Deities’ Chessboard

Posted originally on the Archive of Our Own at http://archiveofourown.org/works/5418344.

| Rating: | Explicit |
| Archive Warning: | Graphic Depictions Of Violence, Rape/Non-Con, Underage |
| Category: | F/M, Gen, M/M |
| Fandom: | Batman (Movies - Nolan), Batman - All Media Types, Superman - All Media Types, Iron Man (Movies), Man of Steel (2013) |
| Relationship: | Clark Kent/Bruce Wayne, Pepper Potts/Tony Stark |
| Character: | Batman/Bruce Wayne, Clark Kent/Superman, Tony Stark/Ironman, Diana/Wonder Woman, Oliver Queen/Green Arrow, Selina Kyle/Catwoman, Alfred Pennyworth, Joker, Dick Grayson, Lucius Fox, Jason Todd, Pepper Potts, Leslie Thompkins, Thomas Elliot, Jonathan Crane, OCs, Lex Luthor, Darkseid, Loki, Lois Lane, Martha Kent, Harleen Quinzel, Steve Rogers/Captain America, Thor, Hugo Strange, Bruno Mannheim, Tony Zucco, Hero - Character |
| Additional Tags: | Rape/Non-con Elements, Swearing, Underage Drinking, Underage Smoking, Angst, Friendship, Canon-Typical Violence, Alternate Universe, Torture, Injury Recovery, Anal Sex, Explicit Language, Explicit Sexual Content, Vaginal Sex, Dubious Consent, Oral Sex |
| Series: | Part 3 of Black Butterfly |
| Stats: | Published: 2015-12-13 Completed: 2017-10-07 Chapters: 91/91 Words: 832919 |

Deities’ Chessboard

by abcd

Summary

Bruce regarded the void on the other side of the bed; the mattress was cold. He was left alone long ago and though Bruce had his back turned then, Clark could have sensed he wasn’t sleeping. But Clark didn’t. He felt the weight of so many things circling him: a smug, enigmatic Oliver Queen, a sneering Princess, a Clown freed from his box, an orphan boy who hated him, the feeling of a looming menace and a disabled Batman who struggled with his friends’ help to catch up with time.

Bruce gazed at the stormy night outside his bedroom’s window and wondered how his life became a weird rabble of humans, superheroes and gods…
Chapter 1

The space was pitch black without any source of light but neither of them needed light. Or oxygen. Two shapeless shadows talking avidly, only the sparkles from their eyes visible.

“What is it that you want?” the smaller shadow demanded and his roar was clearly tired as much as he hid it under anger.

A hard croak answered him from the larger shadow; both of them were larger than life, rippling intangible giants, but the one was even bigger.

“I liberated you so I demand your allegiance and obedience.”

“Very authentic that one!” the sarcasm vibrated his voice. “As if I believed that you did it from ‘goodness of heart’… Spill it!”

The other grunted and steam left his nostrils.

“I think you already know what I want. You’re clever after all… though your recent disgrace says otherwise” his chuckle was like thunder.

Teeth rattling were heard from the smaller shadow.

“Then why you want to associate with someone disgraced?”

“Because the fact I saved you from disgrace will make you loyal to your benefactor and your thirst to wreak revenge on those who have disgraced you, will make you an asset to my plans.”

The smaller shadow snorted.

“You wish to be the ruler of this planet - throughout the ages, everyone like you wants the same.”

“I’m not like the losers you mention…” he sniggered “I’m not like you and your kind!”

“Of course you’re not” the arching of an eyebrow was almost audible.

“I give you the generous opportunity to be with me when the Kryptonian is smashed” teeth rattled “he’s the one who has to fall for this planet to kneel and you’ll get your revenge on the one who vanquished you.”

The second shadow’s voice was lower resembling a hiss.

“It wasn’t the Kryptonian who defeated me neither Thor…” and you’re stupid to believe that Superman is the crucial protector of this shitty planet…

“Then?” for the first time interest hued the larger shadow’s nonchalant, arrogant growl.

The smaller shadow stretched its posture.

“I’ll serve you to conquer this damn planet…” he avoided answering the question.

“Vanish!” he corrected him.

“And smash the Kryptonian and the other superheroes” his voice filled with contempt and then became dead serious. “But I want my reward.”

“Name it. I always gratify my loyal servants.”

The second shadow felt the pang from being called a servant.

“You’ll leave Batman unspoiled and… Bruce Wayne. For me…” he uttered and his yellow irises flashed locking with the abyss of his ‘master’. His irises had lost their red-blood quality since his recent defeat.

A roar-like laughter shook the void where their meeting was taking place.

“Two mortals? Two mere humans?” he inquired sarcastic. “What special two mortals could have? I can erase them with my breath!”

“Don’t make the mistake to underestimate Batman and… the Kryptonian loves Bruce Wayne” he retorted unfazed from the heavy jeering and kept his silence for a couple of seconds.

The enormous shadow huffed.

“I’m aware that the Kryptonian loves the worthless mortal, which is…pathetic” he spat “as it is your interest in him” his satisfaction for insulting the other was more than clear. “Actually, I plan to have him killed so to break the Kryptonian’s…” he laughed “heart!”

The second shadow jolted as if hit by an electric current.

“Bruce Wayne is important” he replied indifferent for the other’s jeer. “You can’t squash Superman while the mortal is by his side. And you definitely can’t kill Wayne!”

The larger of the two shadows bulked up from anger for his subordinate’s last demanding expression.

“I’ll grant you Batman: he won’t be a problem in combat. But Superman’s lover will be annihilated!”

“I want Bruce Wayne!” he lowered his tone. “It’s my reward; the only reward I care about… And you don’t want him killed either: If he is killed Superman will be alarmed to your schemes and will come against you with his allies…” he knew better than anyone that your mate’s death can be not only the greatest, deepest wound but also the greatest motive.

Again an arrogant snort.

“Let them come! They’re specks, pests to be mashed…”

“You’ll need more than mere strength to triumph and Wayne’s death won’t help your cause” his voice became serious. “You promised me a reward after all and I promise you that you’ll get the Kryptonian.”

“Gotham is fuckin’ quiet, man – that’s kind ov creepy…” the younger of the boys puffed the smoke from his cigarette.

“Are you scared?” the second turned to him smirking.

They were sprawled on the rooftop of a long abandoned building in the center of the Narrows; the boy with the cigarette scrutinized the road underneath while the second boy gazed at the cloudy
October sky. The smoker sniggered.

“I don’t live near the City Hall with my granny and I’m not called ‘Dick’!” he jeered.

Dick narrowed his eyes and his friend arched his eyebrows challenging; his friend was younger than him but his body, posture and attitude made him look the same age. Jason was born and raised in Narrows after all, living with his alcoholic, drug addict mother.

“Yeah…” Dick shrugged “you’re called ‘Jason’ among other things and because you live in Narrows and stick that thing to your mouth you think you’re a badass…” his voice became as challenging.

Jason snorted and a sly, crooked grin engraved his child face that struggled to look adult before its time.

“Sure… Littl’ Dickie can sniff at us now - Batman is his pal after all…” his blue eyes glistened.

Dick jolted at this and gritted his teeth stilling his eyes on his friend.

“I’m here with you, you big mouth asshole! And I’m not Batman’s pal - he just saved me from that motherfucker! But anyways Batman is dead…” he concluded indifferent hiding his true emotions: fear on the memory of Joker threatening him, anger because that sonovabitch killed his family and Brian, sorrow as he re-watched the scenes from the old factory.

Jason with a jerk tossed his finished cigarette to the street under them.

“Horseshit! Ever’on’ knows that he isn’t a human - he can’t die. Ya pissed yarself and don’t know what ya saw…”

Dick shook his head and looked at the younger boy who lit a second cigarette with a smug expression as if he was doing the smartest thing in the world. He cocked an eyebrow at the spectacle.

“I know what I saw! He pushed me away just before the whole damn floor fell on him. He said to me to leave… but I didn’t and then a woman came and…and she was desperate, tearful trying to save him…but he told her to take me and leave…and she did though I was listening her sobbing as we ran away…and when we were out the entire building collapsed.”

Jason was snorting all the time sipping from his beer bottle and hit his bottle to Dick’s neglected one when his friend stopped his narration that left him gazing at the sky with blank eyes as if the scenes were played there.

“Ya need to cut beer…” Jason burst into loud laughter and Dick clenched his teeth, grabbed his bottle and drunk a large amount with his blazed eyes glaring at his friend.

“That’s the truth!”

Jason tilted his head on the right in disbelief.

“People saw him, dude! After that night.”

Dick’s patience was over and he smashed his beer on the concrete.

“They’re assholes! He couldn’t have made it!” he shouted and Jason giggling raised his palms in surrender.

“OK, dude, OK! Cool now… What yar granny gonna say if yar fine clothes are drenched in beer?”
Dick huffed exasperated and crossed his arms pouting, his eyes looking at the apartments building opposite them. Jason was a nice chap, a funny company but sometimes was unbearable. Like now that he reminded him of his granny: he had left her apartment after making sure she was fast asleep. He didn’t want her to know about his nightly excursions neither about his...shady friend.

Suddenly, he took in what the TV in the opposing leaving room was showing: Superman was landing at a rooftop carrying in his arms Bruce Wayne wrapped in his cape. Another stupid, fucking TV gossip show making tales about those two. Dick pointed with his index.

“You see? Only scums like Wayne worm out of troubles… Decent people like my family and Brian never got a superhero save them…” he shook his head and spat in contempt.

Jason stood up and approached him, looking at the same TV set.

“But ya did…” he retorted and Dick glared at him so the younger boy shrugged. “Ya’re right, pal” he sighed “yar people’s death was unfair…” he patted him and his eyes lost their sneering quality.

Dick nodded and looked again at the TV screen that still showed the same scene.

“Because of him…” he spat. “Look at him: Batman died trying to save people and Superman ran to save that pussy…”

Jason whistled.

“Ya really uttered a bad word!”

Dick glared at him, his raven hair waving on the light breeze.

“He’s really a pussy, man…” Jason shook his head. “Look how Superman holds him… It’s easy to figure why the Super freak ran behind him instead of being with Batman savin’ those kids… Ever’on’ says it – mom says it.”

The older boy pouted appalled.

“Wayne is disgusting! Whining and crying so others feel sorry for him and save his ass…”

Jason chuckled.

“He needs that ass, huh?”

Dick turned to his friend, his lips curled in disgust.

“He didn’t do anything to avenge his parents; he prefers to hide behind others wiping his fake tears pretending the grief- stricken but I know that he just cares for the money his parents left him…”

Jason sniggered putting his hands on his pockets.

“Don’t know, man... He gave work to mom an’ rehab. He gives her a big salary and a fund ‘cause she’s a single mother and that gives us the rent and food…an’ cigarettes” he laughed “an’ mom is better now that goes to the Haven” he took in Dick’s enraged eyes. “Not that I like the guy… He’s worse than the other rich buffoons ‘cause he pretends to care… as if we’re stupid! But c’me on, dude! How was he to avenge his parents? He was younger than ya” he cocked his eyebrows sarcastic. “Ya can’t blame him when ya too don’t do anything to avenge yars…”

Dick’s eyes flashed and he gritted his teeth: that was an insult and he felt the urge to punch Jason. Yet his friend was right. Jason smirked reading his expression.
“That’s gonna change…” he spat.

Jason narrowed his sly eyes and grinned.

“Yuuuuup! Now that Batman is…dead we need a new hero, huh? Ya!” he chortled.

Dick’s face twisted in anger and Jason stared at him challenging waiting his attack however the older boy looked at his wristwatch.

“I must go - I don’t want my granny to figure I left.”

Jason shrugged forgetting instantly his provoking attitude.

“I don’t have such problems…” and watching his friend leaving. “Where yar granny finds the money for such clothes?”

Dick shrugged without turning and Jason snorted looking proudly at his worn jeans and T- shirt. Although Wayne’s fund and salary was big enough he didn’t want to wear fancy clothes like Dick’s – not that his mom was saving any money for his attire except than those for the times the social worker visited them…

Bruce sat at the large balcony overlooking the wood covered mountain slope and the glimmering blue endless horizon; it was over a month he has been in Tony’s secluded villa in Thasos Island. Tony had built that house for the times he wanted truly to be left alone – there weren’t many times he wanted that but when he did he wished to be perfect, he had explained to him once sitting in this balcony. Bahamas, Caribbean, Hawaii weren’t secure enough for Tony’s reclusive part – razzi could discover him easily there. But here? In a small Greek island so out of the limelight? Tony had pouted and shaken his head: no way, little guy – they’re too stupid for me!

And every day at this time he’d come and watch the sun set in the sapphire waters. Smell the pine trees and inhale the salty light breeze that brushed his face, the only part of his body that felt normal…

He sighed; being in that round shaped balcony brought him tranquility. Although nostalgia and worry for his city lurked underneath.

But the confinement of his throne-like, unbelievably comfy chair was always there, hugging him, soothing him yet at the same time reminding him of his disability. No, he wasn’t ungrateful: Clark’s creation was wondrous, another token of his love and permitted him to move unassisted and without mechanisms and wheels giving him the false impression that things were like before.

No, he wasn’t ungrateful! He should have died in that factory – every other human would… and sometimes Bruce felt a horrible pang for the injustice: people dying daily from lesser causes and he survived because a god-like being loved him. That’s what he needed: more survivor’s guilt…

And it was his choice to save those children knowing that his body wouldn’t last even without the building collapsing over him so he was really a spoiled brat feeling like this… Selfish, ungrateful… He had all these things that no other paraplegic in the world had: alien operations and treatments that saved him, a gym with organs no eye had seen till now, high tech hydromassage pool, this magnificent wheelchair… No, no wheelchair… Throne… Like the one Clark granted him in his heart…

He closed his eyes and inhaled deeply feeling the breeze pleasantly cooling his face.
“My mind and…my ears will be constantly with you…” Clark had sighed and kissed him lightly on the lips before taking off for Metropolis.

Yesterday at 14.00 hours and now was 26 hours and 27 minutes since he left… He pressed his lips: Clark had a job to maintain and the two weeks’ leave he took to stay with him in this beautiful, peaceful island were too much and he had to return.

“I’ll come back ASAP!” he had turned his head midair and cried to him but instantly he changed his course and stormed to that same balcony to hug him and suck his neck passionately. “I don’t wanna leave…” he had whined like an oversized baby.

Bruce smiled remembering those super hot and soft lips nibbling his flesh giving him goose bumps even now… well, to the percentage of his body that still could feel.

The discreet clearing of throat startled him but only mentally; even though his upper body hadn’t been as heavily damaged as his lower and was able to sense and make movements, it wasn’t perfect. He turned flushed for being caught and grinned to Alfred who had opened soundlessly the arch shaped door.

“Master Bruce, I’m sorry to interrupt your daydream” he stretched the woolen black cardigan he carried and muffled his young master’s back.

“Alfred, we’re not in Gotham… Here the weather is too mild even in late October; I don’t feel any cold…”

His butler however wasn’t persuaded.

“The locals are calling it ‘the little summer’ yet you overexerted yourself in the gym and your body is still warm from the effort so even this sweet breeze could easily bring you down with the flu.”

His voice was composed, business like but for Bruce was easy to discern Alfred’s dread for his health; Alfred knew – even better than Bruce - how sensitive his organism was at this phase. He took his butler’s hand in his and shook it though his hand was a bit shaky from the exercise.

“You’re right, Alfred.”

But Alfred cocked an eyebrow.

“Thank God for that promise…” he mumbled and Bruce chuckled – indeed, the night he left Leslie’s clinic to find Joker at the factory had promised Alfred and Leslie to surrender to their treatment afterwards. “Sir, if I may… perhaps you should take it easy with the exercises?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I just want to feel something, Alfred” he looked at his butler’s eyes. “Below the waist … not that my upper torso feels entirely normal…” Alfred bit his inner lip. “Even now my lower body feels only Clark’s touch…”

Alfred cocked an eyebrow.

“It seems that Master Kent has magical fingers” he remarked shrewdly.

“That and he knows the few neurons that survived and focuses his efforts on stimulating them in hopes that they will develop synapses to cover the lost neurons’ functionality. Or their overstimulation will fasten the regeneration process.”
“Then, maybe you should let him and Master Anthony with Lucius do their work and just follow Jor El’s instructions? Since you don’t want any human doctors examine you…”

Bruce stared at him and blinked.

“Leslie examines me” he smiled “actually, she did it daily all these days she was here. And you know that if another doctor sees my body will realize that I was treated with alien technology."

Alfred cleared his throat.

“Dr. Eliot calls every day to learn your news despite the fact you rarely speak with him” he arched his eyebrows in emphasis. “And as Master Kent mentioned several times Dr. Elliot has worked with Superman again so the “alien treatment” won’t be a surprise to him. Especially when Miss Vale’s footage has been all this time – what you youths call it? – viral.”

The younger man struggled to hide a grin on the word and casted him an exasperated stare that made Alfred sigh.

“If I may, sir: It’s a very long time since little Thomas Elliot bullied you, Master Bruce…”

“You know it’s not that…” he licked his lips and didn’t elaborate on the subject. “And it’s not like I do anything, Alfred: the machines work my legs and I just train my arms so to not depend on you even to move my body” he arched his eyebrows. “And if I manage to feel some pain it will be better than feeling nothing” he took in Alfred’s shadowed eyes. “While under Falcone’s captivity my right arm was crippled, I couldn’t do any movement with it but” he inhaled deeply and his stare became more intense “it ached all the time… and the pain was horrible, unbearable and I hated it but now I realize…”

“You know, Bruce” Ra’s’ voice returned to his ears “pain reminds us that we’re alive…”

“What is it that you realize, Master Bruce?” Alfred squatted to his side, his voice low.

Bruce turned to him.

“That pain indicates that something is still alive…”

Alfred felt his young Master’s agony and the same pang pierced his guts. But Bruce upon seeing that touched his butler’s upper arm and pressed his lips.

“I don’t regret what I did that night, Alfred: I’ll do it again if I must” he shook his head. “And I’m not whining…even if I stay paraplegic all my life.”

Alfred cupped Bruce’s hand that held his upper arm.

“You won’t, Master Bruce” he widened his eyes in emphasis. “You’ll walk again and I’ll be the one whining as I’ll chase you trying to persuade you to stop climbing on rooftops…” he chuckled and Bruce laughed lighthearted. “But you need to be patient and careful because it’s too soon and in your current condition the slightest pain you may feel could be caused from a grave injury that will delay your recovering more.”

“I’m sorry, master” he said to Ra’s in the training room panting and covered with sweat “I just wanted to do some more to… to become better…”

“But if you don’t listen to your trainer, you’ll injure yourself” the Demon’s Head replied benevolently. “Your arm is almost healed, do you want that to be thwarted by a new injury, caused “by your own stupidity?” he yanked gently his small head with a finger under his jaw.

“You’re right, Alfred” he smiled “as always…”

Alfred grinned, patted Bruce’s hand and stood up.

“May I ask what would you like for dinner?”

Bruce looked flabbergasted.

“I just finished the pancakes and the milk” he gestured to the small round glass table where a book lay forgotten “I don’t think that I’ll need any dinner…”

He was ready to say that he wasn’t hungry at evenings but Alfred scowled at him. He had many drugs to take.

“You promised, sir.”

Bruce closed his eyes amused.

“I did, right?” he chuckled. “Let’s leave it to Selina’s choice – she has a great taste…”

Alfred shook his head.

“If cat food could be concerned suit for humans too…Because your lady friend indulges Hero’s choices more than her own.”

Bruce laughed.

“She’s going to spoil the kitten, huh?” he asked and his eyes filled with love.

The butler cocked his eyebrow.

“As you do. However you are not going to evade the important subject of your dinner” Bruce shook his head. “All these days we are here you get Master Anthony or Master Clark to choose the meals.”

Bruce’s melancholy reached his eyes.

“And now both of them are not here…”

Alfred understood his young master’s feelings; this last fifteen days Bruce had all his friends around him filling his days and dragging his thoughts away from his temporary – Alfred was adamant about this – disability. Not that Miss Kyle or Hero didn’t do the same now but still he missed his old friend and the man he loved as he would have missed Miss Kyle and Hero. His young Master had lived almost all his life without his family and now that he got a family back he wanted its members always there.

He placed his hand on Bruce’s shoulder and was happy that the youth felt it immediately.

“They’ll come again, sir; it won’t be long. They can’t last much away from you.”

Bruce smiled and nodded, a white fur ball catching his eyes as Hero crossed the glistening tiled surface, his small feet slipping every now and then. The chair floated on his thought and brought him to meet the kitten. Yet he couldn’t bend to take him; while he was in the Fortress he could make such movements but that stopped as soon as he left the place since Fortress’ power didn’t flow inside him.
He still could move the damaged part of his body and even stand and walk using his other mental abilities but after there was a high toll to pay: pain, a killing exhaustion and days of wasted effort as his body’s condition deteriorated. So he decided to not do that since there wasn’t a critical situation.

“How did you manage to escape Selina?” he chuckled hiding his sadness.

Alfred’s lips became a tight line in bitterness sensing his young master’s craving to take the kitten and the crushing disappointment of his inability to do so. He walked there.

“And I had closed the door, young Master Hero” Bruce laughed on the pompous title “how did you come out?”

The kitten raised his head as if listening to Alfred and meowed as if replying and the butler nodded.

“Of course…You’re Batman’s kitten…” however his smart, perusing eyes didn’t miss an imperceptible shadow passing Bruce’s eyes on the mention of Batman – the young man inescapably faced with the comparison of his current disability, though he always hid it from the others.

But Hero as if understanding Bruce’s difficulty, jumped and fast climbed on his lap clinging on the quilt blanket that muffled his legs. Bruce’s eyes flashed happy and he beamed to Alfred who grinned relieved.

The young man petted tenderly the kitten’s small head and Hero purring stared at him with his big eyes.

“You smell exactly as the old Hero and your fur has the same feeling, buddy…” he smiled at him. “He is the most beautiful kitten in the world, don’t you think, Alfred?”

Alfred was absorbed in removing the few hairs that had fallen on the blanket and Bruce rolled his eyes making the kind butler grin.

“Can I say otherwise?” Bruce tilted his head looking pointedly and Alfred chuckled: young master Bruce as a child always wanted a pet but Ms. Wayne’s allergies didn’t allow it – and Hero although not the old kitten was more than a pet. “He is indeed the most beautiful kitten I ever saw…but I haven’t seen many, sir…” he teased his young master because he loved how this bickering made him relax.

“Alfred…” Bruce protested pouting and Alfred patted his shoulder laughing.

“You’re spoiling him…”

“And you spoil me” Bruce answered stubbornly “but you don’t have any problem with that!” he caressed the kitten that stretched on his master’s lap nuzzling Bruce’s chin to urge his friend to pet him more.

“Oh! He is a charmer, Master Bruce!” Alfred shook his head and relished the scene before him.

The kitten that now was almost three months old closed his eyes enjoying the caress and purred louder.

“You know, cat’s purring is actually healing for the cat and the human…”

Bruce raised his head to see Selina who leaned on the wall, her arms crossed. She was smiling fondly.
The kitten felt his friend’s distraction and annoyed jerked his small paw and touched Bruce’s hand that had stopped petting him. Bruce though the kitten never used his nails when playing with him twitched startled; it was something almost imperceptible but it began from his pelvis and that was new and pleasant. He resumed his brushes and Hero lay on his back showing his belly for Bruce to tickle as he was doing with his old friend – not without sorrow on remembering how unfairly that kitten had died…

“I guess, you know better, huh?” he winked to Selina.

Selina shrugged.

“Of course, sweetie…”

Alfred fixed the cardigan on Bruce’s back.

“If you’ll excuse me, sir and madam, I have to improvise with your dinner since Master Bruce doesn’t want to ease my work.”

He turned to leave.

“Hmmm….Alfred…”

The kind butler stopped at his heels, his intrigued stare meeting Selina’s, before turning to Bruce.

“Yes, Master Bruce?”

“I wonder” he laughed as he avoided playfully Hero’s paw and locked mischievously his eyes with Alfred’s “if you could cook that delicious food we ate at the restaurant Tony took us? At Chrisi Ammoudia?”

Alfred remembered that night: the restaurant was closed for the season but Tony made arrangements to open for them and only for them. It was a great location; the small outdoor restaurant was built on a hill invading the crystal sea and overlooking the beach that stretched on a range of over one kilometer and the mountains that circled the bay. The garden restaurant was decorated with trees and plants and beautiful secret light that played with moon’s shine exactly as the soft yet enchanting music played with the sound of the sea waves.

Master Anthony had no problem creating a portable ramp to the hill’s peak where the restaurant was. He understood that as much as they loved to carry Master Bruce in their arms, this was embarrassing for him who was used to do things himself. And although Clark’s throne-like chair could take Bruce wherever he wanted, they wouldn’t like for the staff to suspect the alien technology. So the ramp offered the best cover.

It was a splendid night, Leslie still with them and also Lucius who had come for the weekend. The moon was full and Master Bruce couldn’t stop going to the edge of the balcony to gaze at the view, Master Kent watching him hungry; sometimes followed unable to stay away from him and other times seeing Master Anthony’s disapproving stare stayed grudgingly at his seat.

“And which dish is that you desire the most, Master Bruce?”

The young man seemed unable to decide and then with widened eyes like an enthusiastic kid looked at Alfred.

“Mmm… ‘Pastitsio’ and some trigono dessert with ice cream?”
Selina giggled at his lusting expression and Alfred though an esteemed butler couldn’t avoid doing the same.

“What?” Bruce asked confused letting Hero mouth his finger and lick it like a lollypop.

They couldn’t say that his child-like greedy sparkle in his eyes were the best gift after those torturing last months and Alfred had his excuse ready.

“You don’t ask things often but when you do it compensates for all the times you don’t, sir” he mock grumbled. “Thank Goodness it’s still early and I’ll manage till dinner time…”

Bruce blushed.

“Alfred, I…”

Alfred smiled and patted him.

“I’m teasing you, Master Bruce…Miss Kyle, since Hero will accompany Master Bruce, would you care to help me with preparing the dinner?” he took the tray with the empty plate and glass and then the business administration book that rest on the small table. “I suppose you won’t need that, sir?”

But Bruce was busy communicating with glances and grimaces with Selina who mouthed the question: “Me? Cook?”

“Ummm…Yes, Alfred, I don’t think I’ll read.”

The butler walked towards the arch shaped door to the interior pretending that he didn’t notice the youths’ silent communication.

“Miss Kyle, are you coming?”

Selina widened her eyes… panicked, shaking her head to Bruce who just shrugged reassuring her that the kitchen wouldn’t explode.

“Mmmm… Yeah, I’m coming, Alfred…” she said and followed rolling her eyes to Bruce.

As he was left alone with Hero Bruce thought that things weren’t so bad and he was happy to have Alfred, Selina and Hero with him. But Tony’s and Clark’s absence was like a hole in his heart and he knew that Batman shouldn’t be like that and that his disability had started to ruin his spirit as well…and all in all he was acting like a spoiled rich brat…and that was unacceptable, shameful…yet he missed Tony’s cheerfulness and Clark’s touch…

He was seeing in Clark’s eyes that he couldn’t yield his heart and leave so he pressed his lips and formed a smile. He didn’t want Clark leave either and the supper they just had, became a tight knot in his stomach. He caressed Clark’s cheek.

“We know both that you have to go…” his voice wasn’t Batman’s growl but his determination and command was there.

“As soon as my working hours end I’ll come to you…” his voice dropped to a naughty whisper “to sleep with you…”

Bruce rolled his eyes; there wasn’t any need for the naughtiness since Clark didn’t make a move to touch him…intimately since the night he saved his life. He realized with awe that The Man of Steel was really scared that he could smash him crossing the lines during his climax.
“What are you thinking?” Clark asked him.

Bruce smiled.

“That Perry will berate you….”

Clark nodded understanding that he had to go but before taking off he cupped the back of Bruce’s head and captured his rosy, soft lips massaging, sucking and moaning with closed eyes, Bruce’s lips dancing with his.

It must have been minutes because Bruce realized that he was using the technique Ra’s taught him for lasting without air. Clark realized too and hastened to part their lips – he had strained Bruce’s battered lung… He scratched uncomfortably his nape blushing.

“Ugh! I’m sorry, I just wanted something to hold me till…” he sighed “…the next time but I overdid it…”

Bruce immediately took in Clark’s eyes staring his chest and knew that it had nothing to do with lust. The man was panicked trying to make sure that he hadn’t provoked some deterioration to his healing lung. And Bruce was both amused and upset.

“Off you go, Kent! The sooner you go the sooner you’ll be back…”

Clark nodded and touched gently his forehead to Bruce’s.

“You’ll listen to Alfred?”

Bruce shrugged and tilted his head helplessly.

“I promised, didn’t I?”

Clark’s loud laughter that made the world a better place erupted as he took off, his head always turned to Bruce.

“You’re busted, kiddo!” he yelled.

Bruce shook his head.

“Mind the electricity pillars!” he snorted cocking an eyebrow. “And the cables! And the planes!” – if you keep staring at me and not the sky, we’ll have accidents…

Superman winked grinning widely.

“Point taken!”

And that was the last glimpse he got of his face. He had tried to follow his body in the horizon but he soon lost him. He didn’t have a super vision after all…

Bruce’s gaze was lost in the pine trees and the peaceful blue horizon that was painted gold from the setting sun, some clouds glowed in mesmerizing shades of pink and purple; he was running his fingers absentminded to Hero’s rich fur, the kitten following his eyes. Clark didn’t return after his working hours – Bruce had stayed wake in his bed waiting…

He remembered the night at the restaurant. His gaze was snatched by the dark sea that reflected the silver moon’s glow and the sound of a small fishing boat’s engine reached him from afar. And then a magic melody of a sad song filled the warm night. It made a great impression to him drenching his soul in sweet sorrow and the mesmerizing sound of the waves brushing the shore and hitting the vessels that were bound to the small anchorage made the melody even more charming.

He had asked the young woman who during the night was the head of their service. She smiled.

“The verses are from a poem of the ancient poetess Sappho; they speak of a woman who contemplates how fast the time with her lover has passed and her bitterness that she lays alone and forlorn. Then she ponders on love that spreads sufferings to people and concocts fairytales; she admits that love has grabbed her soul and rocked it same as the wind that blows from the mountains and surges and hits the oak trees blustering…”

He had asked from the girl to buy the CD and she gifted it to him. Bruce still felt the same shiver recalling the ambient melody and the verses… He felt like the ancient poetess as a rush of mountain wind shook the trees that surrounded the house and brushed his flushed face… He shuddered…

Hero climbed to his shoulder swiftly, touching his head to Bruce’s neck. Bruce giggled and took the animal in his hands.

“Batman in love…” he jeered himself and the kitten looked at him. “Even worse…” he snorted “Bruce Wayne in love… it’s ridiculous, Hero” he sighed and put Hero on his lap. “I mean it’s… beautiful but…unfitting for someone like me…odd…foolish…inappropriate…and I feel…” he shook his head “It’s not right and it can’t last for long. I can’t be happy for long, can I?”

The kitten meowed with his special way replying and Bruce took it from the armpits and hugged it.

“Like old Hero you always try to make me feel better, huh?” suddenly his eyes narrowed and darkened.

He sensed it before hearing it but it was futile to try anything to avoid it so he just cuddled protectively Hero and let the rush of air claim him…
A big thanks for your warm welcome of the first chapter. Also, I'm sorry about the delay but the last days were crazy...

Last but not least: Merry Christmas to all of you!

“Hey, hey…” Bruce chuckled wrapped in strong arms. He was holding tight Hero who wasn’t used to flying. “I thought that boy scouts didn’t attack their opponents when handicapped!”

He was looking at Clark’s beaming face but also gazed at the magnificent green scenery that ran smoothly under him to end in breathtaking cliffs and then crystal sapphire waters that sparkled under the golden orange rays of the setting sun. And then Superman brought them on the blazing pink sky between purple-blue clouds that crossed the burning yellow sun in its descent, blinding rays scattered to the sky’s upper layers that were still azure.

“Mmmm…I wouldn’t consider handicapped someone who makes Superman drop every other thing and run to him!”

Bruce brushed the kitten reassuringly to calm it.

“You make it sound as if I have a Kryptonite of a thousand miles range…” he cocked an eyebrow. Superman chuckled.

“It is proved that you’re my lucky Kryptonite” he captured Bruce’s lips.

“The latest events show that I’m the lucky one…” he deepened the kiss and then looked at the landscape under them: the forest covered mountain had given its place to a smooth golden beach. A very small bay with no access by foot. “Where are you taking me? You know that this is called kidnapping…”

Superman nuzzled Bruce’s neck sucking the intoxicating perfume that he missed so much.

“Not when the kidnapped enjoys it…” he whispered in a husky voice.

Bruce laughed and Hero as if imitating Clark nuzzled Bruce’s palm.

“Stockholm’s Syndrome…” Bruce retorted to Clark who grunted and landed gently on the fine sand.

“I was thinking - mmm… better dreaming - about some swimming in a deserted beautiful beach.”

Bruce frowned.

“You remember that even here is late October and the sun has almost set?”

“Don’t tell me that the mighty Batman is scared of cold water?” he smiled slyly with a mischievous sparkle in his beautiful eyes.
Bruce narrowed his eyes glaring at him but Clark laughed with his melodic way.

“My baby is cranky? Hm… you missed me so much then?”

“You’re so arrogant, alien!”

The younger man touched his cheek to Clark’s with effort that although he hid perfectly Clark sensed, his guts clenching. Despite the fact it was almost one month and a half since his Star woke from the coma he still faced great difficulties and hurdles in his mobility. Which was expected with the extremity of his injuries that would have killed every other human and had almost claimed Bruce’s life.

“The sea’s temperature is actually very pleasant” Clark said “if it was colder I wouldn’t have suggested it.”

Bruce snorted.

“Suggested? You dragged me here…” his eyes wandered to the scenery “and I’m glad you did: it’s so beautiful and quiet.”

The small bay was defined from a steep cape covered with dense trees and a bare cliff where rocks were almost hovering over the transparent waters. Opposing the open sea loomed the island’s inland with high mountains looking like giants covered in dark green curls as in a nature contest between earth and water. Seagulls’ cries sounded so relaxing in harmony with the waves’ soft melody as they crawled on the seabed that turned to a sudden splash as they crushed on the shore; along with the salty breeze the sensations made Bruce close his eyes to savor the moment.

“And I don’t mind evening swimming” he tilted his head to the side and shrugged, Hero stilling his eyes on his Master’s. “I doubt if I’d sense the temperature…”

The smile vanished from Clark’s face because although Bruce’s voice was indifferent he could discern the exhaustion and disappointment from the futile effort of all these days.

“It’s still early” Bruce said nonchalant seeing Clark’s change of mood; “it’ll take some time before you can threaten me with cold water.”

Superman kneeled on the sand and laid carefully Bruce down fixing the cardigan on his shoulders. Bruce let Hero jump from his lap to the sand and the kitten surged to the spot where two seagulls were standing causing the birds’ surprise and hasty flight.

“I think we’ll have an issue with the bats in the cave…” he chuckled “and if you consider that bats are mice as well as birds… Our fella is too lively…” he said with pride. “Thank you for finding and giving him to me.”

But upon turning his eyes back to Clark found the man staring at him, their faces too close. The Man of Steel was too serious and Bruce stopped smiling too only for Clark to touch his lips.

“How can dark bring light to sun’s life?”

Superman closed his eyes and caressed Bruce’s cheekbone.
“You’re the meaning of my life; I love you from the first time I laid eyes on you. I still jolt in my sleep having nightmares that you died that damn night…”

Bruce felt a pang.

“I’m right here, you saved me.”

Hero returned to them nudging Bruce’s hand to pet him and Bruce obliged to Clark’s amused sigh.

“Ugh! That kitten rivals me!”

“Don’t tell me Superman is jealous of a small kitten?” Bruce teased him and Clark grabbed his upper arms and claimed his lips passionately.

“We’re here for swimming…” he snapped releasing Bruce’s lips and the younger man looked him exasperated.

“But I’m not wearing my swimsuit!”

Clark tilted his head on the side regarding wickedly Bruce’s body, his eyebrow arched.

“Actually… I was counting on that…”

He pushed the cardigan off of Bruce’s shoulders and moved to strip him from the rest of his clothes but Bruce twitched causing Clark’s squinting.

“Not in front of Hero…”

Clark rolled his eyes.

“Because he’ll be traumatized?” he locked eyes with the kitten “Hero turn your eyes on the other side.”

But the kitten kept staring at Bruce and purring making Clark sigh frustrated.

“Like his Master he is stubborn and don’t take orders, huh?” he said watching Bruce caressing Hero’s head, the kitten closing his eyes clearly enjoying it – Clark couldn’t blame Hero for not obeying. “Good thing I brought that…”

Bruce looked with an amused smile at Clark who took out of his cape a take-out container. The Man of Steel grinned slyly to Bruce and opened the container watching eagerly the kitten’s intense reaction: Hero sniffed frantically and looked avidly to the source of the intoxicating smell – a fine piece of salmon fillet grilled slowly.

Bruce’s eyes widened in exasperation as Clark took the container far from him to a dry log washed there years or decades ago and lay dead on the beach. Hero followed him and Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose shaking his head.

“C’me, Hero, c’me” Superman called sweetly.

“He’s a kitten not a puppy!” Bruce tilted his head.

“Right! Ps, ps, ps…Here, kitten…”

He let the container there and the kitten surged heads on. Bruce crossed his arms and glared at Clark that in a blink was again clung to him, grinning smugly.
“You’re devious!” Bruce shook his head disapprovingly.

Clark erupted in laughter.

“I must eliminate the competition… even bribing!” he nibbled Bruce’s lower lip and Bruce bit him softly.

“You’re going to make him obese; he has put much weight.”

It was Clark’s turn to shake his head disapproving.

“Unlike you…”

Bruce rubbed his forehead.

“If I put much weight my body will have more difficulties in managing some mobility…” it was difficult for Clark to understand that he didn’t have much appetite.

“But if you don’t regain the muscle mass that was damaged by the crushing your muscles won’t be able to uphold your body. And with such exhausting training you’re putting yourself through the lack of proper and enough food will lead to your collapse…” his eyes locked with Bruce’s purring their worry.

Bruce sighed and turned his head towards Hero who feeling his Master’s eyes turned to look at him licking with his small tongue the food that had stuck to his muzzle. Bruce smiled fondly and looked at Clark who was watching avidly his eyes’ course to Hero and back to him.

“You talked with Alfred?”

Clark cocked an eyebrow.

“No… I just scan” Bruce rolled his eyes and nodded understanding “the levels of lactic acid in your muscles.” Clark sensed his Star’s grim mood and he didn’t want that to continue. “Now” he inhaled deeply “about that swimming…”

And in a second both Bruce and himself were bare naked: Clark took in Bruce’s impressed stare on Superman’s broad chest with the bulked pectorals that were covered with raven hair: Bruce had seen him naked again but every time was as impressive as the first. Clark blushed and beamed because he was thrilled that Bruce longed for him.

“You like what you see?” he smiled and caressed the pink shade over Bruce’s cheekbones.

Bruce locked eyes with him and smiled shyly.

“You’re perfect…” his awe for the man’s flawless beauty and the awareness of his own deformed legs and torso made his voice hoarse. Not that he ever believed that he was nice looking or that he cared about his appearance…

But Clark cupped his cheeks and claimed Bruce’s lips sucking as if finding water after days in the desert and caressing with his tongue the younger man’s cavity. Without unlocking their lips he lifted gently Bruce in bridal style and brought both of them in the water, he walked, his feet sinking in the soft sand and reached the point where the waters deepened their light emerald color becoming sapphire blue. He tested first the water’s temperature because even if he had scanned it beforehand he wanted to be sure before putting Bruce in. He knew how sensitive he was.
Bruce held Clark’s upper arms and released them as the Man of Steel lowered him slowly flat in the golden-orange hued waters that his upper body sensed that were pleasantly warm. His hands immediately stretched over his head to swim but Clark was holding gently his back with one hand while the other touched the younger man’s chest.

Bruce looked at him.

“Just relax, Star” he used his hand to stretch Bruce’s legs and held his body flat on the water’s surface.

“Easy for you to say…” Bruce snorted and moved his arms gently in the water to stay afloat but Clark touched his face and slowly lowered it more for the water to rinse his hair and reach his ears. He then smiled reassuringly to Bruce who kept his stare on his crystal blue eyes.

“You trust me, right? Close your eyes and focus on the sound of the sea…”

Bruce huffed.

“Do I have a choice?”

Clark chuckled.

“You’re Bruce Wayne, Batman: you always have a choice and the means to assert it but…” he kissed softly the place where Bruce’s heart beat so pleasantly strong “I think that you will consent…”

Clark’s lips on his flesh sent shivers in the healthy part of his spine and he closed his eyes though Clark felt still the tension in his body. Bruce breathed the way Clark knew that it was a relaxation technique.

“Jor El misses so much your games…” he said grinning, his eyes relishing the spectacle of the crystal waters on Bruce’s naked body. Despite the scars his abdominals was as attractive as ever and he wanted so much to kiss that cute belly button… yet he didn’t want to ruin Bruce’s relaxation.

“You don’t play with him?” Bruce inquired without opening his eyes.

The water was massaging softly his body and although he couldn’t feel anything below the waist he knew that it was good for him. Maybe because he projected the feeling from his upper body to the rest of his body.

Clark could sense his Star’s elation and resisted the urge to grab him and share his elation adding more… Yet he was afraid of causing new injuries to the slowly healing human body.

“Kryptonian chess is not my cup of tea…” he chuckled and his hungry eyes roamed Bruce’s naked body taking advantage of the man’s closed eyes though he was sure that Bruce knew.

“What a disappointment for Jor El…” a crooked smile sculpted Bruce’s face that had lost all the tense from the sea’s liberating treatment.

Clark giggled.

“Believe it or not I have disappointed him many times.”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow: the sea’s sound was brushing his ears mingling with Clark’s soft voice and established a really soothing feeling to his tired body that stayed lax on the surface.
“And why not believing it?” he mock sneered “You seem the type to disappoint a noble from Krypton…You’re a farm boy after all…”

Clark couldn’t stop himself with Bruce teasing him like this; playfully, carefree. He wrapped his hands around his armpits, lifted him and kissed roaring his abdominals as the salty sea water ran down. He had his eyes closed devouring the sensation of the wet taut flesh and the sound of Bruce’s heartbeat and giggles.

“So you can’t handle tickling, huh? Smart ass?” he growled unwilling to part with Bruce’s flesh. He had almost lost the man and that had left a tight feeling inside him that he fought all the time to ease.

Bruce took a deep breath to control his giggles.

“You wanted me to relax…” he chuckled “this doesn’t help, you know…” his eyes regarded longingly Clark’s head on his belly as ascended to his chest.

The Man of Steel was feeling Bruce’s back with his strong hands soothing the spots where it still hurt and then lower finding the paths where the neurons had sustained their functionality and rubbed desperately. He had learnt by heart those neurons and stimulated them with every chance because he wanted to encourage Bruce that he’d feel again.

Of course, Jor El had warned that these areas were oversensitive – since they were the only functional – and that made them highly erogenous so their arousal would lead Bruce in deep need since more than half of his body was deprived of any sensory stimulation.

Jor El hadn’t stated it clearly but Clark understood his hesitation if not disapproval for that kind of “treatment”. His father didn’t approve it because he read his son’s fear and unwillingness to engage the frail, healing human in the intense action of having sex. Thus his father as Clark himself considered the whole “procedure” cruel: lighting the fire inside Bruce’s body and then letting him unsatisfied, melting slowly from the oppressed heat.

That killed Clark every time…He wanted to be inside Bruce’s body, he wanted to give him pleasure and soothe his own body that cried after so much time to savor the human’s body… But he couldn’t. He heard the shy moans leaving his Star’s lungs as Clark’s lips sucked desperately his drenched breasts; he heard the frantic beat of Bruce’s heart; he felt the gorgeous body convulsing needy… Above the waist.

Bruce had wrapped his arms around Clark’s neck and nibbled slowly his strong neck. Maybe this time the Man of Steel would make love to him, would see him again as a normal human being and not a half alive thing. His hands slithered to Clark’s back, relishing the sense of perfect bulky muscles breathing power… His heart was beating crazily and his breaths became rasps from want but his groin remained dead; yet it didn’t matter because that was the case the first time Clark touched him and then Clark healed him. Maybe the same would happen again.

He locked his sparkling eyes with Clark’s and claimed his lips, caressing the endless layers of abdominals made of steel. He grinned mentally: if someone had told him few months ago that he’d lust so much for a man that would initiate their intercourse, he’d have snapped at him. But Clark was so beautiful and so kind and loving that Bruce could forget his horrible past in his arms – at least momentarily – and feel like normal people do.

Clark felt his oppressed length hardening and bit his inner lip. It was too soon; he could see how fragile Bruce’s pelvis was…unfortunately.

Bruce could read the signs of arousal and Clark was aroused, his groin twitching and his eyes dark with lust. But then Clark’s eyes lowered and his arousal was gone like the flame of a candle and Bruce searched his eyes frowning. And slowly unclenched his arms and let them touch Clark’s chest; he pressed his lips forming a tight smile.

“I’m supposed to relax, right?” he said and Clark bit his lips.

“I just want it to be perfect for you as for me” Clark breathed staring at the depths of the younger man’s eyes. “I want you to feel everything and be pleased as you deserve…” he touched his forehead to Bruce’s.

“That doesn’t mean that you have to delay your pleasure” Bruce replied coolly. “Your afterglow will be my pleasure as well” his eyes glowed solemnly.

Clark shook his head.

“I can wait, Bruce and, believe me: it’s my honor that you…” he inhaled deeply “you accept and want me; I feel goose bumps right now… There’s nothing I’d want more than make love to you right now” a sharp intake of air “but I want everything to be perfect…”

“And not shatter me…” Bruce laughed though it didn’t feel funny. Actually his guts felt a pang of shame realizing that he was literary pleading to be fucked.

“From the first time, you like it. But you force yourself to feel only the pain because you don’t want to admit that you’re a little slut…”

His cheeks felt hot and he lowered his eyes, Clark immediately felt that something was off and frowned.

“What?” he whispered and rubbed soothingly Bruce’s back.

“How’s Gotham?” he looked him in the eyes.

Clark cocked an eyebrow and gave a crooked smile.

“Don’t tell me you don’t watch the developments through the net and your other…sources.”

“It’s not the same” his voice was cold but Clark knew how much love was hiding inside him. “The last time I was in Gotham was that day almost forty days ago when Jim took my testimony about my kidnapping by the League of Shadows and I had remained all the time in the Manor.”

Clark smiled and caressed Bruce’s wet locks that glimmered in the last rays of sun.

“Your city is unbelievably peaceful and quiet; the criminality rate has made an incredible dive; people are hopeful…”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“But Harvey resigned and left; and that’s a blow: Gotham needed him. I can’t believe the disaster that happened” he gritted his teeth. “I should have predicted that!”

Clark didn’t like the trembling of Bruce’s body which was emotional and physical; the water was warm but outside the light breeze, though pleasantly cool, was able to bring down a recovering organism like his. So he lowered smoothly the younger man in the warmth of the water.

“You predicted it, remember?” Bruce looked confused: Clark knew that Talia and Crane messed with his memories and Bruce faced some minor lapses. “Rachel had called and warned about Joker planning something and you put me guarding MCU. Yet Joker had ordered one of his goons to abduct Harvey’s father and he threatened to kill the man and blow up the Adam’s bridge if Harvey didn’t free him.”

Bruce nodded listening eagerly.

“I rushed to the bridge, I stopped the goon but Joker was already out.”

Bruce shook his head furrowing his brows; something didn’t fit.

“You heard Joker blackmailing Harvey and you didn’t notify Tony to change the codes Harvey knew?”

Clark chuckled on Bruce’s dark stare: Batman was still there. He tapped the younger man’s nose.

“Of course I did and Tony changed the codes but the safety wasn’t stable and when Stane broke down his armor, Tony’s cell dissolved and Harvey had already unlocked the common cell.”

Bruce’s lips formed a tight line.

“And of course Joker found the footage from police’s cameras and broadcasted it and Harvey’s dignity led him to resign…” he sighed.

“Exactly” Clark’s eyes were dead serious. “Bruce, please forget all these: you need to relax…”

But he hadn’t finished his phrase and Bruce tensed more.

“His cell in Arkham is secure enough? I don’t want him to escape again and threat Dick.”

Clark closed his eyes to calm himself because now he was tense too.

“You should ask Tony; the cell is his” he sighed “but I assure you that I always keep an ear there…” the hand that held Bruce’s back flat clenched and the younger man looked at him worried. “I almost wish he breaks out so I have the chance to bust him and…”

Bruce’s eyes widened. Not kill, he thought. And Clark could read his eyes.

“He almost killed you” Clark shook his head, looking at the horizon but in reality at nowhere “so I’d like very much to smash his bones like…” he stopped abruptly; like what happened to you because of him…for him to feel the excruciating pain you felt and still feel at times… but he couldn’t utter it.

Not that Bruce didn’t figure; he touched Clark’s upper arm and the Man of Steel focused again on him.

“He is a psychopathic criminal; you are not!” he said sharply and Clark pressed his lips trying to calm his enraged heart but in vain. “You don’t kill.”

On that Clark’s eyes darkened. Till Bruce began brushing his upper arm and Clark’s face became again his usual kind face.

“I read on the net about Superman saving people in that French nuclear reactor last night… It was a miracle that nobody died and thanks to you the radiation didn’t manage to pass to the air or soil.”

Clark smiled; of course Bruce knew how to erase any trace of hatred from his mind and remind him who he really was.
“You sneaky, sly… amazing man!” he kissed him passionately in the lips cupping the back of his head to keep him afloat.

Bruce’s eyes flashed when Clark grudgingly detached his lips.

“It was the reason I didn’t come yesterday as I promised; it took many hours to stabilize the reactor and contain the emission. When I finished I had to go to the Fortress to clean myself from the radiation – I may be impervious but humans around me aren’t… and then I had to go to the work…”

“So how come and you’re here so early? We’re still in your working hours…”

Clark leaned to his ear.

“I took the day off: I…got ill all of a sudden…” he whispered and winked.

Bruce widened his eyes in mock outrage.

“You lied?! The boy scout lied?!” he gaped.

Clark closed his eyes and nuzzled Bruce’s sharp cheekbone mumbling his pleasure and nodding.

“I think I deserved it after so much radiation…But don’t tell, Perry…”

Bruce narrowed his eyes as Clark’s nuzzling was tickling him. Superman’s arm was wrapped above his wet chest holding him afloat and bringing their breasts to touch. But Bruce shut out this contact because it wouldn’t lead to anything. Instead he chose to tease his “tormentor”.

“I believe I just found leverage on the Man of Steel” he growled and Clark muffled it with his lips.

“Close your eyes, Star; let the peace of the nature fill your body…”

Clark’s urge almost brought back Ra’s’ smug voice telling almost the same things but Bruce didn’t let the memory fully establish; instead he closed his eyes, and let the sound of the seagulls and the waves fill his restless mind, his heartbeat and breath following the calming rhythm; the injured muscles of his lower body felt like…No, it wasn’t like before neither a miracle brought back their sensory function but it was…different: like a soothing, numbing wave began from there up to his torso and his head. It was beautiful, like leaving the boundaries of his body and traveling out of time and space.

Clark was absorbed in Bruce’s body that glowed under the setting sun’s flaming reddish soft hue; Bruce’s features’ beauty was irresistible every time and under this light the younger man was transformed into a magical being – like his ancestor, Lilith. The salty odor of the sea blended with Bruce’s unique perfume turning Clark on again. But he shouldn’t… even if Bruce’s wet silky locks seemed golden in the sapphire waters and his eyelids seemed made of velvet and his lashes endless… He swallowed hard following the course of the last intake of air in Bruce’s body: the ethereal movement of his rosy lips, the slight rising of his throat, the slithering vein in the dimple between the neck and the sternum, the slow, seductive elevation of Bruce’s chest, his protruding rosy nipples calling him to lick and suck them. And between his taut breasts lay happy the Black Butterfly glimmering in its plain frame in a pendant made of rare black platinum Clark had found and molded. For a moment Clark’s eyes were lost in the multicolored sparkles the gem emanated as it was absorbing the sun’s energy.

His fingertips made gentle circles around Bruce’s cute belly button aware that his Star couldn’t fill anything so mild there – his spine above the waist wasn’t vastly destroyed like in his lower body but still it was considerably injured to the level of the lower rib.

The Fortress had done everything that could be done setting of the process of neurons’ regeneration but Jor El said that time and physical therapy would do the rest since Bruce refused to take again the Immortality Water this time to heal the severe damage in his lower body. His concern was that using the pure form of Lazarus’ Pit would make him paranoid like Ra’s Al Ghul since his former mentor did use the medicine too often: for Bruce once was enough.

Human surgery was forbidden and Bruce was adamant in not letting Dr. Elliot examine him in hopes of using his method that utilized Superman’s super powers – this time Clark didn’t dare to attempt anything on Bruce’s injuries to not deteriorate them. The good thing was that Tony and Lucius were working fast to adjust their bionic body parts tech into replacing damaged neurons and manufacturing spinal parts.

He sighed because his eyes drove his mind out of the pain to focus on what he had in front of him; so much beauty was overwhelming…

“Damn, Bruce! You’re beautiful!”

It was a hot iron spear piercing Bruce’s heart but he didn’t open his eyes.

“Stop saying that, Clark” he uttered dryly.

Clark furrowed his brows: his Star’s voice was indifferent yet the content hinted something deep.

“Why?” he leaned over his face that was relaxed, the real turmoil deep inside.

“Because it’s not true! I mean, you flatter me and I’m happy you still say that but… it’s not true.”

“I beg to differ!” Clark protested and instinctively tightened his one arm hug around Bruce’s chest.

Hearing these things from a man who stirred insatiable passion to so many people, from the League of Shadows’ powerful leader to a demon was unbelievable but Clark could understand that someone who had been raped from his early childhood couldn’t regard himself as beautiful. And… Clark had endless, tormenting months to show to him how beautiful he was…

Bruce opened his eyes and moved gently his arms in the water to maintain his flat position though he could feel Clark’s arm holding him.

“I know I’m not good looking and I have no problem with that and actually it’ll be a huge relief when people stop being curious to discover the marks of abuse on me and cease staring at me” Clark wanted to sigh: his Star really believed that all these stares were due to the horrors of his past. He realized Bruce’s x-raying eyes were on him. “I know that your…”

Say it, Star! Clark pleaded internally.

“Your love is true and has nothing to do with the substance…” he chuckled “you got immunized after all. This love makes you see me pretty but… The fact I don’t feel or move below the waist doesn’t mean that I can’t see…”

Clark licked his lips uncomfortable and Bruce smiled sympathetic.

“My body is covered with lacerations, bruises, scars and swellings – even burnings and in some spots entire fragments of flesh are still missing. My muscles are deformed and although the Fortress’ stitches are invisible to humans I know that you can see them…” he widened his eyes. “I’m like Frankenstein’s monster:: all seams and bad flesh. So don’t call me beautiful” he stretched his hand and caressed Clark’s cheek, his eyes sparkling “you’re beautiful” he pouted and shook his head “you’re perfect.”

Then he let his head sank in the water slowly keeping his eyes closed; the embrace of the water so pleasant and mind clearing.

Clark pressed his lips and blushed: the realization that he was the first being Bruce felt lust for made him shiver from delight and craving but unfortunately there was the nasty biting in his guts because he must deny satisfaction to this special being… And seeing Bruce’s face covered by glistening water glowing, lax and silken…

He cupped the human’s face and dragged him out of the water.

“First of all, I didn’t say you’re pretty but beautiful and for me the things you mentioned as disfiguring stress out your beauty because they were made when you saved people from certain death” he shook his head in denial ignoring Bruce’s snort. “You have to accept it, Bruce: you’re beautiful and actually I’m jealous every time someone looks at you…” he huffed and his face became too serious. “I wish your beauty hadn’t caused so much pain to you because it’s unfair…”

Clark’s eyes were heavy with emotion and frankly Bruce didn’t want for him to feel sadness. So as Clark touched their foreheads together and nuzzled his cheek Bruce turned his head to the shore and laughed on the spectacle trying to carry Clark’s mood with his.

Clark followed Bruce’s gaze and grinned broadly.

“So much for your bribe” Bruce snorted “Hero wants to come to us…”

The black and white kitten stood right where the wave splashed and stared at them. Clark smirked.

“But cats hate water!”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“However, this cat fights it…”

Hero ran backwards when the waves hit the shore but instantly as the waters ebbed chased them moving his paw aggressively. Only to retreat hastily when the wave came back at him to charge again as the wave moved inwards.

Clark watched Bruce’s eyes fill with love and warmth as he laughed with his kitten’s doings. Bruce realized and stopped abruptly stilling his eyes on Clark’s solemn ones.

“Promise me that you won’t stop laughing like this…” Clark sighed.

Bruce tilted his head on the side and blinked.

“If I laugh like this all the time, I’d be facetious…”

“No, you’ll be happy…” he touched feathery the wet locks that had stuck on Bruce’s eyes framing them; he leaned and captured the younger man’s lips almost aggressively.

But Bruce’s insides clenched: not the same game again… He understood Clark’s wariness of wounding him and he knew that Clark loved him and didn’t do it on purpose and he wasn’t angry but being aroused and then left was exhausting for his body even in this malfunctioning state – and his heart wasn’t very appreciative of that either. Besides he knew that it was as much tormenting for Clark. So he touched Clark’s jaw and softly turned away his own head to unlock their lips.

Clark lowered his eyes and bit his lip.

“You’re right…” he huffed. “But the moment you’ll be healed, I swear to Rao that you won’t get out of our greenhouse for two months!” he blushed. “Wait! Did that sound like a threat?”

Bruce rolled his eyes.

“The sure thing is that it didn’t sound like a kind, moral boy scout as you promote yourself to the masses…” he quirked an eyebrow and Clark suddenly wrapped him in his broad chest.

“Did I tell you that your eyes are my lucky Kryptonite?”

“I think that Jor El would have used a different term but…yes, you did…at least a hundred times…” he snorted. “I just hope your enemies won’t learn that small detail – even if it’s more poetry than fact.”

Clark sensed that Bruce was shivering since the sun had almost vanished in the water, the sky had taken a dark orange-pink color and the temperature dropped. So he stood and took Bruce in his arms, the younger man slithered tenderly his arms around Superman’s neck.

Hero was jerking and twitching his leg nervously annoyed because the water had touched it and Bruce laughed resting his head on Clark’s hot chest, the exhaustion of the day finally overwhelming his body. Clark felt goose bumps all over because Bruce’s soft breath was brushing his wet flesh and foremost because he sensed the human’s trusting surrender.

“You know of course that Alfred will be furious…” Bruce remarked warningly, a yawn ending his phrase.
“What did you do to Bruce Wayne?” Jim calmly asked Jonathan Crane who sat opposite him handcuffed.

The police Commissioner had come himself to Arkham Asylum to interrogate the insane doctor who was staring at him with his faint blue eyes glimmering from jeer. His lips were the entire time twitching in contempt but now stretched in a full sneering smirk.

“Why?” he lolled his head on the side locking his eyes with Jim’s grim ones. “The genius Iron smartass couldn’t figure?” sarcasm vibrated his voice.

Tony was watching behind the one-way mirror with his arms folded. His eyes were sharp under the angry furrow of his brow and his lips were twitching nervously. Bruce had told him with details the procedure Crane was following in every session and he with Leslie had located the exact spots Crane penetrated his friend’s skull. And Lucius had extracted from the tools the evil doctor used the substances and then isolated and identified them: they were common psychotropic drugs, artificial neurotransmitters mimicking the natural ones and some unknown substances.

They consulted Leslie’s neurologists and the legendary Professor Hugo Strange who was a master in human psychology and function of the human brain. The man was inapproachable and unwilling to meet them at first but as soon as he learnt that it was about Bruce Wayne and some weird things Crane did to his brain, he agreed to meet them immediately and was very cooperative even friendly – well, in his own way...

Despite the fact he was a professor at King George’s college in London his interest was such that he offered to examine Bruce himself and Leslie had to explain to him that Crane’s “treatment” to Bruce was kept secret from the public and that the youth was too hesitant to trust psychiatrists after his traumatic experience with Crane.

Well, to be honest, Tony didn’t blame Bruce. He was watching the professor sunk in his big, Victorian type armchair in Strange’s office and the man might be the world’s top psychiatrist but Tony definitely would not want to be treated by him. He was Ironman and, well, he wasn’t afraid of anything and certainly not this weird man but he felt his spine freeze thinking his patients…or students – he was happy he hadn’t chosen psychiatry for his studies because as a genius he’d have accepted only the best professor and with Tony’s…extravagant history Strange would certainly have sent him to the loony bin...

Anyway, Strange told them with more details what Tony had figured without being a psychiatrist: that Crane had tried to cause a major turbulence in Bruce’s memory playing with the encephalic centers of memory and the neurotransmitters that define the brain’s function. Tony had asked him whether this had damaged Bruce’s stored memories and Strange turned his eyes on him benevolently but…well, Tony would have preferred it without any eye contact.

“I wouldn’t assume that Dr. Crane’s target was to erase Mr. Wayne’s episodic memory in its semantics; based on the list of substances you found in the tools Dr. Crane used and the geography of his insertions, I’d be certain to say that he targeted the emotional frame of these memories which combined with the simultaneous intervention to the centers where the semantic content is stored would have led to alienating Mr. Wayne’s memories either giving to them the aspects Dr. Crane and the people who hired him wanted or to a decapacitating confusion making the object – that is Mr. Wayne – extremely vulnerable to these people’s manipulation. Especially, taking account Mr. Wayne’s troubled past, this horrid confusion concerning the major events of his life would have made him gullible to the people around him for a solid version of his life. Consider, Mr. Stark” Tony didn’t like the sound of his name in this person’s mouth and that made more intense his aversion whenever Strange uttered Bruce’s name.

Strange cleared his throat, as if he had read Tony’s thoughts, though the billionaire had kept his eyes blank.

“Consider, Mr. Stark that Mr. Wayne’s personality isn’t the most solid of personalities since at the crucial period for the built of a healthy personality he experienced traumatizing events and hideous abuse” this time Tony with his fingers knitted in front of his tense face didn’t care to keep down his eyebrow from jerking upwards in sarcasm: Bruce’s personality not solid? He didn’t know a person with a stronger personality than his friend’s… “And given” the doctor’s voice was indifferent though the shadow of a smirk fell on his face “that at 26 years of age…”

“You know Bruce’s age?” Tony used his ‘studies’ with Bruce’s skill to hide his dislike for Strange’s knowledge.

The professor smiled innocently but Tony saw Leslie frowning.

“Who doesn’t, my dear Mr. Stark? With all this hype? Well, as I was saying, Bruce’s personality in this stage would have easily undergone some small but crucial changes with the ingenious ministrations of Dr. Crane turning your friend to whatever was dictated by his kidnappers.”

Now the bulky doctor knitted his fingers leaning towards his two guests. And Tony hated the fact Strange insisted on praising Crane even indirectly.

“All in all, you and Mr. Wayne” Tony understood that Strange realized that his use of Bruce’s first name was a slip revealing his weird interest to the youth so he returned to the use of the surname “are lucky that Dr. Crane’s work stopped at its initial stages.”

“Dr. Strange, do you believe that Crane’s treatment though short may have a lingering effect on Bruce?” Leslie asked.

The doctor, whose eyes were like that golden android’s in Star Wars, - Tony smirked inside -, looked Leslie in the eyes and Tony admired her even more for not shuddering.

“I’m afraid, Dr. Thompkins, that I can’t answer that; you see, the procedure Dr. Crane applied is pioneering.”

Tony furious leaned towards Strange and pierced him with his dead serious eyes.

“Pioneering?” his eyebrows shot upwards. “Nanotechnology is pioneering; Wayne-Stark bionic body parts are pioneering; CERN project is pioneering. What that lunatic did was just plain sick, hideous, disgusting, cruel perversity!” he shook his head for the professor’s hidden acceptance to Crane’s methods – no wonder, Crane was his student at Harvard before Strange left US for Britain.

But Dr. Strange smiled appeasingly.

“Believe me, Mr. Stark: I do understand your loathing” Tony snorted “using the term ‘pioneering’ doesn’t mean I approve of this. What I wanted to underline is that there is no precedent of such procedure for us to make assumptions as to whether there will be a lingering effect or not; and if there is such lingering effect, about its development, the weight and the quality. Mr. Wayne is the one and only person who underwent such ministrations so we can only observe him” he turned his odd eyes to Leslie. “I expect that you take daily samples from Mr. Wayne’s cerebrospinal fluid and observe his brain’s activity.”
Tony tilted his head: well, that wasn’t so easy since Bruce as soon as reached the clinic left to save some children and almost ended up dead and now was under Superman’s Fortress’ ‘treatment’. That Fortress had saved his friend so Tony trusted that Bruce’s brain was also in good hands.

Leslie nodded without of course giving any details. Strange answered with a condescending grin which fought to hide his haughtiness.

“Of course, I could assume Mr. Wayne’s observation and psychological treatment even if that means coming to Gotham, since Bruce’s physical state doesn’t permit traveling.”

Tony wanted to kick, his entire existence shouting: IN YOUR DREAMS, PAL! Yet he wanted to keep appearances.

“We wouldn’t want you to leave your admirable academic career” he smiled.

“Hardly, Mr. Stark: United States is not so distant especially in the era of air transportation – as you know better than me. But even if it required stop teaching, I’d gladly do that. I love challenges and Gotham is every mental health professional’s dream.”

Tony cocked a sarcastic eyebrow.

“Try nightmare!”

Leslie sent him a scolding glare and turned to Strange.

“We surely appreciate your interest and kind offer, Dr. Strange” Tony rolled his eyes “but in this stage Bruce isn’t in a position to accept an…unfamiliar person’s close presence” especially his, Tony thought. “At the moment, I think that his loved ones’ observation would be more useful” Tony discerned a shadow in the doctor’s eyes; “and we’d be grateful if you could grant us again with your precious advice in case we notice anything odd or worrying…”

Dr. Strange smiled again to Leslie.

“Of course, my dear; I’ll give you my personal numbers and email to communicate with me for everything you want. However, I think that persuading Dr. Crane to reveal everything considering his treatment will be very helpful. Not that if I was granted the opportunity I wouldn’t decipher his doings…” he raised an eyebrow.

“Thank you for everything, Dr. Strange” Leslie said and as soon as she took his card followed Tony who hastily moved to the door.

“Mr. Stark” Dr. Strange stood up and smiled to the young man’s tense face “you must not misunderstand my avid interest in your friend. Bruce Wayne is the Holy Grail of every psychiatrist: he watched his parents being murdered, he lived almost his entire life under the cruel enslavement of his parents’ murderer suffering every kind of abuse there is; however, against all odds the youth not only managed to keep his sanity but also to regain his father’s company eliminating the hard competition” Strange gave a crook smile “it seems that everyone who tries to threaten him ends up in ruins… And to culminate all these, your friend is developing impressing entrepreneurial initiatives. And that’s incredible.”

Tony crossed his arms: imagine his reaction if he knew about Bruce’s other activities. He cocked an eyebrow.

“I know that: it was you who said that Bruce’s personality isn’t solid…” he stressed every word and the doctor pressed his lips for his inconsistency.
“An admirable, dynamic personality can have rickety foundations.”

The billionaire jerked his head proudly and clenched his teeth.

“Not Bruce!” he spat and stormed out of the room.

“The subject matter is that Bruce is for a scientist of the human mind and behavior a dream project. You’re a scientist, too, Mr. Stark: you can understand the eagerness of a scientist to study such a remarkable, one of a kind specimen.”

Tony crossed his arms and shook his head squinting at the man.

“Maybe dissecting his brain?” he asked sarcastic.

Dr. Strange laughed and Tony frowned.

“That isn’t necessary, Mr. Stark. Imagine the answers we would have taken by studying Bruce: his defense mechanisms, his cognitive processing, his reasoning, his emotional brain’s function, his subconscious…”

The bizarre doctor seemed lost in his thoughts and Leslie exchanged outrageous glances with Tony.

“We could have helped thousands of people facing the same situations with Bruce or trained our soldiers to withstand every kind of torture.”

Tony clenched his teeth.

“Or find ways to smash a human being’s resistance and personality!”

Tony was boiling even when they left Dr. Strange’s office in the College.

“I feel like I have stripped Bruce bare naked in front of this perv’s eyes!” he growled to Leslie and she stopped walking abruptly.

He could see in her eyes that she was unsettled too yet that woman had nerves of steel and composure that could compete with Alfred’s or Bruce’s.

“Tony, Dr. Strange might be…strange” she said calmly “but don’t forget that he isn’t a rapist but a psychiatrist.”

He cocked an eyebrow and nodded.

“Yeah! A mind rapist! You heard him, Leslie!” he stretched his hand. “And we gave all this info about what Bruce was been through for what? He just repeated the things we already knew and nothing more. Lucius and I will find everything that madman did to Bruce’s brain. We shouldn’t have come here and given him those data!” he slapped his thigh and kicked the air.

Leslie patted his back soothingly.

“Tony, your overprotectiveness leads you to paranoia: we just sought one opinion more and the data we gave him aren’t so crucial.”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“He is the paranoid, not me! And he looked like the shark who tasted the blood of a delicious pray…” his eyes became slits. “Don’t tell me you intend to send him any new feedback…” his voice was almost threatening and Leslie’s eyes got angry.

“Of course not” she answered scornful “though I don’t share your fears…” she seemed to be thinking hard “…entirely” she added and he realized that Leslie indeed didn’t trust the odd doctor.

“This is police investigation” Jim’s indifferent answer to his insult made the former doctor smirk.

Crane loll’d his head to the side.

“So…Stark isn’t watching us from the one-way mirror eager to take answers to save his puppy friend?” he cocked a smug eyebrow. “He brags around in his silly tin suit pretending the genius when in fact he is another ignorant, incompetent idiot like the doctors that replaced me here…” he chortled.

Tony hardly restrained himself from smashing the window and surge at him not for his insults against him nor for his arrogance but because he tortured Bruce and now let with that “save his puppy” the threat looming over his friend. However if he attacked he’d give him the satisfaction of being confirmed.

Jim stretched on the chair’s back and regarded him with squinted eyes.

“What makes you think that someone like him will waste his time watching the interrogation of the man who dragged his friend and conducted illegal experiments on him when he is deciphering what exactly you did to Mr. Wayne. To be honest” he shook his head “I wouldn’t allow Mr. Stark near you… The look on his face the last time I met him told me very clear that he found out what you did and wants nothing more than show you his opinion about that.”

Tony smirked satisfied for Jim’s collected answer and the reaction it provoked from Crane. The lean doctor flinched recollecting his encounter with Ironman in the base they were holding Bruce. However something shook Crane out of his cowardice and he smiled confidently.

“Then if he has already found out what are you doing here?” he inquired smugly, his eyes glistening with sneer.

Jim leaned towards Crane, putting his hands on the table between them. His solemn eyes were sincere when his eyebrows arched.

“Saving your ass. Giving you a last chance to confess everything about the experiment you did on Mr. Wayne, so your allegation that you were also a prisoner of the League of Shadows stands. If you cooperate and give every detail of what these people forced you to do” he moved his eyebrows suggestively “then the DA will be persuaded that you weren’t their accomplish or wanted to put Mr. Wayne through illegal experimentation and you’ll be treated with leniency.”

Leniency my ass! Tony jerked his head and pouted. He knew that this man enjoyed putting Bruce through that torture.

A nasty crook half smile carved Crane’s pale face and he arched his eyebrows arrogantly.

“Commissioner, do you really consider yourself smarter than me?”

Jim narrowed his eyes.

“What your…leniency will be? Transfer to another sector of this loony bin? C’me on, I know that you won’t get me out of here even if I told you everything – inferior people like all of you are afraid of my genius. And frankly, even in here I enjoy your fear.”
Jim stared at the man as if pitying him and Crane jerked towards him like an attacking snake.

“These idiots really captured me and asked me to apply my genius to that brat: they had even the audacity to use threats as if they could cause fear to the master of fear!” Jim arched his eyebrows emptying his eyes from his emotions. “Yet I... Ugh! I spit on your” he shook his head “leniency!” he hissed. “I did what I did to that petty thing gladly, with my free choice because if I didn’t want I’d have fooled those jerks using innocent, harmless substances and not the real thing.”

He squinted his eyes in malice.

“But I wanted. I wanted to experiment with that lucky bastard’s brain! I wanted to extract my power over him, to show him my superiority! I wanted to make him pain physically and emotionally and cry revealing at last how scared and ridiculous he is... and how worthless his mind is compared with mine!” he opened his mouth and delayed speaking showing off his real satisfaction “and I enjoyed every moment of his yielding to my ministrations: his childish ravings, his moans, his sobs, his pleadings…” he shook his head. “There’s nothing better than watching a mind disintegrating…”

Jim’s blank stare hid his disgust and aversion for the man but Tony from the other side of the window clenched his fist and jaw.

“But those stupid super heroes came before I managed to finish my brilliant work... Never mind... Even from this madhouse I enjoy your dread for the impact of my ministrations on that worthless brain. And this satisfaction is more important than any bargain you can offer me for saving the brat’s mind.”

Jim stood having enough of this shit.

“Have it your way” he spat and turned to leave. “After all, Mr. Wayne is tougher than your tricks.”

Tony frowned seeing the smirk on Crane’s face.

“Exactly, Commissioner” he said slyly. “He manifested extraordinary resistance to my fear toxin and other treatment...like...a hard trained man or a man of uncommon skills.”

Jim didn’t turn but had stopped on his heels and Crane though couldn’t see his face smiled certain that the commissioner listened interested.

“Even under my toxin’s influence he talked to me calmly and too clever for what someone would have expected from a victim like him.”

Tony’s nostrils flared; he could see that Jim was intrigued. Damn!

“You’re impressed” Jim turned to Crane.

The doctor shook his head laughing.

“No, not impressed...I’d have broken his mind if I had few days more. Just curious...” he knitted his eyebrows. “As you – I mean, the police – should be: why a powerful crime organization shows such zeal to capture a poor little victim” Tony’s eyes were still, stabbing the evil doctor.

Jim arched his eyebrows.

“What else? Ransom and leverage on Tony Stark.”

Crane cackled and shook his head in contempt.
“Oh! Commissioner! I believed you slightly smarter!” Jim’s brow creased. “The money they spent to organize Wayne’s abduction makes the ransom theory ridiculous. Leverage on the Iron Buffoon is a probability… BUT” his eyes flashed wickedly “the head of the organization was obsessed with getting back Wayne: she claimed that he was her property AND she was insistent on controlling his mind – she spent a small fortune to provide me the means to shatter and mend Wayne’s mind structures according to her wishes.”

Crane protruded his lower lip.

“Isn’t that odd? Shouldn’t that have intrigued the Police?”

Tony’s eyes widened: that scum!

Jim regarded Crane indifferent.

“She shared the same sick mind as you, Crane; Bruce Wayne’s strength and bravery drew the attention and the envy of deranged minds of villains such as you so who’s better ally in her insanity than you” he cocked his eyebrows, his eyes keeping their nonchalant and slightly indifferent hue. “So, as Mr. Stark has already figured out, your “treatment” aimed to control Mr. Wayne’s remarkable brain by – I’m using your terms – “shattering and mending his mind’s structures.” Crane’s face paled and his smirk vanished. “Thank you, Crane: you might not be cooperative but still you helped us a lot!”

The Commissioner’s eyes flashed under his arched eyebrows and Tony’s face beamed from satisfaction for Crane’s shitty expression. The billionaire watched Jim leaving the room, calling to the orderlies to take Crane.

Tony liked Jim’s response that dismissed Crane’s sly remarks that aimed to create suspicions about Bruce’s true character. However, he rubbed his chin deep in thought: Jim was a very clever man.

The door to the side room from where Tony was watching opened and Jim entered. His face was as calm and benevolent as ever.

“Mr. Stark, I don’t know if what you heard was of any significance…” he shrugged. “Crane is deep in his insanity and arrogance so I doubt we can get any more information than we did.”

Tony nodded.

“It was important, Jim: you drove him to admit and affirm our assumptions. To tell you the truth, I didn’t count much on his info to decipher what he did and the repercussions. And I think that he tries to terrorize us hinting that his very short treatment will have detrimental effects – of course, Bruce faces some difficulties but not what Crane implied.”

Jim pressed his lips.

“I’m glad to hear it, Mr. Stark; Mr. Wayne doesn’t deserve to suffer anymore.”

Tony lowered his eyes and nodded grinning at the man.

“Call me Tony, Jim” he said. “And thank you for everything you did.”

Jim shook his head and made a dismissive gesture.

“I only did my job, Tony…”
“Much more than this, Jim: much more…” he stretched his hand to a handshake that felt one of the few truly important handshakes of his life.

Jim left and Tony sighed, his mind on his duties: unfortunately, S.H.I.E.L.D.’s reshaping, the deciphering of Crane’s shit and the built of a new “spine” for Bruce thwarted him from being with his slowly and painfully recovering friend.

“Alfred will be furious, huh? Then I must cover my tracks…” Clark answered with a mischievous half smile as he came out of the sea, the water resistance crushed from his steel legs.

Hero ran to them meowing and rubbing to Clark’s ankles, sending stares upwards to Bruce who quirked an eyebrow to his lover.

“I hope that doesn’t mean you’ll dispose of my body…” he chuckled.

Clark’s eyes darted playfully to Bruce’s naked body in his arms and sighed.

“Believe me, Bruce” his eyes met with the younger man’s “your body is my whole world” he shook his head “having you in my arms is my greatest feat so I don’t think that disposing of it will ever pass my mind…”

Bruce’s eyes were solemn but then wanting to ease the mood snorted.

“Then you’re busted, buster!”

Clark mouthed the younger man’s lips to ‘punish’ him and Bruce moaned deepening the kiss, caressing his jaw. Clark felt his spine going numb by these fingers and without unlocking their lips kneeled on the spot where he had let their clothes. He placed Bruce carefully on his red cape, the kitten catching up with them rubbing on his master’s hand to get his attention and caress.

“Actually, I was thinking milder ways to…be spared from Alfred’s fury and save you from a cold…” Clark lolled his head on the side.

Bruce looked at Hero, petting him.

“Really now? And what’s that?” he inquired indifferently without looking at him.

Clark shrugged.

“Drying you…”

Bruce turned to him surprised and Clark laughing blew mild hot air to his face causing Bruce’s eyes to close and then began blowing all over the human’s body savoring the way Bruce’s closed eyelids trembled enjoying the feeling that made his mind paralyze. Clark smirked and blew extra tenderly brushing with the air the younger man’s left nipple. Bruce’s upper torso convulsed by the electric current that spread goose bumps to his healthy body, so Clark did the same with the right nipple smiling when the fair hair on the human’s breast erected.

Bruce’s fingers dag in the sand when the hot air lowered to his navel, a grunt accompanying a new violent squirm that made him lose his balance although seated.

Clark hastened to wrap him in his strong arms and their eyes locked. Bruce’s eyes were a bit upset for losing his balance but immediately found again his calm though his heart gave another kick. He touched Clark’s lips that were a bit pressed; it was easy for him to figure that the Man of Steel felt guilty thinking that he had overdone it again.

So Bruce smiled happily.

“You’re the best blow dryer of the market” he laughed “and the most economical…”

Bruce’s eyes were sparkling and Clark knew that it was for his sake and he couldn’t resist: his lips dived in Bruce’s soft cheek, his nose relishing as well the velvet feeling of the wet cheek.

“I hope that doesn’t mean that I’m cheap…” he chuckled and Bruce closed his eyes as Clark’s hot, strong lips trailed his neck nibbling.

The younger man cupped Clark’s slightly square jaw and looked him in the eyes, careful to hide his bitterness for the absence of any arousal to his half body.

“I thought you were drying me?” he cocked an eyebrow.

Clark narrowed his eyes smugly.

“Maybe I prefer you wet…” he whispered in a husky voice.

Bruce bit his nose teasingly.

“Don’t make promises you can’t hold, naughty boy…”

Clark’s bulgy, stony breasts were brushing his aroused from the air nipples and intensified Bruce’s torture from the contact with this perfect flesh. His hips were already above Bruce’s unresponsive pelvis and he was ready to use his mental control to make his injured body respond appropriately raising to rub and welcome Clark’s body but the Man of Steel understanding, released Bruce’s hips and kneeled on the sand keeping some distance.

He licked his lips uncomfortably and kissed Bruce’s forehead because the human’s lips were pressed. There was no chance he’ll force his Star exhaust his body to satisfy Superman’s whims.

“I must save my hide from Alfred…” he huffed and resumed his blow drying to the lower half of Bruce’s body that didn’t “suffer” from his ministrations since it was unable to feel.

Bruce frustrated turned to his kitten that was looking at him sympathetically. A grim fog captured his mind however he didn’t want to form the thought and began wearing his T-shirt and the cardigan the same time Clark was drying the “dead” half of his body which he could acknowledge only through vision and not sense.

Clark stretched softly Bruce’s legs that the constant machine training helped them keep their fine shape despite the still deep scars, the burns and the missing particles of flesh.

When the upper level of the factory collapsed, the metallic parts had developed such a high temperature that they were red… Some of them pierced Bruce’s armor and either stabbed his legs or caused him serious burns…

Clark’s body shuddered violently as his hand on its own accord brushed a spot in Bruce’s thigh that carried both the mark of being pierced by a pipe and a nasty third degree large burn. He continued blowing gently not wanting for Bruce to understand his thoughts but his guts were clenched imagining the pain – no, he couldn’t even imagine…
“It didn’t pain that much” Bruce answered nonchalant and Clark choked with his own air causing a beautiful smile on the human’s face. “The damage to the sensory neurons was almost simultaneous with the crash.”

Almost... Clark thought bitterly because he knew that this “almost” probably meant much time in excruciating pain which his brave Star dismissed as not important.

He was ready to resume his work when he took in Bruce’s efforts to zip his cardigan: his right arm always faced difficulties with fine movements but now he couldn’t hide it. His both arms were badly broken and though they were mended quite fast due to the Fortress’ med and the hypodermic Kryptonian casts allowed Bruce a wide range of movements plus training, still the fine motor skills needed time.

Clark pretended not seeing not wanting to worsen things for Bruce but he noticed that the younger man simply abandoned the effort, petting Hero instead: thank you, Hero! Clark thought and opened Bruce’s thighs to dry the flesh inside, so embarrassed that his hands shook.

He sighed the air knowing that Bruce couldn’t enjoy the feeling; Clark knew the few healthy neurons and was avoiding them not wanting to stimulate them... Though Bruce’s flesh looked delicious and made him replay the moments of their first time in the greenhouse when Bruce’s beautiful body trembled from pleasure glued on his burning flesh. Clark’s body shuddered reliving the sensations Bruce’s writhing brought to him.

Damn you Joker! The evil bastard managed to take from them what he failed to snatch violently for himself... He pressed his eyes shut sending tender air to Bruce’s wet pelvis; he wanted for the younger man to think that he was only enjoying the moment and not boiling in hatred for the responsible for Bruce’s suffering.

Clark was so easy to read... Bruce thought as he was stroking absently his kitten. He could feel Superman’s emotions and figure his thoughts; he could read his eyes even when the Man of Steel tried to act because his eyes were so clear that he couldn’t fog them even if he tried. He felt a knot in his stomach: Bruce was used to cause pity to others: actually, while in Falcone’s clutches he struggled to be pitied but now... he hated it although enabled him to keep his secret safe.

But Clark’s pity though not ill mannered was torment and made him agonize and sweat out to be whole again. He loved the man so much that wasn’t angry... no... how could he be angry with Clark for feeling sorry? He knew that it was his deep love that made him so sad.

He cupped Clark’s hand as he was ready to put on him his black boxers; he smiled and saw Clark’s eyes taking new life.

“I can do that: I need some privacy, thank you very much!” he chuckled and Clark took a flaming red color so Bruce couldn’t do anything else than kissing him. No, it wasn’t pity... it was... sorrow and frustration because he was sure that Clark was as distressed as he for that disability. But Clark was happy too for saving him.

Clark scratched his hair embarrassed and instead began drying Bruce’s locks, combing them with his fingers relishing the softness. And then the distant echo of the village’s church bell reached them towering the sound of the waves and Clark felt like waking from a bad dream: he had Bruce alive in his arms, breathing, speaking, smiling, kissing him. And he could caress his beautiful body, comb his hair, smell his enchanting perfume; goggle at his eyes willingly drowning in their seas...

How ungrateful he was! Bruce was a miracle in flesh and blood and against all odds, this miracle survived and survived to gift him his love. So Clark berated and scowled at himself.
“He is still here; with you…you were given the greatest present of all: he almost died and then came back to you… Alive!”

His Ma’s eyes were sparkling that night seeing his sadness. It was ten days after Bruce woke from the coma and they went to Gotham for Commissioner Gordon to take his testimony. Clark was happy all these days his Star came back to him and was flying – well, he always could fly but his heart’s flying was something new; something that Bruce caused.

But that day, for the first time he registered Bruce’s paralysis, the fact that this dynamic human being, the full of energy, the never stopping youth couldn’t stand on his feet. Suddenly, the hundreds of cracks in Bruce’s bones flashed menacingly sneering at him; the energy casts uniting the many little pieces of his bones darkening his eyes.

And then the worst had happened: few minutes after Jim left and they were enjoying Alfred’s infamous secret tea, Clark felt it though Bruce tried to hide it: pain slowly flooding Bruce’s brain… And before he even formed the thought that they were too hasty to take Bruce out of the Fortress, Clark’s eyes bulged seeing Bruce slipping from the armchair and crushing to the floor, writhing from thousands different centers of pain in his upper torso because his legs were stubbornly dead.

The Man of Steel was paralyzed and Alfred, Leslie and Selina made it first to Bruce who was gritting his teeth to not groan but his face was pale and sweaty; his eyes tearful.

Leslie had painkillers and even sedatives with her but she was afraid to combine them with whatever alien medicine he was on. And then Clark had clenched his jaw realizing his inertia; rushed to Bruce, took him in his arms and brought him back at the safety of the Fortress. He was unconscious when they were there and Clark with his heart stopped from agony laid him gently on the medical bay…

From then Clark was morose, sad – of course not in front of Bruce but he couldn’t hide from his Ma.

“Imagine your life without him…The moments you lived together scratching your insides, stabbing you with the cruel certainty that you won’t see him again and won’t share your days, your petty humdrum routine…” she whispered and he jerked as if a Kryptonite knife stabbed him, his stare leaving the clear, starry night of Smallville to look panicked at his Ma.

Martha gave a tight lips smile and nodded.

“I know it’s not easy, honey; I know you’re burning with his pain, his agony twisting your guts…” she inhaled deeply “but he is here, close to you and your touch can offer him comfort; your smile can erase every hopelessness and give him strength and courage to fight…”

Clark felt tears running his flushed cheeks.

“He is braver and stronger than me, Ma…”

She brushed his upper arm sighing and Clark could see her melancholy remembering Jonathan, his father.

“With your love his bravery and strength multiplies… Together you can win every battle… This hardship will galvanize your bond and will be soon a memory: a nightmare that will make the rest of your life more beautiful. Remember, baby: he was almost dead and feeling your love fought and came back to be with you…to defeat every pain and disability with you.”

Clark nodded, feeling terrible for his cowardice.
“My Star almost settled to the sky among the other stars – the brightest of them all” he pressed his lips. “You know, Ma: he loves the sky…” he sighed. “And then took pity on me and came back…”

Martha smiled.

“And I’m stupid, Ma!” he stood from the staircase’s head step in the wooden porch and hugged Martha. “Bruce is a miracle! And that miracle is beside me and… and I… I can still hear his strong heartbeat, his breath, smell his body’s aroma…and all these could have been lost…Bruce could have been dead… My God! And he is only 26!”

The small tombstone beside the ones of Martha and Thomas Wayne terrified his mind eyes. And then he saw again himself blasting the cursed thing.

“And he’ll live many many many years!” he laughed. “With me! And he’ll walk again! I’m the luckiest man of the universe…” he mumbled.

Martha nodded and smiled with his happiness, her eyes having the deepest knowledge of someone who had lost that gift: her life’s love.

Clark hugged Bruce as tight as he could and searched his delicious lips, kissing and savoring. Only to realize that Bruce was… fast asleep. Clark chuckled.

“That means I’m boring? Huh, Star?”

Hero meowed as if nodding and Clark mock glared at him.

“Traitor! Our Bruce is just exhausted… And I entrusted you into not letting him exhaust himself…” the kitten rubbed his head on Bruce’s loose palm and purred at Clark as if apologizing.

Clark shook his head amused.

“You’re a seducer, little one…” he caressed Bruce’s dry, silken locks “we must return” his eyes regarded the sky that had taken a dark blue color, only a narrow lane of bright pink-red reminding that the sun was rising to the other hemisphere… “Alfred would be furious not to mention worried sick…”

Bruce had dressed the bottom half of his body before falling asleep.

“Hero, Bruce won’t be able to hold you so I’ll put you inside his cardigan and you will be a nice kitten and not move, okay?”

The kitten meowed and Clark took it as “yes”. He placed carefully Bruce on the soft sand and in a fraction of the second got dressed, tossed the empty food container to a bin and returned to Bruce. He zipped his cardigan and put Hero inside securing him by raising more the zipper.

Clark lifted Bruce in bridal style and his eyes were lost in his relaxed features, their beauty enhanced by sleep’s hue. Then he stared at Hero safely nestled in Bruce’s chest so calm that it was obvious he was enjoying it.

“I’m jealous, buddy!” he cocked an eyebrow and took off.

He tilted his head above Bruce’s face that was snuggled on the crook of his neck; Clark smiled touched.

“You like that, huh, Star? Sleeping in my arms…” he settled Bruce deeper in his chest.
And then the gratitude for having Bruce alive in his arms flooded him and the Man of Steel remembered something they were discussing before.

“I’ve killed, Bruce…” he whispered with pressed lips what he hadn’t the courage to admit then.

But then he felt hot, soft air brushing his neck.

“No, you didn’t…” Bruce answered him although he was fast asleep.
“Let’s talk about your life before the Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital, Jack. You were referred there by the Boston police Department, which was the reason?”

Joker sat sprawled on the floor with his back touching his bed; there wasn’t any makeup on his face and his scars were covered with gauzes which annoyed him more than everything.

His psychiatrist was sat at a chair opposite him, a small journalistic recorder in the table taping everything they were saying; she was watching him with her cute honey colored eyes filled with honest interest – well, “ho-nest”, Joker smirked, as they were taught from the school: accept the patient-client as it is and show empathy keeping at the same time a safe distance so you can develop an impartial view of the facts in order to help him…

“Hehehe!” his cackle shook the space between them and Joker observed that his young therapist didn’t flinch just continued staring at him.

Joker could give that to her since there was no bars between them. He raised an eyebrow: of course, that scum, Stark, had did something devious and whenever he made a move to attack anyone he was knocked out without anyone needing to touch him. However, even if his attack was unsuccessful the first time the elegant psychiatrist stepped alone to his cell and he was out for 24 hours, still anyone else would have been unwilling to be again in the same space with the tiger.

At least, his “therapist” was pretty with her long, blond hair that was always tied in a ponytail, her oval glasses and the gym pants she wore under her white doctor robe. Every time she entered his cell with confidence that made Joker cock an eyebrow: he “fished” one of the orderlies and learnt that Dr. Quinzel had great experience with criminals and at the present she was at her third doctorate, this time on Criminology.

And he had felt so flattered…He was laughing with hysterics for hours thinking that he was going to be the subject of such a scientific paper, that he will help science’s progress. W-O-W!

“You’re toooooo young to be the Heeead of this fine estam-lishment” he squinted his eyes regarding her behind his dirty blond curls.

Harleen pushed the rim of her glasses and looked at her patient.

“What do you think about that?”

Joker rolled his eyes: those shrinks were so easy to predict: you meet one, you know all of them… And he had met so many psycho-something to get a doctoral degree on… shrink-o-logy. Hehe!

“No-thing, su-sugar…” he quirked an eyebrow and shook his head. “Oh! There’re ssssooo many delicious things iiin my mind keeping myyyy palm buuuussy…” he leaned towards her with his eyes stabbing her mischievously. “You’re a doctor – you know how the energetic men are wheeeen in the joint and a-way from their wife…” he waved his hand. “I can speak open-ly, huh?”

His cunning eyes caught the light pink in her lean cheeks when he mentioned his palm but she looked at him unfazed.

“Of course, Jack.”

He turned his eyes to the ceiling frustrated by the constant use of that name and Harleen hardly covered her surprise when his angry eyes nailed her.

“Stop calling me THAT!” he hissed.

The woman arched an eyebrow.

“But this is your name.”

Joker lifted his head and furrowed his lips making his scars quite obvious despite the gauzes.

“I’m the Joker – that’s my name, you stupid broad!”

But the woman remained unfazed.

“If you tell me your surname, I’d use that adding ‘Mister’.”

Joker huffed and then giggled: so she was smart…like Bru-cey. He shook his head: no, Bru-cey was way smarter than everyone else…A sly half smile carved his face and he was lost for a minute: that little brat had fooled everyone except than him.

Dr. Quinzel seeing that her patient was absorbed in something else cleared her throat.

“Well, Jack?” maybe he was hallucinating and she wanted to drive him out of that. “What’s your surname?”

He looked at her pouting.

“J-O-K-E-R.”

“Is this your surname?” Dr. Quinzel inquired calm.

Joker laughed and shook his head pointing with his index at her.

“You’re same age as Crane soooo no sur-prise you took his place: same age, same loony bin, same…” he said slyly, his eyes with a jeering glint. “No offense for the comparison…”

“I see you avoid answering my question.”

Joker arched an eyebrow and cackled. When his giggling fit stopped he lolled his head to the side and regarded the psychiatrist with narrowed eyes.

“Surnames are overrated. The greatest people in history didn’t have a sur-name: Nero, Caligula, Jokey…”

“Who is Jokey?”

Joker shrugged a shoulder and flapped his eyelashes to Dr. Quinzel with self-pride.

“My dick: he is great, too…HEHEHEHEHAHA!”

The young psychiatrist stared at him poised.

“This is a common joke you can hear from every stand-up comedian” she commented indifferently.

And Joker would have killed her instantly if he didn’t know that Stark’s tricks would knock him out only with a fraction of aggressive movement. Also, he loved games and didn’t end them prematurely.
He sobered and leaned his torso towards her, his hands dropped between his legs.

“What a surname can offer? Huh?” he said as if conspiring. “What his surname offered to my Bru-cey?” he saw Dr. Quinzel draw some air. “Because of his sur-name Bru-c ey was kidnapped in a tender age aannd ‘cause of that name watched his parents murdered aaand was kept alive to be bruuuuutally humi-liated aaand ab-used. Cause Falcon-i hated his sur-name aaand wanted to pu-nish him for it.” He inhaled deeply “Phew! Good thing the hot stuff won’t have to worry about that anymore…”

Dr. Quinzel nodded: and here we go again with his obsession…

“What’s it ob-vious?” she inquired patiently.

Joker gave a broad Cheshire smile and opened his arms in the air.

“Isn’t it ob-vious?” he licked his lips. “He isn’t the Way-ne heir anymore buuuuut the Joker’s spouse.”

“You know that the…marriage you conducted isn’t legit.”

Joker snorted and rolled his head.

“It’s legit for MEEEE! And that’s what counts!” he rattled his teeth. “Iiif my Bru-c ey iiis at all…” he mumbled staring at his hands: Dent before leaving told him that Batman was alive and implied that Bruce was alright yet as the time went by and Batman’s appearances were obscure and Brucey’s nonexistent, Joker got antsy.

Quinzel leaned towards him interested.

“…is at all?”

Joker was staring at her with blank eyes not speaking and Harleen felt like being X-Rayed. Since he didn’t want to elaborate on what he meant she decided to take the initiative.

“What is it that draws you to Bruce Wayne?”

But Joker’s mind was elsewhere and other things were occupying his spinning brain.

“The last time I saw Bru-c ey” he said with unfocused eyes “it was in a video aaand he was wrapped in a red cape – baaaaare naked – aaand held by that Super-stalion in a way I didn’t like at all” his eyes suddenly flashed like he was ready to kill. “I’m the pos-sessive type, you know…”

“This is the reason you asked for Bruce Wayne that night you kidnapped the children from the Haven?” Joker hadn’t answered any of the questions police had made him after his arrest; actually, the man was almost catatonic the first hours because he learnt that the factory had collapsed with Batman possibly still inside. Of course, they didn’t find any body yet Joker didn’t trust that fox, Gordon: maybe he just hid the fact to prevent the criminals rioting.

Joker raised his sharp eyes on her amused.

“You’re the gossip type, huh?” he scratched his nose. “No, I hadn’t seen that fucking video then: I saw it here. Aaaand I didn’t ask only for Bru-c ey…”

Harleen narrowed her eyes interested.

“Exactly. You asked for Batman as well; is Batman getting Bruce’s place?”
On that Joker erupted in hard, loud laughter; his body was convulsing from the giggles and soon he was literally rolling on the floor from laughter.

Dr. Quinzel frowned but Joker couldn’t stop laughing: Batman getting Bruce’s place… Nobody could suspect what he was almost sure of… The reason why he asked for both of them aware that he’d get only the one… The reason why he had teeth biting his guts all this time after his jerk goon blew the fucking factory – he would definitely kill that bastard! He stopped laughing abruptly and sat crossing his legs; he kept his head lolled to the side and regarded the psychiatrist lopsided.

“Have you seen Bru-cey from the night that fucking factory collapsed?” he asked with a low really creepy serious voice and the fact that he stopped stuttering and playing with the words intrigued Harleen. “Really seen, not just heard about his doings…”

Harleen stretched her head and heaved a resolute breath.

“You must get over your obsession for Mr. Wayne. So I won’t share any information about him.”

Joker’s eyes darkened as became narrow as slits; the blue neon hue that was lighting his cell became blood red and his legs were ready to send him on the stupid shrink tearing her long neck apart. But then a soft half smirk loosened his face: there was no reason for him to be knocked out – there were other ways…

“Sooo…” he licked his lips “youuu haven’t seen him… sooooo: either he is licking his wounds – which I could glaaaaadly do foooor him – or is cheating ME! With that stuffed red and blue turkey” he made on his forehead with his finger Superman’s trademark curl “ooooor…” on that his voice lowered to a whisper only he could hear “he died that night…” he scratched his hair uncomfortable. He had to find out.

Dr. Quinzel leaned towards him and she was ready to ask when Joker jerked his head.

“I thiiiiink that socializing with the other kiiids at the play-ground will benefit me.” He cocked an eyebrow. “Huh?” he smiled like normal fools did.

Harleen considered it: keeping Joker all the time isolated might be safe but it didn’t change anything. And Mr. Stark’s “safety measures” made it sure that her patient wouldn’t hurt anyone. Also she wanted to observe him in other environments and in his exchanges with other people in conditions where he wouldn’t be his powerful murdering self.

Joker was watching her reading her inner pondering and estimations feeling the urge to let free another giggling fit for the petty doctor’s naïve calculations. But he decided against it: he didn’t want to raise her suspicions.

“I suppose we could do that” she said blankly. “Actually, the fact you expressed the wish to be with other human beings is a positive step…”

“Ow! How nnnnNICE of me!”

“And indicates an honest desire to change.”

Joker arched both eyebrows: or kill again… His laugh made his body jerk but no sound came out of his mouth. He shook his head.

“Oh! I’m soooooo hard trying to beeeee a good boy again….”

But Harleen’s eyes hardened.
“However, in the sad case that you just try to fool your therapist and want to cause problems to your co-inmates, Mr. Stark has taken extra care to prevent any negative behavior” Joker turned his fingers to himself mouthing ‘me?’ with puppy eyes. “And you’ll lose your right to be out of your cell. So, let’s say that you’re in a trial stage and it’s up to you that privilege to continue.”

“Pri-va-le-ge…” Joker mumbled.

And then jumped to his legs and gave her a deep bow.

“Thank you, Dr. Harlequin!” he sang and Harleen squinted.

“What?”

Joker made a gesture as if staring at an imaginary wristwatch and pouted.

“Iiiii think that oooour time is uP!”

Harleen lolled her head to the side.

“That’s my line, Jack.”

Joker regarded her with narrowed eyes.

“You have the copy-right?” he cocked his eyebrows suggestively and made a dismissive gesture.

“Naaaah! I knew you didn’t! HEHEHEHEHEHEHE!”

Dr. Quinzel decided that imposing more time on him wouldn’t have any result; she could discern that her patient would retreat to his usual nonsense. Besides they had made quite the improvement. She rose from the chair and Joker smiled like a really good boy hiding his smirk.

“Fine, Jack. Until tomorrow, think what we talked about today” she pressed the stop button on his recorder and tossed it to her pocket.

He nodded.

“Good After-noooon, Dr. Harlequin” he said mimicking some schoolgirl.

Harleen stopped at her heels and turned her head towards him just as a part of the bars vanished creating a narrow corridor for her to exit. Joker knew that trying to run out of that gap would lead to him being knocked out so he just batted his eyelashes to her watching his therapist taking her stern expression and crossing the temporary exit.

“You too, Jack” she said and began walking.

“Tell ya som’thin’, doc” her patient twisted his mouth like the cowboys in the old westerns.

“Youuuuu don’t want to call me Jooooker an’ I get rrrrrrrreally MAD hearing how you utter that Jack; sooooo in oooorder to be…mmmm…” he rubbed his finger to his chin “in speaking terms, I’ll propose a haaaappy medium: you Harlequin, meeeeee Mr. J! Huh?” he stretched his arms beaming.

Yet Dr. Quinzel just regarded him and left without answering.

Joker undeterred sank on his bed and huffed before a full laughing fit shook him for a few minutes. He lay and tied his fingers under his head.

“Har-l-e-quin!” he said. “Nice one! Aaaand fitting! Oh! Bru-cey…” his mood darkened “only you know how to make games fascinating…What I’m going to do if you died that night ooooor if Alfred all this time had struggled with the urge to just stand on the balcony and wait because he didn’t want to upset Miss Kyle. Yet as the sun set and the sky became darker he returned to the balcony taking Bruce’s empty chair to the living room and stayed there so to be able to watch discreetly. And then when his eager eyes discerned a flying form approaching the house he ran to the balcony exactly at the moment Superman put his feet on the glistening tiles.

The loyal butler could see Bruce safely cuddled in Superman’s strong arms. His young master’s hands were on Hero holding him in his chest but Alfred’s brow creased as his eyes adjusted to the dim last light of the sunset. Bruce’s eyes were closed!

Clark was absorbed in watching Bruce’s sleeping face when Alfred rushed there and the Man of Steel could tell that the man was really worried, his heart beating rather fast.

“He is alright, Alfred” he whispered “he is just sleeping” he tried to reassure him but Alfred immediately touched his lips to the youth’s forehead to see if he was running a fever. “His temperature is normal.”

As soon as Alfred made certain that Bruce was indeed alright, realized his “misdemeanor” and looked at Clark unsettled.

“I beg your pardon, Master Kent, for my… rush and… welcome back” he had resumed his composed demeanor yet his palm was still on Bruce’s forehead and upon realizing that he hastened to remove them to take the kitten from inside Bruce’s cardigan.

Clark smiled reassuringly to him but Hero having lost his very comfortable nest meowed and jerked in Alfred’s hands.

“Master Hero, behave…” Alfred cast a stern glance at the kitten and the animal silenced.

Clark chuckled but then the butler looked him the same way and gestured to him to come inside.

“He is just tired…” Clark tried to earn again Alfred’s liking as he stepped inside the enormous living room.

Alfred’s sympathizing but a bit disapproving eyes weren’t what Clark had expected so the young man frowned.

“Master Kent, I quite understand that both of you are very young and the love between you is flourishing so it’s entirely natural for you to…”

Clark was already hot all over his face and he couldn’t understand how Alfred managed to say these things so calm yet Clark couldn’t let him finish his phrase. He shook his head in denial.

“No, Alfred, no…you…you misunderstood…” he felt like a teen being caught naked in his boyfriend’s room – at least he hadn’t uttered ‘it’s not what you think’; he wanted to rub the sweat from his forehead but he had Bruce in his arms. “We…we didn’t do anything” he lowered his voice to a guilty whisper “I’d never touch him” well, that was a lie “I mean till he’s entirely fine… You can…you can ask Hero.”

Alfred smiled and the kitten gave his own testimony for Clark’s innocence.
“Pardon me for my haste, Master Kent” he bowed slightly his head and led the way to the spacious corner couch.

“We just had a turn…” Clark continued “you know how much Bruce likes flying…”

Alfred stopped before the dark blue couch that was made from a special mix of velvet and silk that Tony created and released softly Hero on the floor but the kitten just sat on his butt and watched. The butler took away the smaller cushions and settled the big one into creating a nice nest for Bruce; Clark noticed that a folded blanket was close.

“Master Kent, if you please…” he gestured to the couch for him to lay Bruce.

But Clark was unwilling to let go of his warm, beautiful armload; his eyes caressed Bruce’s face which was nestled trustingly in the curve of his neck. He couldn’t part with this body, lose that warm breath that tickled his neck…

“Maybe I should take him to his bedroom?” each second he could win was precious.

Alfred smiled as if reading his thoughts.

“He must eat, Master Kent; he must take his medicine” Clark shook his head; he had memorized every single pill and substance along with its composition and possible side effects. “The food he requested is cooking.”

Of course… Clark finally registered the delicious smell that discreetly hued the house. So Bruce had food preferences apart from cinnamon cookies… He made his mental note.

“He can sleep here till the dinner: Master Bruce likes sleeping here.”

Clark already knew that from the fifteen days he managed to spend here with Bruce: every single hour, every precious minute, every unique second. He sighed and lowered very slowly, very carefully his arms to lay Bruce tenderly on the sofa under Alfred’s mock stern eyes. Clark fixed Bruce’s legs and then his head on the soft pillow and hastened to make room for Alfred realizing that the man was waiting patiently with the blanket.

He couldn’t get over his embarrassment and kept ruffling his hair watching Alfred muffling softly his young master in the fluffy white velvet blanket, taking carefully his arms and putting them under the blanket. Clark thought that Bruce must be really exhausted to not wake up by now; on the other hand, he felt very lucky for witnessing this tender moment.

Suddenly, he realized that Alfred was looking at him and Clark flashed embarrassed for being caught.

“Leslie called twice during your absence.”

“You didn’t send her the report about Bruce’s vitals?” he knew from the time he spent here that Leslie while here scrutinized twice a day the data from Bruce’s condition and she continued that even when she returned to Gotham.

Alfred raised an eyebrow.

“Of course but Leslie is adamant about speaking herself with Master Bruce; she has the belief that she can estimate some things better through hearing him.”

Clark scratched his nape feeling guilty.
“If by that you mean that you’re worried, I apologize, Alfred…” he looked him in the eye with all his honesty “but seeing Bruce on the balcony…” he surely couldn’t explain that to Alfred “I couldn’t resist.”

Alfred grinned sympathetically.

“I hope at least the sea water was splendid…” he said with a mischievous glint in his eyes.

Clark was taken aback.

“Well, yeah…” he mumbled and ruffled his hair “but how you…?” he had dried Bruce and himself.

Alfred winked.

“Master Bruce’s hair has salt” Clark let his head drop “and Master Hero’s paws are wet and carry some sand.”

Clark’s eyes sparkled amused.

“Now I see where Bruce got his detective skills…” he chuckled.

“Finally!” both men turned to the entrance of the room to see Selina coming towards them her hands on her hips and her eyes angry.

She squatted by the sofa and caressed Bruce’s locks.

“Is he alright? Where that irresponsible alien took him?”

Clark knew better than get irritated by Selina’s words and frankly at the moment he could register only one thing: Catwoman wore an apron from the chest to the knees with frills and lace. He just couldn’t hold back his chuckle and she glared at him.

“What?” she spat “Anything funny, handsome?”

He raised his palms in surrender and shook his head in denial pressing his lips.

“Master Bruce is fine, Miss Kyle and after a nice, hot bath to wash the salt he’ll be even better.”

Her eyes widened glaring at Clark.

“You put him in the sea in the evening?!”

“The sun was still up and the waters were very warm: I wouldn’t have done it otherwise.”

Bruce writhed a little in his sleep and Alfred hurried to bring his index finger on his lips to silence them and moved his palms showing the balcony to the two youths.

Selina stood and grabbed Superman from the elbow dragging him outside but the young man followed only reluctantly keeping all the time his face towards Bruce. His eyebrows frowned seeing Hero after Alfred turned his back climb the sofa and cuddle at his master’s chest.

He sighed and Selina turned to see what Clark was seeing. She laughed and patted his back sympathetically. Clark looked at her and then gazed at the scenery that was really breathtaking from the hovering round shaped balcony: thick foliage and then dark blue sea stretching endlessly till mingled with the still lighted dark blue of the sky.
“I’m jealous of a kitten!” he huffed shaking his head in disapproval and leaned on the almost transparent glass and titanium railing that was already illuminated by the prototype solar lamps Tony had engraved.

Selina supported her waist on the railing, crossed her arms and lolled her head to the side pouting.

“Not an ordinary kitten…” she chuckled. “And you brought him to Bruce making him the most beautiful present.

Clark laughed and closed his eyes.

“Sorry I made all of you worried…I guess I’m irresponsible…” he said.

“C’me on, tough guy…Was Bruce happy?”

Clark looked at her friendly eyes and pressed his lips.

“It’s a bit complicated but…yeah, I think he enjoyed it.”

She half closed her eyes and shrugged a shoulder.

“Like everything he does with you…” she remarked slyly winking.

Clark felt his cheeks burning and Selina rolled her eyes.

“Oh! Give me a break… You weren’t so shy when you made love to him in the greenhouse…”

Clark’s eyes widened in panic and Selina giggled.

“He told you what we did there -...I mean, in detail?!”

Selina licked her red lips and raised her index finger.

“I could have tortured you… but… no, Bruce is shier than you to kiss and tell even to me. However, he didn’t run away that night and still is with you…” she nodded “so…you must be very good at this” she smiled seeing his eyes dropping “and very sensitive to his needs.”

“I wouldn’t have done anything that would hurt him in any way…”

Selina pressed her lips and swallowed hard; her eyes sparkled.

“You healed him…and I wanted to tell you that I’m grateful.”

Clark shook his head because he didn’t deserve this.

“He was the one who fought the battle and won the demons…He is so brave!”

The admiration and love in his voice warmed Selina’s heart that was always cautious when Bruce was concerned.

“You were the motive for him to fight the demons about…that. You inspired trust to him and… love…” she blinked thinking if she should tell the next. “Bruce is in love with you and that gave him the power to face the demons he just avoided till then” she finally said because Clark’s eyes were those of an innocent puppy and now the weight of her words made his shoulders of steel slump.

She cleared her throat breaking the silence.
“That doesn’t mean that you don’t need to be careful” she shook her index finger warningly and touched it to his lips. “The fact he loves you…” she closed her eyes “if you’re playing with his wounded heart, if you hurt him” she stabbed him with her eyes “I’ll kill you.”

Clark nodded: he was aware of his responsibility…And frankly he preferred to die than cause any pain to Bruce.

“I know…” he answered calmly without feeling any irritation for her threat. He gazed at the sky that wasn’t neither dark nor light blue; the stars that had already scattered everywhere. “When I carry him in my arms…” he smiled and his smile had all the sweetness he was feeling “he seems to enjoy sleeping cuddled in my chest nestling his head in my neck as if he wants to always listen to my heartbeat and feel safe” he gulped “it feels like I’m cuddling a vulnerable child…who trusts an adult to protect him from every danger, present and past…”

Selina’s features softened revealing her real caring self.

“I always feel like he’s my little brother though we have the same age…” she chuckled “I think he doesn’t like that we are so protective of him or maybe he does…subconsciously. But I think that under Batman’s muscle strength and Bruce Wayne’s adamant personality, he is still the child who seeks someone to save him and love him…”

Clark met her eyes and grinned.

“I guess it’s too complicated for him…” he turned abruptly his eyes away from Selina to stare at the trees under them.

“What?” Selina frowned because she felt that something bothered him.

Clark didn’t look at her.

“That scum Bane…” he fisted his hands but he was unwilling to continue.

Selina grasped his upper arm and though it was just a touch he looked at her.

“What?” she demanded.

“Although he’s still at Blackgate’s hospital he already has told every creep of Gotham what he and his mistress did to Bruce…Oh! He certainly would have liked to brag that he…” Clark couldn’t even utter it “did all that to Batman but I guess they don’t divulge their knowledge to strangers.”

Selina’s teeth rattled and her eyes snapped angry to the sky. Yet she looked again at him and patted his arm.

“It’s not your fault…”

Superman pressed his lips and shook his head.

“I didn’t protect him then and I fail to protect him even now from the humiliation…” he inhaled heavily “Bruce didn’t speak about Bane’s and Talia’s deeds to me” he turned to her “did he to you?” and seeing Selina shake her head in denial, nodded “and now Gotham’s scum will know everything in detail and revile him! Damn!” the thought that he should have killed that evil bastard crossed his mind: he had done it before and Bruce was worth it…

Selina licked her lips: she shared Superman’s wrath but he shouldn’t blame himself.
“You saved his life; we have him here with us, thanks to you” she chased his gaze and widened her eyes for emphasis. “I know we don’t show you our gratitude as often as we should…”

Clark waved his hand in dismissal.

“But we all know that without you Bruce would have died.”

He closed his eyes and after some seconds looked at Selina’s glimmering ones.

“He did die, Selina…” he whispered and the young woman narrowed her eyes. “I was holding him in my arms heading for the Fortress when he asked me to stop for him to see the lights of aurora” Selina’s head dropped. “And then he…he spoke to me…and closed softly his eyes as if he was falling asleep…and…and calmly everything in his body stopped.”

Selina’s eyes were tearful but filled with awe watching the Man of Steel trembling.

“It was pure horror…I never felt so scared in my life; I was floating to the void, nothing around me…or inside me… The nightmarish void sucking me…I had nothing in me except than pain, excruciating pain that I knew it won’t stop…ever…” he clenched the railing and heaved his head. “And then I sensed it and it was as if sun radiation flooded my cold body: Bruce’s brain was still alive…You understand?” he turned to her. “He felt sorry for me and came back…”

“All of us…” she mumbled and wiped her tears that flowed unchecked as the moments of the factory came to her mind. “But now he is alive and that’s what counts!”

Clark saw the joy sparkling in her eyes and pressed his lips.

“I know and I’m an idiot for being like this but…my heart is still clenched. When I’m with him it’s heaven but when I’m away the mortal grip returns and along the terrifying coldness and the dark void…and I’m happy like a schoolboy when I take the way back to him yet sometimes what he suffered occupies my mind and ruins everything…and Bruce senses everything. You know?” he asked for her understanding. “And it’s me that should give strength and encourage Bruce to his difficult path not the other way around!”

Selina raised a shoulder regarding him with sympathy.

“This is love, handsome…” she smiled.

“Give me that young man!”

Superman suddenly realized that Alfred was speaking on the phone with Leslie and the fierce doctor was pissed and demanded to speak with him.

Selina noticed his miserable expression.

“What?”

“Alfred is coming…He probably told Leslie about our excursion and now she is going to chew me out…”

Selina chuckled seeing Alfred coming with the phone on the hand and a commiserate expression. She bit her lip and just moved away from Clark.

Alfred offered the phone to Clark with a regretful expression.

“I’m sorry, Master Kent…”
Clark took the phone decisively hearing already Leslie’s uneven breath. He wanted to feel affronted by the doctor’s mistrust yet the woman’s deep worry for Bruce and the fact she believed him dead for 18 years didn’t let the emotion form.

“Leslie, I’d never do anything even remotely dangerous for him…” but she didn’t let him continue.

“Do you realize that the majority of his bones are cracked or multi-fractured held together by casts, his lungs were pierced and the one of them was dead for a considerable time and thus they are oversensitive…”

Clark inhaled and rolled his eyes but didn’t interrupt her because her voice was so husky that made Clark feel the woman’s feelings of agony and panic.

“His spleen has been removed and that makes him extremely vulnerable to bacteria, especially those who cause pneumonia” she stopped to draw a breath. “Pneumonia in this stage when his lungs are still recovering can kill him” her voice dropped and then rose to become reprimanding “young man! Not to mention how sensitive all his organs are after almost smashed…”

Clark pinched the bridge of his nose and closed his eyes.

“I know, Leslie, I know… since I have learnt all these by heart being constantly by his side during the operations… I’m monitoring his vitals – no, I’m living on his vitals - even from the other corner of the planet sweating when a heartbeat or a breath is amiss…I realize all these, Leslie, since I’m anxiously X-Raying him for any growth of his mangled bones…it’s a win and a celebration every time a bone grows a millimeter…”

He heard Leslie’s sigh and it was as if seeing her regret.

“I’m sorry, young man” she said with her steady voice. “I know how much you love Bruce and how much you suffered all this time not knowing if he was going to live or...” an inhale “and I’m grateful to you for everything but when I heard you took him to the sea…” Clark heard her rubbing her temple “Both of you are so young and have suffered so much and of course you want and deserve to enjoy every pleasure this planet has to offer…I admit I was scared, Clark, and I overreacted taking it out on you…”

But Clark was already sweating from a suffocating feeling and realization: bacteria, pneumonia…

“It’s okay, Leslie, I’d have reacted the same way as you…or worse. I read that sea water can help people with paraplegia and I assure you that the waters were very warm and there were no harmful bacteria – I scanned the water. And Bruce had a really lovely time but…” his voice shook a bit “do you believe that he might have been infected?”

“Please, don’t panic, Clark and tell the others; Alfred gives him all the antibiotics that are needed and he’s been vaccinated recently; besides with you watching him so closely and Alfred sending me data twice the day I don’t think that he is at risk. Now, please, forget my hysterics and enjoy your night. Give a big kiss from me to the sleepyhead!”

Clark grinned.

“With pleasure… Good night, Leslie.”

Tony landed graciously on the living room from the roof that opened smoothly at his approaching. He looked frowned around.

“No welcoming committee?” he saw the company on the balcony and shrugged. “That alien showing off again!” he rolled his eyes and let the bags he was carrying on the shining dark blue granite bench of his not-so-small bar.

He deactivated his armor and his eyes softened finding Bruce’s sleeping form with Hero nestled comfortably in his chest; the kitten’s fluffy head was touched in Bruce’s heart, the young man’s heartbeat lulling the cute animal that was purring fast asleep. Tony smiled.

“Even better…” he whispered and walked gingerly to his friend.

He squatted and caressed some stray locks on Bruce’s forehead back to his hair, his eyes glimmering with affection taking in the soft respiration.

“You need haircut, little guy… Looks like I finally caught you napping…” he sing-songed and then his brow creased “I just hope this alien dude didn’t do something to…”

“No, he didn’t…” all of a sudden Bruce’s eyes snapped opened and Tony was so surprised that fell on his butt.

Tony saw Hero open his eyes lazily and it seemed to him that he was grinning. He rose slowly brushing his butt and squinted at his friend who placed the kitten on the sofa.

“Don’t tell me… Your training allows you to sense enemies even when you’re fast asleep.”

Bruce’s grin was broad.

“And friends…”

“Damn that ninja training, again! You need to teach me…” he rose his eyebrows “it can be very handy, you know, and lifesaving when you have the fascinating love life of Tony Stark…” he winked but immediately rushed to help Bruce who using his hands tried to sit.

Bruce locked his eyes with Tony’s which were too serious.

“You know, Tony” he gave a tight lips smile “every paraplegic in the world can do that.”

But the Californian put carefully his one arm around Bruce’s back and the other under his knees and softly raised his friend in sitting position hurrying to place the big pillow behind his back for supporting. Bruce was rolling his eyes and Tony pouted and widened his eyes in surprise.

“What? You don’t trust Ironman’s arms made of…well, iron? Or you prefer arms made of steel?” he knitted his eyebrows.

Bruce sighed.

“I prefer arms of flesh and blood and specifically MY flesh and blood arms!”

Tony was looking down at his friend, one hand in his hips, the other ruffling his hair uncomfortably; he understood Bruce’s frustration yet he just couldn’t stop himself from helping him. As he was working on Bruce’s bionic spine part, he daily had to study his friend’s skeleton and every time the condition shocked him more.

Bruce pressed his lips understanding Tony’s feelings and decided to ease the mood: it wasn’t Tony’s or Clark’s or anyone’s fault that he felt suffocating – it wasn’t their help but his weakness that frustrated him.

“You run a multinational conglomerate” he cocked an eyebrow “how come and you’re here?”
Tony lolled his head to the side widening his eyes.

“T’m the owner of the pet-shop, little guy” he shrugged.

Bruce nodded with a knowing half grin.

“And Miss Potts once again will have to do everything…” he remarked disapprovingly with his arms crossed.

Tony raised his hands and jerked his head.

“I’m always misunderstood! She was given the day off and is with me.”

Bruce looked around.

“She’s coming with your helicopter?”

“No, she prefers Ironman’s lines: they’re not so comfy but the staff” he turned his thumbs to his chest “is hell hot! And it’s a subtler way to come here.”

Bruce’s stare was full of questions pointing at the living room which was empty of Pepper. Tony’s eyes bulged.

“Fuck!” he exclaimed.

“Master Anthony, mind your language” Alfred reprimanded him as he and the others came in.

But Tony was thinking hard under Bruce’s exasperated stare.

“No, I didn’t dropped her over Hungary and I had her over Albania…Oh!” he said and punched the air. “I stopped to the village here to buy souvlaki and gyros” he gestured to the bags on the bar-bench. “I couldn’t resist the smell – by the way, here smells delicious, too: Sel, dear, you cooked?” he regarded her apron twitching his eyebrows in amusement and she glared “Good thing I brought food…” he whispered cocking more his eyebrows and Clark chuckled.

“Tony, where’s Pepper?” Bruce asked.

Tony scratched his nape taking a guilty expression.

“It seems that…Hm…I forgot her at the village’s square…”

Bruce choked and his eyes narrowed.

“You forgot her?” his eyebrows almost reached his hair.

Tony shrugged.

“You know, I really like gyros” but seeing Bruce’s widened eyes “and it’s a beautiful, hospitable, peaceful village not Syria!”

Bruce lolled his head.

“You’re kidding me, right?”

Tony slapped his thighs and shook his head defeated.

“Fine! I’m going get her…”
“Anthony Stark!” a wild Pepper Potts with disheveled hair marched the living room barefoot because she held her stilettoes which used to hammer Tony’s head.

Bruce cringed and Clark who in the meantime had sneaked beside him wrapped his arm around his shoulders.

“Ouch!” Tony huffed and began retreating through the vast living room to evade the lethal shoes.

Selina who had tossed the insulting apron on a chair watched smirking and Alfred crossed his arms unwilling to save his young master for a well-deserved lesson.

“You took a cab, darling, right?” he arched his eyebrows “the village is near…” Tony raising his hands in surrender tried to evade Pepper’s wrath. “I can pay… Ouch!” he managed to slip the hit to the head and instead had his shoulder hit. “Mind the head!”

“Because it’s already defective enough, ugh?!” she growled. “I’m sorry for the turbulence, Bruce” she said mildly keeping her stabbing glare at Tony who made her the puppy eyes. “How are you, dear?”

Bruce shrugged uncomfortable.

“Fine, thanks…I guess…”

Tony saw his opportunity and pointed with his eyes at Bruce.

“And he’ll be better if you stop abusing his best buddy…huh?” he flapped his eyelashes. “Such violent scenes are traumatic for kids…”

Pepper kept her shoe in midair indecisive and turned to look at Bruce but Clark cuddled his Star hiding his head in his shoulder and gave the thumbs up to Pepper who resumed her attacking stance glaring at Tony who rolled his eyes.

“That traitor! OK, babe, I’m sorry…I’m a bastard, sorry…Ouch!” this time he didn’t try to evade the hit. “I deserve that…but…wait! Wait! I’ll compensate you!”

She frowned and groaned.

“Cross my heart!” he made the gesture. “Whatever you want, babe, huh?”

Pepper seemed thoughtful.

“Don’t believe him, Pepper!” Selina snapped looking at Tony challengingly and playfully.

But Alfred uncrossed his arms and walked between them.

“I think he was enough punished, Miss Potts, although his…crime was grave” he lolled his head to the side to look sternly at Tony who cowered behind him for protection. “But we must have some dinner AND I’ll implement my extra punishment along with whatever you chose for him.”

Pepper smiled, an evil sparkle in her eyes but Tony looked at her fleetingly from Alfred’s shoulders, patting the butler.

“Washing the cutlery!” Alfred narrowed his eyes sternly.

“I know how the dishwasher works…”
“With your iron hands, Master Anthony!”

Pepper made a gesture with her elbow taken from the sport arenas and definitely unusual for her.

“That serves him right!” Selina said.

Tony stretched his arms in surrender.

“Bruce, help me…”

But his buddy cuddled by Clark pressed his lips and shrugged in weakness to help.

“It’s fair enough, buddy…” he huffed. “And better than a concussion, believe me” he shook his head.

Tony sighed.

“Okay, okay, guilty as charged” and as soon as Alfred moved he hugged Pepper kissing her lips. “Ouch!” she accepted the kiss but with a bite.

Alfred approached the sofa.

“Master Bruce, I think you need a nice bath to wash away the all this sea salt” Bruce looked surprised at Clark who shrugged.

“Detective No. two…”

“Master Kent, you need the same cleaning too and I guess you could assist Master Bruce?” he cocked a commanding eyebrow.

Bruce was ready to retort that he didn’t need help but Alfred had already turned his back heading to the kitchen and Clark placed his palm softly on Bruce’s mouth.

“Sure, Alfred! Thanks! I mean…” he blushed under everyone’s glances and Bruce forgot his objections already plotting.
Chapter 5

Luthor sat on his bed in the high security cell of Blackgate Prison smirking as he recalled the things Bane was recounting to everyone with ears about his nights with Bruce Wayne. That served right the spoiled brat! Even if he didn’t have the chance to do all these himself.

Suddenly his cell was drenched in pitch black and Luthor frowned: he didn’t hear any turbulence from outside so this…blackout – if it was a blackout – was exclusively in his cell.

He didn’t like that: he had too much experience with scum to know how they worked. Cold sweat slid to his back: he was stuck in a filthy joint in Gotham and Gotham despite the frontage was always driven by criminals…Locals or not since the local players were permanently out of the game.

And then as suddenly the lights were back and Luthor breathed easier only for a second; his frown became deeper.

“How you got here?” he asked coldly; his anger surpassing his worry.

“Easily” a sarcastic voice answered indifferently and a huge shadow covered Luthor who immediately stood to minimize the height difference impression.

Luthor’s eyes shone.

“You killed the guards?” he inquired slyly with a smirk.

His visitor quirked one corner of his lips; his thin mustache twitched.

“Bruno Mannheim doesn’t need to do such bullshit unless for his entertainment” he barked and strutted inside the small cell.

Luthor thought that Mannheim’s enormous mass made the cell look even smaller, suffocating, and this made him feel more outraged for his humiliation.

“You can get me out of here” he snapped though he hated having to resort to a stranger’s help.

Mannheim moved his square neck and sniffed at Luthor and the billionaire felt his face hot with rage: it was Wayne’s fault that he was humiliated before every worthless shit.

“Now...now...Why I’d do that?” Mannheim lifted an arrogant eyebrow.

Luthor gritted his teeth.

“Then why you brought your filthy hide here?!”

Mannheim’s enormous mass was on him at no time and his big hand squeezed his neck pushing him to the wall. Luthor felt his legs dangling and his air pipe constricted; sweat drops popped all over his face.

“I want what you promised me” the fine dressed gangster hissed, his growl only an undertone. “Your part of the deal!” he tightened more his grip and Luthor’s eyes protruded from the lack of air. “I hate those who break a deal...” Luthor could swear that Mannheim’s eyes became red.

The gangster’s fingers loosened a bit to let Luthor draw some air.
“I’d have given you your order” he said through clenched teeth “but LEMLABS have passed under the control of Bruce Wayne.”

Luthor had an established co-operation with the League of Shadows but his motto was never have all your eggs in one basket, so he was working with other not so legitimate but highly profitable ‘organizations’: one of these was this gangster’s bunch of outlaws. Of course Mannheim’s orders were very strange and intriguing which persuaded Luthor that this wasn’t a common gang and their plans weren’t mediocre. So naturally Luthor wanted to keep a key role to this as well…

Mannheim narrowed his eyes.

“I do not care” he stressed every word. “I made the deal with you and you’re obliged to deliver my order!”

Luthor drew a breath to calm his heartbeat and regain his undeterred demeanor.

“How can I?!” he yelled exasperated eyeing the cell. “I would, Mannheim! But he changed the security system and staff immediately setting his people guarding the premises in order to prevent any loss in the LABS’ material. The bastard wants to steal any tech know-how!”

Mannheim’s eyes were two pieces of ice, estimating Luthor’s angry face.

“Don’t tell me that you had my…order in official premises…” his hiss was filled with explosion.

Luthor showed his teeth.

“Of course not! Yet I was informed that the filthy brat knew already even the secret premises and immediately set his control there too!”

Mannheim roared and released Luthor; the gangster’s eyes were narrowed and dark, deep in thought under a crease. Luthor smirked and gathered his legs to rose from the floor.

“So…Wayne again…” the huge man mumbled.

“Let me out of here and I’ll help you get him out of the way…” he said slyly, his eyes gleeful.

Mannheim arched an eyebrow and cackled.

“I don’t need your help with Wayne” the man twisted his lips in disdain.

Luthor crossed his arms over his chest and straightened proudly his posture eyeing the gangster sarcastic.

“He isn’t an easy target…” he snapped.

Mannheim turned towards him and regarded amused Luthor’s orange prisoner’s outfit.

“I see that…” he cocked both eyebrows and let a snort finish the impression. “But I’m not you…”

Luthor lollled his head to the side disregarding the insult with a wicked smile.

“Perhaps…” he dragged his words. “But if you get me out of here, I’ll give you access to your… order…”

Mannheim’s narrowed eyes stabbed Luthor’s overconfident ones in a staring contest.
But suddenly the cell was again in complete darkness and before Luthor even looked around him the lights returned to reveal that he was again alone. He knitted his eyebrows; he knew that the area around his cell was under surveillance and even if Mannheim’s men had knocked out the guards the alarm would be set off. And even if they managed to extinguish the alarm system the central processor would have warned the authorities…and how this wretched gangster managed to get inside and out so fast and so silently? Like a ghost…

He pouted his lips: what mattered was that he could manipulate Mannheim into get him out of the prison and Wayne would be faced with him and everyone that pissed the gangster ended dead or worse – except of course than Luthor. So maybe that oaf would give him another satisfaction.

Mannheim’s enormous shadow strutted with ease the narrow corridors of the prison’s high security sector; it was afternoon but in there with the artificial lighting easily could be turned into night. As for the inmates who like Luthor had returned to their cells…they weren’t aware of his presence.

At the corner before the exit he met another shadow bigger than himself.

“You took from Luthor what you wanted?” the second shadow’s eyes shone yellow.

Mannheim gritted his teeth and cursed causing a snort from the second shadow.

“I guess you didn’t…”

The gangster yanked his head and his eyes pierced the yellow. He suddenly bulked till he became bigger, gigantic, towering the second shadow and his red eyes scowled at him.

“Bruce Wayne gets again in my way…” he relished the uneasiness in his partner’s face and chortled. “You finished off the guards?” mocked him even though killing the guards wasn’t his will as well – for the time being…

“Of course not, there wasn’t any need for that and would have raised suspicions.”

“I thought you are a demon with a thirst to kill humans, Bagdana…” the gangster jeered him. “Or your craving for a human softened you towards them?”

Bagdana roared.

“We don’t want them suspect; I know you don’t wish that either, Darkseid…”

The presence that replaced Mannheim shook his head arrogantly sniffing at the prison’s walls.

“I don’t care about them and their…suspicions. They’re just pests to be extinguished. But it’s a specific pest that will be smashed first” he fist his stone-like hand. “His death will bring despair to the Kryptonian and clear the path to my property.”

Bagdana’s face tensed.

“No!” he groaned and the holes he had for nostrils fumed. “He is mine…” but then he smiled wickedly “yet we still set the wheels in motion.”

Dr. Thompkins in her comfy, modern but not extravagant office in the free clinic was perusing the latest data about Bruce’s health that Alfred had sent her. She fixed the rim of her glasses keeping her eyes focused on her PC screen; she felt guilty about snapping at Clark and was glad she mollified the impression she created yet her concern didn’t subside.

Only the recount of Bruce’s wounds’ extent and of the conditions that led to them was enough to make her cringe: as a doctor working at the Narrows she was used to horrid wounds however she was grateful she didn’t see Bruce immediately after the incident. Yet the reports Clark gave them were very graphic.

Everything came down to one thing: they, she was given back Bruce just before a couple of months and almost lost him again so the possibility of losing him again on her fault haunted her.

Discreet knocks on her door cracked her isolation yet she answered without looking. Maria, the head nurse, probably brought her the morning shift’s report. Light steps approached her desk and then a gentle clearing of throat.

She raised her head with frowned eyebrows and hastily minimized the window with the report on her PC. It wasn’t Maria but a young man impeccably dressed in a tailor made suit and shining leather shoes – being the son of a rich family added to his income allowing him the luxury.

He was around thirty and what made an impression to Leslie was that his haircut was exactly the same with Bruce’s – unlike the last time she saw him in a congress – and his cheekbones definitely were sharper than before. Or maybe it was just her agitation messing with her senses.

“Dr. Elliot” she grinned and offered her hand for a handshake.

The young man smiled dashingly.

“Please, Leslie; you know me since I was a toddler” he cocked an eyebrow “certainly we don’t need such formality. Call me Thomas.”

Leslie licked her lips thoughtful and nodded gesturing to the plain yet comfy chair in front of her desk.

“Have a seat, Thomas.”

But his smile became broader.

“I was hoping to have your company in a light lunch before continuing our shifts. Well?” he lolled his head.

Leslie shook her head.

“Gladly, Thomas, but I’ve so much work.”

Thomas pressed his lips, his eyes really sad yet Leslie had the feeling that this was overacting.

“C’me on, Leslie, I was hoping for some briefing on Gotham’s life – I have missed so much.”

Leslie took off her glasses and placed them on her desk.

“You’ll have plenty of time for that, Thomas, since you decided to return” her voice was a bit critical and the young doctor frowned.

“I detect some displeasure for that?” he asked almost hurt.

Leslie rubbed the bridge of her nose.
“Certainly not, Thomas: you’re a brilliant young doctor and Gotham will benefit from your presence here. Yet the last time you gave me the impression that your position at Metropolis’ General Hospital and the Neurosurgery chair in Metropolitan University was everything you ever dreamt.”

Thomas sat at the chair Leslie showed him and leaned towards her.

“People change, Leslie” and seeing her arching an eyebrow “well, you’re right…” he shook his head. “It was Bruce who inspired me to come back: his effort to offer to our city despite all the horrors he experienced made me rethink my indifferent stance towards Gotham and her people’s suffering and decide to attribute my tiniest to this valiant effort” he gave again his dashing but empty smile.

“Not ‘tiniest’ I’m sure.”

“And the position Gotham General offered me along with the chair of the Neuroscience in Gotham’s University is more than satisfying” he confessed and locked eyes with Leslie. “Well, will you honor me with your company?”

Leslie pressed her lips and huffed.

“I’d like to, Thomas, I really do but I’m too busy: Narrows still pose many demands.”

Thomas nodded knitting his fingers.

“You have data from Bruce’s condition on your screen, right?” he asked serious and on her questioning look smiled “you hastened to minimize the window upon seeing me. Can I have a look?”

Leslie bit her lip.

“Thomas, you know that I can’t.”

Thomas’ eyes darkened but he just pressed his lips and shook his head disappointed.

“So…you share Bruce’s dislike and mistrust?” he inquired in a low, hurt voice.

Leslie made to answer but he interrupted her.

“I’d expect that those torturous eighteen years would have set childish mischief in perspective for Bruce yet he seems to hold a grudge on me for” he snorted “bullying him when I was eight or nine and destroying his Tao-Tao toy…”

Leslie stared at him calculating.

“You seem to remember every detail…”

“Brucie has contaminated you with his paranoia: I understand that you have a soft spot for him and after believing him dead for so long it’s perfectly logical…” his blue eyes manifested interest. “But, Leslie, really? I know that all these horrid experiences have affected and distorted his cognitive functions and personality and I understand even his feelings against me but you? You agreeing with his unreasonable mistrust for the doings of a stupid brat - me?” he shook his head and pinched the bridge of his nose. “I was a spoiled, arrogant brat and I admit I was horrible to Brucie…and, yes, he was too young and I hurt him but…but my father’s death and my mother’s suffering after” he sighed “…changed me; I realized how dreadful I was to him and all my life I wished to have a chance to show him my regret and knowing that this was impossible since he was murdered was eating me alive. But now that we have him back…” he smiled “I just want to help him…” he widened his eyes. “I matured, Leslie: you should help him mature as well, not clung to childish rivalries.”

Leslie made her eyes softer and understanding however her stare became steely when Thomas patronized her.

“Thank you for your offer, Thomas. But Bruce is more mature than all of us” she regarded the young man’s flash of irony. “Wanting his personal data handled only by me is not a matter of Bruce’s dislike or mistrust or…grudge, as you think: he just feels better with his family, that means the people closest to him. You should understand this, after everything he suffered.”

He huffed.

“I can offer my professional opinion, Leslie; and Bruce doesn’t need to know” Leslie tensed on that and Thomas realized his blunder.

“I’m sorry, Thomas” she said sharply “isn’t a matter of personal dislike or mistrust. It’s just patient-doctor confidentiality.”

Dr. Elliot realized that he had lost the game so he gave his most charming smile and stood.

“Fine, Leslie; you’re right. I was wrong to insist but I share your worry about Bruce. Two strange bullets in his spine are too dangerous even if removed: they might have left lesions or disabilities given the malnourishment our poor Brucie suffered. So if you need anything…don’t hesitate: you can always count on me and my confidentiality” his stare became sly as his voice “Superman who seems to be very intimate with Brucie can attest to that.”

He stretched his hand to Leslie and she shook it though she didn’t like his tone.

“May at least have the pleasure to be accompanied by the most charming doctor of Gotham tonight for a dinner?”

Leslie weighted the situation and nodded; Thomas Elliot was a brilliant colleague after all and wanted to observe him more to find out if Bruce’s feelings – and hers - had a solid base or they were wrong.

The young man smiled and left her office, Leslie watching him skeptical before opening again on her PC the window with Bruce’s data.

The chair Clark had made for Bruce floated from the corner where Alfred had put it to stop right before Bruce and Clark looked at him frowning. But Bruce ignored his almost hurt look and grabbed the armrests of the chair sliding with easiness into the chair.

Clark stood up.

“I can take you upstairs…” it was stupid, he realized as soon as he uttered it; of course he could.

Bruce holding the armrests eyed him smugly and caressed Hero’s back since the kitten had swiftly climbed on his lap.

Selina marched to Bruce and took softly the kitten grinning at Bruce.

“You’ll stay with me, Hero…”
Bruce turned to Clark.

“I know you can” he spat, winked and the chair floated to the lift Tony had adjusted to the main stair. Tony smirked satisfied for his friend’s reaction and Superman’s pout. Selina was chuckling.

“Are you coming?” Bruce turned to Clark. “Or do you need my help to climb the stairs?” he quirked a sarcastic eyebrow.

Now Tony laughed out loud and Pepper pinched him in the ribs.

“I don’t want to hear you laughing” she said through clenched teeth. “It gets on my nerves…” Tony shrugged.

“Okay, Peps; I’m officially in the corner standing on one foot…”

Clark narrowed his eyes locking them with Bruce’s sparkling ones: his Star was…challenging him? He gritted his teeth and marched to meet him causing Bruce’s satisfied smirk.

“Alfred…”

Alfred who was already on the frame leading to the corridor to the kitchen stood and turned at his young master.

“Yes, Master Bruce?” he asked hiding his eagerness to do whatever Bruce asked him.

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Is it easy to have dinner at the balcony? It’s a great evening…” Everyone eyed him puzzled because it was the first time Bruce expressed a desire. Clark’s eyes flashed and his joy turned his lips upwards in a big smile.

Alfred mustered his composed demeanor but his eyes glint revealed his contentment.

“Of course, Master Bruce; and if I may: it’s indeed a splendid evening.”

Bruce smiled to him knowing how happy his butler felt just by that small request and Alfred just couldn’t resist mirroring that smile before bowing slightly his head and leaving for the kitchen.

Bruce brushed the choice for ‘up’ in the lift’s rectangular screen and began ascending. Of course, Clark followed him flying never leaving Bruce’s playful eyes.

Selina sighed.

“You better be careful, Supes…” she whispered and headed to the balcony kissing the head of Hero who had perched on her shoulder.

Pepper turned to Tony who made her the puppy eyes.

“Shower time for us too?” he grinned hopefully but Pepper cast him a cold glare and sniffed at him.

“Shower for me: so much time holding on tin makes me smell like rust” she arched an eyebrow, her green eyes poisonous and Tony protruded his lower lip and narrowed his eyes hurt.

But Pepper smirked and stressed every word “you” her eyebrows arched “‘re gonna help Alfred with the dinner. Go!” Pepper pressed her palms on his chest pushing him.

Tony stepped backwards towards the kitchen staring guiltily and pleadingly at Pepper whose eyes were stern. He blew her a kiss and ran to the kitchen; Pepper shook her head smiling.

“You’re not going to weasel out of this so easily, Mr. Stark…”

The door to Bruce’s bedroom opened on his approach and the same happened with the bathroom’s door – Tony’s apps to ease his friend’s life; Clark was following keeping one step distance.

The bathroom was spacious but not as vast as the one in the Manor’s bedroom; everything was made of light blue granite tiles that sparkled under the lights that were entirely powered by the stored solar energy. The bath tub was cream colored porcelain with plain, gold colored details, oval shaped and large, equipped with handles and supports on the wall and inside the tub.

Bruce turned his head to see behind him a serious Clark.

“Glad to see you managed to catch up…”

Clark covered their distance in one stride and held the younger man’s shoulders.

“There’s no other place I would be!” his eyes were locked with Bruce’s and that emerald sparkling star made his temperature blow. “I know you’re perfectly able to do it yourself” he said wanting to appease him but Bruce cocked an eyebrow “But am I allowed to…to strip you?” he felt his cheeks getting hot.

Bruce chuckled and smirked.

“You didn’t ask for permission at the beach…”

Clark’s mouth stayed agape.

“Well, I…I…”

Bruce rolled his eyes.

“OK, you have my permission!” and seeing Clark’s eyes glimmering hungrily “but slower this time…”

Clark nodded and lifted him from the chair. He took off his clothes slowly wrapping his torso with one arm having no problem to get rid of the clothes with the other.

Bruce regarded the pile of his discarded clothes on the bathroom’s floor.

“This is the slowest you can?” he asked amused but as he turned his eyes Clark was already naked.

Clark caressed the pink on Bruce’s cheeks.

“We’re supposed to get rid of that traitorous salt, right?” the Man of Steel said and his eyes traveled Bruce’s body safely embraced by his hands. “And, yes, this is the slowest I can when it concerns stripping you…- no clothe serves you justice.”

Bruce pouted thoughtful.

“Don’t tell, Alfred: it’ll be a great insult to his fine clothing taste.”
Clark couldn’t drag this chat with Bruce bare naked in his arms…because at any moment he would forget the purpose they were here and…He sighed internally: things he shouldn’t do would be done.

Bruce felt the movement and next he was in the tub still held by Clark.

“You didn’t ask for permission” he scowled and Clark’s eyes widened until Bruce’s glare loosened to amusement. “You’re such a kid…”

Clark touched his forehead to Bruce’s.

“Actually, you’re the kid here…”

The younger man snorted.

“Yeah, I’m…what? Six years younger?” he lolled his head. “When I’ll be eighty and you are exactly as now, I’ll look like your grandfather.”

Clark almost choked before his smile lit his face and he tightened his two arms hold on Bruce’s back, kissing Bruce’s hand that softly touched his shoulder.

“So you’re telling me that you intend on us being together for sixty years?! That’s great! That’s…”

Yet Bruce sobered and his eyes darkened; some sweat drops appeared on his forehead.

“I didn’t mean it that way…” he turned his head on the side to avoid Clark’s elated eyes and his hands dropped from Superman’s shoulders. “It’s too difficult to say something like this…”

Clark narrowed his eyes: of course, it was too difficult for Bruce to make such long plans concerning love and he didn’t want to scare him. So he cupped his face and smoothly brought it to meet his.

“You’re right, so we go one day at a time, huh?”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded: he understood that what he said might have disappointed Clark into believing that he didn’t want them being together for years. But this was not the point: what he wanted was never the point… He blinked and locked his eyes with Clark’s.

“With what I said I didn’t mean that I wouldn’t want that…but…”

Clark nibbled Bruce’s lips.

“Sssss…I know; don’t worry about anything…” he kissed him again. “Now let’s have that shower because I don’t want you catching a cold standing here naked.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side and regarded Clark.

“With the Man of Steel hugging me? I don’t think so…” he smiled “Leslie berated you, huh?”

Clark blinked.

“How you know?”

He shrugged.

“She always calls at afternoon and today I wasn’t here at the time she usually calls and she didn’t call since I woke up. So I gather that she called when I was sleeping and…hm…talked with you after learning from Alfred that we spent the afternoon at the beach.”
Clark pouted and nodded rolling his eyes.

“Of…course…But she was right and I’d have done the same thing in her place. I was irresponsible…I forgot how vulnerable you’re to bacteria.”

Bruce twitched his lips annoyed and played with Clark’s curl on the forehead.

“Leslie is overprotective: people who had splenectomy are indeed more vulnerable to bacteria but only the first months after the surgery;” he raised his eyebrows “more than two months have passed. And if I continue living in a bubble my organism’s defense will be very weak when faced with the real world. It was my decision.”

Clark smiled and Bruce grabbed the handles of the special support Tony had adjusted to the tub’s wall and led his back to rest to the titanium, leather covered curve shaped railing that held him upright. He touched an indication at the branches and pleasantly hot water began pouring on them from unseen heads.

Clark watched the water soaking Bruce’s locks and plastering them to his forehead and cheeks; streams were already running the younger man’s chest and Clark despite the fact he was also under the water felt getting hot. He took gently the bath cream and the sponge from Bruce’s hands, his Star eyeing him inquiringly but also playfully.

“Let me do that…” he breathed in a deep voice “please…”

Bruce just nodded and Clark tossed the sponge on the floor; he filled his palms with the cream that every time its smell dazzled him: the same cream Martha Wayne bathed her little Prince.

He applied the cream with gentle, round movements first at Bruce’s breasts, his eyes constantly on the younger man’s sucking the slight changes that indicated his pleasure. He brought his body closer to Bruce’s and lowered his palms slowly, smoothly to spread the cream to Bruce’s abdomens.

Then he kneeled and gingerly spread the cream over Bruce’s pelvis willing himself not get carried away and touch his thirsty lips on the younger man’s groin though he was constantly licking his dry lips. He sighed only internally casting a longing last glance before proceeding with Bruce’s hips, thighs, knees, calves and feet always extremely slow for Clark’s standards wishing to expand those moments.

Upon finishing his work, he stood sticking his body to Bruce’s and locking his eyes with his; he could hear the younger man’s heartbeat speeding. He nibbled Bruce’s lower lip, his hands resuming their round rubbing movements on his breasts teasing the pink nipples.

Bruce closed his eyes sighing and then stabbed Clark with his eyes.

“If you continue like this you won’t clean me…”

Clark closed his eyes and grabbed Bruce’s waist sucking desperately his collar bone.

“Maybe I like the taste of salt on your flesh…”

And then with a sudden but careful movement turned Bruce around, swallowing his ear.

“I have to clean you up, huh?” he whispered letting his rasps wet Bruce’s ear.

He poured some more cream to Bruce’s back and smoothly with massaging movements applied it first at his shoulders descending the length of his arms and then his shoulder blades and lower…He could hear Bruce’s slightly uneven breath but when his hands reached the younger man’s glutes he could hear only his own rasps: applying cream to Bruce’s wet buttocks that regained their enticing shape after the incident was…torture…and Clark was sweaty without the water spraying him being of any help since immediately turned into stream.

Bruce chuckled obviously feeling Clark’s torment and his twitching groin over his buttocks and Clark bit softly the crook of his neck causing a moan which made the Man of Steel smile satisfied. Kneeling before Bruce’s back side was demanding and Clark’s running sweat was more than the shower’s water – not to mention how hot was in there… But Clark was responsible and would finish his job whatever the cost.

He had a triumphant smile on his face as he stood and turned Bruce to be again face to face. His Star was blushed too, his long eyelashes half covering his orbs longingly.

During Bruce’s long stay on bed at the Fortress Clark never let the androids wash him: he always washed his Star during his long sleep. And he kept doing that after Bruce woke from the coma but with the younger man watching him awed and uncomfortable but definitely not aroused.

Yet now things were different for Bruce…And for Clark who during the first days of their ordeal that seemed too far way bathed the sleeping man feeling as being in a thick cloud of sadness and weak hope, not able to acknowledge anything from the naked body except than aggressive bruises, lacerations, burnings and more that he didn’t want to remember. And even when Bruce woke from the coma his enthusiasm, his gratitude, his happiness didn’t let him to see beyond the miracle of this mangled body being alive – having returned to him.

But now that the miracle became his everyday reality he began acknowledging each and every single beauty this unique being had to offer especially since Bruce’s hard work out rapidly was restoring the tortured muscles back to their previous shape. So his struggle not touch him in order to not hurt him was getting more and more difficult.

Bruce was sensing the changes in Clark’s attitude…and his. When he first woke up the sedatives and painkillers were so many that reality seemed covered in a thin mist: his thoughts, senses and reactions were numb so Clark’s touch even to the unharmed areas of his body felt like a dream, pleasant, desirable but unreal – plus, his body, the healthy part, couldn’t or wouldn’t react to that touches. But now…as the fact that he was alive became his routine, his body began realizing the reality of those months’ deprivation and was thirsty…

The younger man locked his lips with Clark’s claiming the super human soft warmth of his body. But the Man of Steel detached to Bruce’s almost hurt frown and Clark hastened to caress his lips with his thumb.

“Your hair have salt…Is how Alfred busted me.”

Bruce kissed Clark’s thumb and snorted.

“It’s an amateur’s error…” he sniffed at Clark.

Clark tightened his grip on Bruce’s waist bringing him closer; his eyes shining fervently locked with Bruce’s.

“I had you naked in front of me…salt was connected with other things than covering my tracks…”

Bruce brushed with both hands Clark’s broad shoulder blades and pressed his lips.

“You’ve got me naked right now…What are you thinking?”
Clark felt that Bruce was trying to seduce him but... Rao! ... Bruce didn’t need to seduce HIM. He was struggling every second to restrain himself and Bruce’s desire that he had to deny made this nightmarish. He gulped: Bruce’s health was above anything else.

“To wash your hair!”

Bruce’s eyelids almost covered his sparkling eyes and Clark’s heart clenched. Yet he knew that it was for the better. He poured shampoo on Bruce’s locks and began massaging smoothly staring all the time at his Star’s closed eyes and feeling the younger man shaking a bit.

“We’re ready” he huffed.

Bruce’s eyes opened with a dark shine.

“No, we’re not” he growled and shook his head “your turn…”

Clark raised his hands almost panicked, shaking his head in denial.

“Oh, no, no, no…” he had retreated.

Bruce was looking him with the stare of a hunting wildcat and that stare was... just... irresistible. Clark’s eyes widened seeing Bruce’s hands approaching him.

“Please, Bruce... If... if your hands touch me I won’t be able to hold back... It’d be too much…”

Bruce smirked, his stare always predatory, the wet locks stuck on his temples framing his beautiful eyes.

“And I’ll shatter…”

Clark licked his lips and run his hand through his soaked hair which was a mistake because Bruce used the handles of the special railing to push himself on Clark’s chest. The surprise and his overall condition were such that Clark lost his balance and terrorized realized that he was falling. Terrorized not for himself – porcelain couldn’t hurt him – but Bruce was falling too. He grabbed the younger man’s upper arms to make sure that he’d have Clark’s body as a cushion.

The landing wasn’t too bad and Clark was happy because the oval shaped tube was spacious enough to contain him and the porcelain hadn’t cracked. He turned to look at Bruce, his body clang to Clark’s chest.

“What do you think you’re doing?!?” he cried exasperated. “Are you OK?”

And then he noticed two things: Bruce’s amused, smug look and that the water had stopped. Now Clark was pissed! He did it on purpose!

“You tripped me on purpose to fall!”

Bruce rolled his eyes and caressed the wet hair in his chest causing goose bumbs to Clark’s spine more so when he focused on the feeling of Bruce’s pelvis on his groin.

“Of course” he answered nonchalant “I think you forget that I’m Batman.”

Clark stretched his neck and sighed.

“I’m under a human so this human can only be Batman but…”
“No more _buts_” he retorted sharply and Clark felt with dread the thing he was most afraid of: Bruce’s body slithering on his driving each of his cells crazy; his bodily perfume enhanced by the fresh aroma of shampoo and cream mesmerizing his brain into ordering full surrender.

And what was that? Bruce’s fingertips touching feathery and moving on his ribs slowly finding his abdomens and brushing skillfully each layer which pushed his hips to move upwards; motion that became a violent writhing when Bruce’s hot, velvet lips touched his navel and then nibbled and sucked his rippled flesh. He gasped and raised his torso though his head was heavy with flooding stimulation.

“Wh…what you doing?!” he gasped almost panicked as much as his lungs.

Bruce was happy to see his agitation because he knew that unsettling the ‘’opponent’’ was the first step for the victory. He detached his eyes from Superman’s abdomens and locked eyes with him completely calm and determined.

Clark shuddered from arousal under this stare and his face became all hot which became even worse upon realization. And Bruce’s calm was so irritating.

“You’re afraid that you will shatter my paralyzed lower body…however my upper body functions perfectly…” he said slyly and Clark was reminded of Selina: those two could easily have been real siblings, he thought fleetingly.

“I doubt it!” he snapped. “Especially your brain!”

Bruce narrowed his eyes and – damn! - that look was a turn on…

“You’ve been suppressing your needs too long…and mine…” for the first time Bruce’s sharp cheekbones were colored pink.

“You don’t have to do this…” he almost pleaded. “I know how horrid this was…”

Bruce’s eyes flashed angrily as he realized what Clark wanted to say: his past.

“Exactly: I don’t have to do it – I want to do it. So: shut up…” he pressed his palms on Clark’s oversensitive breasts and pushed him down brushing his nipples that traitorously had erected; the most powerful being on Earth unable to stay up. “Let control to me!”

_You always had it, Star…_ he thought and sighed. But immediately his eyes protruded feeling feathery fingers trailing slowly and gently his pelvis’ V downwards to open slightly his thighs. Bruce’s fingers caressed the soft flesh at his inner thighs ascending to his hipbones sending electric currents to his spine.

“This is the way you must do it, child!” Ra’s’ face was distorted from anger.

_Ra’s was naked below the waist with a red faced Bruce kneeled between his legs. His eyes were tearstained realizing the rage of his master which was justified since they were half an hour here and Bruce wasn’t able to obey._

“I…” he mumbled lowering his eyes to the floor “I’m sorry, Master…I can’t…”

“I know you’re doing this all the time for Falcone!”

_Ra’s’ tone gradually increased and Bruce was shaking; his shoulders were slumped and his eyes tightly shut: his Master was right but it wasn’t the same what they asked and what Ra’s asked…_
A surprised moan burst out of Clark’s mouth before he could think about it and then his torso arched: his own body rebelled against him… He grunted and his heart gave a thud… Oh, my God! The softest sensation he ever had: lips made of velvet, hot lips were planting small kisses following the V of his pelvis making his groin twitch in hungry anticipation as the tender kisses approached his length only to continue with his pelvis’ other side.

“I’ve never done…”

“Stop lying!” he roared and Bruce squeezed more his eyes cringing.

“I…I’m not…They just put…” he gulped a sob “it in my mouth and I just…” he sniffed and his voice was drowned.

He felt his Master’s mass moving and his enormous hands grabbing his shoulders and shaking him violently till Bruce opened his red, puffy eyes and looked shyly at him. The lion-like man’s grey eyes stabbed his.

“You’re a whore, child, you always were; yet now I’ll make you a useful one. A talented whore who will seduce his opponents with his beauty and skills” his eyebrows jerked indicatively. “And you’ll learn, boy: whether you like it or not!” he roared but seeing the boy crying he softened his tone and his thumb rubbed Bruce’s chin “Do you understand?”

He nodded.

“Now use your fingers and lips on my inner thighs and hipbones to create desire…” Bruce’s eyes widened in panic because he didn’t have a clue but Ra’s’ glare was eloquent “Now!”

“B…Bruce…” Clark really didn’t know what he wanted to say and those lips that now kissed sucking tenderly his flesh cast his mind in a fog of pleasure and his length in derangement throbbing more madly every time Bruce let a puff of hot air from his lungs caress Clark’s hot flesh, denying the contact.

His loud whine wasn’t flattering for the Man of Steel but Bruce’s magic fingers – as if his lips working his pelvis weren’t enough – brushed not very softly, not very hard his testicles and then nibbling causing Clark’s eyes roll inwards and his fists clench. He was already huffing and puffing without Bruce having touched his impatient length; his slightly open legs trembled uncontrollably – causing vibrations to the tub - and he was afraid of hitting the younger man.

“Oh…Bruce…Please…” his voice was too husky, too weak and he meant to ask Bruce to stop so to not get hurt by his unchecked boiling body. But those rosy, soft lips began trailing with pecks his throbbing length and new waves of hot sweat ran his face, body and especially the inner of his thighs. “Ppplease, Star, MORE!”

His Master’s moans and grunts of surrender filled the semi dark training room.

“Do it, child!” he roared. “Already!”

Bruce could hear Ra’s’ teeth rattling.

“Superman will be your total victim…” he huffed a bit relieved as the tip of his length was engulfed by Bruce’s wet mouth.

Clark huffed and puffed supported in his forearms, his torso semi raised: how much more Bruce was going to torture his hurting member by just making small sucks and strolls through his throbbing length; he felt the big vein there ready to explode when Bruce’s slightly rough tongue licked the “Star…you’re killing me…” he whimpered; the fact that Bruce’s breaths were calm as they burned his hot flesh pissed him.

Clark felt a smile on the soft flesh that tortured him and then his already hard member was welcomed in Bruce’s hot mouth and the Man of Steel just slumped on the hot porcelain, surrendering to his tormentor. His head lolled backwards and his eyes were closed, he sighed satisfied.

But then he jerked upwards, his back making an arch as Bruce’s lips were massaging in a steady rhythm strongly and then softly his sensitive member, the beating vein there bomed as his heart and lungs. Bruce’s tongue took action only rarely just to enhance the effect of his lips’ massaging moves; slowly upwards causing new streaks of sweat in every pore of Clark’s body – his face was stressed and his neck arched with its veins bulged giving loud rasps and sobs that became cries when Bruce’s nails brushed a bit rough his swollen testicles. Fire was breaking his bones…

Bruce’s heart was beating heavily; listening to Clark’s moans and cries was the only satisfaction he needed because he knew that he was making that man happy. He was hard trained to do this even without looking so he glimpsed at Superman’s sweaty, red face that gave the impression of letting out steam; his mouth was agape unable to close due to the waves of moans, sobs and saliva breaking his defenses; his eyes were closed but Bruce could see them moving under the eyelids; soaked locks had stuck on his face making him look even more beautiful. Clark’s fisted hands had relaxed in abandonment as his member became rock hard in his mouth.

And then Bruce felt it and as always dread flooded him: Clark’s hips were jerking upwards, thrusting in his mouth and Bruce had to recruit his training to not bite to escape. Clark couldn’t stop his hands from cupping Bruce’s hair but thankfully he managed to restrain them from dragging Bruce’s mouth.

“It ain’t my fault yar lips are made for blowjobs, prince…”

New cold sweat drenched his back as Chill’s hands grabbed his head to thrust deeper gagging him and that pleasant feeling of salty, delicious flesh was replaced by acid. His heart lost many beats as Chill’s enormous length surged deeper hurting his throat. He couldn’t draw a breath; he couldn’t escape, he shouldn’t escape…his legs were dead. His respiration became frantic and his fingers clenched sensitive swollen flesh on their own accord, causing a long groan of pleasure: no, it wasn’t Chill… Bruce closed his eyes: Clark, thankfully, couldn’t in his state sense his distress so he had to continue.

Bruce continued pumping with his lips the flaming flesh that boosted from the powerful hips thrust faster and more frantically almost desperate. His experience told him that soon his lover would reach his climax and braced himself. But then Clark’s gentle hands caressed his locks and cupped his face drawing him upwards to nestle in his safe chest just before Clark’s torso arched more and the Man of Steel cried his explosion.

Clark’s chest was heaving following his frantic respiration and heartbeat and he cuddled the younger man. Bruce clung to him still shaken from Chill’s scowl and snigger but not wanting Clark to figure, kissed lightly the older man’s broad chest, letting his cheek touch the bulged breast.

The first thing Clark saw as soon as he managed to persuade his eyes to connect with the world leaving their pleasant mist was Bruce’s soaked messy locks. He kissed the top of his head and tightened his one arm hold but Bruce didn’t lift his eyes. Clark caressed Bruce’s sweaty, cold cheek tenderly and sparkling eyes locked with his.
“Why you did that?!” Clark rasped out of breath.

Bruce’s eyes flashed and the healthy part of his body raised depriving Clark from his sweet heat.

“You didn’t like it?”

Clark’s heart was still beating fast as his soft member and Clark still remembered his moans, sobs and cries – thank goodness, that house was perfectly soundproof.

“Are you kidding me, Star?” he rolled his eyes. “I’m still boneless...paralyzed” really he didn’t have any strength to move except than for caressing or kissing Bruce.

Bruce smirked and lolled his head.

“I’m glad now we’re two…”

Clark chuckled.

“So revenge was your motive?” he teased and twirled with his finger a stray lock in Bruce’s cheek.

Bruce’s eyes narrowed playfully and his lips twitched slyly.

“Rendering Superman helpless is priceless…” he shrugged and placed his head on Clark’s chest.

“You wanted to give me the enjoyment you believe I was deprived…and you did it. But what about you?”

“I enjoyed it as much as you.”

“Star, you’re the bravest, strongest person in the entire universe…and I feel so lucky you love me so much…”

He knew that only endless love could persuade Bruce do what he just did. Yet his Star didn’t answer keeping his eyes closed.

They stayed silent, Clark caressed slowly Bruce’s locks wondering whether the younger man really enjoyed it or did it only for him; he felt elated, revived as every time they made love, however now he was calm pondering. Bruce’s breath on his skin was so soothing yet he couldn’t stop himself from speaking.

“You never spoke to me about what Bane and Talia did to you…” he bit his lip as soon as he uttered it realizing that he just ruined the moment.

Bruce opened his eyes but didn’t look at his face.

“You told me that you smelt it” he said dryly, indifferently.

Yes, he had…He closed his eyes and sighed.

“I know but you should talk about this.”

Bruce tensed and Clark felt it and rubbed soothingly his back wanting to calm him yet at this very moment Bruce hated that.

“Any luck on finding Talia?” Bruce asked to change the subject.

Clark understood his effort.

“No but I hope she died…” his voice was dark. “She raped you and stole your semen…”

Bruce jerked in his arms and Clark sensed even his Star’s lower body rising which meant that Bruce’s mind ruled his body into moving. The younger man’s eyes were widened, flashing menacing.

“Bane spilt everything! OK, I was expecting that from him but not you repeating it!” he clenched his jaw.

Clark pressed his lips and brushed Bruce’s back willing him to lay again on him and stop exhausting his body that wasn’t able to carry his mind’s power and will.

“Easy, Bruce…Relax, please…Let your body lay down now…” but his Star was too tense and Clark cupped his face planting soft kisses all over. “It’s OK…My fault…I’m losing it every time I think again of everything he…they did to you.”

Bruce freed his own body and lay on the porcelain but Clark rolled his body and met Bruce’s wild – so sexy – eyes with his puppy ones.

“Alfred would kill me if you get a cold while under my care…” he pouted.

Bruce shook his head.

“I don’t want him turned to a killer…”

He brought his body close to Clark’s and Superman lay flat on his back so that Bruce’s body wouldn’t touch the cold material. However he was feeling the younger man’s reluctance and hesitation so nuzzled his cheek like he saw Hero doing.

Bruce realized Clark’s effort and smiled which gave Superman the courage to lock their lips.

“Nice way I return the favor, huh?” Clark whispered.

“There’s nothing for you to return” Bruce almost snapped. “And it wasn’t your fault: it was my decision.”

Clark sighed and his mouth dove in Bruce’s wet locks.

“You counted on me to be there on time and to find you immediately even if they captured you but I failed you in both… I wasn’t there and they took you and then Selina was who found you and you saved yourself and us all.”

Bruce pecked Clark’s throbbing heart.

“I know that Bagdana delayed you…” he said decisively.

Clark searched his eyes.

“How?”
“I saw it when he was talking to me…”

Clark felt fire exploding inside him.

“He tormented you while you were captive and vulnerable!”

“He couldn’t approach physically because Talia had Ubu set repellants all over the place yet he was communicating with me spiritually. He offered to save me…”

Clark raised his head to eye better his Star but Bruce didn’t meet his eyes keeping his head on Superman’s chest.

“And you preferred to be tortured than accept his help?” he asked awed.

Bruce mumbled indifferently but didn’t make a move and Clark kissed his shoulder where the scar from a stab wound stood.

“I’m glad you sent him back in the Hell where he belongs!” Clark gritted his teeth.

But then his stare became blank because he saw again the bed where Talia had Bruce and then Bane’s words transformed into scenes. Bruce flat on the mattress completely paralyzed below the neck due to Talia’s bullets. Bane bounding crudely his hands on the headboard to make his suffering graver and then stripped him violently and… Clark gulped the big knot in his throat that formed again as he imagined that giant monster thrusting with malice, with all his power to Bruce’s sensitive body; he shuddered imagining the pain, the hurt, the humiliation, the despair of being unable to resist…

He returned hastily to the bathroom’s reality because those feelings were too painful and he couldn’t bear them. Bruce’s narrowed eyes were there, watching his and Clark touched his lips on Bruce’s forehead without managing to soften the younger man’s angry eyes.

“It wasn’t your fault!” Bruce repeated and Clark just cupped the back of his head and captured his lips kissing passionately to erase those images.

He stopped the kiss only to not exhaust Bruce’s lungs yet his hand continued cupping Bruce’s head and Clark’s lips stayed a thread from the younger man’s.

“I should have killed Bane for what he did to you and to stop him from bragging…” he whispered looking at Bruce’s sweetened eyes.

“No, this is not you!” Bruce breathed “You’re not a killer.”

Clark closed his eyes and shook his head; his hands touched Bruce’s neck and then trailed tenderly his shoulders, upper arms to take his hands and kiss them.

“You have idolized me, Star; I’m not a Saint” he inhaled. “I’ve killed” Bruce made to protest but Clark silenced him with a peck on the lips. “I want you to have the right impression of me; to know everything: when I had just started my action to protect people, the last survivors of my planet tried to invade Earth. They almost defeated me but I managed to overcome their superior forces and fight back” Bruce’s sparkling eyes were watching him avidly and Clark licked uncomfortably his lips blinking. “In the end, it was their leader, General Zod and me… We fought for hours endangering the humans around us and then I was able to overcome his resistance and subdue him…” Clark’s voice cracked.

“Clark…”
But Clark kissed him again and shook his head.

“Let me finish, Bruce…I gripped his neck and tightened my arm hold…I knew that I was choking him but I also knew that if he lived he’d attack again and threaten innocent people…” Bruce’s eyes were so sympathizing that warmed him and encouraged him to admit “And I tightened more and more…till he died in my arms…by my hand…”

Bruce caressed Clark’s cheek and his stare became more decisive.

“Listen to me, Clark: you didn’t kill him. General Zod is alive” Clark closed his eyes and shook his head exasperated. “Yes! You tightened your chokehold enough to knock him out but you didn’t finish him off. You couldn’t kill him off even if you decided to do it.”

Clark was shaking constantly his head and finally opened his eyes which were almost angry.

“You don’t know anything!” he snapped but seeing the frown on Bruce’s brow softened his tone. “And how would you know? When that happened you were – what? – fourteen? Falcone was holding you prisoner: you don’t know the facts!”

Bruce took his hands from Clark’s face and that really hurt Clark but Bruce inhaled.

“You took his ‘corpse’ to the Phantom Zone, right?” he asked confidently.

Clark’s eyes narrowed: nobody knew that.

“Have you ever checked after?” Bruce stressed every word.

The Man of Steel was speechless and his hands on their own accord cupped Bruce’s cheeks.

“No, Bruce, I didn’t: my conscience was and is heavy for that deed so I didn’t want to return to that” his blue crystal gaze became intense. “How you know all these, Bruce?” Clark saw Bruce’s strong eyes tremble. “How do you know about the Phantom Zone and that Zod wasn’t dead but only unconscious?”

Bruce turned his gaze elsewhere: he knew all these were true but he didn’t know how he knew it.

“I…I don’t know…” he mumbled and looked at Clark’s knitted eyebrows. “I don’t remember…maybe Ra’s told me…but I’m sure you didn’t kill him: you don’t have it in you to take a life.”

Clark read Bruce’s uneasiness for being unable to remember and wrapped his arms around him planting soft kisses to his locks.

“I’ll check it, Bruce…”

He nodded.

“Yes, because we should make sure that he won’t escape.”

Clark chuckled and cocked an eyebrow amused.

“Nobody can escape Phantom Zone, Bruce…”

Bruce tilted his head on the side and looked Clark challengingly.

“If Ra’s Al Ghul found a way to reach it, then someone else could achieve it too…” his eyes darkened and Clark nodded.
“Point taken!” he didn’t know if he should feel relieved or worried from Bruce’s revelation: if it was true… because the youth didn’t remember where he learnt all this and Crane had tampered with his memory, so all these could just be Bruce’s willful thoughts; Clark accepted it to not upset more Bruce but made a mental note to check this out.

Bruce had settled his head on the crook of Clark’s neck and the Man of Steel glued him more on his body because he felt him shivering; he rubbed his upper arms and sucked the younger man’s aroma weighing a thought. The mention of Al Ghul’s name brought something else in his mind.

“Star…” he finally decided to go ahead and Bruce murmured, his lips brushing the crook of his neck. “When I entered the League’s hideout I scanned the place and…I sensed something…strange.”

Bruce tensed and his eyes that until now were half closed widened staying completely still as his hands that caressed Clark’s granite breasts. Clark licked his lips sensing how uncomfortable the younger man was.

“It was a mummy…a mummifying corpse…” Bruce thrashed in his arms trying to detach without looking at him but Clark cupped his face and brought their eyes to lock. “You never talked about your captivity, Bruce…I mean, except some general stuff and answering Jim’s questions…” Bruce’s face was stony and his eyes frozen but Clark swallowed hard determined to continue. “This mummy was of Ra’s Al Ghul…” Bruce tensed more and Clark’s gaze became piercing “and the thing had your smell on it…” Bruce jerked his head away but Clark held him “and you had that disturbing smell on you…”

Bruce convulsed again to escape that gaze but Superman’s grip was unyielding, forcing him to meet his eyes.

“We must get cleaned…we’re late…” Bruce growled coldly and Clark sighed.

“What they did to you, Star?” he almost whispered, his voice deep. “What other torture they made you suffer?”

Bruce’s heart froze on those words more than the memories. Clark saw his eyes emptying from any emotion and his own watered because he wasn’t stupid; he could imagine what they did to Bruce.

“Did you find the mummy?” Bruce asked throaty, his eyes still blank.

“No; when I returned to search the place it was gone…”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded.

“Someone took it – maybe Talia…And Lucius told me he found strange things in LEXLABS…”

“What did they do, Bruce?” Bruce’s underground pain hurt him as much but if he took it out maybe it hurt less.

Bruce’s eyes flashed and glared at him.

“They strapped me in a coffin, Crane injected me with a highly hallucinogen drug and put Ra’s’ mummy on top of me to make me feel as if he was using me again” he snapped with steady but emotionless voice.

Clark’s breaths became uneven: that was preposterous, horrid! His eyes leaked but upon seeing Bruce piercing him with cold, still eyes appraising his reactions, sat on the tube and cuddled him on his lap tightly nestling his head on his neck kissing his locks.
Bruce was tense in Clark’s arms and would have jerked away if didn’t feel drained like Ra’s’ mummy. His eyes remained stubbornly open and unmoving; his heart thudding tired. He knew that Clark was feeling sorry for him…again: he didn’t want to make anyone miserable especially Clark; he had caused them so much pain and now he wanted to give them only happiness…But it was pointless…

Clark felt Bruce completely lax in his arms and heard how strenuous his heartbeat had become; he panicked. He cupped again Bruce’s face and looked at his eyes smiling and kissing desperate.

“I’m stupid, Star! You know how stupid I am! And how weak; I mean, they call me the man of steel but I’m shit” Bruce’s eyes began warming.

“No, you’re not!”

“They thought that they could break you with that shit” he laughed. “The idiots! They didn’t know with whom they messed and you smashed them: Selina told me that you sparred with Talia even though wounded and paralyzed” his eyes were enflamed. “You realize how happy you make me?”

Bruce didn’t answer and Clark captured his lips passionately, desperately.

“All these months my heart is flying… my body is glowing with energy as if I make love to the sun…” he pressed his lips. “You’re that sun! But I always do the wrong things…”

Bruce hesitantly caressed his cheek meeting his eyes. He smiled shyly.

“You don’t…”

Clark relieved lolled his head and smiled.

“So… you forgive your jerk alien worshiper?” his cheeks were red.

“There’s nothing to forgive and you’re not a jerk” he replied matter-of-factly. “Now, we must get clean, dress and go downstairs or else everyone will know what we did…”

“I think that they know anyways…”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“Yeah…I guess you don’t have to be a detective to figure this…”

It took only five minutes before Bruce found himself freshly washed, dried, muffled in his dark blue bathrobe and sat on the bed; even his teeth were brushed. He blinked to get over the…hurricane and saw Clark staring at his closet’s inside with only a towel covering his wet body from the hips through the calves.

Bruce followed the streaks of water that slithered slowly the perfect body to get lost inside the pelvis’ V that he worshipped a couple of minutes ago. He felt the urge to drink that water drop on Clark’s still erect dark nipple or the other just above the slope to his groin…

Clark scratched his freshly washed hair and the broad grin in his face as he turned to him told Bruce that the Man of Steel knew that his lover was constantly gaping at his body.

“Huh…Bruce, what do you want to wear?”

“I thought that no clothing serves me justice?” he arched an eyebrow and crossed his arms “or that was before you got what you wanted?” he added slyly.
But then a storm tackled him gently and he was under Clark’s half naked body, his mock pissed eyes piercing Bruce’s.

“You…you…”

“Yeah?” Bruce challenged him narrowing his eyes and then chuckled.

Clark nuzzled softly his cheek supporting his body on his arms, Bruce’s body trapped between them.

“I wish I could keep you naked all the time” he whispered in Bruce’s ear grazing the soft earlobe with his teeth relishing the waves of goose bumps shaking the younger man’s body. “Yet your naked body is only for me to admire…”

Bruce wrapped his arms around his neck and Clark plunged his lips in the crook of Bruce’s neck sucking causing his Star’s moans.

“So…” Clark yanked his head, sweat already moisturizing his face, his heavy eyelids betraying his inner desire; Bruce cupped his face. “What do you want to wear?”

Bruce let his torso slump on the mattress keeping his arms locked around Clark’s neck. He closed his eyes and sighed. Clark brushed with his thumps Bruce’s cheeks.

“My black T-shirt and black jeans” he answered defeated.

Clark kissed softly his lips and tapped the tip of his nose.

“Too Batman-ish…try something lighter. And definitely something long sleeved…The temperature outside has dropped – we’re in a mountain albeit on an island” he was already in the closet searching.

“Yeah…” Bruce snorted remaining flat on the mattress with closed eyes. “Why not a furry coat?” he added in a snarky tone.

“Someone is grumpy: you’re showing your emotions…” Clark teased him in a singsong tone and then his eyes flashed. “Mmm! Nice…Alfred has made his programming! There!” he said pulling it out and showing it to Bruce. “Nike ace pullover, blue with red details!”

Bruce didn’t open his eyes.

“You’re joking!” he snapped. “Blue and red…”

Clark’s eyebrows frowned slightly, he pouted.

“Why? I wear red and blue…”

Bruce snorted.

“Exactly! You wear it! It’s better than walking around with your…RED underwear in common view…” he sniggered and Clark realizing the teasing mood of his Star squinted his eyes and lolled his head.

“No lady ever complained…” he arched his eyebrows suggestively and Bruce’s swift opening of the eyes told him that he felt his grimace.

Bruce realized that his cheeks were hot and surely red; plus, without his awareness he was supporting his torso on his forearms.
“I’m sure their focus wasn’t on the wrapper but on the candy…” his eyes were narrow like a prowling cat’s and sparkling.

“Which candy you’re the lucky to unwrap!” Clark licked his lips and watched with speeding heartbeat Bruce lolling his head backwards letting his neck stretch begging to be kissed and sucked, his closed eyes urging Clark who was ready.

“Someone is freakin’ cocky!” Bruce snorted but then smiled. “There’s a dark brown Nike Ace pullover and dark blue jeans” Bruce’s indifferent voice reminded Clark of his…difficult mission: dressing Bruce.

So despite his own words Clark began dressing himself in order to postpone covering Bruce’s body. But the younger man to make Clark’s duty more difficult relaxed his body flat on the mattress and untied the bathrobe’s belt to push the fabric on his arms leaving his body completely exposed.

Clark sighed: Bruce’s even breath was making his breasts and abdominals move slowly, sensually, the cute belly button dancing seductively dizzying the Man of Steel. Ugh! This was the most demanding job for Superman…yet he had promised Alfred. So the only way was getting it done as fast as possible.

His gratitude for his super speed was greater than ever when in just half a minute Bruce was perfectly dressed and groomed without any incident.

Clark heaved him in his arms in bridal style and his nose and mouth were drawn to Bruce’s neck to suck that intoxicating smell; he had his eyes closed, his teeth grazing softly but a knock on his calves drove him out of his haze. He turned surprised and then looked inquiringly at Bruce.

“My transportation…” he said quietly and Clark settled him feathery on the chair aware that although Bruce liked being in his arms he didn’t want that due to his disability.

Dick was heading to the building where his granny’s apartment was. He was carrying his school bag and his face was morose: last year he was returning home by bus with Brian sitting next to him and then held Brian’s hand as they walked from the stop to their home, carrying his brother’s bag along with his – Brian’s school bag was always too big and heavy for the eight year old.

His granny insisted on him taking the school bus and waited him at the pavement under the building to pick him up: she was still scared that Joker would snatch him again. Dick twitched his lips annoyed: the scum was rotting in Arkham and he wasn’t afraid so every day returned on foot.

A bike was moving on the side of the road following him yet Dick had no mood to acknowledge the asshole so kept his pace without raising his eyes.

The horn startled him and he turned ready to snap but upon seeing the driver goggled.

“What’s up, man?!” Jason tittered. “Yar such a stroppy-ass! I’m followin’ ya for half an hour and ya stare the cement: ya sniff at me?” a cigarette was stuck in his mouth and Dick rolled his eyes.

“What are you doing here, Jason?” he asked exasperated.

“Getting’ ya to yar granny safe an’ sound!” he answered pompously. “Ya know that a good boy like ya shouldn’ walk alone?”

Dick jerked his head annoyed and frowned.
“Give me a break, smartass! Your school is far from here…”

Jason patted the handles of the bike with pride.

“No problem, babe!”

Dick clenched his teeth.

“Stop playing the big guy! You’re only ten, for fuck’s sake!” Jason’s jubilant face became grim and Dick regretted his words because when his friend laughed he reminded him Brian… “You came to show off your bike” his frown became deeper “your mother bought you a bike?” he inquired disbelievingly.

Jason loll’d his head backwards and crossed his arms over the leather jacket he wore.

“Naaaah! She has her own needs…I thought yar sayings about Batman being dead an’… I played upon…” he grinned broadly with self-pride.

Dick widened his eyes in disapproval.

“You stole it?!”

Jason rolled his eyes.

“What a dork! And I’d been strollin’ with it in daylight?! I know Gotham’s pigs aren’t the smartest but still… I worked hard to buy that babe! For months I’ve been stealing tires an’ sellin’ them.”

Dick looked away and shook his head exasperated.

“And they sold a bike to a ten year old?”

Jason shrugged.

“I love Gotham, dude! Comin’?!” Jason asked impatient. “That bag looks too heavy…”

Dick licked his lips for a second indecisive and then mounted the bike.

“You’re going to kill us…” the older boy said grudgingly.

“Naaaaah! I’m a responsible rider, babe” he wore the helmet he had hanged from the handle.

“There’s a spare in the case” and after Dick wore it started the engine “hold on!”

Dick clutched Jason’s waist just a second before the bike gave a jolt and surged forwards. He rolled his eyes: he was stupid for trusting the driving skills of a littl’ punk who wanted to play the adult… creep. Yet it was a nice feeling the world blurring around you giving the impression of escape…

“Stop! Stop!” he cried to his driver’s ear and pinched him in the ribs for emphasis – something caught the corner of his eye.

Jason halted abruptly and Dick bumped into him holding the younger boy to not fall.

“Wha’ the fuck?!” Jason snapped. “You want us killed? Ya stupid brat?!”

Dick pinched him harder in the same spot because the helmet thwarted him to slap the back of Jason’s neck.
“Ouch!”
“I saw something, you dumbass!”
Jason lolled his head to the side.
“So what?”
Dick gritted his teeth and pulled off his helmet exasperated.
“I saw two guys with ski masks threat someone in the alley we passed!”
Jason took off his helmet too and smirked.
“It’s afternoon, man…Robbery at this hour?” he rolled his eyes.
Dick punched him in the shoulder.
“Gotham to Jay, remember! A briefcase always draws attention and crooks…”
“Who cares?” Jason pouted. “Yar granny waits!”
“I care! What if they kill the man?”
Jason crossed his arms.
“What if ya saw wrong?”
But Dick had already dismounted and hanged his school bag at the bike’s handle.
“I’m going to make sure whether you coming or not!”
Jason rolled his eyes and dismounted too.
“Wait!” he called at Dick’s back and he halted turning slowly to him. “Call the police.”
“It’ll be too late! Come!”
He grabbed his pal’s hand and dragged him along.
“I don’ wanna ruin yar heroic fantasy but we’re kids; what we’re suppose do?”
Dick smirked at him.
“The grand thief is scared?” he jeered him and then made him a silencing gesture as they reached the entrance of the alley.
Dick was right: two men in ski masks held a man at gunpoint barking to give them the briefcase. Thankfully, they weren’t bulky and their voices indicated teens.
He turned to Jason who was fuming.
“Put on your helmet and stay here” he whispered and wore his, grateful that the helmet glass was dark.
The crooks didn’t have a clue on what hit them when Dick with two summersaults reached them and kicked the gun from the hand of one tackling his leg into tossing him on his partner; they formed a mass on the cement, their guns clinging some feet away and Dick grabbed the victim’s hand.

“Let’s go, sir!”

The well-dressed man ran for it without looking back and Dick did the same but suddenly his feet stuck on the cement dragging him down: one of the crooks had grabbed him from the ankle and now was on him.

“Ya mess’d our job, asshole! Ya be sorry, bastard!” his hands grabbed the helmet to remove it but a deafening click stopped him.

Dick rasping from his heart’s stampede saw Jason holding one of the guns, the other on his waistband, and pointing at them; the helmet made him look strange and threatening and Dick smiled more so since the crooks looked really scared.

“Get off, ya lousy horseass sonovabitch!” the younger boy changed his voice and his usual slang made an impression.

The crook on Dick stood trembling, his hands as his partner’s on the air. Dick kicked the crook that caught him on the balls and with an elegant jolt stood next to his friend.

“Nice work, J! Let’s go now!”

Yet the younger boy seemed not listening brushing the gun in his hand, his breaths swallow with excitement. Dick pulled his elbow gritting his teeth.

“LET’S GO!” he stressed every word and his eyes widened seeing Jason’s finger hardening on the trigger. Dick felt sweat.

But then police sirens suddenly were fast approaching and Jason seemed to wake which Dick took advantage of to pull his friend backwards till the exit of the alley. But as the boys were walking backwards something stopped them.

“Give me the guns!” someone spat at them and the boys looked at the stranger startled.

The man clenched his teeth impatient, snatched the gun from Jason’s hand and the other from his belt, wiped their grips and threw the objects at the bags of garbage that were piled there. He grabbed the boys from the collars and dragged them towards Jason’s bike.

Dick turned his head and saw police officers swarm the alley. He raised his eyes to the stranger’s face while Jason thrashed in his grip.

The man released them in front of the bike and Dick noticed that a small Ford was clumsily halted there. Jason patted exasperated his leather jacket and pulled his helmet fuming.

“Ya fucker!” he spat at the stranger who smirked at him.

“I get you’re the new Avengers? Gotham edition?” he jeered and Jason kicked him in the calf. “Easy, boy, easy!” he cackled. “What you would have done, badass, when cops arrived?” he shook his head seeing the two boys goggling. “Your friend is a tough nut, huh, Dick?”

Dick frowned not only because the man knew his name but also because he seemed familiar with his black a bit receding hair, his blue eyes and thick eyebrows.

“Are you both OK?” he asked concerned kneeling before the boys.
Jason cursed and spat at the cement but Dick was looking intensely at the man.

“You were watching us: who are you?” he demanded coldly.

The stranger licked his lips and nodded.

“You’re right; you don’t know me. Tony Zucco.”

Dick’s eyes widened.

“My father’s coach?!”

The man smiled and his eyes warmed.

“I’m glad you know this… I had the honor to work with your father… You look a lot like him.”

Jason rolled his eyes: he didn’t like that man and Dick’s amazed look was annoying.

“Ya got to be kiddin’ me!” the ten year old fumed.

Zucco stood up and walked to the car next to the bike and opened the door.

“C’me on, boys, I’ll drive you home.”

Jason put his foot on the cement, crossed his arms and set his jaw.

“I ainta go anywhere with ya, dude! C’me, Dick!” he mounted his bike.

Zucco cocked an eyebrow.

“Aren’t you a bit young to drive a bike?”

Jason showed him his middle finger and the adult laughed. He saw Dick ready to wear his helmet.

“I’d like to see your granny again, Dick, and share memories from the days with your father…If you want of course”

Dick lowered his helmet and gave it to Jason; then he took his school bag determined despite the younger boy’s rage.

“Yar kiddin’, man! Ya don’t know that punk!”

But Dick was already in front of the open door.

“Jay, you know his name in case I get lost” he looked at the stranger’s smiling face. “Which I don’t believe…See ya!”

Zucco grinned at Jason and waved at him as returned to the driver’s seat. Jason shook his head disapprovingly.

“As if we’re sure this is his real name…” he wore his helmet determined to follow them. “Jerk!”

Dick had his elbow on the car’s window and watched the street to their apartment building; Zucco was casting glances at him smiling warmly.

“You know, Dick; I wanted to come earlier…” he huffed. “To the funeral…by the way…I’m sorry for your family. It was horrible…” he shook his head.
Dick lowered his eyes and stared at his palms.

“Why you didn’t come?”

Zucco turned to him and gave a crooked smile but didn’t answer, just looked at the side mirror.

“You know that your badass friend follows us?”

Dick nodded.

“To make sure you won’t do anything amiss.”

Zucco chuckled.

“I wouldn’t dare! With two blocks that fight criminals” he made his voice grave. “One with impressive athletic moves and the other with his ease with guns…” he shook his head. “I’d be completely stupid, huh?”

But Dick had stayed at the ‘impressive athletic moves’. He turned staring at him eagerly.

“You mean that?”

“What?” Zucco asked pretending ignorance.

“You saw my movements and found them impressive?” the boy asked hungrily.

Zucco nodded.

“Uhu…You have your father’s style and I detect his talent…” he locked his fervent eyes with Dick’s moved ones.

Jason seeing that the Ford was slowed to park in front of Dick’s building remained a bit far but didn’t leave till he saw Zucco opening the door for Dick and Ms. Turner approaching the car.

Dick saw puzzled his granny frowning at Zucco and grabbing her grandson from the hand as if afraid of the man. Zucco half closed his eyes amused and grinned.

“Hello, Ms. Turner! So glad to see you again after all these years.”

“What are you doing here?” she asked aggressively her grip on Dick’s hand tightening.

Zucco blinked innocently and pouted.

“See my nephew, of course…My cousin’s boy” he smiled to the boy and shrugged as if saying to him that this was the reason he didn’t come to the funeral. As they turned to the building entrance, Zucco smirked at Ms. Turner back as she dragged the boy inside. “It was a pleasure for me too!”

“What’s the matter?” Dick asked his granny as soon as the doors of the lift closed.

Ms. Turner took some breaths and rubbed her forehead.

“I don’t want you near that man AND I told you to take the school bus” she realized from Dick’s frown that she was yelling and closed her eyes; she cupped her grandson’s cheeks. “I’m sorry, sweetie…”

“He’s my dad’s cousin?”
Ms. Turner rolled her eyes.

“‘Yes, he is’ she huffed desperately.

The boy narrowed his eyes.

“And his trainer. He just wants to see me: why is that so wrong, granny?”

The lift clinked and the doors opened. Ms. Turner looked Dick in the eyes.

“After twelve years?” she pointed to him and led the way to their apartment.

The alarm clock on the nightstand read two in the morning.

Bruce was ‘trapped’ in Clark’s hot body in a tight cuddle, one arm of steel wrapping his back and the other his chest, making his breast the pillow for Bruce’s head.

Clark’s relaxed, slow breaths brushing Bruce’s lips as the younger man watched his closed eyes in sleeping. He knew that Clark wouldn’t sleep unless he slept first and lowered his vitals in sleeping mode and then Clark succumbed and fell asleep. Bruce knew that Superman didn’t need much sleep but he cherished sleep when happy; on the other hand, Bruce couldn’t sleep for the same reason…

Joy… Or anyway good mood, a flying feeling in his chest and… he liked to watch the night sky from the large rectangular balcony door of his room. The sky was covered with heavy clouds but Bruce loved it as much as the clear sky they enjoyed during dinner and afterwards. He couldn’t sleep because he replayed that evening.

The gathering of his friends around the square glass table on the great balcony. Apart from the secret solar lighting in the titanium-glass railing Tony had set floating rectangular lanterns of many colors.

Tony… Bruce hardly muffled a laugh seeing again Ironman – yes, Ironman, the red and gold metallic armor – entering the balcony holding a large platter with sternly positioned pieces of pastitsio and… an apron covering his torso through his thighs.

“‘Ladies are suckers for DAT hot body in apron…” he winked to him. “Only apron… And poor Tony thought that apron and super sexy Ironman would melt a cruel, punishing heart…”

Pepper had arched her eyebrows.

“You’re in the right path, cowboy… keep trying”.

Alfred had served them and took Hero from Bruce’s lap to put him on the floor where a bowl with cat food awaited him.

“No petting while eating, sir” he had pointed to him firmly and poured some antiseptic to Bruce’s hands.

“You’ll eat with us, right?” he asked worried that Alfred’s butler training would take him away but the kind man grinned.

“A good butler never disobeys his young master, right?”

The night was magic: the deep blue sky was cloudless and filled with cheerful stars that surrounded the slim slice of the moon. A light breeze made pleasantly cold the environment and more intense the... scent of the pine wood that covered slope. The tittering of birds and the distant sound of the sea reached their balcony. Bruce closed his eyes rejoicing but returned hastily to his surroundings when felt Selina’s sly eyes.

“I hope you enjoyed as much as he…” she winked.

Despite his training Bruce almost lost his fork.

“What?”

“You’re still flashed, kiddo and he glows…”

Bruce let his fork and brought his palms over his cheeks which indeed were still hot. Selina chuckled.

“He always glows…” was the only remark Bruce made glancing at Clark who was talking with Alfred hopefully about other things than that.

Selina twitched her lips and snorted.

“Yes…” she raised an eyebrow smugly. “I sensed some vibrations earlier…” she whispered slyly.

“Greece is a country of earthquakes…” Bruce answered nonchalant and Selina’s eyebrow cocked more.

“Centered in your bathroom…” she stressed each word and Bruce gulped, his face red hot, and his friend winked and nodded. “Go, kiddo: give the super-hunk a run for his money…”

Bruce’s eyes remained widened in embarrassment and Selina grinned broadly rubbing her friend’s back, Superman eyeing his Star as much flashed having overheard.

When the food on the table was finished Alfred stood to bring the dessert when Tony suggested have their dessert on the beach. During their stay almost every night went to the beach to eat ice cream.

“I’ll take Bruce!” Clark hurried to stand beside Bruce.

Tony widened his eyes.

“Nooo kidding! That’s a surprise!”

“I’ll take Hero too!” Clark reddened and Bruce took Hero.

“No problem…I’ll have the two lovely ladies for myself…if I’m not stabbed on the road…” he rolled his eyes.

“Or you ditch us on a tree branch…” Pepper snapped with her arms crossed.

As many nights as Bruce had spent on the beach always found them magical...

Tony gathered logs and Clark lit a nice fire with his heat vision. They savored their triangle shaped desserts and then Tony did something to his wristwatch and music played in crystal quality.

The sly billionaire took Pepper and began dancing, winking at him.

“Mr. Stark, I think you brought us here on purpose to avoid your punishment!” Pepper remarked and Tony widened his eyes in mock hurt.
“What punishment? You mean the one including a pair of handcuffs and blindfold?”

Pepper punched him in the shoulder.

Bruce chuckled and urged Clark to dance with Selina who was tickling Hero’s belly trying to evade the kitten’s paws. For a couple of minutes he watched them dancing but soon Hero bored of chasing Selina ran to him to resume his game.

And then he heard it although Superman was floating to him. Selina took Hero in her hands and Clark stretched his hand for Bruce to take. He wanted to dance with him and Tony with Pepper had stopped their dance to see.

He had shaken his head smiling.

“I can’t walk, Clark…”

Clark pouted and cocked an eyebrow.

“I’m not walking either…” he gestured at his floating feet and Bruce gave him his hand.

Clark pressed him on his body and twirled them in the melody; Bruce was staring constantly in Clark’s adoring eyes, his smile making his eyes sparkle cheerfully. But Bruce couldn’t relax his face because he didn’t want to lose any detail from Clark’s beautiful face that the reflections of dancing flames on it made him think of a powerful god whom every man and woman loved so desperately that killed themselves for his sake.

Clark had frowned as if suspecting Bruce’s thoughts and Bruce hastened to loosen his intense stare and smile, brushing Clark’s raven locks that the sea salty breeze slowly waved. He felt Clark’s arms tighten more on his waist and let his head lean on his shoulder as the sound of the splashing waves accompanied ideally the song’s melody.

A lightning cracked the horizon followed by a faint thunder…the storm was on the other side of the sea but would come to them soon…

Bruce looked at the sleeping man-god: so beautiful!

A sudden wind shocked the trees and Bruce saw the sky webbed by lightning. The open window was already bringing the smell of rain in his nostrils before sparse tap-tap announced the coming of the rain. Bruce loved the sound and smell of rain; exactly like when it rained in the Manor.

The temperature dropped very fast and that woke Clark who pecked and nuzzled Bruce’s cheek before hurrying to close the window.

“Leave it” he said and Clark complied: he knew other ways to keep his Star warm.

Clark was very glad to return to the bed resuming his cuddling tighter this time capturing Bruce’s lips.

“You love the rain, huh?” Clark smiled. “Me, too, I remember in Smallville when I was a kid I loved to stand under the rain relishing the smell of wet grass; my Ma was calling me inside despite the fact I couldn’t get sick…” he smiled.

Bruce remained silent looking at Clark’s face and the older man cupped his face searching his eyes for answers.
“When I was under the debris in the factory” he said calm “when I knew that I had only some seconds of life…”

Clark couldn’t listen to this, it pained so much and the rain raised so much his spirits that he didn’t want anything to spoil it. He kissed Bruce’s forehead.

“Don’t think about that, Bruce…”

“The only think I was regretting was that I wouldn’t have the chance to see my loved ones again… You… see you a last time to explain…to tell you…”

“Sssss…”

“Clark” he whispered determined “I… I think… I love you…”

Clark nestled Bruce’s head in his chest caressing his locks. He knew how hard was for Bruce to say that… and that was a feat for that man to open his battered heart to a stranger, Clark, and break the chains into loving him. Clark closed his eyes and sighed realizing the risk for Bruce: how disastrous would be if his emotions were betrayed. No…Clark definitely, absolutely could promise that he’d never betray that love.

“I think you should strike Bruce Wayne…” Bagdana said slyly approaching Darkseid who was sitting at his throne having returned to his real appearance.

The dark god raised an eyebrow disbelievingly.

“You argued that attacking him wouldn’t serve my goal; you claimed that revealing myself to Superman by killing his mate would lead to…” he cackled “failure.”

Bagdana looked at him unfazed from his irony.

“This assault, believe me, will serve your goal perfectly…” his eyes glimmered red for the first time since his fall and Darkseid sniffed intrigued clenching his throne’s armrest.
Chapter 7

“Ooooh! Haaaaalllooooo, my fine fellow loo-loonies!” Joker made a deep bow in front of the cafeteria bench where a sturdy orderly gave the trays with the inmates’ breakfast.

Most of the other inmates goggled at him with uninterested, blank eyes and just continued their breakfast eating mechanically like robots. They were chronic patients who didn’t know Joker.

Joker giggled.

“Uuuuuuu! I…LOVE an intelligent audience!” he winked to the Afro American orderly and pouted his lips to the offered tray.

However there were some who knew him. Victor Zsasz who after his unfortunate encounter with Batman was brought to Arkham, twitched his lips in disgust and took his toast chewing it glaring at the clown. Jonathan Crane who had chosen an isolated corner in the cafeteria frowned hearing Joker’s voice but didn’t make any movement trying to stay unnoticed.

He knew that the insane criminal was in Arkham but he didn’t believe that there would be an idiot who would let the mad dog out. He smirked: leave it to that incompetent bitch, Quinzel, to do the blunder. His eyes rolled on their own: where they found that cow? He cast some sideways glances at the jester: he looked different without his make-up, more normal, yet Dr. Crane knew better.

Crane saw with the corner of his eyes some other psychos, Joker’s former goons with history of mental illness, approach their boss and that was preposterous! They couldn’t seriously permit Joker socializing with his goons preparing who knows what!

Thankfully, the orderlies came and took the goons to another section of the cafeteria and Crane was happy for Joker’s downcast lips.

“C’me ooooon, good people! It’s a reeeeunion: have a heart!”

But the African Americal cafeteria employ glowered at him and without a word stuck the tray on his hands. Joker giggled and lolled his head towards the man.

“That’s myyyyyy guy!”

He hopped and danced crossing the cafeteria holding the tray and sniffing the air.

“Mmmm…the smell of freedom…” but then he pouted and frowned. “Naaah! That’s air freshener, disinfectant aaaaaand loony deodorant!” he lolled his head to the side. “Nice!”

Crane continued chewing his food indifferent yet cold sweat washed him as with the corner of his eyes saw Joker’s asylum shoes approaching his table. He knew about Joker’s nonsense with Wayne and the clown’s obsession – who didn’t learn this shit? Also, he was aware of the way this madman reacted when someone touched his “spouse” and he was the only one in here who did that…

He felt a cold shiver running his spine as the jester stopped right at his table. Surely, they must watch that dangerous scum; they couldn’t have just unleashed him and let him unchecked? Could they? Something inside him smirked and snorted for his panic: you don’t have to fear that stupid clown, Jonathan; you’re extraordinary after all – and even if you’re not I’m here…

“Is this seat taken?” Joker asked playfully and looked around; he raised his eyebrows and jumped on the seat. “I hope I didn’t sat on your imaginary littl’ friend, huh?” he gave an innocent smile that didn’t fool Crane.

“Go away…” Crane hissed without looking at him. “You’re not wanted!”

Joker jerked to the back of the chair and barked.

“Dat’s a waaaarm welcoming!” and then though he was laughing his eyes glowed menacingly.
“Nooow…” he smacked his lips “cut the buuulshit, Craaany!” he began chewing his toast nonchalant.

Joker knew that his cute shrink’s eyes were on him watching his every movement from the one side mirror of the interior window – the stupid paintings there were a really pathetic front. And Stark’s stupid tricks would knock him out as soon as he stretched an aggressive finger on anyone. So he chewed noisily his food – he needed to be sly as a viper.

Crane felt the hostility emanating from Joker’s body and shrank in his chair. However Joker quite casually as if speaking with an old friend leaned on his elbow and stabbed him with his icy cold eyes.

“I know you were with those motherfuckers who took Brucey” he addressed him, his nasal voice in business matter and looked at the reinforced glass window seeing at the yard. “Niice view, huh?” he exclaimed cheerfully and lolled his head to the side glaring at Crane. “Youuuuu” he took a forkful of scrambled eggs “del-icious food, huh? Wayne reaaaaally cares fooor pooooor looooonies, huh?
Mmmm…” he squinted “one loooony” he pointed his plastic fork to himself. “Youuuu” he hissed suddenly though his lips were upwards in a broad smile “helped them torture my babe: youuuu tortured him ‘n’ I knoooow you enjoyed it…”

Crane’s eyes widened in fear, hearing the rapid changes of Joker’s tone and sensing the imminent danger.

“You haaaaad MY boy defenseless at youuuur whims…Mmmm…tied ‘n’ unable to move ‘n’ naked” he licked his lips, his eyes lost in a dreamy expression. “And that del-ICIOUS spectacle is only for my charming eyes!”

Crane clenched the rim of his chair but the terror he was experiencing cast him in a thick cloud from where something unfazed came out.

“I didn’t fuck your boy, if that’s what bothers you” he answered leaning towards Joker with eyes filled with glee.

Joker giggled lolling his head backwards.

“I liiiiiike good jokes, budyyyy!” he yelled for the guards who were watching clenching their guns; he smiled at Crane. “If you had, you’d have been already dead meat” he twitched his eyebrows suggestively and Crane realized that something sharp was pricking his groin under the table.
“Yooouuu see, ‘geeeenius’ Starky believes that he can stop me before killing by monitoring my vitals – yeeecet why on Earth should something change when I kill?! GOOD ONE, huh?” he cackled aloud “Laugh before I rip your filthy guts out…” he whispered and Crane obeyed. “I was sure you didn’t fuck him ‘cause you’re too pervert for that…” he lolled his head to the side and rolled his eyes “you’re a shrink after all!”

Crane frowned; after his initial shock from feeling the sharp object on his groin he was calm, calculating the audacious mad worm who dared to ridicule him.
Joker took his juice and sipped.

“Then what do you want?” Crane asked enraged.

Joker placed his foam cup on the table and tapped his fingers.

“Buuuuuut what else? Hmmmm… I don’t have anything to lose anyways: hundred or hundred one doesn’t make a difference, right?” he made a short council with himself and shrugged “Kill you!” Crane opened his mouth to shout but Joker hushed him. “If you scream you’ll die before they move a finger – look at them…” he pouted gesturing at them with a lopsided glance and nodded with sympathy “they’re worth-LESS.”

Crane got the message: they were indeed pathetic. And they letting Joker approach people like this made it more evident. So he had to play it cleverly.

“You said that if I had fucked Wayne I’d been already dead” he pointed with his serious voice drowning his trademark scorn. “I didn’t.”

Joker scratched his hair and leaned his head.

“Right” he nodded thoughtful. “But the other things you did to him are sicker so…we end up to the same” he laughed. “Only I do sick things to Brucey…” his eyes flashed.

Crane felt the sharp edge already ripping his skin yet the strong man inside him stared nonchalant at Joker and smirked.

“Then you’re not interested to learn what I’ve learned about that curious boy-toy…” he dragged his words arching his eyebrows suggestively.

Joker narrowed his eyes: of course he was interested. He was suspecting his spouse’s big secret but he wanted to learn everything concerning Brucey’s mystery to be sure: why that whacko lady, Morticia, did all these to get him? Fine, the lady with the gravedigger style might have wanted ransom as Stark and Freddy testified but this didn’t explain Crane’s part in all this… He wanted to unravel the mystery, possess the knowledge and then gain control of the game imposing his rules.

Crane smiled wryly even though the sharp object still grazed him; he could read the madman’s interest: Joker wasn’t stupid after all. He definitely smelled that something wasn’t right… Scarecrow yanked arrogantly his head as the pricking feeling left his groin.

Joker took his tray and stood stabbing Crane’s smug eyes; he didn’t want anyone to suspect from a prolonged stay with Crane. He had planned to gut him in a blink of the eye yet…he was a man of improvisation not plans…

“We’ll talk soon, Cran-y…” he leaned to him. “Word to anyone about our…neighborly chatting an’ my…boys” he gestured with his manic eyes to his former goons “will tell you my newest jokes…” he winked and walked away.

Crane twitched his upper lip in disgust and contempt but he was elated: with his genius could easily use both Joker and Wayne to his benefit.

“You know Alfred is watching us?” Selina mumbled to Bruce and he nodded.

“From the living room’s window…” he didn’t turn to not embarrass Alfred who always taught him that it wasn’t kind to stare at people.

“He’d prefer to take you wherever you wanted with the jeep” she petted Hero who lay on Bruce’s lap.

“I know but I needed to stroll” he shook his head “even with the chair: Clark was to call him an hour ago but he didn’t and that worried him: maybe some emergency occurred or…he forgot him or got fed up with him…no, that wasn’t a possibility… He blushed from his arrogant thought and seeing Selina’s suspicious stare added hastily: “And…Alfred needs some rest from taking care of me and you too.”

Selina rolled her eyes.

“You’re kidding me, right? These are the best vacations I’ve ever had!”

Bruce smiled slyly.

“And the most boring…”

Selina narrowed her eyes and put her finger on her lips.

“Hm…I wouldn’t call Kostas or Argiris boring…” Bruce laughed and Selina shrugged. “Handsome, cheerful boys eager to be hospitable to a lone tourist…Though things got more interesting with Argiris…”

Bruce winked.

“That explains your sudden interest in fishing and beekeeping; the hours you were spending cleaning the fishnets and beehives…”

Selina pouted and widened her eyes innocently.

“You know how much I like helping my fellow human beings…”

Bruce snorted.

“Especially the handsome ones of male gender…”

She twisted her lip.

“…and learning new things!” she added exasperated and then rolled her eyes. “What’s a girl to do?” she shrugged as they followed the path inside the forest. “You found your mate, now it’s us, singles’ turn…”

Bruce nodded and grabbed her hand.

“You’re right…” he smiled looking up at her. “Do you think Hero will start looking too?” the kitten stared at him puzzled and Selina grabbed the animal from the armpits and kissed him.

“He is too young for that!”

Bruce lolled his head at the side.

“Imagine Alfred having 3-4 little Heroes rubbing at his legs!” he chuckled and Selina did the same returning Hero to his lap.
“Oh! That will drive him nuts! Not that he doesn’t love Hero…” the kitten meowed his agreement.

Bruce closed his eyes and inhaled deeply the cool, clean air of the forest that had the pleasant scent of the recent rain. It was so refreshing!

“It’s cold after the rain – it began looking like serious Fall… And just two days ago we ate at the balcony…” Selina said and patted Bruce’s light jacket. “Are you warm enough with this?”

Her friend tilted his head looking exasperated at her.

“Not you too, Sel… You know that I spent all my life in the cold in only a shirt.”

She nodded with blank eyes.

“A ragged, dirty, bloodstained shirt…”

Bruce gave her a tight lips grin and took her hand in his.

“Exactly; so with that jacket I’m more than warm and Alfred wouldn’t have sent me out unprotected, huh?” he slightly tightened his hold on her hand and blinked. “Sel, why you hid it from me?”

She narrowed her eyes, truly surprised.

“I don’t understand.”

He shook his head and pressed his lips.

“When you were 10 years old a nice couple was to adopt you…”

Her eyes bulged and she jerked her hand away.

“You’re wrong!” she snapped but she knew that it was futile; Bruce always double checked things. “How you know?” she demanded in a low voice but snorted. “Of course…We should have taken your PC: you’re really dangerous with that!”

Bruce took again her hand and Hero rubbed his head at Selina’s palm purring; Bruce looked at her encouraged by Hero’s help.

“The paperwork for your adoption was ready, they adored you but then you ruined everything being aggressive to them and misbehaving and they adopted another kid” he locked his eyes with hers despite her effort to avoid him.

“Why were you researching me?” she demanded coldly, really pissed with him. “Is it again that stupid obsession to find my parents, right? I told you: I don’t care! Why you don’t respect my wish? Stop poking your nose into things that aren’t your business!” she withdrew her hand and turned her back really fuming.

Bruce closed his eyes; the ‘aren’t your business’ part really hurt but he understood that Selina was trying to divert the discussion.

“Aren’t my business?” he asked calmly. “They lived in Metropolis and would have taken you there so you misbehaved to fuck up your adoption…” his eyes pierced her back taking in her head’s slight motion to turn to him. “Because if they took you there you wouldn’t be able to see me…” he concluded softly.

His chair moved closer to her and he touched her forearm.
“They were really nice people: the girl they finally adopted has a perfect life with them…” his voice was cracked “and the reports say that you as well were happy in their company” he huffed and shook his head. “You could have had a happy childhood, Sel” he lowered his eyes and petted Hero who was licking his palm to prompt him. “A good, loving family…”

Selina let a growl and turned swiftly squatting before him; her eyes were flashing angrily.

“You were the only family I ever needed and I need! And I wouldn’t ever choose a childhood without you, even perfect as you imagine it! I’d never abandon you…” her loud voice dropped “alone…to suffer alone…worse from my absence…” Bruce closed his eyes and Selina cupped his face “everyone knows that you don’t separate two siblings…” she pressed her lips.

Bruce opened his eyes and kissed her palm: they weren’t real siblings but their bond was as good or better.

“I wouldn’t exchange a night behind our garbage bin watching you eating your sandwich…smiling at me… with a life as their kid.”

He nodded: the truth was that he didn’t know how much he’d have lasted without Selina there every night yet it was too big a sacrifice…

“Still…”

Selina placed her fingertips on his lips to silence him.

“I know you wouldn’t abandon me either…whatever the price.”

Bruce’s eyes sparkled: once he did, for two years – two horrible years.

“Only to protect me from that asshole, Al Ghul…” she answered to his thought and widened her eyes “and I know it was painful for you too.”

“You’re more than I deserve, Sel…” he gazed at the green scenery “If I knew then I’d have urged you to forget me and go with these people and live a beautiful life because, honestly, what you did, what you sacrificed for my sake, was too much…” he locked eyes with her and caressed her cheek “incredibly great, unbelievable, remarkable, awe inspiring…” he kissed her cheek.

She gave a crooked grin and lolled her head.

“I didn’t want anything to change…I couldn’t imagine my life without you, I couldn’t leave you behind because…it hurt” she squinted. “Only the thought hurt…my chest…my mind” she bit her lips and huffed “I was bonded with you from the first moment…”

Bruce closed his eyes and touched his forehead to hers; he inhaled because it was difficult to say what he intended to.

“The alley behind the Opera House…The anniversary of my parents’ murders when I sneaked out to lay that withered white rose…” he felt Selina’s eyes bulge: it was her secret and till now he didn’t want to reveal that he knew. “You saw what Chill did…and for that you killed him.”

Their eyes locked again.

“I thought you didn’t figure…” Selina whispered and laughed. “Stupid girl…You’re a detective after all…”
Bruce hugged her and rubbed her back.

“At first I thought that you saw me at the alley behind Dolcetto but slowly I connected the dots: we met a night after the incident and you knew who I was – my face was known yet in the state I was then I wasn’t recognizable so only if you had seen me in the alley you would realize. Also, your eyes when you were looking at me…”

Selina coughed.

“I was too obvious, huh?”

Bruce shrugged.

“Or I was prone to attribute every sign to what Chill did since it haunted me…” he pressed his lips and his stare became more intense. “I’m sorry you had to see that…”

But Selina tightened her grip on Bruce’s cheeks.

“I’m sorry I wasn’t the Catwoman yet to break that sonovabitch’s bones and save you…”

Bruce laughed and Selina followed.

“We’re still those helpless, stubborn, desperately-loving-each-other kids!” he chuckled.

Selina closed her eyes and shook her head huffing.

“And I still love it, kiddo!” she exclaimed. “Mmm…and this year we’ll get the best Christmas ever!”

“No…” Bruce replied serious. “No Christmas will be better than those you gave me that year in your attic…”

Selina looked at him and kissed his cheek.

“Alone against the whole world…” she smiled; her heart beating heavily on the memory. “And then the stars glowing after the miraculous black out…”

“Alfred’s food you brought me without knowing…”

Hero meowed and rubbed his head to their chins purring.

“Hero will be celebrating with us again…” Selina said tipping the kitten’s pink nose.

Bruce caressed the animal’s head and the purring became louder.

“It’s like a friend came back… I know he’s not the same kitten…yet…”

Selina nodded.

“It’s like we started from where we left it…”

All of a sudden Hero jolted and upon landing on the dirt ran through the bushes. Selina startled jerked up and Bruce turned his chair towards the bushes worried.

“There might be foxes lurking…” he said and Selina ran at the same direction.

“I know!” she replied and seeing Bruce following: “stay here! I’ll be right back with the fugitive!” her smile was radiant and Bruce reflected it though it felt bad for staying behind.
He tried to follow her with the eyes but in an instant she was lost. He frowned and punched the armrests huffing irritated. He growled and made his chair move following the path to the glade opposite the way his friends went: Selina would find him easily there or he would hear her returning and meet her.

It was beautiful there, so peaceful...Of course, it wasn’t the first afternoon he was coming here with his friends. His entire body felt elated and calm; the bushes, the trees with their intertwined branches, the loud birdsong, the humid smell the rain had left over the nature...

He was happy and calm here but he knew he had to return to Gotham...He wanted to return to his city. He yanked his head and gazed at the clear blue of the sky, a few fluffy clouds lazily slithering to meet the sun that was still shining though the evening wasn’t too far. He closed his eyes and let the sun caress his face and the clean air strengthen his injured lung...

He heard the echo of Clark’s crystal laughter as he had taken him in his arms and lifted him to a branch to see a nest fool with young birds. Bruce had touched gingerly with the tip of his finger one of them and chuckled when the bird bit him.

"Their mother will be scared seeing us here” he said to Clark and he arched an eyebrow.

"Not to mention attacking us!” an angry bird flew frantically around them and Clark covered him from the aggressive beak.

He had grabbed him again but hadn’t returned him to the ground but placed him in another, uninhabited branch. Superman dressed in loose pants and a white T-shirt captured his lips passionately, sucking and caressing his mouth with his tongue. He was floating around him and Bruce couldn’t hold his laughter even through the kiss because their spectacle was so funny...Like two bizarre, oversized, ugly birds – literally, lovebirds...

He chuckled even now on the memory. It was far better than remembering that video Vale had published almost three months ago and since was reposted everywhere; everyone learning Superman’s soft spot for him. He wasn’t afraid of facing the relentless gossip or Superman’s enemies but it could endanger the people around him and jeopardize his secret: having to defend himself and others might force him to reveal his true skills and identity.

He frowned without tensing visibly; he sensed a change at his surroundings. He yanked his head supposedly to gaze at the trees but in reality to scan the area.

Though Bruce already knew it, jolted from surprise seeing a lean man sprawled on a tree branch. The stranger was dressed in forest green old style leather leggings and a loose tunic of the same color; he lay on a thick branch supporting his back on the tree trunk and having one leg upon another; he held a pine needle and chewed it. His black eyed stare was on Bruce and a devilish smile carved half his face.

