later.” Max said. “We’ll have time to feed the kids dinner at four, but they’ll be here soon after.”

“Do you want me to do din…?” Harry started, but that was as far as he got.

“No I bloody well don’t.” Max cut in immediately. “I’m not having you stood out in that kitchen, with your healing muscles, cooking!”

Harry laughed, but waved Max off.

“How has your appetite been today?” Max asked him.

Harry pulled a face and bobbed his head from side to side in consideration. “Eh, not too bad. I had toast in the morning and I managed half a sandwich for lunch. I haven’t felt hungry again since.”

“Okay, but let me know the moment you’re hungry.” Max warned him.

Harry agreed easily, but happily went back to his tea.
“Can one of you take Leolin for me, please? I need a potty break.”

Blaise stood and took Leolin in one arm, and used his other hand to help Harry to his feet, slowly and carefully.

“Thank you, love.”

Harry gave Blaise a kiss and then slowly made his way to the bathroom, sighing as he realised that Tegan had followed him.

“Hi, baby girl.” Harry said softly. “Have you come to watch Mummy wee?”

“Potty, too.”

“You need the potty as well?” Harry asked her.

Tegan nodded her head, then used a casual hand to swipe the fall of black hair from her face.

“Don’t like little potty.” Tegan told him and Harry couldn’t have been more surprised if she’d gotten up and started flying.

He quickly hunched down and smiled at her.

“Do you want to use the big potty like I do?” He asked, trying to keep her talking, trying to keep her from panicking or freaking out, trying not to show his excitement that she was actually talking in proper words.

Tegan nodded her head. “Yeah.” She said simply.

“Come on then.” He encouraged, slowly standing back up so as not to jar his body, and he held his hand out.
Tegan took his hand and he led her to the bathroom. If Tegan was refusing to use a potty because she didn’t like it, but she wanted to stop using nappies, then they would need to get a training seat for her to use, pronto.

“Come here then, sweetie. Have you done this before with your Daddies?” He asked, just in case she had started using the proper toilet while he’d been nesting.

“No, wanted to do with Mummy.” Tegan told him, and Harry had to wonder when she’d started using proper words. She had been using the odd word now and then before he’d gone into his nest. She had even been stringing two ‘real’ words in her stream of usual illegible babble, but all of a sudden, overnight, she was speaking properly and he was so excited and happy.

Harry hunched down in front of the toilet, which just brought back awful memories of morning sickness, and he helped Tegan pull down her leggings and took her nappy off before encouraging her to use his legs as a step to reach the toilet. He held her hands tightly, after he got a mental image of her slipping into the bowl and getting stuck, and he encouraged her to go.

“If you like the toilet we’ll get you a special seat and a step to use, so that you can reach it by yourself.”

“I like it better than little potty.” Tegan told him, looking between her own legs and giggling.

Harry smiled and held her as she did her business and then he fished out a pack of baby wipes from one of the cupboards under the counter and he wiped her. He pulled her nappy and leggings back up and then fretted how to help her wash her hands.

“Okay baby, Mummy can’t lift you, so we’re going to wash our hands over the bath for now, okay? But we will definitely be getting you that step so that you can reach by yourself.”

“Okay, Mummy.”

Harry put the liquid soap in his own hand and walked to the bath, running the water and getting Tegan’s hands under before soaping them up and letting her rinse them off.

Then he let her free in the bathroom as he used the toilet himself, washed his hands again, before he was finally going back to the family room.
“We thought you’d fallen in.” Draco joked with a grin.

“No, our little girl wanted to use the toilet, not a potty! She went perfectly fine too, so we need to get her a seat and step.”

“She used the toilet?” Draco asked excitedly, sitting forward.

“Yes, Daddy.” Tegan answered.

“Did you lift her?” Max asked, looking just as excited, but also sent Harry’s belly a worried frown.

“No, she used my legs as a step and I held her hands. We washed our hands in the bath too, so I didn’t lift her to reach the sink.”

“Good thinking, love.”

“I would have called you all, but I wanted to use the bathroom too, and you know I don’t really like an audience.” He smiled. “But the next time, we’re definitely all watching.”

“If she lets us.” Blaise answered. “Calix didn’t let us watch and wanted us to all turn around.”

“What…what do you mean?” Harry asked, his eyebrows lowered in confusion as he looked around the room for Calix. He was playing happily enough with Braiden and Farren. “Has Calix used the toilet too? Why didn’t you tell me?”

“Oh, Harry, it was while you were nesting.” Max said. “We were going to tell you, of course, but you’re still recovering, so it just slipped our minds having you and Taren in the house.”

“It wasn’t the toilet either, it was a potty.” Draco told him quickly. “He asked for it himself, after he’d seen me changing Braiden and asked why Braiden wasn’t in a nappy. He’s wanted to be in pants ever since.”
“Is he wearing pants now?” Harry asked, feeling himself getting teary at all the developments his babies were showing.

“Yes. He doesn’t take them off either, not like he did with his nappies.” Draco said, sounding pleased.

Harry went to Calix and smiled at him.

“Hey, Calix, are you wearing pants, sweetie?” He asked.

“Yes, Mummy.” He said, standing up and pulling down his little jeans to show him the blue briefs.

“I’m very proud of you for being a big boy and using the potty.” Harry said seriously.

Calix grinned happily. “Want big boy bed.”

“I want pants too!” Tegan said.

“Dear Merlin, they’re all at it.” Max laughed.

“Okay, Calix, you can have a big boy bed. Tegan, honey, we’ll get you your own pants. What colour do you want?”

“Umm…” Tegan trailed off, but she snapped her head back up and grinned. “Grey!”

“Grey?” Draco asked, aghast at the very suggestion.

“Like pengy, Daddy!” Tegan explained, running to get her penguin, which was a soft, pale grey colour.

“Where are we going to find grey pants for girls?” Draco asked.
“We could always get white ones and charm them the same colour.” Harry pointed out. “I know the charm will eventually wear off, but it’s better than nothing. Unless stores really do sell grey pants.”

“No, for girls it’s mostly pinks, purples, yellows and white.” Max said. “Boys are the usual red, blue and green.”

“I wonder if they sell penguin themed ones.” Blaise mused.

“We need to learn household charms, that or how to sew so we can make our own.” Max laughed.

Harry smiled at Calix, as he showed off his little blue pants to his brothers and sisters, very proud to be wearing them, but Harry felt himself welling up at the thought of his little babies becoming proper children, and before he knew it he was crying.

