Summary

AU Crossover with The Chronicles of Thomas Covenant. A butterfly effect ripples across the entirety of Westeros when Jon Arryn is not killed. Destiny is torn asunder as many who were meant to be forged by the fires of war and heartache are instead carrying on in peace, and one gentle-hearted Targaryen princess is transformed by an unimaginable horror that will shift the entire course of fate for everyone.

Notes

AN #1: This work is based on the books ASOIAF. I start my story with the ages of the characters as they were in A Game Of Thrones. The only thing that HBO contributes to this story is Peter Dinklage as Tyrion Lannister and Diana Rigg as Olenna.

AN #2: I am no Mark Twain or F. Scott Fitzgerald so please bear with my writing skills.
AN #3: Will have graphic F/F sex. These are healthy, passionate women who want to express their love for each other. Their will be a lot of masturbation. We all do it.

AN #4: This story will be epic in length.

AN #5: The Chronicles of Thomas Covenant will slowly be blended into the story. These character will be supporting characters and viewpoints will always be those of ASOIAF characters for this book.

AN #6: Story written in MS Word. Prophecy was written with the font Script MT Bold. Still fuming that was stripped out. If you want to see how it looked copy and paste into Word with that font.
Summary: The butterfly effect. A butterfly beats its wings and no one feels the flutter of air. The insect beats its wings on its erratic random path. Ripples radiate out in ever increasing circles from the beat of those wings. The forces ever building. Across the world those changes multiple and build until hurricanes and firestorms rage. These ripples also rip and tear at the fabric of what can and what should be. Westeros had its butterfly effect, an event that was foretold to occur by seers of old. The certainty of this moment did not occur. From that seeming one small event the ripples ripped and tore time apart. The fates cruelly twisted and destiny torn asunder. The great Houses did not commit regicide. Jon Snow still went to the wall but Arya was not forged in the fires of heartache and hate. The faceless god did not transform her into a weapon strong enough to bring the gods down low. And Daenerys Targaryen: The princess of fate and destiny around which all orbit. She was to be forged with slow blows of the hammer on melted Valyrian steel. Shaping and folding with slow deliberate precision. There was no slow sprinkling of magical portent into the spiritual being of the Dragon Queen. The butterfly wings tore her fate asunder and instead caste her headless into the raging forge of doom. Kingdoms and the gods themselves will tremble. Who will survive her wrath?

... prophecies are so subtle and dangerous. The inevitability of a prophecy once heard. History is full of mighty heroes, great houses, fighting to avoid their fate, and, thus, only ensuring they fulfill their prophecies of doom and destruction. Westeros had its prophecy ... one of death, one of destruction; one of doom and potential victory at the birth of Spring but so much pain, so much loss ... Strife and discord the crucibles of destiny; the fires that create greatness... The death of Jon Arryn was prophesied by seers of old. His death would spring forth great events and great devastation BUT eventual victory over the forces of darkness and death. The seers say that only great suffering and supreme heartache can forge the strongest human metal ... ... Jon Arryn did not die ... ... now the fates are in disarray! Can victory still be achieved? The price would have been great, but, would it not have been worth it to overcome the Wight King? ... ... I wonder ... what new prophecy will arise from the ashes of what might have been ... will a new Phoenix arise ... one with a nobler more enlightened vision ... one of Hope ... one of Reclamation ...

Cersei

There! Cersei spotted the black dragon flying high on the thermals as she stood on the balcony of her personal suite drinking a cup of wine. Off to the high right she spotted a green star with bronze highlights, and beside it a white gleam streaked with gold markings glinting bright in the hot sun. The dragons slowly circled back over Kings Landing. They were beautiful from a distance; like the Bird of Paradise the Summer Islanders sometimes brought to court. But these were no pretty beacons of beauty. They were angels of death.

Why has the Targaryen witch not attacked?! Cersei wondered to herself. For four months all the Targaryen bitch had done was fly her damn dragons up and down the length of Westeros. Not once had she attacked. Not once had she exacted revenge for the wrongs done her.
“What is her game?” she whispered. As a Lioness of the house Lannister, Cersei knew what the new head of the pride did when it conquered and disposed the King of Beasts. The offspring and in this case, the mate, would be killed. It was bloody, the way of nature. Cersei clenched her fist in anger. “Everyone has abandon us!” she cried out, with no one to hear her.

One by one the great houses had either pledged allegiance to House Targaryen or stayed neutral. These Houses had done so without a fight or even a whimper of protest. The house of Lannister among the first to bend the knee. Of course her father would side with the winning hand. Even the great Eddard Stark had not called his banners to Robert’s defense.

Could she blame them? Cersei’s mind became weak in a moment of doubt, her thoughts racing as she reflected on past actions. “Stop it!” she screamed to herself. She remembered the day the ravens came announcing that Daenerys Targaryen had landed and was reclaiming what was rightfully hers; that what had been taken by treachery would now be restored. That the rightful queen had returned.

Cersei mused spitefully over all the titles the bitch had used in letter. Daenerys Targaryen, the First of Her Name, Queen of Meereen, Queen of the Andals and the Rhoynar and the First Men, Lord of the Seven Kingdoms, Protector of the Realm, Khaleesi of the Great Grass Sea, Breaker of Chains, called Daenerys Stormborn, the Unburnt, Mother of Dragons. The woman certainly had a swelled head and unfounded belief in her station.

In the letter, Daenerys promised that only the House of Baratheon would suffer justice. All others would be given amnesty if they would only bend the knee to her. She would champion the poor and lift up the downtrodden while bringing justice and equality to all. She would do all in her power to bring about reconciliation, and her fervid hope was for peace and the forgiving of past sins. She had written: … My mind cannot sleep with the endless dreams of destruction that haunt my days and nights, death and never ending strife; my body has seen too much death, heard the screams of the dying, smelled the stench of war; my soul is weary beyond measure. I want to fight no more forever … Cersei had almost believed the words when she first read them, they had been so compelling. Then she realized that this was the imp’s doing. He had written this drivel to seduce the weak minded. Cersei was not so easily fooled.

A flash of white and gold caught her eye, as suddenly the dragon was plummeting towards the city. On the roof tops she could see that children were cheering as it dove. Cheering! The queen fumed. The dragon pulled up just over the rooftops and flew by at a dizzying speed just to disappear over the roof of her abode, the buffeting wind swirling her golden locks. The low born citizens continued cheering for the dragon queen and her dragons, leaving Cersei to shake with ire at her subjects’ treachery.

The dragons had first appeared for today well over two hours ago. They had come in riding up high on invisible thermals. They flew so high. They were hard to even see against the sun and pale thin clouds. Then they would slowly drop lower to buzz the city roof tops one at a time before rising up to disappear in the sun and high thin clouds.

Several times she had been scared witless when she had been gazing on the green or white dragon and the black behemoth had shot by her balcony the force of the wind slamming into her shocking her with shockwaves of buffeting air that filled her with terror.

Twice the fucking bitch had done this to her on purpose she was sure. She knew this was her domicile and was mocking her. Bitch!

She felt so alone.

Even though she had known the usurper was coming, the letter by raven had been like a reverberating strike on the drum of doom. Robert, the great drunken lout, disappeared into his private retreat in the Kings Wood that very night. Also, on that same night, Joffrey suddenly started to recover from his wasting illness. He told his mother that he must go on a quest to find the lost Valyrian blade of House Lannister, his voice quaking with fear like a child. She had wanted to slap him.

Tommen merely read quietly in the library. “I will meet my doom with quite resolve,” he said, looking up at her with his soft intelligent eyes. “I do not fear death …it is life’s victim I do not wish to become.” He had told her when she asked if he was afraid that night.

She had fled from the room.

Jamie had left her two and half years ago with that damn, fucking cow. How could he have left her?
and now with twins besides?

In Daenerys’ letter she had found out that Tyrion was now the Targaryen’s Hand. Of course he was.
The coward had quickly left his family to join what he believed to be the winning side.

I wonder if she will kill us quickly or make us suffer? Cersei mused softly to herself as she refilled her wine glass and went back out to the balcony to watch her destiny fly above her.

As if Daenerys’ letter wasn’t enough to deal with, she had also received an accompanying letter from Myrcella. Cersei had been shocked as she read about her daughter’s time in Dorne. She had hoped at first that it was a forgery, but there was no doubt that the insolent child had wrote the letter in her own hand. Myrcella had proudly proclaimed that she was not marrying Trystane Martell but had already married his sister Arianne, and that she was also married to the bastard daughters of Oberyn, Dorea, and Loreza. She could only stare at the parchment with her mouth agape, wondering if her daughter had gone insane. This was both unnatural and obscene! Myrcella had ended the script with the passage “I am following the Targaryen way, and I will marry who I want! In Dorne I have the freedom to follow my heart!”

Cersei cursed her daughter that night.

The freedom to follow one’s heart, Cersei mused as she drank her wine, swirling the dregs in her cup. What a novel concept. She stared down at her now empty wine cup, pondering. The freedom to follow my heart. The thought pained her for some reason. If only she had been born a man Cersei thought bitterly. She had always been trapped, despite being the equal of any man.

Cersei walked back into her room to refill her wine cup, reaching for the decanter as the door boomed open. She whirled around to bark at the intruder, then froze, her mouth agape.

Robert stood in the doorway.

“What are you looking at woman?!” he boomed to his wife as he walked into the room.

“Robert?” Cersei asked softly confused.

“Who else would it be?” the six-foot eight man answered his slender wife, taking the wine cup from Cersei’s hands. “I think that is quite enough, Cersei,” he told her gently.

“What the hell happened to you?” Cersei spoke up to the man before her, shocked.

This was not the man that had disappeared four months ago into the King’s Wood with his tail between his fat ass cheeks. That man had been a drunken, obese, unkempt buffoon. The Robert before her now had dropped at least five stones in weight. His greying, unkempt beard that had made him look so old and slovenly had been shaved off. His eyes were clear and his back straight. His body was hard again, and his mailed top was filled out with muscle.

Robert chuckled down at his wife. “Close your mouth or you’ll let flies in woman!” he laughed. He took her hand and led her back out to the balcony. “I am about to die and I wanted … no I needed to meet it as a man. The man I used to be.” He said softly, looking up at the dragons that were circling lower.

They stood together, watching the dragons perform aerial tricks and making complicated patterns in the sky, doing fierce rolls and sharp ascents before dropping again.

“Why hasn’t the fucking cunt attacked?!” Cersei asked her husband with a tone of exasperation and a child’s need to understand.

Robert looked down at her and then laughed loudly. “Isn’t it obvious woman?”

“I wouldn’t be asking if I knew Robert!” the queen fumed up to her husband.

“Cersei, think about it.” he told her looking in her eyes. When she merely stared up at him blankly he sighed. “Cersei, with her dragons flying the breadth of Westeros she has conquered the land without firing an arrow or a stroke of the sword. Between her restraint and her letter she has won.” Robert looked back up at the black dragon. “If only I had ruled with half as much wisdom …” the tall Baratheon softly spoke more to himself than to her.

Cersei looked up and remembered the incident six weeks ago, when the black dragon had suddenly appeared above the temple of the Seven Gods. The Targaryen had unsheathed her Valyrian sword from the scabbard on her back. Cersei remembered how the sword glowed a strange blue. She had seen Valyrian blades and none had glowed bright blue like the Targaryen’s blade did. The woman had hacked off the tops of the spires as she had her dragon hop lightly from spire to spire, his talons barely scratching the shimmering crystal. She had only been able to stare.

There was a shocking audacity to the act. Cersei had found herself awed to see the woman so expertly using a sword - the way Daenerys had leaned so far out from her dragon to lop the spires off. The woman had an obvious strength. Cersei had seen many a tournament, and the woman knew how to use that sword. It both frightened and titillated her. She had also found herself envious. She had wanted to take up the sword when she was a girl.

The House of Highgarden had declared their allegiance to the rightful ruler of Westeros the very next day.

“They are beautiful” Robert spoke again, low voice still soft. “I can see the queen on Drogon … so beautiful.” He looked up as the black dragon slowly flew past the window, the queen tilting her head to the throngs that had gathered on the rooftops, wildly cheering for her. Her long silver blond hair was whipped proudly in the dragon’s slip stream. A chiming followed in her wake.

Robert sighed, and Cersei felt her old jealousy flare. Some things never changed.

Cersei spat at Robert as she looked at the people cheering the usurper. “They need to be punished … they are traitors!”

“Oh shut up Cersei!” Robert barked with a slight laugh. “It’s a little late for that. We deserve what happens to us.”

“WE?!” Cersei screamed at her husband.
Robert looked down at his beautiful wife. “Yes, we, Cersei. I have done a lot of thinking while I was away training. We both could have done so much more, and with so much less.” He sighed with a soft, sad timbre.

“I have done nothing wrong!” Cersei roared at Robert. She cursed him silently, her eyes green pools of anger and hatred. “I saw you looking at the Targaryen slut! You never could keep your dick in your trousers!” she yelled at Robert.

Robert only sighed again.

Suddenly, the king and his wife were buffeted as the immense black dragon flew by the window from the side again, mere feet from the railing. His mighty body tilted so that he was flying perpendicular to the ground, his wings pumping hard enough to send a small hurricane of wind across the balcony as he picked up speed. Cersei stumbled into Robert, clinging to him to both maintain her balance and calm her own fear. Her green eyes grew wide.

They watched as the dragon shot straight up into the air, traveling through hundreds of feet within only seconds. Then, instead of leveling out, the dragon pivoted on a wing over, and rocketed back down. Only at the last moment did the behemoth pump its wings to break its descent.

Dust flew wildly all about as the dragon landed with grace. The queen’s long white hair flew in all directions from the wild winds. In from the right came her white and gold dragon landing as adroitly as her black beast, followed by the green dragon landing on the other side of the mighty black behemoth. The black dragon stretched up its long neck to stare about. Some of the children that had been cheering had hidden away now, but those who were brave enough remained stared from the rooftops in wonder, their eyes just visible above the ledges they crouched behind.

Suddenly, the dragons began to trumpet loudly again and again, shocking the air with their mighty roars. Cersei cupped her ears, finding no quiet as the dragons paused just long enough to take deep breaths to continue roaring mightily, their ringing peels ricocheting off the walls.

Then, as suddenly as the roars started, they ceased. A shocked silence followed.

Cersei watched the silver haired usurper slide gracefully down off the black dragon’s high, broad back and land with surprising ease onto her feet, dropping the last distance with bent knees. She stood up and looked around with proud eyes and a regal bearing as she stepped away from her dragon to stand in the open. It was only then that Cersei noticed the spear in the white haired woman’s right hand. Cersei also at that moment noticed a multitude of silver bells in Targaryen’s hair. From the spear tip there flew a long, white ribbon that fluttered in the breeze. The Targaryen stepped closer to look up at the balcony with her violet eyes boring up at the two Baratheons.

The Targaryen clearly felt no fear. The woman roared up to the King and Queen with supreme confidence and haughty voice "I wish to Parley!"

Daenerys / Tyrion

Daenerys

The warm air of Dorne felt good on Daenerys’ face as her mighty black dragon winged toward the beach and her awaiting entourage. Working with Varys and Illyrio she had prepared for this day since she had crushed and conquered Volantis. She had first heard the term Game of Thrones there. She had not liked the term then and hated it now, but, she knew the necessity of it. She would be grateful to do anything that could reduce the bloodshed she had left trailing behind her.

She hated all of the machinations behind the curtains and secret conversations behind closed doors. She had been introduced to Tyrion soon after her time in Volantis, first by raven then in person through quick, hidden meetings. These three men had given her crash courses on the landscape of her homeland – her rightful lands. They told her who she could work with to reclaim her throne. They told her that the land was ripe for conquest and that within a year she could reclaim her throne. All it would take was the breaking of a few mighty houses on the field of battle and the rest would fall in line. Varys and Illyrio had treated it all like a game they loved to play. Tyrion was quieter and had more respect, adding insightful comments. The one time he seemed most animated was when suggesting that the House Lannister would make a “splendid” example.

A gust of hot air ghosted over her face, and she remembered such a breeze above Yunkai. The city had rebelled again and she had had enough of their insolence and the killing of the slaves she had freed. She gathered several of the houses of the great masters into one of their mighty, gaudy pyramids. She had listened to the history lessons that Barristan Selmy had given her. She had listened intently the story of Harrenhal. That day she taught those insolent dogs what happened when you crossed the mighty Targaryen dragon.

Her dragons had flown around the pyramid breathing their breaths of hot fire, their breaths of death and unquenchable fury. At first she had felt so triumphant, watching the pyramid burn down with her enemies. Then they had appeared.

Women and children ran up onto the upper terraces, some already afire and screaming in their agony. Little girls ran with their hair aflame and their limbs dropping strips of melting flesh.

Daenerys suddenly saw her long lost Kiserri down in the deadly fires. Her precious little barely six-year-old Blood Rider. Her heart had nearly stopped beating in her chest. The horror had only gotten worse.

Babies were screaming. Men clawed their faces, their skin dripping. Women screamed, pleading for help as the fires closed in on them. She watched as whole families jumped off the terraces to try to escape the flames, falling hundreds of feet to their deaths. By the gods she could still hear their bodies impacting on the cold marble streets. She imagined Kiserri screaming as she fell to her death.
Shame her to stop the carnage, but it was too late. It was too late and still necessary. The rebellion had finally ended that day. She rationalized to herself that she had saved many lives of her freed slaves and even the lives of further potential rebels. Her blood riders felt no qualms, the mercenaries in her army were anxious to plunder the dead. What use had they of money anymore? Ser Barristan told her that war demanded such sacrifices of the innocent as he looked on her with pity.

Why had she felt so dirty and her soul so drained? She had butchered before but it had not affected her so. Why now? Were not your enemies to be crushed? Conquered without mercy?

Just last week she had been confronted by a young man from Yunkai. He was really more a boy, no older than herself. He had demanded a duel to avenge his family that had died in the pyramid that day. He had called her out before her men, and she could not refuse him his duel of honor and revenge. To do so would have caused her to lose face and, thus, control and loyalty of her armed forces.

She had disemboweled him, spilling his intestines onto the dirt as she thrust her sword into his belly and ripped upwards, her sword glowing blue with the fire of her ghost runes. The fire just adding to the boy’s agony. He felt every inch of the pain. His screams had rung in the air as her blood riders had laughed and mocked the dying youth. His bowels loosened and stench filled the air before he dropped off of her sword and on to the dirt. The blood and gore on her rune sword bubbling and splattering on the heat that radiated through her soul and into her sword. Even then he still he did not die for another minute, his last breath anything but quiet or noble. Her face had remained impassive. He had challenged and he lost. She had stared at the blood and filth that had spilled onto her hands for a long time, turning them over and wondering if the stain would ever truly wash clean.

She knew the stains on hand and sword would come clean, but what of the stains that darkened her soul more and more?

Daenerys shook her head coming back to the present as Drogon descended down to the beach. She did not notice the tears running from her eyes.

She landed on the empty beach where her fellow conspirators waited. With these men of Westeros, and her mighty army and navy now dotting the horizon from east to west, she would retake what was rightfully hers. In the air, she had mused of ‘machinations’ but here on land she willed herself to be the puppet master. She would pull the strings, not these men on the beach and in her ships.

She gracefully slid off of Drogon and walked out to meet their leader, Oberyn. He bowed deeply, and then took the knee as did all the others in the entourage.

“Arise,” Daenerys spoke in the tone she had long mastered. She was the queen and they were her subjects.

Oberyn strode out to her and gripped her forearm in the salute of warriors. “I am honored to serve you, great huntress and rightful ruler of Westeros.” The warrior told his future queen.

Daenerys knew this man was solidly in her camp. The house of Dorne had always been loyal to her house after marriage had united them, and with their common Essos lineage.

The man of Dorne introduced the other men, leaders of the smaller houses of Dorne and mighty commanders in their army. They were all polite and courteous. They eyed the Valyrian steel sword on her back and the scars on her arms, then the light scar on her left temple that ran down her cheek to her jaw line. They recognized her as a warrior. Tyrion and Varys had told her these men of Dorne were used to strong women since their progenitor had been Nymeria.

Daenerys listened, observed, and was generally satisfied with what she saw and heard.

Four women were brought forward. One was a child about her age, maybe just slightly younger. She was slender, and very beautiful. She introduced herself as Myrcella of the House of Baratheon, and she took the knee before Daenerys with a bent neck.

The child’s voice trembled slightly as she declared her loyalty to the queen. Dany felt a quarrel bolt of anger boil through her veins. To see kneeling before her a progeny of the Usurper made her dragon blood flow hot in her body - the man’s whose actions had started the events that led to her father’s death and her exile and years of fear.

Evidently, what she felt was reflected in her face. An older woman, in her mid-twenties, suddenly stepped in front of the now trembling girl. She reached down gripping the girl’s shoulders in a clearly loving embrace.

“I am wife to Myrcella. If you need to shed blood then take my life instead!” the woman said, holding the younger girl’s shoulders.

Then the last two women, no older than Myrcella, stepped up to stand before the Baratheon and in front of Arianna as well. “We are also Myrcella’s wives, and sister-wives to Arianna … take our lives instead if you must have vengeance and blood!” They looked at Daenerys with calm equanimity and fierce resolve.

Suddenly, Myrcella was on her feet. “No, take my life instead! Do not harm my wives!” the teen cried out throwing herself in front of the other women. Daenerys sighed as a discordant dance commenced, the four women squirming and shoving to put themselves first and shouting at each other that they ‘would make the sacrifice’. Loud grunts could be heard as the women started shoving each other, still trying to pull the others behind themselves. Cries of ‘my love!’ and ‘my heart!’ and ‘I can’t live without them, take me instead!’ rang through the air. The men chuckled while Oberyn watched Daenerys closely.

“Enough!” the white haired woman yelled, her regal voice bringing all to heel. She could not afford to anger her main supporter in the House of Dorne. Though she did not show it, she had found all the declarations of sacrifice touching and endearing. Her opinion of the young princess was now higher indeed.

The princess remained on her knee looking up at the Targaryen “Myrcella, is it?” Daenerys asked. The girl nodded her head. “You have nothing to fear from me… you weren’t even born yet, girl. Go in peace. We will talk again Myrcella - along with your wives. “Rise up and look upon me as a true princess” the Queen softly ordered.

The teen rose with regal grace. Daenerys bent her head slightly in respect. The girl was about six inches taller than the Queen. Her throat was in front of the Queen’s gaze. “Hold,” the Targaryen ordered. The girl stopped her motion to move away. The Queen reached out and fingered the choker that encircled the girl’s throat and the sigil on it. The oval holding a device she had not seen in her studies.

Daenerys looked down and saw a beautiful silver bracelet on the young woman’s wrist encrusted with emeralds, sapphires and rubies in the shape of a fierce lioness. On her ring finger was a gold ring lined with emeralds to match the beauty’s green eyes. Daenerys had seen but not noticed the other women’s left hands. Daenerys looked up again to confirm. Yes, the three Martells had the same bracelets and rings. They too wore chokers but theirs were a little smaller.
“I studied extensively the sigils of all the houses of Westeros. I recognize the lion but it is not in the Lannister pose. And are those sand snakes wrapped around the beast?”

Myrcella nodded “Yes, they are three sand snakes wrapped around the body of a Lioness. My body. This is the sigil of our house. It is a new house, but will one day be a powerful house, my Queen.” The girl said with direct eye contact.

Daenerys recognized the tone. She was seeking confirmation. Would the Queen crush her dreams before they had even fully formed?

“I look forward to dealing with this house. I see a great future for it in Westeros. We will talk more on this.”

The girl’s back straightened and she walked with firm confidence now back to her nervously waiting wives.

She already was scheming, deciding on how to best use this new tool. Both could benefit.

She watched the girls walk off, hugging each other. The three women of Dorne were each clucking and stroking their princess with obvious devotion. Daenerys was impressed. Three wives? What did that girl do in bed? She chuckled to herself. She might need some pointers, she thought, smirking to herself.

Oberyn cleared his throat as he approached her along with Tyrion. “Thank you, your Grace, for showing mercy.” he told his queen while taking a deep bow.

“I do not believe in punishing children for the crimes of their parents, Oberyn.” Daenerys told the warrior.

“Good.” Oberyn replied. “Now we need to discuss the upcoming war and how we will defeat Highgarden. Then we will need to take out House Lannister. After those two houses are crushed, the rest of Westeros will bend the knee readily enough.”

“Have you made overtures of peace to these Houses Oberyn, like we have discussed?” Daenerys asked, strolling back to Drogon. She started to stroke his cheek as the dragon pushed into the hand of his mother, rumbling affectionately.

“Why make offers when you know they will be refused? Highgarden is the pinnacle of conceit and Tywin is a crafty fox that can never be trusted. They need to be broken!” Oberyn made his thoughts clearly and stridently known.

“I believe we need to send overtures to these Houses Oberyn. Let’s explo—” Daenerys began, before Oberyn interrupted her.

“No! they need to be crushed and brought to heel!” he shouted, anger overtaking him as he started to move forward.

In their councils she had seen the fire in Oberyn, and his desire to bring down his main competitors. She conceded that he might not even know his actions were tainted with the desire to bring his rivals low.

Sensing this moment was coming, Daenerys had been mentally speaking to her dragon. At her wordless command, Drogon’s head jerked forward and stopped just in front of Oberyn, his mouth slightly gaped to show the fierce man his long, sharp dagger teeth.
“Whoa whoa … okay, I understand!” Oberyn barked, throwing his hands up. The message loudly sent and meekly received. Having dragons sometimes made life much easier.

“Tyrion, walk with me,” Daenerys commanded him softly but in a tone that brokered no denial as she started down the beach, away from the rest of the gathered entourage.

Tyrion

They walked down the beach in silence as they distanced themselves from their fellow cabal members. Tyrion felt comfortable with the Targaryen. He instinctively knew that the woman, though she teased him, saw him as the person, the man, that he was and not the dwarf that others saw. She valued him as a man of wisdom and cunning and, maybe even a friend. When he looked up at the beautiful face of the Queen, he couldn’t help but wish for more.

They walked for long minutes in companionable silence. Tyrion watched the silver haired Targaryen’s eyes follow the pelicans as they soared in a stacked formation with an almost childlike wonder. Every so often she would tilt her face up into the soft, pleasant breeze and walk with her eyes lightly closed and a soft smile as the warm wind caressed her cheeks. Seeing her like this, it was hard to fathom all of the stories he had heard of her on the battlefield and the crushing of sedition within her conquered cities.

Tyrion noted the tears that they had all seen running down the Queen’s face when she had first arrived had long dried. He wondered what the others had thought of them. They had probably written it off as wind or sand, but Tyrion wondered. This woman was clearly driven by towering ambition and belief in her cause, but, there was also a vulnerability he thought he saw in the small woman; heavy griefs that weighed on her soul.

“What did you think of Oberyn’s words, cub?” the silver haired woman finally asked him.

The diminutive Lion of Lannister stopped and sighed. “I have asked you to call me the “Lion” of Lannister!” he replied in jest.

“A lion would come up higher than my hip, cub.” she shot back.

Tyrion knew he was treading on dangerous ground but had to take the gambit. He looked up the beach and saw that they had rounded a promontory. No one would see. “I would have you know that I am both a King of the Beasts and a King of the Breast. A mighty man on the field… and in the bedchamber. I have left many a satisfied woman in my wake, my liege. I am legend.” He told the queen who had stopped walking to look at him intently.

“Are you now?” she asked softly, her violet eyes locking with his. The beautiful woman stepped before him and bent down to one knee, her face soft and lambent.

Tyrion felt his cock surging. Was his gambit going to pay off?!

Daenerys hands came out, one to cup his cheek while the other began stroking his bulging cock through his trousers.

“You are a handsome man Tyrion… do you want to feel the caress of the dragon’s talons on your manhood, my little Lord?” the Targaryen asked in a husky voice.

Tyrion gulped, slowly nodding his head ‘yes’.

“Do you want to feel the breath of Dragon’s fire on your cock… feel the wet heat of the dragon’s mouth?” the white haired beauty breathed softly, inching her face closer to his. Her tongue licked her sensual lips as her eyes lidded.

Tyrion was so erect it was painful. He started to reach for his laces.

Suddenly, a hideous look snarled across the teen’s face, her head lunging down and making a snapping motion as her teeth clacked noisily. She ripped her head back and up as the woman suddenly stood, martial straight. The sudden aggression and spite shocked the little Lord, his eyes suddenly large with terror. He no longer felt either visceral or manly, his cock wilting like a flower broiling under the hot sun. Daenerys eyes looked slightly crazed, like some deranged succubus. She made a show of motion, chewing sloppily and nosily. Then she gulped. “Not even an appetizer… you don’t have anything to offer me little man. No man does! Do I make myself clear!” she almost shouted at Tyrion.

His cock was a pitiful small thing now. He swallowed and tried to pull his dignity together.

“Understood my liege… I will never make that mistake again. I will try and subtly let others know that your focus is on regaining your kingdom, my liege.” Tyrion offered his Queen, head hung with humility.

“Good. Now that that has been cleared up…” the woman snarled and started to walk down the beach again.

Tyrion quickened his pace to keep up. As her (hopefully) still trusted advisor, he needed to ask this next question, though he was fearful of Daenerys’ reaction. He took a deep breath. He knew he would need to provide for the Queen’s needs. All of her needs. Tyrion knew he may need to provide the Queen companionship for the nights when she desired pleasures of the flesh. The Seven Gods knew that was part of Jon’s duty for Robert. “Will you be requiring female companionship at night my liege?” He asked carefully. “I know many women who would be honored and delighted to grace your bed…” Tyrion offered delicately.

Daenerys stopped abruptly again and looked down at the little Lord, her eyes unreadable and her body still. Tyrion stood stock still, waiting. Daenerys tilted her head back and laughed softly, lightly. “Tyrion. I have had three husbands, a paramour, and slept with men when I needed relief. I think that shows my inclinations… don’t you?”

“Of course my liege.” Tyrion responded as the loyal subordinate he was. He had learned an important lesson today. Daenerys was a dangerous woman and not to be underestimated or trifled with. To do so was at your own peril.

“Walk with me, cub.” the future queen commanded.

Relieved that the crisis was over, Tyrion again fell in beside the queen.

A moment passed, and Daenerys addressed him again. “I think I asked you about Oberyn’s plans?”

“Yes. I think they have merit, Daenerys. The great houses of Westeros are prideful and will not bend the knee lightly. I agree with Oberyn on the fact that at least one or maybe two houses will need to be broken. Most houses from your traditional homeland will raise their banners for you regardless, but your father left a bitter taste in the house of Stark, Highgarden and Arryn. You will have to make headway against that. They will, at minimum, hold you in high distrust.” Tyrion finished his assessment.

“But I thought I had left instructions with you to make peace overtures to the Houses of Westeros. Why was that not done, Tyrion?” she asked in a tone that made an unpleasant tingle go down his spine.
“You did my lady. I was overruled.”

“How so?”

“As I have said, others think that peace overtures are wasted.”

“But you spoke for me.”

He sighed. “I’m just a dwarf, Daenerys.”

The white haired Targaryen looked at him, perplexed. “Why would that matter? It is cunning and intellect you bring to the table.”

“It matters Daenerys… believe me, it matters.” Tyrion responded, looking up at Daenerys and letting her openly see for a moment the pain he suffered so often; the ridicule he received because of his stature and his stunted legs.

“I see …” Daenerys responded, looking at him steadily, without pity or ridicule. “That will change. Believe me that will change. But that is a battle that will be fought tomorrow. Today I have more pressing needs and concerns.”

“I stand ready to do your bidding, my Queen.”

“The fact that no peace overtures have been made must be addressed. Now. How can we go to war without the effort of peace being made first? Must we go to war Tyrion? Will the strong always devour the weak? Can not the Dragon learn to lie with Direwolf? We have to at least make the effort, Tyrion. And not just words either. I do not want another war if I can avoid it!” the Targaryen said, her voice rising.

Tyrion was perplexed. “What war, Daenerys? You just landed in Westeros, and Dorne has accepted you with open arms.”

Tyrion watched as a pained look flashed across the pale woman’s features. She told him softly, “I have fought many wars Tyrion… I grow weary of them. There has to be another way. Your lessons have taught me that Eddard, Jon and Mace are intelligent men who only want what is best for their people. They must listen to reason.” She said softly.

“Your reasons, Deanerys? Why would they? To them you are just another conqueror. The only thing truly unique about you is your gender. It has been a thousand years since Nymeria conquered Dorne. And she did it with the bow and the sword, I might add.”

“I have known nothing but war for over three years. I have smashed armies and cities. Bent entire nations to my will. You may think I crave war and conquest with my history… I have conquered half of Essos in a span of time no other conqueror ever has. I have found out I am good at war—too good- and I hate it! It sickens me! I will have my destiny, but I will find another way. There has to be another way! You have told me you are cunning, Tyrion… tell me how.”

The dwarf stared up at her. “You are the dragon queen. Is it not your right to win your kingdoms? What enemy can stand against you when you fly your dragons over their skies? You are dread personified with your dragons winging overhe—“

“That’s it!” Daenerys yelled, her body suddenly shaking with an excitement she could barely contain. “Yes … Yes … it may work. You’re a genius Tyrion!” She held the dwarf by the shoulders, shaking him excitedly.
“Of course I am …” Tyrion nodded as he responded, perplexed.

“Yes. I know it will work! I already have mapped out in my mind what I need to say. I will tell them I am here to sow peace and not war!” the young Queen told Tyrion, then more to herself as her voice started to trail off. “I’m so tired of war…” her eyes going distant “…yes … I’ll tell them I want to fight no more, forever …”
Daenerys Targaryen leaned against the mooring, looking out at the harbor that anchored just a fraction of her mighty navy before her. The Targaryen’s ships were ringed around Essos in the free cities, preparing to set sail for her homeland. More ships were already at sea. Flotillas of ships from the Summer Islands and the land of the kingdoms of Yi Ti. Soon, she thought, I will once more set foot on my homeland. The land of my birth.

The Targaryen princess had been prudent during her conquests, making sure to spare the navies of her enemies and not to completely savage their armies unless absolutely necessary. She knew she needed those ships and men for herself.

The sails were beautiful, rippling in the strong shore breeze - the same breeze that ruffled her hair and tinkled the multitude of silver bells that Missandei had braided into her locks at the crack of dawn. Even with the light weights, her tresses blew in the strong breeze, singing a sweetly discordant melody.

She felt invigorated. Daenerys looked off to her left at two tall, mighty Swan Ships of the Summer Islanders, their size impressive.

The closest to her was the command ship of the emissary who was leading his ships into battle with Daenerys. The Morning Mist swayed slightly with the incoming tide, its masts soaring high into the bright blue morning sky, with multi-colored sails billowing, pleasing the eye.

Pleasing like the emissary’s oldest child had been. He had brought his four oldest children with him, his two sons strong and tall, his daughters nearly matching them in height and sinew. Their bodies were graceful with delightful swales and contours.

He had only brought the children that were old enough to fight. They were here to be part of this “campaign of glory and destiny”, as he had announced at the banquet. She found all the Summer Islanders gathered to be tall and roped with muscle, and she loved the darkness of their skin, like looking up at the sky between the stars at night. They were a strong and brave people.

She had eyed his children during the diplomatic gallantry that all allies dispensed with before a major campaign. Her eyes were constantly drawn to the eldest. The heir to his lands was almost as tall as the emissary himself. Their eyes had locked at first meeting, and Daenerys had not felt such a tingle in her loins in so long. That night they had hot passionate sex. It was not about love – it was primal lust and pent-up energy. Bodies made hard by hard work and battle seeking release before the upcoming battles.

Daenerys’ body tingled, remembering how their groins had impacted as they rutted. The force of the strong Summer Islanders’ body into hers, the rough thrusts of her adroit lover. The jolt of each impact rocking her small frame, the delicious brunt of hard sex that she craved in her lovers. Her climax had rocked her body with powerful contractions that shocked her near senseless with pleasure.

She could still remember the feel of her lover’s upper arms underneath her jerking, clawing fingers as they contracted with each hard pulse of her orgasm. The Summer Islander had looked down at her with glittering, almond eyes watching her start to orgasm, then smiling with a feral look as she writhed beneath the dominant weight.

Her lover had encouraged her to scream her pleasure. Since making love in front of the Khalasar so openly she had reveled in letting anyone who may hear know her gratification. The back of her head had jammed into the bed as her throat arched up, and her ferocious wails of pleasure filled the small cabin. Her lover had only urged her on, her screams igniting them both with passion as the Islander rammed even harder into her exploding pussy.

They had made love deep into the night. She had enjoyed the tall Islander spooning her small frame as they drifted off to sleep the few dark hours remaining before dawn.

Daenerys shook her head, breaking herself out of her idyllic reverie. She needed to focus on the here and now.

She looked critically up and down the harbor of Pentos, more than satisfied with what she saw. The ships were in full sail and in good trim. Then a horse neighing in fear and pain caught her ear to her right. She hurried down the quay and found a ship taking on a few last horses, the beasts clearly fearful and resisting the commands to enter the hold.

A task master continued to whip the horses cruelly as she stormed down the pier at a run. “Stop!” the diminutive woman screamed in the regal tone she had long mastered.

She marched up to the gangway to berate the man, a heavily muscled Braavosi named Querolos, a quartermaster of the ship Wave Ryder.

“Why do you whip these poor horses so?” Daenerys demanded.

The man explained that the ships were to set sail and he had to get the destriers on board immediately, or they would be delayed. That was not an option, so he whipped the horses to get them to comply.

Daenerys snorted and ripped the whip from his hand, throwing it up over the gunwale. Then she approached the two terrified horses as they stomped their hooved feet hard into the pier slats, twisting first right and then left.

The Targaryen Queen took several deep, calming breaths and centered herself like Syrio Forel had taught her to clear her mind for weapons training and combat. Daenerys had found that calming her mind and body lead her to place inside that then allowed her to reach out to her dragons and other beasts.

The tiny woman walked calmly towards the rearing battle horses, their hooves pawing high into the air before crashing down again on the pier. The horses whinnied as they eyed the small woman, mouths frothing. Daenerys stopped just short of their fury. She looked up into their eyes, calmly letting them see her peace and the lack of fear.

She hummed a soft, wordless melody in a sweet voice. Her bells chimed in the breeze. Slowly, the horses began to calm. They stopped their rearing and screaming, and their bodies stilled. The wild rippling of their haunches faded away, and the large white and black horse came over to the tiny woman, slowly lowering its head and butting her outstretched hand. The horse nickered as Daenerys rubbed its ears.

“You can take the horses in now,” she told the quartermaster in a calm measured voice.

The man stared at her speechless as the horses were lead up the plankway into his ship. He mutely bowed to the now retreating queen, then shook his head. In all his years, he had never seen anything like it. Dany walked further down the docks, calling out greetings to her captains of ships and to the knights and leaders of mercenary companies. She had always been good with faces and names, and it paid off handsomely as she had formed her military machine.

As Daenerys walked down the wide docks made for commerce, a group of young girls ran down the pier towards her. As they reached her they used her as foil as they chased each other. One girl caught her eye. She was small with inky black hair and almond eyes, her skin swarthy like her Kiserri had had in life.

The girl had just seemed to appear at her side when she began her march away from the shattered Khalasar of her former lover Drogo. She was beside her, looking nervously up at her and saddling up close. Dany had ruffled her hair and the girl was by her side from then on.

Daenerys had tried to find her mother but she could not. The girl told the Khaleesi that her mother had been mean and she was so nice. She declared after two weeks she was Daenerys’ fourth Blood Rider.

Daenerys shook her head hard. She had enough maudlin thoughts coursing through her head this day. A day that should have been about triumph and not depressing thoughts from her haunted past in the red wastes.

Satisfied after half an hour of further inspection, the platinum blond haired woman started to return to the mooring she had started at.

Halfway back up the quay another Summer Islander Swan Ship caught her eye. This vessel was unique, for the captain had painted a black and white zig-zag pattern on the hull to break up its pattern on the water. It almost looked like a floating piece of art with its wild design. She looked at the port side near the stern, where the script read “Seafarer’s Gem”.

Her mood quickly changed to reflective, and she found herself thinking again on the dream that had been plaguing her for the last two months. It had changed again last night.

The dream had remained at this point for a while, the two entities staring at each other as Daenerys began to relax. On the night when she had thought she would finally reach out and touch the direwolf, the dreamed suddenly took a drastic turn.
A week ago the wolf had suddenly crouched down as she approached, snarling as drool slavered out of its vicious, parted jaws. The hair on its haunches bristled, and its tail bushed out with agitated sweeps. The mighty wolf started to snap, its eyes glowing with hatred. Daenerys was paralyzed with fear at the sudden change, feeling hopeless against such a mighty beast without her priceless weapons.

Last night as she had drowsed against her lover’s body she had hoped she would be able to sleep soundly after the exhausting sex. She had not, but, the dream had changed again. It had reached a resolution; a totally unexpected conclusion. She had thought she would meet death at the jaws of the direwolf, but instead…

Again, it had been so, so cold … The wolf had launched itself at her and she leaned back, her arms throne up to ward herself, though she knew it was useless. She felt her lips form around a death scream… only she had not died.

The massive direwolf had leaped over her, and she heard the sounds of bodies crashing together and then the savagery of combat. Daenerys whirled around. The wolf was fighting a tall, thin man with a slim-bladed sword that glowed blue like her own, but radiated a freezing cold. The man had a strange crown of blue-white ice. Back and forth the two fought, the wolf nimbly avoiding slashes of the sword and delivering bites and raking claw swipes from her mighty paws.

The then the fight was suddenly over, the wolf taking down the man and ripping his throat out. The man turned to mist and almost immediately started to dissipate. The wolf howled in triumph as the freezing cold fled once the mist of the fallen man faded.

The wolf slowly turned back to Daenerys, its intelligent eyes hot and aglow with anger and hate. The fear that had been subsiding suddenly flared again.

Then the direwolf’s demeanor changed drastically. Daenerys felt the tension rapidly dissipate from the wolf and it slowly walked back toward her, then lowered itself down onto its belly with its front paws extended and tail down in submission. The great beast leaned in and brought its nose to her bare feet with a gentle muzzle. The fierce animal looked up at her in supplication and… what … what word came to mind … love …?

Daenerys shook her head. Strange the symbolism one would find in dreams. She knew the sigil of House Stark was the Direwolf, so she knew it must somehow involve that house. She sighed. It was a mighty house, Daenerys knew. She had first thought of Eddard Stark as a dog rather than the wolf of his sigil. He had been part of the usurper’s supporters. But all she kept hearing from Tyrion and Oberyn was Stark honor this and Stark honor that. He was a man fair and just.

She would judge for herself.

She would have to meet her destiny to find the answers she needed. And as in all things, her destiny lay in the land of her birth.

Her mind back in the present, she looked again at the beautiful Swan Ship, its sails and painted hull ablaze in the bright morning sun.

Daenerys found herself strongly attached to the Summer Islanders. They were a strong, brave, and enlightened race, with a society based on egalitarianism. This was a concept she hoped to bring to Westeros. She had seen it, she thought, in Oberyn, but still needed to make sure. She was tired of being treated like a piece of property to be bought and sold like a slave in all but name. She had smashed Slaver’s Bay with a vengeance for it.
In Summer Islander society a woman could aspire to lead men and women, to command ships, lead commerce, to govern. She knew that Westeros was conservative and she was not naïve. She could not change her homeland in such a short time without destroying it. Slaver’s Bay had taught her that. But she would plant the seeds of slow change and hope that her progeny or future leaders would water and make it grow.

Daenerys looked up at sun and knew she had to hurry back. She needed to speak to the commanders in their command ships arrayed around the mooring she had marked as hers. They were prepared and ready to set sail.

She went down the quay and turned up the pier to her mooring and the large, squat building beside it. She spied the Summer Islanders, several other high commanders in her force and her trusted general Barristan Selmy.

She came up to the group and they did their ritual greeting and platitudes. She had tired of these. As the commanders discussed last minute details she wandered off to her mooring and leaned against it. She stared out at the sea, enjoying the strong breeze that ruffled her hair and made her bells tinkle.

She heard soft, predatory footfalls approaching and recognized the tread of last night’s lover. Her hair was lifted and she felt fingers running through her long platinum tresses, tracing the tiny tinkling bells. “You are a beautiful woman Daenerys Targaryen. Beautiful, strong and smart, such a rare combination. I find you intoxicating.”

Daenerys merely smiled softly, looking out over the bay. She knew this was only a dalliance no matter what her lover may feel. She heard a sigh.

Then her lover’s tall, strong body was against her back, pulling her against lean corded muscle. Long arms pulled the tiny woman tight, and the Islander bent down to breathe in Daenerys’ ear with a husky voice: “Last night was a magical night, Dragon Queen. I will treasure the memory. I hope that you will once more grace my bed.”

Daenerys continued to look out over the harbor, not turning to look back or respond. The Summer Islander continued. “I would be so honored to be your consort, pale queen.” Daenery’s felt her body being squeezed tighter before the small blonde woman was finally released with a sigh.

“Your daughter is smitten with you. It is you she wants to be her wife and mate … you have captured her heart, Targaryen.”

“I am honored Jhalando Khal,” she said, switching to his name and not his title. “Your daughter is a very beautiful woman … but my destiny has decreed that I follow a different path. Westeros is not the Summer Islands …and.. I—I am bound. Trapped.”

“But you will be queen!” Jhalando Khal shot back.
“I have seen the portents and omens … maybe … no. I know my destiny.” Daenerys replied with a heaviness in her voice and heart.

“Then you have my condolences … but my offer stands. If you want my daughter and you do not delay before another wins her heart, then you have my blessing.”

“I am honored Jhalando Khal”. They bowed formally in the Summer Island fashion.

Barristan

Barristan watched Daenerys finish her conversation with the emissary. The man left with a smile on his face. Even when Daenerys gave nobles and high officials news they did not want to hear, they left smiling. The knight knew that there was nothing that the young woman could not do.

Except for find happiness. Barristan had long suspected the proclivities of his Queen, but it was of no importance. He was a man who supported his liege no matter their morals or beliefs, though he totally believed in Daenerys. He had waited a long lifetime to finally meet someone he could have that much faith in, a person of high principle and open heart. A person who would take their largesse and use it wisely and for the people. He had finally found that person in Deanerys Targaryen, the First of Her Name.

He went over the numbers with his Queen one more time. In Pentos alone they had four hundred and fifty warships from multiple navies. Some fought for honor and noble endeavor, others fought for money. On the battlefield none would know or care which.

The Queen had insisted on bringing as many supplies as possible. Thus, another three hundred merchant crafts floated in the harbor. She did not want to raid the land if at all possible, robbing the very people she intended to liberate from, if not despotic, then blighted and dissipated rule. When she first started her campaign she had witnessed her armies devouring the countryside in their wake. The populace had at first been grateful for their freedom but a denuded landscape soon took off the luster.

They discussed how their number of ships were also anchored up and down the coast in all the Free Cities in equal or greater numbers.

Daenerys asked her general if there were any new reports of sedition in her conquered lands in Essos. All was calm for the once, the general reported.

Last month the Queen had flown Drogon back to Slaver’s Bay. The trip had been necessary to dispense justice in Astapor and Meereen. In the first, Daenerys had executed three men for cruelty to the freed slaves, and also punished a ring of thieves taking staples and selling them back at black market prices. In the second, a powerful husband and wife from a high noble family was again trying to reignite the slave trade and re-open the slave pits.

She had beheaded all of them herself.

Barristan knew that she felt she must do the executions whenever possible since they were her royal orders. “Let the sin be mine,” she had told him when she came back. Why she considered it a sin at all had befuddled him. They were criminals trafficking in death and cruelty, and they deserved their fates.

He could see the Queen fidgeting, smiled gently. Even the Queen could feel the pressure of this day. All the blood and sacrifice had been leading up to this time, this moment in history.

“You will be able to smash and conquer your enemies on the fields of battle or within their mighty castles. They will be able to withstand your might for six months, a year at most,” Barristan told his Queen, hoping to ease the beautiful Targaryen’s doubts. He immediately saw how his words pained the beautiful princess.

“My destiny is assured, Barristan. I have left nothing to chance. I will have my throne back.” She told her general. He saw iron will and resolve - but also so much pain. Why? He could not fathom it.

This morning after her tryst with the Summer Islander Princess the Queen, while not happy, had seemed more at peace with herself; but now Barristan could see the melancholy coming back over her.

Berating himself internally for putting the Queen in a dour mood, all the General could think to do was press her forward. “It is time to begin Daenerys … call your dragons.”

Barristan observed the Targaryen slowly walk toward the end of the pier, then fell in step beside her, matching her small strides. Her eyes were lightly lidded and her breathing slowing, steady and deep. Her face seemed to drain of all emotion or discord.

Barristan knew she had not found any happiness, just a temporary draining of care and worry so she could find the secret place inside herself that allowed her to communicate with her dragons and other lesser beasts. Once they reached the end of the pier, they stood there in silence as Daenerys centered within herself.

Daenerys slowly raised her arms high up into the air, her fingers slightly spread and her body relaxed, her eyes slitted and unseeing. “Come,” was all the petite blond woman said in a soft voice. One could hear no command, only a request between family or close friends.

Barristan looked over the harbor and out to the sea. On the horizon he could already see a small dot, rapidly growing larger. Soon it was clear that it was Drogon, winging fast to his mother.

Barristan knew that over the skies of Braavos and the port Tyrosh, dragons were now flying. The white dragon Viserion over the former, and the green dragon over the latter.

Barristan had asked Daenerys once how she did it. How she communicated with her dragons in such a manner, always bringing them winging over the horizon when she called them.

The Targaryen had only shrugged her shoulders. “They know where and when their mother will need them,” had been her reply.

Once the dragons were large enough to fly on their own the Queen had let them have free range. Barristan and others had questioned the teenager about this. Was it wise? Would they come back? Will they obey?

The Targaryen simply said, “They will always come and obey my summons. They are bound to me. But dragons need free range to grow large and fierce.” When others had questioned the wisdom of Daenerys’ decision she had only smiled vaguely. Over time her wisdom had borne out. The dragons always answered her summons and obeyed her explicitly.

Barristan still could not help but wonder though, how the free flying dragons winging over the two continents always appeared on the horizon only a few heartbeats after a summons. It was an inexplicable mystery of the world. Dragons needed freedom, the Queen gave it to them and in return they obeyed her.

Barristan had never read or heard of this ability with dragons or of Valyrians having this strength. Nothing could be found in the old books. The Maesters were equally baffled by Daenerys’ ability.
How did the woman communicate with a beast that one could not even see? As in so many things, Daenerys Targaryen was a truly unique regent.

Barristan saw that calling her dragons had calmed the Queen’s earlier silent torment. Communing with her dragons always seemed to soothe her. The Targaryen watched the dragon rapidly close the distance, his mighty wings pumping hard.

With her relaxed posture and soft smile, the General knew the Queen was maintaining her mental link with her children. With them, she could just be the gentle mother he sensed she longed to be buried deep within her psyche. Unfortunately, her burning ambition would always preclude this. The only hope he could envision was if she could find a man—or woman—to share her burden with, but he deemed that unlikely.

The woman’s ambitions to rule half the known world would deem that she marry some great noble of a mighty house. Tradition would demand she marry a man.

Drogon wheeled overhead in a tight spiral, roaring a greeting to his mother. Barristan looked right, left and out at the ships anchored deeper in the harbor. The sails, rigging lines and rails of the ships were all lined with bright, expectant faces. Grown men were reduced to little children, gazing on legends that had come back to life.

Daenerys’ body stiffened slightly as she broke her mental bond with her dragons, a world weary sag returning to her shoulders and melancholy caste to her face. This was the look that only Missandei and himself were allowed to see. The Queen watched her dragon slow its wings to drop into a land on the end of the pier.

“Your hour has arrived, my Queen.” Barristan told the woman, hoping to fuel the inner fire that allowed the petite woman to constantly forge greatness.

“Is it Barristan … a time for what exactly, my trusted General?”

“Conquest, greatness, legends!”

The tiny woman seemed morose as she turned to greet her dreaded black dragon as he landed beside her on the dock. Her small frame leaned against him and sagged into his side, her body pressed into his hot scales. Any other person would have had scalding wounds on their body.

Barristan moved down to stand beside his liege and her dragon son. He looked at her face, her cheek pressed into the beast’s side. He could see in her expression the ghost of past campaigns, and great victories achieved at a high cost. Barristan witnessed as dry sobs wracked her body when her eyes closed. He shook his head, worrying for his Queen.

Daenerys opened her violet eyes and looked at him. “Tell me Barristan, how will Westeros remember me…? I know how Essos will forever remember me … will I be the beloved liberator, or the cursed tyrant … how many men will I put to the sword?” she asked softly in her moment of grief.

“How many women will die screaming, like in Yunkai …” more sobs shook her body. “How many children will die or be left destitute … I have shattered cities and laid waste to entire civilizations.”

Barristan had no answer to her pointless recriminations. He did not understand her remorse. Great times require great deeds and greater sacrifice. She had listed her ills, but forget to list her virtues. Slaves had been freed. A slave trade that had existed for five thousand years and resisted other mighty armies, even that of Valyria, she had been broken in a little over three years. The former slaves were fed and housed. The slaves that had been trained in a field of endeavor were already setting up new businesses and for the first time making money they could keep. These former slaves were helping their brothers and sisters learn trades so they too become clerks, merchants and farmers.

Those in the nobility that could see a new future had arrived had been accepted with open arms. These nobles were helping set a new free order and with their connections and talents allowing them to make healthy profits not based on the backs of their slaves. They had been surprised such a thing possible and were accepting the new world order.

He had suggested the fostering of their youth to teach a better way. The Queen had brightened immediately taking to the idea with a righteous passion. Her diplomatic skills and personal charisma had the free cities and nations clamoring to foster and ward the children of the noble families. He was still struggling to understand how she had accomplished it.

With the ill-gotten wealth from the slave holders Daenerys was rebuilding furiously, and amazingly many of the nobles were starting to come around. Daenerys was savage with sedition but merciful to all who truly asked for forgiveness and were willing to walk a new path.

Not yet twenty, and she had already accomplished so much.

“Then stop your quest,” Barristan said. “Give up your claim and go back to the house with the red door, Daenerys. Become the little woman you think you want to become and let some other person shape destiny. I will support any decision you make, my Queen, and defend you with my life to the end.”

Wordlessly, the blond woman’s body stiffened and all doubt left her face, her eyes once more becoming clear and focused.

Daenerys took a deep breath and looked at Selmy with calm resolve.

Barristan gripped his Queen’s shoulder softly. “Let’s forge greatness my Queen … you are the first of your name … this is your time. Please never forget this. I waited so long for greatness and it is finally here.”

Dany whipped around and gripped Drogon’s scales, quickly scurrying up to sit on his broad back. With a mighty heave of his legs he jumped up the twenty feet to the top of the squat, thick walled building, his neck extended as he roared his clarion call to arms. In the beast’s mind, he heard his brothers trumpeting loudly over the ports as they winged over them.

Daenerys ripped her Valyrian sword from its scabbard, the rarest of the ghost rune swords of past legends. The sword glowed a bright blue in the air above the Valyrian’s head as she ripped the sword in a complicated series of parries and thrusts.

Then the young woman rose up, her ankles pressed into grooves of her dragon’s scales. In a pure, amazingly loud soprano voice she called out: “Let this be a time that the scribes write was a time of honor, the renewal of just purpose - a time of forging greatness in the crucible of our age! I go to reclaim my throne, but I promise I will be something new … create something different … a world based on justice, honor, and rights for all persons whether high or low borne. Ours will be an enlightened age!”

Already Barristan could hear cheering rising up from the ships and the people that were now thronging the docks surrounding the dragon perched up on its airy.

“I am going back to claim what is mine, in righteousness. Let this be known as the dawn of a new era. A time of justice, equality for all, and the binding and healing of old wounds. A time when the Dragon, Direwolf and Lion learn to live in peace and harmony. Let this be a day that the gods themselves tremble in their heavens, a day of truth and destiny. Let this be a time of Reclamation.”

She quickly climbed up the black dragon’s neck until she had an arm looped around his horns, and thrust her sword high into the air.

The dragon stiffened and screamed a mighty, feral scream and roared a hot burst of flame high into the air. The ships closest to her and those on the shore around the pale Queen sounded their warhorns in response. Sounds pealed across the harbor, bouncing off ships and buildings.

More and more warhorns joined the clarion call. Soon the very air itself was echoing with their booms, shaking the birds as they flew. In all the free ports of the free cities, the harbors were filled with sounds of the call to arms. Gouts of flame from Drogon and his brothers brightened the sunny sky.

Barristan marveled at how Daenerys could so easily rally armies to her desires. How she filled her troops with confidence and righteous purpose. He had known kings, and none could come close to matching his Queen’s majesty, passion and charisma.

This would be a time that would be sung of by bards for the next thousand years.

The foundation of the Titan of Braavos shook from the mighty reverberation of the righteous call to arms, all the horns blowing in its harbors.

All of the ships pulled their anchors and began to row or sail to the sea to meet their destinies. Destinies of reclamation. What was stolen would be taken back. Heritages that had been lost would now be restored.

Let this be a time of reclamation.

Chapter 4

Challenge Accepted

Cersei / Oberyn / Mycrella

Cersei

Cersei looked down at the woman who stared up at them with the violet eyes of old Valyria, her platinum hair blowing in the breeze of the courtyard. She could see where the chiming she had heard when the woman rode by had come from, there were a multitude of tiny bells weaved into her hair.

What a strange fashion sense.

“What the hell is it with the bells in her hair?” she asked Robert.

He looked down a long few moments. “The rumors are true then … those bells are a Dothraki tradition—one for each victory!”

Cersei gaped down at the white haired woman with the bejeweled hair. Victories?! Cersei felt a rush run through her. That was what had always dreamed of, and had had denied her.

“That’s impossible!” Cersei gasped, her blood firing up in disbelief.

“Come! Parlay! I don’t have all day!” the Targaryen barked up haughtily.

“Impudent bitch!” Robert huffed.

“Fucking cunt!” Cersei barked.

“Cersei, please watch your tongue,” Robert said. “It is unseemly.”

“Why?! Just because I am a woman?” the Queen nearly shouted up at him.

“Yes.” Robert hissed down at his wife.

Cersei stared up at him with her blood roaring in her ears.

“God I hate your condescending manner Robert! The man can but the woman can’t?”

“Yes Cersei, that is right … that is the way it is meant to be. Men rule, women follow.” Robert reminded his wife, as if it were no wonder he had to slap her from time to time.
“I think a woman is calling you Robert… shouldn’t you go and be seemly and answer her sweet, sweet summons?” Cersei asked Robert sarcastically. “Please lead your wife, a woman, to the woman who is calling you, oh great man!” she goaded Robert with spiteful glee.

“I swear woman—you try my patience no end. It is not my fault that I have to slap you to knock sense into that thick head of yours!”

Cersei looked up at him with silent fury.

Robert sighed. “Let’s go meet our destiny, then,” Robert told her, gripping her elbow gently to lead her out.

They wound their way down the Red Keep until they came out a door before the Targaryen usurper.

She’s a fucking runt! was Cersei’s first thought. She was, maybe, barely five feet. She had looked at least six feet tall when she was on her dragon.

The tiny woman stared at them with stone cold eyes, her body appearing relaxed yet still poised on the cusp of violence.

The next thing Cersei noticed was a pale scar that ran from her hairline to her temple, and then down her cheek to her jaw line. She also saw a nasty scar on her throat on the same side, that looked as if something had pierced through at some point.

Cersei’s eyes flared wide open. Oh. My. Gods! The woman must be a stone cold killer.

“Finally! Has no one told you Robert, it is improper to keep your Queen waiting.” The white haired woman barked up at the six-foot eight man.

“Shut up, you dragon bitch! Usurper! You are not Queen yet!”

“Where is the real Robert anyways?” Daenerys asked, looking around and behind Robert. “The real Robert is a fat buffoon, a fucking slob … surely you can’t be him.” She sniffed. “I don’t smell alcohol… you’re not swaying or falling on your ass… your nose is not splotchy. Again I ask. Where is the real Robert Baratheon?”

“You’ve got a smart mouth for a bitch! Do you ever shut up?”

A honeyed smile appeared. “Why should I? I’ve got dragons and I’m pretty.”

“You won’t be so pretty when I smash in your chest with my war hammer like I did your brother, Daenerys Targaryen,” Robert retorted, hefting the heavy war hammer he had resting on his broad shoulder.

Cersei saw the woman’s eyes flare briefly, but it disappeared almost immediately.

“You are a tall one aren’t you… what is the weather like up there? I see you use a war hammer. That to make up for lack of a shaft?” the white haired usurper asked sweetly.

“Fuck you, you fucking little yap dog, barking at my ankles!” Robert spat back down at the tiny woman.

“So much for parlay. To me!” the tiny woman called out.

Cersei saw a quick movement out of the corner of her eye and turned her head to the gathered dragons.
She saw Robert follow her gaze when she exclaimed under her breath.

On top of the black beast Oberyn sat with a feral smile on his face, starting to dismount. Cersei saw that he had been sitting on a saddle of sorts, and that he was wearing some form of gloves and chaps. Oberyn slid down the dragon’s side and began to remove the articles.

On the white dragon sat Barristan Selmy, gazing at them with calm steely resolve and, she thought a flicker of sadness as well. At least one person would feel some sorrow for her passing, and that of her lout of a husband - though she couldn’t really give a rat’s ass herself for Robert’s dissipated legacy.

On the green dragon sat a big, hulking brute of a man. He wore no shirt, and his head was bald.

He was not so pretty to look at.

Barristan and the massive man also dismounted their dragons as well, and removed what Cersei surmised were articles of protection against the dragons’ heat. She could see some shrubs in a bed wilting and turning brown near the black dragon’s hindquarters.

The men approached, stopping ten feet behind the tiny, white haired woman.

“These are all my champions. These are men of great valor and even greater skill. You can fight them, or me. I would advise you Robert, to choose to fight one of them, since when I kill you it will be written that the great Stag of Baratheon was felled by little ol’ me. Can’t have that now, can we O Robert?” the blond woman sing-songed to the King.

“Now Robert, such language is unseemly before a woman isn’t it?” Cersei offered up to her husband.

His only answer was a withering gaze down at her.

During the exchange the men gathered behind Daenerys had moved in closer. Robert was half-ringed by the usurper and her three warriors, but he showed no outward signs of fear. Cersei knew he intended to take them all down to hell with him, if he could.

“I don’t fear any of you,” the Baratheon said. “Who wants to be the first to die?!”

“Each of us have a reason for being here,” Daenerys said. “Barristan is my Knight and he wishes to protect me, though I don’t need it. Strong Belwas wants a light workout before he sits on your corpse and eats his late lunch. And Oberyn, - well, Oberyn just wants to fight. And me, I just like killing men who are full of themselves.”

Robert lifted his war hammer from his shoulder, taking a step back and swinging it in vicious arcs over his head. For a long minute he weaved a complicated dance of death with his hammer, before finally resting its massive weight back on his shoulder.

“I think my war hammer would like to get very acquainted with each of you,” he told the warriors arced around him.

The small woman stepped back a few feet and whipped out her sword. Cersei saw that it had a bright blue glow. She had been right. She could see that the light was coming from blue runes and filigree that were magically glowing up through the metal. These were no mere etchings in the steel.
Somehow they glowed from within, making the metal shine bright and clear, with outlines that were clear and distinct.

Daenerys started to twirl the sword around, rotating her wrist. She snatched out a long-bladed dagger seemingly from nowhere and began a beautiful dance of death, her sword and dagger flashing with lightning speed. She jumped, spun, leaped and moved with the grace of a highly trained dancer, and finished with a flourish.

She stayed in a low crouch for a moment, one leg forward and bent at the knee, the other extended behind her on the ball of her bent foot. She held her blades just above the ground, angled upward. She wore a feral smile when she slowly stood up again.

She moved forward as Oberyn moved back, further than Daenerys had been and began to spin his spear around in a two handed grip. The spear became a blur, the two ribbons near the spearhead catching and holding Cersei’s gaze.

The spear was moving so fast Cersei could barely track it. Then, without warning Oberyn jabbed forward, impaling an imaginary foe before finishing with a flourish, winding the spear over his shoulders and then gripping it behind his back and pivoting as he stepped forward with a lunge. Finished, he moved back into the arc around Robert.

On cue, Barristan stepped back with his traditional broadsword. He took a defensive position, and then without preamble set his blade to slicing through the air in impressive, complicated patterns. The blade was nigh invisible it moved so fast. Cersei could not help but jerk when he would suddenly lunge his blade forward, stabbing with deadly intent.

Barristan’s macabre dance continued for another minute before he stopped and resumed his place.

Now the large man who Cersei did not recognize had his turn. He just patted his belly and laughed. “Strong Belwas is hungry - he will kill you quick, big man.”

Cersei noticed his huge body was crisscrossed with scars. He had gapped teeth, and his bald head had no redeeming quality. She wondered where the whore could have found him. Probably used him as a fuck toy, she thought spitefully. She watched the man pull a deadly looking scimitar from its sheath before stepping back.

Despite the man’s overweight girth, Cersei quickly realized that this hulk of a man moved with the grace of an antelope. He was light on his feet and even jumped gracefully from one complicated move to the next one, his blade first high and then low making deadly arcs in the air. Then he too was finished.

Unlike the others, he moved right up to Robert, getting in his face. “I will enjoy killing you. I will even let you cut me twice big man,” he told Robert mildly.

Robert snorted down at him. “I will smash your brains out of your imbecile skull before you even know what hit you, fat man. I will kill you, fa—!”

Cersei eyes whipped up to look hard at Robert’s face. He suddenly became stiff, and started to fall forward. Belwas deftly caught Robert’s falling frame, his heavy weight landing into Belwas’ bulk as the large man spun him around to lay him on his back.

What? Cersei thought, not understanding what could have possibly happened to Robert.

The white haired woman moved forward to stand over the fallen man. “Sigh,” she said mockingly. “The bigger they are the harder they fall. Gods I love it when a plan comes together. Good job Varys,” the woman threw the compliment to the figure over Cersei’s shoulder.

Cersei whipped around to look at the vile man who called himself the Spider approach with a smug smile on his face. He held a blowgun in his right hand. She was certain if she squinted hard enough she would see a slimy trail behind the ugly man. He should call himself ‘the slug’, she thought.

The bald eunuch came up to them. “My, my, my …oh excuse me. Our deposed king has been stung by a bee I believe,” he said, bending down to one knee beside Robert’s head and worming a hand beneath the back of it. “Ah, yes, here is the stinger,” he said, standing up with a small dart in his hand.

“But why…?” Cersei asked out loud. Why go through all of this? Why didn’t the bitch just kill them and get it over with? Was the white-haired slut that afraid of Robert? Maybe she was not as ferocious as Cersei had thought.

“It’s over… I have won, Robert.” The woman told the fallen Baratheon. Suddenly, Cersei heard Joffrey squealing and crying like a young child. She whipped around and several of her goldcloaks held him in their grip as the boy blubbered and shook in abject terror.

“Mother please!” the boy cried to her.

Cersei turned to look at the Targaryen who was staring at her with those intense, violet eyes.

“What are you waiting for … get it over with bitch!” Cersei sneered at the woman. She knew it was the end, but she found it strangely calming.

“Mommy save meeeeee! Please!” Joffrey whimpered.

“I believe I will,” the white haired woman replied. “Robert Baratheon …I condemn you… to exile.”

“WHAT!” Cersei barked at the slight woman in shock. “Exile…? I don’t understand. Your letter said you would make House Baratheon suffer justice.”

“But but—I don’t understand.” Cersei was totally flummoxed. “You’re not going to kill us?”

“Why should I?… I have won. It is over. And I am tired of killing,” the Targaryen replied.

“Robert Baratheon, I exile you to Essos. You will be watched. I am merciful but only grant clemency once. You will be on a ship bound across the Narrow Sea with the tide.”

Daenerys made a motion to the goldcloaks holding Cersei’s sniveling son, who had begun to twist and cry.

Although she loved her son, he disgusted her at that moment.

“Joffrey Baratheon, I am told you want to find your ancestral Valyrian sword and discover the truth of the Doom of Valyria. Noble. You will be on a ship bound for Volantis on the tide. This ship is being outfitted for just such an expedition, with brave men who seek knowledge and truth. You will help them discover what is to be found. I salute your bravery.”

The boy cried like a newborn babe as he was dragged away, still calling out for his mother.

“You, Cersei, actually have a choice in your destiny.”
Cersei was confused by this change in what she thought was to be. She stared at the Queen.

The woman stared at her with a neutral expression and calm equilibrium.

For several minutes silence filled the courtyard.

Finally, Cersei was forced to ask “What choices?”

“I give you three choices, Cersei Lannister. One: You can join your husband in exile. Two: You can go back to Casterly Rock to your loving father and his gentle ways.”

Cersei blanched and shivered at that. The Targaryen was silent again.

Another long silence ensued. Finally, “And number three?” Cersei asked Daenerys.

“You can go to Dorne and train to become the warrior you have told so many you wanted to become. There, no one will keep you from becoming what you claim you want to be.”

Cersei just stared at the Targaryen.

“You will train with Myrion Dwellen, the master trainer of Dorne. He trained Oberyn, and he will train you. Your choice.” Daenerys paused. “I suggest you take choice number two. I know you find number one repulsive, and you won’t be able to handle number three.

“Three!” Cersei screamed.

“Then you will be on a ship to Dorne on the morning tide.” The Queen motioned to several more goldcloaks, and they came to grab the fallen Lannister and dragged her over to Oberyn before starting to walk off.

Daenerys Targaryen turned to Barristan. “I love it when a plan falls into place.”

“But why send Cersei to Dorne for sword training, your Grace? … she is a conceited and vile thing. We both know she is soft and will fail miserably anyways,” Barristan asked his Queen.

“Barristan … please don’t be so truthful.” Daenerys smirked. “But really, I am not so sure… I just have a feeling. There aren’t enough female warriors in this world, Barristan.” the Queen answered. She gripped his arm in a warriors salute as Belwas came up to join them. “Let’s go explore my new kingdom,” she told them, heading toward the Red Keep.

Oberyn

Oberyn was impressed, if not terribly disappointed. He had hoped to prove his mettle against Robert Baratheon. He had so wanted to pit his spear versus the legendary war hammer. Alas, it was not meant to be. The Queen had demanded otherwise.

She had planned it all out, and damn if it did not unfold exactly as she had predicted, even down to Belwas catching and putting Robert gently to the ground. But dammit, he had wanted a fight!

He had argued vociferously with the Queen several times at the planning table when they discussed her plans for the taking of Kings Landing. It was bloodless! Where was the glory in that?

He had told her that it was too dangerous to leave the Baratheons alive. That she would always be looking over her shoulder.
He finally had to shut up and stop arguing when Daenerys had looked over her shoulder at him with an unconcerned look, her white eyebrow cocked. “Do I look concerned Oberyn? I do have you to protect me, don’t I?” He gave up against that wall of sarcasm, the snickers around the table more piercing than any spear thrust.

He gave her props for her courage and skills. He knew he could beat her - he was very sure he could beat her. At least, he was almost certain of it. He had eyed her. This woman was Nymeria reborn and then some.

In a rare moment of candid honesty he wondered if truly could beat the woman.

He found her to be wickedly fast and surprisingly strong when they sparred. Her body was water and smoke when they fought - his spear thrusts finding only empty air while he himself wildly dodged sword thrusts and swipes that were lightning fast. This woman did not hide in battle but was at the forefront, and for that he admired her greatly.

He had thought of trying to bring her to his and Ellaria’s bed, but Tyrion from the very first had dissuaded all from making any sexual overtures to the woman. He had actually shook when he warned them, looking around furtively as if afraid Daenerys would appear out of thin air.

When he had pressed Tyrion on the matter sensing something more, Tyrion just shivered and spoke softly after looking around and then up at him: “Her sword is not her only deadly weapon. Her mouth can be a most fearsome thing, Oberyn!” It was strange indeed.

The Imp was a handsome man. Maybe he and Ellaria would let him grace their bed instead. Ellaria craved being DPed and Obyron wondered what it would feel like to be fucked by the dwarf. There certainly would be different angles and other…. challenges. Time would tell.

Oberyn relished every moment once Cersei was brought to him. The Queen had made clear, unfortunately, that the deposed Queen was to be unharmed. She didn’t say anything about verbal harm though, he smirked.

He saw that Queen’s attention had drifted away from Cersei as he gripped her elbow in a painful grip that would leave no bruise. “Come, cunt!” he spat at Cersei. He loved her hiss of outrage. He pulled Cersei’s arm until the woman fell in behind him.

“Not so mighty now, are you cunt? You are very lucky the Queen is a gentle soul… else I would impale you on my spear, cunt.” He sneered at the beautiful woman. “In fact, if it wasn’t for the Queen you would be raped by now, cunt!”

He felt the anger radiating from the woman. She glared at him and then sighed. “I’ve been raped for half my life—what’s another hour Oberyn? Just another dick raping me … might as well add you to the list.”

“Fuck you, cunt … when have you ever been raped?!” he barked at the woman.

“Oh let me see. Nineteen. Brought to a man who hardly knew my name, whom I hated, and he took me like a whore, all the while calling me by another woman’s name. Nothing for me… he just fucked me … gods damned it hurt…” Cersei replied.

“Please Cersei. You spread your legs for more than Robert. Tell me, are the rumors true about you and Jamie?”

“Yes.” To her credit Cersei didn’t deny it. “We started “fucking” when we were twelve.”
“Then what the fuck are you talking about, cunt?” he growled at her, taking her down to the docks.

“Free will, Oberyn. Men have it and women don’t. You get to fuck us whenever you want, whether or not we want it.”

“All of my women wanted it!” he exclaimed.

“Sure they did. The great Oberyn – the great spearsman eh? Your shaft is always hard, isn’t it? … tip might be a little dull though…”

“Shut up!”

“Do you find, Belwas, is it… Do you find him attractive?” the beauty asked softly.

Oberyn thought of the mighty but portly man with his hanging gut and his not so handsome face

“You know the answer to that, Cersei.”

“Oh is it my name now. Then let me give you a little scenario Oberyn. You’re drugged and made helpless like a woman and you’re put on a bed at nineteen. The drug has permanently robbed you of all your strength and prowess.

“Now we have sweet Belwas, with a gigantic cock I might add, a long, thick cock and he comes to you, Oberyn. Does he seduce you and give you sweet foreplay? Does he make you ache for him? Does he give you lubrication, Oberyn? Or does he ram his thick dick up your ass and slam it home with savage fury as he rapes you? Hmmm? How would that feel, oh once mighty Oberyn?” Cersei sweetly asked.

He glared back at her.

“For over fifteen years, never knowing when your big man would come to you and rape you. But that is right, you deserve it - right sweet Oberyn?”

They walked on in sullen silence for a while down the street.

“Do you know how painful it is for a woman to get fucked when her cunt is dry, Oberyn? Oh that’s right, you’re the great Dornish prince. I’m sure you have never forced yourself on a woman before she was nice and wet for you, have you? Sweet, always considerate Oberyn.” The former queen cooed to him with a vile sneer on her face.

Oberyn said nothing, stone-faced. There had been a few times… “Shut the fuck up!” he roared at the fallen queen, his conscience now yammering at him. He had always been sweet to Elleria, but when the lust was on him…

He lightened his grip on Cersei’s elbow, the fight now gone out of them.

“Sometimes I wonder what I would have turned into if Eddard Stark had taken the throne. Damn his stiff necked honor. Yes, Oberyn I have my tragic flaws - many of them - but all I ever had surrounding me tore me down even further. Fed upon me. Made my faults all the more glaring,” the blond beauty mused.

“I never had an ideal to strive for. So yes Oberyn, I am a cunt as you say.”

He turned to look at her. She was still a conceited, ill tempered, vain woman who knew a lot about nothing, but he could see her point. To be taken over and over … by a man you hate…
Oberyn was many things, some not so good - but he tried to be an honest man.

“Come Cersei. You said you wanted to be a warrior.”

Myrcella

Myrcella sat in front of her dresser brushing out her long, dark blond hair. She looked at the reflection of her sparkling green eyes, full of life, gaiety and love. She still could not believe how well her initial meeting with the Queen had gone.

She had been so fearful. The rumors of the savage nature of the woman were already becoming legend. She had fought in her battles. She was no general hiding behind the lines giving directions; she was in the midst of the savagery dispensing death on all sides. She had been truly afraid that the day of her meeting with the Queen would be the day she breathed her last.

Her fears had seemed to come to fruition when the woman heard who she was. The look that had passed over her face had been so dire. Westeros’ history was full of entire houses that had been killed when a dynasty was established.

New rulers did not want to worry about threats from the old.

So Myrcella had thought for a surety her life was forfeit. Her only wish was to save her wives; her pride.

She still felt a warm rush of love flow through her veins remembering how her wives came to her side and demanded that the Queen take their lives to spare hers. She had to chuckle, recalling the scrum that had developed as her pride fought to save each other.

Then the Queen told her to arise, and treated her as an equal, telling her she had a bright future if she lived up to her expectations and abilities.

She was so incredibly happy.

The new Queen had, from the first, involved Myrcella with the forming of her new government and was having her take lessons on governing and the history of Essos.

She had taken the younger girl out to test the newly designed dragon seats, riding chaps, and gloves the Queen was commissioning so that non-Valyrians could ride her dragons. Daenerys wanted to perfect her designs that Oberyn and Barristan had been using. She told Myrcella that soon more dragons would grace the skies over Westeros and Esso. Myrcella was so excited to hear that but wondered about that. Where would the Queen get more dragon eggs?

The Queen had asked if she would volunteer to ride Viserion. She needed to test a setup sized for smaller riders, like women. Daenerys had told her she would be with Viserion, getting him used to her riding his back until he accepted her.

She had squealed like a little child climbing up on the white dragon and then feeling him launch into the sky. She had flown on a dragon. Repeatedly! She remembered the Queen smiling up at her as she flew by. Afterwards, Daenerys had given her treats to give the dragon, big chunks of meat she threw into its opened mouth, followed by a big ox bone. The dragon had actually rumbled as he took it gently from her. Afterwards, Viserion had actually rubbed her face with his cheek. It had been hot, but so worth it!
Myrcella had felt so special with the white dragon rubbing her face with his face. That was until Barristan had appeared on the field. Viserion had left her in flash running over to Barristan squealing in happiness. The dragon rubbed his face all over the older knight as he good naturedly complained.

Now the Queen had surprised her yet again. Ravens had arrived early this morning. The Queen had conquered Westeros without firing one arrow, without any battles. Without any deaths. Her parents were alive. The Queen had spared them! She never thought that would happen.

Oberyn had railed at the Queen, telling her that one cannot let the deposed regents live. They had to be killed. They had shouted and cursed each other, but, to Oberyn’s credit he backed down when he saw the Queen was adamant.

The Queen had visited Myrcella often just to talk and ask about her time in King’s Landing, and about her parents. She had even asked her if she loved them. “You make them sound pretty vain, self-focused, unwise and, well, lacking as parents.”

“They’re my parents my Queen, I can’t help but love them.”

The Queen had smiled. “Good answer.”

And today her parents were alive.

Daenerys always seemed genuinely interested in Myrcella’s thoughts and answers. The young woman longed to make the Queen appreciate and value her opinions and efforts. She would strive hard to achieve the Queen’s grace.

She felt the smile on her face at her good fortune.

She remembered wearing a similar smile at another time. She thought back to that day with Uncle Jon six years ago. Her and Tommen were playing hide and seek in the main hall, hiding behind furniture and suits of armors. They had seen him coming down the hall, with a serious look on his face.

Jon Arryn had always been a taciturn man, but they loved him just the same. “Play with us Uncle Jon!” She had called to him.

He for some reason had a very pained look come across his face. He told her that he had to see her father. It was a matter of great importance to the safety of the realm.

They had grabbed his legs and Tommen jumped up to wrap his tiny body around Uncle Jon, pleading. “Please, please, please…!”

He had relented and told them ‘only for a moment’. They played fifteen minutes of hide and seek. Of course she knew now that he knew where they were the whole time. Myrcella thought back to how their “uncle” played like it was so hard to find their hiding spots. They crawled all over their Uncle laughing and jumping around. Tommen even got up on his shoulders shouting, ‘I am King of the World!’

They had worn him out.

She remembered that he sat Tommen down after that, and got on his knee in front of him. He asked: “What he would you do if you were king of the world?”

“I would be a king of truth, justice and love to the whole world!” Tommen had shouted, a big smile on his face.
Uncle Jon had sobbed and patted his head, then hugged him hard that day and whispered into his ear “Never change Tommen!” Myrcella had then wrapped her arms around him and whispered in his ear, “I wish you were my father.” He had cried so hard hearing that.

After he composed himself, he got up and went back down the hall toward his tower of the hand. She had asked him where he was going. Didn’t he have to meet with their father?

He turned around “It was really not that important after all Myrcella. Never change, my sweet angel. Don’t you or Tommen ever change.”

Myrcella felt Arianna saddle in behind her on the bench. She pressed into her Lioness. Arianna’s naked body felt so warm and voluptuous against Myrcella’s hot tight teenage body. Her large full breast pressed into Myrcella’s back flattening as she took the brush out of her lover’s hand and pulled the lithesome beauty’s body hungrily into her flat stomach and full tits. Myrcella felt Arianna thick long stiff nipples digging into her back through the thin material.

Arianna reached down for the hem of Myrcella's sheer slip and pulled it on. Myrcella lifted her ass enough for Arianna to pull it up and off Myrcella's slender nubile body her long blond hair cascading down from the neck line.

Arianna’s mouth was on the princess’s throat nibbling and her hands cupped and massaged the girl’s little doves. Arianna’s hands tweaked the girl’s nipples pulling and squeezing the now rock hard nipples filling Myrcella’s breast with aching heat. The Lannister’s pussy was already so fucking wet as she tilted her head over and their mouths came together heatedly.

Arianna’s right hand fingertips slowly circled on the Lannister’s smooth inner thigh of the princess's leg. Arianna slowly circled her fingers up the princess's leg to her heated now dripping core. Myrcella smelled her thick musk filling the room. Arianna broke their heated kiss "Oh gods your cunt smells so good baby!" Arianna groaned into Myrcella's ear. Arianna’s fingers were now rubbing up and down Myrcella’s already dripping slit. The princess of Dorne worked and rolled the princess of Lannister’s swollen inner cunt lips for a minute. Lips that were already so slimy and wet with flowing love juice.

Arianna gripped the back of Myrcella's head pulling her wife's mouth back hungrily to hers and shoved her tongue deep into Myrcella's mouth. Myrcella gagged into Arianna’s mouth feeling her wife’s first two fingers slowly worm into her buttery cunt and start pumping in slow and deep stroking her heated core. Arianna’s tongue now down her throat as the princess’s eyes rolled back and her body convulsed. Myrcella body shivered feeling her wife slow stroke in and out her tight cunt. In and out Arianna worked an initial slow rhythm stretching out her wife’s cunt. Arianna moaned into Myrcella’s mouth feeling the girl’s hot inner folds wetly suck on her pumping fingers.

Thoughts roiled in Myrcella’s mind of her supposedly prime and proper mother who was on her way to Dorne. She wondered what that meeting would be like. She looked forward to showing her mother personally the Targaryen way.

She would have smiled but her face slashed with primal pleasure. Arianna had her stroke now and was ramming her long fingers deep into Myrcella’s hungry pussy. Myrcella’s inner petals gripped tight on the fingers working hard up into her eighteen year old belly. Her wife’s hand pumping her long fingers so deliciously deep up Myrcella’s twat. The sounds of a hand slapping hard into a wet vulva loud in the room.

Arianna's left hand was back on Myrcella's swollen breasts cupping and massaging with hard squeezes. Arianna's hand moving up to cup and grind into Myrcella's peach sized tits. Her palm rasping the hard nipple and rolling the throbbing nubbin. The Martell's hand moving from breast to breast back and forth rolling, squeezing and grinding the engorged breasts and teats harder as their fuck lust rose.

Arianna was kissing Myrcella’s throat with hot kisses and kissing down her wife’s collarbone down to Myrcella’s shoulder kissing it all over. Then the Martell kissed back up the perfect collarbone and up Myrcella’s cawing throat before mating their lips tight. Their lips melded and tongues hungrily twirled around in Myrcella’s mouth dancing and writhing in twined slippery love.

For the next few minutes Myrcella was fucked hard by her sweet lover. They would break their heated kiss so Myrcella and Arianna could get their breath. The older woman ramming her fingers in hard with a strong piston motion.

Then Arianna slammed her fingers in to the third knuckle holding them in deep fluttering and ground her hand into Myrcella’s sloppy wet cunt. The Martell’s palm grinding into Myrcella’s swollen shiny nubbin tormenting it with wet friction.

Arianna wiggled her fingers in a flutterry motion deep in Myrcella’s cum filled cunt. Arianna moaned feeling her wife’s sodden cunt folds work through her fingers as they worked up and down churning through the slimy inner folds. All the while Arianna now worked her thumb rubbing over the teen’s rigid clit. Arianna felt Myrcella’s clitoral hood squirting around underneath her rolling, jamming thumb.

They were not kissing at the moment and Myrcella’s head lulled into her wife’s throat. Her face filled with seeming anguish that was only ecstasy ripping hard slashes across her features. “Huunggg hhnnngg unnggg unnhhh .. Oh Arianna … you always fuck me so good. You always make me cum so fucking hard—augggggh hhnnngg hhnggg!” the beautiful teen chuffed. She was so in love with her wives.

A light sheen of perspiration was starting to cover their bodies. Their bodies slipping and jerking against each other as their bodies writhed in pleasure. Myrcella’s cum had wept up her belly, down her ass cheeks and along her upper thighs. Arianna worked back and forth between pumping her fingers into Myrcella’s cunt and burying and churning the princess’s inner folds with her fluttering fingers her thumb rolling the clit jutting out its hood. Their mouths again mated tight as tongues dueled in heated love.

Myrcella’s groans swallowed by Arianna’s hot mouth locked with hers, as the older woman’s long tongue swept over her tonsils. Myrcella gripped the woman’s shoulders her body half twisted as hard shudders began to form deep in her belly.

Sensing Myrcella was on the precipice and ready to topple off Arianna started slamming her fingers in and out her wife’s hot now wildly spasming cunt hole.

Then the lead lioness of the Pride of Dorn was screaming into Arianna’s mouth. Their mouths locked tight. Their tongues wetly wrestled deep in the teen’s mouth. The teen’s body flipped and jackknifed hard into the body of her wife as the older woman looped her free arm around Myrcella’s body. She held her wife tight to her body as the teenager’s body shook violently while Myrcella’s pussy clenched hard on the fingers still plunging in hard and deep into the exploding twat.

Myrcella mind drifted in her orgasmic high. She thought idly how she never knew how she would be taken next. Would it be singly like now? The twins liked to hunt paired up and devour her. Arianna freely paired up with a twin or joining them both to simply overwhelm Myrcella with their combined adore.

Of course it worked the other way too. They all preyed on each often as targets of opportunities.
Opportunities Myrcella never passed up.

Like yesterday she had caught Loreza in the private area of the royal stables that only the high royals were allowed. She had found her sweet lioness in the tact room working her leathers. She had forcefully stripped her wife as Loreza gasped and mewled with cum trickling down her thighs as she was roughly stripped like a wonton whore.

Then Myrcella shoved Loreza down over the tact bench and fucked her from behind with her fingers pounding her love’s drooling love box. She pressed the sand snake down hard into the bench mashing her little tits hard into the wood. The wood grinding in on Loreza’s rock hard nipples. She was bent over her wife kissing her upper back and snaking her free hand underneath the writhing sand snake pinching and pulling on Loreza’s nipples.

Myrcella all the while whispering to Loreza “You’re my slut aren’t you Loreza? … you love how I take and fuck you like the slut you are! Gods be damned you are so fucking wet for me.” Myrcella convulsed harder in her current orgasm thinking of how Loreza cried out “I’m your fucking slut!” Myrcella’s face slashed in memories of Loreza screams of orgasm. She had reveled in her wife’s body as it shook and convulsed in strong aftershocks. She had stripped quickly then and got on her knees behind her wife bent over the tact bench still. Loreza’s muscles were still quivering madly from her womb rending orgasm and strong aftershocks.

Myrcella leaned in on her knees and mashed her face deep into Loreza’s cunt and ate her out from behind. Her mouth made wet sloppy sounds devouring her wife’s drooling clam. She sucked in hot mouthfuls of cunt petals. She then pulled and slurped on the slimy labia lips. She feasted on her wife’s cunt hole. Myrcella punched her tongue in deep into the steamy cauldron drinking her wife’s sweet cum.

Myrcella would work her tongue up and down the drenched slit raking her tongue over Loreza’s bulging clit that made Loreza cry out in helpless pleasure. Myrcella bent lower and tongue lashed Loreza's swollen clit with fast tongue swipes. Then sucking Loreza's clit between her lips and quick sucking before spitting it out and tongue lashing again as Loreza jolted and whooped in ecstasy. Back and forth Myrcella worked her wife's clit first tongue lashing Loreza's clit. Her tongue slapping and stabbing hard the shiny nodule as Loreza cried out in shrieks of ecstasy. Then Myrcella again sucked the clit deep into her mouth and tongue lash while hard sucking on her wife’s clit and polishing it with her swirling tongue. Myrcella repeated this loving torment again and again.

Then Myrcella moved her face up and glued her lips around her wife’s cunt hole. Her head punching in and out pounding her curled tongue in and out her wife’s heated core. Her tongue scooped hot dollops of sweet creamy cum. Each gulp of her wife’s cum was so heavenly.

Then Myrcella’s mouth worked up to lick and rim her wife’s asshole. Myrcella’s hands gripped her wife’s hard toned ass cheeks spreading her ass crack wide open. Myrcella moaned hard seeing Loreza’s asshole clutching before her. She lapped and rimmed the sweet anus with her fervid tongue licking harder and harder. Then Myrcella pushed her stiffened tongue into the yielding sphincter ring.

Loreza cried out in ecstasy. “Oh gods Myrcella! Fuck my hot tight asshole with your long tongue! Uunngg hhnnngg hhnnnnggg uunnhhhh!” the sand snake grunted in primal bliss. The sand snake pushing back with her body to take her wife’s tongue deeper up her pinching asshole.

Soon Myrcella had her tongue buried deep in Loreza’s asshole. Myrcella working her head to drive her tongue even deeper with long strokes up into Loreza’s ass. The sand snake squealed in sharp pleasure begging her wife to drive her tongue ever deeper up her tight ass. Myrcella reveled in the tight pinching on her probing tongue. Myrcella’s head started a hammering motion up and down driving her tongue so deep up her wife’s ass.

Myrcella brought her right hand to her wife’s cunt and quickly worked two fingers into Loreza’s swollen quim and pound her wife’s quim hard. Myrcella fucked the eighteen year hard and deep like she craved it. Loreza’s cunt tightly gripped the fingers pounding her cunt. All the while Myrcella rimmed and tongue fucked her wife’s sweet asshole.

Loreza reached back underneath herself and rubbed her clit furiously. Myrcella felt Loreza’s body begin to shake with short jerks until her body was shaking like she was in a howling sandstorm. Sensing Loreza’s orgasm was at hand Myrcella jammed her head forward fully burying her tongue up Loreza’s hot asshole. Then Loreza’s body exploded

"Nngmmnnnggeeey annggmmnniiieeeey!" Loreza screamed as she had an anal and vaginal orgasm that fed off each other ripping her womb and asshole to shreds. Loreza reached back and gripped a fistful of Myrcella’s blond hair and jammed Myrcella’s face deep into her ass cleft keeping her wife’s tongue buried up her exploding asshole. "Mnnnggiieeee! Ungghh! Ohnngg!
Ummggnnggmniiieeeey!" Loreza wailed her body surging and flipping, shocked by fierce seizures of ecstasy. The sand snake jammed back with her body while her hand jerked forward with its clenched twisted hair knot mashing her wife’s face deep into her ass cleft.

Myrcella remembered thinking even though they were lionesses, her sweet Loreza sounded like a mare in heat getting fucked by her stallion: Myrcella. Myrcella moaned louder for Arianna as she remembered Loreza’s asshole gripping her tongue so hard with each pulse of Loreza’s orgasm.

Back in the present, Myrcella thought, gods she and Arianna were going to fuck and fuck and fuck the late morning away. Myrcella’s body was flushed and now sweat soaked. She felt slutty and the thought exulted her.

Her body convulsed thinking about tonight her body still cumming hard. Her and Arianna would be refreshed by then. Dorea and Loreza had gone on a wild boar hunt with their father. They would be full of the blood lust and so fucking horny when they returned.

On the nights of a hunt Arianna and Myrcella were the gazelles to be hunted and brought down and devoured. She knew the sisters would fuck her and Arianna blind. Then exhausted and covered in sweat and cum they would lean back on the carved headboard of their bed and watch the sisters fuck deep into the night in hot intense love.

By the seven gods she was a slut. Life was indeed good.

Jon Arryn  (6 years ago)

Jon Arryn had been slowly working up to telling Robert the truth of this “children” and his near assassination by Peytr Baelish had convinced him he needed to tell Robert the truth now.

Jon Arryn sat at the desk of the hand in his quarters, his fingers tapping the surface. He knew what honor dictated he do. He had been hell bent to tell King Robert the truth of his children’s lineage. Joffrey was a shit and a total loss. But sweet Myrcella and Tommen… thank the old gods they had reminded him of their sweet natures.

Honor could take a walk. Was it honorable to have children put to the sword? He had known what would happen, but he had subsumed it underneath the guise of honor. FOOL!
How would his actions be written in the books of history? Would history remember this age as a time of dishonor because of him? Or would it be remembered as… what … an age of reclamation?
Bran

Bran laughed as he quickly ran away from his scolding mother. After all these years, Bran wondered why his mother still even tried. He was going to climb the walls of Winterfell. He felt it was his birthright. His father scolded him as well and rolled his eyes when he needed to, but generally looked the other way. He was letting Bran express his individuality, and Bran loved him for it. His father always told him: “son, just be sure of your grip, and plan out your route.”

He went to the broken tower to take on that challenge for today, and climbed amongst the ruins and ran along the uneven timbers, scaring the working crows. He laughed as they vaulted to the sky, complaining noisily.

His sixteen year old fingers itching to continue climbing, he immediately continued his ascent, his fingers and the toes of his boots finding the little holds they had long memorized. In a heartbeat he was two-thirds of the way up the tower.

He turned, and noticed a large raven sitting on a corbel looking at him. How strange… The bird was focusing on him with his beady eyes. Bran then noticed a scroll tied to its leg. A messenger raven! Then he noticed on the corbel on his opposite side, another raven landed and worked loudly.

Bran turned to look at the new arrival. He froze, startled and afraid. The raven had a third eye on its forehead. It squawked furiously in his direction, all three eyes boring into him.

Suddenly both ravens launched themselves into the air, but instead of flying off they flapped to him and furiously started to peck at his hands, their sharp strikes ridiculously painful. He began to lose his grip, the pain from the stabbing pecks too sharp for his fingers to keep in their holds. He started to slip.

“Nnnnooooooooo!” Bran shrieked as he lost his hold and plummeted down to the ground.

He felt sharp, agonizing pain in his back. He instinctively knew his back had been broken. He would never walk again. He would never be a knight and marry a maiden fair! Then Bran’s world went black.

Long he drifted on a sea of blackness neither truly aware or concerned. His dreams had shattered along with his back. He would never again ride a horse or practice swinging a sword. He would never get to fight for what was just. He would never win the hand of a maiden fair and father many strong knights and sweet maidens. Never have children to marry some strong Lord or fair maiden. He was as broken as his dreams.

He felt the air disturbed by beating wings that filled his mind with the buffeting of air, and then the wings punching into his face. He tried to swat the damn bird away, but suddenly he felt the its beak hammering into his skull.
“Let go … the past is no more—embrace the future. See with your mind and not your eyes. Focus on the world and not your small self. See. See. See. See.”

The bird pecked his head hard with his hammering bill.

The first few times this happened, his mind would groggily wake only to immediately fall back into unconsciousness.

Then the time came that the bird awoke him from the blackness and he did not slip back into it. Visions exploded across his mind. He saw the sky filled with swirling birds cawing wildly and then diving to the Earth. He saw his body in the roots of a tree, becoming one with it. He saw his father sharpening his sword, and then his two sisters nervously awaiting their mates at the altar. He saw two teenage children roughly his age guiding him over stones up a rocky island.

He shook his head. He was flying so high in the sky he felt he could touch the sun. Far below he saw a dragon and direwolf frolicking in gaiety, their bodies shimmering, becoming human and making passionate love in a glade full of flowers - but the distance was too great to see who they were.

“Give up the past. Accept your future. You are late. You must fly, fly.”

“I can’t. My arms aren’t strong enough. I have no legs!”

“Your mind is your wings … Law is your truth—embrace it! Fly to the sun and dive deep into the Earth! Become one with the Tree of Life and the One Tree. Save yourself, save your family, save our land.

“Find the dragon that sleeps with the wolf. She will protect you. Find find find! Together they will slay slay and then guide guide.”

“Forget your arms and forget your legs! You are the Greenseer and a true warg. See with your third eye. Let go. Accept the destiny you were born for. The mind is the portal to all things … use it and be free! Free yourself self self!”

“Forget the world of man. It is a small, paltry thing. You will be the knight that binds evil to the Earth and guides the Warden to the new Staff of Law. You must not fail. Fail. Fail.”

Margery

The scroll was nothing if not inspiring. It was all hogwash; it had to be. There was no way that the Conqueror of Essos would be almost suing for peace. That she wanted to give amnesty and forgive and forget. That all she wanted was justice, and justice for all to boot. No, it was some clever trap.

“I think we must act to take out this threat, Grandmother. She is an unknown. We have no idea what her true goals are.”

“I think it is in her letter, Margaery. Sometimes the truth is plain to see. This woman is seeking peace … can’t you see that?” Olenna Tyrell gently chided and guided. Margaery could see the disappointment in her grandmother’s wise eyes.

“NO! She is a threat and must be removed.”

Olenna sighed heavily. “Child. Not all actions require such drastic actions. I know we poisoned Joffrey with blood worms from the Basilisk Islands. A poison that had you drinking moon tea for several months to kill off the parasites gradually, I might add.”
“I would do it again in a heartbeat to defend Highgarden and House Stark!” Margaery hotly responded.

“Yes, I know. You would give your life for your beloved, but calm down. Not all situations require such a severe Game of Thrones response, my granddaughter. Are you becoming like your husband-to-be, my dear? You sound an awful like Joffrey.”

Margaery gasped, sitting back in her chair as if slapped. Her breath shortened. “No. I have not become what I hate.”

“Then stop acting like it!”

Chastised, Margaery became the dutiful granddaughter. That last remark had cut her to the quick. Her Stark love would never love her, marry her, if she let her soul become darkened.

“Don’t worry your pretty head, Margaery. You must learn to control your darker impulses. I had them once when I was your age. I often thought with my cunt and not my head. Learn control. Do not make the mistakes I made in my youth. Not all situations require an iron fist. Many only need the velvet glove.” Olenna paused. “Sansa is a Stark and will follow you through the gates of hell … if you don’t forget yourself.”

“Yes Grandmother. I will not disappoint her—I mean you.”

She watched her grandmother smirk. She knew Sansa had Margaery wrapped around her little finger.

“The woman has had three husbands. None were long for the world. She seems to be a black widow, though I do admit, it does seem to be more a twist of fate than any overt act done by her that did them in.”

“I wonder if she will try to fulfill her family’s sigil and marry twice more. I can offer Loras and Renly. That would make them happy I am sure. They could be together and fuck the church right underneath its nose. It’s always nice when you can cram it up priests pinched tight assholes.

“I have heard her appetite for sex is phenomenal. Your brother is bisexual, but Renly is as gay as they come. He is the gold standard. I know you much much prefer women but you could sleep with man if you must and enjoy it to further your political ambitions.

If the Queen chooses the route of marrying a man or men for political reasons we would have to finesse that situation to make it work. We can’t have Renly gumming up the works so to speak.”

Margaery started to snicker, picturing Renly having to perform his duties of a husband to the new Queen.

“Of course I have heard reports that Varys is not privy to.”

“Her appetites when she came out of the Red Wastes were decidedly female in nature.” She smiled, seeing Margaery’s interest instantly pique. “She was said to bed exclusively women. I would say all her marriages were either arranged as per custom or for political reasons - she may choose to wed you, Margaery. You must prepare yourself for that eventually. …and no poison—at least not yet.” Oleena smirked.
“I think she’s straight, granmama. I would never marry three men or even tolerate being betrothed to that many men … I would absolutely refuse!”

“Now, now, Margaery.” Oleena soothed her granddaughter, patting her hand. “Be careful of what you say you would or would not do dear, but in this reality I do agree. I need to prepare for all possibilities. Would Sansa be open to marrying both you and Daenerys Targaryen?”

“She would initially refuse, granmama. She has that stiff-necked Stark resolve. You know that ‘honor before all’ thing they have. Of course, that is why I fell for her so fast…”

“You sure it was not her height, bosom, tight ass, or pretty blue eyes?” Olenna teased.

Margaery blushed.

Olenna felt the need to grouse again at her granddaughter lack of self-control. “But why oh why did you give her your maidenhead, dear? Couldn’t you have waited?”

“NO—I-I-I mean.. no granmama … I wanted her—all of her and I wanted to give her the gift only a woman can give. I do not regret our decision one bit! I love her with all my heart. I would give my life for her!”

Olenna sighed and shook her head. “The fires of youth. Will she marry the Targaryen if she must to be with you?”

Margaery looked smug. She patted her pussy. “She will marry Daenerys if I ask her to. She is insatiable, mother. We could in time come to love the woman if she is good and kind. If she loves us equally, I could see it working. Sansa would resist at first, but she would do it for me.

“We will do what is necessary to be together. Even if that means sharing our love with a third wife.”

“I know you will be able to make her see sense dear, if it comes to it. Hopefully, it won’t come to that. Daenerys will marry the person she must think will further her claim to the throne. She is ambitious, that is clear. That should mean she won’t be marrying you.”

“Hhheeyyyyyyy!” Oleena’s granddaughter groused, offended that anyone would not choose her. She was very competitive.

“But granmama, what kind of woman is she? The reports about her are all over the map. She crushes city states and brings Dothraki Khalasars to heel. She was brutal in several uprisings in her conquered cities. But then you also hear of her spending days breaking slave chains, fostering the noble children of killed masters and getting them adopted across Essos, not permitting rape and showing the greatest respect to the nobles that join her cause. She is a total dichotomy.”

“Very good assessment, granddaughter. Yes she is a dichotomy. But I see a pattern. If she goes to war with you, she will annihilate you and then show you the utmost mercy if you will take the hand she offers in victory.” Olenna paused, thinking of Westeros’ recent past and what was written in the history books.

“I only wish that our Land’s past had been written by this woman. She has showed more restraint and compassion than our own House has in conflicts with the Lannisters and Martells. I, for one, will hear her out. Would you have written this letter?”

Margaery’s head hung down. “You know I wouldn’t have.”

“Then learn, granddaughter. Learn.
“We can work with this Targaryen. I thought Rhaegar was the one that was prophesied in A Song Of Fire And Ice but it is clear that it was written for Daenerys. They say the Dothraki call her the Mare that Mounts the world.”

Margaery rolled her eyes.

“We will work with this woman.”

“If we must!” Margaery pouted like the teenager she still was.

Olenna sighed again. “Stop listening to your cunt! Your hormones will be your downfall if you don’t learn to control your emotions. Will you please let Sansa temper that fire you keep burning down there?” Olenna spoke directly, motioning her head at Margaery’s groin.

“Besides this, you are not looking at it properly Margaery. I have been privy to her conversations with Oberyn and Tyrion. She is quite liberal and progressive in her thoughts. I think she will solve many of my grandchildren’s problems.”

“How so?” Margaery asked, taking the bait.

“I hear it told that she will push through equal primogeniture. The allowing the marriage of same sex marriage will follow soon after.”

“But why? She’s straight.”

“She is as gay as you and Sansa. I will cut off my tits if I’m wrong.”

“Think about it. I am grooming you for the leadership of Highgarden and you want to marry Sansa and openly love her as your wife. Daenerys Targaryen will cause both to occur. Mark my words, Margaery Tyrell. Mark my words.”

Eddard

The note from the future queen sat on Eddard’s desk. He turned it again, mulling over the words of the young Targaryen woman.

He sighed. It seemed that every generation found a spark to go to war. He had reluctantly joined Robert in his rebellion. He had been drawn to the supposed rescue of his sister. He had had his doubts from the beginning. Still, betrothals had to be kept. He himself had followed his duty and married a woman he did not even know.

He shuddered. What if I had chosen differently? I would be married to Cersei Lannister. He had killed good men for what he now considered some stupid ideal. Honor must be followed of course, but he did not see its luster anymore. He had learned that maybe a shade of grey was more suitable sometimes. Honor had many facets, he now knew.

Dammit! Now Robb’s generation had an excuse to go to war and have its bloodletting.

Then again…

It seemed that Daenerys Targaryen was going to bend over backwards to avoid war. He would try to accommodate her, he truly would. Unfortunately, he had other responsibilities that may force him to fight a war he did not want.
His first duty was the protection of the realm from a threat they no longer believed in. He did believe. He was of the north and the north did not forget. Winter was coming.

The woman was a walking contradiction. She both fought savagely and forgave freely. But which governed which? Why had she taken on the slave trade? The fact that she had totally crushed it in three years, and oh by the way brought most of the Dothraki to heel, was also stunning. How? He tried to push down his cultural conditioning. It did not matter if she was a woman; she was obviously a leader and a warrior.

One thing that came across again and again in reports about Daenerys, this woman fought her own battles. She had accepted every challenge and won.

Eddard stared at the fire but did not see the flames. He remembered Arthur Dayne. Dammit! Twenty years later and it still bothered Eddard, killing that honorable man. By the old gods he did not want to fight another war with his fellow Westerosi.

And Eddard had another worry. What if she had the taint? Her savagery made him wonder. But then again, she also showed mercy. The gods knew her father had shown none. He still remembered seeing his father and brother off when they were summoned by king Aerys II Targaryen. They had never come back.

Even if she did not evidence the madness now, would she in the future? How long did one live before you could be sure they would not fall into madness? Eddard started turning the letter over and over again as he thought.

And then, there was what happened to Bran. It was too great to be a coincidence. Bran never falls, and he falls the day, no almost the moment, that the letter arrives from this new would-be queen.

They were related. They had to be and it frightened him. Once more House Targaryen and House Stark’s fates would be intertwined. He could not seem to escape it. Eddard sighed in his soul. Please old gods let the outcome be different. Let Daenerys Targaryen not be her father, or like the reports of her late brother, Viserys.

He had to read this woman without ever meeting her. He knew his advisors would say he must be cautious and not trust this unknown woman from a mad, fallen house.

The problem was his instincts told him this woman was the answer to the prophecy of A Song Of Ice and Fire. If this was so then it was his duty to bend the knee. He had no problem, if only not for the news from Beyond the Wall. He knew what counsel the new Queen would be receiving of the Wall and Night’s Watch.

They’d say that they only defended the realm from gremlins and hobgoblins. The only problem was that the monsters were oh so very real.

He would need to make a decision in the not to distant future. Which way would he choose?

Was Daenerys Targaryen mad, or was she not? Was she a cruel despot or a woman who wanted to be benevolent? He chuckled to himself. Was she Cersei Lanister or Olenna Highgarden? Both were ambitious, but one was a silly strumpet and the other worthy of being Queen if the rules of succession had allowed it and history had been different.

He drummed his fingers on the desk. The woman also had another big factor that worked in her favor. Dragons. Dragons made right. He had made sure to follow her use of her dragons. She had butchered armies on the fields and navies on the oceans. She had used them on the cities but judiciously, to only destroy her direct enemies.

She had never used them to slaughter the everyday citizens. He admired that restraint. She had to be very intelligent to conquer so much of Essos. What she had not conquered, she had formed solid, tight relationships with, such as the Free Cities, the kingdoms of Yi Ti and the Summer Islands. The amount of power this woman had collected was staggering.

And despite this, she was not using it. She was showing more restraint than he had ever seen with anyone. He had read many history tomes since Daenerys Targaryen had appeared on the map. She seemed to truly be only interested in crushing the slave trade. She was not overtaking, she was halting.

He had seen reports that the Summer Islanders and Free Cities were rushing in with aid and establishing a nascent trade that was already producing jobs and income for the former slaves and the nobles that had joined in her efforts. They were reaping benefits and rewards for using their expertise and economic ties.

He would work with Daenerys Targaryen, if he could. Winter was coming, and he would be ready. Even if had to sacrifice the north, he would defend the realm.

He could only hope that Daenerys and the south deserved the North’s sacrifice.

Sansa

Robb had come to Sansa when he was given the message from Daenerys Targaryen. He had waited patiently while his sister read the letter for herself. When she finished, she looked up at her oldest brother.

“What do you think this means?”

“I don’t know, Sansa.” They discussed all the ramifications of the letter itself and the history of the Targaryen in Essos. They, like their father, were not sure what to make of the woman. She and Robb decided that they would just have to wait and hope that she did indeed live up to the high words of her letter.

Robb then told her the latest unease about the Wall and what lay beyond it. They discussed these issues a while, and then finally Robb left. He was worried about how the coming troubles of the Wall would affect his love, Alys Karstark.

She still kept her love a secret close to her heart. Her love, Margaery Tyrell, was so much closer to Daenerys Targaryen. Would she get swept up into the Game of Thrones? She knew her love was very drawn to that particular game. She could only pray to the old gods that Margaery showed restraint and wisdom. She had to hope that Olenna, her grandmother, would show her normal caution and deft control of the pieces on the game board.

Highgarden was next door to King’s Landing. That was Daenerys’ ultimate goal. She started to brush her hair, looking at her reflection. She mused on the immediate future.

She worried for her North and she worried for Highgarden now that half her heart resided there.

Sansa wanted desperately to reunite with Margaery. Her father was holding off on her and Arya’s marriages. He knew that they were neither anxious to be married off.

She snorted, brushing her hair. It was their father trying to protect his daughters from being shipped off like heifers to the highest bidder, while their mother seemed hell bent to get her daughters married Sansa took a deep breath, calming herself. She tried to see it from her mother’s perspective. She had been promised to Brandon, whom she had at least met and developed a rapport with. Then when he had been killed, she had married his brother. She tried to see from her mother’s point of view. She performed her duty, and now it was her daughters’ turn.

It still did not make it right!

Sansa had to figure out some way to get south or bring Margaery north. Which course would be safest? There was danger from both directions.

This separation from Margaery was killing her. Only being able to communicate through ravens. They were as open as possible in their missives but she hated it that she could not come out and just say: “I love you Margaery and I so want to be your wife.” She was getting closer and closer to throwing caution to the wind.

She had nearly lost her mind when she was betrothed to Joffrey Baratheon. Margaery had assured her that it would never be consummated, and sure enough he had come down ill a few nights before their marriage.

They had poisoned him. That was clear enough, reading between the lines in the letter she received from a distraught Margaery ‘weeping’ over her sick husband. The little rat deserved death!

She was nervous as she finished combing out her hair, the red tresses all silky and shining. Just the way Margaery liked it when they made love. She ached to have Margaery back in her bed, making passionate love over and over again.

Sansa went over in her mind the contradictions of Daenerys Targaryen. She was nothing but contradictions. She would have to just trust the letter and the noble words written in it.

The woman had amassed an army and navy like the world had never seen. She had three dragons that she had used to crush the slave trade that had existed for five thousand years. She did it in only three years. She could easily take what she considered was hers with her forces.

She had now added Dorne to her powerbase. The woman was literally unstoppable, and yet here she was, stopping herself.

That had to mean something. Her freeing of all the slaves and her restraint showed the Targaryen’s heart. She had to believe that.

Her father was grim but resolved. She was not able to pick up any great urgency from him. He was a master in masking his emotions. But Sansa was still his daughter. She could read so much from the slight grimace and squinting of his eyes that made his crow’s feet appear, and the way he shifted his shoulders in worry.

He had not evidenced any of his usual signs of concern. He was wary but did not feel the need for immediate action. That thought calmed her heart. They had time. She had time.

Sansa remembered how her heart had nearly burst out of her chest, beating so hard. When the letter first arrived she had accosted her father in the hall. She had been so distressed with how the dragon queen’s arrival would affect Margaery it had made her reckless.

She had again and again asked her father how this might affect Highgarden. When he wanted to move on and talk to his captains, she had actually grabbed his arm saying she must know.
The strange look he had given first her and then her hand on his arm made her blanch. She quickly made an excuse about Loras and her fear for him. He had been mollified then, but she could tell that he did not fully believe her despite letting it rest.

How could she have been so stupid and reckless? She could not bring dishonor onto Margaery until Olenna could arrange for them to be together. She was ready to elope to be with Margaery. She would sacrifice her entire life in Winterfell if she had to.

Still, she would be more careful in the future. She had to be.

Sansa chuckled, thinking of how excited Arya was. Daenerys Targaryen was the living embodiment of all her childhood dreams of dragons and the might of the Targaryen dragon lords. The dragons were long dead, and Robert Baratheon had removed their skulls from the Great Hall.

They had passed into legend for years. Then, seemingly out of nowhere, reports emerged from the distant deserts of Essos that a Targaryen still lived. That some mighty Lord had been reborn? Then the reports got even stranger.

The Valyrian conqueror was a woman. It soon became known that it was Daenerys Targaryen who had risen up. She had disappeared seemingly, but now reappeared to take her claim.

Her sister was already mooning over the female warrior. She had long suspected her sister’s leanings, and at first she had snickered at Arya. Now she totally understood.

Sansa licked her lips. She felt the familiar ache deep in her tummy. She ran quickly back to her room, pulling up her dress to run in haste.

Arya

Arya felt like she was about to bounce off the castle walls. She had finally arrived in Westeros. The living embodiment of all her childhood dreams, and now, fantasies. She had always been enamored with House Targaryen. How Aegon, Visenya and Rhaenys conquered all of Westeros, except for Dorne. They had been so powerful and full of magic.

She longed to ride their dragons and be a fierce warrior like Aegon’s sisters. She was training to become a warrior no matter what her mother said or did. She would not be married off to some fucking man! She wanted her own destiny. She knew her father wanted to give her this, but he himself felt trapped.

When she was a child, her dreams had been purely of conquest and fighting. After puberty, her dreams became fantasies with the silver lady conquerors and how the wolf would tame and devour both the sister dragons.

Arya could not believe that a Targaryen was still alive. All had been shocked when it was not Viserys that came out the desert but his sister Daenerys Targaryen. It had made her fantasies all the stronger. She loved that Visenya had a sword, and in her fantasies when she masturbated and in her dreams Rhaenys had a sword too. The fights they won against hopeless odds were epic.

Arya wanted to be a warrior like them. She wanted to be the young woman they would have fallen so hard for. They would have been enamored with her bowman ship and in awe of her sword fighting skills.

She felt like she would blow up when her mother hounded her to stop with her silly wastes of time. She was constantly badgering Arya to put up her sword and bow. She thanked the old gods that her father ran interference with her mother. He would change the subject, or take her away talking softly to her.

Her father would come to her then and tell that she was getting to old for this; she needed to put up her sword and bow. He would then give her that soft smile of his, making sure his wife was not around. “But not today,” he would say quietly and ruffle her hair before walking away.

Arya loved her father.

Arya was improving quickly. She had long ago mastered the bow. She could shoot at her targets with her eyes closed now, and still hit them if there was no wind. She made all gasp at her ability to hit the smallest targets and shoot little birds form the sky.

Her sword work was improving too. Her strength was increasing as she lifted heavy hay bales in the stalls and worked with smith hammers, helping to make horseshoes with Winterfell’s blacksmith.

Roderik was grunting and falling back when they sword trained now. She had long ago learned his techniques. He fought valiantly, but Arya now had to take it easy on him so as not to humiliate him. He would never be able to live down being defeated by a woman. Also, Arya had not quite been ready to show her true prowess. Her mother would scream and tear her hair out when that happened. She would demand she stop so passionately that her father would have to listen.

He would be forced to make her cease and put on the frilly dresses that made her ill when she so much as looked at them. They itched and made her feel like she was in some form of torture device. It was awful.

But now that was about to change. A woman would soon sit on the throne. Arya felt it was time for her to come out, and come out soon.

She knew that a Queen would be so much more fair in her rule. Nothing could be worse than that drunken fool that sat on the throne. She knew her father was terribly disappointed in his childhood friend and how he had devolved into a fat buffoon.

The world was changing, and changing for the better.

Arya would absolutely not submit to any man. She had no desire for any man. She was only attracted to her own sex. She would never allow a man to touch her in that manner. She would kill him, or slit her own wrists first.

She would fly south if she had to. She would go before the Queen who would gratefully accept Arya Stark into her service. Daenerys Targaryen would be mesmerized by her abilities with the bow. Then she would challenge the Queen to a sword duel and easily dispatch her, earning her respect.

Arya smirked at her daydream. Then the wolf would take what was hers. She would claim the dragon by right of victory. She would caress Daenerys body with sweet touches. She would cherish the Queen.

Arya Stark would give her Queen her arm, her honor and … my body. All of it, Arya thought with a shiver.

Arya sat before the dresser and combed out her brown hair, getting the tangles out and straightening it. She looked at the mirror. She was attractive in her own way, her hair framing her sharp, wolfish features with the steel grey eyes of her bloodline. The Queen would have to love her. Wouldn’t she? Worriedly she looked down at her flat chest.

Arya sighed. Nothing to do for that.
All the stories and rumors said that Daenerys Targaryen was a beautiful woman. Her hair snow white and long. With her being a warrior as well, her body would be roped with muscles. She licked her lips thinking of those arms and legs wrapped around her body, loving her. Daenerys Targaryen would make Arya scream in bed. She knew it.

Arya hoped the woman was kind and gentle when not on the battlefield. She heard the royal gossip about what a battleax Cersei Lannister was. That would kill any thrill. But Arya just couldn’t see it. The woman had destroyed the slave trade. That had to speak about her character. It must.

Her father Eddard Stark was a legend on the battlefield with his savagery. He could not be defeated on the battlefield, but was always so gentle and loving to Arya’s mother.

Arya had to admit that her mother was a little bit of the battleax herself at times, but her father always deftly disarmed and subdued Catelyn Tully without her mother even realizing it.

Arya pulled off her night shirt and went to bed. She started to stroke her body as her passions rose.

Daenerys Targaryen would be so good to me, Arya thought as her hands roamed and her breathing began to get labored.

She would make sweet love to her and make her body explode in ecstasy over and over. Then they would cuddle before going to sleep, their bodies wrapped around each other.

She would tell me how much she loved me each night and I would confess my own love back.

Thoughts for Arya became harder to form after that.

Outside the door Nymeria raised her head off her paw as she listened to her master scream in ecstasy. Humans and their emotions the wolf chuffed before putting her muzzle back on her paw.

Daenerys

Daenerys was looking out over the sea, her fingers rolling on the rail as she tapped it. It had been a week since she sent out her ravens.

She smirked, thinking of how fast Casterly Rock replied with smarmy platitudes of undying fealty. She knew who killed her father.

Tywin knew who her hand was. Tyrion was nothing but loyal, and gave sage advice.

Obyern was fuming somewhere below. He was miffed no end that he would not be able to fight the Lannisters. He kept mumbling that the Lannisters would soon show their true colors.

Her traditional homeland of course was sending ravens back post haste, declaring their allegiance and that they longed to have a Targaryen back on the throne.

The Lannisters were not her concern. She would crush her enemies if she needed to, but she dearly wanted to avoid that. Would the Houses Highgarden, Stark and Arryn bend the knee or would they force her to meet them on the battlefield to break them?

She sincerely hoped not. The men who led these houses were known throughout the realm for their honor and pragmatic rule. Surely they would choose peace if offered so freely and without conditions. Surely their pride would not be that great. She was the rightful ruler come back to claim what was truly hers. They would bow before that inevitability. They would not make the deadly mistake of underestimating her because she was woman. She had proven her mettle already across Essos. The bells she wore in her hair in battle reaffirmed that.

She was so close to achieving her dreams. True, they had first belonged to Viserys and then Khal Drogo but they had been lacking in vision. She had taken their dreams and made them hers. She had the strength of arm and mind to achieve what they couldn’t.

Viserys was not the dragon and he had inherited the family’s madness. Khal Drogo was limited by his Dothraki heritage. They were limited, and they failed.

Daenerys Targaryen was the fulfillment of prophecy. Not some weak man! I am the Dragon!

Her fingers continued to drum the rail as she felt the breeze against her face. She closed her eyes. She breathed in the salt air and felt invigorated. Her plans were working out as she had envisioned. She was going to have her throne soon, and she would begin her rule.

She would have a realm that the minstrels would be singing about in future ages. She would be wise and just. The pretense of the throne meant nothing to her. She would change the world.

She had many restless nights filled with nightmares. She had done cruel, violent things to conquer Slaver’s Bay, but with time she would build up a better world. She had swept out the vile old order and would institute a rule of justice for the people. She would bring that to Westeros, too. They did not have slavery but their thinking was conservative and antiquated. She would bring a more enlightened liberal order.

She had come to trust and truly like Oberyn Martell. He was fiery and given to lambast, but he always listened and heeded his Queen. He just loved combat a little too much. He was fiercely loyal to his Queen regardless. He called her Nymeria reborn.

He was almost lusting to take out his two main rivals. He had a high disregard to House Highgarden and a visceral hate for Tywin Lannister.

She did not like the man either, through all that she had read and what Tyrion had told her. The difference was she would not let her more reptilian brain control her. She would not fight unless she absolutely had to.

She would achieve her goals peacefully and then work to resolve the issues between the Great Houses. She would deal with any recalcitrant leader of a House when the time came. She would not let any one person derail her plans.

That led her back to House Stark. In all conversations she had with her advisors about Westeros when that particular House was mentioned a hush fell on the council. All she heard about was how honorable Eddard Stark was. The entire house was famous for it. This honor handed down unbroken from generation to generation. But Eddard seemed to be the paragon of the concept of honor and justice. All those around the table respected the man.

He had a chance to sit on the throne Daenerys desired and had easily stepped aside. He did not want the throne. He was content to be Warden of the North.

The man was highly known for his compassion. He ate with the commoners. He only executed if he must. She wanted to know this man!

She was also attracted to his famous gentleness with his children. His daughters were of age to be married and Catelyn Tully was like a hissing cat trying to ship them off and yet he resisted. He was obviously listening to his daughters’ desires.

Yes, she wanted to meet this man.

He had three sons and two daughters. She wondered if the children had learned from their father the “Stark” way, as Tyrion put it.

She remembered when Tyrion had brought her the dossiers on the two sons of Stark.

She had looked over the dossier on Rob and Bran Stark. Rickon was still too young. Tyrion had told her she couldn’t do any better. He went on how about good looking the two young men were. Robb especially seemed to be growing up to be like Eddard Stark. Tyrion seemed most pleased with himself when he left.

She had thrown them across the table where they slid off when he left. She had hidden her anger.

Where were the dossiers on Sansa and Arya Stark?

She came back to the present. Damnit, Daenerys thought, pinching the bridge of her nose. He never even thought to bring me dossiers on the daughters. Sure, she had lied to Tyrion on the beach but shouldn’t he have at least considered she might want to see all the eligible children of Westeros..?

She pinched her nose again. She loved her homeland but was coming to detest the conservative mores of Westeros north of Dorne. She wondered why Dorne was so liberal but not the rest of Westeros.

It didn’t matter in the end. Her shoulders slumped as she looked at the setting sun. She was trapped by tradition and she knew it.

Bran

He was so tired. The three eyed raven would appear out of nowhere and start to qwoark wildly and start telling him yet again that he must fly high to dive deep into the Earth. He was told repeatedly that he had to let go of his future dreams of being a knight and living the life he had dreamed of.

The Raven seemed to take great joy in informing Bran that his dreams were dead and gone. He had to reach and grasp the dreams that the three eyed raven spoke of. Like he gave a shit. He was supposed to bury himself within a tree and let its roots eat into his body. He was supposed to watch the world go by through the weirwoods.

Bran was at first mad and furious at the future that awaited him. But time had worn him down. Now he just wanted to be left alone. He was ready to begin his journey just to get the raven to leave him alone.

He would be in total darkness, but then would hear the beating of wings. He now thought he could actually see the black swirl with the Raven’s approach. He dreaded that swirl. When the Raven arrived it would immediately start pecking furiously on his forehead and his hands when he tried to defend himself.

The Raven would pick at him like its life depended on it. Then the Raven would commence with its dire warnings, declarations and prophecies.

This time was no different.

“You need to fly high. You need to touch the sun then fly to the bottom of the world. You will fly through the Soul Bitter to find the Lost Isle. There you must go!”

“You are late! You are late! Time runs short! Why have you delayed?”

“What do you mean you stupid bird?! My back is broken!” Bran shouted back in anger.

“The Ice King awaits with his demon son! Fly to the cyclone of my brothers. Follow them down. Follow them down. Delve into the Earth. There the Tree of Life awaits. There you will learn.”

“The Ice King you will bind! Bind! … You are late. Bind bind bind!”

Bran shouted back at it. “I was to be a great knight on a mighty horse do going great deeds! Not buried underneath a fucking tree, gods damnit!”

“You must fly! Fly! Fly! Why do you delay! Fly! Meet your destiny! Follow the dragon that will lie with the direwolf. Only together can the Ice King be defeated. Together! Together! Together!”

“Fuck you! I want to walk. I want to run! I want to be a knight on the field of battle! What can’t you understand you stupid bird?!”

“Let go! Let go! Your field will be the sky and underneath the Earth. You are the Greenseer! Your destiny you must fulfill! Fly! Fly! Fly! Let go and become the Greenseer! You were born for this destiny. Let go and become the Greenseer.”

“I hate you!”

“Become one with the Earth and the Earth will set you free. Let go! Now you must find the Tree of Life. Become one. After the binding you must seek the One Tree with your guides! There you will find your other half. Let go and become one. You must fly through the Soul Bitter and the Maelstrom of the Merewives. Do not listen! Do not listen. Become the Greenseer! Follow your destiny!”

“I don’t want to!”

“There you must go! Your destiny. Many things must you bind; ice to ground, wood to Law, Magic to Ice and Stone. Destiny! Destiny!”

“Why me?”

“Born. Born. Born! Destiny you must fulfill!”

“Far must you journey. Up high you will fly to burrow low. Across the Lost Sea to the Lost Isle. There you will know what to do. There you and the scribe of the runes will create Law.”

Bran was so tired. He had heard this rant of prophecy so many times in the past. The order of the prophecies changed. Sometimes the Three Eyed Raven would not mention a certain prophecy and the next time go over that one again and again. The only good thing was that when the Raven screamed his prophecies he was not striking his face and hands.

That now changed. The bird jumped forward and began to again savagely peck his forehead and his swiping hands. This attack was like so many before it. His forehead was screaming in pain.

Except this time it was different. A brilliant white light exploded in his head. His eyes felt like they were seeing bright suns exploding.

The light blinded him. He felt the blackness fraying and beginning to dissipate. He felt a warmth surrounding his right hand.

He opened his eyes. He saw his mother looking at him, sobbing. She was sitting on a chair beside his bed gripping his hand in hers and squeezing it hard.

“Mom?”

“Oh my sweet baby!” Catelyn Stark sobbed in relief.

Loremasters

The scrying bowl swirled with what was and might be. The mighty ur-viles waved their iron staves over the midnight black ichor that did not waver, but images swirled from one event or portent to the next. Their eyeless faces intently studied the bowl.

Yes. The Dragonthane had done all that they had foreseen. She had indeed become mighty. They barked at each other. They had chosen wisely to aid her in the grass sea.

She had become mighty enough to face her immediate peril. The House of the Direwolf would come to her. It must.

The Ice King and the detestable Croyel had grown strong. Their union unholy. They must be confronted and defeated. This battle their Weird did not allow them to fight in. Their tasks would come later. This battle the Dragonthane must meet without their assistance. She would acquire what she would need.

Their sightless faces studied the black still liquid with more acuity than any human eyes ever could, their fleshy nostrils wetly breathing in the images.

She must defeat the Ice King and only then could she return to Essos. Only here could she and the companions she would bring begin the restoration of Valyria. Only when the Blood of the Earth was again channeled could magic be restored.

Magic was dying and only the Dragonthane and her allies could ever restore it.

She would take the Seer and the Scribe of the Law to Revelstone and the Lost Isle. The Isle of the One Tree. Only the Seer and the Scribe would solve the riddle there.

They again considered this Daenerys Targaryen. She was mighty and just. They were honored to have fought by her side and they would do so again.

The first Loremaster held up the manacles. They would be given to the Scribe of the Law. She would bind and garrote She Who Must Not Be Named. This was absolutely necessary.

These things were in Daenerys’ future. But first, Daenerys Targaryen must meet her first challenge. She must defeat the Ice King. All other things revolved around this event. All else would be for naught if he could not be defeated.

The ur-viles could only hope. They had all the faith in their Weird. The world depended on their visions coming true.
AN #1: Daenerys has taken the throne. Now is a time for the Game of Thrones.

Chapter 6

Small Council

Tyrion / Daenerys / Tyrion / Daenerys / Tyrion

Tyrion

Tyrion stood before the door to the room of the Small Council. The Queen had insisted that he not enter the room over the last two days, in fact she had made it clear that he was to stay away from this entire area of the Keep. Now he was before the very door of the forbidden room, and needless to say the new Hand was curious to what he would find within.

He had arrived a few minutes before his Queen moving from foot to foot in his excitement to see what was behind the door. He watched his Queen move down the hall towards him with her supremely confident stride. He looked up at Daenerys Targaryen who had a small smile on her face when she looked down at him. She reached out and gripped his shoulder, giving it a squeeze. They were ten minutes early to the first meeting of the council. The Queen had told Tyrion to arrive ten minutes early. This had had only increased his curiosity.

The Queen had made it clear the room was not be approached till noon, thus, the hall was still empty. She apparently wanted to share this with Tyrion alone.

“Let’s go in, Tyrion,” the white haired woman spoke, pushing open the door. She let Tyrion walk in several feet with his small steps. He stopped and stared at the chair of the Hand, then turned and looked up at his Queen with an expression of wonder, like a little boy receiving a prized pony.

“Come,” the Queen said, gently pushing him forward.

They moved before the chair of the Hand, Tyrion still staring in amazement. He slowly walked around the side of the chair. He turned his gaze to Daenerys. “I don’t understand.” he told his Queen, his voice quiet and small.

“You needed a chair that will show everyone that you are the Hand of the Queen. That you are a man of command and power. That you have the full support of the Queen, Tyrion,” she told the dwarf with a smile on her face.

Tyrion felt a lump in his throat.

The chair was a work of art and bore so much consideration for him that he feared he might cry. He continued looking at it, then finally reached forward and touched it.
The chair was elevated higher than the other normal chairs in the room. It had a high dais around the base with small steps cut into it on both sides. His small frame would be lifted so he could look down with just enough height to impress but not outright intimidate. The steps were sized to his stature so Tyrion could walk up with a measure of grace. The seat and back of the chair were thickly cushioned so his legs would not cramp like they normally did when he sat for a long time.

Tyrion noted the small pockets woven into the wide sides of the chair so he could store items that would help him perform his duties. In front of the chair itself was a bench on rails that he could easily scoot forward and back to support his small legs and take any stress off of his back and calves.

The whole chair had been designed and built truly for him, and only him.

And then the carving on the chair itself made him marvel.

The arms had been carved with stylized Lannister male lions with thick dark manes against the cherry red of the rest of the chair. The lions sat on their haunches, staring forward regally. Then, along the upper sides of the chair were two more carved lions with a dragon on top. The craftsmen had carved the lions in such a subtle way that the viewer had the impression the lions were not subordinate to the dragon, but were actually helping it reach for the heavens as its wings were just starting to unfurl.

The lions and dragon were clearly working together. Each were helping the other to reach for the sky.

Tyrion could only shake his head. “Thank you,” he said softly to the beautiful Queen.

“No one will ever again doubt you speak for me, Tyrion. They will not doubt that you are my Hand, and that you speak for me with the regal ring of command. I need you Tyrion, and you have my full trust and my confidence.” She smiled. “Let’s rule a kingdom.”

Tyrion felt a lump in his throat as he watched the beautiful woman walk to the end of the table and take a seat. She seemed like just another person at the table, her own chair like all the others. She seemed more like an advisor, or maybe even a concubine with her sheer top showing the curves of her lovely breasts and tight slacks that displayed her bulging camel toe. Tyrion had made sure not drool as he took in the lovely assets of the Queen - he was still recovering from the ‘beach incident’, as he called it.

She did not appear as the ruler of half the known world. She did not sit beside the chair of the Hand like rulers of the past had. Those others, they would sit in a high, stylized chair with a crown on their head, seeking to make it clear that the Hand derived all of their power from the potentate. Dany wore no crown. She told Tyrion she thought they looked silly and they gave her a headache anyway. She did not need a circle of metal to make her the Queen.

Tyrion stepped up easily on the carved steps and got in front of his chair and sat down. He spied a small lever on the right hand side and worked it so the bench moved in to support his feet. He sighed in relief. He could sit in this chair comfortably for hours! He found capped gourds of water and sweet oranges, his favorite, in pockets stitched in the sides of the arms. He pulled one out and peeled it, looking at his Queen.

She was relaxed, playing with a throwing dagger. He knew she kept eight on her body at all times: Two on each leg clearly strapped over her slacks, two hidden up her loose fitting sleeves, and one on each hip that were slightly longer. She was casually dressed, her top sheer showing her swaying breast, the outline of her nipples clearly visible. She was a sly one. Her breasts were delectable and would make any man, and many women, want her, and in their lust, they would bond even more to the Queen without realizing it. It would also make men careless and, thus, more easily manipulated by her. She had no problem using her sexuality to assist her rule.

Tyrion had started staring without realizing it. Her body was so beautiful, especially the way her breasts swayed as she moved her now-twirling dagger. The Queen looked up suddenly, questioning. Oh no, Tyrion winced, knowing he had been caught.

Tyrion watched her violet orbs suddenly flare with that evil, unhinged look from the beach. He had been warned.

His felt his cock shrivel up like a prepubescent boy’s, his testicles shrinking up into his scrotum. He pushed back into the chair, his little feet pressing into the bench instinctively as he sought escape.

Daenerys clacked her teeth, her head snapping as she started to move forward. Tyrion’s mind suddenly rushed back to the beach. He had experienced her dreadful wrath!

“Mmmgggggg!” Tyrion whimpered, looking wildly around as his flight instinct was clearly pegged to flight.

“Hahahahaha!” the queen suddenly started laughing, thumping back down in her seat. “Gods Tyrion if you could have seen your face! It was precious! Oh my sweet little lion cub of Lannister.”

Tyrion watched his Queen with a sour look on his face as she laughed, nearly hysterical for a full minute before she started to calm down. He was never going to live that incident down, he now realized.

He heard motion in the hall and they suddenly straightened, putting neutral expressions on their faces, though Tyrion could still see a slight smug smile on Daenerys face. He watched as she put her blade back up her sleeve. Yes indeed, Daenerys Targaryen was a most deadly woman.

Tyrion could only sigh. Only now was his poor manhood beginning to recover.

Tyrion watched the initial members of the small – or maybe better to say medium? - council come into the room. The Queen wanted council and advice, and it was not just words with her. She had decided to maintain the traditional council, and then add some.

Tyrion watched as Grand Maester Harsch Lape enter the room. After Grand Maester Pycelle passed away the Citadel had sent another older Maester but Dany had wanted men in their prime, men with youth and vigor to carry out the ambitious agenda she planned to initiate.

The citadel had sent out this man in his mid forties. He was virile and very smart by all accounts. He had dark blond hair and deep blue eyes that all women seemed to desire. He was devastatingly good looking, and vain enough to know it. He had been letting anyone who would listen know that soon the Queen would be in his bed, since no woman could resist him.

Tyrion had tried to warn him.

Tyrion almost felt sorry for the pompous man, but not quite. He hoped his rejection would be public and oh so very humiliating.

Behind him the Master of Whispers entered the room. Varys bowed slightly to the Queen and then Tyrion. He moved to take a seat. He was cunning and devious, and very well connected. Tyrion found he quite enjoyed the man, as they had been communicating continuously since his arrival. His aid in bloodlessly deposing Robert had him in high regard where the dwarf was concerned. While a buffoon, he had actually liked Robert and was happy he was still alive.
He knew they would be able to work well together. Varys wanted a peaceful, strong rule. He was also open to bringing in progressive ideas from Essos and Dorne. Tyrion wondered if that was due to his upbringing in the Free Cities.

Behind them came the Master of Coin, Vedad Softic and the Emissary from Slaver’s Bay Draqhiz zo Gazno. Both were dour faced men in their mid-thirties. The Master of Coin came with high credentials from Casterly Rock, able to seemingly make gold dragons. Tyrion needed those dragons. Draqhiz zo Gazno was pensive, with an obvious chip on his shoulder - or perhaps better to call it a mountain. Tyrion could sympathize in a way. Even though his city had been based on a vile trade, Daenerys had twice crushed it and killed many of the nobles until Meereen had bent the knee, completely.

Tyrion then watched Barristan Selmy, Syrio Forel with Aggo enter the room together, talking and laughing. They were bound together by the bonds of war. Syrio moved to sit at the table as the Master at Arms, as Barristan had not wanted the position. His previous tenure in this room had left a bad taste in his mouth. He and and Aggo blended into the background, but their presence was comforting to the Hand.

The Hand. Tyrion liked the sound of that.

Daenerys

Daenerys had positioned herself at the end of the table to allow her to observe from a distance. She wanted and expected the focus to shift to Tyrion once the meeting started. She wanted the Small Council to quickly realize he spoke for her and that she already trusted his loyalty, experience and cunning completely.

She had groaned as Harsch Lape entered the room, cocksure and in his way purely revolting. He thought he was the gods’ gift to womankind. True, he was ruggedly handsome, but his looks did not stir her in the least.

He sat to her right in the closest chair and began his boring litany of seduction. She replied in monosyllables and gave him the eyebrow more than once. How he could not sense her disdain she did not understand. Gods she hated the male ego. She controlled herself by eventually ignoring the vain man completely, though she felt herself seethe when the contemptuous man stared at her breasts while trying to talk to her. He could not have been any more obvious. She bit her cheek to still her acid tongue.

She smiled grimly to herself seeing Draqhiz zo Gazno take the exact opposite tact. He sat as far away from her as possible.

She smiled seeing her three warriors come in together in clear comradery. War did bring men and women together, it was a uniting bond. Great warriors shared this connection even despite their disparate cultures.

She watched as the chairs were filled. Next to enter was the Dothraki representative Ildatto. She mused at his name, ‘to strike’. She hoped she did not have to deal often with him, she would hate to have to kill him. She wanted to curb the Dothraki’s appetite for raiding and looting without breaking their entire society. She had already shattered two Khalasars. The screams of the men and especially the horses cut down or burnt still woke her up some nights.

She would not shy away from what she needed to do to bring about a new world order. The old ways were often outdated, vile and disgusting. She thought back to a little more than a year ago, when she was on the western shore of Slaver’s Bay, destroying the last of the resistance in Volantis.
and preparing to conqueror Lys as the last of the slavery strongholds. She had been brutal but the victories were complete. She would destroy the slave trade entirely!

Daenerys had been using the Dothraki as garrisons to control her conquered cities along the rim of Slaver’s Bay. They also were waging war on the mercenary companies that refused to pledge allegiance to the Queen. This satisfied their bloodlust, and she doled out the war plunder to feed their desire for loot.

She had made it clear to the Dothraki - no rape, and no looting of cultural treasures. She would broker no breaking of these commands. Khal Khoko had truly tried to control the troops of Dothraki, but he was pulled in too many directions.

She had received word that the garrison of Yunkai had started to rape, loot and pillage, against her strict orders. That had been totally unacceptable. Blatant disregard of her instructions would not stand.

She took it upon herself to resolve the problem personally. She had taken Drogon and flown straight back to Yunkai, stopping only long enough to rest Drogon when he needed and strengthen herself with short, quick meals.

She had been in a rage by the time she landed in the main plaza of Yunkai. She was shocked to see open rape occurring on the main square. One man was so lost in his actions he never even noticed Daenerys landing across the courtyard. She had dismounted immediately and walked over to him as he raped a girl around the age of thirteen or fourteen.

The age she had been when Drogo raped her.

She had pulled the man’s head back and slit his throat with her main dagger. His new mouth ran red from ear to ear, and his death gurgle was extremely satisfying. The girl was in shock, and did not even feel the spray of blood drip down on her before Daenerys pulled the corpse off her as she rose up. “Who commanded this?!” she screamed.

Two hulking Dothraki came up, in their mid to late twenties. They declared themselves as the brothers Karlinno and Qajhoko. They claimed they were going to gut her and defile her corpse. Their eyes glazed with bloodlust and a desire to kill the great Khaleesi and become the greatest of the Dothraki Khals for expunging her vile existence. She had corrupted the Dothraki, they had claimed as they screamed at her.

A large number of Dothraki had gathered around the three combatants. The brothers already had their arakhs out, and advanced on the small blond woman.

Daenerys looked forward to the battle as she pulled her sword out, the blade lit bright blue. The sword of Rhaenys Targaryen, Foe Cleaver. The sword written out of history when Aegon discovered the woman he had married for love was instead only in love with her sister, and not her brother. That she had married him only out of duty. In his anger he had had her exploits diminished and her sword smitten from the journals and histories.

The blue runes told Daenerys the truth.

A truth only she and a few others now knew. Only the owner of a Rune sword or a mighty dragon lord could fire up the runes magically embedded in the Valyrian steel.

The brothers approached together, no honor in them as they attacked the way brother lions so often did to depose a King of the pride. Then they had split apart to come at her on both sides.
Daenerys was unconcerned. Qajhoko, the youngest, attacked first from her left, his arakh slashing a mighty arc through the air. She easily stepped aside, and her blade met the older brother’s blade. She grunted, guiding the blade to the side and slashed in making Karlinno back up quickly to avoid having his guts spilled.

Qajhoko came in with clumsy yet powerful swipes of his arakh. His brother, much more skilled, hacked at the Targaryen, their combined attack keeping her at bay. She easily blocked their blows and counterattacked with strikes they barely met and she left several cuts on their arms.

The battle raged with Daenerys meeting or avoiding the blows that were raining in from two angles. The well muscled men were undeniably stronger than her, but speed and skill were hers, and easily matched any deficit in raw strength.

The sounds of heavy blades filled the air as they collided, shrieking as they slid down each other. After several minutes they all had light cuts that were barely from barely avoided sword and arakh strikes. Qajhoko overextended his arakh arching swing and Daenerys swept her blade down and left the younger brother screaming as he stared down at his hand on the paved stones, still gripping his arakh. The bloody stump at his wrist spurted heavy fountains of blood.

Now one-on-one, Daenerys and Karlinno circled each other, slashing furiously. The larger man was grunting and retreating as the woman focused solely on him. Her blade swung in from all angles as the other Dothraki continued to scream in pain.

Daenerys, tiring of the screams, locked blades with Karlinno and then jammed forward, knocking him back off balance. In that moment Daenerys pulled a throwing dagger from her thigh and threw it. Oajhoko’s screams suddenly cut off as a Valyrian dagger pierced his larynx, and cut through the back of his neck, cutting his spinal cord. The youth collapsed as the strings of his life had been cut. Daenerys whirled to meet Karlinno’s charge their blades locked together. Daenerys heaved him to the side, chasing after him and almost severing his right hamstring before he jerked back just in time. He whirled on the blond woman as she moved to the side and almost tripped over some detritus.

Seeing an opening, Karlinno swiped down as the Targaryen leaped forward.

Daenerys stifled a scream of pain as the Dothraki’s curved blade cut her back just inside her left shoulder blade. The cut, though not deep, had blood flowing down her back and soaking the tunic she’d worn.

Karlinno, seeing he had cut the woman charged again and roared as his blade rained down blow after blow that were all expertly blocked. The Targaryen met his blows and either stopped them, or shuttled off to the side as she analyzed his moves and his tendencies.

Finally, Daenerys had spotted a weakness. When the Dothraki used his full strength on a arcing sweep of his Arakh, he always lowered his left shoulder.

Being short was actually an advantage for Daenerys. She was used to fighting up while her opponents were not used having to go down an extra foot to even begin their attack. Karlinno again arched a furious blow up and then down. Daenerys met his blow and guided his blade down hard, leaving him exposed.

Her blade looped back in a short arc and then came slashing down.

Daenerys body jerked as her blade impacted on Karlinno’s shoulder, her blade slicing through his thick body till it jammed into Karlinno’s sternum, his heart sliced in half. He was already dead, his eyes lifeless as his body slumped into the tiny woman. She brought her left foot up and got her foot on his body just below her blade, then kicked out.

Karlinno’s body toppled back and hit the ground hard in a nerveless heap.

“Who wants to die next?!” Daenerys roared as she slowly spun around, looking at all of the Dothraki ringing the square.

The Dothraki started to beat their chests with their fists, clashing their arakhs together screaming “Black Dragon!” and “The Great Khaleesi! The Great Mare that will mount the world!”

Daenerys had reveled in their adulation.

She bent down and cleaned her blue burning sword on Karlinno’s vest. Then she brought up her sword to once again read the ghostly runes buried deep in the metal. She cursed, again wondering why her other sword was not Dark Sister. The gods were indeed cruel.

She had gone to each of the corpses she’d created and removed the seven bells she had found on them to add to her growing collection of bells for her hair.

Daenerys came back to the present as she stared at the Dothraki a moment longer.

She then looked at the Master of Ships, Hugh Elicero of Highgarden. He was a handsome man with a short cropped red beard and tight curled hair. He had been the Lord of Highgarden’s naval commander, but as a gesture of good will the Tyrells had assigned him to Daenerys’ services.

Daenerys would need to maintain and even build up her already massive navy. She had to rule two continents. Both land masses were home to powers that had strong navies. She had most of these ships in Dorne and lower Westeros, but eventually she would have to release the majority to allow these nations to defend themselves and protect their merchant fleets.

She watched Tyrion easily talking to the various members of the council with a natural grace and diplomatic skill. His obvious intelligence and cunning were already starting to bind the other members of the Small Council to him.

She mused while watching Tyrion. Earlier she had been teasing the dwarf. But back on that beach a month ago she had not been teasing; she had lost it for a few moments. Tyrion’s unexpected sexual overture had enraged Daenerys and for a few moments she had wanted to eviscerate the man.

Too many bad memories and her anger over her destiny had come flooding out. Then, to cover her embarrassing loss of control she had taken her past events and twisted them into lies to get the man to back off. She could not afford to let her natural desires rule her. She had a kingdom to rule now, and she knew what was expected of her.

She felt another piece of her soul die inside.

Tyrion

Tyrion watched Daenerys roll her eyes at the Grand Maester. The man was getting nowhere fast and didn’t even realize it.

He looked up when he saw the Master of Laws Micud Caudill enter the room. He was a small man with a balding pate, quiet and unassuming. Tyrion had personally vetted him very carefully. He was very skilled and well respected in Dorne. His dark features belied his heritage. With all the debts that Robert had left, he was sure that much legal wrangling would be needed.

Then Lysono Saan, the Free Cities representative entered into the room and quickly took his seat. He was a blond man from the city of Tyrosh, from a high noble family. Tyrion was unsure of this man’s mettle.

That only left the Summer Islander Ambassador to enter. She had only arrived yesterday.

Tyrion watched Missandei enter the room and take the chair to Daenerys’ left. The Queen had waved away Caudill when he had tried to sit there. Daenerys was visibly more comfortable when she had her loyal scribe at her side. The Maester eyed the tiny dark woman. Missandei, in her innocence, did not even notice.

A clerk came in and put down the reports from the major families and cities of Westeros.

Dany had wanted a background report from each. She wanted to know numbers. She had counts of population, major resources, and debts. She had asked for further details on crops, livestock, minerals and the inventory of produced goods. She requested details on any problems that needed crown resources, along with grievances with the crown or with other entities. Daenerys expressed a sincere desire to start solving the problems of the realm – which included both Westeros, and half of Essos.

The Queen wanted to start getting a ‘feel for the land’ as she had put it to Tyrion. Tyrion had looked over the reports all day yesterday. He was satisfied with them, and very inspired by one report in particular. Daenerys had studied them as she went over them with Tyrion.

After ten minutes of looking over the provincial reports, Tyrion looked up and scanned the table and saw the Summer Islander Ambassador had not yet arrived. He looked down the table at Daenerys ignoring Maester Lape or giving him the eyebrow, which he never seemed to notice. Daenerys was looking at the door clearly wanting to start the meeting.

Then the Summer Islander Ambassador finally breezed into the small council. Solaja Xo was a beautiful woman, Tyrion noticed immediately. She stood five foot eight inches tall. Her body was voluptuous with large breasts half-revealed in a low cut bodice. Her hips “womanly” with the classic hour glass shape. Her hair was long and in ringlets with colorful ribbons weaved throughout. Her large almonds eyes were also quite beguiling.

He and Daenerys had greeted her upon the arrival of her swan ship “Herald Breeze”. She had walked onto the dock all regal and imperious, with eyes only for Daenerys, which perturbed Tyrion. She had practically tried to disrobe the Queen with her eyes and kissed her hand as if she was a knight murmuring: “Your beauty is legendry Dany … I look forward to getting to know you intimately my Queen … perhaps we can have a meeting after I have dined tonight … to share ourselves—excuse me, share our views …” the woman had spoken in soft purring voice.

Tyrion had frowned at being totally ignored. Having both sexes fawning over Daenerys was going to get tiring.

Daenerys had been formal and gave some excuse about her time being spoken for. Tyrion had been surprised that the Queen had refused such a blatant offer to have the beautiful woman in her bed.

The woman looked around obviously looking for Daenerys and a frown crossed her beautiful face seeing that the Queen had the closest chairs on either side of her already taken. The chair by Maester Lape was available, and she sat in it. Her eyes remained on the Queen who barely acknowledged her and went back to talking to Missandei.
Tyrion watched Maester Lape take in the woman’s beauty and immediately shift his platitudes to the lovely dark skinned woman. The two flirted shamelessly back and forth. It would seem the woman also plied both sexes.

He called the council to order, and started with a round table to have everyone introduce themselves. Some knew many on the council while some knew none. They introduced themselves and gave a brief background report on their goals and hopes for their appointments to the council.

Once that was taken care of, the session began. Tyrion started by reviewing the reports that had been requested. Most were dry and quite boring, a bland regurgitation of facts. The information was passed on with obvious lack of interest.

The Stark report was very thorough. It was blunt and to the point. That was the one report he believed in totally, along with the one that was stellar.

He saved the report from Dorne for last. It had been thorough as well, but it had also given a deep analysis of the data and conclusions offered along with hypothesis on how to improve mining production and the need for a dredging in Sunspear port along two of the main docks.

Not only that, the report went on to recommend that a new farming technique be tested – ‘Drip Irrigation’. If successful, it should allow much more land to be cultivated with the water saved. Also, cisterns were recommended to capture rain water for the cities and towns, to channel all rain run off for non-potable water. Tyrion could not believe that no one had thought that before. Probably, someone had, it only took someone in power to actually listen.

The report had come up with a solution for the disputed hill country to the East of Nightsong as well. Farmers from both Dorne and Highgarden longed to plant grape vineyards but the threat of war between the two Houses was always too great. If a truce could be formed, along with a demilitarized zone, then the farmers in the area from both Houses had agreed to work together in a cooperative to share both the work and the bounty. It might fail, but if it succeeded it would increase the local wealth and tax revenue for both Houses.

The table listened with rapt attention. Money and the creation of wealth always got attention.

The final part had been an analysis and then request to form a center at the main university of Dorne for the creation of a “Women’s Study” program to help find, train and support female leaders. Wherever they could be found or groomed.

Many of the men smiled knowingly, and a few even chuckled until Daenerys spoke out in a firm commanding tone: “I like that idea … long overdue. Tyrion, let’s study this excellent proposal further.”

There were no more snickers.

Daenerys then asked who had authored the report, already knowing the answer. Tyrion smiled. She wanted her protégée highlighted. Tyrion had already told her how the report was authored by Myrcella Baratheon. He then informed them her last name was now Martell, breaking with her House completely. That raised a few eyebrows. The report also made clear, and Tyrion specified, that without Arianna Martell, her wife, this report would only have been a “shell” of what had been presented.

Tyrion eyed Hugh Elicero and Vedad Softic sharing disgusted looks as they heard the fact that two high, noble women had married each other. “Unnatural cunts,” he heard whispered, “what they need is a good hard cock!” Tyrion, knowing all too well about prejudice, ground his teeth. This was not the place to give the men a piece of his mind.

Tyrion had been surprised at the depth of analysis from his niece and her wife. He would never have guessed she was capable of such insight and intelligence – that truth made him frown. He had truly never even thought she was capable of it.

She had been an orchid only needing to be watered. Daenerys had been the one to make Myrcella bloom, and not her own uncle, her blood. He sighed to himself. How do you overcome a lifetime of conditioning? He resolved to try and do better.

Also, he couldn’t help but wonder - how in the seven gods did she bed three women?!

Next came the requests for attendance at the court. When would the representatives be selected and permitted to be sent. Every kingdom needed its representatives at court. There were many requests - all the Houses wanted to be part of the new Queen’s court.

All but one House, and Tyrion looking at Dany saw she was going to bring it up.

“Why is that Tyrion? Why do all the houses small or large request attendance but one. Why does possibly the greatest House in Westeros eschew presence at my court? I could find that borderline treasonous. Explain that to me, Tyrion.”

Tyrion paused a moment. How would he try to explain this House’s stiff necked honor? How could he show the Queen that the very lack of fawning showed more honor and restraint than all other Houses together? Tyrion did not want Daenerys to mistake their behavior as sedition. He had seen this was a trigger for the Queen.

A violent trigger.

All eyes were on him, but the only eyes that mattered were a pair of violet eyes staring with intent purpose. They had discussed this matter, but the Queen was still uneasy.

Tyrion was working at a severe disadvantage. He knew that Barristan had never revealed to Daenerys what had happened between her father and Eddard’s father. Barristan did not want to burden the then fourteen year old. As she matured and became the conqueror Queen, he kept silent. Then on her lightening fast campaign across Slaver’s Bay and cowing of the Free Cities there simply had not been any time.

Once in Westeros Tyrion had thought Daenerys should know about the Stark and Targaryen confluence on the Iron throne, but, again he had been overruled. Barristan and Oberyn both felt that the Queen’s bouts of melancholy would only worsen if she knew of the violent end to Eddard’s father Rickard Stark along with that of his brother Brandon. She would only sink deeper into her depressions knowing the cruel, senseless murder committed by her father on House Stark.

“The Starks are a stiff necked people your Grace, this is true. But they are a gallant and true people as well. I have visited them four times, and been to the wall twice. They are fair beyond any measure, against my House or any other, your Grace. Only in that House do I see the commoners eating amongst the royalty.”

Daenerys eyes softened a fraction hearing that, but quickly hardened again.

“Still, they embarrass and borderline humiliate me refusing to have even one representative at my court.”

“They never send a representative. Even under the rule of his long-time friend Robert Baratheon, your Grace.”

“Ahhh, So Eddard Stark consorts with dogs who plotted treason? And I am to trust such a man?”

“Would you not come to Dorne’s aid if they called your banners?”

“That is not the same!” Daenerys exclaimed.

“How so?”

The woman glared at him.

“Do not let vain pride and preconceived ideas create a Stark Mistake where their need be none, your Grace,” Tyrion told her, locking eyes. This was too important. He wanted to nip this conflict in the bud if at all possible. No matter the cost.

The blond woman had become rigid, her left arm on the table with a clenched fist.

Tyrion was both angry and relieved. Relieved that he would continue living, and angry that even Daenerys Targaryen could let preconceived thoughts and notions color her thinking.

Daenerys

Daenerys was seething inside. She knew Tyrion was right, but she distrusted this ‘holding themselves apart’ that these Starks practiced. How could she know if she could trust them if they refused to even attend her court?

Her first Small Council and she already was pinching the bridge of her nose. It had started going wrong as soon as Solaja Xo came into the room. Suddenly, seeing the woman scanning the room for her she was almost happy the pompous windbag Grand Maester Harsch Lape had chosen to blight – er, grace- her with his immediate presence.

She found the Summer Islander woman to be off-putting and arrogant. She had blatantly proposed a liaison in front of Tyrion with all the subtlety a bull elephant in the rut. That could be alluring, but her roughshod manner had totally soured any potential attraction. For some reason she could not name or fathom she was not attracted any to this beautiful woman from the Summer Islands.

Then later that night Rakharo had wrongly assumed Daenerys had wanted the gorgeous woman in her bed. The smirk on his face as he closed the door said enough.

The woman came up to her with a hot, hungry look in her eyes. She had on a sheer night gown that displayed her heavy, gourd-shaped tits with their engorged teats. Her dark nipples, thick and long, poked out from the thin fabric. Daenerys could smell the woman’s excited pussy.

She was already dreading this moment.

“Jhalaa Khal is very cross with you for not returning any of her ravens. She has taken a powerful admiral’s daughter as her consort and will be married at the next summer solstice. She will be more than happy to share her new wife, Rorra Rana, with you to have a trifecta. She would still be proud to be your Queen, along with Rorra. Your marriage would create a powerful forging of two great nations into one.”
“They both hunger to fuck you, you know” Solaja cooed, moving in closer to get right before the Queen. “You put quite a spell on Jhalaai. Even as I was eating her out and Rorra was hard sucking on her teats she was moaning how she wished you were sitting on her face as I licked her.” Solaja softly moaned, her hand coming up to stroke a pale cheek. “I want to fuck you so bad,” the woman caught Daenerys in a flash, enfolding the pale woman in her arms.

The woman was eight inches taller than Daenerys, and Daenerys’ face was now pressed deep into a firm, heavy breast, the taller woman bending down to kiss Daenerys’ temple and working her lips downward.

“I want you so bad. I want to bury my face in that beautiful pussy I heard so much about. I’ll make you scream my name like you screamed Jhalaai’s name,” the dark woman husked, trying to tilt Daenerys head back to kiss her on the lips passionately.

Daenerys subtly shifted her weight and pried an arm up to spin out of the voluptuous woman’s grip. “I have a headache, Solaja. Maybe another night.” Daenerys replied. She simply felt no chemistry with this woman, and her brash behavior removed any lust from the equation. Daenerys was more than just her pussy! She would choose who she would sleep with.

“I like my women to play hard to get … men fawn and beg for it which is nice, but I much prefer being the huntress. I love the chase!” Solaja growled, moving in again.

“Did I tell I was on my period?” the pale woman spoke, holding up her hand.

“You lie… show me!” the Summer Islander growled, moving in. “I don’t give a fuck!”

“I do! We will speak of this later.” the Queen spoke in a neutral voice, her face stone.

Solaja eyed her. “I always get my women in the end, Daenerys Targaryen … tease me all you want —I will dine on that succulent pale coochie that has Tall Trees Town all atwitter. All the women want to suck your pale pussy to orgasm over and over - feeling their faces soaked in your cum… soon it will be my face that is covered in your cunt as you scream my name, Daenerys. It will only be a matter of time…”

Daenerys went to the door and opened it wide. Rakharo stared at her with surprise on his face as the clearly horny and frustrated Summer Islander left the room in a huff. “Soon Daenerys … I will suck you off so good you’ll faint from it … mark my words!” the woman stomped down the hall.

As she eyed the retreating, fuming woman Daenerys reflected she could only have one spouse. This sharing of spouses was not for her. She wanted a one-on-one bond. She had become greedy that way. She had gladly and easily bedded the women of her harem back in Drogo’s Khalasar, but she had been only thirteen then. She now wanted a woman to share more than just sex with. She wanted a partner. She wanted a Queen.

She may bed women occasionally to satisfy her continually burning lust but wanted to find that special someone. She wondered if that woman even existed, or if it even mattered. Daenerys was trying to wean herself off her cravings for the female body since she knew she would eventually have to marry a man to cement her control over Westeros. Wasn’t that the destiny expected of her from this conservative land?

But in her fantasy she was married to only one woman. She had seen in Dorne with its “Pride of Dorne” that another way was possible, but it was just not for her. She still wondered how Myrcella had hooked three beautiful women. All were clearly devoted to her, each other and her to them in return. She smirked at Solaja’s retreating back—gods the wild nights they must share!
“Don’t ever let her in my room again. Do you understand that, blood of my blood?”

Rakharo only shook his head yes as the door closed, his eyes betraying his confusion.

Daenerys’ thoughts returned to the present and the Small Council.

Daenerys had followed the reports and felt her pride and heart swell when Myrcella and Arianne’s report had clearly destroyed all the others. Her instincts were once again right on target. She knew this woman would be a great leader who would fully support and never turn against her. She smiled.

The forming of the Court had brought out her simmering distrust of the Stark reticence. She knew something more was at work here but she just couldn’t put her finger on it. She trusted Tyrion but she needed for him to again vouch for the House strongly, this time in public. After he did, she felt somewhat mollified. She knew this would continue to be a thorn in her paw, but, like Solaja, that problem could wait till tomorrow.

Now it was time to deal with the one person seeking audience. She should have known they would waste little time seeking audience to air their longstanding grievances with the Iron Throne.

She heard Tyrion ask to have the representative of the Iron Bank brought in.

They all watched Donadhor Orlolis enter the room with a young male scribe at this side. He introduced himself, then followed with another long round of platitudes. This inane practice nearly made Daenerys gag.

Finally it was time to get down to business.

“The Iron Bank is calling in all the debts of the Iron Throne,” Donadhor Orlolis demanded.

“We just sat on the Throne. This is an unjust demand!” Tyrion shot back.

“The Iron Bank has been put off long enough.”

“Not by us.”

“Nevertheless, we are calling in our marks.”

“First we need to see all the journals and each legal contract.”

“I don’t have all of that with me! You already have your copies.”

“It pains me to say they were destroyed in the sacking of King’s Landing.”

“There was no sacking of Kings Landing!”

“I know, but somehow all the documents went up in flames … most strange. We will need to see all your records.”

The preliminaries over, the Hand and Masters of Coin and Law each bitched at the representative of the Iron Bank as they haggled back and forth. The Crown and the Bank cajoled and threatened each other unpleasantly.

The records were of course safe and sound, but Tyrion was still trying to figure out all the chicanery and outright fraud he had found. Daenerys’ head had spun when he tried to show her what he had so far unearthed.
As they argued and whined, Dany reflected on all the gold she had hoarded. She wanted to use as much as she could on rebuilding, not paying off drunken orgies and mindless tournaments.

She remembered telling Tyrion what she had done with the plunder she was not using to pay for her invasion and keep the Dothraki in check.

Daenerys had taken much of the wealth the Slave Cities and put it on great Swan ships and had her bounty taken to the capital of the Summer Islanders. She knew not who else to trust. The Summer Islanders simply exuded honor. There her gold was lying in wait to be used - used for good.

When Tyrion had heard of this he was stunned. That was a big risk, he had told her.

Daenerys had asked him in return: “Who could I trust? Slaver’s Bay is no more. The free cities are thieves. The stories of Westeros are little better. Who should I trust Tyrion?”

The only name that came to Tyrion’s mind was Eddard Stark, but he would not take it. He was far too wise for that.

“I would protect your gold for you, my Queen,” Tyrion told Dany, looking up at her with innocent eyes.

The Targaryen had snorted. “With you in charge of my gold Tyrion, your head would be so filled with wine it would turn into a vat, your body so bloated with rich food I would need a small wheelbarrow to bear your around, and all the silly whores that would still fuck your bloated carcass for gold would make your cock fall off. No, my sweet Hand, for your protection I think I will keep my gold very far away from you.”

Tyrion had looked up at her with aggrieved eyes and a hint of a smirk.

Daenerys could hear that the men had reached a conclusion for today’s business.

The representative from the Iron Bank acted like he was about to leave but turned to face Daenerys.

“We have the manner of your personal debt to consider my Queen,” Donadhor Orlolis told her.

The Queen was surprised. She had not expected the Iron Bank to bring up her personal debt now.

“I had thought we would discuss this at a later time. That was between you and me.”

“Now is a good time. The only thing that has changed is your title, my Queen. You are still the same conqueror that you have always been.” Donadhor answered Daenerys.

“Just add the payment to whatever tally you finally decide on,” Daenerys told the man in her regal tone.

“I think not. We will require a different payment.”

“What would that be?… you will not have any portion of my throne or power.”

“That we do not wish. You will achieve great things on your throne, O Queen. And that will be good for business. Very good indeed.”

“Then what do you require?”

“You will know of it when we decide upon it.”
“How can you not know?”

“It hasn’t happened yet,” was the cryptic reply.

The meeting soon broke up. Thankfully, Solaja left with Harsch. Solaja gave Daenerys a heated glance as she left arm-in-arm with the blond, handsome Maester. It was obvious what they were about to do. It was also obvious that Solaja most definitely still had Daenerys in her sights.

Daenerys once again pinched her nose.

“Tell me Tyrion. Why do you men swear all these vows of chastity and then never keep them?”

“I believe the women of the silent sisters and in service of the seven gods are quite known in their youth for being lusty too, your Grace. Some of the biggest buyers of moon tea are such temples to cleanse the bodies and minds of their sisters of... unwanted issues. Plus, the lesbian orgies I hear are quite legendary.”

The blond woman stared down at the Hand with disdain. “You are a pig Tyrion, do you know that? A filthy, dirty pig.”

“But I am your pig Daenerys. All for just you,” Tyrion answered sweetly, looking up with soft puppy eyes, batting his eyelashes.

Daenerys gagged and made a retching sound. “I suddenly feel very ill, Hand!”

Tyrion was happy they could have these humorous moments. The Queen seemed a different person when she was not brooding.

“So tell me of this debt with the Iron Bank, Daenerys,” Tyrion said as they started to walk out the room.

Daenerys sighed. “I had them make a contract with the Faceless Men. I had Prince Ageon VI killed.”

Tyrion looked up, impressed. “Do tell.”

Tyrion

A few hours after Daenerys had heard supplications on the Iron Throne, Tyrion was in his chambers in the Tower of the Hand. He was mulling over the reports and beginning research to give the Queen the information she would need to form an opinion on several complicated supplications that she had heard today. She would give her pronouncement on them in three days time.

He was happily planning a trip to Chataya and Alayaya’s establishment for some much needed rest and relaxation. He licked his lips. He found Alayaya to be most alluring and the things she could do with her mouth and tongue left him speechless.

There was a knock on his door. He went and opened it and found a young scribe used to run messages. He handed one such scroll to Tyrion. It had the Queen’s seal on it.

Tyrion thanked the runner and gave him a few coppers for his effort and closed the door. It was an invitation to the Queen’s personal quarters for two hours past the dinner hour. He saw that four other persons had been invited to join him in the Queen’s quarters as well.

Tyrion sighed. He would have to postpone his trip to the brothel till tomorrow night. He wanted plenty of time to enjoy himself.

At the appointed time Tyrion knocked on Daenerys’ door. The Queen opened it and greeted Tyrion in traditional Dothraki apparel. She wore a blue and orange painted leather vest that had no hooks or eyelets. The vest hung open parted wide exposing much of the Queen’s breast. The high and firm breasts were so enticing as they moved on her chest with the motion of letting Tyrion into the room that Tyrion nearly tripped over himself trying not to stare.

Daenerys laughed telling him he could look, just not touch. She had on purple dyed horsehair leggings cinched with a belt of bronze medallions. On her feet she wore open-toed riding sandals that laced up to the knees.

Daenerys Targaryen was a ravishingly beautiful woman. The scars visible on her body only added to her exotic allure.

Daenerys was many things but deep down she was as a Khaleesi of her knew Khalasar she was forming.

Tyrion noticed that Barristan and Missandei were already in the room. The Queen had stocked a table with cheeses, fruit, rolled meats stuffed with apricots and a big bowl of locusts. Strong Belwas was also in the room sitting in a large, comfortable stuffed chair in front of the fire place stuffing locusts in his mouth by the handful and slurping down fermented goat’s milk.

He burped loudly, patting his stomach happily.

Missandei and Barristan were sitting around a small circular table conversing softly while drinking tea and nibbling on some cheese, cherries and berries. Tyrion joined them as he sat on a chair sized for him with steps up to it. The Queen stood beside the table laughing as they talked about life and Missandei related a humorous tale from her time on Naath before her capture by slavers.

There was another knock on the door and Daenerys went to answer her it, her tight ass flexing sweetly with each step. Tyrion cursed his cock. He saw Barristan smirking at him. Damn the man and his self-control. He even caught Missandei enjoying the view - what woman couldn’t enjoy the body of another beautiful woman?

Daenerys invited in Syrio. Their group was now complete.

Syrio joined them at the table after getting a plate of food.

Strong Belwas had refilled his bowl with locusts and was again eating happily.

Daenerys joined them sitting in the last free chair. “I have invited you all here tonight because I want to form a group of my closest advisors and friends. I have come to value each and everyone in this room. Four of you have been with me almost from the beginning of my conquest back to my homeland.

“The fifth, you Tyrion, have proved yourself to be loyal and a good friend. You are cunning and expert at the Game of Thrones.

“I want to form what I will call my ‘Klutch of Confidantes’. This will be an informal meeting of my most trusted advisors. I value and totally accept the council and advice that will be provided by the Small Council but I want a smaller group that I can discuss particular issues with. To tackle problems that are more complex and challenging.

“We can discuss these items without the discord of too many viewpoints all clamoring to be heard and given credence to. We can take up issues that have been divisive in the Small Council and start to form answers and resolutions. These quiet meetings will hopefully allow us to present a united front to the Small Council. In these private meetings we will search for the best decisions for the realm.

“I also want these meetings to be a time of friendship and simple bonding. I like and love each of you dearly. I want us to spend time together in comradery. It will only make us stronger and more united. I would like to meet twice a week. I want to meet on the first of the week and also the middle of the week.

“We will discuss any pressing issues. If any problems are proving vexing in the Small Council we can form bases for policies and procedures here to meet the needs of the realm. These will be presented by the Hand back to the Small Council.”

Tyrion was pleased with how Daenerys was making sure to increase his status and prestige with the persons on the Small Council.

“If we enter into a crisis situation, we will meet as necessary. Since this is our first meeting I propose we just enjoy our time together.”

Tyrion looked over at Strong Belwas who was now snoring loudly his immense gut quivering with his loud snores.

Daenerys saw him looking at the large eunuch.

“He is here, Tyrion, because he is a dear friend and I do not want him to feel left out of this group. He has been loyal from the start of my campaign across Slavers Bay. He would have been hurt if excluded. There may come a time when his unique perspective may prove beneficial.”

Tyrion’s estimation of the Queen rose another notch with her sensitivity to the feelings of the large, coarse, but endearing eunuch.

Daenerys held up a pack of Lysene playing cards. “Anyone open for a game of Pyramid poker?” the Queen asked, wagging her eyebrows.

When everyone left her quarters two hours later, the Queen was sullen and mumbling under her breath. Tyrion grinned up at her as he walked out with most of the winnings.
The horses steel shod hooves hammered the road as the group of men traveled down the twisting lane at a slow canter. Dew was forming droplets of glittering water on the needles of the trees and falling silently to the earth. The banner of the snarling Direwolf flew from the standard high and proud, snapping in the morning breeze, calling attention to any who may be looking. The haze hid the world in half-shadows and mystery.

The trees lined the road in a mournful procession as high in the sky the ubiquitous hawk screamed its mournful cry to the unseeing world below. The sentinels had lined this road long before Eddard Stark rode down this path. These same sentinels would still be there guarding the mysteries hidden in the forests behind them long after Eddard Stark was in his icy tomb beneath Winterfell.

Eddard Stark felt troubled. He could sense these were great times. Great times he had come to understand usually caused heartbreak and catastrophe. He thought back to Robert calling his banners, forcing him to march south years ago. So much death had ensued. He feared in his heart that the fates were once more in need of strife watered with bloodshed.

The arrival of the Dragon Queen had set in motion forces he was unsure of. She was definitely an improvement over his old childhood friend. Robert had turned into such a disappointment, even after he had shown such promise. It had been so disheartening to see all that potential waste away in drunken orgies of excess.

Robert had dissipated and with him, his kingdom. The Queen promised a new age. He could only hope she would deliver. He hoped that events and forces would give her the opportunity to achieve what had been so inspiring in her letter.

He had ridden out of the gates of Winterfell near dawn to patrol the country grounds. He did not truly fear any trouble - the wall was patrolled, and the wildlings were still held at bay. He was just restless. He felt something coming, deep in his bones. He had ridden out with Rob, Theon and his castellan Rodrik Cassel, along with a party of ten northern soldiers. They headed down the King’s Road toward Cerwyn.

As expected the patrol had been unmolested by brigands or Wildlings.

Peace outside made up for the rancor within the ranks of the House Stark. Eddard sighed as his oldest son and heir to Winterfell continued to press his argument once again.

“Tell me again father, why we are not marching South to King’s Landing? Why are we still in the North when your king has need of you? We should march south to King Robert’s aid! Doing nothing only brings dishonor to the House of Stark!” Rob exclaimed.

Eddard sighed. He and Rob had been arguing for the past two weeks about the North not calling its banners and marching south to bring support for the King of Westeros. Eddard felt his stomach clench for what felt like the thousandth time. He was torn.

Robert, for some reason, had left him an out. He had not called in any of his banners. In fact, he had done nothing at all that Eddard could see. He had decided to use the out provided by his childhood friend. You cannot march to a King’s aid if he did not request it. Or could he? He knew it was sophistry. He would have marched if Robert had made the call, but he had not.

In the godswood while sharpening his swords Ice and Morning Star he thanked Robert for sparing him the necessity of marching south. Was Robert so wane and wasted that he no longer cared about his fate? Again it was so unlike the boy and then young man he had grown up with. He was just thankful.

Eddard knew what would happen if he took an army south now. It would burn. The Targaryen woman, Daenerys Targaryen First of her Name had dragons. That changed everything. Rob in his brash youth had failed to see the folly of marching to certain death. He only saw honor and the potential for dishonor.

Rob insisted that the North could defeat any army on the field of battle. The only problem with that argument was the primary assault would come from the air. How had the girl gotten a hold of three dragons? Over the last two months all who had spied the dragons said that they would appear as if by magic, often flying high going north or winging back down south.

The dragons would circle a city of the north their bodies glinting so beautifully in the sky, like precious gems given life. They would then fly onward disappearing into the distance. They would not appear again for days or weeks. Their appearances were mercurial, like apparitions from the nether world.

A few times they had flown low enough for Eddard to truly see what he would be up against - death. They had been so huge; their wings seemed to spread form horizon to horizon. How could such large beasts like that fly? They were the essence of magic given life.

Theon supported Rob and boasted that he would shoot the eyes out of any dragon that dared come near. He was always overconfident with his bow. He and Arya both were. This was another problem that constantly vexed the Lord of Winterfell.

The daughter that seemed to be half wolf she was so fierce. He had protected her from society and its mores and even her own mother, but he knew soon he would be forced to act. His stomach clenched knowing what that would do his youngest daughter. He scowled. He had no alternative answer to the duty his daughter would be required to perform.

He was raised to be Warden of the North. It was a duty and an honor. It was just at times he hated that duty. He hated being the executioner of justice but he never shirked his responsibility. He knew eventually he would be forced to do his duty with Arya and even Sansa now.

He looked up into the misty morning sky. Not today, though, he thought.

His mind drifted then, thinking of Bran and the strange malady that stuck him the day the ravens had arrived with messages from the Queen. Rickon had been sent to find his errant brother and to tell him to come down from his climbing escapades. Rickon had come running back crying. He had found Bran lying on the ground, broken from a long fall off the broken tower.

They had found Bran on the ground, his body and limbs spread out at odd angles with his legs twisted. His back had been broken like a twig. Eddard had looked at the tower wall that Bran had climbed so easily a thousand times before. Something did not feel right. He looked up again and saw a large raven staring down at them with beady eyes.

He had snapped his head, but the raven had flown off. For a moment he could have sworn the raven had three eyes. He shook his head and chided himself for seeing things. One thing he truly did see was his son’s hands covered with bright red marks. Marks that looked like what a raven’s beak would deliver. He looked again up at the tower, but still he saw no ravens.

His body broken, Bran had been in a sweat-soaked fever ever since.

The timing was too strange to be coincidence, but, how could a message from the Queen trigger such a strange event? One could not cause the other, could it? His son was strong, and he stubbornly clung to life. He kept muttering of the ‘three-eyed raven’ and something about how only the dragon, wolf, and Azor Ahai reborn could defeat the ‘Ice King’. The Tree of Life needed its new seer. He kept repeating how the dragon and the direwolf must lie together. His first rants had sent dread down Ned’s spine. The last was cryptic; though he knew deep down what it meant.

Arya had always had a deep fascination with dragons of House Targaryen.

Memories from nearly twenty years ago came flooding to his mind. He would never allow that. The House of Targaryen was mad. They were too in love with the fire that was emblematic of their house. He remembered as if were yesterday, the savage murder of his father and brother at the hands of King Aerys II Targaryen, the "Mad King". He had been called that for good reason.

Had the insanity passed on to his children? He had heard rumors of Viserys Targaryen’s demise, a death his mad actions had made certain. If the brother was mad, certainly his sister carried the same taint.

The heavy fog of the morning had burned off to a high haze. The sun was clearly visible, but only as a hazy orb as Winterfell came into view. Eddard smiled. It would be good to be home. He listened to Theon boast of his prowess with the bow, and the death he planned to give the Targaryen bitch’s mount, until he started to detail what he would do the helpless woman after.

Theon started talk of salt wives. He would make the white haired woman his bed wench.

Eddard was proud when Rob cut over him and told Theon in a tone of command that the woman would be taken hostage and accorded the appropriate respect of a high born noble. He had raised his son right.

Winterfell drew closer, and his blood quickened seeing the ancestral home of House Stark.

Eddard’s mind went to his bastard son and the news he had sent. Jon was certain that the Ice King had risen again. He had first started mentioning the Wight King’s resurrection over a year ago, becoming more confident and sure with the passing months. All had guessed of his return but Jon now spoke with solid certainty.

Jon had no particular proof, but he was adamant on the matter. When Eddard had pressed his son on the issue, Jon had become cryptic. He told his father that he needed to trust him; that the moment of this age was at hand. Jon refused to tell his father why, and how he was so certain of this.

If the Ice King was not fought, stopped, and killed at the Wall, all of Westeros would fall under his power and all human life would be exterminated. The Ice King hated all things that had warm blood flowing in their veins.

After eight thousand years their implacable enemy had arisen from whatever foul grave had held him. The rest of Westeros no longer believed in a threat that wanted to rend and kill them. The North had not forgotten. Winter is coming, Eddard thought.

Eddard had so much wanted to dismiss his son, but deep down he knew Jon spoke the truth. He would have to time his march north just right. He would need to arrive at the perfect moment to strike. Winter was coming, and the land could not long hold and feed a large army.

Without an immediate battle drawing their attention, dissension would soon blossom and start to tear at the fabric of the assembled host of men against the ancient evil embodied in the Ice King. Why now? He kept going back to Bran’s mad fever induced ramblings. Was the Targaryen a key to victory? How? She had just arrived in Westeros.

Soon he would be in the comforting walls of Winterfell. Eddard Stark scanned the horizon yet again, still feeling troubled. His battle instincts told him danger was present, but he simply could not see it. His companions appeared to feel none of his rising anxiety. He looked around again.

Suddenly the five direwolves of his children began to howl madly. Then he heard screams from the other side of Winterfell.

Eddard cursed his stupidity. He had looked everywhere but up.

Arya

Arya had gotten up with the birds singing before the break of dawn. She had quickly dressed and ate a meal with the servants in the kitchen. Nymeria joining her to feast on a thick ox bone. Arya enjoyed eating with the common people, it helped to remind her that she was really no one that special. Stark was only a name when you came down to it.

She had gone out after eating and met Rodrik Cassel, spending ten minutes practicing new sword strokes with the castellan. When they fought, she let him win. She knew her skills. Only her brother and father were her betters with the sword, and she was improving every day. She could feel it. Everyone else seemed to be slowing down while she was speeding up.

She was sure she would soon surpass Rob. Only her father still put fear in her. He would practice with her, willing to take the abuse they both knew he would receive from her mother Catelyn. She adored her father for standing up to his wife, though Arya knew it cost her father frozen looks and stiff shoulders. She also knew that he was delaying as long as possible before she would be forced into a political marriage. Arya shuddered at the thought. She had already decided she would run herself through on a sword first. She was not some prized heifer to be given as a dowry.

She could not understand how her mother so eagerly sought to marry her off to a man she knew nothing about. Sansa had seemed so anxious to married off to some highborn noble’s son. Arya started to sneer but stopped - that was not exactly true anymore, either.

Sansa had changed. She was still the proper lady, but she no longer mooned over that noble’s son or the other. She had become reserved, and only smiled and nodded when asked about suitors. Arya had been suspicious at first, thinking her sister had fallen in love with the baker’s son or something.

She knew her sister was not cold-blooded. Arya had heard her moaning and crying out in her room when she snuck to her sister’s thick door and pressed her ear to it. The sounds muffled and barely heard but clearly passionate. Her sweet sister was not so sweet and innocent, in truth. Arya smirked. She had almost heard a name. Morgan, Merlyn, Mace, Martell? Something like that. She had racked her brain, but could not pull a name that fit the muffled cries of a barely heard ‘I love you’, followed by sounds of ecstasy.

Arya had tried to talk to Sansa about masturbation, but Sansa’s face and ears would go beet red and she would sputter and run off. This left Arya very frustrated. She was sure in seven hells not talking to her mother about masturbating, or about whom she fantasized over when in the act.

Arya hacked at the dummies harder. She was upset that as per usual she was not allowed to go out on patrol with her father. It was so fucking unfair! She knew her father wanted to let her ride on the patrols. She knew her father, and knew his sense of propriety prevented him from granting her that privilege. He would not incite any more half-spoken words about his daughter than he already had.

She told herself that it was going to be a boring patrol anyways, as she pulled out her bow and practiced shooting arrows in the eyes, mouth and nose of the dummies. She knew not even Theon was close to her in mastery of the bow. She loved loosing arrows at the targets, it calmed her mind.
The arrow already knew its destination - she merely had to launch it between heartbeats.

She never missed anymore. Arya spent some more time with the sword after she felt satisfied with her archery.

Once she was through with drills, Arya sat down to eat a pear. Her mind drifted, and she thought about how legends had so recently come back to life. Dragons flew in the heavens above. She had even seen the majestic beasts herself, flying slowly across the horizon, always on a journey across the skies.

Many reports had started to come in of the dragons flying low over cities and holdfasts. Last week
White Harbor and Moat Caitlin were flown over by the green and white dragons. The same day Hornwood had been visited by the mighty black dragon with a pale, white, female rider. The dragon had actually landed in the square! It had roared and spun around before both dragon and rider took off flying high over Hornwood once again before finally wheeling off into the horizon. The people were all atwitter. The Targaryen had not attacked!

The stories said the woman riding the beast was a warrior of great stature, and that she had a sword on her back that she never unsheathed. Her message was clear along the raven’s scrolls that constantly arrived. ‘I want peace. I will usher in an age of greatness and prosperity for all.’ All of the messages had ended with ‘I want to fight no more, forever’.

Many now no longer wanted to resist the woman. They wanted to give her a chance to meet with the people. They felt she deserved an airing.

Arya knew that she herself would love to give the mighty warrior woman a personal meeting, her cheeks reddening at the thought. She felt her pussy getting wet just thinking of the mighty Targaryen Queen. Surely she came in peace. Didn’t she?

Arya saw that the heavy fog had burned off, and only a light haze remained in the cool air. She climbed to the ramparts and looked for her father while daydreaming of having the freedom to be what she knew she could be. She could be a great warrior. She felt it inside. Damn! Why had she been born a silly girl?! As much as she loved being a woman, men’s rules kept pinning her down.
Hell, her own mother sought to clip her wings every chance she could.

Her father came into view, and her melancholy began to lift. She loved her noble father, who did all this world allowed for her.

The party slowly grew larger as they came closer to the ancient castle. She was smiling down at her father, even though he could not see her. He was her hero. She could see he was in a pensive mood, listening to Theon boast as he always did.

Suddenly, Nymeria was howling in the courtyard. She looked to the square below. Following Nym, all of the direwolves began howling and jumping around in circles, snapping at the air, their haunches and tails bristled. They each faced the north side of the keep.

By the OLD GODS! Screams began to run up and down Winterfell. A hurricane of wind swept over the castle as a monstrous black dragon flew between the two closest towers and zoomed over Arya’s head. She knew if she had held up her bow it would have jerked out of her hand by the propulsion of the passing dragon’s body.

RRRROOOAAAAARRRRRRRRR!

Arya’s body whipped around as the dragon passed overhead. The flying beast immediately dipped once passing by the castle walls. It landed with its hind legs swept forward just over her father’s approaching party. The horses began bucking and screaming in terror as they reared, throwing a few riders to the ground. Rob was being jerked about on the saddle, and her father was barely able to control his war charger.

The dragon’s mighty talons on its hind legs dug long deep trenches in the Earth as it stopped its body forward momentum.

The dragon had fortunately missed her father. But the warrior princess is supposed to be a force for good! Arya thought desperately. After the dragon had landed it moved so quickly she could barely follow its motions as the beast swirled its body around to crouch down on all fours about a hundred feet behind her father’s party. The beast’s black head jerking and swaying side to side to avoid any arrows if any had been loosed.

The black dragon’s neck surged forward, its massive mouth opened wide open. Her father was about to die! “NNNOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO!” Arya screamed. In her mind she saw a hot massive gout of flame lashing over her father and brother, incinerating them.

RRRROOOAAAAARRRRRRRRRR!

But they did not die. The dragon had only roared. Once done, its neck pulled back and it rose up on its powerful legs. The dragon slowly turned, keeping its head pointed at the party. The dragon slowly moved to the left keeping its bright eyes focused on her father. The intelligence obvious in those red eyes with cat like pupils.

Then, Arya saw her. Gods, she was so beautiful, pale and white on the massive midnight dragon. The woman’s white hair was long and beautiful. The silky strands wildly fluttering in the winds surrounding the moving dragon. The woman’s violet eyes were so beautiful.

RRRROOOAAAAARRRRRRRRRR! RRRROOOAAAAARRRRRRRRRR!

The beast of legend roared again, but did not attack. Arya’s fear diminished at the strange behavior. The dragon and rider threatened, but had not caused harm. What was Daenerys Targaryen’s game?

She noticed Theon was trying to pull his bow out to string it. Her father grabbed his arm, jerking it back down.

Arya watched the black dragon lower its body as its long talons dug into the earth. Suddenly, the beast heaved up on its mighty rear legs, propelling the dragon high in the air on brute strength alone.
The black behemoth flapped his wings, and the dragon bounded over to the opposite side of the riding party to land adroitly.

The dragon roared again, its neck shuddering with the force of it.

The horses continued rearing and bucking as the riders struggled to turn them, even as they were lost in their own confusion. The dragon hunched its head, watching the riders as it slinked low in short motions to circle back to its original position.

Arya saw Rob pull his sword out of its scabbard as he started to advance. Ned grabbed his elbow, nearly unseating Rob in the process. Rob whirled and yelled at his father as the dragon roared yet again.

RRRROOOOAAAAARRRRRRRRRR!

Eddard calmed his party down as dragon and rider both watched them warily. The dragon’s tail swished back and forth just over the ground, the tip rising up a few times and shaking in anticipation.

Ned slowly advanced ten feet in front of the rest of his party. He slowly, so very slowly, pulled Ice from the sheath on the side of his war horse. Once the Valyrian greatsword was out, he brought it up slowly, the hilt in front of his face. He touched his forehead to the flat of blade in a solemn salute to the pale Targaryen.

For a moment, the blond woman did not move. Then, slowly, her hand reached back behind her and gripped a sword pommel that only now Arya saw. The Targaryen pulled her sword out and all gasped as they saw it burn a bright blue. The color absolutely beautiful. The sword’s glow seemed to radiate from within the blade.

She noticed the woman’s face slash in surprise for some reason, but it quickly regained impassive control. She brought her sword up and copied her father’s salute.

She touched the glowing blue blade to her face, illuminating it in a ghostly hue. Then she brought the glowing sword back down.

“Keso glaesot یدرپتوت یاؤر یسیت گاموتو یدرپبی. یا یاکیو یمیظی ی او دارد است. یا یاکیو یمیظی ی او زانتیسی است.” the Targaryen cried out in a clear, melodious soprano voice.

Then the white haired woman sheathed her sword and launched her dragon into the sky, gone as quickly as she had come in the lifting haze.

It was only when the Targaryen had vanished that Arya notice Maester Luwin beside her. “Did you understand her? What language was she speaking?” she asked.

Master Luwin smiled kindly down at Arya. “She spoke in high Valyrian, her mother tongue. She said what she ends her scrolls with: ‘I want to fight no more, forever.’ She then wished peace upon your father and then his entire House, my sweet child.” the Maester told her affectionately.

Arya heard her father coming in the open gates and raced down to meet his party.

Eddard said a quick prayer to the old gods when he saw the dragon flying in from over Winterfell. The dragon had passed just over their heads.
He had seen the beasts mighty hind legs pushed forward its great razor sharp talons approaching his party. The weight and momentum of the great dragon would have those talons rip him and his party to shreds. The talons lifted at the instant and passed over their heads leaving them untouched.

He was shocked to still be alive. That had been a killing attack. They should be dead. He saw the woman staring at him intently with those violet eyes of old Valyria. It was in that instant that Eddard knew that Daenerys had no intention of killing them there.

She had moved around them threatening but not attacking. She had only probed and tested them. He wondered if he had passed as she winged back up to the sky and quickly disappeared into the mist.

He quickly led his stunned riding party back into the safety of Winterfell.

Inside the gates was pandemonium. Shouts and angry remarks filled the air as total confusion reigned. ‘What had that all been about?!’ was the question on everyone’s lips.

“Why did you stop me from challenging her father?! Why did you stop Theon from notching his bow?” Rob raged.

Eddard dismounted and waited for his son and ward to hit the ground. They all stood in rigid postures of conflict.

“Rob … if you had ridden out, or Theon notched his bow, we would all be dead. Her dragon was poised to breathe flames at a moment’s notice. She could have killed us at any time. She chose not to. She was testing us, to see if we would show the same restraint as she was showing. I hope she does not hold your youthful desire for conflict against us, son.”

Rob backed off slightly, mollified as he appeared to contemplate his father’s words. Then Arya ran up to Eddard, her small body trembling with excitement.

She was nearly babbling in her enthusiasm, asking him questions about what had happened. What did it feel like? What did Daenerys look like up close? How tall was she? Six foot six inches? Did he see how her sword had glowed blue? Had he been afraid?

Eddard ruffled his youngest daughter’s hair and answered her questions as best he could. He knew the Targaryen was a short woman, but decided to let his daughter’s fantasy live on. He told her the woman was beautiful, which she was. He told his daughter that he had, indeed, been very afraid. Arya was surprised at that.

“Everyone who is wise feels great fear, Arya. It is how we deal with it that will mark our place in history.” Ned told her.

Sansa came up then, catching Arya’s attention. If she had not been so distracted by her sister, she would have seen her father’s expression turn grim, clearly displaying his unease.

Many things were converging at once, and all of them pointed North.

Sansa

Sansa had been inside working on her stitching while thinking of her love. She had her concentration broken by the howling of all the direwolves, the cacophony absolutely deafening. She raced down the stairs and out to the courtyard, where she saw a large crowd at the front of the castle high up on the wall, looking down. She hurried up, for once thankful for her five foot-nine inch height that allowed her to quickly find a break in the wall of heads before her.

She had seen and heard the Targaryen shout her words in high Valyrian. Her education had allowed her to catch something about not fighting, and that she wished goodwill on their house, she was sure. Almost sure.

Arya had nearly bowled her over as she ran down to see their father. She watched with an idle smile, seeing Arya so excited. Legends and combat had always thrilled her little sister. Today she had seen both.

Sansa looked around at the agitated crowd milling and arguing about what it all had meant. She heard her father telling his lieutenants that there was no danger from the Targaryen, and ordering them to calm the people.

Sansa scanned the yard, worried. She hoped that Highgarden would be spared the Targaryen’s wrath; they were so much closer to King’s Landing. Wouldn’t the Targaryen focus more on them? She might feel it necessary to make an example of the southern House. She might attack their seat of power and endanger the Tyrells. She felt her heart clench at the thought. No! That would not happen. If the Targaryen showed restraint here, she would show it at Highgarden. She had to.

Her anxiety lessened as she watched her sister gush about the event. Arya was telling her how the dragon woman must have been seven feet tall. She was so powerful, and her hair so white and soft blowing in the breeze. And then her eyes…! Arya started to trail off with a dreamy look on her face.

Sansa smirked. Could her sister be any more obvious? She always wore her emotions on her face. Sansa though, had been trained for high court. She had learned to hide her feelings when necessary. She had learned well the Game of Thrones.

Like now.

Sansa giggled as she heard Arya carry on. “She’s soooooo beautiful!” Arya was shamelessly mooning over the Targaryen who was a living legend come to life for her.

She sighed. Maybe it was time she talked to Arya. It would be so nice to confide in her sister – especially since she was sure they shared the same secret.

She watched as Arya went bounding off, filled with her usual restless energy.

Sansa looked up at the sky. How could she work this to get to Highgarden…?

Arya

Arya stood up on the battlements. The sun had set an hour ago, and the air was cooling fast.

Today had been a day of excitement and good news. Seeing a dragon up close and seeing the Targaryen Queen on the beast of legend had fired up her imagination. She saw in Daenerys Targaryen that it was indeed possible for a young girl to dream of greatness.

Arya looked around and sighed, wondering how hard it would be to kiss a woman who was over six and a half feet tall. It wouldn’t be so easy, but she was sure she could make it work somehow.

On top of it all, shortly after the Targaryen had flown off a maid came bursting out to tell everyone that Bran had awakened. He was in his right mind, and had already eaten. Her little brother was going to live!

Yes, today, had been a mostly good day.

She had tried to ply Rob and Theon for additional information about the confrontation, and they had brushed her off. Theon especially made it clear that this was a matter for men to handle. Even Rodrik Cassel had told her to go inside where she belonged in his exasperation at all her excited questions.

It had all had filled Arya with anger. She was so tired of being relegated to the background because of her sex. It was beyond unfair. She silently fumed, looking up at the bright stars coming out across the northern sky.

She wondered how the Targaryen Queen felt, riding a dragon and brandishing a bright blue shining Valyrian steel sword. Where had that come from? She had never read or heard of anything like that. What must it feel like, to be all you could be, to be unfettered. Daenerys Targaryen had already conquered half of Essos if the reports were true. Now, she was set to take all of Westeros as well.

Arya just wanted to get on a horse and ride south. She would find the Queen and throw her sword and bow at the feet of the Queen and pledge her allegiance. She could just disappear and as they looked to the woods for her as she raced south.

… … Nice fantasy.

She knew she couldn’t just run South by herself. She had to come up with a plan … great tidings were occurring. One way or another, she would pledge her service to her beautiful Queen.

Arya sighed to herself. Her hair was so white and silky … and her eyes so violet … so damn beautiful. She was already smitten with the warrior woman who had appeared from legend.

Winging Home

Two Months Ago

Daenerys / Meera / Daenerys / Eddard / Arya

Daenerys

Daenerys had a lot of things to consider about her meeting with the Starks.

She remembered winging up towards Winterfell that morning after exploring the Northern Barrowlands. She had been lulled by the slight up and down motions caused by Drogon’s mighty wings pinioning as they pumped and drove him forward. The wind blowing across her face was also soothing.

She looked down at the land rolling several thousand feet below her, the hills undulating as she passed. The corpses of green trees stood in stark relief to the close ground hugging ferns and lichen that covered much of this moist, cool landscape. She spotted a few lone houses nestled into hollows in the hills for shelter, and wondered about the hardy souls that lived in such a seemingly unforgiving environment.

She admired people who lived on and from the earth. She noticed a few small herds of cows, some goats and big horn sheep in the higher, more craggy ridges she crossed over as the lines of peaks passed close underneath Drogon as she soared by.

The Queen crossed the King’s Road as she continued north. On the horizon was a bank of clouds hugging the ground from east to west; a heavy fog that clung to the land like a blanket embracing a sleepy child. It had been mesmerizing. If she had been superstitious, she may feared it was a supernatural warning to turn South.

The sun rose in the sky, and the moisture started to burn off. The approaching wall of fog was like a sentinel denying her access to the North. She had Drogon descend until he was flying just below the line of fog, his horns bobbing up to appear in the fog briefly before dipping down again. His massive black wings swept up and out of the clouds before descending in a slow arc to disappear in the cloud bank again. Daenerys felt the fog flow over her breast and stomach, her head remaining above the clouds.

She had felt like some mythological creature, her lower half water and her upper half human. She laughed, gaily enjoying the moment.

She dove into the cloud bank and enjoyed the water caressing her face and then rising over the rolling bank of moisture to dry off in the warm sun.

After she had frolicked, the clouds gradually thinned and began to dissipate.

She spied Eddard with a patrol party, her dragon easily able to see the banners even from the height that they were flying at. The mist had hidden them to those on the ground, but not the reverse. She contemplated what to do for several minutes before an evil smile crossed her face.
Daenerys made a wide looping turn, losing altitude. It had been exhilarating flying over the castle battlements, and taking Drogon just over the head of Eddard himself.

It had been enjoyable watching the party scramble in disarray. She could have killed them at any time, but that was not her goal. She wanted the Great Houses to see both her power and her restraint.

She had observed one of the man’s sons trying to notch a bow, and the other, larger one attempting to come forward, his sword being pulled from his scabbard. She was pleased to see Eddard stopping the rash actions of his sons (or was the smaller one the ward she had read about?) Either way, Daenerys was thankful that she had not had to escalate the confrontation.

Her goal was to avoid any unnecessary death. Already more than half of Westeros had pledged allegiance to her. Her plan was working exactly as she had hoped - she was showing both her might, and her restraint. And Eddard, more than most, was a man who needed to see both from her.

Finally, Eddard slowly came forward and pulled his great Valyrian sword out. Daenerys’ eyes had bulged a little at seeing the huge size of the great broadsword - it was as tall as she was! He had brought it to his forehead in a clear show of respect, indicating he wanted to avoid any further conflict.

Daenerys had pulled her own sword from her scabbard and immediately felt it start to vibrate. She was taken aback; that had never happened before. The sword had actually started producing a strange, barely heard whistle and felt like it was trying to lean toward the great castle Winterfell.

She had looked at the blade and concentrated on it, and it immediately ceased its strange behavior. She shook her head and repeated the actions of Eddard Stark, bringing her sword to her forehead. She knew the blue glow of her runes would put a mesmerizing glow about her face. She was using every trick in her arsenal to bend her kingdom to her. She knew the blue aura around her white hair and pale features would make a most beguiling image.

Her message sent, she had no reason to linger any further.

After the brief standoff, Daenerys had quickly sheathed her sword and urged Drogon to take to the air. She always enjoyed feeling the power of her son. His legs tensed and his body crouched, then suddenly he pushed up with his mighty limbs. His roar echoed off the landscape and his massive wings quickly had his hulking body disappearing into the mist again as they gained altitude.

Daenerys always enjoyed the simple act of flying on Drogon. It was freeing, and filled her with a surging pulse of excitement every time Drogon beat his wings.

Before long Daenerys was high up on the thermals and flying back South. The cool air on her heated skin felt like an elixir that thrummed in her veins.

She was soon lulled into a semi-awake state. Daenerys did not need any type of saddle or bridle when she flew on Drogon, she used her mind to guide her dragons. It had surprised Tyrion at first. He had constantly looked for and asked where she had her dragon horn, or what magical scrolls had she learned to bend the dragons to her will.

At first Daenerys had been offended and even angry at the very idea of controlling her dragons in that way, but that was before she learned that only through the magical devices of spells or horns had Valyria and her own ancestors been able to control their dragons. It was a little confusing for her to imagine it working that way; she had simply loved her dragons and asked them to do her bidding.
She explained to Tyrion that when Syrio Forel had taught her meditation to learn the warrior’s way she had discovered that it had opened a larger door between her and her dragons. Before the meditation exercises, her communication with her dragons had been tenuous at best.

But the more Daenerys reached her inner self the more in-tune she became with her dragons. She became able to speak to them in an almost human capacity, and could feel their moods and desires.
They were fierce beasts with a hot hunger for life, but they craved her love above all other things.

As her bond with her dragons increased, she was able to utilize their senses as naturally as her own.
She could see a rabbit hopping on the ground from a mile up, or smell a large elk hidden in a forest.
She had come to realize that her dragons saw far more than humans. They could see the colors in plants that were invisible to the human eye. They were also able to see the thermal heat of animals.

The dragons loved hunting at night, using this advantage to see their prey while they themselves were invisible to most. The sight of a wild boar all bright red and yellow was strange and exhilarating to Daenerys as they hurtled down to the Earth to catch prey. She grew to love sharing the hunt with her sons.

Daenerys ran her hands and feet into the ridges between great scales on Drogon’s back, and bent forward to drowse as they flew South at a sedate pace that ate up the leagues hungrily.

As she drifted, Daenerys reflected back on her continuing dream of the Direwolf. The beast was still brushing its nose on her feet, panting and looking up at her with only what she could call love.
Strange, the tiny blond woman thought. The Direwolf was a beast of the North and House Stark…
why would it show such emotion to her?

The only thing idea that made sense was that House Stark would inevitably submit to her. But they had a long history of fealty to the former king, though always from a distance and with seeming great reluctance to form deeper bonds. It was almost as if they felt themselves superior. That idea rankled the Targaryen.

For the next several hours Daenerys slept on Drogon’s back. They had a long flight back to Dorne.

Suddenly, Drogon awoke Daenerys from her peaceful slumber. He put into her mind the image that he was seeing far below on the ground.

Daenerys quickly shook herself awake, rubbing her eyes. She saw in her mind’s eye the marshy land of the Neck. She referenced her history lessons with Barristan Selmy and Tyrion - these were the lands of the House Reed. It was a land of bogs and supposedly floating cities that never stayed in one place for long.

Many an army had perished trying to conqueror that land. She was not going to make that mistake.

Far below on a large paddock she spied what had captured Drogon’s attention. She looked through his eyes to see the field in clear detail as she began a wide, spiraling descent.

It was most strange. She saw in the paddock a small gathering of people, and three great banners.
She saw the Banner of Stark, the great snarling direwolf. Next to it was the banner of her household, the three headed dragon of House Targaryen. Finally, there was a banner with a black lizard-lion on a grey-green field. The sigil of House Reed.

How had they known she would be flying over just now? Strange.

As she lowered she switched back to her own vision and looked around. The people appeared to be unarmed. She asked Drogon if he sensed any danger hidden in the surrounding woods and bogs, but he did not see or feel any threat.

