The second viewing was for watching the presence of Breizic, the 65 year old legendary trainer who although John had demoted him in favor of Zucco, when the athlete asked him to be again his trainer, accepted gladly. He was of average height if not short with a sturdy body that shouted the man’s great career as a gymnast; gray hair and a round bald spot in the center of his sculp. His Russian gray eyes were cold, calculating every tiny detail of his athlete’s figures but in the end his affection for John melted the professionalism and he rushed to hug his athlete with emotion coloring his wrinkled face: everyone knew that this performance gave John the ticket for the world championship and Breizic was clearly proud and touched since this came after his athlete’s misfortune with the illegal drugs and hard effort to regain the trust of the people and the federation.

A third viewing for Zucco. He stood on a corner watching avidly with his arms crossed on the chest: tall, average weight, raven hair and blue sneaky eyes. His mouth crooked in a grimace of interest and indifference at the same time indication that he was acting; a shine in his eyes as his stare followed Breizic who embraced John. His expression remained neutral but someone could discern a flicker of irritation if stopped the video and zoomed on the outcast trainer.

Bruce drummed his fingers on the computer bench: if only he could find footage of the accident that cost John’s life…He searched through his inclusive search engine that looked into sources not so known. There were some short videos from the training of the national team’s gymnasts yet – as expected – nothing from the day of the accident. He leaned on the back of the chair and rubbed his lip but withdrew his finger immediately because it hurt really bad… Actually, his lips hurt even without touching or moving, they were swollen and the scratches throbbed unstoppably…

Rubbing his jaw was out of question too…

He felt that Breizic could provide some help in finding Zucco’s role in the incident – if Ms. Turner was right and Zucco had some involvement.

A bat stirred and made its companions on the stony ceiling cringe. Bruce looked upwards and his lips formed a faint smile: he was at home. When he returned from his patrol went immediately to the master bedroom to take his knife and Tony’s wheelchair: he was seated in it right now but he had taken Superman’s wheelchair to the cave as well: the absolutely beautiful throne-like chair sat deserted on a dark niche of the cave under the big arch in the right.

He knew that his long stay in the bedroom would at some point alert Alfred and force him to get inside and then the British would realize that Bruce didn’t sleep as he told him but was in the cave all time. He didn’t want anyone with him as much as they loved him. He relished his loneliness as he had learnt all these years when being alone was the only short time he didn’t suffer. He loved them and it was nice with them but right now he didn’t want any other presence, especially of those loving him – their love was unbearable right now.

Alfred would be discreet but definitely would touch subjects that Bruce didn’t want to discuss…He had called Matt to cancel today’s session – it was more than certain that Bruce would do the same tomorrow and the day after tomorrow. But Bruce knew that calling off one week’s sessions at once would cause questions and concerns.

However, more than a week would be necessary for the marks to disappear and Bruce didn’t want Matt to see because his physiotherapist had made it clear than if he saw a mark would immediately speak to Tony. And these marks all over his body were so angry, as much as Superman’s wrath; Bruce pursed his lips.

He was sure that his body was sore and would have felt awful if he wasn’t paralyzed below the waist; his arms ached and were a bit stiff from the energy casts that had bound them… As for his thighs…last night, while showering even through his dizziness, he had seen the finger shaped bruises…well, not yet black-purple bruises but a vomiting, even worse, white: Superman’s clenches must have been almost bone crashing…

Bruce inhaled deeply and let the air come out in a long exhale: the cowl was always suffocating but it felt like home and today he didn’t want to pull it out. He had only deactivated the lenses because it was difficult to work on the PC screen with them.

It was so nice being engrossed in work and not thinking anything related to last night…and still he had slipped there. He gritted his teeth and growled: stop that! He turned his gaze to the cave ceiling where the live, black velvet stirred in places: bats always stilled him…He saw again the face of Nemesis’ high priest from his dream and then frowned seeing two tiny emeralds sparkling in the middle of the endless black velvet.

His hand brushed the blade of the sacred dagger he had placed in a case under the bench. Maybe the goddess felt ashamed of his last night’s attitude? Perhaps she was angry with him? He shook his head clearing his thoughts: he did what he considered best and nobody else was damaged except than him…but he was damaged already so no big deal there. At least, he learnt the truth and stopped fooling himself.

He set his jaw determined and focused on the computer screen that was divided in two frames: Breizic on the right and Zucco on the left. His gloved fingers flew over the keyboard and in the second screen over the bench a stream of data about Breizic appeared. The man continued training athletes always in prominent places inside the federation; for the time being, he lived in Washington from where he made his expeditions through the States to scan for new talents which he later consulted and trained. He hadn’t said much about John’s death but his devastation was evident – so evident that the man never visited Gotham again.

Batman snorted: no surprise there. During Falcone’s reign which decent person would decide to stay in Gotham – if was able to live elsewhere? And once he lost his great athlete in such a tragic way, why lingering? Or maybe he was afraid…Because if he stayed the murderer with the suspicion that the trainer might have known something could kill him as well…

He had to bring Breizic to Gotham. Almost fourteen years had passed and Falcone’s decadence had ended so the man could trust that he’d be protected. Or if not staying permanently in Gotham, maybe Bruce could revive Breizic interest for the city. He arched an eyebrow under the cowl: if he was informed about a new great talent that was his greatest athlete’s son? And if the national team was invited in Gotham to do a demonstration for a charity event with local athletes participating? Then there would be no suspicion that someone digs that old case and needed Breizic for information.

He closed his eyes and controlled his breath: a sharp stab from his rectum filled his brain with white light…He just hoped that the stitches he had applied there still held and he didn’t bleed…At least, the armor wouldn’t let that be visible. The white light was filled with Clark’s face contorted in anger and wild, evil satisfaction, coming forth and backwards fast and strongly…and the pain intensified along with the sound of flesh slapping flesh…along with Superman’s grunts that sounded like roars of triumph…

“I told you that when he’d fuck you it’d be like a train crushing you…”

Ra’s’ smug, velvet voice echoed through the cave and Bruce didn’t look around because he knew that nobody was there.

“You thought that he loved you? That someone like him could love someone like you, my little whore?” the voice came closer and its malice brushed Bruce’s ear. “The substance I applied to your body made him fall in love with you and you were so stupid to believe that after the inoculation there wasn’t any remaining effect but only true love…” he sniggered. “Tell me, Bruce: you made your ass stop bleeding but what about your heart? Can you make her stop bleeding too?” his cackle erupted like thunder in the silence.

And Bruce focused on the place where his heart should have been…No…He shouldn’t be occupied with that: the dull, painful thud that pushed venom in his veins and sadness.

Suddenly, he heard the lift descending to the cave and he clenched his jaw which hurt.

In less than a minute the lift’s door opened and the light footsteps of Alfred crossed the steep corridor to the computer bench. Alfred regarded his young master as soon as he disembarked the lift: it was eleven o’clock in the morning and he still was in Batman’s armor and cowl: he had gone out last night. His guts clenched more but he didn’t sigh just placed the silver tray on the bench.

“I brought you breakfast, Master Bruce…and your medication.”

Batman kept his eyes on the screen.

“Thank you, Alfred” he tried to dismiss him as fast as possible.

And Alfred understood but he was determined to not make back.
“This armor isn’t a casual outfit, sir; so wearing it so many hours is not recommended; I suggest you make a nice, hot shower and wear something more casual and comfy? And maybe do your work upstairs, in your remarkable tablet? The moisture here…”

But Bruce interrupted him because he wanted Alfred to leave him alone.

“Some work has to be done here, Alfred” he said coldly without looking at him. “And I’m comfortable enough in the armor. Is everything alright with Dick?”

Alfred pressed his lips and swallowed a sigh; he knew that his young master wished to be alone; he didn’t want to share with anyone. He noticed that he sat on Master Anthony’s wheelchair; the other chair was barely visible behind a rock.

“Indeed, sir, I drove young Master Grayson to his school and I made sure that the security you ordered for the boy was in place.”

Batman nodded.

“Thank you, Alfred; I’m obliged.”

“You shouldn’t, sir, it is always my pleasure to grant your wishes.” There was an uncomfortable silence where Batman pressed buttons on the keyboard; but Alfred couldn’t bear it more: he knew that his young master was in a great suffering and after what the butler had seen… “Sir, pardon my indiscretion, but I took the liberty to enter your bedroom while you obviously didn’t want me to… But when the time passed I was worried.”

Bruce knew it; he stopped typing orders and nodded.

“This was expected” he said. “It doesn’t matter, Alfred.”

“Forget your insolent butler, sir, but maybe we should call Leslie to examine you?”

That fell like a thunder and Batman’s body stiffened; his hands staying above the keyboard and for the first time his eyes found Alfred’s face. The worry, the affection and even the pain in that wrinkled but proud face made the burning mass where his heart used to be charred his chest more punishing.

“There’s no need for that, Alfred” he answered nonchalant if not defensively. “I’m perfectly fine.”

Alfred’s eyes were shadowed and the faint frown made Bruce wary; Alfred could read him like an open book.

“Sir, would you be so kind to make me the great favor to remove the cowl?”

Batman shook his head in denial and returned his gaze to the screen wishing that Alfred would receive the message and leave.

Alfred’s agony all of a sudden broke the walls of his butler professionalism: this boy was more important than anything else. He pressed his lips turning the worry into strength.

“Because you don’t want me to see how bloodshot your eyes are or the black circles underneath; the exhaustion. Because you didn’t sleep at all last night, sir!”

Bruce continued typing pretending and trying to manage indifference to Alfred’s cracked voice.

“You wear makeup, Master Bruce, is that right?” he asked shaking his head. “Like the days you were under Falcone’s brutality and Batman needed to conceal the marks that would connect him with Falcone’s slave” his clever eyes captured the change in his boy’s breathing and Alfred needed a big inhale to continue. “Because your face is battered, sir, and you want to hide it from the people who love you!” his voice rose slightly because he was unable to control his emotion.

Batman turned to him holding his breath.

“Alfred…” he mumbled. “I’m fine – there is no reason for you to worry.”

But Alfred stretched his posture.

“I beg your pardon, sir, but I must disagree. I couldn’t find the sheets of your bed anywhere, Master Bruce, neither the pajamas you wore last night” he hoped that these would be enough for Bruce to open his heart.

But Batman shrugged.

“I opened the window miscalculating the power of the wind and both sheets and pajamas were drenched from the rain so I took them off; you must have noticed that the carpet was wet too…”

Alfred pressed his lips.

“I didn’t find them anywhere to take them for laundry…”

“I never liked them so I dumped them” suddenly Bruce felt exhausted: the lack of sleep, last night’s confrontation with the petty thugs and Superman’s treatment finally showing their teeth – it was painful.

His butler yanked his head determined and proud; his eyes stern but with a heartbreaking glimmer on them that made Bruce’s head ache. Alfred’s heart broke witnessing his boy finding petty excuses to not admit the truth: to not hurt him and because his young master felt ashamed as every time Falcone and the other monsters abused him. But never this courageous human being asked anyone’s comfort; always smiled and pretended that he was alright. Alfred gulped and gathered his courage.

“What about the butterfly stitches, Master Bruce?” Batman gulped and Alfred continued. “Their case in the First Aid kit was almost empty and I had filled it a few days ago…”

Alfred saw his young master’s body hunching a bit and that made his heart squirm with sympathy: Bruce shouldn’t feel threatened by someone knowing what happened. It was unfair his boy suffering because a monster abused him…again.

“No, sir; I think that those sheets were stained with…” Bruce turned his eyes on him and those beloved eyes had taken the texture of a stone – probably, his boy now wished that the lenses were activated “blood, sir…and…” he licked his lips: he couldn’t utter the word ‘semen’ “other body liquids.”

Bruce closed his eyes and turned his head to the other side. He took some breaths calmly and finally took off his cowl, locking his bloodshot eyes with Alfred’s.

Alfred’s guts were sliced by an invisible, huge razor; the fatigue and the deep sadness that hid under the glimmering sapphire-emerald were talkative enough. Each time the British had been forced to watch his boy’s torture and suffering came back to intensify the current pain.

“Also, I gather that Superman did horrible things to you last night…and I’m sure that you told Mister Leench to not come for him to not see the marks. You didn’t want anyone to know; to protect that bloody, horrible monster…” he panted from rage. “And you donned the cape and cowl, while in great pain and distress, patrolling the city in order to find escape and oblivion…like you did when Falcone tortured you. We must inform Master Anthony to hold Superman away from you.”

The youth shook his head in sharp refusal.

“There’s no need to bring Tony into this.”

“But, sir, if Superman used force against you last night…”

Bruce raised his palm to stop him; he looked Alfred straight in the eyes.

“Everything happened with my consent, Alfred” he said calm and steady.

Alfred squatted before him and took his gloved hand in his trembling one.

“Sometimes consent is worse than rape…” he said softly his other hand caressing his master’s plastered locks. “And when a sensitive youth loves so deeply someone for the first time in his life…”

“I never said to him to stop” he retorted shaking his head in denial.

“Because you were afraid that he wouldn’t stop and then your beloved would be nothing more than a…”

Bruce’s gloved hand rose in a stop gesture; he couldn’t hear the word ‘rapist’ for Clark.

“It won’t happen again, Alfred” he cut him in conviction.

The Englishman shook his head and his hand that caressed Bruce’s locks lowered to touch the youth’s cheek feeling with pain the swelling there: Superman had slapped Bruce.

“You can’t know that, sir: the person who raises once his hand to punch his loved one and acts so carelessly in other fields will do it again.”

Bruce widened his eyes and pursed his lips.

“No, he won’t” he said with confidence and Alfred frowned. “He decided to end it.”

“He told you so?”

“No; but he has an affair…with the Princess.”

“You can’t be sure…”

Bruce stilled his eyes on him and a faint bitter grin brushed his face.

“I saw them having sex…last night, on a rooftop. It’s over.”

Alfred closed his eyes: not only that man abused sexually his young master but also the same night cheated him. His boy’s heart must be shattered. He cupped his young master’s face with both hands.

“I’m so sorry, sir…” he shook his head “honestly…” especially since his young master’s stare was so empty of life. “But…you know…” he tried to smile for Bruce’s sake “when something ends new things start, better things” he pressed his lips “And you’re so young, Master Bruce” but the youth’s stare was empty. “Please, do come upstairs, Master Bruce…Your wounds need tending…We must call Leslie: there could be new damage done, a new injury…” Bruce was shaking his head resolute.
“I implore you, Master Bruce…”

“No, Alfred; nobody should learn about this” his eyes were flashing and Alfred nodded.

“At least let me take care of you, sir…You need rest and good food and…and some painkillers like when…”

A sharp intake of air from Bruce made Alfred stop abruptly.

“Please, Alfred” he smiled patting his butler’s wrinkled hand. “I’m fine; you just take care of Dick.”

Alfred stood and nodded though his heart had fallen.

“As you wish, Master Bruce.”

Suddenly, a black and white fur ball jumped out of the lift and hurried to Bruce who startled saw Hero halting abruptly some inches away, seeing his master dressed like this – and there was no smell. But after a second of thought the kitten surged to his human friend and climbed to his lap purring and rubbing his head to Bruce’s hand urging him to pet. He obliged and looked at Alfred who smiled despite being distraught.

“He followed me. I tried to stop him but…” he shook his head “he is a stubborn kitten – like his master – and slipped through my feet in the lift. But he stayed there till now” he snorted “I guess he is a very discreet animal. You have a very clever kitten there, sir!”

Bruce smiled scratching the back of Hero’s head making his purring louder.

“Superman found him…” he said thoughtful and Alfred realized that his young master worried that Superman might take the animal from him.

The Englishman shook his head pursing his lips.

“Indeed. But he gave the kitten to you and from that moment you’re the one who takes care of Hero and, if I’m permitted to say, it is obvious young master Hero that favors to you.”

Bruce chuckled and for the first time Alfred’s world became a little lighter that day.

“You think that we might end up in courts for Hero’s custody?”

“I think that Superman right now gives priority to the most meaningless things and neglects the really important.”

Bruce just pressed his lips which move was paid with a sharp pain and the wince wasn’t missed by Alfred who however didn’t comment.

“You talk about abducting and forcing him…I’d never take part in something like that – leave him out of this and we can have our sessions.”

“Nah…nah…nah…You see, Joker can’t be deciphered without Brucie – HE IS THE KEY. This man completes me – if he talks I’ll talk…”

“Weeeell? If I get Bruuuuucie’s participation you’ll be our doctor? I’m sure he is as fascinating as me…Hehe…”
“Mr. J, I’d ask you not to attempt anything against Mr. Wayne…They’ll catch you – they expect you to do something like this.”

“Doooooon’t worry about this, sugar. Now to the Buuuuuut part?”

“I’ll be your therapist…”

Bruce tapped his fingers on the bench as the record from Harleen Quinzel’s phone calls ended. So that was Joker’s plan? To get him and with Quinzel’s help – and Crane’s – put him through a ‘therapy’? That way Joker hoped to make Bruce admit that he was Batman and trap his psychotherapist driving her to his world.

From the first time he met Dr. Quinzel Bruce sensed that her relationship with Joker wasn’t plain and when he watched the video of his escape this feeling galvanized – it was the reason he had put a bug to her phone line. Bruce was sure that Joker would want to exploit his victim to the end.

He turned his head to the Tumbler from where a pissed meow echoed; a smile cracked his tired face. Hero had climbed on the car’s roof and made several jumps trying to catch the bats that hanged upside down from the ceiling. Of course despite sleepy the birds managed to twitch and avoid the aggressive feline.

“Hero, let the bats sleep! They are friends!” he told him but he was sure that his four-leg friend wouldn’t listen so he returned to his console.

Another thought sprang: Arrow. What was he doing in Gotham? Last time he saw him was in New York and though Bruce had searched every local news outlet there was no mention of this Robin Hood fan; so he wasn’t a local vigilante. Bruce frowned. What was his role? He definitely saw a great interest for Bruce Wayne. Perhaps he came here to see him again. Why?

“I disagree: we have our bomb…”

Arrow had remarked slyly in Batman’s ear when they saw... Bruce sighed. When they saw Superman and Diana having sex on the City Hall’s rooftop. And it was Arrow that told Batman about the supposed clowns entering the building though Batman didn’t find anyone. Maybe this guy wanted to lure him there to see them...But why? Maybe to brag and mock the two superheroes... Or...Well, that was farfetched but still...Maybe Arrow knew the importance of what was happening for Batman – but if that was true then Arrow knew Batman’s true identity. Bruce frowned. He absolutely had to investigate that man and find out if he knew and what he wanted.

He looked at the time in the right, down corner of his screen.

It was almost one in the noon and Bruce dreaded the moment Alfred would come again to bring him some brunch because now that a pupil lived in the Manor they had to eat later, after his return from school. He had reluctantly eaten some of the breakfast his butler brought, only to offer some console to the kind man who found out the truth and was devastated: Alfred was a helluva detective. And of course he took his medicines: Alfred was reluctantly persuaded to not call Leslie after figuring out about last night; if Bruce hadn’t taken his pills, surely he’d have called her.

Clark hadn’t shown up…His heartbeat became slower. Bruce was sure that he’d come back but today was Monday so he had to be at work. He clenched his fists – since he couldn’t do the same with his jaw; the pain became worse as the hours passed. He’d end it as soon as Clark came. Bruce had promised to stand by him through this…but Clark decided that didn’t want to. And maybe – Bruce at last could admit it – it was better to handle this case without keeping Superman close to him; Bruce would respect Clark’s decision...
He saw again Superman and Vivian naked on the rooftop, Clark’s inside hers, his passion for her unmatched; his satisfaction evident. And her triumph flashing in her eyes that despite the fact that behaved normally weren’t real.

“I don’t like competition, boy; especially, from a filthy maggot like you!

The burning iron in his chest pierced deeper and sent the pain to punish his mind.

Bruce jerked his head; he knew that whoosh and that presence that came to stand right before his computer bench the furniture between them. Hero hissed and arched his back in aggressive stance, his hair on edge; and then the kitten jumped from the Tumbler and rushed to Bruce standing between him and Superman who had marched around the bench to stand closer smiling benevolently.

Bruce stood using the utilities of his new armor and Superman’s eyebrows arched impressed. Clark made to move to him but Bruce raised abruptly his palm and stopped him several feet from him – Hero’s growl intensifying the meaning.

The Man of Steel could easily discern the wounds and bruises he had done to Bruce’s face and neck but the new armor – although it was exactly the same externally with the previous, Superman knew it wasn’t the same - like the former was lined with lead and thwarted him from seeing; however he was sure that the human’s body was in worse condition – especially his ass…his groin twitched remembering last night’s exertion and Bruce’s naked, writhing body shining with hot sweat.

“Wow! Now that’s a cold welcome! So you can stand, Bruce” he tilted his head “Lucius finally gave you the new armor.”

Bruce kept his arms loose at his sides.

“I thought to tell you but you had more important things in your mind.”

Superman nodded and his eyes took a sad hue that made Bruce’s heart squirm urging the youth to hug him but he knew better.

“Yeah…” Superman inhaled deeply “these last days I was in a daze.”

Bruce’s eyes remained impassive, still and cold: of course, he didn’t expect to hear an apology and Clark wouldn’t offer any. He hadn’t realized what he did.

“I thought you’d be at work” Bruce remarked indifferently.

“I took a leave” he smiled “I thought to spend the day with you.”

Bruce frowned internally and snorted but didn’t answer.

“I first went to your bedroom but the window was locked with something I couldn’t pass” Superman continued frowning.

Bruce nodded.

“Indeed” he wasn’t going to explain to him the shield he used to keep the Man of Steel out of his house.

Clark licked his lips uncomfortable and Bruce felt nausea feeling again that cruel tongue torturing his throat and his nipples aggravating even the current pain.

“Anyway, the cave is always open for Superman, huh?” the Man of Steel shrugged chuckling.
Bruce shook his head keeping his cold stare.

“Not always…”

“Listen, Bruce…I understand your feelings…”

Bruce tilted his head smirking.

“Really now…”

Superman cleared his throat: the human’s attitude annoyed him yet if he wanted to achieve his goal he had to stay poised.

“Yes…And about that. You were right for the tests I didn’t do in the Fortress” Bruce raised his head pursing his lips. “I should have done them – I was stupid. But it’s not too late. We can do them now.”

Bruce’s eyebrows arched.

“We?”

Superman nodded smiling and his eyes sparkled with the innocent, clear shade of blue that made Bruce’s heart melt.

“Yes…that’s the reason I took a leave. We’ll go together to the Fortress to have my tests done”

Now Bruce frowned.

“Why am I needed for that? You’re a big man” he asked coldly.

“I want you to see with your own eyes that I’m not fooling you again.”

Bruce twisted his eyebrows and shook his head.

“If you say that you’ll do it I don’t need to come and see.”

“I also hoped to have some days just for the two of us” Bruce opened his mouth in realization and nodded “Like the good old days…to escape from all these. Your bedroom there waits you… Remember?” his voice became touched and sensual.

Bruce remembered and these memories were salt in his aching heart yet he isolated this weak member of his body. A smirk carved half of Bruce’s face.

“And” he pierced Superman with his eyes “you’ll lock me there and threw the key, right?”

Superman pressed his lips and his eyebrows formed an ugly frown: Bruce was so clever. Damn!

Bruce nodded.

“So that’s the plan, Kal El? Imprison your human slave not allowing him to pester you constantly about the supposed Diana?”

Superman regained his calm expression and stared at Bruce innocently but Hero’s constant growling was very talkative.

“You’re not my slave, Bruce; you’re my lover” he said sensually and made to fly to him but Bruce’s cold glare stopped him.

“Not anymore, Superman” his voice was icy and fierce.

Superman narrowed his eyes and shook his head.

“It is about last night? I know I was a bit harsh but admit it, Bruce: you do like it this way – you never asked me to stop; you didn’t say anything” he said accusingly and Bruce shook his head with cocked eyebrows affirming in a sarcastic way. “And you promised that you’ll stay with me…” he continued aggressively.

But Bruce didn’t let him finish.

“Until you’d decide otherwise.”

Superman nodded with conviction.

“Exactly. I didn’t decide otherwise; I want you with me.”

Bruce grinned though his heart ached and his guts twitched but he ignored them.

“You decided, Superman, to shove me away.”

“I never said…”

“You decided with your acts!” he cut him abruptly with a voice sharp as razor and Superman’s eyes bulged. “I saw you having sex with her on the City Hall’s rooftop” his emotionless eyes flashed like lightning.

That was a great surprise for Superman who crossed his arms lowering his lead and licked his lips; after some seconds, he lifted his eyes to Bruce and there were animosity and jeering.

“So you stalked me! As if snitch me to Jor El wasn’t enough!”

“I didn’t say anything to Jor El: I didn’t contact him” Bruce snorted “you see I trusted you and I didn’t imagine that you’d lie tome for something so important. He was worried because you never went back for your tests and he contacted me through the wheelchair’s communication system.”

However this didn’t appease Superman.

“That doesn’t change the fact you stalked me last night! You should have stayed laid on your bed since” he cocked his eyebrows “I supposedly hurt you but you wore that suit and followed me to watch my every move!”

Bruce grinned and shook his head.

“Don’t be more ridiculous that you already are!” Superman clenched his fists ready to attack but he restrained himself gritting his teeth. “But when you choose the City Hall’s rooftop to get laid then it is as you beg for Batman to see you.”

Damn! How could he imagine that Bruce had a new armor that enabled him to stand and walk and that he would leave the Manor to patrol the city? Especially, after what happened; he had seemed completely defeated when Superman quenched his desire and let him collapse on the mattress.

Bruce continued.
“After that you realize that you have no place in the Manor or the cave again: as a matter of fact, after you leave, you’d find that both places are from now on inaccessible for you. You made your choice and I respect that, Clark; now it’s my turn.”

He turned to the computer bench, his back a clear sign of dismissal. However, Superman was determined to not retreat so easily: he couldn’t stand the thought of Bruce being obtainable for all these men surrounding him. The images of Thor fucking him under the bridge, although he knew that weren’t true, haunted his mind.

“Don’t you dare blame this to me!” Superman roared and several bats startled flew from their positions yet Hero didn’t even glance at them gritting his teeth and growling at the alien, his eyes sending daggers. “You never believed in this relationship! Though you knew that the devious plan of Al Ghul threw me to your feet, not only you didn’t thwart me from slipping in a relationship with you, but also enjoyed having me burning from desire and not satisfying me!”

Bruce’s eyes were wide, emotionless, still, looking at the days of the past…at the Fortress, at the island…

“You never invested in this! You always expected me to do everything – to offer you my love. And now with the first difficulty you put an end to what we have! You wear this armor to confront me because you’re afraid to do it as Bruce Wayne because Bruce Wayne is a scared brat who in the first ordeal whines and sniffs and runs away!”

Bruce’s heart was already stabbed so many times the last hours that these new stabs felt like scratches. His eyes remained steady as his breath.

“You put that end, Kal El; you were the one who acted like a brat – you promised to fight this, you promised to do the tests and stop seeing that woman but not only you didn’t do anything of these but also you accused me of infidelity, you punished me for this and the next moment you did the exact thing for which you accused me. You came here with no intention to tell the truth but to fool me into going to the Fortress so to imprison me to keep me along with that woman. And when I saw through you, you blame me for everything” he snorted. “Very brave, Superman…Very mature, indeed.”

This was an insult for Superman; he clenched his fists and his teeth rattled.

“I saved your life, you ungrateful bastard!”

Bruce didn’t turn to see him just yanked his head.

“I know and I’ll be always grateful to you, Superman. But that doesn’t mean that I have to tolerate you telling me lies, accusing me for being so filthy to cheat my loved one and fucking me worse than you’d do with a plastic doll” he finally turned to look him in the face calmly but resolute as granite.

Superman was shocked at how stony that face was; how determined those eyes were and at the same time bereft of any emotion.

“Stay away from me and Gotham” Batman growled in his raspy, cold voice.

Superman shook his head and smirked.

“You can’t keep me away from Gotham” he chuckled. “I know the true condition of Batman and he isn’t as formidable as he was” he licked his lips. “You think that you can intimidate Superman?” he cackled. “Please, Bruce: your armor might be able to make you stand and walk but your legs are useless! You’re a cripple!”
Bruce’s hand like a flash took the Knife of Justice that was stashed in the case under the bench and threw it so fast that Superman saw just a blur and realized that it was a knife only when the blade cut his upper arm ripping his suit, grazing his skin and spurting blood drops. It hurt like Hell.

In the same blur, the knife hit on the rock wall behind Superman and scratched again Superman’s upper arm before ending up to its master’s hand. Bruce caressed the blade and placed it in his belt. He stabbed with his eyes Superman who was squeezing the wound to stop the blood: It was so obvious that the Man of Steel was completely unused to these things. And the skin wasn’t healing itself like it should because this wasn’t a usual blade.

“I warned you about the Knife…And you’re right: my legs are useless but my hands are still quite skilled with knives.”

Superman pressed his lips and looked infuriated at him, red waves in his irises and sweat drops on his eyebrows.

“I’d suggest you don’t use your heat or laser vision on me…you remember how effectively Ra’s Al Ghul used the blade to deflect it” he said indifferently.

“You’re willing to kill me?”

Bruce grinned.

“I don’t kill. But I know how to protect myself and my city.”

“What has Gotham to be afraid of? I’m Superman, damn it!”

Bruce nodded.

“Exactly…You have an entire planet to protect…”

Superman fumed but didn’t retort; he just turned and took off through the waterfall.

Bruce pressed a button on the keyboard activating the shield that would stop Superman from returning and collapsed in Tony’s wheelchair. The migraine he had managed to imprison in the depths of his head now attacked with full force. Exhaustion and pain allied with it. And mostly, Bruce didn’t want to stay erect anymore even if the armor permitted him to… He was drained from energy or will and suddenly his world had lost its sun, drenching him in icy darkness…

Hero meowed reluctantly but sweetly and climbed on his lap, licking his jaw and staring at him with big, shinning, sad eyes. Bruce caressed the animal’s head.

“I know, buddy…I miss him already…”

Bruce’s eyes watered and the cave became distorted behind a liquid veil.
“Kate, unfortunately the situation is getting completely out of control as the fire has spread to the entire floor” the reporter’s face was contorted in agony as he spoke to the small TV’s screen; behind him the top floor of an apartment building was on fire, thick black smoke clouded the clear blue sky and red flames licked the building’s walls.

He was mopping the greasy floor of Dolcetto’s kitchen and his mind was numb, filled with the pangs of his crippled arm and his clenched hungry stomach. Signora Bruna stood above a pot that emanated mouth watering smells.

“Firefighters and helicopters can’t approach due to the black smoke and the debris that sprang everywhere...oh!” his eyes turned to the direction of the assembled officers. “Kate, news getting worse...people that got rescued from the burning site say that a woman is still inside…”

A nightmarish collapsing sound made everyone duck.

“Tom?” the female newscaster asked her colleague.

“Kate, it seems that there’s no hope for the trapped woman…”

Bruce raised his bruised, bloodshot eyes and looked at the screen: perhaps, he shouldn’t but still he was devastated when a person died; his eyes watered.

“What’s this?! Tom, the reporter, exclaimed as thrilled and happy as the crowd that was looking anxious to the sky.

The camera turned rapidly at the sky, at the spot where several fingers pointed and Bruce gaped: it was something in the sky, an angel with red wings, who emerged from the burning building, unscathed; in his arms, he held bridal style a battered woman. As the angel descended to the paramedics who ran to him to take the injured woman the top roof of the building collapsed.

The crowd cheered as the man – it was a young man not an angel - landed and Bruce saw the poor woman nestled in his chest crying loudly; her clothes were churned as her hair but she seemed alright.

The man gave her softly to the paramedics and took off swiftly smiling to the people that were clapping and whistling to him.

The camera followed zooming at him unable however to catch up with him for long yet Bruce was watching goggling the rapidly vanishing man. He was young, around 20 years, with raven, silk hair that formed a cute curl on his broad forehead; his eyes that Bruce managed to see when he turned to the crowd for just a second were the most beautiful eyes in the world: their color was the same with the blue topaz in his mom’s ring and shone as much. And his smile as he gave the woman to the paramedics…was sweet as the most delicious dessert.

Bruce’s heart missed several beats and he stopped breathing: his widened eyes were fixed on the screen where they played and replayed the footage from the flying man. That young man was so beautiful, so bright, like the sun and Bruce’s eyes filled with tears. He forgot his hunger and the pain; he was filled with that beauty and that kindness: the flying man’s face was full of love as he saved the woman...he was goodness and grace incarnated and Bruce wished he was the one in his arms and the burning building was Dolcetto…He closed his eyes feeling the bliss...imagining himself saved under the angel’s affectionate eyes…
But then a new crushing pain at his abused buttocks…and a cruel laugh. Signora Bruna had kicked him and now fisted his hair.

“Stop dickin’ around, ya shit! Ya’r not here to watch TV!” her gleeful eyes looked at the screen and Bruce felt that she defiled the flying man; Bruna smirked. “Ooooh! Ya like his bulging prick, huh? That suit definitely shows off his rich…credentials…” she croaked and Bruce blushed.

She pushed him to the floor and his face fell on the rag he was mopping with but he didn’t care because he still had before his eyes the flying man: an angel in blue and red, with his waving red cape and the yellow diamond in his broad chest.

“Yes, Kate” the reporter’s elated voice said “once again the day was saved by…”

Bruce was scrubbing the floor but his ears were focused there to hear the angel’s name but then a loud click stopped everything and he knew that Signora Bruna had turned off the TV.

“Ya’r enough horny, already, littl’ slut! Do yar job an’ forget foreign pricks! Yar asshole is only for Mistah Falcone!”

Her foot pressed Bruce’s back to the floor and he gasped from the pain. His eyes filled with tears and his throat burned: beautiful angels weren’t for him…he deserved only demons… He wasn’t worth to be saved by such a beautiful angel…by anyone…

Bruce felt a compassionate hand touching softly his shoulder and he raised his eyes to see Alfred’s serious face over him, his blue eyes filled with understanding and silent commiseration.

“Master Bruce, I think it is time you took off that armor and got your much needed rest” the older man’s voice was tender as if speaking to a wounded person but also determined.

Bruce pressed his lips in a tight line: the sadness Alfred so masterfully hid was so clear for him that became the latest rod to pierce his screaming guts. He didn’t want the kind man suffering because of him: if only Alfred loved him less…Sometimes Bruce wished that to spare the loyal Englishman from baring with him the constant blows.

He smiled to Alfred and Bruce knew that it was a pathetic attempt of a smile but for his butler was a ray of hope and Alfred reflected that smile, trying to encourage the youth. Bruce nodded because he was afraid that if attempted to utter anything, Alfred’s loving eyes would make his voice choke.

Alfred took the chair’s handles and stretched his body: he understood that his young master had spent tons of physical and emotional strength and stamina and he didn’t want the youth to exhaust himself more.

Bruce didn’t protest; he felt exhausted, on the verge of collapsing, but more he didn’t have the mood to continue…Also, he knew that for Alfred pushing his chair would be a great comfort; being allowed to offer his services. So he rest his hands softly on Hero and let Alfred steer the wheelchair to the lift and then to the master’s bedroom.

“I would suggest a nice, hot shower, sir” Alfred chirped as they entered the bedroom.

The room was tidied up – Alfred’s work. New, clean maroon beddings, open curtains permitting a mesmerizing view of the grounds and the Palisades. The blue sky caught Bruce’s stare: there were some fluffy, cute clouds hovering around but the sun was bright. Nothing short of last night’s infuriated sky.

Alfred followed his young master’s gaze and pressed his lips.
“The sun always rises again, Master Bruce…” he said hiding his emotions. “Even after a great storm.”

Bruce didn’t reply because he didn’t want to sadden Alfred; he just nodded and petted Hero’s soft back. Yes, the sun does rise every day but some storms leave grave disasters back: especially, to some trees that have already seen and been hit by many storms…They remain standing after each gale but bare the marks till a new mark brands the deepest and leaves a huge wound gaping…

Alfred pushed gently the chair to the bathroom and Bruce downed Hero on the floor; he smiled to his butler.

“I can shower, Alfred; I assure you, I won’t collapse.”

“If you say so, sir… I’ll place a set of pajamas on the bed and I’ll prepare something light for you to eat…”

But Bruce shook his head.

“I’m not hungry, Alfred.”

“Very well, sir” he reluctantly let go of the wheelchair and Bruce still wearing Batman’s armor opened the door ready to slither inside. “MasterBruce” the youth looked at him “I have refilled the case with the butterfly stitches in case you need some; you know I’m here for everything you wish” he widened his eyes for emphasis “for whichever aid you’d like.”

Bruce’s smile was faint; a shadow of the previous months’ smiles and Alfred’s insides formed a tight knot.

“I know, Alfred, thank you but I can manage” he lowered his eyes to Hero who was staring at him almost with agony. “Hero must be hungry” he muttered and locked his eyes with Alfred’s “can you…?”

Alfred nodded.

“Of course, sir! I’ll prepare your pajamas and I’ll feed him right away.”

“Thank you” his laborious smile dissolved and Bruce gulped “I don’t know what I would have done without you…” his voice became raspy and hurried to enter the bathroom.

The Englishman sighed but only after the water started running. He rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“I wish I was truly so capable to make your life a little better, Master Bruce…” he looked at the kitten who was staring at the closed bathroom door. “He’ll be alright in there, Master Hero, but after we must take care of him.”

When Bruce came out of the bathroom with the bathrobe tightly wrapped around his body, the exhaustion was overwhelming and his eyes hardly stayed open. Truth be told, he had kept his mind stubbornly blank letting the water’s sound echo in his skull’s cavities; he didn’t want to think anything because everything will lead to the same…

And his insides were already clenched painfully pressing the air in his lungs. In the bathroom, he realized that some stitches had ripped and he was losing some blood so he replaced them; as well as the makeup in the visible bruises: Alfred had understood yet he didn’t have to see them with his own eyes.
“I’ll tidy up the bathroom, sir” Alfred said taking in his master uneasiness at seeing his butler in the bedroom because Bruce didn’t want him to see the marks on his body while dressing. “Please, do call me after you finished.”

Bruce nodded and Alfred moved to the bathroom granting him some privacy; only Hero stayed in the bedroom interrupting his food at times to stare at his friend who placed in the headboard’s secret case the Knife of Justice that had stashed inside his bathrobe and dressed as fast as he could.

The need to close his eyes and mind to be hugged by the sleep’s oblivion was dominating and Alfred had prepared the bed with the fluffiest, warmest blankets but Bruce hesitated to lie there…He averted his gaze and looked at the sweet, mesmerizing flames in the fireplace: the warmth emanated from there melted his tormented body.

“Alfred, you can come” he said.

“Is the room’s temperature comfortable enough, sir?” Alfred inquired catching the youth’s stare on the fireplace. He was carrying the laundry basket filled with the parts of Batman’s armor.

Bruce raised his eyebrows.

“Perfect.”

Alfred covered the distance between them.

“Then you can sleep now.”

Bruce stared at his eyes reluctant to be at this bed again and Alfred bit his mouth’s inside guessing what might have happened there last night and how difficult would be for the youth to remember the good moments in contrast with his last night with Superman. However, Bruce grabbed his wheelchair’s armrests, lifted his body and brought it on the mattress, Alfred hurrying to help him lie down.

His body screamed desperately upon touching the softness of the mattress, the toll of last night’s violence and the overall exhaustion punishing as his healthy muscles relaxed. Bruce had to clench his throbbing jaw to not moan but Alfred took in the wince and the sharp intake of air. He touched Bruce’s cheek and the youth made a valiant effort to smile.

“I beg you, sir, do not spend your strength trying to hide your pain from me: I’m here to assist you fight the pain…” he remembered Ms. Wayne’s beautiful eyes that night she left the Manor to go at the alley to get back Master Bruce from Falcone; the trust in those eyes was paralyzing – the trust that the little boy would be safe with the butler. Alfred lowered his eyes because he never managed to save the boy …The boy saved him.

Bruce’s eyes were fixed on him, reading his sadness.

“It doesn’t hurt much, Alfred” lying to him was futile and disrespectful for the man and Bruce felt ashamed every time he was forced to hide the truth from Alfred; minimizing the facts was more acceptable. “I’m just tired. And it’s not important – I mean what happened…World has much more important and serious things than my love life…And actually now I’ll be able to focus on my work: there are so many things I need to do.”

Alfred nodded touched by his boy’s effort to not lie to him…entirely. However he knew that it really hurt.

“Then a little massage, sir, might help ease the tension and since Master Leench isn’t here I can offer my most amateurish efforts” he smiled and Bruce reflected that smile and rolled his body on his stomach.

Alfred massaged carefully his young master’s back, angry at how stiff those muscles were. What that bloody alien was thinking?! Bruce’s body needed extra caution and care not be handled with such harshness. He could imagine what Superman did to his master and Alfred dreaded to think what could have happened if there weren’t those energy casts to hold Bruce’s body…

Suddenly, Bruce tensed.

“We must pick Richard from school” he uttered. “What time is it?”