Bruce held his heart and rasped trying to calm his breath from the supposed surprise but inside he was calculating the sudden presence that felt so odd: it was ridiculous but he felt like the nymph Daphne when she came across Apollo in the forest; only the God of Sun was blond and this man had black greasy hair that reached his shoulders reminding more of Pan and...

He mentally shook his head for his thoughts: he read too many ancient Greek myths during his staying and...well...he was strolling an isolated Greek forest.

“Kalispera” he greeted the stranger who regarded him with a cocked eyebrow and interest but without changing his lax demeanor.
“The Greek word for ‘good afternoon’…” the man frowned. “Mmm…how ‘bout sticking to English?”

“So you’re not a local” Bruce remarked and the stranger gave a broad grin and regarded him more interested.

“So you’re a clever boy, huh? Why asking directly when you can snatch your answer, right? Of course, I wouldn’t consider it clever strolling alone in a forest, especially with your history…” Bruce frowned. “Except if you hoped to meet one of my Greek counterparts…” he chuckled.

“I’m not alone” Bruce answered.

The black haired man propped himself up with a swift movement and let his legs dangle from the branch.

“Yeah! You had that hot stuff with you and your cute kitten but they left you alone and that’s bad…”

Bruce pressed his lips not bothering to hide his concern: Clark had equipped his chair with some defensive measures just in case and he could use them without betraying the alien origin of the chair since Tony Stark, the inventor was his friend.

“You know who I am and you’re watching me…” he narrowed his eyes giving a slight worried and angry tremor in his voice – he wanted to appear frightened but irritated as well.

The man shrugged his shoulders and looked around playfully.

“Don’t tell me you’re afraid of me, Bruce…” he huffed amused raising his upturned palms to the air.

Bruce squinted, lolling his head to the side.

“Should I?”

The stranger pointed his index at him laughing and Bruce couldn’t help but imagining him with white paint all over his face.

“Interesting specimen, you are…Ummm…I start understanding them now…”

Bruce on his part didn’t understand and that annoyed him, which had no problem showing; he turned his chair towards the clearings’ exit using the control screen to not betray the mind control aspect. Although he had his back turned to the man, Bruce could sense his frowning and… He jolted startled as if he hadn’t expected the man’s reappearance in front of him, again on a branch: really odd things, Bruce frowned: a ninja assassin sent by Talia?

But then Bruce heard it before the branch crunched and the bizarre man fell on a bush: he chuckled and saw the man’s lips twitching upwards.

“I’m glad I’m entertaining you…” the man spat in his strange accent that Bruce could connect with only another one’s and with a thud his not-so-random acquaintance vanished to reappear in another branch.

Although Bruce had already spotted him, looked around puzzled till the man cleared his throat revealing where was he. He patted the branch where he sat.

“Better now…” he muttered and turned his eyes to Bruce. “Nice chair! Superman made, huh?”

Bruce knitted his eyebrows and narrowed his eyes.
“Who are you and what do you want?”

The man scratched his nape and tilted his head to the side staring lopsided at Bruce who sensed that the stranger was puzzled from something – maybe the odd presence tried to do something because Bruce felt the Black Butterfly on his chest slightly vibrating.

“I touched a sensitive spot, huh? Humans are so strange…” he hunched. “Sorry, I didn’t think you’re keeping your affair with him a secret!”

The Black Butterfly vibrated again and Bruce discerned again a frustrated grimace in the strange man’s face.

“Why I can’t penetrate your mind?” the man asked completely casual as if saying the most common thing.

“What?!” Bruce exclaimed. “How dare you!”

The man tipped his lips puzzled.

“Ooops! The ‘penetrate’ was a wrong choice of word…” he raised his eyebrows “understandably…” he shook his head “with your penetration history…”

Bruce didn’t reply just pressed his lips, set his jaw and steered the chair to move to the opposite direction.

“You know a relative of mine!” the stranger hastened to yell reemerging once again in front of Bruce this time standing with his hands crossed, ‘startling’ him.

“Stop doing that!” Bruce exclaimed. “And I don’t know any relative of yours” though he could think of someone…

The stranger was dead serious now piercing Bruce’s eyes with his, enhancing Bruce’s awareness that he was trying again to read him.

“Because we aren’t truly relatives so we don’t have any resemblance.”

Bruce closed his eyes and rubbed the bridge of his nose shaking his head tired.

“I don’t have time or mood for this game, sir…I’ve got to return.”

“You know Thor!” the stranger said. “He is, let’s say, my brother.”

Bruce huffed: what was that now? He looked at him.

“I don’t know him” he stressed each word “I just happened to see him once or twice with Tony – nothing else” he shrugged. “So, I don’t know why you came here but I’m afraid that it was fruitless.”

The man walked casually to him and Bruce withdrew in his chair that reading his will moved backwards. The man’s black eyes flashed focusing intensely on Bruce’s face.

“If I wanted to hurt you, you wouldn’t have the chance even to blink…” he hissed quite serious and Bruce snorted inwardly. “So don’t flinch! You say that you met Thor once or twice yet my dear” his eyebrows arched sarcastically “brother is fascinated with you as the entire Asgard – and I know it’s not due only to your sex appeal…”

Bruce gritted his teeth.
“So why?” the man narrowed his eyes. “What is it that makes them so charmed by you?”

Bruce rolled his eyes and ran his hands through his locks.

“You’re kidding me… I don’t understand what you’re saying but if you’re Thor’s brother you can ask him” he shrugged.

The man smiled wryly.

“Let’s say that neither big ol’ Thor nor the other Asgardians trust me much…” he chuckled. “Fancy that…my dear Bruce.”

Bruce nodded, pouting.

“So you came here to…” he squinted “how you said it? Penetrate my mind to solve the mystery and then?” he frowned. “Do what?” he paled as a victim of so many atrocities would have done.

The man crossed his arms and touched his lips thoughtful.

“I’m not a pure evil God…” the man answered and Bruce arched an eyebrow. “You see” he smirked his lips “I like to cause…quality turbulence…stirring the waters and spoiling the perfect lives of the bulgy and handsome Asgardians.”

Bruce could easily discern the grudge and the scoff of the strange man – possibly because he was quite different from Thor and by extension the other Asgardians; maybe he was mocked for his appearance?

“You’re Loki…” Bruce regarded his acquaintance with collected eyes. “The God of mischief and fraud…”

Loki turned his eyes upwards huffing frustrated.

“Why not of cleverness, unconventional beauty, resourcefulness? Even Hermes enjoys better handling and he stole his brother’s cattle when just an infant! And I in fact was an adorable infant!” he arched his eyebrows.

Bruce shrugged and pouted.

“Sue the authors of Norwegian mythology…”

The sly God turned slowly his eyes to Bruce and cackled.

“Nice one, boy! Maybe I will…But where’s my manners?” he made a deep bow. “Flattered you know me, after all I’m not a diva as my muscular, hunk ‘brother’.”

“Are we done with the ceremonies? Because, sorry, but I’ve got things to do…” he looked eagerly to the exit of the clearing: Selina probably was looking for him by now.

But Loki was rapidly on him grabbing his chair’s armrests and Bruce gasped.

“I don’t see anyone missing you…” he protruded his lips mockingly but Bruce didn’t bite his bait to make him feel bad.

“What have you done to my friend?”

He shook his head and brought it closer to Bruce’s.
“Hmm…Nothing from all the fascinated things I thought when I saw her” Bruce breathed easier. “Yet I… - you said that I have the fame of mischief – so…I distorted somewhat this lovely forest into making her job difficult. But…” his lips almost grazed Bruce’s “I was referring to your Kryptonian boyfriend and your red and gold buddy…”

Bruce snapped his head on the opposite side to avoid Loki’s lips who grinned.

“It’s stupid and criminal of them to leave the littl’ red riding hood alone in the forest while the big bad wolf…” Bruce gasped seeing the lean God transforming into a big, black wolf that licked his cheek and returned to his initial form “roams around. I was hoping to see him or Stark-y…”

Bruce swallowed.

“So you came for them not for me…they’re not here so you can…leave?”

But the cunning God in a blink took the form of Hero, nestling in his lap and purring, his head rubbing at Bruce’s breast.

“Hmm…Nice boobs!” Hero remarked with Loki’s voice and Bruce grabbed him from the nape of his neck and threw him on the forest floor, the God taking his normal form before landing, giggling.

Bruce brushed the screen on the armrest, crossed his arms and his chair turned in the other direction heading for the exit only to almost bump on Loki who smirked.

“Stubborn mortal…And I thought we had a good time…”

Bruce huffed really pissed and rolled his eyes.

“Are you not going to threaten me with what Supes and IronStarky would do to me for harassing you?”

Bruce let his head roll to his shoulder.

“What do you want, Mr. Loki?”

Loki cackled.

“I like that ‘Mister’…I’m having much fun with you, Mr. Wayne” he narrowed his eyes and pouted his lips thoughtful. “Imagine the fuss if I took you with me…” Bruce’s eyes widened but inside he was fuming. “Gods, semi-Gods, mortals and…demons – am I right? - trying to find you…Mmmm… that has happened again, huh?” he leaned to him. “But why, Bruce? What’s your secret?”

Bruce sensed that something wasn’t right – something new - but didn’t show any sign although readied himself. He saw Loki frowning too regarding the sky suspicious.

And then Bruce heard it coming before seeing it: he could drive the chair away with his brain but with that man…God…whatever… he didn’t have much freedom to act; it’d be very suspicious. He clenched his teeth: clumsiness wasn’t suspicious…

Yet as soon as he tricked the chair towards the ground, Loki grabbed the chair and jolted few feet away just a second before a yellow-blue beam hit the spot where the chair just stood. Loki giggled seeing the white light that instantly enveloped the chair to protect Bruce from the danger.

Lois walked to Clark’s desk with a cunning smile on her face. She stood right next to his chair leaning to see what had gotten Clark’s attention on the computer screen.

“Hm…You’re one of the fans of my newest interview, huh?” she asked thoughtful and a bit disappointed. “I had my fingers crossed for something more interesting.”

Clark who had heard her coming turned to face her.

“You’re not a fan of your own interview?” he arched an eyebrow. “I thought you always choose very carefully the people you interview.”

Lois crossed her arms staring lopsided at the pictures that accompanied her interview.

“Of course and I’d be quite crazy, not to mention stupid, to not take that interview…”

Clark smiled.

“But?” he prompted her understanding that there was a ‘but’ coming.

Lois tapped her lower lip with Clark’s pencil.

“I have the sense that this time I was used…you know? Chosen because I’m Superman’s favorite journalist?”

Clark frowned.

“That’s good, right?”

Lois pouted.

“I don’t know: I’d prefer to be chosen for my worth as a fighting reporter and not for my… connections or unknown reasons…” she shrugged. “Anyway. How’s Bruce?”

Clark’s eyes bulged and Lois narrowed her eyes.

“Damn!” he exclaimed and some of their colleagues looked at him surprised, so he lowered his voice, fumbling with his Smartphone. “I forgot to call him; I should have called him” he eyed the clock at the bottom of his PC screen “two hours ago! How could I?”

Lois placed her hand on his shoulder.

“I know you go to him every day; you were there – what? – four hours ago? And you’ll see him again in a couple of hours.” she sighed. “Ow! Lovesick puppy…” she shook her finger patronizingly. “Let him miss you a bit…”

Clark squatted beside him so that nobody could hear them: her friend’s paleness and eagerness to stand worried her.

“What?”

“The sensors from Bruce’s chair indicate danger” he grimaced “an attack”.

“Are you sure?” she whispered.

He shook his head and stood.

“Krypton’s technology it’s never wrong…I must leave immediately!”
She nodded and stood too.

“I’ll find an excuse for Perry” she said and Clark nodded already heading for the exit.

“Tell him I had a lead on Intergang…”

Tony was supervising with evident pride the construction site in New York. He wore a constructionist’s helmet and was listening to the head architect’s report. He beamed as the man assured him that the skyscraper would be ready in one month.

“The Avengers’ Tower!” a deep voice said and Tony turned to acknowledge Fury who just approached him.

Tony dismissed the architect.

“My inspiration, my money, my tech! Avengers need headquarters, something to reestablish the people’s trust to them after the revelations about S.H.I.E.L.D”

Fury shook his head with a thoughtful expression.

“You’re the director now so you decide. But open hours for public isn’t too much?” he sneered.

Tony tilted his head on the side and locked eyes with Fury’s sole eye.

“Now that’s a good idea! Especially, female public with bikinis!” Fury shook his head exasperated and Tony laughed. “C’me on, chum… We” he stressed the word “decided to make moi the head director but you still are the stuff director with our participation of course. We won’t let S.H.I.E.L.D. become again a shady organization.”

Fury brought his hands behind his back and gazed at the impressive skyscraper.

“Really impressive and at New York’s center to advertise the honesty of the new scheme…” Tony nodded, grinning satisfied. “I offered you my resignation when old S.H.I.E.L.D. was uprooted: I still think that maybe it would have been better for the new organization if you had accepted it.”

Tony patted him patronizingly on the back and Fury frowned at his hand.

“You still feel guilty for not suspecting S.H.I.E.L.D.’s true nature but who could?” he shrugged. “Even I” he arched his eyebrows “THE genius didn’t smell anything funny” Fury rolled his eyes and Tony nodded. “I know, I know… I don’t like you either but I trust you and your skills…and…you know too much about us to let you out of my sight!” he shrugged. “Keep your friends close and your enemies closer’’

“I’m not your enemy” the tough veteran grimaced but he frowned seeing Tony staring at his StarkStell worried. “What?” he demanded so casually that nobody would suspect anything.

“Bruce…”

Fury yanked slightly his head and Tony looked at him lopsided sensing the man’s regret and inner question.

“I’ve got to go” Tony’s armor began enveloping his body.

“Want me to call reinforcements from our local agents?”
Tony winked and Fury could hear his thought: nice try, Fury, but I won’t bite and reveal where Bruce is.

“I’ll do it myself if I need to” he answered as the face plate covered his smug face.

“Of course…” Fury twitched his lips and watched him vanishing rapidly at the horizon.

“How touching! He still protects you even when afar!”

Bruce glared at him but then frowned at the clearing seeing bizarre creatures flooding the space; a fence of bushes kept them hidden but Bruce was sure that the curious creatures would soon locate him because whoever sent them surely had programmed them to follow his vitals.

He found the key deactivating the shield and crawled away from his chair to the bushes to see them clearer: they were green, human sized with small wings and their jaws were covered with hundreds of sharp, needle thin teeth. Bruce frowned: they were probably androids of unregistered technology or… He inhaled thinking of Bagdana: demons… But the demon was trapped in the depths of Earth so he couldn’t be the culprit.

“I’d bet that this shield wasn’t supposed to disappear before the cavalry came…” Loki whispered cunningly in his ear having crawled along.

“Good thing you didn’t bet…”

A new blast was launched towards Bruce as a creature turned his flashing green eyes on him and Loki raised his palm in front of Bruce’s face and the beam bounced hitting the one who sent it. Both he and Bruce saw that the thing just stumbled.

“They don’t want to kill you” Loki cackled. “That’s good news! Huh?”

Bruce rolled his eyes wishing the irritating God left and indeed Loki disappeared but before Bruce even considered moving he felt strong hands grabbing and flying him under an avalanche of beams behind a wide fallen tree trunk. As soon as he was placed on the soil Loki reemerged lying beside him.

“Sorry for the start but I’m incognito here…” the God chuckled and touched Bruce’s lip that had a small bleeding scratch. “Seems like someone had the same plan as me: great minds think alike…”

Bruce was fuming: damn! That idiot!

“I wouldn’t consider your mind great!” he bit Loki’s finger and the odd God waved it laughing.

“Oh, boy! I didn’t imagine you so aggressive…” Bruce was looking at the creatures which were fast approaching them. “I like it!” he smacked his lips. “Mmmm…Superman surely has great hot times in his bed…” he blew at a creature which made to override the trunk and sent it to crush between the thick, intertwined branches of a treetop.

Bruce turned to him pissed.

“Can you just shut the fuck up and go to…Asgard?!” he spat gritting his teeth.

Loki laughed and raised his eyebrows.

“I’m on your side, babe” he turned swiftly and only his stare frozen a flying green thing. “And it sounded like ‘go to Hell’…not that Asgard is nicer than Hell!’ he shrugged. “At least at Hell you have better company!”

Bruce huffed.

“Go wherever you want but leave me alone!” he used his elbows to drag his body away from the tree as ten beams at once hit the trunk that immediately went ablaze.

“You’re quite fast with your arms…” Loki followed him mimicking his moves with difficulty. “I wonder if you’re as skilled with other members of your body…”

Bruce grunted, rolled his eyes and…rolled his body over a cluster of nettles to avoid being punched by the hammer-like fist of a creature that dived on him from the sky. Loki’s transparent head yanked and the creature was launched again to the sky blowing up.

“Those nettles really got you!” the God said serious; he was again visible since nobody was looking “not to mention those rocks…”

Indeed, his face hit on a couple of small rocks and now some blood dripped but he didn’t have time for this as two creatures surged on him. Thankfully, the forest was thick and as those two were ready to snatch him from opposite directions he grabbed a tree trunk supposedly from panic, dragged his body away, and the things hit each other.

Loki who was hitting the green guys from behind a bush heard the commotion and made a rapid swirl sending power waves to the two who had attacked Bruce.

“Even I can’t abandon you defenseless…” he raised his eyebrows sarcastic. “What Thor would say?!?” he shook his head and Bruce squinted.

“Give me a break, will you?”

“You motherfuckers! You don’t like that, huh?”

Bruce looked to the spot where that voice came from. Selina was back kicking one creature, punching another on the chest sending both to crush on the others who surged. He gritted his teeth, the desire to stand up and fight burning inside him…but that…God was there…

No, he wasn’t: obviously, the sneaky God left when he saw Selina. Bruce pressed his lips and focused on his paralyzed legs exactly when his friend seeing three green things heading to Bruce made an impressive somersault and catapulted them with her glued together feet.

An impressed whistle stopped Bruce before getting on his feet and stared upwards at a branch where a squirrel was staring at the fight and then at him.

“Fuck!” Bruce spat because now he couldn’t participate in the action and the squirrel frowned disapprovingly; his black eyes sparkling.

Though Selina had engaged in battle with most of them thwarting their charge at Bruce, five of them landed around him. Selina turned her eyes at the place where their attackers landed; she was scared and determined.

“I’m coming, Bruce!”

But one of them grabbed his upper arms and heaved him in order to hold him to be hit by the stunning beam of the opposing creature. Bruce frowned really pissed hearing the squirrel snigger enjoying Selina’s frantic and desperate effort to reach Bruce and save him.

“Some protection…” Bruce mumbled raising an eyebrow at the squirrel and let a yelp of terror to make his thrashing in the creature’s grasp seem caused from panic but in reality slipping just before the beam hit him. The thing that held him staggered and tackled another one in his fall.

Bruce slumped on the soil having braced himself for minimizing the impact. Selina gave him a bright grin and punched with the back of her palm a creature that surged to catch her finishing it off with a kick launching it into a tree.

However Bruce couldn’t wait for Selina because the creatures that remained were ready to attack him so he rasping scared crawled backwards stumbling one of them with such camouflaged force that it collapsed.

Selina was now ready to engage the ones threatening him when new ones from the sky blocked her path causing her frustrated curse.

Bruce maneuvered his body on his elbows dodging the stunning beams in such a manner that some of them hit other creatures, his fuming eyes casting glances at the sneering squirrel but suddenly it was Bruce’s turn to sneer: a black and white fur ball climbed rapidly the tree and jumped with a wild hiss at the odd rodent that squeaked and vanished.

“Well done, Hero!” he exclaimed really proud of his kitten but immediately he was forced to roll on some fallen branches to avoid the beams ending up behind a tree.

He was in pain though it would be much worse if someone else was in his place. He was hearing the green things coming for him but now there was no Loki so he could do what he wanted to help Selina who was pounding their attackers.

He frowned, hearing a new sound: someone was landing and simultaneously real blasts not stunning beams shook the trees blowing up the creatures. Bruce looked at the newcomer.
Chapter 8

It wasn’t the first time Bruce saw the person who was floating at the middle of the clearing hitting wrists together causing fire waves from her bracelets that blasted the creatures swarming there. But obviously she preferred to smash them with her bare fists because immediately began pounding them with a broad grin that revealed pearl white teeth flashing more than her bracelets.

Bruce narrowed his eyes estimating, cuddling protectively Hero that ran back to him after chasing away the odd squirrel. She was exactly as he saw her in the pictures that accompanied Lois Lane’s latest interview: Princess Diana of Themyscira, the leader of Amazons, the one that brought Oliver Queen back after two years he had been stranded in an uncharted island.

She was tall, in his height, lean but strong built with rich curves and blue-black waist length hair waving in the Fall’s light air. A gold tiara with a ruby five-pointed star adorned her perfect locks advertising her royalty and demigod nature. Her blue eyes glimmered resolute and...seductive. The setting sun behind her back made the woman breathlessly impressive as the golden rays highlighted her athletic body and her feminine beauty.

Bruce cocked an eyebrow: well, she didn’t need the sun to boast her beauty: her clothes or better… the lack of them was enough. Her bulky breasts were dressed in a shining red skin tight breastplate which pressed her breasts letting half of them out of the golden rim in her long cleavage. The breastplate let her taut, buff belly naked till the start of her pubis’ slope which was dressed in blue bikini-like panties embroidered with golden stars. Skin tight red boots covered her long calves leaving her bulky thighs naked and glistening.

Yet Bruce forgot all about her his concern for Selina surpassing his puzzlement for the Princess’ presence. He looked at his friend who continued her battle amongst a pack of charging creatures; Bruce cursed because now he couldn’t stand and help her. His eyes widened as one of the things surged from behind at Selina who was dodging her opponents’ punches.

Even if he called her to watch out it’d be too late so he grabbed a big stone and threw it to the attacking creature, hitting it square on the chest and sending it to crash on a tree.

Selina surprised looked at Bruce and grinned to him before resuming her fight. But there wasn’t much to fight because the newcomer having ended with her opponents turned to Selina’s blowing them of with beams launched from her bracelets.

Selina’s wild face snapped to her ready to attack but the woman in front of her smiled benevolently.

“I’m on your side, warrior” she raised her palm peacefully and Selina relaxed her posture realizing that at last their enemies were defeated, slumped around on the clearing, some knocked out and some blown apart.

Relieved Selina turned to see Bruce but to her ultimate horror two of the creatures that have escaped jumped on him, the young man covering Hero with his body and crawling behind the tree using his elbows.

“Bruce!” she cried and jolted to reach him already aware that she wouldn’t make it on time.

However, Selina saw a glowing lasso jerking to the air wrapping both the creatures at once. She turned surprised to the Amazon who flipped her lasso in the air and once the creatures were away from Bruce she pointed her bracelets and blew them up with such force that nothing was left. Her face was tense with ire.

Bruce’s eyes widened and immediately frowned seeing the Princess pointing her bracelets at the creatures that were dispersed around the clearing flashing her flaming lasso to lift their bodies and hitting them with the beams of her bracelets, wiping them out completely.

Bruce was outraged, on the verge of yelling at her: how was he to find who sent the creatures when she destroyed all evidence? His hands clenched in fists and Hero meowed confused, looking at his Master’s angry frown.

Selina couldn’t reach Bruce as she was forced to stay dodged to not be hit by Diana’s firepower; however her eyes were on him reading his wrath and as soon as the onslaught stopped jolted to her feet to run to him. But the Princess landed before her and Selina stopped abruptly, huffing frustrated, her eyes looking at Bruce above Diana’s shoulder.

“You could be an Amazon!” the Princess told her smiling broadly and Catwoman rolled her eyes clutching her waist. “You’re a brilliant warrior and you could have a prestigious position among my sisters in Themyscira.”

Selina tilted her head exasperated for the delay.

“What’s the fun in a world without boys?” she snapped slyly and passed her.

Bruce was already crawling towards his chair holding Hero and Selina bit her lips because she should have been helping him instead of chatting with that…Princess. But then a familiar whoosh waved slightly the peaceful now clearing and Selina’s hair rose from the air wave.

Bruce knew that wave but didn’t look up; he pressed his lips to reach his chair without anyone’s assistance but all of a sudden two arms of steel enveloped him and a strong chest supported his torso stopping his movement.

A second similar sound announced another arrival: Ironman who hovered over the clearing. He noticed that there was no sign of attackers though the clearing had the characteristics of a battlefield: half burned branches all over, burnings on the tree trunks, dust twirling and the heavy smell of explosions; on his way, he had spotted another presence in the clearing apart from Bruce and Selina but the Amazon Princess in flesh and blood was a sight much more stunning than in paper or electronic screen.

He frowned because she was staring with a strange smirk at Superman holding Bruce, without sending even a glance at the newcomer – him - yet Tony’s ego didn’t hurt because he was too worried to let this shit get to him. So he rushed to Bruce deactivating the faceplate at landing beside Selina.

Bruce thrashed in Superman’s arms feeling totally embarrassed with all these frightful stares at him. Clark pressed his lips, his agony making him angry.

“Damn, Bruce! Calm down, I want to scan you!”

But Bruce cuddled more Hero and raised his wild eyes to Clark who took in the scratches and bruises covering Bruce’s face along with dirt.

“I’m alright, Superman! Selina was fighting them – she needs scanning: she might be wounded or have broken something…” he rattled his teeth.

Selina squatted by his side and their eyes locked.
“I’m fine, Bruce: let Superman scan you.”

Clark smiled at him.

“I’ve already scanned her: some bruises, nothing worrisome. Now…”

“I’m fine too; they didn’t touch me…”

Tony shook his head.

“They didn’t have to touch you…” he said gravely and Bruce glared at him.

“I don’t feel any pain…” but he followed their joint stares at his pelvis and legs and realized huffing that his pants were torn and there was some blood from lacerations.

“Understandably so, since under the waist you don’t feel anything anyways!” Clark snapped.

“We’re not alone…” Selina whispered pointing with the edge of her eyes at Diana who in the meantime had approached.

Tony floated ready to fly and Bruce narrowed his eyes at him inquiringly.

“I’m bringing Leslie…” the billionaire said grimly and Clark had to strengthen his hold on Bruce who jerked towards his friend.

“There’s no need for that, Tony!”

Tony shook his head exasperated and rolled his eyes.

“You have a lung that is still healing” he made to say more but cast a sideways glance to the Princess “…among other things” he raised his eyebrows suggestively “and you just suffered an attack so I want to be sure! Thank you very much!”

Bruce gave Hero to Selina and inhaled deeply.

“He scanned me and I know you did too without finding anything!” he cocked his eyebrows. “And I’m not coughing so there’s nothing wrong with my lung…”

But Tony was already on the air, his worried eyes at Bruce.

“I want you monitored!” Ironman said behind his faceplate and was gone to Bruce’s total disfavor.

Clark had had enough: Bruce in this sensitive condition had been attacked; he obviously had avoided his attackers by rolling in a ragged terrain which led to many bruises and scratches that Bruce under the effect of adrenalin and…stubbornness didn’t feel. He couldn’t tolerate more delay to his Star’s proper treatment so he rose holding him in bridal style already floating.

Selina followed his ascend sharing Superman’s concern but had her eyes locked with Bruce’s wanting to calm her agitated friend. And that enabled her to register what Bruce was seeing: Princess Diana’s odd smile.

“Let me sit on my chair, Superman!” Bruce said to Clark. “Please…” he hastened to add because someone saved by Superman couldn’t just pose demands.

But Clark didn’t care about facades; his face was tight.
“We don’t have time for that” he said sternly looking straight ahead and not at him. “I must get you somewhere comfier to be examined properly.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes pissed not only from Superman’s sharp denial but also from the fact he didn’t look at him. He tensed and only then Clark turned to him surprised by Bruce’s broody mood.

“I told you I’m fine…”

“Superman is right, Mr. Wayne” Princess Diana interrupted him rudely with an eyebrow cocked. “You’re just a human after all…” she pointed out.

Selina’s eyes widened from surprise and irritation, Superman for the first time acknowledging the Amazon Princess who smiled at him and he nodded respectfully. But Bruce locked eyes with her and tilted his head to the side.

“Thanks for the info!” he spat raising an eyebrow, taking in her smile to Clark which smile became a smirk when her eyes met Bruce’s.

“Princess Diana” Clark said kindly “I’d like to thank you for your lifesaving intervention” he cleared his throat realizing Bruce’s scoff. “And I’m sure that Mr. Wayne would like to invite you to come at his house for a tea but his adventure has upset him so much that he failed to mention.”

Bruce didn’t let his outrage show but Clark felt how tense his body was: he knew that if they were alone Bruce would have hit him.

“Oh, I’m sure” Diana grinned. “But I have some obligations demanding my attention so we have to leave it for another time. And you don’t have to thank me: it was my duty and pleasure to stop those bastards!” she clenched her fist in the air and closed her eyes flapping her endless eyelashes. “I hate those who attack weak, disabled humans.”

Selina was ready to say one or two things to that arrogant lady but Bruce cast a calm glance at her communicating that this obviously was the Princess’ purpose.

“And I’m sorry this lack of tolerance urged me to blow them up in front of Mr. Wayne’s terrorized, unhardened eyes…” she gave a hollow grin to Bruce and another respectful to Clark and took off.

“You can let go off me now” Bruce told Clark when the Amazon was out of sight.

But Clark tightened more his grip.

“No freaking way!” he took off towards the villa, Bruce grinding his teeth; Selina trying to appease him with her eyes.

“What happened, Master Kent?” Alfred hurried to meet them on the balcony, his worried eyes searching Bruce’s battered face.

Bruce huffed.

“Nothing serious, Alfred; don’t worry. Superman exaggerates!”

Clark was angry because throughout the short way to the villa Bruce didn’t even looked at him and continued that way even now – he so much wished that the obstinate human had just wrapped his arm around his neck and nestled his head on his shoulder as he was doing during their flights either at North Pole over the icebergs or here over the endless sea. He wished that Bruce had let go but… he guessed that it was too much for that man!
He knew that the younger man was pissed for his overprotective attitude in front of Diana but that only made Clark’s vexation bigger: Bruce had a nerve to be angry with Clark’s agony when he managed to be attacked once again!

“Yeah, Alfred…” the Man of Steel scoffed without looking to anyone but the corridor in front of him, hurrying his steps to the med room. “Nothing serious!” he mocked Bruce’s voice and the younger man fumed. “He was just attacked in the forest and he fell from his chair, rolled his recovering body on stones and branches and was hit…”

“I wasn’t!” Bruce jerked in Clark’s arms, his face hot.

Alfred who was following suit took in his young master’s rumpled and torn clothes that were drenched from the last rain’s humidity and stained with dirt and a little blood. He shared Master Kent’s worry and exasperation for the new adventure of Master Bruce yet the clever man could sense the tension between the two men and his Master was so agitated that Alfred feared for the consequences on his healing organism: his uneven breaths weren’t the best for his recovering lung and overall agitation was an aggravating factor.

So he decided to not address the matter of the blood on Bruce’s face nor worsen the situation with questions about how he was feeling. The priority was on restoring Master Bruce’s tranquility and Alfred though sympathetic towards the man, couldn’t understand why Superman didn’t just drop the issue for now.

“Where are Miss Kyle and Hero?” Alfred asked composed as ever.

Bruce turned his flashed face at Alfred.

“They are fine, Alfred” he answered calmer realizing his butler’s effort to restore peace. “But Superman here preferred to leave them back there…”

“They’re perfectly able to return” Clark decided to lower the tone but still couldn’t look at Bruce, the bleeding wounds and the bruises on his face waking up nightmares. And his eidetic memory repeated monotonously what the Amazon had said “Mr. Wayne, you’re just a human, after all…”

The door to the med room opened automatically at their approach and Clark entered, the sight of the room bringing him relief and eroding fatigue at the same time.

“And I’m not?” Bruce demanded with his beautifully shaped eyebrows frowned looking directly at him for the first time.

Clark was happy to lock again his eyes with his Star’s mesmerizingly sparkling eyes; yet he didn’t change his set jaw neither softened his scowl.

“Why you deactivated the shield?” it was his turn to demand and Bruce’s eyes narrowed. “Huh? Nothing can get you in there AND you wouldn’t have to roll on the rough ground! Your elbows are skinned and bleeding!” he couldn’t yell seeing Bruce’s beautiful, so fragile face but his voice was still cold from the boiling wrath inside him. “What were you trying to prove?” shit! His voice got loud again and he couldn’t stop it. “That you’re brave? Fearless? A self-sacrificing fool?!”

Bruce’s eyes widened shocked: Clark couldn’t be saying those things, Clark couldn’t believe those things…

“I have nothing to prove!” he retorted and his intense stare collided with Clark’s angry one.

And suddenly Bruce’s arrhythmic heartbeat filled Clark’s mind and he cursed himself for making his Star’s condition worse; his hand cupped tenderly Bruce’s jaw and his lips almost on their own locked with the younger man’s that immediately began sucking him desperately, fighting his lips either from anger or love or both. Clark closed his eyes and left Bruce command him, feeling goose bumps as Bruce’s arms at last wrapped his neck to gain more control over the kiss.

Alfred was satisfied that the tension melted yet he also felt embarrassed, an intruder to something very intimate so cleared his throat.

“Master Kent, the bed is ready” and blushed realizing how his saying could be interpreted “the examination bed” he hastened to add and he heard Master Kent laughing.

Clark didn’t want to part Bruce’s lips that – of course! were slightly burst! – and touched his forehead to the younger man’s.

“Indeed…” he said softly “you have nothing to prove, Star…”

He laid Bruce carefully on the bed and stayed leaned above him, his eyes unwilling to leave the star sapphires of Bruce’s orbs, his fingers touching gingerly the bruises on his cheeks.

“Tony left to bring Leslie” he told Alfred to fight off his spell and Bruce took his arms off his neck sinking Clark in icy water without this contact but the message was clear: Alfred was there.

Bruce raised his head to look at the doorstep where Selina riding his… chair made a triumphant entrance. Hero jumped off her lap and ran to Bruce climbing swiftly on the bed to take his caress. Selina stood yanking her head.

“Mmmm… This thing” she gestured to the chair “can be really entertaining! Soon, when you won’t need it any more, can I take it for some rides?”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“Be my guest!” he beamed at Selina and Clark felt jealous for her ability to make Bruce smile like this so easily.

Yet the Man of Steel couldn’t share her certainty that Bruce would walk again ‘soon’ and that made his guts clench.

Hero was licking Bruce’s fingers while Alfred took off his young Master’s battered jacket and pullover because staying with wet clothes would certainly lead to a cold and also he wanted to assess the damage.

There were already formed bruises and Alfred was sure that some more would pop gradually. Clark’s lips twitched to end up in a tight line as he felt the previous irritation returning. He noticed Bruce eyeing him and Clark closed his eyes and inhaled: it wasn’t Bruce’s fault, he reminded himself.

Alfred used to seeing his Master’s body injured continued opening Bruce’s jeans causing the youth to support his torso on his elbows and yank his head.

“Alfred!” he brought his hand over his fly, blushing.

Alfred huffed and just put Bruce’s hand aside to lower his jeans.

“Sir, you managed to tear your jeans which are wet and dirty: if we don’t want you down with a cold” or worse was the common unsaid thought of the three bystanders “we must get them off you and dress you with something warm. Not mentioning assessing your wounds…”

“I don’t have…WOUNDS” Bruce protested “only superficial scratches!”

Alfred understood that his young Master was feeling suffocated being again under so much attention after things began normalizing. However he couldn’t cherish his need for independency especially when Alfred’s serious stare began regarding the gashes over his young master’s pelvis.

Selina who in the meantime had approached, pressed gently Bruce flat on the mattress and placed Hero over his chest. She wanted to keep her friend occupied and calm.

“Hero, don’t let him move” she tapped the kitten’s pink nose. “As for you, kiddo”, she arched her eyebrows, “no need to be shy on me: there’s a boy in the room with his briefs at display so your boxer isn’t as exciting…”

Bruce chuckled and caressed the head of Hero who sat on his chest like a tiny lion, his paw protectively resting on the glowing Black Butterfly.

Alfred was thankful to Miss Kyle for entertaining Master Bruce because he could share glances with Master Kent who had his arms crossed and was inhaling deeply as the jeans left Bruce’s body revealing more bruises to add to the healing old wounds.

“Master Kent, do you know if the internal casts are intact?” he whispered.

Clark nodded grim.

“We were lucky…”

Alfred grinned tightly and went to the cabinet to take the stethoscope to listen to Bruce’s heart and lungs; Leslie had instructed him on how to read the signs but the kind butler felt better knowing that Master Anthony was bringing Leslie.

“Miss Kyle, would you be so kind to get young Master Hero from Master Bruce’s chest?”

Selina giggled as she always did upon hearing Alfred addressing the small kitten with such a pompous title. She took him off Bruce.

“C’me, young Master Hero…” she teased the kitten and he licked her cheek; Selina was worried as the rest but she knew that showing that only made matters worse for Bruce.

Alfred touched the stethoscope’s edge to Bruce’s heart and the young man sighed.

“Alfred, please… If something was wrong Clark would have seen it: you know he’s monitoring me all the time…” but then closed his eyes defeated when he heard the distinct sound of Ironman coming and then landing.

“A second examination never hurt anyone” Leslie replied with her firm voice and upon landing marched to the bed to Bruce’s evident exasperation. “I take over from here, Alfred” she took the stethoscope and sat.

She touched the spot where Bruce’s lip was torn and caressed his cheek causing Bruce’s sigh: he enjoyed his loved ones’ tenderness yet he didn’t want that to be due to unreasonable concern and tormenting agony.

“They upset you without a reason: Clark and Tony both scanned and X-Rayed me and didn’t find anything” he sighed. “You didn’t have to be put under all this trouble…”

Leslie pressed her lips and shook her index disapprovingly.

“No trouble at all and I’m happy they didn’t find anything yet I wanted to examine you for some time now so this is a nice opportunity.”

Bruce frowned tilting his head to the side.

“How you returned so fast?” he asked suspiciously Tony who stared at the new and old scars on Bruce’s legs rubbing his chin. “Even with your new double sound speed it’d have taken you more time than you did.”

Tony yanked his head not wanting his friend caught him staring.

“As soon as I took off I called Captain America and he carried Leslie till we met at midway.”

Bruce’s eyes widened and Leslie sighing stopped her effort to listen to his heart.

“You’re kidding me, right?” he demanded. “You rang the red alert and recruited the Avengers for this?! You’re unbelievable, Tony!”

Despite Bruce’s very real irritation Tony just raised his eyebrows.

“Oh, yeah, little guy, your buddy is un-fucking-believable! Everyone says the same…” he answered nonchalant and Bruce shook his head.

Yet Clark couldn’t be as calm as Tony; he couldn’t understand Bruce’s attitude neither tolerate it.

“What’s your problem, anyway!!” he snapped at Bruce and his voice’s sharpness made everyone look at him. “You almost exploded on Princess Diana!”

“He was just attacked, Master Kent” Alfred said smoothly trying to stop a new quarrel.

Bruce shook his head and stared right at Clark’s once again pissed eyes.

“She blew up the creatures that attacked me literally erasing them completely and simultaneously depriving us from any possibility to find out who sent them.” He was puzzled on Clark’s indifference about learning the attack’s details. “And I wanted to stay there in hopes of finding something despite this woman’s efforts but you grabbed and dragged me here because you couldn’t listen, could you?”

For some reason Clark felt obliged to defense Diana’s deeds rather than his own.

“She explained that it was outraged by their cowardly act to attack someone weak” Clark took in Bruce’s tiniest flinch on the word and couldn’t help it but feel satisfied “she apologized, didn’t she?”

Bruce clenched his jaw.

“And you bite and…”

But Clark interrupted him approaching more the bed.

“Maybe because I felt the same and I’d have done the same thing!”

Leslie stood up with an annoyed frown on her face: her patient didn’t need that right now. Bruce shook his head disapprovingly.
“Since when you approve of killing?” he inquired calmer.

Clark crossed his arms and stabbed the younger man with his cold stare: really Bruce didn’t know? Really Bruce showed off his disapproval of him?

“Since I met you and you insist on challenging every scum on the planet to kill you!” he snapped and Bruce narrowed his eyes; he was flabbergasted. “You cause that, Mr. I-m-not-weak! Because every time you need to advertise that, you almost get killed by a sonovabitch and we have to go through all this terror and dread of losing you!” he inhaled deeply “killing them is the only way to keep you alive!”

Bruce just shook his head.

“But you’re ungrateful!” Clark hissed and Bruce jerked as if hit by a whip.

Selina bit her lip enraged, Hero looking puzzled at her.

“Not only reprimand me in front of everyone but also you behaved like an ass to that fine lady who saved you! You would have died there weren’t for the Princess and you didn’t have the elemental politeness to thank her!” Clark realized how harsh his words were yet he knew he was right and that Bruce needed to hear that for once.

Bruce sensed that Clark’s concern had pushed him out of his usual calm, kind self and tried to decrease the tension if not for the two of them for the others’ sake. He pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Selina had the total control” he said tranquil and Clark felt the boiling inside his body easing “and I was ready to assist her.”

Now the fire in Clark’s body spiked fiercer than before and he rubbed his forehead in an effort to calm himself.

“Assist her?” he sneered. “How?” he asked quietly to not explode like a nuclear bomb knowing the answer already.

Bruce opened his mouth to answer: he knew the hurricane of feelings raging Clark and now he had the suspicious glares of the others presuming the answer and taking Clark’s side on that. He let his head roll on the side for an instance closing his eyes and turned again to them huffing and ready to reply yet Clark’s eyes were above him.

Clark’s lips were almost touching his with a gleeful smirk and Bruce for the first time wanted to bite and not kiss him.

“You meant to stretch your body’s limits into forcing it to stand and fight under your brain’s power!” Bruce’s eyes were blank and Clark relished because he was right and everyone was staring dumbfounded except from Selina who clenched her teeth. “That’s the reason you were so mad at Diana because she thwarted you from being again the hero! You’re mentally disordered in your obsession of being a hero even if that kills you!” his enflamed eyes almost touched Bruce’s blank ones and Clark jerked upright and took some distance.

After all, he had passed his message and now everyone justified him.

“I don’t want to be a hero” Bruce retorted solemnly and completely calm seeing Tony ruffling his hair, Alfred staring at him poised, Leslie having her arms crossed and Selina cuddling Hero. “I’m not a hero but I couldn’t let Selina fight alone…Neither I can be indifferent to my city’s needs now that I’m returning but this doesn’t mean that it will kill me…” Clark shook his head exasperated and Tony pressed his hair on his head; yet Bruce continued unfazed. “I’ve already thought of some adjustments to my armor that will enable me to move efficiently without stretching my body’s limits.”

Clark slapped his fist on his thigh and raised his hands in the air.

“You’re insufferable! Tony is your friend and won’t assist you to commit suicide! Huh?” he jerked his head towards the billionaire who didn’t answer but locked eyes with Bruce, his disapproval evident.

“Not before the bionic structure for your spine is ready and definitely not before your mobility is perfectly restored” he said grimly.

Bruce huffed.

“Fine!” he snapped.

Tony bit his lips and shook his head, clenching his waist with both hands.

“Bruce, it’s madness even considering the possibility before…”

Bruce turned his eyes to the other side: his chest was in turmoil.

“And neither Lucius will contribute to that” Tony added calmly. “C’mere, little guy” he almost pleaded with his friend who didn’t look at him. “You’ll have more interesting things to do with your spare time so you’ll forget all about Batman…” he said grinning.

Everyone in the room looked at him interested except for Bruce who stared at the wall fuming inside because even Tony didn’t want to understand him – he didn’t like to admit it but it hurt.

Tony inhaled deeply gulping Bruce’s unwillingness to look at him and continued.

“It’s time you chased your dream!” he stated enthusiastic fighting the cold feeling from Bruce’s stubborn indifference. “Princeton has arranged to examine you in order to be enrolled in their undergraduate program” he saw Bruce’s bulged eyes turning to him and thought it was awe. “Princeton is the best university in the States and they have a Neuroscience Program!” he arched his eyebrows beaming. “And is near Gotham and Wayne Enterprises and given that your evenings and nights will be free, you’ll be well rest, able to attend the courses and run the company…” he stretched his arms in the air under the fascinated eyes of the others “it’s perfect, littl’ guy! Like your father…”

Yet Alfred, Leslie and Selina saw clearly Bruce’s dread. The young man inhaled to calm his increased heartbeat and beginning headache.

“You arranged that…”

Tony nodded.

“Yeah, buddy!”

“Without asking me!” Bruce snapped and Tony’s smile froze. “Surely, you made a huge donation to the university to make sure that they’ll enroll me.”

Tony knitted his eyebrows and shook his head in denial.

“No! I just showed them the official documents from your school and they were interested…” Bruce was shaking his head rubbing his forehead. “They’ll examine you as they do to their underage gifted students and if you succeed…Which is certain with my lessons…” but Bruce’s pressed lips stopped him.

“I’m not underage, Tony” his voice was cold and bitter “and I’m not gifted” Tony attempted to say something but Bruce didn’t let him. “And don’t know anything to base college or university studies on.”

Tony’s shoulders were slumped and he just shook his head helplessly. However Clark wasn’t put off but enraged from Bruce’s refusal.

“And of course they were interested in me: a way to be advertised having as their student America’s most known ‘poor thing’, not to mention monitoring a curious specimen. Plus they know that they’ll have Tony Stark’s gratitude and funding.”

Leslie shared a look with Alfred and decided that it was enough and that Bruce needed some rest.

“I think that discussion must be done another time” she remarked firmly but calmly.

But Tony licked his lips and huffed; he just couldn’t accept the failure of what he believed was the greatest opportunity and gift for Bruce, what he expected to make his friend beam not brood.

“C’m on, littl’ guy…You sound as if you’re afraid…” he chuckled “and everyone knows that fear doesn’t suit you” he blinked. “I understand you’re overwhelmed” he continued soothingly “but I assure you that you’re already fully conversant with most of their subjects due to your extraordinary activity and intelligence – I tell you, buddy: you’ll amaze them! And I’ll help you with everything!
We have plenty of time till January, littl’ guy; you don’t need to worry…You’ll see!”

Bruce closed his eyes: even Tony was plotting to deprive him of what it was so important to him, what gave his life purpose – even he didn’t understand… Selina as both Alfred and Leslie realized that he had had enough.

“Master Anthony, I would suggest…” Alfred interjected.

But Clark didn’t let him; he marched towards the bed with his eyes ablaze. Hearing Bruce fighting off stubbornly every attempt of Stark to push him to normality and salvation was enraging him.

“However enrolling to studies won’t let him the space to play the hero, right, Bruce?” he cocked an eyebrow. “And if he doesn’t play the hero he’ll feel weak, right? And he is scared of feeling weak because then he’ll feel exactly as when he was enslaved to Falcone; he doesn’t want even to consider what you propose because playing the hero offers him something to cover his weakness” Bruce’s eyes narrowed spitting fires. “He can’t stand feeling weak and he is willing to die instead of adjust to his nature! He thinks that pretending the strong fools us into not seeing his weakness but the only one who fools is himself!”

Bruce felt his blood boil and his heart beat madly; all of a sudden his waist hurt along with his ribs adding to his headache as if agreeing with Clark’s rant. To make things worse Leslie’s eyes regarded him with the inner knowledge of his suffering.

“I’m not feeling any weakness!” he retorted defiantly.

That was the last straw for Clark’s patience. This human was so stubborn! And he was just a human, for fuck’s sake! He surged at him and grabbed his upper arms pinning him chokingly to the mattress making the bystanders gasp from shock. However Bruce locked his eyes with him defiant as ever.

“But you’re WEAK, damn it! Only your stupid stubbornness doesn’t let you admit it!” Bruce’s eyes sparkled narrowed like an angry wildcat’s under a tight frown and Clark grunted. “Your pigheadedness sends you every time to risk your life while you know that you can’t cope; your idiocy to prove that you don’t need anyone made you use that stupid suicidal technic to force your disabled body to fight Joker…”

Bruce gritted his teeth.

“I couldn’t wait for you: he’d have killed the kids and it was me that he wanted!” he tried to rise but Clark put more strength forcing him back to the mattress.

“And you succeeded in almost dying!” he yelled having heard nothing seeing only Bruce’s unyielding eyes not even flinch by his roaring.

“Nothing would have happened if Joker’s goon hadn’t shot…” he growled tensing more the muscles of his arms. “Would you prefer it if those children had died because of me while I was lying in my warm bed?!”

Clark couldn’t reply to that but still couldn’t accept Bruce’s recklessness; he fumed.

“That stubbornness…You’ll never admit your mistakes, huh? Even though they make all of us sick with agony and running desperate to save you! As when you surrendered yourself to Talia…” that subject nudged Clark constantly.

“I didn’t!” Bruce growled and prepared himself though Superman’s grip was bruising.

Clark’s lips were over his, as his eyes to mute him.

“If you weren’t so stubborn to admit your weakness and protected yourself staying behind Bane and Talia wouldn’t have raped you!”

If Bruce’s eyes had Superman’s laser vision would have burned him: he hated the word ‘rape’ and Superman spitting that before his loved ones was outrageous! Not that they didn’t suspect but confirming it so crudely was preposterous!

Yet he just gritted his teeth, knowing that his calmness had a stronger effect than any growl – his intense, flashing eyes hiding the cruel punch Clark’s words delivered to his throbbing head.

The Man of Steel as if suspecting that he’d try to escape tightened more his grip which would have caused the intervention of the others in the room if the scene wasn’t so surreal that shocked them to numbness.

However Selina couldn’t tolerate anymore; she let Hero on the floor and rushed to face Superman: she wouldn’t let this ass hurt Bruce.

“Stop it, you asshole! You’re hurting him!” she didn’t attempt to hit him but her voice and her glare’s fierceness shook Clark.

“Exactly!” Clark said calmer. “That’s the point! He could be so easily harmed because he is WEAK!”

But all of a sudden Clark didn’t feel the tensed muscles and the arousing defiance under his grip. Along with the others he saw amazed Bruce standing on the side of the bed, Hero staring at him feeling the vibe.

“The fact that you walk and I don’t doesn’t make me weak and you strong!” he stressed every word
Clark was staring agape unable to utter anything under the realization that he achieved exactly what he wanted to condemn and thwart: Bruce using his brain’s power to give mobility to his disabled body. He clenched his waist and licked his lips knowing that everyone in the room made exactly the same thought: instead of tending Bruce’s wounds all this time they were constantly, relentlessly nettling him.

Leslie couldn’t stand watching Bruce doing what he shouldn’t.

“Both of you: OUT!” her strict and powerful voice cracked the awkward silence and Bruce made a step towards the door to her dismay. “Not you, young man! Tony, Superman!” she snapped her head towards the door.

Clark walked like a robot realizing with a pang that he messed things; he turned his eyes guiltily to Bruce: seeing him standing was a blessing, his deepest wish all these months but not like this: not abnormally. To intensify his guilt and his words’ wrongness, the younger man even dressed only in his black boxers and having lacerations all over his muscled body he was anything but weak. He emanated strength and resolution, and Clark felt the familiar ripple of desire in his heart till he caught the bruises in Bruce’s upper arms, red and shaped after his fingers and his entire existence sank.

Tony yanked his head surprised and looked at Leslie hurt.

“But I didn’t do anything!” he protested but the doctor’s sharp look sent him to the door following Superman.

“And close that door!” she added and Tony obliged. “Alfred, turn on the heat: it’s cold in here.”

Tony ran his hands through his hair sighing.

“I don’t get why I’m exiled along with the bad boy?” he spat without getting an answer from Clark. “Come…” he said sympathetic to the Man of Steel understanding his turmoil and regret.

Clark followed him to the round shaped balcony, the breathtaking view of the peaceful under the twilight Aegean sea, soothing a bit his throbbing head.

Tony inhaled deeply and looked at him.

“Sometimes I also lose control with Bruce…It’s not easy…” he shook his head “…it’s damn hard! With which, I want to tell you that I’m the last to condemn you…”

Clark clenched his teeth determined and made to go back inside: he needed to explain, to apologize to everyone…to Bruce…to make sure that…

But Tony grabbed his upper arm and Clark looked him inquiringly.

“You better leave him some space” he said solemnly but understanding. “Let Leslie and the others calm him down and…” he arched his eyebrows “and get a grip yourself – I think” he shook his head, his sharp eyes never leaving Superman’s “you should leave.”

Clark’s eyes bulged: Tony was exploiting what happened to get rid of him once and for all. He fisted his hands and saw Stark twisting his lips.

“That’s exactly what I meant!” he said gesturing to Clark’s fists. “You’re still ready to explode at the tiniest: you think that another rant will help your position with Bruce?” he arched his eyebrows in emphasis and seeing the realization in Superman’s eyes, nodded. “I suggest you should leave…for a bit, …till things get normal again.”

Superman stared at the shut door of the med room fighting the urge to use his super sight to see inside.

“If I leave now Bruce will believe that I don’t care…”

Tony patted his shoulder.

“I’m sure Bruce doesn’t believe that…even now. But staying here and continuing the pressure would prove otherwise.”

Clark locked eyes with him and Tony nodded completely serious. Clark knew that Stark was right: at this moment, he could only hurt Bruce and their relationship and he didn’t want that. He stretched his fist in the air and took off.

Tony pursed his lips shaking his head and sighed. It wasn’t supposed to go that way: he felt his arc reactor thudding with disappointment for his failed surprise.

Superman hovered over the forest where some bastards almost killed his Star…again! And instead of manifesting his joy for Bruce being safe, he stupidly quarreled with him…He turned his slumped head towards the blindingly white villa that seemed small now…Leslie was examining Bruce now… Was everything normal or Clark’s foolishness lost them valuable time? He wanted to rush back, hold Bruce tide and kiss him in every wound, in every scratch… Apologizing…

“So… it’s true what they’re saying…”
“I hate failure…” the cold voice with the quality of screeching metal snapped and a fist punched the air.

“Who doesn’t?” Bagdana answered almost amused looking at Bruno Mannheim. “I didn’t imagine that you like so much the human form…” he raised an eyebrow.

The impeccably dressed sturdy gangster was descending the made of stone stair leading to the great hall. Bruno Mannheim possessed an impressive, gargantuan mansion at Metropolis’ outskirts yet the master of the house preferred the underground facilities which were under the basement. It was the place where Bagdana dwelled: a mammoth round site with ancient stones covering its floor and pillars of fire at its perimeter. At the far end a plain throne made of roaring granite waited the great God when his affairs with the mortals ended.

Darkseid grunted annoyed from Bagdana’s comment and immediately the prestige clothes of the human gangster ripped as the human body bulged to be replaced by the god’s bluish gargantuan form.

Bagdana who had settled to his bronze-colored, gigantic body watched the bigger god marching to his throne to sat hitting his fists together in front of his face. A smile carved Bagdana’s face and Darkseid’s red ablaze eyes stabbed him: Bagdana was so much entertained by the terrifying dude’s easily manipulated nature.

“You cost me an embarrassing defeat” Darkseid stressed every word menacingly and Bagdana approached his throne, his bare feet echoing on the stone tiled floor. His body was dressed in black leather leggings and black leather vest.

“Sometimes a defeat is necessary before a great victory” he replied slyly, his spikes of hair glowing in the flames that danced in golden vessels shaping the corridor that led to the great throne.

Darkseid punched the armrest, his gritted teeth sending sparkles.

“I don’t like procrastination! The Kryptonian’s whore should have been here now to be mutilated before my enemy’s eyes!” Bagdana’s eyes narrowed and his nostrils fumed.

“You keep ‘forgetting’ that Bruce is mine and for that he is to live…” he rattled his teeth and stabbed him with his eyes.

“It was your idea to attack him!” he barked.

Bagdana gave a crooked smirk.

“Attack not kill him…”

Darkseid half rose threateningly.

“To humiliate me…” he hissed and his eyes became two flaming lines. “It seems that you’re not here to serve me after all…That you’re also my enemy…” his stone-like face filled with cracks of ire.

Yet Bagdana wasn’t intimidated; he yanked his face and his straight horns glistened.

“Intimidation isn’t effective with me: I’d say it’s rather ridiculous” he scoffed. “You know I’m not your enemy or else you’d have already tried to dispose of me…”

Darkseid stood on his spread legs; his eyebrows in a deep frown.

“Not just tried; it’s easy for me to kill you!” he roared.

Bagdana smiled and nodded.

“As it is easy to kill the Kryptonian, huh?” he arched his eyebrows seeing his partner’s fists clenched. “I’m your ally…”

“Minion!” he roared.

Bagdana crossed his column-like arms.

“Whatever brushes your egoism…What matters for me it’s that we have common goals: you want the Kryptonian’s destruction” his eyes got lost and his voice deepened “and I want Bruce…” he returned to his surroundings feeling Darseid’s sneering stare. “Yet you know that direct approach isn’t the best method, otherwise you wouldn’t have been scheming with Intergang, pretending the businessman – gangster: a human, a life-form you hate above all…”

Darkseid sat again in his throne and clutched the armrests listening interested and Bagdana’s cat-like pupils dilated with content.

“You could have had already your human-pet if this attack hadn’t failed.”

Bagdana shook his head.

“But you wouldn’t have exterminated the Kryptonian and that it’s important for me as well: I don’t want acquiring Bruce and then him being taken from me again. More importantly: Superman must be punished for claiming what’s mine!”

Darkseid rubbed his square chin thoughtful.

“What is it about that lame human?” he demanded from his minion but Bagdana didn’t answer, just turned his back and stared into the blue fire fountain in the middle of the hall. “He had protection even before his friend and the flying woman came – parademons sent data before they were destroyed.”

Bagdana looked again at Darkseid.

“Bruce always has protection” he remarked dryly: he hadn’t any intention on revealing to his partner that Bruce was able to protect himself since he was Batman.

Darkseid’s eyes pierced him wanting answers.

“Divine protection…” he stressed. “The data I took from the parademons indicated the presence of a God near the human before the Amazon intervened. But that deity remained invisible.”

Bagdana cocked an eyebrow and smiled wryly: the pang of jealousy for the new presence near Bruce smashed by the wave of admiration for his Lilith’s irresistible charm.

Darkseid squinted, intrigued by the demon’s stupor on the human’s mention. Every time he witnessed that he was more certain about Bagdana’s servitude: he’d do everything to gain the human.
“You wanted this attack to fail…” he croaked and Bagdana nodded.

“The failure of this attack was necessary yet I didn’t imagine that Bruce would get unknown divine protection.”

“It is why you settled the weapons into stunning not hurting or killing?”

“Exactly: I want Superman know that his mate is threatened but not from whom…Of course” he cocked a thick eyebrow “I expected Bruce unconscious till help reached him – it’d have made a more dramatic impression yet this human is full of surprises…”

Darkseid furrowed his brow.

“His death or capture would have been very efficient since this annoying pest stands between me and my machine, being the new owner of LEXLABS.”

Bagdana looked at him dead serious.

“His death wouldn’t have helped you gain access to the LEXLABS and neither his capture.”

Darkseid yanked his head and cackled jeering his minion.

“My tortures would have made the pitiful being give me everything to stop his misery of living!” the bigger God saw gleefully the drops of sweat on the demon’s face: were the demons supposed to get sweaty?

He shook his head in expectance.

“I can’t wait making that bitch squeal begging for mercy and the Kryptonian getting insane by his inability to save him – or he won’t be the only one?”

Bagdana rasped and fumed.

“Forget that! You won’t harm him!” he grunted and the hall echoed; the fires flaring up. “And…” he lowered his voice under Darkseid’s cold stare “your tortures wouldn’t have any result…”

Darkseid sniggered.

“Your appreciation of that pest is ridiculous… as your own powers…So doubting your success and assuming your failure Bruno Mannheim has set off his own means of getting the machine…”

“What are you going to do?”

Darkseid smirked smugly.

“LEXLABS aren’t difficult to find… and with the right people in the job it’s easy to get what you want” his eyes flashed. “What about that Amazon?”

“Are you afraid of her?” Bagdana chuckled and Darkseid snorted flames bursting from his nostrils indicating his contempt and anger.

“You know that your pet apart from the deficiency of his human nature is also gimpy?” he raised his eyebrow sarcastically, dragging his words satisfied for the human’s disability and his minion’s displeasure.

Bagdana stared unfazed at his collaborator: he wouldn’t give Darkseid the satisfaction of seeing his emotions.

“I got the same data from the parademons as you” he replied indifferently burying his sadness causing Darkseid’s irritated growl.

“And that doesn’t disgust you?” he shook his head and twitched his fat lip. “That human’s only worth is being killed to hurt the Kryptonian or tormented for my court’s entertainment – his life is a waste of space!”

Bagdana’s eyes became red spitting fires and his already gigantic body bulged more, impressing and intriguing Darkseid. The demon’s mind filled with the images and the sensations from the burning factory and Bruce’s body being smashed sliding towards death.

“Mind the plan and not Bruce…” he snarled and lowering his head left the vast hall, the fire columns on the two sides of the room flaring up at his passing.

“So it’s true what they’re saying…” an amused voice called behind him and Superman turned abruptly forgetting the white villa where the solar lights began sparkling deem on the decreasing of the daylight.

A blinding smile greeted him as Clark’s eyes met the gorgeous face of the Amazon who hovered approached him, her hands clenching her juicy hips.

“Princess…” he addressed her, a bit startled though he wasn’t sure if it was because he didn’t except to see her there again or because of her staggering beauty. “What it’s true?”

She focused her dazzling blue eyes towards the white villa and the wind waved her locks which glowed like blue silk.

“That Superman, the mighty God of the Earth, fell for a human…” her rich, deep red lips moved slowly.

Clark followed her gaze and shook his head flushed.

“Oh! No…” he chuckled uncomfortable because they didn’t want people know the truth about him and Bruce.

The Amazon turned graciously her head and locked her eyes with Clark’s, cocking an eyebrow.

“I watched that video the first day I came to the Man’s World” she lolled her head to the side. “I admit that your glory had reached even my isolated island and when I brought Oliver Queen back the mentioning of that video by various people ignited my interest…” she sighed. “And it was rather informative!”

Clark licked his lips.

“Listen, Princess…That video is bullshit” he took in her sly smile and playful eyes. “Mr. Wayne had been kidnapped, badly injured and…it just happened that I found him first and brought him to the hospital” Diana had crossed her arms and was nodding all the time amused and disbelieving. “I only did my duty to…”

Diana yanked her head and her eyes filled with seriousness and something else Clark couldn’t discern.
“A poor, tortured human being who his only hope in surviving is through cowering in the arms of powerful entities. He knows this is his only chance to survive and exploits it… in every way he can” she smirked.

Clark felt a pang but he just couldn’t feel irritated with her. Diana smiled to him.

“Though it didn’t seem like simply an act of duty… maybe it was your red cape cuddling his naked body or the way you were looking at him or your unwillingness to part with his body and place him on the hospital gurney…”

Clark felt sweat dripping his body as if he was embarrassed and ashamed (!)?! The Amazon Princess smiled.

“The video must have distorted the facts…” he stated solemnly.

She pouted.

“That’s what I thought: a mighty warrior like you can’t fall for a being like him…” she shrugged.

“But then I saw it with my own eyes just a few minutes ago in the forest: the way you rushed there distraught, oblivious to everything else except him; the way you cuddled him protectively, scared – someone like you can’t get scared –, your eyes when you took in the blood on his face… The way you heaved him in your arms, hasty to take him to safety…”

Clark crossed his arms and tilted his head looking her lopsided.

“Mr. Wayne has suffered some very serious injuries and as you saw he is a magnet for villains due to his friendship with Stark” it was evident in the way her eyes glimmered that she didn’t believe it. “So I keep an ear to him just in case.”

She nodded.

“You mean that Ironman doesn’t have a system alerting him about his friend being in danger and relies on your super hearing to keep his weak friend safe…”

Now Clark was pissed; he didn’t like being interrogated.

“Is it my impression or you watched the area waiting me? How did you know where to find Bruce? I mean Mr. Wayne…” he asked frowning.

She shook her head and gazed at the sun’s disk that was slowly descending in the sea.

“I won’t deny that I was eager to meet you yet I didn’t know that your… love interest was in Thasos and even if I knew I wouldn’t have watched him to get a chance to meet you – it’d be rather boring for me. An Amazon Princess has many responsibilities that demand her full attention. One of them paying tribute to the Gods’ of my people whose temples just happens to be in the area and as I was heading there I heard the noise from the fight and I rushed to help.”

Clark bit his lip: he spoke as an arrogant fool.

“Of course… I’m sorry…” he smiled “I sounded like…”

She inclined her head towards him and grinned.

“No need to apologize; I understand…” she cocked an eyebrow and winked. “You’ve been through a great agony: your boyfriend was just attacked and he is so fragile and weak…”
“That’s the point! He could be so easily harmed because he is WEAK!” He heard again his wild voice, his fingers feeling again Bruce’s taunt flesh sinking under their pressure.

“He isn’t my boyfriend” he repeated again flatly.

At last, Princess Diana seemed convinced and nodded.

“Thank the Olympians! I’m glad he is only your charity case!” she said and turned her eyes towards Stark’s villa.

Superman frowned and Diana realizing looked at him under stray glimmering locks.

“I mean I never fell for that nonsense of Superman being in love with that human; not because he is a human” she tilted her head and closed her eyes grinning. “Well, that too…But even if a Warrior God like you chose a human being” she clenched her waist and stabbed him with flared up eyes “I’d expect a dynamic, fierce presence like Lois Lane and not that lame, pitiful existence” her lips showed disgust.

Rage pierced Clark’s guts: he couldn’t listen to these things about Bruce. It was unfair, it was preposterous! And Lois was right that the Princess asked for her to do the interview because of her connection with Superman. But he just couldn’t get mad at the Amazon Princess who gazed at him amused.

“Of course I admit that he is gorgeous and as even Almighty Zeus many times copulated with mortals, you could be drawn to him to satisfy your bodies’ needs” she sniggered “though I doubt whether he’d even last taking you inside him…” her eyebrow jerked up and her eyes shone gleefully.

Clark couldn’t help it but remember the dread he felt every time Bruce’s body stirred desire in him, desperate lust and he had to struggle with himself to not succumb and hurt the vulnerable human. Suddenly he realized that Diana was appraising his body shamelessly and cleared his throat.

“Mr. Wayne isn’t lame; in fact, he is very brave.”

Her perfect lips twisted.

“Your kindness and generosity is surpassed only by your beauty and bravery!”

Clark could easily discern flattery and sycophancy and he detested these more than anything but from Diana’s lustful mouth these words sounded honest and made his insides squirm with pride.

“But, please Superman…” she snorted. “He crawls on the soil like a worm to save his hide, he cowers behind the trees waiting better men and women to save him risking their lives…” she huffed and shook her head disgusted. “When I reached the clearing and saw him realizing that he was your supposed ‘mate’, I felt awfully: Superman deserves more than this! But, thank Almighty Zeus, you didn’t fell to the trap!”

Superman was hearing dumbfounded: somewhere inside he was aware that he should be annoyed but it didn’t seem important enough.

“Trap?” he frowned.

She made an impressive dive to the sky and flew to stop and float surrounded by the sun’s disk; Superman followed charmed by the spectacle of her perfect, hot body illuminated by the golden orange disk.
“Your good heart’s trap: a benevolent God of the Light like you would certainly be touched by that man’s past, his suffering, his beautiful eyes taking their saddest and helpless sparkle…”

“You know his backstory?” he inquired puzzled.

She smiled and it was so beautiful.

“Who doesn’t?” she arched an eyebrow. “The poor child that grown up in the hands of his parents’ murderer constantly tortured and sexually abused” she sighed. “I can see why you’re so protective of him: pure mercy! But it’d be disastrous if you mistook mercy for love.”

Clark crossed his arms and looked lopsided at her, his trademark curl waving from the faint wind. He knew that what he felt for Bruce wasn’t mercy but deep love yet the way Diana put things made him recount the first time he saw Bruce at Falcone’s party and then apart from the attractiveness of the young man it was his willingness to save him from his cruel fate that dragged him to the young sex toy.

He took in the Amazon’s self-confident, smug smile and slapped himself internally: how could he even think that it wasn’t love that immediately bonded him with Bruce?

“You don’t like humans much, huh?” he asked coldly and her eyelashes trembled, her eyes shining sad for his coldness.

Her rich lips upturned in an innocent shy grin.

“I’m afraid you misunderstood me, Superman. I like humans very much; I feel for their pains and misery. If I didn’t care, I wouldn’t have bothered when I came across a dying Oliver Queen after being attacked by a gang of smugglers – as happened with you and Wayne - I wouldn’t have saved him from them and taken him to Themyscira though men are not allowed there; we healed him and I brought him back to his world deciding to not let evil people do again what they did to Oliver. I already began stopping terrorists from killing innocent people.”

Superman knew that he had covered with articles her feats and followed Lois’ work on the “Wonder Woman” as people already called her. “Beautiful as Aphrodite, wise as Athena, stronger than Hercules, and swifter than Mercury”…Clark pondered slithering her gorgeous body with his eyes – exactly, as the Greek Mythology described her.

“Yet I’m fully realistic about humans” she knitted her eyebrows, hiding her satisfaction from Superman’s gaze. “We love them, we protect them, we guide them but they are inferior” she shook her head resolutely. “They aren’t for us: even if someone of them got the attention of someone of us, he/she won’t be enough for long – humans are good for one or two couplings, afterwards they become boring, uninteresting.”

She pointed with the corner of her sneering eye towards the villa.

“Especially, when he is a defective, weak specimen as Bruce Wayne…”

Hearing again the word he also used just some minutes ago had a strange numbing effect on him. Bruce was weak, truly… And then he saw again the human standing beside the bed: proud, resolute, having evaded his bruising grip, his chiseled body’s powerful aura causing Superman even now goose bumps… Bruce was stronger than both of them. And that arrogant Princess not only insulted Bruce but also Clark’s human parents! Humans might not have super powers like them but their kindness, love, self sacrificing nature, their cleverness, their willpower made them stronger than any God!
He took in her confused and inquiring stare for his silence and he was ready to berate her…politely but then scared cries reached his ears accompanied by nightmarish sounds of collapsing metal. He made a steep dive and flew in full speed.

A teen girl just walked out of the examination room and Thomas was more than happy that at last he would be able to think without any nuisance.

“Dr. Elliot, do you want me to stay and assist you?” the nurse, Kelly, asked him.

“No, that won’t be necessary, dear, thank you” he treated her one of his stunning smiles and the girl blushed causing his internal smirk. “You must be tired after your shift so the sooner you get your rest the better…” he placed his hands on her shoulders amused from her shiver.

Kelly looked him shyly.

“But you must be tired, too: working at Gotham General, teaching at the University and volunteering here at the free clinic!” her voice was filled with admiration.

Thomas rubbed her upper arms.

“It’s my duty as a doctor, Kelly and I assure you” he shook his head and raised his eyebrows for emphasis “it’s more pleasing than tiresome, especially when I collaborate with a dedicated girl like you” he hardly silenced his chuckle on her deeper reddening.

He lolled his head on the shoulder brushing with his finger a brunette lock that had escaped Kelly’s ponytail.

“It’s not like I am Bruce Wayne and people surround me eager to pamper me, huh?” he grinned and the young nurse smiled. “Speaking of which, three months have passed since the last time we saw him” he frowned. “It was here, at the clinic, that he was last seen, right?” she nodded. “Did you happen to do your shift then?”

He already knew that she was working that night yet he didn’t want to reveal that he had made his research and that was the reason he cajoled that stupid girl. She was so obviously flattered and enthralled with the supposed interest of the young, rich doctor that Thomas wanted to snigger.

“Yeah, I was working that night – I remember it very vividly because it was a night filled with events.”

Thomas’s eyes took a fake shine of fascination that made Kelly float: she liked it when that important man goggled at her as if she was the most intriguing person on Earth.

“Mmm…Definitely” he remarked. “Seeing Superman carrying in bridal style someone wrapped in his red cape it’s a very rare spectacle…” he took off his medical robe, enjoying the nurse’s appreciative gape at his expensive suit; he sat on the stool right by the examination table.

Kelly hastened to follow him standing in front of him.

“Actually, I didn’t see that” and taking in Dr. Elliot’s disappointment hurried to add “Dr. Thompkins didn’t let anyone on the rooftop with her: she and Mr. Pennyworth dragged the gurney” Thomas narrowed his eyes. “I saw the video along with the others in the nurse station – I had helped Dr. Thompkins take Mr. Wayne to the MRI but then she dismissed me because another nurse came…” she pouted her lips. “Actually I don’t remember having seen her before or after…”
A crook smile carved Thomas’ face: so mystery surrounding Brucie was amusing if not annoying: superheroes, secrecy, strange people, Joker, he, the acclaimed Dr. Elliot… – Brucie shouldn’t be so interesting. That pampered brat ought to have died the night his parents did.

“He must have been really scared…” he looked her lopsided and Kelly shrugged.

“I don’t know…” she pressed her finger on her lip thoughtful “I guess he was in a state of shock… but surely he was agitated especially when he saw the video with Superman and then Joker threatening the children.”

Thomas beamed: that Kelly was precious! So stupid and so babbler that he didn’t even have to try to get info.

“I imagine how terrifying was for him to see Joker after his kidnapping” he cocked an eyebrow and his eyes widened with innocent pity.

Kelly put her hands in her robe’s pockets.

“Leslie took him to his room and nobody saw him after that; I heard that they transferred him to his Manor for more safety and then Stark took him to a special rehab center because his condition deteriorated.”

Thomas nodded, pouting: that’s how they explained his humiliating dismissal.

“Did Leslie speak at all about Bruce’s condition?” he asked concerned, sure that the tough doctor wouldn’t have shared anything with the clinic’s personnel but hoping that Kelly had heard something accidentally.

She shook her head in denial clearly distraught for not being able to be helpful.

“No; I’m sorry, Dr. Elliot…”

Wanting to soothe her distress and win her over, he raised his palm.

“Call me “Tommy”, dear…”

The young nurse beamed, her cheeks turning a deep shade of red.

“Dr. Elliot” he mumbled “I couldn’t…”

Thomas rolled his eyes and fought the urge to snort but instead he widened his eyes.

“You’ll make me very happy, Kelly…”

She smiled.

“OK, Tommy” he scoffed inside. “Well, no, Dr. Thompkins never mentioned anything – of course, she certainly will have discussed matters with Dr. Smit or some other doctors she trusts but all of them are very strict and careful with patient info…”

“So honorable!” he sneered but the nurse didn’t understand it. “Ummm…Kelly, I haven’t seen Leslie from the moment I started my shift” he squinted. “You know if she is ill or something? I know how responsible and commited she is so her absence worries me…”

Kelly waved her hand and giggled.
“No need to worry, Tommy: she is fine. Dr. Thompkins was here since really early but Captain America came and took her with him. He was really cute and very polite – I told him where to find Dr. Thompkins.”

But Thomas wasn’t listening to her foolish babbling: the arrival of Captain America ringing several bells.

“When?” he demanded with a firm frown that surprised the young nurse.

“Mmm…I think around 11 o’clock…”

Thomas’ icy eyes were blank staring at nowhere, occupied with his thoughts and that frightened Kelly. Yet the young man realizing softened his stare and smiled.

“Thank you, Kelly – I feel awful for keeping you from your rest” he stood up announcing her dismissal. “See you tomorrow, dear!” he said hastily and watched eagerly as she left the room closing the door.

Once left alone, he slumped on the stool and intertwined his fingers together on the bench with the medical stuff. His eyebrows frowned deeply, covering his narrowed sharp eyes.

It was the reason he volunteered to work at the clinic: he didn’t give a damn about Narrows or Gothamites but this was the only way to be near his ‘friend’ and if this was impossible – as it was the case – be close to Leslie, gain her trust and snatch information. Because his several attempts to hack the clinic’s records to find Bruce’s file failed: It seems that Stark had established a very complex and impenetrable firewall.

Well…Leslie wasn’t a fool and unwilling to trust anyone with info about Brucie which served only to increase his determination and obsession. So he volunteered to the clinic seeking access to patients’ handwritten files… Frustratingly, no Bruce’s file there… But thankfully the clinic had many people who weren’t as clever as Dr. Thompkins and could feed him with useful intelligence.

Captain America came and took Leslie… Thomas smirked and brushed his tablet’s screen browsing the latest news. No emergency around 11 o’clock with Captain’s or the Avengers’ intervention. And even if something had happened Thomas doubted whether Leslie’s urgent transfer and presence was necessary even if she was an esteemed doctor…

Which led Thomas’ reasoning to a much more interesting association: Captain America was an Avenger; Tony Stark was also an Avenger and the team’s new director; Bruce was Stark’s friend and Leslie’s favorite patient; so Captain America taking Leslie meant only one thing: Leslie was needed to offer her treatment because no other doctor was trusted and Stark asked from his colleague to fetch the doctor because either he was far to come himself or he wanted speed or both. In either case, that led to one conclusion:

“What new suffering you brought to yourself, Bruce?”

Alfred given the opportunity of the two men’s departure approached his young master who seemed lost in his thoughts or self-concentration. He knew that the youth would be very sad if he hurried to support him yet his legs dragged him on Bruce’s side without even thinking about it.

“Can you sit down now, Bruce?” Leslie asked calmly patting the mattress.

Bruce looked at her as if he hadn’t heard, his mind relishing the triumph of spirit over matter, muting
Clark’s angry words…that stung. He was standing again after three months and was a great feeling: during his stay at the Fortress thanks to the pyramids mighty energy he could make some soft moves but not stand. And now managing that without the assistance of a foreign energy force was incredible! He knew he could do it all this time yet he hesitated to try because the damage was too devastating and he believed that upon standing his fragile, ragged bones would shatter… But they didn’t!

“Bruce…” Leslie muttered her widened eyes on him reading the youth’s internal battle.

Selina had her palm over her mouth, numb.

But Alfred knew that this was bad. As much as seeing his young master standing was a balsam to his heart and willing Bruce to sink again to his chair was wrenching his guts, he bit his lips, as he had done so many times before, and wrapped Bruce’s back with his arm.

“Master Bruce, if you please…”

Alfred’s trembling hand touching gingerly his back and the butler’s soothing voice shook Bruce. He looked at Alfred who smiled affectionately: and then it dawned that this was wrong and it scared his loved ones. He nodded and Alfred slowly, carefully led his young master’s body flat on the mattress as the physiotherapist taught him.

Bruce reluctantly let his body free of his mind’s powerful tyranny and weakness returned along with immobility. Weakness… Alone the word with Clark’s snarly tone uttering it could make his body more dead than it was now.

Leslie placed her palm on Bruce’s chest pressing her lips. Bruce raised his eyes to her face.

“It’s better now?” she asked benignly.

He gave a tight lips smile.

“Yeah…I’m sorry…for that… for everything” he nodded. “Do what you want.”

Leslie wasn’t satisfied from the answer; she didn’t want Bruce blaming himself for what happened or feeling bad. She was sensing the muscles of the healthy part of his body very tense and turned her eyes at Alfred communicating without words her need for help.

But Bruce taking in their uneasiness caught them on the act.

“You won’t examine me?”

Leslie cupped his face.

“I need you to calm down first …”

That felt as an insult for Bruce even though he knew that Leslie said it from concern yet it was another blow to Bruce’s self-esteem hinting that a mild stimulus as an argument made him lost his calm. He immediately willed his heart and body – the part that still felt – to relax.

“I’m perfectly calm, Leslie – nothing happened” he grinned.

“I’m glad to hear that: now, tell me where it does hurt” and before Bruce managed to utter his protest “I know you from the first minute you open your eyes to this world so I can distinguish the signals of your pain as much as you hide them. I’m your doctor, boy – you tell everything to your doctor” she pressed her lips reprimanding.

Bruce blinked uncomfortable but then he felt a warm, rough tongue licking his fingers and his face loosened immediately upon looking at Hero who had climbed the bed. He caressed the kitten whose purring filled the room. Selina smiled mirroring Bruce’s wide smile because it was obvious that little Hero was the best tranquilizer for her friend.

“My ribs hurt a bit and…my arms” he added hesitantly because he didn’t want the last pain being connected with Clark’s grip.

“And your head?”

“I didn’t hit my head; the scratches and bruises are superficially. I have a mild headache but it’s nothing.”

Leslie nodded and began palpating Bruce’s torso carefully, not leaving an inch and keeping her keen eyes on her patient’s face for any minuscule indication of pain because she knew Bruce’s immense pain threshold and tolerance and didn’t want to risk losing even the most insignificant looking symptom.

The fact that Bruce was occupied in petting his kitten and Selina had sat beside the bed and participated to the game gave Leslie the asset of getting honest reactions from him. Once or twice he grimaced slightly but it was because she touched some bruises that fortunately weren’t connected with his healing organs.

Alfred watched poised hiding his concern, his eyes meeting often with Leslie’s for reassurance, not wanting to ask aloud to not ruin the mood of the two youths who were chuckling tickling Hero’s belly and playing with his ‘attacking’ paws. His old friend had the stethoscope in her neck yet Alfred understood that she wanted first to feel the organs and then listen to them.

Leslie was palpating calmly as ever the empty space in Bruce’s body where his spleen used to be; the truth was that she was afraid because the lack of the said organ could have implications on infections on the lungs especially the one that had collapsed entirely. Thankfully, neither the empty space nor the lungs were hit so no swellings or bleeding there: her eyes beamed to Alfred’s.

Alfred finally gulped the knot that had formed in his throat and watched encouraged Leslie listening the young man’s heart and lungs with her stethoscope.

“You see?” Bruce protested. “I told you I was alright.”

Leslie smirked and narrowed her eyes playfully, her relief having lifted her mood.

“Mmm… However you don’t have a good record in the assessment of your body’s injuries, do you?” she winked and began feeling each muscle of Bruce’s legs. “Or better” she cleared her throat “minimizing your body’s injuries to achieve your sneaky goals…”

Nothing menacing in those new bruises and no deterioration to the old, she communicated to Alfred. But to Bruce’s sigh it wasn’t over because Leslie stood and brought the portable ultrasound gadget to examine the organs and the state of the internal casts. And even after that she had to bring the spirometer.

“C’mee on, young man” she said looking sternly at her displeased patient. “You know the procedure…” Bruce rolled his eyes to Selina and she shrugged sympathetically. “Stop rolling your eyes…” Leslie mock berated him.
Bruce blew in the spirometer which was of course not a common spirometer doing much more detailed examination than the usual Pulmonary Function Tests.

“I’m not feeling any discomfort during respiration and I’m not coughing” Bruce remarked to Leslie who was perusing the gadget’s screen.

She grinned.

“I’m glad to hear that, Bruce, yet we must be sure, right?”

“I wasn’t hit on the chest and I protected it while on ground.”

“That’s good! But still your lungs need regular observation and since I’m here…” she frowned. “Don’t tell me that you’re unhappy to see old Leslie because of these petty exams?” she narrowed her eyes mocking angrily as she was doing when Bruce was a toddler and the kid was giggling every time. “And… should I suspect that you swear me inside?”

Bruce’s eyes widened and his cheeks reddened which made Selina laugh and Alfred smile.

“Of course not!” the young man protested affronted and Leslie shook her head.

“I know how much you love me…though that hue of pink on your already rosy cheeks” she brushed his cheeks “isn’t very convincing…”

“I’m embarrassed you thought this for me!”

But Leslie didn’t need Bruce’s words to know that. She kissed his cheek.

“The red color on your cheeks” she looked at Selina “of both of you shows that your staying here has benefited you.”

Selina yanked her head.

“My cheeks were always rosy” she said smugly and Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“With or without the tons of rouge?” he sniggered and Selina clenched her teeth and pinched his nose causing a light hearted laugh. “Thasos was famous for her healthy climate from the ancient times” he said to Leslie.

“I see you exercise your mind as much as your body, huh?” she arched an eyebrow.

“And along with the climate, we have the fresh local butter, milk, eggs, olive oil to thank…” Alfred added and Bruce looked at him grinning.

“Alfred has made his stock of local products for the Manor” Bruce commented and the butler arched an eyebrow “and also I made a deal of supplying the Haven and the clinic with local products as an addition to those from American farms.”

Leslie smiled.

“The businessman never rests, huh?”

“And, please, don’t forget my contribution on providing fresh fish” Selina added “and honey I, myself, gathered from the hive rising my life…” upon that Bruce choked from his chuckle.

“Yeah!” he remarked. “Selina took very special care in finding the best…looking providers for that…” he laughed and Selina bared her teeth and heaved Hero from the armpits bringing him to Bruce’s face.

“Eat him, Hero! Eat him!” she urged the animal but the kitten just nuzzled Bruce’s cheek causing the young man’s giggles. “Ugh! Males always cover each other’s ass!” Selina fumed and began ruffling her friend’s disheveled hair.

Leslie shook her head in mock disapproval and turned her eyes to Alfred who struggled, like her, to hide his smile.

“I don’t know how you manage with these two…” she said walking to the cabinet to take some needles.

“Neither do I, Leslie…” Alfred sighed but it was from delight not complaint.

Leslie sat again to the chair next to the bed and Alfred who grasped immediately her intention brought her a chunk of cotton drenched in alcohol. Bruce turned to her catching the smell.

“One last ordeal” Leslie told him. “I want a blood sample.”

He closed his eyes but stretched his arm.

“And all these because I crawled in the dirt?” he asked exasperated. “Alfred sends you detailed reports on my health every day!”

But Leslie unfazed pierced the vein in the elbow, drew blood and filled the small different vials Alfred gave her.

Suddenly knocks on the door made everyone look there except from Leslie who was absorbed in putting the samples she took in the rectangular blood test machine on the metallic table.

“Hmmm…” a clearing of throat “I was wondering if my detention is over now so I could join the fun?” Tony said in a tone of the cat that spilt the milk. “Huh? Little guy?” Bruce could see Tony’s puppy eyes and pout even behind the heavy door.

“Come and save me!” Bruce said and Tony needed nothing more to enter beaming with wide arms.

“Heeeere’s Toooony!”

Bruce smiled upon seeing his cheerful friend, happy that his bad reaction before hadn’t ruined much Tony’s beautiful attitude. Yet his heart sank not seeing Clark with him as he had hoped: so, Clark was pretty angry and…disappointed with him. All this time, Bruce was hiding his bitterness and upset from what happened yet a dull pain had settled over his chest.

Tony sniffed it and scratched his nape.

“Sorry, missy” he pushed gently Selina to take her place next to Bruce “but you had him for yourself all this time…” Hero turned his round, glimmering eyes to Tony’s and the billionaire twisted his lips. “OK, you can stay, fur buddy.”

Hero purred and brushed his head to Tony’s stomach.

“Listen, little guy, I told Clark to let you some space to calm down – both of you. He wanted to stay…” he pressed his lips and locked eyes with Bruce. “I made it again, huh?”

Bruce shook his head.
“It’s OK, Tony…”

Tony raised his eyes to Leslie who was holding gently Bruce’s elbow clearing the grazed skin.

“It’s everything alright?” he asked.

“It seems so: in a couple of minutes I’ll have the results from the blood tests and the PFT. And I’ll monitor him for 24 hours to have also a detailed cardiograph for Dr. Attkins.”

Bruce snapped his eyes at Leslie.

“What? Don’t tell me I’m not welcome here?” she inquired teasingly.

“Yes but I know how reluctant you are to leave your clinic…”

Leslie took off her glasses and placed them on the table.

“That’s true but we’re not living in Falcone’s reign anymore so I can take a leave, right?” she took his other elbow to treat; a suspicious frown on her face. “Unless you’re afraid that with me here you won’t get Alfred’s indulgence in your mischief… You know, endless hours of exercise…”

Alfred bit his lip and shared a complicit glance with his young master. Yet Bruce pouted and widened his eyes in innocence.

“Without exercise I’d have gained too much weight… I’m just trying to stop my muscles from degenerating and keep them in good shape. And I think that I can start attempting small steps. Slowly, of course and with the physiotherapist’s guidance” he took in how the others shared meaningful stares.

“You know it’s too early for that, Bruce” Leslie told him resisting the urge to bite her lips for the disappointment she knew that was bringing to him. “Your bones haven’t mended yet and your damaged neurons haven’t recovered – how on Earth you expect to walk when your neurons are unable to carry motor orders from your brain?!” she rubbed her eyebrow calming herself registering Bruce’s blank eyes. “And even if we solve the mobility problem, you know how dangerous it is to walk around unable to get sensory information from your body?” she was speaking in professional matter but she wanted to sigh at the darkening of Bruce’s eyes. “As a matter of fact” oh, this would be difficult “after what happened, I suggest no exercise for three days.”

“What?! No, Leslie!” his eyes narrowed defensively and stubbornly. “It’s not that I’ll force my body stand and run!” he protested and saw Tony’s eyes shut in frustration. “That’s my punishment for even thinking to stand and move, right? It happened only once: I’m not doing it all the time, do I?” he turned to Alfred to confirm his argument. “I know that it’s bad to do it in my current condition and I admit I was ready to do it for assisting Selina: I couldn’t abandon her fighting alone while they were swarming from everywhere and had weapons! But other than that I didn’t use this ability to dance or play or swim or stroll around or whatever… All these months I just sit in my chair or lie on the bed just watching, waiting others to take me in their arms… And I know that you agree with Clark: that this is my fault, the result of my decisions and deeds so… I asked for it” he inhaled deeply. “And I’m not complaining or whining… I only want to try…”

He shook his head and rolled it to the other side without looking at anyone: nobody understood anyways. They loved him, they took care of him without complaining and even happy because he survived yet they couldn’t understand his feelings, his wish to begin at least trying to walk again…

“Little guy…” Tony’s husky voice began saying reluctantly but he didn’t want to hear words of consolation – as a matter of fact he was tired of all this argument: he remembered Clark and something screamed inside him.

Bruce turned his eyes to Leslie who had remained inert from the punch of Bruce’s outburst, resumed cleaning his wounds swallowing her deep compassion for the youth.

“Actually, you should examine Sel too: she fought all alone and might have taken nasty blows she didn’t admit. She is as stubborn as me.”

Selina cocked an eyebrow.

“So it’s my turn for punishment?” she said wryly.

Bruce stabbed her with his eyes.

“It’s time we stop neglecting you” his voice was tired and Selina pressed her lips. “You gave a brave battle and we should make sure you didn’t get hurt” he stretched his hand and took hers.

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“Nice… Some girlish boobs at last!”

Selina punched his shoulder and Tony chuckled.

“What?! I can take off my T-shirt too if you’re shy…”

“The boys will go out” Leslie ordered.

“Damn!” Tony exclaimed.

“Master Bruce, your bath is ready” Alfred said consulting the control panel, no bigger than a smart phone, from where he could inspect and start or shut every appliance in the house.

Tony grinned smugly: his favorite Englishman was at first skeptical and unwilling to use his high tech tricks but in the end he mastered them.

Alfred brought the chair, a fleece blanket resting at his forearm and gave Hero to Selina. With Tony’s assistance he placed Bruce comfortably on the chair tucking his young master with the blanket; the kind man felt with a pang his young master’s buried dismay yet they just couldn’t stop themselves from soothing things for him.

“Thank you” Bruce said softly to both of them in a hoarse voice and took again Hero in his lap. “I’m grateful to all of you for everything…” Clark’s accusation of him being ungrateful still biting his guts.

“You’re not ungrateful, Master Bruce” Alfred replied reading his thoughts “and if I may utter my humble opinion: nothing from all these is your fault.”

Bruce locked his tired eyes with Alfred’s and gave a pressed grin.
Chapter 10

Superman knew what was happening before he arrived: his super vision and hearing had sketched already the scene. So he didn’t need to stand and think what to do: in super speed he put his body in front of the high speed train that had lost its rail and was heading to dive in the canyon. What Clark also knew was that a second train was coming from the opposite direction.

The location was just a few miles outside the city of Zurich in Switzerland and people on the train yelled ready for the dive to the canyon that surely would kill them; Clark could hear kids shrieking and babies crying as their parents cuddled them protectively.

His biceps and triceps bulged under the train weight but he gritted his teeth and returned the train on the rail over the bridge easily yet the other train was coming. His raging mind thought of just heaving the train off the rail but they were on a bridge where the rails leading to opposite directions became one. The derailed train wasn’t supposed to go on the bridge but turn at the intersection a mile before yet some sudden breakdown to the system made it continue without turning, constantly losing its route into finally breaking the railings and falling off the bridge.

The view of the cliff over the bridge was breathtaking but at the moment Clark wasn’t in the mood to appreciate it; on the contrary it frustrated him. Because the only solution he had was stopping the train with his back – which was already happening, the high speed train slowly losing impetus under Superman’s tremendous power. People in the train were cheering and shooting videos of their miraculous rescue with their tablets and smart phones, unaware that another train was fast approaching to collide head on with them.

Clark knew that he had to stop the other train with his hands since even though he sensed that the other driver was struggling to stop it, the train still had great impetus.

He heard the cheers turning to new shrieks and cries when the first people saw the coming train. Superman clenched his teeth determined to stop the train even if he had to die in the effort. He thought of Bruce: what would Bruce do if he wasn’t able to use all his power?

The pang was awful seeing again Bruce confined in that chair…powerless…He roared: Bruce would have compensated his lost mobility with his other skills.

Superman blew at the coming train slowing down a bit its speed and pressed his lips satisfied because now, at a slower speed, his odds were better. He plunged his feet in the ground, his back emanating real flames from the friction with the other train that thankfully had almost halted. He positioned his hands ready to stop the second train, clenching his eyes and jaw preparing for the collision.

That didn’t come. Superman heard the second train halt with a long screeching sound and the scent of metal on metal friction burnt his nostrils. But the most exhilarating was the cheers from the two trains: and to make his exhilaration greater another pleasant perfume distinguished in the air. He opened his eyes.

Princess Diana was standing in the middle of the rail: her one leg slightly bent the other stretched firmly rooted to the ground and her arms put on the headlights of the train that stopped under her resolution and mighty force.

Superman appraised her body: the effort had drenched her with hotness but not sweat because she was a demi-goddess and as he, such activity wasn’t demanding enough to make her sweat.
Nevertheless, the effect was breathtaking: the hotness emanating from her lean, strong body highlighting the tension, the tautness, the beautiful way her muscles bulged lined by throbbing veins…

Diana turned her head graciously to him, her waving locks blinding him; but her eyes’ sparkling was one of the most beautiful things he had ever seen. She smiled loosely and released the train now that it was secured.

Superman did the same and walked to her with determined eyes that locked with hers as they approached each other. The saved humans on the trains were cheering and capturing the scene.

Diana stood before him and hit her fisted hand over her heart as a sign of respect and Superman stretched his hand. The Amazon pierced him with her blazing eyes and shook his hand causing the crowd’s raving cheers.

“When you left in such haste I figured that something really urgent occurred and followed…just in case. I hope you don’t mind…” she purred.

Superman registered how her even breaths made her rich breasts move slowly, mesmerizing, wanting to escape their leather confines. That wasn’t proper, he berated himself, and focused again on her beautiful eyes.

“Not at all, Princess” he made a respectful, slight bow and pierced the air with his fist hoisting his body to return at Metropolis.

The very soft sensation was slithering his chest: it was velvety and silky and feathery as if the softest breeze was touching his flesh, like all the love of the world was caressing him. Bruce knew that it was something sponge looking but it was nothing like any sponge he used, even the natural sponge that Alfred provided him even under Falcone’s tyranny.

He closed his eyes and inhaled carefully because although the Fortress monitored and controlled his body’s functions, eliminating much of the pain and the discomfort, Bruce didn’t want to test his long suffering lungs, especially the right that he had felt it collapsing just a few seconds before he… died in Clark’s arms.

And now after a month – as Clark told him – he was lying on that bed that gave the impression of being made of clouds in a room made to look exactly as the master bedroom in the Manor.

“I want you to tell me if I’m hurting you…” a voice smoother than the alien sponge whispered to him – Clark’s voice.

He had a sweet, happy smile lightening his face yet Bruce could discern apart from his elation for getting him back, the pain and fear of all these days he was in a coma and his agony that his ministrations could hurt him. All these in his crystal, clear eyes.

“I’m fine…” he answered, smiling for additional reassurance unable to speak more due to his fatigue and to the sensations Clark’s ministrations caused to his oversensitive, naked body.

The painkillers and the other medicines he was given made his body feel…strange…constantly in a pleasantly numb state as if it wasn’t tied to the earth but in a medium level between earth and heaven, existence and non-existence: a trance. And that made Clark’s tender ministrations so pleasant, enhancing the feeling of wings flapping in his chest…Maybe more because he came back from the dead and wanted to suck every pleasant experience life could offer.
He moaned as the too soft material touched his nipple and Clark stopped abruptly scared that he had caused pain to his fragile lungs.

“I hurt you…” he licked his lips cursing himself.

He barely shook his head and since he couldn’t make the move as he wanted, he grinned.

“No, it felt nice…” he closed his eyes and Clark chuckled.

He saw through his eyelashes Clark drenching the sponge into a column of light neon blue light that the Fortress conjured obviously because the Man of Steel thought it. Now the sponge brushed velvety his abdominals, slowly, meticulously and Bruce could hear his savior’s rasps; he wondered even in his mind’s drug induced daze how Clark could find breathtaking a mangled body…

Yet…he relished on that: the perfect man’s love and desire. He breathed carefully, synchronizing his respiration with Clark’s movements, since he couldn’t do anything else more encouraging for the man who loved him. But even that was enough for Clark to understand… Bruce knew so well those lips that barely touched his belly sending tender hot air to caress his flesh and ripple his skin with goose bumps…

“Mmmm…” Bruce sighed – damn! His powerlessness shouldn’t be so…erotic.

He could sense Clark’s amazed eyes watch him flapping his eyelashes as Clark continued nibbling his abdominals with only the edge of his lips. And then Clark caressed Bruce’s left hand because the right was strongly encased.

“I’m here to bath you…” he said regretful.

Bruce smiled without opening his eyes in an effort to make the sensation linger.

“I prefer your lips than the sponge…” he answered slyly.

Clark rose and his face was above his; he had still his eyes shut but he could understand the concern just from Clark’s breath. Bruce opened his eyes and Clark’s eyes confirmed his assumption.

“Is the sponge harsh?” the Man of Steel inquired really distressed.

Bruce smiled and wished he could move his left hand to touch Clark’s cheek.

“No, it’s soft like velvet, silk and cotton together – yet your lips are even softer…”

Clark cupped his cheeks and locked their lips almost sobbing from suppressed craving that at least could be let out; yet as soon as Bruce felt the first imperceptible pang in his lung, Clark stopped. Bruce realized that the Man of Steel after all this time was perfectly tuned with his vitals.

Clark nuzzled his cheekbones and then his temples keeping his eyes closed and fighting his complaining whines.

“I must continue…” he pressed his lips and Bruce nodded.

Clark was bathing him every day, twice; though the environment in the Fortress was perfectly clean, healthy and sterilized, the Man of Steel never let go of this routine… Bruce understood that Clark needed that; he loved to wash him and never let his androids do it: he suspected that Clark wanted to bath his body to persuade himself that Bruce was alive. At first, when he was in a coma, and then when he woke up, to persuade himself that it was true and that he hadn’t dreamt that…
Bruce knew that Clark was washing his legs because he didn’t feel anything; only his eyes could inform him that Clark’s gentle touch was still his, taking care with adoration leaking from his eyes - flesh that ungratefully would ignore everything. So he was watching eagerly Clark’s every ministration as much as his inability to crane his neck allowed him – he didn’t want to miss anything because he felt that it was unfair to that wonderful demigod who humbled himself so much as to wash him.

Clark realizing Bruce’s watching eyes was raising his head every now and then to smile to him. Bruce mirrored that smile not only because Clark always caused that reaction to him but also because the bed was drying his body instantly and made him feel like laundry…

As soon as he finished applying carefully the healing and painkilling alien balsam, Clark let the sponge suspend inside the blue neon light. He wrapped carefully Bruce’s chest with one arm and used the other to raise carefully, gingerly his torso.

Bruce almost purred from Clark’s gentle rubbing but stopped when he sensed Clark placing something around his neck: a pendant. He opened his eyes and saw the black diamond hanging in the middle of his chest, near his beating heart; it was wrapped in a plain but beautiful oval shaped frame made from black platinum. It glowed like a dark star.

Clark brushed Bruce’s locks and kissed tenderly the corner of his lips.

“I thought that I ought to the Black Butterfly give her an appropriate frame” he smiled uncomfortably. “At least, I think it appropriate: what’s your opinion?”

Bruce wanted to touch it but his hands wouldn’t make him the favor so he settled for the feeling of the mystic diamond over his heart and the beauty of the black, rare metal.

“I think it’s beautiful…” he locked his eyes with Clark’s.

“It reminds me of you…” he mumbled and cleared his throat determined. “Let’s take care of your bed sores now…”

Bruce nestled his face in Clark’s shoulder: his numbing powerlessness made him so prone to find refuge in Clark’s hot body, nude as his; maybe because his body remembered who saved it; who taught him love…

“I don’t have any…” he mumbled letting his lips graze smoothly Superman’s naked shoulder that its hair raised and Clark shivered. “You’re a perfect nurse” he chuckled “a nurse of steel: I’m thinking of recommending you to Leslie…” he smiled knowing that Clark felt it since his cheek was sunk in his shoulder.

Clark’s fingers ruffled his locks as he did a few minutes ago when shampooed him. The Man of Steel was beaming as their eyes met.

“We are in good cheer, huh?” he cupped Bruce’s face and mouthed the corner of his lips sucking the feeling of the soft flesh and the unique perfume.

And he was looking at Clark’s closed, trembling eyes as his lips massaged tenderly his lips, his cheek, his neck, groaning, sniffing desperately.

“Cinnamon, orange, hibiscus, defiance, bravery, kindness: you…”

He could hear Clark’s affectionate whispering but his eyelids were too heavy and discerning the words was impossible and then exhaustion won him over and as much as he didn’t want it nothingness hid Clark's voice...but not his love.

And then all of a sudden:

“But you’re WEAK, damn it! Only your stupid stubbornness doesn’t let you admit it. Your pigheadedness sends you every time to risk your life while you know that you can’t cope; your idiocy to prove that you don’t need anyone made you use that stupid suicidal technique to force your disabled body to fight Joker…”

Bruce brushed the indication on the railing around the chair inside the bath tub and the water stopped. His “wheelchair” reading his wish reached the tub that slightly inclined permitting Bruce hoist himself using the titanium supporters and slide into the warm chair. He immediately took his bathrobe and wore it.

Upon approaching, the door opened to the bedroom and Hero ran to him, climbing swiftly to his lap. Bruce laughed and caressed his head.

The huge room was pleasantly warm and the built in fireplace opposite the king size bed was on creating a wonderful atmosphere as outside the window night was gradually settling. A discreet aroma of pine wood twirled in the room, relaxing Bruce’s body.

“You’re too gushy, eh, buddy? To make up for your friend’s introversion…” the kitten was staring at him and Bruce ran his hand to his wet locks. “Or you’re just hungry…” he willed the chair towards the cabinet. “Good thing I stash food here for you…” he locked eyes with the kitten and raised his index finger warningly “but don’t tell Alfred I hide your biscuits here…”

He opened the marble-wood cabinet, pulled out a metallic bowl and filled it with biscuits under Hero’s greedy stare that followed the bowl till the floor. Yet the kitten didn’t jump and Bruce chuckled.

“You’re loyal: I give you that – you don’t sell your friend for some biscuits…”

He took a biscuit from the bag and brought it to Hero’s mouth who gulped it greedily licking Bruce’s fingers. Bruce took him from the armpits and lowered him to the floor next to his bowl.

“Help yourself, littl’ one – Bruce must get dressed.”

Alfred had set his clothes neatly on the mattress: he brushed the soft fabric. Dark blue long sleeved fleece pajamas. And, of course, Alfred’s love and overprotectiveness readied even underwear and socks; he wore as fast as he could the underwear and took the socks but then the memories that accompanied him during his bath returned and his stare was drawn to the clock on the nightstand.

He hastily looked at the bedroom’s door a second before polite knocks announced Alfred’s arrival; the kind form emerging after Bruce’s answer carrying a silver tray with a white porcelain bowl, a milk jug, a sugar jug, a glass of orange juice and a rose.

Alfred cast a sideways glance to Hero grinning and Bruce cleared his throat.

“Hero” the kitten turned to him licking his muzzle “remember what I told you about Alfred and the biscuits?” he pressed his lips guiltily looking at Alfred. “Forget it: we’re busted!”

Alfred chuckled relieved that his young master’s spirits were high again and placed the tray on the small, rectangular table in front of the oval shaped window that covered the center of the external wall in its entire length.
“Master Hero will be happy to have table company” he winked to the kitten who turned upon hearing its name. “I brought you a snack, sir.”

He approached Bruce and gave him the orange juice taking the socks from his hands.

“Please, leave that to me, sir” he said and crouched under Bruce’s uncomfortable eyes. “And drink your juice before it loses its nutrients.”

“No, Alfred, no! You won’t do that…It’s too much!” he protested, moving his hands to take the socks but Alfred was adamant.

“Sir” he mock scolded him “I have the suspicion that you intend on firing me...” Bruce’s eyes widened shocked.

“Of…of course not!” he protested again.

Alfred took carefully his young master’s unresponsive foot and raised his playful eyes to Bruce’s face.

“Then let me do my job! And please do drink your juice” he began dressing Bruce’s feet gulping his sadness from feeling how dead these young legs were.

Bruce drank obediently his juice staring at him so intensely that the butler felt it and looked back fixing meticulously the socks on the calves.

“It’s only temporary, Alfred: don’t be sad…I’ll walk again…soon…” he pressed his lips in a determined grin – he wanted to comfort his wonderful butler who was exhausted accompanying him through his entire journey in Hell.

“I know, sir…” he replied a bit embarrassed for being caught “please, forgive an oversensitive old man for being a coward…” he absent mindedly caressed his master’s feet.

Bruce’s eyes sparkled and he shook his head.

“You’re not old, Alfred, and definitely not a coward…”

Alfred stood grinning.

“Thank you, sir, yet you can’t deny that I am an idiot succumbing to sadness while I’m so proud of you!”

Bruce raised his eyes to meet his butler’s affectionate stare.

“You’re not pissed I brought that on me?”

Alfred couldn’t fight it: he kneeled before the disabled young man and touched his shoulders locking their eyes.

“Nobody is pissed at you, Master Bruce” he said solemnly. “We know you did the right thing, the noble thing, an unbelievable sacrifice… Everyone, even Master Kent, knows that weren’t for you, things would have been very difficult for the children. Yet, you have to understand that…” he gulped and sighed “we love you so much and that night we almost lost you again due to your…annoying altruism and sometimes – how youth calls it? – we lose it…And you’re a really bad boy who makes his butler broke his code of conduct!” he coughed with dignity to cover his emotions and stood, taking in his young master’s grin.
He took the pajamas from the bed and placed them carefully over the back of an armchair.

“Can you untie your bathrobe, Master Bruce?”

Bruce looked at him astonished: Alfred was helping him dress the first days of his return from the Fortress but now he was more than able to dress himself. However he didn’t want to spoil his mood so he obliged believing that Alfred would just offer him his clothes.

But Alfred took his magical first aid kit (that probably had brought while Bruce was in the bathroom) and began cleaning the scratches over his torso and legs – Bruce was relieved that he had at least worn his boxers… In less than fifteen minutes, Alfred was fixing the last sticking plaster on his forehead and Bruce seeing him standing thought that he had finished and hastened to wear again his robe.

Yet Alfred held the pajama shirt open and Bruce rolled his eyes.

“Alfred, for pity’s sake...!”

“Please, sir, stretch your arm” he said unfazed and Bruce did it although grudgingly.

“You realize that I’m not eight years old…” the young man narrowed his eyes as Alfred lifted the pajamas’ pants over his legs – he was blushed glad that he had worn his boxers before his butler came in.

“Is it too bad that a butler wants at times to make up for the lost years?” he asked in a casual tone yet Bruce sensed the underline emotion.

“No…” Bruce answered quietly and Alfred grinned.

“Thank you, sir” he buttoned up the pajama shirt and registered Bruce’s hand brushing the fabric.

“It’s exactly like my favorite pajamas back then…” he said and Alfred nodded. “I thought that I had forgotten the sense of the fabric…”

Alfred moved to the dresser and took the comb that belonged to Martha Wayne. He began combing Bruce’s hair incredibly softly and carefully and the numbness overtaking his mind reminded Bruce of the days at the Fortress when Clark was dressing him and combing his hair. His eyes on their own volition glued to the clock on the nightstand.

“He’ll come, Master Bruce” Alfred said. “If you pardon my lack of discretion: I think that Master Kent can’t wait to come back to you. He wouldn’t have gone if he didn’t believe that his presence made things worse for you” he shook his head. “And I’m absolutely sure that he already regretted what he said.”

Bruce closed his eyes shaking his head and let it loll to his shoulder.

“But he believes what he said.”

Alfred pressed his lips, his eyes taking their warmest hue.

“Master Bruce, you’re inexperienced in arguments…”

Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“Alfred, you know that I am more than experienced in that field…”
“If I may beg your pardon, sir: your experience is scarily vast in verbal abuse not arguments” Bruce licked his lips uncomfortable. “People say things that they don’t necessarily believe: in intimate relationships like the one you have with Master Kent feelings may get too hot and blur the reasoning. Master Kent cares so much for you” he searched his young master’s eyes to see if he was convinced.

Yet Bruce’s eyes were lost for a bit before turning to Alfred.

“From the day I woke from the coma till I returned to your care, Clark looked after me every day: he was washing me twice a day, he dressed me, he fed me because my hands were disabled; he treated my wounds and massaged me” he said staring at Alfred’s face and the butler smiled.

“Such admirable devotion is scares even in old couples…”

“I owe him my life…”

Bruce’s steady but hoarse voice from hidden emotion made Alfred once again screw his butler code of conduct and kiss his young master’s soft locks. And Bruce realizing how great a misdemeanor that was for an esteemed butler like Alfred took his butler’s wrinkled hand and kissed it.

Alfred’s heart writhed in his chest upon understanding the deep emotions his boy had for his butler – no, no butler…

He opened the door for his masters, craving to follow them but knowing that it was impossible, so he just wished everything would go well and at the end of the night they’d have Bruce with them.

Martha stood in front of him before she followed her husband to the car. She brought out of her coat’s pocket a key and gave it to him.

“This is the key to my vault in Switzerland; this is to secure Bruce’s life if anything happens to us” Alfred opened his mouth to say that nothing will happen but Martha stopped him. “You’ll keep Bruce and raise him and with this key you and him will go to the bank and open the vault – it needs Bruce’s right thumb fingertip to open. I know you love him like your own child and that he will be happy with you, so the money is my gratitude to you…” she smiled.

“Mrs. Wayne, everything will be fine and Bruce will be with us in a few hours and if... if ever Bruce needs me to…” he just couldn’t say it “I’ll do it gladly with my own money…”

“I know, Alfred; for that, I give you the key and my only son’s guardianship: you know where we keep the papers…”

“Alfred?” Bruce inquired with a small smile in his tone.

The butler kneeled again before him and held his shoulders, his stare serious.

“Master Bruce, I beg you to promise me that you won’t stretch yourself in your effort to walk again: you’re a brave young man; strong, determined with willpower that surpasses every super power Master Kent has” Bruce smiled. “But you need to be cautious because a wrong move could damage again your legs or pelvis and then we’ll be again at the start or worse.”

Bruce nodded.

“I know, Alfred.”

“I understand how difficult is for a dynamic youth like you to be in this position and I share and feel your eagerness and impatience to return to your old life…” Bruce inhaled and turned his eyes to the window before looking again at Alfred. “Yet, Master Bruce, do you remember the first time you came to the Manor through the caves? Or later when Falcone moved to your parents’ house? When I was eager to address you with your rightful title?”

Bruce shook his head understanding what Alfred meant.

“Wisely you were insisting that I should not be hasty and be patient as you were patient all these years under Falcone’s brutality. You were insisting that patience is crucial; that we should suppress our readiness and our exploding emotions for the sake of the final victory. And we were both patient although it hurt…” Alfred lowered his eyes remembering the cold sweat running his spine every time he heard Falcone abusing his young master. “But in the end” he raised his eyes and smiled “all this patience was worthy…You’re an incredibly wise young man, Master Bruce, and you know that the same patience is demanded from you again. So promise me, Master Bruce, that if you feel any discomfort, any tiny nuisance or pain, you’ll immediately notify me or Leslie or your precious friends.”

Bruce smiled.

“I promise”  it’s the least I can do for all of you…

Alfred stood and bowed gesturing to the table where the tray waited and Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“Your cereal wait for you with thyme honey Miss Kyle harvested” Bruce chuckled “and fresh milk: or perhaps you’d like something different?”

Bruce made his chair move to the table and purred milk from the jug in the porcelain bowl, adding a teaspoon of honey.

“No, Alfred; I love cereal for snack.”

“I’m glad to hear that, sir. Now if you’ll excuse me I’ll tidy up the bathroom.”

“OK, Alfred; thank you for everything.”

Alfred grinned.

“My pleasure, Master Bruce.”

However he didn’t move to the bathroom till Bruce took the first spoonful of cereal. Hero having already eaten his snack was rubbing at Bruce’s legs purring.

Bruce followed Alfred with the corner of his eyes and as soon as the butler was out of sight he let his gaze wander to the darkening sky from the big oval window. Waiting…

Clark Kent with his trademark slumped posture entered the Daily Planet building, fixing his square, ugly glasses and working in his mind what would say to Perry. It was almost 14.00 and he was gone for almost three hours!

He greeted Mr. Avey, the doorman, and the old man grinned.

“Mr. Kent, I didn’t see you leaving the building” he remarked under his presbyopic spectacles.

Clark cleared his throat: of course, he didn’t because Superman used the bathroom window.
“Mmmm…There were many people at the foyer at the time so you missed me…” he grinned shyly and the old man scratched his hair.

Clark hastened to reach the lift before Mr. Avey asked more but upon pressing the button to call it, he frowned. You’re kidding me! He huffed: it was only an hour since he stopped two high speed trains from crushing getting some friction marks in his back and feet: OK, the marks were so insubstantial that had already vanished but…still. A burglary at noon? Metropolis was turning into Gotham?

He rolled his eyes; he couldn’t let it pass because what he heard wasn’t the common alarm that would notify the police – the common alarm was obviously deactivated. It was the silent alarm Lucius Fox had established to every LEXLAB after Wayne Enterprises got their control. Clark immediately thought that the burglars must be overconfident to strike during daylight and the possibility that their overconfidence was well based made him hurry to the exit.

“Mr. Kent, where are you going?” the doorman shouted confused.

Clark turned his blushed face to the old man.

“I just remembered that I parked illegally and I don’t want a fine or being towed…” he grinned uncomfortably “salary cuts…”

He surged outside and in the first empty alley changed into Superman taking off for the LEXLAB he heard the alarm from. For a couple of months, Metropolis was plagued by burglaries: not usual burglaries but breaks into labs and gun storages; also, some of these burglaries were accompanied by massive killings of the guards who in most cases were members of local gangs. So Clark came to the conclusion that those hits could not only aiming to add infantry or illegal drugs to the draft of the culprit gang but also weaken the others. His reluctant informants whispered one name: Intergang.

Superman had managed to intervene on time in some of the cases but either the culprits killed themselves on the arrest (that shocked him) or didn’t know anything about what they were doing there. He was concerned about that new gang because gradually it eliminated with cruelty its rivals and was gathering weapons and chemicals whose grade of danger nobody could estimate with certainty since they were illegal or clouded in secrecy.

And now it was LEXLABS’ turn and that sucked because Luthor was the greatest…in illegitimate, dangerous, secret experiments that very often concerned Superman. Clark knew that this was one of the major reasons Bruce gave his priority into gaining the control; he also knew that from the first day Bruce changed the security system and the staff with his own and began registering in detail whatever it was found there. But LEXLABS were too many and some of them in secret locations that the new owner had to elicit from the division’s files.

If this was again Intergang’s doing, maybe Luthor had some kind of collaboration with them. The imprisoned tycoon didn’t hesitate to join forces with shady organizations and outlaws when the interest was common and grave – and, of course, the League of Shadows wasn’t enough. On the other hand, it could be just a scavenging attack to loot the luxury lab’s equipment and any other goodies they would find. Probably they believed that the transitional phase to Wayne Enterprises’ control would have let some void in safety.

He clenched his teeth already seeing the vast premises in Metropolis’ outskirt and the human forms inside. The guards had fought – his super vision told him – because they were slumped on the floor gathered in the middle of the ground level and bleeding; the attackers ready to execute them with semi-automatic guns and AR-15, all from the last warehouse’s robbery: Clark had covered that and read meticulously the police’s report.
Clark clenched his fists and collided with the reinforced wall which collapsed startling the criminals who turned to see the Man of Steel emerging as the clouds of dust settled down. As soon as his impressive posture became visible they began raining him with bullets which were unable to pierce his body.

When they ceased fire and looked curious for the result Superman gazed at the layer of hot bullets at his feet and then at his assailants before he surged against them shattering their guns and knocking them down with just a slap because if he punched them they would shatter.

The guards encouraged stood up, helping each other, as Superman finished with the last thug. They approached ready to handcuff the criminals beaming at Superman who however frowned; footsteps on the upper level were coming to the balcony overseeing the ground floor. Sixteen pairs of feet.

“Take cover!” he said calmly to the guards nodding to the big containers around and flew to meet the thugs.

He was ready to attack them but he stopped abruptly realizing that the thugs who wear ski masks held hostages, guns and knives pressed on the scientists’ and other personnel’s bodies.

“Stay back, boy scout!” the head goon barked. “One finger on one of us and the others will kill the hostages!” even if Clark didn’t have super vision the guy’s sneering stare was enough. “You don’t want this, huh?” he sniggered. “We blow now and you, as a good boy, won’t do anything…”

Clark clenched his fists and his jaw, his eyes reddening.

“No, no, no!” he pointed with his eyes at the other thugs who armed their guns causing scared screams from the hostages. “See ya, Supes!”

“No way!” Superman hissed and the head thug narrowed his eyes.

“Kill some stuff; maybe he’ll think it over then…”

“No!” Superman said but he didn’t attack because hitting some of them would simultaneously hit the hostages and the other thugs would kill the rest.

“Too late, dude!” the head thug croaked and Superman’s eyes widened.

But then a golden line hissed ripping the air and the thugs on the back found their necks wrapped and their heads slammed together not leaving them the time to harm their hostages. Before the others realized what had happened a hurricane embraced them dragging them away from the hostages and breaking their weapons.

Superman didn’t let the thugs on the front think but took advantage of their instant turning of the heads to melt with his heat vision the guns they held giving the opportunity to the hostages to run away. And then he tackled them as he wanted all this time.

The criminals were down in less than a minute and as soon as Superman straightened his posture regarding the faces under the ski masks, he saw with the corner of his eyes his unexpected ally walking proudly to him.

Superman couldn’t suppress the wide smile that grazed his face upon seeing the Amazon Princess gathering her lasso and dangling it to her hip with her eyes always on him. A wild shining lock hid her eye but she yanked her head proudly and Superman was excited. She smiled.

“We meet again, Man of Steel.”
He nodded.

“You saved my hide again, Princess” he placed his palm over his heart. “I’m obliged.”

But she shook her head and cocked an eyebrow.

“You could have managed but… I couldn’t resist the chance to fight again alongside a noble warrior like you” her smile became wider and her teeth’s shine dazzled Clark.

“Som’ne kill me already! Find a room, ya fuckin’ superheroes!” the barely conscious head thug grunted from the base of the railings he was slumped.

“Good evening, Mr. Wayne! What a pleasant surprise! How are you?” Lucius Fox’s cheerful face appeared on the screen of Bruce’s laptop.

He had come out to the living room’s balcony and combined the work he had to do with the splendid night view he so much loved. He had already studied carefully the logs with everything they had found in LEXLABS looking for something that would resemble his attackers. In vain. But every day new findings were added and maybe they weren’t registered yet.

It felt so good to be engaged again in this kind of activity especially since nobody seemed to remember that an attack just happened.

“Good afternoon, Lucius; I’m fine, thanks. I’m so glad to see you even through sat connection.”

Lucius laughed.

“I guess the two days since our last Tele-conference with Mr. Fredericks is enough time to miss me, huh?” the scientist squinted regarding Bruce’s face more carefully. “Mr. Wayne, you had a fight?”

his voice became dead serious, concerned and a bit reprimanding.

Bruce smirked: it took for Lucius less than he expected to take in the marks on his face – besides Tony’s sat connection were of high definition. Bruce made a mental note to schedule the building of such satellites for Wayne Enterprises; Falcone didn’t care about modern technology.

“It’s nothing, Lucius” he saw the man’s eyebrow arch. “I was attacked” he added casually and Lucius leaned closer.

“By whom? Nobody knows your current residence.”

Bruce nodded and pressed his lips.

“Unfortunately, I can’t tell and I’ll need your help.”

Lucius tilted his head on the side, his eyes playful.

“But you are the detective, Mr. Wayne...”

Bruce rolled his eyes.

“With Alfred, Leslie and the company around guarding me?” he huffed. “Hardly…”

Lucius chuckled.
“They were very scared, huh?” he asked compassionately and took off his glasses “Understandably…”

Bruce just pressed his lips and didn’t comment.

“What are your thoughts?” Lucius prompted him.

“Princess Diana’s intervention ruined our chance to capture the assailants and get useful info… Selina was fighting them but Princess came before Superman and Tony.”

Lucius eyebrows rose with interest.

“Princess Diana as…”

Bruce nodded.

“Exactly: the Amazon who rescued Oliver Queen.”

Lucius chuckled.

“Seems like she made her life’s goal to protect billionaires…”

Bruce huffed not so amused.

“The fact is that she blew up the creatures that attacked me and now we can’t find their source.”

“Creatures? You mean that you weren’t attack by humans?” Lucius’ eyes widened.

Bruce shook his head.

“No, anything but human and the question is if they were creatures or robots… I’ve already searched the databases of many labs around the world but I didn’t find anything similar. Of course, I searched the logs with the stuff we found at LEXLABs however I know that the registration continues.”

Lucius tilted his head and tapped his fingers on the desk.

“Indeed. There are facilities in remote, god-forsaken locations and even those easily accessed have top secret sections that are hidden quite efficiently. But tell me about those creatures.”

Bruce felt his heart flapping in his chest from excitement because finally he could discuss the attack’s details.

“Approximately human height and weight, human-like arms and legs, but they were green with small wings and they had hundreds of thin, needle-like teeth covering their jaw; their eyes were very small, black dots, and they had only nostrils that steamed. They used guns.”

Lucius brought his fist to his mouth and coughed deep in thought.

“You have a ‘friend’ who is related and has access to strange, unseen before beings” he cocked his eyebrows suggestively, sure that Bruce’s confused expression was only a pretense. “A demon” he added widening his eyes.

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose and shook his head.

“I stabbed him with the Knife and that sent him to the Tartarus – Thor confirmed that. But, to be honest, I considered that possibility too…”
Lucius gave a teeth revealing smile.

“Of course you would, Mr. Wayne.”

“If those strange creatures were demons or something related to Bagdana, they wouldn’t need guns.”

Lucius pursed his lips and nodded.

“You’ve got a point there… What kind of weapons they were carrying?”

Bruce pressed his lips and grimaced.

“I’ve never seen anything like this… They were the size of shotguns, their form something between Kel-Tec KSG and P12 Bullpup, yet the material was like crystal and they shot beams. I sent you a rough sketch but I didn’t find an exact match in my research.”

“League of Shadows?”

This had crossed Bruce’s mind too.

“We have a very detailed database with League’s and S.H.I.E.L.D.’s infantry, including Dr. Banner’s breakthrough technology, and there’s no match. If the creatures were in their army, we’d have known. And they’d have preferred sending humans for the job…”

Lucius crossed his arms.

“That approach failed horribly before so maybe they decided to test something new. And we can’t rule out the possibility of them having secret hideouts that weren’t in Al Ghul’s database.”

“Still it’s too early for them to make a move, Lucius…” yet Lucius’ suggestion made Bruce’s healthy spine shiver reminding him of something Talia had told him:

“You don’t need a womb to give me the offsprings of yourself and Bagdana! I’ll summon him, he’ll fuck you, your body will absorb the seed and my scientists will have fresh material to create my new army of demon soldiers with extraordinary human DNA!”

Maybe Ra’s had already done that?

“Mr. Wayne?” Lucius asked concerned, noticing the young man’s widening of eyes.

“We’ll definitely not cross that probability but for now I’m focusing on unregistered, illegal experiments…”

“What about…aliens?” he inquired arching his eyebrows and Bruce closed his eyes.

“I’d rather focus on Earth…”

Lucius tapped his fingers.

“But Superman has many extraterrestrial enemies, Mr. Wayne” their eyes met with shared understanding and Lucius nodded. “That video of Superman being extra tender to you while carrying you to the clinic has millions of viewers” he pressed his lips. “And certainly the video fascinated Superman’s enemies.”

Bruce shook slowly his head.
“So they attacked me – the weak link – to gain leverage against Superman: their beams were set to stun not kill.”

Lucius nodded.

“However, concerning Superman’s enemies we don’t have to leave earth’s stratosphere to find them: there are many of them very much Terrans and highly dangerous and one of them hates me as much as Superman.”

Lucius smiled.

“Of course: that brought you to search Luthor’s secret activities. But he knows how to hide his traces and we need to search meticulously LEXLABs. However, we have to take into account the fact that he is in jail – not that this would be an obstacle for him…”

“I know and I’m not convinced that it’s his doing… Batman could interrogate Luthor but…at the moment he is unavailable” he pressed his lips.

“We’ll figure this out, Mr. Wayne. I’ll speed the procedure of registration and I’ll keep you updated. Yet what concerns me most is that they knew where to find you: I know that Mr. Stark travels there in stealth mode and Superman knows how to evade tracking; also, the villa is invisible to satellites. And the deal you made for local products hasn’t been publicized yet and even so I was the one who signed it not you, so the locals know my name not yours.”

The man was in deep thought.

“Anyway, what matters is that your safety is compromised.”

Bruce nodded.

“And not only mine: during my staying here I used to go to the village for strolls and having coffee in the square – imagine if the attack had happened in the middle of the village with so many innocent people around… The village doesn’t have a police station and even the entire island’s police force makes for Gotham’s one hundredth of officers!” he shook his head and shrugged. “The people here don’t know about villains or super villains and I want to stay that way… So I must leave this peaceful place soon before I ruin everything.’’

Lucius tilted his head on the side.

“It’s not your fault, Mr. Wayne…”

Bruce shrugged.

“You can’t deny that my presence is a damning factor” he narrowed his eyes. “Lucius, there’s an article in Gazette that seems to have an effect on our shares…”

Lucius closed his eyes exasperated and shook his head; he knew that article but he hoped that Bruce wouldn’t read it but of course the young man was daily watching his company’s activity and that damn article was mentioned everywhere.

“It’s some stupid speculation that was confuted by Wayne Enterprises. And the shares are stable.”

Bruce gave a crooked smile.

“Speculations that I’m probably dead and the company’s claims that I’m recovering in some rehabilitation center are lies to maintain the stability and rising course of the shares?"

Lucius frowned in such deep seriousness that was unusual for him. Lucius always, even in the most crucial situations, kept his undeterred and loose mood.

“Mr. Wayne, your company functions perfectly, you have the absolute trust of the board and everyone wants you to have your recovering time forgetting the insubstantial matters” Lucius leaned towards the screen. “Mr. Wayne, you need to rest and take care of yourself: your only concern should be your healing and recovery. You have people you can trust with trivial things. We want to see you returning but not hastily because of some exploiters.”

“Thank you, Lucius.”

However as soon as their discussion ended Bruce opened the site of Gotham Gazette to read again that article but a popped up ad for the ranking of the best universities in US filled his screen. Bruce’s fingers rubbed his lips unconsciously and he touched the link to open the article.

Clark sank at last in his chair at the Daily Planet; he was flustered, feeling uncomfortable for being absent for so many hours but at least he had a good time with the Princess and he gave an exclusive to the newspaper; the sneak preview already on the site promising a full article. The burglary in the LEXLAB gave him the best alibi.

Indeed, almost the moment he sat down, Perry rushed out of his office probably informed by one of his colleagues and hurried to shake Clark’s hand the man uncomfortably straightening his askew glasses, flushed.

“Well done, Kent! It seems that this is your year! Your source was a good one” he patted his back. “Use it wise!”

“Mr. White, I…”

“I’m waiting your full article and coverage from Superman and Wonder Woman’s battle!”

He let Clark with his mouth gaping unable to utter what he wanted and returned to his office. Clark twitched his lips and sat again, sighing.

“Hey, Smallville, how’s Bruce?” Lois whispered to his ear and although he knew that she was coming he looked at her with wide eyes blushed. “What? It was something serious?” her face fell.

Clark bit his lips: he totally forgot Bruce… He slapped both his cheeks and gazed with blank eyes at his PC screen. Yet Lois lolled her head and nudged his ribs.

“Well?” she widened her eyes demandingly when her friend eyed her.

“I…I don’t know; he seemed fine but…” he closed his eyes and sighed. “I’m not sure…”

“You’re kidding me, right?”

Clark lolled his head to the side.

“We had an argument and I left to help him relax…to not deteriorate things and…”

Lois put her hands in her hips and rolled her eyes exasperated.
“And in all these hours you didn’t go back to speak to him, to learn? What the heck? Even calling?”

Clark snapped his hands in the air.

“So many things happened – it was a very busy day, Lois - and I…”

Lois rubbed her forehead.

“You forgot him…” she shook her head disappointed.

Clark jolted on his feet to protest and in his clumsy haste upturned the foam cup with the stale coffee he bought the morning. So he frantically took the keyboard and the mouse off the desk and tossed a handful of tissue papers over the liquid. His colleagues giggled entertained: usual Kent.

“I…I’ll go see him” he said to Lois holding his computer’s parts. “As soon as I deliver that article…”

Lois crossed her arms and gazed at him disapprovingly. Clark raised his eyebrows frustrated.

“What?”
Lois scrolled a video on her smart phone’s screen and started it showing to Clark who sat on his seat sweeping his desk and placing back the keyboard and the mouse. He knew what the video was about: the rescue of the two trains in Switzerland: what Lois wanted to say with that?

She cleared her throat.

“You’re not interested? Funny…”

Clark lolled his head on the side and cast a fleeting glance to the video appreciating the fact that even in an amateur video Diana was breathtaking. He blushed and looked hastily and indifferently at Lois.

“What?”

Lois jerked her head, huffing irritated.

“That was the real reason you didn’t care about Bruce… You forgot him goggling and drooling for her…” she clenched her teeth “everything!”

Clark’s super vision enabled him to read the comments under the viral video: the comments were enthusiastic about Diana’s body with expressions that… Well, Clark would never use such vulgar vocabulary though he agreed with the meaning.

Lois understanding what he was doing pushed his shoulder. Clark saw that her eyes were widened and very angry.

“Typical male!” she groaned. “The moment someone shakes an ass to you, you forget everything!”

Clark closed his eyes.

“You’re wrong, Lois! And…what? You’re making me a scene on Bruce’s behalf? Please! Princess saved Bruce before I arrived” Lois’ eyes widened more and Clark shook his head. “And when I heard that the trains were to collide and rushed there she followed me to help.”

Lois pursed her lips and nodded.

“So, I got it right: she really is trying to get to you – she has you on her target!” Clark rolled his eyes. “And she was again at the LEXLAB…”

Clark raised both his hands appeasing.

“Let’s get reasonable, Lois. She isn’t stalking me…It was a coincidence she was in the area when Bruce was attacked and of course he helped someone in need. And then she just wanted to help me.”

Lois wasn’t convinced and was huffing and puffing.

“Who attacked Bruce?” she asked frowning “And how is he?” she asked calmer.

Clark pressed his hair with both hands.

“He had some scratches but thankfully he wasn’t hit. Stark brought Leslie and I’m sure she’ll check everything…”
She nodded relieved.

“As for the attackers…Diana had blown them up before I reached the place – that must have passed the message across.”

Lois narrowed her eyes on that but didn’t push it more.

“That means that you are not wondering about who ordered the attack?” Clark looked her exasperated.

“Of course I am, Lois!” he protested and then scratched his nape uncomfortably. “I guess someone from my enemies.”

“Who?” Lois demanded and Clark squinted frustrated.

“How the Hell I am supposed to know that already?!” he shook his head.

“OK” Lois relented but in a rather reluctant way. “And what happened? I mean you said you had a spat.”

Clark sighed and narrowed his eyes at her.

“Are we a bit indiscreet?”

“Because I care about you, farm boy…”

Clark pressed his lips.

“His condition makes him irritable…”

“Understandable” Lois spat and shook her head. “He spent his entire life being terribly abused; then a gang of nut jobs kidnaps him” she jerked her eyebrows “tortures and almost kills him rendering him paralyzed. And now some cowards attacked him AGAIN!”

Clark arched his eyebrow: solidarity among humans…

“… and he’s already too stubborn” he remarked pointedly.

“And?” Lois looked at him demandingly.

“I talked a bit harsh to him…” he sighed and ruffled his hair uncomfortably.

Lois crossed her arms and yanked her head.

“You almost lost him three months ago…”

Lois of course didn’t know what happened at the factory and that Bruce was dead in his arms for one or two minutes. But she knew, as he had told her, that what the League did to him led Bruce to coma and left him paraplegic. He locked eyes with her and nodded.

“Make sure you remember that!” she raised her eyebrows in emphasis and moved to leave for her desk. “Finish that article fast and hit the road, buster!” she shook her index.

Clark just couldn’t understand why Lois was so pissed with Diana: thanks to her on time intervention hundreds of people were saved. And she saved Bruce, as well!
He threw the soaked tissues in the garbage basket and opened the program to write his article. Yet his hand was twitching to open YouTube to see the video with Diana…A crooked smile carved his face: he had another one from LEXLAB to accompany his article.

Princeton, as Tony had said, was ranked first among the US universities. His hand moved to close the screen with the article but instead his curiosity or something else won and he opened the link to the university’s official page.

There was a welcome message and links to several sections. Yet Bruce opened the one about the campus, silencing the self - scoffing inside him for indulging childish whims. He opened one photo after the other submerging to the peaceful scenery with smiling students strolling or heading to their courses. The amphitheaters, the buildings, the labs, the library, the parks...

He pressed his lips: those things were so strange for him yet his eyes were fixed there.

“The campus is more beautiful than the pictures…” a cheerful voice said and a friendly arm wrapped his shoulders making Bruce tense.

“You went at MIT” he took his eyes from the pictures and looked at Tony’s happy eyes that gazed the pictures.

“Yeah…well, I had some great parties there…” he cleared his throat and arched his eyebrows, sighing “and not only parties…”

Obviously, Tony believed that he was intrigued and fascinated from the photos and the prospect of being there – which was ridiculous. He shut abruptly - almost violently - the site and Tony frowning looked at Bruce puzzled.

“I was reliving my youth, little guy” he shook his head “and some veeery pleasant moments: you had to close it?”

But Bruce wasn’t affected by his friend’s playfulness; his stare was dead serious.

“I know what you’re doing.”

Tony narrowed his eyes and squatted to be in the same height; he brushed the narrow crystal board hosting Bruce’s laptop; the sleek board wasn’t there but had emerged obeying to Bruce’s wish.

“He thought everything, huh?” he looked at Bruce’s serious eyes and his friend gave a nod. “So what do you think I’m doing, little guy?”

Bruce stabbed him with his intense stare.

“Trying to make me so intrigued with the university that I enroll” Tony blinked “and for four or five years forget anything else.”

Tony cupped with both hands Bruce’s neck and pressed his lips.

“Is it so bad?” he said in a low, serious voice locking his eyes with his friend’s. “You deserve it, Bruce.”

Bruce shook his head and hastily took his eyes from Tony’s puppy eyes. He knew it! He gazed at the night sky, focusing on the slice of moon that felt like calling him. He drew a deep breath closing his eyes, the prompting returning to his ears without his will:

“I can give you back your own wings...”

His fingers dug into the armrests of his confinement and Tony placed his hands on Bruce’s shoulders frowning: since Superman brought Bruce back to them, his friend was happy to be among them, smiling, accepting their care but even then sometimes his eyes became lost like he was travelling to another world – a world that constantly tempted him to abandon his loved ones and spread his wings… And Tony hated those moments because they reminded him that Bruce almost died and maybe nonexistence lured him since that world gave him only pain.

“Bruce?”

Bruce focused his eyes on Tony.

“You want me to forget everything about Batman – you don’t believe” he shook his head “no, you don’t want me to resume my mission.”

Tony gulped and lolled his head on the side.

“Guilty as charged!” he replied but his tone was anything but loaded with guilt and saw that Bruce’s eyes narrowed.

Tony didn’t feel guilty; on the contrary he knew that this was the best solution so he wouldn’t leave any space to Bruce to manipulate him into feeling bad.

“I want my little guy to be recognized for the genius he is, astonishing those smart asses at the university; and I want you to follow your dream.”

Bruce felt like boiling inside, ready to explode: of course, weak, littl’ Bruce should stay behind!

He shook his head exasperated.

“Stop evading the subject, Tony! You don’t believe that I’ll manage to be again the Batman and you want to thwart me from trying!”

Tony ruffled his hair with both hands and yanked his head sighing. Then he stabbed Bruce’s wild eyes with his serious ones.

“That’s right! I don’t want you absorbed in Batman; I don’t want you return to that every night suicide mission spending yourself in fighting bad guys. And I believe that your current condition isn’t suited for this stuff anymore…” he watched Bruce’s eyes bulge and he knew that his buddy felt punched.

“So those five or six years in university would be the bait…” Bruce smirked. “Engaging me in studies for that amount of time to let behind my training so when I end my studies, it’d be impossible to establishing again the required skills. Or even better losing entirely my appetite for the ‘sport’ and do whatever else.”

Tony pinched the bridge of his nose.

“You’re the detective…But I don’t see why is so bad. It was your dream!”

“When I was eight years old, Tony!”

“And what’s your dream now?”
Bruce shook his head and didn’t say anything. Tony sighed guessing.

“I don’t need dreams, Tony… It’s not time for dreams.”

“But you’re still too young, Bruce, to say that…”

Bruce’s eyes were scolding and annoyed when stabbed Tony making him cut his phrase short.

And Tony knew that it wasn’t a matter of need or age: after all these years in Hell, his little guy had lost the ability to dream; it was another thing his torturers extinguished.

“If you accept to try and set yourself in an environment as normal as the university, I’m sure you’ll begin dreaming again. You need just to change environment.”

Bruce gritted his teeth and slapped his laptop closed willing the chair to move towards the railing and away from Tony who was crouched and the abrupt lost of support crashed him down. He watched his friend from the floor letting his arms slump on his knees.

Bruce grabbed the railing that sparkled in the night and let the cool breeze hit his face; his heart was throbbing, his arms trembling from the power of his grip. He was breathing heavily and his lungs burnt.

“I just don’t want to lose you again…” Tony said approaching caressing his butt. “I only want to…”

Bruce snapped his head towards him.

“Don’t even utter it! Protect me: that was what you were ready to say, right?” Tony pressed his lips. “Slyly taking me away from what I am!”

Tony clapped his mouth.

“Please, calm down, Bruce: it does no good to you.”

Bruce arched an eyebrow.

“I’m not pregnant” he sneered “or you consider finding a way to manage that too in order to keep me away from being Batman again?”

Tony licked his lips.

“That’s ridiculous!”

Bruce shook his head exasperated.

“Thank Goodness!” he turned his gaze to the starry sky. “So you won’t help me do those adjustments to my suit?”

Tony exhaled and looked at the sky as if asking for help. He stood right next to his friend and crouched again.

“Listen, Bruce – here” he cupped his friend’s head and turned it gently to look him in the eyes. “You know that these adjustments are not enough – don’t roll those eyes, buddy. Look at me” his stare was intense and deep in affection as their eyes met “there are millions of people around the world that are paraplegic” Bruce bit his lip “and they adjusted to their condition and live with it. So, as when the world learnt that you survived Falcone’s brutal abuse and won, you can once again be the role model for all these people who feel depressed and defeated by their disability. You can be once again the beacon of bravery and willpower!” his voice emanated the warmth his eyes had.

Bruce closed his eyes and rubbed his forehead.

“I won’t ever be the role model for all these people because these people are much braver than I’d ever be. I can’t be compared with all these people because they cope without having any of the luxurious things and conveniences I enjoy” Tony rubbed Bruce’s upper arms. “But even if the press’ spotlights make some people look up at me expecting, that will be Bruce Wayne, not Batman” Tony lolled his head closing his eyes. “They have different roles…”

Bruce regarded his friend’s closed in frustration eyes.

“So you won’t develop the bionic spine parts…” he said flatly, dryly.

Tony opened his eyes, cupping again his friend’s face.

“Oh, Bruce… Of course, I will; everything will be ready soon” Bruce’s eyes sparkled with such joy that Tony bit really hard his lips for the impact his next words would have. “Yet” Bruce’s eyes began already narrowing “implementing some bionic parts in your damaged spine and restoring the normal neuronal activity” Bruce frowned, his eyes hungrily and maybe angrily waiting the next and Tony sighed. “All these don’t mean that you’ll be able to do what you did before…” Bruce’s eyes widened and Tony tightened his grip on his friend’s face. “Littl’ guy, every paraplegic in the world has to make compromises and…”

But Bruce yanked his head evading Tony’s hands, the billionaire tilting his head on the side huffing.

“Every paraplegic in the world is encouraged to continue doing what loves and is praised for managing to do that despite the disability! Don’t tell me that your bionic parts won’t be as perfect as to enable a paraplegic dancer or an athlete resuming her/his career? Why you want so much to confine me?”

Tony stood up, clenching his waist and letting his head slump on his chest.

“There aren’t many paraplegics in the world whose ‘love’ includes jumping from rooftops, flying, exchanging punches with really dangerous guys and being hit… Dancing and sports are vast differently. The dangers in what you do are unaccountable…”

“The times I was hit are really few!”

Tony jerked his arms in the air: why his stubborn buddy didn’t want to understand; why was refusing to accept reality? And those blazing eyes made Tony really sad because he could see and feel inside this angry shine the formidable hero being caged inside roaring and despairing to be freed… And he wanted so much for that to be possible yet….

“Exactly…” he replied throatily. “Before you were able to avoid blows but the bionic parts although very effective and with almost perfect functionality, are not able to stop blows or bullets: and if you’re hit again…Even a mild blow could render you completely unable to resist your enemies! For fuck’s sake! Can you think for a second what will happen if you collapse in front of your enemies?!! My hairs stand on end only on the thought!”

“That won’t happen!” Bruce protested and Tony closed his eyes sighing. “I know how to protect myself!”

The blood was bursting Tony’s veins and the billionaire surged on the chair, his eyes flashing madly.
“You’re in that damn chair, aren’t you?!” he almost yelled. “And will the need to be more careful stop you from covering an innocent with your body to save him from a bullet or anything?” he lowered his voice. “You almost died and your lower spine was almost shattered because you shoved out of the way a boy” he blinked “can you say that you won’t repeat it?”

Bruce’s eyes were widened stabbing Tony’s: the answer was written there and Tony bit his lips and held tighter his friend’s upper arms. But Bruce’s heart was drumming in protest and only his will make his heartbeat calm.

“You’re convinced I’m not the warrior I used to be” he stated so calmly that Tony wanted to scream. The billionaire from Malibu stood abruptly and submerged his fingers in his locks clutching them.

“But you’re not!” he said almost desperate. “You’re a paraplegic!” as soon as he uttered it he regretted; Bruce was exactly as if he was just backstabbed.

Bruce swallowed and locked his eyes with Tony who felt exactly as if he was looking at Batman’s lenses.

“Every paraplegic in the world” he said pointing every word separately “has a name, has a personality: paraplegia doesn’t define them. And as every paraplegic in the world, I’m still Bruce, not a chair with a man on.”

Tony’s shoulders slumped and he lowered his head.

“I’m sorry…” he whispered and then kneeled and hugged his friend. “Of course, you’re still Bruce: my buddy, my little guy but I’m afraid” he looked in Bruce’s eyes that had softened.

Bruce rubbed Tony’s back.

“I know you love me but, Tony, my temporary disability won’t dictate the rest of my life and change me – I’m sure it’s temporary and with the help of you and Lucius it’d be over soon.”

“Yeah but still being a vigilante…”

Bruce licked his lips.

“For pity’s sake, Tony! You were half dead when you made Ironman and smashed your enemies!”

“It’s not the same, buddy…”

“Everyone has his/her own ways to compensate” he shook his head. “I assure you that I don’t want to die so I’ll return to the streets only when I’ll be ready.”

Tony held tightly his friend’s hands, her eyes resolute.

“And if that time never comes?” he whispered.

“Never isn’t in my vocabulary, I thought it wasn’t in yours either…” he pressed his lips. “But I suppose this is the case when you are concerned…”

Tony pinched the bridge of his nose: it was so difficult to defeat Bruce in an argument.

“Don’t try to push me into mutilating what I am: my body was damaged by my enemies” Bruce cocked his eyebrows “I don’t believe that my best buddy wants to amputate my personality, too…” Bruce’s eyes were something between puppy and pure power and resolution.
Tony closed his eyes: he was a sucker for his buddy.

“I’m just trying to show you that there are other options to consider: I didn’t want to press you” he inhaled: he’d prefer Bruce in a university rather than in Gotham’s rooftops. “What you want is what matters” Bruce smiled but Tony raised a warning index finger “but! You’ll take your time: even after the operation for the implementation of the bionic parts, your body will need time to regain the strength and the skills you had before. And Leslie will tell us when you’ll be ready.”

Bruce nodded and Tony felt like crying seeing him beaming because personally he doubted that his friend would be ever capable to resume his mission. But for now he preferred to feed his friend’s hopes – he just couldn’t demolish Bruce’s hopes: that man had survived so many calamities with incredible strength and now Tony with his words fought to push him to despair.

As much as Tony thought that hid his true feelings and beliefs they were so clear for Bruce… And it was like a demolishing punch in the guts: pain and anger together. Yet he was used to taking punches… After all, he wouldn’t wait for Leslie’s or Tony’s or Clark’s permission to don again the cowl and cape: this was his life and his creation so they had no saying in that. Besides if he let them they would keep him forever in that chair…to protect him.

“You need to notify Thor” he said without betraying anything from the feelings inside him. He wanted to change subject.

Tony frowned.

“Why?”

Bruce arched his eyebrows and twitched his lips.

“If your main concern wasn’t my…academic career and had asked about the assault, you’d know.”

Tony scratched his nape.

“Whoa! We definitely forgot about this, huh?”

Bruce shrugged one shoulder and snorted.

“What has Thor to do with this?”

“Before the creatures attacked I was separated from Selina” Tony’s eyes bulged.

“Then how…” he stopped himself just before saying ‘you protected yourself’.

Bruce swallowed that too, licking his lips.

“You know Loki?”

“Thor’s brother?”

Bruce nodded.

“I met him in the forest and he protected me from the attackers.”

Tony frowned.

“He isn’t a nice guy, Bruce… I mean, I don’t know much about him but he isn’t the protecting-the-innocent type; he probably wanted something…” he rubbed his chin thoughtful.
“No kidding…” Bruce crossed his arms. “Yet I think you should thank him for helping your helpless friend…”

Tony looked his friend exasperated; he could sense his buddy’s frustration.

“What he said?”

Bruce brushed the armrests without looking at Tony.

“He was just intrigued about the interest Thor and his kin show in my case: I hope your teammate didn’t mention anywhere my secret.”

Tony lolled his head on the side pressing his lips.

“I’ll let Thor know…” suddenly he frowned. “Wait a minute: you said that you were assaulted by… creatures?”

Bruce smirked: finally, Tony noticed. He nodded.

“What creatures?” now Tony’s worry became stronger, his mind racing: both he and Superman had bizarre enemies – it could be their enemies that found Bruce’s current location and decided to strike him? He felt a shiver running his spine.

Bruce saw his friend’s paleness and forgot the frustration Tony caused him. He was ready to describe the things that attacked him yet the StarkStell’s song stopped him.

“It’s Pepper” Tony said. “I left hastily and she must be worried…”

“I don’t believe it that all these hours you didn’t call her!” Bruce shook his head and Tony smiled guiltily. “Go speak to her…”

Tony nodded and began heading inside.

“I’ll call Thor too.”

Bruce opened his laptop and typed the address for Gotham Gazette’s site. He not even looked at the video in the right of the page that had remained permanently there for three months: Superman brings Bruce back home… Instead something else got his interest: Impressive dive in Gotham’s criminality rates.

He brushed the screen and read Gotham’s Police official report and his immense, long time activity in the field gave him the skill to realize immediately the truth of the statement. Surely, it was impressive and very un-Gotham: it was the criminality rate of a custom city, a hopeful city. Commissioner Gordon who presented the official report praised his officers’ self-sacrifice and devotion to their duty.

Bruce knew that the massacre at Gambol’s restaurant was a key factor because Gotham’s remaining small organized gangs were too scared to be active in the city and had already expanded their activities in other cities. Of course, that didn’t take away the credit Gordon’s new GCPD deserved just made Bruce’s sense of haste more pushing: he wasn’t sure how much would take for new players to come to the fore, taking advantage of the empty field – he should be doing field work spying… And Joker?

There was also something that raised Bruce’s hopes: Mayor Garcia commenting on the decrease of criminality rates spoke about Harvey Dent’s great contribution and hinted that after his suspension penalty ended, they could do a referendum asking the citizens about the former DA’s return. The author had made a poll in the end of the article asking the readers to vote Yes/No to Harvey’s return. “No” was leading but with a few votes and Bruce smirked because Gothamites could easily change their minds.

A subtle beep notified him for a new e-mail. It was from Lucius’ secret address.

“I received your sketches and I’m on to make my search. Also, I’m delighted to inform you that your high tech gift for Mr. Grayson was delivered to Ms. Turner with your instructions to presented as her gift.

Sincerely,

Lucius Fox.”

And then he opened the article he wanted to read:

Super arms not enough to save Bruce Wayne?

By Vicky Vale

It’s been three months since our beloved sad Prince (Bruce cocked an eyebrow) was rescued from the hideous League of Shadows having suffered once again extreme abuse. And who was the best candidate to save the 26 year old billionaire than Superman who was obviously overemotional to hold again the young man?

From that night and the publication of the revealing video people are excited about the secret love story that came to the light under such dramatic circumstances. So everyone – most of all the author of this article – is eagerly waiting for a chance to see again Gotham’s Prince and his Guardian Angel together.

Yet although since then we have seen many times Superman saving the day with his heroic way, Bruce Wayne remains elusive as ever. Of course, from that night the video was taken we heard from various sources that the young man is recovering to a special rehabilitation center. However as the days pass and we don’t get a glimpse of Bruce, things became odd…

The night Joker kidnapped the children from the Haven to demand that Bruce Wayne goes to him witnesses say that the young billionaire was transferred from the clinic to Wayne Manor due to the danger. Yet after Joker was arrested Tony Stark, 32, informed the Gotham Police Department that he took his friend to a special rehabilitation center because his condition had deteriorated; also, Dr. Thomas Elliot, 30, a specialist in complex injuries, was called to operate the Wayne heir only to be oddly called off to Dr. Elliot’s puzzlement.

“The explanation I was given was very vague and I never learnt anything about my childhood friend’s condition” the doctor, chair of the Neuroscience Faculty in Gotham’s University told the Gazette. “I feel a very awkward atmosphere of extreme secrecy surrounding Bruce – I just hope all this reluctance to share information does not hide anything…bad for my friend.”

Bruce snorted on the “friend”.

Indeed, why denying the professional genius of an acclaimed doctor as Dr. Elliot? Could this ‘odd’ denial to share information hide something ominous for our Prince? Could the secret be the opposite of what happened 18 years ago? Maybe this time instead of declaring the Prince dead, they ‘keep’ him alive in order to avoid panicking the shareholders and bringing a terrible collapse to the newly stabilized Wayne Enterprises.
We recently talked to Lucius Fox, 60, who is the head scientist in Wayne Enterprises, an important member of the board and one of the major allies of Bruce Wayne in his battle to establish himself to the head of his father’s company. The likeable Mr. Fox was reassuring.

“Mr. Wayne is very much alive; he is just having his time recuperating from his latest adversity and he’ll be with us as soon as his doctors approve it.”

However, Mr. Fox’s charming smile can’t be sufficient to make the clouds of doubt disperse: where is Bruce Wayne? And in what condition? Is he alive or the company tries to hide the truth to maintain its shares’ racing course?

The sure thing is that until Gotham sees again her gorgeous Prince questions and uncertainty will cloud Wayne Enterprises and the very city.

UPDATE: Is Superman already trying to heal his grief? A new SuperRomance in the making?

Dick was absorbed reading something in his fancy new Tablet and Jayson rolled his eyes exasperated and took a big sip of his Irish coffee. They sat on a secluded booth in a small cafeteria.

“Yes!” Dick clenched his fingers and punched the air causing Jayson’s bored eyes fix on him.

The younger boy pouted puzzled on the way his friend’s eyes glimmered with enthusiasm.

“Wha’? Gotham Knights lost last night…”

Dick showed the screen to him and his face was beaming.

“They say that Wayne might be dead!”

“Wow…” Jayson answered completely untouched and shook his straw.

Dick disappointed by his friend’s lukewarm reaction put down gingerly his new toy and grabbed his hand.

“That asshole might have finally gotten what he deserves! Don’t you get it?!’’ his eyes were fervent and Jayson pretended for his sake that was interested. “My family finally gets justice; Brian will be finally rested…” his voice dropped on his brother’s name and remembrance.

Jason patted his upper arm.

“I know how ya feel, chum…”

Dick pressed his lips and looked at the table because he didn’t want Jason to see his eyes tearful.

“If Wayne died then there’s one left…” he whispered. “Mom, Brian…I went to their graves yesterday with granny – you knew that Wayne had the nerve to come to their funeral?!” his eyes jerked to his friend’s and the younger boy shook his head. “The bastard!”

“Maybe he cares, mate…” he shrugged.

“No way! He just wanted to…” he huffed. “Damn! To play the good guy to us! They died a horrible death because of him!”

Jason drank again from his coffee.
“Joker kill’ ‘em, buddy…”

Dick yanked his head and groaned: why Jason didn’t want to understand him?

“He wouldn’t, if Wayne had stayed dead!” he crossed his arms and scorned. “Of course, you defend him ‘cause your mom works at the Haven!”

Jason frowned and his eyes narrowed menacingly.

“Cut it already, ya dork! I told ya: I hate the asshole but I don’t like ya wasted in that shit! An’ I’m not the one with that fancy, brand new toy!” he sneered eyeing the Tablet.

Dick touched it.

“My granny gave it to me yesterday…”

Jason smirked.

“Ya know that this toy isn’t on the market?”

Dick cocked an eyebrow.

“You’re an expert on high tech?”

Jason leaned closer to no be overheard.

“Only on snatchin’ it…An’ I tell ya, mate, that thing isn’t anywhere in Gotham’s stores…” a crooked smile carved his child face. “Wher’ ya granny finds the bucks to get all these?”

Dick looked at the shiny, white gadget: indeed, now that Jay mentioned it, Dick hadn’t seen it anywhere. He shrugged.

“I guess my dad left some fortune: he was very popular, you know…mom told me…” his voice cracked and Jason pressed his lips. “He made much advertising for many companies – everyone wanted him!”

Jason felt uncomfortable from his buddy’s emotion; he had never met his dad too yet he was sure that he just dumped his mom after screwed her and never gave a shit about his kid. While Dick’s dad was decent and died before getting to know his kid.

Dick though deep in his sorrow realized the younger boy’s uneasiness and shook himself. He cleared his throat and pointed his finger to the glass of Irish coffee.

“Jay, alcohol is forbidden to minors.”

“Not when they wear a helmet and order in a husky voice…” he winked “and I’m sturdy for my age: tall an’ such…”

“Bullshit!” Dick huffed. “They just don’t give a damn since they get the bucks…” he took a sip from his hot chocolate slightly envious for Jay’s forbidden coffee.

Jason sniggered and pompously took a big sip from his glass.

“An’ how com’ an’ yar granny permit ya stayin’ out after school?”

Dick rimmed his cup.
“I told her that I’ll go for a chocolate with my classmates.”

Jason clapped and hopped in his seat causing curious stares from the other booths.

“Mistah nice guy lyin’ to his granny!” he said in a singsong manner.

Dick ruffled his hair with both hands blushing, the feeling of guilt getting to him.

“I didn’t lie!” he protested. “I did go for a chocolate” Jason widened his eyes sneering “and though you’re not a classmate, you’re…” he searched for something “a peer.”

Jason chuckled.

“An’ isn’t like ya met that Zucco guy…” Dick nodded with a perplexed look upon remembering his granny’s angry and almost desperate order to not approach that man who so much intrigued him.

“Mmm…Why yar sweet granny becomes so battleax” Dick cast him a really nasty glance “eh…strict when it comes to him?”

“Search me…” the older boy shrugged. “Speaking of granny we must get going” he put his hand in his pocket bringing out some money and Jason did the same.

“Those are on me, boys!” a cheerful male voice invaded their space and they both saw Tony Zucco approaching their booth smiling cordially.

Jason sniffed and twisted his lips not caring to hide his disliking. Yet Dick seemed interested.

“Thank you,… eh… – how am I to call you?”

The man shrugged a shoulder.

“Tony sounds perfect” he said and sat by Dick.

“We’re leavin’, dude!” Jason stood, looking with widened eyes to his friend who didn’t share his hastiness.

“That goes for you, too, Dick?” Zucco asked the older boy smiling slyly.

Dick shrugged.

“I guess I could stay a bit more…”

Jason grunted and slumped in his seat.

“How are you doing, champ?” the adult looked affectionate at Dick.

“Fine, I guess…” he said obviously without believing it.

Zucco cocked his eyebrows.

“Down at the gym everyone is impressed from your talent!” he beamed and Jason watched him angrily.

Dick’s eyes flashed.

“Really? How’d you know?”

Zucco tilted his head on the side.
“I have some old buddies there and I just couldn’t stop myself from asking about my nephew – I hope you don’t mind. And I watched you myself some times.”

Jason now crossed his arms and pouted fuming – he didn’t like that man and fell for Ms. Turner. But Dick’s eyes widened.

“And?” the boy asked interested.

Zucco shook his head.

“You’re a great talent, kid! Your late dad would be very proud of you!”

Jason rolled his eyes seeing how touched his friend was from the guy’s words.

But Zucco’s attention was drawn to the Tablet-like gadget.

“Yours?” he inquired Dick and when the boy nodded: “I haven’t seen anything like this in market or in magazines – it must be pricy…”

“My granny’s gift” Dick answered and the man grinned with a glint in the eyes that Jason didn’t like – littl’ Jason could definitely tell when someone was interested in money or expensive toys.

“How’s dear Ms. Turner?” he asked Dick but his hand was already stretched towards the expensive gadget. “May I?”

“Of course” Dick replied. “Granny is fine.”

Zucco was staring at the screen where the Gazette article was still on, rubbing his chin thoughtful.

“Glad to hear: but I know she doesn’t want me near you so I can’t send my greetings… You read about Wayne, huh?” he narrowed his eyes. “It’d be justice served if it’s true – that nutcase killed your family for his sake.”

Dick pressed his lips and nodded: finally, someone who saw the truth and shared his feelings. Someone who understood him.

“Yeah…If Wayne had stayed dead, my family would be alive and this world wouldn’t be such a shitty place…”

Zucco rubbed the boy’s back soothingly, gulping.

“I know, son; it’s so hard…Losing your loved ones because of a filthy brat who doesn’t give a shit. I hope he really is dead so that your family finally finds rest.”

Dick’s eyes were tearful remembering the day they dropped his baby brother’s body to the grave and covered it with dirt. He remembered how they were playing cops and thieves only a couple of hours before Brian was tortured and killed; his mommy bringing them milk and cookies.

“Mom says that Vale is a stupid cow that croaks bullshit!” Jason spat wanting to shake his friend from that man’s influence.

Zucco smiled to him patronizingly and turned to Dick.

“I went to their graves…” he said in a hoarse voice. “And John’s…” he shook his head biting his lips. “I can’t believe so many years have passed…poor guy! He didn’t have the chance to meet his son: he was so excited for your arrival…”
Dick devoured every word the man was saying: his mother spoke hours and hours about his father and his granny too, but it was never enough. He was thirsty for every tiny new detail that could make him feel like having known his father.

“You were there when he died?” he inquired in a low voice and Jason was pissed: Dick was slipping to this man’s grip.

Zucco lowered his head and sighed.

“Yeah…It was nightmarish, awful…” he sighed again.

Dick’s eyes bulged.

“Tell me!”

Jason had had enough and stood.

“Yar granny will be sick of worry – let’s go!”

And as if confirming, the tablet-like gadget began ringing with Dick’s granny’s number flashing.

“Shit!” Dick exclaimed and blushed.

Jason noticed Zucco almost cursing and grabbed Dick’s elbow.

“If ya not move yar ass, I’ll tell her where are we to come an’ snatch ya. Dork!”

Dick answered the call mumbling that he was on his way back and followed Jason.

“Bye, Tony” he hastily addressed the man. “And thank you…”

Zucco smiled.

“My pleasure, kid. If you want, after the gym, we can talk about your father and some movements he loved and that I believe you can master!”

Dick smiled nodding and Jason dragged him.

“Not even think ‘bout it, ya dumbass!” the younger boy gritted his teeth to Dick.

But Zucco staring at their retreating forms smiled confidently.

Selina pulled off of her the special garment for beekeeping, placed it on the wooden working bench and breathed easier staying with his form fitting short sleeved T-shirt and jeans. She gazed around the wild landscape made of weeds and late autumn flowers where a raw of small, square beehives were lined up – butterflies were still flying around as various insects. Selina sucked the smell of grass and salt from the sea that brushed the shore at the roots of the hill; she closed her eyes and yanked her head letting the bright sun caress her skin that had tanned after her staying in the island.

She turned smiling hearing Argiris approaching.

The young man approximately at her age – but who cares? – was caring a small vial and a tub. Selina smiled.
“What are these?”

Argiris gave her the tub.

“From my mom – cream mpougatsa: she knows your friend likes it very much and she sends him some. Just out of the oven.”

Selina took it and smiled.

“Yeah! She always treats us some when we drink coffee at the square’ cafe. Her bakery sends such tantalizing smells…and Alfred loves her bread! Please, give her our thanks – Bruce will be very happy!” she chuckled. “He can’t resist!”

The raven haired man showed her the vial.

“Royal Jelly: it’s really precious and enhances the organism” he licked his rich lips “it’s for your friend. It will benefit him – galvanizes the immune system and generally strengthens a recovering body.”

Selina hesitated to take it.

“I don’t know, Argiris… He already takes many drugs and I don’t know if he should mix them with this…”

“It’s an entirely natural product but of course you can ask his doctor first for allergies.”

Selina nodded and took the vial, placing it on the tub and then at the working bench. She cocked an eyebrow and smiled slyly eyeing the tall young man with the beautiful black eyes coming closer to her.

“So, Selina” Selina loved the accented way he uttered her name. “That man, Bruce, is…your fiancé?”

On that Selina choked and laughed; she shook her head in refusal.

“Then mother was right that you’re brother and sister” he shook his hands. “I mean: same age, same beauty and such bonding: you love so much each other – it’s obvious…”

Selina clenched her waist and tilted her head on the side smirking.

“You’re too observant, handsome…”

Argiris blushed.

“When I’m interested in someone…”

Selina cocked an eyebrow.

“In me or Bruce?” she demanded flatly because she was also very interested…in Argiris.

The man widened his eyes and blushed even more.

“You!”

Selina rolled her eyes.
“Thank Goodness for that!” she remarked slyly. “No, we’re not siblings but it’s as good as that…”

Argiris placed his hands on her shoulders and came even closer, his eyes locked with hers.

“I’m so happy to hear that…” he breathed and Selina relished the hot air that brushed her naked neck. “Because I really like you, Selina…”

“I like you too, Argiris, but you know that my time on the island is limited…I’ll return to the States at some point.”

The young man brushed his lips on Selina’s and she closed her eyes sucking the different smells from the wild plants of the field flavored from Argiris’ raw, so male scent.

“So let’s make good use of that time…”

Selina shook her head and rolled her eyes.

“It was about time, handsome!” she wrapped her arms around his neck as he cuddled her.

Their lips locked in a passionate, hungry kiss and cuddled together fell on the grass rolling between the wild plants.

Selina stood before the window in her room, Hero’s purr loud as he rubbed at her leg. She sighed and squatted taking the kitten in her lap.

“Let’s find our Bruce!”

Bruce brushed the link that led to a video on YouTube. As it played he watched Superman stopping a train taking position to halt another train that was heading to crush with the first. And then an impressive woman landed swiftly on the rail and with pompous ease stopped the coming train.

His eyes were still but his heart jolted when Superman walked slowly towards the Amazon who saluted him with a gesture of respect and they shook hands. The video ended abruptly with Superman’s departure but Bruce saw at the related videos’ section a new video.

Some guys attempted to rob LEXLAB in Metropolis – Bruce pressed his lips many questions and thoughts already forming as his mind assessed the information yet he continued watching. The burglars held hostages and Superman hesitated to attack; the thugs were ready to flee with the hostages when a half-naked hurricane engulfed them giving Superman the chance to attack ending fighting side by side with the Amazon…

For the second time in a day, the two heroes shook hands and locked eyes…

“You’re thinking what I’m thinking?” Bruce inquired indifferently knowing that Selina had come in the meantime and watched silently the video.

The young woman sent a kiss to Hero who was following her.

“Mmmm…That she looks more like a cheerleader than a crime fighter or that she must have some super power holding that kitsch corset on her boobs while fighting?”

Bruce looked at her and smiled.

“Do you think that ancient Greeks knew about silicone boobs? Because those are not real!” Selina added in a matter of fact way.

Bruce chuckled.

“Everything is possible. Yet I wasn’t thinking that.”

Selina rolled her eyes.

“No kiddin’!” she slipped in Bruce’s hand two cinnamon biscuits and winked. “Alfred just served them…And Tony is already savoring them!”

He took a bite.

“The whole house smells deliciously…”

Selina rubbed her shoulders.

“It’s cold here, do you want a cardigan?”

“No, thank you” he eyed his robe. “Alfred wouldn’t have let me out unprotected.”

“Of course…” she looked at the screen with the paused image of Superman and Princess Diana. “Well, what were you thinking?”

Bruce bit a biscuit and pointed at the screen.

“Superman has found a new ally and comrade – and he is impressed” his voice was totally emotionless as if commenting in a council. “And who can blame him? She is powerful, indestructible, a formidable warrior and…gorgeous…” his sparkling eyes were fixed on the two heroes completely still.

Selina snorted: Bruce was a master in hiding his feelings but not from her.

“She’s mediocre” Bruce looked her lopsided, arching an eyebrow and Selina shrugged. “What? I’m objective…and she is so clearly fancying Superman that I want to throw up…”

“Why not? Superman is beautiful…”

That scientific tone in Bruce’s tone was getting on her nerves. She scoffed.

“Give me a break, sweetie! Because he put a spell on you taking advantage of your innocence” Bruce choked on that and laughed making Selina frown and pout “and love-blinded you into not seeing around that doesn’t mean that he is THAT beautiful!”

Bruce lolled his head on the side looking at her disbelieving.

“I can count many humans who are more beautiful than him: Argiris for instance” she said proudly crossing her arms.

Her friend arched his eyebrows and smiled benevolently.

“How who’s love-blinded, dear?”

She punched him gently on the shoulder.

“As for superboys, for me, Captain America is DA hunk!”
Bruce’s eyes widened and he looked at her mock-shocked but definitely amused.

“I don’t believe it that you’re Captain America’s fangirl!” he teased.

She clenched her waist and pouted deep in thought.

“Well…I like burly boys yet Hulk is oversize for me and green isn’t really my color…”

“Poor Tony will be heartbroken hearing that you prefer someone else from his team.”

“The competition is merciless, babe!” she followed Bruce’s eyes back on the screen and crouched leaning at his ear. “I know how you’re feeling…you may be hiding from the others but I know that your previous fight with Superman still stings you” Bruce stilled his eyes on hers and she sighed. “His words burn inside and those awful videos and that bitch makes it more painful…”

“She isn’t a bitch, Sel” he said calmly.

But she smirked.

“I know a bitch when I see her… Anyway, the important for me is you. That dork spoke like an ass but maybe he understood his fault and regretted what he said and with the first chance he’ll apologize…”

Bruce gazed at the sky thoughtful.

“I don’t know, Sel…I don’t want him to apologize or something…He believes what he said…and to tell you the truth, I understand his fascination with the Princess…”

Selina grunted and grabbed his shoulders. Bruce stared at her nonchalant.

“Clark is attracted to strong, brave, proud individuals.”

“He fell in love with Falcone’s helpless toy – he didn’t know you were Batman then” Selina retorted.

“He might have felt sorry for that being and wanted to save him but it was Batman he kissed first. Without knowing that I was Batman.”

“Instinct…”

Bruce shook his head.

“Batman was the one he wanted…He felt pity for poor, miserable Bruce and wanted to protect and save him – as a good-hearted hero would do – but Batman’s strength and defiance, the feeling of danger and adventure that he carried was that fascinated Clark: knowing that Bruce was Batman kept his interest alive. But now he sees only a battered, weak being in need of care and protection and though his nature is protective and kind” he shook his head “that doesn’t mean that he’s still attracted to someone who is no longer the Batman he fell for: he said it plain and clear – for him, I’m weak.”

Selina gritted her teeth.

“You’re not weak! You’re always Batman because strength and bravery is in your core. And if he can’t see that then he is super-idiot!”

Bruce grinned to her.
“You heard him. Compare the way he was staring at me and how he goggles at her.”

Selina definitely didn’t like Superman’s stare and she couldn’t persuade a detective like Bruce that wasn’t true. She caressed her friend’s shoulders and took Hero who was at their feet and let him on Bruce’s lap.

“It’s only a crappy video, Bruce…”

Bruce nodded and caressed Hero’s head with his fingertips.

“From the Daily Planet by Clark Kent – he wants to inform the world about the Princess: he is excited.”

Selina cupped his face and brought their eyes to lock.

“You know he loves you: he looked after you all this time; remember all the days you spent together here – how happy you made him. He is still proud of you, Bruce; as all of us!”

Bruce nodded smiling; the knot in his guts wasn’t dissolved but he didn’t want to cause distress to Selina neither to act like a jealous kid. Besides there wasn’t a point in all this…

“I know” he caressed Selina’s cheek.

Leslie popped her head from the door.

“Kids, dinner is ready. Come!”

Bruce turned nodding and Leslie left.

“Well?” Selina inquired standing.

“Go! I’ll shut my laptop.”

Selina looked at him suspiciously but chose to not insist.

“C’me, Hero” she took the kitten from Bruce’s lap. “Don’t be late, handsome” she shook her index finger. “You know Stark: he can’t hold himself from eating everything!”

Bruce grinned and waited to be alone before playing again the video from LEXLAB, his lips so tightly pressed that they lost their color.

He could sketch Batman’s every move during the fight: how he’d block the thugs’ every attack. His mind burnt from desire to set his body in motion but his members didn’t obey – they shouldn’t obey his bossy and cruel mind’s orders neither succumb to his mind’s destructive power; that was what everyone said, that was what everyone wanted from him. Because he was weak, just a wreckage lucky to have people loving it.

He inhaled deeply and his burning eyes gazed the sky. The thought of the Immortality Water came torturous in his mind. Many times he was tempted to drink it again to force his injuries heal faster… He could feel for his old mentor, Ra’s, who drank the powerful elixir to heal his injuries and maintain his power… He had experienced the strength of the pure form of the elixir when he cut his carotid, trying to die: the Water stopped the bleeding and revived him. And Superman…Clark had given him the same elixir to keep him alive after the building collapsed on him.

He rubbed his temple feeling hammers. He was lucky to survive that, he reminded himself; lucky to be still breathing and having his loved ones around happy to have him with them; lucky for having a chance to try and regain his life… No, everyone wanted to stop him from even trying.

He bit his lips: if he drank again the Water and his body healed completely they would have to accept it: they wouldn’t have any argument to retort. His heart beat excited: the Water was his after all – he deciphered the ingredients and the procedure. They couldn’t deny him taking it…

His eyes estimated the railing and then the slope underneath; the whim to open again the wings of his armor and fly was more than dictating, urging, demanding – it was tormenting, stabbing his insides. And the chair felt not just confining but choking him…

It was just some gulps of the miraculous liquid and then everything would be like it used to be…

Suddenly, his eyes stopped at something he had months to see: two emeralds shining in the dark. Bruce’s heart missed some beats and he held his breath as his sight adjusted to the dark discerning the body of a bat: his bat, that wasn’t afraid of the owls that filled the night cool air with their sounds. The emerald eyes locked with his and reached his heart saying in silence so many things – things that stung and soothed him.

He pressed his lips: no, he couldn’t and wouldn’t take the Water… That was the sloppy way Ra’s Al Ghul followed to his fall: he used the Water to make himself a God, a demon, to fool and violate his nature into kneeling his enemies, gaining immense power and taking advantage of others for his pleasure.

All the times Ra’s used him, all the times he tortured him flooded his mind. The man was corrupt to the core and maybe the constant use of the Water contributed to that: like everything, the Water’s effectiveness was a matter of wise use – when used to heal people was a blessing but using it to make yourself a God and invincible into achieving your ambitions led to your own fall and destruction.

And Goddess Nemesis punished Ra’s for his arrogance and his corruption and blasphemy: the emerald eyes flashed as if confirming his thoughts. The Knife of Justice used Bruce’s hand to serve justice to the man who killed so many innocents and took advantage of a priceless gift to indulge his ego…

Drinking the elixir to just relief himself from the turmoil and soothe his desires would send him to follow the same road to total corruption as Ra’s Al Ghul. And Bruce wouldn’t do that: his eyes gave that promise to the emeralds watching him. Even if that meant months of waiting and painful training and disappointment and frustration from being regarded as weak and using techniques that would exhaust his body and mind: this was the human way, his way. Because he was a human and frankly he wouldn’t change that with anything.

“Master Bruce?” Alfred’s soft voice addressed him from the balcony door.

Bruce looked a last time at the odd eyes and turned to Alfred.

“I’m coming.”

It was already dusk when Clark left Metropolis and that meant that in Greece it was past midnight. Yet he couldn’t leave the office sooner: after he published his article, Perry called the entire team to a meeting and Clark felt that any attempt in finding an excuse to flee would be too much. After all, the last months he exploited too much Perry’s gratification for the hit-exclusives he brought to the Planet.
However Lois was glaring at him all the time – that is when she didn’t ignore him completely – as if he had done a crime!

He shook his head even now travelling midair. He wasn’t totally convinced on the usefulness of this transatlantic swift trip: Bruce probably was already asleep and even in the morning the stubborn being would be still pissed at him. So Clark was sure that his mood was going to be in shreds not only by Bruce’s sullenness but also… He sighed. He didn’t want even to let the thought form but the pang in his guts every time he thought or saw him it was eloquent enough.

Every time he was flying to meet him, Clark felt excited, happy to see him but always a hidden pain was there. That night however there wasn’t any excitement only that hidden pain magnified and transformed into irritation and exhaustion. He was so elated after so many days, so many hours of agony and despair he felt again hopeful, carefree, relieved from every burden…

Stark’s white villa sparkled like an earthly star imprisoned in the mountain. A star… He sighed remembering his Star: his trapped Star… He inhaled deeply, the cool air that brought the revitalizing scent of the sea refreshing him. If at least Bruce wasn’t so pigheaded…

And then he saw it and his calm was again gone replaced not from gloom as before but anger. That man was going to drive him crazy!

He dove swiftly at the forest near the villa and landed to the spot where he had seen it. That obstinate human didn’t hear anything from what he said; he was taught nothing from their quarrel and now wandered to the forest after the rest fell to sleep. Clark pressed his lips and clenched his waist: Bruce was mocking him – showing off his stupid defiance, his disrespect for Superman.

And now not only Bruce forced his body to stand and walk but also hid from him, jeering him. He gritted his teeth.

“Bruce, this is stupid!” he used his super vision to scan the forest and found him again.

But this time Bruce’s body didn’t arouse him but made him mad; he clenched his jaw and surged there. Obviously, the overconfident idiot thought that Superman wouldn’t find him because he didn’t try to hide again.

Superman grabbed his upper arms and pinned him on a tree letting the human’s legs dangle. He didn’t care if he hurt Bruce: maybe if he felt pain would get a grip. His eyes were almost red and his breathe a rasp, as their faces came too close. Clark could hear his heart drumming in his skull.

But Bruce was totally unfazed; his beautiful face brushed by a faint smirk, his eyes glimmered mockingly and regarded sarcastic Clark’s distorted from anger face.

“Why you did that, you stupid man?!” Superman growled and shook almost brutally the human body. “You want to drive me mad?! You want to spit in my face your contempt?!”

However the mesmerizing eyes became more gleeful, the eyebrows forming a full sarcastic arch and those rosy lips opened slightly to let out a horrible snigger – so much unlike Bruce.

Clark’s self-restrain shattered on that and his mouth opened and rushed to punish those jeering lips; his hands freeing Bruce’s shoulders to cup with both hands his face and shake it in his pace, sucking and devouring with his lips that bruised the soft human flesh before his tongue licked them angrily.

He kept his eyes closed lost in the tornado of his anger, his frustration, his passion for these unmarred lips that just let him do whatever he wanted…
Wait! Bruce’s lip had a cut from the adventure at the forest and the smell was nothing like Bruce’s. He frowned and opened his eyes.

Whatever he was pinning on the tree evaporated; Clark’s eyes widened and looked frantically around. Maybe he was already crazy?

And then he heard a man cackling from the sky above. There was anything there but Clark used his super vision and saw enraged a man floating with folded legs. He had raven, greasy hair and a nose pointy as his ears; his attire was green with a long leather vest. He looked at Superman’s glare knowing that the Man of Steel was seeing him but this didn’t deter him at all, on the contrary his cackling snigger became louder.

Superman launched his laser vision against him but it slithered on an invisible barrier; Clark clenched his teeth and stretched his fist surging at the stranger that mocked him that way. Yet as soon as he reached the man and unleashed his fist to smash him, the raven haired man snorted, pointed his middle finger at him and just vanished leaving his hair-raising cackle behind.

Clark inhaled deeply and shook his head: what was this man? And he knew about Bruce… Concern bit him hard: if he had attacked Bruce before playing with him? He couldn’t hear Bruce’s heart or respiration and he didn’t know if the man did something to block the sound in order to fool Superman to believe that Bruce was in the forest and not in the house or it was the brutal reality.

He changed his body’s direction and rushed to the villa.
“Oooooh! You kept me a seat, Johnny boy! I’m touched!” Joker made a dramatic gesture patting his heart and jumped into the seat opposite Crane.

Crane rolled his eyes and stabbed with his fork the chicken fillet that was his dinner.

“And I hoped that I would enjoy my meal…” he snorted with a voice quite fierce; so much different than the lean doctor’s.

Joker placed his arms on the table and leaned towards Crane.

“Buuuuuut you can’t enjoy a meal without good company!” he licked his lips missing the taste of the brazen lipstick he used.

Crane raised his glistening eyes and stabbed Joker who giggled amused from his obvious distaste.

“Exactly!” Jonathan spat.

But Joker unfazed grabbed his chicken fillet and took a big bite.

“Mmmm…Soooomone thinks that loonies are humans tooo… That meat is as soooft as Brucie’s boody!” he let his eyes take a reminiscent expression and licked his lips. “Speaking of which” he hissed suddenly too serious. “There’s soooome catching up you owe me, doc!”

Of course…Jonathan thought and left his fork on his plate. As a matter of fact he had no problem of relaying his knowledge to this clown – on the contrary, his knowledge would make that fool consider him useful and Jonathan would gladly exploit it.

“What do you want to learn?” he locked eyes with Joker and the jester flapped his eyelashes cutely.

“Pleaaaaaase…Don’t look me like this: I’m getting all wet…” he made his voice girlish and Crane looked frustrated around at the cafeteria. “Now…” Joker’s voice though low became cold as his stare “take back your fork, eat normally aaaaand start talking; I’ll intervene whenever I want some-thing.’’

Crane rolled his eyes and swallowed his wrath: he hated being ordered around but he couldn’t do anything else than obey. For the moment.

“Those strange people…”

“The Leaaague of Shaaadawws” Joker interrupted never letting Crane’s eyes from his.

“Yeah” Crane nodded. “Can you stop looking me in the eyes? It’s really annoying: if this is your version of truth test, there’s no need – I have no reason to lie” he sneered.

Joker shook his head spasmodically.

“Hehehe…There’s at least ooone thing that you would want toooo hide…” he licked again his lips.

“If you mean violating your…wife I’m not interested…”

“Gooooooood for youuuu, docky! Con - tinue…” but as soon as he opened his mouth to resume his narration Joker sprawled in his seat. “You know that schizophrenics caaaaan’t stand eye contact?” he smirked with the hint he let. “Taaaalk it with your shrinky” he shrugged a shoulder.
Crane snorted and closed his eyes: how much more he’d have to tolerate those fools?

“Those jerks organized an entire breach to the Asylum to take me out.”

Joker jerked towards him with his mouth agape.

“W-O-W, doc! I’m imp-pressed!”

Crane shook his head and smirked.

“You should because I’m an expert in human behavior, psychology and psychopharmacology…”

Joker giggled aloud and some inmates looked at their table.

“Obviously, it’s theeee brain youuuuu missed on the rooooad…”

“They wanted my skills for your…wife” he scoffed unfazed and his eyes shone gleefully at Joker’s interest. “They gave me everything I asked in order to achieve their purposes…”

Joker’s eyes became two glistening slits.

“Purposes?”

Crane lolled his head to the side and smiled.

“Make the brat her obedient slave; enslaving his mind to her.”

Joker nodded, every trace of the maniac goofy gone. He took a roast potato and chewed it.

“Morticia.”

Crane jerked his head backwards and leaned towards Joker taking a forkful of salad.

“Talia Al Ghul, the daughter of Ra’s Al Ghul: the former leader of the League and partner of Falcone’s” he cocked his eyebrows suggestively.

Joker took his fillet and dag his teeth ripping a big chunk.

“Youuuuu were working for Falcone…” he said between chewing.

Crane nodded and took a sip from his juice.

“Yeah…He had asked a pill to cause extreme arousal” he smirked and looked at his tablemate suggestively. “He used it for his toy…I’m sure he had a spectacular time as the lady of the Shadows did using a similar substance on dear Brucey…” he sniggered but his grin froze when his length was squeezed by fingers stronger than pincers.

Joker smiled innocently.

“A bone stuck in your throat, dear?” he asked sweetly to be heard by everyone.

Crane coughed.

“I’m fine…” he said throatily, drops of sweat flooding his face.

Joker smiled, patted him friendly in the shoulder and squeezed more; Jonathan gasping.
“The bitch raped him?” Joker asked smiling but his voice was metallic.

Crane nodded clenching his teeth to not scream.

“Not only she…” he huffed. “That oaf she dragged with her too…”

Joker lolled his head to the side.

“I dooooon’t like killing animals buuuuut I might make an exception… Why the bitch wanted you?”

“She…she said that Wayne belonged to her father but he escaped…she wanted him back…but this time wanted to control totally his mind to not escape again” Joker squeezed more and Jonathan whined. “She…she thought very highly of his mental capacities.”

Joker arched an eyebrow, his mind racing. That suited perfectly his suspicions: that stupid League trained assassins – as if killing needs any training… he rolled his eyes – and its leader believed that Brucey belonged to him. His daughter believed that the ‘poor thing’ was her heritage and was desperate not only to get him back but also reassuring his blind obedience. He pouted. Maybe Brucey’s use wasn’t only the obvious? Maybe the ‘poor thing’ was taken under the Ra’s – something – wing for more things than a fuck?

“Aaaand youuuuu?” he clenched Crane’s testicles more chewing indifferently a potato.

Crane was holding the table to fight the pain and not cry but Joker shook his head disapprovingly.

“Eat…” he hissed smiling and gave him his fork with a potato. “And speak…”

Crane mouthed the potato and began chewing.

“He…he definitely had…more endurance than expected” Joker nodded with a knowing shine in his eyes. “And…and…he resissted to my fear gas…”

Joker huffed and sighed.

“Myyyyy Brucie!” he said with pride, his mind racing crossing Crane’s information with his own. “Soooooo the sweet angel wasn’t only Falcone’s slave but this Al Ghul’s too…Ugh! I’ll find that guy and tell him sooooome things…”

“I don’t think you’ll find him…I mean, she told me that her father died and wanted Wayne because he was her heritage…”

Joker snorted.

“Soooooo Morticia was nuts even before contaminated by youuuu…HuHu!” Crane’s eyes from scared became angry. “What youuu did to my boyyyyy?”

Crane swallowed hard hesitant to answer but Joker twisted cruelly making his heart beat faster.

“I began to distort his memories into confusing him about what was true or false so that gradually he’d stop considering Talia as his enemy and trust her to guide him through his fogged past and present.”

Joker frowned: that was very interesting…and useful. Morticia had failed but that didn’t mean that he would too… His methods along with those of the loony doctor were a sure recipe.

“Can you repeat the procedure?” he inquired in business-like tone and released a bit Crane’s balls.
“Stark took my tools and drags…” he barely gulped his scream as Joker clenched his genitals.

“That won’t be a problem for you, riiiiight?” he asked with his nasal voice becoming a sly purring.

Crane felt Joker letting go of his genitals and managed to see an orderly approaching.

“Dr. Quinzel wants you.”

“And she’s not the oooooonly one” Joker winked and licked his lips. “See ya soon, Johnny boyyyyy! Seeeeex boooomb, sex bomb, I’m a sex bomb…”

He stood up and followed the orderly dancing and singing.

Crane watched him with his eyes half closed.

“Of course I can repeat it, you fool…”

“It’s not bad at all that you are weak, Master Bruce: we all love you. You don’t need to try return to your previous life because we all know – most of all, yourself – that you would never manage to be strong again. But no need to worry, Master Bruce: we love you despite your worthlessness…”

Alfred was kneeled before him and held his hands but his grip wasn’t encouraging but detaining: his baby blues were affectionate as ever yet mocking. And that hurt as if he wasn’t more than a child. And what hurt more was that in Alfred’s irises he could see his own reflection...And his face had deep wrinkles, his hair was grey and his eyes were dead from years of wasted efforts and constant disappointment.

“You don’t believe that I’ll be able to be like before?” he showed with his eyes his laptop’s screen where his 3D sketches of the new bat suit were displayed.

Alfred cast a fleeting glance and his eyebrow cocked sarcastic.

“For Goodness’ sake, Master Bruce… Only an idiot would believe that these ridiculous adjustments would allow you to be Batman again” the baby blue eyes locked with his in disbelief. “You should have learnt by now, sir...Are you so stupid, Master Bruce?” he got the impression of a hidden snigger. “I’d suggest you get comfortable in that chair of yours and indulge in our care.”

This should have hurt more yet he clenched his jaw: he’d never yield to that chair or anyone’s discouraging words. But he was old, his youth had passed and he really didn’t manage to come back...

The sound of the cape waving in the air made his heart jolt and his spine get goose bumps. And then the distinct complex noise that was Gotham’s night. The familiar feeling... the familiar landscape of the illuminated city above him – the polluted air that he loved so much giving life to his lungs. It was exactly the view from the tallest gargoyle on the City Hall building: exactly, as when he was standing there, watching, lurking...And his body felt good, in its best shape, young.

So, it was just a nightmare...

He was standing and everything was normal. He was Batman and Batman never smiles but he was deeply satisfied because his adjustments succeeded; his new suit was perfect and despite everyone’s doubts he had returned to his mission, to his city, to himself...
“…Can you think for a second what will happen if you collapse in front of your enemies?! My hairs stand on end only on the thought!”

“You’re not the warrior you used to be…” the caring voice of Tony whispered honestly to his ear.

But Tony was wrong. He was fighting with Zsasz. Evading his lethal punches easily and delivering swift, almost invisible round kicks that made the giant stagger. His mind was coldly estimating and predicting his opponent’s moves and self-confidently blocking them to counter strike. Batman never wasted himself in enjoying fights but this time he could permit a slight content.

“…the bionic parts although very effective and with almost perfect functionality, are not able to stop blows or bullets…” Tony’s exasperated voice warned him.

Two stings in his nape and waist made his blood run cold and his body grew completely numb carrying him down without being able to stay erect. Cold sweat ran his entire body and he realized that his armor was gone and he wore only a ragged shirt and weathered jeans.

He was unmasked and Bane who anyways knew his identity walked pompously at him; he could sense his smirk, his eyes were sniggering.

“…Can you think for a second what will happen if you collapse in front of your enemies?! My hairs stand on end only on the thought!”

He raised his eyes to stare without any fear at Bane yet he knew that he was defeated; he was doomed.

And then Bane squatted and his enormous hand got a fistful of his hair and heaved him like a small child; a helpless child – that was what he’s always been after all…

“And if he doesn’t play the hero he’ll feel weak, right? And he is scared of feeling weak because then he’ll feel exactly as when he was enslaved to Falcone; he doesn’t want even to consider what you propose because playing the hero offers him something to cover his weakness. He can’t stand feeling weak and he is willing to die instead of adjust to his nature! He thinks that pretending the strong fools us into not seeing his weakness but the only one who fools is himself!” Clark’s outraged voice pierced his mind and it felt worse than being dragged by Bane.

He collapsed on his knees; his right arm was dead but hurt, immobile like a log hanging from his shoulder and his rear end was killing him, blood leaking to his inner thighs. He was feeling terror, despair; he was trembling and crying and through his eyelashes could make out his shadow: only this shadow was of a boy, a really skinny boy no more than eleven years old.

Suddenly, his eyes opened bulging in panic: there was another shadow towering his – a gigantic shadow and a familiar smell that made his guts convulse like a dying fish.

Chill clenched his dirty locks and jerked his head.

“Stand up, ya useless worm!” he shouted.

He wanted to obey but his legs were paralyzed – they weren’t there. He turned his wet eyes to the adult.

“Please, sir…I…I can’t…”

Chill snorted and kicked him in the stomach sending blood burst from his mouth; Bruce thought in terror his injured lungs.
“Ya expect me to carry ya?!”

His bark made the boy shut his eyes and cry shamelessly shaking his head in denial.

“Then stan’ up an’ walk, ya ass!”

But he couldn’t; as much as he urged his legs to listen to him and move, they remained dead. He was feeling the Vulture vibrating from wrath and he was sure that at any moment he’d start punishing him so he used his left arm to push himself up in the floor, to crawl.

His hair was clenched again and he was heaved and this time the respiration was Bane’s and the boy had become a man – a helpless man. A man tossed on a bed unable to move but for his head. He tried to fight because he knew what a bed meant for him, fight only with his head, butting Bane right on the nose as much as this pained him.

“Go ahead: make Crane’s job easier!” Bane growled and Bruce could see his former trainer’s horribly maimed face uncovered.

Bane’s lethal hands punched him on the face deteriorating his raging migraine and then the giant grabbed his useless hands binding them on the headboard. It was like being again that helpless child, that terrified child.

Bane pushed Bruce’s head on the pillow and left Bruce to walk slowly to the bench from where he took a pair of handcuffs and rope. He grabbed Bruce’s wrists and cuffed them to the front.

“You’re so much afraid?” Bruce said undeterred to him. “I’m paralyzed.”

Bane swept with his palm the blood on the bridge of his nose from Bruce’s blow and hooked the rope to the chain between the handcuffs’ rings. He pulled the rope upwards stretching Bruce’s arms to tie the rope to the headboard.

The oval window in the external wall of Bruce’s bedroom retreated soundlessly to the invisible horizontal frames on Superman’s approach and he was pleasantly surprised because he hadn’t expected to be welcomed after the dispute.

He floated inside and the window closed. The big room was dark except from the warm hue that the red-yellow flames of the built-in fireplace and the dim light of the laptop’s screen… It smelt pine wood and…Clark closed his eyes and sucked…Bruce.

Clark crossed his arms and lolled his head on the side looking at the scene in front of him: of course…

All this time his flight from Metropolis to the Fortress was hurried but the last days his haste had nothing to do with dread and concern. His haste to reach as soon as possible was driven by joy: his Star had woken from the coma and gradually was back on living. Bruce was wandering with the chair’s help around the Fortress – Clark had given him access to every corner: mmm…maybe that wasn’t very prudent? Nah…Besides Jor El was with him all the time and it was Bruce: Clark trusted Bruce with his life.

Jor-El finally had found a willing and fervent partner for the chess-like game from Krypton: Clark was delighted to see his Star playing with his father because that meant that his cognitive abilities were intact. But he was even happier seeing Bruce with the newer inhabitant of the Fortress: the kitten he had found in Metropolis and given to Bruce because it was exactly like the kitten he had as a boy – the kitten Chill brutally killed in front of Bruce’s eyes.
Clark floated silently to the room he had made exactly after the master bedroom in Wayne Manor. His androids informed him that he’d find Bruce there. He could see inside through the wall without being noticed. He felt a bit guilty for peeking yet it was so beautiful.

Bruce sat on the chair Clark had made for him and had the kitten on his lap. He had his still hardly movable right arm on the kitten and with the other hand held the special baby bottle feeding the animal. Thankfully, the new Hero wasn’t very boisterous yet so the feeding was easy for Bruce: it was as if the fur ball sensed that his friend was incapacitated and didn’t want to made things hard for him. Clark’s super sense told him that the kitten was purring making Bruce’s heart beat so calmly...

Clark was smiling at the scene of Bruce feeding the small animal: it was so sweet...

“You know, littl’ one” Bruce was mumbling to the kitten. “You’re exactly like the little kitten I had years ago – you have his name: Hero.”

Clark could see through the wall Bruce’s touched eyes look at the kitten’s head – Hero was sucking greedily the milk.

“He was a true Hero: you see, he was born ill and his eyes were infected. One of his eyes was already completely ruined when Selina found him…Right! You don’t know Selina…Well, you’ll meet her and I’m sure you two will become the best of friends: she is the kindest, sweetest, cleverest, bravest girl in the world and very beautiful. And she will instantly fall in love with you. You’re exactly as our Hero and Selina found him in a garbage bin where someone dumped him to die…” Bruce’s voice dropped and the rubber nipple left Hero’s mouth; Bruce hurried to bring it back. “Selina was who took care of him and saved his life but he loved me as well…We used to play – the limited time we had -, we used to share the sandwich Selina was bringing me every night. Your namesake was a brave kitten, a good kitten like you but he was unlucky…”

He pressed his lips and took his eyes from the kitten to look at nowhere.

“He was unlucky to meet and love me…” his voice was steady but completely emotionless and the small animal looked at him puzzled.

Bruce realizing that Hero wasn’t drinking left his daydream – or nightmare – and smiled at the kitten that reassured began sucking again.

“A scum killed him because” he drew a big breath “because I loved him… I hadn’t had the chance to bid him a proper goodbye…” his voice was hoarse but gentle like a boy’s and Clark could see him bite his lip. “But now with you is like he came back” he smiled “and we’ll have the chance to give him what he truly deserved – and you deserve. I guess Clark – I can trust you with Superman’s alias, huh?” he frowned playfully. “Clark cherishes both of us and took care so as to meet again.”

Clark felt moisture in his eyes as too many times before but now was from pride because he had made Bruce happy…He walked towards the door that instantly lifted to let him in.

Bruce and Hero looked at him and Clark in a whoosh was glued to Bruce’s lips, like a metal to magnet.

As soon as he let go of those rosy lips – only because he didn’t want to torment Bruce’s lungs – he presented to his Star the paper bag he brought from Metropolis.

Hero sniffed interested stilling his paws on Bruce’s lap and the young man chuckled.

“You’re going to make me gain too much weight…”
Clark ruffled his hair. That was impossible: actually, it was just a few days that Bruce’s appetite got somewhat normal. The first days after the IV removal he hardly ate anything and that just to make Clark happy…

“Mmm…It’s fresh baked donuts: almond praline filled and white chocolate topped…” Clark widened his eyes innocently - Bruce’s favorite.

“That’s dirty!” Bruce protested but his protest was silenced by Clark touching a dessert to his mouth.

A big smile lightened Clark’s face as Bruce bit the donut and began chewing moaning, the kitten in his lap standing on its legs looking fascinated.

It was too much to expect from Bruce to lie on his bed sleeping… Clark’s lips twitched amused despite the fact he wanted to be irritated.

The younger man was on his chair in front of the table where his laptop was open and Clark albeit behind could see what had kept him up: on the screen, were 3D designs of Batman’s armor from different ankles – the adjustments Bruce had thought that could make him able to be out there…

He shook his head exasperated, pity almost coming to the fore. He rubbed his forehead: no, no, pity – Bruce didn’t deserve to be pitied. And definitely he couldn’t get mad at him. Not when Bruce was like this…

His head was leaned on the chair’s back that sensing that its occupant was asleep had reshaped to hug comfortably his neck. His velvet eyelids covered gently his orbs and his respiration was so calm that was almost imperceptible. Untamed locks had fallen in his forehead and some others framed his sharp cheekbones.

Clark Kent or Superman couldn’t be seen by strangers in the villa or near Bruce Wayne: Vale’s video was enough.

So Clark had to remain hidden till Mat Leench ended his session with Bruce and left using Stark’s helicopter. Leench was the Avengers’ physiotherapist and trainer and Stark trusted him to help Bruce recover – as much that was possible… The man was more than trustworthy and familiar with Stark’s genius so he wouldn’t attribute the energy casts holding Bruce’s bones together to anyone else.

But the most important for Clark was that Mat was at Bruce’s age…Blond, blue eyed, good looking with the body of an Olympic Champion… And almost always his skin tight T-shirt was drenched in sweat sketching his perfect muscles since he was making the exercises along with Bruce.

Clark always cringed seeing how hard Bruce was training and couldn’t understand how this man and Stark allowed so much effort.

Bruce’s torso was naked and his muscles glistened under the sweat’s hue; he was doing pushups with his legs unable to assist but Bruce made it look so easy. Clark was always trembling that he might injure his arms again.

“Bruce, you’ve got a great body” Mat said with his kid-like way.

Yeah…Clark licked his lips and sighed. Nutritional, good food, the healthy climate of the area had helped in regaining much of the lost muscle mass: almost exactly as before the factory.

“Falcone demanded that I’ll be trained…” Bruce answered shyly. “And then I kept the habit because it helps me to clean my mind…”

“You did great, Bruce” the young man gave his beaming, benevolent smile and Bruce nodded. “That way it’s easier for you to do the exercises – as a matter of fact, you amaze me.”

Clark’s heart was kicking in his ribs and his face was hot.

“Of course he amazes you, you dick!” he gritted his teeth.

“I think that’s enough for today, Bruce.”

He grabbed Bruce with the special way physiotherapists do and placed him on the massage bed.

“Time for your massage.”

Clark could see Bruce blushing because he had to discard all of his clothes for that and his Star never liked to be touched except from Clark – unless that changed…?!

Mat brought the folding screen to grant privacy to his patient yet that didn’t reassure Clark’s jealous heart. He could see Bruce already lowering his gym pants and Clark was rasping.

And then…Knocks on the gym’s door.

“Excuse me, sir but Master Stark’s helicopter is here” Alfred said to Mat who was taken aback.

“But we haven’t finished yet…”

“We”? Clark mouthed and only then he registered Selina perched on the balcony giggling at him, Hero standing on his rear legs grabbing with his front legs the biscuits she gave him.

“Would you like me to tell the pilot to wait?”

The young man was in a standstill but Bruce emerged his head behind the folding screen.

“It’s alright, Mat; you can go.”

“And your massage?”

Bruce smiled.

“You have taught Alfred well; don’t worry.”

Oh! His Star seemed relieved.

“Thank you, Bruce, till our next meeting, continue your daily program but without excess…”

“As if…” Selina whispered passing by Clark and patting his shoulder, Hero perched on her shoulder.

But for Clark only one thing mattered: he rubbed his hands together. Time for massage…No bloody way he’d let Alfred do it.

Clark felt his body getting hotter than usual and his breath becoming faster. He closed his eyes in despair – he shouldn’t slip to that. He focused on Bruce’s lap instead.

Of course! He smiled. Hero was sleeping curled in Bruce’s lap, Bruce’s hands gently placed upon him. Clark shook his head and pinched the bridge of his nose smiling: the kitten was supposed to stay at Selina’s room in the nights so to not disturb Bruce’s rest because cats are restless and don’t sleep like humans: they tend to wake every now and then asking for various things.

But it seems that Hero wasn’t thwarted by doors: Selina probably forgot her door slightly open and Bruce definitely had made some trick to his door to recognize his animal friend and open at his approach. The sly kitten took advantage of that: actually, Clark had heard Selina saying that cats can do anything to get what they want. And Hero was Batman’s kitten…

Kryptonite teeth bit his guts and he sighed: Batman…The time when Clark stalked Batman seemed too distant and a sinking feeling told him gleefully that Batman wasn’t ever coming back… Damn you, Joker! The clown had almost killed Bruce and rendered him paraplegic, bound to this chair!

Flashing images of Diana kicking and punching graciously her opponents sending them to the ground unconscious came to his eyes. Nobody would be ever able to incapacitate that powerful woman – she like Superman was invincible, indestructible not like… He cast a fleeting glance to Bruce’s sleeping form – he closed his eyes: so fragile, so weak…

Bruce’s armpits screamed from the violence of the move but he pressed stubbornly his lips.

“But you still feel…” Bane sneered as he finished the knot “so I’ll maximize your discomfort.”

“I know you prefer torture me…” he tried to reason with him if urging someone to torture you was reasoning.

But Bane smirked with his teeth rattling and with a swift, violent push and without any preparation thrust deep inside Bruce who bit his tongue to not scream.

“That’s true…” he pulled slightly out and thrust immediately again “but I know this is the worst torture for you…” he thrust deeper and stronger relishing the bulged vein in Bruce’s neck stretched from his struggle to swallow his groans. “And I really missed you, whore…”

Suddenly, Clark’s lips were over his, as his eyes to mute him.

“If you weren’t so stubborn to admit your weakness and protected yourself staying behind Bane and Talia wouldn’t have raped you!”

He felt his insides shatter on that and he clenched his jaw to silence his groans both from the searing pain in his pelvis and the pain Clark’s words evoked.

His heart beat somewhat strange and Clark knew that was Bruce’s heart – after so many months of watching the human’s vitals Clark’s body was still tuned with Bruce’s. He looked again at the human and calmed down realizing that it wasn’t something dangerous: Bruce’s heart was a bit arrhythmic which was inevitable after so many years of brutal abuse.

He noticed that he was a bit cold: of course… Bruce’s temperature had a tendency of playing games and the fact that he didn’t wear any socks or robe didn’t help. Thankfully, Alfred had left the fireplace lit and the room was pleasantly warm.

Clark was sure that Bruce planned to do whatever he wanted to do – work on his designs – and then go to sleep so that nobody figured his ‘mischief’ but the handful of drugs Bruce was taking were very strong and also had placatory and sedative qualities. So at some point, his fatigue intensified by the drugs won – that was the reason he didn’t wake sensing Clark’s arrival.

But two glimmering eyes were looking at him now and Clark leaned on Hero who remained still to not wake his master.
“Hero, I thought we had a deal” he whispered mock accusingly. “You were supposed to watch over him not become his accomplish!”

He took gently the kitten and placed him in the basket Bruce had for him near the fireplace: well, Hero loved to watch the flames.

“Stay here, buddy” he told the kitten that was ready to leave the basket to climb again to Bruce’s lap. “Bruce needs to get to his bed.”

Right. He floated back to Bruce and placed one arm under his knees and one around his shoulders to heave him as softly as he could to not alert him.

Suddenly the excruciating pain and the nauseating sound of flesh whipping flesh ceased and were replaced by cool breeze caressing kindly his face. He was flying and was held by strong, loving arms and his heart was beating calmly. He was safe.

He raised his eyes and saw around; he was travelling amongst small, fluffy clouds, stars and then the blinding, beautiful waves of aurora borealis. He sensed two affectionate eyes staring at him and turned his eyes to see Superman with his trademark curl on the forehead, his smile and crystal blue eyes hued with warmth. He was so beautiful… He nestled his head on Clark’s chest and closed his eyes.

Clark chose to go slowly to the bed to not upset Bruce although he doubted if the drugs’ effect would let him wake so easily. So he had to admit to himself that the reason he delayed the transfer was because he relished the feeling of holding Bruce like this and watching his face at sleep; hued from sleep’s calm that highlighted more the man’s beauty.

And then Bruce did something that melted even the last hint of past anger in Clark. He moved his head and settled it snugly and comfortably in his shoulder. With such surrender and trust that it felt like a small kid… Well, Bruce was still a kid deep inside: that poor, enslaved kid waiting an adult to save him…

Clark pressed his lips: Bruce would have cuddled like that in his arms if Superman had barged in that horrible brothel and taken him away. Things would have been so much different then: Batman wouldn’t have been created and Bruce wouldn’t have been in such danger – he wouldn’t have been almost killed and now he wouldn’t be bound in that chair.

Only one thing would have remained the same: Bruce’s kind and generous heart that loved everyone. Sometimes even for Clark who had the fame of the most good-hearted hero, Bruce’s benevolence towards people was a mystery and a miracle. Someone so much tortured as Bruce was justified to be angry at criminals and want to punish and bring them to justice. But to be so caring and generous for his fellow humans who didn’t do anything to help him all these years? Of course, it wasn’t Gothamites’ fault that Bruce was kept prisoner so many years and Bruce knew that but still it was admirable that his wounded heart could hug every human in need.

He placed Bruce carefully on the mattress, fixed carefully his legs X-Raying them to see satisfied the progress that was made; then he tucked him with the soft blankets without being able to keep his eyes from his face. He brushed with his fingertips the stray locks decorating his chiseled features. He found it too difficult to persuade his body to detach from Bruce even for the seconds he needed to put on his own pajamas that Alfred had placed in the dresser and settle himself on the mattress spooning Bruce’s body and touching his cheek to the younger man’s cheek – tenderly to not disrupt his sleep.

“How come and I always end up in your arms?” Bruce asked Clark who was looking so affectionately at him.

Instantly, Clark’s face distorted; his face’s muscles clenched and his eyebrows frown in rage.

“Because you’re fucking weak!” he yelled. “You’ll never admit your mistakes, huh? Even though they make all of us sick with agony and running desperate to save you! As when you surrendered yourself to Talia…”

His eyes widened but he wasn’t angry...he was hurt, sad.

“I didn’t” he mumbled.

But Superman was really angry and didn’t want to acknowledge Bruce’s hurt eyes. Instead, he pressed his lips and shoved the man on the examination bed and when Bruce swallowed his sadness and supported his body on the elbows to rise, Clark grabbed his upper arms and pinned him on the mattress. Superman’s red hued eyes were above Bruce’s, his breath was a furious rasp; Superman’s powerful thighs kept Bruce’s hips trapped: not that it was necessary since he couldn’t feel or move anything below his waist.

“Weak anger…You know everything about that, huh?” Superman sniggered through gritted teeth. “Do you feel like a warrior?!” his grip on his arms became bruising as he roared – his eyes sneering as he shook his head. “Of course not! You’re a worthless being counting on his super friends to save him from tight spots, when he fucks things up!”

He shook him violently, lifting and crushing him again on the mattress, Bruce watching him with blank widened eyes that caused a new fit of cruel laughter.

“It hurts, huh?” he mocked him. “That’s the point: maybe now you’ll admit that you’re weak and stop pretending the strong, putting everyone in trouble! You really believe that you can be in the same league as me and the Princess?” his laughter was like barking. “No, stupid littl’ human! You’re a zero with the ego of a god but your egoism can’t hide your worthlessness! You’re weak, damn it!”

Bruce was shaking his head in denial, his jaw clenched in rage and hurt.

“I’m not weak!” he growled.

On this Superman clenched his wrists and pinned them above his head, his eyes ablaze glaring at Bruce’s narrowed eyes.

“What I must do for you to admit that you’re weak?” he barked and Bruce jerked his head.

Only to be crushed on the mattress, Superman’s body upon him weighing like that factory…

“Get off me!” he growled.

“Make me!” Superman challenged him with a gleeful smirk and Bruce thrashed but it was useless since half of his body was dead.

Bruce clenched his teeth and launched his head against Superman’s – he didn’t care if his skull was shattered though Ra’s had taught him how to protect his head from lethal impact.

His head didn’t crack open but the pain was great and his eyes lost sight due to the blood that burst from his broken nose.
“Go ahead: make Crane’s job easier!” Superman sneered but his voice was distorted; it was Bane’s voice and as much as he wanted to see Clark’s face to dissolve that illusion a red cloud covered his eyes.

His heart was beating fast sending sweat to wash his body, his respiration was frantic and his lungs burnt because he sensed Clark’s hands ripping his shirt.

“Maybe you understand what you really are…” teeth grazed his breasts and he felt like drowning.

He knew it was Clark but he smelt like Bane, he hurt like his former trainer.

“No, Clark, not like this…”

“Are you going to beg?” now the voice was clearly Clark’s but it was so mean… “Beg me like you should: it’s the only thing weak beings like you can do. And your arrogance must be punished…”

Clark bit him really hard on the abdominals but Bruce closed his eyes, clenched his jaw and didn’t even moan. Not even when he heard the violent ripping of his pants and underwear…

“Beg me to not squash you!”

Brush thrashed desperately even under Clark’s unrelenting body, inside his hands of steel that didn’t care if his flesh was torn and his bones smashed.

“Say it! Admit you’re weak, you idiot!”

Clark was nuzzling softly Bruce’s cheek; his body’s perfume was intoxicating and numbed him. Yet the younger man began thrashing inside his arms, his heartbeat frantic and his breath a rasp. Clark got up slightly eyeing Bruce’s body that convulsed like a fish out of the water: he was sure that this turmoil could make Bruce’s mind force his legs to move in order to fight whatever haunted his sleep. The Man of Steel bit his lips: it was the first time after the incident with Joker that Bruce struggled something like this.

He placed his hands gingerly on the human’s shoulders and shook him gently; he leaned his mouth over Bruce’s cheek and kissed him.

“It’s alright, Bruce” he whispered. “It’s only a bad dream… Wake up…I’m here: nobody is going to lay a finger on you…”

Bruce gave a really painful gasp that made Clark cringe for his lungs and half opened his eyes in the corner of which stagnated tears began flowing to his cheekbones. Clark felt his heart cracking and grabbed him to nestle him in his chest, caressing his sweaty locks and kissing softly.

“It’s alright…” he whispered again to persuade him because Bruce’s cold body was tense and the younger man didn’t let his head touch on Clark’s shoulder. “I’m here, Star…”

Clark realized that all these drugs must have made it too difficult to orient back in reality so he brushed his back. Finally, Bruce relaxed in his chest and his heartbeat began normalizing. Yet the younger man detached his head rather quickly and Clark frowned.

Bruce felt deeply ashamed that Clark witnessed that; now his claims about him being weak would have new arguments. He moved his body with his hands and lay again on the mattress turning his back on Clark who pressed his lips but unfazed lay on the mattress too cuddling Bruce’s body.

The Man of Steel placed his hands on Bruce’s shoulders and kissed the corner of his lips sucking all the senses.

“Flashback?” he whispered in his ear and kissed the earlobe.

Bruce closed his eyes.

“It was messed up…Flashback and nightmare and…bullshit!” he spat.

Clark nodded and inhaled struggling to keep his calm.

“Crane tampered with your memory…” the scum! Really, who can be so cruel to play filthy games with the painful memories of a tortured being?

Bruce hated discussing about what was done to him.

“He didn’t have enough time to cause damage.”

Clark licked his lips: Bruce would never admit that he was hurt.

“But you said it was intensive: three times a day with increased doses” his invulnerable spine shuddered even in the thought of that metallic box shutting his head and various needles piercing his eyes and skull… “I think that something should be done to restore the damage” he knew that Stark and Lucius analyzed everything that monster used on Bruce.

“We discussed it already, Clark and we decided that it’s better not cause more upset to that part of my brain. Leslie cleansed my cerebrospinal fluid from the remaining substances and that’s enough.”

Clark couldn’t ignore the distant and cold tone in Bruce’s voice that was expected from their morning dispute…despite the fact it seemed like ages ago. Of course he had the chance to engage in so many things and take his mind of that but Bruce albeit with his beloved people, had remained stationed on that chair feeding with designs of his armor his illusions of returning.

He wanted to sigh but held himself – he had to approach again him. Besides he had gotten over what happened. He cuddled tighter Bruce’s body, immersing his mouth in his neck, his hands rubbing his upper arms.

“It’s nice you wear these pajamas…”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow and he knew that Clark heard it.

“Because they’re warm and I won’t catch a cold…”

That coldness was still there in Bruce’s voice so Clark sucked on his neck relishing the softness and the perfume.

“Because…” he whispered in a husky voice “your body must be touched only by the softest materials…when it’s not touched by my body…”

Clark’s kisses trailed upwards to Bruce’s jawline but he didn’t stretch his neck to give him better access though…he always loved Clark’s kisses.

Clark ended up again in Bruce’s ear knowing how his touches there rendered boneless the inexperienced in love young man. Clark wanted to melt the ice his own behavior caused to cover Bruce’s heart.

“Is everything alright? Did Leslie find anything?”
Bruce didn’t look at him.

“
You didn’t eavesdrop?”

Clark’s arms tightened more in front of Bruce’s chest and he closed his eyes: no, he forgot to…

“You don’t want me to…” Clark chuckled.

“And you always do it…”

“You’re still angry with me, huh?” he nibbled Bruce’s so soft earlobe causing goose bumps in the healthy part of his spine.

But Bruce didn’t feel at ease, the messed up nightmare reminding him the morning incident and startling all the emotions he experienced then.

“You’re refreshed though…” the images from Superman’s interaction with the Amazon came to sting more his sensitive heart.

Clark sighed and his hot breath brushing his ear made Bruce shudder. He surely felt refreshed, invigorated, happy: the scenes of his interaction with Diana enhancing his good mood.

“I was afraid that you’d have done something to forbid me from entering your bedroom… I’m happy you didn’t…” he rubbed Bruce’s arms and kissed his cheek. “Though I could blackmail my way in…” he said teasingly waiting for Bruce to ask and when he didn’t “I could say to Alfred that you left your bed…”

“You’re not a snitch” his eyes were still blank.

Clark couldn’t stand anymore Bruce’s turned back neither his ill mood – he wanted him to forget everything and be at ease again, like himself. He cupped gently Bruce’s shoulders and tenderly laid Bruce on his back.

Bruce’s eyes locked with Clark’s and Superman felt his guts jolt on the beauty of these wild eyes.

“C’me on, Bruce; you’re supposed to have your rest, your body is tired.”

The sapphire-emerald orbs narrowed to slits like a wildcat’s ready to attack.

“I’m not tired! I sleep 10 whole hours a day and the rest of the daytime I’m sitting on a chair. Plus, I was constantly sleeping for one month.”

Clark bit his lip and swallowed hard.

“That month you were constantly fighting: the hardest battle you ever fought – the hardest battle no superman has ever given. Your every breath, your every heartbeat was a tremendous feat…I was overwhelmed by your strength, your willpower to fight even though your body was broken…” he touched his forehead to Bruce’s who began relaxing on sensing Clark’s emotions. “For Goodness’ sake, Bruce, promise me that you’ll forget these feeble adjustments to your armor: you know deep inside that they won’t enable you to fight as before…”

Bruce was looking at him emotionless cursing himself for falling asleep in front of his laptop.

“So you don’t believe that I’ll walk again…” his voice was dry like his insides.

Clark caressed Bruce’s cheek.
“Of course you will but this doesn’t mean that you should get back to Gotham’s rooftops jumping, flying and fighting…” he shook his head. “Why you don’t consider Tony’s idea?” his face beamed. “You have a brilliant mind and a will stronger than steel; you can succeed in every field and you can fight crime from other positions.”

Bruce felt his blood rushing in his veins.