Daenerys flew over the field several times beyond the range of bow shot and mulled over her options. She really had only one. Her curiosity had been peaked, and she simply had to know what the Reeds sought. Also, to just leave now would look cowardly, and Daenerys would never show fear to anyone.

Daenerys landed on the paddock near the marshlands. She slowly got off her dragon, then stood her ground. With Drogon behind her, she was protected from any attack from the rear. She watched the small party converse for a few moments before they started to walk toward her.

Daenerys broke into a smile as she watched them approach. They were a small people! She was actually as tall as the two women present, and the men did not tower over her. She decided that she already liked them.

The small woman at the forefront of the party introduced herself as Meera Reed. Her brother, Jojen, was introduced next. His green eyes stared into her with a disquieting introspection as if he was judging her mettle. Daenerys’ back straightened as she locked eyes with the youth. They stared for long moments before the young man turned his head with a smile.

“She is all that I said she would be,” he softly told his sister.

Daenerys was not sure she liked being weighed like that.

Daenerys was introduced to the rest of the small party and found their father, Howland Reed was with them. He came to her and bowed down on his knees. “House Reed gives its allegiance to the true Queen of Westeros. We will sacrifice ourselves to the last man in your service. The Ice Wights and Undead will not pass, as long as one Reed remains alive.”

“Ice Wights … Undead? … What is this man thinking? Daenerys thought to herself.

“My son and daughter will explain all to you that they can. Some things, I fear, must remain hidden else you will certainly die. Please forgive us.”

“What? What the hell is that supposed to mean?!” Daenerys spoke up in disquiet. Damnit! Why is it that everyone must be so fucking cryptic? From Astapor to Westeros she had been blighted with one prophecy of her doom after another. Daenerys Targaryen was still alive and those that had prophesied her doom were now in the grave!

Daenerys calmed her ire. This was not the same. She could sense they meant her well, but still. “Just tell me. I have heard this so many times and I still stand before you now. I will overcome anything set before me!” Daenerys told them with a wild confidence.

“Well you might,” Jojen Reed told the Queen. “But we will not risk it. If you die, the Ice King will triumph without doubt. You are late, Daenerys Targaryen.”

“What is that supposed to mean? I have conquered and fought my way across Essos and Westeros at a pace no man has ever accomplished, and you tell me I am late?!?”

“Nevertheless, you are late.” He told her again, making that eye contact that unnerved Daenerys. She knew the young man completely believed his words. In truth, it did not matter to Daenerys either way. She would confront her destiny and conqueror it as she always had.

“Everything has changed. The fates deemed you would arrive roughly three years ago. Your death in the desert changed everything.” He said.
How did he know that? Daenerys felt her unease rising.

“I have the green sight, Daenerys Targaryen. I have seen many visions of you from back when you went to the Dothraki, and many more since you died. I have only your best intentions in heart, my Queen. Please do not ask questions. I can only reveal what is safe to reveal. You must trust us in this, my Queen.

“The fates have focused heavily on you since the Hand did not die as prophesied. Jon Arryn’s death had been assured, yet somehow he did not die. Because of this, you are late.”

“How can the Hand not getting killed make me late? I told you my military campaign was lightning fast!”

“There was supposed to be no military campaign. You were to use guile as much as military tactics. Your army was not to come into being until you were almost at Westeros’ door.”

“How the fuck is that supposed to be possible, gods dammit?! You need armies to conquer.”

“Nevertheless. That was supposed to be your destiny.”

“Fuck you!” Daenerys spat, pinching the bridge of her nose. She felt her ire rising. This was insufferable. Another fucking prophecy!

“May I touch your forehead, my Queen?” the male teen asked in a soft, meek voice.

The non-sequitur had the Targaryen nonplussed.

“I fear nothing… touch my forehead if you must!” the Targaryen spoke in a short clip, her dander up with all the words meant to obfuscate and confuse. The tiny blond woman fumed as she waited for the teen’s touch. She watched his forefinger approach her forehead.

Her body jacked back as she stumbled into Drogon, off balance.

“Jojen! What did you do to her?” Meera Reed exclaimed.

“Nothing, Meera. She was merely not ready for the vision I placed in her mind.” Jojen replied to his sister.

“Daenerys Targaryen, you will take the Three-Eyed Raven to the place I have just shown you,” Jojen told the Targaryen.

Daenerys had pushed herself back off her dragon. It was true, she had been unprepared see such a clear picture in her mind. It was an aerial view from on high, like what she saw when she rode Drogon. She would be able to find this place easily if she but knew where to look.

“As you can see Daenerys, it is a place covered in perpetual snow. The hill on an escarpment is in the middle of wide, flat area, far to the north of the Wall. It is there that you will find the Tree of Life. This is where the Three-Eyed Raven must go. The continued safety of all the Earth of all the Earth will depend on it.” Jojen told the white-haired woman.

“How do I know I should heed your prophecy?” Daenerys Targaryen asked the Reed.

“You do not.” was the simple answer from Jojen.

Finally, an answer that Daenerys could live with.
“If you succeed in your mission, the Ice King will again be bound to the Earth. If not, the Ice King will be free to arise again in the future. You must succeed, Daenerys Targaryen. There you must confront the Ice King.”

Meera

Jojen’s sister was squirming inside. She hated that they were having to confuse their hoped-for future Queen. Jojen had foreseen her coming, and he had also foreseen her mettle. Now they had seen it in the woman for themselves. This was indeed the dragon reborn without any of the dross of old Valyria. She was definitely the future, if she could but survive her appointed tasks.

Jojen had made it clear to Meera that they could not tell Daenerys the full truth. It was her nature to rush to confront any task or perceived injustice. If she found out about the Ice King and her future battles with him she would be too tempted to fly out alone to confront and slay the demon. She was mighty, but not that mighty.

Jojen had foreseen that if she met the Ice Wight King at the Tree of Life in getting Bran Stark there, she would most likely survive. There the old gods and life force of the weirwoods were still strong. She would live, most assuredly. But in truth, she knew Jojen was still very afraid. The Ice King had formed some unholy union that left him shaken when he tried to explore those leaves on their weirwood tree. Whatever that evil was, it had lashed him severely the one time he had tried to get close to those fates.

He was setting the table so the Targaryen would feel that if she had survived this first confrontation she would have succeeded totally in her campaign against the Ice King. In seeming victory she would not attempt any future confrontation until the time was truly right.

If she survived the first battle she would have another later. It was in that battle that Jojen’s visions showed the Ice King could be killed. Only if the Dragon, Direwolf and Avatar from the far East worked together could the Ice King and his ally be defeated and killed. Only with their combined might could victory be achieved.

The wolf was untested. She was mighty and growing more powerful by the day, but she was unfocused and had not been shaped into a great weapon for good like the Dragon and the Avatar. Jojen and Meera saw the dragon’s destiny and had to hope that love was indeed as powerful as the scribes and poets said.

Jojen had conjectured that Jon Snow was the Avatar, but his vision was murky at best. Yet it had to be him. You needed old magic flowing in your veins to become what the old gods needed now.

“Daenerys Targaryen, I must ask your forgiveness for our obscure words, but you must trust us. Prophesies at all times are a dangerous thing. We would not burden you with truths you are not ready for or that might lead you down paths you are not meant to take,” Meera told the Targaryen in a voice that begged understanding.

She watched the white haired woman blow several strands of platinum blond hair out of her face. She pinched the bridge of her nose.

“How many times do I have to tell you that I make my own destiny? I have lost count of the graves and pyres I have left strewn across Essos for the false prophets I have met,” was Daenerys’ reply. She made direct eye contact with Meera, as if challenging her in mental combat.
Meera did not accept the challenge. “Do you think us false prophets?”

The Targaryen held the gaze for a few seconds more. “I know you are honest and sincere... and that you are not seeking my death. That much is plain.”

“We want only your safety and good fortune, my Queen. If you fail, all of Westeros will fail with you. Then Essos ... and then the rest of the Earth. You are the world’s hope. Others will aid you and one will love you, but you are the lynch pin that all resolves around.”

She saw the Targaryen stiffen when she had mentioned ‘one will love you’. She smiled secretly inside. If only the Queen knew what she and Jojen knew.

“Alright. I accept I am supposed to get this Three-Eyed Raven to his destination. I am going to assume this is not actually a bird or he would fly there himself. So who will I be taking to this ‘tree of life’?” Daenerys asked, the last with a note of contempt.

Daenerys appeared to truly hate prophecies.

“We cannot tell you that, my Queen.” Meera spoke softly, knowing the coming reaction.

“You’ve got to be fuckin’ kidding me! Who the FUCK am I taking?” the Targaryen screamed at Meera and Jojen.

Daenerys immediately calmed her temper. She took a deep breath. “Did it occur to you I would just want to know who I am helping?”

“We understand my Queen. But if you know who it is, then you will fail. The green dreams make that clear. We will have the Three-Eyed Raven ready, and you will pick us up.”

“Us?” Daenerys asked with a tired tone.

“We will be going too, my Queen.”

“Of course you will.”

Meera smiled softly at seeing the Queen sigh. The Queen was always going to do it. She just needed to work it out for herself with her questions and display of agitation.

“Fine. When will this all happen?”

“Soon.”

“Can we please get a little more specific. I have a kingdom to win and then rule! I may be a little busy when you say I will be needed.”

“You will come when you are summoned.” Meera saw the Targaryen stiffen again. The woman had a fierce pride, that much she could see. Pride that was, thankfully, tempered by an overarching sense of fairness and aching need for justice.

“I am not sure I like the sound of that.” the woman growled back at her.

“Dream will follow dream ... you will know from your dreams,” was Meera’s response.
She watched the Targaryen pinch her nose again. “Fine. Dream within a dream. Fine. I got it!”

Meera stifled a smile again as the Targaryen glared at her. The difference was important.

Daenerys

Daenerys was getting a headache. For a moment she darkly contemplated a preference for just killing the ‘prophets’ that had accosted her, but the thought quickly passed. Gods she hated all this ‘hocus pocus to make you lose focus’. She ground her teeth.

Sensing that she had gotten all the information she was going to receive, Daenerys got ready to depart.

Salutations were given, and Dany mounted her dragon.

“I will remember this day. You have made a friend of the House of Targaryen. Even if you felt compelled to keep things from me, I will overlook it - this time!” she spoke the last with a ring in her voice.

She saw the small party wince in some trepidation. All but Meera and Jojen, which vexed her for some reason. She had made her comment specifically for those two. They had merely smiled at her and waved. They had no fear of her! She fought the urge to pinch the bridge of her nose again.

She was soon up high in the sky again, winging to her staging area in Dorne. She’d had a most exciting day, for certain. She had bearded the great Eddard Stark. It was true that he had no fear of her, and she found she liked that. The man radiated a quiet confidence. Was it a confidence that hid arrogance? She would have to find out.

She had been given tasks that were not explained in any clear manner, just enough information to lay out a general direction but nothing more. She had been told she had a major role to play but not what it was. Daenerys sighed to herself.

The one sour note had been the news that one of her fellow heroes was going to fall in love with her. Great, the unwanted attentions from some other man she had no interest in. The gods really seemed to love pissing on her. Why blight her with so much male attention? The gods knew where her heart lay. But no, they kept thrusting men upon her. Just thinking on it made her angry.

She briefly wondered if she should heed the Reed children at all. They had been cryptic at best, and outright deceitful at worse. She mulled over everything she had been told for long moments.

Finally Daenerys snorted to herself. Who was she fooling? Of course she would do as asked. She had been given a challenge to do something that would save the world by people she trusted instinctively. Even their vague words could not change her gut instinct to trust those Reeds. She would not shy from any challenge; she was the equal to any task!

She had not even conquered Westeros yet and the demands laid before were already mounting. Daenerys certainly would not have to worry about growing fat on the throne as Robert Baratheon had.

Daenerys flew to the east and soon crossed over the Bite, then spent a half hour flying over the small whitecaps of the bay. She saw the high mountains and first ridges of the Vale coming into view. She flew on over shore and gaining altitude as the high mountains rose up to meet her.

Before long she was flying several thousands of feet up in the air. Her leather trousers and vest gave her all the warmth she needed against the winds with her hot temperament.

She flew a mountain pass at eight thousand feet and dropped into the valley between the two ridges of mighty crags. She flew over land that seemed as wild and untouched as when the Andals first landed in Westeros. The mighty mountains isolated this particular valley and rills running down from the mountains from the touch of man.

She saw massive elk with antlers ten feet across. Large sloths Tyrion had told her about standing on rear legs to eat leaves off of the trees. As she flew on she found a herd of small horses with thick, shaggy coats of hair. Fortunately, Drogon had already fed well the day before.

She shared the air with mighty eagles and condors, making wide circles on the high thermals. Below she spied a sabre cat on a flat shelf of rock, licking and grooming its fur. His fangs were long and impressive. She continued on, flying onto a high mountain pasture that only the goats with their split hooves could reach. This was a special mountain hideaway she had discovered on her first trip north.

She alight in the glade and slipped off Drogon. Her dragon curled up into a ball, his tail wrapped around his body as he settled and watched his master walk to the edge of the highland field. She stood there for a time, looking down at a small piece of her kingdom like a fledgling chick preparing to leave its nest.

Daenerys looked down at this small piece of her kingdom. Several clouds were rolling by a thousand feet below her. The sun shining down onto the top of the clouds making them shine so white they were almost blinding. Like a blanket for a god she thought.

Down below she saw the shadow of the clouds marching across a green valley. The color contrast was startling at the marge of sunlight and shadow. The trees and grass were so vibrant and bright green in the light and suddenly going dark and distant in the shadow of the clouds as they marched up the valley. It seemed like night had visited these swaths of ground in midday from this distance. The night quickly passing back into bright color and warmth as the clouds moved on taking their shadows with them. A blue and white river flowed through the vale, and she could see boulders in the river making the water boil bright as it protested on its march toward the sea.

This land was so beautiful, and it was hers.

Daenerys grew tired and needed a midday nap before she carried on South back to Dorne. She walked over to join Drogon, smiling at her son as he snored quietly. She slowly climbed up his tail and then his neck, sliding down into the small area between the dragon’s body and his curled tail. The Targaryen laid down, nestling into the side of her dragon, enjoying his intense heat that she alone could endure.

She was soon asleep.

Eddard

It had been one day since his confrontation with Daenerys Targaryen. Time and distance had solidified the opinions he had made on the field before Winterfell - the Targaryen was definitely not a threat to the realm, or his stewardship, or his family. Actually, the last was not necessarily true. He and Sansa of all people seemed to know what Bran meant in his mad ravings while unconscious.

The boy had become lucid upon waking. He had talked to Bran just an hour ago about his time spent in fevered dreams and wild ravings. His son had confessed that he could not remember but the vaguest, feathery details of his dreams. He had told his father he had fantastic dreams of flying, and being a raven. Foolishness really, Bran had told him. The event with the Targaryen fresh in his mind, Eddard was prompted to ask Bran what he meant when he had said the Dragon and Direwolf must lie together.

Bran had no recollection. He said that he could not remember anything except flying, really. Eddard knew his son was lying, but he did not press it further. He loved Bran, and now the boy had to deal with being a cripple. Eddard’s love and compassion outweighed all other concerns when it came to his family.

Eddard had his doubts about the prophecy of the dragon and direwolf. He knew of several ways to interpret that dream, but he was unsettled with the one that spoke to him. He shook his head, fighting his prejudices. Eddard had long suspected his daughter’s true leanings when it came to matters of the heart. Bran’s prophecy now brought this insight into sharp focus. It was time for him to come to terms and embrace his daughter as she truly was.

He had much to think on.

He knew he must get all of Westeros up to the wall to fight the threat that Jon was making more malicious and dire by the week. He was vague and evasive, not giving his father any specifics. Jon only told his father that he had learned to trust his instincts, and there was more to the world than one’s five senses.

To hear such words from a Stark and his son no less made him shake his head. Eddard only trusted what his senses and his intellect told him was true. Unfortunately, these were challenging times that were hinged heavily on magic. He could feel it.

Eddard sighed. He would have to do his part and leave the magic to others. His job was to get Westeros to march to the defense of the wall. A Wall that all south of the Stark wardenship believed to be a useless artifact of times long past. That all that lay beyond it was the threat of the wildlings, nothing else. Eddard’s bones told him the truth.

He heard the clash of steel on steel. He went to the window of the room and looked down into the practice yard, where Robb was barely holding his own. He wondered how much longer he could hold a draw. His days of victory over Arya, his sister, had passed.

Arya

Arya was filled with fire today. Seeing the mighty Targaryen warrior on the back of the black dragon had told her that she could indeed be a warrior too.

Her practice sword was a thing alive in her hands. Her blows came fast and furious. Robb was using his height and superior strength to keep his sister at bay, but barely. He had tried several times to take the initiative and move to the offense. Each time he had had to quickly switch back to defense when his little sister used speed and skill to thwart his attack. His blunted attacks were rounded back on him with her savage counterattacks.

They battled back and forth with Robb tiring as Arya continued her attacks, her blows continually raining.

“Robb, I need you,” Rodrik Cassel called out from the side of the practice area. Arya and Robb lowered their swords, both sweating profusely.

Robb came up to Arya and looked down at her with his serious Tully eyes. A small smile came across his face and he ruffled her hair like Jon used to do. Then he left, going to Rodrik. They both knew why he had been called.

Arya got out her bow and shot arrows for a while, always hitting the sweet spots on the dummy’s head. She loved using her weapons.

Hope now beat hard in the chest of the little wolf. Nymeria was yipping and jumping around, feeling the excitement of her Stark master. The scent of the strange black beast still hung in the air, making all the direwolves excited while also filling them with nervous energy.

Arya finished her weapons training for the day. Her mother had come down to berate her yet again, but her father had cut her off more forcefully than she had ever heard. He told her to leave Arya be. She was her own person, and she had a right to fulfill her own destiny. Her mother’s mouth had fallen open at that.

Arya’s mouth had fallen open too. Her father had just unequivocally supported her desires. Hadn’t he? She got a pear and a big thigh bone for Nymeria.

She smiled seeing her wolf drooling, staring at the bone. She threw the bone across the yard with her wolf chasing it down and happily snatching it up, then bounding back to lie at Arya’s feet. Human and wolf enjoying their repast.

Arya bent down to scratch Nymeria’s ear. The wolf leaned into the hand scratching her ear, delighted. The wolf woofed as it chomped on its treat.

She pondered the great times she was in. How do I get South? How do you kiss a woman who is so much taller than you?

Chapter 09

Pride of Dorne

Eight Months Ago

Myrcella / Arianne / Myrcella / Arianne / Myrcella

Myrcella

Myrcella was walking around in her bedroom tracing her finger over the various furniture items and over knick-knacks on her dresser. She picked up the bracelet from Arianne and smiled turning it over and thinking of her sweet mentor. She was so lovely with her voluptuous body. Myrcella was wearing a nearly transparent slip that clearly showed her full B cup tits swaying and her nipples that had been semi-erect were now rock hard thinking back to two nights ago with her face buried in Arianne’s cunt and sucking her off as Arianne wailed and convulsed so hard it made the Baratheon shiver remembering her sweet lover’s throes of the orgasms Myrcella gifted her teacher with.

She put down the bracelet and moved her hand over to the hair combs her sand snakes had given her, both made of pure ivory beset with emeralds to set off her blond hair and sparkling green eyes. Dorea and Loreza Sand had been so shy when giving them to her, declaring their love for her yet again. They would often compete for Myrcella, but many times they would come to the princess together.

It was these times that Myrcella truly treasured. She hated it that the three women she loved spent so much time competing for her love when she had enough to go around. She had slowly stripped her sand snakes after putting their sweet gifts down. She had laid them out on her bed and slowly sucked them off in turn as they kissed ravenously and worked their twin’s swollen breasts. The twins’ hands snaked down to the others pussy swirling around rigid clits. As the twins masturbated their clits, Myrcella rammed her tongue deep into their tight hot pussies. They loved to help Myrcella fuck their sister as the Baratheon sucked each sister off back and forth. The twins always cummed so hard for Myrcella. She sucked each off three times before she relented. Sucking the sisters off in turn let the other recover her strength and let their clits settle down.

Myrcella was ravenous in that way.

The twin sisters had rolled her over and fucked her deep into the night. Myrcella remembered laying there in heaven as two mouths worked her body with expert skills. She had run her hand over her face feeling how wet it was with the sisters’ cum.

Myrcella put the combs down, and went over to her bed and sat on the edge. She could feel it all slipping away and she was very upset. This was not going to be allowed. She thought back to the beginning. She had been enamored with Arianne from the start when she arrived in Dorne.

The woman was so gentle and understanding with Myrcella. She had awakened in Myrcella a desire to be great, filling her with pride for her native intelligence and her budding body. Myrcella had grown to only being two inches shorter than Arianne’s 5’8”.

She adored the woman’s voluptuous body. As Myrcella matured she had started to dream of that body at night. She had dreamed of other bodies as well, but it was Arianne’s that captivated her. it was Arainne’s body she saw when she masturbated to multiple orgasms most nights. She loved to feel Arianne’s heavy breast pressed into her arm when Arianne pointed out something in a book, or how the woman played with her hair – it was intoxicating. Two years ago when she was had just turned sixteen years old she was already totally in love with the woman.

She knew that her teacher could never return her feelings. She was pure woman, able to have anyone she wanted. She had two other suitors who were seeking her attentions during her infatuation, but she was unsure how to respond. Her focus was on her teacher. How she longed to give this woman her maidenhead.

More wasted months passed until one night they were sitting on the edge of Arianne’s large, inviting bed discussing the ethics of governing. Myrcella knew she was mooning again for her beautiful mentor. She had been staring deep into Arianne's large, midnight eyes, and then suddenly they were kissing. Their lips first met sweetly, melding and nipping before Arianne’s tongue sought entrance into Myrcella’s mouth. Myrcella freely gave it. She had groaned so hard feeling their tongues twine and dance in pure love.

Arianne’s hands stroked and massaged the Baratheon’s body stoking the fire deep in Myrcella’s belly. Myrcella mewed as Arianne divested Myrcella of her clothes with nimble fingers undoing buttons, hocks and eyelets. As flesh was exposed Arianne kissed, nibbled and licked the pale perfect skin that was being lazily revealed. Arianne pulled Myrcella's dress down exposing her collarbones, shoulders and throat.

The Martell licked and kissed the exposed skin nipping the pale skin as she kissed Myrcella's throat and along the teenager’s collarbones to her shoulders and then nipping the perfect shoulders making Myrcella groan deep in her chest. Arianne kissed back up Myrcella’s throat kissing the pulsing artery in her student’s throat before mating lips and spearing her tongue down Myrcella’s throat. Myrcella chuffed into her teacher’s mouth as her body convulsed and eyes rolled back into her skull and spasm hard.

While their tongues rolled wetly in Myrcella’s mouth, Arianne gently pulled down the dress of her sweet student. The adult jerked on the fabric a last time and her student’s high firm breast were jerked out of the fabric and jiggled setting so beautiful on Myrcella’s porcelain skin.

Arianne eyed the perfect doves with ravenous fuck hunger. Her hands came up to cup and swirl her palms on rigid nipples making her student gasp in pleasure. Arianne kissed Myrcella deeply again. Her student writhed into her body whimpering in raw need. Arianne broke their heated kiss and Myrcella moaned hard seeing spit roped between her lips and Arianne’s. Arianne gave her a brilliant smile. Arianne then kissed down Myrcella’s upper chest to her little doves. The Martell cupped and gently massaged the firm titties and bent her head in to suck on Myrcella’s nipples.

"Unngghhh . . . unnnunnnn!" Myrcella grunted, mildly delirious, her body completely in Arianne’s control. Myrcella writhed on the bed with fire in her veins. Arianne got up in front of Myrcella and had her student lift her ass and the woman pulled the teenager’s dress off revealing perfection. Arianne quickly pulled her own dress down and off as her student’s eyes bulged in raw hunger for the sweet voluptuous body now exposed to her.

Arianne pushed her student’s body back down onto the bed. Myrcella looked up at her lover with raw want and the need to be made a woman. Arianne crawled up onto the bed with her student. Arianne pulled Myrcella to her and they entwined arms and legs. They kissed heatedly tongues flowing deep from mouth to mouth. Myrcella felt her body on fire.

She gagged feeling her sensitive nipples jammed into the full bosom of her teacher. Arianne’s full tits were smashed and smothered over her small doves. They would kiss sweetly nibbling and pulling on each other lips before again locking lips and surging tongues deep into each others mouths.

Myrcella had groaned gutturally deep in her chest feeling her cunt settle on Arianne’s hip and upper thigh. She humped and swept her pussy on the smooth flesh flexing her hips to drive her aching snatch up and down and up Arianne’s body. Soon an up rush of soul searing ecstasy exploded out her couchie and slammed her body over and over with jackknifes of soul crushing bliss.

Arianne had held and cooed to her while Myrcella recovered from her first orgasm with Arianne. They kissed deeply in their expressed new love. Next they had tribbed face-to-face. Myrcella had been so ecstatic feeling her teacher come so hard beneath her followed by her own body hurtling into orgasmic bliss.

Then her teacher was kissing and nipping down her belly, making Myrcella whoop when she felt Arianne’s tongue drilling her belly button. Arianne enjoyed exploring with wet licks and kisses the flat expanse of Myrcella’s firm flat stomach.

Then Myrcella had been rocked when Arianne settled between her legs and lowered her face to her student’s trembling pussy. Myrcella cried out in ecstasy when the Martell sucked her clit between her lips and suckled on the rock hard clit her tongue polishing the hard nubbin. Gods Myrcella thought as she felt her womb ripping out her cunt the first time she cummed in Arianne’s mouth. The spasms had been so fucking strong and Earth shattering. Her body had flipped and jackknifed violently as her wails echoed off the walls over and over.

That night was a magical haze. She still wept even now with how gentle and sweet Arianne was in taking her virginity. She had asked twice if Myrcella was sure and she had propped herself up on one elbow her right hand gripping Arianne’s wrist and pulled Arianne’s middle finger swirling in her pussy up against her hymen.

Her head flopped back down on the pillow when Arianne sucked her clit between her lips and sucked it and then jammed her hand forward making her a woman. She had cried out in pain but those cries soon turned to guttural moans of ecstasy and then she was coming again so hard. The pleasure was nearly blinding. She had thought she was in love before but knew she was falling more in love with Arianne somehow every day.

She had also been wooed by the two youngest sand snake twins. Dorea and Loreza were much more forward and aggressive than sweet Arianne. They were not fazed that she had given her virginity to Arianne already. They did not say it but Myrcella understood instinctively that they loved her so much they would take her any way they could.

She had gone to the room the twins shared. The room smelled of pussy. All knew they were lovers and no one cared. They slept in the same bed. They were good to each other, and freely sought out other conquests that were often shared between them. It seemed half of the castle’s young maidens were in their bed at one time or another. Myrcella had dropped her slip before them.

She stood tall and proud before them totally naked her pussy wet and her nipples rock hard. The sand snakes had wasted no time devouring her young tight sweet body. They had made her scream over and over as they besotted themselves on her young nubile body. She felt like a fish out of water she flopped across their bed so hard.

She smiled remembering how she had shown the twins how well she had learned from Arianne her teacher. She sucked, finger fucked and tribbed the twins to soul crushing screaming orgasms. She drank their sweet cum greedily.

At first she had been like a bee drunk on pollen going from flower to flower. She was drinking deep from each woman every night. Her moth greedily sucked down their hot cum every night. It was wonderful until they started to compete for her affections. Then the biting remarks started and the sullen looks. It tore at her. She was not happy with their spiteful remarks against each other.

She had enough love her all three.

She was free of any of their silly jealousies. She was not even upset when at first the three women were off fucking other lovers. She had a plan and was patient. Arianne even still fucked a few men which she couldn’t understand, being only attracted to women. Arianne was bisexual and Myrcella accepted that. That for Arianne that was her nature. The taking and receiving of pleasure was something that the gods gave us and Myrcella loved taking it.

But over the last year Myrcella smiled knowing that her loves gradually abandoned fucking other cunts and bastards and gave themselves only to Myrcella or each other. She had enough love to give to them. They were clearly falling deeply in love with her as she had planned. She needed their love, all of their love.

She learned all the things that made them weak-kneed. She shamelessly worked to make her three women love her and each other only. She was easy. It was the each other part that was proving difficult. She knew what the problem was. They were each terrified they would not be the one selected. They feared in the end she would choose only one to be her consort. She had tried subtly to let them know she was ready to bring them all into her bed permanently. Their insecurities prevented the messages from being received.

The sisters Myrcella knew would be much easier. They had been free lovers before her and she only had to get them together and dispel this silly rancor between them over her. It was Arianne that would prove the most difficult. For some reason she considered herself inferior to her and her sand snakes. Arianne feared she was too old and to matronly. Her body was perfect, damnit!

She knew her plan would work. Four months ago they had gone to the royal retreat in Godsgrace to celebrate the Full Moon Festival, celebrated on the first full moon of Spring. They had taken the royal retreat over since no one else from the high royal family had decided to go this year.

She had gotten them drunk enough to lower their inhibitions. By the evening of their first day there all her paramours were tipsy and feeling very good, flirting shamelessly with her. She had coyly made observations on how beautiful each of her lovers were. They were soon eyeing and pawing each other, just like she had planned.

In the bedroom she dropped her slip to the floor and imperiously commanded them. “Fuck me!”

They fell on her like a famished pride of lions. They were all over her sucking on her pussy and pumping her breasts as they sucked on her nipples like starving babes. The kisses they gave her were scorching. Their tongues so hot as they danced with hers. They dined on her pussy with famished glee. She was drained by her lovers. She drank water freely and sucked on sweet oranges and cherries to refresh herself and again offered her body to her lovers.

They fell on her yet again and in a frenzy fucked and devoured her to multiple orgasms of screaming ecstasy.

She was exhausted now and soaked in sweat and cum her hair plastered all over her face, shoulders and back. She scooted back to the headboard and pushed the hair out of her face. Her three sluts were on their knees staring at her. Their eyes full of hot hunger. She was smiling seeing them awaiting her directives. She had them in the palm of her hand.

“I’m exhausted … Sand Snakes!” she spoke in the regal tone that Arianne had drilled into her. She smiled seeing the martial twins snap to attention.

She pointed her royal finger to Arianne “Your Aunt … fuck her and fuck her—I want her worn out! … I want her screaming and cumming until you exhaust her like you did me!

Arianne turned to look at the sisters with hot pulsing eyes. “I love you my two nieces … I would be hap—” was all she was able to get out before the sand snakes slammed her back onto the bed and they now devoured their second woman this night. They went insane on her voluptuous body. They fucked Arianne within an inch of her life.

Myrcella had been plying the teens for the last few months about how beautiful their Aunt was. They would listen to Myrcella tell them the intimate details of her fucking Arianne.

They made long love to Arianne’s breast loving her full D cups. They would squeal burying their faces between her ample mounds and smother themselves in her breast they pushed into and over their faces.

Myrcella could see their tongues wetly wrestling deep in Arianne’s mouth as her mentor’s eyes rolled back and her body convulsed.

They sucked her pussy to ruin over the next hour plus. They reveled with each of her orgasms that filled their mouths to overflowing with hot divine cum. They were intoxicated with Arianne. They fucked Arianne to the point of a near comatose state.

Myrcella moved in and cradled her mentor as she half rolled onto Myrcella. Myrcella put a folded pillow behind her head as the twins were again up on their knees and looking to her for guidance. They were so beautiful covered in sweat and cum. Their dark midnight hair plastered all over their lean bodies. Arianne had fallen asleep after throwing her leg over Myrcella’s thighs. She was already snoring softly on Myrcella’s breast.

“Fuck each other until your cunts are worn out … I want to hear it.” she told her twin lovers.

They went to their task with a vengeance. Myrcella’s ears rung with the loud screams and the bed quaked with the sand snake’s bodies jackknifing violently all over the large royal bed. It took the seventeen year olds well over and hour to fuck themselves to utter exhaustion.

When they had exhausted themselves, they had weakly, on shaky limbs crawled up the bed to come up to her and Arianne. Dorea spooned up against Arianne’s back and looped an arm around her body and clutched a heavy breast possessively. Loreza came up to Myrcella and saddled in burying her face in the crook of Myrcella’s neck and murmured she loved her and fell asleep.

Myrcella was in heaven. This was what she wanted. No needed. She would have all three!
For the next three days and nights they had fucked and loved like a pride of fierce lionesses. Myrcella had been in heaven. That was when she came up with name of her new family unit “The Pride of Dorne”. She would be able to move mountains with these women at her side. They had loved and fucked without inhibitions. There was no jealousy and only pure love.

Myrcella had been ecstatic. She had made them hers! Totally.

The only problem was that it had not lasted. When they came back to Sunspear, it had day by day fallen away. Her three lovers were again competing and vying for her affections when she had plenty to give. She was a busy bee going from bed to bed fucking the sisters and their Aunt to exhaustion. She would often leave one bed soaked in sweat and cum and go to the next lover and they would fall on her in ravenous hunger not caring she was fresh from a “rival’s” bed.

They all wanted her desperately. She wanted and needed all of them.

She had slowly developed a plan and today it was going to come to fruition. She was tired of all this rancor when they had already proven how compatible they truly were when they worked and lived as a pride and not individuals.

Today the Pride of Dorne would come into existence. She would birth it with her love and dedication.

The letters she had sent out would see to that.

Arianne

Arianne read again the letter in Myrcella’s beautiful script. She felt so nervous. It was clear that Myrcella was going to force a decision. She did not want to be competitive with her nieces, she was just so terrified that Myrcella would choose one or both of the sand snakes and leave her alone in the cold. She would die. Arianne would simply die.

She felt old compared to the twins. At twenty-five Arianne felt like she was like an old maid compared to her nieces and Myrcella. Their bodies were so slender and toned, while she was voluptuous with sensuous curves. Myrcella was slender herself and she just knew Myrcella would tire of her body type and seek the love of her mirror image.

She wrung her hands and looked at the binding gift she had had made for Myrcella. It was a choker with an oval pendant done in pure silver. She had commissioned a raised lioness in a fierce pose of restrained fury. It was beautiful and was a perfect representation of how she saw her prized pupil.

The expensive gift was for the pupil who had become her lover and the reason for her existence.

It was not supposed to have come to that. She had taken the then early teenager under her wing. Arianne had grand plans for the girl. In Dorne she would be second to the royal throne. Joffrey was a royal shit and Arianne was beyond sure that the little wimpy asshole would get his ass killed sooner or later - probably sooner. A lot sooner.

She wanted Myrcella ready to ascend the throne when the time came.

She had started to train the youth all she knew of politics and the Game of Thrones. She had found her to be the perfect student. Myrcella soaked up everything she was taught and surprised the teacher with probing, deeply thought out questions. She took off on tangents that were startling and once heard, Arianne had wondered how Myrcella’s insight was not the normal thought.

But Myrcella was so much more than that. No matter how much she learned about the world behind the thrones and how to move in that world, she remained the even keeled girl she had been when she first arrived. She wanted to be a force in the world; a force for good only. Power in and of itself, meant nothing to Myrcella. It would never would.

Arianne had felt herself become jaded so quickly as she learned how to wield power. She learned the power of her body over women and especially men. Men were like potter’s clay: easily shaped. She fucked them to wield power through them. Women she fucked for pure enjoyment and the loving sex she craved.

Arianne slowly came to know that Myrcella was shaping her every bit as much as she was shaping the girl.

Arianne knew the girl had fallen in love with her. At first Arianne had tried to resist the siren call of the girl’s bright green eyes, even when she felt herself falling into them. She could not stop her body stroking and pressing into the teenager’s body.

Then one day she was looking deep into those mesmerizing pools of jade green, then she had the intoxicating sprite in her arms and was kissing her deeply, stroking the sweet girl. The girl had melted into her with soft whimpers that turned to groans of raw, wanton need.

She still could only hazily remember her taking Myrcella’s clothes off in seductive dance. Arianne disrobed the teen to expose her body to the teacher. She had reveled in exposing the teen’s perfect porcelain flesh. She had kissed the teen so deeply and loved her upper body and chest. She could still feel the teen’s nipples in her mouth as she had thirstily sucked on the teens nipples in turn.

She had then stripped for her student turned lover. Her cunt had gone instantly soaking wet seeing the want and need for her body in Myrcella’s eyes. In a wild rush they were on her bed rolling around on her bed with arms wrapped around each other and their legs interlocked. Their tongues were deep in each others mouths hungrily exploring.

The girl humped her hip hard with strong instinctive flexes of her slender hips. The teen swept her wet cunt in desperate humping jerks soaking the older woman’s hip and groin in hot cunt juice. Myrcella had cummed so hard thrashing wildly into the woman her screams swallowed by Arianne’s mouth glued to her sweet lips.

The teen had somehow settled between her legs kissing her with wild passion. The girl instinctively sweeping her cunt up and down Arianne’s swollen cunt dragging her clit up and down the woman’s groove. Their couchies pumping out lubricating love juice. Arianne’s mind shocked with pure pleasure when their clits jammed into and rocked over its mate. Their swollen cum slicked inner labia lips dragged and rolled by their grinding sweeping cunts.

They humped wildly with the teen now lifting her pelvis on the back of her stroke and ramming down and forward instinctively. Arianne’s legs came up to clasp the teen’s hips and she surrendered her body, mind, love and soul to the girl.

She gripped the girl’s shoulders as her head jacked back and she wailed her ecstasy.

“Aaaarruuunggggg! Mnnnggggggggggg! Aaaauuuuuggggggggg!” the adult screamed in raw shattering pleasure. Then Myrcella was screaming with her next orgasm. Their cunts wildly jamming and sweeping up and down their mate. Their pussies flooding each other with hot slimy cum. "AUUNNGOWWNNGGNNGGGIIIEEEEEE!" Myrcella cried out, her body shuddering in killing spasms of rapture.

They had kissed sweet kisses as they gasped and shuddered through strong aftershocks. Arianne stared hard and deep into to twin pools of jade love.
She rolled the teen over and slide down between her legs and looked at paradise. She devoured the teen into another screaming flipping orgasm. Arianne had kissed and licked the girl’s jerking vulva and quivering thighs. She waited for her lover to calm down.

Arianne then slowly inserted her middle finger into the hot burbling cauldron. Myrcella’s cunt was broiling and so fucking tight and wet. Arianne felt her fingertip brush the thin membrane of the girl’s hymen. She had deflowered many an innocent maid and thought of it as only a conquest. Now she was shaking more than Myrcella. She looked up at Myrcella’s sweet and not so innocent face.

“Are you sure Myrcella … this is a most precious gift … I-I-I don’t know if am worthy …” the teen had given her such a radiant smile. She still hesitated and then the teen was gripping her wrist and pulling her finger forward as her cunt clenched on the digit. “Take my virginity Arianne … make me a woman … make me your mate …” the teen had spoken softly.

Arianne had rammed her finger through the membrane making the girl a woman.

The girl had cried out in pain but those moans soon turned into guttural groans of raw wanton pleasure. Arianne pumped the teen’s sodden trim and wormed a second finger into the teen’s twat stretching it out tight. The teen’s hot folds clenched in hard spasms on Arianne’s now deep plunging fingers. Arianne pumped in hard and deep with her long slender fingers as she sucked in the girl’s clit and suckled it wetly between her thick sensual lips.

The girl had gripped her shoulders with clawed fingers and her head ripped back. "OOWWWGGGGGGGGG! Aunngghh! Arruunngggggggggg!" Myrcella screamed while her body convulsed hard as fierce shocks of cumming gripped her entire body. "Annggmmnniiiiieeee! Oh gods . . . ohhhhhhh gods ungghhhiiieeee!" Myrcella wailed as her eyes rolled back in her head and spasm hotly. Myrcella’s hips bucked her swollen muff up into the mouth of the Martell that had expertly sucked her off and now prolonged the orgasm of the teen. Arianne moaned into the pussy she had deflowered feeling sharp contractions on her deep pumping fingers. Myrcella’s stomach clenching up hard showing muscles as gut wrenching spasms of blistering bliss ripped out the teen’s convulsing cunt.

Myrcella had cried softly when Arianne enfolded the new borne woman gently in her arms. Their limbs entwined as arms wrapped around the torsos of the new lovers and lower legs interlocked at their ankles. Sweet kisses shared as tongues danced in languid love between their mated lips.

Arianne became so hooked on Myrcella. She had to have her in her life or she would die. She had not been able to say anything to the teen when she immediately succumbed to the twin sand snakes, she had been an adventurous lass herself when she had lost her maiden head.

She was not jealous of her nieces, not really. She was just so fearful of losing Myrcella’s love to the sand snakes. She was sure she could not compete with their youth and fierce natures. Myrcella was attracted to their fiery martial spirit and power - two things she did not have. Arianne’s passions were for the more subdued and Machiavellian Game of Thrones.

She stood up, suddenly gripping her choker, and marched out her room and walked quickly to Myrcella’s chamber. Despite her insecurities Arianne had to make her play for her love’s affections. She knocked on the closed door, her heart raced hearing the voice of the woman she loved more than life itself.

“Come in.” Myrcella softly called to her lover.

Arianne opened the door and entered. She stopped dead in her steps. Myrcella was a goddess, plain and simple. She was standing near her bed with only a sheer slip on, her full B cup breast thrust out the thin material, her rock hard nipples tenting it. Arianne’s eyes traveled down her luscious form. She could see through the sheer fabric. She moaned, seeing the flat stomach and that Myrcella’s pussy was swollen and wet. She could smell the girl’s musk thick in the room. “Mmmnggggggg!” Arianne groaned deep in her chest smelling Myrcella’s wet cunt. Arianne stared at Myrcella with her large eyes. Her pupils were fully blown with lust.

“What do you have in your hand Arianne? Is that for me?” Myrcella asked coyly in a soft, seductive voice.

Arianne held up her choker and stared at it, lost for a moment - her mind overwhelmed with lust. She moved over to her lover. Arianne then thrust her gift out on a shaky arm.

“Will you marry me?”

“Yes!” was the loving firm reply.

Arianne’s heart swelled and beat so fast. She turned her head hearing frantic steps beating down the hall towards Myrcella’s half closed door.

Dorea slammed into the door breathing heavily and rebounded off the door and fell flat on her ass. Gasping she held up a gold ring encrusted with emeralds. “Will you marry me?” she cried out.

“Yes!” was the loving reply.

More steps were heard and Loreza came bursting through the doorway and tripped over Dorea’s leg. Arms wind milling Loreza fell to her knees and slide across the marble floor her knees sliding until they hit the rug by the bed. Breathing hard she held up a pure silver bracelet crusted in emeralds, rubies and sapphires forming a lioness. “Marry me!” she cried out desperately seeing she was third and last.

“Yes!” was the calm reply.

Myrcella

Myrcella looked at the three women all professing their love to her. She now had them where she wanted them and it was now time to bend them fully and forever to her will.

“I love all three of you with all my heart, Arianne, Dorea and Loreza. I worship the very air you three breathe. I love all of you equally. With all my heart. I know you love me so in return.”

Myrcella moved her head making sure she made direct eye contact with each woman. She enthralled the three women to her soul.

Myrcella moved over slightly to get in front of Arianne. She took the neck choker out of Arianne’s trembling fingers. She spied the fierce lioness on the oval of pure silver. Suddenly, Myrcella knew the sigil of her new house. She bent in tilting her head up and kissed Arianne gently on the lips as she smiled feeling the woman tremble sweetly for her. Her eyes dark pools of midnight with blown pupils dilated with love and lust.

Myrcella had seen her nostrils flare when she smelled the teen’s excited cunt. The way she looked at the cum trickling down her legs.

Myrcella turned around and lifted her hair up with one hand and looked back at Arianne. “Put your choker around my throat and mark me as your wife for eternity.” Myrcella spoke softly looking deep into her wife’s eyes.

Myrcella smiled looking at her wife who with shaky fingers put her choker around Myrcella’s neck and lock the clasp. Myrcella turned and kissed her wife sweetly again.

Myrcella moved over and bent down to take the sliver bracelet encrusted with gems in the form of a lioness swiping at its prey from Loreza. She turned it over looking at the exquisite workmanship on the pure silver. She handed the bracelet back to Loreza and put her left arm down.

“Put your bracelet on my wrist and mark me as your wife for eternity.” Myrcella spoke softly looking deep into her wife’s eyes. Myrcella watched with hot pulsing eyes and trembling pussy as Loreza with shaky fingers slide the bracelet on Myrella’s slender lower arm and settled it on Myrcella’s wrist. Myrcella bent down and kissed Loreza on the lips sweetly and smiled at her future wife as the sand snake chased Myrcella’s lips mewling.

Finally, she walked over to Dorea. Her sand snake held up her wedding ring. Myrcella took and looked at the exquisite workmanship on the pure gold band encrusted in precious emeralds. She handed the ring back to her wife.

“Put your ring upon my ring finger and mark me as your wife for eternity.” Myrcella spoke softly looking deep into her wife’s eyes. Dorea did as commanded. Myrcella shivered feeling all three markers on her body now and forever. She bent at the waist to kiss the sand snake who moaned loudly and so sweetly. Myrcella walked back to the side of the room so she could stand facing her future wives.

She had them where she wanted them. Now it was time to make them forever hers.

“I am very pleased with your declarations of love and wedding signets. I accept them all.” She saw Arianne glance at the two twins while Loreza looked at Arianne and then Myrcella with a small smile forming. Myrcella gave her a loving smile. Her sand snake had figured it out.

“I love all three of you equally. Arianne, you are my sweet, sly, voluptuous and oh so intelligent and cunning mentor and wife.

“My sweet sand snakes, Loreza and Dorea, are my fierce protectors and fiery spirits that fire my soul. All of you are my wives. I have made it clear I thought, that I love all of you and want all three of you.

“We proved our love and compatibility for each other at the festival of the full moon at Godsgrace. Away from the world and its care and structures we loved completely. We gave of ourselves to each other freely. We took what was ours. What is that? It is each other. We belong one to the other.”

“I can only have you all or none of you. That is how it must be. If you don’t pledge yourselves to me and each other here in this room this day, then on the morning tide I am on a ship headed for King’s Landing never to turn.”

Dorea had been levering herself up and thumped back down on her ass. She suddenly looked very fearful. Loreza had stood up and squared her shoulders and looked at Myrcella with her body at rigid martial attention and a feral look in her eyes.

“I am not being cruel … I just can’t have any one, or even two of you … I must have all three!” Myrcella declared looking at each of her loves.

Loreza had pulled her sister up and hugged her tight and whispered in her ear in a loud stage voice “I love you Dorea with all my heart ….” She turned to look at her aunt “I love you Arianne with all my heart.” She turned again to face Myrcella. "I love Myrcella with all my heart! I have a heart big enough to love you all!” the sand snake declared in a soft but resolute voice.

Dorea the more quiet twin said softly “I pledge myself totally to all three: Myrcella, Arianne and Loreza. I pledge my heart to you all.”

All three teens turned to look at Arianne.

Arianne

The adult looked at the three teens shaking hard now. She wanted so much to believe in Myrcella and her pride. She wanted desperately to believe that the three teens could love her as completely as she already loved them.

She was usually so confident but she felt so old compared to the three teenagers. She was only seven years older than them but it felt like a full generation to her. Arianne felt like she was the past when she thought of the three teens before her. Arianne was a strong proud woman but she felt like a shy maid under the intense gaze of her nieces and student turned lover. She so desperately wanted them all. She longed to take them in turn in her arms and suck them off like she had in Godsgrace. She had been in heaven feeling each of their young juicy teenage cunts rupture and gush hot divine nectar into her greedy gulping mouth as she sucked them off in turn. She had been drunk on their sweet love juices.

How could she compete against the sand snakes’ youth and vigor, Arianne wondered with self-doubt. Arianne was proud of her own body. She knew she was beautiful except when she compared herself to the three persons she loved most. She felt old and matronly with her hourglass hips and bulging breasts.

The teens looked so lithesome and nubile to the twenty five year old woman.

She was so lost in her doubts that she did not even see the taller sand sank, Dorea, move behind her as she stood swaying letting her doubts continue to chip away at her confidence.

“Oohhhhhhh!” Arianne gasped feeling Dorea brush her hair aside off her neck and down her back. “Hhhuungggg!” Arianne choked feeling Dorea lips melding to her neck. Her niece licked and gently nibbled on the tender throat flesh as she deftly unhooked the buttons on her aunt’s dress.

With love drunk eyes, Arianne watched her other niece excitedly ripping her own clothes off. Pieces flew all over the room. Myrcella pulled her slip over her head her long hair cascading down in beautiful waves. They turned to each other and pulled each other tight and kissed ravenously.

Arianne watched with love drunk eyes as the Sand snake and scion of House Baratheon hooked their legs and arms pulled bodies tight to each other. They ground swollen juicy pussies up and down on hips and thighs. Their cries of raw pleasure swallowed by each others mouths. Their small high firm breast mashed flat by their pulled tight bodies.

Dorea licked the bruised flesh with her wet tongue. She whispered fiercely to Arianne. “I love you so much auntie … I am going to fuck you so good Arianne … you’re mine now” she murmured before nibbling on Arianne’s ear and suddenly jerking her dress down to her breast and with two more fabric tearing down jerks Arianne’s heavy D cup tits spilled free.

Myrcella and Loreza were in front of her now somehow. She watched with love drunk eyes as the women cupped her heavy tits. They hefted Arianne’s heavy breast up and squeezed the heavy breasts with their milking fingers. The teens rolled the heavy breast in their hands their squeezing fingers sinking deep into firm pale flesh.

The teens leaned in and down so they could swallow Arianne’s turgid nipples with slow loving sucks siphoning in the rigid long thick nipples deep into greedy teenage mouths. Myrcella and Loreza fiercely sucked on Arianne’s engorged nipples. Their cheeks hollowed out with their deep sucks. Arianne’s felt like her body was on fire. She was panting and chuffing feeling hot fire fill her swelling breast. Her throat and upper chest flushed red with hot blood and lust.

Her hair was fisted and her head jammed over towards the niece behind her. Dorea kissed her with fiery passion. Dorea’s tongue slipped between Arianne’s lips swiping her teeth. The hot tongue demanded entrance to Arianne’s mouth. It was freely given. Dorea’s tongue surged in with the granted access wetly exploring her aunt’s offered mouth. Dorea’s tongue quickly found its mate deep in Arianne’s mouth. There they danced and twined in slippery love. Arianne’s eyes rolled back in her head rolling and spasm with short jerks.

Arianne felt her dress ripped down her body. The fabric bunching on her hips for a second before the fabric fell off her hips and pool around her feet. A hot mouth latched onto her wet swollen pussy. Arianne groaned into the mouth devouring hers feeling a wet, slippery tongue lick her slit and over her clit up and down. Her tits were mashed together and smothered a face that was kissing her chest and the inside curves of her hot beasts. The mouth gave her breast licks and leaving red love bites on her creamy full rounded gourd tits.

Dorea broke their kiss for air. Arianne in a drunken stupor of lust looked down. She saw Myrcella looking up at her as her head pumped in and out her mouth attached to her aching nipple like a starving newborn babe. The teen sucked hard on the teat stuffed in her mouth. Myrcella’s hands milked pure pleasure into Arianne’s swollen tits. She could see Loreza’s head lapping furiously further below. The black hair so enchanting with the sand snakes furious motions licking her dripping snatch.

The sand snake’s tongue raked up and down Arianne’s slippery groove and lashed her rigid clit. Then the sand snake swallowed Arianne’s engorged clit and tongue lashed the shiny nubbin while she fiercely sucked the stiff clit with short hot sucks.

It was too much. "Auuoowwnngggg! Unngghiieeeeee!" Arianne suddenly howled. A torment of fierce ecstasy ripped its way up out of her throat, and, wincing visibly, her body convulsed jamming her cunt up into Loreza’s mouth and her back wallowing all over Dorea’s torso. "Unngghmmniieee!" Arianne squealed, squirming, her thighs jerking, her strong legs clamping tight on Loreza’s face spasmodically jerking in squeezing her future wife’s face hard soaking it with her gushing cum.

"Anngggyiiiee! Anngggyiiiee!" the adult Martell wailed as Arianne’s body snapped and jackknifed back into Dorea’s loving embrace. Myrcella had both hands on Arianne left breast jamming her teat nearly down the teen’s throat. The teen voraciously sucked on the rock hard teat. Arianne’s elbows hammered into Dorea’s body as Arianne’s body spasmed and whiplashed back into the sand snake. Arianne’s hips jerked and rose grinding her cunt into Loreza’s mouth. . "Auungghhh! Ohnnnnnggg! Aunngghhiieee!" Arianne continued to wail in shocking bliss.

Arianne’s long orgasm now was waning. The three teens supported her slumping weight for several minutes to let her clit stop jangling. They kissed and stroked Arianne’s body hungrily. When they sensed Arianne was ready they led the staggering Arianne over to the bed.

Arianne was sat on the edge the bed and pushed back. A now naked Dorea was between her legs in a flash pushing them out and her mouth latched onto Arianne’s sloppy wet cunt. The seventeen year old quickly buried her tongue deep into her Aunt’s pussy. Dorea sniffled and tongue fucked her aunt with long strokes of her tongue deep into her Aunt’s fiery snatch. Both teen and adult groaned loudly as they made love. Dorea’s mouth scooped out tongue fulls of hot sweet cum. To get more Dorea wiggled her face to get Arianne’s drooling vulva fully covering her smacking lips.

Myrcella and Loreza flanked the woman lying on her back and sucked on her breast like starving wolves. They sucked and drewled on her nipples sucking fiercely. Their hands pumped and kneyed Arianne’s heavy breast loving the weight and heat.

For the next five minutes Arianne felt Dorea doing horribly heavenly things to her pussy. Dorea was on her knees by the side of the bed like a supplicant. Her face mashed deep into her aunt's vulva her hands gripping voluptuous hips to anchor her mouth on the wet soaked cunt she was avidly munching on. She sucked on Arianne’s clit with long and then short sucks. The sand snake worked her tongue with lightening fast swipes of the rock hard clit sucked into her mouth. The teen tongues lashed Arianne’s rock hard clit and then wormed all over the nubbin with her tongue polishing it.

The teen had slipped first one and then a second finger into the twenty-five year olds buttery cunt. Dorea pumped her first two fingers in deep up her Aunt’s tight vaginal channel. Dorea’s knuckles hammered into the adult’s wet vulva as her fingers slammed in and out Arianne’s hot tight cougie. Love juice dripped off the hand that piston in out the hot wet slurping cunt of her aunt. The fingers worked the sodden cunt with expert skills. The sand snake slipped a third finger into Arianne's pussy stretching it out tight around the fingers. Arianne's cunt gripped the deep pumping fingers in a velvet vice of slippery wet folds. Dorea worked worked her fingers hard plunging them in deep as more hot cum ran down Dorea's wrist and forearm.

Myrcella and Loreza sucked hard on Arianne’s nipples so engorged they were almost white on the tips. Her beast flushed and swelled with blood. Arianne’s chest and throat were bright red now. The twenty-five year olds body was soaked in sweat with her midnight hair plastered all over her flushed face. The teens taking turns moving up to kiss the adult deeply.

Arianne’s head ripped up and jerked forward hard in short spastic jerks on a hard spasmming neck. Then Arianne slammed her head back into the bed her eyes squeezed tight shut as tears of love rolled down her cheeks. "Ongghhhnggghiiieeeeee! Aunngghhiieeee! Onnggmmmmhnniiieeiee!" Arianne wailed her body spasming hard her hips bucking up into the mouth gobbling it and finger fucking her spasming fuck hole driving her insane with pleasure. Arianne’s spasming quim clenched hard on the invading digits. “Ungggghhh! Ommmmgghiiimmmnnieeeeee!” Arianne screamed her pure love for her nieces and Myrcella.

How could she have ever doubted their love! Yes, yes this would work!

Her orgasm fled leaving Arianne weak and soaked in sweat. Her head lulled from side to side. She was drunk on love!

Arianne felt six hands gently but firmly moving her up onto the bed and then laying her out in the middle of the bed. Arianne watched lazily as Myrcella lay down between her spread legs. Myrcella swirled her head to get here hair over her left shoulder as she put a pillow underneath Arianne’s firm voluptuous ass. Arianne watched Myrcella inhale deeply settling down. “Gods dammed your cunt smells so fucking good Baby! God I love how wet and sloppy your cunt is” Myrcella moaned.
Myrcella lowered her head down “Hhhrssllppp” Myrcella’s mouth made a wet obscene slurping sound sucking in Arianne’s upper cunt and munching on Arianne’s slimy cunt folds and clitoral hood.

“Ohoggg—nmffpppphhhh” Arianne's moans were cut off as Dorea swung her knees over Arianne’s head and lowered her drooling camel toe onto Arianne’s mouth. Arianne jammed her head up spearing her tongue up deep into her niece’s cunt hole and moaned at the heat and oh so sweet taste. She gripped the girl’s slender hips and pumped her head hard up and down tongue fucking her future wife with wild abandon. My gods Arianne thought, I will be eating this pussy every night she thought wildly!

Arianne lost all track of time as she was the center of her prides loving ministrations. She spent well over an hour on her back eating out her nieces and Myrcella as they took turns sitting on her face as they rocked or swept their hips working their drooling muffins on her mouth. Gods she loved sucking them off and drinking their hot sweet cum.

Her body was flipping and jackknifing as the three teens took turns sucking and finger fucking Arianne’s cunt. Their expert skills sending the adult Martell’s cunt into convulsions and her belly into gut wrenching spasms of her harrowing orgasms. Arianne’s hips bucked wildly and her screams swallowed by the cunt currently riding her face.

Arianne was in heaven each time one of her pride mates started screaming and wildly sweeping their cunts in hard jerks back and forth over her mouth. Her mouth filled to overflowing with hot sweet cum that ran down her cheeks.

Ariana looked up over flat stomachs and whiplashing firm tits and watched her lover’s faces contort and slash. They looked so heavenly the way theirs faces twisted and snarled through their womb rending orgasms. She adored the feel of their cunts jamming down onto her mouth as their twats exploded flooding her mouth with cum.

She loved watching her pride mate’s bodies jerk and convulse so hard up over her. Their asses ground around on her throat and upper chest as they ground their cunts into her hot sucking mouth. The wet heat of their slimy pussies wallowing and riding her face was intoxicating. Her soul was in heaven drinking the ambrosia that gushed out hot teenage pussies. God she loved their cum so much!

She was in love!

Myrcella

Myrcella woke up deep in the night and looked around the room illuminated by the waxing gibbous moon. She felt Arianne half lying on her gently snoring. She started to stroke her back. She smiled broadly. She had her pride now. She had reached for the moon and gotten it.

She knew that their new house would soon be a force to reckon with. How it would happen she did not know but she felt deep inside that it would.

She pulled Arianne tighter to her as she woman moaned and wiggled into her body. She had in the middle of their lovemaking gotten the women to start saying they were making love to their pride mates along with using each other names. They were a pride now. She had all three women of her heart. She smiled lazily. They would never leave her or each other.

Myrcella looked over to the right and saw the twins all entwined legs and arms sleeping on their sides bodies pulled tight.

Arianne loved her breasts for a few minutes. Arianne half sprawled on her teen lover as she sucked fiercely on her rock hard nipples.

Then her wife was between her legs pushing them out and Myrcella gagged hard feeling a long hot tongue snaking deep into her already sopping wet cunt.

Myrcella whimpered watching the teens come awake and looking at her with hot throbbing eyes as they stalked forward on their hands and knees licking their sensual lips.

She was in heaven! That was what her life was now; heaven!

Ice King / Eddard / Daenerys / Jon / Sansa / Eddard / Arya / Daenerys

Ice King

He stood on the hill overlooking his kingdom, small that it was. The kingdom went from one horizon to the other but it was a paltry thing compared to what was his right. This kingdom should have covered the entire world. He had tried once, to claim what his right by birth. He had failed.

But now the age of heroes was over. This time he would succeed and spread this frozen waste across Westeros and beyond.

He looked over his wights as they trained and milled around. His sons were so beautiful to watch; their sword work was exemplary. They never tired like the warm-bloods. They would achieve victory. He remembered a time, so long ago, when he had a true army to confront the armies of men. Now he had at best only several regiments of true wights. They would have to be enough.

While the force he could field was so much smaller than before, the armies of men had lost so much more. They had lost their heritage of magic that had enabled them to overcome him and his brothers. Magic was still in the very air but they were now blind to it. Though his army was small it had grown so much since the arrival of his true son. Where once his army was few now he had regiments of adopted sons to fill his ranks. He craved and needed more which he worked feverishly to increase.

His foes had lost even more. They had not only lost their magic they had forgotten even their knowledge. The weapon that was the most anathema to him and his kind had been forgotten. They had remembered fire which burned his dead like tinder and would kill even him if he was shot with enough flaming arrows or pierced with spears on fire. His dead would absorb these weapons. The great advantage of the hot bloods was their ability to breed like rats and their numbers were vast. Regardless of their casualties they would still be a problem for his small numbers. They could afford to take great losses.

He had been both shocked and so pleasantly surprised to learn upon his awakening that his enemies had forgotten the very magic they had used to defeat him over eight thousand years ago. It had been magic as much as might of arms that defeated him; now they had lost half of their might and did not even know it. If he still had had the forces he had had at his command during the Long Night he would be assured of victory, but he didn’t. That was the problem. His strength in many ways was a ghost of itself.

Only he now could raise the dead. In the past all his brothers could raise the dead along with him. With their defeat by Azor and his allies those that had not been slain outright had retreated deep into the cold permafrost that had been their mother so many ages ago. What they had not counted on was the fucking first children binding them to their mother. His brothers’ struggles had gradually died away over the ages as the very Earth that had given them birth slowly leechled away their essence. They had passed during their long imprisonment in the cold Earth.
Only he survived. He was the first, and the strongest. Long his mother strove to take his mind and essence from him, but he resisted her sweet siren call. His will was too strong to let go into the long night of the hard, cold Earth that nearly became his grave.

With time, the grip upon his body began to loosen. His mind that had been clouded slowly cleared. His will to dream slowly returned. Through many more long years of anguish did he strive to break his mother’s cruel embrace. Then, one day, he attempted to move his finger and found that he could! After more long years of struggle, he once more broke through the ground and severed his link to his greedy mother who still sought to embrace him.

The spell, while not broken, had been marred and weakened. He was free.

But only he was free. He was the last. His brothers were all dead.

He had started to raise a new army of sons, but they were still too young and weak to raise the dead as he did. He could only raise so many in a period of time, or he would be made weak himself again. That could never be allowed.

So he had sent out emissaries to the land of men. He promised great fortune and the rule of men that he would let live. Any man that would form an alliance with him could be king of all Westeros and in time Essos. All of Essos.

Eventually he found such a man. When he first met the man he had been so put off that he almost slew him out of turn.

He had been offended. The man was no warrior. The Ice King had expected some mighty, corrupted warrior like Bran the Builder or Azor Ahai. A man who would bring some army of rats at his side to attack his enemy from the rear. But this man was a deviant rat himself.

He had controlled his wrath and listened to the man and what he had to say. The Ice King then became thankful for his restraint. His wrath slowly turned to admiration. He was stunned by the simplicity of the man’s plan - it was brilliant. This man would use the humans’ own hot blooded ambitions, avarices and instinctive lack of trust to bring about their own downfall.

He had gazed into the ghostly ice fires he used to cool his hands and watched the flames. Like the priests and priestesses of Azor he too could read them. But where they merely glimpsed at what had been, what was, and what could be, the Ice King actually saw the future. Once the crime was done he would succeed. The plan was so simple it had to work.

He signed the pact in his own icy blood on the sheet. The man had left smiling, his hot heart pumping with greed and lust.

He would take great pleasure in killing the little man later on. He hated all life, but the fact that this man would betray his own kind this way made even the Ice King feel soiled. He would personally kill Peytr Baelish when he’d outlived his usefulness, and take great satisfaction from it.

Despite what the flames had assured him would happen, it had not occurred. A servant had been where none of the visions said they would be. They had overhead Baelish and Lysa in their plotting.

An elaborate trap had been set and Lysa was caught in the very act of attempting to poison Jon Arryn. She had, of course, immediately turned on her lover and conspirator, and Petyr had been executed on the spot. The simpering woman was sent to the Vale of Arryn with her weak son. The fool Hand had had too much compassion.

The Ice King had been devastated. Why had his Mother Earth sheltered him all these millenniums and then given birth to him a second time if he was doomed to failure? His mother may have not wanted to release him but only through her embrace had he survived.

He did not have the army to conqueror all of Westeros. While man had forgotten the spells used to defeat him during the Long Night, the Wall remembered. Its recollection was strong and vital. He did not have the forces to shatter that barrier in his reduced state.

He had wailed into the long night, pounding his icy fists into the hard Earth begging for a portent, for an ally that he could use to conqueror the hated hot-bloods.

It was then the Croyel came to him. He had been fostering bastard children he received as offerings from Craster and male babies he stole from the Others when he came upon their newborns. He had to touch the child within twenty-four hours of their birth to mark them as his own children. They were weak, and needed to time to grow into their full maturity. He could not afford to wait. The fates had shown him how fickle they could be.

The Croyel was such a small thing. It looked in many ways like the human children he had been converting to be his bastard sons. The thing had short, stunted legs and arms, and a large head with beady yellow eyes that never blinked. His toes and fingers were claws, his teeth pointed daggers. The Croyel proved to the Ice King he was indeed a reservoir of great ability; he had been stunned at the power this tiny being held within its small baby-like frame.

The Croyel told him that together they could indeed conqueror the ends of the Earth. He had brothers, though they were few. They sought to find great entities they could bond with to achieve great victories. They, like the Ice King, hated all things that were not of the Croyel.

If the Ice King would but bond with the Croyel, they would conqueror and destroy all hated life. The Croyel was there to become his true son.

The Ice King had weighed his options. The Croyel had nothing to gain from killing or trying to enthrall him. In its provenance of its lineage the Croyel had confessed that his kind needed the ambition of another to strive for. For all their power, they lacked the will to achieve anything more than mere existence. They needed a host to drive and strive for domination.

The Ice King again consulted the ice flames. They had led him astray before, but he had no other recourse. Unfortunately, the flames were of no help; the Croyel was beyond the kin of the fire.

The Ice King had bent down and patiently let the Croyel crawl feebly up his arm, and then settle onto his icy back. The frozen King cried out in pain when the Croyel’s fangs pierced the ice hard skin of his neck, sinking in deep, drinking his frosted blood while humming in satisfaction. The Croyel’s power radiated out, increasing as it dug its claws into the back and side of its new father.

The Ice King had folded in initial pain, but then rose up with a ramrod back. Power like he had never felt before raced through his ice cold veins. He thrummed with it. Who needed assistance? He would conqueror all before him now!

With his new son, the Ice King had achieved great things in the few intervening years. They had even raised a surprise for the Targaryen bitch if it became needed. He was able to find more bastard sons. With the Croyel to guide him he had developed other sources for the children of men he needed to create new sons. Also, with his son’s might he was no longer compelled to get a newborn boy to convert to ice sons - the age of conversion was now much older.

Best of all, his true son had been able to divine the location of the most precious of gifts - they now had the Horn of Winter in their possession. The Wall was no longer an obstacle. The horn would unbind the magic of the Wall’s makers.

To make his work easier he had found several tools among the hated humans to help in their demise. The Ice King was always amazed at how easily he found humans willing to work with him.

Soon. Soon there would be an accounting with the hot-bloods.

The Ice King would have his vengeance.

Eddard

Eddard was sitting underneath the Weirwood in the sacred grove polishing Ice. He had run the wet stone along the edges of the great Valyrian sword, considering the history of the land that had forged the blade. They had been a mighty people indeed … and a cruel people.

He ran the oiled rag up and down the blade, then turned the sword on edge. He studied the great blade’s immaculate edge; razor sharp and deadly. He looked at the rippled steel that had so long served House Stark.

Eddard thought again of the Valyrian blade that Daenerys pulled from her scabbard. He had been shocked when it had shone a bright, pale blue, sending out a ghostly hue. He had seen that the glow seemed to come from within the blade. Even from the distance between him and Daenerys, he could see that the blue emanated from a swirling filigree pattern deep within the steel.

He remembered again the story he had almost forgotten as a youth, told by the great Arthur Dayne. Eddard remembered the first time he showed the great swordsman his blade. When Dayne was examining Ice, he had gone on about the craftsmanship. The only thing that would have made it better was if it was a rare ‘rune’ sword, he’d said. Eddard of course had asked about it.

Dayne then informed the young man that legends said that the greatest Valyrian sword smiths could embed ghostly blue runes and patterns deep into the metal and only the owner’s touch or a great dragon lord could activate them. Eddard asked if any still existed and was told that the legends said that Aegon and his sisters were the last to have such swords. Now most considered them mere myth.

He shook his head. In the confusion of combat, almost anything seemed possible.

Great Dragon Lord, Eddard said to himself. The sword could not have been made specifically for Daenerys since no such masters still lived. Just how powerful was the girl? Those who studied history knew the House Targaryen was the weakest of the Valyrian Houses. Only prophecy had saved them from the Doom.

Did the last scion of House Targaryen have the taint? Was she cruel like her forbearers? Was she fair? Was her touch gentle and loving?

…would she be good to Arya?

He had not dared to broach the subject with Cat yet. He shuddered at just the thought.

Eddard had made peace with his daughter’s destiny if indeed he was reading it right. He thought of all the vain and conceited men he had known. So far, all he had heard of Daenerys was positive. She showed mercy, and forgave at every turn. She was said to have a temper though, but, that it would quickly settle and she never held onto a grudge. A lot like me. Hopefully, not as grim. He almost smiled.
His mind played over and over the confrontation before the gates of Winterfell. The woman had definitely been testing them and, he surmised, having a little fun at his expense. He shrugged. He could live with that.

In many ways Daenerys seemed to be living out the hope and promise that her brother Rhaegar Targaryen had once held. He had been quiet and fair, and while not a master at any one thing except the arts he was still very skilled at anything he set his mind to.

If only him and his sister had not fallen in love. Eddard long ago came to accept that his sister had not been abducted by Rhaegar, but had gone willing with him. She chose to follow her own destiny. Eddard shuddered to think of Cersei and Robert. That could have been Lyanna.

He was so sure in his youth about following the royal duty in marriage. What if he had married Cersei Lannister instead of Catelyn Tully? He still cringed at the notion. When he explored these thoughts honestly, he had slowly come to the conclusion that such “duty” was, well, asinine.

He knew Robb was courting Alys Karstark from House Karstark. Their potential marriage would not bring advantage to House Stark, but Eddard did not care anymore. Rob could marry whomever he chose … and so could Arya.

The Stark patriarch sighed. When had life gotten so complicated?

He would never go to war again for such a silly thing as to whom one wanted to marry. The cost had been too extravagant. Without the pressure of Robert’s rebellion maybe Daenerys’ father would not have felt so pressured and addled. Maybe his father and brother would have lived.

Eddard would never know.

He only knew that he would do what was right for Winterfell, the North and the realm.

Eddard put aside his family dilemmas to once again focus on the great matters of his time. He needed to meet the doom coming from beyond the Wall. He knew he had to bring Westeros to meet the threat. The only problem was that the rest of the great houses would never march north to meet the Wall’s need.

The Houses would have to unite and meet the threat as a closed-mailed fist and smash the approaching danger. The only problem was the Houses did not really believe in any threat from the Wall or beyond. The only threat they perceived was in each other. At least once every generation the Houses would choose sides and the bloodletting would begin.

It was about time for the next generation to now have its turn at that bloodletting. A fierce grimace crossed Ned’s face. More bloodshed for, at best, dubious reasons.

If blood was to be let, it must be for the effort against this age’s great challenge. But how?! Only his house had shown any proclivity to try and avoid these senseless battles. How could he get the houses to not fight each other but instead fight against something that none of them believed in?

A most vexing problem.

Eddard put Ice back into its scabbard and got up to slowly pace before the Weirwood tree, seeking the guidance of the old gods. He listened to the breeze sigh through the branches and leaves, his head bowed in deep thought.

He had seen that Daenerys had bowed the rest of Westeros to her will, they were all flocking to her court. But having houses come in peace and seeking largesse and to curry favor was one thing. To get the houses to march in unity to fight a foe they did not believe in when almost all of them were harboring some ill will towards one another was another matter.

The Queen had not had enough time yet to unite them to her will and support it while their natural tendency was to mistrust and, at times, even attack each other. It would take time for any sovereign to fully make a realm their own. The Queen had not been in Westeros a year. She was only now proving herself to her subjects. Only now was Daenerys Targaryen beginning to instill in her subjects the desire and will to follow her no matter where she might lead them. She would not have time to make the realm truly hers before Eddard needed her at the wall with the united forces of Westeros at her back following her call to duty.

The only thing that had ever, historically, united the Great Houses was a great threat that they all could perceive. They thought of the Wall as a relic of a bygone era that protected Westeros from snarks, grumpkins, and goblins. The last time the Houses had united in any capacity had been during Robert’s rebellion, and even that had been a split division.

What Westeros needed was a threat they could see while putting fear in their hearts or if that could not be provided they needed a foe that their greed and avarice would lead them to confront and crush. The Great Houses had an innate love to bring their brothers low.

Eddard stopped pacing. He looked up to gaze at the bleeding face of the Weirwood, a rare, genuine smile coming to life on his face.

He had his answer.

Daenerys

Dany sat on a bench beside the practice yard after another exhilarating sword practice session with Barristan and Syrio. They had each attacked her in turn, pushing her to her limits. Each one had such a different style of attack.

Barriston used his broadsword as if he had been born with it from his mother’s womb. His swipes were decisive and powerful. Great sweeping blows and lightning fast jabs riding up her blade, seeking to find her flesh.

Syrio with his rapier always came forward with fast, controlled sweeps of his blade and constant forward jabs of the sword point, seeking to pierce vital organs. Each type of attack required an entirely different style of defense. They would switch off the moment one tired to continue the pressing of their offense.

Only after she had left would her sword masters speak quietly on how it was possible for their Queen to fight two grown men to a standstill for up to thirty minutes. It should not have been possible, but she did it every morning. The Queen in some ways was beyond human.

She put her glowing sword on her leg and pulled out her sharpening stone, running it along the edge of her blade. She felt her body start to relax as she once again read again the runes forged deep in the metal from her distant ancestor, reliving the truth embedded in the steel about the one her ancestor had truly loved.

Her mind drifted back five years again as it often did when she sharpened her sword. She saw in her mind her little Kiserri closing one eye, checking her little ceremonial dagger Daenerys had given her, and declaring it needed to be sharpened if she was to be Daenerys’s Blood Rider.
Daenerys had gotten Kiserri a whetstone. She had laughed softly watching the girl fumble with the stone and stomp her foot in frustration and whine until Dany had helped her get the coordination of moving the blade up the stone. She never had time to master the technique, Daenerys thought, tears running down her cheeks.

The little girl had captured her heart in those small moments.

Tyrion had returned last week, and she was glad for it. Upon her return after meeting the Reeds, she had given her Hand a set of tasks to accomplish in preparation for her return to them, whenever that may be.

He had completed diagrams for a large, wide basket that he’d given the craftsman, utilizing the same material they had been developed for the saddles, chaps, and gloves that had been made for Barristan and Belwas. She would be ready to take her charges North when summoned.

She had asked Tyrion about the Ice King. He had laughed until he saw that she was serious. He told her he did not exist, and never had. She pressed him further, and he told her what he knew of this ‘myth’, which was not much. That was not good enough for Daenerys. She wanted to know where in the realm could she find out more about this Ice King.

Tyrion had told her the Wall or the Citadel.

Daenerys needed the information as quickly as possible.

The next day a much protesting Tyrion had been placed in a modified saddle on Rhaegal’s back, winging South with express orders to learn all there was to learn of the Ice King and the dangers beyond the Wall.

Daenerys had enjoyed his loud curses even as they’d faded into the distance.

The briefings had been most educational. Tyrion had not believed the reports, but Daenerys had. She had brought dragons to life from fossilized dragons eggs – she knew anything was possible.

The next day she took her three dragons up into the sky. She told them what she wanted to do. They had shown no fear as she had asked them if they could find the Ice King, despite the fact that he would have no body heat. It was Viserion that had came up with the solution to the problem and shared with his brothers and mother. She had done all she could on that front.

She had to sit in all the Small Council meetings in Tyrion’s absence. She had not formed enough trust in anyone else to have them step in and take on Tyron’s duties when he was off doing the Queen’s business. Syrio was not tempered for such duties and Barristan had his fill in his previous incarnation at this table. She had hoped the Small Council had reached the point she would not have to sit at every meeting. Tyrion was clearly ensconced as her Hand. All now knew with a certainty that Tyrion Lannister had the full support of the Queen.

Daenerys found many of the meetings were trite and boring, but her team by and large were starting to focus on the problems that needed joining together to come up with solutions that genuinely worked. For the first time in generations, the government was actually working for its populace. To be a King or Queen was not a right but a privilege.

Dany loved having her government actually solving problems.

Myrcella and Arianna Martell had again proven her faith in them. Dany had been upset to discover they had traveled to the City of Tor with their Sand Snake guard on the shore of the Sea of Dorne in the midst of a breakout of the Bubonic plague. She’d briefly wondered if they were they insane. But, evidently their insanity had a purpose. They had gone into the city, and within two weeks had broken the plague.

Varys reported they had had to stare down the Dorne officials when they saw they had a doctor from Highgarden with them. The Dorne authorities had laughed at the Pride of Dorne and the Highgarden doctor when they said they would break the siege.

The small council had been so quiet then that you could hear a pin drop. Were they sorceresses? Dany knew more than one of them wondered that very thing. Varys reported that the poor and unlearned had wanted to worship them as goddesses or as powerful witches.

The truth was all in their report.

They had discovered a doctor from Highgarden that had insisted he had found the way to control the spread of the plague. He had been in Tyrosh three years ago when a breakout of the plague had hit the port. Death was all around except for one ship that had been spared amongst all the others anchored.

He had investigated the anomaly when the plague had passed. It was no coincidence, and science had the answer. The master of the ship had a phobia of rats and fleas. Because of this, he demanded his ship be kept free of vermin. His crew killed all rats ruthlessly and actively fought the fleas with all tinctures and remedies known to man. Between his cleanliness and the savage attacks on the vermin he had accidently discovered the truth. The plague traveled in rats which were naturally immune, and the fleas biting the rats spread then spread the plague to men. Keep the port and ships clean of rats and fleas, then no plague.

Problem was everyone disbelieved and mocked his discovery.

But Myrcella and Arianna had not only broken the siege of bubonic plague at Tor, Myrcella and Arianna had saved countless lives and would see many more spared in the future.

Dany was smug looking at the two men who had called them cunts. They would not meet her direct eye contact. Since they did not repeat their words and seemed to have learned the errors of their ways she overlooked their earlier slurs.

Much good was accomplished in her tedious Small Council meetings, though having to deal with Solaja Xo was barely tolerable. The woman must have been a man in a former life, Dany thought sourly.

The woman followed her around the Small Council table with Dany constantly changing where she sat to ward her off. With Tyrion gone, Daenerys had taken to sitting in the Hand’s chair to put off the woman. The vixen had tried twice to sit on her lap in front of the first attendees of one day’s meeting. It was becoming insufferable. Dany had no desire for her, but found small joys in frustrating the woman.

Two weeks ago the Summer Islander had started to try to browbeat and bull past her blood rider guard, which they found amusing and titillating but could not go off with the woman even when she made it plain she wanted to fuck them if she could not have the queen. So Dany had switched her guard detail. Now two Dothraki guarded her door early on the first watch.

When Solaja had tried to bull in again she now had two Dothraki confronting her. They let the woman decide which one she would bed; then they reported back to Daenerys that she was a real good fuck. She was like a wild mare. She gave great head. Was Daenerys sure she did not want to bed the mare? She often screamed her name even as they fucked her hard and deep filling her cunt and ass with their hot spurting cum.

Daenerys informed her blood riders that she was all theirs.

For a while at least, Dany had peace at night and her blood riders were now all guarding her door with Solaja occupied taking back two to her bed.

The woman must have indeed been a great fuck with that kind of stamina Dany had to concede. Her blood riders were starting to look a little pale.

The marriage proposals began flowing in, and she was able to set them aside by rightfully claiming she was still putting her kingdom together. She knew eventually they would become much more demanding, but she would deal with that then.

She missed having Tyrion to amuse her during the Small Council meetings.

With Solaja getting fucked hard every night by her blood riders, she had calmed down to some degree. She still eyed the Queen hungrily, but her step was often a little ginger from her rough DP fucking the previous night. Dany had finally felt safe in taking her normal seat at the end of the table.

Of course that put her back in the clutches of Grand Maester Harsch Lape, who was his usual banal self.

Three day ago she had snapped when he brushed the hair off her shoulder and tried to caress her neck. Her hand had whipped up and gripped his wrist in a vice lock. He had cried out in pain when she slammed his hand onto the table palm down and dug her thumb into the pressure point on the underside of his hand.

The Maester’s fingers had shot out in spasming agony. Dany whipped out her dagger with her dominant hand and faster than the eye could follow started to slam into the table with her dagger point in rapid succession between his fingers. The dagger point hit each tiny V between the Maester’s digits. Dany repeated this back and forth for half a minute.

The impact of Valyrian metal into hardened oak filled the room. The Maester whimpered, his eyes wide in shocked fear. Solaja had actually looked like she wanted to be where Lape was, which only made Daenerys’ hand move even faster.

Once she finally relented, the Maester remembered to keep his hands to himself.

Jon

Even Jon could feel the Ice King coming now. His advisor had been telling him that eventually as the Ice King’s power increased he too would feel him - he was Azor Ahai reborn, after all. It was true, he could feel the demon’s power pulsing, along with the ally of the Ice King that his advisors kept speaking of. It was like an evil spot on top of the deadly King. Strange how their evils pulsed so differently. The Ice King was clearly ascendant, but the other evil seemed almost a part of the King.

Jon pulled the cowl of his cloak forward covering his face in shadows. He felt the comfort of its warmth and the shadows that he found he craved now. His brothers had betrayed him with their attempted assassination. The Crows of the Nights Watch had proved to have shadows on their hearts. Those shadows had crept into Jon’s heart now. It seemed they all had half-truths they wanted to cherish in the shadows of their hearts. Jon Snow had tired of his brothers but he was a Stark and he would fulfill his duty to the order and to the realm.

He asked his advisors what the new evil was. If the Ice King had a new ally they needed to know about it. Even after studying the flames the nature of this new force could not be divined. They had studied many years to learn of the demons that plagued man, and they had never seen this before. It was almost as if this was the first appearance of this type of demon within the sphere of man.

For now, they would not be able to provide any assistance or knowledge on how to defeat this new entity. His advisor had been frustrated in not being able to provide more information to the Commander of the Night’s Watch.

Last night his confidents and advisors had come to him excited. They were sure they had come up with a way to spy in the very camp of the Ice King. They could finally provide Jon with the intelligence and proof to his father of the true situation.

When the detailed what they hoped to accomplish Jon had at first refused. It was too dangerous! If they were caught they would be killed and worse yet raised as part of the Ice King’s army. That was unacceptable. While their courage was commendable the risk was simply too great. They had slowly convinced Jon that he had no choice. The needs of the many outweighed the needs of the few.

They wanted and, more so, needed to do this for Jon. They needed to help him protect his realm. Jon finally relented. Jon in the end had no choice but to send his advisor and oracle into the very camp of the enemy. No matter the risk the gambit had to be taken. The threat to the realm was that great.

Jon could not afford to worry about what he could not change. He would focus on what he could affect.

His relocation of the Wildlings was proceeding apace. He had unilaterally given them the Gift along the Wall. He had done so in secret, but of course word was already leaking out, despite the fact that the wildlings had been honorable.

With his allowing the Wildlings passage through the Wall they had gladly taken to the duty on guarding it, and to helping with the rebuilding of the old Crow forts. Some were in much more disrepair than others. Jon Snow had just received excellent reports of progress from Deep Lake, Icemark and Long Barrow. His brothers were upset he was naming Wildlings to lead many of the repaired forts but he no longer really cared. The Wildlings more than any other people in Westeros understood the threat that was coming to attack them. They had suffered directly from its evil touch.

Since his attempted assassination by his own brothers his former dedication to the old rules had slipped. He was doing everything he could to save them and the Wildlings and they had tried to stab him to death.

Something like that that tended to change a man. He now viewed his brothers as a burden that he could not wait to set aside. That is, if he lived through the coming trials that his oracles told him he would have to face.

Jon felt much closer to his two advisors than his former Night’s Watch ‘family’. He now thought of his advisors as his family now. His brothers of the Watch had sacrificed that right with their attempted murder of him. It was these two that had saved him from his supposed ‘brothers’. The crows resented his new confidants but they had lost any right they had to dispute him nearly two years ago.

Jon stopped contemplating the sins of the past and focused himself on the near future. They must be ready for the Ice King when he came South in earnest to fight and attempt to take down the Wall and flood South. They must be stopped here, or the carnage would be horrible. The Ice King must be confronted before his forces had the opportunity to disperse and wreak havoc on the unsuspecting populace of the South lands.

Jon had been keeping his father constantly informed of all that his oracles was able to perceive with their divinations. His father had not wanted to believe at first, Jon could tell, but his father was a Stark and deep down from his first report of the Ice King Eddard Stark had believed.

Jon had told his father that the Ice King was becoming stronger and his numbers growing quickly. That he had found some supernatural ally that was greatly aiding him.

Jon told his father that he must rally all of Westeros to the defense of the Wall. Jon knew in some ways he had given his father the hardest of all jobs - to convince a recalcitrant Westeros of a threat they did not believe in.

Jon had to pray to gods he was no longer sure he believed in that his father succeeded. Jon did not have the forces to even long delay the coming darkness. The crows and wildlings were simply not enough. They needed the might of arms from all the Houses to fight the coming battle.

On top of this, their supplies were being consumed at a frightening fate. The armies of the South would have to arrive at the proper time, else, they would soon starve.

His father had yet to find a way to unite and bring the Great Houses North. Time was running out.

Jon took a moment to reflect on the inevitable confrontation with the Ice King himself. His most powerful advisor and oracle had told him since their first meeting that only the Dragon, Azor Ahai reborn and the Direwolf combined could defeat the Ice King. That they must fight him as one.

His advisor had convinced him that the Dragon was ready. Her ordeal in the desert had given her the hardening of body and mind and filled her spirit with resolve. Daenerys Targaryen was ready to lead the charge of the forces of light.

Jon had no issue with that. He had no desire for fame or glory; others could lead. He was content with just being allowed to confront the Ice King like his long ago progenitor. Jon pulled his Valyrian sword from its scabbard. Its first sheaths had quickly melted from the heat of Long Claw reborn into the sword of Azor Ahai.

Again his oracles had come to his aid. They had taken a scabbard from the armory. They then inscribed magical runes and placed magical spells into the metal to strengthen the metal and give it the heart to withstand the heat of Jon’s blade reborn. When he put the scabbard on his back he did not even feel the heat always pulsing in his red glowing sword.

Once removed from its scabbard, it became a blade of fire, the tongues of flame licking off the blade nearly six inches.

Jon was still had a hard believing he was the true Azor Ahai reborn but he would gladly take his sword into combat to fight the Ice King. He was transformed but he was still learning to have the pure faith in his destiny. Even with his doubts he was ready. His assassination and then trial by fire had indeed forged Jon Snow into something other than what he had been. He put his sword back in its enchanted scabbard. He felt both of the old glory of past ages and yet reborn into something new. He was focused and ready to meet his personal challenge in this tableau.

He did feel like he had been reborn as a new weapon to fight the forces of night and death.
The weak link was his sister, Arya Stark. She was developing apace but she was not ready to do what would be necessary. Arya needed honing of her skills, increasing her strength and developing even further her iron will. She was supposed to be forged as Jon and Daenerys had been.

Was she strong enough to meet her destiny without flinching? Would Jon’s sister have iron will to throw herself into the breach of seemingly unsurmountable odds and not care? Would she have the strength and will to persevere against all odds?

Jon was not sure he was, and he had been forged in fires of pain and anguish. Arya may have had hurt feelings and had her wings clipped, but she had never suffered like Daenerys and himself.

The Oracle spoke: “I fear Jon Snow. You sister has not been forged. I fear she will not be able to perform her part. Only great pain and anguish can kindle greatness.” She said sadly.

“I know. I too fear that she might fail when the time comes. I love my sister, but I doubt she can take on her part in the final battle.”

His other advisor had heard enough. “Stick that head of red hair of yours in that fire you love so much, Oracle. Don’t either of you know that there is also love in the world? Look at us. Love does in indeed conquer all. You know nothing Jon Snow … nor you, Melisandre.”

Sansa

Sansa was getting very tired of having to work behind the curtains to operate the levers of influence and power even though she had been happy to help her brother woo the lass from Karhold. She had been helping Rob arrange secret meetings and when the families visited each other, which was often since her father had insisted on holding so many councils with his many lords as of late. Sansa helped run interference to let the two smitten lovers find time alone.

Even though she would have done this regardless, she was sure to use the fact she was helping her brother to make sure she was given what she wanted in return.

Robb hadn’t once argued, so thankful that their father had not found out yet of his wooing of Alys.

She had to get the news of what was occurring from Robb. It galled her that she was not allowed in on the council sessions; she had a mind as sharp or sharper than any man in those rooms. She silently fumed, but used her anger to help her to focus. She needed to shape events as much as she could to help those most dear to her.

From Robb, Sansa had learned that their father considered the true danger of their time to be North of the Wall. This surprised Sansa since she believed that any true danger from the North had long ago perished in the cold nights.

It was obvious her father did not share her views. He was always much more prone to the mystical where Sansa only believed in the hard, cold facts that could stand up to the light of day, not half-formed tales heard in the deep of night.

Sansa knew that the other houses would never march North to the defense of the Wall. The rest of Westeros thought too much like she did. She had to wonder who was right. Did one follow their intellect and fact, or the mystical and their instincts?

In the end, it did not matter. The Wall was always the responsibility of the North. Were not the Stark’s and their allies the equal of all challenges?
Her and Robb were talking in the hall when Robb got an urgent message from their father to meet him in the Lord’s Hall. Sansa and her brother looked at each other, and Robb nodded.

He owed Sansa.

He swept into the room where his father waited with his most trusted advisors and heads of at least one third of his lords. He was animatedly explaining that he had figured out how to get the South to come North to fight for the Wall.

This Sansa had to hear. They all gathered around the table, Sansa taking her place beside Robb.

Eddard looked up and saw Sansa at the war table. She was there as she if she belonged. She fiercely held her ground, refusing to shy from his eye. Robb was looking very nervous. Eddard kept eye contact with Sansa for a few long moments.

Apparently satisfied, Eddard gave his oldest daughter the slightest of nods and called the meeting to order.

He started to detail the danger. Sansa felt her heart clutch. The Ice King? Her father was so certain. But he was nothing but a tale to scare miscreant children into obedience and get them in bed at night. He could not exist after so many years. She saw that many around the table thought the same. They were of the North and would serve but still they doubted.

So she asked the question that everyone else was too afraid to ask. Her heart soared and her back went even straighter when her father smiled at her for giving him the opening he was looking for. He responded by asking “Why else build a wall of Ice seven hundred feet tall and anchored by ancient magic. For humans?” He asked them to think it through. For the next half hour Eddard detailed all the information that Jon had been sending to him.

There were no doubters left. These people grew up with the Wall as a cornerstone of their life.

Then her father told them he had come up with a plan to draw the South up to the wall. His plan was audacious and dangerous. He would need be careful with the timing… and he would need to send an emissary to help sow even more doubt in the Great Houses and yet still bring the Queen on board as an ally. It would be a most difficult balancing act but he thought it could succeed if they executed his plan properly.

If an emissary of sufficient importance was sent then that would force the new Queen to pause to consider what the “mad” Starks were doing. They would need someone who would be sincere, likely to be believed by the Queen. Eddard would time his march to begin immediately after the arrival of the emissary. Eddard asked for suggestions. This person, unfortunately, could not be told of the true nature of the plan, as one wrong slip of the tongue could ruin everything. The message must be delivered along with the scroll that would be delivered to the Queen upon the arrival of the emissary.

Eddard had grimaced as he told them that sometimes one had to play the Game of Thrones.

Arya mooning and walking on clouds while thinking of a certain Targaryen Queen immediately came to Sansa’s mind. She knew just who to send.

The meeting continued on with suggestions being offered for the emissary. Sansa wanted to discuss her thoughts with her father in private. It was her sister all.

When the meeting ended and the members of the meeting started to file out Sansa asked her father if he could stay back for a few minutes. She had a personal matter to ask.
Her heart warmed like it always did when her father graced her with that soft almost shy smile.

Eddard

Eddard watched his daughter waiting for the room to empty. He was not sure what this was about. Was it about a suitor, or her mother? Something about the emissary?

“Father, I know just who we can send.” Sansa told him.

Sansa paused while Eddard waited a few long moments “Well, Sansa, tell me. You have proven to be quite innovative with your thinking. I can’t wait to hear who you think we should send. Robb? Theon?”

“Father, I think we should send Arya. You’ve seen how she is mooning over the Targaryen. She would be perfect!” Sansa said, excited at her own thinking and how clever she was being.

“She will thank us for this Father! Everyone with eyes that see can see how love struck Arya is.” Eddard watched his daughter chuckle. “I never thought I would see that! Arya will leap at the opportunity to go south and be your emissary and meet the new Queen. You know Arya … she’ll make quite the impact with her introduction to the Queen. She’ll probably try to impress the Targaryen with her bowman ship or something like that.”

Eddard watched his daughter calmly.

On the inside he was reeling.

“Sansa—That again is brilliant outside the box thinking” Eddard told his daughter softly.

He watched Sansa throw her shoulders back straighter at the praise.

Eddard sadly watched his daughter’s face fall and shoulders slump. She needed to learn the iron will of command.

“I’m sorry father. I didn’t think it through. I was being a silly romantic girl and not a mature leader who just happens to be a woman. Can you forgive me?”

Eddard gave her his patented half smile half grimace “I told you Sansa it is brilliant and that is why we are going to do it.”

“What? NO! We will not be putting Arya in danger!”

“Sansa, calm down.”

Sansa was still agitated, walking around waving her arms saying how stupid she had been.

“Sansa, we are going to send Arya south to be our emissary and so she can win the Queen’s love. I should have seen it for myself, but my male ego got in the way.”

His daughter stopped dead in her tracks and looked at her father strangely.

“Sansa I have not shared with you, Robb or my other advisors all the intelligence I receive. Some of it was seemingly irrelevant to our current crisis. Also, what I am about to tell you is of Daenerys Targaryen’s personal desires. Desires that normally have no part of a battlefield. One of the persistent rumors you hear constantly about the Queen in Essos, especially early on in her conquest was her … how should I say it—she fucked women, not men … I think the Queen is for some reason trying to hide it now, but she is gay Sansa—just like our wild wolf Arya.”

“You accept that?” Sansa answered back in a small voice.

Eddard wondered at his daughter’s strange reaction.

He took a deep calming breath. “I have been working at it for a long time now. I had my fears for a long time. Then the more I thought about it I wondered why I should fear it? Arya is who she is. She has chosen a difficult road. I’m just thankful that you have chosen a more straight path.” Eddard spoke, not seeing the double meaning.

“You’re thankful I’m straight and not gay like Arya.” Sansa spoke in a strange, strangled voice.

Eddard looked at his daughter. He tried to make a small joke “I think having to deal with one gay daughter is quite enough for one family, don’t you think?” he chuckled and came over and squeezed his daughter’s shoulder.

He wondered why she looked somewhat ill.

“It was Bran’s prophecies while he was in his deep sleep after his fall that made me fully see the truth. To see that Arya and Daenerys would be lovers. Now we can make it happen.”

“What do you mean?” Sansa said in a far away voice.

“What Bran kept saying throughout his coma. ‘The direwolf and dragon must lie together’. Your mother and everyone else assume it means that our two Great Houses will work together. That is not what it means. Not with our Arya. The words tell the truth.”

Eddard could see doubt in his daughter’s eyes.

“But what if it Robb that is destined to be the Queens consort? I think you are taking an extreme leap of faith, father.”

“Sansa, you need to learn to trust your instincts. I fully trust mine. The Queen is gay and our daughter is gay. Bran says the “the wolf must lie with the dragon”. His words while in his dream state often varied but the meaning remained the same. In this one phrase he never varied ‘wolf must lie with the dragon.’ If he had meant something else Sansa, Bran would have said other words with the same meaning.”

“We have two gay women of Great Houses. Our Arya is meant for the Queen. I am ashamed to think I did not see the correctness of sending Arya to the Queen myself. I am in your debt yet again, daughter.

“I have seen the Queen’s eyes. She is a fair woman. She will not harm our little Arya. She will take Arya as a hostage and someway, somehow, Arya will make our new Queen fall in love with her. I can feel it. I have prayed in the Godswood and the way the branches swirl and whisper in the breeze I know they agree.

“This will make all that was prophesied happen. Thank you Sansa.”

“And if you are wrong?”
Eddard took a deep breath “Then I will suffer the sin.”

“It is my idea.”

“But I am championing it, Sansa. These are great times. We must take great risks. What do you think Arya’s answer will be no matter the risk? She has, in a way, lived her whole life for this moment. Let’s not deny her destiny.”

Eddard watched his daughter smile a small smile. He knew she felt her sister’s potential danger acutely but she would learn to take chances as all great leaders must.

He would never have sent Arya South if Bran had not already told them the path to take.

Sansa looked at him “I had not considered that the Game of Thrones had such risks … it has all seemed only a game, in a way.”

“It is Sansa and you seeing this tells me you are indeed going to be a master at it … always consider all the angles and ramifications. You must do this to make the best decisions for all involved.”

Eddard sensed the conversation was finished and started to move out of the room.

“Father?”

Eddard stopped beside Sansa and turned to look at Sansa.

“It truly doesn’t bother you that Arya is gay?” his daughter asked in that strange strangled tone again.

Eddard gave her his small smile “Not anymore, Sansa.” He paused and attempted to lighten the mood “Just don’t you go and make your mother and me disappointed in you.” He said as he started to move out of the room, squeezing his daughter’s shoulder showing his love in the jest.

Not looking back he did not see the stricken look on Sansa’s face.

Arya

Arya walked the box across her room and set it resolutely down on the floor. She climbed on top of it and stood up on toes, leaning forward as her arms came up and around making a hoop. She leaned her face forward and puckered her lips. Her eyelids fluttered as she made a kissing noise and then, suddenly, she was wind milling her arms and fell off the box.

Dammit! Arya thought. Why did Daenerys Targaryen have to be so tall?

Arya picked up the box and went back across the room, then considered the walk with the box she had just finished. That would not do. She turned around, putting some wiggle in her walk, swaying her slender hips. She put the box down and climbed up with a sultry look. Much better. She felt much sexier as she looped her arms around her imaginary lover and practiced smooching.

She practiced a few more times. She was just beginning to feel confident when she had a distressing thought - what if there were no chairs or boxes when they met?

She pondered her dilemma. She stood before her imaginary, tall Queen and bent her knees deep, then jumped up high and looped her arms up to catch the back of the pale Queen’s neck. She practiced this for a minute.

Arya thought his might have some merit. She would have to loop her strong legs around the Queen’s waist and then clench her body against the Queen’s. She would feel Arya’s warm body pressed to her. She would feel her puffy nipples and wet pussy jammed into her stomach as she shimmied up to kiss the Targaryen silly. Yes. She would use her body to seduce the Queen.

Wait a minute! They would be fully clothed. She would not feel how wet she made me! Arya wondered if she could ask for a private initial meeting. Then she could strip down and jump up on the Queen. Yes, that might work. No, wait a minute! The queen would still be fully clothed. That might be a problem.

Arya pondered the truly meaningful questions of her time.

Then a frightful thought crossed her mind.

Arya ran to her closet and pulled out the many dresses that her mother had had commissioned for her to wear to impress suitors. Dresses she had always refused to wear! They were frilly, lacy things that made her heart beat cold. She felt a cold sweat running down her back holding them one by one up to her body and looking at the full length mirror on one wing of her dressing screen.

She moved over to her dresser, categorizing all the makeup that she almost never used at all, at most just a little on special occasions or to cover bruises.

What if the Queen was a woman who wanted her woman to be in dresses and in full makeup? What if Daenerys wanted a girly girl? Arya nearly fainted at the thought. She sat down on the bed with a queasy stomach. No, that couldn’t be.

A warrior queen would want a warrior at her side. Yes. Yes, that was right. Like attracted like, Arya thought desperately to herself. Arya saw the irrefutable logic of her thoughts and felt much better about her situation. She put the dresses haphazardly back in the closet.

But maybe Daenerys was the type of woman that wanted to conquer her woman. Arya got in the middle of the room and practiced batting her eyelashes and making girly noises as she exposed her neck in submission, displaying her desire to be mounted and taken. She giggled and swished her hips.

Arya was feeling a little queasy again, but she would do what she had to do to get her woman. That calmed the Stark as she continued practicing being the coquette. She would let the Queen be the passionate suitor and her the damsel to begin with if that was what it took to capture her Queen. Once she had the woman in bed... she would show her how a wolf really behaved.

Arya paused a moment. She sure hoped she knew what a wolf did in bed. She looked around, gnawing her lip. She guessed she would just have to wing that part. She howled into the night and Nymeria howled back, and Arya suddenly felt much more confident.

Arya eyed where her imaginary six-foot-six Queen stood. The Queen stood patiently waiting for her wolf to declare her adoration for her.

Arya thought of how a wolf would declare its passion, tapping her foot. Ruminating, Arya decided a wolf would spring upon its mate.

Arya took off forward, springing high in the air with arms forming a hoop as she pounced on her future Queen and mate.

Daenerys
Daenerys walked around her personal quarters making sure all was ready. The servants had come in fifteen minutes ago with the spread of food on the back table. The food was mainly a light repast of finger foods and bowls of chopped up melons and various berries along with cherries. A large bowl of tossed salad - lettuce, tomatoes, cucumbers and peppers all diced and mixed together.

Dany smiled at the large tub of locusts that had been set up on a step stool by the chaise that sat before the fireplace. She had to make sure that Strong Belwas was not left in a ‘famished’ state. Daenerys looked around again. She spied the poker deck of cards and chips on the main table. Tonight she would win!

The Queen wanted her Klutch of Confidantes meetings to be both a meeting of advisors but more importantly a meeting of friends. She treasured these times with her most trusted friends.

Dany moved to the mirror over her dresser and admired herself. She had to admit she was one hot woman in her Dothraki garb. She wore the traditional vest unhooked, allowing her breasts to move freely. She wore a short skirt that barely covered her ass and coochie. Her feet and lower legs were strapped into riding sandals. She had a medium width belt on with a bronze medallion that depicted a rearing mare throwing its hooves at the sky. She missed the days when she rode thus on the back of Silver.

She had been so free and alive then. She was happy then but she at times felt hemmed in by the strictures of being Queen of Westeros. She loved the open sky and the feel of a horses’s gait between her legs. She pressed her thighs together loving the friction. She missed her harem she had had when she was Khaleesi.

Daenerys Targaryen never wanted to forget her time as Khaleesi of Khal Drogo’s Khalasar. It was there that her desire and dreams of conquest and becoming the Mother of Dragons was born. It was there that she first dreamed of being great. She had begun to dream there to become Queen of Westeros. Now she was that and so much more.

There was a polite knock on the door and she was broken out of her reverie. Daenerys shook her head and went to answer the door. She opened it and spotted her closest friends together talking and laughing together. She felt warmth rush through her at seeing her friends so relaxed with each other. Most of them had known each other for over five years, and the newest addition fit effortlessly right in.

They all streamed in laughing except for Missandei. She was looking down nervously. There Daenerys observed her caracal, Shadowclaw. The cat looked at her with its yellow eyes. The cat was roughly thirty-five pounds and over three feet long, and about twenty inches tall at the shoulders. It had a short tail and large ears, each ear adorned with black tufts nearly two inches long on the tips.

Shadowclaw’s fur was a tawny brown with red highlights. Its sides and back lined with black streaks. Her belly was covered in white fur that ran up her throat to her chin. Black lines ran from her eyes to the nose. Her fur coat was short and very dense. Her ears were lightly colored in the front black at the back.

Daenerys looked from the cat’s intelligent pupils back up at Missandei. Her interpreter cleared her throat.

“Can Shadowclaw join us? She whines something frightful when I leave to come to our Klutch meetings. She then gives me the cold shoulder and offended eye for the next day. She really wants to join us.”

The cat came over to Daenerys and rubbed up against her legs and purred lightly. Dany had always liked the cat.

“I would be pleased to have your caracal join us, Missandei.” The Queen bent down and scratched the cat behind her ears, its purrs nearly shaking the cat on its feet. The Queen got up and stepped aside, and the cat sauntered in like she owned the whole castle. She now probably thought she did.

Missandei and Dany came last into the room. Jhago resumed his position as guard at the door. The five Unsullied ranged up and down the royal halls on constant patrol. Dany closed the door behind her.

They all put together a plate of food and walked to the table except for Strong Belwas. He went to ‘his’ chair and sat in it, then devoured his heaping plate of food all the while saying he was famished and nearly was too weak to put food in his mouth. He gulped his food down like a famished dog, chasing it down with mead.

Missandei had set down a plate with carved ham and roast on the floor. The cat nibbled on its meal, her tongue constantly licking her lips, enjoying her repast.

Soon Belwas was finished with his first course and had started to stuff his mouth with his ever sought after locusts. He hummed and gave out moans of gluttonous glee eating his insects.

This caught Shadowclaw’s attention and the cat wandered over and sat on its haunches, looking up expectantly at Belwas for some locusts. The man looked down at the cat. “Go away! I need to eat to replenish my depleted reserves. I am weakened unto death!”

“Meow.”

“No. I refuse your entreaties. I am immune to your pretty eyes! They are all for me!”

“Meow?”

Shadowclaw turned her head slowly right and left looking at the handfuls of locust being stuffed in the eunuch’s mouth. The cat licked its lips.

“I will not give in!”

“Meow”

“Never!” Belwas bellowed as Daenerys watched the interchange. He went to stuff another handful into his mouth and a big locust slipped from between his fingers, hitting the ground.

Shadowclaw pounced on it and got it between her paws, lying down and chewing the head off and slurping the stub of the thoracic with her tongue. She chewed and gnawed the locust until only one foot fell to the ground.

She then looked up, and Belwas accidentally let another locust slip through his fingers. The caracal swiped the locust into her paws as she gnawed happily.

Whenever she ate a locust, Belwas ‘accidentally’ dropped another locust to the floor. The man never dropped locusts till tonight.

Daenerys chuckled. Softie.

Her and her other companions enjoyed their light meal talking of the days events and sharing funny anecdotes, their laughter tinkling in the night air. Daenerys treasured these times with her closest friends.

She worked with Tyrion on designing a campaign of education on hygiene and beginning the control and hopeful eradication of rats and other vermin. She wanted to drill more wells in the poor quarters for the populace. She also talked to Tyrion about water towers like she had seen in Volantis for public baths to help promote hygiene and health. This would reduce medical costs for the realm and for individuals. The reduction of sick days would increase productivity. This would put more money in merchants pockets, and increase wages for the working man. More wages would provide more taxes. A healthy realm would be a happier kingdom.

With Syrio she planned for a training schedule for her troops. She was starting to cycle her Essos troops back to their homes and wanted her remaining troops in top physical condition and cross training disciplines to improve their martial prowess against foes they had not faced before.

She had learned to value asymmetrical warfare on her march across Essos and wanted to start teaching it to her armed forces.

They talked for another thirty minutes before it was time for poker. Dany had pulled the servants bell that sounded down in the kitchen. The servants came up and cleaned off the food from the table.

Daenerys looked over at Strong Belwas. As per usual by now he was leaned back on his chaise, snoring as he slept. She and Missandei got up and spread out over his rotund form several throw blankets. He smiled up at them sleepily. Daenerys felt her heart clutch. He was like a little boy.

They went back to play their game. They laughed and played hands of poker with a lot of jibbing and taunts. It was good night for a change as she was winning most of the hands. She loved seeing Tyrion with the sour look on his face.

Daenerys looked over at Belwas and touched Missandei’s arm, pointing over to the fireplace. Missandei’s face split into a big smile. On Belwas’s stomach lay Shadowclaw. She had her hind limbs on one side of his stomach and her head and front legs hanging down the other side of his big belly - fast asleep.

Daenerys went back to her game with a big smile on her face.
... prophecies are so subtle and dangerous. The inevitability of a prophecy once heard. History is full of mighty heroes, great houses, fighting to avoid their fate, and, thus, only ensuring they fulfill their prophecies of doom and destruction. Westeros had its prophecy … one of death, one of destruction; one of doom and potential victory at the birth of Spring but so much pain, so much loss … Strife and discord the crucibles of destiny; the fires that create greatness... The death of Jon Arryn was prophesied by seers of old. His death would spring forth great events and great devastation BUT eventual victory over the forces of darkness and death. The seers say that only great suffering and supreme heartache can forge the strongest human metal … … … Jon Arryn did not die … … … now the fates are in disarray! Can victory still be achieved? The price would have been great, but, would it not have been worth it to overcome the Wight King? … … I wonder … what new prophecy will arise from the ashes of what might have been … will a new Phoenix arise … one with a nobler more enlightened vision … one of Hope … one of Reclamation …

Melisandre again looked over what she had written. She looked down at the parchment, and then out into the dark skies of Asshai. The sounds of unspeakable monsters were loud in the distance, but that was not what had disturbed her soul so. She picked up the parchment and read her words again, musing over the news that had just reached her from Westeros.

She was a rogue witch among her kin - she walked her own path. The other powerful mages saw no reason to trouble themselves with events on the other side of the world. They were unconcerned that the prophecy had not come true.

The match had not been struck that was to launch the war of resolution. The war that was to forge the heroes in that far, distant land into the weapons they were destined to be. They needed this forging to become what was needed to defeat the rising enemy of ice and darkness.

Her fellow warlocks and witches simply didn’t care. So what if Westeros was reduced to a frozen waste? They were safe; the danger a world away. If the problem came east, they would take care of it then.

Light would always defeat night. The one was stronger than the other, always. It was hogwash that this “Wight King” could cause permanent night and winter. The world turned around the sun. Spring followed winter, summer followed spring, fall followed summer and finally winter followed fall. The seasons had always been thus, and would always continue to be.

Melisandre tried to make them see that this was something new. Their people had not yet achieved enlightenment from R’hllor when last this menace arose. Something had released it from its icy grave. That was as frightening as the rising of the Wight King himself – the question of how had he been released.
And the answer terrified her.

The seers had foreseen this moment for three centuries. A Falcon that had a hand for its right talon would die poisoned, while trying to defend a stag drunk in a river of wine. The Falcon killed by the mockingbird with a poisoned berry, the Stag gored by a boar while crossing the river of wine.

Finally, all the right persons were in place for fulfillment of the prophecy. Melisandre had waited for word that Jon Arryn the Falcon had been poisoned by Petyr Baelish the Mockingbird. She had foreseen in her flames that this man was cunning, devious and extremely intelligent. He would succeed in his schemes and in doing so, ignite war.

It was the war that would forge the three young scions of three of the mighty Houses of that far away land. The war would eventually take the dragon reborn Stannis Baratheon up north to the wall to confront the Ice King.

It would be Melisandre’s duty to help him become Azor Ahai. She had been prepared to make her journey.

The seers had been so sure, and so had Melisandre. She was so sure of the destiny proclaimed in the flames. She could write great novels from her visions; visions of war, and the forging of great heroes through pain and suffering.

Then the news came to Asshai that Petyr Baelish had been executed; his accomplice caught in the attempted act of poisoning her husband. Melisandre had been shocked and dismayed.

Jon Arryn’s death had been absolutely necessary. It had been guaranteed by the flames. How could she and all the seers have been so wrong?

Despite this misstep, the seers remained undisturbed. Visions were always difficult to interpret. This time they had been wrong. “Get over it Melisandre,” was their sage advice.

She had not argued. What could she say? Her soul had turned to ice. There would be no forging. Stannis would not move north to be near the Wall. There would be no Azor Ahai reborn. One event presaged the next and now none of them would occur.

She was no longer sure, but in her initial readings of the flame besides Stannis Baratheon, Daenerys Targaryen had been the most crucial to the defeat of Night. She saw that the girl was to be slowly forged into a great leader. But as always, the flames were very difficult to read. She would focus on Stannis, and then see confusing images of a silent albino direwolf and a crow wielding a bastard sword.

The Targaryen also caused conflicting images. She kept seeing dragons with the girl. It was clear that Stannis on Dragonstone was the heir to dragons; not some wisp of a girl who was obviously weak and of no account.

Then, Melisandre saw the girl slowly becoming stronger in her rule. She began filled with doubt, unsure of herself and that made her seem less than she was. But she would, over time, grow to be a strong leader. Her strength would slowly increase as she wound her way back to her homeland.

Melisandre saw in the flames that this woman would amass a large army.

She assumed that in time Stannis Baratheon and this Targaryen would wed and create a new rule in Westeros after they defeated the Ice King.

Melisandre had also seen a bitch direwolf who would lose its face and forget itself for a while before putting its face back on. This strange direwolf would be instrumental in the final garroting of the Ice King.

For some reason in her flames she kept seeing the Dragon and the Direwolf lying together when it clearly should have been the Stag and the Dragon. Melisandre mused that after two thousand years, the flames could still be confounding even to a strong mage such as herself.

With the death of Peytr Baelish, all of that would be lost.

The flames had shown her that only with the war of five kings could all the pieces be forged and put in the right places of where and when they would be needed.

The children would not be forged, and the future Azor Ahai would have no reason to move north. Her flames told her this stern man would reject her out of hand if she approached him without the goad of war to spur him into action. His sense of honor and the lack of danger would keep him in Dragonstone.

She was paralyzed with doubt. She finally decided that she would remain in Asshai and study even more deeply into the flames.

All of her time was thrown into the flames she loved.

She would continue looking into them, and hope for improved divination.

Five years ago

Melisandre stared into the flames in total despair. The forces of darkness were indeed going to triumph over R’hllo and light. She was lost in her soul. And of course, her fellow witches and warlocks saw no reason to feel any discord.

Melisandre had used the last year to begin a journey to a much clearer understanding of the path that R’hllo meant for his pieces on the chessboard to take. Pieces that she was sure were of great value before now plagued her with grave doubts. Her vision had become quite clear on one thing, though: Daenerys Targaryen was both Queen and King. She was the lynchpin of destiny.

It was around her which all things would spin. This last scion of the Dragon was the force that would rally Westeros to victory with her leading the forces of light. She now knew that Stannis was not the one who would lead. She had begun to doubt that he was Azor Ahai, as well. She had let mere geography cloud her interpretation of the flames.

Daenerys Targaryen was indeed the mother of dragons. When the rumors reached Asshai that she had hatched three dragons, Melisandre’s world had been rocked to the core. When she next looked in the flames she had cursed herself a fool. The flames clearly showed a white haired woman riding a black behemoth of a dragon. The woman was always at the forefront of battle, leading the forces of R’hllo to victory.

She would find Azor reborn and a direwolf and lead them into battle with her. Together they would defeat the Ice Wight King. They would be needed. Her visions in the flame had become even more dark and dire.

Some lost denizen of the dark night had formed an unholy union with Ice King, and his power had grown exponentially. He would lead his forces south with great prosecution and vengeance. His forces were growing mighty indeed.

The only positive from Jon Arryn’s life not being forfeit was that regicide did not occur in Westeros.
The mighty Houses were still intact, and their power would be brought to bear against the Ice King. Their downfall was that they had forgotten magic. They would not be able to withstand the magic that the Ice King would bring to bear against them should war be waged.

That was where she, Melisandre, would step in. She would be limited by their lack of belief and unwillingness to make the necessary sacrifice to R’hllor, but she would make do. She would throw herself in the breach and sacrifice her life to provide the magical assault against their common foe.

She would ensure that Azor Ahai would be reborn, whomever he was, and lead him to the Wall to meet his destiny along with the Dragon and the Direwolf.

Or at least, that’s what she had planned to do. That was finished now. The war had been lost before it had even started. Darkness would consume and defeat the forces of light. First Westeros would fall, and then in time Essos as well. The forces of night, ice and death would be marching ever eastward until even Asshai was cast into eternal night and frozen death.

She would almost enjoy the looks on her fellow magi faces as they were cast down. She would laugh into all of their disbelieving faces as they fell before the unstoppable Ice King.

The Dragon had fallen.

With her death, all hope was gone. Only her fire, passion and light could withstand and conquer the forces of darkness. She was not a follower of R’hllor, but she would do his bidding regardless and defeat his eternal enemy.

The flames had shown her the horrible truth. The girl was the key. She had survived so many perils to begin her road of self-discovery. Melisandre had felt her hope rising as the young dragon grew strong mentally and physically, growing into her destiny as a regal regent.

She would amass a great army and learn the ways of the Game of Thrones to gather the forces necessary to throw down the Ice King.

No more. It would not be the Wight King that threw down the Dragon, but a silly, small man that doomed the world. A man filled with false rage and fear of a small girl. A force he himself had created years before. He himself had created the girl in so many ways, and now had killed her.

Hope was no more.

The Ice King was assured his victory.

Three years ago

The last two years had been a wilderness for Melisandre. Her life was one long night of despair and a forlorn sense of helplessness. She had not felt this way since the passing of Tygreti so many centuries ago. Melisandre’s life was without meaning or import.

Only her stubborn will kept her going; she would not roll over and die. She would confront and be quickly killed by the Ice King and his demon baby son, as she had come call the evil thing the Ice king had formed an unholy alliance with.

Like the good priestess of R’hllor she still was, Melisandre continued to study the flames for all the good it would do her. She was sure now that Stannis Baratheon was not Azor Ahai reborn, but that Jon Snow was in fact that avatar.

She had seen his face from the beginning when she concentrated on Azor’s fate in the coming war, but discounted it thinking him merely a crow defending the wall.

But still, it did not matter. Without the Dragon, none of it mattered. Destiny was only delayed slightly without the great war of the Five Kings to spur developments on in Westeros.

The Dragon was not slowly moving across Essos, learning how to be a Queen using guile and will to bend powers to her bidding.

Life was just moving forward at a sedate pace.

It was a false Summer that would bypass Fall. No… this Summer would lead directly to a bitter, never-ending winter that would consume all of the world that she knew.

Melisandre did not weep. She had not wept since Tygreti had been murdered defending her. She never slept, but still sometimes had nightmarish visions of her death. By R’hllor she missed her wife still, when she was not able to suppress the memories and pain.

Then out of nowhere Melisandre’s life had been reborn anew. Reports were flooding out of the Red Wastes of Essos that a white haired woman had emerged from the desert like lightning. She had conquered the great Khalasar that had banished her, and become its new Khal.

They proclaimed her as the Mare Who Would Mount the World.

And still, the woman was not satisfied with that. She had quickly flown South to take Qarth. Melisandre could not help but smile at that news. The Valyrian had totally destroyed the House of the Undying, crippling the Warlocks ranks.

Even now, she was gathering her forces and forming new alliances. She was becoming a mighty force already, and had merely begun her destiny.

Melisandre had sat back, stunned by the reports. Jon Arryn’s death would have formed a totally different woman from the one who had emerged from the red desert. Where her first visions had Daenerys Targaryen form her following with guile, wit and diplomacy, this one was a direct, ruthless, efficient warlord. She did not ask; she demanded and took.

Melisandre gauged the young woman from the reports she heard. She conquered her enemies with ruthless aplomb. She would ask for their surrender and then annihilate them if they lacked the wisdom to accede. Like foolish men the world over, they never took the road of wisdom. They paid the price. Many the ultimate price.

The red priestess was pleased by what the woman did after her conquests. She broke the chains of the slaves and was already trying to establish a new world order without slavery. She was using alliances to quickly set up new patterns of trade based on economics of commerce and production rather than the cruelty of human servitude.

This was a woman Melisandre would gladly follow if her destiny allowed such choices. This was a woman worth following and swearing allegiance to. She had already accomplished so much. She had conquered the first slave city and freed all the slaves, unlike all her predecessors who merely sought to establish themselves as the new slave owners.

She had formed an alliance with the Summer Islanders, who she always admired as a noble and lofty people.

Melisandre contemplated the way prophecy was changing before her eyes in the flames. It was as if the fates were weaving a new tapestry from the filaments of doubts and of confusion.
Azor was already at the Wall defending the realm. She did not have to worry about getting him there.

The Dragon was becoming mighty on her own after her transformation in the desert. Melisandre had no idea and would give her left eye to the flames to know just what exactly could have transformed the sweet, gentle child she had first seen into this warlord hell bent on her mission of destroying slavery. This Daenerys Targaryen was successfully annihilating a trade that existed for five thousand years.

The Red Woman mused on the craftiness of the young woman. She was indeed crushing the slave trade, but also amassing the army and navy she would need to conquer her homeland at the same time.

The forces she would amass if she succeeded in her plan of conquering Essos would be truly staggering. The sheer audacity to even dream of the feat was jaw-dropping. The woman had the ability to dream greatness, and evidently the sheer onions to actually accomplish it.

It seemed the flames had found their way around the event of prophecy having not been fulfilled. All were finding another path except the Direwolf. It was absolutely clear in the prophecy and in the flames that Melisandre had spent years looking at that one of the current Stark daughters were to be forged by the fires of despair and hate into a weapon to be used against the Ice King and right the ill forces that would gather in Westeros.

One of the daughters was to go to Braavos and enter into the House of Black and White and come out a trained, dispassionate killer to do the work of R’hollr, using various agents to achieve his will.

The lack of the warfare had kept the forces of evil from gathering south of the wall. Those services were no longer needed of the Direwolf. But the ‘weapon’ was primarily being forged to deliver the killing stroke to the Ice King. Will was as important as steel in killing the vile Ice Lord; its succubus son even more so required that killing stroke be delivered.

The Direwolf was to deliver the fatal blow. The Direwolf that was to be trained into hardened Valeryian steel in the House of Black and White. Instead, that wolf was safe and sound in Winterfell, living a life of peace and comfort. She was not being forged into the hard-edged weapon she needed to become.

All was in flux, but Melisandre now felt that maybe, just maybe, the fates could indeed defeat the Ice King. The old path had been sure and the new one filled with doubts, but it just might be possible.

She had to hope the Direwolf, too, would find absolution.

She was sure that wolf and dragon would form an alliance of some sort. Through that alliance, Melisandre had to hope the Wolf would be forged into the weapon she needed to become.

Two years ago

It was time to leave for Westeros. The pieces were slowly moving in place. The time she had spent looking into the flames over the last five years had made her visions so much clearer.

She now knew for a surety that Jon Snow, or more accurately Jon Targaryen was the dragon she had been seeking. To combine a dragon who was heat made flesh with the spirit of Azor Ahai would indeed make him a great warrior.

Fortunately the flames had also revealed he had a wife or very soon would in all but name. She would be sacrificed to make Jon Snow—Targaryen - the true Earthly manifestation of Azor.
She had not been able to see her face clearly, but one could not miss the fiery red hair. She felt an unease deep in her soul and belly. She thought back two millennium to her own lost love. She had fiery hair like that. She loved playing with it after her love had gone to sleep spread all out over her after exhausting lovemaking. The woman had been nearly a full foot shorter than her, she remembered.

She had a hard time seeing her face now. She had worked hard to not see her face in her flames or in her dreams back when she still needed to sleep.

She shook her head. This was about the here and now, and what she had to accomplish.

The dragon had completely shattered Slaver’s Bay. This made Melisandre smile. As a shadow-bender she was supposed to be above such mundane matter of affair of state, but fuck them. She was ecstatic to see the slave trade abolished. She herself had been a slave once.

Melisandre was sure that the dragon would eventually set her aim on her homeland. She would support her, if she was still alive.

The woman had just conquered Lys, which had only put up token resistance. The state was known more for pleasure than than fighting anyways.

The woman had made it very clear to Tyrosh and Myr that they would need to divest themselves of all slaves and set them up as free persons and help establish them in trade or find transportation to anywhere they desired with very adequate support, the scrolls had specified.

Melisandre liked it. It was just vague enough to make the slave owners sweat.

Pentos had already fully expunged all slaves that were not so secretly hidden. The Dragon Queen had made it clear she would be most displeased if she found any slaves. The word ‘Dracarys’ was now used to scare unrepentant children at night.

The woman had amassed a huge army from her crushed cities and alliances. The Dothraki were mostly under her sway and had brought the interior of Essos under her control. She used them to garrison all of the slave cities, except for Qarth. This freed her other forces for her ever westward march back to her homeland.

She would in the not-too-distant future finally sail back to Westeros in victory. That was assured now. Then it was only matter of time before she would march North.

Melisandre could pray to R’hollr that she marched proactively and met the threat at the Wall. That would give the forces of light the greatest chance of victory.

Her only fear was the Direwolf. The woman had not been forged with one beat of the smith’s hammer in the fires of pain and suffering. Body and spirit had not been honed.

She was still unsure which woman would go to the Queen. Whichever it was, the young woman would journey to the Queen and declare her allegiance. But the flames refused to let Melisandre see which would be chosen.

She hoped it would be the eldest with the red hair. She was tall, and had a nice figure. She had long given up any physical lust, but she was still partial to redheads. She could be a powerful warrior with that tall body.

Melisandre could only hope that the Stark girl had it within her to make herself into the weapon she needed to become. She sensed the dragon Queen would take the woman under her wing to develop her fighting skills and prowess.

Recently, Melisandre had come to see also that they would also become lovers. She had to smile softly. She knew her soul was too cold for it now after two thousand years, but what she would give to fall in love again.
Melisandre

Melisandre was happy to be on dry land again. She had enough of riding a ship in rolling waves. It did not matter how many centuries she had lived, she still felt her stomach roiling with seasickness.

One would think her magic could fully suppress the sensations, she thought as she sipped her ginger antidote again. She got off the ship after paying the captain for passage.

She immediately went in search of transportation to the wall. She had much to do and little time to do it. The fires had recently made it clear that she had to make ready for Azor Ahai reborn.

Melisandre still could not believe how she once thought that Stannis Baratheon had been the new avatar of the hero from the distant past. Since the fates had been thrown askew, she had seen her visions in the flame become much clearer. She had even seen visions of her former lover from so many centuries ago. Strange, that. She could still remember her bright red hair, though not the details of her face. She still felt her heart clench when she thought of Tygreti.

Her teacher and lover had been the best diviner of the flames Melisandre ever met. She had even divined her own death, and saved Melisandre when they came for her.

She soon had transportation heading to the Wall and Castle Black. She needed be there in time to save her charge.

She stared out at the woods as she sat on the cart heading to Hornwood. It was raining, and she let the drops fall down on her uncovered head, soaking her auburn locks. It ran down her face and throat as she tilted her head up.

She hated her existence sometimes. Actually, more and more as the long years had rolled on. She was always in service of her god. It was all she ever had, except for nearly sixty years in her youth.
She felt as ancient at moments like this.

She was to save Ygritte of the Wildlings. She would not die with an arrow in her heart. She would die with her heart pierced on the sword of Jon Snow when he became Azor Ahai. Was not the ends worth the means? She shook her head and put her hood up. God it was hateful. She was to save a life only to sacrifice it later - all her sins in service to her god.

But she would not shirk from her duty. She never had since Tygreti died. She never had her lover’s compassion and willingness to take a path not clearly shown in the flames.

She was tired. So, so tired. She never slept anymore, and did not have the surcease of dreams and simple rest to give her respite from her duty and the knowledge of what she must do to fulfill it.

She knew that getting Jon Snow to sacrifice his lover to become Azor Ahai was going to be difficult.
She would push the woman on his blade if she had to. Only if the Ice King was confronted by Azor reborn along with the Wolf and Dragon could he be defeated. Else, the Ice King would conquer all of Westeros and then the rest of the world.

Azor must kill his wife to give his sword the strength it needed. The legends were clear. The fact that Ygritte would not willingly go on the blade like Nissa Nissa had though, made her stomach churn.

She had murdered so many times in the name of her god; this would be the last. After the great war was settled and won she would give herself to the flames she had so long worshiped. She was tired, and would greet the flames as a lover. It was appropriate, the flames had always reminded her of Tygreti’s bright red hair. She would die in agony as she had sent so many to do before her. But where they died in anguish and anger, she would die happy. She would finally be with Tygreti again.

But first she must help defeat the Ice King. His hatred knew no limits.

///// She rode her horse hard to reach Castle Black in time. The damn rain had delayed her, making the roads near impassable in places. Up ahead, she saw the turmoil of conflict. She flew off her horse as she approached the confusion of combat, cloaking herself in shadows as she strode around the battlefield unseen. Those who would start to run at her would simply veer off to the side on their own. She searched for a woman with bright red hair in the flickering light of the flames around the keep that illuminated that the battlefield.

Had she arrived too late? That was not possible!

Melisandre looked around desperately. There! She was by the wagon looking for a target to shoot with her bow. Why did humans always insist on killing each other over such petty things? Their true enemy was the Wight King.

She felt this was the critical moment she needed to prevent. She brought out her knife and sliced her palm deep, drinking her own blood. She had already painted her body with the sigils and runes, and she began chanting the mystical incantations. She had already consumed the necessary herbs and potions.

Melisandre felt her bones melting and twisting into new shapes. Her blood boiled in her veins. She did not have royal blood to create the beast, only her own body to offer. Agony filled her being as her face became something horrible to gaze upon.

Without royal blood, Melisandre had to use her own body as the template to bind the shadow demon to. Horrific as it was, she found the thought oddly appropriate. Had she not become a demon herself over the centuries? Did not the end justify the means?

A horrible scream filled the battlefield, and crow and wildling alike all paused. A hideous monster of shadow was suddenly upon the combatants, a monster that had a red star burning in its throat and a face both twisted and hideous. Its legs and arms were unnaturally long with claws for toes and talons for fingers. Huge dagger-like teeth jutted up and down from the elongated jaws of the monster. Its head swiveled, looking for its enemies.

Both sides fell before the monstrous killing shadow. Bodies were torn to shreds and heads crushed in the pressing palms of the hideous monster, annihilating all it met. The monster crawled easily up the wall of the tower, lifting wilding and crows alike, hurling them down to their deaths. It came up on the rampart of the tower, then rushed forward, its razor teeth and jaws decapitating the crow about to
The beast roared again when the woman took an arrow in her thigh. Two wildlings with long spears attacked the monster shadow. They were met with a deadly embrace, the monster crushing their bones to a pulp just before its strength began to fade.

Such magic only lasted a short time.

The monster picked up the red-haired woman, who had passed out from the pain of the arrow embedded in her leg. Suddenly, an inhuman shriek filled the air and a spear jutted out from between the shoulders of the black beast. Dark ichor spilled to the ground and hissed as it bubbled. The monster fell to one knee before clambering back to its feet, running off at an inhuman speed.

Ygritte

Ygritte woke feeling wane and exhausted. Her left leg throbbed painfully, and her body was full of fire. She barely had any strength. She turned her head and saw a huge fireplace with a roaring fire keeping the small cottage she was in warm. She then noticed the chair in front of the fire. In it reclined a tall woman with long, deep auburn hair. Her head was tilted over the back of the chair, and she was unconscious and moaning.

She too looked pale and drawn. Her face twisted with her moans, and she spoke in some language Ygritte did not understand. The woman’s eyes opened suddenly, unseeing as they stared at her. Her head lifted slightly and she cried out “Tygreti, Tygreti!” followed by desperate words in her strange tongue followed by a blood-curdling scream. Then the woman went limp, as tears streamed down her face.

Ygritte followed her back into unconsciousness.

When Ygritte awoke again, she was feverish and her mouth felt bone dry. Her sight was blurry, and her entire body ached. She turned her head to look at the fire but the chair before it was empty.

“Here, drink this,” a deep female voice spoke beside her. Ygritte turned her head and saw the face of the beautiful woman who’d been dreaming earlier. Her face was long and angular, framed by that beautiful, deep auburn hair. She had a strange red ruby on her throat held by a red choker. Despite her beauty, she looked haggard.

The woman held a glass to Ygritte’s lips, and she drank the water gratefully.

“How long have we been here?” Ygritte asked the woman.

“We have been here almost four days now,” the woman replied while straightening up. She was tall compared to Ygritte’s five-foot-two inch height. “The arrow pierced your artery, and you nearly bled out. I barely managed to save your life.”

“Why did you save me? What happened to that monster I saw? It was horrible.” Ygritte said with a shudder. The woman placed her hand on Ygritte’s forehead.

“You’re still feverish. Here, eat this this.” The red woman sat down beside Ygritte’s bed with a bowl in her hand.

Ygritte settled back and ate the broth as it was spooned to her, noticing the hand on the utensil shook slightly. Her savior was clearly still weak herself.

“You didn’t answer my question.” Ygritte said when the woman dabbed some soup off of her cheek.

“I saved you because you have an important role to play in the future. You are a very important woman, Ygritte.”

“Of course I am. I’ve been kissed by the sun!” the Wildling crowed weakly. “What is your name by the way ... I need to thank my savior.” Ygritte’s eyes narrowed in concern when the woman’s hand suddenly shook violently, spilling the soup out of the spoon.

“I’m sorry Ygritte ... I am not well myself.” The woman grimaced, then filled the spoon and began feeding Ygritte tenderly again. “My name is Melisandre. I am from the land of Asshai.”

“Where is that?”

“Far away, clear across the world.”

“Why are you here, then?”

“I told you.”

“I know, I’m special, but there is another reason why you are here. I’m not that special. And what happened to that monster?” Ygritte finished the last of the broth.

“Azor Ahai is about to be reborn. You know him already as Jon Snow. He will have a wife, which just so happens to be you. You are very important to his destiny.” Melisandre answered, her eyes skittering away from Ygritte.

Ygritte knew she was not telling her the full truth. She felt like she could read the woman very well for some reason.

“You’re keeping something from me, woman. I don’t like it.” Ygritte ground out. Suddenly, she felt tired and weak again. She looked at the bowl suspiciously.

“There was nothing but medicinal herbs in the chicken broth, Ygritte. You are safe with me.” Ygritte saw the woman grimace as her eyes skittered away again.

“And the monster, Melisandre?” Ygritte asked again. For some reason she knew the question was important.

“I’m the monster, Ygritte. That was my soul you saw.” The woman turned around and pulled her robe off one shoulder, revealing her back. Ygritte gasped, seeing a horrible wound in the middle of her back that was weeping blood and a thick black ichor. “How did you survive? You should be dead, woman.” Ygritte said with a small voice.

“It takes a lot to kill a priestess of Azor. I’m over two thousand years old, Ygritte. Go to sleep. Heal.” Ygritte watched the woman pull the robe back on carefully.

Ygritte was too tired to argue.

///// When Ygritte awoke again she felt much better. Her fever was gone, and so too the weakness. She got up slowly and walked over to the chair with the sleeping woman in it.
Her face was not as haggard now, and she was indeed a beautiful woman. She pushed the red hair out of her face. Her face seemed familiar for some reason, and she felt attracted to the strange woman who had saved her.

Melisandre awoke suddenly and sprang out of the chair. “Don’t touch me!” she gasped, backing away from the wildling.

“I’ll touch whomever I want, woman … if I want to touch you I will.” Ygritte said, looking the taller woman in the eyes as she backed away.

Although she wasn’t sure why, she felt a strong sexual attraction to the priestess. She had slept with a few young lasses before, when no man had caught her eye. The sex had been awesome, but she had never felt the pull she felt with this woman. She had only felt the pull with men. That pull had been a complete vortex with Jon Snow. She felt the ghost of that feeling with this strange woman.

Melisandre fixed a large meal for Ygritte, and she fell on the food at the table like a famished wolf. She had nearly eaten her fill when she finally noticed she had not seen the red woman take a single bite, and told her to join her.

“I don’t eat, Ygritte. I long ago stopped eating. I have no need.”

“Yes.”

“Then join me anyways. The food is good!” Ygritte watched the woman slowly sit down at the table and nibble on a chunk of bread without enthusiasm. The woman sat as if she was constipated.

“Relax, Melisandre.” Ygritte told the woman. The woman remained ramrod straight. “Take that stick out of your ass and relax I said, woman!” Ygritte told the stubborn priestess.

She watched Melisandre’s face curl into a near-sneer. “You have the couth of a backroom Lysene whore, Ygritte.” She said with disdain.

“Yeah, whatever. Nothing wrong with whores. When was the last time you got laid anyways?” she shot back.

She sucked in a breath when the tall woman shot up off the bench and stalked off to the fire hearth, looking intently into it.

Ygritte quickly finished her meal. Although the red woman was insufferable, she did feel some guilt. Some. She got up and joined the woman by the hearth.

“I want to thank you again for saving me with that monster of yours.” Ygritte told the stiff woman.

“I did what I had to do. You are the wife of Azor Ahai. And I am the monster.”

“I prefer the name Jon Snow if you don’t mind. And you are not a monster, so stop saying that.”

“How many people have you killed, Ygritte?” the tall woman asked.

“Huummmm … five—no seven.”

“I’ve killed three hundred and forty-two persons directly, and I have influenced the deaths of countless thousands. I am a monster, Ygritte.”
“No you’re not, fool woman. You did what you felt was necessary, right? What needed to be done. Right?” Ygritte asked the woman, who suddenly looked away again.

“And why do you keep looking away from me like you stole my new born babe? What are you not telling me, woman?!”

“You will be the bride of Azor Ahai.”

“Jon Snow!” Ygritte growled.

“As you like. It is my duty to have you fulfill your duty.”

Ygritte watched the woman turn her head in guilt again.

“What aren’t you telling me, wench?!”

The once-again haggard looking woman moved closer to the fire hearth and warmed her hands.

“You owe me!” Ygritte told the woman as she drew up beside her, invading the woman’s personal space while trying to pierce her control.

Melisandre looked down at Ygritte. “I owe you nothing. I don’t care if you are kissed by the sun.” the woman spoke with a haughty tone.

“You saved me. I owe you for that, and I also deserve honesty from you Melisandre. You are holding something back from me and I want to know what!”

“Has anyone ever told you that you’re an ungrateful bitch? An ungrateful wretch with an acid tongue!” Melisandre spat down at the small fiery sprite.

Ygritte scowled and stomped over to the other side of the cottage, looking out of the small two, muttering under her breath.

Melisandre looked deep into the flames as Ygritte fumed. “What did you say?” the six-foot four inch tall woman asked suddenly, turning around with red eyes widened. “Tell me, what did you say just now, Ygritte?!”

The small wildling turned around, her blue-grey eyes full of fire. “You know nothing Melisandre!” She yelled at the tall woman from Asshai.

The priestess crumpled straight down as if hit by another spear in a dead faint.

Melisandre

She was dreaming. She had to be dreaming. She was back on the auctioning block, her back bloody and her face bruised while blood wept from her vagina and anus. She had killed them. She had snapped and killed her tormentors, and now she was to be sold to the Valyrian contingent to work the mines beneath Valyria and most likely die there.

She did not know why they did not outright kill her, probably because they had been a prominent family known for their refinement and haughty status among the warlocks and witches. None seemed to know of their sadistic sexual taste for young girls. She was the orphan of warlock nobility and should have been taken in and cared for - not tortured.
She was just another teen. Beautiful to be sure, but women like her were chewed up and spit out by this society. She had been alone since she could remember, her life going from bad to worse. At this point she welcomed her delivery to the death mines. The torment that was her life would finally end.

“Lot eight … Sold!”

A small woman with red hair came up to her. “Come with me, lass,” The woman commanded softly.

“You’re not a Valyrian” Melony said to the woman.

“Uuoooo … you’re an observant one, aren’t you?” The woman responded with a chuckle. “Melony is dead, now. Pick a new name you want to be known by.”

“What?” Melony asked, confused. Why would she need another name?

“I need an apprentice. You are to be my pupil. I need a student to pass my knowledge on to.” She sighed. “Also, I am lonely and would like a person to talk to now and then. I follow a unique path. Though all shadow binders tend to work alone, I shun even my fellow brothers and sisters. They have blinded themselves.”

“What if I do not want to become your apprentice?” Melony asked with the same fire that had gotten her placed on the slave block.

The not-so-pretty red head looked at her. “Then I will put you on a ship to the Rhoyne city of Ny Sar. There you can seek you destiny free of your sad past. I have several acquaintances that will take you in until you can find your destiny.”

Melony could find no guile in the short woman and opted to become her apprentice. Her name became Melisandre.

The woman was good to her, and quickly healed her body and unlocked her mind. Melisandre found she was a quick study and loved to read. Tygreti had taught her to read as soon as she entered her dark house on the river Ash. Melisandre had been awed at the worlds reading opened up for her. As her body grew strong, her mind became a sharp diviner of the flames and she learned spells easily.

For twenty years she studied with her mentor. Melisandre had found in Tygreti a woman who was both teacher and a mother figure. She both guided and nurtured Melisandre. In time, the youth came to hunger for much more but the woman seemed chaste and asexual. She appeared to miss all of Melisandre’s increasingly emboldened overtures.

The woman had constantly teased her as she progressed with her studies with the admonishment “You know nothing, Melisandre,” as she played with her student’s hair innocently. The woman never made sexual overtures, much to Melisandre’s frustration.

When Melisandre first met Tygreti, she had only noticed her flaws. This was because of her own great beauty, which Tygreti did not share. Melisandre remembered her first impressions of her teacher: Tygreti was short, skinny but well-muscled, with a round face, small hands, a pug nose, crooked white teeth, and blue-grey eyes that were too far apart. This was topped with a mane of fiery red hair. She had thought the woman to be less than pretty. No longer; she had become the most beautiful woman that had ever walked the Earth.

Finally, the day came when Tygreti told her she had nothing else to teach the young woman. “You are my equal and more Melisandre, I can teach you nothing more.”

“There is much more you can teach me, Tygreti,” Melisandre told her mentor in a husky voice. She dropped her dress and presented her naked body to her teacher, smiling as she saw the wanton lust and now unhidden love radiating out of Tygreti’s eyes. She took the shy, stuttering woman to her bed and now the student was the teacher.

She had rocked her teacher with her skills from a former life. That night after she had exhausted Tygreti and the woman was snoring gently on her full bosom, Melisandre kissed her temple, slowly running her fingers through Tygreti’s fiery red locks.

The next morning she woke her lover with feathery kisses all over her beautiful, imperfect face. “Who is the master now Tygreti …? I couldn’t understand you through the screaming last night.” Melisandre teased.

The smaller, sleepy woman yawned and looked at her with a devilish grin “Humm, I think you know nothing Melisandre. I think you need to show me again what you think you know.” Her now-wife husked back.

She had spent the morning showing her again.

For forty years they had been so happy doing the will of R’hllor together. They strove to help man, and fight the growing forces of evil.

Then the family came upon them on the night of the dark of the moon, when they were at their weakest. After so many years, they had tracked down Melony. Tygreti had sacrificed herself to send Melisandre away in a strong spell of binding and transportation.

Tygreti had decimated the great house before they took her down.

In time, Melisandre tracked down and butchered the few survivors of the house that remained. The house had long ago ceased to exist, and she had been slowly dying inside ever since. She still did the will of R’hllor, but her vision had become as dark as the other spellbinders she detested.

Melisandre slowly wakened again.

Her eyes opened to the sight of her late wife. “Oh Tygreti, I love you so much, my beautiful wife.” she husked, caressing a warm cheek.

“Will you stop calling me Tygreti—my name is Ygritte. Plus, I can’t understand a word you’re saying woman. Gods, you are finally awake. You had me scared there for a little while, woman.” She told Melisandre.

Melisandre dropped her hand, her head turning away with a frown. “Geez, woman. What a revolting change in manner.” The wildling teased.

Melisandre’s heart folded in on itself. My wife is reborn. She is to be the wife of Azor Ahai. He cannot have her! … It is I that will make the sacrifice. Melisandre thought to herself.

“How long was I unconscious?” she asked her wife reborn. Only she was not Tygreti reborn. She shied away from the woman’s gentle touch.

“Stop that dammit! I don’t have lice or ticks, woman! I keep myself quite clean I must say!” the woman told her cheekily as she dabbed a wet cloth to the priestess’ forehead and cheeks.

Melisandre suddenly had a panicked thought. “Did the fire go out? The fire in the hearth?” she asked Tyr—no, Ygritte.
“Don’t you worry. The fire was kept nice and strong for you. I wondered why you had all that firewood outside. Now I know.”

Melisandre relaxed and gave the wilding a thoughtful smile. She had arranged to have the cottage prepared for her well in advance. She had paid handsomely for the work and had been relieved to find the work done as requested. The people in the North of Westeros were indeed honorable.

Ygritte

Ygritte tried to caress the beautiful woman’s face again, but she shied away like a whipped dog. Ygritte found it important to try to get the soft smile back on Melisandre’s face. She found she really liked that smile, and the feel of her hand caressing her cheek.

She should have felt guilty feeling this way about someone other than Jon Snow, but, she didn’t. He had missed his chance to have her and only her. He knew nothing!

She was undeniably attracted to this tall, beautiful woman. She helped her tend to her precious fire and started to stare into the flames and, at times, she was sure she saw images in the fire.

When she asked Melisandre about it, the woman would at first look at her and then ask what visions she had. They were very confusing and came so fast. She would see a city, all dark and black. She saw a frightened younger version of Melisandre on a slave block. That was the end of that session.

Over the next several weeks both women gained their full strength back. Ygritte demanded to see the tall redhead’s back and gasped when she saw no wound or scar. She was told that being a half-demon had its advantages.

Ygritte had not liked the sound of that and they argued into the night. Ygritte telling her that she was all woman. Ygritte learned that the woman cherished her early years as a priestess with a woman who was obviously her lover. Ygritte told Melisandra that maybe she was going back to being the woman she once was. That only made Melisandre scowl. Ygritte hated how the woman would never pass an opportunity to put own self down.

Despite Melisandre’s taciturn nature and self-deprecation, Ygritte saw her innate nobility and strong desire to do what was right no matter the cost. Evidently, the cost was much greater than the woman even realized.

Melisandre now worked to help Ygritte calm her mind to see the flames and their portents. Ygritte exclaimed when she saw the Crows turning on Jon and then him being saved by her and Melisandre. Other visions had him dying. Ygritte asked which were true. The reply from Melisandre that both could be true infuriated her.

Melisandre told the fiery red head that they must work to make it the former.

She found Melisandre to be an excellent cook who groused she was too thin and she was happy to fix her roasted chicken and various tasty vegetable dishes. She always demurely blushed when Ygritte told her how good her cooking was. Melisandre tried to act like she was not preening, but Ygritte knew she was. The woman enjoyed pampering her for some reason and she loved it!

They grew closer. Then Ygritte saw a new vision in the flames and felt her body immediately respond, her nipples hardening and her pussy getting wet.

“You’ve been holding out on me, Melisandre,” she quietly told the woman beside her. Melisandre was in a soft, open state like she often went into looking in the flames. She was unguarded.

“Hmnnnnnnnn?” the red woman purred back, turning to look at with Ygritte with soft eyes that looked almost innocent in that moment.

“The past. You didn’t tell me we were lovers, Melisandre.” The short woman leaned into the taller woman, gripping her body as she saw Melisandre’s eyes fill with panic. “I saw us on the night you seduced me and fucked me all night long and deep into the next day… I want you Melisandre,” the wilding softly exclaimed surging into the tall woman.

She was suddenly tipped over and fell to the floor when the red woman moved like a Shadowcat and was gone out the door into the falling snow and howling winds.

She had enough. It was time to go hunting. She spied all her implements of war that Melisandre had gathered ahead of time, knowing the woman would need to be armed when the time came to go and save Jon Snow.

Melisandre

She had stopped running several hours ago and was making her way back to the cabin. She was soaked in her gown as the snow melted on her heated body. Like a Valyrian, she mused. Maybe she could ride a dragon as well.

Melisandre never got lost. Her visions saw to it that she had an innate sense of self and her surroundings.

What to do about Ygritte, her reborn lover? She of course was in love with the woman. As she got to know her it was clear that it was not only her body that had been reincarnated, but her mind, soul and spirit. She even had Tygreti’s sass! She had thought it impossible to love after two millennium, but her aching heart told her it was so.

She was going to kill her! By R’hllor, she hated herself even more. Jon Snow would need to kill his wife to get his full power. She had seen the flames. They were to become lovers. She would somehow refuse Ygritte, and prevent her and Jon from becoming lovers again, and she would plunge her heart on Jon’s sword. That would be the easy part.

How to keep Ygritte at bay from herself and Jon? Jon was so honor bound she would figure something out on that front. How she herself would resist Ygritte, Melisandre did not know - but somehow she would. The woman had allowed herself to be killed once for Melisandre. NOT AGAIN! her mind screamed.

She still remembered those long years ago the unease she had felt. A violent storm had been coming, and Tygreti had given her a potion to calm her stomach. She had kissed her wife’s sweet face in thanks, and then terror gripped her body as she felt it becoming paralyzed. Tygreti had assured her she had it all figured out. She would save them from the House that sought revenge for her earlier killing of their most powerful warlock and priestess.

It was to be a time of reckoning.

Melisandre had watched horror-struck as the woman she loved cut her palm and created a demon shadow from her own flesh. Suddenly, Melisandre felt her body transported away, far away as her mind screamed no! over and over.
She later discovered that Tygreti had decimated the attackers. She had killed almost the entire House and their hired thugs. Melisandre finished the job a week later, and the House no longer existed.

And neither did Melisandre, really.

She became an empty husk, almost mindlessly doing the duty of R’hllor. Now she feared to gaze upon the toll her service to her god had cost her. God, Melisandre was so tired. The sky had slowly turned from black to purple to finally a dull grey as she walked through the large copse of trees that hid her cottage. Only a mile to go to again confront her reborn lover. What to do?

She just had to last long enough to transform Jon Snow into Azor Ahai reborn.

Suddenly she sensed Ygritte’s presence. Why was that fool woman outside getting wet?

“Ygritte! Get yourself back in that cottage before you catch a cold. I did not save you from an arrow only to die from pneumonia!” She called out to the hidden woman in an exasperated voice. She looked around, turning in a circle. “Damn you woman! Show yourself!”

Suddenly, a net flung down from the boughs above her entangling her limbs and causing her to fall to the leaf-covered forest floor. She heard a whooping cry of victory. Melisandre looked around in rising fear. Had the fires led her astray?!

Melisandre’s eye’s widened when Ygritte dropped to the ground in front of her. She was slowly forming an incantation to shred the net and give the woman a piece of her mind. Ygritte made a tut-tut noise and bent down.

Ygritte had her right hand balled up, and then opened it right in front of Melisandre’s eyes, blowing a small lump of powder into the startled woman’s face. Melisandre took an involuntary breath.

Noooooo! The tall, statuesque woman screamed in her head as a deep lassitude settled on her. Fear from two thousand years came crashing down on the woman as her sluggish limbs jerked helplessly. She was frantic as the powder dulled her senses and limbs. It felt too much like the potion that Tygreti gave Melisandre before her death.

Ygritte was proud of herself. She had taken out her former lover rather easily. Using knowledge gleaned from the flames and her innate wildling skills she had captured her wife as per wildling tradition. The effects of the powder would quickly dissipate once she gave her the antidote. Melisandre would be so pissed when she saw that she had raided her supposedly secret stash of goodies.

The wildling took out the leather thongs she had brought with her and got Melisandre’s legs together, lashing them together at the ankles. She then reached in the net and got the groggy woman’s hands together and got wrist on wrist. Then she put her other thong in her hands and tied Melisandre’s wrists together.

She heard Melisandre grunting, trying to form words. “Mmpff ummm. Wh-hh-aa-t unggg duuffling?” she asked with a thick tongue.

“Melisandre—you know nothing. I’m staking my claim by right of the Hunt. I’m tired of waiting … you’re frustrating the living hells out of me, woman! I claim you as mine! You belong to me, Melisandre!” The wilding bent down and shook her finger in front of the priestess. “I’m going to give you the antidote … but no magic! You agree?” the wildling asked her captive.

The two women stared at each other. “Uummfff mmphhffff uurrrgggghhh!” the tall woman in the net growled, jerking her entangled limbs. Melisandre glared at Ygritte who idled the time inspecting her nails nonchalantly. “MMPPFFFFF!” Melisandre spat out and Ygritte looked at her with a bored expression. She watched the beauty shake her head up and down ‘yes’. She could trust that; the woman was honorable.

Ygritte put her hand in her cloak and pulled out another pinch of powder and blew it in her love’s face.

Melisandre started to struggle wildly, her body thrashing and her legs kicking as best she could with her ankles lashed together. her hands tried to grip the net but couldn’t. The bound hands were incapable of forming the patterns for incantation.

“Achoo! Achoo! Let me go!—Achoo! … ha-ha-Achoo Achoo! BITTCCHHH—AACCHOO!”

Ygritte hummed as she rolled the tall woman onto her side and then bent down, getting her arm underneath the woman’s shoulders and pulling her into a sitting position.

“Achoo! Acchoo! Aacchooo! Bitch! Achoo! Achoo!”

Melisandre continued wiggling violently but could not get the net untangled as the sneezing suddenly stopped and she began to curse the woman in the common tongue and in her own native tongue that Ygritte still did not understand but for a few words. She just chuckled at the vitriol.

Melisandre

“Let me go this instant you fucking cunt! I command it!” Melisandre roared.

“Ppphhhhffftttttt! … Hahaha, you know nothing, Melisandre!” the Wilding chuckled.

Melisandre no longer found the pet phrase of her Ygritte / Tygreti so endearing. “I swear by R’hhlor when I get out of this I’ll I’ll …”

“You’ll fuck me?” the Wilding looked Melisandre hard in the eyes.

Melisandre felt her face flush with anger and something else as her pussy spasmed hard. Oh R’hllor noooooo! The woman from Asshai thought desperately.

She was stunned at her body betraying her with love and lust she could never allow to bloom. Her pussy was so wet. She watched dumbly as the wildling cut the net away. Melisandre was wondering what she was to do. She looked up at Ygritte and felt her heart pound in her chest. Each beat said “I love her . . . I love her with all my heart . . .”

Suddenly she was lifted up and her world turned upside down as the wildling grunted hard, throwing the six foot two inch woman over her shoulder.

“Oh Melisandre … I thought the spirit of R’hllor was supposed to burn bright in you? Supposed to be turning your body to spirit? You weigh a fucking ton!”
The ignobility of the situation reignited her anger. “Hey!” Melisandre groused. That was hitting below the skirt! “Let me down you fucking midget! You sawed off runt!”

“Tsk tsk Melisandre … you’re starting to piss me off … you’re just going to make me fuck you harder when we get back to our bed.”

Melisandre was starting to get dizzy with the blood rush. “Put me down now! I Melisandre of Asshai command it!” she screamed in an undignified tizzy, her head spinning as it thumped the tight rump of her captor. “I am a mighty priestess damnit! I am going to… to … I don’t know what, but it won’t be pretty Ygritte!”

“Yeah I can tell O mighty priestess” the wildling threw back over her shoulder.

“Aaaaaiiiii! . . . Fuck you, bitch!” Melisandre screeched back down—no up, at the woman. Melisandre’s face now thumped right into the wildling’s ass. Gods, this was so humiliating.

For the next five minutes the wildling chortled as the Ashai woman cursed her over and over and threatened unspecified punishment. Ygritte laughed at the bound woman.

“I hope you do! I like it rough! That will make our sex so much hotter, my sexy, trussed up priestess of R’hllor!”

Suddenly, Ygritte stopped stomping forward. They were back in the cabin. Ygritte kicked the door open and then kicked it shut with a loud bang. Ygritte stomped through the large communal area of the cabin. Into the bedroom they went. Melisandre found herself unceremoniously dumped on the bed with a hard thump.

As she tried to get her bearings, the wildling was on her pressing her down controlling her thrashing.

Finally, the priestess thought, getting ready to fight the woman. That stance changed when suddenly her body was flipped to her stomach. She felt her dress hooks and clasps rip to shreds, and then cool metal on her bare back as the fabric of her dress tore. The dress was ripped wide apart, and fell in two pieces off of her body.

Melisandre gasped as she was flipped over, her eyes nearly bulging out of their sockets. How the fuck did Ygritte manage to get half naked? Her breasts were exposed, and her leggings loose. Melisandre was lost, staring at Tygritte’s beautiful small breasts.

She pulled the wilding down onto her body and they kissed heatedly, their groans swallowed by hot hungry mouths. They wrapped their tongues around each other as arms pulled bodies tight and legs hooked.

Melisandre was drunk on passion. She gasped at how quickly Ygritte had their bodies entirely disrobed and their mouths again locked tight. Melisandre cried out into her wife’s mouth, feeling her first two fingers slip deep into her wet cunt as hers found Ygritte’s sloppy wet pussy and slipped first two, and then three fingers into her new wife’s cunt stretching it out. They fucked hard and deep until their mouths swallowed screams of searing ecstasy.

They fucked all the day and deep into the night, only breaking to drink fluids and eat some plums and cherries. They were starved for each other.

Her woman and she had finished fucking in the classic groin to groin trib as they gripped each other’s legs and swept their drooling quims hard into each other. They had both cum twice in this position the last one simultaneously. Their screams filled the cottage for so long. It had been heaven feeling her cunt explode on her wife’s cunt as Ygritte’s pussy gushed hot cum all over their groins along with hers.

Ygritte (it was still strange but nice to call Tygrite this) but she was coming to love her new name. Ygritte had broken their intimate pussy kiss and slowly crawled up Melisandre’s body and collapsed on her like she had always done those long centuries ago.

Her wife’s cheek on her chest her head tucked underneath her chin and her small body sprawled all over her six foot two inch frame. Her sweaty body so perfectly fit on her body. Ygritte’s weight was flattening her tits all over her wife’s small breast and chest. Ygritte’s plump wet pussy on her stomach and her legs sprawled out between Melisandre’s legs.

Melisandre loved how Ygritte gripped her breast possessively in her right hand. Melisandre had hooked her ankles over the back of her wife’s lower legs. They were intimately linked like how they had so often been when they went to sleep so long again.

Melisandre was sleepy for the first time in centuries. She smiled hearing soft snoring like she always had when they fucked hard and long. Melisandre had finally exhausted her insatiable little slut. She played some more with her wife’s hair. She loved the fiery color, the length of the hair and the soft feel of the slightly kinky strands.

Melisandre was drowsy and satiated for now. She savored the taste of Ygritte in her mouth. She continued to play with Ygritte’s long fiery red locks like she had over two thousand years ago.

Full circle, she thought contentedly. Once long ago, Tygreti sacrificed her life for Melisandre. Now she would give her life for Ygritte. She had seen in the flames that she would fall in love with Jon Snow. He was almost like a woman in so many ways with his selfless manner and loving, gentle ways.

Both Ygritte and Melisandre would be his wives. Only it would not be Ygritte that would have her heart pierced by the sword of Azor, it would be her own heart that was pierced by the blade of Azor. This time she would be the one to make the sacrifice.

She had lived long enough.
Tyrion

Tyrion was running late. He had been putting together the numbers that he and Master of Coin Vedad Softic had come up with for the cost of any potential campaign against the North.

Tyrion knew that his Queen would be most unhappy with them.

He and Vedad were still working on the “books”, sifting through the errors and outright fraud. How had Robert allowed such incompetence and usury to occur? The man seemed to not care for anything other than his gut and his cock. Daenerys’ father may have been mad but at least he had been frugal with the realm’s finances.

The Queen was anxious to get the debt under control and start drawing it down. Now the potential existed that the debt would have to be added to.

Only the people on the other side of the door he stood before truly knew how much wealth the Queen had amassed in her conquest of Essos. The “blood money” she had taken from the former slave lords had been staggering. On top of that wealth the Queen was busy removing the looted plunder at Vaes Dothrak.

The queen returned what she could, but much of it had no home any longer. That she was taking and bringing to ports to ship to the Summer Islands. There it was being smelted down or stored in vast crates separated by the type of jewel or artifact it was.

The Queen was fabulously rich, and planned on spending it all on her subjects. She wanted none for herself.

He was about to knock on the door when it was opened. Daenerys stood in the doorway, smiling down at him.

He smiled and nodded, entering the room. He always noticed the beautiful Dothraki garb the Queen wore. He loved the bright blues, oranges and yellows that traditional Dothraki garb favored. The Queen followed him in. He saw that Strong Belwas was already in “his” chair by the fireplace, eating a leg of goat and drinking fermented goat’s milk.

Shadowclaw was chomping on a big fat locust happily, with the wings of several already eaten locusts on the carpet by her paws.

The others of the Klutch of Confidantes were at their meeting table. Tyrion went to the chair that had extra fabric in the cushion to help keep his legs from spasming and locking up. He seated himself and waited for the Queen to proceed.

The Queen listed out all of the provocative behavior that Eddard Stark had suddenly began displaying. All had been well then ten days ago, then he had seemingly out of nowhere and for no reason started to act in strange and borderline seditious manner.

The Queen asked them for conclusions. She looked at them each in turn. None could explain his actions. Varys had no sparrows in the north. Their nests had been cleaned out it seemed.

Why would this “honorable man” do this, the Queen asked, staring hard at Tyrion. He squirmed in his chair. He knew the Queen remembered their words and how Tyrion had vouched for the man. The words were definitely coming back to bite him in the ass.

He gave the report she had requested on a rough estimate on the cost of mobilizing the forces of Westeros. The Queen had blanched at the numbers. Robert had bankrupted the Iron Throne and the Queen was loathe to add to it.

She and Tyrion had discussed the Iron Bank and the tactics they may use ad nauseam. The Queen did not want the Iron Throne to get an unwanted leverage on Westeros with them suddenly calling in their debt.

They had discovered enough discrepancies and irregularities to go back at the Iron Throne. Their numbers would definitely be reduced. It was frustrating for them both to have to take away their focus on the problem of finance and organizing to begin the Queen’s ambitious plans to implement her plans for urban renewal championed by Myrcella and Arianne.

The Queen wanted peace in her ancestral homeland to begin more aggressively rebuilding Slaver’s Bay. She wanted to make sure the Free Cities were firmly in her camp when it came to her policies of no slavery.

She wanted to put governance in place where she had destroyed the old order before the criminal underworld could get a foothold and flourish. Why root out the weeds if you could keep them from taking root?

Daenerys also wanted to bring the rest of the Khalasars under her rule.

The Queen had many things on her plate and Eddard Stark was throwing everything in disarray.

Nothing made any sense. He was definitely mobilizing but he was not moving South. In fact, he didn’t seem to be going anywhere. Forces were in places that made no sense and ships were appearing in ports that were blockaded. Useless. Why?!

Barristan and he were sure the forces were pivoting subtly to the North. But why? Eddard had his realm fully under his sway. His Lords would gladly die for the man.

Tyrion did not say anything, but he knew one reason why this man would go North. The Wall. He was of the North and the Northmen liked to say they never forget.

Twice he had stood on the Wall. The first time he had stood on it on a bright sunny day, looking out over the vast primordial forest. He had looked at the crows walking up and down the wall and thought it was a waste.

The second time he had been on the Wall was during a snowstorm with the clouds scudding by, low and dark. The sky seemed full of menace. Jon Snow had been with him in the night. Tyrion again looked out over the forest shrouded in dark and mystery.

Then, the forest seemed foreboding and evil. The wind seemed to have the scent of something that hated him. Something that hated all men. He had shivered and looked up at Jon. Jon smiled sadly at him. The boy felt it too, and understood. He knew that Tyrion would discount what he felt in his bones when he was before his hearth, warm and safe. He would feel this was all about a man remembering old wives tales.

Jon Snow had been right.

Now he wondered.

Eddard

He had started his Game of Thrones. He smiled softly. He wanted no part of the throne, but he must get its attention in just the right way to bring it North.

He had closed the King’s Road at the southernmost limit of the North. He had set up barricades but not put any guards at the newly installed gates. He had raised the banner of the Direwolf in declaration of nothing. The action would be confusing, and that was what he needed.

He had sent ravens to his two most trusted allies and they had already agreed to meet. They were giving him their full support, despite not being entirely sure of his plans. Eddard was full of pride - they were following House Stark because of the honor in his House’s name.

He only hoped that he was making the right decision. Jon had convinced him of the necessity of his actions, but was he letting his love for his son blind him? He couldn’t be. All in the North knew the importance of the Wall and why it had truly been erected. The wildlings were an afterthought.

He had called his banners with specific instructions to set to their tasks as quietly as possible. The Lords were not to explain to their subjects the true reasons for their mobilization, only to say that a great danger was present and would soon need to be confronted. They were to crush any talk against the Queen or King’s Landing. He wanted no thoughts of sedition to take root and spread among his people.

His people would see his actions and assume the Queen was the danger when it was their traditional enemy that maybe even they no longer truly believed in. All people saw today was the danger of the Wildlings. He knew of a more implacable enemy from the ancient past.

He was willing to sacrifice his life and his very people to save the South if needed. He had no plan or desire to go to war with the new Queen. If he was right and he lived, their houses would be linked by marriage. He had to smile again. Arya was still always pulling his sleeve asking him to tell her all of the details of the time he had been confronted by the Targaryen on her black dragon. Every time he told her, Arya still hung on every word.

He grimaced as he remembered the ravens coming in from King’s Landing demanding to know what he was doing. The scrolls were always polite, but he could easily see the unease and anger in the Targaryen’s personally written hand. She was a definitely hands-on ruler. Each scroll which came in daily now were more agitated. Good. He had the Queen’s attention.

In his responses back to the Queen he had assured her that he was a loyal subject and no, he was not calling his banners and no, he would not come to her court. He was very busy.

He knew the Queen would be very upset at his refusal. He was praying to the old gods that he had read her right. Her restraint should prevent her from flying to the North and burning it. Dragons could be killed, if one was very, very lucky. Daenerys would make sure no one had such luck.

The Lords of the North were flowing into Winterfell where he would give them full details of his plans and, more importantly, why he was calling them to arms. In the North, no one ever forgot the Wall and its absolute importance. All knew of the human threat. He would have to remind them of the true threat. It was breed into his Lords. They would easily accept the truth of the Ice King’s return.

He was calling in pledges for food and the supplies necessary for war. The supplies were being taken to staging areas that were North rather than South. The Lords were to train and get their men and some women into fighting shape as quickly as possible.

They had to let the farmers finish the last of the harvests. Each vassal would set aside what they needed to survive the winter. The excess crops would be need to stored and then sent forward to support the armies that now were starting to form. Eddard had made it clear to his vassals to put food aside for the coming Winter. It was going to be dark and long. Eddard Stark would not starve his people to fight this war. Eddard senses that both sides in this were gathering for a quick and decisive that would decide the fate of Westeros and maybe the world.

Eddard was determined to win this war but even in victory Eddard felt in his bones that the Ice King had set in motion forces that would take long to dissipate even if he was defeated.

He had the holds and fasts of the North preparing to accept the forces that would soon be falling upon them. He was making sure they understood that they had to prepare for numbers much greater than the forces that the North could field.

If his plan was successful, all of Westeros and much of Essos would be streaming North. These forces would form up against the Wall. The Queen had brought huge stores of food and materials with her from across the sea. His informants told him that ships were still loaded to the brim with these stores. The Queen was wise to hold her forces together until she was absolutely sure of her rule.

Eddard had totally upset the Queen’s plans, he knew. He knew she wanted to start trying to correct the systemic problems had been left to fester. She had made it clear in ravens she wanted to begin to rebuild Slavers Bay in earnest. To make it into a more just and equable governance.

Eddard had sent out ravens across Westeros giving his full support to the Queen and he would actively fight and crush any who dared rise in opposition to her, yet he was still calling his Lords to arms and not answering the Queen’s questioning scrolls. He had thrown up border gates and yet he had left his border totally unprotected. He had only a token force at Moat Cailin, and the Reeds had pulled all their forces deep into the marshes to hide away and prepare to send what they could North.

His land was open for invasion from the South. Even as he called his armies together he had left himself undefended. Soon his allies would do the same. The Queen would be able to freely move north and easily defeat her undefended enemies. She could crush them if she so desired. His reading of the woman was that she would avoid outright war at all costs. He was banking on his insights into the woman. As her power had increased she had shown more and more restraint. She gave herself other options and took them. Her last victories were more from intimidation than force. Once the goad of cruel slavery had been crushed she meliorated her behavior. She became less savage in her campaigns.

His only immediate concern was the informant in his own close ranks. He was sure the informant would send out a raven tonight, and he would be there to catch them in the very act.

Sansa
Sansa was so excited. She was alive during the greatest events of her age. Not only that, she was actively involved in shaping the events of the forces gathering to meet the great foe coming south to fight them.

The feeling was heady. She could understand why men were so intoxicated by power and the rush of war. She was excited to be pitting her mettle against her foes. She remembered again that all that they did was in defense of the realm. House Stark would always be loyal and supportive of the throne. They had long ago bent the knee.

Sansa only hoped the Queen would remember that.

Her father had from the beginning been relying on her. In the first war meetings Eddard was explaining his plans on logistics and how he intended to make his stores available to the approaching armies. Her father detailed how he planned to move his forces in stages up North. It had been clear that many of the Lords were confused by this arrangement.

To her father it was quite obvious what he was trying to be accomplished and was confused as to how they not follow what to her father seemed rather obvious.

Sansa had spoken up when some of the Lords questioned her father, simplifying the explanation in a way they could understand. It was basic really but she had learned how to explain ideas and thoughts in a way that men found soothing and non-threatening. If you were groomed to be a king’s consort, you had to learn how to communicate to them.

If the man was like Eddard Stark he would value a tool whether or not it was a woman. If the man, no boy, was Joffrey then it would be wasted. Eddard did not waste his tools. He put Sansa in charge of coordinating the logistics of this complicated campaign.

Sansa was surprised at how quickly this appointment was accepted. She was accosted by many Lords asking her questions that she answered quickly and adroitly. The Lords appeared to be appreciative. They were quietly impressed that Sansa did not seek to surround herself in glory.

She heard more than once they wished Cersei had been like Sansa. That put a fierce smile on her face. She wondered what had happened to the woman. She had heard many tales. She had been taken away by Oberyn and not seen since. Had she been executed? From what she had heard of the Queen, she seriously doubted it.

When the talk of how to deceive the Queen came up Sansa had been able to give several ideas that her father immediately took to and she saw that many around the table, especially Robb and even Theon had been impressed.

Her first one had been to disguise ships in the harbors in the North to look like Galleys, Triremes, or Biremes of the Free cities. They would dress their own warships or basic shells of cheap wood to look like these warships in sails and colors of the Free Cities. The spies would see these and report back to the Iron Throne. It would make the throne question their sworn support of their naval allies. She would have to divide some of her attention.

It was Theon that was tasked with coming up with the sails and adornments that each free City like to put on their ships. Suddenly, Theon piped with a very good idea that impressed Sansa. He suggested that in each harbor one length of piers be less guarded. Allow the Queens spies to get access to these piers and the ships anchored there.

He would make sure that the ships there had the major do-overs. The other ships and false ships could be much less built up. The spies would see the ships that had been meticulously done and would assume that the rest were mirrors of the ones they had access too.

Sansa was impressed. Maybe there was hope for the Greyjoy yet.

Her other idea was to make fake camps in locations that were not threatening, but not in the far North either. They would be off the main tracks. The camps would only be manned by local men who were to old or too young to fight, and a few women. The men and women would move around the false war tents and equipment as if they had purpose. They would gather together in small groups to do fake drills.

They would under cover of darkness move the fake camps relying on chance that the Queens dragons would not see or if they did would assume the moves were legitimate. Lord Rickard had asked what that would accomplish since these camps were so off the beaten path; who would see them? Sansa smiled when Eddard slapped his friend on the back laughing. Robb had told the man to look up and Sansa had seen the confusion on Rickard’s face until her father reminded the Lord that the Queen had dragons. She would certainly see the camps.

Sansa had another idea to contribute. She suggested they create fake Scorpions. It had been a bolt from such a device that slew Meraxes and Rhaenys Targaryen who rode her. Dragons were intelligent, and the Queen was proving to be just as cunning. Sansa was sure the woman had taught her dragons a healthy fear of such weapons.

It would be these fake scorpions would keep the dragons flying high and not able to do close in reconnaissance of the North’s movements and subterfuge.

She became an integral part of her father’s war council. Her father had seen her intelligence, intensity and cunning. He valued her input, and put her beside Robb at the war table.

At first she had sensed reticence from some of the Lords, but as the meetings progressed over the weeks the doubters became believers when they saw her savvy. She was able to solve problems they had no answers to. Sansa would deduce and science out the problems with a hypothesis and work towards a solution using logic and intelligence. Men were too often to rash in their thinking.

Sansa was proud of her fellow Northmen. They valued victory more than outdated thinking.

Robb was her greatest supporter. He had been reluctant at first, when his sister had expressed her desire to be more involved in affairs of their House. But he had come around, especially when she helped him in his wooing of Alys. He was preparing to announce their betrothal soon. When Sansa came up with a good idea, he was first to agree.

Robb had made it clear that he always hoped to have her support and council. With their trust so firmly established, she had told him her secret. He had been shocked at first, sputtering and flummoxed. She wondered if she’d made a mistake until he came to her the next morning, granting his full support. He loved her, and just asked that she give him more time to fully process it all. She had, and he did.

Sansa felt his acceptance as a warm feeling within her chest when Robb asked her to accompany him after the war council meeting. They went to a small chamber and discussed the coming war. What would they do if the Queen came North with her war machine in attack mode? They discussed how to best implement a rear guard action that would slow down the woman with the least amount of casualties.

Neither of them had a real answer for her dragons. They were truly a game changer. Sansa told her brother that she feared the Queen would find ways to use her dragons that no one else could predict.
to devastating effect. The woman had already proven her brilliance. Robb had smiled at that, telling his sister that he agreed. She was even maybe as great as their father was. There was no greater compliment than that.

They discussed how they both felt the Queen was a dichotomy. The reports from Essos had been both horrific and strangely gentle at times. She had crushed her enemies without mercy. She then spent days personally breaking the chains of the former slaves. She forgave out of turn, but then viciously slew those who took her gift and threw it away in sedition.

She had spared Westeros, and even the very man that had caused the butchery by proxy of her brother and his family. There were even whispers that she had been killed in the desert of Essos by assassins sent by Robert Baratheon, and she had still spared him.

After victory she fostered out the orphaned children of her enemies. Before this, Westeros’ history was dark indeed when it came to offspring of the deposed.

She had shattered armies in the field but immediately called off her forces when victory was achieved. The woman insisted, no, demanded, that the populations of conquered cities be granted respect.

She and Robb had heard how she had flown her dragon clear across Slaver’s Bay into a fallen city on the East Coast of Slavers Bay and killed two Dothraki commanders of her forces when they had started to rape the locale female population. From the tales, Daenerys had immediately challenged the leaders in hand to hand combat, to which they responded by both attacking her in tandem. Even with their dishonor, Daenerys Targaryen had killed the Dothraki and taken their bells – no small feat. Robb and Sansa did not underestimate these nomadic men from the steppes of Essos.

The woman was a strange contradiction. And both agreed that they could see how the diminutive woman was already becoming a living legend.

The siblings chuckled at how their little sister had built the woman up into some type of supersized warrior woman. They hoped they could be there to witness it when their little Arya inevitably found out the truth.

As they laughed, inspiration struck her. She told Robb her idea, and he seconded it. Together they stepped out and went to their father in the Godswood, where he was sharpening and polishing Ice. Sansa told her father of her idea, using House Tully to diffuse the situation when the Queen did indeed start her march North with her gathered armies.

Eddard smiled up at his two oldest children, working as a team. He seemed to like her suggestion. He said he would have to confer with Edmure, but was sure that he would agree. It was another reminder to them both never to order absolutely unless completely necessary. Better to let their subordinates come to agree with their decrees if at all possible.

As Sansa walked away, she never saw her father’s eyes on her, an unsettled look on his face.

Sansa excitedly finished the letter to her lover and put her seal on it. Sansa simply had to boast of her many accomplishments. She had come so far since she first saw her true self-worth. A worth her lover had ignited.

She couldn’t wait to send the missive informing her love about how she had become vital to her father’s war effort, and how she and Robb were working together as equals. She wrote out all of the details of their meetings and their strategies. Even Theon had begun actively supporting her! He had merely said she would make a good Captain on a Long ship, but from him that was high praise indeed. Sansa could see the smile on their face.

She was nervous during dinner, anxious for the meal to be finished and the early night to pass so she could sneak up to the rookery. She felt closer to her lover when she was actively working to communicate with them. She had already masturbated to repeated screaming orgasms last night and again this morning.

She had hurried back to her room after talking to her father in the Godswood and jilled off again, wailing as cum gushed out her pussy and slavered her groin and down her legs. She had left her pussy and thighs coated in cum when she went out to lessons with her septa. The lessons to help Sansa further improve court etiquette and then they moved to stitching which she adored. Tatting had become her favorite form of needle work.

It made Sansa feel nasty and oh so sexy sitting their conversing with her Septa with her pussy and thighs coated with her dried cum. The way it made her feel sticky in her puss and her thighs peal apart when she moved them breaking the kiss her inner thighs made of the sticky cum gluing them together. It was her lover that had helped her to see it was alright to revel in the pleasures of the flesh. She knew her musk would be trapped against her body by her pleated dress and her slip underneath it. She busied herself making her wedding shawl, patterns of yellow roses with a few red roses to show their passionate love and blue roses that only grew in the north that represented her love for her love. She worked the green leaves subtly needled into the lacy white fabric.

She picked at her meal and finished early to go back to her room and pace. She was full of nervous energy. It would be hours before she could sneak up to the tower to send her message.

Sansa stripped out of her dress and slip. Sansa smelled her dried pussy juice and moaned, falling back on her bed. She then spent the better part of an hour masturbating to memories of sweet lovemaking with her beloved on that very bed. Her orgasms shocking her soul with ecstasy seeing her lover’s face in orgasm as Sansa jilled off.

Sansa was in a frenzy striving for one more orgasm. Her fingers slammed deep into her pussy while she rubbed her clit. She played with her breasts squeezing them and rolling her rock-hard nipples. Her body flipped and jackknifed violently over her bed when her orgasm finally struck like lightening. Sansa’s long form lay sprawled out on her bed, her cunt still leaking cum as strong aftershocks made her stomach clench and body jerk hard.

She slowly recovered and curled up, falling asleep to contented dreams of her love.

She awoke from her slumber fuzzy-headed. She quickly pulled on a comfortable night dress and looked out her door. She sensed the night was into the second watch. She grabbed her scroll and walked out into the hall.

She kept to the shadows and the dark of the halls, but maintained her regal bearing in case she ran into anyone. She was the daughter of Eddard Stark, and walked like it. A royal princess always had the right to walk these halls at any time.

She had not come across anyone in her circuitous route to the tower. She crept up the steps, humming softly.

She uncaged the raven for Highgarden, strapping the message on its leg and then gently hugging the squawking bird before bringing it to the window slit. “Go find my love!” she cooed to the bird, preparing to launch it through the window.
“I know what you are doing, Sansa.”

Sansa blanched hearing her father as he came from out of the shadows he had been hiding in.

Sansa was horrified seeing her father’s stern visage. She and her lover were doomed. It was over; she would bring such dishonor to both of their houses! Her father had made his thoughts clear on the matter. She panicked as her hands holding the raven began to shake violently.

Sqwork Sqwork Sqwork! The raven called out in protest.

In shock, Sansa knew she still had to do whatever she could to protect her lover. She looked off the ledge to the floor thirty feet below. Feeling there was no other choice, she started to move forward.

“Sansa, no! I KNOW YOU AND MARGERY ARE LOVERS AND I APPROVE!”

Eddard

Eddard’s heart was beating out of his chest. He had never considered his daughter would do something so foolish as to jump off the landing of the rookery. He rushed to his daughter, trembling wildly as she looked at him with wide, shocked eyes.

He enfolded his oldest daughter in his arms as she buried her face in his neck, whimpering. The raven pressed between the two humans squawked and pecked at them both.

Laughing, father and daughter parted as the bird squirmed in Sansa’s hands before her father removed it from her still shaking hands and placed it back in its cage.

“Sansa, you have shown great intelligence and cunning. Don’t let love blind you. What if this bird fell into the wrong hands? Especially with the heightened tension in the South from our calculated provocations. Let me guess, you boasted to Margery of all you have been accomplishing.”

His daughter’s grimace and downcast eyes told Eddard the truth.

“It will be slower, but as we discussed we need to send a delegation to Riverrun. I will have them send this message on to Highgarden when they send out parties to help keep the peace in the South for a little longer.”

“You’re not going to read it?”

“Why should I? I trust Margery if you trust her. It seems she will be my daughter-in-law someday soon.” Eddard told his dumbstruck daughter.

Sansa gasped, asking him how he’d known.

“You told me that you were so happy that I was straight. That I was not like Arya.”

Eddard sighed.

“Forgive me that Sansa. I did not see the truth of it but I should have.”

Sansa looked at her father confused.

“Bran’s prophecy started it all.” He told his daughter simply.
“What?”

“Bran and his mumbled prophecy about the Direwolf must lie with the Dragon opened my eyes to what was really happening around me. Something inside told me it is more than metaphorical. More than our House supporting the new queen. He would have used other language I am sure if that was the case. No, he was talking about a union of two persons from our House and the House of Targaryen. When I thought about it, it was clear it could only be Arya. As it opened my eyes to Arya I should at the same time have seen the truth with you. It really is obvious”

“Why? How? I didn’t ask you your reasoning about Arya because I was so shook up when I thought you wouldn’t approve of Margaery and me being in love”

“With Arya it was simple, actually. Robb is courting Alys.” He smirked, hearing Sansa gasp again. “Rickon is definitely too young. Bran may have been old enough, but the way he spoke the prophecy it was obvious it was not him. It was not you. That really only left Arya.

“Arya, who always wanted to hear over and over again the stories about dragons and House Targaryen as she grew up. Arya, who always wanted to know about the wives of Aegon and not the man himself. She nearly swoons when Daenerys Targaryen’s name is mentioned. Who else could it be?”

“But how did you know about me?” Sansa asked, calming as Eddard gave Sansa her scroll back. Sansa took it and held it close to her still hard beating heart.

“I told you that Bran’s prophetic pronouncement lifted the scales off my eyes with Arya. It allowed me to fully see and more important accept the truth with Arya. With your sister she wears her true self on her sleeve to use the metaphor.

“But you my dear eldest daughter are an adept master at the Game of Thrones. You know too well how to hide your true self if you desire too. Therefore my eyes saw but my mind did not see the obvious.

“I saw your strange behavior when we spoke of sending Arya South. I was not sure what was causing it but it did not seem important in the moment. Don’t take this wrong way Sansa, but women are sometimes very difficult to understand and before you say anything, yes, I know men are just as difficult to read at times.

“But it kept rankling me. Why did my eldest daughter almost look stricken when discussing her younger sister’s homosexuality when she now clearly supports her sister and her desires?

“I spent much time pondering it and it hit me like an epiphany. What exactly the words spoken between us were.

“Then I thought back to the visit of Highgarden to Winterfell.

“You changed entirely after the Tyrells visited two years ago. You used to always talk about the prince of the month you would marry. That stopped completely after their month visit here. Your mother is convinced it is Loras you are smitten with, but I know better now.”

“How so?”

“He and Renly Baratheon are having a not-so-secret love affair. The high nobles keep it quiet, but that is the fact of the matter. I am sure that Olenna will arrange something.”

“So you know she is the true power of their House?”
“Everyone with eyes does, Sansa. Since it is not Loras of Highgarden, that only left Margaery. I did not see it until Bran’s prophecy and how it opened my eyes about Arya. Now when I look at you, the scales finally fell off with you too. I decided to see what my eyes were actually seeing and not what I expected to see.

“You only spent time with Margery from almost the first day. You two were inseparable, and you both were always touching each other and looking at each other. I wrote it off as two teenage girls being their age. Looking honestly, it was raw passion that was burning between you. Does anyone else know?”

“Olenna and Margaery’s many cousins. Most of them are in love with each other and Olenna is busy figuring out how to get them married off to one other. She hopes that our marriage will give her the cover that she needs.”

“So she is already planning your marriage to her granddaughter?”

“Yes, Father.”

Eddard took a deep breath. “The woman is nothing if not decisive and forward-thinking. It seems you and Arya are both in love with powerful, cunning, and beautiful women.”

“And you approve?” Sansa asked again.

Eddard sighed. “Believe it or not, I do support you and Arya. I keep thinking of Lyanna and Rheagar Targaryen. How history would have been different if they had been allowed to follow their hearts rather than duty. … And I keep thinking if history had been just a little different I could have married Cersei Lannister and not you sweet mother. Then I wonder how Cersei felt having to marry a man who resented her because she was not your aunt.

“I have done a lot of thinking Sansa. Yes, I fully support your decision to love Margery. I have to ask though … uh … well …”

Eddard sighed again. “Okay. The fires of youth. I just needed to know in case the more conservative elements cause me problems. I will be ready if they do.”

Eddard staggered back when Sansa threw herself into his strong arms. He enfolded his daughter and hugged her tight. He was so happy to have such a strong, vibrant woman as his daughter.

They both spoke at the same time:

“We can’t tell your / my mother!”

And they both laughed, feeling some of the tension ebb away.

Once she’d caught her breath, Sansa asked her father, “truly though, what about mother?”

“Let me deal with that Sansa … when the time comes.” He said with playful grimace.

Eddard pulled back from his daughter. He was happy to help his children find happiness. That was paramount for him. He still worried about Bran, though. He sensed that his son was now going to travel a path that no one else could follow. He would support him too, even if his path led down roads that Eddard would never choose for him.
He would always support his children.

“You can live with the delay in getting the message to Margery? We can’t risk any information of our plans falling into the wrong hands. You do understand, right?”

His daughter gave him a soft smile. “Yes I do. Can I send her a raven—I promise I won’t say anything about events here. It will be strictly personal … we know how to speak of our love and keep it hidden, father.”

“With your word, yes you can send your love a raven Sansa.” Eddard answered with a smile. “Have I told you how proud I am of you at our war councils?”

“Yes you have… but tell me again!” Sansa exclaimed, enjoying the banter with her normally taciturn father.

Suddenly, a raven flew into the rookery, squawking loudly. Eddard went over to it and pulled off the message. He frowned seeing the three-headed dragon seal on it.

He broke the seal, and together they read the message written by Daenerys Targaryen in her own hand.

“What the FUCK are you doing?!” The message was short, concise and to the point.

Sansa was shocked and Eddard chuckled. Yes indeed. Their plan was working and the Queen had quite a salty streak. There was something about this woman that Eddard found appealing. Maybe, he had finally met a person worth giving his allegiance to. His youngest daughter had certainly given the Queen her allegiance.

Finally, Eddard thought, someone who could tame the wolf in Arya.

Sansa

Sansa left her father feeling so lucky to have Eddard Stark as her father. He always seemed to want to do the most for his children. She could only wish her mother was the same. She had never agreed with how her mother had treated Jon. Sansa had thought it wrong to make him sit at the lower table. She had always been too afraid of her mother to ever go against her and incur her wrath. Sansa had fretted with how spiteful her mother was toward Jon as he grew up but she never once came to his side. It shamed her greatly to think on it now.

What shamed her more and more was how only Arya had openly defied their mother and embraced Jon as a full brother rather than a bastard. Even her brothers had been reluctant to defy their mother. Sansa felt sad knowing she would never have the opportunity to make amends now. Jon was beyond them, on the Wall serving and protecting the realm. She had been so proud when she learned he had became the Lord Commander.

It had been a shock when word came of his attempted assassination. Word of the heinous attempt only reached Winterfell after the fact had been long done. The traitorous bastards had kept secret their treachery. Only when Jon had come back to Castle Black and took back his command did he contact his father.

He had seemingly been killed the rumors said, (or was it he just disappeared?) but he came back a few months later a changed man. He was no more timid or differential. He commanded like a mature confident Lord. It made sense. He was Eddard Stark’s son after all. He was evidently a much more direct and brutal leader now. He had taken control once again but now with an iron grip. He was fair but his word was now command. She could only hope that the boy and man she had so secretly admired still existed.

Sansa sit down to pin another scroll for Margery her long desired lover. She still fretted about the future. What would Highgarden do? They would be loyal to the Queen. That she knew. Sansa knew her father’s plan was sound and that bloodshed should be avoided, but one could never be sure.

She had put in her letter that Margery was to keep herself safe in these trying times, but she knew deep in her heart that Margery would find a way to come North. To come back to her. Sansa’s heart beat harder knowing her love would risk all to be with her.

Sansa finished her scroll to her love. She sealed it with the royal seal of her House after addressing the scroll to Margaery Tyrell. She was not worried with their code words the Maester would never suspect their secret love affair.

Sansa went back to the tower that housed the raven rookery and sent the Raven off to her love. She heard the beating of raven wings quickly fade as the black bird raced to her love.

Sansa could not wait to once more kiss and love Margery. To make her scream her name as she went down on her. Sansa was soon back in her room and masturbating urgently to relieve the ache deep in her belly and pussy.

The next morning she washed and put on her makeup and beautiful dress for the day. She always wanted to look resplendent at the meetings. The men put on their armor, and Sansa put on hers. Lady finally woke up and came over to Sansa, muzzling her master until she got the attention she craved. Of all the direwolves, Lady was always the most gentle and loving - except when she felt Sansa was in danger. Then Lady was most un-lady like.

Her Direwolf was not as big and robust as Nymeria. Arya’s direwolf’s eyes were nearly level with hers. Lady only came up to her shoulder. Her coat was much lighter in color than Nymeria with black highlights along her flanks and especially the main of hair between her shoulder blades. Lady’s bushy tail was almost black though. Where Nymeria had golden eyes that seemed to burn when she was excited, her Lady had green eyes that were always gay and polite. Just like her master. Only when Sansa was threatened did her sweet wolf turn into the Direwolf she really was.

Her wolf squirmed on the furs her back wiggling as Sansa scratched and rubbed her belly as the pleasure wolf whimpered in pleasure her tongue lulled out her mouth. Soft yelps of pleasure filling Sansa’s room.

Sansa went into the hall determined to find Arya and tell her how much she had always secretly admired her support of Jon. How she had been to afraid of their mother. She would tell her sister that those days were over.

And maybe, if that went well then she would broach the subject of Daenerys Targaryen and see where that led.

Sansa wanted to share her secret so badly now with Arya. She knew her sister would be shocked learning that her and Margery were lovers. She couldn’t wait to see the look on her face.

She had a quick meal in the kitchen. Of course Arya had already been through at the crack of dawn to so she could go out and practice with the sword and bow.

Sansa could see how skilled her little sister was. It was frightening, how fast and strong Arya had become.

The first war meeting would not be until two hours past noon since another group of Lords arrived late the previous night and needed time to rest.

She was about to go outside and find her sister when she noticed Lady suddenly stood at attention, looking up. Then the other direwolves began howling over and over. Lady bolted out of the kitchen in a wild rush.

The direwolves howled just like they had when the black dragon had soared over Winterfell.

Sansa ran behind her wolf as fast as her skirts would allow her.

Arya

Arya had just finished her morning drills and sparring sessions on the training ground. She was now holding herself back with all but her father. Even Robb was barely holding his own, and she was having to hold back with him as well.

Only her father was her better. He was truly one of the great swordsmen of his age, she was convinced of it.

Arya gulped, holding her practice sword and turning to greet her father as he picked up one of his own.

He was on her in the blink of an eye, his wooden sword slashing hard at her face and then ribs. Arya blocked both strikes, barely, and tried to get into a defensive position but was forced back and when their swords locked up. Her father came up close and pushed her down onto the ground with his sword point at her throat.

“Always be on your guard, Arya.” Eddard told his daughter as he backed off and waited. “There is no honor on the battlefield, despite what the minstrels sing. You fight to stay alive and take out your opponent. Kill if you must, but first keep your defense strong. Then attack when the opportunity presents itself. Never be reckless. … Ready?”

Arya shook her head yes.

Eddard charged hard and Arya met his attack. The sounds of wooden swords ringing filled the square. Everyone near ran up to line the practice field and watch. The fight was a sight to behold - Eddard was holding nothing back.

Fast, complicated attack patterns and sword work rained down on Arya. She grunted and fought back desperately, always on the defense. Her arms ached with the force of the savage blows she blocked.

The speed of their swords had all of the onlookers marveling. Many shocked that Arya was able to keep up to any degree at all.

Though she hadn’t been able to entirely. Twice Eddard disarmed Arya, backing off until his daughter retrieved her sword.
“Do you acknowledge defeat?” her father asked.

Arya felt her blood flare hot, and shook her head no. She waited for her father to attack again. She knew there was no reason to start on offensive since she would be back on defense almost immediately.

Father and daughter came together again with blades moving in a blur striking together hard. Again and again blades locked, and the sound of wood clacking hard together echoed off the castle walls.

Back and forth they fought in the practice yard, one pressing the attack and then the other. Arya was using all she had learned, blending in rough instinct to fight off her father and land some quick counterattacks.

Her sword landed hard on her father’s ribs. He grunted, and Arya lowered her sword. “Damnit, attack Arya!” her father extolled as he resumed his own attack.

For five more minutes father and daughter snarled and panted, heavily pressing attacks and swinging lightning motions to block furious attacks. Arya received several hard blows while she only barely nicked her father a few times until he called a halt, clearly winded.

Arya watched her father come up to her. He was smiling. “Very good Arya … but remember, always press the attack until victory is achieved. You could have had me.”

Arya felt her heart beat faster with the praise.

“When you get to King’s Landing, seek out Barristan Selmy. He is my better.”

Arya started to protest.

“Arya, never have false pride. I have fought men that should have slain me on the battlefield. Arthur Dayne was such a man. Only luck preserved me. Seek Barristan, and one Syrio Forel. He was once the first sword of Braavos. He will be an excellent teacher too. I see great potential in you - to be so young and so skilled already leaves me humbled, daughter.”

Eddard ruffled Arya’s hair and left her. Arya’s feet did not touch the ground as she walked away from the practice field.

Arya went back to her room to wash and put on fresh leathers for the rest of the day. As she scrubbed herself she idly thought of Daenerys Targaryen. She knew she was totally enamored with the woman. She was like a legend reborn.

Nymeria bunted open the door to Arya’s room and jumped up on the bed and stretched out watching her master. The wolf could see from her master’s expressions that she was again mooning over her sought after mate. Nymeria would pass her own judgments on this mate.

Arya was indeed mooning thinking of the way her Queen had stormed across Slaver’s Bay and completely obliterated the slave trade - Valyria itself at its height had not accomplished such a feat. She was everything that Arya hoped to be. She had followed the Targaryen’s exploits across Slaver’s Bay, and then the amassing of her fleet in the Free Cities. She was beautiful, charismatic, and powerful.

Arya’s hands instinctively travelled to her now swollen nipples and wet pussy. She masturbated to a quick, stunning orgasm that had her seeing stars and the Queens’s face. Though truth be told, that was kind of small and blurry. She couldn’t wait to be up and close and personal with the Queen.
Arya chuckled with evil intent, licking her lips and feeling the need rise again.

One body-flipping, jack-knifing orgasm later and Arya was finally ready to meet the rest of the day.

Nymeria had dozed through her master's antics. She had seen her master stroke her pleasure areas many times over the years.

Arya headed to the ramparts to look out over the lands of House Stark. Her direwolf sitting down beside her. She wanted to memorize every little feature. If she had her way, she would may never be back again, or only seldom. Her life would be in King’s Landing.

Arya was elated that her father had chosen her to be his emissary to the Queen. She just wished he would send her already! She ached to be with the Queen and begin her seduction of the tall warrior from legends. She would be so happy! She could just feel it.

She was already a master with the bow. She could hit any target. Her sword work was improving fast as she matured and her strength and reflexes improved. She would be a consort the Queen would be proud to have at her side on the throne.

Arya almost ran into a sentry thinking of how she would conquer the Queen in the bed chamber and make the Queen her own. She was a little nervous about the whole bedding rituals of Westeros, though. She could just see the face on her mother.

She was sure she would make a good first impression on the Queen. Her first meeting would have a real impact on the Targaryen. Arya could feel it.

Arya replayed over in her mind again how she had actually gotten in a good strike on her father. She was immensely proud of that. No one ever got a hit in on her father.

She was looking to the South when she saw it - a dark dot on the horizon that quickly grew to be a dragon flying high moving north by northwest. It was white with gold highlights. This would be Viserion, she thought, remembering his description. Nymeria got up and looked up at the dragon too, along with her master.

Arya began to jump up and down waving her arms and crying out as the dragon winged towards the distant horizon. “Come back! Come back! I want to see you!”

Nymeria cocked her head as the dragon started to dwindle in the distance. Her master looked dejected, her head cast down. Nymeria sat down beside her dejected master leaning into her body to offer condolences. The great wolf could feel her master’s disappointment.

Suddenly, Nymeria was up again, barking and howling as she jumped around excitedly.

Arya looked at her, wondering what had gotten into her wolf. When she saw why, Arya joined in her excitement.

The dragon had turned around and was rapidly approaching, still high up in the sky. It flew over the castle as Arya resumed acting like a wild child, jumping and waving her arms while calling to it.

Many had gathered to see what was occurring and stared up at the dragon circling now, and at Arya Stark acting like a five year old.

Nymeria’s howls were joined by Shaggydog and Grey Wind as they burst onto the ramparts and added their cries to the cacophony. They joined Nymeria in jumping and snapping at the air in excitement.
Arya was thrilled. The dragon was clearly circling lower. She watched the dragon descend to circle the castle just above scorpion range. The magnificent beast was obviously intelligent. Arya continued to jump and gesticulate at the beast.

A decision made, the dragon descended gracefully as everyone in the keep held their breath. It landed lightly on the First Keep and folded its wings. Its brilliant green eyes looked down at Arya calmly.

Everyone held their breath except for Arya, who ran down the castle curtain wall to get directly in front of the dragon who looked at her calmly. The direwolves were around Arya leaping and howling.

Arya put her hands up and out in greeting to the dragon.

Eddard Stark came bounding out a door adjacent to Arya with Ice in his hand. The dragon’s head immediately swerved towards the man. All could see the dragon tensing, his eyes on the sword.

“Father no!” Arya howled at him. “put the sword down—he means no harm!” Arya watched her father debate the situation with himself, and then slowly put the sword down on the top steps of the stairway. He stood back up, watching Viserion closely.

The dragon slowly lowered its head towards Arya. The direwolves jumped and twirled around. Nymeria began to growl as the head approached her master a little too close. The dragon turned towards the great wolf.

For a few seconds they stared at each other with unblinking eyes. With a woof, the wolf finally sat down, her tongue hanging out. Suddenly Lady burst out the doorway behind Eddard, and brushed him aside to run over to Nymeria. She joined her, sitting on her haunches, relaxed.

The dragon slowly crept forward on the First Keep’s ceiling, and then lowered its head toward Arya, sniffing.

Suddenly in from the right a big black shape appeared and landed lightly on the castle wall near the broken tower. Arya looked in awe at the immense body of Drogon as it too folded its wings and looked around curiously.

Shaggydog ran over barking at the great black dragon. Drogon craned his neck to look down at the great wolf that continued barking furiously at the claws that were hanging over the rampart walls. Arya thought the scene was both funny and nerve-wracking. The silly wolf acted like it owned the castle and the dragon should be backing off from its territory. The wolf snarled furiously at the claws and sniffed in the scent of the dragon.

The dragon slowly moved its left foot forward to place it on the floor of the rampart, looking at the great wolf with what had to be curiosity. Shaggydog looped forward and sniffed at the claws again, and then started to try to chew on the closest nail as the hard claw easily resisted the wolf’s canines trying to gain purchase.

Viserion was sniffing Arya curiously and moved his head down past the teenage girl towards the two sitting direwolves barking and snapping at each other in their excitement. Suddenly, the white dragon jerked its head back up when Nymeria and Lady licked his snout with sloppy wet licks. The dragon’s jaw was working as if the wolves had tickled it with their aggressive licks of their tongues. Then Viserion lowered his head again and the wolves muzzled and licked the dragon’s jaw and lips.

This time the dragon kept his head down and his lips jerked and worked as they wolves licked his jawline aggressive and worked their tongues between Viserion’s lips and licked his gums. The mighty head jerked and shook but the mighty dragon kept his head down. He seemed to enjoy the sensations.

Arya had been watching her wolf and Sansa’s but now turned to see what Rickon’s Direwolf was up to. Shaggydog had given up trying to chew on Drogon’s hard nails. The dark haired wolf growled at the black nail as if offended. Shaggydog turned around and lifted his leg high. A big wolf smirk was on his face.

Suddenly, Shaggydog went flying when the dragon jerked its first talon up in a fast motion. Startled Grey Wind barked furiously at the claws. The Direwolf offended at his brother’s treatment. Shaggydog flew high through the air to thump hard into the outer wall. The impact loud. Shaggydog fell down and sprawled out for a moment. He immediately jumped back up, affronted.

Grey Wind was barking and jumping around in a tizzy defending his brother’s honor. Shaggydog ran back to Drogon, joining Grey Wind in his warning barks of ire and indignation.

Arya watched bemused as Shaggydog again turned his body with obvious intent. Head held high, he lifted his back leg again. The Direwolf looked back quickly having learned its lesson. Seeing no threat the Direwolf lifted his head high and proud. This time the black dragon let the direwolf mark him with its urine, the great talon twitching.

Finished, Shaggydog moved forward a step. The Direwolf scratched back with his hind legs the nails making a loud scraping sound. The wolf was making sure to further mark his territory. The dragon’s head moved slowly back and forth watching all this with what looked like amusement.

Tail and head high, Shaggydog moved to the doorway that Eddard had come through and with great, satisfied dignity disappeared down the stairwell. Her father taking it all in with a bemused look.

Drogon moved his head down and sniffed his claw. His head moved back with a sharp jerk and the beast sneezed several times, each sending out mighty hot gusts of wind. The dragon twisted his head back and up and sneezed a few more times, his head jolting with sharp jerks.

Viserion lifted his head and brought it before Arya, turning it. Then slowly he moved forward and rubbed his rough cheek along Arya’s cheek. Then the dragon lifted his head and extended it forward above Arya’s shoulder.

Then, suddenly, both dragons hunched down and launched themselves high into the air, quickly gaining attitude as their wings pumped hard. They bore off to the West until they disappeared.

Arya came out of her trance and noticed that Sansa was right behind her. She had a shocked look on her face and was rubbing her cheek. The dragon had rubbed its cheek with Sansa too! It was incredible!

Sansa walked off with a dazed look. “We will speak later,” she said distantly, rubbing her cheek.

Arya rubbed her cheek. If this wasn’t a positive sign then nothing was. Daenerys Targaryen was hers!

Her father stood by the doorway with a wondering look. They all had had quite an adventure.

Daenerys
Daenerys was agitated on the Iron Throne. Supplications had been piling up and Daenerys had forgone having a Small Council this morning to tend to them. She had spent so much time on her “Eddard situation” she had let her audience with her subjects slip. She was catching up today. She was beginning to regret her decision. The complaints were most innocuous, trivial and inconsequential today. Daenerys found herself pinching the bridge of her nose again.

She was currently hearing from a Lord that had built a beautiful home for his newly married daughter. Unfortunately, the house was downwind from a pig farm. The farmer and Lord both were complaining vociferously. The farmer was right of course, but the Lord was powerful.