He rose a bit to look at the nightstand’s clock but his butler pressed him softly back on the mattress.

“We’ve got time, Master Bruce. And I was thinking of sending someone from Wayne Enterprises to bring home young Master Grayson.”

Bruce’s eyes widened and become frozen. He saw again Chill’s enormous silhouette in front of the Wayne Enterprises’ car waiting him outside the school yard.

“No! I don’t want anyone else picking up the boy!”

Alfred understood what connection was done in his young master’s brain.

“I understand, sir; I’ll be the one who brings Master Grayson back home but I’d certainly prefer to not leave you alone.”

Bruce looked up at him and gave a grin.

“He isn’t coming back, Alfred” and seeing his butler’s disbelief, Bruce nodded and shook his head. “You’re right: I made some bad judgment on him lately…but the Manor and the cave are perfectly shielded: he won’t be able to come in unless someone lets him – not that I believe he’ll try to…” he inhaled “attack me.”

He remembered Superman’s shocked expression when the Knife grazed him; Bruce could say that there was a flicker of fear at realizing that he was vulnerable. So he doubted that Superman would dare another encounter with the same blade.

Alfred stopped his massaging movements.

“You won’t let him in, sir…” his voice though stern hid pleading and Bruce pressed his lips.

“You can rest assured, Alfred: I won’t.”

Alfred resumed his gentle movements that slowly had managed to ease somewhat the tense from Bruce’s muscles.

“Pardon me, sir, for my insistence but you had said that you’d stay with him…and that worries me that you will accept him back.”

Bruce stilled his eyes on the chocolate thick wood of the headboard.

“I was willing to stay and support him yet I realized that I don’t have any influence on him anymore so I couldn’t offer him anything. I sent him away because if I continued being with him, as he wanted, then I’d give him the chance to do worse things than he did” he lowered his voice. “And Clark doesn’t deserve to stoop so low…”
“To you…To do worse things to you…”

Bruce bit his swollen lip and closed his eyes to fight the pain.

“Not only. Superman’s contact with me would constantly increase the emotional battle inside him that led to so much aggressiveness lately and I’m afraid that he could burst out at random occasions. Clark had sex with her so there’s no reason to continue this sick situation; now I’d be able to investigate things more objectively.”

Alfred didn’t like his young master continuing being occupied with Superman: he believed that it would open the wounds every time yet he couldn’t object. He closed his eyes and resumed his gentle up-down movements with the tips of his fingers until he saw his young master’s eyelids trembling, ready to cover his eyelids. He went to the window and lowered the heavy curtains so that nothing could disturb Bruce’s sleep.

When he returned to the bed Bruce had rolled his body on his back and Alfred muffled him meticulously with the blankets noticing a faint crooked smile on the youth’s sleepy face.

“Alfred, I’m not a child to tuck me in bed…” a half asleep voice told him.

But then Bruce felt a slight disturbance on the blankets and saw Hero climbing swiftly to curl beside his master.

“I won’t be alone” Bruce yawned “Hero will look after me: he is a formidable opponent” he chuckled and relished Alfred’s grin “you can ask the bats in the cave…or Superman.”

His face became serious.

“Do not worry about me, Alfred: I’m alright. I…I survived from worse…And” he tilted his head on the pillow, his eyes becoming blank “we all knew that this was a dream from which I would have to wake up some day…” his eyes returned to the present and looked at Alfred’s tense face; he pressed his lips and raised his eyebrows. “The sooner the better, right?”

Alfred nodded and caressed Bruce’s hair.

“I know you’re the bravest and the strongest man there is however…” he inhaled deeply. “There are people around you to listen to you whenever you want to speak – and I’ll be honored if you consider my humble self one of them.”

Bruce looked him in the eyes.

“Always, Alfred…” but his eyelids were already too heavy and Alfred’s caress was so relaxing that he let them cover his eyes.

The British watched carefully Bruce’s breath till he was sure that the youth was sound asleep and petted Hero that was licking his paw and rubbed it to his nuzzle.

“Stay with him, Master Hero; I trust you that if you see something worrisome you’ll come and alert me, right?” he winked and the kitten did the same causing Alfred’s smile.

Superman stood on the rooftop of the Daily Planet building; he was gazing at Metropolis which was washed by a bright sun that made its imposing, glimmering buildings blinding. People were marching the pavements and cars sped: it was noon and everyone was either returning home or taking a lunch break.

He heard Diana’s landing and her strong feet approaching him but he didn’t turn; he was deep in his thoughts and his feelings. The wound from the Blade hurt: it began healing but too slowly – he was sure that it’d take days and that was unbelievable. That damn knife! He couldn’t believe that Bruce used that to wound him…and the fucking blade grazed him and the flesh was struggling to heal itself…it stung horribly.

He had changed his uniform because he didn’t want anyone to see Superman’s attire ripped or suspect that he could be hurt. More he didn’t want Diana to see him like this; to consider him weak. He could admit to himself that he had acted stupidly: Bruce was far too clever to fall for his trick. Superman had overestimated the human’s will to sustain their relationship; he had believed that Bruce would still want to persuade him for his loyalty and love and would accept to follow him at the Fortress muffling his paranoia and suspiciousness. Unfortunately, Bruce had seen him and Diana on the rooftop – damn! How could he imagine that the human would manage after that stormy sex to dress up and patrol Gotham? Damn you, Bruce!

He had tossed the dagger to hurt him; he saw the hatred in Bruce’s eyes. He would have killed him if he wasn’t so self righteous: it was Bruce’s moral code not his love that stopped him from stabbing his heart.

He felt Diana’s strong and simultaneously sensual hands touch his shoulders; she kissed the back of his neck sending goose bumps to every corner of his body. Her perfume made the sun shine more jubilant.

“You secured Wayne?” she whispered in his ear and Superman though at first felt that this sounded evil he immediately changed his mind.

“No” he sighed. “He didn’t agree to follow me.”

The warmth of Diana’s body distanced a bit from his and Superman turned to her seeing her narrowed eyes.

“Didn’t agree? You didn’t need his agreement” she said exasperated. “He is yours; he shouldn’t disagree with your will.”

Superman grinned.

“Bruce isn’t like that…”

She snorted and crossed her arms.

“I know! He is an arrogant, insolent brat who likes to pose as a proud human and insult better people than him. You could have made him follow you” she said arching her eyebrows with emphasis and determination.

Superman shook his head: right now that he was somewhat calmer he knew that he didn’t want to kidnap Bruce though he could admit to himself that he wouldn’t have managed even if he tried – that Knife was really dangerous in Bruce’s hands. But of course he couldn’t say it to Diana: he didn’t want to lose her admiration.

“No, I don’t want to be violent to him or become a common pervert by kidnapping him” he pursed his lips. “I don’t think that Bruce is worthy of it” he brushed Diana’s jaw and smiled. “So I ended what I had with him: once and for all. I realized what I really want” he cupped with both hands her face and brought it near his. “You…”

He touched his lips to her rich, ruby lips and sucked closing his eyes in delight; however Diana had her eyes open and watched Superman’s every reaction following his rhythm at first and then immersed her fingers in his locks ruffling them violently as she deepened the kiss. It was time she celebrated her triumph.

Superman wrapped her back in his arms and shoved his tongue in her mouth to tangle with hers; his groin twitched madly sensing the vibrations of Diana’s hips. This pleasure was enough to forget the numb feeling and the void in his guts from the moment he ran from the cave…He was glad that Diana didn’t imagine that Bruce saw them together and he was the one that ditched Superman away.

“Then we don’t have to hide from anyone…” Diana murmured slyly stopping abruptly the kiss. “We can show that spoiled human the real happiness and love the Lord of Krypton deserves and now has” she smirked. “Make him understand how inadequate he is.”

Superman widened his eyes: Bruce already knew but still Superman didn’t feel ready to let the people around him know.

“You hesitate?” Diana asked frowning, her voice demanding.

“We don’t have to prove anything to anyone; everyone will know eventually.”

Diana lolled her head to the side cocking an eyebrow.

“Certainly…” she crooked her lips and captured again Superman’s mouth, who didn’t resist the chance. “Besides who cares if anybody knows: it’s enough that we’re finally together…” she wrapped her arms around Superman’s back and rubbed her strongly built body to his. “My apartment is at the suburbs…” she bit softly Superman’s bottom lip and the intoxicating air from her lungs caressed his hot flesh.

Her eyes filled his entire world as his body began burning in desire to get inside her so he wrapped her waist and took off to the suburbs.

Tony was sprawled over his ergonomic desk chair inside his office at the Avengers’ Tower. Feet crossed at the ankles on the table he was tolerating his employees’ reports about the coming StarkExpo. The happy sun that invaded the room from the three whole wall windows was a big consolation but also a big temptation to brush the teleconference option at his phone’s screen: Screw the businessmen – fly to Malibu – enjoy the sea and the sun. Big sigh…When he decided to become an adult? Stupid, Tony…

“I want the central exhibition stand for Wayne Enterprises” he interrupted with his almost rude way one of his suit-dressed, serious employees.

The man in the one of the five holograms in front of Tony’s desk frowned and his face filled with mockery.

“Mr. Stark, I know how fond you are of these Enterprises but I’m not sure that anything they can produce is worthy of the central stand in the StarExpo. This stand is throughout the years devoted to Stark Industries” he nodded. “And rightfully.”

Tony chewed the end of his pencil and stared at the man – a yuppie at his 35.
“Mmm…” he pouted “Brenda, right?” the man rolled his eyes exasperated.

“No, Mr. Stark” a blond hot stuff that happened to be his best engineer corrected him from the hologram on the right. “I’m Brenda, he is Brandon.”

Tony smirked.

“Call me Tony, hon…” he winked and the girl – hardly 23 – smiled. “Sorry for that but Brandon – Brenda, who cares?” he said to the man shaking his hand dismissingly. “Well, Brandon, I appreciate your loyalty to my company but I happen to know the best for MY company. And Wayne Enterprises had already manifested their pioneering creativity” Brandon was ready to interrupt him but Tony fixed him a sharp glance and stopped him. “And what we’re going to exhibit in StarkExpo is gonna make a great impression.”

Brandon shrugged.

“As you wish, Mr. Stark.”

Tony stretched his body almost lying on his chair’s back and brought his hands in the back of his neck.

“It goes without saying, my friend…” he uttered self-satisfied.

But his loose posture stiffened when the door opened almost silently to reveal Pepper – of course, Tony knew already who was because the door opened automatically only for her, him and Bruce. Well, Bruce was in Gotham, so…

Pepper was collected as ever but with an angry frown that Tony didn’t like.

“Thank you, boys and girls” he dismissed them with a snap of his fingers and brushed the option on his desk phone dissolving the holograms; he took his legs off the table to lean towards Pepper.

“He was a doppelganger of mine” he hurried to say cocking his eyebrows innocently “a bad replica” he saw Pepper rolling her eyes. “The one in the strip club last night – I was here with Fury…You can ask him” he arched his eyebrows “not that he is my employee but he is veracious…” he almost choked in that.

Pepper marched to his office holding her tablet and Tony scratched his hair.

“Luthor is released” she said without further delay. “Gotham’s DA office made a short announcement.”

She sat at the small, round armchair opposite his desk and Tony fisted his hands, pressing his lips.

“The bastard!” he huffed but then lolled his head. “However we knew that they couldn’t hold him much more in jail” he snorted and slapped the desk. “Fuck! Thinking his smug, stupid face makes me want to smash his bold head…” he noticed that Pepper was upset and it was obvious that the reason was something else.

His eyes stabbed hers.

“What happened?” he demanded.

Pepper gritted her teeth, her eyes sparkling touched and infuriated at the same time.

“Local and national media rave about something else” her voice was distorted with seriousness.
“It’s Bruce, right?” he felt his blood freezing in his veins and a shadow was cast over his features.

She stood determined, made the circle and placed her tablet on the desk in front of him; Tony frowned, bad assumptions filling rapidly his brain. Pepper leaned and brushed the screen starting the video she had on full screen.

The video began with the image filled with the bottom parts of two intertwined naked bodies: it was pixelated yet it was easy to figure that it was a perfect male ass in front of a female vagina; the ass moved back and forth with such strength and speed that Tony cocked an eyebrow in admiration, with his eyes widened. The woman’s legs were wrapped around the man’s hips and clenched him pushing her blurred groin to his.

“It would be a better porn clip if they hadn’t covered the essential parts…and under heavy rain in a rooftop…nice idea” he pouted and lolled his head to the side to get a better view.

However Pepper remained stern and stiff which caused Tony’s suspicion. He looked at her but she gestured to the screen.

The focus left from the couple’s joint genitals and got distance to contain slowly their entire bodies. The sound of flesh rubbing and slapping flesh towered the roar of the heavy rain that washed their perfect bodies.

“Great boobs!” Tony exclaimed and then narrowed his eyes. “I have seen these boobs before…” he looked immediately at Pepper appeasingly “professionally…”

Pepper didn’t have the mood even to glare at him and Tony knew that this was a bad omen. And finally figured the reason: the camera zoomed to the faces that were united as their mouths danced together; the image was completely clear; two flashed faces, sweaty with plastered locks framing their sparkling eyes that were almost black from their dilated pupils.

Tony gaped; his eyes two blazing stones. And then his face became distorted with rage. He punched the desk and Pepper wondered how the wood didn’t crack.

“The motherfucker!” he shouted and his breaths were rasps and roars.

Pepper pressed her lips.

“The video was broadcast by GCN and rapidly was taken by every news outlet in the states and worldwide: the date is of yesterday.”

Tony yanked his head backwards.

“The bastard! I warned him, damn it!”

Pepper bit her lip; she wasn’t sure if he was referring to Bruce or Superman. She touched his shoulder.

“Tony…”

He shook his head gritting his teeth.

“I told that fucking alien that Bruce is sensitive; I told him to not engage him if he wasn’t sure; I warned him that he would break Bruce’s heart…but he didn’t care! He thought only his dick”

He pressed his hair to his head and instantly Ironman’s armor engulfed his body while the whole wall window opened.

“Where are you going?”

He looked at her, his face still uncovered.

“To Bruce” he shook his head and huffed. “Bruce…” he lowered his voice “you believed so much in this scum…Aaaah! Little guy…”

Pepper held his upper arm and her eyes became stern.

“You need to be careful and not your usual impetuous self” she blinked. “Bruce may have not learnt anything yet.”

Tony licked his lips.

“I doubt it: Bruce is constantly updated about his city’s news” he inhaled. “However, I’ll be discreet” the face plate took its place and Pepper shook her head sighing because Tony Stark and discreet were two contrasting concepts.

He rushed out of the window that closed after his departure; Pepper watched his figure in the sky getting smaller and shook her head. She was sure that Tony although he always liked to be right this time he wished to had been wrong in his opinion about Superman.

Alfred was ready to leave the Manor to head for Richard’s school to pick him up; he wanted to be early there to oblige to Master Bruce’s wish. Of course he didn’t feel right to leave his young Master alone while asleep and with Superman dissatisfied on the loose; yet he couldn’t disobey him.

When the doorbell filled the ground floor with its stentorian sound Alfred was already in front of the door. He frowned but opened.

“Leslie?” he asked flabbergasted seeing his old friend; it was her evident upset that made him the greatest impression. “Is anything wrong?”

She burst into the foyer and looked around.

“Is Bruce here?” her voice was firm as always but also with a discernible agony.

Alfred closed the door calmly.

“Master Bruce is sleeping and I was ready to bring home Master Grayson.”

Leslie nodded but her eyes were narrowed.

“He isn’t feeling alright? I know it’s not in his habits to sleep at this time of the day.”

Alfred remained poised; he wasn’t going to betray his Master’s trust.

“He was feeling very tired so he decided to take a nap.”

Well, Leslie’s face was full of disbelief but the reason she had come was other so he let that aside for now.

“So he hasn’t seen the video yet.”
Alfred frowned.

“What video?”

Leslie inhaled deeply.

“Every TV station in Gotham plays it constantly and the nationwide too” Alfred was fraught: what that video could be to concern Master Bruce? Leslie gulped but her eyes were sparkling furious.

“Superman with that Wonder Woman on a rooftop, fucking!” she spat and pressed her lips.

“Asshole!”

Alfred didn’t seem shocked and Leslie noticing narrowed her eyes.

“Bruce knows already…” she exclaimed realizing. “How? Superman confessed to him?”

Alfred hesitated to answer; he didn’t want Leslie to make a fuss about Bruce wearing the armor and going out.

“No, Superman didn’t say anything to Master Bruce.”

Leslie crossed her arms and locked eyes with him.

“Alfred, you know how much I care about Bruce and I’m his doctor so tell me everything. NOW.”

“You won’t pester or reprimand him…”

Leslie let a bitter smile crook her lips.

“After what Superman did?” she shook her head. “I’d only hug him” she cocked her eyebrows. “If he lets me of course – we all know how he likes to hide his suffering.”

Alfred nodded thoughtful.

“Well?” Leslie prompted him.

“He saw them that night; yes, he was out in his new armor…”

Leslie yanked her head and huffed slapping her thigh.

“That boy! That stubborn brat!”

Her friend understood her feelings but now that wasn’t the point.

“He had to get outside; to clear his mind, to feel free” he inhaled. “I don’t blame him, Leslie. But a video? Who could have seen and recorded them?”

Leslie shrugged.

“Maybe Bruce has some idea but I really don’t give a damn. The only thing I care about is our boy and his broken heart. How is he?”

“He finished the relationship with Superman and tries to persuade me that it was nothing” Leslie arched her eyebrows prompting Alfred with her eyes to tell his impression. “But he suffers, Leslie… it is so unfair and so cruel: all this time, for the first time in his young life Master Bruce was happy; he began living again; his eyes shone almost like when he was a child.”
Leslie pinched the bridge of her nose.

“I’d like to see him, Alfred.”

“Do not wake him up, Leslie; he needs sleep.”

She smiled.

“Of course not, Alfred.”

He gestured to her to follow him.

Bruce was aware that he was asleep; his exhausted, aching body felt like hovering between the clouds but he knew that these clouds were actually his mattress…No, he didn’t want any thoughts shadow the sky he was floating…with stubbornness he shut every attempt on thinking…But then a beautiful perfume caressed his nostrils…a strong masculine smell, sweet and fierce, grass and wind, and clear, blue sky over the salty sea, and safety and love…

He moved his body towards the smell and hugged the pillow next to his without waking; he plunged his nose and mouth to the soft pillow and the smell paralyzed his mind and made his heart whine from pain…Clark’s perfume was so powerful…as if he was still lying beside him…like he used to do, the good days…

And then Clark began singing with his suave, sweet voice, the hot air from his lungs caressing his ear:

Moon river, wider than a mile
I'm crossing you in style someday
Oh, dream maker, you heart breaker
Wherever you're going, I'm going your way

Two drifters, off to see the world
There's such a lot of world to see
We're after the same rainbow's end, waiting, round the bend
My Huckleberry Friend, Moon River, and me…

“Bruce, I know you hear me even though you’re far away... Come back to me...Out there is a vast world and you haven’t seen anything” he laughed bitterly. “You’ll see that the world has many beauties not only horrors...you’ll see: the world is beautiful and waits both of us. I’ll show you...
But don’t leave me, okay? You’re too young and precious to die...and life owes you so many happy moments...I’ll give you that happiness, I promise” he whispered. “Just give me the chance, Star...”

Bruce’s healthy body filled goose bumps from the pain and the love that cracked this voice. He hugged the pillow and clenched it desperately because he didn’t want to let this Clark leave…

He was kneeled on the snow-covered forest floor, he was naked above the waist and his pants opened and drenched. Flass was dragged away from him by something…Something that Bruce was fully aware that was Superman – the greatest hero of all, the most beautiful being in the whole world.

His body was trembling and the icy cold wasn’t the only reason; his heart was writhing thrilled. He had seen the man in Falcone’s party at the Manor and then at the press conference but he was under his civilian identity: Clark Kent.

He heard his light footsteps on the snow approaching him and his heart kicked in his ribs; his eyes wanted to turn up to marvel at him but he was Falcone’s slave and Superman should not suspect the truth. He had no right to look at any man.

Superman’s beautiful, blue topaz eyes were on his downcast eyes...so kind...so sweet...but not for him...Bruce knew that he wasn’t destined for such a pure, bright being...He wasn’t destined to be loved, to be happy...

“Can I call you ‘Star’?” the most beautiful, shy smile caressed Superman’s embarrassed face and the man’s eyes were fixed at Bruce’s eyes.

Bruce couldn’t fight a smile; his lips felt odd because smiling was so rare.

“I’ve been called worse...” he replied raising a bit his eyes to Superman’s face.

He muffled him in his red cape and it was so warm, so relaxing, with Superman’s perfume so strong...Superman lifted and hugged him to take him back to the Manor, back to Falcone...but Bruce for some minutes, in his arms could forget everything in the world, even himself...He had melted and his head nestled in that broad chest lulled by the alien’s powerful heartbeat...

“Are you afraid of heights?” Bruce could hear the satisfied smile in Superman’s voice and also he felt his body’s shiver...and Superman never felt cold so the Man of Steel really liked the sense of Bruce’s body on his. “I won’t let you fall...”

But suddenly a thunder hurt Bruce’s ears and the sky became pitch black and the rain was falling like waterfall – the wind was howling like a pack of hungry wolves.

“You slander her – a noble, brave warrior – of being a whore while you are the whore!”

The sound of the soft sea waves that splashed on the shore made his heart loosen; two blue topaz eyes were staring at his face hued by the setting sun’s golden-orange rays.

“...the moment you’ll be healed, I swear to Rao that you won’t get out of our greenhouse for two months!”

He was hearing the sound of flesh on flesh, the wet rasps and the moans...the so familiar moans of Superman and those of a woman. Their groins were united; rubbing each other...greedy hands were hugging possessively Superman’s naked back, nails digging the impenetrable flesh. Superman was rocking forward-backwards making her body arch and convulse, her mouth open in groans of pleasure as he sucked her round, bulged breasts...

Bruce felt his heart being squeezed inside his chest, big iron nails clawing at the tender beating flesh, every drop of blood echoing like a drum. His lungs were burning and he felt like there wasn’t any air as if he was having an asthma attack.

Hero meowed sorrowfully and caressed his hurt Master’s cheek with his paw and then licked as his mom used to do before someone took him from her and threw him to a bin.

“It hurts so much, Alfred...” he whispered in his sleep in an exhausted voice.

Alfred stepped closer and caressed Bruce’s locks.

“I know, Master Bruce...I know” he mumbled. “But it’ll be alright...I promise...” he wished he was confident about his promise but he wasn’t.

Leslie who stood over his bed looked at Alfred and the rugged doctor’s eyes were cracked with sorrow, wet: she just couldn’t bare the sight of Bruce’s suffering.

“After all the pain he’s been through all his life, being stabbed in the heart by the one he loved with all his heart…” she pressed her lips so hard that they lost their color. “My angel…”

Leslie patted her friend’s back.

“He is strong, Alfred, and we’ll help him: he is not alone…”

Alfred nodded.

“I just hoped against hope that Superman would not do that to Master Bruce…” he shook his head and decided that he should finally oblige to Bruce’s wish. “Leslie, I wonder if you can stay with Master Bruce? He asked me to pick Master Richard from school: he doesn’t trust anyone with the boy. I don’t want Master Bruce to be alone and Master Hero is definitely a formidable bodyguard but I’d like a human here as well.”

“Certainly” she glanced at Hero who kept rubbing his head to Bruce’s cheek purring soothingly. “Having all these problems of his own and taking care of this boy as well: a boy that hates him. You know how much I admire our Bruce?” she chuckled.

Alfred shook his head grinning.

“I have some idea…”

Alfred had just gone to fetch Dick from school when Leslie who was sipping some bourbon from her round glass saw Ironman hovering outside the big, arch shaped window of the grand salon. She hurried to open and he landed on the thick carpet immediately deactivating his face plate and looking anxiously around.

“Hello there, young man!” Leslie said to him mock reprimanding.

Tony looked at her but his solemn face didn’t crack in some grin.

“Hi, Leslie, I’m glad to see you. Where’s Alfred? And Bruce? I called at his office but he didn’t go today.”

Leslie nodded, understanding the reason of Tony’s haste.

“You saw the fucking video” she spat.

“Who didn’t?” Tony replied exasperated.

“Bruce; he is sleeping” she said gulping the rest of her booze.

Tony watched lustfully the descent of the liquid in Leslie’s throat: he wouldn’t say no to one.

“Is he alright?” he asked, his raspy voice filled with worry.

“I asked Alfred the same; he is fine, just tired.”

“So he doesn’t know? I scanned an odd field like a shield around the Manor and the cave.”

Leslie pursed her lips.
“I don’t know about the field, Anthony; as for the rest you should wait for him to wake up” she didn’t want to say more because she considered it best if the two friends discussed it together without a mediator.

Tony fumed like a beast looking around restlessly hardly containing his rage and energy.

“The sonovabitch! He is going to break Bruce’s heart and in this delicate stage of his recovery!”

“Don’t worry, Tony: I’m perfectly fine.”

Both turned towards the corridor that led there from the kitchen. Bruce smiled to them petting calmly Hero on his lap. Tony cursed loud for not hearing him coming but then noticed the chair Bruce was on and realization dawned to him: Bruce was using his wheelchair and although that satisfied him, his love for his buddy made him pain for Bruce since he understood what had made him chose his chair to Superman’s.

Leslie placed her glass on the small, round, marble table under the window and rushed to Bruce.

“Did you sleep well? Are you well rested?”

Bruce nodded.

“I am, Leslie, thank you” he took her hand and shook it.

Yet the doctor was looking frowned Bruce’s tired face and Tony who had in the meantime approached did the same.

“Your eyes…” the billionaire from Malibu exclaimed. “You didn’t sleep at all last night…” he shook his head and slapped his forehead. “Fuck!” he shouted and Leslie glared at him.

“Yes, Tony: I was out patrolling last night with the new suit Lucius and you made me.”

Tony yanked his head backwards and groaned frustrated. He slapped his face with both hands and squatted in front of Bruce taking both his hands.

“Why? Why are you doing this, Bruce? Do you want to kill yourself?” and then he remembered the video and the consequences and bit his lower lip – if Bruce learnt about Superman and that woman his mindless behavior would become worse.

For Bruce Tony’s concerns were so obvious.

“I’m alive, buddy” he pressed his lips in a line reminding a smile. “I can protect myself and the armor you built for me is full of gadgets” he inhaled deeply. “I don’t intend on doing that more often so you can rest assure” he looked up to Leslie who was anxious too and then back at Tony’s fervent black eyes. “And I saw them on the City Hall’s rooftop” he licked his bottom lip. “And…I finished what we had with…” he hesitated to utter the name because even that burned his throat but reprimanded himself “Superman.”

Tony’s mouth stayed agape; he caressed his friend’s neck with both hands and locked their eyes together.

“I’m sorry, little guy…”

Bruce smiled with pressed lips and shook his head.

“It’s okay, Tony…Actually, it gives me a lot of time and clear mind to work on so many things that I have neglected – unforgivably.”

But Tony like Leslie could see behind his determined, nonchalant eyes and feel the dim thud of Bruce’s wounded heart. His friend’s bravery to hide his pain to not sadden his loved ones made Tony’s mind go crazy with love for the boy he thought dead for eighteen years and hatred for the man who had broken his sensitive heart after all the pain he suffered. He tightened his grip to Bruce’s head and brought their foreheads to touch.

“Did he threaten you?” he mumbled and Leslie’s stare became aggressive only on thinking about the powerful being threatening a disabled human.

Bruce smiled.

“No, he had made his decision. I just eased his job…”

Tony twisted his lips in disbelief.

“Yet you put a new shield around the Manor and the cave which I bet has Kryptonite radiation and it is impenetrable for him” he gritted his teeth. “Did he…” he remembered Pepper’s warn to not be impetuous “did he become aggressive?”

Leslie cupped Bruce’s hand.

“Did he, Bruce?” she asked affectionately.

“No, he didn’t” Bruce replied though he felt bad saying lies to them but he didn’t want Tony to do something irrational.

Yet Tony still fumed; he jerked to his feet.

“I’m going to make him pay for that! I warned him to stay away from you; to not play with you… and he…he…the bastard!”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Tony, please. It wasn’t his fault: I let that happen. I’m not angry with him: he offered me so much… Actually, I’m grateful: he saved my life” Leslie pressed her lips unable to keep her eyes dry; she caressed the youth’s locks. “He taught me that there’s pure romantic love in the world” he smiled to Tony’s stony face “for a short time he gifted me the idea that this love can be for me as well…His feelings just changed…either normally or with some effect. I can’t blame him for this…”

Tony felt his eyes watering and this wasn’t a time for tears; he turned his head towards the open window.

“But I can!” he spat and rushed to the window taking off.

Selina was sprawled on the blue couch in the lounge room of Steve’s cabin: the fireplace in the corner was lit with the logs tactfully arranged in their metal square case. It emanated an intoxicating smell of burning pinewood to the entire room and Selina thought that she would start purring if she could.

It was afternoon and they had just returned from a stroll to the lake; they had lunch on a restaurant with a splendid, panoramic view of the sun- washed lake. She turned on the television and let it on a program with video clips.

Steve came out of the kitchen bringing two mugs with steaming, hot coffee. He gave her the one and leaned above her to meet her hungry lips in a deep kiss.

He jumped over the sofa’s back and settled beside her, wrapping his arm around her shoulders. Selina nestled in his strong chest pouting and Steve laughed.

“What?”

“I’d prefer it if that chest wasn’t covered with anything…” she touched her fingertips to his neck and kissed his Adam’s apple.

She placed her mug on the shining wood table and grabbed the rim of his blouse and pulling upwards. Steve tried to not spill his coffee laughing.

“How about we drink our coffee first?” he cocked his eyebrows amused.

Selina rolled her eyes and pouted.

“Are we married already?” she asked mock pissed and grabbed the mug from his hand to put it on the table.

She took off Steve’s blouse and threw it on the armchair; then suddenly stopped arching a playful eyebrow, her fingers caressing sensually his chest numbing him.

“Mmm…Perhaps you’re right: let’s drink our coffee first…”

But he smiled broadly.

“No way, missy!” he grabbed her armpits and brought her to glue on his hot chest, removing hastily her top leaving only her black lace bra. “I think I hate coffee…” he sighed rolling the straps on her upper arms releasing her round breasts.

Selina arched her eyebrows slyly and kissed his lips; she was straddling him.

“Now you’re talking, handsome…” she breathed sensually to his ear and Steve’s mind went frenzy.

He grabbed her waist and rolled her under him, plunging his mouth to her soft breasts. Selina ruffled his blond hair, moaning to his hot kisses on her aroused breasts. Her hips began rubbing to his half hard groin; her hands clutched the zip of his jeans lowering it in a swift motion as his hands grabbed the crotch of her gym pants and underpants pulling both down freeing her throbbing vagina.

Selina arched her neck, her eyes half closed, groaning as Steve’s dexterous lips sucked her taut underbelly going lower… But then she caught with the corner of her eye something on the TV screen and her hands stopped brushing Steve’s back. Her interest focused entirely on the video playing on the screen and her eyes narrowed as her breath was held in her lungs.

Steve stopped his ministrations and followed her stare; he detached and sat on the couch as Selina gathered herself and sat properly to watch the footage on the screen.

Superman and Wonder Woman were fucking on a rooftop under heavy rain…

Steve watched frowned Selina’s icy eyes that sparkled angrily like a wildcat’s; and then the young woman stood up abruptly, pulling on her clothes and wearing hastily her top. Captain America stood up, as well, wore his clothes and cuddled Selina from behind, kissing the top of her head. She turned her head to look at him.

“I must return to Gotham ASAP!”

It was late afternoon and the sky had taken the deep blue color that foretold the falling of night; clouds had started gathering again but it didn’t remind last night’s storm. The grounds looked too gloom under the setting sun.

Bruce guided his wheelchair aimlessly through the tiled paths trying to escape from his thoughts. He didn’t manage to find Tony: even Jarvis didn’t know his current location nor Pepper who however tried to soothe him.

But Bruce did worry: his friend was distraught thinking him heartbroken and sought Superman to confront him. He pressed his hair on his head and huffed; it was his fault all this mess.

At least, Alfred took Richard to his training and the boy didn’t seem to notice anything. Leslie had returned to the free clinic. Bruce was alone: he had left Hero at the back drawing room to play.

He didn’t even raise his eyes at the hill where his parents’ graves stood; he couldn’t stand even to think his parents right now: how ashamed they’ll be of their son…once again.

He inhaled deeply and exhaled slowly to calm his heartbeat and make his breath normal; Leslie’s eyes were so worried when she got in her car to leave; she had suggested to exam him but Bruce refused every time because he didn’t want her to see the marks…If Leslie saw the marks then the rest wound find out too and things would get out of hand.

His body still ached where his senses were operating normally.

Suddenly, he looked around to orient himself: he was moving without noticing his surroundings. His heart lost several beats and his eyes narrowed staying still, fixed on what was in front of him.

A rectangular building with glass walls and triangular transparent roof. It was long deserted but it seemed so alive…

Bruce pressed his lips to cause pain in his face so that the pain in his chest was muffled: his heart after so many hours of suffering felt like a stone smashing his chest. And now with that building in front of him his guts felt like getting stabbed.

He opened the door and slithered inside; his gaze brushed the pots with the withered plants, the working bench, the heater…the creaks of burning logs invaded his ears…he moved to the bench and touched the oil lamp and the greenhouse was set under the sweet hue of the lamp’s light.

“Let me melt the ice, Star and illuminate your haunted heart…”

He had panicked and averted slightly his lips but upon realizing that the pleasant paralyzing wave from the kiss began leaving his body as Clark sighed and began reluctantly taking off his lips, he touched again his lips to Clark’s.

…Clark’s hands cupped the back of Bruce’s head caressing greedily his locks while his other hand touched gently his jaw to deepen slowly, carefully the kiss.

“I can show you how it is to be loved…” he whispered purposely looking all the time to Bruce’s eyes giving him the ability to check his honesty. “If you want...If you allow me…”
Bruce had inhaled deeply: he felt like drowning; his heart beat frantic both from something he was experiencing for the first time and from something he was very familiar with. The first he had read about, it was what normal people called arousal - well, a very shy arousal in his case -, the later, he was experiencing his entire life: it was a deep dread whenever he realized that someone was ready to use him. But Clark didn’t want to use, he wanted to give to him, to give him his vast love.

“You make me happy, Star…I love you…”

“Clark, I’m…”

Clark didn’t need to hear from Bruce that he loved him; it was too early and Bruce had already made huge steps. He rubbed soothing circles on his back.

“Hush, Star…There’s no need for you to say anything…”

“I want your first time to be perfect” Clark whispered in Bruce’s ear causing a shudder in his spine.

Bruce’s moans through the kiss were enough for Clark to take him in his arms and lay him on the blanket. Bruce’s eyes pierced Clark’s eyes and saw that Clark was ready to be kicked away.

“You said you could show me how it is to be loved” he said determined.

Clark grinned broadly and let his body touch Bruce’s without letting his weight fell entirely on him. He trailed kisses to Bruce’s jaw line and nibbled his neck that arched to allow him better access and… Bruce moaned when Clark’s mouth sucked his collarbone; yet his hand was still holding the cape tight on his naked body and the Man of Steel was rasping, his heart beating frantically eager for what he desired so many months and finally was so near…

“Let me worship your body…” his voice was cracked from passion and arousal and Bruce just released that the fabric slid a little but didn’t reveal flesh.

Damn that cape! Clark thought and Bruce chuckled giving him the unsaid permission to do what he wanted so much. However, Clark grateful for Bruce’s trust took gently the younger man’s hands and led them to his suit’s unseen spots that allowed the fabric to roll of his body. Bruce’s eyes widened surprised and a bit overwhelmed but Clark brought Bruce’s palms to his lips and kissed them softly; then he guided them in lowering the upper half of his suit till the hips.

Clark smiled fondly seeing Bruce’s awed stare; it was so cute seeing that child-like expression.

Bruce couldn’t help but gape at the endless layers of perfectly chiseled muscles in Superman’s body. Even the tight latex of his suit didn’t prepare for the naked body. Bulky deloids, wide chest with round shaped pectorals covered with curly raven hair disrupted by two erected, big brown nipples, his abdominals dancing slowly with each breath.

Bruce rose and caressed with shaking hands Clark’s breasts. The Man of Steel was watching without breathing Bruce feeling his body which welcomed him and asked for more. When he touched his lips to Clark’s pectorals, kissing, it was too much…

The Man of Steel hugged Bruce’s body and laid him gently on his back ‘trapping’ him between his naked arms; he bent his powerful body like a snake without falling on Bruce and brought his face above Bruce’s.

“Tonight, I’ll worship you…”
He began unwrapping gently, respectfully his cape that stubbornly clung to Bruce’s body...

He didn’t want to grab those thighs and just hastily spread Bruce so he massaged the taut flesh from the knees to the hips and Bruce grunted only to moan, groan and breathe shallow when Clark began nibbling the inside of his thighs that began trembling uncontrollably.

Only then Clark opened gently his legs revealing his opening. His ragged breath showed that he wanted to surge inside and claim Bruce forever but his sharp intake of air stopped Clark; he rubbed soothing and arousing circles to Bruce’s underbelly and penis causing him to close his eyes and sigh.

Clark covered his index finger with aloe and slowly caressed the perimeter of Bruce’s anus bringing his finger in gradually only when felt the muscle trembling ready. He tensed for a few seconds and then as the finger massaged his inner muscle relaxed, fixing his eyes on Clark’s sweaty face framed by his wild locks.

When Clark felt Bruce ready added a second finger carefully teasing the muscle into relaxing it more and then he tinkled Bruce’s prostate making Bruce gasp and shake. Clark pressed his lips, his raspiration was uncontrolled: this gorgeous body was so much neglected of pleasant stimulation like a Strativarious violin played for the first time after a hundred years of violent scratches.

Bruce both wanted Clark to continue and dreaded it, something clenching his insides painfully urging him to escape. His heart beat fast from arousal, want and urge to flee; he saw Clark frowning and leaning above him to kiss his lips lovingly.

“Do you want me to stop?” he breathed huskily searching Bruce’s irises but his Star’s gaze became determined.

“Proceed” he said calmly.

Bruce closed his eyes and tried to breathe calmly though Clark’s length filling him was his entire world. As Clark began thrusting incredibly gently but stimulating at the same time, electric currents ran his spine making him convulse; his body was waking, enjoying what for years was meant to cause him shame and excruciating pain. He wrapped his legs around Clark’s firm glutial muscles doing shyly the rubbing dance that excited so much Tony. It was exciting to know that this powerful being was nestled between his legs holding back his own satisfaction to not hurt him and he wanted to show his gratitude for that.

“You can’t imagine how gorgeous you are, Star…” Superman rasped.

He nibbled Bruce’s jaw line and breasts as his head lolled backwards overwhelmed by the hotness in his anus that spurt to his groin to burn his spine with violent jerks that Superman’s body absorbed.

Clark came when Bruce did gaping.

They stayed like this for much time till Clark felt Bruce’s breathe feathery light and his heartbeat peaceful in sleep. He pulled himself begrudgingly from Bruce’s body holding him. Then he leaned him gently back on the blanket but Bruce half asleep looked at him.

“I love you, Star…”

“You stopped calling me ‘Star’…”

Clark was sprawled on the mattress.
“It is really so important?” he answered tired and disappointed.

“I won’t let anyone harm you again…” Clark had breathed in his ear.

Suddenly, a thunder roared; yes, it was a stormy night over the greenhouse then…

The eyes he so much loved were over his face again but the way they looked at him was different: sarcastic, triumphant, angry, hostile…The red of his ire was visible under that breathtaking blue topaz color.

“So beautiful…so rot…a real powerful seductress, indeed”

“You like powerful beings” he hissed through gritted teeth. “I’m Kal El, the mighty Lord of Krypton, and you’re a cheap human…”

Pain…Disgust…Despair…

“Don’t hide your pain from me…I know it gives you pleasure and I can give you more pleasure than anyone…”

“Beg me like you did with Bane…”

“Don’t you dare blame this to me!” Superman roared “You never believed in this relationship! Though you knew that the devious plan of Al Ghul threw me to your feet, not only you didn’t thwart me from slipping in a relationship with you, but also enjoyed having me burning from desire and not satisfying me!”

He saw again Clark’s beautiful eyes, warm with love, gazing at his naked body placed upon the blanket…his cheeks became hot and his head ached. Bruce felt so ashamed: being naked in front of someone…opening his legs to someone…his body trembled. His brain screamed to him indiscernible things that in the end constructed one word: “ridiculous!”

He should have never let that happen. Bruce was seeing inside Clark’s irises himself naked with spread legs and it was the same he was seeing every time Falcone, Chill and Ra’s used him: an ugly, disfigured, disgusting body…his real body…

He hid his face in his palms but the air wasn’t enough, he couldn’t breathe so he yanked his head drawing desperately oxygen…his heart beat like a convulsing dying fish…You should never let that happen…It was stupid, it was a huge mistake…it’s unforgivable…

He heard soft footsteps behind him.
It was late midnight and the small ghost shuffled out of the heavy, metallic door dragging a huge bag with garbage. His right arm hanged like a log from his shoulder and small clouds formed in the cold night as pants left his mouth: the sack with the garbage was too big and heavy for him and his legs were too skinny to carry the burden, especially some nights that the exhaustion and some severe beating worsened the situation. So every other step he stumbled, hardly maintaining his balance.