“Harry, what’s wrong?” Max asked, loudly.

He startled Nasta, who leapt to his feet, groggy and still half asleep, but now with adrenaline pumping through his body too.

“What’s happened?!” He demanded, a growl already in his throat.

Harry sniffled, still crying, and he held his arms out for his top dominant, who took several quick, large strides to reach him and pulled him up into his arms to sniff at him, checking him for injuries.

“I won’t ask again!” He said. “What happened?”

“We forgot to tell him about Calix wearing pants.” Blaise said worriedly.

Nasta looked for Calix, still showing off the little blue briefs, and Nasta inhaled deeply. He went and sat back down and cradled Harry in his lap.
“It… it wasn’t really that.” Harry sniffled, calming down. He rubbed the tears away. “I’m still a little hormonal and it’s not that I wasn’t told, though I am angry I wasn’t told, it’s just… they’re all growing up and they’re becoming proper children and gaining independence. I love seeing them growing and doing things for themselves, I’m just a bit hormonal over it.”

“Tegan will be next, I think.” Nasta said, his voice still sleep gruff.

“That’s what started this.” Harry said. “She doesn’t like potties, she wants to go straight to using the toilet, like us. She came with me to the bathroom and she used the toilet, Nas! We need to get a training seat and a step for her.”

“She actually used the toilet by herself?” Nasta asked, smiling and searching out Tegan this time.

Harry nodded. “She used my legs as a step and I held onto her hands, but she doesn’t like the potties for some reason.”

“I wonder why she didn’t ask any of us.” Blaise mused.

“Wanted Mummy to do it!” Tegan turned around to tell him.

“Oh. Well that answers that question then.” Max laughed.

“Where is Leolin?” Nasta asked.

“In his bassinet, by there.” Blaise pointed. “Harry needed the bathroom, and I put him in his bassinet.”

“It’s about dinner time now, anyway.” Max said. “Does someone want Ta…?”

Max hadn’t even finished speaking before Draco held out his arms and Max laughed, passing over their four day old son. He groaned and stood up.

“I’ll get a quick dinner on for them now, we’ll be having visitors soon. Nas, do you want to go for a late nap? I can handle everything down here.”

“No. I’ll be alright, Caru.” Nasta said, still cwtching Harry.

“Daddy, I cook.” Braiden shouted over the room, standing and running to him. “I cook.”

Max blinked down at him in surprise. “You want to come and cook with me?”

“Yuh.” Braiden nodded.

“Huh, well okay then, we can cook together.”

“It’s that new lunchtime kids show he likes watching. Little Cooks.” Blaise told them. “It shows toddlers in the kitchen, cooking and being little chefs. Braiden and Farren refuse to miss an episode.”

“Farren, do you want to come and cook as well?” Max asked, holding out his other hand.

As if he had been waiting for permission, Farren jumped up and ran to Max, taking his other hand.

Harry sniffled, his eyes welling up as his babies rushed to the kitchen with Max to help him cook. They were all growing up and now they even wanted to help in the kitchen, and it made his heart swell.

Nasta kissed his cheek, cuddling him in tighter and rubbing his back. Harry turned to get a proper kiss and he smiled.

“I’m okay, I just feel too much emotion at the moment and I can’t control it.”

“Don’t even try, Bello.” Blaise insisted.

“I couldn’t even if I did try.” Harry laughed. “We have six two year olds, two, year olds and now our newborn Taren. I just…I never expected my life to turn out this way. Not…not coming from the boy in the cupboard, and I’m so happy sometimes I feel like I could burst.”
“We love you.” Nasta told him, still rubbing his back.

“And I love all of you.” Harry declared. “I love you all so much.”

Harry laughed at himself. Rubbing his wet eyes. Nasta kissed him again and Harry happily sunk into that kiss. He broke away and inhaled deeply, smiling.

“Maxie!”

“What is it?” Max called back. “Are you okay?”

“I love you!” Harry shouted.

He heard Max laughing from the kitchen. “I love you too, dearest! I’d come and snog you, but I have babies stood on chairs making a mess of dinner.”

“I’ve got you covered!” Nasta called out and he turned and snogged Harry again, Max’s laugh coming to them from the kitchen.

“I’ll snog you both later!”

“What about me?” Blaise demanded.

“I’ll snog you all later!” Max amended and Harry had to break the kiss with Nasta because he was laughing too much to maintain it.

He truly loved these four men so much, and he’d meant what he’d said. He couldn’t imagine his life without them, and though sometimes they made him angry and sad too, those occasions were by far outweighed by so much love, laughter, and happiness. He loved them, and he always would.
They had only just managed to get the kids fed and partially clean again by the time their first guests started arriving and well...they were family, so they were shouted at to grab a kid and clean them off without any embarrassment, or hesitancy.

It was funny though watching Idris chase down Regan with a wet wipe and Max trying to fish Ave out from under the table. Harry sat back and he watched it all and laughed.

“We only came to see our Nassa’s little newborn!” Idris complained, as he finally caught Regan and tried to wipe his face while little hands continuously got in the way and fended off the wipe.

Harry laughed all the more as he cuddled with Taren on the settee watching the carnage. He had Leolin tucked into his other side, away from Taren, but no one could miss, or even misinterpret the huge scowl he was aiming at his newborn brother.

“Is he still not letting anyone touch him?” Aneirin asked, sitting beside Harry, on the same side as Leolin.

Harry shook his head. “He’s gotten very violent in the last few days, since Taren was born. So be careful if you do pick him up, he will go for your face.”

“Maybe we should rename him alley cat?” Idris joked, as he set Regan free and threw the used wipe in the waste bin. He missed, and left it to Max to pick up.

Idris picked up Leolin, who did immediately start squirming and screaming, thrashing out both hands, trying to hit Idris.

“He gets tired right?”

“Very quickly if he keeps that up.” Harry nodded.

“May I hold Taren?” Aneirin asked.

Harry smiled and he passed Taren over to his Grandfather.
“How many grandkids is that now, Nye?” Idris teased. “Man you’re getting old.”

“Four.” Aneirin said with a soft smile, aimed right at Taren. “Though I would argue that all nine of them are my grandchildren.”

“That goes without saying.” Idris nodded. “I doubt that any of us would favour any of the Faerie kin above the others.”

“Faerie kin.” Harry giggled.

“Look, they’re all touched by the Faerie blood, Regan and our little Pengwin are both carriers, they have the golden tint, and I’m sure this little boy will too.”