Daenerys sighed again.

She conquered Westeros for this?

She had been sensing that Viserion and Drogon had had their interest captured by something. In her boredom she let their images in and immediately perked up.

They were at Winterfell?! The Queen started making Tyrion and Missandei glance at her from their stations on either side in their high backed seats.

The first thought was fright and concern for her children. Eddard Stark had been acting most strange. Were her dragons in danger? Daenerys knuckles whitened as they gripped the arms of the Iron Throne.

She queried her dragons and let them feel her concerns. They assured their mother that they were in no danger. They had been cautious in their approach. A young girl had caught their attention and the male that had the scent of command had put his sword down. They were in no danger. They had looked for danger as they circled the large stone edifice looking for weapons they had learned to fear and hate. There had been none.

The Queen finally relaxed. Whatever Eddard Stark was doing he had not armed his castle yet for war or defense. She looked out her son’s eyes and opened her senses to what they sensed and felt.

Drogon was looking at a large dark colored shaggy direwolf chewing on its nail. Suddenly, Daenerys left foot jerked up as her lips smirked. The Queen’s head snapped back again her, lips jerking and twisting. Her mouth felt the tickling licks of two big wolves. It was disconcerting. Daenerys lips smacked and she snorted as the audience looked at her strangely.

Then she chuckled, seeing in her mind’s eye the direwolf flying against the rampart wall.

Then her Queen’s face was twisting again as Viserion had his face licked even more aggressively and the tickling sensations ran up and down his lips. With her mental link the Queen felt every rasp of the wolves tongues on her own lips, cheeks and along her gums. The Queen wiggled her head hard back and forth.

A blink later and Daenerys was looking at a woman with dark brown hair and steel grey eyes that she found captivating. Her face was framed by the cut of her hair that framed her sharp features. The hair on her shoulders so beguiling. Her eyes were filled with passion and fire. She felt no fear of her dragon! She was urging her Viserion to come to her! This woman had a manner that bespoke a fierce inner fire that called to Danny. Her features while not classically beautiful, there was a shape of her face that was so attractive to Dany. She felt a pull of attraction regardless of classic beauty. Her attire was that of a warrior? This woman bespoke of passion and fire and yet there was an innocence about the her. Daenerys was fascinated.
Her fixation on the woman was disrupted when she looked out of Drogon’s eyes and watched the direwolf urinating on his claws. Daenerys felt an uncomfortable warm sensation on her left foot and shook it urgently, her foot suddenly feeling like it was soaking wet with piss.

How gross!

By now Missandei and Tyrion were both staring at her as if she had lost her mind.

She looked out Viserion’s eyes again and found herself looking at a beautiful, tall red-headed woman and then rubbing her cheek with her own. Although the feeling was sensual she found she much more liked the sensation when rubbing the plainer looking girl’s cheek.

Suddenly, the Queen’s head snapped back and she started sneezing violently. Her head snapped right and left as she sneezed and her left foot was shaking violently as if her calf had cramped.

All stared at the Queen. Had the weight of rule unbalanced the woman? Was she having a fit?

As suddenly as the fit had started, the Queen composed herself and pinched her nose and began to give her pronouncement to the Lord and pig farmer.

Varys

What was that damn Stark up too? Varys wondered to himself. He calmed himself sipping his Earl Grey tea. The man was not behaving in any away that made sense. He was provoking the Queen while achieving no gain for himself. His actions were borderline treasonous but he made no move against the throne. He did not prevent tax collection or the administrative duties of the custom houses in the ports.

His actions made no sense.

Varys had studied the man from afar. He was intrigued by Eddard Stark. The man was honor personified. Such honor was a pretty thing, but not really useful in the real world. He would be chewed up in Kings Landing.

Yet, despite this the man was totally confounding the master of whispers.

The man was honorable almost to a fault and he inspired great honor in those around him. Varys found this to be very unfortunate. He found it hard to find sparrows in such a place. There was no greed or avarice to entice people into his service. The north was almost a blind spot for him and he did not like it one bit.

He and Tyrion had discussed the issue earlier. Tyrion apparently found it amusing that Varys was so upset with the current situation. He teased Varys that just a month ago he, Varys, had stated he could easily read the man and, thus, control him. Varys had been very wrong he was coming to understand. Varys did not enjoy underestimating his foes. It left him feeling vulnerable and weak. He flashed back to his cutting and shivered.

Varys knew this man was playing him for a fool. He was positive the Free Cities were loyally in the Queens camp and yet seemingly overnight many ships from Braavos, Pentos and Tyrosh had appeared in the ports of the north. The number was slowly growing larger. Camps were springing up in places that made no sense.

He asked Dany to send a dragon to investigate and she had sent Rhaegal and he had sent mental images back to Dany that indeed the camps existed, heavily defended by Scorpions. She had been most displeased to see the open threat to her children. Rhaegal had stayed high indeed.

Varys was sure these were ruses but he was having to waste resources trying to track down. Again he cursed the honor of these Northmen.

What reports he got seemed to show a general pivot to the North and not the South, but again this made no sense. If Dany came North, Eddard would be defenseless. He had put barricades across the Kings Road but he had left them unguarded.

Daenerys had sent ravens across the realm to ask again for allegiance. All houses spoke generously of their loyalty. Even House Stark had again assured the Queen of its loyalty. The man had written ‘I will gladly lay my life down for you Daenerys Targaryen. I will fight any threat to the realm no matter the direction even from the North.’ It was emphasized.

There was no threat from the North. The wildlings were really of no military power. They could be crushed at any time. What did the man see as a threat? Why not just tell the Queen what he was mobilizing against? The only true power in Westeros was the Queen.

There was a knock at the door, and Varys told Tyrion he could come in.

“How did you know it was me?”

“Only you visit the spider in his own lair, Tyrion.”

“I see.” he showed the Spider his bottle of wine and asked him if he wanted a glass.

“No thanks ‘cub of Lannister’,” Varys answered. He chuckled slightly at the grimace from the dwarf. “Have you been sunburned anymore, O Lord of the Breast and Beast?”

Tyrion glared at the eunuch. He sat down and pouted. “How in the hell do you know these things? No one else was there dammit!”

“Don’t worry Tyrion, your secret is safe with me … I have sparrows every where … except where we need them” the eunuch groused petulantly.

He sighed, seeing the Lannister smirk at his predicament. “You know the Queen will have your little hide if she has to march against House Stark.”

Tyrion sighed in return. “Yes. She keeps reminding me that I have spoken for Eddard Stark. I do not fear. In the end I will be proven right.”

Varys watched the handsome dwarf shiver. “I just hope I live long enough to see it.”

Eddard

Eddard had been shocked that his daughter was willing to throw herself off the ledge in the rookery to her death to save her lover dishonor. Sansa was totally and completely in love with Margaery Tyrell. That was obvious.

He smiled. It must be nice to feel true love from the beginning of the relationship. Eddard reflected back to his and Cat’s beginning. He had felt so stilted taking his brother’s place in marrying and bedding this woman that had been betrothed to his brother, Brandon.
They had courted he guessed. They definitely knew each other and had an idea of their mannerisms and natures.

Catelyn Stark had come to him an enigma and he was a mystery to her.

There had been no love in the beginning of their relationship. How could there be. They were strangers to each other.

In time he came to love this stranger and he knew deep in his soul that his wife loved him dearly. They fit together. Their strengths complimented and supported each other, but, it had taken years to form and then grow.

Sansa already had that.

This made the wheels turn in Eddard’s head. He was already playing a game he detested. This Game of Thrones. He smirked gently. At least he could say in his defense that it took events that only occurred once in eight thousand years to get him playing this game of shadows and deceits.

He sighed and reached for the parchment and quill dipping the feather in the ink well.

He loved all his children dearly and would do anything for them. Still, he had to put the realm first. He sighed again as he paused to think of what he would write.

He needed an alley in the South. He thought of the possible persons he could work with. Doran Martell was to calculating. Eddard needed to act and quickly. The leader of Dorne would spend countless days leading to weeks thinking of all possible angles and happenstance. He would weigh the pros and cons back and forth for an eternity.

Tywin Lannister was a twisted crafty grizzled lion that would take advantage of anything presented to him. He could not be trusted. Any.

House Baratheon was led now by Stannis and he had a stick permanently shoved us his ass. He turned honor into something distasteful and trite. He made himself, Eddard Stark, look like a drunken fool. The man would never agree to what he thinking.

The Kraken could shove their tentacles up their ass. Theon had turned out to be a good man—with time.

House Tully and The Vale were already in his camp and could not provide any advantage.

House Tyrell was led by Mace. He was a good man but had absolutely no imagination. He could never even conceive of what Eddard had in mind. He was too stuck in his ways.

Oberyn had crossed his mind but the man was obviously solidly in the Queen’s camp and would never hear him out.

Eddard had listed out these men only because he wanted to make sure he did not miss anything but he knew his assessments were spot on.

Only one leader could help him. He needed someone who could see beyond their own House. Someone willing to consider what was best for the realm.

He would offer them something that he knew they would want. While they could see the realm and its needs, they would definitely be enticed and induced to join in his plan if he offered them something he knew they would want greatly.
Also, he was sure they loved their prodigy as much as he did. He smirked again in his soft way. Just maybe in a different way.

He dipped his quill in the ink well.

Daenerys

Dany went to the small table that sat beside the chair she had placed in front of the fireplace. The fireplace had a large, warm fire burning. She did not feel the heat at all. She knew Strong Belwas enjoyed the warmth. He had come down with a cold and she wanted to pamper the big baby a little. Belwas was the epitome of fidelity. She enjoyed his simple desires that made him so happy. Maybe all should have such simple desires. Maybe the world would be a better place.

She had made the special cheese dish he craved. He liked a blend of Garrotxa and Brunet goat cheese that was beaten and blended together, then spiced with curry that he so loved.

She heard a knock and went to the door. A weak but recovering Belwas was guided in by Barristan and Syrio helping the large man keep his balance. For once he was as weak as he was always claiming to be from hunger. They guided him to his chair that allowed him to recline back. He sat down, looking wane.

Missandei had followed them in with Tyrion trailing behind. Shadowclaw bolted in and came to look up at Strong Belwas, meowing in concern. The men got Belwas comfortable and the two women spread several blankets over the rotund eunuch. He sighed and smiled contentedly, looking up at them like a happy child. He reminded her of her lost daughter he was so innocent sometimes.

He spied the special dip Daenerys had made for him and cried as he took a locust from the pale and dipped it in the cheese and munched happily.

“I love you Daenerys.” he said softly.

Both women hiccuped with tears running down their cheeks. Daenerys saw a tear run down Syrio’s cheek and Barristan rubbed the eunuch’s bald head affectionately. Tyrion shuffled around and reached up gripping the eunuch’s forearm and squeezed it awkwardly.

Shadowclaw meowed and jumped on Belwas’ lap. The cat pawed the blankets making a nest as it circled. The feline then settled down, facing the eunuch and meowed expectantly. Belwas handed the caracal a locust. The cat took it and started to eat the locust head first, purring loudly.

Daenerys had not dressed in her traditional Dothraki garb, but wore a fresh set of trousers and blouse she generally wore at her Small Council sessions.

They went over to the table that Daenerys was using as their meeting table and sat down around it. All sat attentively looking at their Queen waiting to hear what her pronouncement would be. They waited patiently as the Queen slowly moved her head making eye contact with each of them. Her steely gaze informed all that she was ready to move on the recent events of the North.

“I have held off on responding to the provocations from the North but I can no longer delay. Eddard Stark’s erratic behavior must now be answered. I have hesitated for several reasons. As we all know, we are in debt up our asses with the Iron Bank. Tyrion has found we are a little over nine million gold dragons in debt. I have been loathe to incur more debt or take needed resources to pay that down. But we are past that. I must begin to act against these provocations.
“In Essos, I left a trail of devastation behind me. I was death incarnate in Slaver’s Bay. I had to be. In no other way could I win the day. Those days are past. I will show restraint, but I will respond to these strange acts of House Stark.

“Today when the courtesans of the Riverlands and the Vale departed after receiving ravens from their titular heads, I was forced to act. Houses call their delegates home when war is on the horizon.

“This has been reinforced by these Houses now closing their borders in the same manner as the North. I have flown my dragons over the King’s Highway from on high this morning and indeed guard gates have been installed. Their gates are down. But . . . like the North there are no guards . . . I kept my dragons high for fear of some trap out of prudence but my gut tells me that there are no guards manning these new checkpoints . . . I keep asking myself why?

“Though these actions and others appear to be sedition, none of their mobilizations support them going to war. I see troop movements and ships slipping our blockade but they do nothing but sit in port. All I see are contradictions. I must act. But I will act with restraint.”

The Queen paused to look again around at her closest confidants and more importantly her truest friends.

“Syrio. Tomorrow you will send out ravens to all the Houses we can count on for full support. I want ravens sent to Doran, Mace and Stannis. These ravens will instruct them to call their vassals and prepare them for possible mobilization and war.”

“The last of the crops are being harvested now. I want those crops harvested, thrashed or processed and put into storage. Get those crops done. I want as soon as possible for the Lords to call their vassals and start training them for combat. I don’t want the last harvests long delaying this. It is imperative we train the populace for war.

“Westeros has not had war in a generation. It will take both us and Eddard six months to train our citizenry to fight.

“Whatever Eddard Stark is up to, he will not lead his people off to be butchered. He will train them up into a true fighting force and so will we”

Tyrion started to speak up “But Daenerys, what about Cas—“

“I have a different message for your father Tyrion . . . Syrio, the raven you send to Tywin will merely advise him to be on alert. To secure his border with the Riverlands. I do not want him calling his vassals. Frankly, I don’t trust your father very much, Tyrion.”

“That is the wisest thing you have said today my Queen.” Tyrion responded with a nod of this head.

A low chuckle spread around the room. Tywin was not highly regarded at all by the persons around the table.

“Yes, your father is too crafty by half Tyrion. His past actions speaks volumes. I will never trust that man.

“Tyrion. I want you to send ravens to the Houses requesting a complete inventory of all the supplies we may need for a march North. Only with the excellent reports from Myrcella and Arianna do I have a full listing of what I requested. I need to know what I can count on for march North if it becomes necessary.

“I will broker no more dalliance from my Houses . . . in two weeks. I will have my counts or their will be hell to pay. Do you understand me, my Hand? You have my full authority on this. Make it happen.”

“Yes my Queen!” Tyrion responded, anxious to do his Queen’s will.

“Missandei.” the Queen called gently.

“Yes my, Queen” the barely sixteen year old responded.

“You have served me well and loyally from the beginning of my quest for the Iron Throne. Your abilities with languages and cyphers are already legend.”

The young woman from Naath preened under the praise.

“I would ask you to do more. You mind is sharp and analytical. Tyrion has asked for someone to help him with the immense tasks that he must undertake. He will need an assistant to help him understand, process and then implement solutions to our probable march north.”

The young woman looked at her with her big, innocent eyes.

“I would ask you to assume even more duties, and help Tyrion with the logistics of our move North. Can I ask this of you?”

“YES my Queen!” the interpreter responded.

“Thank you, my dearest friend.”

Tyrion turned to smile at the sweet girl to let her know he truly wanted her insights and help.

The girl’s shoulders squared that little more.

“Tyrion—Missandei, I need you to get the figures for crop production and how much cattle, pigs, goats and other livestock we can reasonably ask for from our vassals to be slaughtered and processed. I want their beef jerked or salted and prepared for our possible armies.

“I want truthful counts of what are in the grain silos. Missandei, that information for the storage of grains in the free cities are in High Valyrian and Braavosi. I want those figures translated and provided two weeks hence, along with Westeros’s numbers.

“Also, I have still kept the granary ships fully loaded and docked in Dorne and the Stormlands or Pentos and Tyrosh. I want to know exactly the counts and the locations of these ships. The smallest holds at least four hundred and fifty tons of grain. The larger ships from the Free Cities can hold up to seven hundred tones. The Summer Islander merchant ships can hold up to one and a half thousand tones of grain. I want those counts when we meet in two weeks, to start putting our actual plans in place.

“I want the two of you to start planning on how we get food and material up North in the most efficient manner possible.

“Syrio . . . I want you to have a meeting set up for thirteen hundred hours tomorrow with yourself, Hugh Elicero and Solaja Xo. We will be using mainly Essos navies for our purposes. These ships will supported by the Summer Islander fleets. I am sure Solaja will demand that her ships be in the lead. Her ships are the best at trans ocean voyages. I need those ships for the protection of my whole realm. We will discuss all this with her tomorrow.”
Syrio started to object but the Queen held up her hand for silence.

“The Iron Islands must be warded. The only people I trust less than Tywin Lannister are the Greyjoys. I will leave the navies of Casterly Rock and Highgarden in place on the west coast of Westeros. I will not have Kracken raiding while I am moving North.

“I will make it clear to Tywin that he will support Highgarden with troops if they are attacked. I will only be leaving nominal forces behind with the Houses I trust. I will crush the Lannisters if they balk. I will make that clear when the time comes.

“Tomorrow ravens will fly to Tyrosh, and from there, up and down the coast of Essos alerting them to call in or turn around their warships. We will blockade the North and the Vale. If unexpected battles appear in places unforeseen we will have the naval forces to move to intercept and destroy. This is where I want to keep most of the Summer Islander fleet in a naval reserve off the coast of Essos off the promontory between Pentos and Braavos. If some sudden need arises they can move to support.”

Little of consequence is on the west coast of the North for this campaign. Any battles will be fought in central and eastern part of Eddard’s domain I deem.”

I will ask Varys to double down on his spying. He has some sparrows who can actually sing in the Vale and the Riverlands. They too are calling their lords and vassels to arms and beginning to train.

The queen paused to sip her glass of water.

“I want all of you to study this map. The queen unfolded a map of the North. I want all of you to be able to see this map in your sleep. I have memorized it. I want your input on three landing sites for beachheads in the North.

“I have immense troop transport with my Essos navies. I deliberately kept them intact for just this eventuality. I will make beachheads with the mercenary troops loyal to me. They will prepare the way for the Westerosi foot troops that I will sail north. This will speed the cavalry march north and speed up the trains of supplies moving north.

Daenerys put three weights in the shape of her three dragons on the map. They were all on the east coast of the North.

“I propose these three areas for our beachheads. Study this map and in two weeks I will get your thoughts. If you have better sites I want you rational and reasons. I am open to debate but give me support for your decisions.

“I am putting forth the stratagems for possible war. . . . I will do all I can to avoid it, but I will be prepared.

“Do I make myself clear?”

All around the table shook their heads in the affirmative.

Dany looked over at Strong Belwas. He was asleep, snoring happily with a contended Shadowclaw snuggled into his lap purring.

“One last thing . . . does anyone have a fucking idea as to what the hell Eddard Stark is up to? . . . this behavior is totally unlike everything I have been told about this man.” The Queen made a point to glare at Tyrion for a moment.
Syrio and Missandei were from Essos, and had no clue except for what they heard secondhand. Barristan told the Queen he was totally perplexed. He was not behaving in a rational manner.

Tyrion cleared his throat, and related his second visit to the Wall and his feeling of ill-ease and foreboding.

“So you believe in these fairy tales?” Daenerys asked with a raised eyebrow.

Tyrion looked at her. “No, my Queen. I let my childhood fears and half remembered tales temporarily overcome my rational thought. The North is safe.”

The Queen merely looked at him with a neutral gaze. She had been given reason to wonder otherwise.

She had heard so many prophecies and almost none of them had occurred. She remembered once saying, “I make my own prophecies.”

If there was a threat in the north it was not supernatural. The Reeds may have believed it so, but Daenerys did not hold to such a belief. If the threat breathed and pumped blood in its veins, she would kill them and rid the realm of it. They may have learned to control cold like she had heat, but they would be a human just like her. There were no supernatural beings who walked on two feet. Only magical animals that could be tamed as she had tamed her dragons, and the Starks their Direwolves. She would be victorious like she always was in her battles.

After her victory, which she fervently hoped would not require bloodshed, she would then placate the old wolf and get back to the business of governance of her kingdom that spanned two continents.

She did not need this problem in her ass. She wanted to be rid of what she fervently hoped was only a distraction. If it was a more, it would be handled deftly if possible, and with an iron fist if necessary.

But, handle it she would.
Daenerys

The tension in the small council was palpable. The room was tense with the ire of the Targaryen Queen. She glared around the table, not liking one bit what she was hearing. She was beginning to have serious doubts about the men and women around her.

She felt like Eddard Stark was playing them all like a maestro Viol player. He was plucking the strings pizzicato and they were all jumping to his notes. It was his score that Daenerys Targaryen was being led down and she did not like it one bit!

Daenerys fumed about the fact that this man was outthinking and one step ahead of the best minds in Westeros and Essos - herself included! In her previous campaigns she had been the one making others react. She was beginning to understand how they must have felt being outthought and outflanked. He kept adding to the pressure she was under and she was starting to really feel it.

What really made her angry above all was that she had been told from the start about Eddard Stark was that beyond his antiquated sense of honor, he had a total incapacity to play the Game of Thrones. All the pundits had assured her the man would not have survived four months in the Red Keep. Obviously everyone had been mistaking.

Very mistaken.

How? Where had the man acquired this skill? This expertise? Had he always had it, buried beyond even his sight? Why couldn’t it have stayed buried?!

Her violet gaze fell on the Master of Ships. “Do you want to tell me one more time how it is that ships from the Free Cities, are mystically appearing in the ports of the North?” she paused to give Lysono Saan of the Free Cities a withering look. “What kind of Navy are we fielding again, Hugh Elicero?” the Queen asked her Master of Ships.
“I assure you that our blockade is intact, my Queen.”

“Then please tell me how it is that warships of the Free Cities are appearing in the Harbors of the North. I am paying an awful lot of money for your fleet, and my gods you have most of the fucking navies of Essos with you, and you still can’t stop these ships from appearing in the North!”

“I-I-I …they must be fake!” the man stuttered to his Queen.

She stared at him for a long moment “It would seem that the only place your fleet reigns supreme is in the wash tub.” The Queen sneered at Elicero.

Her ire turned to Lysono Sann. “Tell me again about your loyalty to me?” she asked with a deadly calm. She stared hard at the man, and all could hear him gulp weakly.

Daenerys’ visceral reaction to sedition was already legendary. All waited with baited breath as Lysono looked at the Queen “I can not explain to you what is being reported, my Queen. All I can tell you is that we remain loyal to you. You are the breaker of chains. If you need blood then I offer my life… but please do not punish our cities for a crime we have not committed.”

He looked at his Queen, earnest, as she took a long breath. “I believe you.”

Daenerys reflected again on how Eddard Stark was skillfully making her doubt her own trusted advisors. In weak moments she doubted her own decisions and she never did that! Daenerys snorted to herself. If this was happening to anyone else, she would be admiring the man and chuckling at the poor fools spinning to the pulls and jerks of his marionette strings.

The only problem was that the fools were Daenerys Targaryen and her Small Council. That really steamed and agitated her! Really agitated her.

The room visibly relaxed. Daenerys saw out of the corner of her eye that Solaja Xo was eyeing her intently. The only problem it was not from fear. The woman was licking her lips, and her long nipples were clearly poking through the sheer top that clung tightly to her full bosom. Daenerys’ passion was arousing the Summer Islander. Master Lape’s eyes were literally glued to Solaja’s full bosom, his lust palpable. For the nonce, the Summer Islander only had eyes for Daenerys. The woman’s eyes throbbed with passion. She was excited by Dany’s anger and passion.

Daenerys’ ire ratcheted up a level. She stood up and slammed her palms down on the table. “I thought I had surrounded myself with the best that Westeros and Essos had to offer. I am starting to wonder. I need answers, not stuttered exclamations of ‘I don’t know’”. She slammed her palms on the table again. “I want answers, damnit!”

She turned to look at Varys, who had his hands in the sleeves of his robe. He looked at her calmly but she could see the thin sheen of sweat on his brow.

“You call yourself the Master of Whispers and The Spider, whose webs capture all the news of Westeros and Essos. From what I am seeing, I am officially changing your name to the Master of Wisps. You webs must have been swept up, oh Mite. That his your new title: ‘The Mite’!” she barked. To the eunuch’s credit, he merely stared back at the raging Queen. He knew she valued him and was just letting out bile.

The Queen pinched her nose and then stomped her foot on the floor, her arm whipping down. She quickly found a new target to spew vitriol at, her deadly gaze falling on Syrio Forel. “You are my master General. I want you to tell me what Eddard Stark is doing. What in the hell is he doing?!” she roared.
Daenerys remembered Eddard Stark’s response to what she thought was a great question: “What the FUCK are you doing?!” His answer had her ripping his response to small pieces and stomping on them before a bemused Missandei and a trembling Tyrion. ‘I serve the Realm.’ He’d written back. That was it! She nearly pulled her hair out in frustration as Tyrion had pressed his back against the furthest wall in the Queen’s chamber. His eyes skittering to her door seeking escape from her ire in case it turned towards him.

“I wish I knew, my Queen. What he is doing makes absolutely no sense. He is moving forces haphazardly. He brings in ships, and then leaves them in harbor. He is undoubtedly having the forces in his holds training, and we can see he is hording supplies as well but the orientation is all wrong. I can’t explain it.” Syrio told the Queen the truth.

He watched as her eyes flared wide, their violet gaze unsettling. He knew he was unprepared for this position, even with Barristan and his generals helping him learn tactics and logistics at a rapid clip.

The Queen turned and barked at the shadowy figures sulking in the back of the Council Chamber. “If you can’t perform your duties gods damnit I will have Barristan Selmy take your position!” the Queen nearly roared.

“I don’t wa—” Barristan started to respond.

“You will do what I fucking tell you TO DO!” Daenerys Targaryen bellowed, slamming her palms on the table again.

Daenerys turned her attention to her Hand. “Why so quiet, my Hand? I put you in that chair to lead this council and give me the information I need to govern! What is the problem with this fucking council? Hhhmmmm … maybe you have been too busy focusing on the your duties of ‘King of the Breast’ ”.

She watched as heads turned in Tyrion’s direction, strange and questioning looks on their faces. Tyrion hung his head, wondering if he would ever live that event down.

“I need ANSWERS!” the Queen yelled in frustration.

Aarrrrgghhhhh! No one but Daenerys heard her mental scream of frustration. She wondered for the umpteenth how Eddard knew exactly which lever to pull and when to drive her crazy and yet not cross the line into open sedition.

All his actions took the North and more and more the Riverlands and the Vale into rebellion, but he kept just enough sanity in his actions to keep the Queen from decisively acting with an immediate assault.

She controlled her rash impulses. Bad decisions were made when one was agitated.

Again she felt like she was in some dread mummers play where no one knows what the hell is truly happening. The clues doled out in just the right manner to confuse and obfuscate the plot. She hated the man for his fucking skill at it!

What Daenerys had not shared yet even with her Klatch of Confidantes was the influx of ravens coming to the Red Keep from the Great Houses.

The actions of Eddard Stark and his compatriots had not gone unnoticed. She had not raised the alarm and had told her Small Council to hold deliberations close but she knew that secrets rarely stayed secrets long with all the spiders, moths, sparrows, moles, rats, jackals and gods knew what else sulking about.
They all wanted action and answers. They wanted their new Queen to act.

She was not ready to act! Not yet!

The ravens from Doran had complained of so many variables. He felt she should fly down to Dorne and sit down and discuss all the variables and possible permutations. One needed to study very carefully all possible outcomes and move prudently forward incrementally.

That was a recipe for disaster.

His brother had been the exact opposite. He had so much clout he did not mind sending his own ravens. Of course his counsel was just the opposite - put this impudent dog down. Attack, attack, attack, attack! Was the basic gist of his ravens.

Gods that man had too much sperm in his testicles.

The ravens from Highgarden were basically Mace wringing his hands and wanting to know what to do.

For once Daenerys was thankful for the man’s indecisiveness.

The ravens from Dragonstone had demanded action. Stannis made veiled comments about how if he had been allowed to ascend the throne they would not be having these issues. He had the fortitude and foresight to handle this situation the man had snidely but subtly stated.

The man had a stick up his ass, or was constipated with his constant grimacing and gnashing of his teeth.

It was the ravens from Tywin Lannister that really set her off. He had complained that the Crown was being made to look like “dunces” and that only firm leadership could prevent these “sad commentaries” from occurring. When he had been Hand these problems did not exist.

Daenerys thought of Tywin like a lion that steals its food from a leopard who made the kill and did all the work. He was a damn buzzard as far as she was concerned.

Then this morning another raven had arrived form Casterly Rock. In this missive he had asked directly if the “Queen” needed his wise counsel. He mentioned that for a teenage girl to be having to rule a kingdom that maybe she “felt overwhelmed” and needed his steady hand. The hand of man is what he clearly implied.

Gods did that piss her off! Her blood was still boiling. She dearly wanted to strangle somebody! Anybody!

Syrio

Syrio saddled his eyes over to Varys and saw a self-satisfied smirk skirt across his face. He evidently was in on the inside joke.

He was stung from the Queen’s rebuke. He knew she valued his expertise and loyalty, and he had witnessed her temper tantrums in the past. She vented her frustrations in the most childlike ways, but she’d always calm again quickly after. He did know that until he and his small council members found answers to their Queen’s questions, more ire and vitriol would most likely be spilled.
He noticed Jhogo slipping further into the shadows, making sure to stay out of sight, out of mind. Barristan met and held his eye, and Syrio knew he had the full support of the great knight.

He worried again over all of the strange behaviors coming from the North. Ships were appearing in their harbors that could not possibly be there, large forces appearing and then disappearing only to crop up in another location.

The King’s highway had been blocked. The Reeds had harassed but not attacked several patrols sent to investigate the King’s Road, only to disappear into the swamps afterward. Reports indicated that the road had been cut at Moat Cailin, but when the Queen’s forces arrived the road was open once again. The forces in the castle had not responded to challenges or threats, but had not lifted a finger in protest to the force outside its gate either. No trouble had been reported since, but traffic was still tense on the road.

Her custom officers in the ports of the North had suddenly been kept in their offices under armed guard but two days later were apologized too for the misunderstanding. All three of her recalcitrant Houses had suddenly started sending Ravens complaining of overly high taxes. They may have to stop collections in the future.

That got everyone’s attention.

All of this was accomplished nothing, aside from raising tensions unnecessarily. All inquires were left unanswered. It was like Eddard Stark was intentionally baiting the Queen – but why? It was like baiting a hungry bear.

Their Queen was showing remarkable restraint. This was borderline treason. The Dany that had existed at the start of her campaign to crush Slaver’s Bay would have flown her dragons North and laid waste to it.

Thankfully, this was not the same Daenerys Targaryen. She had learned restraint and now used extreme force only as a last resort. He remembered when she had first conquered Yunkai and her slaves were being butchered at night. She had collected the high nobles of the city in the courtyard of one of their great pyramids. Then, she had ordered them to give up the conspirators. They had laughed at her, even as she had lined the walls with her Unsullied.

Three times she had ordered them to submit and give her the names of the conspirators. The nobility had been so high and mighty. They all died when the Queen ordered her Unsullied to hurl their spears from their positions, piercing their bodies with multiple spears. She had walked among them after, putting those still alive out of their misery, her face hard and cold.

The rebellion had ended that day and the peace lasted for a year. The Queen would broker no killing of her freed slaves. She let it be known she had been killed when she was helpless, and she would never countenance it under her rule. Syrio had not been happy to see that slaughter. When he had tried to explain to Daenerys that the nobles had been helpless as well, she arched an eyebrow and replied: “They had a choice … the slaves didn’t”’. He found he had to agree with that statement.

Fortunately, she had tempered. He and Barristan still clashed in this, though. He was willing to sacrifice a few for the many without question. Syrio had to admit that the killing had indeed stopped when Daenerys used the hammer of her authority. He was thankful that Westeros did not have a history of slavery. Without that goad, the Queen was much more reasonable. She was willing to carefully weigh out and consider her response to Eddard Stark’s apparent sedition.

He had proposed to send out armed reconnaissance missions to seek out these armed camps. Their scouts would come up where the camps were, only to find them abandoned. They would appear, days later, somewhere else.

He needed more forces with more horses to keep up with the demand for all this reconnaissance, and troops to protect the scouts as they got more aggressive in their search for these elusive camps.

The Queen agreed but made it clear she wanted no battles if they could be avoided. She was not going to be the trigger for any warfare in Westeros. Hers would be the reluctant fist, which she would use only if attacked. She let it be clear though, that if she had to use her fist she would be merciless. Syrio had agreed completely.

She had also stated that they would chase these elusive ghosts for a week more but if not successful she would pull all her troops South. They were exposed and she did not like it. They were exposed. The North, Riverlands and the Vale were recalcitrant only currently but they may become more belligerent in the future. The Queen did not want the provocation or the waste of good men lives.

He watched the Queen, noticing that she seemed to have to calmed down. Unfortunately, that lull did not last long. Vedad Sofic reported that Casterly Rock had put in a claim for another five hundred thousand gold dragons. Micud Caudill concurred with the calling in of debt, stating that the contracts signed by Robert Baratheon were binding to the new Queen.

Daenerys had been shuffling through some reports on crop production, then shoved them off the table onto the floor and was up in flash.

“The gall of that Bastard!” the Queen yelled her face turning beet red. “Tyrion—I want a summary of all your father’s chicanery with our finances. I think it is time we sent a raven explaining the true situation. The queen ground her teeth picking up the papers she had tossed to the floor.

When Daenerys head cane up she eyed Maester Lape. He was not so subtly pawing at Solaja as she encouraged him while she stared at Daenerys. Daenerys rolled her eyes, even more agitated.

She stormed down to the two council members who had given her latest round of bad news and berated their incompetence. She questioned just how exactly this had happened. They only spluttered that they had not been in the government of the previous king.

Then she strode down to Varys. He had the misfortune of being the only holdover of the previous reign.

She asked him how he could have possibly allowed this agreement; this debt that Robert had incurred and she was now expected to pay. He replied that he was only the master of whispers, and not policy. He had no part in it. “Yes, you overlook what is right underneath your nose and can’t see beyond it!” She’d told him spitefully.

“I need for your little birdies to be singing, Varys. Why aren’t they?” Syrio watched the bald eunuch try to answer, while Daenerys overrode him “Oh that’s right: ‘Winter is Coming’ and they all have flown South to Dorne. The only fucking problem is I need them in Winterfell!”

Daenerys stomped her foot and stormed back down the table.

As she walked past Maester Lape she rapped him on the back of his head with her knuckles.

“Oowwwww!” The Maester yelped, glaring at Daenerys while rubbing the back of his head.

“Solaja’s eyes are in her head, and not on her tits Maester Lape.” She threw him a napkin from the finger food that had been served. “For gods sake wipe the drool off your chin, man!”
Looking down the table Syrio observed that no one was safe from her sniping.

The Queen sat back down and shuffled her papers around. Then she looked up at her Master of Laws. “When are you going to get the Iron bank off my ass?”

“We are working diligently my Queen. These are very complicated contracts.”

Dany threw up a few sheets of paper from the stack in front of her. “Whatever.” She huffed.

Tyrion

Tyrion had made his initial report and then stayed low. With the Queen on the warpath he was definitely sure that discretion was the better part of valor. He was just thankful that the Queen had finally taken him up on his offer.

Three weeks past, the Queen had come to his quarters in the Tower of the Hand. She had walked around, looking at the items in his room and shuffling her feet.

“You remember our conversation on the beach, Tyrion?” Daenerys asked, not looking at him.

The dwarf had stiffened up, his testicles reflexively shrinking. He looked around for sanctuary, and started to hide underneath his desk. Daenerys noticed what he was doing and asked him if he had lost his mind.

He told her that he thought she had forgiven him his indiscretion. She looked at him confused, and then laughed. She assured him that she had forgiven him fully. She told him that she would not let him live it down, but not to worry.

“I was referring to your other offer…” she left the statement hanging.

Tyrion thought furiously for a moment. “Oh.”

“I was wondering if you could make an arrangement to have a … uhmmm… woman brought to my quarters tonight. I would want discretion.” She added hastily.

“Oh course my Queen. I would be honored. Varys will show you a secret entrance to your quarters. Do you have a preference?” He watched her eyes go distant for a long moment and then she shook her head. “I don’t know.”

“You can have whomever you want, my Queen. Half of the females at court would happily sleep with you.”

“No, no. I don’t want any entanglement with any house of Westeros. I have heard of high end brothels that serve the high nobles and masters of court and business. And, uh,” she cleared her throat, “some that serve a woman’s need for a woman’s touch. I have heard of a “Dragon Road”. It has women of pure Valyrian blood from Lys. I have never made love to a woman with violet eyes. I would like that.”

“Of course, my Queen.”

She bashfully acknowledged his response.

The next day she had a much lighter step and a soft smile on her face. She had the same woman in her bed the whole week. Varys reported that his sparrows were going deaf and that he was having trouble from keeping a flock from forming. Tyrion was never sure with Varys how much was boasting and how much was factual when he made such statements.

The next week Daenerys was back in his quarters delicately inquiring about finding her a Summer Islander to have in her bed. She had actually licked her lips. Her libido was definitely surging. Tyrion knew just who to bring to Daenerys.

Tyrion frequented Chataya’s establishment frequently. Chataya was a Summer Islander of early middle age. In the Summer Islands, prostitution was an esteemed trade. Chataya was of noble birth, and still a ravishing beauty. She had only the most beautiful of woman in her establishment.

Truth be told Tyrion was sure most of the women there preferred other women, but were willing to fuck any man if the money was right. He often found the prostitutes kissing and making out with each other when not taking clients, and then leaving to go up the stairs hand in hand with fire in their eyes.

Tyrion contacted Chataya. She nearly swooned at the thought of sharing the Queen’s bed. Her daughter Alayaya demanded to sleep with the Queen as well. Varys reported that in the end, Daenerys had both the mother and the daughter. Their screams were again deafening, and lasted long into the night. The Queen was definitely starting to become much more relaxed.

Unfortunately, Eddard Stark’s behavior had ruined the peaceful feeling the Queen had been cultivating. She came back to his quarters, and started to hem and haw. Tyrion patiently waited her out.

“What do you know of the children of Eddard Stark?” she asked, looking down at the floor.

“Robb Stark is a turning into a fine young man. I doubt there will ever be another Eddard Stark, but he will make a great consort.” Tyrion knew the Queen would eventually have to marry. She could not make a better choice.

“I wasn’t speaking of his sons. I was, uh, speaking of his daughters.”

He then told the Queen of Sansa Stark, how she had always been polite and the picture of courtesy. She was always chattering of the myriad young princes who caught her eye when he visited Winterfell, though by his last visit she seemed to have picked one because she no longer spoke so giddily of the various prospective young princes. The House of Tyrell had visited six months previously. Loras must of have captured her heart. He hoped she learned to share Loras with Renly. His mind immediately went to smutty visions of threesomes. He shook the thought away for later.

“Yes. Sansa does sound like the perfect painting of what a Queen would want her consort to be. I have heard of her height and great beauty. Her hair is a deep auburn that minstrels sing of. Her bearing is regal at all times it is reported. Varys also states that her figure is quite ‘shapely.’” The Queen paused and looked off. Then she spoke again more softly, “I wonder if she ever dreams of going down on a woman.” Daenerys shook her head.

“What of the House Tyrell? Tell me of this Margery Tyrell.”

“She was betrothed to my nephew, unfortunately for her. I thank you for sparing his life, but he is a total little shit. The only reason it was not consummated was because of his strange wasting illness that weakened him. She left and went back to Highgarden the day you landed on Dorne.”
Tyrion then told the Queen of her thick, softly curling brown hair, large brown eyes, unblemished skin and a slender yet shapely figure.

“This will be of note my Queen. The rumors swirl thick and fast about the grandchildren of Olenna Tyrell - the real power of House Tyrell as we all know. Loras is in love and actively consummating an affair with Renly Baratheon. As for Margery, well, I am sure her precious hymen is intact but … well, she has a bevy of cousins as her handmaidens. It is widely known that they are all incestuous lesbian lovers … you might find in her a woman already a lover of the female form and soul.”

He saw the Queen’s eyes flare at that news. He saw the calculation. She became more animated.

“Anymore possible matches? I don’t know why I am going through with this…” Tyrion heard the sadness in her voice, but the Queen’s iron will propelled her on.

“We have the younger sand snakes of Dorne, the daughters of Ellaria Sand and Oberyn Martell. Sarella actually is a scion of a Summer Islander captain and Oberyn, but was raised by Ellaria as her own. They are beautiful and fierce warriors. You might find them to your liking. They are swarthy with dark hair and midnight eyes. They are well sculpted with muscle from their martial training. Plus, I hear they are fierce lovers in bed. Wild in bed, actually, but I think you might like that. They are like their parents in being bi-sexual but with a strong leaning towards women. Though, they would be difficult to rule, I feel.”

Tyrion smirked at the glare and eyebrow cock that brought. “I think I could manage Imp. My tongue is quite talented.”

Tyrion had blushed hard at that.

“With Dorne… they would gladly have you marry their daughters. You would have to contend with the rest of Westeros, but Dorne would be behind you. In fact, you could marry Tyene, Sarella, Elia and Obella Sand all if you desired. Create your own pride. ‘The Pride of the Storm Lands’, if you would. I hear the women of Dorne are open to multiple partner relationships and incest obviously doesn’t bother them. Myrcella proved that.”

Daenerys looked at Tyrion with good humor. “I think I can only handle one woman at a time, Tyrion. I don’t know how Myrcella manages and controls all of that estrogen. Plus, as you know King of the Breast, a woman’s pussy can take a licking and keep purring but not from four tongues! I wouldn’t be able to walk.”

“Are there any other maidens from the Great Houses?” Tyrion watched the Queen chuckle at that, since she was no maiden herself.

“My house is spoken for. Myrcella is happily married to her three Queens.” He still marveled at the vixen. He would never have guessed the sweet, innocent girl who left for Dorne would turn into such a lioness and bring down not one, not two, but three wives. He sometimes had impure thoughts about it all, wishing he could witness his niece in action.

“We have Asha Greyjoy, but I don’t think you will find that House so appealing. She is beautiful and lusty from all accounts, though. I am sure she would gladly marry you if only for the power and prestige. I hear her sexual stamina is extraordinary - she is insatiable.”

Tyrion watched the Queen mull that over. “I do like my women to be sluts in bed, that is true. I devour my women and want, no, need them to devour me in return. I fuck all night, Tyrion.” She told him with deliberate calculation and a twinkling in her eye. “Do you know what it feels like for a woman, when her pussy cums that one last time after it has been crushed with, oh, I don’t know, seven or eight orgasms? I cum so fucking hard. My cunt feels like it is on fire and burning as it ruptures yet again. My body just goes rock hard and stiff as crushing ecstasy burns and sears my cunt.

I love soaking my lover’s face in hot sweet cum that gushes, running up into her hair, matting it yet again. I love seeing it run down her throat to soak her chest and breasts while my own groin and thighs, are just as soaked. I feel like my cunt is tearing itself inside out. I scream like I am being garroted.”

Tyrion cursed Dany, his cock bulging and throbbing in his trousers. The queen was making him hurt and she liked it. She was chuckling loudly, watching him move with a definite stitch. Tyrion cursed his bulging trousers.

Tyrion had finished his list of suitable women from the High Houses.

He watched the Queen walk around fidgeting. She was picking up knickknacks eyeing them without really seeing them.

The Queen then pointedly asked about Ayra Stark. He was a little surprised. Daenerys was a beautiful woman. Absolutely, beautiful. He would never thought that the plainer daughter of Eddard Stark, Arya, would catch her eye.

“My Queen. Sansa is a striking beauty with long auburn hair and blue eyes. You might think Arya is cut from the same cloth. I don’t know how to put this delicately, but Arya is not a ravishing beauty. She has nondescript features and straight, brown unremarkable hair. She is attractive for sure, but the other women I have listed, like you, are ravishing beautiful. Arya is short where Sansa is tall and shapely. She’s also quite a tomboy.” His memories went back to Tysha, and he thought sadly of his lost love. She too had not been blessed the beauty of Sansa or Cersei, but she had been a beauty in his eyes.

He had supplied voluptuous women to the Queen. Now he wondered exactly what her tastes lay.

“Have you been satisfied with the women I have sent you, my Queen?”

“They were all lovely Tyrion. I love the woman I am with totally, while I am with her. I find women to be entirely beautiful. How would you describe the personalities of the Stark daughters?”

“Sansa is the epitome of what any Queen would want in her consort. She is dignified and composed. She knows all court etiquette and has learned all of the skills that any King or Queen would want.”

“And Arya?”

“She is a wild child, my Queen. When I have been at Winterfell I have heard more than once Eddard Stark crying out ‘Arya is filled with the wolf! She refuses all instruction!’ ” Tyrion shook his head, remembering. “She’s definitely not what I would call Court material. She was made for the field and wood. She would have a been great consort for the Conqueror of Essos, but not for the Court of Kings Landing.”

“Maybe it is that ‘filled with the wolf’ that I find alluring. I have seen Arya, I think, through Viserion’s eyes.

Tyrion was surprised at the admission.

“I found her intoxicating. The fire in her steel grey eyes. Her tight warrior’s body. I loved the angles of her face.” She focused her eyes on Tyrion. “I find her very attractive, Tyrion. Very attractive.” She spoke in a tone that made Tyrion realize that from now on he was to describe Arya in only the most appealing language.

Daenerys was turning over a lion figurine she had found on his dresser.

“Can I ask you a question, Dany?”

“Um-hmmmm.” She answered in a soft distracted way.

“What don’t you just marry whomever you choose? You are the most powerful person in the land. You may be the most powerful ruler ever in Westeros. You plan to change to the law of succession to allow for equal primogeniture, why not allow for the right to marry whom you choose? Might does make right, my Queen.”

Daenerys put the lion down and looked over at the dwarf with a sad look on her face.

“I will have to spend most of my political capital forcing through equal primogeniture. I won’t have any leftover for the right of same-sex marriage. The first will cause heartburn. The second will cause fatal stomach ulcers.”

She sighed. “Tyrion, Westeros is not Dorne or even Essos. I could marry one of the Sand Snakes or all if they insisted and make Dorne proud, but I can’t risk the rest of Westeros rising up in rebellion. The nobles are allowed to have their ‘unnatural’ dalliances only if they are kept in the shadows. Never in the open. The other Great Houses would never accept it.”

“Look at Cersei,” she continued, “she chose exile rather than go back to her father. You should have seen her face when I gave her that option. She looked like she was walking up to the gallows.

“Jon Arryn and Stannis Baratheon are so enamored with the old ways and honor that they look like they have sticks rammed up their ass.

“The Iron Islands believe in the tradition of Salt Wives, though they try to hide it. That won’t stand for long, I may add.

“The Riverlands seem no better. Highgarden seems a little more progressive, but I don’t see them willing to rock the boat.

“And of course that leaves the great Eddard Stark the Warden of the North. Can you get any more conservative than that bunch of roughnecks and followers of the ‘old ways’?

“I can just see me going up to him and saying I want the hand of your daughter in marriage and not your son. The man would soil his precious armor. He would rather die than allow such an ‘abomination’ to occur.

“Olenna may let her lesser nieces and cousins marry each other, but you saw who Margery was given to. Even knowing Joffrey Baratheon was a fucking dip shit. The true female scions of a Great House are always given away as chattel. I know, Tyrion. I was one. That is the reason I am sensitive to it. I hate it but I don’t how to change it without completely crushing the old to put in the new. I will not do to my homeland what I did to Essos. There I was crushing a vile, evil slave trade. Here it would be destruction just so I could marry a woman. I will not be the Robert Baratheon of my time.”

Tyrion watched her look around his room with melancholy. She snorted. “Sansa is so besotted with Loras. That would be like Olenna telling Eddard that his eldest daughter was in love with Margaery rather than him.” She chuckled at her own dark humor.
“No Tyrion. I will not fight what cannot be fought. I want peace in my realm. I will not fight a war for a woman’s hand like Robert Baratheon did, and destroy it in the process.”

Tyrion thought over the situation and decided he would finally present the counter argument to Dany’s fears.

“Dany, I am going to say something and please hear me out. I don’t agree with your assessment. You keep talking about Robert. That man thought with his cockhead and not his bigger head. Plus, he was aggrieved with Rhaegar Targaryen running off with Lyanna Stark, though I think the woman had sense and went willingly.

“You are not Rhaegar. You will woo and win the heart of any woman you love. You are fierce in battle and gentle in peace. You will be a loving wife to any woman you choose. I know you only see the bad you have done, but you totally overlook the much greater good.

“Sure the Great Houses of the North will bleat and whine, but go to war? I think not. Plus, also consider this - if you marry Margery or Sansa—uhhh, Arya, then you would bind two great houses into one which would not cause war but sow the seeds of peace.

“Personally, I think you totally underestimate both Olenna and especially Eddard Stark. He is a great man. True he is bound by tradition and honor, but I have seen him flex and bend mightily for his realm and especially for his children, and he never does anything rashly. He might surprise you.

“Please. Just consider these words.”

Tyrion truly felt sad for the Queen. She was forlorn, genuinely trapped by expectations and traditions.

A squabble was occurring between the Lord of Ships and Ser Barristan. Syrio and Varys had reported that the North was buying huge amounts of grain from Essos.

Barristan was arguing to blockade the shipments. The Master of Ships was whining that he needed more resources and more money - he sounded petulant to Tyrion’s ears.

Syrio was arguing that it would be inhuman to not allow shipments of food to be allowed through. The innocent would be punished as much as the soldiers and their leaders.

The men went back and forth, then finally turned to the Queen. She was worrying her lip with her teeth. She hesitated for a minute, thinking. “Winter is Coming to Westeros,” she said softly. “They will need that food.”

Barristan and Hugh Elicero continued to argue for a blockade, with Syrio giving his counter arguments.

Tyrion called out in a voice of command, “We will let the grain ships pass through to the ports of the North. The reign of Daenerys Targaryen will not be remembered for starving its own people. Do I make myself clear?” he asked, looking from face to face.

Barristan bowed his head. He had made his argument and lost, so for him it was finished. Elicero looked sullen, but he would get over it.

He watched Daenerys walk back to her seat and made to hit Maester Lape who jerked his head forward from the fake blow. He saw the smirk on Daenerys face. The woman truly had an impish side.

Varys

It was finally his turn to dispense any information he had to give the Queen. Varys had been dreading the news he was about to give next. It had been lightened with a missive he received just before the beginning of the Small Council meeting, but he doubted it would help.

The Queen settled down, but he knew she was about to have another reason to show her displeasure with the Small Council.

“My sparrows were finally able to get to the docks of White Harbor and Deepwood Motte. They were able to get a close look at some of the supposed ships from the Free Cities.”

“And?” Lysono Saan, the Free Cities representative asked pointedly.

“They are indeed ships from the Free Cities. Most were from Tyrosh and two were from Pentos.”

Saan jumped up out of his seat. “Give me the names of the ships from Tyrosh. This is fucking bullshit!”

Varys looked at his sheet, starting to list them. “Fist of Sallyros, The Piercing Fist, Drum of Doom, Harpies of Doom, Deathbringer, The Queenslayer,” Varys paused a moment at that, seeing Daenerys’ violet eyes flare as the representative of the Free Cities looked nervously askance at her, “and The Portent.”

Saan immediately let the Queen know that The Queenslayer had to be an older ship. He then paused, obviously thinking. “I can’t be certain but I am sure that those ships were lost two winters ago in a strong storm off of the fingers.”

“How convenient.” Daenerys sneered.

“I swear my Queen!”

“Any more great news Varys? You seem to be full of glad tidings.”

“One of my sparrows who made that report and most of the others were rounded up and are now on a ship back to King’s Landing.” He sighed when Daenerys jumped up out of her chair and again slammed her palms on the table top.

“Why do your spiders weave webs if they are the ones that get stuck and trapped in them? Webs are supposed to trap their prey, not themselves!” the Queen hurled at her Master of Whispers.

“Being a spy is always a dangerous and thankless job my Queen. I still have a few sparrows in the North though I fear they are watched closely.”

“Of course they are.” Daenerys sighed, pinching the bridge of her nose.

“I do believe that our good representative Lysono Saan is speaking the truth. They are loyal. I do have many sparrows in the Free Cities and Master Illyrio assures me that they are not restive. These ships in anchorage in the North cannot currently be explained, I know. But they must be fakes, though I have no proof of this - yet.

The discussion went back and forth about the vexing problem of the supposed free ships in the North ports. Daenerys went back to her seat, fuming. She restlessly moved her papers around on the table in front of her.

From the back side door a page came scurrying in, trying desperately not to be noticed. He came up to Master Lape and handed him two scrolls.

Varys missed nothing and saw that the scrolls bore the seals of House Tully and House Arryn. The Maester took them and nervously looked over at the Queen, her violet eyes were boring into him. She too had seen the seals. These were the two Houses most loyal to House Stark.

The Maester broke the seals and read them silently. He looked nervously over at the Queen.

“Well, what the fuck do they say Grand Maester Lape? I grow impatient!” the Targaryen nearly roared at him.

Varys watched the man gulp loudly. “The scroll from House Tully reads: ‘we fear we must close the gates of Riverrun. We stand with Eddard Stark in defense of the Realm.’” His hands were shaking as Daenerys was visibly enraged. He fumbled, trying to pick up the scroll from the Vale again. “‘I fear I must close the passes to the Vale. We stand with Eddard Stark in defense of the Realm.’” he read.

Varys mused that the Riverlands and the Vale had stopped any subterfuge of their intentions. They had now declared openly for the North totally in whatever endeavor Eddard Stark had started. They had caste their lot.

“FUCK!” Daenerys yelled, jumping up out of her chair and knocking it over. She stepped over and ripped the scrolls out of the Grand Maester’s hands. She read the very short messages, her hands trembling with anger. Then she made a show of tearing the scrolls to pieces and threw them in Lape’s face, some of the scraps hitting Solaja as well.

She moved down the table after rapping the back of Maester Lape’s head.

“Oooowwwww!” Maester Lape bleated.

“That’s for staring at my tits!”

She stormed down the table to get in front of Varys.

“Let me guess? You had no idea this was coming either, did you? What the fuck do your spiders and sparrows do? Eat each other? Everything catches you by surprise! … Arrrgggggen!” the Queen raged her arms moving in short jerks.

“I fear that this news does indeed surprise me. They must be playing their hands very close to the chest.”

“Close to the chest? You have got to be fucking me! … That does it!”

Varys wondered what insult she would think of now.

“I have decided that your sparrows are of absolutely no use. They never fucking sing. I will gather these mute sparrows and make a big ass sparrow pie, and I will put a big, fat bald spider on top as the garnishment!”

Varys thought that one was actually pretty good. Then out of the corner of his eye he caught sight of Solaja Xo. She was staring at the Queen with open lust again. Varys again wondered about the attraction of power that existed in men and women.

Women found it intoxicating in a physical way, attaching that authority to the allure of the person who wielded it. This was part of why the Summer Islander was so attracted sexually to Daenerys, and this was only enhanced by the fire and passion that the Queen was spitting in all directions currently.

Men, on the other hand, just wanted to be part of the power and attach themselves to it, hoping that some of the power and influence flowed into themselves, enhancing their stature and status.

Varys riposted, “yes, I hear it is a most exquisite dish that leaves a most delicate, refined taste on the tongue.”

He watched the Queen raise an eyebrow. “Yes. I hear it tastes even better when it has been charbroiled with the fires of three pissed off dragons.”

“If you do that my Queen, it will cause a most bitter taste in the mouth. I think your recipe is mistaken.”

“No, I think it is correct. I will just drink some Earl Grey tea that a certain spider will no longer be needing.”

The Queen saw the Summer Islander staring at her with ‘fuck me eyes’. “Please not now Solaja. I am sure Maester Lape will be more than happy.” She saw Solaja scowl and now sulk. Great. Daenerys turned her attention back to Varys.

For some reason the Master of Coin chose that particular moment to speak up. “All these ship deployments and troop movements are going to cost money the treasury does not have. We must not spend money what we don’t have, lest we make the same mistakes as Robert.”

“Please don’t tell me you just said that, Vedad Softic.” Daenerys told the Master of Coin, pinning him with her violet gaze.

Solaja Xo’s beautiful, melodic voice broke in. “The Summer Islands will bring more ships in to patrol along the coasts of the North. We have the resources to help in reinforcing the blockade. Our support comes without a price tag.” the dark skinned woman said pointedly.

Vedad glared at the woman.

Daenerys gave the Summer Islander a grateful look, feeling a little mollified. She knew there was a reason why she had accepted this woman on her council.

Suddenly, a strident voice cut across the Small Council. “ENOUGH! This money needs to be spent on Slaver’s Bay! I am tried of hearing all the endless bicker over the needs of Westeros when my land languishes in need of succor and restitution!” Draqhiz zo Gazno spoke passionately.

Varys watched the queen instantly calm and slowly turn to the representative of Slaver’s Bay.

“Excuse me?” the silver Queen asked in a quiet, deadly voice.

The council went eerily still. Daenerys storming was not a dangerous thing, but silent, calm Daenerys was another thing entirely.
Daenerys

Daenerys slowly walked toward Draqhiz. Her arms jerked, and instantly she had two throwing daggers in her hands.

The Queen started twirling the blades between her fingers and then started to work her wrists so the blades circled around them over and over. The Queen moved her hands together and the blades twirled, flipping to the other hand and then back again. Back and forth she worked them, the speed of the daggers almost making the blades a blur before her. She continued advancing on the Slaver’s Bay representative with a hard look in her violet eyes.

She got beside the now shaking and heavily sweating young man. She continued to spin her daggers, not even looking at them.

“You city preyed on the innocent and helpless for thousands of years. Where is the restitution for that? I have started to rebuild much of the smashed infrastructure. This work is proceeding forth at a face pace. I am doing this out of my largesse. All are provided food and shelter no matter their past. How often did your families help the homeless and those who were starving?”

Draqhiz zo Gazno eyes widened. Sweat began to pour down off his face. Daenerys took one of her draggers and lightly ran the Valyrian steel down the man’s cheek, not drawing blood but leaving a furrow in his sweat.

“You were selected to be on my Small Council, weren’t you?” the Queen asked, drawing her dagger point around the man’s throat from jugular to jugular.

A loud whimper was heard by all as the man began to shake harder. The Queen ran her dagger back up over his chin and circled his mouth.

“If I was to kill you and send you back in pieces they would send another representative without hesitation, I conjecture. You agree?” The man was frozen in terror. “DO you?” A gasp of terror, and then a feeble head shake yes.

“Good. Now that we understand each other … I do believe you will not have any more unseemly outbursts will you?” the Queen asked Draqhiz zo Gazno.

The man shook his head ‘no’ and nearly swooned when the Queen slowly walked back to her chair where she resumed working her daggers.

Solaja Xo spoke up next. “Your people have preyed on my people for thousands of years. We craved only peaceful trade and you enslaved and killed us. You are the prey now. I wonder if I should order our fleets to pay your city a visit? I know the Queen owes my people several favors for our unswerving support. Should I ask her for forbearance while we visit Yunkai and repay kind for kind? Should I?”

“Please, no.” the man weakly pleaded.

“I will contemplate my request to the Queen, Draqhiz zo Gazno.” Solaja told the quivering Draqhiz. She turned her gaze back to Maester Lape, finished with the craven man from Yunkai.

The queen organized the scrolls in front of her. “This meeting is adjourned.”

“My Queen,” Varys spoke up, “you need to consider some marriage proposals from Dorne and Casterly Rock.” He said efficiently.
Daenerys glared at him. He knew how this galled her.

“Not today, Varys. I already have a fucking headache. That will only give me a migraine. The Houses are like Hyenas with all these marriage proposals. They really just want to curry favor, power and prestige. They couldn’t give a rat’s ass about my thoughts or desires.

“As I said, this meeting is adjourned. I need to prepare to sit in judgment on the throne.”

Daenerys felt her stomach in a knot and her blood pumping hotly in her veins. She felt as hot as Drogon’s scales. The sudden ratcheting up of the pressure from Eddard Stark and his damn conspirators from the Riverrun and the Vale combined with the influx of Ravens and the harping of the Great Houses had set her off.

She was trying to learn to control her more volatile eruptions. But today she had erupted like the Doom of Valeryia. She hoped that now she could calm down by tonight and start to put her plans in action. That would make her feel better.

Daenerys instincts never led her wrong . . . or as of yet had not led her astray. Her gut was telling her to ignore the old Wolf. That he was playing some strange twisted Game of Thrones that had nothing to do with taking the Iron Throne.

Then why play it?! Therefore she must act. Tonight would begin her counter moves to the crafty old Wolf. We will see what the old wolf truly has.

An hour later Daenerys was squirming on the Iron Throne of her ancestors. She was cursing Aegon for his false nobility, insisting the seat of power should never be comfortable as she felt her ass pricked yet again.

The Queen pinched her nose and snorted, shifting to a more comfortable position on the throne.

She gave her pronouncement on the compensation for spoilage in some grain silos that had improper humidity controls.

As she waited for the next case she reflected on Essos and her time there, and her talk with Tyrion on the Stark daughters. She would never treat them as she had been treated.

She was given to Drogo like a piece of meat. He raped her, and she still carried the hurt and scars from that.

Drogo had come to her every night and raped her like she was nothing. She had wondered if every night would be her last. Would he tire of her? Would he find another and be done with her, and throw her out to his riders? She knew her small body would have been quickly broken.

The continuous stress and dependence on trying to please the man who raped her was demeaning and soul numbing. She knew instinctively she had to cooperate completely for her survival.

Thank the gods of heaven and Earth that she had been given Doreah. She still mourned her passing in the Red Waste. The sweet Lysene pleasure slave had taught her how bend and then enslave the mighty Khal Drogo with her body. Doreah had told her that any man could be brought to heel by the power of a woman’s cunt.

Doreah had been right.

Daenerys with her new found power slowly started to mold Drogo into a man she could rule through. He was actually open to change in many ways, surprising for a barbarian. But, Daenerys mused, he could never have been the ruler I am. He was too limited by his heritage.

She had formed a strong emotional attachment to the man when she felt her continued existence depended on it, and he had given her a gift of ambition and the desire to take back what was hers. Daenerys would at least, in this, be forever indebted to the man.

As her power and independence grew, she came to think of Khal Drogo as more of a mentor. And to that end, she was willing to continue fucking him.

She enjoyed the idea that it was now her rule that controlled his great Khalasar. A woman ruling the great Khal as easily as a puppet master worked puppets on the ends of his strings.

He never even suspected that she was the ruler and not he. She led and he followed all the while making him think he led. She chuckled at the truth even now.

They had an agreement. No other man could ever touch her, and Khal Drogo could not touch the Khaleesi’s women. Daenerys smiled at the memory. He thought her dalliances with women both amusing and arousing. He would watch Doreah and Dany fuck exuberantly. Dany was insatiable. She would fall on Doreah like a lioness and fuck her senseless.

Then she would fuck the Khal until he could not get it up again. Once he was spent, Daenerys would be free to go back to Doreah and fuck her in peace until she exhausted the sweet woman yet again.

Drogo was an adequate lover, but it had been her handmaidens that truly pleasured her body and soul.

When Daenerys seduced Irri into her harem, Dany had thought life was perfect. She would rule through Drogo and then through her son. She would have her harem, and she would be happy. Dany had many nights of seemingly endless orgasms with her sweet harem as she added Thebi, Siwi and Halli to their ranks. She liked her women one-on-one, letting the others fuck each other in any combination they chose. She loved to watch them as she rested after exhausting her current lover, waiting to take her next slut for a hot tryst. She loved it when Drogo was busy being Khal so she could fuck her women in peace.

When Drogo’s Khalasar broke, she lost Thebi, Siwi and Halli. She still wept sometimes at the cruel fates for that.

Drogo had died she lost everything. She sometimes still asked herself why she did not force him to keep Mirri Maz Duur’s poultice on his wound. The woman had been very clear. Drogo must not remove the bandage with the poultice for almost two weeks. The witch had warned it would itch.

Drogo was weak in many ways. He of course had removed it and Daenerys had not forced him to put it back on. She worried. The witch had been so clear. Yet, she did not force the issue. Drogo would have bitched and whined like the little boy he still was sometimes, but if she had truly insisted he would have bent to her will.

Yet she did not. It was not worth it. She had in the end tried to save him, wracked with guilt for not truly caring that much for him in her mind. It had been disastrous. She lost much, but in the end gained so much more.

She sometimes missed Khal Drogo and his brutish but sometimes endearing ways. She mourned her lost son. But that was the past. She truly mourned the loss of her ever sweet Doreah. Never again would a man terrorize and rape her, making her so dependent on him that in a way she would be forced to fall in love with the man for her very survival.

NEVER AGAIN!

Her political marriage to Hizdahr zo Loraq had been a disaster. She refused to submit to his childish and selfish male demands. Every time she lay with the man she loathed and hated him more. His touch reviled her. She would never again submit to a man like that. She fucked him, but did not submit one iota of herself or her soul to the man. That had ended badly: for Hizdahr zo Loraq.

Then there had been Quentyn of Dorne. He was innocent enough in the Game of Thrones, and very bland of body and personality. She married him, but before she could consummate the marriage the fool boy tried to prove his worth by corraling one of her dragons. He had died a horrible, slow death. She was thankful in way - she had loathed his awkward touches.

She remembered the boorish Daario Naharis. He was strikingly good looking, and his gold tooth only added to the effect. But once the physical attraction wore off, she found him boring and could only laugh at his rakish attempts at seduction. Many of the women around her were smitten with him. She had zero attraction for his antics, and found him to be the epitome of male ego. She hated that.

She did wonder though. What if she had met the man when she was younger and much more innocent? Would she have been smitten like many of the women in her Khalasar and in the train of her ever growing armies? She highly doubted it, but sometimes she wondered if another Daenerys could have ever fallen in love with such a small man.

She had tried sleeping with a few of the mightier male warriors after her first battles to satisfy her battle lust. Twice she tried, and twice she was left unfulfilled. They gave her orgasms but they only stroked her desire for the female touch. The body of a woman wrapped around her as they writhed in heated lovemaking. She longed to have her mouth buried in a wet wanton pussy and sucking her lover off over and over again.

Then lying back and having that woman consume her like only a woman could. Gods she cummed so hard from a woman’s touch. Not only did her body explode but so did her soul as she screamed in pleasure so intense it was almost agony.

Daenerys sighed. Not once in her conquest across Slaver’s Bay and the subduing of the Free Cities did she find one openly gay marriage among the nobility or power elite. Those relationships were only by proxy, and in the shadows. She would not live that, she had vowed then.

Now she was not so certain. She had given up on her childish dream of proudly having a Queen on her arm.

Westeros was no better. She shifted again. Daenerys had achieved her destiny, but it was empty. She had reached the point she doubted she could again marry another man. The thought made her ill. What was she to do? To have peace she needed a consort. She hated the thought of marrying another man but her destiny demanded it.

_Dammit!_ Daenerys groused to herself. She sometimes toyed with the idea of a shame marriage. But no, she would not submit a love to that. She moped, imagining a life of hidden trysts with prostitutes and discreet courtesans. That would be an empty life.

She hated this world that denied people to love as they saw fit. She wanted to change the world but how? She was not about to go to war with Eddard Stark for the right to marry one of his daughters or go to war with Highgarden so she could marry Olenna’s granddaughter.
She had listened to Tyrion’s words but she couldn’t possibly see how they could be true. Homosexual relationships were always in the dark closets. She was not about to test the waters. She herself did not mind danger, but she would never subject a woman she loved to it.

What was she do? She felt the pull of Arya Stark strongly at this moment. If she could only get Eddard Stark to agree to letting his daughter marry her. She would woo and win Arya’s love and then propose to her. She knew they would make a great union, she could feel it. Her instincts always spoke true. Their love would be true and gentle to each other.

The next case was ready. Soon Daenerys was near writhing on the uncomfortable Iron Throne. Whorehouses were demanding additional compensation for the many Dothraki men and women demanding their prostitutes move around on all fours with butt plugs in their asses with long horse tails. It was time consuming to go through these prance walk arounds and it was embarrassing when the Dothraki wanted to copulate in public with the women having to act like mares in heat as the Dothraki pulled on their faux tails and manes.

Daenerys wanted to scream. This was so unbelievable and trivial. I conquered Westeros for this? she thought, pinching her nose. And this gods damned throne is killing my ass!

Olenna

The times were so exhilarating. Olenna had been afraid that she would never again get to play the Game of Thrones on the grand stage. Robert’s rebellion had been so personal and quick that she had little opportunity to play any of the meager cards she had been dealt.

This time was so different.

She had been content of late helping her granddaughter maneuver her way around the thorny problem of “Queen” Cersei, the cunt, and her ill begotten son.

Olenna had always been tempted to expose the truth about the children to Robert but had declined. While Joffrey had been a royal shit in every sense of the world but Myrcella and Tommen were quite a different matter. Both children were sweet and beautiful to behold and deal with.

She was very happy she had stayed her hand. Myrcella turning gay in such a big way had been delightful. She knew that had galled the female Lannister no end. Tommen was being trained to be in the Targaryen’s queen service. The child longed to explore the kingdom for the Queen to quantify and log the wonders of her realm. He was happy in his new focused studies.

She had gladly helped her granddaughter poison Joffrey with a parasitic worm from the Ballisk Isle. While her daughter gradually killed the worms with moon tea poor Joffrey had taken three doses of another remedy that killed the worms but left him violently ill for short bursts. The Maesters wrote it off to his body recovering from the strange malady that had afflicted him for over two years.

They had clucked and wrote in their journals and had no fucking clue to the problem. Pompous asses Olenna chuckled.

She had loved fooling the dumb shits so easily. The worms were so small they never saw them in the boy’s royal shit.

Olenna had always had to content herself to play the Game of Thrones from the sidelines. Never had she been allowed to play directly and openly. What could be done from the shadows she did but to move great matters she had always had to work through puppets.
Olenna had loved her husband but he was so stolid. If Olenna had not ruled through her husband, and then through her son, only the gods now where their House would be today. She had governed through them and governed well she knew.

She had never even really considered the possibility of ruling directly. She had dreamed of that as a youth but gave up that silly dream when she became old enough to see that would never happen.

She had contented herself on working through others and finding moths throughout the kingdom to inform her of matters small and great. She used that information that allowed her to craft matters of state across the land of Westeros. Some places she had great influence and some very little. Damn that Eddard Stark for being so honorable and thus almost untouchable.

Now Daenerys Targaryen had arrived on the shores of Westeros. Only after shattering Slavers Bay and the Dothraki Khalasars to her will. What Olenna found even more Earth shaking was that the woman had fought her own battles.

She remembered reading of her first battle with the Khal that had disposed her. The reports were wild and chaotic. The important thing was that she had triumphed.

Then starting with Qarth the woman had rolled up the Slave Cities one after another. When she got to the “Free Cities” on the east coast of Essos Daenerys had grown so mighty they submitted to her with only the weakest of whimpers to her will.

The woman was someone worth bowing to. Oh how Olenna wish she was Margaery’s age. She had never been attracted to her own sex but to be Daenerys wife she would have gladly opened her legs wide for her Queen and buried her face into her juicy cunt and licked away until her jaw dropped off.

She had felt that way a generation ago with Eddard Stark. Again she had wished to be Catelyn Tully in the flush of youth. That was a man who could have been her equal. Hell, she would have gladly bowed to him on the throne and in the bed. He was a mighty man. She had fantasied many a night of him ramming his manhood hard and deep into her hot tight couchie flooding her womb with his seed.

Sigh, damn her luck the ruler of House Tyrell groused.

With Daenerys sitting on the throne so many more things were possible now.

She would make a play for the Queen through her grandchildren. The reports made it clear the woman was a lust filled vessel. The Queen was a vessel that liked prowling the seas of lust looking for nubile young nymphs to devour and be devoured in return.

She had Margaery and some of her handmaidens to cover the Queen’s natural inclinations. If the woman chose a marriage partner for political she had her grandson and one other for that possibility. She would play all her cards.

Olenna squirmed. She was not too old to get her juices flowing. Damn she wished again she was Margaery’s age. To be able once more to use her beauty as once had to snare and trap her prey.

Gods she loved sex. She smirked. She would have loved to see who had the greater sex drive: her or Daenerys. She chuckled. Can’t really have a loser in that kind of battle.

She read over the latest scroll from a player of the Game of Thrones that actually greatly interested her. Old memories rushed through her body. This would be a challenge. She was not guaranteed of victory and that had her excited for the Game of Thrones with this player.
She would see what the dice came up when she caste them in the pit.

She started to write her reply.

Daenerys

Dany was cooking a meal for the supper. The flames surrounded by stones were blazing hotly with some dried wood they had found in a dead end canyon from a flash flood. The wood bleached from the sun light grey. She had helped her blood riders to bring back the flood detritus.

Her littlest blood rider beaming as she carried a small limb that looked large against her small barely six year old body. They took the fire wood back to their dwelling in Vaes Tolorro.

Dany now prepared the meal of a rabbit that had been shot by Rakharo that afternoon. Dany had skinned it while Kiserri played with her “dagger” slashing and crying out “death to the Khaleesi’s enemies! . . . Is dinner almost ready mommy I’m hungry mommy.”

Dany ruffled her child’s hair and told her it was almost ready.

Soon the rabbit and herbs were ready and the Khaleesi ate a simple fare with her daughter. She cut the meat into small chunks for the girl who ate the tender juicy meat happily snuggling into her mother.

After dinner the little girl kept trying to tickle the Khaleesi with her “ticklers” and crawling all over Dany trying to make her mother giggle. “How many times do I have to tell you Kiserri that I am not ticklish.”

Daenerys put the girl on her back on the furs and assaulted her daughter with her own ticklers. The little girl squealed and cried out “What did I do to you! I’ve done nothing! What did I do! Why are you attacking me!” and the little girl squealed more.

Dany would relent not taking it too far with her tickling making sure that it did not become unpleasant for her daughter.

Kiserri attacked again and again squealing “What did I do to you!” when her mother eventually counterattacked.

Dany went to sleep with Kiserri snuggling into her side.

Kiserri woke up shaking Daenerys’s shoulder. She kept shaking her.

“Khaleesi wake up . . . wake up.”

“Wh-What . . . What is wrong baby?” Daenerys responded to her daughter fuzzy headed.

“Wake up Daenerys . . . “

“What is wrong Kiserri?”

“Oh . . . No my Queen it is Missandei”

Daenerys Targaryen woke up groggily.
She looked at Missandei with sad eyes. She missed her little girl so much.

The interpreter knew to get the Queen focused on the matters at hand. The Queen’s maudlin moods were always suppressed and chased away when she was governing and working to better her realm.

The Queen woke up fully and sat up yawning looking around.

“My Queen it is twenty minutes till our Clatch of Confidents meeting. Aggo, when he had to open the door for the servants to bring in food and drink for the meeting when you did not answer, he saw you sound asleep and had one of the Unsullied sent to fetch me. He knew you would want to be prepared for the meeting.

Dany looked at the chair that had been setup for Strong Belwas. Missandei’s caracal was lying on it waiting for her friend and co-locust aficionado to arrive and share. The cat meowed and closed its eyes going to take a cat nap.

The Queen smiled at her loyal friend. Missandei helped the Queen take off her clothes and handed her a fresh set of her Small Council grab of tight fitting silk trouser that hugged her hips tight and showed off her tight ass and the cut showed her little camel toe.

Missandei smiled at the Queen using her femininity to seduce all around her. The Queen and Missandei had long passed the stage of them seeing each other as objects of potential lust. They saw each other as only long trusted friends and confidents. She helped the Queen put on her blouse top.

“Come to the dresser. Let me put your hair in a braid Dany.”

They went to the bench in front of the mirror over the dresser.

“You were in rare from today O Queen. The dragon was truly raging.”

Daenerys winced inside remembering how Viserys used that phrase. “Yes . . I guess I was. I am just so wound up with that damn Eddard Stark playing this twisted Game of Thrones. It makes no sense. He provokes me for now reason. None of his actions accomplish anything but pissing me off.”

“Maybe he wants your attention”

“He definitely has it!” the Queen groused.

The Queen sat at her dresser while her interpreter brushed out her long flowing platinum hair. Normally the Queen like to put some wave in her hair or have her servants put interwoven braids in but there was no time. Missandei did a quick braid of the white locks and tied a ribbon into the tail.

There was a knock at the door. The rest of the members of the Queen’s inner circle were arriving. Missandei went to open the door and opened it. Tyron came strolling in with his hands clasped behind his back. He looked up at his co-analyst and smiled.

“Nice to see you again so soon Missandei” the dwarf spoke to his friend.

“You honor me O Lion of Lannister” the interpreter opined.

The dwarf did a quick take at the Queen but did not see a smirk. Maybe his secret was safe.

“Yes. I may be short of stature but my roar is fierce! I fear nothing!”

“Not even a certain lioness in Dorne who is training hard every day with visions of a certain brother behind her eyelids every night as she goes to sleep thinking of ways to skin a certain Lion of Tyrion’s eyes went large and he muttered looking over his shoulders reflectively and moved off “I definitely need a body guard . . .”

Missandei smiled back at her Queen who returned the smile.

The rest of the “confidents” arrived. Strong Belwas smiled seeing the goat cheese concoction he loved. The Queen now had a batch prepared for him for each meeting. Belwas went to his chair smiling and sat down expectantly. Daenerys and Missandei spread three blankets out and covered the big bald and not so pretty eunuch. They then tucked him in. He smiled up at them beaming like a child that made the women’s hearts clutch in love for the big simple and in many ways innocent man. Belwas patted his lap and Shadowclaw jumped up onto his lap and quickly nested down.

Belwas reached over grabbing several locusts from his pail on the small table beside his chair and handed one to his friend. Cat and eunuch ate happily before the roaring fire.

The women liked mothering the eunuch. He so appreciated it and preened under their love.

The rest of her Clatch partook of the food spread in the center of the table by the back wall that was used to serve the food from prepared in the kitchens just for these meetings. The Confidents made ham or beef biscuits of flakey bread slavered in butter. They put cubes of cheese along with various berries, cherries, melons and slices of oranges, pears and peaches.

They took their fare to the meeting table off to left of the room underneath the big windows that were closed to keep out the chill air.

They ate in companionable silence and small talk laced with banter. The meal was quickly consumed. They put their plates back on the food table.

Daenerys spread out two maps. One showed the east coast of the North in great detail. The second map showed the path of the Kings Highway from King’s Landing on its journey to Castle Black.

“You have been briefing me during our regular Clatch meetings and we have been preparing the Small Council that the time of action was coming soon.”

“Now is the time to begin to act.

“I had shown you where I propose to form beachheads in the North. The Southern most one was to be near Oldcastle five leagues to the East. But your council to move it north to ten leagues South of Ramsgate was sound. I agree Barristan, this gives us more room to maneuver in whichever direction becomes necessary.

“The other two on the Bay of Seals just below the new gift line on the map and the last just to the South of the Weeping Water River will give us good strategic way points to pivot in any direction.

“I know you think I should put all my forces below Karhold but I disagree. If Eddard is indeed facing a threat from the North I want to be able to move quickly to assist if necessary. I will cover all my bases. I have my landing in in Bay of Seals for that possibility.

“As you know I sent Viserion to Braavos with Barristan to relay word of the beginning of my response to the provocations of Eddard Stark. They are sending scout parties. They are setting sail to go the beaches we have selected and plumb the coves we have selected. They will find safe passages through any undersea rocks, shoals and sandbars. They will get readings on the local tides and the means between low and high tides.”
While the preparations for the sailing of the scouting expeditions were happening I flew to the North under cover of darkness with Drogon and Rhaegal to drop off scouting and mapping parties. They are looking for fords at the rivers in the vicinities of our landing beaches. They are marked on the maps but I must be sure. I am also having them scout the local populace for their demeanor and looking for locations to bivouac our troops.

“These men are from the north or their parents are from the North. They have the look of Northmen and their dialect. Varys and Barristan have questioned these men for their loyalty. They are confident of their loyalties and therefore I am confident in these men. They will pass as for visiting Northmen with the cover stories we have given them.”

“I recently had an epiphany on an ability that I had not thought of with my dragons. Instead of flying back and forth I now realize I can simply have a person talk to my dragons and I will listen. My dragons do not understand the words and I have to concentrate past the noise of their not understanding but I can understand the reports. This will save time and effort for any riders. I am giving my dragons free range through the valleys and high mountains of the Vale. They will fly down in turns to the mapping parties and give me reports.

“The scouts have discovered that the populace has only been told that they are to mobilize. They have been told that the threat is not from the South. Of course this is good news. It allays my fears to some degree but does not extinguish them. The local populace are unsure of their final destination. They are finishing their last harvests in a rush as we are.

“My ships in the cities in Essos are being outfitted and put in full trim to come back to Westeros and put a strengthened blockade up and prepare to begin to transporting my troops North from the South of Westeros and begin the transport of my mercenary companies I had left in Essos and those unfortunately I felt safe enough to send back to Essos. They will be turning around and coming back now.

“The mercenaries are happy since they are being paid to simply sail. I am bringing over ten brigades of my best and most loyal Dothrak. The concept of regimentation is strange to them but once they are formed up they will be our light cavalry and raiders in our enemies rear if they develop.

“The ports of King Landing, Dragonstone, Storms End, Griffin's Roost and all ports south down to the ports of Dorne’s eastern coast will be full of ships. Tyrion and Missandei I want to have all the harbormasters prepared. I want all lighthouses fully operational and all buoys deployed properly in all shipping lanes and in top shape. I will have not have ships striking shoals or sandbars.

“I will most displeased if incompetence cost me any ships of my navy gentlemen.”

“Missandei I want a schedule set up for the ships to deploy to what harbor and when. You are very good with algebra. Work out the derivatives and set the schedules and I will have them flown by raven or dragon to the cities of Essos.

“Syrio I want you to meet with Hugh Elicero tomorrow and lets find out the exact state of our navy. I want all my fighting ships in top fighting form. If he needs to send ships to the fleet yards let’s get that done now. If merchant ships are scheduled and no slips are free we will bump ships out of their slots for repair. My navy has priority. I will give them vouchers for first right to a birth in the shipyard once the navies needs are met. I will give them a ten percent subsidy to any repairs. If any merchant does not understand the need for this have them contact me. I will show them the necessity in a manner I am sure they will understand.

“Also leave word at the shipyards that if major battles are fought to have their slips available. My navies must remain strong and ready for combat.

”Tyrion and Missandei, you both have done excellent work with the information that was provided by the constituencies that are loyal to me. We now have the counts necessary to plan for the logistics of our move North.

“Missandei has done some algebraic equations to predict the amount of food necessary to support the populace through a year of a protracted winter. That leaves roughly fifteen percent of the last three years grain harvest that we can use for march north.

“Whatever war we may fight it will be short and violent I feel. We will march north and conqueror our enemies and put an end to the threat to my realm.

Barristan spoke up “You plan on marching to the wall don’t you my Queen.”

“That I don’t know Barristan. Something is motivating the most honorable man I have heard or dealt with to act in near treasonous manners. If he is in fact plotting against me I will crush him on the field of battle. If he is preparing for some other foe I will join him.”

“But there is no foe beyond the wall except the Wildlings and they are not a military threat truly even to Eddard. He must be planning sedition though I cannot believe it.”

“We will find out soon enough my old friend.”

Daenerys took a drink of water.

“Syrio. The reaping of crops this far South should be finished next week. I want you put into motion the plans for training that you and Barristan have developed. I want ravens sent out tomorrow on how we want the conscripts trained. I want them well trained. They will be support forces that will give our cavalry the backbone to charge into the enemy and widen and exploit the breeches we will make with our horse and armor.

“We will not be sacrificing our foot forces needlessly. Our tactics shall be combined force maneuver. We will use our foot, cavalry, navy and my dragons in concert to overwhelm and shatter our enemies.

“Tyrion and Missandei” they looked at her with their bodies leaning forward anxious to be given their next directives. “With the forces we will be moving north with we will need transport for our supplies. I want the wagon wrights to begin making the wagons necessary to transport the food, clothing, shelter, weapons and sapper gear and material we will need for our expedition to the North.

“In the past the armies marching in Westeros tended to "live off the land". This will not be so in my marches. I will not have my forces scrounge and steal from the local populace on our move north. All this does is make the local populace hate the army supposedly defending them. I will not make my subjects face starvation after my army comes through and confiscates all the foodstuffs.

“Also, all this scrounging will always take time away from the marches. This looting prevents consistent movement. Ones armies tended in the past to not have sufficient carriage for more than a couple of days of food, before the armies had to go scrounging again.

“This realistically, reduced your march to ten to fifteen miles per day on average, over standard terrain. In wet weather, you'd be lucky to move five miles per day.
“We will use tactics I developed on my campaigns into the interior of Essos.

“Our move north will be a long term marching - a couple of weeks to get to the border of the Stormlands and then the full march potentially up to the wall. This will take months. If necessary the cavalry can sprint to a local objective.

“I plan on transporting half to three quarters of our foot by ship but cavalry needs troop support so one quarter at least will march up the King’s Highway.

“The King’s Road is in good shape. Our army will be able to travel about three miles an hour for about eight hours each day. We could no more but the human body starts to break down I have found if the daily marches are extended beyond this range. This means we should be able to march about twenty-five miles a day.

“Normally our baggage train would be our limiting factor having to keep to that pace. We will not use oxen for our wagons. They cut our speed down too much. An ox can only pull a loaded wagon at two miles an hour for about five hours before becoming exhausted. That is only ten miles a day.

“With horses or mules as draft animals, our speed will be increased. The only problem is the need for five horses or mules to replace two oxen. Then the limiting factor is the speed of a walking man. The horses could go about four miles an hour for about eight hours. That makes thirty-two miles but our infantry could only go about twenty-five miles in a day.

“We do not have enough horses to haul all the supplies of this army all the way to the wall in a timely manner without exhausting the animals. I will not sacrifice horses needlessly.

“Let us pray it doesn’t rain.

“An all mounted force could go further of course. My plan is to have the cavalry march last and catch up with our troops at the borders of the Riverlands.

“Missandei and Tyrion are putting together a list that will be used to setup up camps every twenty-five miles along the King’s Highway. These camps will start to be setup as we train the conscripts for combat.

“This will allow us to use the horses and mules available in a more efficient manner. I want to reduce the baggage train as much as possible. They will always string an army out on its marches.

“We will have a larger camp setup at intervals of every fifth day’s journey from the last large camp. Here the troops will be feed extra rations and given a chance to eat more hearty fare. I want meat at these stops. The men will take a day off on their march before we move further up the King’s Highway.

“We are moving up to meet an enemy that is waiting for us. We have time. I do not want my army arriving and have foot blisters and sores, pulled muscles, shin splints and sore ligaments. I want my army well fed and bedded down each night.

“I want my troops fresh and ready to fight with one hundred percent effort when and if we go war. It will accomplish nothing to arrive at our destination with an exhausted and broken down corps of foot soldiers.

“Last my dragons have been watching the Riverlands. The local populace being tapped for military duty are already moving north. They are not training locally but moving up to Riverrun or some seem to be moving towards the North already.
“Barristan, I think this means that they are leaving the way open to the North. Do you concur?”

“It would seem so. I would guess they will amass as much force as possible to fight us in a decisive battle. They know that they now, with your vast superior numbers and having dragons, that they will need to fight us on a large scale maneuver battle. We will overwhelm them otherwise.”

“I concur. We will continue to observe from on high but if it holds up with their rapid movements to the North I will start to build camps up through the Riverlands and as far into the North as I can reach without undo risk. As we move further north we will be more and more on guard and therefore slow our advance."

“Tomorrow we will brief the small council of my decisions. We and they are ready to prosecute our grand adventure. Do we speak with one voice?” the Queen turned to look at each of her Clatch of Confidents and friends.

She saw only steely resolve.

“It is time we begin to march to war. We will be victorious. I assure you.”

“This I swear to you all at this table; Daenerys Targaryen wins her wars.”

Missandei

Missandei watched her Queen grimace and scowl in the Small Council room. Then she had watched her Queen squirm on the Iron Throne fuming while she ruminated over all the things she had to be right on to protect her realm. Then the complaints Dany had to hear today. She wondered how any ruler put up with so many trivial and inconsequential cases.

Missandei had always known of her Queen’s personal desires for other women. She felt so sorry for Dany. She had no one to go home to. The men who wanted a wife had them. A woman to go home to share her burdens with. A confidante that Daenerys could discuss ideas with and go over concerns that were on her mind. The Queen needed a lover to give her support, succor and physical pleasure. Dany had no one.

She needed a Queen on her arm. She wondered why Daenerys was so timid on the issue. She was passionate and vital in the defense of others, but did not come to her own defense. Daenerys Targaryen was bending and changing the world to her will. She was making it a better world. She had in three years shattered and destroyed the slave trade.

She had freed Missandei from bondage.

She had found a way to conqueror Westeros without bloodshed. Like her Queen, Missandei trusted that this Eddard Stark did not want war. She sensed his greatness. He was a man who could compare to her Queen - he was the only one.

She should demand the right to marry whomever she wished and bend the realm to her feet. Daenerys deserved the right to love freely!

Missandei sighed. Would her own love ever appear? Would her woman ever appear to sweep her off her feet and make Missandei her Queen?

Later that night in the privacy of her private chamber, Missandei contemplated the Queen’s dilemma again and in greater depth now that she had some quiet.
Missandei remembered Hirrome Yhari, a mighty warrior from the Black Cliffs. She and Daenerys had been passionate lovers. The woman was tall and lean and quite beautiful. Dany had found her scars quite alluring, and she loved the woman’s rough and calloused hands.

Dany had started to fall in love with the warrior, but the woman soon left looking for new conquests. Daenerys had been shocked that a woman could treat another woman like that.

Missandei had had her fears from the beginning. Hirrome was hardened and embittered by her violent life. She did not want that to happen to Daenerys, but feared that if she could not find a good woman to love her that it might. Dany’s life would slowly drain out of her and make her shallow and hollow.

Missandei knew that Dany needed a woman who was both fierce and combative and yet still sweet and innocent at her core.

Does such a woman exist for the Queen? Missandei wondered.

Missandei thought of the great houses. One of them must have a woman that could meet the Queen’s needs and desires.

She thought of House Tyrell with Margaery. The red rose with thorns. Dany liked danger. Maybe Margery would be a good match. She had read that the young woman was definitely adroit at court and quite savvy. Her beauty was legend. She could see Dany devouring the woman and making her body move hard in the throes of sweet passion. Oh please Missandei, stop being such a wuss.

Missandei started over. Dany sucked Margery off making the nubile beauty writhe and jackknife violently in orgasm. Margrey’s screams deafening. Her wet womanhood—arrrggg -wet cunt soaking Dany’s face.

She next thought of house Lannister with their regal lions. True, Myrcella was already married. To three women! What would one do with more than one wife? Dany had an insatiable appetite for the female body. She had heard so many women throughout Essos scream in the throes of passion in the Queen’s bed. Maybe four women could keep her womanhood satisfied. Damnit stop that! No wonder I’m still a virgin. Keep her pussy - her cunt satisfied.

House Baratheon had no likely consorts. Too bad, Missandei thought, getting into the swing of things. She bet any potential maids would be horny. She chuckled, thinking of the Great Stag’s horns.

She mused on the house of Martell. A spear though the heart of the sun. That house had potential in several ways. Myrcella had her Pride of Dorne but that did leave six other Sand Snakes, though she felt the first two were too old for the Queen. Missandei was intrigued by the open bisexuality of the women and their willingness to break the taboo of incest, as if they were Targaryen. It was titillating. My god what it would be like to have that many women in one bed making love—fucking- dammit! To have so many mouths sucking your cunt to orgasm over and over.

Missandei was starting to get worked up.

Her thoughts turned to the House of Greyjoy. Their seal was an ugly Kracken, which was unappealing. She had read of, Asha though. She was a comely woman with a voluptuous body. Her tits and ass made to be mauled and bitten, Missandei reasoned. God I bet her cunt would be so plump and heavenly to bury my face in! To feel her sitting on my face grinding her swollen cunt in my mouth as she cummed so fucking hard! Filling my mouth with her sweet hot cum! Missandei had read many tomes on women and sex. She could almost feel Asha’s g-spot underneath her fast rubbing fingertips and her cunt exploding as the woman’s twat gripped her rubbing fingers in a vice.
grip. The woman shrieking as hard spasms ripped her body making the woman feel like her womb would rip out her belly.

Missandei was beginning to breathe hard.

Next Missandei thought of the Vale and its banner of the Eagle. She did not know of any high princesses but she was sure that the vale must be full of comely young maidens—no no, wanton sluts—that she could devour and make cum over and over as she fingerfucked them and sucked them off to screaming orgasms. She would revel in feeling her face soaked in their hot cum as their cunts gushed sweet cum all over her face again and again. Her own cunt would soak their faces in her howling orgasms. Her pussy grinding into their hot devouring mouths.

Missandei got up from her desk and moved over to her bed sitting on it. Her eyes were hot and her nipples were stiff and throbbing. Her full C cup tits were rising and falling with her now labored breathing.

Next was House Tully. A trout. A fish sigil could make some wary, but it didn’t matter! She wracked her brain but could think of no highborn comely sluts from the riverlands. She would prowl the land herself, finding willing, sweet, pale minor princesses. She would grind her black cunt into their pale white faces and revel in seeing them wildly, passionately eating her out. Their hands would grip her ass cheeks as Missandei got up on the balls of her feet and swept her aching wet quim up and down on their insanely hot, skilled, gobbling mouths. Her cunt would explode and send scalding waves of ecstasy crashing through her petite body.

She would lie soaked in cum and sweat, and her lover would crawl up her body and mash her pretty pink pussy down on her face and grind up and down her mouth as Missandei rammed her tongue so deep up her hot love box and then she would try to suck the slut’s clit down her throat. Gods Missandei would drink down every sweet drop of her cum nectars. Her mouth would overflow with hot cum and soak her face and throat like the slut she longed to be.

Missandei’s gown was nearly ripped off her body as the scribe flopped down on her back putting several pillows underneath her head and her hands started working her aching breast—tits- and one had moving south to her sopping wet cunt rubbing her drooling slit and clit.

Houses—Houses any more Great Houses? She shied away from House Targaryen because she thought of Dany as her mother … another house? Yes. House Stark. Oh gods yes!

Sansa and Arya. She would take either one. No! She would take both!

Missandei’s body was bucking her cunt up into her rubbing fingers as her other hand pinched and twisted her throbbing dark brown nipples in turn. The pressure sent hot bolts of ecstasy shooting straight to her clit.

She could feel her almost sixteen year old body on fire. She used to be able to control her sexual urges, but no more. She was a masturbating fiend now. She was masturbating every night, repeatedly.

She thought of Sansa with her red head between her brown legs and sucking on her shaved smooth cunt. She could so easily imagine the beauty sucking her rigid, aching clit into her mouth and rolling it with her tongue. Missandei’s hips were jerking up off the bed now her fingers drilling up and down her slit and jacking over her clit.

Missandei’s breathing ragged and hoarse.
She envisioned Arya first cupping and then burying her pale face between her brown, heaving tits and kissing them while leaving shiny love bites. Arya would move up to suck hard on Missandei’s throbbing, aching nipples back and forth. Missandei pinched and jerked up on her nipples, tenting her areolas.

Sansa would suck Missandei’s clit nearly down her throat, while Arya would grip her left full tit with both hands and maul it as she sucked thirstily on the thick, throbbing teat.

Missandei had no chance against such passion. Her cunt exploded as her womb constricted and tried to rip out her sweat soaked flat stomach.

"Mnnnggggeeee! Oh! Mnnnggeeee! Anngghh! OOHHNNGGGMMYYYIIIIEEE!" she suddenly roared, her body flipping and jacknifing violently on the bed. Hot gushes of cum flooded out of her hard spasming cunt. “Oh oh hhnnng hhnnn hhnnngg.” Missandei pressed harder on her throbbing clit with her rubbing fingers, her other hand twisting and pinching her nipples in turn as scalding pulses filled them with red hot heat and arrows shot straight to her shrieking clit. "Ungggghhmmnmngggiiieeee! Mnggghhieeeeeeee! Mnnnnnnhhhiieeee!" Missandei screamed as a second orgasm exploded over the top of the first one.

Missandei was on fire.

Several hours later Missandei rolled onto her side, finally totally exhausted. The bed was a wreck again, the sheets half on the floor and only the gods knew where all the pillows were.

Missandei had a lazy smile on her face, and a happy pussy. Her kitty cat was exhausted. She could not move. Her pussy was so sensitive. She loved that worn out feeling in her swollen muff. It was all nice and shiny and darker shade of brown in exhausted satisfaction.

She hoped she had no scribe duties in the morning. Her fingers were so tired and her wrists ached.

In her thoughts she had given in and even fucked sluts from House Targaryen. The three headed dragon. She loved seeing their white hair and violet eyes between her legs eating her out or cupping her body to theirs as they looked into Missandei’s face up close as they finger fucked her to hard orgasm. The women smiled as they saw Missandei’s eyes flare again in helpless pleasure, urging the teenager from Naath to scream. Her cunt wrenched itself apart with shocking convulsions, tearing her quim inside out, scalding the small black girl with wailing ecstasy.

Missandei loved feeling her body soaked in cum and sweat. Her bed was covered in big dark wet spots from her gushing cum. She still felt sweat trickling down her satiated body. She felt like such a wanton slut. A slut any high borne or powerful woman would crave to have as her wife.

Which house would be the best for her Queen?

Huummmmmm.

She liked House Lannister and Stark. Their sigils were cute and cuddly. Yes, a princess from either of those houses would do she thought with a yawn. Hell, maybe, both she thought with an evil grin her eyelids drooping.

As drifted off to sleep she wondered what the scurry maids thought of her wrecked bed every morning and the smell of pussy thick in the room.

She had noticed that the maids had gotten most attentive. She had started with one maid but now four maids worked in her room every morning. They always made sure to come early when she was still getting out of bed and preparing for the day. In fact this morning there had been six tripping over themselves pretending to work. All asking if they could do anything for her.

Missandei sighed going to sleep. She was saving herself for someone. She would come. She would come.

Sin In The Desert

Chapter 15

Sin in the Desert

Five years ago

Daenerys / Syrio Feral / Daenerys / Syrio / Barristan Selma / Daenerys

Daenerys

The breeze felt cool on her face in the early morning light. The young Khaleesi stood on the wall near her abode in Vaes Tolorro. She looked down the hidden canyons surrounding her small encampment, and felt like she was surrounded by bones. She felt nearly as lifeless after her great losses.

They had been in this lost city full of bones and death for almost three months. They were slowly changing that as best they could, bringing life back to the crumbling ruins, but it was slow going. Daenerys pondered her future. Should she try to make a home here, or press on?

She was so unsure. She felt so lost. She had lost everything with the death of Khal Drogo, his Khalasar fading into mist, and her hated enemy Jhaqo taking what little she had left. She swore she would get her revenge. The breeze picked up, making her platinum tresses flutter in the strengthening wind.

Daenerys watched her dragons flying, their bodies quickly growing and muscles strengthening. At least she still had them. Sometimes she felt so alone. It caused her to shiver even as the air heated.

She had dreamed of Doreah and Irri again last night. She still wept bitterly, thinking about how her sweet Lysene pleasure slave turned lover had died so miserably, her beautiful hair coming out in clumps as her body became emaciated and gaunt. She had died in her arms. Such an innocent. She did not have the iron will that the Dothraki and Daenerys had.

She had just turned fourteen, and yet she was stronger in many ways than her Bloodriders. They were stronger of body, true, but it was her will that led. She looked out over the red desert surrounding her small kingdom.

Daenerys snorted at the sad reality. The mighty scion of the House Targaryen; the Queen of a desolate waste. She had established this small community, and they had found water and food enough to support their small numbers, but that was not enough.

Daenerys was hunted. She had foiled two attacks already, but she wondered how long before she was set upon like a lone deer by a pack of snarling wolves.

Jorah Mormont had saved her the first time. Irri’s love for Siwi had saved her the second time. They had just started their trek into the red waste when the delightful girl had suddenly reappeared from out of the waste. She was so tired and haggard, but she, Doreah and Irri had welcomed her with open arms. They were ecstatic to see her return.

They had asked her of Thebi and Halli. Siwi begged off any knowledge of them, saying she had slipped out of the picket line of Khal Jhaqo and followed her trail into the desert.
Daenerys now wondered why she did not question Siwi’s seeming lack of interest in two of her harem mates. She almost seemed to not to feel anything for them. Where had she learned tracking skills? When they asked Siwi the most innocuous of questions the girl demurred, or said she was still exhausted from her ordeal.

Oh gods. Daenerys thought bitterly. How could I have been such a fool? The girl that had been Siwi was evasive, where the true Siwi had been totally open and loving. Daenerys had put it off to Siwi’s ordeal, as all around her were suffering greatly.

It was three nights after Siwi’s return that she, Irri, Doreah came to their lost love. They slowly took her to their tent that was pitched a distance away from the remaining Khalasaar. The tent floor was filled with soft furs for their lovemaking. Daenerys, Doreah and Irri were trembling with lust for their lost love. Siwi came willingly enough, and she said she wanted them so badly but Daenerys kept feeling something was off. Despite this, she had ignored it with her raging lust coursing through her veins. She licked her lips, wetting them in anticipation.

In the Khaleesi’s tent, Irri had pulled Siwi down so they were on their knees, and Irri had embraced Siwi heatedly and kissed her. Doreah moved in, naked and already pressing her full breast into the woman’s upper back while her wet cunt ground into the woman’s lower back. Irri pulled Siwi tight to her own body.

Suddenly, Iiri pushed Siwi away from herself. “This is not Siwi!” she screamed. Daenerys and Irri had started to keep daggers close at hand since they had started their trek away from their former home, and Irri desperately lunged for the dagger she kept to the side of their sleeping furs.

Irri never made it. Siwi suddenly had a long, curved knife in her hand and was on Irri in an instant. She pulled Irri’s head back and slit her throat from ear to ear. The sound of her gurgling sucking breath was loud in the tent. Blood sprayed from her cut arteries and severed trachea.

Doreah was not a fighter, but she tried to get fistfuls of the woman’s hair. The false Siwi reached back and grabbed a handful of Doreah’s beautiful, wheaten hair, and jerked her cruelly forward, causing her head to ram into Daenerys’ travelling chest. The blow stunned the former pleasure slave, her moans mewling.

The woman who was and was not Siri started to turn to finish Daenerys. She must have thought Daenerys would be an easy kill. Her body went rigid when Daenerys buried her long dagger into the side of her neck.

The woman cried out in pain, and jabbed Daenerys’ upper chest with her free palm, tearing the Khaleesi’s grip from the dagger handle as the woman jerked her body to gain separation from the Khaleesi. Daenerys stumbled down to her side, rolling over onto her back. The woman staggered up to her feet and leaned sideways, unsteady as blood flowed heavily down the side of her neck. She lunged down at the Khaleesi, her dagger coated red with Irri’s blood.

Daenerys, in desperation, rolled to the right. The wounded woman assassin thudded down onto the floor of the tent. She lashed out with her knife. Her blade cutting along Daenerys’ side, blood welling out of the shallow wound. The assassin grunted, levering herself up as blood started to flow down her neck in a red stream. The woman breathed heavily several times, and then lunged up onto her knees with a surge of adrenaline-fueled strength.

Daenerys lunged forward with a fire poker she had managed to grab. The woman jammed the tip of the poker down, and Daenerys’ body slammed into the weakening woman. They grunted as they rolled around on the furs. The woman got up on top of Daenerys, breathing raggedly and pulling her arm back to bury her blade in Daenerys’ heart.
The Khaleesi’s arm whipped up. With the fire poker still in her hand, the shaft of metal landed hard into the skull of the assassin with the sound of a wet, solid impact. The woman staggered again, and gritted her teeth. Daenerys rolled her body, sending the woman onto the floor.

Daenerys whipped her arm down, the poker slamming into the side of the woman’s head. The blow jammed the assassin’s head into the furs as she tried to lever her body up. Again and again Daenerys struck her fire poker into the woman’s head, as blood began to splatter. Daenerys did not stop striking until the fire poker slipped out of her tired, cramping fingers.

She sobbed heavily while she gasped for breath. She rolled over to Irri but she was long gone, her body covered in her blood. Daenerys closed her sightless eyes. She went over to Doreah on shaky limbs and checked her lover. The woman had a large knot on her head, but she would be alright.

Daenerys crawled to the flap of her tent. She had selected a remote location for their lovemaking keeping her Blood Riders on the perimeter of their camp. Why?! They were Dothraki. She should have wanted to make love before her Khalasar.

Daenerys gasped when she looked back down at Siwi; except it was not Siwi. The person Daenerys looked down on was instead a middle-aged woman with auburn hair, her features soft and rounded rather than the sharp angles that were trademark of the Dothraki. This woman had pale skin and not the bronze hue of the Dothraki.

Daenerys shook her head, her thoughts returning to the present. She was hunted. The forces of Robert Baratheon still wanted her dead. He was going to prosecute the potential threat to his throne with maximum force.

Daenerys had sent out her three blood riders earlier. She was worried, they should have returned already. She could not bear to lose them too, after her loves had already been so cruelly taken from her. To lose her Blood Riders in the red wastes would be her undoing. The losses she had already suffered to get here had been egregious.

She climbed off the wall and back down to the courtyard where she was met by her new bodyguard. Kiserri took her duties very seriously, as the six year old fingered her little dagger she had in her belt.

“No. There are no assassins for you to kill, my sweet little Blood Rider.”

“I am not so little. I am almost six now!” the girl proclaimed proudly.

The Khaleesi ruffled the little girl’s hair affectionately.

Soon after, Daenerys, Kiserri and Jorah Mormont were eating a light late breakfast of eggs and figs. They enjoyed the meal in companionable silence.

Daenerys was chewing on a fig as she thought of her current situation. “What do you think we should do, Jorah? I grow uneasy staying here. My enemies are still seeking my death. How much longer will we be safe here?”

“Khaleesi, we should be safe for a time yet. The assassin was working alone, else, another attempt would have been made. We are in the middle of this gods forsaken waste. We wandered here with no clear path for anyone to follow. We are lost in this hot, arid hell. How can we be found if we are lost? We are safe, Dany.”

Daenerys stiffened slightly at the over-familiar use of her nickname, but allowed it. She needed the man.
“I wonder. I am lost in these endless painted canyons and dry wadi. The red comet - I was sure it was a portent of my righteous destiny” she said, referring to the red comet that had appeared after the birth of her dragons, a seeming a herald of Targaryen destiny and future might. Comets and the color red were great symbols of power in Valyrian lore.

The loss of so many of her Khalasar in the desert had made the Targaryen wonder now. The death of Doreah and then Irri had sapped her will and confidence. All was gone except for her Blood Riders, and Jorah Mormont.

They were not enough.

Should she abandon her quest? Should she allow the wrongs done to her House and family go unpunished? She was a fourteen year old girl, alone in the desert. Jorah was a noble knight, but Daenerys knew he harbored impure thoughts towards her. Her Blood Riders would sacrifice all for her, but they were only three.

How could she conquer Westeros with four warriors while she herself was hunted? The last few nights she felt like a fox that was being hamstrung by baying hounds. She knew she had a great destiny to fulfill. She could feel it, but these days she felt more pressingly the fates conspiring against her.

The rest of the day, her feeling of unease only increased. She climbed back up on the wall in the late afternoon. She brought Kiserri with her, and they looked around the surrounding lands of dry arid wadi and painted canyons.

Kiserri said with certainty that all was safe. That made Daenerys ruffle her hair and kiss her forehead as the little Blood Rider preened.

Daenerys was not so sure. She looked out and felt her unsettlement increase. She could almost feel eyes on her. She shook her head. Stop being a scared little fourteen year old girl Daenerys. She could see nothing amiss. They climbed down.

They must be safe. Mustn’t they?

Syrio Forel

Syrio looked at the ruined city again with his prized looking glass. He swept his gaze back and forth, looking for the warriors that should be lining the walls and going out on foot and mounted patrols. He had been scouting the city for a week, and still saw no active defense.

He found this most disturbing. Did the woman have her forces so well hidden that even he could not spot them? He most seriously doubted that. He had been the best First Sword in the history of Braavos. His skills were legendary.

Well, had been legendary.

He was disgraced now.

He could no longer stomach the corruptions and out of control hedonism of the people he was to defend, so he had resigned. Of course the rest of the world was told he had been caught committing the most heinous of crimes against man and the gods, rather than the truth.

Syrio snorted at the lies. Enough time had passed that no one remembered or even cared one way or another. Any faith Syrio may have had in anything had long since passed away like his honor. He did not believe in anything now but the gold dragons in his pockets.

He had been hired by the mercenary company. They had a contract to kill a young usurper to the throne in Westeros. The only problem was that they were terrified of the woman because they were convinced she was Valyrian witch, capable of great magic. Syrio snorted again at their silly beliefs in things that did not exist. Any person would die on the tip of his rapier.

He scanned the ruined city walls again. There were absolutely no troops or sentries, he was certain. While he did not believe in magic in the grand scheme of things, he had seen enough strange occurrences to know that some people seemed to have strange gifts.

This woman must have something if she was convinced she did not need guards.

Either way, Syrio was not concerned. He had killed many evil and vile persons. He never killed the innocent, and never children. If someone was born to become evil, Syrio would kill them after they’d grown into it.

Jororos Phassirah slid in beside Syrio from his vantage point over the broken city. “When are you going to go in and kill this Daenerys Targaryen? We paid you a lot of dragons for this kill.”

Syrio looked over at the man. He was in his mid-thirties, tall and very well-muscled from his hard life. He was also actually somewhat skilled with his broadsword. The oaf would not last fifteen seconds against himself, but at least he was not inept either. He was the leader of a band of mercenaries that called themselves the Golden Lions. The way they were trembling over this Valyrian witch made Syrio think that the only thing golden about these lions was the way they pissed all over themselves.

He remembered being back in New Ghis six weeks ago, getting drunk in a saloon catering to the Iron Legions of their army. As always, he was sitting with his back to the wall. He was nursing a stout ale when he observed a man striding toward him. It was Jororos Phassirah, who, uninvited, sat down across from him.

The man had cut straight to the chase, introducing himself and telling Syrio he knew who he was and that he had once been the First Sword of Braavos. Syrio had been impressed. He had faded into obscurity and to be called out so far from the Free Cities on the east coast of Essos was both flattering and disturbing. He did have a price on his head, after all.

The man was direct. They had a contract to kill a certain Daenerys Targaryen. She was a woman of pure Valyrian descent. She was apparently making false claims on the throne of Westeros. If she was allowed to go forward and land in Westeros, war would break out, and many innocents would be killed. If the problem was taken care of while she was still far from Westeros, then much harm and bloodshed could be avoided.

Syrio generally had a dislike for killing women. He was convinced though, that in this case, it was appropriate. The woman had for years been making these false claims. She was considered a slut who slept with many men and had continually drank moon tea, killing unwanted pregnancies. She had even killed whole families for daring to defy her.

She had somehow even brought down a great Khal. Such changes in power were always bloody. It seemed as if the woman was literally eating babies. Yes, in this case Syrio Forel would gladly kill this evil woman to save the world from her vile presence.

When he asked why they were willing to pay him twenty-five percent of the admittedly huge bounty, he was told that she was a mighty witch that used sorcery to achieve her goals. It was widely known that Syrio Forel did not believe in any such magic, and had killed mighty warlocks in the past. This of course was entirely true.

Plus, the red comet appearing in the sky had convinced many in the Company that to confront the woman would mean certain death. She was of old Valyria and red comets, as everyone knew, were a sign of the dragons of that land.

That confession had made Syrio pause, recalling a dirty, mangy establishment he had accidently stumbled into rip-roaring drunk a while ago. No. It couldn’t be. No.

He accepted the job, and now he was looking on the failed city again with his spying glass. He believed in nothing and feared even less.

Syrio turned to Jororos. “Yes. It is time. I have reconnoitered enough. I will go in and do your dirty work for you. I will then ride back with you to your base camp on the shore, and retrieve my money. If you attempt to betray me, I will kill you.” He told the legion commander in a tone that brokered no uncertainty.

Jororos Phassirah was not a fool. He knew that many would die before they could bring down a true water dancer. Their skills were many. They were said to walk through walls. Look for they can not be seen … Listen for they can not be heard, such as the saying went. There was plenty money to be had, Robert Baratheon seemed to have unlimited coffers. The ship moored on the beach had three giant coffers filled with gold dragons for the head of this Targaryen girl alone.

Sure, he had exaggerated slightly, but he was sure that in the moment with all that gold at stake the man would, in the end, let greed rule him. Greed ruled all men, as far as Jororos Phassirah was concerned.

“I will follow behind and await your signal. We will pack her head in the chest of ice we’ve prepared. I want no questions asked by the King’s representative. We will all be rich men when this contract is fulfilled.”

Suddenly, there was a loud neighing behind Jororos. He was sure that it could not be heard by those in the city, but he did not want to take any chances. He turned around and hissed at his men to keep their damn horses quiet.

By the time he turned back around, Syrio Forel was already gone.

Syrio easily moved from shadow to shadow unseen, his footfalls as silent as the grave. He was more perplexed the closer he got to the city. There are absolutely no guards. Not even one. His instincts had always alerted him to the presence of the other strange energies that some people had. What the simple minded called magic. He refused to call it magic. He would go around whatever the force was, to fulfill his contract.

As he approached the city, his instincts screamed louder. Something about his whole contract was not right. He felt it in his soul, repeatedly, but he suppressed it. He could simply disappear with the amount of gold dragons he was about to possess. What was the snuffing of one evil, vile life? He would be saving so many more.

He slipped through a large hole in the wall. He looked around and was made even more unsure, and filled with greater unease. Where in the hells were the fighting men? He saw only the very young and the very old. He continued on in the shadows.
Then he saw a girl of Valyria. Why hadn’t Jororos reported there were also Valyrian children present? The girl would direct him to his quarry. His stomach roiled. The Targaryen woman was evil, true, but he still hated the idea of bending his code of ethics. His mouth set. He needed that gold.

He stepped out of the shadows and confronted the girl who startled, gripping her dress in front of her heart.

“Ooohhhh!”

“I need you to point me in the direction of a vile, evil slut whose name is Daenerys Targaryen.”

“Why?” the girl asked looking at him calmly.

“Only her? Will the others be spared? … they have done nothing to deserve death.” The girl straightened her shoulders for some reason and regarded with a air of almost regal bearing Syrio thought.

What a strange question. “Yes. I am here to kill the woman who is baseless, and claims to be the true ruler of Westeros. She is evil, and kills children and lets the dogs eat their bodies … Show me where she is!”

Oh Gods! Gods! The prophetess spoke true!

Syrio began to shake violently. He fell to his knees and placed his sword before him, laying the blade across Daenerys Targaryen’s feet.

“I pledge my services to you … you are the one I have been searching for all my life … the pure one —the one who will restore balance and life!”

Daenerys

Daenerys looked at the man on his knees before her. What a strange man. Tears were now running down his face, and his body wracked with sobs. “Forgive me!” he shouted. “I was sent to kill you, but instead I pledge my sword to your noble cause!”

The man collapsed forward, his forehead resting on the tips of her feet. “I’m sorry, so sorry, so sorry … oh please forgive me, I’m so sorry, so sorry … so sorry..” the pale woman looked down at the strange man racked with guilt, and was touched by his sincerity.

“Rise man, … rise.” Daenerys softly encouraged him. He rose back up on his knees. “What is your name, my would-be assassin?” she asked softly.

The man quickly controlled his sobs, though the tears that still ran down his cheeks.

“S-S-S-y-yrio Fo—Forel … I will defend you with my last, dying breath.” He told Daenerys.

“Why?” She asked.
“You were foretold to me long ago. I had laughed at her back then, but … she was right. You are the dragon reborn. It is you that will renew the world.”

“How? I am just a young woman.”

“I don’t know, but you will. She told me that magic was dying, and that you would restore it. You and your lover will restore the Blood of the Earth.”

“What is that?”

“You don’t know?” he looked at her quizzically. The teenager shook her head. “Doesn’t matter. You will discover the truth. I have total faith in you, my Queen.” The Targaryen shook her head again in confusion, just thankful the man had not run her through with his sword.

“Syrio Forel, you have been told the most baseless of lies. It is I am who am aggrieved. My father was cut down from behind on his own throne. My brother was killed on the field of battle in noble combat, and his wife was raped and kept alive until she witnessed the murder of her two children. Then she was slaughtered too.

“I only seek what is rightfully mine. I will take back what is mine and bring peace and prosperity to all.”

“Mommy, mommy.” Daenerys turned to see Kiserri walking down the alleyway, rubbing her sleepy eyes. “I missed you, mommy.” The little girl told Daenerys, scolding as she held up her arms. Daenerys reached down and hauled the girl up and hugged her tight, then kissed the child’s temple. It was only then the little girl noticed the stranger. The six year old started to kick her small legs, and Daenerys set Kiserri back down. The small girl fumbled with the little dagger tucked underneath her belt. She finally pulled it out, and then dropped it. The little girl bent down and picked it up, and then brandished it at the intruder.

“If you want to get at my mommy … I mean the Khaleesi, you will have to go through me! I am the Khaleesi’s savage Blood Rider!” the little girl swished her blade menacingly back and forth in front of the stranger.

Daenerys watched as Syrio Forel held up his hands and backed up. “Please spare my life, fierce Blood Rider!” he implored.

Satisfied, the little Blood Rider relented. “I will let you live!” she said with a negligent swirl of her hair.

Daenerys slowly walked back down the alleyway. Syrio fell in step beside her on the opposite side of Kiserri.

“Did you come alone?” the Khaleesi asked her supposed new knight.

“No. They sent me in to kill you because they are craven. They think you are some mighty witch.” They came to a ladder, and first Daenerys and then Kiserri climbed up, with some help from her Khaleesi. The former First Sword quickly ascended after.

Daenerys looked to the South, wondering when her Blood Riders would finally return to her. This man swore allegiance to her, but she would feel safer with their return. She wondered where Jorah was. He had trained strenuously in the late morning and slept thought the extreme midday heat. Daenerys could only hope that this was the start of a reversal of fortune.
Daenerys looked out to the west. Her gaze stopped. She slowly turned to face Syrio Forel.

“It would appear you chose poorly.”

Syrio

Syrio turned to look at Daenerys and then out over the desert. “SHIT!” The fucking Golden Lions had found their balls. They were storming towards this broken city, and the large hole in the wall just to the right. “If you have any defenders, call them now!”

Syrio jumped down lightly into the breach. His sword whipped around in an arc and the first on rusher grasped his throat as blood gushed out of the severed arteries and veins. Syrio lunged forward, his blade piercing the next man’s eye, the tip striking the back of his skull before he ripped his blade out of the crumpling man.

He kicked his foot out, crushing the next man’s Adam’s apple, his pivoting body spinning to the right as he gutted another. He met the last man of the initial rush and easily evaded his broadsword stroke, then blocked the second swipe with the swept hilt of his sword. He pulled their swords down fast, and then stepped back and ran his sword through the man’s throat and ripped it back out, blood pulsing out in hot spurts.

“Khaleesi!” A large bear of man roared and was suddenly beside Syrio. He was covered in black chainmail, and had a mighty broadsword. Together they met the next rush. Their blades swirled and slashed death all around them. Syrio was dancing and jumping, avoiding blows and slashing death. An arrow shot past his head.

“Fall back!” Syrio roared as more arrows started to whistle past them. He took one side of the opening and the large man the other. Syrio looked up and yelled at Daenerys. “Get yourself and your daughter down. You can’t get trapped up there!”

Three men were storming through the breach. The large man slashed his sword, nearly chopping a man in half, his sword getting stuck in ribs and spine. As he wrenched his sword out the viscera, Syrio slashed the other two men. His razor sharp blade cut down into their necks cutting arteries, veins, tendons and slashing their tracheas open. His blade partially cut their spinal cords.

Suddenly, yells were heard down the right alleyway. Four men were coming down the alley at a fast run, swords drawn as more men stormed the breach. The large man stormed past the opening, several arrows nearly piercing him. His momentum bowled him into the first two men, knocking them over. His sword sliced down, chopping through the third man’s collar bone into his sternum. The large man desperately wrenched his sword out of bone. The fourth man chopped down on his broad shoulder. His chain mail blunted much of the blow. As the large man roared, his foot kicked his assailant in the crotch.

Syrio had quickly dispatched the next two attackers. He screamed at Daenerys and Kiserri to run down the alleyway toward the large man. The bear-man had cleaved the fourth man’s head in two with a savage stroke. Syrio killed two more with piercing thrusts to the throat and eye.

They ran down the alley as women and children began to scream. They saw six men running towards them, but Syrio saw a man on a horse with an Arakh charging up the narrow street. Syrio could clearly see his Dothraki heritage. He started to yell, and lunged forward engaging the men. They all focused on Syrio. The large man went back to fight three more men moving forward with spears.
Syrio could not worry about them for the moment as he dodged blades and jabbed back. Suddenly the rider slammed into the mercenary’s defenseless backs his horse’s hooves trampling and stomping on even more. The man’s arakh made slashing arcs, raining death.

“Jhogo!” the little white-haired woman screamed in relief. Syrio turned back to the large man. He had chopped down the first two spearmen, and was hacking the third man’s spear in two.

He did not see the additional spearmen now coming down the alley. Suddenly, a spear had bloomed through the huge man’s right shoulder, the end jutting two feet out his back. He staggered back into the wall. Syrio lunged forward, kicking down the mercenary that the large man had been fighting.

“Jorah!” he heard the white-haired woman scream as she ran up to him. He pushed her back behind him, blood running down his body. Suddenly feathered arrows flew down the alleyway. Jhogo was wheeling his horse around to bring his own bow and arrow into the fray. More scrambling was heard as more men appeared at the ends of the alleyway and pelted towards them. The next moment two arrows had sprouted in Jorah’s chain mail, the first breaking but the second sinking several inches in his thigh.

Suddenly, the men on the wall above came crashing down, screaming.

Barristan Selmy

Barristan Selmy had been following the Dothraki rider and his small entourage from the City of Qarth. He knew they would take him to the Queen he would pledge his troth too. She was the fulfillment of prophecy, and not her brother Rhaegar as many had expected. One always assumed it was the man and not the woman. Rhaegar had been a great man, but he now knew the woman would be even greater.

He had heard how the woman led her Khalasar into the red waste. He knew she was alive. Destiny would not let her die unremarked in the depths of this gods forbidden wasteland.

The trail had been spotty, and he had lost it entirely. He had a guide that Illyro had provided so he was able to find forage for his horse and food and water for them both. Still, he was lost until he came across the Dothraki in Blood Rider attire. He had smiled to himself, and followed at distance.

For four days they ambled forward at a moderate pace, not to overtire the entourage with the Blood Rider. He guessed that he had journeyed to Qarth and was bringing back succor. Then, in the late afternoon of the fifth day, he and the Blood Rider both felt it at the same time - the rider sprinted forward on his horse as Barristan followed a half mile back.

He followed the Blood Rider to an old, desolate city. Men were boiling forward towards it and the sound of fighting could clearly be heard. Gods NO! Barristan screamed to himself, whipping his horse to get to the city as fast as possible. He arrived and saw a jagged way to the top of the wall and scrambled up. He saw archers preparing to fire and ran towards them.

He arrived just as they loosed a volley and kicked them down to their deaths. He looked down at a wild melee. He easily spotted his future Queen hiding against a sidewall with a Dothraki child gripping her leg in terror.

He jumped down and killed the three mercenaries in front of him. He then turned and faced a wave of six men who were charging forward. He killed the first one with a devastating two-handed stroke that sliced the man’s side wide open to the spine. The Dothraki he had followed had dismounted, shooting arrows in all directions and picking up more from the spilled quivers of the fallen mercenarios.

He barely dodged a thrown spear and chopped a man’s left leg off as the man screamed in agony. He retreated, blocking and parrying blows and delivering death as the men pressed forward. Suddenly a large man barreled past him. He had a chopped-off spear jutting out of his back. He cleaved three men down before a wild slash hit him in the right arm, cutting into his chain mail.

Barristan ran in and killed the nearest men, but more were still streaming down the alley. He heard the sounds of blades clashing behind him as more men came up from the other end.

He chopped a man’s head clean off and swirled, slashing a second man’s stomach open. Barristan pulled back as he tried to pull the large man after him. The man roared, sweeping two men into his grasp and crushing into the wall. He now had a long dagger in his blood slicked right hand. He stabbed both men to death before an arrow pieced the large bearded man in the eye and he fell down, killed instantly.

Barristan chopped and wheeled death in all directions. He was an angel of death. It was not enough. He was pushed back continuously. He was slipping on all the blood and gore.

A man ducked and dashed past his guard.

Daenerys

Wherever Daenerys looked she saw assassins. Her defenders were dispensing death on all sides. She had screamed when she saw Jorah go down with an arrow jutting out of his eye. She looked to her right and Jhogo was slashing his Arakh right and left, chopping off legs, arms and disemboweling men. Screams filled the alley. Syrio leapt, swirled and ducked in a blur of motion, men falling dead all around him.

There was always more to replace the dead. The teenager looked to her left. An older man had appeared, defending her. He too was moving in a blur of death, his blade first high and then low. Limbs were severed and heads cleaved near in two, but still he was pressed back by yet more mercenaries, their numbers never seeming to cease as they kept pouring in on the small knot of defenders.

Kiserri was no longer a brave blood rider, but a scared little girl. She was screaming in terror. Daenerys bent down to hug her. She pushed the girl back a little, to try and yell something over the din to make the girl feel somehow a bit less terrified.

Suddenly, a shocking, piecing pain filled the fourteen year old princess of House Targaryen. Daenerys ignored the pain, pushing past it and focusing on Kiserri. What had happened? Kiserri started to scream and then stopped, blood pouring out of her mouth, her shocked eyes wide open.

Daenerys looked down at the blade that had ran through Kiserri and sunk deep into her own body as well. The blade was thrust hard forward, and she felt the tip rip out of her back. It was agony.

She looked at Kiserri and saw her eyes dim, and then the light went out of them entirely as the girl went limp.

Daenerys tried to scream, but she had no air as she felt blood pouring out of her own mouth. Her heart staggered, and then tripped again for several more beats.
Then it stopped entirely, unable to carry on. The light went out of Daenerys Targaryen’s eyes. She followed her sweet Kiserrri into death.

Daenerys

Kisseri. Again and again, Daenerys saw her precious adopted daughter’s heart pierced with cold, hard steel. That the same sword that had pierced her own heart was inconsequential; the agony in her own body meant nothing. She watched her daughter die over and over again. The terror, and then stark agony Daenerys had seen in Kisseri’s brown eyes that had looked on at her with shock. Her precious, brave Bloodrider had become just a terrified little girl in the end.

Eyes that said why didn't you save me?!

Daenerys’ only memory was a loop of Kisseri and her death, the blood that poured out of her mouth. Kisseri’s soundless screams, and the light that went out from her dark eyes.

Daenerys’ soul was wracked with guilt. Sobs shook her bodiless form with silent tears. Slowly, though, the vision started to fade, and then die away.

Daenerys began to drift as the dark embraced her in a tight, almost loving embrace. A cool peace was enveloping her being.

Then she heard it. The sound of delicate music, bells or chimes: a soft ringing, at once beautiful and imprecise, as allusive as the scent of an exotic perfume.

A woman’s voice of tuned bells spoke. “I have come, Dragonthane. This death cannot stand. You are the lynchpin of all that must be. I will restore your body.”

“Who are you?” Daenerys asked, with only mild interest. She felt herself drifting on a sea of sweet lassitude.

“I am Infelice. Regent of the Elohim. This cannot stand. You are the Dragon of Destiny, around you all others orbit.”

Daenerys heard the beautiful chiming of an infinite chorus of bells. She had a thought, and reached out and grasped it. “Kisseri. Kisseri, save her.”

“No. She is not important. She has no Earthpower, she is of no portent. She does not matter in the life of the Earth.”

Daenerys felt her will briefly surge. “Not important? Only she is important! Nothing else matters! I have lost everything else. I can’t take anymore! Restore her, and leave me in peace!”

“You, Dragonthane, I will restore.” The bells chimed and power enveloped and burned into Daenerys. Daenerys felt the agony of vitality, but resisted the call of life and purpose. There was a long pause. “WHAT IS THIS?! the female voice screamed in fear and frustration. “You cannot refuse your destiny!”
“Save Kisseri. Leave me to my death. My life has been a disaster.” Daenerys felt another mighty wash of magic flow, and then slam into her body. She felt power that could tear the mountains from their moorings and hurl them into the sea surge into, and through, her body. She refused the siren call to life. The power was hurled back from her body into the formless plasma of reality and purpose.

“This … this is not possible … NOOOOOO!” the voice wailed, and was gone.

Daenerys drifted again. Thoughts came to her harder. She felt the threads of her essential self fraying. She was falling apart. The cold around her now felt like the embrace of a mother’s love.

Suddenly, the chimes were back. Fury, doubt, fear, and supplication all crashed into the frayed essence of all that was left of Daenerys Targaryen. The distant memory of pain focused her fading self. Anger rose up.

“Infelice. Please control yourself.” Another female voice now came to her. A soft, flowing white enveloped Daenerys with comfort and succor. “We come in peace and supplication Daenerys Targaryen, mother of dragons. I am Linden Avery, the Chosen and Ring Wielder, wife of Thomas Covenant. I need to speak to you.”

“Go away.” Daenerys scoffed weakly.

“I will, but I would ask that you hear me out first. Will you?”

Daenerys pulled herself together enough to consider. “What do you have to say?”

She felt rather than heard the woman sigh. “I must ask you to return to life. You have a great destiny to fulfill. Already it may be too late, you have fully crossed over now. Fortunately, the Laws of Life and Death have already been broken and can never be fully made whole.”

Daenerys scoffed and started to turn away from the gentle woman’s voice.

“Here me out, Daenerys Targaryen. Please. If you refuse Infelice and I, we will leave you to the grave. Will you hear me out?”

Daenerys wanted to be done with this. She sighed within herself.

“Speak.”

“Thank you.”

“You are the center pin of the future. If you fail, all life in Westeros and Essos will, in time, perish. Only you and the forces that will rally around you can meet the need of the Earth. Your chosen path of restoration of your throne is only the first Labor you must accomplish. You have many labors before you, Daenerys. You are filled with Earthpower and must heed its selection. You were born for greatness.”

“I don’t care about that anymore. I have failed at everything. Save Kisseri. She is important!”

“I know. She is indeed precious, but this is about you Daenerys. I must ask you to take up the challenge of our time. I have told you that Westeros and Essos will die, but in time the whole Earth may perish along with your homelands. The Earth cannot long survive I feel, with half of it frozen in death.”

“I have lost everything. I am a failure. All that I loved are dead.”
"No, not all. Others will come to you. You will conquer and change the course of history. I fear to tell you this; I must tread carefully. I fear to invoke the paradox of lore: it must be earned and not granted, else the purpose misleads. But still, I will tell you, though it will fade to mere distant dreams. You will carry it with you deep in your psyche.

"You will break chains that have existed for over five thousand years. You will bring a long lasting peace that Westeros and Essos has never known. You will heal the Doom of Valyria. Magic in your world is dying, and your will and passion will restore it.

"All of this has been placed on your shoulders. You have been selected. I too tried to avoid my destiny. I was afraid, and a failure. I was forced to watch my father kill himself, and shriveled as he screamed that I was the reason he slashed his wrists. I killed my own mother when she was dying from cancer. She asked for death... and I gave it. I was less than human at one time. A mere robot."

"What changed?"

"There is also love in the world, Daenerys. I was told this, but did not believe it at the time. It was true."

Daenerys heard the sigh and how the woman felt an inner peace.

"You found love?"

"Yes. Thomas Covenant healed me, even though his own life was full of horror and failures. Failures can be overcome. Come and find us, and we will more fully explain this.

"Daenerys, you will find love. When the wolf and dragon lie together, you will find so much love. It can never replace what you have lost, but it will heal you and make you whole.

"Only then that which has been stolen from you can be given back. Only then, that which has been lost can be found. You must take back what is yours by the right of birth. The world has waited for you, Daenerys.

"I do not demand. I only ask you to consider. I ask not for you. I ask for the world. But we are human, and I give you the hope of love and restoration. Take what is yours and make this world a better place. You can achieve so much more than Thomas and I ever could.

"Will you take up the mantel of the world’s need? Will you accept the greatest challenge this world has known since the Worm at the World’s End went back into slumber? The world and life itself needs you, Daenerys.

"The choice is yours. We have spoken our piece, my sweet child. We will await your answer."

"And Kisseri?" Daenerys asked again. She heard Linden Avery sigh sadly.

"It is the future that must call you forward, Daenerys. To return to life, you must let go of the past. Let go of what no longer exists. You must choose life. We will have to pry apart the barrier of life and death, and will need your iron will to slip you through the pale.

"I cannot emphasize this enough: you must choose life with every fiber of your soul. Only with that can we restore you. I warn you though - you are not a ring wielder. We can restore life to your body, but it will be your iron will that will anchor your soul to that body and life. You must sacrifice the past for your future.

"As the Creator once told me: ‘you will never fail no matter how much life assails you.’ Your enemies will be many, but you will overcome. … Do you chose life? Reach and grasp what is rightfully yours. Only then can you achieve your destiny, and restore that which has been taken. Redeem your life, and redeem your heritage.”

Daenerys felt the fires of her ambition kindling again. She had a great destiny to fulfill. She would change the future for the better. She would break chains. She would save lives.

She chose life, and to forgo the past. Forgive me Kissari.

“So be it. You will not remember this, except in the depths of dreams. One thing more: you and your followers are weak now. You are in need of succor. We have beseeched the ur-viles. They have consulted their Weird. One time they can give you assistance in your coming of age.” A small dirk appeared in Daenerys’ bodiless hand. It was covered in intricate runes and sigils. “You will know what to do when you are in need. Remember, only once can you use it.”

Before Daenerys’ sightless eyes, she saw a small sword appear. It had a large crossguard and a pure white gem glowing white hot in the hilt. She heard the loud, incessant chiming of bells that soon sounded like they might burst asunder with the urgency of their tempo. Linda Avery’s voice hummed a melodic, soundless tune, the volume rising to a high-pitched melodic scream. Suddenly, the sword exploded into light and a beam of incandescent white blasted into and burned Daenerys to the depths of her being.

Daenerys screamed in agony, screams that multiplied and grew. Then she was gone.

“I don’t understand. Why did she refuse me and accept you? What did I do wrong?”

“Infelice … after all these years and you still do understand human emotions and motivations. Even with your allowance to let Kastenessen marry his human lover, you still do not understand us. Come on, woman.”

Infelice regarded Linden scornfully. “Be thankful I am not a woman. Can you imagine an Elohim with MPH?”

“That’s P-M-S, Infelice.”

“Whatever, human.” the Elohim chuckled. “Why again were we not allowed to tell her the full truth of her destiny?”

“Her path is dangerous. We both know the chances are great she will fail, and with her the Earth. She must succeed. And to succeed, she must be focused.”

Infelice shook her head. “You humans are most strange.”

“Also, you know that She Who Must Be Named has returned. She has taken her body back. This is truly a dangerous development, though we feel she has not come to do harm but to redeem herself.”

“And if you are wrong?”

“She will destroy the Earth.”

“We are doomed then.”

Linden smirked within her spirit. “There is also love in the world, Infelice … even if you don’t understand it. The smallest of women can conquer the mightiest of beings. You will see.”

“Take the Krill back to Elemenestedene. Guard these gifts well; they are precious. You know She Who Must Not Be Named will seek the Krill. I can feel it. She has some purpose for it.”

“I sure hope she finally lets us know what her damn name is. If she took her body back, then she has her name back, too. I get tired of saying that long moniker over and over! I get winded!”

“It doesn’t bother me.” Infelice said. “I don’t breathe.” And then she was gone.

Linden pondered. She had known Infelice for almost forty-four thousand years. Today was the first time she had ever seen any humor in her.

Strange forces were definitely at work. Linden chuckled as she faded, going back to her home in Kiril Threndor half a world away, where her husband and son awaited her.

Barristan

Barristan screamed seeing the sword piece Daenerys’ heart. He had whipped around when the man got past his guard, his sword slashing down and chopping through collar bone and shoulder blade into the man’s body cavity. He ripped his sword up and out, and it whistled down again and split the man’s head wide open.

A sword slammed into his back in a slashing downward strike. He staggered, his chain mail saving him as the links jammed through the linen undercoat and into his skin. The man who delivered the blow fell dead, his eye pierced by the thin blade of a rapier by a man with a goatee.

The next ten minutes were a confused blur of rage and violence. The word quickly spread that the white haired woman had been slain. The attacking forces began to fray and become aimless. Barristan, the goateed man, and a Dothraki who must have been one of Daenerys’ Blood Riders dispensed death all around. They chased men down, killing them on the spot with great violence. Barristan and the other non-Dothraki man ran to and fro, killing mercilessly.

Finally, the men were gone. Barristan noticed that there were other dead beside the mercenaries that were littered on the narrow alleyways and in doorways. Barristan fumed that the innocent always seemed to pay when killers like himself fought.

He found his way back to the place he saw the Queen fall. She was not there! He screamed again, and wheeled around. They must have needed her body for proof. He leaped out of the breach in the wall. A half-mile out he saw the Dothraki Blood Rider wildly chopping men down from his horse, with the goateed man who was clearly a water dancer, killing with a speed that was poetry to behold.

Barristan crashed into the men as they were trying to form a phalanx to defend themselves from the rear. The group was broken, and quickly butchered.

His precious Queen lay dead behind them, her violet eyes open and sightless, her clothes rent and torn. Her body had contusions and bruises. She looked so delicate and forlorn in death. He fell to his knees beside the corpse as the goateed man wept bitterly, and the Blood Rider prepared to kill himself.

“NOOOOO!” Barristan roared, his fist arching down to slam the dead Queen in the chest in agony and frustration.
“Hhhhuunggggggg!” the Targaryen cawed in a cry of raw agony as her upper torso lifted off the dusty ground several feet. Eyes that had been sightless were now filled with pain. Her body collapsed back to the ground, her breath ragged and shallow.

The water dancer gasped “My god—she’s alive!”.

The Blood Rider cried out “Khaleesi!”

They all gathered around the unconscious girl whose chest only slightly rose and fell.

Thank the gods. Thank the gods I am not too late! Barristan thought to himself.

Barristan soon found out who the goateed man was, as the Blood Rider called Jhogo carried his Khaleesi back to Vaes Tolorro. They took her to her domicile and gently put her into bed. All three men saw that where the sword had pierced her body front and back was healed and scarred. The scar was still new, red and raw looking but the wound was sealed. The wound was no more. Barristan looked at the other men. He was relieved by what he saw. They only wanted their Khaleesi and Queen back. How his future Queen had been saved, Barristan cared not a wit.

The three men along with Dothraki women all nursed the frail Targaryen. Her body felt like it was on fire. Jhogo informed the two other men she was hot-blooded, but he agreed with them that it was still too much. They sprinkled water on her, and waved towels. The dragons, sensing their mother’s need, circled her and beat their wings hard as the water evaporated on her pale skin.

Water and broth were gently spooned down her throat. On the second day, Syrio asked about the young girl he had seen with Daenerys. Barristan inquired of Jhogo. The man vaguely recalled such a girl, he had wondered why the Khaleesi had put up with the urchin. Barristan asked for her name. Jhogo impatiently said he did not know, but then spit out that maybe it was Kesselli, Jassi, Kiserri, Qovvi... something like that, and then he moved on.

Barristan inquired further and found only a Qovvi, and she was fourteen. Way too old to be the girl. There had been twelve small children killed, eight girls and three of them had been orphans. The dead had been burned as per Dothraki custom. Barristan sighed. Why must the innocent always suffer?

On the second day, the dragons who had been energetically flapping their wings suddenly became listless, chitterling plaintively. Barristan wracked his brain, his stomach rumbling with thoughts of lunch. Of course! He called out to Syrio to get a rack of lamb brought in. The dragons went wild seeing the food. He and Syrio cut and gave the dragons chunks of meat that they snapped up and wolfed down ravenously.

For some reason the white dragon seemed to become quite attached to Barristan. The dragon would rub on his arm while making warbling sounds. Then, the white dragon would grab Barristan’s arm, and, biting his chain mail, try to drag him to Daenerys. Barristan started spending a lot of his time sitting at the young Queen’s bedside with the white dragon curled on his lap, keeping a close eye on the Targaryen.

One the first day of the start of the third week, the girl finally awoke, lucid. “Mylantas … mylantas.” she weakly croaked in high Valyrian. Barristan lifted her head up and gave her water. She went back to sleep, and when he felt brow he noticed her fever had broken.

The teenager slowly grew stronger. She was fed broth, and curried food. “Was Kiserri burned?” she asked Barristan in high Valyrian. He told her she had been. The young woman turned her head and wept softly.
Barristan got to know more of Syrio. He was a closed man who seemed to have a past he would rather forget. He told Syrio that Daenerys was foretold in A Song Of Ice and Fire, and that she would lead Westeros into a golden age. He had waited his whole life to give his service to a person worthy of it. He smiled softly. “I just never thought it would be a teenage girl. Can’t you feel it Syrio? Can’t you feel the greatness in her?”

The man mumbled that he would wait and see, and yet he doted on her. He mentioned guardedly once of a silly prophecy he had heard, but said no more on the subject.

Three days later, the young woman summoned them. Her other two Blood Riders had finally returned two days prior. Her voice was no longer weak, and she wanted to know what her Blood Riders had found. Aggo and Rakharo had found only more red waste. Jhogo had made it all the way to Qarth, and had been bringing a delegation with him, but the fighting had sent them scurrying back with their tails between their legs. They had no honor. They told him as they fled that they would await the ‘Queen’s’ arrival.

Barristan was sure they thought she had perished. And she had. She should have been burned on her own funeral pyre. What had brought her back? Again, Barristan found he could care less. He would serve this girl through the seven hells and back if necessary. She would save Westeros.

Daenerys asked for their allegiance. The blood riders loudly proclaimed she was their Khal. Syrio claimed that he would follow her though the gates of perdition. Barristan pulled his sword and went to one knee, placing the blade across Daenerys’ body. “I pledge my troth, body and soul to your service Daenerys Targaryen, First of Your Name. The prophecies spoke clearly of you. You will restore Westeros to greatness.”

The woman had looked at him hard as she accepted his oath. “Yes. I will take back what is mine. Rest assured I will win back my throne.” Her tone had brooked no argument.

She immediately ordered him and Syrio to start teaching her the history of their lands and concepts of warfare, and even personal combat. She said she was too weak to begin martial training, but as soon as she was strong enough she would commence.

Barristan and the other warriors were nonplussed. She was a woman. She cocked an eyebrow, anger boiling in her violet eyes. “I am your Khaleesi and your Queen. I expect obedience! I will never be helpless again! DO I MAKE MYSELF CLEAR?!” she yelled at them.

The next morning after the Queen had eaten, Barristan went to her and bowed down in shame. He confessed how he had been present when the orders were sent out for her assassination. He had spoken out against it but said no more when ordered to silence. He had been overstepping the bounds of his duty. He knew even then his arguments were sophistry. More than one conversation he was privy to discussed the need to execute her before she became a threat. On the third meeting, he had quit his service as Lord Commander of the Kingsguard, disgusted.

“I’m a coward. Both Jon Arryn and I refused to fight to stop a wrong which we both knew was being perpetrated. We were shameful. If you wish me to go, I will. If you deem my execution is necessary, I will bow my neck.”

The young woman had looked at him with cold resolve. “I will keep you. You may have been a coward once, but no more. You will serve long and well, Lord Barristan. I have need of you and will use your strength to achieve my goals.”
Barristan could ask for no more.

Syrio

Syrio came into Daenerys’ domicile and waited to be acknowledged. He felt so unworthy of her acceptance of his service. He had come to kill her. She looked at him with a small smile, and he felt dirty.

“She comes. What have you brought me?” she asked, seeing the small book in his hand. She took the book and read the title. “The Art of Water Dancing’. This is what you are going to teach me?”

Syrio told her yes. She thumbed through the book, looking at the illustrations of the basic stances in fencing. “Very good. I can’t wait to begin my lessons.”

Syrio broke down. “I’m unworthy of serving you Khaleesi! I was sent to kill you! Oh God I am so, so sorry!” He began to weep.

“Stop it! I command it!” the tiny woman ordered in an iron voice. “Stand straight when you are in the presence of your Queen! I command it!” Syrio snapped to attention.

“I will take your allegiance and you will put aside your past. You are mine now. You are my Water Dancer. You will teach me, and make me your equal.”

He looked at her as his tears stopped. He gained control of himself.

“Good. You said you will teach me this ‘meditation’. I am ready to begin.”

“Are you sure?”

“Didn’t I just say I am?” Daenerys asked regally. “Don’t question my strength or stamina again. Teach me.” He did not know then that the Queen was speaking in such tones because she understood the man needed to hear her commands, to shake him out of his self-induced melancholy.

So Syrio began his first lesson with Daenerys Targaryen on centering her mind and body. By the end of the lesson he was amazed. She did not question or doubt as everyone usually did. She instead focused on what he said, and did it. By the end of the first lesson, she was able to begin centering herself and use the mantras to achieve the beginnings of inner peace.

The next week she began her weapons training. She trained with Barristan, her Blood Riders and Syrio in a round robin, going back and forth between them. She pushed herself relentlessly. She exercised and ran hard, both in the morning and late in the afternoon.

She completed all of Syrio’s water dancing lessons without complaint. She chased rats up and down alleys, soon catching them. She was so fast she was never once bitten. Several feral cats wandered the ruins, and she was soon catching them as well. She seemed to be proud of her scratches.

She was amazing! And also frightening. During their first lesson he had asked in a stuttering voice for her to wrap her breasts to keep them from throwing her timing and balance off. Instead, she had simply removed her top. She said she was a woman and needed to learn to fight with their weight potentially flipping around as she moved. “I may be surprised, and need to fight nude. I will be prepared for any possibility.” Syrio had seen enough breasts in his time. It was the very pale square over her heart and the exit wound on her back that made his breath catch.
He had talked to Barristan about it. He had seen it when he cared for their Queen in her convalescent state after the attack on her.

“But Barristan! That scar looks like it is five years old now, and not two months. It should be red and still swollen!”

“What does it matter Syrio? She is alive. She came back to us. She gave two broken down warriors a second chance to have meaning in their lives. I don’t care about her scars.”

Syrio saw the logic in that. He was swearing allegiance to something more than human. He felt a shiver go down his spine when he realized this. He would give this woman every ounce of his service and loyalty.

Their Queen trained relentlessly. From dawn to dusk she pushed herself. The men quickly realized that she had almost unnatural stamina. Her bruises and contusions healed overnight, or at most several days. She had almost overnight picked up the basics of the fighting styles she was being taught, from three entirely different cultures.

Syrio silently fumed when she gravitated to the broadsword. Barristan looked way too pleased with himself with her selection of primary weapon. She practiced with the arakh and the rapier to become more than proficient, but it was the broadsword that she used primarily. She was learning so quickly that she was beginning to block some of their more aggressive attacks.

“Never hold back! Push me—test me! I will never be weak again! I will crush and slay my assailants. I will never allow another Kisseri to be killed before my eyes!”

All the men felt a rush at her words.

It was four months into her transformation that they began to come. Never more than a trickle, but runaway slaves began to appear at Vaes Tolorro in a slow stream. Men and women, some with children, running from the cruelty of the slave cities. From them, Daenerys learned of the horrors of the slave trade. Syrio could see her anger and hate for these slave cities and masters forming and growing quickly. He knew what she was thinking as she would stand on the wall in the evening, the wind whipping her long white hair, her gaze ever distant.

He and Barristan developed ever more strenuous sword exercises, and worked her conditioning hard as Syrio had her balancing on one foot and then chasing cats and rats for hours. Sweat poured off her body and she gasped for breath, but she continued pressing. Syrio added the hefting of heavy rocks that ever grew larger as she placed them on broken walls. He would knock them off and she would glare at him, putting them right back up.

She came to him one day, excited. She had discovered that after meditating she could directly communicate with her dragons. Before it had only been flashes, and prodding and urging with only small glimpses of their thoughts. Now she was actually communicating back and forth with them. They were so intelligent! They were in love with her, and Viserion apparently had a crush on Barristan. They wanted to be hers, and she was theirs. They would do anything for her and she for them.

With this breakthrough, the dragons were calmer and more compliant. Barristan was not so sure he liked this development. Often he was seen with Viserion perched on his head, his talons twisted in his hair riding high and proud, his roars and squeaks letting all know that Barristan was his.

Soon he would be too big to ride his uncle as such. Their growth had accelerated immediately after Daenerys formed her bond with them. They thrived from their direct communication with their mother.

Five months into her training, Strong Belwas appeared. He announced his arrival: “I am here. I pledge my services to this Dragon sprite … I’m hungry! Strong Belwas requires sustenance if I am to serve. I need goats, bread and cheese.” He ate like a herd of elephants, but he added his arm to Daenerys’ training and gladly partook in patrols and sentry duty. “Strong Belwas will serve. When do we crush the slave cities?” he asked his new Queen.

“Patience, Strong Belwas. Patience. I need an army first. Do you have an army hidden in there?” the Queen asked, poking his stomach.

“Hahahaha … funny! If you fed me more I could have bigger army in my emaciated stomach … I need sustenance … I need goats, bread an—”

“Cheese. I know. You need figs, butter and cream too, oh mighty Belwas, don’t you?” Daenerys asked the large bald eunuch.

He licked his lips “Uuuummmmmmmm!”

Barristan

It was six months since Daenerys started her training. She’d become fast and strong. She was running hard and fast for longer periods. The rocks she lifted to put on the wall for Syrio were heavy, even for him. He watched her fighting her Blood Riders. They were on the defense, always, and often she got through them to land blows while their own were almost non-existent. She was still on defense with Syrio and himself, but she was able to at least survive now. He was amazed at how far she had come.

She asked him last week about the downfall of her father and her elder brother. He spared no details. Her face sufficed in anger at the fate of her brother’s wife and their children. Barristan made it clear that Robert had no part of this, but he did indeed unleash the forces that led to it. He edited out the last of her father’s crimes against House Stark. He did not want to burden her with the sins of her father.

He saw the cold hate in Daenerys’ eyes for this man who caused so much pain and death for her family line. She asked many questions about the lands of Dragonstone and the Reach. She asked Syrio about the free Cities. She spoke long periods with the former slaves. They came from all professions and various lands. Daenerys granted them total freedom, and they called her ‘mother’ in return.

Last night she had visited Barristan in his quarters. She asked him his thoughts on the slave trade. He told her it was evil and vile, yet it had existed for five thousand years and would likely exist for five thousand more.

“I think not” was his Queens steadfast reply. “I will crush these hateful slave states. I will have my revenge on Khal Jhaqo. I will find and annihilate the mercenary company that slew my precious Kiserri. They will die for what they did to my daughter.”

“She was the daughter of my heart. I will have revenge for her death.” Daenerys stared out the paneless window. “I will delay my return to Westeros. I will conquer and destroy these slave cities. I will bring the Dothraki to heel.”
“But how? They have not been destroyed after five thousand years. How will you, when all others failed? The Dothraki are as vast as the grass sea they ride on.”

“Isn’t it obvious Barristan? All the would-be conquerors merely wanted to put themselves in as the new slave masters. They would take the riches based on the enslavement of their fellow man.

“I care not for these tainted riches based on the blood, sweat and toil of slaves. I only want its abolition. I will not have blood money. I will avenge all of the slaves whose lives were unjustly blighted and ended. I will not negotiate. They will either submit, or be destroyed.”

“But how? You have no army.”

“I will have my army, Barristan. Khal Jhaqo owes me a great debt, and I will see it paid. I am the answer to their prophecy. Not Drogo or his son.”

Daenerys expounded on how in her weakness, she was raped and defiled. Those she loved were taken or killed. She vowed that never again would these things happen to her. Never again would she watch a child die before her very eyes!

Barristan and Syrio watched hard muscle form on Daenerys’ body while all her womanly curves still remained, and seemed to be enhanced. She was a goddess come to Earth. She was hard on herself, constantly training and exercising and pushing herself further.

Slowly more slaves arrived, along with some warriors seeking a cause to align themselves with. They were in no way enough to achieve Daenerys’s goals, but it did not matter to Barristan. He was totally aligned with Daenerys even if it meant his death in the end. Her cause was noble and just. He could gladly die for such a cause.

A year had passed since Daenerys had started her training, and she was beginning to become death itself. Only the water dancer and himself could now fight her and live. She was beyond fast, her strength unnatural. His arms ached after sword practice with his Queen now.

He had been in communication with Illyrio through runners sent out with some slaves that had hunting and traveling skills. The runners soon replaced by ravens as several were brought to their ghost city in the desert by Illyrio’s agents. The birds now knew their way here and instinctively knew the way back to their rookery. He told the merchant that Daenerys was indeed the one prophesied. She was becoming the leader that he had always longed for. If Illyrio would align with her now, then he could prosper greatly.

Barristan knew the man was immensely greedy, but strangely he did worry about needless bloodshed. He had told the man that Daenerys planned to destroy the slave trade and he would support her. Some things were just more important than destiny. He would gladly follow her into the seven hells to accomplish such a noble task.

A small caravan arrived in return from Illyrio. It was filled with supplies and weapons for the fledgling Queen. He had a special package for Barristan himself to give the Queen as well. When Barristan read the provenance that was with the package, he marveled.

First, he had a gift for a certain bald eunuch. When he had first fought the former slave, he had been haughty. Then the man had disarmed him and smacked his ribs hard. He did not make that mistake again. He was able to beat the eunuch when he was lucky. He was not embarrassed again, but he found he came to like the man who was always moaning and grousing how he was starving out here
He found the huge man and brought him to the wagons, unloading two casks labeled in high Valyrian. He opened the casks and told the eunuch they were for him. The man wasted no time opening them, spying the salted mackerel and pickled locusts coated in saffron.

“Sniff sniff … Great Belwas will not forget this!” he shoved a mouthful of locusts into his mouth, chewing happily. “Ummppffff uummmmm mmppffhhh!” he moaned with pleasure, stuffing in another mouthful of locusts.

Barristan sought out Daenerys and gave her the special package from Illyrio. She read the providence, and tears were in her eyes.

She opened the smaller package first and shook out a suit of black chain mail, made from the heart of dragon bone of the mighty dragons from ancient Valyria. They were light but stronger than any forged steel. Even Valyrian blades themselves would have difficulty cutting through the rings. Only the richest of ancient princes and princesses could afford such coats of dragon bone mail. It seemed the size was a perfect fit. Destiny, Barristan thought. These gifts were so perfect, and only enhanced this woman.

She opened the second, larger package and removed first Blackfyre - the sword of her forbear Aegon the Conqueror. She looked at the scabbard. She set it aside for the even more incredible third gift. She now knew what had been erased for almost three hundred years. It was the lost sword of Rhaenys Targaryen, Foe Hammer. She stared at the runes visible on the cross guard before pulling the sword from the scabbard. Both Daenerys and Barristan’s eyes flared wide open in surprise.

“By the seven gods!” Barristan exclaimed.

The sword flared bright blue in a ghostly penumbra, with glowing blue runes alight deep in the metal. Daenerys read the new runes and gasped at what they revealed. “Barristan, pull the other blade out.” She commanded. He did.

The beautiful Valyrian steel sword was exposed, the dark metal rippling blue but not glowing. He turned the sword around, and gave Daenerys the hilt. She gripped it with her left hand.

The blade erupted in bright blue light. The room filled with a soft blue hue from the runes and filigree on the two swords.

“What is this, Barristan?” the small woman asked.

“I had thought them only legends.” The old knight answered. “I had read long ago that the conquerors of Westeros had such swords. These are rune swords. They were forged by mighty magical smiths for their owners. Only the swords original masters, or vastly powerful dragon lords can make their inner runes light up.”

He watched Daenerys work her ancient ancestors’ swords. The smaller sword fit her hand perfectly. He had not known Rhaenys Targaryen had a sword. The providence also explained why the sword had been written out of history.

Barristan shook his head. How sad for dear Rhaenys, he thought. He looked at Daenerys weaving the swords in complicated weaves and blocks. They were beautiful, as the bright blue lit the swords arcing to and fro.

Barristan thought about Daenerys herself. She was the master of her destiny. She would make a better outcome for herself than that which befell her ancestor.
Daenerys put down the larger sword and ran outside, leaping and whirling as she slashed her sword through the air. “Barristan, it is destiny. It has to be. I am destined for greatness!” the young Targaryen fired up, just like her sword.

Barristan watched her with a soft smile on his face. Yes, indeed she was. He had heard as a young man that only the mightiest of the dragon lords could fire up a Rune Sword if not the owner of the sword. The craftsman tuned the sword to its owner. Only great power could overcome this block. It was said that House Targaryen did not have such magic, they were one of the least of the houses of old Valyria. They were dragon lords, not Dragon Lords. They had often been scorned.

That was all about to change. Daenerys Targaryen was magic incarnate. I have chosen wisely indeed, Barristan thought with a smile. He would help forge greatness and annihilate wrongs.

“Yes. Yes! I will conquer my enemies and establish my order upon the world. A wise and just order. These swords prove it … my gods—the sword of Aegon and one of his wives … the time is coming for my revenge and justice … I have many debts to pay, Barristan. Are you with me, my loyal knight?” she asked, coming to a stop in front of him.

He placed his hands on her shoulders and looked down at her. “Let us forge greatness together, Daenerys Targaryen. Minstrels will write songs of your exploits that will last ten thousand years. You will bring the forces of evil low and raise up a shining new city of justice and righteousness. I stand by you, my Queen!”

“Yes! I will make a new thing. A new way—a new order! Let the gods tremble!”

Illyrio

Illyrio read again the scroll he had just received from Barristan. It had been almost a year and a half since his arrival to the sanctuary the little Dragon Queen had hidden herself away in.

When he had first received word from Barristan that he had found the girl, she had been wounded almost to the point of death. In fact, the report read she had died and came back to life. He paused at that. He was not particularly superstitious, but for Barristan to report that she had died and come back to life was important. The man was very factual. He was serious and focused to his core. He believed that this girl was touched by the gods.

If this was indeed true, and Daenerys had come back from the dead and been touched by the gods, then he needed to get on the right side of destiny.

As more reports made their way to him, they continued to confirm the girl’s progression that was almost supernatural. Her speed, agility, strength was ‘unnatural’ as reported by Barristan. Her strength of will was even greater. She was focused and iron willed. She had a destiny she felt, and she was going to achieve it. Nothing would stand against her. Her will was indomitable.

When Barristan detailed to Illyrio her plan to procure an army his jaw nearly fell off. He was even more shocked that Barristan fully supported her intention. It was insane. The odds were insurmountable, even with dragons. The girl had onions!

But even with this plan, the girl was not ready yet. She wanted to get stronger and faster still, and to that end she was training both body and mind. She was learning tactics and military philosophy. Barristan had reported that Syrio Forel had the girl doing meditation and it seemed to have opened doors within her. She could communicate with her dragons completely, needing no magical implements or scrolls. He looked over at the dragon horn he had paid a medium fortune for, sitting on his table. He rubbed his pocket, thinking of all those lost gold dragons.

Barristan believed totally that the girl would conquer and smash Slaver’s Bay, bring the Dothraki to heel, and then Westeros after. He flat out told Illyrio that he had better make sure the Free Cities were in line with her desires.

At first Illyrio had been angry. The impudence of this fallen knight and not even sixteen year old girl amazed him. He had even thought of sending in a large raiding force to smash these upstarts. But then again, he thought, what if the gods did favor her?

If she smashed Slaver’s Bay, that would be bad for business. But the reports also stated that the woman was asking for information on the geography of the land and what natural resources were present. What skills did the slaves possess? Did the rulers have any natural talents? Could any of the slave masters be turned to a new world order? What other trade existed in the regions besides the slave trade?

The girl was obviously thinking post-conquest. She had a plan. A plan required resources. Resources caused trade, and trade equaled money. From that perspective, she could be very, very good for business.

He was a man who had risen to the top following his instincts, and they were telling him that this woman was going to accomplish all she set out to do.

But still … the odds were immensely against her. He had sent her gifts to show his good will, but he would only provide basic support until she had proven herself. If she wanted to smash Slaver’s Bay, that was her choice. If she was successful, then he would give her his full backing and start laying the ground work to take Westeros. When he looked at the maps he had doubts as to her success. But, again, if she succeeded, she would emerge a huge power and he would be ready for that possibility.

He was not a superstitious man, but he trusted his senses. He had gifted the girl the swords of her original ancestors. They had fallen into his possession just before he sent Barristan out to find her. Her fool brother had visions of conquest and gold. Now, his head would always be filled with the gold he desired.

He had heard of the death of Khal Drogo, and assumed the Khaleesi was either killed or sent to Vaes Dothrak to wither away on the Mother of Mountains. Then he found out that neither had happened. The girl had indeed survived, and was moving south into the Red Waste with a small, pitiful Khalasar.

Barristan had arrived from Westeros, and he sent him to find her. And find her he had. The girl coming back from the dead was still a shock.

He needed to make a gesture to the possible future Queen. He could have sold the swords for a huge profit. The Lannisters were always whining that they should have a Valyrian sword. But in the end, he would not be risking that much, he decided. If the girl got herself killed, he would procure the swords again and sell them after.

When word came back that they were indeed Rune swords and she had lit up the runes with the force of her soul, he had been shocked. Only the very most powerful of ancient Dragon Lords of Valyria could do that. If the girl was that powerful … he had to hedge his bets. By the Iron Bank … he could make a fortune!

He knew of A Song of Ice and Fire. He too had thought it was Rhaegar that was foretold. To think it was a diminutive girl not yet sixteen that was the child of destiny was shocking. It made his head spin. He remembered meeting the girl years ago, and found her to be a trivial, small thing. She was timid and weak.

No more.

Yes. He had to prepare for the possibility of her rule.

If she was the one … gods he was going to make a lot of money.

Syrio

It was nineteen months since he had found his Queen. He was beginning to find himself worthy of serving her. He had come to kill her, and instead found his destiny. He thought back to that woman’s parlor he had drunkenly stumbled into. She had been cryptic and vague of course, as all oracles are, but she had been right. He needed to find that young woman and kiss her hand. He had found his salvation.

He was marveling again at the speed and strength of the girl as he watched her. She had her arms extended, holding a bucket in each hand filled with sand. Her arms trembled, but did not lower.

Barristan came over to him and looked at their Queen. “How long?” he asked.

“It has been almost half an hour. Neither of us could last half that long. You know she is not fully human, don’t you? We are following something more.”

Barristan sighed. Even though he had brought this up to Barristan again and again, he still needed to hear Barristan’s calming words once more.

“I don’t care Syrio. She is our destiny. We will follow her into the depths of any Stygian Hell. She has been given these gifts by the gods, the fates, destiny or whatever.” He turned to look at Syrio. “Our destiny is to decide. I choose to follow. What is your choice, Syrio?”

“I too, choose to follow.” He answered. Barristan gripped his shoulder and gave him that soft smile and walked off. He had bolstered Syrio’s courage and confidence yet again.

“That is enough, my Queen.”

“I have told you, you can call me Dany now, you know.” she said with a smile in her voice.

“I know, Daenerys.” He replied, enjoying their banter.

She went off and did wind sprints with rigorous calisthenics in between. The woman was a dynamo, still pushing herself to improve.

She had long ago mastered her meditation. Her dragons were thriving and growing at a frightening rate. Viserion was still mooning over Barristan, something everyone found endearing. He craved his attention and affectionate pats. Yet still, only Daenerys could ride them. Their cores were too hot with mystical fires burning in their bellies for anyone else to try.

Illyrio was sending some mats that were made of some magical material that would shield the heat from the body, but they had not arrived yet. They were mats only though, and the thought made him nervous. Dany rode with no stirrups or reigns. She was insane!
Her swordsmanship was extraordinary. She would never be a complete water dancer or Barristan’s equal as a knight, but if they ever got cocky, let their concentration slip or let their guard down they would feel the sting of her practice sword. Her Blood Riders had long accepted that she was their better now.

He watched her sword glow as she practiced her moves and footwork. It was almost mesmerizing.
He felt no physical attraction to the woman, but was entranced by the beauty of poetry in motion.

She had mastered the Water Dance and the way of the Broadsword. Barristan wanted to see her in a melee back in Westeros - he would enjoy watching her fight and win, shaming the men in the tourney. He was coming to be quite liberal in his views.

Hell, so was Syrio himself.

He had been shocked just a week ago. He had wanted to rouse Daenerys early, as they usually took a break during the heat of midday for an hour or two. He was full of energy and wanted to spar, and only Barristan and Dany were able to challenge him.

He was not really thinking and walked into her humble abode. Only then did he hear the sounds of loud moans and guttural groans. He was shocked by what he saw. Dany was naked on her back with Qafiqi sitting on her face, swirling her cunt down on his Queen’s face. Qafiqi’s vulva was totally engulfing the Valyrian’s pale mouth. Syrio could see her vulva bulging as Daenerys’ tongue worked up and down the Dothraki’s slit.

The small, pale woman had her arms looped over the dark brown legs of her lover, lifting her head up off the furs to bury her face deep into the Dothraki’s swollen pussy.

The older woman was crying out in ecstasy, starting to hump up and down hard. The woman’s hands snaked beneath Daenerys’ head and clutched, driving Daenerys’ face deeper into her swollen cunny. Daenerys’ face was soaked in cum with trickles running down her chin and throat. Then the woman screamed as if her body was being flailed, her body convulsing over and over.

The woman was voluptuous and her tits whiplashed with her convulsions as she wailed and jackknifed violently. She fell forward onto her palms, moaning and sobbing in raw sensual pleasure.

Still stunned, he watched Dany scoot back from between the woman’s leg and get up on her folded legs. She gripped the woman’s hips and effortlessly flipped the woman onto her back. The Dothraki woman gasped at the sudden move and show of strength. Daenerys reached down and gripped the back of the woman’s legs behind her knees. The pale woman pushed those tanned, toned legs back and then out wide, totally opening up the woman’s dripping snatch.

Daenerys’ face dove down and buried into the wet, sloppy mound and sucked in a mouthful of cunt and started to snuffle, devouring the wet quim. The Dothraki woman was already writhing and groaning loudly again in pure shocking ecstasy.

Syrio stumbled out the door and shambled away to sit in the shade. Two minutes later he heard wild screams of soul crushing ecstasy. The screams seemed to last a long time. Fifteen minutes later, a very satisfied and glowing Daenerys came out to join him. She was particularly fast and strong in their fighting session that day.

He had never really considered homosexuality before. But when he did, he quickly came to understand that it did not matter who a person loved.

He knew his immediate future. They were going to smash Slavers Bay. He was not sure how they would succeed in this, though. The audacity of what she planned to do stunned him. She would have her Khalasar back. He believed she would succeed in that. Her will was singular and totally focused now on Jhaqo and revenge. He wanted to be there when she killed the Son of a Bitch.

A dark shadow flew by. He looked up at Rhaegal as he circled down to land. The dragons were flying free range out into the Dothraki Sea to find prey. They were avoiding cities and the Khalasars in the grass seas. Daenerys wanted them to be a surprise when they appeared on the battlefield or over a city for the first time.

With her meditation she, was able to summon the dragons. Amazingly, they always appeared on the horizon within seconds of her summoning. How did they do this? Wherever they were free ranging they still appeared the moment they were summoned. They always preened and rumbled when Daenerys lavished praise on them, Viserion needing additional praise and love from Barristan or else he pouted and whined.

The dragons would enable the Targaryen’s dreams. They were a force multiplier of exponential power. The dragons were docile and loving only around Daenerys. Dany was able to calm and control the beasts with love. She had not once ever been cruel to them, and they adored her for it.

They finally began to spar. When Syrio fought her now, his arms jarred with the force of her swinging blows. He used his water dancer skills to keep her at bay with sudden thrusts and lightning fast blocks and counter-parry strokes. They fought for ten minutes, and he began to tire. Jhogo and Rakharo attacked next. She danced and slashed, keeping them off balance and on the defensive. She again and again landed what would have been fatal strikes with real hardened steel.

Once they tired, Barristan moved in and she fought him for another ten minutes. She blocked his savage strokes and counterattacked viciously. Barristan blocked and parried. It was a draw for the first nine minutes until Barristan got in a fatal strike. The Queen stomped her foot, a poor loser. Syrio knew that goaded the woman into even more training and effort in learning the ways of the blade.

She would tire, but her iron will kept her going until she got her second and third wind. She was indeed blessed by the gods.

What they were going to attempt was audacious and they may indeed fail, but gods it would be glorious.

Daenerys

Daenerys sharpened her sword with her whetstone. She enjoyed the ritual of it, and the soothing sound of stone scraping the razor sharp blade. The time to use her sword was soon coming. She stopped sharpening the blade and lifted it up, inspecting it. She started to silently weep as she stuck her tongue out of the corner of her mouth and over, looking down the blade like her sweet Kiserri had always done when looking down her dagger. The little girl would then pronounce that her blade was sharp and ready to defend her Khaleesi. Then she would snuggle in against her.

Daenerys continued to weep quietly as she reached into the pocket of her trousers and fingered the little whetstone she had given her Kiserri. Fighting to regain control of herself, she started to oil the sword of Rhaenys Targaryen. She marveled that this magnificent blade was now her own, and that her ancestor had had the same sad dilemma she did.

As she worked the oil into the steel she looked out over her city. It was now full. Another group of slaves had arrived yesterday, these from Astaphor and Meereen. Each new story of cruelty and depravity fueled the righteous anger that burned now within Daenerys Targaryen. How could men be so cruel to another human being?

She had come to think of slavery as institutional rape. Rape was part of war. It was used to break the spirit. Rape had nearly broken her will until her sweet Doreah taught her to use her body as a weapon. Doreah had called a woman’s cunt her most powerful weapon. It was not. It was a woman armed with a sword and righteousness.

A slave was raped physically and mentally. Their lives and the lives of their children twisted and ripped apart. This would not stand. She was almost ready now. She had been preparing for her destiny and it was now close at hand.

The Khal’s Khalasar had moved south following the rain. He was now in range. She had enough soldiers now to guard her base as she and thirty cavalry troops moved North. She would fly her dragons in when the attack was to commence. She had Rhaegal keeping an eye from a great distance. The Khalasar had found a large hill to camp around. He would camp there for the next several months with fresh new grasses to feed his horses. The hill gave the Khalasar line of sight across the plains and thus advance warning of any encroachment. It was a perfect defensive position.

There was an escarpment to the south. Her own forces would group there. She would move to that rise of ground and launch her attack from there. In six weeks’ time she would take her Khalasar and her place as its Khal. She was the new world order.

They were not many, but she had dragons. That would be enough.

She pulled the strange dirk she’d come back to life with out from behind her scabbard belt. She turned it over and looked at the strange runes. They were unknown to any who had looked at it. Her two mentors did not recognize them, and she had asked the slaves streaming in if they recognized them. None did.

She heard raucous barks in her mind when she fingered it. Most strange; the sound like rabid dogs. She wondered why she had it. She did not have it before her murder but she was found with it when she was rescued. Did it come from the mercenaries?

She had yet to hear any word on the location of the Golden Pride mercenary company, but one day she would. Then there would be a reckoning. She had even planned out her revenge. It would be up close and fiery. She would scream Kiserri’s name when that moment arrived.

She mollified her thirst for revenge with the carnage that Barristan, Jhogo and Syrio had visited upon the mercenaries. Many of their number were already rotting in hell. Bastards!

Her body had long healed. Her mind and soul were ready. She was not the weak girl she had been. Her body was strong now. She had become a warrior queen. She was sixteen and a woman grown. She was ready to take her destiny.

She looked out over Vaes Tolorro. It had been her home and given her succor but it was near time to leave. She would avenge herself on Khal Jhago. He started the events that took her harem and Kiserri from her. He was going to die; the bastard’s judgment was near at hand. He was a rapist. He would pay. The cities of Slaver’s Bay were all rapists on a scale almost unimaginable. She would remove them and make them pay as well. The slave trade was about to be destroyed. Permanently.

Daenerys would give her life if necessary to abolish it. She had her destiny, but the slaves deserved their destiny too. She would give it to them.

It was time to make her future.

But first she needed her army. I am coming for you Khal Jhago, Daenerys thought. I will enjoy killing you. I will take your army and conquer Slaver’s Bay. Then I am coming for you, Robert Baratheon. It is a time for reclamation.
Daenerys lay on the escarpment hidden in the ridge line, using the spy glass that Syrio had given her when he first pledged his allegiance to her. From a distance, she scanned the Dothraki Khalasar of Khal Jhaqo with the magnifying glass. It was not as acute as her dragon’s vision and was not able to change focus on the fly, but it would suffice.

The Khalasar was immense. She knew she must use shock and awe to literally swoop in and take out Jhaqo, and then kill any others who wanted to challenge. She would have her dragons sowing fire and death. The death of all potential male leadership and dragon’s flames would quickly break the Khalasar to her will. She had spent all day observing.

The Khalasar was currently at restless peace. With the spy glass she clearly saw women being raped. Her blood began to boil with repressed rage - they were women of the lamb people, captured. She felt herself thirteen again, being raped every night. Gods, she would avenge those women. She swore it!

Daenerys crawled back down the escarpment. Her forces had spent weeks trekking to arrive. Her dragons were waiting on her, ten miles away. They were anxious to deliver the same justice as their mother. She watched the horizon, waiting for her small cavalry to arrive. They would come charging in once she had dispatched the Khalasar leadership. They would help her solidify her control in the confusion sure to follow.

Then, the Khalasar would be hers. She was the Mare who would mount the world!

Near dusk her cavalry arrived, Barristan in the lead. She looked over her small band of loyal bannermen. Syrio was full of nervous energy. Strong Belwas climbed off the large Destrier he’d been riding and patted his stomach, complaining that he was starving and needed food to regain his strength. He was peaked. His horse was definitely glad to have the immense weight off of his back for a while. Her Blood Riders were also anxious to exact some of their own revenge. They had been treated most poorly when they rode off with Daenerys.

The others dismounted and prepared to make camp. They would be eating their food cold without benefit of fire this night.

Daenerys went off a short way with Barristan and Syrio. They were both very nervous about her plan to go in solo, they felt there was too many possibilities for things go wrong. They gave her many different scenarios that would likely result in failure.
She explained to them it had to be this way. “I must be the one to kill the Khal, and I must do it alone. I want the Khalasar to follow me with undivided allegiance. I must make the kill on my own; it is the Dothraki way.”

They especially did not like the idea of her taking off her dragon bone chain mail to fight Jhaqo. But like it or not, she would kill him as a Dothraki. And she was looking forward to it.

She ate a small meal and did some mediation mantras to collect her thoughts. She calmed her dragons along with her own mind. Then she rested.

She awoke a few hours before dawn. They had moved from the escarpment and found a path to guide the horses to the other face near the base. They were three miles from the edge of the Khalasar, and they would begin their charge when they saw that Daenerys had succeeded in killing Jhaqo.

She knew that Jhaqo would have to fight her one-on-one when the time came. She would kill him, and that would be that.

Her dragons had winged in low and were hopping from foot to foot. They were anxious to be off and take their mother to her destiny. She had moved to the forward face of the escarpment with her generals. Syrio and Barristan were passing the spy glass back and forth, as the light of the approaching sun began to brighten the world. They were as confident as they could be, given the circumstances. They were being so audacious that the plan almost had to succeed. They took the defile back to the other side of the escarpment.

Daenerys hugged her two generals and moved over to hug her other great warriors. She was nearly crushed by Strong Belwas. “Be careful my Khaleesi. I need for you to come back to me. I am so hungry and only you know how to prepare that special cheese and locust dish that I crave. Will you fix that for me after you have won your Khalasar?” he asked with a hopeful tone.

She patted his immense belly. “So demanding!” His eyes went downcast. “But, yes, I will make my Strong Belwas his favorite dish.” she told him. His eyes light up as he licked his lips and patted his stomach in anticipation.

Her three Blood Riders came to her. They were still upset that they could not be there to support their Khaleesi as was their right. She again reminded them that they could not ride her fiery dragons, and that she needed them coming in on horseback as her Blood Riders. They would be sung of for many generations as the Blood Riders of the Mare who mounted the world. They lit up at that and fiercely hugged their small Khaleesi.

She quickly stepped out onto open ground, and walked over to her nervously waiting dragons. They were brimming with her anxiety, and they too sought revenge on the hated Khal. Barristan and Syrio climbed up the escarpment and on to a large boulder, looking down at her.

The sun was just breaking on the horizon. It was time to go. Her dragon’s tails were lashing the ground in anticipation.

She mounted Drogon. “Valā loktyro manaerāt jaelza lua!” she shouted. Drogon, Rhaegal and Viserion lunched in the air with a mighty punching of their wings. They rose up quickly and were soon over the ridge of the escarpment, then tipped over and down to disappear as her generals rushed back to their command.

Daenerys and her dragons did not gain altitude but flew down the escarpment just over the jutting rock outcroppings, picking up speed. The dragons flashed out over the grass sea, their wings flapping hard. Daenerys felt exhilarated. As they quickly approached the Khalasar, Daenerys saw the more observant Dothraki pointing towards the approaching dragons and forces starting to mill behind them.

She flashed over the edge of the immense encampment. The Khalasar seemed to stretch from one end of the horizon to the other, it was so large. Khal Jhaqo must have acquired at least eighty-five thousand riders.

Daenerys’ dragons were only thirty feet off the ground, their wings pumping hard as the dragons reveled in their speed and the approaching combat. She spied the large hill that the higher ranking families had set up at the base. There was a large, open communal area and her dragons quickly veered toward that. She saw the hobbled horses rearing and bucking in fright.

There were screams as people ran around and quickly pulled back to the edges of the clearing when it became obvious that it was the dragons’ destination.

Daenerys had her dragons only pull up and land at the very last moment, their wings beating furiously back, causing small hurricanes. Grass, twigs and dirt flew in all directions. Once slowed, her dragons landed with graceful ease. People were gaping. Their horses screamed in terror.

Daenerys felt exalted. Her destiny was finally about to begin. She slid off of Drogon, striding forward with confidence.

She saw him then, as he stepped forward against the dying wind. His eyes were large with fear, but he still moved forward, shoulders squared. Khal Jhaqo had to face her. It did not matter that she was a woman beneath him. She was challenging him, and he had to accept. He was Khal.

He quickly recovered from the shock of her sudden appearance. Daenerys looked at Jhaqo. He was indeed a mighty man, tall and thick of chest with large, muscular arms. His legs were like tree trunks.

She would kill him easily.

“I see the little white haired slut has returned so we can rape and kill her. I knew you would come back one day; you never were fucked properly. I will enjoy tearing your asshole apart. You cunt is not worthy of my cock!”

“My, my, Jhaqo … such words.” Daenerys held up her little finger. “I’m not afraid of a worm.” she smirked, wiggling it.

“Cunt!” Jhaqo shouted, stepping forward. “You have no honor. You would fight me in chainmail, you fucking twat. You are a worthless piece of shit.”

Daenerys laughed. “I will take off my chainmail. I will kill you as a Dothraki. I am the mare that mounts the world!” she shouted.

“Fuck you. It is only your dragons that make you Khaleesi.” Jhaqo sneered. “What would happen to you if they were not here or dead, I wonder?”

Daenerys instincts suddenly pricked. Why would he say this? She mentally spoke to her children. “Dovaogédys!” she shouted to them, mind to mind. Her dragons, who had been relaxed, suddenly went tense, their bodies quivering and tails agitated.

Daenerys looked around, her head pivoting. She suddenly felt great danger that she could not place. Her dragon’s fire would blast and melt the camp to slag, with horses and men charred to ash. Yet Jhaqo looked smug.
Jhaqo began to laugh. “Fichi hrazef zinayi kishi. Fin kisha fonoki, zhey khaleesi?” How could he be so confident? Something was most certainly wrong. “Your dragons avoided the Khalasars but you were a Khaleesi and not a Khal. You do not know the finer points of how a Khalasar moves. Scouts are always out scooting out fresh water and forage for our horses. They look for new people to rape and loot. They saw your dragons. I knew you would one day come for me.”

She watched as Jhaqo lifted his hand up, and then whipped it down.

Daenerys and her three dragons were all looking right and left. The Khaleesi’s eyes bulged when suddenly the hill seemed to morph before her, and netting fell away. Her mind began screaming. The hill had scorpions lined all across it. There had to be at least forty, if not more, and they were swiveling down to aim at her dragons.

“Quptenkos!” Daenerys screamed. “Āeksiot zŷhon vaoreznon jepin!” She was suddenly filled with terror as she heard the horrible sound of the scorpions firing off a huge volley of bolts in unison. Her dragons jumped and pumped their wings furiously as they sought attitude desperately.

“Aaaaaiiiiiiiiiii!” Daenerys screamed in agony, collapsing as her left leg felt like it had been slammed through with a flaming spear. Rhaegal’s left thigh had been hit by a long scorpion bolt that sunk in several feet. He staggered, but continued to gain attitude while dripping blood. Daenerys writhed in pain, her body jerking helplessly.

She felt her body shriek in agony as two barbed bolts ripped through Drogon’s right wing, leaving two gaping holes. All of Daenerys’ body was flooded with searing, blistering agony. She squeezed her eyes shut and focused on her inner essence, centering herself.

She could feel that Viserion had gained altitude and moved off as several bolts chased him. She felt the pain in Rhaegal as he labored for distance. Drogon in his fury had gained speed and circled back in. He was flying down to come to his mother’s aid. More scorpions fired off as they were reloaded.

“AAAARRRUUNGGGGGG!” Daenerys screamed. She felt a bolt pierce clear through Drogon’s tail, halfway down the length of it. The bolt jutted out of both sides, blood welling out and running down the scaled appendage to splatter off in the slipstream of his flight. Though injured, the immense dragon still bore in to save his mother.

Daenerys bucked and writhed on the ground. She screamed as another spearhead bolt pierced Drogon’s left wing near the root. She was sobbing in pain, her body shattered along with her son’s.

“Please, please, Drogon fly off!” she whimpered to her beloved son. She sighed when he finally moved up higher out of range. His rage was hot in her body. She concentrated again, and found her inner balance and staunched some of the agony.

Slowly, very slowly, she levered her body up to her palms and then her knees. Gritting her teeth she stood up on shaky legs. Her body was flushed and on fire, and she was leaning and swaying. She was finished. Her sword was still in its scabbard on her back. She did not have the strength to reach up and pull it out.

Khal Jhaqo was laughing. “Not so mighty now, are you slut?! You are not worthy of my dick … I will have my riders rape you.” He turned to his men. “Take her. Make her bleed … fuck her to death! Violate her and then beat her!” His men eyed her with hot, hungry looks.

Daenerys felt defeat, all of her dreams dashed. Her plans had come to naught. She had not even won her first battle. She would not survive this. Her shoulders slumped.
“You will know what to do when you are in need. Remember, only once can you use it.” Suddenly, the echo of forgotten words came to her mind. Her body suddenly stiffened, and her back straightened.

“Look at the slut … she is anxious for her rape!” Jhaqo laughed.

Daenerys ripped the dirk out from behind her belt where she had placed it. She gripped it with her right hand and lifted her left hand up, slashing the blade across the back of her hand.

The cut opened up and blood welled up but did not flow down her hand. It was wide open, full of blood, but did not run.

The surrounding Dothraki stared at her strange behavior, wondering what she was trying to accomplish.

Suddenly they all heard loud, roynish barking all around the Khalasar. She saw confusion in Jhaqo’s eyes as he looked around for the source. She heard loud screams of agony as confusion started to multiply around them.

A strange animal burst into the communal area, pelting toward her on all fours. It barked as it ran. It had a tunic on, belted at the waist. It was a being! The ur-vile ran up to her. How did she know what its name was? The beast, no, her ally rose up on his hind legs.

She gaped at the ur-vile as did everyone else. The creature had a long torso and equal length limbs. Its arms and legs were proportionate, allowing it to run on all fours. The ur-vile was about five foot eight inches tall, and its skin was midnight black. The ur-vile had no eyes, and only a slit for a mouth with sharp teeth clearly visible. It had pointed ears high up on its head that twitched in all directions. Its face was dominated by a nose that covered the whole center of it. The nose had large nostrils that were surrounded by fleshy folds. The creature breathed heavily with loud sniffs. Daenerys instinctively knew the ur-vile used its sense of smell as its vision.

All this had happened within seconds. The ur-vile’s hand flashed out and held her wrist in an iron grip. Its other hand went into its tunic and pulled out a dirk that mirrored her own. The creature slashed the blade across the back of its own hand that was gripping Daenerys’. The cut opened, and black blood pooled but did not flow.

The ur-vile began to chant, and the chant was joined in all around as more ur-viles poured into the clearing from all directions. The beasts barked wildly, furiously, more of them joining in. The first ones to appear started to jump up and down on all four. Their leaps propelled them high in the air. The Dothraki backed up in confusion and rising fear.

Ur-viles started to form up behind the Loremaster, rising up on their hind legs. There was no cohesion to the group as it moved and the ur-viles barked harshly at each other. Some seemed to be arguing while others stomped around in random patterns. The Loremaster in a flash flipped his hand over and mashed his cut into Daenerys’. “FFFFFUUCKKKKKKK—UUNNGGHHHHIIIIIIIIIIIII!” Daenerys screamed, but not in agony. This was a scream of exhalation.

Power flooded into her body. Her mental wounds were no more. Her body was filled to overflowing with power and strength, and she felt like she could crush mountains.

“Form up! Form UP gods damn it!” Jhaqo yelled at his commanders as he shook off his shock. His men shook themselves from their stupor, following his lead. Warriors ran to hobbled horses and struggled with the panicked animals that stumped their hooves and turned round and round in panic delaying the Dothraki from forming up into ranks.

The Loremaster released Daenerys’ wrist. She ripped her sword out of its scabbard, the blade glowing bright blue and eager for bloodshed. She ripped it back and forth and screamed, her voice ringing across the grass sea as a rippling ring of power.

The area had filled with ur-viles. At least two hundred of them were in the communal area alone, barking and milling around. They gathered behind their Loremaster in a haphazard manner.

That changed in an instant. In the blink of an eye, the ur-viles formed up. What seemed like confusion in one second transformed into a compact wedge behind the Loremaster. The creature put away his dirk and pulled out a long iron stave with a sharpened tip. That tip glowed and rippled with a red tint.

The other creatures were slightly shorter than their Loremaster. Seemingly out of nowhere the creatures on the edge the black wedge had long blades of their own, either iron or bone. The ur-viles crouched, anxious for violence. Black ichor dripped off most while a few glowed blood-red and hissed.

Power radiated out of the wedge and from Daenerys herself. She would tear her enemies limb from limb. A phalanx of horses had formed up and now stormed towards the wedge of strange beasts thinking to shatter and then kill them.

Sixty horses charged as one.

The wedge pivoted effortlessly, the point now aimed at the hard charging phalanx. The barking rose up in pitch. The Loremaster made a slashing motion with his stave and hot, black ichor spewed out of the tip in an arc. Black acid landed on horse and rider, the substance eating deep into flesh instantly. Next bone and metal were effortlessly melted away. The screams were horrible to hear. Those that survived, continued forward. The ur-viles on that edge ripped their blades up at the last moment. Glowing hot blades chopped men and horses alike to ribbons.

Daenerys screamed in power and exhalation. She ran forward towards her mortal enemy.

Barristan

“Oh my gods.” Barristan breathed out in horror. He was staring through the spyglass he and Syrio had been sharing. They were all on the other side of the escarpment, up high enough to observe their Queen.

He went slacked-jawed when he saw the camouflage nets drop. He was even more horrified when he saw the scorpions.

He screamed in his mind. How could he have been so stupid?! He had totally underestimated his enemy. He never did that! He had assumed the Dothraki were incapable of thinking outside of their comfort zone. Their commander had foreseen dragons and came up with a brilliant counterstroke. He had doomed Daenerys with his incompetence.

Groaning in his soul, he watched the scorpions fire their first volleys. He saw a bolt strike Rhaegal in the left upper leg and even from this distance they could hear his scream of pain.

“What the hell is happening, man?!” Syrio barked at Barristan, trying half-heartedly to take the spying glass. He saw enough to know he did not really want to see. Barristan heard shock and fear multiplying in their small ranks.

Barristan looked on, aghast. He watched Drogon take several shots through his left wing. His rage screamed in the air. His view went back to his Queen. She was writhing on the ground. Oh gods—her mental link with her dragons. She was feeling their pain. He saw Drogon move back in to save his mother, and two more bolts found their target. One hit his tail, and his other wing.

Barristan saw his white haired Queen as she writhed and flipped on the ground like a fish out of water in agony. He knew it was over. He watched his Queen slowly get on her feet, swaying. She was going to fall over at any moment. She was spent.

He would charge into the Dothraki horde and give his life. He deserved his fate. He had failed his Queen. He was an abje—whatttt!?

“What the fuck is that?” he softly exhaled. Something had run out into the clearing. It ran up to Daenerys and stood before her. What the hell is that?

There were now more of these things running out into the clearing. They began to mill around, many jumping up and down in a strange macabre dance. He saw the first creature cut itself and mash his and Daenerys’ hands together, back to back. The hands wallowed into each other.

They heard Daenerys’ yell washed over them across the distance. It was not a scream of pain, but of power and hope.

He saw the strange beasts form a triangle and meet the initial charge of the Dothraki. The Dothraki were quickly annihilated.

“Syrio … you won’t believe this … Daenerys has been saved by—”

“Let me guess.” Syrio cut over Barristan. “Creatures that are all black with long torsos and strangely proportioned limbs have come to her aid. They have no eyes and huge noses with ears on the top of their head. They wear dark tunics and have iron and bone blades.” Syrio said calmly.

“How the fuck can you see that without the spy glass, Syrio?” Barristan growled, putting down the tool. He turned to look behind him. No one was looking at him, but were instead staring back up the escarpment.

It was covered in ur-viles.

The creatures ranged up the slope in a haphazard manner, all of them had started barking in a discordant fashion. The cacophony was confusing, as if all the ur-viles had something urgent to say and were barking over each other to be heard.

Some were jumping up and down. Others stood still, looking clearly at Barristan. Others were clinging to the sides of boulders with hands that had two thumbs and Barristan saw that their bare feet had a hook claw on the back that held into small cracks in the rocks. They hung off at weird angles. A few were chasing around each other in a melee of circles, barking and baying.

One disassociated itself from the melee of bodies and confidently came up to Barristan. He saw up close the fleshy mound of folds around two gaping nostrils. The ur-vile was sniffing hard, and then it extended its strange hand and gripped his arm in warrior fashion.

The message was clear. We are brothers.
“Men hear me. These crea—” suddenly a word appeared in his mind, “ur-viles have come to give us aid against our foes. Another group of these compatriots even now fight and die for our Queen. Can we do any less?

“We will leave here and fly to our Queen’s aid. This may seem like a waste of life and folly. But I choose to give my life for my Queen in her moment of need. Let the minstrels write of this ride of valor into the maul of a seemingly unmatchable foe! Let us fly to the defense of the woman who has given meaning to our lives!”

Barristan did not look back. He ran to his horse and vaulted up onto its back, then kicked his heels into its ribs. The horse reared and screamed out its war challenge and started forward. Barristan heard a loud shout from his men. Their yells and cheers were of victory, and death to the Queen’s foes.

Suddenly, to his right and left the ur-viles vaulted past him, sprinting between the boulders effortlessly or hopping from boulder to boulder with never a doubt of their balance. The beasts pelted past Barristan, all the while barking furiously.

Then he was out on the open plain. They had three miles to ride to reach their Queen. The last of the ur-viles sped past Barristan. He wheeled his horse around several times as his forces came flowing out of the small defile and into the plain with him. He turned his war horse around and sped after the ur-viles who continued to bark fiercely.

The Khaleesi’s Blood Riders were instantly at his side. They were bred and born to be cavalry and effortlessly kept up with Barristan. They looked at him with fierce joy in their eyes. The love of combat coupled with a thirst for revenge at their treatment fired up their souls like nothing else.

The Loremaster slowed and Barristan came up beside him, his horse in a full gallop. The ur-vile suddenly jumped up and landed behind Barristan on his horse. Impossibly the creature was able to keep its balance on his horse’s wildly flexing and jerking haunches. The creature looked forward and then behind at the riders as they whipped their horses to urge them forward.

For the next two miles the ur-vile rode silently, standing up on the back of the horse. Barristan heard it humming a discordant chant. He felt power flowing out the ur-vile and into his horse and the other horses and they did not tire during their breakneck race to their Queen’s aid.

They were half mile from the edge of Khalasar now. The Loremaster produced a long iron stave with a sharpened tip even as it was wildly jostled by the galloping horse beneath it. It barked loudly and the ur-viles that were several hundred yards in front of the riders heard their Loremaster. The creatures suddenly slowed and stood up on two feet.

The Loremaster jumped off Barristan’s horse’s back and landed hard, rolling to its feet and running to get at the front of the milling and barking ur-viles.

Barristan watched up close, his mouth hanging when he saw how the creatures went from one moment a confused roiling mass of individuals to the next where they were formed up into a tight-knit wedge of over two hundred. The Loremaster was at the apex, and on each side blades of iron and bone appeared. The blades were rippling with dire power.

Power that was allied to himself and his Queen.

“Attack! To our Queen!” Barristan yelled to the ur-viles and his men following close behind.

He spied a ragtag group of Dothraki riding out to meet them. They had not had time to organize, but still rushed out to meet the threat.
The Loremaster whipped its iron stave right and left. Long ribbons of eldritch acid flew out, finding horse and rider and immediately ate through leather, flesh and bone as if it was butter. Those that avoided the splashes of acid were savagely chopped in two or ragged quarters by the flashing blades of the ur-viles as the Dothraki tried to breach their wedge.

The screams of the dying were loud and shrill. Then the wedge slammed into the edge of the Khalasar. Tents and small grass structures were flattened and trampled with the rapid advance of the ur-vile wedge cutting ever deeper into the Khalasar.

Barristan had a passing sorrow for the innocent women and children caught in this parade of death. His own forces were still trying to catch up to the impossibly fast moving, magical creatures.

Then he received another shock. Behind the passing wedge he saw women, children and babies appear. Their habitats had been utterly crushed and trampled but the innocents were being spared. They were spread out on the ground, starting to push themselves up. Dazed, confused and disheveled but alive. How? How could these ur-viles move so fast and over the innocent and yet spare them? Just what had they allied themselves with?

“Stay to their flank. Let them shatter the charges and we will protect their flanks.” A group of spearmen rushed forward and hurled their spears at the wedge. The Loremaster burned and broke most, and the rest of the ur-viles slashed the others down. Only a few managed to land in the wedge. Barristan saw a dead ur-vile with a spear through its throat as the formation moved forward.

They could be killed.

Now he was slashing and jabbing with his sword raining death in all directions. The Dothraki had no discipline in their attacks; they were savage and mighty but unskilled.

He saw one of his men about to be chopped with an Arakh when an ur-vile jutted out the bloody red tip of its bone stave and fiery red ichor enveloped the Dothraki rider and horse in searing red flame. The screams of their dying was hideous.

“Stay close to the wedge! Let us protect each other! Spread the word!” Barristan whirled his horse around and chopped down riders, cut horses throats and split their heads open.

He saw Syrio Forel’s rapier move faster than light, slashing open bellies and spilling intestines or piercing hearts and brains with the tip. Other warriors chopped savagely. He saw Rohar Archyr go down, pierced by an arakh chop and two arrows jutting out his chest. Barristan roared, surging forward and beheaded the Dothraki rider.

Arrows were flying wildly. Some of his own warriors were accomplished bowmen and they shot death back out in return. The ur-viles were burning many of the arrows out of the sky with a red glow that began emanating out from the wedge.

Barristan saw that Strong Belwas had dismounted. He was far too large to be effective on horseback. His destrier fought loyally by his side, trampling unhorsed Dothraki and slamming into other horses, knocking them off their track. Belwas’ scimitar was slashing men and their beasts down in fountains of blood and gore.

The wedge staggered. A huge phalanx of Dothraki horses slammed into the apex and far side of the formation. The Loremaster killed many with his acid and others were gutted and slashed apart with blades of iron and bone yet still the Dothraki charged, their numbers too great to be halted. Furious barks of ur-viles and shouts of men filled the air. The wedge held and bent, the point moving around. Now the Loremaster was in the midst of the charge, his iron stave sending out splashes and long arcs of black acid death. Dothraki fell in great numbers around the shrilly barking Loremaster.

Syrio, Barristan and ten others slammed into the Dothraki’s horses from the side. Their mounts reared to bash in men and horse skulls as swordsmen chopped and hacked. The wedge surged forward, killing the rest and proceeding into a group of bowmen firing arrows. As they moved onward, several more ur-viles fell.

Daenerys

She felt like a god as she vaulted forward. Her arms were filled with unbridled power. She could crush boulders.

She crashed into the nearest Dothraki in a flash. Her blade whirled in a swirl so fast it was invisible to the naked eye, her strength so great she chopped the man clean in half. She wildly charged the next men in her path as they attempted to stand their ground. Her Valryian blade slashed through spines and femurs like balsa wood. She killed easily with her blade moving so fast it was a blur.

She was killing machine. She moved to the next man her blade chopped off the man’s Dothraki’s sword arm before she sliced his head in half like an overripe pear.

Her shouts of exhalation reverberated across the grass sea. When riders approached her at wild gallop she easily avoided them, jumping up to sever heads and split bodies apart with her immense strength easily pulling her blade from bone. She saw that the ur-viles were battling toward the hill to take out the dreaded scorpions.

She saw some of those siege weapons start to point down at the new barking threat. Viserion flew down and roared, spewing flame but was too high to deal flaming death. All of the scorpions were again wheeled skyward.

She watched several waves of mounted horses charge into the fighting wedge. The first wave was largely reduced to screaming death by the long ribbons of jet black acid arching through the air and splashing through the riders. Where the acid landed, flesh and bones were reduced to slag. Horses simply folded with ruined ribs, spines, or missing heads.

But the Dothraki were nothing if not brave. The second wave was only partially annihilated by the Loremaster and raggedly crashed into the wedge. The other ur-viles blades slashed up, slicing horses wide open and looping heads off necks. Some plashed red or black ichor out from their blade tips igniting horse and rider in clinging flames that refused to be doused.

Dust was rising up from the trampled dirt. The dust stung eyes and obscured the battlefield. She charged forward seeking Jhaqo to kill him and end this battle. Fuck honor! She would chop him in half. He had run up the hill and was shouting at his scorpion operators. The weapons were turned towards the ground. They ignored the white dragon that screamed overhead in frustration and righteous anger.

In their haste, most of the bolts shot off to hit dirt but two landed in the formation killing an ur-vile. She was enraged. She started to charge toward the hill but a volley of arrows came at her. Several hit her chainmail, bruising but not stopping her. Another hit her mail just above her wrist and one whistled past her eye.

Foolishness! I can be killed out here alone! She had run off from her protectors in her overconfidence and blood lust. She saw more arrows being fired at her. She blocked them with her flashing sword, her coordination supernaturally enhanced.

She wheeled around, crouching down and chopping the legs out from underneath two horses that had charged her. She quickly dispatched the riders as they lie trapped underneath their dead mounts. She moved on into the next mounted charge, chopping horses down and severing riders’ legs as she moved past the onslaught. The surviving riders wheeled, but she was on them moving in a blur with fast slashes of her blade.

She observed the ur-viles stilling their attack and taking out the bolts as they flew towards them at the last instant with precise arcs of acid that slashed bolts in half. All momentum had stopped. Riders were gathering for another massive charge.

A loud roar filled the sky. Viserion dove down with his wings pulled in tight to his body and shot past, roaring out flame. His fire found two scorpions and set them ablaze. Men were reduced to screaming corpses as the wood ignited, the iron bands already glowing cherry red. Viserion slashed back across the sky from the other direction, sending out another mighty gout of flame to destroy a third scorpion.

The scorpion operators desperately worked their launchers to align them skyward. A black shadow of death flew past a dizzying speed. Drogon’s mighty breath of fire destroyed another scorpion and engulfed many archers that had climbed the side of the hill to fire down on the melee. The dragons went up high in the sky with the remaining, still numerous scorpions, wheeled back up to the sky to aim at the roaring and dodging dragons. The dragons staying just out of range frustrating the scorpion operators. The dragons taunted the operators to keep the focus on them and not their mother and her allies.

Dust and ash obscured the dragons as they wheeled and circled just of range of the frustrated scorpion operators. Thick, acrid smoke rose up into the air. Daenerys noticed more dust and smoke from south-east and knew that Barristan and Syrio had joined the fray. She could only hope they were still alive.

“Hhhnnnggggggggggg!” Daenerys exclaimed as suddenly all air was punched out her lungs. Two spears had hurled into her back and flattened her to the ground. The spears fell away afterward, her Dragon Chain mail preventing any penetration, barely. She felt links jammed through linen and jammed into her skin. Her eldritch strength instantly healed her.

She sprang up and dodged another spear that nearly went through her throat. She jerked and dived as arrows whizzed past. She saw a large phalanx of gathered horses now forming up. To her left were spearmen and to her right was a forming line of bowmen.

She could only defend one direction. She had let her confidence betray her. No plan survives first contact with one’s enemy! She had doomed herself again. She wanted to scream but calmed herself, deciding to take as many of her enemies down to hell with her as she could. Arrows were fired and she dodged most but three hit her hard in the chest knocking her back. She gasped for breath. A spear hit spun her around. She got up immediately.

She could feel her exhalation holding but she knew it would end. She had killed scores if not several hundred of her Dothraki foes but it did not matter. She could not fight a Khalasar without her dragons’ full support. The spearmen raised their spears in unison. She could see mounted horses were going to follow the spears in and overwhelm her.

A long line of acid splashed into the line of spearmen, killing most in howling agony. The fighting wedge slammed into those that remained. The Loremaster charged the mounted horsemen, spewing out gouts of acid killing horses and riders in boiling black. The wedge slammed into the survivors, cutting them savagely and spewing out small gusts of acid and sticky flame.

The ur-viles had given up their attack on the hill to save Daenerys.

A line unseen of spearmen charged forward unexpectedly. The ur-viles, though surprised, chopped most of the charging men down.

Daenerys fell on them with savage fury from the side. She slashed and chopped men in half in her rage and cleaved limbs and heads.

Her dragons were diving and weaving, keeping the scorpions trained on them. Blood slicked the churned up ground and severed body parts nearly tripped her. The smoke of fire and acid hung thick in the air.

The battle had ignited many of the closest tents and lodgings on fire. These flames were spreading, adding more smoke and confusion to the field of battle.

Suddenly, the Loremaster was before her. He barked at her fiercely, his fleshy nostrils quivering and snot splattering.

She nodded her head. The meaning was clear. Stay the fuck with me dammit!

Daenerys had learned her lesson.

Syrio

To the right and to the left Syrio slashed and pierced hearts with his rapier. He had never seen anything like this. He was used to fighting one-on-one or small groups. There were thousands of men milling around, and that was not counting the women and children running around screaming.