Selina looked around carefully for hostile eyes and rushed out from behind the big garbage bin to help her friend. They were both at 14 years yet she, albeit a girl, was taller and with more meat than Bruce: the food at the orphanage wasn’t great but still was luxurious compared with the piece of bread her poor friend had to live on... He looked much younger than her as his development was stalled: he wasn’t short but he should have grown more, and the worse was how skinny he was.

Bruce’s eyes bulged suddenly as he felt the burden becoming lighter and realizing that it was his friend. Truth be told, he was engrossed in his thoughts otherwise he’d have seen her earlier and stopped her before running to him. He looked around like a small deer waiting to be attacked by a pack of hungry wolves.

Selina wrapped her free arm around his shoulder and dragged him to the bin carrying most of the burden.

“Nobody is watchin’, cool down, kiddo…” she whispered and released her friend’s shoulder to hoist the lead of the bin; they lifted together the bag and tossed it inside.

They hurried behind the rectangular garbage bin that hid them every night. Selina rubbed soothingly Bruce’s back that trembled from the freezing cold and as always from some brutal blows...the times her palm filled dried blood and deep gashes were countless but she shuddered every time for Bruce’s suffering.

She hugged and held him to her chest to not see her pouting like a crying baby; she wanted to hold him like this forever but she knew that it wasn’t possible. Bruce kissed her cheek and then patted her arm affectionately; Selina knew that they didn’t have much time so she let him detach from her and gave him his sandwich.

Bruce began eating but Selina could see that he was elsewhere...well, Bruce always was somewhere between this world and the other world where his parents were now but tonight his giddiness had a different quality...his eyes sparkled...well, her friend’s eyes always sparkled but in a melancholic way ready to burst to tears while tonight his eyes were...thrilled...mesmerized. Selina frowned watching carefully Bruce eating, his eyes looking inwards.

Suddenly, the boy focused again to the reality and locked eyes with the girl who smiled.

“Sel?” he asked shyly.

“Mmm…”

Bruce’s eyes flashed.

“Have you ever seen him?”

Selina narrowed her eyes.
“Whom, sweetie?”

Bruce lowered his eyes and cleared his throat to hide his enthusiasm.

“That flying man who saves people: he wears red and blue and has a red cape that waves and…and a yellow diamond in his…” the boy flashed remembering “chest and…and he’s beautiful…”

Selina’s eyes widened because she could understand some things from Bruce’s shaking voice and more from his lowered eyes. She took softly his chin and lifted his face to look at her.

“Mmm…I think I know who you mean…”

Bruce smiled in his shy, scared way that screamed how unused this boy was to smile.

“He’s an angel…His eyes are the eyes of an angel…Like…like gems…”

Bruce’s voice was so touched and warm that Selina felt her heart melting.

“He isn’t an angel: he is Superman.”

Bruce’s eyes widened innocently and he gaped.

“You have seen him many times?” his breath was cut in his chest and Selina cupped his skinny cheeks.

“A couple of times when the cameras caught him, rescuing people or kittens…”

The boy arched his eyebrows.

“I…I saw him today…in Signora Bruna’s TV in the kitchen…Many times you said?” his voice was disappointed because he was sure that he wouldn’t manage to see him again.

Selina caressed his cold, soft cheeks and Bruce realizing that he had betrayed his enthusiasm lowered his eyes. But the girl brushed the stray locks from his forehead combing them back and met his eyes.

“Bruce, you like him, huh?” she asked kindly.

He avoided her eyes and looked down, gulping.

“No” he shook his head “how could I? I…I just saw him and…” he sniffed because his frozen nose dripped a bit.

The girl shared the pain in her friend’s bonny chest.

“I thought many times go find him and ask his help…” she said swallowing hard and biting her lips but Bruce jerked panicked shaking his head.

“No! No! No, Sel…you shouldn’t…” he breathed hard. “I can’t be saved…” his voice dropped and Selina hugged him again trying to ease his uncontrollable shaking.

“Ssssss… sweetie…calm down…People say that he was saving people for years…but then he wasn’t showing his face…they were calling him ‘the Blur’…now everyone calls him Superman and they adore him…” she was caressing his back and she felt his trembling eased the more she talked about the angel from TV.
She had covered the miles to Gotham in record time thanks to Steve’s motorbike and his knowledge of secret shortcuts. Selina saw the Manor but her instinct told her that Bruce wouldn’t be there so she didn’t waste time there; she knew where to find him like that morning.

And now his proud figure, imprisoned in that awful wheelchair was before her in the shadows of the day’s last light; re-living the moments of the happiest night in his life…Making the stab in his heart deeper…

She felt weak to help with that much pain: Bruce had already suffered so much and that new blow… The young woman cursed inside: life was an ugly bitch! She couldn’t accept such injustice, such cruelty. Life played with Bruce so brutally bestowing him all this happiness, fulfilling his biggest dream and then taking them away, breaking his heart that just opened up sucking some of the warmth of sun…

She pressed her lips: she should not let her cowardice keep her away from her friend’s side. She marched inside the greenhouse.

Loki was sprawled in his throne, legs bent at the knee over the armrest. Before him in thin air, broadcast from mortal’s TV played covering the space from floor to ceiling. He was chewing with noise a glistening red apple and watched rather unimpressed some reportage about a starlet that stole the husband of another actress. He yawned: some news: this was the world’s oldest story!

Suddenly, the newscaster, an old guy with gray hair and wicked eyes announced the next theme as something ‘for adults only’ and Loki raised an eyebrow: he wished it was indeed something juicy because he was bored to death and that wasn’t good news for Earth.

His eyes bulged seeing a blurred male ass and a female groin and the naughty god wondered since when humans became so cool to show such videos in the news but soon his wonder was answered as the faces became clear.

“Bloody Me!” he exclaimed and jerked his legs off the armrests, his eyes sparkling.

He lolled his head to different ankles to have a better view yet he was disappointed.

“C’mon, guys! This is the NEWS! This is reality! We need the naked truth not the Smurfs!” he threw his half eaten apple to the nude male statue opposite him hitting the genitals. “Bull’s eye!”

The news had changed theme and Loki grim and disappointed plunged his chin to his palm: he wanted more. He snapped his fingers and a lit lamp emerged on his head; he raised his hand and pressed the button putting out the light.

“Is Superman fucking Wonder Woman…the one who shot that Oscar worthy short film must have posted also the director’s cut of his masterpiece…” he chuckled. “And there’s only one place for free speech…”

“Did you call, Your Highness?” a fairy popped out from thin air before him and bowed.

Her lean, curvy body was lilac and her long, straight hair raven while her wings were silver. Loki regarded her licking his lips: under her transparent white silk rags she was completely naked, her small breasts singing to him.

“A God can speak to himself, Pixy!” he spat pissed for the interruption.
“Is Dixy, Your Majesty” she answered smiling sensually.

“Whatever…” he mumbled, snapped his fingers and the fairy vanished.

“Now…YouTube…for the naked truth!”

In front of him, the same image without any blurring.

“HD, 3D, if you please…” he said and the image became crystal clear and the bodies almost alive.

“Now we’re talking…and zoom…”

Loki pursed his lips and chewed the inside of his mouth watching Superman’s length penetrating Wonder Woman’s vagina with such force that could break a wall.

“Wow!” he exclaimed and his mouth stayed agape; he lolled his head as the panting breaths became faster to the pace of the thrusts and Wonder Woman’s rich breasts hopped frantic on her chest.

Out of thin air a banana fell on his lap and he grabbed the fruit.

“Huh! You’re in my mind…No, it is indeed my mind…” he pealed the banana mechanically, goggling at the screen. “Ow! Ow! I’m jealous, guys!” he gulped a huge chunk of his banana.

And then his smile became sly and his eyes shone gleefully.

“Poor Brucey…” he shook his head. “How can you sleep alone from now on?” he cocked an eyebrow. “Or maybe my dear brother will come to comfort you and fill…your void which judging from Superman’s huge…inner world” he lolled his head to see better “it must be pretty big…” he grabbed the armrests and jolted to his feet. “It’s time good Loki did his matchmaking duty…”

He trotted to the shining floor but then stopped and glanced at the frozen frame of Superman sucking Wonder Woman’s swollen thick nipple.

“Don’t go anywhere, guys…I’ll watch it again for scientific purposes, of course…” he winked and vanished.

Bruno Mannheim’s secretary entered his office after being allowed.

“Mr. Luthor at line 4, Mr. Mannheim.”

The enormous businessman cast her a grim glance filled with contempt which the young woman didn’t care for since she was used to bad behavior from her employers; Mannheim was paying better than every other so she was willing to tolerate his snobbish attitude. After all, who gave a shit about those filthy rich bastards? She only cared about her thick pay check.

Mannheim waved to her dismissively and the brown haired woman bowed slightly and left.

As soon as she closed the door, Bagdana dressed in his leather attire emerged out of thin air sat at the gray armchair in front of Mannheim’s desk. The gangster blinked and Luthor’s voice echoed to the room.

“I’m on my jet to Metropolis; as soon as I land we can meet to discuss our next moves” his voice was cheery, smug and full of confidence.

Bagdana twisted his lips with distaste and Mannheim cocked an eyebrow: he knew the demon’s hatred for the tycoon and the reasons for that.

The raven haired businessman snorted.

“We don’t have to meet, Luthor: there’s nothing to talk about” he spat. “Make me my machine immediately or else…” he inhaled deeply. “Well, I don’t think that I must elaborate on that. You failed me once…a second failure will be un…forgivable.”

Luthor was heard clearing his throat uncomfortable.

“You’ll have your machine, Mannheim; I’m not ungrateful.”

He cocked an eyebrow and Bagdana smirked.

“Prove it! Because I hate ungrateful humans” the connection was cut without him having to do anything, just with his thought.

Bagdana crossed his legs and leaned to his armchair’s back.

“Tell me something…” he mumbled narrowing his eyes. “Why you chose a human to build your machine?” Mannheim regarded him. “I mean, you hate humans; you consider them worthless pests so why trusting Luthor of all humans to build it?”

“Because this machine must know the characteristics of the species it will be used to” he arched his thick, black eyebrows. “And to be able to adjust to these characteristics, it is necessary to be created by a representative of that species.”

Bagdana nodded, grinning slyly.

“Luthor caught my eye immediately: he is a very typical human specimen. Sly, greedy, mean, smug, devious and…easy to be manipulated – stupid” he said like spitting.

Bagdana touched the tip of his nose with his fingertip.

“And with all these…pros you trusted him to make your machine?”

The gangster tycoon stood and came in front of his desk leaning his waist to the glass surface.

“He’s very efficient in constructing shady things and he doesn’t ask questions when he’s handsomely rewarded or when he believes that he’ll be part of a new world order; and he has many connections and his corporation has premises expanded everywhere” he snorted. “Of course, your human” Bagdana raised his head “cropped up in the middle to thwart our plans but…” he gritted his teeth “he’s another human so he won’t be a trouble.”

Bagdana shook his head amused with his ally’s wrong estimation for Bruce.

“You know, every human being is not like Luthor…The human nature has countless variations.”

Mannheim cocked his eyebrows smugly and roared.

“Variations that twirl around Luthor’s qualities and” he locked eyes with his minion having a gleeful shine in his abysmal orbs “it’s entertaining invading their minds and learning their every secret; every petty dirty sin…” he sniggered. “I know why Luthor was so cheery…”

Bagdana’s rich lips twitched.
“He was just released from prison” he widened his eyes for emphasis.

The other crossed his arms that were enormous even in his human form.

“This is the least…” he puffed and in the air two naked bodies took shape; two bodies united in wild intercourse. “I’m sure you recognize them?” he asked snidely cocking an eyebrow. “These images eradicated everything else in Luthor’s mind: he was elated for every naughty, dirty, degrading comment and jeering for the Kryptonian. Luthor was entertained because the…Boy scout fell from his moral throne and became the star of stupid talk and gossip shows.”

He let the scenes play exactly as in the popular video and watched eagerly his minion’s reactions; however the demon’s face was expressionless, granite like his favorite form.

“I’m not surprised” Mannheim said snobbishly. “The Kryptonian is a superior life form…compared to these humans so he was bound to be fast bored by a cripple mortal…Only you seem infatuated with that pest” he pursed his square lips and his black mustache twitched. “I really can’t understand you, Bagdana…”

But the ancient demon wasn’t listening to him; his blank eyes were focused on the couple’s mating but he was seeing Bruce; his beloved Bat’s stunning eyes had become Bagdana’s entire world the moment of his victory; the moment the demon believed that his Lilith would come back to him; the mesmerizing flash in Bruce’s eyes when he stabbed the Blade to the demon’s back. His Lilith backstabbed him for a second time…

“Now you feel how it is to be betrayed by the one you love with all your existence, Bruce: your heart got stabbed as my back that day…You love him but he snubbed your love and chose someone else leaving you burning and melting in memories of past happiness and present suffering…My Lilith, finally, you tasted what you did to me and now maybe you’ll understand and feel me…”

“Of course now the Kryptonian came closer” Mannheim continued his rant arching his eyebrows mockingly “too close with the Amazon and her alliance is guaranteed.”

Bagdana left the dark caves of his mind and heart where Bruce was the king.

“Are you afraid of the Amazon?”

The businessman roared sure that the stupid human employees outside wouldn’t hear anything.

“I am not afraid of anything this miserable planet has to show.”

Bagdana smiled and changed the crossing leg: his ally’s ignorance was so entertaining…

“You should be afraid of one…” he retorted nonchalant.

The new God seemed affronted and in disbelief.

“And who this might be?” he asked.

Bagdana shrugged.

“Earth always produces surprises.”

The office vanished and suddenly they were at the underground throne hall under Mannheim’s Mansion. Darkseid stripped from his human form and was now standing between the elliptic vessels that contained perpetual fires. He flexed his gigantic body and his eyes spit daggers of fire, the flames in the vessels blowing to the high ceiling.

“Not for Darkseid, the ruler of the Universe and extinguisher of worlds. Nobody equals me!” he ground his teeth and the hurricanes all over his throne howled.

Yet Bagdana wasn’t impressed; his face filled with dark shadows and his eyes became red like rubies that no human had ever seen.

“I have seen many great warriors, kings and Gods getting smashed by their arrogance” his voice became throaty. “Nemesis lurked them to give her final blow and doom them.”

Darker side loll his head staring smugly at him.

“Like yourself?”

The demon stabbed Darkseid’s eyes with his.

“Exactly…and I lost everything” he replied bitterly. “But I became wiser.”

Darker side’s laughter shook the thick, huge ancient pillars.

“Judging from the fact I found you chained and ragged in the Tartarus” Bagdana jerked as if hidden by an invisible whip “NO. On the other hand, I’m already wise and invincible; and your Nemesis is a long forgotten and downfallen Goddess who has no power anymore” he inhaled deeply and yanked his head. “Now that my machine will be complete Earth’s end is near and along another victory for Darkseid.”

Bagdana didn’t care for the New God’s insults or his arrogance or the Earth’s destruction – this planet had offered him only pain. The only thing he cared about was getting Bruce.

“Never forget what you promised me.”

Darker side narrowed his eyes.

“Now that the Kryptonian doesn’t give a damn about your cripple toy you can snatch him.”

“Then your plan will fail: do not forget that Bruce has many protectors. Moving against him now will alert him and your machine would probably never be built and the great Darkseid for the first time will be defeated” the shadow of a smile carved his square face. “You see, I bare your interests and our agreement in first priority: I can wait…patience after millions of years became my biggest weapon.”

Darker side fumed hearing the words defeat and Darkseid; he turned furious and marched to his throne.

“Do as you like with your pet” he spat. “You’re dismissed!”

The ancient demon made a bow but his eyes were filled with slyness and mockery. Of course he’ll do as he liked with Bruce because Bruce was his…

Joker looked himself on the whole body rectangular mirror in the center of the warehouse he had made his hideout. During the day they dwelled in the ground floor – the playroom - while the second floor’s rooms had been turned into bedrooms.

He swirled around himself watching carefully his purple coat and patted the velvet fabric on his chest and buttocks. It was his new dressing coat and he wanted to be sure that it was perfect before he wore it in a public appearance.

“Looookks and clothes are not everything aaaand they shoow vanity” he said to his tailor who was slumped on the pink armchair opposite the mirror “buuuuuut, myyy friend, I’m a public figure aaaand my wife is this city’s Prince sooooo I have to keeeeeep my status: I’m the Prince of Crime after all – ruuuuuuler of the underworld…” he grimaced narrowing his eyes “I sound like Count Dracula, huh? Aaaanyway…You should be proud, buddy: you did a splendid work” he lifted his thumbs to the tailor that didn’t seem quite thrilled with his client’s praise.

Joker made a rapid spin and lolled his head looking curiously at the old man. He pouted at the bulged, petrified orbs of the tailor and the edge of a blade that protruded from his chest: blood had painted his entire front.

“Of course, it is a posthumous praise” he mumbled sorrowful and patted the man’s shoulder. “Buuuuuut you know that every great artist gets recognized only after deeeeeeath” he sighed dramatically. “Except for me…but…I’m one of world’s wonders after all… How many are they?” he scratched his skull squeezing his eyes.

Suddenly, he took in the ruckus from his clowns who were gathered around the old TV in the far end of the vast space. He narrowed his eyes and whistled.

“Eeeeee, kiiiiids? Don’t you think that my new coat is splendid?” he scratched his head. “You don’t know what ‘splendid’ means…mmm…nice?”

Yet nobody seemed to hear him and Joker more than pissed was intrigued: what these morons were watching? With two jumps he reached them and pushed away the three who covered the screen.

“Ow!” he exclaimed seeing a butt and a female groin pixilated; he bent to see better; he scratched his ear and sighed. “I guess it is the time to make the big talk, huh, kids? Buuuuut: you should show some respect to your daddy – I know you’re in a tough age and your hormones boil yet…youuuu HAVE to follow daddy’s example! I’m a fuuuuckin’ roooole model!”

He punched the goon that was sat in the chair before the TV and jumped in his place leaning to the screen. The camera left the big boobs to ascend to their faces and Joker pouted.

“HEHEHEHEHEHUHUHUUUUUUUUUU! I always knew it that this laaaad hadn’t found his true inclination…AHA-AHA-HAHAHAHAHA!!! Yup! Supes boy: from the first time I saw you I knew you’re a natural porn star: the way you showed off that buuuuulge down there… UHUHUHUHEHEHEHEHEEEEE….an’ your coooooostar….” he muttered nasally and smirked. “Ouch!” he exclaimed as the camera returned to the groins that shook stormily – his eyes widened. “Now that’s a STAKE! I knewwwww it wasn’t shocks! Poor Bruceyyyyy…I guess Falcone’s training with dildos came handy after all, huh?” he turned his eyes down to his own groin and blinked a bit sad: “Jokey, you have sooome veeeeeery big…shoes? To fill! HEHEHEHEHE! Not shoes buuuuuuut kids are listening…”

He clapped his hands.

“Off, boys! There’s nothing for youuuuuu to see” he sobered abruptly and switched off the TV.

He supported his head to the armchair’s back deep in thought, his eyebrow twitching.

“Sooolllll… dear Bruceyyyyy was cheated…Noooow that Superoaf broke your tender little heart maybe you’ll understand who deserves your love…” he slapped his eye. “Who I’m kidding? Who cares about your love, Batsy? Your hot body…Noooooo, I wouldn’t say no for your loooove, too…I’m deeply romantic after all… Let daddy Joker give you comfort, myyyyy pooor boooy…”

He cackled.

“Buuuuut our love must wait” he waved his fingers to the air pouting his lips “fooooor the conditions to ripe buuuut my heart and mind will be with you, baaaabe…especially, when you’re in the shower…completely nakaakd and weeeeeeet…” he rolled his eyes and licked his lips. “That perfect chiseled god-like body with the bulging muscles shining under the water…the brown locks plastered to the sharp cheekbones…” he popped his tongue and panted like a thirsty dog.

He slapped hardly himself.

“Get a grip! If you continue like this I’ll storm that Manor right now an’ that would be tooooo predictable…an’ moronic.”

He jerked up and hopped to the armchair were the dead tailor lay; Joker squeezed himself next to the corpse and gave the dead man a one armed hug touching his head to the corpse’s like he was going to confide in a dear friend.

“Do you gather that Brucey would be sobbing right now because Superman cheated him?” he fistst the dead man’s hair on the back of the head and made him shake in denial. Joker nodded. “I believe the same thing: my Batsy probably has already kicked that bastard’s sorry ass…” he touched his fingertip to his lips thoughtful “well, I don’t know how but I’m sure that Batsy made Super-goofy runnnn…”

His cackle became an uncontrolled giggle that caused the stares of his goons who had gathered again around the TV. Joker smiled to the dead man’s crystallized eyes.

“You know, buddy, I’m sooooo delighted that the SuperBeef would never touch Brucey again” he nodded pouting and rolling his eyes. “I know what you’re thinking…that I’m happy because that huge stake won’t ever get in my Batsy’s sweet hole…mmm…” he closed his eyes. “I want that hole only for meeeee, pal…”

He opened his eyes and pushed the corpse to the floor.

“Your help was priceless, buuuuuddy…” he huffed. “They’re right about a friend’s shoulder…One obstacle off but still Batsy is difficult to be tamed” he arched his eyebrows. “That’s the reason I loooove him sooooo much!” he cheered like a schoolgirl rubbing his gloved hands together.

Dick entered the gym’s small cafeteria, his backpack on one arm, craning his head around to find his friend. They had spoken earlier on the phone and arranged to meet there.

“There you are…” he muttered seeing Jason sprawled on a chair at a corner table and marched there.

He snatched the cigarette from his friend’s hand and snapped it in half gesturing to the sign on the wall.

“You don’t know what this sign means?”

The younger boy rolled his eyes and scratched his hair.

“No smokin’?” he cocked his eyebrows.
“Exactly!” he sat in the opposite chair.

Jason twitched his lips.

“Ya’re on the mood, huh? Ouch!”

“Two orange juices” Dick said to the young waitress before Jason managed to utter what he wanted.

“Fuck!” the younger boy exclaimed. “I’m in for a helluva drive again, huh? An’ I had a good day till now…”

“Yeah?” Dick asked aggressively. “Why not? You’re not forced to live with Wayne…Though at least today I was spared of his presence” Jay chuckled and Dick frowned. “Yeah. His butler drove me everywhere – like a fucking bodyguard. Thank goodness, he went to the granny’s flat to get me some things” he sighed “I couldn’t stand going there and not seeing my granny… so he left me alone to the gym” he shook his head “but he’ll come to get me back…” he slumped his head on the table.”

Jason arched his eyebrows.

“Then I’m shocked ya didn’t run away already!”

Dick yanked his head and slapped his forehead.

“Careful…” Jason said amused “you’ll make a lump…”

The older boy leaned to him to not be heard.

“I would have run away but I have the feeling Wayne put people watch me…Fancy that! I’m imprisoned!”

They both looked the waitress who placed their orders on the table and left. Jason crossed his arms.

“Not imprisoned, man…c’mon…Ya’re a Wayne now” he saw Dick’s angry frown “ouch!” a hard kick was delivered to his ankle. “Why ya did that, ya asshole! Temporarily, ya’re his protégé so bad guys might want to get ya for ransom…” he stopped abruptly narrowing his eyes. “Maybe I shoulda kidnap ya an’ ask for money?” he stretched on his chair’s back “Anyway, as soon as it’s known that Wayne has yar…mmm…” he tried to remember the word.

“Guardianship.”

“That. Well, after they learn that ya’ll be a target – not to mention, that nutcase Joker who’s loose an’ grabbed ya in the past. However, for the time being I don’t think that anyone will notice ya…”

Dick drank from his juice.

“I think that he put people watching me to keep Tony away and increase my misery…” he groaned.

“That’s a possibility…” Jason sipped his juice grimacing with disgust. “What they put in that juice? Eeeek! Anyway, granny” he cleared his throat “yar granny must have spoken to Wayne.”

Suddenly, Dick remembered what Jason told.

“Wait…Jay, why you said that nobody will notice me?”

The younger boy laughed.
“Oh! That! Ya don’t know, do ya?” he rolled his eyes. “Why do ya have that goat gizmo?”

Dick huffed and pulled out of the backpack his Cosmos tablet.

“What am I supposed to look for?” he spat impatient.

Jason was chuckling amused.

“Google Superman an’ Wonder Woman an’ ya’ll see…”

Dick did that having his eyes fixed on Jason.

“There’d be million results, Jay…”

“Nah…Ya’ll see…”

And indeed, on the top of the page with the results was a video. Dick looked at Jason who nodded.

“Open it; is the censored version so ya won’t be traumatized…” he snorted and Dick glared at him pressing ‘play’.

“That’s the top news of the day an’ the month an’ maybe the year” Jason said after the video ended and a blushed Dick stared at him; the younger boy pouted for his friend’s blushing. “Ya knew how the babies are born, right?”

Dick gave him a little slap on the head.

“You think that’s why Wayne was absent almost the entire day? I mean, remember the video with Superman carrying him and the rumors…” he asked him. “And at the lunch he was extremely pale and with circles under his eyes…”

Jason snorted.

“For someone who hates him ya seem to be very observant of him…”

“I just noticed that Alfred was worried and antsy since morning and Wayne was supposed to drive me to school but he did. So I thought that something must be wrong and I had my eyes open: I hoped for a sign of a terrible illness…”

Jason shook his head.

“C’mon, man…He’s stuck in a chair…” he said serious.

“Yes, but this won’t kill him…” his eyes sparkled and Jason sighed. “It was certain that Superman would see him through, be disgusted and dump him. As he deserves.”

Jason shrugged.

“Yeah, sure…” he replied indifferent. “But now we won’t get the chance to see Superman in the Manor…”

Dick rolled his eyes.

“But you’re one of the bad guys, remember?” he whispered. “A thief…”

Jason shrugged.
“Absolutely. But Supes is a Star, man, an’ since the chances of seein’ Batman are zero, seein’ the Boy scout would be a refund.”

The mentioning of Batman made Dick forget everything else: his eyes dropped seeing into the past. In an inferno of fire and collapsing woods and metal, thick, suffocating smoke and a black cape protecting him from everything. Batman shoving him away and then a horrible bang; he looked and Batman was under tons of debris…crashed.

“Nobody is gonna see Batman again…” he mumbled. “He died to save me…”

“But that Catwoman said that he’s alive an’ ya told me that she was there that night…”

Dick shrugged.

“She’s crazy or he might have asked her to speak like that if anything happened to him.”

“I don’t know, man… People have seen him recently…”

The older boy was tired of this discussion and yanked his head pissed, growling. But then his shoulders slumped.

“The butler is here…” he spat.

“Bruce…”

He couldn’t fight the smile forming although he’d prefer it if Selina had not come; he wasn’t ready to speak with his friend, to look her in the eyes… because he knew that it would be difficult to hide from her. Now, he hesitated to turn and look at her; he didn’t want to make her sad.

But Selina rushed to him and squatted in front of him, engaging his eyes. Bruce pressed his lips seeing her sad eyes, although there was also a sparkle of anger.

“You shouldn’t wander the grounds at this time, Bruce; it's too dark and too cold…you need warmth and comfort.”

He grinned to her though his lips were too reluctant to make that move and the swelling was the least of the reasons.

“It isn’t so cold, Selina…”

“Because you feel frozen inside, right?”

“You shouldn’t be here, Sel” he took her hands in his and squeezed them softly; he didn’t want to answer to her remark.

“There’s no other place in the world I should be, Bruce” her eyes flashed and Bruce discerned the pain from her realization that his eyes were emotionless.

So he reprimanded himself and chased away from his eyes the darkness that swallowed everything else.

“You saw that dreadful video” he shook his head. “Really, Sel, you should have stayed with Steve – you deserve have great time and” he raised his eyebrows in emphasis “you know me: I’m tougher than this…” he smiled.
Selina placed her palm over his heart.

“I know you, sweetie…I know your heart…”

Bruce shook his head.

“Nothing happened, Selina…He just chose another person: such things happen every day; it’s normal.”

“Not to you, Bruce: he shouldn’t have done that to you…” she pressed her lips. “You spoke now that you saw the video? His cheat?”

Bruce chuckled.

“I didn’t need the video – I knew it before.”

She frowned at the realization.

“You were there that night” she exclaimed. “You were patrolling Gotham and you saw them. Wait…How you got up there? They were on a rooftop.”

“Lucius finished my new armor. And yes I saw them.”

Selina swallowed hard imagining the blow her friend got when he saw them.

“And?”

“He came to the cave, we talked and I finished it” he answered indifferent though in Selina’s eyes saw that she wasn’t persuaded by his act.

She nodded.

“You did the best; he wasn’t treating you as you deserve and once he cheated you there was no meaning in dragging it…” her voice was cold but seeing Bruce’s eyes became softer. “He stabbed you in the heart” she caressed his cold cheek.

“It’s not so bad, Sel; I had worse experiences than that” he shrugged. “Now, he is going to see the world with someone else” he knitted his eyebrows but then relaxed his face and smiled. “Actually, I’m relieved…because me and…” he couldn’t articulate ‘Clark’ “and he are so different and I am not meant to ever leave this city: Gotham should be my entire world – my life is tied forever with hers. And I didn’t want him to be attached to someone like me. He deserves to be happy, Selina; he really does…”

Selina’s heart was clenched; she cocked an eyebrow.

“With her? She is a bitch and you told us about something that affects him” her eyes sparkled with hope and her voice became happier. “He’d never cheat you if there wasn’t that effect and as soon as it passes he’ll return to you begging for forgiveness…”

Bruce brushed Selina’s hair smiling.

“Right. I’ll do everything to find out what this effect is and save him from her. But after that, after he is free, he’ll find someone else to create a new life – someone appropriate for him…not me”

Selina frowned.
“You’re the best in the world!”

“My dear Sel…” his voice almost cracked. “You know that what happened between me and him shouldn’t have happened.”

“Don’t say that!” she inhaled. “Look, sweetie…I’ll be honest: that morning we couldn’t find you and I panicked…Tony’s fear was infectious: he implied that something had happened that could have affected you very badly.”

Bruce nodded.

“When my feet brought me to the greenhouse” she continued “my guts were clenched. And then Superman came out and his face was glowing” Bruce lowered his eyes; the memory of Clark’s happiness that morning stung “and I realized what took place there the previous night. I was angry at first and I wanted to rip his face with my nails because I feared that he forced you…”

Bruce shook his head.

“Clark would never force me…” Selina nodded.

“He spoke to me and his voice, his eyes, everything persuaded me that he was there to protect you and…you…had let him make love to you. From that day onwards I always saw his love in his eyes, in his face, in his body language… That night must have been so beautiful but also a helluva battle with all your past demons howling…” her eyes saw again Chill rape that skinny, crying boy.

Bruce crooked his lips.

“Clark was all the time fighting with me as if this was his battle too…and then when he saved me from the collapsing factory he stayed constantly on my side to not let me surrender to darkness” he clutched his forehead and huffed looking at the sky. “It was awful saying him to leave…but there wasn’t another way…”

Selina hugged him.

“I never believed that he would do that to you. I” she bit her lip “I believed that he’d manage what I always wanted but I don’t have the strength to do…”

Bruce cupped her cheek and Selina kissed the inside of his palm.

“What was that?” he asked softly.

She tried to chuckle to break the tension but it came out like a sob before she stubbornly turned it into a groan.

“I wanted to create a better world for you to live in…”

Bruce’s eyes widened and got fogged with liquid; his mouth stayed a bit agape. He cupped her face now with both hands so that he could stare at her sparkling eyes that were down cast.

“You have done that already, my sweet, sweet heart…” he kissed the top of her head. “Every night, all those years, as soon as I was seeing you behind that bin everything changed: you made my world lighter, warmer…” he laughed but the sound was throaty. “That night of Christmas’ Eve…you gifted me the most beautiful world I could ever dream…”

Selina smiled although her eyes dripped.
“I don’t deserve your love, Sel” he said and Selina snarled because she couldn’t make her eyes stop: damn! Bruce always was able to do that to her. “I feel that I’ve been taking advantage of your kindness… You always sacrifice yourself for me and I’m not giving anything, always demanding more with my misfortune and making you sad while you should be happy – you so much deserve the best…”

“Cut the nonsense, Bruce! You give me everything! You gave meaning to the empty world of an orphan that felt so alone… You became my entire world and from then I never felt alone again… You made my heart open to other things than blind hatred… to care for the misery of others even though I always posed as an indifferent, tough little creep; with your kindness, your care for the others despite your own suffering; your self-sacrifice. You saved me so many times, Bruce…” she shook her head. “You make me a better person…”

Bruce caressed her cheekbones wiping her tears gently with his fingertips and Selina looked him in the eyes.

“Bruce, please, do not regret what you had with him… I know it hurts now but that night and the months till now were so beautiful: I was seeing the happiness in your eyes – the love, the hope, the fulfillment.”

He smiled and brushed her hair but his eyes were seeing elsewhere.

“I don’t regret that night, Sel; neither the months that followed. I know it was a mistake – I know that it is selfish but I don’t regret anything…”

“No, no, it’s not selfish, Bruce. And… and it might seem impossible now but your heart will speak again: that night and those months will come again with someone else” Bruce shook his head.

“No, Sel; it’s over with that thing! I had enough from this for several lifetimes – I don’t want anymore.”

“No, sweetie: what they did to you was rape; what you experienced with Clark was love. It is beautiful but you had so little of that.”

But Bruce continued shaking his head.

“I’m not made for that: it’s over.”

Selina’s head slumped on the side.

“I know it’d be tough to get over him; he was your first love.”

“My first and last love: my only love” he replied emotionless.

Selina shook her head stubbornly, desperate.

“With one betrayed love – even if it’s the first – life it’s not over. You’re so young, sweetie… you’re going to fall in love again for someone else, although I believe that Superman will be sorry for what he did and he’ll come back begging…” Bruce rubbed his temple. “But out there are wonderful people to love you and you’re so young…”

“Young… I feel I have lived too much…” he spat. “No, Sel, I don’t need that thing in my life: I’m happy with all of you around me – I’m so lucky: your happiness makes me happy too.”

Selina lowered her head and Bruce touched her cheeks and smiled.
“You have forgiven him already…” she said.

“There’s nothing to forgive…It is my fault all of this…I acted carelessly.”

“No, Bruce…you did nothing wrong.”

Bruce shook his head pressing his lips.

“I can’t find Tony: neither Jarvis nor Pepper knows anything about his whereabouts” he huffed. “He saw the damn video and left enraged to find Superman…I’m afraid.”

“For Tony or Superman?”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Both” he looked around; it was dark. “We must return to the Manor: I must find Tony before something awful happens…”

Thor stood on the cloud that was attached like balcony to his palace; his gaze was focused down as if it was possible to see Earth from there. Suddenly, he jerked because he sensed the change.

“Hello, brother” Loki walked to him smiling hoping from cloud to cloud and raised his hands in surrender looking Thor’s angry eyes and the glow of his hammer. “Don’t shoot! I’m your little half brother, remember? The one you so many times defended from the vulgars of Asgard?”

Thor stretched his neck and eyed him suspiciously.

“But you seem to forget that, Loki.”

Loki shook his head.

“I never forget that, big guy” he patted Thor’s rock upper arms. “But you know my character: I like pranks – remember how many times I made you laugh?”

“Most of the times I wasn’t laughing because your ‘pranks’ were evil…”

Loki pouted.

“Evil…You’re so cruel.”

“No, you’re the cruel: why are you pestering Bruce Wayne? Leave him alone, Loki – he has had enough!”

The naughty god nodded and he gave a sorrowful glimmer to his eyes that however didn’t fool Thor.

“I know…I know…and I mean no harm” he placed his palm on his heart blinking innocently. “I really like the human.”

Thor gritted his teeth.

“Do you take me for a fool? You mean no harm? Leave him alone then! Prove your innocence.”

Loki shrugged and smiled revealing his white teeth.

“Oh, brother, I might not be able to read your mind but it is so obvious that you fell for this gorgeous mortal: does Bruce realize?”

Thor grabbed his brother’s shoulders.

“Is that why you torment him? Because you think I’m in love with him?”

“Are you not?”

Thor closed his eyes and huffed, causing Loki’s eyebrow arch sarcastically.

“I’m not in love with him: Bruce is Tony’s best friend and he is a remarkable human being with a horrible past – I respect him and I want to help Tony protect him so that he won’t be hurt ever again.”

Loki pursed his lips.

“Then now it is the time you act because the Prince of Gotham is really heartbroken” Thor frowned because he knew about Superman’s awful behavior to Bruce but how did Loki knew?.

“What do you mean?’

Loki lolled his head on the side and smiled.

“Too bad you’re not in love with him because right now the poor thing would definitely need an affectionate shoulder to cry and a new hot body to cuddle… Not to mention a new powerful protector…”

He snapped his fingers and Thor saw in the grim sky Superman with Diana.

“Everyone saw that through their TV” he shook his head. “Poor boy, must be crying his heart out… and feel so much the need of a strong, kind god to take the pain away and save him…”

With a puff he was gone but Thor didn’t care because his mind was racing and he immediately took off as well.

Tony stood before the heavy, black wooden door.

“I know you want him, I mean I am a very experienced man and your... desire is evident.”

Superman’s face flushed.

“I... It’s not...”

Tony stood in front of him.

“You think that you have feelings for him?” his posture was demanding and although his distaste was evident Superman didn’t react.

“I don’t just ‘think’; I’m sure!”

Tony smiled and rubbed his brow.

“Do you know how many times people are sure and then treat their ‘loved one’ as a shitbag and hurt him or her?
“You know because you’re one of them?” the other snapped.

Tony laughed.

“You’re right! I’m the worst example but I’d never put a traumatized soul in more torture by promising him love, showing him love, only for me to transform to a monster.”

“I’d never!” Clark roared insulted. “I’d never cause pain to him” he said lowering his voice “I’d rather die than hurt him or let anyone hurt him ever again.”

Tony nodded and sighed.

“You’ll ask me to leave him alone? To never come near him again?” Superman asked determined but his agony was clear.

Tony lowered his head.

“Of course, not, I’m not the cruel bastard you think me but don’t you dare press Bruce into something he is not ready for or hurt him.”

Clark moved his head in disbelief.

“I don’t think that I can press him” he looked pointedly at Tony reminding him that they were talking about Batman “in anything.”

“He is emotionally vulnerable; his emotions although he hides it well are his greatest weakness. Don’t you dare use that!”

“I won’t, I promise.”

“Are you in love with him?” Clark’s voice was harsh from agony.

Tony didn’t speak, just pierced him with his black shining eyes.

“He is too good for me; too pure for me to even think carnally of him. But...” he made a gesture “but that doesn’t mean that you have my blessing to lay your hands on him – let him have his peace. He needs friends not people seeing him as a body to...”

“He is not that for me” his tone wanted to make Tony understand “I promise you, Mr. Stark, I won’t make anything to upset him; if I do, I’ll gladly let you feed me a kilo of kryptonite.’’

“My friend” Tony’s eyes shone wickedly “if you hurt Bruce, I won’t need you to let me do it...”

His eyes sparkled determined as he pressed the doorbell keeping Ironman’s armor minus the faceplate; the back of his head still covered by the helmet, sure that Bruce wouldn’t find him as he didn’t till now.

He was able to hear footsteps approaching on the other side of the door though he was so sure that the luxurious flat was soundproof. The door opened and Tony’s steel eyes stabbed Superman’s awestruck face.

“You didn’t expect me?” Tony asked cocking an eyebrow and Superman frowned.

But he opened and let Ironman enter the spacious foyer leading to an enormous lounge room decorated in dark green and white: dark green corner sofa and armchairs and white tables. The thick, velvet carpet was brown with black floral designs but what stroke Tony even in his state was the intoxicating perfume of the flowers that filled earthen pots of various sizes and forms on shelves over the wall and on the small tables.

The shower echoed from the depth of the flat.

Tony didn’t let the perfume and the flowers draw his attention, his eyes stayed fixed on Superman’s blue and red figure.

“How did you find me here?” the Man of Steel asked crossing his arms and frowning.

“How did you find me here?” the Man of Steel asked crossing his arms and frowning.

“Not very easy: but when Tony Stark has a target he never fails” Superman cocked an eyebrow in sarcasm.

“S.H.I.E.L.D. watches Diana?”

“Hardly…” he caught with the corner of his eyes the Metropolis’ skyline under the night sky: there was a long and narrow rectangular window that covered the center of the wall on his right. “Yet the stratosphere is filled with ever watching satellites so if you get access you can discover almost everything.”

Superman had no mood for Tony fucking Stark’s brag; he reminded him of things that were over and he didn’t want to look back to them.