“Pengy!” Tegan turned the moment Idris had called her a penguin and she had the little stuffed animal in her hands.

“Come and show me!” Idris encouraged, opening his one arm, the one not holding a now exhausted Leolin, and pulling Tegan onto his lap when she ran to him.

Harry could only smile at them both, and then he was distracted as Myron, Richard and Ashleigh arrived.

“It’s good to see you with your clothes on this time!” Richard had to tease him the moment he saw Harry.

“If you’ve got it, flaunt it.” Harry teased right back. There was nothing he could do about just how he’d introduced Taren to the family, and unfortunately the family had been around to see his top dominant on his birthday, so Harry had walked into a full get together completely bollock naked and dirty, bloody and smelly too.

Richard looked shocked, then he recovered and wolf whistled. “You’ve definitely got it, baby.”

Harry laughed and he had to shake his head at the sheer absurdity of everything.
“Stop hitting on my mate.” Max demanded, bringing in a freshly bathed Calix, who’d decided that he would much rather wear his dinner than eat it.

“Damn, I thought you would be gone for longer.” Richard laughed.

Max just rolled his eyes and set Calix free with his clean siblings.

“You were hunting Ave down the last I saw you, where has she gone?” Harry asked.

“Draco has her.” Max told him, bending over the settee to kiss him.

Harry reached up to link his hands behind Max’s head and he kissed all over Max’s face and then nuzzled into his throat.

Max laughed that really deep, properly amused laugh that he sometimes did and Harry grinned to hear it. He loved hearing his mates’ truly laughing. Of course it didn’t mean that all of their other laughs were fake, or forced, just that sometimes they were so genuinely amused that they couldn’t control the laugh.

His parents heard it, and knew what it meant too, as the three of them all shared a soft smile to see their oldest son so happy and in love.

Max didn’t move away from him after that, he sat next to Harry and threw an arm around him, pulling Harry into a cuddle. Harry twisted and rested himself fully on Max and he exhaled deeply, smiling in contentment.

“You make the best pillow.” He murmured softly.

“You’ve had a busy day, just rest.” Max insisted, using his free hand to stroke over Harry’s face, pushing his hair back out of the way.

Harry hummed and nuzzled into Max’s chest.

“Can we just scrap Bolognese from the kids’ menu?” Draco begged, carrying in a clean pair of twin girls. “Their hair is getting really long, and it’s almost impossible to get squashed pasta from their curls! They get it everywhere, Eva even had a bit of carrot in her ear. In her ear, Max!”
Harry giggled, and Max laughed. “Sorry, lover. All those vegetables are good for them, and that sauce I make has eight of them hidden in it. We’ll just have to make do with the mess.”

“You manage to hide eight vegetables in one sauce?” Idris asked. “How?”

“Just blend it all up. Bolognese is a tomato based sauce, it doesn’t matter what else you add to it, it always goes red. I hide onions, tomatoes, courgette, carrots, peas, peppers, leeks and celery in my kiddie Bolognese. They love it.”

“They love putting it all over their heads.” Draco moaned.

Harry giggled again. “Only after they’ve filled their bellies,”

Draco blew out a breath and placed the two clean girls on the floor for their quiet time. Not that it was very quiet, but they only had their quiet toys to play with.

Soon all of the kids were clean and in the family room, and all of their visitors had arrived once more, just like they had for Nasta’s birthday four days ago.

Baby Taren was being passed around in his little blue blanket and Harry was very content to stay on the settee, using Max as a pillow, with his mate’s arms wrapped around him. Because of that it was Nasta who served their guests tea.

“How have you been, Harry?” Alexander asked him, coming to sit on his other side to talk to him.

“A bit sleepier than I usually am, but I’m feeling really good. I was telling the guys that we need more singletons.”

Alexander smiled. “So there is no fall out from you leaving your nest so early?”

Harry shook his head. “No. I was worried that I hadn’t bonded with Taren enough beforehand, but he settled the moment he heard my heartbeat, and I had his scent deeply ingrained. We had bonded enough, despite how short a time it actually was. I’m just more tired than I usually am after coming out of my nest.”
“He’s a beautiful baby.” Alexander praised, and Harry couldn’t help puffing up a little. He laughed with Alexander and Max at his own actions, but they all knew that he couldn’t help it.

“He’s definitely a squirmy baby.” Harry grinned.

“When he stretches he does it full body.” Max added. “All stretched out fingers and pointed toes. We were saying we really don’t blame Harry for being so uncomfortable while pregnant if that’s what our thunderer was doing inside him.”

“It felt like that was what he was doing.” Harry chuckled. “I’m glad that he’s born though, and he can stretch as much as he likes now without my body squashing him up.”

“I’ve heard it being said that Leolin is having difficulties accepting his brother?” Alexander asked gently.

Harry sighed, and looked over to where Aneirin had Leolin in his arms. Their Faerie baby was red faced and angry, but Aneirin refused to put him down.

“Dain and Kailen told us that he’s at an age where he realises what his siblings are, and he sees Taren as a rival for my attention.” Harry said quietly. “It’s all normal for Faeries, but it breaks my heart to see him so upset and angry.”

“How have you boys decided to handle it?”

“We can’t pander to him.” Max said.

Harry snorted. “You mean I can’t pander to him. I have to watch my baby cry out for me and just… just ignore him, even though it kills me inside.”

“We can stop doing it at any moment, Harry, just say the word.” Max told him, laying a kiss to his head.

Harry shook his head. “No we can’t. I will have another heat period, I will have to nest again, I will have more babies for him to be jealous over. What would happen to Taren if I just handed him over to someone else the moment Leolin demands it? What about our other future babies? What will happen to them if I keep pandering to Leolin? I don’t like it. In fact I hate it, but I understand that it needs to be done sooner rather than later. But I will try to keep an even balance between them, I won’t ignore Taren, or the others, in favour of Leolin, but neither am I going to start ignoring Leolin or spending less time with him.”

“It’ll all come with practice.” Max soothed him, stroking his hair gently. “It won’t be forever, Dain and Kailen said he would learn, and like this, he’ll learn quicker.”

Harry nodded and let out a heavy sigh, cuddling back into Max.

Blaise came over with a grizzling Eva and Harry took her when he realised that she was calling for him.

“Has she hurt herself?” Harry asked Blaise.

Blaise shook his head. “No, I think she might be a little tired, she didn’t nap as long as usual.”