“Being Batman never stopped me from doing that as well…” he said coldly. “You doubt that I have the strength to overcome this and don again the cape and cowl” his eyes shone like the lenses of his cowl.

Clark closed his eyes and gulped.

“Do you remember Batman anymore?” Bruce asked.

Of course he did but actually he preferred not remember the way Batman was graciously and lethally fighting his opponents; he had many times his memory ready to replay that epic video from Batman’s battle with Zsasz or the night at Haven’s atrium where Bruce was fighting dressed in an expensive suit. But stopped it before starting because he wanted to adjust to the new reality and not dwell in the past. It was better to see the Amazon Princess fighting… it didn’t stir bitter emotions and he wanted to just focus in the bliss of having Bruce alive…even if Batman died in that factory.

“Batman didn’t die” Bruce stated dead calm and his eyes stabbed Clark. “I’m going to return; I won’t give up on Gotham due to a disability.”

Clark supported his torso on his palms keeping Bruce between them and closed his eyes.

“I can protect Gotham too if that’s your concern… I protect an entire planet: a second city won’t be a problem.”

Bruce felt a vicious bite in his chest: Clark meant that what he was doing in Gotham was nothing – he was replaceable. He hadn’t done anything special. More so for a demi-god. Bruce cocked an eyebrow stilling his eyes in Clark’s.

“Remember the last time you impersonated Batman?” he referred to Clark’s confrontation with Joker.

Clark remembered: it was rather embarrassing: the jester fooled him, set on the loose many Arkham Asylum’s inmates, and probably he figured that he wasn’t the real thing. Not to mention that the clown kidnapped the children from Haven and forced Bruce to face him while injured.

“I was inexperienced then…” he licked his lips eyeing Bruce’s disbelieving stare. “So you hold me responsible for Joker taking the children and…everything that followed!”

Bruce shook his head and blinked.

“No; it was my fault and I paid for that” Clark was shaken by the steadiness of Bruce’s voice. “I learnt that I should have organized it better and not let my city to the whims of a criminal.”

Clark cupped his face and leaned to kiss his lips.

“Stop blaming yourself for every ordeal that city experiences: it’s time your life gets independent from Gotham. You must think a bit about yourself. Tony’s idea is perfect: it’d allow you to prove your worth” Bruce’s eyes were narrowed “do great things and in the meantime you’d get to help Gotham in her struggle against crime…” he was hesitant to continue because Bruce’s stare had become a glare. “You know as much as we that your injuries are severe and even when you walk again, you won’t ever be fit to do what you were doing!”

Bruce opened his mouth to retort but Clark placed his fingertips on his lips to silence him. And then replaced his fingertips with his lips in a soft kiss.

“You can relay your unique knowledge…you can train someone to become Batman. You can supervise and advise him…” he stopped abruptly seeing the eyes underneath him flash angrily and the body between his arms tense – but it was the hurt he detected that made Clark numb.

Yet Bruce disregarded the hot pain in favor of the anger and the energy that charged him: he was used to that. So he looked calmly at Clark.

“I’ll walk again and I’ll don again the cape and the cowl. And I’ll fight again whomever dares to threaten my city” his voice was power and certainty and Clark felt electricity running his back. “If you came back to try to discourage me you did wrong: you should have stayed with your super powered friend!”

Clark closed his eyes and let his head hang: of course…Bruce knew. He nuzzled the younger man’s cheek.

“You saw the videos…”

“As millions of people” Bruce answered coldly and indifferently.

Clark’s lips were sucking Bruce’s neck, trying to get better access but Bruce was unyielding. So the Man of Steel sighed and rose to bring his face above Bruce’s.

“And…you’re jealous?” he asked hesitantly but amused at the same time because that would be something completely new for the young man.

Bruce frowned: jealous? Well, while a kid he felt jealousy when other children had puppies or kittens and he didn’t; yet jealousy because his…boyfriend (?) was looking someone else that way? Could what he was feeling being indeed jealousy? He felt his cheeks hot and Clark rushing to plant his kisses on his red flesh wasn’t the best thing. He felt Clark’s body trembling from joy and the lips that kissed him formed a big grin.

“Should I? You began doubting my chances of getting back from the moment she said those things about me” he shook his head. “You weren’t like this before: you used to share my hopes.”

Clark huffed desperate and let his torso collapse on Bruce’s which regretted instantly remembering his tender state and jerked upright.

“Bruce… No, what I’m saying has nothing to do with what Diana said to you in the forest. She doesn’t know you as I do.”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“Really you do know me?”

Clark turned his eyes elsewhere and detached from Bruce sitting beside him on the mattress. He placed his elbows on his knees and let his hands hang between.

“Seeing me fighting alongside Diana is what made you looking frantically a way to become Batman? You feel threatened by her? Shadowed by her?” he squinted. “You hate her, don’t you? Because she saved you.”

Bruce pressed his lips and supported his body on his elbows rising to sitting position.

“I don’t need to become Batman: I am Batman! Even if you regard me as a poor helpless being just because I got severely injured and my healing takes time so much different of you. Finding ways to compensate my shortcomings isn’t new – I’m doing and working this all this time. Batman always loves shadows so being shadowed is what I pursue. I don’t hate your friend though I don’t like her attitude. She helped but it wasn’t she who saved me.”

Clark looked at him.

“Selina was there first.”

Bruce nodded.

“But before her there was someone else who defended me” Clark tensed. “He was the reason I just crawled in the soil and not helped Selina as I wanted.”

Clark was intrigued by everything Bruce said but especially on one thing:

“He?” he asked with raised eyebrows: he couldn’t help but think all the men who goggled at Bruce and it suddenly flashed: the guy who mocked him in the forest. “A strange guy approximately at my age with black shoulder length hair, pointy nose and ears? A definitely non human guy?”

Bruce shook his head.

“Loki: Thor’s brother.”

Clark grabbed Bruce’s shoulders: Bagdana’s remembrance was annoying piercing his brain – oddly, Clark hated it when god-like creatures eyed his Bruce.

“What does he want from you?” his eyes were glistening but Bruce didn’t share his upset; he just pressed his lips.

“Play: what else?”

“He was in the forest as I was heading here – he had your form and he sneered at me. I don’t like gods or…demons near you” he said deep in thought.

Bruce snorted.

“That includes yourself?” he retorted crossing his arms. “Do you want us to discuss something useful and let me inform you about the attack?”

Clark still thoughtful about Loki and his interest in Bruce scratched his hair.

“Diana told me everything about your attackers…”

Bruce smiled and let his eyes drop staring at the mattress amused: of course! He raised calmly his head to look at Clark.

“Then why you came back tonight? You haven’t told me the reason yet?”

That emotionless voice again, Clark thought and without realizing grabbed his arms and laid him flat on the mattress. He cupped Bruce’s face with both hands and locked eyes.
“I wanted to apologize for my outburst…” he whispered in a deep voice. “I yelled at you and you don’t deserve that.”

Bruce pressed his lips and averted his gaze.

“You don’t have to apologize: I yelled too.”

Clark shook his head frustrated and gently brought Bruce’s face in a position that the younger man would be looking at him.

“I feel that you’re not so forgiving…”

And before Bruce protested he left the bed to be back in a second with a paper bag that smelt delicious. Bruce rolled his eyes but before saying anything Clark had touched his favorite donut to his lips.

“Fresh baked donuts: Almond praline filling and white chocolate topping…” Clark moved his eyebrows suggestively, smiling. “And your stomach has free space.”

Bruce sighed: it was futile. He bit succumbing. They were still hot.

“You used Superman to make Ms. Rose bake donuts?” he asked accusingly and brought a donut to Clark’s mouth to bite.

“No” he said chewing “she is quite fond of poor Mr. Kent…”

Clark cupped Bruce’s face and let the bag on the nightstand.

“I was panicked, Bruce” he said and his voice was so low that Bruce was surprised. “When I was alarmed about the attack I was scared, terrorized: I know, I’m Superman, and I shouldn’t be afraid of anything but…” he sighed. “I was panicked that I won’t make it on time…”

Bruce brushed softly his cheeks.

“It was like reliving my returning nightmares” Clark arched his eyebrows. “Yes, Superman has nightmares…After that awful night at that fucking factory. I always see the same thing: that I arrived ten seconds later. And the entire building collapsed on you, squashed you…and I search the wreckage to find you, I lift bricks, I melt metallic rods, I smash rafters and cement columns unable to see anything from my tears; my heart deafening my ears ready to explode. And then…” he closed his eyes “I find you not with my eyes but my instinct…But you’re…”

Clark touched his lips and nose to Bruce’s soft cheek to make sure that he was indeed alive; to escape from the icy, terrifying feeling of touching a mangled body, a body that more of its half was churned, only shattered bones there… A head that had been opened by the crushing impact; his beautiful face eerily intact but for his deeply cracked forehead from where brain matter was purring.

He didn’t want to describe to Bruce this sight that was so vivid in his mind; besides the low beating of his heart was enough for Clark to understand that Bruce could imagine the spectacle and Clark’s feelings.

“I…I take…you and I fly away…I leave Earth and I reach space with…you in my arms…and I’m flying, I’m floating in space’s void and darkness but nothing is darker and emptier than me. I stare at your face begging with my blank eyes because my voice is lost; I’m begging you to come back…but you don’t…and I’m just floating hugging you in eternity…my heart doesn’t beat anymore but I know that I won’t die…I’ll continue float with you in my arms but you won’t ever come back to me and I’ll be forever alive but dead…”

Bruce wrapped his arms around Clark’s neck and kissed him gently on the lips and then nuzzled his cheeks letting hot air from his lungs reassure the powerful being that he was alive, in his arms. But it was the wetness from his eyes that made Clark shake himself: he didn’t want to upset Bruce – violent emotions weren’t suitable for his current state.

He cuddled Bruce in his chest and immersed his mouth in his silken locks kissing insatiably and sucking that perfume while his hands felt that body. He cupped Bruce’s face and kissed his eyelashes.

“Can we cross out this horrible day?” he asked while his thumbs caressed Bruce’s cheekbones. “I promise you I’ll always come back to you – can you promise me that you’ll be there?”

Bruce bit his lips: how on earth he could promise that? He was a human, a mortal and death was his only certainty… Clark as if sensing his hesitance held him tighter and his puppy eyes stabbed Bruce’s desperately.

“I…I’ll do my best…” he gave him the reassurance Clark needed and the Man of Steel let his face to cuddle him.

Clark’s body was crying – he had life in his arms not the carcass of his nightmares and wanted to claim that life. What he experienced the two times he was inside Bruce’s body haunted and created a demanding thirst in him. Bagdana knew what that body had to offer and Clark flinched on the thought that more gods could sniff that as well…Like Loki…Humans had already exploited hard that man, he wouldn’t let other beings do the same. Bruce was only his.

He placed Bruce carefully on the mattress and discarded the top of his own pajamas on the floor, his chest relishing the nakedness as well Bruce’s caressing hands. Clark massaged gently Bruce’s ribs while his mouth fed on his neck that finally Bruce stretched permitting him deeper access.

Bruce moaned as Clark’s magical fingers pressed slightly his abdominals, the healthy part of his body getting violent goose bumps from the tender nibbling across his jawline. And then Clark’s greedy hands had had enough of Bruce’s pajamas shirt and began fast unbuttoning, pushing the fabric of his chest.

Now two lips hotter than any human’s were gulping Bruce’s breasts, trembling hands lowering swiftly his pants and underwear to grope his buttocks – Bruce could only see and hear those movements but he was sure that Clark would soon touch the spots where he could feel. Expecting that, he tangled Clark’s locks with his fingers breathing carefully to not cause fear for his lungs, Superman’s quickening respiration telling him that this time he wouldn’t stop.

Clark had his eyes open to register once again, to admire this flesh – the life. His hands were greedily feeling Bruce’s hard buttocks this time thanking his physiotherapist and Bruce’s stubbornness to train so much. But suddenly these buttocks felt differently and Clark knew that they weren’t Bruce’s: these buttocks gave the exact feeling that he would get from…

His lips stopped abruptly as Bruce’s pectorals became big, round shaped breasts with big, brown nipples that were hard. Exactly as… His eyes widened: he had peeked under Diana’s clothes?! He gulped and blushed and jerked upwards sitting on the mattress beside Bruce, his arousal ebbing fast.

Bruce closed his eyes and let his head slump on the pillow, his heart sinking and his breath held in his lungs. No, Clark wouldn’t treat him as before but Bruce sensed that this time something was different: it wasn’t just the dread that he might hurt him. He pulled up his pants.
Clark was deep in thought and staring at his hands. But then he realized that Bruce would figure that something was amiss – the human had a knack in sniffing things. And frankly it was nothing to let it stir more turmoil to Bruce.

So he turned to him biting his lips on seeing the younger man’s closed eyes: ugh! He had again played with Bruce’s healing body…and feelings. He took gently the pajama shirt’s edges, brought them over Bruce’s slowly heaving chest and began buttoning. On ending with the buttons he caressed Bruce’s chest.

“Let’s not rush things, huh? Your muscles are too tense” he whispered. “I’ll make you some massage – it’ll help you have a peaceful sleep.”

“No need to” Bruce kept his eyes closed.

Clark smiled knowing that Bruce would feel it – he wanted to make up for his blunder.

“You know I don’t want your physiotherapist massage you: I don’t like how he touches you and… anyway I’m better.”

Bruce opened his eyes and they seemed tired yet he hid the coldness that had settled in him.

“Tony called Mat and told him that for three days he won’t have to come” Clark was happy to hear: he really didn’t like him. “And Mat is heterosexual.”

Clark raised an eyebrow.

“I was too till I met you…” he retorted playfully but for Bruce it wasn’t so light.

“I thought you were bi” he said though speaking about matters concerning sexuality was still uncomfortable. “Anyway, let’s get some sleep…” he rolled his body turning his back on Clark shutting his eyes.

Clark clenched his fists and cursed himself; he laid spooning Bruce’s body that had gone so cold and rubbed his upper arms.

“I’m sorry…” he whispered.

“It’s OK…I understand…” he stretched his hand and caressed with his fingertips Hero who was looking at him from the floor – the animal’s eyes shone sad.
Chapter 13

The great thing about being a demon was that you could appear anywhere you wanted. Unless, someone had stabbed you with the Knife of Justice stripping you of your power and imprisoning you at the Tartarus...

Bagdana raised his eyes to the caverns ceiling.

Then you need another god or demon to free you so you regain your power and...seek the one who stabbed you and take revenge. If of course you want to take revenge or instead what the other considers to be your revenge.

He sighed and that was odd and completely un-demonic but Bagdana had no problem with it. Bruce was a complex and sensitive issue after all. Also, Bagdana had suffered enough emotional pain that a sigh was the least to ruin his self-esteem.

He was again in Gotham’s guts – frankly, he preferred Gotham to Metropolis where his ‘partner’ operated: he was a creature of darkness and Gotham was darkness and also Bruce’s city. The city that born his Lilith’s last descendant – how fitting!

It was the great hall: an enormous space framed by stalactites and stalagmites that united into creating huge columns. At the center lay a small formation of minerals like a small table.

He brushed the rock. For him it was rather short but for a small boy was like a waist table. He had first lay eyes on Bruce there...It was amusing as much as intriguing: a really small kid strolling under the earth without any trace of fear. Bagdana cocked an eyebrow: well, there was fear but not for the earth’s guts or the bats surging the place – the boy relished the dark and the bats and that fascinated the aimlessly wandering demon.

So much so that he took a peek into the boy’s mind and saw his great fear. He was a horribly abused child and that was obvious even if you weren’t a demon able to see under his ragged, bloodstained clothes and that explained why the caves were the place where he felt relieved: there he could escape his tormentors. Yet the boy’s greatest fear came from his past: the murders of two people in front of him.

Bagdana remembered how enjoyed that revelation and exploited it taking the form of his dead father making the poor boy happy and despair at the same time. Because Bruce was very clever even then so he knew that he was interacting with an impostor or a hallucination. Oh! It was so amusing feeling the boy’s torment knowing that his ‘daddy’ was a fake but being unwilling to lose even that illusion.

He had left the boy crying while his cruel laughter filled the hall and echoed really nightmarish...

Bagdana smirked but it was for himself: he should have felt that this boy would be his destiny, something unique, something inescapable.

The child kept coming to the caves unfazed from that incident or maybe motivated from his first experience. Maybe he was hoping of reliving it. But Bagdana chose to watch silently the boy’s explorations with the bats being strangely friendly to him.

And one day he felt the summoning: someone was calling him to take his sacrifice. Bagdana was too tired and bored and frustrated from centuries of false alarms by fools who wanted to gain a rich reward but they only offered huge disappointment. However he went as every time because as much frustrating the experience with the offered sacrifice was the revenge afterwards on the idiots who summoned him was what he came to live for the last couple of centuries. His wrath, his disappointment and his… pain were unleashed on them who played with the most precious thing for him: his long lost love, his missing half…his dead mate.

When he arrived at the spacious basement curiosity ignited his blood. The form tied on the floor covered with black silk was too small: a child. The demon had beamed: humankind had followed a very sharp slope even without his immediate urge – they offered him a child. An innocent life, an innocent soul to be ruined for them to take the fat reward the demon promised. Bagdana smirked because he knew what they would take in the end: he might not be an avenging angel but he sure enjoyed delivering punishment to those greedy and ruthless people…even if the child was to die before them as every other victim offered to him.

He still remembered the surprise when he made out the features of the child: he knew that boy; he was the boy that intrigued Bagdana so much that made him stalk him in the vast, Daedalus caverns of Gotham. He hadn’t considered of tasting him all this time but his summoners set that before him, tempting him – and, Hell!, who was he to not fall for a temptation? He was the master of temptation after all.

The boy was scared – who could blame him? They gave him the special potion – they were good on their thing. The boy, Bagdana knew, was always scared…and brave at the same time and that lit the demon’s interest.

He removed the black silk that covered the skinny body: it was an immature body, a very skinny body but a body with the potential to be beautiful – shame that the boy was to die tonight. The biggest shame though was that his summoner – Ra’s Al Ghul – had taken the precautions to not be faced with his ire afterwards: that damn maggot!

They had the boy blindfolded because everyone knew – Ra’s Al Ghul more than anyone - that a mortal shouldn’t look Bagdana in the eye; not that they could or wanted… But he was curious…He ordered the fabric to leave the boy’s eyes and kneeled on the floor.

And then the most unexpected thing happened: the boy had looked him in the eye. The scared boy held the demon’s gaze without faltering. And Bagdana frowned inside: that was unique as the boy’s eyes…like star sapphires, the rarest star sapphires with emerald sparkling stars. Bagdana’s inside was squirming worse than the boy’s heart and for the first time in the endless centuries after Lilith’s demise he felt aroused: he wouldn’t ravish his sacrifice from boredom and whim for destruction but from real interest.

And as he proceeded to claim the boy’s body with fever that progressively burnt the demon,
Bagdana was realizing that the boy, Bruce, was indeed what he was looking for all this endless ages:
his love’s last descendant. The one with the mark…Only he couldn’t see the mark. But it was fine because his bare existence had recognized Lilith’s existence.

Bagdana in Gotham’s underbelly closed his eyes flooded with the demolishing emotions of the moment…the beautiful, exhilarating emotions that flared his powers. He had found his Lilith again and his body was celebrating, feasting again on the beloved body…And he devoured the moment unleashing all the lasting, all the craving and all the despair from so many years of lacking.

Only to realize with dread that the boy was dying: he was in grave pain and his blood was flowing on the cement of the room. He had been ruthless with the boy forgetting that he was a mortal, a boy, not his immortal Lilith. Yet. He let his seed fill him knowing already that this body would absorb him. And then he healed the damage his passion had made. And saved the boy. Unlike that night with Lilith when he failed to give her life again. Because he had arrived too late…Because although a demon he could give life back only when it wasn’t too late and he felt…oh, that was…
He had given Ra’s what he wanted: the way to kill the Kryptonian.

Bagdana clenched his fists and roared causing the stalactites to shake: he wanted the Kryptonian dead because he had Bruce’s body…Bruce’s love. Because he took Bruce from him…as Cain had done. Only the Kryptonian hadn’t failed to save Bruce.

He remembered that night that Bruce stabbed him with Nemesis’ Knife and sent him back to be imprisoned in Tartarus – really, Bagdana considered himself an idiot for not recognizing the Goddess’ emerald star eyes in Bruce’s irises but who would think that Lilith’s descendant would be a descendant of the justice Goddess too? A perfect hybrid to torture him more: getting Lilith back but not being able to have her because the damn priest’s DNA was in there fighting.

That night he felt Bruce ending – his beautiful spirit being freed back in the sky like Lilith’s. And Bagdana was desperate to leave his prison and rush there to save him, to take him away from humans, to make him immortal again, to be with him forever. But it was like chains binding him there mocking and enjoying his pain and agony as his last chance for happiness, for redemption was fast slipping like the life from Bruce’s gravelly aching body.

But the Kryptonian saved him at the last moment, took him away to heal him. But the Kryptonian wasn’t a god or the most powerful and ancient demon…Bruce’s life slipped from his tender arms – he died and Bagdana experienced a pain worse than that from the Knife as if he had actually a heart and was torn to shreds…

In the end, Superman did it: he saved Bruce. But Bruce was seriously injured and now he was bound to a chair: not that he couldn’t stand and walk and fight if he allowed his mighty mind and will to force his body but doing that would lead to causing new damage to his frail body.

The demon actually sighed and wasn’t ashamed for that: he knew, he felt Bruce’s burning desire to fly – he was Lilith’s son after all…And now he couldn’t even walk…Bagdana punched a stalactite that immediately was shattered in a pile of mineral dust and then reformed it because he didn’t want anything to be destroyed in this cave. This cave was special.

He caressed the empty human shaped Bat that was erect on the cave’s wall; he grinned. Bruce’s first cave; Batman’s suit. Bagdana had hosted his battle for three years; he had watched from afar because that bastard Ra’s feared for the boy’s life after he copulated with him for the second time and used repellants to keep him away from Bruce. He watched amused and intrigued and then fascinated by the boy’s, a young man now, wit and determination: Bagdana admired him…oh! How it’s possible for a demon to admire a mere mortal?

Yet Bruce was anything but ‘mere’: regardless of the fact he had Lilith’s DNA, he wasn’t a demon or a god. He was more: he was a great human.

His enormous hand touched the cowl.

“Do you miss your caves, Bruce? Your armor? The night?”

He could feel what Bruce was feeling right now and smirked.

“It pains, right, Bruce? For now you just acknowledge the pain, the knife in your heart…” he grunted. “Like the Knife you stabbed in my back…” he cackled with bitterness. “Are you questioning your choice yet?”

His eyes reddened and flashed as he brushed the arms of the suit. He was so close to get that man…And then Nemesis defeated him once again having given Bruce the weapons to escape…Having established herself inside the being that was his salvation, his Lilith’s last son, her last surviving piece…

He just couldn’t even tolerate the slightest doubt that Bruce would ultimately be his. It hurt even to think the possibility of the Kryptonian continue touching his Bruce…

Joker made a deep court bow as he entered his cell where Dr. Quinzel was already waiting seated in her chair with her phone’s recorder ready.

“Ohhhhh! Hellooooooo, Dr. Harlequin! To what I owe this un-expected pleasure? It’s not our usual time, right? Ooooooor…” he moved his eyebrows suggestively “this nightly visit has more than ‘therapeutic’ motives…” he gazed at his groin. “I know I’m an eye-candy…”

He giggled seeing Quinzel’s cheeks getting red but she determined set her jaw in a very strict expression that made Joker laugh more.

“Please, sit down, Mr. J. I changed our scheduled session because tomorrow I won’t be here.”

Joker leaned to her but Harleen knew that this wasn’t the prologue of an attack because her patient would have been already knocked down – Mr. Stark had made that sure installing in him a special monitoring system that read the man’s vitals into stopping him whenever the vitals showed a tendency for aggressiveness. Joker’s lips were a breath’s distance from her long, lean neck and his hot respiration grazed her skin bringing her goose bumps that she wasn’t sure whether they were from terror or something else.

“Mmmmm…” Joker pouted. “Aaaaa naughty date?” he said throatily smirking with his doctor’s change in breathing.

But Harleen realizing her amateur reactions straighten her head and looked Joker in the eye firmly though she was aware that the man was amused.

“Please, have a seat, Mr. J” her voice meant ‘cut the crap’.

Joker giggled and with a long jump landed on his bed. He patted the mattress.

“Fancy that…Is a really gooood bed – pity I can’t try it with someone…” his narrowed eyes fell on the stern looking doctor.

“How was your day, Mr. J?” she asked professionally brushing the phone’s screen into recording.

He folded his legs on the mattress and shrugged a shoulder.

“I guessssss niice…” he smacked his lips while his eyes looked at the ceiling. “Ooooooof course, I’d prefer it if I had a viiiiiisit from my lawfully wedded wiiiiife…” he was staring reminiscently at the ceiling but he noticed his therapist’s uneasiness. “It’s myyy right, right?” he focused rapidly on Harleen’s eyes and she managed to restrict her surprise.

“No, it’s not” she answered blatantly. “Mr. Wayne isn’t your wife.”

He shook his head loosely.

“Aaaaaand may-be he is nooooot generally…” his eyes flashed too serious. “Caaaan you assure me that he is aliiiiive?” his nasal voice rose almost angrily.
The young psychiatrist looked at him completely neutral.

“You’ve made a new acquaintance while in the common rooms.”

“Huhu!” Joker knew that she wanted to change the subject, to bring him out of his ‘obsession’ – but why? People live thanks to their obsessions: is what gives the salt and pepper to their lives and Brucie with his tantalizing secrets was his... cinnamon. But anyway… “Yeah, dear ol’ Joooohnny boy” let’s go with her pace.

“How you feel about it?”

Now Joker couldn’t hold back his laughter: it was so easy to read that woman and manipulate her.

“Joooohny is a good bloooock – I mean, he was a shrink aaaaand eeeended up a looooony! WOW! That sur-passes even meeeee, for pity’s saaaaake! Hmmmm…”

He regarded his therapist curious and she met his gaze.

“Dr. Harlequin, dooooo you think that eeee-very shrink foooollows the steeeep path?” he moved his hand downwards.

Harleen met his eyes serious.

“Psychiatrists are humans too.”

Joker giggled.

“Sooolllll oooou, my hoooooot stufff shrinck” he licked his lips looking at the floor and then suddenly at her eyes solemnly “one day could become like our Johnny?”

She pressed her lips.

“Is it so important for you?”

He moved his head, stretching his neck in every position.

“I looooove loonies, doc – especially thooooose with a university degreeeeeee!” he erupted in a spree of laughter sweeping supposed tears.

Dr. Quinzel gathered her phone and stood regarding her patient determined.

“I think that’s enough for tonight.”

She turned but Joker stopped laughing abruptly: he was the one to decide that and he wanted to play. He sensed that it’d be easy to bring that little doctor to the “Dark Side” and it was so funny.

“Dr. Quinzel, don’t leave” he said with his best solemn voice – he was an Oscar winning actor for pity’s sake (well, his win wasn’t so fair play but whoever wins by playing fair?). “Do you really care toooo learn aboooout meeeee?” his eyes were sparkling almost sad locking with hers as she turned towards him interested – hehe! It was so hilarious but he couldn’t laugh aloud – being an actor is a really difficult thing, that’s why he chose the murders instead.

“Of course, Mr. J, this is the reason I’m here” she arched her eyebrows. “For me, you’re a human being.”

Joker raised his eyebrows innocently but inside he was sniggering: a human being – noooooo
“Really, a human being?” he snorted bitterly – not dragging his words was tedious and boring especially when he wasn’t actually speaking seriously. “I tortured and murdered countless people without a reason…” well, there was a great reason: greeeeat laughs! “You should hate me as everyone else” he sighed “including Bruce” his eyes now were of a puppy’s. “You know, I really care about him…”

Harleen’s eyes were neutral.

“You kidnapped, forced drugged him and attacked him sexually” her voice didn’t contain accusation, just stating the facts.

Very professional, little doc-y, but you can’t kidnap your spouse, can you? Joker thought and scratched his nose.

“You knooooow that I’m a loooost case, right?” he stared at her innocently.

“Nobody is a lost case, Mr. J.”

Joker gave the driest laugh of his life pretending bitterness.

“I believed that I was helping him, you know…”

Harleen didn’t manifest her interest, just straightened her glasses.

“Helping?”

Joker looked at the ceiling.

“I didn’t mean to cause him any damage…it’s just that…” he narrowed his eyes staring at her. “Bruce and I are very much alike” he leaned towards her. “Aaaaaand I’m perfectly aware of how much he suffers eeeeven now – so…I just wanted to help him become like me: be freed from the chains of constant pain…” he brought his palm over his eyes watching from the corner Harleen’s avid attention as if she was waiting to see Chris Hemsworth naked – hehe! He barely restrained his giggles.

Harleen felt that she was very close to something important: unraveling this man’s secrets. Finding the root of his homicidal mania.

“You said you’re much like Mr. Wayne – on what terms?”

Joker shrugged.

“You want my life story, doc? I mean, bееeeyond the murders?”

“Of course.”

Joker nodded and smiled and Harleen actually liked that smile – it was a human smile showing that Joker wasn’t the only aspect of this man.

“You already know that I spent more than a decaaaade in a loony bin…” of course she did, everyone did, because Batman had dug too deep and discovered that skeleton in his huuuuge closet, so there was no problem repeating it. “I knooooow how it is to bееee imprisoned without any hope to escape.”
“This is your similarity with Mr. Wayne?”

OK, Joker, your Oscar winning scene, hihi! He intertwined his fingers and brought them behind his neck looking at the corner of the wall opposite him with a blank stare. He could tell that his therapist was holding her breath which was hi-larious. He sighed and untied his fingers clapping his palms in front of him.

“Let’s say that there was maaaaaany reasons I ended up in that loony bin…and thooose reasons make me so intrigued by Bruce…because he, unlike me” he turned his palm showing his chest “…managed to stay…you know…tooooo normal” he articulated it showing his teeth. “It must pain him tooooo much to be like that having all this shit happened to him aaaand I wanted to free him, to make him forget the pain and laugh…be, you know, happy. Be-cause I know that being normal isn’t any happiness.”

Harleen’s eyes sparkled and Joker coughed supposedly from uneasiness but in fact to cover his laughter: the fish bit the bait.

“Can you elaborate on these reasons?” her voice was professional but Joker thought that she was ready to say ‘please’.

He pinched the bridge of his nose and closed his eyes.

“Hell, no!” he yelled but it was a hurt yell. “I think it’s obvious…aaand frankly I don’t remember much…things are a biiiit foggy” he cackled “maybe I want them to not clear up…” he turned his puppy eyes to her. “You understand, Dr. Harlequin? It’s what fascinates me in that man” well, not the only thing… “I wiped my past and leeeeet my miiiiind go, you know” he rolled his finger around his temple. “I chooooose madness to face my past while he…well, if my suspicions are right, he chose something else.

He pressed his lips.

“I just want to stop his suffering…”

“Every human being has his/her own ways coping with pain.”

Joker shook his shoulders uncomfortable in the mention of pain and his eyes fell on the floor. Harleen’s eyes widened.

“Pain…” the jester said as if thinking deeply and gave a laugh that resembled mostly of a grunt. “You have to live in a lot of pain to being able to cause pain to others” he added in a too serious voice “do you think, Dr. Harlequin?”

He turned his acid eyes to her and – oh! - how much he wanted to giggle unstoppably in the view of the almost on orgasm doctor. She surely felt that had come to a great discovery.

“So pain is what drives you to do what you’re doing?”

Joker scratched the edge of his bed that was made from material that couldn’t be used for any lethal purpose – supposedly…

“Isn’t what drives all of us?” he wanted to throw up with that line… Fun was what drove him. “Even if we try to hide our wounds?” his eyes locked with her compassionate ones.

“Talk to me about those wounds” she understood that Joker’s past resembled Bruce Wayne’s past and that made the man so infatuated with him – only if she managed to make him open up…Only if she managed to reform one of the worst criminals ever…

“Hehehe…” well, even as an Oscar winning actor that couldn’t be hold back as Joker read her hunger. Yet he managed to make it sound like a bitter laughter: damn! He was more talented than even himself thought.

He brushed the tip of his nose and looked the young psychiatrist.

“It’d be sooooo ridiculous if I returned to that!” he shook his head in denial. “No, no, nooooooo: Joker is fun…”

Harleen’s eyes were sparkling.

“But you’re not only Joker: there is someone else deep inside you and you work so hard to keep him buried.”

Joker pinched the tip of his nose: that was…oh! And he believed that he was the best comedian…oh! The baby had potential! Indeed, there was someone deep inside him and he – oh! Believe me, doc – was making a really hard effort to harness him from popping and creating chaos…

“I’d rather nooooot – not - talk about that…” you can’t give them at once everything they want: you have to tease them to keep them engaged and drag them the way you want and those shrinks were the easiest prays – he had studied them…

“I don’t want to put pressure on you.”

Joker shook his head innocently showing supposed uneasiness but inside he cocked a sarcastic eyebrow: as if you could, doc!

“I guess…I guess…thank you” he looked her in the eyes.

She smiled.

“It’s nothing. I want you to know that I’ll be here for you to listen whenever you’ll be ready. I think our time is up. I’m really proud for your improvement, Mr. J. Your behavior at the common rooms is excellent and you’ve been socializing enough. If you continue like this I’m going to grant you more privileges.”

Joker didn’t look at her but kept staring blankly at his hands between his folded legs.

“It’s me that should thank you, doc” he said without looking at her – you gave me access to my clowns and that asshole Crane. I can get valuable info.

Harleen didn’t smile but her cheeks were hot – she was proud of herself for making Joker say such things but her experience also warned her to be careful.

“You don’t have to, Mr. J – it’s my pleasure to be of any help.”

Now Joker looked lopsided at her arching an eyebrow. Youuuuu beeet you are…

“You really care about a baaaastard like me, uh, doc?”

Harleen stood and gathered her phone shutting the recording.

“It’s the reason I’m here, Mr. J – you can trust me” her eyes widened in sincere interest. “Remember that.”
Joker smiled loosely feeling his scars asking for blood and nodded.

“I will, Dr. Harlequin…” be certain of that…

“Good night; I’ll see you in two days.”

He nodded and watched her leaving behind the curtain of his curls. Too bad he couldn’t laugh because after the shrink was leaving the surveillance was on again. Oh! That would be so much fun – well, not as fun as when he realized that his Rachel backstabbed him AND befriended with Brucey: oh! That was indeed hilarious! He missed Rachel and her snarky remarks, her don’t-giving-a-damn attitude; but of course Brucey enchanted her as well taking her with him in the other side and now that dork Dent would corrupt her…Hehe! Well, only if he doesn’t get corrupted first… Because Joker knew a good sport when he saw it.

As a difficult, compelling one. Like Brucey…and what he hid…Well, he should be sure, right? He had cornered the loony case, Crane, and would learn what he wanted. And then nothing would keep him in that place and away from his Prince…

“UUUUUGHHHHHH!” he groaned from exhilaration. Who said that Gotham was a grim city without fun? Ask Falcone…

He giggled on the thought of the almighty Emperor of Gotham who relished on his certainty that the boy he was fucking was a blind, weak kitten without nails. Joker’s insides roared: Brucey was a tiger! And between a kitten and a tiger Joker preferred it when both of them came in one pack…

Loki brought fast a popcorn to his mouth but suddenly he stayed with the piece in front of his mouth and his eyes widened interested and sparkling slyly.

He was sprawled in his throne in the great hall of his palace, his legs stretched loosely wide in front of him. A huge screen resembling a plasma TV of at least 100” was playing the video from Falcone’s court, the part where Harvey Dent was dismantling the mobster’s arguments giving details of the cruel abuse Bruce Wayne experienced in his hands.

And then on his mental demand the footage on screen changed to show Bruce Wayne dashingly dressed in front of the hotel that hosted the GCPD’s annual ball.

Loki threw in slow motion the popcorn in his mouth and chewed it slowly watching the man’s moves.

“Wow, boy! You must be really experienced in kinky bed!” he cocked an eyebrow. “Surely you wake filthy thoughts in that suit…or the jeans…or without any of these…Supes must be a very boring bedmate…”

Suddenly the screen became black and Loki rolled his eyes.

“I don’t think this is a blackout…”

A loud thud revealed Thor’s impressive figure… The god of thunder was pissed: that’s not news, Loki thought.

“Well, well, fancy that…Big bro – and I mean really big -, is here: did you eat steroids for breakfast?” he didn’t change the way he was sitting but shoved in his mouth a handful of popcorns.
Thor wouldn’t play Loki’s game; he walked towards his throne taking in his ‘brother’ s innocent stare that was never innocent.

“What are you think you’re doing?” he demanded calmly but determined.

Loki pretended to swallow hard the popcorn in his mouth and his eyes bulged pouting.

“Eating popcorn and watching educational mortal TV…Don’t tell me that now in Asgard this is considered a disgrace?’”

Thor closed his eyes: he knew that Loki was always treated a bit haughtily because he didn’t meet the Asgardian standards and Thor personally didn’t like that. But Loki really didn’t make anything to change that, on the contrary: he constantly provoked everyone.

“I think you perfectly understand what I’m saying” he was looking at the god of deceit. “You were watching videos concerning Bruce Wayne. You were never a dribbler, peeping Tom”

Loki’s eyes bulged and he choked on the popcorns he was eating because he could help but laugh.

“Really, I was not?” he frowned. “How much you know me, brotha!” he snorted. “But I have to admit that socializing with Stark made your vocabulary interesting!” he chuckled to Thor’s dismay and made his big container of popcorns disappear and his eyes became solemn. “It’s this why you turned my TV off? Oh, man! You’re too selfish” Thor was used to Loki’s nonsense so didn’t react to that. “I’m just following the newest trend in Asgard” he opened his hands in the air. “Being infatuated with Bruce Wayne!”

Thor shook his head: they made that and Loki was sly enough to notice.

“Nobody is infatuated with the man.”

Loki straightened in his throne and gave a snake like smile, his eyes stabbing his ‘brother’ sparkling slyly.

“Come on, bro – I’m the god of deceit and that means that I’m cleverer than the god of thunder and the rest” he leaned towards the blond, muscular god. “When something stirs the waters” he rolled his eyes “even if the waters are in fact ice, I immediately sniff it…And there’s much to sniff in Asgard concerning the mortal – even, dear Odin, seems interested in the man.”

Thor crossed his arms and Loki smirked at the bulging muscles.

“Is this the reason you harassed him?”

Now Loki stood abruptly placing his palm over his heart and widening his eyes hurt.

“Harass? That’s insulting! That asshole Stark said that?” he gave his voice a weepy tone.

Thor pressed his lips restraining his irritation for Loki’s act.

“You did meet Bruce Wayne.”

Loki lolled his head on the side, looking lopsidedly at his ‘brother’.

“That boy has a big mouth, huh?” he smiled wickedly and his eyes glimmered gleefully. “OK, scratch that: that’s common knowledge – from what that gossipy DA said his mouth – and not only – must be really…”
Thor had had enough: unfolded his arms and his eyes flashed as real thunders.

“Enough!”

Loki closed his mouth and his eyes along with his entire face became serious and even threatening. He hated it when Thor tried to bully him using his stupid physical strength.

“Don’t mock what that man has been through” Thor lowered his tone but not his determination. “What do you want from him?” he set his jaw and Loki did the same unfazed by their difference in height and mass.

“It’s forbidden to meet a…celebrity?”

Thor tilted his head on the side and furrowed his eyebrows.

“I know you, Loki” he shook his head.

Loki laughed and his eyes were really demented.

“Yeah…I suppose you do so. Well, that little red riding hood told your Iron buddy that some ridiculous things attacked him and I defended him? Giving that the boy has two super hero friends, he is protected in a rather lame way…” he rolled his eyes.

“Just stay away from Bruce Wayne” he knew that it was no use arguing with him.

Loki sniggered and narrowed his eyes with his wide forehead leaned towards Thor.

“Or else?” he hissed.

Thor shook his head disapproving.

“Why do you have to be so pugnacious? You know, not everything has to be settled with brawls…”

Loki yanked his head and clenched his waist with both hands.

“Says the god who lives and breathes for battles… Don’t tell me the mighty, muscular god of thunder is afraid of tiny, weak Loki?” his black eyes sparkled gleefully.

Thor raised his index finger; he was angry, he didn’t like Loki playing him in such a manner but he didn’t want to escalate this.

“Bruce Wayne has nothing to do with you or me or any of our kin – leave him alone.”

He turned his back on Loki and walked the long, plain aisle to the exit while he could just vanish. Loki crossed his arms and followed his brother with his sneaky stare. When Thor moved to pass the exit he let a horrible snigger to accompany his enraged brother’s journey: Asgardians were really pathetic!

The soft breath beside him was the only distinctive sound in his vast, glamorous bedroom. The sound proof walls and windows of the most expensive apartment building were keeping Gotham’s cacophony outside and the heavy drapes left the room in complete darkness.

He had his hands under his nape and stared up at the ceiling; his eyes had adjusted to the darkness so he could make out the outlines of things. The ceiling…the shadows sketched so interesting things there more interesting than the naked breasts of that little dumb nurse Kely.

Thomas had no intention on letting things unfold randomly. He knew how to be patient and lurk but that didn’t mean that he wouldn’t prepare things. So he dressed in his most expensive, tailor made suit, bought an impressive bouquet of red roses and went at the nurses’ apartment – it wasn’t difficult to discover this info, besides he had volunteered in Leslie’s clinic exactly for gaining access in such things.

He cocked an eyebrow in sarcasm.

“I always learn something that interests me…” he had said in his most seductive way to Kely when at opening the door she stayed goggling at her crush-doctor.

Which was the truth: he really learnt everything he wanted. And that was another reason for being so frustrated with his failure to find answers in this case: he couldn’t believe that Brucie was covered so effectively – ugh! All this protectiveness and devotion and adoration made him even now sick… C’me on, he was Brucie Wayne, nothing special then, nothing special now – his only worth was his surname…Falcone spared him only for his last name – to humiliate more the Wayne legacy.

He snorted but the bitch behind him didn’t hear anything just sighed in her sleep. As she was sighing and moaning and whining under him…He had invited her for dinner at the most glamorous restaurant of Gotham and she had blushed, her eyes almost watering for her unbelievable luck…He rolled his eyes.

Then he suggested have a drink at his penthouse and as he guessed she had no reservations for that. Neither for getting laid by the most handsome, interesting, intelligent bachelor in Gotham… He smirked. On the contrary…

He casted an ironic sideways glance to Kely’s sweet, innocent face; her messy locks splayed all over the silken pillow. She begged for more, never getting enough of Thomas Elliot – she melted in his hands. He could see it in her eyes: she would do anything he asked. She was already his devoted slave and he needed such individuals to keep him informed on Thompkins’ movements and maybe later of Bruce’s himself.

His blue eyes glimmered in the darkness as he stared again at the ceiling indifferent of Kely’s bare naked body at his side.

“You thought I was a bully to you then, Brucie? You cried then because I was calling you names and ruined your Tao-Tao. You can’t even imagine what kind of bully I am now and how much more suffering I can cause you…and I WILL cause you…” he mused and smiled satisfied. “Till I ruin you completely as this asshole Falcone failed all these years…”

His sleep was so deep all these months due to the bunch of strong medicines he had to take; so being aware of his surroundings even when sleeping as Ra’s had taught him became difficult – that was the goal of all this medication after all: to get as much as possible rest.

However, even in this lethargic state he felt a mass on him. He was sleeping flat on his back and something, a body, large and muscular was on him – well, that he could figure from the input his half body was giving. A sinking bitter feeling filled his insides before the memories of last night came to complete the puzzle. The words they have exchanged, the hard impact Clark’s words had on him; the sense of resign from everything Clark relating…
Suddenly one new input for the environment was added: two very familiar lips were touching his neck. Clark…

Obviously…He was sleeping with Clark after all. Yet he wasn’t so sure that it was really him. For once, Clark wouldn’t place his heavy body on him; after the incident in Chicky’s factory he was very careful, even afraid in his ministrations. Also, something was off: the lips weren’t as hot as Clark’s and Clark didn’t kiss in that way; not to mention the unfamiliar smell.

He got in battle stance – well, spiritually. As the lips reached the corner of his lips he opened his eyes pretending annoyance for being woken.

“Good morning, sunshine!” Clark’s voice greeted him along with the beloved crystal blue eyes and a big stunning smile.

Yet Bruce’s eyes narrowed and he gasped, his hands grapping the mattress trying to move his body that way. His uncertainty even if proved unjustified afterwards made him keep pretenses…just in case.

“S…Superman, what are you doing?” he asked puzzled and half-hid his supposed fear as a person who wants to put a brave face on and half fails.

“Come on, Bruce, you know…morning glory? It’s your superman, don’t be shy…”

As if…Bruce arched a mental eyebrow but as a front he took a really insulted expression that bordered with terrorized. He was so glad his laptop was programmed to close after an hour of inertia because last night he slept leaving it open with the designs of the new armor… He didn’t know who that impostor was and that was the reason he didn’t call him with Superman’s alias: he didn’t want to betray his secret identity neither to divulge their relationship.

“Are you crazy?” now his voice had a slight tremor either from anger or fear. “How…how dare you? Please, get off me…”

‘Superman’ rolled his eyes and brushed Bruce’s cheek with his lips that now that Bruce was certain that belonged to a stranger felt nauseating.

“You are not completely awake yet, huh? Sunshine? Your man is here.”

Now Clark would never say that bullshit.

“You’re not my man!” and then he rasped and lowered his tone. “Please, Superman, stop that…I’ll scream…”

“Bruce, I can’t understand why you’re reacting like this… I’m hurt. It’s what we’re doing every morning…” he frowned and lolled his head in a completely non-Clark-ish way. “I least I hope so…” he said huskily in a mildly mocking way, as if hardly restraining a jeering snigger at someone.

Bruce smirked but only inside: so Loki decided to continue the game he started with Clark last night. His amusement on the thought of Superman didn’t do his mate every morning was obvious in ‘Clark’s eyes. So obvious that his black eyes almost replaced Clark’s.

“W…what?” Bruce exclaimed. “We…WE?” he snapped as if the idea was crazy. “We don’t do anything like that! Why you’re here?”

Thankfully, ‘Superman’s knees were fixed on the mattress and his considerable mass wasn’t on his pelvis. Loki wanted to be careful.
‘Superman’ looked at him with narrowed eyes.

“Are you kidding me or am I kidding you?” he asked.

“Get off!”

“Superman is your boyfriend; you should be happy for him wanting to play…”

Bruce mentally snorted: so the supposed Superman was speaking for himself in the third person.

“He is not” let’s continue in his way.

‘Superman’ seemed frustrated.

“Drop it, alright? I saw him coming here last night and he was very happy to suck your lips…” Loki stopped abruptly and closed his eyes before bursting in his typical laughter.

“Loki.”

‘Superman’ became Loki and the god of deceit shook his index finger, still laughing amused.

“You’re clever…”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“You’re an asshole!” and then his eyes stared at the floor where Hero lay completely immobile; the bedroom granite tilted floor was replaced from the filthy cement in the alley behind Dolcetto and a kitten lay there, his one eye open but immobile, dead, his tongue hanging. This image had the impact of a full blown migraine and Bruce writhed under Loki trying to escape remembering to hide his true strength. “What have you done to my kitten?”

Loki turned his head towards the animal and shook his head.

“Cool down, babe; he’s just sleeping” he cocked his eyebrows. “I might be an immortal yet cat’s nails really hurt.”

Bruce licked his lips and really put an effort to look at Loki’s face, pretending to be afraid.

“Please, get off me…” he was really shaking - well, it wasn’t from fear but anger yet Loki was unable to read his mind.

Loki supported his body on his knees and rose a bit scratching his head. But then Bruce felt his arms being lifted upwards and strapped to the headboard without Loki laying a finger on him – actually, the god had crossed his arms and just stared at him perplexed; his eyes bulged but a black silken ribbon covered them.

Loki clenched his waist with both hands and regarded Bruce.

“Well, straps and blindfolds truly are amazing on you! Hm…let’s discover other things…”

The buttons of his pajama shirt were slowly undone and Bruce felt sweating and was glad that at least he was not wearing the Black Butterfly, he didn’t want Loki being intrigued by the jewel and search what it was. He was angry but he knew how to act anger and fear together.

“This…this is a sexual assault…” he said trying to control his fearful breath.
Loki pushed the two parts of Bruce’s shirt away and smirked at the view of the man’s naked torso.

“I can see why Supes is head over heels…” he remembered what Bruce had said about the sexual assault “look, babe, at least I tried to follow the other way…and, let’s face it: I’m a god – I know it’s unfair but I can do whatever I want.”

Bruce was furious.

“Please, untie me…I…I…it’s awful…and Alfred could come at any moment…Please, I…I can’t…”

Loki twisted his lips.

“I thought after all these years you’d like going fifty shades of gray – hell, you could write one hundred and fifty shades of gray…” but upon seeing his captive shaking and moving nervously his tied hands, he sighed. “Fine…party pooper!”

Instantly, Bruce’s hands were free and the silk blinding his eyes gone. Bruce brushed his wrists though the straps weren’t very tight: in Falcone’s hands he had endured much worse bonding… He looked at Loki, his heart still beating fast.

“So” he inhaled deeply “you want to have your fun with me” he closed his eyes “no surprise there…”

Loki sat on the mattress folding his legs.

“You told Stark I was with you in the forest and he sent Thor to chastain me.”

Bruce shook his head.

“And you decided to punish me.”

Loki lolled his head on the side and smirked.

“If I wanted that I wouldn’t have stopped, would I?”

Bruce grabbed with both hands the headboard and rose in a sitting position.

“Then what do you want from me?”

Loki shook his head laughing silently.

“You’re intriguing, Bruce…and I like being intrigued. Thor coming to face me for disturbing you, Superman being in love with you…”

Bruce opened his mouth to answer but Loki’s lips were on his silencing him. Bruce shook his head to escape and Loki detached licking his lips.

“Mmm…I get why Supes figured me last night when he kissed me… I know the truth, buddy – I saw him leaving this gorgeous villa an hour ago because of an earthquake in Tibet and…there’s a bag of donuts from a Metropolis’ bakery in your nightstand – Superman home delivery, huh? Not bad at all…By the way, I ate one” he squinted “I hope it doesn’t bother you?”

Bruce regarded Loki interested.

“What do you really want?”
Loki smiled, his straight hair falling from the two sides of his face.

“We’re so much alike, Bruce.”

Not again… Bruce thought exasperated remembering Joker’s same words.

“I don’t see how…”

Loki laughed.

“I was raised by my father’s murderer… Odin killed my father and then to show off his… ‘generosity’ took me under his wing and raised me.”

Bruce had read about that but he’d never believe that that would make Loki identify with him. So he let his eyes show his interest.

“Were you abused?” he asked in a low voice.

Loki stretched his hand and touched Bruce’s chin.

“Nah… Nothing like what you’ve been through… though even without any abuse it’s always the man who killed your father, right?” he winked. “And having all these Asgardians look down on you because you’re not as tall and broad as them and not meet their beauty or whatever standards… well, it doesn’t help.”

Bruce wasn’t one to fall fully for Loki’s sayings; it was the god of deceit after all and he could pretend as much as Bruce.

“What?” Loki asked and laughed. “You think I’m trying to deceive you? Clever boy” he knitted his eyebrows. “That’s another reason, I’m intrigued: you’re not the typical victim” he shook his head “and neither do I. You’re scared but you try your best to not be or at least not show your fear and you’re still smart. And you charm people – look Supes or Thor.”

“Enough, Loki!”

Loki was already looking at the big oval window that opened for Thor to enter. Bruce turned too and if someone was watching his eyes would discern his irritation and… amusement because that was simply atrocious! The first years in Falcone’s hands, when he was still a stupid, naïve child he was praying and expecting that a god would save him… Well, no god or human ever came for him then and now that he was safe… two of them in his bedroom!

“Oh, dear ol’ Thor-i!” he frowned. “Isn’t impolite to burst like this in someone’s bedroom?”

Thor huffed.

“You did the same…”

Wrong answer, Bruce decided to have his own fun already knowing what Loki was going to retort when the god of deceit opened his mouth.

“But I’m Loki, the mischievous god; the god of deceit. Not the noble god of thunder! Bye, bye, darling” he turned to Bruce and he glued his lips on Bruce’s making a dragging noise of sucking. “See ya!”

He vanished in a pop and Bruce let all his annoyance show in his eyes – Thor knew his secret.
“I’m sorry for that” the god of thunder said walking closer.

Bruce leaned to the floor and gently, carefully took Hero who began stirring. He caressed the confused animal and led himself on his chair that in the meantime had reached the bed following his mental order. The chair approached the bulky god and Bruce stared at him calm.

“It wasn’t your fault...though you could just have watched Loki’s movements and not blandly confronted him. That was the reason I told Tony and he notified you. I’m not afraid of Loki.”

Thor nodded with respect.

“I know: fear doesn’t suit you.”

Bruce smiled.

Maybe because I have been so much scared in my life that it doesn’t make an impression anymore.”

Thor pressed his lips and shook his head.

“I ruined your plan, huh?” Bruce regarded him.

“I guess you have a different approach to things. Humans like me rely on waiting and thinking – having special powers and being almighty can afford to be effective without all these.”

Thor squatted to be in Bruce’s level and their eyes locked.

“Your insight and observation were that revealed S.H.I.E.L.D.’s true colors and it was your perfect planning, timing and organizational skills that led us to defeat the League of Shadows and stop them from killing millions of people. With all our super powers combined we wouldn’t have made it without you. There are no words to describe the depths of my respect for you” his fist hit his own heart as a gesture of appreciation.

Bruce pressed his lips.

“You can find many mortals with the same qualities you praise. It was a good thing we had you fighting on our side.”

Thor smiled but he could feel that Bruce was upset and he couldn’t blame him. He couldn’t fight a sense of regret seeing the warrior who defeated a powerful demon like Bagdana being stuck in a chair. However the fact that this man wasn’t thwarted by that and made a titanic effort to come back, honestly gave Thor goose bumps of pride.

Bruce’s eyes were on Thor’s and the god knew that the human could discern his emotions. So he caressed the small kitten in Bruce’s lap; the animal was now fully wake and stretched his legs.

“The little one looks fine…” he said smiling and Bruce nodded. “And you? Are you alright? I know that you don’t want to show your true skills.”

“Loki didn’t do anything apart from playing yet we must be vigilant” Thor nodded “we don’t know if he plans something. But we need to be discreet…” he said arching his eyebrows and Thor nodded.

Someone knocked on the door and Bruce knew that it must be Alfred.

Thorstood.

“I should leave. Give my regards to Tony” he turned to leave but stopped and looked at Bruce. “I pray for your full recovery and wish I’ll get the honor of fighting beside you…I can talk to Eir to apply her healing skills on you.”

Bruce smiled.

“I’ll think about it…”

Thor nodded and disappeared in a pop.

“Come in, Alfred” said while buttoning his shirt: he didn’t want Alfred asking questions and be worried.

He had made his decision: as much as he was content here, at times feeling as if he was another person he had to return to Gotham. There were too many things waiting for him there.
One by one Bruno Mannheim’s lieutenants left the warehouse under their boss’ disgusted figure: they were used to his arrogant attitude but they couldn’t imagine that this snobbish tactic actually stemmed from his disgust about humans in general – they never imagined that the sturdy gangster wasn’t one of them.

A woman seemingly at her fifties approached him respectfully. She was dressed in dark blue pants and shirt; her hair short and a dirty blond. She bowed to him and Mannheim gestured to her to rise.

“I can’t wait for the day you’ll squash those idiots like bugs, great master” she said, her lips horribly twisted in such disdain as if she was experiencing nausea.

Bruno cocked his eyebrows.

“I always need expendable slaves… To do the things that must be done and then offer me the entertainment I want by exterminating them. Right, Granny Goodness?”

She laughed.

“Oh, yeah! Killing those humans is all the times a great spree…Like the brilliant earthquake you just sent to Tibet.”

The bulky gangster nodded satisfied and tightened his fingers in a rock-shattering fist.

“I wanted some satisfaction on that stupid human race!”

Granny Goodness moved a bit closer.

“For the failed attack on Bruce Wayne” Mannheim cast a lopsided glance at her. “Next time if you honor me I’ll be glad to bestow you the human: it’s obvious that that worthless demon it’s incompetent – not to mention that maybe he’s sabotaging your plans” her voice was low as a snake’s and her eyes glistened maniac.

Darkseid keeping the gangster’s form paced to the depths of the warehouse and sat at a humble armchair.

“Do you really trust that loser?” Granny who had followed him asked.

“He is an ancient demon so he knows humans better than us and he already faced the Kryptonian and his allies.”

Granny crossed her arms and nodded.

“And lost” she croaked.

Mannheim’s eyebrows united.

“And that’s what makes him a valuable asset: revenge. Bagdana is strong enough and has motivation to destroy his enemy” his lips stretched in a bad imitation of a grin. “He wants what Superman stole from him and would do everything to take it back and punish the Kryptonian. Also, I trust his cunning.”

Yet Goodness wasn’t persuaded.
“His plan to capture the human failed miserably.”

“As the raid to LexLab at Metropolis that anyways didn’t lead to my machine. Now we have to expand our search to every LexLab.”

“The failure wasn’t yours, great master: it was of those useless humans: they aren’t even good servants.”

Mannheim nodded.

“It would have been nothing for me to conquer this stupid planet and search the labs but I don’t want to reveal myself to the Kryptonian.”

Granny gritted her teeth.

“Only because that useless demon persuaded you not to; you have no reason to go stealth: you can defeat the Kryptonian and his allies at any time!”

Mannheim was looking at her expressionless, his hands brushing the armrests. Granny Goodness narrowed her eyes.

“He just uses your power to achieve his own purposes” she snapped her head “but your Greatness doesn’t need a loser like him. Launch an attack right now and this lame excuse of a planet will fall immediately and Superman will kneel before you begging for mercy.”

Mannheim rubbed his chin.

“I definitely prefer your version” his lieutenant grinned gleefully. “Yes…the Kryptonian kneeled before me begging as his human mate will be burned and chopped tiny piece by tiny piece…”

The woman almost drooled.

“I’m sure that human will be perfect for torturing: the more beautiful they are the more beautiful the spectacle when they are tortured..! If I was the head of that attack, now the human would be yours to do whatever you want…”

“And you’d have Superman, Ironman and their allies hot on your tail searching everything, connecting dots and finally kick you out of Earth having suffered a really humiliating defeat” Bagdana’s voice echoed through the warehouse just before the demon emerged in a loud thud.

Mannheim looked grimly at him and Granny rolled her eyes.

“Humiliating defeats are your thing…” Granny spat at him yet Bagdana was staring at Mannheim ignoring her completely.

“If I had let you do as this woman tells I wouldn’t have been doing what I should: securing your victory. And your victory is my main concern…”

“Your main concern is taking Wayne!” Granny interrupted him haughtily.

Bagdana didn’t even grace her with an acknowledging glance but kept looking at Mannheim.

“I never denied it but this is what makes your victory my main concern also: we both take what we desire. You’ll take that pitiful planet and Superman’s death and I, Superman’s punishment and Bruce.”
Darkseid regarded him with narrowed eyes.

“Still I’d prefer it if the Kryptonian at his dying moments suffered even more watching unable to do anything his bitch being tortured slowly to death …”

Bagdana pressed his lips.

“Bruce is nobody’s bitch! And believe me Superman’s passing will be more torturous if he knows that Bruce will be mine.”

Granny Goodness snorted.

“A demon falling for and running behind a human’s ass is pathetic…”

Bagdana grinned and his red eyes shone really menacingly when he glared at Granny.

“It’d be more pathetic if someone like me gave a shit about what someone like you thinks…” his laughter was spooky and spine shattering and Granny just twisted her mouth in deep hatred.

Bagdana turned to Darkseid.

“You need to have your lackeys raid other labs except Luthor’s.”

He raised his eyebrows.

“Give me a reason why I should make a detour from my real target” he said bored.

Bagdana walked closer.

“You don’t want suspicions that someone is looking for something Luthor has…and you don’t want anyone taking your machine and ruining all your plans.”

“And who might do that?”

“A great detective” Bagdana hissed remembering how Bruce discovered that the League of Shadows and the S.H.I.E.L.D. was the same organization.

Mannheim laughed with his cracked way.

“You give too much credit to those humans…”

Bagdana was unfazed by his collaborator’s clear degrading tone.

“After hundreds of thousands years, let me know more about humans.”

Darkseid shrugged.

“Fine…I’ll show once again my trust on you though you failed me once…” his red flames of eyes locked with Bagdana’s “But you didn’t really want that attack to succeed, right?” he sniggered and Bagdana’s face became expressionless like a rock made of granite as the color of his body. “You just wanted to scare your little pitiful human and you manage to bring that Amazon near Superman giving him another ally.”

Bagdana smirked.

“Let her to me.”
Granny gave a loud snort looking at her Master but Bagdana just vanished.

“Gotham’s climate might ignite severe pain in your healing injuries and bones” Leslie had said strictly professionally but with her eyes filled with disagreement and worry.

He had announced his decision to return at Gotham during the breakfast; he had uttered it completely calm, almost indifferent but definitely adamant.

He noticed Alfred’s hands clenching tighter the towel he held despite the fact he kept his composed expression; Selina who was feeding pancakes to Hero had raised her eyes and just looked at him. At his long time friend’s eyes saw understanding, deeper understanding, empathy, and trust – she would always support him, no matter what.

Tony stayed with the pancake in front of his mouth; he had remained there during the night in case anyone tried a new attack. He dropped the delicacy to the plate and rubbed the bridge of his nose. His disapproval was more than evident. He stretched his hand to show Leslie.

“The doctor has just said that Gotham is not the best choice for your condition right now” Tony told him stabbing him with his fervent black eyes. “I can’t understand your rush, buddy… I really can’t…” he shook his head. “Lucius and I are taking care of everything at the Enterprises. I just can’t find a good reason for you to go back now: you don’t like it here?”

Of course he loved the place. His gaze wandered to the peaceful horizon that had provided the scenery for some of the happiest moments in his life. Fall was at its third month yet the weather was so sweet and the sky still had the clear blue color missing any clouds since the strong winds made the horizon unbelievably bright. The sun was shining but too gently offering sweet warmth and still sparkled on the crystal waters that formed small waves crushing at the shore offering a melancholic soundtrack to his thoughts.

The light breeze caressed his face with a pleasant, warm salty smell and moved his locks that have got slightly longer than usual. He smiled fondly remembering when after he woke up from the coma Clark cut his hair: the Man of Steel was just caressing his locks and a white light removed the overgrown hair – well, not much…Because Clark was in love with his locks and didn’t want much of them discarded… Thinking of which, Bruce doubted that Clark binned even a hair…probably he kept his locks in a super-secret section of the Fortress.

Something clenched his chest and he turned slightly his head to watch Hero playing with some dry seaweeds – he smiled.

Alfred had driven him to the village because he wanted to bid goodbye and thank the people he had met all this time. Everyone had treated him as if he was one of their own: not like a filthy rich guy, not like a poor victim – without pity and disgust battling in their eyes. For them he was just another human being. And Bruce really could socialize with ease among them without feeling a painful knot in his stomach and an urge to run away.

They had their last coffee in the small table under the huge plane tree in the middle of the village’s square: Selina, Leslie, Alfred, himself. The wide, ancient tree’s leaves had turned a brown orange color but stood on the branches moving slowly on the gentle wind; their concert was so beautiful and calming but a bit sad as if they were also saying goodbye.

Mrs. Suzana once again brought them her delicious ‘mpougatsa’, hot from the oven, and Bruce invited her to have a coffee with them which action made Selina cast him a really shocked stare.
Well, Bruce was sure that Argiris wouldn’t have told his mother about his affair with Selina…though Mrs. Suzana wasn’t an idiot.

Selina loved watching Argiris clean the beehives. And she did just that: stood behind a tree and gazed at the beautiful young man working with concentration and devotion. Of course he had no chance to feel her presence: she was Catwoman.

When she had had enough watching distanced from the tree and walked elegantly to him.

With the first sound Argiris turned to her smiling and his smile was so beautiful and earnest.

“Well, hello, Selina! What a beautiful way to start my day!”

Selina reflected his smile but her eyes were a bit shadowed.

“I’m leaving, Argiris; in two days…” she said without delay and saw his sparkling eyes fell.

He pressed his lips but nodded.

“I hope it isn’t something concerning your friend’s health…”

Selina loll’d her head.

“He is just homesick…” she chuckled and gestured to the wild environment drenched in morning light. “He loves the place as all of us but he got nostalgic…it’s been months since he last saw his city.”

The youth nodded.

“I understand: he was violently taken from his house” Selina frowned “and then what they did to him damaged him so much that he had to stay in rehab for too long” he smiled and caressed with his thumb Selina’s cheek. “And just when he got back to his home after eighteen years.”

“So you know who he is…” she said grinning slyly.

“I may be a beekeeper but I have an internet connection and…watch the world news.”

“But you didn’t say anything…to anyone. I mean, there weren’t hoards of paparazzi surrounding the villa.”

Argiris nodded smiling.

“No, obviously…I’m not the type to feast on a man’s tragedy and need for peace and happiness. And Bruce needed that so much, huh? After all, I’d be ungrateful.”

“Ungrateful?” she loll’d her head squinting.

Argiris moved closer.

“Thanks to him I met you…” his eyes shone and he swallowed. “I’ll miss you…” he smiled “I mean, I wish you would stay for the winter: it’s so beautiful in the island during the winter, people get so close…”

Selina got closer finding a warm niche in his chest and locked eyes with him, her eyes playful.
“I thought we were already close…” she wrapped graciously her arms around his neck.

Argiris chuckled and winked.

“Time to say goodbye then?”

Selina shook her head.

“In the best possible way, handsome!” she captured his lips in a passionate kiss and he closed her in his strong arms rubbing tenderly her back.

“You’ll miss me?” he breathed quickly before resuming their kiss with more vigor.

Selina moaned and ran her fingers in his rich locks.

“Oh, boy..! You know I will…”

His lips were sucking her neck the way she liked so much and Selina grabbed the hem of his T-shirt lifting it till he pulled off the annoying cloth himself. She felt the firm muscles almost desperate as Argiris unbuttoned her shirt and opened it to kiss the flesh that came out of her bra.

“But you’re a free spirit…” he mumbled “a wildcat that can’t stay in one place…”

Selina laughed as his hands undid her bra freeing her breasts exactly when she opened his jeans and groped his buttocks.

“You know me so well…”

“Thank God, Mrs. Suzana gave me the recipe for her wonderful ‘mpougatsa’ because Master Bruce devours it every time…” Alfred had commented with his disapproving tone because forgetting manners his young master had dived into the delicacy like a famished kid. Yet everyone could easily discern that the butler was enjoying the spectacle.

“Though it won’t be the same as when eating it here under the old plane tree…” Bruce had answered and Alfred nodded.

After they took Leslie back to the villa, he had asked Alfred to bring him in this beach. Selina didn’t come along: they exchanged a full of meaning glance. His friend had her own good bye to bid…

Alfred was reluctant to leave him here alone.

“Do you consider it prudent to stay all alone here, Master Bruce? After what happened yesterday?”

He smiled.

“I don’t think that they’ll try a new attack so soon. They need time to reorganize…if, of course, hitting me was their true goal.”

Alfred slightly frowned.

“What are you thinking, Master Bruce?”

He had twisted his lips.
“Not sure, Alfred. But life has taught me to take nothing as it seems” Ra’s had seemed like a compassionate angel who cared for him and was going to save him – and Bruce was so utterly wrong.

However Alfred still cast apprehensive glances around as if estimating the possibilities of that beautiful scenery turn into a death trap. Bruce knew that he had teeth biting his guts in the notion that his young master would stay here on his own.

“Alfred” he slipped from the jeep’s opened door his butler held to the chair. “This marvelous chair has a perfect security system that in the unlikely occasion of a new attack will immediately set off the alarm for Superman and Tony to rush and save me. And the chair will cocoon me into a nice shield that will protect me till the cavalry comes” he was smiling in good spirit yet the thought of Clark and Tony rushing again to his aid made him feel uncomfortable.

Alfred leaned to look him in the eyes.

“You won’t deactivate the shield this time?”

His face became serious if not slightly annoyed.

“Tony told you?”

Alfred grinned in his wicked way.

“I’m not a detective but I have some deductive skills – fairly good if I am permitted to say” the butler arched his eyebrows. “Master Kent wouldn’t have been so angry and” he cleared his throat “scared if you were all the time shielded.”

Bruce eyed him affectionately and nodded.

“I won’t deactivate it” he replied. “I promise you.”

Hero jumped from the seat of the jeep to his lap.

“You see, Alfred?” he chuckled. “I won’t be all alone after all.”

Alfred shook his head disapprovingly and brushed the kitten’s head.

“Master Hero’s protective presence is a huge comfort, Master Bruce. Absolutely.”

Though the morning was anything but cold, Alfred muffled his back meticulously in a cardigan but didn’t move to the driver’s seat and Bruce knew that he wanted to say something.

“Well?” he prompted him.

“Master Bruce, please do not think that I’m try to influence your decision or something, but we can stay here more… A couple of months until you’re fully recovered.”

Bruce looked him in the eyes truly touched; finally, some warmth ran in his veins.

“So, Alfred, you believe that I will walk again?” he asked.

Alfred gave an absolute nod as if even thinking the opposite option was despicable.

“Of course, Master Bruce! As a matter of fact I believe that you can achieve everything you want.”
Bruce’s eyes had sparkled and a smile stretched his lips: at last, a vote of confidence.

“My reasons for wanting to quicken my departure aren’t solid enough for you, Alfred?” he, as the rest, had witnessed his discussion with Tony during the breakfast.

Alfred had seemed fighting to keep his nonchalant attitude but in the end he bit the inside of his lip. It was rather a “blink and miss it” thing but after the years he was kept away from Alfred – the last surviving member of his family – Bruce had become very observant of his every, tiny reaction; from the first time he reached his old home from the tunnels.

“They are solid, Master Bruce, and as always very noble. It’s just that…” he hesitated because he didn’t want to show his emotions. “Sometimes for me your wellbeing and happiness comes above every solid reason” he pressed his lips. “I think the same goes for Master Anthony too. And you’re happy here…”

Bruce lowered his eyes and caressed Hero: Alfred’s sadness even so finely covered made him always regretful. He could hear Alfred’s loving thoughts: here you’re happy and careless as a young man should be, Master Bruce; as if your dreadful, horrible past is obliterated…

“Am I wrong, Alfred?” he raised his eyes to meet his butler’s.

Alfred inhaled deeply.

“No, Master Bruce, you’re perfectly right in your reasons; after all, it’s your life and it’d be awful if the people who care about you tried to use their affection to direct your life as they want, even if they believe that this would be the best for you. You’re not wrong, Master Bruce, but sometimes I get as selfish as to wish that you were a bit more wrong in your reasons…” he gave a tight lips’ smile.

Tony wasn’t so mild in his reactions.

“Yeah, buddy, I don’t see the reason for this rush.”

“How about the rumors that circle Wayne Enterprises and destabilize our steady course? They whisper that I’m dead and immediately the shares fell.”

Tony ran his fingers through his untidy hair.

“It was a very small decrease and after Lucius refute the rumors, the decline was easily recovered” Bruce could see him thinking that they shouldn’t have allowed him a laptop.

He pressed his lips.

“And the next time? The more I stay hidden when such rumors fly around the more gravitas those rumors will get” Tony sighed and averted his eyes from Bruce’s. “I don’t think that we should risk all the good things we established till now – it’d be a pity.”

Tony gulped and cast a lopsided glance at Bruce under his frown.

“Lucius and I have things under control – the only thing that should concern you is how to spend your time here in the best possible way.”

Bruce shook his head and Leslie cleared her throat.

“I think that Tony is right, Bruce” she met his eyes. “A few stupid, malign rumors shouldn’t make you disregard your recovery.”
“But I won’t!” Bruce set his jaw. “Returning to Gotham doesn’t mean that I’ll neglect my recovery…” he saw Tony shaking his head exasperated and Leslie had the same cut-the-crap expression. “As for what both of you fear” he continued determined acknowledging the elephant in the room “it seems that even here, in this peaceful place, has found me.”

Selina nodded arching her eyebrows.

“Obviously…” she said slyly.

Bruce looked towards her and nodded.

“And I don’t want whoever attacked me doing it again here putting in grave danger the innocent people here” Tony was pouting and tightening his lips constantly looking at his fingers drumming the table. “Also” he lifted his voice pointedly towards his friend and Leslie “being in Gotham would make it easier and faster for you to come and save me if needed.”

Selina lolled her head widening her eyes towards Bruce but he instantly met her stare communicating that he was perfectly safe with her guarding him but he had to play along with the superheroes’ arguments. She shook her head amused and gave another pancake to Hero.

But Tony’s eyes were strangely immobile and blank.

“You want to persuade me” he cocked his eyebrows “that your safety is one of the reasons that make you rush your return in Gotham?” his voice was filled with sarcasm.

Leslie was looking at him too while Alfred nonchalantly dusted the kitchen bench.

“My safety isn’t your major concern?” Bruce inquired.

Tony crossed his arms.

“And you use it against me…” he snorted.

Bruce frowned and narrowed his eyes.

“Against? Seriously, Tony…”

Tony stabbed him with his eyes.

“Exactly! You use our fear and our need to keep you protected in order to get back to Gotham” he stood “while everyone here knows what you’re planning to do there! Which is anything but ‘safe’. Oh, you’re very manipulating, little guy! Busted, kiddo?”

Bruce looked him calm while he acknowledged Leslie’s kind of furious expression.

“So, you deny that in Gotham you and Superman will be able to intervene faster?”

Tony had crossed his arms and was staring at him pissed.

“OK, Tony” Bruce continued, nodding. “I confess that my own safety isn’t my major concern, though I definitely don’t want to be captured or killed by who knows who. But it is your major concern, right? So I just pointed to you that my decision would suit you too.”

Alfred was now watching avidly. Tony inhaled deeply and stared at the floor before turning his eyes back to him.
“Will you promise that you won’t make an attempt to don the cape and cowl?”

Bruce knew that Selina rolled her eyes even without seeing her: she was fully understanding that asking him this was…unthinkable. On the other hand, Leslie had her lips pressed.

“It’s like me asking you not to be Ironman again” he tried to reason.

But Tony snapped his arms in the air and huffed.

“I’m not the one with the shattered spine! For fuck’s sake!”

His friend turned furiously his back ready to storm out of the kitchen and Bruce just couldn’t stand to see him leaving like this.

“Tony, don’t go” he said and he felt exactly as the day the 14-year-old Tony was ready to leave from the Manor angry at him.

And Tony stopped at his trucks, his hands pressing his locks. He closed his eyes and then he turned looking at Bruce: the fact that he now towered over Bruce made him recall the last Christmas they had spent in the Manor – eighteen years ago. The younger man saw it in his eyes.

Bruce licked his lips nervously.

“I don’t want you to leave angry…I don’t want any negativity between us, Tony” he lowered his eyes. “It’s a tight, burning knot in my guts” he chuckled – and not the only one…

Tony lowered his head: nice, you help so much things, Stark – his regret shone in his puppy eyes.

“I promise you that I won’t do anything foolish” Bruce continued. “I know how bad things are, Tony…and I’ll wait. Till your bionic parts give me back my mobility and till I’m ready. Is that reassuring enough for you? But don’t ask me to promise things I can’t and I don’t want to do – don’t ask me to deny who I am.”

Alfred drew some air because he was holding his breath during Bruce’s speech.

Tony kneeled before his friend and grabbed his upper arms; his eyes were almost tearful.

“I could punch myself for that knot in your guts because – damn! – I swore to smash everyone that would make you suffer again” Bruce smiled and Tony couldn’t help himself but reflect it.

“We don’t want your admirers crestfallen if your face is bruised…” he cocked an eyebrow.

Tony shook his head thoughtful.

“I wouldn’t punch DAT face” he gestured to his face. “That piece of art can’t be hit even by myself” he sobered. “You know how much fear I felt those past months? And that new assault…And thinking of you rushing to don again the cowl…”

Bruce locked eyes with him.

“I won’t rush things…” if I don’t have to… “And definitely I won’t engage in anything dangerous.”

Bruce could say from Tony’s look that his friend didn’t trust this ‘anything dangerous’ but decided to not press matters more. Tony patted him in the shoulder and stood.

“I must fly to Malibu: Peps was bitching ‘bout a meeting and that I have to make some homework…”
Leslie, I’ll send the helicopter to give you a ride to Gotham."

Leslie stood up and came by Bruce’s side.

“Give me some hours: I’ve got to examine again our bad boy…”

Bruce turned his head with an expression filled with dread.

“Not again…”

Tony chuckled and winked at Leslie.

“Go, Les! Punish him! When you’re ready, just call Happy: my helicopter is at Limenas’ private airport. See ya, kids!”

Seagulls were still crying in the sky even though the summer was gone. As much as he enjoyed the presence of his loved ones, sometimes he longed to be alone – another leftover from his captivity. He felt guilty for wanting to stay alone: they loved him so much and he had the feeling at times that he failed them. He remembered Alfred returning to the driver’s seat when he said that didn’t need help to approach the shore.

Bruce pressed his lips: facing criminals was easier than facing regret for causing sadness to Alfred. The good man had remained for some time hesitant to leave him alone even after Bruce reached the shore (the chair had the quality to adjust to every possible terrain to ensure easy movement). He could see Alfred sighing defeated before he started the engine and left to make the preparations for their departure.

Alfred like Tony was afraid of what Gotham would do to him. Alfred wanted for him a life that would be always as in this island. Crossing everything else, leaving only carelessness and bliss.

Bruce yanked his head and inhaled the fresh air: he couldn’t do this. He couldn’t just ignore everything else. He should return, he need to get back. Not only for his company, not only for the safety of the people here, but also because he missed his city… Even though leaving this place and the wonderful times he spent here was painful, seeing again Gotham was pressing.

And then there was another aching knot to be added: last night…

He grabbed the armrests and slipped his body on the sand. He placed his legs in the right way using his hands, his lips constantly pressed. Being paraplegic was difficult for him as for every other person yet it was the way Clark treated him lately that made things so much worse.

“Are you jealous?” Clark had asked him last night touched because – hey! – the emotional crippled Bruce felt jealousy for his boyfriend; also, the Man of Steel was amused with a bit of self-satisfaction and pride.

Oh! Clark… If only this was what you call ‘jealousy’… He gazed at the bright horizon – even that sun wasn’t enough to lift the gravestone over his chest. He recalled bitterly the first time after his waking up: Clark was always happy seeing him while now…

He grabbed a fistful of sand and let it slip slowly between his fisted fingers watching its fall. Maybe it was his own emotional turmoil that he reflected on Clark or maybe it was true that Wonder Woman’s sudden appearance worsened things – maybe Superman realized that someone like him would be better with someone like her.

Bruce bit his lip but the bite in his heart was more painful. Loki told him that Superman had run to Tibet to help people after an earthquake. And he searched at the net for news...Superman was there helping to draw people out of the debris, tireless, his beautiful features tense and dusted. But once again he wasn’t alone: the new protector of humanity was there to assist him... A merciful goddess along with a god of benevolence saving humans together... to eternity.

He opened his fist and the rest of the sand fell abruptly. He rubbed his forehead: the image of Clark’s scared face as he was ready to claim Bruce’s body cracked once again his heart.

A cute meow dissolved the images and made his lips twitch in a smile. Hero had come and was looking at him claiming his attention. Bruce patted his thighs and Hero hopped there.

“Are you hungry, Hero?” he stretched his arm and took out of the chair’s pocket a small packet of cat biscuits.

He filled his palm and offered it to his small friend who binged on it since it was his favorite flavor. His other hand filled his own legs: all these months that Clark massaged him Bruce had memorized the route of the still operational sensory neurons.

At first, he caressed the spots and the tiniest of feeling warmed his heart so much so that he began pinching the flesh and hitting with his fingertips. He closed his eyes: it was so exhilarating feeling pain there! If only this sweet pain expanded to the rest of his legs...

Hero had stopped eating and was looking at Bruce’s hand hitting his legs. Bruce frowned at him.

“Don’t tell me you’re gonna RAT me to the others? You’re a cat, remember?” he chuckled and Hero rubbed his head to Bruce’s hand.

Suddenly, in a flash Hero was off his legs and he was trapped against a chest of steel; two powerful and simultaneously tender hands were cupping his head and hot, sweet lips captured his, ‘eating’ them greedily with despair, with longing. Bruce’s heart was flapping from excitement. The past months he had learnt to manage his oxygen supply so to not come short and panic Clark. That permitted him to follow Superman’s pace and enjoy the sensation, prolonging Clark’s pleasure. Bruce’s eyes were wide sucking his mate’s every reaction: Clark had his eyes closed in a way that betrayed both relief as if he had just found safe haven after a horrible storm, pain and hopelessness like he was afraid of his safe haven being lost.

Clark’s hands that were covered with dust from the debris and...blood caressed his cheekbones and then his cheeks with harsh movements that became gentle and then again fast, almost painful, as his kiss that had become fiery, almost savage. It was obvious that the Man of Steel wasn’t holding back and Bruce was determined to take everything.

He was feeling the hurt burning inside Clark and a bit of shame for the personal hurt that taunted him till now. He wrapped his arms around Superman’s shoulders and rubbed his exhausted muscles – exhausted not from physical activity but emotional burnout...

Now those dirty hands that held life and death in the demolished buildings in Tibet were roaming Bruce’s torso, under his blouse, bruising but Bruce didn’t moan, even if sensing the half dried blood of other people was gripping his heart bringing flashing images of his parents’ bodies; Clark was exploring every inch of his torso, massaging, claiming, securing...

He even proceeded below Bruce’s waist following the paths he knew that would offer sensation to the human: Clark needed to feel life even in Bruce’s damaged body. He pumped the flesh that still could feel wanting desperately to arouse the rest, unresponsive part; as if the non-functional neurons would be jealous and wake...
Bruce moaned into the kiss as the flood of sensation in that part of his body after the long sensual drought was overwhelming. He didn’t want that to end and he could last without oxygen for a couple of minutes more so he didn’t manifest any sign of discomfort yet Clark was so proficient in discerning Bruce’s vitals that halted before the looming burning in Bruce’s lungs began. However his lips continued touching Bruce’s lower lip.

Bruce caressed his cheeks and Clark for the first time opened his eyes. He kept massaging Bruce’s legs enjoying the sensations that were sent to Bruce’s brain. Bruce’s lips were laying passionate kisses to his dusty face and Clark didn’t want dust to his lungs so cupped his face and held him.

“I’m dirty” he said with a throaty voice.

But Bruce’s eyes sparkled and he kissed his palm.

“Thank you!”

Clark dove in those mesmerizing eyes.

“For what?”

“For saving all those people in Tibet.”

Clark swallowed hard.

“I was late for many of them…” his voice cracked. “When I got to them…they were dead… mangled…crashed…”

Bruce understood: Clark relived his nightmares.

“Every time I dispersed the debris only to found a dead…was like…”

“Finding me dead under the factory’s ruins…” he completed for him.

Clark nodded.

“But you saved people as well – people that would have died weren’t for you…”

Clark’s fingers felt Bruce’s warm face.

“Yes…But each time I found someone dead I felt like abandoning every effort – how you, humans, manage to go on? The rescuing teams were tireless, tenacious…” he shook his head “heroes…I had to rely on external strength to continue…”

“Princess Diana…” he said calmly and Superman smiled.

“No, though she made an amazing work my strength came back after searching and listening to the most wonderful sound in the entire universe: your heart beating.”

Under the thin layer of dust Bruce could see the red color over Clark’s cheeks; he pressed his lips.

“You wonder how the people in the rescue teams can continue despite the constant death they encounter: each one has something similar to get his strength back in difficult moments – a silver lining” he tried to change the subject because he felt uncomfortable. “And saving even one life is worthy of every effort.”

Clark understood Bruce’s attempt and mouthed gently his lower lip, sucking as if it was a caramel.
“And you? What gave you the courage to continue all these years under Falcone’s cruelty? A little boy faced with so much…” he asked softly.

Bruce’s eyes filled with shadows yet he smiled steadying his stare at Clark’s eyes.

“Are you interviewing me, Mr. Kent?” he replied playfully.

Clark chuckled.

“A very personal interview that will stay between us…off the record – you know?” he could sense Bruce’s unwillingness to share and brushed his cheekbones. “Well?”

The younger man gazed at the horizon.

“I’m not as brave as you think…” he inhaled. “There were days that I prayed I have died with my parents or when Chill was playing with me in the sewers… There were days that” he licked his lips “I was pondering on ways to…to kill myself” he lolled his head and chuckled “but when you’re 8 years old and watched so closely it’s not so easy…”

Clark’s lips were tight and his fingers caressed feathery Bruce’s slightly overgrown locks.

“What kept me going? I guess… the bats, at first.”

Clark’s eyebrows flew upwards from surprise.

“The bats?” he inquired dumbfounded.

Bruce nodded.

“My cage was a small cave-like formation literally under the ground and was inhabited by many bats. They were my… pets.”

“That was… unhealthy! Your pets?” he cocked his eyebrows. “You weren’t afraid of bats? – I mean, even grownups fear bats especially in a dark place.”

Bruce smiled.

“As a matter of fact I was afraid of the bats – I mean, really scared of them – but Tony helped me to face my fear” Clark nodded, the jealousy for the years Stark shared with Bruce panged him once again. “When I heard the bats in my cage, my dread came back; you see…” he licked his lips “I was covered with blood and in a state of shock so I thought that the bats would bite me or” he chuckled “drink my blood and eat me alive! But then rapidly I realized that humans were the ones I should fear and bats became my… company… my comfort… It was very lonely in that cave” he shook his head “especially when you’re in pain…”

Clark caressed his forehead.

“I was talking to them and I imagined that they answered” he turned his eyes to Clark “it sounds crazy, I know, but for a kid…” Clark nodded pouting his lips. “I was telling them to deliver messages to Tony when the bats went out for hunting and I imagined they brought back his answers” he was gazing blankly at the horizon and then at the sand. “And I was happy believing that the bats kept me connected with Tony…” he rubbed his eyes. “And then I met Selina and I knew that she loved me and cared about me and the minutes I spent with her every night behind the big trash bin it was for me the fuel making my heart continue beating…” he gulped. “Also, it was Alfred’s sad eyes when he was forced to leave me… I knew how much he loved me and suffered because of my suffering…”

Clark cupped Bruce’s slightly lowered head and raised it so their eyes met.

“I want the entire world to know how magnificent you are and how lucky I am to be blessed with your love…” he sucked Bruce’s lips but he could tell that his Star was thoughtful.

Bruce followed into the kiss yet he was aware that what was about to say wouldn’t be pleasant for Clark. He touched his lover’s neck with both hands and Clark kissed those palms that their touch filled him goose bumps.

“Clark, I don’t think that we should give more food to those rumors Vale’s video started” his eyes were dead serious and Superman sighed. “The attack was probably a result.”

Clark detached a bit and sat on the sand.

“I don’t want to put you in danger…” he said morose.

Bruce shook his head; he didn’t want Clark sad and bitter.

“Nonsense! I’m not afraid of your enemies and – listen to me” he touched Clark’s chin piercing his sad eyes with his fervent. “I don’t care about any danger because being with you gives a whole new meaning in my life and I won’t change it with anything. But there’s no need for everyone to know…”

Clark chuckled.

“You love so much secrecy…”

“It will keep safe the innocent people around us.”

Superman ruffled his hair and huffed.

“Is this why you want to leave this Heaven and go back to Gotham?”

Bruce had no doubt that Clark would be aware of his decision especially when he admitted that had listened to his heartbeat. When Clark searched for his heartbeat he was able to hear other things as well.

Clark knew that Bruce wasn’t surprised by his intelligence on that. He nodded.

“Exactly… Listening to your heart made me privy to your discussion with the others. And after Diana helped me and the rescue teams to find and dig out every trapped, I immediately flew back to my life giving sun…”

“You exaggerate…” but Clark glued his mouth to Bruce’s mouth silencing him.

“Don’t go back there…This island with the splendid time difference offered us so many dreamy moments…”

Clark wrapped Bruce’s torso tighter and locked eyes with the younger man.

Bruce’s body tensed and he narrowed his eyes.

“I love this island, it’s like a second home…yet I miss my first home and I want to visit my parents’ graves…”
Clark closed his eyes and sighed.

“Is just that?” he asked disappointed.

Bruce set his jaw.

“You heard Tony…”

“Oh, Bruce… It wasn’t necessary to hear Tony to figure the real reason for your rush to go back. You’re addicted to Batman and now you experience the ‘addict’s panic’!” he acknowledged Bruce’s frown. “You want to go to Gotham to don again the cape and cowl.”

Bruce glared at him and pushed himself from Clark’s embrace. He gestured to his immobile legs.

“Do I look like a man ready to wear again the cowl?” he spat.

Clark clenched his hair and groaned.

“And that’s why you are in a hurry to be again there! To make those STUPID adjustments to your armor and go head first to a new suicide mission!”

Bruce narrowed his eyes and his voice came out cold and low.

“Stupid?”

Clark held his temple rubbing: why was it so hard to find the right words when addressing Bruce?

Bruce shook his head exasperated hiding how hurt he felt from that small word. He used his hands to move his body away from Clark and Hero who was licking his fur run to him feeling his boss’ distress. Bruce caressed the small animal.

Clark punched the sand.

“Damn!”

He crawled much like Bruce had done and sat beside the younger man – Bruce was concealing his vitals from him and that meant suffering.

“Bruce, I’m sorry…”

“You don’t have to: it’s your opinion and belief” his eyes stayed on Hero who pawed his finger.

It was unbearable for Clark when Bruce didn’t look at him yet he didn’t want to force him to, even gently.

“I just know that you CAN’T be Batman again” Bruce’s heart missed a beat and Clark bit his lip; he was ready to add ‘so soon’ to mollify the effect but Bruce’s blazing eyes were glaring at him.

“I’m tired of people saying what I can and what I can’t do: all my life others were bossing me around, demanding and forcing things on me.”

Clark huffed and looked away feeling the pain that nestled in Bruce tormenting him.

“I believed that the fact I escaped from these people’s tyranny would have proved that I’m the one who knows better what I can and what I can’t do. And you know something, Superman?”
Hearing Bruce addressing him like this was like a punch with Stark’s Kryptonite glove but Clark turned his eyes on him.

“I prefer to focus on what I can do and how to manage to do what supposedly I can’t. And I was expecting from you of all people to support me in this effort.”

Clark snapped his hands in the air.

“I do support you, Bruce – you know, I’m always at your side but I don’t want you to risk so much. You’re a human with no super powers” Bruce’s eyes took the attacking jaguar quality that made Clark’s groin rebel. “So…there are limits…”

“Humans are known for surpassing those limits: the fact that you and your new friend are super powered doesn’t entitle you to set the limits for a mere human” he shook his head. “Your super sight oddly doesn’t let you see what a human can do.”

“Is that the problem? My super powers? You’re jealous of my super powers and are you desperate to prove your equal worth?”

Clark expected from Bruce to glare and growl but the younger man just laughed.

“Do I have to prove my equal worth? Because frankly I don’t give a damn about proving anything. As for being jealous of your powers…” he caressed Hero’s head. “You know what Bagdana promised me in order to accept his love and follow him?”

Clark’s heartbeat was audible and his eyes emanated his fervent interest. Bagdana had promised Bruce things to allure him. He wanted to ask but his voice was constricted with agony.

“He promised to give me back Lilith’s wings to fly on my own” Clark knew how strong Bruce’s desire to fly was… “He promised me enormous strength, skills to destroy and take revenge from my enemies and…immortality…” he smiled to Hero who licked his fingers.

Clark remembered and saw again his nightmare while Bruce was in a coma: Bruce had silver wings and he was so happy flying in the night sky. As if he was back home. He felt Bruce’s strong stare and met his eyes.

“I refused even to think about it because I don’t want super powers. I’m fully satisfied with being a mere human” he lowered his voice “and being loved by you…”

Clark’s eyes bulged from joy: damn! Bruce had the super power to make him miserable or extremely happy in a second! He hugged him and captured his lips with new energy and fire. But soon it wasn’t enough and his hands began frantically grabbing the flesh that even under the blouse felt wonderfully warm and firm.

“Hero, go play…” Clark mumbled with his mouth tangled with Bruce’s and thankfully the kitten had the subtlety to obey evoking some laughter from Bruce.

Laughter that instantly became a surprised gasp as Superman pushed the blouse off his torso; Bruce stretched his arms to let him remove completely the cloth and the Man of Steel in a rapid movement was at the same moment naked above the waist. Clark pressed Bruce’s naked body to his relishing the sensation of the hot, firm flesh; his mouth roamed the human’s shoulders causing small moans from both of them because Bruce adored Clark’s body and proved it with his hands’ ministrations over the super human perfect muscles.

“Tell me you won’t stop this time…” Bruce whispered kissing Clark’s earlobe.
His groin was yelling with agreement yet Clark wasn’t willing to let his whims hurt Bruce and the younger man felt it.

"C’me on, Clark! I won’t shatter…"

Superman took his face in his palms and touched his forehead to Bruce’s.

“I just want to feel your flesh on mine…there’s no need for…getting inside you.”

Bruce huffed.

“There is, Clark!”

He was rubbing his torso to Bruce’s agreeing with that but still firm on not finishing it.

“I couldn’t imagine that you would want penetration so much…” he chuckled proud of himself for making Bruce horny and actually asking for the same thing that a couple of months ago detested. “But not now, babe… there will be time for this…”

But Bruce paled; Clar’s words made him feel like a cheap whore though he knew that for a normal person asking from his loved one this wasn’t shameful. Yet he felt horrible… He let Clark dive in his torso, his fiery kisses claiming every inch of his flesh, his hands groping. However Bruce’s hands were detached; plunged loosely in the sand, his eyes on his kitten that played with some stray seagull feathers.

Superman placed him carefully on the sand to ease his mouth devour Bruce’s abs and naval; his rasps burning the human flesh, his palms massaging those delicious pectorals. His groin was in fire but Superman could discipline his body even if his genitals rubbed Bruce’s gently but demandingly. This rubbing was enough for Superman to get some relief and recharge his batteries with Bruce’s revitalizing force.

Bruce was gazing at the sky; it was plain that Clark wasn’t paying attention to him – maybe his mind was elsewhere, maybe he was celebrating his feat to make him ask to be penetrated – fucked. Superman was even sucking his naked pelvis without following the paths that could give stimulation to him.

Clark thought that he asked to make love to him just because he liked being penetrated? He couldn’t feel below the waist, for pity’s sake!

“I wanted you to make love to me not because I like to be penetrated but because you taught me that this can be a pure expression of love and respect. Because that way I’d feel that you see me again like equal and not like a decorative object ready to shatter.”

“You are my equal” Clark’s crystal blue eyes over his face were his entire world now. “Soon I’ll be able to give you again what I did that night in our greenhouse – but when I do you’ll be able to feel and enjoy everything like then. Because your every time deserves to be perfect, Star… When the time comes I’m going to show you exactly how strongly I regard you as an equal!”

Bruce smiled.

“Is this a threat?”

Clark narrowed his eyes and leaned closer.

“No: a promise.”
He lifted him gently and pressed him to his naked body, their hearts beating synchronized, his hands ruffling Bruce’s locks and the younger man was looking him in the eyes with deep love and…with many questions unanswered. Yet Clark was just too mesmerized from these eyes – his lucky Kryptonites.

“You know, Bruce” he said playfully. “For someone who in his dispute with his friend used the point of his safety, being in a deserted beach alone doesn’t make much sense” he winked.

Bruce shrugged and twisted his lips.

“I’m not alone…”

Clark touched playfully his forehead to Bruce’s.

“I don’t see Selina around…”

“Because she isn’t around – she has her own goodbyes to say.”

Clark frowned.

“Then…you are alone with nobody to assist you if something goes awry.”

Bruce raised his index finger.

“First, I’ve got your chair and its shield; second, I wear the Black Butterfly and…although I don’t believe in charms, I have to admit that it does a terrific job. Third, I’m not alone even if the matter of protection is taken into account… Hero!” he called the kitten and gestured for him to come.

The kitten came to him hopping and Bruce looked lopsided at Clark’s amused expression, smiling and pointed at Hero. Clark laughed and Bruce’s heart finally relaxed.

“Yep! Because your kitten is definitely a…Super-Hero!” Clark exclaimed.

Hero lifted his eyes to Superman and meowed as if to agree and Clark stretched his hand to caress his fur only to touch Bruce’s hand that moved to do the same thing. That was definitely an omen! Clark thought and wrapped Bruce’s shoulders grabbing his so willing lips with his own as his Star turned his face to kiss him.

Tony was drumming his fingers on his sleek, silver colored working bench looking blankly down at the reflection of his face. On his right stood a natural sized holographic 3D depiction of a human skeleton.

“Master Anthony, Miss Potts is here” the AI voice disrupted his stupor.

Tony pressed his palm on his eyes.

“Jarvis, tell her that I’m in the shower or some other bullshit…”

“If you want to get rid of me you can just say it, Mr. Stark” her voice was perfectly toned by the clicks of her stilettoes.

Damn, that silent door! Tony cursed his own invention since the doors of the house opened and closed soundlessly which in such cases was a drawback.
Now Pepper stood before him stretching her imposing body.

“You don’t have to corrupt Jarvis too…” she lolled her head.

Tony rose and hugged her placing a kiss on her lips.

“I don’t want to get rid of you, babe – it’s just that I’m not in the mood…”

Pepper arched her eyebrows.

“I noticed that: you were not your known ‘charming’ self at the board meeting. Is Bruce alright?” Tony frowned as if not comprehending. “C’me on, Tony: I mean the assault!”

He ruffled his locks.

“Yeah, I told you so last night.”

Pepper crossed her arms.

“Indeed. Yet your more-than-usual absurd behavior worried me: in Bruce’s delicate condition complications are common.”

Tony spread his arms and nodded as if he has gotten what he wanted; Pepper narrowed her eyes.

“Well?”

Tony crossed his arms and tilted his head on the side; his eyes were too solemn.

“The day after tomorrow he’s gonna return to Gotham.”

Pepper frowned more.

“And?”

Tony sighed and sat again, Pepper sitting at the stool beside him.

“He is supposed to come back, isn’t he?”

Tony punched his own palm and locked eyes with her.

“As if you don’t understand…You know as much as I why he wants to return.”

“To be at his home?” she asked pointing each word but Tony groaned.

“No, Peps! He wants to be again Batman!”

Pepper pressed her lips and her gaze fell on the holograph.

“His condition is still too sensitive for that” she said. “And I don’t think that Bruce is as unwise as you think him to attempt something that would deteriorate things.”

Tony pinched the bridge of his nose.

“He plans on applying adjustments to his armor for enabling him to walk and fight” he cocked his eyebrows. “Relying on me and Lucius to do that” his voice was more than pissed.

Pepper pushed her locks behind her ear.
“For emergencies?”

Tony yanked his head.

“Is there a difference?” he snapped his palms in front of his face. “The fact is that Bruce MUST forget all about Batman and he isn’t willing to do that.”

Pepper touched his shoulder.

“Would you have forgotten Ironman?”

Tony closed his eyes: she raised the same point as Bruce.

“It’s not the same, Peps. He would never be able to be Batman again” he gestured to the hologram. “This is his spine: his lower spine is a mess, his legs carry multiple fractures still healing and most of his neurons are dead.”

Pepper met his stare.

“And here is where you and Lucius enter: the bionic body parts” she smiled. “You can give all these back to your friend.”

Tony’s hands now were fixed on the bench. His eyes were stony and Pepper narrowed her eyes.

“The think, Peps, is that…” he smacked his lips. “I don’t feel like I want to continue with that…”

“What?!” Pepper almost yelled.

Tony inhaled deeply and watched his fingers clench and unclench slowly as his thoughts in sharp contrast with the frenzied thinking pace he was used to in all his life.

“I won’t send him to his death…this time I’ll protect him as I failed then. Giving him back his mobility is like sending him to his death.”

Pepper bit her lip.

“So, you two had a quarrel…”

Tony shook his head without raising his eyes to her.

“No…” he pressed his hair on his head with both hands. “I was pissed, seriously pissed and I rushed to leave but…” he huffed. “He asked me to not leave, to not be angry with him…and Bruce rarely, if ever, asks for anything…so asking that was like…pleading me and I couldn’t ignore him, could I?” he looked at Pepper’s eyes. “So…going against him, arguing and being mad and turning my back on him can’t work.”

Pepper nodded.

“And you’re thinking of…sabotaging his recovery into forcing him to accept his paraplegia and settle with that” her voice was dry and her eyebrows moved “by finding refuge for his energy in your plans to enroll him in Princeton.”

“It’s better being bound to a chair than dying miscalculating your power” he replied equally dryly.

Pepper yanked her head sighing. She didn’t like Tony’s idea: she acknowledged his dread for his friend’s self sacrifice and even felt for him yet not doing his best to give Bruce back his mobility felt so bad.

“You realize that this would hurt Bruce immensely?”

Tony was stabbing the bench with a pen. He nodded.

“I’m willing to take that on me: Bruce is strong. He’ll suffer but he’ll take it and gradually will come back forming his life again in a safe way.”

But Pepper widened her eyes.

“And you do realize that Bruce would immediately figure that you didn’t want to gift him his ‘legs’ back – the life he so much loves: his self…”

Tony closed his eyes.

“Believe me, Tony, from what I know about Bruce this knowledge will kill him slowly and worse than being Batman again.”

Tony turned his eyes on her; he opened his mouth but didn’t know what to say. Pepper touched her fingertips to his lips.

“I know how much you love him and he knows too but if you deliberately condemn him to the chair you’d have killed him.”

“It’s the best for him, Peps; and if hating me is the price for him staying alive I’ll gladly pay it!” he jerked from his stool and paced the room ending in front of the hologram.

Pepper slowly approached him and hugged his shoulders planting a soft kiss in his ear.

“He has the right to decide the best for himself, Tony. He is a young man now, not the small kid you lost 18 years ago: he was taking his own decisions even when in Falcone’s captivity and – let’s face it – his decisions were right. You can’t rob him from his right to decide himself, even if you think that it’s for his best. Bruce trusts you and even now at times looks at you like a small boy with infinite love and respect.”

Tony turned his eyes on her.

“You think?”

Pepper smiled.

“Don’t tell me that Tony Stark faces self doubt?”

He cupped her hand on his shoulder.

“Bruce has such a strong personality that it’s hard to believe that he still regards me like when he was eight and I fourteen…”

Pepper nodded.

“Oh, he does…But if you sabotage his only chance to walk again and be what fulfills him…” she pressed her lips “it won’t be the same; I mean he’ll surely continue to love you but the love you share will be turned into a knife in his guts.”

Tony closed his eyes and Pepper kissed him on the lips gaining his stare.
“Bruce isn’t stupid: he’ll use your gift wisely. All these years he was doing exactly that: using what he had wisely. If you deliberately refuse to help him, I’m sure he’ll respect it but he’ll turn to some other way to reprise what he misses so much” she widened her eyes. “And that could possibly be dangerous and you won’t have any chance to control the conditions.”

Tony nodded.

“He is too stubborn…”

Pepper smirked and snorted.

“Look who’s talking!”

Tony turned swiftly, grabbed her waist, glued her on his body and locked his lips with hers in a quick kiss. He winked.

“I have an hour before my virtual meeting with Lucius and…I bought a new mattress that I want to test…”

She chuckled.

“So you’re still on the project?”

“Devouring your body or manufacturing the bionic spine parts? Ouch!” Pepper had just pinched his buttock. “It’s a ‘yep’ to both!”

He grabbed her hand and dragged her along to the elevator to his bedroom roaring.
Dick was playing with his cereals deep in thought. His grandmother watched him from the opposing chair at the kitchen table.

“Eat your breakfast, Dick: you’re going to miss the school bus.”

The boy raised his eyes at her having made his decision.

“Granny, why you don’t want me to hang out with Zucco?”

Ms. Turner yanked her head and drew a breath; she suspected that Dick never stopped thinking about that man so hearing it out loud wasn’t a shock, just a headache.

“I thought you trusted me?”

Dick shook his head and rolled his eyes.

“That’s not the point! I trust you, granny, is just that…” His grandmother leaned towards him.

“What, sweetheart?”

Dick huffed and leaned his back on the chair.

“He is dad’s cousin and his trainer; in the net I read that they were best friends till dad died.”

Ms. Turner rubbed her temple.

“You’re so interested that you search the internet for him?” her voice was so disappointed that Dick felt bad.

“Your dislike made me curious: I wanted to find out what’s up with him since you didn’t tell me.”

Ms. Turner pressed her fingers on the table and Dick watched eagerly waiting her reaction.

“He continues to bother you…” she said irritated and her grandson shook his head disapprovingly.

“No, he doesn’t!” he protested. “And actually I don’t see why I should avoid him!”

Ms. Turner bit her lips.

“At least till you give me a reason to do that because honestly I don’t find any” the boy lowered his voice. “He knew dad, granny” he continued with real craving “and he can tell me a lot about him and also he can train me to be a champion like my father.”

Ms. Turner felt her heart aching and the air cut in her lungs: Zucco had stretched his web around Dick.

The boy noticed her paleness and worried rushed to her wrapping his arms around her shoulders.

“Maybe you’re wrong, granny; maybe you don’t have to worry so much” he chuckled. “He is only a guy after all…”

Ms. Turner took his hand in hers and caressed it; her solemn eyes found her grandson’s blue eyes.
“He is a bad man, sweetie; he doesn’t care about you, he doesn’t care about anyone. He came all of a sudden to our life because he wants something and believe me it would be bad for us, baby. So, stay away from him, please.”

Dick smacked his lips in disbelief.

“For pity’s sake, granny! Why assume the worst? I don’t say that he cares about me but maybe he just wants to meet his cousin’s son and help.”

Ms. Turner yanked her head, her eyes widened.

“He never came for you from the day you were born!”

Dick crossed his arms.

“Maybe because you have this opinion about him and passed it to mom too” he spat. “And then when mom married Peter he felt completely alienated and didn’t dare to approach. But now that I lost my family he decided to help me cope…”

His grandmother blinked disheartened: the obvious allure this man had on Dick nauseated her. And it was clear that Zucco had met the boy again.

“Is this what he told you?”

Dick’s face became red: he didn’t want his granny realize that. OK, he disagreed with her attitude towards Tony yet he didn’t want her to know that he didn’t listen to her. He lowered a bit his eyes.

“It’s reasonable…” he said hesitantly and raised his eyes to her. “It’s a nice block, granny, and he has nothing to gain from us” he saw his grandmother shutting her eyes “at least tell me why you fear him so much…” he uttered exasperated.

Ms. Turner grabbed Dick’s shoulders and stabbed him with her fervent eyes.

“Don’t believe him that he was a friend of your daddy” Dick frowned. “They hanged out a lot, your dad trusted him, enjoyed his company and for a time Zucco was his trainer but I never got the impression that Zucco really cared about your father. John was already a champion when Zucco persuaded him to hire him as his trainer degrading his old one.”

Dick shook his head.

“But dad won at the Olympics with Zucco as his trainer! I checked that in the net.”

Ms. Turner realized that Zucco had done with Dick the same he had done with John. But maybe she could make Dick open his eyes.

“Your father won the three gold medals because Trevor Breizic, his old trainer, was still in the team. When Trevor retired right after the Olympics your father’s career took a downturn…” she took a deep breath really hesitant to say the next. “His performance in the tryouts wasn’t the best…”

Dick grunted: what now? His granny was trying to ruin his father’s fame?

“Every athlete has some decline in his career!” he spat.

Ms. Turner lowered her eyes because she couldn’t say what she had to say looking at her grandson’s angry and hurt eyes.
“The Federation found illegal substances in your father’s samples during an unexpected doping test.”

Dick jerked away from his granny, his heart was kicking in his rib cage and his face was hot.

“My father didn’t do drugs or doping!” he yelled and Ms. Turner pressed her lips and locked eyes with Dick.

“Your father didn’t and he refused it blatantly; he protested that someone must have sipped the substances secretly in his food or drink” Dick’s eyes widened. “Only one had access to do that…” she nodded. “Your father finally suspected Zucco…you see, his performance’s decline had made John antsy and displeased with his cousin so Zucco to appease him gave him secretly the substances to cover his inadequacy as a trainer.”

Dick was shocked and angry: that couldn’t be truth, this was preposterous. He couldn’t believe it.

“It was proved?” he demanded.

Ms. Turner’s eyes sank because she understood that the boy wasn’t willing to accept it.

“Your father was also unwilling to believe it: he was dissatisfied with Zucco’s training skills yet he loved and trusted him as a relative and friend. He didn’t want to accept that he could have done something so sly…But who else could be? Only he had access to John’s food and drinks.”

“This is your theory! My father didn’t believe this shit and I see why Tony didn’t attempt to approach me earlier!” he snapped at his granny. “I can’t believe you say all these things, granny!” Ms. Turner rubbed her forehead tired. “All these just to keep me away from my father’s only relative – the only person that connects me with him! Your hatred for him is more important than what I want, what gives me some joy!”

Ms. Turner’s eyes flashed.

“Dick! Your wellbeing is the only thing that matters for me!” she almost yelled but her voice cracked: that boy was the only part of her daughter left, the only thing that gave meaning to her life. Her eyes watered and Dick felt a painful pang in his chest and sat in the chair next to his grandmother calmer.

“I know you love me, granny” he said warmly “but because you don’t like that man doesn’t mean that he is bad or he wants to harm me: I’m a big boy and I know to protect myself.”

She cupped the boy’s face and kissed his cheek.

“You’re a big boy but you’re vulnerable, sweetie” she smiled and caressed the boy’s soft cheeks. “You don’t know much about the world and how dangerous some people are… I only try to protect you from learning with the hard way and being hurt.”

“I know everything about bad people, granny…” he couldn’t help but feel a bit annoyed since his granny talked about ‘bad people’ while always defended Wayne. “Better than you…”

The elder woman frowned.

“What do you mean?”

The boy shook his head.

“I bet you wouldn’t have any objection if I wanted to hang out with Wayne although he’s the reason my family was killed! But for poor Zucco…”

Ms. Turner shook her head.

“Mr. Wayne didn’t do anything, sweetheart; try to understand…”

But Dick jerked from his chair avoiding her hands. He groaned.

“You defend him all the time!” he spat. “It’s because of him I lost my family! But you all the time speak so high of him while blame Tony for things without any proof! You keep ruining the only good time I get by accusing and spitting poison for the only man that give me some comfort!” he clenched his jaw. “Dad loved him and Tony loved my dad and everything you say about doping is bullshit because Tony remained my father’s trainer till his death!”

Ms. Turner stood too and placed her hands on Dick’s upper arms. There were more ominous things about Zucco but in Dick’s emotional state she was afraid that saying them now would provoke worse things – her grandson wasn’t going to believe her.

“I’m not making stories, Dick. And I would never play with your feelings: I wish that man was really good for you because the only thing I want is your happiness. But believe me, baby: your mom would have acted exactly the same because she knew that Zucco was bad for John as he is for you. There are things about him…”

Dick was tired of all this discussion and he didn’t want to hear more of his granny’s dislike for the man. He looked at his wrist watch that his granny gifted him for the Halloween and his classmates were really amazed by.

“Are you gonna tell me that he killed my father?” he asked bored keeping his eyes on the watch and didn’t notice Ms. Turner’s sigh. “I’m gonna miss the bus… See ya, granny!” he pecked her cheek and rushed out of the kitchen.

Ms. Turner heard the apartment’s door open and close and slumped on the chair; she sighed again covering her face in her palms. She had to keep Zucco away from Dick but the boy was fascinated by someone who could make him connect with his dead father – and truth be told, Dick was more relaxed those days, almost happy. Yet she knew that this was temporary until Zucco achieved his purpose because there must be some purpose for him to remember all of a sudden the son of his dead cousin: a cousin whom he almost destroyed.

However trying to explain those things to Dick seemed pointless; he was just a hurt boy after all that had managed to find some solace at last. An adult friend, something close to a father: she shivered – no, not that! But presenting the facts to the boy was only leading to the opposite result: Dick attaching more to that man and alienating from her. And she didn’t want that...

Ms. Turned placed her elbows on the table: if Mary was here things would have been easier…Zucco wouldn’t have dared to intrude to their lives again.

Blue and green. That was what he saw through the small round frame of the window; between white fluffy clouds and golden rays of sun. They took off early in the morning because he wanted to arrive at Gotham around noon so the news of his arrival would make it to every TV station and radio. He couldn’t fight off some melancholy as his eyes gazed at the rough sketch of the island that offered him such beautiful moments… And Clark hadn’t come last night.

He pressed hard his lips together: maybe that was an omen for the future; a hand with super strength clenched his heart and his healing lung... Some urgency didn’t allow Superman to come or it was just that Clark was unhappy with his decision to return to the States... A part of him wanted to stay here more and cajole his friends and himself: he took a deep breath.

It was morning when the car stopped in front of Cassandra’s house. It was some days since his health permitted his transfer from the Fortress to Tony’s villa in a place where nobody would annoy him: a place beautiful and peaceful – the perfect choice for someone in need of recovering.

And of course since Marathon was so near, Bruce wanted to meet again the family that had been so definitely connected with him and his salvation.

Alfred had driven him there: he didn’t mention it but Bruce knew that his butler also wanted to meet these people; he was grateful to them as much as Bruce. Leslie had some objections because she felt that it was too early for such a road trip even though Tony’s jet would take them to Athens; yet she didn’t insisted. Both she and Selina stayed at the island not wanting to barge in something personal.

“This is the house, Master Bruce?” Alfred asked him and he nodded.

He stopped the car and helped him sit in the wheelchair they used when in public because the chair Clark had built for him cried that it was made with extraterrestrial technology. Not that Tony’s creation was less perfect.

Cassandra and her mother came out of the house and led them inside where Bruce made the introductions. What impressed Bruce was that they didn’t seem shocked to see him in the chair.

Cassandra’s mother squatted before him and with her polite familiarity cupped his face which move oddly didn’t make Alfred cringe. The woman said something and her eyes were both amazed and touched.

“She says that you defeated the demon – you made it!” Cassandra translated.

Bruce looked at the woman’s eyes and smiled.

“How does she know?” but Cassandra winked to him and he didn’t need anything else. “It was the weapons you gave me and...Nemesis’ help” he said hesitantly because it was difficult for him to utter something that a few months ago didn’t believe – well, there were still times he felt awkward about what he experienced in the guts of the mountain.

But the woman as if she had understood the meaning of his words shook her head in refusal.

“No weapon or charm would have helped if your spirit wasn’t powerful” Cassandra said smiling solemnly.

Bruce remained expressionless: even now, listening to people praising him felt so...he knew that people were talking honestly yet he still had difficulty believing good things about himself.

Cassandra’s mother eyed his muffled in the blanket legs and her warm eyes caressed his. Bruce couldn’t understand what she was saying yet it was as if he knew the meaning.

“Fighting evil always takes an awful toll on the noblest of warriors – those who are willing to give their lives to save others” Cassandra confirmed.

And seeing Bruce’s narrowed eyes expressing his wonder:

“Well, my mother sensed that Bagdana was near you so we kept watching the developments in Gotham. We learnt that Superman brought you back injured and when we heard that Batman stopped Joker from killing those children and that the building collapsed without anyone being able to speak with certainty about Batman’s survival, we knew that you were injured again…” she cleared her throat. “We were aware that you were alive.”

Bruce nodded, looked up at Alfred and then at Cassandra’s mother who now sat on an armchair next to him.

“I died for a minute or two…” he said to the woman’s fascinated eyes; she seemed to understand his words without translation the same way as he understood hers. “Superman revived me but it was the Black Butterfly that gave me the energy to hold on and finally wake from the coma…”

His hand slipped inside his T-shirt and brought out the Black diamond that shone as if happy for reuniting with old friends. Cassandra’s mother brushed with her eyes the gem and closed Bruce’s fingers around it.

“The Black Butterfly did that only because you are the goddess’ chosen…” Cassandra translated. “Despite how hard things look now your willpower and strength will help you win once again: at times, you may lose your hope but your inner strength is limitless and you’ll overcome every obstacle…”

Bruce grinned and locked eyes with the older woman.

“Efcharisto” he thanked her in Greek and her eyes sparkled touched.

Alfred stood from his armchair and bowed to Cassandra and her mother.

“I’d like to express my gratitude to you, madam. Miss Cassandra – without your help Master Bruce wouldn’t have made it and I…” his eyes fell fleetingly but with infinite affection to Bruce “wouldn’t have the happiness of getting back my…” he cleared his throat “young Master. I’m obliged to both of you” he bowed again and Cassandra’s mother nodded solemnly to him as her daughter translated.

Later, after they had a splendid lunch, Alfred drove them to the ancient temple of Nemesis at the hill overlooking the small city and the Aegean Sea. It was Bruce’s request and Cassandra happily obliged; her mother was clearly overwhelmed as she walked inside the ancient ruins.

Alfred pushed Bruce’s chair though it wasn’t necessary and the young man closed his eyes relishing a sense of relief and completion as images of his dream with Nemesis’ priest came to his mind.

When he opened his eyes found both women look at him.

“I have seen this place as it was in the old times” he admitted hesitantly, watching Alfred’s reactions with the corner of his eyes: he was aware that for a rational English gentleman those things may sound stupid. Yet Alfred was watching interested. “In a dream, when I was a captive: I was seeing the temple through the eyes of the priest and it felt as if I was him. I saw the goddess’ emerald eyes and I heard her order me to leave Marathon and Greece to save my life...his life...And then I saw the caves he was forced to take haven to escape his enemies…”

Cassandra was translating and her mother nodded staring fascinated at Bruce who blushed.

“When in the temple” he rose his eyes to Alfred “in the dream...I saw letters engraved in the marble cornerstones...the letters that form my surname” he locked eyes with the older woman and she rose from the stone she was sitting and walked to the four corners of the rectangular place.
Cassandra followed to help her bring back four stones that they placed in front of Bruce whose eyes widened as Alfred’s: each stone had a capital letter carved – exactly like the dream: A Y N E. Bruce watched Cassandra’s mother walking to the center of the temple, gripping another stone and returning to position the new stone before the others: the stone had engraved the rough sketch of a bat with open wings and it was exactly like a W. Bruce felt an electric current going through his back – at least the healthy part of it.

The older woman took first the stone with the Y and spoke, his daughter explaining.

“Yvris: hubris. The crime: the sin of arrogant people whose deeds violate the divine laws hurting humans and insulting Gods” her mother took the stone with the A. “ATI: the Gods intervene and confuse the culprit leading him to new deeds that will lead to…” her mother showed the third stone with the N. “Will lead to Nemesis: the wrath and revenge of the Gods which will finally end to…” the stone with the E “-TISIS: the punishment, the destruction of the offender by the Goddess’ descend. This four words form the truth of justice – the truth of the Goddess.”

Cassandra’s mother placed the stones in creating his surname: W A Y N E. She brushed the stone with the W.

“The symbol of the Goddess Nemesis, the daughter of Nyx (Night). Nemesis fell on her enemies with her wings spread, like a bat…”

“Master Bruce, Miss Kyle, I brought you some juice and brunch.”

Bruce came out of his reverie and Selina patted his shoulder smiling.

“Daydreaming, darling?”

“A bit” he answered and looked at Hero who rubbed his head to his calf as if trying to persuade his master’s dead leg to feel; yet it was the kitten’s purring that notified him of the act.

Bruce took a bite from his sandwich and broke a small piece that gave to his kitten. Which provoked a really disapproving stare from Alfred.

“It isn’t polite dropping crumbs to the floor, Master Bruce…”

Selina widened her eyes and laughed. She had sprawled in the seat opposite Bruce and ate her sandwich.

“Oops! Bad boy!”

Bruce cocked his eyebrows.

“Sorry, Alfred but poor Hero seems to be hungry too.”

The meow and the kitten’s sparkling big eyes piercing Alfred’s came to confirm what Bruce said and Selina chewing her sandwich chuckled.

“They are a gang, Alfred, those two: a ruthless gang!”

Alfred cast a glance at her.

“No speaking when your mouth is full, Miss Kyle!” now it was Bruce’s turn to laugh and the young woman rolled her eyes.

“I’m an alley cat, Alfie!” she said smugly and the butler gave her a disapproving glance filled with affection and walked to the small kitchen of the plane.

Selina slumped on her seat.

“Is everything alright?” she asked her friend.

“Why?”

“I have read that plane travel can be difficult for people who are in recovery.”

Bruce gULped his food and grinned to her.

“I’m just fine: you know I’m more than endurable – it’s not easy to get rid of me.”

Selina’s eyes darkened.

“Not even utter this…”

Bruce cupped her hand on the table.

“Fine.”

The young woman shook her head and looked at the laptop that lay open on the table.

“You don’t get a rest, huh? That’s why you couldn’t wait to get back in Gotham.”

Bruce pressed his lips: he felt guilty because Selina had to leave behind her boyfriend, Arghris. The young man had come early in the morning to say goodbye to Selina and Bruce saw how emotional his usually cool friend was after.

“I’m sorry I became the reason to end your relationship with Arghris. You were so happy…”

She waved her hand nonchalant.

“Both Arghris and I knew that it was going to end sooner or later: maybe it was better it ended now because I wouldn’t want him to get too attached. But” she jerked her index finger “if your return to Gotham gets connected with any funny business” she frowned warningly “I’m gonna tell Supes to grab you and lock you up in his Fortress… or whatever!”

Bruce crooked his lips amused.

“I just can’t imagine you taking his side over mine…”

Selina lolled her head and widened her eyes.

“You need to put your imagination to work, kiddo, because I won’t tolerate you risking your life. You realize it’s too early to open your wings again, right?”

Bruce opened his hands on the table and looked at his legs.

“The reality is a bit too hard to ignore, don’t you think? Sel, you know I’m not stupid” she shook her head “I’m not going to put myself in danger – I know how limited I am right now. But there are things in Gotham that can’t wait. And… you can stay in the Manor to make sure I’m not up to anything bad…”

Selina narrowed her eyes and gave him a sweet smile.
“Nice try, sweetie…”

“Come on, Sel: it was awesome living under the same roof! And what about Hero?” the kitten hearing its name climbed to his lap. “I know you can’t live without him…” he twitched his lips and his eyes shone wickedly.

Selina snorted.

“Huh! So you blackmail me…” she shook her head. “It’ll be a battle for the custody then!”

Bruce chuckled and his friend did the same.

“I don’t know, Bruce…It’s perfect living with you and Alfred and Hero but…” she pressed her lips.

Bruce nodded.

“You need your independency…” he huffed. “I perfectly understand, dear…Just give it a thought, will you?”

“I definitely will…”

Bruce’s laptop beeped and Selina looked interested. Bruce stared at the screen.

“It’s Lucius: we have an appointment through satellite.”

Selina jumped from her seat.

“I buzz off” she winked “I hate business talk…” she took Hero.

Bruce smiled because he knew that his friend wanted to be discreet.

“Thanks, Sel!”

She rubbed his upper arm passing him heading for the other cabin.

“Give Lucius kisses!”

Bruce chuckled looking up at her.

“I’m sure he’ll be thrilled!” he said slyly and Selina pinched his cheek playfully before leaving.

Bruce opened the program and Lucius’ delightful smile welcomed him.

“Good morning, Mr. Wayne! How are you this fine day?”

“Good morning, Lucius. I’m fine. How about you? I hope I didn’t ruin your sleep.”

Lucius shook his head.

“Not at all. I don’t need much sleep.”

Bruce lifted an eyebrow.

“Me too but lately with all these medicine I’m sleeping like a cat…” which reminded him of Selina’s request. “Selina sends you her kisses” he said grinning.

Lucius protruded his lips in bliss.
“Hm…That alone would be enough reason to wake up early even if I wasn’t a morning bird” he chuckled.

“I watched the Wayne Enterprises’ shares’ course from yesterday and it’s quite satisfying.”

“Well, thank you for the compliment…” he frowned. “It was a compliment, right?”

Bruce chuckled.

“Of course, you personally and the rest of the company’s staff are superb.”

Lucius’ face got serious.

“Then you could have prolonged your much needed vacations – recovery.”

Bruce nodded.

“If it was only a matter of trust to you, I’d have had vacations all the time, especially in a place like Thasos…yet there are other things too.”

Lucius pressed his lips and nodded.

“Your donations to various charity foundations in Greece have been arranged as the construction of the health center in Potamia, the village near Mr. Stark’s villa.”

Bruce grinned.

“Those people treated me really wonderfully, Lucius, and the health center is a must: during our stay, a local got seriously injured and weren’t for Leslie who happened to be with us, he probably would have died.”

Lucius cast a lopsided glance to the young man which was full of respect.

“It will have your parents’ name as you asked and a yearly fund covering the salaries of the personnel and the provisions’ cost.”

“Nice. Thank you, Lucius!”

The scientist shook his head and took his glasses off his nose.

“It’s a pleasure for me helping the fulfillment of such noble acts” his voice became hoarse. “Your parents would have been so proud…”

Bruce lowered his eyes: still he couldn’t imagine his parents being proud of him despite the fact that the people that knew them so well, like Lucius, said it all the time.

“You took care of the other thing we discussed?” he asked wanting to change the subject and Lucius smiled.

“Leaking to the press from trusted sources that Bruce Wayne is arriving today under…” he chuckled “complete secrecy at Gotham’s airport?” Lucius lolled slightly his head. “I bet the airport has already started to get swarmed by reporters – brace yourself!”

Bruce chuckled.

“It was my choice so I’ll give them what they want.”
“To gain what you want…” the scientist said smartly inclining his head.

The younger man nodded.

“Exactly. The rumors of my demise that hurt our company will be evaporated once and for all and perhaps we’ll see a shares’ rise after the stability you managed to keep throughout the rumors.”

Lucius cocked his eyebrows, his clever eyes sparkling playfully.

“And?” he asked knowing already the answer.

Bruce’s lips twitched and he squinted.

“You know me so well, huh, Lucius?”

Lucius chuckled.

“Great minds think alike, Mr. Wayne!”

“Now you flatter me… And yes: by showing up battered, paraplegic, bound to a wheelchair will eliminate any possibility that Bruce Wayne gets connected with…odd things, like jumping from rooftops or chasing criminals. Your holograms are a great assistance in that.”

Lucius drummed his fingers on the table, his eyes sober.

“But definitely you’ll want to exploit the paraplegic façade yourself” he stressed out the last word.

Bruce looked at his hand on the table and licked his lips.

“You saw the rough sketches I sent you?” he inquired without lifting his eyes; he was afraid of Lucius’ reaction being as everyone else’s.

When after a second Bruce looked at Lucius the loyal scientist’s face was solemn and his lips pressed and for Bruce that was the indication that he had to act alone. However Lucius turned his eyes to his employer’s and Bruce saw the familiar warmth.

“I think that the modifications you suggest are solid and could counterbalance the obvious difficulties in mobility and the need for extra protection.”

“But?” although Bruce felt encouraged by Lucius’ estimation sensed a ‘but’ lying there. “You spoke with Tony?”

Lucius met the decisive yet a bit sad eyes of his employer and pressed his lips.

“My loyalties first and foremost lie with you, Mister Wayne” he stretched his eyebrows “you don’t doubt that, right?”

Bruce smiled.

“Of course not.”

Lucius loll’d his head.

“I’m relieved to hear that. So when you tagged your mail as ‘confidential’ there was no chance for me to discuss the content even with your best friend.”
Hearing the ‘best friend’ Bruce felt a bit embarrassed.

“To make things clear Tony already knows about my sketches and my…intentions” Lucius nodded. “But I wanted you to assess the modifications and how effective they can be unbiased.”

“So Mister Stark is negative…”

Bruce’s eyes fell on his hands and he pouted.

“He didn’t take the time to have a second look at the sketches…” he sighed. “He believes that even the thought of getting out there equals with instant death so he won’t even consider the possibility…”

Lucius intertwined his fingers in front of his face.

“Well…we can’t blame him for that, can we?” he asked calmly. “It’s certainly very dangerous…”

Bruce closed his eyes and tilted his head exasperated.

“For pity’s sake, Lucius… I don’t understand why all of you bring the same thing up” he pinched the bridge of his nose. “All these years I used Batman wisely without jeopardizing the bigger plan and the lives of others…and mine” he hurried to add. “If I was as reckless as you think, Falcone would have discovered my escapees and would have killed me…obviously, he didn’t.”

Lucius nodded.

“I don’t consider you reckless, Mr. Wayne; on the contrary, you are a wise young man. Yet we all know your …bias for self sacrifice” he smiled and Bruce twitched his lips. “And I think that this is the reason we are afraid of you getting out there.”

“Listen, Lucius: the reason I want this suit to be made is for enabling Batman make some appearances – one or two.”

“The holograms persuade Gotham that you are still out there.”

Bruce nodded.

“I know and they are a perfect creation of yours but…” he stabbed him with his eyes. “It’s been four months and Batman hasn’t busted a single robber: don’t you think that soon someone will notice?”

“The majority of Gotham’s underground are still petrified by the ‘big three massacre’ and Batman’s action so many of them have already fled to other cities. On the small time culprits, Batman can’t be everywhere, right?” Bruce didn’t seem persuaded. “I can’t deny that you got a point there…but we always can ask from Superman to dress up.”

Bruce shook his head in negation.

“I don’t want him in Gotham” Lucius frowned and Bruce cleared his throat. “Superman has other responsibilities and Gotham is a hellhole with its own rules and norms – a person as bright as him shouldn’t be consumed by this city’s darkness… I don’t want Gotham’s dirt get to him: it almost happened” he pressed his lips. “And I won’t risk someone realizing the differences as Joker did.”

Lucius arched an eyebrow.

“Joker isn’t a common villain.”

“None of Gotham’s villains are common and Joker’s one meeting with BatSupes was enough to make him suspicious of my secret. The night at Chicky’s factory he hinted that” he took in Lucius’ deep frown. “A second encounter with Superman disguised as Batman would affirm his suspicions and what I want now is for him to take that out of his mind.”

Lucius nodded.

“So you’ll appear in front of every news camera of Gotham on a wheelchair, attend some social events while Batman who till now was roaming Gotham will make some arrests.”

“Exactly.”

“So we must make those modifications perfect to enable you to have some basic artificial mobility to catch crooks and protection from additional injuries – always provided that you’ll be extra careful and barely engage in fights.”

“As I was doing while in Falcone’s captivity to avoid injuries and bruises that would betray the truth to him.”

Lucius rubbed his forehead and it was clear that the man was reluctant to give Bruce the ability to risk so much. But he was also aware that his young employer would proceed in his plans with or without his participation and that would enhance more the danger. The youth loved his city so much and would do anything to protect her. And Lucius loved Gotham as much and his young employer so he couldn’t let him attempt to modify his suit himself. Even more since he could see how all these could secure Bruce’s secret identity.

Bruce could see that the loyal scientist was thinking fast and his eyes were sparkling eager and thirsty to hear that Lucius would help but at the same time determined to continue even if he refused - on his own.

“This suit will be only for one or two times” Lucius said strict as Bruce had never again heard him. “You won’t engage in very risky situations and you’ll make sure that there will be backup for you” his eyebrows formed a very strict line over his dead serious eyes. “Which brings us to this: Mr. Stark will be on the project.”

Bruce was looking at him with the same level of seriousness.

“I promise, Lucius, that I won’t make ill use of your gift. But I don’t think that Tony would agree to be a part of this” he ruffled his hair. “He is against and also he has too many things on his head with being the new director of the S.H.I.E.L.D. and working on the bionic parts – for crying out loud, he has his company to run…”

“I’m sure that Mr. Stark won’t have an objection to participate in your new armor’s creation – more on an advice level. As long as he” he cocked his eyebrows “and I see that your top priority will be your recovery and your health because you need to be ready for the operation…”

Bruce would never interrupt Lucius but this news made his heart beat faster with childish enthusiasm.

“So the bionic parts for my spine are ready?!” no – it was too soon, he could read it in Lucius’ eyes. “Are in good progress?” he continued more restricted.

Lucius smiled seeing the youth’s thrill: Bruce’s joy was infectious as much as when he was the little boy that roamed the Wayne Tower.

“Is my pleasure to affirm that, Mr. Wayne, but” he hated to see the small shadow in his employer’s
“Even after the operation you’ll need some time to be able to fully regain your normal functionality not to mention your more demanding activities.”

Bruce nodded.

“Absolutely!” the shadow was gone and a grin caressed his cheeks.

“And that makes it evident why this new suit must be used in great caution and with much consideration because a new major injury” Lucius felt that both shared a shiver on that “could make the use of the bionic parts impossible.”

Bruce licked his lips. Lucius took in the youth’s paleness and wanting to raise his spirits smiled.

“Not to mention that Mr. Stark will kill me if anything happens to you because of my decision to help you built that suit and my contribution in persuading him to agree” Bruce looked at him and Lucius narrowed his eyes. “Now I’m thinking about it, Mr. Stark won’t be the only one…A second superhero will be after me, a wildcat and let’s not forget Alfred and Leslie” he shook his head “they can be more intimidating and lethal than any superhero…” he chuckled.

“Nothing will happen to me, Lucius. You have my word.”

Lucius’ smile vanished and he leaned to the screen.

“Mr. Wayne, the only reason I’ll help you with this new armor is that I don’t want to let you make it alone – because I know you will whether I or Mr. Stark help you or not – and because I trust you that you won’t endanger the life of you and of so many people who love you” Bruce closed his eyes and Lucius arched his eyebrows. “The one month you were fighting for your life and nobody knew if you’re going to make it, all the people that love you were also staggering between life and death. You must realize that you’re not only responsible for your own life but for the lives and wellbeing of your loved ones…”

Bruce nodded and locked eyes with him.

“I know, Lucius…”

Lucius wore his glasses again and looked at another screen that Bruce couldn’t make out clearly.

“Now about the soil and wood samples you sent me from the location of your attack and of your own clothes…”

Bruce’s eyes flashed: Princess Diana might have blown up the awkward creatures that attacked him yet some of their remains must have fallen on the soil or the wood; also, some of the creatures grabbed him at some point. So he put samples in special cases and sent them to Lucius through Happy, Tony’s pilot.

“They were good enough? Because you can’t imagine how difficult was to go back there and gather them…” he rolled his eyes and Lucius chuckled picturing Bruce trying to evade Alfred’s watchful eyes.

“So…I get that you passed to the other side of the law?” he asked in his innocent friendly irony.

Bruce laughed.

“I thought I was always on the lawless end of the line – yet Alfred’s laws are stricter and the ramifications from violating them more fearsome…”
“Indeed!” Lucius laughed. “Being spanked in this age is a bit embarrassing not to mention being banned from Alfred’s cinnamon biscuits…” Bruce nodded. “Well, back to business: the soil samples you sent me had indeed traces of other materials – materials that matched those found in the samples from your cloths.”

“And?”

“The analysis of those matters and substances indicated life forms matching your description.”

Bruce’s eyebrows jerked upwards and he leaned to the screen.

“Life forms? They weren’t robots…” he whispered. “So we’re talking about results of illegal experimentation?”

Lucius shook his head in negation.

“The substances were definitely unlike anything in Earth.”

Bruce didn’t want to accept that.

“Anything known” he stressed out the last word. “Maybe someone created something never seen before – substances or materials that were used to create those odd beings.”

“You’re thinking of the League of Shadows and that demon?” he asked softly because the issue was extremely sensible.

Bruce rubbed his chin.

“That could be a possibility. Or Luthor. Or some other sick genius.”

Lucius cocked his eyebrows and took a pen from his desk.

“What about aliens, Mr. Wayne?” Bruce huffed and Lucius nodded. “Our data from Lexlabs and the League of Shadows don’t show any evidence of such experiments. And…Superman has extraterrestrial enemies who definitely would want to gain some leverage against him.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“You don’t like that idea…” the scientist remarked and the younger man looked at him lopsided.

“I just believe that there are too many local villains for Earth to draw alien villains too but…it’s not a matter of what I like, right?” Lucius nodded. “Brainiac maybe?”

“It could be…Yet Superman has too many enemies and maybe he has others who never encountered yet. We must search it more and hope for some new evidence – not as dramatic as a new attack.”

“And keep our eyes open for what the registration in Luthor’s labs will bring up: he had delved in many shady businesses and he absolutely hates Superman, so why not being into this scheme too? And recently one of LexLabs was broken into.”

“Star Labs and some other less famous were also raided those days so maybe it was random looters.”

Bruce shrugged.

“Maybe or maybe not…We certainly can’t let go so easily of that possibility – especially when LexLabs unlike the rest are in our control.”
“Which was the main reason you wanted to gain the absolute control of Mr. Luthor’s famous labs…”

“You know me so well, Lucius…”

Lucius leaned to the back of his armchair with a huge smile on his face.

“I’m eagerly waiting to see you back in Gotham, Mr. Wayne.”

“Me too, Lucius.”

“The Metropolis’ central lab was attacked and you mention it just now?” Luthor’s voice echoed through the small space where his new lawyer had visited him. “How many lawyers I have to fire to find a decent one?”

Luthor’s young lawyer stared at him completely unfazed and with a sarcastic expression in his face.

“Well, for starters, not exactly every acknowledged counselor is eager to be hired by you, Mr. Luthor. And second, you know that I’m the best for you right now.”

Luthor narrowed his eyes and twitched his lips in disdain.

“I don’t like arrogance…” he hissed but the lawyer smirked.

“Then you surely don’t look a lot in the mirror!” Luthor’s eyes widened in that insult and his lawyer raised his palms in appeasement. “I’m not here to quarrel, Mr. Luthor: my focus is on how to get you out of here and I think you should also focus on that instead of trying to intimidate your lawyer.”

“I don’t see you achieving anything, Mr. Larson: I’m almost 4 months stuck in a filthy Gotham prison while my company is raided!”

Mr. Larson tilted his head.

“Maybe because this time you’re deep in shit, Mr. Luthor. There are a lot of proofs for your collaboration with the League of Shadows. Not to mention a charming video with you making some grave felonies, like attacking Mr. Wayne, threatening him with a gun and assisting in his kidnapping.”

Luthor shook his head: that still stung bad – how they managed to trap him like that. That stupid brat! Damn! He shouldn’t have been so carried away by his grudge to expose himself like that.

“We can prove that the video was somehow fake: fabricated to frame me…” Larson shook his head.

“I’m afraid that’s out of the question: the transmission of the footage was almost live and there’s no sign of alienation. Plus, there are other evidence and foremost Wayne’s testimony.”

Luthor fumed, his grey eyes taking an icy texture.

“At least, he died after the testimony: it’s some satisfaction.”

The young lawyer snorted.

“I’m sorry to disappoint, Mr. Luthor, but that was just a rumor: Bruce Wayne is returning today to Gotham – every media in the city babbles about that.”
Luthor frowned and his fist punched the table causing a smile to his lawyer. He stabbed the man with his eyes.

“Use all of my connections to get me out of here! I won’t let that brat walk in LexCorp undisturbed!”

Larson shrugged.

“He now possesses the 30% of the shares so he had every right, especially in the Labs which are already under his control.”

Luthor felt cold sweat running his body and he clenched his jaw.

“I’m doing everything to arrange some special pardon for your case” the young lawyer said. “Even a psychiatric assessment claiming that after the incident at Stark’s party you became abnormally obsessed with Wayne in a way that dimmed your reasoning.”

Luthor cast him a glare but gradually his face loosened in a grin.

“Not bad…” he said content squinting. “Not bad at all, Larson…”

He placed his briefcase on the table and began settling his papers in.

“The temporary DA is as hard as Dent but…he isn’t Dent” he smirked. “He doesn’t have Dent’s appeal so he wouldn’t be able to last for long.”

Larson took the briefcase and moved to leave, casting a last glance at his client whom he didn’t like much.

“I hope to have good news soon.”

Luthor gave a nod and stared at his hands without a second look at his lawyer’s departing figure. He pouted. Undoubtedly, things would change soon—for the best. He smirked. Mannheim was raiding his labs desperate to find his machine. So when his efforts failed the powerful gangster would have no other option than getting him out of there in exchange to get what he wanted.

Joker was gulping a big forkful of salad.

“Eat your salad, buuuuuddy” he said to Crane who was glaring at him from opposite. “It’s good for youuuuuur health and…bowel, unless you like things getting stuck to your…hoooole…HAHAHAHAHA!”

“You mean like your…wife?” the lean doctor tilted his head on the side and spat dryly. “No…I do not think that I like being stuffed as him…” he chewed calmly his vegetables.

Joker giggled but all of a sudden Jonathan choked as he felt something digging his stomach: he noticed that Joker’s fork was nowhere. The jester’s eyes were casual as ever.

“Aaaaaanthing can become a le--thal weapon in the rrright hands” he whispered in a scientific way. “Ugh! I did master-pieces with plastic forks…Liiiiike that eye I smashed before anyone even noticed…” he brought a carrot slice in his mouth and bit nonchalant. “I think it was an orderly” he squinted “but I’m not sure – not that matters…What matters, Johnny” he raised barely his voice and Jonathan almost screamed from the pain that plastic thing gave him “iiiiis to know how aaaaand where to use each thing…Like when referring to my Brucey: when you dooooo it after I ask you to “It’s OK” he pouted “well, it depends…anyway. But when you dooooooo it to insult him” his teeth rattled but then he loosened “or flatter him you get in trouble. Understood?”

Crane nodded with gritted teeth: how he wanted to cause terror to that man, to see him cry and squirm and beg. He knew that the clown would be an easy subject to his fear gas…unlike Wayne.

“Stop threatening me!” he hissed in a voice unlike his normal and Joker gave a full Cheshire smile.

“Buuuuuut I’m not…” he answered innocently. “It seemed like I was?” he scratched his head and then tilted it on the side “well, maybe I am…” he dag more the fork in Crane’s stomach. “Now, let’s speak about what I want…”

“OK, then!” Crane clenched his jaw. “How about your precious wife really likes to be fucked? The hard way” he leaned towards Joker with a gleeful shine in his eyes disregarding the increased pain in his stomach.

Joker licked his lips and moved his shoulders. He gestured to Crane to continue.

“Go ooooon, give me your” he giggled “professional opinion…”

Crane smiled wickedly.

“Wayne likes to be raped” the jester arched his eyebrows fascinated and mocking at the same time. “He was raised up like this and now inside him struggles his disgust about sex and his deep desire to get fucked – so the only solution he has is being raped: don’t you find it a bit strange that he always gets in situations that can lead to a rape?” he raised his head looking down at Joker. “Because he wants to be dominated and violated: it’s the only way he permits himself to have sex and can enjoy it.”

Joker left his head hanging on his shoulder seeming deep in thought as if Crane’s words made an impact.

“Soooloooo, you wanna say that he likes to be fuck--ed…raped by anyone BUUUUT mee?”

And then suddenly he erupted in laughter.

“Is this youuuuuu opinion as a shrink?” he moved in his seat and giggled again. “I was soooooo right that every shrink is a mental case…”

Crane shook his head.

“It’s funny that someone like you likes so much the idea of someone’s purity – especially, when he is so filthy…”

Crane’s eyes bulged as the fork almost made his flesh bleed.

“OK, Ok, let’s…let’s calm…” Crane’s voice became a bit shaky and definitely appeasing. “We can’t deny the truth about his past, can we?” he squinted and Joker pouted mocking him. “Or his present…And he’s absolutely a hard used whore” now the hissing became once again Scarecrow but seeing Joker’s eyebrows twitch he widened his eyes. “You wanted me to give you info and that’s what I’m doing.”

Joker smacked his lips and looked at the huge flat TV that played a stupid reality show. His eyes flashed: one of the guys sitting on the nearest table was Lou, the goon from the night at Chicky’s factory who shot and caused the fire. Joker knew that they had him first at the Blackgate prison but finally they realized he was nuts and dumped him here. The jester tilted his head on the side: well…the bozo was lucky that Batman didn’t die that night because at first when Joker wasn’t sure, he had a death penalty for him.

The goon was so different in the orange fit of the Asylum but soooooo same moronic faced. He sensed Joker’s stare and began waving enthusiastic for seeing him again.

“Hiya, boss!” he yelled and Joker rolled his eyes snorting.

Jonathan smirked sure that Joker had forgotten him occupied with his henchman. In the same time, he didn’t like it that the clown was gathering his thug-army even without doing anything…

“Infooooo…” Joker spat in his nasal voice still waving at Lou. “Start chewing your apple pie and spill it.”

Jonathan crooked his mouth but did what he was told.

“That crazy bitch who considered Wayne her slave…”

Joker rolled his head regarding again Crane completely bored.

“Well, definitely not, Joker thought remembering his one half - time with him. No, Cran-y, he smirked: they tied him because they were afraid of him.

“Binding someone that you already rendered completely paralyzed.”

Joker frowned and the former doctor smiled.

“They shot him twice: in his nape and his waist making him unable to move below the neck” his eyes shone gleefully.

Joker’s mind travelled back in that night at the old factory: Batman had come to save the brats and face him and he absolutely…moved and ran and kicked and everything. If Bruce had two bullets stuck in his body paralyzing him then how the Bat-guy was able to come? He wasn’t that moron Super-Goofy: he would easily make out the difference…And then all these rumors that the Bat was stalking the city even though Bruce Wayne was away? Fine, it could be a trick but…if it wasn’t and the kitten wasn’t the Bat?

Joker cocked an eyebrow: well, in this case, at least the threesome was still in the plan…He giggled but then sobered again.

Jonathan could understand that the clown’s mind was racing but he couldn’t guess what he pondered on; maybe how to punish those who defiled his…wife. So why not expanding his list and providing more reasons for Joker to rely on him?

“And Superman certainly bangs your boy” he shook his head. “There’s no doubt: he sent that oaf Bane for two months in the hospital because obviously he figured that he had fucked his bitch’ the forgotten fork dag again his stomach surprising him. “It’s him you must punish not me! And I can help you with that!”

Joker rolled his eyes and snorted.

“Help? HELP!” he giggled and shook his head. “You’re completely nuts, Cran-y!”

Something in the big screen caught the corner of his eye and he lolled his head watching half interested, half glaring at Crane who looked at the screen too.

Behind Vicky Vale’s velvet armchair a whole wall screen showed footage of Superman and a woman dressed in a fancy swimsuit lifting tons of ruins and save people. And then the footage changed into a luxurious hall where the duo was decorated by the UN’s General Secretary.

“The two heroes seemed to be at ease together…” Vale commented slyly. “Hm…it seems that our Prince couldn’t hold Superman’s interest for long…”

Bruce watched Superman and Diana being decorated by the UN’s General Secretary in the official video on the organization’s site: the two heroes were honored for their contribution in the rescuing efforts after the Nepal earthquake.

The video continued showing image from the humble reception that the organization held after the ceremony: the two heroes sat together and spoke all the time in a way like they have been friends for years – or centuries, since they both were practically immortals – and at times Princess laughed with something Superman told and Clark’s eyes glimmered reflecting her eyes’ shine…

Bruce’s breath became restrained: he knew that glow in Clark’s eyes – it was like the entire existence loved you…

The sky had waves of neon blue moving slowly, glimmering majestically: he was watching it from the hovering round balcony the Fortress had created for him. Waiting for Clark to return from Metropolis.

Which was now. Bruce could hear him even if Clark usually floated in the Fortress; he turned to his direction and Superman flew to him, his hands immediately wrapping around his back and behind the knees lifting him easily as a child.

“You could say ‘Hi’, first” Bruce chuckled as the roof above them opened because obviously Superman wanted to.

“I guess I could…” Clark captured his lips and Bruce felt the jolt in his stomach, signaling the sudden ascend.

Oh! Being among the glorious blue light was unbelievable, as if he was inside a fairytale. And every night was the same exciting feeling even if the color in the sky varied: green, red, yellow or mixed. He was looking the natural wonder in absolute admiration and fascination. Yet today he decided to be more restrained.
“You know, you don’t have to take me for a stroll every night…” he teased Clark who smiled.

“Really?” he arched an eyebrow. “Then why are you gazing at the sky for hours EVERY NIGHT?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Because you didn’t get me a cable TV?” he snorted.

Clark laughed and at the same time unfastened his cape and wrapped him in its unbelievable warmth and softness that always made Bruce relax like a baby. Of course, there was no need for warmth since Bruce was dressed in the House of El ceremonial attire which was cold proof. Yet both of them relished the use of the cape…

“That night” Clark said in a deep, touched voice locking his eyes with Bruce’s “I promised you that I’d take you to watch the aurora every night till you’re bored of it…Do you remember that night?” his voice became very low and very throaty.

Bruce took away his eyes to avoid the deep pain in Clark’s sweet, beautiful eyes and gaze at the glowing like a huge gem crystal pyramid under them: he remembered that night…he remembered all the pain from his injuries and then the worst pain…knowing that he was dying and he wouldn’t see his loved ones again: their immense hurt for losing him as he acknowledged it in Selina’s eyes mixing with his for losing them.

And saying goodbye to Clark forever… Shutting softly his eyes at least relieved that he wouldn’t be used again to hurt the Man of Steel… Hearing Superman’s eerie heartbreaking howl as he was floating away…Realizing that Clark couldn’t be left alone: he had to return to him…

“I remember…” he said returning his stare to Clark’s waiting eyes and the older man took gently his chin between his fingers and kissed softly his lips.

“Well…You don’t seem bored of aurora borealis yet…”

“Bruce, we’re ready” Selina’s hesitant voice broke into – she was going to stay in the plane and leave when the reporters were gone. “Are you alright?”

He nodded and stretched his hands to put on the leather jacket Alfred held for him.

“Master Bruce, the ramp is down; can we go now?” Alfred asked politely.

“Let’s give them what they came for…” he answered with his eyes determined.

“Breaking news” Vale’s eyes shone thrilled as the video showing Superman and Wonder Woman was cut abruptly. “Tony Stark’s private jet just landed at Gotham’s airport.”

The camera zoomed on the jet’s door that opened and the ramp that was set.

“Ladies and gentlemen, at last: Bruce Wayne back home!” Vale said excited.

But she was astonished watching along with the people filling the seats in her show Bruce Wayne getting out of the door and descending slowly from the ramp: seated on a wheelchair that was pushed by his loyal butler. Hundreds of cameras flashed simultaneously as the people of the press yelling questions pushed closer and were held at bay by the security staff of the airport.

Joker’s eyes were glued on the screen completely immobile glimmering maniac; it was the image of Bruce seated on the wheelchair that made his eyes explode. His previous discussion with Crane was erased as his doubts about Bruce being the Batman since he was already paralyzed when Batman fought him. This moment only one thing dominated his boiling mind: the fire in the factory and the building collapsing, obviously crushing Batman and rendering him useless to play with him. And the responsible was there, laughing stupidly.

His body jerked upwards jumping on Lou and Joker was seeing only the neck of his goon readying his bare teeth to tear it apart. The useless moron was dead.

Several people cried in surprise and horror, the loudest voice that of Lou who felt his boss’ sharp teeth stabbing his neck. Orderlies rushed there stretching their Tasers. Yet Joker was seeing only Bruce confined in a wheelchair merged with the damn old factory and a hell of fire…

Suddenly there was only darkness.
The airport’s security kept the raging crowd of reporters at a distance as Alfred led the wheelchair to the waiting silver Rolls Royce under a buzzing cloud of questions. Alfred cast a glance to his young master and Bruce gave a discreet nod.

Upon that, Alfred opened the back door and held Bruce’s body as the physiotherapist had taught him in order to move him from the chair to the car’s back seat. Of course Bruce was perfectly able to do it alone yet they had to play a little show for the press so he let Alfred help him while secretly spare the older man from the majority of his burden – a Wayne Enterprises’ driver (the one who had brought the Rolls) was standing right next to the car’s front door and hurried to them eager to help but Alfred politely sent him away because they didn’t want him to realize Bruce’s true body and the young man still loathed strangers touching him.

Their show was a success: dozens of cameras flashed maniac on the sight of Bruce Wayne clinging his arms around his butler’s neck to be hoisted and settled on the back seat.

Selina was already there, sprawled, one foot on the leather and Hero in her lap, clearly happy now that he was out of his portable cage. The kitten jumped on Bruce’s lap as soon as the door closed.

Bruce wasn’t shocked from her presence there – his friend had a pretty effective distraction to disembark unnoticed and slip in the car while the reporters were goggling at their show. Alfred, however, who entered the car after he put the wheelchair in the trunk, cocked an eyebrow at the driver’s mirror just as he turned on the engine to get them out of there.

“Miss Kyle, I’m delighted to see you here…”

Bruce and Selina exchanged an amused glance.

“I wouldn’t have missed a ride with that car, Alfred!” she winked.

Alfred smiled.

“We were supposed to pick you up after we lured the reporters from the airport.”

She shrugged.

“Why bothering you with that? Besides it’s more fun to razz those papa-razzis…” she pressed more her foot on the seat’s leather to Alfred’s dismay and Bruce stopped looking the tablet on his legs to widen his eyes to Selina and she hurried to put down her foot.

He was watching avidly his tablet-like gadget, the latest creation of Wayne Tech that only he, Lucius and Dick had at the moment. He was scrolling the articles on his screen thoughtful yet with a playful eye on Selina.

“I didn’t know that you were so fond of old, outdated cars…” he snorted to tease her.

Which caused a disapproving grunt from Alfred and Selina’s raised eyebrow.

“This isn’t old, darling; this is classic…” she said slyly and looked at the driver’s mirror Alfred giving her an approving nod. “Forgive the kid, Alfred: he is still too young and inexperienced…”

“Of course, Miss Kyle… Would you give us the pleasure of coming with us to the Manor?”
Selina was glancing at Bruce’s tablet screen.

“Not today, Alfred: I have to see if my apartment is still standing after all this time. But I’ll come visit as soon as possible.”

“So our destination is Midtown” Alfred said not without a slight sadness for Miss Kyle’s so rapid departure. All this time he got to love the young woman’s presence: it was as if the Waynes had left him two kids to look after.

“Sorry for the inconvenience, Alfred – I know it’s out of your course…” Bruce and Alfred both cast her exasperated glances and she shrugged innocently. “It is a detour from the road to Pallisades AND we have to lose our tail” Selina said looking from the back window at the string of cars following them. Rolls had armored windows with glass that didn’t permit the view inside.

Bruce still scrolling the headlines touched his finger to his lips.

“Alfred is one hell of a driver!” Alfred coughed disapprovingly for the expression but Selina could see the satisfaction in his gleaming eyes. “Yet it would have been so much easier if you came to live in the Manor…” he raised his eyes and met hers. “You’ll always welcome if you change your mind.”

Selina nodded: she felt Bruce’s love and how he’d miss her constant presence and the truth was that she would miss him too.

“What are you searching for?” she asked to drop the subject and Bruce petted Hero who was also looking at the screen curious.

“Superman sightings from last night” he said casually and Selina frowned.

“But he was at that UN ceremony last evening with that woman.”

He nodded keeping his eyes on the screen because he didn’t want Selina to read them.

“Afterwards…”

She didn’t need much more to figure; she didn’t like it but also she wanted to pretend that it wasn’t important though for Bruce it was – even if he put on a nonchalant face.

“Don’t tell me he didn’t come last night…”

Bruce shook his head in denial still avoiding Selina’s stare.

He liked people; he liked all these UN officials yet he grabbed the chance and slipped to the deserted foyer of the top floor. He stood before the whole wall window overlooking New York and his eyes were caught by the newly finished Avengers’ Tower dominating the skyline. Stark’s need for showing off… Well, he didn’t want to be unfair to the billionaire: after the revelations about S.H.I.E.L.D. he had to use every means to heal the organization’s image and status.

Superman inhaled deeply: he really didn’t care much. He just wanted this ceremony to end for him to return to… where? He felt coldness inside and something else…what exactly? He couldn’t name it but he knew that wasn’t good – it drained him from energy. He yanked his head: he always could go back to his sun and recharge his batteries…His sun… The one here on earth which was more powerful than the sun out there. He so much missed being inside Bruce’s body that sometimes, like now, it hurt because this thought made the knot that strangled for days his stomach worse.
“Are you seeking loneliness or indulge in sweet remembrance?” a soft female voice breathed in his ear and he was startled.

Diana smiled her radiant smile.

“So the Man of Steel can be taken by surprise?”

He closed his eyes and chuckled.

“Sometimes…by extraordinary people…” like Batman or you…

Diana came closer, their chests a breath away.

“When powerful things dominate your mind and senses…” she whispered and her eyes flashed in his.

He stretched his head and sighed.

“Yeah… sometimes even Superman gets distracted.”

The Amazon princess lolled her head on the side and eyed him thoughtful.

“I’d be very indiscreet asking if it is your love interest that occupies your thoughts?” she smiled.

“Does he realize how lucky he is or torments you?”

Torment…Superman couldn’t stop himself from thinking that Diana was right. What he was experiencing was tormenting… The way Bruce looked at him… the way Superman sensed that as much as he tried he always he blundered with Bruce… the way his immense happiness was turning into something unpleasant.

He mentally shook himself and pictured Bruce smiling, Bruce gulping greedily the doughnuts he brought to him – the warmth and elation he felt every time. Bruce didn’t torment him…at least, on purpose. Wait…

“He?” Superman asked frowning – he had denied to her that he was related to Bruce.

Diana laughed.

“Bruce Wayne: for one unexplainable reason I can’t shake off the idea of you having a relationship with the human” she shrugged. “It’d make perfect sense that you look so troubled and unhappy. Because definitely a human – especially he – is unworthy of someone like you…” she widened her eyes sympathetically “resulting inevitably in pain.”

Superman watched her in disbelief but he couldn’t deny that her words made something in him.

“Once again, Princess: there’s nothing between me and Mr. Wayne…other than my duty to protect him as every other human being. I thought I’ve made that clear already.”

She smiled and nodded.

“My mistake, Superman but my fear of you being involved in something so wrong drives me to seek reassurance constantly. I dread seeing you wasted with someone like him and eventually destroyed by deceit...” she noticed his slightly displeased stare. “Since you two are not involved he won’t be annoyed when those stupid reporters publish the video of us they’re shooting right now...”

Superman looked over Diana’s shoulders to the cameraman who had located them and of course didn’t miss the chance getting a nice footage. Yet he wasn’t pissed: after all, he wasn’t doing anything wrong and Bruce was busy with other more important things than caring about his lover’s evenings.

Diana followed his eyes satisfied by the lack of reaction.

“What about leaving that place?” she asked serious. “I don’t think that they would be insulted or something…and I know you want to leave as much as I…” her thick eyelashes half covered her sparkling green eyes.

The idea was appealing. He shrugged one shoulder.

“New York nights are legendary after all… But we’ll come back later to bid goodnight to our hosts” he replied beaming and Diana’s eyes shone.

“Mmm…I guess it wouldn’t suit the boy scout to misbehave like that…” she laughed and the impact was similar with Bruce’s laughter.

Superman pressed his lips and shook his head.

“No, not at all!” he said with conviction.

Not even the camera that was fixed on them caught their exit.

New York was blinding illuminated by millions of multicolored lights: it looked like Metropolis but Clark could spot all the tiny differences – smells, voices, sounds, mood… The Statue of Liberty where they stood right now.

He was gazing at the ocean with his arms crossed and his mind totally empty which was bliss… Diana cleared her throat and he turned his eyes on her.

“It’s quite different than my homeland” she said with her steady voice “but it’s still beautiful.”

Superman nodded and remembered the night dinner at the balcony in Stark’s villa: Bruce was so relaxed and happy among them – his mind wasn’t yet obsessed with that madness. Bruce then wanted just to live and absorb everything life had to offer – that Superman had to offer… And then suddenly, Superman’s love wasn’t enough for Bruce: Batman had defeated him…

His jaw clenched unconsciously and Diana’s soft, long fingers touched his chin.

“You have to relax a bit…” he felt the hot air from her lungs brushing his skin and he was shocked to realize some goose bumps. “Superman…” she smiled. “This is what humans call you yet I’m sure you have a real name unlike those mundane human names declaring your regal kin and stating your superiority… I’m Diana of Themyscira, daughter of Hippolyta…” she cocked an eyebrow and stretched her hand.

She waited for a proper introduction, for a token of mutual trust and allegiance. Superman knew that he could trust her with his real identity but also he could imagine her shock and disapproval hearing his human name: he definitely would lose some of her respect. And for the first time, Clark felt uneasy about the name that connected him with humankind.

“Kal El of Krypton” he grabbed her hand. “Son of Jor and Lara of the House of El.”

“Your stew is getting cold…”
Clark looked startled at Martha sitting right next to him at the kitchen table. She was beaming.

“Your mind is always with Bruce…” she caressed his forearm.

Clark blushed embarrassed on the realization that he wasn’t thinking of Bruce.

“Mmm… I can’t help it” he chuckled and sighed. “But I’ve got a daily job to maintain…”

Martha frowned.

“Speaking of which, it’s still working hours…”

Clark winked.

“I’m supposed to do field work investigating those burglaries in Metropolis’ labs.”

His mother raised her eyebrows shocked and amused at the same time.

“My baby would never skive off school or work!”

Clark chuckled.

“I can do my work while enjoying my Ma’s company… My hearing is tuned at Metropolis. And dear Martha deserves some attention” he kissed his mother’s cheek.

“Don’t fret about me, sweetheart” she smiled her eyes filled with love. “I’m always happy to see you but I know there are things that demand your attention…” she sighed. “I’m proud of you like your father was…even if what you do keeps you away from me. I know that there are people that their need is biggest than mine…”

Clark’s eyes caressed her wrinkled face and his heart ached for her loneliness after Jonathan died. He held her hands in his and kissed them.

“You saw the ceremony at UN building?”

She chuckled.

“Yes and I was crying like a baby from pride…not that I needed some decoration to know my child’s heart of gold…”

He cuddled his mother kissing her graying hair feeling again the same dread as with Bruce: the looming presence of death shadowing everything.

Lois’ melody from his smartphone blew like a bomb in the room and Clark rolled his eyes and reluctantly released his mother to take his smartphone.

“Kent here.”

“You could have given us a tip, farm boy…” Lois’ exasperated voice escaped the phone’s boundaries.

“What are you talking about, Lois?”

“Cut the crap, Clark! Bruce just arrived at Gotham’s airport and the Planet didn’t know anything! Why didn’t you tell something? Every news outlet of Gotham knew already so it wouldn’t be so bad if you informed us…”
Clark rubbed his forehead: damn! Bruce in Gotham… Yes, they had discussed it but had Bruce mentioned when? He closed his eyes raking his data. Yes, he had mentioned and he forgot it… FORGOT IT!

“Listen, Lois…I’m…I’m sorry…”

“What’s the matter, Smallville” he could hear her frown “I know you trust me with way more sensitive information than that…”

“Of course I do, Lois.”

“You forgot it, don’t you?” her voice was utterly shocked and Clark could hear her scoff. “My Goodness, what’s wrong with you, Clark?”

Clark lolled his head on the side and ruffled his hair.

“Planet got plenty of coverage from the last night’s reception in UN.”

“That’s not the point! Ugh, Clark! Fuck the Planet: we’re talking about more important things… At least, tell me that you escaped work and you’re incognito next to Bruce…”

He shook his head not knowing what to say.

“I’ve got to go, Lois…Bye.”

“Clark, wait…”

Selina could easily see through her friend’s façade of calm.

“I see… And you’re worried” she pressed her lips “for his safety and…there are other things, huh?”

Bruce lifted his eyes on her to catch also Alfred’s seemingly composed stare on the road that darted discreetly to the back seat.

“There’s nothing on the news.”

“And that’s more worrying for you. You have his number – call him.”

Bruce looked at Clark’s number that he had already on hi screen. However he hesitated.

“Maybe he just didn’t want to see me. And…” those matters were so awkward for him. “I don’t want to press him to speak to me.”

“Nonsense!” she rolled her eyes. “Something happened between you and you think that maybe he was pissed and didn’t come to see you. But you’re worried too so why not calling him?”

Bruce huffed and ran his fingers to Hero’s fur.

“There’s a chance he doesn’t want to speak me and for that he didn’t came or called. I don’t want to disturb him if that is what he wants…” his voice was decisive.

“Bullshit, handsome! You worry for him and need to learn he is okay – he is your boyfriend so a phone call is the first choice not…searching the net! Please!”
“Master Bruce, I think that Miss Kyle is right: calling him is the easiest and safest way. And I’m sure that Master Kent would be rather happy to see that you care – especially if something came out to disturb your happiness.”

Bruce sighed: all these made him uncomfortable yet he knew that they were right. And he felt the beat of agony in his chest not only for Clark’s safety – because he had the gut feeling that he was alright – but also for Clark’s possible detachment… He took in the others’ urging stares and decided that calling was better than live in uncertainty. He brushed his screen calling the number.

Clark hanged up hurriedly under his mother’s puzzled stare. The phone immediately rang again and Clark sighed: typical Lois! Yet he wasn’t in the mood to discuss it more so he deactivated the phone: he’d explain to her later.

“What’s wrong, sweetheart?”

“Nothing.”

But Martha wasn’t convinced.

“Anything wrong with Bruce?”

Clark shrugged frustrated.

“No.”

Martha licked her lips.

“I heard Lois saying that you forgot about his coming back?”

Clark huffed.

“She doesn’t know how to lower the decibels of her voice… Yeah, I forgot: sometimes even Superman forgets things.”

Martha felt uncomfortable pressing her son but from the moment he made her happy coming for lunch she sensed that Clark was upset.

“How can you forget when every night you’re together?” she smiled. “I’m sure he mentioned last night?”

Clark lowered his head and drummed his fingers on the table making the dishes shake.

“I wasn’t with him last night” he raised his eyes to look at Martha. “I had to attend the UN ceremony and the reception after so…”

Martha touched his shoulder.

“I feel your upset, baby – you had a quarrel with Bruce? Are you displeased with him?”

Clark’s eyes hardened.

“He is too stubborn, Ma; he never listens, he never thinks about me…”

She pressed her lips: those words were so heated and so different from the way her son talked till now about the young man he loved.
“What happened, dear? If of course you feel like sharing…”

He yanked his head backwards.

“Maybe I forgot about his returning because I wanted to forget it!” Martha narrowed her eyes and Clark inhaled deeply. “I told him I didn’t want him to come back in Gotham but he didn’t care! All he cares about is…” he stopped abruptly: his Ma didn’t know about Batman.

“But it’s his city – his home. I bet he missed it all these months…”

Her voice was sweet as ever and Clark regretted his heated tone; he pinched the bridge of his nose.

“This city almost killed him, Ma! If he was sensible enough, if he listened to others, he would stay as far away as he could! But he is too obstinate and strong opinionated and…”

Martha cupped his face and brought their eyes to meet; she was smiling and Clark narrowed his eyes.

“Why are you smiling?”

“Because it’s nice hearing that our Bruce has such a strong personality – after everything he’s been through people believe him to be weak and scared but you tell me that he is someone who stands his ground opposite…Superman. And that, my son, makes me really happy for that young man and…” she caressed his cheek “explains why you fell in love with him. I know that your heart is so kind that can embrace every human in pain and need but for falling so mad in love with someone, it’d take something more. Which now I understand. You wouldn’t love Bruce that much if he was different…”

Clark sighed: it was true – Bruce’s strength and personality was that electrified his body and soul. Even now in this awkward state picturing again the man’s sparkling with determination eyes made him crave for him.

“This is why you’re so upset: your feelings for him are too strong but you have to understand that he has some needs. The fact that he decided against what you wanted doesn’t mean that he doesn’t respect your opinion. I’m sure he is unhappy for having to do something you don’t like. He definitely would want you supporting his decisions and not being against and disgruntled…away from him. But Bruce has his own personality, Clark: you can’t decide for him either force things on him. And I know that deep inside you wouldn’t want that because then Bruce wouldn’t be the man you loved.”

Clark put his hands on his mother’s shoulders.

“Things are so complicated, Ma…” he inhaled deeply. “When he woke from the coma everything was so beautiful, so bright, so clear…but now…” he bit his lips and Martha frowned. “It’s not the same…I feel that I can’t cope with Bruce, I can’t give him what he needs and…” he felt that he could speak honestly at least with his Ma “I’m tired of this: I need something that won’t make my guts twist.”

Martha’s eyes widened.

“Your feelings have changed?” she asked.

Clark realizing the meaning of what he had said looked at his mother almost desperately.

“No! Absolutely not! I love Bruce as ever but…” he pressed his hair on his head “ugh! Ma, I don’t know what’s happening…”
She pressed her lips.

“It’s fatigue, Clark; I know that you never in your life experienced physical fatigue so now the emotional fatigue is quite odd for you. You and Bruce shared a Hell together all these months: things that hurt both of you. At first, the joy and relief from Bruce’s saving hid everything but slowly as the life becomes casual all these things are coming to the fore: Bruce feels the need to return to his normal life and you are afraid for him and this fear intensifies the impact of what you experienced while Bruce was fighting for his life. It’s a trial, son; a trial of your love.”

Clark nodded thoughtful.

“It’d be easier if he understood…He is a human and he is vulnerable and Gotham is full of dangers. Why is it so difficult for him to sympathize with me and ease my torment?”

Martha smiled.

“Maybe he does, maybe is as much difficult for him as for you…But he needs to be himself or else he’ll be miserable and withered. We, humans, are vulnerable but this isn’t our only quality: if Bruce submit to you and settles in his vulnerability you’ll be still interested? You’ll still be interested in a being that would be half? Is that what you really want from him? To be submissive and simply obey to your wishes?”

He pressed his lips and swallowed hard. He remembered Falcone’s slave: Bruce’s façade to satisfy his owner. It was just a mask then but still echoed Bruce’s suffering all the years under Falcone’s mastery. Clark cringed: no, he didn’t want to be turned into Bruce’s new owner. He met his mother’s eyes.

“I don’t want that…” he whispered and his heart felt light.

Martha nodded.

“I know…Because your love is real: I remember your suffering and agony while his life stood on the edge and you were coming to me… I remember your elation when he was saved, when he first opened his eyes and talked to you…”

Clark’s eyes watered: he remembered too. Martha kissed his cheek.

“When in doubt, recall those moments…”

Bruce kept his face completely unruffled as his tablet called several times Clark’s smart phone. No answer. He finished the call decisively. He looked at Selina nonchalant.

“He has his phone deactivated…”

“Perhaps he is somewhere where he doesn’t risk being heard…”

“Or as I suspected, he doesn’t want to talk to me…”

“C’me on, Bruce!” Selina pouted. “You don’t honestly believe that!”

“Master Bruce, if you pardon my indiscretion” Bruce tilted his head and looked him exasperated “I must agree with Miss Kyle: I don’t think that this is the case.”

Bruce shook his head pressing his lips. They didn’t know what happened the last night Clark came to him; they didn’t feel the change in him...

Alfred stopped the car at the back side of Selina’s apartment building and rushed to open the door for her. She was staring at her friend reading his sadness for what he believed that was indifference from Clar. Bruce locked eyes with her.

“Call him again! You’ll see it’s not what you think…”

Bruce smiled and ran his fingers to her cheek.

“It’s okay, Sel… Don’t worry.”

She kissed him on the cheek.

“Have a good rest, will you?”

“I will.”

She kissed Hero who meowed to her. She stepped out of the car and Bruce holding Hero leaned towards the door.

“Come to see us soon!”

Selina turned rapidly and kissed her friend again.

“Tomorrow morning, sweetie!” she caressed Hero once again. “Call Clark again!” she said and rushed to the building’s back door because she didn’t want them to see her eyes watering. After all, they’d soon see each other again!

Alfred started the engine.

“Do call Master Kent again, sir” his butler told him looking at him from the mirror.

But Bruce dropped the tablet on the seat and hugged Hero. He was feeling exhaustion slowly eroding his muscles deep to the bones.

“I’m too tired, Alfred; I just want to sleep for a couple of hours…”

Alfred nodded, worry evident in his face: a journey of ten hours was extreme for a healing organism, especially when sadness cast its torturing burden on everything else.

“Of course, sir: Leslie and Lucius took special care for the Manor to be ready. But first you’ll have a nice meal and your medicine.”

Bruce let his head rest on the back of the seat closing his eyes, taking solace by Hero’s warm tongue licking his face.

Dick was hanging from the still rings trying to finish his exercises. The gym was full of people: young and older athletes, trainers and other staff. In his trainer’s expression he could see that Jeffrey wasn’t much satisfied by his performance and Tony Zucco standing a few feet away in a corner was watching with his arms crossed and his lips pressed.

The boy clenched his teeth and turned his body upside down supported in his stretched arms which tremble too much – insanely more than the previous times. Jeffrey, his Afro-American trainer shook “Stretch your legs more, Dick! Concentrate on your arms… Relax…”

Ugh! Relax! That was easy for you to say, Jeff… Dick gritted his teeth trying to stop his arms from shaking, the air pressing in his mouth. He closed his eyes but the result wasn’t as the other times: his heart beat too loudly, too fast…too angry.

“IT’s okay, Dick” Jeff yelled clapping once and Dick knew that his trainer gave up for today. “We’ll continue tomorrow” after you find again your self-control, Dick filled the gap in his trainer’s words.

The boy let his body fell entirely gracelessly disappointed with himself and angry… and then landed on his tiptoes. Jeff smiled to him and patted his shoulder.

“Go take a shower and back home to get some rest: you’ve made a great progress the last months so you can relax a bit…”

Zucco approached with his light strides and covered Dick’s shoulders with the big towel he was holding. He smiled with Dick’s awed eyes when took in the towel’s imprint: three times Olympic Champion – the legend: John Grayson. Under that there were signatures – names that Dick recognized as some of the world’s greatest gymnasts. He had heard about the towel that was given to his dad as a token of his colleagues’ respect but never till now had he seen it.

Jeff looked irritated at Zucco: he didn’t want Dick being stressed and pressed by his legendary father’s legacy. He wanted his young athlete to focus on what he could achieve and not on a stupid pressure to repeat his father’s feats. And Jeff, unlike some of his colleagues in the gym, didn’t like Zucco.

“Dick, shower and home” he said to the boy.

Zucco nodded to Dick and winked.

“Exactly, Dick; Jeff is right.”

“You’ll wait?” the boy asked him calmly.

Zucco smiled.

“Of course, champ!” they slapped their palms in the air and Dick ran to the showers.

Jeff walked to Zucco towering him, his eyes’ cold.

“I don’t want you here, Zucco…”

The shorter man grinned meeting his eyes.

“The gym isn’t yours, Jeff… As far as I know, it’s public…”

Jeff protruded his lower lip.

“Let the boy alone: I don’t like your bad influence on him.”

Zucco laughed.

“This is for Dick to decide and he wants me here. So you’re not entitled to kick me out.”
Jeff shook his head.

“What do you want from the boy, huh? Returning here all of a sudden?” his thick eyebrows knitted.

“Hang out with my nephew” he answered casually.

“As if…” Jeff spat and pressed his finger on Zucco’s chest. “I’ll being watching you…”

Zucco winked.

“You’re still a homosexual, Jeff? I wonder if the parents of your young athletes know that and how they’re gonna react hearing…”

The veins in Jeff’s bulging deltoids moved irritated wanting to ignite an attack but a fellow trainer called him and he walked away glaring at Zucco who raised his eyebrows jeering.

“Thank you for showing me that towel” Dick approached him after some minutes holding the famous towel folded carefully. “I thought it was just some exaggeration…” he gave the precious item to Zucco but he waved him off.

“No… It belongs to you” Dick’s eyes bulged. “Your father would want you to have it.”

Dick’s eyes fell touched on the towel: it was so perfectly preserved. He put it carefully in his gym bag. It was obvious that it had great emotional value for Tony and the man just gave it to him! He remembered what his granny had told him the morning and blushed ashamed of her.

“Come…” Zucco put his arm around Dick’s shoulders and led him towards the small cafeteria of the gym. “You have time or you must go home immediately?”

Dick met his eyes and shook his head.

“I can stay a bit.”

Zucco raised his eyebrows innocently.

“You sure that your granny won’t worry?”

“It’s okay – I’m not a kid.”

Zucco grinned.

“You’re definitely not: you’re an incredibly mature teen” he gesture to him to seat at the table on the corner and he walked to the bar returning with a coffee for him and a natural juice for Dick.

Dick eyed the juice and shook his head.

“I’d rather a chocolate or a milk shake…” he said mischievously.

Zucco crossed his legs casually and chuckled.

“I’m sure you do, young man, yet you must be careful with your diet: you’re an aspiring champion. Anytime now you should start attending tournaments and even championships.”

“I have already some honorable mentions for my performance in tournaments in our state” he blushed admitting and Zucco nodded. “Mom was very proud…” his voice dropped. “Now I don’t feel any mood on participating…and my skills as you saw earlier are off…”
Zucco raised his palm stopping him; his eyes were firm.

“You’re a great talent, kid, and you shouldn’t ever forget that.”

“You saw how trembled my arms unable even to hold my body…” he said frustrated playing with the straw in his glass.

Zucco supported his elbows on the table and leaned towards the boy.

“You can do way more than this: I know your range of movements is incredible for your age” he took a deep breath having gained Dick’s attention. “Today, you just weren’t concentrated: your mind was elsewhere.”

Dick frowned.

“How do you know?”

Zucco bit his lips.

“Because your father was exactly like this towards the end…” he gulped. “It was a phase where his career had turned downwards…” the adult took in the boy’s intrigued stare and smirked inside but didn’t let Dick utter his questions. “I know what caused it…and understand.”

He looked upwards on the wall behind Dick where a huge TV screen was built-in. Dick made to turn his head to see but he narrowed his eyes and changed course only with a glimpse of what was on. His face became gloomy and his lips upturned in disgust. His shoulders slumped: once again they were showing Wayne’s return.

Zucco cupped his hand on the table.

“He’s alive…” he mumbled sympathetically “and he is back – I know, Dick: it hurts that he came back while your loved ones who died because of him won’t ever come back…” he took in the boy’s lips trembling. “Life is unfair, champ, but you should not let him ruin your life anymore” he smiled. “You should use him as a motivation to become a champion” he winked. “He is disabled and I hope he never walks again so your success in gymnastics would hurt him more…”

Dick nodded although he wasn’t sure if Wayne gave a shit about him becoming a champion and how could this hurt him. Yet indeed seeing him disabled, glued to a wheelchair gave him a wild satisfaction.

Zucco watched carefully the boy’s expression: he was easy to read like his father and his hatred for Wayne was a sure way to win Dick over. He took a sip from his coffee taking in the boy’s frown.

“Drink your juice, Dick; it will lose its nutrients.”

But Dick’s mind was occupied with something else.

“You said that my father was like me…towards the end…” he hesitated and finally met Zucco’s eyes. “It was because his career was lapsing…, right?” Dick wanted to hear Zucco’s take of the story and compare it with his granny’s.

The adult opposite him became serious but not uncomfortable.

Zucco was smirking inside: so Ms. Turner opened that closet… She was desperate to take the boy away from him and would use everything to achieve it. She was a clever cow but he was cleverer and the boy definitely didn’t listen to her – exactly like John, at least at first.

“No, Dick: his career was lapsing because he wasn’t concentrated” he sighed as if reluctant to continue. “He was facing personal problems and that had a detrimental effect in his performance” he relished the boy’s widened eyes.

“Personal problems?” Dick tensed. “Mom said that they were happy together.”

Zucco tilted his head on the side and smiled warmly.

“I’d have said the same in her place… A mother always wants to keep unpleasant things far from her child” he pinched the bridge of his nose. “On the other hand, it’s tough to speak about the problems your husband was facing when those problems were in fact…” he shook his head: he knew that choosing to not say directly what he wanted was the best to persuade the kid that he was telling the truth and that cared about him “let’s drop it…Poor Mary died a terrible death so let’s forget the rest…”

Dick drew a big sip from his juice, his breath caught in his lungs.

“Mom had something to do with dad’s problems?” he demanded breathlessly.

“Mmm…let’s say that family is what causes the personal problems of a married man. Listen, Dick, I don’t want to cause any troubles to your relation with your granny…I know that she doesn’t like me and if she learns that I told you about that…” he grimaced. “Ms. Turner has already many things in her head – honestly, I don’t want to cause new pains to her. And you.”

Dick rolled his eyes: Zucco should hear his granny talking about him…She wasn’t so generous with him; she didn’t hesitate to speak ill about him.

“Please, Tony, you must tell me everything about dad: I know that parents often have fights – it’s not that I’ll hate my mom or something…”

Zucco drink from his coffee.

“You’re an admirable young man…So unbelievably mature for your age that you’d understand your mom’s increasing upset and restlessness when your father’s investments failed to make profit…” he shrugged satisfied from the boy’s widened eyes. “It’s understandable, Dick: she was panicked. Your dad’s career had peaked, he was a champion but in a few years he would have to retire – the money he naively put in some insecure business was their savings from advertising contracts that probably he wouldn’t get again” Dick gaped shocked: so his dad was…broke?

“Mom wasn’t…I mean she didn’t love money more than my dad…” the boy was flabbergasted and Zucco pressed his lips.

“I didn’t say that, my boy. Mary loved John but she was scared; she felt insecure and – I’m sorry for saying it – your granny wasn’t helping” he was enjoying the different shades of color Dick’s face was taking from red to pale. “Women need some security in their lives and when things aren’t so good…” he sighed dramatically and ruffled his hair. “John was sharing his pains with me but it wasn’t enough…He just couldn’t concentrate on his craft, he felt a loser and one day…” he didn’t know if Turner had reached to the point of speaking about that but he would “after a surprise drag test, he was found…”

Dick jerked angry.

“My father refused he had done use – he didn’t know anything!”
So she indeed told the boy.

“Calm down, Dick; please…” the boy sat again a bit reluctantly. “I’m the last person in the planet that I’d say anything bad about John: he was a great athlete in talent and morality; his teammates and people adored him” he gulped touched. “Damn! He was my hero!”

He leaned towards Dick and took his hands in his own.

“But you have to understand that sometimes despair changes even the best of people… Mary wasn’t happy with their marriage and she even spoke about breaking up and poor John wanted to regain her trust, to help her feel secure” his eyes stabbed the boy’s hurt eyes “to stop her from leaving him…”

Dick shook his head in disbelief.

“But she was pregnant when dad died.”

“Yes, she was but that was after your father was found positive in use of illegal substances – Mary still loved your father and realized that her coldness had pushed him to desperate measures. So she gave him a second chance – and I’m glad…” he smiled “because we got you…”

Dick’s eyes were expressionless: his heart ache from all these and his brain was confused. It was the first time that a doubt about his parents’ love and marriage got to him – till now everything he had heard was like a fairytale. He didn’t believe it and at the same time…believe it…well, not exactly: maybe Zucco was lying?

“Dad said that someone slipped the substances secretly in his drinks or food…” he said searching Zucco’s eyes but there he could see only understanding.

“Me, right?” he smiled. “That’s what your granny told you?” Dick didn’t answer and Zucco didn’t need him too. “Believe me, my boy: you can take her word for that” he nodded “actually, I’d prefer it if you thought ill about me than have a prickle in your heart. But I didn’t…If I had done that don’t you think that your father would have fired me? It’s easy for people blaming the others than admitting their own faults…” he said meaning Ms. Turner.

Dick pouted and lowered his eyes.

“There ya are!” a young voice that was trying to sound tough startled Dick. “Ya told me to wait ya at Bernie’s, ya dork!” Dick looked at Jason sheepishly and the younger boy cast an irritated glare at Zucco. “Up!” he pulled Dick from his jacket.

“Wait, Jay! I’m talking here!”

Jay put his foot down.

“Yeah! Yar talkin’ bullshit!”

But Dick paled seeing Ms. Turner walking furiously towards them. Her short posture tensed eyeing Zucco who answered her glare calmly but with a glint of satisfaction.

“Good afternoon, Ms. Turner! I hope there’s no problem we chatting with Dick – if it is however, I take the full responsibility.”

Ms. Turner didn’t even answer.

“Let’s go, Dick” she said to her grandson and led the two boys outside under Zucco’s amused eyes.
Only after they were outside the building, Ms. Turner stopped her frantic pace and squatted before Dick.

“I think I told you to return home right after your training! What’s wrong, sweetie?” her voice cracked and her eyes bent. “I know I’m not your mother but…” her eyes watered and Dick just couldn’t stand it: despite everything he heard today he loved her so much.

He hugged his grandmother.

“You’re the best, granny, and I love you…I just…”

Jason was watching exasperated with his hands clenching his waist.

“It’s just that Dick sometimes is…a dick!”

Ms. Turner turned to him realizing his presence. She smiled fondly.

“Who is this charming young man?” she asked Dick and Jason actually blushed which made his friend chuckle.

“He is my buddy, Jason Todd. Well, Jay, this is my granny.”

Jason cast him a lopsided glance.

“I figured already…”

Ms. Turner stood and stretched her hand to Jason and he took it uncomfortable.

“You’re not Dick’s classmate, right?”

Jason scratched his nape.

“Nah…”

“He is from Narrows” Dick felt that he must be honest at least now. “But he’s my best pal.”

His granny smiled to the two boys.

“I’m very glad to meet you, Jason!” and she definitely was: after Joker killed Dick’s family, Ms. Turner was afraid that her grandson would shut himself from the world: actually, his teacher had warned her that indeed Dick became very aloof. So Jay was the best thing right now – the little boy gave her hope.

Jason sensed the elder woman’s affection and felt awkward; he wasn’t used to people being glad for his meeting or so fond of him. Even his mom didn’t look at him with such shining eyes.

“Mmmm…Me too…” he glared at Dick who was smirking. “Ya…” he was ready to call him something nasty but he remembered Ms. Turner and stopped. “I…I’ve got to buzz off…mom is waitin’.”

Ms. Turner frowned seeing the young boy riding a bike and rushing into the road.

“He isn’t too young to drive a bike?” she asked dumbfounded and put her arm around Dick’s shoulder leading him towards their home that wasn’t too far from the city gym.

“Jay is an awesome dude! He lives in the Narrows!” he said with awe.
Ms. Turner nodded.

“Why you didn’t tell me about him?”

Dick chewed his lips.

“’Cause he’s from Narrows and I thought that you’d forbid me from hang out with him…to not get in the wrong path…” he raised his eyebrows.

Ms. Turner shrugged.

“He seems a good boy and growing up in Narrows is a feat…No, I have no problem with you being friends with Jay: you can invite him home if you like. Zucco on the other hand…”

But Dick was too tired from everything he heard that afternoon.

“Please, granny…” he pleaded. “Can we just drop it for today?”

Ms. Turner pressed her lips: her poor boy was so tormented by all these; he had just lost his family and now this…

Thomas Eliot had just finished his lecture at Gotham’s university and was heading to his office at the top floor of the Neuroscience Department. It was the best situated office with a panoramic view of the city since this building was rather tall and the university was placed on the hills at the east of the city. Thomas had asked for that specific office because since his student years he was envious of the old, gloomy professor Georgiou for occupying it.

Well, ten years later and he, Thomas Elliot, was putting his key in the lock of that same office where that old rascal preached him about being more modest and moral concerning his scientific projects. Opening the door, Thomas smirked: dear professor, here I am! An acknowledged doctor and scientist with great, breakthrough work and an endless list of charities: a role model for his students.

Thomas got almost aroused every time he entered the amphitheater to teach all these students. He sucked their attentive eyes and respect. He was beaming and smirking inside because he put on a modest, serious, nonchalant face.

He relished the luxury he established for the office and the smell of the expensive air freshener. He brushed the control panel on the wall and the secret lighting illuminated the space. He tossed his brown, leather briefcase on the armchair facing his desk and walked to the half-wall window overlooking Gotham that slowly began filling with multicolored lights as the evening approached.

Thomas pulled a deep diaphragmatic breath and exhaled slowly, his blazing blue eyes stabbing the city. He loosened his silken, mahogany tie product of a famous fashion house.

His eyes were empty as he gazed at the city: he hated that city…but at the same time was tied with her…well, at least now that Brucey returned from the dead. All these years that his childhood… ‘friend’ was considered dead Gotham bore no interest for him because he felt unchallenged, the definite winner. But when he first heard the shocking news of Bruce’s ‘resurrection’, his brilliant mind went completely numb as his body; his entire life was toppled…And since then Gotham despite hateful became an obsession much like that extremely lucky brat.

Thomas knew that he had to come back, to re-establish the order of things, to re-establish his superiority over that appalling thing which now was again the Prince of Gotham: the favorite son of this shithole. Thomas was dethroned: his successful career and his feats that till now made Gotham proud and positioned him at a pedestal were forgotten only because that brat happened to be alive and saved by Stark and the other assholes superheroes.

He fist his hands; all this attention and love that filthy whelp used to get even during their childhood was outrageous! “The Little Prince of Gotham”, “the Angel of the Narrows” – everybody was kissing his little ass to lick his father. And Tommy was always left in the shadow, although he was brighter than that stupid kid and better in everything…

Thomas breath became rasps. That pint-sized puppy always got everyone’s eyes and admiration without doing anything and his parents adored him while poor Tommy had to suffer his rascal father and his stupid mother who never took his side…

Thomas smirked: at least, Falcone gave Brucey what he deserved. He remembered how aroused he was listening to Bruce’s testimony at the court: his steady voice that failed to hide his pain and terror as he recounted the various and so delicious torments Falcone had put him through. Thomas, who snubbed the Gotham’s Emperor during his kingship, now felt a deep respect for the man who understood the real nature of Bruce Wayne and what he should get; his only failure was that he didn’t finish the job.

But then that clown killed the man and Thomas was enraged at how that boy managed to fascinate all these people: from scum to superheroes.

Thomas yanked his head; from the moment he learnt that Bruce was alive he wanted to return and finish the job Falcone left half… Thomas’ eyes were fixed on the city that lay underneath: he’d become this city’s ruler and do Bruce’s life a living Hell: eighteen years of Falcone wasn’t enough for the Wayne brat and Thomas would take care of making him wish he had stayed in Falcone’s bed. He had already established connections…

He smiled remembering the sweet, angelic face of Bruce when young Thomas ripped the leg of his Tao-Tao toy: oh! Bruce, you should cry all the time… A cackled laugh escaped his mouth seeing again those wet, beautiful eyes filled with weak rage, despair and hopeless bewilderment: the little shit couldn’t understand how someone could be so cruel to him – he was accustomed to be loved and sweet talked by everyone. Bruce couldn’t accept that people around him weren’t as good as himself and could be happy by making him suffer and cry.

The phone on his desk rang and dragged him out of his reverie; he turned his head towards the stylized expensive device and wondered who could be. Probably, something professional since the more personal calls were made at his smartphone… He closed his eyes and puffed: he had closed his smartphone when at Gotham General and with the lecture right after he forgot to open it.

He let the phone ring several times, sitting slowly and pompously at his royal, ergonomic leather chair and clapping once for the built-in fireplace to ignite: the room was warm enough but Thomas loved the atmosphere of nobility it gave.

He finally took the receiver.

“Oh, Tommy, at last!”

Thomas yanked his head and pouted his lips in disdain.

“Hi, sweetheart! What’s the matter?” he answered hearing Kelly’s voice was a bit exasperated and filled with eagerness.
“I’m trying to reach you for hours!” the idiot nurse kept bitching instead of getting to the point.

He rubbed the bridge of his nose asking himself if he really had to tolerate that stupid girl.

“I’m sorry, darling, but I had a surgery at Gotham General and then right after a lecture in the University and I forgot to open my smartphone…” really now? You have to justify yourself to HER?

He heard her taking a hesitant breath as if regretting her tone.

“You don’t have to apologize, Tommy” she said and Thomas imagined her blushing. “A…actually, I’m sorry for…for my tone but I have exciting news and I didn’t know if you heard…”

Thomas straightened in his chair and frowned.

“What news, babe?”

“Oh! So you really didn’t learn anything…of course, with all the things you have to do daily…”

The doctor rolled his eyes and snorted finding it hard to not burst out.

“OK, Kelly… What’s up?”

“Bruce Wayne returned!” she was in fact happy for that. “Every station plays it! And I thought you’d want to know ASAP!”

Thomas’ lips formed a tight line, his eyes shining coldly.

“Thank you, my dear. Of course, I wanted to know…”

He heard a pressed breath and he understood that the nurse remembered something.

“Mmmm…Tommy…” she mumbled rather apologetically and Thomas was intrigued.

“What is it, Kelly? You make me worry…”

“I’m sorry…Is that your friend… I mean the way he has returned…” Thomas clenched his jaw and ruffled his perfect groomed hair. “He was using a wheelchair!” she was really miserable relaying these news because she really believed that he gave a shit about Brucey’s wellbeing.

But this was very interesting and satisfying.

“Oh! God!” he exclaimed in his best heartbroken imitation. “I knew that something was off…Poor Bruce! But maybe he was just tired from the trip and they used the wheelchair to help him.”

She sounded thoughtful.

“Yeah! Maybe he isn’t really paralyzed!”

Thomas shook his head in disbelief: I hope he really is! Yet he had to get rid of her to see it with his own eyes.

“Kelly, I must hang up now – I have an appointment with a student for his diatribe…Mmm…thank you, babe for calling: you’re a treasure.”

“I’ll see you tonight?” she asked with a begging tone. “I’m not in the night shift and I know that you’re not as well so if you wanted…”
Thomas rolled his eyes and his lips twitched in disgust: that’s what you get when you encourage too much people. Anyway, she was useful for now.

“I don’t know yet, babe. You can’t imagine how much I’m dreaming of a night with you! I’ll call you… Now give me a kiss!”

She giggled and did that causing Thomas’ snort.

“Bye, Tommy!”

He just put the receiver back feeling a deep disgust for what just took place. He inhaled deeply: at least now he was free. He rushed on his computer and opened the Gotham Gazette’s site.

His eyes narrowed, sparkling with wild joy. Here it was: head news.

“The Prince of Gotham is finally back – but on a wheelchair!”

He turned on the video from his arrival at one of Gotham’s private airports. He shook his head and a wide smile lightened his face as the frame filled with Bruce confined in a fancy wheelchair – certainly, Stark’s creation – pushed carefully by Alfred.

His childhood ‘friend’ was in good shape: no paleness or thinness. Wherever Brucey was the place made wonders considering the critical condition he was. The Wayne brat had rosy cheeks and must have gained some weight; he looked tired from the trip – and that meant that his rehabilitation center wasn’t in US – but at the same time seemed rested.

But the best was that he returned a paraplegic. Thomas shook his head: that chair wasn’t like the ones used by companies to just help their ill clients – that chair was made for permanent use.

“Yes!” he exclaimed gesturing to the air. “That serves you right, my little friend, since you turned over my professional help! I could have saved you, you selfish, arrogant shit! Suffer now!” his teeth grinded.

But then he loosened in an innocent grin, a thought forming in his mind.

“Yet a true friend must be forgiving and sympathetic, right, Brucey?”

Dr. Quinzel was watching on her tablet the footage from the Asylum’s cafeteria the moment Joker attacked to his former goon. She was outside Joker’s double cell, sat on a plain chair; Joker was lying on the bed, still unconscious since the rising in his vitals during the attack activated Tony Stark’s intra-organization measures and the man was instantly knocked out. However, she took care to be woken up sooner than it was programmed.

It was the fifth time she was watching the video: Mr. J was talking as usual with Crane during their meal. Her patient was calm and even pleasant with the former doctor who however kept acting a bit strange if not hostile – anyway, Mr. J didn’t seem the type to hold grudges. Then he looked fleetingly at the TV and his eyes fell casually on his former henchman who was enthusiastic on seeing his former boss. And Mr. J’s reaction wasn’t bad either.

He continued his discussion with Crane which discussion seemed very interesting – Harley was curious to learn what they were talking about. She had brought up the subject to Dr. Finley, the psychiatrist who was appointed to Crane but he had no idea albeit he was as much interested as her and… alarmed at the same time. Dr. Finley was a fearful man and didn’t like the idea of Joker walking around in the Asylum’s premises. What a bad professional!

Suddenly, without an obvious reason, Mr. J jerked upwards and in a remarkable fast way jumped on his former goon digging his teeth in his neck. It was a good think Mr. Stark had his intra-organization triggers to knock out Joker because the orderlies’ intervention would have been too late. Thankfully, the goon – a Lou Garfield with Down’s syndrome and manic disorder – wasn’t seriously injured though he would bear for some time Mr. J’s bite marks... Joker had managed to remove a chunk from the man’s neck in the fraction of the second before falling unconscious.

Harleen felt goose bumps: it was kind of pervert… and she had worked it with her supervisor psychiatrist but... vampirism was a turn on for her... Well, apart from being a psychiatrist she was a human too so... some eccentricities were permitted when harmless...

Her gaze fell on Mr. J: he was a fascinating man… well, case. A hard case and at the same time he had the potential to become her biggest success. She bit her lips: professional success and ambition wasn’t the only drive for her – she really wanted to help him become a reformed man. Because Mr. J, Jack, was a special person and he could change into being a man skilled in whatever he wanted. Harleen could see his above average I.Q., she didn’t need to apply some test: she doubted whether someone so extremely intelligent and rebellious like Jack would take that tests seriously.

And there wasn’t only his intelligence; he could become a good person. She was sure that he was one but his life experiences turned him into that mass murderer – he lived for ten years in a psychiatric hospital! And Harleen wasn’t sure that the staff there cared much about some punk the police sent them. But she cared and Mr. J seeing that changed already. He opened up to her during their last session and gave her a glimpse of his tormented life. He even socialized with the other patients without any incident proving that he can be nice to others and that he wasn’t the blood-thirsty and sociopathic monster everyone thought.

Till now. Harleen almost immediately saw the reason of Mr. J’s violent reaction: it was on the TV screen. It showed Bruce Wayne’s arrival at Gotham’s private airport, the billionaire descending the special ramp on a wheelchair with his butler’s assistance.

The young psychiatrist grinded her teeth: that arrival ruined every progress she had accomplished with her fascinating patient. He just pushed Mr. J miles back to his cruel, sociopathic self. It was evident that Bruce Wayne was Mr. J’s demon – weren’t for him, her patient would have continued his impressive improvement.

She was really angry with the timing because Joker manifested signs that he had nearly overcome the young billionaire and even he seemed to get interested in her; so Harleen was really angry with her patient’s infatuation – Bruce Wayne could have stayed away from Gotham for some time more, right? Or forever... If Wayne was dead, Mr. J would sooner or later forget him and proceed into becoming a normal, charming person with her guidance.

Harleen bit her lip: that was completely inappropriate. It wasn’t Bruce Wayne’s fault that Mr. J got obsessed with him. On the contrary, surely the young man wished that Joker never had set eyes on him.

Mr. J stirred for the tenth time since she rushed there after being informed for the incident. He was meant to stay unconscious for many hours but she intervened so to be woken earlier. Harleen watched eagerly his eyelids and finally she saw a fraction of his glimmering orbs.

Joker felt awkward: he was knocked out a few times in his life yet this one had a different quality. He cocked an eyebrow and chuckled: Stark’s touch! Hehehe! Not bad! He could sell it in clubs to stupid brats wanting great stuff. He still felt a pleasant tickling in every cell of his body – ummm... imagined that banging Brucey would be like this…

His muscles became tense and his eyes narrowed to slits: a flash crossing his mind showed him the screen in the cafeteria with the footage from his spouse’s arrival…On a wheelchair, led by someone else, unable to stand, a cripple…He gritted his teeth and groaned. He saw again the moronic face of his goon laughing carelessly as if he hadn’t done anything wrong or happy for what he did! He pulled the trigger that caused the fire, the collapse of the building that disabled Batman and…Bruce.

He punched his mattress in frustration realizing that he was knocked out before causing fatal damage to that scum. Damn! Lou was still alive! He punched again and suddenly erupted in laughter.

“Mr. J, how do you feel?”

So, he wasn’t alone. The funny little doctor was here, worried about her prodigy patient. Joker cackled: he definitely had a splendid time with her but now it wasn’t enough. He looked her with the corner of his eye without moving his head just putting one leg upon another.

“What’s uuuuuup, doc?” he asked indifferently so unlike his attitude towards her.

Harleen immediately discerned the difference and didn’t like it – it almost hurt. She didn’t want to lose her patient’s interest just because the Wayne heir returned.

“You don’t have anything to tell me?” she answered.

Joker made a negative sound pouting his lips, still not looking at his doctor, being aware that this was unsettling to her.

Dr. Quinzel closed her eyes disappointed but she wasn’t a quitter.

“Mr. J, what happened at the cafeteria?” she continued calmly, even compassionate.

Joker’s eyes fixed on the ceiling as if it was the most interesting thing and put his palms under his nape.

“Youuuuu have cameras watching the place soooooo this is a stupid question ooooooor a slyyyyyyyy one… Whaaaaat option you prefer, Harle--quin?” his voice was now cold and Harleen felt hurt after how close they had come.

“I’m interested in your view of things, Mr. J; I thought we had come to this understanding all this time…”

“HA!” he exclaimed sarcastic and then giggled. “I think that YOU” he stressed the word accusingly “should stay with what the cameras showed” he nodded. “HEHEHEHE! I have the im--pression that the short film you have is eloquent enough…HUHU…HUHU…HUHU…HUHU…” he ended in a singsong manner knowing that he was getting on the young psychiatrist.

Harleen was really upset: till now she had Jack’s trust. Jack showed her that he believed her good will. She didn’t like that he was getting so cold to her, treating her as he did everyone else.

“I sense that you got some complaint…”

Joker giggled but still didn’t look at her which really annoyed Harleen.

“Meeeee? Complaint?” he exclaimed amused. “Naaaaaah! I’m a tooootally satisfied customer…” he paused and his eyes stabbed the ceiling. “If you crooooos out that MY doctor who braaaaags that cares about me allowed that perv Stark put something in me to knock me out whenever he wants to!”
he turned suddenly his head and stabbed Harleen’s widened eyes. “Now” he dragged his tongue “I don’t think that this is the way to get someone’s truuuust…” he lolled his head downwards with his eyelids batting innocently.

Dr. Quinzel managed to find her calm and looked at him casually.

“Mr. Stark’s measures were taken not to torment you but to prevent you from harming other people and yourself – you were ready to tear apart the neck of that man.”

Joker twitched his lips.

“If you had killed that man I’d be forced to keep you in complete isolation and withdraw all the privileges you gained with your admirable efforts” Joker hiccuped to hide his giggles on the ‘admirable efforts’. “So actually you should be grateful to Mr. Stark” she said widening her eyes for emphasis.

Joker shook his index finger to her.

“I wouuuuuldn’t be grateful to Stark--y even if he was our best man aaaaand his wedding gift was a car like Bruce’s…” he crossed his arms and then uncrossed them cackling. “Grateful…” he mimicked the doctor’s solemn voice and shook his head amused.

“What’s the reason you attacked Mr. Garfield? Until that moment you were talking calmly with Mr.
Crane and you even greeted that man.”

Joker had fixed his right eye on her cocking an eyebrow.

“I dooooon’t have to answer youuuuu. Harlequin…” he spat nasally like a small brat and devoured how the doctor pressed her lips in frustration.

Harleen took a deep breath.

“It was that you saw Bruce Wayne on TV…” she said to prompt him to elaborate since there was nothing secret.

Joker eyed her under furrowed eyebrows and narrowed eyes: ha! So the doll face had an ounce of brain enough to watch carefully the footage and connect the dots. Well, it didn’t take Einstein’s brains to figure THAT. A Cheshire smile curved his cheeks.

“Uuuuuuuuu! Youuuuu are a smart pumpkin” he clapped his hands. “Now you have your answer, hit the road!” his voice became harsh.

“I’m not” she retorted calmly. “Not before you speak about what happened.”

He laughed and his back shook. He lay again on the mattress returning his eyes to the ceiling.

Harleen felt like crying from frustration: why Mr. J was doing that to her? He knew that she was on his side, that she wanted to help him. It wasn’t her fault that Bruce Wayne didn’t want him or that he was a convict; a dangerous man that should be guarded all the time. For pity’s sake, she wanted to change that and make him a free person again without anyone having to be scared of him and instead see in Jack what she had seen.

“It’s a pity that all our work and trust was ruined because of a news’ footage… You must control what that man is doing to you. We must work on that.”
Joker let out a sole cackle: control what Bruce was doing to him... What’s the fun in controlling what you want to be uncontrolled? Bruce was a totally uncontrollable force – so much so that his abusers-masters failed to tame after so many years of thinking the kid a zobbie. So everything that this man provoked was uncontrolled and that was what made Joker fascinated like a kid finding an exciting, unpredictable game, as himself...

Harleen understood that Joker wasn’t paying much attention to her, probably pondering on his... wife. And that was annoying! She was struggling to help him and he had his mind on that man who didn’t give a shit about him – Bruce Wayne hated Mr. J whereas she cared about him: she was the only person that really cared about Joker and believed in him and his hidden quality.

“You need to understand that Bruce Wayne triggers the worst things in you” she tried to sound collected.

Worst things? Joker moved his lips as if blowing a gum bubble. Nothing was bad in Joker so worst was a stupid term but he could sniff the young doctor’s despair. Hehe! He had done a perfect job: the shrink got attached to him and every speck of his attention and ‘secret information’ about his life and soul was the most delicious bone for that puppy to wave its tail. And when he withdrew that bone… oh, it was hilarious! Harlequin was desperate to do anything for getting her rubber bone back – rubber because it was a fake bone all this talk about his past life: Hell, it was obscure even to him...

Joker chuckled: all in all, psychology was a great science. Look how right it was about conditional learning... I love you and your dogs, Pavlov!

Harleen realized that her patient wasn’t listening to her at all and closed her eyes.

“You don’t hear me…”

Time for a hint of a bone...

“’Course I dooooo, doc! I loooove your voice after all!” he turned his wicked eyes on her flushed from frustration face. “Didn’t I tell ya?”

The young psychiatrist felt relieved and satisfied by that comment.

“We must work on your infatuation with Bruce Wayne; the time we discuss things together I came to the conclusion that this man is the key for your reform. If you get over him” her eyes shone “you’ll be a new man: your true self!”

Joker turned his hand into a gun and pretended to shoot his temple.

“Ho-holly shit!” he gazed again at the ceiling.

Harleen squinted. Mr. J’s gesture definitely wasn’t a sign of him taking her words seriously but she knew that would be hard for him to give up on his obsession.

“I get that you don’t agree?”

Joker whistled: well, Harlequin might have some professional titles but much like Crane her brain was losing some spins. He giggled: she really believed that Bruce made him what he was? But he was his charming self even before that groundbreaking night he met him at Stark’s party.

His doctor cleared her throat.

“I know you were killing people years before you met Bruce Wayne and I don’t claim that he was the trigger for that behavior. Yet in this phase, he hinders your liberation.”

The last word made an impact on Joker who jolted from his bed and stood, walking towards the inner barrier before the blue neon energy bars. He supported his elbows on the railing and stooped his head towards Harleen who was watching eagerly.

“That’s…that’s” he shook his index finger “Dr. Harlequin is the gist. Freedom!”

Harleen stood up and walked to the energy bars.

“Exactly! You deserve a second chance: you deserve to be free…”

Joker gave a full Cheshire smile and nodded.

“I’ll agreeeee with that, doll face.”

Dr. Quinzel met his eyes.

“Free from yours demons – free from Bruce Wayne.”

“Hehehehehe!” he jerked his head backwards. “Naaaaaah! Deeeeemons are niice, sugar: I’m oone…and I can show you how exciting demons are.”

Harleen shook her head in denial: her patient after everything that was said from the press might have formed the idea of being a demon or saying that he is a demon was a figure of speech for the crimes he committed. At first, he didn’t manifest any sign of remorse but during their sessions he showed that things began changing. And that was hopeful.

“You’re not a demon, Mr. J. And you just agreed that you deserve to be free.”

Joker huffed exasperated.

“Free from that fucking Asylum, you dummy. At first, it was fun but now it’s getting booooring. And Joker wants to playyyyyyy!”

Harleen felt cold sweat: no, he just couldn’t drawback; he couldn’t just deny their work till now, his improvement. She managed to hold her calm.

“You’re a convict, Mr. J: you can’t get out of this institution without being healed, reformed.”

Joker licked his lips and cocked his eyebrows looking mockingly at her: she really believed that a stupid asylum could keep him jailed?

She read his thought and met his stare unfazed.

“You just experienced what happens when you misbehave…”

Joker kept her gaze but he was absorbed in his thoughts: mmmm…right, that mumbo-jumbo thing courtesy of Stark was entertaining and he didn’t regret his outburst yet it’d be even more fun if he had ripped the throat of that stupid goon. Stark’s nonsense wasn’t capable to hold him from maiming and killing buuuummmm upon seeing Bruce disabled made his vitals work differently than every other time he killed: his vitals rose just a tiny bit and that was enough to trigger the ‘knock out’ effect.

“Youuuu, Harlequin, have the same need to be freeeee…” he whispered in a hushed, too solemn tone.
“I’m free, Mr. J.”

Joker’s cackle was dry, humorless and he shook his torso as if he could get closer to her to share a secret.

“Naaaah, my dear… You may staaaate that, youuuuu may believe it at times buuuuut deep inside you feel imprisoned” the young psychiatrist was staring at him seemingly cool but Joker knew that she was interested – he nodded. “This well defined world you live in, your sup--posed success, your biiiig position in this fine establishment, your car--eer, your white criminal record – everything seems perfect, huh? Yet youuu feel empty, right, pumpkin?” Harleen shook her head in negation yet Joker smiled, a normal man’s smile. “You know that your self demands something else without which you’ll remain unfulfilled. Buuunt you don’t know what this is…oooooor” he stabbed her eyes with hers “you suuuuspect what it is – you’re fascinated by that buuuuuut you’re afraid to get iiinto it with everything you’ve got…” he licked his lips and nodded reading her inner numbness. “That’s why you’re en--grossed in scum like me, darling; and youuur profession gives you the best excuse to suck what you love…buuuut being in the perimeter of that isn’t enough, right? You want to dive into it…you neeeeed to follow what you really are to be complete, to be happy, to be free, Harleen… I can give you all that, Harlequin; I can freeeeee your true self because you know that I succeeded where you failed: I’m completely free.”

The young psychiatrist felt numb during his speech: it was true that she never felt OK with herself. It was like always pretending to the o0thers and her own self. And she wasn’t satisfied from her life: her isolation from her family, her nice apartment, her job and career; something was missing and she was getting something when talking with her patients with a criminal record… But it wasn’t what Joker hinted…Oh, no: she wouldn’t play his game. Her work was to make him follow her in the road to normalcy not vice versa. And in the end it was clear what he wanted.

“If you believe that I’m gonna help you escape, you’re wrong” she jerked her eyebrows decisively. “The only way you’re coming out of here is when you’re reformed. We were in a nice track and we’re going to return there… But you need to stop imagining that you can escape and that you’ll manipulate me to do what you want. Believe it or not I have much experience to be handled by you or anyone else in that way. So I’m leaving now, letting you think about it and get over the possible side effects of the knock out.”

Joker grinned to her and tilted his head on the side.

“I’m soooorry you took it thaaaat way, Dr. Harlequin. Buuut you can still come with me…to free--dom.”

Harleen just turned her back and walked away under Joker’s amused stare. His doctor was fun – he was sooooo lucky! And her reactions! She could be Rachel no. 2: he’ll definitely need a second expert apart from Crane for doing his things to Brucey…

Brucey… He recollected the image from the TV screen. Bruce was paraplegic. He scratched his head: well, Crane had told him that Morticia had shot him twice rendering him completely immobile below the neck. One point. The night Super-Goofy brought him back he was already disabled. Second point. Batman came to the factory and was fighting as always – definitely not a cripple. Third point. The Batman in the factory wasn’t an impostor. Fourth point. The factory collapsed that night but Batman was reported stalking Gotham afterwards… And we know that Bruce was already disabled.

Maybe Batman wasn’t Brucey and Brucey wasn’t Batman… How could someone with two bullets in his spine, crippling him, come and fist fight with him? Maybe he was wrong in his suspicions?
He yanked his head backwards and laughed amused. Or maybe the boy was toooooo clever and was trying to play with him like he did with Falcone and the others. Or Joker was wrong: it wasn’t easy to stand up and run to save a bunch of brats even if you want to… But also it wasn’t easy for Joker to let go of his suspicions…after all, he was interested about Brucey even before noticing the similarities oooooor coincidences…

Joker giggled: oh! That game was getting more exciting with time: Bruce or Batman gave a new meaning to the word fun. Now he only had to get out of here aaaaand play along putting his own chaotic rules.
Chapter 17

It was the tenth time Alfred came to the master bedroom which was in subtle darkness since the thick drapes were closed hours before to ensure a restful sleep for his young master. The exterior lighting of the grounds that automatically turned on with the evening’s twilight cast a dim light into the room permitting Alfred to navigate easily – after all, the loyal butler knew the space even with closed eyes.

He placed softly his palm over Bruce’s forehead and was relieved to sense normal temperature; however he gingerly brought the thermometer in the sleeping man’s ear to be sure. Alfred was worried from his young master request to sleep since he usually had to be persuaded to do that which meant that he was exhausted or worse… He dreaded the idea of the long trip causing some drop in Bruce’s recovery – because even though almost four months had passed and he seemed healthy, apart from the paralysis, the fact was that he was still sensitive.

Alfred didn’t like the idea of their return and the long hours of flight was only one of the reasons. Yet he knew that Bruce was entitled to decide for himself and Alfred understood his need to get back. Even if the loyal butler would prefer it otherwise this city was part of the youth and there was his house which after eighteen years of suffering he managed to regain only to enjoy it for seven months before new Hell found him. And… his parents’ graves were in these grounds, their remains rest here and Bruce was bound to them…

He pressed his lips and sat carefully on the mattress: he wasn’t afraid of waking his master because although in normal days Bruce woke up with the tiniest sound of a breath now with all these heavy medicine and the fatigue of a challenging – demanding recovery his sleep was too deep. His young master had expressed many times to Leslie his worries about getting addicted to all these drugs but there was no other way and Leslie reassured him that addiction wasn’t a risk.

He touched two fingers to Bruce’s jugular vein and counted his heartbeat that was perfectly normal as his breaths, light and soft in an untroubled sleep. Alfred’s eyes lost their cool butler-ish hue and filled with affection as caressed the youth’s peaceful face; he even smiled taking in once again his rosy cheeks beaming with healthiness.

Alfred fought for a bit the urge but in the end allowed his hand to caress his young master’s locks that weren’t messy at all, another token of how exhausted he was to fall asleep as soon as he lay down. And bodily fatigue wasn’t the only reason: poor master Bruce had experienced so much emotional hurt that even the slightest suspicion of his beloved’s disgruntlement could be a blow for his battered soul.

The elder man took some stray locks that fell on Bruce’s eyelids and pushed them back. He was afraid of what a major disappointment could do to Bruce so early after his liberation. Fine, the boy was strong and probably would hide every trace of suffering but Alfred was dreading the possibility of that splendid relationship between Bruce and Master Kent gone wrong and the consequences… Of course, he trusted Master Kent but as they say: shit happens sometimes…

He caught with the corner of his eyes the tablet-like gadget on the nightstand: it was still open and Alfred closed his eyes. Bruce left it there waiting Master Kent’s call which didn’t come. The loyal butler really felt for his young master… He had witnessed many times the youth’s horrible suffering in the hands of Falcone and Chill and knew that the instances he witnessed was only the peak of the iceberg – so he didn’t want any more of that for the young man: physical and emotionally. Bruce had enough hurt for several lifetimes.

He took the blanket and muffled carefully his young master: how could he protect him from potential pain? He was more afraid of Bruce suffering than Bruce himself: his young master was brave: dared to let Superman touch him – both in body and heart. And if things ended up badly, Bruce would face it with the same bravery but Alfred knew that it would hurt him too much like a bleeding wound and could probably lead to a closed forever heart.

He rose slowly. Hero at the corridor was screeching the bedroom’s door: Alfred had kept the kitten out of the room so that Bruce would doze off undisturbed. But the animal missed already his young master and followed Alfred; he pressed his lips: you didn’t miss him, Master Kent?

He walked soundlessly to the door still casting fleeting glances to the sleeping form. He opened the door and managed to grab the kitten as he was ready to rush to Bruce. Alfred brought his finger to his mouth hushing Hero who meowed calling Bruce – thankfully, not waking him.