“What do you want, Stark?” he spat.

“You promised to never hurt him” his voice was cold and flat; his eyes two shining, sharp blades.

Superman smirked and cackled.

“He crawled to you weeping?”

Tony heard but didn’t make the effort to engage in the words.

“I told you to not force him in something that would hurt him. I told you to not break his heart…and you said that you would never cause him pain…but you did. Is this your morality?”

Superman shook his head, pinched the bridge of his nose and looked sideways at Ironman.

“Listen, Stark, things are not black and white as you see them” Tony cocked his eyebrow. “I don’t need to explain myself to you but what happened it wasn’t my fault: Bruce and you knew very well that the damn mutation Ra’s caused to Bruce’s body affected me and this effect was too powerful even after my inoculation.”

Tony shook his head laughing.

“So it was our fault then?”

Superman yanked his head smugly.

“I never spoke about you” he spat degradingly. “I was a straight before meeting Bruce…”

Tony gritted his teeth and clenched his fists.

“You dare to accuse Bruce??”

“The fact is I was straight, can he claim the same?”
Tony’s eyes widened flashing madly but what Superman was saying was so ridiculous that he laughed.

“How on earth can he possibly claim this or the opposite?! He never had a choice and you know that! What bullshit are you hinting at? Maybe that Bruce seduced you?” his eyebrows almost reached his hairline.

Superman lolled his head on the side and narrowed his eyes.

“You don’t think him able? He almost seduced you…” he said mockingly.

That was the breaking point for Tony: his right glove became green and Superman’s eyes bulged as he felt weak, dizzy and nauseated. He stumbled and his trembling hands found support on the back of an armchair. For a second, because an iron fist found his mouth almost breaking his jaw and sent him to fall on a small wooden table smashing the tiny pots there; he collapsed on the carpet.

Superman wiped the blood from his mouth with the forearm and the wound in his upper arm from the Blade of Justice cried. However he looked sarcastic at the furious billionaire.

“Kryptonite. Very brave, Stark…”

Tony’s face cracked in a smirk.

“Accusing Bruce for everything…very brave, Superman. Besides, it was the only way for you to feel like Bruce…”

Superman’s eyes widened: did Stark know what he did to Bruce?

“He came to you and whined about me?”

Tony’s lips twisted in disgust.

“Bruce never came to me: he is so proud and dignified that you can’t even imagine…” he made two steps closer and glared at him. “People admire you; they consider you a saint but I know who you truly are.”

To Superman this sounded as a threat to his secret identity.

“I know who Bruce is, as well” he retorted and Tony narrowed his eyes. “If you reveal my secret identity I’ll reveal Bruce’s secret and I’m not the outlaw, the wanted vigilante…”

Tony’s lips twitched in disgust and he shook his head.

“I’d never stoop so low to reveal your secret identity” he sniggered. “But I’m not shocked that you are willing to do this to Bruce…”

Superman’s eyes were down cast: it was like the Kryptonite along with making him feel sick also shed some light to his head.

“I’d never do that to Bruce – I don’t know how this came out of my mouth.”

“Sure…” Tony mocked him with arched eyebrows.

Superman was ready to ask how he learnt about him and Diana since Bruce didn’t tell him.

“Kal, what’s wrong?” a completely naked Diana came running from the corridor.
Her long wet hair was stuck in her back and long trails of water traced the curves of her breathtaking body. Despite the fact Tony was an avid admirer of beauty the spectacle of the naked Amazon brought only disgust to him.

Diana cocked her eyebrow and her face took its usual smugness eyeing Ironman, don’t even a care for her nudity. But then her eyes caught the fallen Superman and rushed to him helping him rise supporting him. She snarled at Stark seeing the glowing green glove.

“You came to avenge your petty friend’s virtue?” she asked snidely. “Not that he had left any…” she lolled her head on the side. “I’m not surprised that his knight is a coward that uses sly methods to prevail!”

Tony stayed completely unfazed; his face a rock, his eyes two flames.

“Bruce’s virtue cannot be harmed by anything this worthless worm can do… I came to fulfill a promise…” he grinned at Superman. “He gave a promise that if he failed on his word of honor he’d spare me the trouble to do what I’m doing now” he yanked his head. “But I guess his masculinity is enough only to fuck you.”

She gritted her teeth while Superman couldn’t gather his power to stand on his own.

“Kal El is more man than you ever will be, Stark!” she growled. “Your life a line of sequential fucks – how dare you speak like that for him, you insolent human?”

Tony cackled as she rushed to hit him only to be met with the golden energy shield that surrounded him. She roared pissed as her punches and kicks managed only to hurt her. In the meantime, Superman having lost the support of her body fell on his knees.

“I should hit you” Tony said to her “just for the insults and the poison you spat to Bruce but I don’t attack lad…” he shook his head “no, no, you’re not a lady. But still you have boobs and that other thing so I won’t hit you.”

Diana rattled her teeth.

“Is this why you’re goggling at me?”

Tony cocked his eyebrows and snorted.

“Trust me, sugar: I have seen far more dazzling bodies than yours and… absolutely mortal. And I’m not goggling but I’m sure that every pervert loser on this planet will spend endless hours of jerking off with your cheap porn…”

Diana launched a full attack with round kicks and blows only causing small explosions to the shield’s field and Tony’s yawn. Finally, she stopped: her pants from the futile effort sounding like roars of a wound beast.

Superman asked what she didn’t.

“What porn? What nonsense is this, Stark?”

“It’s how I learnt what you did. Bruce didn’t tell me anything: he is too proud and too strong…” he blinked and from his forearm emerged a round shaped hologram with the video from their intercourse on the rooftop. On the right top corner, the logo of GCN was visible.

The eyes of both lovers goggled; Superman lost more of his face’s color.
“Who shot this?” Diana hissed.

Tony shrugged.

“Tough!” he lolled his head on the side. “Now: you made me a promise, UFO – remember?” his voice was razor sharp.

Superman remembered.

“Since you’re not willing to do it yourself, I’ll help myself…” Tony stretched his arm and a white energy field wrapped Diana sending her to the wall unable to move. Then a glowing green dagger popped out from the launcher under Ironman’s wrist.

Superman stretched his head ready to take the blow: Stark wouldn’t stop where Bruce did.

“Tony, I know you hear me…”

Tony closed his eyes and inhaled: Bruce’s determined but warm voice sounded in his ear from the communication system of his helmet. The best hacker in the world, his little guy, had eventually managed to break his firewall. Yes, he could hear him and the chirping of the bats: his friend was in his cave. Not now, Bruce…he thought raising the dagger.

“Tony, I know how you feel but don’t do anything to Superman…You are hurt thinking that I’m suffering but I assure you that I’m okay…as long as I have you at my side.”

Tony aimed the dagger at Superman’s chest; Diana’s eyes widened.

“Do it, Stark, what are you waiting for?” Superman spat. “I know of what you’re made: I know that you wanted to kill me from the first moment you realized that Bruce loved me. Because you’re jealous…jealous of me being able to do what you don’t dare…”

Tony’s hand clenched the dagger’s hilt.

“Tony, for eighteen years you believed me dead; for eighteen years they separated us…I know what you’re ready to do: it is the reason you don’t answer me. But, Tony, if you do that we’re going to be separated again.”

Tony’s still eyes flickered.

“And this time it’ll be with your own will…” Bruce’s voice cracked. “And I’ll be forever haunted because I destroyed my best friend, my brother…As I killed my parents…”

Tony bit his lip and the launcher opened to swallow the dagger; to Superman’s and Diana’s astonished looks. He twisted his lips in disgust.

“Bruce saved your pathetic life…Again” he snapped and spat in Superman’s face.

Superman’s eyes bulged because right now the saliva felt more acid than the Kryptonite.

Tony activated the face plate, hiding his face; he turned and left the room like a boss closing the door with a loud bang.

Diana released from the weakened energy field rushed to Superman who began slowly recovering now that the Kryptonite was out of range. She was raving but Superman wasn’t hearing.

Tony marched on the thick carpet of the spacious corridor heading to the back metallic door he smashed to get in: he had dropped a handful of dollars for the repairs. He was somewhat calmer.

“Tony, please talk to me…” Bruce was still there almost begging with his determined voice.

Tony just couldn’t hear that agony in his friend’s voice though he was a bit pissed with Bruce for stopping him. Albeit he knew that it was the best.

“Cool down, little guy… You saved his sorry ass” he grunted.

“It’s you who I care about, Tony” Bruce’s voice was serious.

“I’m leaving now; I feel dirty only for being at their presence.”

Bruce turned and looked at Selina who was sat on the computer bench beside him watching avidly his effort to dissuade Tony from what he was ready to do. He pressed his lips and although his face was solemn she discerned a shine of relief in his eyes.

“Okay…” he said. “He is on his way here.”

Selina closed her eyes and huffed.

“Good!” she opened her eyes and smirked. “Now we can go upstairs and relax – it’s late, kiddo, and you need rest.”

Bruce opened his mouth to reply but he stopped because the lift was descending. They both looked at Alfred getting out.

“Master Bruce, you have a call.”
"I’ll take it from here, thank you, Alfred.”

The Englishman gave a court nod.

“As you wish, sir. May I ask if we had any news on Master Anthony?” his expression was stoic as ever but Bruce could discern his agony under his cool blue eyes.

“I managed to speak with him” he answered smiling. “He’s on his way here…” he locked eyes with his butler. “Everything is fine, Alfred.”

“Thank Goodness! Thank you, sir…” he turned towards the lift but stopped. “Oh, I almost forgot: Miss Potts is here” Bruce nodded. “The dinner will be served in a while so it’d be so kind of you if you don’t linger in the cave. The children must eat early.”

“Children?” it should be ‘child’ unless… “Is Jason here?” his eyes shone.

“Yes, sir; he was with Master Grayson at the gym and I took the liberty to invite him to have dinner with us – of course, Ms. Todd was informed.”

“Thank you for everything, Alfred.”

The butler nodded grinning.

“You’re mostly welcome, sir” he was relieved seeing his young master at least grinning – and that shine in his eyes was most hopeful despite the fact Alfred knew how competent Bruce was in posing as nonchalant to not cause sadness to his loved ones.

Selina hurried to catch Alfred at the lift as Bruce pressed the button in his keyboard to transfer the line from the Manor; he looked at her.

“I’ll see you upstairs, kiddo” she said shaking her index warningly “don’t be late: I’m starving.”

“Call Steve to join us” Bruce told her and enjoyed the playful sparkle in her eyes.

“Okay” she said as the lift began ascending, though after the first jolt of delight for Bruce’s invitation to Steve Selina felt hesitant: she was afraid that being in the presence of a couple would twist the knife in Bruce’s wound.

“Bruce Wayne” he said on the microphone puzzled about his caller’s identity.

“Hello, Bruce” a hesitant, sad and a bit shaking female voice answered him and Bruce frowned.

“Ms. Kent?”

“Martha, sweetheart…” she corrected him gently.

Bruce licked his lips and pursed them looking at the waterfall; the call system in the cave was equipped with an isolator of external sounds.

“Of course…” he replied. “How can I help you, Martha?”

“I hope I’m not bothering you” her voice was shy.
“No, not at all: on the contrary, I’m happy to hear you” though he felt oddly since he was sure that she had seen already the horrible video: who hadn’t after all?

He heard a sigh from the other side of the line and then a gulp.

“How are you, honey?” she asked and her voice was raspy from deep concern and sadness. “I…I have seen…I’m terribly sorry, sweetheart…I couldn’t ever imagine that Clark would do such a horrible thing!”

Bruce yanked his head inhaling and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Martha, it’s alright…” he answered dryly. “Have you spoken with Clark?”

“No, I can’t find that brat!” she spat pissed. “I’m sure he is hiding from me” Bruce closed his eyes. “But as soon as I find him…”

“I don’t think he is hiding, Martha: Clark wouldn’t do that; maybe something came up.”

Martha chuckled bitterly.

“You still defend him…Yeah…Clark wouldn’t hide from his Ma but Clark wouldn’t cheat his man either.”

“Martha…”

“Are you alright, dear?” she sounded like being on the verge of tears. “I hope this didn’t affect your health…believe me: it doesn’t worth to let such things affect your health. You must focus on your recovery and forget everything else. Have you talked with him? Have you scolded him? I hope you gave him Hell!”

Bruce pressed his lips because under Ms. Kent’s angry voice he could discern her suffering for her son’s fall from grace.

“Yes, Martha, we talked and…cleared things. We finished it.”

“Uhu…” the lady on the other end gave her affirmation though it hurt her.

“It was for the best, Martha…”

“I’m not sure, my dear boy…”

Bruce remembered that night Clark had taken him to his parent’s house; Martha’s words coming from the depths of her heart.

“…I always dreaded that someday he’d lose his path: all this power can corrupt and the way some people sniff at him may take the better of him; or someone could find a way to control him into horrible deeds…But then he met you and since then I’m peaceful because he speaks about you in a way that shows his admiration, his respect: how much he cherishes you…I’m not good in this…You’re his moral compass, Bruce; his anchor…The warmth in his heart: a star that shows him the way. As long you’re by his side he is safe.”

“I don’t like that woman and…” she stopped abruptly. “What I’m saying…The important thing right now is you, sweetie: he broke your heart” Bruce closed his eyes and bit his lips. “I can’t believe he played like this with you…”
“He didn’t play with me, Martha” he replied calmly. “He meant what everything; he believed…but things change.”

“A few days ago he brought you here to meet me” Bruce nodded though the woman couldn’t see him. “I was making preparations to have you here for Christmas…” she laughed.

And Bruce reflected that.

“I’m sure it would have been very beautiful, Martha; thank you for all the love you gave to me; that you welcomed me so warmly.”

“He fooled both of us…” she said bitterly.

“No, Martha, no: Clark was fighting with himself; he didn’t want to break his promises” he breathed in “but it was above his power.”

“He is Superman, for God’s sake, sweetheart…Nothing is above his power.”

Martha was so angry with Clark, Bruce thought, and he didn’t want for him to lose his mother’s support.

“Martha, please, don’t be so harsh on him…” he heard her exclaim of despair.

“You love him so much even now that he cheated you like this – oh, my God! He should be on your side supporting you in your healing.”

“He did, Martha…He saved my life: without him, I’d have died. And weren’t for him I wouldn’t be able to rise from my bed. He did so many things for me that I couldn’t ever repay my debt.”

Martha huffed.

“I can’t believe that my son is so ungrateful! I’m sure the idiot even now doesn’t realize what have he done…what he lost…”

Bruce felt his breath began becoming harder and hastened to control it before Martha realize and believing that he is suffering, become more furious with Clark.

“Martha, believe me: it was better for both of us.”

“He wasn’t treating you right?”

Bruce shook his head: he just couldn’t admit that to her.

“No, it’s not that; but I know I’m not the right person for Clark and he deserves to be happy…This wasn’t going to last long and it is better it ended now before Clark could get hurt.”

Ms. Kent’s frowning was audible.

“And what about you, dear? He broke your heart; you needed him now more than ever and he walked away. How can you speak so kindly about him? He doesn’t deserve your forgiveness till he crawls back to you and beg you to take him back.”

Bruce chuckled.

“There’s nothing for me to forgive, Martha. I just want the best for Clark and I couldn’t offer him that.”
“But he was happy with you, dear! I was seeing it in his eyes… The days you were in coma… his despair… his tears… his weak anger. And then when you woke up: you can’t imagine the joy in his eyes – I could hear his heart flapping…” unconsciously Ms. Kent’s love for her son dripped from her words.

Bruce smiled: he could imagine, he have seen that happiness in the most beautiful eyes in the world.

“You made Clark a better human being, Bruce; you were his humanism, his morality, his love. Now, this woman…”

“Martha, Clark has all these qualities himself; he doesn’t need me… As for this woman… you’re his mother, you’re the most important person in his life. For that you must stay by his side…” he gulped. “I…I’ll continue… I will never stop caring about him” he breathed. “I won’t let anything happen to him.”

Ms. Kent cleared her throat and Bruce realized that she was touched.

“You’ve already forgiven him, huh?”

Bruce huffed.

“I told you, Martha, that there’s nothing to forgive; I’m grateful to your son: he saved my life, he gave me so much love” he chuckled “as a matter of fact, he gave me more than I could wish for… I’m the luckiest person in the world for having the love of your great son, Martha – even for a few months. The happiness he gave me…” he stopped to inhale. “I just can’t be angry with him.”

“You’re an angel, Bruce…and my son is a moron…I’m sorry, baby. I’m sure he didn’t apologize to you but I do.”

“Please, Martha, you don’t need to do that: I’m so happy I had the chance to meet you and the fact you called me is so kind. Do not have a worry about me – Clark’s existence in this world is enough for me to be satisfied” he pressed his lips. “Just do not give up on Clark, okay? He needs you and your guidance. And he is your son…”

Martha chuckled.

“You are my son too, Bruce…” she almost whispered and then coughed “if… if it’s alright, of course.”

Bruce rubbed his eyes with his fingers.

“It is an honor for me, Martha” he said serious. “And this makes me Clark’s brother!”

Ms. Kent laughed.

“I believe that Clark’s destiny is with you, Bruce. When this bad dream ends he’ll realize it…”

Bruce lowered his eyes and clenched the armrests of the wheelchair.

“Martha, I hope this isn’t true: Clark must find happiness and this can’t happen with me. However, I’ll always care for him and you. I want you to feel free to call me for whatever you need or for everything that troubles you” he chuckled. “You said that you feel me like your son, after all.”

The old woman laughed touched.

“Absolutely. Thank you, sweetheart… For me you’re the best Clark could ever have…And Clark deep inside knows that and still loves you. You told me to not give up on him…” she breathed heavily. “It’d be too bold if I ask you the same?”

Bruce rubbed his forehead above his right eyebrow.

“I can’t give up on him, Martha…even if there’s no hope for being together again…I promised you that I’ll take care of him and I’ll keep my promise.”

“Okay, honey…Just calm down now, don’t be sad and take good care of yourself. I’m sure that it won’t be long before you walk again and I’ll be very proud of my second son…”

Bruce smiled.

“Thank you, Martha.”

Diana wore her royal red, long robe made of the finest silk to cover her naked body; she was wiping with a handkerchief the blood from Superman’s face. The Man of Steel sat almost slumped on the dark green corner couch; the sickness from the Kryptonite and the pain from Stark’s punch had almost evaporated leaving some discomfort behind yet Superman was morose keeping his lips pressed hard and his eyebrows knitted: he didn’t want his affair with Diana be so soon exposed, especially in this embarrassing way.

He reached the remote on the waist table and switched on the small flat TV that was built in the wall above the white wooden rack where various pots were settled.

The Amazon stopped treating Superman’s wound which after all had almost healed and watched him with narrowed eyes. She stood up and clenched her hips with both hands.

“Stark’s words have affected you that much?” she cocked an eyebrow looking but not focusing on the fast changing channels.

Superman stopped his search in a 24 hour news channel and waited. He looked up at Diana and hugged her waist bringing her down next to him. She crossed her arms, her expression exasperated as Superman’s face became grimmer watching the video starring him and Diana. Finally, he pressed the button closing the TV after only a few seconds: the spectacle nauseated him.

“Who shot that abomination?!” he spat ruffling his hair.

The Amazon frowned.

“Abomination? You consider our coupling an abomination?”

Superman shook his head and kissed her lips.

“Of course not, Diana. Abomination is what was done with our coupling: some bastard shot and posted our most precious moment and made it a spectacle for everyone.”

She cocked an eyebrow.

“So what?” her voice was full of contempt.

Superman locked eyes with her.
“I don’t want people see Superman like this: you feel fine with everyone seeing you like this?”

“It is definitely disrespectful for me that mortals can see me naked and in the most private of moments and they should have been punished” her eyes flashed menacingly. “But since we are not in my world where divine punishment would have been delivered, I won’t intend on give it much thought or trouble myself with that” she shook her head.

But Superman’s eyes were shadowed.

“You give them too much value, Kal” she said softly. “You’re superior of the entire humankind: you shouldn’t care about their opinion. You did nothing wrong, after all: Wayne had declared publicly that you two didn’t have an affair” she cocked her eyebrows. “As for him, what you two had was finished before that video surfaced, so what’s the problem?”

Clark couldn’t tell her that he felt bad because his Ma and his friends would see that video and thus learn that he cheated Bruce. He couldn’t tell Diana that he was raised by humans and had human friends which he loved and cherished and their opinion was always important for him.

Diana huffed impatient.

“You act as if you’re going to be scolded like a misbehaving student…C’mon, dearest! You’re Kal El, the Lord of Krypton, Superman: the one who protects and saves them all the time. They worship you. They have no right to judge the acts of a God!”

Superman smiled: Diana had the ability to lift his worries or make them look less important. However he couldn’t stop his mind from thinking his Smartphone that lay forgotten in his apartment where he had left it a couple of days ago when he left hastily to stop the collapse of a building. After that he had rushed to the Wayne Manor suspicious of Bruce cheating him…he found him with Thor and then went to New York…

He wanted to laugh loudly with himself: he was wary that Bruce might cheat him and later sure that he had done it already while he was the one who was on the verge to cheat Bruce. And now everyone who mattered knew it.

He was glad he didn’t have access to his Smartphone both because it would make a lame impression to Diana (someone like Superman using a petty gadget made for mortals!) and because he wasn’t ready to face his loved ones. Though he knew that soon he’d have to…

Diana put her arms around him and captured his lips in a breathtaking kiss. Then unlocked their mouths, touched his cheek and looked him in the eyes.

“We have finally found each other…” she breathed sensually. “That’s what counts for me, Kal…” her stare became tough. “For you?” she demanded.

He grabbed her waist and laid her flat on her back on the couch bringing his body upon hers. He untied the belt of her robe and unwrapped her body diving his mouth to her neck that stretched to give him free access while she folded her arms around his neck.

Superman lifted slightly his head and locked eyes with her.

“I feel I found my destiny” he said. “I don’t care if everyone finds out…on the contrary, I’m proud they know…”

Diana smirked and her eyes shone gleefully.
After Bruce’s paraplegia was confirmed the passage from the Manor’s first floor to the cave had been widened (Lucius and Tony did the job personally) in order to contain a wheelchair because as slim as Tony’s wheelchair was still the old dimensions of the passage were forbidding.

As he moved out of the lift and steered the wheelchair through the dark passage that was illuminated by the chair’s dim lighting, Bruce once again thought of thanking his friends: he had done it many times already but his gratitude to them was nudging him all the time.

Of course before stepping out of the passage to the corridor he listened carefully for any presence that should not see him there. Now with Richard and Jason at the Manor they should be careful as during Falcone’s reign.

“You can come out…” Selina whispered; she was leaning on the wall, with one foot touching the wall, her arms crossed.

Every time he opened the passage to get out steering the wheelchair, his paraplegia struck him strongly. It was so much easier to do that on your feet despite the fact the chair was slim and rather easy to move. However he grinned to his friend hiding his discomfort.

“It was Clark’s mother” he said to her because Selina was too discreet to ask though Bruce knew that she was curious.

She puckered her lips.

“Yeah…He had taken you to meet her and I’m sure she liked you…Poor woman seeing her son like this, learning that he is a scum.”

Bruce tilted his head on the side regarding her disapprovingly.

“He isn’t a scum, Sel.”

She detached from the wall and unfolded her arms.

“You have to be a scum to punch someone while you got super powers!” Bruce sighed and Selina nodded and leaned to him. “You thought that I didn’t feel the swelling in your face? I didn’t say anything in the greenhouse because I didn’t want to worsen your upset” her voice softened. “It was almost dark, sure, yet eighteen years I learnt to visualize your injuries in the darkness by touching…”

Bruce pressed his lips and ran his fingers through his hair.

“Of course…” he replied.

“I understand why you covered the marks with makeup…If Tony had seen you battered he’d have killed that bastard no matter what you told him.”

Bruce knew that but didn’t answer.

“What else he did, Bruce?” her voice was a bit raspy but determined.

Bruce yanked his head and locked eyes with her.

“Nothing I didn’t consent to” he replied calm but absolute.

Selina nodded; all these years they had learnt to figure things about each other without needing the other to say them. She pressed her lips till they lost their color.

“At least, let Leslie examine you: there could be a serious damage” she said understanding what Superman had done and her friend would never utter “she’s here for dinner.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes and tilted his head on the side.

“The conspirators are summoned, huh?” he chuckled.

“Me, the first of them!” it was Tony who just put his feet on the final step of the right stair.

Bruce turned to see his friend but despite the distance between them Tony had managed to be there in a couple of seconds; he hugged his friend kneeling down. Bruce smiled.

“You’re alright?” he asked eyeing Tony carefully.

Tony pouted and looked around.

“Me?” he laughed. “This insults me, little guy… Tony Stark is a formidable opponent. And Superman, believe me, isn’t as…super as his name indicates” he sobered. “You saved his life, little guy…”

Bruce locked eyes with Selina who sighed.

“I’m glad you didn’t do something you’d have regretted later, Tony.”

The older man shook his face in conviction.

“I wouldn’t regret it, little guy.”

“Tony, I know who you are: you’re not a killer.”

Tony nodded.

“This wouldn’t feel like a killing” he looked conspiratorially Selina who had killed Chill.

Bruce clenched his fingers around the armrests.

“You’re S.H.I.E.L.D.’s director, Tony: you worked so hard to heal the damaged status of the organization. Would you like it if all this was destroyed because of me?” he blinked. “I wouldn’t…”

Tony brushed Bruce’s upper arms.

“You’re more important than S.H.I.E.L.D. and anything else.”

“Tony, you’re what matters to me: doing this madness would have taken you away from me. Nothing is worthy of that, Tony. And, after all, there was no reason to hurt Clark: I’m perfectly fine. Breakups happen every day…it is normal.”

Tony gulped and closed his eyes: once he had yelled at Bruce that he wasn’t normal.

“Not when it comes to you” he said dead serious “the one you love should stay with you forever because you’re special and there’s nobody better than you” Bruce shook his friend. “Someone playing with your feelings is pervert not normal and that alien played with your feelings…”

“No, he didn’t; he made me happy. And I knew that it wouldn’t have lasted so I’m fine…somewhat relieved…waiting the unavoidable is worse” he smiled and patted Tony’s shoulder. “I’m the luckiest man in the planet having all you around me – I don’t want to lose anyone of you. I need you here, Tony” he locked eyes with him “and if you had hurt Clark you’d be gone…” Tony cleared his throat that felt constricted. “We lost so much time, big guy: let’s not lose anymore…”

Tony dragged Bruce to his chest and squeezed him; he closed his eyes rubbing his little guy’s cold back. Indeed, he didn’t want to lose Bruce again, especially for a motherfucker like Kent. He let Bruce and sniffed.

“I smell something delicious and I’m starving. Ufff! It’s nice being away from that suffocating flowery odor…”

Bruce frowned.

“What do you mean?”

Selina touched from the scene she just witnessed came closer interested.

“I found Superman in…” he bit his lip because saying that Superman was in the Amazon’s home would hurt Bruce, but the younger man understanding waved his hand prompting him.

“It’s okay” Bruce knew that Clark wouldn’t bring her in his tiny apartment; she was too arrogant to accept something so inferior for her lover. Clark didn’t want her contempt.

“First I looked for him in the Daily Planet and his flat but he wasn’t there so I figured that they were at her place. So I gathered info from every possible satellite and camera and I found that they went to a luxurious apartment in Metropolis’ suburbs: her apartment… When the alien opened the door without peeking first – the idiot – and I followed him in the living room, I was literally attacked by the smell of flowers and plants; pleasant, warm smell but at the same time suffocating, overwhelming, upsetting. The living room’s walls were decorated with white shelves filled with pots of various sizes with all kinds of unknown plants and flowers – and small tables the same. It was dizzying but Ironman’s armor can filter the air, thankfully.”

Bruce’s eyes flashed.

“Exactly as her room at Dolcetto…” he recalled his flashback.

“Dolcetto?!” both Selina and Tony exclaimed and Bruce looked wary around for anyone listening.

“Don’t worry” Selina said “the boys are in Grayson’s room.”

“And Pepper, Alfred and Leslie are in the kitchen.”

Bruce nodded.

“Remember I had told you my suspicions of this woman not being the real Diana of Themyscira?” they nodded. “I had a flashback with her: I had met her in the past.”

Tony’s eyebrows arched.

“That’s where Dolcetto comes, huh?”

“Exactly. In this flashback I re-experienced a moment from Dolcetto…” he wasn’t going to tell them all the details. “I saw again a woman, one of Falcone’s occasional mistresses, one his favorite; she was called Vivian and she had honey colored, long hair but everything else was the same with the supposed Amazon Princess.”

Tony tilted his head on the side and rubbed his goatee.

“I know what you’re thinking, Tony: I thought myself that it might be caused by Crane’s treatment; so I called Mr. Petrou and he confirmed that indeed this woman existed: with the characteristics I saw in my flashback.”

Selina smirked.

“That would explain why she is a slut…” she sniggered and Tony cackled and made her the thumps up.

“What I noticed in my flashback was that her room in Dolcetto was filled with pots of various sizes bearing flowers and peculiar plants; the smell was dazzling but also suffocating, exactly as you described it, Tony. Vivian had appeared all of a sudden and disappeared in the same way; nobody knew anything about her and we never heard again about her.”

Tony shrugged.

“There’s no fucking way an Amazon Princess to be a whore at Falcone’s.”

“Absolutely” Bruce answered “and if we discover the truth about her identity we’ll also have a lead to the whole plan.”

Both his friends rolled their eyes.

“You still care about the sonovabitch, huh?” Tony asked what both thought; he shook his head and ran his hand through his hair; his disapproval evident. “You know, Bruce, I wish that impostor do the worst damage to that scum!”

Bruce pressed his lips and blinked uncomfortable; Selina felt for his discomfort though she agreed with Tony.

“Tony, if she is an impostor – and I believe she is – then there must be a broader plan behind her…a plan that doesn’t target only Superman. I think that if someone wants to control Superman then the danger is for everyone…I mean if she isn’t the Amazon Princess how she manages to fly? To fight like this? To be so strong? And her Lasso?” he widened his eyes. “You see there are many unanswered questions. All this can’t be performed just by one person. Think! She first appeared at Thasos when those green creatures attacked me: how she managed the perfect timing?” he arched his eyebrows and was glad to see Tony pouting thoughtful Selina pursed her lips and tapped her index finger.

“You told Superman about your flashback and your theory?”

Bruce cleared his throat.

“Of course but…he didn’t believe me: he believed that it was my jealousy that dictated that flashback and that I just wanted to slander her” he replied indifferent though it was evident to his friends that it still hurt.

Tony tilted his head on the side and cocked his eyebrows.

“Then whatever happens to him it’s his choice: he could have listened to you.”
But Selina was looking at Bruce’s melancholic eyes.

“Tony, he was under some kind of effect that he couldn’t fight…like when Ra’s concoction made my body affecting him. We can’t hold him responsible for being trapped by her…”

“Yes, we can!” Tony shook his head but then he remembered something and frowned. “Effect or no effect the scum still pretends: at some point he threat to reveal your secret” in Bruce’s eyes flickered a sparkle of real pain “but when I scolded him for his indecency he pretended to regret it and said that he didn’t know why he said that.”

Bruce’s eyes got warm.

“Maybe he had a glimpse of clarity? I mean maybe he overcame the effect for just a second? You were using Kryptonite, right?”

Tony snorted and shook his head. Then patted Bruce’s shoulder.

“Do not have false hopes, little guy…He was acting trying to save some grace.”

Selina didn’t say anything though Tony looked at her for confirming his words. She just couldn’t give another stab to Bruce because in his nonchalant eyes she could discern the deep care about that man and the tormenting flames of hope. Hope not for getting Superman back but for Superman escaping that woman and the potential enemies behind her. Hope that Superman would be saved.

Thankfully, light footsteps approached them.

“Gentlemen, Miss Kyle, Mister Rogers has just arrived and the dinner will be served in a few minutes” Alfred’s poised voice shattered the tension and a big radiant smile lit Selina’s face.

“Sorry, boys but I’m starving” she hurried to the stairs and Bruce beamed looking at Tony who pursed his lips.

“For what exactly are you starved, sugar?” Tony asked her playfully and the young woman turned to him and popped out her tongue.

Tony laughed and Bruce grabbed his hand grateful that his friend was here with him without Superman’s blood on his hands.

The sensual melodies of a Luis Armstrong jazz solo filled the semi dark vast space making warmer the atmosphere despite the cold Gotham skyline that gloomy peeped inside from the whole wall window. A sweet, soft blush light coming from the four corners of the hall broke slightly the darkness, adding to the red-golden flames in the round, built-in fireplace.

Thomas Elliot wearing only his blue royal silk robe was massaging the nape of his mistress. They were in his apartment’s living room, sprawled at the huge white L sofa; on the elliptic glass waist table lay two half empty glasses with red wine and a bottle.

Thomas touched softly his lips on the girl’s neck and she shuddered and moaned causing his gloating smirk. Kelly was dressed in her short red silk - laced nightdress which barely covered half her thighs as she kneeled on the sofa for Thomas to massage her neck. She was holding her long hair to not thwart his fingers and her eyes were closed in delight.
Her boyfriend was three days out of town for a congress and Kelly had missed him desperately; not that she wasn’t calling him ten times a day but most of them he wasn’t answering because he was busy since he was one of the major speakers of the conference.

But now he was back, Kelly was happy and the diamond bracelet he gave her as a present wasn’t the only reason – the dark red velvet slim case laid open on the table the elegant jewel sparkling in the dim light. Kelly was happy because she missed so much his touch…And now he was compensating: he was too tired to take her out in one of the luxurious restaurants he loved yet as soon as he stepped his foot on Gotham soil he rushed to her flat and brought her to his own whole floor apartment.

“I leave Gotham only for three days and look what happens…” he laughed.

“You mean the video with Superman and Wonder Woman?” she asked. “You saw it.”

Thomas rolled his eyes: of course, you idiot girl…

“Yeah, some colleagues came upon it and told me. And they did it on Gotham’s City Hall rooftop: it seems that this city has something arousing…” he chuckled.

Kelly giggled.

“Only for superheroes?” she asked sensually turning her head slightly to look at him innocently.

He smiled in what Kelly thought his most charming smile.

“Absolutely not, babe…”

Thomas pushed gently, slowly the thin straps of Kelly’s nightdress and rolled them down her shoulders till the wrists. The fine silk assembled to the girl’s waist freeing her small breasts and leaving her breathless as the charming doctor trailed kisses to her neck’s base.

She tilted her head to the other side to let plenty of space to Thomas’ hot lips and she plunged her fingers in his locks, sucking his expensive cologne.

Thomas was fully aware of how much in love was the young nurse with him: she was his…His hands began fondling her ribs sensually slowly going up to caress her tender breasts making her shake uncontrollably and whine.

“I missed you, Kelly…” he whispered inside her ear, nibbling her lobe. “You can’t imagine how hard those three nights were…”

Kelly snorted.

“Yeah, sure…I bet you enjoyed the company of some super model…”

Thomas bit teasingly her ear lobe and slipped his hand under her nightdress groping her thigh up to her buttock.

“You know, kiddo, microsurgery congresses aren’t Kate Upton’s places of choice…” he groaned and the air from his mouth tickled Kelly’s back before hot lips began tracing her shoulder line.

She sighed as Thomas’ magic hands lowered the thin straps of her panties and then pushed them down till the red laced piece of cloth was on the floor.

“I’d have gone anywhere Dr. Elliot was…”
Thomas cocked an eyebrow and with a swift motion turned her face first to him pulling her hair down gently for his lips to suck her breasts; her body was trembling in his hands, her breaths already raspy.

“How was our little clinic all these days?” he asked indifferent but for him was the main concern and the reason Kelly was with him.

She raised her head with effort and chuckled as the man mock bit her nipple.

“You’re so dutiful, Tommy…Just got back from a congress…exhausted and your interest is on the clinic you volunteer…I admire you…”

Thomas wanted to snigger because his interest wasn’t in the bloody clinic but in Leslie Thompkins and her protégé, Bruce. Yet as his hands pushed the nightdress down and off Kelly’s horny body Thomas was sure that her admiration peaked.

“Everything was calm…” she whispered, her head falling backwards as Thomas’ tongue licked her flat belly. “We’re not living in Falcone’s era anymore…and Dr. Thompkins seems less nervous…”

Thomas placed her flat on her back and took off his robe revealing his naked body to Kelly’s dazzled eyes; he dove his head to her groin and began licking her throbbing clit making her breath asthmatic and her body arch. She began yelling when he sucked…

“And when that video surfaced?” he asked but Kelly’s eyes were fogged and her heartbeat too crazy to register any words so he repeated the question stopping his treatment.

“Wh…what?”

Thomas growled.

“The video must have damaged Leslie’s tranquility…”

“Why?” her voice was frustrated because she lost the stimulation in her groin. “Ah! You mean the supposed love affair between Superman and Wayne? But Wayne denied it recently…”

Thomas resumed his mouth’s strokes on her vagina and Kelly hot and sweaty collapsed on the sofa; her thighs spread to leave space to Thomas convulsed making her body arch every time the man’s teeth grazed softly the sensitive skin.

“But who believed him, huh?”

Kelly giggled and fisted the sofa as Thomas’ tongue entered her; she cried.

“A…actually, Thompkins left a…a…abruptly the clinic toooooodaaay after the video was…” she couldn’t end her phrase because her panting was too intense. “We were…ah!...commenting… oh!...Superman’s…ugh! when we saw her…oi!...leaving…”

But Thomas didn’t need anymore; he smirked and led his aroused length to Kelly’s gaping entrance watching smugly her salivating mouth.

A video broke your little heart, Brucey…A blow below the belt…

He thought as he thrust in one solid move inside Kelly.

“More, Dr. Elliot!” she screamed fisting desperately his hair and he was grateful for his soundproof apartment.
I wonder, Brucey...How many more such blows can you get before collapsing?

Pepper stood in front of Tony keeping a distance between them; her green eyes were ablaze, pissed and Tony had no mood to play with her; he was dead serious.

They were in the kitchen alone: Alfred and Leslie had gone to prepare the dining room.

“Where have you been?” she demanded and Tony approached pressing his lips and looking her.

“I think you already know that…”

Pepper crossed her arms.

“You blocked every channel of communication, even your trace in the satellite: I was worried and Bruce…” she sighed. “He was sick with worry – desperate to find you before you…”

Tony stepped even closer and put his hands on her shoulder, Pepper glaring at him.

“How could you do that to him? Especially after what Superman did with that bitch…Fine, I know you didn’t care about me, but Bruce?”

Tony’s eyes widened and he shook his head.

“Of course I care about you, babe, but I didn’t want anyone attempt to stop me…”

Pepper snapped her eyes closed.

“Killing Superman? What imbecile would decide that? I know that thinking Bruce in pain is tormenting but still…” she clutched her forehead. “Whom do you think you’d help with that? Bruce would have been devastated if you succeeded…” she breathed deeply. “And I…”

Tony smiled self satisfied cocking an eyebrow.

“And you?” he asked slyly.

Pepper clenched her jaw and slapped him hard on the face.

“Ouch!” he exclaimed and brushed his red cheek.

“I’d be relieved of your stupidity and irresponsibility!” she shouted.

But Tony gagged her putting abruptly his arms around her and capturing her mouth with his, kissing passionately and dragging her resisting body to touch his. They stayed cuddled after the kiss and Tony caressed her long, red hair.

“Bruce found me and stopped me…”

“Thank God for Bruce…” Pepper huffed. “But next time I’ll put you in an Asylum…”

Tony rubbed her back.

“As long as I have Dr. Quinzel as my therapist…I think that therapy with her will be…”

Pepper stabbed her stiletto heel to his foot and Tony screamed.
“I think you’re a red hair sadist, babe…” he said dead serious and Pepper looked him in the eyes.

“Only with you, Tinman…”

Selina was talking avidly with Steve, their eyes locked: he sat on the high backed armchair in front of the lit old fireplace and she was sprawled like a cat on his lap. And the real cat of the house, Hero, was licking his paws meticulously curled up on the carpet.

Leslie and Alfred were in the dining room and having being expelled and denied his offering for help, Bruce had brought his chair in front of the arched shaped window looking at the right part of the grounds. He always loved the view from that window even when he was too short and he had to stretch and stand on his toes to see – now at the wheelchair felt like then.

Suddenly, something caught his attention and he hurried outside – Selina too absorbed to notice, thankfully. He slithered the ramp and stopped before Thor who smiled seeing him.

“You sensed my arrival…I should have known…”

Bruce shook his head.

“Is everything alright?”

Thor looked at him.

“Funny you ask me that…I must ask that.”

Bruce nodded.

“You saw the video…” he twisted his lips.

“I’m sorry, Bruce” Thor’s voice was deep.”I know he was treating you bad yet I wouldn’t believe that Superman was able to do this…Of course you asked me if I traced Loki’s influence on him so I should have suspected that things were serious… But he did a whole jealous scene to you that day and the next day he coupled with another person…” he shook his head disappointed. “How are you feeling?”