Harry nodded and he cuddled his baby girl to sleep in his arms, watching as his other little hellions interacted with their extended family members. Even Lucius had his lap full of Braiden.

Harry got Max to take Eva up to her cot once she was fully asleep, and he went to make more tea by himself, though by Nasta’s unamused look when he carried the tray of two teapots into the room, he would be scolded for it later.

He sat back down with his own cup of tea, handing one to Alexander, who thanked him, and they both went back to watching everything calmly and quietly. Though Idris was winding the kids up more than winding them down to sleep. Nasta’s uncle was more of a terror than Sanex and Caesar. Well…a sober Sanex and Caesar at least, when they were drunk they were unstoppable…and hilarious.

An hour later and Harry had Leolin in his arms, stroking his back to get him to sleep so that he could go up to his cot. Which was made more difficult when Leolin refused to let go of Harry’s hair.

“Ma.” Leolin whispered into his ear.

“It’s alright, Leolin. I have you.” He insisted softly, still stroking over that tiny back.

Leolin was getting sleepier. Harry could hear it in his voice, but he was also fighting sleep every single second, because he finally had what he wanted. His Ma’s full and undivided attention.
Harry sat with him, stayed with him until his Faerie baby eventually fell asleep on him. Leolin would never have been able to outlast him, but that he’d tried so hard upset Harry too.

“Do you want me to take him up, love, or do you want to cuddle for a little while longer?” Max asked him.

“Five more minutes.” Harry insisted, resting his chin on Leolin’s back.

Max nodded and went to round up some other kids. It was now approaching six in the evening, and the usual time that their kids went to bed. Taren was still being passed around, as the main reason that everyone had come, but their family had started saying goodnight, and leaving.

It was only Marianna and Narcissa, still sat sipping tea and chatting. Lucius was sat beside Draco, Calix snuggled on his lap with a teddy bear, and of course Myron, Richard and Ashleigh were still here, mostly because Ashleigh had missed so much of her grandchildren’s lives that she didn’t really want to leave them so soon, but Harry understood that. She had Taren in her arms, looking down at him, but her eyes seemed far away. Harry wondered if she was thinking of her lost son, Theodric.

“Mama, snuggle me sleep.” Regan asked, holding up his arms.

“Max, can you take Leolin now?” Harry asked.

“Sure thing.”

Max came to him and picked up Leolin gently, and he used his other arm to pick up Regan and place him within easy reach of Harry, so that he didn’t have to bend and lift him.

“Come here my big boy.” Harry said, letting Regan climb onto his lap and then snuggling him into a tight hug. He kissed his baby’s face and rocked slowly from side to side.

Harry started humming softly, smiling down at his lovely boy.

“I love you, Regan.” He said.
“Love you, Mummy.” Regan said softly, sleepily, snuggled up to Harry’s chest.

Harry felt complete in this moment. Holding one of his children close to his heart, family all around him, his mates around him. He inhaled deeply, a sense of peace and calm settling over him. This was utter perfection for him.

“You look so contented.” Max chuckled.

Harry opened his eyes to look at Max, he was still smiling happily.

“I am incredibly contented right now.”

“Would a cuddle make it better, or worse?” Max asked. “Because right now I just really want to touch you.”

“Cuddles and cwtches make everything better. Having you touch me could never make anything worse.”

Max sat beside him and threw an arm around him and a drifting Regan. Max couldn’t help himself as he turned to kiss Harry’s cheek, nuzzling into him.

“I love you, so fucking much.” Max declared.

“I love you too, even if you are a big dope.”

Max grinned down at him. “You love me this way, admit it.”

“Of course I do. I love everything about you.” Harry declared. “Even when you drive me berserk, and try to feed me until I burst, I still love you.”

“And I love you even when you put your cold feet on my back or thigh, and when you try to claw my face for trying to take the last chocolate frog.”
Harry laughed, trying to stifle himself purely for Regan’s sake.

“No one takes the last chocolate frog.” He said, letting out a little giggle.

“At least not from you, and not without incurring an injury.”

Harry giggled again and turned to put his face to Max’s neck, kissing him there.

“I love you so much, Maxie.”

Max just held him tighter, and Harry heard him inhaling deeply, sniffing him. His mates did this on occasion, especially if they thought he was sick or injured, if he’d been away from them for a while, or if they were feeling particularly emotional. Harry rather thought that this was because he’d been nesting for two weeks, and then recovering for the last four days, but it could also be that Max was feeling a little emotional with their talk. Or perhaps a blend of both.

Harry said nothing, he just held onto Max tighter, letting him think and feel how he wanted.

“Bello, do you want me to take Regan?” Blaise asked him.

Harry nodded. “If you don’t mind, Blaise.”

“Of course not. Ave went down fine, and Eva was still asleep.” Blaise reported as he picked up Regan carefully and gently. Their little boy didn’t so much as stir as Blaise lifted him from Harry’s lap.

Once free of Regan, Harry swung his legs up and over Max’s lap, shuffling forward to sit on his mate and cuddle properly. Max accommodated him immediately.

“Are you feeling okay?” Max asked.

Harry hummed. “Maybe a little tired now that it’s getting later.”
“Still not hungry?”

“Not in the slightest. Sorry, Max.”

“Don’t be sorry for that, dearest.” Max told him, laying another kiss to Harry’s head. “Just let me know the moment that you’re hungry, even if it’s in the middle of the night...no...even if it’s just five minutes after I’ve finished the dinner dishes and just sat down with a cuppa. You tell me, got it?”

Harry chuckled, but he felt lighter than air as he nodded and rested his head on Max’s chest.

“I will, I promise.”

Max wrapped his arms around him tight, laying his chin on Harry’s head. Sitting quietly like that, Harry fell asleep, as Max knew that he would. It was just six in the evening, but their submissive was still recovering, and while he wasn’t eating too much, he was sleeping a lot more. He would wake up in an hour, complain that he’d fallen asleep in the first place, have a couple cups of tea and a sit down, and then he’d be asleep again.

None of them minded, it was just nice to have Harry back in the house, and to see him resting and recovering from what all of them knew had been an agonising caesarean. They’d seen the freshly healed scar, Max could barely get it from his mind, thick and an angry pinkish-red colour. There was no doubt in any of their minds that it had hurt, and terribly at that, so they wanted Harry to rest as much as possible. Something which wasn’t made any easier by their stubborn mate.

So Max stayed still, and he let Harry sleep on him. He stroked through the unruly hair that he loved, down Harry’s back, and then up again. Anything to keep Harry relaxed and asleep for a little longer.