He closed the door hastily.

“Now, master Hero, you must be patient: Bruce needs his good rest” he raised his eyebrows for emphasis. “He’s been through a lot…But you’ll see him as soon as he wakes. Now, come for some milk!” he smiled.

As he descended the grand staircase to the ground floor holding the kitten, he shook himself. Probably all this fuss between Master Bruce and Superman was nothing, just a misunderstanding so usual to young couples deep in love that just came out of a traumatic experience. His young master’s suffering soon would be over with Master Kent coming to him because Alfred was sure that Superman was truly in love with his boy.

But even with that new reassuring lightness a burden lurked somewhere underneath.

The tablet-like gadget glowed on the nightstand before beginning emanating the tone for the incoming calls.

Bruce although fast asleep jerked and he would have jumped on the mattress if his legs were a little more alive. His heart was beating fast because even in his sleep waited for Clark’s call and the jeering female snigger that haunted his dreamless sleep had kept him in some odd vigilance.

His heart sank as soon as he remembered that this tone wasn’t Clark’s; of course he regretted immediately his momentarily disappointment because it was Tony and he had missed him.

“Aloha, little guy!” he greeted him in his cheerful way.

“I’m in Gotham, Tony, not Hawaii.”

“A man can only hope…” he sighed. “And I have so many memories of Hawaiian dancers around me…”

Bruce chuckled.

“Of course you would, veteran…”

“One of these days I’ll take you there, kid, to introduce you to some of world’s divine pleasures…Oh! Hula!”

“Tony, are you drooling?” he laughed frowning. “You left Peps in Malibu and you’re doing nasty business in New York, huh?” on his screen the special locating system showed the caller’s location in map in detail.

Tony frowned.

“I’m calling from the Avengers’ Tower and our communications SUPPOSEDLY have the safest, anti-detection software…”

Bruce cocked his eyebrows and snorted.

“Then Wayne Tech beat you to that, big guy! Mmm… I’m thinking of giving my gadget to Peps so to track you everywhere, naughty boy.”

He heard a sound that was definitely Tony slapping his eye.

“You won’t do that, you backstabbing, traitorous brat! Bros before hoes, remember?”

“It’d depend on your behavior” Tony groaned.

“You know I’m like a virgin to Peps – don’t roll your eyes! It’s true…”

“Okay, I believe you. Lucius would be glad to give you his intelligence about our call locating system so to enhance your security.”

“Ouch! That hurts my arrogance, little guy!” he protested.

“Calling me little guy is hurting you more because people think that you’re pretty older than me” a thud was heard and a new ‘ouch!’ which was Tony falling from his chair – Bruce could picture his friend rubbing his rear.

“That damn new chair! Ergonomic bullshit… I wonder what idiot created it” a stop “it’s a genius chair made by a genius” it was his creation after all. “And nope! I won’t drop the little guy thing” he said dead serious. “Chicks are suckers for daddies!”

Bruce couldn’t hold up a yawn and of course Tony cleared his throat.

“Either my extremely charm worn out or I just woke you up.”

He pinched the bridge of his nose.

“The latter, Tony.”

“I’m sorry, little guy” his voice was fool of regret. “Are you alright? When you called me right on landing you sounded fine.”

“But I’m fine just a bit tired – and actually I’m glad you called because it’s been” he looked at the bottom of the screen “three hours I’m sleeping. And I have an endless night of sleep waiting me.”

Tony’s delight on hearing that Bruce was going to spend the night sleeping was almost audible and the younger man raised an eyebrow: did his friend really fear that he was going to roam the rooftops on his wheelchair?

The billionaire from Malibu cleared his throat.

“You know, Bruce, Fury relayed some info from our division in South Europe” Bruce frowned “and they seem to have traced some odd activity – I’m sure you’ll be shocked” he said sarcastic “the day you were attacked.”
“Odd activity?” probably they were near the same findings as he and Lucius.

“Yeah. Like transmissions with technology that has nothing to do with anything we know. Like extraterrestrial involvement in your assault or some product of illegal experimentation – S.H.I.E.L.D. is conducting research.”

As much as he knew that the organization had been cleaned and reformed Bruce felt a rush of disdain.

“Well, Tony…” he had to share his knowledge with his best friend though he expected to be scolded.

Tony’s huff was dramatic.

“You. Investigated. Al-ready!” he said defeated. “Under our nose...Damn! That ninja training!”

“You were too occupied reprimanding me and I couldn’t let the evidence be lost: Wonder Woman took extra care to eliminate most of them.”

Tony looked at the transparent ceiling giving a spectacular view of New York’s sky and whistled.

“She has nice boobs, little guy – I mean, as a long time expert I give her 8.5 out of 10. Of course if Iron Man meets her I’ll have a more accurate impression” he licked his lips “I told you about the ultra-scanning vision?”

“Lucius analyzed soil and wood samples from the area where the pieces of the attackers fell and he says that there are substances and matters that aren’t from our planet.”

“Mmmm…Superman’s enemies?”

“This remains to be seen… We can exchange notes.”

“If course; I’ll be there soon. For dinner.”

“Tony, I know you must be tired so there’s no need to make the trip.”

“Believe me, kid: nothing is more tiring than being tied in a bed with four horny girls having you at their mercy...and even that didn’t bend me... Besides the food is awesome! Oh! Nick, m’ boy, com’ in! I have to hang up, little guy: do you want me to give your kisses to big bad Fury? I...don’t think so, huh?”

“Bye, Tony…”

He called Clark. Again the same artificial voice informed him that his phone was deactivated. Bruce pressed his lips.

“C’mere, Clark…” it wasn’t like they had a major quarrel the last time they met...Yet Bruce was reading and more important sensing the signs of change from that day he was attacked...and the Amazon Princess got in their life.

The bell of the front entrance rang as Alfred had just ended filling Hero’s bowl with milk. This must be Leslie, he thought, since the gates opened automatically only for few, selected people.

“Where’s our troublemaker?” the doctor asked as soon as Alfred greeted her.
“He is sleeping. Please, do have a seat; would you like some tea?”

But she frowned throwing her coat clumsily on an armchair to Alfred’s dismay.

“How on Hell you persuaded him?”

He took her coat and put it meticulously to the built-in closet that emerged after he pressed a spot on the wall.

“I didn’t: he asked it.”

Leslie lolled her head on the side and clenched her waist.

“I must examine him” she said determined not liking what she heard. “Bruce asking to sleep?” she shook her head “very unusual…Were he experiencing any pain or dizziness or any discomfort whatsoever? The trip was way too difficult: the last time I made that trip I needed a day to fully find my normal rhythms – for someone recovering from many, critical injuries it must be awful…”

Alfred gestured calmly to the sofa for her to sit down.

“Calm down, dear. I’ve been watching his temperature, heart rate and breath regularly and everything is normal: Master Anthony’s jet has a brilliant system of eliminating the effects of abrupt pressure changes due to extreme heights so Bruce’s lungs didn’t suffer at all. He was fine just exhausted from the long flight” Leslie twisted her lips in disapproval. “And…” he sighed “he was a bit downhearted.”

She cocked her eyebrows curious.

“Downhearted?”

Alfred raised his eyes and shrugged.

“Young love…” he said nonchalant wanting to entertain his own worry. “And it’s Master Bruce’s first time dealing with these things” and taking in Leslie’s questioning look “it seems that they had a misunderstanding with Master Kent and he wasn’t among the reporters in the airport as Master Bruce had expected neither he came to visit the night before our departure.”

Leslie nodded.

“Poor boy… All these are complicate for someone ‘experienced’ and without his traumatic past, imagine what impact have on him… Is it my impression, even bias or Superman has become a bit short tempered towards Bruce? I didn’t like his outburst after Bruce was attacked.”

Alfred pressed his lips.

“Master Kent is tired as all of us from the last months – he actually more than everyone: he was with Bruce all this time, he was watching him day and night struggling between life and death. I think he is admirable and his super powers are the least reason. I believe that it is his love and concern added to his emotional fatigue that leads to those tantrums.”

Leslie rubbed her forehead.

“I know, Alfred, and I didn’t mean to accuse him… but Bruce really doesn’t need that at this stage and… he is Superman…” she stilled her eyes on Alfred “I mean, remember what happened in the examination room? How Superman almost forgot his strength and Bruce’s vulnerability? Before the injury Bruce could handle Superman but now in this state…”

Alfred shook his head.

“I don’t think that we have to fear this, Leslie: I’m more afraid of the consequences of a failed relationship…I know it’s only a petty disagreement but what if there is indeed something going on and leads to a breakup?”

Leslie let her eyes wander in the room in thought.

“Bruce is strong” she huffed “he was willing to take the risk when embraced Superman’s love and to tell you the truth, Alfred: I’m glad he did because he let his heart love and experience the love of someone else.”

Alfred nodded.

“I know…” he pressed his lips “but if things go awry I’m afraid that it will have a great toll to his emotional world. It took much courage and energy for Master Bruce to make that huge leap of faith and if his faith is crashed…”

Leslie stood up and patted her friend’s back.

“We’ll be here, Alfred… Bruce isn’t alone anymore.”

He looked at her and she could discern under his cool expression the doubt and insecurity.

“I don’t want Master Bruce hurt again…” Leslie could feel the burden that her old friend carried from the countless times he saw Bruce in pain and suffering – she was blessed to be spared from this though even listening about Falcone’s tortures it was enough for her heart to bleed. “I’m in a complete loss, Leslie, on how to protect him; of how to spare him from a potential new trauma: if his parents were alive…”

She gave him a pressed lips smile.

“Their trust though an honor makes the responsibility greater… But I’m sure that they are more than satisfied by you – you’ve been proved worthy of their trust, my old friend.”

Alfred shook his head.

“Thank you, Leslie, but I haven’t done anything other than watching unable to help him; like I am now…”

“You’re too harsh on yourself, Alfred!”

“I agree with that…” a voice lively but a bit raspy from sleep startled them.

They both turned towards the entrance from the kitchen’s direction to see Bruce coming with Hero on his lap. Alfred took his scornful expression.

“Master Bruce, I thought that you were taught that is impolite to eavesdrop!”

The young man grinned: he preferred Alfred scolding him than being sad and self-doubting. He led his chair to them and Leslie perused him for any sign of discomfort.

“I’m fine, Leslie” he said though he felt some stiffness and mild pain in his shoulders and back but he knew that it was due to fatigue. “And I didn’t eavesdrop, Alfred: I took the lift to the kitchen to drink some water and then as I was coming I overheard the last part of your dialogue” he pouted mischievous “it’s not my fault you were too engrossed in your discussion that didn’t hear us coming…”

Alfred smirked as his young master came in front of him.

“You’re perfect, Alfred: don’t you ever forget that!” his eyes locked with his butler’s baby blues. “I’m so lucky to have you” he smiled to Leslie “all of you. I know that sometimes I’m a pain in the ass…and I’m not showing how much I appreciate all of you…but I do” he nodded.

Alfred was numb unable to articulate a reply and Leslie rose from the sofa and squatted in front of Bruce holding his upper arms.

“You’re not a pain in the ass” she said briskly but then frowned thoughtful “well, at least not all the times…”

“We never had any doubt of your feelings, Master Bruce…” the young man smiled and Leslie stood. “I was going to wake you up when the dinner was ready.”

“I already slept too much and given that I won’t go anywhere during the night” his expression was indifferent but the other two could sense a hidden regret “it’s better to keep some sleep for then.”

His eyes wandered to the spacious salon and he led the chair towards the small, round marble table on which lay an impressive bouquet of white roses. Hero sniffed.

“They brought them while you were sleeping” Alfred commented and Bruce nodded and took them.

“Hero, you’ll stay with Alfred and Leslie.”

Leslie cocked her eyebrows.

“And where you’re going, young man?”

Alfred knew already: Bruce wanted to lay the flowers to his parents’ graves. He made a step forward.

“It’s dusk, sir…”

“I’m not afraid of dark” he replied nonchalant. “Besides, the grounds are well lighted.”

Yet his butler wasn’t persuaded and exchanged glances with Leslie.

“May I escort you, sir? That hill might be a bit challenging…”

“Or I could, Bruce…”

He smiled.

“Clark’s chair can easily adjust to every possible terrain – thank you both. After all, Alfred has the dinner and you, Leslie, will make me a great favor if keep Hero entertained” Leslie rolled her eyes and Bruce chuckled “I thought that rolling the eyes was forbidden!” he handed her the kitten “you’re staying for dinner, right?”

She shook her head mock disapproving.

“Do I have a chance?” she sighed caressing Hero who purred.
“Great!” Bruce’s eyes sparkled happily reflecting his smile yet both Leslie and Alfred knew that he was doing it mostly to reassure them that everything was fine.

He moved towards the main door and Alfred hurried to take from the hidden closet a coat which held for his young master to wear.

“It’s cold outside, Master Bruce” he lifted an eyebrow “Gotham, real cold; we are not still in Greece.”

Bruce winked.

“You’re right – I guess I’m a bit jetlagged, huh?”

Alfred opened the heavy, oak door for his master and Bruce moved towards the brand new titanium ramp that Lucius had taken care to be built right beside the stone stairs.

“Sir, please do not stay too much outside…” the chair stopped with Bruce’s mental order and the young man looked at his loyal butler who blushed because he sounded like a mother hen – he cleared his throat and re-established his cool demeanor. “The dinner will be ready soon and it’s not very polite to let our guest waiting.”

Bruce grinned on the change of tone and nodded.

“I won’t, Alfred, thank you!”

“If you excuse me asking, do you have any news from Master Kent?”

He shook his head in denial and pressed his lips in a tight line.

“Tony called to see if I survived the flight – he woke me up, actually” he answered indifferent wanting to evade answering because it was a prickle in his guts – but in the end he realized that not answering only increased Alfred’s certainty that he was sad. “No, Clark didn’t call me back and…” he said before Alfred asked “I tried again to reach him but his phone was still deactivated” he blinked and lolled his head on the side. “It’s okay: the reporter’s job is really demanding – I have my tablet with me in case he calls…”

He turned towards the ramp and began descending slowly.

Clark Kent sat in a corner table at a bar in Metropolis. He had left Smallville with the intention of heading to the Wayne Manor because after his discussion with his mother he longed to see Bruce and make up for his absence. He could listen to his soft breaths and steady heartbeat which made the profile of his sleep: Superman huffed. Of course, he was exhausted after so many hours of flight – Bruce wasn’t a superhuman like himself to withstand such a trip.

He shook his head and felt ashamed: once again he thought scornfully about Bruce as if his human nature made him inferior… And the more he listened to the man’s heartbeat the more Clark was realizing that exhaustion wasn’t the main reason that pushed Bruce to sleep: although the heartbeat was characteristic of sleep there was a different quality in it, a thud that Clark knew too well: it was hurt maybe unconscious but Bruce was suffering, emotionally. And Clark knew that it was his fault.

He had meant to change that rushing to the master bedroom and cuddling his mate but his hearing that was perfectly able to watch different locations at the same time, caught voices from Metropolis’ warehouses. Voices of scum he was looking for days: they must have gone underground getting suspicious of been watched or in a mission.

Clark had intelligence that these men might be members of the Intergang and hoped that they could lead him to the organization’s core or leader or more modestly give him a hint on what they were up to. He sighed, listening Bruce’s soft breath and picturing him on the bed yet he had to get to Metropolis. He clenched his jaw: after all, he was fast asleep; better not to wake him up…

The Daily Planet’s reporter didn’t need a disguise because he wasn’t famous so he just settled on a corner away from most of the clients watching and overhearing his targets’ chat. Contrary to Gotham’s underworld, in Metropolis thugs used to mingle with citizens in bars and cafes since there were no areas strictly for outlaws, which served them perfectly because they didn’t raise suspicions: normality offered a great camouflage.

Alistair Bendel – White and Johnny Stitches sat on a table on the far end of the hall. They were busted a year ago by Metropolis’ Police for being involved in a wide range of illegal activity but strangely the charges were dropped and they return to the field; Clark suspected that they were recruited by the new player and this was the reason that both acted cleverer this time. Emerging and disappearing before being connected with anything.

Clark’s sources though very scared to say much hinted that those thugs’ job was mainly to recruit small time hoodlums from other gangs and lead them to attacks or other jobs. Obviously, their boss was saving those two for bigger things or he managed to cover perfectly their traces.

Unfortunately, their mindless chat didn’t contain anything remotely interesting and Clark sipped his bourbon replaying scenes from last night’s reception with Diana.

As if someone had read his thoughts the big TV screen on the wall above the bar played footage from the same event: it was first page news after all… His eyes focused on Diana’s hot body and her dazzling smile as she shook hands with the General Secretary and then with Superman. It was a good thing his huge glasses covered his orbs. Damn! She was fucking hot!

He was startled hearing exactly what he was thinking by Alistair’s whispery voice and his attention turned to them.

“I won’t mind being choked by her thighs around my neck…” the man sniggered. “I might suck her a bit…”

The guy opposite him sniggered stressing the faint stitches all over his face.

“Nah…She fancies Supes: you can see it in the way she holds her posture that she is horny…”

Clark felt his face hot and focused on Diana over the screen searching for clues of what the thug said.

“I bet she’s after his super dick following him around like a bitch in heat” Stitches cackled. “She doesn’t give a shit about humans or justice” he spat on the word “you see it in her eyes…”

Alistair drew a large quantity of his vodka.

“The fact is she is Supes’ ally and that will complicate things.”

“I don’t think that boss really worries about her or even the S guy.”

“If those two become a couple then they’ll be a force to be reckoned…” Alistair insisted.
Stitches nodded towards the screen where footage from Bruce’s arrival in Gotham was shown and Clark felt a knot in his throat. Especially, since the one who made the reportage had the stupid idea to include the infamous video of Superman carrying Bruce. Cold sweat poured in Clark’s body.

“Supes prefers ass over pussy…” Johnny sniggered and Clark gritted his teeth for this vulgarity.

“And sluts…” Alistair commented amused. “That brat was Falcone’s whore for years and” he winked to his partner “I heard of many others… I’d expected from the big guy to feel appalled by such filth.”

Clark banged his knee on the table in his rush to stand up and shut that man’s mouth. But thankfully he stopped himself before his strength broke the table or anyone noticed. He clenched his jaw and fists.

Johnny smirked.

“I wouldn’t have a problem making Superman’s bitch squeal and beg as I rip his asshole…”

The other cackled.

“He is a cripple – won’t feel anything below the waist!”

“But he’ll feel everything above the neck!” Stitches winked wickedly and laughed which his friend mimicked. “Maybe the boss plans to do that in the end, after he…”

“Ssssss!” Alistair hushed him hastily.

“It’d be the perfect punishment for Supes… watching his slut gangbanged to the death by his partying enemies” his sly eyes found again Bruce on the screen and Clark’s heartbeat became so strong that he thought that everyone in the room heard.

Alistair was thoughtful.

“It’s not so easy: that whelp has more protection than S guy himself. Iron man is his best buddy and he drags along the entire Avengers’ circus. And Gotham has Batman guarding her property.”

The news changed in something uninteresting and Johnny turned fully to Alistair.

“The boss seems confident enough” he shook his head “I bet he doesn’t chicken to attack that bitch and after his scheme unfolds nothing would save this bitch…”

Clark erased everything else to focus on their discussion but Alistair stood up and clutched Johnny’s upper arm.

“Enough! You downed a lot and your tongue got loose not that you know anything about his scheme but we’re not supposed to babble about the boss – we’re off!”

They threw some bills on the table and walked casually out of the bar. Clark pretended to be absorbed in his drink and followed them after some minutes from a safe distance to not raise any suspicions.

He hoped that they’d lead him to one of Intergang’s ‘invisible’ hideouts but at some point they parted to embark their cars and head to their apartments leaving Clark frustrated because he didn’t learn anything important other than reaffirming his suspicions that those two were working for the new powerful crime lord for whom Clark knew nothing.
Damn! He hated the fact that he couldn’t go forward with this shadow-organization; with every step he was met with a wall – a dead end and its members were secretive and unbreakable even after they were busted: it reminded him of the League of Shadows. Which association brought back those vulgar comments the thugs made. About Bruce…

He felt nauseated and leaned on the wall of the pavement; he sighed and looked up at the starry sky of Metropolis. So much filth connected with the being he chose to tie his life with – his guts clenched in…shame? He frowned: it was really shame? That was preposterous, unfair…utterly wrong to be ashamed of Bruce…because he had been doomed to be a slave to Falcone and suffer his and the other scums’ tortures…

“I dread seeing you wasted with someone like him and eventually destroyed by deceit…” Diana told him again.

Wasted…Many people had the same opinion with her. And many people thought her a perfect match for him. Many people or just him?

“Nah…She fancies Supes: you can see it in the way she holds her posture that she is horny…”

It was pointless to deny that he had sensed it too. He knew that Diana desired him. Well, she wasn’t the only one and that wasn’t him bragging but a fact. Which brings us to the big question: was he interested in Diana’s interest?

He sighed and his mind brought the image of Bruce in front of his parents’ graves, three days after his testimony against Falcone.

“You’ll find someone worthy, someone who won’t cringe whenever you motion to touch her or him, someone who won’t panic whenever you look at him with lust, someone who won’t feel disgusted even with the thought of you craving his or her body, someone who whenever you believe that you give him your love and happiness won’t feel Falcone’s cruel hands instead of your gentle ones, Chill’s sneering eyes instead of your kind ones, Al Ghul’s punishing thrusts instead of your pleasant ones, Bane’s teeth instead of your velvety lips…”

And then his absolute reply echoed.

“You deserve happiness too, Bruce, and I’d give everything to…”

He made a spin and hit his forehead to the cool wall that cracked. How could he think like this about Bruce? Could he be so frivolous to change his emotions so fast and so irresponsibly? Because Bruce opened his heart to him and offered him his body risking his shattered heart being rendered to shreds. And now he was behaving like a creep.

“Bruce…” he whispered.

“It’d be the perfect punishment for Supes… watching his slut gangbanged to the death by his partying enemies.”

Chill’s horrible voice taunting Batman returned from that night:

“Wha’? Ya thought I didn’t recognize ya? C’m’ on, littl’ slut! I’d recognize yar body anywhere; ya see I forged that body, every day for eighteen years! I recognized ya sinc’ the first time ya laid yar fists on me... The poor traumatized kid created a strong persona to find haven when pain an’ humiliation were too hard to stand an’ slowly the lie became a man; a man who was avenging the beatings he had by beating bad guys! An’ I was fucking both the Prince an’ the Batman!” he had laughed haughtily. “Oh! Ya can’t imagine how satisfying was that, littl’ slut, like our first time, do ya
He didn’t manage to catch his mind from recreating the giant thug thrusting in the poor boy that trembled and begged to be spared… His enemies wanted to do the same and though Bruce was a great warrior willing now to defend himself… he was disabled and… a human. And Clark realized that the same dread he was feeling now would bind him for the rest of their life together… It wasn’t like being Diana’s lover…

“Shut up, you idiot!” he gritted his teeth and thankfully there was no pedestrian around.

He pulled out his smartphone that had stayed closed all these hours; he eyed it indecisive: he won’t go to Gotham, probably Bruce didn’t care much about his absence anyways – probably, after his nap the disabled Dark Knight was too absorb in designing a new suit for his comeback. He would just make him a call to remind him of his presence and then head to his apartment.

But upon opening the gadget, a window popped up informing about unanswered calls. He grinned: Lois must have had a fit. But after his friend’s calls, his eyes bulged seeing another number: his breath stopped and his heart flew above the stratosphere. Bruce had called him several times – the last only a few minutes ago! His Star missed him and searched for him! Ugh! He felt so stupid for all these horrible thoughts: how could he?!

His feet were already floating and he barely managed to scan the area for witnesses before taking off for Gotham: Bruce deserved more than a simple, cold phone call!

Bruce had laid carefully the white roses on his parents’ graves: it was dark already and he secretly wished that their spirits took form and appeared to him, like the ghosts in the legends. But unfortunately, ghosts don’t exist or fortunately because Bruce wanted his parents to be peaceful in their eternal sleep…

It was much uncomfortable with the wheelchair but he stretched his arm enough to touch his fingertips to their tombstones. His eyelids fell heavy over his orbs and images of them flashed in his mind: it was incredible, unbelievable but even after all these years he could still hear their voices, their laughter; see their eyes glimmering with love when they were talking to him bent over his cradle; he could smell them, their pleasant perfumes of warmth and safety.

And then the horrific bangs and the acid smell of guns and bullets and blood. His mom already dead on the dirty cement and his father rasping with his last breaths for him to flee…

His head had lowered to his chest and his breath mimicked the agony in Thomas’ last moments. Bruce stared at the remains of the rock pile beside their graves: some letters were still discernible – B W U E… The others were washed away by the elements.

He inhaled deeply: he would have never demolished his grave… But Clark did it to free him… He remembered the anger, the hatred, the despair of those moments as he had watched trapped in Clark’s arms the stone exploding: he felt as if it was Clark not Falcone that separated him from his parents. And then when his mind cleared he was able to see Clark’s love and his own feelings for the Man of Steel. He had let the man love him.

His stare returned to the tombstones: he was sure that it was their wish… He pressed his lips and caressed the stones one after the other.
Someone was here…His smile became broader: he could recognize that presence everywhere.

“How long are you standing there?”

The steps got closer.

“Not much, handsome: actually, I thought to leave because…you know…I don’t like to intrude but then you sensed me. And it’s cold out here so I owe to Alfred getting you inside.”

Bruce stretched his hand and took hers. Selina walked closer to the graves getting solemn as her eyes fell on the names.

“I knew you’d be here…” she whispered. “It was long since you’ve last been here – you missed them…”

He lifted his eyes to her.

“I always feel the need to offer them beautiful, bright white roses” Selina nodded remembering the battered white rose of that night, seventeen years ago that Bruce lay on the filthy cement where his parents died. “Not that they would have complained with less…” he rubbed his nose.

Selina felt her eyes watering and was glad that the lights from the grounds were far enough to not be illuminate her face much.

“Well, they wouldn’t want you to catch a cold by staying much here so we’re off!”

“You’ll stay for dinner?” he asked encouraged.

She shook her head slyly.

“I wasn’t in the mood for cooking and delivery food in Gotham is garbage so… I thought of the best restaurant in the city” she winked. “Which is also free of charge!”

Bruce laughed.

“I hoped that the company would be the major pro…”

Selina grasped his hand and walked beside him to the Manor.

“Always…but I like combining interest with pleasure!” she winked.

Her eyes fell on the torch-like glow that emanated from Bruce’s chest pocket where he’d stashed his tablet-like gadget after setting it to shrink in smartphone size – the gadget had the ability to scan its environment and when dark enough illuminate like a torch adjusting the lighting intensity to its owner’s wish. She whistled.

“Can I have one of these or I have to steal it?”

“I thought you didn’t fancy high tech thingies…”

She crooked her mouth wickedly.

“I think that this dingus will be very useful in my business…”

Bruce frowned; he didn’t like his friend continue her career as a thief now that Gotham wasn’t lawless.
“I thought you worked for me? And you liked your work?”

She shrugged.

“Old loves never die, sweetie…” she sighed but taking in her friend’s expression chuckled. “You know how many tycoons use their money to snatch jewels for their illegal collections? I gather that I could spoil their game by returning their loot where it belongs – that way I’ll get the chance to relive my youth!” she gave a dramatic sigh and Bruce laughed.

“Youth?” his mood was light approving of what Selina planned to do with her talents. “You’re still a baby, Sel!”

She made a deep squat and sucked her friend’s cheek wrapping her arms loosely around his neck.

“Did he call?” she asked because the reason Bruce took the gizmo with him was obvious.

Bruce cast a look at the gadget and then found again Selina’s eyes. He grinned.

“No” he answered quietly and Selina grunted.

“Did YOU call him again?” she was afraid that her friend’s dignity would have forced him in something stupid like not searching for his boyfriend.

“Several times…”

His voice was indifferent but for Selina wasn’t difficult to sense the disappointment and melancholy. She jerked her head and her eyes flashed.

“Well, let’s get you inside ‘cause I want you in good shape so you kick his ass when he rushes back like a beaten puppy begging for your forgiveness!”

Bruce chuckled.

“Sel, he didn’t do anything!”

“Exactly!” she stood. “And stop defending him!”

The Manor’s door was open and Alfred stood there waiting while Hero had slipped between his legs and was already at Selina’s feet meowing to get her attention. She grabbed him from the armpits and rubbed his cheek to hers.

“I missed you, baby!”

Jonathan as every night had waited patiently and eagerly for Ted, the orderly he hired while he was the head of this Asylum. Ted was loyal to him even now: Dr. Crane had given him money to buy a small apartment and allowed him to take drugs from the storage for his addict brother. Ted believed in him and that he would once again regain power in this shithole so when the defeated doctor promised him to have his share, Ted had no hesitation to serve him. Secretly.

So like every night after the medical staff was gone Ted escorted Scarecrow to the basement where he was left guarding while Jonathan slipped to his secret laboratory: the one he established during his reign there. Nobody was ever to discover that small, ancient hall – because it wasn’t in any blueprint of the Arkham Mansion. Jonathan had discovered the secret passage one day while admiring the rare volumes the Arkham family had in the ancient, dusty library. It was encrypted but he had no problem deciphering it.

Jonathan breathed content mixing his ingredients in a testing transparent tube; he had a medical mask covering his mouth and nose. He was at his home, his favorite place, much like Jeremiah Arkham who, as the legend had it, made his horrific experiments in this exact place.

Jonathan could feel the vibes: the cries of the bound patients suffering from Dr. Arkham’s juices and other experiments, the terror, the insanity of the doctor and his brilliance… There had remained some of his instruments rusty and hastily abandoned: rusty chains, ripped and mice-eaten torturous straightjackets, chairs with plugs, cases with dried, odd concoctions… Some of Jeremiah’s patients died terrible deaths but Jonathan was aware that groundbreaking science needs and deserves sacrifices – sacrifices of lesser people. Like that idiot Joker or his…wife.

The concoction for his fear toxin was ready to be added to his stock waiting for the right moment when he’d take his revenge on those inferior stupid people. Who intimidated poor Jonathan into submission without knowing that Scarecrow was there to support the genius but weak doctor and take revenge against those bullies…

Joker was sprawled on his mattress watching the ceiling and pondered through the tangled mess his thoughts were in his head. Sometimes a giggle escaped him recalling his discussion with Herlequin and her so hilarious ire – ire for sane people was the first step to the road for madness. Hihi! And it was a matter of days to get out of there now he knew how Stark’s intra-something bullshit worked. Also, he was sure that his goodhearted doctor wouldn’t keep him in that cell – she wouldn’t take his privileges away because lil’ Harleen wanted to lick her little bones. And only a happy Joker could feed her.

Suddenly, he sensed a presence and that was watched. He jerked his eyebrows: he knew when he was watched because he loved to be the center of attention…and hated it…well, his relationship with fame was complicated…

He turned his eyes where he felt the presence and frowned seeing a doctor sitting at a grandiose armchair with a golden pen in his hand and a notebook on his lap. He definitely hadn’t seen him again and he was…Joker laughed on the absurdity of him calling someone else, well, bizarre. Raven hair straight to his shoulders, a thin, pointy nose and sly, almost like his, eyes behind old-fashioned round glasses.

“A newwww kid on the block?” Joker snorted leaning slightly his head towards him. “Me liiiikes to plaaayy with other kids – are you a new doc? Isn’t a bit aaaaa late for sessions?”

The stranger’s eyes shone but he kept his head completely still studying Joker, a faint amused grin in his lean face.

“Me? Doc?” he chuckled though his voice had the thick accent of a German clearly imitating someone.

Joker rolled his eyes.

“It’d beeeeee myyyyy cr—azy idea then, Sigmund!... as in Sigmund Freud” he stressed more his nasal voice.

The stranger yanked his head and smirked.

“It must be the robe…” he said nonchalant and the white robe vanished along with the glasses, revealing his all leather attire: green leather leggings, green leather tunic reaching his thighs, and a golden short vest. “But I like dress up!”

Joker cocked his eyebrows.

“I seeee that, Hoody! UHU! Aaaaand they call my dressing Kiiitsch!” he erupted in a fit of giggles hugging his belly.

The man on the armchair licked his lips drumming his fingers on the armrests. He smirked and out of nowhere a large amount of cold water splashed on the giggling Joker who jerked from the mattress and sat on the edge of his bed studying narrow-eyed his visitor.

“I like laughing but not being laughed at…” the bizarre man said indifferent. “Imagine the giggles when the staff sees your bed all wet…” he leaned towards Joker.

Joker shook his head and gave a wide lick to his lips.

“Then try changing attire…” he retorted in a hissing unfazed and then cackled entertained “I’ve toooooo admit: your joke was gooood but not au--thentic. “Sooooooo you’re not some loony” he arched his eyebrows “at least, some oooyyorderly loony. What dooooy want?” he asked and his eyes went dead serious.

His visitor crooked his mouth and locked eyes with the inmate.

“You don’t want to know who am I?”

Joker shrugged.

“Toooookuh!”

His visitor chuckled.

“You’re good, Joker! I’m Loki…”

“Biiig deal! I knew already you’re a loca…”

Loki understood that he was referring to the Spanish word for crazy.

“I’m Loki, the god of mischief and deceit…”

Joker hiccupped and made a glorious roll of his eyes.

“Ooooohh, boy! HEHEHEHEHE! Your maaadness” he rolled his finger right beside his head “breaks a record, huh? Niice! ‘Cause this fine establishment needs some fresh jokes…”

Loki smiled confidently and snapped his fingers causing the bars to vanish: both the common bars and the energy ones Stark created. Joker smirked and his scars were stressed.

“It’s easy for me to just intervene and mess Stark’s creations – I get so much fun poking that arrogant man…” and with a second snap the bars were back.

Joker pouted.

“Paaaarty pooper!” he slapped his thighs. “Goooods are not fun!”

Loki arched his eyebrows and brought his leg upon the other.
“Tell me about it…that’s why I came here: fascinating! A loony bin inside a loony bin…”

Joker giggled.

“Yeaaaah! Yoohooooohoooo! I loooovee Gotham too! Buuuuut” he raised his index finger waringly “gods ooooor nooot I don’t like intruders in my playground…Legolas…Oooh, sorry! It’s the ears” he whispered as if sharing a secret “did uuuuu anyone tooooool you that are elf like?”

Loki rolled his eyes and stood pacing the room.

“Not even when the… intruder can make the game more interesting?” he craned his head on the side eyeing the jester; Loki smiled wickedly. “I met Bruce Wayne” his grin became wider seeing Joker’s frown “twice… one in his bed… HEHEHEHEHE!” he mimicked Joker’s giggle.

Joker knew better than letting his vitals get aggressive still he jerked upwards and rushed to the god grabbing his neck. Yet the raven haired man just smirked unfazed.

“He’s my wife…” Joker hissed and Loki shrugged.

“I didn’t see a wedding ring…” he loll’d his head on the side and pouted, his smugness stronger than ever. “Maybe if you’ve given him a decent diamond ring he wouldn’t sleep with Mr. Super-muscle…”

The jester had been almost certain of that but hearing it was a fuel to kill – his hand clenched more Loki’s neck but the god just scorned.

“Ow! You didn’t know…” he said pitying him but his jeer was evident. “Ugh! I hate being a marriage wrecker though…I’ve done it sometimes – some of them with unfortunate results…You know, husband killing wife or lover… It really wasn’t my fault” Joker regarded him through slit eyes “calling me a sly abettor to these misfortunes…” he shook his head disgusted “the injustice of people…” he huffed. “By the way, Bruce is hot stuff: I mean the hottest stuff. You’re a lucky man” he said solemnly but then erupted in a mad fit of giggles “well, not so lucky!”

Joker’s hands were left with thin air and the raven haired man reemerged outside the cell. The jester laughed on the absolute absurdity of the scene and put his elbows on the bars supporting his arms.

Loki did the same but with the energy bars that had no impact on him.

“I heard that you call yourself the Agent of Chaos…”

Joker shook his head and raised his eyebrows sarcastic.

“But Loki knitted his eyebrows.

“Don’t be! I’m making my school project on Bruce Wayne and that’s how I learnt about you. Of course academic research doesn’t give you juicier details like how statuesque the man is and you need your handiwork to find out how taut and smooth he is.”

Joker rolled his eyes and laughed before he tilted his head on the side and stabbed with his eyes the bizarre guy.

“I’ve chopped people for lesser…” he hissed, the dropping of his stuttering the only sign of his wrath.
Loki gave him a lighthearted smile.

“Ow! You’re threatening me: the best clown joke I ever heard! And I was considered a clown…” he supported his forearms between the nano-energy bars and leaned towards Joker locking eyes with him. “You brag that you bring chaos yet it’s Bruce Wayne that actually brings it…” he nodded. “I’m sure you’ve noticed how this cute, weak brat makes everyone around him twist and blow: mere humans, superheroes, supervillains” he gestured to him “demons, ugly gods – like Thor… which make a beautiful and genius god…like me…intrigued.”

Joker shook his shoulders and leaned more to his counterpart.

“I’ll give you a tip as a crazy to a loony: Bruce is mine!” he grinded his teeth. “You didn’t saw the… aaa…sign?”

Loki’s mouth twisted.

“Tell that to the superguy who fucks him and to Thor… My dear ol’ bro shows too much interest in the youth; I guess superdudes’ competition… – if you get what I mean: who is BIGGER… who makes Bruce convulse and moan more…” he twitched his eyebrows in suggestion.

Joker’s acid eyes were ablaze but expressionless.

“Chaos is nice” Loki said thoughtful. “Especially when you’re the agent of the proper agency…” suddenly his mouth was right next to Joker’s ear.

The jester cast him a sideways glance.

“If you loooooook for aaaagents, call Molder and Scully. I’m not a hired gun!”

Loki stretched his posture, his hands behind his back.

“Who said anything about hiring?” he answered and just disappeared leaving his cackle behind.

Superman was flying in high speed towards the elegantly illuminated Wayne Manor, at last seeing the majestic building: he would have arrived sooner but cries for help made him rush at Washington to save a homeless old man from the torments of stupid teens who decided to play tough with a weak man. Well, he lectured them a bit and they seemed regretful – no, they didn’t cheat him: Superman checked their brain waves.

He was thinking that Bruce would be fast asleep but his hearing told him that he was wake – probably, fiddling with his designs… But then in midair his phone rang and it was Bruce’s tone. His Star was trying to find and speak to him; his face beamed – he was about to make a big surprise to Bruce so he didn’t answer, much to the human’s dismay: Clark could hear the same sad thud coloring Bruce’s strong heartbeat. Hang on, babe, he smiled.

Suddenly, Superman remembered the reinforced window in Bruce’s bedroom and pressed his lips because he didn’t want to smash it to get in…Obviously. Maybe he serenaded Bruce to open…He chuckled.

But his problem was solved as his eyes focused on the master bedroom’s huge window… Bruce was there on his chair in front of the open window staring at his tablet that hadn’t managed to bring him close to Clark; Superman smiled not without self-satisfaction.
And then Bruce gazed at the clear sky and Clark saw the shine in his eyes and heard the increase in his heartbeat so he just couldn’t hold himself any longer!

He covered the distance in a couple of seconds and landed on his knees right next to Bruce, his arms already burying the younger man in his chest.

“You should be sleeping” he said softly. “And definitely not in front of an open window – it’s freezing!”

Bruce left the warm heaven of Clark’s chest and looked at him. His heart was beating normally now, a bit happy and still a bit apprehensive.

“I was waiting for you…Hero was making me company but he fall asleep and I put him in his basket. I knew you’d come…at some point…”

Clark filled with regret and self-loathing.

“And you were waiting for me last night too?” he asked hating himself more as he read the sleepless hours in Bruce’s body.

Bruce didn’t want to admit that but he couldn’t lie too so let his eyes answer to Clark who cupped his cheek which was cold but so deliciously soft that his lips glued to it almost on their own.

“I’m a bastard!” he growled feeling with his other hand how tired the muscles in Bruce’s back were – and that considering that he had slept a couple of hours before said a lot.

Bruce smiled.

“I don’t think that Ms. Kent would be happy hearing someone calling her son ‘bastard’…”

Clark chuckled and nuzzled Bruce’s neck.

“Mmmm… She surely won’t appreciate it…” he sucked the perfume that was more intense there “you should meet her – she is so fond of you!”

Bruce put his hands under Clark’s jaw and lifted his head to make him meet his eyes.

“She talked you into coming back?”

Clark closed his eyes and sighed.

“I…I acted like…” he bit his lower lip “I don’t know what got into me…” Bruce was staring at him expecting and with brave understanding.

“If your feelings have changed…”

But Clark couldn’t even hear Bruce’s voice forming these words. He hugged him and stopped him by capturing his mouth in a breathtaking kiss. Bruce wrapped his arms around Clark’s neck for support following his lover’s passionate ministrations while always keeping his eyes on Clark’s.

Suddenly, the Man of Steel hoisted him carefully and moved him slowly to the king sized bed where he placed him gently cuddling him to regain his temperature.

Superman took reluctantly his mouth from Bruce’s to allow him to breath. He licked his lips to take the lingering taste and the younger man caressed his cheek.
“You didn’t answer” he whispered with a steady voice.

“No!” he replied with conviction and Bruce nodded even though his eyes were still unsure. “I’m sorry” Clark said reading those eyes “I was irresponsible…”

“You acted as you felt.”

Clark shook his head.

“I acted childish! I stayed away from the one I love more than anything because of foolishness – a stupid stubbornness, something completely irrational. I know that I can get whatever I want – it’s selfish! And definitely…” he sighed. “Damn! I love it that you defy me!”

Bruce shook his head in denial: staying in front of the open window made him cold but Clark’s body was warming him better than the old fireplace.

“I don’t defy you…” he replied. “I just want to be true to what I am and not simply Superman’s or anyone’s pet” Clark pressed his lips. “I always listen to your ideas and opinions, Clark and I respect them yet in the end…we’re two different people and we can’t agree in everything… It would be better if I was someone like you…Like the Amazon Princess?”

His eyes were estimating Clark’s reactions and Superman felt irritated not so much for Bruce’s inquiring mode but because that was an awkward subject that always made him uncomfortable even when alone.

“Diana’s thought seems to torment you too much…” he decided to evade an answer.

But Bruce wouldn’t swallow that; he shook his head.

“It troubles me because I get the feeling that you’re troubled too” Clark twisted his mouth. “From the day the Princess intruded our life you always look thoughtful, irritable…unhappy except when you are with her.”

It was so easy for Clark to discern the bitterness in Bruce’s voice though it was effectively hidden.

The younger man cupped his face locking their eyes.

“Since you met her you spent more time with her than with me” he continued determined with steady voice but Clark’s heart melted on the love and understanding that colored Bruce’s voice – he wasn’t blaming him.

“Oh, Bruce…You shouldn’t think like that…” Bruce’s eyes were still and Clark felt regret for having acted like this but…it didn’t felt so wrong when he stayed away – it seemed…natural. “It was random I found myself with her” he lifted his eyebrows for emphasis. “And Diana is a friend, an ally to our fight against evil” he chuckled “not what your brilliant but tired mind thinks” though sometimes Clark arrested his eyes darting to more private parts of the impressive woman’s anatomy…but that wasn’t a crime, was it?

Bruce didn’t buy it: fine, he believed in Clark’s honesty right now but he could see the signs. And Clark.

“I’m sorry for staying away so long, for being so abrupt to you but…I’m so irredeemable?” he pouted. “Our last time in the beach wasn’t nice?”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.
“It was… great…but then you didn’t come and I was wondering what went so wrong…”

Clark lowered his eyes and Bruce didn’t like to see him like this so he wrapped his arms around Clark’s neck clinging to him in order to plant a kiss to his lips.

“I get it” he looked deep in his eyes “I get how you felt about my decision to return and I want you to know that I feel for you… about your fears… Because I fear for you too: the fact that you’re someone almost invincible doesn’t mean that I don’t have the same fears for your safety” he chuckled. “How would have seemed to you if I asked you to stay at the Fortress and never be Superman again?”

Clark shook his head and looked at the younger man lopsided. He sighed.

“It’s not the same, Bruce…” he hesitated to say it but in the end huffed “you’re a human, which makes you more vulnerable and easier to break” he closed his eyes. “You’re currently paralyzed…” he didn’t want to sadden him but Bruce looked him straight in the eyes.

“Easier to break? Really now? Remember the Kryptonite bullet on the rooftop?” of course he did: Bruce saved his life then. The human nodded. “I remember the footage Ra’s showed me with Zod plummeting you around…” his eyes though locked with Clark’s stared at something else “I was scared for you…”

Clark tightened his embrace to feel Bruce’s body on his. He cupped the man’s jaw with both hands and touched their foreheads together.

“You loved me from then?” he asked throatily from the emotions.

“I… I don’t know… things were so complicated then… but my heart was beating so painfully like in mount Marcy when you were hit by Bagdana…”

Clark let his fingertips on Bruce’s lips and the younger man stared at him.

“I don’t want you even uttering his name…” he breathed and felt Bruce’s cheekbone with his hot lips – in front of his eyes he saw again the demon stripping Bruce ready to claim his body, he watching unable to do anything…

“You see that you can be hurt as much as I? Someone stronger or with evil plans can always get to you – actually, those hours after the UN reception, all this silence…I was worried…”

Bruce’s hands tightened around Clark’s shoulders and nestled his head in the crook of his neck, his breath sending goose bumps to Clark’s spine.

“I don’t think that you’d like Superman settled in his Fortress indifferent to the world’s suffering…” Clark said kissing Bruce’s silken locks.

“No, I wouldn’t like that…And you? Would you like Batman caged?”

Clark closed his eyes a battle raging in him; that answer would have been so much easier if Bruce was like Diana… So the answer to Bruce’s previous question whether the things would have been different if he was like Diana – if Diana took his place – was yes: things would have been different; Clark would have been free to enjoy his happiness without the clenching of fear. Yet he hadn’t the heart to admit to Bruce something like that. He heard again Stitches’ snarky remark:
“I wouldn’t have a problem making Superman’s bitch squeal and beg as I rip his asshole… Maybe the boss plans to do that in the end, after he…”

His enemies wouldn’t even dare to suggest something like that for Diana… His enemies would never hurt him through someone like her; and their boss might already have had his eyes on Bruce.

He opened his eyes feeling Bruce’s eyes on him – he smiled his brilliant smile that always made Bruce reflect it.

“I don’t think that anyone can cage Batman…” he became serious. “And I’m glad for that!”

Bruce caressed the diamond shaped insignia in Superman’s uniform and placed his palm softly over his strong heart that jolted joyfully to that.

“I love you, my great Bat!” Clark exclaimed and his mouth ‘attacked’ Bruce’s neck where the intoxicating perfume emanated stronger and groaned happily when his lover bent his neck letting Clark suck greedily, wetting the flesh. Forgetting all the thoughts that tarnished their time together.

“And when you stop loving me?” Bruce inquired calmly and Clark sighed. “You’ll tell me?”

Clark’s breath became a rasp and he took Bruce’s head in his hands sinking his eyes in the sapphire-emerald seas that studied him.

“I’ll never stop loving you!” he said exasperated and Bruce’s heart gave a painful thud. “You’d never be alone again…I promise you” his eyes searched Bruce’s and narrowed suspiciously “you believe me, right?”

Bruce felt something clenching his guts but he smiled reassuringly. He nodded. Which made Clark roar playfully and began tickling Bruce’s ribs rendering him to giggles.

“You can’t let go Batman’s reticence and answer properly? Huh? I have to tickle the answer from you?”

Bruce’s laughter was a blessing and Clark relished in it but he stopped to let the man breathe.

“I…surrender…” Bruce beamed. “I believe you.”

“Glad to hear…”

He pushed gently Bruce on the mattress and untied the belt of his robe, rushing to close the window in less than a second and return. Bruce looked at him confused but Superman whistling carelessly unbuttoned his pajama shirt pushing it to his arms and extracting it; his hands unable to resist the view felt the younger man’s chest, his lips drawn to those sweet nipples like metal to magnet.

He licked to taste them, realizing how much he missed Bruce; he sucked with all his might, gently touching his teeth on the stiffened flesh and heard the human groan. Clark smiled and massaged with his mouth the playful nipple along with some of the taut pectoral; just to feel smoother and richer flesh which wasn’t of a man: it was a woman’s breast – Diana’s porcelain, juicy breast.

He shook himself embarrassed wishing Bruce hadn’t realized and hurried to descend to the man’s abs before clutching the waistband and lowering the pants and the underwear till the body he loved was completely naked.

“We must talk about the attack, Clark: we found some things with Lucius and Tony also got intelligence…”
But the Man of Steel rose with a disbelieving frown in his brow.

“Are you kidding me, right?” he asked slyly.

And without waiting for a reply he immersed his head in Bruce belly nibbling the taut, soft flesh, each abdominal muscle separately and enjoying the goose bumps he was causing. He felt Bruce’s hands caressing his messy locks in the pace of his exciting breaths.

“What are you doing, Clark?” the younger man asked because he knew Clark’s reluctance to engage him in intercourse. Clark who was fondling with one hand Bruce’s soft penis and with the other his buttocks moaned displeased for having to take his head from Bruce’s warmth.

“Mmm… a nice massage? Your muscles are too tense and tired BECAUSE OF ME! You haven’t slept last night waiting for me, right?” “Your body needs its rest to heal…”

Bruce blinked.

“Nothing bad happened… You’re here.”

Clark beamed and nodded.

“Yes, I am! So I’ll make up to you with my magic fingers” he waved his fingers in front of Bruce who smirked with his eyes shining gleefully.

“Matt comes tomorrow and I’m sure he’ll take care of that…” his voice was cut from a fit of giggles as Clark’s mouth attacked his belly tickling him relentlessly.

“No massage from him!” he growled imitating Batman’s roar and turned Bruce on his stomach. “Your body is only for my fingers to touch…”

Bruce chuckled and lifted an eyebrow.

“A good massage requires the masseur wearing the proper attire, which for your case is…” he moaned closing his eyes as Clark already touched his back “none! It’s so long since I last saw you without this ridiculous outfit…”

Clark leaned his head right next to Bruce’s cheek, who feeling his breath opened his eyes.

“Ridiculous?”

“Red, blue, yellow and orange? Really?” he snorted. “Besides anything compared with your naked body IS ridiculous!”

“You saved it…” Clark commented and was ready to discard his suit when his eyes fell on two flashing eyes on the floor. “Huh, Bruce? Nudity is allowed for underage kitten?”

Bruce chuckled and stretched his arm to brush Hero’s head and the kitten purred and climbed on the mattress to Clark’s rolling of eyes.

The Man of Steel took the kitten and in a blur placed him in his basket getting rid of his annoying attire in the second of his return. Bruce’s eyes caressed Clark’s god-like nude body making the Man of Steel feel as if the most skilled hands in universe had fondled him.

“I hoped for a sensual, slow strip tease…”

“So the client isn’t happy?”
“You took my kitten away!” he protested as Clark straddled him careful to not let his weight burden him.

“Hero understands…especially since I gave him his favorite smoked salmon” he winked.

Bruce supported his torso on his palms and looked at him.

“So…the crime was carefully planned beforehand…”

“Always…” he laid Bruce carefully back on the mattress. “And now, my Star, your faithful super masseur will earn his money…” his fingers ran Bruce’s shoulders easing the tension, kissing and sucking every inch of flesh he touched.

“But I didn’t pay…” Bruce let his head sink to the mattress and moaned as Clark’s lips doubled the effect of his skilled fingers.

“You just did…” Clark trailed Bruce’s deltoid with his hot tongue relishing the pleasure that flooded the young man’s brain waves.

“Fifty two hours and 24 minutes without you…” he whispered his thought as the magic fingers massaged his stiff neck numbing pleasantly the depths of his brain loosening his tongue.

Clark blushed because that was the greater admission of love from Bruce and because he hadn’t realized that so many hours had passed. And then he moved slowly down, finally reaching Bruce’s legs that still carried marks of his horrible injuries. He stretched the unresponsive legs aware of Bruce’s held breath. He knew that he was craving for his ministrations.

And Clark traced with his fingers the paths of the barely functional neurons rejoicing the stimuli that slowly ascended to Bruce’s brain. He could hear Bruce’s relieved smile and his head nestling in the silken pillow. Clark wanted to compensate for the lost time he neglected that special treatment that kept the neurons active and helped the generation of new synapses.

His eyes narrowed on the marks Bruce’s fingers left on the paths he followed.

“You were hitting your legs?”

Bruce gave an affirmative huff through the soft fabric.

“It’s nice to get some feeling…”

Clark pressed his lips determined to give Bruce more than some feeling. He took away his fingers and began massaging with his mouth, letting out hot and cold breath in turn savoring Bruce’s aroused breaths – Clark knew that stimulating those ill functioning areas turned them into highly erogenous paths. He smirked, hearing his lover moaning, clutching the soft pillow; his breath was quickened with pleasure.

He used all his skill to guide his lips into extracting the most stimuli possible and he knew he was successful as Bruce’s forearms hugged tighter the pillow grunting as his healthy torso shook.

Clark after ten minutes of smelling Bruce’s perfume intensified by his arousal didn’t have the restraint to continue: he was aroused more and his body was drenched in the same glowing sweat as Bruce. He whined and rose wrapping his arms around Bruce’s shining torso before touching carefully his body on the human’s; his suffering length rubbing on those delicious buttocks, Clark leading his member to slowly get release even without penetration – Kryptonian physiology had many other precious advantages apart from super powers.
His head nestled in Bruce’s shoulder blade chewing softly the hot flesh, savoring with his tongue the salty flavor.

“It’s nice, huh?” he whispered.

Bruce turned his head on the pillow, some locks had glued on his sweaty cheekbones which view made Clark rush to nuzzle that hot cheek.

“It is…You’re back…”

Clark’s hands massaged Bruce’s buttocks guiding them into treat his penis to climax at a safe pace. Bruce had no feeling below his waist but from Clark’s rasps, the sound of flesh brushing flesh and his body’s shaking understood what he was doing. And he was content that Clark could get some sexual satisfaction out of him.

“I promise you…” Clark whispered in his ear sucking and burning the skin with the rasping of his orgasm. “I’ll always be here…” he grunted.

Bruce stilled his blank eyes on the pillow.

Don’t make promises you can’t keep…His insides were torn as soon as this thought cracked in his mind like a lightning.
Bagdana was standing in the middle of his underground lair, a circular huge cave with colossal columns made from stalactites and stalagmites glimmering with different colors; he retained his true form with his granite gigantic body, the sparkling silver spikes all over his scalp and the ivory straight horns. He was in his domain, in his kingdom watching in the crystal waters of the round lake in front of him Darkseid with his sycophant Granny Goodness overseeing his hired and brainwashed thugs raiding hideouts of rival gangs in Metropolis and labs all over the States. His partner was in his real form too since the underground of the Mannheim Mansion was unreachable to everyone and his red eyes were glaring smugly at his human servants on the holograph projection right before his throne. He smirked: this new God didn’t suspect that Bagdana could have access to his headquarters and watch his movements. Darkseid didn’t trust him enough to tell him what he was looking for in the LexLabs but he was sure that the new God wasn’t going to find it. Luthor though not a god was cunning enough to hide perfectly what was to secure himself from his present allies and potentially future enemies. Luthor was going to sell dearly this precious info especially now that he was in need.

And there was another factor that should trouble Darkseid: LexLabs belonged now to Bruce and he was even smarter from both Luthor and Darkseid: Superman’s intervention in the raid of the Metropolis’ central LexLab manifested clearly that the security system that Darkseid knew from Luthor had been already replaced by Wayne Enterprises’ security systems that blew the whistle ruining their plans. Bruce was fully aware of Luthor’s shady businesses and experiments so would not risk of something dangerous being taken from there.

They had continued attempting robberies at LexLabs always in combination with other irrelevant laboratories as Bagdana had advised to camouflage their real target. Darkseid simply didn’t give a shit about his thugs which were busted every time: they were cheap, expendable tools and each time he recruited new. If they managed to find the desirable thing Darkseid would take it himself.

At the same time his partner’s servants (either with their will by generous payment or with brainwash) were erasing the competition of other gangs in Metropolis. It was obvious that Darkseid wanted to establish his reign in every sector and hit Superman from different battlefields simultaneously.

Bagdana yawned because all this trouble to dominate earth had become after the first couple of millennia boring and uninteresting. Well, he definitely liked to be in the winner’s side or better to be the winner but his major concern at this stage was getting back what ran away from him.

His red flames of eyes stabbed the water surface and erased the footage from Darkseid’s headquarters. He ordered mentally the waters to show him Bruce…but nothing came up.

Bagdana snorted and smoke filled the space: Bruce had returned to Gotham, to their city, the city that gave birth to Bruce and brought them together. The thought alone made his gigantic, granite looking body get on fire ready to storm his bedroom and conquer his sleeping body… or since he didn’t want to disclose his menace yet, at least caress with his hot breath the youth’s neck to cause goose bumps to his body in his peaceful sleep…

But he could only sense and imagine his stubborn soul mate and his surroundings not even take a peep of him, proof that the damn black diamond was hanging powerful from his neck, over his chest and…there was still deep love in the Kryptonian’s heart which lay right beside him with his lips brushing the same neck Bagdana wanted to suck.
His fists clenched and he shut his eyes roaring because every time the love between Superman and Bruce created a shield against him, it was real pain: how could Bruce still insist on the love of this man? He opened slowly his eyes and over the water the image of the Amazon Princess smiled seductively to Superman.

Bagdana nodded: his pain would be over soon: there was still love in Superman’s heart…but it was cracked and before long it’d be shattered.

It began with a sense of tickling slowly pouring from the few functional neurons of his legs to the entirety of his bottom half body. He was still sat in Clark’s wheelchair and two blazing crystal blue eyes were watching him avidly sharing the same senses through reading his brain waves.

For an instance, he was hesitant: he didn’t want to have his hopes crushed by a failure…But life flooded his legs and flared his body. So he pressed his lips determined, clenched his jaw and tightened his grasp to the armrests.

Clark jolted to hold him if he fell but Bruce cast him a sharp glare to stay at a distance.

His feet felt the floor, the solid surface and his heartbeat raced before he controlled it back to normal pacing. His fingers hurt from the way he was gripping the armrests as he prepared himself for the last and most difficult part. He could sense Clark holding his breath…He pushed his body upwards and his legs trembled.

Clark jerked in his place but didn’t intervene as Bruce slowly let go of the armrests…standing…well, not very steady but it was amazing since he wasn’t using an ounce of his mental power to assist his body.

He concentrated on his body and the shaking eventually stopped; Clark was rasping now but Bruce didn’t look at him to not lose his focus. He inhaled deeply and his eyes were sparkling in determination as he ordered his left foot to move forwards. He felt Clark’s eyes stilling at his foot as if transferring some of his insane power to the human limb; Superman was so tense that didn’t smile when the foot settled an inch ahead. Neither did Bruce: he just controlled his breath and ordered his right foot to go ahead the left.

A small step for a human, a huge step for Bruce… He smiled to himself encouraged; his brow sleek with sweat; he staggered a bit and stretched his arms for balance – Clark’s body resembled the body of a lion ready to attack but not really attack but catch.

He had stability now and breathed: time for a second step. First the left then the right. A faint smile carved his face and for the first time he turned his eyes to Clark whose face was still tense with apprehension, a lump evident in his throat.

Bruce moved again his feet to reach him enjoying how the beautiful body was coming closer; he was inches from him and Clark was beaming – was right for Superman to shed tears? Bruce didn’t want to see Clark crying even if it was from joy…

…The floor left from his feet and Bruce after all this time wasn’t able to retain his balance…he was falling and it felt awfully…

But then two unbelievably strong but simultaneously gentle arms caught him from the armpits and suddenly the lack of floor didn’t feel terrifying but thrilling. He was ascending to the sky – he was flying…
“I got you… I’ll always be the faster to catch you…” Clark’s face was touching his and Bruce attacked his lips more aggressively, more enthusiastic than ever. “Yeah, Bruce…” Superman whispered “you made it!”

Batman was gazing down at Gotham’s streets, the strong wind blowing his cape around him. His eyes were ablaze with determination: he just stopped a murderer and knocked out a gang ready to attack a woman and her little girl. He was back!

The whoosh was eloquent enough: he really thought that he could take him by surprise? His eyebrow twitched under the cowl and Batman jolted passing over Superman’s body with a somersault that the alien barely caught. He landed softly at his feet but sprang again as a blur came at him – Superman wouldn’t admit defeat – Batman smirked as he twisted his body to meet Superman’s instead of avoid it.

He could tell that the Man of Steel was astonished but as Batman expected, Clark wrapped his arms around his torso and connected their lips in a wild tango of flesh… He felt the rush of movement but Batman didn’t worry: his back was softly rested on the wall and immediately fast hands were unclenching his armor’s parts causing his heartbeat and breath go crazy… Superman’s lips were sucking desperately the visible part of his face, frustrated for being unable to get access to the rest of the face.

But the Man of Steel was luckier in stripping Batman’s hips and his greedy hands fondled the human’s buttocks roaring his pleasure in Bruce’s mouth.

“It’s… wrong…” Batman growled. “Superman… can’t be… fucking around – especially with Batman…” of course his moans disrupting every syllable were relaying the opposite.

“Who cares?”

Superman grabbed his still armored legs and brought them to hug his hips in the same second Superman freed his erection. And then Batman’s gloves tightened on Superman’s back as his lover thrust in him causing a moan.

“No foreplay?” Batman growled in Superman’s ear biting carefully to not break his teeth but the effect on the Man of Steel was powerful.

“I think” he thrust again “we had that” he granted perfectly synchronized with Bruce as the human sucked and licked his neckline “I, with Metropolis’ thugs and you, with Gotham’s scum…”

Superman began thrusting without restricting himself only holding Batman tenderly to not be hurt by hitting the wall from his force. And Bruce was moaning and grunting as Clark searched with his teeth for Batman’s still hidden cheekbones.

“Take off your damn cowl…” he rasped between his thrusts that sent fire to Bruce’s spine.

Batman’s gloved hands fistied Superman’s messy locks as his blood boiled with joy.

“Never!”

Superman’s eyes found Batman’s real eyes since he had deactivated the lenses and the Man of Steel chuckled like a boy; his thrusts became faster and then he cupped Batman’s head touching their foreheads together.

“Sex on a Gotham rooftop” he breathed “I always wanted to do that…”
Batman bit Superman’s lower lip.

“Not so boy scout-y…”

Superman laughed and then his hot fluid rushed in Bruce’s body filling him with goose bumps exactly as his own climax erupted. Superman’s embrace became tighter.

“You’re my life-giving sun…Don’t you ever leave me…”

“Do you really want to do that to him? Do you believe that he deserves that?” it blew like a thunder in the quiet of the night.

It was the same arrogant female voice that had jeered him for being hidden behind a tree only this time the scorn was stronger. And Gotham was gone, as the cool air, to be replaced by impenetrable milky-white fog…

Bruce suddenly could see the fog dissolving revealing the back of a kneeled Superman dressed in the same grandiose attire Bruce was wearing during his stay in the Fortress of Solitude. With the difference of being all white in agreement with the surrounding crystals…A color that Bruce knew it was mournful because the whole scene clenched his insides in sorrow. Reflecting Superman’s emotional state…whose head was slumped in his chest, his arms loosely left to touch the cold surface without any energy, without any mood to make a move.

It seemed that the Man of Steel didn’t even breathe either had a heartbeat but Bruce could see his tears falling from his eyes…

“…my heart doesn’t beat anymore but I know that I won’t die…” he heard again Clark’s dry voice recounting his nightmare.

He felt his heart ache for Clark and moved closer to console him because they could fight everything together…He touched his shoulder blade but his froze as his eyes were able to discern in front of Superman. The Man of Steel was leaning above a body…Bruce’s body.

“I’ll continue float with you in my arms but you won’t ever come back to me and I’ll be forever alive but dead…”

Bruce bit his lips hard and the copper taste of blood was heavy; he looked at his dead self and his face was gaunt and wrinkled, his hair white: he was old, very old…and Clark was young, beautiful as ever – he looked like Bruce’s grandson but the Man of Steel was crying for him, his insides were torn apart because his human lover died his natural death of age…

“It’s okay, Clark” he whispered to Superman’s ear and caressed his shoulder. “We lived together all these years…humans die but at least you gave me happiness…You’ll be alright – life is beautiful and people love you: your heart will beat again with joy…”

He closed his eyes: he knew the pain Clark was feeling…The pain of losing your loved ones…It kept stabbing through the years.

“Do you enjoy what you succeeded?” the same female voice hissed in his ear. “Do your human egoism relish seeing a being like him broken for your sake?”

Her voice was poison and Bruce could see Superman’s crystal, sparkling eyes…only they were glassy, their blue topaz glow put out as if these eyes were of a dead man…Of a dead man crying above the corpse of an old man as if this carcass had sucked Superman’s life and energy before dying or even after death.
“No…” Bruce spat angrily. “You can’t be like this, Clark! You’re life incarnated! You’re my Sun…” his voice was choked by despair.

He heard steps echoing to the empty, depressive chamber. A snigger sharper than knife wounded the silence of Clark’s non existing vitals and silent sobs.

“YOUR. SUN…” she spat gleeful. “Of course, littl’ Brucie kept Superman for himself so his miserable life could get some light – so he could hide behind him…to brag that someone like him managed to capture, trap and drag Superman to a living death, along with him…”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, Clark…Your life doesn’t end with mine…” he tried to chuckle as if Clark could hear him but he ended up grunting. “You know that…You promised…”

The woman laughed.

“It’s your fault: you always knew that he wouldn’t be able to keep that promise but still you doomed him…you doomed humankind…”

He saw buildings burning, collapsing, huge waves shattering ships, people crying for help, mothers beg Superman to save their babes…but Superman though could hear their pleading didn’t stir, his dead eyes focused on the old man’s wrinkled face, his hands weakly caressing the gaunt cheeks.

Bruce gulped because Superman’s pain had settled in his throat as well as in his heart.

“I stare at your face begging with my blank eyes because my voice is lost; I’m begging you to come back…but you don’t…” Clark’s monotonous voice continued echoing through the crystal walls.

The steps stopped right next to him.

“You did that: you put your egoism above anything else – above his wellbeing. Do you really think that you offered him anything more than agony, suffering and pain? Even the satisfaction he deserves was taken away from him by you…”

Bruce turned to the presence right next to him and his eyes widened seeing the one he already knew.

“Selfish human, do you believe that you’re worthy of him? You’re worthy of his love and misery?!”

“He isn’t miserable!” he yelled but he wasn’t sure.

Diana jerked her head and began laughing.

And Bruce found himself in front of the Daily Planet building in a Metropolis that was totally different, like coming taken off a sci-fi movie depicting the distant future. He heard the sound and raised his eyes to see Superman and Wonder Woman hammering some bizarre flying enemies until the last one was down. The crowd cheered as the two heroes hugged mid-air and kissed passionately.

A blade ripped Bruce’s heart in two but his eyes disobeyed him and kept looking there… and then someone else flew to them: a boy dressed in Superman’s – the House of El – colors; he had raven hair and crystal blue eyes; a curl brushing his forehead exactly like his father’s. The boy rushed to them and Clark took the boy between him and Diana, and Bruce saw that the boy had the same lips with her and a tiara like hers was in his locks… Their son…
Bruce felt one by one the drops of blood from his heart...yet...he was happy because Clark’s eyes were alive, joyful, hopeful...

“Do you want to deprive him of all this happiness?”

The drenched in sunshine landscape of the future Metropolis with the smiling super family dissolved abruptly leaving in its place the depressive all white chamber of the Fortress with the slumped, uncaring, broken Superman. His dead eyes were stabbing Bruce’s heart though the Man of Steel wasn’t looking at anything except the lifeless face of his dead lover or not even this but somewhere in the past. It was obvious that from now on for Clark there was only the past: not the present, not the future, not life – exactly like a ghost...

“I don’t think that you’d like Superman settled in his Fortress indifferent to the world’s suffering...” Clark’s playful voice echoed from past times.

And then he felt again the shadow of the Amazon Princess scolding at him.

“Are you so cruel?” she hissed.

Bruce stirred in his sleep; he was vaguely aware that it was a dream but still the impact was grave – actually, a gravestone settled on his chest and he just wanted to get out of the blindingly white chamber and escape to something relieving: like reality...

Well, there was nothing relieving in feeling that you’re cut in half with your body below the waist being nonexistent. He tried to re-experience the feelings from the other dream where his legs were alive again but the thud, exhausting beating inside his ribcage didn’t permit that.

The strong medication he was treated with always made it difficult for him to get quickly from sleep to awakening; it demanded some ‘twilight’ zone where Bruce was aware of his surroundings and pondered on things: actually, although rapid awakening was crucial for him, that pondering was nice and inspiring.

However, today the ‘twilight’ pondering was filled with disappointment as an abrupt clearing informed him that although he was warmly cocooned this cocoon wasn’t Clark’s hot body but blankets carefully placed to muffle him meticulously. He was dressed in his warmest pajamas – if he knew Clark well, the ones he wore last night were neatly hanged to the chair’s back because he was taught by his mother to be neat.

His body was cleaned from his and Clark’s sweat, saliva and...semen. His lover had cleaned him after he fell asleep defeated by the medication, the fatigue and...the happiness of Clark’s return. Definitely Clark didn’t use the shower’s aid; he’d have woken...So he cleaned him with his own means... – on that he felt his cheeks hot which angered him because he was behaving like a teen – an innocent teen while he was anything but that!

He inhaled deeply: innocent or not, teen or not, his hands caressed the other side of the mattress. The absence of that body-nest around him and that hot respiration wetting his ear and sending electric currents to his healthy body discouraged Bruce for the day that dawned.

But he was in Gotham now – here the time difference didn’t exist so Clark had to fly to Metropolis for his daily job. Here they didn’t have the blessing of sharing mornings...Unless, Bruce struggled and didn’t surrender in deep sleep so to get up the same time with Clark, which would first cause an outcry from Leslie...and the rest of the gang, and second would hurt the infamous ‘rest to heal’ dogma, especially when the surgery could be happening soon...
There was something warm on his chest but it certainly wasn’t Clark’s ‘possessive’ arm…and it purred! His face radiated with a big smile and he actually chuckled before opening his eyes exactly when his fluffy burden felt the movement and stood to bring its face above Bruce’s.

Bruce now giggled, finding it so funny to have Hero’s pink nose right above his own and the kitten’s big round eyes looking him curiously.

“So…you were the burden over my chest? Huh?” he narrowed his eyes mock strictly but the kitten didn’t buy it and pecked his cheek causing a new lighthearted laugh. “Nah…It wasn’t your fault, buddy…”

Indeed the impression from the dream lingered and Bruce shook his head to clear it.

“Do you think that all these drugs I’m taking and Crane’s sick experiments got to me?” he caressed Hero’s head. “Or it’s the thoughts I don’t want to acknowledge?”

Hero’s paw touched his nose softly and Bruce nodded.

“You’re right…I’m babbling…” he took gently the animal from its armpits and lifted it to place it on the pile of blankets. “Wait a minute, buddy…to hoist myself. As much as I’ve been training, it’s still much different from having my legs doing the job…”

Yet his ascent was stopped abruptly when his eyes fell on the nightstand and he ended up supporting himself on his elbow. He knew he should have smiled on the sight yet his expression stayed neutral. On the nightstand lay his tablet-like gadget – it had fallen on the floor when Clark lifted him last night so Clark must have picked it up before he left. Upon its screen a ruby colored rose was placed diagonally – Clark knew that this screen was indestructible and scratch proof; under the rose the entire screen was covered with Italian letters:

“I’m sorry I left without saying anything but you were sleeping so peacefully – like an angel – and I didn’t want to ruin your dreams (I hope they were filled with me…)” – of course they were…Bruce almost sighed “I’ll come as soon as I slip Perry’s clutches…I love you! P.S. Thank you for being so generous and forgave me…”

Bruce took the rose whose thorns were meticulously removed and inhaled deeply its intoxicating smell – certainly, Clark brought it from another corner of the planet and didn’t just buy it because the fresh drops on its petals were natural and not the product the florists were using.

Hero had climbed again to his lap now that he was in sitting position and touched his muzzle to the petals.

Bruce’s eyes were blank replaying the scenes from last night with a strange mix of feelings: he was joyful and relieved that Clark hadn’t been injured or something and that he came back to him, but on the same time he felt a sinking feeling: he knew he did the right thing to act like that yet…it hit him like…

“You were there, Hero…You think I’m too soft to him?” his sparkling eyes met the kitten’s, who stopped rubbing its head to Bruce’s chest and Bruce frowned shocked “do you think that he has wrapped me around his pinky?!?”

He was Batman, for pity’s sake! He shouldn’t be like this…like…like… He should have made Clark beg for his forgiveness; torture, punish him for letting him in agony – for being with the Amazon more than with him…Her voice from the dream echoed again in his head and he rubbed his face.

No, he wanted Clark to be happy even when the Man of Steel caused Bruce some turmoil…Because Clark had suffered because of him all these months; Clark took care of him like a father and a mother together: he was bathing him, feeding him in the mouth like a baby.

He’d have died without his love and care…Clark’s heartbreaking howl of that night when Bruce succumbed to his injuries made the blood freeze in his veins…Clark loved him and his love troubled and filled the older man with agony…so he needed some time alone to find himself, his stability…despite being the most powerful being, Clark could be bent from his fears and his fears had to do with Bruce’s vulnerability and that was that caused his irritation when he decided to return to Gotham. But now he was sure that Clark was calm again and things would be like the first days after his awakening.

Unless…He remembered the footage from the UN ceremony; the knowing laughter of the reporters as they commented on the rapid disappearance of the two superheroes… Did Clark enjoy more her company than his? But then he recalled all the moments from last night, the massage that gave again life in his legs – though now they were again dead -, the kisses, the moans, the whispers, the promises…Don’t make promises you can’t keep…

“Master Bruce, you’re already awake?” the door opening and Alfred’s slightly surprised and embarrassed voice dissolved his thoughts. “Pardon me for not knocking the door but I didn’t want to disrupt your rest – I was going to just…”

“…Check on me” Bruce smiled. “It’s okay, Alfred” he reassured him and took in Alfred’s nonchalant eyes estimating the room’s condition.

“Perhaps you should resume your sleep for a couple of hours more: Mr. Leench, your physiotherapist isn’t due till afternoon and it’s not even 8 o’clock: you must be tired after Master Kent’s return” Alfred’s eyes were cool as ever when his young master’s cheeks became red.

“Actually, I’m quite rested, Alfred” he said having decided to stop being a teen in these things. “You know that Clark is very careful and takes care of my body’s wellbeing…” he frowned “but how you knew about his coming?”

Alfred walked to the chair that hosted Bruce’s pajamas and gestured to the clothes.

“First of all, the pajamas you wore last night: you wear a different set now; second, the rose you hold and third, the body shape in the other side of the bed” his face was totally expressionless but Bruce could make out a sparkle of amusement in his clever eyes.

“I must remember to exploit your detective skills…” he replied arching his eyebrows and placing the rose on the nightstand.

He brought his legs off the mattress to touch the floor as the wheelchair ‘reading’ his order came near him; Alfred waited eager to help but didn’t make a move because he knew his master’s wish to make everything alone – not even Hero moved closer to not thwart his master’s effort. However, Alfred grabbed the robe and held it for Bruce to wear immediately after he was settled in the chair.

“Alfred…” he was hesitant to phrase his question as his arms slipped inside the robe.

“Yes, sir?” Alfred though for eighteen years had been kept away from the boy, had trained himself to read his mood even when there were no many signs – and the clever man saw that apart from the relief the reunion brought and something else.

Bruce opened his mouth but closed it shaking his head.

“Nothing…”
But Alfred was so attentive for anything threatening Bruce’s emotional peace that couldn’t let the chance go away.

“Forgive my insistence, sir, but you know that I’m here for everything you want to share, right?” Bruce raised his eyes to find his butler’s eyes. “Your trust is always an honor for me.”

And a pain...Bruce thought and he didn’t want to sadden this good man with such things. However Alfred was wise and patient and unbiased concerning Clark; Tony didn’t cover the last so he couldn’t ask him.

“Alfred, do you think that I have changed?” he asked straight and ran his fingers through Hero’s fur – the kitten had found the chance to resume his rightful place in Bruce’s lap.

The older man lifted an eyebrow because it was a complex question and his young master’s eyes manifested how important it was.

“Before answering properly that question, allow me to require some clarifications: change in relation to what and when.”

Bruce inclined slightly his head and licked his lips: he should have asked the question properly.

“Do you think that...what happened between me and Clark has changed me?”

Now that was difficult to answer: Alfred had lived Bruce only through glimpses – stolen, rushed moments filled with agony in the darkness of the Manor’s underground caves – and then his daily experience with him was only for one year from the moment Falcone decided to move to the Manor and drag Bruce along. He felt that he knew the youth better than anyone – except from Miss Kyle – but still the seriousness in those young eyes said to him that Alfred had responsibility to assess right.

“To begin with, Master Bruce, anything new in our life can cause changes – especially, when that new is a person and more important a person that stirs the strongest emotions inside us” Bruce was staring at him sucking every word collected yet giving the impression that he was holding his breath.

Alfred leaned and held the young man’s upper arms.

“The core of us remains the same yet when something so strong enters our lives some changes do happen; maybe not so much in our personality but mainly in the way we see things and cope with them. Life means change, Master Bruce” Bruce’s eyes were sparkling “our experiences in relationships always bring something different in our worldview or attitude around other people. What is important though is whether we feel content with those changes; whether we consider them good or bad or if I may say, worth to be maintained.”

Alfred’s stare was stronger now.

“Which leads us to this, sir: are you content with your relationship with Master Kent and how it is affecting your personality?”

Bruce’s eyes lowered a bit and then returned to look at his butler’s kind face.

“I’m too soft with Clark? Am I acting out off character? Sloppy?”

Alfred was divided between smiling for the youth’s first known love issues and being serious because it was very important for Bruce – and so for Alfred too.

“I get that you didn’t – let’s say – punish him much last night, right?”
Bruce blinked: he felt so uncomfortable speaking for these things. He actually felt like an idiot.

“Not at all…” he admitted.

Alfred pressed his lips.

“Did you feel the need to punish him for staying away without a word?”

Bruce lowered his head and rubbed his forehead. He shook his head.

“No…I just wanted him to get back safe…and be like…” he inhaled “like we were before the attack. Oh, Alfred, I can’t get angry with Clark… he also suffered too much and struggles all the time with his fears of me being hurt…and I’m sorry for him” he yanked his head. “Maybe these things aren’t for me: I don’t think that I’m supposed to be in such situations…”

Alfred frowned: no, Bruce shouldn’t think like this.

“Do you regret the last night, Master Bruce?” Bruce’s eyes widened and got warm.

He shook his head in denial and brushed Hero’s head.

“No, I was…happy.”

“Did you ever regret what you started with Master Kent?”

Alfred didn’t lose the tension in Bruce’s healthy body.

“Only when I was to die and I felt Clark’s terrible pain; that howl of his the moment I…” he locked eyes with his butler “when I momentarily died…” he tasted again the sour taste of his dream. “But other than that, no, I have no regrets.”

Alfred’s lips twitched.

“So if I’m getting this right, the Bat inside you is concerned that you let Master Kent easily get away with his misbehavior and nudges you, huh?” he stretched his posture. “Well, I’d hate to make suggestions but why not enjoy your last night reunion, which I assume it was quite pleasant? Perhaps the brilliant young man that we know Master Clark is realized his misbehavior and won’t do it again…But if he does anything so nasty again you’ll adjust your stance accordingly?” he winked smiling.

“I just don’t want him to think that I’m a desperate victim that clang to the first person that approached him…”

Alfred nodded solemn.

“Pardon me, sir, but I think that currently this is your own fear: what if Master Kent actually thinks that he is the bloody luckiest man on this planet and thus the happiest too?” Bruce raised his eyes to him. “You’re not weakened, sir, because you’re soft and understanding to the man you love, like Batman is not less strong when is generous enough to give criminals a second chance. It demands more strength to depart from one’s anger and adhere to what is really important…”

Bruce gave a smile and nodded; Alfred’s heart beat calmer because he saw that his young master was relaxed, his face regaining his beautiful healthy rosy color. And as the kitten in his lap became restless and writhed rubbing his fur on Bruce’s chest, Alfred saw the clouds dissolving.

“Shower and breakfast, sir?”
“Hero…Hero…” the kitten was nuzzling Bruce’s neck purring and the young man tried to escape. “I think he is hungry, Alfred…” he chuckled. “Is Tony still here?”

Alfred was already gathering his master’s pajamas from the chair.

“I just met him on the corridor to the kitchen: Master Anthony like myself thought that you’ll be sleeping for some more. Do you want me to notify him?”

Bruce made an affirmative sound.

“I wish Selina had stayed for the night too: I always have more appetite with all my friends around the table…”

He let Hero down and turned towards the bathroom that was already adjusted to his increased and special needs as an individual with mobility impairments.

“There are many things I have to do today, Alfred” he said with vivacity as his chair rolled inside the bathroom.

“A lot, sir?” Alfred’s voice was slightly downhearted because definitely he wanted for his young master to continue his rest filled days at Thasos.

Bruce realized and grinned to him.

“I won’t exert myself, Alfred, I promise, but there are things that waited too long.”

“Of course, sir” he nodded.

Hero’s soft paws didn’t make a sound on the thick carpet but Bruce caught him before the kitten slipped in the bathroom.

“Do you want a bath too?” he asked him as he brought Hero’s head to his. “I don’t think so…” he shook his head and let the kitten outside the bathroom closing the door.

Bruce chuckled remembering the first time he bathed Hero. He was still in the Fortress and although Clark reminded him what he already knew that is to say that in the Fortress bath didn’t require water, Bruce insisted on Hero getting used to the normal procedure…

Well, it proved to be quite difficult to persuade an energetic two months old kitten to be bathed…and thankfully, Clark was there not only to help controlling Hero but also to dry and dress Bruce in new attire because he ended up more drenched than Hero.

He was laughing so hard as if he was again the giggling toddler in the Manor’s grounds and he sensed Clark’s glimmering eyes sucking the sight of Bruce ‘wrestling’ with his kitten before the Man of Steel erupted in even louder laughter and joined them to get as much soaked.

Hero was clean and dry in his kryptonian basket and Clark heaved Bruce in his arms: they were both dripping water and even their hair was soaked. Bruce couldn’t stop his hands from touching Clark’s wet locks and he was surprised to feel Superman shaking from emotion.

“We must get those drenched clothes off you…” Superman breathed in a husky voice and Bruce was naked in a second and Clark’s mouth was glued to his, tantalizing and conquering his lips.

Bruce had closed his eyes diving into the sweetness of the Kryptonian’s kiss and the avalanche of his touches to the healthy part of his body; touches which although soft and tender drove his newly revitalized body to excitement and bliss. Once more Clark sparked life in him…

Clark was scrolling down on his PC screen the news headlines referring to Bruce’s arrival. He supported his chin on his palm and his eyes were blank replaying the last night’s moments: he never had much need for sleep so that permitted him to watch Bruce sleeping…and that would melt him every time, especially as he spooned Bruce’s warm body that emanated that intoxicating smell that was paralyzing pleasantly his brain as his half open lips nestled in the human’s neck.

“If you plan on writing an article concerning the reactions about Bruce’s return too late, buster! Perry gave it to someone else. You lost your chance to cover it live” Lois settled on his desk sniffing at him.

Clark heard her coming and was ready for her outburst – he hadn’t answered her calls from yesterday: oops!

“Aaaand you didn’t have the decency to answer my calls, farm boy!” she shook her head disgusted “Ms. Kent will be very displeased when hears about your behavior…”

Clark smiled to her and she frowned narrowing his eyes.

“C’mere, Lois… You know how highly I think of you” she cocked an eyebrow and rolled her eyes in disbelief “but I didn’t call you back ‘cause we’re gonna argue and argue, and I wanted to ‘answer’ Bruce’s calls and talk to you up close and personal.”

Lois took his cup of coffee and sipped grimacing.

“You certainly can afford a better coffee…”

Clark snorted.

“As soon as Ms. Rose decides to buy a new coffee machine.”

Lois chuckled; she was a fan of Ms. Rose’s bakery as well but the old lady’s coffee machine was from the 90s.

“So you made Bruce so worried that he was searching for you through phone…”

Clark sighed and nodded pressing his lips.

“I did and it was cruel from me. I went to him to soothe him and…make up to him.”

Lois shook her head.

“I hope he made you kneel and beg and beg and cry. That would do your” she lowered her voice to whisper “super powered ass justice.”

He jerked his eyebrows upwards.

“He…he wasn’t angry” he looked Lois in the eyes showing his vast regret “he was worried, Lois, and sad, and that was worse than being angry and forcing me to beg for getting in his good books again. Of course I apologized” he added hastily “and…I made my best to compensate and make him happy again…” he winked.

But Lois’ eyes widened.
“You didn’t!” she exclaimed shocked and some of their colleagues looked at her. “You told me that his pelvis is too fragile” she continued much calmer and in whispy mode after casting a glare at the others.

Clark chuckled.

“I gave him a heavenly pleasant – I’m not bragging here… massage that relaxed, rested and revitalized his body.”

Lois crossed her arms.

“Like ad for brothel selling cheap porn massage!” she snorted.

Clark opened his mouth affronted and raised his index finger shaking his head.

“No cheap, not cheap at all!”

“And he just let you?”

Clark huffed: he knew that he deserved to be tormented by Bruce but he was glad the younger man didn’t go for that option.

“Oh, Lois, I know I acted stupidly but I regretted it and apologized and why we should have kept arguing about my stupidity and not go on enjoying the moments life offers us?”

Lois’s mouth crooked in a smirk and she snorted.

“Cut the crap, buster! The boy needs to learn some things…”

Clark yanked his head and chuckled.

“Bruce has Stark to disparage me.”

She nodded with her eyebrow cocked.

“Yeah…a womanizer. Bruce needs a woman to teach him about men.”

“He is a man too, you know…” he tilted his head on the side.

Lois shook her index finger.

“He is much more than simply a man: he is a sweetheart, the bravest, cutest being out there… but he is inexperienced and innocent” Clark shook his head smiling in disbelief for the strong sympathy Bruce got from women. “I hope you realize that you’re the luckiest bastard, mister!”

Clark looked her in the eyes, completely serious.

“Do I look like I haven’t realized?”

She widened her eyes in emphasis.

“Absolutely! And though I’m a woman, I tell you: that Diana sucks and doesn’t compare with Bruce.”

Clark pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I have nothing with her, Lois: she is just a friend and ally.”
“That you can sell to others not me – I see how you look at her!” she leaned to him placing her palm on the desk.

He ruffled his hair.

“Okay! I might look at her… appraising and acknowledging her beauty” Lois grunted “but it’s normal, Lois… Before I met Bruce I was heterosexual so I recognize the female beauty too.”

Lois crossed her arms.

“Heterosexual my ass! Even your mom knows that her son had experience with both sexes…” Clark crooked his lips. “The name Ron Cooper rings a bell?” she smirked and Clark blushed. “You’re bisexual but either of them doesn’t justify you drooling for her. She’s bad influence, Clark!” she inhaled deeply. “You began neglecting Bruce from the day you met her – do you think he didn’t notice?”

“Wait… wait… Neglect? For pity’s sake, Lois!”

But she poked him at the chest grimacing because she had forgotten that this actually hurt.

“You have to get a grip, Smallville: Bruce might be sweet and kind and forgiving but I’m sure that if you continue your double play he’ll react because he has dignity – he won’t stand being fooled around by you.”

Well, Clark was also sure more so since he knew that Batman was watching.

“You need to clear things, Clark, because you’ll hurt him and remember that you vowed to not let anyone do exactly that?”

Clark lowered his eyes.

“There’s nothing going on between me and Diana. Honestly.”

Lois looked him disbelievingly.

“I hope you’re not lying to yourself, Clark…” she pouted. “You need to be honest with yourself, buddy…”

He licked his dry lips and his eyes found Bruce on the news’ photos on his PC screen.

“I love Bruce and I’d never cause him new pain: he has had enough of this shit…”

“Good to hear…” she patted his shoulder. “On other stuff: we had some gang quarrels last night – Police hints Intergang: seems like the new gang is expanding and increases its power while remains vague like a ghost.”

Clark nodded.

“I was watching White and Stitches last night – they spoke about their boss but nothing fascinating; just some scattered words about a plan and about how confident he is – they hinted that their mysterious boss isn’t afraid of Superman…”

She raised her eyebrows and whistled impressed.

“Do you think that he has Kryptonite stock? Maybe he was co-operating with Luthor?”
“That would explain the raid in the LexLab…”

“Yeah…and then they added other laboratories in their target to drive us away from suspecting their actual interest.”

Clark remembered Bruce’s suggestion to discuss about the attack against him – well, that moment he wasn’t in a state to discuss anything but as soon as he left the Planet he’d rush to Gotham to share notes with him.

Jim Gordon was pacing the rooftop of the MCU building which was an unusual thing since he used to do that a lot but at night not early morning. He looked at the bat signal that had remained unlit for a long time. His obscure ally after the incident in the Chickey’s factory had become even more unreachable. Batman had saved the children, had stopped Joker and his goons and since then kept a low profile – not that Gotham needed something more for the time being.

Certainly, Batman read the circumstances and adjusted to their needs and at the moment the city was quite calm with criminality rates that reminded other, normal cities. His ally during these months had contacted him via his cellphone. Yet Jim had an odd gut feeling concerning the city’s protector; and he had the boy’s testimony. Dick Grayson was also held hostage by the Joker and according to his sayings Batman saved him both from the jester and the fire – along with a strange woman because as Dick said the last glimpse he had from Batman was of him under a lethal pile of debris from the collapsing building.

Dick was sure that Batman had been killed. Okay, the boy was distraught and shocked that night so maybe he had estimated wrongly. Also the fact that many witnesses said that they saw Batman after the incident and he had contacted Jim proved that the Dark Knight wasn’t killed. However that didn’t deny the possibility of him being licking the wounds the fire surely made to him.

So Jim was worried and couldn’t enjoy the miracle in Gotham’s criminality charts. He inhaled deeply: not that expected this to last forever without some aspiring crime lord making his move – Gotham still had some figures whose fame was ambiguous and burdened with suspicious: it wasn’t a matter of time before they decided to make the big move and claim the rule, forming a new underworld.

Jim even though there wasn’t any critical condition missed his allies: Harvey Dent and Batman. Robert Howard was a talented young lawyer and as much justice oriented as Harvey but still Jim would be glad to have the old DA back. Maybe if Garcia actually made that referendum about Dent’s return… And then Bruce Wayne: the young man had manifested with actions his support Gotham and the police but he was hurt badly from the League of Shadows to the point of being disabled… Would the tormented man have the strength and will to continue his active support? Or the new tragedy would break his admirable stance turning his interest more into the vast needs of himself? Even if the latter happened Jim could not blame the boy…

“That spotlight isn’t of much use lately…” Montoya’s voice burst suddenly but Jim by now was used to that and wasn’t startled.

He smirked – Batman taught him that. He turned to see both Montoya and Bullock.

“Peace melancholy, chief?” the young officer asked him.

“Unfortunately, lieutenant, peace doesn’t last much…”
Bullock nodded solemnly.

“We have to be always ready” the tough officer remarked.

Jim patted the shoulders of both.

“This is our job” Jim said and turned his head to the spotlight. “And I’m sure that someone else out there is thinking exactly the same thing…”

When Bruce entered the kitchen Tony was sipping his espresso and Alfred was refilling his plate with scrambled eggs. The tycoon from Malibu looked at his friend’s stare raising his eyebrows.

“What? You think I’m eating too much? It’s Al’s fault because usually I am an abstinent guy…” he pouted and turned his eyes upwards deep in thought; he shook his head “with food…” he clarified stressing the words. “It’s how I maintain that divinely beautiful sexy body!”

Bruce nodded smiling and took his place at the island in the middle of the huge kitchen room.

“Good morning, Tony!” he cocked an eyebrow to his friend who grimaced.

“Damn! I knew I forgot something… Good morning, little guy, but this Gotham weather doesn’t persuade of a good morning…” he sighed.

“If I may, Master Anthony, it is just a figure of speech and a wish…” Alfred smirked while serving breakfast to Bruce who brought his chair to the proper height to the bench.

Hero who was slurping his own breakfast turned his head to regard his master.

Tony regarded the butler under his arched eyebrows.

“I must add that to Jarvis’ repertoire of ‘sarcastic retorts to Stark’s clever comments’.”

Alfred shook his head affronted.

“Sarcastic, Master Anthony?”

“Clever comments?” Bruce chuckled, locking eyes with his friend.

“Et tu, Brute?” Tony sighed, mock hurt and Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“Now, that was a really clever comment but…a bit cliché” Tony opened his mouth to protest “Sorry, Tony, I just can’t stop myself from teasing you…”

Tony nodded.

“Yah, yah, yah…Poor Tony always being the punchbag…” he pouted but then laughed. “I love it when you tease me, buddy” he cocked an eyebrow “Batman definitely improves with my charming humor’s influence…”

Bruce took a spoonful of his cereals – he just couldn’t stand scrambled eggs for breakfast and coffee was forbidden because had a counter effect on his medication, so just milk, juice and toasted bread with honey.

“It’s nice having you around for breakfast, Tony.”
Tony gulped his food.

“Ah! Now I see why it seemed to you like a good morning…I’m glowing, baby!” he shook his head. “Poor Malibu will be facing a gloomy weather without me…”

Alfred huffed causing Tony’s innocent glance and shrugging and Bruce just sipped his milk.

“Actually, it’s a perfect sunshine day in Malibu, Tony…” Pepper’s voice came out of Tony’s phone: she had left a message to his StarkStel and Tony had set it in waiting mode to connect her immediately.

Tony crossed his arms and shook his head in disappointment.

“My other sycophant! Well, good morning, sunshine!”

“Good morning, Alfred, Bruce, Hero…, Tony…”

Tony leaned on the island towards Bruce.

“Lesson 1: this is what you get when you leave them some days without mind-blowing sex…” he mouthed to him stretching his eyebrows for emphasis, pointing at his own chest and Bruce almost choked in his food. “You get toppled to the bottom of the list with a kitten before you” he met Hero’s eyes “no offence, furry buddy…”

A hologram of Pepper scowling at him popped up from his StarkStel.

“Stop corrupting Bruce!” she grunted shaking her index finger and Tony turned towards her with a smug expression.

“These are life lessons from the best, Peps…”

She rolled her eyes.

“Anyway…I called to remind you of the meeting with the executives of the tech department.”

Tony crossed his arms and yanked his head.

“Ugh! I must give my lights again to those people…Com’ on, Peps…I prefer overlooking the last details of the Avengers’ Tower – you can’t expect everything from good, ol’ Tony, you slackers!”

Pepper was indifferent.

“Whatever… I’m sure you’d rather play with your LEGO but it’s about the StarkExpo so your presence is required.”

Tony ruffled his black locks bored crooking his mouth.

“Okay, I’ll be there. It’s nice Happy and the jet is here: it’s been days since I last made a grandiose, cocky entrance to Malibu” he narrowed his eyes seductively and kissed the air “be ready, babe: I’ll make up to you for those dry days.”

“Fuck you, Stark!” Pepper fumed and Bruce looked at Tony who smiled smugly and sighed.

“I truly hope so!”

She rolled her eyes.
“I’m sorry for the wild awakening, Bruce, and for the language, Alfred.”

“No problem, Miss Potts…” Alfred smiled handing Bruce his handful of pills.

“I hope I see all of you soon – I missed you” Pepper said looking at Bruce and Alfred. “Have a lovely day!”

“I bring out so powerful emotion to people!” Tony exclaimed when Pepper vanished and the call ended. “Sometimes I impress even myself and myself isn’t impressed by nobody else than Tony Star… wait! That doesn’t make any meaning, huh?”

Bruce laughed and swallowed his last pill. Tony smiled warmly and patted his friend’s shoulder.

“When I return from Malibu I want to know everything about your new tablet – sounds… adequate…” he said condescendingly.

Bruce snorted.

“Right… Also, I want to discuss about our info on the attack.”

Tony’s face got immediately serious and cloudy.

“I’ll call to cancel the meeting.”

Bruce shook his head.

“There’s no need; actually, I was thinking that evening will be better: I’d have finished my session with Matt, I’d have checked on some source of mine and Clark would be off work.”

Tony twisted his mouth and hugged his own upper arms.

“Baaah… He finally decided to grace us with a phone call?” his sarcasm was heavy as his raised eyebrow.

“He actually came here last night…” Bruce replied with steady voice unfazed by his friend’s animosity.

Tony nodded.

“I knew I should have put Kryptonite aerial fence around the grounds…”

Alfred cast him a neutral glance and took the empty plates from the island.

“C’me on, Tony… He admitted his fault and I know that it was my decision that made him upset and pissed – not that I’m making excuses for him…”

Tony jolted to his feet and leaned above his friend clutching the armrests of Bruce’s chair.

“I was pissed by your decision too, little guy, but I would never do that to you! Torment you with needless worry, agony and…” he lowered his tone because he always discerned so many emotions in Bruce’s eyes “sadness” he thought of Superman with Wonder Woman.

He stretched his body.

“He isn’t worthy of causing so much turmoil to you…”
Alfred was on the verge of saying something but decided that it was inappropriate to intervene.

“I make many mistakes, Tony, so I can’t hold a grudge against those who also make them…and Clark saved my life and I” he inhaled “love him so I can’t shove him out of my life for a misunderstanding…like I can’t lose you, Tony. It’s so wrong that I want to enjoy my loved ones’ presence?”

The older man ran his fingers through his hair.

“He is a lucky bastard!” he spat. “Don’t let him rest in that, kiddo” he shook his index finger warningly.

“He won’t, Tony.”

Tony sighed.

“I wish my lovers showed the same understanding…alas! ‘xcuse me now I have a flight to catch. Bruce, don’t get in full Batman mode…you promised that you won’t exhaust yourself and that goes for investigation too.”

Bruce grinned.

“Don’t worry, Tony: it’s just a visit.”

“It’s final! He has put a spell on you!”

Selina shook her head exasperated staring impatiently at the red light on the street. Bruce had called her to Wayne Tower to give him a ride with her mini cooper since he had sent his eye-catching and recognizable car with auto pilot back to the Manor luring along the raging crowd of reporters who had been besieging the grounds all night waiting him.

Which was exactly what Bruce wanted: he took his sleek car that all this time Tony looked into making the proper adjustments for mobility impaired person and headed to Wayne Tower taking them with him. His return to Gotham had already changed the vibe for the stable but constantly under attack Enterprises’ shares erasing all the rumors of his death. And now by visiting his father’s company he wanted to show that it remained his first priority despite his disability that wouldn’t keep him locked in.

As was expected, the reporters lingered outside the Tower waiting his departure hoping for a statement since for his entrance he used the underground parking evading them. However for the next part of his daily schedule he didn’t want their escort.

Bruce looked at her.

“My friends deserve some understanding and patience from me, don’t you think?”

But she shook his head and cast him a glance.

“He isn’t a friend: he is a L-O-V-E-R: and that is different! Oh! You need intense lessons…” the car moved as the light became green.

Bruce turned to look out from the passenger’s window: the doubt that maybe he hadn’t handled it right and the dream were fighting with the relief and pleasure of last night.
“He needed to suffer a bit more, kiddo – don’t fall for his puppy, gorgeous eyes: it’s the same ol’ dirty trick of men!”

“He was already in suffering, Sel; he apologized…”

She huffed and sniggered at the same time.

“You need to dog him a bit to realize your value…”

Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“You think that he doesn’t?”

Selina turned and looked at him sighing.

“I can’t answer that with certainty but boys are…boys: they get easily impressed by new toys even if their old one is gold with diamonds – they have it in their possession now, they have it secured so they wander around playing with other toys.”

Bruce closed his eyes; though there was no real comparison, Falcone was using him every night and after locking him up, he was sleeping with women who occasionally gained his interest and desire. But he always returned to him, his possession…

“I killed Thomas an’ Martha Wayne an’ spared ya in order to have my livin’ trophy to keep my triumph fresh!” Falcone’s voice taunted him.

He shuddered: no, Clark couldn’t be like that. Clark loved him. But then…he didn’t know anything about these complex things.

“Do you believe that Clark sees me like…a trophy?” his hairs stood on end: perhaps what kept Clark so passionate with him was his resistance and now that he had him on his bed, had begun losing interest?

Selina saw her friend’s agitation and it was easy to understand and feel for him: he just came out of a near death experience, his first love disappeared for two days making an appearance with a woman who unashamedly claimed him; and after all this agony, his lover comes back apologizing making Bruce relieved and happy only for her to come and fill him with doubts.

“If he thinks like this is a big asshole” she exhaled. “You’re nobody’s trophy – I think Clark knows that and didn’t act like this due to arrogance… we’ll see…For the time being enjoy the good time he offers you” she cocked her eyebrows. “You’re too clever to grasp anything off and act accordingly.”

Bruce’s eyes were unreadable and Selina patted his shoulder.

“You did right to act as your instinct told you: if he misinterpreted your love for weakness, the worse for him! But we know he loves you, right? So no regrets, Bruce!”

He smiled to her.

“No regrets, Sel!”

The apartment building they were looking for emerged to the end of the street: it was a luxurious skyscraper which conveniently had an underground parking – not that Selina’s car was a target for his reporter-chasers but if someone saw Bruce coming out, would possibly notify the hungry reporters.
Selina stopped the car and hurried to bring Bruce’s chair for her friend to easily slip in.

It was a rather modern building so the wide elevator wasn’t really a surprise but a great convenience for both.

“I had the certainty that he would have picked a loft…” Bruce said to his friend as the screen indicated the passing floors with red numbers.

“Yeah…More discretion and quiet, especially when you own the entire floor…”

Since the top floor of the building was occupied only by one loft Bruce had no hesitation to guide his chair only with his brain waves. He stopped before the plain but reinforced door – he couldn’t help it remembering his first meeting with Ra’s Al Ghul when Chill stopped him before an equally pricy door and threatened him to be completely obedient to his second master.

“Are you alright?” Selina grasped his hand; her friend had coped wonderfully with the long flight but those last days had exhausted him and she had her eyes open for any sign.

Bruce raised his head to see her face and smiled reassuringly.

“Perfect…”

Selina’s hand was ready to press the small screen which served as a doorbell but the door opened.

“I was expecting you…”
Crane had just ended another boring session with Dr. Finley, his inadequate psychiatrist, and breathed satisfied once out of his office. He walked the linoleum corridor escorted by an orderly that wasn’t Ted – Jonathan advised Ted to not ask to be his orderly in order to not raise any suspicions about Ted’s preferential treatment and loyalty to his former employer.

He sniffed at his orderly and followed him to the common room because it was still early for lunch. Jonathan now that his chore with Dr. Finley was over could let his pleasant mood return: it was a nice day because he was to have a day off from Joker’s bullying stupidity.

However that changed the moment he put his foot in the vast common room that thanks to Wayne’s generous donation was extremely and impressively renovated after Crane’s sharp downfall; he heard the appalling giggle of the jester. Jonathan’s upper lip twitched nervously from frustration and his eyes went blank.

Joker crossed hopping the space and hugged the skinny doctor under the orderly’s frown: Dr. Quinzel assured them that Joker was harmless after the previous day’s breakdown but they had to keep their eyes open just in case. Well, the orderly did keep his eyes open and was sorry for that because the jester planted a loud kiss on Crane’s cheek.

Jonathan felt as if a slug had just crawled on his skin and for the first time experienced a slight sympathy for Bruce Wayne.

“The duuude I wanted to seeeeeeee!” Joker cheered patting Crane’s shoulder and the same moment turned completely serious to address the orderly. “Can’t you see we need some uuuum priva—cy here? King Kong? UHAUHAUHAHAHAA!”

The sturdy orderly thought of a few ‘compliments’ for the jester but first the head’s soft spot on him and second Joker’s fame kept his mouth shut. He didn’t want to be sacked neither to be targeted by the lunatic: Mark might not be a genius but he definitely could read the malice in that man even now and he doubted that the Asylum would hold him for much longer. So he walked away to his colleagues – he had done his job after all.

Joker wrapped his arm around Crane’s shoulder and led them to the interior of the room.

“You shouldn’t be here!” Crane hissed as Scarecrow surfaced.

Joker scratched his head and tilted his head.

“I see we’re nooooot a—lone, huh? Any—way: youuur best buddy is my buddy too…” he knitted his eyebrows in despair “Aaaaand where else could the pooor Jocker beeeee?”

Crane’s eyes narrowed to slits and flashed.

“To isolation: you almost killed a man! This Quinzel is an idiot!” he growled in a low voice.

Joker pouted and shook his head.

“Weeeel, I wouldn’t disagree with that…Buuuut I think you’re jealous of the preference the blondie shows to me – sorry, Johnny boy, but I’m the hunk here!” he gestured to his orange clad body “as you can see! HEHEHE!”
Crane rolled his eyes and sank to the sofa forced to follow Joker’s abrupt descent.

“We’ve got to talk” Joker’s voice was strictly business as his eyes.

“’Bout Wayne again?” he answered almost yawning and Joker giggled.

But then Jonathan caught with the corner of his eyes the huge flat TV on the wall and his lower lip curled in disbelief: it played cartoon which was unusual: they were always watching the typical TV program.

Joker followed his stare and cackled.

“I loooove Bugs Bunny! And the program suits the place: “The Looney Tunes” – HEHEHEHE!” he stopped laughing and stabbed Crane with his sharp gaze. “Harlequin thinks that seeing news ‘bout Brucie drives me mmm…” he shook his head “crazy and decided that from now ooooon we should watch only programs that are pure and without violence…HEHEHEHE!”

Crane snorted.

“Yeah…As if you needed Wayne to drive you crazy…”

Joker’s laughter was like hiccup and gave a strong pat in Crane’s back.

“Exactly! You haaaad me down cold” he widened his eyes mock impressed. “W—ow! You could be a shrink!”

“What do you want, Joker?” the former doctor demanded without any mood.

Joker licked his lips and his whole expression was of a hungry wolf.

“I have had enough of this place” he said in his most nasal, menacing voice “not enough stimulation, you know… Aaaand now that Brucie is baaaaack…” he winked grinning slyly “I’m sick of my paaaalm…” he twitched his hand nervously.

Crane’s eyes filled with contempt and he shook his head.

“You can’t leave: everyone knows about Stark’s unbreakable cell.”

Joker hiccups-laughed.

“And you learnt yesterday the hard way what you get when misbehave.”

Now Joker became serious and came closer to the former doctor.

“I could kill you right now without Stark’s system feels anything… What happened yesterday was a…” his eyes sparkled coldly as they fixed on Lu who bore gauze on his neck where Joker’s teeth had sunk “mistake. Not that I didn’t enjoy the ex--perience…”

“Wayne indeed drove you out of control” Jonathan sneered. “You murder people without any of the physiological changes that signalize violence to the normal people: for you violence and murder is what for normal people is eating or drinking. The only one who can ruin that for you is Wayne: he stirs things in you making the connected with him murder arousing enough to change your vitals.”

Joker raised his index finger smacking his lips.

“That’s… NONE of your business!” he hissed. “Aaaaand if I want an analysis I have myyyyy Harlequin or my god-therapist” he giggled. “A god visited me last night…Be jealous!”

Crane’s lips crooked in disgust.

“Your drugs need changing…”

Joker was actually satisfied that Crane believed that he had hallucinations.

“Back to ooooor topic…I’m out of here…”

“What if I tell everything to your stupid doctor?”

“HEHE!” he tilted his head staring at him interested. “You won’t doooooo that: first, because the next day you’ll be deeeead – I might be in isolation but my goons won’t. Aaaaand second, you don’t want to miss the chance to be free aaaand…practice your ehmmmm…science” he winked.

Jonathan frowned.

“If you count on my contribution to your escape” he shook his head sniggering “I’m sorry to disappoint.”

Joker tilted his head to the side.

“Nah… I’m not thaaaaat crazy! Buuuut I always get my goooood buddies along and youuuu areeeeee…” he made a pause for Crane to complete the sentence but when his fellow inmate didn’t say anything, rolled his eyes exasperated “myyyyy best BUDDYYYYYY!”

Jonathan smirked and his eyes narrowed.

“You need my expertise in concoctions…toxins and gases” he shook his head. “So what’s the plan?”

Joker turned his eyes on the ceiling, licking his lips impatiently.

“Dooooo I look like a maaaaan of plans?”

Crane snorted.

“Absolutely…” his voice was snarky.

The jester looked him in the eye.

“I take it back that you could be a shrink…Meeeeme planning? Bitch Pppppplease! I love improvisation aaaaand I have my caaaaast available” he opened his arms to hug the common room that was occupied by various members of his gang.

Of course… Jonathan thought: those stupid doctors brought Joker’s thugs near him. Anyway, it wasn’t his problem; on the contrary, he could benefit from this.

“And how far you think you’ll go with Stark having whatever in you monitoring your vitals? You might be able to trick it into killing people without being knocked out but certainly Stark can use it to track you or immobilize you without the need of your vitals triggering.”

Joker nodded enthusiastic.

“Hehehe! I’m a man of positive thinking…aaand I told you I’ve got myyyyy personal god…”
The former psychiatrist rolled his eyes snorting.

“Aaaand then you, my Johnny, enter the staaaaage…”

Crane frowned.

“I thought you want me to make my thing to your…wife.”

Joker pressed his lips.

“Hm… I don’t like the sound of it…Next time rephrase it…if you want your carotid! Well, that’s bonus: I bet you craaaaave to beat Stark on his thing – you brag to be a genius, rrrright? So here’s your chance to prove it…I don’t know…” he scratched his head “maybe a deodorant forming a clooooud blocking the signals?”

Crane regarded him through half closed eyes: really Joker believed that could manipulate him?

“I’m a prisoner here” he snapped irritated but always whispering “I don’t have any of the materials I need and my expertise is psychopharmacology not Stark’s mambo-jumbo.”

Joker patted his back and blinked.

“Oh! C’me on…Don’t be modest…you caaaaan’t act, after all. I’m sure you’ll find a way… or else…”

Crane grunted.

“Can you stop doing this? I don’t like threats!”

“Hehe! I think you won’t like more how these threats become acts.”

“Even if you manage to escape and we blind Stark’s system they’ll find you sooner or later because they’d know you’ll head for Wayne. He has a bunch of fucking super-heroes protect him…”

Joker arched his eyebrows and stuck his tongue out.

“Super-heroes are over--rated…Aaaand I told you I have my priiiiivate god…” he inclined his head squinting. “Dooooon’t know…perhaps he’s my deus ex machine…HEHE…Doooo you knoooow what that is?”

The former doctor rolled his eyes exasperated.

“You’re nuts…”

Joker licked his lips and popped his index finger.

“Noooooo, actually I’m pea-nuts!”

Crane shrugged.

“Whatsoever…” he replied completely bored. “But when they bust you I’ll tell I was your hostage.”

Joker giggled and poked Crane’s chest with his finger a bit too strong causing the doctor to support on the sofa’s back.

“Aren’t you always?” he sighed. “The thing is that noooo--body believes you! Hehehe!” he planted another kiss to Jonathan’s cheek and hopped away to his thugs.

The loft was spacious and bright with a whole wall window overlooking Gotham’s skyline. From the first glance it was obvious that the philosophy of its owner was ‘less is more’. The space wasn’t divided with interior walls but for a folding screen with Chinese designs that concealed the owner’s plain bed; the lounge toned in black and white covered the front space whereas in the center stood a twirled stair that led to the attic.

The lounge was as plain as possible with a white corner sofa, two assorted armchairs and a rectangular black waist table. There weren’t any lamps apart from surface or secret lighting. A few pots completed the minimal decoration that screamed that this was a temporary accommodation for its owner so nothing personal was to be found.

Exactly, as Selina remembered it; her head craned following the twirl of the stair that led to the attic that was actually a vast training room.

“Master Ubu…” Bruce inclined his head courteously as soon as their host closed the door.

His former trainer brought his glued palms before his face and bowed.

“Bruce…” he replied with his regret for his past actions shadowing his solemn voice.

Selina cleared her throat: she was clenching her hips and her lips were slightly upturned as her eyebrow. Ubu looked at her.

“I hope you don’t expect me to call you ‘master’, as well, huh, Greg?”

Ubu smiled in a most unusual way for him and shook hands with her.

“Selina, I see I was right about you.”

She tilted her head to the side and snorted.

“This is meant to be a compliment?” she asked slyly and strutted inside.

“No, child, merely the truth. But do come in” he gestured to the lounge.

Selina tilted her head towards Ubu smirking since she was already inside.

“And…You’re not the change type, huh?” she remarked looking around.

“She’s make yourself at home.”

He left them heading to the shining, modern kitchen and Selina made a spectacular dive into the armchair to Bruce’s surprised stare.

“This is my favorite armchair, sweetie… That leather…Mmm…”

Ubu returned with a tray bearing an ancient and expensive looking teapot with the match pottery which Selina with her professional experience could easily tell that it was an authentic Satsuma.

The former Leaguer served them the tea that was nothing like the usual and Bruce stare at it hesitant – he knew that now Ubu was trustworthy but the past experiences with Ubu’s brews held a powerful influence; his body tensed involuntarily. Yet in the end he took the cap and sipped under his trainer’s penetrative eyes that read his initial hesitance and smiled with his final vote of confidence.

Selina sipped too – she had heard Bruce’s recount of the times Ubu had given him strange brews to serve Ra’s purposes but now the man had redeemed himself to Bruce. Because for her it was more difficult to forgive anyone that hurt Bruce.

“Well, tea is not my cup of tea but this is nice…” she shrugged. “10 grand…” she brushed her cup “for the whole set with the right buyer.”

Bruce chuckled and Ubu cocked an eyebrow.

“A modest estimation for the original pottery the prince Shimazu used for his tea ceremony…”

Bruce cast a sideways look at his friend and chuckled again at her bulged eyes.

“I hope your chair has secret pockets because I have some stuff to stash…” Selina winked to Bruce.

Ubu gazed at them both with deep affection and admiration.

“Brother and sister indeed… A bond stronger than any blood kinship…” he uttered and his eyes shone. “Ra’s made one more mistake by underestimating that bond and its power.”

Bruce looked at him.

“But you knew…”

Ubu stood up and approached Selina locking their eyes.

“A little girl so brave to defy the rules of the orphanage and roam a dangerous city; and so affectionate, so loyal to a battered boy that never stopped going to him every night to offer him her love the only solace he had to keep him alive.”

Selina coughed uncomfortable.

“You exaggerate…” she said trying to clear her voice from the huskiness.

“He doesn’t…” Bruce cupped her hand and gave her a tight smile.

Ubu walked to him and kneeled. He placed his hands over Bruce’s knees.

“There is still much life and vigor here, child” he stilled his eyes in Bruce’s. “That waits to be awoken – it’s another test for your spirit and you’ll make it again…”

Selina huffed.

“As if he didn’t have enough tests already…”

Bruce looked her sideways and she shrugged innocently.

“What?”

Ubu placed his hand on the top of Bruce’s head and closed his eyes murmuring some strange incantation; Bruce felt the same peace and tranquility, the waves of pleasant and clearing numbness, as the days he was still a frightened child faced with the challenges of a hard training and Ra’s’ demands.
After a few minutes of silence Ubu slightly frowned, rose and returned to his armchair: the pain he felt in Bruce always shocked him like the first time but now he could sense also the tension from something that occupied the youth’s mind. Bruce needed another couple of seconds before overcoming Ubu’s effect and turning to his old master.

“You said that you were expecting us.”

Ubu nodded.

“Dr. Thompkins treated me like an old friend, taking extra care for my recuperation…as if I had done the same for the lost child of her friends despite the fact she knew that I didn’t: I found the courage to do the right thing only in the end.”

“Weren’t for you I wouldn’t have found Bruce and a safe way for us to get away” Selina interrupted him.

Bruce nodded.

“Young contribution was crucial – you stood up against Talia for my sake and you almost got killed. You gave me back the Knife and the brew that strengthened me.”

Ubu shook his head.

“It was you two that made it” he said with softly closed eyes like he was meditating. “You fought Talia and stood up against the demon…”

“Bruce saved us all…” Selina remarked and Bruce cast a glare at her. “One super powered alien, one high tech armored superhero and a fucking Norwegian God were subdued by that Bagdana guy and Bruce managed to stab him in the back and send him to his shithole.”

“Can Bagdana escape his prison?” Bruce found the chance to ask something that bothered him all this time. “Thor reassured me that he was trapped in Tartarus but I was wondering…”

Ubu was regarding him with awe that made Bruce feel uncomfortable.

“The Knife’s blow left him heavily injured, stripped from his power. Thus, only a powerful deity would be able to free him and I don’t think that there is someone willing to help an ancient demon.”

Bruce nodded somewhat relieved.

“You asked me something” Ubu continued setting his palms on his knees. “After I was fully healed I decided to remain in Gotham waiting your return; I knew that you would want to speak to me.”

“Leslie told me that you were constantly asking her and Tony about my condition.”

His former trainer’s deep brown eyes focused on his student.

“Thanks to Mr. Stark’s immediate intervention my life was saved and I woke up soon. Your friend thought that it would be best if I was transferred to Gotham under Dr. Thompkins’s care and confidentiality. I heard about the events in that old factory where Batman saved the children…” his eyes shone. “Ra’s Al Ghul would have been awestruck and delighted hearing what his dream student managed to do with his injured, paralyzed body… Yet I knew that your life was almost the price…” he paused for a second. “This kind of agony was first known to me” Ubu said hesitantly “I dreaded the demise of the one who was so generous to forgive me… Then Dr. Thompkins informed me that you came around but you’d have to stay far from Gotham to recover. I stayed here waiting and praying till yesterday Gotham echoed with the news of your return and I knew that soon you’ll come.”

Bruce sipped again from his tea that was really revitalizing and relaxing. Ubu opened his palms in front of him.

“You can tell me what is bothering you.”

“Four days ago I was attacked” he said without further ado, his voice cool.

Ubu’s calm face turned into stone and he shook his head.

“They won’t give you a break…” his voice was dark.

Selina huffed.

“No, they won’t!”

Bruce’s eyes were fixed on his old mentor who waited for him to speak.

“Master Ubu, do you think that the League could be behind this attack?”

Ubu stretched his neck thoughtful.

“After the complete defeat you and your allies succeeded against them only four months ago?” his eyes locked with Bruce’s. “Do you believe that Talia survived and ordered that although her army is smashed?”

“Talia wasn’t found, Master Ubu: dead or alive. And Ra’s’ mummy was gone as well as… the painting with my portrait.”

Selina’s eyes widened and her head snapped.

“What mummy? What painting? You didn’t mention anything!”

Bruce licked his lips.

“After Crane’s experimentation, the multiple head injuries and one month in coma, my memory had many gaps: these things came back slowly. Talia had preserved her father mummified…”

Selina’s eyebrows twitched and she snorted.

“The bitch was more pervert than her father!” she cast a sideways glance to Ubu “for nice people you were working…” she said dryly and Bruce looked her and coughed.

“…Anyway… Ra’s had in his position the same painting you, Selina, have: he had ordered the painter who made my portrait for Falcone to make a copy for him” Selina rolled her eyes. “Talia inherited that. After the events in Mt. Marcy, the mummy and the painting was nowhere to be found.”

Ubu’s eyes were interested and thoughtful.

“You want her to be alive” Bruce said in an understanding, calm voice and Ubu seemed shaken. “I don’t blame you, Master Ubu, neither feel I betrayed…”

Selina on the other hand frowned and crossed her arms and legs affronted.
“I am!” she stabbed Ubu with her eyes and Bruce tilted his head towards her asking with his eyes to calm down. “What?! She almost killed you” Selina showed with her hand Ubu “she would have killed me deviously stabbing me in the back if Bruce hadn’t exceeded himself into dueling with her…”

Ubu looked at Bruce impressed.

“You managed to stand against and stop the Lady of the Shadows while you were paralyzed?” his awe was so great that he didn’t utter anything else.

“Of course he did!” Selina exclaimed. “By the way, this is what you’re teaching to your students? To stab their opponent in the back while the said opponent fights a dozen ninjas?! Not to mention what she did to Bruce while her captive…”

Ubu lowered his eyes; he knew what Talia had done to Bruce…

“Forgive me sometimes emotion betrays my reason…”

Bruce shook his head and found Ubu’s eyes.

“I feel for you, master Ubu…” Selina snorted remembering how easily Bruce let Superman go: of course you do… “You knew her since she was born; you taught her for years since her childhood; you knew her before her father’s ideas corrupted her. It’s natural to love her even now.”

The older man’s eyes however were adamant.

“I want her to be alive only to realize the wrong path she and her father followed and return to the initial values of justice and charity” his voice hardened. “If her survival is to be connected with the same crimes and atrocities, then I pray that she died so her spirit might find the truth in other worlds and innocents be spared by her wrath.”

The former mentor’s eyes for a minute became blank and then refocused on Bruce who waited patiently.

“Your attackers were members of the League?” he asked.

Selina twitched her lips remembering the flying, green creatures: no, they didn’t seem like Leaguers at all. However, she was curious to listen to Bruce; because if he suspected the League behind this then there were solid reasons.

“No, definitely, not” Bruce said and Ubu frowned. “They were green flying creatures with thousands of needle-thin, sharp teeth covering their jaws, nostrils emanating steam, perfectly able to handle weapons.”

Selina grimaced in disgust.

“Hearing it is worse than facing it!” she snorted.

“Master Ubu, the analysis of their remains showed that they weren’t of this planet: probably, extraterrestrial or…” he stared intensely in his mentor’s eyes “product of illegal experimentation.”

Ubu united his palms and brought his chin over the fingers, his eyes on Bruce.

“You suspect that the League is the one who conducted those experiments and has such soldiers ready to fight for its causes. Despite the fact that every hideout of the League was found and destroyed along with the secret weapons the League possessed. Did your friends discover either in the League’s or S.H.I.E.L.D.’s premises traces that indicate such experimentation?”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, but the base in Mt. Marcy was Ra’s secret known only to his daughter – there’s nothing to make me cross out the possibility of other such places…or” he arched his eyebrows “projects.”

Ubu blinked.

“Continue, Bruce.”

The younger man pressed his lips.

“Talia told me of her plans to summon Bagdana and offer me again to him.”

Selina growled and Ubu nodded.

“She told that to me as well” he shook his head “I tried to talk her out of that but she was already too arrogant and thrilled of the prospects to listen.”

“Her intention” Bruce continued struggling with the memories of that moment and the boiling emotions “was to create a powerful army of beings created by the mixed DNA of me and Bagdana.”

“But she was stopped” Ubu remarked arcing an eyebrow.

Bruce nodded.

“What if she took that idea from her father? What if Ra’s had already done that and preserved the products in locations that only he and his heir knew? My body had absorbed Bagdana’s semen both times.”

A crease formed in Ubu’s forehead.

“Holly shit!” Selina exclaimed and to the absence of anything stronger gulped the content of her cup at once. “Shit! I need something stronger!” she turned to Bruce feeling her hair standing on end. “Both times?!” she quirked her eyebrows – she knew about the first time the demon raped her friend but a second?

Ubu didn’t say anything though he knew and Bruce took her hand.

“Aftter what happened in Ra’s basement, Bagdana used me again in Dolcetto” his voice was completely calm and that calmness pained more the young woman. “Falcone was going to punish me for my…adultery but someone left in the checkroom the payment for my services” his tone now was ironic. “An ancient looking pouch with rubies that Falcone said that couldn’t be found anywhere…”

Selina closed her eyes and her head fell towards her chest; Bruce caressed her hair.

“I’m sorry, Sel…” he pecked her cheek feeling moisture.

“You never told me…” she protested, making her cracked voice tough.

“He couldn’t have told you, Selina, because we were giving him the Oblivion Serum: Ra’s Al Ghul didn’t want Bruce upset from the memories both of his sacrifice and of the demon’s second claim and ordered me to give him the serum and use the repellants that would keep the demon away. Bruce was able to remember through flashbacks only after other traumatic experiences stirred the memories."

Bruce cupped Selina’s cheek and smiled.

“It’s okay, pretty…” he said and locked eyes with her in silence for few moments.

Selina filled again her cup: actually, this beverage was good for strengthening her nerves.

“All in all, Master Ubu, could Ra’s have done that? I mean do you know if he had the knowledge to do that?”

Ubu was deep in thought.

“He never spoke to me about anything like this, child…” he shook his head.

“I remember vaguely strange people along with you treating my body…”

Ubu felt the sting of remorse.

“I participated in the process of turning your body into a special Kryptonite; I applied substances and medicines to strengthen your body and compensate for the years of malnutrition; but I never extracted DNA from your body.”

Bruce nodded.

“What about the others? My memory still has gaps…You were always with them during my treatment?”

Ubu rubbed the center of his forehead and shook his head in denial. He expected that discussion to be hard but still remembering and counting his indifference to the boy’s suffering was more painful than the bullet Talia shot to his chest.

“No…No, child” he inhaled deeply. “I wasn’t always there and I don’t know what they were doing to you: Ra’s was rather secretive about you and I…it felt better to not know the details…”

Selina yanked her head and huffed.

“Oh, Greg!” she exclaimed exasperated. “I mean Ubu…” she slapped her thighs frustrated. “At least we can find these motherfuckers and make them speak!”

But Bruce wasn’t so enthusiastic keeping his eyes fixed on Ubu who closed his eyes.

“I’m afraid the healers who were appointed with your care…”

“…are dead!” Bruce finished his sentence for him.

“How convenient!” Selina grunted.

Bruce took another sip from his cup.

“So the question remains” he said unfazed: “did Ra’s have the knowledge to create such beings taking samples from my body? You already had the knowledge to summon a demon.”

Ubu took in the youth’s intense, undefeated stare.

“Personally, I never sought the knowledge to create life forms – hybrids of human and demon.”
Selina supported her elbows to her thighs and leaned towards Ubu.

“But that kind of knowledge exists?” her voice was filled with agony but Bruce’s eyes were determined to accept whichever answer.

Ubu closed his eyes; he didn’t like to speak about these things yet if it was of any help to Bruce and Selina…

“Humans had always the insane tendency to mess with things that surpass them…and Ra’s wasn’t an exception. But I can’t tell for sure…”

Selina raised her palms.

“Wait! Those creatures were ugly – I mean, malformed. If they were made by Bruce’s genes…” she chuckled. “Bruce is absolutely beautiful – even if that demon is…” she shook her head “a demon, Bruce’s beauty should have given them a…normalcy in appearance?”

“Selina, this isn’t a science” Bruce replied. “I’m sure it’d be more of an experiment than a certified procedure so many things could have gone awry or differently than they had expected.”

Ubu nodded.

“On the other hand, searching for Lilith and Bagdana I found legends about babies being born from demon-human couplings” Bruce remarked.

His mentor shook his hand.

“After normal copulation, fertilization and normal pregnancy in a female womb; so, yes, the attempt to use extract of your body to create hybrids could lead to malformed or bizarre life forms, or…” he jerked his eyebrows “with the features their creator wanted – if, of course, we accept that he had the know-how.”

Selina rubbed her chin.

“I fought them…and I don’t think that these creatures have either the strength of a demon or the skills and cleverness of Bruce.”

“I pray for that” Ubu said.

Yet Bruce wasn’t soothed; something else was prickling his mind.

“Talia said that I didn’t need a womb to give her the army she dreamt.”

Ubu cupped Bruce’s hand.

“She failed on that: you need to reassure yourself. Besides you told me that analysis was conducted of these beings: if they were made from your DNA, don’t you think that you have found out?”

Bruce nodded.

“You have a point there; yet the samples I managed to collect from the scene of the attack” Selina rolled her eyes both amused and outraged on how Bruce evaded their attention to do that “were mingled with soil or wood – the creatures were blown up by Wonder Woman. Only the samples from my clothes were from the creatures in their normal form. So something might have missed the analysis or the other substances that constituted their material could have concealed my DNA…Master Ubu, did the League know about aliens’ existence in Earth other than Superman?” now that Ubu almost crossed out the possibility of the League having created such beings, he had to examine if Ra’s’ right hand knew about other aliens lurking the earth.

Ubu shook his head.

“You can find legends hinting such presence on Earth – Ra’s was interested and studied such myths. But other than that, no, the League of Shadows didn’t have concrete evidence of other aliens except the Kryptonian.”

Bruce brought his palm to rub his neck.

“And…How about…a child?” he finally told what concerned him all these days. “A child that came from me?”

“If Talia survived, after what she did to you, she does carry your semen…”

Bruce stabbed him with his dead still, flashing eyes.

“I don’t mean that… Forget the bizarre creatures that attacked me, forget the mindless beings used as soldiers: could Ra’s have produced a human child using my genes? I remember the glint in his eyes after he realized that my body had absorbed the demon’s seed; especially, when he told me that if I was a girl I’d have been with a baby. Maybe he proceeded on doing that after all?”

Selina’s breath was cut in her lungs and the crease in Ubu’s brow became deeper.

“You think that Ra’s had reached that level of corruption?”

Selina snorted.

“We’re talking about the man who strapped a kid on the floor and summoned a demon to…” she looked at Bruce “use him in order to gain his personal reward? Or the one who mutated the same boy’s body into turning him in a weapon to kill his enemy?”

Ubu lowered his eyes and shook his head.

“I guess he wouldn’t have hesitated to defile even more his precious acquisition for enhancing his power…”

Bruce licked his lips.

“When Ra’s summoned Bagdana, human cloning was already established with a flourishing tendency…” he pressed his lips and his eyes stabbed Ubu. “Is there a solid possibility that he created an embryo from my cells and his and …a child was…created? My child?”

“Gosh…” Selina whispered.

Ubu held Bruce’s gaze feeling the conflicting emotions burning the youth’s insides. He could see inside those eyes the hope that this hadn’t happened, the hope that Ubu could give him an absolute negation of this possibility; but simultaneously, Ubu could discern in his beloved student’s eyes the certainty that his former trainer couldn’t negate it.

“Unfortunately, I can’t deny that possibility, child” he said regretful but not wanting to deceive Bruce. “Actually…I remember him talking avidly about how great it’d be if you were a girl and you could give him a baby with his blood and yours, especially since your body had absorbed Bagdana’s genes – of course, in the end he was stressing out that the fact that you couldn’t be used merely for reproduction left you free for being trained to become his greatest warrior.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Bane was Talia’s spy on Ra’s – he could have informed her for Ra’s’ thoughts and inspired the same wish to her or she just sensed it. The fact remains that Ra’s had the idea and the desire and we know that when he wanted something nothing could stop him…” he bit his lip. “While I was searching the lists with what we have found till now from LexLabs, I came across some logs referring to experimentation on human cloning” he felt Selina’s bulged eyes piercing him “it was around the time Ra’s met me at Dolcetto and began training me – and when Bagdana’s summon happened: also, I know that Falcone was already working with Luthor so Ra’s could have learned about LexLabs’ cloning project and established his own partnership with him.”

“Have you found anything?” Selina asked.

Bruce shook his head.

“Despite the fact LexLabs had invested a huge budget in that project we still haven’t found any remains of it except some pretty vague logs which claimed that the embryos from that procedure died soon after but…with Luthor” he shook his head “you can’t be sure.”

Selina who was shocked but was keeping her cool nodded.

“Luthor buried the evidence and the results from the experiments he did for himself and Ra’s forced him to bury everything concerning his own business.”

“So…if that child truly was…born…he or she might be anywhere in the world…alone or…forced to be trained as…whatever they wanted…” Bruce added.

Ubu moved closer to his student; he squeezed his upper arms.

“Even if Ra’s tried to do that, it is quite possible that the unusual process failed or the embryo died at the early stages or the baby died soon due to anomalies. And if the child indeed survived Talia would have killed it, afraid that she/he would be her rival to Ra’s’ succession, much as she hated you and wanted your death.”

Bruce’s insides were clenched; since he woke up that morning everything that happened with Clark the previous night, the dream and now this conversation made the knot inside him bigger and pricklier.

“Maybe that was the reason Ra’s kept it under such secrecy” he arched his eyebrows “because he knew his daughter…”

Selina cleared her throat.

“Or the baby didn’t meet his expectations and disposed of it himself…” Bruce looked at him appalled and she shrugged. “The man was ruthless: if the result disappointed him he wouldn’t have an issue to get rid of it – I think that if he had your…” she hesitated to utter it “child in his hands he’d have used it as leverage to blackmail your complete submission. Even towards the end.”

Bruce was deep in thought and this “your child” had a complex impact on him. Both Al Ghul, father and daughter had exploited him, had used and robbed him, and now both of them might have in their possession literary and metaphorically a part of him to continue tormenting him.

He felt Selina’s soft touch on his shoulder – he must have been absorbed.
“Bruce?”

He pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Still I’d like to know the truth; know if somewhere in the planet exists a child – my child… somewhat – and find him or her to…ensure that his or her life won’t be like mine…Especially, if there were some abnormalities due to the process” he rubbed his right temple. “Perhaps Luthor has some answers; yet even if he gave them – which I highly doubt – we can’t be sure that he’ll tell the truth. And Bruce Wayne can’t be associated with this because Luthor would be even more suspicious of my real relationship with the League…” he bit his lip “and Batman is unavailable for the time being.”

“Listen to me, Bruce” Ubu told him in a soothing voice. “Now I saw you I can leave Gotham and return to the monastery in Nepal: I was thinking of training youth in the principles of humanity and justice. Once I go there, I’ll do everything in my power and use my connections to verify if such a child exists and if exists to find his/her whereabouts.”

Bruce lowered slightly his head and Ubu touched his chin yanking gently his head.

“If there is a child we’ll find it…”

Selina slipped next to her friend and hugged him. Bruce pressed his lips in a smile.

“The monastery is currently under S.H.I.E.L.D.’s control but I’ll speak to Tony and you will be able to settle there with the organization’s means and protection: if Talia is alive she’d definitely seek you to take revenge.”

Ubu’s stern mouth upturned.

“I’m more afraid of my conscience than Talia…” he touched his lips to Bruce’s forehead. “Your spirit is strong, child” his hand cupped the hidden diamond hanging from his neck and he smiled to Selina “and you have precious friends with you.”

“When the moon hits your eye
Like a big pizza pie, that's amore” Sinatra’s voice sang.

“Amore!” Tony’s singsong voice towered the workshop’s dull sounds of popping data on the various holographic screens and automatic screwdrivers.

“Master Anthony, I'm glad to discern your easygoing mood…” Jarvis remarked.

“But – I smell a but there – with one t: Jarvis, if you’re going to reproduce some snarky Alfred-ish comment about my singing talent drop it. You’re not an X-factor critic!” he rolled his eyes thoughtful “Critics my ass!”

“You have an incoming call from Mr. Lucius Fox.”

Tony rolled his hand.

“Shoot it.”

Lucius’ smiling face emerged on the screen in front of Tony – the one with no running data or designs on it.
“Good afternoon, Mr. Stark!”

“The same to you, Lucius; to what do I owe this pleasant surprise?”

“To Mr. Wayne.”

Tony pouted and frowned.

“I just sent you my latest attributions to Bruce’s spinal parts. I had a meeting here in Malibu and then some other obligations but tomorrow we’ll work them together.”

“Fine, Mr. Star. I’m studying them right now. It’s something else I want you to consider.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“I’m all ears.”

“About Mr. Wayne’s new suit.”

Tony twisted his mouth and huffed.

“I’m not Armani.”

Lucius laughed.

“Good one, Mr. Stark! But I’m sure you know what I mean.”

Tony drummed his fingers on his working bench.

“Actually, I don’t want to know… That brat talked you into it? You’re his mediator?” his voice became harsh. “This is suicide, Lucius! You can’t agree with that!” he abandoned his slack position and leaned toward the screen. “He is paraplegic, for fuck’s sake! A suit however good can’t enable him to act the hero of Gotham from all cities!”

Lucius nodded serious.

“And that’s why we have to make that suit perfect.”

Tony slapped his eyes with his palms and yanked his head backwards.

“I won’t allow my friend to be out there while he is disabled! And I can’t understand how you, who I know how much you care for him, have agreed to that!”

Lucius exhaled.

“Because, Mr. Stark, Mr. Wayne wouldn’t wait for anyone’s permission either yours or much lesser mine. Even if we don’t assist his effort he’ll proceed himself – and that would be more dangerous.”

Tony pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Have you seen his designs?” the older man asked calmly.

“Of course not! Because there’s no meaning in that! We should focus on the bionic parts and the surgery. And even after the surgery he’ll need time before he gets out there – if ever! So let’s drop it altogether!”

Lucius intertwined his fingers on the desk.
“He wants the suit so that Batman makes one or two appearances to erase any suspicion that it’s not the real Batman that patrols Gotham right now.”

“I don’t give a fucking damn! Bruce is more important than Batman or Gotham!”

“Gotham and Batman are parts of Mr. Wayne’s existence: you can’t just extract them. He’ll proceed with or without us and if we participate in his plans we’ll be able to control the conditions and set limits.”

“Limits to Bruce? Ha!”

“Your friend is a very mature young man. He managed to be Batman even under Falcone’s captivity in a way that no major injury betrayed him. Mr. Wayne reassured me that he’ll behave as cautiously as then. And… I told him that the spinal parts are almost done and he must be in perfect condition for the surgery so he definitely won’t risk his chance to walk again.”

“So… no suit then!” he jerked from his stool and clapped his hands. “If his worry is that the holograms will be debunked, then I can make a BatRobot to kick some asses.”

“Mr. Stark… You know that Mr. Wayne won’t agree to that.”

Tony pressed his lips stubbornly, crossed his arms and shook his head.

“Don’t care!” he arched his eyebrows. “He is a paraplegic – he can’t play punches with bad guys.”

Lucius blinked.

“Mr. Wayne is an extraordinary young man.”

Tony protruded his lower lip and nodded without looking at Lucius.

“I prefer him less extraordinary and more alive!” he almost whispered piercing the older man with his flashing black eyes. “And Gotham’s bad guys are dangerous lunatics, unpredicted.”

“At the moment Gotham enjoys a period of low criminality without any organized crime or major villains: that was the reason I agreed to that, Mr. Stark. And I’m sure that your friend took that into consideration. Batman needs to catch one or two low timers to secure that nobody will ever associate him with Bruce Wayne.”

“You’ll build him the suit even if I won’t agree.”

“I want you in that.”

“Why? You can manage perfectly.”

“Because Mr. Wayne wants you too; you’re too important for him and your participation even in a consulting role will boost his spirits. Mr. Stark, if we try to suppress him there’s the probability of triggering quite the opposite and worse result. Having an active role in that we can protect him.”

Tony shook his head and growled.

“I’ll think about it…”

“Thank you, Mr. Stark; I’ll send you Mr. Wayne’s designs.”

Tony turned his eyes to the ceiling.
“Jarvis, turn up the volume to Frankie and call Peps: I need some cuddling!”

From the moment the car engine ignited and they returned to the street, silence fell between them. Selina tightened her grip on the steering wheel because from the fleeting glances she cast to Bruce it was obvious that he was somewhere else and she dreaded that this somewhere might be all the times this pervert pedophile, Al Ghul, violated him. It was disgusting: a powerful man had a powerless, defenseless, hurt child at his mercy and he exploited and tortured it in every filthy way!

In front of her eyes, Chill raped again the 9 year old Bruce in the alley his parents’ were killed, the thug changing to become the lion-like man whom Bruce had considered his savior! Her hand fist ed on the steering wheel: Bruce didn’t deserve that… And the worse was that they still tortured her friend.

Bruce even though absorbed in his thoughts could discern the pressed breath of Selina. He realized that his silence made her worry.

“I’m a bit tired…” he turned his head to her and grinned.

Selina swallowed her feelings.

“I bet you are! I’ll drive you to the Manor and after a fine meal you’ll take a nice nap.”

“You’ll stay for lunch?”

She winked.

“I never say no to a free meal…And I’m curious about Alfred babysitting Hero…”

Bruce chuckled and rested his head on the seat’s headrest.

“I’m sure they are fine…”

Unwillingly Selina thought of Alfred and Bruce’s supposed child. She was hesitant to bring that up.

“Say it…” Bruce muttered playfully keeping his eyes closed.

“Alfred knows about your suspicions?”

“Of course not I don’t want to burden him or anyone else with a theory like this…I’d have spared you too but if I had told you to leave me alone with Ubu it’d have been worse.”

“And I’d have been mad!”

Bruce snorted.

“Exactly what I meant…”

Selina just couldn’t hold it inside anymore.

“Damn, Bruce! How could he have done that? What kind of a person he was?! I mean, I know he was a bastard but still…”

Bruce opened his eyes which remained blank.

“He snatched and squeezed everything I had to offer and still he wasn’t satisfied because he wanted my soul too…” his voice was emotionless. “I was thinking that the night of Falcone’s downfall, when Ra’s poisoned me and was about to take me away from Gotham, maybe he planned to get me to the place he had the child…Perhaps it would be better if he had succeeded because I might have freed that poor soul.”

Selina felt her eyes watering from the hidden emotion in Bruce’s voice.

“Don’t even think about that, Bruce! You know that if he had taken you then he’d have rendered you completely controlled by him and” she inhaled “even if this kid exists and he had taken you there, you wouldn’t be of any help for him or her.”

He nodded.

“You’re probably right.”

Selina pursed her lips.

“When you began thinking about this? You wanted the control of LexLabs to check this?”

Bruce yanked his head and sighed.

“No, this had nothing to do with gaining the labs’ control. The gun Joker used to smash the security windows of Wayne Tower was made by Luthor and he along with Dagget used Talia’s special Kryptonite to make an attempt against Superman. Of what I knew about Luthor and his rivalry with Superman I had the certainty that he had created in his labs many things to harm Clark.”

“So you wanted the labs to protect that ungrateful alien.”

Bruce’s lips twisted in a smile.

“In general, I wanted to check every shady project Luthor executed because he was collaborating not only with the League but also with other illegal groups so knowing what Luthor produced for them I would know those groups’ plans as well – and Luthor’s own intentions.”

The young woman whistled impressed.

“That must have hit Luthor close to the bone… And about the kid?”

“With Crane’s drugs and then the coma, as I told you, my memory was in a foggy state: I remembered the major things but some details were missing. When those strange beings attacked, I remembered the things Talia was telling me while in her captivity: about the army and of her planning to have children with me. And then I thought about the possibility of Ra’s having planned or executed the same thing so as I was searching the LexLabs’ logs for anything matching our attackers I kept my eyes open for other projects that might lead to creation of human beings.”

Selina didn’t say anything and kept her eyes straight ahead on the jammed street.

Bruce pouted: he could sense Selina’s turbulence from what she heard and he decided to lighten her mood. He intended to not reveal anything till Lucius told him that everything was ready to spare his friends from disappointment.

“Mmmm…Sel, I haven’t told you” he saw Selina bracing herself for another hideous thing and made sure that the red light was lit so the car wasn’t on the move “but Lucius informed me that the surgery might not take long…”
Selina’s eyes bulged and she gasped letting of the steering wheel. Her face was flashed when she turned her body to hug Bruce.

“You sadistic brat! Why you had to keep the good things secret?!” she punched his shoulder lightly.

“Because I wanted to spare you from a disappointment in case something changed…”

“You…dirtbag!” she gritted her teeth but was kissing him at the same time.

“It’s not like I’m walking and didn’t tell…”

Selina detached from him and growled.

“I’d have broken your cute nose then!”

Bruce chuckled as angry horns filled the street coupled with infuriated adjectives since the green light had been on and they were stopping the traffic.

“Move your ass, lady!”

“Get a room, you morons!”

Selina started the engine lazily, lowered the driver’s window and showed her middle finger.

“Fuck off, asshole!”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow and snorted.

“Some stealth…”

Selina looked at him with the corner of her eyes and twisted her lips.

“You caused it, buster!”

Bruce chuckled and turned his head to look outside the window; they were passing a school – Gotham County High School as the sign read. The building’s condition was good in comparison with other schools in Gotham and its yard was swarmed with kids making a beautiful fuss and Bruce found himself thinking about that supposed child: if he or she would be attending a school or have any contact with other kids – he estimated that if a baby came from Luthor’s and Ra’s’ experiments now it would be approximately at Dick’s age…

Wait… This was Dick Grayson’s school.

“Sel, can you slow down a bit?”

“Why?” she inquired lowering the speed.

Bruce moved in his seat to have a better view.

“It’s the school Dick Grayson attends.”

Selina cocked an eyebrow and crooked her lips.

“You’re much informed about that boy, huh? Do you want me to stop for you to say ‘hi’?”

Bruce blinked considering that for only a second because the answer was too easy for negotiating further but then he saw the boy coming out of the school’s yard door with Ms. Turner and his attention was drawn there.

“Here he is…” he suddenly remembered Selina’s suggestion and hastened to answer before his friend made a move to approach. “No… I wouldn’t do that – the boy hates me.”

Selina parked the car in a niche between two other cars at the other side of the street, opposite the school. She craned her head to see what Bruce was seeing.

“You almost died to save his life” she remarked dryly: the idea of someone hating Bruce was preposterous to her – especially when Bruce had done so much for him.

Bruce detached from the scene he was watching and turned to her.

“I’d have done the same for every kid in Gotham; and that doesn’t mean that he owes to like me – besides it was Batman who saved him; Bruce Wayne was the reason he was Joker’s hostage” his eyes focused again on the boy. “Because he had the misfortune his life to cross mine…”

Selina rolled her eyes and huffed.

“Don’t start the “because of me” thing! Joker did all these, not you… He took the boy to touch a sensitive spot. Have I told you how much I don’t like Joker suspecting Batman’s true identity?

Bruce smirked.

“Only a hundred times…” he arched his eyebrows. “And I don’t like it either but I hope that Bruce’s paraplegia would persuade him that’s not true.”

“Who’s that lady?”

“Dick’s grandmother, Ms. Turner: I didn’t know she was picking him up from school…”

Selina shrugged.

“Maybe some parents’ and guardians’ gathering. That explains the early dismissal.”

But Bruce’s eyes were glued on a figure at the opposite corner of the pavement they were parked: it was a well-built man, covered by the shadows however Bruce was able to discern that he was around 35 years with black hair.

“Selina, look there” he gestured with his head. “That guy has his eyes fixed on them…”

She frowned.

“Maybe he is a friend or some acquaintance.”

“And why he stays in the shadows watching?”

“You mean like us?” Selina snorted.

Bruce cast an amused glance at her and took out of his jacket’s breast pocket his smartphone that Selina knew it was his tablet that shrank to smartphone mode to fit in the pocket. With a brush of Bruce’s finger on the screen it turned into a camera and Bruce zoomed to take a shot of the stranger.

“The windscreen won’t distort the picture?”

“No” he replied as the clicks of the camera were heard. “It has a system that eliminates every source of distortion…”

She cocked an eyebrow.

“I feel like I’m in a James Bond movie!”

A crook smile curved Bruce’s cheek.

“I didn’t know you wanted to be a James Bond girl?” he asked playfully.

Selina rolled her eyes and snorted.

“Please, darling…” she dragged her words “I prefer my solo movie” Bruce chuckled. “Everyone knows that Bond girls are just pots…” she waved her hand dismissively and then frowned “do I look like a pot?”

“Nah…More like a jardinière…” he chuckled as Selina punched him softly on the shoulder, gritting her teeth but she ended up laughing. “You know you can be only THE Queen…”

Selina wrapped her arms around his neck and pecked his cheek.

“I so much want you to laugh…”

Bruce returned the kiss and patted her forearm.

“I know, dear, and thanks to you I manage…”

Selina’s eye fell on Dick and Ms. Turner entering the elder woman’s small car.

“At least, they’re in the car and…off.”

Bruce turned to see the car leaving.

“I’ll feel better if we escort them to their house…” he arched his eyebrows for emphasis “discreetly.”

Selina grabbed the steering wheel. Bruce raised his hand signalizing her to wait till the stranger got in his own car – he got a shot of the number plate since his memory was still recovering and they didn’t have the time for him to repeat the number many times since the car took a totally different direction than Ms. Turner’s.

“Now, we can go.”

“As you wish, Master Wayne!” she mimicked Alfred’s accented voice turning the engine on but once they were on the street again, cast a business like glance to Bruce. “Being a chauffeur wasn’t in the job description, mister” she said in a smart-ass way “so I want a raise…”

Bruce closed his eyes and smiled.

“With the next paycheck…Deal?” he offered her his hand and she shook it, all part of the game since it was obvious that the young woman didn’t meant it.

“Is he following them?” Selina asked fleetingly looking at the mirror.

“No, he isn’t but I’ll check on him.”

Ms. Turner old car got in the building’s parking.
“Aren’t you happy that your monthly grant allowed them to live in a building with interior parking?”

“Actually, the apartment is in Dick’s name.”

His eyes were scrutinizing the surroundings for the stalker’s car: he could have come from a different route. But there wasn’t any trace.

Selina drummed her fingers in the wheel: this had gone too far and Bruce needed some rest.

“Well, kiddo, time to get you home: Alfred will be worried.”

Bruce nodded keeping his stare at the building as the car turned towards the city’s exit to the Palisades.

“You’ll tell Alfred and the others?” she looked at him. “About the kid…I mean the possibility…”

He breathed heavily.

“No” he knew that he didn’t have to ask from Selina to keep it secret once he wouldn’t reveal it. “At the moment, there’s no reason to upset them for a slight possibility – they have enough to cope with.”
Alfred opened the main door for his young master. Selina had left Bruce on the front and drove the car to the garage: she was to stay hidden since the Manor had a guest.

The Englishman had called Bruce to warn him about a surprise visit and ask if he wanted for him to find a nice excuse to send away politely their guest. But Bruce would see their guest.

“She is waiting for you, sir” his butler said nonchalant. “I believe that it’d be much better if we arranged an appointment for another day; you need your rest.”

Bruce looked at him.

“I’m interested to listen to her and I’ll have my rest after – it won’t last much.”

“As you wish, Master Bruce.”

Alfred huffed and led the way to the grand salon. In front of the marble Victorian fireplace stood a young blond woman holding and staring interested the painting Billy had given to Bruce. As soon as she heard footsteps approaching she left the frame and hastened to meet Bruce.

“Harleen Quinzel, doctor.” she stretched her hand to Bruce for a handshake. “I’m the head psychiatrist of the Arkham Asylum.”

Bruce nodded solemnly and shook her hand. Of course, he didn’t need her introduction to recognize Joker’s psychiatrist: all this time he was being updated concerning the jester and the young head of the Arkham Asylum was a figure so familiar to him as if he knew her.

The long, blond hair tied in a plain ponytail, the square spectacles, the strange attire, though today she was wearing a business suit consisting of mahogany jacket and assorted knee-length skirt like she wanted to make an impression to him showing off her authority. He knew other things as well: her studies at Harvard University, her doctorates, her previous work with famous sociopaths.

“Pleased to meet you, Dr. Quinzel. Please, have a seat” he gestured to the sofa. “I see Alfred has already introduced you to his famous tea.”

She smiled and Bruce thought that along with her sweetness there was something awkward in her eyes.

“Oh, yes! Mr. Pennyworth” she stopped abruptly remembering the butler’s suggestion to call him by his first name “Alfred was extremely kind.”

“I’m obliged, Dr. Quinzel” Alfred replied with a slight bow. “If you’ll excuse me I have some things in the kitchen that require my attention.”

Bruce nodded and Alfred left them alone.

“I’m really glad to see you, Mr. Wayne: during your absence there were some nasty theories around.”

Bruce smiled.

“Yes, I’m well aware of that, Dr. Quinzel but” he shrugged “people like to make up stories” he shook his head “and my past predisposes for the grimier ones.”
She nodded.

“Unfortunately… Yet they were right about the severity of your injuries. I’m honestly sorry, Mr. Wayne.”

“It could have been worse, Dr. Quinzel, much worse.”

The young psychiatrist took her cup and sipped but Bruce could tell from the way her fingers brushed the porcelain cup that she was uncomfortable and hesitant about something. Probably for uttering the reason of her visit. Yet he pretended ignorance and bit one of the cupcakes Alfred had served to accompany the tea.

Harleen estimated her host behind her elegant glasses; she was trying to discern what had made her unique patient so infatuated with this man. Fine, he was beautiful above average and definitely he had an intriguing past that Joker trusted her enough to divulge that was much in common with his. However, she couldn’t deny that Mr. Wayne emanated a dynamic aura: strength, courage and bravery accompanied with vulnerability – maybe this combination intrigued Mr. J.

Yeah…Bruce Wayne was an interesting case, not as much interesting as Mr. J but definitely that made her idea even more appealing. Now she had to find a nice way to serve it…She remembered the small framed painting on the fireplace: the Waynes were squatting on both sides of their six or seven year old son kissing each of the boy’s cheeks.

“It’s a very beautiful painting” she said pointing there “the one that made it is very talented.”

Bruce stared at it and smiled.

“The artist’s name is Billy; he is one of the young adults that are housed in the Haven. I’m positive he’ll make a fine career.”

Harleen smiled cleverly which didn’t evade Bruce’s attention.

“You sound really proud of him.”

“Exactly as of every other boy and girl in the Haven…” he frowned internally remembering Billy and the other kids in the cage Joker had jailed them: a wave of white, burning rage travelled the healthy part of his spine.

Dr. Quinzel believed that she found what she was after.

“You’re an avid philanthropist; the horrors of your past didn’t manage to make you indifferent to other people’s pain neither willing to cause them pain.”

Bruce knew that the young psychiatrist wanted to say something from the first moment; also, he felt that she was laying the ground for delivering it in the best possible way.

“Thank you, Dr. Quinzel; the experiences of all these years made me determined to soothe the pain of people around me. But although I’m sure you were interested in my wellbeing” – well, not sure at all… - “and I do appreciate your kind words, there must be a more serious reason for the Asylum’s head to come and see me.”

The young woman smiled and pulled out her glasses.

“You’re smart, Mr. Wayne…” she cleaned her glasses with a handkerchief and put them on again.
“Not so much” he shrugged. “It’s a bit obvious, don’t you think?” he took another bite from his cupcake – he was really hungry.

She nodded and raised her index finger.

“You’re right! Well, you don’t know that but I’m the therapist of the man known as Joker” Bruce lowered his eyes, licked his lips nervously and made his breaths a bit pressed; he let his cupcake on the plate feeling the doctor’s eyes watching him intrigued.

“And what this has to do with me?” he asked abruptly but giving an almost indiscernible shaking to his voice.

Harleen left her place on the sofa and came to Bruce. Her eyes seemed truly worried.

“Are you alright? I didn’t want to upset you.”

“I’m fine” he said looking her in the eye. “Please, proceed” he was really interested to know.

She sat at the nearest armchair: Harleen honestly didn’t want to upset him in the middle of his recovery but her patient was a more urgent case. So she set her chin and locked eyes with him, every hesitation finally leaving her. It was a doctor after all.

“Mr. Wayne, you just said that you care to soothe the pain of every person around you.”

Bruce’s eyes were perplexed; he shrugged.

“As much as I can…But I don’t understand how…”

Dr. Quinzel interrupted him.

“My patient, Jack, is a human being too” her stare was strong in emphasis and Bruce frowned.

“His victims were human beings too” he arched his eyebrows “and also their loved ones that stayed behind to mourn” he remembered Ms. Turner at the Phelps’ funeral and Dick calling his little brother when the small casket lowered to the ground – Bruce’s eyes almost watered.

He shook his head to get a grip.

“Anyway, Joker is at the Asylum because justice sees him like a human being that needs reformation” he remarked.

She crossed her legs and leaned towards him, shaking her index finger.

“And this is the whole point, Mr. Wayne. All these months Mr. J’s, I mean Jack’s therapy is showing encouraging signs: the patient has exhibited trust towards me” her eyes shone proudly “and he even socializes with his fellow inmates without any incidents.”

Well, Bruce knew that already through Tony and Clark who kept an eye on Joker. However, he was curious what she wanted.

“I suppose this is good?”

“It’s great, actually and it manifests that there is hope for Jack to reform: you do want that, Mr. Wayne, right? You care about people.”

Bruce gulped on hearing about his kidnapper like a victim of abduction that was abused and almost raped by that man.

“I can’t see how this has anything to do with your patient.”

“Do you want to help the reformation of Jack, Mr. Wayne?” she demanded.

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I give funds to the Asylum so the inmates have the best life conditions and the most qualified therapists” he gestured to her. “But other than that” he shook his head in denial “I don’t think I can do anything else – I’m not a therapist.”

Harleen leaned more towards him and Bruce tensed sensing her urge to touch him. He took in how fervently her eyes shone – almost maniac.

“Mr. Wayne, I believe that you’re the key to Mr. J’s healing” Bruce felt unease hearing that ‘Mr. J’.

“Let me explain” she continued thrilled “during your absence Jack was calm – at least, for his standards -, he was socializing with the other inmates and moreover he developed a kind of friendship with Jonathan Crane” Bruce made a mental note – he didn’t like that. “All in all, he manifested a spectacular improvement until he saw your arrival in TV.”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“Maybe I should have stayed away?”

Harleen leaned to the back of the armchair.

“The moment he saw you disembarking the plane he attacked one of the inmates nearly tearing his neck: the poor man was saved thanks to Mr. Stark’s safety measures that knocked out Jack.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Is the man alright?”

She waved her hand almost indifferently.

“Yeah, Jack didn’t manage to hurt him lethally. What’s important…”

“More important than the injured man?” his eyebrows rose in disbelief.

Harleen flashed.

“I didn’t mean it that way: I meant more important in relation to our topic” he nodded. “From the instant Jack saw that you returned he lapsed: he manifested again Joker’s behavior – he stopped responding to treatment, trusting his therapist. It is like your return is the trigger to resurface Joker.”

Bruce’s eyes widened and he clenched his jaw.

“You claim that it’s my fault Joker is like that?” his voice was filled with disbelief and anger.

Harleen raised her palms appeasing shaking her head in denial.

“Please, Mr. Wayne, don’t get defensive…”

He stabbed her with his eyes.
“You say that I trigger Joker’s aggressive behavior!”

Harleen yanked her head: this man didn’t want to understand!

“Let’s face the facts: Falcone, the Phelps’ family, Jack Napier…” she folded a finger for each name. “All these murders have only one thing in common: you.”

Bruce felt his cheeks hot and his heart beating too heavily: he always had felt responsible for all these but hearing it coldly stated by someone else was like a blow. Besides, what she wanted to hint: that if he somehow stopped existing Joker would be harmless? He had hoped that science would have found some more legit explanation.

“The police said that Joker had begun killing people way before he came at Gotham!”

Harleen shook her head exasperated.

“Yes, but before he met you at Mr. Stark’s house he had maintained one normal persona: Jack Napier’* normal?* Bruce rolled his eyes remembering their first meeting. “It was his effort to keep an anchor to the society – a desperate struggle between Joker and Jack. But when he met you he stopped caring about Jack and Joker absorbed him entirely – he was unwilling to maintain an anchor to our world, he didn’t care to be normal. During the time of your absence Jack resurfaced and Joker almost vanished. It was your return that destroyed Jack and brought Joker back.”

Bruce couldn’t believe what he heard and his head began hurting: the first time he left the Fortress he was faced with migraines that the energy of the Fortress had kept at bay. Leslie managed gradually to eliminate them till now. He rubbed his temple.

Dr. Quinzel leaned again towards him, her face filled with sympathy.

“You care for people and you do wonders to help them” she gestured to the painting on the fireplace. “You’re proud of these kids and Joker kidnapped them to get to you.”

Bruce rubbed harder his aching head.

“He asked for Batman too…” he said dryly.

Harleen closed her eyes and sighed.

“Believe me if there was a way to conduct him I’d have asked his contribution too…” Bruce lolled his head on the side and regarded her. “What I’m trying to say, Mr. Wayne, is that if you really care for these kids and the people of Gotham in general, you’d want Joker’s therapy to be effective. What would be better than Jack getting out to the society reformed, repentant for his crimes and willing to offer to the others? Believe me, Mr. Wayne: prior to your return he manifested signs of regret.”

Bruce wanted to believe that but he had his doubts.

“So…” he inhaled “what do you want from me?”

She crossed her arms and took a breath.

“I want you to be part of Jack’s therapy.”

Bruce’s eyes widened in dread whereas inside he was enraged. Dr. Quinzel saw the terror and hastened to raise her palms reassuringly.

“You could come to the Asylum once a week for Jack’s session – it’d be something like a couple therapy” Bruce felt his hair standing on end at the craziness of this while Harleen was beaming for her brilliant idea.

“But we’re not a couple!” he protested exasperated.

The blond sighed.

“Of course not! However we have a situation that reminds that. For the time being, I keep Jack deprived of any stimulus that has to do with you so when your join sessions began the only exposition he’d get on you would be under controlled conditions and my guidance we will erase his obsession with you. Imagine our success, Mr. Wayne!” her eyes flashed fervently. “Imagine the relief for our society! The people will be safe and we will gain precious knowledge for other cases like Jack’s!”

Bruce’s eyes were blank but estimating the young therapist: it was obvious that she believed in her goal and was enthusiastic and really invested in Joker’s reformation which was great. Yet asking him to be in a session with Joker! He feared that Joker was manipulating her exploiting her good intentions; Joker was cunning.

He shook his head and licked his lips.

“I can’t do that! He…he forced me to…marry him…he almost raped me. He kills people!”

Harleen lolled her head on the side, hardly containing her frustration.

“We’ll take every safety measure – and your friend’s system is very effective. Mr. Wayne, I’m certain that with your participation Jack’s therapy will produce wonders. And it will help you as well. I mean, to reevaluate and get over the traumas Joker left you; also, if Jack stops being obsessed with you, you’ll be safe.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, Dr. Quinzel. How you’re sure that my presence there won’t feed his infatuation and increase his blood thirst?”

She smiled concealing her impatience resisting the urge to shake her feet nervously like a pendulum.

“Because we’ll have medication and I will be there controlling the situation – I assure you: I’m a psychiatrist with much experience with sociopaths.”

“I don’t doubt that but still I can’t agree.”

Harleen closed her eyes and sighed disappointed.

“Mr. Wayne…”

“Master Bruce, the lunch is served” Alfred’s cool voice entered the room interrupting deliberately the young psychiatrist. “Dr. Quinzel, would you honor us with your company?”

Her fingers clenched the armrest irritated by the interruption. She understood that her visit was over so she stood up.

“I’m afraid I can’t” she smiled sweetly. “I must return to the Asylum. Thank you for the invitation; maybe some other time. Mr. Wayne, please consider what we discussed.”

“Good afternoon, Dr. Quinzel” it was his only reply and Harleen yanked her head and followed Alfred to the door.

Bruce watched her course to the exit with expressionless eyes and his lips pressed. As soon as Alfred closed the door behind her, he took his smartphone out of his pocket and with a brush on the side turned it into a tablet. He was ready to do his thing but Alfred’s light footsteps approached and the young man turned his eyes at him.

“If I may, I would suggest that you forget every bit of this conversation, Master Bruce.”

Bruce raised his eyebrows and chuckled.

“Someone told me that eavesdropping isn’t a polite thing to do…”

Alfred flushed a bit which Bruce definitely enjoyed yet the Englishman sustained his cool and stared nonchalant at his young master.

“For masters and young nobles but for a butler eavesdropping sometimes is a duty.”

Bruce snorted and returned his eyes to his tablet.

“It sounds like double standards…”

Alfred cleared his throat with dignity.

“The lunch is really served and Miss Kyle waits for you” Bruce cast him an exasperated glance but followed him to the kitchen. “Wash your hands, Master Bruce.”

Bruce let the tablet on the kitchen island and washed his hands at the sink, Selina watching him from her stool while Hero beside his bawl was licking meticulously his rear leg.

“That woman is crazier than Joker!” Selina snorted when her friend settled his chair beside her in front of his plate of Beef Wellington.

“Another eavesdropper…” he commented snidely and looked appalled the glass of milk by his plate. “Why Selina gets wine and I milk?” he protested taking his tablet ready to hack the archives with the footage from the Asylum’s cameras.

Alfred soundlessly approached him and grabbed his tablet.

“No games at the dinner table…” he said nonchalant and Bruce jerked his hands.

“It’s not games!” he objected.

Alfred nodded in emphasis.

“Even worse! As for your other inquiry, Miss Kyle isn’t on medication so she can drink wine with her meal.”

Selina smirked at Bruce and sipped from her glass teasingly. Bruce shook his head and huffed.

“On medication…The story of my life! At least I could have a can of soda instead of milk.”

Alfred looked at him with arched eyebrows.

“With the poor density of your bones, calcium is more necessary than soda.”
Selina chewed delighted a forkful of her meal and turned to her friend holding graciously the fork between her fingers.

“Don’t be put off, kiddo: eat your food and when you grow up you would be able to drink wine like the adults” she giggled and Bruce rolled his eyes but began eating.

His initial hunger had subsided considerably but he knew that eating was obligatory since there was a lot of medicine to take.

“Don’t tell me that you’re thinking what that shrink told you?” Selina asked staring at Bruce.

He shrugged.

“Perhaps she tries to help both her patient and the society.”

“Bullshit, sweetie! Couple therapy?! I think she shares Joker’s illusions.”

Bruce sipped his milk grimacing.

“At least, I took some useful info out of this.”

“Like?” she asked, chewing her food.

But then a melody came from Bruce’s tablet and Bruce jerked a bit because it was Clark’s ringtone. His eyes fixed on the “confiscated” gadget and Alfred sighed and gave him back the tablet.

“Hey, Bruce; how are you?” Clark’s voice sounded cheerful but slightly remorseful.

“Fine, Clark.”

“Just exhausted, huh?” Clark’s voice was now a bit deprecatory. “You couldn’t stay at the Manor, right? At least, you returned early” Bruce smirked realizing that Clark saw the footage from his car returning and didn’t knew anything about his visit to Ubu. “And your move elevated Wayne Enterprises’ shares – BUT that’s not a reason to repeat it, okay?”

Bruce rolled his eyes.

“You called to reprimand me?”

Clark chuckled.

“As if I could...No, I didn’t call for that” he swallowed. “Ugh! I want so bad to suck your lips…” Bruce could see him closing his eyes in delight. “I’m sorry I didn’t manage to come but Perry is bitchy...more than usual.”

“It’s okay, Clark.”

“I’ll be there as soon as I end with work.”

Bruce nodded.

“I’ll be waiting: Tony and Selina will be here for the council.”

He heard Clark huffing.

“Actually, I had other things in mind but…first thing first, huh? Well, babe, I have to hang up now.”
Take your medications and have a good rest, okay? And…and…wait? You have a session with Leench?"

His frown was too loud and Bruce chuckled.

“No massage from him, okay?”

Bruce smirked.

“Mmm…I’m not sure…Buy, Clark!”

He ended the call unable to conceal a big smile and Selina nudged his forearm.

“What’s new from the big bad alien?”

“He doesn’t want Matt to massage me…”

She knitted her eyebrows and grinned evilly.

“Gooooood! Let the blond babe massage you and see to manifest signs of great pleasure – that would make Superman a match to Hulk.”

Bruce shook his head smiling, smile that freeze when Alfred brought him his pills. He crossed out the exasperated question of how much longer he’ll have to rely on chemicals and took them calmly.

Alfred looked at his wristwatch.

“Now…off you go for your midday rest.”

But Bruce tightened his grip on the tablet.

“I have some work to do: I’ll take my nap when I’m done.”

Alfred’s expression became disapproving and stern.

“At three o’ clock mister Leench will arrive for your session so the time in between has to be dedicated to your rest in order to handle the effort.”

The young man rolled his eyes frustrated but then he had to let the tablet on the table because Hero hoped on his lap and demanded his caress rubbing his head to his hand.

“You promised to be a good boy, sweetie…” Selina remarked and Bruce huffed defeated.

“You’ll stay, right?”

Selina nodded.

“Master Wayne, lead the way to the master bedroom: I have to make sure that no detour will occur. And you don’t need to worry: Miss Kyle will stay and help me with the cleaning…”

Selina’s eyes bulged and her upper lip upturned in horror causing Bruce’s laughter.

Hero was kicking a small rubber ball between his front legs arching his back while Selina was sprawled on a sun chair. The steady sound of strong arms slicing the water of the interior pool made her look up.
After a delicious Alfred meal Selina stayed at the Manor while Bruce took a nap that was rather short both for her and Alfred’s taste. And then Matt Leench, Bruce’s physiotherapist, came for their session and Selina liked to watch and participate to her friend’s workout – that enabled her to restrain Bruce from overstretching himself: not that Matt didn’t do it, he was actually stern with his stubborn patient despite his more than evident admiration yet Selina was more effective and Alfred knew it. Besides, some workout was necessary for her too.

She had watched Bruce warming up, do resistance exercises, lifting weights and then even sit-ups under Matt’s protective and impressed stare – Tony had told her that the Avenger’s physiotherapist was a great professional but Selina would have been very gleeful to watch Superman huffing and puffing once again, boiling in his jealousy: that would serve him right!

“I want you to tell me as soon as you feel the slightest of discomfort, OK?” the physiotherapist kept repeating and Selina smirked because even Matt had understood Bruce’s disregard for pain when he wanted to achieve something. “We want to keep your muscles in good shape but we must be very careful with your upper spine.”

In the end, Matt had put Bruce’s legs in exoskeleton cases to do with the instrument’s help soft movements that would preserve the muscles’ near normal condition: he knew that Tony Stark’s goal was to enable his friend to walk again so the physiotherapist applied exercises that mimicked the walking movements - always in sitting position.

“What about doing this properly?” Bruce had asked determined and Matt squinted. "I mean standing."

Matt had pressed his lips in a tight line because he could feel his patient's impatience.

"I wouldn't risk applying so much pressure to your pelvis, Bruce. Your spine is still too sensitive.”

Bruce followed his trainer’s instructions and did his exercises calmly, determined and clenching his teeth because sometimes even now the workout was demanding. But seeing his legs in walking motion made Bruce’s eyes flash and it was as if Selina could hear him swear that he’ll walk again without the machine doing everything.

“I think it’s enough for today, Bruce” Matt had said patting his patient’s sweaty back.

Bruce looked at him under his wet locks.

“I can continue, Matt…a bit more.”

Matt smiled understanding his patient’s desire to walk again as soon as possible.

“I know you can, Bruce; but it’s enough for now – you didn’t work out for three days: we don’t want any cramps or strains or stiffness. And you’re tired after a long transatlantic journey” he smiled. “You know that weren’t for Tony’s energy internal casts you would be still on a bed completely immobile wrapped in hard casts?”

Or worse, six feet under…Bruce nodded thoughtful.

“We’ll volume up gradually, deal?” Matt inquired cheerfully to lift his patient’s spirits and wrapped carefully a big towel around Bruce’s shoulders.

Bruce sighed.

“Deal.”
Then they proceeded to the pool room where Matt accompanied Bruce in the warm water. Not that her friend needed any help: he slipped from his wheelchair to the pool with ease and grace, Matt waiting in the water. The pool had the normal depth because Bruce was a skilled swimmer even disabled. So Matt stood on the side and watched with pride his patient sliding to the waters.

Selina cleared her throat.

“It must be odd for the physiotherapist of the Avengers working with everyday people” she said slyly.

Matt shrugged.

“Although I enjoy my work with the Avengers, it’s my interaction with everyday people that gives me the greatest reward” he glanced at Selina keeping the corner of his eye on Bruce who continued swimming. “I believe that people without superpowers are the true heroes.”

Selina’s eyebrows arched.

“I absolutely agree with that… However it must be a one-of-a-kind experience to massage Hulk” she rolled her eyes.

Matt laughed.

“No, I wouldn’t dare that!”

Selina protruded her lips.

“And what about Captain America?” her eyes glimmered and Bruce stared at her grinning. “He needs training and massage too?”

Bruce chuckled understanding what his friend was thinking: that she gladly would change places with Matt.

“Well, he has enhanced strength and skills but still a physiotherapist can be of help especially after battles…I just can’t elaborate on this: confidentiality reasons.”

Selina nodded and watched Hero running from his corner towards his master; at the sight of the water the kitten braked abruptly and looked down at his master.

“C’me, join me, Hero!” Bruce told him but the kitten meowed unwilling.

The young man splashed a few drops on the animal which made some nervous steps backwards.

“Maybe Selina could join you” Matt commented.

But she shook her head.

“No way, handsome… I don’t have a swimming suit and I don’t owe you a great favor…” she winked.

Matt chuckled but then his smartphone from the gym room rang.

“Mmm…Selina, do you mind keeping company to Bruce?” he meant watching over Bruce just in case.

“Not at all, go…If it’s Captain give him a kiss!”
Bruce changed his body’s position into backstroke. He loved swimming because it gave him the sense of independence, of freedom, of normalcy.

“You’re quite fast” Selina said sitting at the granite tile surface. She admired him because although she was sure that demanded too much effort Bruce made it look easy.

“Yeah…” Bruce said grimly. “Like a turtle…”

Selina stroked Hero who was twitching his paw in the drops of water Bruce had sent towards him.

“A sea turtle” she commented arching an eyebrow. “In Finding Nemo they were pretty damn fast.”

Bruce placed his arms in the surface in front of Selina and lifted the goggles.

“Finding Nemo?”

Selina slapped her eye.

“I forgot you’re much behind in films…” Bruce was Falcone’s slave back then and he barely was given food… “The orphanage staff took us to cinema when it came out: it’s an animated film about a clown fish that crosses the entire ocean, has a lot of adventures and faces even sharks to find his son that was captured and kept in a fish tank…” she suddenly realized the similarities with Bruce and the possible child.

She bit his lower lip; from Bruce’s eyes could understand that her friend had already caught the similarities.

“I’m sorry…” she whispered but Bruce smiled.

“It’s a good movie?”

“It’s great! And the clown fish it’s accompanied in his journey by a female friend: Dory who’s a bit stupid but has a good heart.”

“It sounds worth watching…” he let go of the edge of the pool and slid into the water lowering the goggles over his eyes. “Matt should have known better when he suggested you get into the water…” he snorted. “Cats hate water!”

Suddenly, the arched roof of the swimming pool room opened and Ironman made his appearance as pompous as ever when the armor vanished and Tony dressed in his jeans and T-shirt fell completely ungracefully to the water splashing all over Selina and Hero.

“Yooo-Hoooo!” Tony exclaimed and hugged Bruce who was a bit unbalanced from the wave. “Ha! Like a wet cat, huh, Sel?!”

Selina gritted her teeth eyeing her drenched clothes; her eyes were spiting flames as Hero’s.

“Stark! You asshole!” she yelled. “You could have hit Bruce, you dork!”

Tony however was beaming.

“She loves me, huh, little guy? I’m simply irresistible, babe!”

Matt, who had heard the fuss, ran there worried; he closed his eyes and breathed easier seeing Tony Stark holding his best friend.
“Tony, what a nice surprise! But you could have hit Bruce!”

Tony rolled his eyes to Bruce who smiled.

“What are they talking about, Bruce? I had estimated everything about my spectacular dive to eliminate any risk: you know that, huh?”

“Of course, Tony… Selina, Alfred has stashed some clothes for you so you can change.”

She was drying Hero with a fluffy towel and glared at them fuming.

“Tell me that you don’t have any clothes for that spoiled Californian brat and he’ll be forced to walk around naked…”

Tony twitched his eyebrows suggestively.

“I love the way you think, babe…” he lowered his voice looking at her seductively. “Adam’s attire suits me perfectly and ladies love it too…”

She rolled her eyes and snorted.

“Yes, I suppose there are many perverts out there…”

Tony slapped his palm over his arc reactor and lolled his head supposedly hurt.

“You stabbed me in the heart, babe… Wait… That’s the arc. Have I told you that I’m a masochist?” he patted Bruce’s upper arm. “They were afraid that I might hit you – that would impossible: you’re great at swimming, buddy!”

“He believes that he is a turtle” Selina remarked.

“No way!” Matt protested. “He’s can be an athlete!”

Tony widened his eyes at his friend.

“A sea turtle like in Finding Nemo.”

Bruce yanked his head.

“I must see that movie…”

“In my cinema hall back at home; it’s been ages since the last time you came to visit.”

The younger man smiled but Matt clapped his hands.

“It’s time Bruce gets out of the water and you change clothes.”

Tony held his friend as Matt had taught him to help him out but Bruce tensed: he wanted to do as many things as possible by himself.

“Thank you, Tony but I can manage…” he said smiling.

But Tony was serious.

“I know you can…but I need to do this to loosen that knot in my stomach…to persuade myself that I can do something for you” his voice was too solemn for Tony’s standards; he brought his mouth to Bruce’s ear “other than contributing to your crazy plan…”
The younger man understood.

“You spoke with Lucius?” he whispered.

“Yup…He wants me in the project” he locked eyes with him “do you?”

Bruce pressed his lips but didn’t lower his eyes.

“I didn’t want you to participate in something that you don’t believe; in something that would bother and upset you…And you also have too many things demanding your attention and skills. But it wouldn’t have been the same without you.”

Tony hugged him and kissed his forehead.

“I won’t let you out of my sight again, kiddo and…my ego wouldn’t stand it if Lucius created something better than my things without my contribution” he lolled his head.

Bruce’s eyes sparkled and his lips trembled in a hesitant smile: he had the confidence that Lucius would make the best possible suit yet Tony’s participation was important because he wanted his best friend supporting his decisions.

“So…you’re in?”

Tony turned his eyes to the ceiling that had closed again and scratched his wet locks holding Bruce with one hand.

“It’s the least I can do: you taught me how to sustain and control Ironman with my mind’s power…”

Bruce frowned.

“I didn’t.”

Tony pouted shaking his head thoughtful.

“Exactly…you’ll say that when outsiders are around – I like to brag about that!”

“Tony!” Matt yelled. “Stop keeping Bruce in: it’s time for shower!”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“You can’t find respect in your employees anymore…” he sighed and supported Bruce to his waiting wheelchair at which point his eyes widened. “You emerged from thin air?”

Alfred wasn’t in the pool hall when Tony arrived and now was standing by the wheelchair holding a fluffy bathrobe. He knew the time Bruce’s swimming session ended and as every time he came just in time to wrap immediately and carefully his master in the bathrobe.

“Like master like butler, huh?” Tony smirked. “When are you gonna teach poor ol’ Tony the tricks, littl’ guy?”

Bruce pouted and nodded patronizingly.

“I’m teaching you too but you’re a late bloomer…”

Alfred gave one of his precious chuckles and Tony rolled his eyes sighing.
“My humor is used against me by my own pupil…alas! Where this world is headed?”

Suddenly, Tony felt a strong push and lost his balance ending up completely gracelessly back in the pool. He emerged to the surface rasping and saw Selina sniggering with a hissing Hero in her arms.

“Next time remember that cats hate water!” she snapped and turned graciously swaying seductively her beautiful hips heading to the showers.

Tony lolled his head to the side arching an eyebrow.

“And that cats have nails and…awesome hips! Wow!” he wolf whistled and winked to Bruce. “She wanted me to see the view from here…”

Matt from the other end of the space approached with his hands clutching his waist.

“Bruce, go make a shower and I’ll wait you in the gym for your massage.”

Finally!

He gazed all around him awed and touched: the cave walls, the working bench with the five screens showing footage from different parts of the city, the waterfall at the entrance, the Tumbler standing there neglected, the bats hanging upside down from the ceiling. The case with Batman’s suit: a new one Lucius probably brought at a point, because his previous was destroyed in the factory.

Everything looked different from this position, from the nest and cage of his wheelchair which however was to thank for being able to come here because the steep and rough surface would have made it impossible for a normal chair to move.

All these time he felt lucky and grateful that survived the collapse and the fire but being again down in the cave intensified that feeling, made his heart jolt in his chest and his back shiver…however at the same time the realization of his impairment became graver. Which on its turn galvanized his decisiveness to walk again and don the cape and the cowl. He used the chair’s capability to elevate and took reverently the cowl: he felt as if the inanimate that object stared back piercing him.

He placed the cowl back because he didn’t want his friends seeing how touched he was; instead, he wheeled the chair in front of the working bench and for a few seconds brushed with his fingers the keyboard and the mouse. It seemed as if it’s been ages…

Then he brought his iris to the niche at the bottom left corner of the central screen and the processor opened sending goose bumps to Bruce’s healthy spine.

Tony had a virtual meeting with S.H.I.E.L.D.’s sector directors and Selina was busy with something occupying Hero. So he was alone…He adored his friends but still he cherished some loneliness – especially, in the cave…though it always brought back memories of his escapees to the underground caves when he was at Falcone’s captivity. Maybe that was the reason he loved so much being in the cave: because he lived again all these emotions of the few instances of fake safety, freedom and oblivion the caves gave to the scared boy.

He placed his tablet on the bench and his fingers flew on the keyboard bringing on the screen the results from Lucius’ analysis. But first, he wanted to do something else.

“Transfer pictures 001 to 0020” he ordered and the tablet’s screen illuminated as the pictures of Dick’s stalker were moved to the central processor.
He tapped the keys giving the data to the face recognition software to cross the photos with public archives.

The whoosh told him that he was no longer alone; he took his eyes from the screen just as Clark was right next to him, his mouth nestled in his neck.

“You promised to not go hard at this…” Clark struggled to sound stern but his voice came out too sensual – after all, seeing Bruce working in the cave always aroused him.

“I don’t” Bruce replied nonchalant though Clark’s wet breath made his healthy body go in paralysis too.

Clark frowned and sniffed harder at Bruce’s skin.

“That Matt was touching you?” he rolled his eyes.

Bruce snorted and looked again at his screens.

“Of course; he is my physiotherapist: kinesiotherapy and massage is part of my sessions.”

Superman took gently Bruce’s shoulders and nuzzled his cheek that was so deliciously cold from the cave’s temperature.

“I don’t want him to massage you…I can do it” his eyes reminded of a kicked puppy. Clark could scan Bruce’s muscles and see that the physiotherapist did a good work with his patient’s paralyzed muscles and his healthy but sensitive ones – a remarkably good work because Clark could sense how relaxed Bruce’s muscles were. Damn!

“You’re not as reliable as Matt” a snarky voice came from the lift and high heels echoed to the stone along with light paws walking along. “He is devoted and he’d never abandon Bruce for two days… and Bruce really needs that massage!”

Clark stood up and regarded Selina with his arms crossed on his chest. The young woman smirking held his gaze with her blazing eyes.

“I’m sorry, Selina” Superman decided that Bruce’s friend was right to be pissed; after all, she had never abandoned Bruce despite all the dangers. “You’re right” he walked towards her “I’m an asshole!”

“Indeed!” she spat. “A super asshole!”

Hero was at Clark’s feet and the man squatted to take him but the kitten sped to climb on Bruce’s lap. Clark shook his head slowly getting up.

“Even Hero is angry with me” he huffed.

Selina patted him in the upper arm and twitched her eyebrows.

“So from now on behave, buster: you’re on probation!” she passed him and sat on the bench crossing her legs and looking at Bruce patting Hero who purred.

Superman ruffled his hair.

“Fair enough…” he shrugged and then laughed seeing Bruce working over his keyboard with Hero having climbed on his shoulder and rubbing his head on the man’s neck. “Another rival!” he sighed.
“You have no idea, pal!” Tony’s grumpy voice saluted him as the billionaire got out of the lift.

He met the scolding stare of Ironman before Tony proceeded to his friend. Clark pouted and followed.

Selina in the meantime had detached Hero from Bruce – not without resistance – and rolled her eyes to both boys.

“Boys, if you didn’t get it we have a meeting” she scoffed. “And we have already a nice show with a shrink here…”

Bruce didn’t stir being engrossed in the data on one of the screens.

“Why are you searching Oliver Queen?” Clark demanded with narrowed eyes.

“Because the Amazon Princess saved him from the island he was stranded” Bruce answered without turning.

Clark knew that already but Bruce searching him meant that his stubborn lover intended on making an inquiry about Diana. He huffed.

“You’re searching Diana…”

“Of course…” he replied indifferent for Clark’s underlying disapproval.

“Bruce, for Rao’s sake, she is our ally!”

However Tony’s main concern was other.

“Sorry to interrupt but what shrink?” he asked.

Twisting the stool into facing his friend was the easiest thing in the world but the wheelchair albeit of advanced technology needed a bit more effort.

“Dr. Harleen Quinzel” Bruce replied.

“Joker’s psychiatrist?” both Tony and Clark exclaimed and Selina clapped.

“You were in the school band or natural talent?” she chuckled.

Tony turned his eyes on the ceiling reminiscent.

“Those girl groups…” he sighed and then cleared his throat looking at his company. “You know how fond and caring I am of every cultural effort!”

Clark didn’t pay any attention and frowned.

“What did she want?”

“To mess with our nerves!” Selina spat gritting her teeth and Hero found the chance to swallow her finger mock biting it.

“She asked me to help with Joker’s therapy” Bruce said indifferently.

Tony crossed his arms.

“I don’t like that…Clarify.”
Bruce rubbed his chin.

“She suggested I participate in Joker’s therapy sessions in order for her to change his wrong perceptions about me and our …relation.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows and scratched his neck.

“I must congratulate Gotham for the choice of its shrinks…” he sneered. “First Crane, now her…”

But Clark was agitated.

“As in couple therapy?” his lips were twisted in disgust.

Bruce nodded.

“Exactly.”

Clark clenched his fists and his feet already hovered off the ground.

“I tell her one or two things!”

“Easy, tiger!” Tony stopped him. “You want all these rumors of Superman loving Bruce Wayne being inflamed?”

Clark met Bruce’s eyes.

“I personally don’t have a problem with that” he said nonchalant.

Selina hopped from the bench and erected her elegant body in front of him locking their eyes.

“Really now?” she cocked an eyebrow in sarcasm. “Are you sure? Perhaps your new friend would be heartbroken?” she pouted lolling her head on the side.

Superman’s gaze hardened and Bruce closed his eyes hearing his lover’s rasping breath as he was ready to retort.

“I refused!” Bruce’s stentorian voice echoed through the cave and Clark turned to him instead. “Of course I refused” he continued lowering his voice looking at Clark. “The good thing is that I learnt some things from our discussion: first of all, that Joker attacked an inmate on the news of my arrival.”

He pressed a button and the attack’s video played on the screen.

Selina clenched her waist.

“So…instead of getting your rest you were hacking…Wait till Alfred finds out!”

A crease formed in Bruce’s forehead under the reprimanding eyes of his friend.

“I did sleep; I just woke up sooner than schedule and did some work.”

Selina’s eyebrows knitted.

“Wait a minute! Your tablet was in the living room: Alfred knows you too well to let it in your room, so how?”

Bruce’s lips twitched.
“You can control the tablet from your watch.”

Tony whistled and slapped his thighs shaking his head.

“That’s preposterous, littl’ guy! WayneTech can’t have created THAT before Stark Industries!”

Bruce smirked, cocking an eyebrow.

“It seems that we can…” he inclined his head to Tony. “Good thing you’re a shareholder.”

Tony huffed.

“I want that gizmo in StarkExpo!”

Bruce shrugged and smiled wickedly.

“Why not?”

“Tell me everything about your gadget” Tony’s eyes sparkled intrigued.

Superman fumed; he jerked his arms upwards.

“Are we forgetting something?! We were talking about Joker, remember?”

Tony rolled his eyes clearly disappointed.

“Clark is right” Bruce commented. “Well, the inmate Joker attacked is Lou Garfield…”

“Any relation with my favorite smug, fat, sarcastic cat?” Tony asked and then looked at Hero’s big, round eyes. “Favorite animated cat.”

“No” Bruce replied and the man’s police file emerged on the screen. “He is one of his thugs; and before you ask why Joker attacked one of his thugs: Lou was at the Chickey’s factory and he shot the bullets that started the fire.”

Superman nodded slowly.

“Joker attacked him the moment the TV showed you disembarking the jet on the wheelchair…”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“And Joker holds him responsible for your impairment” Tony continued “which brings us to an unpleasant conclusion…”

“That Joker thinks you’re the Batman” Selina crossed her arms.

Bruce nodded.

“He hinted that in the factory. And obviously he wasn’t persuaded by the holograms, which makes urgent the built of a suit that would enable me to make some appearances as Batman so to disperse those suspicions.”

“I don’t like that!” Clark exploded. “I don’t care what Joker thinks! You won’t get out there while in this condition – this is madness! If it’s necessary that Joker sees Batman, I’ll dress up.”

Bruce shook his head patiently.
“That won’t work! The one time you did that Joker figured you out and that made him suspect the truth. And it’ll be safe: I trust Lucius and Tony; besides I won’t do anything too demanding.”

“Yeah, sure…” Clark snapped his head to the side to not look at Bruce’s determined eyes.

Tony lowered his head thoughtful and pouted.

“At least my intra-body tracker worked knocking out the nutcase before he killed the guy – however it took some time…” he mumbled skeptical “which it shouldn’t…”

Bruce pointed his finger at the screen.

“You told me that your system works on the basis that aggressive behavior is accompanied with arousal to some bodily functions” Tony nodded. “The problem with Joker is that he doesn’t function like most killers: I have some experience with him and believe me murdering is nothing for him – he doesn’t experience the physiological changes that are connected with violent behavior. It’s something absolutely normal for him.”

“However Tony’s system worked in this case and the man was saved” Clark commented.

“Quinzel told me that Joker’s reactions are more intense when it’s about me – perhaps the news of my paraplegia made him lose his control” he took in Clark’s pissed eyes. “Anger overwhelmed him and that saved Lou; however now Joker knows how the system works and won’t make again the same mistake.”

Selina rubbed her chin.

“But he can’t break out of Tony’s cell.”

“He can’t but he doesn’t stay there all the time: Dr. Quinzel decided that it’s better if he wanders free among the other inmates.”

“Yeah, but after the incident she must keep him away from the others” Clark commented.

Bruce pressed his lips and tapped a button showing footage from the common room with today’s date. They saw Joker talking with Crane on the couch.

Clark gritted his teeth.

“Those two together is bad news! What this woman is thinking?! Letting Joker plot with Crane?”

“And with his former thugs around” Selina pointed out.

“Obviously, Quinzel believes that isolation will make things worse or…Joker manipulates her.”

Tony yanked his head meeting Bruce’s eyes determined.

“What do you propose? You know him better after all.”

Bruce looked at the jester on the screen.

“Nobody can say that knows Joker…” he was thoughtful but then turned again to Tony. “What if instead of monitoring Joker’s bodily signals your system tracks the bodily reactions of the people around him?” Tony’s eyes flashed and a wicked grin dawned on his face. “So every time it senses terror knocks out Joker.”
Tony laughed triumphantly and shook his head.

“That’s brilliant, littl’ guy! And cunning!” he raised his index finger and shook it.

“But it’s difficult” Selina said.

The billionaire from Malibu turned to her pouting hurt and opened his arms.

“That hurt, gorgeous! Nothing it’s difficult for Tony – The Genius – Stark” Clark cocked his eyebrows exasperated which Bruce noticed. “Only Bruce understands my restless intelligence and offers me challenges! Thank you, buddy!”

“Perhaps we could ask for Quinzel’s removal at least from Joker’s treatment?” Clark asked.

“We could but that could provoke some uncontrollable results: Quinzel is the head of Arkham Asylum and it’d be difficult to be removed from her patient, plus she’d get defensive on us hardeining any cooperation with her; on the other hand, she seems to be really interested in Joker’s reformation and we want a therapist invested in that purpose.”

Selina leaned her waist on the bench and raised an eyebrow.

“Not if she is controlled by him…”

“I agree” Clark nodded.

Bruce drummed his fingers on the bench.

“That’s right but we can’t intervene so roughly to the Asylum’s function.”

“As if the mysterious mastermind of your attack wasn’t enough” Selina shook her head.

“We have some clues about the attackers” Bruce said.

Clark frowned.

“You told me that Diana ruined the evidence.”

Selina lolled her head on the side.

“Yes, but nothing is impossible for our detective…He slipped our tight security and took samples from the soil where some remains fell” Bruce stared at her with sparkling eyes “and from his clothes because the green fellas had grabbed him – am I saying these right?” she arched an eyebrow.

“Perfect!” Bruce replied ignoring Tony’s and Clark’s shared exasperated looks for Bruce’s sneaking activity. “Lucius and I searched the databases of labs – legal and illegal labs.”

“Why?” Clark asked. “From Diana’s description they sounded clearly extraterrestrial.”

Bruce bit his bottom lip because Clark had discussed the attackers with the Amazon and not him.

Tony slumped on a stool.

“And reports from the local sector of S.H.I.E.L.D. talk about signals of non-earth technology.”

Bruce nodded.

“The fact that the clues don’t remind anything we know or that the attackers looked like extraterrestrial doesn’t mean that they are indeed extraterrestrial. For instance, our attackers could be the product of illegal experimentation.”

Superman clenched his jaw.

“Luthor.”

“Except he is in prison” Tony pinched the bridge of his nose.

“That doesn’t stop him from ordering the attack from there” Selina offered. “I’m sure he’d want some revenge on Bruce and Superman.”

“Or some of his partners could be using the products of their association” Bruce remarked.

Tony ruffled his hair with both hands.

“League of Shadows. But, Bruce, we dismantled them: we destroyed their secret weapons, their bases and their members are in high-security prisons around the world. Also, their control over S.H.I.E.L.D. is over and their leader is missing or dead.”

“You believe that some cells managed to reorganize so soon after such a lethal blow?” Clark asked.

“There is always the possibility of them having some locations that weren’t included in the files I stole, like the base in Mt. Marcy. So” he breathed “Selina and me went to examine that possibility. We talked with the one man who was Ra’s right hand: Ubu.”

“And?” Tony asked with narrowed eyes.

“He doesn’t believe that those creatures were sent by any remains of the League. Also, he wants to relocate at the monastery at Himalayas to train people to serve justice.”

Tony frowned.

“I know he saved your life, buddy, but…”

“He almost died for that and without him you wouldn’t have found the secret base.”

“Correct – so he conducted Selina to reveal the location: and you, my lady, trusted him?” Tony pouted.

Selina met Bruce’s gaze and he nodded.

“I trusted Ubu because I already knew him: years before, while Ra’s loyal warrior he secretly trained me to help Bruce.”

Tony gaped and Clark nodded; it made sense that both Selina and Bruce trusted Ubu.

“So, Tony” Bruce cut to the point “I think S.H.I.E.L.D. can give him back the monastery: you may keep the supervision because there’s a chance someone wants to get him.”

“Okay…If you vouch for him, no problem; actually, I like the bald guy.”

“So if the League is crossed out where we stand?” Clark inquired.

“Lucius didn’t find anything in labs’ logs all over the world and the findings from LexLabs didn’t give anything. For the time being.”
“So Luthor has no involvement in your attack and neither does the League” Tony wrapped it up.

Bruce nodded.

“Furthermore, Lucius’ analysis showed that those creatures consist of matter and substances definitely out of this world.”

“Which agrees with the reports from S.H.I.E.L.D.” Tony added. “So some extraterrestrial dude decides to attack Bruce…” he looked pointedly at Clark “I wonder why?”

Selina shrugged.

“It could be your enemy too, Tony…” Selina remarked.

The billionaire lolled his head to the side.

“I have many enemies, doll, but they are from this planet even though some of them are ugly as aliens – no offence, Supes. On the other hand, we know who has attracted much alien scum to challenge him.”

Tony’s tone was a bit snarky yet Superman didn’t feel irritated: from the first moment he was almost sure that some enemy of his ordered the attack and honestly he just cared to find and smash him so Bruce won’t be in danger ever again…Well, at least because of him.

Clark sat on a stool, his hands on his thighs.

“Mongul? Lobo? Brainiac?” he counted some of the enemies he fought.

“General Zod?” Bruce offered.

But Clark shook his head in denial.

“Supes snapped his neck” Tony commented. “Everyone was talking about that then but you, littl’ guy, don’t know that because…well…” he twisted his lips “you didn’t watch much TV then.”

“Exactly, Bruce” Clark added but Selina was looking at her friend’s blank eyes.

“You said that you’ll check this…” Bruce said looking at Clark.

Tony yanked his head.

“Wait! I’ve lost some episodes here…”

Clark crossed his arms.

“Bruce has a premonition” maybe obsession is a better word “that Zod is alive – that I didn’t kill him but only knock him out.”

The billionaire from Malibu lolled his head and pouted staring at his friend.

“C’me on, Bruce, you can’t know that…”

Bruce inhaled and turned to them unfazed by their doubts.

“I can’t remember how I know this – maybe Ra’s told me so: he had made a lot of research about Clark. It’s better if he checks this.”
Clark pressed his lips: he didn’t like returning to deeds that haunted him till now but if that would soothe Bruce.

“Fine, I’ll do it.”

“So” Selina intervened “either is someone of Supes’ past enemies or a new, unknown one.”

Clark feared this prospect more because he didn’t know what they were facing. Damn! An alien enemy was more dangerous for Bruce because even as Batman he was fighting human villains and to make matters worse Bruce was now disabled.

“I fought Bagdana as well” Bruce spat reading his thoughts and Clark blushed. “Anyway” he changed the subject “we still continue searching LexLabs for any indication of his collaborators – he was involved in many shady business.”

“We can interrogate the son of a bitch” Tony said.

“There’s a spree of burglaries to labs in Metropolis” Clark said. “LexLabs, STAR Labs, everything – I know it may be irrelevant to our case but…”

“We can’t afford to neglect anything involving Luthor. And the burglaries weren’t local” Bruce added. “LexLabs all over the States have been raided the last months; police arrested the culprits – all of them local hired muscle yet the thugs didn’t say for whom they work.”

Clark brushed his chin.

“That’s the case in Metropolis too” Bruce seemed interested. “Metropolis’ police believe a new big gang tries to dominate the city’s underworld destroying the rivals: the Intergang. They have weakened the other gangs by executing their members and stripped them from their weapons; it’s a ghost gang that everyone knows that exist but nobody has seen it. They have aggregated weaponry and technical supplies for various illegal activities. My investigation had led me to believe that Intergang has recruited many convicted criminals succeeding their release: dangerous people like Johnny “Stitches” Denetto or Alistair Bendel - White. And…” he hesitated remembering what he heard from these two.

“What?” Selina asked and Clark felt every eye on him.

“I was watching those I mentioned and they were saying that their boss isn’t afraid of Superman” Tony arched his eyebrows smugly “or the Avengers.”

“Arrogant bastard!” the billionaire exclaimed insulted.

“And they said that after their boss’ win they will take their revenge on me using Bruce…” his eyes met Bruce’s relishing their strength and contempt for the threat.

“They can dream on it…” Selina scoffed.

“You suggest that Intergang has something to do with Bruce’s attack?” Tony inquired.

“Luthor could have been collaborating with an aspirational new local player…that would explain the raids in LexLabs” Clark shrugged.

“So we must find Intergang’s boss because even if the attack wasn’t his idea, he seems to be up to no good” Selina said.
“And either he is the big enemy” Tony added “or we are facing two villains” he protruded his lower lip “nice…”

“We have to keep our eyes open” Bruce said hiding his frustration for being confined unable to go out there, disguise and spy.

“Speaking of which…” Selina narrowed her eyes “where’s Hero?”

Clark chuckled because his super hearing knew already.

“Following Batman’s lead…” he pointed to the Tumbler.

Hero had climbed on the roof and was eyeing the bats on the ceiling with the cold determination of a predator. Suddenly he jolted against one of the rodents which flew away to the kitten’s dismay.

“Siblings’ rival!” Tony erupted in laughter and Clark flew to the Tumbler snatching the kitten.

“He just proved that I was right…” Selina said in a singsong voice.

Clark placed Hero on Bruce’s lap and remained squatted in front of him smiling. Selina pulled out of her breast pocket a folded paper that she opened and showed to Bruce giggling.

Bruce laughed too and soon everyone in the cave did the same.

On the paper Hero was painted perfectly with a black cowl covering his eyes and ears and a cape waving behind him. Hero stared at himself intrigued and meowed proudly.

“Congrats, buddy!” Tony cackled. “You found yourself a sidekick! The Bat-kitten!” Hero twitched his paw towards Tony and the billionaire pouted mock solemn “Okay, okay, what about Bat-Tiger!”

Clark was laughing and Bruce was engrossed looking his crystal blue eyes sparkling full of energy and life; suddenly, the dead eyes of Superman of his dream came returned causing his blood to freeze.

“Are you so cruel?” the Amazon Princess repeated in her cold voice.

Clark sensed that Bruce’s temperature decreased a bit and fear gripped his insides: hypothermia was a constant danger for paraplegics and today Bruce got really tired.

“Are you alright?” he asked searching Bruce’s blank eyes cupping the younger man’s cheek. “Is it your lung?” his other palm touched Bruce’s chest on the lung’s place.

Bruce shook his head and Clark’s palm lowered to touch the place where his spleen used to be; it was clear that the Man of Steel was scanning him.

“You did that: you put your egoism above anything else – above his wellbeing. Do you really think that you offered him anything more than agony, suffering and pain?”

“I’m fine” he spat shaking off the effect of the dream; he gulped seeing how worried Clark’s eyes were.

“The cave is way too cold and humid for you: time to get you upstairs” Clark snapped determined and patted Hero’s head as the kitten was licking Bruce’s hand.

“I have work to do” Bruce answered flatly and looked at the screen where the photo of Dick’s stalker was surrounded by information.
Tony cleared his throat.

“Don’t tell me your wonder-gadget can’t establish connection with the bat computer because I’m taking off the invitation for StarkExpo” he said playfully but sternly at the same time.

“And Alfred had baked cinnamon biscuits that wait for us…” Selina took Hero.

Clark who was looking at Bruce’s friend turned to his lover and cocked an eyebrow.

“We’re leaving” he said and made to take Bruce in his arms to his dismay.

“I can use the chair.”

Clark was hurt.

“I know but holding you gives me so much pleasure…”

“Exactly!” Bruce said briskly and turned the chair towards the lift. “You’re on probation, remember?”

Selina sniggered and growled satisfied before following her friend and Tony raised his eyebrows smugly.

“Right…” Clark sighed as the others left.
Chapter 21

I'd like to thank all of you for reading, commenting and leaving Kudos!

Leslie was perusing the latest shift’s reports on the clinic’s patients. It was late evening and the night shift had started. After three decades in this job, she was used to spending her nights in the free clinic reading reports, supervising the urgent happenings of a clinic located in the Narrows and tending to the patients. It wasn’t too difficult: during the hard years of Falcone’s reign she had transferred her home here since she had sold her apartment to sustain the clinic.

Now that things were ideal she still couldn’t change her old habits and that made her sympathize with her most challenging, stubborn and beloved patient, Bruce: she could understand his urge to return to his former life despite the difficulties he was facing right now. And although he sometimes frustrated her she deeply admired him… of course she was hiding this because then their wayward boy would be encouraged to exploit her soft spot.

She pursed her lips and detached her eyes from the papers; she rubbed the rim of her eye glasses: now that was a temptation! Being at Wayne Manor enjoying a perfect meal with Alfred, Bruce and his gang: she smiled fondly. After eighteen years believing the little angel dead, she couldn’t get enough of him, especially since a couple of months ago she had almost lost him again. Yet the people’s needs here were the priority over her personal happiness. And Bruce understood that perfectly because this was his life too…he almost died because of that.

She sighed and shook her head to focus again on the medical report she was reading.

Knocks on the door and Leslie answered because every now and then some nurse wanted to announce or ask something. Except it wasn’t a nurse.

“Good evening to my favorite doctor!” behind a really big bouquet of white tulips Thomas Elliot strut in the office.

Leslie blinked and Thomas’ face emerged behind the flowers crestfallen.

“Mmm… I’m not welcomed?”

Leslie took off her glasses and rubbed the bridge of her nose.

“Of course you are, Thomas; have a seat. Your shift isn’t tonight, right?”

Thomas bestowed politely the flowers to her and sat at the armchair in front of her office crossing elegantly his legs eyeing Leslie who put the flowers on the desk rather untouched: Thomas smirked inside because he realized that the rough Narrows doctor wasn’t the chivalry-crap type.

“I’m allowed in the clinic only for the shifts?” he asked mock hurt, cocking his eyebrows and Leslie waved her hand dismissing.

“Not at all; it’s that I know how demanding your program is and I thought that you’d want to exploit the little free time you have for something recreational and reviving.”
Thomas smiled and nodded.

“And that’s why I’m here!” he opened his hands. “I wanted to see the most charming doctor and have dinner with her.”

Leslie shook her head: Tommy’s efforts to ‘seduce’ her were ridiculous. And his hair that till now was perfectly groomed and short, was left slightly messy and long, exactly like Bruce’s hair when landed at Gotham. Somehow she would bet that the moment Bruce cut his locks, Thomas would do the same.

“I believe that the perfect company for dinner would be some young, beautiful lady” Leslie remarked.

The young doctor grinned revealing his pearly white teeth.

“Oh if you were to leave your clinic for dinner it would be only for a dinner at Wayne Manor, right?”

Leslie put down the pen she was holding. She leaned towards her guest and narrowed her eyes.

“Tommy, what do you really want?” she asked in her cut-the-crap voice though softer than most times.

Thomas ruffled his hair laughing.

“I can’t fool you, huh?” he shook his head amused.

Leslie cocked an eyebrow and pierced him with her gaze over her glasses.

“You want to fool me, young man?”

“No, no, no…Nothing evil there: I honestly wanted to have dinner with you to enjoy your witty, intelligent company and asked you to arrange a meeting with Bruce” he straightened his gaze into dead seriousness.

Leslie leaned to the back of her chair and shook her head disbelieving.

“Me? Arrange you a meeting? Come on, Thomas, I’m not Bruce’s secretary…”

“And that’s the reason I want you to speak to him” he pressed his lips.

“You want me as a mediator… Why don’t you contact him personally? I think that this would be the best choice.”

He shook his head.

“He’ll refuse albeit, I’m sure, politely. I think he still holds for me the impression from his childhood – not that I blame him… With everything he’s been through I didn’t have the chance to correct those misunderstandings – and now he has more important things to invest his energy…but I need to make amends and maybe help him” his eyes were shining with honesty.

Leslie intertwined her fingers on the desk.

“I still believe that if you really want that personal contact asking for it yourself would be the best option. Otherwise it’d seem like we trapped him: do you want him to lose his trust in me? Not that I’ll ever agree to set up a meeting.”
Thomas lowered his head.

“If I really want that? What else would I want from Bruce?” he lollled his head on the side. “C’mere on, Leslie! I’m not Joker or that ridiculous League that hurt him so much!”

“Thomas, listen to me: if you want to approach Bruce, trying to make his people plot with you isn’t the right way: this will lead to the opposite result. Speak to him without mediators.”

He smiled.

“He’d never agree to meet me: he didn’t even let me help him with his injury! I could have helped: Superman knows that I have worked in a project about the most complex spine injuries with remarkable results.”

“What about Superman?” she asked frowning.

Thomas pressed his lips amused and shook his head: Leslie had an excellent poker face and was using it to deny that Superman was fucking the pure, innocent victim…Bitch please!

“Leslie, I’ve seen what the entire world has seen” she arched her eyebrows disbelieving “Bruce wrapped carefully in Superman’s cape, safely nestled in the superhero’s arms being brought to you for treatment – Superman’s eyes were leaking love and he was clearly unwilling to surrender Bruce to anyone” ugh! Thomas felt nauseated recounting all these but he managed to keep his cool face and the jeer out of his voice.

Leslie blinked and took off her glasses.

“I was expecting from a man of your intelligence and seriousness to not fall for gossip nonsense” she replied solemnly. “That story was made by a gossip reporter and since then people interpret the video according to Vale’s fairytale. Superman and Tony found and saved Bruce who was naked – the Man of Steel used his cape to protect Bruce’s dignity and since he was the first to reach him rushed to bring him back. End of story.”

Dr. Elliot felt his cheeks hot from Leslie’s comment about him being carried away from gossip but tried to conceal it with an uncomfortable smile. Not that he was persuaded by Leslie’s story that there was nothing between Bruce and Superman.

And judging by the way Captain America came to the clinic that day to transfer Leslie to Bruce’s secret location, Thomas wasn’t the only one who believed Vale’s story: Alfred and Stark wouldn’t have sent for Leslie if it was a simple medical issue…and Bruce’s sudden return after the incident cried that someone found the secret location of Superman’s darling and attacked Bruce so they decided to bring him back to Gotham for more safety. Brucie’s friends didn’t imagine that bringing him back in Gotham meant that he would be faced with other threats…

“Well, that doesn’t change that the project I developed in Metropolis’ hospital with Superman’s contribution makes miracles in the healing of the most complex spine injuries. I could help him walk again, Leslie! If only you made him reconsider his grudge…” his eyes shone fervently with honest interest “he’ll be benefited from this and I will soothe my conscience.”

Leslie lolled her head on the side and her narrowed eyes were exasperated.

“You must understand, Thomas, that isn’t a matter of grudge: it’s just that Bruce after everything he’s been through has a small circle of people he trusts and it’s difficult to accept new people; you must earn his trust and using mediators isn’t the best way. Believe me: if there was a chance you could help in this we’d have called you on board.”
Dr. Elliot twisted his lips: he doubted that this spoiled, stupid brat would ever stop whining about his Tao-Tao toy so Thomas preferred gaining the trust of Brucie’s loved ones: that way he would make a bigger impact to the pampered baby – by stealing one by one his guardian angels and isolating him.

“A cross-examination never hurt anyone – you know that” he waved his hand but in the end sighed defeated. “Anyway, I don’t want to upset him during the sensitive process of healing – since he isn’t willing to let go of childhood rivalries” he stared at Leslie’s still eyes and pursed his lips sad. “However, I want you to remember that I’ll be ready to help with whatever Bruce needs.”

Leslie smiled to her colleague.

“Thank you for your kind offer, Thomas. But have you ever thought that maybe it is you that haven’t let go of childhood rivalries?” Thomas’ smile froze. “Maybe you project your own feelings to Bruce; maybe your guilt and self-accusations make you believe that Bruce still hates you.”

Thomas laughed under Leslie’s scrutiny.

“I didn’t consider you a Freudian…” his eyebrow arched in slight sarcasm.

Knocks on the door interrupted their discussion and Leslie called them in squinting at the sight: a delivery boy much better dressed than the average came in with two big paper bags in his arms.

Thomas jerked his head towards the boy and gestured to Leslie’s desk.

“Ah! Put them there!” he said and stood up elegantly to shove a large bill to the boy’s hand as a tip.

The boy’s eyes flashed.

“Thank you, sir!” he beamed and Thomas revealed his shiny teeth in a big smile.

“Good evening, young man” he sent him away with a charming, void smile and the boy bowed before closing the door behind him.

Leslie was staring at the young doctor sternly.

“What’s that, Thomas?”

He pouted and gestured to the bags’ imprinted firm and logo of the most expensive restaurant in Gotham.

“Isn’t it obvious? Delivery food. I was sure that you wouldn’t accept my invitation to abandon your clinic for a dinner so…I brought the dinner to the clinic.”

Leslie pinched the bridge of her nose.

“I don’t believe that “Masa” does delivery” she snorted.

Thomas smiled wickedly.

“Not everyone is as adamant in their principles as you…When the customer is as prestigious and generous as Dr. Elliot” he leaned towards her in conspiratorial way “and when you put 500 bucks to the manager’s pocket” he whispered “everything can be done.”

“You’re sly, Dr. Elliot” Leslie said in a way that it wasn’t possible to say if she was teasing or accusing.
So Thomas decided to go along; he shrugged innocently.

“I’m a medical doctor: of course I am! And I came here intending to bribe you into arrange a meeting with Bruce…”

Leslie’s lips twisted.

“You make me feel like a pimp” she said in a snarky voice.

Thomas cackled.

“My Goodness! No, definitely not!” he brought his armchair closer and sat. “So since my attempt on bribery had failed so miserably, at least, let’s enjoy that meal” he cocked his eyebrows “don’t tell them but “Masa” is overrated.”

He offered her the elegant container, the fork and knife that accompanied the meal and Leslie wondered how much Tommy spent for that ‘bribery’ as how much getting to Bruce meant to him and for what reasons.

“You like to throw away your money, Thomas” she took a bit of food just to not insult him.

He pursed his lips and lowered his eyes.

“I admit that I like the fancy life but I assure you that other really important things, things that matter have become my priority” he brought his armchair closer and sat. “And that’s why I want to meet Bruce again, for him to see the change and for us to become the friends that my stupidity thwarted us to be back then.”

Leslie shook her hand in the negative when Thomas made to pour whine from the pricy bottle included in his order. She wished to believe in Thomas’ words but every time he spoke about Bruce she felt the same clench in her guts as when Joker uttered her boy’s name.

Hero was sitting on his back legs in front of the Victorian, marble fireplace watching fascinated the flames dancing around the logs.

“He loves watching the fire” Bruce said grinning.

“Yeah…But I’m waiting something else here” Tony arched his eyebrows.

“Right… Well, the WT Cosmos is our attempt to create something fresh and original to the high tech field” Bruce was brushing the shining tablet proudly. “Of course Lucius can explain better the utilities and capabilities…” he turned his eyes to Lucius who had dropped in for dinner since his employer had invited him during his morning stay at the Wayne Tower.

Lucius waved the offer off with one of his charming smiles.

“I think you’re doing an excellent job promoting our product, Mr. Wayne” he chuckled.

Much to Tony’s appreciation…Because he honestly relished his friend’s sparkling, enthusiastic eyes and his livid voice. Well, Tony knew that Superman dressed in one of the civilian attires he had stashed in Bruce’s bedroom was also absorbed in goggling at Bruce. Tony rolled his eyes: Supes had forgotten Bruce for two days and now he was acting like a lovesick teen – hypocrite! But deep inside he hoped that he was wrong and Clark really was the lovesick teen…
Bruce coughed in his fist to hide his shyness at speaking about his company's creation. In front of strangers or adversaries Bruce emanated confidence and strength because of his iron will to prevail but among friends he was demure.

“First thing first: this gadget doesn’t need electricity or battery – it runs on perpetual energy from solar panels that store energy for the night or the cloudy days. It activates with the pressing of your fingerprint unless you set other preferences and it can turn from a big tablet to a smartphone or a small camera with the touch of this spot” he pointed to a round azure light on the bottom of the frame. “The camera is of 200MP, zoom and properties of a professional one. The screen is unbreakable and unscratchable with definition that rivals a plasma TV.”

He looked at Lucius to take his approval and the scientist nodded.

“It has the memory, the speed and the qualities of a laptop, also it can connect with stronger processors” he shook his head “like my own down in the cave and can be operated from your watch. The Cosmos’s frame displays scenes from the universe.”

He showed the back side where planets, nebulas and stars combined pink, purple and blue high definition colors in sleek black background, moving slowly.

“Which can change according to one’s preferences” he tapped the frame and the theme changed to other scenes from the universe displaying different colors and formations. “And in case someone wants a different theme displayed, there’s the possibility of using their own photos or videos or themes from the net. You can also type either using the concealed keyboard” he brushed the screen and in the bottom half of it emerged transparent buttons with letters and symbols and Superman beamed showing that he had already used that “or vocal dictation – there’s also the possibility of dictation by brain waves. The tablet possesses the latest GPS, the known apps and the best multimedia playing.”

Tony scratched his temple.

“Nice…It’s too frustrating watching porn with every fucking – literally! -frame pausing…”

Alfred scowled at him and Tony shrugged innocently.

“I’m just commenting on the practicality…”

“And a great proportion of this creation was made by Mr. Wayne himself” Lucius commented and Bruce really flushed casting an uncomfortable glance at his trustee who chuckled.

Selina jerked her head and Hero writhed surprised on her lap.

“I knew that during your visits at Thasos you and Bruce were up to something.”

“Indeed, Miss Kyle” Alfred elegantly seated in his rocking chair remarked nonchalantly a bit annoyed. “If I knew I’d have banned Mr. Fox.”

Lucius laughed benevolently.

“I assure you, Alfred, I didn’t bother much my employer: the vast majority of work was made the previous months between chasing the Joker and plotting against the League of Shadows.”

Tony was leaning against the back of his ergonomic leather chair at his office in the Avengers’ Tower, his hands under the nape of his neck, gazing at the New York sky from the glass – bullet and rocket proof – roof. He had to admit that Bruce’s gadget had the most realistic depiction of natural
The door opened hissing and Pepper’s heels echoed to the shining surface approaching. He jerked in his seat.