Bruce smiled and gazed at the frozen scenery. The sky was clear and filled with sparkling stars; the silence was relaxing and Bruce sucked the clean, cool air.

“I’m fine, Thor: I knew that this was inevitable…I had seen them that night you met me at the alley.”

Thor nodded.

“I realized that when I learnt about the video…that explained the reason you were so tired that night…” he squatted and locked eyes with Bruce. “You don’t deserve that, Bruce” he whispered and pulled out of his armor a small glowing vial; it was shaped like a tear and looked like made of melt diamond.

Bruce frowned and Thor’s eyes relished on the way the divine light highlighted the human’s beautiful face.

“This is from Eir, the goddess of healing” he pursed his lips seeing Bruce’s blank eyes. “It contains the tears of the first Easter dawn…it eases the pain of the heart…and prepares the heart to welcome to a new love…” he offered the vial to Bruce who stared at it almost frightened.
His body got rigid as if he expected to be attacked; he just brushed the vial with his fingertips and didn’t take it.

“Thank you, Thor, and please, do give my gratitude to Eir…but I can’t take it…”

Thor frowned.

“Why?” he asked astonished by his denial.

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I want to learn from my mistakes…this pain would remind me to not repeat the same mistake and thus many people will be saved from the consequences of my idiocy. I must cope with my own strength like every other human being.”

Thor’s eyes filled with admiration but also bitter realization.

“You deserve the best, Bruce…And it is a matter of time before someone gives you true love…” he frowned and smiled. “But you don’t want to love again – in a romantic way…”

“This kind of love isn’t for me” Bruce retorted with conviction, his eyes fervently determined.

“But you’re love incarnated, Bruce: everyone around you knows that!”

Bruce closed his eyes and shook his head.

“Justice is what motivates me” he said “my heart is a piece of ice.”

Thor raised his eyes to the sky cursing Superman and his betrayal that turned that beautiful heart into stone…only for Bruce’s own happiness because Bruce’s heart – Thor knew it – would stay forever open for every human being.

“Fine” he consented “but keep it as a talisman…” he cupped Bruce’s hands in his and placed softly the vial in them.

Bruce felt the vibration of the divine object and yanked his head, inhaling freezing air, feeling his body revitalized.

“How you discovered the video, Thor?” he asked to divert the discussion in things that mattered.

The blond god lowered his eyes.

“Loki told me.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“So his interest continues to be focused on Gotham…We must be prepared for the time he meets with Joker or Crane to organize their next ‘prank’.”

Thor smiled realizing the clever way the human diverted the discussion in an innocent subject. He stood.

“I’ll return to Asgard immediately and keep my eyes on him. Good night, Bruce” he turned to leave. “And please, change your mind about Eir’s elixir.”

Bruce felt bad because it was as if he had told Thor to leave.
“Thor, don’t leave” the god turned and his baby blue eyes glimmered. “Would you like to have dinner with us?”

Thor’s eyes widened because as much as humans goggled at him apart from Tony nobody had invited him to dinner. He smiled.

“I don’t want to intrude in your family life…”

Bruce chuckled and shook his head.

“With Tony and Steve Rogers around the table is already like a mini Avengers’ meeting so…you don’t have to worry. And Alfred loves to have many people to enjoy his cooking.”

Thor kneeled again and put his hands on Bruce’s shoulders.

“Thank you, Bruce.”

He shrugged.

“You should thank Alfred: he takes care of everything.”

Jason goggled as he and Dick entered the vast dining room: it wasn’t just the champagne colored tiles of the floor that shone like gems where the floor wasn’t covered by the thick carpet. Neither the rectangular table from brown wood covered with a rectangular white linen tablecloth; nor the chairs that they were simple but still looked like elegant work of art; nor the beautiful dinnerware that sparkled in the light; the three crystal, almost transparent candlesticks placed in equal space between them; the green, real leaves that were spread on the tablecloth. Neither the chandelier with the crystal lamps that send soft light around nor the fireplace on the opposite wall decorated with crème colored stones. The all glass rack with few but elegant decorative artifacts.

“Holly shit! Ironman, Captain America an’ Thor in the same place!” Jason exclaimed and everyone looked at him amused.

Dick snorted and elbowed him.

“They came to confront the monster in the wheelchair…”

Jason chuckled.

“Let me introduce you” Bruce offered smiling. “Although you know most of our company: this is Miss Pepper Potts and Selina Kyle” the boy’s eyes widened at seeing the two gorgeous women “and Thor, Steve Rogers and Tony Stark” he then turned to the adults “and these fine young gentlemen are Richard Grayson, my ward and Jason Todd, his best friend.”

“Nice to meet ya, guys” Jason said and Dick mumbled something similar.

Jason continued staring at the Avengers and Dick leaned to his ear.

“Don’t tell me you’ll ask their autographs…”

“Why not? I’ll snatch fat bucks for each…”

Dick rolled his eyes.
“You’re insufferable…”

Tony looked at the boys wrapping his arm around the chair’s back.

“Between us, boys, I’m sure the only Avenger you’d want to see is Natasha…” he tilted his head on the side and arched his eyebrows as the boys exchanged embarrassed glances blushing.

“Is her boobs really so gorgeous?” Jason asked and Dick elbowed him hard while Bruce laughed. “Wha’? TV changes things…”

Tony winked.

“I like that fella” he sighed. “Besides I’m so close to your age…”

Pepper snorted.

“Sure…in maturity.”

Tony leaned his head to the boys.

“My mommy…Be careful of mammas, boys…”

After the dinner, everyone gathered at the grand salon to drink coffee and chat.

Bruce noticed that Richard had left the room and excused himself to find the boy. He found him in the small back salon gazing at the grounds from the whole wall framed window, caressing Hero in his arms.

“When your grandmother comes back we’ll repeat that dinner” he said softly.

Dick turned to him with narrowed enraged eyes.

“When my granny comes back I won’t see you ever again!”

Bruce lowered his eyes.

“Fair enough…I’m sorry for what you’re being through, Richard; I know you don’t like me.”

The boy let Hero on the floor and rushed to Bruce.

“Don’t like you?” he sniggered “you wish! I hate you!”

“I understand” Bruce answered stoic.

“If you thought that you’d impress me with all these fucking heroes around, you’re stupid!”

“I didn’t make it to impress you: Tony is my friend and the Avengers are his colleagues and friends. Richard” he pressed his lips; he wanted to hold the boy’s shoulders but he knew it was unacceptable “I’m honestly sorry for having to stay with me but there’s no other way…but I assure you: it’d be temporary.”

Dick jerked his head upwards.

“There is another way! Get out of the way and let me live with my uncle!” Bruce looked at him and Dick nodded. “Yeah…the one who should be with me right now and the one you thwart to get near me!” he rushed to the opposite to leave the room.
“Richard…” Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

Dick stopped on his heels and tilted his head to his unwanted guardian.

“You lived eighteen years imprisoned by Falcone: why are you doing the same to me? It’s not enough that I lost my family because of you?” he ran away and Bruce held his forehead, a headache developing swiftly like a wave.

He let his hand drop to his lap where Hero had just climbed; he had heard young feet approaching with vitality and he didn’t want Jason to see him like this. He turned his wheelchair and smiled to Jason who stopped abruptly.

“Oh!” he exclaimed surprised seeing Bruce.

“My presence is annoying?” he asked.

Jason pouted and shook his head.

“No, man; I just didn’t expect to find ya here…I was lookin’ for Dick.”

“He went probably to his room…”

Jason approached with his hands in the pockets of his jeans.

“I see…He gave ya a Hell again, huh? Are ya okay? Ya seem a bit pale…do ya want me to call the grandpa?”

Bruce laughed for the ‘grandpa’ for Alfred. Jason pouted.

“Dicky is my best buddy but I admit he’s a dick to ya… Sorry for the term…”

“It’s okay, Jason” he smiled “I grown up in a whorehouse surrounded by thugs… And thank you; Dick is lucky to have you” he patted the boy’s shoulders. “Thank you for that – you’re a great young man.”

Jason shook his head.

“Nah…I’m a punk: ya can ask…”

Bruce laughed.

“Jason, I’m happy every time you come here but I don’t want your mother to feel that we take you from her.”

Jason frowned.

Wha’? No…no! Mom for years was all alone struggling to feed us an’ nobody cared…” he pressed his small lips. “She was doin’ drugs an’ sellin’ to get her dose…She did time in jail…” he said in a voice that didn’t remind at all the cheerful little punk.

Bruce nodded; he knew that already.

“You are a very brave boy, Jason…Your mother must be very proud of you and you of her.”

“Now you gave her a job an’ show interest for me…an’ she is happy.”
Bruce nodded grinning.

“Listen to me, Jason: for whatever you or your mother need I want you to come to me – do not hesitate, okay?” the boy nodded. “The same goes for Richard: there’s no chance he’ll ever come and confide in me so” he shook his head “I don’t want you to betray his trust, no, no way. But if things become serious…”

Jason nodded.

“Ya’re a good guy, aren’t ya?”

Bruce chuckled.

“Nah…I just want to see happy people around me, that’s all” the boy laughed. “Your mother will expect you, so say good night to Richard and off we go. We’ll put your motorbike to the trunk.”

Jason frowned.

“You are braver than what people believe.”

“Why’s that?”

“Joker is loose an’ he targets ya…but ya leave yar company of superheroes to come to town.”

“He or anyone else won’t expect me in a small car and the car is bulletproof. And between us, I need some fresh air” he frowned “we can’t say that Gotham’s air is fresh, huh?” Jason pouted and shook his head. “But we do love that air, right Jason?”

“Mmm…ya said ‘small car’? So we won’t ride that monster?”

Bruce chuckled.

“Some other time, cross my heart.”

It was half past midnight. Bruce had delayed going to sleep as much as he could: most of the times he didn’t have a problem to stay alone, on the contrary he needed some loneliness. But tonight he wanted to stay in the common rooms with his loved ones: maybe it was that he didn’t want to be in the master bedroom where every good or bad moment he had with Clark would haunt him.

Leslie had asked a last time to examine him.

“Now I see the reason you honored us with your presence, Dr. Thompkins” he retorted playfully.

She frowned.

“What are you saying, young man: it’s not the first time I had dinner with you.”

“Yes, but this time you wanted to observe your patient for any sign of weakness, right?”

Leslie smirked.

“I always like to combine work and pleasure…” she answered teasingly.

She leaned to him. Selina with Steve had left the Manor earlier because she wanted to show him her apartment; Alfred went to make his night tea and Tony with Pepper had a tele-meeting with some cross Atlantic partners. As for Dick, after the short interaction with Bruce he went to his room and stayed there.

So only Hero was with them stretched on Bruce’s lap, licking his paw and purring.

“Bruce, let me examine you” the youth closed his eyes. “Just your heart…at least.”

Bruce thought his nipples bearing the marks of the slight burns Clark did with his heat vision and the teeth marks and bruises all over his body. He denied once again.

But now after Leslie left and Tony with Pepper went to their bedroom, Bruce couldn’t delay it anymore: it was almost the time Alfred went to sleep too and he didn’t want to torment him keeping the old man awake to make him company.

So he sat before the big window and stared outside where Superman hovered last night: he almost wished seeing him again. It seemed like a year had passed: this day was endless…dragging and dragging…Clark coming back…

He pressed his lips; that wouldn’t happen. He yanked his head and clenched the armrests: always pressing your lips with every misfortune. Swallow the pain, grit your teeth and comfort yourself saying that it’s not so bad, after all – it doesn’t matter. Smile because your loved ones are all around and you don’t want them more sorrowful for you…But you don’t smile only to them: you force yourself to do that even when you’re alone, slapping yourself saying that it’ll pass and you shouldn’t break from something like this…Everytime clenching your fists to take strength and continue.

But maybe for once you should succumb to sadness? Stop fighting the depression and just let the sorrow wash your body and soul? He shook his head disapprovingly: no, he couldn’t allow that, although some times like now this option seemed tempting, to just stop fighting the sadness: like when he was a weak, cripple being in Falcone’s hands having seen his parents being murdered.

He chuckled bitterly: sorrow and bitterness were always there inside him; the foundations of his existence – he just decided to take from them the helm when Ra’s breathed confidence to him: confidence that he could defeat his enemies and save innocent people. He blinked: but he would never be entirely saved… However, he always felt them – sadness, bitterness, hopelessness, depression -; he recognized them but just let them be…float around.

He ran his hands in his hair and closed his eyes; when he opened them again, he moved to the bed that was ready for him to sleep; Hero was already asleep in his basket.

Bruce noticed that the pillows were brand new and grinned: Alfred takes care of everything…My good Alfred.

He looked at the bed indecisive but in the end took off his robe determined and slipped under the blankets turning off the table lamp and the secret lighting behind the headboard.

His body above the waist screamed from all kinds of pain; the hardship and fatigue of the day taking their toll despite the fact he had a nap at midday. The pain was so intense that stopped his respiration for a few seconds and he groaned. He stared at the slowly dancing flames in the fireplace hoping to divert his mind from the pain and be lulled.

But a thought cracked like a bolt his mind: what if Clark decided to remove the energy casts from his body?

“The energy casts are property of the Fortress and serve me.”
He shook his head: that would render him completely immobile and bound to a bed, at least till Tony, Lucius and Leslie found something to replace them. No…Clark would never do that, even if he was under the influence of that woman. Bruce inhaled deeply and let the air slowly leave his lungs: he had made arrangements for returning to Clark what belonged to him.

Clark…Only the thought made him feel like his chest was bleeding again.

I believed that we would fight this together as we did that night in the greenhouse; that I could help you defeat your demons as you helped me escape mine. But you didn’t want me and my presence only made your demons stronger…I wasn’t able to make you believe in this fight; if I had inspired greater love in you, you’d be able to overcome the effect…but after all I’m not a person who can create that kind of love to someone…I wasn’t good enough…But I won’t abandon you, Clark, even if I am far from you…

He was tired but he couldn’t sleep and his eyes kept staring at the dark ceiling, his mind making up forms, bats: his loyal companions in every pain he had suffered.

Suddenly, a small light from his wristwatch made his blank eyes sparkle: Jim had lit the signal: he couldn’t ignore his call again. His loyal ally needed him. He forced his body to sit and Hero stirred in his sleep but Bruce could be completely stealthy when he wanted.

He reached the cave and put on his new armor.

Jim was waiting as every time beside the signal and even though his movements with the new armor weren’t as good as before still the police commissionaire was startled.

“Those chilly nights are charming…” Jim said abstracted by the starry sky but swiftly changed into business. “I was worried; you didn’t come.”

Batman clenched his jaw.

“I was busy” he replied flatly and Jim nodded.

“You’re fine, that counts.”

Bruce saw a flicker of relief and joy in the good cop’s eyes; a flicker that soon was quenched.

“We found a man’s body…with Joker’s card pinned on his lapel.”
Joker paced the roof of the warehouse he had made his hideout. He was hunched and his face tightened. He had his hands behind his back and whistled a tune – a tune of his own inspiration. Suddenly, he stopped and looked at the starry sky; he twisted his lips: no giant flying rodents…of…course.

The Bat wouldn’t come to catch him…The Bat was confined in a horrible wheelchair after the accident his stupid goon caused…He frowned: how that idiot, Lou, can be still alive after what he did to Batsy? He pouted: one of these days he had to look into it – he should noted to his Smartphone…wait: he didn’t have a Smartphone but his mind had a four-core processor so he didn’t need these petty and boooooring gizmos…

Joker turned his wrist and looked at the Micky Mouse plated wristwatch: 1 o’clock. Those idiots at GCPD must have found by now his tailor…well, what was left of his tailor… He stretched his arm, gazed at the sleeve and brushed the expensive fabric.

“C’est magnifique!” he exclaimed in a hilarious mimic of French accent that reminded of screeching tires; Joker stared at the morose gargoyle of the opposite warehouse and shrugged. “I’m a comedian, paaaal! Now drop the critic aaaaaand smiiiiiLE!”

He tilted his head on the side studying the grim, dirty statue and finally licked his lips.

“You’re tough audience, huh? At least, my good tailor smiles all the time now…after death…” he widened his eyes innocently. “Buuuuut they say that the important stuuuuuf is after death, do they?”

He waved the gargoyle off.

“Ugh! You’re boooooring!” he twirled around himself. “This city is booooring without Batsy flying around aaaaaand kicking asses…”

He tapped his fingertip on his bottom lip thoughtful.

“Batsy decided toooooo play with us” he dictated waving his hand as if giving a lecture. “He found a way to persu--ade people that he is still out there while he is home siiiiick. Once again the sneaky litt’ boy, fooooools everyone; like he did with the late Falcone” he gave his eyes a mock sorrowful look “God rests his soul…Mou…HAHAHAHAHAHAHAH!” he held his belly. “Uph! Each time it’s the same laughs…He was fuck--ing the boy, he was thinking him a pet and the pet ate him! UHUHUHUHU! He couldn’t discern the kitten from the tiger…” he frowned. “No, no tiger: a panther, black panther…” he whistled and sighed rolling his eyes lustful ‘I’m a fun of bestiality, what can I say?’ he shrugged “HEHE!”

He scratched his green died curls and looked at his gloved nails.

“I need to wash my hair…I dooooo love animals but I don’t want pets strolling oooon my head…”

He turned again to the gargoyle.

“What I was saying?” he waved him off disappointed. “Never mind…”

His eyes found the sky.

“Yeeeeeess…” he nodded. “Well, Batsy wants to play with us pretending that he is fine…well, I wanna play too…”

His eyes became blank: he needed a new suit and dressing coat, he really needed. So he ordered one of his goons to call that grandpa – yeah, the guy was an old professional – and Joker admired (HeHe! Nice one…admire…), liked his work. He was Joker, damn!, he deserved the best – and since Brucey had Armani, he should be elegant looking too…No, he wasn’t vain.

They arranged an appointment at the man’s atelier…How was his name? Ori…Rio…aaa…D’ario. He wouldn’t ever forget the man’s expression when Joker entered his workspace with a deep bow: his terror was such that he didn’t dare even to move to his phone to call the police…or it was cleverness? The old man obviously knew that if he did the wrong move he’d be killed instantly either by the armed henchmen or Joker himself.

However, he didn’t want the esteemed tailor dead…Joker knew how to not blend business with pleasure.

He tilted his head on the side: no, no, no, scratch that. Okay, he blended them but in some cases he didn’t. And this was one of these cases.

Joker had sat beside him at the backless setee and wrapped his arm around his shoulders like an old chap. He talked to the old man kindly and sweet – when he wanted (not that he wanted to brag) he was an angel…exaggeration. He promised him that he wouldn’t be hurt and that he just wanted a good dressing coat for the winter and a suit. He’d be handsomely rewarded. But…to be sure that the grandpa wouldn’t trap them, he should take the necessary and come to work to their place: food, sleeping and entertainment on the house.

It was D’ario’s choice to come with them – if you didn’t count Joker’s kids’ firearms and his own charming smile: Joker knew that his smile was his most powerful weapon…

Well, the grandpa was a talent! Joker wasn’t sure if it was pure skill or the blade that constantly mentally hovered above the man’s neck: always mentally because Joker couldn’t pose as a model and held the knife at the same time or could he?

“I muuuuust try it…” he shook his head.

The guy made a fine job and Joker paid him the best way: he spared him from the tough declining years: rheumatism, pain in the bones, high blood pressure, dementia. Brrr…Joker shook his head hysterically: he didn’t want even to consider it. Not to mention the loneliness, the abandon, the depression of seeing yourself decaying alive…Now, good ol’ D’ario had a permanent smile on his face probably considering from what he escaped.

Joker tilted his head on the side and narrowed his eyes pouting.

“Noooooow I’m thinking about it, I overpaid you, old fella” he shook his head. “Anyway, I caaaaan’t ask my money back, can I?”

He jumped and sat down on the cement, his legs dangling to the void.

“Well, Brucey-Batsy, Batsy-Brucey, youuuuu found a trick to fool people that you’re still flying…” he hissed. “Youuuuu wanted to play but I’m aaaa kid an’ I wanna playyyyy tooooo” he pouted like someone had taken from him a lollipop and then sobered. “What if I begin killing people?” he sniggered serious “and demanding from you to cocoome and stoooop me?” he cocked his eyebrows while his eyes glimmered evilly. “All theeeeeeese time you played with us – now you’ll have to come out and really play” he narrowed his eyes. “You dooo have to find a way and come to me, babe…”
he shook his head. “I intend on keep you ‘running’…HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!”

“The man’s name is Silvio D’ario and he was a well known tailor” Jim explained showing the picture to Batman.

He was an elderly man around 70 years with white, thin hair and white thick eyebrows. His face was wrinkled and as he was sprawled on the cement of Saint Mary’s Park, the macabre Cheshire smile, Joker’s trademark carved his plumb face even more. His eyes were bulged in terror. Thankfully, death had come instantly by the blade that protruded from his heart.

“He had no family; only an old housekeeper and some friends and associates. His disappearance had been stated to the police two weeks ago but…” Gordon pressed his lips in a thin line.

Batman nodded.

“He wasn’t found…” if Bruce was truly in the business and wasn’t absorbed in his sex life he could have found the man and saved him from Joker.

Gordon was looking at Batman over his glasses and although the lenses covered his real eyes, the cop could tell that his ally was blaming himself.

“You can’t save them all” he said sympathetically but firmly.

Batman yanked his head.

“Do you think that this comforts him?”

Jim closed his eyes.

“Of course not…” Jim replied hoarsely.

“Neither do I. Joker’s card?”

Jim opened the folder he was holding and pulled out a Joker card inside a police case. He held it in two fingers and showed it to Batman who straightened his head.

Red letters which were obviously written with the victim’s blood read:

“I’M PLAYFUL LIKE YOU, BATSY –CoM’ OUT AND PLAYYYYYYY”

Gordon came closer to him watching wary Batman’s pressed lips.

“Don’t play his game: he wants to draw you to a trap.”

Bruce’s mind was racing: Joker suspected, was almost sure about Batman’s identity. He knew that Bruce Wayne was paraplegic and he heard that Batman was active so he planned to either prove that Batman wasn’t really active or – most probable, he wanted to drive Bruce to his limits. He could imagine the smirk of the clown: if you want to still play the protector of the city, then you must protect her from real dangers – for Joker was a game. Something to enjoy himself or even manage to capture a vulnerable Batman and demask him.

“Are you alright?” Jim asked with real concern.

Batman didn’t answer because he never had to answer that: Batman couldn’t afford to not be alright.
“I’ll stop him, Jim” he said flatly and walked casually to the ledge and jumped to the void spreading his wings, his body forgetting exhaustion and pain because now he was in the sky.

Gordon sighed.

“I hope you’re really alright, son…” he watched his ally’s route and turned to return inside.

His body ached all over but these pains were different from those he remembered. They were pains of beating and the acid burning of lashes on his back; he was exhausted yet his exhaustion was intense even below his waist.

So all this paralysis-thing was false…and Superman cheating him…Superman being with him was a dream. Yes, a dream because Bruce had his legs spread on a gynecologist-like chair that left his opening exposed.

And he was seeing himself in Ra’s’ gray eyes: he was small, he was 14 years old. He was scared and his body shook uncontrollably wanting to jolt from the chair and run. Where to run? There was nowhere to go to: Ra’s was his salvation, Bruce knew it and knew that he had to stay with him if he wanted to have a chance. But he was appalled of the chair; he had obeyed the lion-like man and sat there yet now he couldn’t take it anymore…

“Please, sir…” his eyes searched in Ra’s’ eyes and found impatience under his sweetness. “I don’t want to…”

The older man caressed affectionately his hair and kissed feathery his forehead.

“Do not be afraid, child” he widened his eyes “you don’t trust me?”

Bruce nodded trembling but his hands clenched the man’s forearms desperately.

“What are you going to do, sir?”

Ra’s’ features hardened.

“You don’t honestly expect me to explain my actions to you, child?” his voice was mild but stern at the same time and Bruce felt dread. “It’s for the best and I know that Falcone put you in a lot of worse things than this.”

Bruce bit his bottom lip and sniffed because his nose began leaking: he thought that with this man it’d be different.

Ra’s as if he had read the boy’s thoughts smiled with sympathy.

“I understand your distaste, Bruce, but I need to take some samples from your body to make some tests and see if you’re healthy. You are the son of a doctor so you know how these things go.”

Yes, Bruce knew: his dad was taking blood samples from him once in a while, but not from down there…And now a bigger terror settled in Bruce’s bonny chest: “see if you’re healthy”. He wasn’t healthy: he couldn’t be. And what if Ra’s abandoned him once he found out that he wasn’t healthy?

“Samples from…from there…?”

Ra’s nodded and lifted his head to the man waiting and he took a syringe-like thing from the table and came closer. The closer he got the more the size of the syringe registered with Bruce: he hadn’t seen anything that big and such a thick needle – it was like a blade…

He jerked from the chair: Falcone put things in him and now Ra’s was going to do the same. Ra’s grabbed his upper arms and pressed him down.

“Hush, Bruce…Don’t be like that!”

But Bruce twitched weakly in his enormous arms, his face distorted in fear.

“Please, don’t hurt me, sir…don’t hurt me like the others…” he felt warm liquid washing his cheeks and saw Ra’s’ huff of impatience.

“Falcone’s disaster depends on this, child! This will make us powerful…”

Bruce frowned and then a flash image of a giant creature with silver spikes for hair and two short, straight ivory horns in his temples cracked his mind; the creature was using him and filling him with his hot liquid that didn’t drip from his opening but felt like being absorbed in his body.

“If you were a girl you’d be with a baby…” Ra’s’ voice echoed from far but Bruce didn’t remember where and when.

Ra’s’ arms tightened around him keeping him still and smoothened; suddenly, he felt a cold thing entering him and it wasn’t the first time but still Bruce squirmed and Ra’s clenched his jaw and hugged him squeezing the trembling boy in his stony torso.

“It’ll be over in a minute…” the lion-like man whispered in Bruce’s ear “just stay calm and it won’t hurt much.”

The older man captured his lips and began massaging gently but determined; and it was so intense that Bruce’s mind went numb.

His scream was muffled in Ra’s’ mouth when a sharp pain smashed his insides and Bruce’s eyes began watering. He could feel a giant metallic beast sucking chunks of his flesh inside his anus: the sample Ra’s needed.

“I can’t take the second sample” the man told Ra’s “his rectum is clenched.”

Bruce was shaking inside Ra’s’ arms and the older man looked at the boy whose face was drenched in sweat; his eyes stared at the adult asking mercy and Ra’s’ eyes bent. He cupped Bruce’s face and the boy watched the beautiful, lean fingers of the powerful man massaging gently, slowly his face until a paralyzing calmness flooded his body and brain; his eyelids felt too heavy and he tried to stop them from trembling, to keep his eyes open but Ra’s’ movements were irresistible and soon he succumbed…Bruce was always too exhausted, too needy of the small escape sleep offered; he let his eyelids cover his eyes…

He was asleep but he felt the strong lips of Ra’s Al Ghul kissing him in the forehead gently.

“Continue…” he ordered in a low voice his minion.

Bruce was sleeping but still could hear; thankfully, the pain inside him was just a sting. The door opened and someone left – the man who took the samples – and someone else entered closing the door behind him.

“Are you sure for what you’re going to do, Ra’s?” Ubu’s deep voice asked and his usual tranquility was cracked.
Ra’s’ strong presence left from his side as the lion-like man stood.

“I can’t let that chance go wasted” he answered in his smug voice. “Bruce’s body absorbed Bagdana’s semen as expected: it’s a chance unique. The demon’s seed, Bruce’s DNA which bears the DNA of another demon, Lilith; and my own DNA” his madness, his lust vibrated his voice.

“It isn’t enough that you’re turning the child’s body into a deadly magnet for the Kryptonian?” Ubu’s disapproval was clear.

Ra’s gritted his teeth.

“You don’t understand, Ubu?” he hissed. “You can’t grasp the possibilities of the offspring that would be created? Two powerful demons, a unique child and Ra’s Al Ghul’s blood...The ideal successor, the ideal warrior...he or she shall be invincible” his voice softened. “If Bruce alone is so gifted, imagine the baby that will be come from him, Bagdana and me.”

“And what if your creation doesn’t satisfy your dreams: the procedure is risky and even if indeed a baby is created we can’t be sure that it’ll be in perfect condition.”

“Then I’ll dispose of it.”

Ubu made a sound of disapproval.

“And if he or she is an uncontrollable monster?”

“If I can create a man who will bring Superman to his knees I can control anything...” his smug smile was evident in his voice.

His body felt heavy like a log and there was a feeling of stiffness and pain in his stomach. He could say that he was lying on a bed; his head was in a fog that had nothing to do with sleeping. He wanted to remember where he was and what happened but his memory stubbornly shut all the doors.

But Bruce was more stubborn even from his mind, so he dug deeply in his memory and he came upon tormenting thirst, stabbing famine and all kinds of pain all over his body – even burns and migraine. He couldn’t clear how all these happened to him, after all in his entire life was hungry, thirsty and famished. Yet there was a pain more excruciating from the others; a pain that had nothing to do with his body though there was a connection with the current throbbing in his stomach. This pain was deeper, eroding; this pain was the pain of the heart – the irremediable pain of betrayal.

He didn’t want to open his eyes: it was much better like this – the external world never offered him anything but cruelty and misery. But always there was something pushing him to stand up. His eyelids flickered: he knew that it was time once again to face the world.

The golden light of the sun coming from the window blinded him for some seconds but once his eyes adjusted, he took in the space. He knew that luxurious room – he could even see the cage where he was jailed for days: like a wild animal, like a bat. Only bats didn’t live in cages.

All came back to him like an icy cold waterfall: his abduction from the Manor, his transport in the desert, in this camp; the tortures Ra’s Al Ghul submitted him; the mysterious boy who stared at him; the revelation that this boy was in a odd way his son; he tried, he had managed to find the courage to make his attempt to escape with his son: he couldn’t let the boy at Ra’s’ mercy, the demon’s head had done enough damage to him.

But the damage was already too big: the boy had followed him only to stab him in the stomach as he
And now he was again prisoner of him. He was sensing him in the room: after all, it was his bedroom. Ra’s could be invisible to anyone but Bruce could sense his presence even when his former master didn’t want to. He had mastered that skill after many years of being used by him and many cruel punishments…

Ra’s didn’t wish to hide his presence from Bruce because he immediately entered his field. As Bruce expected he had that annoying smug expression, a mock sympathetic grin on his lips. He approached the bed with long, confident strides and sat at the stool beside.

“I see you finally woke” he chirped. “Our great child is a bit compulsive with knives; extremely skillful but he can’t control himself with them and his blows are heavier than they should” his grin became broader with pride for the boy and irony for Bruce. “Like the small snakes which can’t control the poison in their fangs so their biting is deadlier than that of the adult snakes. You’ve been unconscious for two weeks.”

Bruce didn’t look at him just shook his head disgusted.

“You really like what you have done with him, don’t you?”

Ra’s face sobered.

“Since I failed with his…’mother’, that is you” he pursed his lips and cocked his eyebrows. “But do not credit this success to me alone: he is the offspring of two demons, of me and…” he took softly Bruce’s hand and although Bruce wanted to take it away he couldn’t make a move. “Of a unique human being, you.”

Bruce clenched his jaw and his lips upturned in rage.

“You have paralyzed me…”

Ra’s nodded amused.

“Completely: it is not the first time and each time is extremely satisfying to witness your weak anger. I paralyzed you below the neck; otherwise I should use heavy bondage hard and in your condition I find it cruel: our boy -treasure instead of just stopping you from escaping, almost killed you.”

Bruce shook his head still not looking at him.

“He didn’t have any inhibition to do it: you poisoned him against me.”

The lion-like man shook his head in denial.

“No, Bruce: I didn’t poison him, I told him only the truth about how you backstabbed me. I hadn’t told him that you were his father but then you told him and didn’t leave me another option. His hatred for you is a consequence of your own actions.”

Bruce bared his teeth and turned to lock eyes with him; his own eyes two blazing seas.

“You didn’t tell him what you did to me! You never told him what you truly do with your stupid League: you never let him free to see the world, to learn the truth.”

Ra’s cocked an eyebrow.

“And you think that this would change anything? I’m the boy’s god: nobody can change his opinion” he snorted “not even his traitorous, unworthy begetter...You just saw that: you put him before a choice and this choice destroyed you” he hissed.

Bruce felt the tied wound in his stomach biting hard.

Al Ghul caressed his face affectionately like he was doing when he was just a fooled little boy who believed him like a savior. Bruce yanked his head away and the older man smiled.

“I like that you care about our child, Bruce: I was afraid that you would hate him due to the circumstances that led to his birth.”

Bruce snapped his head towards him.

“Why would I hate him? Nothing of this is his fault: he’s a child that deserves the best!” Ra’s grinned in his mefistophelic way. “And you’re not that!”

He shrugged.

“Alright, then; you can give him what you consider the best.”

Bruce frowned.

“That includes being away from you and growing up like every other child” he spat.

Ra’s tilted his head.

“But he isn’t like every other child and neither you are. All in all, Bruce, I want him with you; he can learn so much from you” Bruce narrowed his eyes. “Yet I can’t permit that to happen if you are like this: ill minded.”

Bruce’s eyes widened.

“Ill minded?! But I know who you really are.”

Ra’s stood and sat at the mattress beside Bruce which motion made him shudder.

“You see, I can’t permit that…” he said indifferent. “You’ll be with him but in my terms.”

“Never!” Bruce spat but the older man laughed self-confident.

“Oh, Bruce! That’s what fascinates me most about you: your defiance, your stubbornness, your spirit. Dick will be benefited by growing up with his ‘mother’. However you were never able to deprive me of what I wanted, child.”

He leaned over Bruce and he felt his chest being clenched; his eyes widened and his face tensed more when Ra’s pulled the blanket from his body.

“No!” he spat when his former master slipped his hand under Bruce’s shirt and began fondling his chest.

Ra’s smiled and brought his face over Bruce’s; he captured Bruce’s lips which was what Bruce waited to plunge his teeth to Ra’s lips. The older man jerked touching the blood on his lips and began cackling.

“Oh, Bruce! Your resistance works only to fuel my fire and desire...Don’t be like that” he said matter of factly “we have a child together...”
Bruce squinted and spat Ra’s in the face which made the leader of the Shadows pale before he clenched his jaw and with a swift movement straddled the younger man. Bruce just caught Ra’s’ raised hand before it fell hard on his face sending his head to the other side.

“Ungrateful little whore!” he grounded his teeth and turned Bruce on his stomach.

Bruce gritted his teeth knowing what was to follow and that he was unable to do anything to stop it; Al Ghul’s brutal movements as he stripped and spread him was all too familiar to him, as the harsh, swift way he entered him making his body cry in agony; even now that he couldn’t move his limps but feel everything.

Ra’s’ panting filled his world like the nauseating sound of flesh slapping flesh as the older man penetrated him…and then Ra’s’ heavy torso was on his back and his hot lips swallowed Bruce’s ear.

“You’ll do what I want, child…You’ll become what I dreamed for you…” he whispered.

“Never!”

But his eyes bulged seeing Ra’s hand holding a syringe filled with a liquid with a bizarre purple color that boiled inside.

“Don’t!” he shouted but Ra’s lowered the syringe where he couldn’t see or move; he tried to hit Ra’s’ head with his but he was still weak from his injury and his former master pressed his head on the pillow immobilizing him.

The needle stabbed him hard on the forearm and his blood began burning and his eyes watering; his head span crazily.

“Our son needs you, Bruce…and I need you to fulfill your destiny: to become what I want you to be. My dream executioner, the angel-punisher, Superman’s slayer…” Ra’s’ passionate voice echoed distorted in the caves of his head.

The boy’s eyes were filled with awe, widened as he stared at Batman in the middle of the cave. There wasn’t the waterfall at the entrance and the bats hanging from the ceiling were different from those in Gotham. This cave was enormous, with tall endless stalactites forming pillars that fenced a round opening in the middle of which was a bench with several screens; a low humming sound indicated that a massive processor was working.

Ra’s sat on a flat rock with his arms crossed looking at Batman with satisfaction and pride.

“I managed to reclaim your armor from our enemies” he said “and I see that it deserved the effort humiliating our enemies” he shook his head “but most: looking again at the magnificent creature of the night that they failed to kneel.”

Batman eyed himself: the armor was the same but simultaneously there were differences from what he remembered. The armor was the same deep black of the midnight, consisted of several individual parts, distinguishing his abdominal muscles one my one. Yet the bat with the open winds all over his chest was a dazzling red and Bruce had the impression that it should be black.

Ra’s grinned and addressed the boy.

“Our enemies, Superman and Stark, ambushed your father and injured him to the point of death; yet the worst they did to him was to put him under brainwashing that was very effective due to Batman’s damaged health. They persuaded him that Stark was his best, childhood friend and Superman his lover…” he arched his eyebrows “but their most disgusting lie was that the League of Shadows was an organization of murderers and I had betrayed and abused him. They are plotting to conquer the world and know that the League is the only organization that can stop them; and Batman their greater enemy – the greatest defender of justice.”

Batman eyed him locking their eyes; he could see his irises inside his leader’s gray eyes and that seemed odd to him. Several scared irises flashed through his mind and in none of them his eyes were reflected: criminals were seeing only blinding white light in Batman’s eyes, lenses.

“They made him believe that Batman needed to hide his true eyes from his enemies” he shook his head. “Nonsense! Your father’s eyes are unique and can be the most dangerous weapon: he terrorized criminals only with his glare” he was addressing the impressed raven haired boy but his steel eyes were locked with Bruce’s.

Ra’s made a sharp movement with his head and the boy stood from the bench obviously trained in perfect discipline.

“Dick, please, leave us alone” he asked politely and the boy bowed to both of them and marched the stone corridor leading to the other end of the cave.

Ra’s stayed with his head bowed listening to the boy’s light footsteps till he was sure that he was far. He stood slowly and came to Batman who had walked to the computer bench checking the gadgets.

“Is everything as it should be?” he asked cocking an eyebrow and Bruce still discerned some irony.

Batman nodded.

“Dick is looking at me oddly…disbelieving” he spat.

Ra’s grinned.

“You shouldn’t think badly of him: he saw you the first days after we took you from their hands. You were too aggressive, too insulting to me and even tried to grab Dick and run away, back to them. But now you’re healed” his voice became low and he came closer caressing the cheeks of the cowl “things will become normal again: Dick will find again the trust to his father and I…”

His lips touched passionately Batman’s lips.

“I’ll have again my beloved…the child I raised…the body I worshipped…”

Bruce answered to the challenge of Ra’s’ lips and his mouth began moving along slowly but progressively faster and stronger. Ra’s put his arms around his armored back and brought their bodies to smash, deepening the kiss in a wild battle of tastes and sounds. Bruce could see Ra’s satisfaction, his delight as he sniffed the scent of the armor mixed with the younger man’s perfume. Which intrigued Bruce because something inside was whispering that his armor didn’t permit his body’s scent come out…

Yet Ra’s had said that Stark and Superman had brainwashed him into believing crazy things. He however knew whom to believe: Ra’s – the man who saved him…

Ra’s maneuvered them both bringing Bruce’s waist to touch the bench; the older man was breathing heavily, his eyes fogged with desire.

“Give me your body, child…” he groaned into Bruce’s mouth and began peeling the armor parts from his body, fondling demanding the revealed flesh.
Bruce took off the cowl and it seemed to him that it was way easier than it should be; yet Ra’s was sucking the crook of his neck and his master had a unique way to make him paralyze in pleasure.

“I think that they will try to capture you again” Ra’s whispered in his ear and Bruce frowned.

“That’s preposterous; they don’t know to admit their defeat.”

Ra’s smirked and Bruce felt it on his skin.

“It’s okay, child; this would be their death. Let them come…”

Bruce grinned but something nudged him; something told him that this wasn’t good.

“After all, Superman can’t endure your absence: your body lures him…your body will be the death of him and this rock…”

He continued nibbling Bruce’s ear lobe and pulled out of his pants’ pocket a glowing green rock cracked from black veins that were moving inside the material like liquid. Bruce found Ra’s’ eyes and the older man cackled.

“He is yours, Bruce…You’ll fulfill your destiny.”

The desert was endless…dunes and flat wavy surfaces as far as the eye could reach. Once in a while a small twister upset the sand into a vertical spiral that made Dick’s eyes sparkle with enthusiasm, showing the spectacle to Bruce with his index.

Dick had grown up in this military camp, in the middle of the desert but he behaved as if each time he was strolling the desert was the first he was seeing the sand sea. Bruce suspected that this was because of his presence.

Every afternoon they used to take the small roofless jeep and wander the desert: Bruce was training the already highly skillful boy yet their afternoon escapes were a necessary part. Maybe because they had the chance to discuss many things; maybe because Bruce wanted to come closer to his son without Ra’s’ presence – after all, Ra’s had the boy for 12 years. Bruce wanted to shape the bond that was already there vibrating.