“Max, we’re going to head off, okay, care bear?”

Max huffed at the hated nickname from his Dad, but he nodded.

“Yeah, thanks for coming, Dad.”

Richard grinned. “We wouldn’t have said no. Though we’re glad that Harry was at least dressed for the occasion this time.”
“Don’t tease him, he was absolutely mortified.” Max chuckled.

“Yeah, it’s happened to all of us at some point.” Richard said, giving Harry’s head a gentle touch. “Look after him, Max. We’ll see you soon.”

“Bye, Dad.”

Max went back to stroking Harry gently, and when he next looked up, it was just them on their own. Taren was in Blaise’s arms, just wrapped up and being cuddled. Draco was sat reading a book, and Nasta looked to be taking a nap himself.

The house was silent, with only a few murmurs from Blaise, or a page turning from Draco, and it was nice. But he needed to sort out dinner, so he sighed and shifted Harry as gently as he possibly could, slipped himself out from under him and then laid him on a stack of cushions instead.

“Do you want help with dinner?” Blaise asked him, looking up.

“No, I’ll be fine, love.” Max insisted, going to Blaise and kissing him, before kissing Taren. “Just keep an eye on Harry for me, he might wake up in pain now.”

Blaise nodded and snuggled Taren back in his arms, though now he kept an ear out for Harry too. Harry didn’t wake up, and neither did Nasta, but Taren started wailing when he wanted a nappy change.

“Is he okay?” Draco asked, looking up from his book.

“Fine, he just wants to be nice and clean. Thankfully he’s not another Calix, and he does wake up for wet nappies.” Blaise grinned.

“I hope we never have another baby like him.” Draco insisted. “I love the boy to bits, but dealing with his nappy rash was something I never want to repeat.”

“Agreed.” Blaise nodded. “Thankfully Taren isn’t another Calix and we don’t have to deal with any nappy rash, or at least not because he wasn’t crying to let us know he was wet.”
“Thank Merlin.” Draco said, giving him a grin.

“Hey, lovers. Dinner’s on the table.” Max said. “Let me grab Nas.”

“What about Harry?” Draco asked worriedly.

Max shook his head. “Sleep is the best thing for him at the moment. He wasn’t hungry when he went to sleep, so we’ll leave him for now and see what he feels like when he wakes up.”

Max went to shake Nasta, and he did so gently, also laying a kiss to his mouth. Nasta hummed gently and suddenly Max was pulled down onto his lap, into strong arms.

“You, out of everyone, should know better than to start something you’re not willing to finish.” Nasta mumbled sleepily.

“Who says I’m not going to finish it later?” Max grinned, leaning forward and snogging Nasta. “But for now, dinner is on the table.”

Nasta hummed again and gently pushed Max aside and he stood to stretch. Max heard his back crack and he smiled, standing and laying his hand on Nasta’s back, slipping it down to his bum.

Nasta gave him a look, but snorted a laugh. Then he caught sight of Harry.

“Is he okay?”

“He’s fine.” Max assured. “He wasn’t hungry earlier, so I think it’s best to just let him sleep while he can.”

Nasta nodded, walking into the kitchen to see both Blaise and Draco already eating. Baby Taren was laying in the bassinet at the top of the table, and he couldn’t help but go to him, and give him a gentle kiss.

“He’s had a nappy change, but he’ll want feeding soon.” Blaise told him.
“After that we can tuck ourselves into bed.” Max laughed. “We’re not going to be good for anything else.”

“I’m on night duty, tonight.” Draco told them.

“I sterilised all the bottles this afternoon.” Nasta said, sitting in his place and picking up his fork. “We’ve used two since then, so he should have six left to use.”

“They’re at the back of the counter, by the kettle.” Max nodded.

“Leolin will be awake at maybe eleven for a bottle, he didn’t take much before he went to sleep.” Blaise warned them.

“Am I the only one who wishes this little phase of his will end?” Max asked.

“I think it’s safe to say that we all feel the same way.” Draco agreed. “But it’s one of the challenges we face having a Faerie child. Just think ahead, to when our Drackens are sixteen and throwing emotional tantrums because of their inheritances, and trying to fly the nest to have their own kids.”

Max grunted and threw his head back. “Don’t remind me of that. We already have four Drackens. I mean, how the hell are we going to handle Eva and Ave having an inheritance together?!”

“Firewhiskey.” Blaise offered.

Max laughed, and even Nasta managed a snort of amusement.

“I don’t think it’ll be enough.” Draco told him seriously. “I don’t think vintage Firewhiskey will be enough. Maybe we should build a bomb shelter?”

“I don’t think that would protect us.” Max pointed out, jabbing his fork at Draco.
“It’s not for protection, it’s so that we can hide.” Draco sniffed.

All four of them laughed at that.

“Oh no, just imagine if all five of the Quintuplets had been Drackens!” Max said.

“Max, stop jinxing us!” Blaise complained. “Harry only wants singletons from now on, and you’re jinxing him with five baby Drackens.”

Max laughed. “If anyone could do it, it’s him.”

“Don’t want to do it.” Came a sleepy mumble from the living room door.

All four of them looked up to see Harry rubbing sleep from his eyes, padding towards them.

“How are you feeling, love?” Max asked, and as the closest to Harry, as he’d walked up behind him, he abandoned his dinner to check on him, wrapping an arm around his hips, even as Harry hugged him.

“Fine. I can’t believe I fell asleep again, but I want tea.”

Max grinned to himself. He really knew Harry so well by now.

“I’ll get that for you.” He insisted.

Harry scoffed and pushed away from him, going to the kettle himself.

“You finish eating. I can do it.” He said stubbornly.

Of course the four of them watched Harry intently, as he boiled the kettle and sorted himself out a cup of tea, reaching for the bottle of honey and squeezing a good glob into his cup with a happy smile that he didn’t know he was doing, which made the rest of them smile to see.

He didn’t sit down however, he went to hover over Taren, touching him, and assessing him critically with his eyes.

“He’s wet a nappy, but hasn’t woken for a feed yet.” Blaise reported dutifully.

Harry nodded, looking up only briefly to smile at Blaise, before dropping his gaze back to the four day old baby.

“Are you hungry or in any pain?” Max asked, once he’d finished his food and pushed his plate away.

“No, I might need a pain reliever to sleep tonight, but it’s more a sore ache at the moment. It’s just getting worse the longer I’m up and moving.”

Max nodded. “Do you want to go and sit down in the living room with Taren?”