“Shit! I must change the settings of that door: you could catch me doing inappropriate things…”

Pepper crossed her arms and shrugged one shoulder.

“It wouldn’t be the first time…” Tony arched his eyebrows and smiled with tight lips in mock regret. “And if you keep the door locked it’d count against you.”

Tony nodded.

“Right! That would put me on probation like Supes” he sniggered.

Pepper sprawled on the chair before Tony’s desk.

“Speaking of which I thought you’d stay at the Manor.”

Tony leaned on the desk.

“After the afternoon virtual meeting with the sub directors I had another one with some Congress people and senators here – they are conservatives those guys and prefer physical presence” he frowned crossing his arms. “I thought you knew my schedule by heart.”

Pepper ruffled her long hair.

“Yes, but you’re notorious for screwing such meeting for your fun.”

Tony lolled his head on the side pouting.

“Now I’m hurt! You know how responsible I am…” Pepper rolled her eyes and snorted “with things that really matter and this was crucial for S.H.I.E.L.D.’s and the Avengers’ future” he sighed “we need to re-establish their trust after the revelations about the League of Shadows.”

Pepper smiled.

“I’m sure that Bruce is very proud of you – he knows that you prefer to be with him than with those boring people.”

Tony brought his palms to his face.

“The little guy was always proud of me even if I didn’t deserve it…” he commented bitterly.

Pepper locked her eyes with his.

“Bruce knows you better than anyone” Tony pursed his lips and scratched his ear uncomfortable.

“You should have seen him talking about the new multiform tablet” he beamed and Pepper reflected that. “His eyes were so warm and enthusiastic; he even flushed during the description. Hehe! He is so passionate about Wayne Enterprises!”

“You blame him?”

“Of course not – he wants to establish his company’s status to avoid new threats. It’s his father’s company and for so many years his murderer was running it tarnishing the respected name of Thomas Wayne. Bruce is happy with Wayne Enterprises’ successes because he feels that his father will be peaceful and justified…” he huffed. “And this gizmo is his baby…”

Pepper nodded thoughtful.

“So that tablet is really that good?”

Tony yanked his head huffing.

“Ugh! Stark Industries – that’s me – should have manufactured this first! The slim design, the unbelievable colors and graphics – even to the frame! – the utilities, the changing to smartphone and camera, the distant controlling from a watch!” he hit his palm to the desk.

“You’re not happy that Bruce’s company made that?”

Tony closed his eyes and lolled his head on the side exasperated.

“Of course I’m happy, Peps! I’m just an antagonistic bastard!” he laughed. “Kidding… I’ll include it to StarkExpo in the most prominent stand. And I’ll watch closely Bruce’s eyes glimmering from pride while WayneTech stand gets the spotlight. To the heck! I already pre-ordered one: I’m a shareholder and I deserve one before the public.”

Pepper smiled.

“I love the way Bruce makes your true self surface…”

Tony twisted his lips and ran his fingers through his hair.

“You had a nice trip from Malibu?”

“As always” Pepper answered nonchalant. “I’d prefer it if my destination was Gotham and saw Bruce and pals again but I have to prepare your S.H.I.E.L.D. reception.”

Tony stood up and slithered to her with a predatory expression.

“I prefer the term ‘party’ and…” he took Pepper’s hands and hoisted her with a wicked glimmer in his eyes. “Bruce told me to give you a kiss…”

He pulled her to him and rolled his eyes at their height difference. He stretched his body more, standing on the tips of his toes and cupped the back of Pepper’s head to lock their lips.

“Bruce told you to do that?” she asked through his mouth.

Tony closed his eyes.

“You have to scratch every detail? He did tell me but let it vague… I’m improvising here, girl!” he caressed her red locks and resumed the kiss.

His hands left her hair and slipped under her white, silken shirt feeling her soft abdominals up to her breasts while she cupped his face with both hands and deepened the kiss.

“ Exactly for how many people your office door opens automatically?” Pepper breathed her eyes slightly mocking.

Tony huffed frustrated but extracted his hand from the warmth of her body and press a button on the desk’s phone.

“Nobody…” he whispered sensually in her ear and she giggled; Tony knew that whispering in her ear made Pepper go limp.

Pepper laughed as Tony pulled her shirt out of the brown skirt and began unbuttoning sucking the crook of her neck that bent to the side.

“Do you realize that your office has glass walls and roof?”

“Bullet and rocket proof” Tony mumbled hastily continuing his work gently.

“Everyone can see inside…” she pointed the words and wrapped her arms around his neck nibbling his ear lob.

Tony cocked smugly an eyebrow and shrugged one shoulder.

“Not seeing us: MARVEL AT US, babe!” he growled and pushed the silk off Pepper’s torso letting the fabric slip to the floor.

Pepper laughed.

“You arrogant motherfucker!” she said through gritted teeth and her hands unbuckled his belt lowering his zip and groped his genitals.

Tony goggled and bit his lips before passing his tongue over them.

“Ughhhh! You drive me crazy when you’re speaking dirty…”

“Only speaking?” she pressed more his genitals and he sighed aroused.

He clutched her hips and twirled her body to sit her on the shining desk, plunging his mouth in her bulging breasts. His fingers were so skilled that her black lace bra was undone in a second freeing her breasts. Tony enjoyed Pepper’s sigh of relief and sucked the soft freed flesh ending up to the erect nipples as his personal assistant unbuttoned violently his shirt and took it off from his strong built body; her breaths were heavy and wet causing goose bumps to Tony as her teeth grazed softly or more angrily his shoulders.

Though his mouth and head were absorbed in licking Pepper’s sweaty breasts and abdominals, his experienced hands heaved her skirt for him to settle between those endless, perfect legs that opened for him engulfing his pelvis. His fingers got tangled to the waistband of her black lace panties lowering it till her knees.

Pepper was fondling his buttocks as his tongue in her underbelly drove her breaths and heartbeat mad; her long, lean fingers caressed his fully erect length to urge him to do what he procrastinated. She yanked her head that had reached the desk and her nails grazed Tony’s back.

“Tony…” her eyes flashed feverish meeting his in the dark, demanding.

He thrust in her and she trailed his pectorals with her hot lips; her legs that still bore the red stiletto heels tightened their embrace around his hips to guide him to the rhythm of her rasps and need.

They were both drenched in hot, shining sweat; their breaths wetting the office’s air. Tony moved frantically causing Pepper’s fingers pull his wet hair increasing the hot fire inside him and the electric current over his spine as her heels grazed softly his naked buttocks urging him to continue.
Brunno Mannheim stood before the whole wall window of his office overlooking the glittering Metropolis’ skyline. His hands were behind his back and his stare was bored: he didn’t like anything human made and he would have already demolished the entire city and smashed under his feet every human like a pest weren’t for his obsession with perfectness and victory. So he was willing to wait and stick to the plan – his victory couldn’t be complete without his machine that evaded him.

However being restricted in this ugly human form was enraging: he took satisfaction imagining the horror of those inferior beings when Darkseid’s gigantic, majestic figure would walk in Metropolis feeling their bodies crushed under his feet. Their Kryptonian protector slumped in a pile of waste defeated would be watching helpless till the master of the universe finished him off.

Tony and Pepper were tangled together leaning on the desk catching their breaths and enjoying relaxation after the climax. Pepper’s legs were still perched around Tony’s hips so he fondled her sweaty hips, his lax member resting inside her. Suddenly, the holographic US map emerged at the desk’s side with the red light of alarm bleeping.

Tony sighed frustrated.

“Why the bad guys think it their duty to nettle me?”

He detached pissed and glared at the map while Pepper fixed her skirt.

“Metropolis” Tony said.

“That’s Superman’s city” Pepper remarked clasping her bra.

“Yeah, but he is in Gotham right now; we need to make sure that nothing happens till he comes – we can’t ignore a distress call, do we?”

His armor wrapped his naked body.

“Do you think it’s bad that I’m naked under the armor?” he winked.

Pepper having worn her shirt shrugged.

“Only if your armor falls apart…”

Tony pouted rubbing his chin thoughtful.

“That would definitely scare those sonovabitches! Not bad…Not bad at all…” he murmured and flew from the roof that opened immediately sensing his ascend.

“Tell me” the cold, gravelly voice of the tycoon – gangster cracked the darkness of his office that was located at his skyscraper’s top floor. “You insisted on stealth and patience and now you suggested we control Morgan Edge’s brain to do this. Not that I have a problem with anything causing human casualties” he cocked an eyebrow “actually, it was the first good idea you had to offer. But, tell me, what made you change your views?”

The column of swirling thin air slithered to the middle of the room before it shaped into Bagdana’s near human form.
“I didn’t change my views” the demon replied striding towards his partner “this is actually part of the plan.”

He was standing right behind Mannheim but the window didn’t reflect him.

“It’s entertaining” Mannheim barked “but why Edge getting all the satisfaction?”

“Because we want everyone to believe that he was behind the burglaries in the science labs all over the states. He is brainwashed to do what we want, use Luthor’s weapons and get captured or killed. Thus you’ll have both a rival crime lord neutralized and the search away from you: someone could connect the dots to you.”

Mannheim cackled and snorted.

“You’re too fearful, Bagdana…What makes you believe that they could discover that I’m behind the raids? You’re giving too much credit to these inferior life forms.”

“You better stop underestimating them: I suggested using a gangster because someone might already be investigating.”

Mannheim turned slightly his square head to him.

“Who?”

Bagdana’s eyes lost their redness and also their focus as if looking somewhere else.

“Batman. You want him misled.”

Bagdana couldn’t gain access to Bruce’s thoughts or monitor what he was doing yet he was sure that once in Gotham his favorite Bat certainly was investigating the burglaries at LexLabs: they were his property now and Bruce was always suspicious about Luthor and his shady partners. Despite their decoy-attacks to other labs as well, the demon was positive that Bruce would dig every detail unless they managed to draw his attention elsewhere.

Darkseid’s human thin lips stretched into a smirk.

“He is just a human” he said with contempt.

“Many people claim that he is a demon…”

“Then…what’s your verdict since you’re an expert?”

Bagdana licked his dry lips.

“He is a human but do not let this fool you: he discovered and revealed the League of Shadows’ scheme and sent Luthor to jail.”

Mannheim huffed hautfly.

“They are also humans” he waved dismissingly “your…Batman is good only in facing other humans. You weren’t defeated by him after all…”

Bagdana’s face was expressionless like stone and Mannheim left his position to walk to his desk.

“I don’t share your reasons but I certainly countersign Edge’s destruction – I’d prefer it if he is killed in the process but his incarceration for my gang’s crimes is a pleasure too. Besides I think it’s time we stop the needless, stupid, fruitless raids to random labs and aim directly at our target: Luthor would be forced to tell me. My tolerance with this fool is getting short: I feel like he ridicules me from his cell.”

Bagdana was still gazing from the window, completely disinterest about his partner’s rambling.

Mannheim realized and looked at him sideways with a gleeful shine in his red eyes that made sharp contrast with his human features. Darkseid knew how to get back his minion’s attention.

“As for this Batman of yours, since you think so highly of him and since you want him and Bruce Wayne unharmed and unspoiled” he cocked a thick black eyebrow seeing Bagdana’s dark gaze fixed on him “I’ll have plenty of time to experiment on them to find what so special they hide.”

The demon without any movement made, was standing in front of Mannheim with his diamond sharp and shiny teeth bare.

“Our agreement was to keep them for myself” he was rasping and sparks accompanied every exhale.

Mannheim smirked.

“Of course. I have no interest in humans except to maim and annihilate them” he sniggered and walked to his private elevator.

It’d be so much easier and pleasant for his superiority to just vanish and reappear in his Mansion but people should see him acting like a human to not get suspicious – not that he cared much but he wanted his machine first to finish this properly.

Bagdana watched him through red slids till he was lost: he didn’t trust Darkseid – Hell! He was a demon and he knew better than trusting gods especially of Darkseid’s kind. But he was using him for his purposes as the new god was doing with him. Besides, he was sure that his partner definitely didn’t trust him as well.

“My probation terms include sleeping on the couch? Because I’ll choose the floor instead – it’s closer to you” Clark had asked half serious, half joking as he was buttoning the last of his pajama shirt, his eyes fixed on Bruce doing the same albeit slower and with more effort.

Bruce’s right hand had been for six years cripple and malformed, completely immobile and in horrid pain. Then Ra’s had fixed it perfectly into managing Batman’s fighting effortless and effectively. But even then fine movements were a problem.

After the factory’s collapse Bruce’s both arms suffered major fractures that were treated by Jor El and with internal energy casts into almost perfect mobility – but still more time was needed for perfecting fine motor skills. So the accumulative effect of the past and new injuries was evident in Bruce’s difficulty to manage something that for everyone else was mundane. The left hand had been perfectly restored but the buttoning required both hands.

Clark felt his body nervous to assist him but Bruce would surely feel bad and that wouldn’t help his case. So he watched fascinated Bruce’s concentration on his task.

“Paraplegics are prone to hypothermia so I want a heater by my side just in case…” Bruce chuckled and raised his eyes to Clark who saw the satisfaction in them for ending the buttoning without help.
Clark clapped.

“So I have to thank my Kryptonian physiology for this clemency!”

Bruce nodded and wheeled his chair to the bed; Clark knew better than helping him settle on the mattress so instead sprawled to his side pretending that didn’t watch his mate’s seemingly effortless shifting from chair to mattress.

Bruce covered his non-responsive legs with the blankets and took his tablet from the nightstand.

“Alfred permits that?” Clark asked playfully.

Bruce clapped once and the lights went off but for the tablet’s torch like lighting.

“He doesn’t have to learn…” Bruce answered nonchalant.

Clark slipped his arm around the younger man’s shoulders and Bruce cast him a sideways glance.

“What?” Clark shrugged. “You just made me your accomplice and I don’t like deceiving Alfred so I need some bribing” Bruce glared at him from narrowed, panther like eyes and Clark hastened to add “also, you said that you want me for the heat. And that light could harm your eyes, you know.”

“No: Cosmos screen has filters that eliminate the harm to the eyes even in complete darkness.”

Clark rested his head in the crook of Bruce’s neck enjoying the skin there and the perfume.

“Mmm…when I am allowed to publish my exclusive on Wayne Enterprises’ new wonder?”

Bruce was absorbed in scrolling archives on the screen.

“I think we’ll keep it for StarkExpo…”

Clark wasn’t annoyed in the least by that: the past months he was benefited by exposing many of Bruce’s secrets under the special Kryptonite’s sick effect so honestly he didn’t want to use anymore Bruce’s name in anything concerning his job as a reporter.

Bruce was now scrolling the list with the items found in LexLabs: some of them had a description or a name and some others only a question mark because their qualities and utilities were unknown and currently under research. Many items had in common the word ‘Kryptonite’ in their description. Clark would have shuddered if all these items weren’t in the safe hands of Bruce.

“Is there a Kryptonite paddle somewhere in that list?” Clark asked interested and Bruce turned to him perplexed.

“Why?”

Clark slithered his hands to Bruce’s back and nibbled the younger man’s neck causing a joyful increase to his heartbeat that peaked when Clark’s lips moisturized his ear.

“I was thinking that perhaps my probation would be shorter if some really deserved spanking sessions were added…Would that satisfy you?” he whispered sensually.

However his mood was instantly changed feeling Bruce tensing and Clark realized that his mate was reliving what he could only imagine… He had seen the horrific marks on Bruce’s buttocks from Falcone’s brutal spanking. He bit his lips and closed his eyes: stupid Clark!
But Bruce hearing his intake of air obviously realized Clark’s thoughts and shook himself.

“I didn’t know you for a masochist?” he asked with widened eyes and Clark decided to follow his lead into lightening the mood and took Bruce’s hand gently to touch it to his lips.

“From your hands I’d take everything…”

Clark thanked once again his Kryptonian physiology that made him independent of sleep and allowed him to watch Bruce’s face deep in sleep.

Those strong drugs caused drowsiness that although Bruce wanted couldn’t defeat. So the tablet lay on the nightstand having closed automatically after some time of being unused. Clark knew that Bruce hated his dependency on medication but he was grateful because those drugs eliminated the pain: even after almost four months Bruce would be in considerable pain without them.

And the medication granted him long, much needed restful sleep: Clark cringed only in the thought of Bruce’s sleep being disturbed every now and then from nightmares and flashbacks. He knew that Crane had tortured Bruce through this, administering substances that created horrible nightmares exactly the moment Bruce was falling in deep sleep. The insane doctor wanted to destabilize through exhaust his mental state to brainwash him.

He touched his lips to Bruce’s forehead: his temperature was a bit increased but that was in the limits of the young man’s ‘normal’ temperature changes.

He smiled watching each and every swallow, calm inhale and exhale of air from the youth’s barely open lips. Clark was completely immobile not wanting to change anything…

Because Bruce had his arms wrapped around Clark’s neck nestling his head to Superman’s broad chest. It seemed that his probation was suspended…

His palm cupped the place where Bruce’s heart beat calm and strong: he could hear that melody from thousands of miles away but touching the vibrating muscle was a whole different, fascinating sensation that made him go numb.

He took gently the stray locks that had fallen over Bruce’s eyelids and brought them to their place; his fingertips ran feathery his cheekbones to the jaw and Bruce unconsciously hid more his face to Clark’s chest.

“You loved me from then?” Clark had asked him once.

And actually it was a stupid question: Bruce loved him from then, when he was a scared child; he loved him from the footage of a shaking camera. And Bruce remained a child, even now…Well, he definitely refused that with his attitude all day long but when asleep, when his defenses were eased, without realizing, that child surfaced. The child that was declared dead; the child that was living an everyday, slow, horrific death in Falcone’s hands.

His eyes caressed Bruce’s face exactly as he was doing all the time during that month in the Fortress. His insides clenched on that memory and he kissed those lips as he did that night when Bruce succumbed to his injuries.

He remembered the small gray tombstone beside those of the Waynes… BRUCE WAYNE: from all the memories imprinted to his eidetic memory this humble inscription was among those he wanted to erase. He had demolished that stone but the memory still lay there prickling him.

Clark nuzzled Bruce’s neck with closed eyes: he couldn’t afford to lose that perfume, that flesh…
though he could catch that young physiotherapist’s scent even on Bruce’s neck. He sighed and kept rubbing his flesh to Bruce’s to scrub out that annoying scent: the only other acceptable scent on Bruce was Clark’s.

Of course he understood that a man confined in a chair needed that massage even to his neck; it must be uncomfortable and painful for even the healthy muscles…

His hands travelled feathery Bruce’s body that was touched to his; below the waist felt awkward reminding him that Bruce brought his body to him using only his arms. He slipped his hands inside Bruce’s waistband fondling the younger man’s taut, soft flesh ending to his genitals and then with the other hand touched Bruce’s anus feeling his hot blood rushing to his head.

He desired, needed to get inside that body: sometimes that inanimate sun of their planet system wasn’t enough – he needed the life giving power of his mate. He felt his fingers tremble to slither inside Bruce: if he prepared him very carefully penetration wouldn’t harm him – he’d be very, very cautious and besides Bruce wouldn’t feel anything…

Clark held his fingers just before they stormed inside and he pressed his lips: he couldn’t risk it and Bruce deserved to enjoy everything as much as he. Bruce should walk again. He withdrew his hands hastily and hugged him tighter…

When Bruce had told them that the man that Joker almost killed was the thug who caused the fire in Chickey’s factory, Clark honestly couldn’t blame Joker…

His eyes fell on Bruce’s peaceful face and he bit his lips ashamed: he couldn’t be like Joker and killing that mentally retarded man couldn’t have changed anything…

All of a sudden, his hearing caught something distant: people screaming and alarms going crazy. Metropolis’ subway. They might have gone to sleep at ten but now at midnight, Metropolis’ subway was packed with people coming or going to clubs or other events or to their night shifts.

Damn! He stared affectionately at Bruce who unconsciously had brought his hand over Clark’s heart. He had to go, though his body didn’t want to part his other half. Carefully, gingerly he disentangled himself and placed Bruce on the mattress muffling him meticulously with the blankets.

He stood up and cast another regretful glance at Bruce. Then he remembered something and flew to Hero’s basket.

“Hero, wake up!” he whispered and the kitten opened his eyes unhappy. “I need you to look after Bruce.”

Hero stretched his body graciously and silently ran to the bed, climbing and settling beside Bruce “I trust you, buddy” he said arching his eyebrows impressed and the kitten’s eyes glimmered in the darkness as if nodding.

Clark plunged a soft kiss to Bruce’s lips and sighed before launching for Metropolis from the open window that he closed before leaving.

“There are at least thirty armed people scattered around the main area of the central station, sir; some citizens are cowering behind the cashiers but the shooters roam the area and rake everything with bullets. Police cars are fast approaching but I’m afraid that there are already civilians dead or wounded.”
“Fuck!” Tony exclaimed gritting his teeth as his system got image.

He scanned the station for any explosives or gas and he was relieved but also surprised at not finding anything. Terrorists usually had some nasty surprises like these waiting.

“Do you want me to alert the Avengers, sir?”

“No, they’re scattered all over the planet and it’d be too late when they arrive – I can handle those motherfuckers” he was seeing their projection in his helmet’s systems: they didn’t seem to follow a plan or take some precaution as if the only thing they cared about was causing as much bloodshed as possible. “Wait!” their guns were prototypical and he immediately crossed them with the list of registered weaponry where they matched a specific LexLabs’ model Bruce had supplied to his data and the ministry’s logs. “Yup! Our Luthor-boy has a very broad social circle!”

He was hovering over the stairs leading to the underground station. He was trying to neutralize their ammunition the way Lucius had developed but they were still out of range due to the underground so he had to get inside first.

“I’m getting in, Jarvis.”

“I’m with you!”

Tony rolled his eyes and huffed because he knew the voice and didn’t need to look his indicators to identify it.

“I thought you were with Bruce.”

“Super hearing” Clark replied pressing his lips because he knew that inside the station people were dying or already dead.

Superman punched the air and rushed ahead of Tony who sped up to catch him.

Thankfully, upon realizing Superman and Ironman were there, the terrorists stopped shooting at people and opened fire against them while Superman had already stormed at a cluster of men scattering them with a punch.

“Showoff!” Tony scoffed sending a wave of electricity to a man ready to shoot a woman who ran scared hugging her baby.

He was ready to neutralize the firearms of those before him when he realized that Superman’s eyes were all red and at the point to hit the guns to melt them.

“Don’t!” he yelled at him. “You’re going to blow everything up! I’m on this!”

Superman didn’t lose any second: since he couldn’t use his laser beams he blew up and the icy wave from his chest catapulted five of them to the opposite wall. He surged against them to knock them out his face contorted from rage.

But then he felt the peculiar sense of hot stones hitting his back and he turned slowly to see two guys emptying their machine guns on him; their failure to harm the Man of Steel had infuriated them and the bullets kept falling like rain at him.

Tony had already defused the firearms in his range and turned to the men shooting at Superman. He raised his palm sending the waves to break down the machine guns and simultaneously his other palm sent laser beams to break the legs of a man who realizing that his gun was useless pulled out a nasty looking knife and stormed against a teen. The man howled and collapsed, his knife scattered from another beam.

Superman was already on his assailants when the firearms silenced and it took only an uppercut to knock them out.

“'You welcome’ Tony remarked snidely at Superman, already storming at a ticket booth where the terrorists had covered; the Man of Steel snorted.

“If I relied on you I’d be dead now…” he said grabbing the knives of five men at once and crushing the metal like paper.

“So why are you whining about?’

Superman was catapulting his adversaries to the walls as if they were pests but some others had scattered among the frenzied civilians using their blades to cause harm rather than flee from the scene as if they didn’t care to escape.

“Sir, they are mingling with the crowd: you can’t use your firepower” Jarvis’s collected voice pointed out.

Tony rolled his eyes as his bullets hit the last man behind the booth adding him to the pile of moaning, useless terrorists.

“Tell me something I don’t know already!” he snapped and turned towards the yelling crowd who ran to nowhere.

Superman was in the havoc trying to fight every terrorist he could locate before they killed more people and Tony clenching his teeth decided to do the same though Ironman wasn’t made for close combat. Every time a yell of pain was heard both heroes were desperate, their enemies seemed to be endless and changing form like chameleons till their blades injured someone.

At least now police officers were engaged too barking orders to the assailants to surrender…to no avail. So truncheons were out and the cops began the same effort to separate innocents from terrorists.

“Sir, a train is heading to the station” Jarvis said.

“Block its system and stop it!”

Bagdana was alone in Mannheim’s dark office. He stood in front of the glass wall and his eyes saw to the mayhem at the subway. Yet his mind travelled miles away where the meaning of his existence was sleeping alone…

He felt the urge to go there but the protective vibrations of the damn diamond were powerful shielding Bruce and thwarting him to emerge there. He could only listen to his quiet breaths and his steady, peaceful heartbeats…

Superman got two men from their collars and snapped their heads together knocking them out – Tony was shooting beams from his fingers opting for precision and aware that bullets could cause more panic.
Panic was pushing people to the edge of the platform in their struggle to avoid the violence that had spread around them from good and bad guys together.

Superman’s and Tony’s eyes bulged as a horrific collective scream came from the rails. The people that crammed on the edge were pushed from newcomers and fell on the rail. And the clear sound of an approaching train filled the station with horror.

“Fuck! I told you to stop it!” Tony barked to Jarvis.

“I did, sir. But something intercepted my signal and reignited the engines. I’m trying to block it again but I can’t gain access to the control panel.”

“Shit!” Tony cursed drenched in his sweat and along with Superman whose face was disfigured from anger and horror dived there.

“Don’t be afraid, Dick; we’re almost there…”

The beams supporting the upper level creaked and moaned, the fire’s rage howling throughout the space. The smoke was too dense and acid; his lungs hurt because he used his cape to cover the boy and not himself. His heart was pounding from agony for the boy whose life depended on him but he willed it to beat calmly. His body was in pain and he felt that he would collapse at any moment like the whole building. Yet he clenched his jaw and kept running hiding the rasping of his breath to not panic Dick.

He managed to push the boy forward just a second before the final crack and the nightmarish sound of the entire upper level collapsing. Just a second before he was crushed to the floor: his spine shattered and there was pain, crucifying pain as if eighteen years of pain were accumulated.

He had hidden from Clark the truth because he was already too sad; he never told him how much it pained as the metallic rods, hot from the chemical fire, stabbed his legs and his fractured bones ripped his muscles or his broken ribs pierced his lungs and his spleen. And then when the fire rapidly defeated his armor’s protection and began eating away his flesh…

He never told Clark about the agonizing minutes before his nerves below the waist were dead; he never told him about what he was experiencing right now: the air ending at his lungs with every breath that burnt his collapsing organs and his heart pounding desperately to fight all the injuries and the pain from his upper body since his pelvis and legs didn’t exist anymore.

He was feeling every drop of blood oozing from his body like streams; he felt the blood trickling from his nostrils and mouth; he sensed the life leaving him and the hell of the burning building was swirling around him; the sound of the roof grunting and howling at the verge of falling and finishing him off filled him with dread and relief because his pain and agony would soon end…

His heart was now kicking his rugged ribs adding new pain; every rasping breath vomited blood; his head was spinning…He’d never see again his loved ones…

Maybe that was why he never told Clark about the pain: because Superman didn’t make it on time…He died in excruciating pain and agony at Chicky’s factory; everything else – the Fortress, the new Hero, the island – was a beautiful dream, a wishful flash during his dying moments. Bruce closed his eyes because the tombstone of this realization smashed his heart worse than the tone of debris.
The collective scream of horror was immediately replaced by yells of joy and Tony with Clark hovered in midair watching in disbelief.

“I could use some help here, Kal” a smug female voice greeted him.

Wonder Woman was standing with her legs spread wide over the rail in order to give more strength to her hands holding the train away from the fallen citizens that one by one got in their feet still numb realizing their luck.

“Of course!” Clark’s face relaxed in a brilliant beam and rushed to add his hands to the train’s front while the driver was meddling with his buttons to stop the engine.

Tony snorted.

“In what century they live? Obsolete fools!” he shook his head disapproving of his fellow heroes and used his waves to shut down the engines immobilizing the train. “Brains always beat muscle!”

He lowered to the ground helping people get on the platform; officers were there grabbing men and women to the safety and only when the rails were empty the amazon and Superman flew away to land on the platform were people already were cheering for Ironman who had deactivated his face plate to flash his magazine smile.

“He is in his element!” Superman chuckled eyeing his friend.

“Ironman” she snorted “I’ve heard of him: another arrogant man pretending the god!”

Superman frowned and turned to her.

“You’re unfair…Stark brags a lot, sometimes becomes a pain in the butt but he is honest and doesn’t give a damn about becoming a god: he enjoys what he is and really wants to help. People were saved thanks to him.”

She clenched her hips and cast a sideways glance to the billionaire; her eyebrow arched.

“You’re too generous in your assessment of the humans… Anyway, maybe I’m a bit frustrated that it’s been 24 hours since I last saw you and…once again a train was needed to bring us together” she smiled and Superman couldn’t fight his face muscles from forming a smile.

Suddenly, gunshots were heard from a kiosk behind the corner and Superman stormed to put his body between the bullets and the crowd that once again screamed. Diana flew behind the corner and Superman heard her bracelets clanging together before a man’s scream echoed through the tunnel.

Bagdana inhaled deeply and closed his eyes: he could create Bruce’s form in his mind but he wanted proximity – tonight he couldn’t resist his demanding need. He didn’t want to reveal that he was free now neither he could due to the black diamond’s protection. But his thought, his spirit could fly to him to suck his aura…Like he did when that Ubu’s repellents kept him away from the mountain where they tortured his Bruce.

Superman rushed there seeing the kiosk demolished and a man sprawled on the debris, his head bleeding. Clark was shocked to recognize Edge; he was an infamous gangster but definitely not a terrorist… And now definitely not alive.
Diana was supporting her impressive, proud posture on her spread legs, her hands clenching her hips. She turned her head to him, her face glowering. Suddenly, without any other word she flew to him and slammed her body to Superman grabbing his head and attacking his lips.

He was astonished at first, numb, doubting that this was happening but as Diana was massaging fierce and softly his lips he realized that his mouth was reciprocating enjoying the feeling. The sense of her smooth and taut breasts brushing his chest; the feeling of her so alive and warm hips rubbing to his groin…He closed his eyes immersing to the pleasant vibrations: he had missed the sensations of a warm pelvis on his own… His hands on their own slithered down to her waist to wrap her body closer to lose himself in her intoxicating perfume of every blossom of the world.

It was the sound of feet, almost silent feet, and in an odd way towered the last creaking of the roof. He opened his eyes just a slid; his breaths were now shallow, insufficient, hissing, burning his dying lungs. He wanted to clench his fists to gain some strength but the pain was too much and the burden of the debris smashing his arms.

He looked up: Clark hadn’t come, he was sure. But he couldn’t make out who was in front of him: the dense smoke, his failing eyes, his head’s spinning.

Slowly the fog cleared somewhat and he managed to eventually focus. It was a giant in the color of granite – a giant he knew from his fourteen years: a giant with silver spikes for hair and two ivory small horns. His red blazing eyes stared down at him and though the demon should be scowling at him, his eyes were sad.

“I could let you die and get your soul for eternity…” his voice was suave, soft but still managed to cover the nightmarish noise of the roaring fire and the collapsing building. “But I want your body alive as well…”

And suddenly the pain stopped and the building was a distant memory like a bad dream; he was among sparkling stars, hovering, held by two enormous, caring arms. His head was carefully placed on his carrier’s chest. He opened his eyes slowly to meet affectionate red eyes.

“You always knew that Superman never came for you; you knew that it was a big lie…”

Bruce shook his head in denial because he doubted if his lungs could sustain any voice.

Bagdana leaned and kissed tenderly his forehead.

“My poor boy…My precious soul mate…My eternal Lilith” he whispered and Bruce felt his body light as a feather – every care, every distress of the world distant. “Only your Bagdana is real…”

The demon’s square, meaty lips captured his, pumping life into him. Bruce was watching him unable to decide if he liked or hated this and this indecisiveness was agony.

“No!” he spat and took away his lips causing a sigh from the demon.

“You know I’m your destiny, Bruce! The Kryptonian is just a dream, a stupid dream and you’ll wake and you’ll suffer!”

“Liar!” he screamed. “Let me go!”

But the demon’s hold became tighter, stronger, incarcerating him. Bagdana’s eyes spat fires.
Jimmy Olsen followed Lois Lane to the subway station; it was midnight but she ordered him to be there ASAP. Her eyes were almost crazy as she waited for a chance to break the police line around the rolling stairs. Which happened when screams came from the station and the officers’ attention turned there.

Lois grabbed him from the upper arm and dragged him from the stairs almost crashing him to the floor.

“I hope you brought your camera” she yelled because with all this noise it was difficult to hear even herself.

“Always, Miss Lane!” he pulled his professional camera out of his bag.

She released him and her frantic eyes scanned the hellish scene.

“Start shooting then!” she barked and rushed among the scared people, her smartphone already in tape mode.

Jimmy took hundreds of shots: from the terrorists, the destruction, the dead bodies scattered around, the injured, the babies that cried in their parents’ arms, the officers handcuffing the terrorists that the two superheroes had knocked out and sending away the civilians that could still walk. He also shot Wonder Woman and Superman halting the train and Ironman blocking the engine and then helping people out of the rails.

Lois was gesturing now for him to come to her for taking photos but Jimmy saw Superman following Wonder Woman to the kiosk behind the corner and he knew that there would be something juicy there.

And he found it: Superman and Wonder Woman French kissing! His camera went on fire taking shot after shot.

Diana’s hips were glued to his groin that twitched appreciating the stimulation that was miserably missing all these months; because Bruce’s pelvis was wooden, with awkward temperature and muscle tone… He saw Bruce’s face nestled trustfully in his chest, his hand cupping Clark’s heart.

Superman’s hands jerked from Diana’s hips and held her shoulders detaching her from his lips though the pleasant numbness lingered torturing.

“Diana, this is wrong” he said though his lips did say the opposite.

She frowned and shook her head.

“Why, Kal? You’re a single man and I am a single woman; and I see in your eyes that you like me as much as I like you.”

Superman’s head dropped and he clutched his hips.

“Unless you’re lying and you do have someone” she accused him.

Clark yanked his head.
“No, but what you propose can’t happen, Diana; I’m sorry: you’re my ally and my friend but other than that…”

She shook her head and chuckled.

“This is…unreasonable…crazy… I know you enjoyed the kiss… though your lips had another scent besides your own” she smiled wickedly “an intoxicating scent of rare, sensual cinnamon mixed with orange and hibiscus – a scent I met again” her eyebrows arched in deep irony.

Superman gulped but his gaze became stern.

“You’re mistaken, Princess.”

She lolled her head on the side and smiled, her blue black hair sparkling in the artificial light.

“I’m glad I did because then you’d eventually come to see me as something other than a friend” she shook her head laughing and her feet left the ground.

She flew towards the opposite end of the tunnel but she stopped and turned her head to look at Superman with a shine in her eyes.

“How could I think even for a moment that you would kiss someone with such scent?” Superman narrowed his eyes. “Someone with your sensitive nose would be disgusted kissing someone who smells of so many different, horrible scents…Scents of other men… Brutal men who took everything and left so much filth…” her voice was hissing. “Some smells are too recent…” she shrugged. “See you soon, Kal” she brought her fist to her heart and flew away.

Bruce clenched his jaw and tried to writhe in the demons embrace but his body was completely paralyzed and Bagdana smiled.

“You understand now that everything you consider reality is a hallucination? You never came out of the caves” suddenly they were inside Gotham’s so familiar, so loved caverns; Bagdana nodded knowingly. “You belong to these caves, to my kingdom: to me!”

Bats rushed suddenly from every corner forming a cloud around them; the sound of their wings accompanying the demon’s joyful, triumphant laugh and Bruce felt defeated, overwhelmed, resigned…

A loud hiss towered every other sound…

Clark stayed dumbstruck: his olfactory brain center pushed to his nose the acid, aggressive scent of Bane’s arousal and climax when Superman held Bruce in his arms leaving Mt. Murcy…and then Ra’s Al Ghul’s and Falcone’s and Chill’s: odors hidden behind the seductive, enchanting cinnamon, but still there: his stomach twisted painfully.

But then hurried footsteps drove him out of his shocking realization and he remembered the distinctive clicks during the kiss when he didn’t have the will to part from Diana’s lips and body. Clicks of a camera. Jimmy Olsen’s camera.

The youth was walking hurriedly back to the crowd but the Man of Steel landed before him smoothly with his arms crossed and a smile brushing his face.
“I think you have something of mine…” he said calmly and stretched his hand to Jimmy eyeing his camera.

Jimmy wasn’t scared of Superman but he was shocked by his presence and he couldn’t deny his request: after all, Superman could burn his camera if he refused. He gave the camera.

Clark saw the photos he was interested in and deleted them. When he perused the entire memory of the camera and didn’t find anything insulting gave it back to Jimmy.

“Thank you” he said politely and knitted his eyebrows. “I’d appreciate it if you don’t share what you saw – you know, privacy…Daily Planet isn’t exactly a gossip rag, huh?”

“Oof course” the youth stuttered still numb.

Superman saluted him in military style and floated to Tony who turned at him frowning.

“Where were you?”

“They aren’t terrorists” Clark opted to change the subject. “They are gangsters of the Edge gang – a Metropolis gangster.”

Tony yanked his head pouting deep in thought.

“What are you thinking?” Superman asked.

“In the end, from up close it’s 8,4 not 8,5” he nodded in conviction.

“Huh?”

“You wouldn’t understand” he shook his head and flew towards the exit.

Bagdana had his eyes closed and through his spirit that had invaded Bruce’s bedroom was relishing the youth’s powerful yet suffering aura.

And then an aggressive, loud hiss revealed another presence and the demon in Mannheim’s office jerked as his kicked off spirit returned hastily to its master.

Bruce opened his eyes to pitch black; he was panting and his heart writhed in a body drenched in cold sweat. He couldn’t discern anything; he had woken up but to what? He knew nothing about his surroundings but for one was sure: Clark wasn’t there. So it was true: he was in the caverns, he could see a shadow looming over him. Two small circles flashed in the darkness and Bruce cringed cursing his useless legs.

But then his eyes adjusted a bit and he distinguished a form that he recognized as Hero: the kitten had arched his back in defensive-aggressive stance and his entire fur to his erect tail was standing on edge reminding spikes. Hero had hissed.

“Calm down, buddy. Don’t be afraid…” he whispered but he was holding his own heart; he was still panting and his right lung burnt a bit.

You must not panic: the lung isn’t collapsing… just breath... He began applying diaphragmatic, deep breaths maintaining eventually normal respiration and heartbeat.
He touched carefully Hero’s head and the animal seemed to relax. With his other hand he opened the drawer and pressed his thumb’s fingertip for the second level to emerge. He wrapped his fingers around the dagger’s hilt and it was like the Knife of Justice welcomed him. He switched on the lamp at his nightstand.

He already knew that nobody was here but with the light on roamed the room once again. He released the Knife and focused on calming the still growling animal.

“Sssssss, Hero; hush…It’s alright now…” he was caressing Hero along with his reassurance and when the kitten calmed his posture, Bruce raised himself in sitting position and hugged him pecking his pink nose. “Who was here, buddy?”

The kitten purred still shaken and meowed to his master but was unable to say anything, not that he had seen something concrete; he only sensed something.

“It’s okay…your friend had a nightmare and his thrashing scared you” he looked again at the other side of the mattress. “And where’s Clark?”

He took his Cosmos from the nightstand and pressed his fingertip in the reception at the down left corner. The desktop immerged immediately and Bruce opened the internet browser: Daily Planet was his home page and answered all his questions at once:

BREAKING NEWS (Update): the Metropolis’ subway attack comes to an end – 10 people dead, 90 injured.

There was a big photo of Superman and Ironman in action and another with Wonder Woman halting a train with her bare hands just some feet before it squashed several people on the rails.
Chapter 22

Dick brought the can of beer in his mouth and took a long sip as his expressionless gaze was seeing but not perceiving the city that lied before him. Jason sat on the ledge of the rooftop his legs dangling and puffed in the air the smoke from his cigarette and his exhale, enjoying the clouds of fume the cold atmosphere created.

“Yar granny won’t smell the beer?” the younger boy looked up at his standing friend and downed the last of his own beer.

“I brush my teeth as soon as I woke up – she won’t notice anything; and she would be fast asleep when I slip to my room from the fire escape…”

Jason protruded his lower lip recalling how sweet and caring Ms. Turner was when a few hours ago he hesitantly went to visit his friend at their apartment. He wouldn’t have said no for a granny like her: she even baked them cupcakes!

“Ya know, Dick…It’s wrong to fool yar granny like this” Dick looked down at him frowning. “I like her…”

“I doubt you tell your mom about your night strolls…” he challenged him.

Jason shrugged.

“She doesn’t care much…” he looked at the sky “an’ has a lot on her head…It’s better now she works in the Haven but still takes pills an’ drinks to sleep…” he had dropped the pretended tough voice and unknowingly was speaking in his real, child voice.

Dick pressed his lips because he knew how difficult his friend’s life was; he sat down beside him.

“I’m not fooling my granny” he defended. “I just don’t want her to worry about me – she wouldn’t allow me to wander so late and then I’d have to run away…What she doesn’t know isn’t hurting her.”

Jason shook his head and brought the cigarette back to his mouth.

“Yep but I feel guilty” Dick cackled and Jason narrowed his eyes. “’Cause she trusts me an’ I pull ya down!” he scratched his messy locks “I mean, this is my world an’ I like it an’ it’s cool but ya’re different an’ don’t belong…”

Dick crooked his lips amused and sniggered.

“C’mee on, Jay: I’m older than you! I’m doing what I want, you don’t corrupt me…Corrupt…” he sneered. “We’re not doing anything wrong” he shrugged.

Jason was pissed from his friend’s mockery and sucked his cigarette to the end dropping it to the street.

“Yeah? Then why are ya sneakin’ out an’ don’t tell yar grunny?” he retorted.

Dick shook his head.

“Because she is overprotective and doesn’t understand. And I need this…I need to clear my head from everything, from the lies…”
“Yar granny isn’t lying!”

The older boy arched an eyebrow.

“How do you know? I know she is kind and sweet and caring and she does it to protect me but I feel that she hides the truth.”

Jason lit another cigarette.

“That Zucco guy made ya think like this…” he took a sip from his beer. “Ya trust him more than yar granny?” his voice was outraged. “Man, that dude is crap: don’t let him ruin yar relationship with yar granny.”

Dick sighed: Jason didn’t understand.

“He doesn’t; on the contrary, he always reminds me how important my granny is” Jason cocked his eyebrows and twisted his lips in disbelief. “Jay, he is my uncle” he locked eyes with the younger boy “he was my dad’s cousin and his best buddy and trainer: he said to me things that nobody else did and granny always speaks ill of him to drive me away as if she’s afraid of something.”

“Perhaps she is afraid for ya” Dick rolled his eyes. “Dick, ya don’t know this man: if he really gave a shit about ya why ya never saw him before?”

“Ugh, Jay! Granny hates him and mom hated him too so how was he supposed to approach me?”

Jason smoked gazing the city.

“If he was really yar daddy’s pal why would they hate him?” he glanced at his friend shrugging.

“Things are complicated, Jay…It seems that my mom and dad was fighting a lot and mom was gonna divorce him – maybe for that she didn’t want Tony near me then so I don’t learn. And granny continues that.”

“Zucco told ya that?” his eyes widened disapproving. “And ya believed him?!” he shook his head exasperated and laughed. “Man, ya’re a jerk if ya believe everythin’ he’s telling ya. Ya don’t know him!”

Dick’s head dropped.

“Mom did get married too fast after dad’s death…as if she didn’t care much…”

Jason lolled his head on the side.

“Don’t let him do that to ya, man…Don’t let him screw yar mom’s memory or what yar got with yar granny.”

Dick stared at the void deep in thought: Jay’s words had an impact. But he was so confused; some months ago he was careless, happy with his family, everything was simple and it took only one night to upturn his whole life and plunge him in shit.

“But he makes me feel nice” he remarked “he makes me feel as if I knew my dad.”

Jason closed his eyes; he could sense his friend’s suffering and struggling. He threw his second cigarette.

“This is his game, Dick! Of course he’ll make ya feel nice to gain yar trust an’ spit his poison!”
Dick lolled his head and cast a lopsided glance to Jason.

"'Cause you know so much about life, huh?" he spat snidely.

“I’m born an’ raised in Narrows, man! One of my rip-off nights makes for yar entire life!"

Dick started giggling on that and gave a one armed hug to his friend ruffling his raven hair: Jay made him forget his problems and laugh as he did with Brian.

“You can brag about your criminal life now that Batman is dead, huh?” he teased him.

“You don’t want him hear you saying that, kiddo!” a seductive female voice made them jump and turn behind.

They both goggled, mouths agape on a tall, lean woman with breathtaking curves swaying towards them with confidence and a sly smile on her red colored juicy lips. She was dressed in a black leather skin tight outfit that stressed out her body. Her eyes were covered by a leather mask that ended to two cat-like ears on her head. On her waist was rolled her whip.

“Fuck!” Jason exclaimed drooling. “Cat-freaking-woman! Holy fuck!”

Catwoman touched with her finger feathery his chin and pushed it up to close his mouth

“Are’nt you a bit small for that, tot?” she asked dragging her words amused and Jason gulped blushing because his eyes were fixed on Catwoman’s round breasts.

She lolled her head and rolled her eyes.

“I mean the rip-off, the fag and the beer…”

“Ow!” Jason exclaimed “that…no…no, I…I’m not” he stuttered.

Dick laughed and jumped on his feet, Jason following having found his cool.

“Can a girl have some beer, gentlemen?”

Jason gave her a can which she opened and took a large sip.

“Nice…” she huffed and gazed at the city with a sparkling in her eyes. “You, kiddo” she turned sharply to Dick “stop saying that Batman is dead.”

He cocked an eyebrow.

“Why? It is the truth! You were there: I remember you. Batman told you to take me out and you were distraught, crying because he was to die. And he did die when the building collapsed!”

Selina’s eyes flashed angrily and both boys were shaken.

“He’s alive and kicking” well, not literally, but definitely kicking in every other field. “I know better and since he saved your life” he stressed out every word “stop spreading lies about him!”

Dick flushed and clenched his jaw.

“I don’t lie! I just say what I saw to my pal!!”

The woman leaned to him.
“You didn’t see him die” her eyes widened “you presume that he died. But he didn’t…so drop it!”

Dick pressed his lips uncomfortable because he didn’t like being reprimanded but he was relieved hearing that the man who saved him was alive. Selina nodded and straightened her posture taking another sip from her can.

“He wouldn’t like you drinking…”

The older boy shrugged.

“Mind his own business! He’s not my dad!”

Selina cast him a glare and he gulped.

“Wow!” Jason’s eyes were wide. “I mean, I never bought Dick’s bullshit but still… So really the big bad Bat is still out ther’!”

The woman smirked and clutched her hips.

“So you might want to rethink your twockings – you don’t wanna him bust you!”

The boy sniggered.

“Nobody can bust Jay freaking Todd!”

Selina rolled her head on the side with a glance that said ‘bitch please!’

“I doubt it when you give your credentials so easily…” she snapped and Jason blushed.

“You’re a thief too: everyone knows that Catwoman is the best jewel thief” Dick commented snidely “but still you’re his ally” he cocked his eyebrows. “He never busted you!”

She smirked.

“Well, kiddo, thanks for the ‘best thief’; but I was a thief when Falcone was sucking the city – now things have changed.”

“Or maybe the Bat fucks ya…” the younger boy spat in a smart ass style and Dick gulped.

Catwoman glared at him and the smug smirk on Jason’s face vanished.

“You think you’re too smart and too mature for your age; you think that you’ve seen already the ugly part of life and I’m sure you saw much of it, as your friend here. But believe me there are uglier things out there you don’t even imagine and I wish you never get a hint of them” she grinded her teeth. “So stop doing the smart ass with things you don’t understand and be cautious with your rip-offs because as much as you brag there are guys you can’t outrun…Thanks for the beer!’’

She dived from the ledge and with a breathtaking combination of two front flips and a pike she landed graciously on the opposite rooftop; the two boys gaped at her impressed.

“Are you one of my father’s co-athletes?” Dick asked hopefully.

Selina rolled her eyes exasperated.

“How old you make me, kiddo?!” she spat to him insulted and with another dive she vanished into the shadows.
Oliver Queen, 35, made his more than unexpected appearance in Queen Consolidated’s yesterday memorial service for his father Robert Queen and himself, causing a great shock; he was declared dead two years ago after the shipwreck of the Gambit, the family’s yacht and the recovering of his father’s body.

The heir of the Queen Empire was accompanied by a mysterious woman who introduced herself as the legendary Princess of the mythological Amazons, Diana of Themyscira. The amusement and scoff of some Press members who covered the reception stopped abruptly when she left the ground and caught them in her flashing lasso; however the momentarily fear of the crowd was replaced with giggles when the lassoed reporters began confessing rather embarrassing things.

The gorgeous woman released the reporters and landed on her feet to watch with blazing eyes Queen’s speech.

Queen snidely thanked his company’s officials for the event and proceeded to express his gratitude to Princess Diana who found and brought him back. According to the Queen heir after the shipwreck he was stranded in a desert island.

“Princess Diana found me when I was at the verge of dying” Queen stressed out “she took care of me and brought me back to the States. In front of all of you, I’d like to express my gratitude to her.”

The Amazon nodded curtly and left the room flying while the guests goggled at the impressive woman.

The article was two months old.

Bruce played the video accompanying the article while catching with the corner of his eye the developments in Metropolis’ subway station from Daily Planet’s site that held the middle of his Cosmos’ screen. The third frame of the screen was covered with the information the computer at the cave had retrieved for Dick’s stalker whose photos matched with Tony Zucco. But before delving into the data he had something else to do.

He dialed Jim’s number: it was midnight but he knew that the Commissionaire didn’t leave his office until much later. Jim didn’t sound much surprised hearing Batman’s voice; on the contrary, in his almost expressionless voice Bruce detected some relief.

“Asylum needs your attention” he growled.

“Joker?”

“Many of his thugs are there and he associates with Crane.”

“Do you have any insight?”

“No, but Joker might be up to something.”

“Mr. Stark has taken measures.”

“We need to be careful with Joker and Crane.”

Jim’s nod was almost audible as his determination.

“I’ll put police officers guarding the asylum.”
“Nice.”

He ended the call abruptly in Batman’s style and his mind travelled to all the times he met Jim at the MCU’s rooftop and the icy wind flapped his cape.

Hero was sprawled right next to him licking lazily his front leg. Bruce petted his belly and the kitten began jerking his front legs to catch him which brought a big smile on the youth’s face.

If only Hero could talk…Bruce thought and his mind get lost for a moment in his nightmare: it was the first time after his injury at the factory that he dreamt of Bagdana and that discomposed him. He had stabbed the demon with the Knife of Justice and watched him evaporating and slithering in the depths of earth; Thor reassured him that Bagdana was trapped in Tartarus and Ubu told him that the wound from the Knife had weakened him so much that only another powerful deity could free him.

But Bruce always kept his vigilance – especially, since he could feel the Black Butterfly on his chest vibrating. On the other hand, after what he had experienced under Crane’s treatment he definitely could recognize the pattern of this nightmare: a flashback, a part of his real experiences, mingled with things that never happened but were his fears… Leslie and Lucius had cleared his system from the remains of the drugs but still some effect lingered. So maybe he should just forget the dream; or not…

He focused back on his info: Tony Zucco was a professional trainer of gymnastics before he retired, twelve years ago. He didn’t have a criminal record not even a traffic ticket yet his name was implicated in a dope scandal when the athlete he was training was found positive in illegal drugs’ use…

Bruce’s eyebrows arched. Zucco’s athlete was John Grayson…yes…Dick’s father. John firmly denied that he had used any illegal substance and claimed that he was framed or given the drugs without knowing. John was banned from sports events for some months but eventually came back with some successes – rumors had it that Zucco was downgraded by John Grayson and John had put himself under the trainer of the US national team of gymnastics. However, Zucco remained in the training team of John Grayson during his preparation for the world’s championship when in a tragic accident John died.

After that Zucco retired and there were no results from the media as to what he was doing all these years; Bruce’s other info came from IRS’s files that manifested that he enjoyed a quite opulent life thanks to some clever investments.

But what made the greatest impression to Bruce was that Tony Zucco was John Grayson’s cousin from his mother’s side. So the stalker was in fact Dick’s uncle…

Daily Planet had an update on the culprits of the station’s assault: there was the picture of a man that according to police was the mastermind behind the attack. He was killed during the battle with the law enforcers: the newspaper had an exclusive photo that you had to be of age to see – the man was sprawled on a mass of debris that used to be a kiosk and his head was cracked in several places.

They didn’t give a name yet but Bruce crossed the police snapshot with the archives of Metropolis’ police department and the name of Morgan Edge was displayed. Now Bruce frowned: Edge was one of Metropolis’ biggest crime lords and definitely not the terrorist type or the Joker type to get his gang in a blind hit like this. He was definitely deep in every kind of shit: drugs, gunrunning, smuggling, robberies, prostitution…But always money was the goal.

Wait! He zoomed in Edge’s photo and immediately recognized the firearm that was still glued in his dusty, covered in blood hand. He had seen it again in the logs of the items found in LexLabs. So Edge was collaborating with Luthor? He couldn’t have gained access to these guns after Wayne Enterprises took the labs’ control because the guns were taken away immediately after the acquisition. Unless Luthor had a secret storage and informed his collaborator about the location.

Oliver Queen’s voice was loud, clear and had an angry hue when he declared in front of the reporters that were gathered to cover his memorial service his determination to control the Queen Consolidated without any mediator and boost the company to the top. The man was handsome: tall and sturdy, with slightly overgrown dirty blond hair and chestnut stubble; yet the most powerful feature in his face were his eyes: light brown with an angry, determined fire and darkness that they gave the impression of penetrating you to the core.

Clark was flying over the Wayne Estate; he felt actually tired as the events of the last hour weighted over his shoulders as much as his brain. He just desired a good sleep. On Bruce’s side… He closed his eyes: he hoped that the younger man was sleeping – he closed his eyes: he hoped that the younger man was sleeping – he wasn’t in the mood for talking or…cuddling or anything. His lips remained pleasantly numb after the kiss like his entire body and frankly that made him…pissed. It shouldn’t feel like this. So beautiful…

As Bruce’s dark bedroom came to view Clark sighed frustrated. The lights might be off but Bruce was awake. He bit his lips hard to chase away the feeling and opened the window to get inside. Bruce placed his tablet on the nightstand and Clark floated to him.

“You should be sleeping” he said tired.

“I woke up” the younger man answered shrugging and Clark sighed sitting next to him. “And I couldn’t sleep right away.”

“All these medicines are supposed to keep you asleep all night long” he rubbed his forehead. “So I must worry?”

Bruce shook his head frowning.

“Clark, what’s wrong?”

“Why, Bruce? You try to divert the discussion?” he sighed because he didn’t want to raise his voice. Bruce touched Clark’s shoulder.

“Your voice, your expression, your eyes…are you feeling alright?”

Clark jerked his head.

“Ten people died, Bruce! I failed!” It was true that he felt bad for the dead yet at the moment this helped him not thinking about the kiss.

Bruce nodded.

“I know, I’m sorry…” he took Clark’s hand in his and Hero rubbed his body on Clark’s ribs purring and Superman smiled petting the kitten. “But it wasn’t your fault: we can’t predict when a lunatic will storm somewhere and begin shooting people. You and Tony” he hesitated “and the Princess” Clark jerked a bit in the mentioning and Bruce narrowed his eyes “stopped them before killing more innocent.”

“I’m sure you still blame yourself because Joker killed the Phelps” Clark knew that Bruce noticed his stupid reaction at Diana’s name and wanted to make him forget it.

Bruce inhaled.

“It’s not the same, Clark. Joker killed them because they resembled my family: to send me a message.”

The Man of Steel nodded sarcastic.

“Of course! You always have a good reason to feel as you feel but the rest of us don’t have the right reasons, huh? These things always happen to send us a message, Bruce: whether they use our name or not!”

Bruce understood Clark’s mental condition: he didn’t like him speaking like this yet he didn’t want to follow.
“You feel better taking it on me?” he met Clark’s eyes and his lover sighed. “I don’t say that you shouldn’t feel bad for those who died: we never forget them – our failures stay inside us forever but they also urge us to be better. And there are the people that were saved thanks to you.”

Clark caressed Hero and held Bruce’s shoulders touching his lips on the younger man’s forehead. Which made him cringe because Bruce’s perfume reached his nostrils only this time the stench of other men hit him strongly. Thankfully, he managed to conceal his shock and displeasure and slowly detached.

“I’m sorry I yelled at you…I know that I can’t save them all but every time it hits me hard.”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded. Clark brushed his cheek.

“You should sleep: your body is in recovery and needs good rest.”

“You need rest too, Clark.”

He cocked his eyebrows and smiled a bit smugly.

“I don’t need rest, Bruce; sleep is necessary only to humans” he saw Bruce’s eyes darkening and regretful stood up and began undressing.

Bruce took his tablet again and Clark rolled his eyes buttoning up his pajama shirt.

“Tony told me that the firearms they used were made in LexLabs” Clark said “you’ll be in trouble?”

Bruce raised his eyes and shook his head.

“No; the moment Lucius found the weapons registered them to the ministry and destroyed them under governmental supervision. Of course, we stated that we don’t have any knowledge on the potential buyers before Wayne Enterprises acquired the labs.”

Clark slipped under the blankets and leaned over the tablet.

“You did the same with all the Kryptonite items?” he didn’t like the idea of even the government having those things.

“Of course not. Lucius just reported that we found logs about experiments with strange minerals but nothing specific. We don’t want that kind of knowledge to the wrong hands, huh? And we don’t know what the next minister or president will have in mind.”

Clark wrapped Bruce’s shoulders with his arm but didn’t kiss him as he’d do other times. Which didn’t evade Bruce.

“You always protect me, huh?” he noticed that in the middle of the tablet’s screen the Planet’s site was continuously updated with news about the attack.

He pressed his lips: he had deleted Jimmy’s photos and didn’t believe that the boy would say anything but still he felt antsy. He took gently but determined the gadget from Bruce’s hands and placed it in his nightstand. Bruce glared at him.

“Enough with your toy” Clark answered playfully but firmly.

“You’re on probation not me” Bruce snapped.

“You will be worse once Alfred finds out…Speaking of which: how he isn’t already here reprimanding you?”

Bruce sighed.

“He is exhausted with everything that happened the last months and taking care of me; he needs his rest more than me.”

Clark cleared his throat.

“Do you want me to ask Leslie’s opinion about who needs more rest?” he arched his eyebrows and Bruce lolled his head on the side glaring.

“That’s dirty!”

“No, the sly thing is that you take advantage of Alfred’s trust and instead of sleeping you play with your tablet.”

Bruce crossed his arms and Hero jumped on his lap.

“Sleeping on the couch just became one of your probation terms” the younger man snapped.

“You temperature is low…” Clark commented and rubbed his back. “And we must tell Leslie that your medication needs changing if it can’t keep you asleep.”

Bruce jerked.

“You won’t say anything! The drugs are already too strong; I can’t take stronger medication! I’ll be turned into a freaking zombie!"
Clark placed his head in the hook of Bruce’s neck and nibbled the taut flesh fighting the aversion from the smells that now emerged along with his beloved cinnamon.
“Tell me what woke you up, Bruce; a nightmare?”
Bruce felt goose bumps from those lips massaging his flesh and closed his eyes.
“It was a bad dream, yes; nothing more” he petted Hero who purred; his kitten stopped the nightmare.
Clark couldn’t stand anymore the other smells so detached his lips; actually, this panicked him – how he wasn’t able to discern those smells till now and suddenly, after Diana’s remarks they became so strong that nauseated him? Maybe till now he was under the shock of almost losing Bruce and that affected his senses into obliterating anything unfamiliar but now as he recovered from the shock his perception was able to catch every detail.
Or that night’s happenings afflicted him into imagining things or exaggerating the existing ones…
One thing was sure though: he wouldn’t touch Bruce much tonight because his aversion worsened with every new contact and Bruce would eventually realize and interrogate him. And Clark wasn’t in the mood for that.
“An extremely bad dream if I can judge from the layer of sweat on your body…” maybe this was the reason he perceived the stench of Bruce’s abusers. “What you saw?”
Bruce lowered his eyes to Hero who had sprawled on the mattress.
“It’s better not discuss this right now…” he frankly had no mood to go back to what experienced during the dream – plus, Clark had had too much this night; he didn’t need more upset.
But unexpectedly Clark grabbed his upper arms and turned him to face him; Hero stood surprised.
“This is a part of my probation too?” he asked without the playfulness of the other times because now he felt really pissed and the article about Oliver Queen in the tablet fuelled his anger.
Bruce narrowed his eyes.
“Of course not” he answered completely calm. “I just don’t want to cause you more distress after everything that happened tonight besides nightmares is something usual for me.”
Clark fixed his eyes on Bruce’s almost accusingly.
“You never speak to me about your nightmares” Bruce frowned because Clark had never mentioned something like this before. “You never speak about your years in Falcone’s captivity.”
Bruce tensed.
“You were there during my testimony at Falcone’s trial…you listened when I narrated to Tony what they did to me…”
Clark closed his eyes remembering that night when he unnoticed overheard Bruce sharing with Stark one of the many torture sessions Falcone put him through. But that didn’t quench the fire that burnt inside him on the contrary it flared angrier clenching his fingers around Bruce’s upper arms.
“Stop that!” Bruce snapped staring at Clark’s hands and he released him.
“I always learn those things through someone else” Clark exclaimed. “Because you spoke on the trial, because you entrusted them to Stark…You never spoke to me alone, you never shared, as if you don’t trust me.”
Bruce’s eyes widened.
“Is this jealousy?”
Clark squinted.
“Why not? I found you reading an article about Oliver Queen!” he grabbed the gadget and showed it to him: the video accompanying the article was paused in Diana’s proud face.
“Are you jealous of Oliver Queen?” Bruce spat disbelieving. “I don’t even know him!”
Clark huffed and placed the tablet back on the nightstand. He ran his fingers through his hair.
“I didn’t mean that” he replied calmly. “I know your search for him has to do with Diana and that proves that you don’t trust me” Bruce frowned gaping. “Another token of your lack of trust: if you trusted me as you do your friends you’d believe me when I say and that she is honest in her intentions to help people and fight for justice… and that there’s nothing between her and me” he exhaled “but you insist on your stubbornness to suspect and imagining things.”
Bruce’s eyes were cold staring at him and Clark shook his head exasperated.

“Did you investigate Pepper? Of course not!” he answered his own question. “Would you investigate someone who’d become Selina’s friend? No, because you trust them; you trust their judgment.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side and pressed his lips.

“I didn’t investigate Pepper because she worked years for Tony and had already proved who she is; and, yes, I’d investigate a new friend of Selina if she changes immediately after his/her appearance.”

Clark’s eyes darkened and his frown became deeper.

“I changed?” he asked almost outraged but Bruce stared at him unfazed. “Why? Because after so many days that I was glued to your side I felt like staying away for a bit to calm myself from your stubborn, uncaring decision to come back?”

The younger man didn’t hasten to retort just continued looking at him with the same intense way.

“You believe that you didn’t change?” he inquired.

Clark shook his head and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Nothing has changed, Bruce” yet his mind stabbed him with the sudden perception of the other scents mingled with Bruce’s.

“Really, Clark?” Bruce’s eyes were locked with his and Clark felt irritated like being interrogated.

“Really, Bruce!” he arched his eyebrows and his voice was mocking.

He was ready to say more, the fire inside him was pushing words to his mouth. Words that would hurt Bruce – words that didn’t deserve to Bruce. And the younger man was staring at him with eyes narrowed and estimating, almost not breathing and Clark knew that Bruce was on the verge of shutting himself away.

Superman made to cup Bruce’s cheeks and kiss him but he jerked away and Clark dropped his eyes.

“I’m sorry, Bruce…” he rubbed his eyes. “These last months had their toll on me even though I didn’t realize till now. And then the attack against you…and tonight…”

“What happened tonight, Clark?” Bruce asked concerned but staying at a distance; cold as his body temperature.

Clark for a moment thought of admitting everything about the kiss and what he felt – Bruce would understand. But then…No, Bruce wouldn’t understand because he was an abused child, a traumatized youth and he’d consider the kiss a betrayal – a token that Clark didn’t want him anymore. He’d be hurt and their relationship would be damaged if not over because Bruce was stubborn and defiant and proud…And Clark didn’t want to lose him.

This silence only made Bruce’s sense of wrongness stronger.

But suddenly the Man of Steel wrapped him in his powerful arms and rubbed soothing circles over his back.

“I love you: do you remember that?”

“I try…” Bruce mumbled.

Clark closed his eyes and kissed Bruce’s neck.

“I must warm you up” Clark chuckled “I’m your heater, remember?”

Bruce pressed his lips and detached his body keeping their eyes locked: there was a piece of ice in his guts. He touched Clark’s cheek and the older man kissed it.

“I’m still your Sun, Bruce?”

“Am I still your Star, Clark?”

In front of Clark’s eyes, the snow covered forest of Palisades emerged again and Bruce was before him, half naked, trembling from Flass’ attack. He enveloped him again with his red cape.

“Can I call you Star?”

“Always, Bruce: the only Star I need on my sky” he bit his lower lip and sighed. “I’m sorry I behave like an ass… maybe it is because this is the first time I feel something so strong and I almost lost it once and…” he yanked his head frustrated. “There’s no excuse! Ugh! I miss the Fortress! We were alone, away from everything…”

The ice in Bruce’s guts melted though he felt sad for Clark’s suffering.

“We couldn’t stay forever there, Clark…But we’ll make it…” he looked in Clark’s eyes. “If you still want this.”
Clark shook his head sighing.
“Don’t say that, Bruce...Of course I want it! I can’t imagine my life without you...”
Bruce pressed his lips: he believed Clark, this moment. Yet...
“Clark, I want you to know that if anything changes, if your feelings change, you can tell me right away; don’t lie to me ever” the green stars inside his irises flashed determinedly. “I want you to be happy...even if that means that you’ll be with someone else.”
“I can be happy only with you...”
Clark hugged him caressing his locks; the contact with his body had normalized Bruce’s temperature.
Thank Rao! He feared that the nightmare had an impact on Bruce’s recovering body: he couldn’t bear it if anything happened to Bruce, especially after what happened with Diana.
Suddenly, he took in the change in Bruce’s breath: defeated by the day’s fatigue and reassured from Clark’s cuddle, he was sleeping relaxed, trusting as a child. Clark smiled and carefully placed him on the mattress muffling him with the blankets. His eyes caressed Bruce’s face.
“I’m sorry, Star” he whispered and then he saw Hero looking at him from Bruce’s side. “I’m sorry, buddy” he sighed because the kitten’s glance seemed to him accusing.
Luthor’s transition from deep sleep to awareness was nightmarish; all of a sudden, he felt his throat being crushed and no air reaching his lungs. Held by his throat he was shoved to the wall of his small, isolated cell; his legs dangled above the floor.
Reflexively he tried to grab the hand that choked him but the clenching became tighter and he almost lost his senses from the lack of air to which point his attacker allowed the tiniest of air to flow just to keep him conscious.
In his shock, Luthor took in the total darkness of his cell and the complete, creepy silence in the corridor and the entire prison. It was obvious that nobody in the prison had noticed the breach or his attacker had paid heavy to be allowed the entrance.
As his bulged eyes slowly adjusted he made out the enormous, square silhouette in front of him and the glimmering of the dark eyes that glared at him.
“Mannheim” he croaked raspy, panting.
A smirk curved the rough face of the gangster.
“Admirable perception!” he sniggered and tightened his grasp causing Luthor’s squeal.
“W...what do you...want?” he whispered closing his eyes.
“Straight to the point...you’re a clever boy, Luthor” Mannheim jeered. “I wonder how you ended up here...” he sniffed at him.
Luthor clenched his jaw and cursed Wayne for bringing him to this lame position.
“I get you didn’t find what you were looking for?” he asked slyly taking advantage of the slight loosen in Mannheim’s grip.
He gasped as his body was shoved to the opposite wall and crashed to the floor; he caught his breath watching the enormous shadow approaching him with slow confident strides. He was once again heaved by two hands grabbing his collar.
“I want my order” the gangster hissed low but more threatening than ever. “My machine.”
Luthor cackled because he would never permit himself being intimidated.
“So your raids went wasted as your thugs, huh?”
He was hoisted higher and his former partner’s grinding was loud and freezing his spine. Luthor could see that the gangster’s eyes had become flaming slits.
“I can cut you in pieces and let you die slowly begging for mercy – nobody will care...”
“You’re definitely well connected, my friend” Luthor kept his voice steady though sweat drops had spread all over his face; but he knew that showing your fear was the worst you could do with these people.
“Where is my order?!” he tightened more his grasp and Luthor felt his body get icy cold and aching without any obvious reason.
Lex controlled his breath trying to keep his composed demeanor so that he managed to negotiate; he knew that when people like Mannheim took what they wanted in the vast majority of the cases you ended up dead.

“You seriously expect me to give you the answer so simply? I’ll be dead right after” he shook his head and raised his eyebrows “I’m not so stupid. What guarantees I have?”

Darkseid felt the urge to burn with his breath that pest yet there was time for that after he got what he wanted. His eyes stabbed Luthor’s gray orbs and invaded the human’s mind.

Luthor felt the strangest thing in his life; his mind going entirely numb and falling apart, every terrifying thing he experienced coming to stab him again and then in a storm, moments from his corporate life, from his work in the lab; a flash of the night he lured Bruce Wayne in his suite and then again the lab.

Darkseid released from his energy’s grasp Luthor’s mind: there was nothing, no machine. His nostrils emitted fume but the human was still enough dazzled to notice. He gritted his teeth and Luthor yelled feeling his bones burning.

“You tricked me, you lousy maggot!” he hissed in Luthor’s face and the human screamed feeling his heart being clenched by invisible hot fingers. “You took my money and didn’t make my machine!”

Luthor gasped and wheezed but even in the fog his mind was he knew what he must do.

“You really believed that I’d have your…order in one place? Or so obvious for you or the authorities to find and investigate?” he wasn’t aware that Mannheim had invaded his mind but he knew that the gangster did something to him; maybe he had injected him with some drug while asleep.

“Speak!”

“If you kill me you’ll never get what you want.”

“I doubt you ever created it.”

“I did but I took my precautions, Brunno: I have worked with many of your kind and I know how devious you are. Your machine exists…but in many, separate pieces scattered to various LexLabs – completely unnoticed between the other ordinary stuff. If you want your machine whole only I can gather the pieces and assemble them to form your machine.”

Mannheim frowned.

“LexLabs belong to Bruce Wayne now…”

“That didn’t stop you from raiding them, right? You just didn’t know what to look for while I know: such petty, tedious things that the stupid brat and his people won’t notice. You just need to get me and Mercy out of here and I’ll give you the machine. You do have the connections to manage that, right?” he asked slyly, smirking because now he felt back in the game.

Darkseid cast another glance to him and the tycoon went unconscious. The new God knew that the next morning Luthor wouldn’t remember anything or even if he had some recollection he wouldn’t be sure if it was reality or dream. On the other hand, Darkseid was sure about what he was to do.

“You should be ashamed of yourself, mister!” Lois hardly containing her wrath in whispers towered Clark who was absorbed in his office’s screen finishing an article.

He closed his eyes downhearted and slowly turned his head to face a glaring Lois with her arms crossed over her chest shaking from her nerves.

“Restroom now!” she ordered him and Clark hadn’t another option than following under the amused eyes of their colleagues.

Once in the toilets Lois locked and turned to Clark fuming. Clark fixed his glasses with his characteristic clumsy way.

“They’ll think that we’re doing…nasty things locked in the toilet…” he shrugged, grinning uncomfortably but Lois rolled his eyes.

“While you’d prefer to be locked with someone else, huh?”

Clark shook his head.

“I guess our Jimmy isn’t the trustworthy type…” he smirked and leaned on the sink crossing his arms. “Is there a chance this not going public?”

Lois huffed exasperated.

“Is this the only thing you care about?!”
“Of course! Imagine if Bruce hears it…”
She pursed her lips.
“If that means kicking your sorry ass, I’m on!”
Clark closed his eyes and yanked his head.
“What matters most is that hearing it will upset him and he is in the middle of his recovery – this can have a bad impact on him.”
“You should have thought that sooner before you celebrated your victory with an after battle smooch with that bitch!”
He shook his head sighing.
“Don’t call her that, Lois! Thanks to her tens of people were saved.”
Lois nodded.
“So you took it on you to express our collective gratitude…” she remarked snidely and Clark pressed his lips.
“It wasn’t what Jimmy and you think…”
“I thought that cheaters say that to their mate” she snapped cocking her eyebrows.
Clark jerked upwards.
“I’m not a cheater, Lois! Diana doesn’t know I’m with Bruce and thought that she could…” he searched for the appropriate word “kiss me” he opted for the most realistic description.
“She doesn’t know but you know it, right? Unless you forgot it?” Clark lolled his head on the side.
“Jimmy told me that you dove in the kiss and fondled her!” Clark could sense her hair stand on edge.
“And so much for Jimmy’s word…” he mumbled ruffling his hair.
“He didn’t want to speak – the infamous solidarity between males…” she snorted rolling her eyes.
“Don’t tell me you tortured the answer from him?” he arched his eyebrows and Lois clenched her jaw and widened her eyes.
“I asked him what was so interesting behind the corner and he told me about Edge; then I asked about the Amazon and you and he blushed and replied that you two fought Edge which was stupid: two super heroes against a mere gangster? Give me a break! So I took the camera to see the pictures and there was none of you two “fighting” the mobster or of you two at all – I expressed my puzzlement on that and” she shrugged one shoulder “I scolded him a bit for not taking a shot of the two super heroes together and in his dread stuttered that he did shot some frames but Superman deleted them.”
Clark’s head dropped and he closed his eyes shaking his head in disbelief: Jimmy, Jimmy… Lois nodded.
“As you guess it was easy from that point to extract the answer…”
“You’re devious, Lois!” Clark regarded her through narrowed eyes.
“How dare you, buster! You cheat your boyfriend who struggles to recover from his injuries and call me devious!”
“I didn’t cheat Bruce, I told you! Diana rushed to me and kissed me and…” Lois’ angry eyes were fixed on his challengingly “okay, I was surprised and delayed in my reaction but Jimmy must have told you that I pushed her away…”
Lois lolled her head and twisted her lips arching an eyebrow.
“Not exactly ‘push’.”
“I couldn’t slap her, could I? I’m the boy scout, remember? And she is my friend and ally and doesn’t know that I have a relationship.”
His friend clenched her waist.
“Why you didn’t tell her?”
Clark sighed and pulled out his glasses to rub his eyes.
“Because Bruce and I decided to keep our relationship secret to avoid new attacks” this was one of the reasons; the other was that he didn’t feel it right to admit to Diana that he was in a relationship with a mortal; and he really enjoyed her company and respect – if she learnt about Bruce (she didn’t think very highly of him) maybe that would change things, and he didn’t want to lose the relationship he had with her.
Lois shook her head: protecting Bruce was understandable since Superman’s love interest was always in his enemies’ target. Yet she couldn’t be sure that it was only this.

“The Princess isn’t one of your enemies, right? Supposedly she is your ally and friend so you can trust her with that sensitive information, RIGHT?” she widened her eyes in emphasis. “Or you can’t trust her?”

“Of course I trust her, Lois! But till now there was no reason to speak to her about my personal things…” Lois was glowering at him demanding an answer “but now that things took that turn I’ll tell her to end that thing, satisfied?”

“And Bruce? He should know.”

Clark raised his palm in a stop sign.

“No! What happened last night was an accident and there’s no reason to cause Bruce so much turmoil – and for nothing! Lois, please, you don’t tell him…”

She pressed her lips and blinked uncomfortable.

“I hated it, farmer boy! I feel like a backstabber – knowing and not telling him…Like your accomplice!”

Clark held her shoulders and locked eyes with her.

“I didn’t cheat on Bruce! And it won’t happen again! Diana will hear the truth and all this crap will be over! So why disturbing Bruce’s peace and recovery? He is happy, Lois, for the first time in his life: why ruining that without a solid reason?” he lowered his eyes. “He opened his heart to me and let himself fall in love: imagine the pain and the results if he feels that his love was betrayed. Which didn’t happen, I swear!”

Lois closed her eyes and gulped.

“Yes” she glowered at him “I can imagine the pain and the trauma, can you?”

Clark bit his lips.

“Of course – I promised that I won’t let anyone hurt him again including myself: the League of Shadows almost killed him and I hated myself for being unable to protect him. Only the thought that I can become the reason for him to suffer makes me hate myself” he rubbed his forehead. “I promise you, Lois, this won’t happen again.”

She nodded but her eyes were cold.

“If you don’t end this I’ll take matters in my own hands…” she said determined.

“You’ll tell Bruce breaking his heart?”

Lois lips twisted in aversion.

“You’ll be the one who will break his heart, you dork! And there’s something worse than speaking to Bruce.”

Clark frowned.

“Speaking to Ma Kent: she won’t be happy learning that her son is a cheater who fools his mate.”

Now Clark hated that option as much as Bruce learning.

“I’m not fooling him!”

Lois leaned to him.

“Then clear this mess ASAP!”

She stormed to the door, unlocked and left without a glance behind. Clark slumped to the sink and shook his head determined: this must end.

Bruce entered the kitchen with Hero on his lap; he had to take him from the floor because as soon as they exited the bedroom the kitten ran to the hidden passage to go to his pray down in the cave. It was hardly half past in the morning but when he opened his eyes half an hour ago, Clark had already left. So he performed his morning routine and took the lift to the ground floor and the delicious smells of toasted bread and pancakes led him and his kitten to the kitchen.

As he knew already from the voices Leslie was there chatting with Alfred.

“Are you up already, young man?” her disapproval was clear in her eyes as in her voice.

Alfred also didn’t look happy but hastened to serve pancakes to his young master before readying his milk.
“Good morning, Leslie, Alfred” Bruce greeted instead of replying immediately and led his chair to the island. “If I wasn’t up I wouldn’t have the pleasure of your company during breakfast, Dr. Thompkins” he winked and Alfred shook his head grinning and filled Hero’s bawl with his food. Leslie smirked and fixed her eyes on Bruce.

“Flattery won’t help you, buddy.”
Bruce shrugged pouring some honey to his pancakes.

“That wasn’t flattery but truth, Leslie: I detect some insecurity?” he arched his eyebrows.
The tough doctor laughed and sipped from her coffee.

“You’re good, kid…To be honest I came here for a good breakfast after the night shift and to see my stubborn patient – but I hoped your sleep would last longer.”

Alfred placed the glass of milk to the table.

“Thank you, Alfred” Bruce said though he didn’t like milk.

“You’re most welcome, sir.”

“So the reporters are finally gone?” he turned to Leslie who was studying him.

Leslie stood up and approached him.

“No, they’re still out of the gates waiting for you – good thing they don’t know the secret back road to the Manor. Let me see you…”

Bruce had anticipated it but hoped that he might avoid it. Leslie cupped his jaw and carefully opened his eyelid to observe his eye.

“You didn’t sleep well?” she asked professionally. “You have sleep disturbances and you can’t sleep more in the morning?”

Bruce felt Alfred’s concerned glance and huffed.

“I slept rather well…” but Leslie felt with the back of her hand his cheeks pointing out the paleness and he lolled his head on the side defeated because he didn’t like lying to them. “I woke up once during the night but other than that my sleep was restful.”

Leslie watched his iris.

“Is your head hurting?”

“C’mone, Leslie…You’re here for a visit – forget you’re a doctor” her eyes were stern and Bruce realized that this wasn’t a persuasive point “No” he hurried to answer “no headache.”

Leslie nodded relieved and sat in a chair next to him while Alfred after hearing the answer turned to the toaster to remove the bread slices.

“What woke you up?” Leslie asked.

Bruce sipped from his milk.

“Clark at some point left to stop the attack in Metropolis’ subway and I must have felt it and that caused…” he stopped abruptly because Leslie and Alfred were frowning at him.

“So you’ve already made your search since you know about the attack…” Leslie remarked disapproving “you woke up and instead of trying to sleep again you played with your little gadget – we must confiscate that thing” she yanked her head to Alfred.

“Then we’d have to find a way to lock him out of the cave because he’d reside there” Alfred replied grimly.

Bruce took a bite from his pancake relishing the delicious taste.

“You’re overreacting! I just couldn’t fall asleep at once and I was worried about what made Clark leave so abruptly so I searched a bit – that’s all.”

Alfred shook his head and brought Leslie a glass of fresh juice like the one he served to Bruce.

“What was it?” she inquired flatly. “Flashback or nightmare?”

The young man stared at her: he didn’t want to speak about that yet Leslie was his doctor and Alfred…well, he didn’t want to worry him but lying to him was worse and he doubted that the clever man wouldn’t figure.

“Both” he replied nonchalant.

Leslie pursed her lips.

“Like the dreams you had when Crane experimented on you?”

He nodded. He was relieved that Leslie didn’t ask about the content of the dream and she looked rather troubled rubbing her chin.

“Do you think that the results of Dr. Crane’s ministrations are permanent?” Alfred asked keeping his compose but he crossed out the term damage that came to his mind.

“What I think is that the devastating injuries from the incident and the long coma probably will make longer the time necessary for the aftereffects to stop.”

Bruce preferred that than the permanence of this situation.

“Leslie, is there anything you can do to eliminate the effects? Master Bruce needs quality sleep and those dreams upset him.”

“We won’t intervene to Bruce’s brain” Leslie answered with conviction and Bruce nodded his agreement “Joker’s psychotropic drugs, the concussions and Crane’s sick experiments are more than enough: a new intervention might damage rather than heal. Human brain has the ability to heal itself. Besides I believe that it is only a matter of time before this effect stops entirely.”

Alfred pressed his lips; he’d like to believe that yet he was worried and Bruce’s eyes on him told Alfred that his young master understood his feelings.

“Isn’t alarming the fact that these strange dreams reappeared now after so much time?”

Leslie looked at him and then at Bruce.

“It is most possible that this happened because Bruce’s medication needs readjustment – probably, his organization got used to them so the drugs don’t have the same effectiveness anymore.”

Bruce wanted that change but the way Leslie spoke gave him the impression that they had different goals.

“I wanted to talk to you about that change, Leslie; I think that we can decrease the dosages after all this time: the danger has passed.”

Leslie frowned.

“And why you ask that?”

He rolled his eyes.

“Because my reaction and adjustment time when I woke up are too slow.”

His two surrogate parents exchanged glances.

“That is normal, Master Wayne” Alfred remarked and Bruce huffed shaking his head.

“Not for me” he retorted. “I need to be aware of my surroundings even when asleep so my reaction time is fast.”

“The Manor is safe, Bruce and at your side lie the most powerful man in the whole planet” Leslie stressed out.

But Alfred approached his young master.

“Do you believe that someone was in your room last night, sir?”

Bruce licked his lips uncomfortable; it was difficult to answer that. There was nobody in his room when he woke up yet Hero was hissing rather distraught and he remembered a shadow towering him and the sense of threat. Of course it might be due to the nightmare’s effect…

“That’s the problem! The drugs make my senses slow and I’m confused; it is difficult being alert at once” he noticed their concerned faces. “No, there wasn’t anyone in my bedroom but I don’t like losing my vigilance.”

Leslie took a large gulp of juice.

“Bruce, you know that I can’t sacrifice your good rest and healing for that” she arched her eyebrows “at least, in this stage: the critical phase might have passed but we have still a long way to come and your body needs the medication” she pressed her lips. “If we lower the dosage you will be in considerable pain and the danger of infections greater; I’d never consent to that.”

Bruce tapped his fingers on the granite surface measuring his options.

“We can at least make a try” he looked at Leslie’s adamant eyes. “It’s been almost four months and I was treated in Superman’s Fortress with alien medicine so maybe I won’t experience pain and my organism’s defenses will be strong enough.”

“No” Leslie spat and the finality was both in her entire face – she wasn’t willing to make any experiments.

Alfred was glad about his friend’s strong stance but also felt for his young master. So he decided to make an attempt at lifting his spirits. He pulled out of his vest’s pocket an envelope and gave it to him.

Bruce took it frowning: it was clearly an invitation.

“I think I finally have a solid reason to avoid social events, Alfred.”

His butler smiled cleverly.

“I’m sure you would want to attend that, sir.”

The youth opened it interested: Alfred was right…The image of the Haven’s kids locked in Joker’s horrible metallic cage flashed before his eyes and then the joyful evening at Martha Wayne’s Park during the opening ceremony; Billy and his painting. A smile stretched his lips.

“The kids of the Haven invite me to their Thanksgiving party…”

Alfred reflected his smile.

“You’re their guest of honor along with Master Anthony.”

Leslie patted Bruce’s shoulder.

“Alfred and I are invited too: those little devils made me promise that you’ll come” she twitched her eyebrows. “You won’t make your favorite doctor a reneger…”

Hero meowed at his feet and Bruce grinned.

“I can’t do that, can I?”

Leslie leaned back at her chair.

“For an instance I thought it was from Tommy…” she gulped the rest of her juice.

“Tommy?”

“Thomas Elliot: he tried to persuade me to fix a meeting with you.”

Bruce eyebrows arched.

“Really?”

“He wants to make amends for his bullying behavior back then. All these months he was asking about your condition and expressed his interest to examine you or at least look your reports.”

Bruce drank at last what was left from his milk.

“You didn’t show him, right?”

Leslie rolled her eyes.

“Of course not, kid! Don’t insult my medical integrity.”

“I’m sorry. Alfred told me that he called many times at the Enterprises to ask but I don’t want to see him or have a meeting – at least, for the time being.”

“Do you consider that polite, Master Bruce?” Alfred commented and Bruce met his gaze.

“Maybe not but I don’t feel the mood to see him.”

Leslie took a pancake and bit.

“He offered to help with healing your injuries; he mentioned his work with Superman at Metropoli’s General Hospital.”

Bruce nodded remembering that night in the greenhouse when Clark used that experience to heal his injury.

“I know” he muttered. “But I don’t want him in this.”

Leslie shook her head.

“It is your decision, Bruce; yet he indeed offers his help voluntarily in the clinic and the Haven…”

“You say that he is changed?”

“I can’t answer that, Bruce: it is true that he has been through a lot of things and eighteen years has passed – he isn’t a kid anymore. That, of course, doesn’t mean he doesn’t have flaws…”

“You work with him, Leslie, interact with him: you think he is honest?”

Leslie locked eyes with her favorite patient and recollected how she felt every time Thomas spoke about Bruce. He didn’t want to be unfair to Thomas yet her gut feeling was almost never wrong.

“No.”

Joker had being escorted back to his cell after the breakfast and that was unusual; he hadn’t finished yet with poking fun at his inmates and he was watching a rather fascinating episode of Willy The Coyote: he loved how the stupid thing always ended up at the bottom of the canyon and the fucking bird made fun of him. This bird reminded him of himself – it had his smile all over: in his next life, if he wasn’t born as the Joker, he’d like to be born as the Road Runner.
“Biiip biiiip!” he yelled and erupted in a fit of giggles sketching the cartoons on the cell’s ceiling.
“I’m glad you’re in good spirits, Mr. J.”
He jumped from his bed and gave a big bow.
“Ooooowo! Dr. Harley-quin! What an ho-nor to poor ooool’ me!” I thought our sessions were at evening now.”
Harleen sat at her chair outside the cell and Joker tilted his head on the side studying the blondie –
she was a bit antsy.
“No, that was irregular; our sessions always were held at the morning and we will stick to that.”
Joker pouted.
“But I looooooove ir—regul—arity!”
Harleen crossed her legs.
“And chaos that’s why we need to apply some regularity to your daily program.”
Joker’s upper lip twitched in disgust.
“Regularity is oooooverrated! Irregularity sells more: look at cartoonoons. If a cat eats a mouse nobody would give a shit but when the mouse beats the puuuussycat to a pulp the cartoon staaaays 80 years! Wow!”
“Mr. J, what cartoons were you watching when you were a child?”
Joker leaned to the interior wall of metallic bars and looked at her with a Cheshire smile.
“A twooooold question…” he said nasally. “Well done, Dr. Harleyquin! Either you want to make a sooooolcial study on how the violence in cartoons correlates with ir—regular behavior during adulthood or you want to explore my traumatic childhood” his green eyes pierced her. “Rrrrrright?”
he smiled broader.
Harleen was annoyed that he guessed her purpose yet that increased her admiration for the man.
The regular thing for you would be not answering my questions – but you love irregularity” she said keeping her gaze steady.
Joker yanked his head and raised his finger.
“Gooooooood one, doc! But I’m sooooore regular that sometimes I go regular!” he began giggling and hoping in his cell under Harleen’s calm stare.
She knew what Joker needed to be glued and cut the crap: if she had managed to bring Wayne here…But Bruce was so scared, so biased and hard on Joker that refused blatantly.
“You give the impression that you’re afraid to speak about your past.”
Joker stopped on his heels just when he was to jump again, he stayed immobile with his posture slumped and he turned his head to look lopsided at Harleen; his eyes sparkled devilishly. He understood that she wanted to challenge him.
Dr. Quinzel felt thrilled by this stare and believed that she had achieved her goal to provoke Joker to answer.
He walked back to the bars and supported his arms there; he stabbed her with his eyes and licked his lips.
“I’m not afraid of anything, Harley-quin; I just prefer the present – it’s much more fun. If you want someone stuck in his past, call Brucie. It is why I chooooose him, wewewell! Besides the obvious reasons, to teach him how to escape from his past like I did” he grinned remembering the Bat. “But maybe the fascinating thing has aaaaalready done that…” he said slyly.
Again his infatuation with Wayne, Harleen thought frustrated.
“For a man who loves continuous flow it’s strange that Wayne is the only thing you’re not willing to change: he is the axis to your existence.”
Joker cocked an eyebrow and showed her his ring finger though it didn’t have anything on.
“He is my wife and I’m a traditional man sooooo my wife is the axis around which I spin…” he said completely sober. “Youuuuunderstand that I can’t stay here while he is out there: I’m a metal drown to the magnet.”
Harleen felt pissed from Joker’s devotion to that man.
“And what if he doesn’t care?”

Joker shrugged one shoulder and pouted.

“I like the challenges—it’s what makes him soooooo fascinating: like a mountain top to be conquered. I feel for the poor baby and I want to help him” he smirked inside knowing that the next would have an impact to his doctor. “For his sake, I could speak about my past…” his eyes glimmered.

Harleen felt shudders: she knew it! She knew that if she managed to bring Wayne to a session with Joker, the criminal’s mystery would be solved.

“And if he wasn’t willing to come here?”

Joker shook his head and twitched his eyebrows.

“I understand myyyyy boy: who would want to get in that shitty place? Noooooo offense, Dr.
Harlequin… So I go to him…you know, like the Mohamed and the mountain?”

“You can’t get out of here, Mr. J” she retorted though she would be interested to achieve those join sessions even if that meant that Joker would be free…She scratched that thought shocked with herself: no way! That was preposterous! Unacceptable! Joker wanted to drag her here to make her assist his escape.

Joker smiled evilly, his eyes fixed on her.

“You know, Harlequin? You’re my favorite shrink” he cocked his eyebrows “aaaaaand I have a vaaaaaaaast album of experiences with them…”

She felt flattered by this yet she knew better than fall for his tricks.

“Then why not speaking to me? Trying to co-operate?”

Joker ruffled his locks; oh! His sweet shrink was so starved for her bones!

“Dr. Harlequin” he knitted his eyebrows.

Harleen twitched believing that now he would speak about himself.

“Yes?”

“I heard that you drive an old fashioned beetle” Harleen’s disappointment was hardly concealed. “I used to have one – niiiiice cars. But I think that you should mount something wilder” he darted his eyes to his body and inhaled deeply. “A pink Harley Davidson: the rooooooad king! He! He! He!
That will make you myyyyy Harley Queen!” he batted his eyelashes innocently “or you’d prefer it with i instead of double e to match with your reeeeeeal surname? Huh?”

Harleen stood up.

“Our session is over” she said sternly “since you don’t want to talk seriously. See you tomorrow.”

Joker watched her leaving with a predatory shine in his eyes.

“But I’m speaking seriously, Harlequin…”
“Hey, Rachel, how are you?”

A surprised gasp on the other end of the line – a happy gasp.

“How are things there? Any issue?”

“Bruce! That’s…that’s awesome! I didn’t expect that…”

Bruce smiled.

“You didn’t expect me to call? By the way, am I keeping you from something?”

“No, not at all – I mean, I’m at work but I’m doing a break right now… Hmm…Yes…I thought that you had too many things to look after now you returned to Gotham” she laughed lighthearted.

“You’re my friend, Rachel, and you saved my life risking yours – I think you more than deserve a long distance call.”

He could imagine his old friend rubbing her temple uncomfortable, her other hand clutching her waist.

“I meant to call, Bruce…I mean after we spoke while you were abroad. Yet seeing you with the wheelchair made me think that you’ll need some time to rest from the trip…By the way, I’m really sorry for your injury.”

“I know, Rachel; thank you. How are things there? Any issue?”

She chuckled.

“You’re kidding me? You arranged everything perfectly: Steve works at a Wayne Enterprises’ subsidiary here in Toronto; I work in a real estate company that the owner is Tony Stark’s friend and Harvey” she hesitated because Harvey’s adventure was partly her doing. “He works as a consultant – he is aware that you had some involvement in his hiring because the entire Joker incident and his suspension aren’t the best recommendation. You take care of everyone except yourself…”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I just had some misfortunes…” he chuckled “but I was also lucky – it could be worse. And all of you deserved some peace. However I miss you all: Mr. Petrou’s job awaits him always. Give him my regards.”

“He’d be very happy to hear; he was heartbroken when he saw you on the wheelchair and he was ready to call but I” she gulped “it was my fault: I told him that it’d be better if we gave you some time to settle your more urgent affairs.”

“Rachel, you, - all of you -, are my friends: so don’t hesitate to contact me for anything. It’s my pleasure to hear from you.”

“Maybe we should return – I mean if you returned after all the terrors you experienced there, why not us too?”

“This is your decision to make. On the other hand, Garcia plans to put on vote Harvey’s comeback to DA’s post – if that is what Harvey wants.”
She laughed.

“There’s nothing Harvey wants more than serve justice…”

“I don’t know…I think marrying you tops that?”

Rachel sighed.

“Bruce, I still don’t know if I’m made for these things…”

“Time will show…I’m sure Harvey is more than happy just being with you.”

“At least, he seems too” she snorted. “The other sure thing is that if we decide to marry you’ll be the first to know since Harvey wants you as his best man.”

Bruce smiled.

“Only Harvey?” he asked slyly.

“Me too…I want to see you again, Bruce: the moment we found each other again my faults forced me and Harvey to flee.”

“The important thing is that you are alright – every other thing can be fixed.”

“I guess so…Mmmm, Bruce, thank you for calling but I must return to work.”

“Sure.”

“Take care of yourself and get well soon, huh? Give Alfred my love!”

“I will. My regards to Mr. Petrou and Harvey: tell them that whenever they decide to come back, I’ll be here for everything.”

Rachel gulped.

“Thank you. Hope to see you soon!”

“Me too.”

The moment Bruce hanged up someone knocked on his office’s door. It was Ms. Philips with some manila files in her arms containing paper work that required his signature.

Both Alfred and Leslie didn’t want him daily in the Wayne Tower yet Bruce was adamant about being there even for a couple of hours. He didn’t want anyone, ever again, to spread rumors that would endanger his father’s company.

Of course he had with him his Cosmos in order to do some other ‘extracurricular’ work.

“Is that all, Ms. Philips?” he asked while reading the last report under the approving eyes of his secretary.

“Yes, Mr. Wayne; that’s all for today.”

Bruce grinned.

“Great! Thank you, Ms. Philips” he handed her the papers.
Yet his secretary lingered.

“Do you want me to bring you something, Mr. Wayne? Some brunch or milk…”

Bruce lolled his head on the side and chuckled.

“Alfred called and gave you instructions about what I should eat, right?”

The woman seemed a bit surprised for his insight but soon got over it.

“He also told me to remind you to not wear yourself out and to return to the Manor before noon.”

Bruce nodded with a stoic and amused expression.

“As you can see, Ms. Philips, I’m not doing heavy duty so…” he lowered his voice collusively “if Alfred secretly calls to get updates, please tell him that I’m following doctor’s orders.”

Ms. Philips smiled also amused.

“Your dedication to the Enterprises is truly inspirational but you need to be careful, Mr. Wayne.”

“I know, Ms. Philips.”

When his secretary left the office Bruce turned to his tablet. His presence at the office shouldn’t keep him away from his investigation. He entered the database of Metropolis’ police: Gotham was his main priority, always, yet those people used Luthor’s guns so if Morgan Edge was indeed Luthor’s collaborator then the lab raids could be explained. And if this mobster had bought guns, could he have bought also those strange beings that attacked him? Could Edge be the Intergang’s leader?

But above all, Clark was active in Metropolis and being Superman didn’t make it safer so Bruce wanted to eliminate as many dangers as possible.

He doubted that Edge was the leader of Intergang. Intergang was a ghost gang and hit so openly and stupidly didn’t suit them; more so with their leader in the battlefield! Not even the most fanatic terrorists act like that: they use people-tools to execute their plans. On the other hand, Edge wasn’t a terrorist but a known gangster; he had his own gang so the Intergang scenario should be crossed out.

If Morgan Edge was alive he could have given some answers or his sudden change in tactics could be explained through psychological evaluation. But he was in the scene and although the super heroes were there and the outcome was decided he chose to stay and fight: well, that was completely out of character – mobsters had one thing in common: fleeing when things go awry and save their ass. He knew that from Falcone and his colleagues.

Bruce perused through the files from the shooters’ interrogation. Incoherent rants: most of them refused that they had done anything, others mumbled some extremist clichés that definitely didn’t understand; according to the police officers and the FBI they seemed to be in confusion and shock. Which was usual for amateurs or people with mental disorders who do such things, yet these people were thugs: attacking or even killing was their routine yet always having a professional reason not just spilling blood…

He pressed his lips and scrolled down the data scanning those thugs’ testimonies without finding anything explaining the massacre or who ordered it other than admitting that they belonged to Edge’s gang; which was the same pattern from the thugs who raided the labs: admitting they belonged to a gang but not knowing who gave the order.
His eyes narrowed on an entry: officers reported that Morgan Edge was killed in a fight with Wonder Woman and Superman and judging by the wounds it was the former that did it.

Bruce twisted his lips: Clark’s friend had a bad habit of killing people while being able to apprehend them; and mostly when useful information could be taken from them. He rubbed his chin: he definitely didn’t like her role in that but Clark was there; he saw everything. If something was amiss he’d have noticed…

He shook his head: Clark was very fond of her so Bruce doubted if he’d think ill for anything she did. He told off Bruce just because he was investigating her through Oliver Queen. Clark had changed… Maybe it wasn’t because of the Amazon but because of the adventure they suffered all these months. Maybe Clark was emotionally tired of living daily the weakness of a human being and when he met her, he was happy meeting someone like himself… Maybe it was just temporary.

And then he opened the site of Gotham’s Gazette for catching up with the news from his city but there as well, the last night’s assault was head news. They had pictures from last night via the Daily Planet so Bruce returned there: photos from the massacre, the injured, the officers, the super heroes saving the day and photos from the kiosk where Edge was killed.

Bruce knew that both Superman and Wonder Woman was engaged in battle with him yet there was no picture of them together. Which was odd. Jimmy Olsen had covered the massacre and from what Clark had told him, the youth always shot hundreds of pictures from an incident – besides there were loads of shots from other scenes of the incident; so since he was in front of the battle scene he definitely would have taken a lot of pictures especially with the two superheroes – that would be a big hit for the Planet.

Yet there were only pictures of the ruined kiosk and Edge’s body. Strange…Bruce tapped his lips. As if some pictures were emitted… But why? He recalled Clark’s odd behavior last night: fine, he was definitely affected by the deaths of so many people but… There was always a ‘but’ when the Amazon Princess was involved…and Clark gave him the impression of feeling uncomfortable, upset. Perhaps those photos were the answer for everything: perhaps Clark was disappointed with his friend and ally killing with such ease Morgan Edge?

 Somehow he doubted that: after all, Clark had scowled him because supposedly he didn’t trust him about Diana. Bruce wanted to ask Jimmy about the photos but he couldn’t and there wasn’t a reason why the boy would answer him honestly. At this point Bruce wasn’t sure that even Clark was honest with him.

He shook off the bitterness that slyly slipped in his heart.

The door opened slightly and Bruce tensed ready to confront an attacker though he knew that the Tower had the highest security in Gotham – yet last year’s Joker attack didn’t support that.

A face popped and Bruce relaxed immediately.

“Am I interrupting something?” Selina asked playfully.

“Come in.”

She closed the door and crossed graciously the room to slump in the armchair opposite Bruce’s desk. Her eyes sparkled gazing at the big, built-in fireplace which was lit enhancing the temperature of the room.

“I love this fireplace!” she turned her face to Bruce who grinned. “And now Alford can be relieved that you are warm enough.”

Bruce lolled his head.

“Don’t tell me Alfred sent you?” he asked amused.

Selina shrugged.

“No, but I’m sure he is worried and would prefer it if you stayed at the Manor.”

“I don’t want to settle in the “ill person” psychology.”

“As if you ever had such psychology…” she rolled her eyes smiling.

“I’m not ill, Sel, but paraplegic – I want to readjust” he inhaled deeply “and there are things to be done” Selina was nodding though a bit exasperated. “I missed you.”

She put her legs over the armrest.

“C’me on, sweetie… I was with you last night…”

Bruce’s lips twitched in a smile.

“I guess I got spoiled in Thasos and I expect that you’d sleep at the Manor and eat breakfast with me” he cocked his eyebrows. “I know I’m selfish…”

Selina pressed her lips.

“You’re not selfish, sweetheart, and I had a great time being with you 24/7…but…” it was difficult to explain and the truth was that she still wanted to be all the time with him carefree after all these years’ agony and misery.

But Bruce nodded smiling because he understood without her even telling.

“You need your independency…I understand and I want you to do what you feel: when you’re happy I feel happy too.”

Selina’s eyes flashed touched; she shook her head.

“I know you do…and…I missed you too…And Alfred’s cooking of course! And Hero…Mmm…maybe I’d come and stay the weekends as kids do. Speaking of which, I was cat-strolling last night and I saw your protégé.”

“My protégé?” his puzzlement was genuine but Selina rolled her eyes.

“Little Dick Grayson.”

Bruce frowned.

“You said ‘cat-stroll’ so Catwoman saw him so it was real late.”

Selina gave him the thumbs up.

“After midnight. He was on a rooftop with a pal – a little smartass punk” she smiled amused on the remembrance. “They were drinking beer and the little rogue was smoking.”

Bruce intertwined his fingers on the desk and leaned towards her.
“Dick is drinking? That’s awful!” he shook his head and a deep wrinkle formed on his brow. “And the other boy was smoking…”

Selina jerked her legs off the armrest and leaned towards him.

“Don’t you dare blame yourself for Dick! Besides every teen does such stuff… He has a tough time but his grandmother will help him.”

He sighed.

“Poor Ms. Turner! I’m sure she doesn’t know anything…” he pressed his lips. “I wish I could do something…speak to him but he hates me. Maybe Batman could do that…”

Selina shook her head.

“Dick believes that Batman died at the factory – he was saying that to his friend. I told them that Batman is alive” she shrugged “he might believe me because he remembered me.”

Bruce arched his eyebrows.

“He isn’t so wrong” he said thoughtful. “Batman almost died that night and weren’t for Superman… What about the other boy?”

Selina chuckled.

“Oh! He is one of those charming Narrows’ urchins. His name is Jason Todd, I think he is a little younger than Dick and… the little fella is a pilferer” she winked “and has a big mouth.”

Bruce ruffled his hair.

“You think that the boys are in trouble? Maybe the other boy is deep with the wrong kind of people…”

“You mean Jason?” she laughed and shook his head. “No, he’s very independent to be working for others and I think he is a nice chum and Dick seemed at ease with him – actually, they remind me of us a bit…”

Bruce smiled.

“Except the beers and the fags… Remember the guy who stalked Dick and his grandmother the other day?” she nodded. “His name is Tony Zucco and is Dick’s father’s cousin and trainer.”

Selina arched her eyebrows.

“His uncle… Then why he didn’t go to them and stayed away?”

Bruce pursed his lips and shrugged one shoulder.

“Maybe he doesn’t get on with Ms. Turner: there are some gray areas in his relationship with John Grayson, Dick’s father. I read that there were rumors that John wasn’t satisfied by his coaching and degraded him; yet Zucco remained in his team till the end. Sure thing, Zucco has the means to live an opulent life.”

“So what does he want from them?”

“I don’t know; maybe he wants to help the kid after his family was murdered.”
Selina lolled her head on the side with a stare yelling ‘bitch please!”

“We live in Gotham, Bruce… Because you care for the kid and act as his secret guardian angel doesn’t mean that everyone thinks like this.”

Bruce looked at his hands.

“However I wish we have to do with the better case scenario: Dick deserves to have caring people around him…Of course I must find more info about this man.”

He was deep in thought and Selina wanted to change the subject.

“I saw the money you put in my account” she locked eyes with him. “What were you thinking, sweetie?” her voice was accusing. “It’s too much! And I’m not doing any of it for money!”

“I know, Sel, but I’m occupying you all the time and that forbids you for working” he felt awkward speaking about such things “and you actually work for me – so giving you a check is proper and eases my guilt.”

Selina shook her head slightly amused.

“Speaking of which” Bruce continued with new energy “since you’re my bodyguard…”

‘And chauffer…” she remarked slyly and Bruce nodded.

“I’m invited to the Thanksgiving party the Haven’s children are throwing and I need not only a bodyguard but also some company.”

Selina chuckled and cocked an eyebrow.

“I understand the need for a bodyguard because these fellas are really devious and dangerous” Bruce laughed. “The day after tomorrow, huh? Wow! I can’t believe that this time of year has come…” she twitched her lips. “Not that it made much sense the previous years…”

Bruce pouted and shook his head thoughtful, his mind going back to all these endless years in Dolcetto when days seemed the same in their ugliness. Or worse.

“Your first Thanksgiving in freedom” Selina sighed and then jolted from her armchair full with energy “we must make it special!”

Bruce grinned broadly.

“I’ll spend that day with all of you and without fearing that Falcone or Ra’s might see us – it will be special… And we’ll share with the kids at the Haven.”

Selina came to him in a playful manner and sat on the desk beside him.

“And…you have also the hot super hunk to make the day even more special, huh? Or I should say the night? Even if he won’t be with you at the party, I’m sure he’ll wait eagerly to wrap those sculpted hands around you after…”

But Bruce’s eyes became blank for a second as he recalled the last night. Selina noticed immediately and cupped her friend’s chin bringing his eyes on hers.

“What? He didn’t wise up? What has he done this time?”
“Nothing, Sel. He had a hard time last night with the hit in the Metropolis’ subway: ten people died” he pressed his lips. “He was sad and a bit shaken.”

Selina pursed her lips.

“You’d tell me if he did?” she inquired disbelieving. “Or you’d try to protect him?”

Bruce chuckled: protect Superman from Selina’s wrath…Actually, it made sense – when Selina was angry not even Superman had a chance!

“Don’t worry, Sel. Everything is fine.”

However deep inside there was a toxic doubt that he struggled to silence. Thankfully, his Cosmos played the tune for Clark’s calls and offered the perfect escape.

“Hey, Bruce; how are you?”

“Perfect, Clark.”

Selina rolled her eyes and stood from the desk slithering to the armchair in front of the desk to give some privacy.

“So perfect that you are in Wayne Tower working” disapproval was evident. “You didn’t sleep well last night so it’d be better if you stayed home.”

“You’re watching me?”

“Your heartbeat is my favorite sound and I can locate where the beating comes from unless there’s lead. But you’re changing the subject.”

“I don’t feel tired, Clark” he took in Selina’s snort. “And…”

“Never mind…” Clark cut him with a sigh. “I called to tell you that I won’t come tonight…”

Bruce could picture him rubbing the bridge of his nose.

“It’s everything alright?”

“That’s everything alright.”

“Of course not, Bruce…” he snorted. “So I want to be in Metropolis to watch closely in case the remnants of Edge’s gang want revenge – Gotham isn’t too far yet it’s better if I’m in Metropolis. I’m sure you understand.”
Of course he did…yet even when he was in Greece, in the other corner of the planet that didn’t stop Clark from coming. He pressed his lips but finally shook his head because even silently he was whining like a spoiled brat: innocent lives were more precious than his indulgence.

“Absolutely, Clark; I was looking at the photos Jimmy shot from the incident and I noticed that there are no pictures of you and the Princess while fighting with Edge…”

It was a grunt that?

“Listen, Bruce, I really don’t have time for your detective muscles stretching…”

Bruce frowned and Clark heard the abnormal intake of air.

“Jimmy’s camera collapsed or something; at least, that’s what he told me” he replied calmer and softer.

“The kids at the Haven invited me to their Thanksgiving party.”

“Have a great time, Bruce: I can’t be there either as Clark Kent or as Superman since our relationship is secret. So I’ll go have dinner with Ma.”

Bruce nodded.

“That’s nice…She must feel pretty lonely especially during holidays; give her my greetings.”

“She’ll be pleased. And then I’ll come to spend the rest of the night with you” it was the first time Bruce could discern a smile in Clark’s voice.

“Okay, Clark: I just hope you find time to drop by sooner…”

Clark huffed.

“Me too, Bruce. I have to go now…”

And with that the dial was ended. Bruce still gazed at his tablet’s screen rethinking their conversation.

Selina coughed to draw him out of his thoughts. She looked at her Fendi wristwatch – Bruce’s gift.

“Time to go home, sweetie. You don’t want Alfred worried and reprimanding.”

Bruce shook his head; his neck felt a bit stiff and his eyes stung from the lack of sleep.

“I suppose you’re right…”

Alfred leaned for his young master to wrap his arms around his neck and slither in his wheelchair which wasn’t the one Clark made for him but Tony’s – they didn’t want people suspect that his wheelchair was of alien technology though Tony’s creation was much out of the ordinary too. For once, there were no visible wheels but they were built in the sides.

Snow was heavily falling and Alfred muffled carefully Bruce’s legs with the quilt blanket because the 28th of November was a very cold night; the assembled reporters pushed the Haven’s security men to approach. There was no official notification that Bruce would attend the party that wasn’t a social event after all, but the most cunning of the Press figured that the young tycoon would want to be with the kids that night: his soft spot for those children was known.

When Selina who arrived sooner informed them about the flock of awaiting reporters, it was Bruce’s decision to not evade them: he’d speak to them in order for them to leave the kids and the guests to enjoy themselves. So he led his chair to them with the control screen on the armrest.

All the cameras flashed at once and microphones were stretched to him.

“Mr. Wayne, is your paraplegia curable?”

“The League of Shadows did that?”

“Is Superman really in love with you?”

Selina hidden behind a wall laughed on that though she felt annoyed by those maniacs bothering Bruce.

Bruce raised his hands appeasing.

“Ladies and gentlemen, I promise to answer all your questions in a press conference. But not here. I’m sure you’re sensitive enough to feel those children’s need to celebrate Thanksgiving as homey as possible. So I’ll be grateful to you if you let us spend that night as every other person” he saw their expressions softening. “I’m sure your families will be more than happy to have you with them for the dinner” he smiled cordially. “Happy Thanksgiving!”

They returned the wish and closed cameras and microphones, gathering their stuff to leave: nobody wanted to seem rude or insensitive with Gotham’s orphans and everyone preferred to spend the night with loved ones. Since Wayne promised to answer their questions they could grand him that small favor – besides the majority of Gotham had a soft spot for the tortured Prince and the reporters didn’t want to become hateful – their relentless chase the last days had caused already uproar.

“Thank you” Bruce smiled.

Alfred took the handles and turned the chair towards the building.

“Sometimes having inherited Lilith’s charm isn’t so bad, right, sir?” the British whispered and Bruce chuckled.

The party was hosted in the Haven’s highly equipped gym obviously for having enough space. As they were ready to enter, Selina intercepted them and like a flash leaned and kissed Bruce’s cheek.

“You play them in your fingers, huh?” she took Bruce’s kiss closing her eyes. “Yet I think that they were happy enough with your pictures because you’re gorgeous!”

Bruce eyed her body.

“You’re very beautiful, too, Sel!”

She smirked and shook her head.

“Hm…Casual attire, darling: skin tight skirt, wool turtle neck blouse, long coat. I’m Mr. Wayne’s nurse so I must be sightly” they had agreed to present Selina as his nurse.

Alfred cleared his throat.

“You’re gorgeous too, Alf!” Selina chirped and gave him a kiss.
“Well, I’m most grateful, Miss Kyle but what I wanted to tell is that it’s bloody freezing here so better conclude that discussion inside” with so much cold Alfred felt almost regretful for bringing Bruce here.

Right on point a good looking young woman came to them smiling and led them inside. The vast gym was decorated with wreaths made with dried flowers on the walls under long ribbons reading ‘Happy Thanksgiving’ and ‘Give Thanks’; some turkeys made from multicolored paper were hanging from the roof along with pumpkins while the floor was covered with leaves made from brown paper.

At the far end there were two long tables with every kind of traditional delicacy from turkey to pumpkin pies and beautiful round shaped candles inside lanterns made the scene warmer. A band played joyful music.

Bruce was gaping around because it was like reliving some of his childhood holidays …before Falcone.

“Wow!” Selina exclaimed as impressed as Bruce.

The social worker smiled.

“The kids made all these! They were so happy and they wanted to give their thanks…”

But Bruce was now looking at the other half of the space where gymnastic equipment where set. The gym was so big to allow the party taking place without having to remove those but there were people with athletic wear around the organs.

“The city’s gymnastics team offered to make a show for the kids…”

Selina gasped seeing what Bruce was now seeing: almost thirty kids rushing to them laughing, among them Billy who was the older – a young man actually. Bruce knew most of these children either from the opening ceremony or the night Joker captured them. Thankfully, the rest of the kids remained scattered around the place and only after hearing the commotion approached.

“They’re really dangerous…” Selina chuckled in Bruce’s ear but he was smiling around.

On the opposite corner of the gym, Dick with Ms. Turner and Jason waited among his teammates for the performance to start. The commotion caught their attention and Ms. Turner smiled.

“Bruce is here and the children surrounded him…” she was looking there yet Dick felt that these words were for him. “They really love him…”

The boy snorted to Jason.

“They don’t know who he is; if they did would have run away…” his voice was filled with poison and Ms. Turner stared him with disapproval.

“Dick, you’re unfair! If you tried to be reasonable you’d understand that Bruce did nothing wrong” Ms. Turner protested.

Dick shook his head mocking and Jason pursed his lips disapproving.

“You always make excuses for him!” he snapped to his grandmother. “Ugh! You don’t want to see the truth!”
Ms. Turner looked him almost desperately.

“What truth, honey?”

But Dick shook his head and seeing Jeff waving at him darted away. Ms. Turner lowered her head and Jason patted her back.

“It’s alright, Ms. Turner…He didn’t mean to yell at ya. He loves ya.”

The old woman turned her eyes to the boy and smiled.

“I know, Jason…” she cupped his chin. “I’m glad he has you. Where’s your mom?”

Jason a bit uncomfortable from the caress craned his head looking for his mother.

“There! She works here an’ every employee was invited to the party with their kids.”

A young man came out of the mass of kids bumbling around Bruce.

“Br-Br-Bruce, h-how are y-you?” it was Billy.

“I’m fine, Billy, thank you – everything is so very beautiful!”

“You-you-you like it?!” the mentally retarded youth asked with bulged eyes. “We-we did it our-our-ourselves: all the kids!”

Bruce realized that his eyes were on the verge of watering because he was so touched from all these children’s happiness.

“Then I think you deserve a reward…” he grinned broadly and looked up to Alfred.

“Most definitely, sir!” he pulled out his cell and pressed a button.

Several men and women dressed in Wayne Enterprises’ uniforms entered the gym carrying packages wrapped in shiny paper and multicolored ribbons.

“For you” Bruce said loudly and the Haven’s kids turned ready to rush to the gifts.

But the teacher coughed loudly and miraculously she was heard; tens of sweet faces turning to her.

“What do we say?” she asked half amused and half reprimanding.

“Thank you, Mr. Wayne!” an out of tune chorus yelled and Bruce bit his lower lip to not laugh loudly.

“You welcome! Happy Thanksgiving!” he gestured to the waiting presents and the crowd of eager boys and girls looked first to their teacher and after she nodded they stormed there where social workers and teachers distributed the gifts.

“Alfred, do you think that the presents would be enough for the kids from the gymnastics’ team? I didn’t know.”

Alfred smiled reassuringly.

“Do not worry, Master Bruce: the presents are more than enough.”

Bruce gazed at the giggling boys and girls, both orphans who lived in the Haven’s village and children of the employees and the other beneficiaries.

The social worker who had escorted them excused herself and headed to the commotion to help her colleagues.

“Why that boy isn’t with the other kids?” Bruce gestured with the head towards a raven haired boy with blue eyes.

Selina chuckled.

“Because this, sweetie, is no other than Mr. Jason Todd: he is a man so he can’t be acting childish…”

“Then his parents must be working in the Haven – because although the party is open for every kid in the Narrows from what you said, I don’t think he’d come.”

Selina lolled her head and raised an eyebrow.

“I’m surprised he did come even with his parents…” she snorted.

Something twitched in Bruce’s guts.

“Maybe Dick is here too and that made Jason come…” he stretched his head but being seated in a chair made it difficult to see to every corner of the vast gym – especially to the far end where the athletes were warming up. “He trains in the city’s gym and he is a member of the junior team.”

Selina leaned her head to Alfred winking.

“Did he sound proud to you?”

The butler grinned and Selina nodded.

“I knew it wasn’t my impression…”

Then Bruce caught a glimpse of Ms. Turner.

“Yes, Dick is here…” but that made him feel a bit unease: he knew how much the boy hated him. “I hope at least he has fun…” though he doubted now that he had appeared.

When Bruce turned his head Leslie was there chewing a piece of pie.

“Oh! Here you are!” she squatted in front of Bruce. “I didn’t know that it would be so cold tonight” she touched her hand to Bruce’s forehead to assess his temperature.

“There was no chance I wouldn’t have come, Leslie! And I’m fine. Now, I’m hungry so let’s see if the food is any good.”

“Actually, it’s delicious!” Leslie said standing.

He had hardly eaten a piece of turkey when he heard a ripple of enthusiastic cheers and the kids left the presents and gathered in front of the entrance. Bruce couldn’t discern what was going on but then a red and gold android flew above the youngsters who goggled.

“Anthony Howard Stark…” Leslie said shaking her head mock disapproving. “Who else?”

Bruce smiled.
“He knows how to make an entrance, huh?” he asked winking.

A fuming but stunning as ever Pepper Potts emerged from the commotion and approached them.

“That Stark!” she rolled her eyes. “Always showing off!”

“He gives joy to the kids, Peps…” Bruce came to his friend’s defense.

Pepper shook her head and huffed.

“With you as a lawyer he knows that there’s nothing to fear…”

Yet she immediately smiled cordially.

“I missed all of you; how are you? Bruce, is everything alright?”

“Perfect, Peps; I’m glad you could make it: the Haven is your creation as well.”

“I didn’t do anything…”

Leslie shook her head.

“Of course, you did, dear: I was there, remember?”

“Miss Potts is modest but we all know her contribution to all of this” Alfred smiled.

Selina chuckled.

“And only the fact you have to do with Stark all the time is enough…”

Pepper cast a sideways glance behind her where Tony got awed exclamations from his fans.

“Tell me about it…” she cocked her eyebrows.

And then she leaned and hugged Bruce planting kisses to both his cheeks.

“If I didn’t trust blindly both of you, I’d misapprehend your stance…” a cocky voice came behind them as Tony strutted there.

Pepper stood and frowned at him while Bruce smirked.

“Is the veteran facing an age crisis?” he remarked snidely.

Tony’s eyes bulged and his mouth twitched.

“What age?!”

“You want me to state your age?” Pepper said arching her eyebrows crossing her arms.

“Oh! No way, missy! This is a secret of highly national importance…Mmm! Pumpkin pie! It’s been years since I last ate…Yummy!”

Suddenly, the band stopped and the social worker who had escorted them walked in front of the gymnastic organs, the spotlight following her.

“Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, the local team of gymnastics was so kind to offer us a demonstration of their talent. Please give them a warm welcome!” she clapped first and the whole gym erupted in applause.

The athletes some of them senior and some of them junior, just kids, performed impressive programs in pommel horse, still rings, high bar, vault and balance beam. Many times the acrobatic moves caused screams of excitement or made the audience hold their breath.

For Bruce the most challenging was watching Dick Grayson executing a particularly complex and difficult set of exercises on the high bar with giants (revolutions around the bar), release skills, twists, and changes of direction. His eyes were narrowed and he barely breathed as the boy jolted high above the bar to hold again the bar in the last second.

Alfred who had sensed his agony squeezed his young master’s shoulders.

“Master Bruce, you should relax” he whispered and Bruce turned his eyes on him.

“They shouldn’t let so young kids do such things…It’s dangerous!” he protested and Tony looked at him confused.

“He is young mister Grayson” Alfred explained and Tony nodded because a couple of months ago Bruce almost died to save that boy so his intense reaction was understandable now. “If I may, sir” the British lowered his voice “you do more dangerous things.”

“I’m trained, Alfred…” he replied though his searching eyes had located a familiar face: the man that had stalked Dick.

Tony cocked an eyebrow.

“He is trained too, buddy; his coach wouldn’t have let him do these things if he wasn’t perfectly able…”

Bruce gasped as the boy jerked to the air, made two backflips and landed on his feet causing the enthusiastic applause and the cheers from the crowd.

“His grandmother must be very proud” he remarked catching Ms. Turner applauding her grandson tearful.

Selina lolled her head on the side.

“She isn’t the only one…” she commented smirking with her eyes pointing Bruce.

Dick ran to his coach who covered him with a towel and sent him to the showers. Bruce saw Ms. Turner suddenly striding to the other side of the gym.

“Where is she going?” Selina asked frowning.

Bruce nodded towards a man standing in a corner watching from the shadows.

“Tony Zucco was watching Dick’s performance…” Bruce whispered to her because their friends were occupied watching the athletes performing.

Ms. Turner had to bury her pride on her grandson as soon as her eyes fell on Zucco sneaking on the boy from a corner. She covered the space between them with furious strides and stood before him.

Zucco didn’t change his position from leaning his back to the wall with his arms crossed. A faint smirk was formed over his face that was covered by the shadows. He watched amused the old lady approaching.
“Well, hello, Ms. Turner! Happy Thanksgiving.”

She pursed her lips and her eyes flashed.

“What are you doing here?”

He pouted innocently.

“It’s obvious I think…I marvel at my nephew.”

Ms. Turner raised her index finger angrily.

“Leave Dick alone! I won’t let you destroy him as you did with his father!”

His eyebrows jerked upwards and he gestured to himself.

“Me? Destroyed John?” he said exasperated and the sound of the music and people talking muffled it. “John was my relative and my friend: I wanted the best for him.”

But Ms. Turner didn’t buy that; she knew him.

“You slipped illegal substances to his water and stole his money!”

Zucco’s eyes bulged and his face contorted.

“That’s a lie! I didn’t steal his money: I heard of some good investments and I shared my info with him: it was his decision to invest on these companies! And I didn’t give him illegal substances – John never believed that; it was never proved!”

Ms. Turner frowned.

“John had degraded you and was ready to fire you when he died in that accident” she growled.

Zucco sniggered.

“Are you going to accuse me of that too? Accusing someone of murder needs proof, Ms. Turner!”

“You know how to cover your traces but I don’t need proof to know who you are! And I want you away from Dick!”

Zucco lolled his head on the side and looked her smugly.

“Or else?”

Ms. Turner clenched her fists.

“I’m not a scum like you to threaten you; but I’ll tell everything to Dick so he stays away from you.”

Zucco laughed.

“I don’t think he’ll listen to you…I detect that he is rather displeased with you; on the contrary he is very fond of me so I think that your effort will lead to the opposite result…”

Ms. Turner’s breath became pants to the man’s amusement.

“I can go to the police.”
He shrugged a shoulder.

“I’m the boy’s uncle and that would make Dick angrier with you; he could even sneak out to find me…The boy loves my company…”

The old lady jerked her head clenching her jaw: indeed, Dick had a soft spot for that man to the point that he didn’t believe her.

“What do you want?”

Zucco widened his eyes innocently.

“Me? What could I want other than being close to my nephew? Besides, what could a pensioner have that I’d want?” he frowned. “Though…that apartment you live, Dick’s clothes, his gadgets are pricy for your financials” his eyes shone wickedly.

Ms. Turner shook her head.

“You want money – say how much you want to leave us alone and I’ll give you.”

He smirked.

“I wonder…where you’d find the money” he cocked his eyebrows “if supposedly that was what I wanted. Poor John lost almost all his money, Mary’s new husband wasn’t wealthy and you…well, you are only a pensioner with no other fortune – John had told me.”

Ms. Turner’s eyes were cold: so that was his catch. He smelt money and came to cash in endangering her grandson’s wellbeing.

“It’s none of your business! Tell me how much and you’ll have it.”

Zucco licked his upper lip grinning. He met the old lady’s eyes.

“Why taking a portion when I can get everything?” he hissed like a real snake. “The boy is the goldmine…”

He walked away from her leaving her in a state of shock; her eyes bulged and her heart began pounding cutting her breath. Only one thought prevailed in her brain: Zucco had targeted Dick and like John he wouldn’t leave the boy alone till he extracted everything he could. She remembered with dread John’s tragic accident: the inquiry, the investigation, the assumptions…But nothing was proved and John would never come back to meet his unborn son: her heart convulsed in the suspicion that Zucco could do the same to her grandson if he thought that there was nothing else to take or was afraid of being exposed.

She sought support to the wall.

Superman was hovering over Metropolis watching everything. His hearing was focused on catching the familiar voices of Metropolis’ thugs: they were chatting about Edge’s crazy deed and either they laughed for his blunder or the wisest of them cursed him because police hardened the security and their vigilance all over the city.

Thankfully, there was no hint of violence in the city as if the blind hit at the subway had never happened. He landed on the Daily Planet’s rooftop under the globe’s model. Two days now he wanted to meet Diana and tell her everything about Bruce and him but she didn’t show up.

He just returned from a wonderful dinner with his Ma: she was so happy that her son came to spend the holiday with her and more when Clark gave her Bruce’s greeting and wishes. She told him that she’d like to meet the young man…

Superman smiled: he could imagine Bruce’s reaction – he was so shy and uneasy with meeting new people. Especially, Clark’s mother. But maybe Clark could manage to persuade him.

He closed his eyes inhaling the cold air; unlike Gotham, there it wasn’t snowing. His mind went to Bruce and his outing: he knew the man’s love for those kids but still maybe he should have stayed inside; his organism was too sensitive.

Clark arched his eyebrows: nobody could change Bruce’s decision to attend and at least he hoped that the young man had a great time right now.

“Ms. Turner?”

The old lady heard the voice like it came from another world but it made her feel safe.

“Ms. Turner, are you alright?”

She turned to see Bruce Wayne staring at her worried. Ms. Turner smiled reassuringly.

“I’m fine, dear; thank you…”

Bruce turned to Selina who was watching the old lady as much worried.

“Selina, can you bring some water and Leslie?”

His friend nodded and hurried to the long tables.

“That wasn’t necessary, Bruce…” the old lady panted but Selina was already gone.

Bruce gestured at the chairs; he would have supported Ms. Turner but being on a wheelchair didn’t allow him.

“It is better you’d sit down, Ms. Turner” and since he couldn’t do much he gave her his hand to grab.

Her smile was fool of gratitude as she followed him to a secluded corner of the gym. She sat down and slowly her breath returned to normal.

Dick had just come out of the showers dressed in his casual outfit when Jason rushed to him.

“Wow, man! Ya’re fantastic!”

Dick blushed.

“Thanks, Jay!”

“Ya must be hungry: fancy some turkey?”

Dick chuckled.

“I think you fancy the turkey…”
Jason shrugged pouting.

“I tucked in tons when I was with mom – but there’s always room for more!” he rubbed circles over his belly.

Dick put his arm over the boy’s shoulders smiling.

“What have you seen my granny?”

Jeff, the coach, who was talking with some girls he was training heard him and approached.

“I saw Ms. Turner during your performance but then she went somewhere…” he craned his head.

“Ah! She’s there” he pointed at the chairs in the corner.

Dick frowned seeing his granny slumped in a chair: he couldn’t discern much because people were moving around and children were dancing again after the demonstration.

She shook her head still smiling stoic and waved off his worry.

“I’m fine now, my child…”

Selina who just arrived gave her the glass of water and she took it with a smile.

“Thank you, my dear girl.”

Bruce looked at Leslie that came along.

“Leslie, this is Ms. Turner: she is a bit pale, can you…”

“Of course, Bruce.”

“Ms. Turner, this is Dr. Leslie Thompkins, my doctor. She can examine you – just to be sure.”

Ms. Turner sipped from her glass and shook her head.

“Who doesn’t know the best and kindest doctor in the city; but I’m fine now, Dr. Thompkins, and I don’t want Dick panicked.”

Leslie sat in the chair beside her and narrowed her eyes.

“He won’t have a reason to panic if we examine you making sure that everything is alright.”

Ms. Turner closed her eyes and suddenly a boy rushed there kneeling before her; his blue eyes searched scared her face for any trace of illness.

“Granny, what happened? Are you feeling alright?”

Bruce gulped uncomfortable and his eyes darted to the other boy that came with Dick. Their eyes met for an instance and the boy turned decisively his head to Dick.

“I’m fine, sweetheart” Ms. Turner told him caressing his face. “I just felt a bit dizzy and Bruce with his friend helped me” Dick’s mouth twisted ugly on the mention of Bruce’s name and cast him a sideways hostile glance before driving all his attention to Ms. Turner. “And Dr. Thompkins is here…”
Leslie despite the woman’s objection had already touched her fingers to the old lady’s wrist to calculate her pulse.

“Your granny’s pulse is normal now and her color is back but I suggest that you take her to a hospital for a checkup.”

Dick nodded.

“Can we leave now, granny?” he didn’t like being so close to Wayne. “Are you up to?”

“We can stay a bit more” she replied wanting to make Dick stay with Bruce in hopes of him changing his mind for the man.

But Dick narrowed his eyes and stiffened reading her intention. And it was so easy for Bruce to understand and feel a painful clench in his guts.

“I have school tomorrow, granny and Jay’s mother waits us – also, you need to rest…”

Ms. Turner pressed her lips sad and stood up, Dick helping her. The old lady turned to Bruce.

“Thank you, Bruce, and all of you” she looked at Selina and Leslie.

“There’s no need to thank me, Ms. Turner” Bruce met Dick’s cold stare. “Congratulations on your performance, Richard.”

The boy jerked his head away and made to leave but he came across Alfred who carried two presents.

“All the athletes took their presents, young master Grayson: this is yours” he gave him the package smiling and turned to Jason. “And that is for you, sir.”

“I don’t want anything bought with his money!” Dick spat and threw away the gift storming away from them Jason following.

Ms. Turner lowered her head.

“I’m sorry for that…” she said shaking her head.

“It’s okay, Ms. Turner” Bruce replied. “I understand.”

She pressed her lips and patted his shoulder.

“You’re such a good boy: I hope Dick sees it soon…It was great meeting all of you” she smiled. “I must find them now, excuse me. Good night!”

“Good night, Ms. Turner…”

Selina kneeled at Bruce’s side and hugged him.

“Don’t mind him, sweetie…he’ll regret it someday!”

Bruce held her hand.

“No problem, Sel: I just want the boy to be happy – if that means that he’ll hate me, let it be.”

Leslie stood up.
“He should learn who pays everything for him…” she said grimly annoyed from the boy’s attitude.

But Bruce looked at her determined.

“No way, Leslie! He won’t find out ever!”

“What’s the matter?” Tony strolled to them with a glass of fruit punch in one hand and a turkey leg in the other. “A furious little brat – I think he was Grayson - ran into me and almost toppled me and then another one…”

Pepper followed him.

“And they didn’t even ask for an autograph…” she snorted and Tony nodded.

“Exactly! Gotham’s youth are hopeless!”

He frowned seeing Selina cuddling Bruce.

“You finally decided to shoo Supes and admit your feelings for Sel” she cast him a death stare. “Or something happened.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Nothing really…”

“Don’t give that to me, little guy…Unless you don’t trust your Tony” he cocked his eyebrows complaining and Bruce huffed defeated and told him. “What an ungrateful brat!” he spat outraged.

Bruce lolled his head on the side.

“He’s a good kid, Tony” his friend nodded in a manner implying the opposite. “Alfred” he looked at his butler “can we go? I feel a bit tired.”

“Of course, Master Bruce. Let me bring your coat.”

Impressed exclamations and excited giggles filled the gym and they looked around to see the reason: which wasn’t so difficult since a really huge – six feet tall - torte, with many layers, was pushed inside by several delivery boys. It was orange, in the color of the pumpkin and decorated with cream and white chocolate. Drooling kids stared awed at the candy.

Bruce exchanged frowned puzzled looks with the others because none of them had ordered that. But then an impeccably dressed man with a beautiful young woman at his arm entered the gym and approached the teachers and social workers talking to them.

“Thomas Elliot…” Leslie mumbled shaking her head. “And Kelly, one of our nurses.”

Thomas took the microphone that one of the staff gave him.

“I hope I’m not ruining anything…” he chuckled. “I’m Dr. Thomas Elliot, if you don’t know me already. Well, I was thinking that Gotham’s children deserve everything someone has to offer, so since my old friends Bruce Wayne and Tony Stark generously offered so much, I decided to add a little something.

Bruce cocked an eyebrow on the ‘little’ and met Tony’s eyes that had an amused shine.

“I used to do such mummeries…” the tycoon from Malibu snorted.
“Used?” Pepper cast him a haughty look.

Selina leaned to Bruce’s ear.

“He reminds you of someone?” she snorted.

Indeed, Bruce remembered that he had a suit like this; the one he wore at the police’s ball. And Thomas’ hair was groomed like his. He nodded.

“Before I shut up to let you enjoy the cake I’d like to say something I wanted for much time. I’m happy that Bruce Wayne, our angel of the Narrows, came back from the dead and Hell to give a ray of sunlight in our lives and inspire us into being better people.”

Bruce lowered his head and rubbed his temple annoyed. He absolutely hated that and if he wasn’t trained to control his respiration he’d be panting now feeling so many eyes on him. His other fist was clenched as his jaw: he wasn’t doing anything from what Eliot was saying.

Tony was frowning too because that was like re-watching Luthor the day of the opening ceremony: the scumbag was saying the same things to flatter Bruce and create an alibi.

The women of the company weren’t much convinced either.

But Thomas was grinning broadly.

“I admit that I was absorbed by myself all these years despite the fact I helped a lot of people. However my personal dramas kept me away from Gotham and made me close my eyes to the city’s misery. And then I heard about Bruce’s return and his generosity to the city and the people. I thought: hey! If Bruce can put the other people’s misery above his traumas I can do it too. So I returned to my homeland to offer whatever I can to Gotham and her people in need…” he shook his head. “And the children are the priority here because the children are our future so we’re obliged to make those cute faces bear huge smiles… The smile of one kid is worthy of all our efforts…and Bruce taught me that.”

Inside he was smirking in disgust because he hated children; especially, those with cute, sweet faces like Brucey. However, he had to play his act to the end.

“For that, I donate five hundred thousand dollars to the Haven hoping to help the brilliant work Bruce Wayne started…”

“Actually, Tony started the Haven…” Bruce mumbled between his clenched teeth.

“At least, he chose a different amount of money…” his friend whispered to Bruce’s ear sniggering.

Thomas beaming opened his arms to the gaping crowd.

“Please, applause those who created that Haven for Gotham’s less fortunate: Bruce Wayne and Tony Stark!”

The entire gym echoed from the loud clapping and Tony waved to the people.

“A bit of standing ovation never hurt anyone…” he said to Bruce through gritted teeth forming a stunning smile.

But Bruce was tense.

“Master Bruce, is everything alright?” Alfred who just returned with Bruce’s coat immediately took in his young master’s upset.

Bruce nodded and took hastily his coat to wear it; Alfred helped him.

“Calm down, little guy” Tony said. “It’s not bad being praised and you know that there are far more for which you should be praised.”

The younger man ran his fingers through his hair.

“I’ll bid good night to the kids and the staff and I’ll return home – Hero is alone.”

Selina winked.

“Do you think he found the way down and terrorized your other pets?”

Bruce smiled.

“Thankfully, they are out…”

Tony laughed.

“I’d like to watch the little fur ball in action…”

As Bruce was congratulating the staff for the party and saying his goodbyes, many of the kids left the huge dessert and came to him. Among them Billy.

“You-you leaving, Br-Bruce?” he asked disappointed and the same was evident to other little faces.

“I’m a bit tired, Billy…But for Christmas we’ll throw another bigger party!”

The faces around him lit on that.

“Bruce, are you leaving already?”

Bruce turned to the voice’s direction to see Thomas Elliot with his date. His childhood ‘friend’ approached detaching himself from Kelly and stretched his hand for a handshake.

“I’m sure that after eighteen years you can’t recognize me” he smiled “But I’m sure that Leslie informed you.”

Bruce took his hand grinning.

“How are you, Thomas?”

The young doctor’s became broader.

“Brilliant now that I finally met you again…” he shook his head. “My…You’re more gorgeous in person” Bruce’s smile faltered and Thomas bit his lower lip. “I’m sorry – sensitive topic…” there was some irony that Bruce didn’t miss Thomas turned to Tony.

“Tony! I’m so happy to see you after all this time! Of course I know all about your action. Wow! From our childhood you were the protector of the weak!” he shook hands with Tony who stretched his lips in a tight smile. “I remember how you’re constantly saving littl’ Brucie from the bigger boys and…me…”
Tony’s smile now was genuine.

“That’s still the most entertaining part: crushing the bullies!” he nodded.

Thomas laughed but inside he was gritting his teeth: that bragging arrogant bastard!

“Miss Potts!” he took her hand elegantly and touched his lips on the back of the palm. “You’re dazzling as ever!”

“Thank you, Dr. Elliot” Pepper answered.

“Call me Thomas, my dear. And who’s that beautiful young lady?” he asked looking at Selina who rolled her eyes but only inside.

“She is my friend and nurse” Bruce replied “Selina Kyle.”

Thomas was ready to kiss her hand too but she pulled it abruptly from his grip. The young doctor licked his lips a bit irritated but smiled.

“Pleased to meet you, Miss Kyle.”

I can’t say the same… Selina thought and Bruce who was looking at her smiled knowing what she was thinking.

“Me too, Mr. Elliot.”

Thomas was upset for his title’s omission.

“It’s Dr., dear…but after all I prefer being called just Thomas. Leslie, finally I see you in a context different than the clinic; I hope you’re having a great time.”

“I do, Thomas” she nodded.

“Alfred! So nice to see you again after all these years!”

“Likewise, Dr. Elliot” Alfred replied in his pride, collected demeanor.

“You must be very happy now you got Bruce back: everyone knows how much you love him” he was always running to you whining... Alfred didn’t answer and Thomas finally remembered Kelly.

“Oh! This is Miss Kelly Lawrence.”

“Nice to meet you, Miss Lawrence” Bruce said smiling. “But I must be going now.”

Thomas pouted.

“Of course. You’re still recovering and you have already taken so many responsibilities – as if anyone would blame you for resting.”

“Some things have to be done.”

Thomas nodded and gave him again his hand.

“I’d like to see you again, Bruce and you, Tony, for some catching up.”

Bruce smiled.

“Sure...Thank you for everything you did for the kids, Thomas” he shook his hand.
“It’s really nothing, Bruce – my pleasure…”

Alfred pushed the wheelchair to the exit and Thomas watched them.

Superman heard soft feet landing graciously behind him; he knew who it was – he had come to recognize the breath, heartbeat and perfume. Clark crossed his arms and yanked his head inhaling deeply: suddenly, the thing he was eager to do those two days, now seemed too difficult.

The Princess walked proudly towards him and stood by his side.

“Happy Thanksgiving” she said. “I learnt that this day is an important holiday for humans in this country” Clark nodded. “So – though you’re not like these people - I’m hoping that seeing me will make the night special for you” she cocked an eyebrow.

Clark looked at her.

“I’m always happy seeing you…Actually, I wanted to talk to you.”

Diana smiled.

“So you changed your mind about our kiss…”

Clark licked his lips and closed his eyes.

“No, Diana; I didn’t and I wanted to talk to you about that.”

Her displeasure was clear in her face but quickly she regained her smugness.

“Talk to me then.”

Clark pressed his lips; his heart was drumming in his chest.

“What happened in the subway – the kiss - must not be repeated, Diana. We can’t continue that” she frowned and Clark met her enchanting eyes. “I have an affair.”

Her eyebrows arched and she pouted.

“I know you’re not with Lois Lane” then something flashed in her eyes and her mouth twisted “don’t tell me it’s Wayne after all…”

Clark clenched his jaw for the contempt he saw in her face.

“Yes, we are together.”

The Amazon crossed her arms and nodded.

“You denied it several times…”

“We wanted to keep it secret – you saw how much Bruce’s connection to me threatens his life.”

She cocked an eyebrow mocking.

“Is just that? I’m not one of your enemies neither I would ever betray your secret.”

Clark nodded.
“I know but still…”

Diana wasn’t listening anymore: she erupted in a jeering laughter that hurt Clark.

“Excuse me…” she said when the laughing fit stopped. “But I’m content because your hesitation to admit it shows that you’re aware of how ridiculous this is. Superman, Kal El of the noble House of El, in a sexual relationship with Bruce Wayne of all mortals! For Zeus sake, Kal! How can you being trapped in this?!”

Clark was fuming.

“I wasn’t trapped! I love him and he deserves it!”

She shook her head.

“You forget his past?”

Clark jerked his arms in the air.

“It’s his past that makes him the bravest, the best human being I ever met!”

“Please, Kal! That’s nonsense! His past? He was a pleasure slave all his life – a whore! His body is overused, sucked up: his flesh carries the memories of all these filthy men that fucked him daily! He must be infected by many disgusting diseases!”

Clark knew that Bruce had gonorrhea.

Diana shook her head.

“Oh, Kal! His body isn’t worthy to take you inside: you’re pure as the sun, great like the Olympians – you can’t degrade yourself in this man’s body… I know about some enchantingly beautiful slaves who grant their masters some really breathtaking moments of carnal pleasure…But only to that point: beautiful beings like Wayne are made only for being used for pleasure and nothing more. However now his use is over: he is an overused, filthy whore whom even a mere human wouldn’t condescend with; and you are more that all these mortals together: you’re a walking Sun. Heck! Even Falcone would have gotten rid of him sooner or later…”

Clark closed his eyes; his temperature had increased from anger and embarrassment.

“Stop calling him a whore! He was captured by Falcone and held prisoner all his life: they were raping him!”

Diana nodded patronizingly.

“Fine, I understand that you feel for that poor victim; for the tortures he suffered. But the fact that he was abused doesn’t change the fact that he is a whore.”

“He is not!” he hissed and his eyes took a red hue.

But Diana didn’t seem shaken; she held his shoulders and looked him deep in the eyes.

“I know stories from my era: of many princes who were captured at childhood and became slaves and whores…it is tragic but can’t be undone. And once a whore always a whore – Bruce’s body is unholy, Kal; he defiles you…He is beneath you…”

Clark shook her hands off of him and turned his back to her; Diana yanked her head and watched cold.

“You don’t know him…”

“And I don’t want to know him: I saved him once; I might do it again but I don’t want any more contact with him. I guess this was the way he tricked you into fall for him: you saved him and he touched you with his drama queen story” her voice was jeering.

Clark’s face contorted and his fists clenched; he was sick and tired of her insults. He turned to her and the air of his movement waved her hair.

“He didn’t trick me! I was the one who pleaded with him to accept my love!”

On that her eyes widened in surprise and while Clark expected her to admit her mistake, she began cackling again. Superman’s cheeks became hot.

“And you fell for that? My dear Kal, you’re so innocent…He might have been captured and imprisoned but this doesn’t change the fact that he grew up in a whorehouse. The only teachings he had – even unconsciously – were of whores seducing their potential clients; and he knew deep inside that his ass was the only asset he had to survive. So even without his will; even without knowing it he used what he was learning from his environment. Cheap whores were all the family he had but even the cheapest whore knows how to emanate some charm to a client. And Wayne has also his extraordinary looks to add to this allure: willingly or not he used the tricks he learned all these years to make you bent for his sad story and think that you’re in love with him… While in reality you just pitied him.”

Superman’s face was trembling from anger that deformed him and a fire of another kind deep inside ate him slowly – the doubt, the irrational doubt, that maybe she was right. He grabbed her upper arms but the Amazon regarded him pitying him.

“That’s disgusting, Diana! Bruce is the purest being I ever knew: he’d prefer to die than using his looks to save his life – even when a child. He never tried to allure me! He resisted my advances!”

“That was his best trick! Persuading the others that he is a wild mountain to conquer! Oh! You’re in denial, Kal! Even if he doesn’t want it that whorehouse is his childhood and first youth: all his experiences come from them. He was forged hearing whores seducing their clients, their tricks soaked his body and mind – even if he wanted to he couldn’t shake off his whore self…”

Clark remembered the sensual, breathtaking dance Bruce did on his going…that was masterful and not the feat of an amateur… And Ra’s definitely trained Bruce as his whore and to seduce other men too: Ra’s’ enemies. Ra’s was training Bruce to seduce Superman…

Diana smirked smugly as if reading his mind. Her eyes sparkled amused.

“Do not have a worry, Kal El: I would never fall as low as to compete with a whore for a man – even if this man is you!”

His lips twisted in wrath and he took off before he acted violently. He flew away from her. His destination only one: the Wayne Manor, Bruce’s bedroom, Bruce’s holy body; his salvation, his life giving sun. He wanted to forget all these things he heard; to quench the doubts that burnt inside him.

Diana let her arms fall loosely to her sides and watched Superman moving away. Her face was curved by a glorious confident smile and her eyes shone gleefully.
Bruce sat before the fireplace petting Hero who was sprawled on his lap. He was pondering over everything that happened that night. Yes, he was really tired though he enjoyed the children’s cheerful fuss. But his short encounter with Dick, Ms. Turner’s collapse and Elliot’s presence made him tense.

Even though the window was closed and he was turned to the fireplace he caught immediately the sound that he had connected with happiness…

He wheeled the chair to the window and opened for Clark who immediately lifted him gently from the chair along with Hero who meowed; Clark and brought them to the bed keeping his lips locked with Bruce’s which opened to take in his hot tongue.

“I love you” the Man of Steel breathed.

“I love you too” he replied and saw flabbergasted Clark in a blur taking Hero and his basket, leaving the room and returning without the kitten. “Why you did that?”

Clark untied the belt from Bruce’s robe and slowly removed the cloth off him.

“We don’t want him to see what is to follow…” he said playfully already unbuttoning Bruce’s pajama shirt.

Bruce couldn’t understand Clark’s sudden enthusiasm but he was certainly grateful for the change: the last days Clark seemed so uninterested. But suddenly his wristwatch beeped and his body tensed.

Clark felt it immediately and locked eyes with him inquiringly.

“Jim has turned on the Bat signal!” Bruce said and Clark felt the younger man’s relaxed body becoming iron ready to jolt upright despite the impairment.

Clark touched his palm on his chest and returned him to the mattress.

“I’ll don the cape and cowl” he said determined. “No madness this time.”

Bruce’s eyes narrowed and flashed.

“It wasn’t madness with the children, it was necessary!”

“Now it’s not” he stood up.

“Jim knows the Batman.”

“I’ll stay in the shadows” he spat and stormed out of the room and to the cave.

Bruce brought his body in sitting position, wore his robe and slithered in his wheelchair that in the meantime had come to the bed. He rushed out of the room and to the secret passage. Hero whom Clark had left to the corridor ran to him and Bruce took him in his lap.

Clark had dressed in super speed but still Bruce caught up with him before he flew out: it was so awkward for him seeing Batman.

“Be careful!” he yelled and Batman turned his head with a smile so unfitting to him.

“Go to your room and rest – you’ll need it for when I come back!”

Bruce rolled his eyes and huffed. There was no chance he’d return to the bedroom. He led the chair to the computer and Hero jumped off his legs sniffing around and storming to the walls.

“They are out, Hero! And you should not attack the bats: they are our friends” he tried to reason with the kitten as his fingers hacked into the police’s frequencies to find what was wrong.

In the meantime, as the results flooded the screen, he pressed the button that would stop Batman’s hologram from appearing – Lucius had given him the control now he was back. He turned to the results: there were several alerts for burglaries, brawls, domestic violence but among them only one alert could have made Jim lit the signal.

“Arkham Asylum…”
Chapter 24

The sting in his neck shocked him: it was the same he had felt in the Manor before his entire body went paralyzed; he knew that Ra’s injected him again to keep him unable to react and fight.

Bruce didn’t know where he was: except from the paralysis his head was dizzy, muffled in a thick fog. He was just vaguely aware that Ra’s had took him away from his home, the Wayne Manor – exactly at the moment he thought that he got it back; he shoved him in a car to what must be a private airport. There two men came to meet him and Ra’s dropped him over his shoulder and embarked a small plane.

Bruce wanted to struggle, to writhe making his mentor’s effort difficult but his body was completely unreactive; stubbornly immobile. He could have screamed but Ra’s had gagged him: the only positive thing was that the Leader of the Shadows had given him the antidote to Crane’s fear toxin – after some time and after Al Ghul enjoyed himself watching his disobedient student suffer from nightmarish images.

He heard the plane’s engines turn on hoping against hope that something would stop Ra’s…but in vain… Superman was completely subdued by the Kryptonite, Alfred was wounded and Tony didn’t know anything about his friend’s new adventure.

He felt a jolt in his stomach and from the corner of the window he could glimpse he saw that they had taken off. He clenched his jaw and fought the tears that threatened his eyes: he lost, he was defeated the moment he believed that he had won – that his plan worked and at last he could be free…

It was torture, all these hours on board; counting every minute that took him away from Gotham and his loved ones. Far away as the minutes dragged slowly…He was so close to achieve his goal; so close to triumph over all his enemies…and now he was captive once again – a slave…No, never, ever again he’d become anyone’s slave no matter what.

Ra’s every now and then was staring at him, a huge smirk all over his face. His wild satisfaction beamed: he managed to capture the one who planned his destruction. His League’s branch in Gotham and his plan to destroy the city was ruined but he still got his prize…And now he devoured seeing in his student’s face the realization of that and the emotions that tainted him even though Bruce was trained to conceal them.

Bruce never lowered his eyes before his teacher’s stare – he wasn’t afraid of him. He might be feeling a wide range of negative emotions but terror wasn’t among them: Ra’s caught him but didn’t hurt fatally his loved ones. Fine, he was ready for his revenge which certainly would be horrid yet Bruce had the console that Gotham was free from Falcone’s reign and saved from the slaughter Ra’s had planned. And he had the chance to speak again with Tony after all these years; he had met Superman: a smile formed concealed from the gag: he was his Star… Plus, he didn’t have to pretend the frightened, subservient slave anymore.

He knew that Ra’s wouldn’t kill him: he’d have done it already. And his punishment however cruel would let him the opportunity to prepare his escape. If he had managed all these after eighteen years of captivity he could make it now as well. He just had to keep his courage and his mind strong because his mentor had already hinted that he was going to attempt to control his brain and will with drugs or League’s long tested methods.
Despite the fact his determination flared up his courage, exhaustion and disappointment was eroding him slyly; the thought of what he had planned for the day after his liberation ached.

The shaking was unstoppable as the car sped up to its destination. He was thrown in the trailer, Ra’s Al Ghul always with him. The man’s eagle eyes always fixed on him amused; Bruce hated that stare even when he still believed that the man would help him gain his freedom. When he realized that the lion-like man would never allow him to be free that hatred became even stronger, fuelling his passion to defeat him and Falcone.

The same acid bite in his heart, mocking him for his failure, for his inadequate plan: he wasn’t good enough... No, he shook off that thought: nothing had ended...

He could see outside from the trailer’s dusty door windows: Ra’s didn’t care about Bruce seeing where they headed – on the contrary, this was his purpose: Bruce realizing how far Ra’s was going to take him from his city and sinking into despair.

He could see only sand for endless miles. A desert; of course, the League had its net all over the world. It wasn’t difficult for Ra’s to hide in a hole till his enemies stopped searching. But Bruce knew that both Tony and Clark wouldn’t stop; plus, he wouldn’t stop either: he could and would save himself again.

His wild eyes watched Ra’s taking a small, plastic bottle out of the mini fridge and standing from the bench. The tower-like man kneeled beside him and removed the gag; Bruce at last was able to breathe easier. Yet his first action was to yank his head away from Ra’s who smirked and fisted his locks immobilizing him.

“I thought you’d cherish some cold water after so many hours” the Demon’s Head arched an eyebrow. “I don’t want you dehydrated. At least for now.”

The cool aura the bottle emanated and the water’s light smell was tantalizing to Bruce who hardly stopped his tongue from licking his dry lips. Yet he knew better than taking water from his mentor who was a master in poisoning. So when the rim of the bottle touched his lips, he fought the powerful urge to drink and jerked his head more.

Ra’s closed his eyes disappointed and tightened his grip, yanking Bruce’s head violently towards his.

“If I wanted to poison you, child, I wouldn’t have used tricks: I’d have done it openly and enjoy myself immensely...” his voice had the familiar hue of mixed affection and sneering that always confused the young Bruce. “I suggest you take that generous gift because it’ll be the last for long...” a crook evil smile dag his half face.

Bruce bore his stare to Ra’s in a battle of wills and then with pride began swallowing the water slowly though his dried body wanted to take it all at once. Ra’s was watching him with a smile on his face between amusement and real care.

“Generous gift...” Bruce cocked his eyebrows in sarcasm. “You never make gifts and your supposed generosity is a trick to gain what you want.”

Ra’s caressed some water drops on Bruce’s jaw and neck relishing the contact. Bruce could resist only by thrashing his head yet Ra’s’ grip was strong.

“You know me so well, Bruce...” he hissed continuing his caress. “I am the one who was fooled by his student” he shook his head. “I underestimated you even though I considered you my best ever student. And though I’m outraged about your treason, I’m also thrilled about what I still have in my hands. So you’re right: the water wasn’t a gift to you: it just serves my purpose to keep you alive and tame you – for real this time.”

Bruce clenched his jaw and his lips formed a tight line.

“You’ll never succeed that! I’m not your slave or pet – I won’t ever again serve you!”

Now Ra’s grabbed his chin continuing his hold on Bruce’s hair with the other hand.

“I love challenges, Bruce” he breathed “you’re my life’s biggest challenge and most fascinating – especially now I know everything…The unyielding spirit under the compliant body I fucked whenever I desired…” he smirked.

Bruce bared his teeth.

“You know nothing about me…” he growled.

Ra’s’ grasp on his chin loosened and his gray eyes dove into Bruce’s.

“Batman’s infamous growl…” he mumbled not a hint of anger there. “I was so blind not suspecting that my wayward student, my untamed possession was the mysterious demon of the night – but I didn’t think that you were still untamed: I believed that your punishment the last time was enough” he smiled. “But on the contrary, it was the motivation for you to perfect yourself and your plan…”
he squinted. “Why bats, child?”

Bruce’s eyes narrowed, glimmering menacingly.

“You bragged that you know everything now… Asking that just implies the opposite…Your ignorance and your stupid, empty arrogance.”

Ra’s released Bruce and sat again on the bench.

“In fact, Bruce, I know why your persona of revenge was a bat – even if you don’t know… As a matter of fact, it’s so obvious that I laugh at myself for my blindness…It was natural for you to go for something nocturnal: a demonic element of the night – even unconsciously” he cocked his eyebrows to Bruce’s defiant stare. “After all, night, demon and wings are in your DNA – as well as irresistible charm… Every answer in your seductress ancestor…”

Suddenly, the scenery changed and he was dragged outside the van into a military camp:
rectangular buildings surrounding an enormous space where ninja clad people and soldiers trained.
A tall building towered the other buildings and although simple it was obvious that it housed the leader. Bruce instantly pegged the watchtowers and the men there and the vehicles in the carports at the far end of the yard.

Ra’s dragged him to the pole exactly at the compound’s center. Bruce turned his eyes to him.

“Is this how you consider taming me?” he asked because this pole’s use was obvious.

Ra’s chuckled.

“I’m too predictable, huh?” he said and threw Bruce on his knees in front of the metallic pole.

Bruce would have struggled but the paralysis was still too strong and his head’s moving range was minimal.

Some of the people who were training came closer to help their leader yet he waved them off. He grabbed Bruce’s wrists, stretched his arms above his head and closed each wrist to the metallic shackles that hanged on the top of the pole. After that, he shackled Bruce’s ankles as well.

“Of course, you are an expert in every kind of torture and I know that you aren’t afraid of pain – yet I must entertain myself and…punish you” he whispered gleefully in Bruce’s ear.

“You can torture me as much as you want to have your…entertainment but you won’t tame me – you won’t make me serve you again with or without my will. Tortures or whatever brainwashing technique you have will fail!”

Ra’s traile Bruce’s sweaty neck with his finger.

“My brainwashing techniques have been updated…” he breathed making Bruce’s skin ripple.

“Crane…” he cracked an ironic smile.

“Exactly but I’d never rely only on a psycho doctor for the success of my plan…” Bruce frowned. “I have another ace in the hole to keep you grounded till your taming is over…and forever.”

There was a confident shimmer in Ra’s’ eyes that Bruce didn’t like at all; it was a bad omen or a bluff. Bruce wouldn’t make again the mistake to believe Ra’s so easy.

The Leader of the Shadows detached and clapped his hands.

“First, a traitor must be punished for his treason: usually, the punishment for this is death but I know that for you death isn’t the worse thing…And I won’t give up on my investment so quickly…”

He gestured with his fingers and Bruce saw Bane coming out from the shadows of a carport. The giant was strutting, highlighting his enormous body and his bulging muscles. His face as always was covered with black silk and Bruce wondered how he handled it with the unbearable heat of the place.

Before his eyes floated Bane’s horribly deformed face that day Ra’s ordered Bruce to beg the giant to…use him… Nausea pierced angrily his stomach enhancing the existing nausea from the long trip, the heat and the drugs Ra’s used to immobilize him. Maybe Bane’s face in this state couldn’t feel the temperature’s changes. Which was actually a blessing since this heat was really annoying after Gotham’s cold.

Bruce looked at Ra’s with contempt.

“You didn’t think of anything original?” he cocked an eyebrow and shook his head. “So much for your resourcefulness: borrowing from the criminals you despise…”

Ra’s smiled.

“There’s not much originality when you want to chasten your disobedient property – yet you’ll get to know my…original ways soon.”

Clenching his jaw wasn’t enough to subdue the devastating pain that flooded his entire body beginning from the deep line that was burrowed from his left shoulder blade to his right kidney. Yet he managed to swallow the scream that wanted to escape his lungs. Maybe if he could clench his fingers too he’d have achieved to fight the pain better.

Ra’s made a gesture to Bane to hold and fisted Bruce’s hair.
“It’s not original but it’s definitely entertaining…” his tongue licked his ear and Bruce head butted his mentor since now his head had more mobility than before.

Ra’s laughed but there was irritation; he didn’t expect that from Bruce. He threw Bruce’s head to the pole and moved away.

“Continue!” he barked to his minion.

The pain was reaching unknown levels as the whip tilled his back; he kept his mouth stubbornly shut and his teeth gritted not wanting to give the satisfaction to Ra’s who was watching avidly for any hint of weakness; neither to the crowd of ninjas and soldiers that have gathered to watch the show nor to Bane. The giant’s breath revealed his enthusiasm for what he was doing and his wrath because he failed to make Bruce scream or beg.

But he wasn’t going to give them the pleasure…even if the pain made his body convulse and his heart pound desperately in his chest. His jaw and teeth ached from the clenching and his breath was burning in his lung. He could hear his flesh shatter and blow in hundreds of little particles; he could hear every drop of his blood showering the soil. But he swore that he’d endure as always…Even though every lash was stronger and more devastating than the previous.

“I have a large collection of whips from all the eras of the humanity’s torture history” Ra’s scoffed. “Guess who’s going to try them? So, child, I suggest you let some screams out of your system because you’ll do it sooner or later and it’ll help you fight the pain…”

His voice reached Bruce’s ears shattered between the hair rising sound of the whip ripping the air and then his flesh exploding under the weight.

“You wish…” Bruce growled through gritted teeth, his eyes already seeing red from the pain and his mouth tasting copper.

Suddenly, the sound stopped and the hot air of the dessert grazed his bleeding wounds.

“I can skin him alive with the whip” Bane hissed to his master who obviously ordered him to stop.

“I’m sure” Ra’s retorted amused and a bit contemptuous “but if you’d do this then what you’re going to whip in the afternoon? Let the pain sink in…”

Bruce on the verge of losing consciousness didn’t hear Ra’s approaching so the hand petting his wet hair was a surprise. His mentor’s eyes were in his and Bruce met his stare defiantly.

“That’s all?” he asked in a throaty voice.

Ra’s smirked and caressed with his finger Bruce’s hot, sweaty cheek.

“Bring salt for his wounds…” he ordered in a nonchalant way and although that panicked his heart Bruce kept his stare unfazed.

Even when the acid, stinging pain throughout his throbbing back intensified in a mind crushing way causing his eyes to water and his teeth to grind. Yet the pain wasn’t recessing in the least and his body shook.

“I can’t let you faint…” Ra’s whispered and his sadness sounded almost real “you must absorb the pain in every cell of your body and mind and then the other things that await you…”

He brought a small vial to Bruce’s nostrils that stung and made his brain jolt with energy. Energy that just fuelled the pain locations to impale his cranium.

His hands and legs were tied in a way that his chest touched the pole and that became a new torture to add to the rest as the boiling sun that now was burning exactly above his head had heated up the metal. His flesh was already burnt by the contact while his back was totally exposed since his T-shirt was rags hanging around or stuck in the fresh wounds.

He was dizzy and his head ached as if the pain from his wounds wasn’t enough. And thirst had dried his neck making it hard even to swallow the little saliva he was left. Sometimes his head weakened slumped to the pole for support but the hot metal made him jerk causing worse stings from his open wounds where various insects already crawled.

Sweat ran his body…The shackles binding his wrists had heated up so much that the metal burnt his flesh; actually, his entire body felt as if broiled. Yet he couldn’t faint even if he tried…His boiling mind brought back the cold weather of Gotham that he had left behind only a few hours ago.

He was alone in the yard; till now there were many people training or making chores but as the hours passed and the noon arrived, nobody was out except the guards on the watchtowers around the camp. It was better this way because all these hours they were drinking water or washed themselves in the wells – Bruce had desperately counted and re-counted the ten wells that were scattered in the vast yard until he realized that this made his thirst and body heat worse and his eyes were unable to see clear.

Bruce now that nobody was going to see and jeer him closed his eyes and licked his dry lips. The only positive thing was that slowly his body seemed to overcome the paralysis from Ra’s’ drug – with full mobility he might be able to escape.

It was really a shock when he felt a presence right beside his head. He opened again his eyes mastering their defiance only to be met with a chuckle. Ra’s. Dressed in a clean all white training outfit; he looked rather cool and refreshed. Probably, he had just showered and drank loads of cool water…

His mentor’s hand fell hard on his back which cried not only because of the open wounds but also because of the burnt flesh and the salt going deeper. Bruce bit hard his bottom lip until it bled and Ra’s ran his thumb over the dry flesh.

“Your master can be really forgivable and generous if his slave admitted his fault and begged for forgiveness…”

It was difficult to find his voice in the dry well that was his throat.

“You really believed that you could bend me so easily?” he saw the reflection of his eyes in Ra’s orbs and was relieved to see still power in them. “I’m not your slave…”

Ra’s’ annoying smirk made its appearance.

“Yes…It’s too easy and too soon for your admirable willpower to kneel before me. And yes, you’re not my slave” he laughed “though if your pride allowed it you’d admit that you’d beg to be one of them now…You see, my servants and slaves are inside this time of the day, well fed, well hydrated and without any pain.”

Bruce snorted.

“Serving you is the worst pain anyone can get!”
But then he felt a tiny pinch in his neck and his body went limp and paralyzed again. Ra’s fisted his hair and made Bruce look him in the face.

“The effect of the drug I shot you with was almost over so I had to make you harmless again…”

On hearing ‘harmless’ Bruce yanked his head to butt Ra’s but this time he avoided him; the drug’s effect was too strong and the motion too weak. Ra’s smirk was triumphant.

“Not this time, child…” something stabbed the inflamed skin of his neck and Ra’s showed him a syringe “mixing business with pleasure…Dr. Crane suggests that his medicine has better use when the subject is tired and in pain…I’m going to break your body and mind and reshape them as I want.”

And invisible as he came, Ra’s disappeared leaving him with only company the burning sun, his collection of pains and his headache that was throbbing for hours due to the heat and now became worse obliterating everything around him.

The hissing and horribly crushing sounds of the thick, heavy leather string of the whip reached as a distant echo to his drumming head; the pain although excruciating wasn’t enough to make him scream as his former master wanted or come back to his surroundings.

Of course, it was afternoon: the sun although still hot began slithering to the west but the heat was unrelenting.

Every new stroke was stronger as his body went weaker stroke by stroke. Every howl of the lash, every devastating blow crushed his chest to the pole. People were gathered around the pole staring, clearly savoring the torture: his body’s desperate writhing, his clenched jaw, his blood raining the dry sand, his defiance that only prolonged the torture.

He convulsed as the merciless burning of the salt filled the gashes left by the lashes. This time Bane sniggered in his ear, his nail digging the bleeding flesh.

“Finally, the whore getting what he deserves…” he hissed. “You now wish Chill had finished you off that night in the sewers…”

“Not really…” Bruce panted but his voice was surprisingly steady. “I’m glad I didn’t miss your League’s failure in Gotham…”

Bane’s enormous hand clenched his blood stained locks and hit his forehead to the pole.

“Is still early, bitch…You will beg for mercy soon – the mercy of death…”

Liquid slithering in the middle of his forehead – blood. The first hammers of migraine.

“You’re too little to make me beg!” he spat in his torturer’s face and Bane left him cursing.

Now the heat had recessed the cold invaded rapidly his body; his hot flesh cooled pleasantly but soon he began trembling as the nights in his cell down at Dolcetto’s basement. He thought that cold would be the best thing for him yet now his bones felt like shattering – his teeth rattled.

The compound had scarce lighting for not drawing unwanted attention and from what Bruce caught they also had some kind of protection from satellites…As the night crept the cold gradually became freezing and Bruce though he knew that tomorrow would change his mind prayed for some warmth. The blood slowly dried and now froze in his wounds but the pain hadn’t decreased to the slightest.
And he was hungry: pangs tormenting his stomach after the nausea of the day. Thirst was skinning his brain…

This time he heard Ra’s light footsteps: the lion-like man made circles around him inspecting his work. Yet Bruce noticed something else: his old mentor held a leg of roast chicken. Bruce all these years had almost forgotten the taste of well cooked meat or anything cooked; it was Ra’s that fed him properly to sculpt his body. And now that crust looked so tantalizing and the smell made his stomach churn and his mouth watering.

But Ra’s smirk made Bruce shake himself: he wouldn’t give him the pleasure. He gazed at the black sky instead; the stars glimmering while the moon was just a slice.

“It’s for the dog anyways…” Ra’s snorted and threw the meat on the soil.

A dog rushed from a hangar and began devouring the roast flesh. Bruce didn’t let his eyes dart there though only the wet sounds of chewing was enough for the pangs in his stomach strengthen as his migraine.

Ra’s came closer and kicked Bruce’s knees to draw his student’s attention.

“Gobi desert is the worst desert in the planet: during daytime it may reach temperatures of 119 Fahrenheit degrees to fall at – 40o degrees at night” he arched an eyebrow. “The best place on earth to harness your unbowed slaves.”

Bruce stared at him unfazed.

“Is that how you believe you’ll break me?” he retorted defiantly. “I’m used to the cold…”

The Leader of the Shadows chuckled and his eyes flashed in the dim lights of the camp.

“Of course you are, my warrior” he snorted and Bruce unable to react saw again the shine of thin metal – a needle stabbed his neck and hot liquid flooded his veins. “Goodnight.”

It was colder than anything he had experienced; maybe it was the sudden transition from extremely hot to extremely cold; maybe it was the drugs Ra’s injected him. But his mind became misty and in his exhaustion he didn’t have the mood to make it clear up. His body was paralyzed, able only to feel but not move so he couldn’t try to escape.

As the mist slowly lifted Bruce cursed the blazing sun that even in the dawn was burning the place. The camp had awakened from the first light colors of the dawn and everyone was engaged in different chores: brushing the military cars and vans, the artillery, the premises; some of them sparring. They cast fleeting glances to him but nothing more: their interest was picked only during his whipping hours.

After three days Bruce had learnt his brutal program: twenty lashes early in the morning, twenty at afternoon and twenty at evening. With different whips every time: the worst till now the cat o’ nine tails each tail with spikes. That made him finally scream: it was during the third part of his daily ‘treatment’, at the final ten blows, each blow stronger than the last one…His flesh roasted by the all day sun; the blood spilt from the morning had exhausted him – the hunger digging his insides. They were giving him some crumbs and some drops of water to not die and to worsen his hunger and thirst. Fever fuelling everything…

No, it wasn’t just three days… Was much more because he had a full beard by now…

It was the fifteenth or sixteenth stroke when his teeth unclenched and he screamed with all the assembled pain of those days. He could feel Ra’s who was standing behind him closing his eyes in relish; the audience gaping surprised but not in the least disinterested. Bruce knew how to keep his audience’s fascination: during the last strokes he just groaned; he’d have fainted but his punisher didn’t allow him that temporary relief.

Suddenly, between the reality of his surroundings and the dim world of his blurred mental scenes’ hurricane, he heard feet approaching. He pushed his brain to focus on the environment and saw small feet walking on the perimeter that was stained with his blood.

He lifted his head and saw that his visitor was short but well built, dressed in blinding white clothes that would suit to an Arabian Prince. From the feet Bruce concluded that his staring visitor was a teen or younger.

He couldn’t tell if it was a boy or a girl because the head was covered in white scarf with only the eyes visible: blue eyes in sapphire’s color sparkling gleefully conveying to the prisoner contempt and even hatred. Bruce wondered who that kid might be: the eyes weren’t similar to Ra’s. They were almond shaped with long, silken eyelashes.

His visitor sent him a last scornful look and turned away from him retreating to the building that was Ra’s’ residence. So definitely the kid was someone important for the Leader of the Shadows…He tried to make his brain riddle this but immediately confused scenes of his past and present made his cohesive thoughts scatter. That migraine was the worst he had experienced till now. And the fever was a hot, howling wind that broke the chains holding things together…

It was dark around, the dim lights blurring more his vision. He heard the echo of many feet approaching the pole and blinked several times to clear his eyes. His audience was gathering again for another show.

And then Ra’s was next to him unlocking the shackles from his wrists and ankles; his body completely uncontrolled collapsed to the soil and Bruce saw up close thousands dried drops from his blood. He wondered what new torture his mentor had prepared for him and wished his body wasn’t paralyzed so he could attack him.

Ra’s twisted his arms behind his back and handcuffed them while he used rope to tie his elbows. Finally, he stood up heaving Bruce along.

“My men need different entertainment – educational recreation” he said snidely. “So I decided to let them meet the Bat” his smirk was broad “and grant myself the pleasure of watching your true skills. You’ll face them with tied hands but I release your body.”

Bruce was staring at him expressionless: he was in pain, weak, ill yet it was still a chance. During Falcone’s imprisonment he donned the cowl and faced criminals in similar condition: while Ra’s was training him, Bruce realized that his mind filled the gaps of his body’s suffering.

He glared at Ra’s and his mentor smiled.

A touch to his neck was the only thing needed to feel his control over his body returning – and it was a great feeling even if his arms were tied and at least ten opponents among them Bane waited to beat him up.

Ra’s stopped supporting him and Bruce tottered and fell on his scraped knees but he clenched his jaw and stood up; he staggered a little more till he maintained his balance.

The Leader of the Shadows walked away, gesturing nonchalant to his minions.
“Let the show begin!” he snorted.

Bruce’s eyes flashed seeing his opponents, circling him like hungry wolves: he read in their eyes the ambition to make the stubborn prisoner break so to win their Leader’s praise.

The pain from endless days of torture, the burnings all over his body, the hunger and thirst, the shivering from the fever, everything was put in a dark corner deep in his mind to not interfere with his battle. His hands were tied but he still had his legs, head and teeth to use.

He clenched his teeth and ducked the punch one of them launched to his face while in the same time kicked another who attacked him from behind. The first man made to punch him again but this time Bruce head butted him in the chest using his impetus to catapult his opponent on the two men who were charging behind the first. But he couldn’t waste more time on them because several others were simultaneously attacking from behind, right and left.

Bruce closed his eyes and jumped to the air astounding his opponents who felt the force of his legs and fell back. Yet that wasn’t enough for Bruce who propelled his legs to kick chests, necks, heads and ribs like a mill of flesh. As he went for landing his knee broke a jaw the same time the back of his head hit a ninja attacking from behind.

It felt so great: the power, the thrill of the fight, the wave of iron will flooding his body washing away all the eroding things. He planted his feet on the ground and with a final twist he got rid of the handcuffs and the rope binding his elbows.

Ra’s clapped, smirking.

“Well done, Bat! They took a great lesson but they are just trainees: you’re not done yet…”

Bane with his toned, broad chest naked trotted to him; his eyes shone gleefully.

“I’m glad you passed them unscathed because now you won’t say that I smashed you because the others exhaust you. And you lose your restraints so you won’t whine about that being the reason you lost.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side, his fists clenched on his sides.

“You talk too much, Bane!”

His old trainer growled and charged at him with his enormous fists ready. But Bruce while looking at Bane had the corner of his eye estimating the distance to the camp’s gate where a van was parked – conveniently ready to leave.

Bruce jumped at the last moment before Bane’s fist squashed his liver. His bare heel stabbed the giants’ nape. It seems that the driver was ready to leave for some mission but stayed to watch the show. And then on the balcony of Ra’s’ residence the same white clad figure watched. Bruce felt the mystery fascinating him but there were more urgent matters.

“C’mon, Bane” Bruce spat as his feet touched graciously the soil. “It’s easier when your opponent is paralyzed and you only have to maneuver the whip, huh?”

“You’re a warrior or an exotic dancer, Bat?” Bane sneered. “Or you’re afraid to measure your power with mine?”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow and Ra’s did the same.
Bane bared his teeth and stormed again this time keeping his eyes locked with Bruce’s who didn’t avoid him; this time he stopped the giant’s fist with his hand and he kicked Bane in the ribs only to have his foot slapped by the giant’s other hand the same moment that Bane launched his head to smash it to Bruce’s forehead; the younger man dodged and his own head found Bane’s neck.

Bane growled and retreated a bit coughing and moving his head to shake off the impact of the hit. Bruce watched him hearing more men crawling closer to attack him.

“No!” Bane barked. “This whore is mine!”

Bruce smirked.

Bane this time attacked with a stampede of punches targeting Bruce’s torso. The younger man met every punch with his hands blocking them yet Bane’s foot fell devastatingly on his kidney. Bruce grunted because there the skin was many times flayed by the whip and the wound was still open.

His breath was cut in his lungs and his eyes saw red but he didn’t need his vision to duck Bane’s grip that wanted to break his cranium taking advantage of his momentary weakness. Using his former trainer’s attempt to hit him as distraction he kicked him with his calf in the belly.

Bane growled surprised and Bruce jumped in the air, his legs stretched to blow his opponent’s chest. But his trainer caught Bruce’s feet before they made contact and pulled Bruce to him but the younger man used the force of his pull to head butt again the giant and twist out of his grip kicking him in the face.

The giant staggered but an instant before Bruce jolted away he clenched the younger man’s hair and drew him to his chest choking him with his other forearm.

Bruce’s breath was instantly stopped and his eyes began watering, he tried to punch Bane to get some release but the giant just tightened his grip.

“What is it, little Bat?” he sniggered. “Now that acrobatics are over you have a hard time?”

Bruce felt that he was seconds before fainting and behind the mist of his eyes watched the men getting closer to have their fun afterwards; their fists and legs ready to break all his bones. He felt dizzy but still the van was in his focus…

It was now or never…He closed his eyes and focused…he managed to make his hands that hanged limp on his sides grab in a swift movement Bane’s neck and use the press point to make the giant’s body paralyze. He grinded his teeth and heaved the giant over his body and crushed him to the men that had approached.

In the fuss of curses and confusion Bruce ran as fast as he could towards the van. He was a foot away when something pierced his neck and he collapsed at once: Ra’s…

He heard Bane’s footsteps and he was heaved from his hair to get dragged before Ra’s feet who nodded with respect.

“You’re a great warrior, Bruce…But I couldn’t let you escape: now it’s more urgent that I tame you” melancholy was again all over that smug face as he cupped gently Bruce’s chin.

“You won’t!” Bruce spat and Ra’s caressed his bearded cheek with affectionate shine in his eyes.

With an abrupt nod gave his order to Bane who tossed Bruce into the waiting men. His arms were clenched behind his back and the man holding him stretched Bruce’s torso.
Bane stood before him; his naked torso glistened from the sweat of their fight and some bruises had already begun to appear. His eyes showed his wild joy.

Bruce knew what to expect so the first punch in his exposed face was hardly a surprise though it almost broke his nose. Blood flooded his nostrils and became more when the enormous fist hit again his nose. Now his nose was definitely broke and he felt like the night Chill sank him in the sewers. His former trainer hammered his mouth next tearing his lips and shattering his jaw – the taste of copper was nauseating and the blood was choking him.

And then the giant began breaking his ribs with his palm stretched forming a blade: one at a time, the cracking sound sickening. His stomach was next taking the giant’s fury in a stampede of punches.

Bruce couldn’t do anything else than be the receiving end; his body was completely paralyzed and held tight by a minion. He felt the pain flooding every cell of his body and mind…His mind that once again filled with mist and blurred images of his father and Ra’s smiling at him…until a new blow made his body twitch in his holder’s arms and fall. The blood like rainfall slithered through his neck to his chest that was sparsely covered by the rags of what used to be his T-shirt.

At some point he collapsed, almost unconscious but still with a clouded perception of his surroundings though everything seemed far, so far away.

Like Al Ghul whose face loomed over him but through a thick veil; his torturer looked sad.

“I wish your spirit would break so easily as your flesh and bones…”

The rest felt unreal as in a dream – a dream where you could feel pain and touches. People carried him in a cool place and he was put in liquid – not exactly water but he honestly couldn’t be sure. Every particle of his body screamed in agony as hands washed away the fresh and dried blood, the dust that covered him. Even washing his hair was agony; his migraine worsening with every brush, the images twirling inside getting faster in their mixing, more absurd, meaningless.

He was leaving and coming back…

New stinging all over and Bruce realized that they were applying medicine in his injuries: he was used to this as all the years under Ra’s’ wing they always smeared things on his body. He moaned as pressure was applied to his ribs – he’d have coughed but he didn’t have the strength. They were gauzing his wounds but this was honestly too much: he didn’t want to be anchored in reality anymore and darkness was once again his haven…

His eyelids flattered weakly permitting light invade his eyes. He could feel his body erect, stretched spread eagled; his wrists and ankles were tied but he could also feel a depressing weight around his neck: a collar, he concluded, though his skull was echoing from hammers. He was dressed in soft, clean clothes and his face was clean shaven.

Someone was there…

Bruce opened his eyes and something clenched his heart: he was inside a shining cage that hardly contained him in its asphyxiating dimensions; the cage was in the middle of an enormous bedroom elegantly decorated similar to the suite where Ra’s claimed him for the first time. He looked at the presence outside his cage; it was the same white clad child, this time his face uncovered: his face, because it was a boy though his raven hair was reaching his shoulders.

He was a very beautiful boy at his twelve years, strongly built. His cheekbones were high and his eyes almond shaped. He reminded him of someone but that spiteful sparkle in his icy eyes was ruining the connections.

The door opened and Ra’s dressed in a white attire like the boy’s strutted to them beaming.

“I see you met your warden, Bruce” Ra’s chirped. “Let me introduce you” he put his hand on the boy’s shoulder and he yanked his head arrogantly. “This is my son, D…The Prince…” he made a dramatic pause stabbing his eyes to Bruce’s “of Shadows…”

Bruce couldn’t discern the rest of the boy’s name because his ears buzzed worse that exact moment: Ra’s’ son? He wondered as his mentor patted the boy’s shoulder. As far as Bruce knew Ra’s had lost his wife five years before he took him under his wings; he haven’t heard anything of a new wife.

“D…, you can leave us now” Bruce still couldn’t discern the rest of the name as if someone was lowering the volume to torment him.

He watched the boy retreating out of the room, their gazes met for an instant as he closed the door.

“Just the two of us…” Ra’s said circling Bruce’s cage “my pet-bat in a golden cage…” he taunted but Bruce didn’t even look at him.

His mentor unlocked the cage and pressed a button on the roof releasing Bruce from his restraints, even the collar; yet he didn’t have any control of his body. Ra’s wrapped his arms around his waist, heaved him and dragged him to the king sized bed.

Bruce clenched his jaw.

“Not even think about it!” it was easy to figure what Ra’s wished to do.

“I wish I could, child” he chuckled “but it seems that you defeated me in one thing” his mouth touched his ear “I can’t command my body stop pleading for yours: isn’t it ridiculous? Being enslaved to my own slave?” he whispered moisturizing his ear “But I need you, Bruce…I wish I didn’t but I do…you give me more life than the Lazarus Pit…”

Bruce jerked his head but not away as Ra’s expected but to hit his mentor’s forehead. The momentary shock made Ra’s grip loosen and Bruce collapsed, every injury yelling in agony.

Ra’s instead of being angry, chuckled and squatted next to him clenching his upper arm.

“Charming…” he said slyly. “Let’s consider this as foreplay…I always suspected the fire burning inside you, the inferno waiting the chance to explode but I thought that you were subservient to me. All this time, I was fucking Batman believing that I just penetrated a caged canary; only smelling the fire, the power and get more enchanted by the unknown…Now I’ll have the pleasure bending your defiance, your pride, your powerful spirit; the fire that always infatuated me.”

Bruce shook his head.

“You won’t get anything! The only thing you managed was to exploit a frightened kid, as much as the perverts you supposedly punish. You won’t touch me again!”

Ra’s heaved him with one hand grabbing his upper arm and the other clenching his locks.

“I couldn’t let your body rot anymore even if you deserved to be left to feed the worms; but this body is too precious to be wasted in your stubbornness; and I need that spirit becoming mine.”
He tossed him on the mattress and Bruce’s teeth grinded from his despair to resist.

“You’re sick and twisted…” he growled as Ra’s turned him on his back and began undoing his black training robe.

His torso was naked now and Ra’s watched with eager eyes; he was ready to plant his mouth on Bruce’s neck but the younger man jerked his head butting him once again causing much pain to himself as well. Ra’s roared.

“I love it! Subduing your resistance – taming the wild animal: my distant ancestor slew the demon and I will tame the spirit and body of that demon’s last descendant!” his eyes shone fervently.

Bruce shook his head pitying him.

“You’re crazy!”

The older man smirked.

“I saw your beautiful mark on your right foot’s big toe, the one that this bastard, Falcone chopped – you remember the little leaf?” Bruce’s eyes were fixed on him and it was obvious that Ra’s relished that. “The mark of Lilith… I should have taken you from the moment you were born…”

Ra’s’ lips were trailing his neck, sounds of lapping filling the room; demanding hands fondled his torso aggressively, feeling every ripple of muscle as if it was the first time. As his tongue licked the younger man’s pectorals and his teeth grazed his nipples, his hands slipped under Bruce’s waistband and lowered his training pants.

Bruce attacked his ear biting with all the might his nausea gave to him. Ra’s grabbed his face with both hands and captured his lips violently tasting his own blood.

“My Bat demon…” he roared thrilled. “Your body gives me energy, life! You’re mine…”

“I’m not!” he panted and thrashed his head trying to escape; Ra’s’ ruling hands pushed his pants off his pelvis and groped his testicles. “You can’t keep me here! You know that I’ll run away!”

Ra’s was nibbling his abdominals and Bruce could hear the man’s heart beating frantically in overflowing desire.

“Yes…” he mumbled between licking and sucking the taut flesh. “I know you’ll try to run away, unwilling to serve your rightful master…”

“You’re not my master! I don’t have a master!”

But Ra’s didn’t seem to be listening, his fingers already penetrating Bruce’s anus sending the youth’s heartbeat to peak.

“But this time you won’t run away; you won’t want to escape…”

“Of course I will! Ugh!” he gritted his teeth and yanked his head desperately in hopes of getting some opening to hit Ra’s who was opening his legs. “Stop!”

He felt Al Ghul’s mouth sucking his thighs’ insides and bile filled his mouth.

“You won’t want to leave me…” his fingers played inside him as he always liked to do “because I’m your father… You always knew that; you trusted me from the first moment because you sensed that I’m your real father…”
“No!” he stretched his neck trying to breathe since Ra’s ministrations were sickening him. “You’re not my father…”

“Really now…” the older man hissed and his fingers became more painful, stretching and digging his rectus. “Are you sure? Your memories aren’t so clear, right?”

It was true: from the day Ra’s brought him there the memories of his dad became blurred with the lion-like man; Thomas’ face taking Al Ghul’s features; the few happy years of his childhood echoing from Ra’s caring voice.

“It’s a lie! Crane’s drags make that to my memory but I won’t ever believe it!”

He saw the older man’s eyes sparkling above his groin.

“You don’t believe it now but as I continue giving you drugs what I want you to believe will become your only reality…And having your father – that’s me – fuck you won’t seem pervert to your harnessed mind.”

Bruce thrashed and his head’s power pulled along his shoulders.

“You won’t harness me with cheap tricks!”

Ra’s smirked with his confident way and Bruce felt his thighs stretched. His old mentor invaded him with one swift, strong movement that made him clench his jaw to fight the pain. He kept his teeth gritted as the lion-like man began thrusting in a steady pace each time more painful than the previous.

Bruce controlled his breath because he didn’t want to give the satisfaction to Ra’s who was panting, his sparkling eyes and beaming face betraying the pleasure he was feeling. Bruce dreaded that indeed his body was giving energy and life to this man…

“It’s the last time you touch me” he said determined. “Crane’s poisons will fail.”

Ra’s pushed harder and Bruce felt as if he was impaled by a hot metal; images from his first time with Chill in the alley and the countless times they put things in him swimming before his eyes and re-opening the wounds in his heart.

“Every time it pains like your first time…You’d never learn to make it easier for you…Who was your first, Bruce? Falcone or that filthy gorilla Chill?” Bruce didn’t answer and Ra’s chuckled. “You won’t leave me again, child, with your will…”

Bruce tried to keep his focus on what Ra’s was saying and not in the thrusts that hammered his insides and made his body writhe.

“Because you wouldn’t want to abandon in my hands…your son!”

Bruce’s heart gave a really painful kick and his breath stopped abruptly.

“My…what?”

Ra’s sniggered.

“Your warden…He didn’t remind you of anyone? Of course you didn’t look in many mirrors when you were at his age but still the resemblance is striking; he has your eyes minus the emerald stars, he has your cheekbones, your lips; your extraordinary beauty – even his scent borders your.
Unfortunately, he doesn’t have Lilith’s mark which still makes you unique. He is perfect though…As I wanted him…”

Bruce shook slowly his head in negation.

“You’re lying…”

“I told you that if you were a girl after Bagdana used you you’d have been with a baby…But then I thought it better: you didn’t need a womb to give me a child…and Luthor’s technology made it possible: your DNA that had absorbed the demon’s seed, and my DNA…”

“All these are filthy lies: you just took another innocent child and use him to manipulate me!”

The older man fisted his hair and lifted Bruce to have their bodies glued; their eyes collided and Ra’s smirked.

“You know it is true, Bruce…You know it because apart from the striking resemblance you feel your connection with my son…Our son, Bruce. With our child I have you eternally bound with me!” his eyes shone evilly as his ejaculation burnt Bruce’s insides. “As long as this child is alive I’ll be alive as well; you will always see me in the shine of his eyes…”

The dark haired boy tossed a bowl with water through the bars of his cage. Bruce was slumped on the floor, his arms and elbows tied behind his back and the collar around his neck with a chain connected to the bars. His brain was heavy with tons of thoughts and taunting images.

“Drink!” the boy ordered angrily in his still unripe soft voice; yet his smugness eliminated the softness of his child voice. “Like an animal…” he sniggered “even that is too much for you. My puppies’ life is more worthy than yours!”

Bruce noticed that the boy had only a slight accent. He wanted to stand up or at least kneel yet he had no control over his body. So he met the boy’s eyes with his stare: indeed, there was much resemblance.

“You’ve been born here?” he asked wanting to learn more about the boy.

The boy snorted; he crossed his arms and raised his head arrogantly.

“You honestly believe that I’ll speak with you?” he chuckled. “As if you were equal? You’re just a filthy traitor, an ungrateful whore; I understand that father has needs and you’re really beautiful but you’re not worthy of his lenience and grandeur.”

“Ra’s Al Ghul just uses people – I didn’t betray him: he lied to me. He used me. I was captured by villains and Ra’s Al Ghul came to me with promises of salvation and justice for my parents’ murder…”

The boy made a stopping gesture with his hand.

“I don’t care for your backstory or…your lies…I’m your warden: I know your crimes and that’s all I want to know.”

“He never freed me from them” Bruce continued unfazed by the hatred in the boy’s eyes. “He just used me for his needs and trained me to serve his purposes.”

“You should consider that your honor!” the kid said haughtily, his eyebrows cocked.
“Really? Being the slave of someone who collaborates with every kind of criminal to achieve his goals? Someone whose idea of justice is annihilating entire cities and slaughtering innocent people?”

“Shut up!” the boy in a swift movement had a shining blade touching Bruce’s neck. “I might seem too young and naïve to you but I’m not – I was trained as a warrior from my five years and I have no hesitation to cut the throat of lowlifes like you” he hissed. “You won’t speak again about my father because you defile him!”

Bruce clenched his jaw and yanked his head proudly.

“I’m not scared of death, young Prince; I have died many times in my life – every day was a horrid death…”

The boy pressed his lips.

“Do you expect me to take pity on you?” he raised an eyebrow. “You deserved everything you suffered – and you shall suffer even more for what you did to my father!”

Bruce shook his head as little as much as the chain permitted.

“Your father…He just uses you as he did with me. You’ll realize eventually.”

The boy growled and moved his small sword just to nick Bruce’s neck.

“I’m his son! I’m a Prince: don’t speak for me and don’t compare yourself with me, you scum!” he was panting and his eyes despite their coldness had something else like curiosity.

Maybe the boy was intrigued about him as Bruce about him.

“Father loves me!”

Bruce nodded.

“I’m sure…but he has his unique way to ‘love’ people as long as they’re doing his job!”

The boy returned the blade under his clothes and turned his back furious, ready to leave. He spat on Bruce’s body.

“I’m belittling myself only by listening to you, whore!”

But then Ra’s opened the door and walked towards them; he was smirking.

“What is it, D…? Is he creating problems?”

The boy took Al Ghul’s hand and kissed it.

“No, father; I don’t listen to him – he is filth! You should kill him!”

Ra’s eyes fell on Bruce. His satisfaction glowed.

“You’re trying to turn my son against me, Bruce? Really?”

“Just telling him the truth” he retorted.

“D…, leave us…” he patted the boy’s back and he left.
Al Ghul unlocked his cage, untied the chain of the collar and dragged him outside holding the chain. He lifted him on his feet and pushed Bruce face first to the bars.

“You’re intrigued by him, huh, Bruce? You know he is part of you – you care for him even though he hates you…” he pressed his body hard on Bruce. “Finally, I have the means to keep you bound to me…”

His hands found swiftly Bruce’s waistband and pulled the pants down along with the underwear. Bruce felt Ra’s’ aroused groin rubbing on his buttocks and jerked his head to hit him but his mentor grabbed the chain and immobilized painfully his head.

“Still fighting me?” Ra’s’ lips nibbled Bruce’s cheek and something sharp pierced his temple – a needle; something acid burnt and slowly the burning invaded his brain stirring the blurred images that disoriented him.

The pain from Ra’s’ thrust was excruciating; this time the older man didn’t waste time to prepare him, besides this was his preferred way. Bruce grunted and as if that triggered Ra’s, he started thrusting cruelly, still holding tight the chain stretching Bruce’s neck for his mouth to suck and lick.

“You know, child; if you surrender to me, you not only would be spared from the pain but also we would be a lovely family…” he licked the youth’s cheek. “Our Prince would learn to love you as much as his father…”

The boy was pacing nervously before his cage.

“Eat!” he ordered but Bruce really had no appetite; his head felt completely unfamiliar on his shoulders and his stomach was clenched.

As soon as his bones mended after Bane’s onslaught, Ra’s had his minions beat him every now and then – not as severely – but enough to keep him in pain. But what bothered Bruce was that he had difficulty remembering his father’s face – the real face; because Al Ghul’s face had replaced it. He needed to escape…but he couldn’t leave the boy behind: Ra’s was right in that. Whether the boy was indeed connected with him or not, he couldn’t leave him in Ra’s’ manipulation: D…was already trained and a fanatic.

“I don’t want to eat” he replied calmly. “I’m not his slave or his whore: he just took him when I was in your age and used me…He tortured me when I tried to escape and he threatened to kill my loved ones: innocent people who hadn’t done anything wrong. Just to make me not try to run away again…but I fought him and almost defeated him.”

The boy shook his head irritated and clenched his jaw so much like Bruce was doing it.

“I just want you to know the truth – so he doesn’t brainwash and continue using you…” his arms ached stretched behind his back and he was tired from the beatings and his agony to free himself and the boy.

His warden frowned.

“What do you care?”

Bruce licked his lips. He couldn’t tell him what Ra’s revealed because it was too soon and probably D won’t believe him.
“Because you remind me of myself” he smiled – it was true. “I don’t want Ra’s exploiting another kid.”

The boy huffed and shook his head amused.

“He isn’t… I’m his son while you’re…nothing! I don’t know why you’re fooling yourself believing that you can seduce me as you did with father or that I could buy that I need your help from all people!”

“Because he is indeed one of your begetters” Ra’s chirped suddenly.

A nasty frown creased the boy’s forehead as the color left his face. Bruce fell deeply sorry for him and was furious because Ra’s obviously was poking fun at both of them.

“Father you’re kidding me…” the boy’s eyes were locked with Ra’s and for the first time Bruce saw weakness there.

Ra’s smiled and flounced till the cage where he cast his smug glance on Bruce.

“Not at all, child… Your half DNA is indeed his…” his eyes sparkled gleefully in a staring combat with Bruce whose face was distorted from wrath.

The boy shook his head in denial, running his hand through his locks.

“No…” he mumbled almost desperately. “He…he is a man and you too…he can’t have delivered me…You…you told me that my mother was royal, special…”

Bruce wished he could stand up and hug the poor kid. Ra’s blinked and nodded.

“I didn’t lie: Bruce is special – his parents came from the oldest and noblest families of Gotham… and entire humanity’s; he is more than special…of course he didn’t carry you in his body neither gave you birth: you were created in a lab with the DNAs of him and mine” Ra’s laughed.

“Everything he told you is true: his parents were killed by a mobster who spared his life and held him as his sexual slave. But I knew already who Bruce Wayne was and I persuaded the mobster to… lend him to me. I couldn’t let the last descendant of an ancient demon in the wrong hands…”

The boy’s frown became deeper.

“He is not!”

Ra’s patted his shoulder.

“He is, child…I summoned another ancient demon and he copulated with Bruce leaving his entire seed in his body. You see now, D… that I couldn’t let the opportunity go waste? I took his DNA: a DNA that combined the genes of an ancient demon, the sperm of another demon and Bruce’s extraordinary beauty and skills that I was discovering rapidly. I mixed it with my DNA and using Lex Luthor’s know-how I set off to create my perfect offspring…Several of the embryos died sooner or later but one survived…the strongest, the most special…You, my son…”

D growled.

“He is too young to be my…my…whatever!” he spat.

Ra’s Al Ghul bowed his head slightly.

“When I summoned the ancient demon and he copulated with Bruce, he was fourteen years old” he waved his hand. “You see now that the ages match? Besides” he arched his eyebrows looking in the boy’s stormy eyes “your father wouldn’t lie to you.”

The boy clenched his fists and rushed out of the room without a word.

Bruce lifted his head and glowered at his old mentor; his eyes flashed angrily.

“You’re heartless…” he growled. “What you gain from his suffering?!”

Ra’s squatted and caressed Bruce’s forehead holding him still with the chain.

“He can take it: he is tough” he smiled. “You’ll be proud of him as we raise him together to serve the League of Shadows.”

“Never! I’ll take him away from your poisoning!”

Ra’s grabbed his face with both hands and captured his lips to a painful kiss, shoving his tongue deep inside, conquering his mouth and throat.

“No, child…You’ll stay here for all your life to be with your child and protect him…because D… won’t ever leave me…”

The boy looked daggers at him as Bruce writhed from the pain in his head – every explosion in his head released a flood of false memories that progressively was more difficult to make out their falseness…to the point his breath became pants from his agony. He had to escape.

“I know you’re disappointed with what Ra’s told you…” he managed to control the pain to address his guard and son.

The boy pursed his lips.

“I’m not disappointed…I’m disgusted…” he pursed his lips “I would cut your DNA of me if I could even if I was horribly maimed for the rest of my life …but father thinks so high for your qualities that I’ll use them to give him the joy you ungratefully deprived him of.”

Bruce gulped and huffed.

“You don’t belong to him, D… You spent your entire life here; you know nothing about the outside world because Ra’s doesn’t want you to develop your independence: he may say that you’re his son and that he loves you and you’re a Prince but actually he loves you to serve you and he needs you to keep me here…”

The boy planted his foot on the floor.

“He’d love me even if I couldn’t serve him and I don’t want to know anything else for the outside world – I know the only thing that matters: the world is corrupted and father struggles to clean it and I shall continue his work.”

Bruce shook his head.

“He says that but in reality he is as corrupted as those he opposes: he is collaborating with terrorists and mobsters like the one who killed my parents and abused me. He admitted that!” he inhaled.

“You’re a clever young man, you can see the truth; you can’t believe unquestionably everything Ra’s says… There is corruption to the world, sure, but there are also good people, innocent people, brave men and women who fight injustice everyday…”
He saw doubt in the sapphires of the boy; D…was thinking about all that.

“Why your father doesn’t let you see the world? Meet other boys and girls of your age? Why he keeps you here constantly as if you’re a prisoner? Doesn’t he trust your intelligence?”

D crossed his arms and stared at the window behind Bruce’s cage. Bruce smiled though it took much strength.

“I was held a prisoner for almost all my life…but I knew that outside my prison, lay my city…Gotham is a wild city…beautiful with her unique kind of beauty…It has many skyscrapers but also old beautiful buildings, decorated with gargoyles watching the streets; there are rivers crossing the city: at nights the city’s lights are glimmering on the waters…and parks that are packed with people chatting and children playing…You feel the air of danger but this only increases the charm of the city. When Ra’s began training me I swore that I’d fight criminals and bring them to justice, clear the city and help people be happy again…”

The boy didn’t look at him but his eyes were interested.

“I accepted being used by him because I naively believed that it was the least I could do to save the city and myself; the least gratitude I could show to my savior. And then one day he told me that he planned to destroy Gotham and slay all the people, good and evil; he wasn’t going to let me be free ever again…That was why I tried to escape him because he is a liar, cruel and twisted. I think that you’d love Gotham. And there’s Alfred who loves me as if I was his kid” he smiled on the memory “and there’s Selina, my best friend, and Tony who fights crime and…Superman, the strongest being on Earth who devoted his life to protect humans…and Leslie, and Lucius…I’m sure you’ll like them and they will love you…”

D…turned his eyes to him; he was deep in thought and craved for some human contact outside the micro-world of the camp.

“You like puppies?” Bruce asked smiling. “I had a kitten once…when still around your age; a good friend of mine had found him very small and weak and ill” D was looking at him really interested. “We saved him and my friend – Selina – was bringing the kitten every night secretly and we played…”

D pressed his lips.

“You still have the kitten? I mean back at Gotham…”

Bruce inhaled.

“No…They discovered that I had a kitten and killed the poor thing…”

The cage was a blur and his head was a throbbing muscle. He couldn’t stay more…If he stayed more Crane’s drugs would control his mind – Bruce sensed that he was hardly resisting anymore.

He was tied and his body paralyzed but he sensed that he had the power to move his limps if he used his mind’s power. He knew that in a couple of minutes D would come to give him his night food and after Ra’s would arrive for another dreadful night.

D entered the room and approached the cage where Bruce lay slumped. He left the disk and he was ready to speak when he felt a hand covering his mouth.

He turned his bulged eyes and saw something that made him gasp. Bruce was holding him and lying in the cage at the same time.
“Hush…” Bruce whispered “we’re leaving this place…”

“How?” the boy whispered his eyes darting from the form in the cage and to the man that held him. “You’re indeed a demon’s descendant!” he gaped “Nobody else can manage the reflection technique – father told me…And you moved and freed yourself from the bindings though father had paralyzed you and they beat you frequently and…”

Bruce turned the boy to look him in the eyes.

“You’ll be free, D…You’ll see the world and Gotham and you’ll be free to make your own decisions.”

The boy nodded and they ran to the door; Bruce knew that outside two guards stood. He didn’t want to knock them out because either slumped in front of the door or disappeared would raise the alarm; so he opened the door and as they turned expecting to see D, Bruce used his skill of temporarily affecting his enemies’ perception.

They ran to the corridor and then to the attic; Bruce looked from the window at the carports. He opened the window and along with D climbed to the roof. Bruce felt the suffering of all this time hardening his moves but he put everything in the back of his mind and continued slithering like a shadow through the roofs with his son…

They slipped at the first carport and Bruce smiled seeing the tank he was seeing all his days at the pole. It was locked but Selina had taught him some very useful and…illegal things so he easily got inside, D after him. He checked the indicators and the vehicle’s gas tank was filled; he pressed his lips. With the tank they’d easily broke the gate and leave.

He could hear the first angry roars from Ra’s and the alarm howling.

He turned to his son; his eyes were sparkling in the dark.

“Now it’s the time, D – we’ll make it…” he ignited the engine.

But now he noticed that the boy’s eyes were cold, blank.

“I can’t let you leave… My sister, Talia, warned me about your tricks” he hissed coldly and Bruce grunted as a blade stabbed his kidney and another his stomach.

Bruce held his son’s upper arms feeling his energy evaporating as the copper taste filled his mouth. His eyelids had almost buried his vision with the boy’s gleeful, cold eyes his last impression of the world…

Alfred heard the cave’s lift and rushed there wearing his robe. Someone was coming upstairs from the cave. Could be Master Bruce? But he hadn’t heard him going down… He was getting old. He bit his lips: and that boy…

He opened the passage and saw the empty lift; now he was more worried. He jumped in and rushed down.

Upon stepping out of the lift his mouth gaped: Hero was running from the lift to Bruce who was slumped on the computer bench.

Alfred ran to his young master and scared took the youth’s face in his: thankfully, he was just asleep.
He took off his robe and muffled meticulously Bruce who was cold. He looked at the kitten which had climbed on the bench and then jumped to his master’s lap.

“You sent the lift upstairs, huh? To alert me” he cocked his eyebrows “You’re a unique kitten, don’t you? You’ll be handsomely rewarded, master Hero.”

He took the handles of the wheelchair and embarked the lift. His heart beat with agony throughout the way to the master’s bedroom.

Alfred was ready to transfer Bruce on the bed when he heard a noise outside the window and saw Batman floating there. Of course, it was Master Kent.

He opened for him and returned to the bed only to find the fake Batman already there lifting Bruce and placing him gently on the mattress.

“He slumbered in the cave, huh?” Clark asked pissed but mostly worried. “You need rest, Alfred: leave our naughty boy to me. Don’t worry.”

Alfred made to object but finally left the room: Master Kent knew how to take care Master Bruce – he did it alone for an entire month, the most difficult month.

Clark was staring at Bruce’s sleeping face when the younger man began panting; tears running from his eyes. With a really painful gasp Bruce’s torso jerked upwards before Clark could stop him and his sapphire emerald eyes popped open.
Two strong hands were clenching his upper arms sinking him to the mattress despite his struggle; his mind had lost control over the bottom half of his body and the pain in his upper half was spiking especially in his stomach and kidney. His hand cupped his stomach but his priority was to escape those hands. Ra’s had again his hands on him…

His eyes were covered by a water veil and he blinked nervously to chase away the tears; he would have used his hands but they were trapped by the force holding him.

The water had subsided from his eyes and the vision in front of him made his heart beat frantically: Batman was staring at him through white lenses. He knew that this couldn’t be true: another clue that Ra’s captured him again and gave him a stronger dose of Crane’s poisons to blur his perception into seeing Batman so to believe that Batman was someone else, not him. Ra’s’ face blended with Batman’s.

“No!” he clenched his jaw and thrashed desperately though that worsened the pain from his various injuries. His mind was racing setting off to make his body to work even from the waist and down.

Clark got panicked realizing that Bruce hadn’t fully gained his awareness: he was still living in his nightmare. He could apply more strength and still him but that would bruise the human bad or worse break his still healing bones; also, Bruce’s heart was already pounding and if he became more violent he might cause something nasty… And there was pain in the younger man’s brain: pain from different areas where Clark couldn’t discern any injury.

His eyes behind the lenses widened because he sensed Bruce’s brain waves became more intense than usual – and that wasn’t good… Bruce was ready to apply his mind force to the paralyzed part of his body.

Hero stood on the mattress looking nervous at his master and began meowing. But Clark doubted if Bruce in his condition could hear him.

Superman’s despair urged him to do the only thing he could think: he wrapped the shivering man in his arms, nestling his head in his shoulder and caressing gently his wet locks – he cursed the gloves that thwarted a closer contact but at least he had deactivated the lenses.

“Bruce, it is me, Clark…” he pleaded. “You’re safe now; I’m here…” but the struggling became stronger, more frantic and panicked.

Clark’s voice was reaching his ears but he knew that it was a lie; another hallucination Crane’s drugs and his mind’s desire created. He must get out of that powerful hug, from this mind numbing caress before they harnessed him again.

“Let me go!” tears ran from his eyes and he hated it because he didn’t want Ra’s sneer him; he tried to escape that gentle hand.

“Please, babe, don’t hurt yourself… You’re in the Manor; it was a nightmare…” Clark’s voice was soft and affectionate and Hero meowed and rubbed his head to Bruce’s stretched palm.

And then Clark began murmuring the melody he used to sing every night at Bruce’s side when the human was fighting for his life in the Fortress of Solitude; maybe Bruce would remember that sound and realize that he was safe. His hand massaged tenderly the back of Bruce’s head.
The sweet murmur reached his ears spreading a numbing sense of safety where everything seemed clearer. A nightmare… He realized that there was an animal’s head rubbing his palm – a familiar meow. Clark gave him Hero some months ago when he woke up from the coma.

And that smell so strong that prevailed the smell of Kevlar… Clark’s natural perfume. He blinked and his eyelashes pushed away the tears: it was definitely his bedroom as Alfred redecorated it after Ra’s’ defeat. And the paralysis he felt was from injury not drugs…The Joker… The factory…He began breathing through his diaphragm slowly and calmly…

Clark was indeed holding him…He had worn Batman’s armor to go to Jim’s call…And now he was rubbing soothing circles to his back that still hurt. He relaxed his body; he was ready to apply his mind’s force to his marred legs and this was a mistake.

He patted Hero’s head and caressed Clark’s shoulder blade though he felt weak.

“I’m okay now, Clark…” he said calmly controlling his shaking.

But Clark though he sensed the man’s caress and the relaxing of his muscles, was afraid to let go in case this was a trick to jolt away once finding the chance. He cupped Bruce’s head with both hands and locked their eyes.

“Tell me the date, Bruce…”

Bruce’s eyes sparkled and Clark felt the dazzling effect but stayed adamant.

“November 28th 2015…” but then he remembered that it was after midnight “no, 29th.”

Clark closed his eyes relieved yet he didn’t let go.

“Where are we?” he asked.

“Wayne Manor, Master bedroom” Bruce answered.

Clark sighed in relief and planted a kiss in Bruce’s cold cheeks, the salty taste of his tears so delicious that he felt the urge to lick but instead he compromised with nuzzling that smooth cheek.

Bruce’s heart slowly was finding the normal pace as if the soft kisses and the purring from Hero were guiding. He felt calm and content being enclosed in Clark’s arms yet the echo of the pain was still there and he didn’t want his mate to realize.

“Don’t try to hide your pain from me…” Clark said. “Where does it hurt?”

Bruce stilled his eyes in Clark’s.

“It’s not real pain: my body just reacts to the dream…”

Clark wasn’t satisfied and though a minute ago he hadn’t found anything alarming in Bruce’s body, placed him carefully on the mattress and scanned meticulously.

“You see?” Bruce asked and his seriousness broke when Hero began nuzzling his face. “I told you it was nothing. Hero…Hero…” he protested chuckling but in the end petted the animal.

Clark trapped Bruce’s body between his arms and loomed over him seeing himself reflected in Bruce’s eyes in the menacing form of Batman. The view of Batman in Bruce’s eyes was so arousing that he wanted to make Bruce forget the nightmare in a rather sensual way.
Batman’s face lowered and Bruce felt soft but demanding lips claiming his lips. He tensed and the eyes of the Bat were fixed on his eyes.

“You have hypothermia – I must warm you up…” Clark said mimicking Batman’s husky, sexy voice. “Hero, go to your basket…”

But the kitten was stubborn as his master and remained there so Clark rolled his eyes in a completely non-Batman way and for the second time that night took the kitten and the basket to settle them in the drawing room. He was back in less than twenty seconds – bless that super speed – and he sank again his lips to Bruce’s neck; the vein there beat rather excited.

“You took Hero out!” Bruce protested with a deep frown that flared up Clark’s already crazy heartbeat. “Stop doing that!”

“The drawing room is very warm; he’ll be alright…” he said hastily to continue sucking Bruce’s collar bone. “I always wanted to fuck Bruce Wayne wearing Batman’s armor…” he grunted sucking the cold flesh that with that phrase became colder.

Clark frowned because along with that drop in temperature, Bruce lolled his head to the other side blocking the access to his neck; his breath was angry.

“Joker was saying things like this!” the younger man snapped without looking at him. “He wanted to have a threesome with Batman and me…”

Clark chuckled on the absurdity of this but immediately swallowed it because Bruce fuming used his hands to move away from him. Clark cursed himself: he laughed with one of Bruce’s traumatic experiences a few minutes after the man had endured an awful nightmare. The nightmare’s impact worsened the impression of his laughter because in other circumstances Clark was sure that Bruce would have laughed too.

Bruce wanted to take off of him the gloved hands that held tenderly but determinedly his upper arms. But he realized that he was overreacting – Clark didn’t jeer him…Actually, himself had laughed sometimes recounting Joker’s futile fantasy. Yet he wasn’t up to this tonight and Clark expressing such a…desire made him feel uneasy.

“Okay, babe…” Clark nibbled his nose keeping his fervent eyes locked with Bruce’s. “We return to the good old nudity…”

In less than a second his completely naked body bent over Bruce who felt dizzy not only from Clark’s breathtaking body but also from the speed of his movement and…the images of Ra’s’ naked body from the dream. He didn’t want to show weakness; he didn’t want to let a nightmare render him powerless. He touched his fingers on Clark’s bulging biceps.

But Clark didn’t need to hear it to sense that Bruce was anything but aroused. He ruffled his own hair and blinked.

“Okay…fine…” though in his groin nothing was fine. “Let’s talk about your nightmare or was it a flashback?” it was so difficult speaking about these things when your body was so close to Bruce’s body and yelled to be allowed to get in – at least, he knew that after listening to Bruce’s flashback any appetite for sex would be replaced with disgust.

Bruce let his head sink in the soft pillow; he didn’t want to speak about those dreams to Clark – the Man of Steel was too bright to be messed with his darkness. He rubbed his temple.

“It was one of those bizarre dreams between flashback and nightmare: reality and thoughts and projections of my fears.”

Clark pursed his lips and nodded.

“Crane’s drugs…”

Bruce found the distraction he wanted.

“You found him?” falling asleep had stopped him from following the developments.

Scarecrow stood amidst the sewer’s narrow, rusty tunnel with his arms spread: he made it. His smirk under the sack mask wasn’t visible to anyone but anyway there was nobody there to see him except some rats. He was a genius… Who would have guessed that ol’ Jeremiah’s Mansion had a secret chamber that led to the city’s abandoned sewers?

His smirk became wider and the light blue of his orbs glimmered from the holes of the mask even in the deep darkness; this part of the sewers was not only forgotten and unused those days but also was made of lead and other old, unhealthy, rusty metals that would blind every scanning eye or machine. Scarecrow knew that Superman was Wayne’s stud and would search for him; the same went for Stark too. Both of them would want to recapture him to avenge what he did to their pet. And there was always the Bat-man: more dangerous than both of those morons.

But Scarecrow wasn’t going to linger to the sewers: a mastermind like him deserved a better establishment than those stinking tunnels. Away from the places those stupid cops would be looking for him: in the old industrial area where the blessing interferences were even stronger. The Police had cordoned the place after Joker’s arrest.

The remembrance of the jester made his face contort from aversion: the idiot thought that could treat him like a tool, like a puppet; that Jonathan would serve his moronic purposes; that Jonathan would be his minion! Scarecrow, a genius like Scarecrow, being the minion of a clown. He would have spat but the spitting would have smeared his own face.

He laughed; he cackled loudly much differently than Jonathan’s restrained, smug chuckle. Joker never believed that Jonathan would manage to ruin his plans. But Scarecrow beat the arrogant clown; he ruined his intention to escape because now Police and the Asylum’s staff would tighten the security; the clown would stay trapped in his box and the Scarecrow would be free to finally show that city his true power. Because till now Crane was only the guy running the errands of the big ones – but now it was his turn to be the biggest one.

“Take that, Joker!” he hissed and imagined twisting sadistically the clown’s testicles as Joker had done to him numerous times. Not that this kind of revenge suit a brilliant scientist like him but the moron needed to taste his own techniques before Jonathan showed him that there were worse things…

His plan had been brilliant and Jonathan’s cringing attitude was the best covering in order to nobody suspect anything. His ordinary orderly fell ill abruptly and with no obvious reason: he sniggered… only he and Ted knew the reason: some of his most ordinary toxin slipped by Ted’s hand to fellow orderly’s food and in a few hours that ox collapsed. And Ted was the only available to replace him.

After the lights went out to the inmates’ cells, Crane got cramps in his stomach and his new orderly came to escort him to the infirmary – it was so convenient (and so preplanned that Ted had also the night shift in Crane’s sector.) In the middle of their route, in a corridor badly lit, since most of the lights went off this time of night, Crane sprayed the unsuspecting orderly with his fear toxin sending him to a beautiful journey to the Terrorland. He did that because he didn’t want the officials to realize that Ted was plotting with him all this time; that he was his man. He wanted to protect Ted not from kindness of course, but because he needed loyal minions and because he doubted that Ted if pressed by the Police wouldn’t sing – not that he knew anything but if the man stayed free then Scarecrow would find a new use for him…

From there it was easy for Crane to maneuver in the Asylum’s corners; he knew the place as the back of his hand. He reached the basement and from there opened the passage to Jeremiah’s beautiful laboratory – Ted didn’t know the passage nor the place so even if he squealed he wouldn’t know to lead the cops or whoever else there.