And the boy seemed to have become really fond of him asking things, wanting to hear stories from his battles with criminals – curious enough Bruce had recollection of them -, of how he found the evidents that convicted Falcone, of how he detected the liabilities of his opponents. Bruce relished the glimmering of the boy’s beautiful blue eyes (it was Thomas Wayne’s eyes) and even more the carefree laughter of his when they spotted some small rare animal of the desert. The doubt, the apprehension and even hostility of the first days after his returning had thankfully left.

He had left the car and walked dressed in the white attires of the Arabian Princes. The sun was on his setting and the horizon seemed like bleeding gold, the sea of sand underneath sparkling.

“You know, father” the boy said with his usual sharp voice cracking from some affection “I’m happy you’re back with us” he turned to look at Bruce’s face “at first, I didn’t care when Ra’s told me about you being my father but as the time passes and I learn more about you…I’m happy you’re my father.”

“And I’m happy you’re my son and I found you, Dick: I feel that my life got a deeper meaning… I want to share so many things with you.”

Dick slipped his small hand into Bruce’s and he squeezed it gently smiling. But then the boy’s eyes widened and his body tensed.

“Father, look!”

It was a dot in the sky at first but then gradually a figure was forming; a figure in red and blue with a cape waving behind him.

Bruce squatted and took both Dick’s hands in his.

“Take the car and return to the camp” he said calmly but determined.

“I won’t leave you alone with him!”

Bruce grinned reassuringly.

“Don’t worry, Dick, he won’t harm me.”

“But he and Stark ambushed and almost killed you; they turned you against us! He’ll take you away from me!”

“He won’t…Go now: you can’t disobey your father…”

The boy grunted but did as he was told and Bruce rose to watch the jeep disappearing; the cloud of sand behind the vehicle tracing its route. The boy was safe: he turned to the upcoming alien who now was descending, rushing to him but not in an aggressive way. There was agony in Superman’s face and relief.

“Bruce!” he exclaimed and immediately he wrapped him in his powerful embrace: Ra’s was right – the alien craved for him. “I was terrified, Bruce; I thought that he would hurt you…”

Bruce didn’t answer though he snorted inside: Ra’s hurt him? Oh, he had a nerve! The man who tortured him blamed his savior of that same thing he did to him. Yet Bruce nestled his head in Superman’s shoulder and heard the alien’s heart beating faster.

“It’s alright, Star: I’ll get you away from here – back to your home, to your people…”

Bruce raised his head and locked their eyes; love was flooding Superman’s eyes: love and joy. Bruce attacked his mouth with his lips, massaging gently but strongly, sucking skillfully the hot flesh; Superman followed deepening the kiss and tightening his hold. He was moaning and his eyes were closed enjoying the senses.

Suddenly, Superman’s eyes snapped open staring shocked at Bruce’s emotionless, cold gaze; the alien’s respiration sounded like an asthmatic fit and he was shaking uncontrollably; his hold on Bruce’s body the only thing that kept him erect.

But Bruce made a small jump away from him and the most powerful being on Earth sank in his knees; bitter surprise sparkling in his sad eyes. Bruce smirked bringing his hands to the fore: in the right hand he held a glowing green rock veined with black lines and in the left he was clenching the Knife of Justice: its diamond, shining blade absorbing fast Superman’s blood.

“Bruce, why…” he whispered weakly.

Bruce spat at his knees.

“Look at you…How pathetic! You brag of being the most powerful being on Earth; you rule humans with an iron fist but in the end it takes only a rock to bring you to your knees…and you wanted to conquer Earth” he hissed.

Superman gaped but his head slumped because he didn’t have enough strength to hold it up.

“Rule humans?” he asked. “You know that’s not true, Bruce…I only help as I can…”

But Bruce felt enraged from the man’s hypocrisy; he kicked him in the ribs sending him to the sand.

“How could you think that I’d accept your kisses? Your embrace? You believed that my people wouldn’t be able to heal me from your brainwashing?”

Superman had no strength to rise even to his knees; his power was quenching. But he continued looking at Bruce desperately.

“I would never hurt you, Star…I didn’t brainwash you: Ra’s Al Ghul did. He attacked you and Alfred in the Manor and kidnapped you. He brainwashed you because you turned against him and banished him from Gotham…Please, remember…”

Bruce frowned and Superman’s eyes filled with hope. But then Bruce clenched his jaw and kicked him hard in the face rendering him unconscious.

“Liar!” he roared and his voice echoed in the desert’s emptiness.

He felt a second presence approaching and smirked: of course...

“What happened to the fucking UFO?” Stark’s cheery voice addressed him. “He passed out from his joy to see you again?”

The billionaire eyed him from feet to head and deactivated his face plate. A radiant smile cracked his tanned face and he rushed to hug Bruce dissolving his armor in a second.

“Little guy…You can’t imagine the agony when I realized that this motherfucker had taken you: I thought that I lost you again…And then when I finally located you here…I dreaded that I’d find you tortured, weak, abused…” he let go of him only to look him again “but you’re fine: what this scum had in mind?”

Bruce shrugged watching his friend smiling.

“Who knows? Aren’t you happy that he didn’t hurt me?”

Stark smiled broadly and patted his back.

“Of course…Poor Alfred will be so happy: he lost ten years from his life till now…And between us, we must not permit that – we want our old man with us for many years.”

Stark knitted his eyebrows.

“Oh, c’mon…what happened to that dork?” he marched to Superman’s form under Bruce’s cold stare. “C’mon, Supes…I was happy too but I didn’t pass out…” but then his eyes found the blood and the stab wound in Superman’s kidney. “Bruce?”

“He took what he deserved…like you, Stark…” he hissed and the playboy turned his eyes fleetingly grasping the tiny square gun Bruce held but more fixing on Bruce’s dead eyes.

“Bruce, no!”
Bruce had put in his pockets the Kryptonite and the Knife when sensed Ironman’s approach and then as the man hugged him, he pulled out the small gun. He pressed the trigger relishing the shallow sound; Stark jolted as the bullet found his waist paralyzing his body; his eyes still on Bruce’s face.

“You can’t conjure your armor” Bruce said coldly to him approaching and gazing him from above – Stark’s eyes were sorrowful as the man realized the trap. “I have a device on me – you see, we were prepared – and the device blocks your reactor to just maintain your useless life: my master might need you.”

He turned his head to see the jeeps and vans approaching fast: backup. Needless.

“You should have known, Stark, that I wouldn’t let you take me away from my loved ones again… But you’re arrogant: you think that you can get whatever you want: Ra’s told me everything about you.”

The convoy stopped surrounding him and his defeated enemies.

Stark shook his head closing his eyes.

“Little guy, I don’t know what he did to you but this man abused you as a child; you wanted to escape from him. But he brainwashed you” he inhaled deeply to find the strength to continue because the bullet in his waist hurt. “We are your loved ones, Bruce; remember?”

“Don’t listen to him, child” Ra’s came at his side. “He knows that their brainwashing has let remnants and tries to fool you to save his hide.”

“You bastard!” Stark spat through his ground teeth.

Ra’s strut to him slowly and looked him from above smirking.

“You lost, Stark. Bruce is mine” he hissed calmly and delivered him a hard kick on the chest sending him to roll on the ground unconscious.

Ra’s’ men took their enemies and tossed them in the cars; Ra’s moved to the jeep at the head of the convoy but frowned because Bruce didn’t follow.

He remained at the same spot with his arms crossed; his eyes fixed on the bleeding horizon. The atmosphere got chill as the sun was lost; a strong breeze waved Bruce’s loose clothes.

Ra’s approached him and put his arm around his shoulders. Bruce looked at his face.

“You did a great job, child; I never had a doubt – I was sure. Dick waits us in the car…”

Bruce nodded and followed him.

Batman paced in the middle of his cave, before the rectangular cage where Superman and Stark were imprisoned; the cage’s bars was glowing green from the Kryptonite and the energy field that forbade Stark from activating his armor.

Both men were awake; Superman slumped on the floor, his paleness turned into deathly white. However he had dragged himself to the paralyzed Stark and held him in his arms.

Batman was feeling two pairs of sad eyes watching puzzled his pacing.

“Star…” Superman said with steady voice, obviously recruiting his drops of stamina.
Batman’s glare was sharper than blade as focused swiftly at him.

“Don’t call me that!” he growled. “What kind of bullshit is that?”

“You loved me calling you that...” Superman answered locking their eyes; his face was sweaty. “Because your eyes are like star sapphires” he chuckled “remember? I asked and you gave me your permission...smiling.”

Batman snarled.

“Of course not! It’s a lie: it never happened!”

Stark gulped.

“Little guy” he inhaled deeply and his face distorted from pain. “Whatever this monster did to you, you can fight it and defeat him once again.”

Batman snorted.

“Defeat the man who saved me? Shut your mouth, Stark! And cut that bullshit...I’m not a little guy.”

“For me you will always be the little guy, who played with me in the Manor’s grounds; who told me that he was afraid of the bats: remember when I brought you the bat? How velvety it was in your small palm?” Batman’s eyes flickered. “Remember that you were afraid that I’d kill her? You told me that she didn’t deserve to die because you were scared of her? Remember the cave? How the bats were like black butterflies?”

“Bruce, I don’t care about my life but you don’t deserve to be a slave to Ra’s Al Ghul...”

A pang impaled Bruce’s head and some scenes washed everything. He rushed to the cage, touched his thumb in the slot and surged at Superman. He grabbed him with both hands from the suit in his chest and heaved him.

“I'm slave of nobody!” he roared. “Though you and that warm” Tony coughed “tried to turn me into one!” he looked at Superman’s pitiful eyes, the sweat all over his face declared how weak he was.

Batman shook his head.

“I don’t think that we need both of you alive...” he hissed. “As a matter of fact, Ra’s wants only Stark alive and my destiny is to slay you...”

He kept holding him with one hand and jolted upwards his left hand to eject the Blade of Justice from the secret holster under his forearm; he grabbed the hilt and brought the blade to Superman’s neck. He smirked.

“The mighty alien...it must feel humiliating to lose your life to a mere mortal.”

Superman blinked and locked eyes with him.

“You’re anything but mere, Bruce” he replied solemnly and calm.

Stark shook his head.

“Bruce, don’t do that...” he almost pleaded. “It’s a mistake you’ll regret forever.”
Batman snapped his head at him snarling but Superman found Bruce’s eyes.

“No, Tony, let him...I don’t mind being killed by his hands...” he chuckled “actually, it’ll be a sweet death. But before I die, I’ll take the world’s most fabulous impression with me...”

Unknown how but Superman gathered his remaining strength and moved his head capturing Batman’s lips in a passionate kiss that made Bruce’s mind just switch off and the Knife fall from his hand. At first, he was thunder struck, numb but then images from a half made building came to him along with a sign that read “Martha and Thomas Wayne Haven”: Superman had him cornered and was kissing him and it was the most beautiful feeling he ever had; he ever dreamt.

He detached from Superman’s lips despite his own wish and saw disappointment in the alien’s eyes; Batman looked at Tony determined.

“I must get you out of here” he snapped and Tony frowned.

“You can’t Bruce” the billionaire obviously realized that his friend had remembered. “Superman is too weak and I...” he inhaled “I’m unable to do anything. Save yourself, little guy.”

“Nonsense!” He pulled out of a compartment in his belt a Batarang shaped vial.

“What’s this, Star?” Superman asked in a hoarse, spent voice.

“Drink” he ordered breaking the top and bringing the sharp edge to Superman’s lips.

At first, there was wariness in the alien’s eyes and Batman snorted.

“If I wanted to kill you, Clark, I’d prefer to cut your throat.”

“Thank you very much” he chuckled.

“Can you hurry on, kids?” Tony commented.

“Right...” Superman said drinking greedily and feeling instantly his body revitalizing. “What is this?”

Batman twisted his lips; he didn’t believe in the effectiveness of this but he had no choice.

“Water of Immortality and...my tears: Ra’s believes that they have some healing qualities...”

“They do!” Superman looked awestruck at his feet that floated over the floor despite the Kryptonite cage.

Of course the Kryptonite thwarted his full recovery.

“You’ll restore your full powers when you’re out of here” Batman spat lifting Tony. “I’m sorry, Tony” he said to him. “The bullet can be easily dissolved and you’ll recover.”

The billionaire shook his head.

“That’s good news, buddy” he stared at Bruce’s eyes. “I’m glad you’re back.”

“Father?”

The two prisoners stared at the raven haired boy who indeed was very similar to Bruce; they looked at Bruce who was looking at the boy biting his lip so hard that it bled.
“What are you doing, father? They made you betray us again? I thought you loved me...” the boy’s voice was arrogant and strong but those last words contained real sadness and hurt.

Bruce shook his head.

“Dick, these men are innocent: they fight the evil and they are my friends...We must help them leave and go with them: the League of Shadows is evil.”

The boy shook his head.

“Not again! They cast some spell on you...”

Batman dragged Tony out of the cage, Superman helping casting curious glances at the boy who enraged rushed to his father.

“You can’t let them slip again! They are sorcerers! They ruined you, father!”

“You know it’s not true...Come with me, Dick...”

“No, if you love me; if you’re my father you’ll stay here with me.”

Batman pressed his lips.

Claps echoed through the huge cave. Bruce didn’t need to see him to know that Ra’s was there...And the sound of hundred firearms loading and swords being drown roared.

“Now, Dick, you know your father loves you and won’t abandon you for the sake of those strangers; especially, since his betrayal will mean the death of everyone” he gestured to hundreds of ninjas that swarmed the rocks of the cave. “Now, Batman: I understand that you fooled these idiots feeding them false hopes – you’re loyal to me and I don’t want to kill you on a false first impression. So cut Superman’s throat and we forget everything. You wouldn’t want all these guns firing with Dick being in the middle unshielded...” he smirked and the boy’s eyes widened; Ra’s, his father couldn’t honestly mean that but his hand was raised ready to give the signal.

Batman looked around him and then at the child in front of him, exposed to those firearms; moreover he knew that his current armor wasn’t so resilient to bullets. He ejected the Knife from the forearm holster and grabbed determined the hilt.

“I’ll do it, Ra’s: I don’t know what happened to me...There’s no need to fire.”

“Kill the alien and no bullet will leave the barrel.”

Bruce nodded and pushed Superman to his knees; thankfully, Clark knew better than resist but followed Bruce’s lead, trust sparkling in his eyes.

“When the Kryptonite quenches, grab Tony and leave...” Bruce whispered without moving his lips so low that only Superman could hear.

“No...” he whispered.

“Do as I say, alien!” he growled for everyone to hear and touched the blade to Superman’s carotid.

Ra’s smile became broader. But then Bruce pressed something in his palm and the Kryptonite bars stopped glowing and Superman fully revitalized grabbed Tony.

“Fire!” Ra’s roared and the bangs of hundred firearms deafened them.
Batman surged at Dick and covered him with his body feeling the pain of the bullets crashing his armor and piercing his flesh.

“Father…” the boy cried feeling Bruce’s blood splattering him.

“It’s alright” he shoved the boy towards Superman covering him with his body “go with Superman – I’ll be fine.”

Superman held with one hand Tony and with the other took the boy who however stretched his hand catching his father’s hand.

“I’m not leaving without you!” Dick was strong and Superman’s recovering state didn’t permit him to overcome the boy’s stubbornness.

Besides, he also didn’t want to leave Bruce injured.

And then the cave began trembling, the surface cracked and from the middle a wide column of fire sprung. A giant of 50 feet height with black thick horns and eyes red like rubies stood shooting fire to the ninjas who yelled panicked. Ra’s stared at him amazed.

“Bagdna! You came for Bruce…” he roared in laughter.

But the creature opened his mouth and washed him with fire and Ra’s cackled even as he was dying; the demon’s body took the form Bruce knew so well and walked to him.

“Come with me, it is the only way to save your life” he offered his hand but Bruce though in horrible pain kept holding Dick’s hand and crawling to them.

But then the cave began dissolving; the floor turning into a whirlpool as Bagdana pulled him down with him at the earth’s guts.

“I won’t allow you to die!” the demon roared with real despair.

Bruce held his son’s hand and Superman clenched his jaw trying to overcome the demon’s power and save both. But Bruce knew that they couldn’t save him and the demon was pulling all of them because Bruce held his son’s hand.

“Don’t let go, father! Please…” the boy’s eyes were teary.

Bruce smiled.

“It’s alright, Dick…” he let the boy’s hand and he was dragged in the whirlpool as everything turned into darkness and tornado and he couldn’t breathe anymore as the frantic beating of his heart filled everything..

Bruce didn’t open his eyes but he snapped wake, his body still rigid from the nightmare. But he was calm: a possible flashback of Ra's taking samples from him (some flashes of images crossed his mind but he wasn't sure) and a nightmare. Dick taking the place of his supposed son – his son in the first nightmare was different than in this one. And then the way he hurt his friends, almost killing them… his subconscious was trying to reaffirm Bruce’s excuses for Clark’s betrayal: Bruce would have done worse things than Superman if someone brainwashed him…

He bit his lip: but even in the dream Bruce recovered and saw the truth just from a kiss while Clark…He shook his head disapproving: it was stupid to think so much of a dream. And Bagdana?
Bruce sighed and suddenly realized that someone was in the room.
Chapter 43

Bruce knew that the presence in his bedroom wasn’t hostile and as if for confirmation two affectionate hands cupped his face.

“Calm down, buddy…it’s only a nightmare” Tony’s low voice told him gently.

“I know, Tony, I know…And you’re alright.”

Tony understood that Bruce’s nightmare had to do with something horrible happening to him and lit the lamp at the nightstand; Bruce discerned in his friend’s face upset and worry – maybe a little anger as well. He looked at the rectangular, wooden watch on the nightstand that read 5 o’clock and made to support himself to the elbows to rise but Tony put him softly back on the mattress.

Bruce looked him in the eyes.

“I have to take Dick to school.”

Tony shook his head.

“The boy hates you; what’s the point of playing the father?” he commented dryly and Bruce frowned for his friend’s bad temper.

“I’m not playing the father, Tony; I just want to be true to what I promised to Dick’s grandmother.”

Tony nodded several times with cocked eyebrows.

“You need more sleep and rest, Bruce” he remarked. “Alfred can take the boy to school.”

“I woke up and I can’t sleep anymore. But you…why are you awake so early?” the older man wore still his pajamas with the robe untied falling around him.

Tony crooked his mouth and then pursed his lips.

“You said that I’m alright…I should be asking you that” Tony was tired of rounding the subject so got to the point. “Bruce, you promised to not do it again.”

Bruce turned his gaze away and huffed: Tony figured that he went out.

“I promised I wouldn’t do it often and I mean that, Tony” Tony crossed his arms and looked grimly at him. “Okay, what do you want me to say? That I’m sorry? Okay, I’m sorry for making you worry but Batman had to get out.”

Tony snapped his eyes closed and rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“The same thing again and again…”

“Jim lit the signal: he was calling Batman – I couldn’t ignore him again! He’d suspect that something is off though I think he already suspects that.”

“Fine. Maybe he should know the truth: that you can’t offer your physical presence for the time being” he saw Bruce’s eyes bulging and snorted. “Maybe you should tell Jim who are you: you trust him, right?” that way, Tony hoped that Jim would stop summoning Batman and Bruce finally would focus on his recovery.
Yet Bruce felt a storm inside only hearing that.

“No way! Nobody should know who Batman really is. And Batman can’t be sick or disabled.”

Tony’s eyes exploded.

“Why do you want to kill yourself?! Is because of that fucking alien?! Why don’t you understand? Your body is too sensitive: you can’t afford to fly or jump from roof to roof or fight with thugs…”

Bruce jolted his torso upright.

“I didn’t fight anyone, Tony! I just went to meet Jim and speak to him: just that – I didn’t exert myself.”

Tony ruffled his messy hair with both hands.

“And what has Superman to do with this?” Bruce asked stilling his eyes in Tony’s.

Tony brushed his friend’s hair.

“Your outings began simultaneously with his cheating” he said focusing his stare to Bruce’s eyes.

Bruce shook his head and looked at his hands.

“I have to show myself – the real Batman and not a hologram – from time to time” he pressed his lips. “And tonight I couldn’t sleep and I saw that the signal was on and…I had to speak with Jim. He needs me.”

Tony pouted.

“Maybe if you have taken the sedatives Leslie gave you, you’d manage to sleep.”

Bruce chuckled.

“For pity’s sake, Tony! Have you seen how many drugs I’m taking?” his voice was steady and cool yet Tony could discern some fatigued and frustration.

The older man nodded.

“I know, buddy” he patted him on the back. “But they’re necessary for you to stay healthy and regain your strength for the operation. For that you must put Batman in second place for a while: until you walk again.”

Bruce’s eyes got wild.

“No way! Tony, you’re not serious asking that! Fine, I’m fully aware that I cannot be a perfectly operational Batman but I can’t ignore completely Gotham’s needs” he lowered his voice and fixed his eyes on Tony’s stoic eyes. “You were half dead when you forged Ironman and confronted the League of Shadows” thankfully, the Manor was soundproof so nobody could listen to their conversation.

Tony closed his eyes.

“To save my life, buddy…”

Bruce stayed with his mouth slightly agape for a second.
“Yes, but I’m sure that you wouldn’t stay indifferent if Malibu or the planet was in danger” Tony pressed his lips and shook his head exasperated; Bruce rose a bit to get his face closer to Tony’s. “Joker killed another innocent man, Tony” the older man sighed “he sees it as a game with Batman: what do you want me to do?”

“Chasing that lunatic from rooftop to rooftop while your body is ready to completely shatter in the slightest” he stopped registering Bruce biting his lip “isn’t the solution.”

Bruce let his body touch the mattress: the truth was that he felt pangs all over his back but he didn’t want Tony to figure and get another weapon.

“Tony, I know how to protect myself” he said hoarsely “for eighteen year I took care of myself alone: I didn’t have anyone of you to treat me. And I survived despite the fact that I had to face worse hardships without all of you offering nurture. I don’t intend on chasing Joker over Gotham’s rooftops; however at least I can be there when Jim needs my help.”

Tony crossed his arms and regarded him chewing his mouth.

“This is sly, little guy” Bruce narrowed his eyes. “I can be there when Jim needs me? That’s very abstract, buddy: that help can be anything.”

Bruce turned his head on the other side and Tony touched his hair.

“You never talked to me about those years, Bruce” he said softly.

Bruce didn’t look at him.

“I did. Twice.”

“Only because I was there when you had a flashback. You can speak to me, Bruce; I can listen.”

Bruce frowned; he was tired of these years coming to the fore again and again. It was more than enough that he relived them through flashbacks.

“What this has to do with anything, Tony?” he asked tired and slightly irritated.

“I think that the cause of all these lies there: what Falcone and the others did to you made you despise yourself resulting in taking crazy risks.”

Bruce chuckled and turned his gaze to Tony.

“You added psychology to your other specialties?”

“Bruce…”

Bruce stretched his head.

“If I hated myself I wouldn’t have made Batman to defeat Falcone and free myself. If I didn’t care about myself, as you imply, I would have simply stopped fighting and killed myself when Falcone and Chill made death seem better than life” his voice became that emotionless monotone Tony hated and was afraid of. “It’d be so much easier than enduring all these…”

Tony shook his head.

“You didn’t do all these only for yourself: I think your primary concern was to get justice for your parents and save the people of Gotham” Bruce closed his eyes. “Regaining your fortune and your life was a happy coincidence. And now that that fucking alien betrayed you, your distaste for yourself came back leading your to deeds more reckless.”

Bruce huffed exasperated.

“Don’t…don’t bring Superman into this; he has nothing to do with that! Tony, for pity’s sake, I just went out to speak with Jim” his eyes focused on Tony’s. “I want to walk again as much as all of you and I’m going to focus on my recovery but I just cannot be indifferent.”

Tony sighed and nodded.

“Let’s believe it…Are you in pain?” his voice became warmer in concern. “You used the damned armor twice in two days: that must have exhausted you.”

“I’m fine, Tony: you and Lucius made a brilliant job.”

Yet Tony pursed his lips and frowned.

“Don’t remind me that because I’m on the verge of surging to your cave and destroy the fucking thing…I feel horrible: it’s my fault – I shouldn’t have listened to you or Lucius…” he shook his head. “After all, I knew you!” he widened his eyes cocking his eyebrows.

“Nothing happened, Tony…I’m fine. I use your armor with prudence.”

Tony snorted mumbling “yeah, sure…” and then he pressed his lips thoughtful and breathed.

“Then why you cancelled your training sessions with Matt?” he asked calmly but Bruce felt like suffocating: Matt told everything to Tony.

Tony nodded because he could understand what his friend was thinking: he would have thought the same in his place.

“I didn’t speak with him but I caught a glimpse of him in New York at the time you should be having your session.”

Bruce’s mind was racing.

“There can be other reasons than what you fear…”

Tony leaned closer.

“You really want to lie to me and force Matt to lie in order to cover his patient?”

Bruce widened his eyes affronted.

“Of course not! And yes I called him to cancel our sessions but this” he didn’t want to lie to Tony yet if he learnt that Superman hurt him then nothing could stop him from killing Superman “has nothing to do with my body…I just didn’t have the mood for training; I wanted some days to calm down.”

Tony pursed his lips.

“Okay, little guy, okay but I want you to open up to me; do not hesitate to speak to your Tony…” he grinned and his eyes filled with affection. “Like the days we were kids…I know that lately I’m occupied with other things and maybe…” he ruffled his hair “not maybe…I did neglect you” Bruce shook his head denying that.
“You didn’t, Tony…”

But his friend nodded.

“I’m not spending the time I want with you” he raised his index finger “but I’m still your Tony, remember? You used to tell me everything then and I…” Bruce smiled “I always found a solution” he lolled his head on the side and rolled his eyes “even if that solution most times ended up with us punished…” he chuckled and Bruce did the same. “I love you, kiddo” he took Bruce’s hand and squeezed it. “You can’t do that to me, buddy…” his voice was hoarse “you can’t d…” he couldn’t finish the word and lowered his head.

Bruce supported his torso to the elbow and chased his friend’s eyes; Tony met his gaze.

“I’m not going to die, Tony” Bruce said what Tony couldn’t. “I don’t want to lose you again either.”

Tony hugged him and patted his back.

“I hate this fucking alien for the pain he caused you…”

Bruce’s eyes fixed on the wall.

“You suffer more than me, Tony, believing that I’m hurt. But I’m not: this wasn’t going to last: I knew and I was prepared… He couldn’t continue that even if he wanted.”

Tony clutched his shoulders and looked at him frowned.

“Stop defending him. You’re the most precious being on Earth and only his foul character made him cheat you.”

Bruce shook his head and smiled.

“I’m your friend that you considered dead for eighteen years and found again…so you give me too much value. But the truth is that it’s not easy even for a super powered being to be with someone like me. And do not forget that there’s an effect tampering with him.”

Tony shook his head nodding with disbelief.

“Speaking of which, now that the scumbag did what he did you can give me his wheelchair to make some digging…”

Bruce saw the wicked shine in Tony’s eyes.

“To find secrets of the alien technology, huh?”

Tony raised his hands in surrender.

“You read me like an open book, little guy. However, you can’t deny that with that effect controlling the alien we should have some contingency” he cocked his eyebrows “you love contingencies.”

Bruce smiled.

“I won’t break the trust he saw me” Tony rolled his eyes and huffed exasperated. “Besides the wheelchair is not in my possession anymore” his hand unconsciously clenched the small, velvet pouch that hanged from his neck over his chest.
Superman stared at his Smartphone on the cheap wooden waist table in Clark Kent’s apartment. He had left Diana’s apartment an hour ago saying that he had to attend a very important meeting: he didn’t want to leave her side yet he had a job to maintain; though being Clark Kent had begun to be very boring and tiring to him. However something from inside pushed him to continue being his human persona even if this was completely uninteresting.

He was still dressed as Superman; lately, it was too difficult to part with his powerful self and live like a common human being. Plus, being Clark Kent had so many other complications and that weathered, cheap Smartphone was one of them…not the gadget itself.

Upon returning to his apartment the phone was ringing but he didn’t make an effort to get it: actually, he preferred to miss that call. And his premonition proved right when he looked at the screen: his Ma – so many missed calls that the gadget stopped counting…

He didn’t call her back: he knew what she wanted. His Ma was an avid viewer of the news and several talk shows, so she definitely had seen the video and Superman had no mood to be scolded. It could wait. This annoyed him: he was happy and all the people around him didn’t let him enjoy that; okay, that was to be expected from Bruce’s friends but from his loved ones too? That was unfair! They should be happy with his happiness.

The first light of the day reached his small living room from the drills. In one or two hours he had to go to work and there he’d have Lois’ berating…Give me a break! Like Diana said, he was Superman: to the Hell with the others’ opinion.

Suddenly, he heard footsteps approaching his apartment’s door and hastily changed his attire into Clark Kent’s: his guest dragged along something and from what his vision could say was a wooden box and the man was a delivery man of some company he didn’t know.

He waited for the doorbell and then he opened.

“Good morning. Are you Mr. Clark Kent?”

He mumbled his affirmation.

“I have a package for you” the man gave him a pen to sign to a pile of papers.

“From whom?” Clark asked perplexed and the man shrugged.

“We don’t ask names…” he replied flatly and left leaving the box in front of Clark.

Clark cocked his eyebrows on this and carried the box inside closing the door behind him. He looked at the package: nothing odd there; homemade wrapping. He rubbed his chin thoughtful.

We don’t ask names… Nor you disclose them…

Who could be the sender? He could suspect anything: even a kilo of Kryptonite if Stark was the one who sent it. Yet if he wanted to kill him he’d have done so in Diana’s apartment. As for Luthor – another… ‘fan’ of his – he didn’t know his secret identity so no danger from there.

To the heck…He began unwrapping the box only to find a padlock with a receptor that obviously was for retina recognition. Clark’s eyes widened impressed; the one who sent it knew his job. And he could think only one who knew his retina and had the know-how to do that.

He pressed his lips: everyone tried to poison his happiness… For an instance he thought to not open the box but then he changed his mind and put his eye to the receptor hoping that it wouldn’t pop something to injure his eye.

The padlock made a clack and the lid moved slightly so Clark lifted it. He squatted and began pulling out the items: his clothes that he had taken to the Manor when he was with Bruce: well, that was to be expected.

Under the clothes, folded in its minimum size of a medium cube was the wheelchair he had created for Bruce. He pressed his lips and for some seconds his mind dag and brought to the fore memories from the Fortress; however he crossed them out determined before they formed. Now Clark got why Bruce used the retina recognition system for the box’s security: he couldn’t risk someone opening it and seeing the alien object. Bruce still protected him and his secrets.

He took out the cube and placed it in the floor. Then there was a small, plain square box made of wood.

Clark narrowed his eyes. Bruce sent him Kryptonite? He shook his head snorting: no, not Bruce; besides he’d have felt it immediately since the box was wooden and the content wasn’t Kryptonite.

He took the box and opened the lid; he sighed: it was a metallic frame – round shaped and plain, black platinum from an unknown yet vein in Siberia.

He collapsed to the floor and squeezed the jewel in his palm closing his eyes. He saw again Bruce’s naked chest; broad, soft, toned with a shining charm touching his skin: a big black diamond sparkling inside its black, sleek nest of the platinum frame.

“Damn, Bruce! You should have kept it! It was a gift…” he sighed and then licked his lips and saw inside the box.

The last thing was a folded white, silken handkerchief. Curious he unfolded the fabric and his heart hurt as if a punch was delivered right to the pulsing muscle. A pressed flower like those that people collect putting them in books.

Clark recognized that flower: it was the rose Clark had brought to Bruce from Japan that morning after he had spoken badly to him. Clark wanted to make amends with him and reassured that he still loved him; that nothing had changed because of Diana.

Clark lowered his eyes: he was pretending to Bruce and to himself…No, no, no…he didn’t pretend: he tried to fight that attraction, that passion but in the end it was beyond his powers. Because it was real and his feelings for Bruce proved to be false. Staying with Bruce and desiring Diana would be worse; continuing this would be an insult to Bruce who had realized before he did…

He smiled and brought the almost dried flower to his nose: it had Bruce’s perfume… The human had put Clark’s present into a book to keep it for years; for all his life maybe…For Bruce that flower was very important and more important was Clark’s gesture, Clark’s love…

And now that Clark showed that this love didn’t exist anymore, Bruce sent him back the rose…

He inhaled deeply and stood careful to not clench his fist and squash the flower; he went to the wall shelf and took his favorite book, opened it and stashed the rose inside. He didn’t want this to be lost; he felt as if in its dried petals lay Bruce’s heart: the heart he broke.

He blinked and shook his head to shake off the depressing feeling. It was better this way: Bruce never actually believed in this. Bruce was a lonely man. They didn’t match; they were different – Superman was meant to be with Diana, otherwise he wouldn’t have left Bruce. His feelings would have endured if Bruce was the one…but he wasn’t.
He looked at the cheap, table clock: he had to leave for the office. He’d take the wheelchair back to the Fortress after work.

Entering the foyer of Planet’s building, it struck him immediately. His eyes warmed: the foyer had been decorated in Christmas’ spirit, a huge Christmas tree at the center, covered in red big glimmering balls and white tiny lights between the branches.

Clark always loved Christmas and every year he looked forward for the time he would decorate the tree and the house with his Ma – even in his tiny apartment he always had a Christmas tree: his heart was clenched in the memory of his Ma. She was expecting Bruce for Christmas…Damn! She was very fond of Bruce and Clark was wrong to take him to her. Bruce had warned him…Bruce knew about his cheating before Clark even admitted his own desire to himself.

Under the tree were placed many square shaped boxes wrapped in multicolored glimmering paper. He pressed his lips: one month ago he was planning the Christmas he’d spend with Bruce…He shook his head: Bruce had his people; he wouldn’t miss him and Clark definitely wouldn’t miss him because he had found his true mate and now he was exciting for his first Christmas with Diana.

As the lift halted on his floor he had braced himself for Lois’ scolding but one second before the door opened he heard screams from afar: a bus was ready to fall from the bridge. He pressed instantly the button to the roof. He stepped out already having scanned the area and realizing that nobody was there. Superman took off heading to the bridge.

Lois was writing her new article without any mood; she was pissed, angry, disappointed, disgusted. The scenes from that video with the Princess on the rooftop kept coming to her mind though she chased them away every time. Damn you, Clark!

Suddenly, she heard some ruckus as her colleagues gathered around one of the desks. She really didn’t care yet she was curious so she stood and walked slowly there; Perry almost toppled her as he stormed to the same place.

A school bus was hanging from the main bridge and the poor kids yelled frightened: Ron was there with his cameraman for covering today’s general strike but realizing what was happening rushed there. Police had stopped the traffic from and to the bridge and the fire brigade tried to pull the buss yet it was impossible to approach because the vehicle howled threatening and shook with the slightest wind.

People had gathered behind the police’s line and watched with terror in their faces.

“Superman is the only one who can save the kids…” Jimmy mumbled.

Lois cocked an eyebrow in sarcasm.

“Better put your faith in another hero because he must be very busy with his girlfriend” she spat and her colleagues laughed.

“If we judge from that video…”

Perry coughed.

“Good thing Ron was there for covering the strike” he looked at the exasperated glances his employees cast him. “People deserve to be informed: of course I care for that.”
Lois snorted but then her eyes widened in terror as the bus gently detached from the bridge and began falling to the sea; the children’s yells and the crowd’s that watched unable to do anything blend in one. She noticed that several of her colleagues closed their eyes.

“Look!” she screamed and soon the enthusiastic yells of the kids and the gathered crowd revealed what had happened.

Superman was under the bus and with his arms wide held the vehicle from falling, his perfect muscles bulging under the thin fabric; he lifted the bus above the railing to put it gently down on the asphalt that was empty due to the police’s evacuation.

The crowd was whistling and clapping.

“At least he didn’t forget to wear any of his clothes…” someone at Lois’ right remarked snidely, “Yeah, but he wore his red briefs out…” Clair Davis added and the reporters burst in laughter now that the agony and terror for the kids had vanished.

Back to the wide PC screen, Superman gave a pressed lips smile to the crowd and left the scene.

“Wonder Woman is expecting him with spread legs…” Tim remarked.

“To your works!” Perry ordered. “Where’s that Kent?” he snapped retreating to his office.

Lois sat to her desk chewing her pencil when the humming sound of the lift first and then of the doors opening told her that Clark was there; she knew his secret so seeing Superman leaving the bridge she knew that in a few seconds Clark would make his appearance in the office. Unlike the other mornings she didn’t have the mood to speak to him – not even call him names. He didn’t deserve even that. So she leaned to her screen and began typing.

Clark cast a glance to Lois’ desk only to be met with her back: his friend didn’t even turn to acknowledge. Maybe that was for the best Clark thought and shrugged walking to his desk.

“Kent!” Perry rushed out of his office and Clark bit his lip ready for some reprimanding as his boss stormed at him with pressed lips and clenched jaw.

Lois still didn’t look at him.

“Mr. White, I’m so…so sorry… let me explain…” he mumbled.

But Perry’s face cracked in a big, radiant smile.

“In another case, I’d give you Hell because you’ve taken it too far…” he huffed “anyway, congratulations, Kent!”

Clark frowned and looked stupidly at him not understanding.

“Wh…”

Perry patted his back.

“The Planet got its second Pulitzer! Your name has been announced.”

The pen fell from Clark’s hand and his eyes widened; Perry offered him his hand for a shake but seeing that his employee was too stunned to register that grabbed Clark’s hand and shook it.
“Good job, kid! Continue like this…” he patted his back again and returned to his office rolling his eyes. “That Kent…” he murmured “how he managed the Pulitzer is out of my grasp…”

Clark hadn’t come over from the shock when the hoard of his colleagues surged his desk congratulating him, shaking his hand and even kissing him, like that cute blond newbie, Sara.

Only Lois didn’t move from her desk and that created some murmurs between the people of the office: Clark could hear everything. Some were discussing that she must be jealous because Kent who was always in her shadow managed to take the prize only she had till then.

Yet Clark knew that it wasn’t that… He glanced at her direction in hopes of catching her eye – to no avail, she was absorbed in her PC screen; however, Clark could discern from her vitals that she was pissed and sad at the same time. He closed his eyes and returned to his own screen something nudging him to surf the internet to read the comments for that dreadful video. However he resisted the urge.

At first, Clark was relieved that Lois didn’t even glance at him because he didn’t want to argue with her. Yet as the hours dragged to noon this situation tired him. He wanted to speak with his friend even if she berated him. He began staring at her hoping that she would look back – Lois had a terrific ability to sense other people’s stares. But she continued ignoring him and Clark sighed. He didn’t want to walk to her desk and speak with her because people would listen so he waited.

Lois stretched her body and stood marching towards the lift without turning her head in the slightest towards Clark’s direction: Clark was sure that in the end her neck would get stiff.

He followed her keeping a distance at time having his super hearing tuned with her vitals. She went to Ms. Rose’s bakery for some brunch. He caught her when she was paying her order and as she turned to leave they came face to face; Lois’ face distorted in anger and contempt.

Ms. Rose however smiled broadly to Clark and gave him a paper bag filled with delicacies.

“What’s this, Ms. Roses?” he asked watching Lois snapping away from him and marching out of the little store.

“I just took them out of the oven: it’s the Prince’s donuts” Lois stopped abruptly hearing that. “I know that someone important is very fond of them…” she chuckled and patted Clark’s upper arm.

Lois murmured something and rushed outside while Clark blushed; he couldn’t say to her that they broke up so he hastened to pay in order to catch up with Lois. But Ms. Rose touched his hand smiling.

“No, dear: it is a gift… Enjoy them!”

Clark nodded uncomfortable and gave a pressed grin, mumbled a ‘thanks’ and rushed behind Lois catching up with her in front of the Planet’s building.

“Please, Lois, wait” he said to her and the woman stopped tilting her head on the side clearly frustrated.

“What do you want?” she spat without turning to look at him.

Clark walked in front of her and met her enraged eyes.

“Can we speak?” he said calmly. “I’m your friend, remember?”
Lois moved her foot nervously.

“No, you can’t be my friend Clark Kent; he wouldn’t ever do what you did!” she made to pass him but Clark held her upper arms.

“Lois, I didn’t want to be like this…” he looked around and gestured to her to follow him to the alley next to the building.

She knitted her eyebrows.

“What exactly you didn’t want to be like this? Did you expect to cheat and dump him without breaking his heart? That was horrible of you Clark Kent! Hideous! Gross!”

Clark shook his head.

“I didn’t dump him; it was his decision, Lois.”

Lois rolled her eyes.

“Bruce gets more points in my appreciation! That’s my boy! What? You thought that after you cheated him he’d keep you?” she snorted. “Oh! You’re more rotten than I thought! Did you think that you could have both Bruce and the bitch?”

Clark closed his eyes.

“Don’t speak like this for Diana…”

Lois cocked her eyebrows and looked at him challenging.

“All my life I learnt to tell always the truth; things with their name! Till recently I believed that you were doing the same thing but it seems that your dick destroyed your morals!”

Clark huffed.

“It’s not like that, Lois! I just fell in love with a great woman…It seems…I was wrong about my feelings for Bruce.”

Lois’ eyes flashed and she growled.