Harry nodded, putting down his tea and picking up the baby. All four of them grimaced, as they didn’t really want him picking up and carrying anything, but they knew if they tried to take the baby from him now, Harry would get upset. So instead Max picked up Harry’s tea and escorted him to the living room and got Harry settled on the settee comfortably, helping Harry to arrange Taren against a cushion, and handing over the tea.

“There, all comfy and content.” Max grinned. A grin that widened when Harry chuckled.

“I really am feeling alright.” Harry insisted. “Just a bit sore.”

“Let me know the moment that soreness changes to pain, okay?”

Harry nodded. “I will.”

Max bent forward and kissed Harry’s forehead before heading back to the kitchen to sort out the dishes and make more tea for everyone.
“Thank you for dinner, Max.” Draco told him.

Max swooped onto him and snogged him. “You’re welcome, gorgeous. Now go and keep Harry company while I make us tea.”

Max didn’t want to wash the dishes by hand today, but with a newborn in the house, he refused to risk the magic use, so he stood and he washed the dishes, he boiled the kettle and set up four cups and a teapot, before he dried the dishes and put them away, and only then did he feel like he could relax, as he poured the boiling water into the teapot, into the four cups, all the while listening to the murmur of voices come from the opposite side of the house. He knew they were talking at a normal level, but to him it sounded like whispering, with the occasional laugh. This house seemed so small when the kids were all up and awake, running around the place, but right now, it seemed like a palace.

He made the tea, made sure he had the bottle of honey, before he carried the tray into the living room, and suddenly he could breathe, and he smiled as he placed the tray down and his mates were all around him.

He was dealing with his issues left over from the massive bust up, issues which had only recently come to light when Harry had been so heavily pregnant. His nightmares were easing off now that Taren had been born, and both he and Harry had come out alive.

None of his mates knew about his feelings, or thoughts on the matter, only the therapist he hadn’t thought he’d needed, until he’d started talking to him. Of course he knew that Nasta suspected, out of all of them it was bound to be Nasta who saw something, or guessed at what he was going through, but thus far Nasta hadn’t approached him to ask, and Max wasn’t quite ready to share his feelings on the matter off his own back.

It made him feel better to think that perhaps all of them were thinking and feeling the same, but he was worried that he was the only one, as he was the only one who needed Harry to be right next to him all times, it was only him who had needed to have Harry wrapped up in his arms in bed at night. He’d been paranoid about every move that Harry made, terrified that every bend or shift would kill him because of the damage done to him during that fight. It made him sick sometimes, to even think of it, and at night his nightmares kept him awake, replaying the same horrors over and over, as he held Harry close to him, checking constantly through the night that Harry was still alive and breathing.

He still wasn’t over it, despite Harry and Taren being back in the house, and he hated being away from Harry, petrified that he might die from his injuries while he wasn’t there, despite the fact that he didn’t have any injuries from that fight anymore. He couldn’t help his fear, or the way he wanted to hover over his lover.

He was trying his best to control the fear, and the urge to smother Harry, and act like his usual self. His therapist was helping greatly with that, but Max just wanted to be himself again. He wanted to be able to deal with these fears without them affecting the rest of his mateship.
“Hey, are you okay?” Blaise asked, sitting next to him and tipping himself sideways to rest on him.

“Yeah, just lost in thought.” Max replied, smiling at Blaise and giving him a kiss.

Blaise kissed him back and snuggled into his side. Max inhaled deeply, and wrapped his arm around Blaise, cuddling him in tight. When he thought that he could have also lost Blaise in that fight. Merlin, why the fuck couldn’t he get past that damn fight? Why did he have to keep thinking about it, why did he torment himself like this? It had happened in May of last year, it was almost a year ago now, and he’d thought that he was over it. He’d thought that he’d forgiven the fight, and that he was over the thoughts of Harry and Blaise dying, but as it turned out, he wasn’t over any of it. He was still struggling and coming to terms with it. Harry’s pregnancy really hadn’t helped, as he’d seen Harry’s belly swelling with their baby Taren, and he’d worried that it might split Harry at the seams and kill him.

Max sighed. He’d been so overprotective, so worried, that now that nothing had actually happened, he was confused by it. Relieved, of course, but confused too. He was waiting for the other shoe to drop, and that wait was driving him insane.

“More tea.” Harry demanded with a cheeky grin, so much like his usual self that Max was hard pressed to remember why he was so worried, but then Harry winced as he stretched forward too far, and he remembered all over again that Harry was hurt, and injured, and could have died, and his mind circled in on that once again.

“Do you want to tell me what’s wrong?” Nasta asked him an hour later, coming to sit beside him.

“Nothing. I don’t know what you mean.” Max insisted.

Nasta gave him an unimpressed look. “You don’t have to tell me, you haven’t thus far, but ever since Taren was born…no, it was a few weeks before he was born, you’ve been acting strangely, Max. I can see it, we all can. I’ve left you alone, to give you time to come to me if you need to, but you haven’t. Now what is the issue?”

Max didn’t know if he could put his fears into words. He had known that Nasta knew, of course he knew, Nasta knew pretty much everything that went on in their house, he was their top dominant for a reason. But that still didn’t make it easy to confess to his fears, all the nightmares, and his awful thoughts about Harry and Blaise dying.

Nasta sighed. “Is it to do with Harry giving birth?”
Max slumped and he rested himself against Nasta.

“Sort of. I’m still hung up over the fight, Nas. I can’t let go of it.” He admitted in a whisper. “I’m… I’m having nightmares, ever since Harry hit the third trimester, and started getting so big with Taren. I just have nightmares of him bursting, and bleeding out before we can help him. I thought I was over it, that I’d forgiven and moved on, but when Harry started getting bigger, all of my fears came back and escalated. I felt like I couldn’t let him out of my sight, like I couldn’t let him go. I had to be holding him, I had to be able to feel his breathing, I’d wake up in the night to check that he was still alive. Now that he’s here, he’s home, and he and Taren are completely fine, it’s sort of…”

“Anti-climactic?” Nasta offered when Max paused.

Max nodded. “Yeah, I’m waiting for the punch line, I’m waiting for the worst to happen and I feel awful for that, I feel guilty just thinking it, but I’m anticipating it, just waiting for it to happen, and I can’t move past it.”

“Have you spoken to you therapist about all of this?” Nasta asked seriously.