He found his Scarecrow mask there and put it; it was like returning home…

Crane had studied and explored the place and knew that Jeremiah’s hideout ended up to the old sewers…

And now he was there free having brought with him some of his creations that were stashed in Jeremiah’s shelter. Of course he could return to the old laboratory whenever he wanted to but for now he’d walk to the old industrial area that wasn’t too far from here and the best? Some of the old sewers’ bifurcation led to that exact area…

So it’d take only some walking in the filth to reach his destination and begin orchestrating his next steps without mind numbing pills that might have not quenched his genius but didn’t let it unfold its intelligence to the fullest. And without that pest clown trying to force Crane to work for him and his stupid obsessions. He had his one and only obsession: fear. And psychopharmacology, his beloved science would help him explore; experiment and rule this drenched in fear city.

Clark yanked his head backwards, his eyes rolling to the back of his head: of course, he had to report for his outing as Batman.

“I told you to return to your room and sleep and you remained in the cave to do your investigation: for Rao’s sake, Bruce! The cave isn’t the proper place for you to linger: you see, what happened: you dozed off and stayed in the cold! You could have frozen there!”

Bruce pressed his lips; he detested being reprimanded for doing his job, especially from Clark. His eyes were indeed frozen and unmovable staring at Clark.

“I hadn’t intended to stay much but my medication is too strong and at some point lulled me.”

“Your medication just exposed your scheme…and it wasn’t for Alfred who found you, you could be ill – if you don’t fall ill by morning!”

Clark huffed because he didn’t like seeing that unreadable expression in which Bruce resorted when he felt disappointed or pissed with someone he loved. It was like a frost barrier was built between them.

“What am I going to do with you, Star?” he saw Bruce’s eyes leaving their icy stillness.

*Star…*Bruce felt a warm wave inside him hearing that calling…Lately, Clark used that small word too rarely if not at all.
Clark licked his lips because he loved that sparkle in Bruce’s eyes.

“I’d have told you everything…” he arched his eyebrows. “But you couldn’t wait, huh?” he smirked evilly and tickled him in the ribs causing a giggle. “Control freak!” he laughed.

“So you found him?” Bruce managed to regain his seriousness.

Clark bit his bottom lip.

“No, the Asylum staff and officers searched the entire premises and I scanned carefully the establishment and I searched every corner of this damn…” he swallowed hard seeing Bruce’s insulted glare. “Every corner of Gotham…But no trace of Crane. Who would have thought that he of all the inmates would escape? When Gordon mentioned the Asylum I thought Joker.”

“Before I slept there was no report of casualties: is this the case?”

Clark brushed tenderly Bruce’s cheekbone.

“We were lucky; the orderly that was escorting Crane was only sprayed with a gas that knocked him out. Police investigates how the gas reached Crane. Don’t worry, Bruce; it’s a matter of hours we’ll find him and thankfully, he isn’t of the dangerous ones…”

Bruce’s eyes became blank, deep in thought and Clark understood…Crane’s drugs and experimentation tortured Bruce when he was captive and still now his Star was faced with the consequences in a period where he needed all the calmness and rest he could get.

“Crane conducted experiments to the Asylum’s patients: poor, tormented souls whose suffering was exploited and worsened to satisfy the twisted imagination of the man who was supposed to soothe their pain. He wore a scarecrow mask and sprayed people with a toxin intensifying their worst fears…”

Clark nodded; Tony had told him that Crane had at some point used the same toxin on Bruce too…

“I’m sorry” he said softly massaging Bruce’s shoulder “He is indeed dangerous” Clark corrected himself. “And we’ll find him before he hurts anyone else.”

Bruce refocused on Clark’s beautiful face.

“What you told Jim? Because I don’t want to make a blunder when I’ll talk to him and reveal that there are two different Batmen.”

Clark narrowed his eyes.

“I stayed in the shadows and just shook my head or give one word answers; you can’t say something that we’ll show you’re not the man he spoke too” he pursed his lips. “Tell me that you’re going only to speak to him through phone…”

Bruce shook his head.

“We must find Crane and of course I must be in contact with Jim through phone” he acknowledged Clark’s grim look manifesting that he already knew Bruce’s intentions. “But you can’t dress every night as Batman – you have Metropolis, the entire planet…”

Clark however shook his head.

“You don’t believe I can ferret him out, huh?” he asked accusingly.
Bruce smiled.

“Gotham and her bad guys aren’t ordinary…”

“Neither am I…” he said slyly and slithered his lips all over Bruce’s neck. “I have super hearing, 100 different types of vision, super speeding…”

“Yet you didn’t find him tonight…”

Clark closed his eyes a bit pissed and huffed.

“Some things need their time…”

Bruce’s eyes were glimmering with determination.

“I was thinking…”

“No!” Clark cut him abruptly, his face contorted. “No! No! No way!”

Bruce shook his head exasperated.

“At least, let me finish” Clark could think another way he’d prefer to let Bruce finish – more pleasant and sensual and safe.

“I know what you’d say.”

“No, you don’t!” Bruce spat and stubbornly supported his body in his elbows to sit. “I can take the Tumbler and patrol the city searching for Crane – inside the Tumbler I’m completely out of danger.”

Clark rolled his eyes and slumped on the mattress: he had feared that hearing Bruce’s nightmare would ruin entirely his erection but this was much more effective. He shook his head.

“And you’ll stay in there…” he said frustrated in complete disbelief. “You won’t come out… Bruce, nobody is gonna swallow that shit and nobody is gonna agree with that so forget it.”

Bruce’s face was of stone; his eyes narrowed like a cat ready to attack and Clark always felt a pleasant fire in his groin seeing that stare. He touched feathery the younger man’s cheek and Bruce stubbornly yanked away.

“It’s only one week you returned to Gotham and already you work too much: you wake up early, go to the Enterprises and then train with your physiotherapist before exhausting yourself with investigation. And now you think to prowl Gotham during the nights…When do you plan to sleep?”

“Only till Crane is busted” he snapped dryly avoiding the answer to the last question.

Clark jerked his head and his hand moved to Bruce’s neck caressing the throbbing vein there.

“And” he continued “your sleep is disturbed by nightmares…How long do you think you can last like this?” he inquired in a low voice. “Your body will collapse, Bruce and all of us the people who love you won’t last through this.”

Bruce knew that but he also knew that he wasn’t doing anything so extreme: he had to be himself at least with that minimum of effort. He moved his body to distance himself but Clark’s arms of Steel were trapping him between them. Clark cupped his face and turned it to bring their eyes together.

“You can’t expect me to idle around because I’m paraplegic” Bruce retorted. “People all over the world without my resources are doing the same – and more!”

Clark nodded.

“After their recuperation…You’re still healing, babe: just don’t let your self-sacrifice ruin everything.”

Bruce frowned: he hated the term ‘self-sacrifice’ when attributed to him.

“My what?! I’m not self-sacrificing!”

He thrashed in Clark’s hands and the older man touched their foreheads together: for Clark the most important thing right now was that Bruce shivered from hypothermia without giving a shit about it… well… and Clark was aroused like when he didn’t know Batman’s identity and his defiance and vexatious attitude excited him.

Bruce felt Clark’s lips claiming his like the thirsty soil sucks the rain; it was soft, sweet and passionate as every time and Bruce followed nibbling that flesh and allowing Clark’s tongue enter his mouth. The last days Bruce enjoyed every time Clark manifested his passion; he felt relaxed and relieved because his fears were denied. He wanted Clark’s love but tonight unlike other nights he didn’t feel for it so he hoped that Clark kindly would settle for kisses and soft touches.

Yet with dread his body’s healthy part felt Superman’s strong, unstoppable desire: Bruce smelt the perfect body’s arousal; he felt dread because he didn’t want that tonight and also he didn’t want to deny this to Clark who had needs that he neglected for four months…

Clark took hold of his upper arms and lowered him on the mattress, unable to detach his sucking mouth from the human’s lips; their tongues’ play was so pleasant. His hands hastily pushed the robe off Bruce’s body; his disappointment and frustration were huge when he realized that there was a second robe: Alfred of course had muffled him in his own robe… His body was screaming in impatience wanting to meet Bruce’s naked flesh…

And his despair made his kisses stronger, almost violent to Bruce’s neckline and then on his collar bone… He wanted to be slow and gentle but that fire inside him fuelled his hands to undo the buttons of Bruce’s pajama in super speed. Because his chest, his breasts needed to touch, to rub with Bruce’s taut but deliciously smooth breasts – he had to warm the human who now shivered more.

“We need to stop hypothermia, Bruce” he mumbled licking his lips which action ended up licking Bruce’s breast since his mouth was sunk there. “I must fix your temperature…” as in agreement his torso began moving sensually on Bruce’s; his insatiable hands fondling Bruce’s ribs.

Bruce closed his eyes and cursed through his teeth; the taste from his nightmare was so strong in him that his insides were in the prospect of an intercourse. He lolled his head on the side but Clark took that motion as an urge for him to suck more his neck. And Clark’s ministrations were so passionate and strong, almost violent as Ra’s in his nightmare and Bruce’s breath was pressed.

“Clark…” but Clark continued probably believing that this was a moan. “Clark, I’m not in the mood…”

Now that hurt…But Clark understood Bruce’s hesitation: he just had a nightmare and he was still upset. He lifted his sweaty face, his messy hair framing his fevered eyes and regarded Bruce’s so beautiful, so irresistible face…

“…beautiful beings like Wayne are made only for being used for pleasure and nothing more.”
He shook off that voice and noticed that Bruce frowned obviously taking in something.

“I’m here for that, babe…” Clark panted because his groin was really impatient, throbbing viciously. “I’ll change that mood…” he cocked his eyebrows “this is a job for Superman…”

His hands grabbed on their own accord Bruce’s waistband and lowered at once both pants and underwear and…oh! His groin relished the contact with that soft pelvis! So much that he inhaled deeply and his mouth was suddenly sucking Bruce’s abdominals panting because his length was already erect and he wanted to get more from that shivering, so pleasantly cold body.

“I need you, Bruce…” he whispered huskily. “I need to be inside you again…Your body is sacred: a temple of Sun – I need that energy you give me…And besides you don’t feel anything below the waist…I’ll do everything…”

Bruce frowned because Clark was raving…He had no feeling under his waist and though Clark’s head thwarted him from seeing he was hearing everything: the clothes being dragged to his knees, Clark’s groin rubbing his… Now he had to use all his control to stop his breath from becoming pants; he could feel for Clark’s need but just…

“Not tonight, Clark…” he said not too loud because Clark even in this state could hear everything.

Clark heard but his body’s screams were ferocious and his length throbbed hungry and pained…

“That was his best trick! Persuading the others that he is a wild mountain to conquer!” Diana’s solemn, scientific voice told him again.

Bruce’s eyes widened when instead of Clark detaching himself, he saw Superman’s head covering his genitals and heard the so familiar sound of powerful fingers clenching his thighs and his anus being spread.

Clark held Bruce’s thighs bringing them to touch his hips: he needed to feel real contact as when his body rubbed with Diana’s hot, strong, delicious, round shaped hips. But Bruce wasn’t able to do it himself so Clark would do it for the weak human: he began rubbing the unresponsive thighs to his stretching the anus he wanted to conquer.

Bruce’s heart gave a painful jolt and his stomach filled with nausea. The realization almost frozen his brain: Clark didn’t care about what he told him and was going to penetrate him without his will…

But then the part of himself that they were telling him that was going to destroy him made him clench his teeth and grab Clark’s wet locks using them as support to heave his torso.

The smell from Bruce’s entrance was so intoxicating, alluring him to cross that mystic entrance that avoided for four torturous months…His fingers clenched stronger the dead thighs as his frantic heartbeat buzzed in his ears…His length was drawn there like the metal to a magnet, like a fly to the fire…Bruce was pulling his hair; Clark smiled: of course, once again he managed to help Bruce overcome his past and moan for more, even though he wouldn’t feel his ministrations in his rectus.

But then the pulling became stronger and Clark sensed anger; he raised his glimmering eyes, his hands were holding Bruce’s legs heaved…Bruce’s grim, flashing, angry eyes sent a stone to his chest.

“Not tonight, Clark!” the voice wasn’t too loud but strength and resolution made it pure steel; and the emerald stars in Bruce’s orbs was like molten gems ready to explode. Not only anger was there but also bitterness.
Clark realized that he was grabbing Bruce’s thighs, his saliva coating the younger man’s genitals and his rock hard erection was already poking Bruce’s anus that with dread remembered that he hadn’t lubed or prepared in any way. The Man of Steel flushed and felt his heart stopping. What was he doing? No, he didn’t even want to acknowledge what he was ready to do…and Bruce’s body was colder than before…

He touched Bruce’s legs gently on the mattress biting his lips on taking in his fingers’ marks.

“Clark…”

He couldn’t even bear Bruce’s eyes; he took softly the younger man’s hands that still were fisting his locks and kissed the palms but stood abruptly up because that erection made him want to cut his penis.

“I’m sorry” he said without looking at Bruce and used his super speed to get in the bathroom and fix that annoying erection.

Bruce hastily took his underwear and pants from the floor where Clark’s impatience had tossed them and wore them continuing with his pajama shirt and robe; now he was realizing how cold he was – his body trembled violently and even his teeth rattled. The sound of the shower filled the room and he closed his eyes; he didn’t want things to get like this but Clark seemed like being in a trance like the days he was affected by what Ra’s had done to his body.

Bruce shook his head and rubbed the bridge of his nose; maybe he shouldn’t have engaged in a relationship with Clark… These things weren’t for him; he knew it.

The bathroom door opened and Clark appeared dressed in a bathrobe. There was no erection and his face was calm albeit crestfallen and broken.

Bruce watched him coming closer and couldn’t stop the defensive expression from his eyes.

But Clark wasn’t annoyed by that; he was angry with himself. Bruce was shivering from hypothermia and he almost…took him against his will!

“May I sit?” Clark asked shyly pressing his lips.

Bruce lolled his head.

“Funny you ask that…”

Clark closed his eyes and nodded snorting for himself.

“While I didn’t ask you for the other…”

The younger man shook his head and gestured for him to sit.

“You know you don’t have to ask for the other as well…but tonight I just…”

Clark nodded.

“You weren’t in the mood: that nightmare upset you and I…didn’t listen; I ignored…I didn’t care…” his face contorted in self disgust.

“Clark, you should ask Jor El to have a check on you.”

He frowned but Bruce continued.
“Your behavior has changed the last ten days…It might be just fatigue from all this adventure, from all the care you took of me” Clark opened his mouth to retort that he doesn’t get tired but Bruce touched his fingers to Clark’s lips – Bruce loved these lips. “Emotional fatigue, Clark…or some kind of PTSD. Or could be something else…” his mind was racing and in its race strange connections were made with events of the last days; of mobsters behaving out of character, of Amazon Princesses flirting Clark…

Clark nibbled Bruce’s fingers.

“You’re thinking Diana…”

Bruce’s smile was bitter but for Clark was better than nothing.

“Yes…because you seem to be infatuated by her…”

Clark shook his head in negation.

“No, Bruce: she is my ally, my friend…I don’t deny that I have a good time with her but I’m not infatuated” Bruce nodded disbelievingly and Clark held his upper arms and looked him in the eye – he knew that it was the time of honesty. “You were right, Bruce.”

Bruce frowned.

“She had other intentions about me…She…she kissed me on the lips…”

Bruce nodded pressing his lips.

“In Metropolis’ subway station, the night of the assault at the curve where Morgan Edge was killed.”

Clark was flabbergasted.

“You knew?”

Bruce pressed his lips in a tight line.

“It was curious that you two got secluded behind that wall to fight a single man; and then Jimmy Olsen having pictures from the scene and not one of you two together…” a faint smile trembled in his lips. “And then you telling me that Jimmy’s camera broke down and this was the reason he didn’t take shots of you two…though some of the pictures were obviously taken after the supposed breakdown” his eyes flashed piercing Clark’s. “You deleted those pictures.”

Clark pursed his lips: it was so hard having a relationship with the World’s greatest detective.

“Why you didn’t confront me?” his voice was a bit pissed because he had embarrassed himself lying.

Bruce felt his body freeze but his stare was fervent.

“I wanted to give you some time to tell me yourself…but you didn’t.”

Clark ruffled his hair.

“I tell you now; I could have hidden it but I chose to be honest.”

“Or you just thought that I’d find out eventually and wanted to manifest your honesty to prolong what we have” he crossed his hands, his face was grim. “Really, Clark: what do you want me for? I don’t even satisfy you.”
Clark blinked and caressed Bruce’s upper arms.

“I love you, you know that: I didn’t tell you that night because I wanted to clear things with Diana first…”

“You liked the kiss?” Bruce demanded acknowledging the throbbing pains from his nightmare seizing his body again.

Clark shook his head: how he messed things so much?

“I…” he couldn’t lie “at first” Bruce just pressed his lips and gulped but Clark tightened his grip on his upper arms. “But then I pushed her away – I hated what happened - and I told her that it was wrong.”

“You still deleted those photos…”

“I deleted them because I didn’t want you find out by the news and the gossip, stupid shows: I wanted to correct this mess and then tell you things as they really were. I told her everything about me and you.”

Bruce was rubbing his temple; the scenes from his dream with Diana blaming him for Clark’s misery replayed.

“Selfish human, do you believe that you’re worthy of him? You’re worthy of his love and misery?!”

“And I explained that I love you and that nothing can happen between me and her. Is any better now?” he whispered suavely, his finger brushing Bruce’s neck.

“Are you sure?” Bruce asked.

“W…What?”

“Are you sure that you don’t want to be with her?” Bruce couldn’t forget Clark’s strange behavior since he met the Amazon and when he was with her Clark was obviously content unlike with him. And as his dream haunted his mind Bruce couldn’t blame Clark if he indeed wanted – besides, he had admitted that he liked the kiss.

Clark cupped Bruce’s face with both hands and his thumbs caressed the cold skin.

“If I wanted why I’d make all this fuss to hide it from you only to reveal it when I ended this nonsense?”

Bruce’s gaze pierced him.

“Because you still can’t decide… Because you’re confused.”

“No, no, Bruce; don’t even say that…” he hugged him and he was shocked by how cold Bruce was. “I’ll go to Jor El to run every kind of test on me to see what’s wrong – if anything. And you’ll see that from now on everything will be like before; like when you woke up from the coma…” he smiled “remember?”

Bruce reluctantly rested his tired head on Clark’s shoulder. He closed his eyes.

“How can I forget?” he whispered and the different pains all over his body, echoes from the nightmare, made his breath light.
Clark rubbed soothing circles on his back.

“Then can I ask you to forget everything bad I did?” he caressed the back of Bruce’s head. “Do you want me to never see her again?”

Bruce exhausted but without letting that be shown moved his head from Clark’s shoulder and looked at him.

“She is your ally…Besides if you need to kick her out completely to be…” he huffed “faithful to me then things are too serious: you’re already in love with her…”

Clark panicked on that and cuddled Bruce desperate.

“No! I’m not in love with her! It’s you that I love!”

Bruce shook his head.

“You need to keep her around but with a safe distance between you - since you’ve told her about our relationship this distance won’t raise any suspicions and we’ll gain precious time. Do not trust her before we investigate her and find out who she is and where she came from.”

Clark frowned.

“You think that Diana did that to me?” he hardly hid from his voice how ridiculous he thought this was.

“Everything started when she arrived and though it can be a coincidence, we must investigate her: we don’t know anything about her.”

Clark thought that Bruce’s attitude was bitchy and this paranoid suspicions of Diana doing something nasty to him was just jealousy: fine, she was attracted to him and maybe Clark was a bit attracted to her but that was normal – things like this happen all the time without ruining true love and without being the product of malicious deeds… However he felt relieved that he wouldn’t have to never see Diana again; he might not want her as a romantic partner but he wanted her as an ally and friend and maybe in the meantime Bruce having satisfied his paranoia and found nothing awry with Diana, would accept her.

But now he realized that Bruce’s brain was filled with pain signals.

“You’re in pain though there’s no injury…”

“It’s from the nightmare” he said nestled in Clark’s flesh. “My mind unfortunately sometimes projects the pain from there into reality.”

“I know I didn’t earn it but…if you spoke to me about the nightmare maybe you’d feel better” he cupped Bruce’s face and looked him with his puppy eyes.

Bruce blinked and gulped; he didn’t want to speak about his demons.

“Bruce…I know I was late to talk to you about what happened but I did because I trust you. You, on the other hand, never talk to me about your dreams – and I know how much they trouble you.”

Bruce licked his lips.

“Remember the night we executed the plan to take over Falcone and Ra’s Al Ghul?” Clark nodded. “Remember that Ra’s had made it to the Manor and paralyzed me while he crippled you with Kryptonite?”

“Yes; it seems like ages ago…”

Bruce’s eyes sparkled.

“Well, in my nightmare Tony never came. Ra’s took me away from Gotham to one of his secret bases” Clark frowned. “He punished me for my treason and used Crane’s drugs to control my will” Bruce didn’t want to speak to Clark about his suspicion of Al Ghul having created a child with his DNA – he didn’t want to trouble him with a vague possibility. “There I met someone I ended up loving and trusting” he took in Clark’s jealous expression and snorted. “Not romantically. In the end, I managed to overcome my injuries and incapacity; I ran away with…that person and when I was ready to take him and myself away, he stabbed me in the kidney and stomach…”

Clark nodded thoughtful.

“What a dreadful scenario…I’m grateful everything went smooth that night and that awful man didn’t take you again…” he caressed with his thumbs Bruce’s temples. “We must talk to Leslie about the dreams to do something with your medication because it seems that it can’t offer you the quality sleep and rest it should…”

Bruce shook his head escaping Clark’s hands.

“No, I don’t want any more drugs; they already make me too sleepy and slow.”

“I doubt it…” but he saw Bruce ready to retort and touched his lips. “We must warm you, babe” Bruce’s eyes widened angrily thinking again of Clark’s forced ministrations “a hot shower will help with your hypothermia” he sighed “and you wore your pajamas from the floor; that’s unhealthful” he scratched his head “and is my fault but we’ll fix it.”

He made to touch the buttons of Bruce’s pajama but the younger man stopped him with a sharp glance. Clark pressed his lips.

“Okay…” he realized that he deserved that, being forbidden to strip Bruce. So he raised his palms in surrender and watched Bruce slipping to his wheelchair and going to the bathroom.

Clark didn’t follow him though his body once again kicked him; hearing the soft sounds of clothes being slithered on Bruce’s skin and then discarded at the floor, excited him; even more when the sound of the shower’s waterfalls reached him mingled with the ethereal sound of water drops grazing Bruce’s naked flesh.

He clenched his head and huffed; to forget his body’s desire he set off to prepare new clothes for Bruce. Warm underwear and pajamas. But then he slapped himself: the human was trembling from hypothermia – what if he collapsed in the shower. Of course, he’d have heard the sound if he had fallen but Bruce made shower sitting so he might not have fallen.

Clark ran to the bathroom – the water was still running and he hesitated. But then he listened carefully and Bruce was sleeping.

He opened the hydromassage cabin, closed the water and took the sleeping man in his arms carefully: how could those stupid drugs make Bruce doze off like this and then letting him being tortured by nightmares? He cursed: Crane’s experiments. He swore to find the insane shrink and make him cure what he did to Bruce.

Bruce in his sleep wrapped his arms around Clark’s neck and nestled his head in his shoulder so trustingly, so exhausted from everything that he did. Clark felt his heart warming: Bruce loved him so much and he always failed him.

He muffled Bruce in a fluffy tower and took him to the bed where he dressed him admiring his body and cringing on the signs of the past injuries and the bruises of his own fingers. At least, now Bruce didn’t feel the pain from his dream and his temperature began rising. Clark placed him in his side of the bed and tucked him meticulously with the blankets.

He had something to do; with super speed he rushed to the drawing room and brought Hero back to the bedroom. The kitten looked at him complaining.

“Sorry, buddy; I’m an asshole! But I promise I’ll fix everything” he whispered and placed him next to Bruce who was fast asleep with all his vitals radiating exhaustion.

Then Clark took off his bathrobe and lied beside Bruce spooning him tight and softly. He didn’t dress because he wanted his alien temperature warming the human without a second pair of clothes in between. He nuzzled Bruce’s warm cheek closing his eyes.

“Cheap whores were all the family he had but even the cheapest whore knows how to emanate some charm to a client. And Wayne has also his extraordinary looks to add to this allure…” Diana’s voice returned to spoil his moment.

Clark slapped himself hard in the face to stop his mind recounting Diana’s speech.

“I’ll go to Jor El, Bruce; and if anything is wrong I’ll fix it. I’ll be a better man for you…”

It was easy for Joker to sniff the oddity in the atmosphere of the morning Asylum and he didn’t need the stroll in the corridors till the cafeteria to be sure that something happened last night. He was the Agent of Chaos; the Prince of Irregularity so he didn’t need alarms and sirens to sense that something was of.

His orderly, Scott, for instance, was stiffer and duller than usual and that said a lot since a brick wall was more exciting than him the good days. He giggled loud on that thought and good, ol’ Scott flinched and tightened his grip on his upper arm as if thinking that he’d start running. Maybe it was just that? Some loony hit the road?

“Easy, muckoooox; this velvety skin bruises aaaaaa lot: I use the program for the sensitive in the washer.”

The orderly rolled his eyes and just grunted pushing him ahead. Joker shook his head nodding with his eyebrows arched.

“You know: brooooooad vocabulary is what I loooooove in you!”

The scent of disturbance was dense in the cafeteria and Joker loved disturbance of every kind but this was a booooring disturbance. So whoever caused it was amateur and lacked any talent…

He took his disk from the orderly serving and scanned the huge space: his boys, Joker’s littl’ clowns were all there, and the other usual regulars. He scratched his hair which all this time itched very much without their nutritious green paint. Anyways, he’d ask Johnny boy: he was a gossipy so he surely knew what happened.

But as he approached Crany’s favorite corner he realized he wasn’t there.
“HEHEHEHEHEHEHE! Oh, booooy! Jooooohnny tries to steal the show heeeere…Nah-nah, that’s bad…Every--one knows that the clown al--ways steals the show!”

He sat in his usual chair because he was so irregular that sometimes went for regularity and stared at Crane’s empty chair with a menacing sparkle.

“I guess you think that you outsmarted me and got away…” he shook his fork in the negative, took a bite of scrambled eggs and chew. “No way, buddy…You played with Brucie…the only reason you’re still alive is that I need you to get in his beautiful mind and make it scrambled like those eggs; if you’re not to work for me you’ll die, Johnny boy…”

He was sure that Crane’s goal was to escape first and make Joker’s escape more difficult or even impossible. But Johnny despite a shrink didn’t know anything about him. His attempt to make a fool out of the jester made Joker angry, so angry that he started laughing again and jolted to his feet hopping like a schoolgirl to a table where his goons were eating.

When Scott came to manhandle him to his cell for his session with his Harlequin he was watching Bugs Bunny kissing Elmer Fudd on the lips and Joker was giggling slapping his thighs. He didn’t like to copy others but he glued his lips to his orderly making loud noises. The orderly tried to detach him but Joker let go instantly twisting his lips in disgust.

The other orderlies laughed and Joker bowed.

“You know, gents. That was a huuuuuuge sacrifice for youuuuur enter--tainment: he truly tastes like poop…” but Scott grabbed him from the upper arm and dragged him. “You’ve got nooooo humor, musky ox…”

The giant gritted his teeth.

“I have much humor: it’s 1,200 volts; do you want to try it?”

Joker giggled.

“Though I appreeeeeciate your effort to entertain me because it’d be a heeeeeeluva kick I don’t want my shrink waiting…” he pouted thoughtful. “I’m a true gentle--man.”

His orderly huffed and shook his head; now that the initial anger passed, he regretted speaking like that to Joker. He knew how dangerous the man was even if he behaved like a stupid clown; also, he was sure that it was a matter of time before Joker escaped and spread again his terror. And he didn’t want the nutcase to have a grudge on him: Scott had a family and remembered the Phelps family…

So he let Joker’s arm causing the jester’s grin.

“You’re a smart guy, huh?”

The orderly didn’t answer and stayed silent tolerating Joker’s singing all along till his cell. On Joker’s approach the metallic bars opened automatically and then the same happened with the energy beams that formed the second barrier. Joker twitched his eyebrows proudly.

“Doors open for meeeee wherever I go! Hurrayyyyyy! Happens all the time but each time I get a hard oooooon.”

His orderly didn’t say anything and once both barriers shut again he left saluting Dr. Quinzel that was coming.

Joker clapped with enthusiasm seeing her.

“Gooooooood mooooorning, Haaarlequin!” he made an impression of Robin Williams. “And it’s a good morning, huh?” his eyes glimmered evilly and innocently at the same time.

Harleen took the chair from the corner and dragged it in front of the cell. She sat down and set her small recorder on.

Joker cocked an eyebrow.

“Right on business, huh? Soooooo it’s not a good morning for you, huh? Cranes fly to the open sky…” he sang.

Harleen knew that Joker had already figured out; maybe Crane had said it to him. So she didn’t find the reason to not show her cards.

“You two spoke a lot: did he mention anything?” she asked grimly.

Joker cackled.

“Noooooope! Johnny boy was intro--vert – not like me… Hehe! I hope now you realized how misunderstood I am” he pouted and blinked cutely. “Stark put aaaaall this shit on me and it was Crany the real meeenace – pour, pour Joker…”

Harleen didn’t answer and kept her face expressionless: she wouldn’t make Mr. J the favor to follow his tricks.

“The day you attacked Lou Garfield you were speaking with Dr. Crane” she wanted to search the possibility that Crane triggered the attack along with the news footage. “What were you talking about?”

Joker squinted and scratched his head.

“Lou Garfield? Who’s that?”

“Your former minion” she looked him in the eye.

“Oh! You mean Poooorky!” that was his name in Joker’s gang.

“What’s the reason you attacked him?”

Joker’s face opened in a Cheshire smile. He raised his index finger and shook it.

“Nah…nah…nah…You’re asking about Craaane and now you ask about Po--porky? Youuuu, doc, con--fuse me…” he whined.

Harleen shook her head.

“Not at all: Crane was in the scene; you two were talking before you attacked the man: so why you did that?”

“It’s none of your business…” Joker hissed completely serious; his eyes flashing.

“It was something Crane told you?” she insisted.
Joker lolled his head on the side frowning.

“Do you interrogate me?”

She met his gaze.

“It’s better me than the police or worse…”

Joker cocked his eyebrows and giggled catching the meaning of that worse.

“Worse? You mean bееееetter, Harlequin, ‘cause, nooooo offense, but between youuuu and the woooorrrse, I prefer that tall, dark, pointy eared worse! HaHa!”

Harleen cocked an eyebrow.

“Are you cheating Bruce?”

Joker exploded in a loud fit of cackling and Harleen watched him annoyed but without showing it. Joker fell on the floor and hugged his belly still laughing twitching his legs: cheating Bruce with Batman! He stopped abruptly, stood up and approached the energy barrier dead serious.

“This is personal and we’ll solve it with Brucie as soon as I’m out” he pursed his lips and shook his head. “Couples have some issues…”

Harleen stretched her body.

“You know that you won’t leave these premises unless reformed” Joker rolled his eyes and made a noise with his lips. “Or Crane’s escape was planned by you so he helps you out?”

Joker’s eyes widened mock hurt and slapped his hands on his chest dramatically.

“Meeeeee? Aaaalaaaas!” he exclaimed. “You offend me, Dr. Harle--quin: Joker doesn’t need the help of a nutcase…Byyyyyy the way…Do you fancy being our couple therapist once I be reunited with my hoooooney?”

Harleen lolled her head.

“Mr. J, you must concentrate on your reform and therapy and forget all about escapes and…being with Bruce…”

Joker shook his head purging his lips as if cajoling a baby.

“Oooohh, Dr. Harlequin, don’t be jealous of Brucie…He is the most fascinating thing in this booooorrring world – once you meet him” his eyes drilled hers “aaaaand see what I saw, you’ll want toooo analyze him as much as I…Well, I noooot only analyze him buuuut anal--yze…” he winked. “But for you it’s only analysis, okay?”

“My interest here is you, Mr. J.”

Joker touched his heart in a theatrical way and shook his head.

“I’m flattered, Doc…”

Harleen pressed her lips.

“So let’s speak about you instead…I think that you have to say more interesting things than anyone.”
The jester pouted.

“Deeeeeeefinitely! You know the oooone about Superman and Batman’s shampoo?”

Harleen arched her eyebrows.

“I mean the real Mr. J, not the jester” she leaned towards him and Joker became solemn. “Once we had started a very constructive discussion about your childhood.”

Joker yanked his head and regarded her calculating.

“Thaaaat discussion began in relation to Bruce” his voice was nasal and flat. “If I geeeet Bruce opening hiiiiis heart I would do the same…” he licked his lips feigning that he felt uncomfortable.

Harleen knew that already; she sighed inside: if Wayne wasn’t a coward and had agreed she would have achieved miracles. But he refused.

“We have to work alone, Mr. J; you must detach yourself from Bruce.”

Joker twisted his mouth and jerked his hands upwards.

“I’m doing every--thing to manage get attached to him” he leaned his head to her with a sly expression in his eyes “you know what I mean: very- very intimately” he made a very talkative and very rude gesture but Harleen kept her composure. “And youuuuu sugest to de-tach?” he stressed the word exaggerating his mouth’s movement.

“We can’t force him to participate in a session with you.”

Joker shook his head pouting.

“Of course we can! After all, the boy is in suffering after all the shit he experienced: it’s youuuuuur duty as a therapist to help him even if he denies it” he licked his lips piercing her with his acid stare. “Dr. Harlequin, would you join our couple therapy if I…mmmm…persua--ded Brucie to take it?”

Dr. Quinzel felt in the air the dangerous criminal coming to the fore; she could understand what he meant: calling and pestering Mr. Wayne was the lighter option.

“You’re not allowed to contact anyone while in here” she retorted.

Joker cackled and rubbed his nose.

“Oh! Dooooc! Who said anything about allow---ed ooooor being in here?”

The young psychiatrist fixed her eyes on him.

“If you try to escape and hurt again Mr. Wayne you’ll fail and probably hurt yourself – leave that man alone: he has suffered enough. It’s time to reform your life and the best start is by acknowledging your past.”

He crossed his arms and looked at her blankly: hurt himself… With Stark’s stupid tricks? Now he knew how Stark’s littl’ security bullshit worked and he knew also how to overcome it. Stark and all these idiots believed that they were smarter than him but you can’t be smarter than the chaos; you can’t be smarter than something that doesn’t follow any routine.

He smiled like a devil and his eyes shone as devilish.
“Is this the reason you don’t want to tell me about Crane’s escape? Because your plan is to escape yourself, find him and use his help to…” she arched her eyebrows “cure Mr. Wayne?”

Now Joker’s smile became broader, his teeth glistening.

“Dooooooo I look like a man of plans?” he shrugged. “John–ny boy sold me… I didn’t know anything.”

“Prove it then: talk to me about your childhood.”

Joker tilted his head to the side.

“Do you want my oooooorigins movie?” suddenly he erupted in a fit of giggles. “Huhuhuhuhuhuheheheheee! I’m afraid I soooooold the rights to Warner Bros! Ahahahahahahahahahaha!”

Harleen nodded.

“Have it your way, Mr. J” she stopped the recording. “We’ll have plenty of time to discuss things. I let you calm down and think about it.”

She stood up, dragged the chair to the corner and turned to leave.

Joker smirked: not so soon, dear.

“What dooooo you want to hear?” he cocked an eyebrow seeing her stopping. “That my dad–dy was a drunk and abused me? Or that I was an orphan raised up in a horrible, filthy orphanage? Or that I grew up in a perfect American family but I was born rotten and ran away? Which version suits better your diatribe?”

She turned to him with an interested stare.

“Which version is the truth?”

Joker pouted and blinked.

“Nooooone! I’m still working on it…”

Selina slipped graciously inside the drawing room from the window. Her friend was there, sat in Clark’s wheelchair, wearing his robe above his jeans and blouse. He was absorbed in his tablet and Selina smirked thinking that she would startle him.

Bruce who was perusing a ton of information in his Cosmos lifted his head not surprised at all.

“It’s supposed to be burglar proof…” he smiled. “Tony’s thing…”

She cocked an unimpressed eyebrow and walked closer.

“Not Catwoman proof…” she widened her eyes for emphasis “Big mistake!”

Bruce nodded.

“You know…we have a door and you’re always welcome and I already heard your car.”
“Uhu…” she agreed. “But sometimes it’s too tempting and I need to stretch my legs…” she squatted to hug Hero who ran to her.

She sat on the armrest of the couch relishing the sweet warmth from the fireplace; she looked at Bruce while Hero slithered to her shoulder.

“You seem pale and tired…That’s the reason Alfred locked you inside?”

Bruce chuckled.

“You went to the Tower?”

She shrugged.

“I’m your bodyguard and nurse and…” she frowned “you came up with anything new for me?”

Bruce shook his head in denial. “So I have to know where my boss is so I went to your office and your secretary told me that you stayed home” Selina blinked. “Is everything alright?”

Bruce huffed.

“I suppose you know about Crane’s escape” she nodded. “Jim lit the signal and Clark wore Batman’s suit and went; I stayed in the cave to get intelligence about what happened” he rolled his eyes seeing Selina’s stern look “and those damn drugs made me doze off there…Hero pushed the button of the lift sending it upstairs alerting Alfred” he opened his hands “and Alfred took me back to my bedroom. I woke up this morning running a little fever and Alfred raised the alarm…I worried him too much last night so I decided to give him a break today and stay at his watch.”

Selina detached Hero from her shoulder and kissed him in the nose.

“So our Hero is a true Hero” she laughed as the kitten licked her face. “And Alfred must be celebrating for having you here…”

“Not when he is glued on his tablet, Miss Kyle” Alfred came in carrying a silver tray with brunch for two. “Good morning, Miss Kyle; maybe you can reason with him to really have some rest?”

Selina widened her eyes.

“Is anyone capable of doing this?” she asked and Alfred sighed. “At least, he reasoned with himself and stayed inside.”

“Only to appease me and Leslie; he slept for God knows how many hours in the bloody cave and his body went in hypothermia” he shook his head. “If Hero hadn’t notified me…Of course, young Master Hero for his feat will get a big salmon fillet for lunch.”

He brought the thermometer in Bruce’s ear and looked at the indication.

“Thank Goodness, it’s almost normal.”

Bruce turned his eyes on him.

“I’m fine, Alfred. Don’t worry…”

But the kind man shook his head and sighed making Bruce’s heart break.

“Miss Kyle, would you make sure that your friend will eat and take all his medication? I have some chores to take care…”
“Of course, Alfred” she took a bite from her turkey sandwich.

Alfred couldn’t keep his cold demeanor towards Bruce; the youth returned to him from Hell only ten months ago and the dark, nightmarish past had still its frostbite mark on the British’s heart. He pressed his lips meeting at last his young master’s eyes.

“We shouldn’t have attended the party…” he said clearly blaming himself. “Perhaps your fever resulted from last night’s cold.”

“C’mon, Alfred” Bruce rubbed his forearm “it was so beautiful and I had a great time and the kids were happy” his eyes became like a puppy’s. “We couldn’t disappoint them, right? The fever was entirely my fault – I’m sorry: I didn’t intend on staying so much down there but the drugs made me sleep.”

Alfred shook his head.

“Please, do not apologize, sir; but for Goodness’ sake you must be more careful” Bruce pressed his lips and nodded. “Thankfully, Master Kent took great care of your hypothermia” Selina widened her eyes amused to Bruce. “Please, do have your rest, sir…”

Bruce held Alfred’s hand.

“I will…Thank you for everything, Alfred.”

“I did nothing, Master Bruce…If you need anything, ring for me.”

As the butler left the room Selina slithered closer to Bruce and kneeled by his side with a hungry expression in her eyes.

“Master Kent took great care of your hypothermia?” she laughed. “So finally he overcame his fear of shattering you? Is the fever the remnant of a really hot night and not of cold?” but suddenly worry shadowed her eyes “Did he cause you any pain?”

Bruce tilted his head and chewed his bottom lip: that kind of discussion made him uncomfortable, even with Selina.

“He wanted to…you know…” Selina chuckled with his shyness “but I couldn’t…”

She frowned.

“Why?”

“I saw a nightmare…and as every nightmare of mine it was very real; I saw that nobody stopped Ra’s that night from taking me away from Gotham and in one of his secret bases…”

Selina inhaled deeply because she could imagine what that awful man would have done to Bruce if he succeeded that night and her friend nodded.

“And also there was a kid…My son and Ra’s’ and he hated me but I had managed to make him…at least, I thought so…it felt like he came closer to me; that he liked me. But then when I tried to escape and take him with me, he stabbed me…” he rubbed unconsciously his stomach.

Selina brushed his forearm sad.

“You believe that the dream is an omen?”
He shook his head and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“What I saw was just a projection of my thoughts and the events of the previous day: being with so many kids in the Haven triggered the dream and Dick’s…” he hesitated “dislike made me see the boy so hostile – not that he wouldn’t be hostile, if exists and has grown up with League’s and Ra’s’ propaganda. But it’s obvious that the boy was a projection of Dick” he chuckled bitterly. “Imagine that even the boy’s name began with a D, I couldn’t hear the rest…”

Selina felt his sorrow and kissed his cheek.

“How you felt? I mean about the boy…”

Bruce shrugged one shoulder.

“There was an instant bond between us…like…I knew that boy years…I liked him and his harsh words pained more than any curse I’ve heard all these years” he recounted to Selina what D was telling to him. “And when he stabbed me I really wanted to die…”

“The super-hunk learnt about the dream?”

“I woke up in his arms, so yes, he wanted to learn and I told him.”

“About the possible child?”

“No, everything else but that; I told him that I made a friend who stabbed me in the end” he shook his head. “I don’t want to tell him or anyone else about the child unless I found him/her – I don’t want to cause them more torment…” he arched his eyebrows. “They have enough to bother them because of me…”

Selina nodded and Bruce took his own sandwich and bit.

“We were right” he said indifferent.

“About what?”

“About the Amazon Princess being in love with Superman.”

Selina rolled her eyes and snorted.

“In love…More that she begs for a super fuck…But how?”

Bruce was looking at his tablet where he had hacked the database of the prison where the League members from the Gobi desert base had been jailed.

“Clark admitted what I already knew…”

“And you didn’t tell even to me…” she added accusingly “which is?”

Bruce lolled his head.

“I didn’t tell you because I wasn’t sure and I didn’t want you to get aggressive” Selina prompted him to continue with her eyes. “The Amazon kissed him behind the wall in Metropolis’ subway station.”

Selina jumped on her feet and Hero jerked away surprised.

“The bitch! The fucking witch! People were dying around and she only thought of smooching with Supes! Ugh! I must get her! Wait, wait…” she cocked her eyebrows “she kissed him? He didn’t?
And the missing pictures you mentioned in his phone call were indeed missing, huh? And his job,
I’m sure! The sly motherfucker!”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“He admitted that at first he liked the kiss…”

Selina’s eyes bulged and her face became red.

“The scum!”

“But then he pushed her away and told her that it was wrong. And, yes, he deleted those pictures because he wanted to tell me himself.”

Selina clenched her waist and huffed and puffed.

“He is taking advantage of you! He is playing you like a fool! He didn’t tell you!”

Bruce rubbed his temple.

“He talked to her about our relationship; he wanted to clear everything before confessing what happened.”

Selina after her outburst felt regret; the only thing she managed with her reaction was to sadden more Bruce: her sweetie didn’t know anything about these things. She squatted beside him and hugged him, Hero approaching them.

“You believe him?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I don’t know what to believe, Sel…I…I…Clark’s eyes seem so honest, so clear” he didn’t want to tell her about what Clark almost did to him last night. “I know that he loves me – at least, this is what he believes as well; he doesn’t want to hurt me. But I feel that something is wrong…” he met Selina’s caring eyes “and he promised that he’ll go to his Fortress and run some tests to see if anything is off…and the fact that he admitted all these – even with delay – and promised, makes me believe in him.”

Selina touched her head to his shoulder.

“You always believed in him…” she mumbled. “You love him so much that I’m scared, sweetie; I’m afraid that he will hurt you…”

Bruce petted her hair.

“Don’t worry about me, Sel” he chuckled. “An entire building fell on me and I survived…And Clark’s heart is of gold and he cares about me…” at least he hoped so. “He wouldn’t have spoken to her about our relationship if he wanted to be with her instead.”

“So you gave him another chance…”

Bruce sighed.

“She kissed him; he stopped her.”
Selina couldn’t hold back her retort.

“If that’s true because he deleted those pictures…”

Bruce ran his fingers through his hair.

“Indeed. But time will show…It’s up to him: I love him, I…I need him but if he continues like this” he inhaled and shook his head. “I’ll finish it.”

Selina looked at his eyes and was happy for the determined shine in there but also she was really worried for the consequences if Clark betrayed his trust and love. Because Bruce had made many leaps of faith with Superman and she knew that the fall for him would be devastating. So she really hoped that Superman was honest; from the beginning…

“He should be running behind you jealous and not you being worrying about Clark loving someone else…”

Bruce frowned.

“What do you mean? I don't worry: if that is what he wants...he is free.”

She pouted and twitched her eyebrows playfully.

“Okay, okay... I just mean that you’re so beautiful that jaws drop when you appear and drools have to be moped…so why not reminding that to Supes? He seems to believe that you’re his possession and has you in his safe for whenever he fancies playing again with you. Maybe you should make him feel threatened…” she pursed her lips. “If he plays with the Amazon bitch you can play to…”

Bruce blushed and pressed his lips.

“You know that being…desired disgusts me…the only one that made me feel comfortable with his desire was Clark…I…I can’t flirt, Sel…I can’t play that game…I never wanted to be in such situations…” he waved his hand. “Love and everything…it’s only for Clark that I engaged in that and…it already began to…”

“To?”

He smiled to her patting her hand.

“To not stir the emotions it used to.”

She cupped his face and kissed him.

“Believe me, relationships have their lapses but then things become better.”

“Or worse…” Bruce chuckled and kissed her cheek.

She laughed and handed him his glass of juice and his pills.

Bruce huffed.

“I wanted my medication decreased and now I have my antibiotics increased; Leslie took blood sample for analysis and I have an appointment in the clinic for tests.”

“That was prearranged” she shook her index finger sipping her own juice. “As a multiple injury patient you need to be tested at least twice a month…”
Bruce dropped his head and looked at her amused.

“You parrot Leslie now?”

Selina chuckled and downed the rest of her juice.

“I’m adaptable and inquiring, baby.”

Suddenly, hurried footsteps sounded from the corridor and Selina tensed. Bruce frowned.

The door opened and a flushed, fuming Tony stormed inside.

“They’re gonna release Luthor!”
“That’s preposterous!” Selina spat with her narrowed eyes flashing.

Tony’s eyebrows twitched upwards.

“That’s an understatement, Sel” he shook his head.

Bruce was calmer than both of them so much so that Hero was pacing back and forth in his lap purring.

“How do you know, Tony?”

His friend walked closer and took one of the carrot slices that accompanied Bruce and Selina’s brunch.

“I’m S.H.I.E.L.D.’s director, little guy; I have connections” he lolled his head to the side, cocking his eyebrows smugly and chewed the carrot slice. “Not bad…” he murmured. “Well, actually” his voice became conspiratorial “it’s Peps’ connections…” he shook his head rolling his eyes. “Those guys in Justice Department don’t think so high of me…yet…” he huffed.

Selina chuckled and lifted an eyebrow.

“It must be your public orgy at the Museum…”

He crooked a smile and widened his eyes.

“No, actually that increased the number of tourists” he jerked his arms in the air “I was the exhibit with the most visitors, kitty!”

Bruce brushed Hero and smiled but his eyes were serious.

“So what Peps learnt?”

Tony scratched his goatee.

“Yeah, that…” he sighed returning to what had upset him. “One of her pals there informed her that there’s a decree for Luthor’s immediate release; the guy knew my personal interest on the case and called her as soon as the order came to their office.”

Bruce frowned and put Hero on the sofa to search at the news’ outlets for any coverage.

“It’s not known yet…”

Tony sat at the armchair next to him.

“No; it’ll take some time – hours – for the decree to be put into effect.”

Bruce nodded and rubbed his mouth with his finger.

“Based on what? I mean they need a legalistic rationale and these things must pass from the judge.”

Selina sat on the arm of the couch and crossed her arms watching Tony shaking his head infuriated.

“That’s the most outrageous! His attorney had made an appeal about mental instability and horseshit but the psychiatrist’s evaluation didn’t persuade many so it was pending for more evidence – which would have taken months.”

“Then?” Selina asked.

Tony pursed his lips and then leveled them.

“This is an immediate order coming from the highest levels” he twisted his lips angrily. “Peps’ connection didn’t know exactly from whom but his department is in a haste because they just can’t ignore that order.”

“We knew that Luthor had very esteemed and powerful friends but till now nobody managed to achieve his release…” Bruce brushed some keys on his tablet’s screen to enter the Department of Justice’s secret database. “I wonder what has changed and who so highly situated would risk his status and reputation to save Luthor’s ass…”

Tony pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I can always burst in Blackgate and beat the shit out of Luthor till he spits the name…” he shook his head. “I can’t believe that our system is so corrupt that frees so provocatively a scum like Luthor that was found guilty by court and jury!”

Bruce shook his head.

“I’m sure Luthor would get his newspapers and TV stations to find and ballyhoo very loud and reasonable reasons to justify his release…” his voice was dry.

Tony punched the couch.

“I have also friends in the higher levels of hierarchy and my own newspapers and stations to make them regret that!” his black eyes flashed and his voice was a growl. “I’ll expose their intention and the outcry will make whoever did that to take it back!”

Bruce stared him resolute.

“You will expose Peps’ informer…”

Tony slapped his thighs and shook his head.

“They won’t know my source and I doubt they’ll dare to touch him.”

Selina cocked an eyebrow.

“If they are so corrupt to shamelessly order the release of a convicted bastard without solid reasons I don’t think that they’ll hesitate to punish the guy who ruined their surprise.”

Tony huffed.

“Then sit and watch as Luthor gets away?” he growled. “That’s fucking disgrace!”

Bruce moved his wheelchair to face his friend and Tony’s eyes softened: seeing Bruce moving relying on the chair’s help always made his chest hurt. The younger man patted his shoulder.

“We’ll wait the official statement of Gotham’s DA office; then you can use your media army to face Luthor’s paid reporters.”
Tony cupped Bruce’s hand on his shoulder and pressed his lips.

“I expected this to infuriate you more than anyone else…”

Bruce’s other hand unconsciously touched the spot in his cheek where Luthor’s ring had left the ‘L’ that was engraved on the gemstone when the tycoon from Metropolis had slapped him in the face. During the month of his treatment in the Fortress Jor El had erased the mark but Bruce remembered it too well; as the violent kiss Luthor had forced upon him.

“It does because Luthor has been cooperating with Falcone, Ra’s Al Ghul, Talia and many other known and unknown criminals. Yet this will be our chance to take the wraps off the man who set the wheels in motion to free Luthor.”

Tony nodded pursing his lips.

“So you think that this isn’t Luthor playing his biggest ace in the hole?”

“He is yet I believe that the order wasn’t made from someone who was pressed by Luthor” his eyes were introspective and Tony smiled.

“Why not?” Selina said hugging Hero. “Luthor must be desperate to get out; especially, since all these months he failed to do so and LexLabs are in your control.”

Bruce rubbed his chin and turned his wheelchair to face both of his friends.

“Exactly because I took his labs and the 20% of his corporation four months ago he’d have exploited sooner this powerful agent who can order his release without giving any reason; he certainly would want to be outside in order to make damage control and fight back: Falcone was telling that Luthor isn’t a man who waits when he has a great weapon at his disposal.”

Tony stood up.

“Maybe he wanted to leave this till the very end when everything else failed; usually, we keep our strongest weapon for when everything other didn’t work out. I’m sure he didn’t want to reveal how high his connections reach.”

Bruce shook his head.

“I doubt that a person with such status and power in society would risk to be exposed for bailing out a convicted criminal; especially, in such outrageous way.”

Tony took another carrot slice.

“Those are quite good – I didn’t believe they would…” he commented on the carrots. “Anyway, perhaps our man knows that nobody will discover his identity: even in the Department nobody can say who ordered that; so either they are trying to cover that big guy or…”

“They really don’t know” Bruce said with a wicked smile.

Selina jolted to her feet too holding the kitten.

“How is this possible, Bruce?” she asked dumbfounded.

Tony stared at his friend interested.

“Clark told me that in Metropolis some really nasty criminals were released from jail in similar ways, without anyone be able to say who ordered it. Of course, they weren’t such limelight names like Luthor but…”

Selina frowned.

“You mean the Intergang?”

Bruce smiled.

“How you know about that?” Tony asked her “This is supposedly classified as highly confidential.”

Selina rolled her eyes and locked them with Bruce.

“A cat slips in places where no man can and there she hears too many things that even CIA would kill to learn.”

Bruce lolled his head towards Tony with a grin.

“She found me first when the League took me – thanks to her connections…”

“Touché!” Tony admitted.

The young woman let Hero on the thick carpet and crossed her arms.

“Even in Gotham there are rumors about a big new gang in Metropolis that is recruiting the worst scum regardless if they are in prison or out – of course, nobody knows much but they say that many of Gotham’s muscle that was working for the local mob, after the ‘big three massacre’ moved to Metropolis in hopes of getting hired by the new, big player.”

That coincided with Tony’s and S.H.I.E.L.D.’s intelligence. He turned to Bruce.

“So you believe that Luthor was working with the Intergang and now the ghost big boss pulled some favors to free his partner?”

“I can’t be sure of that” Bruce answered his glance fixed on Hero who was stretching but otherwise abstracted in his thoughts. “I just say that the fact remains that Luthor in his despair has changed two attorneys the last one using the trick of the mental instability to achieve a release with restraining conditions. If the man that ordered his release was in his list of friends this would be the perfect opportunity to exact his power pressing discreetly so that Luthor’s appeal becomes accepted but he/she didn’t. Instead while his appeal is suspended, this decree comes from nowhere, totally irrelevant to the instability pledge, and demands his release. And that reminds me of Clark’s sayings about Intergang. And something else…”

“The burglaries at the LexLabs…” Tony offered.

Bruce nodded.

“That wave of raids began from Luthor’s labs approximately when Luthor was imprisoned and I acquired their control – of course, later other labs were raided too but it seemed like someone was trying to make us believe that LexLabs weren’t actually the target. So maybe someone is looking desperately for something in the LexLabs but the raids hadn’t any result since we changed the security and already have secured the most peculiar items of unknown use. So maybe Luthor truly played his last ace by having info that his partner wants too much and the only way to get it is by securing Luthor’s freedom.”
Tony loved hearing his buddy manifesting his detective thinking and from Selina’s smile she loved that too.

“So it was Luthor’s powerful collaborator that recruited the guy with the authority to order Luthor’s release” the older man added.

“And manage making everyone ‘forget’ who gave the order like what happened with the thugs who raided the labs or the shooters at Metropolis’ subway assault.”

Tony paced.

“If you connect Luthor’s partner with the assault and the raids then we speak about Morgan Edge because he was the one who ordered the hit. And he is dead. So our boy has the luck to get the order for his release before his savior was killed.”

Bruce tapped his fingers on the armrests.

“I’m not convinced that Edge is Intergang’s ghost big boss or that he indeed ordered the blind hit in the subway” he pressed his lips in a tight line and shook his head “it just doesn’t fit the man…”

Tony lollled his head.

“Maybe he got mad.”

Bruce lifted his eyebrows.

“We won’t find out thanks to the Amazon Princess…but still I’m not convinced. His henchmen’s interrogations are ravings or people say that they don’t know how they got there.”

“As with the guys that made the burglaries to the labs” Selina offered and took the carrot slice Tony gave her like a flower.

“Exactly!” Bruce beamed. “So even if Luthor gets released we’d have the opportunity to watch his movements and get a glimpse of the mysterious man behind all these.”

Tony raised his eyebrows.

“Even if gets released? You believe that Gotham’s DA will manage to block this; especially, since he isn’t Harvey Dent?”

Bruce brushed the Black Butterfly on his chest under his clothes.

“We’ll see…” he mumbled. “Either way we’ll get what we want.”

Tony snorted.

“What we want?” he cocked his eyebrows.

Selina watched Bruce.

“Either he stays in prison where he belongs or is free to lead us to the bigger fish and thus get once again in prison along with that dangerous new menace. So there’s no reason anger takes the better of us” he grinned to Tony.

The billionaire from Malibu made an impressive dive into the couch and set his hands behind his neck.
“It’ll be too bad for your plan if I break his mug?”

Selina sat at the armchair next to Bruce.

“I don’t like admitting it but I must agree with the playboy…”

Tony cocked an eyebrow smugly and tapped an imaginary hat.

“Thank you, my beautiful lady!”

Bruce looked at both of them affectionate and smiled.

“Actually, I think that this would serve perfectly our plan to look outraged and defeated…But you’ll be in trouble…”

Tony waved indifferently.

“Next time Harvey and Jimmy was looking at the wall and didn’t ‘saw’ my magnificent punch to Luthor’s ugly face” he pouted. “I’ll do it in a similar way and I’ll combine once again work and fun.”

Bruce glanced at the screen of his tablet that was covered with data from the Mongolian prison where the Leaguers where transferred after their base in Gobi desert was conquered. He didn’t find the information he wanted and actually only Tony could provide him with any possible additional intelligence.

“Hm…Tony…”

The Californian squinted.

“I don’t like that look…Damn! It’s exactly the same as I remember it from our childhood…” his cheerful voice dropped a bit from emotion and Selina smiled. “Don’t keep it in, littl’ guy!”

“When you, Clark and Hulk attacked the League’s base in Gobi desert in Mongolia did you find any children warriors?”

Tony’s face became dead serious because his friend’s face became a shade paler, a sign that this was important for him. He racked his memory to give an honest answer.

“Is what you look for at your tablet?”

Bruce could have hidden it but he doubted if Tony’s mind would take that dark detour suspecting that Al Ghul created a child with his DNA.

“Yes.”

“No, there was no kid warrior or any kid; everyone was adult” Tony sensed that there was something crucial there for his friend. “May I ask why you ask?”

Selina petted Hero’s belly to not show anything to Tony.

“I had some suspicions about the League training small kids to become brainwashed warriors…”

Tony crossed his arms.

“No, this is what ISIS does. In none of the bases we raided were any children” he lolled his head on the side. “It seems that you were the only kid that Al Ghul exploited” he said grimly.
Bruce nodded.

“I’m glad…” if they did find a child, his uncertainty would have ended; but at the same time this didn’t mean that the child didn’t exist. Yet he could feel a temporary relief from the fact that no kid suffered what he did.

Tony stood and squatted before him.

“Are you alright, buddy? When I left in the morning Alfred told me that you were still sleeping and I was happy but now I see you’re pale.”

“It’s nothing serious, really… I just slept on the cave and I got some hypothermia.”

Tony yanked his head and sighed exasperated.

“I heard on the news about Crane’s escape and Batman’s appearance last night and I was reassured that since Kent did the job you were alright! Damn it, Bruce! Getting hypothermia in your condition is dangerous! And why nobody notified me?” he gritted his teeth really pissed.

Selina knew she had to intervene.

“Calm down, handsome; they didn’t inform me either. Alfred and Leslie had as their first priority taking care of his fever and when everything went smoothly they thought that there was no need to raise the alarm. As for our buddy not speaking about his sufferings…well, you know him…”

Bruce looked at her disapproving and Selina winked and shrugged innocently; then he locked eyes with Tony’s.

“Because it wasn’t something serious to worry you; we’d have told you in the lunch.”

Tony shook his head.

“As you told me you were alive only after eighteen years?” he spat.

The younger man put his hands on Tony’s shoulder.

“You’re doing so many things for me that I feel bad to distress you every time I have a little fever… I’m fine” he chuckled. “If I was very sick I’d have called you – you know how I love to throw up in your presence…”

Tony closed his eyes and dropped his head; he just couldn’t fight the broad smile off his face. He caressed Bruce’s hair.

“I must return to the Tower: we work on your spine pieces with Lucius” he winked “and I want them to be finished soon to see you walking again” he cupped Bruce’s cheek. “You’ll call me if you need anything, huh?”

Bruce leaned to his ear.

“You know, this would be an insult to Alfred” he whispered and Selina chuckled. “You’ll come for lunch, you and Peps, right?” he asked with a shine in his eyes.

“You betcha!”

When Tony left the room Bruce took his Cosmos and called Clark.
The reporter had on his screen the Gotham Gazette site hoping to read a positive development on Crane’s escape – that is to say, his arrest. But nothing… so he just minimized the window to continue his article when his smart phone rang with Bruce’s ringtone.

He teetered his way out of the office to get some privacy more so since Lois’ curious eyes were on him.

“I was ready to call you, Bruce” he said in his true, no stuttering voice. “How are you? When I left you were a bit warm but it didn’t seem serious…” uttering this, made Clark realize how indifferently he had acted: a bit warm? That could evoke to something serious and he not only didn’t stay with Bruce and left but also didn’t even inform Alfred.

Bruce almost heard Clark biting his bottom lip.

“Alfred called Leslie and she increased my antibiotics; she took some blood sample just in case; but all in all, it was indeed nothing serious: the fever already fell” he answered in a breath.

Clark yanked his head closing his eyes relieved. Yet his apathy that morning was another sign that Bruce was right and he had to be checked.

“I’ll do what we discussed last night as soon as I finish here…”

Bruce nodded.

“Well, I didn’t call for that…I trust you after all…” however last night came back to him to prickle. The moment he realized that Clark wouldn’t stop…That instance his chest clenched from that dread of being violated but it was worse than all the other times together because there was also the hurt of betrayal: having the man you believed that loved you doing the exact same thing that your abusers did.

Clark couldn’t discern any irony on Bruce’s voice even a talkative inhale of air since Bruce could perfectly control his vitals into not showing his emotions. Yet his eidetic memory made him see again the younger man’s face when he was ready to penetrate him against his will: Bruce’s face was cold as his entire body, stony in anger however in the flashes of his eyes behind the veil of anger and determination, there was the hint of little Bruce’s terror every time his abusers raped him and…the bitterness of being betrayed by the man he trusted.

“Thank you…” Clark whispered, the coldness of his voice targeting himself but thinking that Bruce would take it differently he smiled. “So you wanted to hear my voice, babe?”

Bruce cleared his throat and Selina stared at him curious.

“Uhu…But there’s something else Tony learnt: someone really powerful – and really elusive – ordered Luthor’s release.”

Clark’s teeth clenched.

“No! That is impossible! There’s not even a rumor around…”

“Peps has some connections in the Department of Justice and they informed her about that – the decree will arrive at Gotham’s DA at any moment.”

“Damn! We’ll expose them at the Planet; we’ll vilify them.”
Bruce shook his head.

“No, you do nothing. I just wanted you to be ready when the news comes out – it’s better if we don’t reveal our knowledge before the DA announces it officially. We don’t want them to know that we have informers; and this way we would be able to watch Luthor’s movements and find his associates.”

“I still I hate it that this man will be free after everything he did to you!”

“I know – he is convicted by a court of law after all. But…we must use that to our own interest.”

Clark ruffled his hair but nodded.

“Okay…I get that you’re at the Manor; nice! You need rest after all…Well, I’ll drop by after my visit there and we’ll talk this better.”

“Be careful, okay?”

“I’ll be…for you…”

Jim Gordon was reading Montoya’s report on Ted Bradley’s testimony; the Arkham Asylum’s orderly was transferred at Gotham’s General Hospital after being sprayed with Crane’s toxin and for the entire night it was impossible to be inquired by the police. His doctors were adamant about that and his condition was definitely unfit for any coherent answers.

Fortunately, Mr. Fox of the Wayne Enterprises had the antidote since his employee’s encounter with the insane psychiatrist had made the brilliant scientist able to decompose the toxin to its ingredients and create an antidote. So Bradley was in position to testify early in the morning.

Not much actually… The man was still shaken from what he experienced under the toxin’s effect and the shock of being attacked by a patient ‘as obedient and mild as Crane’. He told Montoya that his colleague who was appointed with Crane fell ill and he was the only available to fill his position; last night he had the night shift so when Crane began whining about stomach cramps he took him to the infirmary. The Asylum’s Head, Dr. Quinzel, had made it clear that the inmates must be well cared and after Crane’s orderly fell ill Ted thought that maybe Crane was contaminated with the same virus.

All of a sudden, Crane turned and sprayed him with something that made him see horrible scenes and collapse in a fit of spasms; he had lost completely any contact with his environment and he thought that he was again in the shipwreck, ten years ago…He almost drowned then and he watched many people die that way or burn alive as the ship exploded…

Montoya had asked him if he saw the direction Crane took but he said that the only thing he saw was flames eating the ship’s walls and the dark, cold ocean. Which was confirmed by the doctors who examined and watched him all night: the man was in delirium.

When he was asked if Crane had acted strangely the last days, the man shrugged saying that his colleague, Martin Sanders, was the orderly responsible for the fallen doctor. Ted only knew that Crane was speaking with Joker because he was seeing them.

And of course he had no idea how the toxin was found in Crane’s hands.

In the meantime, the GCPD was looking for Crane scouring the city though it was a difficult mission since the man wasn’t a common criminal to have his hideouts in the Narrows or the Decks. And he was an introvert man without friends and places where he frequented; of course, they already put his apartment in discreet surveillance in case he ended up there but Jim doubted that: from the times he dealt with the man, Crane definitely seemed a clever man to do that mistake.

Maybe he had managed to leave Gotham or he was going to attempt that so from the first moment he order to put checkpoints in every exit of the city and alarmed neighboring cities and states. But that had no result yet…

“Which means that either he has already reached another city under our noses” Jim said in his calm but firm voice to the officers gathered in his office at MCU. “Or that he is going to attempt that later when he believes that our vigilance will be lower; or he has the intention to remain in Gotham believing that the hideout where he is right now is safe.”

On the wall behind his desk a projector played the footage from Crane’s transfer to the infirmary and his attack to the orderly; however after the first feet the former doctor ran after the orderly was out he was lost from any camera.

Bullock scratched his neck.

“He definitely knew that loony bin better than anyon’… So he knew how to avoid the security cameras.”

Another younger officer intervened.

“We searched the place thoroughly; no trace of him or the way he left the building.”

“Maybe ol’ Jeremiah’s ghost took him” Bullock snorted and cocked an eyebrow. “I’m sure they’ll have loads to share…”

Some officers chuckled but Montoya twisted her lips with disapproval to her partner while Jim was perusing the info Asylum’s security had sent him about Crane’s visitors. Which was none because Crane had no visitors; the doctor had no family after all and no relative or friend ever made an appearance.

“Will find him, Commissionaire” Montoya said to her chief. “Every cop has his picture and teams are searching the entire city; it’s a matter of time before we return him to where he belongs.”

Bullock made a step forward.

“And though a sonovabitch he isn’t as dangerous as Joker…”

Jim left the report he read, this time about Crane’s orderly Martin Sanders, and fixed his eyes on his trustee.

“Tell that to Wayne…” he said dryly and Bullock nodded. “The man is insane and has a talent in creating dangerous toxins: he tortured his patients when he was the Head of Arkham Asylum; he provided highly hallucinatory drugs to Falcone which were sold to people, collaborated with the League of Shadows to torture Wayne. So we can’t afford to wait he strikes again.”

“Of course, Jim” Bullock answered.

Montoya began recounting to her colleagues what Crane’s psychiatrist had said to her when the phone rang; Jim lifted his index finger to make her stop and answered the call.
It was Robert Hatchet, Gotham’s temporary DA after Dent’s resignation. Jim’s eyes darkened as his frown deepened.

“Thank you, Mr. Hatchet.”

He hung up and dismissed his officers with a gesture.

“Be careful: this guy is dangerous – do not underestimate him. Keep me constantly updated” his officers nodded and departed. “Montoya, Bullock stay” they halted interested. “Close that door!” he said arching his eyebrows.

His trustees approached intrigued.

“What’s going on, Jim?” Bullock asked chewing his toothpick.

Jim took off his glasses and rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“DA is going to release Luthor…”

“No way! He is bought too?” Montoya exclaimed.

Jim shook his head.

“All this time he does everything to keep Luthor behind bars.”

Bullock frowned.

“Then?”

Jim pouted.

“He received a decree from the Department of Justice that can’t be ignored.”

“From whom?” Montoya said clenching her waist.

“Nobody knows but it’s too high in the hierarchy and worse: the law makes it obligatory to abide by the order.”

Bullock rolled his eyes.

“Don’t tell me the President risked a scandal and his ass for that scum Luthor?” he fumed.

Jim put again his glasses.

“I don’t know if it’s the President but definitely someone very high…” he mumbled.

“Even the President isn’t above the justice!” Montoya protested.

Jim placed his hand on her shoulder.

“I didn’t say it was the President but the Department makes it clear that the order is covered by the law – even if that law is unfair… The DA is giving a Press Conference to announce it.”

The veteran officer stood before his window and watched Gotham underneath living her daily routine.

“What are you thinking, Jim?” Bullock asked.
“That the tide changed again” he sighed. “After the deaths of the crime lords and the League’s arrests our city found her peace for some time but now it feels like something is coming. Again.”

“We’ll stop it, Commissionaire, as we always do” Montoya said determined and Bullock nodded frowning angrily. “And we have Batman.”

Jim smiled to both his trustees and nodded.

Luthor’s grey eyes glimmered and his smirk was icy. His attorney, Larson raised an eyebrow: as a matter of fact, he didn’t except a different reaction from this man – he was sure that his client was already plotting.

“Right now Gotham’s DA office announced that they will hold a Press Conference; obviously to announce your release.”

Luthor punched the metallic table clenching his jaw.

“How?” he asked then looking at his attorney suspiciously. “Last time you told me that your appeal for release due to insanity was put in pending; what changed?”

Larson shook his head pursing his lips indifferently.

“I have no idea: I just got a call from the Department of Justice informing me that your release order is ready. They didn’t say more but I think it’s the result that matters.”

Luthor gave a grin and his teeth shone. He had already an idea about who had managed that small miracle when his esteemed friends had failed till now: so that nightmare wasn’t a nightmare after all…He had really hit the jackpot with Mannheim this time.

“How much it’ll take to be out of here and back to Metropolis?”

“I don’t think that it will take much time; usually, it needs a month or two, but since that decree commands your immediate release and there’s no way to block it, I’d say no more than a week.”

Luthor nodded.

“Mercy Graves along?”

Larson shook his head.

“Certainly. But perhaps for her it’ll take a bit more.”

Luthor pierced him with his icy stare.

“Take care that she gets out the same day as me.”

“I’ll do my best, Mr. Luthor.”

Luthor smirked and inhaled deeply.

“I want to be at the head of the board at the annual meeting to face that brat” his smirk became meaner. “If he dares to leave his Manor now that he is pegged in a wheelchair. I bet the bastard won’t have the courage to look me in the eyes once he knows I’m free again.”
Well, Larson was a lawyer, he was paid by Luthor who was his client but he didn’t like hearing horseshit. As everyone, he had learnt the story of Bruce Wayne and being the last period between Metropolis and Gotham he watched some things. So he raised an eyebrow at Luthor’s comments because Wayne wasn’t a coward in any way and even when he was aboard healing his wounds, he took great care of his newly acquainted LexCorp shares and LexLabs.

“I’m sorry to disappoint you, Mr. Luthor, but Mr. Wayne from the day he returned in Gotham goes daily to his Enterprises and Mr. Fredericks had handed him every responsibility” actually, he wasn’t sorry at all, especially when his boss’ bottom lip trembled slightly – a hint of a great anger that Luthor managed to keep in control. “As for the later, it remains to be seen…”

He looked at his Rolex.

“The Press Conference begins in half an hour and I must be there. I’ll inform you for any news.”

Bruce was watching on the 60” plasma TV in the living room the DA approaching the auditorium under a loud murmur of questions; Luthor’s media had already spread rumors about ‘justice finally served’ and Luthor being vindicated in a triumphant way. So when the DA’s office announced the Press Conference Gotham’s media began raving about it and Tony’s news sites and stations blasted the possibility of Luthor’s release citing every major crime the tycoon was found guilty of: the video of Luthor harassing Bruce at Tony’s party almost a year ago and Bruce kneeling him in the groin was a great stroke. Now that Luthor’s media leaked the news there was no risk of exposing their informer.

Bruce’s eyes were completely still, focused on the screen, Alfred on his side and Hero lying on his lap rubbing his head on Bruce’s arm.

He knew that Luthor’s release would serve their purposes so Luthor’s joy would be futile yet his stomach was clenched reading the caption on the bottom of the screen:

“Lex Luthor exonerated and released?”

Bruce had worked for his arrest and conviction; he had gathered the evidence; he had endured his attack. And the worst: he knew the man’s crimes and that man had being convicted by the court only to be discharged and free to do the same and continue his collaboration with the menace that managed to overcome the law. Because this wasn’t an acquittal as Luthor’s media presented it but a blatant and provocative show off of power and corruption; well, show off indeed but without the person behind it really showing off.

Of course, he/she (Talia came to his mind as a recent example) was too clever to reveal his identity and being targeted from law enforcers – because still there were honest and dignified people who wouldn’t like that: he never had forgotten that even in Falcone’s cage…

Alfred was watching too and from his slight frown it was obvious that he was really pissed: Luthor, although unknowingly was serving Bruce’s plan, did plot to surrender his young master to the League of Shadows.

Watching Robert Hatchet settling with ease in front of the auditorium, Bruce got the impression that the man was rather content and not grim as Bruce expected him. Harvey had vouched for this man but what if he was wrong?

“As several of news outlets had being hinting the last hours, the Department of Justice forwarded to Gotham’s DA office a decree for Lex Luthor’s immediate release…”

The uproar that till now was boiling under the surface exploded in a confusing fuss of angry exclamations and questions.

Robert raised his hand for them to silence.

“The order demands from Gotham’s judicial system to accept Luthor’s release without further examination” he inhaled deeply. “And we are obliged by the federal legislation to abide by that decree…”

Bruce’s heart would have been drumming in his chest if he wasn’t trained to control his heartbeat; on the other hand, he was sure that there was a ‘but’ coming.

“But in our great country’s 1788 Ratification of the Constitution, 1791’s Seventh Amendment there’s a paragraph that gives to Gotham’s highest judge the right to not accept as orders the decrees which lack solid reasoning in their claims and intervene to decisions already taken by the courts of law; therefore this decree has the power of an appeal” the temporary DA heaved a really old looking parchment with the infamous seal and signs.

Bruce pressed his lips in a tight but content smile while the crowd in the Press Room cheered or protested since there were some reporters from Luthor’s media.

“Thus Gotham’s judicial system will re-assess Mr. Luthor’s case; but until the Gotham’s court new verdict, Mr. Luthor will remain in Blackgate Prison” he clenched the papers he was holding. “The said paragraph and our official announcement will be distributed to all of you. Thank you.”

“This was a very satisfying development, right, sir?” Alfred said and Bruce turned to him smiling.

“Right! And I know who I must thank for this.”

Alfred lifted an eyebrow interested and watched his young master taking his tablet and making a call.

“Harvey, it’s Bruce Wayne.”

Harvey on the other end laughed.

“How are you, Bruce?”

“I called to thank you for stopping Luthor getting loose.”

“Damn! How you figured this out?”

Bruce chuckled.

“Well…I thought that only a Gothamite would have known such a tiny and ancient detail to the law.”

“When Robert called to inform me about the decree, I remembered my old university professor – an avid law researcher. He told me about that forgotten but never repealed paragraph. Hm…Bruce? It was actually your great-grand father, Solomon Wayne, whom we have to thank: he was such a great man of the justice and such fervent fighter for the country’s independence that the law makers made that exception to honor him and his city.”

Bruce’s eyes were lost back to his dream about Nemesis and her fleeing priest. Her words echoed”
“...and your descendants shall bring justice...”

Harvey’s voice shook him out of his thoughts.

“Of course, this will be only a delay” Harvey added. “We know that someone really powerful wants Luthor free and it’s a matter of time before he presses more people into freeing Luthor.”

“Sure but at least Luthor will stay in prison and out of criminal action a bit more...and...his expression when he learns the news will be priceless...”

Harvey snorted.

“I wish I could see his face...”

“Thank you, Harvey; more so because you confirmed my belief that you never stopped caring about Gotham.”

A pause.

“Gotham knows how to keep bound everyone that is associated with her” he answered thoughtful.

“So...if the people of Gotham vote that they want you back are you willing to return?”

Harvey was deep in thought.

“I don’t know, Bruce; I have to think my father and Rachel...Joker targeted them...”

“I understand...and I am with you whatever you decide – I want you to know that.”

“Thank you, Bruce...” he stared absent minded at the coin he kept rubbing in his palm.

Darkseid was pacing the vast hall under his Mansion; the fires in the vessels framing the tiled corridor to his throne flared up till the high ceiling every time the new God passed them, fueled by his wrath.

His enormous fists were clenched and his minions were cowering around; Granny Goodness closer but still with her head bowed. Real flames were emitted from his nostrils.

Bagdana suddenly emerged in the middle of the corridor just two inches away from the gigantic God who had his real form. Darkseid looked at him furious but the ancient demon didn’t seem shaken but rather amused. He made a bow that Darkseid knew that was sarcastic.

The demon’s presence made him roar and some pillars cracked making the entire building shake and dust twirl around.

“You’re amused!” Darkseid accused his partner.

Bagdana pouted his big lips.

“Why not?”

Darkseid gritted his teeth and stormed at him; Bagdana not even flinching and at the last moment Darkseid changed his course to crush in his fist the necks of three Parademons whose bodies he threw carelessly at the far corner. The new God lolled his head towards Bagdana who smirked.
“I thought you could kill them with only one breath?” the demon asked mock innocently.

“I enjoy the physical contact more” Darkseid growled.

Bagdana shook his head.

“Fair enough…”

Darkseid calmer after taking his anger on some of his minions crossed in a few strides the hall and sat at his throne.

“I’m sure you already know the reason of my wrath.”

Bagdana stretched his perfectly sculpted granite colored body.

“Though earth matters aren’t my main interest sometimes I keep myself updated – especially, when my ally has open businesses.”

Darkseid’s stare was on the floor but his eyes sparkled.

“Master!” he commented.

Bagdana raised an eyebrow as if he didn’t catch that.

“It’s Master not ally!” Darkseid elaborated grimly. “Do not forget that!”

The demon shrugged.

“As you prefer it…You must want Luthor free way too bad.”

Darkseid clenched his fist and turned his eyes up to pierce the demon.

“Of course! Otherwise I wouldn’t have bothered! He owes me something; once I get it he’ll have the same fate as every other human.”

“You trusted that double-crossing worm?” Bagdana remembered the way Luthor had touched Bruce and sent him to that cursed woman. “You should have known better and crushed him with your foot…”

Darkseid’s bottom lip cracked his face with a smirk.

“I will; his release would have made that sooner but even my power was thwarted!” the last word was roared and Darkseid’s fist’s reflection demolished a pillar that Granny hurried to rebuilt with a movement of her hands.

Bagdana’s grin was jeering and somewhat proud.

“Gotham is a tough place even for almighty new Gods!”

Darkseid stood furiously.

“Gotham and Metropolis will be the first cities I’ll smash!”

The demon’s stare now was so intense that flames danced in his orbs; he locked eyes with his ‘master’.

“Don’t forget what I was promised…” he hissed like a snake.
The new God blew in front of him and a round crystal emerged out of thin air with Bruce’s image in the center; the youth sat in his wheelchair between a bunch of happy kids. Bagdana’s eyes focused there unable to resist Bruce’s beauty and charm that emanated even through Darkseid’s mirror.

“He is a lame sample even for human standards – a miserable weak cripple…”

Bagdana smirked with the new God’s stupidity and ignorance.

“Everyone has his eccentricities” he chirped “and demons even more.”

“Luthor will be free whatever Gotham or anyone else does; my plan will be executed perfectly: those pests won’t stop Darkseid.”

The demon couldn’t care less about Darkseid or human beings as a whole; the only thing that mattered was getting Bruce and extirpating Superman.

Alfred opened the door for Tony and Pepper and the billionaire bowed to his assistant letting her enter first; Alfred cocked an impressed eyebrow on that gesture of gallantry.

Tony patted his shoulder cheerful.

“I’m happy, Alfie; and I’m always a knight with ladies – I made Ironman inspired by the Medieval knights.”

“You told me your inspiration was C-3PO from Star Wars; you just added red to not be kitsch…” Pepper remarked snidely and Tony sighed rolling his eyes.

“Me and my big mouth! She uses her knowledge against me…Fancy that!”

Alfred closed the door.

“Where’s my little guy?” he opened his arms in the air as Pepper was already kissing Bruce.

Pepper took Hero from Bruce’s lap and let Tony hug his friend. The billionaire from Malibu lifted Bruce off his chair for a second and the younger man laughed.

“You rugby team won?” he teased him.

“No; Luthor was fucked right in the ass!”

Bruce blushed and Alfred coughed.

“So much for the gallantry…” the butler sneered and retreated to the kitchen.

Tony squatted and ruffled his hair.

“You need to put on some more weight, little guy…” he commented. “Don’t tell me you don’t feel excited after what happened at the press conference or you didn’t watch it?”

Bruce nodded.

“You know it’ll be only temporary though: his powerful protector would eventually set him loose.”

But Tony’s mood wasn’t spoiled; he lolled his head on the side.
“Uhu…But then – as you said – we’ll watch his steps and find this big guy and send both of them to the joint once and for all” he touched his lips to Bruce’s forehead. “Your temperature is normal – of course, Alfie told me but you know me: I want to know things firsthand.”

Bruce smiled.

“I did enjoy the Press Conference.”

“Oh! I wish I could see that motherfucker’s shit face when his lawyer tells him the news…” he huffed, his eyes taking a wishful glint; but then he remembered something. “You’ve got mail, buddy…” he gave Bruce an envelope.

The younger man frowned; it was a very formal invitation. He looked at Tony’s eager eyes and opened it.

“Invitation to a party at the Avengers’ Tower…” Bruce mumbled.

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“It’s the event of the year, little guy; and I want you there! It won’t be the same without you there…”

Bruce licked his lips uncomfortable and Tony understood.

“C’mon, buddy…You went to the kids’ party…” he pouted making the puppy eyes. “Can you bear breaking my heart? Peps always says that I’m a big kid…”

The younger man sighed.

“I can’t let you down, can I?”

Tony hugged him caressing the back of his head.

“No, you can’t, kiddo; I’m so lucky! Alfie, is the lunch ready?” he yelled towards the kitchen. “I’m starving!”

Bruce let his childhood friend lead him to the kitchen feeling his heart warm from Tony’s cheer; he was touched that his friend could get happy so easily and radiate his joy all around lightening even Bruce’s world.

“Is yar granny okay?” Jason asked Dick after he sipped his Irish coffee.

“She went to the hospital for some tests – I had to threaten her that I wouldn’t go to school if she didn’t show me the receipt today. And she did exactly that.”

Jason shook his head.

“She loves ya, man; ya’re lucky…”

Dick nodded and took a sip from his juice.

“I know, alright…” and wanting to change the subject. “How’s your mother?”

The younger boy shrugged.
“’kay, I guess…She still drinks but not so much to get sick…”

Dick gulped sensing his friend’s well hidden hurt.

“Maybe having a good job and enough money make her not wanting to drink as before…”

Jason twirled his straw in the glass.

“Guess so…From the day Wayne got her to work in the Haven, she has changed…She doesn’t cry in her sleep an’ stopped hangin’ around with these creeps who passed her pills; for a time she was sellin’ drugs for them to give her stuff…Pigs arrested her an’ she ended up in the joint for a bit.”

Dick pursed his lips: Jason had a tough life from the day he was born. So he could call himself lucky that he got to have a happy family even for so little.

“Wayne helped many people like my mom, ya know…” Jason said making bubbles blowing with his straw.

Dick rolled his eyes and huffed exasperated.

“Jay, don’t even start with that! Or I’m leaving!”

Jason shrugged and crossed his arms nonchalant.

“Cool down, dude! I’m not tryin’ to defend him or somethin’; I’m just sayin’ what I know. An’ ya saw the kids…they love him an’ they say that kids have instinct.”

Dick crossed his arms too.

“Well, I’m a kid too and my instinct tells me he’s a fucking hypocrite! He pretends the nice guy to…to…to fool people and not see his true face.”

“What for, man? He doesn’t gain anythin’: the others gain from him.”

“Exactly! He buys them to become popular, to make people forget what he truly is…to forget his past.”

Jason crooked his lips and cocked his eyebrows.

“It’s not his fault Falcone used him like this; Wayne was younger than me when that dickhead got him.”

Dick fumed; he leaned towards his friend.

“Yes! But it’s his fault my family died! If he had stayed Falcone’s prisoner my parents and Brian would be here now and my Granny wouldn’t be forced to cope with all these!”

Jason shook his head challenging.

“Which ya make worse for her with yar insist on hangin’ out with that loser Zucco!”

“He’s not a loser! He is my uncle and my father’s friend.”

“I think yar Granny is right ‘bout him – ya should listen to her. I live in the Narrows all my life an’ I can smell rotten fish…”
Dick rolled his eyes.

“Yeah…but you failed to sniff Wayne’s bad smell…”

Jason lolled his head.

“Maybe ‘cause he doesn’t have one!” he wasn’t particularly fond of the guy nor he wanted to defend him but Dick had pissed him with his stubbornness to not hear him or his granny.

Dick growled and jumped to his feet.

“I thought you were my friend not his! Did he buy you out with that petty gift? Like those whiny littl’ brats?”

Now Jason’s eyes flashed angrily and he jerked upright clenching his jaw and fists.

“Nobody can buy Jason out, ya dork! Ya’re fuckin’ moron! I’m tryin’ to get ya think but ya’re stuck in yar bullshit!”

Dick cocked his eyebrows sarcastic.

“Littl’ Jay can think and I can’t…what humbug!”

The other customers from the tables around looked at them sternly and Jason answered the stares with a glare of his own.

“What do ya look?”

But Dick sat in his bench and gestured to his friend to do the same.

“Sorry” he mumbled to the people around. “You’re acting like my granny: she struggles to brainwash me about Wayne and chased away Tony, the only person that made me feel a bit loose and happy. You’re my friend, you should be more understanding.”

Jason crossed his arms and fumed: he felt a pang from Dick saying that Zucco was the only one who made him feel better; he hoped that Dick enjoyed his company more.

“Yar granny didn’t chase him away: he was at the party last night – I got a glimpse of him.”

Dick frowned.

“And why he didn’t come to say hello?” Jason shrugged. “Ugh! Sure he didn’t want to have a quarrel with granny – he is much considerate.”

“Yeah…Sure…” the younger boy snorted. “Yar granny!” he craned his head towards the register where Ms. Turner was paying their drinks.

Dick shook his head.

“Yeah…She told me that she’d come to pick us: now that that loony Crane escaped she’s afraid. As if he knows me personally or gives a damn about me. If it was Joker in his place however, I’d pray he’d come to get me…”

Jason rolled his eyes and snorted again.

“Why? What would ya do? Kill him? Ya don’t have a gun an’ I doubt ya’d use it; me on the other hand…”

Dick laughed.

“Yeah, Dirty Harry in a miniature…” he sneered.

Ms. Turner approached the two boys and offered to take Jason home but the boy refused because he had his bike which made the old woman twist her lips disapprovingly.

“You must be careful with that thing, Jason; it’s quite dangerous and you’re too young to have one of these.”

Jason yanked his head proudly.

“Don’t worry, Ms. Turner; Jason isn’t afraid of anythin’ an’ knows his shit…” he blushed “I mean… thing.”

“Your mother must be very worried…”

Jason scratched his head uncomfortable.

“Nah…” he smiled bitterly but then shook it off. “She knows her son is a tough nut! Good night, Granny…mmm…of Dick! See ya tomorrow, Dick!”

“Good night, sweetheart” Ms. Turner greeted smiling and watched him affectionately as he mounted his bike, wore his helmet and left.

On the way home, silence fell inside the car. Ms. Turner glanced at her grandson.

“Are you angry with me, Dick?” she asked softly.

The boy turned to her startled.

She smiled.

“Because I like Mr. Wayne.”

Dick lolled his head on the window’s side and watched the cars passing the street that was already lightened by multicolored lights since it was already twilight.

Mr. Turner bit her bottom lip.

“Why do you hate him so much, honey?”

Dick huffed and rolled his eyes: as if she didn’t know!

“For once again: Because he is the reason my family was murdered by Joker! Because if he never had appeared I’d be still playing with Brian! We were playing together just a few hours before he was tortured and murdered! For God’s sake, granny; you already know…”

Some tears rolled from Ms. Turner’s eyes on the memory of her little grandson: he was such a cheerful little boy and so sweet! And if she had taken him with her along with Dick, her little angel would be alive and maybe his parents too…
Dick caressed her arm gulping; he realized that he wasn’t the only one who felt pain.

“Mr. Wayne, Bruce, was at Brian’s age when Falcone kidnapped him, chopped his toe, killed his parents, shoot him and jailed him abusing the poor kid daily for all his life.”

Dick crossed his arms frustrated: he didn’t want to listen about Wayne.

“Why are you telling me all that? I don’t care! I wish Falcone had killed him with his parents! Then my family would be alive!”

“If Falcone had killed Bruce or if Bruce was still Falcone’s captive, Gotham would have been still under the reign of terror of this mobster and all the children which last night were so careless and happy would be still in that horrible old orphanage hardly surviving; the Narrows would be still a place where people starved to death or die from cold or Falcone’s thugs. You know that in the Haven all these people have found accommodation, training and a decent job? Weren’t for Bruce, Jason’s mom would be bullied by Falcone’s thug and probably in jail away from her boy and Jason would lose also his mom.”

Dick stared at her.

“Jason spoke to you about his mom?”

Ms. Turner shook his head: yes, the boy had opened his heart to her.

“I’m telling you all these to make your golden heart soften a bit about Mr. Wayne” she continued. “To set aside your dislike for just a bit and see him as he is…He didn’t do anything, Dick…I’m sure he suffers too because your family died due to Joker’s lunacy. He is a good man, Dick.”

“Can we not speak about him?” he snapped and retreated to his memories of his family even if these memories made the pain worse when he returned to the cruelty of his reality.

Ms. Turner clenched more the wheel hoping that her grandson would eventually let free his kind heart to feel for Bruce Wayne and understand how wrong he was in his hatred.

Superman was flying south to Gotham. He had just stepped out of the light blue examination chamber at the Fortress of Solitude.

“The indications show nothing wrong” Jor El said to him in his deep, solemn voice. “However, our systems are set to Kryptonian conditions and Earth has her peculiarities so I’ll need to monitor you for some time. There are still things I don’t know about this planet and her ways.”

Superman smiled relieved and happy that he could shove that to Bruce’s face to prove him wrong and paranoid in his suspicions and assumptions about Diana. Of course, in this case it was all Clark’s fault – his character that needed fix; maybe fatigue or PTSD?

“Jor El, you know I don’t have the luxury to stay here for monitoring; I have a daily job to maintain and with Bruce’s injury I got too many sick leaves.”

“There’s no need for you to be constantly here – once a day would be enough.”

Superman huffed; he didn’t consider it necessary since the examination failed to show anything but he ought to make it sure. For both his and Bruce’s sake. So he nodded.
“What is it that worries you, Kal El? What happened to make you suspect that something is off?”

Superman licked his lips in uneasiness: he didn’t want to admit it to Jor El. He was ashamed of himself.

“Lately, I’m not myself” Jor El’s frown was deep. “I act a bit strange…in relation to Bruce and he, …we thought to make sure that there’s nothing external affecting me.”

“As with that special Kryptonite and the substances Bruce’s body secreted…” he said thoughtful.

“I don’t know if it is something like that or something else or nothing at all…I just wanted to be sure.”

“In order for us to be sure, you must undergo examination every day for some time” Superman nodded. “And in the meantime, you should be extra careful.”

He was floating over Metropolis to check his city just before he headed to Gotham. Suddenly, a beautiful, mind numbing smell dazzled his nostrils and paralyzed his body. He frowned because it wasn’t Bruce’s cinnamon flavored perfume.

His body turned towards the aroma as if a powerful magnet had drawn the steel. He knew that perfume.

His eyes relished the spectacle of Diana’s tall, muscle bound body with its sharp curves; her rich, round breasts, her hips, her perfect calves enclosed in skin tight boots. No, he should be angry with her for every word she uttered about Bruce.

So he clenched his waist and looked at her forcing his eyes to take a glare. But the woman was unfazed; she smiled broadly and her teeth shone in the darkness since Metropolis’ lights were feet under them.

“I see you’re still angry, Kal El” she said in a slightly sneering voice and Clark was lost in the shine of her blue eyes.

“Of course I am. The way you spoke about Bruce was…”

She cocked an eyebrow and twisted her ruby, heart shaped lips.

“The truth” she cut him. “But you’re in love with him so I must respect your choice, right?”

Superman watched her narrowing his eyes. The Amazon Princess floated next to him and as the wind sent her perfume in his face, he felt his heart stopping.

“Well, how is the Prince of your heart?” Clark would prefer it if her voice wasn’t so filled with sarcasm.

“He is fine” he answered coldly. “I’m sure he’d appreciate your interest.”

She chuckled.

“I doubt it…He is clever to achieve conquering the heart of the finest of this world” Clark frowned at the ‘conquering’. “I’m sure he wouldn’t want so close to you someone who is impervious to his charm…”

Superman involuntarily heard again Bruce’s speech about keeping Diana under watch because they supposedly didn’t know anything about her or her intentions. But not get to close to her or show any trust. The same feeling of ridicule crashed over him. Maybe Bruce’s paranoia wasn’t paranoia after all; maybe it was just plain jealousy and an effort to make Clark suspect her so that Bruce wouldn’t have to worry about losing him to her.

A rush of anger hit him: could Bruce do that? Endangering such a valuable ally to succeed his selfish goals? But then he shook himself because Bruce never had selfish goals.

“Actually, Bruce prefers people who don’t drool over him.”

She snorted.

“Then why is he with you?” she cackled.

“I’m not drooling!” Superman spat. “I love him for his personality; for his value – for me he isn’t a piece of meat.”

He turned his back to leave though that perfume that seemed like being extricated from every flower in the world made it more difficult than it should be.

Diana touched her hands on his shoulders and Superman shivered; an electric current running his spine to his brain.

“You’re going to him…”

He nodded abruptly.

“I hope that at least he satisfies your needs…and he does not torment you all the time with guilt that’s not yours” she whispered and her velvety breath smelling of flowers caressed his neck.

Superman turned his head to her frowning.

“This isn’t an appropriate discussion: this isn’t your business!”

She patted his shoulders and he felt her strength.

“Touchy subject, huh? He made your gallant heart fall for him and now leaves you thirsty…unsatisfied, famished…But it is your choice, Kal El” she pouted. “Maybe he makes your life difficult because he is jealous of me…If that’s so, you can assure him that I have no love interest in you: I’m an Amazon not a wrecker of couples…All this human pettiness is beneath me.”

Superman shook his head, his lips in a tight line. He was both happy and disappointed with Diana’s last words: the lack of interest from her.

“That’s the best, Diana…I wish things were different but I love Bruce so nothing can happen between us. However I will be honored with your friendship and alliance.”

She smiled and her smile was the purest smile in the world.

“The honor is mine, Kal El” her fist hit her chest in the place of her heart and Superman’s heart gave a jolt.

From far, thanks to his zoom vision, saw Bruce on his wheelchair before the fireplace working in his shiny tablet; Hero was sleeping on his basket.

The window opened automatically at Clark’s approach and in a blur he put the tablet on the table reading what kept Bruce up till now: information about the two orderlies closest to Crane. He gritted his teeth: he had forgotten that scum; he cursed the timing because an Asylum escapee was the least Bruce’s recuperation needed.

Bruce glared at him.

“That’s unfair…using your speed to take my tablet and read what I was working on.”

Clark lifted him and was happy to find that his temperature was normal.

“If you wanted you’d have stopped me” he replied calmly. “And what is unfair is you working late instead of sleeping. That day was fool of intense moments.”

As he placed Bruce at the mattress flat on his back, the younger man raised his torso.

“I was waiting for you…”

“You shouldn’t…Tomorrow is Sunday and I will stay the morning” as he was looming over his face, he nibbled the younger man’s lip.

Bruce giggled because Clark’s hands that had him trapped between them touched his armpits tickling.

“I wanted to learn what Jor El told you…”

Clark lolled his head on the side.

“I’m astounded you didn’t hack the Fortress’ crystals to find out” he planted small kisses all over his nose.

“Hm…That’s a good idea…”

Clark cackled smugly.

“On your dreams, buster…you can’t pass the Fortress’ firewalls…”

Bruce smirked evilly and his eyes sparkled menacingly.

“You want me to try?”

Superman got rid of his suit in a flash and his eyes sparkled self-proudly seeing the younger man admiring his perfect body; aroused by Bruce’s craving eyes sucked long Bruce’s neck.

“I don’t want you defeated and heartbroken…” he continued arrogantly moaning.

Bruce wrapped his arms around Clark’s neck and fondled his shoulder plates.

“You know I won’t be” he said challengingly.

Clark chuckled but didn’t answer; his focus on lapping the minimum of chest skin that Bruce’s neckline left exposed. He’d have started unbuttoning the buttons but he was afraid of himself; his reverie from last night that made him almost violate Bruce gave him cold feet and he could feel some slight inhibition in the man beneath him too.

“I want to spread butter on your body and gobble you…” he groaned with his mouth deep in human flesh.
Bruce moaned because Clark’s power made his heart beat joyfully before a cold grip clenched her reminding him of last night.

“Don’t tell me that in Krypton you ate human beings?” he inquired between joking and worrying.

“Mmm…I doubt they ever got such a yummy sample like you…I’m the luckiest of my species…”

His hands drifted again lower and Bruce tensed feeling again the anger and dread of their last encounter. But Clark stopped abruptly when his fingers matched the bruises on Bruce’s thighs: he didn’t need his sight to know they were there. He closed his eyes and slumped at Bruce’s side. He wouldn’t touch Bruce before that reminder of what he almost did disappeared.

Bruce was both sad and relieved that Clark didn’t proceed. Sad because he felt the man’s regret for his deeds.

“They’ll soon vanish…” he said guessing the reason of Clark’s abrupt stop. “What Jor El said?”

Clark had put his forearm under his head for support and stared at the ceiling.

“I hope that at least he satisfies your needs…and he does not torment you all the time with guilt that’s not yours…”

He sighed.

“That there’s nothing wrong: you were wrong. The effect your body had on me was the first and last external influence. Nobody is messing with me as was the case with you…”

Bruce could detect some aggressiveness.

“Then?”

Clark raised his torso.

“I’ll visit the Fortress every day repeating the exams to be sure. But probably is only something psychological so I’ll work it out.”

Bruce supported himself in his elbows and rose from the mattress.

“Together, Clark. We’ll work it out together” his voice was adamant and Clark smiled.

He grabbed the human’s torso and locked their lips in a long, passionate kiss. Clark unlocked their tongues before the last air was finished in Bruce’s lungs and laid him gently on the mattress.

“Now I must take care that you never undergo hypothermia again…” he chuckled and spooned Bruce’s body.

The younger man brushed his face with eyes that shone.

“Clark, you’re so beautiful…”

“Thank you…” he whispered and his lips trailed Bruce’s neck.

Suddenly, as in a nightmare a mixture of foul smells attacked Clark’s nostrils wrecking Bruce’s intoxicating perfume and turning it into a disgusting pong. Clark’s hypersensitive smell could discern the scents of Falcone, Chill, Ra’s Al Ghul, Bane, Talia and some others unidentified.
“He was a pleasure slave all his life – a whore! His body is overused, sucked up: his flesh carries the memories of all these filthy men that fucked him daily! He must be infected by many disgusting diseases!” Diana’s voice echoed in the chambers of his mind filled with worry for him.

And truly: Clark could see all these different people using Bruce’s body in disgusting ways. He had seen Chill’s erection hammering Bruce’s insides and then being cleaned by Bruce’s obedient tongue. That same tongue that only seconds ago was tangled with his…He felt his hairs stand on edge…

He could bare that smell and stop breathing to not cause Bruce’s suspicions; it wasn’t Bruce’s fault, right? He didn’t want to sadden him; to make him return to those days he considered himself filthy. Even though this smell made Clark think that Bruce… No; he brought back the most beautiful perfume his mind offered first: all the flowers of the planet blossoming in the clear spring’s fields…

Bruce tensed feeling Clark’s discomfort and the healthy part of his spine froze. He cupped Clark’s jaw.

“What is it?”

“Mmmm…I was thinking…why don’t you change your perfume?”

Bruce frowned.

“You know I rarely use cologne…and I thought you loved my natural smell…”

Clark sighed and ruffled his hair.

“Of course I do, babe! But a change never hurt anyone, huh? Try something flowery. Maybe a bath foam.”

Bruce felt awkward and stupid for discussing such meaningless things when he could do so much useful work.

“I won’t change my bath foam” he retorted; it was the foam his mother used to bath him with.

Clark collapsed on the mattress huffing.

“You know…using the foam your mother used to wash you when you were a kid won’t bring her neither your childhood back …”

Bruce supported his body on his elbows and loomed over Clark. His blood was boiling.

“If you want someone with flowery perfume, go to him…or her!” he stressed out the last word.

But Clark wrapped his arms around Bruce’s torso and brought him on his own body; he kissed him on the forehead.

“I don’t want anyone else, babe…It was just a suggestion; nothing more.”

Bruce thrashed in his arms and Clark relished the resistance; he caressed his locks planting soft kisses to his cheek.

“You said that we’ll work this out together, Bruce” he whispered.

But Bruce was feeling a tight knot with big prickle making his insides bleed; it was the same not of all these days never leaving his insides…
“Maybe you don’t want that after all” he replied sternly and his eyes flashed.

Clark closed his eyes because as Bruce’s heart beat onto his heart a deep pain was transmitted; suddenly, that stopped and Clark knew that Bruce hid his pain out of pride. The Man of Steel touched the human’s heart.

“God, I do want it, Bruce. I don’t want to lose you…”

But Bruce’s eyelids were too heavy from fatigue and drugs and emotion. And as in the years of Falcone’s captivity, sleep offered an escape. He preferred his caves and his bats but he couldn’t reach them now and that made his healthy body spasm urging him to set it in motion to get there: his body knew that he had the power. Yet Bruce was aware that doing that would only make things worse… So he fell asleep on the body he still loved and struggled to keep trusting…

Clark closed his eyes, the feeling of Bruce’s hands on his chest and his calm, hot breath on his flesh making him numb. He loved that human but his past sometimes ruined things so ugly. He thought about Diana: no, she didn’t cause all that; she just warned him. It was just a coincidence this crisis emerged after her appearance: if she was evil she wouldn’t have saved Bruce, her rival; she’d have let him die in his attackers hands.

He kissed feathery Bruce’s silken locks.
Chapter 27

Chapter Notes

This chapter wasn’t supposed to be so lengthy but as I was giving it a final reading I had some inspiration. I hope you like it.

Also, thank you for reading, commenting and leaving kudos.

The first impression was salty, male scent – irresistible male scent - and…donuts. Then he felt the soft thing he was glued on and how warm and nice it was. Fast but not as fast as he’d have wanted he realized that his face was nestled in Clark’s bare chest and Superman’s arm was loosely wrapped around his back keeping him really close. The warmth flooding his body rushed to his cheeks and that was ridiculous: after all these years of being fucked twice a day (at least), every day, blushing because someone holds you in his arms was stupid. Well, knowing that this someone must be staring at you sleeping probably for hours didn’t help matters…

A sweet mouth kissed softly the tip of his nose and then his lips.

“Good morning…” Clark’s voice revealed his smile and Bruce opened his eyes.

His eyes were met with Clark’s stony chest and his cute curly hair there yet he didn’t let his hands brush because along with waking the feelings from last night returned.

Clark didn’t need Bruce’s touch to feel pleasure: certainly, it would be a nice addition yet all this time Bruce’s mouth was touched to his flesh and the feeling of his lips and the air leaving gently his lungs had rendered him spineless.

He kissed the younger man’s forehead where some messy hair had fallen.

“Morning…” Bruce replied and his voice’s throatiness wasn’t only from the sleep.

The leaner man made to move away from Clark’s arms but he didn’t let him. Clark tightened slightly his hold and uplifted Bruce’s chin with his finger. Bruce’s eyes sparkled as they met challengingly the bigger man’s happy eyes.

“Why?” Clark asked almost whining. “Because of last night’s stupid slip of my tongue?”

Bruce arched an eyebrow.

“It wasn’t a ‘slip of the tongue’…Let me go.”

Clark closed his eyes but didn’t relent; he nuzzled Bruce’s cheek.

“It’s Sunday morning, Bruce; I was looking forward to this the entire week to be able to be with you when you wake up – to do the morning routine together. Let’s not ruin this because of my stupidity… I was tired…” well, that seemed odd from him. “Please…”

His arm passed over Bruce and returned bringing a donut to Bruce’s lips: a fresh baked donut, still warm and with a scent that made Bruce’s stomach growl and his mouth salivate.
Clark smiled on hearing his stomach reacting, like this.

“I know, I know… I’m committing bribery here but when a boy is desperate… Almond filling and white chocolate top…” he purred seductively. “The Prince’s donut… Now, crack a smile and I’ll give it to you” he took the delicacy away.

“I’m not hungry” Bruce detached his eyes keeping his grim expression.

“Your stomach says otherwise… C’mon, babe; don’t do this…”

Bruce heard little paws running there and Hero meowed before climbing the bed his eyes predatory on the donut.

“No, Hero” Bruce turned to the kitten though Clark still kept his body captive. “You should not eat sweets…”

But Clark had foreseen that; he left the donut in the paper bag on the nightstand and took from a second smaller bag a cat biscuit.

“Catch, Hero!” he threw the biscuit in Hero’s basket and the kitten hurried there. “Now, your turn, Prince” he brought back the donut and frowned in deep thinking. “Mmm… maybe we should follow the Fortress feeding tactic?”

Bruce pressed his lips frowning.

“Open for the airplane to land…” Clark moved the donut like an airplane to Bruce’s mouth and the younger man opened his mouth taking a big chunk.

Clark sighed.

“It felt as nice as when you started eating after the coma…” he captured Bruce’s mouth to share the mixed taste and smell of two candies: Bruce and donut.

“I don’t stink today?” Bruce asked coldly and Clark froze because last night he thought that had managed to not show it.

Clark shook his head.

“You never stink, okay? It’s my fault; can we forget all about this and continue with having a great day?”

He brought the delicacy to Bruce’s mouth for him to bite again. This time Bruce didn’t protest and Clark rubbed soothing circles to his back.

“How long it’ll continue, Clark?” he asked eating from his hand as he was doing in the Fortress the first days after his awakening: remembering that time in the Fortress and how much Clark did for him made his heart warm and let aside the latest events.

“What?”

“Saying or doing something and then trying to correct it by being super affectionate and caring… You know, this only makes things worse: it’s like you try to drive me insane.”

Clark would have ruffled his messy hair if both his hands weren’t occupied with holding the donut and Bruce.
“I’d never try to make that to you…Alright?” he whispered. “This is my true self; these are my true feelings about you. My…strange behavior is exactly that: strange because it isn’t me. I don’t know what comes to me and I act in that manner but then I get over it. Scratch all these, Bruce; I don’t mean them.”

Bruce shook his head, pursing his lips. Clark read his disbelief and it hurt. He jolted off the mattress holding Bruce and shoved the paper bag with the rest of the donuts in the top drawer.

“We don’t want our prowling four legged friend reach them…” he said showing Hero who was approaching slyly the nightstand.

Bruce smiled at the kitten and then looked at Clark.

“What are you doing?”

“Shower” Clark answered nonchalant and in a second they were already in the vast bathroom, the door closed.

Clark was completely naked but Bruce stubbornly fought the temptation to enjoy the spectacle and the Man of Steel realized and sighed. He leaned Bruce on the wall holding him from the waist and touched their foreheads together.

“Don’t tell me you stopped liking what you see?” he asked in his most sexy, raspy voice nibbling Bruce’s bottom lip.

Bruce felt Clark’s hands fondling his dressed ribs and though his throat filled with moans, he stubbornly choked them. Clark sighed defeated.

“Okay, buddy; but it’s shower time and I still love to see you naked” his hands blessed with super speed were sensationally slow as they removed Bruce’s rob and then unbuttoned his pajama shirt, one button after the other.

He slithered extremely slowly the pieces of the shirt to Bruce’s shoulders accompanying his moves with small kisses and then pushed the fabric till the wrists and then on the granite tiled floor devouring how the human body shivered in his ministrations. Then supporting Bruce’s body with his fell on his knees slowly, taking along Bruce’s pants. And then when only the black boxer stayed hiding the human body body he took it off dragging that clothe down.

“Damn!” he sighed raising his eyes appreciating the human body. “How can I survive without seeing that body every single day?”

Clark hooked his one arm around Bruce’s waist and brought both of them inside the hydromassage cabin that had more than enough space for two people. He set off the seven different body jets and supporting Bruce he began sucking his chest mingled with the artificial rain. His free hand fondled the younger man’s abs shivering with Bruce’s shivers.

“Tell me that you like it as much as I…” he sucked Bruce’s lips closing his eyes.

Bruce liked it; actually, he loved it but the knot in his stomach was there throbbing reminding him constantly that things had changed and might change even more. He closed his eyes and controlled the feeling of discomfort.

Clark cupped his face with the hand that didn’t hook Bruce on him. He brushed his eyelashes that dripped water.

“There’s no hope then?” he asked locking his eyes with Bruce’s blank eyes. “I made your heart close again?”

Bruce focused on Clark’s eyes, on the clear, unique blue and their sadness. He remembered how this was the first thing he saw after he woke up from the coma; how these blue irises made the ice in his insides melt that night in the greenhouse; made him trust. He clenched his jaw: he didn’t know what was to come but he wanted to live this moment.

He wrapped both his arms around Clark’s neck and nestled his head in the crook of his neck kissing feathery the flesh there.

Clark shuddered from the abrupt movement and the way Bruce’s torso glued on his agitating his already aroused nipples; and then the little kiss there, the feeling of Bruce’s face there; the water running caressing and massaging his body.

“I want things to stay like this…” Bruce mumbled and his shy lips nibbled lower to Clark’s bulging pectorals.

“And they will, babe!” he cupped his face with both hands because he could support Bruce without having to hold his waist; he yanked Bruce’s face and stormed his lips kissing almost violently, needy, hungrily. “I won’t lose you…”

His lips felt like being drawn by a powerful magnet and continued battling with Bruce’s delightful defiant lips till his thirst and the mixed smell of human flesh and water led him to ravish cheeks and jawline causing melodic moans from the younger man who was choked from the power of lips that sucked his flesh and hands that squeezed sensually his torso.

And then suddenly Clark’s hands were tousling his drenched locks without stopping burning him with his mouth. His body although under the waterfalls of seven different faucets felt feverish making his torso writhing in his heart pace; he wished his hips were writhing like this but everything stopped in his waist.

Clark’s groin throbbed unbearably; his penis that anyways was half erect due to his morning glory now was already dripping despite the water or maybe more due to the water…Taking advantage of the fact that Bruce’s hands were clutching his neck to withstand the force of Superman’s passion, he grabbed Bruce’s thighs and heaved them to hug his hips; his penis shuddered as if electric current ran through it.

Bruce locked his eyes with Clark’s, his eyes batting from the water’s force giving him his silent consent.

Clark grasped his wrists, took them from his neck and since Bruce’s legs left his hips lacking any strength, turned the younger man face first to the cabin’s wall. He heard the human’s heart jolting from excitement and…hesitance when Clark put Bruce’s arms on the wall above his head.

“Don’t be fret, Bruce…It’s Clark…”

“I’m not afraid” he answered.

Clark massaged gently Bruce’s shoulders accompanying every stroke with a fervent kiss; he wanted to be fast but forced himself to be extra slow because he felt that slowness aroused more his mate.

“Do you remember that day at Thasos…in the shower? What you did to me?” the sensations from that intercourse often returned with the help of his eidetic memory to torture him...the things Bruce’s mouth did to his body...The work of a professional...Clark froze.

Bruce sensed that slight change though the healthy portion of his body was on fire.

“Do you want me to do that again?” he asked in his most arousing rasp.

A professional...

“...beautiful beings like Wayne are made only for being used for pleasure and nothing more. The only teachings he had – even unconsciously – were of whores seducing their potential clients; and he knew deep inside that his ass was the only asset he had to survive. So even without his will; even without knowing it he used what he was learning from his environment. Cheap whores were all the family he had but even the cheapest whore knows how to emanate some charm to a client.”

Clark wished Diana’s voice and sayings didn’t sound so truthful...

“No, babe...” his penis was rock hard and ready to storm inside that body he missed so much; but he knew he couldn’t, he shouldn’t...His mouth found Bruce’s ear and panted as he rubbed his aching member on those delightful buttocks. “I won’t get inside you...” the words came out pressed, mixed with moans and grunts as his penis’ sensations peaked “though I want it so much...but I’ll wait...because...it must...be...perfect...for you too...”

His hands left Bruce’s wrists and hugged the youth’s waist sticking their bodies together as his rubbing moves became frantic, the friction from Bruce’s buttocks offering a satisfying substitute. Their hearts beat in the same pace till Superman’s beats surpassed any human rhythm and his penis exploded.

Clark was breathing hard on Bruce’s shoulders and the human felt burning in a sweet fire and then began shaking uncontrollably in his own arousal that would stay without any relief. The Man of Steel stroked his locks tenderly.

“Relax, babe...” he planted small kisses all over the back of his neck and then his back that under his super vision showed every sign of the fatal injuries Bruce undertook and Jor El’s treatment. “Now, we’ll bath...”

Bruce controlling at last his breath and heartbeat closed his eyes choking the moans that still climbed his throat. Experiencing his lover’s orgasm felt as if he also had ejaculated – Clark’s content made him satisfied too.

“No flowery bath foam!” he growled and Clark chuckled.

“No...I love your perfume, Bruce...” he took the bath foam and poured some on Bruce’s shoulders, spreading the soft cream with gently movements along with the water. “And then we’ll eat the donuts...I’m starving...” he roared and bit lightly Bruce’s rib causing a small laugh.

Bruce was happy and forbid the knot form again so soon after this happiness.

Joker watched behind his spoonful of cereals the orderlies watching something really interesting in their smartphones. His eyes sparkled wicked. The orderlies of duty were stiff as always in their positions around the cafeteria but some others behind the door, in the corridor were playing with their gadgets. The thing is that the door had round shaped windows and the morons were visible from inside to the keen eye and Joker’s eyes were very keen in locating interesting things.
He shrugged; he’d investigate it after that delicious breakfast. Brucie’s donations to the Asylum and Dr. Harlequin’s love for her patients granted them a different breakfast every day. In hopes of not boring Joker and leave their premises…

He leaned on the back of his chair and yawned; on the built-in TV screen Tom was chasing Jerry ending up with a lot of lumps and bruises.

“He! He!” he screamed and swallowed his juice.

But then the stupid mouse blew up the entire house and the cat found himself under a pile of debris. Joker’s wide smile curled downwards. In real life, this would have disabled anyone…Even Batman. He saw again the young man descending from the jet confined in a chair and his eyes darted to this buffoon Lu… His hand clenched so tight around the spoon that some blood spurt.

Well, the establishment was fine and the stuff very friendly yet the entertainment became boring, annoying and he’d have to soon leave…He sighed…He always got melancholic when he had to leave behind a place or a person…He scratched his head frowning; no, that was a lie. He never felt melancholic; on the contrary, he always felt crazy happy when he left behind a place – in ruins – or a person – in a bloody mess.

He was like a bird, he’ll only fly away; he didn’t know where his soul was, he didn’t know where his home was… Wait, that was a song…Hm…He rubbed his chin: he would sing that song to Brucie as soon as he met him.

He jolted from his chair and walked to the door.

“You're beautiful, that's for sure/You'll never eeeever faaaaade/You're loooovely but it's noooooot for sure/That I won't ever chaaaaange/And though my love is raaaaaa--re Though my love is trueeeeee…” he hummed shaking his head in the rhythm.

He halted in front of his personal orderly – his bodyguard.

“Mmm… Scotty, can I go out? Ppppppleaaaaaase!” he batted his eyelashes cutely and showed him his bleeding hand. “Hoooome accidents…” he lolled his head.

Scotty grimaced but moved his mass pushing the door for them to pass.

“Uuuuuuuuu! Thank youuuuuuu! What a gentle--man…”

As they walked to the toilets Joker’s eyes narrowed predatorily scanned the corridors and when he found what he looked for locked eyes with him sending the message.

Inside the first toilet cabin of the vast raw he found Malcolm, one of the non-criminal residents, waiting for him. Scotty waited him outside the room so they wouldn’t have any disturbance.

Joker knew that Malcolm had more privileges than anyone because he was obedient and very cooperative – and a really old customer; the poor fella must have spent almost all his life in the Asylum. The only drawback was that these traits that made him so loveable to the staff also made him extremely easy to manipulate. And for Joker was even easier…So the guy offered him a nice connection to the outside world since using a smartphone was one of the privileges the old guy enjoyed: poor guy couldn’t do anything with it than goggling at the wallpapers changing. Well, Joker definitely could do more…

“Thank you, Goofy…” he said snatching the phone; Goofy was the grandpa’s favorite cartoon.
He roamed Gotham’s news and perused the fresher.

“Hm…” he read about Luthor’s imminent release. “The baldy looooover boy has reaaaaaally strong friends, huh?”

And then he scrolled down until he found an article about the temporary DA’s announcement of the release. Well, the article had a video and honestly Joker loathed reading news articles so he pressed the little arrow and watched the video gritting his teeth on the authorities’ inability to keep inside jail that creep who touched Bruce.

“C’moooooong, guys! You need meehee to show you the way?” he murmured and already began to plan his chaotic ‘justice’ on Luthor – the lover boy really shouldn’t appeal for his release. “There’s a jungle out there, Mowgli and I’m Shere Khan!”

But then he focused his ears on that dork DA who strangely seemed satisfied; Joker frowned.

“But in our great country’s…”

Joker began whistling the National Anthem pretending to throw away a tear.

 “…1788 Ratification of the Constitution, 1791’s Seventh Amendment there’s a paragraph that gives to Gotham’s highest judge the right to not accept as orders the decrees which lack solid reasoning in their claims and intervene to decisions already taken by the courts of law; therefore this decree has the power of an appeal” the temporary DA heaved a really old looking parchment with the infamous seal and signs.

Joker scratched his head fascinated waiting the punch line of the joke.

“Thus Gotham’s judicial system will re-assess Mr. Luthor’s case; but until the Gotham’s court new verdict, Mr. Luthor will remain in Blackgate Prison” he clenched the papers he was holding. “The said paragraph and our official announcement will be distributed to all of you. Thank you.”

Joker jumped on the cubicle giggling.

“Huhuhuhuhuhuhu-hahahahaha! That must have huuuuuurrrt, baldy…Ouuuuuuuccch!”

He imagined Luthor’s pan upon hearing the news and then his screams of outrage.

“Poor thing… I want to peeeeeeet your bulb…aaand then give you a smack and open it in twooooo…Ooooh! I sniff good ol’ Harv behind it…Ugh! I miss him and Rach…We would have a veeeeery funny time together.”

He scratched his head and took in Malcolm’s bewildered expression.

“Hm…Maybe they’ll come back to play, huh, Goofy?”

And then suddenly he began giggling again hoping on the cubicle making Malcolm cower on the corner.

“Ohooooh! My paadal Luthor! HeHeHeHe! Ow, pooor guy! You were ready to fuck again the world but the world fucced you instead…Muhahahahahahah! It must huuuuuuurt…” he rubbed his nostrils together and sobered.

He handed the phone back to the old guy and jumped off the cubicle flushing.

“Thanks, pal! It’s been months since I had such a fun time and till I’m out…”
He opened slightly the door of the toilet compartment.

“You know the process: I’m leaving now and you’ll wait ten minutes before you go back to the yard, okay?”

The old man nodded and Joker slapped friendly his cheeks.

“Gooooood boy!”

He crossed the toilets hoping like a school girl and whistling: now he was ready to get out and spread some Joker regularity to that chaotic world. Releasing Luthor?! Outrageous injustice – for that he paid taxes to the state? Scott stared at him frowning; the big guy leaned on the wall with his arms crossed.

Joker winked.

“It must be something I ate…” he leaned his head towards the toilets. “Good thing that flush is strong…Do you think that they took Brucie’s money and pocket them instead of buying us good food? Villains!”

Scott didn’t answer and nudged slightly Joker to walk.

“The reasoning behind that party is to show the public that S.H.I.E.L.D. is no longer the ghost organization with the vague agenda and even vaguer goals and connections” Tony explained to the people sitting at the kitchen island of the Wayne Manor.

Clark was pushing gently Bruce’s wheelchair inside, Hero at their heels and Bruce lifted an eyebrow. Apart from Tony, Alfred had served breakfast to Pepper and Leslie.

“Good morning” Bruce and Clark greeted them receiving the same greeting as response.

Clark settled Bruce’s wheelchair at the island and took the stool right next to him causing Tony’s roll of eyes. Alfred cast a lopsided glance at the billionaire from Malibu and served breakfast to the newcomers and Hero who were already waiting at his bowl.

“He has eaten already some biscuits, Alfred” Bruce warned his butler and Alfred shook his head.

“He’ll need a diet soon…”

Tony chuckled.

“He is already like a ball with legs!”

Pepper lolled her head on the side.

“You, mister, are no better; you have already a bump. You’re lucky your armor adjusts to your body.”

Tony dropped his head and looked at Bruce.

“Much job, no action and no fun, little guy, and the one who forces me to work” he cast a sideways look at Pepper “exposes me like this…” he shook his head disappointed.

Pepper cocked an eyebrow.
“It’s better me here between your friends than you unknowingly – we know that you don’t have the most objective view for your looks – exposing yourself in front of your female fans. Imagine their reactions and the endless chats on twitter…” she shook her head. “I can already picture the memes…”

Tony’s eyes bulged in terror and his lip trembled, causing Bruce’s chuckle.

“Buddy, I’ll start workout with you…Those memes are cruel!”

“I’ll need a diet soon, as well, if I keep eating twice breakfast” Bruce replied shrugging.

Clark blushed under everyone’s stare; their late arrival already had raised suspicions about what kept them in the bedroom. And now everyone figured out that he fed Bruce as well…Actually, after the happenings in the hydromassage cabin they needed food and specifically sweets so the donuts were massacred.

“Not at all, Bruce; you need to put on some meat…” Clark replied nonchalant deciding that it was stupid to feel embarrassed for things he loved.

Leslie sipped from her juice.

“Agreed, as your doctor I believe that some more weight would be beneficial” she said in her scientific way but then her voice became sly. “Of course, Clark knows better your body…”

Clark choked with his juice and Bruce hurried to slap him in the back. Leslie’s smile was wicked.

“I meant after you’ve been treating him for an entire month…”

Pepper laughed too and Alfred looked amused so Clark decided to loosen up. Yet Tony’s cheerfulness was lost; he still didn’t like thinking of someone like Kent touching Bruce.

“Anyway” the billionaire decided to change the subject “we were talking about the party.”

“I heard what you said about showing the people how changed the new S.I.E.L.D. is” Tony nodded. “So you open the Tower for the public?” Bruce’s frown was very talkative.

Tony waved his hand determined to not get pissed by his friend’s paranoia.

“For a couple of hours” Bruce opened his mouth to say something but Tony caught him “only a portion of the building” Bruce made to say something again but his friend stopped him again “with all the safety measures taken. They will be prominent members of society.”

Bruce crooked his lips and Leslie said what her patient was thinking.

“Falcone and Luthor were prominent too…”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“I’m not a moron, alright! We were very careful with our choices.”

Pepper shrugged innocently.

“I’m his personal assistant and I have to do my job…”

“Don’t tell me Fury was okay with that?” Bruce asked.
Tony crossed his arms and stared at Bruce with arched eyebrows.

“Actually, he didn’t oppose the idea.”

“And the Avengers?” Clark asked and Bruce turned to him nodding.

Tony pouted.

“No problem. We are actually cheerful guys” he scratched his ear “maybe except Black Window and Hulk…but we all want to have people trust us, so we’ll attend” he pouted thoughtful “well, except Hulk who anyways wouldn’t fit the building. After all, Superman attends various parties” he pointed out. “Aaaaand he’ll attend that too…”

Clark jumped on his stool and Bruce frowned.

“Mmm…I hear about a party?” the kitchen’s door that led to the grounds opened and Selina slithered inside. “Sorry, I’m late…” she kissed Bruce’s cheek and petted Hero before settling in the stool. “I hope you don’t mind I entered without knocking” she asked Alfred while he was serving her.

“Not at all, Miss” he replied in his placid style “it is the reason I left the door unlocked; what’s the point of locking when a certain Catwoman is to drop by?’

“You’re the best!” she exclaimed and planted a kiss to the man’s cheek.

Alfred cocked his eyebrows.

“Well, I certainly am grateful, Miss.”

“So who’s throwing a party?” she asked chewing a pancake.

“Tony” Pepper answered.

Selina rolled her eyes.

“Who else?”

“At the Avengers’ Tower” Bruce said sharing knowing glances with Selina who gulped hastily her mouthful of food.

“That’s great news!” she exclaimed and Tony frowned at her enthusiasm. “It was about time! Am I in the list of guests?” she asked eagerly and Bruce choked his laugh.

But Clark who had stayed aloof thinking finally asked.

“You said that Superman will attend?” he frowned. “I’m not an Avenger.”

“Bruce will be there too” Tony stared at Bruce who wasn’t as thrilled as Selina in the prospect.

Leslie intervened.

“I don’t know if Bruce is capable of doing again a flight and New York has the same cold weather as Gotham. He just got over the cold from the Thanksgiving party – I don’t want him ill again: he managed to overcome it easily this time but I don’t want to put his organism in trial.”

Pepper looked pointedly at Tony who huffed.
“Leslie, you know that he fell ill because he slept in the cave and not because of the party so from that aspect he is more at danger getting ill here than in New York. As for the trip, he travelled here from the other side of the planet and nothing happened – the trip to New York with my jet is nothing. And I’ll take care of him and you are invited to the party as well.”

Leslie shook her head.

“I can’t abandon my clinic for so long and especially for a party.”

Tony pouted.

“Les, you realize that Falcone is gone for good?” he cocked his eyebrows.

But the firm doctor answered him with a sharp glance.

“That’s irrelevant!”

Tony closed his eyes defeated.

“Don’t tell me Batman will be at your party?” Selina chuckled because she saw Bruce’s discomfort and wanted to ease up the vibe.

Alfred who after Bruce’s gesture had sat too cocked an eyebrow.

“Do you wish that I prepare your best Bat suit, sir?”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Well, Batman might be an animal but a party animal, right?” Tony explained. “So Bruce Wayne will be at the party.”

“Bruce Wayne isn’t a party animal, as well…” Bruce commented and Tony began losing his good mood afraid that his friend changed his mind.

Clark locked eyes with the billionaire.

“Okay, I understand Bruce attending: he is your best friend…”

“And I owe my life to the Avengers” Bruce added “so it is the least I can do to saw my gratitude and support them in this new beginning” he fixed his eyes on Tony. “Right?”

Tony shook his head.

“I want you there because you are my friend – only that. Actually, we owe you our lives” he said soberly. “Weren’t for you Bagdana would have killed us all.”

But Bruce shook it off.

“What I said wasn’t sarcasm: I really feel gratitude to you and your friends for fighting the League of Shadows and saving me and the world.”

Tony chuckled.

“Well, thank you on their behalf. That means you didn’t change your mind…” he narrowed his eyes suspiciously.
“You know I don’t like parties, Tony… But I’ll come.”

“After all, I always need help with Tony in a party” Pepper snorted.

Clark huffed impatiently.

“Excuse me: what did you mean by Superman attending?”

“That Superman is a guest too” Tony said casually and drank his espresso. “Avengers worked with you in that battle and Ironman fought alongside you in Metropolis’ subway station; so it’d be rude to not ask you to join us.”

Well, Clark wouldn’t have given a damn if he wasn’t a guest but Bruce would attend too so even if Superman wasn’t a guest he’d have gone as Kent to watch for… ‘tresspassers’. He felt Bruce’s eyes on him and blushed because probably the younger man figured him out.

“I want to show” Tony continued “our true intention to cooperate with every force of good in this planet. So I thought that this guy Flash would be a very welcome addition to the list – Superman knows where to find him.”

Clark shook his head pressing his lips.

“He has a demanding day job and Central City is his domain – I’ll contact him but I can’t guarantee…” then he heard something strange: Bruce was chuckling.

Soon everyone’s eyes were on him.

“Master Bruce?” Alfred inquired softly and Bruce bit his bottom lip.

“It’ll look like the biggest costume party in the world…” he laughed. “You should have thrown it at Halloween…”

Tony ruffled his hair troubled.

“Says the man who dresses like a huge bat…” he spat and showed his tongue to Bruce. “And we won’t be wearing our suits…”

Bruce seemed shocked by that.

“What about secrecy?”

“Not everyone shares your obsession with secrecy.”

Clark lolled his head on the side.

“It’s not his only obsession…” he said snidely.

Bruce snorted.

“You keep your true identity secret as well” he snapped at Clark.

Tony nodded.

“That’s true, little guy. So the dress code in my party is quite free to choice. Mmm, I wanted to invite Wonder Woman too – she saved many people, in many different occasions most recently at Metropolis” he stared at Bruce almost apologizing “I mean if the UN honored her it’ll strike badly if we didn’t invite her. But I doubt she’ll condescend to our humble party…”

Clark seemed lost all of a sudden, the remembrance of Diana returning back to him like a flood.

“I’m sure she’ll be eager to come when she hears that Superman will attend” Bruce commented having seen Clark’s expression.

Clark turned to him as if someone punched him with a Kryptonite glove but Bruce was chewing a pancake.

Tony who had an immense experience with relationships in trouble pouted narrowing his eyes.

“Ow! Ow! Did I miss an episode or something?” he asked a bit pissed because if Kent was making his little guy unhappy, he had some Kryptonite stock from Luthor’s labs.

“Many episodes, handsome!” Selina said dryly.

But Bruce pressed his lips.

“I mean that she is Superman’s ally and I dare say friend so if she knows that someone she cherishes so much will be there, maybe she’d bear the presence of mortals for his sake.”

Clark nodded relieved that Bruce meant that because from the moment Stark spoke about heroes who helped people he was feeling it’d be a big injustice if Diana wasn’t there; and the truth was he wanted her there.

Yet Tony wasn’t so convinced and Selina even more.

“I’ll inform her the next time I’ll see her” Clark said with a grin. “It will be great for the world to see so many heroes united with only one purpose: save humanity and serve justice.”

Selina snorted and Leslie, Alfred and Bruce chuckled because it was like hearing her saying ‘bollocks!’.

“Well, let’s come to the point” Selina said petting Hero who had climbed to her lap. “Am I invited or I have to break and enter?”

Alfred lifted an eyebrow and chuckled.

“That would be a spectacular event, Master Anthony: Catwoman breaking into the safest building in New York amongst the Earth’s superheroes.”

Tony rubbed his chin.

“Mmm...A hot staff dressed in skin tight black leather highlighting delicious curves, carrying a whip...mmm...it’ll be the best event in any of my parties...better than that all naked stripper dancing on stage while Luthor bragged about his corp in that boring entrepreneurial congress. Of course nobody was hearing his bullshit not even the women in the crowd because I had arranged for an all naked male stripper too...Hehe!” he sighed. “Good times…” he exclaimed melancholic.

“She is my bodyguard, nurse and friend, so she’ll accompany me. Forget the leather and whip attraction” Bruce said and Selina sent him kisses.

Jonathan Crane stood before a rusty, old industrial working bench that already had transformed into his working bench – a handmade, sloppy, shitty laboratory but Scarecrow didn’t care about luxury only for effectiveness. And with the material he had brought with him from Jeremiah’s secret lab he could proceed with his creative genius.

In Jeremiah’s hideout chamber Jonathan Crane had established his own stock of chemicals and other material for his work; that started from the good years when he ran the nuthouse. Yet he was a leery man and always prepared for the worse: well, his childhood and teen experiences had forged him this way and he was really glad for that.

That was that made him stash in the old industrial area before Falcone’s fall a quite large amount of food with distant expiry date and of course water, drugs and…some guns, just in case. Also, a small TV set: the old industrial area was rich with generators so Jonathan had no problem watching the latest developments in Gotham.

Even now that he carefully mixed different liquids in tubes his one ear was focused on the news: everyone had forgotten him and discussed the news about Luthor – that dork billionaire. Well, that was good but still Scarecrow was angry that he overshadowed him. He’d make Gotham regret for underestimating him.

“I’m here for that, dude!” Jonathan frowned because although he was accustomed to hear Scarecrow’s voice this voice wasn’t in his mind and wasn’t familiar.

It was a sly, amused voice that echoed to the large storage room of the factory only a few buildings away from the ruins of Chickey’s factory where that nutcase Joker was captured by Batman. Jonathan was startled but his hand jerked instantly to his loaded gun and turned to the intruder.

Who with a lazy wave of his hand made the gun flew away. He had an annoying smirk in his face as he rolled his eyes.

“That’s not very polite from a scientist, huh?” he cackled.

Jonathan gritted his teeth and his lips trembled in rage. His uninvited guest wore strange attire that reminded of ancient times: black leather leggings, a green long tunic and a golden vest. His shoulder length greasy raven hair fell forward framing his narrow face where two eyes sparkled slyly as regarded him.

“And another loony escaped the Asylum?” Crane cocked an eyebrow and lolled his head. “The security was better in my days…”

The stranger walked towards him stretching smugly his body.

“I like escaping but Arkham wasn’t one of my residences though a very charming establishment and with very intriguing company…”

Crane narrowed his eyes.

“Who are you?”

The man lolled his head on the side curling his lips.

“I’m sure if you saw Thor you’d have recognized him at once…” he said snidely.

Crane’s eyebrows arched in sarcasm and he snorted.

“So…you claim that you are a…god?” he asked his voice cracked with amusement and his guest pursed his lips annoyed.

Suddenly, Crane’s tubes began exploding and the mad doctor noticed how focused the stranger was on the working bench.

“Stop it, you idiot! You’ll get us killed and you’ll bring cops here!” he twirled to his bench but he was too clever to try to intervene.

Then as suddenly as they began, the explosions stopped and the tubes returned to their previous condition. Crane turned his head looking lopsided at the smirking man.

“Who are you?”

The other snorted and rolled his eyes frustrated.

“Not much general knowledge in your CV, huh? Loki Laufeyjarson of Asgard.”

Crane shook his head unimpressed.

“A god with surname?” he snorted. “No wonder you’re not a celebrity…”

Loki began laughing entertained causing Crane’s puzzled look: this self-proclaimed god reminded him of a certain clown and he didn’t like it at all.

“You, humans, are very entertaining! I’ll give you that!” he shook his index finger and pierced Crane with his wicked stare. “Yeah, I’m not a celebrity…yet but I’m new to the field…and I’m up to an aggressive breakthrough.”

Crane turned his back uninterested and began meddling with his tubes. He shrugged.

“And to be here, you want something…”

Loki approached him.

“I like people like you, Dr. Crane…”

Crane turned to him with a smug shine of self-satisfaction in his eyes.

“You know me?”

Loki smirked.

“You consider yourself a celebrity, right? SCARECROW?!”

Jonathan saw in his mind himself with Scarecrow’s mask injecting his patients with multicolored liquids or spraying them with his fear toxin; and then he saw Ironman raking the floor around him with bullets terrorizing him. He knew that this Loki guy was in his brain.

“Well, it happens that I can penetrate anyone’s mind” except little Bruce’s “and you’re not” Loki arched his eyebrows and nodded. “I mean you’re not a celebrity but you’re interesting as your pal, the clown.”

Crane’s eyes widened as he remembered Joker’s mumblings about a god visiting him in his cell.

“You’re the god Joker said that he saw in his cell.”
“Who else could it be? Aphrodite?”

Jonathan rolled his eyes.

“Nice…” he snidely remarked. “That dork forced his presence on me so much that now I share his hallucinations…”

“Bitch please…” Loki crossed his arms and a throne appeared behind him.

He sat and looked at Crane.

“Do I look like a hallucination?”

“Absolutely!”

Loki laughed and the second floor of the warehouse cracked and began descending rapidly. Crane’s eyes bulged and made to run for cover but he realized that his ankles were bound together by something like a cloud; he stared at his visitor whose grin had reached his ears.

“Do I look like a hallucination, Jonathan?” he asked calmly as if an entire floor wasn’t falling on them – on the other hand, he was a god so he couldn’t die contrary to Jonathan.

“Okay, you’re not!” he screamed. “You’re real! Damn it!”

The ceiling stopped in midair and returned in its place as if nothing happened. Jonathan’s breaths began normalizing.

“Can you release my legs?” he asked.

Loki leaned his head towards him and laughed. Jonathan ankles were free and he walked closer to the throne that was made of gold and wood that resembled nothing Jonathan had ever seen.

“I know it’s a bit showing off” Loki said looking sideways to his throne “but when you start your career you need some moves of bedazzlement.”

“What do you want, Loki of Asgard?” Scarecrow took control and raised an eyebrow with confidence.

Loki pouted innocently.

“The same with you: to become a celebrity” he pointed his index finger towards Jonathan and the doctor felt it without the finger making any contact with his chest. “And you, my friend, have talents I need… So are you in?”

Jonathan lolled his head on the side and stared sarcastic.

“Do I have a choice?”

Loki yanked his head and eyed the human.

“Always…but not today” he laughed. “C’mon, Scarecrow, it’ll be lovely; and you’ll have your revenge on…” he pouted thoughtful “whatever…” he settled. “Besides, what better you have to do? Wait for the cops or the Bat to bust you? Or playing with poor nutcases? I offer a freelance contract” a modern looking paper with a big signature saying Loki emerged “you offer me your services but you’re not bound to me – frankly” he squinted “you’re not my type. All in all, free to do whatever you want! By the way, I like your mask!” suddenly his head was in the Scarecrow mask. “Spooky!”
Jonathan rolled his eyes but the prospect of being in the same team as a free partner of a god was very interesting.

“Deal” he said flatly and his mask left Loki’s face.

The god stood and his throne vanished; he turned to leave but lolled his head to Crane.

“Your hideout is nice…but staying in here is too risky – someone could figure out…and I don’t want a precious partner being captured. So I’ll offer you a safer safe house. At least, till we end our cooperation…then you can choose where you want to go.”

Bruce was reading the logs Arkham Asylum kept about its staff. Ted Bradley and Martin Sanders were the names that interested him: the first had been attacked by Crane and the second was responsible for the former doctor but one day before his escape, he fell ill.

Bruce could hear Clark and Tony snorting at him that he was paranoid for searching the victims. Yet this job needed some paranoia – especially, when you’re dealing with paranoid criminals.

Martin Sanders was a veteran orderly, much experienced and hired by Dr. Cooper before Crane was positioned in the head of the Asylum. On the other hand, Ted Bradley was hired during Crane’s management. Of course, that didn’t mean that the man was fond of Crane since working for someone can make you either his supporter or his hater. Ted wasn’t married and lived with his brother Casey.

Bruce put Casey Bradley’s name on his own search software and it gave results that included police records. Investigating the relatives of someone who was involved in a case was necessary because sometimes it shed light to the most unexplainable aspects of the case. And Casey was a difficult case himself: several arrests for drug use even during Falcone’s reign – obviously the youth, only 16 then, didn’t have connections with Gotham’s Emperor and didn’t enjoy preferential treatment from the police. Yet he was released sooner due to being underage; he was committed in various rehabilitation clinics in Gotham – cheap ones – but soon after his releases he lapsed again.

Till his brother, Ted, was hired at Arkham Asylum. After that there was no results concerning Casey neither from police nor from clinics for addicts, which meant two things: either he miraculously came over his addiction or he found other ways – under the radar – to get his dose. And a psychiatric institution offered an amazing stock of psychotropic drugs and in big quantities. However, if Ted had stolen drugs from the Asylum, he’d be caught eventually and fired. And in his file there was no mention of any disciplinary slip: the orderly was exemplar.

Bruce rubbed his chin and for an instance turned his eyes to the flames dancing inside the marble fireplace. He chose the study instead of the cave because he didn’t want to make his people worry since only yesterday he ran a fever. But he definitely missed his cave and his monstrous computer though the Cosmos tablet was convenient enough since it was connected with the giant processor downstairs.

It was after the splendid lunch Alfred offered them that Bruce found the chance to slip in his study and do some work.

He opened the file about Martin Sanders and scrolled down to the report about his health that was attached to his petition for sick leave. There was no specific diagnose but the doctor of Mercy General Hospital was firm about the man’s need to stay in the hospital for treatment; in his description of symptoms were extreme nausea and vomit fits, vertigo, migraine and stomach cramps. That last one made Bruce frown: Ted Bradley had said that Crane had complained about cramps and he thought that maybe the former doctor had been infected by the same disease with Martin – that’s what he said to the police.

So Crane knew which symptom would make his temporary orderly think he probably had the same illness like his colleague. Only the said colleague fell ill while out of duty, outside the Asylum’s premises…one could say that between colleagues such things are learnt fast. But that doesn’t change the fact that Crane knew what symptom to fake to make his orderly transfer him to the infirmary.

Which made Bruce wonder if it was another Crane’s substance that caused Sanders’ illness. If Crane managed to possess his fear toxin inside the Asylum then why not some other substance too?

Bruce drummed his fingers on the oak desk that was an exact replica of the one his father had. There was no doubt that Crane had planned this: he slipped the substance to his orderly to make him ill knowing that he’d be replaced by someone who probably was lenient to him. And since Crane had no access to Sanders’ food another orderly could have done it…Damn! Of course Sanders’ illness and Crane’s escape could be connected by chance but when you’re dealing with these people nothing happens at random.

Ted Bradley was the key because he might have been attacked by Crane but that might have happened to shake off any suspicion – Crane wasn’t a fool. Moreover who else could have given Crane access to his toxins than an orderly?

Bruce pressed his lips: if only Batman could interrogate Bradley! But that was impossible and Clark might wear the armor but this wasn’t his thing. Of course he would share his insights with Jim yet even if the Police took the man in for interrogation, Bruce doubted that they could keep him jailed based on some assumptions and a hunch.

And there remained another question: how Crane got out of the Asylum. Fine, he knew the ancient Mansion better than anyone and could conceal himself in some crypt through a trapdoor since the old manors had many of these: Wayne Manor was a fine example. But even if he crawled in a crypt Clark would have found him with his vision since all the lead had been removed from the building some months ago as part of the renovation…

Wait! That’s it… If Crane used trapdoors and secret passages then he might ended up in a crypt so ancient and so unknown that was still rich in lead. Of course…Bruce didn’t have the chance to do much reading all these years but from his childhood he remembered the spooky stories about the secret chambers deep down on earth where Jeremiah Arkham tortured his patients. What if Crane had discovered those chambers? And where these chambers might lead?

Bruce looked around: he needed a diagram of the Asylum and an ancient map of Gotham. The first was easy but Bruce didn’t want the diagram of the modern building and he didn’t trust much the ancient maps that libraries had which were made in the twentieth century: Gotham’s deception was everywhere.

His eyes fell on the whole wall library behind him, one of the few things of the Wayne house that Falcone left in its place because it was really precious and impressed his guests. Bruce remembered like a dream his father perusing through the pages of really ancient books.

He began reading the titles: thank goodness, his father had signs carved in wood that named each category of books. Medicine wasn’t what he was looking for; neither gardening; nor painting, sculpture; ancient classics, no; philosophy, no.

It was a blessing that Clark made that chair to satisfy his every need so only with the thought of needing to reach the top levels, the chair hovered and brought him where he wanted. Thankfully, he didn’t fear heights…

History…Maybe that but maybe something more specified. There: Gotham’s old maps. There were four books and Bruce took them and willed the chair to bring him down.

He browsed through the books and finally he found a map that depicted the city of Gotham the era of Jeremiah Arkham. He focused on the portion of the map where Arkham’s Mansion was; then he brought a map showing the city’s urban design of the time. He licked his lips and took the hand scanner that wasn’t bigger than a common flashlight and sent the two maps to his processor in the cave, giving the order to cross them.

He eagerly waited, watching his tablet’s screen for the results.

“Sonova…” he exclaimed.

The city’s old sewers – that was long abandoned – where running under the Asylum. It was very possible that Jeremiah in his madness prepared an escape route connecting his secret chambers with the sewers: an ancient blueprint of the old Mansion showed that the foundations reached too deep – and Crane having explored the place knew it and followed the path. Much like Bruce had explored the underground cave system to wage his war.

He took a piece of paper and scrawled down where the sewers ended and realized it was a tricky business: the old sewers’ system was rambling ending up in many locations. The good thing was that the sewer system of Narrows those days was separate from the rest city’s so Crane could walk out only somewhere in the island. Of course from there he could head to the rest of the city but police was watching every street and bridge.

So the old sewers in the Narrows ended at the surrounding shores – that is to say, the docks and the abandoned warehouses. But there were also various manholes – thankfully, the design had their locations – and someone using them could emerge even at the Haven. That thought froze his spine; but he immediately crossed it out: the Haven had much security and too many people swarmed the place.

The most possible places for a wanted man was the docks/warehouses but there frequented small time crooks, addicts and creeps and Bruce doubted that Crane would want to meet them – more so since the police already had the docks under discreet but close surveillance. And then as he studied the map created from the crossing of the designs, it dawned to him: the old industrial area!

Images of dense smoke, giant tongues of fire and beams collapsing invaded his mind and his lungs felt squeezed by lack of air and his heart convulsed from agony for the life of the child he protected under his cape…

He closed his eyes and breathed calmly. The industrial area was one of the points with manholes and it was near the Asylum; also, it explained why Clark couldn’t locate Crane since the old factories and warehouses were full with lead and every kind of minerals and chemicals. Joker had chosen the exact area, so why not Crane too?

He called Jim in Batman’s voice and told him about the industrial area. Of course, Bruce would prefer busting Crane himself…

Now he had to wait…and if this had no result he’d focus on Bradley. In the meantime, he could work other things: he maximized the window with Wonder Woman’s interview to Lois Lane.

LL: First of all your English are quite impressive for an inhabitant of a different world.
WW: Thank you. I have the blessing of Athena, the Goddess of Wisdom so for me it is as you say a piece of cake to comprehend and use the language the people around me speak.

LL: What made you abandon your island and decide to inhabit our world?

WW: I found a human almost dead in a deserted island; I brought him to my island and treated him to health. I had many discussions with him till he was alright and we returned to his city. But all this intelligence I took from Mr. Queen made me realize that I couldn’t stay indifferent to the suffering and injustice in a world so near mine. Amazons are great warriors to thwart any menace coming from the outside world to ours yet my divine, noble ancestry didn’t let my conscience at peace knowing that innocent, weak human beings howl to the deities for help.

Bruce pressed his lips and shook his head in disapproval.

LL: So…is this a charity case for you?

WW: It is exactly what it is for Superman: responsibility. We owe to fix this world and show the humans the right way.

Bruce snorted and he was sure that Lois had done the same.

LL: It is your care for humans what guides your actions then?

WW: What else?

LL: What are your intentions about your action? I mean Superman cooperates with UN; Avengers and S.H.I.E.L.D. made new agreements with the government and the global organizations.

WW: I’m here to help humankind; if Superman believes that cooperating with UN is an effective way to that purpose, then why not?

LL: From your sayings I get the impression that you opt for an alliance with Superman.

WW: Who else? I mean his fame has reached even Themyscira: he is a noble, worthy warrior for an Amazon Princess to fight alongside.

Bruce could imagine Lois’ eyebrows arch in sarcasm thinking ‘only fight?’ but she was a respectable reporter and kept an objective stance at her interviews.

LL: You mean that you don’t want to fight with other heroes like Ironman or Captain America?

WW: Who are these?

Her smug face flashed before Bruce’s eyes.

LL: Human superheroes who saved the planet from dangerous criminals.

WW: Nice…But I consider humans a liability during battle; I love humans but they are weak so it is best to stay behind and let the true warriors do the job.

LL: Humans are not weak. Besides, Amazons are human beings too and you, as their Princess, fight side by side with them.

WW: You can’t seriously compare the Amazons with common human beings. Human heroes can do their things but when real threats appear Superman and me will be there to secure that nobody would endanger innocent lives.
Those soft knocks on the door was definitely Alfred’s.

“Come in.”

“I’m sorry to interrupt, sir” he arched his eyebrows “though it is Sunday…”

“Sunday is a day of rest for those who work all week and I had the entire Saturday for rest – besides, I’m not doing hard work.”

Alfred remained expressionless.

“You have a visitor, sir.”

Bruce frowned.

“I didn’t have any meeting arranged…”

“Indeed, Master Bruce; but I believe that you’ll definitely want to see this visitor.”

Superman was heading north to his Fortress for his daily tests and finally could understand Bruce’s loath every time someone pressed him to do this. Of course, his own tests weren’t as inflictive as Bruce’s: Clark knew that when Leslie examined Bruce for the first time after Falcone’s fall, certainly must have him undergo a full examination in his private areas – he was a rape victim after all…

Clark shuddered, imagining Bruce’s feelings as a stranger was searching the parts of his body that caused him the greatest pain and humiliation. He really admired that human…

Suddenly he heard cries from Metropolis and then the noise of a fight: one was fighting with many and those many fired but the battle continued. He pressed his lips and dived towards the earth. A hundred feet away his smell told him what his vision was to tell few seconds later: a being with superb perfume was fighting with stinking thugs.

Diana had no trouble fighting those thugs even if they were a pack yet Superman was so angry that stormed at the few standing and sent them in a second to slump unconscious.

They had attacked a couple of tourists that cowered in a corner – Gotham wasn’t the only city with criminality and after Intergang’s ghostly appearance small timers became more aggressive hoping to be picked for members.

“Are you alright?” he asked Diana seeing her porcelain upper arm bleeding from a scratch above her gold bracelet.

Superman cast a fast glance at the alley and immediately understood; the thugs in their panic for having Wonder Woman pounding them opened fire and the Amazon to protect the humans used her body to shield them. Diana must have used her lasso to shatter the bullets but some shrapnel hit her – the golden rope was still clenched in her fist unfolded and smoking.

Police sirens were approaching.

Diana smiled in her enchanting smile.

“I’m fine; they can scratch me but nothing more…” she said bravely. “I thought that you would be with your chosen one…Humans cherish Sundays.”
Superman nodded.

“People’s needs never stop.”

Police cars entered the alley and Diana wasn’t too happy to see them.

“I don’t like being crowded” she answered to Clark’s questioning look. “Would you join me?” she was already flying out of the alley. “If you don’t have something else to do of course” she winked.

Clark thought about his destination: he would go later. Diana should look that wound. He followed as the cops handcuffed the thugs and took care of the frightened couple.

He was side by side with Diana in the blue sky and she stopped. The scratch in her upper arm had healed and the velvet skin was perfect again. Suddenly Clark noticed another scratch in her right breast: the bullet had torn the fabric a bit and a part of her nipple was visible and bleeding. Think, brown nipple with drops of blood that seemed like calling him to clean the porcelain breast that was so round and juicy…

He shook his head and Diana laughed eyeing her breast that instantly returned to its unmarred condition as the fabric.

“I guess you don’t see much of this, huh?” she remarked snidely and Clark blushed. “Oh, c’mon… it’s not a crime to look, is it? Don’t tell me Bruce is so ungrateful that is jealous of such things?”

“He is not…actually, he is perfect. And I wasn’t staring at your…breast – I was worried about the wound.”

Diana nodded amused.

“If you say so…Care to accompany me to a fly or Bruce would make your life difficult?”

Clark laughed.

“No, on the contrary” they began flying as the sun started setting. “Tony Stark is throwing a party at the Avengers’ Tower in New York and he’d like to invite you…I’ll be there too” he hastened to add “and almost every Avenger.”

She cocked an impressed eyebrow on the last while her eyes shone when Superman told that he’d be there.

“Bruce will be there too?”

Clark nodded.

“Then I’ll come. I’ll offer my help to your human since he is afraid of people knowing your relationship.”

“He isn’t afraid; it’s just…How you’re going to help?”

She yanked her long hair and some blue shine hit his eyes.

“I have heard what people say about you and me…It might not be the truth but definitely serves Bruce. If I am there people won’t think that you came for him…So your enemies will target me not your frail Prince – unlike him I’m not afraid of your enemies and it would have been my honor if the whole galaxy knew you loved me.”
“You’re unfair to him, Diana” she smiled patronizingly. “He isn’t afraid and he is proud of our relationship but we don’t need the whole world to know.”

She clenched her jaw and nodded, disbelief sparkling in her eyes.

“She doesn’t have a problem with my invitation?” she cocked an eyebrow.

“Of course not. I think that if you two speak you’d become friends.”

Diana shook her head laughing and with a sharp descend dived to the dark, cold waters of the ocean. Superman descended too and floated above the water surface.

She emerged after a while, her long shining hair sticking to her face dripping water to her half opened mouth enhancing her beauty.

“I love icy water!” she panted as if aroused. “In Themyscira, the sea is warm but the island has three waterfalls, the one of them coming from Hera’s mountain which is the highest. The water there it is frozen, the best for strengthening the body.”

She raised her blue eyes to him smiling.

“Don’t tell me you’re scared of cold water?”

Superman’s eyes were fixed on hers but he could hear every drop of water travelling her gorgeous body. He dived too and the icy water didn’t feel cold at all.

“I used to stand under the rushing waterfall completely naked” Diana purred closing her eyes in remembrance. “Nothing compares with the brushing of the icy water in your bare flesh…” she chuckled. “But I wouldn’t strip here because Bruce would be so jealous…”

Clark was really happy for that as the corner of his eye fixed on her breasts that bulged from the cold and her thick nipples rock hard pushed the fabric of her bosom. Her laughter was like melody as she dived and then emerged from the water.

“Do you have a problem with Diana being at the party?”

Clark wrapped his arms around Bruce’s waist that dressed in his pajamas insisted on working on his damn tablet even at bed.

“Why would I have a problem?” Bruce replied still focused on the data that filled his divided screen: he was working both on Intergang and Crane.

“You know Intergang is my jurisdiction” he said playfully kissing Bruce’s ear but the truth was that he was a bit irritated because sometimes it felt like Bruce showed off.

“Not if they are behind the raids at LexLabs – LexLabs belong to Wayne Enterprises so that makes Intergang my problem too.”

Clark huffed.

“It can wait till tomorrow…”

Bruce stopped typing and inhaled.
"They didn’t find Crane…"

Bruce had told Clark about his suspicions that the escapee must be in the old industrial area.

"You’ll find him…” he breathed in Bruce’s ear and took the tablet from him using his speed to place it in the vanity to the other end of the room.

In a second he was back stripping Bruce completely and laying him flat on his back. He straddled him and leaned over his face.

“I was thinking that you might don’t want her there because you’re…you know jealous of her…”

Bruce felt as if he was hit by a lash. He narrowed his eyes.

“If you’re true to what you constantly say to me, then why being jealous? On the other hand, if you lie to me and you fell for her then what’s the difference if she isn’t in the party?”

“I’m always true, Bruce…” he whispered and let his naked weight touch Bruce’s flesh. He was glad Selina took Hero in her apartment for the night…

His mouth plunged in Bruce’s neck and began sucking rubbing his body sensually; after the hours in the water with Diana he really needed Bruce’s body.

Bruce wrapped his hands around Clark’s livid body and moaned but Clark grasped his wrists and pinioned his hands on the mattress above his head; Bruce grunted from the goosebumps this move caused and Clark laughed massaging with circling motions his breasts.

His hands were held there by Clark’s one hand grip and the Man of Steel with burning intensity lapped his pectorals like a thirsty animal. Bruce moaned more and closed his eyes enjoying his lover’s gentle sucking of his nipples. When the sucking became stronger almost painful and his heart began pounding remembering before his brain.

Bruce tried to free his hand to touch Clark in order to make him go slower but the grip was unrelenting if not stronger. He had to remind to his panicking mind that this was Clark…

“Clark…” he tried to catch his attention.

Bruce’s nipples were pink and small but using his mouth he could make them bigger, more satisfying – besides Bruce loved those ministrations.

The sucking became harder and stronger and Bruce had to clench his teeth to not scream.

“Stop that!” he growled.

Clark lifted his head and looked puzzled.

“What do you think you’re doing?!”

Clark could see Bruce’s face drenched in sweat and his eyes glistening angry; but he wasn’t doing anything wrong, damn it!

“Make love to the one I love…”

Bruce shook his head defiantly.

“Free my hands!” he spat and Clark did it immediately noticing that he had reddened the flesh.
Clark took the fragile hands and kissed the wrists.

“Bruce, people do these things while having sex” he said softly as if teaching a virgin. “And I know you love nipple playing…”

Bruce had calmed his heart but not his rage.

“Not like this! I know what this is!” he abruptly shut his mouth unwilling to say more but Clark understood.

He cupped Bruce’s head caressing with his thumbs; he wanted to plant soft, reassuring kisses but his condition wasn’t fit.

“They tortured you through your nipples?” he whispered with his voice heavy from sharing the same pain that boy must have experienced.

Bruce lolled his head on the side and didn’t answer, his eyes blank, lost in his past. Clark pressed his lips.

“I’m sorry, baby…I should have…”

Known? How could he possibly know the range of cruelty those men inflicted to a child? He wasn’t a pervert…And Bruce wouldn’t speak to anyone. It was Bruce’s fault actually…If he had told him, Clark would never have done this…

He sighed; he felt so tired fighting every moment with Bruce’s ghosts. He wanted them to be happy but times like this it felt like a lost battle…and Bruce was dragging him along…

“I hope that at least he satisfies your needs…and he does not torment you all the time with guilt that’s not yours…He made your gallant heart fall for him and now leaves you thirsty…unsatisfied, famished…But it is your choice, Kal El…” Diana repeated in her sad but firm voice.

He eyed Bruce wearing his clothes in a hurry and he helped him. Clark cuddled his cold body and settled him on the mattress spooning him and rubbing soothing circles to his back.

“What Jor El said?” Bruce asked calmly.

Clark’s heart dropped; being with Diana made him completely forgot about the tests. Nothing bad happened – he’d go tomorrow.

“Everything fine, like yesterday.”

Bruce turned his head to him and Clark nibbled his bottom lip.

“It’s always your Clark…”

But Bruce’s eyes were turned inside; his soul floated to Gotham’s sky.
Chapter 28

The bright sun warmed his skin even under the thick shadow of the intertwined trees; he was calm, his soul free from every trouble and sadness as if he was in Heaven, except he knew he was in Earth and well... he was very much alive. Some distant clangs reached his ears as if people were training with swords but what towered every other sound was the echo of the waterfall reached his ears alluring him there…

A small lake lay seductively in the heart of the mountain amongst the ancient trees; the water fell from a steep hill forming a crystal curtain. The refreshing smell of icy cold water enchanted his nostrils as his steps took him there and then every other smell vanished as the intoxicating perfume of every flower in Earth sprang boldly.

His eyes which were mesmerized by the natural scenery popped out as the flowery perfume became stronger and clenched his melting heart: the waters split in half in the middle of their descent and from a huge cave in a niche of the rock a figure walked elegantly to the edge of the narrow ledge: she was completely naked but the sun was blinding him forbidding his eyes taking in every detail.

Suddenly she jumped some feet above the rock and bent her body in a gracious dive descending rapidly to the lake. She stayed under the surface for some time and he worried that she might have hurt but then she emerged inside the waterfall gasping with pleasure.

Her long black hair was plastered to her back and head, blue shines emanated in the sun’s rays. She was tall and lean but perfectly shaped muscles built her body: shapely, endless legs ended up to juicy, sturdy thighs and then with a breathtaking curve to her hips. She was standing profile and he could admire both the protruding, firm buttocks and her groin...Her flat, covered with layers of iron abdominals belly supported strong ribs and a broad back; he could see only one of her breasts that had bulged from the water’s coldness; its brown, thick nipple erect dripping water that had done a pleasant trip over the hill of her breast.

She leaned her neck backwards to lead the water to fall abundantly to her chest; her face was beautiful with heart, shaped rich lips promising pleasure beyond heaven…

Suddenly, she turned towards him having sensed his presence. A bright smile dazzled him as she moved her body to face him, confident in her complete nakedness.

“Kal...what a pleasant surprise! Join me!”

It was like an order and Hell, he couldn’t disobey. Encouraged by her easiness in nudity, discarded his own uniform that anyways was too suffocating from the moment he cast eyes on that Amazon goddess...

He walked effortlessly in the shining waters overcoming easily the resistance and she moved from the waterfall towards him. He could float but he needed to feel the cold water cooling his body.

He stood before her and neither of them had any problem for being exposed to the other’s eyes... as if it was meant to be.

“Diana...” he breathed and she gave a toothy smile that made her face even more beautiful.

“I knew you’d come...I knew you eventually would see the truth...” her voice was firm as always but somehow lower, sexier.
She wrapped around his neck her strong built arms that were still adorned with golden bracelets in the upper arms and locked eyes with him sending flames to rapidly burn his entire body. With her usual braveness attacked his lips with her wet ones and began gently caressing, exploring his intentions.

His breath had halted in his lungs, his heart raced; he knew it was what he wanted, what he always wanted. At first, he hesitated: a small, shy corner of his mind still nudged him and filled him with regret. But he was certain that this was the real thing for him; the one that when he’d emerge in happiness will erase every bitterness, every misery, every gray sky... He saw Gotham’s gray sky and for an instance his good mood almost evaporated yet Diana’s eyes were there to bring back the jubilant sun and her soft, delicious lips the optimism, life’s energy...

He enveloped her powerful body in his arms and her breasts brushed his chest as her smooth hips his waking groin. He chased hungrily her lips and locked them in a fascinating dance till their tongues got entangled exploring each other’s mouth. Their bodies rubbed together harshly and for just a fleeting moment he was afraid of hurting or causing injuries to a healing fragile human body... but this body was as strong and invincible as his and his heart jolted happily, free at least to enjoy what he should.

Now their hands were fondling each other’s body with violent almost brutal movements; their lips still locked twisting in desperate pleasure, without any fear for the lack of air in their lungs — their healthy strong lungs and their healthy, strong hearts that could dive into excessiveness fearless...

His length was half hard and Diana’s nails that scratched his deltoid in her passion to get the body she longed for made him go rock hard. Her other hand was tousling violently his wet locks as his hands grabbed her rock firm buttocks. She moaned in synchrony with his grunts and ground her slightly hairy pubis to his groin.

It was too much for him and she felt his need laughing.

“What you wait for, Kal? I’m not a scary little boy...”

He grabbed her thighs and heaved them slightly because Diana didn’t need more. She wrapped her endless legs around his hips and God! it was the best feeling in his life! His dripping penis storming at her waiting entrance with a hard, swift motion that made him worry that he hurt her.

But Diana was cupping his face glowing, her moan the only indication that she was just entered. She was towering him the way he held her thighs high and her happy face felt like the sun behind her. He thrust in her and Diana clenched more his face moaning delighted...

“Stronger, Kal...” she whispered in his ear and began lapping his neck. “I’m not going to break... You’re free at last...”

Her melodic and stern voice was the fuel for his passion: he began thrusting, in and out, in and out, stronger, deeper as she pulled his locks brutal to lead him, strengthening at the same time her legs’ grasp around his buttocks almost painfully... How he enjoyed that sense! But she pushed him to go faster and stronger moving her hips and sucking his length in the deepest of her body clenching her vagina... Her hot, warm, velvet insides felt like heaven... and her inner thighs rubbed on his pelvis like the finest silk in the world.

But she wanted more... she had been waiting this for too long and her insides burnt like a thirsty sun, an exploding sun and his body obliged free to act without any fear, to satisfy its needs... cause Diana’s frantic grunts and groans and her legs more tightening surely would have shattered any human bones; as her nails that dag his back would have stabbed a lesser being...
Yet there was no fear…just jubilation, just explosive passion and wet breaths and his tongue licking her breasts that were dripping wet but from sweat; his hands fondling brutally her body’s curves and secrets; his pants faster than ever, her heart leaping from exhilaration upon his; his penis more alive than ever; his body was floating above the waters without knowing.

He moved them under the waterfall and Diana gave out an excited yell, bending her neck backwards. He took advantage to trail the curve of her neck and then the dimple leading to her chest; the running water made her taste and smell even more captivating…His mouth ended up in her swelling breasts so soft and delicious that he was gnawing to Diana’s immense pleasure that showed off by her violent clutch at his buttocks.

She was moving up and down to increase her pleasure, panting and groaning loudly pushing his buttocks forwards to give more impetus to his thrusts.

He was drinking the water that fell from her nipple and it was the most delicious liquid in the world that intoxicated him and made his length throb frantically ready to explode mimicking the sound of the waterfall…

Clark jolted upright from the bed and stormed to the bathroom; he hardly made it to the bathtub before he ejaculated. He stayed before the porcelain tub numb because he felt the greatest satisfaction of his life; he was panting as his mind remade the sensations of the soft, strong body of his dream.

He closed his eyes and ruffled his hair; it was wrong…he was acting like a horny teen that was carried away by his hormones. He opened the faucet and his semen was washed off; he raised his eyebrows – it was too much even for his standards and he was grateful that had managed to get in the bathroom on time…He’d have soaked the whole bed, the mattress and poor Bruce. And then apart from the embarrassment he’d have to explain; imagine Alfred trying to clean his mess. A nightmare.

Thankfully, he had slept naked so his clothes were safely hanged from the back of an armchair. He stepped into the tub and opened the shower though the falling water was a constant reminder of his dream; however he had to clean himself and lower his temperature.

He wore a bathrobe and returned to the bedroom to dress. It was still five in the morning but he’d go to work earlier – after all, Bruce wasn’t supposed to wake before eight.

Bruce…His heart ached for him contrasting the avalanche of carnal pleasure before. That dream alone offered him more pleasure than Bruce ever did…He bit hard his bottom lip chastising and cursing himself because that was unfair. Bruce was so much more than just a body to satisfy his needs – Bruce was everything: his salvation, his soul mate…

“No! No, please, no; no more, sir; please, master…” his voice was really young and pitiful begging like this but it hurt so much…

His arms were tied above his head, outstretched and even his good arm pained while his cripple right hand was crucifying him. But the pain that towered everything else was of his chest. And then became even worse as the sucking was stronger, as Chill obeyed his boss. His small legs shook violently tied spread in the two corners of the table bent in the knees.

He cried like a baby with sobs and whines but the worse was feeling that he was ready to piss himself…
“No...” he begged but it sounded like a meow.

He had his eyes closed but he felt immediately his master’s gunpoint pressing his left arm.

“I know ya like it, ya littl’ bitch...ask for more or I’m gonna fill yar arm with bullets an’ then ya’ll be moping the floor with yar tongue! Say it!” he roared and the gunpoint stabbed his flesh as Chill pumped more stretching his nipples to their limits.

“M...more...” he mumbled because his right arm hurt too much and he didn’t want his left hurting the same – and then how he was supposed to do his chores? His heart pounded and that increased the pain in his breasts.

“Louder!” Falcone screamed in a mix of threat and delighted laughter.

And he obeyed asking for more and then begging for more till his master was satisfied from his swollen nipples and black and blue breasts. Falcone took off the glass-like things that were stuck to his breasts and his body convulsed violently because it hurt more...his face was drenched from tears and saliva had dripped from his mouth to wet his neck – he was sobbing.

Sobbing and whining and groaning louder and faster between his gasps as Falcon rubbed the swollen nipples between his fingers, thrilled from his feat.

And then Chill brought a strange tool that looked like a gun and gave it to Falcon who grinned.

His eyes bulged and his breath became even faster because he knew that there was more pain coming.

“No...” he whined between his sobs shaking weakly his head; he saw his master bringing the strange gun to his right nipple.

Falcone smiled and pulled the trigger. His pitiful howl echoed in the room as a nail pierced the base of his nipple splashing blood in the air.

“Please...” a second nail to the tip of his swollen nipple was his answer and his stretched body jerked from pain and violent sobs.

Both of them were sniggering when Falcon did the same with his left nipple; their amusement became greater as his body was trembling uncontrollably and his pants became louder. He had his eyes closed and his left fist clenched but that wasn’t enough to fight the pain as the nails in his right nipple began burning him.

He widened his eyes and saw flames behind the liquid curtain over his eyes: Falcon had ignited his lighter and burnt the nails sending the burning through his tortured nipple. Falcon glanced at Chill and the giant lit his lighter doing the same with his left nipple.

“Please! I beg you, master, stop!” he yelled as the metal inside his tender flesh burnt him; his stretched legs convulsed in a futile effort to escape. “No! No! No!”

A slap made his head spin on the metallic table and the mobster clenched his jaw forcing him to look at his face.

“Whine an’ moan an’ sob like a good slut or else I’ll pump yar tiny willie an’ make a hedgehog after!”

He gulped and nodded, clenching his jaw as they continued their entertainment lashing his breasts with a crop…it was minutes later or hours – he didn’t know for sure because his mind was slipping in and out of consciousness.

The so familiar and so horrific sound of Falcone’s fly lowering made his tired heart sank…the grip of the enormous hands in his tied hips were like a tombstone and his master casually but brutally impaled him with his rock hard member leaning his weight upon him to bite hard his battered, bleeding nipple. He whined and sobbed causing a cruel snigger and an even crueler thrust…He cried and his body writhed desperately…

Clark who was buttoning the last of his ugly shirt turned like a robot when heard the thrashing; it wasn’t a very violent movement but his senses could catch every detail as well as the brain waves in Bruce’s brain. He knew these brain waves and was terrified from them every time because this meant that Bruce had a flashback.

“Damn!”

He hurried to the bed and sat. He petted the younger man’s locks hoping that he’d offer some comfort even in the depths of Bruce’s flashback.

Clark pressed his lips and cursed himself sensing his lover’s distress. He was wet dreaming, ejaculating in wild satisfaction while Bruce lived the eternal Hell of his past…because of Clark’s actions of last night.

He caressed Bruce’s neck that was drenched in sweat and trembled from his frantic heartbeat and breath.

Chill had bent him over a barrel and lowered his pants hastily.

“My turn, Prince…” his foul breath moisturized his ear.

His breasts and nipples pained like Hell still pierced with nails since Falcone wanted him to bear them all night. Still the violent spreading of his thighs was worse after Falcone’s endless hammering. He could feel fluids still dripping on his inner thighs and his blood was among those liquids; yet the giant didn’t care and stormed inside his shaking body…

A tender hand brushed his hair and it was as if the sun entered Dolcetto’s dark and humid basement; as if the sun chased away that painful night, same as every other night…His Sun…A kiss in his sweaty forehead dripping affection…

“Clark…” as soon as he opened his eyes he was met with Clark’s kind, beautiful face.

Clark admired Bruce: he just woke from a tormenting flashback and his stare was strong, unflinching, solemn. Only his messy hair and his slightly elevated heartbeat revealed what he’s been through and soon his iron willpower controlled that too. He even tried to hide from Clark the signals to his brain about pain.

“I know you’re in pain” he whispered tenderly. “Don’t tire yourself trying to conceal it from me…” he caressed his cheeks.

Bruce gave a faint curl of his lips.

“It’s not real pain; just my mind playing tricks with my body” he huffed. “Ra’s would have scoffed at me for not being able to keep my dreams from affecting my body…”

“Ra’s Al Ghul was a fool” Clark said disgusted on the memory of the man. “You surpassed him in Bruce smiled and kept his hand the last second before it twitched to caress his screaming breasts. It’s not real, he kept repeating to himself without showing anything to Clark.

“I provoked that” the Man of Steel said remorseful understanding. “With my carelessness last night!”

Bruce didn’t want him blaming himself. He used his elbows as support to lift his torso.

“Flashbacks aren’t new to me.”

But Clark shook his head.

“But after you woke from coma they vanished until I…” he sighed.

“Maybe the Fortress kept them at bay but as its effect wears off they come back.”

Clark didn’t like the prospect of Bruce being again tormented by those violent flashbacks. He helped him settle in a sitting position, placing a pillow on his back.

“Do you want to speak to me about your flashback? You’ll feel better…”

Bruce smiled and Clark noticed how pale he was. The younger man pushed some stray locks from his forehead and shook his head.

“No” he pierced Clark with his stare. “I don’t want to share such filth” his voice was firm “besides if I tell you, I’ll stink to you worse...” he chuckled.

Clark blushed and felt deeply ashamed.

“You never stink, Bruce!” his hand jerked to pet the side of his face.

“C’mon, Clark…” he answered nonchalant “I might not have your super senses but I know how you breathe and the little changes when you like a smell or you’re disgusted. And lately your breath when you nuzzle me is abruptly cut as if you can’t bear my smell.”

Bruce’s eyes sparkled into his, not angry but demanding from him to be honest.

“Sometimes I catch their stink on your body…” he admitted locking eyes with him.

Bruce nodded; he didn’t seem hurt but Clark knew that it was a blow and he was ashamed of himself for giving so much value to these things and letting them ruin what he had with Bruce...while Bruce was struggling to heal.

“Falcone’s, Ra’s’, Chill’s, Bane’s, Talia’s…” Bruce counted pressing his lips. “I understand your aversion: it’s too much.”

Clark knew what he was going to say next: I told you, Clark...And Clark didn’t want Bruce to believe that he was right then for trying to hold him away; for denying himself a chance in love.

The Man of Steel locked their lips together and massaged softly.

“I don’t want you even to give a second thought about that, okay?” his eyes were almost in agony and Bruce felt for him. “Something is wrong with me lately and I’m acting like a creep; and I cause you distress and discomfort. But I love you and that’s the only truth. I won’t let anything stupid ruin what we have” he found his breath. “I almost lost you up there” his voice was a hoarse whisper “I held you dead in my arms for 189 seconds…” he felt shivers and sensed that Bruce felt the same.

Bruce cupped his jaw and kissed his lips feathery.

“I got the impression that something affects you, Clark. Like then with the substance in my body or the special Kryptonite.”

Clark’s eyes widened.

“Do you think that my immunization worn off?”

“I’m not sure. Lucius said that the results would be permanent but given your alien physiology we can’t be sure. Or maybe what happened at the factory and my treatment afterwards might have changed something in my body and the substance my cells produce. I already had Lucius take some samples to test but I think you should do the same along with your tests with Jor El.”

That would explain his sudden aversion to Bruce and then his sex maniac attitude towards him but it couldn’t explain his attraction to Diana. Maybe that change eased him to see the truth and long for her? No! The only truth was his love for Bruce; that damaged, wounded but so beautifully strong man…Who now was staring at him reading him to the core.

“Sometimes I feel like a schizophrenic…” Clark chuckled. “Like always battling with some voices… Do you think I’m crazy?”

Bruce wrapped his arms around Clark’s neck and rubbed his hot cheeks to his neck.

“You’re not crazy but you have to promise me that you’ll listen to me till we find out what’s going on. Okay?” his eyes shining with honest love locked with Clark’s.

Clark felt his entire body being flooded with the warmth that only Bruce was capable of giving him. With Bruce he was safe…from himself. He remembered the dream and how wonderful he felt…he had brought Diana into this too. And she was gorgeous, desirable but Bruce was his love.

“I promise: I gladly surrender my life to your hands” he nodded chuckling. “I’m yours to lead…” he touched his forehead to Bruce’s. “Promise me that you won’t give up on me however stupid my behavior – promise that you’ll always bear in mind that this jerk isn’t the real Clark?”

“I’ll stand by your side throughout this unless you decide otherwise…”

Clark shook his head.

“I won’t! There’s no chance I’ll ever decide to leave you” he cupped Bruce’s face and licked his own lips determined. “Tonight I’ll take you to meet my Ma” he wouldn’t let that crazy phase of his life thwart his relationship with Bruce.

Bruce’s eyes widened. Clark could see his surprise, hesitation and…fear.

“Clark, are you sure?” he asked and Clark could read Bruce’s doubt about his feelings for Diana – Bruce was more than insightful.

Clark tousled Bruce’s locks.

“Of course I am! Ma wants so much to meet you and I think this is the best timing!”

Bruce shook his head.
“The best timing?”

“Definitely.”

“Don’t you want to wait?”

Clark shook his head.

“Noope! You’re my only truth, Bruce…” he saw Bruce thoughtful and frowned. “You sound like you’re afraid, Batman!” he said challengingly. “Besides it’s fair: I already met Alfred so it’s your turn to meet my mother; I met Tony and Selina but I don’t have any siblings for you to meet. So your work will be easier: contrary to the 2/3 of your family, my Ma is an easy case. And you’re already her sweetie.”

Bruce felt happy but still that annoying knot prickled his insides. Clark as if sensing it leaned and caressed his cheekbone.

“Be ready: after the work I’ll drop by to take you there…”

Bruce could feel that his enthusiasm was true and Clark was beaming like a little boy as he walked to the window. He turned to wave him goodbye but then he changed his mind and rushed to the bed engaging Bruce in a kiss that took his breath away.

“Don’t stretch yourself much in the office” he said warning “and dress warm: outside is icy cold and that goes for our flight too. And sleep a couple of hours more – it’s still too early.”

True. The sky was still a dark blue black as Superman took off for Metropolis. But Bruce couldn’t sleep anymore: his breasts ache and his mind was racing searching explanations for Clark’s attitude: it was some effect or just he was in love with someone else and his kind heart was struggling to not hold back on what he promised to Bruce; to not hurt him.

Bruce sighed and almost wished that Clark was just ill or affected by something or someone so they could fight it together. But immediately felt ashamed because this was selfish; because there was a simpler and safer possibility for Clark and Bruce should wish for that instead: Clark could be just in love with someone else…the Princess, and Bruce didn’t want to admit it trying to find excuses to avoid letting go of Clark…

He closed his eyes: for the time being what mattered was that Clark wanted to be with him and the Man of Steel was adamant about his love.

His first job when he arrived at the Wayne Tower was to ask Ms. Philips to arrange a Press Conference for tomorrow: as much as this felt like a real burden, he had promised Gotham’s Press to answer their questions if they left the children enjoy their party – well, reporters kept their end of the deal and now it was his turn.

Then he visited the legal department where Mr. Collins, the Head of the Department, almost berated him for not calling him to come to his office instead. Obviously, the man thought that Bruce shouldn’t tire himself with unnecessary runs.

Bruce thanked him for his concern and asked him to prepare the papers for the really urgent matter they had already spoken about yesterday.

He ended up to Lucius’ laboratory: the man though nowadays his position in the company was strong still spent many of his working hours in the lab. So when Bruce went to his office first, Lucius’ secretary told him that he was at the Research and Development.

“Good morning, Mr. Wayne” Lucius greeted him as soon as he left the lift and Bruce greeted back.

The scientist was engrossed in the flood of data in his flat screen and although cheerful as ever the way he looked at his boss seemed a bit scolding.

“You could have asked me to come to your office.”

Bruce smiled.

“It is the second time I hear that today…I run the company, Mr. Fox so why not doing that also literally since I have this very handful chair doing it for me?”

Lucius grinned.

“So how can I help this time?”

“I’m aware that I loaded you with too many things…”

The scientist frowned.

“I gave you ever the impression that I was overloaded?” he chuckled.

Bruce shook his head a bit embarrassed.

“No, of course not!”

“Glad to hear because I feared that age caught up with me and I disappoint you!”

Bruce laughed.

“No way! So…about the samples you took from me?”

Lucius sobered and took off his glasses.

“I see it is rather serious…Good thing I began the tests immediately” Bruce’s eyes shone eager and Lucius pressed his lips. “I don’t want to be intrusive but is everything alright with Mr. Kent?”

Bruce touched his hand to Lucius’ working bench and glanced at his screen.

“From the moment I told you to take the samples I saw you understood…I’m grateful you were so discreet.”

“Till now…” Lucius chuckled. “But I might be able to help more effectively if I know what’s going on…and I do care for your wellbeing.”

The younger man nodded.

“I know, Lucius; and you’re not intrusive – as a matter of fact you have every right to ask besides it is pretty obvious when I come here asking you that. So…There are some changes in Clark’s behavior lately.”

Lucius fixed his solemn eyes to Bruce’s.

“Violence against you?” he asked.
“No…” he licked his lips uncomfortable wondering if indeed there wasn’t any violence in Clark almost penetrating him without his content – but he realized that Lucius was very focused watching him. “Just some aspects of his behavior are a bit changed and he has realized it himself so we want to see if there’s an organic reason.”

Lucius put his glasses on the bench.

“Organic reason in you?”

Bruce gulped.

“Actually, I thought that maybe this substance my cells create has mutated again due to my… accident and the following treatment so Clark’s immunization isn’t entirely effective anymore.”

Lucius was nodding thoughtful.

“If we want to have this possibility tested accurately we need samples from Mr. Kent too.”

“I know and Clark will come to give you samples – actually, he is already doing some tests in the Fortress. But I thought that we could start with me.”

Lucius pressed his lips.

“I had warned you the day you came that exacting tissue sample wasn’t the best procedure for you to undertake at this stage – if Dr. Thompkins knew I’d be in serious trouble.”

Bruce was shaking his head huffing.

“I know, Lucius; but a small discomfort is really nothing. Did you find anything?” his agony was evident.

“I need to observe your samples more, Mr. Wayne but from what I’ve seen already there’s no change in the substance or the way your cells work in general” Bruce was watching avidly, no relief in his features. “But I need time and fresh samples from your friend to test them and watch their interaction with yours.”

Bruce nodded determined.

“He’ll come soon” he said confident. “Lucius, I saw the updated list of the items found in LexLabs” Lucius’ eyes sparkled with understanding “and your separate report about some ‘special’ objects.”

“I see you were quite active even being under the weather; as we register more items from those labs some of them present a pattern.”

Bruce looked Lucius pointedly.

“For everyone or just you?” he asked teasingly and Lucius grinned.

“I hope you won’t consider it bragging if I say just me…”

“Not at all…Tell me more.”

Lucius put his glasses on and tapped some keys bringing several photos on the screen.

“They were found in various labs all over the states stashed as items of no importance.”
“But you beg to differ…”

A flashing smile revealed Lucius’ white teeth; the scientist shook his head.

“You know me so well, Mr. Wayne! And things of “no importance” in Luthor’s labs persuade me for the opposite…” he nodded. “Indeed, I see a pattern in these objects and probably there are more of them; I think that they form something bigger…”

“Like what?” Bruce asked intrigued.

Lucius pressed his lips.

“I’m afraid I can’t answer that for the time being: they don’t fit anything I know; and even Mr. Stark who is engaged in every kind of breakthrough technology doesn’t have any answers…”

“I bet Tony isn’t happy about this…”

Lucius shook his head.

“No, he isn’t…So we decided to gather these items in a totally safe vault in the Wayne Tower till we find all the items and discover what they build together…”

Bruce’s mind was racing.

“It might be what all these raids targeted.”

“It’s very possible.”

“And this could explain the interest of the unknown big player who dictated Luthor’s illegal release” he rubbed his chin.

Lucius raised his eyebrows.

“They couldn’t imagine that Gotham had a hidden ace and would stop them.”

“For the time being: we won’t be able to keep him in prison for much longer.”

“This doesn’t change the fact that our friend is furious” Lucius chuckled and pressed some keys bringing on screen a video from GCN’s morning news.

On the bottom of the screen a caption flashed: Lex Luthor sues Gotham’s judicial system. Bruce snorted.

“This outrageous violation of Constitution and federal justice won’t stay unpunished” Luthor was speaking through a phone to the newscaster and his voice although icy, cold and composed as ever, still had a small almost imperceptible tremor that hinted an indescribable wrath or despair. “The denial of my release with the ridiculous citing of an obsolete and illegal parchment is violating my human rights and every sense of democracy this country fought to maintain. Therefore I’m suing the state of New Jersey and Gotham in particular and I won’t stop before I’m justified and receive restitution for the time I’m illegally held in prison.”

Lucius stopped the video and looked at Bruce.

“That long forgotten paragraph really ruined Luthor’s mood” Lucius chuckled.

“And his partner’s” but there was another thought in Bruce’s mind. “Lucius, you found something that is unknown to everyone in Luthor’s labs and that reminds me that the beings that attacked me were also made of unknown material.”

Lucius frowned and nodded.

“You think that they are connected? We didn’t find anything in his labs that imply the creation of those beings.”

“Yes, I know; yet maybe the beings were already delivered to his partner or belonged to him from the start. We know Luthor’s loath about both me and Superman so he could have asked from his partner to attack me in exchange for his services and the promise to deliver him his ‘thing’.”

Lucius lolled his head to the side intrigued.

“Still…how they knew where you were?”

“Someone who has the power to take a decree that arbitrary orders the release of a convicted criminal can have the means to locate someone.”

“Even with Mr. Stark’s concealing systems?”

Bruce shrugged.

“We don’t know who we dealing with.”

Lucius huffed.

“You shouldn’t be stretching yourself, Mr. Wayne; I’m sure that Batman discovered that Crane had found refuge in the old industrial area: you should rest a bit.”

Bruce smiled.

“Unfortunately they didn’t find Crane…”

“The police found his DNA, tubes with chemicals and an open TV: Crane must have escaped just before the police reached him” Bruce shook his head. “Yet that doesn’t change that you must focus on your recovery.”

“I am. But reality doesn’t wait for me to overcome my disability and I don’t have the luxury to stay in front of the fireplace and read novels or watch movies while villains plot” he inhaled. “This is the reason I asked for that special armor” his eyes flashed hopeful “is there any development?”

Lucius blinked.

“I was expecting you to ask about the development of your spine parts…” he pressed one key and the large screen filled with a projection of his body – the flashing light blue parts throughout his spine, pelvis and legs were the alien energy casts that connected his fractured bones. Around the body floated the pieces that would be adjusted to his spine to enable him to walk again.

Bruce clenched his jaw. He knew how badly shattered his body was but still every time he saw it, a punch was delivered in his guts and he had to gather again his courage into chasing away the dread that that grave damage couldn’t be restored.

“This can be delayed, Lucius” he said determined though he craved to walk again “this has to do with Bruce Wayne – Batman on the other hand can’t wait.”
Lucius cocked his eyebrows.

“I think that Mr. Stark would have a different opinion…”

Bruce fixed his eyes on him.

“Is he putting the armor behind?”

The scientist closed his eyes and sighed.

“We both set as our priority your healing, Mr. Wayne” he took in his employee’s frown. “If you walk again then the new armor would have a better use than if you wear it while being still a paraplegic.”

Bruce yanked his head frustrated.

“I can’t believe it, Lucius! After everything we discussed Tony has talked you out of this!”

The scientist held the younger man’s upper arms.

“Calm down, Mr. Wayne…We didn’t cancel the project; we work on it too” he blinked “I work on it and Mr. Stark has an advisory part. We just set as first priority the bionic parts of your spine so that your healing coincides with the delivery of your new armor.”

Lucius’ eyes were reassuring but Bruce’s heart fell.

“I don’t have time, Lucius” he said dead serious, his eyes piercing the scientist’s. “Either you two make the armor or I build it myself.”

The vibe of betrayal was so intense in Bruce’s voice that Lucius’ hands fell and the younger man turned to leave. But in front of the lift Bruce looked again at his loyal scientist.

“I know you want the best for me and I won’t force you to act against what you believe…I don’t forget what you did and what you’re doing for me.”

Lucius inhaled deeply and pressed his lips.

“I’ll build your armor, Mr. Wayne; you’re right – building the armor won’t take much time and Mr. Stark and the other team can continue focusing on your spinal parts.”

Bruce nodded.

“Thank you, Lucius.”

The scientist smiled.

“You’re welcome, Mr. Wayne and…be careful with Mr. Kent.”

The youth smiled.

“He’d never hurt me, Lucius…” he got into the lift and the doors closed.

Lucius eyes were blank.

“I hope you’re right, Bruce.”
Lois eyed suspiciously under a deep frown Clark approaching her desk with his casual fake clumsiness. He was holding a rose that gave to her.

“What have you done?” she cocked her eyebrows “Again?”

“Nothing!” he smiled and hoped on her desk throwing to the floor her pencil case and phone. “Oh! Mmm! S…Sorry!” he slumped to the floor to gather her things and bring them back causing the laughter of their colleagues.

Lois rolled her eyes.

“Enough with the show… Is really necessary doing your act with…MY THINGS?” she brushed affectionately her things. “That phone is the first cell phone I bought!” she inhaled. “Anyway, speak! What have you done this time?” she asked in business matter.

Clark crossed his arms, shook his head and beamed.

“I’m taking Bruce to Ma.”

Lois widened her eyes.

“So, indeed, you did something awful and want to appease your guilt…” she shook her head.

Clark’s stare was hurt; he lolled his head on the side.

“You’re mean! I wanted to do that for ages! Ma wanted so much to meet Bruce but I waited till he is better.”

Lois crooked her mouth in disbelief and Clark huffed, standing from her desk which to Lois’ relief didn’t have a dimple from Clark’s butt made of steel.

“Ugh! I’m stupid for wanting to share my joy with you!” he spat mock angry.

She patted his upper arm pressing her lips.

“Good luck, farmboy. But be careful…”

Clark gave a huge grin and nodded before returning to his desk, Lois shaking her head.

“Ouch!” she exclaimed suddenly realizing the pain in the hand she was patting Clark with.

“That’s enough for today, Bruce” Matt said looking with narrowed eyes to the control panel; his patient had done only one walking movement with the machine’s help.

Bruce had been doing his routine working out for an hour and now was the best part: walking again even if his legs were helped by exoskeletons and the orders were given by machine. His new Batman armor would use exactly the same technology albeit more advanced.

He frowned at his physiotherapist who put a large towel on his drenched in sweat back.

“Why?”

Matt seemed troubled but tried to keep a nonchalant expression.
“We’ll do our massage section – I think it’s better after two days of non-action.”

The blond man assisted Bruce to sit to the working out chair and removed carefully the exoskeleton parts. Bruce was already thinking what he said about only doing the massage; while taking shower in the morning he noticed that the bruises on his thighs from Clark’s violent ministrations were still blue-black and…striking. He couldn’t strip or wear shorts else Matt would notice and ask questions.

“No massage, Matt.”

It was the other man’s turn to frown.

“May I ask the reason, Bruce?” he asked softly. “You feel any discomfort?”

Bruce looked him straight in the eyes.

“Why you stopped the walking and didn’t mention swimming? If it was the two day lack of working out, you wouldn’t have let me do the other exercises.”

Matt pouted and crouched before him.

“Because Bicep Femoris and Adductor Magnus – the muscles in both your thighs – are badly contracted: the control panel connecting with the exoskeleton showed it” Bruce’s eyes widened. “Your energy casts thwarted any further damage but if we continued walking we could have worsened things” Matt smiled to reassure his patient. “A couple of massage sections and the cramps will be eased.”

Bruce shook his head.

“I can’t have a massage…”

Matt locked eyes with him.

“Bruce, what’s wrong? You don’t trust me anymore?”

“I do.”

“So can I have a look?” he asked softly, carefully and Bruce dreaded that his physiotherapist was seeing the rape victim he had read about.

Bruce nodded and Matt unbuttoned the sides of his gym pants and revealed his thighs. Matt’s gasp wasn’t really a gasp but Bruce heard it immediately since he anticipated it. He watched the young physiotherapist lick his lips uncomfortable and trying to hide his anger taking in the ugly blue-black finger shaped bruises; controlling his breath, Matt examined the other thigh. He looked Bruce in the eyes.

“It’s not what you think” Bruce said firm.

Matt shook his head and blinked.

“Bruce, that’s…” his outrage was now evident.

“Matt, you don’t understand…Sometimes I feel so frustrated from the lack of any sensation in my legs that I dig my fingers to feel some pain from the areas that still have neurons. And sometimes I overdo it and bruises.”

He could see in the blond man’s face that he didn’t buy that: he would have met such marks before if that was true.
“Those fingers are bigger than yours, Bruce…”

“No, no…Listen, Matt: it’s not fingers; it’s connected bruises that look like fingers…” this sounded lame even to him.

Matt held his upper arms.

“Okay, calm down, Bruce…you don’t need to explain anything to me” Bruce lolled his head huffing exasperated. “Let’s examine those muscles, huh?”

Bruce couldn’t feel anything but by watching Matt’s ministrations he could tell that his fingers were feeling his bruised muscles very softly and carefully. Softness that left Matt’s features the more he continued: Bruce could tell that the youth was enraged.

“The muscles are badly contracted…and this is three days’ old” he mumbled more to himself. “Listen, Bruce; take a shower and then we’ll massage those muscles properly” he was afraid that his reactions had panicked his patient and his hands remained on the bruised areas. “Nobody has the right to treat you like this, Bruce” he said calmly.

Bruce was happy that Selina wasn’t there – at first he was a bit worried and disappointed she hadn’t brought Hero back yet. But right now her absence as well as Tony’s and Alfred’s were welcomed.

“Matt, I told you…”

Matt’s hands were massaging his cramped muscles and the blond man was looking him in the eyes.

“You don’t have to tell me anything, Bruce; but you could speak to Tony or Selina or Alfred or Leslie…There are so many people who love you…”

Bruce’s stare was so intense in Matt’s eyes that the physiotherapist stopped speaking abruptly.

“Matt, you won’t tell anything to Tony or anyone else” his voice was steely.

“But Bruce, there is nothing to be ashamed of in that – you didn’t do anything wrong.”

But Bruce’s eyes were determined.

“But Bruce, you won’t tell anything” he repeated.

Matt huffed and shook his head defeated.

“Okay, I don’t want you upset; I won’t do something you don’t want. But you should tell them if these things are happening” his voice was soft like talking to a child. “I understand that there might be someone in your life…”

“That’s right!” a stentorian voice vibrated the gym and Bruce who had heard the whoosh looked at Superman’s imposing form in disbelief.

Superman’s face was contorted in anger; he had entered from the master bedroom’s window and hearing what they were saying and that sly man’s touches rushed in the gym where the spectacle disgusted him: Bruce’s pants undone and that guy fondling him.

Bruce stared at Superman flabbergasted and angry; his lover’s eyes were lined by red and his arms were crossed evidently clenched.
Matt was accustomed to be in the presence of super powered beings but still seeing Superman there – despite the fact he had heard the rumors – startled him. And the hero’s posture emanated wrath. Yet the young man wasn’t a coward and if Superman had bruised Bruce and now was dangerously jealous he wouldn’t let his patient helpless.

He stood up.

“Superman?”

Superman’s smirk was poison.

“Exactly! Bruce is mine and nobody touches him!”

Matt shook his head.

“But I didn’t…I mean…I did but this is my job: treating muscles. You can’t honestly think…”

Superman uncrossed his arms and made a step forwards, a wave of hot anger hitting the physiotherapist only from his movement.

“You think you can fool me?!!”

An outraged, jealous Superman was the most terrifying thing to face but Matt wouldn’t flinch; he strengthened his body in front of Bruce.

“Superman, stop!”

Matt’s eyes bulged; he couldn’t believe it. His patient sitting on his wheelchair stood between him and Superman, not a flinch of fear in his voice facing the most powerful being on the planet angry as Hell. He always admired Bruce for his strength and courage but that bravery really caused him goose bumps. Especially, when Superman stopped in his heels: not appeased, still angry but somehow mesmerized by those eyes that pierced his.

“Matt, you can go” Bruce said to him calmly without breaking eye contact with Superman whose face was still contorted.

“I’ll call…”

“You won’t call anyone” Bruce ordered and Matt knew that he couldn’t disobey even if his conscience urged him to. “Everything is alright – I’ll see you tomorrow.”

“As you wish” he answered and gathered his things ashamed for leaving Bruce alone; Superman engaged in that eye contest with the impaired human didn’t even glanced at him leaving the room.

“What do you think you’re doing?” Bruce asked after Matt closed the door and the sound of his steps vanished.

Superman squinted and his face muscles’ spasms made him almost ugly.

“That’s my question!”

In a flash he grabbed Bruce’s upper arms and lifted him from the wheelchair covering the distance to the master bedroom in less than thirty seconds and settled the human in a sitting position on the bed. Bruce’s stare didn’t flinch even though this time he could feel the bruising grasp on his upper arms that Superman didn’t let go.
“Can you calm down and release my arms?” Bruce asked completely unfazed by Superman’s panting breath that burnt his face as his enraged eyes locked with his calm ones.

But Superman didn’t seem to have listened at all.

“Is that why you made all these fuss about me and Diana? Is this why you made me feel ill? To run around doing tests letting you free to fuck with your physiotherapist?!”

Bruce’s eyes widened.

“You still smell Falcone on me; if what you say was true you’d have smelt that as well” he controlled the feel of insult that boiled inside him.

Superman laughed really snidely.

“You’re cunning! You definitely found a way to cover the smell of fucking with him!”

“Clark, it’s happening again – you’re out of your mind.”

He shook his head and tightened his hold.

“You’re out of arguments already, babe? Matt, you won’t tell anything to Tony or anyone else” he mimicked Bruce’s voice. “Bruce, there is nothing to be ashamed of in that – you didn’t do anything wrong” he did the same with the physiotherapist’s voice. “I think it’s pretty obvious – I’m not that dumb, you know…He is fucking you months now and he wanted to tell Tony and the others but you didn’t want because Stark would brag and mock me and you didn’t want me to know!”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Why would I want to do the nonsense you say?” he asked tranquil in sharp contrast to Clark’s frantic rant.

“Because you want the blond hunk who is a human like you but you don’t want to lose Superman either” Bruce was staring at him with eyes unreadable like shining walls.

“You consider me a slut, then…” he said so calm that Clark even in his enraged condition was baffled.

Superman shook him.

“I heard you, Bruce! Damn it! I saw you!”

“What you saw?”

“Your pants unbuttoned and he fondling your thighs! Fire him right now!”

Bruce yanked his head in defiance.

“He only does his job.”

“Oh, yeah?” Superman snorted. “And what’s his job? Giving you blow jobs, as right before I came in? You might not feel anything but I’m sure he definitely had a helluva party!” he hissed.

It stung because it was unprecedented; the pain wasn’t much but the shock was greater; he didn’t see it coming but Bruce had just slapped him in the face. He looked at the human who ground his teeth, his hand left on the mattress carelessly.
“Master Bruce, is everything alright?” Alfred’s voice behind the door was composed but there was a hue of wariness; he must have heard the ruckus.

“Fine, Alfred” Bruce mastered calmness back in his voice. “Please, go now and I’ll call you.” He waited with his ears on Alfred’s retreating footsteps and then stabbed Clark’s eyes with his.

“Scan my groin, you fool! Is there any signs of saliva?”

“Then what he was talking about? Why he was fondling you?” his voice was still raspy.

“He wasn’t fondling me: he was massaging the cramps in my thighs’ muscles. The muscles three days now are contracted…badly.”

The shock of Bruce’s slap was nothing in comparison with that: Clark quickly scanned Bruce’s almost naked thighs and ruffled his sweaty hair. Indeed, the muscles in Bruce’s thighs were like stones from cramps that remained unrelieved for three days …

“I didn’t notice…” he mumbled what he was thinking looking up at Bruce’s stern eyes.

Bruce nodded.

“You’re preoccupied with other things…” he said coldly.

“What you forbade him to tell to Tony?”

Bruce blinked.

“He saw the bruises over my thighs and wanted to tell my friends because he though” he inhaled “that someone abuses me…”

Clark bit his bottom lip: it was obvious that his violent grasp that night in his thirst to spread Bruce’s thighs provoked the cramps and since Bruce couldn’t feel the pain his cramps remained unsolved. He jerked his head backwards and huffed.

“I fucked up again, right?” he muttered but Bruce wasn’t looking at him anymore: his eyes were expressionless gazing at his hand that had slapped Superman.

Clark took gently Bruce’s hand and scanned: hitting Superman’s face was more painful to you than Superman leading to broken bones and this time Clark actually felt pain which meant that the human had used considerable strength. Thankfully, there was no cracked or broken bone but it’d certainly bruise.

“How?” he asked puzzled about the lack of injury.

Bruce still didn’t look at him.

“Ra’s. The last years of my training had me punching bricks and pillars made of steel: he was preparing me to kill you…in bed. Whenever my bones cracked or broke he was giving me his brews.”

Superman brought Bruce’s palm to his mouth but Bruce twitched it away.

“I’m sorry, Bruce…”

Bruce didn’t look him.
“Every time you repeat that it sounds less honest.”

Clark closed his eyes and brought his palms to his face.

“I mean it, Bruce…You know I don’t believe anything from what I told you.”

“Really?” he snapped.

“I was afraid that you wanted him – I don’t want to lose you to anyone.”

Bruce crossed his arms; his hand throbbed from the slap.

“The only one you can lose me to: is yourself!” he spat and Clark agreed.

Bruce looked around: he wanted to take a shower because the sweat from his working out stack on him and because he wanted to distance himself from Clark. But his wheelchair had stayed in the gym and was too far to come to his mind’s calling.

Clark took in Bruce’s glances around and understood. He flew back in the gym and brought the wheelchair in front of the bed for Bruce to slip in.

He stood there watching the younger man entering the bathroom and then heard the water running, sliding over Bruce’s body. His deeds haunted his mind but one thing shadowed everything else: he grabbed Bruce’s thighs to penetrate him and not only caused him cramps but also didn’t scan it for three days! That could have made serious damage to Bruce’s recovery. Thank Rao! The energy casts must have protected him!

Bruce sat on the special seat the bathtub had and let the water fall on his lowered head keeping his eyes shut: such moments he wished there was a way to press a button and shut his mind as well…

“Promise me that you won’t give up on me however stupid my behavior – promise that you’ll always bear in mind that this isn’t the real Clark?”

“I’ll stand by you throughout this, unless you decide otherwise…”

Clark jerked when the bathroom’s door opened; Bruce was muffled in his bathrobe so meticulously that no part of his bare skin was uncovered except his neck, hands and feet. Like that night in the greenhouse before this brave being defeated his demons to gift Clark the greatest present: a present that Clark just threw on the floor and trod on it.

Bruce kept his eyes away from Clark.

“I thought to leave; spare you from my presence” Clark decided to speak “but I didn’t want you to take that for indifference. You…you said that you’ll stand by me throughout this unless I decided otherwise…If still matters” he gulped “I want you by my side.”

Bruce didn’t answer and Superman rushed to him falling on his knees and taking carefully his bruised hand in his.

“If you say it, I leave” he kissed his throbbing palm. “I’ll call my Ma and cancel the dinner…”

It was the first time Bruce looked at him though not in the eyes. Clark’s mother did nothing wrong and Bruce didn’t want to sadden her. On the other hand, if he pushed Clark away now whatever caused the change would gain the total control to unpredictable results. At least, Clark still listened to him to realize what he was doing.
“Don’t…” Clark’s eyes flashed with disbelief and then joy and gratitude. “Your mother expects us. I’ll dress and notify Alfred to not worry.”

Clark nodded and hastened to fly outside to give Bruce some privacy.

When dressed Bruce went to the grand salon where Alfred was speaking with Selina, Hero rubbing to her legs but as soon as he saw his young master ran to him and climbed to his lap. Bruce smiled and petted him.

“I missed you, buddy. Hi, Sel: why so late? I’m going to take your visiting rights back!”

“Ha! Ha!” she exclaimed. “Why you don’t admit the truth? That you missed me?” she kissed his cheek but frowned noticing how he had his hand on his lap. “What’s wrong with your hand?”

Alfred was watching their chat with a grim look; his eyes tense and knowing.

“Work out” Bruce answered nonchalant. “I overdid it with those pushups.”

“Matt didn’t restrain you?”

Alfred walked closer.

“Mr. Leench seemed rather nervous when he left.”

Bruce shook his head.

“You both know me… I can be completely uncontrolled” Selina shook her head rolling her eyes but Alfred remained stone faced to Bruce’s rue; however he chose to not address his butler’s evident knowledge. “Sel, I’m sorry I won’t be here for dinner but I must leave.”

“May I ask where?”

Alfred already knew.

“Master Bruce is going to meet Master Kent’s mother.”

Selina’s eyes widened and she laughed.

“Your mother-in-law? Wow! You’re gonna ask his hand?”

Alfred just shook his head, definitely completely out of good spirits.

Throughout the entire flight, Bruce never let his head rest on Superman’s shoulder; he didn’t let him take him in bridal style but remained erect holding his waist rather lukewarmly.

It was dark and very cold without any stars and moon since heavy clouds covered the entire sky. However as they entered the Kansas state the cold became milder and the sky clear with an abundance of stars and a moon of three quarters.

“Do you like it?” Clark asked carefully.

“When I planned to escape with Alfred, we intended on stopping to Smallville before heading to California…” his voice was still flat but his eyes were taking in greedily the rural landscape even in night as Clark began descending.

“This is the farm I grew up” he said putting his feet firmly on the soil and heaving Bruce to hold him in bridal style: now they didn’t have another choice. “I wanted to show you my home under better conditions…even today, I was constantly planning it… but… my stupidity ruined everything” he sighed because Bruce’s tenseness hadn’t ebbed throughout the trip.

“When would you go to the Fortress?”

“As soon as I place you in your bed back in Gotham.”

Clark hadn’t ascended the entire front stair to the porch when Martha hurried outside, her face beaming.

“Welcome!” she greeted them cordially. “Come in! It’s cold outside.”

She was so happy and Clark was afraid that Bruce’s gloominess would spoil her mood and made her suspicious – which was his own fault. But Bruce as soon as they entered the warm, small house filled with delicious smells, changed his expression and smiled to the kind lady.

Clark placed him carefully in the most comfy armchair of their humble living room and helped him took off his coat, Martha rushing to muffle his legs with a soft blanket.

“This is for you, Ms. Kent” Bruce gave her a beautiful wrapped packet that took out from the inside pocket of his coat.

Ms. Kent gaped.

“Oh, Bruce, you shouldn’t…”

“So, you two don’t need me to introduce you…” Clark said grinning relieved and hanged the coat to the carved coat rack.

“It’s nothing…” Bruce blushed.

Martha ripped the paper and her eyes sparkled: it was a very old and rare edition of Emily Dickinson’s poems.

“She is my favorite poet; how did you know that, dear?”

Bruce smiled.

“In the Fortress, Clark used to read me poems from a book and I noticed that the book had some notes in handwriting that wasn’t Clark’s and seemed feminine. Then one day I noticed in the first page the initials M.K. and I presumed that it belonged to you.”

Clark chuckled.

“You could have just asked!”

But Martha gaped and looked at her son.

“This young man is very clever…”

Clark nodded.

“This edition is very rare, dear; from the first 19th century publications!”

“There’s a bookstore in Gotham – it was my mother’s favorite, Alfred had recommended it. She used to take me there with her…” his voice cracked the slightest and Martha let the book on the couch and cupped his face.

“My sweetheart…Can I kiss you?” Bruce nodded and she pecked his cheek. “Your parents are very proud of you, dear” she looked him in the eyes and her sparkling eyes were wet “don’t you ever forget that!”

She served them her homemade pink lemonade till the meal was ready.

After the dinner Clark brought Bruce back in the living room and Bruce took his handful of pills as he had promised to Alfred. Martha’s eyes were sad watching the youth; she was outraged by the lengths of human cruelty that rendered him paraplegic: she had heard in various discussions many gruesome theories about what tortures could have caused such grave damage.

Her host had tea ready and cinnamon biscuits – without knowing that cinnamon flavored biscuits were Bruce’s favorite. Bruce had to admit that they were as delicious as Alfred’s.

“But don’t tell him!” he warned Clark who smiled though the coldness that still larked in the depths of Bruce’s eyes was like punch.

When they finished, Martha stood to take the tea set to the kitchen but Clark stopped her.

“I’ll wash the dishes; stay with Bruce” he didn’t want to force his presence to Bruce when alone; besides, he really did dishwashing while at home.

“What is it, dear?” Martha asked Bruce softly when the water in the kitchen would muffle her voice.

Bruce was startled because he believed that had covered it perfectly.

“Mmm…Nothing, Ms. Kent.”

“Call me Martha – and yes, you know how to hide your emotions but I’m a mother…” she smiled.

“But is anything wrong with Clark?”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose and shook his head.

“No; I’m just a bit tired and your house is so beautiful and warm that I’m a little drowsy like I am home.”

“I’m happy to hear that, honey. Clark told me that you saved his life…more than once” Bruce knew that Clark didn’t reveal to her that he was Batman. “I know that with you my son will be always safe and happy.”

Bruce wished he could share her certainty.

Ms. Kent…Martha…” he hesitated.

She took gently his hands in hers.

“It’s alright, dear…Clark is very lucky to have you and if he ever does something to hurt you, call me to put him in his place” her voice was stern.

Bruce grinned.

“You found an alien baby and raised him as your child whereas someone else would have given him to the police…” Martha pressed her lips because Jonathan and she knew what would happen to the baby if they handed him to the government. “His good fortune is you and only you…Me, I am ephemeral and can be gone from his life” Martha frowned. “But you will be always there to look after him – I can be reassured knowing that he will always have you…”

She hugged Bruce; her hands caressed his locks.

“You’ll walk again, sweetheart; and nothing would shadow again your life…You’re not ephemeral, Bruce: you won’t be gone from his life because he loves you and you’re too important for him” Bruce sighed, his eyes blank gazing at the farm’s yard through the small window. “I always feared for Clark…He was always bullied by the other kids and then as an adult he was mocked all the time and although he never seemed to care and helped humans…I always had the dread that someday he’d lose his path: all this power can corrupt and the way some people sniff at him may take the better of him; or someone could find a way to control him into horrible deeds” Bruce jerked at that.

“But then he met you” Martha continued “and since then I’m peaceful because he speaks about you in a way that shows his admiration, his respect: how much he cherishes you…I’m not good in this…You’re his moral compass, Bruce; his anchor…The warmth in his heart: a star that shows him the way. As long you’re by his side he is safe.”

Bruce patted Martha and looked her.

“Your son is kind and generous and a beacon of hope and morality of his own; he always has been like this” he smiled. “He doesn’t need me…You’re the pillar of his life…You raised a remarkable man and a formidable protector of people” the woman although proud for his praise seemed a bit shaken because she regarded Bruce as her ally “But I promise you that whatever happens I’ll always care and be there for him” even if he throws me out of his life.

The old lady cupped his face with both hands.

“Thank you…” she whispered relieved from his promise.

Clark upon emerging from the kitchen frowned at the scene.

“What’s going on? Bruce, are you alright?”

Bruce nodded.

They couldn’t stay much longer. Martha touched went with them till the fence.

“You’ll come again?” she asked and Bruce felt his heart clench not only because he felt the deep loneliness of the kind lady but also because he couldn’t promise her that.

“We’ll do, Ma! Christmas is for certain and we’ll stay the entire day!”’ Clark replied confident and beamed to Bruce who just averted his gaze to look at Ms. Kent.

“Thank you for everything, Martha”.

“Don’t mention that, dear: thank you for the book – the ladies in the literature club will be ecstatic. Clark, be careful with Bruce – hold him tight!” she yelled as they took off.

In no more than ten minutes Bruce succumbed to sleep; he was exhausted, Clark could sense that as the contracted muscles in his thighs that he would massage as soon as they reached their bed. Even in sleep, Bruce kept his head lolled in his own shoulder and not nestled in Clark’s neck – and Clark missed the senses…
Chapter Notes

I always feel nervous when I get to write a chapter that I had in my mind from the start of the story.

“I thought you wouldn’t come back.”

“I never abandon my patients” he chuckled “unless they boot me out – am I fired?”

Bruce mirrored Matt’s smile albeit more restrained.

“I don’t think that any of your patients gave you the ax…”

Matt raised his eyebrows.

“I have a good CV…but there’s a first time for everything” he crouched next to Bruce’s wheelchair.

“If you want me to leave” he said serious looking Bruce in the eyes “I’ll find a good excuse for Tony to not find out that it was your decision and ask questions” the blond pressed his lips. “I don’t want to cause you problems with Superman.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Thank you, Matt; you don’t cause me any problems and I’m sorry about what happened” he inhaled. “It wasn’t your fault. But I’d have understood if what happened yesterday made you decide to not come back.”

Matt laughed.

“You mean to save my ass from being kicked by Superman?” he ruffled his hair. “I admit that an angry, jealous super guy is a…terrifying spectacle especially when he glares at you with red eyes but your bravery is” he shook his head “mind blowing.”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“ Inspiring… I mean if you’re so brave to stand your ground in front of him then I won’t resign either… I’ve never been more inspired in my whole life, Bruce… and I’m the Avengers’ physiotherapist.”

Bruce rubbed his temple.

“I’m not so brave…I know that Superman won’t hurt anyone including me.”

Matt shook his head in disbelief.

“I don’t know, Bruce… He was emanating animosity ready to explode” he clenched his jaw. “And if I see a mark on you ever again I’ll go straight to Tony” any sign of fear vanished. “He might have treated and saved your life but he has no right to lay a finger on you!”

Bruce frowned.
"You knew?"

"I’m not a fool, Bruce; I know that Tony’s work is phenomenal and pioneering but your energy casts…” he shook his head “are definitely alien. And as a physiotherapist I know that people with traumas like yours in the majority of the cases…” he stopped abruptly not wanting to utter it but Bruce who had already understood urged him with his eyes “die immediately or within some days” Bruce pressed his lips. “In that video on the clinic’s roof, you seemed fine but I know that sometimes the lapse can be sudden and sharp: so Superman saved you twice – once from that League and then from death and we’re all grateful to him but that doesn’t give him authority on your life.”

“He doesn’t think like that – it was a bad moment” Matt huffed. “I appreciate that you didn’t speak to anyone about this.”

The blond man chuckled.

“If I was the gossipy type now the talk shows would have been babbling about anecdotes from the Avengers’ lives and I would have been at hospital with broken bones…” he rolled his eyes. “At least…”

Bruce laughed.

“Can we proceed to our massage session? Also, you’ll take some muscle relaxants for a couple of days and we’ll be okay!”

But Bruce didn’t reflect Matt’s radiant smile.

“You told Leslie?”

“Of course not. I used some scientific mumbo jumbo to explain the need of muscle relaxants.”

Bruce felt a bit guilty for not sharing everything with his friends but it was necessary and there was no reason to complicate things more. He steered the wheel through the streets of New York; his sleek black car first seen there was causing the awed stares of people. The GPS system was guiding him to the Avengers’ Tower for Tony’s party.

Tony wanted to take him there himself but Bruce refused pointing out that he was the host to this party so since his goal was to make a good impression for the new S.H.I.E.L.D. he ought to be there for his guests. His friend had grunted rolling his eyes on the ‘ought’ but Bruce told him smiling that he had missed his masterpiece car and he didn’t want to miss any chance to drive – especially, on unknown streets.

Tony was appeased and Bruce read in his eyes that his friend felt for his need to act independently despite his disability. Alfred had stayed at Tony’s mammoth penthouse at SoHo: inside the Tower Tony had established rooms for every member of the team and his own was – of course – the biggest and most luxurious (“they call me a cocky, spoiled rich brat” Tony had explained with a lips’ purse and a shrug, “so why not leaving up to my reputation?”). Yet the billionaire didn’t want to be restricted to a place and besides he had owned this penthouse before Ironman was even a sperm in the genius’ mind.

Bruce’s heart felt heavier thinking his loyal butler. Alfred didn’t come to the party to babysit Hero. Bruce had told him that there was no need for him to leave Gotham and accompany him to New York but the Englishman was adamant. After the incident with Matt and Clark, Alfred became more worried about him: although the esteemed butler knew how to keep his composed demeanor, at times Bruce caught him staring at him almost scared – his worry matching the first days after Clark brought him from the Fortress to Tony’s villa in Thasos.

Some other times Bruce felt that Alfred was on the verge of asking him to open his heart but the wise man didn’t do it granting him the right to decide himself – and Bruce wished he could speak to him or Selina or Tony about what he was experiencing but that would only worsen things and Bruce after those perfect days hoped that their life with Clark would be again like before.