The ur-viles were burning wagons full of supplies and destroying domiciles. They knew the ones that were inhabited. They used acid to set empty ones on fire and simply bowled over the ones with inhabitants inside. Somehow the children and women were rolled over yet left otherwise unharmed behind the quick marching formation. It was fucking amazing!

Six Dothraki surrounded him and he dodged and ducked their arakhs whistling past his face and ribs. He could not focus enough to kill anyone as he focused on simply surviving. Suddenly three fell dead with arrows in their throats. He saw Marleya Blackmyre near the wedge shooting her bow. She bent down and scooped up quivers from the dead Dothraki to keep firing. He quickly dispatched the three remaining riders.

“Fuck!” he yelled, feeling an arrow brush his ear. Blood dripped down the side of his face and he saw a huge charge of Dothraki pelting toward them.

“Fall back, fall back!” Barristan yelled as the ur-vile wedge pivoted to meet the charge and surged forward. A huge arc of black acid was flung in the air and with unerring accuracy fell along the forward line of the horse charge. Horses and riders dropped dead, tripping the riders coming up behind them.

A shock rippled the ground as Dothraki riders and ur-viles collided. Riders died with their bodies coated in clinging fire or burning acid. Ur-vile blades chopped through muscle and bone like it was paper. But the rush was great enough to stagger their formation. Ur-viles fell but the breach instantly sealed as the next ur-viles waiting in the wings stepped up with blades at the ready.
Barristan and three warriors slammed into the Dothraki and killed five before they could wheel about. More died, but so did one of their own.

Syrio screamed and joined the fray. His rapier ripped through backs and cut spines in two. The ur-vile Loremaster sent out a surge of acid melting the last of the Dothraki and surged forward. Arrows were raining down on the ur-viles and they threw up a red weave that shimmered and burned most of them. Those that did not burn slipped through with a few finding their targets.

He felt a surge of black acid rush past his shoulder, incinerating a rider who had snuck up on him in the confusion.

Another throng of Dothraki charged him. He slew the first two but his horse was pressed back and the other Dothraki spread out to surround him. He slashed right and left to keep them at bay, but they were pressing in.

Suddenly on his right he saw two arakhs slash into and through his assailants. Aggo and Jhogo wound in among their Dothraki foes, spinning as their blades slashed and chopped deeply into muscled bodies. The blades ripped out just to slash again.

Syrio used the distraction in that sector to turn and quickly dispatch the assailants on his other side. He was soon joined by the two Blood Riders to finish killing the remaining Dothraki. Then the Blood Riders spurred their horses, riding off to find more kills.

His horse shrieked and wheeled when a long line of fire appeared in front of him. A second line of incendiary flame followed that ignited grass, structures, men and horses in blue white fire. The screams were hideous as horses and men seemed to melt and burn before his eyes.

The smoke and acrid stench of burning flesh was thick in the air. The dragons made another pass, thinning the ranks of the enemy. The dragons took out their vengeance beyond the range of the scorpions. The ur-viles barked wildly and surged into the breach created by the dragons, now wheeling and gaining attitude.

Syrio slashed right and then chased down two riders fleeing in panic killing them with two flicks of his blade.

The whole area was a mass of confusion. The ur-viles were working furiously to join their brethren fighting with the queen. Another two phalanxes formed and charged into them. He fell back with his fellow dwindling warriors. The Loremaster pivoted to the right and met the charge, his acid arcing out in three ribbons. That phalanx was cut apart and the wedge surged forward, their blades slashing furiously.

The second rush was able to hit the other side of the wedge hard. The formation sagged in, but held. Ur-viles fell and were trampled but their brothers filled in the gap instantly, their blades out and slashing death. Their human warriors fell on the Dothraki who were concentrating on the greater threat.

The next several minutes was only confusion to Syrio. He was surrounded by Dothraki and he was prepared to die. Then he was suddenly surrounded by barking and buffeting black foreign bodies as he was enveloped by the protective wedge. He felt ancient, arcane magic surging back and forth between the ur-viles. Their magic was old and powerful. They were working in perfect concert, supporting each other and combining themselves and their magic to make them so much more than their few numbers compared to the sea they were fighting against.

Then Syrio was out on the other side of the wedge. A few dead ur-viles spewed out black blood along with forty or fifty dead Dothraki and their horses as the wedge moved on. The two dead ur-viles were left behind.

Syrio now knew that each loss weakened the wedge from his close association passing through it. But their numbers were still enough to keep the formation intact. For now.

He kicked his horse and charged forth. He saw Strong Belwas, surrounded by dead horses and Dothraki. The wall of dead kept attackers from overwhelming him. He was about to be feathered by a group of Dothraki Archers. He cut the first three down before they even knew he was there. In the confusion he killed several more. Somehow Belwas had climbed over his barricade of dead and smashed into the horses, cutting their legs out from under them and spilling riders right and left.

Syrio trampled them with his horse and cut a few more throats as his horse whipped around.

He looked and saw the dragons circling the hill. They had learned the range of the scorpions now and flew just out of it, keeping their attention. He saw Viserion rise up and then dive down, his wings folded close to his body to reduce his target and streaking down low over the hill, his hot blue-white fire burning another scorpion to slag and charred timber. He flew out the lessening hail of bolts. The dragons had whittled the numbers down.

Smoke was boiling up around the hill. He realized with a rush of adrenaline that they were much closer now. They were making progress!

Smoke was everywhere and he coughed, his eyes burning. He saw women weeping as they staggered around in panic. The Dothraki trampled them with no regard. It infuriated him. Their own riders were killing their women and children while these inhuman ur-viles had killed none.

The ur-viles burned more supplies and a line of wagons as they blazed up in eldritch fire. They were throwing out acid and slashing blades, dispensing death in all directions. They still always avoided killing the women and children. Unlike the Dothraki warriors.

Syrio roared, throwing himself at Dothraki riders and killing them in a fury of hate.

Daenerys

The ur-vile wedge was surging forward in short bursts. They had taken losses with a line of dead behind them but they were nearing the base of the hill now. Their losses were dwarfed by the mounds of dead Dothraki stretched out behind the formation.

The ur-viles had set fire to the large pile of supplies and plunder that came across. They had come across a group of lamb women weeping and huddling together. Daenerys cried out when the wedge washed over the huddled women. She was infuriated. She was here to save the helpless, dammit!

Her mouth gaped open when the wedge moved on and the women were sprawled out on the ground, slowly sitting up in shock. How did the ur-viles do that?!

They finally reached the hill. She could feel her exhalation fading. It had served her well; she had survived her baptism of fire. She had made mistakes but she was alive! The ur-viles started to climb up the hill, still keeping their wedge intact.

The closest scorpion went up in flames. Volleys of arrows came whistling down and a huge wall of riders were pelting down on the formation from behind.
Daenerys jumped in front of the riders. Her eldritch strength was going to end, but not quite yet. She was a whirling dervish of death. Her blade chopped horse and men alike apart. She broke the initial charge. The ur-viles on the back end of the wedge were ready, and their blades reached out to chop and thrust out pure death.

The horses slammed into the wedge. It held even as more Dothraki and ur-vile fell in death. She was slashing her sword right and left, taking down riders lessening the force of the pressing rush.

She heard the barking grow louder and looked up, more of the scorpions had gone up in flames. Suddenly her black and white dragons flew through at breakneck speed, spewing fire up and over the hill igniting more siege weapons on fire. Archers and scorpion operators ran alight screaming as they fell into death.

“Yessssss!” Daenerys screamed in triumph. She chopped and slashed, killing more Dothraki. The ur-viles fell back, their mission accomplished. The dragons wheeled in again and most of the rest of the scorpions went up in flames, the iron melting and timbers burning wildly.

Smoke was everywhere. She climbed up the hill. Her exhalation was failing now, but she used what was left to move up deftly and surely slicing down archers and surviving scorpion operators. She was removing the advantage of height.

She looked out and was filled with fire and hope. She saw another wedge of ur-viles surrounded by the remnants of her warriors. She was elated to see Barristan and Syrio on horse and chopping and piercing Dothraki dead. Strong Belwas was near the ur-vile wedge dispensing death with each slice of his sword. Her Blood Riders whirled and slashed on all sides of them as they helped protect the right side of the ur-vile formation.

The ur-vile wedge had left a wide trail of devastation. All structures in that path had been burned or crushed or both. She could see where the Loremaster had sent out long arcs of black acid to attack other stores of food and wares. She looked around and saw long lines of fiery destruction around the Khalasar. Her dragons had served her and her allies well. The lines seemed random, but she knew that they were put down to sow confusion and keep the Dothraki from organizing.

The other wedge and her warriors were chopping and surging forward. She could see that they would soon link up. It would not be enough. She looked out along the swath of devastation left by the ur-vile wedge with Barristan. She could count over fifty dead ur-viles and was sure she had missed some in the carnage of war. She knew her own benefactors had taken grievous losses.

Her warriors had given out many times the death that they had received. She looked out around the communal area and the path that the other ur-vile formation had cut through to reach her. She could see a sea of dead horses and Dothraki. Her forces had killed at least five or six thousand so far.

It was not nearly enough. The Khal had a sea of at least near eighty thousand warriors left to wage war against her forces. That still left the odds at over two hundred to one. She had to put an end to the fighting. Her forces were still killing at a horrific rate as she watched horses and riders burned to ash or bone and blades chopping Dothraki down like limbs from a pruning shears.

Another charge boiled toward the ur-viles as Daenerys watched. Somehow the wedge reversed itself and the Loremaster who had been on the hill finishing off the destruction of the scorpions was at the apex of it, facing the charging horses. Again the shock was frightening to see and feel as ur-vile formation and horses collided.

The Dothraki were butchered in horrific numbers but their bravery was rewarded as they pressed in and were able to kill two ur-viles. Each loss reduced yet again the size of their wedge and fighting Drogon had retreated from the fighting around the center of the Khalasar. Rhaegal was nearly prostrate on the ground four miles from the edge of the Khalasar, his injury having sapped his strength. A group of Dothraki were galloping towards Rhaegal’s location, intent on killing him.

Daenerys was about to shout a mental command to Drogon, but he was ahead of his mother in coming to the aid of his injured brother.

The Dothraki never knew what hit them as she watched her black son’s body coil and then stretch out as a mighty blast of dragon fire flew out of his mouth and incinerated the Dothraki and their mounts as blood boiled and muscles were charred and then turned to ash. The screams were hideous, but Daenerys felt nothing. They were trying to harm her children.

Khal Jhago had much to answer for.

She looked around and found what she sought. She felt elation and fury erupt in her small body. “Yooouuuuuuu!” she shouted in a loud scream of righteousness and jumped down off the hill.

Barristan

The fighting was never ending. The ur-viles were taking the brunt of the attacks but his own forces were suffering grievously. He had lost over half of his valiant fighters. For every one of their losses they inflicted well over thirty he was sure.

It would not be enough. It was like a mighty cliff up against the surging ocean on the coast. Each pounding of the next wave eroded it just that little bit more. In time the ocean would win. They were lost in the Dothraki sea of warriors.

Still he fought on. He slashed and hacked down rider after rider. These men were fearless in battle. They hurled themselves against the black wedge of death relentlessly. Their losses were grievous, but still they pressed their attacks. When an ur-vile fell there were no more to take their place where ten or more Dothraki came up to fight in the place of their fallen brethren.

The attack of the ur-viles had been always moving forward leaving a wake of destruction behind them of mangled and acid eaten bodies. Shelters burned to the ground and wagon trains set alight. Goats and sheep were butchered to deprive the Dothraki of future food and the remaining panicked animals running around wildly adding to the confusion.

Now the wedge had ceased its forward movement. To be still was courting certain death. He kicked his horse racing to the apex of the wedge. There he saw the wedge and indeed ceased movement. The Loremaster was sniffing hard. Barristan looked forward and tried to discern what had stopped the ur-viles rapid forward attack.

It took him fifteen seconds to realize what had gripped the ur-viles and caused them to stop. Now they had started a chant that had changed pitch and timbre from their earlier vocals. It became a rolling melody that rose and fell from front to back and then back again like waves crashing on the ocean shore. The ur-viles began to jump and down making their fighting wedge appear like a rolling wave.

The Dothraki were adapting their attack. They had been slaughtered in their piecemeal attacks. The individuals and small formations had been obliterated. They had given the ur-viles losses but they were few and far between.

The Dothraki were massing a huge formation of riders lined up in repeated rows in front to the ur-vile wedge. Barristan saw they were amassing thousands of riders and now men with spears were forming up behind them. It was clear their intent.

He had to admire their courage. They were going to move in mass forward and envelope the ur-vile wedge. The leading riders would surely die but their deaths while grievous in number would allow their brothers behind them to come into contact with the ur-vile wedge and use their weapons up close.

They and Barristan had seen the Loremaster use his stave to hurl his acid but it had become clear that after a large arc he needed close from three to five seconds to ready the next large slash of acid to throw at his enemies as he tired. They would be able to kill him between splashes as they overwhelmed his brothers protecting him as he readied his next arc of death.

A purple haze had started to waft up over the ur-viles. The mist reached up several hundred feet but did not rise any further or disperse. The ur-viles bodies were still jumping in a rhythmic manner making the wedge front to back ripple over and over.

Barristan looked behind them. Movement had prevented the Dothraki from forming an attack from the rear. Those behind them were still in shock and dealing with confused women, children and animals in their way. Fires burning out of control sending up flames to panic horses and throw riders.

He knew the wedge had to start moving very soon or they would be butchered. He saw a young Dothraki surge his horse forward and stormed toward the ur-viles. Several arrows whizzed out but they missed. The Dothraki youth threw a spear and it landed!

The ur-viles did not burn or knock it down as they had been doing. Why! He thought furiously. An arrow from Marleya pierced the boy’s skull and jammed through his brain the point jamming into the other side of his skull the force hurling him off his horse. His body jerked on the ground in its death throes.

Then Barristan shouted out “Defend the ur-viles! They are preparing something but they are defenseless until then!” He moved out and engaged a Dothraki preparing to hurl a spear at the wedge. Barristan’s blade hit the man in the ribs just as he prepared to fling his spear. His sword cleaved deep into his body. Blood spewed out the man’s mouth and gushed out the gaping wound when Barristan ripped his blade out.

He wielded around. A thick purple haze now filled the sky over the wedge. He saw the blood riders of Daenerys, Syrio and four of his men rush from the other side of the ur-vile wedge launching into the Dothraki to prevent them from attacking.

General confusion kept the Dothraki from organizing any more to finish them off their tormentors. He knew that that the reprieve could not last much longer. More Dothraki were getting their courage up and coming forward. Many were feathered and others engaged but several more spears were hurled and found ur-vile spitting them as they could not defend themselves as they chanted and jumped.

Barristan looked behind them. A force was forming up behind them. No! They were about to completely out flanked and attacked on two sides. The ur-viles had to act!

Suddenly two long tongues of flame lashed over the riders behind them. Drogon and Viserion belched long rivers of flame onto the riders behind them as they flew over at dizzying speed.
Barristan still was shocked seeing how the flames melted men to slag and horses ran off screaming enveloped in flame that soon had horses and riders if still on them running wildly. The horses would run only to fall to their knees screaming and wildly flipping around on the ground the flames still burning hotly.

The dragons roared loud bellowing screams of rage and violence. The sounds were deafening and sowed confusion. The echoing dragon roars prolonged the rebel’s lifespan as horses of the Dothraki screamed in panic and many bucked riders who had to fight to stay seated.

Barristan watched the dragons soar up and pivot over and dive back down again sending out long tongues of flame to send rivers of death down among the milling around Dothraki. Their fires roasting men alive and sending horses crashing over as meat bubbled off bone. More dragon screams of rage filled the air.

Thick smoke roils of smoke drifted over all. The stench of roasted flesh and death was thick on the air currents.

Barristan looked forward as the dragons flew off having cut off the rear attack and were now menacing the hill again. Barristan was impressed with Drogon’s strength and endurance with the iron spike still embedded in his whipping tail. It seemed to only fuel his rage at his enemies.

There was a thick purple haze over the ur-vile wedge now that did not drift. The haze had settled down to only a hundred feet over their heads. Arrows and spears that pierced the haze did not come out again. The ur-viles were now barking furiously their waves of bobbing surged like wild waves in a storm tossed sea.

Then without warning all their staves of iron and bone whipped up and haphazardly slammed into each other in random manner blades colliding into each other and rebounding.

KKKAAAABBBOOOOMMMMMMMMMM! A mighty clap of shocking power detonated and where there had been mist was a black cloud five hundred yards across that now floated two hundred feet over the ground again. The cloud was as jet black as its ur-vile creators. Purple lightening flashed silently throughout the roiling cloud that seemed to seethe with madness and hunger for great violence. There were no rolls of thunder with the purple lightening.

All the humans in the vicinity stared at the boiling cloud that quickly drifted forward to come over the massed Dothraki in front of the ur-viles. The cloud seethed and the purple light inside of the cloud flashed with hints of death and rot. It appeared to Barristan like he was looking in an open door to a sepulcher.

The cloud roiled and seethed over the gathered Dothraki and did not move any further. The ur-viles suddenly ceased their barking chant and rhythmic bobbing of their wedge.

Silently, the black cloud started to snow black flakes down that drifted aimlessly down towards the Dothraki below. More and more flakes precipitated out the black cloud that still flashed with purple lightening in its depths. The flakes spun and flipped over as they wafted down flitting like butterflies as they fell to Earth. More and more flakes rained out of cloud and wafted down over the large formation of gathered Dothraki. The flaks spinning down and now wafting back behind the mass of Dothraki too even though there was no wind.

All the men friend and foe watched. The ur-viles too seemed to be watching their creation of black snowflakes drifted down in thick profusion of sizes and shapes. Some of the flakes as large as swallowtail butterflies and others small as Summer Azure butterflies.
Barristan watched a flake fall down and onto the face of a Dothraki with at least twenty bells in his hair. The flake landed on his cheek beneath his eyes. “Aaaaaaaiiiiddiiiiiiiiiiieeeeee!” the man screamed as the flake melted his skin and bone and that side of his face away melted away. Another smaller flake hit his left shoulder eating bone and muscle as the man screamed more and louder.

The flakes were now landing all over the formation of Dothraki now eating horse and man up with black flakes of ur-vile distilled acid. Horses were screaming and rearing in agony as block holes were eaten into bodies. One horse reared and dislodged his rider his left ribs exposed and lungs being eaten fell dead as a several flakes hit its head and eye and brain were eaten away.

The formation was being torn apart as more and more men and horses either fell down dead immediately or collapsed writhing as bodies and heads were eaten through by small acid flakes.

The Loremaster barked a tinny yelp and the ur-viles surged forward running gathering speed and slamming into the roiling dying mass of Dothraki. Their blades chopped down those remaining standing down in mere seconds. The ur-viles cut into the rolling mass of men and horses as more and more died with holes all over bodies of black death eating craters clean through bodies.

The acid had no effect on the ur-viles as each flake that hit them turned to liquid and rolled down their skin and soaked into her tunics without affect.

The ur-vile wedge pivoted round the Loremaster their staves and hacking and sending out short guts of black or red death. The Loremaster again sent out his ribbons of grisly black acid death.

By the gods Barristan gaped. They were butchering thousands of Dothrakis in mere minutes. The wedge now surged forward again. The cloud had started to dissipate as it rained its acid out onto the enemies of the ur-viles.

Barristan was horrified at the increased carnage. What if these fell denizens of the deep every allied with the Queen’s enemies. They would be unstoppable. Outnumbered by the thousands the ur-viles were still impossibly successful. They were suffering losses but still they charged recklessly into their enemies killing them by the score.

His remaining forces were fighting small individual battles. The Dothraki in this part of the Khalasar were in shock. The snow was dissipating. It had done its work with brutal efficiency. Barristan saw that at least three thousand Dothraki had perished in the last few minutes.

Barristan heard mighty Drogon’s roar as he spun around the hill up high keeping their attention. Barristan had thought no power could truly stand up to a dragon one on one. He know knew of one creature that could kill a dragon as likely as the dragon killing it. These ur-viles and their fighting wedges were simply horrific in action. For a dragon to use its flame it would have to come in range of the Loremaster’s acid.

Thank the gods they were both on the Queen’s side!

“Forward! The acid rain dissipates and is no more. To the ur-viles side. Protect our allies!” Barristan roared and his troops immediately obeyed moving forward on their horses or stolen horses. Only Strong Belwas was on foot and his speed was truly amazing.

All moved forward to aid their black skinned brothers in arms. Barristan felt the surge of battle lust run in his veins. He would defend his Queen to his dying breath!

Barristan did not let helpless odds stop him. His Queen had need of him and so he fought on. He fought entirely on instinct. This allowed him to reflect on all that had happened. He and his Queen had underestimated their enemies. They had assumed they would react like they always had. They did not give them credit for being able to adapt and do the unexpected. They did not have a monopoly on clever thinking. If they survived today, they would not make these mistakes again.

Thank the gods for the ur-viles coming to the Queen’s aid at just the right moment.

Barristan noticed that Strong Belwas had been surrounded by riders. He was slashing and wheeling around but he was hopelessly outnumbered. He was covered in nicks and cuts. He spurred his destrier forward at a fast gallop and crashed into the nearest riders, unseating some and gutting others. Strong Belwas dispatched the unseated riders with a single slash each.

They were constantly pushing forward. The ur-viles were a killing machine but were also still spewing acid at any structure that had no women or children, which were most now since they had fled. He assumed their acute sense of smell enabled their decrement. Large quantities of supplies and looted wealth were being destroyed.

The Dothraki were torn between a desire to attack their assailants and wanting to save their supplies and stolen loot.

He heard a strange echoing of the ur-viles’ barks now. It seemed some were close, and some were much more distant. He wondered if this was the beginning of a new spell being chanted. He continued to kill, almost running on automatic. His arm was weary but he concentrated past his fatigue. To slow even a fraction would mean his death.

Several lines of spearmen had formed and desperately threw their spears at the ur-viles. Most were chopped or melted in acid from the air, but some still found their marks. The ur-viles were like the Dothraki in one way - they fought on regardless of their grievous losses.

The chants of the ur-viles picked up cadence and they suddenly rushed forward, their blades slashing as they plunged into the walls of spearmen. Dothraki died in great numbers as arakhs came out and the sound of blades clashing rang in the air. The ur-viles butchered the Dothraki even as more of their own fell.

The ur-viles continued to bark and the answering barks were much closer now. Barristan suddenly understood. He had kicked his horse to join the ur-vile rush.

Suddenly, the wedge burst into the clearing before the hill. Barristan was used to carnage but the scale and savagery of the fighting here had been truly frightening. Dead Dothraki and their horses were thickly scattered on the ground and up the hill. There was a more than a light sprinkling of dead ur-vile scattered around the clearing as well.

No quarter had been asked for and none was given.

He saw a wall trying to form up to charge at the ur-vile wedge that had been supporting Daenerys.
He could see that well more than half their numbers had already been slayed. They were still a savage, deadly force slashing and splashing out acid to kill all around them.

He saw Syrio and four warriors riding their horses hard to attack the wall from behind. Strong Belwas was running with surprising speed for a man so large. He simply bowled into the nearest horses sending them crashing into their mates and then to the ground. Syrio was stabbing and slashing so fast he could not follow his movements. Dothraki simply fell off their horses dead.

He crashed into the other end of the flank of mounted warriors, their focus on the wedge. He slashed down four more before they noticed he was there. It became a wild melee. He had Dothraki all around pressing him in.

His chainmail kept their first strikes from doing serious damage but their numbers were pressing him and he was blocking multiple blows at the same time, quickly becoming overwhelmed.

The Dothraki surrounding him were suddenly cut down screaming by the iron and bone blades of the ur-viles. He was buffeted by the bodies of the ur-viles as they surged forward, killing their attackers. Though several more were slain, the Dothraki fell back, their ranks broken.

“Yooouuuuu!” Barristan heard his Queen scream. He turned to see her jumping down off the hill and running forward. He spurred his horse onward and was soon beside his Queen. He chopped down several Dothraki that moved to intercept her. He ran a third down, his horse’s hooves shattering the fighter’s skull.

“Khal Jhaqo … I challenge you for this Khalasar! You must accept or lose face!” Daenerys’ voice rang out.

Daenerys

Khal Jhaqo was just about to mount his horse. He stopped himself and looked around at his Blood Riders. They were uncertain, looking back and forth between themselves.

Jhaqo moved out in the clearing. The nearest Dothraki had stopped fighting and the word was moving like wildfire through the Dothraki as they heard of the challenge. A woman? The audacity! But Jhaqo had to accept, or lose face to a woman!

The fighting slowly stopped.

“You are only a woman! A bitch! You don’t have a right to challenge me for my Khalasar. You are nothing, Khaleesi! Only the fact that you were Drogo’s whore gave you any power. He is dead and I am Khal now. You have no right to challenge me! You are nothing. Your human fighters are almost all dead and these dogs are of no account” Jhaqo sneered, looking at his blood riders and closet lieutenants.

They were looking at the ur-viles with wary eyes. All had seen and felt their power. The ground was thickly carpeted with Dothraki dead and soaked in their blood. The ur-viles were chanting softly and roiling as they took in the interaction between the two humans.

“I will kill you Jhaqo! I, a woman, will slay you!”

“You are a coward cunt! Shielded in your chainmail.”

Daenerys slowly sheathed her sword and removed the scabbard off her back. She then removed her belt and started to slowly peel her chainmail off of her petite body.

The ur-viles became agitated. Their wedges broke apart, the creatures barking stridently and beginning to mill and jump up and down. Their barks seemed to bounce off each other. They were slowly forming a line to the right of Daenerys. She had worked her top mail off and was slowly removing the bottom. She removed her linen undercoat and now was in a simple shift. She removed her armored boots.

She sat down to roll the socks off her feet. She picked her scabbard up and pulled her rune sword out, and it sprang to life burning a bright blue from the runes and filigree.
In only her shift Daenerys turned to face Jhaqo. “I am ready to kill you now.” Daenerys said calmly. Jhaqo laughed. “You are only a woman. I refuse to fight a low cunt!” His blood riders milled around, undecided.

Suddenly, the ur-viles barked together and their blades flashed up and then slammed down into Earth in unison and a loud thunderclap echoed away into distance. The ur-viles moved toward Daenerys. The first one came right up to her. He had an iron blade that was glowing hot. The ur-vile reached forward, and the boiling blade laid flat on her head. Nothing happened. Then he lifted its blade, bending forward and placing his wet nose on her forehead. Then the ur-vile stepped aside.

It was a clear show of obeisance. The next ur-vile repeated the ritual. This kept on as each ur-vile put its boiling hot blade of iron or bone on Daenerys head and she was not burned. Each ur-vile kissed her forehead with its nostrils.

Finally the two Loremasters were before her. They clashed their blades together and hot acid boiled out, and their blades fell on her. Black acid ran down her body, not touching her. She was left dry. Then each Loremaster leaned in and kissed her forehead, then joined the rest of the ur-viles beside her.

Daenerys turned to Jhaqo “You were saying?” she asked softly.

Jhaqo looked at his Blood Riders nervously. “You will fight the Khaleesi,” was all Callakko said.

Jhaqo still hesitated.

“Fight!” Callakko roared.

Jhaqo had no choice. “I will take great pleasure in gutting you Daenerys … you are a blight on the Dothraki.” He swirled his arakh in a fast and deadly dance.

“I will take your bells, Jhaqo.” Daenerys told the Khal softly.

They stood facing each other with drawn Arakh and Valyrian blade. They slowly circled each other, gauging for weakness and psyching themselves up for a fight to the death.

Jhaqo continued to hurl vile insults. Daenerys watched quietly, waiting as they circled each other.

Suddenly like a maddened bull Jhaqo roared and charged Daenerys, his arakh slashing down in a deadly arc. She easily blocked his blow and counteracted with her blade moving in a flash.

He blocked her blade and they slashed and parried with lightning fast reflexes.

The Khal tried to bull rush the small woman, locking their swords and attempting to push her back and down. His eyes betrayed his shock when she planted her feet and held her ground. She twisted his arakh down and over, throwing Jhaqo off balance. She slashed down as she went with his momentum, her blade only nicking the back of his leg. First blood. The Dothraki murmured.

Back and forth they fought on the trampled, blood slicked grass. The Khal used his great height and weight advantage to press his attack. The small Khaleesi grimaced, but would plant her feet and pull the man off balance. Other times she would merely side step his attack, frustrating the Khal.

Jhaqo was a very good fighter. He controlled his frustration. He went in with a sweeping decapitating blow but Daenerys leaned back and slashed out, leaving a cut along the Khal’s ribs as blood flowed down his side.
He roared, running straight into the woman. His arakh came down hard, knocking the glowing blue blade down as it tried to slice open her entrails. He slammed into Daenerys. She grappled with his sword hand and rolled back with the man onto her back as her foot came up and helped kick him over her body, he landed hard on his back with a loud thud. He rolled immediately away, avoiding the downward cut that would have carved a vertical smile in his head.

They quickly got on their feet and locked swords again, grunting as they circled staring hard into each other’s eyes while seeking an opening. They shoved each other away and then attacked each other with deadly fast slashes and lunging thrusts.

They again locked up swords and Daenerys moved in close and pulled her head back, head butting the Khal in the sternum as he gasped and staggered back. She lifted her arm and slashed down with a killing stroke. The Khal partially blocked her blow and twisted her blade and slashed out. Jhaqo received a long cut down his sword arm. Blood flowed down his cut arm.

Her roared again and charged Daenerys. She stumbled over a dead body as Jhaqo delivered a killing downward stroke. His blade sliced down the Targaryen’s face from her temple down her cheek to her jaw, cutting it open to the bone.

She gasped at the flash of searing pain. Blood poured down her face and blinded her in that eye.

“Prepare to die, bitch!” the Khal moved to her blind side. He rushed in, his arakh slashing in a deadly arc to cleave the woman in two.

She ducked own in a squat, her body folded nearly to the ground. The blow whistled over her head. She lunged up with her blade as she surged forward. Their bodies slammed together. Jhaqo eyes widened as he looked down.

Daenerys’ sword had jammed up underneath his ribs and slid up his body cavity, piercing back out of his back above his shoulder blade.

Daenerys gritted her teeth and ripped her blade out of the Khal’s body. She pulled her sword down six inches and twisted her wrist to angle her blade in a new direction. She lunged up again with her blade to cut a new path of destruction in the Khal’s body. Jhaqo convulsed on her blade. She ripped her blade out as his blood streamed out in hot gouts.

His body crashed to his knees, gasping hard as it fought to survive. The man looked at Daenerys with pure hate in his eyes. Her blade arced up and slammed down again, cutting his head clean in two from the top of his skull down to his throat till her blade stuck in his collarbones.

She ripped the blade back and out of the corpse. Blood sprayed all over her. She turned to look at the Khal’s Blood Riders.

“Kill yourselves if you must, or pledge your allegiance to me. Choose life now or die. I am now Khal Daenerys. I am the Mare who mounts the world!”

---

Barristan

He watched the three blood riders choose life, bending the knee to Daenerys. They would be loyal. They were Dothraki and had no choice.

He went to Daenerys. Blood still poured out of her cut, but it was a face wound. That would bleed profusely but was not putting her life in jeopardy. The former Blood Riders of Khal Jhaqo bowed before Daenerys and her own Blood Riders.

They had all survived.

He winced seeing the wound on her face. It was an ugly thing and would leave a terrible scar. She would no longer be renowned for her beauty. It was a cruelty.

A Dothraki woman came up to her new Khal and gave her a towel. Daenerys jammed the towel into her wound, the fabric immediately starting to turn red. Daenerys looked out over the plain. Barristan followed her gaze to see where she was looking. In the distance he saw the dragons. He remembered Rhaegal’s grievous wound.

Suddenly the two Loremasters tore off at a furious run on all fours with thirty of their brethren. The direction was obvious.

Barristan saw Viserion suddenly rise from the great distance and begin to fly to them. In a few minutes the dragon landed before his mother. The Dothraki women wailed, putting their children behind them as the men trembled.

Daenerys’ Blood Riders laughed at their new Khalasar mates. They called them dogs and cowards. They were reinforcing their control over the Dothraki who now were subordinate to them. Daenerys’ Blood Riders liked that very much.

Daenerys climbed up on Viserion, launching upward. But instead of rising, he drifted right and his claws shot down and gripped around Barristan and effortlessly lifted him up off the ground.

“What the hell is this! Put me down!” Barristan cried out, but Viserion the spoiled child ignored him and flew fast back to his injured brothers.

The Loremasters were already walking around the dragons like doctors examining their patients. And in all actuality, they were.

Drogon eyed them warily but did not protest. He had seen these strange creatures aiding their mother. He knew they were coming to save Rhaegal. His dear brother was near spent. He was prostrate on the ground, his whimpers painful to hear. Rhaegal’s breath labored. Drogon could feel the severe internal bleeding in his brother. An artery had been pierced. He was bleeding out.

Drogon saw Viserion returning with their mother and his crush and gently set down the protesting Barristan Selmy. All the dragons liked Barristan immensely. He was loyal and true to their mother - it was just that Viserion was unseemly with his man crush.

Their mother came running over with Barristan close behind.

Barristan could feel the anxiety in his Queen. He could see that Rhaegal was pale. His eyes were glazed, and his tongue lolled out his mouth. His breathing was labored.

He watched the Loremaster he had fought with produce a large, shallow bowl from within his tunic and put it on the ground. Then he put the tip of his stave into the bowl. The thirty ur-viles that had come with the Loremasters formed a small wedge around him and began to murmur in their strange, barking language.

A dark, potent liquid poured out of the iron and quickly filled the bowl. The Loremaster took the bowl and put it before wounded dragon. Rhaegal sniffed at the bowl and then started to lap up the liquid.
Immediately his eyes lost their glaze and his breathing steadied. The bowl was refilled and put before Drogon now. He drank it with quick flicks of his tongue.

The other Loremaster came before them and pulled out a small bowl filled with liquid and offered it to Daenerys. It too was filled with the dark ichor. She sniffed it and wrinkled her nose.

“What is it, Dany?”

“I don’t know. It smells like molded leaves and rot.” She eyed her wounded dragons. They had definitely revived. She drank deep as well, trusting her benefactors.

Barristan was thankful when he saw all of her exhaustion fall away. Dany pulled the towel off her face, and the deep cut now only trickled blood.

Barristan wondered if there was no end to these ur-viles’ abilities and magic.

The Loremasters again focused on Rhaegal. All watched with rapt attention. Twenty of the ur-viles moved to get in front of Rhaegal. A bone stave was run up into his mouth. They began to chant and liquid poured out the bone tip and the dragon drank it down greedily. His eyelids became drowsy and drooped to slits. They continued to chant while a few ur-viles went to various spots on Rhaegal’s body and placed their hands on him, focusing on chakra points and murmuring. They flowed their own vitality into his spent body.

The two Loremasters gripped the bolt that had sunk deep into Rhaegal’s body. Their strange double thumbed hands gripped the shaft. Chanting louder and louder, their thin shoulders hunched and then arms surged up ripping the shaft out of Rhaegal’s body and throwing the metal bolt far away.

The second Loremaster fell to its knees and shoved its slender forearm into the wound. Barristan could see muscles work as the creatures hand worked inside the injury.

Daenerys gasped.

“What is it my Queen?”

“The bleeding has been staunched,” she said, awed. The ur-vile pulled out his arm covered in steaming dragon blood. The first Loremaster produced a long segment of bone and shoved it into the wound. They now worked their stave tips into the wound and chanted with a staccato rhythm.

The wound was soon sealed up with nascent scales having formed. The ur-viles circled their iron tips, healing the wound even more.

Rhaegal was asleep breathing easily now.

Finished, the ur-viles moved to Drogon and his lesser wounds. Ten ur-vile moved in and pressed into the black dragon’s chakra points, murmuring. Drogon relaxed.

Five of the ur-viles motioned for Drogon to open his mouth. He did as they knelt down and they placed their iron bars between his teeth, side to side. The dragon bit down on the metal shafts as the ur-viles gripped the ends, chanting and their bodies rhythmically swaying.

The Loremasters got together by end of the spike jutting out of Drogon’s tail. Faster than the eye could truly follow, their blades went up and back and came down together and hit the end of the bolt, the blow slamming the bolt out of the dragon’s tail.

Drogon’s scream was loud and raw. The iron in his mouth and the magic emanating out of the bars ameliorated Drogon’s pain. In quick motions the Loremasters inserted a bone shunt into Drogon’s tail. They chanted, placing their blades on each side of his tail and soon it had nascent black scales forming and closed the wound.

Finally the Loremasters moved to Drogon’s wings and lightly traced their iron tips over the rents in them. Before Barristan’s eyes a latticework of magic appeared. Then, in from the edges of the tears in his wings, nerves, blood vessels, muscle and sinew crawled up the magical latticework until the wounds had been healed. The skin was left luminescent and raw.

The ur-viles did not wait to be congratulated or thanked, and ran back to their brethren at the hill. Daenerys climbed back up on Viserion who rose up and gripped Barristan and flew them back to the Khalasar before flying back to his brothers. The three slept pressed together, sharing body heat as they healed.

Daenerys’ Blood Riders were busy organizing her new Khalasar as they instinctively knew how to do what was necessary to bind the Khalasar to the Queen’s and new Khal’s will. The battle had been won, but at great cost. Over two thirds of Barristan’s warriors were dead or badly injured. Close to half of the ur-viles were dead.

He asked Jhogo to find water and sinew so he could sow his Queen’s face back together.

He asked Rakharo to find out where the hell the Dothraki had gotten those scorpions. That surprise had nearly undone them. Soon Jhogo returned with sinew and a needle.

Daenerys was dabbing a blood sprinkled towel to her face. Several women were trying to attend their new Khal.

“Well … I won’t be using my beauty to conquer Essos and Weseros.” His Queen joked weakly.

“There is more to a person than their looks, Daenerys.” Barristan replied.

He was about to start sowing the Queen’s face back together when the two Loremasters came up to them, barking loudly and then calming down. They gently pushed Barristan up and away with their superior strength.

“What are you doing?! I need to clean her wound and sow it shut!”

“Barristan … leave them be. They have only served faithfully.”

The Loremaster that had fought with Daenerys held out his hand. Daenerys looked confused for a long moment, and then realization lit her eyes. She pulled out her dirk. The Loremaster snatched it out of her hand and the second suddenly held her head in a vice grip, holding her head over at an angle.

Alarmed, Barristan started to draw his sword. He was too late. The first Loremaster slashed Daenerys’ dirk down the wound precisely.

They backed up as suddenly as they had moved forward. The dirk was not covered with any blood. They handed it back to Dany.

Barristan gaped. Her grievous wound had been healed entirely. Only the thinnest of scars remained, barely even visible.
The ur-viles formed their wedges in unison, and then bowed in unison. After bowing to Daenerys Targaryen they were up and running away in all directions. They were gone within seconds.

Daenerys had risen as well, fingering her wound. Tears ran down Barristan’s cheeks. Her beauty had been restored.

Daenerys got up and went to the corpse of Jhaqo. She fist her hair and pulled his split, ruined head up twisting his hair into a knot to pull the halves of Jhaqo’s head together. Her Valyrian long dagger easily slashed though his locks. She held up the dead Khal’s hair that tinkled with silver bells.

Daenerys had the first of her own bells.

When asked what to do with Jhaqo’s body, she instructed to have it burned. All were surprised. Her Blood Riders said the cur did not deserve the honor.

Daenerys overrode them. She reminded them that Khal Drogo would be waiting for Jhaqo up in the heavens. Her Blood Riders were suddenly enthusiastic to begin building Jhaqo’s pyre.

Barristan had to know. “My Queen—why didn’t you tell me of these ur-viles? Why didn’t you factor them into the initial attack? We could have formed a totally different plan and one much less dangerous” he finished in a mild scolding tone for withholding this vital information.

“I wish I had known Barristan. I was beaten. I was accepting my death when I suddenly knew what to do with this dirk you found on me back in Vaes Tolorro. I heard in my mind “you will know what to do when the time comes. You can only use this once.”

Barristan sighed. Of course it would only be the once.

“The knowledge just appeared unbidden in my mind.” Dany pulled out her dirk and looked at the strange runes on it. “I had always wondered what it was for” Dany spoke as she turned it over in her fingers. Barristan saw that she had no cut or even scar on the back of her hand.

Barristan let it drop. It was obviously magic and that was totally beyond his knowledge and purview.

They spent the next week consolidating their control over Dany’s new Khalasar. Barristan discovered that the last city Jhaqo’s Khalasar had threatened had given them scorpions as an offering. Callakko told Barristan that Jhaqo had foreseen Dany’s need for revenge and prepared for it.

Barristan had been impressed. Jhaqo had thought outside of his Dothraki comfort zone and nearly defeated them. Barristan would never underestimate his Queen’s enemies again.

Barristan

Barristan spent the next few days after the battle watching Daenerys and her Blood Riders assert their control completely over their new Khalasar. A few knots of men had refused to accept the new world order; Daenerys fought and killed the leader and his strongest lieutenants. Her Blood Riders decimated their followers. After the third instance, any resistance faded. Daenerys’ collection of bells had passed twenty-five.

Barristan organized the collection of the dead and the building of pyres or digging of graves for the warriors whose customs dictated those forms of burial.

He had been shocked at how badly ruined the Dothraki were that had fought the ur-viles. Bodies mangled by hideous burns that ate through their bones, and flesh sliced to ribbons. Barristan couldn’t help but wonder how much worse the carnage would be if the creatures ever attacked at night.

Seeing through a sense of smell rather than through eyes, these ur-viles would have been almost unstoppable on a moonless night, attacking their foes as the humans fought blind.

They had gone to collect the ur-viles as well, but their bodies had decomposed to a thick, viscous soup that the ground hungrily sucked into its pores. Over the next days wild flowers and new shrubs sprang forth, growing profusely from the spot of each dead ur-vile body.

He and Syrio talked about the bravery of the Dothraki. They had recklessly fought, throwing themselves headlong into the battle. The ur-viles were simply beyond comprehension. Neither had heard anything about their origins and they wondered where they had come from. Their allegiance to Dany was both touching and frightening. If strange, magical creatures were bowing to Daenerys Targaryen, then she was indeed the Queen.

They were both as proud as fathers in reviewing her fighting prowess and bravery. She had thrown herself into the midst of battle, always seeking out the greatest fight and throwing herself into the fray, slaying her enemies. She had used their philosophies and martial training to become an almost perfect weapon.

And now after battle her charisma was completely bowing the Khalasar to her will.

While the supplies of the Dothraki had been ravaged, there were still plenty of stores left to feed the Khalasar in the short term. They had no pressing need to go foraging for prey and wild tubers and grains. Barristan watched the Queen moving among the women and gathering supplies. She soon had the prerequisite items she needed. She and several cooks sat down, preparing a large meal.

Barristan observed Strong Belwas moving around the cook fires, drooling as Daenerys cooked. Several times she had to shoo him away as he whined that he was hungry. His fighting had drained his strength and reserves. He would put the back of his hand on his forehead and moan that he was piqued, staggering around while grumbling: “the vapors, I have the vapors—I’m famished!” Daenerys rolled her eyes as she cooked.

Eventually she called Belwas over, and he started weeping seeing the special cheese and locust dish he craved. He sat down and started shoving handfuls into his mouth.

He was nothing if not grateful and courteous. “Mmpfff ffffpphhh mmppppfff uummmmmm mmpppfff sllurrppp mmmmmm ssllurrppp mmffffff uuamppppfff!” he thanked Daenerys profusely.

Once the dead were burned and buried, they slowly prepared to depart. Callakko had said he did not want to be the new Khal of Daenerys’ Khalasar. He observed they wound up dead, and he wanted to remain living. They had found Khoko to lead Daenerys Khalasar.

Barristan had come with thirty warriors and would be leaving with only elven. Each loss as it had always been for him was bitter.

After a week, they finally left. Drogon had already gone four days prior with Viserion to hunt and roam. They returned with two wild sheep they fed to Rhaegal. Rhaegal had continued to recover from his near fatal wound, and was ready to leave too.

Barristan watched Daenerys call in her dragons who, as always, came to her even as the echoes of the whistle she sometimes used for effect faded. The Dothraki looked on, amazed at seeing the massive shapes winging in from southwest. They landed, and sought affection from their mother. Then Viserion hopped over and rubbed and purred all over Barristan, embarrassing him but also secretly thrilling the old knight as he rubbed Viserion’s lips and nose the way he liked.

“Barristan, I will meet you back at Vaes Tolorro. It is time we launched our campaign against the slave cities but first, I am going to fly the Dothraki Sea and deal with the other Khalasars that are to close. I am sure sight of my dragons will infuse them with a heathy dose of fear. I will need to eventually bring them to heel. I can’t have my flank constantly under threat of attack.

“Soon, my general and friend, we will begin our conquest that will one day bring us back home.”

“General?”

“Yes. You will lead my forces. Together we will make history!”

She had flown off then with her dragons. He had longed to go with her, but no one aside from Daenerys could endure the heat that now emanated from the bodies of her sons.

Barristan had much to consider. He needed to prepare a strategy to roll the cities up along the rim of Slaver’s Bay and also move inland to conquer key cities at main crossroads along the Dragon Road and the trade routes in the hinterlands. They would also take claim of resource areas of mining, inland ports on rivers and lakes, and integrate any mercenary companies that were willing to pledge allegiance to the new Queen of Westeros and Essos.

He would also need to implement the explicit directives of Daenerys Targaryen. Under pain of death there would be no rape. Nor would she tolerate the looting of cultural treasures. She had found the road to Vaes Dothrak to be a rape of culture. The last prime directive was that all nobles that they were about to bring down would not be violated.

This would prove to be very difficult.

The freed slaves would demand revenge. The human heart could be a most cruel task master.
Daenerys

Daenerys was exhilarated. She had survived her first battle and triumphed. She knew she had made mistakes, but it did not matter - she had won. She would take her aid in any way shape or form.

The ur-viles had saved her ass. Their savagery and power had kept the Khalasar at bay long enough for her to confront and kill Khal Jhaqo. Their entry into the fray had allowed her to overcome her tactical failures. She had to give Jhaqo credit for coming up with the use of scorpions; Dothraki had never before used siege weapons!

She rose up in the air on Drogon, heading out to the Dothraki Sea. She needed to make sure that no other Khalasars were near her own. She had control of it, but did not want to stress them with immediate combat.

She spread her dragons out and rode up high into the sky, then circled them out to the north, east, and west.

She reflected on the battle. It had elated her to finally fight her enemies and crush them in battle. It had felt so good killing Jhaqo. The man had been a bastard, and she enjoyed seeing him ripped apart by her own sword. She also had enjoyed the spoils of her victory, partaking of the food and wine of her new Khalasar. She had let Strong Belwas loose on a wagon full of ripe goat cheese. How could a man eat that much?

The first two nights after killing Khal Jhaqo she had been kept busy, putting down the few rabblerousers who appeared and adding more bells to her hair. She had felt the simmering battle lust in her blood and in her wet, aching loins.

The third night she mounted her fillies. She had so many young, nubile and even not-so-young Dothraki women seeking her bed. They wanted the honor of sleeping with the new Khal. The women were intoxicated by the fact that a woman was the new head of their Khalasar. Daenerys partook of so much sweet pussy. She fucked women to exhaustion, and then took yet more women to her furs fucking them in the open so all could see.

She was the Mare who mounted the World! Her women came to her already so wet, and cummed over and over in her mouth or on her fingers or with hard tribbing, aching cunts on sloppy wet quim or on soaked thighs and hips. She devoured and partook from dusk to deep into the night.

Daenerys smiled at how the women fingered the new scar on her face. They found it alluring, showing her to be a warrior. She had loved how she was over small Titanni grinding their soaked cunts together with her swirling hips. As Titanni rose to orgasm she traced the scar on Daenerys face, her other hand clutched hard on Dany’s muscled bicep, the dothraki’s back arched high, her fingers digging into Daenerys face as the twenty-four year old screamed over and over in orgasm her body convulsed with ecstasy.

Daenerys traced her scar, so thankful to the ur-viles for their parting gift.

Callakko came to her the seventh morning. “You can have your fill of all the fillies you want Khaleesi. I see that you are quite an accomplished lover. But, you will need to select a man as your consort when the time comes.”

“I will not! I will take a woman as my Consort and wife!”

“You do not know how the world works, young Khal. In your battle lust we all understand. But to rule you must have a man at your side. If you don’t, you will leave yourself open to factions who will deem it unnatural and wrong. You must have a strong man as your Khal, Khaleesi. You must produce an heir. I am not a Maester from the Citadel but I am pretty sure that two women cannot produce an heir.”

“I will have her lay with a man to produce an heir, then.”

“I fear no man of power would do that, my Khaleesi. Powerful men want to rule. As do you. You surely can understand that.”

She had not liked his answers one bit. She was the Mare that would mount the world. She would create a new world order.

She circled her dragons out further into the grass sea. By the end of the third day she felt much more comfortable. The nearest large Khalasar was near Vaes Dothrak. It would take at least a month for the Khalasar to come far enough southeast to threaten her own.

She had spied a small Khalasar near the middle of the vast lake to the East. It seemed to have only three or four thousand riders. She had had a personal history with Jhaqo. She needed to know how hard it would be to conquer other Khalasars.

Barristan would soil his armor. She flew her dragons down out of the morning sky. They burned long swaths of grass all around the Khalasar, the horses going wild in terror. She watched the women running to and fro with their children and the men milling around, confused and shouting uselessly.

She swooped in fast and furious with Drogon, dismounting before the Khal. She shouted that she had killed Khal Jhaqo and was now the new Khal of his Khalasar. She challenged any to fight her for the right of this Khalasar. A Dothraki named Pozzatho came forward. She offered to let him live as her general of this Khalasar, if he would only bend the knee and swear allegiance to her.

He had laughed, saying that Jhaqo must have had some wasting disease or wanted to be a woman if this “small prairie dog” wanted to challenge him for his Khalasar.

He had died with his head spinning off into the grass. His Khalasar quickly submitted. His blood riders followed their Khal into death. So be it. She easily found three young Dothraki men full of zeal and fire to take their place, naming Assilo as the new Khal.

She found Pozzatho’s head in the grass, shaking it to get the flies off. She cut out his eight bells. Her collection continued growing.

She told them to drift south down the shore of Vraris Loch. They would come when she called. She would be back with her dragons if they failed to do her bidding.

Assilo punched his chest declaring his unswerving allegiance. “I will be true my Khal! The Mare who mounts the World!”

Daenerys liked the man. He knew who was in charge. Daenerys Targaryen!

When she arrived back at Vaes Tolorro she was greeted as the conqueror she was. For her true Khalasar she held up a string with all of her new bells. Her attendants had gasped and cooed, anxious to weave them into her hair.

To the slaves who gathered close calling her mother, she told them that soon, very soon, she would begin her conquest of Slaver’s Bay starting with Qarth. The cheers were deafening. She had the slaves inventoring their skills. Many had logistical and clerical abilities. Others were craftsmen and artisans. She would use them to start the building of a new world order.

She hoped to be able to find some nobles she could work with. There had to be some men and women who did not have their souls corrupted by the slave trade.

She went to bed after taking a sweet pleasure slave from Astapor with her. They had fucked long into the night, their repeated screams of ecstasy sweet music to Daenerys ears.

She would prove Callakko wrong. The world couldn’t be that backward. Could it?

Illyrio

Illyrio was nearing his destination. He had left his comfortable home in Braavos to meet this upstart Queen in the desert. Barristan’s reports were making Daenerys Targaryen out to be some kind of goddess come to Earth. He had a hard time squaring this woman with the frail, scared child he remembered being given away to Khal Drogo.

She had indeed grown mightily if Barristan’s reports were to be believed. He needed to inspect his holdings and partnerships in Slaver’s Bay anyways. He had made the circuit three times when he was a much younger man. He had an abhorrence to the slave trade, but he was not about to let that get in the way of making profits.

He had decided though, that it was time to do more than hedge his bets. According to Barristan the young Queen was soon to start her conquest. Illyrio was still shocked that the woman was delaying her quest for her homeland to first take on the slave cities.

Illyrio had asked Barristan repeatedly about this. Daenerys was going to destroy the slave trade? Why? She was a Valyrian of pure noble birth. Their race had been enslavers, not liberators. It made no sense.

Barristan assured him that Daenerys Targaryen meant to smash the cities. He had asked for clarification. She was going to set herself up as the new master? No had been the response. All of the slaves would be freed. He had found that unbelievable at first, and bad for business.

But, upon deeper contemplation, he acknowledged that great change always caused confusion which caused opportunity. He would be prepared and would be able to swoop in and provide for the new slaves and their newly destitute slave masters. He had told Barristan that he planned on taking a few slaves from the noble families that had caused him many problems over the years.

He had been told ‘no’ in return. ALL of the slave trade was to be abolished. Any who did not accept this would be crushed and destroyed. Everyone who defied the Queen would be annihilated. EVERYONE.

That was when Illyrio came off the sidelines. He was not going to commit fully, but he had to give more than tokens. Desultory support would not be enough. Illyrio got to where he was at in life by trusting his instincts.

He had inquired of his dear friend Varys. His reports had been imprecise due to distance but they indicated that the woman had an iron will and was almost supernatural in her strength, reflexes and endurance. And, very importantly, her dragons were growing to be very, very large.

Illyrio would gauge the situation in the cities himself. He sent ravens to his most powerful rival Nyssseo Hestenohr. The man had cost him big business deals and swindled him out of great profits. Then again, he had done the same to him. He truly admired him though he knew he could not trust the man. As long as great profits were involved though, both could thrive and make ever more riches.

Illyrio left Braavos with a fleet of fifty warships and the hire of the Black Scorpions; a band of two thousand vile, evil cutthroats - untrustworthy men and women. A great mercenary company by all account.

He was challenged outside of Tyrosh but he handed the patrol captain the letter from Nyesseo, plus a large bribe of gold dragons and was allowed in without further problems.

In their discussions he helped his rival and now partner understand the new power dynamics that were about to be unleashed on the world. They could either oppose it and be crushed, or get in on the ground floor and become truly filthy rich.

Illyrio reminded the man that this woman was crushing a five thousand year old evil only because it was the just thing to do. She was putting her destiny off merely to end slavery. She was doing this for no profit and no gain. She may indeed lose her life in this new quest, and yet she was not hesitating. Did this sound like a woman who would tolerate avarice?

Nyesseo Hestenohr had finally agreed. He then told Illyrio he had someone he wanted to meet in the morning.

The next day Illyrio met with Jhalando Khal, the Emissary of the Summer Islanders. He was in port with three swan ships. They were here on a goodwill mission to strengthen ties between Tyrosh and the Summer Islands.

The man listened intently. He had heard whispers of some pale woman warrior deep in the red waste. He was totally fascinated with her intentions of destroying the slave trade permanently. There would be no new slave master rising up to replace the old.

Illyrio noticed how the man’s eyes glittered at that. He immediately committed to their endeavor. The next morning, the Typhoon Master sailed from port on a mission to urgently reach the Summer Islands and confer with the Queen. The Emissary would sail with Illyrio and Nyesseo to meet this Queen.

Nyesseo committed fifty ships of his own, not to be outdone by his partner. He hired the Manticore Ravagers mercenary company. Four days later they set sail with the two Summer Islander ships, soon out of sight scooting the way for any pirates or brigands.

Illyrio and Nyesseo stopped off in each Slaver City in turn as they worked west to east. They left their small fleet well off the coast, not wanting to alarm or antagonize the cities they visited. The men checked on all of their holdings and business ventures.

In each city Illyrio probed gently to see if there was any amelioration in any of the noble families. There had been none. They were as arrogant, contemptuous and haughty as ever. They had been in existence since the birth of the sun, they spoke in hyperbole. Why shouldn’t they? They had been in charge for five thousand years.

Illyrio would be happy to see them fall and burn. What was the word? Yes, Dracarys.

They had sailed around the rim of Slavers Bay putting their new orders in place. They pulled investments out of one place and into another to lessen the damage a change in order would cause. The high noble houses were a lost cause, but they found some ears in the lesser houses and merchant classes. They would be the foundation of the new order.

Finally, they were at Qrihq Harbor. It was in all actuality just a small anchorage rather than a deep harbor, but supplied enough protection from the seas if the weather was not overly rough. It had been going well for Illyrio over the last year and half as he sent small caravans to the Queen at Vaes Tolorro.

He also maintained a small rookery there. He had built many rookeries around the rim of Slaver’s Bay, hidden within small coves, then up along the east coast of Essos to bring him word quickly. He was very glad he had made the investment, it had enabled him to act quickly now that the time had come.

The anchorage was just large enough for the small fleet to find refuge. Nyesseso and the Summer Islanders would stay on the coast as he journeyed inland, neither comfortable in such an inhospitable place. Illyrio would not let anything stop him from forging his destiny with his Queen.

It took nearly three weeks to make the journey with the nomadic guides leading them through wastes to hidden springs and fodder for the horses. They arrived at Vaes Tolorro refreshed.

The Queen had arrived back from her conquest of the Dothraki several days before. She met Illyrio several hours after his arrival.

She was in Dothraki dress and in her hair more than thirty-five bells chimed softly as she walked. Illyrio was suddenly very thankful for his decisions regarding this woman. She was a Khal now!

He could not believe the transformation he saw in her. She had not grown much taller and was still petite of build, but that was the only thing that was the same.

When he had last seen Daenerys Targaryen she had been a small, weak thing. Now she walked with what many would think was swagger or bravado.

Illyrio knew it for what it was. Supreme confidence backed up by sheer ability.

“My Queen. I have come to bend the knee to you.”

“You don’t speak for Braavos, Illyrio. You helped sell me off like a piece of chattel. I was a mere cheap bauble to you and Viserys. Should I forgive that?” the young woman spoke, her violet eyes filled with the fire of challenge.

Illyrio bowed his head. “All true. You were just a pawn in the Game of Thrones, then. Now you are Queen. The Queen is even more powerful than the King in all reality. I think the Dothraki would call you the ‘The Stallion that Mounts the World’.”

“That is Mare Who Mounts the World!”

“True Braavos is a free city, but all cities are led by great men and women. I am but the first to bend the knee. The free cities all will follow a winner, Daenerys Targaryen first of your name. I assume you have your army now? Where is Barristan?”

“He is on his way back and yes Khal Jhaqo is dead, killed by my own sword. I must thank you for your precious gifts. They served me well in my conquest. I am indebted.”

The fat man of Braavos was thankful for his caution two years ago. He had helped facilitate the movement of the mercenaries to the very anchorage his ships were now in. He had a representative on the ship, along with Robert’s representative.

He was playing both sides to see which would prove the stronger. Whose side were the fates on? When the decimated company made it back to the ship without the body of the Targaryen, Illyrio’s agent acted. His agent killed the Iron Throne’s representative and negotiated with the mercenary company, paying them only a fifth of the agreed sum. After all, they had no body.

Illyrio’s agent sailed back, stopping off at Lyse to procure the body of a Valyrian girl of pure lineage and the appropriate age. This corpse was given to Robert’s men when they anchored at King’s Landing, the body preserved in ice.

Illyrio’s word had been enough to settle the manner. He told the King in a letter he wanted to put the misadventure behind him, that he had made a terrible mistake. Robert had probably drunk a keg of ale in revelry.

Now he was giving his total support to this very girl. Some things were better left unsaid.

From there Illyrio found the Queen most receptive.

She was thankful for his ships and the mercenary companies he was providing. She was going to fly to Qarth to see if they would be open to joining her cause and give up the slave trade.

Illyrio scoffed at the notion and told her it was pointless. Daenerys wanted to give them a chance regardless. He told the Targaryen that he had visited all the slave cities to the east and they would never surrender their lives blessed on the back of slaves.

She was undeterred. She would do what was necessary to end the slave trade. She would not leave one stronghold left - all would bend the knee or perish.

For the next week he waited for Barristan and the rest of her warriors to return. They arrived in the late afternoon sun, dusty and tired but happy to be back home and in the presence of their Queen. The Khalasar and slaves greeted them as heroes. That night all the men and women were repeatedly bedded but Barristan who found it all beneath him. His honor, his loss Illyrio thought.

Barristan came to Illyrio that night to report how the Khalasar had been taken. Illyrio was soon enthralled by the tale of sheer savagery and gallantry displayed by both sides.

Barristan had only the highest regard for the Dothrak’s frightening prowess.

Illyrio’s mouth hung open at the appearance of these strange ur-viles. Someone with some skill had drawn several pictures of them for him to reference. They were hideous to behold, and totally in service to the Queen. Again he was so thankful he had chosen her side in the coming conflict. These ur-viles were horrifically powerful.

Barristan reported that at least ten thousand Dothraki had been killed by the combined forces of Dragons, ur-viles and human fighters. Barristan was nothing but honest and fully reported how close the battle had been - it could have gone either way.

Barristan reported they had survived their baptism of fire. They would not make the same mistakes again. Never again would he or his Queen underestimate their foes on the battlefield.

The next night the Queen held a small banquet in his honor. He noticed she was still clad in a simple dress and ate with her people.

The woman was most strange indeed.

He watched as Strong Belwas ate two whole lambs, still complaining that he was starving. He drank prodigious amounts of wine on top of it. On his fourth lamb he fell face first into the carcass, snoring happily as the gluttony finally overcame him.
Then Illyrio called for three small boxes to be brought in.

“My Queen! I have three gifts I wish to bestow to you to show my good faith. These three gifts are precious. One is of great practicality. The second will bring forth death and vengeance. The last gift will adorn love and fealty.”

He saw that he had Daenerys’ attention as she came before him.

He opened the first box and shook out two large mats. The thin mats shimmered and flexed easily as they moved. “These are made of a rare and precious metal from Asshai. Woven with magical spells, this metal is able to deflect intense heat. Even the heat of dragons. I can see your warriors using the mats to ride on your dragon’s backs or to weave protective clothing. I have more being crafted, but the process is slow and laborious.”

He handed the first box back to his attendant and was handed the second box. He opened it up and produced a small letter.

“In this letter is the location of the Golden Lions mercenary company. I have them in my employ. I can have them anywhere at any time, my Queen.”

He saw the fires of hate and revenge light in the sixteen year old’s eyes. She said nothing, but her body was filled with a predatory grace.

The second box was handed off and a small third box produced. He gave this to the Queen.

“Open it, Daenerys.”

She did, and her eyes lit with wonder. Her small fingers went into the box and pulled out two wedding bands.

“These wedding bands were forged by the same smith who forged the swords I gave you before, my Queen.”

He could see beautiful Valyrain script lighting up and something else he could not recognize from even the short distance.

The Queen brought the rings closer to her face to read the script.

“My Queen. These are the rings that bound Visenya and Rhaenys. They had these rings secretly forged to pledge their undying love to each other. They remained married to Aegon out of duty, but gave their hearts to each other. Rhaenys always took hers off before she went into combat. When she perished, Visenya took hers off. Never to wear again. I give these to you, now.”

He watched the Queen turn the rings as the script magically moved around the bands. The script, though tiny, seemed to almost jump out of the metal making them it easy to read through the magic of their making.

“Can I ask what the script reads, my Queen?”

Daenerys looked up at him with tears in her eyes. “The first reads ‘I Visenya do pledge: The beginning of forever … Now that I have you as my wife true.’ The second reads, ‘I Rhaenys confess: I found love, and love was you … this day and always’. My gods, Illyrio. How did you come into possession of these and the swords?”

“A very powerful man who collects items of your ancient people’s heritage owed me a great debt.
This is his payment to me, and my gift to you.”

“What is the image I see circling in the rings?” Illyrio inquired after a moment.

“They are two entwined Ouroboroses sliding against each other. … so beautiful—they are the Valyrian symbol of true love.”

The Queen smiled with tears in her eyes. He knew of Daenerys’ true leanings and could only hope she would find her one true love like the Targaryen sisters had so long ago.

Illyrio felt smug. He had chosen well indeed. His friend had informed him about what happened when he asked about Daenerys firing up the rune swords. His friend had told him that Barristan must have been lying - House Targaryen was one of the weakest of the Valyrian Houses, and only the most powerful of Dragon Lords could accomplish that, and never with two swords at once.

Yes indeed. Illyrio had chosen the right side of destiny.

Barristan

Barristan was sitting around the war table. He looked over at Syrio. He shrugged his shoulders. Illyrio was sitting down dabbing his chin, wiping away peach and pear juice. He seemed unconcerned with Daenerys’ plan to take Qarth. Marleya Blackmyre was now part of the war council, having proven her mettle and valor on the battlefield. Her observations sage Barristan soon saw and admired.

The Queen wanted to move fast and strike hard. All knew that word would soon filter out of the Dothraki grass sea about what she had accomplished. She wanted the option of using her dragons to shock her next conquest, which she announced would be Qarth.

Daenerys wanted to roll up the slave cities from east to west. She would use Qarth as her home base to begin her campaign to conquer all of Slaver’s Bay. She would seek to establish trade with the Summer Islands, Sothoryos, and the city states of Great Moraq. She wanted to establish trade with both the azure emperors and general Pol Qo in the land of Yin. She was not sure yet who she would support, so was hedging her bets.

Daenerys had come to Barristan and told him that she would use the new heat mats from Illyrio to allow him to ride none other than Viserion, of course. She had smirked when she made the declaration. Barristan acted like he was set upon, but in reality he was pleased. He enjoyed the dragon’s affection.

The plan had been to have Syrio fly Rhaegal, but it was discovered within a quick minute that was not going to work. Once in the air the man was suffering from vertigo and nausea. When Rhaegal landed, Syrio staggered off to get violently ill. Barristan said it must be equivalent to sea sickness but in the air. Syrio’s finely tuned sense of balance could not take the natural motions of dragon flight.

She asked Strong Belwas to ride instead, and he giggled with glee. He got up on Rhaegal’s back as they used one mat to climb up on the dragon. The size of the mats required that Barristan and especially Belwas remain still.

When Daenerys asked Rhaegal if he could maintain a straight line and not cause Belwas to lose his balance, Rhaegal was so affronted that he did not speak to her again for two days.

Then, two days later it was time to seek dynasty in Qarth. They flew at a leisurely pace. They stopped and spent the night at Vaes Qosar, the city of spiders. They ate a meal with Strong Belwas eating four wheels of cheese, five legs of mutton and large pot of pickled locusts. He went to sleep snoring and patting his ‘tummy’. Barristan soon went to sleep as well, his last waking vision of his Queen staring to the southeast, anxious to meet her destiny.

They arrived over Qarth soon after noon. They flew in high and Barristan looked at the city closely with his spy glass. He saw the people moving around likes ants in a disturbed nest, confused. They flew down in a circling spiral from three different directions. They dragons kept jerking their paths to confuse any potential bolts.

There was none.

They landed in the main courtyard as men yelled and women screamed. Drogon roared his defiance. Barristan and Daenerys saw the terrorizing effect, and she ordered all of the dragons to roar for the next few minutes, sending long tails of fire into the sky.

The city was in a panic. The dragons then stilled and the city was as quiet as a mouse in a temple. Daenerys and her companions got off of their dragons with the white ribbon of parley tied to a spear that Barristan held. They lounged in the shadow of her great black dragon, a small protection from the hot sun. Heat did not affect Daenerys. Barristan and Strong Belwas drank diluted wine.

They were patient.

At a third hour past noon, they were called to meet before the terraced walls.

A small, dark skinned girl was pushed forward. “I am Missandei. I will translate.” Barristan saw the slave collar around her neck, and he felt his teeth clench.

The small young girl introduced Xaro Xhoan Daxos, a member of the Thirteen that spoke for the City. The Tourmaline Brotherhood, and the Ancient Guild of Spicers had their high, noble families on the walls too. Pyat Pree of the House of the Undying was there to represent the warlocks of Qarth.

“What do you want, Daenerys Targaryen? Why have you upset our city with these dragons? What have we to do with you?” Missandei translated Xaro Xhoan Daxos as he spoke for Qarth.

“I have come for your surrender. A new world order has arrived. I am its agent. The slave trade will be destroyed.”

“Yes.”

A long pause followed.

“I see. You are nothing if not confident. You have us at a disadvantage. What will happen if we don’t accept your demands?” Missandei translated back and forth.

Barristan watched Daenerys turn to wave at her dragons.

“I will free your slaves or burn your city to the ground. The choice is yours” Daenerys shouted up to the nobles. Her very body language one of pure confidence.

The leaders conferred with many dire looks being shot down at them.
“We will meet you tomorrow when the sun rises over the outside wall. Be gone.”

“I think not.”

“Wwhhaatttt?”

Daenerys pointed to the nearby large pyramid. “We will reside on the top terrace.”

“I forbid it!”

“DRACARYS!”

Large gouts of dragon fire filled square and shot up into the air.

“Like I said, you can have the top terrace or the whole Pyramid if you so desire. The family of Grizmok mo Rhazn will vacate the pyramid. We will talk in the morning when sun clears the wall.”

They rode their dragons onto the top of the pyramid. Barristan had been told by Daenerys about her dragon’s ability to see beyond human vision. They immediately set up watch with the dragons diligently scanning the city with their infrared vision.

They shared their vision with their mother. She saw much confusion, but nothing organized. Barristan was nervous. He knew the leaders of Qarth would not surrender. He wouldn’t. They could not understand the full power of a dragon.

He was nervous but felt safe enough since they were under the flag of truce. He knew that they would have to fly off and come back and use force if necessary to break the city later.

He gave Daenerys credit for her gambit. It was worth a try.

Daenerys

Daenerys relaxed with her back to the wall. She had spied a caracal with the nobles moving around and jumping up on the wall to peek inside. She had watched the interpreter petting the strange cat as the nobles conferred.

She sent out her consciousness into the city towards the most ornate pyramids, slipping into various higher animals. She did not see anything going on through their eyes.

She was about to stop when she looked out of a set of eyes and saw the people she had encountered on the wall. They were conferring. She listened to their speech but it was only gibberish to her. She felt a scratching behind her ears that had Daenerys purring along with the animal. The animal started to lick itself, and she felt the tongue rasp along fur. So it was indeed a cat. The animal looked up at the person scratching it and saw it was the small interpreter gnawing her lip and looking at the leaders with hidden fury and fear.

They were planning treachery. Of course they were. She watched them for an hour discussing their plans and heard much anger, fear and confusion. They were ripe for defeat.

Daenerys did not tell Barristan. He would demand they fly off. She had to meet her destiny. As long as they did not surprise her dragons with some unseen weapons she would be in control. Her dragons had been hurt once and they watched the city very carefully looking for any similar danger.

This was why Daenerys had wanted to strike so soon. They had no warning and, thus, could not prepare any defense. She would have her city tomorrow.

The next morning at the break of dawn they flew their dragons down to the courtyard and then Viserion and Rhaegal flew up onto the inner wall, sitting down comfortably while their necks constantly craned around to look for any danger.

At two hours past dawn the nobles came out on the wall, keeping their distance from the dragons.

Pyat Pree stepped forward along with the slave translator. “We have determined that you are indeed the child of prophecy. You have a great destiny to fulfill. This is as much a spiritual quest as physical.”

“You will need answers to this destiny. If you come to our temple,” he pointed to the north side of the city, “you will find the clues and portents you will need to reach your destiny.”

Since her encounter with the ur-viles Daenerys was able to recall fragments of her journey in the afterlife and the meeting with two great women of power. Daenerys remembered what Infelice and Linden Avery had said when she was crossing back to the world of life. That she was her own destiny. Still, she knew she may learn something useful. Her fist clenched. She sensed danger, but that did not matter. She would never back down from a challenge.

“Do you accept our invitation?”

“I do.”

“Daenerys—No! This is a trap!” Barristan called out loudly, twisted with fear for her.

“It does not matter, Barristan. I will I not shy away. I may learn something of use.”

Daenerys turned to Pyat Pree. “I will go to your temple.”

She went to Drogon and lightly climbed up on his back, then took off gaining altitude and flew in the direction that Pyat Pree had pointed in. She soon saw the House of the Undying - she was not impressed. It seemed to be dilapidated. It looked dusty and old with faded walls and the roofs of the various levels seeming to sag.

She saw a figure at the door as she landed and dismounted. She was shocked to see Pyat Pree, already waiting.

They stood before each other. “Follow these directions specifically. You must. If you do not, you will never come out. When you enter the temple you must always take the first door on the right, and always take the stairs upward. One must not enter into any room they pass, no matter what vision they see, until they reach the audience chamber - always turn right, and always head up the stairs to reach this.”

Daenerys nodded. “I’m ready”

“Then enter,” he said, pointing to the door.

Daenerys moved towards the door and then stopped looking back with a cocked eyebrow. “You not coming? Surely you are not afraid of your own temple are you?”

“This is a journey that must be made alone”

Daenerys shrugged and entered. She calmly walked, going down twisting corridors. Soon she was seeing doors and hearing sounds that were either alluring or frightening. She walked on unaffected. She had calmed her mind the night before, and remained focused on her mission.

She simply did not care what these warlocks had to say. She was uninterested in anything they thought they knew. She felt compulsions trying to force her to look to the sides in the doors. She knew they wanted to distract her. The pull felt stronger and she smiled. She did not care, and continued on calmly.

She felt the frustrations rising up in the building. She was not playing their game. She smiled grimly.

She suddenly felt visions being pressed in on her. She did not resist; she would look. She saw various visions of men and their futures. She was not a man so did not care. She saw her beloved horse trotting in a stream under stars. She was dead, so what did it matter?

“Hahahahahaha!” Daenerys started to laugh as she walked, her body shaking with her mirth. “I don’t give a fuck about your fucked up visions. Stop boring me!” she continued walking.

Suddenly, she had arrived. She felt it. It was a large banquet hall filled with long tables heavily laden with food. She saw the room filled with men and women in the prime of their lives. They called to her to enter and join them in the feast. To come, and she would have answers.

She leaned against the wall beside the door and yawned, then looked at her nails.

She felt confusion beginning to build in the room.

The persons urged her with greater urgency to enter. She pulled out a Valyrian dagger and trimmed her nails. “Can we get this over with? I have a city to conquer.”

They stopped eating their feast and started to move towards her.

She heard them as whispers started to come to her from many different voices. She heard "mother of dragons" and "child of three". Wow, I already knew that! she thought to herself.

I came in here for this? Daenerys patience was fraying. “Can we speed this up please? I grow bored.”

She heard whispered prophesies, "three fires must you light... one for life and one for death and one to love... three mounts must you ride... one to bed and one to dread and one to love... three treasons will you know... once for blood and once for gold and once for love..."

“ENOUGH! I have three dragons, big deal. I have loved and lost and been betrayed.”

She looked around and whipped out her rune sword, the pearly blue light surrounding her slight frame.

“There is something you do not understand. … I don’t give a fuck! I am YOUR destiny!” She pushed off of the wall and marched forward, her eyes filled with wrath.

Suddenly the young, beautiful people turned hideous. They morphed into ancient and withered bodies, their flesh violet blue and even their nails and white of their eyes had turned blue from drinking the shade-of-the-evening.

Their clawed hands reached out for her. Her sword flashed out and an arm was chopped off. The form shrieked, but continued moving in.
Daenerys became a whirl of flashing sword as limbs and heads were severed but still the crowd moved in. She was not afraid.

“Drogon! Morghot nēdyssy sesīr zūgusy azantys vestras!” The building shook once, and then again. The third time the ceiling collapsed. Sunlight poured in as one very pissed off Dragon dropped down.

“DRACARYS!” Loud roars of rage filled the hall and fire blasted out of Drogon’s mouth, incinerating a large gathering of Warlocks stunned by his sudden appearance. Daenerys chopped and swirled, her blade killing and maiming. Her dragon slashed his tail and stomped on several figures. Drogon fired out great gouts of flame. She spied several Warlocks attempting to climb up Drogon’s body and she threw two daggers, piercing their necks and killing them.

In a minute it was over as the survivors fled off in various directions. She climbed up on Drogon and vaulted into the open sky above. She surveyed the temple and had Drogon set fire to both sides of the Banquet Hall, then flew off.

A minute later she was back at the outer wall of Qarth. She landed and dismounted in the courtyard, covered in dust and soot from her battle.

“I have listened to your Warlocks and found their answers wanting. Most are dead now. Surrender or die. My patience is over.” Daenerys announced with deadly calm.

Barristan

He watched shock ripple through the nobles. He got into a combat stance along with Strong Belwas on the other side of the nobles. They had not moved closer any to the nobles, not wanting to escalate the situation.

He had waited with anxious unease. For over an hour all had waited in nervous agitation. Barristan knew his Queen had to meet her destiny alone sometimes. He had no use for prophecy. He did not believe in it, but still, he avoided it.

He watched Xaro Xhoan Daxos produce a small war horn. His eyebrows knotted. What was this? The man put it to his lips and blew. A sharp, high pitched note rang out.

Daenerys had started, and her dragons shook their heads hard back and forth, looking stunned.

The leader of the thirteen spoke out with the slave interpreter translating. “You have overplayed your hand. In our family for generations we have had this Valyrian Dragon Horn. It was a mere ornament before, but now it has made me a great dragon lord.”

“Drogon! Come to me!” Xaro commanded the dragon. The dragon hesitated, looking at Daenerys. “Now!” The dragon flew up to land beside the group of nobles who shirked away from the massive beast.

Barristan saw out of the corner of his eye a man suddenly stand up in front of the ornate fountain in the center of the courtyard. He was a massive warrior from the slave fighting pits. The fountain must have had a hidden trap door.

Dammit! You can’t think of every possibility! Barristan screamed to himself.

He started to yell out Daenerys’ name out but he was too late. The man had a massive spear. He watched in horror as the man in a fast, deadly motion hurled his spear at the young Targaryen’s back.

The spear hit hard and flung the woman forward, her body slamming down onto the paved court and laying still. The spear fell away, clinking on the stones.

Xaro Xhoan Daxos looked triumphant. He looked over at Barristan who was staring at the fallen body of his Queen. “Prepare to die, old man.” Xaro smirked. “I will enjoy having your own dragons kill you and that fat eunuch.”

He motioned to Drogon, who lowered his head. He reached up, hesitating to touch the great dragon’s toothed snout.

A motion caught their attention from the courtyard. The slave warrior had stepped out of the pool and awaited his next order. Everyone spied the female form on the courtyard stones slowly levering her body up to her hands and knees, and then standing up.

Barristan’s spirit soared. The dragon bone chain mail! The fine black links crafted so small and fine, with the interlocked links magically bonded. The mail had felt almost felt like silk in his fingers. It had blocked the spear point from penetrating.

Xaro Xhoan Daxos screamed at the warrior. He charged the white haired woman. In a whirl, the scion of House Targaryen pulled her sword out and chopped mightily at the warrior. She landed her sword into the man’s hip, sinking it deep into his pelvis. The man screamed and fell like a chopped tree. She turned back around as the man slowly died.

Xaro Xhoan Daxos looked at the interpreter, yelling at her as she blanched. She weakly spoke out: “Defend me and kill my enemies!”

Drogon lifted his head and looked down at his former master. His mouth opened wide as Xaro Xhoan Daxos looked on with triumph.

The whole mass of humanity surrounding them paused at this moment. The tableau of life and death being played out. Xaro Xhoan Daxos was rising up and down on his feet in excitement. He wanted to see a person broiled in dragon’s fire.

Barristan could not believe it. Magic had overwhelmed his Queen’s mental link with her dragons. He was watching in horror.

He watched Drogon’s head rise higher and his body breathed in.

“Noooooooo!” he roared. Drogon moved in a flash, his head twisted down and his mouth slamming shut, chopping Xaro Xhoan Daxos’ body in half. His legs toppled to the terrace and his left arm severed at the elbow fell with it. The rest the dragon breathed fire over bodily remains in its maul and swallowed with a loud gulp. The other two dragons then focused on the screaming and trembling nobles.

Daenerys

“You simple fools! You think that blowing a horn means anything! You have no magic. I am magic given flesh!”

“DRACARYS!”
Rhaegal and Viserion let forth huge gouts of flaming death that incinerated large swaths of nobles on the wall. The screams of the dying filled the air.

A large group of soldiers started to run into the courtyard, down the avenues. Drogon jumped down off of the wall and breathed out fire on one column. Men’s bodies were incinerated as flesh and muscled charred to charcoal and bones melted, the metal and leather of their uniforms igniting or melting.

Drogon hopped and jumped into the other column of soldiers and crushed them to the ground with his weight. His head shot down, and he snapped bodies in half, his body pivoting his tail and whipping it into soldiers snapping bones and crushing skulls.

Then the black dragon jumped up and let out a few more gouts of flame, finishing his kills.

Daenerys looked up and her two other dragons were running down the wide top of the walls and letting out gout after gout of flaming death.

Barristan and Strong Belwas held their swords out, but had no targets to engage. Daenerys’ dragons were slaughtering the noble families.

Drogon went to her and flew her up into the air. She urged her dragon back to the Temple of the Undying and burned it down to ash from one end to the other. She looked up and saw Barristan flying down to the docks as several warships were trying to sail away. Viserion quickly burned them both. Crewmembers jumped overboard as she ships quickly sunk.

Viserion flew back and forth over the harbor. Arrows shot out from the left guard tower at the entrance to the harbor. Soon it was a flaming oriflamme.

She along with Barristan flew around the city. Whenever they spotted a group of men trying to form up they dove down and her dragons burned both the men and the surrounding buildings to the ground. Buildings reduced to slag and bodies burned to char and ash.

Rhaegal was running around the walls of the city killing anyone who came upon it. He burned and simply brushed others to their death.

Suddenly, Rhaegal took a small girl into his mouth. The young girl screamed in terror, and Daenerys realized it was the slave interpreter.

Oh No! She thought to herself in horror. Not the innocent!

Before she could think or act she watched Rhaegal lower his head and gently place the wildly kicking girl into Strong Belwas’ arms, as he gently took the gift and held the girl close to his large body. Rhaegal shot down the wall where he spied a few soldiers that had appeared. He chased them using his head to batter into their bodies, sending them toppling off of the wall to their deaths.

Daenerys was exhausted. She had spent the remainder of the day and a long night putting down insurrections of nobles. They would rally first here and then there with mercenaries or loyal slave fighters. Barristan, Strong Belwas and herself brought in one or two dragons to burn the resistance down. Fires were raging all over the city. Whole blocks had been burned to the ground.

She kept one dragon and rider on high to keep an eye on things. The slaves were uprising and killing their masters. This was not what she wanted, but had no ground troops to put down the uprising. She wanted the old order removed but not with senseless bloodshed. Her own family’s history warned her against that.

She had her dragons buzzing the city constantly throughout the night, roaring strenuously and keeping everyone’s heads down with fear.

It was a few hours past dawn. She had landed back where it had all started two days ago. They were worn but knew they had to keep going. Her dragons could carry on for another day or two.

She saw the slave interpreter sleeping on some furs by a wall. She walked over and bent down to shake the girl awake. Strong Belwas had been busy. He had setup a large anvil and a set of tools.

The girl awoke with fright in her eyes.

“What is your name?”

“Missandei.”

“Where are you from?”

“I was born in Naath where I was captured. I grew up in Astapor. I was sold four months ago to Xaro Xhoan Daxos to be his interpreter and to be his youngest son’s sex slave when he came of age.”

Daenerys felt her anger flare. She guided the girl over to the anvil. The girl looked around.

“I am to be your slave now?”

“I think not.”

“Then one of these great warriors?”

“Not today.” Daenerys pushed the girl to her knees. Strong Belwas picked up his tools and in a minute the girl’s slave collar was gone. She fingered her neck.

“What does this mean?” she asked looking up at Daenerys.

“You are free. I’m freeing this whole City. I will do this all along Slaver’s Bay. This is the first day of the beginning of the end of the Slave Trade.”

“You’re not going to become the new ruler of Qarth?”

“I am, but there will be no slaves. If I can get any of the families to work with me I will bring them in. Otherwise I will cast them out with only the clothes on their back if they resist.”

Suddenly, off to the left a group of slave warriors with two Qarth slave holders burst out a doorway.

Three swords were whipped out of scabbards and three dragons rose up on their toes, shaking with the desire for fresh combat.

The small interpreter ran out from Daenerys and Belwas as they tried to grab ahold of her.

She ran forward, yelling in the native language. She stopped in front of the warriors. They looked at her and a rapid back and forth question and answer conversation occurred. The small black girl pointed at her neck.

The slave warriors turned and dispatched their masters. They walked up to Daenerys. They looked down at the small woman. They stared at the pale, thin scar on the side of her face and the scars on her hands.

Daenerys pointed to the anvil. The men stared in wonder and moved over to it.

- - - - -

It was late in the day and they were barely controlling the city. The slaves were rising up in greater numbers and the nobles of Qarth were organizing. She had not have the forces to keep the city in check.

She looked out over the harbor and out to sea. She jumped up, her body rigid and she felt adrenaline pumping through her veins. She saw the first specks of ships approaching the harbor.

First it was one. Then a second and a third appeared. Then across the horizon dots started to join in. She was not ready for another battle!

“Barristan!” she yelled. He was down in the courtyard talking to a slave warrior with Missandei interpreting. He was trying to start putting together a garrison to bring the city under control.

He looked up. “I need you up here now! Ships approach!” Daenerys saw the look of doubt cross over his face. They could do major damage with their dragons, but she could see the first signs of exhaustion in her scaled son’s eyes. They only had so much more fight left in them. The air gusted around her around as Viserion landed and Barristan jumped down.

He looked out to sea and he sighed. He too knew they were not ready for another fight.

He took out his spy glass and trained it on the ships now thick across the horizon. Daenerys was impressed with the size of the approaching vessels even though they were still far out to sea.

“Well I’ll be damned.” Barristan softly exclaimed.

“What is it Barristan? Do we need to get our dragons awing? How much time do we have?”

“They are from the Summer Islands, Daenerys. I think you will be interested to see what is on the towering front mast of the lead ship. Look at the top there.” He handed the spy glass to his queen.

“You will see a flag with Two Peacocks in full bloom on it, which represents a major house I think but it is the flag riding above it in a place of honor that I want you to focus on.”

Daenerys pointed her glass at the ship that Barristan pointed out. She first looked at the ship itself. It was thing of beauty, the lines graceful for such a large ship. The three masts were towering in their height.

She saw dark-skinned men and women manning the deck and working up in the rigging. She saw archers in the rigging and along the rails. She saw men and women with swords and spears on the deck.

She lifted her spy glass up the foremast. She looked up and up, and then gasped.

Above the flag of the peacocks rode a large white flag. On the flag was the three-headed Dragon of House Targaryen.

Tears started to run down Daenerys cheeks.

EPILOGUE
Barristan

“Are you ready, my Queen?” Barristan asked his liege.

Daenerys looked bedraggled in her soiled, sheer wrap-dress that clung to her alluring curves. Her medium sized, perfect breasts pressed into the material. Her hair was matted and hanging limp against her body. She had dirt on her face and makeup had been expertly applied to make it look like her left cheek had an ugly contusion on it.

“It is ‘are your ready slut?’ ” Daenerys corrected, enjoying how the stiff formal knight grimaced and made a sour face. “I am your bed slave, Barristan. We need to get close to them. I want to see their eyes.”

“I know Jelaera Taeneneos. I still don’t like this. Why couldn’t you get Syrio Forel to take this role?”

“Because I wanted you.” Daenerys batted her long eyelashes, making Barristan sigh. “They will enjoy seeing an older man controlling a young woman. Their dogs and will like the show of power. I want my revenge, and I want them to feel total triumph. Only then will I strike. We have prepared our little appreciation gift and I want to fully enjoy it.”

They had ridden Drogon down to the coast about forty miles below the anchorage that Illyrio had set up. The harbor of Qarth was filled with Summer Islander ships. The nation’s various factions had pledged total allegiance. They wanted in at the beginning of “this epic quest of justice and vengeance”. Illyrio’s small fleet had come in several days ago.

Daenerys was elated. She had her fleet so much quicker than she had planned, and she was not going to waste any time. She had conferred with her generals, Barristan and Syrio, the Summer Islanders and the captains of the two mercenary companies.

It was decided they would take Ax Isle. It was a land of corsairs that harried all shipping in this part of the world. She would end that blight. It would provide anchorage for her fleets that would be closer to the main shipping lanes and give her an advance base to launch her next attacks. The Summer Islanders had told the Queen that they would retain command of their ships but would follow her directives. They had complete faith in the Breaker of Chains, as they called her.

She had worked her hands raw breaking chains herself as the men, women and children looked on her with awe. This was their new ruler and she herself was breaking their chains? She was freeing them? Just who was this woman?

Of course they fell in love with her, calling her “mother”. Barristan shook his head at the memory. She naturally drew people of good heart to her.

Illyrio had arranged for the Golden Lions to meet her at this location. They had prepared well for the meeting. Several horses were brought out from the small stable that had been set up. This had been planned for weeks. They mounted their horses and Dany attached the leash to her choker as Barristan took the lead.

They went down the track for several miles till they came out of the wadi to a small plain. They saw the members of the Golden Company waiting for them.

Barristan slowly rode up to the group.

“I am Barristan, and this is my pleasure slave Jelaera Taeneneos. I hear you have expertise in killing Valyrians. I need to have a certain family eliminated. They live in Astapor.”

Daenerys made a strangled sound and Barristan jerked hard on her collar, making her nearly fall out of her seat.

Barristan got off his horse and jerked cruelly on his leash as the small, frail slave fell off of her mount and landed hard onto the ground.

The men laughed at her plight.

Barristan jerked up his slave as she whimpered.

“I had my eye on this slut for a long time and her family would not sell her to me. I had to have her stolen. They are causing me problems. I need you to kill them.”

“We will gladly do as you wish. Illyrio says that you will meet our fee plus incentives.”

“Yes. I want the mother and her two other children raped and killed before her,” he jerked hard on Jelaera’s collar for emphasis. “Then rape and kill the mother. “I want her father to witness all this before you castrate him. Only then will you kill him, after he has suffered for several days. Do you think you can handle that?”

“Hahahaha! I think we can manage that.”

“You sound like you will enjoy doing your work.”

“Oh yeah. I always love raping girls. They are so sweet when they scream.”

“I see.”

Barristan swatted his horses hard on rump and they bolted off at a wild gallop.

The leader looked strangely at Barristan. “Why did you do that?” suspicion rising up in him as his command got edgy.

“I believe my slave has something to tell you.”

Barristan suddenly jumped to the left to the ground that gave way as he fell into the pit and rolled over, pulling the mats from Illyrio overtop of his body.

The men were beyond confused by this strange behavior. They looked at the Valyrian woman who suddenly did not look so weak and docile. She stared at them with hot eyes full of rage.

“What the fuck are you staring at, bitch?”

“DRACARYS!”

The men were so focused on the strange tableau in front of them they never saw the black dragon flying in fast behind them.

Fires hotter than any blast furnace shot out of the dragon’s mouth and enveloped the men as they instantly caught fire, their bodies broiled and charred to the bone. Their screams were loud and hideous but quickly cut off as throats were burned shut.

The flames engulfed and burned off Daenerys Targaryen’s clothes. She stood regally in the inferno as the killers of Kisseri met their violent end. She watched them burn down to a few ashen thigh bones and broken skulls.

Barristan slowly climbed out after a few minutes to find his Queen kicking a few of the skulls out into the wastes.

She looked at him with grim satisfaction.

“Nothing can bring back my Kiserri, but I hope her poor little soul is resting a little easier.”

Barristan could only nod his head. The innocent always fell when the Game of Thrones was played.

Love Among The Roses

Two Years Ago

Sansa

Sansa stood on the ramparts of Winterfell anxiously awaiting the ‘royal’ carriage of Highgarden. The outriders had come through just the day before, late in the afternoon. She had hurried out to the courtyard just as the four riders came underneath the main gate, and to Sansa, they had looked like something from a minstrel’s song.

The men were all resplendent in their tight fitting plate armor, polished so that it gleamed like mirrors in the bright sun. Their helms were adorned with ceremonial roses fashioned into the crown. The roses themselves were enameled with red and yellow paint, making them glow in the light. Green leaves and stems with thorns ran up the sides of the helms, with some of the thorns tipped with red. The roses were beautiful, and held just a hint of danger hidden amongst the flowers.

Armor that had never seen combat was polished silver. Each edge of plate fit precisely into its fitted mate. Dark green chainmail was visible at the shoulder, elbow and knee joints like the stems of a rose. The polished heels of the knights’ boots had gold spurs that gleamed brightly in the sun.

The two lead knights held high standards with two flags flapping hard in the breeze. The lead banner was a large shield-shaped flag, colored green with a large yellow rose in full resplendent bloom in the middle. Beneath the rose the saying of their house: “Growing Strong” in a flowing script of intertwined letters and roses.

Below the main standard was the flag of House Stark, the howling Direwolf snarling at its foes. It was nice touch, Sansa thought. She shivered at the romanticism of it all.

Next she looked closer at the war horses the riders were riding. The horses were adorned with silver armor also that glinted like suns come to earth. The horse’s heads were covered from behind their ears to the snout in silver armor pierced with eyelets for their ears, eyes and nostrils. Each horse’s armor was obviously crafted for each individual horse and its unique dimensions. Plates of armor went down the horses’ necks to cover their manes. A large piece of plate armor covered their front haunches, and had a raised scallop for the front of the knight’s legs to rest against, securing the rider. A large plate of armor rested on the top of the rear haunches of the horses to give full range of motion. Sansa smiled at another small armor adornment: a small ringlet of armor around the base of the horses’ tails. Armor blankets thick as undercoats were also present on each, brown with yellow cross stitch patterns adorning them. The saddles were war saddles with a shallow scoop, allowing the riders full motion while in the saddle. They had yellow roses stitched into the leather, giving bright relief. All of the armor on the horses was held in place by dark straps of leather looped around the belly of the beast, connected by buckles.

The visual effect of the knights and horses was very powerful to the almost seventeen year old Stark girl. The knights looked so gallant, riding tall and proud on their war horses. The horses nickered and threw their heads in restive restraint, their hooves pounding the ground as if anxious to seek and attack any adversary.

She waited on the wall of Winterfell impatiently for the arrival of the main retinue of Highgarden. The herald knights had spoken of minstrels, court musicians and mummers in the troop to provide entertainment. Sansa was ecstatic since they never had such visitors. She already had her wish list of songs she wanted to hear: The Dornishman's Wife, It's Always Summer Under the Sea, Gentle Mother, Font of Mercy, The Bear and the Maiden Fair being first in line.

Then around the bend of the road hidden by the forest, the retinue of House Tyrell finally appeared. Sansa’s heart accelerated. They had finally arrived. She was giddy with excitement. Even more knights still flanked the large ‘royal’ carriage. It was massive. The wheels were almost as tall as her five foot nine inch height. The wheels were shod in bronze. She noticed the spokes of the wagon were carved and painted to look like garlands of roses running from hub to rim.

The wagon gently jerked to and fro as it navigated the rutted road. It was flanked by ten knights with their rose crested helms of Highgarden. These knights had flowing green capes, trimmed in sable. The tops of their capes were not trimmed, but resplendent in fox fur. They carried spears with small Tyrell standards just below the tips, fluttering back as they slow cantered their horses forward.

The four herald knights went out from Winterfell and fell in line in front of the procession with standards held high. Together the whole procession then slowly approached Winterfell.

The main carriage was windowed on both sides with panes that folded out from center crosspieces. The windows were designed to open from the middle, with small awnings covering the apertures. The awnings were done up in a checkered patterns with tassels hanging down from the edges. The tassels jerked wildly with the motions of the carriage.

The cabin of the main carriage was made of wood panels with dovetail borders. The outer panels were painted green with the insets of the panels painted yellow. The main inset on the panels of the door on each side had yellow roses painted on them. The border of the door panels were enclosed in a garland of carved, entwined roses painted mainly yellow but with red, pink and purple that made the garland seem like a riot of color, displaying life and wealth to Sansa’s eyes.

The garland filled with vines that the roses sprung off of, and the dangerous thorns ever present. Beauty marked with danger was the clear message.

The top of the carriage had had two turrets on each end, with intricate scrollwork that made complicated geometric patterns that then lead up to the central adornment that was twice as tall. Two outer caps had waves rushing inward to hold up the traditional crown of Old Highgarden, painted in gay colors of red, green and yellow. The jewels encrusted in their royal crown were real. Highgarden had great wealth that they clearly wanted to advertise to all they visited.

It all made Sansa giddy. Ten supply wagons followed next, stacked high with supplies and accouements for the royals when they made camp. Between the royal carriage and supply train were four more covered carriages that carried lesser royals and the more genteel members of the party, including the musicians and entertainers that Sansa longed to see perform.
Around this party rode fifty more mounted troops that watched over charges like ranging wolves protecting their young. These knights guarding the carriage proper were resplendent in polished armor and bore the sigils on their horse blankets of House Tyrell. They were beautiful to behold, but not as resplendent as the herald knights. Sansa watched them until the party approached the main gate, and then ran down to the inner court.

Once there, Sansa smoothed out her dark aquamarine dress. The flowing hemline was just off the ground, and the hips and shoulders were done in medium black, with ruffles stitched on the latter, making her shoulders appear larger. Her dress swept off the ground in a feathery swirl with her motions. Diamond patterns ran up from her waist and around her hips like a belt, and the back of her arms were black, while the front patterned in aquamarine velvet.

She knew Loras would be impressed with both her dress, and her own groomed appearance.

She had her face expertly made up with eyeliner to highlight her eyes, and her lashes teased out full and resplendent. Her cupid bow mouth was adorned with light red lipstick. Tully blue eyes sparkled, and her hair was teased behind her perfect ears, flowing down her back.

She knew she had to make a good impression on her possible future husband. Her stomach was fluttering with butterflies.

She was surrounded by men and women of Winterfell, each excited to have such gaily adorned visitors from the South.

Sansa watched several men leave the next transport wagon, and come up to the royal wagon. The men wore livery that was basic brown trimmed with yellow, and black trousers. The crest of Highgarden was on their breast pockets.

They opened the doors and pulled out the step down ladders, securing them into the slot holes on the wagon side to stabilize it. They then offered their arms to the royals inside.

Mace and his wife Aleria stepped out, followed by Olenna - Mace’s mother. The grandmother, though small, still seemed vital in her off-white dress.

Sansa’s parents went forward to meet the Lords of the great house of Highgarden. Her father was striking in his wolf cape. Her mother was beautiful in a dark dress that set off her auburn locks and blue eyes. They both exchanged salutations of greetings, and offered the royals of Highgarden a light fare to break their fast. Sansa smiled at her father. He was giving the ‘Guest Right’, showing they had nothing to fear in the ritual of royal good faith.

Then Loras stepped out of the carriage. He was tall in his light armor, tinted in the green and yellow of his house. She could see he was well muscled beneath the plates, with long, curly hair that reached his shoulders like a lion’s main. He took her hand and kissed her knuckles, then smirked at her with gaiety in his eyes. “You are as beautiful as the minstrels sing, Sansa Stark.” He spoke in a seductive purr.

The herald offered his arm to the princess, and Margaery stepped out onto the steps and walked down as Loras took her other hand. She had long, brown hair in loose curls that ran down her back to her shoulder blades, and covered her ears.
Her dress did not encase her shoulders, leaving her alabaster skin exposed. Sansa felt her stomach clench for some strange reason. The green dress had long pleats, every fourth one yellow to appear and disappear with a beguiling swirl as the Tyrell moved. The sleeves of the dress followed the lines of long, toned arms, and ruffles flowered out like garlands around perfect wrists. Long, tapered fingers were topped with fingernails that were painted dark green.

Sansa’s eyes caressed those digits. Then she looked up the dress, and saw it had wire underneath Margaery Tyrell’s small bosom, pushing up her breasts. The dress was highlighted with a choker strap from shoulder to shoulder that was dark green, and from that choker strap down to the décolleté cut dress was transparent lace that only accentuated the breast of the Tyrell teen. This was all set off with a pendant that hung around her neck, and nestled between her breasts. The pendant had a large, smooth pinkish stone in the center. The gem was enclosed by a hexagon, with a larger hexagon surrounding the smaller one, encrusted with zirconia. It perfectly set off Margaery’s dress.

Sansa was breathing a little harder, her face flushed. Her eyes devoured those beautiful breasts and her mouth watered in anticipation. What has overcome me? Sansa wondered, feeling her body filling with a burning, pulsing energy.

She looked up into the dark brown eyes that were looking so intently into her own. The world simply fell away, and all that existed were those dark pools. A roar filled her head. The whole world centered on those deep brown eyes staring into her soul. She was stunned, her breathing shallow and her face going pink. The flush quickly spread down her chest and up her breast as Sansa felt the heat of blood rush beneath her skin.

She felt wobbly, and Margaery gripped her arm. “It’s alright, Sansa,” Margaery whispered so only Sansa could hear her, “I feel it too.”

She felt fire where Margaery’s hands gripped her arm, and a strange warmth radiating up into her body making her heart thud in her chest. She gasped quietly, feeling her nipples and clit tingling. Margaery slowly stroked her fingers around on Sansa’s arm in a light circle. The touch inflamed something deep inside Sansa.

Sansa’s eyes widened as she understood what her body was telling her. In the flash of a moment, she had fallen deeply and completely in love with Margaery Tyrell.

Margaery

The rocking and sudden dips of the royal carriage had begun to grate on Margaery’s nerves the further they traveled up the King’s Road. She had made peace with the journey north. She knew she was promised to Joffrey Baratheon, so seeing Robb Stark meant nothing to her. She looked out the window. She hated being handled like a heifer, being married off to some fucking twerp.

Her mother was so dense. Thank the seven gods for her grandmother. Her grandmother had realized early on the true leanings of her granddaughter, niece and cousins. They had such a nice, safe nest in Highgarden where they were free to love and fuck in peace. They had to keep themselves circumspect when around those outside their inner circle – but inside that circle they were free to love each other. Their grandmother had made sure no one was abusing or taking advantage of anyone else. Once she had seen this, she had helped them setup the perfect façade of innocent, familial love.

She had hated having to keep her virginity as one by one her fellow hens took each other’s, but she understood. She was worth a lot with her hymen. Since she had not found the right woman yet, she still kept her grandmother happy with her precious highborn hymen intact for some worthless and probably horrible man, or even boy.
She couldn’t think of Joffrey as anything other than a boy. She had been furious when her parents had come to her so happy, telling her that they had arranged a marriage between her and Joffrey Baratheon, and that she was to one day be Queen of Westeros. Margaery was politically ambitious, but the thought of giving her body to that sadistic piece of shit filled her with sullen anger.

A month later her grandmother had come to her. She had assured her granddaughter that she would never have to marry Joffrey, and she had Margaery take a sip from a cup. It tasted funny, and made her breathing slightly constricted.

“You just drank the poison ‘the strangler’,” Olenna told her granddaughter. Margaery’s eyes bulged out of her sockets. She watched her grandmother chuckle.

It was only after that, that Olenna told Margaery that for the next two years, she would sip ever stronger potions of the deadly poison. Margaery was pissed at her grandmother for her moment of humor at her expense. Olenna explained that by the time of her wedding, she would be immune to the dose she and Joffrey would drink at their wedding banquet.

He would die, and she would be free to grieve with many fake tears of bereavement. She would then marry Tommen when he came of age. That would give Margaery and Olenna time to mold the seemingly sweet boy into a king they could rule through. That, and Margaery could bring her clutch of hens to King’s Landing to have the best of both worlds!

They would take advantage of Cersei holding off on marrying her eldest son. Cersei had enough common sense to see the shit needed more seasoning in hopes he would find himself. Margaery knew the sadistic fucker would never find ‘himself’ - the boy was a cruel despot in the making.

She had resigned herself to not having a good time at Winterfell. She had not been happy to be forced to go North in the first place, and she would just have to make the best of a bad situation. Why couldn’t her father talk to the mighty wolf without her? The North was so… backwards and antiquated.

On her way north she had determined to try to see it in a more positive light. It was ‘provincial’ and ‘quaint’, she decided to think. They were not backwards, just ‘rough’ and ‘homespun’. They rounded a turn in the road, and the mighty castle of Winterfell came into view. She looked out the window at the stronghold. It was hard to image that the castle, in one form or another, had been in this location for almost eight thousand years.

The walls were massive and the blocks fit tight, but it was not adorned like Highgarden, Casterly Rock or King’s Landing. It was functional only. The North said they never forget. She assumed that ‘keeping it simple’ helped them remember. Still, the castle was impressive in its own way.

After they passed underneath the main gate, she watched her family get out of the carriage. First her parents, followed closely by her small grandmother. Her parents were greeted by the great Lord Eddard Stark. They did not seem that impressed, but her grandmother had told her that a wolf in its lair was a truly formidable force. She had them accept food from the Starks as guest rite, and then made small talk as the Starks had clucked and crooned over her grandmother, whom she knew was preening and taking it all in with false modesty.

Her brother got out of the carriage and she soon heard him laying it on thick with the eldest daughter of Eddard. The file on the girl her age was that she was tall and statuesque, and quite beautiful. She would see for herself.

She called out to her hound dog brother. He always told her, “a hole is a hole, sis.”. She got out the carriage and turned to meet the lady who could potentially marry her brother.
The tall, auburn haired young woman turned slightly to look at her. Margaery felt like she had been hit in the stomach as all air left her, and her body was suddenly tingling from the top of her head all the way down to her toes, curling in their supple leather boots. She was on fire, her eyes dilating as they took in this vision from the Age of Heroes. Sansa Stark was a fair Queen of that age, reborn.

Margaery could see that Sansa felt it too. The girl’s blue eyes betrayed her blown pupils. Her breathing was getting ragged. Margaery had more control of her emotions, and took a deep breath. Her body was thrumming like a plucked string on a harp. She felt fire and passion burning through her veins. Her clit and nipples were pounding, and her pussy was getting wet.

Her mother had told her she would have to marry out of duty, and if the gods were very kind to her she may come to love her husband. Her grandmother told her that it was the fortunate few who actually found their life mate. A soul meant just for them. Her grandmother had sighed when she told Margaery this. Olenna told her granddaughter she had been born a generation too soon – and Margaery had never discovered whom her grandmother pined over.

Olenna had told her she would know the instant she met her life mate, if she ever did. Margaery now knew what her grandmother had meant. She took a moment to say a prayer of offering to gods she did not believe in, then she took a step forward and touched the tall, redheaded goddess. She felt the current of attraction and love surging between their bodies. She spoke to the girl, calming her.

She guided Sansa inside, following after their parents. Loras looked at her and Sansa appraisingly. He then nodded his head in acknowledgement. Sansa was hers.

Margaery had to prompt Sansa to answer questions and make replies to general conversation that would cycle to the dazed redhead. Margaery gripped her hand to support and claim the girl as her own. She looked over and saw Olenna looking at them, with her sharp appraising eyes. Margaery could feel her grandmother calculating and weighing options like she always did. Margaery held the piercing gaze, until her grandmother broke contact.

But Margaery knew this contest of wills was not over.

Sansa moved like she was walking through a deep haze. Margaery kept her close, whispering soothing words to her and stroking her hand. Margaery enjoyed the shiver that ran through the redhead’s body at her touch. Sansa’s pussy would taste so good in her mouth later.

“I really love your castle, Sansa. It’s so provincial and appealing … can you show me around? I would really love that.”

Sansa shook her head so enthusiastically ‘yes’ it made Margaery’s heart do funny things in her chest.

Sansa took her on a journey throughout the various houses in the castle’s compound. She was enthralled with the quiet, understated grandeur of the castle now that she gave it her unvarnished attention. The long halls with their old suits of armor and tapestries that were more than a handful of centuries old.

Sansa told Margaery the long history of the Stark family, highlighting the many great accomplishments of Sansa’s ancestors. It was quite impressive, and she hung on some of the great stories - especially Bran the Builder.

Sansa took her to the solarium greenhouse they called the ‘glass gardens’. The room was kept artificially warm by pumping heated water into the enclosed area. As they approached the doorway, Margaery looked up at running wolves chasing an elk, with a large howling Direwolf head in the middle of the bas-relief.
Margaery felt like she had entered into a magical garden. Their fruit trees were in full bloom, rebelling against the seasons of nature. Many exotic flowers in bloom filled the room with a sweet elixir of intoxicating scents.

She smiled at the blue roses that the North was famous for. She plucked one, and put it in Sansa’s hair over her right ear. Sansa smiled tremulously. Margaery moved in until her smaller body was pressed into the taller Stark, looking up at the trembling redhead. They stared intently into each other’s eyes. Sansa’s breathing began to rise, and become ragged.

Margaery cupped the back of Sansa’s head and pulled her down, slowly holding eye contact until their lips met and they kissed sweetly, with tremulous lips gently caressing. Sansa whimpered. Margaery wanted so bad to deepen the kiss, but sensed she needed to bring her love along slowly.

They went back inside to the main hall when the dinner hour had arrived. In the main hall, Catelyn Stark swooped in like a diving hawk and swept Sansa off Margaery’s arm and quickly sat Sansa next to her brother. Loras, to his credit, looked chagrined.

Margaery sat between her mother and grandmother, fuming. Olenna leaned into her granddaughter. “Control yourself Margaery, don’t overreact here … you know how to play the Game of Thrones”. Margaery calmed down. She and Sansa made direct eye contact that only Olenna and Loras caught.

Margaery and Sansa picked at their food. Margaery smiled, watching Sansa use her fork to spear peas with obvious frustration. Margaery made the conversation that was required of her, along with the expected smile.

When the meal was finished, Margaery was back on Sansa’s arm in a flash. “Sansa, do you think I can sleep with you while I am here? …I’m used to sleeping with my cousins and I don’t want to sleep alone in this big, scary castle that I am not used to.” She asked the redhead while batting her eyelashes.

She felt so hot seeing Sansa gulp loudly. The two milled around the banquet hall. Margaery could see that she was waiting for her father to move away from his wife. Finally, it happened and Sansa set off to talk to Eddard. Margaery saw the initial surprise on Eddard Stark’s face as he listened to Sansa make her case. He looked at her, squinted, and then a slow, soft smile appeared on his face.

Eddard Stark slowly guided Sansa back to Margaery. He clapped her softly on her back and told Margaery he didn’t want any of the old ghosts of Winterfell scaring her. Margaery already liked Eddard Stark a lot. He exuded calm and charm with his every breath. Margaery had seen her grandmother gazing at Eddard with long looks as well. She now knew who her grandmother had fancied when she wore the body of a younger woman.

A few minutes later, Sansa’s mother came surging over telling Sansa that she could not allow Margaery to sleep with her. Sansa needed to spend all her free time with Loras. That was her duty. Margaery saw Sansa start to wilt as her own dander started to rise. Sansa’s lips began to tremble, and eyes brimmed with tears. The Tyrell felt her heart ache seeing Sansa so distraught. But Margaery dared not lash out at the harridan.

Suddenly, Eddard was there and he told Catelyn that surely she did not mean for Sansa to entertain Loras at night in her bed. Catelyn was nonplussed, and started to splutter. She protested that was not what she had said. His riposte of “let the girls have their time Cat, you know Sansa doesn’t have any girl bonding time with Arya,” seemed to work. Eddard then led her off.

Margaery was starting to really love that man. Sansa was hers.
Sansa

Sansa was so nervous in her room that first night. She and Margaery sat on her bed, laughing and gossiping about this rival or that one. They made a show of comparing the available male suitors for Sansa. When she asked Margaery about Joffrey, she got slightly upset telling Sansa he was a fucking shit but she just knew the gods would take care of the situation.

Sansa was extremely jealous of the Baratheon even though she knew she had no right to be. The thought of him touching Margaery filled her with anger and burning jealousy.

When Sansa asked how she knew this for certain, Margaery became demure and evasive. Sansa decided to drop it.

When it was time for bed they changed into their nightgowns, chaste and long. Margaery had pulled open a large traveling case that had been placed in Sansa’s room to retrieve hers, and Sansa loved the many sharply detailed roses carved and painted on the wooden case. As always, the color yellow was predominate.

Margaery only kissed her sweetly on the forehead, frustrating Sansa. Sansa lay in bed staring at the ceiling, wondering about these new emotions surging through her body and making her pussy ache with longing. She waited until she heard Margaery’s breathing even out. She turned to look at the sleeping Tyrell with longing and a love she knew she should not feel.

The next day it was formal events with the two families watching formal displays of martial skill. Margaery had been impressed with the displays of sword, ax and bow. Eddard Stark had fought his Castellan, and Margaery had gasped at the man’s speed and skill. She had confessed to Sansa that she had thought Loras was a great sword master, but she now knew he had much ground to gain to match the skills she saw in Eddard Stark. Sansa felt such pride in knowing that Margaery saw the greatness that was her father.

Then a long, formal tour of Winterfell that was slightly tiring, going up and down the many stairs.

Sansa then decided to have her new friend met her Direwolf. Sansa had been afraid of how Margaery would react to the giant wolf. She had indeed trembled slightly, but held her ground as Lady strolled up to the Tyrell girl, her tail high and wagging. The wolf bumped into Margaery and licked her hand. The great wolf’s eyes nearly on level with Margaery. Giggling, Margaery started to pet Lady who whined in pleasure. The Direwolf immediately took to Margaery, licking her face with her long, raspy tongue. Margaery said she wished she had her own Direwolf.

That night they kissed a little more, but Margaery told Sansa to calm herself down and roll over and go to sleep. Sansa had been so frustrated. Why didn’t Margaery want to kiss her more? Sansa’s pussy was aching in need. She wanted so much more, and it frightened her. She had thought she knew what desire was. That ‘desire’ had been a childish thing compared to what she felt when she looked upon Margaery Tyrell. She wanted to take Margaery and give herself to her, even though she was unsure of what that meant, having those feeling for a woman.

She squirmed, knowing that Margaery felt the same emotions. Margaery not taking their feelings and desires to the next level was frustrating the Stark girl no end. Sansa ached to take their building feelings to the next level. She wanted to give herself to Margaery.

The next day Sansa was in heaven, having Margaery on her arm all day. She was so funny and intelligent. They discussed politics and matters of House. She loved being able to discuss such matters with someone who was just as interested in these things. Her mother said that was not a woman’s place. Margaery seemed to eat up politics and the application of power. She was so intelligent and subtle with her thinking.

Sansa fumed a little inside. It was clear to her that in Highgarden, Margaery had not been restricted in furthering her desires to know of governing, and how to wield and work the levers of power. Sansa instinctively knew that Olenna was the true power in Highgarden and that Margaery was being groomed as her successor. What was shocking was that it was evident her parents did not. These two women may use men as their surrogates when necessary, but it would be them guiding and controlling.

That night she and Margaery looked at each other as they stripped and got into their gowns. Sansa had been so fidgety and nervous the first night, covering herself so no intimate skin was revealed. Margaery had smiled knowingly, but did not press Sansa on her shyness. Her calm demeanor quickly settled Sansa. She quickly felt her bashfulness at having another woman see her body fading. She knew her sister Arya would rather have thrown-up than share such a moment with her.

By the third night she was comfortable enough to change out of her dress and into her night gown without covering her body. Margaery, she had sensed, was very immodest about her body being exposed to her, but was being demure for her sake. Sansa needed to prove to Margaery she was her equal. She determined to let the Tyrell see her in all glory and in her imperfections.

She saw Margaery eyeing her breast that night when she let Margaery fully see them for the first time. Sansa was not happy with her cone shaped tits, and the way they hung on her chest - her nipples and areolas were capped over her breasts like candles melted on top.

Margaery caught her, shy and trying to cover her body over when she Margaery looking at her with open appraisal. She asked her to let her fully see her breasts. Sansa demurred but Margaery gently demanded that Sansa show herself to the Tyrell. Sansa dropped her arms and Margaery gasped seeing the Stark’s bosom licking her lips in obvious hunger. The sight had thrilled Sansa down to her core making her pussy wet. Margaery started telling her how beautiful they were. She had Sansa stand before her, then she demanded that Sansa straighten her shoulders and throw out her chest. Finally, Sansa did.

Margaery had continued to gush about how beautiful Sansa’s breasts were. Some lucky person would love making love to them the Tyrell had told Sansa. Sansa had caught the neutral pronoun. “I can tell they will die sucking hard on those lovely breasts and working those pink teats with a swiping tongue.” Sansa’s knees had actually nearly buckled at that, and she had to grip the dresser edge.

She told Margaery she had lost her balance.

Sansa was so flustered she did not see the knowing look in the Tyrell’s eyes, or her tongue lick her lips slowly wetting her lips in anticipation of having the Stark girl in her bed screaming in orgasms of shocking rapture. Her mouthed filled to overflowing the sweet hot girl cum from Sansa’s gushing pussy.

They went to bed, and Margaery stroked Sansa’s hair and kissed her lightly on the lips. They looked deeply into each other’s eyes in the dim light of four candles that were still lit. Margaery scooted closer to Sansa as they faced each other. Sansa could feel Margaery’s knees and pelvis pressing against hers. Margaery gave Sansa sweet feathery kisses gliding and gently pressing their lips together. Then, Margaery leaned in more aggressively. Their kisses became longer, and slowly more passionate. Margaery’s lips glided over hers, and then started to suck and nibble on them. Margaery sucked on Sansa’s lips in turn stretching them and gently teething and rolling them between her lips and tongue. Sansa was mewling in rising pleasure her body rubbing instinctively against Margaery’s body.
Sansa felt like her body was on fire. The feel of her lips being sucked on and nibbled had her pussy on fire. Her nipples were rock hard and throbbed with the need to be touched and sucked. The feelings got even stronger and better when Sansa felt Margaery’s tongue prying her lips open and brushing across her teeth.

Sansa immediately parted her teeth and Margaery’s tongue slid into her mouth. Sansa gasped hard into Margaery’s mouth. Margaery swallowed her sweet lover’s mewling. Then Margaery surged her tongue deep into Sansa’s mouth, finding Sansa’s wet tongue. Sansa groaned hard into the Tyrell’s mouth, feeling her pussy gush, soaking her mound and inner thighs. Margaery wrapped her tongue around Sansa’s oral appendage. Their tongues danced in a wet slippery entwined dance. Sansa gagged in helpless pleasure feeling Margaery’s tongue exploring her mouth and then sliding down her throat. Sansa’s body convulsed and her eyes rolled back hard into her head.

Margaery was emboldened by Sansa’s complete surrender to her advances, and enfolded the teen to her body and pulled their bodies tight. Breasts mashed into each other and wet pussies started to press into the other’s body.

Margaery eventually broke the kiss. She smiled hearing Sansa whine, with a cute pout on her face. “Kiss me back, Sansa,” Margaery softly husked, “show me your need for me—my body.” Sansa’s hand flew to the back of Margaery’s head and threaded into the long silky tresses, and mashed their lips back together. Sansa surged her tongue into Margaery’s mouth and they wetly wrestled around in frantic sensual combat deep in the Tyrell’s mouth.

They kissed for a long time. Finally, Margaery said she needed to get some sleep, still tired from the long travel. Sansa’s breathing was ragged and a light sheen of sweat had started to form on her upper lip and forehead. She was almost stunned at the cessation of their make out session. She had felt so alive and on fire!

Margaery rolled over so her back was to Sansa. Sansa moved in hungry for any contact she could get. They spooned. Sansa tentatively put her arm around the teenage Tyrell. Sansa put her hand near the girl's breast. Sansa sighed happily when the girl gripped her hand and placed it between her small breasts over her heart. Sansa wiggled in happiness but she ached for more. She was frustrated, her cunt swelled and so fucking wet. The warmth of Margaery’s body quickly lulled her anxieties as they cuddled. She could afford to wait.

She waited for Margaery’s breathing to even out. Sansa slowly started to pull her hand free and smiled hearing Margaery whine but she slowly got her hand free. Sansa rolled onto her back. She scooted away from Margaery to give her hands the room they needed. She hiked up her nightgown up over her hips. Sansa was on fire and wasted no time. She shoved her fingers into her mouth to lubricate them.

Sansa’s hand flew south and she worked her fingers between her sopping wet labia lips and slide easily up and down her drooling slit. Sansa frantically stroked her pussy and rubbed and flicked her clit. The Stark’s breathing accelerated and got deeper as she stroked her sopping muff. Sansa pulled on her nipples squeezing them through her nightgown. Sansa had slowly figured out to make her body sing. She had slowly figured out to make her body sing. Sansa rubbed more and more urgently over her slit and now focused on her rock hard clit with fast frantic swipes of her fingers moving in a blur pressing in on her shiny cum soaked rubbin. Her wet cunt making obscene squishing noises as she rubbed even faster over her swollen muffin.

Sansa’s body tensed and her toes curled as she felt her belly tighten up and her thighs spasm. She pressed in harder with her rubbing fingers jacking her clit with fast rubbing fingers. Then her world exploded in shockwaves of throttling bliss.
Sansa swallowed her wails of ecstasy as best she could her body bucking and convulsing. She felt the bed shake and jerk and was thankful that Margaery was such a sound deep sleeper. Sansa gagged in helpless pleasure her mound bucking up off the bed her ass cheeks clenching to push her swollen cunt up into her rubbing fingers. She felt her face clench up her eyes squeezed shut hard as her orgasm slowly started to abet. She glanced over at the sleeping Tyrell. Sansa shook her head to get the sweat out of her eyes. Margaery was still asleep.

Emboldened with this discovery Sansa felt safe to continue giving her body the release it needed. In her raw need for more pleasure and release of sexual tension Sansa missed the knowing smirk and elevated breathing of the pretending to sleep Margaery. Her seduction was proceeding apace. Sansa would soon be hers. Totally and completely.

Over the next forty minutes Sansa jilled off three more to shattering orgasms. She would recover till the aftershocks stopped and her slit stopped jangling so hard. Then Sansa expertly plucked her body yet again; her soul desperate for the release that only masturbation and gut wrenching orgasms could give her. Sansa's body was simply on fire for the sleeping beauty beside her. Her body had bucked so hard she was afraid she would awaken Margaery with her carnal pursuits. Finally, the heat in her loins while not extinguished they had been tamped down.

Later that night Sansa was awakened. She was big spoon and Margaery’s heels jammed her shins as they kicked and Margaery’s sweat slicked body rubbed back into her body. Loud strangled whimpers filled the room as Margaery’s right hand worked frantically on her pussy. “Oh Sansssssaa sucker my clit harder oh gods yesssss yessss—aaauuggggggggg unnggg unnggg arrggguunnggg!” Margaery softly cried out in strangled ecstasy. Margaery writhed and convulsed back against the Stark girl.

Sansa felt fire in her body and elation in her soul hearing Margaery whimper her name while masturbating. Even more Sansa wanted to give her body and her undying love to the teenage Tyrell.

Margaery looked back to see if Sansa was still asleep. Sansa pretended to be asleep but was really watching intently with slit eyes. She watched the girl scoot away and spread out her legs. The Tyrell teenager hiked her skirt up over her hips exposing her wet swollen cunt. Sansa felt her own wet twat clench at the lovely sight. The girl touched her clit but hissed with the sensitive nubbin still jangling hard.

Margaery had been whimpering as strong aftershocks made her face slash and limbs thrash in small jerks. Margaery pulled on her hard little nipples making her hips jerk up as more strong aftershocks flooded the Tyrell's still throbbing clit. When her body had calmed after a few minutes Margaery started to jill off again. Her fingers working her sodden pussy with her own expert skills. Sansa had to bit her tongue to suppress a moan when a thick wash of Margaery musk flooded Sansa's nostrils from the Tyrell's flooding pussy. Sansa nearly gasped seeing the girl shove her fingers into her pussy deep enough to brushing her hymen. Gods Sansa wanted those fingers to be hers. Margaery’s strangled moans quickly became more and more desperate. Then the crest hit Margaery hard. Her body convulsed all over. Margaery’s body shook violently as now cries of ecstasy were only half strangled.

She looked quickly over at Sansa with the fearful look of a little girl getting caught with her hand in the cookie jar. Satisfied she had not been caught she relaxed. Only then did the tension leave Margaery’s body and she slumped back against Sansa and soon was softly snoring.

The next night Margaery asked if they could sleep in the nude like she did in Highgarden. Sansa had gulped and said “why not”. They were both girls after all. Sansa’s nipples were so hard and pussy wet seeing Margaery’s small firm upswept breast with rock hard nipples exposed to her famished eyes. Sansa was shocked at Margaery’s smooth pussy. Margaery’s told her that she liked the feel. Sansa kept her muff close clipped but was enamored by the baby look of Margaery’s puss.

When they got in bed they immediately enfolded each other in their arms and legs entwined mouths seeking each other and kissing ravenously. They had been lightly enfolded into each other but now their bodies were pressed tight and wet quims instinctively found hip and thighs. Their bodies had complete control of their minds now. Wet camel toes started to hump and drag on smooth hips and thighs. Flowing cunt slime soaked and lubricated hips and upper thighs to make it easy to hump and grind their teenage pussies on each other’s trembling bodies.

Sansa knew they should not being this but it felt so damn fucking good. Her body demanded she continue and she could see the same lust addling Margaery’s blown pupils. They clutched their bodies tighter and now ground down hard their wildly trembling twats into each other. Sansa was already addicted to the feel of Margaery’s cunt humping her body wetly. The feel of cunt slime soaking her thigh and hip felt so right an natural to Sansa.

They kissed and humped until their orgasms exploded out spasming cunts hot cum gushing and soaking their entire groins, belly and thighs in hot slimy twat juice. Their orgasms wracked their young tight teenage bodies. Their screams of ecstasy filled the room or swallowed by devouring mouths.

They had slowly calmed down. Then Sansa cawed out when Margaery began to hump their thigh again. Sansa instantly pressed her pussy into Margaery’s cunt slimed sensual leg and tribbed with wild gyrations of her ass. Sansa’s ass cheeks dimpled hard with wild maniacal surges of her twat into the Tyrrells’s body. All too soon they cummed hard again screaming in ecstasy before their lips locked tight so they could swallow each other’s screams of unadulterated fucking bliss.

Sansa was besotted with pleasure and love for Margaery. Her pussy felt so alive. She loved to masturbate but sharing her body with the woman she was falling deeper in love with was intoxicating.

The next night she had Margaery shave her pussy and anus smooth. Then it was her turn to get the stubble off her Tyrell. She slide the razor over Margaery’s vulva and the Tyrell pulled her legs back and exposed her anus that Sansa carefully shaved clean removing the rising stubble. This intimate act even further making Sansa fall in love with the teenage scion of House Tyrell.

They ran to the bed and kissed deeply humping to shattering orgasms. Then Margaery asked Sansa to masturbate to orgasm for her. Sansa said she never masturbated scandalized but when Margaery raised an eyebrow she blushed hot and slowly spread her legs and masturbated. She worked her breast like she loved and then slide her hands down to her pussy and stroked her kitty to a screaming orgasm.

Then Margaery jilled off as Sansa saw her fork her clit and squeeze jutting it up so her right hand could rub the clit squeezed out its hood. The shiny nob so hot looking as Margaery’s fingers blurred over her clit. Margaery’s screams of orgasm were deafening.

Then Margaery got them to sit up against the headboard shoulder to shoulder. Margaery hooked her leg over Sansa’s leg. She reached over and played with Sansa’s pussy and Sansa groaning reached over and started to play with Margaery’s pussy. They gasped and writhed. Margaery bent over and siphoned in Sansa’s nipple and sucked hard her tongue rasping Sansa’s steeple areola. Sansa’s world exploded in shocking pleasure. Again and again raw aching pleasure exploded in Sansa’s belly and ripped out her convulsing cunt hot juices sloshing out her spasming quim. The bed was soaked beneath her twat that still dribble out milky cum.
Soon Margaery’s head was slamming back into the headboard as Sansa rolled her clit and tapped it hard with thumb. Margaery screamed so loud and sweetly for her.

Then they rolled down onto the bed and clench ed rolling around on the bed kissing with fuck hunger as they humped and stroked their heated pussies to multiple orgasms. They finally went to sleep with sweat and cum soaked bodies pressed tight together.

Sansa would be washing Margaery’s body tomorrow morning in the heated water they would use to take a sponge bath. She relished the thought of running her wash cloth all over that glorious body cleaning off all the dried cum covering Margaery’s body. Sansa ached to make true love to Margaery as they went to sleep snuggling and smiling in love.

Eddard

Eddard was in the meeting room he used when meeting with high nobles. The beams were massive, supporting the ceiling darkened by centuries of fires burning in the hearth. He looked up at the beams wondering just how many of his ancestors had met in this room before him.

This hall would not have seen the progenitor of House Stark, Brandon the Builder. But it had seen Rickard who defeated the Marsh King and married his daughter, bringing the Neck into Winterfell’s realm under the lordship of House Reed. He had recently reread the tale of how the Mormonts were granted Bear Island when King Rodrik Stark won it from the Ironborn in a wrestling match. So much history had been seen in this hall.

The walls were covered with large tapestries that depicted these stories, and others. Prominent among them was the story of Bran the Builder and his building of the initial Wall and Winterfell with the help of Giants. One tapestry showed Bran going South to help build Storm’s End, and putting in it the magical spells of binding that to this day kept the keep’s walls strong against the raging sea.

Several tapestries depicted the Starks who helped repel many major wildling invasions, such as when they and their Umber bannermen defeated Kings-Beyond-the-Wall like the brothers Gendel and Gorne, as well as Bael the Bard, who both sired and fought a Stark.

These meeting were not nearly so grand or bold. No tapestries of these times would be hung on the walls here in this room, or even the least of rooms or halls.

He and Mace had spoken of the dissipation of Robert Baratheon and the rising heir, Joffrey Baratheon to the throne. They were both very displeased, bordering on major disquiet with the happenings in King’s Landing. Robert was depleting the realm’s coffers in senseless tourneys and mindless banquets. The kingdom was bleeding dragons. His poor leadership was inspiring graft and corruption.

Mace had put out feelers for a rebellion, but Eddard and put them down. He would not call his banners against his childhood friend. True, his friend had turned into a drunken buffoon. But he would not go to war over a man who could not keep his mouth off a goblet of strong wine, or his dick out of any pretty woman in the realm.

Robert was wasting away, and the kingdom with him, but Eddard had had his fill of rebellion with Robert’s own rebellion. So much death and lost potential had been shed in that war. He still saw in his mind the good men he had killed only because they had chosen the other side of the conflict. He still awoke in sweat, seeing the life go out of Arthur Dayne’s eyes. Cat would wake up and hold him as he stared in the dark, lamenting the waste of such a great man over the right of Robert to marry his sister.
A sister Eddard now knew Robert would have cheated on as much as he cheated on Cersei Lannister. It was in his nature to bring infidelity to his wife’s bed. Robert’s drives were just too strong. He was a brilliant war leader, and a horrible political leader. He was lost, and with him the realm.

The realm was spiraling down into bankruptcy and aimless policy. It was still not worth going to war over. He would fight for the realm next time, but not for just any one man. He had yet to find anyone worthy fighting for, killing for.

He tapped the table with his fingertips. He did not know of any men worthy, but he had begun to wonder if there was a woman worth fighting for.

Daenerys Targaryen was going to come back to Westeros. That was a given. When she came, he would willingly bend the knee to avoid yet another war. He was satisfied with being Warden of the North. If Daenerys was satisfied with the status quo, there would be no problem. It probably wouldn’t be a problem even if she came to fully subject the North.

She had dragons and he did not.

This woman seemed to be something more though. She had totally diverted her attention from her ancestral homeland to attack and conquer the Slave Cities of Slaver’s Bay and shattered the most powerful Khalasar, along with several smaller ones. Others still defied her rule, but had retreated far into the grass seas and were not making any trouble for her. They had been bearded, or should he say, their hair had been shorn.

She now used the cowed Dothraki to garrison her conquered cities. She had forbidden them to rape and pillage the defenseless. The Targaryen had broken the Slaver Cities, but did not set herself up as the new slave lord. She was instead abolishing the slave trade.

Completely.

She was instituting freedom for all and establishing free trade. She was all the way to Lys now, and had conquered them with sheer force of will and power. She had the strength now to avoid unnecessary bloodshed, and that’s what she was doing. He admired that. Greatly.

It was something he would have done in her place if he had had even been able to conceive of such a thing. She was in some ways greater than him.

He would bow down to this woman if all this was true and not just propaganda. He could serve such a woman proudly, helping her to make Westeros, hell, Essos too, into a better world.

He could only hope she lived up to her promise. Robert had failed hopelessly and miserably.

Robert was a waste, but that could be lived with. What made him loose sleep at night was his son Joffrey. He sometimes spitefully thought that Cersei must have slept with the Mad King just before Jaime ran him through with his sword.

Joffrey had a madness, and on top of that he was sadistic and cruel just for the pleasure of being cruel. He would likely prove to be a vile and evil despotic king. But, he was not that yet.

Eddard would not go to war over a possibility.

Maybe the impossible would happen, and Margaery could dampen and subdue the fires of madness in Joffrey. He knew she likely would not be able to, but he would not fight against what if. He would call his banners if and when the madman actually took the throne and raised havoc.
Eddard shifted and looked through the north wall of the meeting room. He may have a greater concern to face. His bones told him that the real threat was up north. A long winter was coming, and the reports from Jon were disquieting. Patrols were not returning from beyond the Wall. Tales from captured wildlings told the crows of icy beings walking the woods and wastes, raising the dead.

_Please old gods do not let that be._ He feared the enemy from eight thousand years ago had returned. He had no proof yet, but his intuition told him as much.

Like his Robert and Joffrey problem, this could wait for now. He would not raise his banners for disquiet and bad dreams at night.

Eddard turned aside from thoughts of realm and the future. They would resolve themselves in time.

He was happy having the House of Highgarden visit his realm. He loved his home, but he knew for the women and children it did lack the pleasantries of the South. He had made sure word was sent out of their visit and villagers were streaming in every day to see the musicians play and the mummers put on their plays. He wanted his realm to see the magic of delight that the visitors of from the South could provide.

He did not consider himself a dancer. But he had gotten on the dance floor and danced with his wife as she twittered and giggled. It had made him smile. It was so much nicer to dance with a wife of flesh and blood, instead of steel wives with their cold, ever-sharp blades.

He and Cat had a most pleasant time in their bedchambers after dancing.

He noticed that Sansa and Margaery had hit it off. She was spending all her time with girl. He was pleased at how well they got along. They were like the sisters that Arya and Sansa had never been.

He wondered about Sansa, and whom she might marry. His wife was hoping that Sansa and Loras would marry, merging their two houses. She wanted to make House Stark ever greater. He never told his wife of Loras’ bisexual nature. He slept with women, but he obviously preferred men. He had already formed liaisons with the weapons master journeyman nearly ready for his own hammer, and a knight from Last Hearth.

Word had also reached him that Loras and Renly were in a hot and heavy relationship. He knew that in a perfect world, they would marry. It may not be his cup of tea, but he thought everyone should have the right to lead their lives if it hurt no one else. It was the right that all sought - the right to live their lives as they saw fit.

He went out the room and into the hall. He saw Sansa and Margaery walking ahead of him, holding hands and laughing at something. It was nice to see Sansa so happy. Arya had faded into the background with the Tyrells in Winterfell – but at least she was not fighting with her sister.

Eddard hoped that his daughters would both be able to marry a man that made them happy. He had held off his wife in hopes that that such a match would occur.

He sighed. He knew the choice Arya would probably make if she could. She was simply infatuated with this Targaryen Queen who was marking her way across Essos. He was sure by the time Daenerys had made it to Westeros she would be wed. She would have a king in tow to make some political alliance or another. It would probably be an arranged marriage, but a marriage nevertheless. That would put an end to his daughter’s fantasy.

Eddard sighed. Who could he find that could hope to make his little girl happy? He sorely doubted any man was up to the task. He would not allow his little she wolf to be cruelly yoked or harmed.
Margaery

The rough architecture of Winterfell continued to capture Margaery’s attention as she walked down the long hall of the great hall. She loved the roughhewn beams that were visible, and how the stones were not fitted together with the seamless precision like they were in Highgarden.

She noticed these things, but the only thing she really saw was the beautiful red wolf that walked beside her. Sansa was so beautiful that it made Margaery’s heart skip.

She was the one. She had listened to the minstrels sing and read a few romantic histories of the handsome king and beautiful princess, who meet and fell madly and passionately in love with each other. Of course she had always changed the King to Queen in her own versions - but she never told her mother that.

She had her cousins to live out those fantasies with. But this was not a fantasy. This was what she had been waiting her life for. Sansa was the one.

She gazed up at Sansa with total adoration. The way the deep auburn haired beauty’s lips moved as she spoke. Her lips were a perfect cupid bow, so red and inviting. She hungered to kiss those lips, and the lips that lay between Sansa’s legs. Margaery’s undergarments were sopping wet in anticipation.

She had been stroking and pressing into Sansa since the moment they met. She made direct eye contact and exposed her neck and fluttered her eyelashes. She constantly touched and caressed Sansa’s body.

They had slept in her bed for five nights, at first just talking and gossiping. She smiled as she thought of how Sansa had stopped talking about silly boys when Margaery easily led her to talk of the charms of women.

They spent the day laughing and holding hands like long time childhood friends. Once in Sansa’s room though, it all changed. Tonight they would give each other their virtue.

Her mind burned still with the memories, masturbating the instant she thought Sansa had gone to sleep. She had sensed the tension she had filled the Stark’s body with. She had made to wake Sansa when she had done her own masturbation. Knowing she was watched surreptitiously had only made her orgasms all the stronger.

Margaery had led Sansa from kissing chastely to long make out sessions. They then added tribbing and mutual masturbating. Sansa had been so responsive and anxious to take their intimacy ever higher and hotter. Tonight they would take each other’s maidenheads, and forever mark each other as their mate.

She loved the height difference and how much bigger Sansa was than her. She could already feel her woman riding her hard and making her cum so hard in her mind.

She had made sure to keep her virtue so far. She had been saving it for whatever man she would be sold off to further House Tyrell for her grandmother’s sake. She’d had had no reason to do otherwise. Circumstances had changed and now, and she would choose to follow her own path. No longer would she sold off to the highest bidder as chattel.

Tonight Sansa Stark would take her womanhood. She shivered in anticipation of the pain and pleasure of the moment. She would give Sansa the gift that a woman can only give but once.

Her fingers twitched with the hunger to take Sansa’s maidenhood and then rub her g-spot as Sansa screamed in pleasure. She had learned much in pleasuring her cousins.

They were in her room now, and again Margaery was surprised at how warm it was. All castles needed to have hot spring water running through the walls! Sansa went to the fireplace and put some more logs on the hearth, to add more heat and light to the room.

They went to the dressing screen and removed their clothing. Margaery had seen that Sansa was shy and modest, and had teased and joked her that were both women, and that she should not be embarrassed about her nudity as they put on their night slips on the first nights. Now they slept totally in the nude. Sansa’s handmaiden had been shy, therefore, Sansa had not had much interaction with girls her age in anything but the most formal situations.

Sansa had not had the brood of hens that Margaery had had growing up. Sansa had not been exposed to the almost rampant lesbianism that defined Margaery’s life growing up. Her parents never had caught on to the homosexuality of their children. That was not the case with her grandmother. Thanks the gods that her grandmother had fully supported Margaery and her cousins and their love of the female body and each other.

Her grandmother had sighed when she made that discovery, but had worked since then to make their dreams come true. She would understand her actions when she finally got around to telling Olenna about tonight. She had promised to hold onto her virtue until she fell in love or was married off.

She was in love.

Sansa had gone to put on her night slip out of sheer habit, but Margaery had stopped her hand just before Sansa gripped the fabric. Her dark brown eyes met the deep blue of Sansa’s eyes. Eyes now filled with hot, throbbing hunger and raw passionate love. Sansa felt it too.

Margaery moved into her taller lover. Her five foot six inch body fit perfectly into Sansa’s as she pressed their bodies into each other. Her hands threaded in Sansa’s auburn locks and pulled her head down. Sansa’s long arms went around Margaery’s lower back pulling her into Sansa’s body instinctively.

Margaery mewled feeling Sansa’s hot body pressed into her. Their legs finding the groove between their mate’s legs, letting wet pussies find thigh and their breast compressed as their bodies came together.

Their mouths found each other and loud moans filled the room. Lips melded and lipped their mate’s sensual lips. Loud groans filled the room as lips were sucked on and stretched out by nibbling teeth. Margaery swiped Sansa’s lips after a minute of sweet kissing and the lips parted letting Margaery slip her tongue deep into Sansa’s mouth. Their tongues wetly twined in wet love and they danced heatedly surging from mouth to mouth. Cunts found hard thigh muscles and swept up and down in short jerks humping wet twats on hard muscle. Legs glistening with wet twat slime. Mouths groaning hard into each other as nostrils flared with passion and cunts humped with harder stronger strokes. Legs and hips quickly slimed in fuck juice. Both women gripped each other’s ass helping them hump each other with wet pussies. All the while mouths devoured each other.

Sansa ground her twat into Margaery’s pelvis groaning gutturally and Margaery swept her cunt on Sansa’s long leg slimming it and letting the wet juice lubricate Sansa’s svelte body to let her hump like a bitch in heat. Their juices slicked firm flesh and let their pussies grind hotly up and down with short jerks of hips pulping their pussies into hard muscle and bone. Love juice was soon running down hip and legs in wet trickles. Labia lips were stretched and rolled on lubricated thighs and hips. Clits jammed and mashed. The friction and pressure sending jolts of searing pleasure to each teen’s brain. They parted for breath Sansa’s eyes blown dark with lust her breathing ragged.
“Margaery … I-I-I don’t kn—“ her speech cut off with another fiery kiss as she convulsed her eyes rolling back in her head feeling Margaery’s long tongue down her throat. Margaery swiped Sansa’s tonsils with her tongue as she held the tall beauty to her. Margaery chuffed as she repeatedly speared her tongue down Sansa’s throat at her love convulsed in her arms gurgling into her devouring mouth. Margaery smiled as she kissed her lover deeply and slowly guided Sansa over to Sansa’s bed that had been turned back with blinding white sheets.

Margaery slowly lowered Sansa down on the bed and moved Sansa to the middle of the bed all the while kissing Sansa deeply one hand behind her head and pulling their mouths tight and her other hand squeezed Sansa’s breast pumping the firm breast as the redhead mewled. Margaery bent over on her knees knelt down to continue devouring her woman.

Margaery pulled her tongue back from Sansa’s mouth slowly in clear invitation slipping her tongue back into her own mouth. Margaery gagged when Sansa’s long tongue surged into her mouth and found her tongue and they wetly wrestled slithering around twined in Margaery’s mouth. Margaery had been up on her knees to the side but now straddled Sansa’s body and pressed down. Her wet twat wallowed on Sansa’s hard flat stomach. Margaery short stroked her hips rubbing her drooling clam shell up and down Sansa’s lower stomach sliming it with her weeping pussy. Margaery lifted her cunt on the top of her sweeps and jammed down on the start of down sweep of her groin. The pressure making her face slash with ecstasy. Their hands were in each other’s hair as they snogged deeply.

Margaery slowly stretched out getting her body between Sansa’s legs working them out with her wiggling hips and thighs. Now between Sana’s legs Margaery started to jam her aching wet cunt into Sansa’s cunt grinding their hot boxes into each other pulping them as labia lips were stretched and rolled and clits jacked over each other shocking the two teens with ecstasy. Margaery first kissed Sansa deeply and now kissed down Sansa’s face.

Margaery peppered Sansa’ throat with fiery kisses and kissed down her collar bones and back up to her throat as Margaery licked it sensually. “unnggggg mmmgggg oohhh babyyyy yessss!” Sansa panted in love. Margaery kissed down Sansa’s chest to her full coned shaped tits and kissed them with light kisses back and forth. She rasped steeple areolas with her swiping tongue before she quick sucked on the turgid pink nipples. Margaery sucked Sansa’s nipples deep into mouth in turn. There she sucked variously with long hard deep throat sucks on the engorged teats. All the while her pussy was humping up and down Sansa’s swollen pussy.

Margaery’s tongue swiped and lashed the long thick nipples and her teeth grazed over the steeple areolas. Sansa whimpered feeling Margaery’s pussy wallowing and humping on her stomach soaking it in hot cum. Margaery watched Sansa lifting her head watching her cheeks hollowing out as she deep throat sucked on the thick nipples she stuffed into her hot greedy mouth. Sansa’s body jolted as searing fire filled her aching breasts. Each hard suck on her thick long nipples had her body jerking and her face slashing with hot pleasure. She gagged in helpless pleasure feeling the hard sucks tenting up her areolas as Margaery’s tongue swiped the steeples on her areolas and her lovers tongue batting her engorged teats.

Sansa was squirming and rolling her hips up instinctively into the pussy tribbing her swollen quim. Margaery kissed back up Sansa’s flushed upper chest and throat and again locked lips with Sansa. She speared her tongue down Sansa’s throat making her caw and groan deep in her chest. Back and forth Margaery kissed and sucked on Sansa’s nipples before kissing back up to Sansa’s mouth totally overwhelming her with passion.

Margaery loved how their pussies, inner thighs and bellies were now soaked in wet slimy twat juice. The wetness letting them easily sweep aching pussies over each other.
Margaery pulled Sansa up to a sitting up position. They sat hip to hip as they spent a long minute kissing and stroking each other’s now sweating bodies. Margaery kissed down Sansa’s throat and now massaged both of Sansa’s tits with her hands pumping the hot full tits and tweaked the hard rubbery pink nipples.

“Unngghhiieeeeeee!” Sansa wailed her body convulsing feeling Margaery suck in her throat. Sansa jammed her throat into the mouth marking her as Margaery’s slut. The Tyrell gave her a vicious hickey sucking the flesh moving hotly in and out gnawing teeth. “Oohhhh Godsss yessssssss!” Sansa whimpered.

Margaery kissed down Sansa’s heaving chest and sucked thirstily on long thick nipples as she sucked the nipples in deep and pumped her head filling Sansa’s flushed tits with burning friction and ecstasy. Margaery snuffled devouring Sansa’s perfect tits. Her head pulling back tenting Sansa’s capped nipples in Margaery’s hot greedy sucking mouth.

Margaery wet her fingers in her mouth sensually and pulled them out. Keeping eye contact Margaery started to rub up and down Sansa’s muff rubbing it and pressing into the rigid clit making Sansa whimper and her body jolt as Margaery kept hot eye contact. The Tyrell used her fingers to slowly tease open Sansa’s slit splaying out the dark labia opening paradise to Margaery.

Looking up Sansa’s flat belly Margaery slowly lowered her head and started to lick the slit slowly and lick up and over the rigid clit again and again as Sansa whimpered. “Ohhhh! Oh Margaery!” Sansa moaned, arching her back, beginning to churn her hips in involuntary fuck motions. ”Oh yes . . . yes, do me, yes! Oh god yes Margaery! Oh, it feels so good! Oh yes, like that! Unghh! Unhhh!” Sansa gurgled swirling her hips lifting her cunt up to her woman’s skilled tongue.

Margaery sucked Sansa’s clt between her lips and sucked it as she gripped the upraised leg to anchor herself as she lapped on the engorged clitoral hood with her rasping tongue. Her tongue drilled into the hood teasing out the shiny clit and she slurped on it with her lips. “Mmmgggg mmmmmm mmmgggg” Margaery moaned feeling her woman’s clt for the first time in her mouth. She sucked on it with pure love lathing her tongue over the hard nodule making Sansa’s hips jolt and jam up into her mouth.

Margaery sucked and licked and then pulled her head back. She started to rub with her fingers over the bulging clitoral hood. She drooled spit on Sansa’s muffin rubbing her fingers languidly up the slimy slit up and down the length of the hot slit. “Unnggg uunggg oohhh bbbaabyyy!” Sansa gurgled. Margaery moved her head back down and sucked Sansa’s hot throbbing clit again and switched to sucking with hot tongue lashes as Sansa started to go wild.

Sansa’s hand went to the back of Margaery’s head and jammed forward. Margaery swiped Sansa’s clit as she rotated her head and mashed her head forward and sucked in Sansa’s upper cunt and sucked hard pulling her head back snapping Sansa’s clit out her mouth. She did this again and again as the redhead cawed and jammed her cunt up into Margaery’s mouth. Her sweet wolf’s body convulsed with need as Sansa rotated her swollen twat up into Margaery’s devouring mouth. Margaery sucking with cheek hollowing love sucks on Sansa's shiny pinkish white clit.

Margaery could see the tension rising in Sansa her whinnies clotted with raw need. Her upper body withthed on the bed rolling from shoulder blade to shoulder blade. Sansa’s face slashed hard with desperate need to cum. Sansa’s body was filmed heavily with sweat now with beads beginning to run down her body as her face slashed with ecstasy.

Margaery sucked Sansa’s clit deep into her mouth and sucked hard and deep on it. Her tongue like a serpent with slashing and lashing wipes on Sansa’s clit. Sansa cunt exploded her back arching as her womb shattered with explosions of pure fucking bliss that scalded Sansa near senseless with pleasure. “AAAAWWOOGGGGG! AANNGGHHIIIEEEEIE! hhnnhh hhnnnn Aunnnggghiiiiiiieeeeee! Ohhhnnngg . . . unghhh! Aannggghiieeeeee!” Sansa cried out, as the Stark felt the wrenching spasms of a sharp orgasm tear at her quivering flesh. “Oowwwggggg! Hhhhnngggg! Fffuuuecckkk—mmmnggggghhiieeeeee!” the long statuesque teen screamed in ecstasy. Margaery was in heaven feeling Sansa throw up her hips to grind her rupturing cunt into her lover's hot sucking mouth. Sansa's body bucked and lurched up and down as she now gripped Margaery’s head with both hands and ground her cunt into Margaery’s mouth her body bucking and flipping. Margaery drank deep and greedily the hot cum flooding her gulping mouth.

As Sansa gasped and mewled Margaery rolled onto her back and slowly urged Sansa to roll over onto her knees and elbows. A groggy Sansa leaned her upper body down to rest on forearms her cheek pressed into the bed her knees splayed out lowering her swollen dripping snatch.

Margaery scooted up between Sansa’s legs and gripped the toned ass of the Stark teenager. Margaery paused looking up at Sansa’s engorged pussy. Sansa’s labia lips were hanging down deep pink to medium brown and soaked in cum. Sansa’s shiny clit jutting out its sheath the tip all shiny. Her love had a bigger clit than hers. Margaery’s mouth watered at the succulent morsel begging for her tongue.

Margaery pulled Sansa’s groin down to her mouth. Margaery flicked the jutting clitoral hood with her swiping tongue and making Sansa whimper anew her hips quaking with raw need and pleasure. Margaery snaked her tongue up and down the gooey slit murmuring as she sucked in Sansa’s sweet creamy effluent. Margaery pulled Sansa down further and the Stark girl rocked her hips grinding her swollen quim down on Margaery’s hot gobbling mouth.

Sansa surged up to her palms and rolled her hips grinding her aching cunt down on Margaery’s mouth her vulva swallowing the mouth lapping the drooling slit. Margaery loved the feel of wetness and heat flooding her mouth as her lapping tongue bulged out the vulva enfolding over her hot lapping mouth. Margaery swallowed the sweet love drool leaking out the hot swollen puss she was hotly devouring.

Margaery looked up at Sansa’s her head hanging down her face slashing with primal pleasure then it snapped up “Auuugggg hhnggg hhnnnggg oooohhhh—Margaeryyyyyyyyy!” Sansa whimpered as her muff was expertly gobbled. Margaery rocked her head up swallowing in a mouthful of cunt meat and munching obscenely driving Sansa wild with pleasure.

Sansa took her right hand and gripped her nipples in turn squeezing and pulling on her teats the pleasure sending arrows straight to her now diamond hard clit. The throbs hit her hard with pleasure. Margaery scooted back slightly and lowered her head. She now speared her tongue up Sansa’s cunt hole and sucked in a mouthful of slimy cunt meat and munched on it driving the redhead wild. Margaery sucked hard stretching and tormenting the sweet inner folds of Sansa’s pussy sucked between her lips.

Sansa was grunting and crying out in ecstasy. Margaery hammered her head up and down spearing Sansa’s sloppy wet honey hole. Margaery licked up Sansa’s sloppy wet slit sucking on lips and licking slit. Then her mouth sucked Sansa’s clit deep into her mouth and sucked with all her pure love her tongue spearing the shiny nodule and then polishing it as her cheeks hollowed out with deep throat love sucks.

Sansa felt her cunt explode. "AAWWWOONNNGGGG!!" Sansa suddenly screamed, in a roar that thrilled Margaery. Sansa jamming down hard with her hips grinding her immolating pussy down into the Tyrell’s hot sucking mouth. Margaery watched Sansa’s whole body as it convulsed wildly her legs lifting and hammering the back of her feet on the bed her toes curled painfully. Margaery’s face was soaked in the cum convulsing out Sansa’s rapturing cunt. Sansa’s head snapped up and down her eyes shocked wide open in blistering ecstasy. Her clawed hands tearing at the sheets as her head thrashed like she was being speared. She screamed more wails of shattering ecstasy "AAARRRGGGHHHHHUNNNNNNNN … Auungghmmngghhh! Anngghhaaiiiii! … auggauhgg Awwwooiieennnnn!"

Margaery was in heaven. Her face covered in Sansa’s cum. She scooted back and flipped the now weeping girl onto her back and climbed on top of her lover and kissed her deeply. Sansa moaned hard tasting herself on Margaery’s tongue. Their tongues shoved back and forth in between their mouths.

After a minute Sansa stopped sobbing and broke their kiss. “I love you” she whispered and enfolded the Tyrell in her arms and rolled Margaery onto her back. The Stark pushed her head down kissing Margaery deep and hard her tongue down the girl’s throat as Margaery’s eyes rolled back and spasmed in her skull.

Sansa kissed Margaery all over her face. Margaery cooed and preened feeling Sansa’s lips all over her face giving Margaery sweet kisses. Then they were kissing again deeply tongues down throats. Margaery gripped and roughly massaged Sansa’s ass cheeks as the girl humped their swollen pussies up and down over each other.

Sansa began to rock her hips harder and harder her pussy wallowing down over Margaery’s swollen muff. Their slimy cum soaked mounds rubbed up and down over each other. Their slimy labia lips rolled and stretched while the sweeping motions had their clits jammed into each other and rode over the other’s clit. Their breath chuffing through flared nostrils gasping for breath to keep humping hard.

Margaery was wound up like an overwrought wagon spring. She gripped Sansa’s ass cheeks and pulled and pushed encouraging the girl to trib face-to-face. They kissed deeply as Sansa was now pounding and dragging her muff over Margaery’s muffin. Their clamshells drooling cum into the other’s slit and basting swollen clits.

Margaery felt the tension in her belly rising to unbearable pleasure. She broke their deep kiss and jammed her forehead into the crook of Sansa’s throat. Sansa pushed Margaery’s sweaty face into her throat with her hand.
"Auuungghhh! Oh oh Nnnunngggmmmm! Oh! Oh . . . sweet seven gods, unngmmmmnnngghhhiiieeee! Mmmnmngghhhiiieeee!"] Margaery screamed as her body bucked and then went taut her body quivering as one overpowering spasm after another wrenched her flesh. “Ungghh! Hnnngggggggg! Awwwoogggggg! . . . hhnn hhnnn Ohnngg! Gods . . . yes! Yesss! Mmmngggggeeeeeeee!” she wailed, her beautiful body surging and convulsing as a fierce orgasm wracked her sweet teenage body.

When Margaery came back to her senses Sansa was staring down at her with a look of pure rapture. Sansa kissed her fiercely and then scooted down gripping Margaery’s breast in her hands and roughly massaged them grinding her palms into Margaery’s stiff nipples. Sansa bent her head down and sucked thirstily on the medium brown colored nipples. The redhead lapped and sucked with glee and happiness. Her tongue did circles around steeple areolas and then rasped the hard little nipples with long slow rasping tongue licks. Her head jammed down and sucked in a mouthful of Margaery’s firm boob. Sansa pulled her head back sucking hard on the tit meat filling Margaery’s breast with fire and pleasure.

Oh gods Margaery thought this girl is fucking lesbian wolf—she’s going to devour me Margaery thought in a near swoon of perfect love.

Sansa sucked in a mouthful of Margaery’s b-cupped tits and vacuum sucked the friction making Margaery’s heels scissor on the bed. Sansa would suddenly surge up and kiss Margaery deeply and then back to Margaery’s breast. The Direwolf taken human form tried to suck Margaery’s nipples off her breast and down Sansa’s throat.

“Sansaaaaaaa ppllleeeaseeeeee!” Margaery whimpered her hands on Sansa’s shoulders weakly pushing urging Sansa to move south down her body. Sansa looked up at Margaery with her blue eyes on fire. She continued sucking with hard sucks her tongue slapping Margaery’s right nipple.

“Babyyyyy my pusssssyyyy my pussy … pleassssseee … please suck—suck my pussy!” Margaery whimpered. Sansa lifted her head and with her fingers she rolled Margaery’s nipples squeezing in hard. The pleasure was like arrows striking Margaery’s shrieking clit hard with shocking pulses of ecstasy.

Sansa moved down Margaery’s belly now. Sansa kissed the palpating belly her lips kissing all over the firm tummy making the Tyrell gasp and mewl in clotted need. Sansa with evil glinting eyes gave Margaery’s stomach hard love bites making Margaery whoop and hips lurch up. Sansa’s traveling lips leaving behind red love bites.

Now Sansa was over her shaved pussy. “I love how smooth my pussy feels since I shaved it and I really love how your pussy looks and feels.”

“I love it too … push your beautiful face in my shaved cunt and suck me off baby!” Margaery husked to her young lover.

“Ohhhh yessssss” Sansa moaned and lowered her face to just over Margaery’s pussy and then took a long deep breath. “Oh godssss your pussy smells so fuckinggg goooodddd!”

Margaery smiled at the murmur performance. Sansa was staring at her pussy all wet and swollen covered in cunt cream.

Sansa started to lower her face several times and pulled back and now looked up unsure at Margaery “I’m not sure what to do” she spoke with fear entering her eyes.

“Baby … do what I did to start with … just lick me and follow your heart” Margaery husked down at her lover.
Sansa lowered her head and licked up Margaery’s pussy. Her eyes went spacy “Oh God you taste sooooo good!” Margaery watched Sansa mash her face down burying her face in Margaery’s vulva and sucked in a mouthful of cunt meat and started to lap furiously.

“Oh baby yesss—hhuunnggg oohh aauugggg nneeggeeggg!” Margaery whimpered feeling Sansa lift her head enough to lick her tongue up her slit and over her shiny clit again and again. This girl was a natural! Margaery’s head lulled from side to side as the Stark girl sucked again on her clit. Sansa lapped her head to roughly slide her tongue up and down over Margaery’s rigid shiny clit. Sansa’s long arms went up Margaery’s body and cupped her breast and ground her palms into the swollen titties. The friction of the rasping palms filled Margaery’s breast with aching fiery pleasure. Margaery pulled her head up to look at Sansa and shook it to get the sweat out of her eyes. She watched Sansa’s cheeks hollow out with her love sucks on her clit. “Shit!” Margaery cried out feeling that first delicious spasm deep in her belly that was more than pleasure. It was the first spasm of her rising orgasm building deep in her belly. Sansa sensed it and began to suck Margaery’s clit in and out her perfect sensual lips her tongue polishing Margaery’s clit tip.

“Fffffuuucckkkkkkkkk!” Margaery cried out. Sansa now gripped her hips and pulled her face even harder into Margaery’s clit and sucked Margaery’s clit deep into her mouth. Her throat sucked voraciously. Margaery’s hands were scrabbling all over the sheets her heels digging into the mattress. The tension rose and rose and then shattered. "OOOOOWWWWGGGGGGGGG! AAUUGGKGHHHHHHH! … Ungghh! Ohnggg! Oh . . . yes oh . . . gods! Auunggghhiimmeennghggiieeeee!" Margaery squealed, her cries filling Sansa’s bedroom as a phenomenally sharp climax ripped through the beautiful Tyrell teenager.

Margaery had to push Sansa’s head back forcefully. “Sansa—Sansa … back off—let my clit recover baby … like I did you … my clit is all jangling now.”

Sansa nodded her head and gently tongued all over the Tyrell’s vulva and inner thighs licking up sweet hot slimy cum. Sansa’s tongue occasionally brushed over Margaery’s clit testing it.

Soon Margaery clit had calmed and Sansa again wildly sucked her off to a wild screaming orgasm. This time Sansa backed off but stayed by Margaery’s pussy. The girl pressed her face into Margaery’s pussy and rolled it around soaking it in Margaery’s love slime. “Your mine Margaery—all mine!” she declared possessively. Sansa looked at Margaery now with her face wet with beaded sweat and Margaery’s creamy cum.

Margaery whole heartedly agreed with Sansa. She may share later with her cousins if Sansa was willing but not anytime soon. She wanted the Wolf all to herself.

It was time.

“Sansa … put you fingers in me and fuck me. Take my flower—make me yours” Margaery told Sansa. The girls eyes going glassy.
“Oh Margaery … are you sure? Should we?”

“Do you love me?”

“Ohhhh yeeesssssss!”

“Then take me and make me yours Sansa—take what is yours!” Margaery encouraged in a heated whisper. “I give you my flower willingly with all my heart Sansa … take me and make me yours forever!” Margaery declared in a passionate whispered entreaty.

She grabbed Sansa’s right hand and brought the fingers up to her mouth and sensually slipped them into her mouth and sucked on them coating them with her warm spit her lips sensually going up and down the long digits.

“Mmmmnggggggggg!” Sansa whimpered. She pulled her fingers out of Margaery’s hot mouth and brought them down to Margaery’s wet slit and rubbed the first three fingers up and down the wet trench rolling and rubbing over engorged medium brown pussy lips. She rolled the lips and forked them pulling them taunt and rolling them. She forked Margaery’s clit and squeezed in on it driving Margaery crazy with pleasure.

Sansa rose up releasing Margaery’s clit which made the Tyrell cry out in frustration. “Are our sure Margaery? You sure you want me to be the one?”

“Yeessssss! Sansa ppleaseeeeee I loove you!”

Sansa moaned and sucked Margaery’s clit deep in her mouth and fiercely sucked on the hard button. Margaery watched fire and passion burn into Sansa’s orbs as the wolf took her lover. Sansa slipped two fingers into Margaery’s hot tight quim greasy with cum. Sansa worked her fingertips into the tight cauldron on Margaery’s cunt. Sansa lapped the clit sucked between her lips.

Sansa slammed her fingers forward piercing and ripping Margaery’s hymen asunder her knuckles slamming into Margaery’s vulva and remaining motionless. Margaery’s head snapped back “Aaaaieeeeeeeeee!” she wailed as her womanhood was ripped and taken by her wolf. Her body shuddered as pain seared out her pussy but already it was fading to weak pulses as Sansa instinctively sucked on her clit with soft loving sucks and the Stark girl began to oh so slowly pump her fingers in and out Margaery’s no longer virgin cunt.

Margaery’s body collapsed back to the bed as new pleasures started to flood out her pussy as Sansa slowly pumped and worked her fingers in and out Margaery’s tight twat. Sansa half rolling her hand working her fingers through the tight slimy hot gripping folds sucking on her fingers. Sansa’s face filled with wonder and pleasure feeling the tight folds sucking on her deep probing fingers.

Soon Margaery was in heaven as her cunt pulsed harder sucking on the two fingers Sansa now slammed harder in and out her tight pussy sending her to the moon on hot rushes of ecstasy. Sansa was pulling on her clit with her pumping head and sucking so hard. Her cunt felt on fire with pleasure hard pulses gripping her belly making it contract slightly lifting her head off the pillow as raw searing pleasure poured out her cunt. Sansa’s fingers pounding in so deep and hard her inner folds sucking and gripping tight on the digits pistoning in and out her drooling love box.

The pulses came harder and closer and then her cunt seemed to explode and tear itself inside out. “Mmmmngghhhheeeiiiiiiiiiiii!” Margaery screamed her back arching high off the bed her head jammed into the bed. Her body flipped and jackknifed violently in the throes of ecstasy. “Ffffuucckkkkkkk! Sansssssaaa I loovveee youuuuu! Ooowwwggggggg! Hhhhnmmmmgggg!” Margaery cried out as pure pleasure pulverized her with fucking bliss.
Sansa sucked Margaery’s entire upper snatch into her mouth in a wild frenzy of wild lust. Her fingers now slammed so hard into Margaery’s convulsing sloshing couchie as hot gushes of cum splattered out around the pumping fingers. Margaery was gagging as a fierce pulsing suddenly bloomed in her womb and tore it so hard with shocking spasms of searing fucking bliss. Margaery’s feet planted in on the bed and jammed her angled cunt up into Sansa’s mouth as a second orgasm exploded over the top of the first orgasm. "Onngghhnnggiieeee! Ohhhnggg! Unghh! Sansa . . . yessssss-fffuuuecckkkkkk unghhhh! Aunngghhiieee! Onngggmmmmnniiiee!" Margaery screamed, twisting and clenching under Sansa’s hammering fingers in her now deflowered pussy. Sansa’s mouth love sucked on Margaery’s clit. Margaery whimpered, whinnying, then unleashing another cascade of shrieks.

Sansa backed off sensing Margaery was spent. Margaery’s body now soaked in sweat her pussy swollen and almost brown with hot pumping blood. Her brown labia lips all distended. Sansa had a smug look looking up at Margaery.

Margaery was destroyed with strong aftershocks burning through her body making her hitch and jerk as fire filled her clit and nipples with searing shocks.

Sansa scooted up and they embraced. Sweat and cum soaked bodies melded as new loves kissed deeply. Margaery was in heaven. It was that simple. She was in heaven.

She kissed Sansa feeling her strength quickly returning. She was ready to claim Sansa as hers.

She rolled a squealing Sansa onto her back and kissed her deeply before moving down and roughly sucking on the redheads pale areolas and so pink long engorged teats.

Margaery kissed down the flat toned belly settling between Sansa’s legs and putting her left leg over her shoulder and pushing out Sansa’s right leg wide opening her lover up to her hungry gaze.

Margaery moaned looking at Sansa’s swollen flower all wet with cream leaking out her slit. Margaery lowered her head and began to lick and suck on Sansa’s slit and clit. The Tyrell moved her head up and down devouring the swollen sloppy wet pussy.

Soon she had Sansa screaming like she was being garroted her body convulsing hard bucking wildly up into her hot sucking mouth as massive orgasm ripped through Sansa’s strong statuesque body.

Margaery backed up her body slightly and pushed her first two fingers into her mouth slobbering all over them. She slicked her fingers with spit lubing them up to take her woman’s flower. Margaery looked up at her Sansa with hot throbbing eyes as she slowly inserted her first two fingers into the still spasming quim and pushed them in the distended fuck hole up to Sansa’s hymen.

Sansa felt the fingers in her pussy pressing into her hymen. Her eyes flared wide. Suddenly, Sansa scooted back as Margaery looked up stunned and confused.

“What if I marry so high born Lord. I’ll need to be a virgin for him!” Sansa exclaimed looking fearful, turning around strangely as if she was being spied on.

Margaery surged up to her knees on the bed in horrid shock. “No no nonono,” she weakly whimpered staggering out of the bed. She felt like she might throw up violently. She looked desperately for her clothes on the floor, and walked with wobbly legs over to them by the screen.

“NNNOOOOOOOOOO!” Sansa screamed and jumped out of the bed and fell to her knees, looping her arms around Margaery’s waist and pressing her cheek into Margaery’s flat stomach. “Forgive me!”
Margaery kicked her legs, trying to break the iron grip.

“Let me explain!”

“Fuck you! Let me go you goddamn cunt! My gods—I gave myself freely to you Sansa—”

Margaery nearly fainted, her world tilted for a brief moment before she clenched her teeth in resolve. Silent tears of raw hurt ran down her cheeks, her soul starting to crack, preparing to shatter.

Sansa was whimpering and sobbing now. “Please, please, let me explain,” she whimpered as Margaery tried to pry her hands off her body, “let me explain”.

“There is nothing to explain. I’ve made a horrible mistake. I hate you!” Margaery hissed in fury.

Sansa

She had ruined it like she always did. She deserved her fate. Her arms fell away from Margaery as life drained from her body. Sansa sobbed brokenly. Her father always told her to take full accountability for one’s actions. She started to feel faint as her breath got light and feathery. She needed to confess to Margaery. She needed to tell Margaery it was all her fault.

In a dead voice “You’re right. I’m not worthy of you Margaery … I’m so, so sorry. All I’m really good for is breeding. Just some heifer to crap out sons for my Lord I will never love.” Sansa spoke brokenly, her head bent down with her long, red hair flagged down around her face.

She did not see the Tyrell slowly stepping back, fire in her eyes along with something else.

“I’m fucking weak. I’m stupid, weak and a dreamer. Arya is right.”

“What does that mean?” Margaery snarled, backing away from Sansa, hurt evident in every line of her body.

“I’m weak. I’m pathetic. Arya never cows to our mother, she fights her every day for her right to seek her own path. Me—I just bow my head and say “yes mother”, and meekly do as she says. Ever since I can remember, all I have heard is that as soon as possible I will be married off to some high prince. No matter my feelings, my desires. That it is my destiny to be sent off to some man I won’t love.

“Only my father has saved me so far from being auctioned off to some local lord. My mother is so fucking gods damned anxious to marry me off it makes me fucking sick!” Sansa let her inner turmoil and anger to finally surface.

Margaery had stopped moving. “Why don’t you fight? It’s your life.”

“I’m weak. I have been groomed to be a prince’s wife and give him babies. My mother feels that’s all I’m really good for. I… I just have my looks. I’m not very smart, nor do I have any will. You are meant for far better than the likes of me Margaery. Find a woman who is worthy of you. It surely isn’t me.” Sansa bowed her head and wept brokenly.

She did not feel Margaery kneel in front of her, and then she was sobbing like a baby when Margaery took her in her arms and comforted the distressed Stark princess.

“You’re strong Sansa, you just have to reach inside and grasp it.” Sansa couldn’t stop herself from snuggling into Margaery’s firm but pliant body.

“No, don’t lie—instead of giving you myself I… I… I don’t know, all I heard was my mother’s voice in my head again berating me, telling me I had to be perfect for a—some male prince or lord … I’m pathetic.”

“No Sansa. Stop. Look at me … look at me, damnit!” Margaery barked at her love, who finally looked up at her with red rimmed eyes.

“I’ve been nurtured by my grandmother to seek and follow my own path. You haven’t. I can wait if you are no—” her words were cut off by a scorching kiss. Sansa’s tongue slid deep into her mouth, and claimed her tongue aggressively. Margaery melted into the fiery kiss. She really had not choice, being so in love with Sansa.

Suddenly Margaery squealed into the mouth devouring hers as Sansa effortlessly lifted her up off the floor pressing her body into Sansa’s tall and strong body. Sansa had one hand in Margaery’s hair mating their mouths tight as their tongues dueled hotly in Margaery’s whimpering mouth. Sansa carried Margaery back to their bed. Sansa placed Margaery down on the bed and looked down at her with pure love that made the Tyrell hiccup and a tear run down her cheek.

Sansa laid down on the bed beside her love. She slowly pulled a pillow over folding it and worked it underneath her head. “I want to watch you as you take my virginity Margaery. I want to watch you as you claim my body, mind and soul as all yours.” Sansa watched Margaery move to sit up and shivered as Margaery stroked her body hungrily. “I’m going to take your hymen now Sansa. You hurt me terribly, but I love you so much I forgive you. But you can’t ever do anything like this again. It will kill me.”

“I won’t Margaery. I will be strong for you from this heartbeat forward. I belong only to you. I would rather slit my wrists than let any man touch me.”

Sansa felt Margaery put her fingers on her lips “Don’t worry. My grandmother will fix it all for us.”

Margaery moved down the bed and she slowly spread Sansa’s legs up and out spreading Sansa’s knees out. This spread out Sansa’s flower to her lover. Sansa shivered seeing Margaery look at her cunt with fuck hunger. “I’m going to fuck you so good Sansa. From now on I live my life for you—and us.”

Sansa felt her throat gulp “I live only for you Margaery. I give my soul completely. Take the gift that only a woman can give but once. I give it freely.”

Margaery groaned deep in her chest when Sansa maintaining hot eye contact pulled her wet pussy open showing the red inner folds clutching and wetly pulsing.

“I give myself to you Margaery … make me yours for now and forever.”

Margaery again laid down between Sansa’s legs and moaned pressing her mouth into the quim still wet and swollen. Margaery was so lost in Sansa’s wet womanhood. Sansa gagged in helpless pleasure feeling Margaery feast on her sodden twat. Margaery jetted her Sansa’s clit in and out her lips and began to waggle her head lashing her tongue form side to side over the rigid clit in her mouth.

Sansa whooped and her upper body jerked and spasmed her cunt now grinding instinctively up into the mouth devouring it with focus and pure love. "Oh . . . unh! Oh Margaery . . . unh! Unh! Oh gods . . . oh shit oh! Unhhhh!” Sansa panted, squirming wildly, completely overwhelmed by Margaery’s passionate assault on her swollen aching quim.

Sansa had started pumping her nipples pulling on her tits and roughly massaging her flushed breasts.
For a minute Sansa ramped up her body wallowing from shoulder to shoulder as her body rolled in rising tension and ecstasy. Sansa was squealing and then she was screaming and bucking her hips hard up and down.

"Unngghhaugghhhhhhiiee!" Sansa cried out as the full shock of her orgasm hit her. "Oh! Oh! Onngghhhmmmmniiieeee! AAAAAWWOOOGGGGGG!" Sansa screamed, her head lifting form the pillow and slamming back and back again as she felt her cunt tearing itself inside out. She jammed her exploding pussy up into the mouth devouring harder as the shocks of ecstasy tore through her body. She jammed her cunt harder into the Margaery’s mouth as it devoured her prolonging her gut wrenching spasms of pure fucking bliss.

Sansa ground her trim up into Margaery’s mouth Sansa’s pubic bone grinding her muffin up into Margaery’s mouth driving her lover’s head back that small fraction. She was driven insane hearing Margaery lewdly gulp down the love juice sloshing out her spasming pussy.

“Oh oh Margaery—I love you I love you … take my maidenhood Margaery—make me a woman—your woman, Margaery.”

She felt Margaery hesitating. She had her hands locked on Sansa’ hips to control the Starks hard bucks. Sansa half sat up on her right elbow. She gripped Margaery’s right hand and brought her first two fingers to her mouth and wetly sucked on them like Margaery and done her own fingers earlier.

Sansa trailed Margaery’s fingers down between her firm beast and down to her stomach and then slowly wormed them into her aching cunt. Sansa whimpered feeling the digits brushing over her maidenhead.

Margaery still hesitated. Sansa groaned and with her long arms she gripped Margaery’s right wrist and pushed the fingers harder into her hymen as it began to stretch and Sansa’ gritted her teeth and tears sprang into her eyes.

Margaery sucked Sansa’s clit into and suckled it her left hand massaging Sansa’s inner thigh. She lifted her head a moment “together baby” she bent her head back down and sucked fiercely on Sansa’s clt with short sharp sucks.

Sansa felt her lover pull her fingers back and she gripped Margaery’s wrist hard and together they slammed Margaery’s slender fingers forward tearing through her hymen ripping it asunder.

A long flash of pain filled her pussy but the sucks on her clit quickly overrode the pain and her pussy felt alive and filled with fresh spasms of ecstasy.

Margaery slowly pumped her first two fingers in and out the hot tight vice grip of Sansa’s pussy as it clenched down and sucked on her pumping finger in hot loving tight embrace.

Sansa felt pleasure pouring out her pussy. The fingers stretching her out felt so divine. She felt her belly tightening. She swirled her pussy up and forward to take Margaery’s long fingers even deeper up her snatch. Sansa’s eyelids fluttering feeling her lover’s knuckles rapping her vulva harder. Margaery slowly pulled her long slender fingers back and then sharp thrust forward to slam them back into Sansa’s tight couchie fully burying them up Sansa’s pussy.

The dance slowly accelerated and built up force. The Tyrell slowly worked up the pace and force of her fingers fucking her sweet wolf. Margaery was now slamming in finger into Sansa’s cunt. The vibrations and friction shocked Sansa with raw pleasure. Sansa stared down at the fingers pounding her trim as her twat made wet obscene slurpy noises. It felt soooo fucking good!
Gods Sansa thought her quim sounded like a sloshing pool and her pussy juice was splattering. Margaery had stopped sucking her clit and pulled her knees forward to bend over her pussy. Margaery’s left hand was rubbing over her slicked clит in a blur.

Margaery was looking hard into her eyes. Margaery’s face slicked with Sansa’s cum.

“Cum on my fingers Sansa” Margaery softly murmured barely lifting off the sloppy wet pussy. She looked up at Sansa with her throbbing brown eyes as she again swallowed Sansa’s clит and hard sucked with quick sucks. She watched her slut writhe and caw in rising helpless pleasure as Sansa’s face filled with almost agonizing pleasure.

“FFFFFUUUCCKKKKK!” Sansa screamed as felt her womb explode and her pussy felt like it was tearing itself apart. "Aaannnggghhhhh oh sweet old gods unngghhh auunngghhiieeeeee!” she wailed, her body flipping up and slamming backwards into the pillow over and over. Sansa wildly thrust her hips up into the fingers hard fucking her exploding twat. "Aunngghhh! Unnggghhiieeeeee! Mmnngghhiieeeeee! Nngghhiieeeeee!” Sansa wailed in lost pleasure her body alive and soul totally in love.

She fell back onto the pillow limp. Margaery kept her finger buried in Sansa’s twat enjoying the spasms still ripping out her lover’s pussy.

Sansa was stunned her body soaked in sweat. Her pussy felt alive. She gasped after a minute when she felt Margaery start to move her fingers again.

“Oh baby … I’m devastated … my pussy feels ssssoooo good baby” Sansa weakly told her lover.

“I’m going to take you to heaven Sansa.”

Sansa gagged when Margaery sucked her clит back into her mouth and gently rhythmically sucked on her still hard clит that went diamond hard again.

Sansa’s head lulled around feeling Margaery fingers rubbing all over her frontal pussy channel. She heard Margaery grunting around her clит a look of concentration on her face.

Suddenly a shocking pulse slammed into Sansa’s body robbing her of her breath.

Margaery released Sansa’s clит a moment “Oh Baby! That’s your g-spot—so spongy! Hold on!” Sansa keened feeling her clıt sucked back between Margaery’s lips and her nub polished by the Tyrell’s tongue.

Sansa felt Margaery press her first two fingertip pads into a spongy hillock on her pussy wall. Margaery was wildly rubbing this spot and again sucking fiercely on her clıt with long harsh love sucks.

Margaery now zeroed in on Sansa’s g-spot. Margaery adjusted the angle of her pumping fingers to harpoon the spongy hillock and press in hard on the Stark teenager’s g-spot.

She looked up Sansa harshly bellowing stomach. Her lover was writhing first form one shoulder and then half rolling over onto her other shoulder her face looked like she was being garroted.

Suddenly Sansa felt her cunt tear itself inside out as her body surged up into a half sitting position as hammering blows of ecstatic ripped her womb out her belly.

"AANNGGHIIIIEEE! OH! UNNMMGGGGHHH! AIIEEEE!" Sansa screamed as unimaginable pleasure exploded out her rupturing pussy with hammer blows of shocking ecstasy.
"OOWWNNNGGGHMNNIIIEEE!" Sansa wailed her body shaking violently and snapping with almost killing spasms of fucking bliss. Her body folded forward to almost a sitting up position as her body convulsed with spasms of fucking bliss. "Ohhnmnuunnggg ... unghhhh! Ohh! Unnnmmnggeeeeee! Oh yes! Ohhh! Unngghhmmniiieeee!" Sansa screamed in almost agonizing pleasure her body jerking forward and back but still upright. Her firm tits whip-lashed up and down on her chest the sweat soaked tits slapping her chest hard in her throes of near crippling ecstasy. Sansa’s body slammed back down onto the bed and bucked and writhed as pleasure robbed her of conscious thought. Her eyes rolled back into her skull and rolled violently making her eyelids bulge sweetly for Margaery as she absorbed Sansa’s orgasm.

Sansa was hers now. Totally.

She backed off on her loving ministrations and brought Sansa down slowly. Sansa was weeping softly and murmuring “I love you I love you I just love you I love you with all my heart Margaery.”

Margaery crawled up Sansa’s body after grabbing the covers and pulling them over their sweat soaked bodies.

Sansa snuggled into Margaery’s body. They kissed and murmured to each other. Sansa rolled over in small spoon. Margaery looped and arm and leg over her Queen. The Queen of her heart.

They went to sleep with Sansa holding Margaery’s hand against her heart with a smile on her face. Margaery soon followed kissing Sansa’s neck and shoulder.

Olenna

Olenna stared in her scrying dish. She had rushed back to her room after spotting the two teenagers nearly tripping each other as they hurried down the hall to Sansa’s room. Even from afar she could feel the sexual tension. She had seen the fires of lust raging hotter and hotter in Sansa’s eyes day by day. Others might not see it, but Olenna knew to be looking for it. Her not so-sweet granddaughter had been stoking the flames of want in that redhead’s belly for five nights now. Quite admirably too, Olenna had to grudgingly admit. She had seen it all through her dragon glass eye.

Olenna had poured in the elixir from the purple bottle that went with scrying dish as soon as she returned to her sleeping quarters. She had been spying on Margaery with her dragon glass eyes for years now. Olenna had feared that Margaery was besotted with the tall red-headed Stark girl, and would not be able to control herself despite all claims otherwise.

She had confronted Margaery this very morning. She could not let on she had been spying on the girl with her magical seeing eye, so she had to phrase it as suspicions and ‘I know something is up between you two’ statements.

Margaery had confessed she was besotted with the girl, but was only having some fun with her. Getting her to loosen up and enjoy the pleasures of Sapphic sex. Margaery would not let it go far. She wanted Sansa to see the truth of female desires. She had told Olenna to chill out, whatever that meant.

Olenna had to grind her teeth in frustration. Margaery was headstrong and would do damn well as she pleased. She trusted that Olenna’s love for her would always win out. Damn the girl and her intuition – she was right.

Olenna had received the dragon glass eyes in her youth from a male paramour. He had been a sweet lover, and he had given her a gift he had picked up from an antique shop in Oldtown. Her long past lover had told her what a salesman had told him. That it was from old Valyria. The salesman had explained that the three pendants had magical abilities that allowed the master to see through them with the scrying dish. All one had to do was pour the purple liquid into the dish and recite Valyrian spells, and one could see and hear through the pendants.

They had laughed about it at the time. She had cooed over the pretty pendants with a large, smooth, pinkish stone in the center. They had both doubted the authenticity of the pendants, but they laughed about it as he boned Olenna to hard, screaming orgasms.

Years later she had been fucking the Maester of Highgarden. Mace was enamored with a young daughter of a local lord. They had agreed to look the other way as each dallied. When her Maester had seen the dragon glass eyes he had been most intrigued. He told her the designs and runes were definitely of old Valyria but all knew magic did not exist any longer.

That had peaked Olenna’s interest. She had diligently researched the Dragon Glass Eyes and slowly science out the old artifacts. She read that one had to believe for the magic to work and to sing the proper incantations to invoke and bind the pendants to her will. First she had sought the magical incantations to use with the dish, and how to say the high Valyrian words. It had taken her two more years to learn belief. She had been highly rewarded for her diligent efforts.

When Margaery had taken Sansa’s hand after dinner Olenna could almost feel the sexual tension between the two teenage girls. When she followed them out into the hall and saw their hurry to get to Sansa’s room she was sure of their intent. She had prayed to gods she knew did not exist that Margaery would control her libido and supposed love for this girl. She had a way to make sure of events.

Olenna had hurried back to her private room and poured out the magical liquid that rolled out the long neck like mercury. The heavy metal shimmered and poured languidly down and out of the long neck of its retaining bottle. The purple metal then quickly leveled itself in the shallow basin. Olenna spoke the spell she had learned in High Valyrian. The liquid shimmered, and Olenna watched the world as seen by the gem from in the scyring bowl.

The pendant was still around Margaery’s neck. It was dark and stayed that way for half a minute before light was again available. Sounds were muffled. Soon Olenna was able to piece out that Margaery was in the green houses of Winterfell and she was snogging passionately with Sansa. The sounds of the sixteen year olds panting and moaning came to Olenna’s ears as the vision went dark again as they kissed passionately, their bodies pressed tight against each other.

Damn Margaery’s eyes, Olenna groused. She was working up Sansa so the girl could never stop any of Margaery’s nefarious designs on that sweet, nubile teenage body. While she whined, a part of the matriarch admired how Margaery plucked the Stark’s strings to achieve her goals. Olenna fumed though, when she was sure what that goal would be. Her granddaughter was just a little too audacious!

Soon the girls were hurriedly walking down the corridors of Winterfell back to Sansa’s room, which they had been sharing since Margaery’s arrival. The girl had so easily maneuvered their parents to achieve her aims. Olenna admired how deftly her granddaughter had maneuvered both sets of parents into having her share Sansa’s quarters. Of course both sets of parents were completely oblivious to all the signs of sexual attraction and raging hormones. Their whole bodies and persona screamed deep passionate love and sexual hunger for each other. Olenna shook her head, wondering how straight people often could not read the signs of their children’s true sexual nature. Arya practically screamed out she was gay and her mother did not have a clue. Olenna could tell that Eddard, the crafty wolf, had finally put the pieces together and was working his way through to acceptance.
Olenna had been assured by Margaery for the last two years she would hold onto her virtue. It was a valuable asset that could achieve much in their Game of Thrones. Margaery had assured her she would never give away her precious virtue until it was the “proper” time. Olenna had had her fears, knowing her granddaughter’s strong, defiant personality. This was one of the qualities that made Margaery so adept at the Game of Thrones.

Still, Olenna had thought she and Margaery were on the same page. They had not been. The proper time, to Margaery, was obviously now. She had seen Margaery was besotted with Sansa from the moment they met, but she had hoped that Margaery would hold onto a sense of propriety.

Margaery had put her pendant around the dummy bust that held Sansa’s own pendants, facing into the room. It was the natural way to arrange a pendant on the bust. Olenna had counted on this each night, the pendant giving her access to the two girl’s private time.

She had seen Margaery each night take Sansa further and further down the road of sexual awakening. Olenna had been hemmed in by her own craftiness. She could not confront Margaery with her knowledge. To do so would reveal her source of this privy knowledge. She would never risk her granddaughter’s trust and love.

With her pendant perfectly positioned, Olenna had seen the entire sexual escapade. She had seen the deflowering of both girls. The looks on their faces as orgasms ripped such pure pleasure from their pussies was quite powerful, Olenna had to admit.

She had been angered first at Margaery and her lack of control. Her granddaughter had lost a precious bargaining chip. Olenna calmed her anger, thinking of the many times she parted her legs for lovers back in her youth long before she was married off. Gods she had cummed so hard. Olenna had to admire that Margaery was giving away her virtue for love where Olenna had given it simply because she was randy and wanted to experience the full joys of sex with a man.

Olenna also admired Margaery’s selection in a mate. Sansa was beautiful, smart and a fiery potential. Sansa just needed more confidence, and she knew Margaery would take care of that problem. Olenna started to make the calculations she always did when new parameters were introduced. Margaery would lead to the full flowering of Sansa’s abilities. In time they would become a powerful force. A force she would nurture, and in time use.

Olenna enjoyed watching the lovemaking. She had been almost flabbergasted when she discovered her granddaughter and her cousins were having incestuous lesbian sex. A lot of lesbian sex. She had then given Margaery a gift of one of her precious dragon eyes. What she had seen and heard had been very educational. She had known of lesbian sex of course, and such relationships, but it was all knowledge that was intellectual and felt far away.

This was up close and personal. She had come to see what her progenies saw in it. Love and the joy of sex really should be allowed to express itself no matter the pairings of the lovers. She began to wonder what she had missed out on. Olenna loved sex, and being a voyeur was almost as good in her late autumn years.

Her enjoyment had come to screeching halt when Sansa faltered. Had Sansa lost her mind! OWCH! That was harsh! Olenna had almost gotten up to run down to Sansa’s suite to thrash her ass and get Margaery out of there. Fortunately, she had hesitated. The Stark girl’s confession of feeling so inferior touched her heart, and grabbed her granddaughter’s heart as well. Olenna almost couldn’t understand how the girl could feel so trite and inconsequential. Olenna and Margaery were filled to overflowing with confidence and feeling of self-worth.
Olenna looked forward to Margaery bringing out the inner wolf in Sansa Stark. Catelyn Stark should be ashamed of herself!

Olenna had to change her whole calculus now. She knew she would have to betroth her granddaughter to Joffrey the shit in four months. Margaery had been distraught until Olenna told her how she had already planned out his poising on their wedding day. Margaery was most happy to play her part in his poisoning and death, after she recovered from her grandmother’s jib at her expense. She told her grandmother the realm would be a much better place without the “little shit”.

Olenna planned on then marrying Margaery to sweet, amenable Tommen. They would be able to mold him into a good ruler, and allow Margaery and her cousins the ability to marry the right lords and keep them all still together so they could carry on their illicit, incestuous lesbian affairs.

Now she would mold Tommen into accepting Sansa as his concubine. That is what the world would think. She would in reality be Margaery’s true love. Not the best solution, Olenna knew, but it was the only one she could envision at the moment. Hopefully, a better option would show itself in the future.

Olenna again wondered why a whole generation of Highgarden seemed to be gay or bisexual. Margaery was forcing the issue with her innate desires for the female body.

Olenna sighed. She loved her granddaughter and it was obvious that she had all the skills and temperament that her son Mace lacked. He was a dullard when it came to the Game of Thrones. Margaery would grow to be her equal.

She looked into her dish and observed her granddaughter all entwined and asleep, snuggling into Sansa’s body and clutching it possessively. It was obvious they were both deeply in love with each other.

Olenna allowed herself to grouse one more time crying to herself: why oh why couldn’t you keep you legs shut and keep your virginity. Women had a big advantage when it came to sex, and keeping one’s virginity if they chose. Damn you Margaery for choosing not to! You knew I would bend and support your passion for the Stark girl.

Margaery counted on my love for her, and that my desire to pass on my mantel to her would control my ire and rancor. Olenna smiled slightly. Margaery is already quite skilled at the Game of Thrones, Olenna she had to admit. She had Olenna changing her plans for the future, and for Margaery already.

Life had definitely gotten more complicated for House Tyrell, but Olenna already felt her blood pulsing in her veins. Their deflowering was a new challenge that had to be met. Olenna loved challenges.

Olenna sat back, contemplating the new set of facts. Sansa was in many ways a perfect match for Margaery. Together, once Margaery had Sansa up to speed, they would be a formidable pair to deal with.

Olenna steeple her fingers together. She contemplated the future of Westeros and how that would affect both House Highgarden and Margaery.

A violent storm was approaching from the East. Daenerys Targaryen had arisen from the desert and had become a most terrible force. She was already mighty, and only growing stronger. She had shattered all the rim of Slaver’s Bay and deep inland. Dothraki Khalasars had been shattered by the woman as well.
She was definitely coming west. She wanted to reclaim her throne. None would be able to stop her - alliances would have to be made.

Olenna thought about how she could bend the woman, or at least mollify her to best put forward the aims of her House.

Fortunately, for Margaery and her brood’s innate inclinations, the Queen seemed to have their same tastes and orientation though she was seemingly trying to suppress or at least hide her true nature for now. The woman was definitely ambitious, and was showing she would do what she needed to do to take and rule her kingdom.

Yes, this Daenerys Targaryen was going to be a most formidable force. Olenna was already looking forward to the challenges this wild card would cause in the fortunes of Westeros.

Arya

Arya looked up into the night sky at the half moon shining bright. The morning star was just to the left of the lower point of the moon, an alignment of celestial bodies that was a portent of love. Arya was definitely falling in love with the exploits of the dragon queen. Arya tilted her face up, letting the ghostly light of the moon caress her skin.

How she longed that it was Daenerys Targaryen caressing her face instead, with her long, slender fingertips. The woman must be so tall and powerful to do all things that Arya heard about. The woman was smashing City State after City State. She had conquered Khalasars. The Targaryen was an unstoppable force, moving like lightning across the sky. The Dragon Queen was a large rolling thunderhead with one clear destination:

Westeros.

Her dreamy Queen was coming to her. She could almost see her violet eyes staring out across the Dothraki grass sea, or from atop some pyramid of Meereen. The tall woman’s hair would be flowing out behind her in the strong breeze, the wind brushing her body.

I wish it was my hands touching that lovely body, Arya thought. Her cheeks reddened with thoughts of her tongue caressing that same dragon-blooded body, especially certain areas of it.

While warged into Nymeria, she had spied on several of the cooks and maids finding small spaces in behind alcoves or in the haylofts making sweet girl-girl love. The women were so engrossed they never saw the wolf from on high, or peeking inside a partially closed door.

Arya had spent time in her wolf watching and learning. She had masturbated all night long after seeing such hot sex. Arya knew basically how to make love to a woman now, just not the finer specifies.

How she longed to learn from the Dragon Queen.

Arya squirmed, squeezing her thighs together and enjoying the friction. She took a deep breath.
There would be plenty of time later for that pleasurable pastime. She looked out from her perch on the east curtain wall of Winterfell and out over the small field, and into the forest beyond. The tall pines, spruce and elm trees that stood shoulder to shoulder like brothers of some long lost family of titans. These brothers blocking small humans from the mysteries that still roamed in those depths of the forest they guarded. Arya heard a long, mournful howl. From the courtyard she heard Nymeria’s powerful answer.
Arya envied the freedom of the wolf pack to roam where it would. Eddard had put out an edict to stop active hunting of wolves. He would compensate for any lost lambs during the lambing season. How Arya wished she, too, had the freedom to seek out the destiny she desired.

She felt trapped by circumstance. She was warrior born, but trapped in a body that society would not acknowledge had the right to seek out the path of the warrior. Arya hoped her sweet Dragon Queen would come to Westeros and change this.

Daenerys Targaryen was the total woman. She was smoking hot, smart, a warrior born and so, so, tall. Arya dreamed of taking that mighty warrior and making her writhe beneath Arya’s fingers and tongue. Arya shivered at just the thought.

She knew the Dragon Queen would love her. She just had to!

Nymeria came strolling down the battlement with her strong, confident lope. Arya looked back out over the embrasure at the dark forest that seemed almost magical in the dim light. Off in the far distance she heard more wolves howling their plaintive cries.

Arya looked into her direwolf’s eyes on level with hers. Nymeria had her ears cocked, twisting locating the sound. Now more howls answered the first from the Southeast. They sounded mournful, like two separated lovers that longed for each other and knew that though they may hear their mate, they would never be reunited.

Nymeria woofed and butted her head into Arya ribs. The action broke her out of her melancholy thoughts. Arya stroked her wolf’s ears and looked into Nymeria’s intelligent, dark golden eyes.

The wolf flopped down onto her back, and looked up at Arya expectantly. Nymeria woofed again, expressing her displeasure at a lack of belly rubbing.

Arya chortled, bending down and aggressively scratched her pleasure hound’s belly with her fingertips. The wolf wiggled on the stone, her legs running in the air and her tongue lolling out of her mouth.

After some satisfying scratches, Arya sat down beside her direwolf.

The times were changing. Arya ruminated in the difference she had seen in her older sister since the Tyrells had arrived. Yes indeed, Sansa was acting different. Before the arrival of the Roses of Highgarden, Sansa had been her usual self, prattling on about Loras this and Loras that. He was so handsome and so strong. She was so sickening in her swooning over the young knight. He was tall, strong, and handsome for sure, but for the life of her Arya could not see why Sansa swooned over that man.

Arya started scratching behind Nymeria’s ears.

But no longer. The last few days, Sansa had not mentioned Loras at all. In fact, she spent all her time with his sister Margaery. She was almost as sickening with Margaery - gods how could the two act any more like girly girls. They were always together, laughing and hugging each other. They for some reason found the need to touch each other constantly to make their points. They would stare into each other’s eyes as they talked, totally ignoring the rest of the world.

Arya wanted to put a finger in her throat and gag. She had been talking to them yesterday and they did not even hear her as the stared into each other’s eyes. What was wrong with them?

She had plucked Sansa in the ear for that. The next thing she knew she was running down the hall, fearing for her life with a furious Margaery Tyrell lifting up her dress to chase after her. She had run to her room and slammed the door shut as an angry Tyrell yelled at her to come out and face her like a girl.

Yeah right.

Arya listened to Margaery pounding on her door and kicking it. Arya’s eyes were still a little wide thinking about it - how had she run so fast holding up her dress with both hands?

She had waited five minutes, hearing nothing. She wanted Nymeria with her, so she opened the door and immediately a hissing, storming Margaery Tyrell was slashing at her with her clawed hands and trying to grab her hair. Wild-eyed, Arya desperately fended her off.

Suddenly, Sansa was there trying to pull Margaery back, distracting the hellcat. Nymeria came loping into Arya’s room, bunting Margaery casually aside. Arya closed the door, but first paused to give Margaery the universal sign of fuck off.

More pounding on her door ensued, but the thick timbers did not even quiver in protest.

Tired, Arya left her stargazing and went to her room. She climbed onto her bed and sat back against her headboard. Nymeria woofed and jumped up to join her mistress, putting her head in Arya’s lap and rumbling when her master scratched her muzzle and along her head up to her twitching ears. The wolf became sleepy, immersed in supreme pleasure.

Arya pondered the riddle of Sansa and Margaery. The girls spent all their time together. Margaery even slept in Sansa’s bed. Arya could just image them giggling and gossiping about whatever small stupid, simpleton prince they had eyes for this day or that. They were probably practicing their stitching for the wedding bridals. Geez. What else could they be doing all night long anyways?

Annoyed, Arya finished with thinking of her sister. The little wild wolf closed her eyes and started to ponder which fantasy she would choose tonight. Who would save whom? … Yes.

Tonight it will be her sword that saves the day.

Arya wiggled down, preparing herself, and then opened the mummer’s play behind her eyelids.

Daenerys Targaryen was fighting a large band of brutish mountain clan ruffians from the Howler clan. Their dead were littered around the high mountain glade. In some places the dead were literally heaped one upon the other, their limbs intertwined in a grotesque dance macabre from their death throes, and their bodies covered in mangy coats of animal fur, rusted chain mail and mismatched plate armor that was ill fitting.

Daenerys’ sword slashed men’s arms off, disemboweled with intestines spewing onto the ground unraveling like a child’s twisted string. Heads were chopped clean off, or cleaved into parts at all different angles.

But the numbers were too great. She was tiring. Arya ran into the glade from the fringe of forest fir and spruce.

Like a Direwolf in righteous anger she dove into the fray. Her right hand held a shorter broadsword, her right hand wielded Needle.

Her swords blocked and parried the initial blows. The blades then lashed and slashed out, delivering death on both sides. Her arms whirled her blades in a blur of crippling blows and killing strokes that struck down their foes.
They came back to back, and Arya fought wildly defending her Queen. No longer exposed from an attack from the rear, Arya and the Queen quickly dispatched the vile brigands.

Suddenly, the dead were gone and the field filled with warm, bright sunshine and a wild profusion of wild flowers in a riot of blue, red, yellow, purple and orange. Arya stared into the violet orbs of the tall Targaryen. They were on the apex of a knoll in the middle of the glade.

The Queen stepped down several steps so their heads were now on the same level. Steel grey met violet eyes, and the Queen smiled. Arya felt her heart flutter, and a shy smile graced her lips. Daenerys gently cupped the younger warrior’s cheeks and brought their lips together. They kissed sweetly to begin with, but soon the hot ardor of pulsing passion took over, and the Queen demanded entrance to Arya’s mouth which was immediately given.

Arya cried out into the mouth devouring hers. Tongues wetly entwined and slithered together. Clothes seemed to magically disappear. Now naked bodies pressed tightly as the Queen took her new lover to the bed of flowers and lowered herself between Arya’s legs.

Soon Arya’s cries of ecstasy filled the summer glade.

Nymeria looked up at her master with her chin down on her neck her eyelids jerking with her dreams. Her body twitched, and the smell of her arousal filled Nymeria’s nostrils.

Her master was dreaming of white haired woman again. Nymeria laid back down soon joining her master in sleep as she too dreamed of a mate and the sweet coupling they would partake of. She would stay with her master for half the moon passing in the sky before she ran out to the pack to run wild.
“Nooooooooo!” Daenerys screamed. She awoke with ghastly visions of Meereen in her mind, her body soaked in sweat and the sheets twisted and half kicked off the bed.

She wiped her hand across her face to stop the sweat running down her forehead. She took several deep breaths to start getting her breathing under control as she shook.

She remembered receiving news of the crucified children on the coastal road between Meereen and Yunkai. She had been utterly shocked. She was stunned that Meereen would have such cruel arrogance. She never considered such violence on the innocent.

She had been enraged. She mounted Drogon and soared over the roadway. Twenty miles out she came upon the first child. She was dead, her right hand nailed to point to Meeren. It was a warning. The crows had already pecked her eyes out, and her body was turning dark and starting to bloat.

She flew down the ancient highway as tears of rage and grief tore at her heart. Each child she came upon opened the tear further. They were all dead, each had their right arm nailed to the mile markers pointing down the road that ran towards the city.

The mutilated condition of the bodies was a flail on her flesh. She screamed her impotent rage atop Drogon. She vowed she would have her revenge. She flew up to Meereen, where they were waiting for her. She had been so enraged she had been tempted to press in right then, but the scorpion barrages begged caution.

She saw them on the walls laughing in scorn and confidence.

With their thick, high walls they had felt safe. They had been fools. She was Daenerys Targaryen, Mother of Dragons.

Near the hour of midnight she had arisen from their sewers like some ghoul from dark legend. Trash and human waste covered her body and matted her hair. She brought her Unsullied up to the city and led the rebellion from within as her forces outside the walls and in the harbor engaged the defenses of Meereen.

She had led her forces and ever-growing slaves that joined them covered in the filth of the city. She did not remove any of it. The city was foul, and she wanted its stench on her body to urge her on.

She had righteous retribution to dispense. There would be justice for those sweet, innocent children killed like mangy dogs on the coastal road.

Meereen had fallen by noon the next day.

With her informants from the Freedom Slave Underground and freed slaves she quickly found the most prominent leaders. It had not been hard; most had no fear of her. She quickly rounded up the men and women leaders and their immediate family.

The children younger than sixteen were led off.

Daenerys, still covered in filth, watched the Great Masters as they were brought into the large court. Zeknahr mo Zharazn of House Ghazeen presented himself as spokesperson of the Great Masters, the heads of Meereen's slaving families. When Daenerys came up to him, he spit in her face.

He started to speak down to the small usurper but Daenerys’ fist ripped up and smashed into his teeth, shattering them as he choked and spit out shards of broken teeth and blood.

She pronounced their fate. She had taken down one hundred and sixty-three children from the crosses down the coastal road. She told the staring nobles that she knew Ghiscari culture revered the number five as a lucky number.

In ‘honor’ of their culture, Daenerys would herself have one hundred and sixty-three times their lucky number of five crucified for what they’d done to those children.

The nobles were gathered and Daenerys led them out to the fields where holes had already been dug in circles. She ordered the Noble men of Meereen to crucify first their own accountably-aged sons and daughters, and then their wives to the crossbeams and post.

Most had balked at first, till she took the whip to them. Then men were sobbing and begging as she got her Blood Riders and captains of her mercenary companies to grip their sure hands over the weak Master men’s hands and hammer the nails home.