“You’re preposterous! A scum! You’re a complete asshole! Few months ago you were melting for Bruce’s love and whined about his refusal to open up to you; you were complaining because he thought that your feelings weren’t true and when he accepted your love you betrayed him with the first chance! Do you realize what you have done to him? He isn’t going to open his heart to anyone again!”

Well, something dark inside Clark told him that this wasn’t that bad…But he saw Lois narrowing her eyes as if she had read his thoughts.

“You like that, don’t you? You enjoy the hurt you caused, you miserable scum! You like the idea of Bruce not finding the happiness with anyone else! Selfish bastard!”

“I don’t! I want Bruce to become happy again; the proof is that I didn’t want to break up with him.”

Lois’ eyes bulged and almost choked in her saliva.

“Clark, you are ridiculous, you get that? What decent person would accept that?” she tilted her head.
“Did you have polygamy in Krypton?”

Clark frowned.

“I… I don’t know.”

“Then you simply are an egotistical pig!” she shook her head appalled and looked at the paper bag with the donuts that Clark held completely mechanic. “They are his favorite donuts, huh? You were bringing him these…”

Clark lowered his eyes on the bag and saw again Bruce eating donuts thrilled like a child; the morning after that night in the greenhouse. His heart filled with light but he erased the images.

“How could you do this to him at his condition?” Lois continued. “He is still recovering; he is confined in a chair, for fuck’s sake! What kind of a man does that?”

“Bruce wouldn’t want me to stay with him from pity…”

Lois’ lips trembled from anger.

“You disgust me!” she turned to leave but looked him again. “Don’t you ever speak to me because I’ll go to Luthor and ask him a chunk of Kryptonite to smash your stupid face! Ah! Luthor got out of jail, did you learn that? I guess you were too busy fucking on rooftops… I bet he plans to make Bruce’s life a hell and now that Superman doesn’t give a shit about him…”

“I care about him, Lois!” but his eidetic memory filled his mind with scenes of the way he used Bruce before he met Diana. “’Mon, Lois: we’re best friends! I want to celebrate with you that Pulitzer.”

“Fuck off, asshole!” she turned on her heels and stormed to the alley’s exit. “Ms. Kent is looking for you from yesterday; she called me to ask about you… you became so coward to avoid speaking to your mother now?” she hissed without turning to look at him.

Clark closed his eyes and breathed calmly: no, he wouldn’t let anything and anyone spoil his new happiness: and he was awarded with a Pulitzer, for Heaven’s sake! And his best friend didn’t even congratulate him… Lois would speak to him again: she was his friend for years. Their friendship wasn’t going to get ruined for Bruce’s sake.

Bruce lay upon the workout chair lifting weights, inhaling and exhaling in calm pace. He took care to wear something long sleeved to cover every possible mark; the marks on his wrists from the energy casts were quite evident. He had cancelled another session with Matt because the damn marks didn’t relent yet he needed some workout to keep his muscles in vigilance and distract his mind. He was careful of course.

He heard footsteps approaching and thought of Alfred.

“I’m glad to see you’re well enough to workout, Bruce.”

Bruce knew how to keep his calmness otherwise the weights would have slipped from his hands. He returned them to their sockets and Matt helped him with that and then to sit.

“Hi, Matt… I thought I told you…”
Matt dragged a stool and sat.

“Absolutely. But I still can come as a friend to see you, right?”

Thankfully, he was red from the effort otherwise Matt would have seen him blushing for being caught on act.

“Definitely…”

Matt placed his hand on his sweaty back.

“I saw that video, Bruce…I’m sorry and I understand how you must feel... But for me it was expectable the way he was treating you…It’s better he is away from you: he hurt you once he could do it again.”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded.

“I never wanted to keep him against his true desires…”

Matt cleared his throat.

“I was wondering…you called off our sessions because you are not in the mood or because he left some marks on you that you didn’t want me to see?”

Bruce’s eyes widened for his physiotherapist’s blatant honesty.

“Matt, don’t…”

Matt took a big fluffy towel and wrapped Bruce because he was all sweaty.

“You knew that if I saw marks I’d have told Tony.”

“There are no marks” Bruce spat his resolution icy and sharp. “He didn’t do anything.”

Matt crooked his mouth.

“But if he did, Bruce, Leslie must examine you: we’re talking about Superman. One of his blows can damage permanently a man in perfect health and you are recovering” he lifted his eyebrows “your body is very sensitive.”

Bruce rubbed his forehead.

“I’m not hurt.”

“Let me see then – I know your stubbornness, your bravery, your sacrificing intention to protect him but let me see in order to help heal any damage. Remember the last time when he caused cramps to your thighs?”

Bruce’s eyes stabbed the physiotherapist.

“I’m fine, Matt” he replied coldly. “There’s no way I’ll let you or anyone else see me: if you want to show me some exercises and eat lunch with us, you’re welcome but I don’t want any discussion about Superman or...hints that he might have hurt me. I’m perfectly fine” he snapped with his eyes completely still and flashing but after a few seconds taking in Matt’s puzzlement blinked. “Thank you for your concern… I appreciate it.”
Matt nodded: after all, it was better than nothing being able to observe his patient’s condition while working out. He would be able to discern the signs of something ominous while he hoped that there wasn’t anything. How much more could Superman fall from grace? He cheated Bruce...beating him as well would be villainous.

Superman positioned the wheelchair on the floor, at the base of the cylindrical blue crystal pillar which hosted Jor El’s hologram. Jor El lifted his eyebrows.

“I’m here to serve you, Kal El but if you ask me to remove the energy casts from Bruce’s body I’ll disobey you.”

Superman frowned and tilted his head: what was that?

“Removing the energy casts? What are you saying, Jor El? How this came to your mind?”

Jor El clenched his jaw and yanked his head proud.

“You brought back Bruce’s wheelchair.”

Superman shook his head.

“I didn’t take it from him...He...he sent it back to me.”

Jor El nodded slowly, his eyes blank. Superman closed his eyes and rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“You saw the video?”

Jor El stabbed him with his solemn wise eyes.

“Though I indeed saw the video there was something worse, Kal El.”

“What?” he asked frowning.

“You know that the items of the Fortress sent reports here...The energy casts in Bruce’s body too” he locked eyes with his son who understood. “You used the energy casts to bind Bruce’s hands and you put his body through a horrible ordeal: I never expected that shame from you, Kal El.”

Superman clenched his jaw and pursed his lips.

“Don’t speak to me like that, Jor El!” he growled. “You don’t know the facts” Jor El watched him solemnly and a bit ironic. “Bruce is used to be treated like that during sex: he was grown up like that and this is the way for him to get the maximum pleasure.”

Jor El lifted an eyebrow in complete disbelief.

“Really? Is that so?” his voice was heavy with irony and disapproval. “Even if I do the concession to believe that only to not add the word ‘liar’ to my disappointment list, still this isn’t an excuse, Kal El. Bruce’s body is in a very fragile condition: weren’t the energy casts you’d have caused permanent and irrevocable damage to him” he said sternly but for Superman what counted was that his father’s hologram, the last remnant of his parent was speaking so ill of him.

“He cheated me, Jor El! I lost control!” he was lying again, Clark realized and lowered his eyes. “I was convinced he had cheated me...”
“And then you cheated Bruce in real…” he said simply yet Superman could discern the accusation.
“I don’t regret it, Jor El and you should be happy for your son for finding happiness.”
“You were happy with Bruce. Remember the night you brought here his dead body?”
“Almost dead…” Superman’s voice was hoarse.
“If he was left to the humans’ treatment he’d be dead. Your life depended on Bruce’s survival.”
Clark bit his lips.
“I was wrong: I mistook mercy and sympathy for love. It wasn’t true love: Diana is the one for me.”
Jor El looked him in disbelief.
“In Krypton, people mated once for their entire life.”
Superman clenched his waist with both hands and yanked his head.
“Once they found their true soul mate! And Bruce wasn’t that! Ra’s Al Ghul had mutated him into a body that would be impossible for me to resist: my attraction to him, my feelings was the products of the brews Al Ghul used.”
“But you were inoculated and the tests here showed that you were immune to this effect.”
“We’re wrong! It was too soon and Bruce knew that but didn’t do anything to prevent it.”
“So it was Bruce’s fault?” Jor El asked with cocked eyebrows.
“He attacked me when I went to see him yesterday. In his eyes I saw that he could kill me.”
“I highly doubt that. But for the attack I don’t blame him: you left him really battered” Superman turned his back to the hologram.
“Why are you trying to poison my happiness? Why even you, my real father don’t understand me?”
“Because I doubt it is real happiness: you’ve changed, Kal El – to the worse” Superman tilted his head slightly to the hologram’s direction, his anger distinguishable in the shadows of his eye. “You never came again for your tests…”
“Because I don’t need them: all was Bruce’s scheme to make me feel ill and resist my true feelings for Diana. Yourself said that there was nothing wrong with me.”
“I wanted to make thorough examination but you didn’t come again. Maybe we should do it now.” Superman clenched his jaw and turned to the hologram, his eyes glimmering.
“No!” he snarled. “Nobody is going to ruin my happiness with these nonsense!” the Fortress’ roof opened and he smirked to Jor El. “I know you would like to imprison me here and take millions of exams just to keep me away from her but unfortunately for you the Fortress has only one Master to obey…”
He took off with his fist ripping the air while Jor El didn’t make the motion to watch him; he just pursed his lips.
“I hope you’re right, son and we wrong…”

Tony was pacing nervously before the whole wall window with the spectacular view of New York’s skyline; he waited at the conference room of the Avengers’ Tower huffing at from time to time. Then the door opened and Thor entered.

“Good afternoon, Tony. You called me but I didn’t hear anything about emergencies or something important happening.”

Tony’s face was serious and his eyes sparkled.

“For me Bruce is the most important thing on Earth.”

Thor stiffened hearing the name and nodded.

“Of course.”

“Have a seat” the billionaire gestured to the leather chairs of the meeting table and Thor sat.

“You were in Gotham” Thor said “and I’d expect you’d stay there for much longer due to the circumstances.”

“I’m going to return but first I had to talk to you” Tony sat to the chair right opposite Thor.

“I could have come there.”

“Certainly and you’d have enjoyed being at Gotham but I didn’t want anyone there knowing about our meeting.”

Thor frowned.

“What do you mean, Tony?”

“I saw how you’re looking at Bruce… and you being at the Manor last night…all by chance, I bet” his voice was highly ironic and Thor was annoyed and ready to reply but Tony raised his palm stopping him like a boss. “I’m too experienced in these things, blondie.”

Thor yanked his head proudly.

“My presence at Bruce’s Manor wasn’t by chance: Bruce asked me to have my eyes on Loki and Gotham in case he meets with Joker. And yes, I came to the Manor to see Bruce to make sure he was alright because I learnt about Superman’s adultery and because I feel responsible for the last days’ events.”

Tony frowned.

“Responsible?”

“Loki was pestering Bruce and I intervened but Superman who came after Loki was gone thought that Bruce and I…” he blinked uncomfortable having difficulty to even utter the word. “Anyway when I learnt what Superman did, I knew that Bruce would be heartbroken and I came to speak to him. Tony, you have to understand: I mean no insult for Bruce and I don’t have any expectations from him”
Tony would have rolled his eyes but he was too ill spirited for that. He leaned towards his comrade. “I’m sick and tired of gods eyeing Bruce. Superman, Bagdana, your stupid brother, you…”

Thor blushed. “But I just told you…”

“I know Bruce is fascinating: heavenly beautiful, charming personality, strong like a granite rock with an iron will but vulnerable at the same time that makes all you super humans intrigued.”

“I admit that admire your friend” he replied calmly.

Tony bared his teeth.

“Enough with gods playing with him.”

“I’m not playing!”

“Superman had told me the same thing when I saw through him and confronted him about flirting Bruce; he promised that he’d never hurt him.”

“Tony, you know me too well, I…”

Tony jerked upright, his palms hitting the table.

“Drop it! Enough with promises. Find a god or a goddess of your status like Superman did and stop trying to put Bruce’s heart in another adventure. Superman shattered that heart and I don’t know if it would be ever healed.”

“I’m sorry, Tony…I have no intention to caused any pain to Bruce. I…For me, he is a good friend and a comrade I respect.”

“Give me a break, pal…” Tony chuckled tilting his head but Thor could discern the man’s bitterness. “Leave Bruce alone, Thor: he was kidnapped when he was eight years old, they chopped his toe, he saw his parents being murdered, they shot him and let his arm untreated only to be always in awful pain; they were starving him; they whipped him every day” he coughed to clear his throat “they raped him every day for eighteen years. Can you digest, can you imagine that pain?”

Thor lowered his eyes and Tony shook his head. “No, you don’t: because you’re an invincible god, an invulnerable being like Superman…Maybe if he could have knowledge of the pain he wouldn’t have engaged Bruce in that relationship to break him afterwards…”

Thor stood and walked to him.

“Tony…” he placed his hand on his shoulder.

Tony ran his hands through his locks and pouted.

“I’m human but still I can’t even get a glimpse to what Bruce experienced…To the pain he suffered and the pain he still carries every day deep inside him…because Bruce hides everything to not cause sadness to us” he sighed. “I want Bruce happy; I want to hear him laugh again, as he did when we were children.”
Thor pursed his lips and his eyes filled with emotion: he could understand Tony’s agony for his friend. Tony looked him in the eyes.

“Leave him alone, Thor.”

Thor remembered the moment he gave Eir’s elixir to Bruce and the human’s reaction.

“It’d be a pity if Bruce’s heart remains petrified forever, Tony. He deserves to be loved; to find his soul mate.”

Tony shook his head.

“No! Not that! That’s too risky…He gave his heart to that fucking alien and he took it, ripped it in pieces and trod upon it” he pressed his lips and panted. “I just want him to be calm and happy and for that people should stop playing with his feelings” he stabbed Thor’s eyes with his fervent ones. “We’re friends, Thor: I’m asking you as a friend to not try to win Bruce’s heart.”

Thor patted Tony’s shoulders trying to reassure him.

“I’m a friend of Bruce, Tony and I’ll protect him with all my might: I swear that. As for his precious love…I think that Bruce is from the people who love once in their entire life.”

Martha Kent stood on the porch in front of her house with her arms hugging her ribs and her tired eyes watching the dark, filled with stars sky. She had stopped calling her son: she understood that he didn’t want to speak to her and that meant that her son either knew he was wrong or he got more corrupted than the video showed.

Only the thought of that video made her nauseated; Clark always made her proud even when he failed in something. But since she saw that video and spoke with Bruce hearing the young man’s dignity and effort to defend Clark, she felt ashamed not for Clark but for herself because she failed to raise him right so that he could discern what was worthy and what wasn’t…

But mostly she was afraid for Clark, a heavy rock smashing her chest: if he became able to cheat and abandon his loved one and avoid speaking to his mother then what slippery road he had taken? And that woman…even when Wonder Woman saved people and helped Superman, Martha always thought her creepy.

“Hello, Ma” world’s most beautiful voice greeted her softly but also determined.

Martha turned where a gentle sound said her that Superman had landed. She hugged him though she knew that her son could detect in her vitals how stiff her insides were.

“I was calling you.”

Clark nodded: straight to the point he thought – that was his Ma.

“Yeah, Lois told me but my Smartphone had a problem so I took it for repair and came myself to see you.”

Martha’s sad smile told him that she knew that he was lying and like Jor El she was disappointed; but there was a feeling in her stronger than disappointment: sadness and fear.

“You saw that despicable video, right?” he asked her and she pressed her lips. “Damn!” he growled
“If I find the one who did it...!”

Martha’s eyes bulged in fear.

“You won’t do anything to him, sweetie! My son doesn’t hurt people...Or you’ve changed so much?”

Superman closed his eyes realizing his Ma’s worry and ruffled his hair.

“Because of that scum you’re upset and worried and...and sad; but you shouldn’t, Ma, because I’m happy: I got what I wanted. You and Pa always told me to not care about people’s opinion and do what I felt.”

Martha closed her eyes.

“When that was right. You think that what you did was right? Are you sure you’re happy?”

“Of course! Diana is great and we are perfect together! I love her, Ma.”

“There’s a vast difference between carnal pleasure and love, Clark” she said dryly and tired. “You had love with Bruce and happiness.”

“No! I had only an illusion of happiness! Now that I found Diana I can realize that...You’ll see how great she is once you meet her.”

Martha stiffened.

“I don’t want to meet her!”

Clark laughed.

“The role of the evil mother-in-law doesn’t suit you, Ma, and once you realize how happy she makes me, you’ll forget your hesitation.”

“I doubt that...”

Clark shook his head.

“C’mon, Ma, I know how much you liked Bruce but your sympathy was more for what he went through not because he was with me...I know you always wanted grandchildren” he launched his biggest weapon.

“I always wanted and still want to see you happy with the proper person on your side, Clark; also, I always wanted you to be a good man.”

Superman snapped his head on the side staring at her challengingly.

“And am I not a good man?”

Martha pursed her lips and sighed.

“What kind of a man abandons his loved one while he is in pain, hurting an already shattered heart?”

Clark yanked his head and growled frustrated.

“Bruce is not as vulnerable as you think him.”
“I know: he is very brave; you told me that he saved your life several times. But this doesn’t change that he is a tormented young man, in pain, Clark. And now he needed you, your love the most.”

Clark huffed.

“You’d prefer me to pretend?”

“I’d prefer you to resist to this woman’s advances and not behaving like a horny teen on rooftops, forgetting everything in an instance just because that woman seduced you! We didn’t raise you like that, Clark, to shame yourself and break the heart of someone who loves you so much! Your father and I were forty years together and adultery never upset our love.”

Superman crossed his arms.

“Exactly! Because you were in love! You don’t know if Bruce loves me – he never believed in me!”

Martha shook her head disappointed for her son’s words.

“Trying to defend yourself blaming Bruce? My Clark would never have done that…And you say that this woman makes you good? She corrupts you!”

Superman’s eyes bulged.

“I have no need to defend myself. And stop blaming Diana! You don’t know her!

“I can see her through your deeds, through your behavior. As I could see Bruce before through you…Care to make a comparison yourself?” Superman stretched his body clenching his jaw and Martha huffed. “Of course not…You don’t want to face the truth…You became that coward.”

“Ma!”

Anybody else would have paralyzed from fear hearing Superman raising his voice. But not Ms. Kent.

“Don’t you raise your voice to me, young man! Because that cries your cowardice and I’m not afraid of you! I was changing your diapers; I caressed your hair when you cried. You said that Bruce didn’t believe in you: you’re wrong. He still believes in you…he already forgave you.”

Superman’s eyes glazed.

“I don’t need his forgiveness!”

She smiled.

“That’s what he said.”

“You spoke with him.”

“Since my son avoided me and was hiding like a mischievous child…I felt the need to apologize to that young man for the new pain you delivered him; I wanted to encourage him but he encouraged me. Do you realize that you lost a bright star from your life? A star that showed you the right path in life? Get a grip of yourself, Clark: I don’t like the path you’ve taken.”

“You don’t have to worry, Ma; you’ll see that you were wrong scolding me like this. I’m Superman, damn it!” he gave her a quick peck. “It’s unfair to be hostile to your son for the sake of a stranger! You know me all my life, Ma: you love me and I love you.”
“And that’s why I speak to you like that. I’m afraid for you, Clark!”

Superman bit his lip and took off without greeting his Ma but then he changed his mind and return to her.

“Your son just got the highest award for a reporter, Ma. The Pulitzer! I hoped that you’d be proud of me – that someone would be happy and celebrate with me.”

Martha nodded.

“What about your…true love…You won’t celebrate with her?”

Superman stiffened and Martha didn’t miss that, realizing many things. One of them that her son didn’t admit to the Amazon that he had a human identity and worked like a common human being. And that realization made her worries tenfold.

“I’m proud of you, son… I’m always proud, with or without the Pulitzer. But I’m not proud of what you did to Bruce; of how cruel you were with him” Superman’s eyes bulged in terror fearing for an instance that Bruce had told his Ma about what he did to him but then crossed that: Bruce wouldn’t have done that. “Think, Clark: you won that award for the work you did while Bruce was on your side…His love, his star was guiding you to great feats…”

He leaned and kissed her cheek.

“You’ll see that you don’t have to worry about me, Ma, and that what happened was for the best.”

Martha cupped his face with both hands and looked him in the eyes.

“I know you’ll regret for what you did, sweetie. I know that something affects you because my baby would have never done that. Please, Clark, use the Fortress to see if something’s wrong.”

Superman shook his head.

“There’s nothing wrong, Ma” he kissed her hand. “Good night.”

Martha watched his figure distance between the stars. Her lips were pressed and her heart clenched.
Luthor paced in front of the wall beside the secretary’s desk at the waiting room in front of Mannheim’s office. He was perplexed on the fact that the shady tycoon didn’t have a whole wall window gazing at Metropolis’ impressive skyline – it was the trend in the office design for every esteemed businessman and left the guests impressed. On the other hand, his awkward and dangerous partner didn’t seem to care much about impressions or other people’s opinion; he cared only for his work to be done: Luthor liked that because it fit him too, though Lex’s obsession to manifest his power and status was more than evident.

And lately his status was quivering: having lost the control of LexLabs to Wayne who now also held the 20% of LEXCORP and being imprisoned weren’t the best assets for someone like him. But one of Lex’s biggest traits was his stubbornness and ability to reborn from his ashes like a phoenix. He was free now, just released from Blackgate Prison and back to Metropolis hungry for retaliation and the best addition? Superman’s humiliation: the video showing him like the cheapest, dirtiest porn star banging Wonder Woman on Gotham City Hall’s rooftop.

Oh! The comments…Luthor brought each of them again and again in his mind to chuckle and make his day. People liked Superman – though Lex hated that fact – no, no, those fools just needed Superman to save their asses and they pretended that liked him: who in their right minds would like a powerful and unchecked alien who can conquer the planet in 24 hours? Anyway, their need or sympathy didn’t thwart them from ridiculing him – on the contrary, fuelled the people’s mood to laugh at him.

Alas! Once again he couldn’t enjoy that as he should.

Mercy was standing at the far end of the waiting space, right in front of the lift, in a niche that provided her with the ability to check every direction for possible threats. Her arms crossed on the chest, her face poised and her eyes focused, protecting her boss. They owe their freedom to Mannheim – Luthor knew that but that didn’t make him grateful. He lifted an eyebrow. Actually, his own cunning and foresight saved them through his mysterious partner. He knew how to choose allies and how to control them.

Yet now they had a problem. And it was that problem that brought him here. Lex remembered Mercy’s glance when he told her that they were going to Mannheim’s head office. She turned on the engine and hid her puzzlement yet for Luthor it was clear; at some point his loyal driver and bodyguard didn’t hold back and ask.

“Lex Luthor doesn’t need to run to the office of others” she said casually but a bit disapproving. “Mannheim is too cheap for Lex Luthor to come to him.”

He didn’t answer: Mercy was right. He also wondered why he rushed to his car to run to the gangster. Yet he knew he had to do that though his usual attitude was to call for them to come to him. But Mannheim wasn’t like the others: Luthor sensed that, like he felt obliged to follow his orders – it seemed normal to Luthor to act like the man’s minion and at the same time he realized that was abnormal. However he couldn’t resist the urge.

So not only he had come to Mannheim’s office but also waited his secretary to announce and show him in. Ten minutes had already passed and damn, Luthor hated waiting: waiting to be allowed in always infuriated him but not today, in this office, for this man. He frowned: waiting seemed…fit.

Mannheim’s cute, blond secretary came out and looked at Luthor who stared at her expectantly.
“Mr. Mannheim will see you now, Mr. Luthor.”

He marched to the heavy, carved black door and the secretary opened showing him in and closed behind him leaving them alone.

Mannheim sat in the throne-like leather chair behind his huge, ancient-like wooden desk. Luthor cocked an eyebrow: he didn’t expect from a gangster such love for antic-like furniture. The elegance and solemnity of the furniture was in complete contrast with the man’s tough appearance – even his black mustache cried that he had nothing to do with such elegance.

Luthor walked confident towards the desk which wasn’t a considerable distance since the office - to Luthor’s shock and contempt - was almost small and definitely modest for a man with Mannheim’s power: his partner definitely didn’t care about appearances.

The sturdy guy had his fingers intertwined in front of his face and watched his visitor over them. His eyes were dark, darker than their usual brown color, and at the same time flashing with suspicion; fixed as Mannheim’s eyes were on him, Luthor felt like being X-rayed and read like a book. A shudder run through his spine and Lex hated that.

“To what do I owe your unscheduled visit, Luthor?” he spat almost bored. “It’s not a good sign, is it? I had told you that there was no reason for a meeting: you just ought to deliver what I ordered.”

Luthor expected in vain to be offered a seat, though it’d have felt like sitting in a table with nails. So he remained standing like a pupil in front of his headmaster. Ugh! That was a disgrace! But still it didn’t feel inappropriate.

“I wouldn’t have bothered you, Mannheim, if it wasn’t important” he took in how the gangster’s eyes crystallized as if being turned into ice. “It’s about your order.”

Mannheim just lifted an eyebrow but didn’t make another motion.

“I’m listening.”

“As soon as I put my feet on Metropolis I began working on our project.”

Mannheim made a slow nod.

“That was the reason you’re not still rotting in that prison.”

Luthor licked his lips.

“I know. I contacted my people in the several labs I had stashed the parts of your project – you see, I thought it safer to disperse them to many different places in order to nobody find or connect them…”

Mannheim blinked slowly.

“To the point!”

Luthor bit his lips because he hated being treated like this but he didn’t have another choice.

“When the LexLabs’ control ended up to another person, he put his people to search and register every item in the Labs” Mannheim yanked his head. “Every item containing Kryptonite or that seemed relative to Superman was destroyed.”

Mannheim smirked and snorted.
“The little bitch protected his stallion! How stupid now that Superman chose the Amazon… You had the items of my project well protected, right?” his voice emanated displeasure and threat.

Luthor blinked uncomfortable.

“I did but they found them…”

Mannheim stiffened in his seat, his hands grabbing the edges of the armrests.

“You did camouflage them to not betray that they were for something important. Right?!”

“I did – nobody will figure that they aren’t something trivial and have some other usage.”

Mannheim pursed his lips.

“So should I assume that they left the items in their place?”

Luthor licked his lips.

“Unfortunately not. And this is the reason I can’t gather them to start the construction: Wayne gathered them in some place of his.”

Mannheim growled and jolted to his feet clenching the armrests. Luthor couldn’t help it but feel afraid from the flames in the man’s eyes.

“That means that my project depends on Wayne?!” he roared.

Luthor opened his arms.

“Once the items are in my hands your machine will be ready ASAP; but Wayne gathered every awkward item they found in my Labs so…”

Mannheim glared at the sweaty businessman and nodded.

“I must regain them from him, huh? Humans are waste of space!” he uttered disgusted.

Luthor frowned hearing this but then he attributed the expression to Mannheim’s outrage.

“Leave!” the gangster spat and nailed Luthor with his glare for one last time. “I’ll fix this myself!”

Luthor retreated relieved to be away from this man and once he felt safe inside his white limo, a happy smirk appeared in his face because now Wayne would face Mannheim.

A day after his discussion with Tony who had told him that he didn’t have to ‘play the father’, Bruce was determined to do more about Dick; fine, the boy hated him but Alfred shouldn’t be burdened with everything concerning the boy as well. Also, he wanted to get some impression for the places Dick went daily and especially the people there.

For that reason he drove Dick to the city’s gym for his daily training. He took the red, undistinguishable car in an effort to keep secret from the media that he had the boy’s guardianship. Of course, Dick didn’t like that at all: his face was contorted in distaste, his gaze averted and his arms crossed through the ride. Fortunately, Bruce took Hero with them to not bother Alfred during his chores so Dick had the kitten to pet.
As soon as the car halted in front of the gym, Dick let Hero on the car’s floor and rushed outside taking his backpack on his shoulder; he stormed inside the building.

Bruce pressed his lips and tapped his fingers on the wheel remembering his dream. His son called Dick; the sense of his small, soft hand in his was still intense filling his heart with warmth. The way the boy was looking at him as he was swept away by Bagdana’s force…exactly like that night in the factory when the roof collapsed trapping him to his death. Dick had looked at him exactly like in the dream refusing to abandon him.

He shook his head to dismiss the thoughts: if Ra’s had created his child, he wouldn’t have any similarity with Dick – and of course, not Dick’s name. That however certainly didn’t change Bruce’s feelings about Dick and his sadness about the boy’s behavior. Not that he didn’t understand him…

Bruce looked at the entrance of the gym: they had already decorated for Christmas. And the city was already dressed in her Christmas attire even if Gotham wasn’t like the other cities. It was 17:00 and the night hadn’t fallen; however the evening was too dim and the Christmas lights had begun to sparkle giving a celebrating spirit to the city that Bruce hoped that this year would be real and not just a cover.

No wonder Alfred had hinted on decorating the Manor. But it wasn’t a bit early for decorating?

It was December 10th: it wasn’t early – Bruce remembered that they used to decorate the Manor with the coming of December. Little Bruce couldn’t wait…he was eager to decorate the tree, so his parents obliged; his poor parents couldn’t deny him the favor.

Now Christmas had no value for him: the proof? He hadn’t noticed till now that the entire city had been decorated. He shook his head: the last beautiful Christmas in a long chain of nightmares was the Christmas Selina gifted him in her secret attic.

He cast a last glance at the entrance of the tall building where boys and girls constantly went in and out.

“MERRY CHRISTMAS” multicolored lights read wrapped in green garlands. Two big white angels were positioned at the two sides of the double door, glimmering cheerful to the people.

Bruce chose to not follow him because Dick didn’t want to; he’d go later when he’d come to pick his ward. But he didn’t want to go back to the Manor either: he felt that he should give Alfred a break from worrying and taking care of him. On the other hand he didn’t want to go to a café or whatever to spend his time: he dreaded that people would recognize him and tip some gossip reporter into cornering him with inappropriate questions: about Clark.

So he decided to stop his car into the public parking space opposing the building and stay there: the car’s windows were dark so nobody could see him from outside. He had his Cosmos gadget with him and it was a great opportunity to work without anyone worrying that Bruce was “exerting himself”.

First of all, he wanted to search for the archer in green. These days after their meeting during his patrol Bruce was thinking of him. He was now sure that the man led him to the rooftop where Superman and the supposed Amazon were having sex on purpose, knowing that this would interest Batman. And then the man shot the whole thing and published it – nobody else could have done it.

But why? To ridicule both heroes or to get some fat reward? Maybe both. The fact he was a vigilante and helped him during the attack at the Avengers’ Tower didn’t mean that he didn’t care about the money. As for the ridiculing, from their exchange that night Bruce got the impression that the Arrow had some contempt for the superheroes: he was more than unwilling to help them. And maybe there was a secret agenda behind Arrow’s behavior – Bruce never took things as they seemed.

He didn’t like that this man had an interest in him. Bruce closed his eyes and breathed in: actually, he didn’t want anyone be interested in him; he thought about Thor and his insides clenched: it couldn’t be happening again! Maybe Bruce should give Thor Eir’s elixir to drink and stop having hopes – if indeed there was such an interest and not just Bruce’s fears.

He run his hands through his hair: he didn’t want Thor to be hurt; why these things were happening all the time to him? Why they couldn’t see how ugly he was? How dirty and unworthy of the trouble? He could think of something…something that Clark had mentioned once: Lilith his ancient grandmother. The seductress demon which allured men to their destruction – her DNA was intact in him doing its job repeating Lilith’s work.

Damn! He hit his palm on the wheel clenching his jaw. His heart began beating fast and he had to breathe slowly to calm the pulse down.

He had to learn more about the Arrow: the man had a strange aura on him and his eyes under the hood flashed like fires among his shadowed features. If he wasn’t disabled he’d comb Gotham every night trying to find him again. However something inside him whispered that the man was probably away now. Arrow wasn’t a Gothamite though the fact he first appeared in New York couldn’t cross out that possibility; he could have known Bruce and followed him there.

Bruce shook his head: Arrow wasn’t a Gothamite. His accent was different and from his experience Bruce couldn’t find an exact match of this accent: for eighteen years, he was listening to every kind of different accents from thugs and clients in Dolcetto; also, when Ra’s decided to exploit Bruce’s appearance Falcone took him along to some of his meetings wanting to show off his toy. Maybe the Arrow changed his true accent…because if he wasn’t from US Bruce would have understood it.

He brought his Cosmos phone out of his black leather jacket’s inner pocket and pressed the indication on the right top corner turning the Smartphone sized gadget into a medium sized tablet. Bruce never used his Cosmos tablet in Dick’s presence because the boy would recognize that he owed the same gadget despite the fact that each Cosmos could have different frame. He didn’t want Dick realize that his tablet was Bruce’s present so he worked on his tablet only where the boy wouldn’t come – not that Dick had any mood to come where Bruce was.

What welcomed him made his breath halt for a second; the wallpaper he had on. A rose in dark ruby color against all black velvet fabric, a big rosebud with some drops of dew: he blinked. He had forgotten that that rose’s image covered his screen. Bruce chewed his lip uncomfortable: he had taken that picture the morning he had found the rosebud over his laptop – Clark had brought it to him after the hard words he told him the previous night; it was his apology.

Bruce had sent the dried rosebud to Clark along with the rest of his stuff and his presents. He wished to keep that rose for ever for that he stashed it between the pages of a book like his mother used to do…

But now there was no reason to keep it anymore: Clark had made his choice. It hurt to place the white handkerchief with the flower on that box and part with it yet Bruce did it because his heart was a piece of rock or it should be and he’d make it be…

Besides he felt shame for himself: he had acted like a teen; it was ridiculous – those things weren’t for him. He brushed the hidden option in the screen and the wallpaper changed into the custom Cosmos theme which was tranquil and majestic: the universe – black with golden stars and purple planets and pink nebulas, spinning slowly and eternally saying to him that his pain was nothing to the world which continued his perpetual motion careless of what happens to a speck like him…

He gritted his teeth, shook himself and tapped the icons on the screen to enter the program he had created to be able to access the databases of the police across the States: perhaps there was some sighting of the man.

Bruce typed the description of the man and brushed the order. It took a minute to search every police database and the screen filled with a hundred findings. Bruce scrolled down, each entry popping up as he reached each finding.

Most of them were irrelevant about drank people dressed up as Robin Hoods doing some fuss after parties; but there was one that flashed to Bruce. In Chicago, some police officers reported about a gang being found in an alley: at the same alley, police found unconscious their almost victim. The thugs were found pinned on the wall from green arrows that had pierced their shoulders: they were unconscious from terror and blood loss but alive. Some witnesses said that they had caught a glimpse of a guy slipping between the alleys and he was dressed like Robin Hood; they thought that he had come out of some masked party.

Bruce frowned. New York, Gotham, Chicago…A quite big range for a vigilante. Unless there wasn’t only one man but he crossed that thought because the two of the three times it was the same person. So the guy was interested in more than one city? There should have been a connection, something common between the three cities and the high criminality rate was too weak. The two first times Arrow appeared Bruce was the common factor: in New York he appeared only once to save him and Gotham was his city. Now Chicago…

It was as if the Arrow knew that Bruce or Batman was going to research him and tried to mislead him. The sure thing was that Bruce wasn’t in position to fly to Chicago and do his research.

The tune for a new e-mail and a small window in the bottom corner of the screen pushed him out of his thoughts. He brushed the message right away: it was from Lucius. They had a first contact with the president of the gymnastics national federation and he was very positive in the idea of a charity gala in Gotham: the public relations department already began working with the local team’s manager to organize the event.

Bruce smiled and typed his answer:

“Thanks, Lucius; great job as always!”

He’d manage to speak with John Grayson’s trainer and learn everything he knew about Zucco who didn’t show up from that day Bruce took Dick from the social service office. He knew that if Ms. Turner’s fears and suspicions about the man were true then he’d make his move sooner or later so Bruce must be prepared. Ms. Turner told him that Zucco came back because he sniffed the money exactly as he did with John and now Zucco’s assumptions were fortified since the boy was the ward of Bruce Wayne. Zucco would do everything to get Dick – besides he had declared so.

Perusing the general news a headline flashed to him shadowing every other:

“Clark Kent: the winner of this year’s Pulitzer Prize for investigating reporting.”

A big smile stretched his lips without even realizing: Clark deserved that for all the years of hard work…not only in journalism. This prize was an acknowledgement, an appreciation, a reward both for his reporting action and Superman’s offering to the world. Bruce’s heart flew and his hand on its own accord rushed to combine an e-mail to congratulate him.
Upon realizing his fingers stopped midair: maybe it wasn’t the right thing to do after what happened—hell, he didn’t know how to handle this: he had no experience and that indecision made him sweat. Clark should celebrate his success; he should enjoy that…and Bruce could think a hundred things he would have organized to surprise Clark and celebrate.

He pressed his lips till they lost their color and ached from Superman’s rough treatment. Bruce sighed. Clark would celebrate with that woman though he doubted that Superman would admit to her that he maintained a human identity—and Bruce was glad for that because she was dangerous and knowing Clark’s secret could bring disaster to him.

Bruce pressed his hair with both hands: what he was to do? He just couldn’t be indifferent to Clark’s top moment. He growled and Hero looked at him puzzled.

“I must congratulate him, Hero; to the Hell if it’s right or wrong…”

The kitten meowed.

“I’m glad I have your agreement” Bruce smiled and hurried to open the program for mails.

He wrote a few words: congratulations, you totally deserved it. His finger stayed above the send option indecisive; he breathed in and out trying to calm his heart; he glanced at Hero and the kitten’s eyes were sparkling in the semi darkness as if encouraging him. He clenched his jaw and sent the message, his eyes staying fixed on the affirmation message.

A gentle tap on his window startled him: damn! He had lost his vigilance. But then he relaxed: this person had the ability to startle him always. He lowered the glass.

“Hi, handsome! You came to the city and didn’t call me?” Selina said playful. “I should be angry with you…”

“I just brought Dick at the gym and I wait to take him back.”

Selina pouted and raised her eyebrows.

“And Dick’s training ends at…?” she asked dumbfounded.

Bruce looked at his wristwatch as Hero jumped to his lap and then to Selina’s hands.

“In one hour and 35 minutes.”

Selina tilted her head on the side and rolled her eyes.

“And you planning to stay here for two hours? Gosh! Sweetie, I think you wanted to avoid me…”

Bruce widened his eyes.

“Not at all! I know you’d be with Steve and I wanted to let you two alone” Selina shook her head taking Hero from her shoulder where he had climbed. “Besides I have some work on my tablet and…it’s not like I can become stiff from sitting.”

Selina twisted her mouth.

“Nonsense!”

“Hey, Bruce; care to join us?” Steve’s head popped to the window and Bruce huffed to Selina’s chuckle since she understood that her friend couldn’t refuse now.
“Fine” he said and brushed the spot to turn the tablet into a Smartphone.

Steve’s eyes widened impressed.

“I don’t like 21st century’s technology but want one of these!”

Selina snorted.

“Maybe if you first learn what is Google…”

Steve hugged her waist from behind and kissed the little of her neck that wasn’t covered by her black scarf.

“I’m sure you’ll teach me everything…”

Bruce chuckled.

“Don’t count on that, Steve! Sel’s distaste for modern gadgets is greater than yours.”

“Then we have more in common…”

“What did you expect, handsome? I do sleep with an antic, don’t I?”

Steve laughed and Selina gave him Hero. Then she opened the door for Bruce and he took his wheelchair from the backseat and placed it down for him to slip in.

“Don’t worry, sweetie” Selina chirped.”You won’t be far from your boy – there is a beautiful, cozy café near.” She looked at the leather jacket Bruce wore and pouted. “I can’t believe Alfred let you out of the Manor with this jacket! It’s chilly! And no scarf and gloves!”

Bruce settled himself in the chair and lolled his head on the side in disbelief while Selina tucked his legs in the kilt blanket.

“I’m perfectly fine, Sel! And Tony’s chair is heated so you two would be colder than me.”

Steve chuckled.

“No way Tony would leave his best friend unprotected…It’s impressive how affectionate he can get” he commented as they moved towards the café Selina mentioned “I mean, Tony is always a nice guy despite his eccentricity but people would never take him for a protective person.”

Bruce turned his head to him.

“Tony was always like this from our childhood: considerate and protective. But some things made him hide that part of himself from most people.”

Steve smiled and nodded.

“What do you think of Gotham, Steve?” Bruce asked.

Captain America ruffled his hair with his gloved hand.

“From what Selina had showed me…”

“Which isn’t much apart from my bedroom…” she remarked slyly caressing Hero in her hug.
Bruce chuckled as Steve tilted his head.

“Well, that’s true…Gotham is like people describe her: wild and terrifying yet it has a certain charm if you’re willing to grasp it…something that can bond you to her…some odd beauty that attracts…”

Bruce’s eyes became blank and thoughtful but quickly changed that into nodding to Steve.

The café Selina led them was rather small; round shaped with brown glass walls it reminded more of a summer house since it was located in the center of the park opposite the gym. A beautiful park with bushes, trees and flowers that lasted through the year so the café gave its clients a gorgeous view.