“Gotham Radio News24” he ordered the car’s AI.

He hoped to hear any update on Crane; after the unsuccessful raid at his hideout the former doctor remained untraced. Giving that he flew from the old industrial area just before the police arrived, someone would expect him to be less careful with his movements in his effort to find a new refuge. Yet that wasn’t the case: despite police’s increased efforts and raids in shady places, the doctor seemed to have just vanished.

Bruce wished he had his new armor…that Tony had delayed behind his back. He huffed. He didn’t confront his friend but he was sure that Tony got the message when Lucius began fully working on the armor. Bruce wasn’t angry with Tony – he knew that his buddy wanted the best for him – yet he felt…Not betrayed, definitely not betrayed.

“I don’t think that people care to know the details of what the League did to me – Police’s reports are more than enough.”

His own voice on the radio startled him. It was from his Press Conference three days ago; his answer to a really crude question about what League did to him to cause such injuries to him. He rolled his eyes exasperated even now though then he didn’t: really? He was supposed to answer that? Even some of the guy’s colleagues cast him hostile and disgusted glares.

“Gaining LexLabs’ control and the 20% of the entire LexCorp was a brilliant move – especially, since you were kidnapped when this was done. Did you have any insight about Luthor’s collaboration with the terrorists and his imminent arrest so you planned it beforehand?” Alex Knox asked really intrigued.

It was one of the hardest questions yet Bruce couldn’t say that he didn’t expect that.

“If I had any insight, I wouldn’t have even approached that suite” he smiled and some of the reporters chuckled. “Mr. Fox has my complete trust to do what he thinks best for the company when I’m gone: so he saw the opportunity and exploited it.”

“That goes for Daggett, too?” Knox’s eyebrows were raised; obviously he didn’t completely buy the Fox-did-everything thing.

Bruce had shrugged.

“You have to ask the Police about that: I was shocked when I was informed that Mr. Daggett was plotting with Luthor.”

“What are your plans about LexLabs?” Lois Lane’s distinct voice uttered the next question.

“Make them a scientific groundbreaking firm completely abiding by the law.”

“So you did know about Luthor’s more than shady activities” Vicky Vale had remarked snidely.

Bruce completely calm lolled his head on the side.
But her next question was what everyone wanted to ask and of course after the Press Conference it was constantly replayed in every TV station, in news and talk shows; the various videos at Youtube marking record views.

“Do you have a love affair with Superman?”

Bruce remembered that despite the fact he was prepared for that, he had blushed and didn’t try to hide it because it fit. And although his answer was agreed with Clark, he still felt odd uttering it: however this was for the best.

“I saw your video, Miss Vale and I don’t understand how you could create such a love story out of this. Superman has saved millions of people: I have seen him carrying people exactly like he carried me but no love story was made up for any of them.”

“He seems to be pretty involved in anything around you” she pointed slyly.

“I don’t think that Superman’s activities have anything to do with me: League of Shadows was a terrorist group that threatened the entire planet; Falcone was a federal criminal. I just happened to be in the crossfire…”

The recorded abstract stopped and some song began playing offering soundtrack to the broadcaster.

“Well, history will prove if our Prince is honest or he is trying to hide the elephant – well, the Superman – in the room. We know it’s not our business and all that jazz but tonight at the year’s greatest event, the party in the Avengers’ Tower people will be watching the two lovebirds – sorry, savior and saved – to see the truth.”

Bruce grunted. Really? He thought that this station was serious! He closed the radio. Clark and he had agreed to keep appearances and with all the superheroes and heroines there surely people wouldn’t solely watch them. And the Amazon would be there too…

Those four days after the incident with Matt, Clark was perfect like the time before the Amazon invaded their lives. He even went to Lucius for those samples; Bruce anxiously awaited the results. But now that Clark would meet her again Bruce felt the knot forming again in his guts because he knew that Clark’s attitude around her wasn’t just a pretense and although he asked him to keep a distance he dreaded that Clark wouldn’t do it.

As the Tower became nearer, Bruce was tempted to drive directly to the secret entrance and the garage on the back side of the building. But it’d be pointless: avoiding the press in the entrance while in the reception hall would be plenty of reporters mixed with the guests. Besides, people seeing him confined in a wheelchair, was good because nobody would connect him with the Batman who roamed Gotham unhindered by any injury.

On the other side, although he never accepted what the others said about him of being a role model of courage, he didn’t want any paraplegic in the world to think that he was ashamed of his disability.

As he took the path leading to Manhattan’s center, he regarded the Tower. He had seen the building again in the blueprints and during daytime but night made it glitter like a gem with its thousands sparkling lights fueled – as the entire premises - solely with renewable energy that was provided by an arc reactor.

At 105 floors the Tower was the highest building in New York. It was narrow and rectangular for the 90 floors but the last of the building was shaped like an ellipse; the ellipse hosted in the base floor the reception area which was half surrounded by a sharp balcony; in the middle nine floors were the headquarters and the Avengers’ apartments – well, Tony kept for himself the whole – floor apartment on top of the others – and the last five floors of the building was actually a landing area for jets and helicopters.

Of course nothing indicated that the giant golden ‘A’ that covered the front of the ellipse area opened the dome to accept aircrafts or permit others to take off. In the center of the ellipse’s dome a thick and tall telecommunication antenna bleeped constantly sending and receiving information from and to every corner of the world through satellites.

Bruce felt amazed and proud for Tony; his friend was great. Yet Bruce’s first desire seeing that building was perching on the giant ‘A’ wearing his armor and dive into the night…

As soon as the dashing, masterpiece car parked in front of the breathtaking building, flashes were on fire and cameras turned there. They had framed a spacious corridor for the guests to pass but some security staff was guarding the noisy herd of reporters.

Bruce regarded the scene with a raised eyebrow: it reminded him of a Hollywood party and he didn’t like that; yet he recognized his friend’s reasoning behind that party and he was there to support Tony in this.

Pepper like a formidable queen crossed the corridor that was carpeted in red and approached the car when the valet opened for Bruce. He took his folded wheelchair from the passenger’s seat and with the pressing of the button the chair opened before him – of course, it was the wheelchair Tony had built for him not Clark’s.

Bruce slipped with ease in his chair ignoring the blinding flashes that rattled with every movement he made. Pepper shook hands with him and Bruce thanked the valet who watched astonished as everyone else the car slithering alone to the parking.

“Tony waits upstairs” Pepper said as they moved.

“No, Tony’s here!” the billionaire from Malibu covered the distance in playful strides and hugged Bruce. “I couldn’t let you alone.”

“But this is the safest building in the world” Bruce said mocked puzzled. “Or you’re uncertain?” he winked.

“I wouldn’t have brought you here if I wasn’t sure…” he mumbled to him. “What do you say?” Tony asked when they reached the great front entrance; like a schoolboy eager to get his teacher’s praise.

“Tony, I had seen the Tower before and the blueprints.”

“Yeah, but it was daytime; everything looks better in a black scenery” he winked.

“It’s your masterpiece, Tony…at least, until your next creation! But one hundred and five floors? You couldn’t resist, huh?” he cocked his eyebrows.

Tony shrugged innocently.

“No, I couldn’t…” he shook his head. ‘But it was only a floor…and you know how I can’t stand being seconded: I always want to have the biggest things.”

Bruce snorted.
“Freud has a good explanation for your case…” Tony frowned. “Nothing worrisome: men who want to possess the biggest things need to compensate for length problems in…” he shook his head with his face deep in sympathy “in their groin.”

Pepper began laughing and Tony growled.

“I’m glad to see you’re in a spree, little guy…”

Superman was already in the reception floor chatting with some senators he knew very well and respected for their integrity.

The entire floor was a huge reception hall with elegantly decorated benches covered with every kind of expensive food and dessert, booze and flowers. In the other edge there was a huge dance floor and a famous band played music.

The noise of chatter and giggles was already established mixed with music that was rather neutral for Tony Stark’s infamous tastes.

Suddenly, Superman turned where everyone was looking. He already knew from the familiar heartbeat and the aroma but still his sight was dazzled. Well, he knew Bruce’s beauty better than anyone but seeing him formally dressed always made something to him. Oh, he hated that tailor! And loved him for creating such clothes that manifested Bruce’s beauty so irresistibly. But mainly he hated him because now everyone was drooling on Bruce and he still didn’t know how the tailor handled Bruce’s body in the process.

He loved every color on Bruce’s body but this classic combination of black suit, white silk shirt and black silver stripped tie made Superman’s groin twitch – and that wasn’t ideal, since he was in his Superman suit that, well, was very revealing of his body’s reactions.

Stark had left his guests to welcome his friend in the entrance and now as he and Pepper escorted Bruce in the hall, Tony Stark was beaming proud and happy: Clark cocked an eyebrow – why not? Stark wasn’t forced to watch Bruce from afar…

Superman’s eyes widened and he gulped his booze in a large gulp – not that alcohol was of any help… He had sensed a powerful being and… body heading towards Bruce and upon turning his eyes there supposedly indifferent he saw Thor in his divine attire and his hammer stashed in his golden belt. The god glowed with his blond locks giving the impression of sun rays yet what gave the impression of the sun more was the sweet smile in his bearded face as his eyes met Bruce.

The Asgardian stood in attention and brought his fist on his heart and Clark could hear Bruce’s discomfort in case someone could suspect but others were rather preoccupied with Bruce’s body than Thor’s salute; only Superman noticed feeling a hot wave of lava ascending his body to his head. Tony cleared his throat and the Norwegian realized and proceed to shake hands with Bruce who nodded solemnly.

“I am honored to be in your company again, Mr. Wayne; I hope your healing is moving smoothly.”

“It is, thanks to you and all the heroes who saved my life.”

Pepper patted Bruce’s shoulder.
“I’ll get you something to drink.”

But she didn’t finish her phrase and a gorgeous woman in a black velvet skin tight dress that reached her ankles approached them with gracious strides that highlighted her perfect curves. She held between her lean but lethal – Clark knew that – fingers a crystal flute and her grey, smart eyes scrutinized Bruce’s face with fascination.

“That won’t be necessary, Miss Potts” she said in her heavily accented voice. “I took the liberty to bring a drink to our guest of honor.”

“Who?” Tony shook his head mock frustrated. “It’d be better if you killed me, dear…” he said dramatically to her. “You know: by wrapping your thighs around my neck…” he winked. “Little guy, I wouldn’t drink anything she offers…”

“No alcohol…” she said her eyes fixed on Bruce’s, her juicy lips moving slowly. “I’m sure you’re still on medication.”

“Indeed” Bruce answered and took the offered glass. “Thank you, Ms. Romanova.”

Her eyes glimmered and a satisfied, impressed smile curled her lips.

“Finally, a person from West says it right.”

Bruce lolled his head.

“Tony had me do my homework…”

Tony coughed again and waved his hand in front of her face to get her attention.

“Yeah, I’m here too, doll…”

“I didn’t notice you, Stark’’ she retorted to Thor’s chuckle and Tony huffed opening his arms in the air.

“It must be the suit…” he turned to Peppers cocking his eyebrows “Remind me to not wear grey again.”

Clark felt a torturous fire inside him; he should have been proud that people admired and respected Bruce even without knowing about Batman but still…

“Avoiding greeting him would be more suspicious…” Lois whispered slyly ending up to his side after a ‘patrol’ for news-fishing.

He didn’t need more: he left his glass in the tray of a passing waiter and marched there stretching his impressive posture – he was as sturdy as that Norwegian and more… But suddenly a company of teens ran to him ecstatic yelling his name awestruck: Stark had the Tower open for the public for the day and invited the schools that have come to stay for the party.

“I’m afraid that I don’t have any autographs, guys…” Superman said smiling and his eyes locked momentarily with Bruce’s eyes that pretended indifference.

Yet the fleeting second of their eyes’ locking it was enough for Clark to understand how proud Bruce was of him and how much he loved him – Clark didn’t need Bruce’s lips twitch to know that he was smiling.

Superman smiled cordially feeling his heart floating and spoke to the teens, which soon were reinforced by younger kids – keeping constantly the corner of his eye on Bruce’s company which moved inner. To worsen Clark’s torment. Because he could see eyes goggling at Bruce and the rest of the company of course; but still the youth who returned from the dead intrigued people – especially, since he was so stunning.

“Bruce!”

Superman didn’t need to turn there to know who was: Matt Leench. His heart began beating faster; he knew that Bruce didn’t have anything with his physiotherapist and that the blond didn’t grope Bruce but still…And the worse was that Leench didn’t emanate any sign of hesitation or fear knowing that Superman was also there, watching.

Clark mumbled an answer to a kid’s question and bit his lip: he didn’t want anyone to fear him and he actually felt grateful to the man for not running to Stark or anyone and saying everything about the cramps he caused. Also, with Leench’s ministrations Bruce’s muscles were fine again and he began again walking exercises and swimming.

“Matt, finally, I get the chance to meet Lilly, your lovely fiancé” Bruce said beaming. “He speaks all the time about you – he showed me your picture once.”

Clark’s heart from beating heavily began flying and he wanted to sigh in relief when he heard the young woman chirping.

“He likes to brag about me all the time – sometimes I feel embarrassed.”

Tony cocked an eyebrow and looked at the young woman.

“No need for that, dear” he said in his sexiest voice and Bruce bit his bottom lip to not laugh. “He has every reason to brag though he didn’t brag to me about his stunning fiancé…” he took gently her hand and feathery touched his lips on the back.

Matt nodded.

“Because I know you, Stark!” Matt said mock angry and Pepper nudged Tony in the ribs.

Tony pouted.

“Excuse moi; I must tend to my guests. Bruce, I’ll be back in a moment: till then, you’re in good hands.”

Superman snorted inside: yeah, a gorgeous ballerina-spy-assassin, a god hunk, a nice looking physiotherapist. Thankfully, Rogers wasn’t there because he was sure that he would be glued to Bruce too…

“That Bruce Wayne is really gorgeous, huh? Even in a wheelchair…”

He caught a giggling feminine voice from a corner of the space.

“And those clothes on him…I mean Armani is a master but I think he should pay the man for wearing his suits not vice versa…”

Another woman.

“No wonder Thor and Romanov is with him – this body certainly needs to be guarded…”

A harsh man’s laugh.
“Next time Stark didn’t guard his puppy it ended up to the wrong hands.”

“Not just hands…Imagine what this pelvis suffered for the poor thing to end with paraplegia.”

“I don’t think he is a ‘poor thing’ – actually, partnership with Wayne Enterprises seems now more promising than ever” a woman intervened. “It’s time I introduce myself.”

“You won’t wait for Stark to return?”

Superman could hear the rolling of her eyes.

“We’re talking about the man who kneed Luthor’s balls and sent him to prison snatching his Labs… Wayne doesn’t need a guardian.”

Clark with dread heard the others agreeing and walking with the woman to Bruce. He felt the urge to take Bruce and take him somewhere to spend the night alone…

“Sorry, kids; Superman is needed elsewhere” Lois’ voice cheerful but firm addressed Superman’s little tormentors. “There’s ice cream in the fridge - fountain.”

“Thank you!” he sighed when they were left alone.

Lois rolled her eyes and shook her head in despair.

“You’re helpless…Now, go to Bruce…” she whispered.

Superman was ready to cross the space to speak with Bruce even playing an act but then a frame of the wall opened. The wall was entirely made with bullet proof glass reinforced with a special alloy Tony invented and whenever a flying guest arrived, a frame rose to permit entry.

Clark’s eyes bulged on the figure that landed softly and graciously – and well he wasn’t the only one as a stampede of camera clicks roared. Almost every person in the enormous hall goggled on the newcomer.

Diana stretched her breathtaking body and raised her head eyeing not without a hue of arrogance the place and the people. She wore a dress – yes, a dress! Clark insisted on that because he couldn’t believe it…but he certainly appreciated it. A flaming red silken dress that reached her hips and ended wispy in her knees; her dress was strapless with a deep cleavage that let half her porcelain breasts bulge free; the fabric was airy but still stuck on her body’s muscles revealing every detail of how perfectly ripped she was. Her arms were naked with a golden bracelet like lace covering her right wrist to the elbow; she wore golden high heeled sandals that their strings hugged her entire shapely calves. Her waist length locks were free and her tiara embroidered her forehead – the ruby star sparkling.

Clark hadn’t seen her from that night he was returning to Gotham from the tests Jor El had run on him; he had spoken a bit rude to her and since then she didn’t appear again except in the dream at the waterfall in Themyscyra… 132 hours and 46 minutes…Wait! He was counting the time unconsciously? He felt immense guilt and…dread but his joy for what he was seeing silenced everything else. And her perfume hit his deprived nostrils more intoxicating than ever.

Her eyes were ablaze, indifferent for the crowd and the stares she was receiving. She nodded when Stark rushed there with his confident stride and brought his palm to his chest bowing slightly his head in respect.

Diana curled slightly her upper lip with satisfaction and brought her palm over her heart to show her respect.

“Princess Diana, it is an honor for us and me personally that you grace us with your presence.”

“The honor is mine, Mr. Stark, to be among such noble heroes and heroines.”

A genuine smile lighted her beautiful face when Superman came to her side without everyone catching his fast motion. Superman grinned too and Tony frowned – for the first time suspicion gnawing inside him.

Even though people tried to approach Diana to see her from up close, the two Avengers didn’t move from their place around Bruce: Steve Rogers now added to their company accompanied by Peppers. So Tony led the way for her and Superman to his teammates.

“Let me introduce you” Tony said obliged as a host but definitely his voice was completely out of the mood. “Natasha Romanov, the infamous Black Widow, Steve Rogers, Captain America our leader and Thor, well, the God of Thunder” he frowned “maybe you’ve met before in a congress or something?”

Thor laughed lighthearted but Diana remained cold.

“No, unfortunately, I didn’t have the pleasure.”

“Your glory has reached Asgard” the blond god commented but Diana replied only with a tight smile.

Tony coughed uncomfortable for the Princess’ lukewarm handshake with Natasha who just cocked an eyebrow sarcastic and Steve mumbled a ‘nice to meet you’ reflecting her lack of interest for meeting him.

“And my best friend, Bruce Wayne” Tony avoided referencing to their previous meeting due to the attack.

But Diana smirked locking her eyes with Bruce who didn’t blink.

“We meet again, Mr. Wayne” she said uncaring for Tony’s intention to keep secret that they already had met; she cocked an eyebrow and her eyes shone gleeful. “I see you managed at last to accumulate strong people around you: that’s perfect – that way you won’t need to cower behind trees to save your life…”

Tony clenched his jaw and Pepper’s eyes flashed angrily; the rest were shifting nervously, their irritation clear.

But Bruce was completely calm focused on her eyes but scrutinizing her.

“I don’t select people according to what you consider strength and weakness, Princess, because people have many more qualities than just physical strength. Except for some people that evidently have nothing more to show off than their supposed strength for which they brag like kids in a playground” he uttered keeping his unflinching stare locked with hers.

Tony mouthed ‘Ouch!’ knowing that nobody was seeing him, his cheerful mood back again while Lois raised her fist in the air in a gesture of vast satisfaction.

Superman’s eyes widened feeling Diana’s body tremble in anger while Bruce was composed as ice. The Princess was snarling at Bruce minus the growling but the human was indifferent already detaching his eyes to continue his discussion with Matt’s fiancé.

“Diana, let me suggest you some really great beverage” Superman said to her to lighten the mood – what was Bruce thinking talking like this?

But she was still glaring at the human.

“We don’t have any nectar but I believe that you’ll find something satisfying in our esteemed bartender’s selection” Tony chirped remembering his host role.

Diana nodded to him but turned to Superman.

“Yes; I’ll trust your taste, Kal El.”

Superman smiled to her and both strode the space to the buffet standing out among the crowd that swarmed around them.

“Your pet is quite insolent” the Amazon leaned to Clark’s ear.

“He isn’t a pet” he answered through his teeth beaming at people.

“You approve his behavior then?” she arched an eyebrow shaking hands indifferently with the Mayor.

“Of course not…”

“You spoiled him…” she snorted and bypassed the crowd to get to the bar, Superman hurrying to follow her.

“Bitch!” Natasha spat and Steve looked at her reprimanding but not disagreeing.

Tony whistled.

“I’d like to have a ladies’ fighting in my party…” he looked at the ceiling thinking. “Mmm…some mud would be awesome! Now I need some hard rock…’xcuse me, boys and girls, have to speak to the band…”

Bruce splashed some water to his face: Tony had provided that the Avengers’ Tower offered a perfect friendly environment for people with impairments so some sinks where set lower and some cubicles where made with the latest developments for the needs of people with special needs – Bruce felt actually joy that his disability became the reason for his friend to be more sensitive to these issues.

He had crossed the reception floor to the corridor leading to the rest rooms unnoticed, his training in stealth useful even in civilian settings. He needed privacy to take his medication – he had promised Alfred to not neglect this and even if he had planned to, Tony had managed to slip his guests and bring him a dish with freshly cooked food.

“Alfred sends his regards…” Tony had winked.

“You’re kidding me!” he had gasped and Tony pursed his lips shrugging.

“New York has some awesome delivery services…Bon appétit, mon ami!”
He had searched the room for Selina though he’d have sensed her presence without seeing her: she should have been there by now…

Suddenly the door opened and Bruce saw in the mirror Superman approaching him with a frown. Bruce’s heart sank – from the moment he spoke with the Amazon, Clark hadn’t given him even a glimpse - but he turned immediately to face him.

“Hi, Superman: do you have a good time?”

But Clark had no time for this.

“Nobody is in hearing range” he snapped. “What do you think you’re doing?” he asked standing in front of him, imposing like a tower.

“Surviving through the party?” he arched his eyebrows.

Clark lolled his head and licked his lips.

“I think you have a better time than just surviving…” he remarked snidely, the sting from all the people swarming around Bruce still hot. “You know what I mean? Why you spoke to Diana like this? You said you had no problem with her being here!”

Bruce narrowed his eyes, a crease settling at his forehead.

“I don’t” he protested.

Superman crouched in front of him and held his shoulders.

“Really, Bruce?! Why? To get the opportunity to insult her?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I didn’t insult her: I just answered to her – you certainly heard what she said.”

“Do you have to reply like this? Showing off your wit and giving the chance to malevolent chat about her? Get a grip, Bruce! She saved hundreds of people in just few months! Hell! He saved your life and you didn’t even thank her once! And now you offend her like this!”

Bruce’s eyes were blank but shone as Superman’s rant unfolded.

“For the strong person she declares to be, she definitely gets easily hurt – especially when she so lightheartedly insults others” he lolled his head on the side. “At least, she has you to comfort her…”

Clark pressed his lips and caressed Bruce’s bangs that were wet from the water.

“There is nothing to be jealous of, Bruce; she doesn’t know anyone here apart from me and the Avengers are too preoccupied drooling at you.”

“People are drooling at your Princess, too; she could socialize if she wanted but she just needs to have you fixed on her” Clark closed his eyes huffing frustrated. “Have you revealed to her that you’re Clark Kent?”

Clark widened his eyes.

“Of course not!”
Bruce nodded relieved.

“Nice” he was aware that lack of trust couldn’t be the reason he didn’t tell the Princess yet the result was that counted.

Clark pecked his lips and rose.

“Please, speak better to her next time…” he turned to leave the restroom but stopped hearing Bruce’s intake of air signalizing that he was ready to say something.

“You know, Kal El” he chose on purpose that name “I was expecting you to speak then – to say something about the… ‘weak’ human beings. Not specifically about me but all the human beings who love you and believe that you help them not just in a showboat of your superiority.”

Clark didn’t turn.

“How can you believe that she helps people for that?”

Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“Because she admitted it – c’mon, Kal El; haven’t you read her interview?”

“We’ll talk after the party, Bruce” his entire posture vibrated from his haste to return to the party.

“Superman, keep your distance from the Princess” Bruce had noticed some things about her that made him worried. “Until we clear things about what’s happening to you” Clark yanked his head huffing in frustration. “Please.”

Superman shook his head in disbelief.

“I can’t believe this, Bruce! Stop being jealous…”

Bruce didn’t return to the hall; the corridor had an exit to the elliptic balcony that hugged half of the floor dangling over New York. He relished the freezing breeze brushing his face – below the city sparkled with all her night glory: Tony’s railing was almost invisible so even someone sat in a wheelchair wasn’t thwarted to enjoy the view.

He was relieved to be alone – he cared about people yet being among them made him uncomfortable because he still felt that he didn’t belong. There were people that really liked him – it wasn’t their fault he felt like this. It was only his… He wasn’t normal by any means…

Inside, the intermission of rock music had given its place to calmer melodies as the youngsters left the party. Excitement reached easy his secluded spot at the balcony since he stood on the very edge of the tongue like balcony and from there he had a prefect view of the dance floor. He turned because the melody of “Fly me to the Moon” was very familiar to him: Frank Sinatra was Tony’s favorite singer. So it was no surprise to him that Tony was dancing with Pepper in the center of the stage – Bruce smiled fondly for his friend when Tony rested his head on Pepper’s naked shoulder licking his lips.

Soon more couples joined them and Bruce distinguished Captain America and Natasha, Matt and Lilly, Fury and Maria Hill…he paled…Clark and the Princess. He closed his eyes and turned his eyes to the sky: they were supposed to pretend that they didn’t have an affair but he warned Clark to keep a distance from her. And he didn’t listen…
Bruce had noticed that her hair emanated an artificial glow that was common in dyed hair: why a goddess – especially, an Amazon – dyes her hair? And her eyes seemed a bit odd…

“I can’t believe this, Bruce. Stop being jealous…”

But Clark asked him to don’t give up on him during this: he ought to protect Clark. This was the reason or he just satisfied his own need to keep Clark? He inhaled: he wished to stand on the railing and dive to the void opening his wings and flying – it seemed ages since the last time he did it…

Someone was there and Bruce knew that he could reveal his awareness to him; he turned and Thor’s impressive figure approached him.

“I’m sorry I interrupt your thoughts” the blond said with a smile.

“No problem” he answered and looked again at the sky.

The god stood beside him following his gaze.

“I don’t agree with anything the Amazon Princess said – I can’t understand why she spoke like this.”

Bruce rested his forearms on the transparent railing.

“Not all gods are so generous and kind to humans as the God of Thunder.”

Thor turned his eyes to him slightly frowning.

“I don’t consider it generosity and kindness being respectful to humans – especially, to a unique human being as you, Mr. Wayne” Bruce locked eyes with him. “She insulted you personally and I wanted to shove into her face who are you really …but I respect your will to keep it secret.”

Bruce nodded.

“I appreciate it. But her words were really nothing…I have heard much worse.”

Thor pursed his lips.

“I was shocked Superman didn’t say anything: after all, he has witnessed your braveness in more situations than me.”

“He respects my decision for secrecy too” he replied and wished this was the truth. “Besides I prefer people consider me weak and coward.”

Thor’s eyebrow twitched and he shook his head; his baby blue eyes twinkling with fondness.

“But you are not: Bruce Wayne is the bravest, strongest person I’ve ever known. Even though severely injured you fought and defeated the most powerful demon to save your friends and…me; and then though you should have stayed in the hospital you used the power of your mind to make your body fight an insane criminal saving innocent lives…You almost died there” he shook his head clutching the railing. “Even gods wouldn’t do that…”

Bruce didn’t like praising him so he decided to change the subject.

“Don’t tell me that gods are afraid of dying?” he smiled.

The blond turned to him, his locks framing his bearded face.
“Gods can die too but…it is more difficult.”

“So gods are just beings with special skills and powers and not the supernatural entities most people think.”

Thor gave him a toothy smile.

“So…you’re denying my divine nature?”

Bruce arched an eyebrow.

“Mmm…more I’m putting it into perspective” Thor blinked captivated. “Are you going to burn me with your thunders?”

Thor chuckled.

“I’m not the God of Wisdom but I’m not so stupid to burn my general in battle” he crouched before Bruce and placed his hands on his shoulders. “I don’t long for battles but I wish when the next comes I’ll be honored to fight beside you.”

“Hm…It’s so nice seeing a God kneeling before a mere mortal…” Lois said wickedly to Superman who was staring dumbfounded at the balcony.

Most of the reception hall didn’t have a view to the balcony because of the stage floor’s interval yet from some spots you could get a glimpse.

“That’s preposterous!” he whispered to her but Lois pouted innocently and shrugged.

“Why? You’re glued to the Princess’ skirt so someone has to entertain our Prince” she winked. “And the Avengers team has a breathtaking selection of hot bodies…”

“But we agreed to keep appearances this is why I stick to Diana.”

“Cut the crap, Supes! Keep appearances doesn’t equal making out with someone who openly fancies you.”

Clark licked his lips.

“I’m not! Diana knows that I’m with Bruce and has accepted it.”

“Really? That’s why she insulted him in front of everybody?” she sniggered and cocked an eyebrow in glee. “At least, she tried…”

“Did you have to post it at Planet’s site?”

Lois sipped her mojito.

“I’m covering the party, right? Besides, it was the highlight.”

He shook his head.

“I don’t believe how many haters of her commented already…” he had found a moment to peruse on one of the built in tablets Stark had throughout the Tower.
“Haters? Nah…Just clever people who see through her…” her demeanor became dead serious. “Go to Bruce even for a typical handshake or watch others appreciating what you are too damn to appreciate!”

Lois left to speak to a senator and thankfully Thor was moving away from Bruce probably to give him some privacy to answer his phone. Superman began walking towards the window frame that opened to the balcony when Diana intercepted him.

Moon river, wider than a mile
I'm crossin' you in style some day
Old dream maker, you heartbreaker
Wherever you're goin', I'm goin' your way

“You know you should have been sleeping…”

Clark’s voice was stern but in his beautiful eyes it was obvious that he was happy he hadn’t slept.

“You spoiled me; I need you to cuddle me to fall asleep – so basically is your fault.”

Superman crouched and lifted him from the chair easily as a baby.

“I’m so happy I finally spoiled you!” he exclaimed heaving him in bridal style and flying again through the open balcony door of his bedroom in Tony’s villa at Thasos.

“Where are you taking me?” Bruce chuckled and Clark leaned his head over his, locking their eyes.

“To spoil you more…”

They floated over the black sea; the full moon was sending silver to sleep over the black slithering silk. And then in the peaceful thrashing of the small, lazy waves, Bruce heard some very familiar words that made his heart beat faster.

“Moon river, wider than a mile…”

He stared at Clark who blushed and stopped.

“I know this song” Bruce said.

“No kidding…”

“I must have heard it in Tony’s house: Sinatra is his favorite singer…but this song feels more important” Clark was looking up, pursing his lips. “What?” he asked grinning.

Clark gulped and looked him in the eyes completely solemn.

“I used to sing to you that song…every night…at Fortress…when you were…” he inhaled deeply “far away from me…when I wanted to persuade you to come back so to see the world together…to not let me see such a vast world alone…”

Bruce felt his eyes watering and Clark smiled.

“It seems they’re right about people hearing us even when…” he caressed Bruce’s cheek “they’re far…Don’t cry, Star…we’ll cross that river together” he captured his lips.

“Sing it again…”

Clark began singing as before mimicking perfectly Sinatra’s voice but Bruce touched his fingers to his lips and he stopped.

“In the Fortress…don’t tell me you sang using Sinatra’s voice?”

Clark blushed.

“No…”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I want to hear it with your real voice…”

Clark coughed embarrassed and began singing with his own voice and it was the loveliest voice Bruce had ever heard; he murmured appreciatively without opening his eyes and felt Clark change his position hugging his waist and holding him erect upon his body. Moving slowly to the rhythm of the song…Bruce nestled his head to Clark’s heart keeping his eyes closed to suck the verses, Clark’s voice and his heartbeat.

Two drifters, off to see the world
There’s such a lot of world to see
We’re after the same rainbow’s end, waitin’ ’round the bend
My huckleberry friend, Moon River, and me

Bruce had stayed with his smartphone clutched in his hand and turned his head towards the hall hoping to lock eyes with Clark sharing that memory; the feelings of that night; of that song.

His heart beat desperately and it was as if he heard the cracking. Clark was dancing with Diana, his hand clenching her waist, her fingers digging her shoulder plates; their eyes locked.

Two drifters, off to see the world
There’s such a lot of world to see
We’re after the same rainbow’s end, waitin’ ’round the bend
My huckleberry friend, Moon River, and me

Bruce’s breath halted for some seconds.

“Mr. Wayne, there’s nothing wrong with Superman’s cells – and no strange reaction between his and yours cells…Of course, there could be other reasons for the behavioral changes you observed – external reasons we can’t identify through lab techniques. But your friend isn’t ill.”

Lucius had worked till late to ease his agony. Bruce thanked him for everything and wished him a great evening. Nothing wrong…

“Is this why you made me feel ill?” Clark accused him.

Bruce’s eyes were fixed on the couple dancing as he slipped the smartphone to his inside pocket; he turned his back shutting his ears to anything other than the ruckus of the city underneath. He had made Clark feel ill? To not lose him?

“Promise me that you won’t give up on me however stupid my behavior – promise that you’ll Tony patted cheerfully New York’s Mayor and keeping his big grin on his face he strode to Pepper who has just distanced from a company of guests. She was the only one that noticed that his flashing smile didn’t reach his eyes. Actually, Pepper knew that he was fuming.

He stood before her.

“What is it, Tony?”

He scanned the entire hall without seeing or caring about anything.

“What is he thinking!” he spat and gulped his bourbon.

Pepper followed his stare to no avail.

“Who?”

“Superman!” he lowered his voice and grinned carefree to some guests who looked at him. “You saw him with that arrogant bitch!”

Pepper pressed her lips; she had seen them dancing.

“Maybe it’s some plan of Bruce’s.”

Tony shook his head.

“Plan my ass! No plan would have included Superman snuggling her…” he blinked huffing. “I knew that the UFO was interested in her but…how things got here? Bruce didn’t tell me anything!” he ruffled his locks with one hand. “Of course…I’m all the time away…”

Pepper held his shoulder and looked him in the eye.

“Maybe it’s not something serious, Tony…”

But he cocked his eyebrows.

“Yeah, sure…You forget to whom you talk? I warned the bastard to not hurt Bruce!” he clenched his fist.

“Maybe Bruce doesn’t see it as you do…”

Tony looked around.

“Where’s Bruce?”

“I don’t know” she shook her head.

“Alone!” he snapped and headed furious to find him in the enormous pack hall but some senators cut him in the middle and though he sighed he couldn’t shun them.

“Are you nuts?!” Lois was now seriously mad at him and thankfully she kept her voice whispering so that nobody noticed.
“What now?” he rolled his eyes.

The song had ended and Diana went to speak with Oliver Queen who just arrived.

“Bruce is alone and you dance with her such a song?”

“People are drooling at Bruce; he is fine – everything goes according to the plan.”

Lois shook her head exasperated.

“You know better than me that Bruce hates people goggling at him – that’s why he secluded himself there: to get some privacy and maybe some word with you. You’re the only one that counts for him!”

Superman frowned seeing her face ease with a satisfied grin watching Bruce.

“Can I have this dance with the party’s most beautiful man?”

Bruce smiled and looked at Selina slithering to him: a sparkling star in her deep blue silk thigh-long dress.

“This chair isn’t made for dancing and…anyways I was never a good dancer.”

Selina gave him her hand and he grasped it.

“Peps says otherwise…and I’d never let a chair stop me.”

She positioned Bruce’s hands in her waist and hers over his shoulders beginning moving slowly to the music; their eyes locked each of them reflecting the other’s smile.

Superman saw what Lois had seen: a stunning Selina had gone to her friend and they were dancing.

“They are so cute together!” Lois chirped delighted. “Same age, same beauty, she was there for him throughout his Hell” Clark had told her about Selina and Bruce. “They are a match made in Heaven!”

Clark understood her intention to make him jealous and rolled his eyes.

“They are like siblings…”

Lois pouted and arched her eyebrows shooting a picture of them with her smartphone.

“You’re not going to publish that?” Superman asked exasperated.

“Of course not! Bruce deserves some discretion: I just want to have him with his new love interest.”

Clark’s face contorted in irritation.

“I told you they’re like siblings!”

“Oh! That easily changes: I have seen it many times: childhood friends coming closer to each other when one of them gets a broken heart…”
“You’re late, Sel…”

Selina pressed her lips cutely and blinked.

“I know, sweetie…I’m sorry but I thought that you won’t be in danger with so many heroes around so… I put business before pleasure.”

Bruce frowned and narrowed his eyes.

“Do you have something to tell me?” he caressed her slightly curly hair that fell to her shoulders.

She licked her lips and chuckled.

“You know me so well…I had to free a precious gem from its kidnappers…”

“You didn’t tell me anything.”

Selina kissed his cheek.

“A girl has her secrets…”

“From me?” her friend asked almost hurt and she tapped her fingers on his shoulders.

“You’re right but the chance came all of a sudden and I couldn’t resist…”

“You returned it to the Police?”

Selina blinked seductively and curled her lips.

“After I pet it a bit…”

Bruce lolled his head to the side and smiled.

“Old habits die hard, huh?”

“I won’t keep it, sweetie…”

He grinned.

“I know.”

Bruce felt her hold tightening.

“I saw him dancing with her…”

He shrugged.

“So?”

“It’s Your song!” her eyes widened – Bruce had told her about the song.

“It’s okay, Sel.”

“It’s not! You can hide from everyone else but me, Bruce! I know your eyes!” a crease formed on her brow. “And there’s sadness…”
Bruce rubbed soothingly her back that stayed uncovered from fabric and smiled.

“Let’s dance, my beautiful lady…”

Superman pressed his lips and made to march there to Lois’ amusement when he saw something and stopped abruptly.

Steve Rogers had noticed that Bruce was alone in the balcony and he didn’t like it. Besides he wanted to speak to him.

Of course when you’re Captain America people unaware of your wishes stop you constantly to shake your hand and pat your shoulder. So when he finally got to the balcony he saw Bruce Wayne dancing with a lady who from the back side looked more than beautiful.

He blushed and made to leave to not disturb yet Bruce had already seen him.

“Captain…”

Bruce amused took in Selina’s eyes bulging and her lean body going stiff.

“I don’t want to disturb…” Captain mumbled ruffling his hair. “And it’s Steve, Mr. Wayne.”

“Bruce. You don’t interrupt anything…” Selina turned to Steve and the hero’s eyes sparkled fascinated, which Bruce was sure that Selina noticed as well. “This is my best friend, Selina Kyle – Selina, this is Steve Rogers.”

She gave him a dazzling smile and walked to him graciously offering her hand.

“Who doesn’t know Captain America?” she said seductively. “Thrilled to meet you.”

“Me too, Miss Kyle…” he was actually blushed and Selina’s smile became wider. “I didn’t know Mr. Wayn…Bruce had such a brilliant friend.”

Bruce smiled.

“Steve, Selina is a great dancer and I’m not the best to escort her” he chuckled. “So could you replace me?”

Selina lolled her head to him with a glance screaming ‘bitch please!’ But Bruce was happy for the first time in the party.

“With pleasure!” he offered his upper arm to Selina who wrapped hers enjoying the sense of bulging biceps.

But soon her big smile faded and she turned to Bruce.

“I don’t want to leave you alone…”

“In a minute I’ll get inside too…Do not worry and enjoy yourself!”

She pressed her lips again and Steve looked at Bruce also indecisive.
“Go…” Bruce gestured to the stage and they hesitantly left him alone.

Now that Bruce was alone again Clark could go to him and maybe when nobody was looking take him and have a dance up to the sky as they did wrapped in aurora borealis back at the Fortress or washed in the silver moon in Thasos.

After Selina left with Rogers, Bruce had watched them for a minute and then turned his back to the party doing stuff in his smartphone – Clark could hear it even though Bruce’s back hide it. The stubborn human was working even now! His strides were decisive as he headed to the exit but a hand caressed his forearm. He turned frowning and his eyes met Diana’s.

“Don’t tell me that you’re tired of dancing?” she smiled.

He cast a glance at Bruce and then at Diana – Bruce loved loneliness and it’d be better to speak at the safety and warmth of their bedroom. He nodded to Diana and she beamed gripping his upper arm and guiding him to the dance floor.

Every time their twirls brought the balcony to her eye range Selina was trying to get a glimpse of Bruce though it was difficult with dancing couples getting in the middle.

Steve met her eyes and smiled.

“I feel there’s a great bond between you two… You know Bruce since he was Falcone’s captive, right? You stayed at his side all these years… You’re as admirable and brave as he.”

She pressed her lips.

“I was just a witness…” she said hoarsely. “Pain, starvation, humiliation, despair… he endured alone.”

Steve blinked.

“I think that your presence there galvanized him… fuelled his courage; even the bravest and strongest of people need someone…”

Selina grinned.

“What about you? Do you have a special person in your life to galvanize you?”

“It’s difficult being with someone in this job…”

Selina cocked her eyebrows.

“That’s why I won’t ever become a super heroine!” she chuckled and she felt with a thrill Steve’s arms tightening around her.

“You’re already super, Miss Kyle…”

Selina couldn’t stop a snort.

“If you’re taking flirt lessons from Stark, you must change tutor, handsome…”
Steve chuckled.

“So… I wasted my money, then?” he said flushing.

Selina slithered on his body and touched her lips in his ear relishing the goose bumps throughout his body.

“A secret… With such eyes and body you don’t need any teacher” she whispered in his ear exciting his heartbeat. “Do you want me to show you?”

“Someone like you shouldn’t be alone.”

Bruce had heard the footsteps turning the curve to his spot but didn’t move hoping that the stranger would leave. But instead the steps came closer and the stranger leaned on the railing focusing his intense green stare to Bruce’s uninterested eyes that gazed at the sky.

He had been perusing data in his smartphone from several sources about Diana of Themyscira: he had already searched many times for her but now his focus was on plain descriptions of her from ancient authors – he had also taken many photos of her from the party for further scrutiny. Upon hearing the footsteps he slipped the phone in the jacket’s inside pocket.

He intended to go inside and bid good night to Tony and then return to the penthouse for a hot shower and some lifesaving sleep. So Bruce wanted nothing more than getting rid of the intruder as soon as possible.

“I’m not alone” he replied indifferently turning his eyes to the stranger only to be met with a figure that actually was very familiar.

During his research for the Amazon, he came upon many pictures and videos of Oliver Queen: he should have recognized his voice but the videos must have altered it a bit. The man was definitely more handsome from up close – standing at 6’3”, being muscle bound and sturdy with broad shoulders his presence radiated power as much as his face emanated charm.

His short hair and stubble was a dirty blond and his green eyes stared with an intensity that gave the feeling of being X-rayed; his lips were always curled in a smug faint smile that accompanied perfectly the smugness in his piercing eyes.

Queen looked around pouting.

“I don’t see anyone…” he shrugged innocently.

“I don’t want to monopolize my friends” Bruce replied nonchalant.

Queen cocked an eyebrow and his grin made his face even smugger.

“If I was so lucky to be your friend, I’d crave to be monopolized by you…” he offered his hand for a handshake “Oliver Queen.”

Bruce shook his hand without showing that he knew him already.

“Bruce Wayne.”

“I know…” Queen answered and his eyes sparkled mysterious. “It’s only three months I returned from the dead” he said keeping his eyes on Bruce’s “but your story reached my ears and fascinated
Bruce shook his head.

“There’s nothing fascinating in my story.”

Queen arched his eyebrows smiling.

“I beg to differ… You survived through deprivation and tortures that even an adult wouldn’t and you managed to get your family’s company back sending your tormentor to prison. I admire you, Mr. Wayne.”

“There’s nothing to admire…” he spat and turned his wheelchair towards the curve leading to the frame for inside. “Excuse me but I’m tired…”

The man grinned knowing.

“I ruined your solitude…” he nodded. “I’m sorry for my intrusion – I cherish loneliness too but my desire to meet you at last subdued my discretion.”

“There’s no need to apologize; after all, I was leaving… The balcony isn’t my property.”

But Queen’s tender hand on his shoulder stopped his movement and Bruce frowned at the man’s annoyingly confident but charming smile.

“What do you want, Mr. Queen?”

“To discuss potential business partnership; a friendship; sharing our feeling of not belonging… But mainly a promise to meet again.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Mr. Queen, Wayne Enterprises will gladly study the possibilities of a partnership with you” the man gave a toothy smile that was filled with amusement for the younger man’s evasion.

“I confess that my interest is greater for you than Wayne Enterprises” Bruce’s blushing wasn’t an act and he saw fondness in Queen’s enigmatic eyes. “I think that we can understand each other, Mr. Wayne: we might be surrounded by our friends, people who care and love us, but they can’t understand… Right, Bruce?” his eyes pierced Bruce’s and it was as if the older man tried to invade him.

Bruce detached his eyes searching the dance floor since the rest of the hall wasn’t easily visible especially for someone in a wheelchair.

“I must find Tony…”

“Let me come with you then.”

Queen moved along him to cross the curve when the sound of glass smashing and gunshots made the older man grab Bruce’s shoulders to stop him; he definitely felt how tense those shoulders have become. The ruckus of terrified shrieks made Bruce’s blood freeze and his body rebelling to get there; his eyes were wild focused on the inside but panicked bodies moving aimlessly covered even the small view he had.

Suddenly, Queen crouched before him and his eyes locked with Bruce’s.
“I’m going in to see what’s going on” he grinned. “I can’t think of anyone so insane to attempt anything here… With so many super heroes it’d be oven in a minute. However stay here and take cover in the shadows” he showed the sharp, too narrow end of the elliptic balcony that was drenched in the shadows from the neighboring building.

Bruce wanted to go inside but he shouldn’t raise suspicions so he nodded. But Queen waited and Bruce knew that he wouldn’t leave if he didn’t go where the man have showed him. Grudgingly he did and the older man smiled and moved inside winking…

Bruce watched him leaving and tried to get a glimpse of what was going on opposite the dance floor in front of the gathered crowd of guests. Well, he could think of someone so insane that could hit here but his insanity wasn’t enough to break the security and he was supposed to be in Arkham, right?
The guests in the reception floor of the Avengers’ Tower gaped at the improbable spectacle of windows smashing in thousands shards and guys with Disney characters’ masks landing among them with firearms aiming at them.

For the first seconds, surprise and shock didn’t let the reality sink in – this building was the safest in the US and probably the world AND almost every fucking superhero was there! But when the nightmarish bang of exploding glass registered and the waterfall of shards flooded the floor women screamed and men moved from there taking women along, leaving unwillingly empty a space which looked like a stage.

The Avengers, Superman and Wonder Woman dispersed in the hall watched dumbfounded, angry but unable to do anything as if someone had paralyzed them.

Pepper who stood with Tony in a corner, squeezed his hand, but Iron Man looked at her outraged.

“I can’t do anything!” he gritted his teeth.

“Call Jarvis” she whispered but Tony shook his head in denial, his burning narrowed eyes fixed on the intruders.

“Not even this…”

Pepper tried to contact Jarvis from her StarkStell, only to realize that her phone was dead. She met Tony’s knowing stare.

“We’re fucking!” he mumbled pissed.

The Disney cartoons took their places surrounding the crowd and then one last jumped through the nonexistent window landing on his knees slipping through the floor.

“I’m gooooonna make aaaaa brand newwwww start of it in ooooold New York! New York!” he sang in a dissonant nasal impression of Sinatra spreading his arms in the air.

People goggled at him: he wore a dark purple suit with green shirt and vest matched with the purple Sinatra-like fedora on his head. Clark and Tony like some of the reporters knew him.

Joker jumped on his feet: his face was perfectly painted in his clown face.

“Whoa! I aaaaalwayss wanna dooo that!” he frowned. “Wait! I have al--ready entered a building thaaaat way but not in Brooooodway style…” he lolled his head towards the reporters with the cameras. “Wha’? No pictures? No standing ovaaaaation?! Tough audience…”

His eyes flicked to each superhero in the room and waved his hand in frustration.

“Theyeeeee toughest audience, huh? Bi--ceps, del--toids, pecs and ster--oids, HeHe! Well, I dooooon’t like repeating myself but since you’re new to this: I’m tonight’s entertainment… aaaaaand by the way: I LOOOOOVE NEW YORK!” he showed around the ‘I ♥ New York’ badge on his lapel to be met with perplexed stares.
Joker pouted and looked at the badge which read not New York but Gotham.

“Ooooopsy, dairiisyy!” he cackled maniac only to stop abruptly sobering with an apologizing expression. “Small technical inconveniences – happens all the time in live shows…”

Tony had had enough and despite the fact he couldn’t make his armor activate or contact Jarvis he crossed the space, clenching his jaw. Joker’s goons pointed their guns at him and Tony’s teammates followed by Superman and the Amazon moved though like Tony they felt their powers gone or just unable to make anything with them.

“Oooon! Toonny, dear!” Joker stretched more his grotesque scars and turned to him.

They stood opposite each other in a breath’s distance. Tony’s eyes were cold piercing the clown who towered him. Joker licked his lips.

Thankfully, nobody was in proximity because the moans and wet breaths certainly passed the restroom’s locked door.

“I told you that you don’t need Stark’s lessons, handsome…” Selina mumbled between her pants and moans.

Her neck was stretched permitting full access to Steve’s mouth to suck as he was thrusting harder in her. She clenched his powerful shoulder blades and tightened her thighs grip around his buttocks urging him for more.

Captain America’s shirt was tossed away – Selina had gotten rid of it from the start: she wasn’t going to lose the golden chance to grope such meat – and the man really enjoyed the young lady’s hands fondling him stronger and more arousing than any other woman.

“Are you sure you don’t have any super powers?” he panted looking in her green glimmering eyes and she chuckled.

“Apart from my exceptional beauty and sharp wit, none…” she grabbed the nape of his neck and brought his lips to her own chewing them with all her lust.

“No need for more…” he whispered smiling and his mouth stormed at her naked breasts.

Selina didn’t care about the mangled state of her dress: Steve had rolled the sleeves down until her breasts were freed and the down half of the dress was upturned to her waist when Captain settled her against the tiled wall. She had immediately lifted her legs to wrap his thighs staring him in the eyes.

Well, he might be from another era but he wasn’t stupid! He grabbed her black silk pants and in the frenzy of kisses and touches he lowered it along with her black fishnets to the knees just to gain access to what he wanted. Yet Selina moved her body tossing away with impatience the clothes and her stiletto heels.

Steve’s arms were protectively wrapped around her naked back to keep her from being crashed to the wall because his thrusts were exactly what she had expected from him. And she showed her appreciation with moans, grunts and prompting for more.

“Did you hear something?” she frowned. “Like shattering glasses?”

Steve raised his blond head from her breasts; he was all flushed and horny for more; his eyes almost “Tony…” he panted trying to find the words fast “some…crazy stuff…”

She smirked and her eyes shone gleefully; she shook her head scolding him.

“Mmm…I think I get the SMS, handsome…” a stronger thrust affirmed her thought. “Let’s continue OUR party…” she moaned lustful mouthing Steve’s lips and stabbing her nails to his deltoids to outer her immense pleasure.

Bruce covered in the shadows pulled out of his pocket his Cosmos smartphone and brushed the upper right corner transforming the gadget into a tablet. He had no intention to oblige to Queen’s suggestion but first he had to gain intelligence about what was going on: those yells definitely weren’t from excitement.

His fingers began flying on the screen and eventually he gained access to the building’s control system. Only to realize with a frown that the control system was out of order and the entire Tower was locked from the outside world and inside. Which was to be expected since the Tower had his own security staff and the reception hall should have already been swarmed by them.

So the one who organized this took good care to trap them somewhere in the building – there! He saw the figures of armed people locked inside their offices or elevators as they were heading to the reception floor. Even the headquarters were locked along with the control panels and the telecommunication antenna was also out of order.

Bruce bit his lip: that was a major blow for Tony…and definitely it wasn’t the work of a common criminal. He tried to get a view inside the hall from the surveillance system but of course this was disabled too… And the oddest of all: there was no indication of the system being hacked or attacked by a virus.

However, even if the Tower was completely breached its greatest defense was the Avengers and they were inside, Superman and Wonder Woman with them. Yet there was no sign of a battle and even if there were hundreds of civilians and hostilities would endanger them still all these heroes could stop the invaders in a minute or less…

He pursed his lips…unless they couldn’t fight… The electronic attack could have rendered Iron Man useless; Kryptonite would have the same effect to Superman – his guts clenched for Clark. But the rest? Thor and the Amazon were Gods, Natasha’s abilities were independent of any external factor and the same went for Captain America… How could someone incapacitate all of them?

He still couldn’t see inside… He clenched his jaw and dialed a code.

“Jarvis?”

“At your service, Master Bruce.”

“Can you contact Tony?”

“I’m afraid I can’t, sir; something blocks any communication path with Master Anthony.”

Bruce nodded huffing.

“Get me view inside the hall through any satellite you can.”
“Yes, sir.”

In two minutes, he had on his screen delayed image from a satellite from the moment when the invaders smashed the windows. Though the image was much snowed he certainly could make out the Disney masks.

So he didn’t need the next image to know who attacked: with his purple suit, a purple fedora and his face covered with the known makeup, Joker in all his glory entered last.

“Damn!” he exclaimed and his eyes darted towards the whole-wall windows of the hall.

How he managed to escape with the new knocking-out system Tony had in him? He wouldn’t be able to make a threatening step not to mention escape Arkham and come to New York. He shook his head snorting: of course if someone could render useless this Tower, the Avengers, Superman and Wonder Woman, disabling Joker’s security measures wouldn’t be a problem. But the news of his escape should have leaked…

“Jarvis, can you activate Iron Man’s armor from distance?”

“I’m afraid it is impossible, sir” the AI sounded really sorry. “There is too much interference.”

Bruce pressed his lips – of course, the guy behind all these took his precautions.

“But I know that Tony can sustain the armor with his mind’s power.”

“Indeed, sir, yet it seems that something messes with Master Tony’s mind because he can’t contact me.”

Bruce nodded: if Gotham’s crime world had interfered in that then things weren’t simple.

“Okay, Jarvis. I let my Cosmos open for you to get access: through it you’d have proximity to keep watching the entire Tower as much as possible and try to overcome what blocks the systems. I’ll go inside.”

“Sir, I strongly suggest that you do not go there: the danger is too high and Master Tony would be furious.”

Bruce smiled.

“Do not worry, Jarvis: I don’t intend on going back to the hall but getting inside the building might make it easier to find a way to help” a thought crossed his mind – how can someone strip heroes from the ability to use their skills without something evident? “Jarvis, I want you to scan the reception hall for anything odd – especially the air.”

“I’ll do my best, sir, though it might be difficult doing that through the satellites.”

“Thank you, Jarvis: I let our line open…”

Holding his Cosmos with one hand, brushed the control panel on the armrest of the chair and slid to the curve heading for the entry frame at the corridor bypassing the hall. He had already a theory: he knew of one brilliant but deranged genius in psycho-pharmachology, who with the proper help could achieve that – and that man had just escaped arrest in a miraculous way.

Someone powerful must have intervened and that reminded him of the decree about Luthor and the Metropolis’ released criminals and of course the attack against him. Intergang? He pursed his lips. He didn’t believe that Edge, the mobster that was killed during the subway attack, was the leader; yet the real Intergang obviously wanted people to believe that so they wouldn’t make such a spotlight move destroying their own scheme…

And with Joker from all people? Joker would never work for a mobster…

“Well, well, well!” a sniggering voice and a body blocked his way. “Look who’s her’.”

Bruce made his eyes widen from fear as he faced a man of average height and weight aiming at him with a machine gun. He wore a Disney character mask.

“Please…” he muttered feigning fear.

“Boss, will be sooooo happy to get his Brucie!”

“What are you doing?” Tony spat at Joker through his ground teeth.

Joker lollled his head on the side and spread his arms towards the smashed windows.

“A spee--ctacular entrance! I thought you of all people would understand…” he pouted.

“Take your pathetic gang and beat it before we kick your lame ass!”

Joker craned his head backwards and stared at his ass intrigued.

“Well, I’ve got to admit it’s not the beeeeest butt out there – not with Brucie in the contest” he licked his lips. “But laaaa--me? You’re so cruuel – let’s ask Brucie…”

Tony clenched his jaw and tried to fist his hand to punch the clown in the face – armor or not – but slightly panicked realizing that his body wasn’t obeying. Thor made a step at his side.

“Leave Bruce Wayne out of this!” he’d have grabbed Mjölnir yet he had already found out that he couldn’t even yield the weapon – and that hurt as if he was left half.

But he wouldn’t let that discourage him nor the fact that his body didn’t obey him to fight: Bruce fought Bagdana while paralyzed and then defeated that clown being severely injured. Thor wouldn’t fail that brilliant human: he’d protect the innocent among them even somewhat disabled.

Natasha stood beside the two men, her eyes two flames sending daggers at Joker.

“Let the people go, mu`dak!”

But joker spat his glove and fixed the locks that fell in his face.

“Uuuuh, ho--ney! Russian sweet words turn me oooon but I’m married…” he pouted and stretched his hand to pet her cheek but she spat at his fingers. “Hahahahahahehe! I’m gonna have fun tonight! I LUUUUUUUUUVE …where are we? – ah, yeah – NEW YOOOOORK!”

Superman who exactly as the rest felt deprived of his powers without feeling extremely ill like when a Kryptonite was present stepped forwards. He hated that Thor spoke protectively of Bruce and besides his goal always was to protect people and in this hall were many innocent people. He just hoped that Bruce would remain in the balcony till they cleared this mess.

“What do you want to let these people leave unharmed?” he asked calmly and Diana strut proudly at his side – the heroes forming a half circle – which oddly was like a smiley - with Joker in the middle.

People in the enormous space were already terrified about the fact that a small army and a nutcase had crushed the specific party; and the fact that all these superheroes didn’t do anything to beat them only increased their panic. Of course some guests with more cool reasoning attributed that to the heroes’ intention to not cause casualties.

And actually that was the reason Tony and Superman didn’t ask Joker how in hell he managed crippling them: they knew that admitting that would shatter any thread of composure the crowd had.

Yet Joker didn’t have such worries. He leaned towards Superman squinting and in a swift move took his cape and covered the hero’s head.

“Heya, Papa Smurf!” he giggled and then sobered. “I aaaaalways wanted to do this” he said turning to the puzzled people who held their breaths. “Don’t tell meee you didn’t want that too? Seeing these super baboons rendered useless?” he inhaled deeply and yanked his head closing his eyes. “This is a night of mir---acles! Your heroes are their true selves: useless!”

The guests exchanged fearful glances and a collective scream shook the hall when Joker pulled out of his jacket a gun aiming at Superman: people knew that their heroes were indeed powerless otherwise these bozos would have been already stopped.

“We have some unsettled business” Joker hissed humorless and met Superman’s glare with his own. “You just can’t keep your balloon hands away from other’s property, huh?”

Superman snarled: Joker calling Bruce his property was outrageous and he’d have smashed him weren’t for that damn thing that dampened his ability to order his body to act. Joker’s finger was tightening around the trigger and Clark knew that it’d hurt or kill him but he didn’t care.

The others looked appalled at the scene.

“He isn’t…” Superman began uttering through gritted teeth and Joker clenched his jaw twitching to press the trigger.

Tony frowned: of course something didn’t work with the precautions he set inside Joker’s system but witnessing that was worse.

Diana made a step and stretched her imposing body between Joker and Superman, glaring arrogantly at the jester.

“He has no connection with that pathetic human” she said stentorian and Tony wasn’t the only one who suddenly forgot Joker to hate her. “Bruce Wayne said publicly that he has no relationship with Superman!”

Joker lolled his head to the side and eyed her intrigued with a glimmer in his acid green eyes. He let the gun dangle from his finger.

“HeHe! Another token of spouse fidelity…” he frowned eyeing Diana from feet to the head. “Ow! Ow! Ow! The ooooldest heeen in the room!” he lolled his head to the crowd and winked “aaaaand the planet…” he added collusively.

He leaned his face close to her who sniffed as if smelling something really rotten.

“You’re holding up pretty good for a 5,000 old, huh?” he giggled “Tell me, granny, can I have your plastic surgeon’s name?” he winked. “Might need him in 1,000 years – this face” he gestured to his
She gritted her teeth and fumed as Tony couldn’t fight a chuckle as many of the bystanders. Diana wanted to raise her arms and hit him but as every other hero she found it impossible – Superman held her upper arms.

“Easy, sugar… I’m not gonna hurt you – I cherish UNESCO’s protected monuments – HAHAHAHAHAHAHAAAAA!” Joker hopped around.

“How you disabled our powers?” Tony asked really pissed but not for Joker’s spree on Diana – that he had enjoyed.

Joker scratched his nape with the point of his gun and hopped to his direction. He tilted his head on the side and pursed his lips.

“C’moooooo, Tony-boy… You’re a fuuucking genius ooooor a genius in fucking – find it yourself.”

He made a circle-like gesture to the small army of goons he brought along and they threatened with their firearms the crowd who cried.

“Enough!” Thor roared. “Leave before this ends badly!” his eyes casted fires at Joker.

The jester began shaking and then pouted.

“Uuuuuuu! I luuuuuuve tough…” he squinted. “You’re supposedly a god, huh? Brrrrrrrrrr! Now, let’s get serious… BUHAHAHAHA!” he cackled. “Oh! Boy! Meeeee? Seeerious? This is out of character… Sorry, ‘bout that!”

He stroked through the room, his goons pushing the guests to the perimeter. He scanned every corner licking his lips, scared people following his gaze.

“Daaaaaamn! I feel like that evil fairy in Sleeping Beauty: uninvited, misunderstood, scaaaaaring people…” but suddenly he raised his voice in a roar “WHERE’S MY SLEEPING BEAUTY!”

Tony approached him with confident strides, determined, ignoring the gunpoints turned at him.

“He’s safe away from here and you!” he clenched his jaw. “Bruce has already left the Tower. So take money and get the Hell out of here!”

Joker closed his eyes and shook his head disapprovingly.

“Hooooow rude! Is this a way to treat your broooooother-in-law?” Tony’s face contorted in puzzlement and repulsion. “Bruce is your brother, I married him sooooo we” he moved the hand with the gun between them causing a gasp from the crowd “are now brothers” his eyes stopped blinking playfully and turned into ice. “I know he didn’t leave and I’ll find him!” he gritted his teeth.

And then his eyes found the shining bar – the barista freezing in his spot.

“Oh, my!” he screamed like a thrilled school girl. “Do you haaaave a bar?”

Alfred sat in the white leather semi-circle couch at the salon in Tony’s penthouse. He was sipping a fine wine that he had taken from Tony’s oaken bar and Hero was purring folded like a fur ball next to him casting drowsy glances at the butler who smiled at him.
“Our master will be back in short; he said that he wouldn’t stay till late. He doesn’t want to admit it but lately he gets tired rather easily – you noticed too, don’t you?” he petted the kitten’s belly and Hero played with his hand. “This will stay between us, right, young master Hero? An esteemed, serious butler can’t play with a kitten even as adorable as you” he looked warily around. “Do you think Master Anthony has an AI here too, watching?”

He turned on the huge built-in TV.

“CNN has a splendid documentary on wines” he explained to Hero. “Indeed, he gets easily tired, Master Hero, and this is due to his emotional state – he covers it perfectly (that boy had to hide his emotions his entire life to survive) but I sense it: I see it in his eyes even when he smiles…” he sighed. “I wish his parents were alive so he could talk to them at least…”

The huge plasma screen filled with peaceful French scenery: green fields, vast vineyards and then small, traditional cottages hiding at their underground endless rows of beautiful barrels priceless wines that the documentary’s experts tasted narrating their stories.

“The best to relax yourself, Master Hero…” but the kitten looked to him rather bored and Alfred twitched his lips. “Next time we’ll watch something about fish; mice documentaries are pretty unwatchable…”

But suddenly the peacefulness of cava was abruptly cut for breaking news and Alfred although away from Gotham felt his guts clench reflectively. Avengers’ Tower was the safest building in the world: what could go wrong?

“The Avengers’ Tower is breached!”

The caption under the clear image of the flashing building was enough for Alfred to stop listening to anything the newscaster said in an awestruck face. He gripped the armrest of the couch.

Bruce stared feigning panic at the firearm’s point that aimed at his chest. The guy didn’t sound like the usual goons which in most of the cases were mental patients. However the man made a move towards him and it wasn’t the smartest thing to do – on the other hand, how was he supposed to suspect that weak, paraplegic Brucie was ready to knock him out.

“Please…Put that away…”

But the goon – Donald Duck – rushed to him and grabbed viciously his arm.

“Move your ass, ya cripple!” he spat.

“I wish I could…” Bruce murmured and was ready to knock the man out getting the proximity he wished for.

Yet his trained hearing caught the almost imperceptible sound of a twang and then a twish and whoose; he knew these sounds too well because Ra’s loved archery and many times after his training or sex sessions made a demonstration to him. But an archer in New York?

He pulled his arm causing the goon to lose his balance just a second before he thunk of the arrow declared that met flesh; Bruce’s eyes bulged supposedly surprised; he couldn’t see the goon’s eyes yet his yelp and jerk to the glass wall were eloquent enough. Instantly, a small pond of blood formed under the man from the spot in his shoulder where the arrow’s head protruded. The goon’s mask muffled his screams but his twitching said everything.
Bruce knew that he was watched and brought his palm to his mouth appalled and shocked; he didn’t want his stalker realize that he wasn’t the weak Bruce Wayne or that he knew about the arrow before it hit the man. And of course he was so petrified to look around to locate the archer who was perched on the railing.

But when the man’s light feet landed on the balcony he couldn’t ignore him. He casted his fearful, shocked eyes on him and cocked an eyebrow but only inside.

The stranger wore dark green pants and tunic with a hood of the same color casting his face in shadow; there was a black eye mask and from the slits two green eyes like fire daggers pierced Bruce who stared flabbergasted hiding his amusement: Robin Hood?! The bow was looped over the man’s right arm and the arrow case was distinct in his back.

The archer straightened his posture and keeping his eyes on Bruce’s face strode to him. Bruce flinched to the back of his chair and the archer put his hands on the armrests trapping him between them.

“You pushed him away from my arrow…” he said in a low but almost threatening voice.

Bruce shook his head in denial narrowing his eyes.

“I…what? I didn’t…”

The archer smiled in a tight line.

“I never have missed my target.”

Bruce’s eyes sparkled.

“It seems that now you did…” the stranger laughed and shook his head appreciatively. “What was your target?”

The man’s eyes bore into Bruce’s.

“His heart, of course.”

Bruce gasped.

“You wanted to kill him?”

“Of course, he’s a bad guy” he said indifferently. “I thought that you of all people would agree with that.”

“I don’t want people getting killed, even bad guys. He might have a family: by killing him you would have increased the possibilities his kids follow his path while if you help him reform he would keep his kids out of this.”

The man rolled his eyes and snorted.

“Wrong hour you chose to deliver sociology lectures…” he remarked snidely. “Anyways, you might have saved him but I’ll finish him before he informs his boss.”

In a swift motion, he extricated his bow and an arrow was already positioned ready to launch to the fallen, writhing man.

“No…” Bruce said and the archer licked his lips frustrated and glared at him sideways.
“You’re stupid, you know that?”

Bruce nodded and the archer put his gear back.

“You can go now” Bruce said.

But the man trapped him again between his arms so rushing that Bruce jerked backwards.

“WE go” the man stressed the pronoun and settled his one arm around Bruce’s back and the other under his knees ready to heave him.

But Bruce stared at him with widened eyes and his body stiffened.

“We need to be stealth so no chair” Robin Hood explained. “Putting your arms around my neck will help…”

Bruce shook his head: that man ruined his plans – he couldn’t work with him around. Robin Hood frowned puzzled.

“If you stay here the guy there will get you” he gestured to the hall. “He is a Gothamite like you and I’m sure he’s looking for you – his goon said it. And you’re cold…Paraplegics should be careful with hypothermia.”

Indeed, fat snowflakes were falling thickly and Bruce for the first time realized that he was indeed cold but he didn’t want this man attached to him.

“I’m not going with someone who kills people…”

“Give me a break, will you?” he retorted annoyed.

“I give you one – go!”

But the archer gritted his teeth and tightened his grips on him already lifting him off the chair. Bruce repelled him by pushing his shoulders with his palms.

The green eyes flashed.

“I don’t believe it!” but then he softened his voice. “I won’t hurt you, okay?”

“Leave me alone!”

The man despite his resist lifted him in bridal style Bruce still struggling.

“If you don’t stop struggling” the stranger warned him with a hiss “I’ll knock you out! Do you want to be unconscious in a stranger’s hands?”

Bruce knew that there was no use: he had to find another way to do his work with him around. So his face filled with fear on the hint and stopped writhing, clutching his Cosmos. However his eyes fell regretting to his chair as he was lifted – it was his greatest chance in mobility and independence. The archer taking this in pressed his lips.

“I’m here to help not hurt you. Relax” his hoarse voice became soothing and in a swift motion they were running into a blur to the building’s inside.
Joker staring at the bar gestured to his henchmen who armed their firearms ready to shoot the crowd; the heroes hurried to put their bodies between the guns and the people but it was clear that if those firearms shot the heroes wouldn’t be the only casualties.

The jester indifferent hoped on a stool before the bar and slumped on the shining surface.

“I’m not here to kiiiil anyone” he uttered in a sweet, melancholic way gazing at the plethora of bottles behind the petrified barista. “Of course, it could juuuuust happen – because of…mmm…how scientists put it? Chaaaaaos Theory…”

Tony rolled his eyes and snorted: this loony speaking about science? How shitty that night could get?

“Tony, ol’ pal” Joker giggled. “Stop roooooling your eyes! Well, back to the gist: I’m a poor artist with need of funding for his dream project…sooo, all in all: give wallets, jewelry, Rolex to my fine gentlemen before chaos erupts…” his voice sounded tired.

“What do you want, Joker?!?” Superman demanded infuriated by his irritating state to stand and just witness thugs robbing people as, in less than minute, small piles of valuable items formed.

Joker rolled his eyes to the barista shaking his head.

“He’s as dumb as his suit, huh?” he waved his gun gesturing to the young man to approach and put the hand holding the gun on his shoulder causing the barista’s trembling. “Listen, dude…I’m a cinnamon addict” he told him in trusting way and the barista widened his eyes: it was the first time he heard something like this. “Aaaaaaand I’m in withdrawal” he touched the gunpoint to the man’s temple. “Do something, wiiiill ya?” he pleaded.

The barista nodded panicked and rushed in his bottles to make a proper beverage with cinnamon, his trembling hands made the bottles rattle.

Tony yanked his head towards Joker.

“Let the man alone, clown!”

Joker yawned.

“With you in a moment, Iron-y…Mmm…Let’s see what you did there…” he took the glass that trembled in the barista’s hand and everyone in the space watched breathless. “Cheeeeeeers!” and made to drink but stopped abruptly, his eyes glaring at the man above the glass. “I hope it’s not poisoned…Nah! You’re a good kid!”

He gulped the liquid making loud sounds and the crowd followed every gulp.

“Mmm…” he licked his lips putting the glass on the bar. “Noooot bad…” he stashed his gun in his inner secret pocket and the barista along with the guests sighed in relief.

Suddenly, a flash of movement and people understood what happened only when the barista jerked violently backwards and crushed at the wall behind him. A bare blade slightly protruded from the center of his chest that fast drenched in blood.

“WHERE’S MY CINNAMON?!” Joker yelled to the barista’s crystallized, bulged, dead eyes.

The heroes in the room moved as one against the clown and every firearm turned on them, arming to shoot. The guests yelled, their shock from the barista’s death fuelling their new horror.
But Joker turned to them calm.

“Easy, children… I want myyyyy stars alive for the show.”

“Where’s Rogers?” Natasha mumbled to Thor’s ear.

Steve held Selina in his arms having just experienced his second climax; their hearts were beating one upon the other, relaxing slowly, their eyes locked in ecstasy.

“Oh, Captain, my Captain…” Selina exclaimed and Steve laughed.

But then the echo of frightened cries reached them and for the first time the lack of music hit them hard.

“That definitely wasn’t Tony’s tricks…” Steve said determined and carefully put Selina down on her feet.

“Bruce…” she gasped worried and fixed her dress gathering at the same time her dispersed clothes.

Steve who was dressing too looked her in the eye.

“Tony won’t let anything bad happen to him!”

Selina hastily gathered her messy hair in a ponytail and lolled her head.

“When he obviously wasn’t able to stop someone scare his guests?!”

Steve nodded.

“This is impossible…” he muttered. “In that hall, are so many heroes: why they don’t do anything?”

Selina putting her feet in her stilettoes marched determined to the door.

“I don’t know but I’m gonna find out!”

She unlocked the door and made to open but frowned finding it to be locked. Steve who stood by her grabbed the handle and shook it to no avail.

“Someone locked us…” Selina mumbled and made to extract a special pin she had in her hair for breaking locks but Steve touched her shoulder to get her away.

Which Selina accepted gladly because she didn’t want him to realize her special skills.

“I don’t need my armor for that…” he said and with one kick the door collapsed in its hinges.

“I just noticed…” Selina purred and winked.

Steve smiled getting out helping Selina pass the debris.

“The restrooms’ doors are not as durable as the other doors in the Tower; that explains why the security staff isn’t already storming the floor to stop whatever is happening; if they are locked as we were, they can’t get out.”

“I must find Bruce” she said already gazing at the frame leading to the balcony. The corridor wrapped the ball room but the frame leading to the balcony was in the opposite direction.
Steve looked her in the eyes and nodded.

“I’ll go inside to help” he already turned but Selina held him.

“The hall’s entrance not being guarded means it’s a trap. And whatever made your pals unable to confront the menace will hit you as well. Better come with me, find Bruce and think.”

Steve took one of the built-in tablets to call anyone in the building but it was of no use.

“It’s dead” he said to Selina.

She nodded.

“Expected: they must have caused an electronic blackout to the entire Tower. Let’s go find Bruce. I hope he stayed at the balcony.”

She was sure for her friend’s extraordinary skills but still he was in a wheelchair and definitely she didn’t want him using his mental power on his body AGAIN.

“We don’t have any contact with the Tower, Paul – it seems that everything is shut down including the phones of the guests and the building is locked in and out. We see Special Forces rushing here but what they can do when the Avengers, Superman and Wonder Woman can’t do anything?”

The Afro-American journalist from the entrance of the mammoth Tower was relating to the newscaster while the cameraman showed the vans with Special Forces and the local police flooding the road pulling away the reporters to a safe perimeter. Bystanders added to the frantic crowd of reporters gaping curious at the building.

Thomas Elliot sat on his elegant, corner couch, dressed in his silken, expensive robe; he took the glass of whiskey Kelly gave him and grabbed her waist to settle her in his lap.

“Is this…” she asked pointing at the TV set.

“Yes, babe: the Avengers’ Tower is breached” his eyes shone gleeful but he didn’t want to reveal his joy to her.

“We have some satellite pictures from the intruders…” the newscaster said a bit baffled by the depicted people. “And this must be their leader...According to the FBI…”

A picture of Joker under much snow was on the screen and Thomas laughed.

“This guy is sick, huh, babe?” and very interesting in his obsession with Brucie… Searching information about Bruce, he learnt everything known about Joker. “And I was pissed I wasn’t invited…” he snorted and sucked Kelly’s shoulder causing a giggle. “Lucky me, right, babe? I just hope that poor Bruce is alright.”

Kelly looked curious on a thick parcel which seemed to enclose a CD or DVD.

“What’s that, Tommy?”

He looked at the parcel and a real evil smile carved his beautiful face.

“Something I was waiting for a long time!”
The archer kicked the door and miraculously opened. It was a bedroom – one of the guestrooms, Bruce knew from the tour Tony has given him on the previous days. It seems that whoever locked up the building didn’t care about the guestrooms.

The man put Bruce on the bed but he immediately grabbed the armrests of the nearest chair and pushed his body to slip there. The stranger regarded him.

“You really hate beds, huh?”

Bruce didn’t answer and grabbed his Cosmos off the mattress.

“I had the impression that every phone in the building is dead?”

“Not this one – this is new…” he mumbled an answer and when a blip was heard he turned it in private calling and brought it to his ear.

“Master Bruce, you were right: there is a strange toxin in the air that probably prohibits Master Anthony and the rest of the heroes use their powers.”

“Of course…” that explained why someone saved Crane from the Police. “Can you dissolve it?”

Bruce caught the archer’s intrigued stare but he couldn’t stop now.

“I think I can, sir: the ventilation system has a backup, auxiliary control system that the saboteur didn’t know.”

“Do it, Jarvis.”

He met the man’s gaze.

“It’s business. You won’t go back to help?” that way he’d be alone and his hands would be free.

The archer shook his head.

“That room is fool with fucking superheroes – they’ll manage. And frankly I don’t care much.”

“But there are civilians, too…”

The man looked at him deeply in the eyes.

“I did what I wanted to do – that’s all!”

Bruce frowned.

“Me? But you don’t know me more than anyone in that room.”

“Some people don’t need to know each other…”

He turned his back ready to open the door.

“I’ll be outside guarding the door” he said gruffly realizing Bruce’s need to be alone.

“Thank you, Arrow…” he was glad that he decided to give him privacy.

The man turned to him, his mysterious eyes sparkling interested.
"How did you call me?"

"Robin Hood is copyrighted" Bruce grinned.

The stranger smiled and nodded.

"I like it – I’ll keep it."

As the door closed behind him Bruce dialed Alfred’s number; his poor butler must be distressed.

"Alfred, I’m alright. Safe. Don’t worry. Yes, the others seem to be fine, too. We’ll clear this mess up. I must hang up now."

Selina and Steve saw shocked Bruce’s wheelchair empty at the balcony. A pond of blood was in the curve and some red footsteps leading away from the balcony.

Selina kneeled before the chair and caressed the back and the armrests, her eyes ready to water. But Steve squeezed her shoulder soothingly.

“I’m sure he is alright…Bruce is a fighter; he came out of this. Look…”

He gestured to a second pair of footsteps almost covered from the fresh snow; it was different than the bloody one and headed to the inside of the building. From the snowflakes that almost hid the footprints, they had formed before the bleeding man left.

Selina frowned and followed with Steve the traces. The footprints stopped at the frame opening to the corridor and thankfully not the one to the main hall.

“Someone took him?”

Steve nodded.

“And I’m positive that he wasn’t a bad guy or else he’d have taken him inside the hall.”

Selina shook her head.

“Unfortunately, not only one bad guy wants to get Bruce…” Steve pressed his lips. “Let’s find him…”

Steve hesitated casting an eager stare to the main hall. But Selina gripped his upper arm.

“If you go inside now, you’ll be unable to help like your teammates – we must wait and find Bruce.”

“What do you mean?” Tony asked the clown, his patience running thin with each moment.

Joker jumped from his stool and walked towards the heroes, forming a square with his fingers and eyeing Tony through it like a director. People flinched at his approach.

"Ugh! I aaaaaalways wanted to direct my ooooown superhero movie…’’

The heroes frowned staring at the jester.

“You’re crazy!” Thor roared but his lost contact with Mjölnir was bothering him as Hell.
Joker lolled his head to him smiling and batting his eyelashes.

“We artists are crazy, blond hunk” he uttered dramatic and frowned. “Where’s Captain…how was it? I caaaaaan’t remember thaaat country…Oh, yeah! America” he shrugged disappointed and huffed. “Never mind, we’ll do this without him – we can’t recast him at this stage.”

He continued scanning the place through the square his fingers formed.

“Mmm…I wouldn’t mind a little black in the equation – no offend for your splendid black dress, dear” he said to Natasha. “But a rodent would be a gooood addition: I feel that Bats brings cash…” suddenly, he caught Fury’s eye that flashed from wrath “Right, Mr. Fury?”

He spread his arms to the crowd and closed his eyes.

“Aaaaand I have my audience ready for the movie of the decade!” he casted a sideways narrowed glance to the frozen members of the band. “Nooooo soundtrack? Naaaah!”

Superman felt his body charging and his powers returning swiftly; he could tell that the same was happening to the others as well because they were already casting daggers to Joker ready to tear him apart. Tony’s armor already covering his body.

The goons instead of shooting at the heroes turned their firearms at the band after their boss’ gesture.

“I waaaant a draaaaamaatic, overwhelming score” he hissed at the band and they nodded fearful. “Beeeenny Hill Show!”

The infamous music filled the space and Joker giggled crazily observing with his acid, frantic eyes the heroes. Then he raised his hand dead serious.

“Shut up, people! Aaaaaaand…ACTION!” his raised palm fell on his opened palm like a clapboard.

Superman frowned seeing Thor with his face distorted in wrath attacking Diana who was taking a defense-attack stance and the Kryptonian clenched his fists and jaw tackling the Asgardian. Thor was enraged that an ice giant dared to thwart his attack on Adva who was there smirking at him ready to launch her attack.

Meanwhile, Tony saw in the spot Joker stood, Peps. How couldn’t he notice her before? And Iron Mongul was storming at her ready to hit taking his revenge for Tony defeating him over the ocean. His body fully covered in Iron Man’s armor, he stormed at the giant who in fact was Natasha at first attacking a horribly misfigured Joker but then he became Snapdragon who was surging against her; Natasha gritted her teeth, tore her dress to get freedom of movement and changed her body’s stance to face him.

Diana was helping Superman confront Thor.

The guests watched flabbergasted the heroes blowing each other and then as the blows and beams began launching and the heroes’ features transformed into grotesque monsters terrified screams vibrated the vast hall and people ran around looking for cover, punching other people in their path because everyone was a monster from their worst nightmares.

Pepper though frightened from what she was seeing took cover behind a fallen bench.

Joker laughed delighted.

“My masterpiece! Noooo CGI, no special effects: MAYHEM PRODUCTIONS PRESENT:
DESPERATE SUPERHEROES – THE FACE OFF” he scratched his green, freshly dyed locks “or maybe FUUUUUUCK OFF – I wiiiiish my audience could help meee decide” he sighed watching the chaos. “Anyway, I was sure that my flick would make crowds delirious – AHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAAAA! Aaaaand I loooove the soundtrack – sooooo fit!”

He turned to his goons who giggling watched the spectacle of superheroes battling each other and people punching, kicking and smashing bottles and glasses.

“Children! Grab the stuff aaaaand go: we have my cinnamon to find” he lollled his face to the side watching touched his creation – he took a tear that wasn’t there and threw it away. “The cameras will record everything for the next generations…OH! I’m so proud!”

He kicked one goon who was passing in front of him and then stopped in his heels seeing one of his men shuffling his feet towards him, stained with blood, an arrow piercing his shoulder. Joker cocked his eyebrows.

“B…boss, Wayne was…at the balcony…I…was bringin’ him when a dude shot me…He took Wayne…” he panted.

Joker cursed and slapped the goon to the floor.

“Why you didn’t come earlier?!”

“I was dizzy, boss…” he whined “and I went through the other door and lost my way” Joker rolled his eyes impatient “and I passed out at some point…”

“Moron! They’re still in the building – it was locked till now. I’ll find them. Chaaaaarge!” he yelled at his henchmen who turned their heads dumbfounded.

“Jarvis, any progress in dissolving the toxin?” Bruce asked the AI.

“I was ready, sir, but there’s no need for that now…”

Bruce frowned but he heard something behind the door.

“Jarvis, wait…” he couldn’t do much than wait and if it was some of Joker’s men, knocking him out when he’d come to grab him. But probably it was just the Arrow.

When the door opened hesitantly at first Bruce’s eyes widened from pleasant surprise. It took only seconds for Selina to envelop him in a tight embrace kissing his cheeks and tousling his hair.

“Thank Goodness! You scared me, sweetie!”

Bruce patted her upper arms.

“Are you okay, Sel? I thought you’re caught in there…” but then he regarded Steve and understood.

Selina lolled her head to the side and cleared her throat.

“We wanted to talk in private…and left the room…”

Bruce noticed Steve’s blushing but the hero immediately noticed the tablet in Bruce’s hands and sat at the bed frowning at the gadget.
“I thought that every gadget in the Tower was dead?”

“It’s new tech developed from Wayne Enterprises.”

“What are you doing?” Captain asked and Bruce knew that he didn’t have the luxury of lying.

“I’m in contact with Jarvis” he replied and Steve’s eyes sparkled hopefully. “Tell me, Jarvis” he put the AI on speaker.

“The toxin that was previously in the air is dissolved but it’s not my doing” Bruce frowned and gestured to Steve not interrupt with asking. “The Tower is finally unlocked, sir; but inside the hall most insane things happen: Iron Man fights with Black Widow, Superman and Wonder Woman with Thor. People are running around frantic, screaming and cringing from fear and hitting each other.”

Bruce closed his eyes concentrating his thoughts.

“How the Tower got unlocked?”

“I can’t answer that, sir; it seems that the same thing that locked the systems and the doors, simply unlocked them as well.”

And the heroes faced each other instead of chasing Joker and his thugs; and the guests indicated being in delirium. This pattern reminded Bruce something.

“Jarvis, I send you a chemical compound and I want you to check if this is in the hall’s air.”

He brushed the indication on the screen sending the synthesis for Crane’s fear toxin that Fox had analyzed when the doctor used it against Bruce.

“It’d be easier this time, sir; since I can get access to every system in the Tower.”

Steve was staring at Bruce intrigued but the later even though was aware of that, couldn’t address that now.

“The chemical synthesis you sent me, Master Bruce, is at large portions in the hall and includes one more element” Bruce nodded knowing already “Kryptonite.”

Bruce bit his lower lip.

“That’s why they dissolved the first toxin letting the heroes use their skills and powers and that explains why they unlocked the elevators and every door.”

Steve and Selina frowned.

“They want a bloodbath” Bruce told them but didn’t explain, hasty to address Jarvis. “Jarvis, I want you to disable IronMan’s weapons and strengthen his defense” he hoped to thwart his friend from hurting innocents.

“I can do that, sir; but Thor’s hammer can’t be controlled” the AI replied understanding his intention.

“I know; let’s hope Superman and the Princess can take the force…” his guts clenched from agony for Clark. “Jarvis, I have the synthesis for the antidote – and I know that Tony has it stashed in the Tower’s ventilation system along with his selection of antidotes” he stopped to gain his breath. “Find it and disperse it to the hall.”
“I’ll do that, sir. The Tower’s security staff is heading there from the elevators and the Special Forces just entered the building; also, I detect a police helicopter approaching. With heavy artillery.”

Bruce looked at Selina and Steve.

“The bloodbath: they unlocked the building and spread the fear toxin to drive the guests and the heroes mad into fighting each other. When the security and the Special Forces arrive, the heroes will see them as nightmarish monsters and will strike them hard – they will answer the fire and the guests will be in the middle.”

Steve was appalled from all these but also puzzled.

“How do you know all these, Bruce?”

Selina locked eyes with Bruce and he huffed.

“This toxin is the creation of an insane doctor called Crane; I know what his toxin does because he used it on me.”

Steve stood.

“I’ll go there and try to stop them from killing each other till the antidote gets administered.”

“Master Bruce, Joker and his gang left the reception hall and wander the building…”

“They’re looking for you” Selina spat.

“Jarvis, focus on the toxin.”

Steve looked indecisive.

“I can’t let you alone now that Joker is coming for you…”

“I’ll be with him” Selina stood so confident that Steve was impressed and perplexed.

“Go, Captain” Bruce urged him. “These people need you more.”

Steve held Bruce’s upper arms.

“I already knew that you’re a hero and tonight you confirmed it.”

Bruce grinned shyly.

“Jarvis is the hero…”

Steve laughed and nodded totally unconvinced and stormed out of the room in his super human speed.

Selina sat again at the mattress.

“Who brought you here, Bruce? Don’t tell me you used…” her disapproval was clear.

Bruce on his screen watched the footage from different parts of the building having hacked the central system.

“You didn’t see him? He was standing outside the door.”
Selina shook her head.

“Nobody was there.”

Bruce nodded: of course, the Arrow left as soon as he heard them coming.

“It was an archer dressed like Robin Hood” he shrugged at Selina’s puzzled eyes. “At least, vigilantism doesn’t lack variety and imagination.”

He brushed some spots in his Cosmos’ screen.

“What did you do?”

“I stopped the elevators caring the Special Forces and the security people – it won’t last much given that the central control is unlocked but it should give Steve some time to get there and Jarvis to free the antidote.”

“Can you locate Joker?”

Bruce pressed his lips and locked eyes with her.

“I don’t have the luxury to care about him right now – besides the building is huge; he won’t find us easily.”

Leslie’s voice was panting on the phone and Alfred couldn’t blame her.

CNN was broadcasting that blasts sounded from the building and sparkles were seen.

“He called me, Leslie, he is fine; calm down…And I’m sure Master Anthony knows how to protect himself. I’ll call you when they get back.”

He petted Hero who looked at him and meowed.

“You’re certain as well that they will be alright, huh?”

Superman felt for the first time in his life exhausting of fighting: dodging that Asgardian’s blasts sent from his hammer was a constant challenge and actually some of them burnt him. But he was happy that his heat vision had managed to hit the God while Diana exchanged punches and kicks with him. Her beautiful face was scratched and bleeding but Thor wasn’t better. Suddenly, Superman’s heart stopped as his lungs: Thor shoved his blazing hammer and the blow at Diana’s head was so hard that the Amazon flew through the hall and slumped at the wall.

Superman stood there paralyzed; dead, his eyes melting in hot tears. The entire world got dark and he was floating in the void: Diana was dead! He ground his teeth and launched against the Asgardian deciding to kill him or get killed.

Suddenly, his mind began clearing and in front of his eyes Thor’s grotesque face became the known mild, kind face. The baby blue eyes of the god looked puzzled at Superman who had gripped his torso lethally. His Mjölnir vibrated angry and vibrant in his grasp but he wouldn’t hit Superman.

“Superman?”
“You killed Diana…”

Tony saw suddenly Iron Mongul transforming into Natasha. Whose dress was ragged and some gushes and burns ran the visible parts of her body and face. Her eyes were two menacing slits as her legs stretched like catapults hit him square on the chest throwing him down.

She stormed at his fallen form with her fingers ready to snatch the arc reactor from his chest but Natasha stopped abruptly as Tony was ready to kick her away.

“What are we doing?” the Russian asked.

“Foreplay?” Tony chirped.

Fury ran there; he was dizzy and still confused but due to his training was able to get over the effect sooner than the other guests.

“Joker did something to us: are you alright?”

Superman felt a strong hand in his upper arm. He turned.

“I’m here, Kal El” her smile was radiant and Clark’s heart began beating again.

Her dress had gashes as her arms and cheeks but she was fine. His relief was so grand that he couldn’t stop himself from hugging her.

Bruce had just managed to get image from the main reception hall and his eyes were narrowed into slits on the mayhem – Jarvis had informed him that there was also a man dead.

Selina watched over his shoulder.

But then Bruce’s finger stayed numb over the screen as he got image from the Superheroes’ fights. He heard Superman accusing Thor of having killed Diana: so that was his greatest fear? And then she touched Superman and he hugged her desperate and relieved.

Selina bit her bottom lip and slipped her hands to hug her friend’s upper arms. Her eyes were sad when met with Bruce’s but he grinned shaking his head.

“Let’s see elsewhere…” he changed into another camera’s image and Selina knew that Bruce really suffered.

Fury turned at the big elevators right in front of the hall’s main entrance. He frowned at the indicators showing that the lift was there.

“The attackers came back to finish the job” he said to the heroes. “Protect the civilians.”

The heroes marched to the entrance, the guests just overcoming the toxin’s effect were trying to make head or tail from the wreckage around them and the bruises they had.

Lois dizzy and battered shuffled to a better spot readying her smartphone to shot the scene – Jimmy was already getting pictures.

“I have some missiles with their names on” Tony spat really pissed. “No” he frowned “I don’t have any missiles…” he said as realized that his artillery was blocked.

“Stay behind, kid…” Natasha snorted at him.

The elevator doors began opening and Thor raised his hammer as Superman, Diana and Natasha stormed at them. The men from the elevators seeing attackers aimed at them but a tornado tackled them throwing their firearms away.

“Stop!” Steve yelled both to security men and teammates.

Everyone stopped and Superman helped the security men stand.

“There’s a helicopter coming and there are Special Forces in the Tower heading here – so we must be ready to neutralize them because they might be ready to fire…” Steve snapped.

The distinct sound of a helicopter filled the space and Tony ran there; he could stop the helicopter if he gained control over his hacking systems.

“Jarvis! What the Hell are you doing blocking my systems?!”

“Following Master Bruce’s orders” the AI replied nonchalant.

The helicopter were a breath away from the smashed windows and Ironman stood there ready to tackle them even without missiles but the helicopter turned around and left.

“Where’s Bruce, Jarvis?” Tony asked as Pepper hugged him. “Nice hair, dear” he teased her because her perfectly groomed locks were like having survived a hurricane.

But before receiving an answer from Jarvis he heard Superman informing the others that the coming Special Forces had their guns down – someone had contacted them about the situation being in control.

Joker stormed the floor with the guestrooms ahead of his goons; some of them were carrying sacks with their loot.

“The only place where someone could take Brucie were the guestrooms that were unlocked… Hoooooney, I’m hooooome!” he lolled his head and licked his lips.

“No, you’re not!”

A sweesh sound pierced the spacious corridor and Joker was carried away by a force and stabbed to the wall.

“Wow!” Joker exclaimed and along with his flabbergasted goons saw that the force was indeed a thick arrow. “Phiew!” Joker said relieved as the arrow pierced only his jacket on the shoulder.

Simultaneously, several arrows pinned his goons like dolls to the corridor walls.

A man marched towards them fixing his bow on his shoulder.

“Rooobin Hooooood?” Joker asked thrilled. “Huhu! I like it!”

“It’s ARROW” the man hissed at Joker’s face.
Joker giggled to the man and looked upwards.

“Um…Houston? We got a prooooo—ble--mo…” he said in a singsong voice and he along with his men vanished.

Loki moved his butt to make himself more comfortable on the cloud he sat cross-legged in the place where his golden throne usually stood. Opposite him the wreckage of the Tower’s ball room played live on thin air till the god bored switched off with a snap of his fingers.

He regarded almost indifferently Joker and his gang that just landed on his palace.

Joker noticed the several huge containers of popcorn thrown around empty.

“So what’s out Rotten Tomatoes’ score?”

“It was fine I guess” he pouted “I’ll give you 78%.”

Joker lolled his head.

“Everyone’s a critic…”

“The end was underwhelming…”

The clown raised an eyebrow.

“I know who ruined my show – he does that!” he sneered.

Loki raised an eyebrow.

“I’m content with what you achieved even if it’s the half from what we wanted…”

Joker clenched his fist.

“I didn’t get Brucie…”

“No, you didn’t!” he huffed. “And that would have led to a great chaotic sequel.”

Loki unfolded lazily his legs and stood from his cloud; he strut to the clown and patted his shoulder laughing.

“Next time, mate…”

Tony had deactivated his armor and ran to the balcony where Superman said that last saw Bruce, leaving Pepper and Fury handle the mess. He froze seeing Bruce’s chair empty covered by thick snow though he knew from Jarvis that his friend was safe.

“Damn!”

“He must be fine” Superman said having followed puzzled about where Bruce was.

After all these Clark couldn’t find the concentration to locate the man’s vitals and Diana’s hand on his shoulder, causing warmth and goose bumps to his body, wasn’t of any help.
Tony’s face was distorted from anger when turned to him.

“What do you know?!” his anger from what witnessed Superman doing with the Amazon returned. “You filthy…”

But Thor was there patting his shoulder.

“Calm down, Tony. Bruce is tough.”

Tony nodded; Jarvis had told him that Bruce gave him orders so the little guy was definitely alive and kicking but his empty chair gave him chills: maybe he was hurt and the AI didn’t know?

“Mr. Wayne knows how to preserve his hide” Diana said slyly her eyes shining gleefully and Tony casted her a lethal glare before focusing on Superman who was also annoyed by the billionaire’s stance.

“Put a gag on her filthy mouth!” Tony spat to Superman.

“I care for Bruce as much as you!” Clark yelled and thankfully the outsiders were in the hall answering police’s questions.

Tony marched to him gritting his teeth.

“Where is he then?”

“Here!”

They both turned to the curve of the balcony. Steve Rogers was carrying Bruce in his arms, Selina beside them. Superman felt a rush of jealousy seeing Bruce in someone else’s arms.

But Tony was beaming; he ran to his friend and took him from Steve’s arms managing in his joy to throw both of them on the floor, keeping Bruce safe on his body.

“Are you comfortable, little guy?” he asked cocking an eyebrow.

“No offence but I prefer Captain’s arms…”

Tony laughed happily and Selina brought the chair having cleaned it from the snow – thankfully the material was water proof.

Thor took Bruce carefully off of Tony and settled him in the chair muffling him in his cape because the snow was still falling pretty thick.

Diana casted a sideways glance to Clark’s almost red eyes – she cocked an eyebrow and slipped her hand in his trying to calm him.

“Mr. Wayne, I was looking for you.”

A man around fifties approached them Oliver Queen following him to answer his questions – Queen was ragged, disheveled and battered as every other guest.

“Mr. Wayne, I’m glad you were far from this mess…” Queen exclaimed to Bruce.

“NCPD, Lieutenant Johnson. I’d like to have your testimony, Mr. Wayne” the man that came with Queen showed them his badge.
But Tony intervened.

“Lieutenant, my friend is under heavy medication and all these events exhausted him. He really needs some rest so if you would agree to get the testimony tomorrow morning, I’d be obliged to you.”

Everyone at the balcony had the same shocked expression for his diplomatic tone and Tony scowled at them. The Lieutenant nodded looking at Bruce.

“I understand…Tomorrow, Mr. Wayne” he grinned.

“Thank you, Lieutenant.”

The New Yorker left and Tony grabbed the handles of Bruce’s chair.

“I’ll drive you to the penthouse.”

“No, Tony, you have a lot of things to do here – and you can’t let everything on Peps: she had a really rough night. And you’re the director.”

“I won’t leave you alone when Joker is free.”

“The car you gave me is a fortress…”

Tony shook his head.

“So this Tower…” his disappointment was evident and Bruce squeezed his hand.

“It wasn’t your fault” he smiled though a man had died and that was a heavy burden for everyone.

“I’ll go with Mr. Wayne” Superman said marching to the young man who met his eyes with a cold stare. “I’ll fly him there because his car is known and could be watched.”

“Thank you, Superman” Bruce replied emotionless. “But there’s no need for that.”

Superman stood still frowning.

“I’m coming with you, sweetie” Selina said and took him away. “And I’m driving…”

As soon as they arrived at the penthouse, Alfred hurried to open the door: relief beaming in his tired face.

“Thank Goodness! You’re both alright! Master Anthony? Miss Potts? Master Kent?”

Hero ran and climbed to Bruce’s lap rubbing to him and purring. Bruce petted him along with Selina.

“They are safe and sound, Alfred; Tony and Peps will come later.”

“What happened, sir?”

“I’ll tell you everything tomorrow because now I need a hot shower and some sleep” Bruce muttered patting Alfred’s forearm.

The Englishman could see the exhaustion in his eyes but he felt that it wasn’t only from the tension of the night. Selina nodded to him confirming.
As Bruce settled on the mattress, his back ached from the night’s fatigue. He had just drunk a glass of warm milk with a spoonful of honey – Alfred brought him – and his eyelids were really heavy.

Hero climbed swiftly on the bed and sprawled on his chest, purring smoothly. Bruce caressed him affectionately.

He thought about Crane and Joker working together under the high protection of someone powerful but as his conscious mind was rapidly falling to deep sleep one thought prevailed over everything: Clark didn’t care anymore to be the fastest to come for him…

Chapter End Notes

Well, watching Captain America: Civil War, during the battle in the airport I felt a bit like Joker laughing at the oddity of these heroes fighting each other. So I thought to give Joker the chance to direct such a scene.

I hope you liked the chapter.
“How am I always ending up in your arms?” Bruce chuckled staring at Clark’s eyes; Superman’s face was smoked, dirty and bruised but Bruce found it gorgeous.

“How am I always ending up in your arms?” Bruce chuckled staring at Clark’s eyes; Superman’s face was smoked, dirty and bruised but Bruce found it gorgeous.

“Because I’m the fastest” he frowned “are you complaining?”

Bruce drew a deep breath.

“Of course not – I missed you…”

Clark closed his eyes and sighed.

“You have no idea…” he whispered.

Superman couldn’t be the fastest this time even if he wanted to…

And I wouldn’t want him to abandon innocent people in danger just to come and cuddle me…I was safe, far from imminent danger… People must still be Superman’s priority not his lover…

“You killed Diana…” a crestfallen but angry at the same time Superman told through gritted teeth to Thor, holding the god in a bone crushing grip.

And then at the sight of the Amazon, his face gained again its color and beamed from utter relief and happiness.

His greatest fear IS Diana getting killed…that’s what he experienced under Crane’s toxin…

Exactly…It was the toxin…This – the worst fear thing - doesn’t necessary apply to normal conditions…

I know the toxin…I experienced it twice…

Diana’s locks shone oddly like they were dyed; and her eyes had something unnatural…

The four days Clark was away from her he was normal; and then as soon as she appeared again, Clark slipped…

Superman and Diana were dancing passionately under the melody of that song; their eyes locked, their bodies united – unaware of the rest of the world… they were floating over a black sea that reflected the silver shine of the moon…

And he watched fixed in his chair; at a balcony; and his throat felt like burning…

A young man dressed with black trousers, black vest, white shirt and black bow-tie lay sprawled on the shining floor under the glass shelves packed with all short of booze; his hazelnut eyes were bulged but didn’t move; he was looking up to nothing or better to death – a bare blade slightly protruded from his chest: the blood had dried absorbed in the white fabric… He must have been cheering when he got the job of the barista in the biggest event of the year – Tony Stark was generous after all…

“You lead lined the Tower, right?” Superman’s voice sounded really pissed not too far and to pass the sound proof walls of the penthouse meant that he was shouting – or maybe it was just his trained hearing.
“Of course!” Tony retorted equally pissed and heavy with sarcasm. “It ought to be protected even against Superman: that building is the safest in the world!”

Now this couldn’t be possibly heard but Bruce could picture Clark cocking his eyebrows snidely.

“I just experienced that tonight!”

A palm slapped hard the dark blue granite surface of the kitchen’s island and Bruce raised slowly himself in a sitting position. Hero a ball on his chest opened his eyes puzzled and regarded him even though the room was completely dark.

“Sleep, buddy…” he whispered and took the kitten off of him and laid it on the mattress.

He didn’t clap for the secret lighting to illuminate the corners of the vast bedroom, he just casted a glance at the hologram pyramid shaped clock on the nightstand: 2:16 in the morning.

The wheelchair Superman made him came to the king sized bed obeying his wish and he slipped in it; he wore his robe because Alfred was adamant about that: being warm from sleep could make the slightest difference in environmental temperature get him down with the flu.

“It wasn’t the lead that thwarted you from running to Bruce!” Tony spat at Clark’s tense face; he was still in his Superman attire. “Damn! You’re the fastest man in the planet! You could have swept the Tower and found Bruce but you preferred to stay glued to the Amazon’s skirt!”

Superman’s more than friendly interactions with the Princess were still in Tony’s eyes and that kept his anger red hot. Clark could see it.

“And you could have located him too with Ironman’s systems!”

“They were still restoring! But the point is that you cared only for that Amazon who insulted Bruce in every given occasion!”

Clark widened his eyes in irony.

“You make me a scene on Bruce’s behalf?!” he cackled. “Bruce during the night was constantly surrounded by drooling Avengers and I’m sure you happily would cover your friends if they wanted to make advances on Bruce.”

Tony gritted his teeth.

“They weren’t drooling! They respect Bruce for his power of character and his quality as a human being. You were the one drooling stupidly over her! You failed to realize that Bruce got isolated to that balcony because of your actions!”

“And that saved him from the Joker and then saved all of us!”

Tony sniggered and tilted his head on the side.

“You’re really insensitive, aren’t you?” he leaned forward so their intense stares collided. “You hurt him, you dolt!”

Superman raised his index finger and pointed at Tony’s chest, his face distorted in anger.

“You blame me of being indifferent to Bruce but I didn’t see you running for him when Joker made his appearance” he twitched his eyebrows challengingly. “You had better things to care about, huh?”
“You fuckin’ motherfuc…” Tony’s fist rose to punch even though Superman wouldn’t feel a thing – Clark actually watched amused with his arms crossed over his chest.

“You both did perfect to not come for me!” Bruce slithered the wheelchair into the kitchen.

They looked at him almost embarrassed; Tony ruffled his hair.

“We woke you up?” he asked regretful.

“I thought that your drugs were so strong that you couldn’t wake during the night…” Clark walked to him a bit hesitant and Bruce noticed.

“They are” he nodded “but the tension of the last hours didn’t let me muster deep sleep. You should stop speaking so loud or else Alfred will be up too – he needs his rest. And Selina as well.”

“You’re right, little guy” Tony nodded twitching his mouth. “Sorry ’bout that. I’ll make you some warm milk.”

Bruce smiled.

“Thanks, Tony, but Alfred already forced me to drink one glass – I can’t take another, really…” he stretched his eyebrows appalled and Tony chuckled forgetting his previous rage with Superman.

Superman crouched before Bruce and looked him in the eyes.

“I’m sorry I didn’t come for you…”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“Is this really the only thing you feel the need to apologize for?!” he snorted.

Clark turned to him exasperated.

“I don’t take lessons from you, Stark!”

Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose feeling the beginning of a headache.

“Nobody needs to apologize for anything, okay? Both did the best staying with the guests – I was safe” his voice dropped a tone: “A man was killed a couple of hours ago…that’s what matters.”

Tony pressed his lips because he sensed his friend’s exhaustion, mostly emotional: Superman’s interactions with the Amazon definitely had an impact on him but he was stubbornly ignoring his own discomfort for what he considered more important things. And for Tony the death of that young man was also a heavy burden: he was supposed to guarantee that everyone was safe in the Tower.

The billionaire walked to his friend and squeezed his shoulder, pursing his lips.

“Weren’t for you, buddy, there’d be many more casualties and our hands would be drenched with blood of innocents” their eyes locked. “Jarvis recounted to us everything.”

“And I’m sure your Avenger buddies were raving about Bruce…” Clark snorted, towering the other two.

“Of course… they know to appreciate the people who worth it.”

“Tell your friends to keep their hands away from Bruce!” Clark snapped.
Tony widened his eyes and shrugged.

“Why? You didn’t seem to care much during the night” he pouted. “You had your company so Avengers chose their company too…”

Superman looked at Bruce.

“He put lead in the Tower so I couldn’t locate you.”

Tony crossed his arms over his chest and cocked an eyebrow.

“Actually is a new alloy based on lead which increases lead’s qualities.”

Clark inclined his head to Bruce raising his eyebrows.

“You see? I’d have found you sooner than Rogers.”

Bruce shook his head: that discussion was improbable.

“That doesn’t explain why you didn’t go to Bruce once during the night and why you didn’t retort when the Amazon insulted him.”

After the dramatic events of the assault, Bruce had almost forgotten the scene Clark made in the toilets reprimanding him for insulting Diana.

“Tony…” he tried to smoothen again the tension but Clark was angry.

“That’s irrelevant! I should have reached first Bruce and I should have carried him! Rogers has no job laying his hands on him.”

Bruce closed his eyes and huffed.

“Then why you didn’t run the building?”

“Please, stop this quarrel!” Bruce spat. “It’s…it’s inappropriate when a family mourns their loved one and when there are more serious things to contemplate like who was behind Joker and Crane.”

“Yes, but…” Clark insisted.

“Captain America already knew where I was so he just came and brought me to you” Bruce retorted to stop all of this.

Clark frowned and narrowed his eyes.

“So…he was with you all the time…that’s why he wasn’t in the hall during the entire thing…he had better things to do…with you!” his darker suspicion was evident in his tone and Tony snorted.

“No, actually the handsome was with me!”

Tony and Clark turned at the rectangular frame of the entrance where Selina traipsed graciously in the kitchen. She wore a white knee-length flannel nightdress with long sleeves; the neckline was just above the collarbone and from her chest to her belly Duchess, the beautiful white cat from the Aristocats smiled charmingly.

Tony looked at her widening his eyes impressed: seeing the always sexy Cat dressed so…casually just enhanced her beauty and highlighted her young age.
“I envy that old guy…What has he that is better than mine?”

Selina came very close to him and her flat slippers brought her to the same height as him.

“Do you really want me to tell you?” she breathed sensually to his face.

Bruce managed to chuckle despite his emotional turmoil and Clark smirked.

“Never mind…” Tony waved off.

Selina tilted her head to the side and cocked her eyebrows.

“I was gonna say the shield…” she chuckled. “Anyway, jealous boy” she casted an irritated glance at Superman “Steve was with me when Joker attacked and we decided to find Bruce before doing a hasty move which was the best choice because Bruce was completely in control of the situation. After everything settled down, Steve came back to us because – obviously – there was no means for Bruce to leave the guestroom we were in.”

Clark seemed relieved and caught Bruce looking at him interested; however something was lacking.

“Yes, but how Bruce got there in the first place? His wheelchair was at the balcony… You didn’t use your brain to force your body to move?” this time real wrath colored his voice.

“Buddy…” Tony tilted his head to the side, his disapproval and frustration for Bruce doing this was evident.

Bruce shook his head.

“I didn’t do that: I was heading inside the building when a goon blocked my way wanting to take me to Joker but then an arrow hit him.”

“An arrow?” three voices exclaimed at once.

“Yes, an archer dressed like Robin Hood took me from the balcony and took me to a guestroom; guestrooms were the only spaces that remained unlocked. Then he left telling me that he’d stay guarding outside the door.”

“He probably left when we reached the guestroom” Selina commented.

Tony frowned, rubbing his goatee.

“Security found arrows stuck in the walls of the corridor at the guestrooms’ floor; unfortunately, we don’t have surveillance cameras there due to privacy issues but there was no blood. And judging from the sacks with jewels there…Joker and his goons headed to the guestrooms to get you but your mysterious friend stopped them.”

Superman was annoyed that another admirer was added to last night’s army…

“He’s a seductress…” Diana had breathed in his ear as he watched Thor placing Bruce in his wheelchair, careful as if he was handling the most precious thing. She definitely had felt his jealousy for Rogers carrying Bruce – his jaw had clenched and now his eyes became almost red. “You can’t honestly blame the others when Superman himself was seduced…Wayne is a rare seductress…”

Even in his boiling state of mind Superman got the use of ‘seductress’ instead of ‘seducer’ and Diana’s sneering tone – she definitely referred to the fact that Bruce attracted mostly males. But honestly at this state he didn’t care: he was pissed with Bruce. And indeed, Diana was right on spot:
Bruce was a seductress: he carried in his body the DNA of a female demon who was an irresistible seductress, attracting men and destroying them.

“Who was that man?” Tony asked. “And how he got in the locked up building?”

“Maybe he was already in?” Selina raised an eyebrow and Bruce nodded.

“I think that this council would better take place in the morning” Alfred offered marching to Bruce’s place. “All of you need some rest – except if you want me to prepare something before you return to your beds.”

It was new seeing Alfred in his velvet mahogany robe which was embroidered with golden fine stripes.

“No, Alfred, thank you” Bruce replied.

Superman leaned on him and looked him in the eyes.

“May I carry you to your bed?” his eyes almost pleaded.

Bruce pressed his lips; his heart was still numb from what happened but he knew that Clark needed him. He nodded and wrapped his arms around his neck causing a pleased smile in Clark’s face and he heaved him with new energy.

Alfred grabbed the handles of the chair as Clark was already trotting to the bedroom.

“I’ll bring the chair” the butler said.

“Good night” Bruce bid his friends and they bid back.

Selina filled a glass with mineral water from a glass bottle over the shining sink bench and sipped. Tony tilted his head to her furrowing his brow.

“Can you tell me why this bastard is so lucky?” he asked pissed. “Not only Bruce gave him his love…”

“And not only that…” Selina commented slyly cocking her eyebrows, her comment adding more annoyance to Tony.

“But also the little guy is so forgiving with him! He was snuggling with the Amazon all night!” he shook his head. “I got yelled and slapped for less…”

“I’m sure…” Selina smirked and raised an eyebrow in disbelief.

But then she put the glass in the sink and huffed.

“I wasn’t there from the start but what I saw was enough…Superman dancing with that bitch” she had her back turned to Tony for a bit but now she twirled to look him. “However I trust, Bruce: I’m sure he knows what he’s doing – he always does: he proved it tonight.”

Tony shook his head pursing his lips; his hands crossed over his chest.

“I trust him too, Sel; but he is in love for the first time in his life” Selina lowered her eyes because she was thinking the same. “And maybe his better judgment falls under his love for that sneaky bastard” he crossed the distance between them and held her upper arms. “I feel that things will end very badly and I’m afraid for the impact this will have on Bruce…” he gnawed his bottom lip. “I wish I could protect him…to open his eyes and make him realize that Superman doesn’t worth it.”

Selina inhaled deeply.

“Maybe is not as serious as we think …Maybe our overprotectiveness makes us see monsters surrounding Bruce.”

Tony brushed his lips with his finger skeptical; he lifted an eyebrow.

“But aren’t these monsters really there?”

Selina pressed her lips in a tight line and patted his shoulder before heading to her bedroom.

Superman opened the bedroom’s door holding Bruce only with one arm; Alfred clapped once and the room was casted under pleasant pale white light from the corners’ secret lighting.

Clark that didn’t need light to see placed Bruce gently on the mattress and Hero hurried to lick the alien’s face. Bruce petted the animal and Clark took his hand and kissed the palm.

Alfred settled the wheelchair beside the rectangular black bed from Bruce’s side and glanced at the scene feeling relieved as every time he witnessed Bruce and Clark interacting affectionately; yet he couldn’t ease the clenching in his chest.

“Would you like anything else?”

Bruce turned to his butler.

“No, Alfred; thank you.”

Clark shook his head in denial.

“I’ll take care of Bruce now…” he smiled warmly and Alfred bowed his head.

“I’m very glad to hear that, sir. Have a lovely night!”

“Good night, Alfred” Bruce told him and the British smiled to him before closing the door.

Clark put on his pajamas in less than a minute and slumped on the bed bringing his body to meet Bruce’s that was supported on his elbow. The younger man was petting Hero with his other hand and Clark took off his robe and threw it over the wheelchair’s back. He leaned and kissed Bruce’s bottom lip.

“Alone at last…” he breathed. “There were moments during the party that I felt the urge to take you to a place where we’d be just the two of us.”

Bruce pressed his lips in a tight smile: he wished he could believe that and maybe it was true till the Amazon came to the party and then Bruce was completely erased from Clark’s awareness if not for berating him for insulting ‘his Amazon friend’.

He didn’t give any reply and just nodded continuing playing with Hero who twitched his paws to catch his fingers.

Clark understood Bruce’s inhibition. Leaving the Avengers’ Tower to Stark’s penthouse he had realized that during Joker’s show, he hadn’t thought of Bruce once…And that cracked him…His only thought and care was Diana – it was as if Bruce had never existed. Even when Joker spoke about ‘his cinnamon’ clearly referring to Bruce, he wasn’t enraged – he was indifferent. Well, he could attribute it to those toxins Joker released in the hall – Jarvis informed them that Bruce discovered that.

But he had to be honest with himself: even before Joker attacked, from the moment Diana made her appearance, he was absorbed in her presence, by her beauty – he didn’t mind her speaking like this to Bruce. He even scolded Bruce for defending himself.

But he loved Bruce: Clark knew that. He needed Bruce. So he grabbed the younger man’s upper arms and heaved him slightly to be face to face, to lock eyes and lips. Clark had no problem kiss him as passionately as ever and Bruce followed the pace though his heart beat somewhat strange, not joyfully like in the past.

“Thank you for not sharing Tony’s irrationality” Clark chirped wanting to dissolve every cloud his interaction could have created over their relationship – after all, he hadn’t done anything blamable: he just was with a friend and when the danger came and Bruce was safe, he focused on the one that was in the line of fire. “You know that there’s nothing between me and Diana: we’re just friends. And I’d have run to find you…eventually, but Rogers caught me on that and I hate it that he touched you…” he brushed Bruce’s upper arms and he grinned.

“He couldn’t carry me without touching me…” he remarked dryly.

Clark ruffled his hair laughing.

“Touché. But still I didn’t like it. First, all of the Avengers and then Thor alone and that unknown guy taking you to a guestroom and then Rogers…”

Bruce looked in Clark’s eyes: Clark definitely wasn’t aware of what he was doing – being jealous when he clearly flirted with the Princess. Either he was affected by something or he just wanted everything: keeping him and Diana. Bruce however didn’t want to believe the second option.

“You know, Bruce, although you took a shower, I can discern the smell of Rogers and Thor but no third smell.”

Bruce had noticed too during his interaction with the Arrow: his senses weren’t superhuman but Ra’s’ hard training didn’t leave smelling out.

“I noticed too; but it’s not awkward. His clothes must thwart his smell coming off, exactly like Batman’s” his voice remained impassionate but he couldn’t fight the bitterness when realization hit him hard: it was five months he didn’t done the cape and cowl.

Clark cupped his face with both hands and kissed the top of his head.

“You always are Batman – Tonight Batman saved us all even without wearing his armor.”

“You don’t give Jarvis his deserved credit” he chuckled and Hero climbed Clark’s body settling on his shoulder. “Clark, before Joker’s attack, Lucius called me.”

Clark, who was caressing Hero laughing, sobered and placed the kitten on the mattress. He understood what would make Lucius call Bruce so late.

“My tests’ results…”

Bruce nodded and seeing the beautiful crystal blue eyes in agony smiled.

“Lucius didn’t find anything wrong: there’s nothing organic.”
“That’s great!” he exclaimed and planted a deep kiss on Bruce’s lips but then he abruptly became grim. “Then my behavior is…” he pressed his lips – not that he felt bad about his behavior yet Bruce’s feelings got hurt sometimes “normal?”

Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“Lucius said that still there could be an external factor that affects your behavior.”

Clark frowned.

“Like that substance they applied to your body?”

Bruce lifted his eyebrows.

“Well, that is excluded” he inhaled deeply because he knew that what he was to say would cause some turmoil. “Clark” he looked him deep in the eyes “you must stop seeing the Princess – being around her.”

Those beloved eyes bulged in puzzlement and irritation. Clark bolted and sat on the mattress.

“And I thought that you didn’t share Stark’s bullshits!” he huffed frustrated. “Of course…” he cocked his eyebrows “you’re slier than Stark: Ra’s Al Ghul taught you how to manipulate people into doing what you want.”

Even if his words stung, Clark not looking at him was worse. He slithered on the mattress and raised his body in sitting position to be next to him.

“You didn’t start making a scene pretending the cool and understanding only to present your demand as logical and not jealousy evoked!”

Bruce touched his shoulder.

“I wouldn’t have asked you that if I didn’t have my reasons” he knew that there was no point in telling ‘you can’t believe this’ because Clark definitely believed it.

Clark shook his head nervously.

“Of course you have your reasons: you hate Diana and you’re green with jealous because I was with her at the party: you want everything don’t you, Bruce?” his eyes were ablaze when he casted them on Bruce’s.

Bruce frowned.

“You want me alone but also you want your superhero admirers drooling around you! Diana ruined your plans because she just kept my attention away from that torture you wanted to put me through!”

Hero began meowing distressed and Bruce caressed his back to calm him but his own heart was beating fast.

“I was only talking to them.”

But Clark wasn’t listening; he grabbed Bruce’s upper arms and shook him his eyes stabbing the younger man’s motionless eyes.

“I asked you once to fire your physiotherapist and you didn’t do it and now you have the nerve to demand from me to dump my friend?”
Bruce was glad his tone remained low because he didn’t want Alfred or Tony or Selina intervening to this.

“Matt is engaged, you saw his fiancé tonight…”

“This doesn’t mean anything…” he said harshly. “Many engaged or married men cheat their mates.”

Hero hissed angrily feeling the animosity and Bruce hushed him.

“I think we covered this already” Bruce told Clark calmly. “You know that I don’t have anything with him and I asked you to keep your distance from her because you asked me once to help you get over what is happening to you – to not give up on you. Remember?”

Clark loosened his grip.

“I do; but asking that means that you don’t trust me.”

Bruce met his stare.

“Do you trust yourself?” Clark seemed thoughtful and Bruce blinked. “I don’t ask you that because I want to keep you for myself” some of his sadness flowed in his voice and Clark looked at him touched. “Believe me if she was Lois or anyone else I’d have finished this already and let you enjoy it…”

Clark’s mouth stayed agape; his eyes widened in shock and sympathy. He shook his head and made to hug Bruce but he raised his hands and didn’t let him.

“Bruce, I don’t…”

But the younger man shook once his head in denial.

“I know you’re attracted to that woman but there are things that make me suspect that she is not who she says” he avoided speaking about their relationship or his feelings because that was the least: Clark’s wellbeing was the important.

Clark noticed that and realized that it must hurt Bruce. But Diana not being who she said was crazy.

“What things?” he brushed Hero’s belly.

“Her hair give out a shine that it’s not normal – looks artificial like in dyed hair.”

Clark snorted and couldn’t fight rolling his eyes. Really, Bruce?

“Because you know everything about female hair, huh?”

Bruce saw Clark’s exasperated reaction and felt embarrassed because certainly Clark believed that he was making up lamentable points to justify his jealousy ridden request. But he didn’t do it for that. He knew he had to keep Clark away.

“I grew up in a cabaret, Clark; women there dyed their hair all the time.”

Clark pinched the bridge of his nose and shook his head.

“Why on earth a goddess would dye her hair?”

Bruce nodded, licking his lip.
“Exactly! That’s what raised my suspicions! Unless, she isn’t who she says and wants to impersonate the legendary Amazon Princess.”

But Clark wasn’t convinced.

“You have seen many gods and know how their hair looks like?”

“You, Thor, Loki… Bagdana didn’t have locks but he had body hair.”

Okay…Bruce had his experience with gods and demons.

“If her hair was dyed I’d have detected that, Bruce; and I didn’t.”

“Maybe you can’t…I mean when she is around you’re changed…you admitted that yourself. And those four days she wasn’t around you, you were perfect but as soon as she appeared at the Tower…” he huffed. “You changed.”

“Perfect means glued to you?” Clark spat and even he realized that this was a stab to Bruce’s heart.

The younger man lowered a bit his eyes and Hero purred to him.

“No…It was you that considered that kind of your behavior abnormal…” Clark seemed regretful of what he told but Bruce felt that it was more urgent to elaborate on his suspicions. “Also, her eyes are odd…”

Clark shook his head in disbelief: he felt sorry for implying that Bruce said all these from selfishness but what was he supposed to think when Bruce uttered such nonsense?

“I repeat that if her eyes were not real I’d have found out first: I’m the one with the 100 different kinds of vision.”

Bruce knew that repeating the argument about him not being himself around her wouldn’t do anything to change Clark’s mind.

“The ruby star in her diadem isn’t the ancient Greek star…”

“Because you’re a scholar of Greek mythology, huh?” he smiled.

“Of course not – I searched the ancient texts about the Amazon Princess: the star in her diadem should be the ancient Greek one with the 8 peaks.”

Clark cupped Bruce’s face with both hands and placed him gently on his back; he nuzzled his cheek.

“You need some sleep to clear your head from this night’s shit and Stark’s poison because I’m sure that your brilliant logic mind can’t believe such nonsense” Bruce narrowed his eyes angry. “You were a hero tonight, Bruce; don’t tarnish it now.”

The younger man turned his face to avoid Clark’s lips and raised himself supporting his torso on his elbows. Hero sat on his butt and watched baffled sniffing the tension between the people he loved.

“If someone needs to clear his head, this is you, Clark!” Clark had retreated a bit but still kept his arms on both sides of Bruce’s torso as if trying to trap him – a deep frown formed in his brow from the human’s reaction. “This is why I asked you to stay away from her! You too believe that you’re not yourself lately” he huffed slowing down. “Everything started when she appeared.”

Clark closed his eyes and shook his head exasperated.
“But I’m alright – Lucius confirmed it. It was just a difficult period, nothing more” Bruce was staring him in the eyes. “If you calm down and don’t let others influence you, things will be normal again.”

“You’re the one who gets influenced – that woman has a bad effect on you and you need to stay away from her till we figure out what’s going on. Jor El told you that he needed time and daily tests to be sure. But until then I think it is safer if you stop interacting with her.”

“Safer for whom? Your beaten up sense of security? The fact you’re fixed in that chair has made you insecure” he saw Bruce’s eyes widen more shocked than angry. “If your self-esteem wasn’t so battered you wouldn’t see Diana as a threat.”

The shine of Bruce’s eyes sent shivers to Clark’s back.

“Safer for you…” Bruce didn’t want to retort to what Clark said about him because he felt so dried from his words that it seemed totally unworthy of even replying. “I don’t feel threatened by her” for the first time his eyes moved softened. “I feel that you’re the threatened here…”

Clark pressed his lips: Bruce tried to justify his jealousy claiming that he was in danger… He brought his face to Bruce’s face.

“If you want to persuade me to stay away from my friend you must give me a solid reason and not mumbo-jumbo bullshit: you’re just embarrassing yourself, Bruce – you’re a detective and yet you make horrible points out of your grudge for Diana because we danced a couple of songs.”

Bruce’s heart sank: a couple of songs? Clark’s suave, baritone voice echoed again inside his head accompanied by the sound of quiet sea waves; his heart warmed like that night when his eyes had watered hearing about the too wide world that waited them to see it – that night he felt the urgency to travel with Clark to see all the things he dreamt locked up in Dolcetto.

Now there was only a stab wound… The song Clark was singing to him every night during his life or death battle was just a song? Clark didn’t remember or just it wasn’t as important for him as was for Bruce?

“What?” Clark asked narrowing his eyes puzzled from Bruce’s blank eyes.

“Nothing…” Bruce pressed his lips – if Clark didn’t realize the importance of the song, reminding him would only make the man sneer more at him.

Clark nodded taking Bruce’s silence as a sign of embarrassment for his attitude.

“You realize that you’re pushing me away?” Bruce said to him with a steady voice.

Clark frowned; he didn’t like that. Why pushing him away? There wasn’t a reason to lose Bruce because of his insecurity. He grasped Bruce’s torso and settled him flat on his back bringing his broader body upon him.

Bruce wasn’t afraid of him but Hero became restless moving around and meowing nervous without Clark registering anything except Bruce’s defiance.

“I don’t want to hear that again, Bruce: I won’t lose you but I won’t kick out my friends because of your insecurities. You promised me that you’ll stay with me unless I decide otherwise – and I didn’t!”

“There are other ways to show your decision than just words…”
Superman was now pissed.

“Damn it, Bruce!” he hissed. “She is my friend – FRIEND! – I didn’t do anything wrong! Why are you doing that to me?” he lowered his tone to a complaining purr. “I need you…” Bruce’s pale, porcelain skin was so beautifully stressed by the light silver colored silken sheet that his mind forgot his irritation.

He began nibbling Bruce’s lips and then his neck, settling his body heavily on the human’s; his heart was beating fast and strong, demanding: seeing other people touching Bruce made him angry and… this anger brought arousal that urged him to reassert his dominance on that beautiful human body.

Clark unbuttoned hurriedly Bruce’s pajama shirt and fondled his breasts, his mouth sucking hard his neck and when that wasn’t enough biting softly. His pelvis rubbed longingly on the non-responding hips as Clark’s mouth savored his lover’s taut breasts moaning through the warm flesh. But Bruce was too tired to keep his eyes open for longer so he succumbed to exhaustion since he didn’t have the mood to stay alert.

Yet his sleep wasn’t so deep to not sense Clark’s weight moving away from his body and laying on his side of the bed sighing because he had the mood for more but he couldn’t operate when his lover was asleep.

Clark made to brush Hero but the kitten slipped his hand and curled on Bruce’s side. Clark snorted: Bruce had spoiled the kitten so the animal preferred him. He clapped once and the room was casted in darkness; he closed his eyes and slack off as his mind replayed the dream with Diana.

Bruce felt Hero’s tongue licking his hand soothing and heard Ms. Kent:

“You’re his moral compass, Bruce; his anchor…The warmth in his heart: a star that shows him the way. As long you’re by his side he is safe."

He had to stay with Clark till the end to keep him safe: the more he stayed close to Clark the more time he had to present him proofs about the Amazon. And maybe after Clark saw the proofs, things would return back to the greenhouse or the island – he just hoped that it wouldn’t be too late until then…

Darkseid sat on his gigantic, granite throne that was carved with real small thunders and tornadoes; his fingers were knitted together in front of his face. There was nobody else in the vast circular underground hall except than Bagdana who waved his hand and dissolved the image of the Avengers’ Tower gaping from the smashed windows on its 90th floor.

The New God looked grimly at his minion.

“You were wrong” he growled clenching the armrests. “Earth’s heroes are simply pathetic” he arched his eyebrows “even a pitiful clown managed to wreck them. I can erase them with just a breath.”

Bagdana dressed in his black leather pants and his matched vest turned to his partner. His square face glimmered with confidence.

“The clown evidently had a powerful backup that rendered these guys and the Tower’s security useless.”

Darkseid’s bald head jerked upwards.
“Which I can also do. I think you delay my action on purpose to succeed your own goals” his voice became a deep roar filled with menace.

Yet Bagdana unfazed marched towards his throne and stretched his enormous posture though the steps leading to the throne still kept a considerable distance.

“If you didn’t need my advice you wouldn’t have freed me from my prison” he clenched his jaw and the silver spikes on his head sparkled.

Darkseid arched an eyebrow as his red eyes flashed.

“I might have overestimated your value…”

Bagdana snorted.

“The one who is behind the attack has no ultimate plan – you do. He/she just wanted to inflict chaos sharing the same desire with Joker – they wanted just to have fun and mock those heroes. You, on the other hand, want more than just pulling up a show; you need your machine to fulfill your plans and your machine is far from ready.”

Darkseid tapped his fingers on the granite of his armrest and the tornadoes twirled faster.

“I can exterminate all these heroes and then have Luthor create my machine to fulfill my plan.”

Bagdana shrugged.

“Then do it” he said nonchalant. “If you believe that you’ll manage exterminate them now, do it – but deep inside you know that it’s not so easy” Darkseid’s eyes were fixed on him. “That attack may be impressive but it wouldn’t have led to your enemies’ defeat: maybe to many civilian casualties but the heroes would be unscathed” Bagdana enjoyed Darkseid’s interest. “And you don’t seem to consider something else – the factor that should make you wait the right moment to hit.”

The New God yanked his head.

“Which is?”

Bagdana smirked, his yellow eyes flashing.

“Someone ruined their plan; someone saved the day” Darkseid’s thick blue brows formed a line. “Would you like having that unknown factor meddling with your plans when the time comes?”

“Who was it?” he demanded.

Bagdana smiled coyly.

“Allow me to keep that information for myself…something to keep our deal active” he pressed his lips seeing that Darkseid didn’t like that.

“Batman wasn’t there…” Darkeid sniggered because he knew his minion’s high opinion for the vigilante and was sure that the demon believed that he saved the Avengers.

Bagdana’s smile was genial.

“You can’t be sure about that… but you may rest assure that waiting for the appropriate moment as I suggest you do, will guarantee your success and your satisfaction because I will neutralize that factor. And you’ll get the Kryptonian.”
Darkseid slapped his palms together and the granite round shaped pillars that supported the roof shook.

“And you, your human…”

Bagdana twisted his lips.

“That’s fair…”

Darkseid snorted and real smoke burst from his big nostrils.

“Unless, that pitiful clown makes it to him first” he savored the anger in Bagdana’s eyes. “He almost succeeded back there” he moved his palm and the Tower emerged again in the air of the hall. “But that sneaky, coward pest knows how to hide…”

Bagdana’s eyes were narrowed to slits and the demon didn’t care for Darkseid’s presence: his hatred for Joker prevailed. Bruce almost died because of him; Bagdana still felt the ripping of his guts when he sensed Bruce’s body dead…He wouldn’t ever permit that again.

Attack on the Avengers’ Tower: one dead, several injured – How Stark’s love-child became his nightmare.

The caption at the bottom of the TV screen read.

“Did anyone give a satisfying explanation about how the most secure building on Earth – according to its constructors’ claims – was breached by a madman and his gang?” the gray haired newscaster asked his younger colleague.

“He calls himself ‘The Joker’ and he brought mayhem and many casualties in Gotham some months ago before he was apprehended by the police with the alleged contribution of the local vigilante, Batman. Joker had kidnapped Bruce Wayne, the young billionaire, who after eighteen years of captivity was recently liberated from Carmine Falcone and restored his fortune. Guests testified that Joker was demanding Bruce Wayne. So speculation is that the young Wayne heir was indeed what brought the madman in New York.”

A picture of Joker from his first arrest in Gotham appeared on the screen and Ms. Rose, a short, round shaped old lady, cringed. The clown was still on his makeup and winking to the camera.

Clark had left New York before the dawn and flew to Metropolis. He wore his Clark Kent ugly suit and spectacles and took refuge to Ms. Rose’s bakery. The old lady had some tables in her small store and the bench which displayed her baked delicacies served as a bar; usually, some clients were there eating her infamous donuts or cookies but it was still early so Clark was the only client. He sat on a stool at the bench beside the old coffee machine.

She looked at Clark appalled from Joker’s picture.

“What’s that?”

“A dangerous man…” he muttered recounting Chickey’s factory where Bruce almost died to save the children from the maniac.

And that brought him back to his thoughts…about last night. He felt kind of bad…yet he knew he hadn’t done anything wrong: he had few real friends – Lois, Jimmy and Diana. Okay, someone could say that every human was Superman’s friend but it wasn’t the same. So Bruce, as much as Clark loved him, had no right to demand from him to shoo one of his friends just because his disability made him antsy, cranky, nagging and scared that he could lose him.

Alright, that night he was absorbed with Diana but he was the only one she knew. Bruce was surrounded by friends and admirers so it was mean of him being jealous because Clark didn’t let Diana alone in a hostile environment. And big deal! He danced a few songs…Bruce hadn’t mentioned that – it was Clark addition. He scratched his head…Damn! It felt so great dancing again with someone: actually, dancing and not just dragging someone’s dead legs along…

He blushed and got sweaty: that was a bad thought…but a real one: he couldn’t hide from himself. Yet that thing apart he loved Bruce and he couldn’t afford to lose him even if he needed Diana too…as a friend. Because although the immerse sexual pleasure from that only dream with her was still lingering in his body and her four days’ absence made her return mind blowing, that didn’t mean that his desire for Bruce was vanished and that he would tolerate to lose him. Damn! So many sharks waited eagerly to savor Bruce’s gorgeous body and Clark wouldn’t let that happen.

Especially, when he saw Rogers carrying him in his arms or Thor settling him in his chair muffling him in his cape. That cape was stabbing his eyes all night since his stare had stayed fixed on the carefully folded red fabric on the black dresser.

His love for Bruce was there but recently he often got pissed and frustrated with the man – falling asleep when he needed some satisfaction, even the minimum of carnal pleasure Bruce could offer – didn’t help the aggregated tension. And Bruce trying to make him kick out Diana who was an oasis to his life right now was preposterous. Especially, when he used such lame arguments as her not being who she said she was because Bruce thought that her hair was dyed! Bitch please!

Clark rubbed the bridge of his nose skewing his glasses. And Bruce forced him to be examined: okay, he went to give samples to Lucius because Bruce would know if he didn’t yet after the first two times he didn’t go again to the Fortress. He was just fine and Lucius confirmed it: Bruce was just trying to make him feel that his friendship with Diana was illness. He huffed.

He loved Bruce, he was lenient and understanding with him but making him feel ill was…unacceptable, monstrous. The one who needed to be checked out was Bruce but he would never admit it. Not physically: physically Bruce was many times examined. However his behavior lately roared that he needed some sessions with a psychotherapist.

Understandably. He was kidnapped when he was just eight years old; he watched his parents being murdered, he was shot, almost drown to death and then for eighteen years Falcone and many others used him as a piece of meat to inflict every sick and twisted idea they had. And then a couple of months ago, Bruce almost died – no, he was dead for some minutes and when the brain stays without oxygen for minutes some damage takes place. Either way, another great shock was added to the pack.

Maybe the responsible for the crisis in their relationship was Bruce and his paranoia that now peaked seeing a person getting some of the attention he till then enjoyed exclusively. So Bruce made him feel ill and now tried to make him coy towards Diana on the ridiculous assumption that she wasn’t Diana because her hair seemed dyed! Bruce was definitely a manipulative person: he manipulated Falcone, Chill even Ra’s Al Ghul but he wouldn’t let Bruce do the same with him.

“There’s no official announcement, Eric. But I think that this isn’t the only burning question from the previous night.”

The co-presenter nodded and arched his eyebrows.
“Certainly.”

“The most intriguing part was why the Avengers along with Superman and Wonder Woman didn’t stop the intruders – it shouldn’t have taken them more than a minute. And some witnesses say that they were literally powerless just watching that Joker guy wrecking chaos.”

“Also, Bill, some other witnesses mentioned that at some point heroes turned against each other and the guests too – of course, there’s no official confirmation about that or footage but the world is going to wake up this morning ranting around the rumors.”

“First, the attack at Metropolis’ subway station and now an even bigger hit at the Avengers’ Tower – a blow in the heart of our sense of security. I tell you, Eric: people feel a lot less secure and confident about their protectors – superpowers and all; especially, when these protectors, according to the witnesses, were ready not only to kill each other but also kill civilians.”

The second newscaster shook his head pursing his lips.

Ms. Rose with one hand clutching her waist upon her laced apron and the other pouring coffee into Clark’s cup watched the discussion intrigued.

“Is that true, Mr. Kent? You’re a journalist after all; you know more.”

Clark shrugged.

“I don’t know anything more than you, Ms. Rose. Lois was there covering the event – she and Jimmy sent some coverage but I haven’t spoken with them.”

She nodded.

“I’m glad they’re okay but shame that young man was killed…”

Clark pouted and pressed his lips: he was there watching and didn’t do anything – all these superpowers and in the end he was unable to prevent Joker from killing a man… His guts were clenched.

Ms. Rose put her hand on his shoulder.

“You’re alright, son?”

He gave her a big goofy Kent-ish smile that she and Bruce adored.

“Yes, Ms. Rose; I just didn’t sleep well.”

The old woman smiled relieved.

“Now, let’s get your order…” she opened the window display and the delicious smell of the store became heavier, really mouth salivating. “Mmm…let’s see: ‘Prince’s donuts’ as usual?”

Clark’s chest became a stone: almost every day along with his own favorite flavor he bought Bruce’s favorites too. Ms. Rose had named that flavor ‘the Prince’s donuts’ out of a whim and she was so right! But today there was no need for Prince’s donuts…

“No, Ms. Rose…Just my usual…” he registered the kind woman’s surprised look – Clark had seen then many times smiling pointedly as she picked the best donuts for his order and he blushed every time…she had guessed that he was taking the Prince’s donuts to someone…

She put them to a paper bag and Clark paid.
“Have a great day, Mr. Kent!”

“You too, Ms. Rose” he smiled and she reflected his smile.

20:01:10;54

The Asylum’s lounge space that included the cafeteria was filled with inmates watching TV or playing games. It was evening and almost the time to have their dinner.

The orderlies stood on the perimeter of the rectangular room and some of them were scattered inside the room between the tables of the cafeteria and the armchairs and sofas of the lounge room. Crane’s escape had increased the security measures and now they kept their Tasers clenched ready for use. Asylum – and Gotham – couldn’t afford a second incident.

Joker was sprawled on the black leather couch opposite the big screen built-in TV and giggled loudly watching cartoons.

At that moment, the double doors to the cafeteria-lounge space opened and Dr. Quinzel entered strolling around the patients and talking with some of them. She stopped in front of Joker and he patted the couch next to him inviting her to joy him shouting something about a great episode.

She sat completely calm.

Bruce frowned. He had hacked last evening’s footage from the Asylum’s security cameras – Joker must have escaped around that time; it was the same footage that Gotham’s police was searching for any clues. If he had escaped earlier he’d have known because he got updated on Gotham’s developments regularly throughout the day.

The holographic pyramid-watch at the nightstand read 6:16 in the morning: when Bruce woke up Clark had already left which Bruce couldn’t attribute only to his need to fly to Metropolis to get to his job on time…Last night’s dispute played its role as every dispute lately…and they had a lot of them.

He had sighed but realizing that he couldn’t persuade his mind to stop thinking and sleep again, he sat on the mattress putting a pillow between his back and the headboard, and opened his Cosmos to do some meaningful work.

Hero had slept curled at his side and looked at him sleepily.

“Sleep, buddy; it’s still early…What am I saying? Cats woke up early…”

He looked again at the paused frame of the footage. Dr. Quinzel shouldn’t have sat next to Joker but he couldn’t blame her: she knew that Tony had planted security triggers in the criminal that whenever he dared to do a threatening move knocked him out. And she was his therapist so she wanted to construct a patient-therapist relationship based on trust.

Bruce already figured what happened without seeing the next; yet he pushed ‘play’ in hopes of finding an explanation on how Joker did escape.

Joker’s movement was so quick that the orderlies couldn’t catch it. His forearm pressed Quinzel’s throat and he stood abruptly dragging her along. Her face was definitely surprised but still calm even though Joker had a metal pipe with sharpened edge grazing her cheek.
“Kids, take those niiiiice looking toys from these buffoons aaaaand playyyyy!”

The orderlies moved their Tasers threateningly towards the menacing inmates.

“Nooo…noooo…Doon’t be bad boys noooow ooooor I’ll slice the goooolllloooood doctor – it’d be a shaaaame, huh? Give your toooys – kids should share their toys…”

Bruce was sure that Joker from his previous attempt to kill his former goon had figured out how Tony’s security worked so this time he was completely tranquil. Yet Tony had changed that after Bruce’s suggestion making the knock out effect hit when fear was monitored around Joker. And Quinzel should have been scared – at least, uncomfortable and distressed. Bruce licked his lips and paid more attention to her beautiful face that seemed…satisfied? Could the doctor be enjoying Joker’s rough treatment?

Well, Joker noticed too.

The inmates took the orderlies’ Tasers and guns and aimed at them.

Joker cackled.

“Uuuuuuu! I loooooove dramatic escalation!” he leaned his face to his therapist and licked his lips.

“Daaaarling, you liiiike it oooor is my idea?”

He shook his head.

“Then you’re gonnaaaaaa loooove this!!!!” he released her throat only to twirl her to face him and bitch slapped her with such force that the lean woman slumped on the wall and collapsed.

Bruce inhaled deeply: Joker had slapped him too in the past but he had the training to handle it – poor Dr. Quinzel stayed curled on the floor Joker laughing and hopping around.

“But his violent slap to the doctor made the orderlies move forward and the inmates used the Tasers causing the orderlies’ pained yells and convulsing.

Bruce saw what should have happened earlier.

Joker with a stupid expression upon realizing what was happening collapsed unconscious to the floor and the inmates gaped at the spectacle.

Bruce tilted his head on the side and grinned in spite of himself: it was the first time that Joker was truly funny.

The double door burst open and backup from the orderlies that were in the Asylum’s other facilities surged the space.

Bruce’s eyes narrowed: it should have ended there but suddenly the lights went off and the image stopped abruptly replaced by thick snows. Bruce nodded thoughtful – Joker’s ally intervened to save the day. He doubted that Crane bothered to help: he disappeared miraculously from his hideout literally moments before police stormed the place so he wouldn’t risk something like that even if he wanted to – and he definitely didn’t want to.

From all the footage of his interactions with Joker Bruce had watched, the former doctor seemed rather displeased from the jester’s proximity. So it was just a coincidence that the attack at the Avengers’ Tower used both of them: a third, powerful agent recruited both of them. And Bruce was afraid that the person who unleashed Joker to have his fun in the Tower wouldn’t limit the clown;
Joker wanted him so probably Gotham would be again his performance stage from now on. So Bruce knew that he had to return as soon as possible…

To do what, fixed in a chair? He could always use the Tumbler to patrol until Lucius had the armor ready.

He brushed the ‘fast forward’ choice and the footage moved on; the snow persisted. Suddenly, image returned: a looted, destroyed cafeteria with every glass display case shattered, food splayed everywhere – mainly on the unconscious orderlies -, tables uprooted, chairs broken, shards from crockery over the floor and the ripped couches and armchairs. TV was still playing but on the screen a huge red smile was sprayed.

It was the moment Gotham’s SWAT surged the space: 22:15:30;09. Bruce pressed his lips – the Asylum had stayed in lockdown for two hours without the police having any notice about the breakout – everything went south like in the Avengers’ Tower. That explained why the news of Joker’s escape didn’t reach them earlier to take their precautions.

Thankfully, the fugitives didn’t take any hostages; he saw some police officers taking care of Dr.
Quinzel who was evidently in a daze. Batman definitely wished to have a talk with her but patrolling in the Tumbler was easy while speaking to someone keeping the image of the unscathed vigilante was an entire different thing.

He huffed and minimized the window. He grabbed the armrests and slipped in his chair; he took Hero in his lap.

He missed having breakfast with Clark…that thought brought back the cold feeling from their quarrel last night. One of these days Clark might not come back…He pressed his lips to the point that they became white. But he wasn’t going to send him away even though he felt like being poisoned with little dosages every day…

However, Clark still hadn’t done anything extreme: his Sun was still fighting that unknown thing and Bruce was sure that Clark loved him and listened to him even reluctantly. Clark hadn’t decided to leave him – with words or acts - yet so as Bruce had promised he wouldn’t give up on him.

He looked down at Hero who was staring at him puzzled and a bit melancholic as if sensing. Bruce smiled to him and kissed the top of his head.

“Time for breakfast, buddy.”
Chapter 32

The palace’s grand hall was empty; the last servant removed the popcorn containers and left hurriedly. The long corridor leading to the throne shone pristine, its golden tiles reflecting the green ceiling. The hall was round and the crystal walls granted view from one side to the great iceberg and from the other to a peaceful beach with palm trees and exotic birds that reminded of the Caribbean: Loki loved variety so even if his location didn’t provide that, he created it himself.

A long satisfied huff cracked the silence as Loki yanked his head to touch the green velvet of his throne’s back; he had returned his throne to its normal golden-green grandiose after watching the show – the cloud was great for enjoying movies and shows but afterwards he craved for showing off; even to his servants.

He had his eyes opened, upturned to the ceiling, a sly smirk on his face. His arms flexed on the golden armrests and his fingers clenched the curved edges as he replayed in his mind how Thor was fighting with Superman and that Amazon unable to realize that there was no real danger but just a stupid hallucination. And then when the effect was gone…oh! Their stupid faces with that dumb expression…

His giggle vibrated through the vast, high ceiling hall. But then his eyes fixed on the great orgy that was depicted on the dome with dozens of naked male and female bodies mingled into each other between green branches, leaves and flowers as snakes slithered on the bodies increasing pleasure; he abruptly jerked and ruined his relaxed position into bending to support his chin on his palm. His cunning eyes deep in thought.

“They shouldn’t have come out of the hallucination before real damage was done…It was too soon; it’d be funnier if Thor, the God of Thunder, had used his stupid hammer to real business. Someone ruined my fun…someone saved them…”

That clown certainly knew who did but he wouldn’t say – the scum had his secrets and wasn’t willing to share. If of course Joker himself was aware of these secrets because Loki had entered his mind…And that was THE experience! Like riding a roller coaster: complete chaos where concepts, images and ideas twirled each other without any meaning and then… BOOM! The man’s mind was a real minefield.

Only two things were distinguished: Bruce Wayne and Batsy but they were mingled – Joker seriously had an issue about choosing his real love…

Loki sniggered even now with the thought of Joker having a real love other than disaster, chaos and fun. Surely, he had some ‘philosophical ideas’ surfacing to the stormy sea of his mind. A stormy sea that became tranquil when the jester was to execute his attack.

Bruce Wayne was on his mind aiming to find him; Batsy was on his mind when he realized that their show was ruined. Yet Batman wasn’t in the Tower that night so probably the clown was thinking of other times the flying rodent destroyed his fun. Maybe the Bat had become the symbol for every obstacle Joker found in his way…

He shrugged and protruded his bottom lip tapping it with his finger. Never mind…That Joker guy was his jester and offered him entertainment.

As when he watched him being knocked out during his attempt to escape that loony bin. Loki kept an eye over Gotham’s Asylum waiting for the jester’s movement – he knew that this dude wouldn’t stay for long there: he wanted Bruce Wayne and was thirsty of wrecking chaos in the world for his fun. Much like Loki. Not that Loki believed that Joker looked like him…His face distorted in disgust: for one thing, the God of deceit was beautiful… But they had common taste for mischief.

So Loki felt excitement when his potential ally grabbed the silly blondie and sent the other loonies to get the weapons from the orderlies. And he had the greatest laughing fit when the inmates aimed the Tazers against the orderlies and they screamed from shock; Loki’s hysterics weren’t for the orderlies but for Joker whose face took a stupid, astonished expression – eyes narrowed, eyebrows frowned, mouth agape – before he collapsed to the floor unconscious.

Someone played a brilliant prank to the clown and Loki appreciated the irony. Yet he had to control his laughter to intervene because the crazies stayed as cold as their momentary leader and more orderlies burst in the lounge space. The show would have a premature – and no funny at all – end if he hadn’t stopped everything in the Asylum and taken the clown to his palace and the loonies to a warehouse-like place he formed in his territory.

Loki didn’t care if the loonies testified upon being arrested that a god freed them because…Hell…every insane would have said the same thing. However, he was selective in his companies so Joker was enough for guest.

Joker began slowly twitching – Loki’s stare still on him having just woken him with a snapping of his fingers. The clown lay on the marble floor under a pillar with the shape of a curvy, naked lady several feet opposite Loki’s throne and his expression was as funny as when he realized that he was going to faint. Joker’s eyes ascended the marble lady’s body and he whistled.

“Heeeeello, babe! Either you’re a woman shaped column ooooor” he tilted his head “I must get laid ASAP! HeHe!”

He sat on his butt, gathered his legs and scratched his hair looking around the rest five pillars that formed the enormous hexagonal with Loki’s throne in the center – they were shaped as male and female nude bodies. And then he also stared at the ceiling.

“Oooooh, boooy! Stark sponsored trips become mooore and mooore entertaining…My roomy-room now looks like the ugly, kitsch palace of a seeex deprived guy…”

Loki stood and his footsteps echoed through the hall, he kept his hands behind his back, his lips pouted.

“Ugly? Kitsch?” he mumbled. “The same in Louvre and Capella Sistina is called art…”

“Aaand in your place is called per--vert!” he nodded goggling at the ceiling. “I know: world is un--fair buuuuuut I know a pervert when I see him…”

Loki smirked.

“You had a lot of practice in your mirror!” he slurred.

Joker’s eyes turned on him and he started giggling, pointing at Loki.

“Niiiiiiice outfit! And they say my taaaaste is baaaad! Hehehehehehe!”

Loki rolled his eyes standing beside Joker and towering him. Suddenly, the God of mischief began trembling, his eyes bulging and his face distorted in fear. Joker understanding what he was doing raised his palms.
“Wait!”

But Loki screamed and let his heart beat fast in terror and Joker slumped on the floor unconscious. It was Loki’s turn to giggle pointing at Joker’s stupid expression.

This time Joker jumped at his feet as soon as Loki revived him; the God looked at him amused with raised eyebrows. And before Joker could say anything Loki widened his eyes terrorized and screamed sending Joker again unconscious to the floor. The raven haired man pouted looking at Joker.

“It’s not my fault your face is horrifying…”

However Loki was in a hurry so he brought round Joker immediately; the jester’s jump and his irritation were so funny that he couldn’t fight it and imitated again the scared.

“Not again…” Joker exclaimed rolling his eyes before falling down and Loki doubled up in laughter.

“I could repeat that for ages…” Loki said and sidestepped Joker’s body to cross the corridor and settle to his throne; he waved his hand “but we have business…so…” he snapped his fingers and Joker began stirring.

This time the clown didn’t jolt to his feet but stared from narrowed eyes at the guy who looked him from the throne.

“I’m glaaaaad someone’s having fuuuun – I’m a jester after all…”

“You can’t imagine how ridiculous you are when you recognize the first signs of being knocked out…” Loki cackled. “I never saw again such a stupid fainting since Lorelei saw that she didn’t fuck her beloved fisherman but dear ol’ me…” he sighed “What a fuck was her!”

Joker lifted an eyebrow and bent his knee to support his elbow.

“Weeeell, you flatter me! Can you sign me a letter of recommendation?”

Loki shook his index finger chuckling.

“Oh, dude, you’re good!”

“Aaaaand you’re that guy who caaaaame to my cell – I told you: I don’t work for others.”

Loki shrugged and widened his arms to show his palace.

“I’m not running a business – and I don’t offer wages, insurance etc.” he pouted.

Joker frowned and made to stand but hesitated remembering what happened the previous times; his cautious stare met Loki’s eyes and the god nodded giving his approval. Joker stood dusting off his butt but taking in it was the orange suit from Arkham twitched his lips in aversion and stopped.

“I hate orange…” he groused nasally.

Loki nodded pouting.

“I see your point” he nodded and Joker was dressed in his trademark purple suit.

Joker regarded himself and batted his eyelids.
“I dooooon’t like strangers dressing meeeee…” he said in a mock girlish tone.

He marched towards Loki’s throne regaining his slightly hunched posture and his questioning stare.

“I don’t believe you took me from the loony bin to have the pleasure of dressing me up?”

Loki arched his eyebrows and sprawled in his throne crossing his legs.

“It was a good laugh – and the one that pulled up that prank on you would have been laughing right now” he squinted and leaned towards him. “Who schemed that? I bet Stark…”

But Joker seemed thinking hard and Loki getting a glimpse of his mind understood that the clown was actually capable of rational thinking. And Joker had Stark crossed out.

“The exe--cution was definitely Stark’s…” the jester mumbled in heavy English accent grabbing a pipe that wasn’t there. “Yeeeet Stark had made that think work when I felt the arousal of harming others…and now I get knocked out when others feel dread…Sooooo the one who thought it knows that I dooooon’t experience agitation when I harm – that’s for boooooring people.”

Loki shook his head.

“But you want a demonstration?” he cackled.

Joker tilted his head to the side.

“Naaahhh…Someone gave him the idea – someone cunning as me who is able to turn the tables and bring the joke on me…Someone who compleeeetes me…”

Loki penetrated his mind to see who that might be but that mind was filled with explosions, blood and screams and Loki felt bored.

Joker’s acid green eyes were sparkling.

“Sooooo, what’s the catch?” he asked in business matter.

“I’m Loki.”

Joker rolled his eyes and snorted.

“I knooooow – you tooold me then” he made a gesture of dismissal “As if he is Mick Jagger…Tough!”

Loki smirked.

“I like your style…”

“You’re not the only one: I like myyyyy style too…”

Loki leaned his head towards him, his eyes piercing Joker’s.

“Tonight, at Avengers’ Tower is held the party of the year. Tony Stark and his pals among them my dear brother, Thor…”

Joker goggled.

“Ooooh…sooo you’re a goooood! Can I have an autograph?” he giggled.
“Yeah…I’m a god: a beautiful one” Joker made a throw up motion and Loki chuckled. “There will be also Superman, that Amazon, plenty of people…”

Joker scratched his nape.

“Caviar, champagne? Because that fine establishment I was in didn’t satisfy my gourmet appetite…”

“And Bruce Wayne…”

Joker yanked his head.

“Now you haaave my mouth sa--livating…”

Loki’s face was carved by a huge grin behind his united fingertips that formed a triangle.

“So…Stark is bragging that his newly built barn is the safest building in the world…”

“HEHEHEHE…”

Loki arched his eyebrows.

“I get we understand each other?” the God asked slyly. “I want a spectacular show and I believe that you’re the best to direct it…” his smile was almost warm and his sneaky eyes bore in Joker’s.

The jester licked his lips and gave a grin of his own.

“Soookooo you’ve read my artistic am—bitions, huh?” he tilted his head on the side. “Though…” he shook his index finger calculating “the cast youuu provide me has tooooo many staaaars and you knooow how difficult those stars are nowadays…” he winked.

Loki waved his worries off.

“Let your talent fly, my friend…I have a gas that will render them powerless.”

Joker’s wicked eyes sparkled hungry.

“Soookooo Johnny – boy is part of our creative team, huh?”

Loki looked him lopsided.

“Jonathan Crane” Joker spat.

“How you figured?” Loki stood.

It was Joker’s turn to wave him off.

“Ppppplease, Loki; haven’t you heard of the crazies’ intelligence? Not that I’m crazy…buuuuut I’m definitely ahead of the curve. The guy escaped before me aaaaand he’d have been already back in the dumpster if a big guy – like you – didn’t hire him. Aaaaaaand he’s the guy for such psycho-mambo-jumbo.”

Loki yanked his head and cackled.

“I like you, clown…” Joker shook his head and rolled his eyes.

“Little by little you’re gonna staaaart groping mee…”
The god tilted his head and sniffed at Joker pouting.

“You’re not my type…”

Joker shrugged.

“Youuuur looooss, buster! Back to business, if you have hired Johnny…”

“I don’t hire anyone: he’s a freelance partner like you.”

Joker shook his head nodding several times impatiently.

“I want another one of his gasses…” his eyes had become slits, glimmering and Loki could hear crazy wheels rotating swiftly in his head.

“What gas?”

Joker squinted more and shook his index finger reprimanding.

“Naaaah, naaaah, naaaah…I need to sur—prise my audience!”

Loki spread his arms and stood.

“Okay, then sur—PRISE me!”

Joker crooked his mouth.

“Aaaaaaand I want my ballet to surround the prima ballerina” he gestured to his chest “that’s me!”

Loki cocked an eyebrow.

“I don’t eyeball you as Rudolf Nureyev…” he sneered and Joker blinked snorting.

“You haven’t seen me in tights…”

Loki clutched his waist and roared in laughter yanking his head backwards.

“In the name of Me! I just ate!”

“Everyone’s got an opinion nowadays…” Joker muttered nasally.

Loki stopped laughing and gazed at his partner.

“I parked your goons in a warehouse nearby – you’ll have everything you want. But we don’t have much time: the party begins in an hour.”

“Dooooon’t fret, Joker’s here – you did provide some kryptonite, right?”

Loki smirked.

“Please. I know my thing.”

“Glad to hear; soooo let’s partyyyyyy, babe!” Joker roared and made a twirl marching to the other side of the hall.

“Where are you going?”
Joker stood abruptly and tilted his head backwards rolling his eyes to Loki as if he had asked the most obvious thing.

“To dye myyyyyyyy loki-locks, of course…My Brucie doesn’t want me just for my looks but I want to be daaaaaaashing…Do you have any hair color in this dump?”

Loki blinked.

“You’re heading to the pond with the piranhas” he said indifferently and Joker spread his arms yanking his head.

“Whaaaat kind of weirdoooo keeps piranhas in a…palace?”

Loki pouted and upturned his hands.

“Well, me…”

“HeHeHe!” Joker shook his index finger. “Finally, a god who’s not boring” he turned and narrowed his eyes curious. “Dooooo you have a forked tongue? It’d suit you perfect. No flattering but you remind me of that snake in Paradise…”

Loki lollled his head and huffed reminiscently his eyes travelling.

“The fashion of that era was great..!”

Loki cackled remembering the clown prancing in his hall. After the party, he sent him and his goons back at Gotham as Joker wanted. Loki was sure that there would be more fun and he was ready to stir things a bit.

“Master Bruce, what are you doing?”

Well, the image Alfred saw upon entering the kitchen left him bemused. Of course, it wasn’t the fact that his young master was working on that tablet at the kitchen’s island – Alfred sometimes felt on the edge of smashing that thing!

First, it was hardly half past six in the morning, that is to say very early for Master Bruce to be awake and that made Alfred very worried. Second, which caused a hardly contained grin, the shining surface of the kitchen island was already covered with crockery: toasted bread emanated tantalizing smell piled neatly in a dish, boiled eggs were positioned in porcelain eggcups; the butter was in its special dish and honey and jam in small, transparent jars. Also, the bizarre thing that it was Master Anthony’s newest coffee machine waited on the bench with its jug filled with delicious smelling coffee.

Also, Hero was eating his own breakfast from his bowl and casted a lazy gaze at Alfred licking some food of his little pink nose.

Bruce raised his head and acknowledged his butler who was dressed impeccably as usual. He grinned.

“Good morning, Alfred” he greeted him nonchalant. “Come, join us!”

“Good morning, Master Bruce” Alfred replied and approached him. “Master Bruce, you realize that you should be still sleeping?”
Bruce sipped from his orange juice.

“I didn’t prepare juice for the rest because I didn’t know when you’ll come and didn’t want the vitamins to be spoiled.”

Alfred arched his eyebrows.

“I think you’re stealing my lines, sir…” he commented dryly. “You don’t avoid answering, right?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I woke up and I couldn’t sleep more so I decided to make good use of my time.”

Alfred’s disapproval was clear.

“Preparing breakfast? That’s my job, sir” he smiled “unless you consider of doing job cuts?”

The youth smiled.

“Of course not – I couldn’t survive without you, Alfred” he took his butler’s hand in his and squeezed.

Though Alfred was a typical trained to be cold butler this gesture from his young master filled him with happiness; however, he knew that his boy indeed survived too many years without him.

“What am I going to do with you, Master Bruce?” he squatted to be at the same height as him.

Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“Eat breakfast?” the youth replied shrugging and Alfred huffing sat at the stool beside Bruce.

The Englishman took one of the toasted slices of bread and spread some butter.

“This is absolutely the first and last time you prepare the breakfast, sir.”

Bruce widened his eyes mock shocked.

“Why? You don’t believe you’ll survive my cooking?”

Alfred couldn’t stop a big smile cracking his face; he wanted to caress the youth’s disheveled hair – Bruce was still on his dark blue pajamas and matched robe. But he didn’t do it although his master’s effort to hide his emotional turmoil of the last days for his sake touched him.

“We do need to change your medication, Master Bruce” he said looking into Bruce’s frustrated eyes. “These drugs are supposed to ensure you at least eight hours of solid, restful sleep and lately you don’t sleep enough.”

The younger man pressed his lips.

“Maybe I don’t need so much sleep anymore” his voice was a bit uninterested.

“We’ll speak to Leslie, Master Bruce.”

Bruce gulped and nodded re-focusing on his work at the tablet.

“I don’t see your milk, sir” Alfred changed the subject but Bruce just nodded and the butler smirked for his avoidance. “Let me bring you some” Bruce sighed defeated when Alfred stood and opened the silver double door closet refrigerator. “How on earth you know how to boil an egg? My egg is near perfect. And toasting bread?”

He handed Bruce a big glass of milk which he began sipping rather disgusted his eyes fixed on the misty city’s view from the frameless window at the wall opposite the island – the way the city’s millions dim lights still sparkled had something mesmerizing. Alfred smiled remembering the toddler Bruce closing his nose with his tiny fingers to drink his milk before leaving for school.

“I…” Bruce hesitated for an instance but then continued “when I mopped the kitchen’s floor in Dolcetto food was smelling so tantalizing that I couldn’t help but stare – when nobody was looking of course” his gaze fell on the tablet’s screen but was seeing elsewhere. “I knew that I wouldn’t get anything from that to eat but still…” he smiled. “I guess I was fooling my hanger imprinting the process of cooking…”

Alfred pressed his lips and continued eating his egg.

“Wow! Delicious coffee straight ahead!” Tony exclaimed striding in the kitchen in his pajamas with Garfield’s huge head smirking wickedly from his shirt.

He stopped abruptly seeing Bruce.

“What are you doing off your bed so early?” Bruce casted a lopsided glance at him.

“Everyone is going to ask me the same?”

Alfred and Tony exchanged a hopeless stare.

“And how you managed to operate my coffee machine?” he asked rubbing his goatee and squinted at his friend. “Because Alfred couldn’t.”

Alfred blushed and cleared his throat dignified.

“Master Bruce prepared the entire breakfast.”

Tony lifted his eyebrows and pursed his lips.

“Thankfully, Peps stayed at the Tower so she’ll take care of everything while I’ll be in hospital with poisoning…”

Bruce yanked his head backwards and snorted.

“Very funny…”

Tony opened the transparent cupboard, took a huge square porcelain mug with Ironman’s head on it and poured coffee.

“Mmm…You hit the target, little guy. Mmm…the finest espresso I have ever drunk!”

“You made a damn good machine there, Tony” Bruce replied engrossed in his tablet and Tony leaned to see.

On screen, Bruce compared photos of the Amazon from last night with various ancient depictions from mural paintings and vases. The Californian tycoon shook his head exasperated and huffed.

“What are you looking for?” he asked slumping into the next stool laying down his coffee and grabbing a slice of bread.
“Isn’t it obvious? I want to compare the Princess we have with the real one.”

Tony pinched the bridge of his nose and bit his bread.

“You realize that these are not pictures and the painters did them hearing the legends and not seeing the real thing?”

Bruce lifted his eyes to him.

“Of course but it is clear that the one we have, tried to imitate these characteristics.”

Tony spread some honey on his bread and bit.

“You think that she isn’t the Princess of Themyscira but an impostor…”

Bruce nodded, his eyes fixed on the diadem’s star in the ancient depictions that was with eight and not five peaks. And in the ancient depictions the face had a different bone structure making it sterner and wiser.

“Her hair seem dyed and her eyes fake.”

Tony jerked in his seat.

“What?”

“You didn’t notice how her hair emanated artificial glow?”

Tony had to take a large gulp from his espresso looking to Alfred for help.

“No, I didn’t.”

“Don’t expect from a billionaire playboy to notice woman’s locks…” Selina’s sly voice entered the space. “His focus is on other things…downwards!”

She purred some coffee to a mug and sat on a stool. Hero rushing to her and climbing in her lap.

“Why so early, Bruce?” she asked.

“I couldn’t sleep more and I have to go to the police for my testimony.”

Tony frowned.

“I thought they’ll come here?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I prefer to go myself. I already called Lieutenant Johnson and he’ll be waiting me at 9.”

“You want me to come with you?”

“No, Tony, thanks; you have a lot to do” he took in Alfred’s expression and caught him before asking the same “I appreciate it, Alfred but I’ll go alone. We need to get ready to return at Gotham by afternoon.”

Selina narrowed her eyes.

“Why such haste?”
Bruce shrugged a shoulder.

“Joker and Crane are free and probably plotting new ordeals for Gotham.”

“Let police handle it” Tony said coldly, his eyes saying that he didn’t want his friend getting in these things.

Bruce looked him in the eyes, reading his displeasure.

“Jim lit the Batsignal last night – yet Batman didn’t go…” his voice was heavy with regret.

Tony was ready to ask him what he thought he could do in his state but honestly he was afraid to ask.

Selina took a spoonful of her egg.

“Mmm…A perfect boiled egg! Well done, Alfred: as always” she wanted to lighten the mood.

“I didn’t do anything, Miss Kyle: Master Bruce prepared the breakfast.”

She cocked an impressed eyebrow and whistled.

“Another talent?! I gladly marry you, handsome…”

Bruce chuckled and sighed dramatically.

“I came second after Captain America” but then he became serious. “Speaking of which, Tony, we agreed with Steve to not tell anything about my involvement last night: it was Jarvis who used my tablet to get access to the building and analyzed the toxins neutralizing them.”

Tony nodded but his eyes were solemn.

“I want people to know the hero you are.”

But Bruce pressed his lips.

“I’m not a hero. Besides it was indeed Jarvis who made the work: I think you should give him a raise or something.”

Selina chuckled.

“Maybe a female AI?”

Tony scratched his nape.

“Hm…I don’t know but I have a hunch that Jarvis is actually gay…” Bruce and Selina laughed but Tony unlike himself was serious thinking what Selina had said. “Actually, it’d be great if you two ended up together…”

Bruce and Selina exchanged puzzled stares.

“How you came up with this?” Selina asked.

Tony gulped the rest of his coffee and Alfred stared at him understanding that what was coming wasn’t nice.

“I hate seeing Superman treat you like this and you tolerating it.”
An uncomfortable silence fell and Bruce looked at his friend.

“Tony, I know what I’m doing…”

Tony pursed his lips and shook his head.

“I doubt it, little guy…If you knew you’d have kicked this asshole’s ass! How can you stand this, Bruce? He is openly flirting with that bitch who insults you with every chance – and he doesn’t give a damn! And then he makes scenes and treats you like dirt!”

Bruce inhaled deeply and yanked his head.

“If I was ill and behaved awkward to you, would you turn your back on me?”

Tony lolled his head and blinked.

“Of course not” but he narrowed his eyes. “Is he ill? Because he looks quite fine to me.”

Bruce pressed his lips feeling all eyes on him.

“We still try to figure out” and seeing Tony running his fingers through his hair “Clark loves me” Bruce said calmly and Tony slapped his face. “You don’t understand, Tony…He is affected by something and I…”

But Tony interrupted him.

“Exactly! By his dick! Sorry, Alfred…” he locked eyes with his friend. “Stop making excuses for him! He is a prick…he feels you’re his possession and now looks for more. So, Bruce: admit the reality, finish this thing and move on.”

“I won’t abandon Clark now that he needs me. Besides he hasn’t done anything with her: he is with me.”

“That’s what every victim of abuse says!”

“I’m not a victim!”

“Then stop acting like one! You…you make feeble theories about impostors and bad witches wanting to harm him only to deny the truth that he is an asshole and just follows his dick’s whims.”

“I won’t turn my back on him – not while he is still with me. He needs help.”

“You know what I see, Bruce? That man has alienated you – you’re not yourself anymore! Joker took away your mobility and Superman your personality!”

Bruce’s eyes were blank, emotionless but for a sparkle.

“Master Anthony…” Alfred stood up and Tony followed towering Bruce.

“I can’t bear seeing him being treated like this after everything he’s been through” Tony gestured to Bruce.

“Clark isn’t cheating on me and hasn’t done anything… He tries to fight this and listens to me so I won’t deny him my help.”

Tony closed his eyes and shook his head disappointed.
“He’s playing you like a fool, little guy…and you create conspiracy theories about the Amazon not being the Amazon to justify his behavior allowing him to laugh behind your back. You can’t believe these things, buddy, because if you do then the one that needs help it’s you…”

Bruce grabbed his tablet and steered his chair to the exit. He stopped at the threshold.

“Thanks, Tony! I’ll consider your advice…” he said without turning his head. “Excuse me, I have a meeting with Lieutenant Johnson” he continued.

Tony bit his bottom lip.

“She isn’t worth it, little guy!” he yelled to his friend’s retreating form.

Alfred stood and began gathering the things off the island, completely expressionless and silent. Tony’s head slumped in his chest and sighed regretful. Selina approached and patted his shoulder.

“You aren’t helping this way…” she remarked with sympathy.

Battery Park.

At half past seven, only a few bystanders were scattered around – most of them jogging before getting to their works. It was a bit humid so even they wouldn’t see him clearly.

He steered his chair through the paved path, under the tree branches that by now were completely bare of leaves. He stopped before the railing. The public lantern above him still casted its dull light since the fog was dense and the cloudy day didn’t help dissolving it fast.

The view of the Harbor was eye-catching though the mist made the Statue of Liberty looking like a dark mystic creature from a horror child story. Although he wore a black long coat and woolen black cap and gloves, he could still feel the humidity gnawing his slowly healing bones but he liked the feeling of the morning cold in his hot face.

Bruce missed Gotham’s docks though most people would consider that crazy… His guts were clenched in a tight knot: Clark’s attitude and words from one side and Tony’s scolding from the other. Bitterness was really acid in his throat and erosive in his mind. Maybe both of them were right: maybe he was the one with the problem. The one who didn’t want to accept the facts and made up stories to avoid facing the truth.

But which was the truth? Clark didn’t want him anymore and fell for the Princess, as Tony said? Or Clark still loved him as always and Bruce was exaggerating what he was seeing feeling insecure?

“That man has alienated you. Joker took away your mobility and Superman your personality!”

So he wasn’t exaggerating the signs – other people saw them too. Yet Clark was honest when he said that he loved him and that his behavior was stupid and this wasn’t himself…

Bruce sighed and a small round cloud of breath was formed.

Or maybe Clark just didn’t want to hurt him by dumbing him and tried to cover the truth wanting to keep both…But this hurt him more. And he knew that something was wrong with Clark from the moment she appeared – even Clark in the start had admitted it.

He yanked his head and his gaze fixed on a lonely seagull. How was he supposed to handle this? He didn’t have any previous experience of relationships – with people who loved him romantically. His reasoning sometimes urged him to kick Clark out – much like Tony said – but then he was realizing that this wasn’t his reasoning; rather his boiling emotions of jealousy, of feeling marginalized, out of the center of Clark’s attention, not his entire world anymore: it was his bleeding selfishness…

His real reasoning calculated the facts coldly and prompted him to use his current proximity to Clark to protect him from what was affecting him; and try to keep him from tumbling down this steep road. If Diana just wanted Superman for her lover Bruce would have let them be together; but if she used other means to charm Superman – especially, if his suspicion of her being an impostor was real – then he couldn’t let Clark fall into this. He didn’t know what more could she have in mind for Superman.

“Clark is affected by something.”

“Exactly. His dick!”

Bruce licked his dry lips. What if this was the thing? He was disappointing his friends permitting this to continue but did he disappoint himself?

He inhaled deeply letting the cold air cool his lungs. No, he knew he was doing the right thing; he knew that something was going on and that Clark deserved to be trusted and supported through this…Like Clark did for him…

The mist dissolved to be replaced by the relaxing light blue fluorescent color of the Fortress; the two huge rectangular crystal columns vibrated at the edges of the medical chamber and Bruce knew that their vibration was dictated by his vitals.

He was lying on his rectangular, crystal white bed that felt soft like a cloud; on the triangular nightstand was placed the Black Butterfly – the gem’s glow surpassing the crystal’s. Bruce looked fondly at the black diamond which was laid on his heart till he woke up from the coma.

He still felt exhausted to the point of lapsing again to an uninterrupted sleep; and sometimes he felt on the verge of slipping but his joy for being again with Clark erased the darkness that wanted to engulf him.

The door rolled upwards and Superman dressed in his ceremonial attire- the same Bruce wore - entered the chamber shining like the sun. His face beamed with a huge smile and his eyes sparkled like a child’s when fell on Bruce.

Bruce noticed that he held one of the odd, sphere crystal bowls and that meant that it was time to eat; his eyes lost some of their shine and Clark took it in.

“What’s wrong?” his frown was deep as he sat at a chair that the Fortress conjured for him.

“I can’t eat” Bruce sighed eyeing the bowl.

“Jor El says that you can eat this.”

Bruce licked his lips and yanked his head on the fluffy white pillow.

“I know that the Fortress can sustain my needs in nutrients.”

Clark leaned above him and caressed his forehead, planting soft kisses.

“I know it’s difficult, Bruce; after all this time, food disgusts you and your stomach feels like a stone; yet you should start eating - a small bite at a time…For me?” he smiled and Bruce was dazzled by his beauty.

He nodded gulping but when the spoon approached his mouth, his gag reflex shut his throat stubbornly. Clark pressed his lips and Bruce was sure that there was some wetness in his eyes so he opened his mouth and took in the food wanting to see again Clark’s blinding smile.

“I’m not a baby, you know…” he commented pleased by Clark’s happiness.

“I beg to differ: you’re my baby!”

Bruce snorted but couldn’t stop a smile that became a pout when Clark brought another spoonful at his mouth.

“You said a small bite at a time…” he muttered displeased.

“Ooops…” Clark blushed and left the spoon back in the bowl on the nightstand.

He placed his hand over Bruce’s hand that still had some strange things attached on; most of the bones of his arms were fractured and he couldn’t move them. But at least he could feel them, unlike with his body below the waist that simply wasn’t there.

Clark’s eyes that were more clear and shiny than the crystals in the Fortress captured Bruce’s tired eyes; he was serious and his hand squeezed gently Bruce’s.

“You need to start eating as normal as possible in order to regain your strength and leave this bed” he tilted his head with a guilty expression as he regarded Bruce’s body “though I don’t mind you on a bed…But not this one!” he nodded. “Too many bad memories…”

He took again the spoon and shook it like a flying plane.

“Vzooom…vzoooooom! I’m asking permission to land!” he yelled in a tough voice and Bruce chuckled. “Open the hangar or we’ll crash!”

Bruce opened his mouth and gulped the food that was in jelly form and as a matter of fact delicious. But his organism still didn’t want it as if still doubting that he was alive.

“If you’re a good kid and eat all your food, when you’re ready, good ol’ Clark will bring you something special…” he said mischievous and Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“What?”

“Almond praline filled donuts with white chocolate topping – The Prince’s donut!”

Bruce closed his eyes and huffed reminiscently.

“Now we’re talking!”

Bruce was still smiling as the fluorescent blue was replaced by the gray sky and sea of the Harbor. Though he knew that these moments of affection were over, never to come again; and that realization clawed at his guts.

“Bruce?”
Tony stopped his Audi in front of the Avengers’ Tower; he decided to come early to avoid the reporters but even at this time – hardly half past seven – the street was crammed with them. He could have gone from the back entrance yet he didn’t want them to believe that he was afraid to confront them. He put on his designer sun glasses and got out giving the keys to the valet.

The press flock stormed at him launching questions and the security stuff struggled to hold them off. But Tony stood and looked unfazed at his masterpiece that stood wounded; the gap at the 90th floor visible even from the ground. Of course, Tony’s mood was dark not only from the disaster but also from what he had said to Bruce.

“How they managed to breach the Tower?”

“Safest building in the world and getting hijacked by a clown?”

“With world’s mighty superheroes in it?”

Tony overlooked them and proceeded stretching his posture in his brown long coat.

“You can’t protect the world!”

“Superheroes are nothing!”

Tony stopped and turned completely expressionless to the yelling mob.

“You’ll get your opportunity to bark appropriately at the Press Conference we’ll schedule in due time. Till then” he thought to say ‘fuck off’ but now he was S.H.I.E.L.D.’s new director and should keep appearances so he stretched his lips in a fake smile that exposed his gritted teeth “have a nice day!”

He twitched his mouth in disgust as the double door opened to his approach and walked in the shining foyer. People there were also gloom but greeted him so he did the same.

The silver spacious elevator stopped and the artificial female voice announced the 90th floor – reception hall.

He pouted and marched his way inside the hall unbuttoning his long coat. He stood in the middle, took off his glasses that threw in his pocket and looked all over.

At the far end of the vast hall, opposite him, five frames of the whole wall windows were smashed – the shards still all over the floor. Throughout the hall, the buffets lay upturned bearing marks of blasts – thankfully, their shots found the tables and not people; on the floor, broken crockery, bottles and knives, spoons and forks, flowers and tablecloths’ torn pieces. The stage were the band was playing was filled with pieces of instruments – Tony would have to compensate these.

His eyes stopped at the corner of the bar where every bottle was shattered since the selves had collapsed – probably from some blast. The bench was cracked in many places from bottles that terrorized guests had smashed believing that they were hitting monsters. But what made Tony close his eyes and rub the orbs was the sketching of a body the police had made…A young man had died last night.

A compassionate hand squeezed his shoulder and he looked – although he already knew – at Pepper dressed in her usual business attire, energetic as always despite the fact she had to handle the mess afterwards.

“Stark Industries are covering the hospital expenses of the injured and the funeral of Nathan Keaton” she said calm. “I contacted everyone for the meeting at 9 o’ clock.”

Tony cupped her hand and nodded pressing his lips.

“I fucked things up, Pepsi…” he mumbled and she rolled her eyes.

“That’s not original, Tony” she shrugged a shoulder.

“With Bruce” he stressed the name arching his eyebrows and Pepper sighed.

Bruce stared at the spot where the voice came and through the mist saw a tall, very broad man approaching; he was blond and Bruce could make out that he had a long ponytail. He couldn’t discern his features but he wasn’t sure it was due to the fog...

Something inside him clenched his heart with terror: little Bruce could combine a ponytail only with one man…The Vulture…And though Bruce knew that he was dead through the mist Chill’s jeering smile returned.

“Bruce, are you alright?”

Bruce blinked to clean his eyes from Chill’s form. In front of him stood…Thor dressed in jeans and a brown leather jacket, his long blond locks tied in a loose ponytail.

“Fine…Nice outfit!”

Thor looked at himself and ruffled his hair.

“Mmm…I finally admitted defeat with suits and decided to go for more casual clothes. I got it this time?”

Bruce nodded smiling.

“I prefer jeans too – but Alfred wants me dressed as a noble…and I hate ruining his mood…You’re perfect!”

Thor seemed proud of himself.

“You shouldn’t be here at this time, alone” the god remarked.

Bruce shrugged.

“It’s not Gotham…”

Thor leaned his waist at the railing looking at Bruce.

“Yes, but New York is still dangerous” he shook his head. “And Gotham seems to hunt you everywhere.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“It seems so…but I wanted to clear my thoughts – hoping that my cap would conceal my identity.”

Thor crossed his arms over his broad chest.

“Not only your cap” he raised an eyebrow.
Bruce placed his forearms on the railing and gazed at the gloomy gray sea.

“I wouldn’t expect a god strolling at a park…”

Thor followed Bruce’s gaze.

“We have a meeting at the Tower and till then I thought to walk a bit…I love the view from here…” Bruce nodded. “You should come to the meeting.”

Bruce turned his gaze on him.

“I’m not an Avenger neither a hero.”

Thor chuckled.

“Poor Fury! He wanted so much to make you one of us…And it’d be a huge honor, Bruce…but I respect your wishes. However in that meeting you should be: I’m sure that it was you who figured out their plan and saved all of us. Again.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Jarvis did that.”

Thor nodded smiling completely unconvinced but respecting the man’s wishes.

“I should have with me your cape to return it…”

Thor licked his bottom lip.

“Please, keep it…I know you prefer the red cape of another hero but keep mine too as a token of my gratitude, friendship and alliance.”

Bruce nodded.

“Thank you, Thor” he narrowed his eyes thoughtful and Thor stared at him interested. “Can I ask you something?”

“Certainly.’’

“Can you check on Bagdana?” he met Thor’s gaze.

“Has anything happened?” he asked worried frowning but Bruce shook his head in denial.

“I guess I’m a bit insecure lately…” he crooked his lips and shrugged; Clark’s words still stinging him. But the dream he had seen some days ago where Bagdana saved him from the factory instead of Clark still occupied the back of his busy mind.

Thor nodded.

“It doesn’t hurt to be sure, right?”

Bruce arched an eyebrow.

“My thought exactly” he grinned.

Thor reflected the smile and Bruce looked at his wristwatch: he felt nice with Thor’s respect and genial friendship yet there was some uneasiness.
“You are emotionally tired…” the Asgardian said sad “and sorrowful…”

Bruce smiled.

“Reading minds is part of your special abilities?” he asked playfully to change the subject.

“No, actually, this is Loki’s area of expertise” Thor replied understanding Bruce’s intention. “He can’t invade my mind though.”

Bruce frowned and Thor looked interested.

“What?”

“A thought…Last night Joker had definitely help.”

“Jarvis told us something about toxins created by some Dr. Crane.”

Bruce gave an affirmative nod.

“Other than that he needed someone powerful to breach the Tower’s security and stop every activity locking the building inside-out” Thor watched fascinated. “I’m thinking…Joker isn’t the kind of gun someone would hire and definitely Joker wouldn’t have worked for any usual mobster – the show he created manifests just that and also shows that his partner has a knack for chaos and ‘fun’ as well. I watched the surveillance video from Joker’s escape and it looks like someone intervened without showing himself shutting off the building for two hours. Crane was just as ‘miraculously’ saved from arrest some days ago. A Deus ex machina…” Bruce locked eyes with Thor whose eyes sparkled.

“Loki!”

“He has a rivalry with you so he could want to ridicule you and your teammates that way.”

Thor shook his head.

“And he showed an interest for you, which could lead him to Crane and Joker.”

Bruce grinned.

“Loki can invade and control minds – he could do that with the Avengers, Superman and Wonder Woman – into rendering them unable to use their powers and skills. Yet he can’t do that with your mind so he used Crane’s genius in toxins…”

Thor clenched his waist with both hands and yanked his head grunting causing some clouds to move swiftly.

“I can’t believe it! The rascal! I always tried to treat him better than the other Asgardians do and even made excuses for him but now…”

Bruce raised his palm in an appeasing gesture.

“That’s a theory – we can’t be sure and if you surge and confront him we’ll never know.”

“What do you propose?”

“Watch him discreetly and that way he’d lead us to his partners before they do more damage.”

Thor furrowed his brow.
“Lead? Joker and Crane must be with him.”

Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“I’m sure that both Crane and Joker wouldn’t act as a god’s lapdogs…they probably are back in Gotham under Loki’s protection.”

“Do you want me to say all these to the Avengers?”

“Of course but…” Thor smiled.

“You want me to not reveal that you thought it…”

Bruce nodded and Thor shook his head crossing his arms over the chest; his eyes filled with warm admiration.

“I must head for the one police plazza: I have an appointment” Bruce muttered feeling overwhelmed from the god’s admiring eyes.

“Do you want me to accompany you?”

Bruce shook his head and chuckled.

“I wouldn’t want you to be late in that meeting: Tony is a very strict director” a shadow ran his eyes on the remembrance of what happened at the kitchen.

Thor thought of replying that as a god he could disappear and reappear in the other corner of the planet in a second yet he sensed that the youth wanted to be alone. So he just nodded and stretched his hand for Bruce to shake it.

“I’m glad I met you, Bruce; whenever you need something…anything…” he lowered his eyes shyly.

“Think of my name or call me and I’ll be there.”

“I appreciate that, Thor.”

The Asgardian turned to leave as Bruce did but stopped and looked at the human’s back. Bruce sensed that and turned too.

“Last night when I was unable to make use of my skills and Mjolnir felt suddenly strange…I felt…disabled” he pressed his lips “and realized how you feel” Bruce’s eyes flashed as they collided with the god’s baby blue eyes. “It was overwhelming getting a glimpse of what you experience every moment and even more shuddering, realizing your willpower, the strength being a hero even in that chair, fighting the difficulties…” the god smiled. “I feel weak in front of you…”

Bruce blinked uncomfortable and clutched the armrests.

“Superman is the luckiest being in existence to have you…” he placed his palm on his heart and continued his road.

“Bruce, I didn’t believe that I’d say it, but I’m glad you didn’t attend the party: if you were affected by the fear toxin, the green Thing would have demolished the Tower and casualties would have been way more – even some of us among them…” that was the only attempt on humor from Tony throughout the meeting and even he knew that it was lame – he didn’t need Dr. Banner’s gloomy stare to confirm it.
Tony stretched in the back of his chair; the conference hall had emptied as Thor, Steve, Dr. Banner, Natasha and Fury left. Steve had kept his agreement with Bruce and didn’t reveal his friend’s true involvement; of course, Thor knew already that Bruce was Batman so he certainly figured who was guiding Jarvis through all. Natasha had kept an eyebrow arched throughout the meeting and Fury… Good ol’ Fury had always believed that Bruce was the Batman but his face stayed cool and expressionless.

And then Thor began analyzing his theory of Loki being behind the attack and Tony detected Bruce’s deductive thinking. As well as in Thor’s suggestion to not confront Loki immediately because a theory was a theory and they didn’t have proofs…

Tony tapped his fingers at the enormous, round shaped glass meeting table; a deep frown had settled in his brow throughout the meeting even if he chose not to think about his attitude in the kitchen. Now the frown became deeper and his eyes though focused on New York’s skyline from the whole wall windows, saw only Bruce’s back.

A stupid god was messing with them and implicated Bruce in this using Gotham’s scum in his plans. Bruce had told them about that strange creature that came across in that forest in Thasos moments before Bruce was attacked. Loki had helped him then till his friends came to stop the green things; but maybe this was just a camouflage. Maybe he had organized the attack to act the good guy and… Bring the Amazon in the whole picture.

Tony rubbed his goatee deep in thought feeling Pepper’s intense gaze on him. Maybe Bruce was right and the Princess wasn’t the Princess after all? Loki could control minds so he could be either controlling the real Princess or using someone else as a puppet – and he could also be affecting Superman’s mind.

He had his arms crossed over the chest, stretching his legs under the table. He was pouting. No, even if Superman was affected by something that couldn’t exonerate him for his behavior to Bruce…

He slapped his face with both palms and Pepper narrowed her eyes and stood from her seat at the side of the table. Thinking Superman’s ass behavior to Bruce brought his own behavior to stab him in the back. What was his excuse for speaking to Bruce like this? He meant no harm…He only wanted to make Bruce get a grip…Feeble excuses…

He roared and jerked from his leather-metallic chair, his motion bringing him face to face with Pepper.

“I’m an asshole!” he exclaimed.

She shrugged.

“That’s not news…”

Tony smirked and held her upper arms planting a soft kiss on her lips. But then something flashed in his mind. Thor had met Bruce before their meeting: that was the only way he could have listened to his friend’s deduction.

“I must see, Thor, doll!”

Pepper squinted.

“Don’t be an asshole, again…” she spat to his retreating back and he nodded without stopping.

Fury intercepted him as the double doors opened simultaneously for him to enter and Tony leave.
His consultant made to tell him something but Tony raised his index finger graciously.

“With you in a moment…” he mumbled hastily and ran to catch the elevator; the young lady inside holding it for him.

He stepped out at the floor with the Avengers’ apartments – the other Avengers because he had an entire floor as his apartment (he wasn’t so cocky but he needed the space for his personal lab…and snooker area…and Jacuzzi).

Thor was leaving his apartment in his god attire – he had come to the meeting dressed in civilian with his hair tied in a ponytail which was a huge improvement from his suit choices. His hammer safely stashed in his belt. The blond eyed him curious and Tony strode to him.

“Did you see Bruce this morning?” he demanded stretching his neck to decrease the height difference.

“Yes, I did” he answered simply. “Why?”

Because we had a quarrel and Bruce took his car and disappeared…

“What do you want from him?” Tony demanded and the Asgardian seemed utterly insulted.

“Why would I want anything from your friend?” he frowned. “I cherish and I’m honored from his company but I don’t try to inflict my presence on him!” his calm demeanor prevailed and looked his comrade in the eyes. “Our meeting was by chance – you have my word!” he squeezed Tony’s shoulder – and that hurt. “What’s wrong?”

Tony crossed his arms and arched his eyebrows.

“I just don’t want another god circling him – he has enough already…”

Thor’s kind eyes filled with honest concern.

“Does Superman treat him badly?” he asked and the thunders he had under his orders surfaced in his voice.

Tony regarded him suspicious and uncrossed his arms.

“Just watch over that nutcase, Loki…”

He turned on his heels and marched to the elevator, Thor watching him lopsided.

Bruce slid his wheelchair on the foyer of the One Police Plaza, the New York City Police Headquarters. He had given his testimony and now he was heading to the front door and his car; he was determined to leave for Gotham at once.

“Mr. Wayne!” he heard a known voice behind his back and took in several interested eyes on him from bystanders who knew the name.

He turned his chair and as he already knew Oliver Queen came to him having just left the elevator. A big radiant smile was on his face and he stretched his hand for a handshake immediately.

“Mr. Queen…” Bruce greeted him with a courteous nod and shook his hand.
“I couldn’t fancy finding you here – I was sure that Lieutenant would have come to your residence to spare you the inconvenience.”

“I like being treated like every other citizen” Bruce grinned.

“Mmm…better move on…” the tycoon said catching with the corners of his eyes people staring at them. “I came for some additional information – you see, last night most of us were transmitted to the hospitals for check up. But fortunately, the antidote that was dispersed in the hall was great and there were no side effects.”

He held the door open for Bruce to get out and inhaled deeply the cool air; the mist had vanished but still the sky was cloudy and the day very cold.

“Well, Mr. Queen, it was nice to see you again but I must go.”

Oliver’s face fell though his eyes had still their familiar smugness.

“I’m sure your schedule here in New York isn’t so crammed to forbid a nice cup of hot coffee.”

Bruce felt the urge to refuse: he wasn’t in the mood after all. However, his mind recounted the videos and the interviews of Queen where he spoke about his rescue and the Amazon. Maybe he could answer his questions.

“Why not?” Bruce smiled.

“I know a place with the best coffee in town – it’s not far from here. We can stroll there” he put on his cashmere light brown gloves and made an inviting gesture to Bruce who wore his woolen cap and his black woolen gloves.

The place wasn’t too big but it was cozy, its walls painted in peach color while the corners were highlighted in maroon making the feeling of warmth greater. The center was occupied by a round shaped bar which shining wood was chocolate brown; rectangular marble small tables were scattered around, comfy round shaped small armchairs luring the customers with their maroon velvet.

Though it was day the secret lighting behind the maroon lines of the walls was on and the sphere shaped metallic table lambs were lit due to the semi darkness the heavy cloudy sky casted.

Oliver helped Bruce took off his coat and eyed intrigued his jeans and black woolen turtleneck blouse for an instance before he led Bruce to a corner table where the rectangular window that ran the middle of the entire world gave a spectacular view of the Brooklyn Bridge. Yet Bruce’s gaze was captured by the newspapers in the stands right next to the bar as Queen placed their order to the waitress.

“Ironman rusts” one read above Tony’s beaming face from last night; beside him a picture of the Tower gaping from its 90th floor.

“Superheroes for laughs! Clowns in Joker’s show!” and in smaller letters underneath: “Who saved the day?”

“One dead, 35 injured in Avengers’ attack: the world isn’t safe even with Superheroes – After S.H.I.E.L.D.’s recent revelations, the protectors’ inability stresses the need for reevaluation.”

Bruce remembered Tony’s outburst and felt for his friend: Tony was in his greatest moment believing that he established something valuable and Joker smashed everything, turning the triumph into failure…And then having to endure Bruce’s problems as well…It was understandable that Tony would snap.

Queen followed his gaze and shook his head.

“They’re too harsh” he arched his eyebrows. “But that’s what those journalists do. Stark must be distraught.”

Bruce yanked his head.

“No, Tony is very strong to let this get to him.”

Queen smiled and watched the waitress serving their order and then Bruce taking a sip from his hot coffee.

“Well? How’s your coffee?” Oliver asked intrigued “Was I right?”

Bruce licked his lips.

“It’s quite delicious but honestly I can’t judge because I don’t have much experience with coffee – Alfred insists on milk and juice because they are more nutrient.”

The older man nodded.

“Right…You need the best quality food there is after all these years…” he said thoughtful but taking in Bruce’s discomfort sipped his own coffee. “I hope Alfred isn’t waiting you in the car.”

“No, he is at the penthouse. I came by myself.”

Oliver cocked an eyebrow.

“What a brave young man!” he exclaimed.

Bruce took a bit of his cake.

“Mr. Queen, I was watching some coverage over last night’s events and the reporters recounted your story…”

Queen crooked his mouth and sighed dramatically waving his hand dismissively.

“They do it all the time” he leaned towards Bruce locking eyes with him. “I’m sure you know the feeling” he stretched back in his chair. “But call me Oliver – I know I’m older than you, but you’ll make an old man a favor.”

Bruce grinned.

“You’re quite young, Mr. Queen…Oliver.”

Queen changed his crossing leg and turned to the waitress.

“Another cake to my friend, please! My gratitude, Bruce.”

But Bruce was eager to ask.

“I wanted to ask you about the Princess of the Amazons.”

Now the full of Queen’s smugness returned to his sculpted face and an enigmatic grin shaped his lips.
“I think I just caught our fair Prince lying…” he said mock accusing.

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“Lying?”

The older man chuckled.

“A couple of days ago you declared in public that you’re not having an affair with Superman but now you asking about the Princess because she clearly fancies him.”

Bruce shook his face.

“It has nothing to do with Superman” Queen nodded snidely. “I was just curious: she said that she took you to Themyscira to heal your wounds.”

“Exactly” he replied nonchalant sipping more from his coffee.

“You saw the island?”

Oliver’s smile was huge.

“Of course, Bruce – I stayed months there: she found me almost dead. Weren’t for her I’d be dead now. I strolled this island a lot and I was mesmerized by its mountains – Hera’s mountain, Aphrodite’s lake, Are’s canyon, Hephaestus’ caves. It’s like heaven: crystal waters running in streaks and waterfalls from the guts of the mountains; thick forests where birds song obliterate anything else. But what shadows every other thing are the Amazons” his eyes closed in nostalgia. “The most beautiful women sparring with their perfect bodies half naked – and among them a real gem, their Princess.”

Bruce’s heart fell: he hoped that Queen hadn’t seen the island or the Amazons. That he was kept blindfolded in a building. But he had witnessed everything. He pressed his lips: unless he was fooled as well?

Oliver tilted his head on the side perusing the face of the younger man, a sly grin forming. He leaned forward intertwining his fingers on the table.

“I know she isn’t the easiest person; she is arrogant and her politeness is only for those she considers equals. And definitely she doesn’t persuade for a philanthropist. But she saved me and since she brought me back, Diana helps people every day. She is good but she doesn’t like to show it to everyone. She is strict because that’s her role: she trained her sisters in Themyscira to defend themselves. Amazons aren’t many and they must be perfectly trained: Diana can’t manifest softness because then her warriors won’t be tougher than men: her people wouldn’t have survived thousands of years.”

Queen’s eyes stayed fixed on Bruce’s and to avoid his peruse he began eating his cake indifferent.

“Talk to me more about their temples, their buildings, their outfits” he said to the older man hoping to detect things unmatched with the legends.

Oliver squinted.

“Hm…That demands of a second meeting for dinner” he said slyly. “Perhaps in Gotham?”

Bruce was ready to reply when his Cosmos smartphone rang from his pocket and Queen huffed but then reflected Bruce’s frown.

“Mr. Collins, I’ll call you as soon as I land to meet me there.”

Bruce ended the dial and opened his wallet hastily – his eyes were dark and his face pale. Oliver cupped Bruce’s hand when he put the money on the table.

“Please, it’s on me….” his eyes lost their smugness to honest concern. “Is everything alright?” he asked warmly.

Bruce looked at him but not in the eyes.

“I must return to Gotham immediately.”
Clark rushed to the office’s entrance along with most of his colleagues acting eagerness to welcome the newcomers; even Perry White came out of his office and his journalists opened up to give him a path.

Lois Lane marched to them unscathed but for some superficial scratches accompanied by Jimmie Olsen who unlike her seemed a bit shaken: Jimmie was too young and less experienced in tough situations. Yet the youth didn’t have an obvious injury apart from some bruises, disheveled hair and dazed eyes: Clark could tell that Jimmie was still shocked from the things he experienced under the fear toxin despite the fact that the antidote forbade the toxin from causing any long lasting side effect.

Clark patted the shoulder of the youth who was totally neglected by the others their attention on Lois. He smiled affectionate to him and the boy reflected the smile encouraged.

“Everything will be fine, Jimmie; you’re the best, buddy…”

The youth nodded, gratitude filling his eyes.

“They took the guests immediately to several hospitals in New York to make sure that there wasn’t any residual damage from the toxin and the…” Lois rolled her eyes recalling “ruckus. But the antidote was perfect and I was perfectly fine and I told them so but they grabbed me and put me in an ambulance though I kicked them hard” she was ranting, still pissed.

Perry laughed in his dry way.

“Probably that convinced them that you were still under the toxin’s influence.”

Lois clutched her waist with both hands, lolled her head on the side and snorted.

“I lost precious time of reportage!” she huffed and her colleagues chuckled – leave it to Lois to put the reportage over her wellbeing.

Perry patted her back patronizingly.

“Both of you are safe and sound and that’s what counts; after all, your reports, the video from Rogers tackling the ready to attack security staff stopping the bloodshed, and Jimmie’s photos were great – not to mention your exclusive video from Wayne dumbfounding Wonder Woman: you can’t imagine how many hits we get” he nodded.

“Yes, I do” she replied.

“And I’m sure that while in hospital you did some field work” he winked. “Which I expect to see very soon in an article, since yourself said that you’re alright.”

He turned his back to a huffing Lois who had crossed her arms over the chest.

“Jerk…” she spat in a low tone and Perry who had crossed the half distance to his office turned grinning.

“I know you love me, honey…”

As their colleagues dispersed after welcoming Lois back, the young woman strode to her desk ignoring pointedly Clark who followed her twisting his lips.
“I’m glad you’re alright” he said after she settled in her chair and Lois glared at him.

“You knew that already from last night” she whispered and then tilted her head arching her eyebrows. “Oh!” she exclaimed dramatically. “I forgot you were too engrossed in the Amazon to care about your friends…” she lowered more her voice “or your boyfriend.”

Clark sat carefully on her desk and rolled his eyes.

“Not a scene from you as well…!”

Lois chewed the tip of her pen and her eyes flashed.

“Don’t tell me that Bruce finally gave you hell for your behavior?” the glee dripped from her voice that came distorted from the pen in her mouth.

Clark crooked his mouth irritated.

“I should have made a scene – and actually I did” Lois batted her eyelids interested. “Captain America was carrying Bruce in his arms – bridal style! – and Thor muffled him in his cape!” he had to put an effort to not raise his voice – his sense of being treated unfair boiling.

But Lois’ eyes bulged thrilled and slapped her desk making her nearest colleagues look surprised at her.

“I’m gonna sue New York police! I should be there taking pictures! It’d be the exclusive of the year!” she narrowed her eyes which had the sparkle that told Clark that she had something on her mind. “Is there a way to use your eidetic memory to print images?”

Clark closed his eyes shaking his head exasperated.

“I come without provision for connectivity with printers…” he remarked snidely.

But Lois crossed her arms over the chest and casted a lopsided glance at her friend.

“I know a place where I could put that plug…” she said slyly with a gleeful shine in her eyes and Clark blushed. “You seriously made a scene to Bruce?” her voice became dead serious and scolding. “He is a paraplegic, Clark: without his chair he must rely to someone to carry him – also, despite the fact the snowfall stopped rather quickly at New York, it was freezing cold last night so Thor – gallantly – protected him with his cape. You see, you were too preoccupied to do any of that…”

Clark ran a hand through his hair thinking hard. Lois smirked.

“It seems that our Prince has a talent in attracting superheroes…Though some of them” her voice pointed at him “don’t appreciate what they have.”

“C’mon, Lois…” he huffed. “That night was a mess with all these toxins…I was affected” Lois smirked in disbelief.

“Thor was affected by the same toxins…” she snorted and Clark huffed.

“And Bruce the entire night was exchanging compliments with the Avengers and had people goggling at him so he didn’t have any right to ask me to shove away Diana.”

Lois frowned – that info was new.

“Wow!” she exclaimed though in a low tone to not cause stares. “Finally, the kid learnt some things…” Clark yanked his head backwards. “And you, buster, know very well that Bruce was just polite with Stark’s teammates: what did you expect? To insult them as your…” she arched her eyebrows sarcastic “Diana did with him? And Bruce doesn’t give a damn about other people goggling at him; that’s why he got isolated at the balcony – for which I’m very glad because I wouldn’t want the poor thing being attacked by that nutcase, especially when you don’t give a damn about him.”

Clark pinched the bridge of his nose and frowned.

“I do care for Bruce and though Diana is a friend and I care for her too, Bruce is the one I love. I don’t want to lose him.”

Lois nodded.

“Then prove it. Because you may see the Amazon as a friend but it’s clear that she wants more…”

Clark shook his head and licked his lips.

“No, she doesn’t – she told me.”

Lois lolled her head at him with her gaze shouting ‘bitch please!’

“You’re sooooo idiot?” she shook her head exasperated “what am I asking now?” she told to herself twitching her fingers in the air. “Of course, she’d tell you that to not be the bitch who separates a couple but she continues working just that.”

She locked eyes with him.

“If you don’t want to lose Bruce you have to do this. You have to choose between the Amazon and him – you can’t honestly expect to continue playing Bruce like a fool – we both know that the boy is very clever” she blinked “despite the fact he fell for you…”

Clark cackled mocking.

“Very funny…”

Lois tapped her fingers at the desk and looked him solemnly in the eyes.

“If you lose Bruce because of your attitude it won’t be any funny… Think carefully, Smallville…”

Clark pressed his lips recalling the way he had spoken to Bruce last night…He was so harsh on him and Bruce didn’t deserve that…even if his arguments were laughable: it’d have been more decent if Bruce had admitted that he was jealous than making up all these. Yet Clark had taken his decision.

“You realize that you’re pushing me away?”

Bruce’s calm voice told him again and he saw Rogers, Thor and a shadow figure that was the unknown stranger of last night circling Bruce – if he let Bruce leave they would have their chance… and Clark couldn’t tolerate even the thought of their hands touching Bruce’s naked body – this beautiful body was only his and would remain that way.

The soft, almost imperceptible humming of the engines lulled Bruce in and out of dozing off with his eyes fixed on the gray, crying clouds outside the strip window that covered the wall’s center throughout its length. The cup at the white oval table in front of him was half with coffee; he asked for a second coffee though he wasn’t a fan hoping that this would help him fight back his fatigue that weighted down his bones.

He could have lain down at the comfy bed of bedroom on the backside but he doubted if his agitation would let him sleep even for a few minutes, much more throughout the journey to Gotham. But he settled for stretching his body in the big, white colored armchair, the blue pillows increasing his comfort.

Oliver Queen had offered to fly him to Gotham with his private jet but Bruce refused politely to the man’s half grin and arching eyebrows.

“I understand…After the unfortunate incident in Luthor’s suit, you don’t want to be isolated with a stranger…” he pressed his lips nodding. “I don’t blame you… But maybe, in due time, I’ll manage to earn your trust.”

Bruce could have rent or bought a jet but doing so he would increase the gap between him and Tony after the morning exchange and he didn’t want to solidify coldness in their friendship. Tony was one of his life’s pillars and didn’t want anything to ruin their relationship. Misunderstandings must be quickly dissolved.

He could discern Tony’s initial surprise and then joy receiving his call.

“I hope I don’t interrupt anything, Tony.”

He could imagine his friend running his hand in his messy by now hair but Tony’s relief was clear in his voice.

“Are you kidding? Nothing is more important that you, little guy…Everything alright? You left…” because of me – Bruce could hear his guilt “and it’s freezing cold today.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Not inside your car…” Tony laughed but Bruce was in a hurry. “Umm…Tony, I need to get to Gotham ASAP.”

“What’s the matter? You make me worry – you want me to come with you?”

“No, Tony; you have already too much to cope and there’s no need to worry, I’ll tell you later; but I need to leave right now.”

“Okay” Tony sensing the urgency didn’t insist. “Happy will be at the private airport in ten minutes – he’ll arrange everything to leave at once. Is Alfred with you?”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

“No: he packs our things and I don’t have the luxury of waiting. I called him to not worry.”

Tony made an affirmative sound.

“Leave the car to the airport’s parking and I’ll arrange its transport home.”

“Thank you, Tony!”

Tony sighed.

“No, I thank you, Bruce for speaking to me again after what I say in the morning.”
Bruce chuckled though his mood was really bad.

“I don’t have another friend with a private jet…”

Tony laughed: as if Bruce couldn’t rent or buy a jet…

“Thank Goodness then I’m a filthy rich bastard, huh? Have a great trip, buddy and try to get some rest – you didn’t sleep much last night…”

“I’ll try, Tony; hold on, buddy…”

The double door opened and Tony strode inside the conference room ending the call with Happy Hogan. He threw casually his StarkStell in his jacket pocket and looked at Pepper who had taken his seat at the head of the table working on her tablet. Fury – predictably – wasn’t there waiting.

Tony trotted to Pepper, leaned and kissed her cheek.

“You’re attempting a take-over against me?” he asked seriously locking eyes with her.

“I’m glad your mood is better…” she muttered indifferently continuing her work. “I prepare your press conference.”

Tony dived on the next chair and tied his hands behind his neck. He sighed.

“I told Bruce off because he is so indulgent with Superman and…in the end Bruce is doing the same with me. And I’m very happy for it!” he frowned “that makes me a hypocrite, huh?”

Pepper lifted her eyes looking disapproving at him.

“And a scum…”

Tony pursed his lips and nodded.

“Thanks!”

Pepper shrugged.

“Don’t mention it…” she kept looking at him expecting. “Well?”

Tony yanked his head backwards and sighed.

“He called me saying that he needed to return to Gotham” he cocked his eyebrows. “He could easily find another way to do it but he just wanted to show me that he wasn’t angry at me…”

“While he should” Pepper spat.

Tony ran his hands through his hair.

“Yeah, I’m so lucky…”

“I’m looking now at Gotham’s news outlets for anything that could cause Bruce’s haste but other than Arkham’s last night escape there’s nothing.”

Tony nodded.
“I searched too and we knew about the escape from last night so this wasn’t the reason for Bruce’s departure.”

“Something personal then.”

Tony sat upright.

“He’d have told me.”

Pepper shrugged.

“Maybe he couldn’t right now…”

The door opened revealing Fury’s imposing form.

“Tony, have a moment?”

“Sure. Anything for my favorite baldy.”

Tony gathered himself and stood following Fury outside leaving Pepper to resume her work.

Mr. Collins was a man at his sixties with white hair and wise brown eyes; average at height and weight he didn’t give the impression of one of the best lawyers in US and the head of Wayne Enterprises’ legal department.

He leaned back at his dark blue car’s hood and with arms crossed watched Stark’s private jet landing at the airstrip of Wayne Enterprises’ small private airport. The premises belonged to Thomas Wayne and then fell into Falcone’s hands along with everything else but now the platinum ‘W’ welcomed passengers in the front and jets in the five hangars. At the moment, the small airport hosted jets of other owners because Bruce Wayne didn’t want to spend yet a large amount of money to buy his own plane after he sold Falcone’s: the youth believed that the company’s priorities lay elsewhere.

Mr. Collins had parked his car in the hangar that was permanently given to Tony Stark. He stretched his posture watching the wonder that was Stark’s unique jet entering; his machines were almost soundless in comparison with other crafts but what caught the eye was the curvy cabin part that ended up with a sharp decline to the cockpit that reminded of a shark’s snout – however the cockpit’s dark to the exterior big windows reminded the proud glare of an eagle.

In a few minutes, the door opened and the crew helped Bruce descent the ramp with his chair. The young billionaire thanked the crew by handshake, wished them a nice trip back and headed to Mr. Collins that he had noticed as soon as the door opened.

“Good morning, Mr. Wayne” the man hastened to meet him and shook hands with his employer.

Bruce smiled.

“Good morning, Mr. Collins; I see it’s a very cold day in Gotham too… Thankfully, Tony’s jet isn’t thwarted by elements! You didn’t have to come; I could take a cub.”

Mr. Collins chuckled.

“That would be a disgrace, Mr. Wayne, leaving our president take a cub when Wayne Enterprises have so many cars.”
They moved to the car and Mr. Collins kept the passenger’s door open for Bruce to slip there from his wheelchair; Bruce pressed the option in the control screen at the armrest and the chair folded for Mr. Collins to place it to the trunk.

“Thank you, Mr. Collins” Bruce said to him when he sat at the driver seat.

Collins smiled warmly.

“You’re welcome, Mr. Wayne.”

It was indeed a very grim day even for Gotham’s standards and the gray streets seemed grayer under the cloudy sky and the constant soaking of the rain – it wasn’t a heavy rain; raindrops fell scarcely with a steady rhythm but they were frozen drenching to the bone those pedestrians who didn’t carry umbrellas. Hurried footsteps crushed the small puddles on the cement and the water splashed around.

Bruce loved the rain and the way it hued Gotham’s imposing buildings and gloomy streets – the way the water dampened the sharp lights of the city. He had the impression that the water from the sky cleaned the grim city from filth and sins…exactly as he wished the rain could do to his soul and mind. His mind was calculating his options and his plans as the wipers danced up and down to push away the drops.

Mr. Collins parked the car in front of a modest height building with stern rectangular lines; it was a public building and people were coming in and out constantly from the main entrance.

“Everything is under control, Mr. Wayne” Collins reassured his employer seeing his agitation.

Bruce nodded.

They entered the building; Bruce from the side ramp and Mr. Collins holding his brown leather briefcase from the small cement staircase. The veteran lawyer didn’t need to ask at the information desk; he gestured to the small elevator that barely contained Bruce’s chair – which was a really slim chair in comparison with the common wheelchairs. Obviously, the building was very old without any renovation to cover the modern needs – even the external ramp was constructed really recently.

The department they wanted was at the second floor; a small square gray label read ‘Social Service’ with black capital letters. Bruce’s heart skipped some beats and Mr. Collins patted his back and led the way.

There were many offices with shut doors forbidding indiscreet stares since the services referred to sensitive cases. Yet Mr. Collins knew where to go and knocked confidently the door.

A young woman around her thirties sat behind an old, small, simple wooden desk with a PC screen on her right. She was speaking to a shaken boy who was clenching the armrests of the metallic chair in front of the desk. At the second chair, another woman a bit older was watching the exchange.

The boy shook his head stubbornly denying; his sweet cheeks were flushed.

“It can’t be…She took me to school a couple of hours ago…she can’t…”

The social worker inhaled deeply.

“Police found your grandmother’s car abandoned but no trace of her, Richard” her voice was cracked with real concern. “You understand that you can’t stay by yourself so you’ll be housed temporarily at the ‘Thomas and Martha Wayne Haven’ – which is a very warm and wonderful place - till either your grandmother is found and returns or…” she hesitated to continue.
The boy’s eyes widened and he gasped.

“She is not dead!” he ground his teeth and the social worker nodded pressing her lips in a reassuring smile.

The social worker finally acknowledged Collins and Bruce but before she addressed them the door opened without a warning knock. Bruce was looking at Richard who in his distress hadn’t noticed him but then he eyed frowned the newcomer.

“He isn’t going to any orphanage, I’m his uncle – he’ll come with me” Tony Zucco said and Dick’s eyes sparkled hopefully meeting his uncle’s form.

But this relieved sparkling became angry when he finally saw Bruce. The boy jerked upright, puzzled by Wayne’s presence but hiding it under his ire.

“What are you doing here?! It’s not enough you saw me burying my family? You’re an evil demon! Get out of here!”

“Dick…” the second woman who was his school’s social worker held the boy’s upper arms. “Calm down, dear.”

Bruce felt a stab in his chest and the curious stares on him after the boy’s reaction increased his uneasiness – but he was determined to not retreat.

Zucco approached Dick and ruffled his hair.

“Do not worry, Dick. You won’t have to see him again” he casted a snide sideways glance at Bruce.

He turned to the social worker who was still baffled from the boy’s angry reaction to Bruce.

“As I said, I’m the boy’s uncle – his only relative. I’ll take Dick with me” he gave his ID to the social worker who perused it.

She fixed her glasses.

“You have to fill some papers and bring some documents; you can take Dick with you and then the court will decide about his guardianship.”

Bruce stiffened but Collins squeezed his shoulder.

“Mr. Grayson won’t go with Mr. Zucco” the lawyer said calmly.

Zucco jerked his head at him unpleasantly surprised with his eyes narrowed in a threatening expression.

“Why?” he demanded.

Bruce straightened his head.

“Because I’m his guardian.”

Mr. Collins after forty years practicing law he had countless connections in every public service and people respected and trusted him that he wouldn’t make ill use of inside information. So when Mr. Wayne called him a Sunday afternoon asking him information about the procedure for becoming a kid’s guardian and the following morning came to his office to give him more details, Collins informed his contacts to let him know if anything important happened concerning Ms. Turner or Richard Grayson.

Upon being informed that Ms. Turner’s car was found abandoned at the outskirts of Gotham, he immediately called his employer and the social service’s director.

“No way!” Dick snarled at Bruce.

But Mr. Collins walked to the social worker’s desk, laid his briefcase on the desk, opened it and gave some documents to the woman under Zucco’s frown that Bruce knew that covered barely restrained wrath.

Bruce watched the social worker reading the documents and realized that everyone in the room did the same. Dick was clutching his cheeks and Bruce felt really bad he caused such turmoil to the boy.

“Well, Ms. Jhonas?” Collins asked her using the name of the golden plate on her desk.

She took off her glasses.

“The documents are completely legitimate” she nodded. “Indeed, Mr. Bruce Wayne was given the guardianship of Richard Grayson by Ms. Melanie F. Turner, his grandmother. So, Richard should go with Mr. Wayne.”

Dick’s eyes flashed angrily and he clenched his fists.

“I prefer the orphanage!” he growled, glaring at Bruce.

Bruce moved closer.

“Richard, please” he said calmly “I assure you that everything is going to be fine.”

But the kid gritted his teeth and clenched his uncle’s waist; Zucco caressed his hair.