Some men fought however ineffectually, and she shattered their hands herself with a heavy mallet. Their screams and the screams of their heirs and women on the cross only fueled her anger. The screams of the slave children did not stop their executioners.

These ‘nobles’ were pigs ordering their crimes to be committed from afar. She got up and personal with their execution. She had the ‘honor’ of wielding the instruments of death herself. She drove in many of the nails into the Masters by her own hand. Their screams meant nothing to her then. She was the mouth that ordered their death and it would be her hands performing their execution.

She owed them that much. To be their executioner.

She pulled the sheets around herself. She had been so enraged seeing those poor innocents killed so heinously with their arms outstretched toward Meereen.

She had taken no joy in the Masters’ executions, but did not turn aside. For her it had been retribution plain and simple. They had killed the innocent and had paid the price. Unlike the Masters of Meereen she took the sin of their upon herself.

Now she wondered about the zeal with which she had dispensed justice. She now knew that several of the houses had been somewhat liberal and maybe she could have worked with them. Wasted opportunities.

It was the wives’ wails and the screams of the sons and daughters that truly haunted her now. She had been so lost in her raging anger.

You can’t paint a whole canvass with one brush stroke. It took many. Many of those women were no doubt married off to their own ‘masters’ like she had been to Drogo. They may have been corrupt to one degree or another, but just how guilty had they been? Weren’t at least some of them innocent?
If Khal Drogo had been overthrown when she had first been bartered off to him should she have been killed? Had she not been innocent at the time? Some of the women had to have still been pure enough not to deserve their fate.

And then there were their children. They still had the potential to take a different path; many were still young enough. She had robbed them of that. She took away all their possibilities of tomorrow. The way some looked at her when she watched impassively as she forced their fathers’ hands to crucify them. She was their monster.

She had walked between the posts, asking the “powerful Masters” if they still felt powerful? Had the Masters of Meereen asked themselves about the lives of the slaves they killed? They had thought they were gods, didn’t they? Now she had become their God! She did this over the three days it took for the last to die in humiliation and agony.

She could still see each of their faces. She watched them die slowly and they became etched into her memory forever. She had not expected that. She had thought she would put them behind her. She instead found she carried them with her. They came to her at night to torment her with her cruelty and malice. She found herself reliving their deaths over and over again.

She would awake drenched in sweat with their screams ringing in her ears.

She wondered if she would have the right to feel victimized if her enemies were to crucify her now.

Daenerys shook herself. Her body was cooling. She was sure her meeting with the bastards of Robert Baratheon scheduled for today had triggered those particular nightmares.

Daenerys sighed. She had no one to hold her and soothe her soul’s torment when she awoke from her terrors. No one to love and comfort her. She looked around forlornly.

Varys

The table was covered with twenty dossiers, which was amazing in itself. Varys looked over a report titled ‘Jorlyn’. She had been hard tease out. She was thirteen summers with the jet black hair and deep blue eyes of Robert Baratheon. The daughter of a seamstress. She was a beauty he supposed, though such things did not interest him.

He looked over a few of the other dossiers again even though he had them all memorized. All of Robert’s issue had survived. That was also surprising - no illness had taken any of them. Varys chuckled with the old phrase he had heard once: “the seed is strong”. Robert’s seed was superlative.

All of his children were dark of hair and blue of eyes. They were all strapping youths, strong and tall of body. And something else he had seen in the reports - all of the children comported themselves with restraint and a sense of control.

Somehow their mother’s traits seemed to ascendent with their personalities. Robert had shown very little of that.

Varys wondered about that. It was like after Robert won the throne he didn’t know what to do next. Of course, marrying that harridan could not have helped matters.

The woman thought she was a master of the Game of Thrones. That made the master of whispers chuckle. She kept saying she should have been born a man and allowed to take up the sword.

That was exactly what the queen had ended up doing. His spiders reported that Cersei was toiling mightily and suffering greatly. He kept waiting to read the report where she finally gave up and stopped her foolish efforts. It had not come yet. She would somehow roll over from flat on her back and lever herself back up and resume the near-torturous exercise the master of Dorne’s Military Academy, Myrion Dwellen, kept subjecting Cersei Lannister to.

In fact he read how the Master in the beginning had overstressed the woman and given her a near fatal case of heat stroke. Cersei had survived. It seemed the bitch was tougher than all himself included gave her credit for. Of interest to Varys was the report that Obara had cared for the Lannister tenderly. Cersei was near comatose and did not know of the way Obara treated her with reverence. Varys knew this must have enraged her father Oberyn. The thought of his daughter falling in love with the Lannister would be intolerable. Cersei was simply unlovable.

Tyrion must be pissed. He had lost many gold dragons betting against his sister in the ongoing pool as to when his sister would stop. He was befuddled that she kept going forward. Truth be told, so was Varys.

Also, according to whispers the oldest Sand Snake of Oberyn had taken an even keener interest in Cersei. It seemed that Obara had boned with Cersei during her moment of crisis. Maybe Cersei’s grit and determination was an aphrodisiac to the martial daughter of Oberyn. Obara was actively training with the Cersei. Rumors were flying around Sunspear and the Military Academy that Obara had her eye on the fallen Lannister. Everyone saw it. Why? Cersei was still a beauty to be sure, but a failure. What could that strong, proud woman see in the fallen pretender?

Poor Oberyn. The shame and humiliation his eldest was bringing him. He would always hate Cersei.

Varys brought his mind back to the matter at hand.

He had put a lot of the crown’s limited resources in tracking down all of the former’s king’s bastard children, and he had finally found them all. The Queen had been most pressing on him locating them. They ranged in age from twenty to only a little over a year old.

He did not count the children of Cersei. Anyone with eyes could see that they were the result of incestuous coupling between brother and sister. He personally didn’t care. Didn’t seem to bother the Targaryens any. Of course the constant inbreeding did tease out a certain insanity that ran in the family. He had seen that Rhaegar did not have the taint. Neither did Daenerys Targaryen. She was fiery and sometimes too passionate, but her reasoning was clear and sound.

If anyone else had else had asked him to find all these children he would be sure that they were about to be executed. A problem being removed before it could even develop.

But this was Daenerys Targaryen. He was absolutely sure the children would be safe. He just didn’t know what she had planned, and that upset him. His spiders were everywhere in the Red Keep and Daenerys knew it. She and that damn imp would put their heads together and barely whisper.

He was the master of whispers and they were using his very own weapon against him. He finally had to accept he would not find out until the Queen met with the twenty bastards of Robert Baratheon within the hour.

He wondered what their life would be like after the meeting.

Most had a decent enough life. Some were seamstresses, one was an animal handler, Edric had it good at Dragonstone, another was a smith. Two girls were working as high end prostitutes for Chataya of the Summer Islands and extremely happy.
Varys sipped his Earl Grey. If only Robert had put as much effort into being king as he did fathering bastards maybe his legacy in the history books would be quite different than what would be written. A drunken lout that spent the crown into insolvency, abused his wife and fathered bastards like they were golden eggs.

Varys couldn’t wait for the meeting.

Daenerys

Daenerys had taken a hot bath, the water scalding to wash her skin and hair vigorously. She needed to feel clean after her nightmares. She remembered how she would put her dragon eggs in the embers of a fire and handle them afterwards. That was when she first began to suspect her true destiny.

She combed out her hair. It was soon shiny and silky. She liked to do her own ablutions in the morning and dressing herself for her morning session of sparring with her mentors. She was always pushing herself to improve. She had conquered her kingdoms but she could never know what future challenges would unexpectedly arise.

Or perhaps the vexing Eddard Stark would force her to march north and put down whatever the hell he was doing. She had not called her banners yet. The time it would take to marshal her forces, train and fit out would take months and she was loathe to do it.

She resisted the calls from her Small Council to go on a war footing. She would be forced to march north.

Today she had an important meeting so she called in her attendants. She sat patiently as they weaved her Dothraki bells into her snow white hair, the silver bells blending in perfectly with her long tresses and creating perfect highlights. She had forty-seven bells now. She was proud of every single one.

When she met with Barristan and Syrio, she was especially aggressive with her mentors. She charged in recklessly with her practice sword, fighting like a demon possessed. Her blade was a blur that was matched by the former Captain of the Kingsguard and Water Dancer. She pressed her attack. They never gave her quarter. She had red marks on her arms and her left ribs ached from a sharp blow from Barristan.

She had done well. She almost pushed through Syrio’s defenses and had knocked Barristan to the ground when she kicked him in the knee and then punched him in the temple. He had backhanded her across the cheek in return, but she felt it was worth it. He had come up with a spinning pivot and brushed back her attack but she had put him on his ass.

After the sparring session Barristan came up to her and casually. “And?” he asked.

Daenerys had simply said: “Coastal Road.”

Barristan had shook his head and smiled sadly. He knew the cause and effect of that phrase.

Whenever Daenerys came at her mentors like a crazed, rabid hyena they knew she had had a nightmare.

She had sat through her Small Council and the reports and updates had been routine. Eddard had kindly decided to not do anything to piss off for the day.

She had read the dossiers on the children of Robert Baratheon. She had been impressed. The young adults were all tall and comely, and all had stood out in whatever field of endeavor they had chosen as their profession.

The teenagers and children were all mild mannered, though proud and fierce in their play and focused on learning the various trades their mothers had setup for their offspring.

She read about how Mya Stone had her eye on a certain young night. He had lost interest in the base born woman. She had been hurt but quickly acted like she didn’t care and took other lovers.

Daenerys hated how the children of nobles born outside of marriage were punished and not the father. She had admired how Eddard Stark had taken in his bastard and raised him as a Stark in all but name. She had fumed that it was his wife that refused to allow the boy to grow up a Stark.

She felt sorry for Mya and all the other nineteen children. Their father could not keep his fucking dick in his trousers and didn’t have the common sense the gods gave a mule. Couldn’t he see that none of Cersei’s children were his? They did not have his face or build. Robert had seen many of his offspring: all black of hair and deep blue of eyes.

Fucking idiot.

She had her hair touched up after the Small Council meeting as she wanted to impress the children of Robert Baratheon. She wanted to look her fierce, regal best for what she had planned.

Gendry

Gendry was nervous as he waited in the large room. He had arrived second behind a fifteen year old boy, who was apprenticing to be a scribe. He only got more and more nervous as more and more young adults, teenagers, children and babes entered in the room, along with their mothers in the case of the youngest.

He had guessed his lineage but it didn’t matter. He only wanted to be a great smith. He was near to taking his master’s exam and he knew he would pass it. He had taken up the war hammer to work off excess energy and improve the symmetry of his muscles - he didn’t want the stereotypical overly large dominant arm from working the hammer on metal.

He was getting quite good, he had to admit, his master having hired a man to help Gendry train with the hammer to help him develop his skills. His master knew of his ability and wanted a happy apprentice, hoping that Gendry would continue to work for him until he was ready to move on or, hopefully, maybe take over his smithy.

Gendry kept looking around thinking of one word: fratricide. He began to sweat. He had heard stories of what happened the night the Targaryen dynasty came to an end. The children of Rheagar Targaryen had not survived the night. If the mad king’s children had not been smuggled out of the city unbeknownst, they too would have been killed.

Now one of them had returned. He could only hope she was not about to commit the same crime against him and his own obvious half-brothers and sisters that had been attempted on her.

New rulers so often wanted to remove any possible obstruction to their rule. This room full of Baratheon bastards had trouble written all over their proverbial foreheads.

Still, he had some hope. Everything he had seen from the new Queen had been positive. His father had been a drunken fool that only seemed to live to eat, drink and fuck.

He looked around the room to see confirmation of that last fact. He saw a mirror of his features written on the faces of the other gathered men and women.
All that Gendry really wanted out of life was to be a great smith. He knew he was well on the way to achieving his dream. He had recently cast his own warhammer that fit his hand and his build perfectly. He had worked ornate edges on the lower sides of the warhead and made it a two-handed weapon just like his father had used in his rebellion.

He had no desire to spark a rebellion. Just the thought had him looking around nervously. He just liked the length of the hammer in his large hands. He stood almost as tall as his exiled father. He still had a hard time understanding the Queen’s restraint. He was the deposed ruler and they were always killed.

His attitude vacillated between the extremes of ‘I am going to die within the hour’ to the almost confident feeling that everything would be okay.

He really just wanted to get back to his forge and hammers.

He watched the other bastards surreptitiously. Some were calm, cool and collected while others were clearly about to piss themselves. He only hoped he didn’t look like the latter.

Across the room he spied a very pretty woman about his age, or maybe a little older. She was tall at over her six feet in height with broad shoulders, lean of build with small breasts. Her body was muscular in her riding leathers. He continued glancing at her out of the corner of his eye. He couldn’t help but admire her beauty.

Suddenly, all were silent as the Queen entered the room. She wore breeches and a tunic tucked in with a sword belt on but without blade or scabbard. He noticed the daggers strapped to her thighs.

She called out, demanding their attention.

She then told them that she had sought all the children of Robert Baratheon. Gendry could hear the gasps of some of the teenagers in the room. Clearly some were shocked to hear of who they actually were.

The Queen then told them that she had no ill-will towards any of them. She said: “I will not punish any for the sins of their parents.” She paused. “And still, the bringing of life into this world can never be a sin.”

The white hard petite woman then gently took a black-haired baby from its mother and rocked the sleeping infant.

The Queen then told them that as of today their last name was Baratheon if they chose. If they wanted to keep their current names, that would be fine too. She told them she had had slave guards that still used their slave names. The reasons were their own, and she fully supported their choices.

She told them that she would provide ample support to the younger children and their mothers. All were free that lived outside of King’s Landing to move into the city. Their mothers would be provided work at very decent wages and their children would be royally educated.

All were invited to further or begin their schooling. She wanted them all to be literate and to have all the options open due their noble birth.

The grown children were going to be offered jobs. She then talked to them individually. He was told that he would sit for his Smithy Master Guild Hammer and Tong. She was going to make his smithy another royal affiliated forge since she had heard nothing but positives about their work.

He had accidently heard that the Stone girl was offered a job in the royal stables. He heard the girl brazenly ask for a yew longbow as well. The queen had smiled and granted her request. The girl was cheeky, and the Queen benevolent.

He heard so many whispers about this Queen, some more violent than others. He had heard how she had crushed whole city states and fought and defeated Khalasars. She had killed their Khals and then taken their bells.

Gendry’s mouth fell open as he realized it was true. Those bells were on full display, chiming in her hair.

He looked at his Queen in wonder. She had conquered kingdoms and was now taking in all of the bastards of her predecessor.

The whispers of her benevolence were alive in the room. His fear disappeared.

Mya

Mya had not been disappointed in her Queen.

She had been accosted by an emissary for the Queen three months ago. The man had come to her and asked that she come to King’s Landing to meet the new Queen. She wished to talk about things the man would not divulge.

She asked the man point blank if this was request or a demand.

She had been surprised that it was in fact a request. The Queen would only reach out once. She was free to choose her destiny. She could live her life as she saw fit.

She had demanded to know what the Queen wanted from her.

“Nothing.” was the reply.

“Then why are you here?”

“To give you a new destiny if you so desire Mya Stone, or should I say Mya Baratheon. The choice is yours. I will be leaving in two days. You can come with me, or live your life here.”

She had chosen to go with the emissary. She would always be a bastard in the Vale, looked down upon, or she could take a chance and find out what the Queen wanted with her.

She was duly impressed. She was now considered nobility, but she could still work at what she was good at.

The Queen wanted to raise the younger children up to be designees in her government. She would need leaders to help govern in Westerosi fiefdoms and in her service in Essos.

She told Mya her way with animals was well known. Mya had told her she loved archery and cheekily asked for a yew bow expecting to be put down for being impertinent.

Instead she was told she was going to get a yew bow tomorrow. She was fist pumping inside.

She watched the smith boy, Gendry, gawking at her and trying so hard to not be seen doing it. It was endearing, and she found him very, very attractive.

As far as she was concerned he was nothing to her. If she wanted him, she didn’t care if he was her half-brother.
She watched the Queen pick up a Baratheon baby and coo to it. Then a six year old came up to her and simply stared up at her with wide, open eyes. The girl followed her around like a star-stuck puppy.

The Queen bent down and talked to the girl, ruffling her hair. Then the girl ran back to her mother, who was a whore. She would be one no more. The Queen had asked the woman if she had a hobby. The woman had said she liked making jewelry. She could be apprenticed as of the next day if she chose. The woman chose.

Mya saw the sad look on the Queen’s face as the girl climbed up on her mother and her mother hugged and cooed to the girl as the girl talked excitedly about the Queen.

“Why so sad, my Queen?”

“She reminds me of my daughter.”

“Daughter? I am surprised. I thought, er—well, that you were childless.”

“I am … now.”

“What happened? … Sorry, I shouldn’t have asked that.”

“No it’s alright. She died over five years ago.”

For some reason it was important for Mya to know more. “May I ask what happened to your daughter? … I can see you truly miss her.”

“She was stabbed through the heart right before my own heart was pierced by the same sword.” the Queen answered and slowly moved off.

Mya stood there, her mouth agape. The Queen went to a window and stared out of it for a while, her thoughts obviously on her long ago lost daughter.

Mya now understood some of the rage that permeated the stories of her conquest of Essos. Gods, to have your child killed before your eyes. My own heart was pierced by the same sword. Mya stared at the Queen. What was this woman?

Edric

The room was filled with excitement due to what the Queen had told them all. She had moved around the room to talk to each of the older children one by one, his kin. She had seemed genuinely interested in each one of them.

The Queen had talked to a girl who was a prostitute at a high end brothel that catered only to women of noble birth and women married to powerful merchants or guildsmen. For some reason the Queen seemed quite interested in the girl’s descriptions of both the brothel and its clientele. The Queen had made sure to make the young woman feel comfortable and respected.

She asked the girl if she wanted to continue her profession or come into her service and train for service to the kingdom. The girl had respectfully declined, saying she was being groomed to run the brothel when her lover, the owner, retired. The queen had smiled and wished her well. She told the girl, Dyanna, she would put out word in her forming court of women in need of her services. The girl had beamed.

Then the Queen was before him. The Queen knew his name and about his life at Storm’s End. She knew of his affection for Cortnay Penrose, Renly's castellan. They made small talk and then the Queen asked Edric if he wanted to come with Cortnay to King’s Landing.

She had learned of his studious ways and how he had mastered High Valyrian. She needed this skill set. She required an ambassador to speak for her in the Free Cities. The further southeast you went, the more Valyrian was spoken and she needed someone who could speak both the Common Tongue and High Valyrian interchangeably.

She asked him if he happened to know anyone who could fill this need. He had nearly shouted ‘yes!’ in his enthusiasm.

The Queen chuckled. He would begin his diplomatic training the next day, and she would send for Cortnay Penrose. They would travel to Essos together when Edric was ready.

Edric was stunned. He had been an afterthought to his own father. He had heard the rumors of how his father laughed at the thank you notes he sent for gifts his father had never got for him himself.

This woman had just met him and was already showing him more respect and honor than his own blood. He had finally met true nobility

Daenerys

The warm sunlight felt good on her face. Daenerys kept her back to the crowd in the room as she suppressed her body’s tremors. Tears ran silently down her cheeks.

She had not thought of Kiserri for a while now. The little girl was taller than her precious angel had been, but her black hair and innocent ways reminded her of her little Blood Rider. Her heart ached to again hold her precious adopted child.

She could see as if it were happening all over again, the pain and terror in her daughter’s eyes as the sword ran through her body. The blood that poured out her mouth as she tried to scream.

The Queen quickly cried herself out. She had learned how to do that over the years when sad memories flooded into her present.

She sniffled and stopped her tears. She surreptitiously pulled a tissue she always kept for this purpose, and dabbed her eyes and cheeks dry.

Daenerys breathed deep like Syrio taught her and calmed herself. She turned around, ready to meet her Queenly duties.

She returned to the audience chamber, talking genteelly to the various Baratheons in the room. They would never again be called bastards. Those days were no more for these children.

She was angered at the very concept of punishing the children for the sins of their father and sometimes mother. This was something else she planned to change about her homeland and Essos. Royalty would acknowledge and raise their children as their own. If you brought a child into the world then you by the gods were going to raise it as your own with honor and love.

She would make it very clear that they would deal with her if they failed in this. This was one battle she could pick and win. There would be no more Stones, Snows, Waters or Sands.

After the royals were moved to recognize their progeny then she would work to make all men recognize and raise their offspring whether fathered in or out of marriage.
Daenerys looked around the room. The meeting had gone well, and she had achieved all that she set out to do. She had given the unrecognized children of Robert Baratheon the future they deserved.

She had enjoyed seeing the reactions of the young adults; they were old enough to understand what this day meant to them. With the younger children it had been a pleasure to see the women who were raising their bastard children alone to suddenly understand that never again would they be openly scorned for their ‘indiscretion’ of the past again. Their children now had a future. They had a future. All had leapt at the chance to have a better life for themselves and their children.

Daenerys made it clear her largesse was for the whole family. They would not be coddled, but supported to better their stations in life.

Her emotions in check, she resumed playing with the younger children. She remembered the good times with Kiserri.

She was pleased and honored when Gendry, Mya and Edric came up to her and bent the knee in unison and pledge their allegiance to her.

Yes indeed, she had acted wisely. Today had been a good day.
Cersei

Cersei was leaning over the rail vomiting yet again as the horizon seemed to roll at obscene angles. Her stomach was hurting and her throat was burning. The retching contractions began anew.

She felt her hair being cupped and brought from around her face, pulled behind her ear and laid on her back. She felt a hand rubbing her back as she began vomiting again. Then several more times she retched up nothing. She was exhausted.

Once empty, her stomach calmed slightly. She tiredly lifted her head to see who had shown her a kindness.

Her face registered her shock at Oberyn standing beside her with a neutral look on his face. “Cersei,” he said simply.

“Come to revel in my misery? …damn how do you sail on these violent seas?! … the waves are huge!” she finished weakly, leaning back against the rail, her head slightly spinning.

Oberyn looked out over the rail at the two-foot waves with a chuckle. “Cersei, I fear to tell you that these waves are actually quite calm, really.” He pulled a corked bottle out of his pant’s pocket. He pulled the cork out and handed it to the Lannister. “Drink this, Cersei.”

Cersei sniffed the bottle suspiciously. Was it poison? “What is this?”

The worn out woman looked at him suspiciously and smelled the bottle again.

“Why would you help me? I am a cunt, you know.”

Oberyn sighed. “That you have been Cersei … that you have been. But you are to be a warrior now. Drink.” He walked off at ease on the rolling deck.

Most strange. Cersei thought. She drank the concoction. To her surprise, she started to feel better.

She turned to look out at the waves. The horizon was no longer rolling. She looked back up the deck, and observed Oberyn up at the wheelhouse. He looked back at her for a moment before going below decks.

Myrcella and Arianne were leaned back against the headboard of their bed. They were covered in half dried sweat and cum. Their hair darkened and matted with their sweat. They were side by side on the bed. Their hips and sides touching heads pressed back into the wood.

Their inside legs were thrown over the other’s leg their outside legs spread out. Their pussies opened up. Both women were masturbating with expert skill. They watched each other as they jilled off. At times tilting heads over to kiss with heated fuck hunger. Their tongues like serpents writhing around each other. Their twined tongues snaking form mouth to mouth writhing and twisting in slippery wet love.

Their faces slashed with wanton pleasure. Their fingers worked their pussies with expert skills. Fingers that pumped deep in sodden pussies or rolled and squeezed engorged clits. They smiled at each other and looked down to watch their wife masturbate for her.

Myrcella was slamming two upturned fingers hard up her cunt that was making wet sloshing sounds. Arianne had buried two fingers up her cunt. Her hand was also upturned but jammed in deep. Her last two fingers jerking up spastically as she woman rubbed her frontal cunt wall and then her g-spot with the first two fingers of her right hand.

“Auggggggge!” Arianne cried out in an uprush of ecstasy. Her fingertips were jacking into and over the spongy hillock. Arianne looked over at her pride wife. Myrcella was staring with glassy eyes at the twins.

Arianne turned her head and watched the twins perpendicular on the bed in a hot sweaty sixty-nine. They had their bodies pulled tight with hands gripping hips or ass cheeks.

Loreza was on the bottom her neck up off the bed and voraciously eating her sister out. Her head pumping up to spear tongue in deep up her sister’s twat. Loreza slurped and moaned dining on sweet pussy.

Dorea on top had sucked in her twin’s entire upper cunt deep into her mouth. Dorea was pulling her head back stretching out her sister’s cunt out an inch as she stretched Loreza’s soaked vulva. The slimy wet cunt meat clearly seen by their wives as they masturbated.

Dorea wiggled her head like the lioness she was stretching and pulling on the cunt meat in her mouth. Dorea’s head went down and up with her love suck on Loreza’s sloppy wet trim. She groaned gutturally loving having her wife’s quim and clit deep in her mouth where her tongue lashed the sweet cunt meat.

Loreza’s head jammed back into the bed and tilted back her face showing a shocking ecstasy. Her throat pulled taunt. "Aungnoownngg! Aungnoownnggg! Ohhhhhh Dorea I loveeeeee youuuuuuuu! . . . Ohhnnn . . . ungghhh! Ohh! Unmmnnnggeeeeee! Oh yes! Ohnn! Unnggghmmnnnieeee!" the lithesome body jerked into the body pressing her down. Their sweaty bodies glued together.

Arianne and Myrcella smiled at each other seeing their wives fuck so exuberantly. They were then kissing as they continued masturbating. They were all in such love with each other!

They broke their kiss and Arianne began so shudder. Myrcella looked down and Arianne had her fingers buried deep in her cunt rubbing her g-spot desperately. Suddenly, Arianne’s body folded over and down her heavy tits swaying underneath her folded body. Wild spasms ripped through her "Mmmnnnggguuunnnnggg! Oh! Aiinggh! Mnnngguumnnnggg! Aiyyeee!" Arianne screamed as her cunt tried to tear itself inside out. Her body rising up and then jamming down as convulsions of ecstasy ripped through her body. Arianne folded over her body jerking wildly making her heavy tits flip and roll so hot and dirty underneath her folded body. Her body convulsed hard her face slashed the agonizing pleasure. Her tits rippled and jiggled as her udders shook with her bodies convulsions. Her face looked like she was being tortured with ecstasy. "Fffffuuuccckkkk Unngghhiieeeeee! Unngggniieeeeewwwwww!!" Myrcella’s wife wailed as her body toppled over to the side. Arianne’s body still convulsed with her dying orgasm. Her body had folded up to a half fetal position as killing aftershocks rocked her voluptuous body her feet kicking and her ankles slamming into each other as her top leg jerked up and slammed down again and again as killing ecstasy still tore through the Martell’s body.

Myrcella looked back at the twins now. Dorea had gotten out of their sixty-nine position and had mounted her twin wife. She had their cunts locked tight and pulled Loreza’s right leg up and had put it on her sweaty torso. Dorea had her wife’s ankle on her shoulder.

Dorea held on for dear life using Loreza’s leg as an anchor as she jacked her cunt back and forth over her sister’s cunt. She was jamming and sweeping her swollen pussy over Loreza’s swollen distended cunt. Dorea’s whimpers desperate.

Dorea pushed Loreza leg out with her hands gripping Loreza’s ankle. Spittle spraying out her clenched teeth. Then Dorea’s head snapped back as violent convulsions ripped through her body. "AIINNGGHHHHIIIEEEE! AAWWOOGGGGIGGGG!!" Dorea shrieked like a murder victim. It was a such a blood-curdling shriek that Myrcella was sure their body guards would crash through their door. "Ummnngggiieeee! Ggggggooodddddssss dammmmmmmnnn! Unnggghhhiieeeeeewwwwww!!" Dorea howled again, but not as loud this time.

She slowly slumped forward her body pressed into her sister’s sweat soaked body. They wiggled around to get their faces together and they kissed in languid love.

Now Myrcella’s orgasm erupted. Her body was flipping forward and slamming back into the headboard again and again. The bed shook violently with her lithesome body crashing into the wood hard. Her screams echoing off the walls.

Finally, her orgasm was waning and Arianne enfolded her in her arms and pulled her down so they were lying down on the bed with Myrcella on top. The feel of her wife’s tits mashed into her small doves and their sweaty bellies mated in tendrils of sweat and cum with those tiny filaments so colorful in the light. Their mouths sought and found each other and mated tight. Their tongues wrapped around its mate and danced in pure love.

Myrcella walked down to the docks surrounded by her wives. Arianne was in a beautiful dress that allowed her tits to nearly fall out while hugging her hips, showing off her hour glass figure. Her sand snakes were in tight leather with open vests displaying their cleavage.

They were the envy of all.

She smiled, loving all the hungry eyes that fell on them. They had all heard the whispers. So many wanted access to her wives and their shared bed. But they were not of her pride - they were of no consequence.
She was mentally reviewing the reports she’d received back from King’s Landing. Her and Arianne’s reports had apparently blown the Queen away. She walked with her head held high. Arianne was beaming, and her hips swaying saucily.

The sand snakes had been pensive, and they had to fuck them hard over and over to mollify their doubts. Myrcella told them their time would come. Power attracted danger in the Game of Thrones. A feral look came over the twins faces then; they looked forward to finding a home for their spears and swords.

Myrcella had seen her mother getting off of the ship when it arrived from King’s Landing. She had looked wobbly, trying to get her land legs. She did not feel anything really for the woman. She really had been a bad mother, but was still very happy that Daenerys had spared her life.

She and her sand snakes had been keeping an eye on her surreptitiously. They watched Cersei Lannister exercise and run constantly as Myrion Dwellen seemed to work her mercilessly. They watched Cersei topple over to lie on her back, spent. Cersei’s mouth was vitriolic as she spewed insults and barbs up at the man leaning over her patiently.

It was Loreza that spoke appreciation for the fact that eventually, Cersei would painfully roll over to all fours and then push herself up on shaky legs while still hurling insults and resume her training.

Over the weeks they had observed her getting stronger and stronger. The woman was now able to run the laps demanded. She would end every run gasping as Myrion continued increasing the limits. Calisthenics and lifting heavy rocks were just part of the daily regiment.

Slowly, Cersei’s body was hardening and sleek muscles were starting to appear.

They also noticed that Obara Sand had started to appear on the training ground. She would stand back and merely observe. When asked by her sisters why she was there, she merely stated that she found the woman fascinating. To begin warrior training so late in life was rare.

The twins had never seen Obara take such a long-term interest in a woman before. She had always been a woman who had sex for pleasure; a queen of the one night stand. She fucked her women and moved on to the next conquest.

This fascination with Cersei Lannister was most unusual.

Obara told her youngest sisters that she was impressed with the woman’s determination and amused by her acid tongue.

Today Myrcella would finally confront her mother. She knew it was not going to be a good meeting.

As her pride walked to the training ground they were joined by Obara. When they reached the training grounds, they found Cersei doing pushups.

Myrcella watched her mother doing pushup after pushup as she advanced on the heavily sweating woman.

Cersei

Cersei was seething as she finished her third set of two hundred and fifty setups and one hundred pushups. She was sweating like a fucking pig. She wore a thin top and short leggings. She was soaked in sweat and aloe for her continuous sunburn. She had trouble sleeping for the first three months with her burned skin. She had never been out in the sun until she came to his hellhole with its burning sun. She was given aloe at night to take the heat out of her skin.

She had been given rice bran to put on her skin to act as a sunscreen to mute the sun striking her skin. She had used a wide brim hat and veils at first but she sensed the other cadets thought her weak for it. Cersei hated weakness. More so in herself than anyone else. She slowly peeled back the veils and then removed her hat as her skin finally adjusted. She was happy that at last her fair skin was calming down.

She looked up, then stood and sneered. Finally. She knew her sweet, sweet daughter would eventually show up to grind her nose in it. She would have done it if the situation was reversed.

She saw her loving daughter and her ‘pride’ approaching, along with an added sand snake, Obara. It was unnerving having the woman watch her working out - slaving away at her toils. The warrior’s face was impassive.

Cersei guessed the woman was in her early thirties. Her body was toned and muscled but she still had a woman’s figure. Her full C cup breasts were still high and firm. The thin training outfits she wore displayed the woman’s nipples, often erect from the workouts. Cersei found herself staring at the sand snake when she was using her spear at a speed that was almost unimaginable. Her skill with the bull whip was also impressive.

She often heard the younger women training on the campus talking about how skilled she was in bed, and how they were so infatuated with the eldest sand snake. The woman evidently made her women scream the night away in ecstasy.

Cersei groused internally. Had anyone ever truly made her scream in the pure joy of sex? Jamie had, but that seemed like another lifetime ago. All of her other lovers had left her feeling old and used.

They stood before her, offering no salutations of love or respect. They were at an impasse with no one speaking. They stood staring at each other for several minutes.

Finally, Cersei could not take it anymore.

“Come to watch me toil, dear daughter? Why now? Why the sour look on your face, issue of my body?” Cersei spat at her daughter and her disgusting wives.

“Nice to see you too, mother. Still an asshole I see. Do you ever have anything nice to say to anyone other than uncle Jamie? Actually no… not even him anymore, since he left you for Brienne of Tarth. Best decision he ever made.” Myrcella replied, with her own spiteful looking face.

Cersei grimaced at the low blow. She really didn’t need all this. She had more runs and exercises to complete or Myrion would be deriding her with his silent stern look that said ‘I am disappointed in you Cersei’. That would always fire her up, and she’d attack her next task with a vengeance.

She was going to shove it down everyone’s throats someday. “What do you want Myrcella? As you can see I have much to do and little time to do it.” Cersei looked at the other women. “Whom do you love the least, Myrcella?” She looked around at the women one by one. “Two skinny sluts and one fat one.” Cersei probed for weakness. She found it in Arianne’s wince of self-doubt.

“Let me guess, it must be the fat one with big ugly cow udders.” She spoke matter-of-factly. She smirked hearing Arianne gasp and her face started to become distraught. Yes! Cersei thought to herself.

She watched Myrcella turn around to see her wife’s distress. Her daughter whipped around with a murderous look on her face. Her hand seemed to fly out at her.

SLAP!

Cersei’s head jerked over from her daughter’s vicious slap across her cheek.

Myrcella began to scream. “Don’t you ever, ever insult one of my wives again?!” Her emerald eyes were on fire, and spittle sprayed out her mouth. “Arianne is one of the most beautiful women to ever walk the face of this Earth. Do you understand that? Only Loreza and Dorea match her beauty!” The sand snakes were fuming beside Arianne as they softly stroked the woman. Their eyes promised vile retribution.

“You are a mean spirited little shit!” daughter yelled at mother.

Myrcella then pulled Arianne hard into her body and kissed her hard. Their chuffing and working cheeks showed their tongues entwined and wrestling wetly deep in Arianne’s mouth. Cersei was disgusted seeing their mouths part as her daughter kissed her lover hard and deep. Their wet tongues entangled and wrestling in raging love before their mouths mated tight again.

Arianne stopped sobbing and started to mewl into Myrcella’s devouring mouth. Their bodies melded as the long kiss continued.

The voluptuous woman’s body stood straighter. Finally, the kiss was broken.

The woman was clearly revived and when her dark eyes locked with Cersei’s, it was the lioness that looked away. She had felt a strange tingle in her stomach by the end of the kiss. And that damn Obara was just staring at her with those calm eyes.

“You are a fucking cunt mother!” Myrcella spat at her mother.

“So I have been told sweet daughter. I don’t deny it anymore” Cersei replied. She forced herself to bite her tongue. “I apologize for my unseemly remarks. Arianne, I apologize.”

They all seemed to calm down.

“An apology does not erase all the cruel things you have done, Mother.”

“I know.”

Myrcella was now nonplussed. This was not how she expected her mother to act. She never admitted fault. What was wrong with her? She looked at her mother closely and saw the fire and spite radiating out of her. Yes. This was her mother.

“Don’t you ever insult one of my wives again. Do I make myself clear?”

“I understand Myrcella. I cannot promise … I am a cunt … but I will try to do better.”

That seemed to mollify Myrcella a little. She stared at her mother and a sly smile crossed her face. “I want you know, mother, that I am a trusted confidante of the new beautiful queen. She values my reports highly. She is grooming me for greatness.”

Cersei gritted her teeth.

“You always said you wanted to be great. I am being great … you were a failure, mother. You were a failure as a Queen and as a mother both” her insolent child said. Cersei ground her teeth harder.
Her new found restraint seemed to throw her daughter off. She stared at Cersei for a few long moments. She and her pride started to move off but she stopped. “I have to ask mother. Is ... is Jamie my ... was he my f-

“The answer is yes, Myrcella.” Cersei replied softly. Her daughter deserved the truth. It didn’t matter now anyways.

Her daughter hiccupped and turned around. Myrcella’s pride held Arianna’s body close to their pressing bodies and cooed to her disgustingly. They moved off, but Obara remained behind.

Wonderful. Cersei thought.

Obara

The sand snake looked at Cersei. They both held their ground. Finally, Cersei broke the silence yet again.

“Yes?” Cersei asked with a sneer.

“Myrion Dwellen asked me relay a message to you.” Obara told her calmly. She watched the Lannister’s eyes flare.

“And?” Cersei asked with bated breath, her strong body leaning forward.

“Tomorrow you begin your training. He has a special program set up for you.”

“Yeessss!” Cersei crowed. “Finally, weapons training!” Obara watched the woman dance around. She had no idea what the Master had planned for Cersei, but her instincts told her it was something special. She kept her smirk hidden. No need to ruin the woman’s moment of hard-earned joy.

Obara knew she was in trouble when her belly clenched and she felt her heart hammer a little harder seeing the Lannister so happy. It almost made the taciturn sand snake smile.

“I also have a message for you, Cersei Lannister.” Obara told the former queen softly.

She watched the woman stop her happy dance. She immediately eyed the woman warily. “I apologized for my words with your nieces and their pride.” Cersei shifted to the balls of her feet, prepared for trouble.

Good, thought Obara. She is instinctively picking up on the warrior way. Around Cersei every day the lioness watched warriors and their students training on the expansive yards of the training academy.

Obara kept quiet. She saw the pressure building in the fiery Lannister.

Finally: “What is it Obara? What Earth shaking announcement do you have to make? What is it with all these cryptic announcements in Dorne anyway?” the Lannister spat.

“I have chosen.” Obara stated simply.

Cersei looked at her, and then around the field. She looked back at Obara with a confused look “Chosen what?” she asked.

“You.” Obara told her future wife. “I have waited a long time to find a mate worthy of me. You are that woman, Cersei.”
Cersei did not register the statement for a few moments, and then suddenly her eyes flared wide open and she backed up.

“Helllllll no!” she yelled at the sand snake. “Why in the seven hells would I allow that? You are fucking nuts!” the woman shrieked at her.

“Nevertheless. You will be my wife. I have chosen … in the end you will come to me.” With that, Obara turned and walked off leaving an angry and confused lioness in her wake.

Obara just knew it. This woman was her mate. Her fire and passion was being tempered into a most impressive weapon. She saw it day by day. She could afford to wait for a while before she claimed what was hers.

Cersei would be a weapon in the field of battle and her slut in their marriage bed. She was going to make that woman scream and forget all her pervious lovers. Obara was confident in herself.

Her sisters had regaled her with so many stories of Myrcella’s passion in bed. They were intoxicated with her intelligence and ability to pay the Games of Thrones.

Those games did not interest her. She wanted a warrior with passion and fire in her soul. A woman who would compliment her cool demeanor with a fiery one. A woman who would be her equal.

Yes, she had chosen wisely.

Making sure no one was near Obara started whistling a happy tune.

Myrcella

That night Myrcella was on her back in their bed. Dorea was humping down on her mouth as she sat on Myrcella’s face. The sand snake swirling her wet cunt down on her wife’s mouth. The sand snake was cawing and chuffing feeling Myrcella’s long tongue buried deep up her snatch and wiggling around in her wet inner folds driving her insane.

Myrcella looked up Dorea’s lithesome torso and watched her wife’s tits jerk and flip on her quaking chest. Myrcella smiled into the quim she was devouring seeing Dorea’s face slashed with ecstasy.

She watched Loreza come into view behind Dorea. Loreza pressed her body into Dorea’s body leaning into her twin. Her hands came around Dorea’s slender body and cupped and roughly massaged Dorea’s little peach tits. Myrcella watched Loreza start nibbling and sucking on her sister’s throat and ear.

The extra affection had the sand snake jamming down harder onto Myrcella’s hot gobbling mouth. Myrcella was in heaven with Arianne between her legs licking up and down her slit. She would pause in her lapping to tongue lash and slap Myrcella’s clit with rapid flicks of her strong tongue.

Myrcella gagged into the drenched couchie she was devouring sucking in a mouthful of sweet cunt meat now and gobbling on it deep in her mouth as her tongue writhed all over the slimy cunt meat.

As she fucked, Myrcella’s mind drifted back to earlier today. While her meeting with her mother had been volatile it could have gone much worse. Her mother was her acid tongue and mean spirited self but it had been definitely muted. She had actually apologized and that was a first!

Her face slashed as Arianne sucked Myrcella’s clit deep into her mouth and sucked with cheek hollowing deep throat love sucks.

Yes her mother was different … a mollification … maybe there was hope …. “Auuggggffffff!”
cried out into Dorea’s cunt in ecstasy.

She was shining in court with her reports to the Queen. She and Arianne worked hard on every report and missive they sent to the Queen. Loreza and Dorea were out and about listening and reporting back everything they heard. Everyone underestimated their intelligence thinking them only brute warriors. They spoke freely around the supposedly dim women. That was their downfall.

Oh gods Myrcella cried out in her mind. Arianne had wormed her middle finger up her anus and was pumping it in and out so hard and deep as she short sucked her wife’s clit between her sensual lips.

Myrcella felt Dorea work her fingers underneath her head and jam her face up even harder into her down grinding cunt.

Yes Myrcella thought. She was shining … she only needed something big to truly bring her to the forefront of the Queens provincial advisors … something that she could take to Dany and show her loyalty and worth. She was sure it would happen. She just had to be ready for it when it happened.

Like she was ready now. Myrcella sucked Dorea’s clit deep into her mouth and jetted it in and out through her sensual lips. Yes! Her wife’s screams filled the room. Dorea’s cunt ground down on her mouth as Myrcella gulped wildly swallowing as much of the hot cum gushing out of Dorea’s womb that she could. Her mouth flooded and the overflow ran down her cheeks and throat.

Myrcella loved feeling Dorea’s fingers clawing into her scalp and jacking Myrcella’s head up hard into her exploding cunt. Dorea’s screams pure music to Myrcella’s ears.

Then it was Myrcella screaming wildly. Her wails swallowed by the cunt she was gobbling. The pussy that continued to jam down onto her mouth. Dorea’s body convulsed so hard as her head snapped forward and back her face torn apart with ecstasy.

Myrcella own body felt like it was flying apart with heavenly contractions in her stomach and womb throttling her with sweet ecstatic pleasure as her body convulsed and bucked jamming her cunt up into Arianne’s hot sucking mouth. Her wife whimpered as she swallowed Myrcella’s hot gushes of sweet cum. Arianne felt her wife’s anus pinching down on her finger wildly that she had jammed up deep into her lioness’s ass.

Myrcella thought for the millionth time that with her pride there was no holding her back as she continued screaming in Dorea’s rupturing cunt.

Chapter 22

Parade of Roses

Daenerys / Tyrion / Olenna / Varys / Daenerys

Daenerys

Daenerys rolled her shoulders, finished with her habitual morning bout with her Blood Riders. As always, she had been up an hour before sunrise, and quickly dressed in her training tunic and breeches. She opened her door and picked up the tray of fruit and lightly toasted bread that was waiting for her. She always ate her early meal with a glass of goat’s milk and a glass of fruit juice - today it was peach.

Her meal was delicious - almost as delicious as Pamdazna Irra had been in her bed last night, Daenerys thought as she wolfed down her breakfast. Fucking all night took a lot of energy, the Queen thought wickedly. She felt so much better now that she was again partaking of the female body.

Once again, she mulled over her situation as she pinched her nose in frustration. She still felt trapped by tradition. She wanted to have a Queen on her arm, but she knew that the conservative Westerosi would not accept it no matter what Tyrion may think. Daenerys had finally given in to her body’s needs and compromised by having trysts with women who she would not consider as potential queens.

She had felt nervous energy building within her as she waited by the fireplace, until she finally saw the figure of Varys’ sparrow pushing up the cleverly hidden doorway at the corner of the large hearth. The tiny youth came up, escorting a vision of loveliness. The woman of this particular evening had been clad in only a thin, see-through nightgown, her full breasts and shaved cunt on clear display.

Daenerys had gotten instantly soaking wet. She fell on the former pleasure slave like a dragon in heat.

Later in the night another sparrow took the same beautiful, totally fucked out woman away on wobbly legs.

Gods Daenerys had loved Pamdazra cumming so hard in her mouth. Pamdazra’s cum had been so, so sweet as she slurped it down. She drank from that fountain many times. The feel of her lover’s pussy contracting and gripping hard on her deep, thrusting fingers had been so heavenly.

The former pleasure slave from Yunkai had been so beautiful with her light brown hair and dark brown eyes. Daenerys had kissed her deeply and then feathered kisses all over her beautiful face. Then Daenerys had sensually licked the tear drop tattoos adorning her cheeks. Her lips remained pressed to them as she fingerfucked the woman to a loud, screaming, convulsing orgasm.

The former slave had wept at the tenderness Daenerys showed her as Dany went down on her after that and sucked her off to yet another screaming orgasm, the Queen insatiable in her hunger.

Daenerys had found it intoxicating to stare down at the former slave’s sweat and cum covered stomach and dark, swollen pussy that she would again lower her mouth to and devour as cum soaked her face. Then after Daenerys had made the former slave cum so hard and long, Daenerys had the woman simply devour her own cunt afterwards. Pamdazra had whimpered and moaned while eating Daenerys out and sending her Queen to the stars with womb ripping orgasms.

Daenerys fondly remembered when they had scissor fucked and were up on their elbows to watch each other chuff and slam their groins into each other’s drooling cunts. Pamdazra’s full tits were whiplashing and swirling on her chest from the impact of surging and grinding bodies. The two women ground their swollen twats hard into each other. The women surged their snatches into the others with hard spastic heaving humps. Dany’s own little doves whipped up and down on her chest with sharp flips as well, contributing to her raw, guttural pleasure. They had humped to wailing orgasms of mutual bliss.

Once she’d caught her breath, the former slave had disentangled their legs and fell upon Daenerys, again burying her face in the Queens shaved-smooth sloppy wet couchie. The freed pleasure slave, sucked in the Valyrian’s labia lips and then her clit deep into her mouth. Pamdazra worked her magical oral skills on her Queen with her fluttering, batting tongue. Daenerys’ screams had echoed back and forth off of the tapestry covered walls. Her upper body surged up off the mattress and slammed back again and again as her cunt exploded in shocking womb rending ecstatic.

The Queen’s full body contractions nearly tore her apart. Her body stiffened and her toes curled painfully as her thighs wildly spasm. Her elbows slammed the bed hard and fast in helpless pleasure. She reveled in each hammer pulse of her orgasms. She was scalded with almost agonizing ecstasy as the former slave kept her orgasms rolling one after the other.

She had felt like she did after the blood ritual with the ur-viles. As if she could conquer the world.

Daenerys shook her head and pulled herself back to reality. She had a small council meeting to prepare for.

She was extremely satisfied with how her government and kingdom was coming together as of late. All was well except for her vexing Eddard Stark problem. It was like a thorn in her paw - not in and of itself dangerous, but a constant irritant that made her testy and kept her acid tongue alive and well at times.

She hoped that today would not be one of those days.

She had her Klatch of Confidents meeting many nights now as her closest advisors and more importantly friends planned the realms response to ‘The Eddard problem’ as she called it. She had her scouts finishing their initial mapping out of where she planned to land her forces in the North. Her using troop ships would save time and the troop’s strength. This time of year the seas should be calm and allow for rapid sailing up and down the coast of Westeros.

She had one dragon or the other as they flew around the North to fly out to sea to look for bad weather that the Queen would see and plan accordingly. She was preparing her realm for whatever actions she must take to keep her realm as one.

Daenerys looked in the mirror and liked what she saw.

Daenerys was never shy about her body. She had a hand maiden come and help her strip out of her workout clothes, and then help Daenerys take a sponge bath and make sure her hair had no dirt or grime in it. She did not have time to wash her hair before the Small Council meeting. The woman was as a straight as they came, and Daenerys did not feel any attraction to her, despite the intimacy of the task.
Daenerys longed to have a wife to perform such duties and let nature take its course, and the hot scorching sex such intimate acts would lead to.

After her attendant had helped clean her body Daenerys sent her off. The Queen preferred to dress herself as she had since her days with Drogo’s Khalasar. True, her harem usually helped but that first lead to exhausting sex with Daenerys eating out so many hot juicy pussies! The Queen felt in an impish mode. She opened the door nude and let in her two closest advisors came into her room to give her first debrief of the morning.

Tyrion’s bulging eyes had been worth it. He had devoured her body with his eyes and then the squirt of fear in them for doing so made the Queen chortle on the inside. Gods she loved teasing her Hand. His head snapped down as he mumbled an apology and entered the room. Missandei looked at her with a smile at the Queen’s naughty behavior. The scribe loved seeing Tyrion squirm.

Daenerys smirked at Tyrion sitting sideways so he did not have to look at the naked Queen. Missandei, on the other hand, had no qualms. She gave her Queen the morning reports and highlights; all business.

Daenerys had made it clear to the small Lord more than once that he could look, he just couldn’t touch. No man could! She had emphasized this clearly and clacked her teeth, making the small Lord hang his head in pained shame as Daenerys chuckled.

The Queen started to pull on her trousers and got her blouse top out of her closet.

Daenerys would put that day off as long as she possibly could. She was now seriously looking at Renly Baratheon and Loras Tyrell as possible mates.

She chuckled again when she thought back to the epiphany she had two weeks ago. She was a Targaryen. She could marry both and fulfill her family tradition in a way. Two husbands who would satisfy their needs with each other. This way she could feel free to satisfy her own needs and desires as she saw fit. The thought of not having a wife galled her, but she was at the point where she simply had to take what she could.

She had not discussed her revelation yet. She would not force herself, even on a man. She knew that Renly had political ambitions, but was not so sure about Loras. She could only assume he would go where Renly went, especially if he could freely love his husband – with discretion, of course.

Daenerys hated that homosexuals could not lead their lives in freedom. To have the basic right to love who you wanted; to love openly and freely.

She looked at herself as Missandei worked on her hair as she gave her part of the debrief. Missandei combed the Queen’s hair making it shine with a thorough brushing and then putting in some of the pretty purple and red ribbons that Daenerys so loved. They framed her features, and brought out her eyes.

Then she had Missandei rub some liniment into her shoulder. Her blood riders had been frenzied in their attacks earlier - she had them all come at her as one. She had been a whirling dervish against them, her sword swirling and blocking the majority of their blows. Those she did not block she spun and juked aside the blades barely missing her.

She had been hard pressed. They were great warriors. She used her lack of height and small body to her advantage as she moved and jumped like a panther. They all ended up throwing punches and kicks at each other. At one point they had knocked her to the ground, and she had placed her hands on the ground and threw her legs up, twisting her hips and making her body spin before snapping her back to come to her feet and swipe out her sword, mock disemboweling Rakharo.

The other Blood Riders had learned from his mistake and did not let Daenerys so easily hook their Arakhs.

She defeated Jhogo after he was knocked off balance with a kick to his thigh. He had bowed to Mare Who Mounts the World when she delivered a killing chop to his shoulder that would have split him wide open to the sternum.

She and Aggo had wound up on the ground after disarming each other. They grappled while trying to get their daggers out, rolling and grunting. The fight ended when Aggo had a dagger to his throat while trying to keep the writhing Queen under control.

She had pulled a muscle in the exhilarating exchange, and enjoyed Missandei working the medicinal liquid into her muscles while getting them to loosen and relax. With her scribe they had long ago become only good friends with no sexual attraction.

She noticed that Tyrion continued acting the perfect gentlemen, for the most part. She had seen him turn his head for a glance a few times when she raised her head up from reading part of a report.

In truth, she enjoyed teasing Tyrion. He was so easy. She knew she had a killer body and loved using it at night with her sluts and to help control both men and women at court. She reached up, tracing the line of her scar on her face. She shivered slightly.

She was soon ready and she and her most trusted confidants went to the Small Council Room. She looked around at her Small Council, proud of how quickly they had gotten the government actually functioning and working for the good of the realm with her.

_Tyrion_

The Small Council was filled with quiet conversations as the members worked on their assigned tasks. He leaned back into the chair that was designed just for him, his feet supported and cushioned _just so_ to give his back and legs the support he needed to feel no pain to his small frame.

He was so thankful for his Queen. She could make the Small Council meetings interesting with her histrionics, but all had gotten used to them. When she was screaming and throwing insults, they all felt safe and sound. It was when she went deathly silent that a person felt naked fear. Fortunately, those instances were rare and never occurred unless she was directly provoked or challenged.

In the four and half months since the Small Council had been meeting, the team Daenerys had assembled was starting to accomplish many good things.

The hemorrhaging of gold dragons had been stemmed. It was amazing how much money you saved when you weren’t having silly feasts and gaming tourneys every other week. They had found and rooted out graft and corruption that had set in with the poor rule of Robert Baratheon. Daenerys had been most unhappy but had forgiven many of the lesser criminals with the express warning that they would be watched closely. The more egregious offenders were given moderate terms of incarceration in the prison chambers but were to be provided plenty of light, clothing to keep warm, and good meals with clean water.

The taxes that had been sloppily administered were now flowing in a much smoother, formal manner. They had had to tease out corruption in the tax collection offices in the provinces, but that was well on way to resolution.

The only irritant was, as always, Eddard Stark. Tyrion looked down at the Queen who was talking to the Maester about something, and pulled out a pear from a hidden pocket and bit into it. What was that grizzled wolf up to? That was the question that no one could answer. He was acting very strangely. He hoped the Queen would not have to have his head after vouching for the man.

Tyrion had noticed that Harsch Lape and Daenerys had finally formed a working relationship. It was still tense at times though, with man’s inability not to stare at his Queen’s tits that were so clearly on display with her sheer tops. All would steal glances to be sure, but he insisted on outright staring.

Tyrion suspected it had become a game. When the Queen would get up and move down the table she would sometimes rap his head with her knuckles or flick his ears in punishment. The Maester was now on his toes, sometimes avoiding the punishment with a smirk. These were balanced out with yelps of pain when the Queen found her target later.

There had also been a big change in Solaja Xo. She now sat sullenly at the table. She was offering more and more insights, and was active in integrating the navy of her nation to the other navies allied with Daenerys. The challenge of using the Queen’s navies in the most effective manner was bringing out the best in the Summer Islander.

Evidently, the woman had formerly been a great admiral in her nation. She had moved into diplomacy after deciding she wanted to let a younger woman take over the fleets of the Summer Islands. She had wanted other challenges.

One of those challenges had been Daenerys. She had pursued the Queen with a focus that was single-minded. She had been extremely upset when she discovered the Queen was taking women into her bed every night.

The woman had fumed. Several times she chased Daenerys around the table as the Queen changed seats to get away from her. Varys had reported to Tyrion when the woman tried to corner the Queen in a backroom and rip her clothes off. The Queen had used her warrior skills to slip from the woman’s clutches.

It had come to head last week. Tyrion was leaving out the Queen’s chambers going over the latest reports from the Great Houses. She had stormed in and knocked the little Lord flat on his ass, not even noticing it.

The dark skinned woman had screamed at Daenerys for sleeping with the mother and daughter prostitutes Chataya and Alayaya. It incensed her that Dany was sleeping with them when she had been, literally, throwing herself at the Queen. She was galled with the Queen partaking repeatedly of the dark skinned lovers when she rejected Solaja’s own willing offer. She was every bit as dark! Solaja had yelled in frustration.

“They’re whores, gods damn it!” Solaja screamed.

Daenerys had taken umbrage at that, and Solaja Xo had calmed down, acknowledging that prostitution was a noble profession.

She asked then in a plaintive tone “Why not me?”

“I’m just not attracted to you Solaja Xo. I’m sorry.”

“But you fuck other Summer Islander women … it’s not right to refuse me.” The woman had appeared to be grief-stricken.

“Solaja … I’m sorry, but we will not be sleeping together … you are on my Small Council—”
“I’ll quit!”

“No. Solaja.” Daenerys sighed. “I can’t fuck a woman that I feel no attraction for,” the Queen had told her softly. “It wouldn’t be fair to either of us.”

“Fuck you! You screw whatever whore that bald-headed eunuch brings you! … I would give you my body every night if you would let me!”

“I want those whores, Solaja—not you,” was the calm reply.

Solaja had left after that. They had both heard her weeping as she went down the hall. Tyrion and the Queen looked at each other with sadness and pain. Neither liked hurting someone if they did not deserve it.

Since then Solaja Xo had been the model of cool professionalism.

She announced to the Queen that she had received a raven from five freight ships filled with gold, gems and precious metals that had been taken from the former slave lords. They were heading for safe keeping in the capital of her nation.

Tyrion was still impressed with the Summer Islander’s honesty and honor. He found it hard to believe. Varys had gotten spies up and running in the kingdoms of the Summer Islands and they had found that zero theft had occurred from the hordes of wealth that Daenerys had taken from around Slaver’s Bay.

The Queen was also in the process of taking the looted wealth that lined the road to Vaes Dothrak and returning it to the lands they originally belonged to if they were still in existence. Treasures from Slave Empires were not returned and were being melted down or processed to fund the rebuilding of those cities. The slave masters would not be rewarded for their past sins.

Booty from civilizations that no longer existed was also being melted or torn down to be taken to the Summer Islands for safekeeping to fund future projects.

Daenerys had killed another Khal that had challenged her for her ‘desecration’. His twelve bells added to the collection that now adorned her hair on special occasions. She had chopped off both of his arms before taking his head.

The prowess of the Queen made Tyrion shiver.

Daenerys was using the wealth in these ships to help buy grain for the Kingdom for the approaching winter, and splitting the rest between army and navy. A lesser amount to keep the navies assembled paid and in top shape, and the rest would pay for the assembly that he and the Queen believed would have to be called in the not to distance future.

Eddard Stark and his addled Game of Thrones would require it. Tyrion had suffered several thorough ass chewing about it in the privacy of the Queen’s quarters so as not to not embarrass him.

Calling up an army was expensive. She wanted to defray the cost as much as possible to keep the burden from hitting the Houses too hard.

He was looking at the itinerary and saw that House Tyrell had requested - i.e. demanded - an audience with the Queen today. The Great House representatives had arrived at the Red Keep two days ago. Mace and his wife were comfortably ensconced in their royal chambers, enjoying court.

It was Mace’s mother that was demanding audience with the Queen. She had brought suitors for the Queen’s perusal. Tyrion had told the Queen that she would have to give audience to the woman. Olenna was a force to be reckoned with and once she sank her teeth into something she was like a wolverine; she would not let go.

The Queen had been most agitated at that. Fortunately, a night of great sex had relaxed the Targaryen enough to cope.

Suddenly, all could hear an altercation at the main door. Then they flew open and a stumbling Grey Worm fell back with Rakharo at his side. They were helpless before the mighty ego and strength of the old woman pushing them back.

Typhoon Olenna had made itself felt. The small elder woman looked around imperiously, until she spotted the Queen.

“There you are. You have put me off long enough!”

Olenna

The Queen looked at her with a slightly open mouth. Good. Her audacity had captured the full attention of the Targaryen.

Olenna had two first impressions. The first was that the woman was a ravishing beauty – it was no wonder she’d had multiple husbands in Essos, even if none were long for the world after those unions. Varys’ varnished reports and her own moths had reported the stream of women recently gracing the Queen’s bed and how they left absolutely besotted with the woman. Seeing the woman in person she understood why, and it formed her second impression. She had spent her life attracted to men exclusively, but this woman radiated power that all found appealing. Olenna was about the same height as the Queen, but the power radiating off the tiny Targaryen made her seem six feet tall. This was a ruler!

The woman was now boring her violet eyes into hers. The challenge met and accepted. They stared at each other for a long time as the Small Council went silent, waiting.

Finally, the Queen slightly inclined her head for the true power of House Tyrell to proceed.

Olenna clapped her hands twice.

Servants came in with several rolled-up green carpets that they rolled out. One lead from the doorway, and then another ran down the length of the room.

Another servant came in and threw down various colored rose petals onto the carpet and off to the sides of the runway. The color yellow predominate. Then several viol and lute players came in, starting to play a soothing melody.

All in the room gave her and the carpet runway their full attention. Good.

Willis Tyrell appeared in the doorway. He looked around and sighed, before walking out, proudly, not afraid to show his limping step - all knew he had been injured honorably.

“Willis Tyrell. My eldest grandson. He was a mighty warrior before an unfortunate accident left him with an injury that took him off the tourney field. My grandson is studious, educated, and kind, and is renowned for breeding the finest hawks, hounds, and horses in the Seven Kingdoms.”

She watched her grandson role his eyes and then give her the stink eye. She reached out to swat his shoulder as he passed, and he rolled his eyes again. He walked down and then back up the runway, looking aggrieved.

Olenna saw the Queen paying polite attention, but not really looking either. She was twirling a dagger between her fingers in a blur. I wonder if her tongue is that fast.

Next, Loras Tyrell was in the doorway. He gave his brother a good natured fist bump. He stepped in with a confident, ostentatious pose. He was exceptionally handsome with his long, flowing brown hair and golden eyes.

Olenna knew that all the women longed to open their legs for him. Her grandson was glad to oblige. He had told his grandmother once that “a hole was a hole”. Though women longed to give her grandson their virtue, it was the sons of the nobles he most longed to deflower.

“I give you my youngest grandson, Loras Tyrell.” Olenna watched him strut down the runway. He was used to his good looks attracting all the women in a room. Strangely, all the women were not paying attention to him now.

The Queen was obviously turned off by his ego. Olenna noted that. Poor Margaery. She doubted she could warn the girl in time and she wouldn’t listen anyways with her own big ego.

Olenna listed Loras’ great attributes. She called out that he was a highly skilled knight and jouster; his tournament successes legend. She regaled the Queen with details about his skills with swords, axes, and morning stars. That made the Queen actually pay heed for a moment before she started to trim her nails.

“My Queen.” Olenna called out. Daenerys looked up at her, giving Olenna her polite attention. “I just wanted to say that my grandson is very open to open relationships.”

She smirked seeing the Queen’s eyes flare, and she turned to look at the young man, calculating.

Yes, Olenna thought. The Queen is thinking of how she can marry my sweet grandson and still fuck all her harem at night. I like how she thinks. A schemer who is now thinking how to best use what she is presented.

She next introduced Luthor Tyrell, a knight in training. He was a young, strapping youth with promise of growing into a muscular young man. Maybe the queen would be interested in a man with a more robust manly figure. Loras was almost too good looking for some tastes. Olenna extolled his manly attributes and great stamina in all manner of physical exertions.

She pinched Luthor’s ear when he passed. He was blushing and actually groaning at her description of his physical prowess. “Oh Auntie!” he exclaimed when the Queen of Thorns told the assemblage that maybe the Queen would want to have a young man she could shape into a consort she desired by her side.

But the Queen was even more disinterested. Her nephew left the room.

“I thank you for this presentation of House Tyrell. It has been most illuminating.” Daenerys spoke in a bland, bored voice.

Olenna waited a few heartbeats for effect as the musicians continued to play a beautiful melody.

“But it is not finished yet, my Queen."

There was a pause as the Queen looked confused. “You have presented your heirs to the House. I don’t understand.”
“My Queen. You are from Essos and used to a different culture than old, staid Westeros. You were a Dothraki, and I understand their lusty heritage. I now present my granddaughter … Margaery Tyrell.”

The room was silent for a moment, then quickly filled with not so silent murmurs.

Her own Hugh Elicero was stunned and saying this ‘couldn’t be’. Micud Caudill and Vedad Softic were crying out that it was against the laws of man, gods and nature.

Olenna saw the Queen had wilted a little at the vociferous arguments erupting around the table. The Maester happily mentioned that the Queen could never have a child with Margaery Tyrell. Olenna had heard of his rejections by the Queen and ear plucking. It seemed he was getting some revenge.

The Summer Islander watched the Queen stagger and simply stared at her. Olenna had heard of her rejections also. She would not come to Daenerys’ aid now.

“Oh shove it up your asses!” Olenna barked at the Masters around the table. “You couldn’t even come close to satisfying the queen or my granddaughter with your tiny cocks. We don’t want me to bring your wives in for verification, do we?” she sneered to the table.

The Masters, for some reason, quieted down.

“In the House of Tyrell we consider love to be more important than the silly heritage of old, dry, musty customs.” Olenna knew that was not entirely true, but she was not going to let facts get in the way of ambition.

She glared at the Masters who glared right back. She saw that Barristan was studying his Queen intently. Many of the guards lining the wall were either snickering or muttering to themselves that Olenna was insane to even imply the Queen was unnatural.

The Queen evidently had sharp hearing, her eyes glancing to the walls, her shoulders slumping a little more.

“My Queen … follow your heart and do not listen to these feeble minded men. Again … I present my granddaughter, Margaery Tyrell.”

The young, stunning beauty entered the room.

All in the room could clearly see Margaery’s thick, softly curling brown hair, large brown eyes, unblemished skin and slender yet shapely figure. Margaery’s dress was low cut, showing off her full B cup breasts, the nipples almost visible. The girl walked with easy grace and courtly charm.

Olenna spoke of Margaery’s intelligence, and her shrewd politically savvy. She would make a great Queen for any Queen or King. Someone the monarch could confide in, and ask for sage advice.

The Queen was looking intently at the girl. She had been wounded by the prejudice she had heard, to be sure, but she saw a little fire returning. It was obvious the Queen had been shocked that any House would be so bold as to offer their female heirs to her. If nothing else, Olenna had scored political points with the Queen.

Margaery was thrusting her chest out and shaking her ass for the Queen. The Queen was hard to read now, but Olenna had picked up the Queen preferred a certain restraint in potential suitors.

Margaery was approaching the door when Elinor Tyrell stepped in. She was three years younger at sixteen, but had a full D cup and voluptuous figure. Maybe the Queen wanted some meat on the bones of her queen and not Margaery’s more willowy build.

She watched the Queen. The Targaryen was only human and stared along with the men at the heavy breasts nearly spilling out of Elinor’s bodice.

Margaery and Elinor were friends, but still competitive. They stuck their tongues out at each other and gave each other raspberries as they passed each other.

Olenna rolled her eyes.

Elinor strutted down the runway, her voluptuous body doing a lot of talking for the teenager. Olenna told the Queen of Elinor’s wit and loyalty. She was sure the teen would be most willing to please the Queen.

On cue the youth turned and batted her eyelashes at the Queen, then bent forward, showing off her cleavage.

The Queen licked her lips, her eyes devouring the cleavage along with all of the men. Tyrion was squirming in his chair, moving from foot to foot as he continued to look over and around the sides of the chair trying not to eye all the hot ass being displayed up and down the runway.

Elinor left as Megga Tyrell entered. They bumped into each other, nearly knocking each other off of their feet. They gave each other noisy raspberries.

Olenna rolled her eyes. Youth.

Megga was a little sprite, much like the queen. Maybe the Queen would want a woman much like herself.

Olenna was trying to cover all the bases. She had chosen these two because they were already lovers. She was sure they would quickly convince the Queen to marry the other, and this would give Olenna two Tyrells sharing the throne.

They could not match Margaery, of course. Who could but herself? If the Queen would choose someone from House Tyrell, she truly hoped it would be Margaery. Her granddaughter was so adept at the Game of Thrones.

It was evident that Daenerys was also a master but preferred a more direct approach. Margaery and Sansa, after Margaery convinced the Queen to marry her lover too, would make a formidable dynasty. Her House sigil was the three headed dragon after all. Daenerys would be the mailed fist and they would work the back channels and undercurrents to get the realm’s business done. They would be unstoppable.

Olenna suspected that Eddard would always fully support his children. What a mighty binding of Houses that would make.

If the Queen bowed to tradition, then Loras waited for her. If the Queen ever craved cock then Loras would be happy to oblige else he would satisfy Renly and any other pretty boys and girls that he may choose. That would leave the Queen free to pursue her own dalliances. The Queen may feel this was necessary in the end, but Olenna sensed she would prefer a woman on her elbow and just did not know how to achieve that.

Strange how she was so bold in so many things, but was afraid to fight for what she most wanted. Olenna would fight and fight hard for her consort. She would go to war for it. She saw that this woman would not fight such a battle for herself.
She fought a three year war to end slavery in Essos. She would have fought for Westeros if she had to, to win her throne. But to achieve her heart’s desire - she demurred.

Olenna guessed that in a way, that was very noble. Foolish, but noble.

Olenna left the Small Council room. She had accomplished all she could do there. She had planted the seeds, and she would see if any took root to grow and break the Earth. She was pleased with herself. She had established House Tyrell as the frontrunner in the race to win the Queen’s eye.

She presented choices from all angles. If the Queen let duty win out, she would wed Loras. If she followed her heart she would choose either Margaery, Elinor or Megga.

All the other House’s requested the Queen’s attendance when it came to the presentation of possible suitors. It was obvious she was not interested, so Olenna had taken away the possibility of denying her.

You had to reach and take what you wanted.

The true power of Highgarden had finished her business. Now she had another appointment to keep.

She always believed in playing all the cards she was dealt from the deck.

She would see what this next clandestine meeting held for House Tyrell. She had great hopes.

Varys

Varys had watched the whole ostentatious presentation of suitors to the Queen. He owed Olenna for much of his informants in the Reach, Casterly Rock and Dorne. He had his own of course, and he knew Olenna had her “moths”, as she called them, flitting around Westeros gathering reports for the ‘Master of Murmurs’, as the Queen of Thorns called herself. He knew his pseudonym was superior to the name the true force of the Reach used.

He watched the children come down the carpeted runway as the viol players played romantic and seductive strains in the minor key meant to put the Queen in a receptive mood.

As he had suspected the Queen had little interest in the men paraded down the line. Loras had not been so much an interest, but a calculation. Varys knew the diminutive Targaryen was gauging whether she could make a shame marriage and pursue her true interests with his cover.

Varys had determined the Queen desired a marriage to a noble lady but did not know how to achieve her goals. If she would only come to him… he had plenty of ideas.

When Margaery entered the room, disinterest flew out the window. The Queen’s eyes feasted on the young girl’s teenage body. She had been practically drooling. Varys had looked to her side and saw Missandei’s eyes lidded as she licked her lips as well. He often wondered why the Queen did not take her interpreter, scribe, handmaiden and confident as a lover. The small woman clearly worshipped the ground the Queen walked on. Varys supposed that they had been together for so long and formed their partnership when Missandei had been so young that the idea simply never occurred to either of them to take their relationship to the next level. It was almost too bad. Varys had done much research on Missandei, and knew she would make a loyal and intelligent consort to the Dragon Queen.

Olenna had covered all the physical bases to see if a certain type peaked the Queen’s interest. Some women had a certain preference that simply ‘rung their bell’. Though, from what Varys had seen and had reported back to him, the Queen simply loved women period, regardless of type.

His sparrows had often stayed just underneath the hearth or slightly cracking it after they’d brought a woman to the dragon. They, unlike him, had working cocks and cunts. The woman definitely knew how to please her women. Several young female sparrows were now lovers after watching the Queen. They saw what they had been missing. Their excited whispers of how the women’s bodies flipped and jackknifed so hard from their orgasms had his sparrows all atwitter. They were in awe at how totally the Queen threw herself into sex and would cum so hard and exultantly.

The Queen was definitely interested in the women being offered, and maybe with time would indeed select a girl from the House of Tyrell… but something was lacking, he perceived.

Daenerys was a warrior. She loved the soft women he supplied her with, and devoured them with a fervid, feverish hunger. The reports from the women who graced the Queen’s bed were that she was insatiable.

Daenerys always made sure to close the thick lead panes of the windows to her room before lovemaking commenced. When asked, the Queen told her lovers “I’m going to make you scream so loud … I’m going to make you cum so hard you will think the gods and angels have come to our bed and touched you …” then she would smile wickedly, “but it will be my tongue and fingers as I make you wail in ecstasy.” Then she delivered. Every time, every night.

Varys of course had no interest in such things, but he was impressed never the less. The woman had truly mastered everything she touched or set out to do. The Queen’s women all left her bed totally spent and drained, in a euphoric daze of lust and desire for even more.

Varys truly feared for a man’s safety with the Queen’s incredible appetite for sex. He felt that only a woman could possibly keep up with the Queen. Having Margery and Sansa marrying the Queen would have merit. He knew the two scions of their own houses were also insatiable sluts who had fucked for hours during their brief, idyllic two week bonding period. They would run off at the first opportunity and not appear again for long hours.

The Spider was always amazed at how heterosexuals would miss homosexual trysts right underneath their noses, not even conceiving such a thing possible. Margaery and Sansa had taken full advantage of that. Those two women would give the Targaryen all she could handle in bed from what had been reported.

Somehow, someway Varys was sure the Queen would resolve her romantic malaise. A happy Queen in the sack at night would definitely help in her rule during the day.

In other matters, Varys was content. Much of the instability that plagued the Small Council and Court of King’s Landing had disappeared or was on the way to resolving itself. When people had clear and honorable leadership, most got behind that and worked hard to meld themselves to it. He saw people who had been jaded suddenly trying to support the Queen with their utmost effort.

He was starting to maybe understand a little why Eddard Stark enjoyed such loyal support. That was great, he supposed, but it made his own life shit sometimes. He had lost most of his northern sparrows, but had managed to find two more.

Varys had been confident that the intrigue and stress of the movements of men and stores would cause upset among some in the Realm of the North. This stress would leave aggrieved parties, who would be happy to sing to a new master.

One was a spurned past friend hoped for lover of Sansa. He had thought he was on the inside track to her affections when he was younger. As children they had kissed and pretended to be lord and princess. Now grown, and he had become bitter when he was spurned. He had thought that now that she was old enough to be betrothed he would be the most suitable suitor. He would be her husband and she would be his wife, and they would head a powerful holdfast.

When he had approached Sansa with his adorations she had been cool and indifferent. The young suitor had been confused and angry with the prompt and curt cutoff of his overtures when he questioned her cruel attitude. The young man been shaken to his core.

When he was informed that Sansa was in an unnatural relationship with Margaery, he had been stunned and then angry. He had jumped at the chance to be a spy. He was helping the realm cleanse itself of this sin.

Of course he forgot to tell Varys’ agent that he also would then be able to reassert his claim on the lass and become a powerful Lord. Men were so easy to read and manipulate. They always thought with their cock. Sometimes Varys missed his cock, but rarely since he knew it freed him from its clutch on his mind and reasoning.

The second was a merchant that had been complaining vociferously to anyone who would listen that he was being bankrupted with the disruption to his trade. He found a sympathetic ear and a man able to help defray his sudden increase in costs and lack of revenue. In return all he had to do was keep his eyes open. No treason, just reporting to the Queen what her loyal subjects had been doing so secretly.

The man was a trader who made constant trips from White Harbor to Winterfell.

He had of course had jumped at the opportunity to serve his Queen.

The Small Council meeting was falling into a calm boring drone which sounded sweet to Varys’ ears. A boring Small Council meeting meant a calm and peaceful realm.

An aid to the Maester came in the side door on the side of the room. He had a pale look, and Varys felt his Earl Grey tea curdling a little in his stomach.

Trouble had just reared its ugly head.

Daenerys

Daenerys spied the attendant coming up to the Maester and handing him the message. Maester Harsch Lape read the message, and looked up at his Queen.

“My Queen, Highgarden reports that a large raiding party from the Iron Islands has landed at Lundenberry South of Three Towers. It is a fleet of at least thirty long ships. They are burning, looting and raping with ‘wild abandon’. They claim they are taking the Iron Price.”

Daenerys felt her anger boiling. “What is Highgarden’s response?”

“They are organizing a response and will have their fleet at sea within twenty-four hours. They need to dispatch a defense in case this is ruse to leave the Shield Islands undefended. This happened to them several years ago and they will not fall prey to that trap again. They state they will meet and destroy the enemy.”

“How long will it take them to sail there? Aren’t the winds unfavorable for quick passage at this time of year?”
“They will meet the enemy in three days, they state.” Harsh read from the letter.

The Queen sat back, her eyes closed as the Small Council broke out into loud conversation discussing the brazen attack of the Iron Islanders.

The House of the Kraken was by far the most restive in the kingdom, their talk of Iron Price and Salt Wives an anachronism of a bygone era. An era that belonged on the same rubbish heap of the shattered Slave City States.

The Queen sat up in her chair, her eyes open and focused with a burning need for justice.

“This meeting is over!” the Queen said, standing up. “Barristan,” the man came out from the shadows. “Get Strong Belwas. Even now my dragons are sailing down to the courtyard. Prepare for departure within the hour.”

“Yes my Queen! We will mete out dire justice on these bastards!” Rarely did the knight show his anger but the rape of the innocent always sent his blood on fire with feverish need to dispense justice.

The Maester, Micud Caudill and Lysono Saan tried to dissuade the small Queen but she brusquely brushed them aside.

“My subjects are in need of my aid and they will receive it! By the time Highgarden can get their ships there the Iron Islander long ships will be long gone. You know it, Highgarden knows it, and the Iron Islanders know it.”

“What they don’t know is the speed and wrath of me and my children. These fucking bastards will learn a very painful lesson about the consequences of operating in open sedition against the throne of the dragon.

“They will burn, Maester Harsch. Oh how they will burn.”

With that Daenerys hurried out the Small Council and ran all the way back to her royal quarters. Once she arrived, she pulled her dragon bone mail out of the wardrobe and off of its hanger. Her two handmaidens came bursting into the room and helped her quickly strip out of her court attire. She put on her undershirt and leggings.

She knew as Queen it was her duty to protect herself as much as possible. The handmaidens waited.

Barristan would harangue her ass mercilessly if she did not put on her mail. A large part of her soul still resisted. She may be the Queen of Westeros but a large part of her core self would always be a Khaleesi and Khal of the Dothraki. They fought with no armor relying solely on skill to avoid damage. The Iron Born fought the same way. She had to admire that.

But Barristan would ride her ass to no end.

Ten minutes later Daenerys Targaryen came bursting out of her room in her black chainmail covering her body from her neckline and down over her feet. Only her hands and face were unprotected. She was acceptably prudent.

She had her rune sword in its scabbard on her back. On her hip was a long dagger. On each thigh were two throwing daggers with one on each of her forearms as well - all Valerian steel. She was walking death.

She went to the courtyard. Her dragons were all restive in their anxiousness to be off and dispensing their Mother’s justice.

Strong Belwas and Barristan Selmy were before their dragons waiting on the queen. They looked at her expectantly. They too wanted to fall on this craven dogs and teach them a harsh lesson in justice.

A crowd of watchers stood back. Daenerys saw Solaja off to one side and they nodded to each other. Daenerys saw the light of the fighter in those eyes that Daenerys had read about in her file on the Summer Islander. She was a great warrior for her House. Dany could see the envy in her eyes.

Missandei was wringing her hands. She was not a warrior and could never understand the fire that now boiled in these three mighty warriors’ veins.

Viserion was rubbing his face all over Barristan’s head and giving his rumbling purr as Barristan scratched his lips and underneath his head in that one spot that Viserion loved.

Strong Belwas was already on Rhaegal, stuffing two legs of mutton into his mouth chewing sloppily with grease running down his chin and throat. He groused though his mouth full of meat: “How can I go to a fight when I have not had my two lunches? I am weak with hunger. I can hardly lift my arms!” he whined as he used said arms to shove the much reduced legs of mutton back into his mouth.

Daenerys looked at Barristan. “Are you ready? The odds will be greatly against us.”

“Not for long,” was Barristan’s reply.

They both vaulted onto their dragon’s backs. Belwas was drinking down a skin of wine at a prodigious clip. Then he burped loudly, throwing the skin to the ground.

“Let us go kill these dogs. I will kill them. When we come back we can then celebrate with a feast of locusts, cheese and honey!” he patted his stomach, licking his lips.

As one, the three dragons leaped up in the air, their wings making a small hurricane of wind. The crowd of watchers buffeted as the dragons quickly gained altitude and moved off to the West at an already dizzying speed.

Daenerys had impressed on her dragons the need for great speed. They would be able to slay her enemies when they arrived; they were well-fed and rested. Their bodies were capable of prodigious effort.

Soon the three riders were crouched low. Dany pressed against Drogon’s scales, their heat unfelt. Her two warriors were lying on their saddles and mats protected by the magical fabric supplied by Illyrio. They crouched close to the dragons’ bodies to stay out of the slipstream.

Daenerys felt bad for Syrio with his airsickness. He was denied this exhilarating rush.

Trees and stray houses quickly came up over the horizon and then were soon left behind. The noon sun was soothing on their backs as the dragons flew faster than any raven could even dream of flying.

The beat of wings and surge of the dragons’ bodies lulled their riders into a comfortable state. Their speed was astonishing to any who happened to look up, nothing more than dots that quickly appeared on the horizon and then disappeared just as quickly on the other horizon.

Daenerys felt a surge in speed suddenly as they flew down the Mander River five leagues past Tumbleton. Dany looked over at Barristan. Strong Belwas was asleep, his cheek on the mat and his mouth drooling.

Barristan pointed to the northeast - Daenerys saw it. A strong weather front of colliding air masses was occurring over the plains below the Gold Road. A bank of angry clouds raised up in protest, dark and roiling. But the front was moving to the east slowly; they were in no danger from it.

They were advantageously riding on the backwash currents of air roiled up around the colliding air masses. Their dragons’ speed increased by twenty to twenty-five extra miles per hour from the boost of the tailwinds. The dragons were able to rest, gliding on the air streams at times between heavy wing beats.

Her dragons ate the leagues up as they flew west and then south.

They took a break in the late afternoon as the sun started to set. They took care of nature and stretched while nibbling on some finger food, while Strong Belwas shoved handfuls of his favorite locusts into his mouth chewing noisily.

Then they were awing again, flying fast and furious.

As the sun was setting they flew between Highgarden and Hornwood as if the furies were on their tails. They were the furies of hell!

The sky gradually darkened and then turned inky. It did not matter. Dany had shown her dragons where they needed to go, and they flew as straight as an arrow southwest.

They gradually bent their course more southbound. They took another break near midnight and were soon back in the air. Her dragons were tired but had in no way approached the limits of their strength. Near five o’clock in the morning they arrived at the coast. The dragons aim had been true.

They alighted five miles inland, on a high hill overlooking the beach. Daenerys looked through Drogon’s far seeing eyes. She counted roughly thirty long ships. About ten were ashore with the other twenty out to sea, anchored a short way off the beach as a picket line.

The ships were roughly one hundred feet in length. Each of those ship had a crew of about seventy-five.

This was indeed a major raiding party. The odds were ridiculously against them.

Daenerys was not overly worried.

She knew the raiders thought they had two more days to plunder and rape. They would be drunk and unprepared for attack, especially one from inland and from the air.

Many men would be in those ships. She would show no mercy, just like they had shown none to their victims.

She discussed her plans with Barristan. Strong Belwas just wanted to fight. They soon agreed on the best plan of attack. Barristan believed in shock and awe. He went to awaken the heavily snoring Strong Belwas.

Soon her two companions were alight and flying out to sea. Daenerys awaited the rising sun.

When the sun started to break the horizon, it was time for revenge and justice! They would be attacking out of the rising sun. They would be like an avenging angel arising out of that sun.
She got on Drogon’s back and he beat hard, winging toward the beach. With his superior vision Daenerys had made out the main encampment that would house the commander of these forces.

She had a destiny to fulfill as she carried her flaming sword in her hand. She was about to fight her first fight on her homeland. A fight in defense of her subjects. She burned with the need for justice.

As Drogon neared the encampment he let out a mighty, screaming roar, shattering the early morning calm. The blinding sun behind her, Daenerys swooped in like an angel death.

Drogon let out a mighty broiling jet of fiery destruction incinerating the two main war tents of the Iron Islanders, the canvass alighting and horrible screams of the dying sounding from inside. Drogon flew past and banked over, then landed in the midst of the just-awakening camp.

Behind Daenerys she saw in a brief flash of shared vision her other two dragons flying fast over the anchored ships, two of them lighting up aflame. The wood went up like kindling, the caulking between the slats going up like infernos.

The dragons came onto the beach breathing more fire as men sleeping in the open went up like matches with hideous screams. The dragons alighted and Strong Belwas jumped off, rolling to his feet while Barristan leaped down. They ran up to the clumsy men awakening and most half-drunk from a night of debauchery and rape. The knight and pit fighter chopped them down with ruthless efficiency. These Iron Islanders were scum, and deserved to die like the curs they were.

Drogon landed and fired out a hot gush of flame incinerating a group of men drunkenly stumbling. Daenerys jumped off of his back and ran up to two men, chopping them nearly in half with her blue glowing rune sword. A man with a battle ax came at her swinging in a roundhouse motion. She ducked underneath and sliced his stomach open, his intestines spilling out as he dropped his ax and screamed, trying to hold his guts inside his body.

Daenerys advanced and a man pulled his cock out of a woman as she wept brokenly. One of Daenerys’ throwing daggers flew forward, impaling his cock to this stomach. The rapist screamed hideously. The Queen moved onward with her sword, chopping down men as they tried to come at her.

On the beach Strong Belwas charged into a large knot of men, his scimitar beheading and disemboweling them. When they had started to surround the huge eunuch, Barristan came roaring in and chopped three men down. Rhaegal came crashing down to the beach, crushing men as his tail lashed out, snapping bones and breaking bodies like twigs. His fire melted the bodies of men like wax, their faces burning off in the intense heat. Their screams of dying echoed down the beach.

Screams filled the air constantly now. Viserion was out over the water flying over the boats at anchor, lighting them on fire one after the other. He would fly past and shoot up into air, beating his wings hard and then turn over and dive back down, his flames igniting another ship. A few arrows flew up toward him, but most missed and those that found their target bounced off of his thick scales.

Soon twelve of the ships were destroyed, sunken or aflame.

Drogon was running around on the ground snapping men in two with his mouth. His body crushed men and his tail shattered bodies easily. He would spy a group forming to make an assault and with a mighty roar he would bellow and hot, fiery death shot out of his mouth incinerating men like kindling.

Daenerys was moving like an angel of death, chopping men down at every turn. Her body staggered forward when she was a fraction late and an ax kicked up over the dragon mail. She whirled around and chopped through the wielder’s ribs, killing him.

She was thankful she had put on her dragon mail. She would never let Barristan hear of this. A woman needed her secrets.

Viserion had come back from the ships and joined the fray. He made long passes through the camp of the Iron Islanders sitting many men ablaze as they stumbled and tried to organize. Drogon took to the air and gained altitude, then came roaring back down, his mouth spewing hot death as his body came crashing through a loose group of panicked Iron Islanders.

Daenerys dodged two throwing axes. Before she could charge the men Viserion incinerated them in a hot, short gout of fire. Four of the ships on the shore were quickly burning down to the sand.

No foes were around Daenerys for the moment. The Iron Islanders were falling back to the shore. The fight had been taken out of them.

The ships out to sea that were still undamaged were raising their sails, clearly preparing to flee. What crew they had left were manning their oars and reverse rowing to pull back. Some men were swimming, trying to get back to their ships. The tide was coming in and the ships on the shore were starting to float. She sent Viserion to protect Barristan and Strong Belwas.

Strong Belwas bowled through two men his scimitar blocking their axes and sending their heads spinning.

The two dragons near them were running around throwing men high into the air to crash to earth shattering bones and snapping spines. Occasionally the dragons would take quick leaps to get airborne so they could fall on more men, crushing them as their tails whipped back and forth rolling through bodies like a scythe through ripe wheat.

Then the leader of the raiding party was before the queen. He was six foot six inches of solid muscle, his legs and arms looking like gnarled tree limbs, his barrel chest deep and muscled. He had a great jet-black beard.

He had his long-handled double head ax gripped with both hands.

The Queen faced her silent foe. She felt no fear. “Well, are you going to attack or what? I think little ol’ me just crushed the great Kraken. I think your drowned god is building a new wing to his palace for all the men we are sending him this morning.”

The man’s eyes burned with hate.

“Prepare to die you unnatural cunt!” he sneered, moving forward gripping his axe. Drogon was still busy running around killing Iron Islanders with relish, his brothers protecting their charges while killing and maiming at a fast clip.

Barristan and Belwas stuck close to their dragons, lashing out death to any foolish enough to challenge or just simply unlucky as they stumbled into their range as the Iron Islanders sought to escape the dragons’ fury and perished from man’s fury instead.

The survivors were crawling up into the now floating ships on the beach. The ones out to sea kept sailing away with their highly reduced crews. Those ashore were abandoned to fend for themselves. This was not about honor, but survival.

The Iron Islander approached Daenerys.
Drogon continued to circle around his mother, killing any who dared come close to her.

“Prepare to die you fucking cunt. You only think you are a man! Let the Iron Islands teach you your place!” he barked at Daenerys.

He came in slow and suddenly slashed out with his axe in mighty but controlled swipes, his two sided axe allowing him to come at the Queen with fore and back-hand strokes.

Daenerys easily met his blade with her shining blue sword, the clang of steel loud and sparks flying in all directions. The man chopped down heavily and the Queen met the blow, stopping it with brute strength and knocking the man back.

The shock on his face was great, his eyes had grown large with fear. The Queen was nearly as strong as him, and it shocked him. Daenerys came in fast now, her sword chopping high and then low, keeping the Iron Islander on the defensive and furiously blocking killing strokes of her sword.

He bull rushed Daenerys, but she sidestepped him and he went sprawling to the ground. He was up in an instant, his arms swinging his ax furiously, keeping Daenerys at bay.

They circled around each other, both breathing heavily and sweating profusely. The man charged hard and lifted his axe up high. He brought his axe down trying to smash past the Queen’s guard. She met and held his blow up high.

Their bodies locked hard as the man pressed down, trying to bend the woman down. Suddenly Daenerys’ left hand came off her sword and gripped his axe shaft and jerked upward. The man planted his feet and gripped his axe even harder to control it.

Daenerys right foot lashed forward into the man’s left knee, shattering the locked up joint jamming bone and cartilage straight back in a direction it was never meant to go. Bones shattered and tendons shredded. The man staggered, his body striving to stay upright.

The blond haired woman pivoted to the left and spun around, her sword slashing down low as she got behind him. Her blade cut the man’s right Achilles tendon.

The mighty warrior crashed to his knees, his face twisted in agony. His beard was filled with the froth of searing pain. He was breathing hard, his face twisted in anguish. He stared at the small woman back in front of him with hate.

“You will die at the hands of the Iron Islands one day, cunt. My brothers will hunt you down and ra —” his voice suddenly stopped as Foe Hammer whistled down and chopped his head in half from left temple down to his right jaw. The top half of the man’s head slid off the bottom half onto the ground. His once mighty body followed, crashing to the ground in a lifeless heap.

“Blah blah blah,” Daenerys spoke as she turned towards the beach and ran down to it to help her friends and children kill the remaining raiders on the beach.

Drogon had left her toward the end of the fight with all the rest of the Iron Islanders dead or hastily attempting to reach their ships.

Those that got their ships out to sea Daenerys let escape. She wanted word to reach back to the Pyke. The Queen had met them, and defeated them.

The Iron Price was a thing of the past. Even if the House of the Kraken didn’t know it yet.
Chapter Notes

AN #1: Just to be official I have not watched HBO GOT since season 2. I do kind of keep tabs on Internet. None of my creative decisions will be based on any season of HBO or beyond book 5 for that matter. My Melisandre is most definitely not the one in GRRM’s world.

AN # 2: I had been taken to task for having in tag Jamie / Brienne. I have added them back. They are now in the story as supporting characters.

AN # 3: Several scenes of intense graphic F/F sex.

AN # 4: Dany and Arya will have their scenes but the story must work to that point. It will happen. Their first meeting is getting closer.

AN # 5: Some kinky spanking.

Chapter 23

Dance of Deceptions

Eddard / Melisandre / Tyrion / Olenna / Daenerys / Sansa / Ice King

Eddard

Eddard was preparing to go out on another long ride on yet another mission in service of the realm. He looked out the window at the rain that had been coming down hard for the last two days. Storms were rolling in one after the other from the west, with brief respites of high, scudding clouds before the next wave of low clouds and torrential rains came in with howling winds.

It seemed appropriate somehow. The winds of war howling and downpours obfuscating the truth from view. He winced at that. He hated playing this Game of Thrones, but he must. What rankled and sometimes frightened him was how adept he was becoming at playing it.

He knew that the Queen was frustrated trying to piece together his motivations. Why challenge her if he did not mean to set himself up as King of the North, or intend to come south to challenge her Homogeny of Westeros?

He pulled out his rain cloak and set it aside. To calm his trouble mind he was again sharpening his sword before he set upon the road. It was the new sword forged in Qohorik, by Master Arik Strake. It was not Valyrian steel like Ice, but it was still a mighty and great sword balanced and fitted for him.

He was humbled to know that his new sword was made of the same fallen star that had been used to create the sword that the great man Arthur Dayne had used: Sword of the Morning. He sometimes wondered if the blade might be even greater than a Valyrian blade though - that almost seemed ridiculous and borderline treasonous to the great swords of that doomed land. Still, Eddard wondered. Its creator implied it was.
Two years ago he had decided he needed a new sword that he could use in combat. Ice, while a masterpiece of Valyrian metallurgy, was really only a ceremonial sword. He wanted to be able to hand down a second heirloom to the new warden of the North when the time came.

To that end he had put out a call to a great swordsmith who resided in White Harbor. Theodal Sparr was renowned throughout the North for his work. Eddard had sent him the dimensions of the sword he wanted, and the balance he sought.

He had heard nothing back and was not pleased. It was not that he felt slighted as the Warden of North, it was simply a matter of poor customer relations and simple bad manners. He was about to send a raven to Theodal when Eddard was told that there was a strange fellow named Arik Strake who had come all the way from Qohorik to see him. He said he had Eddard Stark’s sword with him, and that it was ready. The smith had told the guard to tell Eddard Stark that the brother of Star of the Morning had been forged. That had most definitely gotten Eddard’s attention.

Perplexed, he and his castellan Ser Roderik had gone to meet the man. He was clad in a long, black robe that hid his face. The robe was covered with cryptic runes and filigree done in silver thread that ran from the cowl of the hood down to the hem. The man had an apprentice with him, also strangely garbed with the same rune covered robe and cowl.

Strake bowed and offered obeisance to the Great Steward of the North. He told Eddard he had journeyed far from his homeland, and that he had been working on Eddard’s sword for almost twenty-five years so it would be perfect for its new master. Strake told Eddard softly, “great magic has been wielded into this sword, like its brother born many years ago.”

Eddard’s brows flexed in consternation. He had only decided to have the sword made four months ago. He had been a teenager still when this man said he had begun construction of this sword. The whole situation made him feel like he had ants crawling all over him; the strange man made the hairs on the back of his neck stand on end.

The man then had his apprentice unveil the sword.

The blade was breathtakingly beautiful, pale as milkglass, looking like no other sword he had seen. Where Valyrian steel had a dark blue sheen, this sword was light blue like the summer sky when no moisture was in the air. The sword almost shimmered with an inner light. The cross guard was two snarling wolves facing outward, and the pommel was shaped as the Sigil of House Stark, a snarling wolf head.

Eddard was stunned. It was slightly smaller and much lighter of hue than the Morning Star of Arthur Dayne, but it was unmistakably of the same ilk.

“Take it, Eddard Stark. It was made for you. You will do great deeds with this sword.”

“What is its name?” the stunned Stark asked, slowly reaching out to take the sword.

“It is named ‘Evening Star’.” Eddard stopped the motion of his hand. This choice of name for the sword again made his hackles rise. The name choice so obvious as to invoke a strong reaction with Eddard. Eddard could feel great magic pulsing in the air. Magic always made him wary.

“What is this sword made of? How did you forge it?”

The man tilted his cowl covered head. “It was forged of metal from the heart of a fallen star. The same star used to make the sword wielded by the knight you killed a generation ago, Arthur Dayne. Long have I forged it with the hammer of the gods.” Was the man using hyperbole? Eddard wondered.

“It has the same properties of the finest Valyrian blades. It is as strong and sharp, but even lighter and with more tensile strength. This blade cannot be broken or reforged. It is as permanent as the mountains or the deep seas. I have labored and toiled, filling it with magic and desire the equal of your blade, Ice.

“It has many of the same qualities of the Krill of Loric Vilesilencer. It can withstand any magic and cut the magic that it opposes. You and the Lion, with this sword’s brother, will have need of these swords unique qualities.

“The Lion and the Wolf shall put down great evils.”

“Who is this Lion of Dorne? I know no such Lion.”

“You have known of the Lion of Dorne for many years. In time the scales will be lifted from your eyes.”

“I don’t believe you.”

“Believe what you will. I have labored twenty-five years to make this sword. I beg of you to take it.”

Eddard tentatively reached out and took the sword and gasped. The blade felt almost alive in his hand, and he was filled with ecstatic energy. He forgot all his worries about this strange blade and its origins. He slashed and parried and then stopped to look at the swordsmith. “What is this strange energy I feel in this sword?”

“It is yourself, Eddard.”

“What?”

“I cannot say more. Take what is freely given and bear it well, Eddard Stark. The world has great need of you and that sword. The Lion will take up its sword and remake it into their image. Each of you will fight great evils in the future.”

“You mean the Ice King?”

“There are other ills and vile portents in this world Eddard Stark. You will need this sword, as the Lion will need theirs.”

“What the hell is that supposed to mean?!” Eddard asked the man who was already turning to leave. The man started to walk towards the open gate.

“Wait!”

The man stopped, turning his head back.

“How… how much do I owe you?”

“As I have said Eddard Stark … it is freely given.” And with that, the swordsmith from a far away land walked out of the castle Winterfell, and into the early morning mist to quickly disappear along with his apprentice. Eddard did not give pursuit. That would have tarnished the great gift that had been so freely given.

Eddard snapped his mind back to the present.
He needed to leave before the midnight hour to start his journey to the latest meeting he needed to make in his Game of Thrones. It made him miss fighting on the battlefield. He preferred the kind of fight where it was simply his physical skills against the physical skills of his opponent on a field of battle. Something real, and not ethereal.

He polished Evening Star reverently. If he succeeded in his goals with this meeting, he would be in a much more advantageous position with the Queen of the South. Soon he would have to make a clean break and wanted to be prepared for that moment as best he could.

Suddenly, Catelyn burst into the room, greatly agitated. She was flustered and took several deep breaths to calm herself.

“Heed me, Eddard, I absolutely refuse to be put off any longer. Do you know what I just heard? Do you?!”

Eddard set his sword aside and patiently waited.

“I heard a remark from Lady Berena of Hornwood that Sansa was becoming an old maid and getting to be past her prime! Can you believe that?! We must act, Eddard. You must finally put an end to their foolishness!”

“Cat. Sansa is only nineteen. Hardly an old maid I would think!”

“No! You are not sidetracking me anymore. It is high time that our girls perform their duty and take a husband that has been arranged to strengthen our House!”

“Even if they don’t want to do this?” Eddard asked gently.

“Yes. I did my duty, and now it is time for our daughters to do their duty.”

“And marry a man they don’t even know? To marry someone who is a complete stranger? … Like you did me?” Eddard ended softly.

Catelyn stopped and stared at him.

“Eddard … Don’t make it sound like that … yes, you were a stranger when we first met, but I quickly came to love the man that you are. Like our girls will.”

“And what if I had been like Robert Baratheon or Joffrey Baratheon? How would you feel then, Cat?”

Catelyn Tully was silent a long minute, looking off into space. Finally, she spoke: “It doesn’t matter—we all have our duty to perform, Eddard.”

Ned decided that now was the time to fight this battle.

“No Cat. In this we are through with duty.”

“What is that supposed to mean?” Cat asked, not liking the timbre of her husband’s words.

“It means, Cat, you will stop harassing our daughters to marry men they do not want. It means that we will allow them to select their own mates. Their own loves.”

“That is silly, Eddard. Arya, yes, we must find her a suitable husband yet but Sansa already has given her heart to Loras Tyrell. Why they keep putting off their nuptials I don’t understand. But it past time for them to marry. I demand it. Sansa will not become an old maid. Do you hear me?”
Eddard sighed. “Cat, sit down.” When she hesitated, he patted the spot on the bed beside him. His wife sat down, giving him a wary look.

“Cat … Sansa is indeed in love, but not with Loras.”

“What?! … but… but then, who?”

“She is in love with Margaery Tyrell, and Olenna has given her blessing.”

Catelyn jumped up off the bed. “That is unnatural … my daughter cannot love another woman! I forbid it!” she screeched.

Eddard sighed again. “You will not forbid anything, Catelyn. Our daughter is in love with Margaery and Olenna fully supports it. I support it as well, and they will wed.”

“No this is not possible. Margaery must have used magic, or, or some potion to ensnare my sweet, innocent angel.”

“I think it was mutual, Cat.”

“No! Margaery must have raped Sansa!”

“Cat! Stop it right now! Listen to yourself! Be careful what you are saying—who you are accusing!”

“No! I will … I will-” and she came to a halt. The air seemed to come out of Catelyn, the full ramifications of what she had heard and what she had said sinking in.

“How do you know they are in love?”

“Believe me Cat, Sansa made it very clear to me she is in love with Margaery.” Eddard then told his wife of how Sansa nearly threw herself to her death to protect Margaery.

“Maybe Sansa still has her maidenhead. Then we co—”

“Their hymens are only a distant memory, Cat. Our ‘sweet angel’ fucked her brains out for the entire month that the Tyrells were here. She and Margaery made love constantly. She is a woman grown with a woman’s appetite. Let’s accept the woman she has become, Catelyn. I like the woman she has become, and so should you.”

Cat collapsed back down on the bed and leaned into her husband. “I don’t understand.”

“Learn to accept it Cat, and then you will understand. Sansa is fortunate to know and love the person she will marry. We got lucky. I would prefer Sansa have more than luck in her marriage partner. She could have, in a different reality, easily wound up with Joffroy as her betrothed and not Margaery. I shudder at the thought.”

“What about Arya? No one wants to marry the ‘wild wolf of the North’.”

“I know who will marry our Arya, Cat.”

Catelyn Tully turned to look at her husband curiously. “Who could possibly tame our little Arya?”

“Daenerys Targaryen.”

Eddard’s wife at first gaped, and then shot up off the bed again.
“Are you crazy? Do you know how much danger you are putting our precious Arya in? What Game of Thrones you are playing … I forbid IT!”

“Cat, I understand your fear, but it has been foretold … it is prophecy.”

“What can you possibly mean? Who has prophesied this? Who?”

“Bran.”

Catelyn Stark just looked at her husband with her mouth silently working. Then Eddard saw recognition fire in his wife’s eyes.

“‘The Direwolf and Dragon must lie to together.’ You are taking a mighty big risk with our daughter, Eddard. You know that don’t you?”

“Yes Cat, I do, but I know I am right. We both have known for years but not accepted that our daughter is gay. We tried to fool ourselves. We have tried and tried to change her to be something she is not. If we were to ever to truly try and force her on this she would either rebel against us and flee to never be seen again or we would break her spirit. I love my daughter too much to do that to her Cat. She is a warrior and I for one will let her go south to the Warrior Queen. There our Arya will win Daenerys Targaryen’s heart. Mark my words.”

“But what if you are wrong?”

“I’m not.”

“But how can you be so sure?”

“Call it instinct, call it intuition, but I trust myself. The Godswood supports my decision. I am sending Arya South soon. She will first become the Queen’s royal hostage and the Queen will fall in love with our little girl. You know Arya, once she sets her mind on something she has a single minded focus. Sansa tells me she has been planning how to kiss Daenerys Targaryen.”

“Planning to kiss Daenerys? What could be so difficult about that?”

“Arya thinks the queen is six and a half feet tall.” Eddard chuckled.

“From what I read she is barely five feet.” Catelyn chuckled at the misconception herself.

“It doesn’t change the fact that you are truly risking her life, Eddard.”

“I know Cat, but this way Arya gets the woman of her dreams and we help save the realm from the Ice King. If he wins in the coming war it won’t matter what else we do.”

Catelyn went over to the window and looked out of it as Eddard waited patiently. “I had such great hopes for our daughters marrying well. That they would each marry into a great House, bringing even more honor to House Stark.”

“Cat, stop and think … Sansa is marrying Margaery of House Tyrell and Arya will marry into House Targaryen, who just happens to be Queen of Westeros and Essos. How much more mighty can our House become?” He stood behind his wife and ran his arms around her waist, kissing the top of her head.

“I will try to accept all of this Eddard … it is just so earth shaking … how do you do it?”

“I love my daughters,” was the simple heartfelt reply.
“I will try Eddard … I will try. I do want my daughters to be happy. I do.” She paused a moment. “I have something to tell you, Eddard.”

“What, my wife?” Eddard asked, kissing his wife’s hair again.

“I’m pregnant.”

Melisandre

Melisandre’s mouth was full of her wife’s sweet wet pussy as she sucked on the slimy cunt meat in her mouth. Her head pumping up and down as she sucked and stretched the slimy cum soaked camel toe she was devouring. Her head was on a pillow helping her tilt her head forward as she ate Ygritte out feverishly.

Ygritte was on top of her in sixty-nine snuffling as she waggled her head pulling and stretching her mouthful of Melisandre’s pussy. The fiery redhead growling aggressively as she ate her deep auburn colored hair wife out. Ygritte pulled on the cunt meat in her mouth as her tongue slide all over the slimy labia lips and snail snot in her wife’s sweet dark red slit. She sucked her wife’s cunt meat deeper into her voracious sucking mouth.

Then Ygritte mashed her head down snuffling as she slurped and tongue lashed Melisandre’s gooey slit. The woman whose hair was kissed by the sun growling as her head made a lapping motion running her tongue hard up and down Melisandre’s sloppy wet trench and driving her tongue deep into the Shadowbinder’s wet cunt hole. Ygritte swirled her tongue in her wife’s succulent cum filled honey hole. Then Ygritte’s mouth glued itself to the steamy fuck hole and sucked in mouthfuls of slimy cunt meat sucking the cum off the slimy folds. Deep throated guttural groans purred out of Ygritte’s chest as she slurped and rolled her wife’s cunt meat in her mouth.

Melisandre loved feeling her wife’s weight on her. The feel of Ygritte’s sweaty body writhing down on her body. Melisandre gripped her wife’s taunt ass cheeks and pulled Ygritte’s sloppy wet trim down hard into her lapping mouth. Melisandre’s head made a lapping motion as she licked her wife’s dripping slit and then drove her tongue deep into Ygritte’s fiery cum filled cunt. Melisandre glued her mouth to Ygritte’s cunt hole and sucked in her own mouthful of cum slavered cunt folds and munched happily.

Melisandre tilted her head back for a moment and moved her right hand off her wife’s taunt ass cheek and pulled some long strands of her auburn hair that had somehow gotten between her lips and her wife’s sweet gash. Melisandre ripped the strands back and out of the way their red tresses smeared with glistening cum and Ygritte’s thick musk impregnating the hair strands. She would savor the musk of her wife’s twat in her hair as they fell asleep. Hair removed Melisandre surged her head up and swallowed another mouthful of divine soaked cunt meat and happily munched on the slimy folds.

They had cummed so many times already. Both of their bodies were dripping sweat up and down the length of their bodies. Cum was slavered all over their mounds, asses, bellies and upper legs. Their sweaty bodies were constantly slipping and jerking over each other.

They had been in this positon for almost ten minutes ravenously devouring each other relishing their closeness.

Melisandre had come to love Jon as much as Ygritte. She adored her husband both in and out of the bed. He was so considerate and giving. He knew his wives needed plenty of alone time to fuck and love one on one.
Not that she did not adore fucking Jon with Ygritte. Feeling his cock pounding her cunt and feeling his dick shoot ribbons of his precious semen deep in her belly flooding her womb as she screamed in orgasm. She loved watching Ygritte clawing his body as her back arched and she screamed so loud feeling his dick shot out hot wads of cum again and again into her womb.

Or when he pulled out spent pussies or pounded assholes and cummed all over their faces soaking them in his semen and they ravenously licked and kissed it off each other’s faces and swallowing his cum moving it from mouth to mouth.

But now it was about only her and Ygritte. She had gripped her wife’s body just forward of her hips and jammed her back into her mouth where she had swallowed most of her wife’s little plump cunt. Melisandre pulled on the slimy folds and her tongue wormed into the slimy folds and slapped hard and fast the clit jutting out its sheath.

She felt Ygritte’s head lift off her cunt and press into her thigh and she could feel Ygritte’s face slapping hard on her sweaty inner thigh. Ygritte’s body first froze for a handful of seconds and then began to flip and jackknife violently.

"Oonnnngghhhiiieee!" Ygritte wailed, thrashing her head slamming it into Melisandre’s thigh as her body convulsed violently. Ygritte’s clenched her teeth as a scalding ecstasy poured through her quivering body. "Annghh! Oh! Unnnmgghhiieie! Oh Melisandreeeee oowwwwwghhhhhaaaaaa! Arruunngggggggggggggggggggggggggggggg!!" the little sun kissed Free Folk woman bucked jamming her cunt back into her wife’s hot gobbling mouth.

Finally her orgasm began to wane and though hammered nearly senseless the small Shadow Binder lifted her head and glued her mouth to Melisandre’s cunt and sucked her clit deep into her mouth and sucked it in and out through her clenched lips. All the while the small woman pumped her head pulling her wife’s upper vulva and clitoral hood deep into her mouth. Ygritte avidly lapped the folds sucked deep into her mouth. Ygritte stretched them out and then pushing down with her head and pulling up fast stretching her wife’s clitoral hood and upper cunt again and again. Her mouth glued at the base of Melisandre’s clitoral hood tormenting with hot sucks and fast flicking tongue swipes.

The fiery redhead’s tongue was like a fast striking adder drilling her wife’s clit relentlessly. Melisandre had been lathing her spent pussy slurping up Ygritte’s creamy cum.

Then Ygritte smiled into Melisandre’s cunt as she devoured it feeling Melisandre’s body start to stiffen and shake violently as her back arched. The tall deep red colored head of her wife jammed back hard with a sudden jerk. Melisandre’s head slammed into the pillow on the mattress tilting her head back her eyes squeezed shut tight. Melisandre’s felt her womb twist and then explode tearing her cunt inside out with searing fucking ecstasy.

"AAWWOOOGGGGGGGGGG! OOOWWWGGGNNGGGGGGG! AUNNGGHHIIIEEEEE!!" Melisandre screamed out, groaning loudly as a fierce, shattering orgasm wrenched her writhing body. "Onngghhh! Awwwwonnnnggg! Ungghh! Oh gods . . . ohhhh! Auungghhhiiiiieee!!" her body flipped up into the down pressing body of Ygritte. Ygritte loved how her body was bucked up and down by her wife’s violently jacknifing body.

The small woman had released her wife’s clit and lowered her face and opened her mouth wide over wife’s cunt hole drinking down the hot gushes of steamy creamy cum flooding her mouth to overflowing. Ygritte swallowed in ragged gulps the sweet cum flooding out her wife’s spasming womb as her lips continued to press to her wife’s cunt hole. Her tongue flailing sweet slimy cunt meat. Her chin grinding into Melisandre’s clit helping to prolong her wife’s orgasm with several more fierce seizures of hard cumming.
Finally, Melisandre began to come down from her orgasm. She was softly weeping she was so much in love. Melisandre was in love with her sweet wife, who returned that pure love back to her.

Tiredly, Ygritte turned around and weakly collapsed down onto Melisandre’s body. Her tired, swollen, wet pussy pressed into her wife’s belly. Ygritte stretched her short legs down Melisandre’s long legs as her wife pulled their bodies tight and their mouths sought and found each other. Their tongues wetly entwined around each other.

Melisandre pulled the covers over their bodies as they kissed in post coital bliss.

They were as close as two souls could become.

They huggd each other tight as tongues continued to stroke each other in pure love.

They slipped the bounds of their exhausted bodies.

Their consciousness’ bound together as one and moved North at a speed that was a dizzying blur of trees and homesteads whipping by, their speed unburdened by the laws of the physical body. They were soon in the high north of Westeros, a place where the sun rarely broke over the horizon at this time of the year.

The cold was a deadly biting force. Freezing death always present on the constantly blowing freezing wind. They did not feel it.

They looked down at the Ice King’s camp, their senses attenuated in this form. They continued on with their astral projection to a bog a short distance away.

Their joined consciousness sank into the bog but did not feel the numb, shocking cold of it. They continued pushing their spiritual selves down ever deeper into the bog, the cold slimy water and plant fiber moving though their essences unfelt.

Then, they had arrived. They were at the bodies of an elk that had been trapped in the bog and a great sabre cat that had come to feast on the trapped animal before it to found itself trapped by the icy embrace of the bog as it pulled both down to their deaths.

They swirled around the long dead animals. Their essences flowed into the great elk this time. Many times they had made this journey, choosing the long dead animals in turn. Their souls filled the rigid, rotting limbs with strength and purpose.

The elk thrashed and struggled, five minutes later it broke the surface of the bog and struggled to the shore. A mindless drowned animal, but now this animal could navigate out of the frozen water. Dead eyes suddenly blazed blue and the elk shambled forward and into the camp of their dread enemy.

To all around them they were just another dead minion walking and shambling mindlessly, awaiting commands to do their master’s bidding. The dead moved and slumped from place to place filled with a restless desire. They were awaiting their summons, eager to give themselves for their master and his ever increasing army.

The two witches kept their souls buried deep. They could not allow their shock and disgust to register on the decomposing animal and its movements. They had to keep their essence deep in dead flesh to go unseen.

They watched the Ice King vomit into a large bowl as the demon baby on his back chewed on his throat and clawed his body. They could feel their united evil essences feeding each other, making each other stronger.

They watched the transformed giant children taking small sips from the bowl that made their bodies glow bright blue as an unnatural growth spurt caused their bodies to writhe and grow another fraction taller.

Then some small children were brought forward, screaming and crying. The oldest was no more than five years old. They were forced to drink from the bowl, and a hideous transformation came over the children as they were changed into Ice Wrights and led off. The Ice King was growing his army at a furious pace now.

The two witches were burning with anger but could do nothing to stop his heinous transformations. They hated the vile entity of the Ice King and the loathsome thing on its back. They longed to kill them, but knew they were not even close to powerful enough.

Only with their husband and the Direwolf and the Dragon together could the Ice King be killed and again buried deep in the frozen Earth.

The witches in their purloined elk moved with its unsteady gait looking at the vast hordes of dead that seemed to stretch to the horizon in all directions. Many of the dead were in an advanced state of decay, while others were so fresh they looked nearly alive. The dead bodies were all filled with an icy, hateful life that that only fire, dragon glass or magic weapons could extinguish.

So many dead and so few weapons to kill them with. Jon complained to them at night after lovemaking how pitifully few were the weapons necessary to fight the Ice King and his minions. They had to hope that Eddard Stark could bring north the full might of Westeros; that he would find the weapons necessary to fight the evil dead and their masters.

They moved around a while longer, watching the Ice Wrights in their camps eating the flesh of frost-bitten elk and reindeer.

Their hearts broke seeing the youths that had their lives cut short as they grew into Ice Wrights. The Ice King came to their small camps and vomited again into his bowl, letting his growing children drink until they grow taller and even colder than before, their eyes glowing bright blue with hate for all life that had hot blood in their veins.

They looked again at the hideous thing that clung to the neck and back of the Ice King. Its teeth were constantly working into the Ice King’s throat, and they could see the demon baby swallowing icy blue blood from its host, its toes jerking and clawing into the Wight King’s body. It should have been painful, but the Ice King did not seem to feel it at all.

The witches slowly moved in a wide, deviating path back to the bog. They shambled their elk by the throne that Ice King had set up. The throne was not an ornate construction. It was basic in form but did have ornate spirals projecting up off the back of the seat. He rarely sat in it, so often moving among his camp feeding his children and maintaining order.

Hanging off of one the high spiral projections on the back of the throne was an artifact that made their hearts tremble. It was small and ornately carved with inlaid runes and banded with gold that was etched with powerful magic. The horn was only two feet long, slightly curving upward. It was made from some Northern onyx, ribbed and jet black.

It was the Horn of Winter.

They had been tempted to try and steal it more than once, but when they looked closer they saw powerful wards guarding the throne and even more covering the horn itself. The Ice King had protected his prize possession well.

The witches kept their elk stumbling shambling forward until they staggered back into the bog. They moved in twenty yards and began to thrash the elk’s legs, slowly sinking the beast ever deeper into the mire. Ten minutes later the elk was once more reunited with its long dead feline brother in their failed bond of the struggle for life.

The elk went limp once more as the witches fled the frigid, hoary North and fled to the warmth of their bed in Castle Black.

Back in their sheets the two redheads held each other tight and comforted one another, crying for the lost children and clenching their teeth in impotent rage.

The time would come when they would exact their revenge, and when they did - it would be so sweet.

They held each other, shivering and whimpering at the awful sights they saw each time they visited the cruel North. They hugged and snuggled into each other, seeking comfort in their shared heat and love.

Melisandre played with Ygritte’s hair as she snored softly lying on her side as Melisandre lay in the large spoon position, pulling her wife’s body tight to her own.

Melisandre kissed Ygritte’s hair, silently thanking her wife for opening her eyes about being such a zealot in her worship of R’hllor. Ygritte had shown her that all the religions of light had elements of the ‘truth’ in them, and Melisandre had shed her dogmatic zeal.

She heard Jon coming into their room, his slow steps betraying how tired he was. He looked over at his wife in the darkly light chamber as the fire burned low. He put more logs in the flames and stripped down naked. He could see that his wives had visited the far North by the haunted look in his taller wife’s watching eyes.

Their report could wait till the morning. He slowly climbed into bed and Melisandre pulled away so Jon could lay between her and Ygritte. The small woman instinctively turned over and snuggled into her husband, smiling. Melisandre kissed Jon chastely and put her head into the crook of his arm as he held her tight, giving her his strength and resolve.

Jon asked softly if all was the same, and Melisandre told him yes but the children were awful to witness. He nodded and kissed her hair. “We will kill that bastard. Mark my words, Melisandre. We’ll gut him.” And he kissed her hair again.

Melisandre knew that Jon was working with his father to bring Westeros north to fight the final battle. She only hoped it would be in time.

Tyrion

Tyrion sat at his desk in the study of the tower of the hand. He was reviewing the reports from the provenances and was pleased. After Myrcella’s constant stellar statements the other Major Houses had gotten in line. Of course the reports from the North, while factual, remained terse and to the point. That was one house that would never kiss ass.

The report from Casterly Rock was amusing. His father bleating about the cancellation of some of the debt he claimed was incorrectly stricken from the books. His father had said certainly the mistake was on the side of the Throne. It was not of course, but it did not stop Tywin from arguing. Maybe his father had not known any better but that would not stop him defending the honor of House Lannister. That always came before all else - especially his children as they all found out growing up. Now the man had no heirs. Sometimes life was just, Tyrion thought to himself.

He smiled at the thought of his father’s predicament. He had again sent Tyrion a personal letter telling Tyrion it was time for him to come home to Casterly Rock and begin to assume his duties as heir to the House of Lannister.

Tyrion burned the letter. He knew the truth. His father was out of options.

He thought back to the meeting that had occurred in the personal quarters of the Lord Commander of the Kingsguard at the top of the White Sword Tower in the Red Keep. The House of Lannister was having an “emergency” meeting. Tywin and Kevan were in King’s Landing securing another loan for the Iron Throne, making a huge profit.

He was hanging in the back of the room, avoiding his father’s withering gaze.

It had been over three years ago. Jamie had told his father to shove his ‘family duty’ up his ass. Tywin had again been putting heavy pressure on Jamie for him to come home and take up the House Seat of Lannister. Tywin needed to start training his son on the intricacies of House Rule.

He had tried to present a circlet to Jamie saying it was time for Jamie to forsake this inane duty to the crown and come home where he had always belonged. Jamie threw the House Circlet to the floor and crushed it underneath his heel. His father had actually thought Jamie would come home, and was left stunned and speechless.

Tyrion laughed at the memory. Jamie had pulled a blushing and mortified Brienne of Tarth from the shadows and kissed her hotly, passionately until the tall broad shoulder woman was weak in the knees and mewling.

When Jamie had finally broken the kiss, he turned to look at Cersei. “I’m leaving this cesspool and going to the Isle of Tarth to marry Brienne. Close your mouth, Cersei. You’ll let flies in. I won’t be around anymore to cover you ass anymore … or uncover it either.” He snickered as the Queen went red in the face and spluttered.

Jamie looked around the room in general “See you losers later.” He looked at his father. “See you later, cuz.” And then he was gone.

The look on Cersei’s face had been priceless.

Now Tywin had lost Cersei too. She would not be some heifer for him to marry off and acquire an heir. Men would have been lining up to get between her legs and at her golden pelt. Tyrion had a great and genuine hate for his sister, but he recognized she was still a ravishing beauty, despite her few stretch marks and no longer young and perky breasts after having given suck to three children. She was simply blessed.

She had chosen exile instead of going home, and he couldn’t blame her really. His father had been most displeased though. He had demanded of Doran and Oberyn that she be returned to Casterly Rock post haste. He conveniently avoided the new Queen and her Hand in his ‘requests’.

Tyrion had felt a swell of pride when both Dornishmen had sent ravens to Casterly Rock and King’s Landing stating this was a matter for the Hand to decide.

Of course his sister had cost him a fucking fortune! He had seen the opportunity to place bets on how quick she would fail. He did not give her two days before she was either banished from Drone or was in some saloon drunk off her ass. He had been absolutely sure his sister would collapse and fold with this new road to becoming a ‘warrior’. She had not. She always picked herself up from her exhaustion and trudged on, cursing and spitting bile at everyone as she did.

He had to smile. That last part was the sister he knew and loathed. The most recent report on her from Dorne had her getting into a brawl with some young fighting bucks from the sand dunes of the Red Mountains. Men borne and bred to be mean and foul tempered. They were most excellent fighters. The reports had them deriding his sweet vile sister as a weak Lannister. A lioness who had been kicked out from her pride. She had knocked out the first one with one uppercut and then was caught in a wild free-for-all after that.

He was vexed when he read that Obara had come to her aid yet again. They had quickly dispatched the others to la-la land after that. Seven strong, strapping young men defeated somewhat easily, the missive read. Cersei kicked one so hard he threw up before a straight left knocked him out. The last one Cersei had choked out with almost effortless ease.

Where in the hell had his sister gotten such strength and skill? She had apparently screamed out “Who is fucking next?! Who wants to get their ass kicked by the Lioness of Lannister?!” She then had continued on: “Anyone else want to get humiliated by this cunt?!” Tyrion read sourly that the other men and women gathered around had slunk off. Cersei was clearly developing a reputation. He was starting to become concerned with what his sister was becoming. She could now tear him limb from limb with ease he now sensed. He would have to watch his tongue very carefully if they met again. That would of course be very hard to do, and he knew that might put him in great danger. He never could control his need to get in a quip or one last insult. He wondered how much a bodyguard would cost. A very big, strong, and mean-spirited bodyguard.

Tyrion noted with interest that Cersei did not notice what the observer had. Obara was nearly drooling, watching Cersei when she was not looking. In fact, Cersei seemed to be going out of her way to ignore the obviously pining Sand Snake. The woman was following Cersei around like a lost kitten and her dense sister didn’t even see it or if she did she did not understand that Obara was falling in love with her.

What is it with women in my House? Tyrion complained to himself. They were like honey to the women of Dorne. The only thing Tyrion could come up with was that it must be their blonde hair.

He looked at the ravens from the beachhead that had been established on Seal bay. Like the four beachheads further south. He knew the Queen would select only two in the South but these had been the four locations and they would decide where to actually land their forces from this pool of sites. Tyrion had been mildly and thankfully surprised that no resistance of yet had been given yet in the land of the Wolf. They had seen riders on the second day but by day four no further signs of activity could be detected. They knew they had to be watched but it was from afar and done with great stealth.

All the beachheads being closely observed they were sure. Still, there had been no defense forming at all that he and the generals could see. The two beachheads located south of the Weeping Water River, the one ten leagues South of Ramsgate and the one east of Oldcastle to put White Harbor at risk there was still no signs of defensive positions or bulwarks being thrown up. It was almost like Eddard Stark wanted to the Queen to land huge forces on his territory. He may as well have put up road signs saying ‘this way to Winterfell’.

They had argued over this in the Klatch of Confidents meetings at night in the Queen’s quarters to make sure they were on the same page when they went before the Small Council. The Queen was adamant that they speak with one voice. She did not want point, counterpoint argued in front of the others. It would only stir ire and tension. Tyrion fully believed in the Queen’s wisdom in this.

So far it had worked splendidly. When all the Small Council heard them speaking with one voice they quickly fell in step with his and the Queen’s views and decisions. It still warmed Tyrion’s heart that the Queen let him speak and lead the meetings. She only added her voice to reinforce his views and to quash major dissent. They both allowed healthy airing of various viewpoints but refused to allow it rise to the level of outright hostility toward them or each other.

When Daenerys made a point with her violet eyes blazing and her body thrumming with her power of command, people fell in line.

What was that man up to? Tyrion wondered again thinking of this insane Game of Thrones Eddard Stark was playing. What sovereign wanted his home invaded and left his lands totally open for attack?

Could the Queen, Missandei and Syrio be right? Were they far enough away from the source to see something he couldn’t? There was nothing north of the wall but legends and tales to scare recalcitrant children into obedience.

He and Barristan were on the side of great caution and making sure to first pivot towards Winterfell. To arrive at Winterfell prepared for siege warfare. It seemed the logical thing to do.

Tyrion turned to stare into the fire in the hearth. He wondered about his second trip to the wall. He had felt nothing on his first visit but on the second he had sensed something evil out there. Something sinister and malevolent waiting in the trackless leagues of the far North. Something out there in the perpetual dark was full of hate and an implacable desire to rend and kill. He had retreated from the wall as Jon Snow looked down on him with a sad, wise smile.

Jon Snow knew that he, Tyrion, would explain away what he felt. His mind would explain away what his heart told him. Jon Snow had been right. Now Tyrion wondered about it all even more. Had his instincts in the cold of the Wall been true?

No matter. The Great Houses had been thoroughly and heavily training for the last four months. They were ready to start forming up to march north if called, but all hoped it wouldn’t come to that. It would be a major disruption to the land. The Queen desperately sought to avoid a full call to arms - she was indeed so tired of war.

She would march if she must, but she was sending ravens almost daily to Eddard Stark. She demanded, cajoled and threatened but all he did was give enigmatic answers. ‘He served the realm’ was always what he always came back to.

The South would march against the North if it must. One thing the North had learned from Essos was the value of scorpions and trebuchets hurling great rocks and pouches loaded with great multitudes of small razor sharp rocks. The cities of the North bristled with such weapons.

The Queen had tactics for such weapons but she was loathe to risk her dragons unless it was totally necessary. She only had three dragons and they gave the Queen her power. But more importantly she loved her dragons fiercely as a mother. She would not risk them like Rhaenys had with Meraxes which led to both of their deaths.

The Summer Islanders and fleets from the Free Cities were reforming. The new fleets were mainly transport and clipper style ships to carry supplies. The northern ports were blocked by fleets from Westeros Houses of Baratheon and Dorne and the Summer Islands with contingents from Essos. Only supply ships after inspection were allowed in. No mercenary or military supplies were ever found. Strangely, the North was importing great quantities of obsidian.

Daenerys had collected a large fleet from the cities she had conquered. The former slaves manning those ships were now freemen being paid. Many had been willing to volunteer for the service. They had no problem finding recruits. The freed slaves wanted to serve and one could say almost needed to serve their Queen. They owed Daenerys Targaryen everything. They were anxious to serve and give their lives if necessary.

Tyrion turned his thoughts to the audacity of The Queen of Thorns. He had to give the old wench her due. The nerve to come in and set up a runway and parade the eligible heirs of Highgarden to the Queen. With minstrels no less! For a woman, she had balls! He had almost fallen off the side of his Chair of the Hand when Olenna had called in her granddaughter to walk down the runway. This was more than just a clever ploy.

He had watched Margaery looking at the Queen. The look in the girl’s eyes was predatory, and Tyrion had felt his cock jerk. This girl loved women and he had a mental image of the Queen and Margaery naked and dripping with sweat, their faces buried in each other’s snatches eating each other out to wailing, cum-filled orgasms.

He had squirmed from ass cheek to cheek, wiggling, trying to give his erect cock room in his suddenly tight trousers. He had felt a surge of fear looking over his shoulder at his Queen. Had she seen? He wondered in fright. His knees went weak with relief seeing her eyes occupied, hungrily traveling up and down the body of the nubile princess of Highgarden.

He admired the old woman from Highgarden. Her ‘moths’ must have ferreted out the truth. He and Varys always used the hidden passageways to bring women to the Queen, and the royal quarters were far away from the rest of the keep with thick walls. No one could have known.

Tyrion did have to consider the Spider giving the moth of Highgarden the information. One could never be entirely sure of Varys’ complete loyalty. He served the Queen, but Tyrion sometimes wondered if he had other intentions as well. He couldn’t put his finger on it, but Varys kept himself apart in some way. He had spent resources on it and could find no links between the eunuch to any one house or large powerful group. For now he had let it drop. He was a valuable resource that the realm needed.

Tyrion applauded Olenna’s audacity. She had hopefully opened Daenerys’ eyes to the possibility of having a Queen. He could feel her maudlin spirit on days when she mulled over her future and her dread of having to marry a man. She hated the thought. She would not really speak of it but Tyrion knew that Dany despised her previous forced marriages in Essos.

Why she was so afraid of tradition and custom Tyrion was not sure. She had half of the world under her direct power and the rest wetting themselves for the chance to become her allies in strong-bonded allegiances.

He took a drink from his wine glass, saluting the true force and ruler of Highgarden. He wondered if Olenna was enjoying her soggy ride to Stoney Sept. Why anyone would want to visit distant family in weather like this was beyond Tyrion. It had been storming for the last five days.

He was thankful that Varys had been able to use the unsettled situation in the North to find some new spies that could actually give him information. Receiving news again had been calming to Daenerys. She was deathly tired of hearing: “I have nothing to report.”

The North was definitely stocking up on food and wares. Men and supplies were on the move all over. No one pattern stood out, but a definite shift in northbound movement was deduced.
Again, why? Tyrion had an answer but a lifetime of conditioning had him unable to accept it.

What if Eddard is right? And if he was, were they already too late to respond?

With their preplanning and staging they would be able to move north in half the time it would usually take. That may still be too long if it was a supernatural threat. If it was simply Eddard losing his mind, well, then they had time. They would crush him.

He liked the man. Tyrion hoped it wouldn’t come to that.

Olenna

The golden trimmed carriage jumped as the wheels came out of the ruts they had been following. The slippery mud underneath the rims squirted, causing the wheels to jump. Olenna cursed the rain again.

She looked across the coach at her grandchildren. Loras, a warrior, was unaffected by the jerks and jumps underneath his ass, damn him. Her granddaughter, Margaery, grimaced and squirmed as her delicate ass cheeks were bumped and bruised.

Olenna smiled evilly. Olenna had seen Margaery’s sweet ass abused before. An abuse she willing sought out. Her dragon eye had seen a naked Sansa spanking her granddaughter for being ‘a bad, bad girl… trying to prick the great Direwolf with one of her thorns’. Margaery had been squirming all over Sansa’s legs as Sansa sat on the edge of the bed blistering Margaery’s ass with her hard striking palm. Her granddaughter’s squeals laced heavily with lust filled Sansa’s bedchamber. The Tyrell squirmed her ass up into each hard slap of Sansa’s cupped palm.

At first Olenna had been a little shocked at how into it Sansa got when spanking her wayward granddaughter. Margaery had had to cajole and wheedle to get Sansa to tentatively slap her ass the first time. Olenna had been shocked how quickly Sansa got turned on abusing her willing panting granddaughter.

Five minutes later she was blistering Margaery’s ass and pulling her granddaughter’s fisted hair so hard Margaery was staring up at the high ceiling of Sansa’s bedchamber. Sansa had one hand viciously jerking her granddaughter’s head up and back half choking her granddaughter while her other hand cruelly stuck Margaery’s rump. A rump Olenna observed that Margaery did not try to squirm away but instead flexed up to take the next searing palm strike to the cherry red ass cheeks. Sansa made sure to blister both ass cheeks as Margaery wailed and sobbed in pain but more importantly pleasure. Margaery was squealing like a stuck pig. Sansa jerked Margaery’s hair even harder. Margaery’s breath was half choked off as her throat was pulled so taunt. Sansa used her cupped hand to hard smack Margaery fiery red ass cheeks.

Olenna watched Sansa rub Margaery’s cherry red ass cheeks making her granddaughter coo and mewl. Then Sansa savagely attacked her granddaughter ass cheeks again with her cupped palm as her right hand snatched Margaery’s head forward and back savagely. Olenna heard her granddaughter pant and moan like a Lysene pleasure slave. Sansa shoved Margaery off her legs roughly and Margaery tumbled to the floor with a loud thump.

Sansa eyes went large and she gasped “oohhhhh”. She started to bend down to help Margaery. From the floor Margaery whined “Stay in character Saaansaaa!” “Ooohhhh” Sansa breathed in with a look of thought and then vile intent came over her beautiful pale features. “Get on your knees you godsdammed cunt and suck my royal snatch and make me cum hard in your fucking mouth you cunt!” Margaery had nearly swooned getting on her knees and burying her face in Sansa’s muffy.
Fuck that had been hot! She knew Margaery was a freaking kink slut but she would never had known that Sansa had it in her to be a dom. Must be a switch with her passive nature. She knew eventually they would reunite. With her dragon eye Olenna would be ready to observe all their debauchery she was sure the two would partake of. She couldn’t wait to see Margaery use her flogger and cattail on the pale Stark girl’s body. They would leave such sweet red marks! She remember her youth and being under the tail and feeling a flogger whipping her near senseless filling her with pain and pleasure.

Olenna sighed, lifting up the curtain embroidered with roses prominent with their sharp thorns. She so vividly remembered watching and hearing Sansa’s screams of orgasm as Margaery absolutely devoured her wet dripping honey hole. The screams were almost deafening and the sounds Margaery made were so obscene as she snuffled eating Sansa out to a second orgasm.

Olenna squirmed on her thick cushioned bench and sighed. It was funny to sit there and look at her granddaughter who could seem so virginal when she desired. Olenna knew the truth. Margaery Tyrell was a depraved lesbian kink slut. Olenna loved her granddaughter for having the strength and passion to reach and grasp what she desired. All this reflecting on great sex was riling her up. She needed some alone time. You never got too old to jill off! Olenna smirked to herself.

Olenna had kept her secrets until Margaery came to her with her desires and need to get back to Sansa. Olenna had asked her granddaughter if she still had her virtue. She was proud of her granddaughter when she threw her shoulders back and did not hide her love or the sex she had shared with Sansa Stark.

A true player of the Game of Thrones needed a strong backbone.

She thought back to how beautiful and sultry Margaery had been on the runway before the queen. She had to thank Varys again for helping her to get her entourage in. He had been reporting the Queen’s great reluctance to seeing suitors – in particular male suitors. She had covered all her bases like she always did. Yes, she was a master at the Game of Thrones.

One had to know when to form alliances. Her moths could fly high to get in a window where a spider must toil and maybe not even reach the ledge, and what if the window was closed? Her moths could fly fast and far while a spider could only crawl to find an open window.

But. A spider could go deep into the earth and find the hidden spaces to crawl into rooms a moth could never reach, their webs capturing all even when they were not present.

Between them, she and Varys had much of Westeros under their close surveillance. Of course she never gave him all her tidbits and neither he to her. He had no knowledge of her Dragon Eyes. That was part of what made the game so much fun. Teasing out the truth was half the battle. They both thrived on their games of half-truths and veiled insights. Who could sift through the information to make the best conclusion? To strike hard and fast with a true aim when the time came?

Olenna could only hope her aim was true this time. Had she read the proverbial tea leaves correctly? She was soon to find out.

Olenna’s thoughts went back to her “Parade of Roses”. She had seen the raw hunger come into Daenerys Targaryen’s eyes when Margaery strutted down the carpeted runway. Those hungry eyes followed Margaery and her handmaidens when they were presented. There was no doubt, the Queen was as gay as Olenna’s girls on the runway. She was pleased when she saw this. Of course she wanted ever more power for House Tyrell but she had just as great a desire to make her progeny happy.
She had been at first displeased when her moths came to her with the obvious lesbian nature of what seemed a whole generation of Tyrells back at Highgarden. The whole brood and Loras were totally bisexual? She could not believe it at first. She had waited to see if it was simply girlish exploration of their maturing bodies, but no, it had been real abiding desire of incestuous lesbian love. The girls had made sure to keep their maidenheads intact at first, but one by one they lost them to each other except for Margaery.

Their desire for penetration had been too great. The moths had reported how they would slam their fingers in hard and deep finger fucking each other to screaming orgasms.

She had admired Margaery’s restraint. She was saving herself. Of course that had all ended when she watched through her Dragon Eye Margaery and Sansa deflower each other their very first night of true sexual intercourse. Margaery had spent five nights working Sansa’s body to the point that when Margaery was ready for them to take each other’s virginities Sansa did not resist. Well there had been that spectacular hiccup but they had worked through that with love and forgiveness. Although upset at first, Olenna had lost her anger when she remembered she lost her virginity when she was sixteen to that stud of a knight in royal service to their family at Arbor on her island home. God he had fucked her so good when she could get away to him.

It was all going to work out. She was playing all the cards she was dealt like she always did.

A little later they came to the guard gate on the road. They had reached the Tully lands. Passwords were exchanged and the cover guard from Highgarden and the twenty men in the garb of the trout surrounded the slow-moving royal carriage and moved on. The Queen’s guard turned to head back to King’s Landing.

It was late afternoon and they were still four hours away from the inn they would spend the night at. Loras was slowly becoming agitated. “Something doesn’t feel right grandmother,” he told her while watching the Tully guard. “I don’t like this.”

“Calm yourself Loras. Nothing is amiss.” Damn his warrior instincts, Olenna thought, looking at her grandson as his eyes kept darting outside the carriage.

Olenna had only four house guards accompany them, insisting that they needed to show their trust in their Queen and the honor of House Tully. She told Loras that one must show difference when the time required it. Loras had argued the point but eventually stood down when his grandmother had demanded it.

Forty minutes later the Tully guard suddenly turned in and quickly disarmed the guards of House Highgarden.

“We are betrayed!” Loras cried out. His sword was in storage in a traveling chest. He reached for the long dagger at his hip. “I will defend you and Margaery with my dying breath!” he exclaimed, looking wild-eyed as he waved his dagger back and forth, Margaery was frightened, but a feral look was in her eyes too. She would go down fighting.

“Oh put that dagger up Loras!”

“I will never surrender!”

“Oh shut down your balls for the gods sake, grandson. I have arranged all of this.”

“What?!” Olenna heard echoed from her two grandchildren.
“No! I will defend the honor of House Highgarden!”

“I SAID SIT DOWN!”

Loras looked at his grandmother, stunned. He sat down and put his dagger back in its sheath. He and Margaery looked at her confused.

A man on a beautiful dark destrier slowly approached the royal carriage on the leeward side where Olenna was sitting.

“Loras, please open the windows.”

Her grandson looked at her perplexed, and then unlatched and pushed the glass panes back. The rain blowing pass the carriage and into the rider who came up to the window slowly.

The man was in a heavy rain cloak, the hood pulled forward.

“Olenna. I am sorry we must meet like this in the rain far from our homes. I hope you are safe and well.”

“I thank you for your courtesy. You have traveled far to see me.”

“That I have, O Rose of Tyrell. I only hope to not be pricked by your sharp thorns. You are a most dangerous woman Olenna.”

“I did not know you were such a flatterer. You are a man full of surprises, Wolf. Eddard Stark.”

Her grandchildren gasped, seeing the Warden pull his cowl back.

All three Tyrells stared at the man that was Eddard Stark. His muscled, hard body was on full display in his chainmail. His craggy face was beguiling, the hard rain pelting his form and soaking his long hair and beard that still showed no sign of grey.

Olenna looked over at her grandchildren. Margaery was reconsidering her lesbian nature and Loras was staring enraptured.

Olenna herself turned to take another look at Eddard. Gods this was a man! He radiated command and power, but it was also laced with honor and patience. Olenna felt her pussy spasm and clench.

“You are an attractive man … even soaking wet in the rain, you sly wolf.” She teased.

“And your beauty is a legend for a reason.” Was his soft reply.

Damn! Her pussy was getting so fucking wet. Power always had that effect on Olenna. She needed alone time, and she needed it bad! When she reached the inn tonight she would be jamming a towel in her mouth as she screamed and screamed into it, masturbating again and again. It had been some time since she felt so aroused. She would take full advantage of it tonight.

“Let us talk of destiny, Olenna. These are great and dire times.”

“Yes they are. It seems you plan to make yourself King of the North.”

“Yes it would seem that way.” He flashed his famous grimacing smile that made women who met him weak in the knees and wet in their snatches. The man never even saw it Olenna marveled. He had eyes only for his wife Catelyn Tully. What a shame and waste.
“Is that your goal, Wolf?”

“No. I go to the Wall. The Ice King comes. If he is not defeated at the Wall then all will fall eventually. Mostly likely sooner than later. I hope to entice the Queen to come North with all the hosts of the South.”

“That is a most dangerous game you are playing Eddard. I like it. You play big. But I have been told since I was a little girl that you Northerners only defend the realm from ghosts and grumpkins.”

“I fear you have been told false, Olenna. These nightmares are all too real. They come to kill all that live and breathe.”

Olenna shivered at the sheer conviction in Eddard Stark’s voice.

“I do what I must, Olenna. I will give my life for the realm if it is required.”

“I believe you would. But why have you come to me?”

“I need royal hostages.”

“I knew we were betrayed!” Loras shouted out again, grabbing for his dagger. Again Olenna gripped his arm to restrain her grandson. He glared back at her with both confusion and anger.

Eddard slightly cocked his head looking at Olenna’s granddaughter directly. “Margaery,” Eddard softly called to her. She stared at him with her large brown eyes, confused and intrigued.

“My daughter waits for you at Winterfell. I give my blessing for your union. I know you and Sansa are lovers and I would have you wed in the Godswood if you so desire. Will you come?”

“Yes! Yes! Yes! Yeeessssssssssss!” Margaery squealed, already pushing to get out of the carriage heedless of the rain.

Olenna jammed her forearm into Margaery’s midsection and grunted, pushing her back into her seat. She glared at her grandmother. “I’m going, grandmother!” Margaery shouted, her voice scaling up.

Olenna glared at her, then turned back to Ned. “Masterfully played, Eddard. You know I want the best for my grandchildren. Now if I say ‘no’ to Margaery she will be unmanageable. I usually prefer a more sedate back and forth in the Game of Thrones, Wolf.”

“This is how I play Olenna. Without guile.”

Olenna’s cunt was sopping wet now. She had been defeated and she was absolutely wet. Gods, she wailed to herself, why couldn’t I have been born a generation later? This is a man who I would have willingly orbited around. He is a man worthy of following. I would have supported him from the shadows and we could have made Westeros great!

Gods he would fuck me so good. The older woman sighed.

“I have lost, I know, but why should I trust you? You already know I will… but why?”

“I am sending Arya south to the Queen.”

Olenna whistled through her teeth.

“Gods Eddard! I’m impressed. You are taking a great risk, you know. You really are playing the Game of Thrones. And with your own daughter."

“ Aren’t you playing the Game with your grandchildren? ”

“ Yes. Yes I am. ” She turned to her grandson. “ Loras, will you go with Margaery to ‘protect’ her? ”

“ You know I will never leave Margaery undefended, grandmother. ”

Olenna rolled her eyes. Gods, men and their cocks.

Olenna watched Margaery and Loras ride off with Eddard. Margaery had complained loudly they needed to be off immediately. She was antsy like she had ants in her knickers as she rocked from foot to foot in her impatience to be off and back to Sansa. “ We need to be off godsdamnit! ” Margaery groused as she waited for the horses to be brought forward and traveling cloaks provided. *Gods damn that man! * Olenna thought. He knew I would send Loras too!

She had to admire Eddard for such a gambit.

Then she sighed. She knew one of the reasons he was sending Arya south. Somehow he knew his little wild “ wolf child ” would win the Queen’s heart.

Olenna knew that Eddard had won the duel. She had not fought much. He had Olenna convinced now that there was indeed something evil coming South. It must be opposed by all of Westeros if they were to live.

If her daughter wed the first princess of House Stark, the House of Tyrell would be aligned with what would be probably the second most powerful House in Westeros behind House Targaryen. Eddard fully intended his youngest daughter to wed the Queen of Westeros. The man reached far. Olenna admired that greatly. Eddard Stark and Daenerys were both great players of the Game of Thrones. Having her granddaughter wed to Sansa would be to her great advantage. Her advantage was Highgarden’s advantage. She had been willing to marry Margaery off to Daenerys. Marrying her off to Sansa was almost as good. The bargain was worth it. Olenna could not help but be impressed with Eddard's gambit.

But the courage of this man. Gods! The chances this man took for his children. Her pussy pulsed again. Olenna’s eyes lit up once she realized she was finally alone. Only her “ Honor Guard ” were left and the supposed Tully men who formed a loose wicket around the royal carriage. Eddard’s men ranged out far and wide to provide a protective net for Olenna. They would guide her to the Inn and then post themselves out of sight, providing protection until men from the true Tully guard came to relieve them.

Her royal guards were her most trusted men. She had hand selected each and every one of them. Each were great swordsmen but had gained their position in her ranks because they had been her most respected and cagey moths in the military. She had absolute faith in their silence, and their oath to stick to the story she had concocted to tell both House Tully and the Queen. She knew House Tully was in with Eddard but she had to play her part convincingly. That was part of the Game of Thrones.

She told her captain of the guard she wanted to be alone for a while to think, and to take his time getting to the inn. Then she jerked the drapes closed.

Her clothes were soon flying off in all directions. The guards never heard her screams of ecstasy, or noticed how the carriage jerked strangely over the next few hours.

Daenerys
Daenerys could not believe the news she had received. Ravens from Olenna, Mace Tyrell and Edmure Tully, all complaining vociferously about the abduction of Margaery and Loras Tyrell. Mace and Olenna were outraged that she could so easily lose their daughter and granddaughter.

How could Loras and Margaery be abducted on the way to Stoney Sept? In House Tully territory? They had each blamed her for a lack of security suggested she was entertaining spies in her court.

It was fucking unfair! It had happened in Tully lands for crying out loud and they are blaming me!

She had lost her mind with her Klatch of Confidents. She dare not show confusion and weakness before any other than her closest advisors and friends. She had raged, stomped her feet, pinched her nose repeatedly. How in the fuck had this happened? She had raged as her friends nodded sagely.

Daenerys sighed and went to look out the window. The rain had stopped, but the clouds still scudded high in the sky blowing west to east. The landscape was drab and angry looking in the dull light.

The Queen pinched the bridge of her nose and slowly bumped her forehead into the wall beside the window.

That had not been enough. She had called Tyrion and Varys to her personal quarters and royally chewed their asses out and asked them how this could have happened. It was their personal duties to be connected and informed but again events were catching them totally off guard. Tyrion had defended all on the small council and Varys told her in a certain, confident voice that no one had sung about Olenna’s itinerary. So few persons could have even known of this side trip to the Stoney Sept.

Daenerys had ranted and raved until she saw Tyrion deflating and Varys going stoic, no longer defending himself or throwing twisted barbs back at her. She had calmed after that. Gods it was so fucking frustrating, having to sift through the half-truths of the Game of Thrones.

She asked them both how Eddard could have possibly known of their excursion.

Varys was convinced that a spider or moth that howled instead of singing must have been in the Royal Court of House Tully while Tyrion thought it must be someone in Olenna’s retinue. Only a person that close could have had such intimate knowledge of route and timing. Eddard had made his abduction at the most opportune place and time.

Daenerys went back to her desk and sat down mulling over the situation. Eddard now had two very valuable hostages. Hostages that had Mace Tyrell demanding a Northern execution after a southern retrieval.

It would take months to organize and move north, even now with all of the work she’d done to prepare for this eventuality.

She sighed. The gates were closed at the Twins, and Moat Cailin was a death trap. She would have to force her way through. She knew the defenses of all the cities were bristling with scorpions. She was truly stating to hate that word. She would not risk her dragons!

She beat her forehead on the table. She could invade the beachheads she had made, but if Eddard attacked it would be bloody. She did not want to fight a war on her homeland!

Daenerys had her own ideas about who gave out the information. She wondered what the hell you would call the spies of Tully. She thought about the Trout sigil. Guppies? Minnows? She grimaced. At least with House Stark she could come up with foxes or jackals. Not very small or stealthy, but better than a slimy fish.

She kept going over who could have possibly leaked the information and her intuition kept going back to one person: Olenna.

She had taken her time in getting to the inn after the abduction. The rider’s horse she sent up to Riverrun had come up lame. She had insisted on extreme secrecy as she waited at the inn. It was a royal matter of the highest import. She had finally sent out a rider to Stoney Sept and sent a raven to Highgarden - not to her Queen, who was a hell of a lot closer.

By the time Daenerys knew anything was amiss ten days had already passed. With horses pre-positioned to keep fresh mounts underneath the captors, it was too late by the time Daenerys knew of the abduction. But even if it had not been, the rainy weather and low cloud ceiling limited her dragons and their ability to scan large swaths of land as they flew over it.

Olenna had said in her messages that she was completely addled by her ordeal, she had nearly come undone with the ‘vapors’.

What the hell were vapors?! Daenerys had fumed. This woman thrived on “vapors!” She had to be lying, but she would never be able to prove it. All her honor guard had given the same answers to any questions asked.

But why? The woman had made a hard play to win the Queen’s favor for her grandchildren.

Just the same, she could not shake the feeling that the woman had let Eddard Stark take her grandchildren.

She could never accuse her of this of course, and Olenna knew this.

What could Eddard have offered her to get her release her grandchildren to him? What was her game? What was his game? What advantage was Olenna trying to achieve?

She thought she knew what Eddard was out to achieve. Even if they marched north they would have to show great restraint now. If Kisseri had lived, and they had somehow gotten ahold of her, she would have been nearly immobilized with fear and the need to keep her adopted daughter safe.

What a master stroke. Come north Queen, but be very careful in what you are doing.

Why would Eddard do all this? For a man who supposedly hated the Game of Thrones, he was proving to be a master.

She was beginning to believe more and more in what the north knew: “Winter was Coming.” Eddard believed it. Could something from eight thousand years ago still come back to haunt man from so long ago. How? Why now? What had changed?

She had prepared for a militarization of her lands. She still needed about five months to get her forces north once she made the decision to move. To do this though she would totally disrupt all her plans for change and improvements for Westeros and Essos. She would wait yet.

Eddard had not declared his independence and Tyrion assured him he would never declare himself King of the North. Therefore, Daenerys hesitated.

She knew that if she marched north she would have to appear to only want to march on Winterfell. But if she was right, then that was only a stopping point on her way to the Wall and destiny.
She had fought hard to be Queen, but times like this were so trying. What was the truth? How much force should she use?

She let her mind wander back to Olenna’s Parade of Roses. The event had given Daenerys a small sliver of hope. It was clear that Olenna had no problem with offering her granddaughter to her – and if she had been willing, perhaps others would be as well.

That hope was dashed by the reactions she witnessed around the Small Council table. Then crushed further by all of the spiteful comments in her still coalescing court and amongst her guards from Westeros and Essos. Her Dothraki supported her no matter what since she was the Mare Who Mounted the World, but even they wondered why she would choose a filly when she could have a strong bucking stallion between her legs.

Gods she hated men sometimes.

It hurt, and she damned the patriarchal world she had been born into. She could not break Westeros just for the right to marry whom she wanted.

She heard the hearth stone move, and thanked the gods. She whirled around, instantly getting wet. Gods she needed a distraction from all this Game of Thrones. She needed release!

She tensed when a small, white-haired woman of obvious blackfyre descent stepped up into her bedchamber. She was already nude, and breathtakingly beautiful. Her nipples were erect, and cunt already slick. As Daenerys stepped up to the woman no taller than herself, she reeled with lust smelling the woman’s musk already flooding the room and Daenerys’ nostrils. Daenerys could see the young vixen’s pupils were full blown with lust for her Queen. Her lilac irises intoxicating.

Daenerys slowly stripped before the former slave until she was as naked as the woman before her. They stared hungrily at each other. The former Lysene slave whimpered, staring hungrily at the Queen’s shaved muff.

“What is your name, you beautiful vision of old Valyeria?”

“Jaehnae Arlaeris”

“I’m going to fuck so good Jaehnae—I’m going to make you scream your throat raw.”

“Uunnggggg! Oh my Queen—fuck me! Plleeasseeee!”

Daenerys cupped the back of the Valyrian’s head and pulled their mouths together. Mouths first tracing and nibbling on lips but then hungrily opening to allow tongues to play hotly in their mouths.

Daenerys looped her arms around the tiny woman’s waist as the woman jumped up and locked her legs around Daenerys naked body. Daenerys moaned hard feeling the woman’s wet cunt wallowing on her stomach. Their mouths locked the whole time as tongues wetly swirled from mouth to mouth. Daenerys stood their reveling in the close intimate clench of raw lust. Their tongues alive with fuck need as the Blackfyre woman humped her wet cunt up and down Daenerys hard flat stomach soaking it in her hot slimy love juice.

Daenerys carried the woman over to her desk as Jaehnae now nibbled on Daenerys’s throat with hot licks and kisses and then Jaehnae sucked in a mouthful of sweet tender throat flesh and sucked it viciously through her teeth.

“Ooowwwgggggg!” Daenerys cried out in shocking pleasure.
Fuck the reports. Daenerys used one arm to fling the reports to the floor and leaned forward pushing her long distant kinsmen to the desktop and climbing on top of the woman and pressing her body down on the woman’s as their wet cunts found hip and belly.

They kissed ravenously as pussies humped wantonly on heated needy flesh.

Gods I need this Daenerys thought as she gagged in helpless pleasure feeling Jaehnae’s tongue wetly shove into her mouth again and start wrestling her tongue with avid hunger.

Sansa

Sansa looked out over the battlements of Winterfell in the midday light, sullen with the heavy rains. It was autumn, the rainy season, and she hated the endless storms that rolled across the lands of the north at this time.

She felt the rain start to fall down heavily upon her. She gazed out down the King’s Road that led south. She had watched it several times a day, hoping to see her father appear again.

She missed him. Her mother missed him even more. She and Arya had been ecstatic hearing that their mother was pregnant; her mother was so happy to be with child again – but she needed her husband.

Once more she looked out into the gloom of the late afternoon, and felt her heart rise in her chest. Coming up the road was a group of riders. They looked tired and bedraggled, but they were flying the Stark banner. There was no doubt, it was her father!

She knew he would first want to dry off and see his wife her mother. She would see him tomorrow when he was refreshed and ready to again take up the mobilization of the north.

Relieved, Sansa went back inside, out of the rain. As she walked down to the steps to the ground level she contemplated Arya and her upcoming journey south to King’s Landing.

Part of her felt unclean, withholding the true motivations behind her trip. But Arya had to be completely innocent of the overall plan. It was critical that the Queen found no guile in Arya, and find her free of any guile of the Game of Thrones being played. In truth, Arya was not suited for it anyways. She was called a ‘wild wolf’ for a reason.

Arya was already a warrior woman of legend. She was untamable. She would march to her own drummer and forge her own destiny. She felt sorry for the Queen, in a way. She knew Arya would be like a tornado barging into the Queen’s life. What kind of impact would Arya have on the Queen?

The Queen was a dichotomy to be sure. She had shattered cities and civilizations that had supported the slave trade for over five thousand years. She had bells woven throughout her hair from the Khalasars she had shattered and subsumed to her will.

She had garnered a new respect for Arya as the legends of Daenerys Targaryen grew as she marched across Essos. This was what Arya had always aspired to become. A fierce warrior woman, like Nymeria of old.

The Queen was such a woman. She conquered with her own hand. She then dispensed justice like her father always had, letting the hand perform what the mouth demanded. The Queen had personally executed those that had defied her after she had offered her hand to help them up off the ground after her conquests.

She was rebuilding the broken cities and personally breaking the chains of many of the slaves she Sansa, Robb and her father saw a change as the Queen marched west. She had definitely become less violent in her conquests. She moved to a model of intimidation and subterfuge to achieve many of her victories rather than brute force.

Then the way she had conquered Westeros had been even more stunning. She had taken the whole land by the force of her personality alone. She still shivered thinking of the words that the Queen had written in her letter suing for peace and almost pleading to avoid war: ‘must the strong always forcefully bend the weak to our will? … can’t we find another way? … a way of peace and justice … a way towards reclamation for all.’ She shook her head, hearing those noble words in her mind.

Although those had truly been great words, her three dragons were even greater. No House wanted to be the first to go up against the Queen and her beasts. She had truly become unstoppable.

She knew that Dorne had to have been screaming in her ear the need to crush Highgarden and Casterly Rock. Dorne’s implacable attitude towards those Houses was famous, and still Daenerys took the path of peace. She had risked and won her prize her own way, and she had done it where no one else could have.

That had to show the true heart of the woman. She was quick to forbear if she could. She would forebear with Arya. Once that happened, it would be over. The Queen’s heart would be lost to her sister. Arya had that dangerous, dark charm that made so many women cream their close silk garments, just as Margaery’s fire made her own short clothes sopping wet.

Sansa went down the hall to a small meeting room and entered. Inside were two men waiting for her. As she passed them, they bowed their heads in differential respect.

Brandon Tallhart of Torrhen’s Square embraced Sansa genteelly. Once they separated, Sansa smirked sardonically. “When the hell are you ever going to get over that childish crush, Brandon?”

Brandon clutched his heart. “Oh how you wound me, you vile temptress.”

They both began to laugh.

Sansa asked her childhood friend how his mission was going.

“I have been feeding them the information that I was given. I give it to my handler in the small gulps that we discussed. He is anxious to know more about troop movements in particular. That, and how much we are building the defenses up around the major population and power centers in the north. I have them convinced that all the defensive weapons are real even though most of them are fake. I have them thinking that many of the houses and lords are taking their men to the ancestral staging areas. We have them convinced that Deepwood Motte and White Harbor are much more heavily defended than they really are.”

“Good, very good Brandon. I am sorry I have asked you to act like the spurned lover who has turned cruel and spiteful.”

“I’m not worried, Sansa. If the North is defeated by the Ice King, nothing will matter. But, with what you’re helping to achieve that won’t happen. We will win. We must. My supposed actions will be, at most, a footnote in history. In all likelihood it won’t even be remembered for a month. I am not worried, my dear friend.”

Sansa smiled again and gave him another chaste kiss on the cheek.
She turned to the other man who was sitting on the edge of the table. He reached out his hand and shook Sansa’s, smiling.

“And how is your mission of disinformation going, Khort Tascer?”

The merchant from White Harbor grinned. “Ah the smell of the grease paint … the thrill of delivering the perfect line.” He said theatrically. Khort’s parents were both master mummers from White Harbor, and he had definitely inherited their love of attention and putting on a false face.

“It is going well, Lady Sansa. I have given them all of the information that you requested all the while complaining about how much this ‘disruption’ is costing me.” He bent over and hefted up a money bag and gave it a shake. Sansa could hear gold dragons clanking nosily inside it. “I have helped my handler to see the supplies that the North is shipping in. In particular all of the dragon glass.”

Sansa smiled at hearing that. The North was importing as much obsidian as they possibly could. They had made a connection with a merchant in the Summer Islands that had a source from the borderlands of Asshai. The man had several warehouses filled with large stores of obsidian.

In the land of Yi Ti, talismans made of the volcanic glass were considered to be an aphrodisiac. Bedrooms across the various principalities had carved black statues of their love goddesses. The more wealthy the household, the larger these statues were.

Her father had offered to buy all of the obsidian the merchant had, at twice its value. The man had been floored with the offer. Eddard had sent a raven detailing the reasons for his great need. It did not matter whether or not the merchant believed him. Just the same, the merchant had ended up agreeing to sell the obsidian to him at cost, plus the expense of freight. He had declared it was a ‘wise business investment’, and promised to sell any further obsidian he could locate to the north.

Later the man wrote Eddard and told him that his honor and wisdom was known even in Tall Trees.

Sansa and Ned felt the Queen was a very intelligent woman. She would see this “obsession” with obsidian. Even if she did not believe in the Ice Wrights, she still might seek to understand why the North was acquiring so much of it and then hopefully start making weapons of the precious material like the North was.

Khort told Sansa that he had delivered false shipping slips to his handlers listing the supplies that were being sent to Winterfell to make it appear as if Winterfell was stocking up for a long siege and bringing in the materials to build up substantial defenses.

Good, she thought. That, combined with some novel ideas they had come up with to feed to the Queen should be enough to convince her to come north to Winterfell. She only hoped the Queen did not burn the castle to the ground first. They had, in reality, no defenses for dragons. Anything indicating otherwise was all part of their ruse.

She trusted her father had a plan to stem the wrath of the Queen. Something that would force her to stay her hand from using her dragons to burn Winterfell to slag as Aegon had Harrenhall.

The meeting soon broke up after that. Brandon laughed as they left, and put back on his sour, bitter face. The merchant walked out complaining about being broke again.

Sansa went to the kitchen and ate a late lunch. She had come to enjoy eating with the kitchen staff, it kept her grounded with the common people. She had wondered as a child why her father ate with his subjects when none of the other Houses did. Now she understood. It formed a strong, bone-deep bond between the Starks and the people of the North.

Once sated, she went back to her chambers and got her robe, towels and nightshirt and went to take a long, relaxing bath. She had had a full day already, and would take dinner in her chambers later.

She luxuriated in the bath, cleaning her hair thoroughly and thought again about how fortunate Winterfell was to have heated water year-round. Steam from the naturally occurring springs beneath the castle kept the walls warm, and her room in particular was warmer than the other bedchambers. She liked that extra heat when she masturbated on top of the bed. Her fingers working their magic as she thought of a certain rose of Highgarden. With that thought, Sansa felt a familiar ache returning between her legs.

She finished her bath and walked with a slightly hurried step back to her bedchambers. Her pussy was already swollen and starting to get so wet. She smelled her snatch juicing, and she loved it. Thinking of Margaery always made her wet.

She went into room and paused. Gods she had to be feeling it bad for Margaery this night. She could almost smell her lover’s scent, roses mixed with saddlewood. Sansa breathed in deeply and shook her head.

She went to the dressing screen and hurriedly took off her robe and then her night shirt. Once naked she looked down her flat stomach and saw her pussy already wet and swollen with fuck hunger. Her nipples and clit were throbbing with lust for Margaery.

Sansa gasped when she felt a naked body press into her own. Her eyes flew wide open in shocked wonder. She instantly knew the feel and rightness of her lover’s body pressed into her body. Margaery’s hard nipples pressed into Sansa’s back as the woman’s lips found her throat and started to nibble.

“Oohhhhhhh hhhnnggg oh baby! How!”

“Ssshhhhhh I’ll explain later … now I am going to fuck you so good Sansa,” Margaery softly murmured her right hand sliding around Sansa’s hip and rubbing up and down the bald mound and slowly teased the inner lips open. “You been thinking of me my sweet wolf. Your cunt is so fucking wet and I just touched you” Margaery husked rubbing her fingers up and down Sansa’s bright pink slit. Margaery moaned feeling the wetness of her lover already slimming her fingers with fuck juice.

“Ooohhhh Fuck! Hhnngg hhnnn uunggg!” Sansa whimpered as Margaery other hand moved around and gripped left full cone shaped B cup tit. Her hand gripped and massaged the breast. Margaery’s fingers sinking in deep squeezing Sansa’s pale breasts. Margaery squeezed each breast in turn making Sansa’s areolas and nipples bulge on her cone shaped tits. Sansa gasped in ecstasy her nipples going rock hard and her clit throbbing hard. Margaery rhythmically squeezed the firm tits hard making Sansa’s body jolt and gasp hard with wheezing breaths of raw need.

Margaery kissed and licked her woman’s throat hotly. Margaery’s slimed fingers moved up and began circling Sansa’s clit and rubbing over the bulging clitoral hood putting pressure and friction on her still sheathed clit.

While doing this Margaery’s left hand moved up to slowly cup and squeeze in hard on Sansa’s nipples rubbing her palm over the rubbery nipples. The Tyrell slowly moved her hand back and forth pleasuring Sansa’s aching tits. “Fffiuucckkk Margaeryyyyy—you always make me ffeeeeeelll so fucking good!” the Stark girl whimpered her nipples throbbing so hard now each pulse in her breast hammering into her clit down below making it jerk and spasm in raw need.
Sansa's legs were going weak and she leaned back into Margaery. "Ooogggggg!" Sansa gagged feeling Margaery slipping first one and then a second finger up into her tight pussy. The fingers buried deep and slowly stretching out Sansa's tight quim. Margaery slowly began to scissor her fingers in her lover's twat running the digits through the slimy inner petals sucking on the digits fucking them. Margaery moaned loudly into the ear she was nibbling on and then running her tongue over the beautiful shell. The feel of Sansa's slimy wet cunt on her fingers heavenly.

Then Margaery slowly started to work the digits in and out Sansa's tight hot cunt. Her fingers thickly slimed with love juices as they started to pump harder. Margaery pulled her fingers out so slow and then rammed them up fast and hard into Sansa's cunt. The fingers were sliding easily in and out the slicked love canal now. "Unnggg hhnnggg … oh baby—you're fucking me sooooo good! Hhnnggg unngg shit! Unngg uunngg" Sansa gagged in rocking pleasure.

Margaery increased her pace for a short minute fucking Sansa with fast strokes making the Stark cry out in shocking pleasure. Sansa reveled feeling Margaery’s knuckles pounding her swollen and wet vulva with each hard ram of long fingers up Sansa's hungry sopping wet trim. Margaery sensing Sansa’s rising excitement slowed her strokes to a sensual rhythm to prolong the divine fuck. Sansa whimpered at the lessening in force and friction working her honey hole and jacking her clit with sharp raps of Margaery’s knuckles.

Sansa looked down her palpating belly watching Margaery pull her fingers out slowly from her spasming cunt. The fingers creamed with her twat juice and then sliding so deliciously back in deep up her steamy cunt. The slow in and out motion turning Sansa’s belly to jelly. Her knees were trembling as she pressed back into Margaery who clasped Sansa to her body supporting her trembling weight. "Gods I love you Sansa … I love fucking you Sansa … I have missed fucking this hot tight cunt so much … never again will I go without" Margaery softly told her future wife. Sansa gagged in raw love hearing those sweet passionate words. "Mmmmm nnggg hhnmm hhnmmn oowwggg uunnn!") Sansa cawed in rising need. Her twat was clenching in spasms of fucking bliss feeling those fingers slide so slowly up deep into her tight cunt.

Sansa was stunned at how her love had seemingly magically appeared. Margaery’s fingers of her left hand moved up and the Tyrell used her thumb and index finger to squeeze and jerk on Sansa’s engorged rock hard nipple and folding her areola in between the fingers and twisting it gently making the steeples on her areola stand out all dark red on her pale areolas. Her nipples dark pink too.

Margaery was kissing and licking Sansa’s neck. Margaery moved her mouth up and down the elegant throat of her lover. She pressed her smaller barely B cup tits into Sansa’s back. Sansa’s jerking body rubbing on Margaery sensitive nipples. Margaery loved the friction filling her breast with aching heat but Margaery needed to focus on her lover. She was going to make Sansa cum screaming. Sansa was moaning louder and jamming back into her lover’s body.

Sansa turned her head and tilted it down toward her lover. Sansa reached back with her hand to grip the back of Margaery’s head. Sansa clenched a fistful of brown curled hair and pulled on Margaery’s head to tilt Margaery’s head up. They paused for a long moment letting their eyes speak of their undying love. Margaery suddenly started slamming her fingers hard and deep up Sansa’s cunt pounding the swollen muff.

Sansa’s face grimaced with ecstasy as she jerked Margaery head with her hair knot and her mouth came down with fuck hunger. "Ummppff mmpfffff” Sansa moaned into Margaery’s lips that melded and nipped before Sansa opened her mouth in offering.

Sansa gagged in helpless love feeling Margaery slip her tongue deep into her mouth. Margaery’s tongue sought and found Sansa’s tongue. They instantly entwined and wetly danced. Sansa’s body convulsed and Margaery opened her eyes briefly and saw through Sansa’s jerking eyelids that her eyes had rolled back into her skull and were rolling around in helpless pleasure. Their tongues commenced a serpentine dance of love in Sansa’s mouth.

Their nostrils flared and bodies jerked in pleasure. A fine film of perspiration was already coating Sansa’s body and beading on her forehead and upper lip. Her belly and cunt were on fire. Her ears heard the hard impact of Margaery’s hand slamming into her vulva as the Tyrell slammed her fingers fast and deep up the tight pussy she was fucking. Margaery moaned feeling Sansa’s juices slicking her fingers and running down her wrist.

They kissed heatedly for a short minute and then broke for air. They were both breathing heavily now in excitement and Sansa with a body rising to orgasm.

Margaery kissed Sansa deeply again her left hand moving right and left working Sansa’s breast squeezing rhythmically and moving her hand up to milk and pull on Sansa’s nips making the tall woman jolt and gasp.

Margaery broke the kiss to get back at the tall woman’s neck that was perfectly positioned for her mouth.

“Hhhnngggggggg!” Sansa gasped her body jamming back hard into Margaery’s feeling the Tyrell suck her throat deep into her mouth and suck the tender flesh in and out through her gnawing teeth. Margaery gnawed the tender throat flesh through her see-sawing teeth marking Sansa as her woman. “Ooowwwgggg hhnggg hhngggg!” Sansa cried out feeling Margaery pull her mouth back and forward tormenting the sweet flesh between her sawing teeth. The pain and pleasure flooding Sansa’s body.

Sansa’s cunt was a soupy mess now and making splattering sloshing noises as Margaery rammed her fingers in fast and deep.

Margaery sensed Sansa was now fast approaching orgasm. She changed the position of her right hand slightly and bent her thumb so it hammered Sansa’s clit as she pounded her lover’s love box. She spit out Sansa’s throat and licked the bruised flesh sensually.

Margaery could feel the pulses getting closer inside Sansa’s sloshing trim and loved it. Sansa’s pussy was so hot and tight on her pumping fingers.

“Cum on my fingers slut … let me feel your cunt lock down on my fingers Sansa!”

“ARRUUNGGGGGGGGGGGG! AAAWWOOOGGGGGGGG!” Sansa screamed in pure love the echoes bouncing off the walls of their bedroom. Sansa’s body convulsed and jammed back into Margaery smaller body. The Tyrell left arm now lopped around Sansa’s waist to hold the taller woman tight to her smaller body. Margaery groaned loudly herself feeling her lover convulse so hard in her orgasm. Margaery adored the way the Stark woman’s body jammed back hard into her body as it flipped and jackknifed violently in searing fucking ecstasy. Sansa’s cunt gripped her plunging fingers in spastic seizures of hard cumming. Margaery redoubled the pounding of her fingers up into Sansa’s rupturing cunt.

"Angghh ... nmmggnnee! Oh! Oh!" … oh Goddsssddammeddddd! … Auunggh! Oh! Nnngggmmmmeee! Oh! Oh! "Auunngghhiieeeel!" Sansa cried out, flipping and straining, her face torn with rapture. "Oh! Unhh! Anngghiiieee!"

Margaery’s felt her lovers orgasm start to wane and she backed off on her finger thrusts and now sensually pumped them in and out Sansa’s swollen love box. The cunt filled with creamy cum that slurped on the fingers slow stroking the cunt that drooled out slimy strands of cum that stretched out and fell to the floor.

Sansa was nearly boneless and Margaery pulled her fingers out Sansa’s buttery cunt and adjusted her grip on Sansa’s body and effortlessly picked up Sansa in classical bridal position. Sansa’s body soaked in sweat now. Sansa looked up at her with pure love that made the Tyrell’s heart beat hard in her chest.

Sansa’s face was flushed. Her throat and upper chest down to Sansa’s breast pink with the flush of orgasm. Margaery needed more.

Sansa was limp as she felt Margaery easily carry her to her bed and laid her head down on a pillow and climbed up on Sansa.

They kissed deeply bodies wallowing and humping pussies on hip and thigh as they gagged in pure love for each other as tongues speared from mouth to mouth.

Sansa broke the kiss and reached behind her head and gripped the pillow and started to put it underneath her head.

Margaery reached up stopping Sansa.

“Baby! I needddddd you to sit on my face Margaery—I need your pussy in my mouthhhhh! Margaery pleaseeeeee!”

Margaery smiled down at her. “Don’t be so greedy baby … I haven’t had you yet … I need your cunt in my mouth so bad Sansa—it has been toooo long!”

Margaery playfully looked down at a glaring Sansa until the Stark girl with a pout relented. Margery rewarded her lover with a scorching kiss that had Sansa humping up into Margaery in raw need.

Sansa had her arms looped around her lover’s body pulling Margaery down into her body flattening their tits into each other’s bodies. Margaery had her hands locked in Sansa’s red tresses pulling Sansa’ head up. She pulled Sansa’s mouth to hers and their lips locked as tongues surged from mouth to mouth and down groaning throat.

Sansa mewled when Margaery broke their lip lock. Sansa moaned hard seeing spit roped between their lips swollen form their kissing. Sansa tried to pull Margaery’s mouth back down but the smaller woman with surprising strength resisted. Margaery kissed down Sansa’s cheek giving hot fast kisses down Sansa’s jaw and then down her throat. Margaery used her index and middle fingers to push Sansa’s head over. Sansa’s head tilted over fully exposing her tender throat flesh. Margaery lowered her head. Margaery had only marked one side of Sansa’s throat as her property. As her slut. A loud scream filled the room as Margaery gave her love slut another hickey on her throat sucking the flesh fast in and out her teeth.

Sansa’s face slashed so hard her elbows hammering the bed in ecstasy. Margaery beamed up at her lover loving how she could play her future wife’s body so well. She kissed her future wife’s throat all over and down the perfect collarbones and shoulders and then back to Sansa’s throat and then up in short kisses to her sweet bee stung lip. Their tongues swiping lips and sucking in those lips to nibble and pull on as guttural groans filled the room. Then mouths opened wide and again tongues wrapped around each other sliding and slipping against each other.

After several minutes they broke their deep snogging. Margaery kissed down Sansa’s throat to her Margaery kissed, licked and nipped Sansa’s upper chest making her woman pant and whimper. “Babyyyy pleaseeeeee!” Sansa whimpered in raw aching need. Margaery kissed down to her woman’s breast and kissed up the slope of Sansa’s conical breast and siphoned the nipple deep into her mouth and rhythmically sucked on the engorged teat.

Sansa was writhing on a pillow she had pulled underneath her head. She looked down at Margaery as she sucked so well on one nipple and then the other. Margaery would release the nipple she was fiercely sucking on and move her head over to suck and hot lick the other nipple. Sansa watched Margaery’s hands come up and pinch and twist the nipple that was not currently being sucked and tongue rasped. The nipple soaked in spit and Margaery used the lubrication to twist her fingertips on her hard aching nipples. Margaery’s fingers pulled and twisted the engorged nipples that were slicked with spit.

Soon Sansa was writhing on her pillow. She watched Margaery lap over her nipples with the flat of her tongue all the time looking up at Sansa. Margaery loved watching the Stark girl’s face slash constantly eyes first bulging and then squeezed shut in ecstasy.

Then Margaery would suck Sansa’s entire nipple and areola into her mouth and pump her head back stretching out Sansa’s breast filling them with delicious heat and friction. In and out Margaery worked her head pumping sweet tit meat with her hot sucking mouth. “Huunnggg oohhhh oohhh Margaery—suuuucckk suck suck oohhh goooddsssdaammmmnnn suck!” Margaery would fierce suck on Sansa’s breast and pull her head back. Her head motion first tenting Sansa’s tit and then it would wetly plop out her mouth as Sansa cried out in ecstasy.

Sansa helplessly cawed her body writhing and her hands now on Margaery’s head driving her face into her spit soaked tits. Margaery moved her head back and forth slowly sucking on Sansa’s tits pulling her head back until Sansa’s nipples popped out her mouth. Then Margaery went back to fiercely licking and giving searing short sucks on Sansa’s rock hard nipples.

“Babyyyy Plleeeeasseeeee!”

Margaery lifted her head up with a questioning smirk. Her hands came up and her fingers squeezed and tented Sansa’s nipples as she pulled hard on the engorged nipples. Sansa’s upper body was flushed with need.

“What do you need Sansa?” Sansa pushed hard trying to push Margaery down her body. “Tell me Sansa”

“Eat my pussyyyy babyyyyyyy!”

In a flash Margaery had scooted down. Margaery breathed deep. “Godsdamm Sansa … your pussy smells so intoxicating.” Margaery stared at the pussy right in front of her face. Her lips unconsciously being licked by her tongue as she drooled in raw lust.

“Open up our cunt for me Sansa. I have dreamed of this every night. Eating this sweet wet cunt! Every night when I was eating out one of my hens it was your pussy that I wished filled my mouth. It was your cunt my fingers or strap-on was fucking. Your voice I heard screaming.”

“Oh yes! I love you so much … eat my cunt out baby!” She could care less that Margaery had been fucking her hens. Margaery fucking her hens had taught her lover so many skills. Skills Margaery used to drive Sansa nearly mad with pleasure. She was with her now and that was all that mattered.

“I missed you so much Sansa. I will partake of your body and make you scream baby!”

“Ohohhhhhhhhh!” Sansa whimpered reaching down and pulling her pussy open. Her fingers hooked along her seam and pulled her inner lips back. Sansa spread her legs as her soaked fuck hole opened and clutched for Margaery. Sansa’s honey pit all red and soaking wet. Sansa flexed her stomach making her cunt hole clench for Margaery. Margaery spied all of Sansa’s inner folds flexing and rolling with Sansa’s hard breathing and hip flexes.

Sansa saw Margaery drooling. “You see anything—Auuugggggggg!” Sansa cried out feeling Margaery burying her face deep into her cunt and sucking in a mouthful of her wet cunt meat and devouring it!

Sansa’s head lullled over her eyes slit but unseeing. Her hands were still on Margaery’s head. Sansa ground her lover’s face deep into her humping pussy. Margaery sucked, licked and munched on Sansa’s aching slit and clit. Margaery pumped her head stretching Sansa’s cunt up and down as she devoured what she had been denied for over two years.

Sansa felt Margaery worm her arms underneath Sansa’s legs and reach up to grip her hips and help Sansa rotate her aching trim up into Margaery’s hot devouring mouth. Sansa’s face slashed over and over again feeling her lover lapping her tongue up and down her groove and then moving up and lashing her clit with fevered tongue swipes.

Sansa’s belly contracted with hard spasms of ecstasy. Margaery moved her mouth down to lip lock on Sansa’s cunt hole and lap her tongue deep into Sansa’s honey pit scooping out hot dollops of creamy cum. The Tyrell’s nose swiping and jacking into her shiny clit nubbin. The friction exquisite. Sansa nearly lost her mind listening to Margaery noisily gulp down her love juice.

Then she would feel Margaery munching up her slit slurping in her inner lips all dark pink and engorged. Her pussy all slimy wet. Margaery pulled on her labia lips the friction making Sansa whoop. Margaery pulled her head back with Sansa’s labia lips sucked between her lips. Margaery first waggled her head tormenting the stretched out cunt lips and then pulled her back further slowly until Sansa’s cunt lips snapped out from between Margaery’s lips.

Sansa would cry out when Margaery sucked her clit deep into her mouth and hard deep throat suck with her tongue slapping her rock hard clit.

Up and down Margaery worked her mouth on Sansa’s swollen drooling cunt. Sansa’s body began to small flip and seize up. Margaery knew it was time for the love kill.

She brought her right hand over from Sansa’s hip and pressed her fingers down hard into Sansa’s lower belly just behind her clitoral hood. The pressure pulled the hood back and down fully exposing Sansa’s shiny clit.

Margaery lip locked her lips on the shiny nubbin into her mouth and sucked in and out fast her tongue drilling the clit polishing it.

Sansa exploded. Her ass leapt up off the bed and raggedly humped up and down grinding her cunt hard up into Margaery’s devouring mouth. Sansa wailed in crushing ecstasy "Unngghhaaiiiggghh! Ohhnngg! Auungghhmmngg! … Oh! Oh! Oh sweet seven gods . . . oh shit! Auunnmmgghhhaannnrrnrnggg!" Full body convulsions tore through the tall beauty’s body her hips surging up off the bed grinding her exploding twat in Margaery’s hard sucking mouth and giggling tongue spearing her exploding clit.

Sansa’s upper body flipped and jackknifed violently as her snatch felt like it was tearing itself inside out. Sansa’s body lifted off the pillow and slammed back down again and again as her firm tits whiplashed on her sweat soaked body. Her screams weakening as her orgasm finished pummeling her with sweet hot ecstasy. Her body went limp on the bed.

Margaery spent a minute gently licking and lathing the swollen dark pink cunt that was for now spent and satiated. Only after cleaning up all the sweet creamy cum that she could find did Margaery kiss up Sansa’s sweat soaked body. Margaery lay on her lover as she tilted Sansa’s head over and she mated their lips. Their lips sliding and melding before Sansa opened her mouth wide and she moaned tasting her pussy on her lover’s tongue that speared deep into Sansa’s hot groaning mouth.

For several minutes they lay like this basking in being together again. Margaery was purring in happiness.

“I’ll never let you go again Margaery! You belong to me! I can’t live without you!” Sansa smiled hearing Margaery mewl in pure happiness at the hotly declared words.

Then Margaery squealed as in a blur Sansa ripped the pillow from behind her head. Sansa then got her hands in Margaery’s armpits and jerked the Tyrell up and lifted her lover up at the same time. Sansa roughly, hungrily dragged Margaery’s body up her torso. Margaery’s clam shell soaked Sansa’s torso in snail snot as Sansa dragged Margaery’s swollen snatch up her body.

Margaery’s folded body thudded into the headboard as Sansa moved her hands down to Margaery’s hips and roughly pulled Margaery forward and up so her torso was leaned into the headboard. Sansa adjusted her grip and pushed Margaery roughly up the headboard getting the Tyrell mostly upright her groin over Sansa’s face. Sansa moaned smelling Margaery’s hot wet pussy. Gods she loved the musk of her lover. Margaery smelled like pure sex. Sansa looped her arms over Margaery’s thighs and pulled down hard.

“Uunngggggggggg! Oowwggghhhhhhhhh!” Margaery cried out as Sansa pulled her body down roughly mashing Margaery’s cunt onto Sansa’s hot gobbling mouth. Margaery’s vulva flared out around Sansa’s mouth totally engulfing Sansa’s lips. Sansa’s tongue speared deep into Margaery’s drooling swollen love box.

Sansa started to hammer her head up spearing her tongue deep into Margaery’s sopping wet quim. Her tongue fucking her love hard and deep. Sansa centered Margaery’s fuck hole over her mouth and speared her tongue in deep again and again. Each time her tongue snaked back out her lover’s snatch it was soaked in creamy cum that Sansa gleefully slurped down. Then Sansa would surge her head up off the bed and lock her lips to the sweet couchie mashing down into her mouth. Sansa sucked in a mouthful of hot slimy cunt meat and munched on it as Margaery whooped and whimpered.

Then she moved her head up and sucked on Margaery’s bean sized clit with fierce sucks and fast tongue licks.

Margaery was swirling her pussy down in a tight spiral dance and reached up to grip the top of the carved headboard. Margaery threw her head back. "Mmmmm Oh baby . . . ohhnnnn baby!" Margaery used her grip on the headboard to grind her cunt down on Sansa’s mouth. The auburn haired beauty diving her face up so her mouth could suck and lick feverishly the cunt jammed and swirling down onto her mouth. Margaery whimpered, yelping softly as Sansa lapped her head. Her tongue raked Margaery’s rigid bulging clit. "Unnhhhhh! Oh fuck! Yeah baby—give it to me! Fuck me Sansa!"

Sansa moved her hands to grip Margaery’s ass cheeks and urged the brown eyed beauty to hump her mouth harder.

Margaery swept her pussy in a tight motion over Sansa’s mouth. The Stark girl holding her tongue out like a rudder letting the Tyrell fuck herself on the stiff tongue. “Hnnnggg uummmgg hhnnn hhnnnggg hhnnnggg!” Margaery cried out in ecstasy.

Margery jerked hard on the headboard making it hammer the wall.

Sansa pulled her mouth back slightly “Godsdamnit Margaery—I’m not made of fucking porcelain! I’m not going to break—fuck my face godsdamnit!”

Margaery squealed and mashed down harder now. She humped her pussy hard up and down Sansa’s face her vulva totally engulfing the chin, mouth and now nose of Sansa as she used Sansa’s face as a fucking post with her sloppy wet cunt. Margaery looked down and saw her juices had soaked Sansa’s lower face with cum trickling down Sansa’s throat now.

Sansa jammed her head up and sucked and tongue lashed Margaery’s cunt in pure heaven on Earth. Her mouth tasted sweet flowing hot milky creamy cum. Sansa loved looking up Margaery’ hard flexing stomach. Sansa watched her lover’s firm breast wipe up and down with her hard humping down into Sansa’s hot sucking mouth.

This wild dance only lasted a minute longer as Margaery groaned gutturally forcefully jamming her cunt up and down Sansa’s face. Sansa sucking and tongue raking the sopping wet cunt riding her face and moaning into it continuously. Her hands clawed into Margaery’s ass urging her lover to fuck her with abandon.

The bed’s legs were now barking on the floor. Margaery threw her head back her eyes staring up at the ceiling unseeing and screamed “HHHUUNNGGGG! AAWWOOOGGGGGGGG! HHUURRENNNGGGGGG!” Her body began to flip and jackknife like she was being garroted her hands trying to rip the headboard off the bed. Margaery screamed loudly. The bed now quaking violently in the throes of Margaery scalding orgasm.

"Ummngghrrgannghhh! Oh yes Unngghhhiiiiiiieeeeee! Unnggghhhhhrrrrrrrrr! ... Owwwwgggggg—Oohhhhh Sannssaaaaaaa! Unnggunggg . . . yes!" Margaery spasically cried out feeling her womb shredding itself deep in her belly. Her hips flexed and jerked her ass clenched repeatedly grinding her cunt down into Sansa’s hot gobbling mouth.

Margaery’s wails and her body jackknifing and convulsing filled Sansa with her own ecstasy as hot cum filled her mouth several times as she gulped it down.

Slowly, a still convulsing Margaery slide down the headboard until she was supine on Sansa’s body and they melded sweat and cum soaked bodies together. Their mouths again locked tight as tongues languidly twined and swirled deep in Margaery’s mouth.
Never again will I be separated from this Sansa thought to herself as she traced lazy figure eights in the sweat on Margaery back as their tongues languidly danced now in her mouth.

Ice King

The sovereign of the far North sat in his throne, his son gibbering as he sucked on his throat. They had been working all day and he was resting for a short while. His true son fed him strength continuously, but even the Croyel had limits.

The Ice King had walked among his growing children, feeding them. He regurgitated his essence to strengthen and grow them at a preternatural rate.

He felt nothing but love for his growing, deadly sons.

He hated the Dragon Queen more every day. When he had first formed his union with his powerful true son, the Croyel had informed him that he could begin to make sons of living male children up to six years of age. He had been ecstatic. His human sycophants had been supplying him with a steady stream of captured and slave children that had been sold off to his merchants.

But nearly three years ago the stream began to slow, less and less fodder was brought to him. The Ice King at first thought it was the ebb and flow of happenstance. But the flow continually slackened. Finally, he had demanded an answer from his human minions. He was enraged that his future sons were not being brought to him.

He was told that a small blond woman of old Valyria had arisen from the red deserts far to the East. She was smashing the slave cities one by one and moving constantly west. Unlike all before her she smashed the existing order in these cities and did not set herself up as the new slave master once the city-state had been conquered.

She was actually abolishing the trade. Her goal was to remove it permanently.

At first the Ice King had not been overly worried. Such noble aspirations would quickly be crushed.

Only it had not been. The woman had something called ‘dragons’ and was steadily conquering city after city. Now she was forming new navies of freed slaves along with alliances with people from a land called the Summer Islands and the kingdoms of Yi Ti, and sweeping the oceans clean of all slave raiders along with their ships.

Then the Queen had landed in Westeros. He had learned of these Valyrians and their dragons, and word was she only had three of them. He was not overly concerned.

He picked up the Horn of Winter, caressing it. He would blow it and bring the hated Wall down and surge south killing all before him and converting their dead into his army and taking their small children and making new children of ice and blue eyes.

He smiled coldly. He liked that. Making his enemy his own.

His sources among the warm bloods made this woman sound like Azor Ahai reborn. But that hero was dead and gone - he was not an elemental force of nature such as he. He had endured; Azor had not.

Old Valyria was also dead and gone, he was told with assured certainty. It had blown up four hundred years ago. This woman was the last remaining vestige of that old culture. If Valyria still existed, he would have feared. But what were one woman and but three dragons? How hot could their fire be? He feared no paltry bonfire. He was ice given flesh; he would overwhelm and kill these weak fire-breathers.

He had bold plans. Originally, he was content with the taking of Westeros, but his son had convinced him that this was only the start. He would kill the hot bloods and take their young and make them his own sons. He would convert Westeros in his image. Then he would conqueror his way across to Essos, slowly growing stronger. One day he would move out of Essos to control the whole of the entire world.

But even that would not be enough. His Croyel had told him of the Land, the birth place of the Croyel. They were few, but they would join his cause.

Together they would defeat the hated Lords of Revelstone and the Haruchai in their mountain fasts. The Ranyhyn` would die, screaming their wretched horse screams. Then they would journey across the Southern seas to kill the Giants in their home and the Bhrathairealm in their desert cities.

Yes, the Ice King would in time conquer the whole world. His son had filled him with great ambition.

But first he would need to take care of this Dragon Queen.

To that end, he was in luck. The Greenseer had grown old and weak, and his replacement was late in coming to him to take his place.

The Weirwood needed its new avatar. Without him, they would be impotent.

Only the Dragon Queen with her dragons could get the boy to the tree. And when they attempted, he would be ready. He would lie in wait, invisible to her human eyes and spring his trap upon her when the time came.

He and his sons would feast on her body and the flesh of her dragons. Only when they were ripped nearly apart would he raise their decimated corpses to do his bidding.

He had recovered. He lifted the shallow bowl off the ground and regurgitated his life essence into it again, and moved to a group of his growing, hungry children. They needed to be fed. They saw him coming and cawed and jerked, looking at him with pure love as he dipped his head down and sipped in a mouthful of his own icy essence, and then dribbled a small amount into each open, hungry mouth.

His children were humming and thrumming in contentment, tasting their father in their mouths before swallowing. Their bodies crackling and shivering as another growth spurt shaped their forms.

Long into the eternal night, the Ice King fed his children.
Daenerys

The sound of her sharpening stone rasping up the Valyrian blade was always soothing. Again and again Daenerys ran the stone up the finely honed edge, marveling that she was sharpening the blade of her long dead progenitor, Rhaenys Targaryen.

She read again the runes buried deep in the blade and shimmering up through the metal. The magic was still strong over four hundred years later. This combined with the wedding bands the sisters had had forged by the same master spoke so plainly and eloquently of their love for each other. They truly had married their brother Aegon out of duty alone.

The runes on her sword shimmered as she started to polish it. The wavering runes spoke of the great undying love of the younger sister for her older sister. I loved you yesterday, I love you still, I always have, I always will. The words made her heart ache for such a love; to have a woman to hold her like Rhaenys held her precious sister and lover Visenya. The two Ouroboros at the base of her sword interlocked, an undying symbol of their devotion.

Daenerys read other of the magical runes with grim determination. Up in her personal quarters she had the mate to the sword Illyrio had given her - it was Aegon’s sword, not Visenya’s sword. The gods were speaking to her, giving her not the sister’s but the brother’s sword to complement her own.

She was to marry a man.

How typical of Aegon to erase Rhaenys’ sword from history out of spite when he discovered the truth of Rhaenys’ love. His favored sister loved not him, but the sister he himself had married out of duty only. Daenerys hated the ego of men and their need to have control and to dominate women. She had experienced it first hand and would never accept a man’s yoke again.

But she could also only marry a warrior. She needed a strong partner.

In the High Houses there were three possible selections: Loras of Highgarden, Renly of House Baratheon, and Robb of House Stark.

Daenerys ran her oiled rag up and down the metal. While Robb Stark was a good, strong man she was not interested in marrying him. He had his Alys to wed, according to the new sparrows that Varys had found.

She was interested in Renly and Loras only because they were interested in each other. She could marry them and satisfy her royal responsibilities. The prophecies said she would remain barren, so when the gossips started to wag their tongues and tails she would conveniently pull that trump card out.

Daenerys smirked at her cleverness. She loved using a negative and making it into a positive.
Those were the more traditional offerings.

She had also received a letter personally written by Oberyn two weeks ago. Written in a flowing script and offering sweet blandishments, he spoke of her great beauty. He told Daenerys that his paramour was also quite smitten with her. While Ellaria Sand and Oberyn Martell were older than Daenerys Targaryen, they could bring their life experiences into a union with the Queen. They could also bring into her bed immense and exquisite lovemaking skills. They could bring many, many women to the Queen’s bed with them as well. They would make the Queen cum over and over every night. He had promised that she would be ‘most pleased’ if she entered in a union with them.

She had been mildly intrigued, and she admired their willingness to play their gambit. Drogo had pleasured her, but not touched her soul - her lost harem had filled that role. But maybe Ellaria could give her a new harem. She would consider their offer.

When she asked Varys of the couple he had provided a very thick folder. It had definitely caught her attention. Ellaria was very skilled in lesbian lovemaking and had a large harem in Dorne; a harem that would follow her to King’s Landing.

Daenerys shook her head as she finished the oiling of her precious sword. Maybe to have Ellaria and her harem she could endure bedding Oberyn as well, like she had Drogo when she was the Khaleesi in deed as well as name. He had given her orgasms that rocked her body if not her soul, and she guessed Oberyn could do so too. She would hold this as a fallback plan.

Daenerys got up. Her morning workout and maintenance of her sword had her relaxed and ready to fulfill her duties as Queen. Daenerys went to her quarters to take a quick sponge bath and change her clothes to prepare for a small council meeting.

It wasn’t long into the meeting before Daenerys found herself pinching the bridge of her nose. Highgarden had sent yet another raven complaining vociferously over how she had allowed the scions of House Tyrell to be kidnapped. The children were taken in House Tully territory and the trip was Olenna’s idea! She wanted to cram that letter down Mace’s throat!

She was even more agitated with the return of Olenna. She had a meeting scheduled with the crafty old fox, and Daenerys knew deep in her soul that the woman had worked with Eddard Stark to arrange this ‘abduction’. The only problem was she could never come out and just say it.

She sighed when Grand Maester Harsch Lape read out that Mace Tyrell demanded Eddard Stark’s head. Was he going to fight the northern lord? She thought not. Even Barristan and Syrio did not want to fight that man.

Secretly, she admired the man’s balls. The audacity! And always in the back of her mind she worried that all of this was done for the specific reason of drawing the south to go north to the Wall. That he was slowly setting up an unavoidable circumstance where Westeros would have to go and defend the one thing the mighty Great Houses said was not worth its weight in ice.

She had heard, wondering whispers questioning why she had suddenly revived the religion of the old gods with the mining, extraction and forming of weapons from the obsidian of Dragonstone. They snickered that the Khaleesi of the steppes of Essos was afraid of snarks and hobgoblins. That she had become a tiny princess of dragon glass fighting little faeries.

Upon receiving reports of the North’s preoccupation with dragon glass she had asked her Small Council if they had any idea why Eddard Stark would be interested in obsidian. All knew that weapons made of the stone was useless against modern armor or weapons. Arrow or spear points would most likely shatter hitting plate armor and not penetrate chain mail. A sword or ax made of the stone would explode into shards if was hit with a like weapon made of forged steal. Valyrian steel and you would have to forget to it. It would be like fighting with a parchment sword.

Despite all this it was obvious that the North was procuring large shipments from Asshai via the Summer Islands. They were not only procuring it they were fashioning them into projectile weapons and daggers. Like so many things that Eddard Stark had been doing recently it made no sense.

She asked her Maester and Tyrion what they knew. Maester Harsch Lape knew nothing of obsidian. It would not be something that the Citadel would learn of. Citadel did have records dealing with the age of heroes but were little studied now.

Daenerys had hoped that Tyrion’s love of the past would have led to studies in ancient history that might have provided an insight but he sighed and confessed he could not add anything to the collective knowledge.

Daenerys turned to Maester Lape. “Lape. I want you to prepare to travel to the Citadel on Viserion.
You are roughly the size of Barristan. I have had more riding gear crafted with the material that Illyrio is providing. You and Barristan will travel to the Citadel. There you have three days to find what you can about the use of obsidian in the Age of Heroes. You will then return with what you find. You will leave at first sunlight in the morn.”

She had noticed out of the corner of her eye the man’s strange reaction. He looked ill. Did he have a fear of heights or motion sickness? No matter. Unless he became extremely debilitated he would make the journey. He would know how to sift through the Citadel’s library.

Later that night Missandei came to her and said that Maester Lape was despondent and sobbing in his tower. Concerned Daenerys had rushed to him.

She had been shocked entering his quarters. He was sitting at his desk shuffling papers with tears running down his cheeks. She cautiously approached the man. She asked what ailed him.

“You are sending me away. I thought I had proven my worth to you. I thought you valued my counsel and knowledge.”

“I do. That is why I am sending you to the Citadel. To do my will.”

“You sent Tyrion before and now you are sending me. You want to remove me. Is it because of my breaking my vows of chastity?”

Daenerys locked eyes with the man. “I in fact admire you breaking that silly vow. You may have the couth of a drunken Tyrosh sailor in port, but that is not a problem. Gives me a reason to pluck your ears and give you noogies.” The Queen chuckled.

The man looked at her hopefully. “I am sending you because it makes the most sense to send you Harsch. You are quite the scholar. I know that if the information can be ferreted out you will be able to do it. I don’t want to lose you. If you would feel better I can send Tyrion. I will have to give him triple the time. Time I fear we might not have.”

“I am a good scholar and I still know the librarians well. They would gladly assist me.”

“I would never do that to you Harsch. Remove you underhandedly. I respect you too much. I would be the first to talk to you if you were not performing your duties adequately. In fact you are sterling in your performance of them.”
“You keep me on my toes. I would grow bored if you stopped staring at my and Solaja’s tits. It is flattering in a way.”

The man was so relieved. He was now anxious to be off. Daenerys was relieved. He was very good at his duties.

He had come back four days later with information from the tomes of the Citadel.

The information had been sketchy at best. The war with the Ice Wright was strangely omitted from the written records. Her Maester theorized that the war had been a very close affair and little had been left after the war. All efforts had been put into the creation of the Wall and the building of Storms End.

What he did discover was that the First People used obsidian as their weapons of choice. He had found that the first men found them easy to defeat because of their use of obsidian weapons in the Age of Bronze.

Harsh had found several passages of conversations with the elvish people. They had said that their Dragon Glass killed the raised dead of the Ice Wrights and caused the Ice Wrights themselves to steam and melt.

These accounts had been dismissed as fanciful folk lore tails.

She had thanked her Maester profusely for his excellent research. She had her answer. She could not afford to not use this knowledge. She had ordered the immediate digging of obsidian from her ancestral homeland and the fashioning of pointed weapons. She would prepare for any contingency. She had the resources and she would use them.

Then the whispers had started.

She ground her teeth at hearing them. Most times she kept her temper in check, but she’d had a few blowups. Sometimes the only people happy were her nightly visitors. She was voracious in bed, her whores screaming long in the night with the orgasms she sucked, finger blasted and tribbed from their sweat and cum-soaked bodies. Afterwards, the women feasted on her cunt over and over again. Daenerys smirked at that. She’d sometimes had to curl up in the fetal position to protect her kitty from their ravenous tongues.

She received a detailed report on the inspections occurring in Flea Bottom. It listed which buildings were in the most need of repair or replacement, where the roads needed to be widened or re-made entirely, and the places where rain and sewage pooled and did not run off. It also detailed which areas needed new wells drilled and water towers built.

She had some of the realm’s best engineers designing a new layout for the area to prepare for a rolling rebuild of the slum. If she marched north, all of these plans would have to be suspended. She’d be taking those men north with her to build siege engines and defense bulwarks.

Myrcella and Arianna were apace with her on their plans for the rebuilding of the slums of Old Town. They had loved her idea of urban renewal and were throwing themselves into it as well.

They had reported that raiders were becoming a major problem with trade routes deep in the desert. The tone of the report had her sending off a raven ordering the Pride of Dorne to avoid taking this into their own hands. They had an army, best to use it.

Once the council session concluded, she took her place on the Iron Throne. It was a day of the Queen’s justice, and she would proclaim final verdicts. All day she listened to defendants pleading their cases. For the most part, the crimes committed had only been misdemeanors that were easy to discern. Only one case was a felony. A man had beat his wife and put her in the small hospital in her ward. The same man had also abused his two young sons. She had ordered him lashed with the scourge ten times, and then to have the wounds washed in salt water once every three hours for three days.

Then he would go to a counsellor. She had heard of this in Pentos and liked what she found. She had them send over five counsellors to King’s Landing. This was to be a curriculum with the university for women’s study that Myrcella was developing. Many courses would be developed to further the cause of equality for all women. Daenerys had decide that there would a university in Braavos, Sunspear in Dorne, and here in Kings Landing.

You had to educate to change behavior. The man who had beat his wife would then after he finished work each day spend two hours cleaning trash and sewage from the streets in his ward, for six weeks.

The man had been sullen, and Daenerys did not like his attitude. He was clearly not feeling the guilt he should for his crimes.

“One thing more, Tirius Morrass,” Daenerys called down from the throne. She gripped the scabbard of her sword that had been leaning by the throne, and pulled it out. It lit up bright blue, and she stood up and stared down at the man. “If you lay your hand on one more innocent I will castrate you and then kill you myself. I have executed my enemies by the hundreds, don’t think I’ll spare you. Do I make myself clear?”

Tirius suddenly started to shake violently and gulped weakly.

“Yes my Queen,” he croaked as he was led out for his punishment.

Once he was removed, she began to hear supplications.

There were more complaints from the smallfolk in flea bottom. Now that they knew their complaints were being heard they were making sure to have all of them registered.

Daenerys assured them that change was coming soon. She knew they did not believe her, they had been ignored and marginalized for too long, but she would prove it to them. She just needed some time, and to also get the ‘Stark Problem’ behind her.

She heard from a rich merchant that wanted to pull down a small prostitution house to expand his business. To this end, he claimed that his increased business would help fill the coffers of the throne.

He made it clear that his noble family was of more importance than the ‘filthy whores’.

Daenerys seethed on the throne. The man felt his mere birth made him better than these women who were working hard to put food on the table and clothes on the bodies of their children.