Max nodded. “Yes. Apparently having them both back in the house, completely fine, is supposed to help, but it’s not, Nasta. I’m still having those awful thoughts. It’s been almost a year, and I’m still worried that Harry might die from it.”

“It was a terrible ordeal, Max. We’re never going to be completely over it. It’s scarred us forever. We’ll never be able to truly forget about it, sitting together just waiting for news, hearing that Blaise had died, watching Harry writhe and scream in pain, hearing his delusions as he hallucinated on those painkillers. We’ll never forget that, we have to learn to live with it.”

“Is that even possible?” Max asked humourlessly. “I mean, are you over it? Can you live with it?”

Nasta looked at Harry sat sandwiched between Draco and Blaise, Taren in Draco’s arms, as the three of them chatted and laughed together, waiting for the newborn to wake up for a feed so that they could all go up to bed.

“I can live with it.” He said softly. “Because the alternative will rip us apart and send us back into that unstable abyss. I won’t risk Harry and Blaise being upset, I won’t unsettle the kids, but more than that, Max, I won’t risk our family. I will never again allow a situation to arise where we’re stripped of Harry’s care under the Submissive Protection Act, I won’t go through that again, and I won’t put him or the kids through that again. So for that reason, I can live with what happened, but I will also never forget, and I will never allow it to happen again.”

“It’s just me then.” Max sighed sadly.

“It’s never just you.” Nasta said, leaning over and kissing his cheek. “We all think back to that fight from time to time, we all look around at what we might have thrown away over one fight. We all have ‘what if’ scenarios running around in our heads. It’s not just you.”

“I’m struggling with it, Nas. I thought I was okay. I thought I was moving on, but when I saw Harry swelling, my fear took over and I couldn’t think of anything else.”

Nasta hummed. “Look at him, Max.”

Max did as instructed, and he looked to Harry, drinking his third cup of tea since he’d woken up from his nap, sitting between their two younger dominants, and he watched as Harry gently took Taren’s hand and rubbed his thumb over the tiny fingers, before going back to his tea.

“Do you think you could do without this?”

“No.” He replied immediately. “I don’t want to go back to that time, Nas. I’m happy, I’m just…I’m worried too.”

Nasta nodded. “Understandable. It’ll take more time, that’s all.”

“It’s February, this happened last May, Nasta. I should be over it.”

“It was all brought back to you because of Harry’s pregnancy. It was a delicate situation. I keep thinking about what might have happened if he’d had twins, or triplets. What would have happened to him then?”

“He said he’d have the selective reduction.”
“He says that he would have, but can you really see our Harry agreeing to it?”

Max swallowed as he thought of that. Harry had told them he would have agreed to the selective reduction, but if it had come down to it, would he have actually gone through with the procedure?

“Things could have been worse, Caru, but on the other hand they could have been a hell of a lot better too. We just have to work with what we have, remember what actually happened instead of what could have happened, and be thankful that we all made it out alive, and together. There’s no changing what happened, but how we proceed from now on, that we can control, and I’ve promised to never let anything like that dark time in our mateship happen again, and I’m fully committed to ensuring that I keep that promise.”

“I can do that too.” Max said, smiling softly.

Nasta kissed him again, on the mouth this time, and Harry saw it.

“Hey! Don’t go starting anything like that when you know I can’t join in for another few weeks!” He complained, grinning at them.

“You’d never know, you’ll be asleep in an hour!” Max teased him, feeling lighter, and happier. Fucking Nasta and his advice, he could become a therapist himself if he wanted to.

“I’ll know if you have!” Harry insisted.

Nasta joined in, scoffing loudly. “No you wouldn’t. A few cups of tea and you’re out by nine O’clock and you wouldn’t wake up if there was an earthquake.”

“I mean it, if I find out you’ve been having sex behind my back…”

“Sometimes it’s over your back, and you still don’t wake up.” Blaise cut in.

Harry laughed, making them all feel lighter and happier, just because he was so happy.
“You’d better not! I demand compensation!”

“We’ll give you an IOU booklet, so you can cash in on the sex when you’re recovered enough.” Max joked, smiling naturally.

“Ooo, I want one. How many coupons do I have?”

“Hmm…let’s see, how many times have we had sex without him since he left us?” Max asked in a faux considering tone, even going so far as to put a finger to his lips and tapping, playing at thinking very hard, when all of them knew damn well how many times it had been.

“Once.” Draco insisted.

“Hmm, yes, it was just the once, wasn’t it?” Nasta said, smiling as he remembered his birthday morning, just after Harry had given birth.

“Okay, you get one coupon.” Max told Harry.

“You’ve had sex once without me?” Harry demanded. “I don’t believe any of you. I want at least six coupons.”

“Six?! Damn, I wish we’d had enough time and energy for six sessions!” Max laughed.

“We need to have five more to make up for those missing sessions!” Blaise laughed.

“No.” Harry cut in stubbornly. “Six is my benchmark, any more that you have now will be added on too. I want my coupons.”

“I’m sure you think we’re sex crazed maniacs.”

“Oh, are you not?” Harry teased, grinning.
“We’re really not, it’s always you teasing us!” Draco insisted.

Harry laughed loudly. “Who are you and what have you done with my mates?”

“He really does think we’re the sex crazed ones. Him, while he’s off flaunting himself in tiny skirts and lacy pants to rile us up!” Max chuckled.

“Don’t remind him of that!” Draco complained.

“Oh yeah. If I wear a skirt, you’ll all crack sooner.”

“Don’t do anything you’re not ready for, lover, let yourself recover, and then when you feel up to it, then you can wear the skirts, or those cute little boy shorts you have stashed away.” Max tried.

Harry squinted at him. “What have you done with my Maxie?”

Max laughed. “It’s still me, I just don’t want you to be hurt or in pain. I’ll happily give you your love coupons though.”

Harry smiled widely. “I can’t wait until I’m better so I can cash them in.”

“We’ll take it day by day.” Nasta said seriously.

Harry nodded. “I’m feeling alright, a bit sore, but it’s not like pain or anything, it’s more an annoyance, especially if I reach for something, or bend down and it twinges. Sleeping is the worst, because I move and roll in my sleep, and that can hurt and wake me up if I don’t remember to take a pain potion first, before I go to sleep.”

“We’ll make sure that you remember to take it.” Nasta said, smiling.

Harry grinned back. “Having a singleton is the greatest. I get this cute, adorable little baby, and even though he was nine pounds, I feel infinitely better than I have with any of the others.”

“Even Braiden?” Blaise asked.