“Don’t talk to me! Because of you I lost my family and now my granny! I won’t go with him!”

Mr. Collins met Bruce’s tired eyes and the younger man raised his hand in a waiting gesture.

“It is what your grandmother wanted, Dick” the social worker from Dick’s school said softly. “We must respect her wishes. She wanted the best for you.”

“I’ll stay with Tony! Granny was wrong! I won’t go anywhere with Wayne!”

But Zucco cupped the boy’s face with both hands and looked him in the eyes.

“It’s alright, champ – go with him for the time being: it won’t be for long. I won’t let him keep you” he smiled to the boy and Dick pursed his lips determined nodding reassured.

“I’m listening” Tony said to Fury as soon as the door to his office closed behind him automatically.

The panoramic view of New York’s skyline from the whole wall windows behind Tony’s back indicated that weather’s sullenness wasn’t going to subside soon.

Fury raised his eyebrows, his face as serious as ever.

“I think it’s high time we recruited Batman.”
Tony pouted and widened his eyes flabbergasted.

“You’ve schmoozed with him?” he mumbled.

Fury smirked, his eyes regarding Tony estimating.

“Says the man who had the Bat at his party.”

Tony understood where Fury was taking it but lifted a shoulder and lolled his head looking lopsided at the veteran.

“I had many party animals at my party but not a real animal…or a dressed up one.”

Fury chuckled showing off his pearly white teeth.

“C’mon, Tony, I think we understand each other… The Bat saved the day last night” Tony rolled his eyes. “You’re a good director after all: you took care to secure a contingency plan in case our safety measures failed.”

Tony nodded.

“Of course! I created a fucking genius AI: Jarvis.”

Fury shook his head.

“Jarvis just executed: a strategic genius was guiding him. And we know that this strategist is your friend, Bruce Wayne” he decided to stop Stark’s avoidance game.

Tony huffed and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“That again…I thought you were cured from your obsession…I know a super therapist who specializes in compulsive preoccupation. Of course, there’s always Arkham Asylum as a contingency…”

He sank in his ergonomic chair behind the desk and tied his hands behind his neck, crossing loosely his legs.

“And you wanted to see me just for this?”

Fury crooked his mouth and sat at the comfy armchair in front of Tony’s desk.

“Till now Wayne had every reason for not wanting to join Avengers – his hunch proved right and I clap him for his insight to see through S.H.I.E.L.D. But now the League of Shadows is exterminated and S.H.I.E.L.D. sanitized.”

Tony stared at him keeping his fingers intertwined in front of his face. His eyes intense but unreadable and his lips pursed. Fury leaned forwards.

“His best friend is the director” he widened his eyes stressing his words. “He trusts you so he shouldn’t have any objection to join the organization you lead” he shook his head “He does trust you, right? He doesn’t have any reason to believe that your motives are shady or anything different than fighting injustice. So why not accepting to join us?”

Tony uncrossed his legs and leaned forwards as well.

“Maybe because Batman isn’t my friend and as a matter of fact he doesn’t trust me or any other person?”

Fury leaned back in his chair huffing.

“We both know that Bruce Wayne is Batman; he proved it last night!”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“You do realize that you’re speaking about a man confined in a chair? The same time that Batman soars Gotham’s sky every night; even last night, some reported that saw him...in Gotham.”

Fury cocked an eyebrow.

“I know you could have found a way to make Batman patrol Gotham while he is disabled. Bruce is a master of deception and you as well as Mr. Fox master inventions” he blinked and shook his head. “I don’t care about revealing Batman’s identity; I’m just thrilled from the prospects of him joining us. Imagine it yourself: the man who defeated the League of Shadows twice, the first time while being their slave, channeling his genius in our cause.”

Tony who till then was watching almost avidly cocked an eyebrow and tapped his fingers on the glistening silver surface.

“Was Batman League’s slave?” he squinted. “How you came up with this? AND my genius is more than enough for S.H.I.E.L.D. We don’t need such darkness in our team.”

Fury lolled his head on the side and watched him squinting.

“You consider me inadequate for my position?” Tony asked him lifting his chin.

“Not at all; I just believe that you’d like your friend being safe in a legitimate organization instead of being a wanted vigilante facing not only villains’ bullets but also those of the cops. And we both know that Batman can really offer to the Avengers...Not to mention that Batman joining the Avengers will elevate S.H.I.E.L.D.’s and Avengers’ prestige – you know that although a vigilante he is a legend.”

“As every Avenger... For one last time: I don’t know who Batman is and I don’t give a damn. My priority is helping Bruce walk again. Now I have an important Press Conference to prepare and I suggest you look thoroughly the re-arrangements of our sectors’ security.”

Fury stood up and saluted Tony military style with a slightly ironic smile.

“Aye, aye, sir...” he narrowed his eye. “Think what I told you.”

Tony under furrowed eyebrows watched him leaving. He wouldn’t ever push Bruce join his team even if S.H.I.E.L.D.’s own survival depended on that.

It was late afternoon and Bruce was in his father’s study for a couple of hours when Alfred knocked.

“You have a visitor, sir.”

Bruce frowned.

“I didn’t have any meeting arranged...” it was a Sunday afternoon after all.
“Indeed, Master Bruce; but I believe that you’ll definitely want to see this visitor.”

As his wheelchair slid from the elevator to the grand salon he could see the back of his visitor’s head slightly above the back of the black couch. Alfred was following in his butler posture.

Bruce learnt from his childhood to be observant so that back of head was enough for him to identify his visitor. He frowned.

“Ms. Turner, how nice to see you!” he said as soon as they faced each other.

The old lady shook Bruce’s offered hand. He could detect her agitation and distress.

“Mr. Wayne…” she inhaled deeply “Bruce” she remembered his old request and Bruce nodded.

“I’m sorry I came without an appointment…” she upturned her hand in hopelessness “or a call…”

Bruce waved her worries off.

Ms. Turner touched her cheek but seemed unwilling to start talking so Alfred having already served tea to the old lady made his excuses to let them speak alone and Bruce met his butler’s eyes communicating his thanks.

“Well?” he asked softly.

Ms. Turner pressed her lips.

“Bruce, you’re a great young man and I know how much you love Dick…”

Bruce nodded without saying anything to let her to continue. Ms. Turner seemed hesitant but then as if something nudged her she licked her lips and gathered her courage.

“I’d like to ask you” Bruce was watching her face’s twitches that cried her agony. “If of course you want…to be Dick’s guardian” she exhaled.

Bruce was shocked: he never expected to hear that. The woman took in his astonishment.

“I know, sweetie…You’re too young…more like Dick’s big brother…and you have too responsibilities already and problems of your own…”

Despite being surprised he could tell that the old lady was too upset and disheartened so he approached her and smiled at her.

“Please, calm down, Ms. Turner: drink some tea.”

She reflected his smile and cupped his hand on his chair’s black leather armrest.

“You have a golden heart, dear” she lowered her eyes. “And I’m taking advantage of that…”

Bruce shook his head in denial.

“No, you’re not: it is an honor that you trust me with that yet Dick hates me…” his sadness was clear.

Ms. Turner took the blue royal porcelain cup and sipped from her tea.
“He is still young and grief stricken…he’ll understand that our family’s murder wasn’t your fault and he’ll realize the great man you are.”

Bruce brushed his chair’s armrests.

“Ms. Turner, what’s going on? I assure you that your trust is flattering” he smiled “though I have to admit that the thought of being a child’s guardian it is overwhelming too. Yet I know that something distresses you: at the Thanksgiving party, you almost fainted…” he leaned forwards and met her eyes. “Ms. Turner, I know it is indiscretion, but is something threatening your health? Because my company develops some really miraculous drugs.”

“You’re not indiscreet, sweetheart. And no, Bruce, I’m not ill.”

He inhaled with relief yet his puzzlement was now bigger.

“Then?”

She ran a hand through her short curly gray hair and sighed.

“There’s a man…Tony Zucco.” Bruce knew the man but didn’t make a move to show his knowledge “He is Dick’s uncle – John’s cousin. He never saw Dick from his birth and now he came back at Gotham and approached the boy befriending him.”

She stopped to catch her breath and took another sip from her tea, Bruce refilling the cup.

“Thank you, dear. Well, this man is anything but good and I don’t want him near Dick but the poor boy is quite fond of him since Zucco was – he pretended to be – his father’s best friend. But actually he hurt John; Zucco was also his trainer and at some point John was found drugged with illegal substances… and John didn’t do it. Someone slipped the drugs in his drink and the only one who could do this was Zucco… It was when John’s career had declined and he had some major failures; he was unhappy and Zucco tampered with his drinks so that John wins some championships and signs new contracts. You see, John had listened to Zucco and made some very bad investments losing almost all his money.”

Bruce shook his head: at the same time Zucco’s investments gave him loads of money.

“Zucco was a good friend only when John was working for major advertising companies and had money to spend and trust to his cousin for investment… After the doping scandal, John hired again his old trainer and he was ready to fire Zucco – his only fault was that he kept him to his training team… John died in an accident during his training when Mary was pregnant.”

“You believe that Zucco caused the accident?”

Ms. Turner rubbed her palms together and locked eyes with Bruce.

“Nothing was ever proved: neither for the doping nor for John’s death” she gulped “but I know he is an evil man and…” he upturned her eyes inhaling. “I don’t want – if something happens to me – I don’t want Dick in his hands” her eyes met Bruce’s and his guts clenched from the despair and agony he saw there. “He never cared for the boy and I’m sure that he came back now because he sniffs money… he admitted to me.”

Bruce took her hands in his.

“You’ll live many years more, Ms. Turner and you’ll be very proud for all the medals and the championships Dick is going to win” the old lady beamed, tears slithering her wrinkled cheeks.
“But if you insist, I’ll gladly accept Dick’s guardianship –” he grinned shyly. “Though I don’t feel competent for… the job.”

Ms. Turner smiled and hugged Bruce.

“Believe me, honey: no parent feels competent for this… job. And if someone feels overconfident, then he/she probably won’t be a good parent... And you’ll be a great guardian and father, Bruce… With you I’m sure that Dick will be safe and happy… I can be calm that Zucco won’t harm him as he did with his father…”

Bruce clenched his teeth.

“I won’t let Zucco hurt Dick, Ms. Turner – I promise…”

Bruce ran his hands through his hair watching behind the wipers’ up – down movement a bunch of boys of various ages that were chatting and smoking in a shadowy alley at the Narrows. School had ended for the day and those little swaggers were enjoying their freedom – of course Bruce didn’t know if all of them attended school though the Haven’s project ‘Back to School’ had managed to bring back on class a spectacular percentage of the Narrow’s kids.

He had parked his car at the road side opposite the alley’s opening and waited; he had located the bike he wanted and stayed a few feet behind.

Bruce had called Leslie to the social service to drive him and Dick at the Manor because Mr. Collins had to stay there to settle the formalities. The doctor stayed with the boy at the Manor since Alfred hadn’t arrived yet and Bruce took the red Renault Clio which was adjusted to his impairment. After the League attacked the Lancia to grab Alfred they bought this car to replace the Lancia for their needs in being undetected.

A kid no more than 11 walked out of the alley throwing his half cigarette to the wet cement and ran to his bike.

Bruce turned on the engine and slowly approached the boy who frowned at the car that stopped some inches from him. That part of the Narrows was still underdeveloped with hardly any traffic and the shining, clearly brand new car was an odd spectacle. Not to mention that, even though Wayne had made Narrows safer perverts still lurked to make their move. But, hey, he wasn’t a victim.

The boy saw the dark window from the driver’s side lowering and then his eyes widened. It was that Wayne guy – he remembered him from TV and the party.

Bruce smiled.

“Hey, Jason.”

The boy crossed his arms over the chest and took a badass posture that made Bruce’s demolished mood lighten.

“My mother told me not to talk with strangers…” he cocked his eyebrows.

Bruce nodded.

“Ms. Todd was right. I’m Bruce Wayne” he offered his hand for a handshake and Jason took it. “We’ve met at the Thanksgiving party in the Haven – I don’t know if you remember me” the kid didn’t answer.
“And?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I’m here for Richard” Jason seemed not understanding and Bruce hurried to add “your friend, Dick. His grandmother has disappeared” Jason gaped obviously shaken by the news. “And he’ll stay with me till Ms. Turner is found” Jason’s eyebrows reached the roots of his wet, raven hair. “Ms. Turner made me his guardian.”

The boy snorted.

“Oh, boy!” he knew Dick’s hatred for Wayne. “I’m sure he isn’t too excited…”

Bruce shook his head.

“You betcha… The think is that Dick is distressed and I can’t help him so I thought that he’d want his best friend with him – you.”

Jason lollled his head on the side and eyed him.

“So if you want to come to the Manor to do him some company, I’d be grateful.”

The boy arched his eyebrows and pointed his index finger to his chest.

“To me?”

Bruce nodded.

“Sure…but my mom…”

“I spoke with Ms. Todd and if you want you can stay as much as you want – tomorrow it is Saturday so you can stay for the night” he offered him his smartphone. “You can call her to confirm that” Bruce remembered that day in front of the schoolyard when Chill and Earl tricked him to enter the car; how desperately he tried to reach someone he trusted to confirm that it was safe and how his failure to do that led to disaster.

But Jason didn’t take it.

“I trust ya, dude” he said pompous.

Bruce pressed a button and the passenger’s door opened yet the boy shook his head.

“I’ll come with my bike – lead the road!” he ordered and Bruce chuckled and obeyed.

Bruce parked the car in the enormous underground parking of the Manor and Jason goggled at the Ducati Monster motorcycle completely ignoring the cars; he rushed there and brushed the beautiful bike while Bruce sat in his wheelchair and approached him smiling.

“My friend has a Harley Davidson – she loves bikes like you…Come.”

Leslie opened since Alfred wasn’t there and stared curious at the boy who accompanied Bruce. However she held the door wide open for them to come inside.

“This is Jason Todd, Leslie” Bruce introduced “Dick’s friend. Jason, this is Dr. Leslie Thompkins.”

“Nice to meet you, young man” she said and offered her hand.
“The same” Jason replied shaking her hand uncomfortable gaping impressed at the elegantly luxurious manor.

Bruce smiled.

“I’ll take you to Dick’s room” he said and made an inviting gesture.

Jason walked with Bruce to the elevator stumbling a bit from his unstoppable goggling at the stunning house. After his tenth stumble the boy stretched proudly his posture, coughed and pretended indifference.

Bruce opened the elevator door, let him enter first and then slithered his chair.

“It’s okay” he smiled to the boy “I mean, to be impressed…I was too when I first came here.”

Jason frowned.

“Impressed when you first came here?”

Bruce shrugged.

“For eighteen years I lived in a cave-like underground cage…”

The boy’s eyes filled with understanding and he nodded.

“Here we are” Bruce said as the elevator stopped and he touched the door that opened.

He led Jason in front of a thick, dark brown oaken door with carved squares and knocked.

“Go away!” Dick growled from inside and Jason chuckled meeting Bruce’s eyes.

“He is in a helluva mood, huh?” he gestured with his thumb inside smirking. “I feel for him: granny was really good…”

Bruce took in the use of ‘granny’ and understood that Jason loved the old lady. He nodded.

“Ms. Turner IS great” he arched his eyebrows. “She is missing not dead – I’d like you to remember that and remind it to Dick. I don’t want him to lose his hope.”

Jason shook his head.

“But…in Gotham?” in Gotham when someone disappeared then probably was as good as dead.

Bruce nodded.

“Even in Gotham” Jason pressed his lips. “Richard, Jason is here to see you” he gestured with his head to Jason to enter and smiled to the boy before leaving. “Thank you, Jason.”

The boy shrugged a shoulder.

“’S nothing” he replied and opened as Bruce steered his chair to the elevator.

Bruce stared at the cowl in his hands and his eyes became blank focusing on the empty eyes of the cowl that somehow gripped his soul that cried for salvation. So many things squeezed in his mind; in his soul…
He gazed at the cave and it seemed deserted, depressive…or maybe it was his own emotions. The freezing cold and the humidity were attacking him – the low humming of the processor accompanying his thoughts. Bats had fled away for hunting; he sighed wishing he could follow them as he was doing all these years even under Falcone’s slavery.

He eyed the individual pieces that constituted Batman’s armor; sitting on the wheelchair made them look so distant, unfamiliar…

“This man has alienated you! Joker took away your mobility and Superman your personality…”

No, they didn’t! He lowered the cowl to hug his head in familiar safety.

Alfred was watching a recorded coverage of Master Anthony’s press conference in the huge flat TV sat in an armchair at the Manor’s living room; Hero was rubbing at his legs and purred demanding his attention.

They had arrived a couple of hours ago and the first thing the butler did was to cook something. Now apart from his young master, in the Manor were housed two children – one of them was to stay since he was Master Bruce’s legal ward. He served them dinner at Master Richard’s room after the boy completely ignored his invitation to come down to the kitchen. The butler justified the boy’s rudeness, exactly as Master Bruce did – the poor boy suddenly learnt that his grandmother disappeared few months since he lost his family – he was left alone. Being at the house of his ‘enemy’ wasn’t the best addition to that…At least, Master Jason, Alfred chuckled, - if you could call that little rascal a master – was with him.

Alfred learnt about the guardianship as soon as he entered the Manor. Master Bruce informed him and Alfred answered with ‘very well, sir.” Actually, he was afraid that this was too much to be added to his young master’s already difficult situation yet he knew that he’d never let an orphan boy unprotected, especially since he promised to Master Grayson’s grandmother. But Alfred like everyone knew that the boy detested his master so the thing was even more complicated and his young master’s absence at ten in the night was indicative.

He sighed and tickled Hero’s belly since the kitten had rolled in his back and moved his paws in invitation. The solemn butler forgot his worry for a moment as the kitten stretched his paw to play with his finger.

Alfred jerked at the ring of the sat phone Master Anthony and Master Bruce had set to communicate without the fear of being watched.

“Good evening, Master Anthony.”

“Alfred, where is Bruce?” Tony’s voice was angry.

Alfred fixed his stare on the fireplace opposite him.

“I’m afraid I can’t answer that, sir.”

Tony huffed.

“Batman is out with the Tumbler, right? I set a transmitter in that tank and now is off – Bruce obviously realized and deactivated it. Iron Man is coming there right now to kick his ass back home! What was he thinking, Alfred??”
“Master Anthony, I’d suggest you don’t do that…He really needs that, sir and I’m certain that he won’t put himself in danger” he heard Tony’s sigh and rolling of eyes. “Let him have his outlet, Master Anthony. I assure you that he will be back in a couple of hours safe and sound so there’s no reason for you to neglect the important things that demand your attention.”

Batman had already stopped three robberies, one rape and two beatings. He didn’t come out of the Tumbler – he couldn’t: Lucius didn’t have his new armor ready. He used sedative darts to knock them out and the net launcher to incarcerate the assailants. Afterwards he notified the police to gather them.

He patrolled the Narrows and the docks in his car watching constantly the chats in hopes of learning anything about Crane or Joker but nothing. Of course if Loki was covering their tracks…

It felt nice being at the streets even though he couldn’t walk them or soar to the sky or fight.

Suddenly, his scan caught something descending right in front of him. He steered the Tumbler backwards because he didn’t want to encounter the newcomer.

“Stealth lead mode” he ordered and his stalker soon lost him.

Superman landed in the middle of the wet street and crossed his arms in the chest shaking his head in disbelief.

“You shouldn’t be in the streets, Bruce…” he mumbled inside his mouth so that only he could hear.

When the Tumbler stopped at the rock surface inside the cave, it felt like all the weight of the world fell again on Bruce’s chest. He summoned his wheelchair to wait next to the monstrous car and stripped to his gym pants and T-shirt that wore under the armor. Batman wouldn’t sit in that wheelchair.

But as soon as he slipped in his chair a wave of air rushed to him and he was elevated with the chair in the air.

“Put me down!” he demanded and pierced his ‘assailant’s’ eyes. “I can manage on my own.”

Clark’s blue topaz eyes stared at his face sad and he obeyed.

“I’m sorry…” he bit his lips “for everything” he twitched his eyebrows. “I said horrible things to you…I’m a scum. But believe me, Bruce, I love you and I don’t want to lose you.”

Bruce’s eyes sparkled but he was hesitant.

“And?” he could read that Clark wanted to say something else.

Clark licked his lips and squatted to be at Bruce’s level and locked eyes with him, sad for the coldness he saw in Bruce’s eyes.

“I won’t see Diana ever again’ I’ll stay away from her. Nothing would stand between us.”

“So…you believe me?” Bruce was uncertain if Clark meant what he said; after all the times things went so awry…
Clark lolled his head on the side.

“You want that and that’s what matters to me...I won’t let anything cast a shadow to what we have and upset you in your recovery” he leaned his face forward with his lips slightly parted waiting for an invitation.

Bruce seemed a bit hesitant at first but then decided to reward Clark for his determination and truth be said, he needed Clark’s kiss after everything. He closed his eyes and brought his lips to entangled Clark’s soon leading to a passionate kiss. The Man of Steel made to lift Bruce in his arms, hasty to take him to their bedroom but Bruce held his forearms.

“Clark, Richard Grayson and his friend are in the Manor so we must be careful.”

“I know; the Planet got some info but we didn’t publish it yet.”

So Clark left the cave to reach the bedroom flying and Bruce used the lift, scanning the corridor for any presence before exiting. He found Clark sitting at the armchair next to the window, already dressed in his pajamas.

The Man of Steel felt the urge to take Bruce in his hands but after every shit he had done to the younger man he felt he ought to not be pushing so he let Bruce get inside the bathroom to strip and shower calming his heartbeat as he imagined the water caressing Bruce’s bare body. Bruce’s defiance to get out and patrol Gotham as Batman worried but also aroused Clark – he knew that it was too dangerous for Bruce yet that feeling of danger made his body writhe and crave for the human.

Yet when Bruce came out of the bathroom dressed in his dark blue pajamas Clark’s arousal fell back because his worry covered everything else. As the younger man lay flat on his back at the silken sheets Clark looked at him reading clearer the signs of his exhaustion all over his body; his back must being aching.

“How can I take you?” he asked scratching his nape hesitant to speak about Bruce’s condition. “I swear I don’t have dirty things in mind” Bruce gave a smile. “I’ll only massage you – I can see that your back aches...” he said carefully because he knew that Bruce didn’t like to address pain issues.

Yet the younger man nodded.

“A bit...”

Clark helped Bruce turn on his stomach, rolled his pajama shirt off him and began rubbing the flesh softly almost like caressing extricating small moans from the man under him; moans that intensified when Clark planted small kisses all over his shoulder line. He was straddling Bruce’s pelvis but his knees were sunk in the mattress so that his body didn’t touch Bruce’s; Clark didn’t want to burden the exhausted body with even a grammar of his body.

He sucked Bruce’s earlobe.

“It was great being out there again, huh?” he whispered in his most husky voice; Clark felt for Bruce despite his agony for the man’s safety: it was months since he last patrolled his city – he last breathed the air of that city which for everyone else might be an evil witch but for Bruce was his love. He shared for a moment his mate’s agony at being away from her and from Batman and he smiled at the relief that this short escapee offered the man.

Bruce let his eyelids cover his stinging eyes and his cheek sink in the silk. He recalled the feeling of Batman’s armor against his skin – above the waist – the feeling of the cowl, the smell of the Tumbler’s interior. It was hope…

“Uhu…” it was the only affirmation he had the strength to give.

Clark leaned over Bruce’s face to see what he already knew: Bruce was asleep.
Chapter 34

Dick was pacing up and down on the same strip of velvet, dark blue with white designs carpet; his arms were crossed over the chest and his entire face tightened in a frown. He wore his pajamas: Dr. Thompkins had driven him and Wayne at his granny’s flat to grab some clothes; his granny had given Wayne a set of keys along with his guardianship…

Jason was sprawled at his side on the bed, supporting his head on his palm. It wasn’t a king size bed but even so it was much bigger than the children beds Jason and Dick had; light blue, matching the room’s painting with a mattress so soft and strong that Jason at first spent ten minutes trampolining. He, as well, wore one pair of Dick’s pajamas – they didn’t differ so much in height or weight. Jason yawned lulled by his friend endless pacing.

The hands of the round, black and white clock on the right wall showed 1:35. The old man who introduced himself as Alfred and insisted on calling them…’masters’ – Jason still chuckled every time he remembered that – came around ten o’clock. He had told ‘master Jason’ that he had prepared for him the guest room right next to ‘master Richard’s’ but the boy retorted that would sleep with his friend.

Alfred nodded courteously saying ‘as wish, sir’ and prepared the bed laying blankets so fluffy and thick that Jason cocked an eyebrow; then grandpa took the tray he had brought them dinner – since Dick was adamant about not going to the kitchen – and left wishing them ‘goodnight’, clearly relieved that at least both boys ate their food.

“Man, cut the pacing!” he exclaimed “I get giddy!”

Dick stopped at his heels and glared at him.

“Then stop watching me and open that TV on the wall!”

Jason rolled his eyes.

“I’m here for ya, man – not the damn TV…though that screen is the GOAT” he pouted at the flat, shining 40” screen over the rectangular built-in fireplace opposite the bed. “C’mon, pal, calm down…I’m sure yar granny is okay an’ they’ll find her an’ ya’ll return with her at yar home.”

“Do you honestly believe that?” he snapped at his friend, upset but with a tiny hope in his voice.

Jason scratched his head remembering Wayne’s words.

“Ms. Turner is missing not dead…I don’t want him to lose his hope.”

“If a scum had killed her cops would have found her now.”

“Then she abandoned me?”

Jason closed his eyes and jerked his head upwards huffing.

“Wouldna blame her…” he snorted and Dick ground his teeth because his friend was poking at him. “Ya know that she wouldna do that – something else happened, man. An’ she took care of ya even in her absence…”

Dick lolled his head at the side and snarled at him.
“Seriously now!”

“Ya’re safe her’, man” he stretched his arm at him. “She didna let them take ya to an orphanage – though I hear that the Haven is pretty cool…”

Dick finally slumped on the mattress.

“She put Wayne as my guardian!” he shook his head exasperated. “She hates me, Jay!”

Jason quirked a bit his lips on the use of present tense that indicated that his friend believed that his granny was alive. He gathered his limbs and kneeled on the mattress patting his friend’s back.

“She doesn’t hate ya, Dick, an’ ya know it. She trusts Wayne that he’d take care of ya if she was forced to leave…”

Dick shook his head.

“Tony can take care of me better than Wayne: he is my uncle, he loves me and I’m happy with him.
But she is biased against him and chose that spoiled brat over Tony.”

Jason raised his eyebrows.

“That Zucco guy is bad news, Dick; yar granny didna trust him an’ I agree…”

The older boy crossed stubbornly his arms and set his jaw.

“Speaks wisdom of life incarnated…” he jeered showing with his hand Jason’s small body although he was taller than most boys in his age.

Jason snorted.

“Ya call Wayne ‘a spoiled brat’ but actually, ya’re acting like one, man…Refusin’ to go down to eat an’ forcin’ the old man bringin’ ya food here…” he shook his head and gestured to the door at the left, next to the built-in white closet. “Thankfully, the bathroom is inside the room otherwise ya’d pull out yar willy and pee from the window…”

Dick gazed at the arch shaped balcony door which offered a spectacular view of the grounds from the window panes its white frames formed; the frozen raindrops that fell all day long had turned into thick, fluffy snowflakes that fell graciously on the perfectly groomed lawn, the bushes and the big, round light bulbs which emanated strong white light along the perimeter of the brown slated paths.

Alfred had closed the heavy light blue curtains for the boys to sleep but Jason had watched where the mechanism was and as soon as the butler was gone he climbed the wooden rectangular table and opened them again. He planned to get out from the balcony door to the Narrows…but the door was unbreakable.

“Definitely! If Wayne was underneath!” Dick snarled but hearing Jason chuckle, he couldn’t help but chuckle himself. “She didn’t tell me she made Wayne my guardian…” he said sober.

“Because she knew how woulda reacted – an’ ya’d have run to Zucco an’ tell everythin’ – which I bet they didna want.”

Jason hugged him.

“Everythin’ is gonna be fine, mate. Yar granny is okay an’ she’ll come back.”
Dick smiled at him and Jason yawned again.

“Let’s sleep now, pal – I cannot break outa this fortress to go to the Narrows so I’m sleepy…That fireplace an’ ya goin’ up an’ down lulled me.”

The older boy nodded.

“I’m sleepy too” he admitted. “Dr. Thompkins told me that she’d give me some mild sedative with my milk to help me sleep – it seems it took effect…”

Dick fell back on the soft mattress and Jayson made a spectacular dive causing his friend’s grin.

“It’s a good bed!” Jason exclaimed patting the cotton sheet.

“Not if you continue jumping like this…” he muffled both of them with the blankets Alfred had laid.

“I’m baffled ya drank the milk with the sedative.”

Dick stretched his arm and pressed the button over the soft headboard to turn off the lights leaving only the fireplace’s dancing flames illuminate the vast room.

“Granny wants me to sleep well…” he muttered staring at the balcony door; from its rectangular frames he could see snowflakes falling graciously. “How Wayne found you?”

Jason rolled his eyes and knocked Dick’s temple.

“Are ya connected with yar brain? He saw me with ya at the party an’ he knew that mom works for him; so he asked an’ found me – big deal!’’

Dick blinked and sighed.

“I feel I’m trapped with my worst enemy…”

Jason whistled and snorted.

“Cut the crap, Dicky! If someone’s trapped that’s Wayne – with ya!” he shook his head “an’ me, I guess…”

Dick chuckled and ruffled his friend’s messy hair.

Clark didn’t need sleep so he preferred watching awed and affectionate Bruce sleeping. A big smile was stretching his lips: it was the most beautiful image in the world – Bruce sleeping peacefully. An angel as the tranquility of sleep caressed the beautiful lines of his face: eyelids softly covering the orbs, silken, long eyelashes caressing sharp cheekbones, bangs falling carelessly over the forehead and the cheeks – rosy, velvet lips slightly parted as he inhaled and exhaled.

Superman felt the urge to trap these lips in his mouth and suck mercilessly…but he didn’t want to disturb his much needed rest.

Clark spooned Bruce having the younger man’s face in front of his, in a breath’s distance; his arm hugged Bruce’s broad shoulder, travelled his back to end on his waist – the other arm finishing his loop touching tenderly the younger man’s pelvis.

He held Bruce’s body tight because the day’s fatigue led to abnormal muscle tone and Clark massaged gently to relax the tension: last night’s events at the Tower, then only a few hours of restless sleep – thanks to Clark’s behavior -, then a flight to Gotham, running all day to take care of Dick Grayson and then patrolling… These could exhaust a healthy person; for a paraplegic still in recuperation could be devastating.

Clark sighed silently to not disturb Bruce and rubbed soothingly the back muscles that were trembling slightly from fatigue. Bruce was an extraordinary individual and wouldn’t let his body’s needs stop him from doing what he believed was his duty.

Sometimes, like now, Clark had the feeling that he was dealing with a child: innocence and power in one fascinating body. He leaned carefully and placed a tender kiss on Bruce’s temple.

A boy around eight years old, with brunette hair and dark blue eyes lay on the floor over a cheap carpet, at the right wall of a small, ordinary living room; the TV was still on, broadcasting a stupid show.

The boy’s eyes were left open but not watching the dull TV program: they were looking up, at nothing…two blue orbs crystallized in the terror of the imminent death and the unbearable pain. His small arm flexed on the floor in an odd angle was pierced by two bullets and his face was carved with two scars beginning from the corners of his lips to the middle of the cheeks, giving for an instance the ridiculous impression of a smile – lines of blood had dried as the two wounds had bled unstoppably. But it was a huge hole in the place where his heart was once beating that killed the boy.

Bruce could see where the boy’s eyes pointed – a message written in red, huge, capital letters – the paint leaking from the edge of each letter: “Kids must permaneeently smileeeee – Brucey, I’ll mak’ you smileeeeee!”

The paint wasn’t paint – Bruce could smell the peculiar, iron, horrific smell of blood. The message was written in Brian’s blood…

A tiny white casket was descending slowly to a freshly dug pit under Gotham’s gloomy gray sky that cried unstoppably; another boy similar in looks with Brian cried and shouted to his brother, storming at the casket to stop the descent…

Clark saw in the dark something glittering trapped between Bruce’s eyelashes: a tear that sparkled like diamond. And then the eyelashes began thrashing brushing the cheekbones – first, slowly but then fast till Bruce opened his eyes abruptly. Without a gasp as Clark expected after a nightmare: Bruce was calm though his heartbeat was elevated. Clark knew that his mate wasn’t afraid of the darkness but immediately turned on the night lamp on Bruce’s nightstand without letting go of his embrace.

Bruce stared at Clark’s face and brought his hand to rub his eye without moving from his enveloping arms.

“The boys…” he muttered worried and Clark caressed his messy hair.

“They are sleeping like angels. I hear their breaths – calm, restful, children’s sleep…” he whispered reassuringly, tenderly, understanding that Bruce has seen something about the boys.

Bruce gulped and nodded but made to disentangle from Clark’s safe nest.

“I must check on them” he said determined to Clark’s frown.

But Clark tightened a bit his one arm hug and with the other hand brushed Bruce’s cheek.
“Alfred did that ten minutes ago…”

Bruce closed his eyes and huffed.

“My good Alfred…”

Clark rubbed his back.

“Does he know that you skipped your midday medication?” he asked smoothly but mildly scolding at the same time.

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I guess Leslie told him… I didn’t do it on purpose but there were so many things to do that I couldn’t find the time to eat or take my medicines. It won’t happen again – Alfred knows that.”

Clark shook his head and stretched to the floor the arm that was over Bruce’s body. The younger man watched intrigued and finally Clark presented him with a white fur ball with a thick black ‘V’ on his lower back.

“Look who’s here!” Clark exclaimed and Bruce’s eyes sparkled; Hero jerked in Clark’s hand and he let him jump to not hurt the kitten.

Bruce caught Hero in the air and touched his lips on the animal’s head. Clark chuckled.

“He sneaked out of Alfred and came to your room” he said watching Bruce tickling the kitten and play with his ‘threatening’ paws.

“He couldn’t get inside…” Bruce remarked.

“No, but he was scratching the door…”

Bruce’s eyes bulged.

“If he clawed the door Alfred will be furious!”

Clark laughed.

“I think that Alfred took his measures because your bedroom’s door has a layer of something that protects the wood from lethal claws” he teased Hero’s paws and the animal chased his fingers. “Your friend wanted so much to see you that I brought him in…”

Bruce kissed Clark’s lips.

“Thank you!”

“I did nothing” he shrugged though he enjoyed the joy in Bruce’s eyes that for a change was caused by him – he cupped his face with both hands to gain his attention from Hero. “Promise me, Bruce, that you won’t do that again.”

Bruce looked at him puzzled.

“What?”

Clark shook his hand.
“All the package of those past 24 hours.”

Bruce touched his lips on Clark’s neck and he felt goose bumps throughout his body.

“Many of the things that happened weren’t my doing – I just reacted: Joker crashing the party…” he supported his body on his elbow and rose a bit without losing Clark’s arm from his back and waist. “We discussed it with Thor and there are clues that his brother, Loki, is working with Joker and Crane.”

Clark’s eyebrows became a line and his eidetic memory brought back Thor muffling Bruce with his cape.

“You met again with him after last night?”

“Yes, I had to go to 1 Police Plazza for my testimony and I was strolling a bit at Battery Park till my appointment – Thor was there too before getting to the Avengers’ Tower for their meeting. We discussed what happened” his eyes watched carefully Clark’s tense face.

The Man of Steel felt his heart pounding from ire but he knew he shouldn’t show anything, shouldn’t outburst. He licked his lips.

“A chance meeting?” he hardly contained his boiling jealousy yet Bruce understood.

He caressed Clark’s cheek.

“What else it could be, Clark?”

Clark gathered Bruce tighter to his body.

“Bruce, I told you that I’ll do what you asked: I won’t see Diana again.”

The younger man saw that Clark said that to stop him from disengaging himself and approach – as Clark thought – other men. This was the only reason and that stung not only because Clark didn’t see his reasoning but also because he considered him eager to give himself to another man. He pressed his lips.

“But you don’t believe that she might not be who she says.”

Clark chuckled and his stare became blank.

“Of course not! But since that is what you want…I’ll do it…to not lose you…to Thor or anyone else…”

Bruce shook his head and narrowed his eyes.

“Clark, I didn’t ask you that out of jealousy…There are clues and you said several times that you feel odd so it’s better if you stayed away till we figure this out” he gulped. “Anyway, even if you don’t believe me, you’ll be safe keeping a distance from her and maybe Jor El’s tests help us find out.”

Clark didn’t say anything – he hadn’t done any test after the first and had no intention to do another. He wasn’t ill; all this was Bruce’s effort to draw him away from Diana and now that he was going to do that – he snorted inside – Bruce would consider him healthy again. He took Hero to his basket and in a couple of seconds he was back resuming his exact position cuddling Bruce.

Bruce could see that Clark was thinking hard. He brushed softly Clark’s broad chest and the man came out of his thoughts to look at him serious and a bit gloomy. Bruce met his eyes.
“You don’t seriously believe that Thor and I…?”

Clark lifted an eyebrow and Bruce kissed him softly on the lips.

“You’re the only man I ever loved, Clark” he said quietly; he had so many things more to say but he didn’t. “I met Thor by chance.”

Clark nodded and smiled.

“I believe you…” he captured Bruce’s lips in a passionate kiss that took the human’s breath away.

He brushed the locks that had fallen over Bruce’s forehead and brought them back with the other hair.

“Now…sleep again…you’re exhausted. I’m here.”

Bruce really felt his healthy body cry in aching fatigue begging for some rest. He wrapped his arm around Clark’s shoulder letting the warmth of Superman’s body relax his own suffering muscles; his head nestled in Clark’s chest and let his heavy eyelids cover his eyes.

Clark watched Bruce as sleep swiftly took over. He wouldn’t let anyone get from him that man…

Bagdana looked at the crystal, transparent surface of the pond in the middle of his cave. The waters turned pitch black but he could discern the bottomless black cave walls, the deep silence, the sound of boiling lava, the pillar-like narrow stalagmites that became wider to support the ceiling which was the Earth’s surface. Tartarus: his prison, his company in solitude and suffering.

A sparkling, blue, vibrating light moved in the labyrinth-like steep, narrow paths the thick walls formed. Bagdana recognized the light and the energy: Mjolnir – he was there when the powerful hammer was forged. Suddenly, the figure that marched his prison was visible, his beautiful face tense in determination. As he knew already it was Thor. The formidable warrior god of Thunders; the ancient demon remembered the blond god fighting him along Superman and Stark to save Bruce…

He smirked and closed his eyes: his body jerked from an ancient fire. In Bruce lay Lilith’s irresistible charm…even gods couldn’t resist. Yet Bruce’s charm had a different quality from his distant grandmother: innocence, unwillingness to seduce, shyness, real care for the others and their emotions.

Thor turned the steep corner to the chamber of the demon’s cave-cell: a well going even deeper, humid with its dark green walls dripping humidity and acid water; sharp like razors rocks emerging from the floor, in the middle of them a rectangular stone where a hunched shadow sat manacles at wrists and ankles sinking in the walls and the floor holding the figure still.

Bagdana smiled as the god of Thunders saw the chained demon and turned his back tricked by the demon’s reflection. Bagdana’s decoy seemed exactly the same with him, emanated even the same aura, had no smell like the demon.

“Bruce, you sent him there to check on me…” he cackled and shook his head amused, the silver short spikes shinning on his head. “You’re way too young to be so wise, child…This world isn’t worthy of you.”
Clark gathered his arm gently from Bruce’s body to not wake him up and settled the younger man on the mattress muffling him carefully with the blankets since he was to leave and he wouldn’t have his warmth to keep the cold away – not that the room wasn’t warm…

Bruce’s pajama had the top three buttons undone and Clark was absorbed by the visible flesh; he couldn’t fight the urge so he leaned and sucked that flesh closing his eyes in delight. A shine caught his eyes as he opened them reluctantly: the round, black platinum frame that held the Black Butterfly…

He touched with his fingertips the diamond and remembered the blinding light that night at the Fortress when Bruce was fighting for his life and Clark had set the gem on Bruce’s heart. A black light containing every color of the spectrum in its range, dimming every other light in the Fortress – the most beautiful light he ever saw: Bruce’s tortured soul that emanated every kind of kindness and benevolence.

Even if Bagdana was securely imprisoned in Tartarus, Clark felt gratitude for the powerful gem that dangled proudly on Bruce’s chest protecting him.

He stood as soundlessly as he could and placed his index finger on his lips seeing Hero staring at him. It was 6 o’clock but cats wake early.

“Shshsh…we don’t want to wake Bruce…Watch him…I’ll be right back…”

He wore his civilian clothes in a spin and flew out of the window closing behind him. It had snowed last night but it stopped too soon so the lawn, the trees and the bushes had only a thin, sparkling layer of ice that reminded of a priceless fabric under the still dark sky.

Upon landing at the deserted alley two blocks from Ms. Rose’s bakery, the delicious smell of fresh baked delicacies intoxicated his sensitive nose. Clark followed the smell like mesmerized, his stomach growling threatening.

The old lady was surprised to see him so early.

“Good morning, Mr. Kent! Saturday today – you should be sleeping…”

He smiled.

“Journalists work at Saturdays too.”

She nodded.

“I know but still at Saturdays you come much later.”

“Mmm…I didn’t want to lose the hot donuts…”

Ms. Rose chuckled and took the paper bag.

“Your favorite, huh?” she asked looking Clark pointedly and he understood that she wanted to ask other things too.

He nodded.

“And…” he blushed “the Prince’s Donuts.”

Ms. Rose’s face radiated from a big smile and she hurried to put the delicacies in the bag.
“Now I see why you were in a hurry to get your donuts…” she winked giving Clark his change. “I’m so happy things are fine again, Mr. Kent…”

Clark widened his eyes and gulped: he was so obvious? He grinned to the good lady and nodded.

Back in the Manor, Bruce was still fast asleep and Clark could sense the man’s fatigue but fortunately not last night’s erosive light pain. He put on his pajamas again and took his side on the bed cuddling Bruce, wrapping him securely in his arms. Only for Hero to climb and settle between them rolled in a ball; Clark glared at the smirking kitten.

“You’re indigous!”

Bruce stirred half an hour later and frankly Clark wished the man had slept more. He kissed him on the lips massaging the hot flesh and Bruce’s lips engaged him in a slow, sensual dancing.

“I’m glad you’re here…” Bruce murmured sleepy and then narrowed his eyes sniffing the air. “Is this…”

Clark took gently his chin and brushed his cheek with his fingers.

“Freshly baked donuts” he said locking eyes with Bruce and relishing the same enthusiastic, child-like, sparkle that crossed his eyes every time he treated him with donuts. “I deprived you of them lately…” he pressed his lips regretful but waved it off. “And since I can’t be in the kitchen to eat breakfast I thought we can eat something here…”

Bruce nodded.

“The boys…We’ll find a way for you to join us in the common rooms” he chuckled because all these seemed rather funny as if they were mischievous teenagers.

Clark chuckled too.

“I don’t mind being…banished from the other rooms of the manor if I still have the master bedroom…and the owner” he said and brought Bruce’s body closer to him planting a deep kiss on his accepting mouth. “Mmm…I think the thrill of…breaking the law is arousing.”

But Hero meowed annoyed and both of them looked at him, Clark ruffling his hair and pressing his lips.

“Outlaw or not I still have to share with this little rascal…”

Jason was already dressed and was slumped on the big blue foof chair, his legs on the table staring at his friend who sat on the edge of the mattress with his arms crossed and his jaw set.

“I’m hungry, man.’’

“The old man will bring us breakfast here – there’s no chance I’ll go down to see Wayne’s shitface!”

Jason snorted and lolled his head on the side.

“Sooooo…ya’ll make the grandpa bring ya food upstairs while you can take yar lazy ass an’ eat downstairs…Ya realize that ya’re becomin’ a fuckin’ diva?”

Dick twitched his lips.
“Where did you learn that word?”

Jason shrugged.

“I’m an informed man…An’ I don’t wanna stay here like being in detention – it’s enough that I didna get out last night.”

Dick pouted.

“So get out! I’m not stopping you…”

Jason hopped from his place and sat next to his friend.

“Ya stay shut in here believin’ that ya’ll annoy Wayne that way. But it is as if ya admit that he cares…else why shoulda give a damn if ya stay here for all yar life?”

Dick squinted at him and Jason smirked.

“If ya want to get on his nerve ya’ll go downstairs an’ made his life difficult!”

“Selina is still at New York…” Bruce muttered gazing around at the kitchen. “And Tony has too much work to do…”

Only he and Alfred were there for breakfast and the big kitchen seemed even bigger. He was eating breakfast on the black shining island – well, not eating because he had too many donuts earlier, but drinking milk and juice.

“Sir, if I may…” Bruce nodded prompting him. “Yesterday at Master Anthony’s penthouse you said that Master Kent isn’t himself lately and that you wouldn’t abandon him…”

“Yes” he sipped from his orange juice.

“Also, I noticed lately that you’re very tired and sad…” Bruce shook his head in denial. “Please forgive my indiscretion, sir, but like Master Anthony, I get the feeling that all these are due to Master Kent’s” he stopped looking for the right word “changed behavior” Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose uncomfortable from this subject. “I know I don’t have the right to say this but perhaps Master Anthony is right and you must protect yourself from Superman? You said that he isn’t himself lately and you do remember what happened the last time he was under a similar situation…”

The man’s agony was heartwarming for Bruce but he didn’t want his loved ones being distressed because of him.

“Do not worry, Alfred; he might be facing some problems but he won’t hurt me” he smiled “he cares for me, Alfred; he listens to me and so I can help him as he did for me. I don’t feel threatened…and he loves me.”

Alfred nodded.

“I’m relieved to hear that, sir.”

“The boys?”

Alfred raised an eyebrow.
“They woke up but I guess they’ll take breakfast in their room…”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded.

“I don’t want them to stay shut in the room like jailed…” he looked up at Alfred. “I hoped that Dick would take it easier… I mean staying here… but I guess I ask too much.”

Alfred patted his shoulder.

“Patience, Master Bruce: do not lose your hope” Bruce smiled at him.

“At least, Hero is here to keep us company…” his eyes fell on the kitten who had emptied his bowl and now was playing with one of his multicolored furry toys kicking it between his front legs.

Hero sensing Bruce’s stare, left his toy and ran to him climbing to his lap. Bruce laughed and began petting the animal’s back causing its loud purring.

Alfred smiled at the scene craning slightly his head to them; he had opened the black wooden cupboard at the right of the sink to gather the crockery for the kids’ breakfast: thank Goodness for that kitten… he thought.

“Sir” he said filling with milk a jug “in 20 days it’s Christmas.”

Bruce lifted his eyes to him puzzled and Alfred felt a pang because he could see that for his young master Christmas made no difference.

“It is your first Christmas out of Falcone’s grasp” he had to try “in my humble opinion, the Manor should be decorated accordingly… by its rightful owner for once.”

Bruce was so dumbfounded that when Hero mouthed his finger playfully, he twitched startled. Which Alfred noticed.

“Also, a child is staying now with us” Alfred used his last argument and Bruce nodded grinning a bit hesitant.

“Of course, Alfred; yet I’m completely useless in decoration stuff…” he took in his butler’s eyes getting sad “maybe Dick and Jason can help you and perhaps Tony or Selina.”

Alfred nodded: well, the purpose wasn’t to have others helping.

“Indeed, sir” he choked a sigh because Bruce wasn’t in the mood to celebrate.

“You’ve got a kitten?!” a thrilled voice entered the kitchen and Dick’s fascinated eyes were on Hero while Jason’s hungry ones were on the delicacies on the long island.

Bruce had heard them coming – now that the Manor guested someone… ‘non-initiated’ he had his ears set for the tiniest indication of his coming.

“He is Hero” Bruce replied petting the animal watching with the corner of his eyes Dick approaching to have a closer look to Hero. “Hero, this is Richard.”

The kitten looked curious at the newcomer, sat at his butt and twitched his paw as if wanting a handshake. Dick beamed and gave his index finger to Hero – Bruce smiled but his smile was vanished instantly seeing his ward frowning and pursing his lips upon because of Bruce’s smile.

Jason hopped in one of the chairs and grabbed a piece of vanilla cake.
“Can we eat?” he asked. “I’m starvin’!”

Dick stretched his posture.

“You can eat – I’m not hungry; I’ll return to my room…” Jason rolled his eyes and Alfred pressed his lips in disapproval.

But Bruce moved his chair towards the kitchen’s exit.

“No, stay; I finished my breakfast and I have some work to do…” he stared at the kitten in his lap. “Mmm…I guess you can keep Hero company” he grabbed the kitten from the armpits and gave him to Dick who although still sullen took the kitten. “Hero gets bored when I’m working and Alfred doesn’t want him rubbing at his legs while housekeeping…”

His chair slid to the exit.

“Later, I’m going to visit the GCPD to be informed about your grandmother” he saw the boy’s eyes sparkle. “You and Jason can come along” he pressed his lips “if you want.”

Dick gave a cold nod, Hero nibbling his chin. Jason snorted.

“Cops…Nice way to spend a Saturday morning…” he mock spat at the floor and Alfred cleared his throat scolding him.

Bruce was taking all the information he wanted hacking the police’s system yet Dick couldn’t know this so he had to take the boy to GCPD to learn any news and being sure that police searched for his grandmother.

When they entered the garage, Bruce’s sleek black car was there brought by the shipping company last night. Jason goggled.

“Wow!” he whistled impressed and began stroking the magnificent car causing dismay to Dick who crossed his arms and looked to the other side. “Can we take that beast, dude?” he asked Bruce and he smiled like every time Jason called him ‘dude’.

He lolled his head on the side.

“Well, I had something subtler in mind…yet…why not? But you’ll have to share the same seat because she has two seats” of course if the seat could contain him and Tony so it could two boys.

“No problemo, man!” Jason stormed at the passenger’s door trying to open but it was futile. “Damn! That house is a fortress; the same the cars!” he huffed frustrated.

Bruce touched his thumb to the invisible receptor in the door and it automatically opened. He gestured inviting them inside.

GCPD’s building was old, tall and grim with its rectangular shape radiating rigor and till few months ago cruelty. The walls were a faded maroon that at some places let the bricks be seen; there were too few windows increasing the depressing air of the building.

The last night’s snow stopped so fast that now at 9 in the morning there was no snowflake on the wet pavement; only the fierce cold reminded last night’s snowfall. Bruce was glad that the two boys had dressed warmly with coats, cups, scarfs and gloves – they were very cute.

During the road there through sideways glances Bruce could see Dick’s agony – the boy was absorbed in this thoughts about what the police would say about his granny and only Jason’s bickering about the car made him leave his reverie.

Detective Curtis was in charge of the disappearances’ department; her desk was one of many stationed in a section of the second floor, separated with windows covered with blinds. She glanced bored at Bruce and the two boys.

“We don’t give info to minors and non-relatives, Mr. Wayne.”

“I’m Richard Grayson’s legal guardian” Bruce retorted calm showing her the document. “So I’m some kind of relative.”

The woman nodded. Ms. Turner’s car was found abandoned at the country road near Wong’s lighthouse. Dick frowned.

“But she had just left me to school…and she definitely had no reason to go there…”

Curtis shrugged.

“Did you find anything?” the boy asked and the detective looked him over her small glasses.

“Kid, disappearances are not easy cases…especially, in Gotham.”

Bruce intervened.

“We know that, Detective Curtis, but Ms. Turner is Richard’s grandmother, his only relative.”

She twitched her lips and eyed a young woman entering the office. She was a Detective and Bruce recognized Renee Montoya who immediately greeted him with a handshake.

“We’re here for Ms. Turner’s disappearance” he explained to her “she is Richard’s grandmother” Dick rolled his eyes because it was the second time Wayne was saying the same thing.

Yet Montoya’s stare at Curtis made the latter’s tongue loosen.

“There were no traces of robbery or attack – any violence” Bruce took in Dick’s relief. “Yet we have no traces as to where she might be – we have given pictures of her to every patrol car and to the TV stations” she looked at the boy. “You know if your grandmother had being diagnosed with dementia? Senile people often get lost and they don’t remember their identity or their relatives.”

Dick Jerked.

“No, granny’s mind was perfect!”

Bruce nodded.

“I can confirm that too” he caught Dick’s glare and in his expression Bruce could see that the boy considered dementia to explain why his grandmother made him his guardian. “But if you have doubts Ms. Turner had run some tests in Gotham General recently.”

Detective Curtis eyed Bruce and took off her glasses.

“Mr. Wayne, the fact you’re her grandson’s guardian shows that you’re pretty close to this family” Bruce frowned suspecting what was to follow and Dick snorted “so we could be facing a case of kidnapping.”
Dick slapped his thighs and huffed causing the stares of Curtis and Montoya.

“The story of my life! Losing people I love because of him!” he gritted his teeth.

Curtis frowned because she knew nothing about Dick being the second child of the murdered Phelps’ family but Montoya who worked at the MCU knew and looked Bruce with sympathy. Jason elbowed his friend and the older boy snarled at him.

“Mr. Wayne will notify us if anyone contacts him for ransom” Montoya said. “In the meantime, we’ll continue our efforts to locate Ms. Turner.”

An officer from the desk on the right glanced up at them.

“We’ll search the nearby shores too” the man said bleak shaking his head. “Because most of the disappearance cases end up there…eh, Montoya, Curtis?”

Dick’s eyes bulged and he stiffened which made Bruce forget his hesitance and take the boy’s hand in his.

“Your grandmother is alive and we’ll bring her back…I promise, Richard.”

Jayson wrapped his arm around his friend’s shoulders and the two women glared at the sturdy officer who shrugged.

“Is better to be ready for the worse…this is Gotham: people who disappear…”

But Bruce yanked his head and glared at him.

“Once, I was disappeared as well and police declared me dead; they stopped searching and considered me dead for eighteen years yet here I am; pretty much alive!” he nodded. “As Richard’s grandmother!”

Curtis pressed her lips and exchanged glances with Montoya while her male colleague got sweaty. On the other hand, Jason smiled to Dick enjoying Wayne’s outburst to a cop.

Bruce took the kids to the lift hasty to leave the building which feeling knew that all of them shared. But Montoya caught up with them.

“Richard, will do everything to find your grandmother” she said locking eyes with the pale boy and he nodded.

Yet Jason crossed his arms and cocked his eyebrows.

“Yeah…now that big money told ya off…”

Montoya looked at the little rascal with a mix of irritation and amusement; Bruce met Jason’s eyes.

“Boys, can you take the elevator and wait for me at the foyer?”

“Gladly!” Jason grabbed Dick’s hand and dragged him along to the elevator.

“Mr. Wayne, I’m sorry about Detective Spencer: he is pessimist and cynical but quite effective in his job.”

“I’d prefer it if he kept his personal opinions for himself and not present them as facts. He shouldn’t have spoken like that in front of the boy.”
She nodded licking her lips uncomfortable.

“I know… We’ll do our best to find her.”

“I’m sure, Detective Montoya; please, keep me updated” he pressed the calling button at the elevator’s wall.

“Commissioner Gordon assembles a team for your protection now that Joker is on the loose.”

Bruce lolled his head at the side and blinked.

“Commissioner knows already my opinion on this – I don’t want an escort. I have Wayne Enterprises’ security and Richard too – I’ll feel better if GCPD’s forces are fully occupied in protecting Gotham’s citizens so we don’t have other incidents like the Phelps family…”

The lift’s doors opened and Montoya entered after Bruce.

“I don’t disagree with that” she replied. “But I’m sure that Jim – the Commissioner – won’t accept it without a battle” she smiled. “You can expect a phone call…”

Bruce nodded.

“It’s always a pleasure speaking with Commissioner Gordon.”

As Bruce expected, the boys didn’t wait at the foyer as he told them but in front of the car.

“I’ve got some work at the Wayne Tower” he told them once they got inside the car. “After, we can go to the shops to choose a desk for Richard.”

Dick snapped at him.

“I won’t stay permanently with you!”

Bruce nodded.

“Yes, but till then, you need a desk to do your homework…”

“I wouldn’a…” Jason commented pouting and Bruce looked at him.

“And a PC for you to work.”

Dick slapped the seat.

“I already have a PC and a tablet!”

“Okay” Bruce answered calmly. “We’d go to your flat to take the PC, your books and whatever else you want. Then, we can go to Ms. Todd to ask her if Jason can stay for the rest of the weekend with us – if of course you want, Jason…”

The boy shrugged.

“Sure, man… But can mom come and eat with us? I don’t like leaving her alone…”

Bruce smiled at the boy’s affection for his mother and the way his sweet cheeks flushed for letting his softness being shown.

“You’re on my mind, big guy… But till I finish with my work, is there some place you want to go?
Maybe at the zoo?”

The two boys exchanged goggling, jeering glances and Jason giggled.

“Zoo is for babies!” Dick spat averting his gaze and Bruce blushed.

“I…I don’t know how bigger boys like to spend their free time” he mumbled. “When I was eight I loved the zoo…”

Jason pursed his lips posing like an understanding wise man.

“Ya were a baby…” he patted Bruce’s shoulder patronizing. “Being a guardian is a tough job, kid; but ya’ll learn” Dick glared at his friend. “I can give ya lessons; first tip for free – bowling” he winked and Bruce smiled.

“Lead me, Jason.”

Superman floated outside the whole wall window at Bruce’s office; the glass didn’t permit view inside but his super vision surpassed that limit. He could see Bruce behind his desk speaking on his phone to Stark. Of course, they can’t be left clear from the vapid playboy’s ill influence even for a day!

Bruce didn’t need much time to sense his presence; he finished the call and hastened to open the window for him to enter.

“I hope your office isn’t banned for me like the Manor’s common rooms?” he chuckled.

“You’re sure nobody saw you?”

Clark crooked his mouth and shook his head.

“Of course…Superman knows to be unnoticed when he wants – no kiss?” he pouted.

Bruce shrugged and eyed his chair.

“As you can see I can’t reach you…”

Yet Clark knew that rather than that Bruce was still reluctant to open up like before. And it was time for that to end.

“If that’s the problem…” he grabbed Bruce’s waist and lifted him with one hand wrapping his waist, the other cupping the back of his head to deepen the kiss he planted on his lips.

Bruce moaned from pleasure forgetting for a bit everything that Clark had said to him lately; he closed his eyes and grabbed Superman’s cheeks diving to that kiss with all his might. Deciding to pretend that they were still at the Fortress or the island…

Clark’s eyes were locked with Bruce’s sapphire-emerald seas which sparkled in pure, hot love; his lips were glued to Bruce’s mouth and all his existence looked for a place…The corner of his eye stopped at the modern desk and he dragged them there though in the room was a very comfy corner couch – yet Clark always fantasized having sex on a desk.

He held Bruce’s waist one armed, his mouth locked in a dynamic dance with Bruce’s and pushed the papers off the desk to lay the younger man there carefully controlling his mind fogging arousal.
Bruce still cupped his face and pierced his eyes with burning love but Clark detached his insatiable mouth to suck his neck; his hasty hand undoing Bruce’s tie and opening the first buttons while the other slipped inside the man’s pants groping his buttocks.

“You know” Clark breathed in a husky voice “I love white shirts on you…” white on dark.

“You know, I prefer you without the spandex…” Bruce growled raising his head.

Clark cupped the back of Bruce’s head and lowered him to the desk for him to gain more access to that intoxicating flesh around the beating jugular.

Bruce was ruffling Clark’s hair to let some of his arousal being relieved but then Clark stopped sucking – rather painfully – and looked him in the eyes almost fearful.

“Why did you stop, Clark?”

Clark realized that his groin was rubbing demanding on Bruce’s pelvis and blushed cupping Bruce’s hands that ruffled his hair.

“Not until you’re perfectly fine, Bruce…I can wait…” he looked around and his stare fell on Bruce’s tablet.

Half the screen had data on Zucco’s financial affairs and the other half a picture of Oliver Queen with detailed info.

“You’ve met Queen?”

Bruce supported himself on the elbows and Clark lifted him to settle him to the chair.

“Yes, at the party. And then I came across with him again at New York Police Headquarters.”

Clark clenched his waist with both hands, his eyes blank. He bit his bottom lip.

“By chance…”

“Exactly. I tried to get information about the Princess.”

Here we go again…Clark thought feeling a second pang accompanying the jealous one.

“And?”

“I asked him to describe the island…”

“And?”

Bruce swallowed hard.

“He described it like the ancient writers did” Clark nodded with confidence as if saying ‘I told you so’. “But if she is doing something to you then she might have done the same to Queen…” he raised his eyebrows. “I need to learn more from him and…”

Clark huffed and waved him off.

“Can we leave this, Bruce? You wanted me to stay away from her and I did but let’s drop that bullshit…” he turned to the window and Bruce watched him gnawing at his mouth’s interior.
“Where are you going?”

“Toma; I’ll come at the Manor late at night.”

Bruce moved the chair closer not minding to fix his shirt and tie – his lips and neck still feeling Clark’s mouth.

“You’ll go to the Fortress, too, then.”

Clark licked his lips – no, he wouldn’t go! But he didn’t want a quarrel with Bruce.

“Yes” he said without looking at him and Bruce choked the uncertainty that from somewhere wanted to cast its shadow.

“Give Martha my regards.”

Clark turned to him beaming.

“I will and she’ll be excited.”

Bruce watched him in the sky till he vanished. He’d have stayed there more but his phone rang. Lucius’ cheerful voice greeted him.

“Mr. Wayne, your suit just arrived from the tailor.”

“If you want an anteater find ants…” a strong female voice said and Superman halted midair.

He was over the Palisades returning to the Manor; it was late and the sky was completely black without moon or any star. Only the dim light from the public lighting bellow cracked a bit the darkness but he didn’t need that to see Diana’s gorgeous figure – the breathtaking woman glowed. She was floating like him; her hair waving at the cold wind, her beautiful eyes sparkling. The heavy rain were sticking her already tight clothes to her body, highlighting her body’s details and making his heartbeat frantic.

“I knew I’d find you here since you obviously avoid me…” she cocked an eyebrow and smiled.

Clark stretched his body and looked her in the eyes.

“Diana, this must end.”

She narrowed her eyes.

Superman shook his head.

“There is and you know it better than anyone. You kissed me.”

“I didn’t know then that you had an affair with…Wayne; after you told me, I think I made myself clear that I don’t want or claim you.”

“Your behavior last night shows otherwise.”

She widened her eyes angry.
“These are your words or his? Is it you that insult me or Wayne?”

Superman shook his head.

“Nobody insults you, Diana; but I must end this. All of this! I’m sorry.”

She began sniggering.

“Oh, dear! I can’t believe that someone like him could control Superman into making him an obedient puppy!” she clenched her waist and shook her head amused. “And you follow his orders! Unbelievable! You succumb to his stupid jealousy.”

Clark set his jaw and turned his back already flying away.

“Has he the right to demand things from you?” she dragged her words not making an effort to be heard sure that Superman would hear her.

And biting the bait, he flew back to her bringing his face to hers.

“Watch your mouth about Bruce!”

Her lips twitched and she yanked her head proudly completely unfazed by his anger.

“I didn’t say anything; I just asked…It seems that you had it already in your mind and don’t need someone else to say it” her lips almost touched his.

Clark frowned.

“What?”

“How can Bruce demand from you to end our friendship afraid of you cheating him?” her eyes glimmered. “When he already cheated you?”

Superman clenched his jaw and his lips twisted.

“Are you crazy?”

“When the League of Shadows held him a couple of months ago they used his body…”

“This is rape not cheating!”

She locked eyes with him.

“The result is the same! He let his body being fucked by others…” Superman shook his head and Diana brought her mouth to his ear. “Why he agreed to meet with Luthor in his suite? Even a moron could sniff the trap…but your clever boy went…Maybe he wanted to get caught…imprisoned, chained, being unable to resist” the air from her words made his body shudder but the meaning poisoned his heart and mind. “Maybe he craves to be used by others and looks for opportunities that would render him helpless, controlled by others…Maybe the most powerful being in Earth isn’t enough for him…Doesn’t satisfy him…Maybe you’re too soft…A nice puppy but when he wants real satisfaction he gets himself in trouble so to be…raped…”

She detached from him watching gleefully Clark’s dumbfounded expression; his narrowed eyes.

“You saw Thor laying his hands on him: for Wayne the god of thunder seems like the stallion he needs to satisfy him…Oliver Queen is also fascinated…” she said slyly “and Captain America? You saw how he cuddled him...He is a real seductress your innocent Prince – and when he feels bored from your tenderness he can find someone to dominate him, to give him what he wants...take him violently.”

She pressed her lips and approached Superman; she placed her hand on his shoulder and met his eyes.

“He is projecting his own thoughts and desires to you – he believes that you cheat him because he did...It’s not his fault, Clark” she sighed “he was raised like that: to be a slut. But does he have to blame you of being a slut too? Has the right bossing you around like that? While he chooses even filthy criminals like Bane and who knows who else to give him cruel sex? He is filth, Kal; and dares to project his filth to you.”

She cupped his drenched from the rain face; her eyes shone sad and affectionate.

“You’re pure, Kal El, and he is defiled; his soul is corrupt and he blames you for his own corruption...Keep him, Kal, but do not let him have you like his pet...”

Superman snapped his head angry and flew away from her. Diana’s chest heaved as she clenched her teeth; she clasped her bracelets together causing sparkles and small blasts.

“Damn you, Wayne!”
Chapter 35

Dr. Quinzel stared at her reflection in the tall, rectangular mirror over the bathroom’s sink; it was almost eleven at night and in her fluffy, pink pajamas she had just brushed her teeth to go to sleep: she didn’t work at Sundays yet her sleeping hours were stable even though after Joker’s escape she had some trouble sleeping. So she opened the white cabinet at the mirror’s right, took a cylindrical plastic bottle that read Lexotanil and swallowed one dry.

She touched the angry purple-blue bruise on her left cheek that Joker’s punch had left. Harleen often recalled what happened that evening when Joker led the some inmates to escape: most of the inmates were easily recaptured since at the lounge room, were mostly inmates of medium danger – she couldn’t imagine what would have happened if people like Zsasz was there at the time…Probably, most of the orderlies and she would have been dead. Only Joker’s thugs were free along with their boss: it was evident now what a huge mistake was to gather them to the same institution with Joker.

She had made so many embarrassing mistakes with Joker that she was baffled she wasn’t fired yet… Maybe because everyone knew how dangerous and unpredictable Joker was so they didn’t really blame her. But she blamed herself for Joker’s escape…

And for keeping recalling the moment he grabbed her and put the metallic, sharpened pipe at her face. The worse wasn’t that her mind had been stuck there like someone who suffered from PTSD… no…the worse was that PTSD wasn’t her case…because for PTSD a traumatic event was necessary and what happened at the Asylum wasn’t traumatic at all…worse than being suffering from PTSD was that she enjoyed what Joker did to her…

She caressed the bruise which covered almost her entire cheek and she had to conceal it when going to work. Joker had spun her to be face to face and bitch slapped her shoving her to the wall and then to finally collapse to the floor. Harleen knew that she should be appalled from the man’s deed but far from it: she was thrilled every time she caressed the bruise and brought back the feelings of that moment – the pain, the excitement…

The young psychiatrist was aware that this was a disorder but every human was allowed some if nobody was hurt and it didn’t cause him/her major functioning problems. And, damn! she loved the energy behind that blow: energy that was only for her – Joker was interested in her. He could have killed her easily but he chose just to hit her; the sense of his hand still caused goose bumps…

Harleen had been very popular from her childhood due to her looks, her intelligence and her talent in gymnastics. She was easily the most popular girl in elementary, high school and beyond, with boys literally fighting to get her attention. Her family was a traditional urban family; her parents friendly, hardworking clerks who adored their only daughter and made her every favor. Young Harleen had her weekends filled with invitations to parties but this didn’t thwart her from being the top student of high school so it was easy for her to get a scholarship for college and then university; her excess in gymnastics helped tremendously.

She had many relationships with classmates and then fellow students at college and university however as much as handsome someone was or strong or popular, soon Harleen found herself bored – lacking something. After her studies in psychiatry she attributed it to the fact that she always had whatever she wanted: life always gave her everything without asking. And her lovers which each of them for every other girl would have been the Prince Charming for her were like food without salt. They had nothing special, nothing that would make her shiver and feel thrilled. And they were always posing as something they were not…
While that man, Mr. J, Joker, Jack or whatever his name was completely different - fascinating. She knew that her occupation’s ethics forbade that but she ought to be honest with herself. She was attracted by him from the first moment; the fact that he was a hard case for any psychiatrist, making him a challenge for her; the fact that he made her laugh even if she hid it from him; the fact that he was raw, primitive without any effort to adorn himself; his violence…

The sense of danger every time she went to his cell for a session aroused her and when that evening he grabbed her and violently pushed her on his body slightly grazing her cheek made her heart beat thrilled. When he bitch slapped her, Harleen fell not only from the force of the hit but also from a pleasant paralysis to her legs…And to add to the other things: Joker wasn’t an ugly man despite his scars that actually made his beauty unique…

The trade ring of her stable phone made Harleen jump and ran to her living room. She had turned off the lights and left only the table lamps casting a dim pinkish light from their coverings. The warm hue brushed the posters from various cult movies Harleen loved: Beetlejuice, Edward Scissorhands, Pulp Fiction.

“Haaaallooooo, Dr. Harlequin” her heart lost some beats hearing the so familiar nasal voice.

Harleen didn’t expect that; she had heard that Joker crushed the party at Avengers’ Tower clearly to find Bruce Wayne. She had to admit that Wayne was getting gradually more annoying to her: if she managed to save Mr. J from his obsession, then she was sure that not only Joker could be perfectly reformed but also hers…Harleen was certain that Joker shared the same attraction towards her and only this obsession with Wayne kept him from devote himself to her and his reformation.

“Tut-tut…Blondie-sugar, are you there?” Joker asked puzzled but with his usual snide tone.

“What do you want, Joker?” she retorted sternly.

The jester’s embarrassed giggled reached her.

“Why sooooo ag-GRESSIVE? Nooot that I don’t like it…” he huffed “I know: it’s the slaaap, huh?” she heard him licking his lips and when he spoke again his voice was serious. “I missed my Dr. Harlequin” he stuttered. “Ummm…why not calling me Mr. J? I really miss how it sounds…”

Harleen’s lips on their own twitched to smile but she pressed them; she shouldn’t let that clown get into her.

“You escaped: you can’t afford asking things” she said. “And yes, you hit me and I don’t tolerate that.”

Joker chuckled.

“I told you that I would leave that place – it was way toooooooo booooooring…nooot your fault, Dr. Harlequin. I couldn’t stay there – I have sooooooo many things to dooooo” a long pause and a deep breath. “Aaaaand I slapped you because I knew you wanted it – I sensed it the moment I glued you on my body…You liked that, doc, didn’t you?”

Harleen rolled her eyes.

“Of course not, Joker! It’s your sadism and your ego talking…”

“He. He. He…Youuuuu’re lying” he singsonged. “You see, after my farewell, I realized that our Stark-y had changed his system so that to knock me out every time there was fear around me aaaaaand when I grabbed you or hit you I didn’t pass out …Soooooo I think that youuuuu, my dear, liked our...mmm...hot exchange.”

Harleed cocked an eyebrow: Stark should have informed her for the change.

“You’re wrong – your assumption has no base” she spat. “What do you want? I thought that now you’re free your only care would be to get your Bruce...” she bit her lip because she sounded like a jealous chic. “Which is bad, Joker: you must let the man alone.”

Joker giggled.

“A...A...Aaaa...That sounded like someone is jeaaaaalous of little Brucie...” he so much enjoyed that new game.

Harleen gritted her teeth and pinched the bridge of her nose.

“Joker, what do you want?”

She heard his tongue licking his scars.

“I missed...our sessions, Dr. Harlequin...” a long sigh. “I know you believe that I was mocking you then but actually talking to you about my past...about everything...made me feel...hm...nice...” his voice was serious and thoughtful.

Harleen pursed her lips: she wasn’t an easy person to fall for someone’s words but always focused on the non-verbal signs behind those words. And the way Joker was speaking manifested honesty: after all, during the escape he didn’t kill or seriously injured anyone. Okay, he killed a man at the Tower but there Wayne was involved and the billionaire had a bad influence on Mr. J – while with her, Mr. J got milder.

Joker from the other end of the line smacked his lips.

“Mmm...Is this aaa therapeutic silence?”

“Joker, if you really want to continue those sessions then I can speak with the police and arrange your surrender” she heard Joker’s giggle. “I promise I’ll be all the time there and you won’t be harassed.”

Now Joker’s giggles became a fit.

“Noooooo, doll face; That is uuu--terly stupid! I...don’t wanna be captured by the cops and transferred to that loony bin – no offence but except than you it was rather boring...I was thinking more of an external therapeutic relationship – this is how youuuu call it, huh?”

Harleen cocked an eyebrow.

“You propose me to do sessions with a fugitive? A dangerous murderer?”

Joker snorted and she could see him lolling his head to the side.

“Now, noooow” he gargled “…a murderer? What an un--professional way to handle your patient! C’mon, Harle--quin! I need your help!” he shouted. “But the Asylum makes me mad...while being free I’ll feel more comfortable to share...”

“Share?”

“Everything. My paaaast aaaaand my present. And maybe...you manage to stop me from hurting other people…Faaancy that feaaat!"

The young psychiatrist squinted: this actually wasn’t a bad idea.

“It’d be easier for me to open up if Brucie opens up too…” he chuckled. “I mean emotionally not physically – though that wouldn’t be bad, not bad at all…”

“Mr. Wayne would never accept to participate in your sessions.”

“Who said anything about accepting?” he giggled and it was almost choked by his laughter.

Harleen squeezed the telephone cable between her fingers.

“You talk about abducting and forcing him…I’d never take part in something like that – leave him out of this and we can have our sessions.”

“Nah…nah…nah…You see, Joker can’t be deciphered without Brucie – HE IS THE KEY” Harleen frowned – the prospect of deciphering Joker was fascinating. “This man completes me – if he talks I’ll talk…”

Harleen tapped her finger on her lip.

“Weeeeell?” he asked slyly and innocently at the same time. “If I get Bruuuuuucie’s participation you’ll be our doctor? I’m sure he is as fascinating as me…Hehe…”

Dr. Quinzel considered the prospects: if Joker managed to capture the young billionaire her presence there could protect him from getting harmed – and Joker was right: Wayne was also an interesting case with mystery surrounding him. And if he was the key for Joker’s reformation and salvation of many innocent people that Joker could kill, then it was definitely worth it. Not to mention that she could always claim that she was a hostage too forced to do as Joker ordered.

“Mr. J, I’d ask you not to attempt anything against Mr. Wayne…They’ll catch you – they expect you to do something like this.”

“Doooooon’t worry about this, sugar. Now to the Buuuuuut part?”

Harleen licked her lips and nodded her eyes sparkling decisively behind her rectangular, small spectacles.

“I’ll be your therapist…”

Tony was gazing New York’s illuminated skyline from the whole wall window of his Penthouse at Soho; it was late night and he was dressed in his pajamas; he needed some comfort and relaxation after that day.

He was absorbed in his thoughts recounting his Press Conference and the scolding headlines hoping that tomorrow’s press will change its attitude: not that he cared much about that lousy flock – he knew them too well. Yet the new S.H.I.E.L.D. couldn’t afford being buried in her first steps… And then he met the parents of the young man that Joker killed, Steve with him…Tony closed his eyes.

He heard the soft footsteps that approached him and saw Selina’s reflection on the window pane getting a mystic hue as the night outside twirled around her figure; she wore her loose nightdress and the playboy smiled turning to greet her.
“Tomorrow I’m returning to Gotham” she said.

He sighed.

“I wish I could do the same…but” he lolled his head at the side “I had obligations here.”

She pursed her lips.

“When you become a director that’s what you get…”

Tony scratched his hair and laughed.

“I guess you’re right: that’s what us, responsible men, get…” Selina rolled her eyes. “I expected that you would be already in Gotham with all the new exciting developments. Isn’t overwhelming how fast kids grow up?” he cackled. “The little guy becoming a father…”

Selina blinked and snorted.

“Guardian, Tony – and Bruce told me that it’d be temporary: he is positive that the boy’s granny will be found.”

Tony pursed his lips and raised his eyebrows.

“In Gotham though?” he retorted skeptical. “But it’d be for the best both for the poor boy and for Bruce…that boy hates him and I’m sure he’ll make his life harder than already it is. And Bruce doesn’t need this.”

Selina shook her head and narrowed her eyes getting what he referred to.

“You really believe that Superman can harm Bruce?”

Tony pouted.

“In many different ways…and if the super-asshole does that I’m going to kill him!”

The young woman crossed her arms.

“You won’t because Bruce doesn’t want this” her lips twitched in a faint smile. “But I hope that Superman wouldn’t…” she brushed her neck that was naked since her long hair was tied in a ponytail. “Maybe Bruce is right and despite the influence Bruce mentions Superman won’t do something awfully wrong…”

Tony nodded, his eyes widened in sarcasm.

“Because he cares…” he sighed and closed his eyes. “I’m no better…you were there” he pressed his lips “I spoke so hard to him…but he forgave me…”

Selina raised her eyebrows.

“This can be a lesson for you and next time be more careful…and patient.”

Tony laughed.

“Use the chance Bruce gives me, huh? I hope that fucking alien thinks the same… Anyway, given that you’re still in New York I expected to find you earlier in the penthouse.”
Selina cocked an eyebrow and smirked.

“What’s that? Parental control?”

“I’m older but not so much, pretty…” Tony pouted. “Just interest…”

“And curiosity?” she asked slyly. “Well, I had to give back to the police something that some thugs stole and wanted to sell to a rich bastard – a rare jewel.”

“The Heart of Fire?” he had read about the necklace with the huge red ruby that was stolen a couple of months ago. “You could have mailed it or given to me to hand back.”

She inclined her head half closing her challenging eyes and smiled seductively.

“Breaking and entering the Police Headquarters was more fun.”

Tony brushed her upper arms laughing.

“Of course!”

Pepper’s high heels echoed coming to the vast living room and Tony’s assistant sat on the couch.

“You said something about watching a movie in your cinema hall!” she yelled at Tony. “I hope you invited Selina.”

Tony trotted there and jumped into the expensive leather, wrapping his arm around Pepper’s shoulders. Selina following.

“Mmm…I was thinking a masterpiece lesbian porn…you see, my gorgeous environment inspires me – and we could do our own movie…” he twitched his eyebrows to the two women; it was easy to understand that he was joking.

Selina snorted.

“In your dreams, handsome.”

Pepper gave him a smack in the back of his head.

“Being with you tempts me to change my orientation: you sure you want to push me more into this?” she said snidely.

Selina sniggered.

“I think that this won’t be very flattering for your playboy fame…your girlfriend ditching males completely after her experiences with you! It’d be so hilarious!”

Tony gulped.

“Okay, then…” he narrowed his eyes pouting. “Zootopia?”

The door’s bell was a surprise, more so when Steve Rogers smiled to Pepper.

“Good evening, Pepper. I hope I’m not interrupting something?”

Tony jerked his head to him.

“Not at all! Do you fancy lesbian porn?” he chirped. “In HD” he stressed arching his eyebrows.
Steve blushed and Pepper chuckled.

“Don’t listen to him. Come in! We’ll see animation.”

Steve’s eyes met with Selina’s as the young woman stared at him with a faint smile.

“Actually, I wanted to speak with Selina.”

She stood up and walked to him, her eyes glimmering taking in his leather and jeans clad body.

“Yeah…that’s better than lesbian porn or Zootopia…” Tony nodded crooking his lips.

That floor seemed going on for ever today… He was mopping as fast as he could but doing it with one hand was exhausting and slow…Signora Bruna had cursed him several times already for being slacking off and when he tried to explain that he wasn’t but his arm was killing him today more than ever, she slapped him in the face. She barked that if he continued whining she was going to tell Falcone.

So he shut his mouth and hastened to rub off the blood that fell on the floor from his mouth. Hunger was piercing his guts and made him light headed yet he couldn’t afford to delay more so he clenched his jaw though Signora Bruna’s slap throbbed and continued rubbing the floor.

He heard the footsteps approaching but he didn’t give much attention: thugs and cabaret’s people crossed the freshly mopped floor indifferent about his hard work or on purpose to force him repeat the chore. So he didn’t even look just sighed – only inside because some of them got angry if he made sounds – and prepared himself to start all over.

But the footsteps stopped next to him and that was unusual for the store’s people who just passed him like a pest – only one used to stop and snatch him for his satisfaction but the footsteps didn’t belong to him…

He didn’t end his thought and a strong arm wrapped his waist pulling him upwards to glue to a tall, strong body and a palm smashed his mouth to keep him quiet – not that he ever yelled when people dragged him around but obviously the man was certain that the boy would understand that it wasn’t Chill who got him and feared that he might yell.

He was dragged upstairs; the man holding him tight to his body and keeping his palm over his mouth and half his nostrils almost suffocating him. Thankfully, he was able to breathe when the stranger stopped in front of a cheap door and opened, getting him inside.

Bruce knew what they usually wanted from him – the various thugs: rubbing, fondling, kissing, licking and putting fingers inside him; the other things were only for Falcone and Chill. He braced himself and wished that at least they’d be fast so to return to his work soon in hopes of finishing on time and not get punished. But why bringing him in a room? Usually, they just squeezed him in a dark corner and did what they wanted to do.

The man who held him put him down on his knees and Bruce didn’t dare raise his eyes from the carpet that wasn’t very thick or expensive but it was so pleasantly soft and warm that his eyes watered…actually, the carpet was the most interesting thing in the room.

Until he heard the creaking of a bed and then soft footsteps approaching and stopping right before him. He saw two pale white feet with red, painted nails – female feet; the smell of cheap perfume attacked his nostrils and he cried remembering his mom’s elegant, sweet perfume…
He didn’t dare look but fingers tousled cruelly his messy, filthy locks and Bruce after experiencing so many groping from men, he knew that these fingers were female. The same fingers took his chin and yanked his head, not too violently but still giving him considerable pain.

She wanted him to see her and his eyes stared. She was tall and lean: Bruce knew that men considered a body like hers gorgeous. She was dressed in an almost transparent black nightdress that reached the middle of her thighs and left the rest of her endless shapely legs naked. The woman yanked more Bruce’s head and he could see her face: she was beautiful; she had long hair in honey’s color and blue eyes that seemed not real; her nose was straight and her red lips heart shaped and juicy.

Bruce’s heart clenched: he knew her. She was Falcone’s latest interest – a young whore who just came to Gotham and immediately captured the boss’ attention. Without stopping Bruce’s own nightly duty… However the clench became worse because Bruce knew that woman from somewhere else…She was familiar…

But as she squeezed his cheeks to get his attention Bruce stopped trying to remember where he had seen her… She frowned and her lips twitched in disgust.

“What does Falcone find in you, kid? Filthy, skinny, ugly…”

She bent to him and nuzzled his cheek.

“Though your smell is special…and very enticing…” her nails dag his cheek and Bruce gasped. “So…what do you have that makes him leave me to come fuck you?”

She clenched more his chin, her nails scratching his cheeks and her other hand that ruffled his hair fisted his locks violently.

“Speak!”

Bruce gulped and tried to breathe but his heart pounded painfully as every time he knew that he was going to be hurt – and he hated this reaction because he should have get used to it by now…

“I don’t know, madam…Please, let me return to my work…Signora Bruna is going to punish me…”

The slap in his face came as a flash and he was tossed to the floor rubbing his busted lip while the woman chuckled.

“I can punish you too if you dissatisfy me” she barked baring her teeth. “And I can make Bruna and Carmine punish you more brutally than ever!”

Bruce didn’t dare look her at the face but even with the corner of his eye he could see the manic glimmer in her eyes though still these eyes didn’t seem real. However what mattered more now was that she could make his masters punish him – Bruce knew that she had great influence on Falcone… He gulped trying to calm his heart that squirmed in his chest pushing his whole body to tremble.

She marched right in front of his slumped form.

“I don’t like competition, boy; especially, from a filthy maggot like you! So I’ll find what you do to get Falcone’s infatuation.”

Bruce didn’t raise his head that was too heavy from her slap.

“Strip him!” the woman turned her head to the thug who served her.
He felt harsh hands grab him under the armpits and heave him to his trembling feet. The thug took violently the rim of his ragged T-shirt and pulled it upwards to get it off his body, carrying along the boy’s arms. Bruce gasped and his eyes filled tears as his cripple arm was jerked upwards with the fabric that was tossed in a corner of the floor.

“His pants now!” she ordered with her hands clutching her waist.

Bruce as every time felt dread as his pants was pulled down in a swift movement; he didn’t wear any underwear so his working hand went to cover his privates. He didn’t do that when Falcone or Chill stripped him because there was no reason and the first two times he did that they beat him mercilessly.

The thug gathered his pants from his feet and threw it away.

Bruce sensed rather than saw the woman casting a stern glance at the thug and he slapped Bruce’s hand away from his genitals.

The woman eyed the boy’s shaking body and even circled him staring in a way that made Bruce wish he was swallowed by the floor. Especially, when he felt her acid stare focusing on the dried blood on his back from the whipping and on his buttocks and thighs from his master’s pleasure.

She sniggered and her lips twisted in disgust.

“You’re pathetic, kid! That body is truly disgusting…I can’t understand Falcone…” she cupped Bruce’s chin and yanked his head. “Look at me, filthy rat!”

Bruce looked at her gorgeous face swallowing hard not only because his neck was stretched but mostly because of the cruelty of her eyes.

“Our eyes are unique…” she muttered intrigued “yet I don’t think that a man like Falcone care much about eyes…” she tapped her lips “let’s see how you’re in bed.”

Bruce jerked and began shaking his head desperate.

“No, please, madam…” he muttered to her back as she retreated to the bed.

“Bring him, Bart” she turned slightly her head to see the boy but addressed the man smirking at Bruce.

Bart grabbed Bruce’s waist.

“Please...No...not...again…” he was used every night by Falcone and Chill: he couldn’t be put into this other times of the day too... his eyes watered as his stare collided with hers.

Her eyes were frozen and Bruce saw his condemn before she gestured to the metallic bed for the thug to throw the boy. Bruce pressed his lips.

“Strap him” she said casually to her thug and Bruce’s heart stopped. “Falcone loves to tie you,
huh?”

Bart leaned on the floor and took ropes; he grabbed Bruce’s cripple arm and it was real agony – he tried to not yell as the man was strapping his wrist to the tall headboard’s black railing but some sobs escaped because the rope dag into his bonny wrist and he flexed so much the limp that it felt like being ripped from its socket...
He sensed two thirsty eyes watching avidly and looked up only to meet her satisfied evil smirk relishing Bart stretching Bruce’s short legs to reach as much as possible the railing at the end of the bed.

Bruce shut his eyes and let his head slump on the other side; he knew what was coming next…he knew it from every time they strapped him spreadeagled to his body’s limits.

The bed creaked as someone climbeded and the woman straddled him letting her weight on his pelvis. She clenched his hair and yanked his head to look at her.

“I want you to look at me, brat…” she let his hair and pushed her nightdress’ thin straps to slip from her shoulders and arms till her round shaped porcelain breasts popped out. “You like what you see, kid?” she cocked an eyebrow and smiled slyly.

She leaned over Bruce and squeezed his mouth to slightly open. She touched her nipple to the boy’s lips and put the thick brown flesh inside…

“Suck it, babe” she whispered “as you do with Falcone’s dick…” her nails that squeezed his mouth dag his flesh. “Now!” she ground her teeth “or I’ll make Falcone flay you alive!”

Bruce began sucking as Falcone liked it and the woman closed her eyes, panting; he felt her pelvis rub at his groin and the thug’s eyes goggling at the spectacle hardly containing his saliva as the woman brought her other breast to Bruce’s mouth.

She sighed and stretched her body.

“Nice enough…but let’s explore you more…”

Bruce’s legs jerked inside their suffocating binds as a nailed finger slipped in his gaping entrance, the nail scratching his tender flesh. His eyes widened…

“Please, madam…stop…”

But she smiled wickedly and shoved a second finger causing a cry from the boy who sobbed.

“Don’t play the virgin with me, little slut…” she bent her fingers inside Bruce and then opened them wide to shove two more.

Bruce’s pelvis jerked upwards as much as the ropes permitted and the woman pushed him back down to the mattress with her weight. She smiled and caressed his tears that streaked his filthy cheeks.

“How’s your name, bitch?” she asked emotionless, her eyes stabbing him as she brought to his mouth the fingers that just pulled out of his anal channel. “Lick my fingers, boy…”

Bruce closed his eyes and obeyed licked, the smell of his body nauseating him.

“What’s your name, hooker?” she pushed her fingers deeper in Bruce’s throat and he began choking and gagging.

She withdrew a bit her fingers and her other hand clenched his tiny throat forcing Bruce to focus his bulging, terrorized eyes on her eyes that were two pieces of blue ice.

“Your name!” she growled her eyebrows two angry straight lines.

Bruce’s body was trembling and sweating, his heart beating fast and painful…He couldn’t say to her his name…He shook his head and his eyes were melting in tears.

“I…” he mumbled because her long fingers thwarted him and she withdrew them more. “I don’t know…” he whispered between his whines. “Please…”

She grabbed his chin and yanked his head up stretching his neck.

“You want to tell me that your mommy pulled you out and then dump her pup in a garbage bin?” she asked snidely.

Bruce closed his eyes and felt the tears burning him – no, his mom loved him so much…His chest was clenched suffocating and sending strong sobs to punch his fragile bones; his throat burnt. He was crying but the woman fist ed his hair.

“Speak!”

He tried to nod because his throat was burning but her grips were too strong to yield.

“No…but I” he panted “I don’t have a name…” his voice was choked in sobs and the woman released him only to slap him again on the nose sending his head to roll.

“Who cares about your stupid name, anyways?” she gritted her teeth above Bruce’s tightly closed eyes.

He felt her shift a bit over him and then heard a sound like the opening of a drawer and then a bang as the drawer closed again. The weight left his body but he knew that she still sat next to him. His heartbeat ached him and made him breathe as if he had an asthma fit; his body was soaked in sweat and trembling in his heartbeat’s rhythm because he didn’t knew what was next.

His limbs twisted in their straps as something spanked his stretched opening; he opened his eyes and gasped at the thing the woman held in front of his face smirking.

“Falcone has introduced you to these, huh?” she chuckled and raised an eyebrow. “I want to see you being fucked with this one to figure what’s drawing that mobster to you…”

She dragged the dildo through his body’s line, from his neck to his groin and then his opening making him convulse in despair.

“Please, madam…” he raised his head with difficulty to beg her. “Don’t do this, please…”

He saw her jaw clench and her lips protrude in anger; she lifted the dildo and hit his opening with such force that his legs twitched trying in vain to escape and Bruce yelped.

“I know” she rimmed the boy’s opening with the object “that Falcone uses far bigger dildos than this so you must not complain...Unless” he grabbed his genitals with the other hand and squeezed and Bruce’s body arched because it was like his genitals being ripped “you want me angry…”

Bruce bit his lip and swallowed hard; his head slumping exhausted at the mattress. Only to jolt upwards the same moment as the object that was wide as a cola glass bottle was pushed inside his opening...

He cried and the woman giggled pushing deeper only to be met with resistance since the channel was narrow.

“Your asshole is too narrow for a professional whore…” she clenched her jaw and pushed deeper, the object moving.

Bruce’s body was twitching, convulsing like a dying fish, his hand clenching the railing where it was strapped…His neck had arched, an expansion of his torso’s arch, as the object invaded him deeper, intensifying the pain and his sobs.

“No…” he whined but this made her shove the object in him to the halt.

She lay on the mattress, plunged her elbow and supported her head to be above Bruce’s. The boy felt his anus beating around the foreign object ready to rip – there were already tears from other times. His eyes looked at his tormentor pleading, trembling from agony and pain under shaking eyelashes drenched in teardrops.

But the woman smiled and tapped her fingers on his chest before she took one nipple and rubbed hard – Bruce jerked more increasing the pain in his anus. She grazed the tiny, pink nipple with her long nail till blood sprung and then did the same with the other nipple; Bruce begging quietly.

“You’re a good sport, bitch” she huffed and raised herself in sitting position slapping the boy’s tortured nipples.

Bruce groaned but immediately he howled as the woman grabbed the dildo’s hilt and pulled it abruptly out only to shove all of it again inside with one swift movement; Bruce was drenched in sweat and his eyes bulged watched the woman thrusting the thing in his anus fast and deep, gritting her teeth and smirking.

“Why your little willy isn’t flying?” Bruce felt the same excruciating pain that his masters caused him when their thrusts became frantic.

He let his head slump on the side letting the sobs get out of his throat. The thrusts continued deeper with every movement; more painful…and Bruce tried to distance himself by looking at the various plants in the pots on the wall selves. But then a thrust deeper and more vicious than the other made him shut his eyes and clench the railing.

Till his anus felt empty and he heard again the drawer. Yet he didn’t open his eyes because his insides, down there, were burning and stinging…and his body writhed.

The woman stood and looked at Bart who was goggling at the panting boy.

“Fuck him, Bart” she dragged her words. “I can see your dick is already hard…” she chuckled.

Bruce’s eyes popped open and he looked panicked at her; he shook his head in denial.

“Please, no, madam…I beg you…”

Her grin became enormous revealing her white, shining teeth.

“This is your job, little shit…” she cocked an eyebrow and looked satisfied at the huge rock hard erection that jolted as Bart lowered his pants and underwear just before climbing the bed.

Bruce stared pleading at the man: his body’s opening hurt so much and if master figured that someone else used him he was going to be punished harder than usual.

“Please, sir…”

A punch shoved his head to the other side and the pain set his eyes into darkness.
“Shut up, ya hoe!”

His thighs were smashed by two clenching hands that kept him still for the man to thrust at once his entire length inside the boy who yelled and convulsed unable to escape. His yells became weak sobs as the man rocked him relentlessly to his in and out frantic rhythm that impaled him deeper irritating every time his old wounds.

As his fluids burnt his narrow channel Bruce was almost unconscious; he knew that he wouldn’t be permitted to sleep because he had the floor to finish but he couldn’t do anything else than tolerating the man’s cruel hands that after his climax explored his body playing painfully with his nipples and genitals.

“Thanks, Vivian…” he gasped to the woman. “I always wanted to fuck Falcone’s bitch…”

Bruce opened his exhausted eyes, drenched locks stuck around his face. He looked at her gorgeous face: they called her Vivian then yet Bruce now knew that she had another name: Diana…

Clark sat on the bed, his back supported on the headboard; he had just worn his pajamas and slipped under the blankets only to sit. His face was distorted in a frown and pursed lips. Clark wasn’t in the mood to gaze at Bruce’s sleeping form – Diana’s words still echoing in his mind and piercing his heart: can this man whom Clark considered as innocence incarnated being so rot? Doing everything to stage his capture only to get hard sex from his enemies? Cheating him?

His breath stopped and he clutched his face with both hands. The melody he heard upon entering the room was still playing at Bruce’s tablet; obviously, he didn’t intend on falling asleep because although the room was dark his tablet was open to his latest inquiries: Zucco, some other stuff from Lex Labs and as usual, Diana. He pressed his lips for Bruce’s obsession to defame her and for the song he was listening to before drowsing off…Clark had asked from Bruce to tell him about that song he loved so much.

It was about a lover being left alone by his mate…It was melancholic and beautiful. Clark clenched his jaw: he wouldn’t let Bruce alone…His hand softly ran the human’s torso…He wouldn’t surrender Bruce to any of those hungry wolfs waiting…and if Bruce wanted to get laid with them or worse, if he already had an affair with any of them and made up the whole fuss with Diana to fool him?

Sweat spurt all over his body and he panted: there was no way he’d let the field clear for them.

Hero stirred in his basket; when Clark entered the kitten’s flashing eyes found him narrowing angrily but upon sensing his familiar, safe presence, he slept again.

Clark looked again at Bruce and the human gasped his eyes popping open; his face was covered in sweat drops and he was panting. Clark switched on the night lamp over his bed side table and stared at Bruce.

Bruce was blinded by the lamp’s sudden light but when his eyes adjusted and he could see Clark’s face, a shudder ran his back. Clark was gazing at him but instead of the worry he always showed every time he woke up like this, now there was boredom and coldness.

“A nightmare or a flashback?” the Man of Steel asked unable to keep the tired, fed up tone out of his voice.

Bruce pressed his lips as the coldness in Clark’s eyes – that he was sure that the man didn’t even realize – froze his heart. However he could understand Clark’s fatigue and boredom from his constant flashbacks and nightmares – Bruce was sick of them as well.

“A flashback…” he answered rubbing his forehead with both hands because a soft headache began throbbing there and Bruce knew that this was the first stage of a full blown migraine.

Clark licked his lips; he could recognize the distress in the younger man’s body, besides he was still panting slowly recovering a normal respiration.

“You want to share?” he asked more out of habit than interest and realizing that made him feel shame; he took in Bruce’s eyes, the remnants of the flashback’s terror and the puzzlement…which Clark suddenly understood that it was for his cold stare.

He licked again his lips and forced the coldness out of his eyes but Bruce wasn’t fooled.

“Are you sure?” the human asked him piercing Clark’s eyes as if reading his mind.

Clark grinned.

“Of course.”

Bruce’s eyes slipped from Clark’s: he couldn’t say what he saw staring at Clark’s clear, pure blue topaz eyes – the purity of the man made him feel even filthier and wouldn’t let him speak… He swallowed hard and began narrating what he saw; Clark should learn about Vivian/Diana.

Clark’s face was distorted listening to Bruce’s steady but emotionless voice recounting: he fought to keep inside the sighs. Why Bruce chose to share with him a flashback now? Now that he just wanted from him so many things, to make him answer? It could be that Bruce with Ra’s Al Ghul’s tremendous training had sensed that and through his flashback wanted to soften him reminding Clark of the Hell he’s been through?

The younger man was staring at the flames that moved idly in the rectangular, marble fireplace opposite the bed. His voice dragged monotonous as if narrating the story of a movie yet Clark could hear the heavy thuds of his heart and could see sweat drops over his forehead – new drops that were added to those the dream provoked. Clark pursed his lips: could Bruce been acting?

Bruce was engrossed in his narration; unfortunately, even mentioning the content made him reexperiencing it all over…But he clenched his jaw and fists because he should continue for Clark to know the truth about Diana. After the flashback Bruce realized that indeed he had seen her in the past. His eyes regained some life seeing Hero leaving his basket in front of the fireplace and climb the bed to curl on his unfeeling legs. His lips trembled in a smile and began petting the kitten.

“This woman’s name was Vivian…Falcone was fascinated by her but she suddenly disappeared and they couldn’t find her” he rubbed his temple because as his narration moved ahead the headache turned into migraine.

Bruce raised his eyes to Clark’s apathetic face which now flickered in an effort to show some emotion.

“Seeing again that woman, I recognized the Princess…” Clark’s eyebrows jerked upright as he gasped and Bruce nodded. “I know it sounds crazy…but the Amazon was in Dolcetto…”

Clark crossed his arms over the chest and let his head drop to his chest thoughtful feeling Bruce’s fervent eyes watching him avidly, waiting his reaction. What did Bruce expect from him? To believe that?
He raised his head and met Bruce’s eyes. He inhaled deeply.

“So…another thug got to fu…” he closed his mouth “rape you” he said because after his discussion with Diana Bruce’s rapes didn’t seem like tortures but stains.

Bruce narrowed his eyes, his mouth slightly gaping in astonishment. Clark could discern the hurt in those sparkling eyes and would have felt for the younger man but this time Bruce had an agenda and Clark wouldn’t get manipulated.

“Is this the only thing you pay attention to?” Bruce said; he had opened his heart, he had forced his mouth to articulate everything and Clark only focused on the thug that fucked him? It was a fuck for Clark? He pushed some wet locks back to his head.

“What else I should have noticed, Bruce?” Clark asked patient.

Bruce’s eyes regained their resolution: it was expected that Clark would doubt that she was there; he didn’t want to believe anything bad for her. Bruce knew that he had to fight.

“That the Amazon Princess was in Dolcetto for a time and she called herself Vivian.”

“What the Hell would an Amazon Princess want to a filthy cabaret?” he tried to be patient.

Bruce inhaled deeply.

“Exactly! And her hair was honey colored while her eyes still seemed fake. The fact she was in Dolcetto is another indication that she isn’t who she says!”

Clark shook his head and then jerked it upwards in frustration.

“No, this proves that you have lost your reason, Bruce. And also that your jealousy and hatred for Diana has turned you into a devious person!” his lips were pursed in anger as he sent daggers into Bruce’s baffled but mostly hurt eyes.

“But it was a flash…”

Clark’s head snapped at him rapidly.

“You expect me to take that seriously?” he spat and Bruce frowned. “First, how you can be sure that this was a flashback?” it was evident from his tone that he didn’t believe that Bruce really considered that a flashback. “After Crane’s treatment yourself told us that you see things that balance between real experiences and nightmares…” he shook his head amused. “It’s obvious, Bruce: the real experience was that scum fucking you and Diana’s part in the dream was what you wanted to see of her…”

Bruce’s face tensed in disbelief and insult.

“You think I made that up?!?” he asked exasperated though the answer was obvious.

Hero feeling the tension rose and Bruce petted him and lowered him to the floor.

“Go to sleep, Hero” he whispered to the kitten that however stayed there.

Clark closed his eyes and then looked at Bruce challengingly.

“Either that or you used one of the bizarre nightmares Crane caused as an opportunity to accuse Diana” he chuckled. “C’mon, Bruce…till now you never wanted to share your flashbacks with anyone and suddenly you narrate me everything?” he arched his eyebrows and then shook his head in disapproval. “I’d never believe you’re capable of this, Bruce…”

Bruce swallowed his pride that screamed to him to throw the Man of Steel out of his bedroom.

“Clark, I’m not lying” he locked his eyes with Clark’s. “I really saw those things! You know when I’m having a nightmare and when a flashback by reading my brain waves. And you can discern if I’m lying with the same way.”

Clark blinked; Bruce’s eyes were sincere. Yet he couldn’t be sure that he wasn’t pretending: the man was trained perfectly to deceive people. He cupped Bruce’s face with both hands and relished the warmth of that beautiful face.

“With the difference that you’re able to change your brain waves to hide the truth” he smirked and saw Bruce’s eyes darkening.

“I’m not a liar!”

Clark shook his head without letting Bruce’s face.

“I agreed to stop seeing Diana because you wanted, isn’t that enough? Why you must slander her and embarrass yourself?” his tone was patronizing and almost jeering.

“You must realize the truth, Clark; and exactly because you already distanced from her I had no reason to lie...But this is the truth, Clark, and we must search what this woman hides” it was difficult for Bruce to not yell at Clark for calling him a liar but he knew that he was under some influence so he had to tread carefully; if he managed to bring Clark to his senses, to persuade him… But Clark’s mind twirled around other things.

“Why you went to Luthor’s suite?” he freed the younger man’s face.

Bruce was flabbergasted: this was…

“I think we covered that issue back then; I explained the reasons to you and you agreed.”

Clark ran his hands to his hair and huffed shaking his head in denial.

“I didn’t: I just couldn’t change your mind so I followed along trying to protect you but it was a futile task, huh?” he gave a faint smirk that made Bruce’s blood freeze. “So, why you took that road? We could have caught the League with a different, safer way.”

Bruce rubbed again his throbbing temple: why Clark was going back there? And this expression on his face…

“We discussed that and decided that THIS was the safer way: we couldn’t let the League continue plotting for much longer…” he closed his eyes really tired: this migraine didn’t permit him to elaborate on things that he had explained in the past. “Clark” he said determined “what do you hint at? Say it.”

Clark took Bruce’s hand that was rubbing his aching temple and kissed it feathery.

“I think” he locked eyes with Bruce “that you wanted to be captured.”

Bruce jerked his hand away. His eyes widened.
“Of course not! Remember how we planned everything? How you were rushing to assist Selina and me? If Bagdana hadn’t stalled you, you would have been there on time and Talia and the rest would have been arrested” he saw Clark’s eyes wary and he brushed his cheek. “Why on Earth I’d want to be captured by a woman who wanted to punish and enslave me?” he breathed.

Clark pressed his lips.

“Because you’re sick, Bruce…” now Bruce’s eyes bulged and his heart lost several beats.

The younger man’s body stiffened and he used his hands to distance from Clark but the Man of Steel grabbed his upper arms and brought him close again.

“Get off…”

Clark shook his head in denial.

“No…” he retorted calmly. “I heard your babbling patiently, now you’ll listen to me. You asked me to stay away from Diana afraid that I’ll cheat you” Bruce shook his head in denial. “While you did cheat me.”

Bruce’s cold eyes narrowed to slits.

“I didn’t!”

Clark felt a surge of rage but licked his lips calmly.

“Bane, Talia…both of them” there was a threesome – Bruce’s chest heaved violently from pressed breaths. He opened his mouth to retort that these were rapes but Clark knew already and cut him. “Rapes? You chose to be captured knowing what use they’ll do of you! That seems to me like free will”

Bruce felt hot nausea stabbing his stomach while his head got bleary.

“You can’t believe that I wanted to be raped…” his voice was low from disappointment and bitterness but harsh and throaty; his eyes turned inwards. “I knew what they were going to do to me and that’s why I didn’t want to be captured…but I couldn’t let them continue endanger innocent people: I had to take the risk and if I was captured their attention would be away from our project of dismantling the League…” he gulped and looked away. “Have you any idea how it is to be raped?”

Clark could discern the pain in the depths of Bruce’s voice.

“Then why you keep getting yourself in situations that would render you powerless to resist?”

Bruce closed his eyes and yanked his head to the other side.

“I don’t but when you try to do what you must things can get awry…”

“But you’re a man of contingencies: why you didn’t have one this time?”

Bruce rubbed his eyebrows.

“I had…” he managed to keep his voice calm and not growl but irritation was there. “Tony had implanted a tracker to my neck and I wore my special lenses – and we had ready the plan for the attack so you’d have found me quickly. But even contingencies are not perfect sometimes…”

“Exactly” he nodded “when you want them to!”
Bruce turned his stare calmly to him.

“Tell me, Clark: you met the Princess in the hours we were apart?” her influence could explain why he was saying all these things. These weren’t Clark’s words.

“Diana is always your way to divert things, huh? Is that why you act jealous or try to persuade me that I’m under some influence? To make me not notice Thor’s advances? You’re ready to cheat on me again…”

Bruce blinked; migraine was hammering his head.

“You can’t believe that…”

Clark set his jaw.

“I believe my eyes and the facts: why you keep his cape in your closet?”

Bruce looked at the white walk-in closet beside the door.

“You scan my clothes now?”

“Thor’s cape is an Asgardian item – it has a special aura that my sensitive senses caught.”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I wanted to return it to him but he asked me to keep it as a token of friendship and alliance.”

Clark snorted.

“However it’s my friendship with Diana that causes problems…” he chuckled. “If you want to find the reason why some things happen I suggest you turn your attention to you rather in others” the twitching in Bruce’s eyes filled him with satisfaction; he nodded. “It was your unwillingness to listen to me for once, your stubbornness to do what you wanted even though you knew how much this upset me that made me run away to find the tranquility and strength to face your new madness not Diana!”

Bruce frowned.

“What do you mean?”

“All this time I have to fight everyday with your defiance and pigheadedness trying to stick some reason in you and keeping smiling even though I fail every time because you’re recovering and I don’t want to upset you; and then, the first time I feel the need to make a time out from this to breathe – remember? It was when I made” he sniggered “the crime of staying two days away from you - I’m being treated like I did the worst thing in the world: reprimanded and jeered and ridiculed by your friends and being on probation like a disobedient pet! You accuse me of being infatuated by Diana but you never treated me like your lover: you never confide in me what these people did to you. And the one time you did it was to defame Diana. You don’t trust me as someone would his lover…”

He caught his breath watching Bruce who seemed like not taking any air, his eyes completely still and emotionless. Clark sensed the younger man’s temperature dropping some more but those things seemed to be suppressed for time and now exploded.

Clark lollled his head to the side and blinked, his hands moved to cup Bruce’s cheeks but he jerked away and Clark’s hands stayed on the air.
Bruce felt suddenly all the sleep that the nightmare took away coming back crushing his bones; the medication’s effect stronger than ever. He used his hands to lie back on the mattress and then to turn his back to Clark; he muffled himself in the blankets because he felt cold as if he had returned to Falcone’s cage in his ragged clothes. His right lung burnt but he wasn’t worried that it could collapse. He closed his eyes because he wanted to sleep.

“The Kryptonian is just a dream, a stupid dream and you’ll wake and you’ll suffer!” he remembered Bagdana’s words from that old nightmare.

“You accused me of not trusting you because I don’t share with you what these people did to me: I think you know everything by seeing my flesh, my bones – your vision is so acute that you can figure what caused each mark; my body for you is like a book” his voice was calm but empty from any emotion and that hurt more than if Bruce had yelled. “You accused me of not sharing but I have shared things with you that I didn’t with anyone else…”

Clark’s eidetic memory replayed the moment in the greenhouse when Bruce shared with him EVERYTHING.

“You accused me of not trusting you…when you were under the effect Ra’s caused, Tony advised me to have Kryptonite with me” Clark stayed completely still. “But I didn’t because I trusted you that even under the effect you wouldn’t hurt me and would come to your senses. And then I trusted you with much more…” Bruce had his eyes closed stretching his arm to the floor petting his kitten who licked his fingers; he just couldn’t utter the rest. “If she made you believe that I wanted to be…used by my enemies and cheat you then why are you still here?”

Clark brushed the younger man’s back that was turned to him.

“Because I want you…Because I won’t let anyone lay his hands on your body” he whispered in his ear, his hands fondling strongly Bruce’s arm.

Bruce closed his eyes and gritted his teeth.

“I’m not your possession – I love you but I’m not your toy!” he so much hoped to hear something else.

Clark massaged Bruce’s ear with his lips.

“That defiance…We’ll be perfect again, Bruce, if you let go of your hatred towards Diana; and I will heal your sick desire of being dominated by others…”

“I do not have that desire! Bruce growled and his teeth rattled.

He felt his insides boiling with anger for Clark’s insults; there was a burning urge to kick him out of his bedroom; yet he knew that once Clark was ditched by him then this woman would control him totally and that could bring disaster not only to Clark but also to the world – they didn’t know what her plan was. And Bruce felt the responsibility: if someone could stop Superman being turned into a mindless tool this was him.

So he fist his hands and set his jaw recruiting all his love for Clark…and that love was limitless. If thinking that he must heal Bruce from his ‘sick desire’ was going to keep Superman attached to him till they found the solution and save him, then Bruce was willing to swallow it – because even manifested as possessiveness, Clark still didn’t want to leave him and that must be coming from his true love even this woman’s tricks had cast shadows. Clark hadn’t succumbed to his woman so Bruce wouldn’t give up on him – Clark’s choice was still to be with him rather with that woman.
It wasn’t the first time in his life that he had to tolerate – at least now was for someone he loved so much; and when Superman was healed and saved from that influence, things would be as before. Maybe Jor El was already close to the solution…

“You’re the only one I love, Clark” he said coldly without turning his head to look at him. “But you should hold true to your word and stay away from her and don’t let her speak to you.”

Clark closed his eyes. Bruce was unbelievable but he couldn’t let him slip away and succumb to the advances of other men…So he nodded.

“Rest assured, Bruce.”

Bruce sighed and caressed Hero’s fur; the kitten climbing the bed to lie beside him.

“You stopped calling me ‘Star’…”

Clark sprawled on the mattress.

“It is really so important?” he felt so tired and disappointed.

Bruce’s eyebrows flickered. Was it? He had so many things to tell to Clark: about the new armor Lucius finished, about his tonight's patrol and the bug he put in Dr. Quinzel’s phone to watch in case Joker calls her. But oddly not being ‘Clark’s Star’ anymore erased everything.
“I can’t function sexually; I can’t have an erection. I’m like a dead body. Al Ghul tried with every possible way to make my body react – and believe me: he knew the human body better than anyone - but it was futile.”

Clark smiled.

“Bruce, they were raping you from your nine years; of course, your body wouldn’t react to them. But if you let me try...” he made a motion to touch him but Bruce cringed and avoided him.

“No, Clark, I just can’t. And you’ll suffer. You’re blessed with long live and you’ll have only few decades with your mate. Those few years must be happy. You can give endless happiness to someone and you deserve someone who can give something back.”

“You gave it a thorough thinking.”

“I’m not that person, Clark. Your sun will be quenched by my darkness... Please, be happy...”

“How can I be happy without...”

Bruce rubbed his wounded forehead.

“You’ll find someone worthy, someone who won’t cringe whenever you motion to touch her or him, someone who won’t panic whenever you look at him with lust, someone who won’t feel disgusted even with the thought of you loving his or her body, someone who whenever you believe that you give him your love and happiness won’t feel Falcone’s cruel hands instead of your gentle ones, Chill’s sneering eyes instead of your kind ones, Al Ghul’s punishing thrusts instead of your pleasant ones, Bane’s teeth instead of your velvety lips... I have nothing to offer anymore; they took everything my body had to give. I can’t give happiness to anyone, not even to myself.”

Bruce felt something wet and pleasantly rough brushing his cheek and his eyes flickered. Though still in the sleep’s fog he managed to identify the feeling really quickly assisted by that smell which was so similar to fluffy toys: Hero was licking him. He could listen to his loud purr and feel the warmth of his furry body right next to his chest.

He smiled and petted Hero’s back with his eyes still closed and the licking became more insistent.

“Okay, buddy, okay...” he mumbled chuckling because despite the weight over his chest from last night’s events, Hero’s tongue tickled and forced him to forget for a bit his sour mood.

He turned his head though he already knew that there wasn’t anyone at his side: he pressed his lips because although Clark most times left before Bruce woke, today was Sunday, Clark didn’t work so he could stay...if he wanted to but Clark didn’t want.

Bruce hoisted himself in sitting position and took Hero from the armpits so to be face to face.

“You should be lying on your basket, Hero; don’t tell me you slept on the floor?”

The kitten meowed as if giving affirmation and Bruce gave him a peck on the small yellow smudge on his nose. He lowered the kitten on the mattress and settled on his wheelchair which reading his wish came to the bed.
Bruce brushed the almost transparent armrests and looked at the object with affection although he should detest it but Clark had made it for him so it was beautiful and vibrated love. He swallowed hard.

“Come, Hero!” he gestured for the kitten to jump gently on his lap.

The young man opened the drawer of his nightstand and threw some biscuits to Hero’s bowl but the kitten stared at the bag as if demanding more. Yet Bruce raised his eyebrows strictly.

“No more, buddy – you’ll eat in the kitchen.”

Hero gave an elegant jolt and landed on his paws right next to the bowl beginning to eat greedily. Bruce smiled and since his friend was occupied, moved to the bathroom to perform his morning routine.

Once done, he returned to the bedroom and slithered to the rectangular window: pressed the button to the remote and the heavy curtains opened to reveal a dark gray horizon with angry clouds that dripped water. The lawn was wet and seemed crestfallen as everything else on the grounds. He shook his head: typical Gotham weather and moved to wear his casual jeans and black blouse.

Hero had eaten and sat in his butt watching his human friend.

Suddenly, a thought crossed Bruce’s mind and he brought the wheelchair to his nightstand. He opened the drawer, pressed his thumb to the socket and the surface withdrew to reveal a dagger that its blade shone at the dim light of Gotham’s cloudy sky.

Bruce felt affection for the knife; it was a loyal companion that saved him twice…The Blade of Justice. He took it respectfully and brushed carefully its diamond blade and then the hilt of olive tree wood: it still bore his teeth marks from that night Ra’s used it to gag his screams as he fixed his cripple arm.

His eyes looked upwards a bit indecisive.

“You trust me, right? Close your eyes and focus on the sound of the sea…” those clear blue topaz eyes glimmered with love as Clark was holding him gently under the setting sun’s golden rays.

You still trust him, right? He asked himself and inhaled deeply; his heart pounding painfully. His eyes stared at the dagger hesitant.

But then he quickly stashed the Blade in the leather case on the headboard’s backside over his pillow. He knew that if anyone knew that he had created such a secret case would have called him paranoid but Bruce’s life was paranoid through and through…

Alfred had already settled the breakfast stuff on the island and now leaned over the oven. The salivating smell of baking muffins hit Bruce’s nostrils already from the moment lift’s door opened and Hero on his lap stretched his head sniffing.

“Good morning, Master Bruce, Master Hero” Alfred chirped but an imperceptible shadow passed his features because though his young master knew to hide his emotions perfectly with him it was ineffective.

Bruce sensed the change and hurried to dissolve his butler’s worry.

“Good morning, Alfred…though the weather is anything but good. The boys?” he asked and moved his wheelchair to the island to begin eating. “I’m starving!”
Alfred cleared his throat.

“First, let Master Hero down to eat his breakfast, then wash your hands and then you can start eating. And the boys are not up yet.”

Bruce shrugged and did as he was said.

“Lucius is coming for lunch” he mumbled chewing his cake.

Alfred blinked.

“It is always a pleasure for this humble butler” Bruce smiled “to have more people at the table but I’m afraid that he is not coming just to enjoy the meal and our company” he swept a glass with a towel.

Bruce pressed his lips; he had brought the parts of the new armor in a huge briefcase-like case and had taken it to the cave secretly but nothing was meant to stay hidden from Alfred.

“It is ready, Alfred” he said dead serious and the butler pursed his lips. “But I won’t use it before I practice enough with it: Lucius comes to supervise my first time – last night I didn’t use the new thing, I was all the time in the car.”

Alfred gave a nod.

“Although you know my feelings about that, I trust your wisdom, sir” Bruce gave a solemn nod and took a bite from his cupcakes. “Master Bruce, pardon me for my audacity but is everything alright?”

Bruce narrowed his eyes looking at his butler.

“Of course…Why?”

Alfred cocked an eyebrow and continued sweeping the same glass.

“Because I was expecting you to come for breakfast much later as you did yesterday. You see, since Master Kent is unable to take his breakfast down here with you, then like yesterday I assumed that you two would spend some time together before coming for breakfast.”

Bruce managed to not choke on the cupcake he was eating.

“You know that he has many obligations and he can’t do as he wishes…”

Alfred pressed his lips and placed the glass in the cupboard on the sink’s left.

“I surely hope that this is the case, sir…”

Bruce indifferently took his glass of orange juice and sipped.

“I dread the moment Jason will leave…” he mumbled and Alfred cocked an eyebrow.

“Everything will be alright, sir. Master Richard will realize how wrong he is about you.”

Bruce met his butler’s eyes uncertain.

“I just want him to be calm till his grandmother comes back. It’s alright if he doesn’t like me” he widened his eyes “I don’t blame him; but I don’t want to worsen his distress.”
“I hope one day he sees how much you care for him” Alfred said serious.

“The boys are coming…” Bruce mumbled.

“Morning, guys” Jason chirped and hoped on his stool while Dick muttered ‘morning’ without looking around. “My mouth is watering – what’s cookin’, doc?”

“Muffins, Master Jason.”

Hero left his bowl and climbed on Dick’s legs; the boy couldn’t keep his sullen face before the meowing kitten and began petting smiling.

“How are you, Hero?” he asked sweetly so much unlike his usual cold tone.

“He likes you” Bruce said. But Dick didn’t even acknowledge him.

“He is the only one in here that I give a damn if he likes me…”

Jason chuckled.

“Oh! He is on a mood today…I shoulda be like this: he forced me do my homework last night!”

Bruce smiled and sipped his milk grimacing.

“Actually, I intended to ask you if you’d like to call your school and tell them that you won’t go tomorrow but I see that you want to attend.”

Dick rolled his eyes and snorted.

“No chance I’ll spend more time with you!” he said haughtily enjoying Bruce’s uncomfortable blinking; and then lowered his eyes. “My granny doesn’t want me losing classes…”

Jason scratched his messy raven hair.

“If ya ask me I’d take every chance to scram from school…”

Bruce laughed.

“You don’t like school, huh?”

Jason shrugged and threw a cupcake in the air to catch it with his mouth.

“What normal person does?”

Bruce chuckled.

“I loved school back then.”

Jason rolled his eyes.

“Anotha nerd” he waved him off.

Bruce shrugged a shoulder.

“Other boys used to call me many names but ‘nerd’ wasn’t among them – maybe because we were “all nerds…”

Dick lifted a bit his eyes.

“You were bullied at school?”

“Someone could call it that…” Bruce replied looking his hands “Hm…later my physiotherapist will come and we’ll swim: you’re both welcome to join – we have some spare swimsuits” he had bought a couple yesterday because he thought that the boys would like to swim.

Jason’s eyes bulged.

“You have an internal swimmin’ pool? ‘Cause it’s freezin’ out an’ I don’t think you’d swim to the pool in the backyard…”

Bruce lolled his head.

“I see you did some exploration, huh?”

Jason pouted and exchanged a guilty glance with Dick but in the end the younger boy sniffed.

“It’s forbidden?”

Alfred’s glance was crossed with Bruce’s and the young man smiled cordially.

“Oh course not! You two feel free to wander the house as much as you like.”

Alfred however cleared his throat sternly.

“To a certain extend…I would not like the two young masters disarrange the Manor. They should know how to behave.”

Bruce nodded grinning.

“I’m sure they know, Alfred; and they definitely respect your efforts to keep this huge house in order” he winked to the boys but only Jason smirked while Dick hastily turned his attention to Hero.

“As for the pool” Bruce continued “is in the backyard from my parents’ era: Falcone kept it and I let it there though I don’t use it. With my injury we had to build an internal pool for my therapy. Do you know how to swim?”

“Dick taught me – he is a star in every sport.”

Dick rolled his eyes.

“You exaggerate! And I hate swimming!” he spat and made to take a slice of bread only to hear a reprimanding cough from Alfred.

“First, wash your hands, Master Richard and let down Master Hero. Petting an animal even as perfectly inoculated as him isn’t appropriate for the time of the meal.”

Jason giggled.

“Is the fur ball a Master too?”

Alfred cast him a stern look.
“Some kittens deserve the title more than some humans, Master Jason” he said and leaned over the oven to pull out the muffins and serve them.

Jason gulped and shrugged attacking the hot muffins twitching from the burning but not letting the delicacies.

Bruce smiled but Dick glared at him returning from the sink to his stool.

“Some people have everything and others nothing!” he spat glancing at his friend and Bruce pressed his lips; his eyes darkened.

“I know: for eighteen years I had less than nothing – even now none of these feels like mine but at least they can be used to comfort other people.”

His sparkling eyes locked with the boys angry ones.

Selina yawned stretching her body in front of the window that covered the entire external wall – the frames of its rectangular panes so thin that didn’t disrupt the scenery; the view of the vast lake was breathtaking. Only a light, white robe covered her naked body and behind her Steve still asleep hugged tenderly her pillow; the blanket covered only the bottom half of his body leaving his impressively buff torso naked.

Selina couldn’t fight the temptation to cast another glance and smiled slyly because the rips of abs were dancing sensually following Steve’s breath and the way his arms hugged the pillow made her body relive his touch last night.

“If I knew you’d come I’d have worn something sexier” she had said to him last night after they entered her bedroom for privacy.

Steve eyed her body appreciatively and Selina cocked an eyebrow smiling.

“Actually, you’re absolutely amazing in that nightdress…” he blushed. “Actually, I prefer you with that…”

Selina snorted.

“Men are odd creatures…” she replied slyly and Steve cackled. “So…in what I owe that pleasant surprise?” she brushed the lapels of his brown leather jacket. “Do you want to spend our night together? If so, Tony has plenty of popcorn and won’t wait for us to start the movie.”

He suddenly wrapped her waist and pulled her body to his, locking his eyes with hers.

“I want to spend not only this night but the next day and the following day with you but alone…”

Selina pursed her lips.

“Mmm…Interesting; is there a proposal?”

Steve caressed her shoulders and the sense of the fluffy fabric along with Selina’s perfume brought a pleasant numbness that made him stutter a bit.

“I have a small cabin in front of the Placid Lake…I use to go there when I need to calm down and recharge my batteries…”
Selina lolled her head on the side and smirked.

“I thought that Captain America was impervious to that…”

Steve shook his head.

“Of course he does… I’m only human if you extract the…you know. So…The cabin is nothing special – I mean, don’t imagine something like Tony’s accommodations – but I love it: it is my haven. So…if you want we can go there and stay for a couple of days” he saw Selina’s eyes a bit hesitant. “One or two” he hastened to correct “If you don’t have something better to do…”

She sighed.

“I intended to return to Gotham tomorrow…” she said thoughtful, divided between being near Bruce again and spending two days with Steve.

Steve gave her a tight-lips smile.

“I know how important Bruce is and believe me I’d never try to keep you away from him.”

Selina yanked her head and smiled her eyes sparkling.

“Well, Bruce always feels bad believing that I’m not living my life as I want because of him …” she cocked her eyebrows. “And I’m sure he’ll be very happy suspecting that I had two lovely days…So what time should I expect you tomorrow?”

Captain America enclosed her in his strong arms and kissed her lips gently.

“Thank you, Selina!” he licked his lips and his eyes shone so pleased that Selina had the impression that he still enjoyed the taste of her lips. He ruffled his hair. “I was thinking of going there now…Don’t you like night travelling?”

Selina’s eyebrows arched and she clenched her hips.

“I enjoy travelling in the night but as far as I know the lake isn’t exactly near…”

Steve smiled shyly.

“The good thing when you’re an old man” he chuckled “is that you know shortcuts the contemporary people don’t – even maps don’t have them. Not to mention that my motorcycle is faster than the common ones – thanks to Tony’s tricks – so in two hours we’ll be there” he frowned. “Unless you don’t like motorcycles?”

Selina tilted her head and rolled her eyes.

“Careful, handsome: you’re insulting me now…I drive motorcycles since my ten and I own a Harley…” not to mention Batman’s monster bike, she thought cocking her eyebrow.

Steve laughed satisfied.

“So, my road queen, we’re ready to leave” he said moving already towards the door.

She huffed and shook her head.

“Easy, cowboy” she dragged her words seductively “I need some stuff: can’t stay two days only with my skin…”
He narrowed his eyes and approached again cupping her face with both hands.

“I wouldn’t mind that…” he mumbled sensually nuzzling her cheek and Selina felt goose bumps; yet she wouldn’t melt because she wasn’t a fangirl.

So she tapped his nose.

“I bet you wouldn’t, handsome, but I’m a girl with decency” she nodded. “So out of my bedroom and wait to get ready.”

He made to turn but she grabbed his face and gave him a deep kiss on the lips that she understood that took his breath away. She arched her eyebrows eyeing his flushed face and smirked.

“To hold you till I’m ready…and a reward for being a good boy” she said slyly, her eyes bearing promises.

He smiled and moved fast to the door to stop abruptly and loll his head to her with a shy shine in his eyes.

“Can you bring this nightdress with you?”

He left closing the door and didn’t see Selina rolling her eyes and chuckling.

“You sure you prefer a night excursion to the lake Placid instead of Zootopia and popcorn?” Tony asked from his position in the corner sofa, his arm wrapped around Pepper’s shoulders. His eyes’ glittering and his crooked smile shouted that even he didn’t believe that there could be a negative answer to that question and Selina snorted.

“That’s tempting, handsome, but this time I’ll pass…After all, you and Peps deserve some time alone” she winked.

Pepper smiled.

“Have a great time you two!” she said to both of them and Steve nodded.

Tony tousled his hair with one hand.

“Yeah, old man…Take care of our girl or else you’ll have to face my wrath.”

Selina cocked her eyebrows and Tony pouted.

“And Bruce…This lady is the love of his life…”

Steve nodded.

“I know…”

The violent rush of frozen wind as Steve’s motorcycle tore the asphalt made her leather clad body excited – she loved the night air and the way the road’s lights seemed to go dimmer as the hours dragged. She wrapped her arms tight around Steve’s waist and touched her entire torso to his back nestling her face to his neck; Selina sensed the shivers that this caused to him.

The young woman had seen his eyes bulging and goggling amazed when she entered Tony’s living room wearing her skin tight black leather pants and the fitting short jacket. Well, Tony’s eyes were as much dazzled.
As Steve had said, soon the motorcycle left the central road and took them through old paths that certainly few people nowadays crossed. Trees had grown on both sides of the narrow dirt lane and bushes made the whole scenery darker – especially, since public lighting was nonexistent there: the only light from the bike’s headlights. But Selina loved the wild environment; the icy cold that formed curtains of fog among the plants…

And then as they began ascending a mountain lane, in a turn the lake appeared. Distant because they were on a peck of the mountain, and majestic; lying peaceful in the night’s silence, illuminated by thousands of small lights through her endless body – the mountain peaks that surrounded her completed the impressive view and the feeling of grandeur.

Steve had stopped the motorcycle, took off his helmet and gazed.

“Beautiful isn’t it?” he looked at Selina who took off her helmet as well. “As many times as I see her throughout the years, she is always breathtaking…If you want will come here during daytime…My cabin isn’t far…”

Steve’s cabin was small but absolutely gorgeous: made of cylindrical thick logs with two small square windows at the sides of the door and a triangular roof completing the feeling of being in a fairytale.

Of course, after two hours of trip they didn’t lose time with the other rooms. The bedroom had an abundant view to the lake through the enormous window in the wall opposite the bed’s side and Selina gaped as soon as Steve opened the light, white curtains. She walked slowly to stand beside him gazing.

“It’s beautiful” she whispered.

“You’re more beautiful” he muttered and cupped her head to capture her lips with all the fever he felt.

Selina wrapped her arms around his back and fondled passionately, instantly relieving him from his jacket and shirt. He had lit the fireplace as soon as they entered the room yet they didn’t feel any cold. He did the same with her clothes and Selina hugged his hips with her legs as he brought her to the bed that surprisingly was very clean and with fresh sheet – Selina thought smirking that Captain America had planned it but she had no problem.

She found herself entangled in the strong body she craved, her nails digging her muscle bound back while he thrust in her…

Selina holding a cup of strong coffee stared at the lake’s waters that reflected the wild sharp mountains which surrounded the lake and the sky. Clear blue sky with a few happy fluffy clouds playing with the smiling sun. She thought the gloomy weather back in Gotham and wished this sun smiled to her friend too, elevating his spirits. Selina sighed and sipped from her coffee.

A calloused, powerful yet tender hand squeezed her shoulder and a hot mouth kissed her neck.

“Are you alright?” his voice was raspy from the sleep.

Selina immersed her fingers in Steve’s messy locks and turned to face him locking her lips with his.

“I was thinking of Gotham’s weather in contrast with this…I wish Bruce was gazing at the same sun…”

Steve caressed her chin.
“He is alright, Sel…He has your love protecting him even when you’re far away…”

She chuckled and brushed his cheek; Selina hoped that was true.

Bruce maneuvered his chair to the grounds; he was muffled in his thick, long coat – there wasn’t another way Alfred would permit him to wander outside with such freezing cold. It was afternoon and Clark hadn’t appeared yet forming a knot in Bruce’s guts. He was worried for Clark’s safety and for the things he could be thinking alone, recounting that woman’s poison…

He should be angry that Clark believed those things about him, believing her words over Bruce’s but he sympathized with him: the Man of Steel was affecting by something and was difficult for him to fight off the impact of these words. Clark was trying to stay true to his promises and avoid Diana yet Bruce didn’t kid himself: Clark was attracted to her either due to that mysterious influence or… due to her beauty.

He hoped that at least Clark had found refuge to the Fortress and was running those tests… His hands clenched the white roses on his lap, two bouquets. Two lonely, gray tombstones greeted him from the hill’s top and Bruce got the impression that they were actually happy every time he went there.

He snorted: two pieces of stone can’t be happy…two dead can’t be happy for anything; even their own son. He shrugged and sighed; it was just something his mind made up to comfort his need to feel connected with his parents.

He lifted his eyes to the sky: it was gray and the afternoon was dull except for a small strip where the clouds had receded a bit, permitting a glimpse of sun that managed to give a hopeful light to that day. Bruce gazed again at the tombstones that seemed to call him. Thankfully, Tony had taken care and a lane was carved to the small hill to allow him to reach the top with his wheelchair.

The humidity was increased even for Gotham’s standards and he felt it deep in his healing bones but he couldn’t stay inside. Jason had left after the lunch and although Bruce knew that the boy had to return to his home and his mother, he felt depressed because he could sense Richard’s misery for being alone in the house of someone he hated; someone who he considered responsible for every tragedy in his young life…

He looked down and sighed: Dick had retreated to his room right after Jason left taking the orphan child’s temporary carelessness; because though his granny’s disappearance never left his mind, Dick relished his friend’s company and let his mind escape its despair. The boy was almost happy with Jason around chirping and Bruce was sure that Dick was reminded of the days with his baby brother.

His raised his eyes to the balcony of Dick’s room; that room didn’t look to the hill with the graves. The boy was probably reading or watching TV: Bruce had asked from Dick’s trainer to excuse him from his training for the weekend to allow the boy to find his composure after his granny’s disappearance. Of course Dick used the Manor’s gym to keep his form and let some steam out of his system – Jason on the other hand joined him in the pool.

“Wow! Dude, ya’re fuckin’ fast for a…”

“Paraplegic” Matt completed Jason’s phrase, chuckling with the boy’s goggling eyes. “And, yes, Bruce is very fast.”

In the water… Because outside he was lame. He pressed his lips in a tight line. Lucius came for lunch and exactly like Alfred, Leslie who was there too, looked the scientist rather angrily and Bruce was afraid that the boys could suspect something.

He understood their feelings: they were worried that he could do some madness having in his disposal the new armor Lucius made for him. Alfred and Leslie dreaded that he could find himself again in a situation like the one that almost killed him.

And he couldn’t deny the similarities: when he left the hospital to stop Joker from killing the children he was paralyzed and his mind’s power enabled him to stand and fight Joker. But then…He almost died…What if something similar happened? Bruce knew that he wouldn’t let anyone die even if this cost his own life or body wholeness: his loved ones knew it as well and that increased their agony…

But Bruce felt so great when he wore every part of the new armor except the cowl. And then, when Lucius grinning broadly gestured to him to rise from his chair …

“Make a step, Mister Wayne” Lucius said encouragingly and Bruce didn’t need more.

Actually, he felt very stable when he rose from the chair and that gave him self-confidence. He set his jaw and nodded…and then raised his eyes to Lucius whose eyes sparkled.

“This is…unbelievable…” Bruce exclaimed as his legs carried the step.

Lucius chuckled.

“I see that you didn’t have much confidence in my inventiveness…” he said mock insulted.

A big smile carved Bruce’s face.

“On the contrary, Lucius: I was sure. But still I didn’t expect it to be so…easy.”

Lucius’ face sobered and he crossed his arms.

“Actually, it’s not as easy as in natural walking: as you may have noticed there’s a considerable (in comparison with normal walking) reaction time between the brain’s order and the actual movement – you see, the nanochips we use are external. They are the same type that will be used in your surgery, only they would be more sensitive and incorporated to the new spinal parts that will replace the destroyed. Thus, I’m afraid, your moves won’t be as swift and stormy as before – that agility and speed would be restored only after the surgery and much training. Till then you must tread carefully and be very wise in choosing how to use your armor because I do understand the irritation and anger of your loved ones and believe me I’ll hate myself if anything happens to you…” the man swallowed hard every sparkle of playfulness out of his eyes. “I hope you’d spare me from that burden…and be as responsible as always.”

Bruce nodded and Lucius came closer pointing to the pieces covering his legs.

“We based that pieces to exosceletons similar to those used during your therapy with the difference that these pieces have microreceptors sending messages to the brain and receiving orders executed through electrodes. Exactly as in virtual reality.”

“And Robocop?”

Lucius chuckled.

“I’m glad the 80’s cinema assists our efforts…”
Bruce made more steps and gritting his teeth raised his leg in a simple kick that startled Lucius.

“I see you’re getting the hang of it, Mister Wayne.”

Bruce estimated that this simple kick indeed came a bit – a considerable bit when you’re facing a dangerous opponent – delayed and that certainly would be more obvious in more complex moves. So he needed more practice if he wanted to eliminate as much as possible the reaction time that intervened. However something else stuck in his mind.

“Lucius, you said ‘we’?”

Lucius grinned and lolled his head on the side.

“You didn’t expect Mister Stark staying out of this, didn’t you?”

Bruce shook his head beaming: although he learnt that his friend postponed his armor and probably would do anything for this armor to stay unfinished, after Lucius was ordered to move on, Bruce had the secret hope that Tony wouldn’t hold a grudge...

“Of course before confronting criminals with that armor – I’d suggest normal thugs – you need to practice a lot…”

“That goes without saying…”

And then as he made more steps under Lucius’ eagle eyes, Bruce thought of his last night’s flashback and Clark’s doubts. Well, Bruce was certain that it was indeed a flashback and not a mishmash of reality and horrific fantasy caused by Crane’s treatment. However, wanted confirmation: he didn’t want to be unfair to the Amazon neither misled in his searches. So when Lucius left, he called the only person that could do that.

“Mr. Petrou, do you happen to remember a woman called Vivian?”

The man chuckled.

“Who could forget someone like her?”

Bruce nodded, pressing his lips relieved: so it wasn’t a lie of his brain.

“Do you remember her features?”

“Mmm… I think so… Honey colored long hair, tall, lean with curves but she seemed strong. Very beautiful face: straight nose, red, heart shaped lips and blue eyes that had something odd… Hm… I think she wore lenses. Everyone was infatuated with her but she had eyes only for the boss… although rumor had it that she slept with a thug called Bart. I think only me and Chill didn’t salivate over her” he cackled.

“Mr. Petrou, do you know where she came from?”

“Nobody knew, Mister Wayne; it was like she fell from the sky. If she was from Gotham’s working girls Falcone would certainly knew her but she wasn’t. Even Bruna who was her friend didn’t know anything about her background.”

“And when she disappeared?”

“Falcone searched desperately for her with no result until he found another whore that got his interest and forgot her…”
The sky was still gray but it had stopped raining though the cold and the humidity was torturous. But the weak sun kept trying to light the afternoon.

Bruce placed tenderly the flowers on the base of each tombstone and stared at the names brushing with his fingers the carved letters. Suddenly, he felt that he wasn’t alone but didn’t show his awareness until his visitor moved closer.

“I hope I’m not intruding…” a sneering voice said pretending seriousness.

Bruce inhaled. He knew that voice though he hadn’t met the man more than twice. He didn’t turn to face him and the footsteps came right next to him.

“How sad…” the newcomer sighed “and how poetic: the orphan boy visits his parents’ graves on a rainy day…”

Bruce jerked his head towards him.

“You don’t give a damn if you’re intruding!” he spat narrowing his eyes.

Loki widened his eyes and raised his hands in appeasement.

“Relax, Bruce…” he sighed. “I see you didn’t miss me a lot, huh?”

Bruce rolled his eyes.

“No…What do you want?”

Loki put his hands behind his back and circled Bruce who remained indifferent.

“To see you” the god said arching his eyebrows. “You’re a sight to be seen after all” he smirked. “I tried to visit you at your bathroom” Bruce’s eyes bulged “to have a complete impression but there’s something in this house that thwarts me from entering exactly as with your mind…” he lolled his head on the side and eyed Bruce curious like an interrogator. “What is that, Bruce? I’m a trustworthy god, you know.”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“I doubt that…And I don’t know what are you talking about…maybe you lost your skill?”

Loki cackled jerking his head backwards and then calmed and shook his head in denial.

“No, I didn’t lose my skill…But you” he pointed his index finger at him “have something…”

Bruce looked at his parents’ graves feeling ashamed for all this fuss there.

“Leave” he said “please.”

“You shouldn’t want me to leave and let you alone” Bruce narrowed his eyes “while Joker is free and wants to get you. You know, it isn’t wise wandering alone in these grounds.”

“I see you know a lot about me.”

Loki pouted.

“I told you that I like mysteries and you tickle my…curiosity” he looked upwards “and more bodily parts of me…”
“Curiosity killed the cat.”

Loki laughed.

“Though I can transform into a cat, I’m not one…” he leaned to Bruce’s face. “Maybe I should help Joker get you…then perhaps it’d be easier to unlock your secrets…”

Bruce’s eyes twitched as if Loki helping Joker was a surprise for him.

“A god shouldn’t collaborate with a mad criminal who holds no interest on the human life. He killed an innocent young man just three days ago.”

A wide smirk appeared in Loki’s face.

“A god can do whatever he wants: your mortal morality has no value for us…” Bruce frowned.

“That’s a lie, Loki!”

Two strong feet made the soil shake as Thor landed; his irritation radiating from his tense face and the blue sparkles Mjolnir sent around. His eyebrows had formed a line and his baby blue eyes were dark and angry so unlike their usual kindness.

He glared at the other god and his fist clenched more around Mjolnir’s hilt.

“I told you to not bother Bruce, Loki!” he gritted his teeth but his brother crossed his arms, lolled his head on the side and smiled wickedly.

“How is this even possible when you, my dear brother, are so fascinated with him?” he winked and with a snap of his fingers he vanished.

Thor’s annoyed exclamation created a lightning and a thunder and a distant ‘ouch!’ reached them. He closed his eyes and looked at Bruce who was entirely calm.

“I’m sorry for Loki’s intrusion, Bruce” he shook his head. “I can inform Asgard and take permission to jail him if you want.”

“Thank you but for the time being I think it best to let him act till he leads us to his partners or show us if he is part of a broader plan. He just revealed his ‘intention’ to help Joker get me” Thor frowned and pressed his lips “he didn’t want to reveal that he already works with him and Crane.”

Thor nodded.

“Perhaps if we got Loki out of the picture we could catch the others easier.”

Bruce looked him in the eyes.

“Do not underestimate Gotham’s criminals.”

The blond smiled.

“After the incident at the Tower, how could I?”

The human nodded.

“And we must figure out if Loki knows anything about what else is evolving in the shadows” he furrowed his brow. “Thor, you mentioned once that Loki can’t invade your mind nor control your thoughts.”

“Exactly and I heard him saying that the same goes for you too” he arched his eyebrows. “Of course, that is natural since you managed to defeat a mighty demon. Speaking of which, I went down to the Tartarus and Bagdana’s jail: he is safely chained there.”

Bruce lowered a bit his eyes and then looked at him again.

“Thank you, I really appreciate it” Thor smiled and gave a courteous nod. “Now concerning the mind control, can you tell if someone is under Loki’s influence?”

“Yes, I did it many times when Loki played with other gods to enjoy himself or get what he wanted” he frowned. “You suspect that someone is affected by Loki’s control?”

Bruce licked his lips and nodded.

“You met Superman at the party: is there a chance that Loki affects his brain?” he said determined piercing the god with his stare.

Thor was dumbfounded; he narrowed his eyes with real interest in them.

“No, Bruce, there was no trace of Loki’s influence on Superman” Bruce nodded. “Things with Superman are so bad that you suspect a foreign influence on him?” he leaned and held Bruce’s shoulders looking the young man in the eyes.

Bruce didn’t want to admit it – not that his question wasn’t revealing enough. He shook his head but he didn’t manage to articulate what he wanted because he heard the familiar whoosh and the soft sound of Superman landing. He turned immediately to him; his relief evident.

But like many times recently Bruce’s heart sunk. Superman’s imposing posture was stretched proudly and challenging, his hands holding his hips. It was his face – the face Bruce so much loved – that made the young man feel the freezing cold of the day devastating: Superman’s eyes were filled with sarcasm under two cocked eyebrows; they had the usual breathtaking blue topaz color yet Bruce could trace the angry red lurking underneath. His jaw was set upwards regarding Bruce and Thor who had risen.

“Superman, I’m honored to see you again” Thor greeted him cordially but Superman answered with a cold smirk.

“Really now?” he hissed.

Bruce’s eyes darkened because he knew that stare.

“I was worried” Bruce said.

Superman marched closer releasing his hips.

“You were worried so you called Thor here to organize a rescue mission?” Superman retorted snidely and then let his mouth agape pretending surprise. “But I’m Superman, babe: everyone knows that I’m unbreakable.”

Bruce looked him right in the eyes.

“I wish it was true” he answered.

But Superman rushed to him, his anger visible in his entire face.
“You were posing demands to me, you were telling a bunch of melodramatic things just to meet with him the next day behind my back! What are you doing with him after everything we told? After everything you said to me last night?”

Bruce stayed unfazed by Superman’s wrath even if only the air from uttering those words was burning his face.

“Calm down, Superman.”

Superman grabbed Bruce’s upper arms.

“Don’t tell me to calm down when I catch you…” the rattle of his teeth was loud and he shook Bruce.

Thor couldn’t stand it anymore: he understood what Superman implied and that infuriated him. But more he was enraged for Superman’s behavior to Bruce: if he had a problem he should confront Thor and not a man in a wheelchair. He snatched Superman’s shoulder and pulled him away from Bruce.

“Enough!” Thor’s voice was accompanied by a thunder and his hammer’s radiation.

Superman chuckled and looked a last time at Bruce’s completely calm eyes before glaring at the god.

“Don’t you dare touching me again! So…you’re his newest protector?” the Man of Steel said haughtily.

“Bruce doesn’t need protectors” the god answered meeting Superman’s glare with his own.

Superman lolled slightly his head backwards glancing at Bruce, smiling sarcastic.

“Yes, he doesn’t” he focused again to Thor “yet we like to protect him once we take his body…We enjoy so much his body that we like to think that he needs us…He is quite the fuck, huh, Thor? Even for an Asgardian god… so you naturally want to protect him – especially from the man he cheated.”

Thor’s forehead cracked in a thunder like wrinkle and his lips twitched angrily.

“You have no right to speak like this to Bruce! I didn’t do anything with him! Loki was here harassing him and I intervened because Bruce can’t reveal his true skills.”

Superman shook his head.

“So you indeed became his protector… And you found the right excuse: or Bruce thought it? He is very good at making up things. You should have heard him last night.”

Thor clenched his jaw and his hammer.

“You call me a liar?!”

Superman shook his head laughing amused.

“Not only a liar but a thief too” he moved to meet Thor challenging him with his eyes.

Bruce raffled his locks and looked sad at his parents’ tombstones: he asked them to forgive him for that. He looked at the two gods: behind them the clear slice of sky was covered again with heavy gray clouds and the chirping sun vanished.
“You’re not worthy of a man like Bruce if you believe such things.”

Superman nodded.

“And you decided that you are the worthy one so you fucked him in New York, huh?”

Thor raised Mjolnir ready to blow Superman as a lightning cracked the gray sky; the Man of Steel had already his fist ready to stop the mighty hammer but suddenly a gentle hand touched his elbow and he felt numb. He looked at his opponent’s face and he saw the same numbness, showing that a second hand touched him as well.

Bruce was between them unafraid of their power, his eyes two pieces of rock, his jaw set in absolute determination.

“Stop!” his voice wasn’t loud but stern as his flashing eyes. “None of you want to do this…And you tread on my parents’ graves…you disturb their peace. You’re both better than this!”

Both gods looked at the tombstones and Thor lowered his head; Superman looked at Bruce angry and took off.

Bruce closed his eyes and inhaled deeply; Thor squatted and rubbed his upper arms.

“I’m sorry; if I knew that he was so jealous of me I’d have found a subtler way to repel Loki.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Is nothing you did, Thor.”

Thor bit his bottom lip and gazed at the sky where Superman had vanished.

“Things are indeed serious” he remarked and looked again at Bruce. “I think he is dangerous for you, Bruce – in this state. Do you want me to speak to him? To explain?”

The human looked at the same direction.

“No, it’ll make things worse and probably will lead to a fight. “

“You can’t stay unprotected; if you want me, I can guard the Manor…” but seeing Bruce rubbing his temple tired “or I can inform Tony to take his measures.”

“No, I’ll be alright; Superman won’t harm me. Thank you, Thor – I mean it…But it’s better if you focus on Loki.”

Thor nodded.

“If that’s what you want but I’ll say it again: if Superman gets aggressive…, utter my name and I’ll come…”

Bruce smiled and patted Thor’s warm hand on his shoulder.

Clark flew anger blinding him; his body knew his destination without his mind guiding. He saw the Statue of Liberty at New York’s port and halted for a second before he moved to the Battery Park where Bruce met Thor – by chance; he snorted.
It was late and the fierce cold made New Yorkers to choose the warmth of their houses than wander to the park. And it was easy for Superman to conceal himself from the few that strolled.

Suddenly, he caught a smell: a mesmerizing smell of cinnamon, orange and hibiscus. Cinnamon…he thought: sweet and bitter like Bruce. He stood in front of a small, rainbow bridge made of rock.

His eyes saw the same scenery but under the pale, morning light, wrapped in the icy mist.

Thor held Bruce glued to his body and dragged him under the bridge to pin him to the pillar. The movement was fast and almost violent yet Bruce’s eyes were fervent, sparkling with delight as the blond god ripped his clothes off his body leaving him naked.

The unbelievably blue eyes of the god travelled Bruce’s body awed and gripping his upper arms, Thor made his own clothes disappear obviously with nothing more than a thought. Bruce’s hungry hands fondled the Asgardian’s broad back ending to his firm buttocks; his mouth tasting divine flesh as Thor caressed Bruce’s wet locks.

“You’re beautiful, Bruce!” Thor whispered to Bruce’s face.

“Do it!” Bruce breathed to him, his mesmerizing eyes sparkling determined.

The god captured his mouth in a passionate kiss that seemed like uprooting the mortals head; but the Asgardian knew as much as to hold the back of Bruce’s head to deepen more his kiss without injuring the frail man.

Bruce tousled Thor’s long locks arching his neck for him to suck and bite as the powerful chest rubbed to his making the cold morning so hot that sweat streaked Bruce’s breasts.

“Golden hair…” the human exclaimed with adoration.

Two divine hands grabbed Bruce’s buttocks spreading and with one thrust the god was inside him. Bruce moaned and Thor sucked his neck with abandon.

“Don’t stop!” Bruce grunted biting Thor’s ear, his hands fisting painfully the god’s locks. “I love your golden hair…”

“I’m thrilled…Oh, Bruce!” he took the paralyzed legs and settled them around his hips to thrust deeper.

Bruce had his eyes closed, his breaths wet gasps arousing Thor’s skin.

“I feel you in me…” Bruce moaned pleased and surprised. “How…”

“My body has the energy of the thunder – I’m happy this can revive your body.”

Bruce jerked his head backwards and Thor licked the arch his neck created making the young man groan and shiver, more violently when the god’s mouth sucked flesh from Bruce’s chest, the facial hair making the human chuckle.

“More…” he growled demandingly digging his nails to Thor’s back as the Asgardian gave a frantic pace to his thrusts hugging protectively the human body to not crush in the stone of the bridge.

Bruce’s body was dancing on Thor’s causing moans and roars of ecstasy from the god and deeper thrusts...

Clark’s eyes became all red; he had seen enough. He clenched his jaw and raised his fisted hand in the air taking off to Gotham: he now knew the truth.

“Superman!”

He knew that voice and that intoxicating perfume of every flower in the planet – a pure perfume, a clean perfume; a perfume promising happiness and heavenly pleasure. A body that this cheating human ordered him to stay away…

He didn’t turn his face to look and flew in full speed.

Bruce wasn’t sleeping though his wristwatch on the nightstand said that it was past midnight: the medicine didn’t do anything to smooth his worry for Clark and the flashes that constantly cracked the dark sky just increased his agitation; he had let the curtains tied to have a clear view of the horizon hoping to catch a glimpse of Clark coming back.

He was working on his tablet for hours when he admitted that this agitation wasn’t doing him any good so he decided that a warm milk was necessary if he wanted to stand the night.

Bruce slithered his chair to the door and Hero rushed to him from his basket placing himself on his lap.

“What? Do you need some milk to sleep too?” he grinned to his friend.

Bruce moved in the darkness of the vast corridor to the lift but as he was ready to get inside the lift he heard muffled sobs from Dick’s room. He frowned and went there; he stood before the door listening to the boy’s sobs amidst the thunders and although hesitant he finally opened the door and got inside.

He maneuvered his chair to the bed and switched on the nightstand lamp; he placed his hand carefully on the boy’s trembling shoulders.

“It’s alright, Richard” he whispered. “Only a bad dream; wake up.”

Two wet eyes looked at him vulnerable at first but then recognizing him two pieces of ice.

“What do you want here?” he spat.

“I heard noise…and I came to see if you’re alright.”

The boy ruffled his hair and rubbed his eyes, remembering the nightmare and then his eyes bulged when a thunder roared.

“Want to tell me what you saw?” Bruce asked carefully. “I have many nightmares as well and I know how horrifying it is…”

“It’s…it’s nothing” he said coldly. “I don’t want you near me…”

“I know…I’m sorry…are you better now? Want me to get you something?”

“No, go away!”

Hero meowed complaining for the boy’s dismissal but Bruce turned to leave when a new thunder made the boy gasp. Bruce looked at him and Dick’s eyes narrowed.

“I’m afraid of thunders, okay? Mom used to sit with me until I was asleep and Brian cuddled me…”
after they were gone, granny sat with me – but now she is gone too!”

Bruce cupped Dick’s hand on the mattress.

“It’s not bad to be afraid of things…Braveness is the ability to realize our fear and face it. You will be again with your granny, Dick: I promise.”

The boy turned his head on the other side and Bruce huffed.

“Do you want me to stay here till you’re asleep? I can’t sleep either.”

Dick jerked his head at him snarling.

“Hell, no! I want you out of my life! It is so hard to get it?!?”

Bruce nodded.

“Okay” he took Hero from the armpits carefully and gave him to Dick who hugged him tenderly. “I guess Hero is a better company than me” he smiled with pressed lips. “And he likes you…so good night to both of you.”

He turned and smiled hearing Hero’s purring and Dick caressing the animal. Before leaving the room he went to the balcony door and pressed a button at the small control panel on the frame. The thunders’ sound was instantly muffled. He tilted a bit his head backwards sensing Dick’s eyes on him.

“A small emergency trick…” he winked and left the room.

Upon returning to the Master bedroom he rushed to the window: he always knew when Clark was coming. He opened the window and cold, fierce wind along with frozen raindrops invaded the room.

Superman hovered outside the open window, his blue eyes locked with Bruce’s. He was icier than the wind and the lightning on the sky behind him revealed his distorted in anger features.

“Hello, Bruce…” the creepy bang of the thunder wasn’t enough to conceal his voice’s anger.

Bruce raised his head.

“Clark.”
Chapter 37

The bedroom was cast under the soft, sweet light of the bluish secret lighting behind the headboard and the red-yellow dancing flames inside the fireplace. All other lights were off because Bruce didn’t want to alert Alfred that he wasn’t sleeping.

Bruce stared at Superman’s imposing, statuesque body hovering outside his window: an enraged god amidst a storm giving the impression that his ire caused the thunders. His eyes met Clark’s but those eyes although so familiar and beloved were also cold; colder that the rush of wind that surged the room as Superman flew in, causing the curtains to jerk in the air.

Superman stood in front of Bruce with his hands fisted at his sides, his red cape billowing behind him; water dripped from his body to the thick, expensive carpet; his messy hair was plastered in his head, some wild bangs framing his forehead which was creased almost like the bolts creased the dark sky.

Bruce could see the red of Clark’s wrath in his beautiful eyes; and he knew the poison that like acid burnt his mind… He was angry with him yet Bruce couldn’t feel terror or even fear although now the most powerful being on Earth stood before him with gritted teeth and a deep wrinkle in his forehead. The disabled human kept looking Superman in the eyes calm and unfazed by the vibrations this mighty body emanated; this body that always gave him love…

“Can you close the window?” Bruce asked him casually.

But Superman didn’t move, not a twitch on his face to indicate that he had heard; his chest was heaving, his eyes still. Bruce nodded.

“I know you’re invulnerable but maybe you should wear something dry and warm?” he passed him and brushed the key on the control panel of the window’s frame and the window closed. “Clark, we need to talk” he tilted slightly his head on the side gazing at him: Jor El had contacted him a few hours ago.

A rush of wind and his chair was rapidly turned around, Superman grabbing the armrests and leaning over Bruce so close that the rest of the room was out of his vision range except from a line of fire that cracked the black sky foretelling the coming of a thunder.

“No, Bruce” Superman snarled and the ground of his teeth distorted his voice before the deafening bang of a thunder completed the impression. “For once, I shall talk and you listen!”

Bruce didn’t flinch even though Superman’s hands from clenching the armrests passed to clenching his upper arms. His eyes were locked with Clark’s.

“Jor El contacted me and said that you never went to the Fortress since that first time… you didn’t run the tests again” he set his jaw. “You were lying to me” he didn’t raise his voice neither used an accusing tone.

Clark’s cheeks bloated from the air his ire held in his mouth and his eyes became blazing slits. Bruce felt the grip on his arms becoming bruising and in a rush his body was lifted abruptly and he was crashed on the mattress, flat on his back, Clark’s dripping body pinning him down; but still he was looking at him as always without fear and with love.

Yet for Clark Bruce’s eyes were arrogant, challenging, mocking… He felt the familiar flare of resistance in the healthy part of Bruce’s body; Clark ran it with his eyes slowly, from the groin up to the chest and then touched his body on the human’s torso to place his tongue on the dimple of Bruce’s neck. He licked sensually and a bit harshly along the neck’s line ending up to his jaw and capturing greedily the younger man’s lips, sucking and chewing brutally, his hands grapping Bruce’s face.

“Bitter and sweet” he rasped piercing Bruce’s eyes with his “like the cinnamon the perfume of which you have…” he smirked sensing the trapped body trembling slightly as every time he hugged him and immersed his fingers in the brunette locks. “You like being pinned, don’t you?” he asked snidely.

Bruce met his eyes. Clark’s body over his torso felt so heavy like his lover didn’t do any effort to spare him from the burden.

“Clark, you didn’t do the tests…” he pressed his lips. “You were hiding the truth from me all this time.”

He massaged Bruce’s head with his fingers entangled in his hair.

“I didn’t need the tests” Clark cocked an eyebrow, his eyes sparkling with glee. “It was you that demanded those tests and wanted to make me feel ill” Bruce narrowed his eyes, a deep frown in his forehead. “And that’s the reason I didn’t tell you: I know how pig headed you are – you never admit you’re wrong and always want things your way; so I didn’t want your selfishness to worsen your health or even harm you because I knew how agitated you’d become and how insanely you’d continue argue about this. Now, my turn!”

Bruce bit his lips and shook his head to evade Clark’s hands that now caressed his cheeks but in a possessive way that didn’t feel anything like Clark…

“I didn’t do it from selfishness, Clark; I want you protected from any danger” Clark smirked and his eyes flashed with irony. “And there’s indeed something going on implicating you” he locked his eyes with Clark’s “Vivian is a real person, Clark: Mr. Petrou confirmed it.”

Clark yanked his head backwards letting out a cackle.

“That man would say anything you want!” he said exasperated. “So drop that ridiculous issue – it doesn’t help your case…”

Bruce eyes sparkled.

“My case?”

“Yeah! Let’s talk about you, Bruce: your sins…” the younger man felt Superman’s body tensing with boiling energy and his pajamas that were drenched from the intimacy with Superman’s wet body becoming ice on his skin. “And first of all” Clark tilted his head on the side and narrowed his eyes imitating puzzlement “why you closed the window?” Bruce’s eyes filled with bewilderment. “Thor’s warmth doesn’t linger long enough?” he cocked his eyebrows.

“What has Thor to do with anything?” Bruce knew the newest poison in Clark’s mind but he wanted him to speak openly.

Clark bared his teeth and his hands that pinned down Bruce’s upper arms tightened. Yet Bruce remained tranquil.

“Why don’t you say clearly what you’re thinking?”
“I said it clearly, Bruce, already! When I caught you in your parent’s graves” he snorted. “I’d never expect you to choose your parents’ graves for a romantic date... or more.”

Bruce’s eyes bulged.

“It wasn’t anything like that!” he shook his head. “You would never have thought that if your mind wasn’t affected.”

Clark grabbed Bruce’s chin and snorted.

“The fact I’m not naïve anymore is a sign of something ominous that threatens me, huh, Bruce? How...convenient!”

Bruce inhaled deeply.

“I visited my parents’ graves and Loki appeared suddenly taunting me and Thor came to stop him: we had talked about Loki’s involvement in Joker’s attack at the Avengers’ Tower so Thor was watching his brother’s movements” he explained calmly though Clark’s weight on his torso was getting more and more tiresome.

Clark cocked his eyebrows sarcastic and nodded.

“Of course...” he released Bruce’s chin. “There’s New York…” he brought both his hands to the younger man’s neck brushing. “So...in Battery Park you discussed about...Joker and the attack.”

Bruce wasn’t a fool: he knew what bothered Clark’s mind.

“It was a chance meeting, Clark, and, yes, we discussed what happened” he didn’t try to avoid his ministrations or move away because he wanted Clark to believe him.

“Bruce, stop playing games with me!” Clark’s shout was a surprise. “The least I’d expect from you is to be honest and stop mocking me! But you want everything, don’t you?” Bruce narrowed his eyes as Clark nodded. “Me and Thor and who knows who other...So you make me feel sick and run around for tests and you get all the time to...play with gods...You’re really greedy, huh, Bruce?”

Clark was really pissed with Bruce’s hypocrisy; the human using his perfect training into filling his mesmerizing eyes with honest puzzlement.

“I saw everything, Bruce!” he clenched Bruce’s upper arms and shook him. “Stop denying it!”

Bruce gritted his teeth; his patience running thin, his hands fist to withstand the pain from Clark’s grip.

“Denying what? What you saw, Clark?”

Superman relaxed a bit his grip and nodded.

“So you want to hear it...Okay! I saw you under the rainbow stone bridge at Battery Park, pinned on the pillar” Bruce frowned and Clark smirked with his eyes shining gleefully. “Completely naked under Thor’s body...his dick pounding your ass and you moaning and begging for more...”

Bruce closed his eyes and shook his head exasperated.

“You kept caressing his...” he sniggered “golden locks and dug your nails in his back urging him to go deeper... What do you say now, babe?”
Bruce opened his eyes that sparkled determined.

“When did you see all these?” he inquired tranquil.

Clark sniggered.

“Today, after I caught you with him at the graves and you ousted me.”

The younger man huffed.

“I didn’t oust you, Clark…And I was at the Park two days ago so what you saw wasn’t true” his voice was kind and patient explaining again what was obvious.

Clark leaned his head above Bruce’s increasing the weight that the human had to endure.

“Your smell was strong under the bridge, lingering there: a smell indicating great sexual satisfaction…”

Bruce bit his lip.

“I didn’t even see the rainbow bridge you mention…and…Clark, get a grip: you accuse me for something that you say that has happened two days ago but you imagined it today! That’s crazy!”

Superman growled frustrated and cupped Bruce’s face panting angrily into his eyes.

“Crazier than you accusing Diana of being an impostor just because you think her hair is dyed? Crazier than you claiming that she was one of Falcone’s whores based on a nightmare – if that was a nightmare and not another fairytale you made up to frame her!” the wind howled wilder than before and made the downpour whip the window.

Bruce supported himself to his elbows and rose a bit before Clark forced him back down pressing his weight on the human’s torso.

“I didn’t lie! Mr. Petrou…”

But Clark had had enough and didn’t let him continue.

“You slander her – a noble, brave warrior – of being a whore while you are the whore!” the thunder’s bang was creepy yet Clark’s words hurt more Bruce’s ears.

His eyes bulged and all the blood left his face and his heart that missed several beats before starting beating fast and desperately.

Clark pursed his lips and raised his chin disgusted.

“You had told me that you were filthy but I didn’t believe it” Bruce just couldn’t breathe: yes, he always believed that his abusers left their filth on him but hearing it with Clark’s voice was a stab in his heart. “I was blinded by what Al Ghul did to your body to enslave me to you and destroy me; I almost lost my powers then…Blinded to the truth.”

Bruce managed to control his heartbeat and his breath.

“I told you then…” he inhaled deeply “I repeated that even after you were inoculated; I kept shoving you away but you…” he licked his lips “insisted…”

Clark caressed cruelly Bruce’s locks, his eyes glimmering insanely.
“You didn’t put your foot down!” that was another stab in his heart and Bruce hardly held down a gasp. “You knew that the effect was still strong but you didn’t care…”

Bruce gulped and shook his head, his eyes maintaining his dignity.

“I had told you that it was too soon…”

Clark put his palm over Bruce’s mouth tenderly but decisively.

“But you didn’t refuse when I made advances on you…you let me slip over indifferent to my condition” he brought his mouth over Bruce’s lips. “Because it flattered you that someone normal loved you… even if you knew that this love wasn’t true: you just ignored it.”

Bruce’s eyes had turned into stones: two glimmering gemstones lacking any life.

“Is that what your mind tells you?” he asked coldly.

“Then the effect slowly worn out and my eyes finally opened to the truth…and I realized that you were right: you’re indeed filthy. Your body thirst for more than my tender love: you wanted me but you also wanted wilder experiences like those yours past lovers gave you.”

Bruce detached cocked an eyebrow.

“Past lovers?”

“Falcone, Chill, Al Ghul, Bane and all those random scum that cornered you at Dolcetto.”

Bruce shook his head pressing his lips in a tight line.

“You don’t believe all these, Clark…someone plays with your mind.”

But Clark grabbed his upper arms and raised him from the mattress to be face to face; Bruce’s torso rejoicing the lack of weight.

“You admitted all that, Bruce…”

The younger man yanked his head backwards, his eyes shining with decency and his jaw clenched.

“Yes! I told you that I’m filthy, that I carry those men’s filth in me…but they weren’t my lovers! I hated what they did to me; I was dying every time they…used me!” his voice wasn’t loud but a determined growl.

Clark brought his mouth on Bruce’s.

“You missed, you craved for their violent sex: you arranged to get captured by Bane and Talia so that I won’t suspect anything! So that you could cheat me and I wouldn’t have the right to say a word” Bruce closed his eyes and shook his head. “But your need didn’t stay satiated enough” Bruce looked at him with narrowed eyes. “Thor saw you completely naked during Bagdana’s attempt to take you and it was unavoidable to fall for you.”

“No” Bruce gritted his teeth. “Thor hasn’t made any advances on me; he never left any innuendo.
Nothing happened at the park” Clark closed his eyes grunting and then cackled amused shaking his head mocking. “And today at my parents’ graves Loki appeared and Thor chased him away.”

Clark pinned Bruce back on the mattress, straddling him again, his arms trapping his body.
“The last five months you deny me any satisfaction…”

Bruce frowned: that was unfair.

“I always urged you to make love to me.”

Clark snorted.

“Yeah…knowing that I’d be afraid for your frailty and having Leslie and Alfred and the gang glaring at me all the time, accusing me even for wanting you. But the truth is you didn’t want my sex because you found it dull, lukewarm…”

“Clark, no…” Bruce said pressing his lips.

“You needed to be fucked by a god, hoping that you’ll find what you craved for. What your sinful body cried for.”

Bruce’s face contorted in pain; he huffed.

“For the last time, Clark: Thor came here only because Loki pestered me.”

“I didn’t see Loki but even if that it is true then I see” he smirked and Bruce’s chest clenched painfully for what was coming “that Bane and Talia taught you the pleasures of threesome so what better than two gods fucking you?” Bruce’s eyes bulged and his heart stopped beating. “Maybe if I told you that Diana and I would both fuck you, there wouldn’t be a problem…But since I didn’t, you took the first opportunity you found: Thor and Loki: Who got your ass and who your mouth? Or they changed positions? You’re doing the same with Rogers and Selina in the Tower? I imagine you prefer to fuck your friend than…”

Bruce couldn’t stand it anymore; nausea was burning his stomach and every word from Clark’s mouth was acid. He raised his hand and brought it with all his speed and force at Clark’s face…

But an unbeatable force stopped his hand midair and the Man of Steel pinned his arm on the mattress above his head clenching Bruce’s wrist. Immediately a violent slap made Bruce’s head roll on the side and the familiar taste of iron choked him as blood sprung from his nostril and lip slithering slowly to his cheek. A deafening thunder worsened the buzz in Bruce’s ear but he looked through his narrowed eyes at Clark who was smirking smugly.

Superman tightened his grip on Bruce’s wrist, feeling the familiar arousal from the struggle of the body trapped under him. The human had his jaw clenched though it must hurt much from his slap; he knew to control his power to not permanently damage or kill him but also to pass the message across. His mocking eyes lowered a second to see Bruce’s heaving chest: the human never liked being defeated.

He brought his face over Bruce’s enjoying the smell of his blood, of his defeat…His groin twitching from the defiance underneath him.

“I owed you that, Bruce, remember?” Bruce’s blazing eyes stared him unfazed; certainly he remembered the day he slapped Clark because he accused him of having an affair with Matt. “My memory is eidetic…” he breathed licking Bruce’s blood though the younger man turned his head to avoid him. “I know your every movement…”

But he frowned instantly, his shock great when something sharp burned his jugular; the flesh protested as a drop of blood dripped slowly. Clark saw with the corner of his eye the Knife of Justice firmly grasped in Bruce’s free fist; its diamond blade flashed in the dim secret light of the headboard – a cracking bolt enhancing the impression of the blade’s sharpness.

Bruce had taken advantage of Clark’s smugness at the moment of his supposed triumph and slipped his free hand rapidly behind the headboard in a flashing motion bringing the blade to his pulsing vein. It was so easy to kill right now the most powerful being in the planet…as Ra’s had taught him…as his former master destined him to do…

Their eyes collided in a battle of determination.

“You know just the 1/100 of my movements, Clark” Bruce said calm and decisive but still with affection. “The Blade has defeated a mighty ancient demon: it can harm you” it was an advice.

Clark snorted and felt the Blade’s menacing presence on his neck.

“Two demons” he corrected cocking his eyebrow. “Two demons who fell for your body…Well, Bruce? What are you going to do with that? Kill me?”

Bruce clenched his jaw; Clark’s grip on his wrist had loosened under the surprise of the Knife in his now vulnerable neck. Bruce’s hurt cheek throbbed.

“I just want to stop you before you do something you’ll be sorry for all your life! Think, Clark!”

Clark’s face was sweaty: the sense of sharp metal grazing his skin was unusual for him.

“What about my satisfaction, Bruce?! What did you offer me?!”

Superman was still here, Bruce thought; perhaps if Clark after all this time made love to him, maybe he would remember the truth, maybe the poison cleared from his mind. And then he could keep him away from his enemies and start again the tests in the Fortress.

“Then take your satisfaction but stop shouting! There’s a distressed boy in the Manor and nothing of these it’s his fault!” he lowered the Knife keeping his eyes locked with Clark’s: using the Knife against him would manage only to galvanize Clark’s beliefs but if he surrender his body to him, then maybe he would realize that he was true in his love and prove Vivian wrong.

Bruce placed reverently the Knife on the nightstand and Superman found his chance: he grabbed Bruce’s free hand and pinned now both his hands on the mattress over his head, stretching his body so beautifully that Superman felt his groin demanding. Bruce was always looking him in the eyes calm, dignified and affectionate.

“You know that I didn’t give my body to anyone else” he said steady and jerked his head upwards capturing Clark’s lips in a tender kiss, filled with love and agony to help him see the truth.

Clark deepened the kiss, loosening the bruising grip on Bruce’s wrists.

“I can give you everything the others gave you and even better…” he whispered sucking his lips passionately and then nuzzling his stretched neck and the small part of chest that the three open buttons left uncovered. “You’re mine, Bruce…”
proudly.

“I love you with all my existence but I’m not your possession…”

Superman closed his eyes frustrated and bit the cotton pajama shirt softly at first but then in a burst of accumulated anger he tore with his teeth Bruce’s clothes not minding that he was scratching also the tender skin; his hands clutching the trapped wrists to not permit any other surprise and to keep that body flexed.

His skin stung from the violence of Clark’s teeth and although he couldn’t feel beneath his waist and Clark blocked his vision, he knew that he was now completely naked; his clothes mangled shreds on the floor. Clark rose a bit and watched appreciatively the bare body under him and Bruce for the first time after that night in the greenhouse felt uncomfortable being naked in front of him.

Superman brought Bruce’s arms down without releasing them and turned him on his stomach; Bruce felt his healing arms almost ripped from their sockets as Clark twisted them behind his back.

“I can give you everything the others gave you…” he leaned over Bruce’s hair and the force of his breath burnt his neck.

And then in a swift, violent motion Clark settled one wrist upon another and Bruce frowned, feeling hard bounds tightening around his wrists and his elbows. His arms felt completely paralyzed.

Superman turned him around and smirked smugly to his face.

“The energy casts are Fortress’ property – that is to say mine; they obey my wishes…You like that, Bruce, don’t you?” he travelled the younger man’s chest with his palm to end at the ripped abdominals. “Losing control, being helpless…”

Bruce controlled his heart that cringed remembering every time he had been tied up.

“Clark, you know what I like…”

Clark shook his hand bringing his fingers lower, to Bruce’s groin.

“I thought I knew, Bruce, but I was wrong; but finally my eyes are opened. I won’t let you give your body to anyone else ever again…I won’t permit you to disgrace yourself and me by getting screwed in parks or participating in threesomes.”

Bruce closed his eyes and yanked his head backwards.

“I never did that! You know it: you’d have caught their smells on me.”

Clark brought his head over Bruce’s groin and began sniffing, the younger man fighting a devastating wave of nausea.

There was no foreign smell.

“You’re sly, Bruce” Superman raised his head to look at him. “You warned them to cover their smell.”

Bruce gritted his teeth and raised his torso to bring his head close to Clark’s.

“Even you don’t believe that! Till the incident at the Tower you didn’t give a damn about who was talking to me or for Joker being free to get me. But then when I asked you to stop seeing that woman she poisoned your mind with the idea of my supposed infidelity and you found the best way to justify your attitude.”

“Enough!”

He grabbed Bruce’s shoulders and threw him on the mattress, settling his body on him; he captured violently Bruce’s mouth with his and began sucking and devouring, his teeth chewing cruelly the lips. He licked the drops of blood and opened his eyes to stare at Bruce’s sparkling ones.

“So beautiful…so rot…a real powerful seductress, indeed” he whispered caressing with both hands Bruce’s face to finally grab both cheeks and resume his cruel kiss, this time thrusting his tongue deep in Bruce’s throat choking him.

His body that was rubbing demandingly felt sticky under the uniform and he raised his body a second keeping Bruce’s body clenched between his knees, permitting the human to take some air. Superman roared satisfied when his body stayed bare without the burden of his clothes.

For the first time, Bruce’s eyes stared coldly at Superman’s naked body; the man’s half erection making his guts clench.

Superman’s body demanded to feel the warm human flesh and he obliged, rubbing his torso to Bruce’s so hard that it pained…like Superman’s unbearably hot mouth that trailed Bruce’s neck kissing, biting and licking the little blood his teeth evoked.

The more he conquered Bruce’s unresponsive body the more the fire in him rose…An insatiable fire. He fisted Bruce’s hair and pulled his head down forcing his neck to arch for his mouth to gain better access. He licked and sucked, his other hand groping the younger man’s ribs.

“Moan for me, Bruce…” he growled. “As you did for Thor!”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Nothing happened with him; Clark…”

“Shut up!” he cut him tightening more his clench on Bruce’s hair and brought his face over Bruce’s devouring the fire of his eyes. “You cheated me, Bruce! But I’ll keep you…” he kissed his cheekbones moaning. “I’ll give to you what you crave for and you’ll drop your bullshit about Diana…”

“She is poisoning you, Clark…You need to take your distance from her and run the tests Jor El told you…”

Superman’s gleeful eyes were Bruce’s entire world as he raised slightly his head.

“You have no right to pose demands! You should be begging me to forgive you and not trying to defame a great woman like Diana!”

Bruce’s eyes widened and for a second he stopped breathing…

“I did nothing wrong to ask your forgiveness and I’m not defaming her I’m just stating the facts! Think, Clark!

But Clark indifferent grabbed his thighs and opened them. Bruce couldn’t feel the pain but saw and heard the violence of Clark’s ministrations even though the wind’s blowing was wilder than ever; the man he loved was rock hard and Bruce wished he could be happy for their coming unification; staring at Clark’s gleeful eyes that looked down at him triumphantly, Bruce wished that making love to him could lead Clark to the truth…

He didn’t expect that from Clark but the Man of Steel thrust his entire, huge length in him with one single swift movement, without any preparation, without any softness or caution just choking by force the resistance his unprepared insides posed after five months of inertia.

Bruce gasped…It hurt like Hell and his heartbeat peaked…No, that was impossible: his body didn’t feel below the waist.

Clark cocked a sarcastic eyebrow regarding Bruce’s dumbstruck expression.

“You’re a helluva actor, babe! Pretending surprise…We both know that it is Thor’s thunderous prick we have to thank for reviving your dead asshole…”

Bruce gritted his teeth: he couldn’t continue listening Clark speaking like a creep…like all those who used him.

“Stop talking like that, Clark; this isn’t you…We both know that some neurons survived the injury – it seems that some of them are in my rectum” he tried to reason with him “but we never tried before…”

Superman smirked and settled his hands on Bruce’s hips beginning thrusting in him, establishing immediately a fast and hard way that made Bruce’s sensitive body cry in protest but he pressed his lips and swallowed the pain.

The thrusts became faster rocking Bruce’s body but Superman’s thirst wasn’t satisfied; he leaned over the sweaty but simultaneously cold torso under him and swallowed one nipple, sucking so fiercely that Bruce wrinkled uncomfortable since this along with the pounding of his anus was overwhelming. But Superman didn’t care; he knew that Bruce enjoyed that – he needed it like this to be satisfied…and also Superman relished that too. He bit the tender nipple and sucked the liquid but more he sucked the violent heartbeat under the human skin; Superman knew that Bruce stubbornly choked his moans and grunts but he was stubborn as well.

He bit the other nipple and at the same time sent a low intensity heat beam to hit the nipple he tortured before and stood erect from his ministrations. Bruce’s torso jerked but Superman cackling moved his hips inwards smashing the momentary resistance with a stampede of thrusts.

“You like that to your nipples, huh?” he said smugly to Bruce’s narrowed eyes and inhaled the delicious smell of a trapped wild animal underneath him.

Bruce bit his bottom lip that was already torn in many places from Clark’s bites: no, he didn’t like having his nipples tortured – Falcone did that when he was really young…Clark knew it but that didn’t stop him casting heat to his other nipple too. Bruce jerked his torso upwards using Superman’s length inside him as support but the Man of Steel hugged vertically Bruce’s shoulders to glue their bodies together, impaling him mercilessly, faster, deeper…

Superman was pressing the younger man chokingly on him knowing that the human breathed difficult but Bruce clenched his teeth to hide his suffering and that pissed him: his lover denied giving to him what he gave to others. He sank his teeth to Bruce’s shoulder, blood springing along with a sharp intake of air from the human. Superman cupped with both hands his head and stared at those defiant, fervent eyes.

“Don’t hide your pain from me…I know it gives you pleasure and I can give you more pleasure than anyone…” he breathed and captured the maimed lips kissing passionately, his body pushing enthusiastic inside Bruce.

Clark’s clenching in his shoulder became bone crushing and the Man of Steel roared in his mouth as boiling liquid from the alien’s ejaculation burned Bruce’s wounded insides. He didn’t moan or grunt though a new wave of pain travelled his spine to stab his head but his weak body convulsed like in the past when he was a child and adults used him.

Bruce appreciated the softness of the mattress when Superman lowered him tenderly yet his lover’s length was still inside him, stretching his anus to its limits and throbbing demanding more. He looked at Clark’s face that watched him like a hungry vulture; Superman’s locks were wet from sweat and framed his beautiful features. He smirked to him and placed his body over him kissing his breasts and digging streaks with his nails on his back.

Superman’s eyes stopped to the Black Butterfly that dangled on Bruce’s chest: he knew from a long time ago that this rare, precious diamond was like Bruce. He touched his lips on the sparkling stone…and jerked away because it burned his lips.

He saw Bruce staring at him as Superman touched his lips shocked: he felt that the human was mocking him, his gem demonstrating that he could escape him…No…He grabbed again Bruce’s thighs and began thrusting stronger than before making the human writhe and sweat from pain and effort to control his restrained breath – to not moan…

When Superman turned him to his stomach, he had already cum in him three times and Bruce felt his hot liquid filling his anus and the inside of his thighs; he knew that it slithered lower but he couldn’t feel there. He was also aware that except from semen something else streaked his body – his own blood…

The sheet was drenched under his pelvis and the stain expanded fast as Clark started for the fourth time his in-out movements; each time faster, deeper and stronger than the last. Bruce bit the pillow to stop a scream: Superman’s stone testicles whipped his stretched anus with every wet sound of flesh invading flesh. His eyes were covered from thin but annoying mist.

“I have more endurance than any of your lovers, Bruce” Superman said haughtily setting Bruce’s knees on the mattress for him to get a new, better ankle; clenching his thighs to crush the human body on him so to get deeper. The sound of flesh slapping flesh a mesmerizing melody to his ears.

He released Bruce’s thighs and brushed his trembling back, relishing the fine, strongly bound muscles.

“I should whip you, Bruce” he whispered massaging the covered in cold sweat human flesh. “I know how much you enjoy that…But I couldn’t stand it…”

Bruce shook his head as much as he could.

“You can’t do that, Clark, because you’re not that kind of person and you know that I don’t like it…Falcone used to whip me as a child and it was awful…” his voice almost cracked.

A thunder howled near…

“There’s only one way to bring a rotten child to the right path…” Falcone’s voice echoed through the thunder’s roaring and the boy’s head dropped and before his terrified eyes the Gray Wolf took out from his pants his heavy leather belt.
He closed his eyes desperately as the leather howled and then crushed on his back a loud scream leaving his exhausted throat as the excruciating pain flooded his body – the merry melodies and the seducing giggles drowning the sound; he was crying like a baby and he was ashamed of that but as the whips continued progressively faster and stronger, he just wanted the pain to stop, to pity him... But his pleads only made his master to belt him faster, simultaneously chuckling or cursing him.

Bruce blinked: it was a flashback – Falcone had died and he wouldn’t cry...

Clark’s hands massaged his trembling back softly now; even his thrusts became slower and Bruce hoped that finally he had found himself. But suddenly a powerful hand clenched his hair and forced his body upwards, his neck bent so much that Bruce was almost choked, his back brushing Clark’s torso. Superman touched his hot mouth on his stretched neck sucking.

“Beg me like you did with Bane…” he whispered sensually.

“Beg me for what your master ordered you to achieve” Bane sniggered.

Bruce blinked to chase away the mist from his eyes. Clark had no problem thrusting in him for hours but his body felt like broken – no, his body was already broken since the factory incident but now it hurt all over.

“I begged him only once…when the lives of my loved ones depended on showing my obedience to Ra’s – and he had asked me to have Bane use me for him to watch…” he tried to catch his breath but Clark’s grip and his continuous pounding wasn’t helping. “I never again begged him…”

Clark’s fingers tightened more uprooting his locks and arching his neck.

“He says to everyone that you begged him for more at the mountain…” he mouthed Bruce’s earlobe.

Bruce found the strength to snort.

“Of course he does…You believe him?” he sensed Clark’s hesitation. “I won’t beg you, Clark, because at my parents’ grave…some months ago…you told me that I wouldn’t have to plead anyone again in my life…” he closed his eyes exhausted “and I still believe in you…though you don’t believe in me…”

Superman stretched more his neck, biting the soft skin where jawbone met the ear.

“Who’s the best of your lovers?” his wet, hissing breath attacked Bruce’s ear.

He closed his eyes to recruit some air from his stretched neck.

“You’re the only lover I ever had, Clark” he said in such a steady voice that it was a surprise for him too.

That pissed Superman: he threw Bruce’s head to the mattress keeping his clench on his hair and pressed his face down.

“You like powerful beings” he hissed through gritted teeth. “I’m Kal El, the mighty Lord of Krypton, and you’re a cheap human…”

Bruce closed his eyes; his breath laboriously maintained through his pressed nose and mouth yet he managed to take in some air to speak.

“This isn’t you, Clark; you know that I’m not enjoying this…”
But Superman buried more his face to the mattress and clenching his bare teeth increased the already frantic pace of his thrusts, drilling the stubborn human’s insides, enjoying the loud sound of his flesh slapping Bruce’s so similar to the sound of rain whipping the earth.

Bruce gritted his teeth; the pain was unbearable: he knew that weren’t for the energy casts inside his body he would have been demolished…He felt his blood running from his wounds on the foreign length that stretched him to his limits. The pain was intolerable but he wouldn’t scream…The pain was unbearable like then…

The pleasant smell of burnt pinewood from the fireplace suddenly vanished and his nose stung from the foul stench of junk and urine; his eyes stared at the withered bricks of the wall he was pinned. He knew that place; he knew that horrible human smell behind him; he knew the sniggers coming from the men at the entrance of the alley; he knew the smell, the air of that alley; he knew that on the cement, right next to his position lay his parents, the police sketch of his parents’ dead bodies, a miserable white rose upon them: the awful flower their unworthy son managed to bring them one year after their untimely death…

“Call yar mommy to save ya!” the Vulture who was ripping his soft insides growled.

No, he wouldn’t call his mommy to save him because his mother was dead and he didn’t deserve to be saved…Superman’s roaring pants demonstrated his pleasure, his satisfaction but Bruce was trapped in that alley…

Bruce’s eyelids slowly uncovered his eyes: he wasn’t asleep but he didn’t want to stir; his body was wreckage: a mix of pain, stiffness, itch and exhaustion. He was on his stomach, completely naked – thankfully, his hands were untied and the energy casts had returned inside his arms giving again life to his limps. His anus throbbed and screamed from pain and Bruce snorted – he should be happy that there was another neuron which recovered from the injury but instead he felt disgusted.

Underneath, the expensive sheet was drenched all over from semen – Clark had ejaculated five times in him or six: he lost count – and blood…The wounds in his rectum stung aggressively reminding him of the days with Falcone or Chill or Ra’s…He had friction burnings and scratches…

He persuaded his stiff neck to turn and regard the other side of the bed – Clark’s side. He knew that he wasn’t there…Bruce stretched his hand and touched the mattress. It was cold…but Clark’s eyes were colder.

When Clark left, Bruce wasn’t sleeping; he lay as Superman had released him after the fifth or sixth time. His face wasn’t visible but Clark could figure that he was awake…but he didn’t care…as he didn’t care to say to him something…Bruce pressed his lips and the pain told him that they were swollen and badly bitten: why feeling the need to tell him anything since Clark believed that he liked what was done to him? Superman didn’t even care to throw a blanket on his sweaty, cold, naked body…

He stared at the big window; the curtains had stayed opened and he could see the black sky above the scary-looking, drenched Palisades. The storm was raging, the wind still blew angrily and the horizon was constantly cracked by lighting. So unlike the peaceful sky at the island or the aurora borealis.

He looked at his wristwatch on the nightstand: 03.45. He placed his palms on the mattress and clenching his protesting jaw raised his torso: he couldn’t stay lying…It was a miracle Alfred hadn’t come already to check him so he had to tidy up before he came and understood what had happened.
Bruce wished these past hours were another one of the nightmares Crane’s drugs created…but everything in the room confirmed his certainty that they were real…

He stared at the wheelchair that read his mind and came there for him: Clark’s creation…

“I’d be extremely happy when I’ll smash that awful chair once you’re standing on your feet” Clark beamed as he lowered him gently to the astonishingly beautiful wheelchair.

“It’s very beautiful, Clark” Bruce brushed the transparent armrests. “Thank you” he smiled and Clark kissed him sweetly on the lips.

Bruce hesitated to use it but Tony’s wheelchair was in the closet, so even if he used the remote or his mind, it couldn’t come to him. He inhaled deeply and pushed his screaming body in the chair…His hairs stood upright when the cloud-like sense of the chair touched him: it was soft and warm but for Bruce was as if Clark held him again and his stretched, abused anus felt as if it was penetrated all over again.

But Bruce yanked his head and fisted his hands till his heartbeat became normal. He gathered hastily the stained sheets and dropped them in a pile at the floor grateful to Alfred for choosing an expensive mattress that was waterproof. His eyes stopped at the pieces of his pajamas that were scattered over the floor; he pressed his lips tasting once again his blood and hurried to bring them to the same pile.

He moved to the chair where his robe was laid over the back and wore it for the first time that night; before Clark came, he felt that the fireplace and the heating system of the Manor was more than adequate but now it was cold…

And he needed a shower: his body smelt awful from his sweat and Superman’s that had dried on his flesh…yet the worse was the stench of semen and blood…

Bruce barely made it to the toilet and his hands almost of their own accord surged to grab the porcelain, a second before his torso jerked violently dragging him to the floor; his grip on the toilet was the only thing that saved him from smashing his face on the hard surface, his useless legs carried away by the force ending up on the tiled floor.

He jerked many times till everything Alfred so affectionately prepared for him left his stomach and still his body convulsed pushing bile out of his system as if this too could poison him. His mouth stayed agape…he was too exhausted to even close his mouth and he just hugged the cold porcelain, hearing the pounding of his heart and his ragged breaths drumming the caverns of his skull.

Bruce didn’t know if seconds or moments had passed but he realized that he should take himself from there; he swept his cold nose with the back of his hand and felt the puffed, hot flesh…He had to return to his chair but his arms trembled from exhaustion. He closed his eyes and recalled Ubu’s training: the mind forcing his power over the flesh; he breathed calmly, deeply, his focus on his weak hands and the task before him…

He left the toilet and put his palms on the cold, shining floor; his chair was there waiting. He turned his body and held the armrests hoisting his unresponsive body till he was settled in the seat. A long huff: it was the first time after months that this simple task seemed so difficult…even impossible. He went to the sink but didn’t look at the mirror; he just rinsed his mouth a couple of times since the acid taste of vomiting vanished.

Bruce rubbed his eyes: training was definitely out of the question for tomorrow – he had to call Matt first thing in the morning. He willed his wheelchair to the tub and pressed the touch screen of the control panel so that the surface inclined a bit for him to slither in the seat: Bruce was grateful that the seat had the railing around his waist otherwise he wasn’t sure if he’d manage to not fall…

He took off the robe and dropped it at the wheelchair; he looked at his naked body with repulsion: the skin was red or purple and there were scratches and bite marks everywhere; above the waist he felt itchy since his flesh was sticky from Superman’s saliva…His nipples were swollen and red from the light burning. But what startled Bruce was the drops of blood that fell fast on the white porcelain…his anus was still bleeding…he frowned because he could feel the excruciating pain but not the liquid slithering nor the stuck semen…

He sighed: the normal feeling had returned only for the hours of Superman’s pleasure…Of course… he cocked an eyebrow mocking himself. The irony: the neurons that overcame the injury were those associated with anal violation; other than that his pelvis was as good as dead.

The sense of hot water washing his skin was delight: he jerked his head upwards with closed eyes…it felt sanitizing…relaxing…comforting. He wished he could stay there forever.

He closed the water: there were blood drops around the toilet and he had to mop them. He crawled back in his wheelchair and after dried himself with the towel, muffled himself in the robe moving to the sink; the chair elevated at his wish to reach the mirror and the view of his face confirmed what he already knew: swollen cheek, bruised nostril, puffed, scratched lips, some dried blood – he needed makeup and some butterfly stitches for his anus. He stretched his neck and sighed: bite marks and bruises from Superman’s sucking – more makeup.

It was a boring task but necessary and he did it meticulously. He inspected the result: the marks were covered. He touched hesitantly his rear end: there wasn’t new blood drops so the butterfly stitches were enough…of course, his anal channel throbbed and screamed from pain but there was no other senses from there.

His bedroom was as he left it; the rain still whipping punishingly the window fortified by the wind’s rage. A bolt lightened the pitch black horizon highlighting the bare tree branches that resembled menacing hands.

The view absorbed him for some seconds but he had work to do; Bruce moved his wheelchair to the pile of destroyed fabric and got ready to take them down to the cave. But the corner of his eye caught the Blade of Justice on the nightstand and his hand hesitantly held its hilt: he felt as if he had betrayed that proud weapon.

“Hurting him wouldn’t be a solution…” he whispered to its blade and placed it reverently to the secret case inside the drawer.

Thankfully, there was no obstacle between him and the cave. He looked relieved the huge cavern, the waterfall’s roaring sound bringing comfort to his pounding heart. He closed his eyes and took a deep inhale.

Then he threw the sheets and the rags of his pajamas to the rectangular small oven in the far end of the cave; he had it there for destruction of dangerous things. He closed the glass seal and pressed the round indication burning the evidence. He wished he could do the same with the marks in his mind and body…

Another flashback added to his wide range…he sniggered. But as with most of his experiences nobody was going to find out. This would stay between him and Clark…and maybe this would work like a motive for Clark to find his true self; to chase his therapy…Because Clark wasn’t like this. And there was still hope since Clark resisted the allure of this woman and stayed loyal to him despite the slander: if Clark didn’t give up on him he wouldn’t either. Despite the pain… He was used to the pain. He had promised. And there were so many things at stake, more important than his dignity or happiness…

He was strolling in the cave unconsciously when suddenly his eyes fell on the cowl left on the long rectangular case containing the new armor.

“I’m not a victim!” he said again for the cowl to hear him as well.

“Then stop acting like one!” Tony’s ashamed voice echoed through the cave. “Joker took away your mobility and the alien your personality!”

Bruce closed his eyes and took the cowl.

“Be happy, Bruce” his mother’s soft voice whispered to him desperately as she was leaving him. “Please, be happy…”

If only that was possible…He felt suffocating and his eyes looked desperately around and at the ceiling as he was doing when imprisoned in Falcone’s cage. His loyal companions weren’t there: they were out hunting. But his greatest companion was there staring at him patiently and sternly: the cowl’s empty eyes pierced him. He who permitted him to escape from everything; from himself…who gave him peace, freedom, oblivion…

There was only one thing for him to do: he took off his robe and began wearing the pieces of the armor.

“You’ll need much practice before going out with the suit…” Lucius warned him.

But he just couldn’t stay there: he needed to be out there, in Gotham’s embrace.

Clark sat on the rooftop of Gotham’s City Hall, his arm lazily set on his bent knee, his other leg stretched. He was gazing at Gotham’s skyline, the downpour steadily clearing the sinful city and him. His mind was boiling with images and thoughts…

Light but strong footsteps took him out of his reverie and the elegant, intoxicating perfume of every flower in the planet tantalized his nostrils. Diana was there but he didn’t turn to see her.

“Problems with Bruce?” her proud voice hued with honest interest caressed his ears before her beautiful form filled his eyes as the Amazon marched in front of him.

He smirked.

“It’s so obvious, huh?”

She shrugged.

“The way you flew away from New York, ignoring my call – I knew something very bad happened and you’d be in Gotham.”

Superman stood and looked her in the eyes.

“I did something awful.”

She snorted.
“You? No! You can’t do anything awful!”

“I had sex with Bruce” he saw Diana inhaling deeply and crossing her arms.

“That’s normal for a couple” she said indifferently with a hue of disappointment in her voice and cocked an eyebrow. “It was really…that awful?”

“Violently…Cruelly… I made him suffer… I made him bleed…”

She pursed her lips unimpressed.

“Then you gave him what he wanted…” she shrugged. “I’m positive he enjoyed it” she snorted “more than any other time with you; besides he deserved to suffer” her teeth rattled “to be punished for his infidelity.”

Superman ran both his hands in his drenched hair; the rain waterfall washing his face.

“Bruce never cheated me…when I did that to him, I thought that my wrath for his infidelity fuelled my oppressed for months passion – I didn’t want to endanger his wounded body” Diana’s face was carved from a frustrated twitch of her lips. “My body was burning from anger because Bruce gave his body to others…and…” Clark sighed longingly “his body is gorgeous! But Bruce was right: my certainty for his adultery was only an excuse: I knew he’d never cheat me” he arched his eyebrows and sighed. “I wanted my revenge because he tried to keep me away from you.”

A thunder roared over the city but Diana’s sarcastic huff wasn’t muffled.

“And now you feel guilty.”

Superman shook his head and inhaled.

“No…though I know I should…”

“Then you’re satisfied?”

He laughed.

“When I was impaling him, when I made him writhe, I was…But now I realize that I’m not satisfied…” he moved closer to her feeling mesmerized by her sparkling eyes. “I crave for Bruce’s body but he isn’t enough – something is lacking…”

“What?” she whispered sensually, her eyes reaching the depths of his mind bringing him numbness.

He pressed his lips in a tight line and yanked his head.

“You, Diana! I need you; I long for you” he shook his head. “I’m incomplete without you…but I won’t let go of Bruce either.”

The Amazon laughed stretching her sturdy but curvy body; a lightning illuminated her beautiful but smug face.

“Now, you’re talking as you ought. You deserve whatever you want, Kal El: you’re the Lord of Krypton. And a pleasure slave is a luxury you definitely can demand.”

A huge branch-like lightning flashed the gloomy sky and washed Diana’s body in shine. Superman gaped at her body: water running over her half naked bulging breasts; streaks hugging her muscle bound thighs calling him to touch… Blue-raven bangs were plastered to her forehead and cheeks; raindrops were stuck on her ruby, rich lips. Her eyes burnt as she met his charmed stare, urging him.

He wrapped his arm around her neck and his lips surged at hers only to be met in the middle of the distance with hers in a powerful collision that made him see stars. Their mouths began moving in a dance of passion; greedily, powerfully, without any hesitation… Superman bound to that lips grabbed the rim of Diana’s corset and pulled it down releasing her big, round shaped breasts, relishing the desperate way the woman fondled his back, digging her nails…

Batman walked on the rooftop stopping at the ledge, his lenses covered eyes watching the deserted street in front of the 80 floor building; his cape waved behind him. He heard footsteps but he didn’t turn.

“Who are you?” he growled indifferent and the stranger chuckled.

“One of Gotham’s residents named me Arrow – I like that name.”

Batman turned slowly to him. A modern Robin Hood dressed in dark green leather, a hood covering his head and casting his face into deep shadows. Only his eyes shone like fires, a smug hue there.

“I don’t like people like you in Gotham!”

“Xenophobic then…But Gotham has so many things to offer to tourists…sights…people” he lolled his head to the side. “Especially, people: you can’t see anywhere two clowns, breaking and entering the City Hall…”

Batman clenched his jaw: Joker was planning something and the City Hall was the center. Thankfully, the building was near: he pointed his grapple gun without second thoughts and let the cable take him to the opposite building, ignoring the protests of his body.

Arrow rushed behind him covering the gap between the buildings with a long, breathtaking jump. He followed Batman’s route towards the City Hall and stopped where he stopped: to a rooftop close to the City Hall’s rooftop. Batman brushed his forearm and the diagram of the building emerged in neon green.

“Nobody is inside the building” he snapped to the Arrow who stood behind him. “No bomb either.”

But there were vibrations on the rooftop and Batman’s artificial gaze focused there…and the blood froze in his veins; the blow of the raging wind felt like a punch in his face.

Superman’s nude back and buttocks…the Man of Steel was kneeling of the floor thrusting inside the body that was hugging him. Her long, beautiful legs were wrapped around Superman’s impressive thighs, opening widely her hips for him to enter. She was grunting and with every thrust stabbed her nails to his back, jerking her head backwards stretching her chest for Superman to have plenty of access to her erect thick nipples; he was sucking and licking the rain water that ran the skin. The Man of Steel roared louder than the thunder, pushing harder.

“I disagree: we have our bomb…” Arrow remarked slyly in Batman’s ear.

“You’re the best, Diana…” Superman moaned, licking her bulging breasts.

Batman remained impassive and turned his back to the spectacle.

“You can watch the peep show – I have more important things to do” he spat to the Arrow and pointed his grapple gun to the opposite fire escape launching away.

Arrow smirked and pulled out of his suit a smartphone to start shooting the sex scene.

Batman kneeled on the street at the depth of a filthy, dark alley: he supported his hands to the wall. He was exhausted, every pain in his body screaming; his head throbbed by the vibrations of a raging migraine. His eyes seeing again the scene on the City Hall’s rooftop: there was no hope anymore… He was a fool…

He felt the presences before hearing their footsteps: six big people. The sound of guns loading and blades protruding towered the buzz in his ears.

“Tough night, Batman?” a sniggering voice jeered. “Let’s lighten his spirits, boys!”
Chapter 38

Batman turned calmly his head to the bundle of goons that looked smugly at him; he remained on his knees: despite the fact his armor had micro-power generators that enable the exoskeleton-like pieces of his armor move his legs he knew that he couldn’t rely on them to fight these men. Even though he was thrilled the first time he made a moderate kick in the new armor, he knew that this move seemed in slow motion compared to his previous skill.

Furthermore, he didn’t have the stamina to use his legs; he was exhausted and the healthy part of his body screamed in agony from the various kinds of pain. But the worse pain was in the place where his heart used to be where now a burning mass was branding his insides while a heavy stone was smashing his stomach with constantly repeated blows.

However, he didn’t want to show weakness to these creeps because if they spread the news then the cowing thugs would step forward claiming a central role to Gotham’s underworld which for the time being stayed in hibernate.

He pressed the tiny button in his belt and without the sniggering thugs realizing their guns were blocked. Lucius made an armor that could withstand almost every known type of bullet yet the force of the impact, especially from close proximity could have a great toll on his battered body.

Batman raised his head proudly, threw casually two batarangs before their feet – which startled them even before the batarangs emitted thick smoke - and snarled at them which completed the fear effect. Batman understood from the first moment that they were small timers or medium ranked goons looking for an opportunity to become crime lords. These people fed on their victim’s fear but this fear was easily turned to them when met with tougher meat than they could chew. And suddenly the alley became too silent and the wind’s howl sounded scaring creepy.

“Shoot, boys!” the guy who obviously was their leader ordered terrorized and frustrated but their guns remained silent even though they continued pulling the trigger after the first failed attempt.

They were confused and their self-confidence faltered but Batman waited the right second to exploit their state; he had seen the lightning from the opening of the alley…

When the thunder blew like a bomb the goons jumped and looked around for a second which was what Batman wanted. He used his cripple legs only as a vault and launched his body on them; both his hands found immediately their target, clenching the necks of two men who goggled at him just before he crashed their heads together. And before his feet touched the ground he threw the unconscious men at their comrades sending two of his attackers to the wall.

He was weak but the exosceletons around his legs and the micro-generators permitted him to stand; there was also the option of using his mind’s power to force his legs to operate normally yet he didn’t want to use that and his mind didn’t have the appropriate level of concentration to achieve it: Clark’s naked body entangled with Vivian’s squirming body was flashing constantly in his mind, stabbing his heart and cracking his thoughts.

Batman ground his teeth and caught the hand behind him that surged clutching a big knife to stab his back. He dragged the man to collide with his back and when the thug’s head was above his shoulder he jerked his forearm to blow his mouth and nose as the back of his fist hammered the place between the thug’s eyes. As he heard the guy’s scream, Bruce thanked mentally Matt’s training and the hundreds of pounds he was lifting daily.
Rapidly his fingers struck the man’s neck knocking him out. However the man’s heavy body fell on him and Batman clenched his jaw feeling his body protesting. With a growl he shoved the unconscious thug on the wall; he sensed the rapid descend of a knife – the sixth goon.

In normal conditions he’d have ducked it instantly but the new suit required a considerable reaction time for movements under the waist so he dag his elbow to the man’s belly. Yet the goon was very sturdy and the hit despite heavy didn’t stop him; Batman yanked his head butting the goon’s jaw – since the man was towering him – and heard the bone cracking; at the same time he raised both his hands catching the hand with the knife stopping it before stabbing his back.

An ordinary creep would have collapsed by now yet the man was strong and Batman was weakened so he gritted his teeth because the hand he held almost overcame his grip…Sweat dripped underneath Batman’s armor as he recruited every drop of strength he had to at last manage to lower with a painful crack the enormous hand; he twitched it swiftly and dragged the man down giving him a palm blow on the forehead that drove him unconscious.

With the corner of his eye saw the flash of another blade reaching his back: one of the goons had recovered. He turned to stop him though he knew that it was too late, only to see the blade shattering by a bluish ray and the goon twitching and collapsing, his hair standing erect and smoking. He was alive but knocked out by electricity and Batman didn’t waste time: squatting, dragged his body from goon to goon handcuffing them feeling two eyes constantly on him.

When he closed the handcuffs around the wrists of the last crook, Batman stood and let his arms fall loose on his sides; he kept standing but he felt his body trembling. He knew who was there; he inhaled deeply and turned slowly as the newcomer walked to him.

His broad figure filled the alley, Mjolnir still emanating waves of energy; his golden hair waved to the wind along with his red cape.

“You loved his golden locks…”

Thor’s armor shone to the flash of the lightning but the worry in his eyes as he stared at Batman made Bruce’s chest clench. He pointed his grapple gun up and let the cable drag him up.

“Thank you” he growled to Thor.

He landed on the rooftop but although the exoskeletons did the job his hands sought the wall for support. His head swam in a white light with Clark and Diana in the middle; his heart felt like it was stabbed.

The wall wasn’t there and the ground was surging to his head. Suddenly something impossibly strong grabbed him softly but decisively and kept him erect supporting him.

“I’ve got you, Batman…” Thor said calmly. “It’s okay…”

His eyes slowly regained their clarity, Thor’s kind face a nice welcome back from the Hell. However, Batman jerked away and Thor pulled away his hands.

“You fought bravely there; you’re a great warrior” his voice vibrated from sincere admiration yet Bruce shook his head. “It’s my honor I witnessed you in action.”

Batman stretched his posture proudly and snorted not for the god but for himself: he was sad, angry and disappointed; an acid mixture that filled his mouth with a bitter taste.

“I was lame” he spat in his cold raspy voice and the blond frowned. “However thanks for your help” he added sincerely but coldly.

Thor crossed his arms on the chest because otherwise would touch Batman’s shoulders and knew that the great man didn’t want to.

“You’d have managed without my intervention but I couldn’t hold myself” he nodded. “I’m sorry for intervening.”

Batman shook his head.

“It’s okay” he turned his gaze elsewhere to avoid those honest, caring eyes: Bruce just didn’t want anyone to care for him.

Something tickled Thor’s tongue but he hesitated to utter it: the man before him was so dignified, so proudly distant. However his worry pushed him over the edge of his reluctance.

“It is a miracle…” he said and Batman understood he meant the fact that he stood and walk.

“Just science” he replied.

Thor raised an eyebrow and smiled.

“And willpower; unbelievable strength of character.”

Hearing praise for him was for Bruce the worse: it made the wounds, the scratches and the bite marks stung viciously.

“Our cape thwarts Loki from getting in places” it wasn’t a question but a conclusion which made Thor smile for the man’s smartness and his resolution to divert the discussion and stop any compliment.

“Exactly…I think it’s handy but the combination with the gem makes its effectiveness greater and we must not forget the Knife: Loki is a strong but he can’t overcome these three objects combined” he arched an eyebrow emphatically and Batman gave a solemn, sharp nod.

Thor knew that now he should say what stagnated in the tip of his tongue.

“I’m not Eir, the goddess of healing” Batman frowned but Thor couldn’t see under the cowl “but I can sense that your body is in much pain and your soul in great agony and suffering…” Batman didn’t reply so Thor continued pressing his lips. “I…I had told you to call for me…”

Batman raised his palm sharply in a stopping gesture and Thor respected that.

“Things got nasty with Superman?” the god of thunder growled and a bolt cracked the entire sky. “Because of me” his eyes bore into Batman’s lenses and the tranquility of the human made him calm down. “I’m sorry.”

“It’s not your fault” Batman turned to the rooftop’s edge ready to jump but Thor touched his shoulder.

“Let me take you to your home…” he closed his eyes. “Believe me I don’t mean any…offence but maybe it will be better if you didn’t excess yourself more…”

“My car is near” Batman replied without turning his head and jumped opening his arms like a giant bat, his cape solidified immediately.
Bruce knew that the god understood his exhaustion and weakness and his subtlety to not mention it really touched him. But he couldn’t accept Thor’s offer; he didn’t want anyone’s hands on him tonight even in a friendly touch; Bruce felt filthy… He was aware of his exhaustion and the danger if he collapsed but he had called the Tumbler and it was rather near…

Thor clenched his jaw and gazed at the gracious flight of the human; he brought his clenched fist in his heart and mentally persuaded lightning and thunders to stop for seconds to not hinder Batman’s effort. Who could imagine that this emanating strength and willpower being was disabled, doomed to a chair? Who could believe that the creature blessed to have this human chose to torment him? Because Thor sensed that Superman had done something really bad to Bruce and had used him as an excuse…And that infuriated Thor but mostly made him sad about Bruce’s suffering.

Superman held Diana’s waist with both hands relishing the feeling of her arms around his neck; they floated in the sky over the fields away from Gotham, dressed after the explosion of their love making. Their foreheads touched each other and their bodies glued in an embrace cried to be naked again so that nothing would thwart their new union.

Diana mouthed Superman’s lower lip, caressing the back of his head.

“Why we left Gotham?” she asked slyly. “You’re afraid that someone might see us?” her smile was wicked and her magnificent eyes sparkled reading his.

Superman captured her lips moaning.

“I don’t want to let Bruce pray to all the men who drool on him and if he finds out about us, he’ll break up with me.”

Her eyebrows’ arch almost reached her hairline in disbelief and she snorted.

“Break up with YOU?! C’mon, Kal El…As if you’re a human loser and Wayne has the right to dump you” Superman lick his lips and Diana smiled. “You know my opinion about Wayne and that he is unworthy of you but since you want to keep him he can’t do otherwise!”

Superman understood what she meant and he didn’t like it.

“I don’t want to use violence on him…” he shook his head and scenes of Bruce’s semi-dark bedroom flashed in his mind shaking him. “I’ve already done that once…” he turned his head to the right, towards the Palisades, sighing – the toll on Bruce’s body must have been great.

But Diana cupped his jaw with both hands and brought his head to look at her.

“Do not feel bad about that: he enjoyed it. He likes being screwed like a cheap street hooker.”

Superman pecked her nose and rubbed her back that was drenched from the downpour that continued.

“I’m not so sure, Diana…”

She shook her head in disapproval.

“You’re too good for this human and he takes advantage of you” Clark frowned and she nodded. “Did he ask you to stop?”
Superman shook his head in denial and Diana pursed her lips.

“You see?” her hands slipped to his buttocks fondling almost violently. “If he didn’t like it, he’d have asked you to stop or beg you” she smirked smugly. “Though I’m sure that he gets horny when cries and beg his masters to stop and they don’t.”

“Bruce is proud…” he replied “he wouldn’t beg me even if he felt that I was going to kill him…” his voice was respectful.

Diana grunted.

“You give too much credit to him, Kal El. Your judgement gets distorted by your passion: he is extremely beautiful for a human, sure; a great fuck but that’s it. He isn’t a hero for Zeus’ sake!”

Superman grabbed her face with both hands and looked her deep in the eyes, the rain drops plastering his locks in the forehead.

“I won’t permit anyone to lay hands on Bruce’s body!”

She narrowed her eyes which flashed wickedly.

“Of course, Kal El. He is yours. Nobody has the right to take him even if Wayne wants it” she shook her head. “Find a way to keep him yours even if he learns the truth about us…” she whispered and the air from her lungs caressed his eyes.

Superman nodded frowning, a thought crossing his mind.

Alfred stood in front of the kitchen’s sink gazing at the endless green of the grounds; the big window looked at the right side of the grounds and the butler always appreciated the view when washed the dishes (he preferred it over using the dish washer a machine he considered completely useless, after all).

That bloody storm had finally stopped and now the nature was peaceful under a light gray sky and a shy sun that sent some dim light. Of course, Alfred knew that a great storm always leaves some aftermath and his chest was clenched from a sinister premonition.

He swept with a towel the plate he had washed. Master Bruce had called him at 6:30, knowing that the butler woke up that precise hour, and asked him to drive Dick to his school. The previous day his young master had told him that he would accompany the boy. But obviously something changed.

Alfred raised an eyebrow and sighed: he dreaded what caused that change…His master’s voice was steady and casual; the young man knowing Alfred’s worry, didn’t force his butler to ask but gave the answer himself: he just wanted to sleep in today – he felt a bit tired. So the British respected his young master’s wish and didn’t disturb his sleep though something urged him to go inside the bedroom.

Yet his master had assigned him a job and that should be his priority. So he had awoken young master Richard, concealing his surprise for seeing Hero sleeping on his bed. This intensified Alfred’s concern while he wished his gut feeling was wrong and Master Bruce indeed wanted just to sleep a little more. Though he doubted it…

He turned on hearing the light footsteps of the Manor’s newest resident and saw Hero hooked in the boy’s chest; the animal meowed greeting him.
“Good morning, Master Richard, Master Hero” he bowed slightly his head. “The breakfast is served.”

Alfred’s experienced eyes caught the change in the boy’s eyes as he scanned the kitchen and didn’t see Master Bruce. The boy’s joy was more than evident and Alfred sighed internally. At least, the kitten was searching his master looking around and finally jumped from Dick’s arms to rub to the stool right next to which Bruce’s chair used to stand.

“Would you like anything else for breakfast, sir?” Alfred asked Richard seeing the kitten disappointed walking to his bawl to eat.

“No, thank you” the boy replied settling in a stool. “How am I going to go to school?” he asked morose taking a muffin. “I doubt the bus will come here…”

“I’ll drive you to the school, Master Richard.”

The boy arched his eyebrows.

“I’d rather go with the bus…” he said chewing his muffin and drinking his milk.

Alfred shook his head.

“I know, Master Richard, yet we can’t oblige Gotham’s city to send the school bus to Palisades: it is much too far from the main city.”

Dick shrugged and continued eating, so Alfred resumed settling the glasses into the central cardboard over the sink bench.

“Wayne likes to sleep late, huh? I didn’t expect anything better…”

Alfred kept his composed expression and turned his back to continue his work but suddenly something warm rubbed to his calve purring. He hardly stopped a smile as he looked down and saw Hero rubbing and looking at him puzzled.

“Master Bruce needed some extra hours of sleep” he heard Dick’s snide snort “but I’m sure it is nothing serious.”

“I hope it IS something serious!” Dick gritted his teeth.

But that was too much for Alfred whose hands formed fists at his side; he turned to the boy keeping his calm though inside him a storm was raging.

“I beg your pardon, Master Grayson, but I’d suggest you watch your mouth.”

Dick frowned seeing the always calm and polite eyes of the butler sparkling.

“I know your sentiments about Master Bruce and I respect them – though I consider it unfair to be so harsh on Master Bruce because Joker hates him so much to kill innocents in his name. As you may have noticed these two days we have the pleasure of your company, Master Bruce tolerates your rude and insensitive remarks about him. However, Master Bruce isn’t the only resident of this Manor, I live here too.”

The man’s voice bent from emotion.

“Master Bruce was taken from his parents and if I am permitted, from me, when he was 8 years old: for eighteen years I stood witness to the tortures he suffered at the hands of the late Falcone and every day was agony and dread that it could be the boy’s last” Alfred caught his breath. “Almost six months ago, Master Bruce almost died and I had to watch again unable to do anything”

He yanked his head dignified and locked his eyes with Dick’s.

“You seem to be very sensitive with everything concerning your loved ones, Master Grayson; Master Bruce is my loved one” his voice became strict. “So I’d kindly ask you to keep your ill thoughts for yourself when I’m present” he shook his head. “I’d be very sorry if you force me to deny you my services” he gave a tight-lips smile. “I believe I made myself clear?”

Dick’s eyes had widened with the man’s mild but so effective way: it reminded him of his granny – expect that his granny was far too lenient since she had a soft spot for him that obviously Alfred had for Wayne. He nodded: the butler considered Wayne like his son so it was understandable that he didn’t want to hear Dick slander him.

Alfred grinned broadly.

“I’m glad we cleared this out. Now, please do finish your breakfast because we don’t want you to be late for school.”

The boy mumbled his agreement and bit hastily his bread.

When John Grayson died Trevor Breizic was his head coach; Tony Zucco was still member of the team but everyone knew that John had downgraded and he was ready to shoe him. The video was from the national championship that counted as trial for the selection of the team that would compete in the world championship representing US.

John Grayson’s performance at the Horizontal Bar was breathtaking and reminded much of his son’s movements; it was mesmerizing so it took a second viewing to watch other things apart from the great athlete.