She had pronounced that the man could expand his business if he first helped the brothel find a new location and give them a loan at one percent interest to be paid back in reasonable installments.

“Surely that is a reasonable cost to remove these ‘filthy whores’ from your presence?” the Queen had queried the man. He knew it was reasonable. He would have simply had the women cleaned out under the previous monarchy, but it was a new order and he accepted it.

Daenerys then had to hear another complaint about her Dothraki. This time the complaint was from her close allies Chataya and Alayaya. The Dothraki had been in their establishment celebrating the Rite of Mane Tying, when young Dothraki men mounted and broke their first horse. They had gotten very drunk and rutted like the heathens they were. They had also fought and caused much damage to their establishment. Both Dothraki women and men had gone wild, and several men were in the hospital recovering from broken bones and deep cuts from arakhs.

The Queen had pronounced that all fights while in Westeros among the Dothraki were to be non-fatal. Any who broke that pronouncement would be beheaded by herself. The Dothraki knew their Mare Who Had Mounted the World would do it. There had been no deaths.

Her pronouncement was that the Dothraki would be ridden like either mares or stallions with butt plugs in their asses, while prancing around the main floor of the mingling room neighing for five circuits. Then they were to be fucked by whomever wanted them.

The Dothraki women were getting wet and the men were mortified. Maybe the men at least would learn some control. Dany pinched her nose - it seemed the Dothraki women were enjoying their punishment.

Once she was done with supplicants, Daenerys retired to her suite in the Red Keep. She put on a translucent cream colored gown that showed off her swaying breasts and shaved mound. Her hair had been combed out and was gleaming with her fifty-seven bells woven in, chiming with her movements.

She wanted to be her most imposing and sexy self for her visitor.

Jhogo knocked on the door, and she called out: “enter.” The door opened and admitted Olenna Redwyne into her suite, the old woman’s eyes lighting up at seeing the Queen as the door closed behind her.

Daenerys knew it! The woman wished to bury her face in my cunt! She had a little revenge at least as she led the true power of Highgarden to the plush chair reserved for distinguished visitors.

“You look most alluring tonight,” Olenna said to the Queen, unconsciously licking her lips.

“My beauty is but a pale reflection of your perfection,” Daenerys replied as the woman rolled her eyes and snorted.

They exchanged platitudes and made small talk for a while, skittering the real issues between them.

Olenna was obviously intelligent and cunning, and Daenerys couldn’t help but like the woman even if her scheming was making her own life difficult.

They shared a strong whisky drink from her homeland.

“I would have you know O Queen, that all spiders and moths for the night have been removed. A rare event I must confess.”

Daenerys put her glass down, still half full. She was not much for alcohol. “What is your game, you sly fox? What are you playing at, Master of Moths?” her tone indicating curiosity and respect. She knew this woman was her equal in controlling the levers of government and court power. She was not a warrior like herself, but that was the only strength Olenna lacked. If the woman had been her age… who knew what two could become together? Daenerys was sure Olenna would have offered herself to the Queen as a possible prospect. She may be straight, but she would learn otherwise for the chance to rule by her side - the woman craved power that much.

“My goals are to make my House as great as possible without causing war or discord. I am first and foremost loyal to the realm, and to the Queen who sits on the throne.” Olenna replied.

“So I can count on your loyalty?”

“Yes, my Queen.”

“Recent events make me question this. Your son is demanding war, Olenna.”

“Ignore his bleating, Daenerys. He knows he is not strong enough to march north and fight the Starks. He would soil himself if he saw Eddard coming at him on his warhorse. Mace loves his children but he knows Eddard would never actually harm them. This is all political posturing to save his ass.”

“I know you arranged for Eddard to take Margaery and Loras, Olenna.”

Olenna put her hand on her heart and gasped with a stage face on.

“I am shocked that you would let your children be taken and be used as hostages.”

Olenna looked at the Queen serenely. She had given up having Margaery on the throne unless she could get both Stark sisters to share. The Starks were proving to be more liberal than she would have ever considered, but not that liberal.

Olenna had done as much research as possible on Arya Stark and combed her memory and the memories of others from their visit to Winterfell. The Queen would never know what hit her.

“To play the Game of Thrones, as you know Daenerys Targaryen, you must play big or stay in your little room trembling. And neither of us tremble, Daenerys.”

Ygritte

The wind seemed to always be blowing in from the North now. Ygritte knew this was not so, but it still felt that way. The wind coming from the dark North had evil on it all the time now. She glanced at the crows down the wall huddling near their fire. They did not feel the evil like she did.

They knew of the evil intellectually, but they could not feel it in the marrow of their bones. Ygritte had fully regained her powers and memories, and now she was even more powerful than when she had first walked the earth two thousand years ago. Her powers were almost the equal of Melisandre - her once student was now the master with her two thousand years of additional life.

Ygritte shivered. She wore a simple, thin cloak over her Freemen trousers and top with a vest. Like Melisandre, she no longer felt the cold, her body supplied all the heat she needed. No, the shiver was not from the elements, but came from her memories of Melisandre and Jon loving her: Jon ramming his cock into her tight cunt from behind as she was on her forearms, bent down eating out Melisandre with a rabid hunger for her sweet, hot pussy. Jon’s strong strokes jamming her face hard into the juicy quim before her. Melisandre’s wet cunt engulfing her mouth as Ygritte tried to suck her wife’s clit down her throat.

It had been perfect. Jon’s dick fired off hot ribbons of jism into her womb with hard spurts, triggering her orgasm. Her screams of rapture vibrated out her mouth as she sucked furiously on Melisandre’s clit and upper cunt sucked deep in her mouth. Where Ygritte’s screams were muffled and swallowed by Melisandre’s wet snatch, Melisandre’s wails were almost deafening. Those screams urged Jon to continue ramming his cock into Ygritte’s spasming cunt and for Ygritte to keep sucking and gobbling sloppy wet sweet pussy.
The crows avoided her. They sensed her difference and power. Suddenly she felt a presence behind her. She purred when Jon Stark, who she thought of as her husband (and he was no fucking bastard), pulled her tight into his body and bent down, kissing her head and stroking her breast and pussy through her pants, making her wet. He was promising her another great fuck tonight.

They talked about the growing evil out there in the trackless depths of the dark North. They knew that the final battle was growing ever closer.

Ygritte had to smile at the difference between her and Melisandre and Jon. She was fiercely anxious for the upcoming battle. Jon was resigned and wanted to meet the danger to his home and loved ones with firm resolve. Melisandre was anxious and nervous. She wanted to strike but had never been in actual war with forces moving against each other in formation and tactics.

They would crush the Wight King! Then they would be free to leave this place and find themselves a home. Maybe somewhere with this new Queen. Melisandre did much prefer a warmer clime. Ygritte did not care where, as long as Melisandre and Jon were with her.

Jon went to walk down the wall to increase and strengthen the resolve and courage of the crows and free folk watching the North.

Ygritte went down in the basket and went to the mess hall. She no longer needed to eat or drink like Melisandre, but she still enjoyed a nice steamy stew.

She chewed on a heel of bread and talked with Samwell Tarly. She liked him. She had helped Gilly to get the silly crow to give up the stupid vow of chastity that these damn crows took. She had had to work way too hard to get Jon Snow to break his vows. She saw Gilly come and sit beside Tarly. Tarley still insisted that when they were out with his crow brothers that they hide their true relationship. Jon hoped to change that after the war and before he resigned his commission. Ygritte hoped that Jon and Sam were but the first to give up this senseless vow of chastity.

The order was dying away in part because of this vow of chastity and sacrificing one’s life for the service. They needed a military force like in Dorne to rotate soldiers through to serve on the wall for one maybe two years and the rotate off the duty. Bring in fresh troops to keep the Order alive and viable.

She was telling him the story about her claiming of Melisandre. It was a great story after all and she loved telling it again and again. She stopped mid-sentence. She felt a great magic near. Not just any magic, but Shadowbinder magic. One of her kind had just made herself known. She could feel her aura and knew she was a woman. She was powerful, but not her or Melisandre’s equal.

Suddenly, she could feel Melisandre’s distress, mental and not physical. Her wife needed her as she shot off the bench and ran out of the mess hall, leaving a befuddled Sam in her wake.

Ygritte ran furiously back to their bed quarters in the room near the armory. It was away from the foot traffic and gave them the privacy they all craved now.

She ran down the hall, furious at the distress pouring from Melisandre’s psyche. She was hurting and confused, and Ygritte was enraged that anyone would make her wife feel such upset.

Ygritte slammed the door to their bedroom open with her long dagger in hand, ready to dispense death. Melisandre was cowering in the corner of the room, confronted by a shadowbinder with a strange wooden mask covering her face.

“Get away from her you bitch!” Ygritte shrieked at the woman, swiping her dagger at the stranger who immediately backed away, holding her hands up.

“Control yourself Tygeri!”

“My name is Ygritte, bitch!” she snarled, moving to pull Melisandre into her body with her free arm. Her wife collapsing into her side, sobbing and shaking. Ygritte’s anger was boiling. To hell with her order - for hurting Melisandre she would gut the whore.

“Ygritte … Melisandre.” The woman with the mask addressed both women with a slight turn of her head. “I am Quaithe. One of you should be dead. All know that Azor reborn will need to sacrifice his wife on his sword.” The woman pointed her finger at each woman in turn. “One of you did not perform her duty!”

Ygritte snorted “You came all the way from Asshai to tell us that. Pffffttttt! You know nothing Quaithe. Our love is all that is needed for Jon and his sword. You’re just like the men of this world. Kill women here, enslave women there. Bahhh! I reject that outdated thinking! Be gone woman!”

“YOU do not know what you speak Ygritte! You have kept Melisandre from sacrificing herself, and you have denied the task yourself as well. It is needed. It is absolutely needed! You know this!”

“We will take you and thrust you on Jon’s sword if you want a sacrifice so badly!” Ygritte snarled, moving forward with her dagger raised.

“I’m not his wife!” the shadow bender exclaimed, moving back.

“I thought as much!” Ygritte stopped moving forward and wrapped both arms around Melisandre and hugged her, shooting daggers at Quaithe with her eyes.

For a minute they were at an impasse. Ygritte kept cooing to Melisandre. She would have to build up her confidence again, thanks to that gods damned woman.

“Why are you so anxious to get directly involved? I thought that we Shadowbinders were supposed to work from the shadows and advise only. Are you becoming like us, O pure one?!” Ygritte spit out spitefully as she studied the interloper. She seemed to be in her mid-twenties, but that could be easily off by centuries. She was certainly beautiful even with the mask totally covering her face. The woman’s hair dark brown tied up in a bun.

Suddenly, Quaithe surged forward. “You must listen to me. You both have strayed from the faith. You’ve become heretics! Melisandre must sacrifice herself on Azor’s sword!” Quaithe’s hands gripped the taller woman’s shoulders.

Ygritte had had enough. Her right hand balled in a fist around her dagger, then lashed out in a vicious roundhouse arc, her fist slamming into the mask that the strange woman wore.

The blow was so vicious that the mask shattered, the panes flying apart. Melisandre forgot her distress and pain, and Ygritte forgot her anger.

The woman’s face may have been beautiful once, but it was now a ruin. Most of it had been burned away on the left side. Her lips and cheeks were gone, and her skull exposed. Deep runnels ran up to her hair line, the flesh eaten away and bone exposed. The right side of her face was less damaged, but the skin and muscle was still terribly burned and blackened. Ygritte instinctually knew that someone had hurled acid in this once beautiful woman’s face. Her face had been made a wasteland.

“NNNNOOOOOOO! UUNNGGHHEEEEIIIIIII!” Quaithe screamed, throwing up her hands. The light from the fireplace went dark for ten long seconds. When it returned, Quiathe was gone. Ygritte and Melisandre stared at the door that had worked shut after Ygritte’s entrance.

It had not been opened again. They were alone, deeply distressed by the appearance of the woman and her ruined face.

“My gods,” Melisandre gasped “what happened to her?”

“I don’t know love. She’s not important.” Ygritte gripped her wife’s hair and brought their mouths together, kissing her hard. Melisandre hesitated but soon gave into her wife’s adore for her and opened her mouth groaning, feeling her wife’s wet tongue twining around hers, slithering and squeezing.

The tension in Melisandre’s body faded.

“Listen to me baby! … Jon and I are right! Believe us! There is no sacrifice necessary—Azor was a weak man who did not understand his prophecy. Our love is more vital and powerful than one man’s obsession with blood sacrifice.” Ygritte looked hard into her wife’s eyes, where she saw doubt fading. “Believe in me Melisandre … believe in Jon—believe in our love for each other. Quaithe’s vision is blinded by the dogma that once gripped you, and her own pain blinds her.”

“My gods, who would do that to another woman?” Melisandre, her sweet self, more worried about this Quaithe than her own distress. Ygritte breathed easier. The crisis had passed.

Soon Melisandre was naked on their bed screaming as Ygritte sucked her off to a violent flipping and jackknifing orgasm. Ygritte kept loving her wife, making her cum again and again, the tall woman’s body simply soaked from hair to feet in sweat and cum.

Jon came in an hour later and instinctively knew what to do. He fucked Melisandre hard, face to face, and kissed her deeply as his cock exploded firing off hot arrows of cum into his wife’s cunt, flooding it. His semen jetted into her love box and womb which triggered yet another orgasm for Melisandre. Her screams were swallowed into Jon’s devouring mouth. Ygritte’s screams bouncing off the walls as she jerked off and timed her orgasm to meet Melisandre’s orgasm.

Three hours later Melisandre was asleep with Ygritte sprawled on top of her and Jon leaning into her right side. He played with Melisandre’s sweaty, matted hair. Normally, he fucked his wives in turn, ejaculating in both their pussies but tonight he had cummed all four times in Melisandre’s hot vise-tight cunt, knowing she needed to be the sole focus of the lovemaking. She needed to feel his semen spurting hard with his cock buried fully sheathed up her tight spasming cunt. Ygritte hungrily jumped in to make more love to Melisandre as Jon recovered.

“We will need to go to Winterfell and get the first shipment of dragon glass,” he told Ygritte. She nodded sleepily. It was time to start peeling away the veils that surrounded them and their love.

Tyrion

Tyrion was very pleased with himself as he sat in his comfortable plush chair in the tower of the Hand. He was performing his services as the Hand of the Queen most satisfactorily. She valued his judgments and insights. She was strong-willed and confident but would follow his advice or plan if he proved it had merit or was outright superior to her original intent.

He had approved the initial plans for the first phase of the rebuild of Flea Bottom. He was also going to use the opportunity to increase the pier space at the harbor and build ten more slips to increase trade. He would use the landfill to create space for the new orphanage that Dany wanted to build, and a halfway house for abused women. He would use the dredge material and ruined buildings to build the new on top of the old. Tyrion appreciated Dany’s hot anger at those who had been abused. He could only have wished that his father and sister had faced her wrath when he was growing up.

Thinking on self-defense prompted him to wonder where his new bodyguard was.

Varys had spoken highly of the man. He was supposed to have arrived half an hour ago.

His sister’s rapid transformation into a fighting and, ergo, killing machine was making him nervous. If she found out how much he had bet on her failure she would be filled with righteous fury.

He looked around. He had just bet that Obara would not be in his sister’s short clothes for the next three months. He had to win sometime! Most only gave Cersei a few weeks to resist the beautiful, voluptuous warrior’s advances. Cersei had to use that new found willpower to resist for three measly months! She owed Tyrion, godsdamnit!

There was a knock on the door. He took his time to answering.

A minute later there was a harder knock on the door. “Come answer the door you sawed off runt! I want to be paid for this waste of time.”

The insolence! Tyrion stalked to the door and flung it open.

Outside leaning against the wall was a man with a sword on his hip. Tyrion was expecting a knight, not some sell sword.

“I was expecting a knight,” Tyrion told the man, looking extremely disappointed.

“You got me.” He answered as a woman followed in, giving off an air of being much aggrieved. Tyrion could not help but eye the woman as she swished her hips, walking into his chamber looking at the opulence of the room with a calculating eye.

“Hey Imp, keep your eyes off my woman! I’m paying her a lot of money to pretend she loves me dearly.”

“I see. May I ask your lady her name?” Tyrion asked.

“Shae. And my ‘sweet paramour’ here is Bronn. His money makes up for lack of a cock.” She said casually.

“That is sweet coming from a woman who if she had as many on her as she has had in her would look like a porcupine,” the man shot back nonchalantly.

Tyrion studied the strange pair. The man, this Bronn, had a lean, wolfish appearance, with dark hair, dark eyes and a stubble of beard. He was of average height and build.

He had expected, well, more.

Tyrion turned his attention to the woman who reminded him subtly of Tysha. Shae was short and very pretty, with large dark eyes and black hair that was braided and running down her back. Her high, firm breasts swished invitingly in her sheer, loose top. Despite being a short woman, she had the legs of a filly. She was fingerling the furniture and expensive ornaments that lined the shelves and tops of tables and desks.

“Shae, can you be a little less obvious in your leering at the wealth of the Hand?” Bronn sighed.
“I think I like this little Lion of Lannister. I bet his cock is bigger than yours.” She sniped playfully, shaking her ass at him and smiling seductively at Tyrion. The dwarf felt his cock stirring. Just what kind of body guard was he getting?

“I expect double pay for any travel and I will be needing an extra stipend to keep Shae happy in a nice apartment,” Bronn stipulated.

“Why should I hire you for my bodyguard at all? You seem lacking.”

“I am very good, Imp. Plus, if I’m paid I’m very loyal, and very good at killing people. I hear you are afraid of a little kitty cat down in Dorne. I’ll protect you from the kitty. If she gets past me, Shae will fuck her to death. Won’t you dear?”

“At least I’ll have a nice orgasm for a change.” Shae deadpanned.

For the next half-hour Tyrion negotiated a little, but was mainly insulted as he watched the sell sword and prostitute argue and backbite each other. They obviously enjoyed it. After they left his quarters, Tyrion stuck his head out the door and saw Bronn cupping Shae’s firm ass as the woman giggled and leaned into him with obvious affection.

Most strange.

He reviewed the reports from Dragonstone. The mining and extraction of obsidian was moving a pace. Artisans were shaping arrowheads, spear tips, daggers and jareds. Tyrion had commissioned the making of a dagger for himself as well, he was feeling very defensive presently.

He heard another angry knock on the door. He went and opened it, prepared to ask Bronn what demand he had now and instead was shocked into stillness.

In his doorway stood Tywin Lannister of Casterly Rock. He glared down at his youngest offspring. Tywin did not wait to be let in. He strode in with an air of possessiveness. “This used to be my room. I was the best hand this realm has ever known.” He looked down at his son with a clearly disapproving stare. “This Daenerys Targaryen is sadly lacking as Queen. She wastes time carving pretty little chairs for dwarfs. She needs to focus on the true needs of the realm.”

Tyrion had started to shrink, but the insult on his Queen stiffened his backbone.

“Your vision is obviously dimming along with your years, father. This woman is twice the kings you served and I might add I am clearly your equal. The queen values my judgment and insights.”

“That alone shows her lack of royal temperament. She will not last the year. She will only last as long as she uses what is between her legs to keep the men enthralled with her. When they grow tired of her, she will be done.”

Tywin looked down as his son fell to the floor, bursting into laughter. Several times Tyrion almost controlled his laughing, only to point at his father and start laughing hysterically again. The consternation on his father’s face at his hysterical laughter spurring further laughing fits in Tyrion.

Finally, Tyrion gathered himself. “Father. She’s a rug muncher. A muff diver.” Tyrion slowly levered himself up off the floor. He continued to snicker, seeing Tywin’s confusion.

“She’s a lesbian, father. Believe me, the last thing she wants is a man’s cock.”

Tywin took a minute to digest this information. “Unnatural bitch!”
“Please, pretty please, tell our Queen that to her face. I will love watching her gut you.” Tyrion told his father sweetly.

“Enough of this woman. You need to leave this post and come home and assume your duties as my heir.” Tywin told his son, looking down on him with disdain.

Getting desperate, aren’t you father? Tyrion thought to himself.

“I have no intention of going back to that place. Ever. I belong here with the Queen. You will be only a footnote in history where my accomplishments will be written of for a thousand years, father. Your time is past - go home and sulk.”

“You insolent little cur!”

“Now that is the father that I know and loathe. You don’t get it, do you? Jamie wants nothing to do with you, ever. Cersei chose exile rather than return to your not-so-loving talons. I am happy and proud here, father. My future is with this Queen. She is the fulfillment of A Song Of Ice and Fire. She is the beginning of a new age of enlightenment and reclamation. This will be an age of light, father. You had better go home. You will have no place in that light. The shadows you thrive in are getting smaller with Daenerys reign sweet loathsome father.”

“I ought to slap you down, you little dog. You need you fulfill your duty!”

I will need to keep that damn Bronn closer than I thought. “Father you don’t get it. None of your children want anything to do with you. We detest you! You treated us like shit and we are now free - and flourishing I might add.”

“You know nothing of family, honor or duty. None of my ill-begotten children do. All of you have been extreme disappointments to me.”

For a moment Tyrion fantasized about shooting his father with a crossbow.

He went to the door and opened it. “I believe this meeting is over, father.”

Tywin stormed out.

“Father!” Tyrion called out while Tywin was in the hall. His father paused, his head cocked.

“Since you think homosexuality is so vile, I have some news for you. Your granddaughter has her head buried in not one pussy, not two pussies, but three pussies. She has married three women. Imagine that, father.”

Tywin scowled.

“And your daughter. She is being seduced as we speak. Soon she will be a lesbian too. I bet three months before she succumbs, but everyone else is betting two weeks tops.

“And guess who is doing the seducing, father. Oberyn’s daughter. Perfect isn’t it! The daughter of one of your greatest enemies.

“Think of that, father. All your female progeny are gay. Cersei is currently discovering that as we speak. You might want to reconsider your bigotry.”

Tyrion slammed the door in his father’s spluttering face as it turned a not-so-healthy shade of red.

Ice King
Trees and undergrowth whipped by at a blur. Several deer and an elk were startled and started to jump away, but the disturbance was already past them before the animals fully registered the potential threat.

The Ice King was moving at an exhilarating clip. He had a meeting to keep. He felt his son humming a strange cadence as he drank his father’s blood, the Croyel’s talons digging into his father’s side painfully. The Ice Wight welcomed the pain. It gave him power.

The Ice King was running faster than the quickest deer. He had crested a hill a league back and spied the first glimmer of the hated Wall. He continued speeding toward that destination. His true son filed his body with exultant power that allowed him to fly over the ground like a striking hawk.

In the past he had met the traitors on the beach a few leagues North of the Wall, but that was no longer possible. The cursed Dragon Queen had tightened her blockade of the sea, and her ships sailed up and down the coast continuously.

She had gotten bold. A large company of men had come ashore and established a small base there. He had gathered a force of his dead and several of his Wight Sons to exterminate the camp. It had been most satisfying as his minions killed most of the warm bloods and converted them to his army.

Then last month an extremely large ship had run aground. The ship had two others off shore at anchor to protect it. The Ice King sent a larger force to kill and claim these strange people. Their skin was dark as if burned – but it did not matter. They would die.

His forces approached slowly as the Ice King watched through his Lt. Son – one of his first he converted from Craster many years ago.

He smiled as the arrows launched had pierced his dead army to no effect. His shambling dead had reached the ship and started to climb up it. The other ships had weighed anchor and moved closer to shore. Suddenly, a command went up from the ship in their guttural language.

The Ice King watched with fascination through his son as lids were ripped off pots lashed to the masts and rigging. The archers dipped their arrows down and then lit them.

Flights of arrows filled the air like fiery locusts in a swarm. His dead were pierced repeatedly with flaming arrows and caught fire. The dark skinned people seemed to have no end to their supply of death. An Ice Wight charged the ship but was pierced with so many arrows he died screaming as he melted on the spot. Another dodged the arrows and with great strength heaved himself up on the deck of the beached ship. He killed his enemies sweetly, his blade shattering their steel. Then a woman hit his blade with a sword that shattered the ice blade. That was impossible!

He saw that the sword had a strange blue cast to it. What kind of sword was mightier than their swords of ice?

It should have been impossible. His son died seconds after that, his arm lopped off by the blade and arrows piercing his body, killing him with hot angry flame. His elder son ordered his forces back in defeat.

Damn them all.

This Dragon Queen needed to be defeated! She was too cunning. He would kill her himself. She would come to him, he smiled in cold surety as he reached the Wall.

The Ice King wasted no time ramming his fingers into the ice Wall. Ice he knew. He felt an ill pulsing in his fingers, but his strength had been multiplied immeasurably by his son. He felt the Wall trying to push him back to stop his advance, but he was now simply too strong for it. He was exalted.

He pulled back in shock as his son screamed in agony. The Wall suddenly exploded into blue rippling light up and down its length from bottom to top for several hundred yards on each side of him. Now he sensed extreme, dire power but it was not tuned for him. The Wall continued to ripple and shimmer, almost seeming to dance.

His son screamed into his mind: How is this possible! No no no! It is a Forbidding! Not here the cursed Lords! Not here!

He talked to his son slowly, calming his normally confident and placid boy. He was not able to fully understand him, but he got the basic idea.

The blue flame slowly dying away was a Forbidding imposed on the Wall in its creation. It opposed what it considered to be evil. The Lords were from some far away land called simply The Land. They were an anathema to the Croyel; mortal enemies.

The Croyel yammered he should have seen it but it had lay hidden. As he had discussed these strange events with his true son the blue rippling slowly faded away. Again he could no longer sense this Forbidding as the Wall was now nothing but normal ice. The Croyel was shaken, jabbering that the Forbidding should have flayed the muscle and tendons off his bones and incinerated him. He was stunned he was alive.

The Croyel studied the wall with eyes beyond the kin of the Ice King. After fifteen minutes the Croyel gasped.

He told his father that he must break their bond for a minute.

The Ice King hesitated. He was assured that their intimate union would only be broken only for a minute. The father finally gave permission to his son.

The Ice King staggered and fell to his knees, weakened like a new born babe. The Croyel crawled into his father’s arms, and asked his father to hold him out. He complied with arms that trembled as if he had palsy. They stared at each other and the Ice King sensed that the Croyel was looking at himself through his own eyes.

The Croyel having learned what it sought, quickly crawled back to his nestling spot on the Ice King’s back and bit into his father’s throat. The Ice King surged back up, his strength renewed.

“What did you see, my son?”

“Magic is dying father. The Wall and its Forbidding is diminished. I am diminished. As are you, Father. All are diminished. Some line has been crossed.”

The Ice King stated to his son he had never felt stronger.

He felt the Croyel thinking. “I am prepared now. I will cast a spell of separation that will allow you to climb the Wall without it sensing my presence. The Forbidding was created by the dread Lords who have intimate knowledge of my kind and know how to kill us with their vile, evil magic. You will shield me.” The Croyel hummed a new, discordant song.

The Ice King did not care. If all were weakening at this rate, he was still the mightiest force in his world. He would defeat the North and then move to the South of the World to take care of these “Lords”.

The Croyel smiled into his throat. He told his father that in the South magic was still strong and vital.

The Ice King climbed the wall easily with his great strength, though the higher he climbed, the more his fingers and feet ached as the Wall repelled and fought his advance upward. But it did not overcome him, he was simply too strong.

They had chosen this location because it was still rarely patrolled. He quickly scrabbled down the other side of the Wall and ran south at dizzying speed for twenty leagues until he came to a small, dilapidated cabin. A small group of men came out to greet him, shivering hard at the cold the Ice King brought with him.

The men wore the sigils of Twin Towers and a Flayed Man on their surcoats. After the death of Petyr Baelish, the Ice King had feared he would not be able to find more traitors but the promise of wealth, power and women always seduced the weak.

A man named Roose Bolton spoke for the traitors. He felt slighted and aggrieved by the House of Stark and would look forward to usurping their power and rank. He would feel avenged for the many slights done his house.

The Ice King negotiated pacts with those vile, weak warmbloods that he never intended to keep. He would kill them last, and add them to his army for his march into Essos. The men were greedy and full of avarice. He hated them even more than the House of Stark if that was possible.

The trip back to his kingdom was uneventful. He endured the pain of the Wall as his son clung to him even tighter. He felt his son contemplating events and portents.

He was not worried. If all were weakened evenly, then that still left him the strongest of all. He would conquer the world. It was his destiny. He would remake the world into his image - a land cold and bleak with icy winds forever blowing across the wastes.

He felt his son contemplating and mulling over the revelation at the Wall. Why was magic fading?

Daenerys

The Queen had forgone the Small Council meeting. There was no new business that had to be addressed. She thought of her plans for the coming campaign in the North as walked to the throne room to hear supplications.

During their last Klatch of Confidents meetings the Queen had defined their additional exploration of the North. Her forces had already scooted potential landing beaches to bring her forces to the North. She had her pool of beachheads to choose from now.

Now she and her generals along with Tyrion and Missandei studied the maps of the North. They were looking for the unused backroads and smuggler tracks. She had sent forces inland. Her scouts were seeking out paths and fords inland on the rivers of the North. She had found all her Klatch members had good eyes for terrain and finding good blocking positions.

She would put strong blocking forces comprised of her Mercenary Companies. These forces would take local high ground near the centers of gravitas in the North. White Harbor, the Dreadfort, Karhold, Hornwood and Deepwood Motte. These mercenary companies would hold these chokepoints in case she had misread Eddard and he was truly a traitor.

These forces would hold and delay. They would bleed the enemy until word got to her. She would constantly have her dragons flying over the North. She would find out of their treachery. Her forces were to hold the advance of the enemies advance.

They would pin the enemy advance down till her dragons could be brought to bear. She had been developing doctrine that her blocking forces were to seek out and destroy any scorpions or trebuchets. With these destroyed her dragons could attack at will.

She was gathering all the intelligence she needed so she could act then the time came. She felt it was coming soon. Her thoughts returned to her duties as to hearing supplications to the throne.

She had scheduled and posted that she would have audience early on the Iron Throne instead. She was excited about the tourney that was to happen in the afternoon – so excited that she didn’t even feel the damn steel points and barbs of the gods forsaken Iron Throne piercing her dainty posterior.

She heard the routine petty arguments between shop owners and aggrieved spouses and some teenage hooligans that she assigned some civic duty to, and forced them to perform service to the people they had victimized with their vandalism.

Then came a man with a proposal that the Queen might find ‘beneficial and highly profitable’. He claimed to have a new way to advertise that merchants would be scrabbling to take advantage of.

She asked the man what she would use extra money for. Surely he could not produce enough income for her to find useful. She was Queen after all.

The man responded that her frugality was already becoming well-known and admired. Her desire to put the crown’s resources to work for the people was very commendable. But surely, the Queen would enjoy a sizable fund to purchase perfume, makeup, nightgowns and undergarments for the man in her life. Or get her hair and nails done so she could impress her male suitors. Surely she wanted to look her best for any men she might want to impress.

Daenerys’ hands gripped the arms of the throne, her knuckles turning white with her fingers clawing the metal. Was this man insane?!

The queen saw Tyrion trying to catch the man’s attention with not so subtle hand motions. The imp’s face was frantic as he waved his hand back and forth at his neck with the universal sign to “cut it off!”

The man was oblivious.

Daenerys saw Missandei looking at her with a humored grin. The Naathi rolled her eyes at the clueless man and turned her head to look at the Queen. She subtly put her parted fingers up to her lips and wiggled her tongue between them, just barely sticking her tongue out.

Daenerys laughed, her anger settling.

“What do you want? Get on with it man!” the Queen implored the clueless salesman.

He looked miffed that he was being cut off.

“I have this great idea. Your dragons need exercise, right?”

The Queen cocked an eyebrow at this.

“And they must be getting fat.”
The Queen’s eyes nearly bulged out of her eye sockets. Was this man insulting her sons! Her sons were svelte by the gods!

“Beasts that large must be lazy and need exercise.”

The Queen was nearly jumping out of the Iron Throne at this point, barely restraining herself. “Your idea.” Daenerys ground out.

“Oh. Yes. My idea.”

Finally, Daenerys thought.

“I am thinking that we can create a new way to advertise. Diaper cleaning services for new mothers. Wooden dentures for the elderly. Corsets to keep unruly teenage girls virgins for their future husbands.”

Daenerys made a strangled noise.

“The new herbal blend that treats erectile dysfunction in men, and contact your doctor or shaman for an erection lasting over four hours.”

“Are you shitting me?!” the Queen exclaimed.

“No. I am totally serious” the man responded clearly confused as to the Queen's reactions.

“Where the hell do my dragons come into this?!”

“I was thinking we could build a harness to fit around their bodies and place metal signs with the advertisements emblazoned on them. Everyone would see them. I will make them very visual for the illiterate.”

Daenerys could just see the pictographs for erectile dysfunction. “You can’t be serious!”

“Oh yes, I am my Queen. We’ll be rich!”

Tyrion had jumped up out of his chair. “I like it!”

The Queen’s head whipped around to glare down at her Hand, her violet eyes blazing. “You can’t agree with this, Tyrion.” she snarled.

Tyrion was rubbing his hands, his eyes alight with greed and avarice.

“I can make it even better,” the dwarf said. “We could design a harness that your dragons could slip into. Then have long cables hanging off of the harnesses. From the cables we could attach long, streaming banners. My gods it would be so beautiful.”

Daenerys stared at her Hand with dire warnings.

“They could fly up and down the beach for hours. Landing only to change out the banners. Yes, yes, it would work.” The greed radiating off Tyrion was almost incandescent.

The Queen was shaking in ire now.

Tyrion was into it now. “You could even put different designs on each side of the banners to double the profits. My gods I—errr I mean, we would make such a profit. I could maybe hire a second bodyguard.”
“I forbid it!”

“Ohhhh Danyyyyy!” Tyrion pleaded. “Drogon is looking a little overweight.”

“Over my dead body, Tyrion Lannister!”

Daenerys spent the next minute shouting down Tyrion’s pleas to listen to reason.

Finally the Queen relaxed back into her Throne with a self-satisfied smile, the distasteful matter behind her.

“Enough of this foolishness!” A loud, baritone male voice intoned from the back of the audience chamber. Slowly Tywin Lannister stepped forward. “I have witnessed enough of this infantile behavior from my son and an immature teenage woman. It is time that males again led Westeros!”

The Lion of Lannister came to a stop in front of throne.

Daenerys sat at attention on her throne, her body rigid. She stared down at the man silently. The people in the audience chamber were silent and tense. When the Queen was quiet, that was when danger was in the air.

“You are not on the audience list.” Daenerys calmly called down to Tywin.

“I don’t need to be on the list. I am a former Hand and the titular head of a Great House. A man leading his house. I have the right by birth.”

“I see.” Daenerys leaned to the right and reached beside her throne. Her hand pulled up and Foe Hammer was in her grip, the light of the sword shimmering blue. “Then you are willing to meet me in challenge in front of the throne.”

“I am not challenging you, woman. I am merely stating fact.”

“I will let you live, this time. If you ever speak again in this room, it will be because you have registered to speak. You are nothing to me!”

“I would never allow this drivel before the throne when I was Hand.”

“Why is that?”

“You don’t allow the common rabble to come before the throne. It is unseemly and demeans the throne.”

The said common rabble were murmuring staring daggers at the Lord of Casterly Rock.

“So, letting the common people to have full right of entreaty lowers the throne?”

“Yes. Only the high nobles can lead the people. The common men are just rabble. The throne was meant to have a man of royal birth sitting on it.”

“A man like you?”

“If not me, then a man of equal greatness. Not an unnatural woman. My son told me three nights ago of your . . . particular hungers.”

“I see,” Daenerys spoke, turning to look at Tyrion. He was staring at her wide-eyed, shrinking back in his chair in raw fear.
Daenerys smiled reassuringly. She was sure he was defending her in some manner. She turned to look back at Tywin.

“Unnatural. Like your granddaughter, Myrcella, and her mother Cersei? I think we all share the same malady. Seems to run in your family quite heavily.”

While none of it was secret, it was still little known and she knew Tywin had no desire to have this knowledge spread throughout the realm.

Both stared at each other hard. Threats given and received.

“You say you are superior to my abilities.” Daenerys continued.

“I think it is rather obvious.”

“Hhhmmmm … let’s look at the pro and cons to what say you, Tywin.”

The leader of House Lannister squared his shoulders ready. “You know I had been the Hand to your father.”

“Yes. For twenty years. Then you got upset and abandoned your post.”

“That is not what happened.”

“You rushed to my father’s aid during Robert’s Rebellion, making sure to arrive too late to help in his defense.”

“That is a lie!”

“Forces under your control killed my sister-in-law after raping her, I might add. Oh that is right - you had my niece raped and then killed as well, but not before bashing my baby nephew’s head in.”

“I had no part in that. I was shocked at that turn of events!”

“Were they under your command?”

“Y-Y-Yesss but—“

“There is no “but” … heinous crimes were committed by men under your command!”

“I cannot be held accountable by all those under my command. I cannot be everywhere at once!”

“A true man accepts responsibility for those under his command.” Her eyes narrowed. “Have you made loans to the throne?”

“You know I have.”

“Indeed. Many if not all riddled with fraud and usury rates.”

“I deny those chargers.”

“Is a man the head of his house?”

“You know the answer to that!”

“My Hand. Your youngest son. You treated him like a piece of shit, and to this day despises you. Your eldest son, Jaime Lannister, renounced his birthright and refuses to acknowledge his status. In fact he has petitioned me to change his last name to Tarth. His children are to be known by that surname. When Brienne’s father steps down, she will take leadership of the House and not Jaime. He says she will make a much better leader than he ever could.”

“That is unnatural … my son is a fool!”

“Fortunately, Jamie did not inherit your misogyny.”

“That leaves your daughter. I gave her three choices as to her future. As you can see she did not choose to go home to you and your tender ministrations. She chose exile and the hard life of a warrior initiate. As a father you seem to really, really suck at the job, Tywin.”

“I resent that.”

“Then resent the truth. We both know about your female progeny. I must say from personal experience I applaud their tastes.” The Queen spoke down to Tywin intoning the last word.

Tywin’s face went red.

“It is a new time, Tywin. A new age. I foresee that women are forevermore going to control more and more the levers of power. Arianna will take over in Dorne and your granddaughter will be there to support her.

“Be gone, Tywin Lannister. You can speak freely after you register and put on the register what you desire to speak. Like everyone else.”

The Lord of Casterly Rock stormed out of the audience hall.

Daenerys was excited when the time for the tourney had finally arrived. She had resisted having any tourneys or contests, citing the costs to the throne. A large contingent from the Free Cities had arrived for the event just the day before.

They had wanted desperately to witness a Westeros Tourney. Most of them did not have such spectacle in Essos. Daenerys had demurred until the wealthy merchants and nobles told her that they would pay for the costs of the event. They had sent artisans out ahead of the delegation to prepare the tourney field and surrounding skill competition fields.

With their money and workers, a grandstand and tourney fields had been set up. A jousting rink was also erected. The grandstands made of fine wood and of the best carpentry skills. The booths for the royals and the wealthy merchants to sit in were resplendent in the finest upholstery and dark hard woods. Gold and silver inlay were used throughout the booths.

Daenerys shook her head at the extravagant waste of it all.

Daenerys had been thrilled at the power and savagery of the men charging each other in the jousting lanes. The violent collisions of lance on shield. The way the men were lifted off their horses and slammed to the ground was thrilling to watch. She had supreme confidence in her own abilities, but she knew she was just too tiny to take on those big burley men on horses with weight and momentum on their side.

A young knight from House Swann had won.

She had also loved the demonstrations of archery and ax throwing.
Then it was time for the melee. She understood the need to wear her dragon mail armor and a helm, but she was not used to all that protection. She felt like a snail, and hated how the helm kept her from seeing around herself clearly.

She had decided to have referees judge when a ‘killing’ blow had been landed. Syrio and Barristan were two of the judges. Syrio would never survive a heavily armored melee as a water dancer, and Barristan insisted that he had already fought his battles.

She saw Strong Belwas in the rink with a helm on, and little else. He was going to be an easy mark. He was stumbling around, bellowing that he could not see.

She saw Gendry out with his war hammer and plate armor that he had crafted himself. He had on his head a burnished helm with bull horns on it. He looked like what his father must have looked like in his prime. She could understand why women were so attracted to Robert. Fortunately, Gendry had not inherited his father’s temperament when it came to bedding women.

He seemed to have only eyes for his half-sister Mya. With her Targaryen lineage one thing she had no problem with was the concept of incest. If both parties were old enough to consent freely with mature judgement then she would fully support any such union. She sometimes wondered how Jaime and Cersei Lannister would have turned out if they could have freely shown their love.

Nahhh! Probably not. Gods those two would have been insufferable with their arrogance and narcissism. They always seemed to bring out the worst in each other.

She noticed when Mya put a ribbon on his arm. She had come to her recently asking if could have permission to marry Gendry. The dull ox was to stoic and unsure of himself to propose to her and she needed to take matters in her own hands. He was deathly afraid she would be angered at their incest.

Daenerys had laughed hard at that which confused Mya until she had described the full history of House Targaryen. What many did not know was that incest was a common attribute among the other High House of Valyria. They sought to keep their blood lines pure. Plus, when you are raised to find love with siblings it was most liable to occur.

The Queen rested on the rail on the edge of the tourney field. She was plotting her path to victory. Today the dragon would roar in triumph! Daenerys would use her agility and skill, and win the tourney! She could feel it.

Over two hundred men and one woman were now on the edges of the melee field, eyeing each other nervously with wired tension.

A war horn sounded.

AAAAAwwwhhhooooooo!

With a loud scream Daenerys charged forward. She sensed someone behind her and whirled, barely blocking the vicious downward arc of a mighty broadsword. The knight beside her on the edge of the field had immediately tried to take her out.

She pushed him back and was going to “gut” him with a pulled blow when she was struck from the side and nearly knocked off her feet.

It was fucking chaos! Everyone was attacking everyone else. She saw Gendry’s hammer sideswipe Strong Belwas’ helm, knocking the ill-fitting armor off-kilter and blinding him. He staggered around and tripped over the hip-high fence, disqualifying himself. The massive eunuch threw his helm off and pulled a sack around that was on his hip. He happily munched on locust watching the melee in full form not twenty feet away.

She heard screams and curses all around her. Her violet eyes were wide open in the insanity. She was barely blocking blows from all angles as she kicked and shoved men all around her, trying to get some space.

She saw a large knight and charged him. He blocked her blows, and then was attacked and ‘killed’ from behind.

Daenerys dove to the left and rolled to her feet and fought off three men as they tried to take her out. Her blue glowing rune sword swirling right and left blocking their mighty hacking blows of their broadswords. The two on the left had to pivot to meet a sudden attack from that side.

Daenerys dispatched some squire with mismatched armor quickly. She then had to fight off Gendry, his war hammer hitting her blade and setting off sparks. So much for fucking gratitude! The Queen screamed in her head.

She tried to dispatch a knight but was assaulted by two more on each side of her. She sidestepped the first, knocking him to the ground. He rolled away as she grappled with second knight. They grunted, pushing and jamming into each other their swords locked. They head butted one another, stunning themselves and Daenerys punched the knight in the head with the pommel of her sword as his knee slammed into her ribs.

They both staggered back. She tripped onto her back, the breath whooshing out of her lungs. She was still gasping when her eyes bulged. A knight with a morning star whirring in a tight circle over his head came running forward at her with a clear path.

She jerked her blade up and held it across her body, gripping the blade with her left hand. The star and chain wrapped around her blade as it descended. She pulled forward, flinging the man over her head. She scrabbled over and jumped on him, ‘killing’ him with a stab of her sword.

BBBAAAAMMMMM!!

A huge chop landed down on her shoulder, numbing her arm. “Daenerys Targaryen has been eliminated!” shouted out Syrio.

“Nnnnnooooooooooo!” Daenerys wailed in frustration.

The Queen ran up Syrio “No fair!”

“How so? You were struck a killing blow.”

“But I am supposed to win!”

“Not today Dany. Now off with you.”

“Aaarrrrrrggggghhhhh!” Daenerys stomped her feet on the ground and glared at Syrio. “I won’t forget this!”

Syrio sighed. Geez, Dany was such a sore loser. He motioned for Daenerys to start leaving the tourney field.

She stormed off the field of the tourney, stomping her feet and wildly swinging her sword all around. Once she had left the field, she flung her helm off. The helm hitting the ground and bouncing up high off the ground. She kicked the helm again in the air and it flew thirty feet to land and bounce away.

The Queen turned to sit down with her chin in her palm and harrumphed. She would have her revenge!

Eddard

Eddard was supervising the loading of the Crow wagon with the first load of crafted weapons for the Night’s Watch. He felt pride in helping his son in his duty to defend the Wall and the realm. He missed his son, who had done him so proud.

He had supervised the creation of arrowheads, spear tips and other weapons made of dragon glass. He had brought in smiths from across his realm to make the weapons for the Wall. He wanted to make sure that they were made to the highest quality standard. The King’s Road going straight to the Wall would ensure quick delivery. Soon he would have whole wagon trains loaded with the precious weapons moving north. They now could effectively fight the hoary host of their implacable enemy.

Eddard trusted all his captains, but this was too important to risk anything but the best effort. Dragon Glass was notoriously brittle, and he knew many of these weapons could break in use. He ensured they were heavily protected in straw and wood chips as they were packed for transportation.

He had the craftsmen making as much as possible. Eddard had to divide the effort to ensure that his own forces were well taken care of. He had been relieved that the Queen was still permitting shipments of supplies from Essos to come through.

Again, she was showing restraint. She had said in between her insults and rants she would never starve any in her realm. She was allowing the obsidian in since it could never be effective against iron or steel. He had even brought in some weapon makers as they hid themselves as part of the crew. The blockade did not seem interested in Eddard acquiring a few more men of various skills.

The boarding’s had become routine since he never once tried to bring in mercenaries or war materials. Eddard had meet with the representatives of the companies he had hired to bring in supplies. The instructions to the captains had been very precise. They were to show the utmost respect when they were boarded. The Queen was showing the utmost restraint and respect and so would they.

He spied the three crows walking in from their quarters in the small village east of Winterfell. Eddard had offered them sanctuary within his walls, but they had refused. They did not speak but in the barest of whispers. He wondered if Jon had accepted some strange religious followers into his ranks.

The news from the Wall had been confusing and hushed for the last year plus. He had been too busy with other matters to travel all the way to the Wall and discover for himself exactly what was happening. He had his son there, and that was enough.

He had still been disturbed by the three Night’s Watchmen. They were withdrawn and solitary. He did not feel any danger from them though, and as always trusted his instincts. In the North they never failed him. He felt put off by their behavior, but was not going to let his pride dictate how he reacted to rudeness. He tried to be a bigger man than that.
With the first shipment fully and carefully packed, Eddard went to the Godswood to sharpen Evening Star. He had been practicing every morning hard with Arya - she would be leaving for the South in the near future and he wanted her to further hone her skills.

He pulled out Evening Star, admiring its milky hue. He started to run his sharpening blade up the edge, reflecting on the women in his life. Cat was experiencing morning sickness, and she loved it. She was constantly telling him she hoped it was another strong son. His wife simply loved being pregnant.

Sansa was besotted with Margaery being back in Winterfell. His eldest daughter was still performing all the duties she had assumed, which filled Eddard’s heart with pride. She had wanted and taken responsibility, and did not shirk the yoke and burden of command and leadership.

Sansa and Margaery ate at the table with them regularly, but always quickly excused themselves. Eddard fully supported them and their love, but he was thankful they did not flaunt their intimate relationship in these trying times. He hoped to change that soon.

All had clapped Eddard on his back admiring his prowess in pulling off such a grand theft. They would probably never know that the Tyrells had been freely given up. He let them believe that a lightening fast raid of shock and awe had let him acquire his hostages.

Loras was fighting with Arya daily, his dexterity and speed were helping Arya improve her skills. And with all the young fighting men currently lodging in Winterfell, Loras was never lacking in … companionship.

He had passed down the hall in front of Sansa’s door late two nights past, and Lady had suddenly jerked her head up and looked at the door with her head cocked.

Eddard smiled softly. He was sure he knew what Lady’s keen hearing had picked up.

Arya was bouncing off the walls, constantly asking when it would be time to head south. She was anxious to serve her father Eddard was sure, but he knew she had her own agenda in mind as well.

Eddard felt another presence in the Godswood, derailing his thoughts, and looked up.

The three strange crows were walking towards him with their cowl pulled forward to hide their features, same as they had since they arrived. Eddard was surprised they had not simply left with their shipment of dragon glass.

The three crows came to stand before him. The tilt of their heads obviously showed that they were looking down at him. The tallest was maybe six foot two inches tall, while the shortest was barely five feet tall. They looked odd with their sized lined up from tallest to shortest.

The tallest spoke, and Eddard was shocked to hear a woman’s voice strong and rich.

“The time of deceits are over, Eddard Stark. That which you have not revealed has been revealed.”

Eddard looked up at them. Yes, definitely this woman was from some religious order, and what in the realm was a woman doing wearing the cloak of a Crow? He still felt no threat. He knew the Godswood would warn him if he was threatened. He put his sword across his knees and waited patiently to hear the conversation out.

The three “Crows” remained in a row, looking at him in their quiet contemplation.

The middle Crow slowly lifted his hands up and pulled his cloak hood back from his face.
Eddard surged up to his feet, his sword clattering to the ground forgotten.

“Oh my gods … Jon?” Eddard asked his son softly.

“Yes father, it is I.” Jon Snow stood before his father with his sliver white hair and violet eyes. “I have done my walk in fire, and come out refined.”

Eddard stared at his son in shock.

“I can understand why you never said anything. I know you were protecting me from your childhood friend Robert Baratheon. You hinted strongly that you were following my dead mother’s wishes.”

“Oh my gods … so you know now … you know who your father is.” It was not a question but a soft acknowledgement of fact.

“Yes. My father was Rhaegar Targaryen. Do I look like my father, father?” Eddard knew his ‘son’ was not trying to hurt him.

“Yes, with the hair and eyes I can see your father in you though the Stark of your mother, Lyanna, is the ascendant. You have inherited the best features of both houses son … or do you want me to stop calling you that?”

“No father. You raised me and loved me, not Rhaegar. You suffered so much from Catelyn to hide me.”

“It was worth every moment of it, son. But why are you revealing yourself to me now?”

“Ygritte and Melisandre told me it was time. Father, I would like you to meet my two wives.”

Eddard’s face revealed his shock as the tallest and shortest Crows pulled their cowls back to reveal two redheads. The tall one was a perfection of beauty with deep red hair, while the short woman had a charm to her freckled face and bright, coppery red hair.

“These women are Shadowbenders from the land of Asshai, and are both are over two thousand years old.”

Eddard stepped back. Suddenly, he could hear the Godswood murmuring and calling to him to accept these women and trust them.

Eddard stepped forward and embraced both women with a gentle, chaste hug. “I am honored to have you both as part of my family.” The small woman beamed and the tall one was awkward in his embrace.

“This is quite a shock Jon, but your sisters have helped me to accept my children as they are and not as I may have planned for them to turn out.”

Jon was curious and asked his father what he meant.

Eddard then told his son about Sansa and her lover Margaery Tyrell and how he was sending Arya South to the Queen. Bran has prophesized that the Queen would fall in love with her.

Jon was stunned at his turn of events, but his wives looked at each other knowingly. Eddard now knew these women were also lovers of each other’s bodies.

This led to Eddard explaining how Bran had been transformed into a seer. Where that would lead…
Eddard had no idea.

“What do we do now Jon? I am honored that you have shown me your wives. Can you tell me how this transformation occurred?”

“What news have you heard from the wall?”

“Strange. The news has been rudimentary at best. You did not tell me of anything amiss.”

“The Night’s Watch tried to assassinate me and my wives saved me, though they were not my wives then. This was getting close to two years ago now. I escaped, and after I came into my full powers I returned and took my command back.”

Jon told his father of his walk in fire and how it transformed him.

“I am no longer a Crow in spirit, but I will fulfill my duty to the realm. I will do my part in the defeat of the Ice King. After that I will resign my post and leave… though for where I do not know.”

“But your sacred oath?”

“That ended with my attempted assassination. I am following my own path now, for now it twines with my duties as Lord Commander.”

Eddard felt his anger rising at the Crows for trying to kill his son. “What of the traitors? Has justice been rendered?”

“Melisandre and Ygritte killed most of the traitors when they rescued me. I killed the few remaining traitors that deserved it when I returned three months later to reclaim my post.”

Jon looked at his wives.

“It is time for us to leave, father. We all have our duties to fulfill. We will meet again.”

Jon and his wives pulled their cowls back over their faces. They bowed to Eddard and then turned and silently walked out of the Godswood.

Eddard was having to adjust his thoughts again and again for his children. He was happy to have such fine children, but they sure were putting his head in a spin.

Jaime

Jaime was sitting at the kitchen table trying to put the rocker leg back on the ‘horsey’ that Breanna had broken again. She was always playing too hard on the little horse, crying out “Queenie Queenie of Weesee!”

He smiled at the thought of his daughter’s antics. She was so full of life; always underneath his or his wife’s feet. The little towhead was always anxious to be involved with whatever was happening.

His son had hair several shades darker, and coloring more like his own. He was constantly trying to keep up with his twin sister – the little boy worshiped the ground she walked on. He wondered what he would do if he ever discovered his children doing what he and Cersei did. He shook his head, and stopped trying to put the rail back into its slot. He would cross that road if it ever came up.

He recalled the good days with Cersei. Those had ended when he took the white cloak of the King’s Guard. He resumed working on the wooden rail.

He squinted his eyes when the wood of the tongue finally fit into the groove. His newly made dowels were punched in with a small mallet, and the former Lannister, now of Tarth, sat the play horse back down and pushed it so it rocked forward and back. In his mind he had ceased being a Lannister. He was so much more now. He listened to the wood creak and smiled. He was finding true fatherhood to be very trying and tiring - but he wouldn’t change it for anything.

He thought back to his first set of children. They were really strangers to him in most ways. He had been so in love with his sister that he willingly gave up being their father to be with Cersei as her lover. He shook his head sadly. He had missed so much, but he had been so selfish he did not even realize what he had been sacrificing. All the memories he was forming now, he had never had with his first children. He had only worried really about his anger at Robert fucking his sister, and nothing else.

By the seven gods he had been so self-centered.

Breanna came bursting into the small house that he and his wife shared. It was a simple house, reflective of the simple life that he and Brienne lived. She ran to her father and jumped on him in the chair, hugging him tight and murmuring into his neck. Jaime affectionately patted his daughter’s back.

“I’m hungry!” she announced.

“Well of course you are. Helping mommy takes a lot of work!” Jaime told his daughter.

She beamed and turned around when Brienne came in the door. On one hip was a basket full of clothes from the drying line, and on the other hip was Breanna’s brother Brandon. The little boy was snuggling close to his tall, broad shouldered mother, half asleep.

“I think my little boy is tuckered out, wife. What were you all doing out there?” Jaime asked, getting up and taking his sleepy son from his wife to relieve her of her double burden.

Brienne gave him an affectionate smile. She watched their son snuggle his face into Jaime’s throat, and drift off completely.

Brienne set the clothes on the table and went to the counter to make a sandwich for their daughter. Jaime bent down and picked Breanna up, placing her on the counter so she could watch her mother.

“They were chasing each other and hiding behind the sheets, playing peek-a-boo. You know your daughter; she has a motor that never stops and she wore Brandon out.”

Jaime laughed and ruffled Breanna’s hair as she beamed up at him. “I’m happy she got your eyes, Brienne.” He told his wife.

“Fortunately that is all she got from me!” Brienne chuckled.

Jaime moved in quick and pressed himself into his wife. He still smirked at how he had to rise up on his toes to get his mouth to her ear. He put his mouth to her ear, then whispered: “she got the caste of your face and your beautiful ears … ears that I’m going to lick and nibble on when I fuck you as soon as the children go to take their nap, Brienne.”

Brienne paused in her motions, the knife stopping halfway through an apple she was carving up for their daughter. “Gods Jaime—the things you do to me!” she gasped, gripping the counter top.

“Oh believe me my wife—I will, I will…” Jaime licked her ear and blew warmly into it, enjoying how Brienne’s powerful, muscular body shuddered hard in lust for him. Lust that was based on pure, true love for Jaime Lannister, the person. He had long ago discovered just how intoxicating that was.

“Say it, say it Jaime,” Brienne whimpered. Their daughter had taken a few slices of apple and happily munched on the slices, unaware of what was happening beside her in her childish innocence.

“I’m going to fuck you so hard you fucking cow … I’m going stab you with my hard cock all the way to the hilt and fuck you so good. I’m going to love your perfect breasts with my hands and mouth, squeezing and licking as I ram fuck you and suck on those long, thick nipples of yours. I will fuck you like a fucking heifer … you like me saying that, don’t you Brienne?” Jaime murmured, starting to suck on Brienne’s earlobe.

“Ohhhh gods yes!” the tall, powerful woman whimpered at what had become pet names that made her weak. Names that had been at first spiteful, but over time become sweet endearments when spoken only by her Jaime. Brienne’s knees slammed into the cabinets as her knuckles went white holding onto the edge of the counter top.

“Mommy I want my sandwich!” Breanna reminded her mother helpfully.

Jaime backed off, chuckling. Brienne had to convince him many times after they become lovers that she loved him using his past insults as affectionate dirty talk. He had resisted at first, but come to understand that Brienne enjoyed it and he could not deny his wife anything.

He smirked again. Oh the sacrifices he made.

Jaime went and put Brandon down, then sat on the edge of the bed and looked at his two year old son sleeping, so innocent and beautiful. He would be three soon.

He was so thankful for a second chance.

He went back into the kitchen and joined his daughter and wife, eating a hearty lunch. He enjoyed peanut butter and jelly sandwiches with them. Brienne had set out cheese, and some finely chopped roast as well. Jaime smiled, watching his daughter wolf down her food and his wife staring at him with fire in her eyes.

She had indeed been a maiden fair when he bedded her, but now she was a wild, insatiable banshee in bed. She kept several towels on the bedside table to stuff in her mouth when she would cum, screaming wildly, her powerful body flipping and bucking out of control.

Jaime had thought that Cersei came hard, but Brienne was like a volcano erupting. He smiled remembering how his first thought bedding her had been: ‘My gods this woman has a body like a carpenter’s dream - ‘straight as a board and never been nailed.’ He nailed his wife hard that night as she so willingly offered Jamie her body to her lover.

He popped an apple slice into his mouth. She had become beautiful in every way to him. He liked her small breasts; really, anything more than a mouthful was a waste anyways. Cersei’s breasts had not been that much larger either. Brienne certainly can not complain about not being nailed anymore, he smirked proudly remembering how her back arched so high, lifting him off the bed with his cock buried in her cunt as they both cummed the night before.

Once their meal was over, Jaime knew he had to wear out Breanna. He took her outside and started to chop wood. He took the split logs and set aside smaller wedges that would be easy for Breanna to pick up and run into the house to give Brienne to stack beside the stove.

Breanna loved to help her father do his chores. She would run back and forth saying “I’m helping you daddy … do you see that?”

“I couldn’t do it without you, princess” he would answer back.

After twenty minutes of helping, she was lagging and getting sleepy.

He picked up his drowsy daughter and took her into the other bed in the children’s room and read her a story as she went to sleep with a big smile on her face. He ruffled her hair and kissed her temple, and then the temple of his still sleeping son.
He paused at the doorway to look at his angels, while thanking the gods they were deep sleepers.

He found Brienne sitting on the bench chair beside the house staring out at the ocean in the distance seen from the height of their home in the mountain glade. Jaime sat down beside her and looped his arm around her shoulders, pulling her hard, muscular body to his.

“I don’t want you to go, Jaime.”

“You know I must.”

“No, I don’t. She has not summoned you! Maybe she wants to let the past be the past!”

“I can’t live never knowing when I will get the raven, or when we will see her coming toward us with her dragon.”

“She has shown only compassion and restraint since she arrived,” Brienne said sullenly.

Jaime bent in and sucked on her earlobe.

“Hhhhhnggg ohhh… no fair you fucking bastard—augggggg … oh, oh Jaime please take me to bed and fuck me with your dick… give it to me hard!” Brienne almost breathlessly told her husband.

“Are you wet for me, fair maiden of Tarth? Are you wet for your Lion of Lannister?”

Brienne took his hand and snaked it underneath her trousers and onto her sopping wet pussy.

Jaime moaned and pulled his wife’s mouth to his and they kissed heatedly, then Jaime picked up his wife and carried her to their large bed.

Over an hour later and in different clothes they came back out to sit on the bench, hand in hand. Brienne lifted their entwined hands and kissed her husband’s knuckles and then sighed, leaning into him, her short hair plastered to her still sweaty forehead and body wet with the sweat of their heated fucking.

“I love you, Jaime Lannister.”

“And I love you Brienne of Tarth, with all my heart and all my soul. Thank the gods you came into my empty life.”

Brienne

Brienne leaned against her husband. Jaime did not care that she was five inches taller than him and her build more solid, making him seem small when she snuggled into him. She knew most men would feel uncomfortable with her sheer imposing physical presence, but Jaime was just that confident and she loved him for it.

She remembered it had not always been so.

She had come to the royal court following after Renly. He had been kind to her when he had come to Tarth on his coming of age tour, and she fell girlishly in love with him. She had hopes of him falling for her too after seeing her prowess with the sword along with her unfailing allegiance and loyalty to him.

Alas, it was not to be. He treated her as a good squire at best. For the longest time Brienne tried to live with that. She still had her virtue (not that anyone was trying to take it), and she was coming to the point in her life where she was sure she would die a maid. She couldn’t really blame the men around her. She knew from an early age that she did not have the beauty and grace that most men craved in a woman.

She had definitely not been blessed by the gods with beauty. From a child she was bigger and more ungainly than her peers of an age; always very tall and muscular. Her size and build also gave her ‘unnatural’ strength for a woman.

That might not have been so bad if she had not been cursed with a flat-chest and ungainly gait which had the boys telling her she reminded them of an ox pulling a cart. The girls snickered at her straw-colored hair and broad, coarse features that were covered in freckles. Her teeth were prominent and crooked, and her mouth was wide with lips too large, and her nose has been broken from her stumbling and falling as she grew into her body as a young girl.

Yes the gods were most unkind to me, Brienne of Tarth reflected.

She had been ridiculed and given short shrift since she could remember. It kindled a rage she kept deep inside. She wanted to fight back, but she was too unsure of herself. She was naturally shy and the constant ridicule only added to her insecurity and she was sullen and unsure of herself when she arrived in King’s Landing.

Men laughed in her face and constantly considered her inferior to them in physical prowess even when she was their clear superior. The women were worse in many ways, they contented themselves with stage whispers comparing her looks to that of a sow or heifer.

She refused to cry, and eternally tamped down her rage.

Then there was Jaime Lannister the Lord Commander of the Kingsguard. His japes were just one in a long litany of insults.

Actually no, they hadn’t been. He used all the same insults as the others, plus new ones like troglodyte, gargoyle, beast of burden, withered tit on a harpy, and on and on. As well as his use of adjectives and adverbs to add spice and nuance to his insults made Brienne’s anger boil.

After six months of the abuse she noticed two things that ameliorated her anger, if only slightly. The first was that Jaime seemed to hold everyone in low regard, not just her. The second was that he seemed bitter at the world for some reason. She could never understand that. He had been blessed with the beauty of the gods.

She tried to get back at Jaime. She commented on his pretty looks and how the young noble sons must love him. He would glare at her and asked her exactly what she meant. How would he exactly pleasure them with his thick, long cock?

Brienne had gotten so tongue-tied and red in the face that she decided that line of attack had little to no merit. The realm of sexual innuendo was a dangerous trap for her wander into, she was ill-prepared for it.

The insult that finally hit home was the one that was sneered at Jaime by one and all. Kingslayer. Jaime always kept his face bland and acted as if the word meant nothing to him, but as one who nursed hidden wounds she recognized all the same that it did indeed strike true.

She used it repeatedly, and at every opportunity questioned his honor.

The other thing Brienne had picked up on was the tension between Jaime and his sister, Cersei. The whispers of them being lovers was a subtle background chorus like cicada songs at the beginning of summer, their cries distant and plaintive and lonely as the few waited for their brothers and sisters to crawl from the Earth to join them.

Brienne knew repressed sexual tension well, and they were displaying it. The smiles they gave each other were sickening sweet and full of restrained anger.

There was one day in particular that was bad for Jaime. Brienne, for the first time, mentioned Cersei and ‘trouble in paradise’. She alluded to him that maybe Cersei was tired of her brother, the Kingslayer.

“On the practice field you fucking bloviated cow! I will break that big honking nose again O Brienne of Tarth with the beauty that only a bull could love!” He’d snapped in retaliation.

It was on.

They both stormed to the practice yard in the late afternoon sun and hurled themselves at each other with their practice swords.

The sound of colliding wood was loud in the yard, and faces contorted with effort and barely contained rage. Back and forth they fought. Brienne felt elation at seeing Jaime’s eyes flare in shock at her strength and speed. Brienne was on the offensive, and continually pushed Jaime back.

To his credit, in the end he was able to fight her to a draw. That had been a first for Brienne, but she did not show it.

After that bout he sought out Brienne for his sword practice. She at first had tried to refuse his demands, but soon gave up and fought just to placate him. He would literally throw himself at her, hurling insults almost as fast as his sword work.

After about three weeks of this he came to her quarters after the evening meal. He railed at her, asking her why she was holding back.

Brienne did not know what he was talking about, and told him so. He yelled at her, claiming that she was holding herself back and needed to let go. She was holding her own with him and hadn’t understood his constant attacks on her sword prowess.

Then she discovered why he had been insulting her even though she was his equal with the sword. He was secretly pleased that she was his equal. She had only lost to him twice and each time had immediately demanded another round and again fought to a draw.

It was five weeks after the last time Jaime had disarmed her and slashed her ribs. She was on her moon cycle and Jaime had somehow picked up on it, and started boring into her with insults on her being in her period. He derided her for being a woman and not a man, since he never had to worry about a period. He had coupled that with her being an ungodly mix of a heifer and fat ugly bull.

Brienne snapped and screamed at Jaime after that, charging him like the bull he accused her of being. Her rush knocked him off balance and her sword slashed down again and again in a blur of savage action, knocking Jaime’s blocking blade down more and more until it was almost cutting into his face. Then she made a loop swipe and threw his sword off to the left, jamming the tip of her blade into his throat and snarling savagely.

She had won but she felt like enraged animal. She had let Jamie break her and make her like a wild animal. She looked down at Jamie who stared up at her with a look she could not define.

She had broken down sobbing and ran back to her room and buried her face in her pillow, soaking it in her tears.
Two hours later there was a soft knock on her door, and Jaime gently asked to come in.

She tried to ignore him, but he kept rapping at her door asking her to open it. She finally got up and let him in, just so he would leave her alone.

She sat on the bed, her face even more hideous than normal from her childish crying as she swiped her face angrily at her tears.

“I guess you like seeing me like this. Even uglier than normal,” Brienne snarled at him, then bent her head in shame and started to cry softly again.

He sat beside her on the bed and slowly started to run his fingers through her hair. He told Brienne he did not mean anything by what he was saying. He had just been trying to get her angry enough to truly fight him.

“You’re a better swordsman than me, Brienne. I have known it almost from the start and have been trying to get you to stop holding back.” He paused and sighed. “The way I see it, only Barristan Selmy and Eddard Stark are your betters.”

“Stop trying to humor me, Jaime.”

“That’s the thing Brienne … I’m not. You’re just that good.” He finished softly.

She looked up at him intently then.

“You know … well Brienne, ahem, you do have the loveliest blue eyes … and your eyebrows, the way they arch in the middle, and the way you get those creases beside your mouth when you almost smile …”

Oh gods! Brienne exclaimed to herself as Jaime started to lean in, he’s going to kiss me!

Suddenly, the bed rose up as Jaime hurried out of the room.

Oh course he wasn’t going to kiss you, you stupid cow! Brienne berated herself, throwing herself down on the bed and sobbing again, soaking her pillow anew with her tears.

Jaime had avoided her after that. Brienne tried to see him but he was always busy, keeping the door locked to his suite and ignoring her entreaties.

She decided that she didn’t need Jaime. She would do what she should have so long ago and confess her love to Renly. He had to honor her dedication to his service, at least.

She marched to his suite and was surprised to see Jaime already there.

“You don’t want to go in there, Brienne.”

“Don’t tell me what I can and cannot do, Lannister!”

“Brienne … sometimes it is better to keep a dream alive than live with the truth.” He had told her softly.

She had shoved him aside and barged in anyways. She came running back out less than half a minute later, sobbing again.

The next day Brienne was packing up her gear to go back to Tarth. She was defeated.
That is, until Jaime was in her room storming at her about giving up and being a gutless coward.

They had fought like a Lion and Bear at that. They wrestled, throwing each other across the room and trying to punch and kick but blocking most of the blows in the limited space.

Then they were in her bed making passionate love throughout the day and long into the night.

Suddenly, there was sunshine, hope and love in her life. Never again did she have the need to cry her tears into her pillow. Jaime Lannister was hers and hers alone.

Jaime

Jaime yawned in the sunshine, enjoying it along with his wife’s warmth snuggled into his side.

“Jaime, do you remember the first time we made love … how good it was?” Brienne asked him.

Jaime snorted. “As if could forget, Brienne!” he responded with soft humor and love. “You may have been a lamb in the beginning, but I definitely remember a certain shy woman turning into a ravenous lioness who took what she wanted quickly enough.”

Brienne elbowed Jaime’s side. “Jaime, you corrupted me. I was like a baited bear staked in a pit. You released me, freed me. The only thing I could do in return was give you my hot, dripping wet pussy.” Her voice lowered, “you know I’m going to fuck you several times tonight Jaime … I need to feel your cock pounding me from behind … shooting your semen deep into my belly…” she left the thought dangle. Let it heat Jaime’s loins with hot desire for his sweet beautiful Brienne.

Jaime squeezed his wife possessively. She was insatiable. He was happy she no longer thought she had to compete against Cersei and her ghost. She was a confident, sexy, beautiful woman and she was all his. His and no one else’s!

They lay against each other and the cottage wall soaking in the sun.

He let his thoughts wandered as they sometimes did in this peaceful place that great sex with Brienne put him in.

He wondered about … what was that word? Yes, serendipity.

If Brienne had appeared too early, he would not have been ready to take what she so innocently offered. If she had appeared later … well he did not want to contemplate that eventuality.

He had been ready for a change when she appeared in his life.

He could not be exactly sure when his discomfort with himself began. He thought it most likely started on one of his walks through the poorer districts of King’s Landing. He could not remember why, but he had started to notice the plight of the poor and how nothing changed.

Robert had his drunken tourneys and his scrumptious banquets and wore new tailored silks almost every day that cost more than the people of his capital would make in their lifetimes.

He had tried to talk to Cersei about this, the inequity, unfairness, and impropriety of how the royals lived while doing nothing for the poor. Cersei had laughed at him for his insights. She told him to forget the poor; their duty in life was to bend the knee to put her and Jaime where they belonged, in greatness and opulence as was their birthright.

He felt unsatisfied with Cersei’s views. It began to burden him how the rich and powerful simply did not see how their subjects toiled.

Then he noticed something else on his walks. While many were worn down, just as many were not. They worked hard, but with a smile – these folk had a life that contained happiness and love. He noticed fathers with their children out in the streets and in the doorways of their homes and workplaces - fathers enjoying the natural affection of their children.

One family in particular really touched him. It was a father with golden hair like his own, with three children he would play with in front of his tannery - two sons and a daughter. They were younger than his, but roughly had the same age difference between them as his own children.

He would walk slowly past that place of business, watching the children calling to their father with obvious love, and his patient responses to their inquiries. He felt a jealous stab when he watched the man throwing his children up in the air and catching them as they laughed and squealed.

He tried to talk to Cersei about his stirrings of regret with not actually being able to be a father to his children. Maybe if he had been a true father Joffrey would not be the burgeoning monster he was becoming. Cersei had hissed at him that he had to accept what she could give him. It was not her fault that their father had married her to Robert Baratheon - she didn’t have a damn choice! She made the best of her situation, and so must he. To do otherwise would be treason, and mean certain death.

She could not see his viewpoint at all.

She got angry and defensive each time he tried to get her to understand that an emptiness was growing inside him. That he needed something more than her part-time love and looking at his children as if they were strangers that he could never touch or acknowledge as his own.

It seemed to be beyond Cersei’s ability to comprehend.

Then, with his spirit already unsettled, Jaime was forced to feel betrayal and the sting of infidelity.

He had long learned to explain away his wife lying with that fat oaf of a king Robert. It galled him each time she slept with the lout, but he took it. He was of the Kingsguard, after all - it was his duty. His father was always about duty, wasn’t he? He was coming to hate duty.

He found out by accident that his wife had been sleeping with their cousin Lancel. Lancel had discovered Cersei and Jaime’s affair several years prior. He had been easily shut up with a little intimidation and some extra gold dragons to spend. All had been well, or so Jaime thought. But as he came to find out, Lancel seemed to have found religion somewhere along the way. He had come to Cersei telling her she must repent and forgo Jaime. That she must confess her sins to the high priest – which he would stand as her advocate and protector.

The naïve ass.

Cersei said she had to seduce him to get the boy to see reason. She had smirked at her inventiveness in addicting the boy to her pussy. She had found it all amusing.

Jaime had been enraged and wanted to kill Lancel. Cersei had just laughed at him. What would that accomplish, except getting his head cut off? But she had not told him the full truth even then. Meryn Trant had discovered Cersei and Lancel by happenstance, and he had threatened to expose both her infidelity and incestuous proclivities.

Of course his dear sister had instantly opened her legs wide to keep the ‘knight’ quiet. He had come to hate the look of the man. He was trapped. To do anything would have resulted in his death and that of his sweet sister. He contemplated that for a while, but then the thought of Myrcella and Tommen would enter his mind.

Joffrey was a lost shit, but those two weren’t. He swallowed his bile while his sister swallowed those men’s semen. He felt a little part of himself dying every day.

That was until a certain woman from Tarth had come into his life. Slowly she had brought Jaime back to life. Not only did she save his life, she changed him like a butterfly emerging from its chrysalis, into a new and hopefully improved person. Her love healed him. He grew to detest his old life and finally found the courage to make a full change. To take the second chance the gods he did not believe in had given him.

He remembered that night as he lay with his wife in their new cottage, her having just told him that she was pregnant. He had been so stunned, and filled with love and gratitude. He would be given a second chance. Gods he would not throw this one away. He would take this precious gift and cherish it.

As they had lain contentedly, Brienne had softly asked him about the day that Eddard Stark had found him on the throne after killing the Mad King. She had softly prodded and cajoled until he had finally told her the whole story.

He smiled at her righteous anger for him. She had wanted to jump into the ocean and swim to the mainland, then ride to King’s Landing and then Winterfell to tell them all they needed to get on their knees and kiss Jaime’s feet. He was hero!

He had kissed her and told her that Eddard Stark would never have accepted his explanation.

Brienne had calmed down and said something that had stuck with him ever since. “You never gave him a chance to be noble, Jaime. From all I hear of this man, I think he would have surprised you. He is honor bound and stiff, yes, but he seems to be pragmatic and just. You should have given him the chance to be great and accept the truth of the situation.”

He still wondered if she had been right.

“I’m going to King’s Landing Brienne, to face the Queen.” He told his wife, softly kissing her temple.

“Why Jaime…? She had not called for you. Stay here. She has chosen to let the past be the past. You have a family now, Jaime.”

“Yes I do. That is the reason I must go. Maybe she has just been too busy to come for me yet. Maybe she thinks she will let me live, and tomorrow she will decide differently. I will not live with this uncertainty. I will not have her dragon winging across the sea to attack with her need for vengeance.”

“I killed her father. There must be restitution. I will go before her and accept her judgment.”

Brienne sighed, and Jaime hoped she could understand his reasoning. He wanted to completely break from his previous life. He wanted their new life together to be totally free of any past entanglements.

“We will be coming with you.” She told her husband.

“No! I forbid it! I will suffer her judgment alone. The sin is mine and the punishment will be mine. You and the children will be safe here. She has shown herself to only punish the guilty.”
“The children and I will be coming with you, Jaime. Your fate is our fate.”

Jaime started to argue. Brienne pushed herself with cat-like reflexes and put her finger on his lips.
“Sssshhh, Jaime. You know I will knock sense in your head with my practice sword if I must. We will come with you. The Queen says this is a time of forgiveness of past wrongs and sins. That we are living in a time of Reclamation. Let’s put her words to the test.”

Tyrion

Tyrion was standing on the bench below the window looking out over the water with a smile on his face. Jaime was finally returning from his self-exile in Tarth. His family was dysfunctional he knew, but Jaime had always treated him well. He loved his big brother, and couldn’t help but feel excited.

If it had not been for Jaime, he wondered if he could have survived Cersei and her hatred of him. Thinking of those years, his face twisted sourly again. She had moved on the next phase of her training. When he read of it he had gleefully bet large she would fail. Everything about it spelled disaster for her.

He was much poorer after that bet. He had no idea what the hell had gotten into his sister! She could now stand in the broiling sun for an hour, holding her arms out while gripping pails of heavy sand. It should have been impossible! He was growing more afraid of his distant sister by the day. He needed Jaime. For protection!

He turned and went back to his desk. He sat down and looked over a report from Dragonstone. With the news from Varys’ new sparrows in the North it had quickly become known that Eddard Stark was hoarding obsidian and having it shaped into arrowheads, spear tips, and daggers.

He had read that to Dany in their nightly Klatch of Confidantes. Any news of the North was first vetted among themselves before being presented to the small council.

By now, all had figured out why Eddard was doing this. Maester Lape had confirmed their deductions. Eddard believed he needed it to fight the forces of the Ice King beyond the Wall. He was preparing as he believed the Ice Wight had a massive army. But that was impossible, after eight thousand years. Maybe some form of dead were shambling around, but not some force that could breach the Wall. It was seven hundred feet tall and thirty feet thick. It was even said that magic was woven in its walls, but Tyrion doubted that much too.

Dany had asked her Klatch mates what they thought. Of course Missandei and Syrio advised that they move on this information aggressively. He and Barristan though, having doubts, saw no reason to not pursue this. It would really cause little harm, and give employment to many artisans that could use the work. Dany had decisively made the decision to not only make piercing implements of warrior but to produce them in prodigious quantities. Tyrion saw again that when the Queen made a decision she committed to it totally. She had total confidence in her deductions.

Stannis had groused at being ordered to start mining and shaping weapons from the ‘useless, brittle stone’. Dany had sent a large shipment of gold to Stannis along with quarrymen from King’s Landing and Essos’ Free Cities, and they had already arrived at Dragonstone to start crafting the weapons. More were heading to Dragonstone. In fact the numbers of artisans coming to fashion weapons were so great that his Queen had created some villages for the craftsmen on Driftmark. She had a small fleet of cogs moving material between the two islands.

Spear, javelins and arrow heads production was ramping up. Daenerys had galleons moving the produced to the mainland at Duskendale and Kings Landing. The weapons packed in walnut shells and put on wagons heading to King’s Landing from Duskendale. When they arrived at King’s Landing the product was being prepared to form up in wagon trains to head up the King’s Highway to the North.

Tyrion thought the dragon glass would never be used but the Queen deemed otherwise. He had to agree with her assessment. If she was wrong then it was wasted effort that had employed many artisans adding to the economy. If Tyrion was wrong they would be dead.

He wanted to go on living and agreed the effort was worth it.

Tyrion moved on to reports of the Houses. Mace had sent another raven wailing about the abduction of his grandchildren. Tyrion again wondered why Eddard was making his life so difficult.

His frustration was interrupted by a knock on the door. “Can I come in, cuz?” was the quiet entreaty.

“Yes!” Tyrion leaped out of his seat and waddled himself over to the door, pushing it open hard.

Two small, beautiful children came bounding into the room and into his small body. Little arms lopped around him. “Unkie Tyr, Unkie Tyr!” he heard squealed by the little girl and boy. They hugged and jostled his body as they laughed. Tyrion looked down at the little hurricanes wrapped around his upper legs and waist.

Then he looked up at his smiling brother. He was disturbed because he saw sadness in the grin. He should have known that the Queen would spare him. She spared everyone. Then he spied the huge woman behind his brother. He looked at her and smiled. She was definitely no beauty, but all the reports and sparrow chips made it clear that she was so very good for Jaime.

“Brienne of Tarth,” Tyrion nodded his head and looked down. “This must be my niece Breanna, and my nephew Brandon.”

The children broke their little bear hugs and Breanna looked up at him seriously. “You’re short.” She proclaimed.

Tyrion ruffled the little girl’s hair “Yes I am Breanna … I forgot to grow up.”

Her eyes went large “You can do that?!”

“Just look at me.”

“Wow!” Breanna looked over at her mother for confirmation.

“Your uncle is a very special man, Breanna.”

They spent the next thirty minutes getting to know each other.

When the twins started to show signs of wearing out, Brienne took them to Tyrion’s bed and pulled a book from the rucksack on her back and started to read to them while Jaime and Tyrion sat at his small table in the corner of the room.

Tyrion asked Jaime for his opinion on the events going on in the North. He told Jaime all he knew, and his thoughts on the matter.

Jaime mulled it all over for a minute. “Tyrion. Brienne and I are the muscle that people like you use to achieve what you deem the proper course of action. I can only tell you what we were raised to believe. The Wall defends the realm against nothing but myths and legends. But then again, Eddard is a smart man. He believes in what he is doing. Should we not as well? I truly don’t know, Tyrion.”

The smaller brother looked up at him. “Are you worried about your meeting with the Queen tonight?”

“Yes I am, little brother. I killed her father.”

“He was mad, Jaime. Everyone knows it.”

“Just the same.”

Tyrion saw Jaime’s wife glaring at him, and wondered why. What was Jaime not telling him? Whatever it was, Jaime was not ready to speak of it. “I can only hope the Queen shows forbearance,” the taller lion said.

“She will, Jaime. She has not shared with me her thoughts, but she spared Robert and Cersei. She has much less reason to have held ill against you, brother. I will trust in her and her willingness to forgive.”

They set the matter aside, and laughed over shared good memories.

“What is Cersei doing in Dorne, Tyrion?”

He saw his brother look quickly at Brienne, but she was smiling enigmatically back at them.

“I have no fear of Cersei Lannister, brother-in-law. Please tell us.” Brienne spoke softly looking at Jaime with nothing but pure love before turning her attention back to her drowsy but still playing children, keeping their focus so the brothers could converse.

Jaime listened as Tyrion told him of her martial training, getting into fights and winning them. It seemed she was single-minded in her determination to succeed.

“She has cost me a fucking fortune Jaime. I don’t know how she is doing it.”

Tyrion watched Jaime mull over this news of the sister they no longer really knew.

“She always said she could be a great warrior if she had been permitted. She always said she should have been born a man.” Jaime paused, staring off into space. “Maybe she was right.”

A twinkle came into his eyes then. “Little brother, she could tear you limb from limb now, you know. I’m sure she still hates you.”

Tyrion’s body shivered in fright. His face went red when Jaime and Brienne laughed at his discomfiture.

Jaime asked of his firstborn children. He shook his head sadly at news of Joffrey and his cowardice. He smiled at Tommen and his training for service to the realm. He was first shocked, and then laughed at Myrcella’s Pride of Dorne. He was happy she had found happiness with three wives. All Jamie could do was shake his head at her prowess.

Tyrion then told Jaime and his wife that Obara had made it known that Cersei was to be her wife.

Jaime had laughed hard at that. He joked that Cersei would rather sow her cunt shut before she let a woman go down on her. She was straight as the proverbial arrow.
And then it was time to leave.

Jaime gathered up his family. He paused at the door lintel as they waited in the hall.

“You’re the Hand now, Tyrion. You have vast resources at your disposal.”

Tyrion wondered where this line of thought was going. “Yes I do. What are you getting at, brother?”

“You could try to find her. It has been many years but she is out there, somewhere. Go and find her, Tyrion.”

“It is way too late for that, Jaime. Some things should be left in the past. Thank you though, for thinking of her.”

He saw his brother hesitate. Jaime seemed like he was debating on saying something more, but shook it off and took his leave.

He went back to his window and looked out with melancholy.

It really was too late for that. He could only hope that Tysha had forgiven him. He did not think that she would, though. He still had nightmares of that day.

Daenerys

Daenerys Targaryen looked in the mirror. She had put on a flattering gown of diaphanous sheer material that was low cut to show her cleavage. It showed off her tight little body. She wanted this man to see her as the beautiful woman she was - she found it put men off their guard, and she could use that to her advantage.

Her fifty-seven silver bells were weaved into her hair, highlighting her long silver tresses.

Aggo knocked on her door.

“Come in.”

The door opened and in stepped Jaime Lannister. He was indeed as beautiful as the reports said. His long blond hair and green eyes were enticing, if she were straight. Cersei was more attractive, but she was an undeniable bitch.

He stood there a moment, and then a very tall woman came in with a child on each hip. She glared at the Queen.

Jaime made a what can I do? motion with his hands.

Daenerys narrowed her eyes. She now knew who wore the trousers in that relationship. Brienne had turned the tables on her. She had brought her children to show the Queen that Jaime had a family and she needed to take that into account with any decision.

Daenerys adjusted her thoughts and strategy. Not that it needed much adjusting.

The children came running over to her when their mother put them down.

The little girl looked up at her strangely. “You’re short!”

Brienne looked mortified, and Jaime chuckled. Brienne stepped in, feeling the need to do damage control, but Daenerys was not offended. She was short! She showed her amusement to Brienne with her eyes.

Daenerys bent to one knee and looked Breanna in the eye. “You are most perceptive Breanna of Tarth. Can I trust you to keep this a secret? It is a realm secret. My safety relies on you keeping this a secret. Can you do that for me Breanna?”

The child nodded solemnly with large eyes.

“You can trust me my Queenie!” the child exclaimed.

“Good. I will rely on that promise Ser knight!”

The little girl puffed her chest out in importance.

Daenerys looked up again. She looked at Brienne closely. Brienne was no beauty, but the way Jaime Lannister looked at his wife made Dany smile on the inside. Brienne clearly had this man wrapped around her little finger. She liked that.

For an hour they sat at her table and spoke, getting to know each other. The children played as they chatted, running around the Queen’s quarters. Brienne went to stop them but Daenerys held up her hand. “Let them play. I only wish my daughter was still alive to put life into this room.”

She saw the husband and wife share a sad look.

Finally, Daenerys decided she needed to know the truth. Jamie needed to lance the boil that was clearly working on him. Daenerys had been willing to leave that incident in the past but Jaime coming to King’s Landing brought the death of her mad father to the forefront.

“Why did you kill my father, Jaime Lannister? You forsook your sacred trust and committed a great sin and crime against the throne and the gods. Will you try and kill me in the future as well?”

“That is unfair!” Brienne roared, her blue eyes flaring with fire and challenge. Her children looked up at her startled. All three adults saw this and made sure to act calmly to not upset the children.

“No it is not, Brienne.” Jaime said. “That is totally a fair question.”

Daenerys waited.

“I’m a Kingslayer. I betrayed my duty, as you said. He may have been mad but I was sworn to defend him. I killed him instead. I have no honor. I will accept your judgment.”

“So you would deserve my judgment. Even if I said a life for a life?”

“Yes, my Queen.”

“Jaime!” Brienne screamed at her husband. The supposed calm had been shattered. Daenerys saw the children suddenly stop playing on the bed with the pillows they had pulled off, their eyes large with fear and doubt. Brienne scooped up her children and hugged them cooing to them calming their rattled nerves. They looked at the Queen with big eyes. Their little minds unsure of what was occurring between the small white haired woman with bells in her hair and their father.

“I see. Jaime, how many people have you killed?”

Jaime and Brienne looked at her with narrowed eyes, wondering where she was going with her question.
“I am not sure, maybe ten or fifteen during Robert’s Rebellion. It has been quiet since then.”

“Were those killings just?”

“Excepting your father, yes, Daenerys.”

“Ten or fifteen lives … I have killed my enemies by the thousands, Jaime Lannister. That is by my own hand.” She saw the husband and wife’s eyes grow large. “I’ve chopped my enemies down like wheat in the field with my scythe. So my killing has dwarfed yours, would you not agree?”

Jaime looked at her hard. “Yes.”

“But I am Queen. I have executed with my hand over four hundred and fifty men and women. Have you executed anyone beside my father? Did you look him in the eye when you ended his life?”

“No.”

“I have. When I took Meereen I was a ghoul covered in their sewage. I am not sure who I killed there that night. I was in a frenzy. I think … I think I may have killed a few children in my battle madness…

“I ordered many noble families into a pyramid in Yunkai and burned it to the ground. I can still see the men, women, children and babes dying as fire ate their flesh from their bones. Many jumping hundreds of feet to their death. I can still hear their bodies hitting the stone roads.”

She felt hot tears starting to form.

“I was not strong enough to save my own daughter who died right before my eyes.”

Jamie and Brienne looked at each other hearing the words of their Queen. She had utterly destroyed her enemies.

“I have burned my enemies by the thousands with one word: dracarys. Were all worthy of that death?

“Many I executed in a group. I now know some were innocent. But I executed them all.

“I think the execution of one man, a mad man, pales before my actions, Jaime Lannister.”

Jaime looked at her with wonder.

“Will you tell me why you killed my father? The truth.”

Jaime told her the truth, and Daenerys listened with rapt attention.

“I see. So … instead of Kingslayer you are a hero. Why did you not tell Eddard Stark the truth?”

“He never would have accepted what I had to say.”

“You never gave him the chance.”

Brienne and Dany played with the children for another hour, calming and reassuring the little innocents.

Finally, it was time for them to leave.
“I would like to fight you on the practice square in the morning. I am told you are both very, very good. I like challenges. Will you accept?” Daenerys asked.

Both Jaime and Brienne were surprised, but accepted.

As they started to leave, Jaime hesitated. “My Queen. Can I ask a question for my brother? He does not know I am asking, so please don’t tell him.”

Daenerys assured him of her silence and waited, curious.

Jaime asked her if Tyrion had ever mentioned Tysha to her. He had not. Jaime then told Daenerys the whole sad story, and of Jaime’s part in it.

He asked the Queen to look for her. “It is so sad your Grace. For a few years all Tyrion would ask anyone he met was ‘where do whores go?’ Of course no one knows.”

Daenerys said she would see if she could help somehow, and then they left her.

Daenerys went and put a few logs in the fire and placed her hands before the hot flames, not even feeling them.

She mused that the answer to Tyrion’s question was simple really. How could he not science that out?

Where did whores go?

Lys, of course.

Varys

The spider was looking out a window over the practice square. The queen was bouncing as she did her warm up routines. She was undeniably excited to have a new challenge.

In many ways Varys thought the woman had male tendencies. She loved to test herself.

Jaime and Brienne were being disgusting, massaging each other loosening up their muscles after stretching and sharing quick kisses. Watching that, Varys was glad that he had been cut so many years ago. He was able to keep focused. He did not need ‘relief’. His Queen needed the women gracing her bed to find release and pleasure to alleviate the burden and challenges of rule, and she was insatiable. Not that the women were complaining – but he preferred not to have that problem.

He sighed. Why did Eddard have to run off with the one high, noble princess that seemed to fit the Queen’s desires and needs, on top of everything else?

Jaime and Daenerys stepped into the middle of the practice field looking at each other with their practice swords.

Then, on some unseen signal they advanced on each other and their swords became a blur. He could see Jaime was surprised as all men were with the Queen’s speed and strength. They danced a beautiful weave of attack and counterattack, their swords clacking together loudly. The blades would lock up and slide against each other as the man and woman grunted and shoved, then disengaging to again attack with swords arcing high and then low.

The fight went on for ten minutes. By the time it was over both participants had torn tunics and bright red lines on their legs and arms. Daenerys had landed one hard blow to Jaime’s ribs and had hit his kidney with another hard shot. Jamie had growled at the time but now after the fight was over he was good nature about the Queen getting the better of him. He was happy to put up such a good fight. He smirked he was used to getting his ass kicked by Brienne.

Varys observed the giant woman’s mighty blush. She was too modest by half Varys thought.

The Queen had a big smile on her face.

There was a thirty minute break as Brienne clucked over Jaime and Daenerys watched with a sullen look. He knew she wanted her own mate clucking over her.

While he waited for the next round of fighting, he wondered about the challenge the Queen had given him. Normally, she would have gone to Tyrion for such an assignment but this involved the dwarf directly.

He remembered Tyrion asking that question once, years ago: “where do whores go?”

He had not thought much on it, but treated it as a riddle, turning the question over in his mind, wondering how to decipher it.

He was actually riled that Daenerys once hearing the question immediately knew the answer. She had not treated it as a sphinx riddle but looked at it as the obvious answer to the question itself. Where else would a woman who had been mortally shamed with the words of being a ‘whore’ go? She would go to the epicenter of the trade. Lys.

He had put in a request to have an audience with Chataya and Alayaya. They were the Queens of Prostitution in King’s Landing and through that, Westeros itself. He would find this Tysha for Tyrion. He could only hope that Tyrion would like what he found.

The second round, Daenerys vs. Brienne, was ready to commence.

The two women stepped into the square and circled each other, sizing each other up and down. Daenerys was an expert in predicting her opponents. She seemed to have a sixth sense in being able to science out her opponents skills and style of defense.

He had seen the giant woman, Brienne, taking in the fight between the Queen and her husband. She had likely noted a few things as well. His sparrows had seen the Lannister and woman of Tarth practice on the Sapphire Isle. She was a controlled berserker.

The two women charged each other and their swords collided with violent force. They attacked and parried, the taller woman using her size and strength to press her attack while the Queen used her smaller stature and agility to counter the woman’s sheer might.

The Queen deflected and side stepped the large woman’s attack leaving Brienne off balance.

Varys was impressed. Brienne quickly saw that sheer power would not win the day, and her attacks became much more controlled and crafty. She began to use feints and subtle shifts in her attacks. The Queen easily adapted to these new tactics.

They were a draw. Size versus speed and agility on full display. They would lock up swords, grunting as the scion of Tarth tried to force the Queen back and down but the Queen’s unnatural strength allowed Daenerys to easily push back.

Suddenly, Brienne dropped her sword and gripped the Queen, throwing her to the ground and getting on top of her while throwing a vicious punch down. All watching gasped when the Queen caught the punch and stopped it! Brienne looked at her fist stopped in mid-flight with shock, and Daenerys pulled the large woman down and to the right, toppling her over.

Both women’s hands went out and gripped tunic and hair as their feet kicked out at each other with grunts and curses. To Varys they looked like two alley cats in a hissing catfight - the only thing missing was fur flying.

The two women were staring at each other, afraid to let go as they jerked and pulled on each other, their feet a blur kicking at one another. Their armored legs blocking and muting each other’s kicks.

Then, with the same thought they broke apart rolling back and away from each other and desperately scrabbling to pick up their blades. They found them and spun to rush each other again.

For the next fifteen minutes they fought and cursed to a drawn match. They were exhausted when they finally separated.

Daenerys had a big smile on her face as she shook Brienne’s hand telling the giant woman she was awesome!

The tall, not-so-pretty woman blushed heavily. Jaime kissed the giant hard and deep as she squealed in pleasure. Varys determined that Jaime’s vision must not be so good.

He went to the small room that he and Tyrion like to meet in privately. Varys was concerned with the Iron Bank and this waiting for them to declare what they would require from the Queen.

Tyrion had told him of the debt. The assassination of Aegon VI. He had admired how the Queen so logically looked at the problem and found the solution that best solved it. With her love of taking care of her problems with hands on efficacy he was surprised at her deigning to use the House of Black and White to solve that particular issue.

Neither he nor Tyrion could foresee what they would demand. Apparently the bank was not sure either - waiting for a certain something to occur to satisfy their debt.

Varys hated trying to science out organizations. People let their base emotions control themselves. That made it easy to figure out what a man or woman might do. With organizations, so many were involved in their decisions that it was so much harder to understand, comprehend, and plan against.

Also, Varys’ spiders had reported from the depths of the Iron Bank and the upper chambers of the House of Black and White. Some rancor had cropped up between the two entities. Normally, they worked in lock-step with each other but some tension had developed in the last several years.

The leader of the assassins guild, Jaqen H’ghar, was evidently questioning directives and orders. From what Varys had learned it was not open rebellion. The House of Death still followed directives, but tension was building.

Why after all this time? He had tried to learn more of this Jaqen H’ghar, but he was a mystery. Why would a man have hair like that? This was a mystery that he and Tyrion knew would have to be solved.

Jaime

Brienne and the children had already gone on the gangplank up to the ship. Jaime stood on the dock, looking down at his brother. It had been a good week. He had made peace with the Queen and no longer had to worry about a summons in the middle of the night.
Tyrion was looking good. Content. He was so happy for his little brother. He had become the Hand of the Queen and was truly valued by her. It had been a long time coming, but Tyrion was finally being respected for his intellect and talents.

“Don’t be a stranger,” Tyrion said up to his brother.

“I won’t, little brother. Tarth is our home, but we will visit regularly. I want my children to have their uncle. If Cersei can transform herself somehow, they will have an aunt too. I’m not holding my breath on that, though.”

Tyrion laughed at that. His sister was still costing him a fortune!

Jaime looked out over King’s Landing. “I don’t miss this place at all, Tyrion. I have many bad memories here. I miss you, and I like the Queen well enough, but this place is full of bad thoughts for me.”

“In time you won’t recognize much of King’s Landing,” Tyrion said. “The Queen will start rebuilding the poor quarters of this city and Old Town. She says that the largess of the crown should be for the people.”

“She means it, doesn’t she Tyrion?”

“Yes she does. She definitely wants to bring in new age of justice and equality. She wants an age of reclamation. … time will tell, but I believe in her.”

“This may sound strange, but so do I. I am a cynical man by nature and history but I think she actually might succeed.”

They had parted then, shaking hands.

He went to his wife on the rail looking out at the sea on the windward side. She had put their children down for their afternoon naps. All the excitement of King’s Landing had left them exhausted.

“I like your brother, Jaime. He is intelligent and cunning, but a very good man still,” his wife said.

“Yes he is, Brienne. Being the muscle makes us more simple than men like Tyrion and the Queen. They play the Game of Thrones, but aren’t corrupted by it. Rare indeed.”

“Do you think the Queen will ever have need of our muscle, husband?”

“Only the future will tell us that, sweet wife.” Jaime spoke, taking is wife’s large and calloused hand and squeezing it affectionately as the ship pulled anchor and headed out to sea and home on the afternoon tide.
Daenerys was tired. She’d endured a long day of meetings discussing the events occurring in North. It was clear that House Stark was up to something, but the Queen still could not put her finger on it. The man was mobilizing his forces even with his denials, but his orientation was North rather than South. It made no sense.

There had been an attack by a new mercenary company that the Dothraki was actively fighting near the province Qohor. She itched to take Drogon east to help take care of the problem, but knew she needed to have faith in her commander.

His forces had been shredded during the first battle, but had placed stronghold troops that had managed to stall the company’s advance just the same. The charges firing back and forth were confusing - each side claimed stridently they were the innocent and aggrieved party. She needed to go and settle this problem but she could not just drop everything to fly east. Things were tense enough in Westeros, she dare not take herself away.

The rebel Lord refused to bend the knee to Daenerys without a direct parley. He wore a helm with mighty stag antlers on it. She had sent ravens to Tyrosh to send word to settle into a holding action and not press any further attacks until she could personally come and have the requested parley.

The Queen held audience on the throne, which had been tiring as it usually was. She gave each case brought before her full attention and thought, just the same. Tyrion and Missandei proved invaluable in providing background information to each matter, and she often huddled with them asking their opinions to divine the truth.

Tyrion brought his knowledge of the Game of Thrones and the play of it. Missandei was so innocent and pure that she could often divine when persons were lying and obfuscating. When one never lies it is easier for them to spot the lies of others.

She grew tired of the petty squabbles that the magistrates could not solve and, thus, needed the royal decree. Daenerys always tried to dispense justice that was based on fairness and compassion.

Once she had seen the last supplicant, she took a luxuriating bath and ate a light meal of melons and pears while reading over some reports that Tyrion had just finished outlining the debt of the Iron Throne. He had unraveled more of the chicanery and outright lies that lay in the ledgers. Tyrion,
Master of Laws Micud Caudill, and Master of Coin Vedad Softic had forced a ten percent reduction of debt when their careful inspection of the Bank’s books versus their own books revealed obvious “errors” on the side of the Iron Bank.

The Iron Bank had forgiven ten percent of the debt to show good faith. Daenerys snorted. Tyrion believed that the bank had been doing tit-for-tat, knowing the Iron Throne had been defrauding them, so they played in turn.

Dany made her way to her bed, and got underneath the covers. She was too tired to masturbate. Normally several hard orgasms took the edge off, but she was just exhausted. Dany loved masturbating. A woman knows her own body better than anyone else ever does. If she ever found a true love, she planned to masturbate freely with them.

Dany fell asleep quickly, and the Direwolf dream started again. The dream had faded soon after her arrival in Westeros but recently it had returned. Daenerys could find no reason for its sudden reappearance. It had been several nights since she had last had it. In the dream she was back in the hall and it was getting colder. The wolf was at her side now as she curled up on the floor, pressed into the mighty beast enjoying the beast’s warmth. The wolf stared down the hall, full of tension, its muzzle twitching and its tail thumping hard on the hall floor.

The wolf suddenly rose up on all fours and growled, then started down the hall but stopped after a few steps and looked back with an inquiring look. She understood what the beast meant: follow me. The wolf would step down the hall, and then saddle back and look at Daenerys. The wolf wanted to confront the threat.

Dany was indecisive. She was still nude which did not bother her, what bothered is that she did not have her weapons. While strong for a woman and skilled in hand to hand combat, she knew she needed her weapons to confront the demon or whatever it was that waited down the hall. The wolf finally came to stand before the Targaryen in a defensive position to protect the Queen.

Dany woke up with a start. The dream had started and changed starting a week ago. She wondered why. She shivered, still remembering the cold of the dream.

Dany snuggled underneath the covers and soon fell asleep again. She slept soundly for a few hours, then she heard a ‘qwork’. There was a long silence, and then another ‘qwork’. Soon other ‘qworks’ joined into a cacophony of dissonance. Then she felt a stinging peck on her forehead.

Daenerys awoke waving her arms wildly in front of her face. She felt large bodies colliding against her arms. She opened her eyes and was shocked to see ravens and crows circling and screaming wildly in her room, flying out the large windows as more poured in and circled, squawking at her, urging her to fly out of her room at breakneck speed.

Dany felt their urgency as raven claws clenched into her hair and dragged her in jerks to the window. She waved her arms and reached for her sword, pulling it from its scabbard and slashing the flaming blue blade at the birds careening around her room. Her sword arced at the birds, passing harmlessly through their bodies as she was stinging all over from the hard pecks of their angry beaks.

Dany awoke abruptly, sitting up and throwing her covers off her body. The room was lit by the half-moon. She quickly got up and got the fire roaring in the fireplace, and looked around the room. No crows. She began to breathe easier. Then she spotted a raven feather, with a few others laying on the floor in her chamber. She ran a hand across her forehead, but felt no welts.

Dany remembered the premonition from Meera. It was time to act.
Early the next morning she called Tyrion and Barristan to her. She did not want to bring up what she proposed to do with even Missandei and Syrio. They would strongly oppose her too but she knew that Barristan and Tyrion would more easily give in to what she meant to do. This was not a matter to be brought up with the Klatch of Confidents. They were her most trusted advisors. She explained what she meant to do. They both protested loudly and vehemently. Why hadn’t she told them?

She told them she did not want them to oppose her wishes. She was the Queen, but she knew they would argue with her. She was readying to leave. They continued arguing with her as she left her room to go to the kitchen to get a quick, light meal. Barristan had stalked off as Tyrion fretted. Once her hunger had been satisfied, Daenerys headed toward the large courtyard.

There Tyrion saw the three dragons waiting for their mother. He sighed and wished her well. Barristan who had early left, reappeared. He was clad in his battle chainmail and light plate armor over his shoulders and chest. He had put on his dragon skin gloves and chaps to ride a dragon. He began attaching his scabbard.

“What are you doing?” Daenerys demanded.

“I am coming with you” Barristan told her simply.

“No you are not.” He merely stared at her. For a minute they battled wills with each other. Daenerys finally broke, pinching the bridge of her nose. “Fine. But first wait here,” the Queen demanded in an imperious tone.

Barristan and Tyrion waited in stark silence - Tyrion in apprehension, and Barristan centering himself. He was steeling himself for any upcoming combat. He centered his mind to achieve the perfect balance.

Daenerys reappeared with a cursing Syrio Forel following her. He was demanding to accompany her too. The Queen told him that he had to stay because the Kingdom would need his leadership in case she did not return. Plus, he would never get past fifty in the air with his air sickness. Syrio’s face went apoplectic with the reminder of his weakness.

All three men started to argue loudly.

“I have every intention of returning but … but in case I don’t … Quiet! I command your obedience!” The three men fell silent.

“I have delayed too long in doing this.” She had been carrying a bundle wrapped in a blanket. “Barristan Selmy and Syrio Forel, you have been with me from the beginning. You have supported me from the start. I wish to give you each a gift - a token of my esteem.”

She got down on one knee and unfolded her bundle. All three men gasped. Daenerys arose with a broadsword in her right hand and gave it to Barristan. In her left hand she handed Syrio a rapier made of Valyrian steel, rippling deep blue in the light.

Barristan was looking in awe at his own Valyrian sword, the glyphs telling him that he held the “Hammer of Doom”. He looked up at Daenerys.

“It feels much like your sword in my hand. Do you approve?”

Barristan smiled and nodded his head softly yes. As he did this, men came out with the saddle, chaps and gloves and boot covers. Barristan quickly pulled on his protective gear. He threw the saddle on the back of the dragon and using his gloves and boots to get grips on Viseron’s scales he vaulted up Viserion’s back his chaps protecting his legs. Viserion turned his head back and head bumped his father affectionately as Barristan secured the saddle hooking it to the dragon’s scales.

“It is time to go. When we go to combat we will all fly on Drogon, but for now you can ride Viserion.” The queen jumped up and scaled up her son’s body quickly getting on his back. Barristan put his hands on Viserion head and looked in his dragon’s eyes as the dragon purred in happiness. The ivory dragon pranced hopping from foot to foot his eyes locked with Barristan’s in eagerness to be away.

“Tyrion, you will find something for you in the blanket too.” Then she was away with Drogon, shooting up into the sky, gaining altitude fast.

The knight released Viserion’s head and the dragon whipped his head around and launched himself up into the sky with his brother right behind him. The two smaller dragons pumped their wings hard to quickly catch up with their black brother as they gained attitude and speed off moving quickly away to the North. Drogon screamed out a mighty roar promising death and doom to his enemies. Viserion and Rhaegal joined in with their loud trumpets of challenge as they moved off to the North.

Tyrion watched them disappear.

Tyrion walked over to the blanket and bent down. He came up bearing a Valyrian long Dagger that made an excellent half-sword for a man of his size. The dwarf slashed through the air, smiling.

Bran

Bran was watching Meera pacing in the small glade they had set up camp in. They were waiting for Daenerys to come and pick them up for the flight to the Tree of Life. The young girl was tense and muttering. Bran understood her tension.

He appeared calm on the outside, but he too felt the anxiety of the moment. The dreams had become more intense as of late. He was flying in the sky so high and then buried in the Earth, entangled in roots. He much preferred the former dreams, but he knew that his destiny was first under the ground.

He had to delve into the Earth before he could soar.

“Hodor, Hodor!” his loyal friend chanted.

“Easy Hodor … all is well.” He told the half giant. The large, simple man calmed.

Bran thought back to his first meeting with the Reed children early last week. They had come to him after the feast his father held for his loyal bannermen from the Neck. Bran watched the Reed children and their father conferring towards the end of the meeting.

The children asked if Bran could take them to the Godswood. Eddard gave his son a grimaced smile in answer. Bran knew his father sensed that his son would soon be leaving. His father would let him seek out his destiny.

He was still learning not to be bitter about his injury. He was just beginning to come into his burgeoning manhood, and then had it ripped away. The Raven was teaching him the true meaning of service. He had dreamed of being a knight on the field of battle. His battlefield would now be on the spiritual plain, and fought with mind and soul. He was not sure he was ready.

Bran waited for the Reed siblings to reveal their plans. He surprised them when he told them he knew they had to get to the Tree of Life. Jojen smiled softly and told Bran he was already more mighty than him. Jojen asked if he was ready for his destiny.

Bran had told him “no”, but assured the startled teen that he would meet his destiny without shying aside. “I am a Stark.” was Bran’s simple answer to the questions of his willingness to meet his destiny.

Bran had then listened to their plots to get him out of Winterfell and to their meeting with the Dragon Queen, each plan a little more fantastical and dangerous than the one before. They had him scaling down the wall of Winterfell on Hodor’s back. Throwing him down to Hodor. Buried beneath a heavy load of bolts and fabric in a wagon. Having the Direwolves create a diversion and then sneaking out the small gate by the stables.

Finally, Bran had suggested “Why don’t I just tell my father I want to visit our loyal bannermen in their floating city in the reeds? I am sure he will agree.”

The siblings looked at each other and then, sheepish agreed to the much simpler plan.

Now they were in the clearing waiting for the Queen to arrive with her dragons.

Jojen had been looking North. “The Ice King is waiting for us. Along with an ancient evil … I can’t see it through the green”

“It is a Croyel.” Bran Stark replied.

Jojen and Meera looked at him with questioning eyes.

“The three-eyed raven dreams have shown me. It is a-a-a…” Bran hesitated trying to describe what he had seen. “Demon baby is the best I can describe it. It has bonded with the Ice King. It comes from a land very far away. It is ancient, evil and very, very powerful.”

“Can it be defeated?” Meera asked.

“It must—all things can be killed. We just need to find the way. We may not survive, you know.” Bran told the Reed children. “I would prefer you to not go with me and Hodor. This is not your fight. It is mine.”

Jojen replied “Evidently your green sight is not as refined as you think it is.”

Meera

She listened to her brother and Bran’s discourse on destiny and responsibility.

She only knew that she would support her brother and her liege’s son with all that she was. She was going to strike her blow against the Ice King. She knew that this was but the first blow against the ancient enemy, and she would not hesitate to meet her destiny.

Jojen had made it clear to her that something had gone horribly wrong years ago. He was absolutely sure that Bran was supposed to have made his journey almost four years ago. It would have been dangerous, but they would have made it. He was sure of it. Now they would have to fight against the ancient evil just to get to their destination. The Ice King himself was waiting for them.

The Ice King, even with this Croyel was still not strong enough to contend with the Tree of Life itself. The Ice King would have the advantage against them, though. Jojen did not tell her as much, but she could see it in the caste of his shoulders. He did not expect for them to succeed.

But the effort had to be made, else defeat was certain. Jojen saw that the forces of light and dark were on the razor’s edge. Which would dominate?

Meera had argued with her brother. She had seen the Dragon Queen as he had, and she had faith in her. Meera could not put a reason to it, but she felt deep in her bones that the small, platinum-haired woman would meet and defeat any enemy. She would not fight her enemies alone.

Meera pulled out five precious arrows. Each tip was made of pure dragon glass, honed to a trilobite bladed point. Her most feared enemies were made of ice. She needed penetrating striking power. To the dead, it did not matter the head of the arrow. She only hoped she would be able to retrieve them after the battle. If she was still alive to retrieve them.

They had set up the banners of the same houses they had called to the Dragon Queen with before. They knew the dragons would see them from afar.

Meera ate a small meal of beef jerky and hard cheese, constantly looking South as her anxiety rose. Would the Queen come? Jojen had said it was time.

Bran went to sleep underneath the small tent they had set up for him. Meera marveled at how calm the sixteen year old remained.

She and Jojen walked around the glade discussing the coming battle. With his greensight, Jojen felt him very near the Tree of Life. He had probed the area using the Tree but he could not see anything amiss. The Ice King had somehow hidden himself from the Tree, which upset the young Reed.

Meera looked up again and her heart began to beat faster. On the horizon three dots appeared, growing larger quickly.

She felt her heart lift seeing the white-haired woman brining her dragons down to the glade. She watched them land, and then mill around. The dragons were restless. Meera was surprised to see another person with the Queen.

The Queen stayed with her dragons, talking to them in her native tongue as the man with her walked up to them.

The man was older, but his back was ramrod straight and he radiated power and competence. He introduced himself as Barristan Selmy, and he was the general of her armies and one of her most trusted advisors. She had heard of this man. He was one of the greatest swordsmen walking the Earth. He would be a mighty warrior at their side.

She liked the man immensely from the start. He acknowledged both her and Jojen with respect. Jojen greeted him and told him they had their charge over in the tent.

Barristan looked over at the large man sleeping just outside the tent to protect his friend, then at the basket Hodor used to carry him in. The man turned to look back at the Reeds, and then the Queen. He shook his head, keeping his silence.

He was going to let them explain to the Queen. Her estimation of the man went up significantly at this realization. He had no ego, and also displayed a trust in them.

Suddenly, Summer appeared from the woods from behind the dragons and ran up to them. The dragons looked down at the beast as it walked from one to the other, smelling them in turn. The Queen looked at the wolf that nearly came up to her eye level. Summer came up to Daenerys, and she stood still as the direwolf sniffed her.

Then the wolf muzzled its head into her side and rubbed against her as it moved on to walk over to the tent and laid down beside the large man guarding his master.

Meera was impressed. The woman felt no fear of the animal, and it had accepted her immediately. It had taken the wolf several days to accept the Reed siblings. The woman seemed to have no limits to her abilities and affinities.

Meera hoped it would be enough.

Daenerys

Daenerys spoke again to Rhaegal and Viserion. They shook their head. They smelled game nearby. They would feed, and then fly North for their part. She hugged each dragon in turn and they launched themselves into the air, winging northward. Daenerys watched their bodies fade into the distance.

She walked over to the waiting party. The small Reed told her that her dragons were indeed beautiful. She looked at the tent and cocked an eyebrow. “I am assuming that this is the three-eyed raven?” she asked with a smirk.

Jojen confirmed her assessment. He told her that he would awaken him so they could leave.

“That won’t be necessary. We won’t be leaving for three days.”

“What? We need to leave now!” Jojen exclaimed. “Time is of the essence!”

“No it isn’t. Three more days won’t change anything.” The platinum haired woman returned. When Jojen went to argue again, the woman held up her hand. “I have conquered many cities and defeated many armies … I know what I am doing.” she told the Reed boy.

She argued with him for another minute before she calmly told him “It’s my dragon. We will leave in three days.” The tone told all that the conversation was over.

Three hours later Bran awoke. He sat up and opened his tent, watching the Targaryen sharpening her sword that glowed a bright blue. He shook Hodor awake and patiently waited for his friend to wipe the sleep out of his eyes.

Hodor brought Bran over to the cooking fire. The small woman looked up at him with a smile. “And who do I have the pleasure of meeting?” Daenerys asked the boy. The broken legs verified his identity. Her briefings had told her of the misfortune of Bran Stark.

“I am Bran Stark, but you already know that. We will be leaving on the morning of the third day from now.” the sixteen year old announced. He looked at Jojen, who lowered his eyes.

Daenerys sighed. Of course the three-eyed raven was a Stark. Who else could it be?

“Does your father know of this, Bran?”

“He does not.”
“Of course.” Dany sighed.

The boy was old enough to make his own decisions. The small Queen did not normally have any use for prophecy or the interference of the gods, but Dany could feel them now. There was a force at work that was actively working against the evil she could sense. Her dreams told her the truth of this situation.

She would not shirk her duty. She lived to conquer evil. She would triumph. She had no doubt.

For the rest of that day and the next two, the small camp bided time. All watched the Targaryen and Barristan spar violently in the glade, their blades moving so fast that they looked a blur. Meera cried out when the knight punched the queen in the shoulder and kneed her in her stomach. Daenerys return blows to the knight’s crotch had him grimacing and chuffing as he barely kept the woman off as he recovered. She learned that knights were not always so honorable when she watched Barristan kick the Queen where no man should ever kick a woman, and Daenerys howled like a Direwolf.

Her dragon had lifted one sleeping eyelid at her howl, and then went back to his slumber. The evening before they were to leave, the dragon and Direwolf left on their own. They appeared back at camp in the morning, muzzles soaked in blood.

Daenerys had not been happy when she discovered the Direwolf and the giant sized man were to be coming on the journey as well.

She had absolutely refused at first. Bran had simply told her “They will be coming.” And that was the end of the conversation.

Dany had gone stomping off while pinching the bridge of her nose and cursing not so quietly.

Barristan had come to her and told her how this could be of benefit. Dany listened to him, as she always did. In the end she agreed. She communed with Drogon who understood and relayed her thoughts on. It would soon be time to go.

Bran

Bran eyed the Targaryen who stared at him while trying not to, and failing miserably. Bran knew she would have to talk to him again. He was the son of Eddard Stark, who was vexing her currently.

It was the night before they were to leave and Daenerys was sharpening her sword. She kept looking over at him and immediately looked down when she saw the boy looking directly at her. She would fidget and hone her sword and look up again every few minutes. Bran was still staring at her.

Bran chuckled to himself, seeing the woman at such a loss. He sensed this was not a usual situation for her.

She finished sharpening her sword and made a dramatic show of eyeing the edge. She got up and stretched, groaning dramatically.

Finally, she approached Bran who was staring at the fire before him. She squatted down on the other side of it.

“I did not know you were a follower of R’hllor.” She jested weakly.
“I follow the Old Gods. Do you always insult your guests’ religion, Daenerys Targaryen?” Bran asked in an affronted tone, looking the woman in the eyes.

Dany rocked back on her heels and sputtered.

Bran held up his hand “I was teasing you. Forgive me.”

He watched her blush and look around uncertainly. Bran thought the expression humanized the woman.

Up close Daenerys Targaryen was so full of might he was almost speechless. The woman radiated power and destiny. She was not of the Old Gods, but he knew they totally embraced her. Her destiny and theirs were intricately linked.

“You will lie with the direwolf.” He told the woman simply. He smirked upon seeing her reaction.

Daenerys’ face twisted in disgust and her body literally stiffened. He deliberately did not tell her who she would lie with. He enjoyed the show.

“What is your father doing, Bran? He is provoking me into taking action I do not want to take. Tell me. Help me to understand!” the woman barked at him in a frustrated hiss.

“I have no idea what his plans are.”

The woman scoffed at him. “You are his son. You have to know something! Give me gossip, innuendo, anything! Don’t you know I could bring my dragons down on Winterfell and burn it down to slag?”

“Like Yunkai?” Bran asked softly.

The woman shot up ramrod straight, her face distraught.

“Sit down, Daenerys. That was unfair of me. You are no longer that woman. That is the past, let it go.”

“No no … I still see them in my dreams …” the woman said with a quiver in her voice. Her eyes started brimming with tears.

“Daenerys.” Bran called softly as she looked down at him shakily.

“You will never do such a deed again.”

“How do you know?”

“I am a greenseer, Daenerys Targaryen … I see the future. Not perfectly, but this is true. If you accept love, you will not go down that path again.”

He watched her shoulders slump. “Your dreams will be answered my Queen.” Bran told her. He wished he could tell the Queen the full truth, but prophecy was like wisdom. It must be earned and not haphazardly given, else the purpose misleads.

The woman sat back down.

“My Queen,” he spoke softly and waited till the woman looked up at him. “I made it a purpose to not know my father's plans. Thus, I can’t tell you. We Starks can’t lie. This way we both are safe.”
“Safe from what?”

“Destiny.” Bran replied and chuckled inside when the woman sighed and pinched her nose. She had learned to control her inner demons and burning ambition. She was the crux around which all revolved. The green dreams told Bran that his woman was supposed to have taken a different path. A less violent path. She was supposed to be molded slowly. Instead she had been made over almost overnight. The forge had been too hot for any person to come out unchanged.

For a time Daenerys Targaryen had lost her way.

He wondered how she ever found herself again. He knew the petite silver haired woman feared she would go back to her old ways. Her lover and consort would anchor her changes for the good. Together they would forge greatness.

“My destiny is not the physical world anymore, your Grace. I consider you my friend. I must walk a path on the spiritual plain. You must get me there, Daenerys. I must become one with the Tree of Life. I will leave the world of men. Only there can I bind the Ice King back to the Earth that nurtured him after his creation.”

The woman looked sadly at him and asked him if he accepted his path. Bran told her the truth. “No. But I am a Stark. I will not shirk my duty.”

They communed silently around the fire for an hour, both lost in their own contemplations and thoughts of destiny. Bran asked Hodor to take him back to his tent as he laid down looking out at the fire and the Queen.

Again he wondered how one so small could be so powerful. He could see power and presence almost flowing off her small frame. All that was good rotated around her. He knew she would make Arya happy, and Arya in turn the Queen. With that thought he drifted into a peaceful sleep.

Daenerys

Dany was thankful she had a large basket type saddle constructed. She had also put in hand rungs so that the riders could grip them tightly. She would use these rungs for something else once they reached the Wall. She carefully arranged the riders on Drogon’s large back. She had asked her son when she first knew of the additional riders if it would be too much for him to bear.

He had been highly affronted. He would not even know they were on his back! He was young and strong and just fed. He was up to any challenge.

Daenerys broke camp hours before the sun was to come up. She had everyone eat a quick meal before gathering them near a restive Drogon. The sky was still pitch black.

“I have scouted our way. We will be flying in on a straight shot, hard and fast. I want you all to be lying down as low as possible. Barristan, Summer and I will be on the outside perimeter and will shield you from the wind as much as possible, making sure you are safe. Bran. Will you be able to keep Hodor calm?”

The Stark nodded as his eyes unfocused. Hodor began to walk a little woodenly as he picked up Bran and handed him up to Barristan. He then climbed up Drogon’s side and got into the basket. Barristan had rolled down a fire resistant mat to protect the humans.

The others used the special gloves Dany had fashioned for them. The Direwolf had backed up and ran forward, then jumped up high and landed on the dragon’s back and walked onto the basket curling up next to Bran protectively. Lastly, Daenerys climbed up and positioned herself forward on Drogon’s back.

“Drogon! Tolvio belma pryjātās!” The mighty dragon leaped into the air, quickly gaining altitude, rising up to a thousand feet. All could feel the wind whipping harder and harder across their faces as they hunched low. The dragon was beating his wings hard and straining forward. The trees raced by below. They flew across the sky like an arrow shot out of a longbow.

The first part of the journey was at first exhilarating for the riders who had never been on a dragon, but quickly grew boring as they laid down on the dragon’s broad back between its pinioning wings. The dragon did not seem to be laboring even with the additional weight.

Daenerys was monitoring Drogon but her largest son truly felt no struggle even with the excess cargo. His body motion as he pumped his wings soon had everyone lulled into a half sleep. Dany reached out with her mind and touched her other two sons, they were huddled together in the ravine she had spied out earlier. They could feel her coming and were anxious to confront their common enemy.

It was an hour before noon when Drogon saw the Wall coming up. Daenerys soon had her dragon landing on the top of the seven hundred foot tall structure. She spied several women on the wall about five hundred meters down. They looked up, staring slack-jawed at the black behemoth.

Daenerys got everyone off to stretch their legs and take care of nature’s call. She pulled out a bundle from the back of Drogon’s saddle. She chuckled, watching the wildling women talking wildly and pointing at them.

She got everyone mounted again, and then she and Barristan stretched a net over the novice riders, and hooked eyelets over the rungs worked along the edge of the saddle. She explained that it was to keep them in place. She told them how she planned to come in for her landing and she felt a little revenge when she saw how the Reeds and Bran blanched. She told them it was the safest way to land.

Then she and Barristan sat down on the outside of the net, and Drogon dropped off the edge of the wall and fell hundreds of feet. She had selected this area because it was on the straight line path to the tree of life, free of obstacles and foliage. Drogon used the drop to quickly gather speed, and fifty feet above the ground pulled up like a stone from a trebuchet and shot back up to a thousand feet, launching north like a bat out of the seven proverbial hells.

Daenerys and Selmy conversed softly, giving each other comfort and courage for the coming fight. Daenerys was supremely confident as was Barristan but a healthy dose of fear pulsed in their veins as it does in all great warriors.

About an hour out from the hill of the Tree of Life Barristan pointed northeast, then northwest. Dany had seen them too.

Crows, ravens, starlings, grackles and birds of prey were all winging North at a furious clip. As they continued to fly the dragon picked up an unofficial escort of birds that would come up near only to be left behind by the dragon’s furious pace. Dany looked back and saw the birds continuing on furiously in her wake.

As she approached the hill of the Tree of Life she was stunned by what she saw. There was a thunderhead of birds flying in a wild cyclone around it. The birds flew, stacked from several hundred feet up to ten thousand feet with eagles and hawks wheeling high above them.
Soon the air was a cacophony of quarks and squawks. At first the party had been afraid they were to be attacked by the enormous and still growing storm of birds. The ever growing cloud of birds was definitely centered over the Tree of Life, a black cloud morphing and bulging from side to side. The cloud near a mile wide full of loudly squawking birds.

Dany pulled Drogon to cycle wide around the cloud. The cloud suddenly parted and slowly stretched out to try and encircle the dragon. The birds never attacked, but an oblong wheel was forming with a clear opening towards the hill. Several ravens came up to the wheeling dragon and their head motioned towards the hill. They then dove towards the hill and rose back up to again, looking at the dragon and riders before diving back down.

The message was clear. Attack. The birds were on their side.

Barristan shouted to Dany with a feral smile on his face. “The Raven is a symbol of the North and the Weirwood. We are supported. Let us attack!” Dany needed no further encouragement. She drifted her dragon over the hill and Drogon began to seek what all knew was below.

He hole in the wheel of birds quickly closed behind them as they flew to circle tightly over the Tree of Life. The dark boiling cloud of birds tightening in their circular flight around the hill.

The Ice King they could not be see. He had somehow hidden himself from sight. All could feel his evil and the cold that was his nature. If he could not be seen then he would have a decisive and deadly advantage. Daenerys had foreseen this. It had been her white dragon, Viserion, that figured out how to see the hidden Ice King.

The dragons could see in many spectrums and one was heat. A human’s body glowed red. The rest of the background was various shades deepening to blue when they viewed that which was cold. Viserion reasoned that their foe was the essence of cold. He would be the darkest blue on the field of combat.

There. Suddenly Drogon started a rapid, spinning descent in a tight pinwheel. The motion was almost impossible to track as Dany had Drogon juked and jerked as he flew down to throw off any aim.

Daenerys saw that the entire massive cloud of birds were diving straight down quickly, outstripping her descent.

Ice King

For the previous two hours the Ice King had seen the gathering storm of birds piling up in the sky. Puzzled but unconcerned, he reached back to pat his slumbering son. They were of no consequence. The birds must have sensed the carrion they were about to feast on.

He had seen the dragon appear on the horizon. He and the Croyel were unsure of their flying foe, these dragons postdated his previous incarnation and they did not exist in the land of the Croyel’s existence. What was the fear of a little fire with the Croyel to protect him? Its Forbidding would easily fight off the puny flame this creature could produce.

Fire was his enemy, but a living thing could not produce but a little of it. It was impossible for the rumors to be true. He would soon kill this strange creature.

He smirked. The Dragon Queen was truly overconfident. She had only brought one of her dragons. Too bad. He would have enjoyed killing them all today.
He puzzled over how the birds seemed to part for the woman when she had arrived. He had many undead hidden in the surrounding forest and twenty sons nearby. He had a large reinforcement at the base of the escarpment as well, but had kept them at a distance.

He wanted all the glory of the kill.

His icy brows knitted. What is going on? He felt his son stir.

The birds began diving at breakneck speed. Why? There was no carrion yet. What were they doing?

His eyes shot wide open, suddenly on alert. The birds dove screaming into the forest and he felt their beaks quickly finding and tearing at his undead. They were voracious, stripping them of their slack flesh. He filled his army with motion and began to swat at the birds as their flesh was torn off, and ligaments and sinew ripped and shredded.

Birds were attacking them? It did not matter. He looked up at the spinning dragon rapidly descending. He smiled viciously. When they landed he would fall on them unseen.

At two hundred feet the dragon suddenly straightened out its descent and he saw massive, mighty talons aiming straight at his face! The dragon began a heavy back beating of its mighty wings. Then searing, agonizing flame was blasting down at him and his son with the force of a cyclone.

“AAARGGGHHHHHHH!” The ice king roared in pain as the sudden Forbidding put up by the Croyel formed, and then nearly shattered underneath the flame. “Aaaaaaiiiiiiiiiiiiiiii!” the Croyel whined in terror and effort as he threw all his strength into the mystical shield. How could there be so much heat? It was like an erupting volcano! He could feel that there was magic in the flames.

All this happened in a mere three seconds.

SSSSLLLLAAMMMMMM!

Crushing weight hurtled into the Ice King and Croyel crushing them down into the earth. There was a brief respite from the flame and then another deadly gout attacked them. The beast lifted back and jammed down with its talons. The flame stopped, and the Croyel tried to form an attack as he kept him and his father from being crushed. Suddenly, the head of the dragon was crashing into them, teeth and sinew trying to rip through the Croyel’s shields.

The Ice King was pinned, jammed into the earth unable to even draw his sword as his body threatened to shatter. Another burning gout of flame struck them.

Terror gave the Croyel strength to maintain the Forbidding. The wall, now a large red circle, formed a few feet above them. The dragon roared and another jet of furious flame hit his son’s Forbidding, nearly annihilating it. The magic was horrendously powerful. The beast’s claws tore at them. The Ice King, gripping the talons half wrapped around them preventing them from fully closing as the Forbidding kept the beast from completely controlling its claws since they had already pierced the shield.

It was a stand-off. The Croyel knew he just had to survive a few more moments from the terrible onslaught.

Daenerys
Daenerys rode atop of Drogon as he breathed his hot fire and his body tore at the Ice King and the hideous thing on its back. They had formed some type of shield that prevented her and Drogon from finishing the kill. Again and again Drogon lifted his head to breathe fire and then slam down in frustration to hit the strange, glowing red wall that prevented flame and direct attack from killing the evil apparitions. His jaws cracked the magical wall but was not able to destroy it.

When her dragon paused to attack again, the strange demon baby was able to renew its defenses. Time was running out.

She saw from the woods a horde of dead shambling towards her. The swarm of attacking birds slowed them and were actually ripping them to pieces but not enough quickly enough. Then she saw them. Twenty Ice Wrights running towards them. The birds did not attack them. They attacked only what they could fight.

“Drogon Se jevo qrinuntot! Yno inkot! Yno inkot!” Daenerys screamed at her dragon calling him off as his desire to kill her enemy. Drogon hesitated, but only for a moment.

The dragon leaped up and flapped back furiously to land fifty feet away. Barristan and herself pulled out their swords and slashed the net free so the other riders could get off Drogon.

The Direwolf leaped off the dragon and immediately ran up to Barristan. He quickly moved toward the undead that were almost upon them. Meera jumped off next, her bow quickly notched. Daenerys threw off Jojen and Hodor slid down, and she gently placed Bran in his arms. Freed, she jumped down and rolled to her feet running towards the Ice King. Drogon roared and swung his head, a large swath of dragon fire engulfing the undead and sending them up in flames.

Barristan’s blade chopped into the mob and the undead that felt the cut of his Valyrian steel fell dead once more. Drogon hopped and leaped and bowled over the nearest Ice Wight and shattered it with his talons, its body immediately melting. Two more died when Drogon’s flame engulfed them.

Daenerys was upon the Ice King. He was tall and filled with anger. His ice sword whistled down and struck her flaming blue sword. The sounds of ice and metal ringing and clashing filled the air. She saw shock in the Ice King’s eyes as she went on the attack. He had expected her sword to shatter. It was his sword that would shatter. Her blade almost unseen as it whistled back and forth slamming into his sword, always knocking it back and to the side. The Ice King blocked her attacks as he backed away. It was he, not her, that was retreating.

Daenerys sent out her call.

Meera

Meera knew she was in a supportive role for this battle. She watched Drogon chase down several more Ice Wrights that had given up attacking the beast head-on. The dragon either melted the Wrights with his fire or shattered it in his massive jaws.

She watched Barristan chop down foe after undead foe, his Valyrian sword cutting the undead thews that made the dead do the bidding on the Ice King. Summer was biting and clawing at the undead that came in from the sides and rear of the knight, occupying them until the man chopped the foe attacking his blind side, killing it with his magical sword. Soon a wall of dead surrounded him as he moved to keep his battlefield clear, needing the space to wield his sword with devastating effect.

She saw out of the corner eye an Ice Wight coming up on Barristan from his blind side. Summer was leaping and shaking off two undead when she fired her bow. A high pitched shriek crossed the battlefield as the Ice Wight dropped its sword, its throat pierced with her arrow. The Wight collapsed to its knees, already melting.

Meera notched her next arrow. She kept close to Barristan as he protected her flank. She saw an Ice Wight coming up on Drogon as he ripped another one apart. The Wight moved in from the side, about to stab him near the juncture where his wing met his body. A high pitched wail filled the air as another Ice Wight died, melting with an arrow jutting out of its back.

Meera could not believe all the birds in the air. Most of the undead ignored the birds as they pressed their attacks. Some though, did strike back killing them in handfuls. Drogon killed birds as he was attacking undead with his flame. The birds did not care. More and more birds were constantly dropping down from the sky pressing the attack for their fallen brethren.

Meera saw undead men ripped done to the bone, unable to move without any rotted muscle or sinew.

Suddenly, a large group of undead stormed out of the woods aiming for the Queen.

Drogon had routed the remaining Ice Wrights and took to the air, flying just over the new wave of undead, burning them with his flame.

They burned. A large Mastodon, on fire, still ran towards the Queen as she was engaged with the Ice King. Meera let loose her third Dragon Glass arrow. The Mastodon dropped as if hamstrung and did not move. She had pierced its dead blue glowing eye killing its undead brain instantly. She saw black lines of eldritch power creeping around the dead body melting flesh.

The Ice King was now pressing an attack and the Queen dove underneath his strike, and came up behind him. Her sword slashed into his side “AARRRGGGGGHRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRRR!” He roared in agony. He should have died then, but he staggered back up, the ice blood flowing out his broken ribs and his rent side already healing up. The Croyel flooding his father with supernatural healing.

The Queen pressed her attack on the Ice King. Several Ice Wrights came up behind on Daenerys. The Queen sensed their approach, and she whirled on the ground in a graceful arc, chopping one Ice Wight clean in half with her blue glowing rune sword. She blocked another blow and dragged his sword down. Her left hand flicked up, and the Wright died with a Valyrian dagger jutting out of its eye. She easily blocked the Ice King’s swinging chop down on her.

Barristan was desperately fighting off a swarm of undead. The birds were savaging the corpses but there were just too many. A dead giant was lifting its foot to stomp down on Barristan as he was engaged with two undead. Summer was tearing the head off a man underneath him and then tearing off its rotted arms.

Suddenly the giant was pierced by the horns of a large elk, and then a flaming spear jut out of its chest sitting it on fire. The mighty elk shook its head, throwing off the now furiously burning giant. The beast charged into more dead, trampling them as its rider used his flaming spear to ignite and set them off burning.

Three Ice Wrights had reformed, and Drogon who had disappeared from view came hurtling in from the left to bowl them over. The dragon shattered one with his right hind foot, then his jaws shattered another. He leapt up and hop-skipped into a knot of undead, breathing fire just before impact, setting them ablaze before knocking about with his neck and tail.

The birds continued tearing and screaming as they tore undead to shreds. The sky was a blurring confusion of fast moving bodies and loud cries of rage and righteous fury.
Another Ice Wight appeared before Barristan as he tried to pull his sword out of the ribs of a dead bear. Meera’s fourth arrow slammed into the Ice Wight’s mouth, the tip jutting out of the back of his head. The Ice Wight, already dead, toppled backward. The enormous elk charged into the throng in front of Barristan, thinning the mob and allowing him to easily chop down the remaining undead with his sword.

The man on the elk sat waiting after he burned the last frozen corpse with his flaming spear.

Meera had seen Bran on Hodor and Jojen disappear up the hill to the Tree of Life. They had succeeded. The Ice King had forgotten all about him in his fight for survival.

They had succeeded! Now the only problem for the rest of them was escaping. They were swarmed, fighting furiously to stay alive.

She heard an unearthly scream that made her skin crawl. She looked over at the fight between Daenerys and the Ice King. The hideous beast on his back now had a gash on its shoulder. Yellow ichor leaked out, the blood bubbling and hissing. She saw the beast sucking furiously on the neck of the Ice King, which seemed to fill the Wright with strength and rage. His blows hurled down on the small, pale woman.

Daenerys managed to block, but could not attack.

Another wave of undead poured out of the woods towards her and Barristan. Most of the Ice Wrights were now dead. Drogon had one in its talons and another in its teeth as he took to the air and hurled them to the ground, shattering them. The dragon looked around and flew towards a new group of undead and burned them.

Suddenly, down the slope she saw a mighty horde of more undead with another thirty Ice Wrights leading a charge up the escarpment coming to their Ice Kings defense.

There was just too many.

Croyel

He was in agony. The blade had actually cut him! That was impossible. He was warded, and yet the blade had cut through his magic as if it did not exist.

The dragon’s breath was like the sun! He and his kind had never met such naked, unbridled fury in living flesh. It had taken the great magic of the Elohim, a mighty manifestation of the Weird of the Waynheim through willing human sacrifice or vast Earthpower to kill his brothers in the past.

Not merely some beast and puny human woman!

The wound on his shoulder was already healing but the pain was nearly blinding. He drank deeply from his father, and their shared strength renewed them both.

He had felt his father scream for their reinforcements and they had finally made their appearance. Why had they taken so long? They were in danger!

The Ice King had assured his son that the blades of man could not withstand the cold blades of the Wrights. He had been mistaken about his as well! The Croyel no longer cared if they killed this hated woman now. They needed to fall back and regroup!
But as he saw the swarm coming to their aid the Croyel felt elation. No. They would kill them all. He would relish seeing his father hack their bodies to small pieces and then reanimate, the hacked fragments wiggling as they tried to do his bidding.

He would laugh at them!

An Ice Wight appeared behind the white-haired woman as her sword was locked with his father’s. Yes! … “NOoOOOOOOOO!” the Croyel screamed as a Dragon Arrow penetrated its eye, killing it.

The Croyel looked at their saviors pelting up the slope to his father. Soon they would have their victory.

“Dracarys!” the small woman screamed, suddenly launching herself backward. What?!

The Croyel looked at the reinforcements as they approached. In an instant they were afire as another dragon, this one green, flew overhead. A long tongue of flame issued from its roaring mouth belching out white hot death. Undead went up like blazing candles of death. The dragon shot up, then came back and another long gout of flame set more undead ablaze, melting Ice Wights as they hissed and bubbled to their death.

From nowhere they were engulfed with searing agonizing pain. Hot flame that felt like the Sun exploding engulfed their bodies. The flame licked and clung to their body with magical tendrils that tried to burn into their bodies. The heat pulsed and boiled with eldritch magic. This was the heat of thousand thousand forges.

“I BURN! I BURN!” his father screamed in agony as the Croyel instinctually flooded his father with life giving, searing cold strength. The fire burned like the sun! The Croyel felt the hideous magic of dragon fire as he instinctively raised his shield and expanded it, desperately now fighting for his life. The magic of the flame was trying to undo the ligatures of the Croyel’s existence.

The white dragon flew past and made a tight turn and made another pass, spewing broiling, flaming death as both son and father screamed in agony. The black dragon had joined the green one, destroying their supposed saviors. The green dragon was leaping high in the air to slam down upon them.

Then the white dragon flashed overhead as it flew off to get space to make another pass. He had survived. He flooded his father with his magical essence and he did the same in return. Their bodies had been scorched but not burned deep. Already their dead skin was peeling off their limbs and backs with new skin reforming beneath.

The Croyel had time to half form a magical ward to not be attacked unprotected again. The white dragon wheeled around for another pass. The Croyel angled his still not finished shield towards the dragon. The dragon came straight in on them with no fear its mouth opening wide.

More of the dragon’s fire poured down as the talons slammed them into the Earth, crushing father and son both. His shield was weak and cracked, the Forbidding barely holding up to the savage fire. Their bodies slammed and bashed into the ground.

The flame had weakened him and the white haired woman’s cut was still draining him. The dragon’s claws closed around them and lifted them up five feet into the air, then slammed down repeatedly as more hideous magical fire blasted down on him and his father. They were dying.

His father rolled to his side. The Croyel looked over his shoulder at the hill with Tree of Life on it. The Croyel could see the dragons killing the last of the undead. The small, vile woman with her warrior were slaying the last of the Ice Wrights.

The Croyel had not been sure if the spell of translocation would work, but it had had to try. He was exhausted. His spell had worked. He could no longer defend them. It would be days before his strength started to recover.

He had underestimated the dragons. They were indeed powerful and terrible creatures. Their own scion was raised on ice and bitterness. He had been a project, a thing to humor themselves with. The Croyel was now very thankful that they had Ice-Fang. They would need him.

His father moaned and slowly levered himself up to look at the carnage off in the distance. His eyes wept dry ice tears. He felt the death of each son. He had so few! What was that woman? She was stronger than he was! Her sword was a terrible thing, along with that of the warrior who fought beside him.

He had heard of Valyria. He was told it was no more. He only prayed that there was only one of this woman.

He had felt her might and innate magic. She was definitely the locus of the North’s resistance against him. He now knew the Tree of Life would actively oppose him. No matter. He had much to reflect on.

He would not make the same mistakes again.

Daenerys

Daenerys was lying on her back looking up at red clouds. A high layer of cirrus had started to roll in during the battle. The clouds were slowly thickening, the setting sun’s rays lighting them into bright shades of red. The contours of the clouds gave variation to their shades. It was truly beautiful.

Now that the elixir of battle was over and adrenaline had run its course in her body, Daenerys Targaryen was exhausted. Her legs extended out and her hands folded beneath her head. She felt a calmness coming over her.

She had achieved a great victory. She mentally scolded herself. She along with her companions had achieved a great victory. She would have surely died without their support.

She turned her head and watched Barristan Selmy snoozing, his back to a tall pine tree. He had been a whirlwind of death. She again felt so fortunate to have him constantly at her side in battle. Not only the strength of arm but his gentle wisdom helped guide her course.

Daenerys looked around and sighed. She had seen Bran on Hodor along with Jojen climbing up the hill of the Tree of Life during the battle. She knew instinctively that they had reached their goal. The Ice King would again be bound to the Earth that gave him his unnatural second vile birth.

She remembered how their enemies had died. The undead died silently, but the Ice Wrights gave off delightful screams as they perished.

Dany felt no remorse in their passing. No shades of grey existed within the vile creatures. They were evil, plain and simple.
The man with the flaming spear that did not go out and his elk had disappeared as soon as the battle was over.

She had walked the battlefield looking at the enemies they all had slain. Before Meera had disappeared she too had walked around her kills and found her precious dragon glass arrows. They were too valuable to leave lying on the ground.

Dany had again gone back to her final battle with the Ice King in her mind. The Wrights had bubbled and turned to mist as they died; she was not able to find any trace of her fallen enemy. She had felt that her dragon was killing them.

Her plan had worked exactly as she had hoped. While the Ice King and its demon baby were engaged with her, Viserion had attacked them unawares. They deserved to be burned and crushed into the cold Earth.

It was a shame they dissipated when death claimed them. She would have loved proof and, yes, a trophy of her great victory.

She had felt their pure evil. They reminded her of the Warlocks and Witches of Astapor. They too had deserved their fate.

She wished her gaze could fall upon the fairer Reed sibling Meera, but she knew it would not. After the battle had been won and mopping up was occurring with her dragons hunting down any undead or Ice Wrights left alive with a vengeance, Daenerys had lost track of them.

Meera and Summer had simply vanished. She knew that they had gone to join Jojen and Bran. Sister to brother and Direwolf to master. She would miss them.

Especially that fierce Reed woman. She was delightful to the eye, and actually smaller than her! When she allowed herself to imagine the woman, she only instead saw the face of the brown haired woman on the wall of Winterfell. The woman that seemed to adore her dragons. She was not classically beautiful, but she stirred something in Daenerys.

She again looked up at the clouds turning darker red as the sun moved toward the horizon.

She would always remember this day and so would the world. She had achieved a great a victory. She could not but help take great pride in it.

She had not only gotten Bran to the Tree of Life as was necessary but she had single handedly defeated the Ice King. She had wondered if this was the reason for Eddard Stark maddening, confusing behavior.

She would send him a personally written letter. I have taken care of your problem! She would boast. A girl had to preen sometimes. She felt such elation over conquering the supreme evil within this new land of hers. She would go down in history.

She felt her blood pumping hard, and blood lust beginning to simmer.

She rolled over onto her stomach and looked around at her kingdom. Yes, even this frozen seeming wasteland was part of her kingdom. She had at first felt this land was of no value, but now she felt so differently. She could feel its vitality pulsing in her veins.

The land itself had risen up to aid and fight for her! This land deserved to be both valued and protected.
She lifted her feet in the air, swirling. Her children had flown off after dispatching the last of their foes. She had felt them as they found prey, and were now lazing about recovering their strength.

The flight home would be much more leisurely than their breakneck flight into hell.

She felt the blood lust boiling in her veins. She would have Tyrion procure a comely woman from a high end brothel for her to find pleasure with. She longed to sink her fingers into a woman’s cunt, fucking her hard until she exploded on her fingers. After, Daenerys would bury her face into the sloppy, wet cunt and devour it until the woman was screaming her name as her pussy erupted and gushed hot sweet nectars into Daenerys starving mouth.

Gods she was getting horny.

The picture of the brown haired lass from Winterfell suddenly appeared in her mind as it had so often at night recently. She had found herself masturbating to womb-rending orgasms imaging this girl in a hot sixty-nine with her, or clenched in classic scissor fucking in wild abandon. She decided her fingers would be enough as she would masturbate to more sweet orgasms thinking of this plain but captivating wench. She sensed this young woman, younger than herself, was a real dynamic force.

Something about the woman was visceral. Thinking of her naked in her bed had the Targaryen shifting in arousal. She rolled her swollen wet pussy into the hard cold ground as she eyed Barristan to make sure that he was still slumbering.

Naw. It was as cold as a witch’s tit out here. She would just have to wait. There was something about that lass though, just the same. Was she possibly the youngest daughter of Eddard? What was her name? Arya? There was just something about the girl. It was like a punch to the stomach.

Yes. This woman had made a real impact on her.
Sansa

Sansa felt like she was walking on clouds. Margaery was with her, and that made her life complete. She shivered, remembering Margaery surprising her and making such sweet love to her. They had fucked all night long with so many nearly spine-shattering orgasms.

Sansa unconsciously licked her lips. She remembered Margaery cumming so hard in her mouth and the sweet nectars gushing out her spasming pussy and filling her mouth with divine pussy juice. Life indeed was perfect.

Her father and even her mother had welcomed her lover with open arms. Her father’s actions did not surprise her, but her mother clucking and cooing over Margaery was a pleasant surprise. Margaery was attentive and so helpful, comforting her mother with a Tyrell home remedy for morning sickness that had eased her mother’s discomfort immeasurably. With her mother, it soon became ‘Margaery this’ and ‘Margaery that’. Her mother even went so far as to impress upon Sansa that she had better be good to her future wife.

She turned to look at the object of her affection across from her in the royal bath. She had let it been known that she and Margaery would be washing and grooming in the early morning for several hours after an even earlier breakfast. The royal bath was theirs. This would give Sansa time for her to indulge in some sweet carnal play time with Margaery and still be in the first round of war council meetings.

They had fucked exuberantly for an hour making each other scream again and again. Only then did they wash each other’s bodies and hair.

The sex they’d had had was both intense and so satisfying. Sansa’s pussy was still tingling, and her nipples still pulsing from her orgasms. Her body had never felt so alive. Margaery’s form was flushed and oh so beautiful; her brown nipples semi-erect, making Sansa’s mouth dry with want. Margaery hot body always had that effect on Sansa.

They got out and dried their own bodies. They wanted desperately to make love again in the bath but time was beginning to run short. They sat on the benches lining the wall before expensive mirrors that had been installed on one wall.

Margaery moved to sit behind her on the main bench. They were both nude. Marygaery started to work Sansa’s long auburn tresses. She had washed the long tresses in the royal bath massaging her lover’s scalp. That had led to heated fucking and two more orgasms for each. After their latest round of lovemaking, Margaery rinsed Sansa’s hair and worked out the major hair knots and twists. She then towel dried her lover’s hair and used her fingers to work the hair freeing tangles. Then she lovingly combed Sansa’s hair. She got her sweet Stark’s hair completely untangled. Then she brushed out the flowing wavy auburn hair till it gleamed.

Sansa gasped as she felt Margaery’s lips on her neck. Margaery started to nibble and lick her throat.
sensually. She felt Margaery press her body into Sansa’s back. Margaery’s nipples hard again and her now wet pussy pushed into Sansa’s ass. Sansa moaned in hot raw need. Sansa decided she had time for more lovemaking after all.

Margaery put the comb down and her hands came up and cupped Sansa’s cone shaped tits and started to massage them. Margaery rolled and squeezed hard on Sansa’s firm tits. Margaery’s palms rasped and scraped over Sansa’s long thick nipples stunning the redhead with ecstasy. Her fingers squeezing long engorged teats between the side of her thumbs and her index fingers. Sansa pushed back into Margaery and gagged in raw pleasure when Margaery sucked in a mouthful of her throat and gnawed on her throat bruising it. Sansa cried out in pained ecstasy. Sansa felt her cunt gush out hot fuck nectars. Her thighs and mound glistening with fuck juice.

She whimpered feeling Margaery’s right hand slide down her body across her flat stomach as Sansa leaned back spreading her legs.

“Aawwoogggg!” Sansa cried out feeling two finger slip in deep up into her recently fucked cunt. She started to instinctively hump her pussy into the fingers pumping in and out her pussy so deep. The Stark teenager whimpered feeling her lover’s long fingers sliding in and out her buttery cum filled cunt. The long digits plunging deep up into her belly.

Sansa’s cunt spasmed and gripped hard on the fingers fucking her pussy deep. Margaery’s left hand pulled on her nipples squeezing them. Margaery’s hand moved back and forth squeezing and pulling hard on Sansa’s rigid nipples. Each hard squeeze on Sansa’s nipples sent fiery arrows of ecstasy to her swollen throbbing clit.

Sansa was in heaven. Margaery’s left hand went down to her pussy and started to rub and circle her clit while her other hand now pumped her fingers harder and faster in and out Sansa’s drooling quim. Margaery’s fingers slicked with creamy cum and pumping fast now. The Tyrell’s bent thumb hammering into Sansa’s swollen muff and clit.

Sansa’s hands came up and cupped her breast squeezing them as her long fingers and thumb found her nipples and squeezed them pulling on her teats.

“Cum for me Sansa … cum for me hard baby—let me feel your cunt spasming on my pumping fingers baby!” Margaery husked into the ear she was nibbling and licking.

Sansa felt the tension again forming in her belly and her face, throat and upper chest flushed pink and her breast swelled and nipples went diamond hard.

Sansa felt her cunt suddenly convulse and rupture. “AAARRUUUNNGGGGGGGG! HHNNNGGGGGGNNNNNNNNN!” Sansa screamed her body flipping forward and slamming back into her lover again and again as sweet hammering ecstasy filled her body. Her hands jammed forward her palms grinding into her shrieking pulsing nipples as Margaery hammered her cunt and jerked her clit with fast rubbing fingers. “Aawwooggggg! Hhnnng hhngggg Fffffuuuuucckkkkkkkkkkkk! Unngghhiieeeeee! Mmmnnngggghhiieeeeee!” Sansa wailed as her body weakened with dying convulsions of searing bliss.

Thirty minutes later they emerged from the steamy bath feeling refreshed and ready to meet the day.

They returned to Sansa’s quarters, which they were currently sharing. Sansa snickered at how simple it was to bring Margaery into her room. Weren’t they just two teenage girls sharing a bed, innocent as young ladies were? All the nobles thought their girlish tendencies were cute. Sansa wondered what they would think if they had come in the night before while they were sixty-nining, rolling around on her bed devouring each other’s sloppy wet quims.
As had become the norm, Sansa went over what they would cover in the meetings for the day with her lover. Margaery was her equal in intelligence and had great insight into difficult problems. She longed to bring her into the meetings as well, but Margaery demurred. She told Sansa to not think with her cunt. She had just arrived in Winterfell, and would be considered an interloper. Plus, she reminded Sansa she, was only a woman in the conservative north.

Sansa started to get hot but Margaery put her finger on her lips. “We have to work in the world we live in Sansa.” Sansa accepted it, but did not like it. She wondered how to get the North to accept her lover - she wanted Margaery at her side.

Once Sansa arrived at the meeting hall, they had started with the now routine preparations for the upcoming war. The houses and nobles had their conscriptions trained and ready to move out now. The last crops had been harvested and put away. Beef was being slaughtered and being pickled or jerked for the upcoming winter.

The North was prepared to go to war, and Sansa felt like they would be able to handle the South when it marched. Her father getting Olenna to give him her two grandchildren had been a master stroke of genius. The ‘hostages’ would hold back the wrath of Daenerys if she felt enraged and vengeful when her father called his banners and openly declared himself.

The Wall was as prepared as it could be with her brother Jon running it. The Starks again were there when the realm needed them.

The Constituency of Houses in the far North were remaining in place while the forces in lands further South were slowly pivoting North. Supplies were being sent North to the Wall to feed, clothe and arm the forces that would be joining the Night’s Watch within a few months.

When the meetings ended, Eddard called for Sansa and Robb to stay behind. He looked a little nervous, which was strange coming from their father.

He looked at Sansa. “It’s time, Sansa. We need to send our little wild wolf South. It is time for Arya to meet with the Queen.”

Robb whistled through his teeth, and Sansa felt a thrill go through her. They were sending Arya south into the maw of the Dragon. Her first thought was that Daenerys Targaryen would not know what hit her, but then reality struck Sansa. The three of them were as sure as any player of the Game of Thrones could be, but in this game the future was always uncertain.

No matter how one thought of it or put a positive spin on events, it was still danger they were sending her little sister into. Arya may hunger for that danger herself, but it was Sansa’s idea that was sending her headlong into it.

“I will be giving her a scroll to give the Queen. Will you do the honor of telling Arya that she leaves in the morning, Sansa?” Eddard asked with his soft, squinty smile.

“Yes father, I would be happy and honored to tell my little sister the news. She will be so excited.”

Robb came up to her as Eddard left and gripped her shoulder. “I can’t wait to see the Queen wrapped around Arya’s finger. I am thinking we could have a triple wedding in the Godswood,” he said nervously.

Sansa thought only for a moment. “What a great idea!” She just knew Margaery would be excited too.

A lift in her step, she strolled out to the practice yard. Sure enough, Arya was there shooting her arrows at a pin cushioned target, each one hitting the small center ring side by side, with a few partially split from multiple hits in the tight grouping.

“Arya … can I have a moment of your time?” She asked

Arya put down her bow and came over to her.

Sansa had thought to tease her sister with the information to draw it out, but decided that would demean the importance of this particular mission.

“Tomorrow you will be going South to the Queen, Arya.”

Sansa chuckled seeing Arya processing the news for a moment, and then jumping up and down, pulling Sansa into a hug and whooping.

Sansa silently thanked her father for letting her have this moment with her precious little sister.

“Yes! Yes! Oh my gods Sansa,” Arya squealed, shaking her sister’s shoulders maniacally. “I can’t wait to meet her.” Then in a small voice she asked: “Do you think she’ll like me Sansa—you’re the beautiful one.”

“Arya Stark, stop that this moment! You are hot, and any woman can see that! She’ll fall for you so hard Arya … she’ll be begging you to be her wife!”

“I… yes. She will!” Arya suddenly barked, her confidence rekindled. “Oh gods I can’t wait for tomorrow morning!” Arya was still a bundle of excited nerves as she unstrung her bow.

Sansa left her sister with a big smile on her face, and returned to her shared quarters – and to Margaery.

Once back with her love and confidante, the first thing she did was share the news of Arya going South to meet the Queen. Margaery had shared her joy.

Sansa told her lover the only thing she worried about was Arya’s innocence. The Queen was an experienced woman, according to all Sansa had read in her reports. Would she find Arya too provincial and too inexperienced? Would she find her sister to be the unique, wonderful woman she was? She gnawed her lower lip with the fear she had not expressed in front of Arya.

Margaery had chuckled. “Sansa … I think Daenerys will fall for Arya so hard. My grandmother thinks she needs a warrior woman that has not been hardened or become bitter … that still has that touch of innocence to her. She offered me up, knowing that the Queen would only select me if no such woman appeared. Now she will. Arya will sweep the Queen off her feet - mark my words, Sansa.”

Margaery’s full support for her sister made Sansa’s blood flow hot and her pussy moist. She had wanted to make love right then, but Margaery wanted to first go over what had occurred in today’s meetings.

Sansa smiled at her lover. She would have wanted to know exactly what was going on in any meetings Margaery attended without her as well. They were so much alike.

Sansa mused with Margaery on how to get the Constituencies of the South to accept the truth when the time came to reveal it. Why should anyone believe them? No one aside from the North truly believed. House Tully and the Vale only half believed but the felt the need to support Eddard fully. They felt Wall was worth fighting for if only to keep the Wildlings pinned to the North of the Wall.
Sansa loved the intelligence in Margaery’s eyes when she mulled over a problem. The same spark was there when Sansa had told Margaery of Jon and his wives. Eddard had only told her and Robb of the twist of events at the Wall, they had to keep secret the attempted assassination to keep the lords from demanding justice. But Sansa could never keep anything from Margaery.

Margaery had known of the priests from Asshai and their worship of R’hllor. Her grandmother had dealings with one in her youth and had made a study of them. She told Sansa that these priests and priestesses had great power. She described how they could supposedly create horrible monsters from shadows to appear out of nowhere and disappear unseen, even if right in front of you.

Sansa looked up at Margaery when she heard her lover’s voice trail off. She had a distant, thoughtful look on her face.

“You have told me Sansa, how you and your father and brother have wondered how Jon knows so much about the Ice King … it’s his wives. They are spying somehow on the Ice King unobserved. I can’t prove, but I can feel it. I just wonder how they do it...

“What we need to do is get Melisandre and Ygritte to meet the leaders at someplace they must gather.” Margaery paused to look at the map Sansa kept on her table of the territory of the North. “Hhhmmmm I would say at the Frey’s castle … no, it is not on the main route north … Yes. Moat Cailin is the spot—it’s a choke point.

“We will meet the Queen’s forces there and get these Shadowbenders to show the high lords the truth. Then we can move north in unison to meet and defeat the Ice King.”

Sansa felt her heart beating harder in her chest. Margaery was totally declaring herself as hers with her insights; looking at events as a person of the North and not from Highgarden. The Ice King was now her personal problem, too.

Sansa’s love for Margaery grew even hotter. Margaery was born just for her, Sansa’s heart told her.

Margaery looked up and saw the look on Sansa’s face and a brilliant smile appeared on her face reflecting the love that Sansa knew was on her face.

“You are brilliant Margaery!” Sansa gushed.

Margaery preened beautifully in response. She tilted her neck, exposing it to Sansa. Sansa’s mouth watered in response.

At dinner in the main hall, Sansa would tell her father the great idea that Margaery had come up with. Margaery, with her knowledge and cunning, had figured out a way to bring the South into the fold. This might be the final element to bring Westeros together as a whole to fight the Ice King.

Sansa stepped up to Margaery and gripped her smaller lover by the shoulders, then slowly pushed her back into one of the chairs near the hearth. Margaery looked up at her with limpid, burning eyes.

“Pull your dress up, Margaery.” Sansa spoke with quiet command as she got on her knees before her lover.

“Pull your silk undergarments to the side … that’s right—show me that pretty pussy… you’re so wet for me, baby,” Sansa moaned, lowering her face to her lover’s pussy.

Arya

Arya had had a hard time getting any sleep. She was awake and up before the birds even had started to sing for the dawn, full of restless energy. Since went to her window and threw it open and savored the clean pure air. She breathed in deep. It would be a long time before she slept in this room again.

Arya quickly dressed in her traveling clothes. She and four bannermen were going to be riding south incognito. They would be traveling fast, paralleling the King’s Road and only crossing over it to stay at an inn every so often.

Her father had arranged to have fresh horses provided at stopping points all the way down to the Greywater Watch, crossing the territory of the Reeds. They would meet their representatives at the edge of the marshlands, who would then take them to the Seat of the Reeds.

She would lose a day traveling through the marsh, but would make it up traveling down the Green Fork River. House Tully had arranged to have a river galley ready for her. They would sail down the Green Fork through the Twins, down to the Crossroads Inn and then get back on the King’s Road for the final leg of the journey.

Arya looked at the rain clouds. It had been raining steadily, and would make river travel even faster. She was anxious to start off.

She ate a quick meal, then returned to her room to gather her weapons. She had her bow and her bastard sword, along with her precious Needle. She had spent an hour sharpening her swords to razor sharpness. She was going south to become the warrior she was born to be. She would take Daenerys Targaryen as her wife as she had dreamed of for almost five years.

Nymeria was ready to set out with her. The wolf was sitting down looking at her expectantly her long tongue lulled out as she panted. Her intelligent wolf was avid for adventure too Arya knew. They would have many grand adventures in the Queen’s service Arya thought.

Arya knelt before her mighty Direwolf. She rubbed Nym behind her ears liked she liked it. She rubbed her cheek along her wolf’s face as the dog woofed softly. “Nymeria, I want you to range before us. You can’t be seen by anyone while we are on the main road.”

“I am having to move in stealth. In the North, all know of the great Nymeria. I would be given away.” The wolf looked at her with a look that said “you are right all know of my greatness.” Arya scratched behind Nymeria’s ears and the wolf’s tongue lolled out, her yellow eyes staring at her master. The clever wolf woofed and pushed into the fingers scratching her so delightfully.

“You need to keep out of sight until we make camp at night out in the wilds. You must run with your cousins.” The wolf looked pleased at that. “You can be with me in the open again when we reach the land of the Crannogmen, and then ride the boat with us down the Green Fork. You understand?”

“Whoofff!” Arya again was so thankful that Jon had found them their direwolves so many years ago. She hoped that Jon was well at the Wall. She missed his gentle presence. It had only been Jon that truly understood Arya and freely accepted her wild free spirit.

“Good girl.”

She went down the stairs and out to the main yard. There she met the four men she would be travelling with. She laughed and joked with them, building some rapport for the trip ahead.

Everyone quieted when Eddard walked out to meet them. He shook each man’s hand, and pulled them in for a quick hug. He reminded them of the gravity of the mission, and to protect his daughter. The men all assured Eddard Stark that Arya would be safe in their care.
Her father came to her last and hugged her hard, ruffling her hair. He pulled back and looked closely at his daughter. He seemed to be satisfied with what he saw in his daughter’s eyes. He gave her the scroll closed with his seal, and told Arya that she was deliver it the moment she arrived at King’s Landing. The message was most important. She was to only give it to the Queen. It had to be given directly to the her.

Arya told her father solemnly that he could trust her to fulfill her duty to both him and Throne.

“I know you will, Arya. Go and find your destiny, my daughter.” He again clapped his daughter on the back. “You will not fail me or the Queen Arya. You have my full faith and trust. The old gods are with you Arya.”

Arya swelled up at that.

She strode toward her horse, and saw that Sansa and Margaery were standing beside it. They were standing close, but not holding hands. Arya hated that they could not openly show their love for each other. She had seen them in the privacy of the royal chambers holding hands with interlocked fingers, and knew it was what they wanted. It was what she wanted.

She could see herself and Daenerys walking such. The Queen would make it that same-sex couples could openly show their love. She felt it. The Queen would never hide her away.

Sansa looked at her with mirth in her eyes. They both teased her about being so anxious to get off and begin her journey to meet the Queen. Arya could only smile and shuffle her feet. She knew her desire to be off was almost palatable. She was sure it was written all over her face.

Arya enjoyed how she and Sansa finally seemed to be able to communicate with each other as adults now. Finding out her sister was gay too had allowed them to bond. She was truly coming to like her sister. She had once thought such a thing was simply impossible.

Margaery came to the fore. She got before Arya and placed her hands on Arya’s shoulders. She locked eyes with Arya. Arya gave Margaery her full attention.

“You are a virgin Arya.”

Arya looked away.

“Look at me, Arya” Margaery asked in a gentle tone.

“Margaery is not demeaning you Arya. Daenerys Targaryen will cherish the gift you will give her little sister.”

Arya considered that and smiled. Sansa and Margaery loved her and were trying to give her heartfelt advice. She gave Margaery her full attention. She was not disappointed.

“Remember, first suck her clit slow and deep, then suck on it with harsh, fast sucks as you flutter your tongue over it, and then lap, still sucking hard so you can tongue lash the Queen clit’s with the flat of your tongue. Back and forth and vary length and force of your tongue work and sucks. But use lots of fluttering tongue. Not many woman use that technique. It will blow the Queen’s mind away I assure you.”

“I want you to do lots of tongue lapping with your head working up and down. When you work a woman’s clit it is all about friction, rasping sensations and pressure. When you do that, push your tongue down hard into her clit so you can rasp it with the length of your tongue as you lick it. Just keep licking and sucking hard - she’ll die from it.” Margaery told Arya soberly.
Arya knew her eyes were large hearing all this sweet information. She would make the Queen hers. She so wanted to suck Daenerys Targaryen off. Again and again! She had seen women fuck warging through Nymeria but hearing what to do with a woman’s pussy in your mouth was vital information. It would help her rock her Queen’s world.

She would be an innocent true but with Margaery’s advice she would blow Daenerys mind. Arya was feeling more confident.

“Also one more thing. Don’t use this one all the time. Keep it special but use it the first time to blow her mind. Press in on her belly hard just above her clitoral hood. Hard Arya. It puts pressure on all the sweet spots in a woman’s belly. It will make a dying orgasm rekindle and a strong one explode. Got that?”

Sansa couldn’t help but laugh when Arya’s face went beet red. She looked like she had been poleaxed.

Arya was terribly embarrassed, but she memorized the important tidbits of information. She was in debt to her sister and lover. She so longed to make Daenerys Targaryen totally hers and this information would help her so much. She would sweep the Queen off her feet. She could just feel it. She would make the Queen’s hers from their first meeting.

Arya went up to her sister and her lover. They each hugged her tight, and told her to be careful. Arya felt tears in her eyes and sniffled to hold them in. Sansa did not fight it and the tears rolled down her cheeks. Margaery looped her arm around Sansa’s waist not caring who might see. She needed to comfort her woman.

Arya mounted her horse and without further delay her and her men rode out of the gates of Winterfell at a gallop to the blare of war horns echoing off the landscape. She looked back at the gate. Her father, sister and Margaery were there. They waved to her as she rode off. She returned their waves of parting. She then turned around and traveled down the King’s Road and moved towards her destiny that awaited her in King’s Landing.

Arya felt exhilarated. Nymeria felt it too, setting off at a fast run and soon disappearing into the woods. The wolf was going to enjoy her time in the wilds.

Once the castle was out of sight for an hour they moved off the road and kept to the tree line. They did not want to be seen and recognized on the King’s Road. One never knew what spies may be on the road. This close to Winterfell they might easily identified.

Two hours later the horses were at a steady walk between gallops for rest. She saw on the horizon three dots flying high, but below the high scudding clouds. The Queen’s dragons were flying in a straight line. The times before when the dragons appeared, they seemed to lull across the sky with no particular urgency or clear direction.

Not today.

The dragons were flying at an amazing speed. She could tell by the way they were working their wings even more speed was capable from them, should it be required. She waved her arms trying to catch their attention, but the dragons moved straight north with purpose. It wasn’t long before the horizon had swallowed them up.

Arya deflated a little. She loved dragons and she was sure that her future wife had to have been on the huge black one - a big dragon for a tall, mighty warrior.
Arya deflated further when the clouds lowered and a heavy rain began to fall. Even with her long rain cloak she was soon soaked. Her feet became quite uncomfortable in her boots, and her respect for her father and brother rose even higher. To willingly spend time in this kind of weather when it was demanded – it was teaching her that being warrior was not all battles and glory. She felt like a drowned rat.

Her wet clothes clung to her body. The wet fabric drawing her heat from her body. She shivered. She moved on. Her feet feeling wet and miserable as water wicked into her boots. She knew she would have to keep her feet clean and get her boots off at night to keep fungus off her feet.

For the first day the rain would pause every so often, but from the second day onward it was a steady and heavy. They kept off the road by day and traveled the local tracks and animal paths that paralleled the King’s Road. They headed back towards the road to an inn they had marked out on their map for the trip south. On the third night no inn was available, so they camped underneath a small strand of trees that only partially shielded them from the rain.

They had difficulty in getting a fire going but her men succeeded. The fire gave off little heat.

Nymeria came loping into the camp and flopped down, curling around Arya’s feet in her lean-to. The wolf’s body heat felt heavenly on Arya’s cold extremities. Arya felt a little bad for her traveling partners but only a little. Having a Direwolf as your trusted friend had its advantages.

The next morning Nymeria licked her master’s face in the predawn light to rouse her, then was off to join the wolves she was meeting along the way. The nights they stayed at inns on the road Arya could hear the howl of wolves off in the distance. She knew Nymeria would be running with her cousins.

Several times Arya warged into Nymeria’s body while she was warm and dry in an inn’s bed. She had always enjoyed warging into Nymeria when she was on a hunt or running with her distant wolf cousins. Arya saw how all wolves, female and male, bowed before Nymeria’s sheer power. It was the same way Arya pictured both men and women bowing before Daenerys - she commanded that kind of respect.

As Nymeria towered over all other wolves her Queen’s tall stature made her tower over her subjects. Arya would love taming the towering Dragon. She would use her warrior skills and wily wiles to seduce the Queen into her bed. She would figure out the height difference when the time came.

On the twelfth night out from Winterfell they stopped at another inn. They were now some distance from Arya’s home and the chance of being spotted was lessening each day. Much of the traffic on the King’s Road were merchants and farmers who kept very close to their farms.

The northern crew rented a large room at the top of the stairs with a warm fireplace. They put on a change of clothes and put their traveling clothes out to dry before the hearth, reveling in the warmth. The men changed first and left for their meal. Then Arya changed. They had pulled off all the Stark sigils and dressed in plain traveling shirts, trousers and cloaks with the hoods pushed back.

Arya went back down the stairwell to the common room. It was a modest sized room with ten rectangular tables. The tables were able to six people on each side. They were made of roughhewn timbers that had been shaved smooth. The room had two large fireplaces with large fires burning providing warm and light. From the logs supporting the ceiling and for the floor of the second story hung lanterns that had four candles each burning.

A smoky patina hung near the ceiling providing the aroma of pine and charcoal. Two doors with swinging hinges on the North wall gave entrance to the kitchen and storage rooms. The door to the outside was large and had cross braces to put timbers in to keep the door closed and safe at night.

The common room was filled with local folk and travelers. Several pretty, buxom women were waiting on them and serving the customers when a group of young men came in and took a table near the back. Arya and her men were sitting at a table near the center of the room, enjoying a quiet meal. She had her hair tied in a tight braid down her back, beneath her shirt.

Arya eyed the young women. They were quite comely and Arya loved how the three women wore tight tops that showed off their bosom. She was definitely a tit woman. Not having big beast did that to a woman. She loved seeing their creamy cleavage. She smiled where her thoughts were going.

The young woman waiting on them started flirting with her and Culler Reyne. The buxom brunette seemed to prefer the clean shaven look, as the other three men had full beards and short hair. She did a double take when she realized that Arya was a woman, but she still flirted with her which both pleased and flustered the Stark.

The woman went to take care of the table at the back of the Inn where the young men had gathered. They had ordered a few ales and were feeling quite good and rowdy. Soon Arya heard the woman saying loudly, “Let go of me, you’re hurting me!”

“Come on Kaela, you know you want it … you didn’t say ‘no’ last week.”

“That was then, this is now … you’re drunk and you’re hurting me!”

Arya had turned around, feeling her anger boiling. She started to get up and Culler put his hand on her arm. “This is not our place, girl,” he said, not using her name.

Colton, the leading Northern bannerman, stood up. “Lets go over there … Enith,” he said, looking at Arya, “and see if we can be of assistance.” Colton was six foot two of pure muscle. Arya stalked over with Colton to the table and the struggling Kaela.

“Let her go … it’s obvious she doesn’t want your advances.” Arya told them, as the man gripped Kaela’s arm painfully.

“Fuck off you twerp … hah—you’re a girl! Maybe you want to join us.”

“I said let her go!”

The man gripped the girl harder as Kaela moaned in pain.

Arya’s hand flashed out and grabbed the hand gripping Kaela’s arm and twisted it back, pulling his thumb and the web of his hand over and backward.

“Unngrrrrrr!” the man squalled, falling to his knees, his body twisting as he tried to get the painful grip on his hand to ease.

Arya eventually released the man, who surged up and cocked his hand back and threw a punch at her. She easily ducked to the side. He went to throw another punch and his head snapped back with two right jabs and then a left cross smashed into his nose. Blood sprayed everywhere.

“Aaarrgggggg!” the man squealed in pain, his hands covering his nose as blood welled between his fingers. “The bitch broke my nose! The bitch broke my nose!”

The man to his left started to get up but Colton’s fist hit him straight on and he flew into the wall.
behind him and slumped down. Another man surged up and Arya gripped his shirt in both hands, jerking him forward and up as her forehead snapped down in a vicious head butt that rendered him unconscious.

By now three other Northmen had come up behind “Enith”.

“I suggest you all leave now, or I and my four brothers will have to finish kicking your asses,” she snarled.

The men left with sullen glances and muttered curses. The owner of the inn told them to not come back for two weeks and to see if they could learn some manners while they were gone.

After the brawl, Kaela was most attentive to Arya offering her free drinks and food. The owner came to Arya when Kaela was off in the kitchen and patted her shoulder. “Tonight’s your lucky night lass … Kaela will be wanting to bed you!” he said, and left with a wink.

Her tablemates laughed and ribbed Arya about the ‘night of passion’ that Kaela had planned for her. Arya’s face remained red through it all, sure that everyone was teasing her. Then she thought for a few moments of her lack of experience and Margaery’s advice. Would the Queen find her wanting in the bedroom…?

Even if she did, Arya really wasn’t tempted. She wanted her first time to be with Daenerys. She wanted to lose her virginity with the Dragon Queen. She may have been childish in her desires, but she couldn’t help her feelings. She had not even met the woman and she was hopelessly in love with her.

She was tired and told her traveling companions she was going to bed. She was surprised when none offered to escort her. At the previous inns at least one had stayed close at all times to protect her, even though she didn’t need it.

Arya’s chest puffed out. She had proven her metal to her traveling companions. She had shown them that she was a Direwolf! They had seen her practice on the practice fields but she had proven her worth in real life. Yes, she was a Direwolf ready to meet any challenge!

She went upstairs and got out of her clothes and underneath the covers in the bed. She had one to herself, the other four had to share two more between them. She was just starting to drift to sleep when the door opened. She was shocked into alertness when a body got into her bed and pressed against her, definitely female and was undoubtedly naked. It was filled soft curves and warmth.

A mouth found her ear “I’m going to fuck you so good Enith … I’m going to suck on your clit till you scream and cum so hard in my mouth! We will fuck the night away my sweet benefactor. I will ride my plump pussy in your mouth and cum wailing as my cunt fills yours mouth and stomach with my hot creamy cum!” the familiar buxom brunette purred.

Arya was like a cat the way she jumped out of the bed. Her guest sat up, her nude body so beautiful in the faint light of the low burning fire in the hearth. She felt Kaela watching her as she hopped around, putting on her clothes haphazardly.

Her shirt on inside out, Arya sputtered to the beautiful woman that she was sorry but she had to leave because, well, she just had to. Kaela watched Arya as she fell onto her ass trying to put her right boot on.

Kaela must have clued in to Arya’s inexperience. “It’s alright that you’re a virgin! I will be gentle … let me blow your mind Enith—no one knows how to make a woman cum like another woman can—I’ll make you scream all night baby! I’ll suck your cunny so good! I’ll make your pussy explode in my mouth. I’ll lick and tongue fuck your asshole as I finger fuck you cunt soooooo good and make you cum again and again!”

Arya spluttered. She needed to save herself for her so tall Queen.

“Let me teach you Enith! I will show you the heavens of lesbian pleasure!”

Arya became wild-eyed as she grabbed her rain cloak and ran out of the room in a rush. Gods she was so flustered! She had to save herself for Daenerys!

Kaela was left sitting in an empty room, her naked breasts rising and falling with her increased breathing as she looked out the still-open door. Her pussy was swollen and sopping wet and her nipples rock hard and aching to be sucked. “Well shit!”

Ygritte

The flames were blazing in the hearth, Ygritte and Melisandre lay on their sides enfolding each other in their arms and twined legs. They had fucked heatedly for several hours to give them the strength and love they needed to make yet another visit to the lands of ice and death.

She and her wife up in the far north in their spirit form, and settled into the sabrecat again. They had emerged within animal with its wet pelt, covered in filth. They shambled into the camp of the Ice King, their eyes ablaze with blue light, their steps unsure and halting. They slowly walked by the throne with the Horn of Winter looped over a spire. As long as that horn was there then the Ice King was still not ready to move south towards the Wall.

They slowly moved around the camp, searching for the Ice King. After thirty minutes they felt confident that he was off on some mission. Over the year they had been spying on the Ice Wight, and they had seen him leave on three previous occasions. They continued on their walk throughout the camp. They saw several large Ice Wights that were passing a cup to the ‘young’ who slurped the liquid down, their bodies shivering as a sudden growth spurt gripped them. Immediately their bodies grew marginally taller and more robust.

After another hour of reconnaissance they shambled back towards the bog. They milled around, thirty yards from the Ice Throne. They eyed the Horn of Winder with longing, but they could discern the powerful, invisible wards guarding the Horn. The Shadowbenders could feel the stink of the Croyel on the magic spells protecting it. They may be able to breach the wards, but that would leave them open to both attack and death. This was not an option. They returned their borrowed body back to the bog again, reuniting it with its long dead brother.

They struggled back to consciousness in their room and bed. They turned to lay on their sides looking at each other with soft eyes. They had seen horrors but were slowly recovering. Melisandre pulled Ygritte to her and kissed her deeply as the woman with sun kissed hair moaned deep in her chest. Melisandre knew how to put the horrors behind them.

Ygritte cried out into Melisandre’s mouth when her wife slowly slide two fingers deep into her snatch that was already wet. The tall woman from Asshai slowly pumped her fingers in out her wife’s now greasy fuck hole. They broke their kiss gasping and Melisandre gagged out in helpless pleasure feeling Ygritte slide first one, then two and quickly a third finger into her snatch.

They finger fucked each other’s cunt with hard pumping hands slamming fingers in hard and deep. Their cunts making watery noises of being well fucked. They looked deeply into each other’s eyes. Their in sync bodies rose up in hot spasms of raw need. Their bodies soaked in sweat that ran down their bodies and faces. Their yes locked they watched each other fall off the precipice of ecstasy at the same moment.

Then they could not focus on each other as their body bucked and convulsed wildly. Their hot cunts clamped and clenched on the fingers pounding their exploding quims that soaked their hands, groins, bellies and legs in hot gushes of cum. They screamed and screamed in shocking bliss. Their pleasure so intense it was almost agonizing as their pussies felt like they were trying to tear themselves inside out with hot convulsions ripping through their cunts.

They sobbed in spent pleasure and love and kissed deeply pulling sweat soaked bodies tight and enjoying their bodies shared warmth. They tiredly crawled out of their sweat and cum soaked bed. They went to the sofa by the fire. They sat on the cushioned bench. They hugged and kissed sweetly enjoying life and love. They whispered and murmured words of endearment.

They were so in love along with their husband Jon. They had the perfect equilateral triangle. Their love in perfect balance.

The tall redhead grabbed a few logs and threw them into the fire to keep it burning strong.

“You can feel it too, can’t you love?”

“Yes. Strong forces are at work far to the north.”

Melisandre came and sat back down beside her wife, pulling the woman who was kissed by the sun into her side. They both snuggled into each other, enjoying warmth and companionship.

For twenty minutes they watched in silence only broken with Melisandre throwing in a few more logs. They could feel something in the air - something big was about to happen. They waited.

Suddenly, both women’s relaxed bodies snapped to attention. They could see birds flying in a cyclone. A black dragon diving at break neck speed. A man buried in the Earth, the roots of a tree burrowing into his flesh. They saw the Wall exploding into blue light and great hidden magic flaring to life. They saw a frozen man. They saw teenagers digging into the earth. They saw dead animals pecked to shreds by the wildly attacking birds.

Anger, triumph and pain burst through their bodies, one emotion chasing the next. They felt the sting of both ice and heat. Birds were pecking their bodies from their hair to their feet, and screams of pain and anger filled their minds.

Swords slashed and parried. They saw warriors with white hair fighting with dragons. The dragons hopping and shooting out long tongues of fire.

The two Shadowbenders gripped each other. Elk, birds, Direwolves and dragons were in a confusion of fighting and retreating. They caught glimpses of the Ice King and Croyel.

It was a long time before the images faded.

The women were left drained. There was no doubt - something had happened.

They focused and felt the Ice King and his vile son. They were not sure exactly what they had witnessed - so many visions and players were in the flames.

They were sure that when they saw the Ice King, there had been a battle. It must have been with the Queen… but how? The land was not perpetually dark; the fight had been on a hill with an enormous Weirwood tree. The fight had been over the tree. What was the tree? What was so important about
The amount of magic used in the fight had been staggering. The dragons had been enraged as they fought.

The Shadowbenders were not used to this kind of combat. Their fights were usually in the shadows, and more one-on-one. They were stunned at sheer force and savagery of what they had felt. They could sense that no quarter had been asked for or given.

They held and comforted each other.

Finally, they got up and prepared a meal. They had no need to eat, but their husband did. They heated up a thick beef stew. Ygritte put in pinches of herbs to add a bite to the hearty food. They loved making their husband’s meals special for him; they loved making him happy. He in turn was always doing special things his wives liked.

They cut slices of thick black bread and pulled out butter.

They poured the thick mead that Jon liked with his dinner.

Five minutes later Jon returned home. He saw the meal and thanked them profusely for fixing it for him. They loved how he was so polite and constantly thanked them for all the things they loved doing for him.

He hugged each wife and kissed them on the lips sweetly.

He sat down at the table and ate heartily. He asked them what was on their mind, sensing they had seen some visions in their flames. He may be Azor Ahai reborn, but he still had none of his wives’ magical skills or abilities to read the flames for portents of current events or possible future happenings.

His wives told him clearly and succinctly what they had seen in the enemy’s camp while morphed into the dead animals they used. They then told him of their visions in the flames. Jon continued to eat slowly, taking in all his wives told him. He asked them to repeat a few visions and asked a few questions.

Jon finished his meal, and settled on the small sofa in the corner of their abode. He sat in the middle, his wives sitting down beside him and snuggling into his strong male body. They leaned into him, happy and content, feeling safe with his strong arms around them.

He told them he was sure that the fight had been at the Tree of Life. It was the center of the consciousness of the Weirwoods.

Jon guessed that the teenagers they had seen burying into the hill of the Tree had been on a mission to the tree. He proposed that the Ice King was trying to prevent his.

For some reason the Queen was aiding these teenagers. That was a positive. Anything that opposed the Ice King had to be a positive.

He asked them if they thought the Ice King had been killed or crippled. Could the threat have been removed?

Melisandre and Ygritte looked at each other. No, the Ice King was still alive. They would have felt his death. They had learned his presence, his feel, and it was still there.
They rested together, watching the fire burn while Jon stoked it, knowing his wives loved to have the flames burning hot when they were out of bed.

“What do you feel this means my wife and husband?” Ygritte asked.

Melisandre, her usual quiet self, only murmured.

Jon, stroking their hair, could only sigh. “Only time will tell. Only time will tell, my sweet wives.”

Arya

Arya and her fellow Stark men were making up for lost time. They had lost a little time moving through the rain swollen swamps, but the Reed guides they had met above Moat Cailin guided them unerringly through the bogs and quicksand to the floating island of Greywater Watch.

The Crannogmen had led a swift river frigate from House Tully to the capital of House Reed as well. They had boarded the ship almost immediately.

The ship had ten oars on each side, and two main masts. There was a small crew and thirty armed troops with bows, javelins and swords. One never knew when river bandits would strike.

The leader of House Reed, Howland Reed, and his children, were not present, being off on some unnamed mission.

Once they had made it to the main channel they made good time. Arya was happy to get some shelter out of the rain in the cramped sleeping quarters below deck. Nymeria, not minding the deluge, spent a lot of time on deck at the raised stern looking at the passing shores. The great wolf had met Arya at the marge of swampland.

They passed beneath the Twins and continued down the Green Fork. The rain was constantly falling, making everything grey and dreary. Arya was constantly reminded that adventures and conquest were not all about excitement and the things that the bards sang about. The bards never mentioned toe rot or rashes in one’s crotch from being soaked all the time.

She ate meals of beef jerky with hard bread and cheese. Arya had made sure to have some sides of beef brought on board and put in the frozen stores lockup and five thick ox thigh bones for her Direwolf to gnaw on throughout the trip.

They had come far down the Green fork over the course of four days. They had tied the river frigate up twice at night. This was done when the captain told them they had reached areas were sand bars and twisting channels made it too dangerous to sail at night with no light from the moon made worse by the low rain clouds. When the channel was fairly straight and no sand bars were marked on the navigation maps of the captain the frigate continued sailing making very good time as the men oared in shifts to increase the speed of the passage.

Arya climbed up on the deck and looked forward. The rain clouds had finally lifted and all that was left was a light drizzle. She enjoyed the fine mist on her skin, the way it cooled her. Nymeria sat at her side, pushing into her.

They sailed into a section of the river that had sweeping turns with wide beaches. They came around a bend that narrowed with two massive willow oaks on both opposing shores. From the two trees, four thick hawsers had been strung across the flowing river.

Arya’s eyes widened as the Captain of the river frigate sounded a small war horn. Men came boiling up from below deck in response, weapons in hand. The hawsers were thick and strong looking, the
The oars backstroked hard, all of the crew knowing the lines could cause serious damage if the ship struck them at full speed. Nymeria began howling, looking over at the trees. Arya warged into the direwolf, and with her keen eyes spotted archers hiding in the trees.

“Archers in the trees!”

The crew immediately ducked down, the first arrows whistling past ears.

Arya had her weapons by her feet and quickly strung her bow. She heard a shout behind her. She looked back up the river and five large barges were now pushing off the shore from their hiding place in the reeds. The barges were filled with ruffians. Arya had a good eye for martial men being the daughter of a Warden.

These men were not soldiers but instead brigands. They did not have the matching clothes of true armed unit and what armor they wore was mismatched and ill fitting. Arya was not impressed. Still they would have numbers and weapons. Any armor was better than no armor.

She took a deep breath. She looked within herself. She was scared but her father had told her that was a good thing. “It gives you energy and focus Arya. Use that to stay alive.”

Arya warged back into Nymeria and spotted two archers over the left bank. The men sitting on massive bows of the trees they were in. Arya removed an arrow from her quiver and notched her bow string. She raised her bow and sighted her shaft. She took a deep breath and paused. Her bow thrummed once. Quickly with practiced ease of muscle memory she pulled a second arrow and sighted it. Her bow sung true as she released the bowstring by her ear. The men dropped from the trees - one to lie lifeless on the ground, the other falling into the river.

Arya paused, realizing what she had done. She had just killed two men! They were trying to kill her! Killing brigands in self-defense was honorable.

The rails of the ship were now lined with Tully archers. A few had jumped on the aft castle where storage and steerage was and were using the elevation to fire down on the advancing enemy. Where the brigands had mismatched clothes all the men on the ship from House Tully were matched in their garb and their armor. They were professionals.

Arrows were flying from the barges as they let the current pull them towards the boat. The bandits had shields while the Tully men used the ship rails and upper aft cabin for cover. The rails had cutouts to provide firing ports. A Tully man fell dead, an arrow through his throat. Arya felt her eyes narrow in rage. She waited for men to start to move their shields aside to the side to let their bowmen fire, and her arrows whistled into the brief opening, killing the bowmen as they loosed their own arrows.

Some of the arrows missed as her body was buffeted by the men beside her and the shield men closed the gaps seeing arrows flying towards them.

The river frigate thumped into the hawsers and the ship pivoted around with the current to press against the lines that sagged back, but held. She fired arrows up into the trees when she spotted archers up in the limbs. Nymeria was running back and forth on deck, anxious to attack her enemies.

“Nymeria stay down! You’ll get hit by arrows dammit!”

“Arrryyyyywooooooo! Aarrrrrryyyywooooooo!” Nymeria howled in rage. The wolf slunk low to the deck by the rail for protection from hated missiles of her master’s enemies.

The first barges continued approaching the ship. More archers from the ship had killed most of the remaining threats in the trees with unerring, skillful shots at half-hidden targets. The arrows the ruffians shot towards the frigate giving away their general hiding position.

Arrows were fired furiously in both directions from the barges and frigate. The barges thumped into the ship, and grappling hooks with rope ladders caught on the rails. Reinforcements appeared on the shore and began firing arrows at the ship.

Arya and the men on the ship stayed low. The barges were the immediate threat. Arya wondered about these raiders - attacking a war ship was not very smart. A man came up over the edge and immediately fell back with a javelin thrown though his chest. More men’s heads started to appear, some right in front of her.

Wasting no time she picked up her swords. Nymeria suddenly jumped up, her mouth snapping shut on a man’s head, his screams cut off as Nymeria’s massive jaws crushed his skull like an egg. Blood and brain splashed out all over Arya; she never even felt it. Nymeria ducked back down, licking her snout.

A hand gripped the rail and her bastard sword swept back and down, chopping it in half and dropping him back down onto his barge with a ruined hand. His screams of agony filled the air. More men continued forcing themselves onto the ship, some feathered with arrows and more dead with javelins impaling torsos. Several men of the ship’s crew were lying dead with arrows protruding from them.

A group of brigands made it to the deck, and now the clash of swords could be heard.

A shout went up as ropes were tossed from the shore, grappling hooks catching on the ship. Men were pulling themselves along the lines toward ship! How many are there? Arya wondered. A man jumped onto the ship in front of her, and Nymeria lunged at him, backing away as a battle ax barely missed her.

Arya ran by her direwolf. No one threatened her wolf! Arya dogged an axe swing bending low and then lunged up. She shoved her sword between the man’s ribs and up through his heart. Blood poured down her sword and soaked her hand in his hot red blood. His eyes went blank as she pulled her sword out again, and he crumpled.

A man had snuck up on her from behind but Nymeria had bitten his hip and he howled in agony. He gripped his sword with both hands to drive it down through the Direwolf’s skull. Arya ran needle through his left eye and out the back of his head. The man’s body convulsed wildly his limbs jerking in his death dance.

She pulled her sword out the jerking dead man and Nymeria spit out his ruined hip looking for another foe to kill.

More men had gained the deck and some were coming in from the shore too. Arya retreated, finding a quiver full of arrows. She shot several bowmen on the shore to her left and then feathered two men pulling themselves on the ropes towards the ship, dropping them into the Green Fork.

Nymeria was corned by two men against the forward mast. Two arrows shot out Arya’s bow almost simultaneously and both men dropped down. One man rose up with Arya’s arrow jutting out his chest. Two Tully men hit him at the same time with arrows to his upper chest and he fell to not move anymore.
Nymeria ran forward and leaped through the air and tore the throat out of one man and a Tully man split another’s skull in half.

Arya had moved back to get her bow. She dropped her swords to use her bow.

Two more men pulled themselves over the rail beside Arya. She swung her bow, hitting the closest man in the ribs and folding him over. She used the momentary distraction to bend down quickly and pick up her swords again. She blocked the second man’s clumsy sword strokes and rode her sword up his blade into his throat, below his Adam’s apple and severing his spine as he crumpled dead. She arched her bastard blade down and severed the first man’s spine as he hacked for breath killing him.

She blocked another man’s downward stroke with her short sword and needle lunged upward, running into his stomach and up through torso piercing his liver and jutting out his back. The man struggled. She pulled needle down and out and lunged up again piercing his heart killing the man. She pulled her blade out. The immediate rush had been stopped.

She picked up her bow and shot a man through the neck that had been dueling with a Tully man near the second mast. She turned and killed another two men on the barges. She looked at bank and traded shots with men on the bank. She felled three more men. She saw another wave of men coming over the rail. The Tully men retreated from the rail and sent a blizzard of arrows into the men but many still gained the deck. Some with arrows jutting out their bodies.

A large hulk stormed toward Arya. She dropped her bow and picked up her bastard blade. The man’s sheer size would give him power. She blocked his clumsy sword strokes parrying them off to the side or away and down.

After twenty second of furious chops and parries she saw her opening. Her sword bit into the large man’s ribs. He had chainmail on underneath his thick fur vest. Her sword did not penetrate the links but drove them into his body and broke two ribs.

The man staggered but recovered wheezing and swung down on Arya. She pivoted to the side and was behind the man. Her sword arched down hitting the man’s leg at the knee nearly severing his leg. The man screamed and fell to the rail and hung onto it gasping.

Arya’s sword arched and cleaved into his neck lodging into his spine sticking between the vertebra. His spinal cord had been severed with bone splinters. He was dead slumping down.

More raiders were feathered with arrows or chopped down.

The brigands had given up the fight. They were jumping over the rails and diving into the river. They left the survivors to their fate.

The battle was over.

Arya looked around. She saw Nymeria move up to a brigand who was trying to crawl away. Her massive jaws snapped shut on his neck, severing his spine, tendons and veins.

Arya started so shake wildly all over with adrenaline rushing hard through her. She staggered over to the rail, weak-kneed.

She felt humiliated with her reaction. She was a Stark, dammit!

Colton came over to her. “I remember my first battle. I pissed my pants during the fight and threw up after it.”
Arya smiled at him, appreciating his words.

Arya had survived her baptism of combat. She had been afraid but it had only fueled her during the fight. She was proud she had survived.

Her father had once told his sons, and Arya, as they sat around him with rapt attention “I’m always afraid when I go into combat. I use that fear to put me on edge keep me focused. Use that focus to see the whole field of battle and to fight with tenacity. Use your fear to defeat your enemy.”

Arya was elated to be alive. She had killed because she had to, nothing more. She did not feel any special hate for the men that had attacked them, they were just brigands and she was happy that their numbers had been heavily reduced. She had delivered justice as far as she was concerned.

The dullards had fought a wolf and paid the price.

They had lost five Tully men and four were severely wounded. She was angered that men from her mother’s family had died. She burned for vengeance, but contented herself with knowing that the brigands had been so weakened that it would be a long time before they dared attempt another river raid.

The dead had been wrapped in linen and given to the river that gave Tully its life.

Late that night the boat was anchored in a shallow inlet. The men had posted a watch, and a little shot glass of rum had been handed out to everyone to liven their spirits for the battle won. The injured were being tended. Some repairs to rigging and attachment lines was performed.

The men sung and told tall tales of combat and victories won.

Arya had stayed below decks. She had asked Colton for some alone time. He had just smirked at her.

Her hands were sopping wet. Her clothes had been thrown in a heap on the floor. Her cunt, belly, ass and thighs were soaked in her cum. Gods she loved being covered in sweat and her groin soaked in her hot cum. She loved to have masturbation marathons but there was an urgency above just the need to cum tonight. She had already Jilled off four times as her cunt felt like it was ripping itself to shreds and her nipples nearly bursting as her pulse hammered in her swollen bulbs with each gut wrenching orgasm.

She understood the term ‘battle lust’ much better now. The need to find life and pleasure after a hard battle that has been fought and won. She was no longer a novice. She was now cupping her left hand over her muff and pressing it down with her right hand. Her hands covered with soaking cum making them slicked. Her palm a blur as she rubbed up and down her swollen snatch. Her crotch hair matted with cum and rolling beneath her palm.

Her head was lulling from side to side as ecstasy filled her pussy and shot down her limbs making her toes curl and fingers on her right hand claw into the back of her rubbing left hand. “Unggg uunnggg … ohhhhhh—shit! Hhnnggggg hhnnnnggg uunggg!”

She flexed her hips lifting her twat into her rubbing palm. The friction was making clit scream in pleasure and again her nipples were on fire hammering her brain and clit with hot pulses of raw almost agonizing pleasure.

“Oh Gods!” Arya gasped. Her body was tensing up. Her gut wrenching with each spasm rocking her hard warrior body. Her belly turning to harden steel. Her head started to pulse up off the thin mattress. Arya’s eyes squeezed shut tight. Her pussy was pulsing hard and it felt like a fist had formed in her belly and was twisting. She rubbed even harder and faster on her spasming cunt. Her head jerked up high off the bed and then slammed back.

"Aoowwwmmnnngggghhhhhhhhhhh!" Arya groaned deep in her chest as her body humped up desperately her ass cheeks clenching and her thigh trembling as she surged her cunt up into her wildly rubbing hands. The first pulse had stunned Arya. Now the next flowing spasms and pulses of her orgasm destroyed her with fucking bliss “AAAWOOGGGGGGGGG! AARRRUUUNNGGGGGG! AAANGGGGRRRRRR!" the stark fifteen year old screamed as raw agonizing waves of ecstasy pummeled her cunt and ripped it inside out.

Arya flipped and jackknifed up and down as her body surged and bucked as pure fucking bliss burned through her body. Her wails echoed off the wood of her cabin. After twenty seconds she collapsed spent. Arya whimpered and shook violently as strong aftershocks gripped and shook her body hard. Her face scrunching up with ecstasy. Her gritted teeth spraying spittle with her hisses of raw pleasure.

She plucked her bursting nipples jutting nearly two inches up off her barely their breasts. Each squeeze of her pulpy nipples sending arches to her clit that had gagging in helpless pleasure. She worked her body till her body was filled with sweet lassitude.

She knew now she could be a great warrior. She would not shrink on the field of battle. Her father had told her he had seen hulking men that on practice field seemed like mighty warriors indeed but on the actual fields of battle proved to have not the stomach for the fight and shook violently, unable to strike.

Her father always felt pity for such men and sent them back, telling them to feel no shame.

Other men who seemed weak of arm and small of spirit had been lions on the field of battle. Arya was in this camp.

Her Dragon would find Arya to be a fierce Direwolf worthy of her respect and love.

Arya rode the waves of post coital bliss for several minutes.

She licked her lips. Her clit had recovered. She knew her body perfectly.

First looked down her chest and spied her half erect nipples. They were already pulsing and swelling reading Arya’s carnal thought. She brought her hands up to her mouth and put her fingers in her drooling mouth and ran her tongue all over the digits soaking them in spittle. She moaned running her tongue over her fingers.

She then took them out her mouth and took her swelling nipples between her spit soaked fingers and thumbs and rolled her fingers around her rapidly hardening nipples. She pressed in hard rotating her fingers around her engorged plum nipples. They filled with fire now so hard and yet still spongy.

She snuck her left her down belly already spasming in anticipation of sweet fucking bliss. Her belly knew of the pleasure soon to be pulsing out Arya’s core and rocking her body. She slowly slide her first two finger deep up her drooling snatch. More cum leaking down her perineum and soaking her asshole and ass cleft in cum. Her fingers instantly soaked again with her creamy cum. She knew her cunny was full of greasy snail snot.

She stroked her fingers deep into her tight couchie in a slow sensual rhythm as she rotated her fingers churning her inner petals and folds. She gagged in helpless pleasure her head thrashing. Her right hand plucked and pulled on her engorged teats pulling on them making them shriek ecstasy to her brain and clit.

Arya was not even fantasizing about her dragon now. She was just focused on pleasure. "Oh fucking gods" Aray gasped as she slipped in a third finger into her cunny. She stretched out her trim and now pounded her cunt hard and deep. Her palm slamming into her vulva as she pounded her cunt. “Unnggg hhnn hhnggg ahmmnnnn! Oh gods ... that feels sooooo fucking good!” Arya was now surging her hips up with tight swirls of her hips to take her fingers as deep up possible up her now sloshing quim. "Oh yes . . . oh yes!" Arya panted "Yes! Ungghhh! Oh yeessss getting ssooo close ... fuck—shit! ... uunnggg aauuggg aarrgggg!"

It was time to take herself over the edge. She rammed her fingers all the way up her cunt and wiggled them wildly all around. Her snatch splattered out cum as her cunt sounded like a puddle being stomped in. Her right hand flew down and rubbed up and down over her cl. Her fingers flew straight over her cl from top to bottom and back in a blur of fast jerking fingers. Her left hand churning her cunt furiously with her buried fingers.

"Oh fucking gods! AUUNNGGHHAAlIIINNMMGGGNNEEEE!" Arya wailed, her shrieks rising through the cabin in piercing wails of soul ripping ecstasy. The intensity of the spasms rocking through Arya’s body were fucking searing. The blood in her veins boiled with fucking agonizing pleasure. "Mmmnnggggnnngggiiieeeeee! Unngghhhiiieeeeee! Mmmnngghhhiieeiee! Nnnhhhhhiiieeeeee!" Arya screamed, her body jerking and flipping her pelvis jerking high off the bed as her back arched and bucked. Arya’s body was pulverized as wave after wave of an excruciating orgasm wracked her young tight teenage body. Her teenage body shocked with crushing bliss as her womb felt like it had torn out her belly.

Her pussy was spent. She put her cum slicked fingers into her mouth and slowly sucked her cum off the fingers humming in contentment. Her pussy and nipples felt so fucking good. Her belly felt like it was full of creamy cum butter. With the firestorm temporarily abetted Arya’s thoughts drifted back to Daenerys Targaryen. Her thoughts of Daenerys beautiful body filled her dreamy mind. She longed to use Margaery’s instructions to make Daenerys hers.

Her breathing accelerated. Visions of her sucking off Dany had her need returning.

Eddard

Eddard was in the Godswood sharpening Evening Star, the hypnotic sound of stone riding up ever sharp blade soothing. He had had fought Loras earlier and been very impressed. The boy had a tendency to turn his left foot in after a minute of hard sword colliding strokes, though. This threw his balance off.

Eddard had told Loras this. At the moment of being corrected, Loras got a haughty look in his eyes. Eddard had started to feel disappointed, but then Loras looked down.

“‘You are right Ser Stark. I have developed a bad habit.” Loras looked up, smiling. “Thank you.”

They fought hard with Eddard getting in four good strikes. Loras was annoyed Eddard had gotten through his guard, but grit his teeth and kept pressing his attacks.

Eddard liked the boy. He had explained to Loras how he had gotten through his defenses those four times.

Loras had thanked him again. “My grandmother is right, you know.”
Eddard felt his face get a questioning look.

“You should have taken the throne in Robert’s Rebellion. She used to think you could never survive the Game of Thrones, but her thinking is changing.”

Eddard had allowed Margaery to send ravens to Olenna. She could write about anything, but, the strategies of the war council she was privy too. Margaery had easily agreed. “My allegiance is solely with you Father.” That had made Eddard feel so good. He owed the Tyrells that much. To let their daughter communicate with them. Margaery and Sansa had a code to keep information hidden if read by anyone else so only Olenna could see between the words.

“I am honored.” Eddard responded.