Harry hummed. “It’s hard to compare it, I carried Braiden three years ago, and that’s a long time to remember, but on the other hand, I almost lost him and the pain of that could be influencing my thoughts. But still, singletons are definitely better. More singletons, please.”

The four of them laughed at Harry’s cheesy little grin.

“You’re such a goof.” Max insisted.

Harry scoffed. “You love me and everyone knows it.”

“I wouldn’t have it any other way.” Max agreed.

The five of them settled, they shared another cup of tea together, Harry took a pain potion in preparation, as he was starting to doze against Draco’s shoulder, and then their little Taren woke up, a small wail in the back of his throat, which steadily built to a full on scream.

“Damn, he’s loud when the rest of the house is quiet.” Max complained, as he threw the readymade bottle over to Blaise, who was the one holding Taren.

Blaise caught the bottle one handed, and he tested the temperature out of habit before plugging up Taren’s hungry, little mouth. The cries cut off and they all watched, infinitely interested in their newborn son feeding.

“I’ll go check on the kids, then we can all go to bed.” Nasta told them, breaking the transfixed spell by standing up.

Max watched him go and he heaved in a heavy sigh. He could get better. He could let go of the past and move on from this. A few more days and Harry wouldn’t even need pain potions, and in a week or so he would be completely back to himself, fully healed, running and rolling around as normal.
He did think that these feelings he still carried were because Harry had gotten pregnant before he’d been fully healed from that fight, and had almost been gutted. Or at the very least that had not helped his Dracken side to settle after the fight, because Harry had been so worried and stressed over it, and the court case really hadn’t helped the matter either. So it seemed more like everything had been extended by the pregnancy, instead of one taking over from the other.

Max sighed and tried to push those thoughts from his mind, as Taren was winded gently and then changed again in quick succession.

“Let’s get you up to bed, love.” Draco said gently to Harry, who was trying so hard to force himself to stay awake.

“Taren.” Harry fretted.

“Blaise has him. He’s been fed and he’s just getting his nappy changed. He’ll be up just after us. Come on.”

“Carry him, Draco.” Max said.

Draco looked at him, nodded, and then gently lifted Harry into his arms.

“Can walk.” Harry argued sleepily.

“Not up those stairs you can’t.” Draco refuted, carrying Harry from the room and up to bed.

Max stayed with Blaise and Taren, taking the dirty nappy sack from Blaise and going to put it in the bin. He made sure all the doors and windows were shut and locked, that all the lights were off, before going into the living room and taking the tray of mugs, the used bottle, and the teapot back into the kitchen. He washed them all out, dried them and put them away, before filling the bottle steriliser and setting that off. It would only take five minutes, and that would give him time to wipe down all his counters.

“Max, why aren’t you upstairs?” Nasta asked him, looking at him from the doorway.

“I was just sterilising the bottles.” Max insisted, looking up at his top dominant.
“I did that this afternoon. Taren has enough bottles to last the night feeds, and his first morning feed. It could have been done then.”

“I never wiped down my counters after dinner.”

Nasta sighed. “Is this really what you want to be doing at half nine in the night? Or is it something else?”

“I won’t sleep properly if I haven’t cleaned the counters. Not with Leolin and a newborn in the house. It only takes ten minutes, Nas.”

“Fine, you do the counters, I’ll get the bottles.” Nasta compromised, moving to the sink and washing his hands thoroughly, before going to the steamer and opening it, taking out the cleaned teats and bottles.

“I’ve cleaned where we usually line them up.” Max told him, moving to wiping down the island counter.

Nasta nodded and he lined up the bottles beside the kettle, and in the group of other bottles that had already been sterilised, putting the assembled tops in front of each bottle. He made sure that the formula powder they used for Taren was on the other side of the kettle, and that the kettle had enough water in it for the first feed, with a little extra because they believed that Leolin would wake up for a feed too.

“Are you done?” Nasta asked Max, as his mate threw another wipe into the bin and then went to wash his hands.

“I’m done.”

“Come on then, those lot upstairs will already be asleep.”

“Were the kids okay?” Max asked him.
“Perfectly fine, and all fast asleep.”

Max followed Nasta up the stairs and they both slowed their steps and quietened down as they entered the master bedroom. Harry was fast asleep, snuggled up to Blaise, who had his arms wrapped tightly around him.

Draco was just coming out of the en suite, a bit of white toothpaste foam on his lip still.

“Come here, lover.” Max teased, pulling Draco into his arms and reaching up to wipe the spodge away with his thumb. “There we go.”

“I thought I was at least going to get a kiss.” Draco complained in a whisper.

Max stifled a laugh, but dutifully bent to kiss his mate, before he and Nasta both got themselves ready for bed. Stripping off their clothes and putting them in the hamper, using the bathroom, getting into their pyjamas and brushing their teeth.

Draco was on the night duty tonight, and he was impatiently waiting for them to finish, and he hustled Nasta into the bed, shoving him up towards Harry before lying down himself, closest to Taren’s bassinet. Not that it mattered, as Taren’s cry was so loud and piercing, that all of them heard him regardless of where they were lying. They could have been sleeping in the guest room down the hall and they’d still hear him.

Max chuckled softly, even as he climbed into the bed on the other side, next to Blaise. He was still worried, still scared that the other shoe would drop and that Harry and Taren might be hurt. But Nasta knew now. Nasta would look after them all, he always did. Max could always rely on Nasta for everything, he just needed to make sure that this time around, that he made sure that Nasta was well looked after, and satisfied, to make up for all his care of them as individuals, and as a family. They couldn’t let Nasta get burned out or so frayed that he snapped. They needed him, all of them needed him, so Max made a mental note, right before he dozed off to sleep, that he would make the time to pin Nasta down and take the burden of being the top dominant from his shoulders every now and then, in the only way he knew how, by pleasuring the fuck out of him. He smiled tiredly to himself, he would enjoy that, and he hoped that Nasta would too.

Chapter End Notes

A/N: I got distracted by The Black Heir and the forced myself to keep to it to break the block I’ve had on it for the last year, and it actually worked, so I’ve been sucked back into The Black Heir, but I’ve finally finished this chapter off ready to post, and we finally have little Thunderer’s name! I hope that you all enjoyed it, as I’m going to go over to The Black Heir for a little while.

That’s all for now, thank you all for your comments and observations, I’ll be back soon enough, I imagine, with chapter 124, but until then, lovelies,

StarLight Massacre. X

Works inspired by this one: The Rise of the Drackens by Marikili

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!