Loras had laughed “No you’re not. You would never want the Throne. You are too honorable.” Loras paused a moment “You know, if you weren’t so in love with Catelyn and true to her, I would love to fuck you.”

Eddard had been surprised at that. “I will take that as a compliment” he said with a trademark grimaced smile.

Loras had laughed again.

Eddard continued sharpening his sword. He was worried about Arya. Had he done the right thing? Was it the right decision?

His daughter was well on her way to her Queen and future lover. He smiled at that thought. He and Catelyn were talking together the night before as they lay in bed, about planning for a triple wedding. How to make their three children each feel special with their nuptials.

It was a logical decision to give the Queen a hostage to equal out the hostages he had. Also, he was helping his daughter to achieve her dream. Bran’s prophecy had assured him of that.

_Bran._

Eddard sighed. Bran had disappeared. His wife had been upset, but he had assured her that he had gone to meet his destiny. When he had told his wife what he thought Bran’s destiny was, she had wept bitterly. He had comforted Catelyn, holding her close. He told her he was sure Bran had been selected for this destiny long before he had been born.

Then there were the ravens back and forth from the queen. He was sorting all of that out. Claims of victory that he was struggling to verify. He knew deep in his bones that the Ice King still lived. He was sure Jon would have sent world of their foe’s death. The Queen was mistaken.

Eddard sighed again. He had already made his decisions. He just had to hope that the end justified the means.

He got up and set out to his first meetings with the War Council, which had been routine. It was good; everything was coming to fruition.

After that he went to see Catelyn. She was doing much better now with Margaery helping and clucking over her. The early morning sickness was remedy when Margaery had provided a natural tea drink. It had been a godsend. The Tyrell’s were renowned with their natural homeopathic remedies gathered with knowledge from tending their vast orchids and gardens they raised. Margaery had been a godsend. His wife was older now, carrying a child was more difficult. She was thankful she was no longer plagued with the vomiting and constantly upset stomach.
Margaery is crafty, Eddard thought as she brought Cat a bowl of ice cream. His wife was now berating Sansa if she even looked cross-eyed at the Tyrell, telling her daughter she had better listen to her future wife. Sansa made sure to turn her head when she rolled her eyes.

Margaery had both his wife and eldest daughter wrapped around her little finger. He could live with that.

Eddard made his way to his wife. He sat down and started to feed her ice cream as she preened. He loved making his Cat happy.

“You know Eddard, Margaery is so thoughtful and sweet. Her intelligence is simply astounding and her cunning! She loves Sansa so much. I can’t wait for them to marry! They will make our Houses even greater!” Now it was Eddard’s turn to turn his head aside so he could roll his eyes.

He saw Sansa and Margaery in a clench in the room behind Catelyn kissing. He remembered the days when he and Catelyn couldn’t keep their hands off each other. He smiled and gave his wife another big spoonful of ice cream. Her stomach was starting to show more now, and he wondered if it would be a boy or girl. He didn’t care either way, so long as it was healthy.

That night he had a private dinner with his son and daughter and their love interests. The Karstarks had come in with all the nobility. He had his children’s lovers at the table attending with them.

He told Robb he thought it was time for him and Alys to stop hiding their relationship. He told them as they looked on, shocked of Eddard’s approval of their pairing. He then looked at Sansa and Margaery. He told them he had already spread word of their pairing. He made it known it had his full approval. If any had problems with their impending nuptials to see him face to face. None had taken him up on the offer he told Sansa and her future wife. They had beamed at that. Sansa was thankful that she could now openly show her love to Margaery.

Eddard knew some of the more conservative Lords might balk a little but Sansa had made most big believers in her and were happy to support the union. The war was making many things possible. They could now openly show their affection and love for each other as Robb could show his affection to Alys in public. He smiled seeing Sansa and Margaery so happy.

The dinner went on with everyone in good spirits and Eddard happy that his children had chosen wisely. Both women his daughters wanted to marry were beautiful, vibrant, strong and intelligent. Alyse would make a great companion and pillar of support for Rob when it came time for him to rule the North.

When all started to leave, Eddard asked Sansa and Margaery to stay a moment. He smiled seeing the immediate tension in their bodies, their hands holding tight with interlaced fingers. They looked at him worriedly. True he had just given his blessings but they must have worried that was all for show somehow. No other Lord was as forward in their thoughts as he was.

“Margaery, you have been a godsend to my wife. Your support and love for my wife has made her pregnancy so much easier. I will be forever thankful for that.”

Margaery smiled.

“But I need more from you, I fear.”

Eddard saw confusion on their faces, and enjoyed the moment.

“Margaery, Sansa has told me all the great ideas and strategies you have been developing when she talks to you after the war council meetings. She has given you full credit to me. I thank you.”
“I live to serve the North now, father.”

Eddard felt a warm rush flow through him. Margaery was a Stark now, in all but name. They would take care of that problem soon enough.

“This relay is not necessary. Tomorrow I want you to start attending all the War Council meetings and any meetings I have with my son and daughter. I would ask you to still help my wife. Can you do this for me Margaery?”

Eddard was nearly bowled over by a squealing, crying Sansa. Margaery was standing with tears in her eyes.

Eddard beckoned her, and she came sobbing into his arms.

His family had indeed grown larger. His daughter had chosen wisely.

Between hiccups Sansa asked about the council.

Eddard smiled down at his two daughters. They voiced their concerns of the other lords. “I will handle that Sansa. I have already talked to Rickard Karstark, Wyman Manderly, and Galbart Glover. They support my decision. You have shown that intelligence, cunning and ability to think strategically and tactics know no sex. You have won them over Sansa. You two sure convinced me!” Eddard said lightheartedly, squeezing his two daughters into his shoulders.

He smiled his patented smile as his daughters preened and cooed in pure happiness.

Arya

Arya was so tired. She snorted, remembering how full of energy she had been when she left Winterfell. She had been a child then. The long journey and the combat she had been through had matured her quickly.

She felt more adult, and more the warrior she had always wanted to be. She felt a lump form in her throat for her father. Her father, who never crushed her dream, and subtly helped her to get where she was now.

She remembered her father again and again stepping in with her mother. She smiled at how he would deflect and cajole her mother to let the current incident pass. Again and again her father did this for her.

She loved her father so much.

The trip after the ambush on the river had been uneventful. The men on the boat wanted to chop down the old venerable trees but she and her Stark compatriots had talked them out of the act.

“What did the tress have to do with this? They were only trees. It was man that used them for ill.”

The Tully men had demurred, saying they would let Edmure make the decision.

They had gotten off the boat at Crossroads Inn. They were still in Tully territory, and Edmure had fresh horses waiting for them. They had set down the King’s Road as mere common riders.

Nymeria had jumped off the boat and ran at breakneck speed for a distant copse of trees. The wolf loved being with her master, but she would never miss a chance to run free and find wolves to hunt and frolic with.
They had stayed in inns every night as they were more plentiful in the South. The rain had returned, and Arya had constantly blown air out her mouth up her face to blow droplets off her nose. She shook her head to get the rain droplets off her cowl and eyebrows.

Two nights ago she had nearly been driven wild. They were at the Trout Inn. Fortunately, the men were downstairs drinking and wenching. She had told them to take advantage of any opportunity. Things were much more safe and sedate this close to the Queen’s strong presence.

Nymeria had found a male wolf appealing. He was large and strong for his kind. Nymeria ended up mating with the wolf repeatedly. Arya tried to tune out the images and sensations from the direwolf, even as Nymeria was in a state of high emotion and pleasure.

Arya had lain naked on her stomach. She had stuffed a pillow edgewise between her legs and was humping it wildly. She had orgasmed four times, and the pillow was soaked in her cum.

Nymeria had demanded she be mounted again. Arya was gripping the pillow between her hands and sweeping her aching cunt up and down the pillow that was soaked and slimed with her pussy juice. She was in tune with her wolf and fucked like Nymeria was being fucked. She could feel the shaft sliding in and out of Nymeria’s tight cunt. She felt her wolf’s cunt locking down and squeezing the thick shaft fucking it.

Arya’s eyes squeezed shut tight her ass flexing up and down humping her pillow like Nymeria was being mounted. She felt the male wolf ejaculate in her Direwolf.

Arya’s eyes rolled back into her skull her pussy exploding and gushing out hot floods of cum again soaking the pillow. “Huuunggggggggg! Uunngggggggggg! Hhnngg hnggggg Awwooggggg— ooooh Dannyyyyyy!” as Arya’s body was flooded with ecstasy with thoughts of Daenerys sucking her off. Then images of her fucking Dany as Nymeria was being fucked filled Arya. She so badly wanted to mount her Queen and fuck her with a cock.

She heard of strap-ons at Winterfell but had not found any women using one. She asked Maester Lewin about it. He had blushed furiously and stammered. That night though he had produced a book that explained the sexual practices of Dorne. He had told Arya in that land homosexuality was not suppressed and many women and men slept with their own sex.

The Maester told Arya the book had illustrations. The heterosexual sections had bored her to tears. The drawings of naked men made her skin crawl. The men were hairy and not appealing at all. But the drawings of the women had turned her on immensely. She had found the section the section on “toys”. She saw the illustrations of strap-ons and how to put them on and sync up. It explained the basic positions and how to work one’s body to give your woman pleasure.

She hoped Daenerys had such “toys”. The dildos and butt plugs looked very hot too.

The small party had returned to the road yesterday morning. They wanted to blend in with the crowds flowing in both directions on the road. The Northmen could see gathering forces training and exercising in the fields.

Before dawn, Nymeria returned to her master outside the inn. Arya had journeyed a half mile out into the fields to meet her wolf. Arya had ordered Nymeria to stay in the Kingswood; she would call for the direwolf when the time was right. Nymeria licked her face and woofed before loping off for the woods.

The Queen was obviously preparing her forces for action. Arya could easily guess where those troops might be marching to, but her letter from her father would allay the Queen’s fears. She felt proud and elated that her father had entrusted her with the giving of the message to the Queen.

She was sure that the message of peace and fidelity would help soften the Queen to Arya’s advances. She wondered if she would be sleeping with the Queen on her first night in King’s Landing…

A girl could hope!

The next morning they approached King’s Landing. Arya felt excitement quickly give way to anger when her horse came up lame. The horse limped painfully. Arya dismounted and comforted it. It was not the horse’s fault.

By happenstance a large cart being drawn by two oxen came down the King’s Road towards King’s Landing.

Colton asked the man and his young son if his daughter could ride in the back and offered a gold dragon.

The man had tried to refuse the coin, but took it with Colton’s insistence. Arya was too tired and rain-soaked to refuse. She climbed up on the back, on top of sacks of potatoes.

The ride down to Kings Landing was bumpy and lumpy she clucked to herself. She was definitely not coming to King’s Landing as a conqueror.

She turned around and watched the capital slowly rise up from the haze and rain. It was a mighty city the likes of which was foreign to the young woman. She found herself mesmerized by the sight, enthralled by the many buildings slowly coming into view.

She was not happy she was riding to her Queen on an oxen cart, but a warrior did what was necessary.

They were almost at the gate and she had grabbed her weapons in their cloaks and was getting ready to jump down. At that moment the back axle broke and the left wheel snapped, pitching the wagon over.

“Wwwhooaaaaaaaa!” Arya yelped as she was cast off the cart and face first into the churned mud and filth of the King’s Road.

“Un-fucking believable!” the young Stark exclaimed. She stood up, soaked in mud and other sickening effluent.

Colton came up to her trying not to snicker at his lord’s daughter soaked in mud and piss and maybe something else even worse.

“I think we need to get you to an Inn and cleaned up, Arya” he told her.

Arya was stomping her feet, splashing even more mud up on herself throwing a temper tantrum. “No fucking fair! Arrggggg! Fuck! … No Colton. I was sent here to deliver my message upon my arrival and I am here!”

Colton thought about arguing but she was his lord’s daughter. Maybe the Queen would be impressed with her dogged determination. Arya had definitely been out in the field.

Arya sat her cloaks down and pulled out her swords and strung her bow and slung her quiver around her body.
Nymeria came in out of the mist having sensed her master’s distress. The guards stiffened and brought their spears down but stilled when they saw the wolf licking the girl’s face and her hugging the very large wolf. Unbelievably, the wolf was not a threat and they relaxed.

“Nymeria. You stay here till I call you. Okay. Everything will be alright.”

Woof! Woof!

Unsullied at the gates studied the girl before them openly arming herself. They glanced at each other, then one of their numbers went into the Keep to fetch a person of command to handle this situation.

Arya and her party came up to the gate.

“I am Arya Stark, daughter of Eddard Stark. I am here to deliver a message to the Queen.” Arya said holding out her letter with her father’s royal seal.

One of the Unsullied raised his eyebrow, but they crossed their spears and told her to wait.

She fumed. She was so close to Daenerys. She could feel her body vibrating with tension and excitement.

A man appeared. He appeared to be like the other guards. He was black of skin and slender. He had the air of command about him. He eyed her closely.

“You say you are Arya Stark?”

“Yes I am. I have a personal message from my father.”

“You have not heard, then?”

“Heard what? I have been traveling hard and fast down from Winterfell. I have travelled out in the elements and fought brigands on the Green Fork to arrive here to relay this message to the Queen. My message is very important and only for the Queen’s eyes. It is from the Warden of the North. My father. We have travelled without fanfare to make sure my message is hand delivered.”

The man looked at her with his intense eyes. He looked at the men that were accompanying her as well. They were relaxed and looking around, unconcerned. These people had no idea. He sent a message to Barristan. He asked them to wait.

The Queen was giving audience and he wanted to make her aware of her important presence.

He introduced himself. “I am Worm Tail of the Unsullied. I command the Queen’s personal guard. We guard her person and her residence.” He gave Arya a grime look as she looked at him blankly.

The man asked Arya about her Needle and she proudly told the bald man of its lineage. She swished the sword and made lunges with excited glee.

The man cocked an eyebrow, impressed with her sense of balance and blinding speed. She reminded him of Syrio Forel.

A man came out to Worm Tail. She saw he was agitated and wondered why.

They were finally to be called in. Worm Tail seemed surprised at something. Arya sensed there was a tension in the air though she could not understand why. The Queen could not have known of her coming. Arya smiled. She was ready to impress the Queen with her prowess and verve. She hoped. She berated herself for her flagging confidence and straightened her back.
Arya Stark turned back to the Northerners. "The Queen commands that Arya Stark meet with the Queen alone. She will be safe."

Arya felt the tension fill her men and Colton started to protest. This broke protocol but Arya was sure the Queen was justified in her royal edict. She was from Essos. Maybe things were done differently there. Arya turned to her men.

"Colton, all is well. I will go and meet with the Queen and then come get you." Her confidence was back. When Colton started to protest she assured him she was equal to the task.

That made the man smile. "I am sure you are Arya. Eddard was most wise in his choice of emissary. Go impress the Queen young wolf."

Arya felt her shoulders square. Yes she would.

She was led into the keep. They walked down corridors to come before a pair tall ornate doors that were cracked open. On them Arya saw ornate dragons carved into the wood. I am so close! Arya thought. My time has arrived!

"Let the fucking bitch in!" Arya heard in a high pitched, shrill scream.

What? Was Arya’s confused thought.
Daenerys

The wind blew through Daenerys’ hair, whipping it around her face. She watched the woods and farmlands of her kingdom roll by below, beneath the body of her dragon as his wings pumped from time to time while he glided lazily on the thermals. Her other two dragons flew off to her right, their beautiful bodies glinting in the sun.

Rhaegal was like an emerald taken wing, his bronze highlights like burnished brass in the bright sun. Viserion’s body was like ivory banded in gold. Drogon was black amethyst giving life in the heart of the sun. Her dragons, like herself, were happy to be back in the land of light and warmth.

Daenerys found herself sad that she was returning with only Barristan. She realized that Bran and the Reed children had to walk a different path of destiny, but she missed them just the same. They were good people, all in all, and she needed people like that to help her craft and meld Westeros and Essos into a better, more enlightened kingdom.

Once King’s Landing was on the horizon, her dragons gradually dropped altitude. She led the dragons into a deep descent as she saw that a crowd was already forming in the main square, and people running up onto the rooftops. People never tired of seeing dragons. She took her dragons even lower and buzzed over the city rooftops, making several passes so the citizens could have their fill of seeing her children up close. Rhaegal, unencumbered with a rider, performed tight barrel rolls and quick wingovers to the squeal of children as he barely passed over their heads, showing off.

Rhaegal flew off while Viserion and Drogon landed in the square to let off their riders. Then Drogon took off immediately following Rhaegal. Viserion lingered looking at Barristan. He whimpered until Barristan started rubbing his scaled cheeks with his fingers. The tip of Viserion’s tail started to twitch.

Daenerys smiled at that as she walked into the keep. A page was there, and she asked the youth to go and summon Maester Lape. She was still elated from her combat victory over the Ice King. Eddard Stark had been right about the threat, and she, the Dragon Queen, had eliminated it. Now Eddard could stand down. She loved having that over him.

Maester Lape met her in the hall near her quarters, then followed her in. She stripped out of her riding gear. She felt Lape’s eyes traveling all over her nude body, but she did not care. She was on a high. She picked a slip and went into her royal bath, then opened up the taps to fill the large clawed tub. She knew as she worked the taps her ass cheeks flexed and her high firm breast swayed and jiggled most enticingly. She enjoyed teasing the lustful Maester.

When she had arrived at the Red Keep and inspected her royal quarters, she had been pleased except for the lack of plumbing. She had seen in Volantis the working concept of running water. She had studied the designs of how they accomplished the feat. The high nobility had constructed water towers on the roofs of their lavish homes. These towers were filled with water, and gravity provided pressure to run through pipes put into the structure.

She had Tyrion see if water pipes could be installed in the Red Keep using the same design. Tyrion reported back that Varys had shown him many of the hidden passages, and yes, plumbing could be run into her quarters. She told him to proceed. If it worked, she would expand the use of this technology.

It had worked wonderfully, giving her running water. Better still, there was an open chamber in the area above her hearth and he had installed a large holding tank with pipes going in and out. This acted like a hot water heater for the water stored in it with the fire in the hearth heating it up to an almost boiling heat.

Daenerys loved the near-scalding hot water. For others, they merely needed to wait for the water to cool down and then wash.

She dictated a letter to Eddard Stark telling him that she, Daenerys Targaryen, the first of her name, had met and crushed his mortal enemy. She began to tell the Maester the words and thoughts she wished to convey.

‘I believe you call it the Ice King. He is dead by my hand. Even though you kept this secret from me, I still defeated him on the field of battle. The threat from north of the Wall is no more. Stand down and arrange to come to King’s Landing. This time of separation must end.’

She continued to dictate. She told the Maester to keep his knowledge of this to himself and share with no one outside of the Small Council. While it was a resounding victory, the situation with the North was still unsettled. She did not want word of this to spread yet.

Satisfied, she sent Maester Lape off. She smirked at seeing the bulge in his trousers as he hungrily eyed her high, firm breasts and delectable ass. She had to tell him twice to go to the raven tower to send her message. She smirked seeing him snap out of his lust induced haze to start moving.

She would share the deals with her Clatch of Confidents in the evening. She would relish telling them details along with whatever she could get the taciturn modest Barristan Selmy to say.

She got into the steamy hot tub, and luxuriated in its heat soaking into her pores. She was filled with nervous energy and soon her fingers were playing her body like a minstrel stroking the strings to his lute, plucking and vibrating the strings. Gods she loved masturbating.

Her fingers played, stroked and circled her aching clit. Her other hand pumped fingers hot and deep into her pussy, driving them in hard, her knuckles pounding her muff. Her body began to hitch and thrash as raw ecstasy throbbed out her aching cunt. Water lapped and splashed against the sides of the large tub as he gagged and moaned gutturally.

She wormed her left hand underneath her ass check and slipped first one and then two fingers up into her asshole and pumped her fingers in and out her pussy and ass in counter time. She gagged feeling her knuckles slamming muff and ass cheeks. Her body thrashed as she planted her feet in the tub bottom. She lifted her bucking pelvis almost out of the water. Her pelvis bucked and spasmed hard with helpless jerks of searing ecstasy. She slammed her fingers home burying them to the third knuckle in her spasming fuck holes.

Her eyes squeezed shut and her body began to convulse as her fingers hammered her spasming cunt and asshole. She felt her pussy and asshole clench and spasm on her hard piston ramming fingers. “AAAWWWOOOGGGGGG! AARRRUUUNNGGGGNNNNN! GOODDSSSDAMMNNN!”
Daenerys screamed as scalding pleasure erupted from her cunt and butthole in epic orgasms. “Oohhhhh unnnngg unnnngg Uuuunnggghhiiieeee! Mnnngghhiieeee! Uunggmmiiieeee!” she shrieked feeling her womb rip out her belly. Her head ripped back, legs kicking wildly as a devastating orgasm ripped through her body making her scream over and over in bliss. Her orgasm started to wane but she wanted more. She felt her body alive with battle lust. Her face now soaked in sweat. Her upper body flushed down to her breast. Breast swollen with her orgasm as her nipples throbbed diamond hard.

The Queen slammed her fingers home twisting her wrists to bury fingers deep up her pussy and asshole. Her right hand now slammed into her mons and she held it jammed against her dark pink vulva. With her buried fingers wiggling furiously in her inner folds. Her left hand slammed fingers in and out her spasming tightly clenched anus.

Her world exploded again into shocking bliss. ”Ungghh! Oh! Anngghhh! Mnnnggggeeee!” She felt her cunt clamp down and grip her buried churning fingers in hot spasms of fucking bliss. She felt hot cum pumping out her spasming twat. Her body bucked as successive waves of her orgasm wrenched her luscious body.

"Ungghhhh! Nggghhhhh! Shittttt fuck!” Daenerys whinnied as scalding fire filled her body and broiled down her limbs making her toes curl and her fingers spasming in her cunt and rectum. “Nnnnggghmmmm! Nnmmgggeeee!” she wailed, her body straining and spasming through last throes of her second orgasm. She sagged back into the tub, her body satiated and limp. Her labored breathing slowly steadied out.

She was languid in the tub for a few minutes washing her body with her cloth purring at the smooth silk rubbing over her flesh. The desire to cum rose up again in her young tight body.

She jilled off twice more before getting out of the tub. She smiled at the water she had kicked out to the floor in the throes of her orgasms.

She sent word out that she wanted to have a meeting of her Klutch of Confidantes in the early evening. She wanted to celebrate this great victory with them.

She visited Tyrion and he had been given a short brief by Barristan. She told him a fuller version of events and his eyes grew wide at all of the descriptions of violent combat. Like most, Tyrion was enamored of things he would never directly experience.

She met with Missandei and she too was excited at news of the battle. Between her and Tyrion’s briefs she was brought up to speed on events that occurred while she was gone. The kingdom was still preparing for mobilization.

Missandei asked if the Queen wanted to stand down, now that she’d ended the Ice King’s threat. Daenerys paused to think on that. She decided that until Eddard Stark stood down, she wouldn’t either. Caution was the better part of valor in this situation.

When evening descended, she celebrated with her friends. She loved telling them of her and Barristan’s exploits. She gave vivid details of how her dragons scorched and crushed her enemies; and her exhilaration in combat. Barristan added salient points here and there to fill in the narration. The rest of the Clatch holding onto each word. They relished hearing of the epic fight between good and evil.

She told them of Bran and the Reed children going into the Earth to the Tree of Life. They all contemplated what this might mean. They threw out theories back and forth. For them to risk so much for this had to mean it was important to the future.

They ate and drank. Strong Belwas ate a whole lamb, his face and throat soaked in grease. Once his belly was full, Belwas snored in front of the roaring fireplace. Shadowclaw sprawled out on his immense belly purring.

They played pyramid poker. Tyrion had taught Missandei all of the intricacies of the game. When the gathering broke up later, he was mumbling that between Missandei and his sister he was rapidly becoming broke.

Tyrion hesitated as the others left. “Will you need company to celebrate your victory tonight?”

Daenerys considered for a short moment. “No. I will take care of my needs tonight.”

She enjoyed watching Tyrion’s eyes flare at the implication of those words. Her body was still filled with tension and want. Her pussy quivered just hearing her own words. She smiled evilly at Tyrion. He left with a slight stitch in his walk from his raging boner.

Once she was alone, Daenerys skipped to her dresser and pulled open the top right drawer with her silk undergarments.

She pulled out two gifts from Chataya. Daenerys shivered as she looked at the ivory carved shafts of each dildo. One was about eight inches long and thick with a large, bulbous head and ribs down the shaft all the way to the handle. The other was slender and had a curved, round knob that angled upward.

Daenerys shed her gown and lay down on the bed. She worked her breasts until her light brown nipples were rock hard, massaging her aching tits and pulling and rolling her nipples. She gagged in helpless pleasure, her cunt becoming swollen and wet.

She cupped her breasts with her hands and ground her palms into her nipples, grinding and twisting them, sparks of ecstasy shooting straight to her throbbing clit. She took her breast in turn with her left hand roughly massaging and talking her spit slicked right hand fingers and twisted them on the rubbery nipples. Her legs scissor on the bed feeling the pulses shot down her limbs and rock her brain with ecstasy.

Her breathing was soon ragged with perspiration beading on her upper lips and forehead. She pulled on her nipples and squeezed them in turn hard. The pressure sending lightning bolts to her rigid clit making it pulse raw pleasure deep into her belly and made her cunt sloppy wet with cum leaking out her slit and running down her perineum and soaking her asshole with slimy greasy cum.

She reached for the more slender shaft. She put the curved, rounded knob into her mouth and rotated it, getting it wet and slimed with her spit.

She slid the slender shaft into her sopping wet pussy and gasped. She loved using her fingers, but Chataya had been right - this was definitely a nice change of pace. She pumped the shaft in and out of her cunt, twisting her wrist as it began to slurp she was so fucking wet. The angled head of the shaft rubbed her cunt walls and her inner soaked cunt petals.

She took the other “dildo” as Chataya had called them, and put in her mouth, wetting it. She then snaked her hand behind her ass cheek and found her anus. She gasped with anticipation. She brushed the round head of the ball into her spasming anus. She slowly pushed in with steady pressure until her sphincter rings surrendered and the thick ball head stretched out her anus and then the shaft slipped up into rectum. She shivered whimpering and paused letting her anus stretch out.
The pressure made her belly squirm in aching pleasure.

She pumped the anal dildo feeling her sphincter gripped tight to the shaft. The shaft would not penetrate deeper up her hungry asshole at first. Daenerys kept pumping the shaft, feeling her asshole bow out and then her anus loosened and the shaft started to slip deeper up her ass with each stroke of her pumping wrist.

“Ohhhh gods yessssss! Uunngg unnggg oohhhh fffuuucckkkkk!” She had concentrated on penetrating her asshole. Her right hand began to pump the other angled head dildo in and out her drooling pussy gagging in helpless pleasure. The hooked head plowing her inner folds of her cum butter filled cunt.

She slowly worked the shafts deeper into her belly. She gasped and mewled, feeling her holes stretched out and she shafts working deeper into her pussy and asshole. She gagged in helpless pleasure, feeling the heads of the dildos slip over each other in her belly. “ohhhhh onngg unnggg …. Godddssss yessssss—augggg hhnnnggg!”

Soon she was slamming both shafts in and out her pussy and ass. The ribs on the anal dildo were rippling her sphincter rings, the bulbous head hitting her rings on the inside of her anus on the out stroke before she rammed the dildo hard back up her ass. She had found her g-spot with the other dildo. She angled her wrist to jam the curved head into the spongy hillock. She was short stroking the dildo to rub it furiously into her g-spot. She could feel her hillock compressing with the short jerks of the dildo head rubbing it furiously.

Her body simply exploded. "AAWWOOGGGGGGGGGGG!" Daenerys screamed as her body suddenly stiffened up tight her body straining so hard in shocking ecstasy. Her hands were still jamming the shafts in and out her exploding pussy and ass. “Ahhhn ... ahhhhn ... ahhhn” then her body simply went wild as a second orgasm ripped out her belly on top of the first orgasm “AAUUNNGGHHHHH! UUNNGGHHNNNGGGGGGG! HHHUUUNNGGGGGGG!” Daenerys suddenly cried out, fierce cries of ecstasy that filled her bedroom. Her body flipped and jackknifed her hands slipping off the handles of the shafts buried deep into her belly. Her hands now balled into fist slammed the bed violently. "AUUNNGGHHIIEEEEEE!" Daenerys continued to wail as her body bucked violently as another throttling spasm shook her body. "Oh! Oh!" Her body lurched forward and back with devastating convulsions of killing crippling ecstasy.

She lay on the bed twitching. She would definitely be sending Chataya a gift for these “toys”. She was soon sleeping after pulling her toys out of her still spasming pussy and clenching anus. She rolled to a dry spot on the bed, and quickly fell asleep satiated and satisfied.

Eddard

Eddard read the letter again. He was stunned at the news. Was it possible that all he had prepared for had been for naught? He would be thankful of course, but he was just amazed. Was Daenerys Targaryen that powerful? That great?

He had been so sure that it would take the whole might of Westeros to defeat the Ice King. Eight thousand years ago a mighty army had previously defeated him, and that army still needed great wizards and a foreign hero to bring the Ice Wrights low. He stared across the room. He needed to make sure.

He hoped it was true that the Ice King had indeed been killed. If it was, much bloodshed and destruction would be avoided. He knew that if the Ice King came South he would have to defeated at the Wall. If he passed through the Wall and their defenses, the killing and destruction would be total.
He had called for his son, sister and her lover to come to him. He passed the letter first to Robb. He read it, and sat stunned. He then passed it to Sansa and she read it with Margaery. They too were shocked and questioning after they finished reading it.

“Can it be?” Robb asked.

“How? She is only one person.” Margaery questioned.

“She may be mistaken. What does it take to kill the Ice King? It took the sword of Azor Ahai to kill him before.” Sansa said, reasoning out what she had remembered.

“Her sword is a rune sword.” Eddard told them what he knew of the swords. “They are powerful in and of themselves. Also, when the last war was fought, there were no dragons. They, as we know, are a force of nature in and unto themselves.”

“Maybe these new powers are great enough. Maybe the Ice King is not as mighty as we thought.” Margaery said.

“I don’t think we should stand down, father. If she is wrong, we would be leaving the realm defenseless. We still need to prepare for war and continue drawing the South to our lands and defense of the realm.” Robb told his father.

Sansa and Margaery concurred with him.

“I agree. We must confirm. I will send a raven to Jon and he will tell us.”

“So Bran was not entirely truthful with us.” Robb spoke out.

Eddard had known when his son left with the Reeds that he was going to the Tree of Life. He had kept his thoughts to himself. It was obviously his son’s destiny, and he had to honor it. He was surprised that the Queen was the instrument used to get his son to the Tree of Life, though. Eddard himself did not even know where it was, and yet Daenerys managed to get him there.

He was thankful for that. He had been filled with great trepidation wondering how his son could possibly get through the Ice King’s minions – he had not gone through them at all, but over them.

Eddard found it comforting to see both Houses Stark and Targaryen working together in the land’s defense. It reassured him of his decision to send Arya South to the Queen.

They spent a few minutes discussing Bran arriving at the Tree of Life safely, and the part the Queen played in that safe travel.

None had any idea what Bran’s ultimate destiny would be going into the Earth. They all feared that they would not see Bran again.

It was a fear they did not dare express.

They turned their attention back to matters they could influence.

“How does Jon get all this information on the Ice King? It is uncanny. It is almost … magical.” Rob said.

Eddard considered a moment. It was time to tell his children the truth about Jon.

He told his children what had happened in the Godswood when Jon revealed his true nature. Eddard also told them truth of Jon’s birth. His children had been shocked to discover Jon’s true lineage, but they understood why he hid Jon’s true parentage to keep him safe from Robert Baratheon.

He told them how Jon was nearly assassinated by his fellow crows of the Night’s Watch. Robb and Sansa cried out for vengeance. Eddard smiled at seeing Margaery enraged at her new family member being attacked.

The Stark patriarch calmed them. He told them how Jon had been saved by two female Shadowbenders from the land of Asshai, and that the women were both over two thousand years old. The three younger members of his family were shocked at the news. They sat looking at him wide eyed as his tale seemed to get stranger and more exotic by the sentence.

He told them of their red-headed beauty, how one was so tall and the other so short.

He saved the best for last.

“Jon is still the Lord Commander of the Night’s Watch, but he will abandon his post when the war is over.”

“What? That is impossible!” Robb exclaimed. “That is an oath for life!”

“I know son, but Jon feels betrayed by his brothers … and … he has taken both of the Shadowbenders as his wives. You have two new sister-in-laws. Melisandre and Ygritte are clearly in love with Jon.”

He could see Robb and Sansa struggling to accept this turn of events. In the North one knew of the Night’s Watch and their vows.

“These are extraordinary times, and I support all of your decisions.” Eddard emphasized.

Robb and Sansa looked at each other understanding. Rob knew he had been destined to marry into a Great House of the South and Sansa was definitely not supposed to be marrying a woman.

“I am sure it is Jon’s wives and their magic that is allowing him to reconnaissance the enemy. Somehow they are able to penetrate the Ice King’s kingdom unseen. I am thankful for this. Without their abilities we would not know the severity of the situation. We are still reliant upon on them. I cannot imagine the danger they put themselves in to walk into the den of the enemy. Their bravery will be the stuff of legends. Minstrels will sing of their bravado.”

“How do they do it?” Robb asked, not really expecting an answer.

“I don’t know, son.” He gave Robb a weary smile. “Hopefully they can tell us one day. I am going to ask them to travel again to the far North. However they are doing it, they will need to do it again.”

“I have already sent a raven to Jon telling him what the Queen has said. I do hope and pray that she is right, but I feel and fear in my bones that she is wrong. I can tell by her words she is convinced that she has succeeded.

“If she is right … then I will have to eat the proverbial crow.” Eddard grimaced but with a smile. “It will be embarrassing, but I can live with it if the realm is now safe.”

His children (he thought of sweet Margaery already as one of his) left him. He watched Sansa and Margaery leave with hands clasped and fingers intertwined. Margaery lifted their hands up and kissed Sansa’s. Sansa leaned into Margaery and kissed Margaery’s temple. Eddard couldn’t help but smile at the display of sweet affection. He was a quiet man who controlled his emotions, but he could still be quite touched by them at times.
He slowly walked out the Great Keep and made his way to the Godswood and entered into the sacred grove. He loved the sense of peace he always felt walking into this realm of the old gods. He sat down with his back to the Weirwood tree and started to sharpen Evening Star. The rhythmic scraping of stone on metal let him relax and reflect. These were indeed great times and he hoped to navigate them with honor and perception.

He slowly got up and leaned against the Godswood heart tree. He listened to the wind blowing through the leaves that clung to the branches.

He listened there a long time. He felt the rhythm of the Earth through the tree. He was even more sure now that the Ice King was alive, but he also sensed something else - he sensed the Ice King had been gravely harmed, and there was nothing more dangerous than a wounded animal.

He would have to wait for word from Jon on that. He would have to rely on his son’s wives. He was just thankful that his son had his wives. He shook his head. Two wives. His other son was marrying a woman that he was not supposed to. Thankfully, Lord Karstark supported the marriage. It did make his family more powerful, after all.

Then there was Sansa marrying Margaery. He had to give Olenna his thanks. Her easy acceptance of her granddaughter’s sexuality made it easy for him to accept it as well. Sansa had made an outstanding choice. Margaery loved Sansa absolutely, and, better yet, she had wrapped Cat around her little finger. He smiled leaning into the tree and listening to the wind sigh through its limbs and leaves.

He thought of Arya on her way south to the Queen. She was surely heading into danger, but he trusted his instincts and Bran’s prophecies.

He sighed, leaning back into the Weirtree, finding comfort from the old gods.

He had three weddings to plan for.

Melisandre

Melisandre and her wife had been shocked when their husband read the message from his father, stating that the Ice King was dead. They sat around the table discussing the possibilities.

They had seen that the Ice King had again been away from his camp on their last clandestine surveillance with their saber cat as camouflage. This was not unexpected. He was the Grand Marshall of his kingdom. He had disappeared before on missions. Jon had explained to them that was to be expected of a military commander. Whatever else the Ice King was, he was still a commander of his forces.

Eddard had told his son the battle between the Queen and the Ice King had been truly epic. She was convinced he was dead.

This explained the riot of images they had seen in the flames the week before. The images of dragons and glimpses of beings of ice had made it clear that a battle between the forces of Ice and Life had been fought.

They had assumed it involved the Ice King, but had not been completely sure. The images of the skies filled with birds, direwolves, and giant elk had confused the images. Why were all those other animals involved?

They had felt the emotions of the combatants, the entities in the fight filled with confusion, anger, fear and triumph.
Jon fully explained the Tree of Life to them. They had no concept of this Tree in their religion.

Melisandre expressed her inner doubt. “I came all the way from Asshai to prepare Jon to fight. To become Azor Ahai reborn.” Melisandre murmured, looking into the flames.

She paused and then looked at Ygritte with concerned eyes.

Ygritte smiled at her wife. “Don’t worry that pretty red head of yours, my love. It brought you to me, and that is all I am worried about. We will meet the destiny that R’hllor has set before us.”

“But if the Ice King is defeated without our direct involvement, it means that R’hllor has been totally wrong. He is all knowing. We may not fully understand the images in the flames. We have both seen the portents in the flame. Jon is to confront the Ice King along with the Dragon and Direwolf.” Melisandre countered. “How can this be, Ygritte?”

“Maybe R’hllor knows nothing, my sweet wife.”

Jon smirked seeing Melisandre lunge over and put her palm over their wife’s mouth as she looked around fearfully.

Ygritte licked Melisandre’s palm and she shrieked, pulling her hand away laughing.

Ygritte continued with her analysis. “We both know who the Dragon is. Daenerys Targaryen. Eddard Stark has told us that the Direwolf is to be your sister, Arya. She is to go to the Queen and become her lover. Is she a great warrior, husband?”

Jon paused, thinking. “Arya was always fiery and passionate. She was still very young when I left for the wall. I gave her a rapier-like sword we called ‘Needle’. She was already very skilled with the bow - a natural.”

“If she continued with the sword, who knows. It would seem she did. I am happy for her. She always felt hemmed in by our mother. She wanted to be a warrior since she was little. She always wanted to hear the stories of dragons of House Targaryen and especially the stories of the two dragon queens, Visenya and Rhaenys.”

“I am not surprised that Bran prophesied that Arya is to wed the Queen. It just fits. Hope she comes to the fight with a kick-ass sword!” Jon joked.

The wives looked at each other. Jon never japed!

“Do you have the strength to go back north? I know you normally need two weeks to recover and it’s been only one. I can share my strength”

Melisandre shook her head no and gripped Ygritte’s hand, sensing she was going to accept the offer.

“No Jon. We are strong enough ourselves. You will be diminished for a month or more if we take some of your blood. No matter how powerful you are it will sap your strength. And you may need it a moment’s notice.”

Ygritte immediately acquiesced.

Jon went back to his duties as Lord Commander, knowing his wives had to twine their souls for the ordeal before them.

For the next several hours, the women fucked hotly, their orgasms so intense and powerful as they used sex to truly unite their bodies and souls. Soaked in sweat and cum, they were lying on their sides with Melisandre pulling Ygritte tight to her full, curvy body, their tongues entwined deep in Ygritte’s mouth, wetly wrestling as pure love flooded their bodies and souls.

Their souls slipped the bounds of mortal flesh. United, they quickly flew north, the leagues falling behind them in moments as they went to the bog that housed their dead cohorts in their spying on the Ice King. Their mystical energies paused over the bog, and then settled into the muck and filthy water.

Twenty minutes later the saber tooth cat clawed and pushed itself from the bog. It stumbled to the shore, and with its eyes aglow with blue flame shambled forward.

It stopped immediately.

The two Shadowbinders could see a major difference from the far edges of the Ice King’s camp. The camp was agitated and almost in disarray.

Normally, the dead merely stumbled and moved aimlessly from one horizon to the other. Now they were jerking and slamming into each other. The dead were falling down and rolling around with jerks before resuming their upright stance and again lurching almost violently around.

Loud keens could be heard. They spotted the sources. Many of the Ice Wrights had their heads cocked back, keening. Some were moving with purpose from place to place, obviously asserting some measure of control.

A shock had definitely hit the army of the far, deep north.

The Shadowbenders made their cat jerk and stumble to its knees, and then pushed it forward to blend in with the chaos. Many of the Ice Wrights were barking and talking excitedly in their strange warbling language. The witches could hear the fear in their tones.

They stumbled and rolled towards the throne of the Ice King, pausing at what they saw.

A raised, icy bed was off to one side of the ice throne. On it laid the Ice King and his vile demon baby son. They knew nothing of these detestable beings, but they could clearly see and feel the emanations from the entities on the ice brier. They had been severely injured.

They saw several rings of Ice Wrights standing out from the bed with their back to their father, swords drawn. The witches could feel the ire and determination radiating off of their rigid, freezing bodies.

Though the Ice King had been severely injured, the Shadowbenders could not attack to finish the weakened enemy. Their feline host would be cut to ribbons long before they could reach the fallen Ice King.

They could see that both Ice King and his son both looked wane and dissipated; drained of whatever they called life. The Ice King lay prostrate on his side with his son violently chewing on his throat, drinking his father’s blood. The Ice King’s head lulled on a weak, flaccid neck. His eyes had always seemed to burn with blue fire and purpose - now those eyes were dull and listless, unable to focus.

They watched as the tallest, strongest Ice Wrights came up to the brier. They each in turn tilted their father’s face up, gripping it and pulling his mouth open. Leaning down, they regurgitated their magical essence into their father’s mouth. He gulped and shook as he drank down the life giving sustenance his sons freely granted him.
They had fed from him, and now they returned to their father in his time of need.

Trickles of hot, pulsing blue life trickled down the Ice King’s cheek. He was still prostrate and disorientated, but they could sense his slow recovery continuing as he fed.

The witches stumbled their sabretooth on. They moved around the extensive camp in a discordant dance.

They saw that large Ice Wrights had taken over feeding the youngest as they grew and matured. Others moved around the dead making sure they were under their full control. They had retreated deep into their host when one came walking by, peering at the dead - but it had never sensed their presence. They slowly shambled back to their bog, sinking ever deeper into the brine.

Within a few minutes the saber cat was lying beside his long dead brother in life. The witches’ life essence surged up out of the bog and hesitated several hundred feet above the camp, where they looked down for several short seconds before they fled the far north to return to the warmth of their bed.

As they came back to themselves, Jon was sitting in his chair by a blazing hot fire in the hearth, knowing his wives would need that warmth. He had also covered them with a thick bearhide quilt. He heard their whimpers and got up from the chair. Naked, he crawled into bed with his wives.

They snuggled into his side shivering as his body helped warm their own. They were exhausted. Their bodies had not fully recovered from the last time they had travelled, and now they were spent.

They tiredly told their husband all they had seen in the far flung camp of their enemy. The Ice King had indeed been gravely injured, but he was alive and being healed by his many sons. They discussed what they had seen in Ice King’s camp. None knew how long it would take the Ice King to heal.

Jon thought that if he was constantly fed then his recovery would not take all that long.

“He has been severely hurt Jon.” Ygritte said in a tired, raspy voice.

“Yes my sweet husband … the Dragon Queen severely wounded both the Ice King and that vile growth that feeds on him. I think I saw a sword wound on its back that has half healed.” Melisandre added, her voice weak.

“That is all good news my sweet, wonderful wives. I just fear the wounded beast.” Jon said.

Jon knew his wives were exhausted and what they needed. He got out of bed and put more logs on the fire, making the room hot. Then he pulled the covers off of his exhausted wives. He shifted their spent bodies so that they were lying side by side, their heads on pillow so they could watch him. He had their legs over the edge of the bed. He loved it when they watched him going down on them.

First with Ygritte he settled her legs on his shoulders and then buried his face in heaven. He buried his face deep in Ygritte’s wet cunt and started to suck her off hotly. She cummed screaming wildly throwing her exploding cunt up into his face as he drank down gushes of hot sweet cum.

Then he did the same with Melisandre. He loved feeling her strong thick muscular legs gripping his ears hard and tight as she wailed her cunt exploding in his mouth as he sucked in most of her cunt into his mouth where he ferociously sucked and tongue polished her rock hard clit. Gods her cum was so sweet as it overflowed his mouth and ran down his chin and throat. He sucked off his wives again and again, their hands jamming his face deep into their swollen cunts with clenched fingers and screamed in love, pleasure and need as he spent long hours sucking them off. He gave them life and love as they gave him them their sweet cum.

Ice King

Ice cold blue eyes surveyed his kingdom. The Ice King was filled with rage at his humiliation and near death. That thought kept creeping into his thoughts. He had never felt such raw, naked power.

He still remembered the burning agony he had felt when Azor Ahai sliced his sword deep into his body, its fiery heat cooking his organs and melting them. He fell to his knees and looked up weakly as the cursed man lifted his sword back over his shoulder, and then his life ended when the sword decapitated him.

This power of the Dragon Queen was of another sort. The power of her dragons was like the sun come down to Earth. Their might and speed were simply shocking as well. Her own sword did not burn, but was filled to overflowing with magic that was every bit as potent as Azor’s had been.

His son had assured him that as long as he drank from his father he was invulnerable to any weapon this puny woman could wield. His son had been wrong. Her sword sliced through his magical aurora as if it did not exist.

Along with her sword, her dragons were mighty and dire. He knew of fire, but he had not grasped the pure, blazing heat of their flames. He had recalled only the puny fires of the humans he killed so many times. Their mightiest blazes were nothing compared to the fire of dragons. Not only were their flames the purest heat, they were laced with heavy magic. He had barely survived their licking tongues trying to consume and unbind him.

He had underestimated this human and her dragons. They had not existed when last he walked his world. He knew now that this woman and her dragons came from a doomed, long dead land called Valyria. He had been so sure in his arrogance that he would easily vanquish this Queen and her dragons, adding them to his army.

Instead, he ended up lucky to survive their first battle.

He was already devising a plan to remove the threat. The woman and even her mighty magical dragons were warm blooded, and had to accede to their body’s needs. He would use that against them.

Somehow, the dragons had seen him where none should have been able to. He had thought much on this and still was no closer to a resolution for that problem, but, it didn’t matter. He was sure his enemy would meet him at the wall of ice. There he would wait, and strike when the moment was right.

His son told him he would weave stronger magical wards next time. They would defeat the dragons, and then the woman and her allies. Also, Ice Fang would be ready to sweep the skies clear if needed.

The Ice King was cautious by nature. He still wanted to grow his armies, but his crushing defeat had convinced him otherwise. He was sure he had time. The humans were divided. Plus, his defeat had appeared to be complete. He would not be surprised if they did not assume he was dead. The Starks would know otherwise, but it did not matter. The enemy had traitors in their midst and did not even know it.

His strength had been almost restored, and he no longer needed to feed from his strongest children. His son had recovered his strength as well, and was in the process of completing the restoration of his father.

He was proud of his children giving to him freely and with total love and devotion. They had fed him in fidelity.

He had changed his mind with his defeat. He would finish growing his youngest children, he had no reason to delay after that. He would need only a month or two more to finish their maturation.

He had developed a plan of deception to lull the hot bloods into a false sense of complacence that he would use that to fall on them unaware. He would enjoy shattering their armies and then falling on their unprotected weak – the elderly, women and children. He would kill them all except the male children young enough to be converted to be his own.

He would then pause long enough to grow those new children. Then, he would freeze the ocean between the land the hot bloods called the fingers to the land mass to the east called Essos.

Then the carnage could continue.

He sat on his ice throne ran his cold fingertips over his Horn of Winter. He wondered who had created this weapon. It did not matter, really, but he would use it against the hot bloods. He looked at the runes. They were foreign to him, and his son could not read them either. In fact, he refused to touch it at all - he said the magic contained in them was strong and fatal to him.

The length and shape of the horn, combined with the runes were for the unbinding of old, pure magic which the Wall and the Croyel himself were both composed of. Whoever had created the horn had been enemies of many things, his son whispered to him. They had an equal hate for the humans, and for magical creatures such as he.

The Freys and Boltons told the Ice King that Eddard Stark was mobilizing and working to draw the South up north. They would align their forces to fall on the unsuspecting armies with extreme force and violence. They would kill and sow confusion in the rear of the enemy.

The Ice King continued to study the horn, thinking about how the humans seemed to love killing each other. He in many ways could not understand them. Never among his sons had any even conceived the idea to kill one of their own. It made no sense. It was one more reason to kill them all. Any species that would kill their own did not deserve life.

Although he would never allow any to know except for his son with his intimate link to him, he feared this woman with white hair and violet eyes. She was a force every bit as powerful as Azoh Ahai had been. Her dragons only multiplied her strength to near reckless measures.

She too could conquer the world if she chose to, though she did not seem to have the desire. She was still weak in that regard, like the rest of her kind. You were supposed to use power to conquer and subject all others to your will.

The Ice King could not let the woman live long. With three dragons she was very formidable force. If she were to add to her numbers of dragons she could become completely unmanageable, reaching a level of strength and magical power that even he and his son could never hope to overcome no matter how powerful they became.

Interrupting his musings, his three oldest and strongest sons came to him. They bowed before him, then touched their foreheads to his feet in subservience. Then each rose to him until their lips melded, and they regurgitated into their father’s mouth as he did likewise into theirs. Their essences flowed from mouth to mouth in an intimate kiss that had no emotion.
The Ice King bonded even more strongly with his mightiest. Each son kissed their father deeply as their vomit mingled and interacted, and the mixed fluids were swallowed by each. By this means the Ice King made sure that his most powerful and intelligent sons remained completely tied and subservient to him and him alone. They could not even conceive the thought of rebellion or freedom from their father.

His Croyel son still mulled and at times gibbered about the Old Lords and the Forbidding buried deep in the Wall. He had tried to compel his father to go south to blow the Horn of Winter and bring the Wall down. The Ice King had to gnash his teeth several times to resist the creature’s will. Eventually he had to threaten his son with his removal from his body.

The Croyel had been smug until the Ice King used his body’s frozen properties to wall off his blood from the Croyel’s fangs. The Croyel had screamed in fear when the frozen walls had channeled away the blood of this father. It needed to feed!

It had bent to his father’s will.

He told this son to be patient. Soon. Soon he would be ready to strike. He would kill the dragons first. Then he would kill the Dragon Queen. After that, the defeat of his other enemies would be assured. He would defeat them all, and the Wall would come down.

First he would conquer Westeros, and then Essos.

Then he would remake the North of the world in his image.

He and his son would then plan for the move to the Southern Hemisphere of his world.

He would find these ‘Old Lords’ and crush them.

He had even conceived the desire to travel to Elemesnedene the home of the Elohim and defeat them. For some reason when he thought about this his son became most agitated and fearful.

No matter. All who had hearts that beat hot blood would one day die at his hands.

Daenerys

Daenerys’ initial elation and supreme confidence in her victory over the enemy of Eddard Stark had slowly faded over the first days, and now weeks since her initial raven to Winterfell.

Her elation slowly turned to sullen resentment and a feeling of gloom. She could not at all understand why Eddard Stark had not immediately sent a raven back with gratitude, swearing total allegiance to her.

She had defeated his enemy, gods dammit!

She had told her Small Council to keep these events to themselves until the North stood down.

She had been shocked by their attitude. She knew they thought she was exaggerating her exploits; putting a magical spin on events that had none. She understood better the views of Barristan and Tyrion in their Klutch meetings in her quarters.

She rode dragons but they had become common and almost mundane to the citizens of Westeros already. They had nearly lost their allure of the mystical. Plus, dragons had been alive and vital until just less than two centuries ago. Even with that short span of time, she had seen that the memory of dragons were becoming myth. The Ice King was eight thousand years ago. The people of Westeros simply could not believe in him.

She understood their reservations.

She might have thought like them if not for her past. Her experiences with Mirri Maz Duur, the House of the Undying and its warlock masters, the Undying Ones, and her fight with the ur-viles by her side had taught her that magical beings did indeed exist. She had suffered at their hands, and in the case of the ur-viles they had aligned themselves with her even though to this day she was still not sure why.

It was for these reasons that when she had first heard of the Ice King, she had been predisposed to believe in him and his minions.

Then she fought them and defeated them, and no one from Westeros truly believed her. It was in some ways maddening. And Eddard was not making it any easier. His silence was beyond frustrating.

Daenerys now wondered if she had made a mistake in her boasts in her initial ravens to Winterfell. But she had been so sure of her victory - she had a right to boast!

In her meetings with her Klutch of Confidents she had outright demanded they tell her why Eddard had not responded. She knew they could not tell her, but she really just needed to vent. It made no sense.

Missandei had conjectured that he must have some means of gathering reconnaissance on his traditional enemy. Maybe it had given him some insight that the Queen did not have.

Daenerys’ pride did not like the sound of that. She had become sullen for the rest of the night with her close friends.

By the next night she had to accept maybe Eddard knew more than she did about his traditional enemy. But still, she had seen the Wight burn and die underneath Viserion’s relentless assault.

She had. Hadn’t she?

Her confidence was not bolstered when Tyrion asked her if she had seen the Ice King die.

“YES! Why do you keep asking me that?!”

“You saw him die? You saw the body?”

“You know I didn’t—they evaporate, dammit!”

“So you saw the Ice King’s body do this? Evaporate? Did the thing on his back also evaporate away?”

Daenerys had at first yelled back that “Yes I saw him die!”, but really she was not so sure. In fact the more she thought about it, the more she knew she didn’t see it die in the same way as the others.

Finally, she told Tyrion after several nights of going over and over the battle with the Ice King in her mind.

She confessed that she had not seen the actual dying of the Wight - but just the same, he had to have been killed. Viserion was absolutely savage in his attack. She had seen the magical shields they used to protect themselves crack and then shatter. Viserion had continued to breathe fire and stomp on her enemies after this. They had to have died, and his savage attack just clouded their actual death from her eyes.

Barristan told his fellow Klutch members that in combat it was nothing but a swirl of confusion. What you could be absolutely sure of in the heat of battle could come to seem hazy and uncertain afterwards.

Daenerys still felt certain in her heart that she had killed her enemy. It was not about pride, it was that nothing could have survived that direct savage prolonged attack. Nothing.

Daenerys asked Tyrion and Barristan since they knew the man why he would not respond to her letters. She may have been a little pompous and overly proud to begin with, but why hadn’t he responded with anything?

She had waited for days to receive a reply before she sent more ravens to the North. First, asking for a reply and now out right demanding a reply. She had saved his ass! Any response would have been better than this infernal silence.

The lack of communication was driving Daenerys crazy. She wanted to work with this man, but he absolutely refused.

Barristan and Tyrion had no answers for her. His behavior was indeed most provocative – but in actuality he had done nothing that could be considered sedition as of yet. Still his silence provoked her. The insolence of the man! Daenerys was positive that in some perverse way he wanted her to attack him. They only idea that made sense was that Eddard Stark wanted to draw her to fight with him at the Wall.

The reactions of her Small Council to her descriptions of her fight beyond the wall had been equally maddening. She had asked them over the last weeks what they thought of her fight. They had told her that she must be mistaken about the nature of her foe, that they had only appeared to be something magical from the distant past.

They must have had some strange armor that protected them from the fire of her dragon. Some strange relic of Valyrian make, probably. She had been confused by all the snow and cold, and the intensity of the fight.

She had never considered bringing back some of the now still carcasses of the dead that had once risen in animation. She knew they would have just discounted the evidence.

She was not sure of anything after a month. She wanted to just put it all behind her and govern her new kingdoms. She’d had enough combat and wars to last a life time. She wanted to rule in peace, and bring about a golden age.

This whole situation threatened to derail everything. She absolutely did not want to use her dragons against the land of her birth. Eddard had given her an out with the hostages he had taken. Mace was still screaming for Eddard’s head but he also made sure to tell her to ‘not get carried away’ with any assault on Winterfell. He wanted his children safe.

Olenna was still communicating through her backchannel that Mace was doing this more to save face than anything else. Mace knew his children were safe from harm in Winterfell and from the Starks. Still, she was being goaded into taking action, and action she would take if she had to.

The Houses under her sway had fully trained their forces now. It had been a generation since the realm had last seen major combat. It had taken time to get men who had never held a weapon competent in their use - she did not want Knight fodder. Anyone who fought with Daenerys Targaryen was to be capable with their weapon. With her leadership their lives would not be wasted on the field of battle.

She had cycled her Essos forces back to their homelands. Now she had their navies again streaming back to lower Westeros and strengthening her blockade. She wanted nothing going to beyond the Wall.

She had kept her mercenary companies in the wastes of Dorne. They were well supplied with resources gleaned from Essos, and had been training constantly. She would intersperse these companies with the weaker forces under her command. They would provide strength and backbone to men who had never seen war, and they would continue the training of these vassals.

She had kept a portion of her mercenary companies in the free cities ready to move. They had trained hard to maintain combat shape while enjoying the whorehouses and spending their wages in those cities, making both the merchants and the prostitutes happy.

Troop ships were now in those ports. Those men were to head to the beachheads just below the New Gift, the Weeping River and between Ramsgate and Oldcastle. She had small holding forces in those beachheads. Soon they would be filled with trained fighters ready to take the fight to House Stark if necessary, or to the Wall if that was the measure she should take.

She sat alone in her chambers. She had refused Tyrion’s offer to have Chataya bring her a beautiful woman to wile away the night and get some ‘rest and fun’ as Tyrion put it. Lately, she had wanted to simply masturbate. She was not sure why, but the allure of sleeping with different women had, for now at least, lost its appeal.

She was far too wound up for that anyway. She felt like an overwrought spring. Damn that Eddard Stark. If he would just communicate with me, I would side with him in an instant - if he would but give me a chance!

The Great Houses were ready to march at her command. Dorne, the Stormlands, and the Reach were firmly behind her without any fear of chicanery. These houses had reason to follow her loyally.

The House of the Kraken were still a pain in her ass, but in some ways this had worked out for her. She was keeping much of the forces of Casterly Rock in their native stronghold to keep an eye on the Iron Islands. She was keeping the navies of both House Lannister and Tyrell on the western coast of Westeros. She knew the Iron Islanders would use any weakening of those forces to raid and marauder up and down the coast.

She had the forces she needed. Her problem was she was still unsure how to use them.

Damn Eddard Stark!

Ygritte

It had been a little over three weeks since their last visit to the far North. Jon had hesitated to send them back again. They had been exhausted from their previous back-to-back visits to the camp of the Ice King.

Jon had reasoned that magical or not, the Ice King would need time to recover from his wounds. They too had time to recover.

Jon had also become exhausted. He was working nearly twenty hours a day, pushing the Crows and the Free Folk to train and prepare for the coming Others. The Dead had started to appear at the Wall already, probing and looking for weaknesses.

Jon had pulled all his scouting parties back to the Wall. They were not going to be taking the fight to the enemy - the enemy was going to have to come to them.

They made sure that all parties had plenty of fire arrows and now they had arrows and spearheads tipped with Dragon Glass as well. A party had been ambushed two days ago and they lost four men, but seventeen of the undead Others had been killed as well.

He told his wives that night he couldn’t wait for that news to reach the Ice King. They had weapons to fight with. Many of the arrows that had missed shattered, and some of the spear tips had broken when they were pulled out of the dead bodies, but there were plenty more ready and waiting.

His wives had felt an Ice Wight nearby, watching.

Jon was sure more reconnaissance raids would be occurring. Despite these probes up and down the Wall, Jon was certain that the Ice King would make his assault at Castle Black. When they asked him why he thought that, he could only say it was his battle instincts. He felt the Ice King would want to beat his ancestral enemy at the seat of their power. Also, legends had it that this was the site of the Ice King’s death. He would want to avenge that death with victory at the spot of his first death.

Three more shipments of Dragon Glass weapons had arrived. The stream of weapons coming north was increasing as Jon’s father got his artisans fully trained and set up his shifts. Troops from the far Northern Lords and Keeps were now arriving at the Wall as well.

Jon was using these troops to man the rest of the abandoned forts and boost up the troop levels at those that were already occupied. Jon was convinced the attack would be head on, but he had to prepare for the eventually if he was wrong.

She and Melisandre had walked up and down the top of the Wall, probing the thick forests for their enemies. They could feel the icy touch of Ice Wights. They would be there, and then disappear. They were anxious to see their husband drive his sword deep into the body of the Ice King and kill the son of a bitch.

As they searched, Jon met with the newest lords that had arrived. He was forming a military reserve to meet any breach or send to other parts of the Wall if required.

Ygritte and Melisandre made heated love for hours while Jon was occupied, exhausting their bodies with their intense love for each other. They had rolled around on the bed in a sixty-nine, devouring swollen pussies and sucking feverously on each other clits with long, deep, hard sucks. They had simultaneous orgasms that made exhausted clits scream in almost agonizing pleasure. Their full throated screams of blistering ecstasy muffled and swallowed by cunts that swallowed deep wallowing mouths and hard sucking lips on shiny diamond hard clits.

Finally their orgasms waned. They weakly decoupled and Ygritte turned around. With their faces soaked in cum and sweat they locked lips and gagged in pure love with their tongues wrapped around each other and dancing deep in Melisandre’s mouth. Their eyes had rolled back and spasmed hard in their skulls as their spirits freed themselves from exhausted and satiated bodies.

Their entwined spirits sped north at a speed that no animal could hope to match or even attempt.

Soon they were over the bog of their hosts and their essences slowly sunk into it. They felt the cold and slim of the bog, but it did not touch their inner essences. Soon their spirits had settled into the frozen elk. Their spirits thrashed his limbs to kick free of the roots and clinging mud that attempted to suck the kicking animal back down into its deadly embrace.

They emerged and fired up the dead animals eyes with the ghostly blue sheen of the Others.

They could see immediately that order had been restored to the army of their enemy. The dead were even thicker on the frozen plains. The Ice King was clearly calling all forces to gather together from wherever they had been.

They quickly saw the Ice King. He no longer appeared weak and devastated. He strode around his camp confidently, with a strong step. He walked from group to group of ice wrights.

The witches could see a big difference. Before the Ice Wrights never seemed to be doing anything organized. Now many of the wrights were training one-on-one with their ice blue swords. Others were forming loose formations and working their swords in harmonic unison.

The Shadowbenders saw that the Ice Wrights only had swords. That was good to know. At least Jon only had to worry about their enemies only having one kind of weapon - they did not have to worry about arrows or spears hurled towards them.

They shambled to the edge of the army and with their magical sight could see far out into the frozen wastes, where more dead were shambling in to join the camp. The Ice King was definitely calling in his forces.

They moved slowly through the camp. They saw the some of the young and teenage ice wrights being fed directly by the Ice King, along with some of his strongest sons. They surmised that the Ice King was near finished the growing of his youngest sons. There would be no more conversions.

When they moved towards the frozen throne they nearly stumbled.

The Horn of Winter was missing.

They had slowly turned around and neared the Ice King again, and when he turned they saw that it was strung over his body and close to his non-existent heart. The Ice King climbed up on top of a dead mammoth and started to call out in a loud voice.

The witches listened to his strange language. They murmured a spell, mentally keeping their magic buried in the body of the elk.

“My sons, soon we will be marching to the hated Wall.” He lifted the horn from around his body and shook it hard. “I will sound the Horn of Winter and we will watch it come crashing down. We will then kill the hated Crows, as they killed us with fire and dragon glass. We will slaughter our enemies and then sweep South, rampaging and killing all of the hated hot bloods!

“We will take their lands like we were born to do, and make it into our image. We will make this whole land our own. We will make it into a paradise - forever cold and filled with the darkness we crave and love.

“My sons, prepare yourselves for the coming battle. Give yourself to it totally. Some of us will fall as soldiers always must, but for every death resolve yourselves and fill you hearts with greater anger and hate for our detested enemies!

“I am calling in the dead from across the North. They shall be our shock troops to deplete the hot bloods and we will kill the remainder.
“Let us prepare for victory. Once the last of our brothers have reached majority, we will begin our march south. When we arrive at the Wall, I will sound this horn and the Wall that has stood for eight thousand years will come crashing down, and with it, the hopes of our enemies.

“We will march on to total victory … are you with me my sons? Are you ready to march to victory and death to our enemies?!”

A large shout echoed across the barren plains by every throat of the Ice Wrights. All were totally behind their father. They could only be for their father - their very existence was owed to him.

The women of Asshai had seen enough. They slowly in a circuitous path, then went back to their bog and sunk their elk back into his icy grave.

When they came back to their bed, they found their bodies enveloped by the body of their sweet husband. He pulled them tight against himself, sensing they had returned to him.

His exhausted wives curled into him.

They slowly told him what they had seen.

After they had finished, Ygritte asked: “What does it mean Jon?”

Jon hugged them tighter. “They will be coming south soon.”

They had discussed the growth rate of the children of the Ice King. Jon estimated they had maybe six weeks before they began their march.

The dead not need rest, but they moved slowly. Their rate of progress was maybe two or three miles per hour over frozen flatland. Much of the route to the Wall would be through thick forest, and that would slow them down even more.

They still had time, but war was coming.

Eddard

Eddard had been waiting for Jon’s wives to again perform reconnaissance on the kingdom of the Ice King. He needed that intelligence. When Jon had sent a Raven telling his father that yes indeed, the Ice King had survived his fight with the Queen, Eddard felt his heart sink.

He had simply never considered the Queen would fight the Ice King without him. She did not even truly believe in the Ice King and yet she had fought him.

There was no doubt she had been brought into this whole thing by taking Bran to the Tree of Life. A Stark had needed to get to the Tree of Life, and a Targaryen had gotten him there. He should have known from his son’s rambling prophecies while in his coma that there was a very strong possibility of this occurring.

He slammed his fist on the table in the war room. He was alone, and allowed his emotions to show.

He had been so focused on his war he had overlooked the obvious. He knew deep down his own son was to be involved in the future of Westeros, but did not put much thought into it.

No. He was too busy focusing on battle tactics and troop movements on the battlefield.

It was a wasted opportunity. A huge wasted opportunity. He was sure the Queen must have been surprised by her meeting with the Ice King and she still nearly defeated him. Surely the Queen was not that arrogant. To think she was so mighty that she could defeat the Ice King one-on-one.

Eddard rolled his fingers on the table top. Then again, she had almost killed the Ice King. Maybe she was that powerful. With just a little more force by her side, the threat would have been removed. The Ice King would have been killed rather than grievously wounded.

There was nothing to do for it now. The Ice King had recovered. A mortal man that had been that harshly wounded would have needed half a year at the least to recover, and much more likely a full year. The Ice King was not a mortal man. He had feared that the Ice Wight would recover much quicker, and he was right.

He had sent a raven back to his son that he needed his wives to go back immediately to the far North to check on the recovery rate of the Ice King.

A raven had come back immediately. His wives could not go back to the North for some time. The magic they used to go North was very draining. He had never told his father how they were able to spy on the Ice King until now. Eddard was impressed. To animate a dead animal and then spend hours walking among the dead and Ice Wights was shocking.

My gods, Eddard thought, the sheer bravery of such an act by these women. To go into the camp of their mortal enemy camp on foot! To do it over and over when at any moment they could be discovered. With magic you could never predict how it would manifest itself. Their deaths would be hideous if they erred.

He admired them even more for it.

After that, Eddard had responded to his son, telling him that he waited patiently for his wives to recover their strength.

They finally had. He could have done without his son’s rather vivid descriptions of how they prepared for their missions, though. He knew Jon was tweaking him, and it had worked.

His fears had been fulfilled. The Ice King had indeed recovered fully or was near full recovery. The Ice King was pulling his forces together and was preparing them for the coming war.

Eddard was just thankful that Ice King had a conservative nature. The Wight wanted to grow the last of his children. Eddard shivered, thinking of the fates of those Ice Wights. He knew what those Ice Wights had been before they were turned. He felt anger boiling in his veins at the thought.

The fucking bastard did not even have the decency to create his troops from whatever spawned his vile existence. In the oldest scrolls he read hints but he refused to believe that they had been created by the first people to fight the Starks who waged unremitting war on them. Could his ancestors been that blind. That stupid. It galled him to give any credence to such writings.

He could only hope that his blade was the one to cut him down in the end. He would gladly sacrifice his life to deliver that blow.

Eddard wished for more time. He had just sent five more wagons full of Dragon Glass to the Wall. More wagon trains were moving North full of food staples, weapons and articles for the war camps that would be forming soon.

His regular troops were honed to a razor’s edge. The conscriptions had been trained up and were ready to move in mass to the North. Eddard had wanted another few months. He wanted to give Arya time in King’s Landing to form her relationship with the Queen.
He would make do with what little time was left. It would take time for the Ice King to grow his last children and then march his dead through thick forests and then form up in front of the Wall.

The thought of the Horn of Winter in the Ice King’s hands was horrifying to contemplate. He could only hope the horn in the Ice King’s hands was a fake. He had a smile on his face when he imagined the Ice King looking at his horn strangely when the Wall did not crash down.

If the Wall did come down, it would be a totally different look on the Ice King’s face. Eddard did not want to consider that.

He had his pickets reporting back to him on the beachheads the Queen had established on his Lands. He smiled grimly. Four days ago on the southernmost beach twelve ships had landed with obvious mercenary troops. They had immediately started setting up camp and defensive positions.

He hoped this was the beginning of a large scale invasion. If they came north as he hoped, the bards in future ages would sing of the cagey old wolf. If those troops fell on his defenseless cities, they would be singing dirges and very sarcastic and insulting songs of his idiocy. And he would deserve every word of the songs.

He knew Daenerys was absolutely savage on the battlefield. He was not sure he would survive fighting her one on one.

He needed to be ready for the Ice King. He knew the Wight would be filled with a rage for having been defeated and humiliated on the field of combat. His defeat would fuel the monster to come up with a plan to crush his enemies.

Eddard was worried that the Ice King was developing plans to fight Daenerys when next they met. Her dragons and her own power had probably surprised and shocked him. He would not be so easily fooled again.

He had sent out ravens to Riverun and the Vale. Responses from each had come back just yesterday. Edmure and Jon Arryn had sworn total allegiance to him. They would follow him ‘to hell and back’, to quote Edmure. He hoped it wouldn’t come to that.

They had agreed with his strategy from the start. He knew they were trusting him completely. They may have had their doubts initially, but they were close enough to the Wall to feel its call on the very foundations of their being.

In four days Riverrun would send a raven to King’s Landing. With their greater distance from King’s Landing Eddard and Jon would send ravens in three days.

Hopefully, all ravens would arrive at the Red Keep at approximately the same time. He wanted the Queen to be shocked at what all of the letters would reveal. He had to be ready for the coming host of his enemy and he needed to act now. The time for waiting was over.

He would love to wait another week, and better twice that to give Arya time to get established at King’s Landing. He sighed. The needs of the many outweighed the needs of the few or the one. He had faith in his wild daughter. She would bend the Queen to her will by sheer force of personality – she would have to.

Arya’s love for a woman she had not even met yet would prove irresistible. He had read of the rumors of the Queen’s sexual appetite. She would not be able to resist Arya and her innocent ardor. Her love would be like a quiver to the Queen’s heart.

Eddard shook his head at his turn of poor poetry.
Lord Stark sighed and walked down the hall. He wore his full coat of mail armor, with Morning Star in its scabbard on his side. He walked into the War Council room.

All took in his formal attire. He looked like a man of past great exploits. To many in the room, he was already becoming a legend.

Eddard looked around the room. His children met his gaze with intense eyes. He had called the three of them to him last night and told him of his decision.

They had all agreed with full support. Robb was anxious to meet the enemy on the field of battle. Sansa and Margaery were anxious to make sure they kept the logistics in place and running with one hundred percent efficiency. Plus, they would, in time, have to meet the Queen.

One way or another Winterfell would be a pivotal point in the upcoming war. He was leaving it basically defenseless, so he was completely trusting in his judgment of the Queen.

The Tyrell ‘hostage’ and his daughter’s wiles would be enough.

Loras was riding north with him. The youth had almost gotten on his knees begging to come north to fight in his army. “I’ll die if I am left behind, Eddard. This is the great war of our time; I must fight in it!”

Eddard could not deny him this. It was foolish youthful brashness but still - he had been that age once. The young man was a great fighter, and in truth, his sword would be needed.

“It is time,” Eddard said. “The North needs to break from the South. The Crown has not supported our need to confront and defeat the enemy who will soon be at the Wall. I am breaking with the Crown. From this day forth I declare myself the King of the North. Let us call our banners and march to greatness!

“With your support, we will meet the challenge of our time and reestablish our independence from the King’s Landing and take back what was once ours!”

The men around the table erupted into wild cheers and thumped the desk with fists and swords and ax pommels.

Their natural distrust and longing for past greatness made it easy to support Eddard Stark.

Eddard needed their full support for this final goad to the Queen.

She hated sedition. She would come to the North with her hosts behind her. Her own Houses would demand it. They would never let House Stark have that much power. Their fear, insecurity and outright jealousy would ensure that.

Eddard smiled and took the clapping on his shoulders and humbly accepted his men’s congratulations.

Inside he was tense and agitated. He hated this Game of Thrones. He was letting forces loose he hoped he could control. He had no desire for this throne of the North - he was just doing what he needed to defeat the threat to all.

_I just hope I can put the genie back in the bottle_, he thought, remembering a tale ole Nan used to tell him when he was a young child.

He sighed as the room emptied. He had to survive dragons and Ice Wrights and maybe other magical creatures. And if he survived them, then he had to survive possible monsters that would look much like him.

Gods he hated the Game of Thrones.

Daenerys

Daenerys was having a very bad day. She sat on the Iron Throne seething as the points and barbs of the half melted swords were doing wicked things to her ass cheeks. Not the pleasurable kind, either.

She had been put into a foul mood at her sitting of the Small Council that morning. The news had been sour.

It was obvious that Eddard was ramping up his efforts, whatever they may have been. Troops were moving more openly. They were generally moving North. Why? She was sure she knew, but she had deposed the threat.

She had told Eddard of this! She had told him over and over with her messages getting more strident. He had the gall to ignore her!

Worse, with her Klutch of Confidents asking questions of her victory in the far North she had increasingly come to doubt it. To doubt her great victory!

Why wouldn’t the man talk to her?

She could see a logic behind it. He was giving the whole realm a reason to attack him. He was goading her to act, and the mighty houses were getting tired of his insolence.

He even had Highgarden and Dorne talking nice to each other in the need to teach this ‘dog’ or ‘bloody fucking wolf’ a lesson in obedience.

In a way, she admired his almost flawless playing of the Game of Thrones.

She had brought this to Tyrion’s attention very loudly in the Small Council. He had, to his credit, endured her mocking comments.

“My sweet Tyrion, I remember you vouching for this great man Eddard Stark. What do you have to say now? Huuummmm? … Why so silent?”

She had not been happy when Tyrion brought up that maybe he felt the need to do what he did because he felt the Crown and the land of the South would never heed the call of the Wall.

She had lost it for a few minutes. She had screamed and stomped her feet in her ire. Once her anger finally dissipated, she sat down and twirled her daggers, nicking her finger. She never cut herself!

The bad day gotten worse.

Varys got up when it came time to give his reports. He had indeed used the turmoil occurring in the North to find spies to feed the Queen information she desperately needed.

A young, spurned noble had been given a tour of the defenses being erected around Winterfell designed specifically to fight her dragons, Varys reported. These defenses were being duplicated around the realms of Stark, Tully and Arryn.

This got Daenerys’ attention. She was very protective of her dragons.
She had felt her anger boil and her rage erupt with this fucking man’s audacity in devising ways to hurt and possibly kill her children!

She had gripped her chair arms as she heard of forests of scorpions being erected around every major population center and gathering of troop encampments. All Targaryens learned to hate the word “scorpion” after the tragic and vile death of Rhaenys by one while attacking Dorne.

She had seethed at that, but Eddard’s new inventions left her mouth hanging open.

He had somehow science out that her dragons did much of their damage by physical attack. Her dragons jumped and trampled many of their enemies to death. A dragon had only so much flame, so much magical energy they could expend in a given time. They used their bulk and weight as an equal weapon after their flame allowed them to get close to their enemies. Her sons relied on their hard iron scales to protect them from men holding weapons.

Eddard had dug pits and long trenches that had been marked on maps. His troops knew where they were and would lure her dragons in. The pits were covered and the bottoms filled with long fire-hardened wood spears and iron pikes. The dragon’s own weight would impale them to their death.

Then the spy had been shown trebuchets with pouches filled with iron weights with fine, razor sharp wire attached to them. The great mass of projectiles would be fired up into the flight path of the dragons, with the wires either cutting deadly slashes through her dragon’s wings or hopelessly fouling their wings and crippling them.

Most of the cities in the North had forests near them. In the Vale mountains were everywhere. Eddard was having platforms put in the trees and in hidden coves on the mountains near the population centers. Scorpions were being put onto these platforms.

As her dragons banked from an attack run, these platforms would shoot at their much less armored bellies.

Worse yet, a Samwell Tarly, of the Nights Watch, had figured out her dragons had the ability to see body heat. The guide on the spy’s trip among the defenses of Winterfell had boasted they had figured a way to hide themselves away from such vision.

Varys had been most proud of his report. His other spy suggested that most supplies that the North was gathering was either going to Winterfell and to the Wall.

Damnit that made no sense! The queen fumed. He was splitting his efforts. No commander of Stark’s intelligence would do that!

Why wouldn’t this fucking bastard communicate with her! She had toyed with the idea of flying Drogon North and challenging Eddard Stark on a field of battle like the knights of old. She would fantasize of this, but then quickly put that idea away. If Eddard Stark was indeed a traitor, he would ambush and kill her. She had not fought so hard and sacrificed so much to throw it all away foolishly.

The other reason she put that fantasy away was the fact she might well lose such a one-on-one fight with Eddard Stark.

Soon after her Stark troubles had begun she had asked Barristan of Eddard’s prowess with the sword. Barristan had paused a long time, thinking. When it came to sword fighting Selmy was very analytical in his appraisal.

“You would beat him,” Barristan had begun as Daenerys felt her pride swelling, “if you got very, very, very lucky. I doubt I could beat him, my Queen. He is the best swordsman I have ever seen.”

That pricked her pride back down to size.

Daenerys hated thinking of the danger she would have to put her dragons in to attack Eddard directly. He had taken away her greatest weapon.

She had only listened half-interested when Tyrion had spoken up, arguing that this sudden wealth of information was suspicious.

“It is almost like he wants us to know this.” Tyrion had said, looking around the table.

None were too interested in hearing him. Most around the table just wanted this problem resolved one way or the other.

The small council meeting had ended shortly after that with a fuming Daenerys. She now went to the thorn room to give audience to most likely petty grievances. They were really mind numbing at times.

So now her ass was really killing her and listening to people cry and blabber on about a few feet of property. She was idly wondering if she should just burn down the fucking building.

Suddenly, Grand Maester Harsch Lape came into the audience chamber of the Iron Throne. He was carrying three scrolls with broken seals. She had known the moment he had entered looking so pale just where those scrolls had come from.

She had left orders to not have them brought here where the common populace could hear the contents so she knew it was serious. His pale countenance only added to the bad feeling rapidly filling her body.

“My Grace! Eddard Stark has declared himself King of the North!”

“FFFFUCCCKKKKK!” Daenerys exploded up and off of the throne.

“He says that he must declare his independence to meet the need of the realm. He rid—”

“SHUT UP! I don’t want to hear the words of this fucking traitor! Gods dammit! I will have his fucking head for this!”

The other two scrolls were read with their declaration of succeeding from the throne and joining their forces to the King of the North.

“This is fucking shit!” Daenerys screamed in rage.

Tyrion tried to say something.

“Shut the fuck up Tyrion … I’ll gut you if you speak up for this fucking traitorous bastard one more breath!” Daenerys’ eyes burned, raging anger down at her Hand.

Tyrion’s eyes were large as he shut his mouth. He was using discretion at the moment to survive the sudden hurricane Daenerys Targaryen that formed on the throne.

The Queen had switched back to her native tongue of High Valyria, screaming, then suddenly she had her two main daggers out and thrashed them about as she raged and stomped her feet.

Everyone looked at the Queen, her rage something frightful to watch. The room was so silent one could hear a pin drop when finally the Queen had stopped lashing and screaming.

A runner came into the room. He looked around and found Grey Worm. They left together. A few minutes later the runner came back and found Barristan, and whispered in his ear.

Barristan’s eyes flared open. “My Queen!” he called out.

Daenerys had sat back down on the throne, slumped back. She appeared stunned at the turn of events. She only looked down at him in response.

“Arya Stark of House Stark wishes to entreat with you. She comes claiming she has a personal communication from Eddard Stark.” He calmly told his Queen.

The Queen stood up slowly. “Who is here?” she asked softly.

“Arya Stark, my Queen. She bears a message from Eddard Stark. I feel this shows—”

“SHUT THE FUCK UP AND SEND FOR THIS TRAITOROUS BITCH!” the Queen screamed.

“My Queen, I ask—”

“Don’t question me, soldier!”

“She is armed as is tradition … I recommend we disarm her in this situation.”

“I fear no one, Barristan. If she is a traitor, I will gut her on the spot!”

“Daenerys … Dany, calm down! I implore you! You are not thinking clearly at the moment!”

“I will send her in after she is disarmed.”

“Did you fucking hear me … send her in as she is! I am more than equal to any challenge from a fucking teenage girl!”

“Under protest, my Queen.” Barristan sent word to Grey Worm.

After a few minutes the Queen was so agitated she jumped back up off of the throne. She paced around for a minute fuming before sitting down again.

The page came back and whispered in Barristan’s ear. He turned calmly to inform the Queen that the daughter of Eddard Stark awaited outside.

“Let the fucking BITCH in!” Daenerys screamed shrilly.

A young girl entered.

She had been so furious she had completely forgotten her earlier fascination with the Stark girl. Her attentions had been sadly wasted, she saw.

This girl was bedraggled and confused looking. Her body was covered in mud and filth that half covered her face and matted her hair. Her clothes soaked in mud and offal. No emissary would enter like this. Clearly this endeavor was beyond the poor looking urchin.
She looked around like a clueless child.

She was wearing weapons she obviously did not know how to use. The reports on this ‘wolf child’ had completely exaggerated this girl’s martial prowess. She was a fucking pretender.

The girl took a tentative, weak step forward. “I-I-I bring a message from my father … I come in peace and offer the peace of my House.” She held up the scroll with the Royal seal of House Stark. “This is from my father … please take it.” the young woman asked meekly.

Maester Lape came over to Arya and took the message from her limp wrist.

The girl was weak. Maester Lape went up the steps to Queen and handed the scroll to her.

The girl looked at her like a weak fawn.

“What is wrong with me!”

NO! this girl must be a master at the arts of the mummers!

“Shut your mouth, you fucking traitor!”

“What?!” the northerner exclaimed, her back stiffening slightly.

Thank the gods she has a little backbone, Daenerys sneered. She looked at the girl again, remembering what she had seen from Viserion’s eyes. She had been so alluring. She had clearly misjudged the girl. Still her eyes were …

No. This is some kind of fucking trap!

“Send this child … this little girl - away from me. She’s weak and ineffectual, her weapons merely props in some mummer’s play. I will hold her as a royal hostage.” The Queen spoke, sitting back down and dismissing the trifling girl named Arya Stark with a negligent dismissive wave of her hand.

Arya

Arya was stunned at this turn of events. She had dreamed of this moment for months and months since she had known she would be the emissary of the North. The Queen was supposed to see her for the great warrior she was. The queen was supposed to fall in love with her!

She moved to stand before the Iron Throne, looking around at everyone. Their faces were fearful and terribly anxious. She held her bow limply in her hand. This was not the reception she had dreamed of: No honor and no fidelity, only anger and boiling rage.

What was going on?
“But but … my message!” Arya said weakly. Why was everyone so anxious and fearful looking? Why was the Queen attacking her and calling dispersions on her House … what was wrong?!

“My father is a great man!” Arya called up to the Queen.

“Your father is a traitor and a dog … and you are just a weak little female wolf cub … one who THINKS she is a warrior—playing with weapons she can’t even use. Be gone, little girl!”

Something snapped in Arya then, as her dreams of love and battle by her Queen and wife’s side shattered.

Faster than the eye could follow, her grip on her bow tightened and came up, and she pulled two arrows out of her quiver, stringing them in one fluid motion and then letting them loose up at the Iron Throne and the head of Daenerys Targaryen.
Daenerys

- Thwok Thwok -

Daenerys sat rock still, her hearing attuned to the sounds just beside each ear. She slowly turned her head right, and then left, to see arrows embedded in the Iron Throne not a half inch from those very ears. The arrowheads were buried in nooks and slats in the dragon-forged seat of blades of House Targaryen’s conquered foes. The shafts and fletching were still quivering from impact. The Queen’s violet eyes were wide open in stunned shock. She looked back and forth between the arrows. Then she stared down at the emissary from the Starks.

The first thought that roared through to mind was who let this bitch in with her weapons?!, but she quickly remembered that she herself did. That only fueled her anger.

Several more thoughts rushed through Daenerys’ mind all at once. The nerve of this impudent pup! How dare she? Followed by: I didn’t even see her move! Barristan looked chagrined, his sword only one-third of the way out of its scabbard. He stared at the young girl with rising ire - an anger that was matched by the teen Stark. Daenerys found herself looking down and staring into the girl’s eyes. Her eyes are so steel grey, it’s intoxicating— no! She just made me look a fool! That cannot be permitted.

Daenerys noticed movement along the ranks of her unsullied and the red cloaks. The shock over the Stark’s sudden aggression was fading. Weapons were being unsheathed, and Unsullied were raising their spears as their bodies tensed, moving forward.

“Nēdysy sesīr:” the Queen commanded. Most of the Unsullied obeyed instantly, but the red cloaks were moving forward with swords and battle axes drawn. A few bold Unsullied continued advancing on the Stark Princess, heedless of the Queen’s command. “El so nēdysy sesīr!” she roared again before switching to the common tongue. “Stand down … I will handle this.”

The Unsullied moved back against the wall. She glared at the few red cloaks who thought of defying her, and they quickly bowed as they moved back as well.
The Queen returned her attention to her attacker, and felt her anger rise anew.

The Stark emissary looked up at Daenerys, her angry gray eyes blazing. The child feels no shame! But gods her eyes are so beautiful, just like they were when I saw them through Viserion …- argh! Daenerys’ mind was trying to flare her anger from a bonfire into the flames of a rising dragon.

The Queen instinctively knew the girl had not attempted to kill her. She could see the Stark was a master of the bow, and she would be dead now if the girl had wanted it. That truth shocked her. All of her sacrifices could have been made for naught in a blink of an eye in that moment.

That thought finally kindled her rage.

Her internal dialogue over, the Queen jumped up out of the Iron Throne. A primal scream ripped from her throat as she threw her head back. Her two long-trusted advisors, who had witnessed her Dragon Rising before, still watched in fascination. This was not Essos, and the Stark girl was a highly valuable commodity.

“You fucking bitch!” Daenerys screamed down at the young Stark who began to shake, her eyes wide though the Queen did not notice while her dander was in full bloom. The Stark girl only now realized what she had just done.

Daenerys’ head snapped around to look at Barristan. “Bantis zōbrie issa se ossỳngnotī lēdys azantys Barristan. Belmurtī ivestrās kesīr pōnte jīrīnna se pōjon obūljarion mazōrīnna. Lodaor hēnkos vējose hae Stark botīlza. Valo limāt manaertoty Yunkai se lo elēnar täenītsos!” the General’s head bowed down in shame. “Tolī rhūqo lōtinti, kostīlus.” She barked at him a final time before glaring back at the befuddled emissary, who did not understand a word of High Valyrian.

The queen stormed to the end of the dais, her arms jerking in small motions. She turned around and looked at Missandei with fire in her violet eyes. “Ñuhor līr Missandie gūrēnna kēlio kepa Syrio Forel bardugon Vīlībāzmowa iderennī se emilun hūrenkon qogror se lo paktot!” The young scribe gulped and nodded her head.

Tyrion was not so inured to Dany’s vicious outbursts, and he felt his manhood shrinking again.

The young queen continued to storm around on the platform cursing. “Vīlībāzma El a Sikudi nopāzmi!” the Queen sneered at the Stark. “Keso Glaesot iderēptot Sikudi daor hēnkos vējose hae.” She stomped her foot.

“Missandei, Qringōntan se naenna, thoros, … Thoros!” she yelled when the girl still had not moved. The scribe quickly scurried away to do her Queen’s bidding.

The platinum-tressed queen continued to storm around, fuming, then staring down hard at the Stark girl before huffing loudly on the dais. “Lonir drējior issa syt … … ūndon daor se.” the Queen muttered darkly.

Missandei

The translator and scribe felt her body flare with the rebuke from her Queen. That was a first, and she felt a shiver run down her spine. Daenerys had always been gentle with her, but the Stark obviously had her Queen rattled.

The way she had insulted Barristan for not protecting her from the girl when she had overridden him not once, but twice in warning was unfair. And then to compare him to a Yunkai dung beetle on top of it – that was quite unseemly.

The Stark heir had been rash beyond all measure to be certain, but to call her a ‘gods dammed fucking twat’, and ‘a motherfucking piece of horse shit’, had made the queen look smaller to the scribe. She’d noticed that the few men in the throng who spoke the Queen’s mother tongue were left snorting from the tavern language, though.

Missandei had watched her queen up on the dais, raging and looking down at the Stark girl when she thought that she had finally started to calm. However instead of calming, her Queen would just get agitated again.

This type of anger was different from what Daenerys usually displayed. When the Queen felt threatened, frightened or challenged in the past, her anger was icy and deathly frightful. This time, the Queen merely raged, her foot stomping the throne platform as her arms waved and slashed, fuming and snarling deprecating remarks down at the Stark girl.

It made Missandei wonder. She saw the intensity that the Queen stared down at the Stark girl with. Could it be…? Then the queen’s rebuke registered, and she’d rushed to flee out of the room.

She ran to the small chamber where Syrio Forel kept office, near the outer wall of the Red Keep. It was near the practice fields he maintained while training the Queen, and her closest guards and fellow warriors.

“Syrio!” Missandei called out, bending over and gripping her knees. The man got up and quickly came over to her, rubbing her heaving back.

“What is wrong?” Syrio asked. “Is the Queen in danger?”

“No, no … get two practice swords, sized for women, and come back with me to the throne room.” Missandei answered.

As the weapons master retrieved the two practice swords from the racks, the small scribe explained to him what had transpired before the Iron Throne. Missandei expressed to him that it was absolutely not Selmy’s fault, and told him how the Queen had unfairly defamed him. It had been difficult to witness; Missandei thought of the General as a father figure.

Syrio Forel smiled, showing his appreciation for the young scribe’s nature to defend those she loved.

They walked at a quick pace back down the halls to the throne room.

Missandei had to push and shove her way through the throng that had formed around the four entry points to the great hall, with Syrio helping her she was able to forge a path back into the throne room. She saw that her Queen was still muttering deprecations as she stalked back and forth.

The Queen spotted her and the weapons master carrying the practice swords. Daenerys stiffened with a feral smile. Missandei saw that Daenerys intended to teach the poor Stark girl a lesson that would humiliate her, and she felt a pang of sympathy.

“Jemot!” the Queen ordered, and Missandei and Syrio moved up to the throne.

Missandei spotted warriors and some nobles gathering together, whispering and looking around furtively. Syrio noticed the same, shaking his head with sad understanding. The oddsmakers were taking bets on how long the Stark girl would remain upright before Daenerys knocked her unconscious.
Arya looked up as the Queen spotted her weapons master approaching with the practice swords. Barristan Selmy had approached her after the little black girl hurried quickly out of the throne room. He told her that the Queen was going to challenge her to a duel with practice swords.

“The Queen is very skilled with the sword, girl. She is one of the best swordsmen in both Westeros and Essos. Only a master could defeat her. I advise you to quickly bow to the inevitable. Save yourself a beating, and some humiliation.” He said in an even tone.

Then he leaned in and asked softly, up close: “What possessed you, girl? You could be tried for treason! Any other ruler would have your head … Daenerys is hot tempered and hot blooded, but very fair. She will teach you a lesson. Once again, I would advise you to learn it quickly and with equanimity.”

Arya’s temper had at first given way to shocked dread, but the General’s words had reignited her anger. I never surrender for anyone! I will be defeated only if my opponent is my better! Her will to win stiffened her resolve.

The teenager tried to tamp her anger down. She was here to do her father’s bidding, not to bring shame on her house.

She had been so furious. She had been hurt by the Queen’s unwarranted treatment of her. After all of her hard travel and parched condition, she had been treated like a dog. She was her father’s emissary; and to be called a traitor when her father was a man of great honor was too much. The queen had screamed at her that her entire family were traitors, and not worthy of being her subjects. Then she had dismissed her as if she was a little girl. Like she was some hightborn little fawning princess, and not a warrior! She’d killed men just to stand before the Queen!

Then she had been summarily dismissed like she did not even matter.

If Daenerys had been a man, she would have expected it, but, for a woman to treat her as a man would have had been distressing no end. It had been too much. She remembered thinking she would show the Queen otherwise, and the rest had been a blur until she was left standing under the Queen’s ire.

She watched Daenerys stomp down the steps of the Throne. She remembered the first time she’d ever seen the Queen, her tall body atop her dragon before the gates of Winterfell. She was impressive, up there on the dais - so towering. A mythic figure from the legends of old. Arya noticed that she moved with a feral grace as she approached, coming closer … closer … no … something is wrong …what—what happened!

She’s fucking tiny! Arya gaped. This can’t be … she was six foot, six inches tall at least—what happened?! At five foot-three, Arya was used to looking up to most, and was around eye level with others. But now she was looking down on the Queen, who was barely five foot and slight of build - though she could see that her arms were strong, and corded like her own. She could also see the Queen’s beautiful breasts swaying in her loose fitting, formal blouse top … and gods they were big.

Arya completely missed the Queen glaring at her, she was staring so intently at Daenerys’ chest.

“Look me in the eyes, dammit!” Daenerys snapped at her.

Arya broke off her dream session with a loud gulp. She looked at the Queen’s face angled up at her. The woman’s purple eyes were so beautiful.

Arya watched the Queen take a practice sword and twirl it around and over her hand and wrist with obvious skill. Then she took her own wooden sword. She was most comfortable with Needle, but she was trained with any smaller sword just as well.

Remembering the kind old man’s words of warning and her mind clouded with lust, she was ready to submit to the Queen after only making a show of fighting.

Everything changed in an instant.

Daenerys

Daenerys was confident. She had taken the fight out of the girl before the fight had even begun.

“I will teach you a lesson, dog. I could have you hung for treason! You will be taught humility, Stark!”

The Queen had been taking many lessons on Westeros from Barristan, learning history and legends from her homeland since they had met. She had received more from Tyrion as well. What she did not know was that their lessons with her had a few intentional, glaring omissions.

Her own direct family history had been a subject that was carefully avoided. She knew her father had been mad and a horrible ruler, but not all of the specific details of that terrible rule. She was not her father, and she did not need to know his personal failures and limitations.

She did not know she had missed important lessons.

The Stark girl had moved away to swing her sword, and Daenerys saw the more than rudimentary skill she had received at Winterfell. In fact Arya seemed rather well schooled in swordsmanship. But she herself had been trained by two of the greatest swordsmen of her time.

Insulting ones foes was expected. Plus, she wanted to fire up the girl - for some reason the fire had seem to run out of her. She wanted, no, needed, to see that fire again.

Stark and Targaryen. Ice and Fire. Daenerys pondered the proper insults.

“Come at me Arya! Come and find out what happens to a Stark when they dare oppose a ruler of the House of Targaryen. We burn our enemies! Your sword and your very bones will melt in my righteous flames. Come before me and I will reduce you to ash in my holy an—”

“AAAAIIYYYYYYEEAAAAAH!” the Stark suddenly swirled with a wild madness in her eyes, and charged at the Queen with a blood curdling scream of hatred.

Arya

Arya now knew the Queen was not beautiful but heinous, and she would knock her god’s damned teeth down her throat!

The swords crashed together in a sharp retort that had wood singing. Again and again the swords collided with resounding clashes. She slashed and jabbed with the hard force of her left hand.
Arya snarled as she saw that the Queen Bitch was taken by surprise, as she noticed all her blows came from the left. She pressed her advantage. She swung high at the Queen’s head, and then swept low for the woman’s legs. The Queen’s sword came down, barely blocking it.

She felt the Queen truly join the fray then, her wooden sword almost a blur as she swiped and slashed it against her own, before going for jabs to her ribs and her armpits. Ser Rodrik had trained her well, and recently even Robb and her father had joined in at times. It had made her love them even more, knowing they were willing to accept her mother’s withering glances and catty remarks afterwards. Arya was done with her mother constantly trying to make her into what she was not. It got to a point where even Sansa had started to come to her defense.

She slashed at the Queen’s arms and legs, and then struck tight, back and forth windmill swings at the smaller woman’s head, driving her back. Arya was nonplussed by the strange, searching look she saw in the royal cunt’s eyes. She was in frenzy. Throwing her family’s cruel history in her face like that was too much. Her sword was like a magical implement in her hands, and she used a double-handed grip to swing devastating blows at the Queen’s head, not caring at the moment if she split her pretty face wide open.

She grunted with her efforts, her arms shocked with each collision of their swords. She elbowed the Queen in the ribs, and tried to chop across her thigh, but the woman kicked her in the knee making Arya stumble. The Queen hacked down savagely at Arya’s bent over frame. Arya dove to the floor, leaping to the side and rolled up into a defense crouch.

The Queen advanced slowly, measuring her and eyeing her with that same strange look. The Queen came in with a two-handed stroke, and Arya met it. The woman suddenly released her left hand off her sword’s hilt and punched Arya hard in the temple, staggering the Stark. Arya blocked the next punch, releasing her right hand and in a chopping swing, gave the Queen some of her own medicine. The Queen’s head snapped back as she growled in pain. Then Arya delivered a quick rabbit punch to her face. The Queen gave her a sharp elbow to her shoulder that made her cry out in pain. Arya ducked forward, keeping her sword arm up to mirror her opponents up high, and punched the Queen hard in her sternum as she stepped past.

She heard a satisfying grunt, and then she cried out when the hilt of the Queen’s sword grazed over her lower back, shocking her kidney.

Pivoting, Arya roared again, slashing wildly. She used all her strength and enjoyed hearing the woman grunt and give ground, but their swords locked up and Arya’s eyes lifted when the smaller woman, lighter by a stone at least, hefted her up onto her toes and pushed hard, sending her flailing back.

The Queen attacked, hacking high and then low with savage blows. Arya gave way until she suddenly noticed a pattern to her sword work. She developed a counter on the spot and brushed the woman’s sword off to the side, then swept in.

At the last possible moment, the Queen’s free arm came up from underneath, knocking her sword off to the side just enough to miss its mark. Now Arya was on the defensive as the white haired woman jabbed at her face, making Arya lift her guard to block.

The air exploded out of her lungs with the blunted blade hitting her ribs hard, bruising them. She spun away and backhanded a blow that got through the woman’s guard, hitting across her upper left arm, leaving a red mark and torn material.

The two women circled each other, feinting and making sudden thrusts that were blocked. Arya was... slowly being backed up, her parry blocks barely coming in time. She saw the Queen still looking at her as strangely as she had since the fight had begun. Arya swung a blow at the woman’s hip, and with her right hand she threw a punch at the Queen’s face.

The Targaryen and seen it coming and ducked her head to the side, their swords shooting past their bodies. Arya surged forward, and they were pressed to each other as they instantly gripped each other’s sword arms just above the hilt.

The Queen’s head jammed forward and head-butted Arya in the forehead while the wolf’s knee came up, catching the Queen hard in the stomach. They both staggered back, grimacing in pain.

They both panted for breath, now filmed with a light sheen of sweat. After a few moments they came back together again, hurling furious blows at each other. Both were tiring, but they kept attacking. The Queen was landing a few slashes on the younger girl’s arm, and the Stark landed a blow on the Queen’s hamstring.

The strange look never left the Queen’s eyes, and Arya could not understand it. The wolf was still furious, but her rising exhaustion was tempering her savage anger. They locked swords several times, and the Targaryen’s violet eyes up close bored into her own, questioning and searching.

They circled around, their hands grappling with each other’s sword arms, not daring to let go of their opponents lest damage be dispensed. They both grunted and swore under their breath.

They rubbed and clasped. They circled up, closely studying each other, in a dance strange and macabre. Their dance would continue until one or the other would surge, and try and take victory.

Their rhythm became agitated each time one or the other broke off to hack and swing violently. They moved in sync, with water dance skill from Daenerys, and with efficient but wild force from Arya.

When they tired, they would clench, shoving, pushing, and gasping for breath - all the time studying each other until one or the other sought dominance again, and then they would step away and resume their swordplay.

Arya tried to use her heavier frame to her advantage, but she was discovering that Daenerys’ speed and grace were more than a counter for brute force.

They had clenched again, circling. The Targaryen’s violet eyes bored into hers with a hot intensity. Then Arya understood - the continual strange looks. The woman had been just taunting her. She had no idea why what she had said put her into blood lust. Evidently in her exile she had not learned the personal history sadly linking their houses. She hadn’t even been born at the time.

In that moment, she understood the Queen a little better.

But it did not matter.

Arya, since the instant she joined the battle, fought to win. Fought hard. She had seen the men wagering as they fought, and she knew who they were betting on. Damn it! She wanted their respect, and the truth was they only thought of her as a little girl that would surely lose. Damn them all, she was a Stark! She renewed her attack.

Syrio
The sword master had been watching the sword fight closely. He would step in immediately if he sensed his queen was in any danger. She may get some bruises that would take time to heal, and tender ribs along with a few cuts on her body, but she would be fine. Daenerys was obviously holding back. She did not strike with her full strength and did not use her most advance techniques against the Stark girl. She did not want to Arya hurt beyond the measure of giving her a stinging lesson in court etiquette. He saw Barristan was doing the same thing on the other side of the floor in front of the throne.

He was so proud of his student. Her blows were fast and adroit. He watched the Stark girl with a critical eye. She was rough, and while her skill set while good, it was also basic and unrefined. Her attacks were ferocious and untrammeled. Her left-handedness at first threw his prized student, but she quickly adjusted to the attacks coming from the unexpected angle.

The two women hacked and parried, but the queen was slowly pressing the advantage. He noticed two things: the Stark girl was fast. Daenerys had been training for going on five years with his intense water dance lessons. She had become smoke and mirrors, her movements lightning-fast and sure. The Stark should have been torn to ribbons, in the figurative sense.

The two women hacked and parried, but the queen was slowly pressing the advantage. He noticed two things: the Stark girl was fast. Daenerys had been training for going on five years with his intense water dance lessons. She had become smoke and mirrors, her movements lightning-fast and sure. The Stark should have been torn to ribbons, in the figurative sense.

The second thing Syrio saw immediately was that this Stark girl was a natural. Daenerys had her pressed up against the throne, her forearm held against the wolf’s throat, restricting her breath. The queen rasped out through gritted teeth, “Do you yield!?”

Syrio saw the Stark girl’s eyes flare, and she suddenly surged forward, pushing his student back and knocking her off balance. With renewed strength and purpose, the wolf girl rained blows down.

Syrio gasped. That should have been impossible. The girl was coping with some of the advanced moves Daenerys had now used on her. It took years of intense study and training like he, Barristan and Daenerys had endured to learn. Muscles had to be trained over and over to memorize, to do even the first modest steps of master sword work.

The Stark, though exhausted, was utilizing moves that he had spent years learning. He knew this was not a random stroke of luck, because the girl repeated them. The girl was learning merely by seeing and then instinctively coping. It was unnatural. Even more, it was impossible. Arya’s Stark sudden use of new techniques was keeping Daenerys off balance, but it was not enough to keep her from slowly wearing the younger woman down.

Suddenly, the fight was over as Daenerys hooked the crossguard of her opponent’s sword and twisted her sword across and up. The motion twisted the practice sword right out of the Stark’s hand.

Daenerys was breathing heavily, sweat rolling off her face and hands. Her thin linen top clung to her body, drenched in sweat.

The girl across from her was equally soaked in sweat, her face mottled with bruises.

Syrio knew that Daenerys had been holding back so as not to not truly hurt the Stark girl. She had wanted to teach the girl a hard lesson, not realizing the girl was going to give her several lessons as well.

Dany raised her sword up high. “Today I am the victor!” she said, “House Targaryen is the victor.
My power and influence spreads over all of Westeros.” She appeared to revel in the cheers that went up. “House Targa”—

WHAM!

Daenerys’ head snapped back, her hand dropping her sword from the hard left cross that slammed into her right cheek. Staggered, the Queen stumbled back and fell flat on her ass.

“I never said I surrender, you fucking Targaryen Bitch!” the scion of Stark yelled at the surprised Queen staring up at her.

Daenerys’ dragon blood appeared to be boiling again. Arya had made it personal now.

Pushing herself up from the floor the Queen roared. “You. Fucking. Bitchhhhh!”

Arya

What was wrong with her? Arya detested losing with a passion, but she could handle being defeated by the beautiful queen.

Even with her face bruised, and swelling over her right eye, Daenerys was divine. She could not but help but stare at the tear in her blouse that exposed the side of the Queen’s right breast. Her skin was flawlessly creamy, and her lovely breasts swayed with each of the Queen’s movements. The adrenaline rush had the Targaryen’s nipples diamond hard, poking up into the wet fabric clung to her perfectly high and firm breast.

But the spell had been broken when the Queen went on her speech of victory over House Stark. Over her. The Queen thought of her as a little girl that she had just spanked.

That was unacceptable. So Arya punched her.

She stared at her fist in shock. She knew why she had done it, but—why had she done that?! Twice within a half-hour she had attacked her Queen. She knew the woman must hate her now.

Then the breath whooshed out of her body when the Queen’s shoulder slammed into her chest, and they both fell to the floor. Daenerys slammed a fist down into her face once, and then again.

Her inner direwolf howled, and she flexed her hips, heaving and dislodging the Queen over to the floor beside her. She kicked the Queen in the ribs and slammed her fist into Daenerys’ face. She pulled her arm back to land another blow, but her head snapped back from a hard punch to her chin.

The women both rolled away and got up quickly. They circled each other warily, snarling and gnashing teeth. Fists flashed out, most parried or missed, but some landing with hard impact. Heads jolted back with the power of the blows.

Then the Queen roared and charged Arya again. They wound up on the floor rolling around until Arya got her thick, muscled legs wrapped around the Queen’s ribs and locked her ankles over her back, gripping her arms over the smaller woman’s shoulders, pulling her body tight and grinding her chin into Daenerys neck.

The queen screamed as Arya tried to squeeze her in half, growling and jerking her legs, eyes shut tight in focus as she tried to break the Targaryen in two. Suddenly she was lifted up into the air as the dragon used brute strength to lift her body high off the floor. Arya looked around wide-eyed and shocked at the slender queen’s strength.

Then her body slammed into the floor. The queen immediately jerked up and slammed her down again and again as Arya weakened. Two more hard slams, and Arya cried out in agony, her limbs falling away and the back of her head hammered into the stone floor as the Queen leaned down and struck her face with the heel of her hand.

The wolf girl slammed her knee forward into the Queen’s cunt. Daenerys howled in pain, falling forward as they both rolled and then staggered back up onto shaking legs.

They circled again and threw a few punches. Their guards down now due to exhaustion, fists hit flesh but the power of the blows had faded all together.

Daenerys stumbled with a missed punch and Arya used the opportunity to smash into the Targaryen and slam her down onto the floor, then quickly climbed up on the Queen and got her knees on the smaller woman’s shoulders and lifted her fist high in the air to deliver a devastating punch.

She locked eyes with the violet orbs of the queen. Arya paused, feeling herself falling into them. Daenerys took a few moments to regain her focus, then whipped her legs up and forward, hooking them around the front of the younger girl’s shoulders and jerking hard to the side, dislodging her.

They hurried to their feet again, circling each other and snarling.

They surged together as their bodies pressed tight to one another, grappling hands gripping hard. Suddenly, Arya was flipped over Daenerys’ hip and her shoulders slammed into the floor hard enough to make her see stars. She cried out as her ribs were kicked viciously, and the heel of Daenerys’ foot slammed into her cunt repaying her kind for kind. The Stark howled in agony, but managed to find the strength to kick her leg up, her foot hitting the Queen in the stomach and folding her over so her face was down.

Arya slammed her fist up, pounding the Targaryen’s nose and causing blood to gush out. The Queen gripped Arya’s shoulders and jerked her up, then slammed her head into the floor. The Stark girl screamed in pain but it did not take the fight out of her. Arya punched the queen in the face, making her nose bleed heavier. Daenerys staggered back, and fell to the floor.

Arya rolled over to grapple with the woman. With both of them on the floor the queen got the better of her. Daenerys slammed the back of her leg down over Arya’s face, and now it was Arya’s nose that became a fountain of blood.

Suddenly Arya felt agony running through her arm. The Queen had looped her legs around her shoulders and head, then locked her ankles around the other side. She gripped her wrist and pulled it close to her throat, and thrust her hips up and arched her back.

Arya felt her arm stretched out taut, the pain searing.

“Surrender!” the Queen barked.

Arya only jerked and writhed, trying to free her arm. The pain was incredible.

“Surrender!” the Queen roared and pulled down on her arm again, and Arya felt the joint going to its maximum. “Surrender!” Pull. “Surrender!” Jerk. She roared in agony, but she refused to concede.

The queen pulled harder on the arm, arching her body to put more pressure on the overextended joint. Arya could feel her shoulder nearly popping out of its socket and knew the pressure would ruin it - but she could not submit. The Queen saw her as nothing more than a fucking child!
The Queen rocked, putting more and more pressure on the cruelly stretched joint. “Surrender … Surrender gods damnit … Surrender you fucking cunt!”

Arya knew she was doomed, but said nothing.

“I SURRENDER!” The queen said suddenly.

The pressure left Arya’s arm. She silently wept, gripping her throbbing shoulder that hammered out agony with each beat of her heart.

Daenerys

The Queen slowly, tiredly, climbed to her feet and looked around at a sea of shocked faces.

“I want everyone to pay up on your bets. I saw you,” the Queen growled to the gathered throng. Faces turned down to look at money that was about to be surrendered.

The Queen had lost.

Daenerys felt her right eye swelling shut. Her lip was split, and blood still dribbled out her left nostril. Her whole body ached. She looked down at the Stark girl who was on the ground rolling, cradling her shoulder.

Dany had chosen to surrender rather than permanently injure her. It was clear the wolf would never surrender. So the Queen had.

Dany looked down at the girl she had finally vanquished. It had been an ordeal but she was the victor, no matter what was called out loud. Yet she felt no elation. All she wanted to do was kneel down and cradle the girl, tend to her, stroke her body … to … stop it! Daenerys ordered herself.

She sadly forced herself to remember that this was not her destiny. How sad, she reflected, right when she found her throne she also found what she had been longing for her love-starved soul. Unfortunately, one precluded the other. She could not have the girl. She needed to be stronger.

Barristan moved to come help her with Arya, but she shook her head ‘no’. She wanted to be the one, and the only one helping Arya. The only one touching her.

Daenerys was about to move to help the Stark when Arya rolled with obvious difficulty to her knees. The girl weakly hunched her back, exposing her neck. “I accept my fate for attacking the royal personage,” she said. “My family had no part in this matter. Only punish me. I will accept any punishment, Daenerys Targaryen first of your name. I deserve whatever recourse you deem fit. I deserve death for twice attacking you.” she finished softly.

Daenerys stared at the teenager incredulously. This girl - no woman - was a walking contradiction. “Get up Arya Stark—let me help you,” she said, helping the girl up as the young wolf leaned into her body. Daenerys thought the girl’s strong, muscled form felt so delicious against her own.

Daenerys held Arya longer than necessary before she finally broke the intimate clench. She looked intently into the face she had battered.
Arya

Arya was shocked that after all this violent conflict she could feel herself getting wet, and her puffy nipples began to swell as they rubbed against her leathers, the intense friction both pleasurable and painful through her bruises.

The Queen’s grip made Arya’s knees almost buckle in want. Pleasure surged through her body, making her weak. A weakness that piled on top of her rattled senses.

Arya was suddenly thankful for her riding outfit. It kept her arousal well-hidden.

It really was all so sad. All of her sweet child-like fantasies of the queen being smitten with her and sweeping her off her feet, defying all convention to take and bed her, fuck her and marry her. She had ruined with her damned temper. She knew in reality she never had a chance, but to put the nails into the coffin herself really hurt.

Daenerys was ready to move on. “Nothing is going to happen you. It was just a little misunderstanding.” She chuckled, the movement clearly making her bruised ribs bark in pain. She gave Arya a crooked smile.

Daenerys analyzed her, beaten from blows she’d received. “You are loyal subject of a mighty house. Plus, you pack one mean left hook, Arya Stark! Also, if you think I am letting you off this easy, you have another thing coming!” Dany laughed and then gripped her ribs, wheezing in pain.

Arya felt a spasm rip through her battered chest, and she staggered a little, her eyes hazing over with pain.

Daenerys

Dany, worried about a concussion, gripped Arya’s shoulders, holding her upright. Concerned, she moved her finger right and then left, having the girl follow with her eyes. Then she had Arya roll her eyes up and down to track their movements. Daenerys then asked her some family questions she had learned about House Stark in her study of Westeros.

Daenerys asked Arya her parent’s names, how many sisters she had; then how many brothers. When Arya answered four the Queen frowned. Arya, seeing this, stiffly straightened her back “Jon is my brother!” she barked, defending the full brother of her heart.

Daenerys smiled. “I’m sorry. Of course you’re right, it is four.” The smiled and said softly “Loyalty … I like that in a woman.”

Daenerys waved over the Maester, who started to examine and cluck over the battered girl.

Even though Daenerys had only just told herself to be strong, she felt her body defying her already. Her body was telling her to listen to her soul.

Dany reflected on just how good it felt when the Stark girl wrapped her legs around her waist and squeezed. Dany felt her core jerk in response, her labia lips swelling.

Of course, the erotic effect had been quite reduced by the fact the girl had been trying to squeeze the life out of her and break her in two.

But Dany couldn’t but help think what it would feel like to have the girl clasp her that way, with naked thighs, and to press her body down into the supine Stark girl – to ram and sweep her cunt up and down Arya’s swollen cunny, their juices soaking both their groins, slicking them as clits rubbed and jacked over each other through their soaked slits. Arya’s grip with her legs around her hips, ankles locked over her ass and her tilted sweet pussy rocked up into Dany’s own. Their mouths locked, heads tilted over as tongues swept and played with their mate.

The Targaryen felt her eyes glazing over. Daenerys shook her head hard before her already weak knees betrayed her and sent her on her ass. She knew she had to stop this self-torture. Arya had proven twice how much she was not attracted to her that way by nearly putting two arrows in her, and then nearly punching her lights out.

She spied the Maester guiding the girl out of the audience hall, and back to his chamber for treatment.

“And Arya,” the Queen commanded. The wolf turned around slowly, painfully in acknowledgement. “Unless the Maester says otherwise, I want to see you on the practice field tomorrow even if they have to wheel you out. You have natural skill and the passion to be a great swordsman - but it is rough and raw … how about we polish that into burnished steel?” the Queen asked her.

The Queen snorted to herself, hearing how rough her voice sounded with her spit lip and her cheek swelling on the left side as her lip puffed up.

“You are good Arya Stark but you need more practice … we will train together, yes?” the queen asked.

Daenerys smiled inside, seeing the ghost of a smile move across Arya Stark’s beautiful battered face. “As you command, my liege.” she answered, her breath wheezing out of injured ribs. She noticed the girl stood up just a little taller.

After the exchange, Tyrion came walking by, his pockets overflowing with gold coins and IOUs and his fists unable to fully close with all of the dragons in them.

“What are you doing with all that money, Tyrion?” Daenerys asked.

“Counting all my winnings,” Tyrion replied happily, bending over to pick up a dragon he had dropped.

“But I lost, Tyrion!”

“But I bet on the Stark girl, my liege.” The imp smirked.

Daenerys pinched the bridge of her swollen nose. “Of course you did.”

Chapter 30

Chrysalis

Two Years Ago

Jon / Ygritte / Jon / Melisandre / Jon / Ygritte / Jon / Melisandre

Jon

The wind howled from the North. It buffeted the tall conifers, bending them by their force of will. The swirling eddies sloughed through the bows, shaking them, making the needles writhe. Snow that might have settled on them or along the top of branches shook free, and swirled down to the ground. White wind devils swirling to the ground in riots of confusion. Gusts blew and howled like wolves on the hunt. The winds continued moving ever forward from the icy cold of the north. These winds had seen unimaginable evil with their birth at the top of the dark world. The wind cared not for what it had seen, but even unknowing forces of nature can’t help but be influenced by what they had touched.

In leaps and snarls the wind moved ever south. For long leagues in its journey, it met only token resistance. Suddenly, that changed. Ahead it felt pressure from something immense and unmovable. The wind slavered and bit at the obstruction, but it cared not for its ferocity. Around and around the wind whirled and howled in frustration at the block on its path - it was impotent against such an immovable force. Then its brothers arrived and joined it in an eternal frustration of howls. More brothers arrived, and lifted the first winds up, swirling and twining over themselves. Up and up the winds howled, standing on the shoulders of brothers that had come after them.

The winds sought and found no weakness in the Wall before them. If they had had a mind, they would have screamed in frustration. Then, suddenly, the winds were over the top of the Wall, and swirling down and lashing all before it. The wooden latticework on the side of the Wall buffeted and clattered against the sheer ice. Several men on it had to grip the rails to keep their balance, so as not to be cast off the switchback wooden stairs. The basket that hung from a mighty cable swung around in a wild swirl, making sudden leaps and jerks.

The wind howled in triumph as it leapt and clawed down the opposite side of the Wall. It hit the ground and spun in mighty gusts. The detritus that inhabited all human habitations swirled up into the air, jerking and moving in starts with the dust devils. It was dark and the dance of the macabre was unseen. It would not have mattered. A more sublime dance of nefarious intent was already in play by the humans. Their tableau so often repeated in their sad history of conflict, deceit and betrayal.

The winds' howls of remembered evil only merged with and increased the evil already at play. Humans needed little added incentive to create evil. Good and evil would always have their eternal conflict. The players will change, and the tableau acted out will vary, but the sad display of human avarice will always find voice. The winds only paused for a moment to contemplate the act of treachery before racing south to further contemplate their lonely fates.

“I told you I would come back.” Alliser Thorne told Jon Snow, appearing from the inky shadows near the Wall, his wolf cape jerking and flung out behind him by the wind as he approached the surrounded Lord Commander. He moved in closer. “You thought to send me to my death out there beyond the Wall, but I survived.” He had a rapacious smile on his face. A look of sure triumph.

Wun Wun was cornered against a storage shed with long pikes aimed at his head and body. He still had Ser Patrell’s broken body dangling from his right hand. He was shouting in his guttural language that none of them in this party understood. The giant looked to Jon for salvation in his agitated state. His friend’s eyes had no salvation to give. This only increased the Giant’s confusion and panicked anger.

“I’m going to kill your pet, and then we are going to kill this traitor who has let the wildlings come through the Wall unopposed and given them land in the Gifts. You are a fucking traitor!” Alliser shouted at his mortal enemy, his face in the dark light of the cloud covered night sky snarling at his foe. He moved in as the other members of his cabal moved closer to Jon, daggers drawn to commit murder. Treason always waited for the dark to commit atrocity.

“Listen to me … these are different times. You know what the true enemy is. We must stand united against them. We need every hand we can get to man the Wall. Our numbers are too depleted to fight alone!” Jon Snow shouted, trying to reason with his brothers in black.

“No. They are animals that deserve death!” Wick Whittlestick shouted. “Let them all die. We swore an oath. We are the shield. A shield to protect Westeros from the Wildings and from this inhuman thing!” Whittlestick motioned at the frightened giant.

“No! They are the same as those we protect below they Wall. They are men, women, children! We need to meld their strength with ours to meet the threat that comes for us all! Don’t become what you hate! This is treason! Listen to your hearts and not this vile cretin. We are better than him. It is Allisar that is the traitor.”

“No Jon Snow, this is justice.” Allisar spoke, turning to look at the large circle of crows that encircled their Commander. “This man is a traitor and has sided with our sworn enemy. He has weakened us and polluted our numbers with these vile sub-human residents of the wild North. What is the verdict? What say you my brothers?!”

“No Jon Snow, this is justice.” Allisar spoke, turning to look at the large circle of crows that encircled their Commander. “This man is a traitor and has sided with our sworn enemy. He has weakened us and polluted our numbers with these vile sub-human residents of the wild North. What is the verdict? What say you my brothers?!”

“Death!” was shouted in the dark night and swirling winds. The hollowing winds birthed in evil seeming to echo in agreement to the pronouncement of evil intent.

Jon looked desperately at Bowen Marsh. He was crying. “Bowen you can’t do this! This is treason!”

“Ohhh, Jon! You’re a traitor, Jon!” Bowen moaned, moving closer. Jon felt his arms caught from behind as he watched Alliser Thorne step forward with a look of triumph in his eyes. Jon cursed as his pinned arms kept Longclaw just out of reach. His compassion for his fellow crows had taken his only chance of life from him.

“Sentence has been rendered, Jon Snow … I am going to pierce that vile, black-bastard heart.” Alliser spoke with calm resolve.

He moved forward another step, his face formed in a mask of grim resolve with a hint of a smile. Suddenly, the man started with a jerk. Jon saw Alliser’s eyes first flare, and then bulge, his mouth half-opened with his tongue sticking out. Jon watched in fascination as Alliser slowly looked down his body.

Jon stared in shock as five long, black, slender fingers jutted out of Alliser’s chest, and then jammed forward another two feet. The fingers were more like talons; inhumanly long and dark as the space between the stars. Alliser’s body began to convulse and he dropped his long dagger. The rest of his conspirator leaders stood in shocked silence and forgot about Jon for the moment, watching their conspirator leader dying on the strange spikes protruding from his body.

Suddenly a crow standing to his left was lifted up four feet into the air, as five long-jointed black fingers were savagely jammed through his torso. The man’s sword dropped from a lifeless hand, now hanging limp. Both bodies were lifted up into the air and jerked to and fro like marionettes on the strings of a cruel puppet master.

In a whipping motion both dead bodies were slammed down into the hard, frozen ground; their bodies shattered by the force of being violently slammed to Earth. A huge black shape morphed into view.

Jon gaped at the apparition from the pits of a Stygian hell. The demon was at least fifteen feet tall. It had a huge head with an overlarge mouth and red pits for eyes. Long fangs lined its jaws. Its head was triangular shaped. The thing’s body was thin at the waist but large in the chest in a shape no human could have. It had long legs with knees bent at an unnatural angle. The thing tilted its head back and emitted a long hideous wail of horror.

Its right hand reached out and gripped a man’s head. Jon watched in horror. The man’s head exploded in blood and bone flinging from between the black shadowy monster’s fingers. Its other hand gigged another crow with its five long fingers. The huge fifteen foot tall thing turned on its unnatural thin waist looking for new humans to slay. The edges of it seemed to constantly roll and surge.

The figure bent down, and its huge, dark mouth glowing green inside with three-inch long daggers that appeared along its gums snapped down on a shocked crow. The horrid teeth of the black shadow monster pierced and rent the man’s body almost in half. His scream was cut off, his limbs dangling out of the shadow’s mouth.

As the shock was beginning to wear off, Jon noticed two of the crows guarding Wun Wun were down, arrows jutting out of their necks. As he watched, another went down with an arrow through his eye. Wun Wun surged forward into the thinned ranks as another crow dropped his pike. His hand reached up and gripped his throat around the arrow that had shot half way through his neck. The dying man fell to his knee. Wun Wun fell on the other confused crows, crushing one with the body of Ser Pertell being used as a club.

Shouts from crows and wildlings filled the air, wondering what was happening in their midst. Giants could be heard roaring coming to their brother’s aid. Jon pulled his Valyrian sword out of its sheath and prepared to defend himself. The monster spit out its dead morsel and rose up to almost thirty feet
This was a demon from the pits of hell. If Jon had known that instead of death by the hand of man he was about to die from the hand of the after world, he would have laughed aloud. The fates always pissed on House Stark. The monster jumped up high in the air as Jon angled his sword across his face in defense.

The monster landed just behind him, crushing three men to death, pulping the bodies down to splintered bone and flesh that oozed gore and blood into the hard, frozen Earth. The hard ground refused to take the offering of shattered bodies. The monster, faster than thought, gripped his shoulder and pulled him behind it as its other hand lashed out, spearing another man with its five fingers. Suddenly, a woman from his past stood before him. She pivoted and shot another crow down with her arrow.

"Move Jon Snow—You know nothing!" Ygritte shouted. "Melisandre—come!" Ygritte started to move off.

"No. I need to get this under control!"

"They’re going to kill you, man! Melisandre is weakening and I’m almost out of arrows! We need to run while the confusion lasts!"

Jon ran after his old lover, excited and relieved to see her alive. He had assumed she must have burned in one of the towers that burned down in the Wildling assault eight months ago.

Behind them, the silent black monster continued to kill without mercy. "What the hell is that thing?" Jon shouted at his lover’s retreating back.

"That’s my wife’s shadow self. She will provide cover as we get to our horses."

Jon hesitated, slowing down "That is my command! I must go back."

Ygritte whirled around and gripped his cloak "Those fuckers were going to kill you Jon! Fuck them! Come with us and live, you bastard! Do you know nothing?!" She shook him. The hard snapping of his neck brought the reality of the situation to Jon.

He shook his head yes.

They fled out of the grounds of Castle Black and over the frozen tundra and then then into the thick stands of woods to the left of Castle Black. They moved with hurried steps as war horns of both crows and wildlings blew in wild riots of confusion. They would have to take care of themselves.

For twenty minutes Ygritte and Jon hurried at a half run through the trees and open spaces between stands of trees. They ran from one corpse of trees to the next as the stands of trees grew larger in size. The last stand of trees a mile across. Finally, they entered a small clearing in this stand of trees. Here Jon saw that three horses were tied up. His salvation had been planned and prepared for. Only then did Jon see a small fire burning down.

"Melisandre!" Ygritte screamed surging forward seeing her wife prostate on the ground. "Nooooo! Dammit! I told you not to expend yourself beyond your limits!"

Jon saw a tall body crumpled down on itself by the dying burning fire. Up close Jon, could see by the size of the heap of cankers that this had once been a mighty fire indeed. Ygritte ran to the form and pushed the body back onto its back. "Baby, baby!" Ygritte took what was an extremely tall woman’s hand and kissed it, while chafing it with her hands and leaning down to kiss the unconscious woman on the lips. “Oh baby, we’re here … baby, I’ve come back with Jon. You were so awesome. You kicked crow ASS!”

“Ohhhhh,” the tall woman moaned, and Ygritte squealed. Jon watched his small former lover crawl on top of the prostrate woman and grip the woman’s head with both hands, lifting it and kissing her with hot passion. The tall woman enfolded Ygritte with both arms and hugged the small woman down onto her long frame as they kissed deeply, tongues dancing entwined.

After a long minute the tall woman sat up. She easily held Ygritte to her as she rose up to a sitting position. Ygritte backed off, spit roped between their lips. “Don’t ever do that again Melisandre! You know nothing!” Ygritte berated the woman while holding her tight and kissing her throat. Jon watched his former love hug the tall woman with deep auburn hair, a glowing red ruby at her throat. He noticed in the fading firelight that the woman’s eyes were an unsettling red. She looked weak and haggard. She had obviously expended herself greatly to save him.

Jon already felt he was deeply in this woman’s debt. A woman he had just met had saved his life at her own personal cost.

The tall woman looked at Jon over Ygritte’s shoulder as the short woman kissed and licked her throat. The woman had beautiful angles to her face, and her dark red eyes were beguiling when he got a closer look. The woman’s long hair flowed down over her shoulders and back. She silently regarded Jon Snow. “I’m Melisandre of Asshai, and this is my wife Ygritte of the Wildings and of Asshai. You are Azor Ahai reborn. I am to become your wife as well.”

“What?!” Jon asked shocked, stepping back.

“Dammit Melisandre, you know nothing. We were supposed to seduce him, woman.” Ygritte sighed, getting up and helping the woman stand. She was four inches taller than Jon’s five foot ten inch height. She was voluptuous. This was a strong woman Jon thought. Though at the moment she was weak. She had abused her strength to save Jon. Jon was in her debt and he would need to repay it. The woman leaned on Ygritte’s shoulder, hugging the woman possessively to her side.

Ygritte gave Jon her brilliant smile that always made his heart clutch in his chest. “I’m so happy to see you alive, Ygritte. I had feared you were dead.”

“I would have been dead if Melisandre had not come and saved me from you and your damn crows.” Ygritte spoke in a gruff voice, but she had a big smile on her face.

“Will you come with us, Jon Snow?” the tall, solemn looking woman asked him in a serious calm tone.

“I will.” In all reality, what choice did he have? His own brothers had just attempted to assassinate him.

Ygritte

“Jon, help me get Melisandre on her horse. She is still so weak.” Ygritte asked her former lover. He did as she asked - it was his nature to help and nurture.

They helped lift up a wobbly ShadowBender who leaned against her horse weakly. “Help me get her up, but be gentle with her Jon. She’s so fragile!” the wildling said, wringing her hands. Jon gripped the extremely tall woman who held the saddle horn. He held her hips and she got a foot on a stirrup then paused, gathering her strength.
“Easy Jon! Don’t hurt my wife! She expended too much saving us … be easy! You know nothing!” Jon eased his grip on the tall woman’s body.

Melisandre turned her head to look at her wife. “Ygritte, you make me sound like a chicken boned woman! I won’t break. I am just a little drained.”

Ygritte went up to her woman and stroked her strong thigh. “I know you aren’t weak baby … I love those big, strong thighs gripping my head, and you grinding that big, juicy pussy up and down my face… with your hands in my hair grinding my face in your hot couchie as it explodes and floods my mouth with your sweet cum and all over my face.” Ygritte said with a dreamy look on her face.

Melisandre groaned, her face going scarlet despite her weakened and pale state. “Ygritte, you’re nothing but a horndog … Jon just got here, baby. He doesn’t need to hear about our lovemaking.” A mortified ShadowBender explained in a not so soft whisper.

“She is good at that I have found.” Ygritte exclaimed with a melodramatic flourish.

Melisandre sighed and looked at Jon aggrieved. The look was returned.

“I see you have experienced Ygritte in all her sass and glory.” Jon told the woman sympathetically with a soft smile on his face. “She led me astray from my sacred vows.”

“Do tell.” Melisandre said, suddenly sprucing up.

“The way I remember it, Ygritte was after me like a love sick puppy begging me to give her my cock. You were hot for me, is how I remember it Ygritte.”

Ygritte looked up at Melisandre, who had her eyebrow cocked.

“Jon. Tell me more about how Ygritte was sniffing around your crotch like a horndog.”

Ygritte barked that it was Jon that was whining for her hot body. Ygritte changed the subject having not liked the direction of the current talk. “Jon get my wife up on her horse. Jon moved to comply. He lifted Melisandre as she pulled on the saddle horn.

“Gently Jon! Don’t hurt her!”

The Crow and witch looked at each other with aggrieved looks again as Jon got her on the horse. All the while Ygritte yammering at Jon to be gentle with Melisandre.

“I hear you sighing Melisandre!” Ygritte sniped at the two.

Ygritte stomped to her horse and mounted as Jon got on his horse. She fumed and led her horse between Jon and Melisandre to preclude any further conversation.
For fifteen minutes Ygritte rode between her lovers. She led the conversation to the situation with the crows and the Wall. It was obvious to her and Melisandre Jon was still in mental shock at their betrayal. His mulling over the betrayal of his Crow brothers. His voice was at times wooden, confused and angry.

Ygritte circled back and hid their tracks with the expert skills she had learned from her wildling second childhood before she spurred her horse forward to rejoin her wife and husband. She couldn’t wait to fuck them both.

That night they took many breaks to let Melisandre recover her strength and let the horses feed from grain they had in the saddlebags. They kept pressing on as the sun rose and shone on their backs. For three more hours they walked, moving from stand of woods too the next stand of woods. They moved deep into the trees to remain hidden.

They then moved into a small forest. They walked their horses slowly deeper into the trees. An hour in they took a break. The forest getting older with old growth trees and thick underbrush between the trunks. Jon ate some wafer bread and beef jerky that Ygritte offered him. He drank from a canteen provided. They then remounted their horses and moved ever deeper into the gloom of the sentinel old growth conifers and sprinkling of old oaks and maples. They found a small fox trail and they led the horses down the thin trail. For the next three hours the three went down narrow animal trails between trees and thick brambles. They then came out of the forest into a small glade.

Their cabin was on the edge of the glade, hidden by the surrounding trees. The rough hewn timbers showed their age but the building was sound and hale. The logs were caulked with hard clay and were well-maintained, keeping out the cold and rain. The cabin was tall and had a high arched roof to let the snow slide off in heavy snowfalls. There were several windows with glass panes that would let in light at certain hours when the sun was angled right in the eastern sky. Plenty of chopped wood was stacked high by the side of the cabin. It was an idyllic spot for the witches and their soon to be husband.

Melisandre was swaying on her horse. Jon quickly dismounted and went to her, to ease the tall auburn-haired woman down off her horse. Melisandre had started to slide down the side of her horse. Jon easily caught the woman and cradled her to him in his strong arms. He carried her into the cabin followed by an anxious Ygritte.

Ygritte wrung her hands again in worry. She was not used to seeing Melisandre being so gaunt and pale. She was always so strong and vibrant! She smiled softly seeing Jon Snow’s instinctive caring and nurturing side manifest itself. He was a born caregiver. It was the man’s nature to protect those in need, and it was part of what made her fall so hard for him. Melisandre would love him to when they got to know each other. Ygritte was sure of. For Melisandre it was still about prophecy, but soon it also would be about love and desire.

She led him into a bedroom dominated by a big bed that looked like a tornado had run over it. Ygritte saw Jon smirk. Thank the gods Melisandre was still groggy or she would be mortified to see their bed. They had forgotten to make it up having fucked hot and hard just before leaving to go save his ass.

She asked Jon to go find the covered pitcher of cider they had in the cabinet. He came back a minute later and gently lifted up Melisandre’s head and helped her drink down the fluids. Ygritte felt her heart pitter patter, seeing Melisandre’s hand grip Jon’s hand as she drank and they looked deep into each others eyes. Soon, very soon, they would both be hers. It filled her body with warmth seeing them already bonding before even knowing it. Ygritte then thought where that bonding would eventually lead, and she felt her pussy getting wet in anticipation.
They got Melisandre stripped down and Ygritte saw Jon’s eyes drink in her wife’s statuesque beauty. They had sat her up and undone the buttons and laces along her back, and shed the dress off her broad shoulders to reveal her full, firm breasts. Then they pulled the dress down her legs, exposing her big, bald pussy all soft and smooth. Ygritte felt her body instinctively clench in desire for the redhead’s charms. It was natural. She chewed her lip when Jon showed no arousal.

Jon had always blushed and reacted to Ygritte’s body when she was only a wildling. He was a strong, virile man reacting to her innate beauty as a woman. It was this same beauty that radiated from Melisandre’s statuesque, voluptuous body. Jon’s lack of reactions to Melisandre’s form was indeed worrying. Jon left them for some privacy, returning to the main room.

Ygritte got her wife comfortable as she quickly fell asleep. She covered the witch up snug in the blankets. Normally, they did not need covers but in her weakened state Melisandre did not need her body losing any of its heat.

Satisfied with her wife’s state, Ygritte went to Jon in the main room. He had gotten the fire going and she made a meal of cut cheese and salted meat with mead for him, as she no longer needed to eat for subsistence.

Jon was starving and ate two platefuls of food. Ygritte sat silently watching her husband. She would have to formalize it like she had with Melisandre. She knew they had a lot to discuss.

Finished, Jon pushed the dishes aside. He looked into her eyes. “I guess you have a lot to tell me, Ygritte.” he calmly said, his eyes so soft and gentle. Ygritte felt her love surging for Jon. She couldn’t wait to get him in their marriage bed.

“Where do you want me to start?”

“How about how you survived the fight at Castle Black and go from there?”

Ygritte told her of her being saved by Melisandre. How she was taken back to this cabin and of their dire injuries. How they healed each other. How she found out about her previous life.

Jon’s eyes had gotten big when she told him about her former life in Asshai where she was Tygreti, a mighty ShadowBender. She had been alive for almost a thousand years and sought a disciple to teach her sorcery to. She had selected a young sex slave who had been tortured. She spoke of how this young girl had snapped and killed the whole family torturing her one night. She was to be shipped off to the slave mines of Valyria. Instead, she took Melisandre in. She taught her all she knew, and the pupil became as great as the master.

Then Ygritte smiled. “I was as big a prude as you Jon, but Melisandre seduced me thank the gods.” She then told Jon of her original death. Then she circled back around to being saved in this life. She explained to Jon what had occurred to her since her saving at Castle Black.

Ygritte told Jon with a smirk that this time she was the one to seduce and bring her teacher into her bed.

“She is such a beautiful woman, isn’t she Jon?” Ygritte asked her former lover.

“Yes, she is.”

“Then why didn’t you react to her naked body? She is so hot. I saw no passion in you, Jon.”

“All passion for the flesh died in me Ygritte, when I thought you had died. I don’t feel anything like passion now. My desires for flesh perished with your supposed death.”
“I’m back, Jon.” Ygritte spoke, gripping his hand and running her thumb over it. “I have seen the fires. Come to bed with us and join us in a holy union of three.” She looked intently at her husband. “We were meant to be, Jon Snow. The three of us. Let us love and share life.”

Jon pulled his hand back. “I’m sorry, Ygritte. I can’t. Not now. I have a lot to think about. Please give me time.” Ygritte saw the pensive look on Jon’s face. The damn Stark resolve was going to be a pain in her ass again. She grinned to herself. She had seduced Jon Snow once. She and Melisandre would do so again.

“You will marry both of us, Jon. We have both seen it in the flames” Ygritte grinned at the crow. “The sex is smoking hot. Why delay the inevitable?”

“I think not, Ygritte. That part of me died with your supposed death.”

“Okay Jon. … I know this is a lot to take in at one time. I will show patience.” Ygritte smiled at Jon wickedly. “Even when we both know that is not my nature.” She got up and started to go the bedroom to her wife. She stopped and half turned around. “Just don’t keep us waiting too long.” She said saucily.

She left the curtain pushed back so Jon could see into their bedroom. Ygritte stripped down and got underneath the covers. She smiled when Melisandre turned over and snuggled into her body, gripping her tit possessively and threw a long leg over her legs claiming her as Melisandre’s. She knew that Melisandre would easily fall in love with Jon. He was that damn good with his smoking hot body and sweet ways. She could afford to be patient.

Yes. She would have them both. Melisandre had told her when they looked at him in the flames that he acted like a woman with his constant caring and compassion. His gentleness was feminine, though he was all man. Ygritte had played up Jon’s gentle nature even more as they talked. She saw that Jon’s gentleness called to Melisandre and she played on that to make sure her wife fell in love with Jon. He would have two wives and they would share one husband.

Since her rebirth Ygritte had regaled Melisandre with tales of Jon’s gentle nature. It was easy to tell her wife of the many sweet things that Jon had done with her. While they fucked, Ygritte told Melisandre in lurid details at how well he boned and the feel of his big cock fucking her in her cunt. She had told her ShadowBender wife how she had just talked him into fucking her in the ass when things, well, went south, so to speak. She had loved feeling his cock flooding her womb or colon with hot semen. Ygritte knew how to make sex sound so fucking hot. She gave Melisandre hot sweet details of her fucking Jon.

Melisandre moaned it was like being in their furs with them.

She had Melisandre panting to go down on Jon and to fuck him with her hot tight pussy and asshole. The voluptuous woman was insatiable, and once she had a taste of Jon she would be hooked on him just like Ygritte had become. Ygritte preferred pussy, but there was just something about Jon. Melisandre was right. It was his feminine nature enclosed by that male psyche that made him so fucking hot. They would eat him up alive.

Jon

Jon was still trying to come to terms with his crow brothers tying to assassinate him. He had been doing the right thing, and they would have driven their daggers deep into his body until he lay dead on the ground. The fact that his brothers would give any credence to Alliser Thorne made his blood boil. The man had died a horrible death and Jon could only smile at the memory. The traitor had gotten his deserved fate. The man was twisted, but that he had also been able to sway good men like Bowen Marsh truly troubled Jon’s soul.

His betrayal was one thing, but the additional insight to the hearts and souls of his fellow brothers was more troubling to Jon. The blind prejudice that he heard and saw that night soured Jon towards the whole order. He had seen the truth of the times. The wildlings were members of the realm that deserved protection. And his brothers talked of these men, women and children as less than human.

How could they feel this way? Where was their sense of compassion and justice? How could they be so cruel to so many? Especially their willingness to sacrifice women and children to certain death – that was horrible to even contemplate. It made his stomach squirm.

He knew that the brothers would keep their treason to themselves for as long as they could. It gave Jon time to consider his options and nurse his building sense of rage and need for righteous justice. His father would kill them all if discovered his attempted assassination.

Jon sighed. He did not want that. He only wanted to punish any surviving conspirators. The rest were innocent or those who knew but did not participate he could overlook. He would send them to exile in other Crow Forts. He would isolate the contagion. The Wildlings would watch over them.

Time passed, and he lived with Ygritte and Melisandre in a quiet sharing of the cabin. He slowly got comfortable around the two lovers. Ygritte had left them to scout the area around Castle Black, and seek out old contacts amongst the wildlings to find out the way of things. To see the balance between Crows and wildlings. Jon had total confidence in her skills.

Melisandre had been a nervous wreck. She cried and shook with fear for her wife. Her face nearly pressed into the flames to see that Ygritte was still safe. It touched Jon to see such devotion. Their love for each other was so obvious in their shared looks, and the gentle touches - not to mention the sounds of rampant sex at night and sometimes during the day. Well, more than sometimes. He had to admire their stamina.

He had wondered if he should be jealous when he first arrived at his hideaway. He almost immediately decided he had no right to feel that way. He had made his decision. He had chosen duty over and love. Honor over love. The only thing that he had received in return for his duty was very nearly a traitorous death. A death delivered by his own sworn brothers. The more he thought on that the more his soul raged. He felt some fundamental shift in his soul.

He had comforted Melisandre. He could not watch her suffer and not try to alleviate the pain he saw on her face and in her voice. She snuggled into his arms sniffing. She murmured she couldn’t live without Ygritte again. She would just die. Jon felt a lump in his throat at such pure love. He could only be happy for them.

He had felt the first stirring of desire then, seeing the bright and pure love between these two women.

When Ygritte came back into the glade, leading her horse by hand Melisandre had squealed in pure happiness. She ran across the glade hard with her dress flowing behind her as she picked up Ygritte and kissed her deeply. Melisandre had brought Ygritte back into the cabin easily, carrying the short woman. Jon watched her take Ygritte into the big bedroom. They stripped each other, clothes flying everywhere, and then fell to the bed. They never even pulled the curtain across the threshold. That ceased doing that almost from the start. Jon went outside and sat down on the small porch. His ears over the next hours filled with repeated screams of orgasmic bliss.
Jon eventually got up and walked through the forest. A man, hell, a person could only hear so much passion and raw sexual energy before one’s body was thrumming and shaking.

He loved Ygritte’s fiery nature. That was what attracted him to her from the start. It made Ygritte’s smile shine like the sun in the sky, just like her hair glimmered so brightly in the sun. It had been easy to fall in love with her. He had died on the inside, believing her dead. Now, he could feel that flame coming back to life.

Melisandre was the opposite in so many ways. Ygritte would look you straight in the eye with her chin thrown forward until you backed down from her sheer force of personality. Melisandre was demure, and almost shy. She stood up to Ygritte, but with quiet resolve that had the fiery redhead quickly backing down if she was in the wrong. Melisandre was like Jon in that they both enjoyed the little spitfire with her sass.

Melisandre was quiet and differential to Jon. She said he was Azor Ahai and she was in awe of him. That made Jon very uncomfortable. He insisted on cleaning the dishes after they cooked and cleaned the house. When Melisandre tried to step in, he had told her that he needed some duties to tend to. She tried to refuse him, but he saw admiration in her eyes. She liked his willingness to do the chores almost all men turned their noses up at. Jon was truly exceptional to the women in his life.

Jon was also discovering Melisandre had a subtle humor. She would make soft comments that made him stop and look back at her, wondering if it was a witty play of words it was so subtly done. He liked it.

The next morning after Ygritte’s return from her scout mission to Castle Black Jon was given the details of what was occurring at his old command. The Crows were indeed lying low. They were definitely afraid of the reaction of Jon’s father. They were living in dread. They were keeping to their quarters silently to themselves. They sent false messages to the other forts that all was well. No reports of monsters or many deaths was given.

Ygritte had met with some of her former countrymen and told them to keep the status quo. She informed the leaders of the Wildlings that Jon Snow would return and that the traitors would be dealt with very harshly. All the offers he had given to the Wildlings would be honored. More would be given if they kept this all secret and give Jon time to fully recover and seek his command back.

Ygritte had been post persuasive. She had smirked at Jon with her shit eating grin that said I am just that good.

After three weeks, the women had stopped wearing clothes in the house. They liked their fire burning hot, but they did not need the heat. They pressed into Jon when making a point, or putting his meals on the table. They kissed heatedly in front of him, and had actually started to fuck on the floor in front of him on the pile of furs. He had run out the door then. The women knew no shame! His Stark resolve was mortified.

He snorted to himself as he walked through boughs and listened to his muffled steps on fallen needles. Ygritte had asked him: “What man doesn’t want to see two hot women fucking each other blind?” Their open sexuality was making his body come back to life, but he was not ready for that. Not yet. He needed more time.

The women did not push themselves on him, not really. They just made it perfectly clear they were waiting for him to join them. They desired for him to partake in the rut of passion and life, and bind his soul to theirs.
More weeks passed.

Ygritte was out hunting for some fresh game so Jon could have rabbit stew. Melisandre turned from the fire to look at Jon. She had put on clothes with Ygritte out of the cabin, to give Jon a break he knew from their rampant assault on his senses. Her dress was still unbuttoned so that her large, full rounded breasts nearly spilled out her top. The red choker around her throat with its dark red ruby highlighted her eyes. She was strikingly beautiful. She was preparing some radishes, then she put her knife down and turned to look at Jon who was peeling potatoes.

“You must have been a woman in your former life, Jon Snow.” she told him.

Jon could tell by the tone that it was not an insult. He was not offended. “Why do you say that?”

“You are so gentle and insightful to the human spirit, as evidenced by your compassion for the wildlings. You are so good to Ygritte and to me, a stranger. Most men would react to me in this situation by saying I stole their wife. You are simple in your desires, and seek to nurture and support.”

Jon considered that. “I can live with that.”

He knew they were trying to seduce him with their brazen sexuality. That night Melisandre had quietly knelt in front of him while Ygritte came to sit beside him on the sofa. Both of them were nude as their name day. Ygritte had started to kiss his temple, and Melisandre started to undo the laces to his breeches.

He had stopped them before they could proceed. He was not ready. He was coming to really like, and maybe love Melisandre, but he was not ready to take that step. He stood up and asked them to please go their bedroom, but he could not join them.

Ygritte had been pissed off at the rebuff. It had been polite and courteous, but still a rejection. Jon watched Melisandre take the small woman in her arms. Ygritte looked so hurt. The tall redhead bent her head down, and tenderly kissed Ygritte on her temple. “He doesn’t love me, Ygritte.” Was her simple, sad comment.

Ygritte had raged at Jon with her eyes as they walked to their bedroom. That night the curtain was ripped across the doorway with a savage jerk. Jon would not be allowed to be a voyeur tonight.

Jon prepared the large sofa for the bed it became every night. He built up the fire. He sat staring at the flames like the two women did when they studied them. All Jon saw was flames - they had no answers for him.

He was coming to care for Melisandre, but he was still coming to terms with Ygritte’s supposed death and his large hand in it. He instinctively knew that if Melisandre had not interceded Ygritte would have died then and he would have followed her in death later by the hand of the same crows he had sacrificed her for.

He was unsure of himself and his place in this world. He had been raised to love one woman, not two. He was definitely not jealous of Melisandre. He could only feel happiness that Ygritte had been saved by a woman from a long ago past. He heard the bed rocking, and he knew they were “tribbing” as they called it. He had watched them from the doorway many, many times now. It was impossible not to, really. To see these two beautiful women fucking wildly and knowing he could join at any time was maddening in a way.

His father had a one-on-one relationship with Catelyn Stark. She had made his own life miserable, it was true, but he could see his father loved his wife despite her flaws. It was hard for him to shake that fundamental foundation of his belief system. Could he love two women at the same time? Jon shook his head. He knew that most men would have thrown himself in that bed faster than he could blink.

Damn his sense of honor.

Ygritte was screaming her head off, the headboard banging into the wall. He knew exactly how Melisandre was fucking his love. He had watched Melisandre previously fuck Ygritte up on her palms, slamming her cunt and grinding up Ygritte’s swollen, sloppy pussy and swirling her hips back in a tight swirl to again slam her cunt into Ygritte’s swollen drooling love chute pounding it hard like he would. Ygritte sounded like she was being garroted. Jon sighed at the sounds of rutting and passionate love. What else could he do? He could be in there partaking of two beautiful women and watching them fuck each other right beside him. Every man’s dream!

Damn his honor!

It was going to be a long night.

Melisandre

It hurt. It hurt a lot being rejected by Jon. He had been kind and gentle and a part of her understood, but it hurt like hell. She was hurt that he seemed so in control of his emotions. Most men, hell any other man, would have ripped their clothes off (if they wore any), and defiled them both repeatedly. Not this damn man though.

She remembered back to her pre-teens and early teen years before Tygreti came to her, when she was still Melony. All the men had looked at her with fuck hunger. She had hated it so then. Now she wanted Jon Snow to look at her like that with a desperation that was starting to border on pain.

She felt her heart ache in her chest when he turned them away. Fortunately, she had her sweet, sweet wife. She dragged her to their bed and they had made heated love over and over deep into the night. She soon forget all about Jon Snow with her wife taking her to heaven over and over. The feel of her petite fist in her pussy twisting in and slamming her cervix and then her mouth coming down to suckle her clit made her go multiple and nearly made her pass out with ecstasy.

After they had finally exhausted themselves and wrecked the bed, they were satiated. Melisandre’s hurt was mollified and Ygritte’s anger banked. They discussed Jon as they cuddled and pressed their bodies tight against each other.

Ygritte told her that now that her dander was down she could see it from Jon’s perspective and it was kind of sweet. They discussed how men were such pigs as a rule, but not the Starks. They were so honorable, which was jumping up to put a big pain in their asses currently, but he was coming around.

Melisandre had to agree. He had always been polite and genteel with her. He insisted in doing many of the household chores that she enjoyed doing. He and Melisandre had a hard time getting to know each other, initially. Both were shy and quiet by nature.

Ygritte confessed she may have exaggerated a little bit when they first rescued Jon from the hated crows. Ygritte told her, looking sheepish, that it had been her pursuing and seducing Jon. That he resisted her for the longest time and she was trying to put the blast on him from the moment they met.
She had to nearly rape him to finally get him to bed her. She lamented never having the hunt for one’s mate with Jon. She paused for the longest time after that. Melisandre wondered if her wife had gone to sleep. Ygritte resumed her narration to explain that once she got Jon in her furs, the man had been insatiable. She had told Melisandre already how big he was and how he could bone so good. The man was a natural cocksman. She had highlighted to Melisandre of Jon’s love of going down on her, and that he was really, really good at sucking her off. A man who loves eating pussy was awesome. Again they agreed, he had to have been a woman in his previous lives.

Jon and Melisandre were both shy and reserved by nature. Ygritte was easy to fall for, with her fiery in-your-face stance and the natural sass that simply endeared her to you. But, Melisandre had to work to form a relationship with Jon. He was not distant, or in any way acting superior, just reserved. She was slowly finding him so endearing and charming in that ancient, formal manner you saw in plays in Braavos. He really was just that good and honorable.

She smiled, hugging Ygritte. She loved her wife so much, but she knew she could love Jon too. It was her destiny, after all. When Jon killed his wife, they had to love each other. There had to be that deep connection of love and then loss for the sword of Azor to become all it could be.

It was funny, falling in love with a man you were prophesied to fall in love with.

He had tried profusely to apologize after that night. He had told her that he found her to be a beautiful woman, but that he was raised to love only one woman and he was still processing the that idea that Ygritte was alive and married to a woman.

He held up his hand when Melisandre started to sputter. He told her he fully supported them and their love. She found that so endearing and her heart fell more in love with the man. She never thought she could love a man, but she guessed there was an exception to every rule. How she longed now to suck his cock and feel it exploding deep in her throat, and to feel his manhood in her pussy and ass like Ygritte had.

They came together more and more over the following weeks as they shared duties around the house. She would watch him chop wood, stripped down to his waist, enjoying his hard, sculpted muscles. She enjoyed how he blushed when he caught her looking, and then trying to not preen but doing exactly that as he chopped more wood, knowing he had her rapt attention.

She and Ygritte continued parading around the house nude. She liked that Jon looked on Ygritte with open lust when he thought no one was looking. He still loved the woman he had shared life with.

She felt a massive thrill the first time she saw him just staring at her, and told her in a breathy voice: “My god, you are a beautiful woman Melisandre—Ygritte is such a lucky woman to have you love her.”

She had sauntered up to him, and pressed her full bosom into his upper arm and leaned down. “You can have this body, and hers too, Jon Snow. We both love you so deeply. I yearn to feel you cock buried deep in my pussy and filling it with your hot potent seed. To see your face as my cunt grips you cock in a wet hot velvet fist and you feel the orgasmic spasms tearing my cunt apart on your spurting cock.”

She smiled recalling his loud gulp and the way his body shook. Ygritte told her that she now saw Jon staring at her ass, pretty pussy and awesome tits when he thought no one was looking. He would soon be theirs.

Two nights ago she had pressed into Jon while they prepared his dinner. He had always before respectfully and subtly moved back while pretending to move to get something. Not this time. This time he pressed into her naked body and she shivered, feeling her nipples getting hard and her pussy lips swell as she felt her juices slicking her folds. He turned to look into her eyes, tilting his head up.
Melisandre did not have Ygritte’s confidence. She had looked down at Jon with throbbing eyes and a wet pussy. He started to move his hand toward her exposed arm as she shivered in want.

His hand touched her arm and her pussy got instantly sopping wet. She licked her lips in anticipation, her coucchie on fire for Jon’s mouth and cock. Melisandre lowered her face towards Jon’s face, their lips parting.

The door slammed open with Ygritte storming in breaking the spell. “I don’t need to eat but I want some of that rabbit stew! I shot out the bullseyes on all the targets and I need a reward!” the fiery haired woman crowed shaking her bow. Jon jumped back and started cutting his potatoes again.
Melisandre’s head was still lowered for her first kiss from Jon. Nooooooowwww! She stormed inside.

Damn it! So fucking close!

She watched Ygritte and Jon eat their dinner, fuming. Ygritte had stripped her clothes off and Jon was eyeing her little firm tits jostling as she animatedly talked and gesticulated about her day. As soon as Ygritte finished eating, Melisandre stood up.

“Jon—you have dish washing duty solo tonight.” she grated out.

She reached out and gripped a handful of Ygritte’s hair. Melisandre jerked hard on the hair not in her hand making Ygritte cry out in pain. She dragged the yelping wildling behind her. Melisandre jerked her arm down so that it bent her wife over as she dragged her to the bedroom.

“Fuck! Melisandre! What’s your problem, woman?” she groused as she was thrown down on the bed.

Melisandre was furious. She gripped her squalling wife, and dragged her over her knees when she sat on the bed. “What did I do, woman?!” Ygritte squealed in fright. Melisandre could feel her wife’s swollen, wet pussy as it wallowed on her thighs. Ygritte loved rough sex. She loved BDSM. “Let me up woman!” Ygritte ordered, all the while humping her ass up and jamming her now drooling camel toe into Melisandre’s legs nutting her pussy. When Ygritte looked back at Melisandre, her face was flushed and her nipples rock hard.

"You need to be punished!!" Melisandre roared. She lifted her right hand palm cupped. Melisandre smiled seeing Ygritte's eyes go large in faked fright.

*Smack*Smack*Slap*Smack*Slap*Smack*Smack*Smack*

Melisandre blistered Ygritte’s ass with hard, cupped slaps of her palms. She told her wife through gripped teeth she had ruined the moment. She and Jon were going to fuck, and Ygritte had fucked it up!

*Slap*Slap*Smack*Smack*Smack*Slap*Smack*Smack*

“I didn’t Aaaiii! Aaggnneeii! Knowwww—Aaaieeee! Eeeiiiiii! Eeeeeeii! Please, stop, stop pleaseeeeee!”

Melisandre continued to spank her wife as Ygritte’s pussy soaked her thighs in cum. She started massage her wife’s ass cheeks that were fiery red. She loved how her wife whimpered and moaned so gutturally.
Melisandre rolled Ygritte roughly off of her onto the bed, and scooted back stuffing pillows behind her head. “Suck me off till I tell you to stop, red!” Ygritte was drooling as she got between Melisandre’s legs and mashed her face into her wife’s swollen quim and went wild devouring sweet, juicy pussy.

She sucked Meslisandre off three times loving all the pussy juice gushing out her wife’s exploding cunt. Ygritte satiated her wife’s pussy and then was imperiously ordered to jerk herself off. Ygritte rolled onto her back on fire rubbing her pussy wildly with both hands.

Melisandre looked over at Jon in the door again, watching with hot, burning eyes. She could see that Jon was turned on by these witch’s kinky actions.

When she was, close Melisandre ordered her to stop. Ygritte’s eyes nearly bulged out her skull. Ygritte still owed her. Again, Melisandre imperiously command her wife to jill off. Four times she ordered her wife to stop masturbating on the edge of orgasm. Finally she heard the desperation she wanted “Milli ppplleeeassseeeeee! Please let me cuuummmmmmmmm! Pppuuuuhhlleeezzzzzzeee!

“Cum.”

Ygritte exploded, her hands a blur rubbing her pussy. Her screams deafening her body flipping and jackknifing violently all over the bed like a fish out of water. Melisandre had to grip her wife’s body to keep it from flipping off the edge of the bed. Ygritte’s body convulsed so hard with multiple orgasms throttling her sweet wife nearly senseless.

Yes, Ygritte was right. Makeup and angry sex had their place.

She saw Jon chortling and shaking his head. She could see by his flushed face and sweat glistening on his forehead he had enjoyed the hot, kinky show. Melisandre knew he just needed a little more time. She knew he was close to sorting everything out in his mind. He had been coming to terms with his past, and his current desires and his needs. Those needs were coming to be two beautiful redheads. Melisandre could see it in his eyes. He would soon be theirs.

Ygritte went out hunting again. Jon was sitting on the sofa relaxing, having just finished dusting. Melisandre shed her dress silently, and glided over to Jon on the sofa and sat beside him pressing her full bosom into his arm. He turned and looked hard into her eyes. Their eyes locked in a current, hot sexual desire throbbed between their locked eyes.

The next moment Jon had his arms around Melisandre’s body and pulled her into his hard body, their lips mating. Jon’s tongue swiped her teeth, and her loud groan filled the room. Her teeth parted and Jon’s long, thick tongue devoured her own as they danced in wet love.

Jon

The bough creaked with the weight of the man resting on it. Jon Snow looked down at the tall ShadowBender witch.

“Where are you, Jon Snow? You can’t run forever … you know we will find you.” the tall woman from Asshai spoke resolutely, looking to the right and left walking down the narrow trail between the trees and underbrush.

Jon could not understand how after six plus hours of his running and her chasing him, her dress still looked immaculate. It was in perfect place, and had no leaves or detritus clinging to the fabric. From his perspective, Jon Snow could look down her low cut bodice and imagine those beautiful orbs in his hands. He had to stop thinking like that! He needed to focus on his attempted escape.

The witch seemed to have excellent tracking skills. Jon had acquired very sharp ranger skills and had learned how to hide his trail, but the ShadowBender always seemed to quickly find it anyways. He knew she was using her magic to pursue him.

He ground his teeth in frustration. He was trapped for now, as he saw the woman using her walking stick to lift up brush and stir the heavy leaf cover. She was making the mistake all novices make. She never thought to look up.

He waited patiently for the woman of Asshai to move on down the trail and out of sight. He waited another five minutes before he scurried back down the tree and landed lightly on his feet.

Damnit! That was the path that would take him back towards Castle Black. He looked around, considering, and pulled spruce needles out of his hair and examined his wrists where they had been scuffed climbing up the tree. He heard Melisandre calling out further down the trail, telling him to reveal himself.

He thought back to this morning when he had bolted out of the cabin that had imprisoned him the last four plus months. He was making his break for freedom. His captors had been fucking deep into the night of course as they almost always did. They had both been snoring when he left.

He had been a half hour into his escape when he was nearly caught by a hidden snare made by Ygritte. He felt the trip string stretch, and as it broke he dove to the side and the net only entangled his ankles. He quickly got his feet clear. The woman seemed to have planned for this event.

Then an hour later he heard Melisandre calling his name, coming closer. He heard Ygritte in the distance screaming out for Jon to just give up and give into his destiny. He gritted his teeth and ran harder and deeper into the woods.

Six hours later, he was tired and thirsty. He had had to hide deep in a blackberry bramble, getting pricked the first time Melisandre had almost came upon him. How could a woman so large move so silently? She poked her staff into the briar and it stopped just six inches in front of Jon’s face. That had been close! He was thankful the weather was mid-autumn, and the ticks and chiggers had been killed off for the season.

He had slowly wormed his way out of the briar patch, covered in scratches, and his hair a mad riot. He moved off in the opposite direction of the tall redhead moving down the path.

He felt very confident until an hour later he heard her coming down the path ahead of him. That wasn’t possible! The woman was using her witchcraft to somehow move like a mirage through the forest. He had found a crevice in a confusion of boulders to hide in that time. She had rapped the boulders, calling out for him to surrender. “I can feel you Jon Snow! You belong to us now. Stop fighting your destiny, Crow!”

He had ground his teeth at the jab.

She finally moved on, and Jon scooted out from his hiding place. Damnit! How could he fight magic? He had moved deeper into the forest then, but the witch seemed to have an unerring ability to sense his movements.

Once he heard Ygritte calling out, mocking his ability to stay hidden. “I will get you Jon Snow! Enough of these betrayals! You know nothing!” He moved in her direction off to the left, deep through the underbrush scaring a poor fox and her two kits as they bolted, yipping in fear. He avoided his former lover.

He grew tired and flummoxed. He could not shake the tall redhead. She must have been frustrated from the events of last night, and was hot in pursuit. He stopped and leaned back against an old oak tree. He heard her coming down the path yet again! She stopped near his hiding place as he glimpsed at her from around the tree. She paused, looking around, and continued down the path.

He picked up a rock and threw it against a tree far off to the left, and moved quick to the right. He walked an aimless path through the trees, avoiding any animal trails. It was mid-afternoon, and he was hot and sweaty, the sun putting a mottled pattern down on the forest floor.

He stopped and smirked. He had spotted another of Ygritte’s snares. He went to it and traced it out. It was a net that would grab its victim and lift them high in the air.

Again he heard Melisandre in the distance but moving his way “I grow tired of this chase Jon Snow. Give up!” She must have known somehow where all the traps were. He tripped this one, and smirked seeing the net whoosh up into the air, empty. He did not want to be running down a path and in his haste forget a known trap.

Proud of himself he walked down the path ten more steps. “Wwhaaaaaaatt!” Jon exclaimed as a snare closed on his left ankle, and jerked tight before his body was pulled off balance. His leg came out from underneath him, and suddenly his head was eight feet above the ground, his arms dangling down.

He swung around on the end of the thick rope holding the snare. He kept his mouth shut and took several deep breaths, calming himself. He then lifted his torso and reached up his body, then pulled the long dagger out of his boot. He rested a few moments, fighting the blood rush to his head to catch his breath. Jon prepared himself to lift up and cut the snare, while trying to keep his head from cracking on the ground when he fell.

He was about to contort up when he felt his right wrist gripped as if in a vice. He gasped, looking down straight into Melisandre’s red eyes boring hotly into his eyes. He tried to jerk his hand free, but her strength was too much. She was much stronger than she looked! He watched her thumb move up his hand to his wrist. She pressed in hard, and he cried out in pain, his hand opening and dropping his dagger.

The witch calmly bent over picking up the blade. She held it, tapping her chin with it while looking at a sullen Jon Snow. They were at a standoff.

A few minutes later he heard a crashing through the brush, and suddenly his ex-lover burst out from the undergrowth up the path. Her hair was in total disarray and filled with leaves and twigs. Ygritte ran up to the tall witch and hugged her, squealing and jumping up and down as the tall woman looked at her affectionately.

Ygritte ran over to get underneath Jon. “Yessss! Yes! I’m Awesome!” the diminutive wildling crowed. She looked up at Jon. “I claim you by right of the hunt! I first captured my wife, and now I have captured my husband!” the woman shouted.

She ran back up to Melisandre and shook her arms, looking so full of life and happiness. The tall woman broke out into a big smile. “I told you it would be worth it. Jon is ours now. We have made him ours by right of the hunt!”

“I’m getting a blood rush headache here!” Jon called out.
She ran over to the where the line for the snare was tied to a tree. Melisandre went to her and slowly they let Jon Snow back down to the ground.

Jon laid down on the ground, dizzy, letting the blood run back down his body. He watched the two women kissing deeply as the tall woman groped the smaller one, making the Wildling squeal in pleasure. As the made out he removed the snare from around his ankle.

Jon waited patiently. Finally, they stopped their snogging session and moved over to Jon. He put his arms and legs out, and crossed his wrists and ankles. He sighed as Ygritte lashed his wrists and ankles together. She was babbling the whole time about how great a hunter she was and how she was going to fuck him so good when they got back to the cabin.

Melisandre merely smiled and licked her lips, staring down at Jon. Ygritte went and hacked a long sapling down, and removed all the little branches. Soon Jon was trussed up and being carried by the two women, swaying from side to side.

"Yes, I will be remembered by my kin for trapping not one, but two mates! A woman and a man. I’m awesome!” Jon sighed listening to Ygritte go on and on about how great she was.

He looked up at Melisandre, who was holding the pole on her shoulder with his wrists trussed up to it. She was sighing, listening to her wife crow interminably. She caught Jon’s gaze and she smiled a brilliant smile. Jon’s cock was suddenly rock hard in anticipation.

The night before, Melisandre had his shirt off and her hands working the laces to his breeches with her on her knees between his legs, ready to pull his cock out and give him hot head.

Suddenly Ygritte came into the room. “Oh helllll no!” Ygritte called out. She then hotly told him that after making her and Melisandre wait so long, that he would be taken by the hunt on the morrow.

Jon and Melisandre had been very horny and frustrated, but quickly understood this was important to Ygritte and with much huffing had agreed to hold off their lovemaking till after the “hunt”.

Ygritte

Ygritte felt like she was walking on air. She felt the pole on her shoulder with Jon Snow trussed to it hanging like a sacrificial offering. She had bound Melisandre to her with the ritualistic hunt and now she was claiming her husband the same way too.

Her wife was using a spell to keep the weight of Jon from being onerous as they walked down the path back to their cabin.

When she had come back to the cabin and had seen Jon and Melisandre about to make love, she had felt such elation but she had been planning this hunt for several weeks. She had remembered the joy she felt claiming Melisandre. They had not been happy, but when she whined and batted her eyelashes, of course they both had given in quickly. She knew she had them both pussy whipped.

She knew they were anxious to consummate their new love. She was anxious too. She thanked the old gods for giving her the two loves of her life. She was both Ygritte and Tygreti and wanted her loves from both lives - and had gotten both. It paid to be ambitious!

She whistled a wildling tune as she went down the trail. She looked back at Jon Snow swinging to and fro, looking calm and collected. Melisandre had her studied cool face on, but she knew that was a sham. The woman was a hussy just like herself. She was addicted to her pretty pussy, and would be addicted to Jon’s cock. Ygritte shivered in anticipation.

She finally saw the glade with their cabin coming into view. She licked her lips. Soon she would feel Melisandre’s cunt in her mouth and Jon’s cock in her pussy fucking her so good.

They walked through the small glade and she kicked open the door and took Jon in through the door and then through to the bedroom. They laid him down on the bed. She cut his wrists and ankles free. He slowly stood up, shaking his limbs to get the circulation back.

Ygritte looked at Melisandre. She was not sure how Melisandre looked so good. She did not know how she kept herself so free of the forest. It was not magic, or she would have felt it. Melisandre’s hair was lustrous and untrammeled with the detritus of the trees that covered Jon and herself. They started to take their clothes off excitedly.

They both moaned when Melisandre dropped her dress, stepping out of it naked, her nipples long and thick and her pussy a soupy mess. Her inner lips bloomed out her slit all slimy wet and dark pink. When they had stripped Melisandre sat them down on the bed and methodically cleaned their hair of leaves, brambles and twigs and combed their hair out with her fingers. The clear affection inflamed all three with rabid lust.

Melisandre then glided between Jon’s legs, going down to her knees and swallowed Jon’s cock hungrily. Ygritte watched her wife give Jon wet sloppy head, bobbing and sucking feverishly. Jon moaned gutturally as he leaned back on his hands watching Melisandre suck him off. Ygritte diddled her twat, all swollen and wet. She tweaked her clit and circled it gasping. Melisandre made wet obscene slurping noises for the next five minutes. Then she surged her head down. She did hot deep throat Jon’s massive cock.

She bobbed slow taking his dick down her throat. Old skills from a lifetime ago coming back to the tall ShadowBender witch. Ygritte moaned seeing Melisandre’s throat bulge out under her ears swallowing Jon’s long cock down her throat. She fucked his cock with her throat and came up to suck on his dickhead with her swirling head and swiping tongue and then taking him back down her throat. Ygritte watched Jon body start to jolt and then violently shake. He screamed feeling Melisandre’s throat on his cock as it spewed hot ribbons of semen down her throat.

He fell back and lazily watched his wives fuck for the next hour. Jon obviously enjoyed being able to watch two beautiful redheads suck each other off several times to screaming orgasms and then roll into sixty-nine sucking each other off to simultaneous orgasms. Jon enjoying being right beside to see, hear and smell their hot fucking up close.

Jon then did Ygritte doggy-style which she loved. She was down on her elbows and forearms as she sucked off Melisandre, who ground her pussy hard into Ygritte’s face. Ygritte had screamed so hard into her wife’s pussy feeling Jon slam fuck her swollen cunt and then his cock firing hot arrows of cum into her womb. How she had missed that!

They had rested and drank plenty of fluids and ate some blackberries. Then Ygritte was on her knees sucking off Jon and taking his dick deep into her throat as he screamed gripping her hair and jamming her head down to his crotch his hips leaping up as his dick spurted hot semen to the greedy stomach of the wildling. Ygritte then moved over and put Melisandre’s legs on her shoulders and lapped and sucked her sweet pussy off twice filling her mouth with hot sweet pussy cum and soaking her face in her sweet love juice.

Jon was hard again and he took Melisandre down on the bed septa style-face-to-face. He had first sucked on Melisandre’s nipples in turn making her pant. Then he slide his dick deep into her wet tight pussy. He first fucked her on his hands but slowly settled down onto her voluptuous body his body mashing her tits flat. Their bellies slapping and groins jacking into each other. Ygritte was stroking his body and cooing how hot his sweaty body looked so hot fucking their wife. How his dimpling ass was so fucking hot. Ygritte murmured they were perfection fucking.

"Slam that big dick in her tight cunt Jon. Fuck her with that big cock. Make her cum hard on your dick Jon! Fill her womb with your hot cum!" Ygritte encouraged her man.

His hips swirled back and slammed forward and down impaling Melisandre on his dick. Her arms were looped over Jon's bod and her thighs gripping his ass her ankles kicking the air over his ass. Their bodies locked tight as Jon snarled and fucked Melisandre so hard her body jerking up that fraction of an inch on the bed.

Then Melisandre was screaming so hard her body bucking and convulsing as her orgasm ripped her belly to shreds. Her spasming cunt milking and squeezing Jon's cock plundering her pussy so deep and hard. Her cunt clenching on Jon's cock sent him over the precipice of ecstasy. He screamed as his hips slammed forward his cock spurring hot semen into Melisandre's womb flooding it.

Ygritte had kissed and stroked their sweet soaked bodies. When Jon rolled onto his back Ygritte was between them. She first sucked his still hard cock clean of semen and Melisandre's cum. Then she was between Melisandre's legs licking up her cum and Jon's sweet semen drooling out her stretched temporarily satiated pussy.

She then laid back and let her husband and wife take turns sucking her off while the other swallowed her small titties and rammed their tongues down her cawing throat. Her spouses devouring her sweet tight body. Ygritte threw her head back and screamed as Melisandre sucked her cunt deep into her mouth and was pulling on it stretching out her wife’s pussy hard as the clit deep in her hot sucking mouth exploded. Jon was beside her using both hand to push up a small tit and was trying to suck her nipple down his throat while his tongue lashed the turgid nipple. Ygritte legs thrashed and then clamped in with harsh spasms of pure fucking bliss. Her thighs tried to crush Melisandre’s head between them which only made Melisandre suck harder.

Jon

They slept and snuggled, cooing and stroking sweat and cum soaked bodies. Then late in the night Ygritte and Melisandre rode Jon cowgirl in turn cumming so hard as they rode his cock with their tight pussies. Jon finally cummed hard deep in Melisandre’s pussy driving her over the edge one last time.

They then snuggled down on each side of Jon Snow. Ygritte was complete now. She had her wife and husband she lazily told her spouses satiated. Once Jon became Azor Ahai reborn they could defeat the Ice King and then be free to live their lives as they saw fit in sweet solitude. They would not have much use for the outside world then.

Jon was sitting on the couch totally at peace with the world. He knew it couldn’t last, because he and his wives had responsibility in the world that they would have to fulfill, but he was going to enjoy this “honeymoon”. He was cooling down after another session of intense sex, this time in front of the raging fireplace. He had slammed his dick up Ygritte’s ass and pumped it full of cum as he screamed in ecstasy and her wails joined his. Jon's semen jetting up her asshole sent Ygritte over the edge.

He had staggered back to the sofa as he watched Melisandre lick Ygritte’s red swollen asshole, lapping it soothing and licking up the escaping semen and tongued her asshole as Ygritte revived and now they were on their sides doing sixty-nine slurping and snuffling.

Jon had never thought he could love two women at one time but here he was equally in love with two women who loved him equally and then each other equally. It was a beautiful triad of perfect love. The last three weeks had been nothing but sex and talking about their future. He loved how they sucked his cock so lovingly and sucked so hard as his dick convulsed in their mouths and they shared his semen back and forth obscenely. Wet kisses moving his semen from mouth to mouth. He loved slamming his dick into their hot tight pussies and pinching assholes but he loved maybe more going down on the women or having one riding his cock as the other rode his face hard. For him it was giving and taking in raw passionate sex.

Jon smiled. It was easy to love two hot always randy redheads that wanted to bone him and each other all the time. They loved fucking in front of Jon. They would fuck themselves relentlessly into exhaustion. Gods he loved watching them fuck each other! He was always amazed how quickly they recovered and hungered both for each other and him. This was indeed his personal heaven.

The other part was a little more unsettling. He believed in duty and giving his life for the realm. He had been raised a Stark by the greatest man in the realm. He knew Eddard Stark would never turn aside from his duty.

Jon did not fear any fight against a foe sword to sword. He would fight and die if necessary to save the realm.

That was the problem. What his wives told him was not about a fight but a process. A process that seemed to be him going into a fire and burning and becoming this ‘Azor Ahai’. He was to be burn down and be raised back up as something more. The two women seemed to agree that it would involve his death or near death. That was the part that Jon Snow did not like at all. The women would debate about how to get him into this state. Would it happen in some fight? Would they have to pick a fight with Crows or Wildlings to get Jon on death’s door?

None of them liked that. It was too full of possibilities where he would be killed and not be able to be put into the fire that would transform him. Plus, his wives would have to be present to have their spirits guiding his transformation. What if his wives were hurt, or even killed? He would not allow that. He was sure that none of them could really predict the outcome of a battlefield. Gods knew the fights he had been in had been wild and chaotic.

He had never seen his assassination coming, and he would have died then and there if not for his wives appearing like divine angels of mercy and retribution. He may well get killed in some fight, but it would not be a fight he went into seeking to die and then be resurrected. If he died in battle with the random hands of fate plucking his life strings he would have to rely on his wives doing their duty. He could only hope that they would survive to do their duties and he could arise and then protect them or take his vengeance if they died.

He would work for that not to occur. The women had another hypothesis that they chewed over: they could kill Jon.

He really did not like that idea!

The two women were absolutely sure that Jon had to be on death’s door to be transformed. For the spirit or whatever it was that needed to inhibit his body could only do what was necessary with Jon on or past the doorway of life. The forces that were required could only operate with his body in that state, and then fire would be the active agent to do the transformation.
Melisandre leaned towards poison. She had learned the secret arts of poison from her time in Braavos, and learning from the House of Black and White. She had helped them in performing several contracts that needed her special talents, and they had in turn helped her refine her skills with the various forms of poisons. She had learned how to administer just enough to bring you to the door of death.

Melisandre intoned this followed by her admonition that with poison and each person’s chemistry being different that there was always variability. She could make a mistake and take Jon too far to the other side of death.

Jon had thought this had some merit. It was controlled and at least some what precise. He could not say the same for Ygritte’s idea. She had pressed that she could shoot Jon full of arrows and take him to the edge of death. She would only nearly mortally wound him.

Both he and Melisandre had looked at her with big eyes at that. “That’s fucking crazy!” Melisandre had shouted at her wife. Ygritte got hot and they started to argue. “I’m a excellent shot godsdammit!” Ygritte stormed back.

Jon had just sat on the sofa listening. Melisandre turned to him “What do you think, Jon?”

“That’s fucking crazy, Ygritte.” he told his smaller wife.

She had not liked that and stomped her foot and flapped her arms. They were belittling her archery skills. Finally, Melisandre had told her, “Please give it a rest, Ygritte.”

The fiery redhead had not.

Next thing Jon knew was that Ygritte had been snatched by her arm and whirled down over Melisandre’s knees on the sofa. They had been talking and arguing in the nude. The three spouses spent all their time in the cabin with no clothes on now.

*Smack*Smack*Slap*Smack*Slap*Smack*Slap*Smack*Smack*Smack*

Melisandre proceeded to give their wife a vicious spanking. The small wildling cursed, wailed and threatened them both but Jon observed never once did Ygritte try to move off her wife’s legs. The wildling humped her ass up to the blistering palm strikes.

Jon almost immediately smelled Ygritte’s cunt flooding the room with her thick, pungent scent. He leaned over and helped Melisandre spank their wife’s ass cheeks, now burning a bright cherry red. Jon smiled, remembering. She was nutting on Melisandre’s thick muscled thighs and orgasm hard from that and the pain. They had fucked all night after that.

Jon did not like the idea of having to die by someone’s hand to become Azor Ahai. He knew of another way. The reports he read as Lord Commander had showed him another way. His wives were confusing the fire with the legends of Azor. That was the past. This was a new age that needed a new answer.

He had read all the reports that came across his desk. Most had been focused on his immediate problems of being Lord Commander, but some reports were of the realm. A Commander had to know the status of the realm that he was protecting. A Lord Commander needed to know all threats no matter their location. They may in time come to the Wall.

There was another force that would in time come to bear on the realm, and therefore the Wall. A force that had appeared and become mighty, and was only growing stronger.
Daenerys Targaryen.

She was smashing her way across Slaver’s Bay. Slave city after slave city had fallen to her. She had smashed Khalasars. She ranged far inland, destroying all vestiges of the slave trade. She either destroyed mercenary companies completely, or brought them into her fold. She was moving west. All in Westeros knew her destination.

He had focused on the exploits of this Targaryen on the battlefield. She had been no general behind the lines directing her forces. No. This woman had lead from the front lines and used her sword to devastating effect. If this kept up, she would be a walking legend by the time she reached Westeros.

But that was not what Jon was thinking about now. His thoughts were interrupted by Ygritte wailing. After Melisandre had blistered her ass Ygritte had been in fucking heat. Ygritte had fallen on Melisandre sucking her off like her life depended on it. They then rolled into a hot sixty-nine. They snuffled and devoured sweet sopping red cunt meat. Melisandre orgasm hard first her body bucking wildly.

The tall auburn haired woman broke out of the sixty-nine and spread Ygritte legs and absolutely dove in devouring her wife’s cunt. Melisandre’s mouth lapping and sucking Ygritte’s clitoral hood up into a sweet glistening tent of succulent cunt meat. Soon Ygritte’s cunt was exploding in Melisandre’s hot sucking mouth. Ygritte’s body bucked and jackknifed violently as more shrieks filled the cabin.

Jon’s thoughts went back to what he spent little time reflecting on when he read the reports initially. Daenerys Targaryen too had been transformed by fire. A fire that she had chosen to walk into without hesitation, if the reports were to be believed. She had walked in an unremarkable young girl, and walked out with dragons. Jon contemplated that. The girl, for that was all she was then, had had some insight.

He wondered if he could now take that insight and use it here. Free choice. How had she known she would survive? He came to the decision that she had not been assured. It had been a belief in herself that allowed her to walk into those flames. She had a destiny and meant to follow and fulfill it.

Just like Jon. He had a destiny and he would choose to walk that path. He would not rely on chance or providence. He would walk forward to his destiny. He would meet it with a back straight and shoulders squared - as his father’s son.

His wives were temporarily satiated. He helped them up and guided them to the bedroom and their bed. He started kissing them and stroking their bodies already soaked with sweat and cum and feeling fuck hunger surging again into their veins.

Several hours later Jon was resting his head on a pillow soaked in sweat and his wives cum. His own body soaked in sweat. His wives leaning into his sides and tracing patterns in the sweat on his chest.

“I know what needs to be done to become Azor.” he announced calmly.

Melisandre lifted her head and he heard Ygritte pause in her breathing and then resume tracing patterns in the sweat on his chest.

“I think you are both wrong about me having to die to become Azor Ahai. That was for a different time. I will walk into the flames whole and hale. I choose to walk into the fire and will seek my destiny in those flames.” He had their undivided attentions with both of them sitting up to watch
Jon told them of what he knew of a Daenerys Targaryen and her transformation. She had walked into the fires and been untouched.

“I’m not sure about this, Jon.” Melisandre told him solemnly. “She is from old Valyria. She has the old blood of Dragon Lords running in her veins. House Targaryen was the weakest of the Dragon Lords, but she is one nevertheless. She has it in her blood, Jon. You are a Stark and not Targaryen. Your looks show us that. I fear if you walk into the fire unprepared by being at death’s door or just past, you will die.” She reached out and gripped his arm. “I can’t risk that, Jon.”

“Melisandre—Ygritte, you have convinced me this is my destiny. I must embrace it. I can feel it. That this is the way to go. I need to walk into the flames with free will. I may not be of old Valyria, but the Starks are a powerful house. I will either live or die, but I will do so as a Stark.”

Ygritte moved to get between her wife and husband, sitting between them. She held their hands.

“Melisandre … I think Jon has the right of it.” She took a deep breath. “Anything else seems so unsure and forced … I like this, now that I think about it. To choose to do something is a powerful magic all in its own.”

Melisandre sat with a soft look at her husband and wife. She took a deep breath. “I can’t see a better option myself. Trying to fashion a reality is too unsure. We would probably fuck it up.”

“Jon, are you ready to do this? Ygritte and I are priestesses of fire, but even we can’t walk in the fire and live. Are you sure?”

“Yes I am sure. I just feel this is the right way to go. I will not sit and wait, constantly looking over my shoulder wondering if I am doing the right thing. Is this time of my transformation? I have made my decision and will see it through. I will rely on that the fates have led me to this place and this time. My wives have prepared me.”

He had lowered his hands to their pussies and began stroking their twats that were rapidly swelling and getting wet again. His own cock now rock hard and jerking above his belly. He moaned feeling Ygritte swallowing his cock and bobbing hard while she fiercely sucked. He watched Melisandre straddle his face and her beautiful pussy came down and swallowed his mouth as she ground down. Jon speared his tongue deep into her honey hole lapping out sweet cum.

He could meet any challenge with his wives at his side.

///// Three days later Jon found himself in front of a large bonfire burning hotly in the glade in front of their cabin. The fire was burning in the bright midday sun. His wives had used magic to bring down a dead tree and then have it explode into shards the perfect size to be burned. They had spent three days gathering the wood and piling it in the glade.

They had gathered dead limbs and lots of dry pine needles that were used to start the blaze.

This was an act for just the three of them. No one else was to be involved. Thus, the decision to do the fire walk in the middle of a bright day. The fire was bright and intense with almost no smoke. It would be unseen. The flames were leaping twenty feet into the air.

Jon smiled at the flames. It just felt that something like this should be done at night where the light would feel and look more magical and ethereal. Jon sighed. Expediency demanded that this act be done when it would not be noticed.

He stood near the flames with his wives. They were nude, the sweat dried off their skin. They had fucked all night and into the morning. The sun bright in their bedroom Jon had been so wrought up he had shot his load deep up into Ygritte’s womb and then still hard fucked Melisandre hard pounding her down into the bed. She had wrapped her legs and arms around his body and they both screamed and screamed when his cock fired off hot ribbons of pearly semen flooding her pussy and womb.

Jon and his wives stood before a raging bonfire. He had their hands in his. In Ygritte's free hand she held Longclaw. He looked at the flames. He was discovering that knowing what one had to do and then doing it was two different things. He was about to piss himself he was so afraid. He was shaking in fear. He knew he was in trouble. He knew he had to have control of his emotions for this to work. This fear would be his undoing. He had read the reports. Daenerys Targaryen had walked calmly into the fire.

She had known her destiny and accepted it without fear. How?! He was sure he was right but the idea of walking into a roaring bonfire was terrifying. He was just a small man with no great destiny about him. He was just trying to do his best.

He needed a sign. His faith in himself and his destiny was not great enough. He needed something to give support to his thoughts. To make his belief come to fruition.

He heard Melisandre gasp. Ygritte squeezed his hand hard and started to back up. Jon turned his gaze from the fire to look at his wives. They were staring off to the right. He turned his gaze to follow their gaze.

Jon gasped and suddenly all his fears were gone.

“Ghost!” Jon screamed. He released his wives hands and was running his way across the glade towards his snow white Direwolf. The mighty wolf standing at the edge of the tree line looking at Jon. The wolf broke into a run. Man and beast met near the tree line. Jon was shouting and the wolf silently rose up on its hind feet and placed its feet on Jon’s shoulders and was licking his face.

Jon cried. He was sure Ghost had died beyond the Wall. By the old gods Ghost must have walked all the way to the end of the Wall and swam around it and come back to Castle Black and somehow traced Jon to his hidden liar.

“Oh Ghost! Ghost! It is so good to see you boy!” Jon petted and scratched his direwolf’s ears and flanks. The wolf kept licking his face. True to his nature Ghost made no whimpers of joy but Jon could feel it in the wolf’s vibrating body.

His wives had come up hesitantly to the scene playing out. Jon turned to his wives and told them about how he had found Ghost at the body of his dead mother. How he had almost been missed but Jon had found him hidden under his dead mother’s body.

He urged his wives to come up to him. They trusted Jon and came up. Ghost went to them and sniffed them and began to brush into their bodies and lick their hands and tilted his face up. The women lowered their heads and the great wolf lifted his head and licked their faces. They laughed.

Jon was ready now. He had received his requested confirmation. There was no more reason to delay. As a group they walked back to the fire. He gripped their hands and slowly walked him to the very edge of the fire. The fire would have cooked anyone other than the witches standing right up against the flames.
Jon staring at the flames hard did not see his wives looking at each other. Jon was not harmed by the flames. He was right!

Ygritte handed Jon Longclaw with her free hand, and now gave it to Jon Snow. He took a deep breath and walked into the flames with a straight back and willingness to meet his destiny as a Stark.

The world inside the fire was as a strange thing. The flames leapt up and around him. The logs were glowing hot red and white, consuming themselves for him. His toes worked through the clinkers, glowing red hot. He was turned to look out as his wives who were staring into the flames at him. Their faces were distorted and appeared ghoulish, twisted by the heat and leaping colors of the fire he was in.

Jon suddenly realized he was in the middle of raging bonfire. What was doing in here? The fire was not touching him. How was this possible? Doubt entered his mind.

“AAARRGGGUUNNGG! AAAIIEEEEEEEE! AAAIIIEEEEEE!” Jon Snow screamed as the flames were wrapping around his limbs and body. His breaths brought fire deep into his lungs and boiled his blood. He was in pure agony, feeling his skin blister and start to peel. His eyes felt like they might burst from the inside. His toes and fingers clawed, and he dropped Longclaw as his body began to convulse his brain on fire. He fell to his knees in agony, his blood bubbling and his muscles cooking inside his peeling skin.

He was on his hands and knees, dying. He remembered his father and his steely resolve, and how he met any challenge with straight back and steely focus. Jon gritted his teeth and focused. He was a Stark! They met every challenge and did not give into their fate without the greatest of fights. He surged to his feet and screamed but not now in pain but in challenge.

He was Jon Snow, son of Eddard Stark. He would not surrender to his fears. He was going to meet the challenge of his time. The pain fled from his body and he could see clearly again. He looked down at his hands and body. Where he had felt his skin peeling his skin was unmarred by any blister. His mind was clear and he felt his strength return. He spied Longclaw buried in fiery coals, and saw that it was glowing hot red and yellow. Flames were leaping off the blade. He bent over and picked it up. It felt hot in his grip.

Jon looked around, and the flames no longer touched him. He breathed deep and the flames did not enter his body. He was immune to the fire now.

He stepped out the fire and felt a rush of cool air flooding over his body, cooling him. He felt alive and full of his strength. He looked down at Longclaw. It was shimmering and radiating out fiery heat. Jon felt the burning sword in his palm but he felt no pain. The sword was heat and magic now. He turned the sword over looking at the heat radiating out from the blade making mirages. Hot tongues of flames radiated out the core of the blade rising several feet before slowly fading away only to be replaced by new flames.

Ygritte ran up to him “Jon … You truly are Jon Snow now!” she was then hugging him and kissing his chest all over. “Oh Jon—I know who you mother was now . . . who your father was!” She softly said, hugging her husband close.

Jon looked out at Melisandre. She was crying hard, which upset him greatly. He watched aghast seeing his other wife fall to her knees and throw her head back and pushing her breast out. “Jon Snow, my husband, take your sword reborn and run it through my heart and become all you were meant to become. Kill you wife and become Azor Ahai completely!”
Melisandre

She had wailed out her entreaty. She had prepared herself for this moment. She loved Ygritte and Jon, but she needed to make this sacrifice. They would understand and do what was necessary. When she had seen Jon Snow come out of the flames with white hair and violet eyes, she knew his true heritage. It was now crystal clear that Jon had been right. His old Valyrian blood and the spirit of Azor would make him the true foe of the Ice King. All he had to do was run his fiery sword through her heart to complete the transformation.

Jon would have his other wife to love and care for him. She was tainted. She still harbored great guilt for coming to Westeros to kill Ygritte on Jon’s sword. She had been prepared to do that. She had not thought of falling in love with Ygritte. That she was her lost love reborn. She deserved to die for such treachery.

She threw her head back further. “Kill me Jon! Grasp you destiny. Love Ygritte—she’s is worthy of your love! … run me through, my love!” Melisandre lips trembled waiting to feel the killing stroke. Her face grimaced waiting for the killing sword thrust to her heart.

The wait was killing her. What was taking so long!

From a distance she heard Ygritte shout out at her “O Melisandre you know nothing! Get that big pretty ass up and get over here!”

Melisandre cracked open one eye and looked around. She was alone facing the fire that was finally beginning to burn out. She turned around and she spied Jon and Ygritte walking back to the cabin, naked and arm in arm, Jon squeezing Ygritte’s ass as her wife squealed.

Ghost was standing near her to the side. The wolf motioned his head towards Jon Snow and Ygritte. The wolf started to gamble towards the cabin. The wolf turned its head when she did not rise and follow. Ghost motioned with his head again and started to walk towards the cabin.

Shocked, Melisandre got up from her knees and hurried across the glade chasing her spouses. Her bosom was flopping up and down in her haste. She reached them just as they reached the front porch.

“I have to be sacrificed! You know this Ygritte!”

“You know nothing wife. No one is being sacrificed around her today woman. All we are going to do is fuck!” Ygritte exclaimed, her nipples hard and pussy getting swollen and wet looking at Melisandre with fuck hungry eyes.

“Baby, I was going to sacrifice you when I first came to you. I was going to kill you!” Melisandre cried out in shame and disgust with herself.

“I already knew that.”

“What!” Melisandre screeched.

“I say that in the flames the first night I got my vision back.”

“What I saw,” Ygritte said holding up her little finger “was me wrapping you around my little finger and making you mine! So stop your bleating, woman. Let’s go in and fuck … we have our husband back, and we need to fuck and consummate our love anew.”

Melisandre could only stare at her wife and husband.

“I also saw this moment and you being a silly goose … forget this sacrifice shit! Jon has shown us his way is the right way, and forget what we had assumed was the path.”

“But I was going to kill you, Ygritte,” Melisandre hiccupped. “Azor Ahai got his power by sacrificing his wife on his sword.”

“Woman. My vision is clear on this. Azor and his wife did not understand the prophecy they were given. It was not their fault really. Infelice, Regent of the Elohim, came to them and tried to prophesize to them, but, as is the norm with the Elohim she had to speak out both sides of her mouth. The end result was that Azor committed murder where none was needed.”

“Who is this Infelice?”

“Don’t really know. That is all I can see. I can see the who of it but not the why of it. Stop bleating about the past and let’s live in the present woman! Get your ass in this house and fuck me and your husband.”

Melisandre stood their gnawing her lip in guilt.

She saw did but not register Jon stepping up to her and whisking her up off the ground, holding her in a bridal pose against his strong chest. “No, no, I’m not worthy!” Jon effortlessly carried Melisandre into the cabin and over to the fireplace. He stood before the stone hearth. He raised his right hand and slammed Longclaw into the stone the blade burying halfway with flames still bleeding out the blade.

The wolf came in and laid down in front of the hearth and enjoyed the heat radiating off Longclaw.

Jon then walked over to the sofa still carrying Melisandre like a blushing bride. Jon sat down on the sofa and suddenly Melisandre was turned over on his strong legs, her ass up in the air.

“Wh—What are you doing!” Melisandre gasped.

*Slap*Slap*Smack*Smack*Slap*Slap*Smack*Smack*Slap*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*

Melisandre squealed and squalled in pain. Her ass on fire. The throbs pulsing out her blistered ass cheeks. She gasped as the pain suddenly started to pulse in her quickly hardening clit and her wet cunt sliming her husband’s thighs.

Jon hands smacked down hard as he continued to blister Melisander’s full jiggling ass cheeks. Pain and pleasure flooded out her cherry red ass cheeks. Her pussy was so wet and swollen now. It gushed out hot steamy, slimy fuck nectars. Jon massaged her ass. He bent his head down and bite it lightly. He massaged the cherry red ass cheeks. His right hand rose high in the hair. Then the hand was descending in fast arcs as he again blistered Melisandre’s ass cheeks again.

*Smack*Smack*Smack*Slap*Smack*Smack*Slap*Slap*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smack*Smact...
“Oh Jon! Unnggg hhnngg hhnnggg shit! Oh yessssss! Blister my fucking ass! Unnggg hhnngg hhnnggg unnggg!” Melisandre groaned her pussy on fire. The pain going straight to her rigid hot throbbing clit.

*Slap*Smack*Slap*Smack*Smack*Smack*Slap*Smack*Slap*Smack*Smack*Smack*Slap*

Now each slap on her ass cheeks was going straight to her clit in raw searing pleasure. Her head was drunk on pleasure and pain.

Melisandre wailed in pain that was pleasure. Then Ygritte was before her. Ygritte was on her knees kissing her deeply and pulling on her nipples. The former Wildling pulled, stretched Melisandre’s nipples sending hot flashes of raw throbbing pleasure to her clit. Ygritte had pulled back to look at her hands pleasuring her wife’s tits. She then bent in and kissed Melisandre sweetly on the lips.

“Stop this stupid guilt Melisandre—we love you so—so much!” Ygritte said her face just in front of Melisandre’s face. Melisandre cupped the back of Ygritte’s head and pulled her head back to hers and kissed her wife hotly. Ygritte parted her lips and Melisandre surged her tongue deep into Ygritte’s mouth and kissed her wife deeply.

Yes. She would let go of her doubts and self-loathing. She was loved and loved back. Melisandre saw the truth of their special love.

Jon put her on the sofa and Ygritte got up on the sofa and pulled Melisandre’s face to her aching cunt and Melisandre buried her face deep in her wife’s muff and devoured the slimy swollen cunt meat and rigid clit. Her cheeks hollowed out with her feverish love sucks on her wife’s sweet oh so sweet pussy drinking down the sweet nectar burbling from Ygritte’s hot juicy twat.

She felt Jon lifting her ass and getting one foot on the sofa. He pulled her ass cheek back with one strong hand. Her asshole now exposed to his hungry gaze. Melisandre cried out when Jon pressed his cock into her throbbing asshole. His big cockhead pressed into and pierced her tight anus. Jon drooled long ribbons of spit onto his hard dick and pooled it on his wife’s pulsing anus.

Jon pulled back his dickhead rubbing over her asshole rimming it. Jon then pulled back and used both hands to pull Melisandre's ass open and he leaned in rimming her sphincter with his wet probing his tongue. He circled her asshole with soothing soft and yet hard tongue. Then he was probing her anus making it quiver and spasm in raw need. Melisandre gasped into Ygritte’s pussy feeling her asshole pulsing in aching pleasure.

Jon tossed her salad for several minutes swirling his tongue on her rosebud and then sliding his tongue into her anus and sliding it in all the way. The pleasure jerked Melisandre's face from Ygritte's clam shell. “Aaaauugggg uunnggg unnggg ohhh shit! Gods that feels so fucking good Jon! Oh sweet R’hllor give me your dick up my ass Jon” Melisandre begged for it. “Ppppliuuuuzzzeee!” Ygritte cupped the back of her head and jammed her face back into her swollen muff. Melisandre moaned siphoning Ygritte's clit back into her mouth and hard sucking it while polishing it with her tongue.

Jon rose back up. He guided his bulbous dickhead to her wet quivering asshole. He pressed in with his dickhead into his wife tight sphincter and roped more spitlre onto his cockhead and her spasming starfish. He slowly added more pressure probing her asshole. She gagged feeling it start to surrender to invasion. He pulled back and then pushed in harder and half his cockhead penetrated her asshole.

“Oh Gods that is so beautiful Melisandre” Ygritte breathed. She looked forward at Ygritte whose eyes glittered seeing her wife give Jon her hot asshole yet again. Ygritte was addicted to anal sex and now Melisandre was too. “His dick looks so beautiful penetrating your sweet tight asshole
"baby!" Ygritte groaned. "Oh gods it is going to be so hot watching him fuck you up the ass!"

Melisandre gagged in pain and pleasure feeling her asshole being pried open. The dirty words inspired by Ygritte always telling her to let go and be a complete slut. Jon’s cock pried open her asshole and his dickhead and upper shaft slipped into her rectum. The intense sensations made Melisandre gag and moan gutturally into her wife’s quim. Her breath hissed out at the pain but also pleasure that anal sex always gave her. Her body quivered feeling his ass filled with Jon’s dick. Jon paused letting her sphincter stretch out. Then he slowly started to pump his hips softly. Melisandre dined on Ygritte’s pussy filling her mouth. Her cheeks hollowing out with her short harsh sucks on sweet cunt meat.

A hard spasm of ecstasy hit Melisandre. Gods anal sex was so intense. Her head rocked up from Ygritte’s pussy. "Unnggmmm . . . oh! Ahhhhn!" Melisandre whimpered feeling her asshole stretched out tight on Jon’s thick cock. She felt her sphincter gripping his cock in a tight vise grip. Her asshole radiated pain but already pleasure was pulsing out her squired asshole in shocking waves of rolling bliss. The pain fading and only pure pleasure radiating out her squired asshole. Jon flexed his hips pumping his dick into her asshole. Melisandre’s asshole gripped tight on his shaft. Her asshole not letting his dick sink deeper up her ass and her asshole bowing out as Jon worked his hips to start fucking her spasming butthole. "Mmmnnnggg oh yes oh oh! Ohhh fuck yeah Jon! Godsdammnn that’s right baby! Fuck my tight ass!" moaned in pleasure urging her husband on in taking her asshole yet again. Gods she loved Jon fucking her in the ass.

Melisandre bent her head back down dining on succulent sweet sopping wet cunt meat. Ygritte’s guttural groans of pleasure only adding to Melisandre’s pleasure. Her tight asshole at first bowed out with his out strokes but Jon drooled more spit on his shaft and her starfish. He slowly stretched out her anus his cock now starting to slide a little in and out Melisandre’s hot tight asshole. He paused gripping her ass cheeks. With a loud snarl Jon then slammed his manhood all the way up her asshole and fucked her balls deep.

Melisandre cried out in helpless pleasure and pain that only added to the pleasure. "Mmmppff!!! Phhhhfff!!! Muummff!!! Muummff!!!" Melisandre cried out into the pussy she was devouring. The pleasure and now only slight pain making her forget her mental distress. All that mattered was that her wife and husband truly, completely loved her. Jon slide the full the length of his thick long shaft in out her asshole pounding her booty so fucking good. His shaft stretching her wide open. He pulled his cock several times out her clenching butthole. His dickhead spasming her sphincter rings being pulled out her tight asshole. Jon then rammed iron shaft dick back up her ass so hard and deep. The pleasure intense and throbbing out her squired asshole heavenly.

Soon they were all cumming together screaming and sharing life and such pure love. Melisandre’s snuffles as she dined on sweet pussy muffled. She swallowed sweet rich creamy cum flowing heavily out her wife’s spasming pussy.

They were so hot for it and filled with magic they kept fucking hard. Melisandre slipped three fingers into her wife’s cunt stretching it out and fucking Ygritte’s tight pussy hard and fast. Melisandre moaned feeling her wife’s hot cunt as it convulsed on her three fingers she was slam fucking Ygritte with. Melisandre’s mouth filled with her wife’s upper cunt sucked deep in her mouth. Melisandre sucked and tongued lashed the rigid clit spasming hard in her voracious sucking mouth. Ygritte’s screams sweet music to her ears.

Jon gripped her hips hard his fingers sinking deep into her hips to anchor himself. She lifted her mouth from Ygritte’s sweet gash and looked back at Jon. His face grimaced in raw pleasure his back arcing to slam his dick balls deep up Melisandre’s tight pinching asshole. Sweat poured down his torso and face. She smiled at him. He did not see as he snarled jamming her back into his cock slam fucking her hot asshole. Melisandre loved how her body lurched forward her tits wallowing on the bed with each hammer thrust up her asshole. She turned her head and buried it in sweet sloppy wet pussy and happily suckled on juicy cunt meat.

Then she heard Jon scream and he slammed his manhood balls deep up her ass and held his thick long cock buried up her ass and she now screamed into Ygritte’s snatch feeling more hot ribbons of cum spurt up her ass as arrows of hot cum flooded her colon so deep. All were now screaming in the ecstasy of sweet hammering orgasms.

Later that night exhausted Melisandre was playing with Jon’s pure white hair and kissing his shoulder. Ygritte was purring and rubbing all over her back with her small breast. Ygritte’s leg was thrown over Melisandre’s hip possessively and her hand gripping Melisandre’s full tit.

Melisandre was in heaven on Earth. In a way, all of them had been given second chances.

She heard Jon yawn. He glanced down at his wives with his violet eyes “Tomorrow we go back to claim what is mine.” He paused. “We are one now. We go to take back what is ours. Tomorrow we take back the Nights Watch.”

Chapter 31
Danger Among The Dunes

Myrcella / Arianne / Sand Snakes / Myrcella / Arianne / Myrcella

Myrcella

Myrcella was lying on her back near the head of the bed. Dorea Sand her wife was between her legs on her stomach. The teenager had her face mashed deep in Myrcella’s swollen quim devouring her wife’s sweet cunt meat. Myrcella loved how aggressive the sand snakes were when they ate her out. Dorea’s hands had gripped her legs behind the knees and jerked her legs back and then out opening her pussy up to Dorea. The sand snake was sucking with loving sucks on Myrcella’s clitoris sucking it deeper into her mouth snuffling and moaning. Myrcella’s worn out muff was on fire.

She and her three wives had been fucking for hours devouring each other like the lionesses they were. The women worked alone or in concert with their other pride mates to attack and consume a fellow pride mate. The pride mate or mates would fuck their wife until her body convulsed with harrowing orgasms. Devoured couchie’s gushing hot sweet cum into gulping mouths.

They had taken several short breaks to gulp water and iced tea and consume blood oranges and strawberries to replenish fluids. Then back to more hot sweet fucking.

Just before Dorea claimed Myrcella for another love kill they had taken Arianne down for a sweet love kill. The heir of Dorne had been staggered with her last orgasm that Loreza had given her aunt. They had tribbed in classic scissor but with Arianne on her back on the floor and her body pulled up on the low divan they had in one corner of the room.

There Loreza had pulled Arianne’s voluptuous ass up on the slopped down thick velvet covered stuffed cushion. Loreza grunting positioning her aunt’s groin on the divan. The Sand Snake’s body jerking as she lifted up Arianne’s voluptuous ass to slide it further up the divan. Arianne’s cunt swollen and her slit pink and her mons of love dark brown all swollen with blood. Myrcella had eyed that juicy snatch all splayed open ready to be ridden hard.

Arianne eyed her niece with pure love and slut eyes. Her heavy full tits sloshed back on her chest her nipples rigid, thick and long. She looked so hot with her full breast riding back on her chest and pressed into her lower throat.

Loreza got up on the swale of the divan and parted her legs. She balanced on one hand and used her other hand to push her aunt’s legs out and moved her groin in and mated their swollen and sloppy wet cunts into each other. Loreza shivered hard feeling their pussies mate and she used her hand behind her to push her body forward her ass sliding on the fabric.
Loreza locked their groins tight with their legs interlocked. Loreza’s legs riding down Arianne’s body where it slide over her tits and past the Martell heir’s head. Arianne did the same with the leg riding up her body. Arianne gripped leg to her chest anchoring her body as she jammed her pussy up in ragged humps of love and need. The two women flexed their hips settling in place to lock sloppy wet cunts tight.

“Aaaugggg … hhnnnggg hhnnnnn … ooohhhh shit—aaawwoooggg mmnnnggg!” Arianne groaned like the pure slut she was wallowing and then sweeping her wet cunt up and down her niece’s grinding camel toe that jammed down from the superior angle. Their pussies sliding up and down over each other their groins jamming hard into the V of the other’s groin. Loreza’s face twisting in raw pleasure feeling her snatch ground sweetly into her aunt’s wet drooling cunt. Their cunts jamming love juice into its mate. Myrella moaned hard seeing the pussies kiss and drool hot cum into the other sloppy wet cunt.

Their feet jerked and ankles slammed the divan as they fucked sweet cunt to cunt. Their heels jacking into cushion or ribs. They humped hard with the flexing of their hips jamming their drooling camel toes into each other. Loreza snarled pure love using her hand behind her to jam down hard with swirling sweeps of her pussy into her aunt’s fat wet cunny. Loreza’s sweaty ass sliding up and down the slick fabric. Her face slashed with hot slashes of primal pleasure.

Loreza had the advantage of height on the divan to really grind down hard into her aunt’s sweet quim. Their cunts drooling and mashing love juice into the other’s wet seam. Cum was tricking down the Martell’s flexing flat belly. It looked like a river flooding with a tidal wave of hot cum weeping up the flat flexing belly of the heir of Dorne. Several cum trickles now reaching her tits that sloshed right and left with her humping body.

Arianne’s groin and inner thighs glistening with thick slimy cum. Arianne cried out feeling her pussy mashed and rode hard. Her face slashed and she jerked her head side to side her face grimacing with primal fuck bliss.

Her head would lull after each jerk from side to side as she worked her hips and jammed her shoulders into the thick carpet to hump into her wife. She had gripped the sand snakes left leg with both arms holding tight to her ample bosom as an anchor to help in her hard humps up into the snatch grinding down into her soaked swollen snatch.

Arianne’s legs were flexing and her ankles jerking wildly. Loreza had grabbed Arianne’s left leg and pulled her wife’s foot to her mouth and had shoved the first three toes into her mouth where she sucked and nibbled on her sweet wife’s pedicure toes. Arianne groaned hard feeling Loreza lips sucking her toes and her long tongue slithering between each toe and working her lips so she could work each toe in turn.

Myrcella and Dorea had finger fucked each other face to face lying on their sides so they could stare into each other’s eyes. Gods Myrcella’s womb had felt like it was clawing its way out of her belly when she cummed for Dorea.

Myrcella’s eyes had rolled back in her skull and she bucked wildly as hard spasms tore her belly open with ecstasy. Her screams had been exultant and repeated. Her body soaked in sweat and hot cum all over her groin, cunt, belly and ass.

When her orgasm hit Myrcella she had lost control of her hand and slammed it spastically and wildly into Dorea’s cunt ramming all four fingers in hard and deep fast and furious as her own body jackknifed violently.

Her hand filling and stretching out her wife’s twat with each hard thrust of her hand wedge fucking her sweetling. Wild screams from Dorea now filled the air as her body flipped wildly and jammed her exploding couchie into the wedge harpoon fucking her exploding twat. Dorea screamed like the hounds of hell were on her trail. Myrcella forced her eyes open hearing her sweet wife’s wails of ecstasy. She was so happy she did.

She loved seeing Dorea’s head juddering jacked forward on her spasming neck as her eyes rolled back in her head. Her eyelids bulging showing her eyes rolling violently in her skull as her body flipped and more sweet screams filled their royal bedchamber.

After they had recovered they had watched Loreza maneuvering Arianne up on the divan and start tribbing her aunt and wife. She was whimpering grinding her twat down into Arianne’s plump swollen muff. Their labia lips rolled and stretched. Locked groins humped hard into each other.

"Oh gods . . . Loreza! Unh! Unh! Please! Oh . . . Loreza!" Arianne chuffed in sweet need her belly flexing and her face slashing with primal bliss as their cunts swept and jammed hard into each other. More cum trickled up her flexing stomach. Her tits sloshing and jiggling with her hot humping motions. Her tits now glistening with slimy cum slicking her rolling tits.

In her position, Arianne’s body was slightly tilted back so her big full tits were spread out on her chest angled back so their fullness and weight was on the twenty-five year olds upper chest and sloshing back and forth against the pit of her throat. Gods this is so hot Myrcella thought. She was intoxicated with her former teacher’s voluptuous body. Myrcella looked over at a cum and sweat soaked Dorea staring at her aunt’s tits hungrily.

Together they crawled off the bed to join Arianne and Loreza. They moved down off the bed onto the floor using hands and knees like the lioness they were. They moved in on either side of Arianne’s body as it quacked and spasmed in ecstasy her tits whiplashing slightly in their firmness as Arianne’s body rocked and jerked in ecstasy. The two teenagers looked like lioness’s approaching a poached kill as they advanced on all fours towards Arianne.

The teens settled down onto their forearm and other hand reaching and gripping the jiggling breast and stuffed the thick nipple deep into their mouths and locked their lips on brown steeple areola. The girls sucked voraciously filling Arianne’s nipples with scorching heat that rocked down to her jangling clit being humped and mashed by her niece. The teen’s cheeks hollowing out with the force of their voracious sucks on thick teats. Their tongues stabbing and lathing the rock hard nipples.

"Ohhh!" Arianne gasped involuntarily. She lifted her head to watch her wives that had joined the hot fuck. She looked at her niece and Myrcella watching their cheeks hollowing out with their fierce love sucks. "Unnhh! Oh . . . yes!" Arianne gasped, her head falling back. Loreza was using her elbows jammed into the divan to leverage her camel toe down hard into her aunt’s swollen sloppy wet trim and rocked their locked hips grinding and sweeping their cunts up and down over each other. Arianne instinctively humped up into her niece’s tribbing with desperate wallowing jerks of her hips. “Loreza . . . unnhhh . . . oh Loreza!” Arianne gagged flexing her hips meeting Loreza’s jamming thrusts in rhythmic time gagging in helpless pleasure.

Arianne was being devoured by her pride mates. Myrcella and Dorea took turns kissing and nipping up Arianne’s breast to her upper chest pushing the sloped breast aside with their chins to kiss and lick up Arianne’s throat and up to her mouth. Mouths locked tight and tongues dueled in the submissive woman’s mouth and down her throat.

Myrcella was up on her knees folded over gripping a full tit with both hands to jam the long thick nipple deep in her mouth sucking with long ragged deep throat love sucks stretching out nipple and areola stuffed deep in her mouth. Dorea was kissing hotly Arianne’s throat. Then the older woman was wailing. “Awwwwwoogggggg! Hhnngggggggg hhnngggggggg Oowwwgggggggg!” her former teacher turned wife screamed as Dorea viciously sucked on her throat giving her a vicious loving hickey bruising her aunt as their slut.

Arianne body went rigid for a few heartbeats and then exploded feeling her throat sucked through vicious see-sawing teeth. The hickey fueling pure ecstasy to the Martell’s cunt being pulped by Loreza’s grinding twat.

“Arrrunnggggg! Unngghhh! Ohhhmmnggiieee!” Arianne squealed, flipping and squirming, her eyes watery and stunned as she opened them briefly to again look at Loreza still jamming their cunts hard into each other with short jerks of her hips ramming and sweeping their locked couchies over each other. Loreza had risen up on her palms to angle her pussy down even harder into her aunt’s trim. She jerked and slammed their locked groins almost violently over and into each other. Camel toes pulped in grinding pure love.

Arianne’s breath whooshed out her lungs and her face twisted up in the agony of a second shocking orgasm. She gagged in breath “Ohhh unng uunnhhh” her face shocked in ecstasy.

“OOWWWGGGGGGGGGGG! AAWWOOGGGGGGG!” Arianne’s screams of rapturous music to her wives ears as gut wrenching spasms tore through her sweat drenched flesh.

Aunt and niece kept grinding their wet pussies tightly locked together. Arianne’s orgasms ripped through her with soul shattering seizures of fucking bliss. She humped hard as killing spasms of crushing searing bliss tore through her voluptuous body. Her head rocked back "Hhhhhnnnngggggg! Hhhnnngggggggggg! … Ohhnnnggg! Oh! Oh . . . sweet gods! Ungghh! Oh fucking Jinns! Aunnggg!” she cried out her body convulsing in fucking bliss. Her orgasm finally subsiding.

Arianne had risen up on her elbows as Myrcella and Dorea continued to suck voraciously on her long stiff thick nipples. The loving sucks filling her tits with hot aching pleasure as aftershocks now gripped and shook the Martell hard. She then half-swooned again her head thudding on the floor and succumbed to another series of powerful aftershocks. "Ohhnnnnnn! Oh gods . . . ohhnnnnn . . . oh Lorena! Unhhhhh!"

They were now back on the royal bed Doran had had constructed for them. The dimensions were wider and longer to give the four wives plenty of room for their lovemaking. Dorea jammed her head down harder siphoning Myrcella’s clit deeper into her mouth where her tongue gigged the juicy nubbin. “Augggg unnggg hhnnnnnnhhnggg . . . oh gods Doreaaaa you eat my pussy soooooo fuckkiinggg goooddddd!”

Arianne was beside Myrcella a little lower on the bed. She was on her knees with her body leaned down on her forearms her elbows spread out. Her cheek was on the mattress her face looking at Myrcella but unseeing. Arianne’s mind overwhelmed with raw pleasure. Her face slashed and primal grunts and caws escaped her throat.

Loreza was behind her on her knees. She had detoured to their goodie drawer in the dresser to get two dildos. One was glass with purple swirls in it (her favorite color) and ribbed. The shaft six inches long with a tear drop handle. The other dildo had a thick eight inch shaft and a large realistic cockhead.

Myrcella watched the sand snake work the dildos in turn into her mouth and swirled the shafts around in her mouth wetting them liberally with her spit. Then Loreza got behind Arianne and gripped her ass cheeks with clawed fingers and pulled Arianne’s ass cleft open wide. Loreza eyed the brown sphincter as it clenched in wanton need. Then Loreza moaned as she lowered her head and lapped the starfish furiously her tongue rasping the clutching sphincter. Loreza loved the texture of the wrinkled starfish against her rasping tongue.
Then Loreza lifted her face six inches and drooled out long ribbons of bubbly spit that roped down to land and pool on Arianne’s asshole. Then the sand snake took her anal dildo with its tapered head and slowly spun it up into her wife’s hot tight anus and started to slowly pump the purple colored glass shaft deep up her wife’s asshole. The ridged shaft rippling the tight sphincter rings making Arianne gag in helpless pleasure. Gradually the Sand Snake increased the force of her pumping thrusts up Arianne’s tight butthole.

Arianne started to chuff and jam her ass back into the dildo fucking it. Arianne groaned deep in her chest feeling her sphincter rings juddering on the ripples sizzling in and out her tight asshole. Arianne’s face slashing with raw pleasure. Her cheek jamming down on the mattress her eyes squeezed shut tight her face almost anguished looking in the fierce ecstasy rocking the Martell as hot pleasure poured out her fucked asshole.

Then Loreza brought up her other dildo and slowly sunk it into her wife’s greasy cum filled cunt and slide the long thick shaft deep into her belly till her fist clenching the handle grip of the shaft was jammed into the Martell’s drooling clamshell. Loreza started to see-saw the shafts in and out Arianne’s tight cunt and asshole. The young voluptuous woman’s body quaking and juddering as the thick phallic shafts were now slammed hard and deep up into her belly with powerful thrusts.

Arianne rose up on her palms and jammed back into the shafts plundering her fuck holes. Her voluptuous ass and hips rippling with the power of Loreza’s thrusts of her hands slamming her dildos home burying them completely up her wife’s ass and snatch. Arianne’s heavy hooters whipping and flipping underneath her sweat dripping body. The Martell slamming back to fully bury the shafts up her spasming asshole and clenching cunt.

The sand snake alternated between using her toys on her aunt and her mouth. Loreza’s hands piston hard to drive shafts hard into spasming pussy and asshole. She would then ripe both shafts out her aunt’s fuck holes and went back to mashing her mouth to wet pussy and gaped asshole her tongue lashing and drilling the sweet fuck holes. Loreza gripping her aunt’s ass cheeks pulling the cheeks back to open Arianne’s ass cleft and the dark seam of her upper ass crack and gaped asshole. Loreza mashed her face in deep and tongued fucked the sweet open clenching orifice. She tongue fucked the sweet rectum of her aunt.

Locking her lips on the gaped asshole and circling her tongue in Arianne’s rectum moaning at the sweet taste. Pulling her tongue out and down her aunt’s perineum and shoved it deep into her pussy and tongue fucked her aunt hard. Loreza’s head punching in and out. Her sweaty lank hair jerking with her hot hard head motions. She would lock lips on Arianne’s cunny and slurp in sweet cunt meat and munch on happily. Then back to tongue fucking sweet asshole.

Then Loreza found her dildos with her searching hands still licking her aunt’s butthole. The shafts brought up and first shoved into Loreza’s mouth to suck her aunt’s sweet pussy and ass off the shafts and then she slide the shafts back deep into Arianne’s hot clenching cunt and asshole.

"Unnggggg-sshhiitttt! Hhnnggg uuunnggg arruunnggg uuunnggg!" Arianne moaned in wanton slut pleasure.

Myrcella now watched Loreza intently. She saw her wife seesawing her dildos in and out her other wife’s butt and pussy. The ribbed shaft rippling Arianne’s sphincter rings with ecstasy. The other shaft slammed home burying the thick head deep into Arianne’s tight twat. Loreza ripped the shaft out of Arianne’s ass and gripping Arianne’s voluptuous ass cheeks with her clawed fingers mashed her face into her aunt’s ass cleft. She left the dildo buried Arianne’s tight pussy and tongue fucked the gaped asshole moaning as she slide her tongue in deep.

Loreza had a tight lip lock on her wife’s starfish tongue fucking it hot and hard. She pulled back and shoved the ribbed dildo into her mouth and sucked hard on it cleaning her wife’s sweet ass off the cool ass juice soaked glass shaft. Loreza moaned tasting her wife’s ass on the dildo. Arianna looked back as they both moaned hard and loud at the obscene show of total love.

Loreza slammed her anal dildo back home up Arianna’s ass. Loreza rammed her glass anal cock home again and again. Her other hand in a slow piston motion slamming her other dick deep into her wife’s belly. Arianne’s cunt stretched out tight around the thick shaft. Her inner lips pulled into an O ring all wet and red around the thick shaft torpedo fucking her dripping snatch.

Dorea had a loose lip lock on Myrcella’s clit. She siphon sucked the hard nubbin the vibrations and frictions making Myrcella crazy with ecstasy. The eighteen year old sand snake slipped two fingers into Myrcella’s twat and pumped them hard in and out her wife’s slurping love box. She sucked on Myrcella’s clit with hard sucks slipping in a third finger stretching out Myrcella tight cunt around her pumping fingers.

Dorea was wolf sucking on Myrcella’s clit. She lashed the rigid clit in her lips as her head pulled in and out the clenched lips of her aunt. Arianna moaned loudly sucking her pussy off the shaft. Loreza pulled it out and then brought up the other shaft soaked in her Aunt’s ass juice up to Arianna’s mouth.

“Clean your cunt off my cock bitch!” Arianna moaned as Loreza slipped the thick shaft into her aunt’s mouth and slowly pumped it in and out the clenched lips of her aunt. Arianna moaned loudly sucking her pussy off the shaft. Loreza pulled it out and then brought up the other shaft soaked in her Aunt’s ass juice up to Arianna’s mouth.

Dorea was wolf sucking on Myrcella’s clit and her head rocking as she lashed the rigid clit in her lips as her head pulled in and out. Dorea stretched and pulled on Myrcella’s upper cunt sucked deep into her mouth. The young woman’s cunt stretched out. The cunt meat not sucked into Dorea’s mouth all red and shiny with slimy cum. Dorea snuffled as she ate her wife out and looked up Myrcella’s hard flat belly. Myrcella hands were cupped over her titties grinding in circles on the sweaty flesh. Myrcella’s palms mashing and pulping her own small full A cup titties.

Loreza was pounding both of Arianne’s love holes again with her dildos. Her clenched hands around her dildos hammered into the Mrytell’s ass and mound. Both shafts were milky with cum effluent. Arianne’s asshole spasmed on the shaft slamming it with hard strokes and her cunt was slurping and making such hot wet sounds. “Cum for me auntie cum for your hot niece!”
Dorea had risen up hunched over and her left hand wiped back and forth over Myrcella’s clit in a blur. She stared down at the twat she was fucking. Her right hand slamming her fingers in all way piercing the hot cauldron of Myrcella’s inner core. The left hand was a blur jacking hard into her wife’s clitoral hood with each swipe. Myrcella lifted her head up and felt it jerk hard forward on her neck cawing helplessly.

She looked over at Arianne. Loreza was slamming her dildos furiously into her slut’s fuck holes. Arianne’s voluptuous ass cheeks and hips rippling with the furious fucking they were receiving. Arianne’s face twisted with primal bliss. “Cum you gods damned slut!” Myrcella watched Loreza slam her dildos home savagely again and again into Arianne’s fuck holes. Arianne’s face was slashed hard with intense ecstasy.

Suddenly Arianne body surged up onto her palms her head snapped back her eyes looking at the canopy over the bed unseeing. Loreza continued slamming her dildos home with a hard loving fuck rhythm. "Oh! Oh fuck—OOOWWWGGGGGGGGG! AWWWOWNNNNGGGGGGWOWWWWWWNNGGGG!" Arianne suddenly cried out, her voluptuous body jackknifing and flipping in front of Loreza as the first paroxysm of a sharp climax ripped through her. The adult woman wailed and her hands tore at the sheets.

Arianne’s body bucked and jackknifed violently her heavy tits whiplashing and slapping into each other beneath the voluptuous woman. Her face tore apart with searing almost agonizing pleasure. "Arruunnngggggggggggg! Anngghhhh! Oh Loreza! Unnnmmnnngghhiieeee!" she cried out, flipping and hips her surging up and down as her spine nearly shattered with crippling seizures of fucking with bliss. Her flesh quivering and flexing with each snap of her back.

Seeing her wife cum triggered Myrcella’s own orgasm. “Aaawwwwnnoogghhhmmmn! Unngghhhiiieeeeeeee! Unngghhhiiieeeeeeeeee!“ Myrcella wailed as her hips bucked up into the hands fucking her so gloriously. Her upper body jerked up off the bed and slammed back repeatedly her firm tits whipping around on her chest. Her elbows helplessly hammered the bed as her body spasmed totally out of her control. Her cunt splattered and slurped on the fingers fucking them. “Unngghhiiieeeeeeee! Mnnngghhiiieeerrrrrrrrr! Nngggghhnnnieeeeee!“ she screamed in pure love to her sand snake.

The sisters took their wives and enfolded them in strong sinewy arms and cooed and stroked their trembling and now weeping wives. The love they felt for the sisters overwhelming them as tears of pure joy and happiness flowed down their cheeks.

The sisters stroked sweaty bodies and looked at each other. Then they slowly pulled their wives hands to their lips and kissed the hands slowly folding them into fists and kissed the balled hands all over murmuring and making hot eye contact with their wives.

Soon Arianne and Myrcella had their sand snakes laid out on the bed their pelvises up tilted with pillows. They bent down and sucked lovingly on wet quims further exciting and inflaming their eighteen year old wives. The two wives slurping and sucking in sweet cunt meat to munch on. Then they would tongue rigid clits with quick tongue flicks with interspersed hard sucks.

They moved to tongue fucking sloppy wet cunt holes their heads hammering up and down in unison as the sand snakes liked to be fucked in total lock step when side by side on the bed and being serviced by their wives. Myrcella glanced over at Arianne whose sweaty lank hair jerked with her head’s hammering motion driving her tongue deep up Loreza’s sweet pussy.

They had their wives soon panting and pleading. Arianna unstopped the liquid silk bottle and poured the extremely slick, water-soluble lube over her and Myrcella’s right hands and then over their slut’s swollen cunts. The slimy concoction slavered hands and fuck holes with a slimy erotic coating. Both women got down on knees and hunched over their trembling wives pelvises. The women quickly worked four fingers into the loosened with orgasms pussies. They used their free hands to pour more of the magical lube onto their hands they had worked deeper into their wives couchies. They then ran the liquid over their lovers pussies to further lubricate their cunts for their fists.

The taste was not unpleasant and Myrcella and Arianne bent in randomly to suck hard on bulging clits making their sand snakes cry out in ecstasy. The sisters liked to be fucked in unison and looked at each other with lust added eyes and leaned toward each other and gripped the back of each other’s heads and kissed deeply. Their tongues working deep in each other’s mouths. The twins deep kissing with coiled wrestling tongues.

Arianne and Myrcella slowly bent their thumbs in and wormed them up into the tight twats they were fucking. Soon Myrcella had her hand in up to her knuckles inside her slut’s tight quim. Dorea’s pussy stretched out tight on her hand buried in it. Myrcella turned her head slightly to watch Arianne’s progress. Myrcella was folded down her head slightly cocked over so she could watch Arianne as she tongue lashed Dorea’s clt and fast sucked on it making Dorea shriek in ecstasy.

Arianne had a bigger hand. She patiently worked her wife’s pussy open for her love fist. She pumped and rotated her hand loosening Loreza’s twat her hand now in up to her third knuckles rippling along the edges of her wife’s vaginal hole. The Martell then worked her thumb into the third knuckle up her niece’s tight quim.

Myrcella slowly stroked in and out not quite burying her hand into Dorea. Dorea looked over at her twin and then leaned in again kissing deeply as Loreza chuffed. Arianne slowly wormed her hand back and forth in a half circle stretching out Loreza’s pussy. Myrcella knew it was worth the patience. Three nights ago Arianne had fisted her so good and deep her fist twisting in and out her puss until she had simply exploded.

Now Arianne had her knuckles sweeping into the vaginal opening of her niece. Loreza’s soaked labia lips slathered over her wife’s knuckles and upper hand. Her vaginal juices slimed her wife’s hands. They got the liquid silk bottle and poured more lubricant over their hands and stretched out twats.

Arianne and Myrcella now had their fists poised to sink deep up into teenage bellies. They nodded to each other and pushed into the hot cauldrons of pink cunt holes of their wives in unison.

“Huuungggggggggg!” Loreza chuffed out her head rising up a stricken look of ecstasy on her face. She stared at her aunt’s hand slowly sinking deep into her snatch her wet labia lips riding down the back of Arianne’s hand.

“Hhunn hunnggg oowwwggggg!” Dorea cried out feeling Myrcella’s knuckles stretch out her vaginal ring and then into her vagina. Dorea’s pussy locking tight on the hand now in it. Myrcella groaned feeling Dorea’s wet heat sliding down the back of her hand her wet pussy slithering down and soaking her hand in wet heat. Dorea’s eyes rolled back in her head “Uunnggg oohhh Myrrcellaaaaaahhh babyyyyyyyy!” Dorea gagged in raw pleasure. Both Myrcella and Arianne leaned in and sucked on shiny nubbins as the sand snakes chuffed and kissed each other deeply.

Myrcella and Arianne paused letting their wives muffs stretch out and fully accommodate the hands buried into the sisters’ tight pussies. They then began to slowly rock their hands to further stretch out their wives cunts. The sisters moaned pushing into the hands rocking in their couchies stretching their vaginas out on the hands buried in them. Then Arianne and Myrcella slowly began to push and pull their hands in the tight cunts gripping their folded hands in a hot tight velvet fist of wet slippery heat.
Myrcella slowly brought her fingers together and formed her fist stretching out her lover. She saw by the look of concentration on Arianne’s face that she too was forming her love fist. They slowly began to rock their hands and then pump softly stretching out their loves creamy cum filled cunts. Arianne rose up and drooling out long ribbons of spit into her lover’s hot frothing box and pushed her fist deeper into Loreza. "Oh gods! Unhhhhhh!" the sand snake gibbered. Myrcella had worked her fist slowly into Dorea’s pussy twisting her knuckles churning inner hot slimy petals and rubbing on her vaginal walls "Yes . . . yes . . . oh my sweet Myrcella—fuck meeeeee—fuck my cunt good with your fist baby” the sand snake croaked. Her eyes pleaded for her wife to fuck her hard. She locked eyes with Myrcella with throbbing love.

Myrcella rose up slightly. Arianne followed suite. They both pulled their fists back to the vaginal openings of the sister’s and then surged their fists in deep jamming into their sand snakes cervixes with a wet thump. Their lover’s pussies tightly clenched on their wives wrists pulsing hotly in wet heat. Myrcella pulled her fist back and then surged forward again her fist thumping her lover’s cervix. Dorea was gagging in helpless pleasure. Loreza was twisting as Arianne rammed her fist home over and over.

The Sand Snakes body jerked up the mattress slightly with each loving twisting fist thrust up their tight drooling couchies. Their faces stricken with primal bliss of being fisted hard and deep.

Soon Myrcella and Arianne had cum rings smeared around their wrists all creamy and milky. They picked up the pace and force rammed their twisting fists home again and again. Arianne had bent down and was sucking hard on Loreza clit while Myrcella was using her left hand to fork her love’s clit and rub her thumb over it.

The sisters were kissing desperately their hands gripping shoulders and ribs in tight grips. Their faces were filled with snarls and grimaces of shocking pleasure.

For the next several minutes four women fucked beautifully. Love was freely given and love taken. Myrcella slammed her twisting fist home over and over making Dorea whoop and her hips leap forward to take all of Myrcella’s fist. Each forward thrust by Dorea rammed her cunt forward impaling her pussy on Myrcella’s love fist. Her pussy lips far down on Myrcella’s wrist on the in stroke.

Now both women were sucking fiercely on rock hard clits. Suddenly Dorea arched her back hard and deep lifting pelvis up to the fist slamming home the knuckles sliding over her g-spot. “AAARRRWWWWONNNGGGGGGGG!” Dorea roared her pelvis leaping up and her body convulsing wildly. “AAAWOOOGGGGGGGG! AARRRUUUUNNGGGGGGGGGG!” Dorea screamed in almost agonizing pleasure. Myrcella jammed her free arm over the sand snake’s belly to press her down onto the mattress as she rammed her fist fiercely into her wife’s exploding twat “Unngghhhiiieeeeeee! Auunnggghhiiieeeeeee!” Dorea screamed in shattering bliss. Her body convulsed and thrashed.

Myrcella moaned feeling her wife’s trim spasm hard on her rotating pumping fist. Each spasm locking down on her pumping fist in a wet slippery hot grip that her turning knuckles churned through.

Beside Myrcella, Loreza body jacked up off the bed in a snap convulsion of womb rending ecstasy. Loreza body had jerked up at nearly a forty-five degree angle. Her body jerked in a rigid grip of searing bliss. As Arianne looked up at her niece Loreza’s eyes rolled back into her skull and her body started to convulse violently. "Oh goddsssss! Ummmmngghiieee! Unngghhiiieeeeeeee! Mmmngghhiiieeeeee!" Loreza cried out, her body up in the air flipping forward and jerking back only to jack forward again and again. Her body up high off the bed as violent seizures of cumming ripped through her body. Her small tits whiplashed on her chest with her throes of bliss. Then a horrible spasm tore her body and sent her crashing to the bed convulsing. "Oh! Fffuuucckkkk! Annnggghmmnniiceee! Oooowwggggggggggggggggg!"

Myrcella was in heaven feeling her wife’s cunt convulse on her fist over and over with her stupendous orgasm. Oh so slowly did the sand snakes come down from their orgasmic bliss.

For a minute she and Arianne left their fists in their wives belly knowing how they relished the feeling of being full. They loved the feeling of being connected to their wife so intimately. Then the hands were unfolded and relaxed to let slip out of distended and very happy pussies. The groggy sand snakes watched their wives move up and take them lovingly into their arms and pulled them tight and enfolded in arm and legs. Their right hands going up to thread into midnight black locks. Hair now streaked and soaked in the sisters’ own cum. Arianne and Myrcella pulled their lover’s mouths tight and kissed them in languid love with slippery wet tongues.

They had snuggled and cooed in post coital bliss. Now Myrcella smiled. Her other wives were asleep. Arianne was on her back with Loreza spread out on her with her cheek on a full bosom snoring and drooling. She had Dorea pressed against her from the other side. Her right cum soaked hand intertwined with Dorea’s fingers and pressed to her heart.

Yes indeed, Myrcella was one happy slut. She moved to press against Dorea’s body pulling the sheets over their bodies. She wiggled in mashing her tits and pussy into Dorea’s hard sweaty body. She quickly fell asleep.

Myrcella was at the table she and Arianne used to work on their reports and work out the details of their projects. They worked side by side, as they always had. Myrcella always smiled thinking back to their times as teacher and student. It had been during lessons from Arianne that Myrcella had first started falling in love with her teacher.

She fingered the choker around her throat, and looked at the choker around Arianne’s throat. It had been her passion that had formed their pride, but now she considered just what that all meant. Arianne was the heir to Dorne. Someday, they would have to explore that future. She had tried several times to broach the subject of her succession, but Arianne did not want to speak of it, so Myrcella backed off. She too wanted Doran to live forever.

They had gone over the crop reports from their initial harvest of their ‘drip irrigation’ project. The numbers had been most pleasing. They had the farmers take detailed measurements of the water levels each day in the morning, high noon, and late afternoon. It had been Arianne who had suggested putting poles in the middle of the canals, and running white fabric tented over the waterways to reduce evaporation. It worked for the Bedouins to reduce their perspiration, why not something inanimate?

The water loss had been reduced, and the amount of water necessary to make each plant grow and thrive along with it. For the next phase, they were going to quadruple the acreage to make sure the method could be scaled up. The bamboo used for the pipes was already being planted and harvested. That, along with working out the binding of the joints was proving to be the most difficult part of the project.

They had discovered a compound made from the rubber trees of Sothoryos. It would seal the joints quite well they had proved after several various compounds were developed. The climate of the coastal Piedmont of the lands south of Wyl were most conducive to bamboo. The mists coming up from the ocean feeding the bamboo with ample moisture. The plants growing up to eighteen inches
They had all the items they needed to scale up their project.

Once that was settled, they moved to improving trade to the newly freed cities and establishments rimmed around Slaver's Bay. New merchants were rising from the dust of the old, and they needed goods to trade. The old economy was based on slavery; the grooming and selling of slaves had been the main form of wealth creation. Now that was gone.

Many slaves had been trained to produce the goods that the slave owners craved in their domiciles, or in public displays of their wealth. Therefore, carpenters, masons, metal workers and jewelers who were already skilled were ready to make goods for clients. The former slaves would now receive compensation for their work. They would make goods that were desired by the new, rising working classes, and the new rich. The now truly free cities, and the privileged of Westeros clamored for their exquisite workmanship.

House Martell was poised to do very well in trade with the new artisans of Volantis and other cities of the east. Where other houses had either waited for the dust to settle, or had just been slow to consider the possibilities Daenerys’ changes had brought about, Arianne Martell had not been.

She had lazily whispered plans to her wife soon after the Queen landed. Arianne had traced patterns in the sweat soaking Myrcella’s body, and spoke her thoughts on trade with liberated Slaver’s Bay. After, they had fucked hard and were satiated Arianne often broke her new ideas to her partner in Game of Thrones, Myrcella. The twins were busy rolling around on the floor furs devouring each other in sixty-nine. Their snuffles and caws were sweet background music. The Sand Snakes were not interested in such mundane things such as trade.

Arianne thought it was time to move. While other Houses and lordships waited and fretted, now was the time to act. She had found two Summer Islander captains ready to sail east with holds full of goods. She wanted to send emissaries to all of the cities proposing trade, seeking the signing of contracts.

Myrcella remembered her studies as a star struck student to Arianne, going over the economies of the cities around Slaver’s Bay and to the west in Volantis. These cities did not grow their own food, but instead imported it. They would soon starve without the grains from the inland communities of Essos.

Dorne had some basic trade with the slave cities, but had never sought out anything further due to their distaste of the slavers. Now, they was gone. Arianne was anxious to strike while the iron was hot. Dorne, with its citrus fruits, special wines, lemons, olives, pomegranates, colored peppers, spices, mustard nigella seed, would put the spice and verve in their diets over in Essos.

They would make a fortune and help establish merchants, warehouses and shop owners in the newly freed cities at the same time. Myrcella had thought her wife’s ideas were splendid. Her wife’s intellect and passion always turned her on. What made the idea even more wonderful were her fingers pumping slowly in and out of Arianne’s hot wet twat, and her sensual lips sucking on Arianne’s turgid throbbing nipple as Arianne explained her thoughts. Soon all talking about trade ceased. They had more important matters to attend too.

They had finally received their first responses from their overtures to the continent of Essos. The Summer Islander had immediately inked deals with Dorne to carry produce, and offer warehouses in their homelands to allow time for the infrastructure to be developed in the freed cities. They had developed means to dry store fruit, vegetables, and grains for long voyages.
The bold and the progressive of new Essos were now responding to Arianne’s overtures. These would be the persons that Dorne would build its new trade empire on.

The free cities on the Eastern coast of Essos were still slow in taking any imitative. They all feared the instability of their situations, a few cities by and large had been destroyed. The noble families had been thrown into disarray, and they were reluctant to seek out new contacts.

Into the void, crime families were moving in, but if Dorne acted quickly they should be able to set up their contracts before others filled the vacuum. They would become established and able to fend off competitors, and resist the crime lords and their demands.

As Arianne and Myrcella continued poring over the initial proposals, Myrcella felt a surge of pride for her wife. Her courage and quick thinking shamed the men and women of other Houses.

Myrcella reviewed the legal documentation accompanying the initial contracts again. Their lawyers had stricken some clauses. A few bold entrepreneurs from the east had come to Dorne to meet them in person regarding their new partnership and to discuss terms.

Of course they had to deal with perceptions and sexist pigs. When the initial emissaries arrived, Myrcella had smirked when the odious men expected to be met by other men. They had quickly learned in negotiations that these women were in fact their betters. She had so enjoyed seeing their smirks of condescension slowly disappear. How their satisfaction had turned to concern, then to outright distress as she and Arianne played the merchants against each other. Before long the Pride of Dorne had most favorable contracts indeed.

One trader had worked with them as equals from the start, and he left with, by far, the best deal. They gave this man a long term contract, where the others were given only six month deals. This man had also received advantageous contract terms.

It had been a productive week.

The success of those meetings still had her very horny as she awakened in the predawn gloom with a full bladder. She and Arianne were very sound sleepers; they would never make good lookouts. As her senses returned to her, she smiled with what she was hearing.

She looked down to the floor beside the bed. There Dorea was on her knees beside the bed going down on Loreza with her sister’s legs resting on her shoulders. Loreza was biting the inside of her arm. Her whole body was shaking violently and at that moment harsh convulsions started to tear at her body. Her head jerked up and pounded down slamming the bed as her arm swallowed her strangled screams. Loreza’s hips grinding up into her twin’s mouth.

Myrcella got up to use the newly installed commode. Daenerys had shared designs for her water tower, plumbing and commode from Volantis. Tradesmen had installed the setup for the royal household to use. It worked like a charm.

As she returned, she watched with the canopy screen pushed back as Dorea got up on the bed and rode her sister’s face with her swollen clamshell. She soon had both hands locked behind her sister’s head, pulling it up hard into the pussy she was grinding down hard into the gobbling, sucking mouth.

Her body exploded in wild flips and jackknifes as spittle sprayed out clenched teeth swallowing screams of ravaged ecstasy. Slowly her body sagged down and then the twins moved fully on the bed and embraced tenderly.
Myrcella did not try to join. She and Arianne understood that the twins needed plenty of time to fuck one on one. Their love was hot and intense, and needed to express itself often with just the two of them fucking often with her and Arianne watching getting hot and bothered. As Myrcella went back to sleep the twins were on their sides with faces buried in between thighs gobbling sweet gash, the bed jerking and shaking as muffled screams swallowed by wet camel toes filled her ears with sweet music.

She had awakened three hours later, and Arianne was already up and half dressed. She told her wife they had a busy day. She refused Myrcella’s overtures of lovemaking. In a huff Myrcella got dressed. Myrcella had been horny all morning, and now early afternoon with no satisfaction. The sand snakes had gone to the academy to train.

Arianne was not helping her frustration. Her bodice left three quarters of her full tits exposed. The delightful globes were constantly compressing and shifting with her wife’s movements; the creamy brown flesh making her tummy ache and mouth water.

Arianne brought up the idea of establishing a breeding center in Volantis to breed Sand Steeds. The new merchants and nobility would appreciate the mounts.

They discussed this for a few minutes. Both she and Arianne were working hard day in and day out to impress the new Queen. They wanted to be very necessary to her - they wanted Dorne to be first in her thoughts. She had no desire for the throne, but she wanted to be close to the Queen. She wanted to make her mark before Arianne was called to the throne of Dorne. They knew they were making inroads to that.

“We will crush these fucking Dune Raiders.” Arianne barked out suddenly.

“I know we will baby . . . I hate that they are taking advantage of Dorne mobilizing to heed the Queen’s call. They have become emboldened. Their reach has grown, and they are causing much harm to our subjects . . . they are disrupting trade that the Bedouins need, and playing havoc with the wells of the central and eastern Dorne deserts. We will crush them!”

She was suddenly pulled into a tight squeeze, her face in Arianne’s throat and her small tits smothered by her wife’s full bosom. “I love how you say ‘my people’. You are truly a Martell now. Gods I love you Myrcella.” Myrcella’s body had been infused with heat, feeling her wife’s full bosom pressed into her body.

“We will be leaving in a week to seek out and destroy these fuckers!” Arianne told Myrcella fiercely. She and Arianne had been analyzing the attacks and their patterns. They had studied the maps of Dorne closely. Everyone knew they were using the trackless wades and their dry waterways and hidden gullies to move about.

The raiders had been attacking across the heartland of central Dorne. The attacks moving from region to region.

Arianne was sure she had located their main camp. The heir to Dorne had analyzed the attacks and saw an underlying pattern. Though the attacks were spread out they seemed to cross over a central pivot point. That had to be where the base camp was. She had been questioning some visiting Bedouins from the region. Two had agreed to be their guides. In four days they would leave to seek out and destroy these raiders, and the cancer would be removed. Their sister wives were anxious to begin the campaign.

Oberyn was fully supportive of his youngest daughters in their marshal designs. Their father was anxious for his youngest sand snakes to prove themselves in combat. He himself was too busy to deal with the bandits, with the mobilization of Dorne for the possible march north. What no one knew was that she and Arianne themselves would be going on the expedition. By the seven hells, they were not going to be left behind with their wives riding into danger. They could provide analysis and strategy to their wives and their cavalry.

Myrcella again glanced at her wife’s sweet breast. The brown globes so full and her nipples poking out the sheer material. Her body shivered and she had to gulp again as her mouth watered with fuck hunger for her wife. She looked away her mind’s eye still caressing those succulent brown creamy tits begging to be devoured.

“You know you have been staring at my tits and swallowing loudly all morning and afternoon, Myrcella?”

A sudden shame flooded the young woman. They had work to do and all she really wanted to do was fuck her beautiful wife. They had made so much progress today! She hung her head at her lack of control, and her lower lip started to tremble. She needed to be more disciplined.

“Myrcella.” she heard her name.

She looked up and her breath left her body.

Arianne was reaching behind her neck unhooking the sty and now worked more loose the laces to her bodice. Her heavy tits spilled out. The twenty-five year old woman cupped and massaged roughly her tits before a hypnotized Myrcella.

“Oooohhh Myrcella what you do to meee . . . my cunt is so wet for your baby . . . I’ve wanted you to throw these papers on the floor and throw me down on this table all morning and take me!” she said in a soft breathy voice.

Myrcella cupped the closest full breast squeezing in hard just like Arianne liked it. “Hunnggggg oh gods yessss baby!” Arianne gurgled out, feeling her tit fill with heat and need. She watched with lidded eyes as Myrcella lifted the full tit to her mouth and swallowed the brown globe feverishly. Myrcella started to rhythmically suck on the turgid teat. Myrcella leaned in and worked her lips further onto the breast swallowing most of the large steeple areola wolf sucking. Arianne’s eyelids fluttered shut. Now both of their eyes rolled back into their skulls. One giving pleasure and the other taking pleasure in the prefect wheel of life.

Myrcella moaned in pure happiness. She was going to fuck Arianne so good.

Arianne

Tomorrow they would be riding out to confront the dune raiders. She knew that they had this one opportunity to ride out with their beloved sand snakes. The Queen and her father would shit their undergarments when they discovered that she and Myrcella had ridden into the deserts with their wives. Hopefully, if they proved themselves in combat, they would be allowed out again in the future. She knew there would be resistance, but they were crafty and cunning and they will have proven themselves by then.

She was walking the market area of Shadow City that sprawled to the west and south of Sunspear. It had slowly grown over the centuries, beneath the comforting shadows of the ancient castle. The people were safe and prosperous, knowing the Spear of Dorne was in those very walls ready to defend them. The three massive Winding Walls, tall and impenetrable, encircled one another, containing miles of narrow alleys, hidden courts, and noisy bazaars.

The town began life started under the shadow of the castle's massive Winding Walls. Mud-brick shops and windowless hovels were closest, then west of those were stables, inns, winesinks, and pillow houses - some which had walls of their own. Hovels and homesteads then spread beyond. The city had slowly grown with time.

The outskirts of the city were now only three miles from the Battleborne Academy of Dorne. She paused in front of the entrance to the main food bazaar. She looked in the direction of the Academy, where her two Sand Snake wives were. She knew they were training one last time, making sure their swords, javelins, bullwhips and throwing axes were ready for battle.

They would be getting their precious traditional Bedouin Mughal bows ready for combat. The bows measured about four feet. She had always found the geometry of their double curves appealing. The bows were small, but powerful with grips covered in velvet. Several strings of thick catgut lined the Mughal bow on its concave side, to give it elasticity and force. The belly was made of finely polished wild goat's horn in jet black. Glued to this was a thin slip of hard, tough wood. The ends were fashioned to represent snakes' heads with the horn left plain, while the wooden back was decorated with rich intermingled arabesques of gilded birds, flowers and fruit.

The bows were heirlooms of House Martell, granted to the House by Nymeria herself as a wedding gift to Mors Martell, the man she wed upon her arrival in Westeros. They had been passed down from generation to generation. Like the sword of House Dayne, the bows were not always taken up by every generation. Their father had not been a man of the bow. The older sand snakes had eschewed the bows too, seeking mastery of other weapons.

Arianne entered a large, low walled compound with red bricks plastered over with stucco. The area was spacious, filled with small tents and loosely constructed wood that formed stalls and displays to store wares, and nooks for the merchants to sit and eat and drink in comradery of sellers everywhere. They would often talk of how only they could be trusted, and how their competitors were thieves and of no account, but towards evening the same merchants were often sitting together laughing as they exchanged tales of gullible women and the art of the sell.

She and Myrcella had no skill with haggling. They were way too eager to buy at the first price hawked to them, driving the twins to distraction. They had fumed that she and Myrcella were pampered and spoiled the first time they brought them here. This was a totally different Game of Thrones that operated on a completely different set of rules. She and Myrcella had started to cry at the sand snakes rebuke. Then Sand Snakes had broken down themselves, begging for forgiveness. They would have laughed at any man who scorned them, but it had hurt when it came from Loreza and Dorea.

It had been agreed that they would do the haggling from then on, after the first time out shopping.

Arianne walked into the bazaar. She looked to her left and saw a booth that had high wood crossbars, from which hung a multitude of ceremonial and religious beads to guard against non-existent Jinns. The beads were the colors of the rainbow, and of all sizes. Behind that was a booth filled with bolts of cloth that had ends displayed, ready to be cut off for sewing. The colors, material and textures were pleasing to the eyes.

Arianne saw a red silk scarf that would flatter her hair. The man was offering her an “unbelievable price”. She refused him; she would wait till she could bring her nieces. She moved over to the right across the main aisle. There, a merchant of spices was hawking her wares along with a young son and daughter. In front of them were four rows of medium sized circular pails filled near to the top with spices, the colors a riot to the eye - purple and white predominantly, interspersed with a few containers of green, red, blue and orange. To the sides were large square bins with wooden slats that had large tubers of brown, black, white and purple colors. Behind the circular pails were large storage containers with open tops, large leafy plants freshly plucked inside the pails.

She had dealt with this vendor before, with Dorea. She made it clear that Dorea would inspect her purchase later and the prices charged. The woman had smiled as she picked out basil, black cut pepper, salt and saffron. She gave the Martell a bag of leafy spinach as well. Arianne smiled, and left with her purchase.

She passed a stall with a man surrounded by bleating goats. A cow was mooing, along with an ibex, and a yak. The man had pails of food in front of the animals, which they ate from contentedly. The animals were sleepy as they were milked to fill orders. She watched a man haggle a price for a small bottle of fresh yak milk; Loreza’s favorite. She looked over the bottles as another woman bartered for a bottle of goat’s milk. Then a man came up asking for yak and cow milk. Arianne then moved in, asking for the same sized bottles for her purchase of each type of milk.

The man was leering at her low cut bodice and wide hips. He of course quoted thrice of what she had just clandestinely heard. She arched her eyebrow, and told the man she would only pay the prices she had heard. He had wailed and moaned that his children would starve at those prices. Her heart would have caved once, before her education. She held firm and soon had her milk at the price she demanded.

She walked on with her items; things her wives rarely considered. They simply could not cook worth a shit. She enjoyed cooking for them, though, when time permitted. Tonight she would make them their favorite dishes before they all headed out into danger tomorrow.

As she strode to the sector with stalls for fresh meat, she passed a vendor hawking pecans. The price was exorbitant, due to being so water intensive. Arianne had been doing research. Most places only had a few trees, due to their greedy thirst.

She remembered a childhood journey to Yardenwood that housed cousins on her mother’s side of the family. It was a small holding on the main peninsula that reached out into the sea, The Broken Arm. She remembered it now as the one land in Dorne on its eastern side that had ample rainfall from the currents colliding in the ocean off the coast of The Broken Arm. Warm water from the Sea of Dorne hitting the current of Hurmoz was cold and dark.

The colliding water made for many weather fronts that kept that area well-watered and green. She had recently contacted her cousins there. They were anxious to try out her hypothesis that the land would be most hospitable to pecan trees.

As part of her research, she had selected the breeds of Cape Fear, Brandeth, Chickasaw, Creek and Golden Groove for their precocious growth. She would try other species that were slower growing later, but she hoped that with grafting and good husbandry within eight years they would have their first harvests.

If successful, the demand would be great, and the income coming into that poor area of Dorne would greatly boost their economy. It would be one more item to trade with Essos one day. Her sweet wife Myrcella had thrown herself into the study of pecans and other nuts when Arianne had mentioned her idea. She wanted to make sure they did not deplete the natural resources with what they grew. She had set up a book of tables and graphs that the farmers would fill out to catalog their efforts, to see what worked best.

Arianne arrived at the booth of a meat merchant. He had just killed a kid, and had a long line of sausage hanging off a wood slat between two beams. She smelled the hickory used to cook the sausage with, and knew Myrcella would be most pleased. The Sand Snakes loved fresh kid cooked in her herbs and broth stew.

They would eat, and then fuck deep in the night. She felt her nipples getting hard at the thought. She saw the man eyeing her nipples poking out the sheer silk. She didn’t care. Let him think he was something hot. She was tired of this haggling. He quoted a price and she halved it. She batted her eyelashes and bent low to let him see plenty of cleavage, and pressed into his arm when looking at a choice cut of veal for herself. She got all for sixty percent off. She knew one way to haggle unique to herself.

She had all of her ingredients, and strolled down the side of the main walkway, looking into the stalls as she passed. One had fresh vegetables in large wicker baskets, filled to the brim. She had the basic staples, but spied a small tub with sweet purple onions. An old woman was manning this stall. The woman recognized her as the heir to Dorne, and wanted to give her the onion for free. She had given the woman a big tip for the onion.

Only when she was two stalls down did she start to wonder if the woman had played her.

It didn’t matter; she had done well today. The next two stalls had regular produce of tomatoes, peppers, cucumbers, onions and beans. The vegetables were of all colors, shapes and sizes showing the various breeds and sub-species, displayed in delicate arrangements to attract the eye and loosen the purse strings.

Near the entrance of the bazaar she saw a large stand that displayed many statues and representations of the wheel of life that were of the Bedouin goddess of life and death, her eight arms supporting the circle. Each of the arms spread out on each side of the goddess’s body with her hands gripping the wheel. Each hand had a different weapon that it held, the weapon’s edge or tip projected out past the wheel circumference. Each arm represented the types of emotional states that the Jinns use to wrong a person: anger, greed, jealousy, fear, indifference, infidelity, apostasy and betrayal.

The figures were carved with cunning to make the woman both beautiful and frightful at the same time. The figures were on a stepped display case. The one on the right had nine levels and the one to the left was five levels; both numbers good luck in Bedouin culture. The highest rows had the various forms Jinns took when they possessed a man or woman. The most eye catching painted shapes were of various hideous monsters that the makers had created from their fertile imagination.

On the next shelf down the carved figures were of the more traditional devils, demons, demented fairies along with vampires, half human half animal hybrids like minotaurs, harpies, satyrs and werewolves. Then, the base level was full of brilliantly painted egg shapes used to represent Jinns in their native, harmless state as they drifted on the winds - spirits full of potential, but nothing more.

She fingered her choker, wondering if they could stylize the design and sell it. She loved the design that Myrcella had created to show the love the Pride of Dorne had for each other.

Two days earlier, while looking through some of Myrcella’s research papers she had come across some drawings where a fierce Hydra-like Sand Snake was ascendant with a lioness and two other sand snakes clearly subordinate. She had thought hard then, about the future.

She had been raised to take the leadership of Dorne. But then Myrcella came into her life. She was willing to give her entire claim up for her wife. They could become a force in the kingdom, and not just Dorne itself.

But in Dorne, they could fully implement their visions.
It was all confusing. In some ways she wanted both, but could not have it. As the Pride of Dorne they would be free to solve problems realm wide, and be free of the mundane. But as the rulers of Dorne they could fully implement their visions and help their House reach higher and become ever more prosperous. They were already well on their way.

She loved her father dearly, but sometimes Doran was too slow to react. He would never have formed the new alliances with Essos so quickly. Maybe not at all. She was willing to explore new avenues of thought and production. She could lead Dorne to true, peaceful, greatness.

She turned to the right and gasped.

Two booths down was her niece Obara, and Cersei Lannister. They were looking over food items. They were talking and acting like friends, and by the gods Cersei was looking hot! She had put on about fifteen pounds of sinewy muscle, while retaining all her femininity. Cersei was squeezing some cantaloupe in front of her small breasts suggestively.

Obara just stared at the globes. She was actually nonplussed at Cersei’s sauciness. When had the woman developed a sense of humor? Cersei laughed and turned around, putting the fruit down. Obara stared hungrily at the Lannister’s ass flexing with the woman’s movements. Obara asked her if she wanted some garlic in their meal tonight. Obara was the one sand snake that could actually cook. Cersei thought about it, then said yes. “You won’t want to be kissing me tonight,” she laughed.

Obara had mumbled and kicked the dirt. Cersei reached up to get at the bundle of garlic bulbs up high on a peg. The vendor did not want the fragrance to fend off clients. Her ass clenched as she rose up to reach the garlic. Poor Obara was drooling at the sight. She had it bad. She was definitely pussy whipped.

Arianne started to move off, not wanting a confrontation with Cersei. Before she could escape though, she heard her niece calling out to her. She sighed and turned around. She was not ready to confront Cersei again. She sighed again. She had no choice. She slowly walked over to the two women.

“Hello, niece.” Arianne spoke embracing Obara. Cersei looked at her and tilted her head neutrally. The drop dead gorgeous blond woman looked around, unsure, and examined some tomatoes very closely.

After a minute Cersei started to move off. Arianne’s niece reached out and gripped the Lannister’s elbow gently restraining her flight. Obara tried to bring Cersei several times into the conversation, which was awkward for her and the Lannister both. Geez, her niece had it bad. Cersei just mumbled and looked down.

It was time to go. She had moved off several steps when she heard Cersei call out her name, and she turned around. She looked at the Lannister as if expecting an attack. Obara was off to her side, looking at Cersei. Both the women from Dorne waited.

“I’m sorry for the way I spoke to you before. It was out of hand. I can be a mean, vile cunt.”

“Stop that right now, Cersei. You are not that woman anymore!” Obara cried out to her, trying to get Cersei to stop castigating herself.

Cersei just looked back at the tomatoes, and refused to look back up.

Obara and Arianne shared a look. Cersei was definitely not the woman she had been.
Arianne left the bazaar. She had a meal to cook, and an adventure to ride out on tomorrow morning. She felt her breath flutter a little at the thought of actually riding off with the sand snakes. She and Myrcella would not be left behind. Doran and Oberyn could shove it up where the sun didn’t shine.

Sand Snakes

For three days they had ridden hard out from Sunspear, one hundred and ten strong. They had four horses for each rider. They were riding in light cavalry style, their goal was pure speed pushing into the interior of Dorne. They rode hard for Vaith. That would be the last castle and established human habitation before they entered the restless sand dunes that gave Dorne its name and character.

They had changed the horses constantly during their hard ride. They carried just enough food and drink to sustain themselves, and fodder for their horses in their saddle bags. The horses would drink at the rills and wells, which were well mapped and maintained. The wells had grass for the horses to crop.

Small outputs and sand farmers greeted them warmly. Dorne had established forts roughly every fifty miles on the main trade routes and tracks. This allowed for a presence to be maintained. If attacked, ravens would be sent to the nearest fort for support and reinforcement. They had ridden out to the fort that paralleled the Greenblood River one hundred miles from Sunspear. There, they were granted shelter and fodder for the horses. Mounts that had tired out or showed signs of leg stress were switched out. This light cavalry attack had been planned for nearly a month. Provisions and horses had been prepositioned for them.

The second night they had slept out in the open with heavy guard. It was best to be prudent, even though they were still heavily in the sphere of Dorne’s protection.

Late afternoon of the third day, they had reached Vaith and the entryway to the Dune Seas and the low ranging Iron Mountains - the convoluted home of Bedouins and small homesteaders who lived off the land.

The master of Vaith greeted them warmly. A man in his late forties, he had risen to colonel in the military. He was the one who had petitioned for this force. The raiders in the dunes had proven to be too much for him.

Most of the hold’s forces were moving to marshalling areas while preparing for a possible march north. The raiders were taking advantage of the lessened forces and focus of the current situation. They were raiding and attacking homesteads, Bedouin camps and caravans travelling from east to west between the coasts and up into Highgarden.

While always a problem, the raiders had grown suddenly more aggressive and potent in the last eight months. They were clan-based and had often fought each other, but they seemed to have put aside their differences and banded together. Now they were a force to be reckoned with.

Loreza and Dorea planned on putting an end to the problem.

They had been given quarters in the tall, pale castle in the foothills of the Iron Mountains. Tomorrow they would move into the dune sea, and begin seeking out the base of the raiders and, hopefully, annihilate them. At the very least they wanted to bloody the noses of the raiders and teach them great caution. When the forces of Dorne were no longer mobilized on behalf of the Queen, the problem would be entirely eradicated.
They had made love in the fort, in the small quarters provided for the commanders of the expedition. Underneath the stars, they had only cuddled.

Now in their small royal quarters, they had fucked long and hard repeatedly with their wives, and each other. They had total confidence in their abilities, but combat always had chance and luck involved. They had drank deeply from their wives’ wellsprings again and again, savoring their sweet taste.

They continued into the dunes and wadis of Central Dorne. The low mountains added defiles and dead end canyons to the mix. They had moved with speed before, but now moved with stealth. They had brought their Bedouin guides and had some of the best trackers with them. Those skills would not be needed in the landscape of northern Westeros. Everyone knew where the enemy was.

They had joined the scouts having left three hours before dawn to range out ahead of the cavalry. They and the other scouts looked for evidence of passage and spoor of the raiders. They had moved into the high passes and did not follow the main tracks. They looked down on the defiles below looking for raiders or their tracks.

Two days later they had still seen no evidence of the raiders. The few locals they had come across had told them that the raiders had not been in that area for several weeks. They had destroyed homesteads, ran off with young girls, and either killed livestock or stole outright. The raiders were always on the move, roaming from area to area to shake off any pursuers.

That night they made camp on high escarpments to limit the points of attack. Dorea and Loreza had eaten with their wives, and then cuddled while not on watch. They had both been so impressed with their civilian wives. So far they had ridden well. In Dorne, all royals learned how to ride horses, and Myrcella under Arianne’s tutelage had learned the skill as well.

It was Arianne’s insight that was leading them generally north by east to the hoped for enemy camp. They were only moving forward at fifteen to twenty miles per day now as they wound ever deeper into the dune sea.

They found the first tracks on the third day. It was difficult to follow the trail in the hard rocks and scree that often was the floor of the wadis. The raiders were keeping their horses to the stone, but a few partial hoof prints and some dung gave them away. It could have been from a Bedouin, but Loreza’s instinct said otherwise.

On the fourth day, the tracks were more plentiful. Arianne had a hypothesis as to where the raider’s camp was located. She was sure it was in the depths of the painted deserts, where canyons would often lead to dead ends and the small defiles leading on for miles. The scouts had been ranging out far and wide initially, but the focus narrowed as more evidence of the raiders was found. They had found the remains of a skinned and butchered mountain goat just that morning.

They slowly constricted the noose of their search. Near dusk of the fourth day Dorea and Loreza had met up from their separate scouting parties. They were high up in the hills looking down at the twisted paths of the dried river below them. They had several scouts on the floor of the dried up waterway.

Arianne had guided them well to this point. They were positive Arianne was right, and the enemy’s camp lay before them up the dried riverbed. Somewhere up in the low mountains ahead they would find the raiders. They, along with their scouts, had explored miles into the dunes and wadis to the left and right and found no evidence of a camp.

A rider appeared at the throat of the wadi and the twins ducked down. They quickly notched their reverse compound bows. The man was looking around, moving slowly. He was likely a scout for the raiders, checking the route to their camp for enemies. He moved slowly, looking down for evidence of possible enemies.

Seeing none, he rode up the defile past the two scouts hiding among the boulders. The scouts quietly came out the boulders, put their bows down and drew their swords. They stood in the path with their swords drawn. They knew they had support on high. They called out to the brigand.

The man immediately turned his horse around and charged, with a small battle axe drawn out. He gave a war cry meaning to ride down the two scouts. Two bows thrummed as one, and arrows hit the horse in the ribs and above the shoulder deep into the withers. The horse screamed in pain, stumbling forward. The first scout chopped the horse’s right leg clean in two, sending both horse and rider crashing to the ground.

The sisters bounded down the boulders, finding a small path to reach the fallen rider. The scouts had already moved out to the fallen horse and enemy lookout. When they made it out into the defiles, they ran to the horse and pinned rider. Both were already dead.

Loreza had stormed at the men for killing the enemy scout. They claimed they had only defended themselves. They had laid no blow upon the man himself. She went with her sister to look at the dead. The horse’s head had been cleaved in with several sword strikes on its skull to put the beast out of its misery.

The man’s mouth was covered in white froth. He had taken poison. They removed him and searched his clothing, finding nothing of import. His body was dragged away and stuffed into a hole for the jackals and flies to feast on.

A few hours later, the second in command came up with twenty troops. They discussed their plan of action. The sand snakes would lead the scouts and wait for the rest of the troop to come forward.
They would watch and try and map out attack vectors and the layout of the camp. Dorea and Loreza were excited to be leading their first command into battle. They kissed each other for luck, and moved off into high desert tracks.

By three in the morning they had located the camp. The wadi had broadened out in a wide, oblong bulge where water poured out of the canyons behind it during thunderstorms. In the early morning light the rest of the troops started to filter into the hills around the enemy camp. The Bedouins remained at the area where the horses were hobbled. The Sand Snakes had gotten their military force to the enemy. Now their job was to finish what they had started.

Soon their wives were beside them. The sand snakes had toyed with the idea of leaving their wives behind with the horses, but they felt better having their wives closer to them. It would place them in combat but they would have nearly a hundred of the best of Dorne protecting them. Also, they knew it would have caused a major fight and if they had enforced their will their wives would have been neutered in a way that might permanently damage their marriage. They would not take that risk.

Along the back of the defile, the raiders had set six large oxen carts they had pilfered from homesteads they had attacked and slaughtered into a loose half arc for defense. The large carts had poles hammered into the earth in front of the carts, with cloth run back to the carts creating large lean-to. Underneath were furs on the ground and some accruements of making food and coffee, and several large fire pits with spits over them to roast meat on. Trash was randomly scattered about. The Sand Snakes sneered at the slovenly camp and evident lack of discipline.

Along the back of the wall on the right was the hobble line with roughly one hundred horses. The animals were eating piles of hay and oats on the ground, with the horses of the commanders eating out of feed bags.

They looked over the ledge, and watched the raiders celebrating down below them. They had killed a fatted ox they had stolen. The passed some captured women among themselves, raping the women repeatedly. The women were battered and stumbling from fur to fur as the raiders shoved them, barking with laughter. The women sobbed brokenly as their bodies were defiled. The Pride of Dorne gnashed their teeth and all mentally made promises of retribution to those men if they should survive the battle. The thought of the women being abused repeated filled the whole troop of Dorne with silent rage.

The women’s blood boiled, but they knew they could not rush down. They decided to leave the best archers on high. They left the cavalry in command of the archers among the boulders along the defiles. There was not enough room for maneuvering to make use of horses - a deciding factor in the upcoming battle. They would wave a small red flag to start the attack. They hoped to shock the enemy with a hail of arrows and then rush into the confusion to finish off the survivors.

The horses were back at their last camp with a handful of Bedouin camp followers and a handful of Dorne guards. The guards to protect the horses and their rear. The Dorne guard ten in number. They would not allow the path of any retreat to be blocked.

The sand snakes gave final orders, telling the archers to be ready to loose their first volleys. They set the disposition of their forces on the floor of the canyon. Loreza and Dorea had spent the last hours getting a feel for the general layout of the camp and how best to attack it.

They would let the archers thin the ranks of the enemy before they made any assault. They would evaluate the attack, and then decide if a frontal assault was warranted or simply use attrition over the day to reduce their numbers for an easier finishing kill. Also, while they knew the general disposition of the enemy camp, they could still not be sure if there were pockets of unseen enemy deployed, and if they had a picket line strung out for early warning.

Arianne

As they climbed down the rocks and found the path to the floor of the defile, Arianne was worrying her lips. They had seen roughly a hundred to a hundred and ten raiders by the light of fires and the three-quarter moon. Their sand snakes had trained their whole lives to make such estimates of forces accurately with the spying they had done. Still, Arianne was concerned. For all the mischief and outright mayhem the raiders had been causing, the numbers did not seem right. There should have been more.

Also, they seemed relaxed. Too relaxed. Their scout had not returned. True, maybe the man had a longer lasting mission. A mission of spying or dangerous infiltration and thus the poison pill. Could he have been a spy? She relayed her concerns, but her wives thought that they had merely caught the raiders in the mood to celebrate their successes. From what she had seen Arianne could not argue with that assessment. They were definitely celebrating.

She felt the hackles on her neck stand on end. Arianne looked around. Something evil was near. Something not human. She did not know what, or how, but she was sure of her instinct in this. She did not believe in the supernatural, or the gods, but something more than human was near. Her body was warning her of something she did not believe in. Arianne shook her head to shake these childish fears from her head.

Still, she was sure she had felt eyes watching them for the last two days and night. She had constantly looked around, but saw nothing. She was not surprised at that, not being militarily trained. She had asked Myrcella if she had the feeling of being watched. Had she felt an unease of the supernatural? She had not. She did not bother her Sand Snakes with her childish fears. None of the scouts had seen anything either. Arianne wrote off her uneasy feelings to being on her first military campaign.

Arianne watched Dorea take three men with her, and start to move to the right and up onto the escarpment to see the battlefield and shoot down at their enemies. The time for battle was fast approaching. Arianne felt adrenalin starting to flow into her blood making her jangly.

It was then they all heard the unnatural, high-pitched barking. Arianne looked around, desperately trying to locate the almost laughing bark. The sound echoing off the canyon walls. The barking laughter inhuman. The barking continued as the Dorne looked around in rising concern. Suddenly, on a large boulder on the escapement ahead of Dorea, appeared a monstrous animal. It had front legs much longer than its hind legs, and a shaggy mane running from its head to its front shoulders. It had spots on its sides, and Arianne saw a grin on its face.

Its head tilted back, and a loud, barking laugh sounded and echoed off the stone walls. All had paused to turn and witness the monstrosity on the boulder. The beast was huge. It was a hyena, grown monstrously large but more human dimensions to its torso and appendages. Its head was a least a foot above Arianne’s own when standing on all fours. The men in the raiders’ camp were suddenly running around gripping weapons, with some pulling up rough-hewn trousers. They did not seem shocked. They were prepared for this, and moving into action!

Still shocked, Arianne saw the animal rise up on its hind limbs and put a ram horn to its lips. The beast at least eleven feet tall on its hind legs! The beast blew the horn hard and long.

AAARRROOOOOOOOOO! AAAARRRROOOOOOOOO! AAAAARRRRROOOOOOOOO!

It was a were-hyena. It was a human invaded by a Jinn, and this was the form it had taken. It mimicked a cave hyena from the depths of the Red mountains.

From within the defiles the sound of many horses and braying of camels could be heard. No! That was the reason the numbers did not seem right to Arianne. They had hidden much of their numbers in the defiles. The raiders had chosen this site just for this. They had planned on hiding much of their force to lure their enemy in for a savage counterattack. This had all been planned. Now the echo of hooves slamming hard earth filled the air.

All of the Dorne troops were shocked at both the monster and turn of events. They began to collect themselves. The raiders had only been feigning their guard being down. Bows were being pulled up and notched.

Arianne turned to look at the were-hyena as it laughed its hideous laugh. The beast looking down at the troops of Dorne with intelligent evil eyes. It surveyed the tableau below it. It was the leader of the raiders Arianne knew. This beast from some pit of hell was leading the raiders.

The spell was broken. A whoosh of over fifty arrows being loosed went shooting down from the heights. Seventeen raiders fell down with feathers in their throats or bellies, a few others with arrows in limbs. The raiders released their own small cloud of arrows. Two fatally pierced fighters of Dorne and two more with arrows in thigh or bicep. Arrows were firing up into the heights and down at the defiles at the Dorne troop who were now righting themselves, firing off arrows or throwing javelins. The raiders had succeeded in ambushing their enemy. But they would find that this company had fangs. The fangs of Sand Snakes!
Suddenly a large stream of horses and some twenty camels with riders came boiling out of the defiles. They had been pressed into the sides, and kept quiet to avoid being seen or heard. The raiders had set their own trap. The horses kept pouring out and charging forward. Arianne was shocked at the numbers boiling out the defile. She was starting to panic but she heard her two Sand Snake wives shouting out their commands encouraging and organizing their troops.

Arianne turned to Myrcella to look at her wife. She saw the same shock she was sure was mirrored on her own face. She was terrified but would never consider leaving the side of her Sand Snakes in battle.

The hyena laughed its vile, inhuman laugh and threw down its horn, leaping forward almost thirty feet through the air before landing on the first man who was with Dorea. The horrendous beast ripped his throat out as the beast took him down. Her three wives watched, horrified, as the beast rose up and its left hand swiped out, disemboweling the next man. Dorea feathered the beast in its upper chest, but it did not feel the impact. It surged forward, its mouth wide open.

“NNNOOOOOOO!” Arianne screamed, her wife about to die before her. Its large, impossibly large jaws were about to snap shut on Dorea’s beautiful face, and take her from her pride.

Arianne could not look away from the grisly tableau as a loud, unearthly wolf’s howl split the air. A flash of dark brown slammed into the side of the were-hyena, and knocked the beast to the side.
What?! Arianne had not seen the second beast join the battle until it was upon the were-hyena. It was as huge as the first beast. The beast was attacking the first beast?! Could it be? Yes! The two beasts wrestled wildly jaws snapping at each other with huge canines.

The two beasts contended with each other. Their forelimbs locked and grappling with each other.
Arianne and Myrcella gaped at the battle that had saved Dorea’s life. Arianne had yet to see what manner of beast this second monster was. The two monsters tumbled down the rocks, slamming hard and bouncing to the ground.

Dorea, with her reprieve, ran up the boulders, finding a firing position and beginning to shoot her arrows at the surging raiders. She instinctively knew that the were-animals fight was their own affair. The mighty beasts clawed and bit at each other as they rolled on the ground with loud snarls and animalistic barks filling the canyon.

Loreza had moved forward and gotten behind a boulder to fire her own bow. The mass charge of the mounted raiders were getting their bearings and surging forward. Arianne glanced their way.
My gods! There had to be at least four and fifty hundred horses with the twenty camels. They were firing arrows at the Dorne troops. The air seemed alive with arrows. Arianne clenched her fists in anger seeing men and women of Dorne feathered with raider arrows.

Arrows whistled into the rolling pack of raiders, some arrows finding their mark in the large rising cloud of fine dust bellowing in the air. The dust and screams of the animals made for a cacophony of swirling confusion. The dust obscured the aim of the Dorne troops. Again and again Arianne saw a Raider go down off their mount with an arrow jutting out their chests or throat. Each man hit was a jolt of victory to Arianne.

Arianne had heard of the confusion of the battle. It was true! She heard screaming all around. Men and women screaming in agony from received wounds. Animals screaming and barking or trumpeting in fear, pain and anger. The dust was everywhere now obscuring the battlefield. Arianne looked at the battle trying to gauge the ebb and flow of combat. To see how the battle progressed.

How had the tribal clans formed such an alliance was Arianne primary thought? The families were at war with each other as much with their common foes. Current generations fought and took revenge for slights that occurred generations ago against past family members. This had limited them severely in the past. What had changed?

An arrow whizzed past her face, and she dove back down behind her screen. She saw the two beasts separate. She could finally see what had come to Dorea’s aid.

The other beast was also a Jinn-infested human, an impossibly large were-Direwolf that stood on its hind feet. The new beast was nearly nine and half feet tall. The wolf was dark brown with gold highlights. Thick fur bunched up on its shoulder girdle, and a long, bushy tail whipped from side to side for balance. The beast had golden globes for eyes, where the were-hyena’s eyes were jet black.

They grappled with their fore clawed hand-paws that had long nails, trying to grip the other beast’s forelimbs to control their opponent. A hand would jerk free and slash with its claws before the limb was again gripped and their locked forearms jerked wildly, seeking freedom. Their snouts snapped at each other, trying to bite each other’s faces off. Slaver flung in all directions in long streams. The were-direwolf then suddenly kicked with one of its hind legs, its claw raking the tough fur of the were-hyena.

The were-hyena’s thick fur absorbed most of the raking blow. The were-direwolf had opened itself to attack and it howled feeling long forelimb claws rake over its ribs. The beast had seen the blow coming and half twisted its body away the claws not sinking deep only causing superficial wounds.

The two animal spirits broke apart and went down on all fours, circling each other and making sudden lunges as their bodies twisted to avoid snapping teeth. Slaver flung in all directions, and the sound of jaws snapping shut on empty air was loud in the confusion. Arianne watched the beasts attack and counterattack with speed and reflexes that no human could hope to match. The beasts seemed equally matched.

One beast or the other would support itself with one forelimb, and slash at the sides of its foe. Thick fur protected flanks from deep rakes of long claws. The beasts glared hot at each other, seeking advantage. The were-hyena’s size may have given it superior strength, but the were-direwolf had speed and agility as its advantage. The were-direwolf’s long tail let it keep its balance as it spun around and snapped at the were-hyena.

Arianne looked around at what was now a melee. The numbers were not that much greater in a military sense, but the mass of the mounted animals were a force multiplier. The raiders were wheeling around, firing their arrows in all directions. The raiders in their camp were behind barriers themselves now and firing out at their tormentors. The dust and the screams of feathered animals made for a malaise of confusion.

The enemy had superior numbers and the advantage of initial surprise. They were firing arrows out of the dust storm at clearly seen enemies. The rocks protected the forces from Dorne but arrows did find targets as the Dorne forces rose to shoot at the raiders. Arianne watched a camel go down. it had taken five arrows but javelin through the neck took it down.

An arrow with purple fletching thudded into the ground in front Arianne. She started and gulped reflectively. Her eyes going wide. The fucking bastards were using poison! The raiders sometimes used arrows tipped with venom from the Deathstalker scorpion of the scrub brush in the highlands. The venom was hard to extract and collect, and thus used sparingly in combat. The purple fletching was a traditional marking to instill fear in the enemy.

Thankfully, the Dorne military had within the last two years developed an antidote for the venom. They had collected scorpions from Bedouins, paying them small fees for each collected deadly scorpion. With their more scientific methods, their extraction of venom was much higher than possible by raiders and the Bedouins themselves.

From the extract of the venom the scientists of the Dorne military had studied the venom and its effects. They used minute traces of the venom in double blind tests on animals and had developed an antidote. Each person in the cavalry had the precious elixir in their bandolier they cinched around their waist, with a leather cartridge stuffed with cotton to keep the vial safe for possible use.

Loreza was directing her troops from behind the outcrop. The raiders were milling around firing arrows, and some of them had pulled out their long scimitars. They would charge toward Dorne soldiers on the floor of the defile. Each charge resulting in a rider or two going down shot dead with Dorne arrows. The raiders swiped and slashed at the dismounted Dorne troops as their horses wheeled around in circles. Dorne arrows whistled in and found their targets wounding and killing raiders. They slashed at troops hidden behind boulders, and some that had come out to fight in close quarters, using the melee to dive and juke round slashing blades.

Horses and camel legs were slashed off, making animals and riders topple down. Some of the dismounted Dorne cavalry fell with arrows in them. Fallen raiders were cut down or feathered. Not all were killed before they scurried back into the defile to regroup for further attacks on the Dorne forces. A few of the Dorne fighters had been slashed with raider scimitars that bleed heavily as the person or his fellow fighters staunched the wounds with bindings. She saw a Dorne woman’s head cleaved in two. Then a man went down his ribs cut in two his lungs and liver cleaved in halves. The man died instantly. Arianne screamed in rage.

Arianne saw two Dorne dismounted combatants go down trampled by horse and camels with their skulls pulped by stomping hooves. Arianne felt her guts roil at the sight of brains and gore spread out on the sand. She refused to vomit. She had chosen to be here! She screamed "Yes!" when three riders who had severely injured a Dorne trooper were feathered with arrows and the second one had a throwing axe in his temple for good measure.

A camel had slammed into a woman and was rearing up its front leg to stomp her to death when a javelin pierced its side, making it bray in pain and an arrow went up its throat and out the back of its head, piercing its brain. The woman killed the pinned raider with a slash across his throat.

A force of raiders rode their horsed down the defiles. The leaned down close to their horses bodies firing their bows just over the horses back at their enemies. She would have been impressed with the horsemanship and skill with a bow if she did not want to slay them all for attacking her subjects! Four of the horses went down and the riders hopped off and hid behind a boulder firing his bow. A man in the boulders spun with an arrow hitting his shoulder. Troops from Dorne quickly dispatched them with their superior marksmanship.

Arianne heard Myrcella cursing beside her. Myrcella was infuriated she could not attack back. The Lioness in her wife was coming out. Arianne glanced over at her fuming wife and smiled at her sweetling being so upset. She was really was of Dorne now. She was too busy trying to track the events to get upset.

The two were-beasts were slashing and biting in an intimate embrace now. They were rolling on the ground over and over as legs kicked and raked nails along flanks and jammed into stomachs. The beast’s thick, matted fur blunted the slashing claws. Slaver flung out of the jowls of the beasts as their heads lunged and bit at each other. The sounds of their animal barks and snarls loud even over the din of combat. The animals had no care about the battle around. Their fight was between them and them alone.

Arianne saw that the first wounds along their flanks had already healed. The beasts were definitely Jinns. The Were-hyena’s head rose back, and its massive jaws snapped shut on the were-direwolf’s shoulder. The massive jaws sunk in deep, the bone crushing force seeking to snap the wolf’s shoulder girdle. The were-direwolf howled in agony, its head thrashing in pain and raging anger. The were-hyena shook its head trying to sink its fangs deeper into its opponent. Its forelimbs clung to the were-direwolf to anchor itself as it sought to rip its fangs deeper into its foe.

The were-direwolf’s limbs began to kick furiously, all four limbs kicking nails into flesh and ripping down again and again. The animal desperate in its attack to break the bite of its assailant. The were-direwolf body attempted to arch away from the mouth savaging it. The dire-wolf four limbs were a blur of raking limbs. Fur, skin, muscle and quickly viscera started to fly out form the were-hyena’s belly and ribs.

The beasts broke apart, both severely wounded now. They circled each other, snarling. Blood was dripping out of the were-hyena’s mouth. Blood of its opponent. The were-direwolf limped, barely able to move. The were-hyena’s belly dripped blood, and shredded viscera dropped onto the ground as the beast gasped in air through punctured lungs. The were-hyena was still strong though. It rose up with its laughing bark and prepared to jump down on the weakened were-direwolf.

“AAAAIIIIIIIIIIIIIIEEEEEEEE!” the were-hyena screamed in pain. Dorea had feathered an arrow into its right eye, ruining the orb. The beast toppled back onto its back, and its body flipped around in fast, quick jerks. The beast howled mournful wails of agony. More flips propelled the beast around on the rocks. The beast suddenly surged back up onto its hind legs.

The were-hyena swiped furiously, gripping the arrow in its talon paw and ripped it out its eye socket, blood spraying out the ruined eye socket. The ruined eye itself on the arrow point. Arianne was shocked that an arrow to the eye did not kill the beast. It must have penetrated the vile beast’s brain but it was very much alive. It was definitely severely wounded now though. It tilted its head back to howl and howl its anguish to the sky.

Dorea and another archer feathered several more arrows into the beast before it went on all fours again. The were-direwolf, seeing an opening, circled to the blinded side of the were-hyena and lunged in. The blinded were-hyena could not defend itself from that side. The were-direwolf started to bite savagely along its enemy’s ribs and shoulder.

The were-hyena moved to the side, trying to get the were-direwolf on its left to see it, but the healing were-Direwolf was able to keep to the right of the beast, reaching out and slashing open ribs and exposing the beast’s lung on that side. A tipping point in their fight was reached.

With a barking laugh of pain, the were-hyena started to bound off, going up the escarpment with inhuman speed. Even injured, the were-beast was fast. The were-hyena barked high pitched whines of pain with three more arrows hitting its sides and sinking in deep. The were-direwolf yelped, taking several raider arrows as it bounded in hot pursuit. They were soon out of sight.

Arianne stared wild eyed at the disappearing beasts. She had two answers. One, was that she fervently believed in the magical now. The Jinn were-beasts could not be denied. Two, it must have been the were-hyena that had bound the dune raiders together. She gaped still in the direction of the beasts. Then she spied them much further and higher along the escapement the were-direwolf nipping at the heels of the fleeing were-hyena. They again disappeared from view.

Arianne turned back to the fight at hand. She saw many dead horses and six—no seven- dead camels. The losses of the dune raiders had been grievous, but the losses on the smaller forces of Dorne were equally grievous.

She saw that the number of archers in among the boulders had been reduced. Some had moved down to help support the forces on the ground. Many of the unhorsed raiders were behind dead horses and camels, using them as shields and firing arrows back at the Dorne fighters. An arrow would occasionally find its mark, but the superior marksmanship of the Dorne archers slowly whittled down the numbers of the raiders.

Twenty horsemen formed up a phalanx and charged the Dorne troops in the defile. Five were shot down, but the rest kept on coming. They charged down two Dornish warriors and stomped one to death, the other cut down with a scimitar. Two horses were feathered and bucked as more arrows flew into them, killing them. A raiders gripped his throat an arrow jutting out it. Quickly four more were feathered and fell off their mounts mortally wounded. More horsemen charged into the melee.

Loreza gathered four fighters with her, and charged the wildly wheeling horses. She brandished her whip and snagged a man by the elbow, jerking him from his horse. The four fighters flung their javelins from close range into horses’ sides, puncturing lungs and internal organs. One javelin thrower had her head cut off with a mighty swipe of a battle ax. Another was trampled by one horse, and another stomped a steel shod hoof into a man’s back, shattering his spine.

Arrows whistled down killing the unhorsed raiders and more horses were feathered angering the beasts that were no killed or maimed. Several more riders were thrown down and killed.

Dorea was firing arrows into the milling throng and staggered back into hiding when an arrow skidded on the boulder in front of her, and ricocheted off her leather armor.

A tall man at the oxen cart was stomping around, shouting and gesticulating, giving commands and guiding the forces in that area. Arianne hated the man, having remembered him actively raping a teenager earlier. Out of the corner of her eye she saw a huge man with a double-ended Thief sword. He swiped down on Loreza as she was occupied, unseating another raider from his horse. She started to scream, but Loreza sensed the danger and leaped to the side.

The blade just missed the sand snake, with the slightly curved blade slicing through her bandolier. The belt flung off. Loreza rolled to her feet with her long dagger drawn. She blocked the man’s downward chop and staggered back. She dove through and beneath his guard. He spun around and then staggered when Dorea hit him in the shoulder with an arrow. He righted himself, but Loreza was on him and she buried her long dagger deep into his belly, and ripped up and surged back. The man screamed, his intestines spilling out as he dropped his Thief sword and tried to put his guts back into his abdomen.

Arianne looked back at the oxen carts. Then her vision was pulled away by Myrcella’s scream. Arianne whipped her head around, expecting to see an arrow in her. She was unharmed, but her eyes were wild, staring out. She turned to look where Myrcella was fixated. Her hand flew to her mouth. Loreza was dragging herself behind a dead camel with an arrow in her lower leg. The arrow had purple fletching. It was poisoned, and Loreza had lost her belt with the antidote!

“Aaaaaaannnnggggggghh!“ Arianne screamed, seeing Myrcella jump out of her culvert and running crouched down into the melee. Arianne heard Dorea scream. She charged out after her wife, pulling out the long dagger she and Myrcella had been given by their sand snakes. She watched Myrcella slide down on her hip, picking up the fallen bandolier and scooting on hands and knees to a sweaty Loreza. The sand snake was cursing Myrcella for her stupidity.
Arianne crashed into the camel beside her two wives as an arrow whizzed through her flowing hair, and jerked her off balance. She gasped for breath.

She watched Myrcella fumbling, retrieving the antidote.

“That was stupid Myrcella!” she turned and saw Arianne. “Gods damn it Arianne!”

“SHUT THE FUCK UP!” Myrcella screamed at Loreza, who promptly obeyed.

Myrcella pulled the plug from the vial and put it to her wife’s lips. Loreza drank it in two gulps. They had five minutes to get the antidote to Loreza - they had gotten it to her in time. Arianne gasped in relief, gripping her dagger in both hands. She heard grunts and looked up, then screamed. A raider had crawled over the camel and was aiming his arrow at her wives!

“Aaaarrruuunngggghhh!” Arianne lunged up, her dagger slipping up into the man’s body just underneath his sternum and up into his heart. His body jerked in convulsions, and he dropped his bow. Arianne ripped her dagger out and was splashed with blood, then lunged up again, her blade sinking up into the man’s belly. The man fell down onto her, mortally wounded.

She wildly kicked. Myrcella, grunting, pulled the dead man off Arianne. Myrcella had her dagger out now. Another man’s head appeared as he started to climb over the dead camel to get at them. He had two small axes hanging off his wrists from their straps as he gripped camel hair to pull himself forward.

“Eeeeiiiiiiiiiiii!” Myrcella screamed, lunging up and forward. Again providence smiled on the untried wives of the sand snakes. Her dagger found the man’s throat and sunk into the hilt, slicing the right side of the man’s neck wide open. Myrcella jerked wildly, ripping the man’s throat wide open even further. Blood spurted all over the woman as she screamed in battle shock and lust.

She fell back behind the camel as the man fell down onto the camel, his blood soaking the hide red beneath his throat. Myrcella and Loreza were kissing feverishly and hugging each other.

“My gods . . . you two are fucking awesome.” The sand snake told them.

After a minute, Arianne got her bearings again. She looked out over the camel. The battle was not as wild and vicious any longer. The raiders had retreated back to their camp, using the camp and dead animals to make a defensive ring. Both sides had lost many of their numbers to death and injury. Two men Arianne had noted earlier seemed to be leading the dune raiders. The big man among the oxen carts roared and gesticulated at his forces, screaming commands.

Behind him, Arianne saw the teenager he had been raping crawling forward. She suddenly rose up on her knees with a dagger in both hands, and lunged forward and down awkwardly. Her dagger found the bearded man’s Achilles’ tendon, severing it. The man screamed. His body toppled forward, ripping the dagger from the girl’s hands.

The large bearded raider fell down in a heap, twisting around and sitting up to backhand the girl, sending blood flying from her mouth. None of his men saw the tableau behind them. Another girl, maybe eighteen, was slashing at the man now with her own dagger. He blocked the slashes, but his hands and forearms took slices as he defended himself. He grabbed the girl’s wrist when she overextended, and punched her viciously in the forehead. The girl stumbled over and fell to her side, clearly stunned.

He did not see a woman in her late twenties come up on him from the side. She had tightly clenched in her two hands a double headed ax that she was barely able to lift up over her head, but with a loud grunt she got it up above her head. The blade was precariously balanced, trying to topple the girl back over. She cried out, jerking her arms forward and down with the huge ax following her arms’ lead. The blade whistled as it sliced down in its deadly arc.

The woman’s grunts of effort had alerted the man. The man jerked to the side, throwing up his arms instinctively. The blade sliced into his left arm and into his ulna and radius bones lodging there. The man howled, but gripped the ax handle and pulled his arm off the blade, then pulled the woman forward. She sprawled onto his legs. He threw the ax down, and pulled out a dagger, prepared to stab the woman to death as blood poured out his ruined left arm.

Two arrows hit him simultaneously. One hit a rib that stopped the arrow from entering his body cavity, but breaking the bone. The other arrow slammed into his back, staggering him. He did not drop the dagger, but he was gasping for breath, disoriented. The young girl had gripped her dagger again and slammed it home in the bearded man’s thigh. He cried out in renewed pain. The older teenager had gotten her dagger again and lunged into the man’s shoulder, burying the dagger to the hilt and talking him down to the ground. Arianne watched the three women stabbing his body viciously, again and again.

Arianne looked out around the battlefield. The number of raiders had been reduced yet again. Dorea had leaped down to the defile floor and ran into the melee, and up to the other commander. She buried a dagger into the man who lunged at her as she spun past.

The man roared his pain and anger. He looked down at the blade buried in his side and laughed, turning to face Dorea.

The man had a broad sword and Dorea had her shorter bastard sword and a long blocking dagger. They slashed and parried, back and forth, Dorea stepping in as their swords locked up. She slid her blade down the man’s sword as he leaned back and twisted, gaining leverage advantage. Then he slid his blade back down Dorea’s own blade. She tilted back and pivoted away to the side.

Dorea spun on her foot and did a pivot back into the man. Dorea’s arm slashing her sword at him. The man yelped and dove back. Dorea thought to come in on her nemesis, but was almost gutted in return as she blocked the strike at the last moment with her crossed blades.

Blows slammed against blades, sending out sparks. Dorea caught the man’s blade and jerked down, sending the man stumbling forward. Her fist smashed the man in the face. She tried to stab him with her blocking blade, but a slash nicked her ribs.

They spun apart again. Their bodies circling as they slashed and parried. The man came down with a chop of his sword and Dorea caught his blade on her small blocking dagger, and got the blade hooked into her dagger cross guard. She whipped her arm down while pivoting to the left. The man was pulled forward and down off balance.

Her other sword came arching down in a straight arc. Her blade slammed into the man’s back, and ran through his body, her wrist pounding into his back. Her protruding blade thickly coated in blood. Dorea ripped her left hand back, twisting her wrist to position her long dagger. She ripped that hand up and back further. She savagely slammed down with her long dagger. She buried the blade into the man’s upper back, fully penetrating his body yet again. The raider fell to his knees. She ripped her blades back and out of his body, and stabbed down viciously squiring the man with her blades penetrating all the way to her cross guards yet again.

The man sagged down dead. Dorea ripped her blades out.

The remaining men were fleeing, mounting horses and camels with some running down the defile course. Arrows chased after them.

They let them flee. They had been demolished as a raiding force. Victory had been achieved. The remaining men and women of Dorne needed to tend to their wounded. Arianne slide down to her ass.

She was exhausted.

Myrcella

It had been three days since the fight. The forces of Dorne had gathered the raider dead and burned them in a large heap along with their animals. They had killed over three hundred and ninety of the raiders. Down one of the defiles they had found plenty of dead wood that was trapped in several switchbacks during the flash floods from thunderstorms.

The raiders and animals burned together as a show of disrespect for the fallen scum. Their spirits intermingled, and defiled in their flight to the afterlife.

Myrcella had enjoyed that thought. Her wife Loreza was doing well. They had removed the arrow and cleaned it, and it showed no signs of infection. The poison antidote had done its job, and maybe the poison had killed any local infection as a side benefit.

Their own dead, forty-two, had been grievous and made her blood boil. She now considered these men and women to be her people. She was truly no longer a Lannister.

Twenty-two more had been wounded to various degrees with eight of the injuries serious. The medics and Bedouin shamans worked hard, saving their lives whenever possible. The Bedouins had come to them to offer succor. The remaining raiders were being chased and harassed. Their reduced numbers and loss of leadership had now made them the prey.

The worse wounded were now in large Bedouin tents, being cared for with local homespun remedies as the surviving medic with the Dorne contingent added the more modern medicinal methods to save life and limbs where possible.

The less injured were taken back to the main Bedouin camp to the South, one day’s journey by camel. Several riders were on the way to Vaith to let them know of the victory and cost. They had requested for a small contingent be sent to increase their depleted numbers for the ride back once the injured who could travel were ready.

They had buried their dead in individual graves. They honored the dead with the preferred rituals of their beliefs.

Myrcella and Arianne had talked about the were-beasts to the Bedouins. They had been equally shocked. Legend said that when a Jinn took a human host they took on a spirit familiar to the person. The Direwolf was not natural to this area, so they wondered whom this person could be. Jinns were spirits that floated on the very air. Maybe the Jinns thought to be known only to Dorne had a broader range than believed, and were called other names by the locals in those areas.

Arianne had agreed with her that if the were-direwolf had not come to their aid they would have been butchered. They would have been torn apart while the were-hyena healed itself from any wounds they could have delivered to the beast. The shot to the eye had been more luck. In a melee it was very difficult to hit such a target especially if the target was on the constant move.
They asked the Bedouin’s about any weapons to be used against such were-animals. They were told that only silver was known to work without question. Silver was expensive and rare among the Bedouin. Jinns rarely inhabited humans, so the need was not absolute enough to take the expense to keep such weapons.

Come evening, the Bedouin had put up their best tent and given it to the Pride of Dorn for their victory and bravery in battle.

They had been extremely exhausted after combat, and the last two days cleaning up the battlefield and burying their dead had taken their time. Arianne and Myrcella helped in the burial of the dead. The brave souls deserved the honor. A picket line had been established with supplements from the Bedouins to make up for the reduced numbers. A sliver dagger had been produced and was kept by the person on watch close to the camp.

Myrcella doubted the were-hyena would bother anyone soon. She was sure the eye would eventually heal, but the brute was probably still running with a pissed off were-direwolf slavering on its heels.

With hyenas, the females also had a penis and were larger than the males. Actually an extremely enlarged clitoris but it made it difficult to know the difference of the sexes, with the female being larger than the male. The size of the beast meant it must have been a female. Right? The were-direwolf’s sex was unsure also. The fighting had been too confusing and no one had the time to check for the sex of the fighting were-animals.

The sun had set an hour ago. Myrcella and Arianne were extremely horny! They were sure they were feeling battle lust! What a fucking turn-on! Now they understood why Dorea and Loreza were so horny after physical contests. They were anxious to make love to their wives. They were shaking in lust, holding off on their lovemaking with each other. They needed to make love to their heroic sand snakes first. They were both naked and oh so wet.

They heard their sand snakes approaching as they conversed. They had met with their command and the Bedouins to make sure the defense was sure and that the Bedouins were in sync with the Sand Snakes desire for the treatment of the injured and making sure to have scouts to meet the troop from Vaith when they approached.

Dorea parted the tent opening letting in a limping Loreza.

Myrcella sprang on Loreza pulling her into her arms and gently pivoting the squealing sand snake down to the thickly furred tent floor. She had her hands in the woman’s hair and had already latched her lips onto the sand snake and aggressively parted Loreza’s lips and shoved her tongue aggressively into wife’s mouth.

Her hand clutched and pulled on laces and hooks pulling her wife’s clothes off in a hot rush.

They parted for a short minute to pull off clothes making sure to not jostle Loreza’s bandaged leg too much.

Myrcella looked over as she pulled Loreza’s pants off. Arianne had her wife’s pants off and was already on her stomach between Dorea’s legs her head lapping as she raked her tongue aggressively over Dorea’s hard nubbin and giving it quick fierce sucks and then more flat tongue licks of her hot tongue.

Dorea’s head thrashed form side to side. She lifted her torso and finished removing her blouse top and threw it against the tent side with a thump. Dorea cupped and mashed her palms into her small tits and ground them into her ribs and then plucked her nipples hard before again rolling her tits into her ribs with her rotating palms.

Myrcella focused back on her task. She had Loreza on her palms and knees while she was in doggy too. She had her face mashed deep into her wife’s sweet juicy slit licking up and down with slow tongue licks. Myrcella groaned deep in her throat savoring her wife’s sweet twat juice. The pungent nectar ambrosia on her taste buds. Her sweet sand snake gurgled and cried out when she bent down and sucked viciously on her wife’s clit with long deep throat love sucks.

She sucked and rolled the nodule around between her lips while she swiped the rigid clit with her tongue. "Ungghh! Awwonngg! Oh fuck yes!" Loreza gasped. "Ummmm . . . ummmm . . . ummmm . . . oh . . . it's . . . ohhhhh fuck!" Myrcella licked and swiped her tongue up the slimy groove of her wife’s slit and slipped her tongue deep into her wife’s love box. She punched her head in hard forward and back to punch her tongue in again and again burying her tongue into her wife’s cunny hole.

Myrcella was in heaven tongue fucking her wife. She felt Loreza reach back with one hand and frigged her clit with hard jerks of her hand over her bulging clitoral hood and slimy wet clit nubbin. Loreza chuffed and Myrcella groaned into her wife’s slimy wet cunt hole. She sucked in a mouthful of sweet slimy cunt meat and munched on with muffled slurps swallowed by Loreza drooling pussy that had cunt juice dripping off Myrcella’s jaw and chin.

Myrcella sucked with cheek hollowing surplus her tongue drilling the cunt meat in her mouth. She felt her wife’s thighs trembling wildly. Her wife chuffed and now screamed in fucking bliss as her body convulsed and sucked wildly jamming her twat back into Myrcella’s mouth.

"Anngghh! Anngghhh! OHNNGG! OOOWWAAGGGGGGGG! AHHNNGGJNNNNIIIIEEEE!" Loreza screamed out, her body flipping, jackknifing and bucking back into Myrcella’s hot sucking mouth. "Oh shit! AUUNGGGHHHHH!" Loreza roared again as a second shattering orgasm ripped out her womb and tore her gushing quim inside out.

Myrcella gulped down the hot gushes of sweet creamy steamy cum. She had both hands gripping her wife’s hips hard to keep her face in the exploding twat she was gobbling. Cum dripped liberally off her chin and ran down her throat now.

Loreza’s strength was sapped and she slowly twisted down onto her back her body now soaked in sweat and her legs spread akimbo obscenely. Myrcella had followed her wife down and gently ran her tongue up and down the swollen muff that trembled and clench underneath her tongue.

She rose up on her elbows and gently rubbed her wife’s vulva letting her clit stop jangling for more wolf sucking. Her battle lust had only begun to be assuaged.

Arianne was up on her elbow her body up on her side and pressed into her wife. She had her head bent down and had sucked half of her sand snake’s boob into her mouth. She was sucking with cheek hollowing surplus the nipple swiped with hard swipes of her tongue that showed through her sucked in cheeks.

Her right hand was pounding her wife’s sloppy wet cunt. Her hand on edge all four fingers buried deep into Dorea’s pussy on the in stroke. Arianne pulled her hand back enough to get her fingertips almost out her wife’s clamshell and then slammed in hard fully burying them. Her hand was like a piston hammering Dorea’s twat. Arianne’s hand pounded Dorea’s vulva and clit the shocks rocking Dorea to her core.

"Unngghhh! Hnnnggg hhnnnn hhnnnggg Uungggggg!" Dorea groaned hard feeling her quim expertly and deeply wedge fucked. “Anngghh! Oh shit . . . darling . . . your pounding my cunt so fucking hard and good!” Her pussy was slurping obscenely now.

Dorea rotated her groin up in time with Arianne’s strokes jamming her pussy forward to take all her lover’s hand into her drooling cunt that leaked hot cum down her ass crack and soaked her anus for later invasion.

Dorea’s hands now clenched the furs and lifted her shoulders off the furs. Her face was slashed with constant anguished ecstasy. Dorea’s mouth worked with small grunts.

Arianne tried to suck Dorea’s tit down her throat and hammered her wife’s cunt with all her strength and pure love.

Dorea’s body went rigid her mouth falling open and her throat locked up. Her head twisted her eyes shocked wide open.

Then the initial shock fled and her exploding womb ripped her belly open scalding her with pure ecstasy. "AWOONNNNGGGHHHH! MNNNGGGHHIIIIIEEEE! AWWONNGGGG!" Dorea roared, her whole pelvis shaking and quaking in wild jolts as a scalding ecstasy gripped her flesh. "Oooohhhhh . . . uuuoonnnnnhh!" she moaned more softly in the troughs of her orgasm, but then geared up for another round of earsplitting screams. "HHHAAANNGGHHH! OH SHIT! OH FUUUUUUCK! MMNNNGGGGHIIIIIIIE!"

Cum splattered out in shiny droplets of sweet cum showers. Dorea’s entire body was spasming and her cunt was so watery as Arianne hammered her wedge to prolong her slut’s ecstasy.

Yes Myrcella thought smugly. She and Arianne had just started to reward their sand snakes for their heroism on the battlefield as only a wife can.
Chapter Notes

AN #1: There is graphic Lesbian Sex in this chapter. It is not Dany and Arya. That is later.

AN #2: I saw like the Cliff Notes of Season 7 of Game of Thrones on HBO. Season 6 Cliff Notes were spot on so I am assuming this season is as accurate. The only reason i saw this is that it has a twist with Dany's dragons.

I scripted Reclamation out in July of 2015. i have pretty much finished writing it. Now it is tones of editing and writing other stuff. I saw this because i am doing something similar to HBO. Different but the basic idea is the same. From i read, again i think HBO is going overboard but they have been doing that since season 2 and i stopped watching it then. Been tracking though.

I do like the actors portraying many of the characters and use their appearances in my stories. Plus, i do poach cool things. i hated Melisandre being a hag without her gem at first but i love it now.

So i did this Author's Note to say i had the idea first about the dragons!!!! HBO cool but overdone. Of course i like mine better.

I have been dropping hints about this in the Ice King viewpoints for a while.

Chapter 32

Aftermath and New Beginnings

Daenerys / Tyrion / Arya / Solaja / Ice King / Olenna

Daenerys

The Queen brought up her fingers and gently touched her right cheek, then around her eye. It was definitely swelling shut. She hissed with pain from the contusions she felt on her skin. She moved her fingertips to her lips. Her bottom lip was swollen, and her upper lip was split on the right side.

She was sure both eyes had shiners already, and would only get darker. She would be the proverbial raccoon for the next day or two. She thanked the gods again for her fast healing constitution, as she worked her jaw back and forth, and felt the hinges ache. Her left ear was ringing.

Her poor pussy was aching from the vicious knee it took. She would have to see later if a pussy could actually bruise.

She moved her hands to her ribs and hissed. Both sides were very sore to the touch. She had never had her ribs busted up so badly. Her right thigh was also stiffening up from several hard kicks from the Stark girl. Her left ankle was tender, and she was sure it was swelling up too.

She looked toward the door that Arya was led out of, licking her lips. The girl had totally beaten the shit out of her, and she couldn’t wait to see her again. Gods the fire in that girl! Those eyes!

She looked around, and felt herself grimace. Tyrion now had a large pouch with a drawstring, moving around and humming, his eyes alight with greed. The dwarf had many slips of paper with IOUs stuffed in his pockets, with gold dragons visible like little flakes of spice. The abundance of paper made his pockets look like they were blooming white carnations.

He had finished making his rounds, and hugged the stuffed pouch to this chest. He waddled, chuffing, with his heavy haul. Several coins fell from his pockets. With the background murmurs of so many people talking about the fight, he did not hear them hit and roll away and walked on.

“Hey Tyrion!” the Queen called out in a peeved voice.

The dwarf turned around, and smiled beatifically at this Queen. “Yes my Queen . . . my my—your eye is swelling shut Daenerys, and your lip looks like a harpy got aho—”

“You dropped some of your fucking gold, dwarf!” the Queen grated out through clenched teeth that made her jaws ache.

His eyes widened in alarm, and he quickly tracked down the coins scooping them up. Then he quickly waddled out, mumbling about needing protection from Cersei.

Missandei came up to her. She looked at her face with concern. “I am not sure that Eddard Stark will be pleased with you beating the shit out of his daughter. Is that how you treat royal hostages, my Queen?” the interpreter asked Dany solemnly.

“Her? What about me?! She beat the shit out of me!”

Missandei just smiled. Her Queen was nothing if not feisty. Finally, a woman who could match her fire and passion had come into her life. The Stark girl was definitely full of fire that was for sure. Missandei admired the audacity of the girl to both fire arrows at the Queen and sucker punch her. That it happened at their first meeting only made the events more grand!

Missandei handed Daenerys the scroll that the Stark girl had given her, which the Queen had thrown behind the Iron Throne in anger. Missandei looked intently at her, anxious to know what was written.

Daenerys looked down at the scroll, and the royal seal of House Stark. Missandei watched the Queen take a deep breath. They both knew this scroll would set the course of events. Would there be war?

Dany used her eyes to have her most trusted friend follow her. So often the Queen had only to look at her most trusted advisor for the young scribe to know her thoughts. The Queen needed to see what Eddard Stark had to say in private, away from prying eyes. She felt her heart, formerly beating hard with adrenaline from the fight, was now beating fast with trepidation.

Was she about to go to war? A war she had maneuvered hard to avoid. Would the one man she had thought would never rise up in sedition, in fact prove to be a traitor?

She and Missandei walked down the hall. She looked up at the tapestry they were passing, and saw Aegon taking the King of the North’s allegiance. She felt a shiver. Was that tapestry a portent of ill? Was Eddard about to attempt to take his ancestral throne back?

Missandei kept her head bowed. They both knew that this was a moment of grave gravitas. Would there be war with the North, or peace? It all depended on this one scroll that Daenerys carried, almost reverently. Would Eddard Stark betray her, and the realm?

Aggo walked behind them, along with Grey Worm and five Unsullied. They too sensed this was a moment of destiny.

They stopped in front of a door that led into a small meeting room, containing a table with room for only six people. It would do.

“Aggo—Grey Worm, no one enters this room!” Daenerys told them in a tone that brokered no argument.

She and Missandei entered into the room. Daenerys made sure the thick door was firmly shut behind them, then they both sat down at the thick cherry oak table. They rested in high-backed chairs and stared at the scroll.

The Queen locked eyes with Missandei, and nodded her head at the scroll. Together they would read their destiny.

Missandei broke the seal, and spread out the parchment. She took a deep breath as Daenerys stared off into space, waiting.

“Eddard Stark has the most beautiful hand writing, my Queen.” Missandei spoke softly.

“The message, Missandei.” Daenerys softly intoned.

Daenerys Targaryen, Rightful Queen of all of Westeros,

I, Eddard Stark, am and will always be your loyal subject. I know you must think me a traitor, and I understand why, but consider I have given you my precious daughter to be your royal hostage to balance out for Margaery Tyrell, who came to me willingly.

I go to the Wall to fight the Ice King. You wounded him near to death, but he still lives. There is nothing more dangerous than a wounded wild animal. My son Jon assures me his army is prepared to march South. I go to stop him at the Wall.

Without your full support, I will die in defense of the realm. Come to me Daenerys, and together we will defeat the Ice King.

You will ask why I have not told you this before now. I only ask what Tyrion and Barristan say of the Wall and beyond. No one will believe the threat is real. Now you have a tangible reason to come North. I have given you the enemy you need to unite Westeros.

I have devised ways to combat your dragons, and told you my secretes. The armies near our cities and navies in our ports are mirages. I have left myself defenseless to the rear, as have the Vale and the Riverlands.

I remember your initial letter. I thought to myself, finally, a person worthy of the realm. I pray I have read you rightly.

Join with me Daenerys Targaryen, first of your name. Let us meet the ancient foe and put him back into his icy grave.

Your loyal subject,

Eddard Stark
After Missandei read the words softly, a silence hung in the room.

“I knew he was loyal,” the small scribe said.

Daenerys sat forward with her elbows on the table, looking at her most trusted advisor. “So you believe him?”

“Yes.”

“So do I. And I have always trusted your judgment and insight. Do not say a word to anyone. Call a meeting of the Klatch for tonight. We need to discuss this with our fellow ‘confidantes’.”

They left the room, and Missandei went off to her duties. Daenerys walked slowly, her head downcast as she contemplated her response to her realm’s need. She did indeed trust Eddard Stark completely, and had to admire how he had crafted events to give her what she needed to bring a united Westeros behind her to defend against a foe none believed in. She had much to consider. The Game of Thrones had just gotten more intense and complicated.

But she was equal to the challenge.

She trusted Eddard, but was also angry at him. She could try the man for treason, just for trying her patience. If he had confided in her from the start, she would have worked out a plan to make all that had to happen—happen. Of course, she reasoned with herself, he didn’t know that. He had taken the path he thought would achieve his ends, no matter what. And because of that, she would not have to spend political capital convincing a recalcitrant South to move north. They were, instead, anxious to move north and take down the arrogant wolf.

She gingerly walked to up to her quarters in the royal wing of King’s Landing. She had asked for attendants to run hot water into a tub to be brought into her room. She would use the hot water to take a quick sponge bath. She did not want to feel like the pampered royals she had seen in both Essos and Westeros. She would take care of her own bathing needs. No matter if she was thoroughly beat up she snickered to herself. She did not have time to take a full bath; she had other duties to perform.

When she entered royal suite, she spied the hot water and slowly pulled her clothes off, putting them on the back of a chair for the maid to pick up for washing. She carefully walked to the full length mirror she had in the corner, and took stock of herself.

Her right eye was nearly swelled shut, and she did indeed have two shiners, nice and black. Her nose was red and swollen - fortunately, it had not been broken. Her face was covered in contusions, and the right side of her neck was bruising too. She could not even remember which blow caused that. Her ribs were motley on the right side, with rising bruises. Yes indeed, Arya Stark was left handed, and she’d done enough damage on Dany’s right to show it.

She catalogued the bruises and aches over the rest of her body. She soaked the wash cloth in the still steaming water, removing the dried blood from her face, and gingerly washed off the sweat and grime from the fight.

She had a sudden thought. She spread her legs, and examined her pussy. It was a fiery pink, swollen, and very sensitive when she touched it. No masturbation for a night or two, for sure. That she did not like at all! To look at her puss, you would think she was sexually excited. At that realization, she felt her pussy burn and nipples ache with thoughts of how she wanted to retaliate against the Stark girl. She wanted the wolf to make her pussy pink and swollen for an entirely different reason.
She sighed, and stopped that train of thought. Arya was a royal hostage that Eddard Stark had placed in her care. She would never betray that trust. She would not defile the girl. She doubted the girl had any attraction to her anyways. After all, she had tried to rearrange her face! For some strange reason, this thought made her smile. The Stark definitely had fire in her belly. Daenerys instinctively squeezed her thighs together, then hissed, quickly opening her legs to relieve pressure from her pussy. Damn it! No masturbation indeed!

Daenerys slowly changed into loose fitting trousers, and a loose blouse top. She only lightly tied them up, as her body was indeed tender. She had trouble getting a sandal on her left foot, her ankle swelling. Then the Queen left her quarters.

Rakharo fell in beside her. She felt him looking at her injuries. “It is not as bad as it looks. You know I heal fast.”

Rahkaro walked in silence for a moment. Then: “The wolf girl is indeed fierce . . . has the dragon finally met her match?” he asked as they spoke in Dothraki.

The Queen looked up at him. “I won the match, I remind you.”

He merely smiled. He seemed to know where she wanted to go with her desires.

Arya was in the Maester’s quarters. She slept in a bed covered in furs. Her face was battered and swollen. Both of her eyes were nearly swelled shut, and she had a big knot on her forehead. Her lips were split.

Daenerys ached to know she had done this level of damage to the teenage girl. She was over four years younger than herself, she remembered. She stood, looking down at the girl as Rahkaro and Maester Pate remained silent. She sat on the edge of the bed and gripped her right hand, stroking it and looking at Arya tenderly.

A few strands of Arya’s hair had fallen over her face and cheek. Dany gently pulled the strands behind the girl’s ear, then gently touched her face and lips. She took a deep breath, seeing the girl grimace slightly.

“How badly did I hurt her?” Daenerys asked.

“I have given her a diluted mixture of the Milk of the Poppy. She is young and strong. She will recover fairly quickly.” Maester Lape told the queen.

“How badly did I hurt her?”

“She attacked you, my Queen” Lape said defensively. “Her bruises and contusions will be completely healed in several weeks. Two ribs are fractured, and four more severely bruised. Those should be healed in about six weeks. She will have trouble breathing for the next ten days, I should say, and then the pain will gradually lessen.

It is her shoulder I am most concerned about. She has a grade three sprain. There has definitely been ligament damage, and separation of the collar bone. Thank the gods you did not totally shatter the joint. She should be pain free in probably a month. With four months of rehabilitation, she should have most of the range of motion back. She will be able to use her arm for normal functions.”

Maester Lape paused, then said in a soft voice: “I hear she is quite the shot with the bow . . . she may be able to continue that, but her days with the sword are over . . . I’m sorry to say.”

Daenerys felt devastated. She closed her eyes at the pain she felt. She felt deep down she had robbed something precious from the girl. There would be no practice on the grounds. She stopped stroking Arya’s cheek.

“I see.” She rose up. “Please, make sure she is comfortable. I want no effort spared in her rehabilitation, Maester.

The Maester must have heard the guilt in the Queen’s voice. He sighed and nodded. She left his quarters, pale and unsteady. Her pain was not all physical.

Daenerys walked down the hall, silent and ghostly. She had felt a strong attraction to the girl, but now all she felt was guilt and shame. She had to win at any cost, like always, and had ruined Arya Stark’s life. She felt ill to her stomach.

She only prayed that Eddard Stark could forgive her.

She turned down the hall towards her quarters, feeling old and worn. Rakharo remained silent beside her. Grey Worm approached her. He was still taciturn and stoic, but Daenerys could sense he had something on his mind.

Daenerys sighed. After all these years he still waited to be called to speak. He too was more than a guard to her now; he was a friend.

“What is it, Grey Worm?”

“You are needed at the gates, my Queen.”

“Oh—why is that, faithful captain of my personal guard?”

“The emissary’s companions need you to come out and speak to them.”

“What?!! . . . Why the hell haven’t they been brought into the Red Keep? They are honored guests!” Dany exclaimed, growing anxious. She had enough bad news for one day.

“They refuse to enter.”

“Why?” The Queen went to pinch her nose and hissed in pain when her fingers squeezed her swollen septum.

“It is difficult to explain my Queen . . . please come and see. The girl’s pet is—well, you need to see.”

Daenerys sighed again. What the fuck was the issue about the girl’s cat or dog?

“Okay . . . take me to them, and this pet.”

She briefly wondered if Grey Worm was losing his nerve in his not so old age.

She walked down the passages, and finally came out into the courtyard. A fine mist hit her face, and collected it in her hair with small sparkles. If only it could wash away her physical and mental pain. She headed to the main gate and walked out the arch.

She saw a large oxen cart being repaired, with a brace holding it up and a wheel laying on its side, being prepared to be hammered onto the axle. The locking pegs were also on the ground beside it.

She spotted the four men of House Stark standing off to the side, talking and laughing. Their cloaks clearly displayed the heraldry of their lord’s house. She felt like howling, just like their proverbial Direwolf, for the damage she had done to their princess. They finally saw her, and immediately went to one knee and bowed their heads.

The Queen could not help but feel touched by their obeisance. House Stark simply exuded honor. She only wished she was still worthy of it.

“What is the issue with Arya Stark’s pet? Why are you all out here in the mist, when you could be inside, warm and dry?” Daenerys asked, exasperated.

“It would seem that your guards don’t want Nymeria in the keep. Nymeria is always at her master’s side.”

“Is this Nymeria a dog, or cat?”

“She is a Direwolf, my Queen?”

“Oh, you mean a large dog.” She remembered seeing large dogs through her dragons’ eyes before.

She heard a deep, rumbling growl. Amusement crossed the Stark men’s faces. She started to turn around, and Rakharo drew his Arakh, preparing for combat.

What the…?

On the empty bed of the ox cart, something from out of myth stood before Daenerys. Staring at her with intelligent golden eyes, was a monstrous wolf. She could sense the wolf’s confidence and regal bearing as it stood tall and proud, looking down at her, as large as a pony. She knew instinctively the wolf was appraising her.

Nymeria had a wolf’s form for the most part, but her legs in proportion to her body were longer than a wolf’s would be. Her head was larger as well, and her muzzle was also longer and more pronounced. A bottom fang on each side partially protruded from her lips nearly three inches. Her shoulder girdle was slightly more pronounced, making her shoulders bulge somewhat. Her fur was like a spiky mane over her shoulders. Her toe claws were slightly curved. Her large ears were cocked and focused on the queen, just like her intense eyes.

The beast watched her for a minute, as Direwolf and Queen measured each other. Dany was unarmed, but felt no fear. She had an affinity for animals, and she felt no anger or rancor in Arya’s beast of a wolf.

She wondered how the wolf would react when she saw what she had done to her master.

The Direwolf moved to the end of the cart and lazily hopped down to the ground.

Daenerys took an involuntary step back. The beast was enormous! With an air of supreme confidence, Nymeria cantered up to the Queen. The direwolf was actually taller than her! Her head came up to the underside of the Direwolf’s head, her face at the bottom of the wolf’s jaw.

Rakharo started to move forward.

“Put your arakh away, Rakharo. Nymeria means me no harm. Right, Nymeria?” She had not had an accurate gauge to see the true dimensions of the animal before. She knew they were large from her dragons’ visit to Winterfell, but she had failed to grasp their true size. She was surprised, but still felt no fear. When Rakharo hesitated, she told him again to put his weapon away. He finally complied.
The wolf lowered its head, and looked her in the eye. Then the Direwolf head bunted into her face softly, and licked her face with its long tongue. Daenerys’ eye squinted shut on that side. Thankfully, the beast’s tongue was not slimy. The pressure of the licking tongue not enough to make her bruised face bark in pain. She grimaced at her choice of words. Nymeria licked her face several more times, and then turned to stand by her side, its shoulder pressed against her. The beast had accepted her, without condition.

Daenerys felt a little better. Nymeria had accepted her; maybe things could be repaired with the master of the mighty Direwolf as well. The Queen had a suspicion that Arya had bonded with her wolf much like she had with her own dragons.

“Grey Worm. Please take Nymeria to the Maester’s quarters. I am sure that Arya will feel much better with her companion. We will have no problem hosting Nymeria in the Red Keep.”

She saw the men from House Stark smirking as they glanced at her. She wondered at their strange behavior.

As she walked off, she heard one ask the other: “How long do you give her?”

What a strange question.

Nymeria walked beside the Queen. This was the woman her master had chosen as her mate. She had seen and felt their mating ritual in the room with the strange seat made of the metal weapons that humans used in their hands. The wolf liked the ideas of the hated weapons melted like that.

She herself made her potential rutting mates know their place when they went to mount her. They were only wolves and could not conceive cubs but the she enjoyed the coupling.

She would snap and growl at the males as they came forward to mate with her. Though male they came with lowered heads and tails. Those she accepted when she was in heat Nymeria had them to bow to her and feel her fangs on their neck and her claws on their belly so show her dominance.

The white haired woman had shown she was the alpha. Nymeria knew that in time Arya would show her dominance when she was in the rut. Nymeria smelled the white haired woman and saw her prime physical attributes. She smelled the woman’s arousal for her master. The smell of her master and this white haired woman were a perfect match. They would raise strong pups.

Her master had chosen well.

Tyrion

Tyrion was one happy little lion. He sat at his personal table that the Queen had constructed for him, in his personal alcove. The table was rectangular and made of dark teak. The sides had male lions carved into them. The corners had been carved into stylized hands, based on the sigil he wore on his vests when in the Small Council or with the Queen in the Throne Room. He was sitting comfortably in the chair proportioned for him. He had all five oil lamps glowing bright to give him plenty of illumination.

He had sent Bronn and Shae out earlier to collect IOUs. They had brought him more gold dragons, silver stags and copper penny coins. He was having extreme fun stacking up his coins, creating towers on his desk. He had multiple stacks, some close to seventy-five coins thick. He loved having to balance each new coin as the stacks swayed and leaned.
He had smacked Shae’s hand when she tried to swipe coins when she thought he was not looking. Her yelp of pain had been most pleasing to his ears.

The mercenaries groused at what a ‘miserly heart’ he had, and Bronn mentioned something to the effect of hoping his stunted legs rotted off. He had shooed them away as they eyed his stacks of ill-gotten booty.

He did not tell them they would be getting a nice surprise in the morning, when he had small clinking pouches delivered to them.

He actually liked them, though he would never admit it.

He looked at his Yu Jiangu's candle clock. He had found it while in Oldtown, doing research on the Ice King and environs north of the Wall. He had been walking the streets of that old city when he saw a bulk apothecary. It was divided in half, with the right side specializing in medicinal herbs and poultices. Various items were located in bins, tubes and sealed jars. He looked inside the bins, and lifted up jars. Some were darkened to preserve items sensitive to light. There were strings of herbs hanging from the rafters, and on shelves lining the side wall, he saw medical implements.

He looked at the scalpels, and saw they had two types. The first type was a thicker, sharper blade to cut and splay apart. The other type had hook ends to tease apart, and lift up vessels and nerves. He also saw bone drills and cringed. The idea of that drilling into his head made him gnash his teeth, though he admired the craftsmanship of the tooled bronze. He looked at the leather tong that was attached to the drills, to spin the drilling auger. On the very top shelf, he saw the forceps used to grasp bone fragments from wounds.

He perused catheters and bladder sounds. He looked over cupping vessels for bloodletting, and tubes to prevent contractions and adhesions. The rectal speculum and vaginal speculum had his sphincter clenching, and thighs clamping together.

The other half of the establishment had supplies of essential oils, soap making materials, candle making supplies and specialty ingredients. Tyrion looked into the various tubs, urns and vessels holding the ingredients to make soap, candles and lotions for the body. The colors and smells were pleasant, with a few scents downright intoxicating.

He had looked over at a table, and found his interest piqued. He moved over to the table to look closer at a Yu Jiangu candle clock. It consisted of six candles made from seventy-two pennyweights of wax, each being twelve inches high, of uniform thickness, and divided into twelve sections each of one inch thickness. Each candle burned away completely in four hours, making each marking twenty minutes. The candles were placed for protection inside cases made of a wooden frame, with transparent horn panels in the sides.

Tyrion had to have it. He had placed it on Drogon’s saddle for the trip back to King’s Landing. He now gazed at it. Another section had melted away. It was time to get dressed and go to Dany’s Klatch of Confidantes meeting. He ruminated over the day’s events. He was sure it would be a fascinating meeting.

He walked down the hall to Dany’s residence. He snorted, replaying the fight again in his mind. He still remembered a much younger Arya in his visits to Winterfell. He had been impressed with her verve for training even then, despite the disapproval of her mother and older brother. He had never really understood why Eddard Stark allowed the girl to continue with what seemed was pure fantasy, though. But now the girl was at King’s Landing and had turned into a hellcat. She had actually given Daenerys a real fight. Arya Stark had indeed become a warrior.
He was saddened by the damage done the girl in the fight. Dany held back, but even so she still ruined the girl’s shoulder. She would never use the sword again.

Aggo opened the door for him with a respectful nod, and he entered the room. The others were already there waiting.

Daenerys turned to look at him, and Tyrion felt a rush run through him. Even with her face covered in bruises, her lip split, and an eye almost swelled shut she was still beautiful. Her traditional Dothraki garb of open vest exposed her flat stomach, and the sides of her swaying, delectable breasts.

He made sure to not let her see his bubbling lust show. She had given him permission to look, but not touch. He still had vivid memories of ‘the beach incident’, as he thought of it. That always put a stop to his leering.

She came over to him and squeezed his shoulder. “It is good to have you here, my dear friend.”

Tyrion felt the rush he always did when the woman acknowledged him directly.

The first thing she asked him about was his report on Arya Stark. She had requested that he stop in that afternoon to check on her. She wanted constant reports on her progress.

He had stopped when he entered the Maester’s room. At the foot of the large bed that held a sleeping Arya, lay a Direwolf of immense dimensions. Nymeria, like Arya, had grown up. The Direwolf had woken upon his arrival. The wolf had always disliked him, and she slowly rose up on her feet.

The Maester had been reading at his desk, and turned his chair around. The man just watched quietly and did not move as the massive wolf stalked slowly over to Tyrion.

Tyrion had been shaking with terror. The Direwolf towered over him!

“Nice wolf. Nice wolf. Dwarves are very tough, and full of gristle. I don’t taste good at all, Nymeria.”

The wolf rumbled deep in its chest. She stopped in front of him, and lowered her head so they were staring eye to eye. A low growl filled the room.

Tyrion was sure he was going to piss himself. Then the wolf jerked her head forward, and bunted him with her nose on his forehead, sending him falling back on his ass with a loud whump. Nymeria turned around, and her tail slapped him in the face several times with stinging whiskers.

Tyrion watched the Direwolf return to Arya’s bed. The wolf turned around several times, stomping her feet softly, and then settled down looking at Tyrion with her golden eyes before closing them.

That had been interesting.

The Maester reported that Arya was resting well. He had bound her arm to her chest with a body wrap, after placing her collarbone back in place. Now it was only a matter of time for it to heal. With months of focused rehabilitation, she would have her basic mobility back, but Grand Maester Harsch Lape doubted Arya would again have the strength she had shown in the throne room.

He also pointed out that her facial contusions, bruises and swellings were much less than he would have thought, though. He was sure it had been worse that morning, but he must have been mistaken.
To Tyrion, her face looked like a horse had stomped on it. He shivered thinking of what Daenerys would have done to his person if she ever truly decided to punish him for his errant cock.

He reported to Dany that Arya’s warrior days were most likely behind her, he noted the great pain that slashed across her Queen’s face.

He sighed. It was obvious the two women were smitten with each other. It had been love at first fist. This fiery wolf girl was perfect for the Queen. He could only hope that Dany’s guilt over her pummeling the girl would not interfere with their attraction for each other. The girl had asked for it, after all. First firing arrows at the Queen and then sucker punching her. Gods the girl had fire!

Tyrrion saw the rolled up scroll on the table. Dany passed around a pitcher of tea that they poured for themselves. In the center of the table was a large, circular, silver platter with dragons adorning the edges. From the center radiated circles of ham, roast, and goat pulled into small rolls. The outermost circle was composed of various cubed cheese chunks. In the middle of it all was a gold cup filled with a dipping sauce, creamy white with a mayonnaise base and mustard.

Tyrrion put some ham and cheese on a small dish with a painted, stylized pagoda in blue with banzai trees on hills surrounding it. He bit the succulent meat, and chased it with cheese chunks.

Daenerys unrolled the scroll, and read the words of Eddard Stark to the gathering.

She told them in a tone that brokered no uncertainty that these words were to be kept in this room. She would be the only one to share any further.

She asked them what they thought of it all.

Tyrrion shared a look at Barristan. Barristan cleared his throat.

“I think these words are true. He would never outright lie. He has proven adept at this Game of Thrones - to my great surprise - but he has never lied in doing it. He believes in his cause. You fought something of great power, Daenerys. If this “Ice King” survived, then he must be fought and defeated.”

Tyrrion spoke up to say the obvious. “Of course the South will refuse to believe this. I have heard the reports from the North, and your thoughts Dany, and I still have a hard time believing it all. After eight thousand years this Ice King appears. It seems fantastical. I am on the inside, and I am still hesitant to believe in legends come to life.”

“Unimaginative Mace won’t believe, stick-up-his-ass Stannis can’t see anything except what is right in front of his eyes, Tywin can only calculate what he sees as an advantage, and Doran will analyze the facts until the land is covered in ice and will still ask for more time.

“Eddard has given you the perfect reason to march North.” Tyrion smiled. “All the Great Houses cherish the chance to bring a peer low. I think Eddard needs to be brought low, now.” He said with a smile.

They discussed the issue further. Missandei and Syrio had no issue accepting Eddard’s beliefs. Both had said they had seen magic in Essos.

Even Strong Belwas had something to say. He had walked over to the table unseen.

All turned to look at him.

“This Eddard Stark is a great man. You all say so. Great man knows his Wall. I say we go to this Wall, and fight, and kill this Ice King. We will cut his balls off, and stuff up his ass. But first I must eat more locusts!” The eunuch announced. He walked back to his chair in front of the fire, and stuffed some locusts into his mouth, munching happily while two accidentally fell to the floor for a happy, purring Shadowclaw. The eunuch leaned over from time to time, to dip locusts in his favorite goat cheese dip that the Queen had prepared for him for each Klatch meeting.

“What will we tell them Daenerys?” Barristan asked softly, looking at his Queen.

Tyrion and everyone else in this room knew they were marching to the wall. The question was only the how of it.

“We will tell the small council tomorrow morning that Eddard has declared that the North, The Riverlands, and The Vale have formed a confederacy. Not a monarchy. He is not declaring himself as King. The North and his compatriots do not feel that their needs are being met, and need more autonomy. They fear my liberal views and want to hold on to their more conservative heritage.

“They want to set up a court that will apply their standards of law. They want to have the right to mint money, and collect taxes. They will still tithe their assigned portion in taxes, but want to have the first say in resources that money will be used for.”

“They wish to negotiate for more power. They want to be held first among the Houses of Westeros, and have a seat of council on the throne at my audiences to make sure their views and needs are met. They feel their distance is preventing their concerns from being properly heard and judged.”

“That will make sure the Houses of Dorne, Tyrell, Baratheon, and Lannister hunger to put the great Eddard Stark in his place. How dare he? And yet, his lack of declaring an outright break or crowning himself King will allow me to hold back, in my benevolence. I will reserve the right for further vengeance if he is indeed seeking more. I will put him in his place, but his actions listed thusly do not require my full weight of authority be used in open warfare. We will move North, and see exactly we will find.”

“The leaders of the Houses may want to fight, but I can guarantee you the foot soldiers know how it can be avoided, and I know that the leaders who have seen and fought in wars already will dearly wish to avoid that now if they can.”

Tyrion was impressed. Damn, Dany was good.

“I do not trust Tywin, though.” She continued, wisely. “I do not want the full might of House Lannister on our march North. I want to have Tywin in Casterly Rock. He will keep his fleet, and the fleet of Highgarden on high alert. I have already seen the resistive nature of the Iron Islands. We need a strong navy and land force to keep them in check during this time.”

“This is logical and sound, and will ensure Tywin will not cause any problems. I want half of their knights to move to the border of Highgarden during the duration of this campaign. This will divide his forces. We will leave enough behind for a shock troop, in case of any Kraken incursion that may arise. He will stay behind to ensure the peace in the West. I want Highgarden to send half of their navy out as we leave for our march North, and intimidate the Iron Islands with a strong showing of force. They will be aggressive in their show of force to the Iron Islands. That should put pause in their heart. I will send a raven to Tywin indicating that he needs to give Highgarden his full support in case of a Kraken landing in their territory.”

She paused, looking around at them. She took a drink from her glass.

The Queen continued. “I will now call in my full Navy. The Summer Islanders will tighten their blockade off the shores of the far North. I want them to come to the beachheads we have established in the North. Now it is time to move our troops there. We have been stocking up supplies for our armies in case it came down to this. I want to surge supplies into the beachheads. I want to increase the production of dragon glass tipped weapons. If Eddard is right, we will be needing them.”

“I want the Summer Islanders to load up on dragon glass arrow points, and javelins. Hopefully, we can lure the enemy to come to them, and attempt to storm their ships just offshore again. They probably won’t… but who knows. We’ll see if our enemy has a cunning intellect.”

“I want no incursions by the Summer Islanders. They are too brave, sometimes. I want Master of Ships Hugh Elicero to emphasize this to Soloja. Do not be foolish. If we can tempt the walking dead to expose themselves by trying to board the ships, then let them – otherwise, I want no inland incursions above the Wall till we have our forces sufficiently built up.

“Syrio. Have the houses surge on their training of their tithed troops. Can we lead them into battle and have them fight as a cohesive force? Will they survive on the battlefield, and kill the other sons of bitches?”

“Yes, my Queen. Their leaders are effective, and know how to instill loyalty and willingness to fight for the realm. Their training is essentially complete, and we only have to hone to a razor’s edge. We will be ready to embark to the ports when the ships arrive. Our army is ready to move north my Queen.”

“Good. I want you and Barristan to send out word to the Houses to set up schedules for forming up their foot soldiers. I want an orderly march to the ports we have designated. I will convoy most of them up north to our beachheads. It will take three cycles of transport to get all the troops and their gear to the North.”

“The rest will march with the cavalry. I want the march fast, but do not overstress them. I want them at one hundred percent when we go to battle.”

“I will send Viserion to Pentos with Barristan. I don’t want to wait for raven to fly there. I will have my navies mobilized. I want the troop ships to sail immediately. I want them in King’s Landing, Oldtown, Highgarden, Sunspear, Dragonstone and the lesser ports designated. I want those ships fully stocked, and prepped to sail when the troops arrive.”

“We have discussed these plans over the last months. Now we put them into action. We will crush our enemies.”

The Queen took another long sip of tea. Tyrion knew she was reinforcing their plans to make sure absolutely all were on the same page. Good planning solved many problems before they started.

“The Calvary I will have form up here.” She pointed to a spot on the map. “I have had the sites surveyed and set up for our march along the King’s Road. I want the tents raised and stocked. I want support personnel to start moving to these sites. I want farriers, quartermasters and their support personnel in place. I want medics and Maesters specializing in medicine put in the camps in every third day’s march. I want fast horses at their disposal, to ride where needed.”

“I want the more perishable supplies now sent to the camps and prepared. I want food and drink ready to feed our troops. I have stocked the warehouses with the supplies we need for our march. I want the wagon trains formed and get those supplies to these camps up to the Riverlands.”

“I want these camps prepared. I believe Eddard. I want scouting parties sent out tomorrow to go to the border of the Riverlands. I want them to scout out the King’s Road, and find good locations for camps, so after each day of hard none forced march they will have rest.”

“We will find no resistance. I want his kept quiet. I don’t want any backbiting, or questioning my decisions. I will have my Dothraki as the lead scouts, and they are good at setting up camps. They do this all the time on the Grass Sea. Syrio, send your most trusted support personnel to make this happen.”

“Yes, my Queen!” the Braavosi spoke. Tyrion could see the zeal in the man’s eyes. He was sure it was in all of their eyes just then.

“We will ride North as fast as possible, without abusing ourselves. I will not move at breakneck pace only to arrive exhausted. Too many battles have been lost before they are even fought that way. An army that is rested, well fed, and given shelter from the elements has already won half the battle. We will be an effective fighting force when we arrive at the Wall.

“That is our true destination. To everyone else, we go to Winterfell to put this dog Eddard Stark in his rightful place. I want you all to keep your ears tuned to any rabble rousing, or excessive calls for force. I am sure Varys already knows all we speak of, and he will also be keeping his sparrows and spiders listening intently. In the south they have free range, and hear many songs.

“We will march and join forces with Eddard Stark and defeat the enemies of my Realm! Do you stand with me?” the Queen shouted, standing up and slamming her palms on the table top. She looked at them in turn with her violet eyes. Tyrion felt his soul on fire when the fire of her gaze met his.

He jumped up along with his fellow Confidantes as they shouted their total allegiance.

Arya

It had been one week since the fight. Arya was feeling great, all things considered. She had healed fast like she always did, thank the gods.

She had missed the next day’s practice, though. Her battered body, with the help of the Milk of the Poppy, had slept through the night and deep into the night of the second day.

She was told by the Maester that the Queen had visited while she slept, and held her hand. She had felt a flush run through her at that, but knew it was nothing more than genuine concern for a royal hostage and nothing more.

The third day, she had awoken early in the morning. Her ribs no longer hurt, and her shoulder no longer cried out in pain, only thudding as a dull ache.

Grand Maester Lape had clucked over her, and been amazed at how much she had healed. Her face was no longer swollen like she had fallen into a beehive. When he probed her ribs, she only felt mild discomfort on the third rib. He was even more amazed when he probed her collar bone, and told her in an amazed voice that it seemed to have already knit back into proper position. He removed the bandages strapping her arm to her chest, and she was able to move her arm twenty degrees upward without pain.

He told her that she healed with the same speed as their Queen. That made a rush flow through her body. To be compared to her Queen made her feel tingly.

She wanted to walk, but the Maester insisted that she be wheeled down to the practice grounds. She should not push her body beyond its limits. She didn’t want to argue. She did not word getting back to Daenerys she was arguing with her Grand Maester. Plus, she did feel tired. She still needed to rest.

Her first vision of her Queen saddened her to her core. The Queen’s face was battered and covered in bruises. Her right eye and bottom lip were still swollen, though it looked much better than what she remembered from right after the fight.

She sighed. She had come to have this woman fall in love with her, and instead had tried to beat the shit out of her. She had ruined any chance she had, now. She could not believe that she had let her childish anger and need for verification ruin her chance to have the Queen love her. She felt her lip start to quiver, but quickly controlled it.

She would not have Daenerys see her as weak. She had heard that too much already from her, and she could tell that she hated weakness.

On the practice field, she had been shocked by what she had seen. The speed and power of Daenerys Targaryen was amazing. She suddenly realized the Queen had not used her full power, strength or speed against her. She had been holding back, and because of that restraint she had harmed the woman she secretly loved.

The way Daenerys moved, and the way her hair flowed around her body made Arya tingle. The woman laughed as she parried blows. She used her flaming blue sword against Barristan’s own Valyrian steel blade. Sparks flew, and the sounds of ringing steel echoed off the walls of the keep. Daenerys was exhilarated by martial exercise and combat.

Arya could not wait to enjoy that with the Queen. The sheer exhilaration of physical prowess, and the testing of skills and mettle was intoxicating.

When Daenerys had finished her sword practice, she sheathed her sword and came over to Arya. She had even knelt down to talk to Arya. She had been so solicitous and polite. She seemed to genuinely care for her comfort and healing.

After speaking with her, Arya watched Daenerys switch to a wood sword and her Bloodriders to wooden arakhs. She had fought them all at once. She had used speed and supreme skill to hold them off, and one by one deliver fatal blows had steel been used in place of wood. Her strength was incredible. The Bloodriders were staggering back from hard, connected shots of their blades. They had to growl loudly just to barely hold their ground. Daenerys used her smaller size to get up underneath their guard and use leverage to displace their balanced stances. Once off balance she would attack with a slashing blade Arya could barely follow. They knew what she would do, and still they could not stop her.

The following day, Arya walked to the practice field. The Maester said she could also move to her own quarters. He had removed the binding holding her arm to her torso. It was no longer needed. He had moved her arm, and she could now bring it up parallel to the ground. The man had looked dazed when he slowly pushed up on her arm, and saw she could lift it up to seventy degrees.

He kept muttering “unnatural.” She kept telling him she had always healed fast. She did have to admit that her healing seemed to have reached another level over the last two years, though.

Daenerys came over to her again after her practice session, and talked to her like they were actually friends despite how badly she had acted in the throne room.

“Arya, what is the problem? Why so pensive?”
She had gushed how sorry she was for her actions in the throne room. She knew she deserved to be put in shackles.

The Queen had laughed, and told Arya she deserved her thrashing. She had belittled her when she had arrived. She had not shown Arya the respect that she deserved. She apologized profusely for the whole “fire” statement as well - she did not know at the time about her father’s crimes against House Stark.

She had been shocked when the Queen bowed down before her on one knee, and took her hand and asked for forgiveness.

The heat of Daenerys’ hand holding her own sent a surge of elation through Arya. Arya would have forgiven anything the Queen asked at that moment.

That afternoon she was moved to her new quarters, one level down from the Queen in the royal suites of the Red Keep. She was relieved - she had feared she would be kept away from the Queen.

The Queen was constantly busy in meetings. She had healed enough to start to wonder what her true status was, and what all the commotion was about. That evening she visited the Maester, and he put her shoulder through a full range of motion. Arya had cried out, but told the man to keep pushing her arm through its full range. It burned like hell at first, but felt so good afterwards.

Her ribs had healed. Her face swelling had gone way down, and instead of black and blue her bruises had turned green and yellow and were starting to be absorbed by her body. Just like the Queen’s bruises were, thank the gods. She still couldn’t believe she had pummeled the woman she loved.

She had wondered over the last two nights, and decided that yes, she truly was in love with the Queen, and it was only deepening. She had put the woman on a high pedestal. True, it was too high with her only being five foot and not six foot six inches, but the woman was living up to everything she dreamed of. She was furious in combat, and so skilled. She was so passionate and fiery, and yet fair and gentle at the same time.

And by the gods was she beautiful. Her face was that of a goddess that was only enhanced with the thin scar on the right side, and the larger scar on her throat. She longed to kiss those scars, and the scars on her forearms. She would love to see the rest of her scars, too! Her mind running rampant with speculation to what she would find on that hot body.

The way people listened to Daenerys, and looked at her when given commands made it clear they worshipped the ground she walked on. Daenerys Targaryen was the Sisters of Aegon reborn, and so much more.

The next day she took her sword, and gently slashed and did her combat steps and parries carefully, feeling her shoulder stretch and burn. She was definitely healing. The Queen had to leave early; activity in the Red Keep was building. She wished she knew what was happening.

That evening there was a knock on her door. When she opened the door, she was shocked to see the Queen herself. She spluttered when the Queen asked if she could come in. Of course she could. Then, she saw her father’s scroll.

“Do you know what is in this scroll?” The Queen asked Arya.

“No, I do not.”

“I thought as much.” She led Arya to the small table in the corner. They sat down, and Dany handed Arya read the letter. She was not sure what she felt, reading the scroll. Her father had used her as a pawn in his Game of Thrones. Worse, she was sure that Sansa had known it too, even if she had not been part of the direct planning.

What she was feeling must have shown on her face. Suddenly, she felt her trembling right hand clasped by the Queen.

“Arya! Look at me.”

She did, woodenly.

“Your father is a crafty, wily, wise man. I want to think he read me correctly.” Arya just looked at her. Daenerys then told Arya her reasons for believing her father, and how his actions had indeed ensured that she could march North with the full force of Westeros behind her to fight their common foe. If he had not done so, she would have Tywin Lannister spreading his cancer with whispers and backstabbing for her foolishly following the Wolf. Stannis would have told her she was a foolish, young, untried woman - even though she conquered Essos! The stubborn man may have even balked. Mace and Oberyn would have come North, but their faith and belief in her would have been eroded.

“Your father has not declared himself a king. That is so very wise. It diffuses the situation. By both of us having royal hostages, that puts a damper on the passions of hotheads like Oberyn, and makes Mace even more cautious than he normally is.”

“But why didn’t tell me his plans?” Arya wondered, still wounded.

“Because you are his daughter. He wanted you to come to me as an innocent. I can’t help but trust you, because you are an innocent. Also, if you had been captured and you told them what you knew, it would have upset all his plans.”

“If the forces of House Lannister had this news, the trouble they could cause would be not be good. Tywin is too calculating, and has a cruel streak I can see from what he did to his children. No, your father could not risk you knowing the full truth of his plans. It may seem cruel, but it was necessary. Now I am free to continue the deception to bring my forces North, and meet the threat at the Wall . . . or should I say we will meet the threat at the wall.”

“We?” Arya asked in a small voice.

“Yes we!” the Queen exclaimed. “You near kicked my ass! I need an arm like that at my side when I go to war!” the Queen told her, violet eyes boring into hers.

“Your father is a brilliant man, Arya. He is everything my father and brother were not, I must say. You are so lucky to have him as a father.”

Arya felt a fire flush through her body. Yes! Her father was a great man! And the Queen wanted her sword at her side! She was near to bursting with happiness. After her rash actions at their first meeting, Arya was sure the Queen would never want her as her consort and wife, but at least she would be by her side in battle.

“My Queen, you will never regret having me at your side!” Arya said, squeezing the Queen’s hand in return.

As they looked each other, the Queen seemed a little flushed herself.
Arya pulled her hand back, and bit her lip. She had been too forward! Damnit!

“"I am curious about the line about Margaery coming to Eddard, though.” Dany said. “Why would she do that? I thought Olenna had sent her to Eddard for some reason but I considered it some inner negotiation between the two of them.”

Arya considered telling the Queen that Margaery had come to Winterfell to be back with her soon-to-be-wife, Sansa Stark, but decided against it. She would be gossiping if she did that. Westeros was conservative, as was Daenerys most likely when it came to relations between the sexes. She would probably be offended at worst, or shocked at best to know the two princesses of mighty houses were in love with each other.

Arya gave no answer, and thankfully the question had been rhetorical. She did not expect Arya to have an answer since she had been kept out of the loop.

The next day she began training with Syrio and Barristan. The water dancer had a totally foreign style of fighting with a sword, but the basics of block, parry slash, attack, counterattack were still the same. She immediately started to get a feel for the new style of fighting.

Barristan, even with his more advanced years, was strong and lightning fast. He kept his strokes easy as her shoulder, knowing it needed to be treated tenderly until fully healed.

That night, she felt both relaxed and happy. Several hours later her wrists were very tired, and she had one happy pussy, and aching burning nipples. She might not be able to have Dany in real life, but she could in her dreams and fantasies.

The next day she did calisthenics and wind sprints with the Queen. Dany then took Arya outside and ran a long, winding path around the closest fields. It was misting again, but that did not stop the Queen and she refused to be left behind. They ran around through the many camps that were forming up around the Keep as more and more troops moved in. Arya was thankful when the run was over; her side had a painful stich.

The Queen believed in hard cardio to give her endurance in combat. Now Arya did too.

Arya was given intense step-by-step walkthroughs and instructions by Syrio and Barristan. Tomorrow she would be cleared for full contact training by Maester Lape, and they would start hard, full contact training in the morning. The Queen wanted her tested, and her skills honed as quickly as possible.

Arya was ready. She would prove to the Queen she was worthy to be by her side.

The Queen talked to her after their training, and asked her if she was happy with the instruction with a raised eyebrow.

“Hell yeah!” Arya had told her, making the Queen laugh.

“Arya, after dinner tonight, please be ready to meet me three hours later.”

That command made Arya anxious. The queen had provided a full wardrobe of dresses, blouse tops, slacks and trousers for her. She had sets of boots, sandals and slip over shoe as well. She had covered all the bases.

Nymeria watched her mistress fret with what garments to wear. Again the wolf was glad she had her fur to clothe her body.
Arya felt too much like Sansa at that moment. She did not even touch the dresses, shivering. She selected a pair of black slacks and a tight blouse top and a dark brown vest. She put on a pair of knee high boots. She looked at the mirror in the corner, and decided she looked hot.

She pulled her hair back, and put in a comb to keep it locked in place and let the hair come down over her ears and down on her shoulders. It highlighted the angles of her face, and brought out her eyes. She might not have the Queen, but she wanted the woman to at least see her at her best.

She heard a knock on the door.

She opened the door, and gasped. The Queen was dressed in traditional Dothraki garb. She had on only a multi colored vest that exposed her chest, and the sides of her swaying breasts. The Queen wore low slung trousers that barely, but tightly, hugged her hips, and came down to her knees in a tight grip. She had sandals strapped up her calves.

The Queen had her hair pulled back with braids, the rest flowing down her back. She had several curls of blond hair framing her face. She was a goddess come down to Earth.

The Queen smiled, seeing Arya gape at her.

“Bring Nymeria.” Dany said. “Missandei has a caracal in my room as well. Her name is Shadowclaw.”

Daenerys led the Stark quietly to her quarters.

“Inside are my closest friends and confidantes. I meet with them to discuss first the most pressing matters of the realm. Your father is currently pressing problem number one.” The Queen told her with a smile. “You deserve to be in there. So long as I can trust you to keep what you hear in there to yourself?” The Queen asked softly, a question in her voice.

“I would never betray your trust, my Queen.” Arya told her earnestly.

The smile Daenerys gave her in response was brilliant. If possible, Arya fell even more in love with her Queen in that moment.

She entered the room, with Nymeria close by her side. She was greeted with smiles and comradery, immediately made to feel at home.

The wolf looked around curiously, Syrio and Barristan greeted her as a prized pupil. Missandei was kind and sweet. Tyrion shook her hand.

“I really like you, my good wolf. I alone of all in this Red Keep bet on your winning the day of your fight with the Queen!”

“That is only because you are a greedy fucking bastard, Tyrion.” Dany grated out, but Arya could hear the love behind the words. The tone said it all.

“Someone has to keep the Queen on her toes.” Tyrion said.

Arya watched Nymeria closely. She had seen the small caracal by the big, rotund eunuch she had found out was called ‘Strong Belwas’. Nymeria padded over and looked at the big pail of locusts that Strong Belwas was holding away. Nymeria growled softly.
She saw the caracal get up on its hind feet, and bat her paws at the wolf’s nose. The cat stayed up on its hind feet, batting wildly at the great Direwolf that sat, looking at the cat as if to eat her with one gulp. Nymeria’s head jerked with the pats her nose was taking.

Nymeria eventually woofed and bumped her nose into the cat, knocking it down on its back. The wolf laid down, trapping the wiggling cat beneath its long forelegs. The cat wiggled and whined.

Nymeria licked the cat and rubbed her cheek along the caracal’s head. Shadowclaw started to purr.

Belwas threw down some locusts, and the two animals shared.

Arya was going to like it here.

Solaja

Solaja sat at her desk, working over the lists of available ships at sea and in the various ports in the Free Cities, along with her homeland.

The Queen had decided to start mobilizing against Eddard Stark. She had been wondering why the Queen was so reticent to put this man down - he alone had not accepted her rule. Something did not ring right with the whole situation, but she backed Daenerys Targaryen no matter her personal feelings.

She was still hurt that the woman had rejected her, but she would never let her personal feelings keep her from loyally serving the woman. She had crushed Slaver’s Bay and was working feverishly to build something new and better.

Then she had taken back her throne without firing one arrow. Hell, she even disposed of the old dissipated despotic rule without bloodshed.

She paused to listen to the four pairs of lovebirds she had in her small bamboo grove by the window. She had put in nests for the birds, and they were settling down having eaten the seeds and sliced fruit she had set for them. They were warbling and chirping. Her favorite pair, Dusk and Lovey-Dovey, had flown down and snuggled with her after they ate. Lovey-Dovey had landed on her shoulder and had preened her long locks. The lovebird worked the strands of hair through her beak, ‘cleaning’ her hair of parasites that did not exist. She found the affection endearing.

Solaja thought more on the only thorn that had been in her Queen’s paw: Eddard Stark. He had resisted her from the start. She found it strange how he was not setting up a monarchy, but instead a confederacy. Such organization had never lasted long in Essos. They were too decentralized to meet the needs of those they governed. She also found it strange that a man with his sterling reputation would risk the ire of the Queen for such a less than satisfactory goal.

He had to know he would fail. He could not long last against the forces of the Queen, Essos and her dragons. Something did not add up, but it was her duty to serve her Queen faithfully and that is what she would do.

She had requested that the Queen send Rhaegal to the Summer Islands and the capital of Tall Tree Towns. This had saved a least a month to six weeks in travel to get word out to send out the reserve fleet that they had kept just for this situation. The Queen had foreseen this need. They would be escorting the troop ships across the narrow sea between Westeros and Essos. The mercenary companies were ready and fit. The mercenaries ready to earn their keep.
She heard a knock on her door. It was the dusk, and she wanted to be left alone to work her tide charts and study the records for the weather in the Narrow Sea and off the upper coast of Westeros at this time of year.

The knock was repeated. She sighed, and got up to answer the door.

When she opened the door and saw who was outside, she immediately shut the door in their faces and leaned back against the wood.

“Solaja Xo—open the door. We would speak with you.”

“Go away! I don’t want to talk to you. You have nothing to say that I want to hear.”

“We want to talk to you. This rancor is foolish and destructive. There is no competition between us.”

“Hhummmppppfff!” Solaja huffed to herself. “Of course not. You won.”

“There was no competition, Solaja. The Queen made her decisions. This is between us.”

“Go away I say!”

“Open the door, Solaja. We are not leaving.”

Solaja knew it was true. She may as well open the door and get this over with.

Outside stood Chataya and Alayaya. They stared at each other.

“Can we come in?” Chataya asked softly.

Solaja saw again just how lovely they were. She could see why the Queen had chosen them over her.

She stood aside to let them enter the room. She could not but help look at the sheer dresses that clung to their bodies, like translucent clouds. They appeared like the river nymphs that inhabited their homeland islands. They were indeed lovely to the eye.

Chataya’s sheer dress was green with green and yellow ruffles around the shoulders. Her large, firm, gourd-like breasts pushed the fabric out, showing their beautiful shape sloped out on her ribs. Her large nipples pointing at the floor at an angle. The nipples poking out the sheer material. Her daughter was wearing a golden hued dress that clung to her high, firm, full C cup breasts. Alayaya’s nipples poking straight out her thin gauzy top her full breast slightly jiggling with her movements.

Their nipples were fully erect, and she could smell their pussies. They were aroused. Maybe they were on their way to go to Daenerys, she thought spitefully, eyeing the slits that went up to their hips, exposing lovely legs. They may be rivals, but she still always admired a woman with a beautiful body. Their skin was so sleek and gleaming. They were midnight dark like herself. She could not stop herself from eyeing the prostitutes. She loved either the hues of the dark bodies of her homeland or the fair bodies of those from Northern descent.

Solaja led them to the table by the bamboo grove. She had bowls of nuts and some oranges, pears, and peaches. She offered them a seat and her light fair, and poured them some white wine she had been sipping on.

The women put some nuts and fruit on the small plates that Solaja had set out for them. They ate daintily, and with exquisite manners.

Alayaya started to speak, but Solaja held up her hand.

“Before we start, I did not mean anything when I called you whores to the Queen. I honor your profession. I was in pain.”

“We know.” Chataya replied.

“Why didn’t she chose me? I am just as beautiful as you and your daughter! It isn’t fair.” Solaja fumed and sniffled.

“We can’t speak for the Queen.” Alayaya spoke to Solaja. “We never spoke to her about you. We can’t speak to her choices. I will say that we were only for the Queen’s pleasure. A release of tension and anxiety is what we gave the Queen. The Queen is under a lot of pressure, and we provided pleasure to reduce the burden for a night with our visits to her bed. We gave her a diversion to relax her mind and body. Only women can truly give such pleasure to another woman. We relished giving her that pleasure. But we were only that to the Queen.”

“I would have freely given her that!” Solaja cried out in hurt.

“True, you could have. But I see two reasons why she did not allow it.” Chataya answered. “One. You are part of her Small Council, and she did not need the entanglement of having a lover on the Small Council. Second. You are a very aggressive woman. She is not attracted to that.”

“She is attracted to weakness, then.” Solaja sneered and then paused. She knew that sounded like an insult. “Damnit! I apologize . . . I am off my balance when it comes to Daenerys Targaryen. I can’t help but be what I am. Most women find my aggressive nature an aphrodisiac.”

Solaja saw the two women staring at her with glittering eyes.

“Why have you come here? You won. Have you come to gloat?” Solaja asked. The women stared at her, with fire still in their eyes. Solaja was suddenly nervous, and her heart rate was accelerating.

“We have come to fuck you, Solaja Xo.” Alayaya told her in a smoky voice.

“Oh heellllllll noooooo! Why the hell would you want to do that . . . you won.”

The two women got up from the chairs and walked to stand on either side of Solaja, who looked up at them seeing their large, firm breasts up close. Solaja felt the familiar ache building in her pussy. The ache she felt when she desired beautiful women. Though she felt these women were rivals Solaja felt the need building in her now wet cunt. The need to fuck Chataya and Alayaya long hard and deep. To fuck the women to utter exhaustion. To dine on their succulent cunts and beautiful breast. She licked her lips thinking of sinking her long tongue deep into their wanton and waiting tight hot shitholes. Solaja shivered in rising lust for these to two beautiful prostitutes.

Alayaya sighed. “Solaja, there is no competition between us.” She started to massage Solaja’s shoulders with strong fingers.

Solaja’s body clenched hard and then relaxed into the massaging fingers. She now knew she desired them greatly. She did want to fuck these two women the night through. The ache in her cunt and now throbbing in her hardening nipples built as she got so sopping wet. “But why… unngggg! Why do you desire me?” she moaned, feeling the fingers stroking her body with expert skill.

Chataya answered. “You spoke the words yourself : ‘most women find my aggressive nature an aphrodisiac’—we do. We want to fuck you, and share the pleasures that only women can give each other. We want to feel your mouth on us and your tongue in our pussies and assholes. We long to feel your fingers and fist in our bellies. We want you so bad Solaja. You are a legend among our people. Let us love you and love us in return.”

They pulled her up and led her to her bed. She was breathing hard. “Is it true you two are lovers?” she asked, in a daze of rising lust.

The two whores pulled on strings on the shoulders of their beautiful dresses. The strings pulled taunt and then the knots pulled loose. Chataya and Alayaya translucent dresses fell to the floor. The graceful women steeped out of the pooled dresses and pushed their sandals off. Solaja watched as the incestuous mother and daughter eyed each other with hot throbbing eyes.

Solaja moaned seeing the prostitutes nipples rigid with incestuous desire of daughter for mother. The two women stared in raw wanton fuck need at each other. Alayaya reached out and caressed her mother's gourd tits and lightly cupped them hefting them to pinch the rigid throbbing nipples.

"Uunnggg oohhhh baby ... you know what mommy needs baby girl” Chataya whinnied softly looking deep into her daughter's eyes. The eyes of her wife and lover. The woman she adored as her soulmate.

"Yes i do mother. I will fuck you so good mother. I will make you scream mommy as i devour your cunt so goooodd!” Alayaya moaned to her mother.

Solaja was breathing harder watching this display of wanton desire. She knew instinctively this was no act to make her hot and bothered. This mother and daughter were indeed lovers. They indeed fucked each other every night they could as wife and wife. Solaja Xo was beyond turned on!

Mother and daughter stepped into each other arms. Arms enfolded and hands clenched backs tight as bodies came together in a tight clench. Their other hands threaded into long flowing black locks that had subtle bands of beads woven in. Solaja watched their bodies instinctively meld with thighs slipping between legs and pressed into swollen pussies. The admiral watched those snatches start to instinctively hump and wallow into firm thighs. Solaja moaned hard seeing those thighs start to glisten as love aching cunts humped hard on firm muscled thighs. Mother and daughter's mouths came together with lips first melding and nipping. Then mouths hungrily mated tight and sucked in sensual lips sucking on the lips taking turns as mother and daughter mewled and jolted with rising pleasure and lust.

Solaja loved watching the whores bodies coming together their full tits mashed into each other. Mother and daughter were only an inch difference in height. Their tits compressed into their mates. Their erect thick nipples poked and rolled over their mates tits. Solaja's eyes were glued to how those full black orbs mashed and rolled with the incestuous mother and daughter bodies mashing tight. Solaja watched their torsos jerk and squirt against each other as sweat filmed the tight pressed bodies.

They kissed like this for a minute before the daughter’s tongue demanded entrance to her mother’s mouth. They both groaned as the daughter slipped her tongue deep into her mother’s mouth were they wrestled wetly. Alayaya pulled her head back to let Solaja see mother and daughter’s tongues wrapped tightly together and wetly wrestling before pushing her lips back to her mother’s lips and speared her tongue down her mother’s throat. The mother cried out into her daughter’s mouth her body shaking with pure love for her daughter and lover. Their bodies already slicked with love sweat. The incestuous mother and daughter's backs arched and firm bellies wallowed and smacked wetly as they humped sodden cunts up and down now cum slicked thighs and groins. Solaja was in heaven smelling the thick rich aroma of the prostitutes cunts flooding her room. Cum had trickled to the mother and daughter’s knees and now down their shins.

The sight hit Solaja like a blacksmith’s mallet hammer. The mother daughter incest was so intoxicating to behold. She could feel the burning love between these two women. She burned to watch and then join them. She felt her heart flutter with lust and emotions. Emotions she had not felt in so long! Her pussy ached and her heart fluttered.

Solaja’s bed was traditional with a canopy frame above the bed with slates going from side to side and sheer lace fabric blew in the breeze that reached half way down to the mattress. Chataya and Alayaya slowly moved over with small steps arms clenched and wet pussies jammed into thighs their moans loud in Solaja’s room. The whores reached Solaja’s bed. Mother and daughter toppled to the bed falling through the multi colored fabric screens. They rolled around on the bed kissing ravenous. Their drooling couchies still wallowing on the others body.

As Solaja watched Alayaya got on top of her mother and quickly spun around with her knees by her mother’s head and lowered her body. Solaja was beyond turned on seeing Alayaya’s swollen wet muff smothering her mother’s mouth as she wiggled down and Chataya gripped her daughter’s ass cheeks and lifted her head off the mattress and inhaled her daughter’s pussy swallowing her upper cunt. Alayaya buried her face in her mother’s twat and sucked Chataya’s clit deep into her mouth and hard sucked while tongue lashing the rock hard soaking wet nubbin.

Solaja felt her pussy get so fucking wet. The whores’ breast were compressed into their incestous lovers’ bellies. The mother had her head up and angled forward her mouth opened wide. The mother inhaled her daughter’s cunt meat into her mouth. Chataya rolled the sweet succulent trim in her mouth. Her head pumped in and out stretching out her daughter's cunt in her mouth. The tension Chataya filled her daughter's cunt had her daughter's face twisted with almost painful pleasure. Chataya savored again as she had for years the sweet taste of her daughter’s twat. She then raised her head higher and shoved her tongue deep into the cauldron of her daughter’s snatch and slow tongue fucked her daughter. Alayaya cried out into her mother’s honey hole. “Mmmffff! Oommpff! Ummppf! Uummff!” Alayaya chuffed as she sucked feverishly on her mother’s pussy and tongue lashed her clit.

Solaja ripped off her slacks and blouse and joined the lovers on the bed. She stroked Alayaya’s back feeling perspiration already starting to film on her dark black body. Alayaya’s head was pumping pulling on the juicy slimy succulent pussy meat in her mouth. Chataya was hammering her head up and down driving her tongue deep into her daughter’s hot drooling steamy love box. She then moved her head down and sucked hard on Alayaya’s rigid clit. The mother’s cheeks hollowing out and showed her tongue slashing her daughter’s rigid shiny clit.

Solaja wasted no time getting behind Alayaya’s firm rump and her mother’s head working her clit. Solaja bent her head down and gripped the daughter’s hips and pulled her firm rump cheeks apart and buried her face in the hot ass crack that felt and smelled like steamy paradise. Alayaya’s musk and womanly scent was intoxicating. Solaja tongue first licked the teenager’s ass crack. Up and down Solaja ran her tongue the length of Alayaya’s ass cleft. She loved feeling the teenager’s firm ass cheeks on her face as she licked her ass cleft. Then her tongue circled the girl’s anus tossing her salad as she snuffled and moaned. Chataya was making obscene noises slurping on her daughter’s clit.

Solaja worked her tongue over the teenager's starfish. She loved feeling the wrinkled orifice and soaking it with with her spittle. Solaja raked the flat of her tongue over the runnels of the teen's shithole. Solaja cawed feeling the girl's anus clenching underneath her lapping tongue. The naval commander heard Chataya snuffling wolf sucking on her daughter’s clit. Then the mother released her daughter's clit from her drooling mouth and stabbed the hard nubbin with her incestuous tongue.
Solaja loved hearing the teen’s squeals of pleasure into her mother’s cunt glued to her mouth. Solaja felt the bed rocking slightly with the force of Chataya working her head to pleasuring her daughter’s cunt. Solaja circled the teen’s spasming shithole and then lapped it again savoring the delicious taste.

Solaja stiffened her tongue and slowly pushed her tongue deep into the teen’s tight asshole. Solaja loved the feel of the smooth sphincter rings sliding down her silky tongue as she slow rammed its full length into the shaking teen’s butt hole. Solaja smiled. This asshole was no virgin. She had dreams of slamming her strap-on up this tight shithole. She knew Chataya would be no anal virgin. She began to stroke her tongue deep in and out the tight sphincter enjoying it pinching her tongue with the teens body jerks of ecstasy. Solaja was in heaven pulling the girls ass open and driving her tongue deep into the girl’s rectum wiggling her tongue licking wildly.

Looking up the girl’s now sweaty back she saw her head rise up and heard her mother take a deep breath and suck her daughter’s clit down her throat. The girl’s anus clenched tight on her tongue as the girl’s orgasm shattered her.

"AAWWOOGGGGGG! HUUUNNGGGGG! Ungghh!" Alayaya screamed her head snapping back and her body shaking violently. The girl's body bucked in a stunning orgasm. Her body rent with hard fucking convulsions of sheer bliss. "Auuungghiiieeee! Ohngghhiieeee!" the teenager wailed her body convulsing again and again. Solaja was in heaven feeling the girl’s sphincter locked down on the tongue as she rammed it deep into the girl’s anus. Solaja kept her head buried in Alayaya’s ass cleft to keep her tongue buried deep in the spasming asshole.

She felt Chataya pumping her head in and out stretching the clitt meat deep in her mouth. She pulled back and the wet clitoral hood snapped out her lips with a wet plop. Solaja continued tongue fucking the sweet asshole of the teenager. “Hhrr rsssslPPPPP!” Solaja heard as the mother sucked her daughter’s clitt back deep into her mouth and pumped her head hard pulling and suctioning the clitt deep in her mouth as the mother’s tongue slapped the shiny nubbins.

The sweet loving mother gave her daughter another shattering womb rending orgasm. "Fffffuuuuuccccckkkkk—mmmoommyyyyy! AARRUUUNGNGGGGGG! AWWOOOGGGGGGGG! Arrrrrrmuungghhhh!" Alayaya cried out, her back bowed, taut body quivering as one overpowering spasm after another wrenched her flesh. Again Solaja felt the teen’s shithole spasming and gripping tight her long tongue she slow stroked in and out the hot the teen’s gripping anus. Her long tongue loving the feel of the teen’s asshole milking her tongue with rhythmic squeezes. "Nnnunnggmmmm! Oh! Oh . . . sweet gods of the forest, unnggmmmmnnngghhiieeee!" The teens body flipped hard up and down.

Solaja pulled back slipping her tongue out the still spasming asshole. She gently rolled the mewling daughter off her mother. She leapt over the fallen teen and was between her mother’s legs settling down in a flash. She spied the splayed out inner labia lips all wet and glistening dark black. The pink slit all wet and gooey with sweet cum. Solaja inhaled deeply savoring the rich ripe heady scent of Chataya’s hot cunt. Solaja lowered her head and mashed her face into the sloppy wet quim.

Chataya’s body jolted hard feeling her vulva bulge out with Solaja’s strong tongue beginning to lick up and down her slit and then start to lash her clitt. “Hunggg hhnnngg … oh fuckkkkkkkk yeahhhh! Unnnhhhh uunngggg!” the whore moaned feeling her clitt now short sucked and her clitt polished with Solaja’s swiping tongue.

"Auugnoownnngg! Unghl! Unghh!" Chataya grunted, writhing crazily under Solaja’s passionate attack on her already frothing pussy. Solaja lapped her head raking her tongue over the hard pebble of the mother’s clitt. She sucked viciously on the clitt making the madam writhe before she started to lick up and down her slit and then slide her tongue deep into her hot tight pussy tongue fucking her hard. Solaja loved Chataya with all her skills desperate to prove to mother and her daughter what a great fuck she was. Her daughter had primed her mother's body.

Solaja lifted her head slightly and lapped her tongue furiously over Chataya's rigid shiny clit. Her tongue loving the feel of the hard nubbin underneath her tongue. She would dip her head down and hot suck hard on the shiny clit wiggling her tongue to lash the diamond hard clit polishing it. Then her head lifted to again furiously lap on the bulging clit jutted out its sheath. Back and forth Solaja licked and sucked viciously on her new lover's clit.

She kept looking up Chataya's body. It had stiffened her belly muscles ripple and straining. Her head had rocked back on her neck her Adam's apple jutted out her neck her neck tendons threatening to snap in two. The madam's belly breathing in raged gasps sweat pouring off her body. Her heavy gourd tits sloshing on her ribs as the prostitute's body jolted and half rolled from shoulder blade to shoulder blade.

Chataya's breath caught for a second. Her body went tense as a board. Suddenly, horrendous spasms exploded out Chataya's womb and rent Chataya's cunt simply tearing it inside out.
"AAARRUUUNGGGGGGGG! OOOWWWGGGGGGGG! AAWWOOGGGGGGGG! Oh oh
fffuuucckkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkkke and her belly flexing tight as hammer pulses throbbed out her sucked nipples. Chataya's hands playing with her daughter's hair. Mother and daughter locked eyes and Alayaya sucked even harder on the teat in her mouth. "Auuuggg hunnggg hhnnn hhnnn ... oh suck it you goddsssdammnnn slut ... unng unnn oh gods i love you Alayaya ... hunnggg shit! suck baby girl suck on your mommy's nipples" her head had been up looking down on her daughter but now it thudded back to the bed her mouth open in a helpless O of shocked pleasure her face slashed with primal pleasure of an expertly sucked cunt and nipples.

Alayaya would move up and kiss her mother hard and deep before kissing back down her mother’s throat. She would nibble and nip before she moved down the rest of the way to Chataya’s heavy tits and sucking long and deep on her mother’s teats. She did this several times. Then on one trip back to her mother’s tit Alayaya licked her mother’s throat. “AAWWWOOGGGGGG!” Chataya screamed feeling her daughter see-saw her sweet black throat flesh in and out her teeth as daughter marked her mother as her love slut yet again.

Alayaya smiled down at Solaja who had slipped two fingers into Chataya’s twat and slow fucked her quivering quim while long sucking on the clit she worked in and out her lips. Chataya was chuffing and rolling from shoulder to shoulder. “Oh Gods Solaja you are so beautiful sucking off my mother and my wife off. Suck her clit hard and pump your head up and down. It makes her come so hard.” Solaja looked up at Alayaya and did just that making Alayaya’s mother cry out in ecstasy.

Chataya moaned “Aauuggg fuck! shit! unnggg oohhh fuck … gods Alayaya—Solaja easts pussyyyyy so fucking good babyyyyy!” One hand came up to grip her daughter’s hair to pull her mouth down into her tit and drive her nipple deeper into her daughter’s mouth. Alayaya gripped her mother’s tit with both hands and pumped it hard throttling the heavy tit as she wolfed sucked looking up at her mother’s twisting face grimacing in rising ecstasy. Alayaya’s mother’s other hand threaded into Solaja’s hair and drove her head deeper into her swollen drooling quim.

Solaja had inserted a third finger into Chataya’s trim stretching out the cum slimy fuck hole. Her finger sliding easily in and out the buttery pussy she hammer fucked. Her knuckles hammering the swollen muff.

“Suck suck suckkkkkkk . . . oh sweet air gods suckkkkkkk—both of you suck! … oh oh hhnnnggg —oohhh . . . Solaja saw Chataya’s face seem to crumple in agony that was only ecstasy. Her eyes squeezed tight shut and her body exploded. "OOOWWGGGGGGGGGG! HHHHNNNGGGGGGGGGGGG! Oh oh hhngg-AAAAWWOOOGGGGGGGG!" Chataya screamed feeling her cunt tear itself inside out. Solaja felt Chataya's fingers claw hard into her scalp with each hammering pulse of the whore's orgasm. She saw Chataya's other hand smashing her daughter's head into her bosom with each spasms of her orgasm. Alayaya sucking so hard her cheeks deeply dimpled with her long ragged deep throat love sucks on her mother's turgid teat. "Hhhunngggggggg! Hhhn hhnnn Awwwoogggggg! Ooowwwwgggggggg! Ohhnngggg! Ungghhh! Oh . . . oh Solaja . . . oh shit unngghhmmnggiieee!" she squealed, her body shaking and trembling as shockwaves ripped through her voluptuous body and hot cum gushed out her cunt slaming over Solaja’s slow pumping fingers. Solaja pulled her fingers out the hot hole and locked her lips on the spasming hole and drank the creamy cum gushing out in hard clenching spasms.

Gods damned this woman tasted so fucking good to Solaja as she slurped down ambrosia from the gods.

As the madam jerked and cried out in aftershocks Solaja felt herself rolled over and watched Alayaya slip between her legs and started to tongue slash her clit and then swallowed and rocked her head tongue lashing her clit and lowered her head and worked her slimy slit. She rose up on her elbows and looked at her vulva bulge out with the daughter prostitute’s tongue raking up and down her drooling slit. Then the teen was lashing her clit with flat tongue licks and then her tongue fluttered all over her clit with lightning fast tongue bats.

Solaja grunted deep in her chest when the teen slipped her tongue deep into her fuck hole and slide it in and out her hot tight pussy. Alayaya curled her tongue to scoop out Solaja’s hot creamy cum flowing out her fuck hole. The teen’s nose plowing over her clit as the prostitute tongue fucked her pussy so sweetly. Solaja watched Alayaya move her head up and again tongue stroke her shiny nubbin jutting out its sheath. The whore spread her pussy out fully exposing her clit and wolfed sucked it making Solaja scream in pleasure.

Solaja’s head lulled form side to side as Alayaya was transporting her to the heavens with that talented tongue that was again rolling over and slapping her clit with quick love sucks between. The teen then sucked her clit deep into her mouth and pumped her head as she deep throat sucked her clitoral hood stretching it taunt. The sweet wet sucks putting intense friction on her clit that filled Solaja’s belly with fire.

The tension rose higher. Chataya had recovered and moved in from the side. Her mouth chased a tit rolling on Solaya’s sweaty chest till her mouth latched onto and engorged teat. The madam sucked with feverish love sucks that filled Solaja’s breast with hot whirling fire. She moved over and sucked the other breast the same. Then her hands came into play as she hunched over Solaja’s body and throttled the full gourd tits while her mouth moved back and forth had sucking long thick nipples. Her tongue lathing rubbery nipples.

Solaja felt the pressure rising deep in her belly. Her face slashed horribly and her legs were tense and juddering. Her toes curled painfully and then her womb shattered. "Unngmmnhnnnggiiiaaieeeeee! Awwwogggggggg! Ooowgggggennnn!" she wailed, surging off the bed, her body bucking and flipping so violently that Alayaya and Chataya had backed off watching their lover jackknife violently. Solaja’s toes curled hard as her heels hammered the bed in helpless pleasure. “Auungghh! Ungghhh! Oh . . . oh oh . . . annnnggghiiiiieeeeee!"

Her body calmed down and the teen licked her trembling pussy and inner thighs. Solaja felt the bed sag on each side of her head. She looked up at paradise. Chataya’ swollen puss was six inches over her face. “See something you want Solaja” Chataya husked down to her with a smirk on her face. A smirk that turned into a shocked slash on her face when Solaja looped her arms in flash over the firm strong voluptuous thighs above her head and jerked the woman down on the extended tongue that stabbed deep into Chataya’s honey pit.

"Ohhnnnnn . . . ohhnnnnn!” Chataya moaned, her body twisting. Chataya hefted up her heavy tits rolling them in her hands and pulling on the engorged teats. The woman’s body dripped sweet sweat now. Her shiny black nipples flaring as the madam pulled hard on them stretching them out tenting her areolas. “Unnnhhhh . . . unhhh!” she grunted, "ohhhhh . . . oh Solaja . . ." she cawed feeling the admiral punch her tongue deep in and out her tight pussy.

Solaja cried out into Chataya’ pussy when Alayaya slide her tongue deep back into her cum filled cunt and started to tongue fuck her before moving up and sucking rhythmically on her clit and adding first two and then three fingers stretching out her quim and fucking her in a sensual in and out rhythm.

Solaja was in heaven. She was receiving so much pleasure and giving it back to her other lover. She would raise her head and slurp on the shiny clit before licking back down the slimy slit and suck on slimy labia lips rolling and stretching them in her mouth. She loved how Chataya’ body quaked from her loving ministrations her hips quivering and full tits jigging.

The madam gripped her tits form underneath half way up the divine gourds and folded up the heavy breast with her nipples at her lips now. Chataya sucked on her long thick nipples in turn moving her head right and left to suck on the engorged nipples in turn with cheek hollowing deep throat sucks. The whore’s eyes throbbed and burned as she looked down at her sweet lover.

Solaja was hammering her head up pounding her tongue deep into the steamy fuck hole smothering her mouth. Her nose hammered the mother’s clit relentlessly with each up surge of her head to drive her tongue into the steamy cauldron of Chataya’s hot love box. Solaja moved her head up and sucked in all of Chataya’s upper cunt deep into her mouth. "Unnhhh . . . ohnnnn!" She moaned. "Yes! Unghhh! Gods . . . yes, suck it hard! Unghhh!" Chataya jammed down hard grinding her cunt into Solaja’s mouth. Chataya jammed her own engorged nipples back into her mouth in turn sucking with cheek hollowing hedonistic love sucks on her own nipples.

Alayaya was slurping on Solaja’s clit and now adding butterfly strokes of her tongue flicking Solaja’s clit like her clit was in a hurricane. She raised her head and flat tongue licked the shiny clit jutted out its hood. She gripped Solaja’s hip to keep her anchored down as the naval woman swirled her cunt hard up into her mouth. Alayaya was in heaven feeling Solaja’s clit she had sucked back in between her lips and she tongue lashed. Her fingers pumping into a fiery cauldron of hot cunt meat.

The teenager turned her hand up her fingertip pads up onto Solaja’s frontal vaginal wall. The girl worked her fingers in short jerks having already mapped out Solaja’s pronounced spongy hillock of a g-spot. The girl harpooned the hillock with fast bobbing jerks. Alayaya smiled into the pussy she was gobbling loving that rough raspy feel of Solaja’s g-spot underneath her jerking fingertips.

Suddenly Solaja was gulping down hot gushes of sweet hot slimy cum as her screams into Chataya’s cunt sent the madam over the precipice into shattering ecstasy. Chataya’s head ripped back as she dropped her heavy tits that slapped onto her sweaty chest. Chataya’s screams were sweet music to Solaja’s ears. "AUUNGGHHIIIEEE! ONNGGHH! UNGGHH! AUUNNGGHHIIIEEE!" Chataya cried out, her body succumbing to the fierce convulsions of orgasm her body flipping and her heavy tits whiplashed flipping up and slapped down on her body as it convulsed hard. Her continued cries loud in Solaja’s room as a sharp paroxysm of shattering pleasure ripped through the madam’s body.

Alayaya’s screams echoed off the walls as her pussy squirted again and again filling and overflowing Solaja’s mouth the excess splashing out her mouth and soaking her face. Solaja was in heaven as Alayays screamed and screamed as multiple orgasms tore her sweet young tight body apart. Solaja loved the hot gushes of clear cum making her choke on the sweet effluent overfilling her mouth. The admiral half choking on the hot cum squirting into her mouth and down her throat. Her choking half spitting out sweet cum Solaja longed to drink down into her starving gullet.

After that it was long, intense lovemaking long into the night. Deep into the night, Solaja was dreamy and near asleep when she felt Chataya and Alayaya start to pull away from her body.

She rose up on one elbow. Her heart that had been contented began to beat in trepidation.

“Why ... why are you leaving?” she asked in a tremulous voice.

Alayaya gave her a sad smile. “A whore always knows when it is time to leave.”

“How has been a most wonderful night Solaja . . . you are indeed a magical lover.” Chataya told her in a soft, sad voice.

Solaja rose up to a sitting position. “I say when it is time to leave and it is not now.” She said in a commanding voice. She smiled, seeing the two whores shiver and moan aloud at her commanding tone. “Fuck me and make me scream, sluts!” She saw another hard shiver grip the whores’ bodies. She laid back in the moonlight, and opened her shaved mound with her fingers exposing her wet seam and wet cunt hole that clutched and pulsed to mother and daughter.

“So you see something you like sluts!” she soft cooed barked at her lovers seeing how they loved her commanding tone. She would remember this.

With a loud moan they fell on Solaja like famished wolves kissing her deeply before moving down in tandem to suck her heavy tits and then spreading her legs out wide and devouring her together kissing each other as they sucked Solaja off again and again.

Solaja then fisted mother and daughter together. She had gotten her lube and soaked her hands as the liquid dripped off her hands. More lube was slavered over big fat pussies. Solaja moaned working her fingers into mother and daughter’s cunts. The incestuous lovers rolled onto hips to kiss each other. They groaned feeling their pussies stretched out on Solaja’s hands working into their twats.

Solaja had her knuckles and thumb run along the undersides of her fingers worked into mother and daughter’s trims. They were on their elbows looking down taunt bellies. Their heads rocked back in unison eyes looking at the ceiling crying groans of ecstasy cawing out stricken throats. Their necks jerking up and down on corded tendons.

Solaja pushed her hands fully into their hot buttery cunts. Their hot wet pussies slowly inching down the back of her hands till their twats were clenched on her wrist. Solaja paused to let the whores pussies stretch out. The women gibbering in raw pleasure. She began to softly pump her hands in and out loving the feel of their cunts running up and down her lower wrists. Their love juice dripping off her wrists.

The whores started to tap and fork their clits and pulled on nipples. Solaja so enjoyed watching her new lovers roll their torsos toward each other to kiss ravenously with deep plunging tongues in their mated tight mouths. Alayaya bent her head down using her hand to left her mother’s guard tit and long suck on the long thick nipple.

Solaja formed her fists and began to pump them deeper and deeper into hot tight pussies. Her knuckles churning and plowing hot inner folds and whorls. Solaja looked up at mother and daughter who groaned and their faces slashed with primal ecstasy. Solaja began to now ram fuck her lovers.
Her fists pounding up tight pussies and jamming into cervixes. She would pump her fists back to the opening of their vaginas and then slam her fists forward with twisting motions. The whores were screaming in pleasure.

Chataya eyes were blasted looking at Solaja. Her face torn apart with pleasure. She was gripped by hard convulsions just like her daughter who was rotating her groin into Solaja’s lunging thrusts burying Solaja’s fist deep into her belly. Chataya was repeating her daughter’s groin swirl to take Solaja’s love fist hard into her belly. Solaja slow pulled her fists back to the entrance of her lover’s cunts and paused. Then she surged her twisting fists forward hard filling the prostitutes with her fists. Again and again she hard stroked her fists deep up into the incestuous mother and daughter lovers belly.

Chataya was lost in a world of pleasure. “Oh Solaja … I love you … I love you with all my heart!” She was so lost in love and pleasure she did not know she spoke the words aloud. Solaja’s own heart echoed those words.

She made them cum twice on her fists. Their screams were ear splitting and their bodies twisted so beautifully on her fists buried deep in their bellies. Solaja had relished feeling their cunts explode and spasm on her fists again and again through their orgasms. She felt her fists clenched in wet tight velvet fists as the women wailed and jackknifed violently and Alayaya screaming out she loved Solaja not realizing what she said being so lost in pleasure. Mother and daughter were near comatose when Solaja settled between them. They worked their mouths onto her nipples on her sloped out breast on her ribs and sucked gently as they went to sleep.

At dawn, Solaja quietly got up out of bed and put a note outside her door. Daenerys had cancelled the Small Council meeting for the day. She would meet the Queen in the middle afternoon to help the Master of Ships Hugh Elicero plan for the upcoming campaign. She had the whole morning and early afternoon to herself. She snuck back bed and snuggled in. Two hours later she got up again, and got the tray that had been left at the door.

She took the three bowls and filled them with bran cereal from the urn. Solaja then took the bowls of cut up strawberries, bananas and blueberries and scooped them into the bowls of cereal. She put them on the table after clearing off her papers. Her heart was thundering in her chest with what she meant to do. She did not question herself. Last night had been magical, and she felt a connection she had not felt in so long. She would not let this magic slip from her fingers.

She poured out the milk into the bowls. She looked over at her bed. She had fucked her sweet whores to utter exhaustion. They were sprawled out on her bed. As she watched, the daughter instinctively scooted over to nestle into her mother’s body her head nestled underneath her mother’s armpit. Their legs spread out showing happy swollen muffs that had been well fucked. Both women were so fucking beautiful in the early morning light leaking into her room through the windows.

Per custom both whores should have been gone by the rising of the sun. Whores were for the night. Solaja smirked. She had fucked them so good and long they she had simply worn them out. They were so beautiful sleeping in her bed. No. Their now shared bed.

Solaja then went to the whores, and gently kissed them awake as they blinked and smiled. Solaja relished how they lifted their beautiful faces into her feathery kisses, and seeing their soft smiles beaming up at her. Then Chataya looked around, and saw by the light in the room that the sun had risen high into the morning sky. She frowned and started to apologize, saying she and her daughter had overstayed their welcome.

Alayaya fully woke up and smiled, stretching, and then she remembered. A whore is always gone before breakfast. It was an old tradition. A whore was to be out of the house before the morning fast was broken. That time was reserved for true lovers.

Chatya got up and saw the table, and then looked at Solaja and started to cry. Alayaya saw the table was filled with traditional morning cereal and fruit. A meal that lovers shared. The meal she shared each morning with her mother in their home.

She looked at the hopeful look on Solaja’s face, and started to cry too. Solaja took them to her table, with a loving grip on their elbows. She lovingly sat them down, and got between them on her knees.

Solemnly, Solaja took the spoon first from Chataya’s bowel and scooped out a mouthful of cereal and fruit and offered it to the crying whore. She slowly brought the spoon to the whore’s lips, keeping hard, direct eye contact. Chataya took it, more tears running down her cheeks.

Solaja turned to Alyaya and repeated it - the ritual of binding. Her hand trembled at what she was doing, and Alayaya’s lips trembled too. The teenage whore was shaking hard now, opening her mouth with love radiating out her dark intoxicating orbs. Alayaya took the offered spoon heaped with cereal and fruit. Tears of joy running down her cheeks.

Alayaya and her mother had never thought that the great Solaja Xo - the greatest admiral in three hundred years - could ever love them as a true love. This was what lovers did. Women who loved each other’s souls.

Solaja fed them until the bowls were empty, and then together mother and daughter fed their new mate. Both whores cooed and stroked their Solaja’s lovely body. They were naked, and shining with lust. Nipples engorged and pussies sopping wet. The women pressed into Solaja’s body rubbing their tits into her sides. Letting Solaja feel their hard nipples aching with desire for her hot tight body again.

Hot musk filled the air with the scent of arousal. They had wanted her for so long. They had only hoped to share her body, thinking her love was out of reach. No more did they think this. They looked at Solaja, and her long engorged teats, and her swollen cunt wet and labia lips knotted and slimy wet with love juice begging for their tongues. Solaja belonged to them now, as they fed her spoon by spoon the ritual breakfast of binding.

They would work out later how they would build their new family as they went back to bed, to renew and deepen their love.

The Ice King

The monarch stood tall and proud, surveying his kingdom. This had been his home since his rebirth, but soon it would be time to leave. This world of tundra and stunted trees bent by the constant wind would soon be left behind. Soon the whole world be his to reshape into this paradise.

He would freeze the world into cold and dark. He would rid the world of the hated humans that were not worthy of the world. They were like rats that bred beyond all control. They killed beyond what they needed. They were a canker on the Earth, and he would remove them. He hated a species that would kill their own. It did not matter that once he was one of them with their same weaknesses. He had been transformed into something more pure. Something truly great.

He looked over his realm of perpetual night. He left his throne and walked among his many sons. He was a cautious sovereign by nature. He had delayed, but the time for action was fast approaching. His last sons were fast approaching maturity.

His captains, his eldest and most capable sons, were busy around the cycle of the sun forging new swords for their youngest brethren. They took the iron ingots that they mined from the edge of the great sea to the east by north. He would breathe onto the iron, and his sons would start to hammer the raw metal. They had the strength now to bend and mold the metal with their granite mallets.

The iron slowly lengthened and started to shimmer as the metal morphed to a half liquid state, and flowed out into the shape of the blades their newest sons would use. They had learned from their father the secrets of the craft; from their father’s vomit and love. They chanted under the breath that they did not need to take. They again and again spoke the words and wards that enchanted the iron with icy, cold strength. Once complete, the blades glowed light blue with a bright penumbra surrounding them.

When finished, the captain would turn and give it to a new brother in their father’s army. Then the sons would turn back to their tasks. They were totally focused on their father’s will. The work continued around the cycles of the sun that only barely touched the horizon. They had to give each brother a weapon to fight the hot bloods.

The Ice King had learned from his battle with this vile Dragon Queen. He had some of his sons fashioning blocks of ice that would be strung together with thin ribbons of ice to from chainmail armor. His sons and himself were fast and he did not want to limit to many with this armor. A big advantage was their speed in combat. The ice was heavy and would sap energy when worn in combat. Still some of his sons and some of the giants he would outfit with this ice armor. The needed that armor to take on the dragons of the Queen and fight the humans that had these Valyrian swords. They were few he had learned. His initial assault forces would have sons and giants outfitted with ice armor to let them survive long enough to cut down their enemies.

The ice could not stop the attack but should blunt them enough to kill their tormentors. Yes, he had learned lessons from his fight with the dragon queen.

The fight with the black skin people on their towering ships showed that the crows had been teaching their own lessons. He would take casualties. His losses may be grievous, but he would be victorious. Then he would have a continent of young, hot blood male children to convert to be his new sons. He would have an ocean protecting him. He would kill any invaders on the shores as he husbanded his strength. He would have to time to forge a mighty army to shake the heavens in their course.

Essos had no knowledge of him. He would reave deep into the continent before they began to learn of his weaknesses. He would carve out his initial kingdom, and then would inevitably march across the continent. His victory was assured. Some people had magic still, true, but by the time he reached the land of Asshai he would be unstoppable.

He would have all the time he needed to discover how to attack this place called the Land. He would avenge his true son for the loss of his brothers.

But first things first. He needed, and would, conquer Westeros.

Ice Fang was anxious to attack the hot bloods. He longed to consume their flesh. He would annihilate his distant cousins. Ice Fang would show his father his love by killing his enemies.

The Ice King would move south slowly. He had a plan that required some level of stealth. He had devised a means to take his enemies unawares. He would move through the forests as much as possible. This would slow down their forward march as his army had to shamble among the thick tree trunks in the depths of the great forests of North.

He had time. His plans would succeed. He was nearly ready to start the process.

It felt good to have finally made the decision to implement his plans. When his final sons were mature, trained, and fitted with their ice swords, he would begin his march.

The only thing that had given him pause was his true son, the Croyel, who rested on his back with his fangs in his throat. The Croyel had, strangely, become fearful of the Horn of Winter. The Croyel had studied it intently from over his shoulder. His father kindly rolled the Horn over, again and again, to let his son look closer.

He could not prove it to his Father, but the Croyel was now convinced this Horn had been fashioned by one of the Insequent.

The name meant nothing to the Ice King. His fearful son told him they were a strange and fey people far to the west of the Land. They were a people who each chose a unique vision, and pursued all knowledge in that one focused pursuit.

They were a powerful people, but always worked alone, and never interfered with the work of their fellow Insequent upon penalty of insanity and death. Within their own field of endeavor, they were a great force to be reckoned with. They adopted a name upon ascending to their power. Their true names always remained a mystery to those outside their race.

His kind had thought them a trifle. Until they had lost a brother to one long ago, called the Warbler. The woman had sung a cruel song that robbed the Croyel of his life force, and that of his host, and then their brothers had felt the ignobility of having their throats slit as the Croyel shared his death, gasping their last breaths filled with terror and crying out for succor.

The Insequent always had their own agendas. The Croyel was sure the Wall would come down, but he feared what else the Horn would unbind. He sought to convince his father to not use the Horn of Winter. The Ice King had become very wroth with his son at this, and cowed him with his righteous anger.

He was equal to anything now. He would not sacrifice sons because of some half formed fear of the Croyel. Son or no son, it was his will that would lead them to the greatest victories this world had ever known. The Wall would come down in a time and manner of his choosing.

The Ice King sat back down on his icy throne. He again contemplated the near future.

He would march south, and into the woods. He had a plan of deception that would allow him to fall upon his enemies unawares. He would take from the white haired bitch her dragons, and then she would be nothing to him. Without her dragons, she would be helpless.

Without any wildings or crow patrols, he was free to move as he wished. He again let his mind dream. First Westeros, Essos, and then this ‘Land’. His son started to whimper and writhe when he thought of his final prize. Last, he would march into Elemsnedene and defeat these ‘Elohim’. None could stand against him. The Croyel on his back cried out in terror.

Olenna

Olenna lifted her reports from the Iron Throne. She had pulled them again, having just spoken to the Queen.
The reports confirmed her intuitions of the Queen and her personal preferences in a mate. She had truly held out some hope that she could work the Queen into marrying both Margaery and Sansa. She had hoped that the Queen would not be given any other choice of viable women to wed. She had quickly determined that the Queen would never marry a man unless it was a shame marriage, like one to Loras as they both pursued their true inclinations behind closed doors.

The Queen could sleep with Loras to conceive children, that Margaery and Sansa along with her would have happily helped raise as their own shared children with Daenerys.

Olenna sighed. Daenerys Targaryen with Margaery Tyrell and Sansa Stark on her arms would have been an unstoppable force. House Targaryen had formerly shown no problem with incest and marrying multiple partners.

That had all gone out the window, as the saying went, with one left cross to the Queen’s chin. Arya Stark had stormed into the throne room and unknowingly claimed the Queen with her fire and passion.

Arya had beat the living shit out of the Queen, and all Daenerys wanted to do since then was hold the girl’s hand and coo over her. Yes, the game was up.

Margaery and Sansa were beautiful and intelligent. But the one thing neither of these women had, was the martial spirit. They were born and raised to be masters of the Game of Thrones, and masters in the bedroom.

Even Sansa had learned those lessons well now. Margaery was not wearing her Dragon Glass amulet as much without Olenna to prompt her, but the one time she had worn it, she had been shocked and most pleased to see Sansa and Margaery at Eddard’s war council. What was more shocking was the fact that they were speaking up, and everyone was listening and were obviously anxious to hear what they had to say.

Damn that Eddard was a great man. He had women at his war council!

Olenna shook her head at the greatness of Eddard Stark. The man was ahead of his time.

What she heard at the war council made her pay rapt attention. When she had met Eddard on his journey south during Robert’s rebellion, she had been smitten. He was handsome in that rugged way - his face attractive, but not perfect. It was the sense of honor and prowess he exuded that had made her wet for the man.

She still had some of her youth then. It would have been a May / December relationship, but it could have worked. She would have left Mace if she could have had Eddard, but she knew it was impossible. Eddard could not even conceive of not fulfilling his duties as his brother’s stand in for Catelyn Tully.

Catelyn Tully was not worthy of the man, in Olenna’s opinion. She could have supported Eddard so much better than that sanctimonious harpy from the Riverlands. She could have helped Eddard to take the Iron Throne, and then brought the realm willingly under their reign.

She would have played the Game of Thrones in King’s Landing for her lover and husband. She had seen clearly that he was not made for the intrigue of the Iron Throne - the man was just too honest, and full of honor. Those around the Iron Throne would have eaten him up alive. His honor would have made him a lamb among wolves, ironically.

The man did not know of greed and avarice, and thus was blind to it. That is where Olenna would have come in. She had those emotions in spades, but controlled them. She would have crushed any vermin that dared to threaten her husband!

They could have ruled as equals. Each would bring unique strengths to the Iron Throne.

That is where she would have come in with her unique talents. She would have annihilated his enemies within three months, and none would have known it was happening until it was too late to act to save themselves. Varys was already in place. He would have gladly bound his cart to hers. He wanted a just peace for the people. That is what she and Eddard could have given them all. He would have been very loyal, under those circumstances.

Now through her Dragon Glass Eye she saw that the man had grown. He had become a master of Game of Thrones. She still had her doubts about how long he could survive in King’s Landing without herself or Margaery (and now Sansa) at his side to take on the political enemies that he was ill-equipped to fight. He needed to fight his enemies on the battlefield. He needed to fight his foes face-to-face. Eddard Stark needed a strong woman to do his knife fighting for him. A woman that would protect his back from the slithering rats and vipers that the Iron Throne would always attract.

But alas, it was not meant to be.

The one place that Olenna was still able to observe Margaery and keep tabs on her, at least, was in Sansa’s bedroom where her Dragon Glass Eye spent time on the bust that the girls put their necklaces on.

Sansa had become an absolute slut in Olenna’s absence. They were fucking every night. They would fuck and sleep and then wake in the middle of the night to fuck again and then wake up to make love again early in the morning. Olenna would be working late on papers and making plans deep into the night, and occasionally looking into the scrying dish. Often her granddaughter and Sansa were going at it like bunnies again.

They were definitely making up for lost time.

Her thoughts went back to Daenerys and Arya. How different. She wondered if she would have to go to King’s Landing and remove the scales from their eyes herself. It seemed they were mooning over each other behind each other’s back.

Tyrion, the little slimy dwarf, had started up a pool. The man was indeed desperate. The gold dragons his sister was costing him was making him desperate to win big on his bets about when the Queen and Arya would consummate their love.

Olenna did not truly worry. Both women were fiery and passionate. They would find each other.

Olenna read over word of Arya’s amazing healing properties. She tapped her fingers on the desk. Both the Queen and Arya apparently had supernatural healing powers. They were magical. She had consulted with her own Grand Maester, and he had confirmed that the human body could not heal at the rates the Queen and Arya displayed.

Now she was hearing strange reports of Cersei suddenly displaying amazing strength and rapid healing after all the fights she was getting in. What was happening with her? Why were these women being filled with this power? Why now?

That was just another reason for the Queen and Arya to become Queen and Consort. They were both blessed with unique gifts. They must be destined for each other. Damn if Eddard Stark had not divined that also. The man was definitely a crafty wolf.
Olenna wished that one of the two women had Margaery’s drive and fire when it came to claiming her mate. She wanted that settled to make her own plans easier. She knew that Daenerys and Arya were destined, but until it happened there would be risk until the matter was satisfied satisfactorily.

If something were to happen to Arya, she feared what Daenerys might become. She had controlled her anger and wrath thus far, but it was still in her bosom, locked up tight. The world did not need that beast unleashed again.

Daenerys Targaryen was Nymeria reborn and then more. She was a great tactician, and a great swordsman herself. She fought on the frontlines. The reports of what she had done to Qarth, Astropo, Meereen and Volantis were staggering.

Finally, a woman who had both strength and cunning.

\textit{Dammit!} Olenna thought again.

She had been born a generation too early! One generation later Eddard Stark had come into the world, and now one generation later again another great physical ruler had been born and risen to power. Either were capable of leading Westeros to greatness \textit{and} peace.

Olenna was a confident woman. She could have found the key to Eddard’s heart if she had been of his age. She would have made sure Eddard had been promised to her. They would have been so great together.

Now Daenerys Targaryen had come upon Westeros. Margaery had opened her eyes to the possibilities of loving a woman. She had truly never considered it before she discovered her granddaughter and her incestuous hens fucking like weasels.

As a rule, she wanted power in her lovers. Luthor had been very handsome and virile in the sack. It was his intellect that had been lacking.

Daenerys has the power that made Olenna wet. She was wise enough not to limit her choices now that her eyes had been opened. She now was sure she could actually love a woman or even \textit{women}, if necessary.

Olenna got up, and walked slowly around the room. Her arthritis had been acting up. \textit{What I could do in these time if I was young again!} Olenna sighed. She stopped such silly thoughts. She would help her granddaughter and lover achieve greatness, and work the levers she could to help Eddard and Daenerys achieve their aims. Great people inspired Olenna.

Olenna’s mind went back to the Queen’s visit earlier in the day. She had coming winging in from the east on her black dread. She had not bothered to come out and see the mighty black dragon, with her damn arthritis flaring up. The castle had been atwitter enough as it was. The Queen had flown her dragon low over the roofs and had the fucking balls to fly her dragon \textit{sideways} between the two east towers, that only had thirty feet of separation between them. There was no fucking margin for error, and still Daenerys had done it. Just for the thrill of the doing. She could hear the screams of adulation all the way from her room.

The woman had no fucking fear!

The Queen had come to her and bowed the knee to her! Gods she could love this woman. She exuded the power of command and yet had all the charms of a Lysene courtesan.

The Queen had then given her scroll from Eddard Stark. She had been amazed at what this man had become. Then the Queen told her of her plans and her Game of Thrones with the all Great Houses of Westeros under her sphere of influence.

Olenna had been wet with the double blows of greatness from both Eddard Stark and Daenerys Targaryen. She wanted them both!

She calmed down. She pledged to the Queen her total support. She was too old to do otherwise.

Daenerys had left shortly after talking to Olenna, and then went to meet her son in his audience room. Olenna smiled. The Queen had come to her first. The woman knew the true power in Highgarden. She knew Daenerys had discussed her façade of facts to her son. She would never betray the Queen. She saw the right of things way better than her husband or son ever had or could. She would further the Queen’s deception.

She sat back down.

She had other things to consider.

Olenna was sure that combined Eddard Stark and Daenerys Targaryen would defeat the Ice King she was now sure existed.

She had talked to the Grand Maester of Magic, Marwyn. The Ice King was indeed the immediate threat. But other threats were still waiting in the wings.

Magic was fading, and would in time die. That would upset the balance of the world. The Maester had convinced her that his fellow Maesters were enamored and blinded by their love of Science.

Marwyn had told Olenna that there was older magic that had gone into slumber but if the ‘high’ magic died, these old dark magic would awaken and loose ancient banes and monsters. He had told her of worse things.

He had mastered the Dragon Glass and had been shocked by vision of the world without magic. He had seen a world that was out of control and out of balance. His visions showed a world that would finally careen into death.

A world poisoned by science and heated to the point the world’s atmosphere and oceans would rebel. Whole species would die out in generations. Disease and blight would run rampant.

The worst were visions were ones of man taking science to the extremes in making weapons. Weapons that could destroy cities with one blow and send out poisoned death into the air and water. Fires would rage and the ash would blacken the sky and blight the sun. The sky would rain acid. Most if not all live would be destroyed.

Olenna had believed the man.

The Maesters would have to be opposed and brought down.

If old magic were loosed, then they would have to be opposed by a people who did not believe in them.

Yes, indeed the times were getting very interesting. She felt alive with possibilities and challenges. To navigate all the threats and pitfalls Olenna would have to be on her toes.

She grimaced feeling her feet ache. She sighed.

If only she wasn’t so old.
Melisandre

Melisandre was studying Castle Black, her red eyes taking in every detail. She burned with an inner rage over what these men had done to her husband. Their betrayal of Jon had been traitorous. She was angry that Jon had forbidden her and Ygritte from extracting maximum revenge.

They had debated how best to take back what was Jon’s. Ygritte had half-joked about leaving Westeros and journeying to Essos, finding a nice quiet place to live there. She and Jon knew that was not possible, and deep down Ygritte knew it too.

The threat of the Ice King needed to be confronted and defeated at the Wall. It was the way of things. If he was not defeated at the locus of the Wall, he would never be defeated. The flames of R’hllor made that clear.