The entrance was on ground level so Bruce didn’t need a ramp to enter. Steve held the door open for him and Selina and they sat in a table looking at the small fountain lake that was framed with a short, round tiled wall that emanated white light.

“It’s beautiful here” Bruce said though he felt a bit uncomfortable since some people cast him curious glances. He thought to say that he didn’t remember the place but it was stupid: he was imprisoned for a lifetime and Batman’s outings didn’t include romantic cafes.

Selina smiled.

“It opened lately after they renovated the park; Falcone had fallen then.”

Bruce nodded and his eyes caught Hero in Selina’s lap licking his paw. He took out of his pocket a small bag, ripped it and gave his friend a snack that was really appreciated by the greedy kitten.

When the young waitress came for their order Selina glanced at Bruce.

“Chocolate for you, Bruce” she whispered “Leslie says that coffee is not ideal combination to your drugs.’’

Bruce met Steve’s amused gaze, rolled his eyes and then looked at Selina.

“Thanks, Alfred! A hot chocolate” he said to the waitress who smiled at him and then smiled to the kitten that was staring at her.

“And for the young gentleman?” the girl chirped to take a meow for an answer. “I’ll manage something for you, little one…” she winked and left.

“Hero is a real charmer” Steve chuckled. “I’m used to attract attention but thankfully Bruce and Hero saved me from that” he pursed his lips thoughtfully. “On the other hand, for Gotham only one of our kind matters: Batman: he saved them all” Bruce kept his indifferent face. “I’d like to meet the guy: it was thanks to him that the dirty role of the first S.H.I.E.L.D was revealed and we managed to smash the League of Shadows without casualties.”

Selina didn’t look at Bruce in case Steve read that glance; she kept looking at her boyfriend but still the corner of her eyes exchanged ideas with Bruce’s.

“He is tough to meet” Selina shrugged. “Only criminals have the…privilege to enjoy his company…” she socked her eyebrows. “Still many people believe that he doesn’t exist.”

“I have seen him” Steve commented. “I have spoken to him.”

Bruce licked his lips.

“He saved me when Falcone tried to take me away using me as a shield to stop police from arresting him. Weren’t for him I don’t know where I would be now…” he shook his head “if I was still alive.”

Selina touched his forearm and their eyes locked.

“Don’t think about it, Bruce.”

He grinned.

“I don’t.”

A lesser or maybe a stupid man would have been jealous of the two youths’ bond but not Steve; actually, it was very heartwarming seeing these two kids free after the terrors they shared: after years of being struggling alone against the world. He swallowed hard imagining the 10 year old Selina wandering the dangerous, dark city to get a glimpse of her tortured friend and the courage that short meeting gave to the poor boy to last another day.

“Steve?” Selina asked perplexed. “Are you alright?”

Steve smiled and nodded.

“Also I have heard a lot about another awkward resident of Gotham’s nights.”

Selina lifted an eyebrow.

“Whom?”

“Catwoman.”

“Mmm…” Selina pouted and caressed Hero’s head. “And what have you heard?” she asked playfully causing Bruce’s amusement.

Steve yanked his head and crossed his arms.

“That she is gorgeous with a perfect flexible body and curves that would seduce even a cleric” Selina cocked an eyebrow thinking that a cleric actually wasn’t difficult to seduce. “She is dressed in skin tight black leather that highlights every detail of her body; oh! And her eyes…though nobody had seen them from up close to know their color, her gaze is mesmerizing. They say that she is a very capable fighter. And…a master jewel thief.”

Selina cleared her throat.

“I think that what intrigues you the most isn’t her fighting skills” she said crossing her arms annoyed. “Careful, mister, because I’ll banish you from my bedroom and send you looking for cats!”

Steve wrapped his arm around her shoulder and kissed her on the lips.

“I prefer women than cats…no offense, Hero.”

Bruce chuckled. Selina touched Steve’s neck and deepened the kiss so Bruce looked around to give them some privacy. As the night fell outside, the café’s staff lit small, round multicolored candles placed in crystal ball candle holders on the tables. Also, the hidden bluish lighting of the walls became dimmer highlighting the Christmas decoration: white Christmas trees with big red balls hanging from the branches.

“Your first Christmas free…” Steve commented catching Bruce’s gaze after his kiss with Selina ended.
Bruce looked back at them and grinned carefree but unable to hide entirely his melancholy.

“Yeah…” he mumbled.

Thankfully, the waitress’ coming broke Bruce’s uneasiness. The girl served them their brews and some cat biscuits for Hero who purred to thank her before storming at the delicacies.

“He is greedy” Bruce chuckled to the waitress and paid for their order giving her a big tip.

“Thank you” she lowered her voice “Mr. Wayne; someone must have tipped Vale about your presence here because she called to confirm it but I denied that” she whispered to him winking. “Enjoy your chocolate, I hope you’ll like it.”

“I will; thank you very much, Dorothy” he said reading the chest label with her name.

“Nothing…I hate those gossipy reporters…” she turned on her heels and left.

“Gotham’s greatest power it’s her people…” Bruce said to Steve who shook his head.

“You love your city so much, Bruce: someone would expect you to hate this city after everything you’ve been through…to move to another city. Your choice to stay in a city filled with painful memories manifests your strength of will.”

Selina looked at her friend who had lowered his eyes.

“Those difficult years taught me that there are people in Gotham who suffer not only from crime but also from poverty” he pressed lips. “Good people even in wrong places” he huffed. “So now that I was lucky enough to come back I want to help them…”

Steve nodded and smiled tenderly seeing Bruce taking with the small spoon the cream over his coffee and devouring it with closed eyes; he met Selina’s happy eyes and his smile became broader.

Their smiles were still on when they felt that someone approached their table; Bruce sweeping the cream mustache from his mouth with the tissue looked at the newcomer surprised.

Superman was flying over Metropolis, a city that fully decorated in Christmas spirit was more joyful and brighter than usual; the cool air contributed in the carefree atmosphere yet Superman’s heart was heavy. Today at the office, his colleagues continued congratulating him and Clark brought them delicacies. It was a cheerful atmosphere yet the one person who mattered the most for Clark didn’t even approach him and left the delicacy he offered her on her desk.

He received many emails with congratulations but what upset him the most was the last one he saw: from Bruce…Clark didn’t expect him to congratulate him; but on the other hand, of course Bruce would do that to gain more sympathy from Clark’s loved ones, showing off his superiority…

Clark hadn’t replied yet – Bruce had attacked him and now the only reason he congratulated him was to embarrass Clark and make him seem an ass so no, he wasn’t going to play Bruce’s game. Enough with his cunning games. The human liked to prove his superior intelligence over Clark’s.

Superman huffed; he was fed off with this, he only wanted to rush to Diana and spending his night with her, having sex with her seemed like a haven; like Eden in the middle of Hell. Even though he wouldn’t share his joy for his win with her; he hadn’t ever told her that he worked as a humble journalist in a human newspaper – he never carried along his Smartphone because the Amazon
Princess would consider it odd and unfit for a god like Superman. But those were trivial in comparison to the happiness, elation and relaxation she gave him.

His hearing caught it one second before it appeared in front of him so he had halted and waited with his arms crossed. Thor with his hammer stashed in his wide brown leather belt, his divine armor and the royal red ruby cape flowing behind him. Superman cocked an eyebrow: the Norwegian must have some spare capes since he had gifted one to Bruce.

“Superman” Thor greeted him coldly.

Superman smirked: of course, one more of Bruce’s admirers-protectors…disgusting.

“Thor…to what do I owe the honor? I see that Earth lately has become very attractive to you…”

Thor’s eyes hadn’t their usual kindness and warmth; they had the coldness and fierce of the times he confronted his enemies.

“Lately you take things less serious than they deserve” he replied and Superman yanked his head clenching his jaw.

“You came to scold me for Bruce?” he asked. “You forgot who I am, Thor, and that what I’m doing it’s my own business.”

“The way you treat humans is not your business. How could you, Superman?”

The Man of Steel rolled his eyes and smirked.

“An Asgardian god must have better things to engage himself than my sexual life” he cocked an eyebrow. “Unless my sexual life affects you…” he hissed.

“Not only you were giving Hell to Bruce but also you cheated him in that gross way” he spat and then chuckled. “It is ridiculous that you made a scene accusing Bruce of having an affair with me when you were the one who was doing that: very evil…” he shook his head in disappointment. “You’re falling from your moral pedestal, Superman.”

Superman fisted his hand.

“Because I ended my relationship with Bruce? Because I found my true love? Your sucking up to Bruce makes you lose your grip, Thor” he hissed “you better stay at Asgard and…” he narrowed his eyes “why not taking Bruce there to devour him?” he grinned. “I know you want it.”

Thor’s lips trembled in anger and disgust.

“Is this what you were planning to do with Bruce?” Superman’s stare fell and Thor nodded. “You didn’t end your relationship as a true man would do realizing that he had feelings for a third person; instead you treated Bruce cruelly” Superman frowned wondering if Thor knew about his abuse but no, there wasn’t any chance. “A man in recovery, vulnerable due to his impairment; you made his life a Hell accusing him of adultery while you were preparing to cheat him…”

“I wasn’t preparing…”

But Thor didn’t let him continue.

“I doubt if you’d have told Bruce about your affair with Wonder Woman if he hadn’t seen you…and you’d have continued fooling him. He is a great man; he didn’t deserve to be treated like this,
Superman. You broke his heart, a heart that was already wounded – that’s a deed of a lesser man.”

The Man of Steel snorted.

“We both know who he really is…and he isn’t exactly the Little Red Riding Hood who needs your protection.”

Thor’s eyes sparkled.

“Exactly because we know who he is and you know better than me what he’s been through, you should have been more careful with the heart he gave you and not ripping it in pieces.”

Superman shook his head and rolled his eyes chuckling.

“You should thank me instead of berating me because what happened suits you perfectly…” Thor frowned puzzled. “I know you desire him: you fell for him since that day in Mt. Marcy, when Bagdana stripped him and you saw his body naked– I bet the way the demon handled his naked body fascinated you and fired your interest in the mortal” Thor was staring at him disgusted. “Well” Superman made a wide gesture “I cleared the path for you: poor Bruce would need your powerful shoulder to cry on and when his head leans on you it won’t be difficult to you to get access to other more tantalizing parts of his body.”

Thor’s punch came to his mouth swift and powerful like a thunder and though Superman was invulnerable that hurt. His eyes flashed red and laser beams launched against the god who brought Mjolnir in front of his face to absorb them. Superman having seen the shielding motion stormed at him sinking his fist in the god’s belly.

Thor gritted his teeth to fight the pain and at the same time downed his hammer on Superman’s head, sparks emanating to every direction. However the pain in his head, Superman clenched his jaw and head butted the Asgardian who answered with an iron punch to Superman’s liver. The Man of Steel blew frozen wind to him carrying the god far from him but Thor pressed his lips and put his palm in front of him halting the air wave and sending it back to Superman who swiftly avoided.

Thor roared and slashed the sky with his hammer sending a thunder to hit Superman’s chest; the alien groaned from the pain and smelt burnt as his suit caught fire but instead of panicking he roared and rushed at the god punching him in the jaw at the same time that Thor punched his guts.

“Oh, damn! I should have brought my camera!” a playful voice filled the sky around them. “This video would have become more viral than the porn one…” the sniggers made both of the god-like beings stop like thunderstruck.

Loki dressed in his dark green attire emerged floating sat with his legs folded. His straight, greasy hair fell in front of him framing his lean face and his bright, sneaky eyes regarded the two gladiators.

“Oh, please” he shook his head innocently “continue” he made an inviting gesture “pretend that I’m not here” he laughed. “Such duel must have at least one viewer!”

“Loki!” Thor roared and a thunder cracked the sky towards the naughty god who grinned at his brother and vanished before the thunder struck him.

Thor turned his head to Superman who felt his aching head; both men had blood running from their mouths.

“The only thing I felt that day at the mountain seeing the demon fondling Bruce was terror for his fate” Thor said calmly his golden locks framing his face “and shame for myself because I failed to defeat the demon. I was always true when I said that I respected and admired him without any sneaky purpose.”

Superman swept the blood from his mouth with the back of his palm.

“However the current twist is not bad for you…”

Thor narrowed his eyes.

“You don’t realize in the least what have you done, don’t you? You shattered Bruce’s heart and now to save the last remnants of his tender heart he built an impenetrable wall not allowing himself to love again. You never understood the man that gifted you with his love, don’t you?” Thor shook his head with pity. “I know Diana is gorgeous but still…leaving Bruce for her?”

“Is none of your business, Asgardian!” Superman roared.

“You doomed everyone who would truly love Bruce and you took from him the chance to find the happiness life owes to him. How can you be so cruel?”

Superman stormed to him but didn’t attack just brought his face in front of Thor’s, baring his teeth.

“I didn’t want things to end like that but my feelings changed…you don’t know many things, Asgardian, and one of these is that Bruce knew that my love would end soon but he didn’t stop me from falling for him. The fault is his as well…Besides…” he turned his back and took off “it wouldn’t serve anyone if I pretended to be still in love with him.”

“I wish some day you feel the same pain you inflicted to that honorable soul!” the god shouted with gritted teeth and Metropolis’ sky cracked in several places from multicolored thunders.

Superman halted for a second midair but resumed his course immediately.

Thor looked at his hammer and his fingers clenched more its hilt: it was obvious that Superman was ignorant of what he dismissed, what he snubbed.

“Bruce, what a surprise!”

Selina exchanged a glance with Bruce who was looking at the man with an unreadable expression that she decoded as uneasiness and suspicion; she could see that Bruce doubted that the newcomer was surprised to find him here: Bruce wasn’t convinced at all that the stranger’s presence there came randomly.

“Mr. Queen…” Bruce greeted him without sharing the man’s enthusiasm.

Queen shook his head and his smugness flashed.

“It’s Oliver, Bruce. We told these things five days ago but I see that they are already forgotten.”

Bruce nodded absentminded: five days! It seemed like five years since he left New York to take Dick from the social service and Zucco’s hands.

Queen tilted slightly his head crooking his lips.

“Of course, so many things have intervened that it must seem like an eternity has passed.”
Bruce didn’t reply to that.

“Would you join us?” he offered politely.

“If I don’t bother your friends…” Queen replied gently.

“But not all…” Selina answered though her voice was a bit indifferent and deep inside she was annoyed by the man’s presence because it ruined their carelessness.

However Hero’s attitude wasn’t so diplomatic: he hissed at the man who laughed as Selina gathered the kitten in her lap.

“I’m allergic to cats and they sense that” Queen chirped. “So I’m glad that gorgeous young lady holds the cute kitten.”

Bruce cleared his throat.

“Let me introduce you: this is Selina Kyle, my best friend. Selina, Mr. Oliver Queen.”

“I have heard of you, Mr. Queen” she said “I’m not giving you my hand because I hold Hero and I’ll aggravate your allergy.”

Queen waved her concerns off smiling in his self confident way.

“It’s not that bad an allergy to thwart me from shaking the hand of a lovely lady…”

So Selina gave him her hand hiding her reluctance.

“And Mr. Rogers” Bruce continued “whom I think you know already.”

Queen turned to Steve offering his hand.

“Of course! How are you, Steve?”

He sat in the comfy dark blue round armchair crossing his legs with elegance and confidence. He snapped his fingers calling the young waitress who served another table and ordered his black espresso.

“I see that Gotham attracts more and more super heroes” Queen said lighthearted. “The odd is that now the city doesn’t need their help as in the past.”

Steve pursed his lips.

“There might be other reasons for someone to be attracted to Gotham…” the corner of his eye met Selina.

“Oh! I see that…” Queen chuckled. “And sure thing” his eyes pinned Bruce “Gotham has more beauties than any other city in the world.”

Bruce blushed and wished for the earth to swallow him: he hated it when someone made such comments for him. Hero growled.

“Your kitten doesn’t like me at all, Miss Kyle” Queen chuckled.

Selina gave a cold grin because she sensed how uncomfortable Bruce felt and she didn’t like how aggressively this man flirted her friend.
“Actually, it’s Bruce’s kitten and always wants to protect his master.”

Steve realized the odd atmosphere and after the waitress brought Queen’s order and left, turned to him.

“And what brings YOU here, Mr. Queen?”

Queen smiled broadly.

“Please, call me Oliver because otherwise I’ll have to call you captain…” he took a sip from his coffee. “Mmm…very nice” he mumbled. “What brings me here, huh? Dear Steve, I had a very interesting discussion with Bruce in New York but we were forced to interrupt abruptly. I came here to continue that discussion” he lifted his eyebrows looking at Bruce “I hope your offer for a dinner still holds?”

Bruce didn’t answer and Queen nodded smiling smugly with an inner knowledge.

“I understand that after the latest developments you’re not so interested anymore to learn about Themyscyra. But I assure you I have also some business propositions to discuss so I guarantee that our dinner will be still worthwhile.”

Selina looked at Bruce.

“I’m certainly interested in your propositions but also I still want to learn about the island of the Amazons: it’s a fascinating subject” he said nonchalant. “Why I should have stopped caring about that?” of course he knew already what Queen hinted.

Queen lolled his head on the side and grinned with his enigmatic way tapping his fingers on the marble table.

“I saw the same video the entire world has seen, Bruce” he said and though he tried to give some sadness to his voice it came out like he actually was satisfied.

Bruce frowned.

“To which video you refer, Oliver?”

Queen’s face cracked in a wide amused grin.

“The one with Superman and Wonder Woman fucking on the rooftop – it was a rooftop in Gotham, huh? Fancy that…” he lifted his eyebrows and Steve and Selina looked at him pissed. “I’m really sorry, Bruce” his voice’s color changed dramatically “it must be painful…after everything you suffered, the man who promised you love and happiness to betray you like that.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“Strange that you think that Superman had something with me while I had already told you that this story was a lie: I don’t see the reason you continue mentioning that” he shrugged and sipped from his chocolate. “After that, I think it is clear that I still want to learn about the legendary island.”

Queen’s face sobered and his eyes stilled on Bruce’s.

“I’m really glad to hear that you didn’t do the madness to engage with Superman” Steve looked at Selina who pressed her lips brushing Hero. “So our dinner is fixed?”

Bruce nodded though Queen’s attitude bothered him. However he still wanted to solve Diana’s mystery and learn more about the mysterious billionaire.

“Of course. I’ll see my schedule and I’ll call you to arrange the day and exact hour.”

Queen waved his hand elegantly.

“I don’t want to put you to the fuss to search and dial my number; I’ll call you” his smile was radiant and smug.

Bruce felt the irritation boiling inside him for the man’s persistence but smiled stoically.

“Fine then. Call me one of these days and I’ll send Alfred to bring you to the Manor.”

The older man shook his head dismissingly.

“Pardon me but I’d prefer to dine somewhere else…” Bruce frowned. “I have heard that the roof garden restaurant of Cobblepot’s Imperial Hotel is splendid.”

Bruce looked at him but Selina had had enough.

“Are you always so pushy and demanding, Mr. Queen? Because it is rather annoying!” she spat with gritted teeth and eyes sparkling.

However Queen didn’t seem annoyed at all.

“With matters that really are important to me, yes, Miss Kyle…I wouldn’t have survived otherwise. Bruce understands…” he locked eyes with Bruce. “Our lives have too much in common: he knows that if you want to survive when everyone else tries to kill you, you must be stubborn and pushy to prevail and gain what you want. Right, Bruce?”

Bruce didn’t answer; he looked at his wristwatch.

“I must leave you now” he glanced at Selina and she understood that it was time for him to pick Dick up from the gym; she stood too.

“I’ll come with you, Bruce” she said and tightened her hold to Hero who was rather itchy. “Steve, keep Mr. Queen some company and I’ll catch up with you later” she gave him a quick kiss on the lips.

Steve squeezed her hand.

“Okay, Sel.”

Queen watched the two youths leaving the café with the same mysterious grin on his face and then turned to Steve.

“They are both escape artists, aren’t they?” he chuckled cocking an eyebrow.
Tony was watching the data Lucius fed from his processor to the hologram: items that were found in LexLabs without any information accompanying them or any profound use and relation to the ongoing projects of the various labs.

Lucius were pointing with the stick to certain parts of the items that in his opinion signalized the connection between them.

“Bruce believes that these items are important…” Tony mumbled “despite the fact that they don’t seem to have any significance.”

“And that’s exactly what convinced Mr. Wayne that they might be the most important finding from the LexLabs” Lucius replied smiling. “You know how your friend is thinking: for him the obvious is never the real; and the fact that we’re talking about Luthor makes him more adamant about that. I have to admit that finding such items in every LexLab in the States and aboard, without any other thing in common apart from these symbols that remind hieroglyph flares my curiosity too. What’s your opinion, Mr. Stark?”

Tony shrugged pouting and gesture to him to continue with his presentation.

Yet the clever scientist had already realized that his younger colleague was elsewhere, deep in thought; his eyes might have been on the holographic presentation but his mind elsewhere. So he didn’t continue, turned his wheeled stool to face Tony and let the presentation stick on the desk, taking off his glasses and placing them also on the desk; he looked at Tony.

The billionaire feeling suddenly Lucius’ sharp eyes on him let swiftly his thoughts and straightened his posture on the stool: how on earth he managed to slump on a laboratory stool without falling to the floor was a wonder even for Tony Stark who had perfected the slumping thing. He met Lucius’ searching glance lifting his eyebrows.

“And?” he asked as if he was watching what Lucius was saying till now. “Why you stopped, Lucius? I’m all ears.”

Lucius chuckled amused.

“I see that, Mr. Stark! Your ears are here but your brain elsewhere.”

They were at Lucius’ private lab in Wayne Tower and they had chosen the evening because employees were gone and they could discuss matters without disruptions or the danger of being overheard despite the fact Lucius’ lab was full soundproof.

Lucius blinked, his face getting his most serious expression.

“What is bothering you, Mr. Stark?”

Tony closed his eyes, lolled his head on the side and rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“C’mon, Lucius” he opened his eyes “you can call me Tony” he lifted his eyebrows.

Lucius smiled.

“Mr. Wayne had asked me the same thing: to call him just Bruce” he pressed his lips “but I must insist on calling you as I am now. If I call you Tony, then I should call Mr. Wayne Bruce and I want everyone to pay to both of you the respect you deserve so I’m giving first the example” he smiled. “But for me you two are still the tots that ran in my laboratory twittering questions.”

Tony smiled tenderly on the memory.

“Now” Lucius said determined. “You’re hearing but not paying attention, right? What’s wrong?”

Tony yanked his head backwards and ruffled his messy locks.

“I was listening, Lucius: thankfully, I have the ability to listen and think other things at the same time. But, yes, you’re right: my mind is elsewhere.”

Lucius nodded.

“Well?”

Tony pressed his lips making his lower cheeks swell. He crossed his arms.

“I just don’t share Bruce’s trait to care about other things than himself; for me what matters now more than anything else” he lifted his eyebrows almost to his hairline “and certainly more than these gewgaws, is Bruce.”

Lucius nodded, understanding Tony’s worry.

“I see and I agree that it was certainly a heavy blow” he shook his head. “I mean Mr. Wayne loves him so much and he was happy…But Mr. Wayne is a unique young man; so strong that will get through this.”

Tony covered his eyes with his palm and sighed.

“Unfortunately, what happened has also other implications!” he huffed.

Lucius frowned and Tony leaned towards him.

“Lucius, what troubles me and makes me sweat is Bruce’s surgery.”

Lucius lowered his eyes.

“We’ll arrange everything perfectly.”

Tony hugged his own ribs and shook his head.

“Still it’d be a very difficult, tricky operation, Lucius; you know that” the older man nodded. “I estimate that in the best it’ll last ten hours.”

Lucius tapped his fingers on the desk uncomfortably, understanding what Tony wanted to say.

“It’s too much, Lucius…” he huffed and rubbed his cheeks with his palms. “It’s too much for him.”

Lucius didn’t want to leave his younger colleague in this despair.

“Tony, you shouldn’t be pessimist.”

But the younger man yanked his head and looked him in the eyes.

“Lucius, six months ago he struggled to stay alive: he almost died – he was dead for minutes. And then he fought for one month to wake from the coma” Lucius blinked thoughtful. “His health is unstable” he gestured chuckling “he is recovering and still climbs on rooftops and works hard. By the way, did I mention that I hate you for persuading me to participate in the making of that armor?” he inhaled deeply “but mostly I hate myself for being persuaded.”

Lucius chuckled.

“I’d be worse, Tony, if he did it on his own…because you know very well that our denial to forge that armor wouldn’t have stopped him from getting it.”

Tony pressed his lips and shook his head because he knew that Lucius was right.

“Yeah…his damn stubbornness! He never thinks himself and his needs” he waved his hand upwards “he doesn’t consider at all his upcoming surgery: he is in recovery, he exhausted his energy in battling for his life and instead of trying to restore that energy by sitting and resting, he…” he growled. “And” he continued “we know that his organism has weak foundations: growing up in Falcone’s clutches, was famished without taking the nutrients he needed; he was tortured; his body is already tired and exhausted despite the fact his willpower covers that” he locked eyes with Lucius whose expression became grim. “All in all, Lucius: I dread that surgery! I don’t know if I want Bruce to be put through that new hardship because I don’t know if he’ll come out alive; if he’ll survive that” he jerked his arms in the air. “How many impossible battles can he give in such short period of time?!"

“You want to cancel the surgery?” Lucius voice was sympathetic and not judgmental at all.

Tony pressed his lips and rubbed his goatee.

“I admit that it has become a very tempting and repeating thought of lately. This way Bruce may remain forever confined in a chair…” he yanked his head closing his head and huffing exasperated “damn me! But he will be alive, Lucius! This organism is not going to make it through such complicated and long, tormenting surgery!” he planted his elbows to his knees and looked at the floor. “And I don’t want to lose him again!”

Lucius was staring at the younger man sad.

“Mr. Wayne will never accept this” he replied calmly. “He wants more than anything to walk again… and he won’t stop till he gets that which means that if he realizes that his best friend sabotages his unique chance of walking not only he’d be hurt but also he’ll search for someone else willing or careless to perform that surgery. Which will be dangerous for his life and his secrets.”

Tony lowered more his head and intertwined his fingers clenching his hands together: Lucius was right yet his rightness couldn’t change Tony’s feelings about this.

“Bruce wants to walk again to be able to fight criminals; we gave him already the way to have this so the surgery isn’t so important to him anymore.”

Lucius widened his eyes to him cocking his eyebrows: Mr. Stark couldn’t possibly believe that.

“Have you discussed that with Mr. Wayne?”

Tony hid his face in his palms and sighed, revealing his face and looking at the older man.

“You know that I haven’t because Bruce obviously wouldn’t agree…Ugh! I wish he had accepted to be enrolled in Princeton… But of course he didn’t…” he shook his head “Gotham would never let him live his life as he deserves…”
Lucius placed his hand on Tony’s shoulders.

“You friend, Tony, has survived all these years against the worst odds” he smiled “that alone should raise our optimism. Also, the fact that the whole project has his best friend on the head which friend happens to be one of the greatest minds of our times increases even more our certainty.”

Tony’s eyes were thoughtful and his lips pursed.

“I was counting on that asshole…” he said emotionless and Lucius frowned. “I mean, that alien… Actually, I was counting on his Fortress to perform the surgery…” he uttered for the first time aloud what was planning from the moment they started preparing the groundbreaking surgery.

Lucius’ frowning became deeper.

“You intended on bringing doctors to Superman’s secret refuge? He surely has things there that he wouldn’t want to expose to strangers.”

“We would have taken all the necessary precautions and for Bruce’s sake he would have done it…” he bit his lip and huffed lifting his eyebrows. “Obviously, I had bought that he loved Bruce… Even I was fooled by his act; even I hadn’t imagined that he’d do what he did.”

Lucius didn’t comment on that so Tony continued.

“Fortress is the ideal environment for such a tricky operation: completely controlled and it already knew Bruce’s organism. The alien had told me that the night Bruce almost died he took the Black Butterfly there and put it on Bruce’s chest – a light was created that engulfed Bruce helping him escape the imminent danger of dying and stabilize” he rolled his eyes. “I don’t believe in magic and mambo-jumbo but I know that some buildings, especially, those pyramid shaped” he united his palms in a pyramid “are centers of great energy and along with the rare, powerful gem something was done that night” he moved his hand “something that I would give my entire fortune to have again during Bruce’s surgery. But” he widened his eyes “we must cross out the Fortress option.”

Lucius was rubbing his chin as Tony elaborated on the Fortress’ assets. He knew that the younger man was right.

“We still can ask Superman: I don’t believe that he’d refuse. He might have chosen another person and broke up with Bruce yet I’m sure he won’t deny him the chance to be healed. He didn’t take away the energy casts.”

Tony’s eyes were grim as he shook his head in the negative pursing his lips.

“That would have been completely gross… But giving the Fortress for Bruce’s operation under this woman’s influence?” he cackled bitterly. “I highly doubt it…” he cocked his eyebrows “I don’t believe that he cares about Bruce – otherwise he wouldn’t have done that now. But even if…” he inhaled deeply “for Bruce’s sake, I was willing to plead with him…” he saw Lucius staring at him “yes, Lucius, no matter how I despise him for Bruce’s sake I would beg him to permit that. However I’m positive that Bruce wouldn’t want to ask anything from the alien. He is too proud and dignified to ask anything from him. Now.”

Lucius nodded.

“I believe the same” he stood and Tony made the same walking to the holographic pillars with the flow of data.

The younger man was watching the flood of information gloomy.
“We can make for him the perfect artificial neurons; the perfect bionic spinal parts to replace those smashed in the accident; I can make him the perfect micro arc reactors to energize the artificial neurons; but these can’t secure that he will last through the procedure” he shook his head appalled. “His body will be opened, the energy casts will be removed which isn’t easy, the dead neurons must be extracted, the new ones planted…” he clutched his head. “It’s way too much, Lucius, even for a person without Bruce’s history.”

Lucius placed both his hands on Tony’s shoulders and the billionaire looked at him.

“Your friend, Mr. Stark, is a born fighter. And winner. And you have the same qualities so as much as I share your concerns I’m sure that you two will make it once again. We’ll have the best doctors and surgeons to perform the operation and the new nano-laser operational system our Research and Development department has perfected. Yes, Mr. Stark, this surgery will be difficult and challenging but we will make the miracle.”

Tony licked his lips.

“I wish Thomas Wayne was alive…” Lucius’ eyes fell on remembering his friend. “He was the best neurosurgeon in the world…he had succeeded miraculous operations that the others wouldn’t have dared to think” he chuckled. “And for his son he’d have done even more” suddenly he remembered the theory of Thomas being the last descendant of Nemesis’ high priest-healer and it made so much sense…

“It would have been too difficult for Thomas to have his son’s life in his hands…” he sighed. “It’d be great if we had him and Martha with us…” he stilled his eyes in Tony’s and held his shoulders. “But we would do the best with what we have and we’ll make it.”

Tony smiled yet he was determined to find ways to enhance his friend’s chances.

The rectangular window that covered the middle of the wall’s entire length was open, the subtle, freezing breeze waving the white, heavy curtain. Diana stood in front of it gazing the dark horizon. She wore a royal red silken robe over her white-gold ancient Greek toga that reached the middle of her thighs; her diadem was still on her raven-blue hair. Her golden lasso was placed on one of the tables beside a pot shaped in ancient Greek style; the impressive sword of the Amazons leaned on the same table.

She smiled satisfied seeing a red and blue dot on the horizon gradually growing up to form Superman’s body. She stepped aside to let him in but seeing him in the plenty light of the apartment frowned: his face was bruised and his attire had burnings; his raven hair had smoke.

Superman put his feet on the fluffy carpet a bit too heavy and looked at Diana’s perplexed face; he smiled but he couldn’t hide that he was a bit shaken so hurried to slump tired on the dark green sofa. Diana narrowed her eyes and followed him fast to sit beside him rubbing his arm.

“What happened? Attack with Kryptonite?” her voice was strong as ever but with a hue of worry.

Superman grinned and caressed her cheek.

“No.”

“Then I don’t understand.”

Superman lifted his eyebrows sarcastic and chuckled.
“I came across Thor…the Asgardian god.”

She nodded.

“I know; and he attacked you? That’s preposterous and crazy! How dare he?”

Superman focused his gaze on one of the pots on the white waist table in front of him.

“He is the newest champion of Bruce…” he replied scoffing. “He clearly fancies him and plays his protector…”

Diana closed her eyes and yanked her head exasperated.

“Just fancies? Maybe he is already fucking him…” she said slyly noticing the uncomfortable twitch in Superman’s eyes. “We’re talking about Wayne here…I cannot understand what you men find in that bitch!” she growled and Superman looked at her in puzzlement; she lifted her eyebrow. “At least you realized your mistake…An Asgardian god is the new inhabitant of that little bitch’s bed.”

Superman narrowed his eyes; he was unable to get angry with Diana yet those words against Bruce felt wrong. On the other hand, he had said the same things to him and…probably they were true. He engaged Diana’s lips in a passionate kiss.

“Now I feel better…” he smiled when they detached and caressed her swan neck.

“Let me see” she ordered him and moved her hand in a gesture of him getting undressed.

It was after he lowered the upper part of his suit that realized that he had forgotten to cover the mark from the Knife of Justice. Diana’s fingers brushed his wide, perfect chiseled chest where a long, superficial burning stood out in the middle.

“It’s nothing” he said. “Just a tiny thunder from Thor’s artillery” he snorted.

Diana touched the irritated skin.

“It is made from an Asgardian weapon: it’ll take time to heal completely” she growled. “That stupid god! Quarrelling with you for a bitch’s sake: it’s ridiculous.”

To Clark’s horror her brilliant blue eyes focused on the scratch Bruce’s Knife left to his upper arm.

“And what’s this?” she caressed the wounded flesh. “I didn’t know that Thor uses blades…” her eyes were suspicious.

Superman chuckled.

“Neither did I; that’s why he got me” he couldn’t admit to her that someone else had managed to get to him: it was alright to be hit by a god but by a mortal? Diana’s respect would be shaken.

“That sneaky bastard!” she spat. “Next time I see him I’ll teach him some things about warrior’s honor! Tell me you made him damage!” she wrapped her arms around his neck and kissed his ear.

Superman fondled her ribs, the fine silk tickling his senses as much as the view from Diana’s deep cleavage.

“I didn’t stand with crossed arms…He had a taste of Superman’s punches.”

Diana smirked.
“He bled?” she asked gleefully.

Superman chuckled.

“At least as much as I…but screw him, babe…I’m here with you and I already forgot everything concerning the outside world.”

She watched his hands unbinding her robe’s belt and began sucking his neck inviting him to do what he desired.

“I saw you saving that school bus; I was nearby ready to rush to your aid but you didn’t need it: I saw the relief and joy on your face when the kids were safe and since then I was thinking…”

“Mmm…” he mumbled pushing the wide straps of her toga off her shoulders and planting soft kisses to her breasts.

“Humans are ungrateful to you…” she moaned raising her long legs to hug his waist; her toga was now a rumpled, lane around her waist – the upper part lowered and the bottom part lifted leaving her enticing body all naked apart from her waist. “You save them every day; you save their children and they expose you with stupid videos of your personal moments and make fun of you…”

Superman was fondling her hips, rubbing his still dressed groin to her warm genitals; he was sucking her nipples but her words made him lift his head panting and look at her while she ruffled his messy hair.

“Can we just not discuss about humans in this apartment?”

She cocked an eyebrow and smiled.

“No need for you to ask! Humans deserve only our pity – nothing more…” she moaned as Superman lowered to lick her perfect ripped abdominals “I just want to focus on us… Let Thor bang the little human bitch: if he considers himself satisfied with Falcone’s leftovers – it’s laughable” she stabbed her nails to his back as he discarded his suit guiding his erection in her gaping entrance.

However, Clark had difficulties on erasing from his mind the image of Thor touching a naked Bruce on the grey silk of his beddings: the fake images of Thor fucking Bruce under the rainbow bridge in Battery Park returned to him turning his insights into burning knots. His still hot anger being expressed with violent thrusts that made Diana groan satisfied, scratching and biting his neck.

He was with Diana; sex with her was the best; he had cheated Bruce and he kicked him out; however, Clark knew that he didn’t even stand the idea of Bruce being fucked by another man…

Dick hanged his backpack on the shoulder and came out of the showers heading to the main hall and from there to the cafeteria to stall as much as possible the moment he’d have to get inside Wayne’s car – he wanted to be on time outside because he didn’t want Wayne to come inside bragging that he was his guardian. Except than Jason and the principal and social worker of the school nobody had found out yet; and Dick was very happy for this. Who would want to be connected with someone like Wayne?

Suddenly, he was startled when a hand tapped his shoulder from behind.

“Champ?” a familiar voice told him and the boy turned around to acknowledge the man whose identity he already knew.
“Tony!” he rushed to the man and hugged him relieved.

Zucco chuckled and patted the boy’s back.

“Easy, big guy…”

Dick released him and looked his smiling face.

“How did you manage to come near me? Wayne has set his dogs to supposedly protect me but actually to keep you away.”

Zucco shook his head thoughtful.

“Yeah, I have noticed…However there’s nothing that can keep me away from my only nephew. And…I have still some friends in the gym; not to mention that I know this place like the back of my hand including some backside doors” he winked. “Can I buy you a juice?”

The boy smiled.

“Sure, Tony! I missed you so much…Now that granny is missing you’re the only relative I have.”

Zucco wrapped his arm around Dick’s shoulders and walked towards the cafeteria choosing the corridor that avoided the grand training hall: he didn’t want any unpleasant encounter.

They sat on a corner table in the far end of the cafeteria and placed their order.

“You look very upset, Dick” Zucco remarked sipping his coffee after the waiter left.

Dick rolled his eyes.

“Are you kidding me, right? My granny disappeared and suddenly I find myself in the hands of the man who was the reason my whole family was killed; and now he steps in taking me away from my father’s only relative! Ugh!”

Zucco raised an eyebrow.

“At least, you got your tough little friend to make you company.”

Dick shook his head exasperated.

“Jay…He is gaping at Wayne’s filthy riches and I’m sure he likes him – Jay doesn’t understand me: he is a good kid but he just can’t understand me. He lives in his own world…And I’m not blaming him…”

Zucco nodded pursing his lips.

“And little Jason doesn’t like me so…he has another thing in common with Wayne” he remarked snidely. “Hm…At least, you live in a nice environment, with everything a boy would dream.”

Dick crooked his mouth and crossed his arms.

“Bullshit! I can’t stand the place and him driving me around, showing of what a good man he is! I’d prefer living in a barn than in this palace with him!” Zucco’s eyes were sparkling gleeful. “Pff! This situation gets on my nerves, Tony! And…” he sighed “I was a mess in the training…”

Zucco cupped the boy’s hand on the table and looked him in the eyes.
“You must keep your calm, Dick, and not let him ruin more your life: it’s what he wants, don’t you see? Make you collapse... But you must focus on your school and your training. You will become great like your father!”

Dick leaned towards him and widened his eyes.

“I want to run away from him” he pressed his lips and blinked shyly, hesitant in case the man didn’t want what he was ready to say “I want to live with you, Tony... if you want me…”

Zucco inhaled deeply, locked eyes with the boy thoughtful and then smiled.

“You’re not serious saying that, champ…” Dick’s eyes fell disappointed but Zucco chuckled and cupped his cheeks tight “if I didn’t want you, I wouldn’t have come to the Social Service to take you. I don’t want anything more than having my best friend’s boy with me... And since you want it too…” he smirked “soon we’ll manage that, Dick.”

Dick shook his head and jerked his hands upwards.

“How?! Granny gave him my guardianship!”

The adult smiled self-confidently.

“The fact your granny gave him your guardianship doesn’t mean that he is capable of being your guardian…” Dick frowned. “If he appears incapable of exercising his obligations I can contest his guardianship and become your guardian.”

Zucco’s eyes glimmered and Dick’s sparkled joyful.

“Is that possible?” the boy exclaimed loudly his enthusiasm making him mindless of the people around; Zucco showed him with his hand to lower his tone and the boy blushed “I mean he’s filthy rich; he owns half the city.”

The adult shook his head.

“The court will consider other things: Wayne has a very bad past that makes him unreliable” he took in the boy’s puzzled look and fixed his eyes in the boy’s. “People with half his experiences are mentally unstable and thus his incapability of being your guardian will be easy to prove. But I’ll need your cooperation: everything depends on you, Dick.”

Dick rolled his eyes exasperated.

“You don’t have to worry about this, Tony: you know how much I want to escape his clutches.”

The adult grinned satisfied.

“That’s my boy!”

“What I must do?”

Zucco’s eyes sparkled: everything went according to his wishes. He tapped his fingers on the metallic rectangular table.

“At the moment, he is keeping your guardianship under the radar - secret: obviously, to avoid any discussions and doubts for his suitability. So our first priority is to make it known that Wayne is a boy’s ward. You have to inform everyone you know about that: friends, janitors in the school or the gym, parents of your peers. Taking care of pointing out how miserable he makes you.”
Dick cocked his eyebrows and snorted.

“That won’t be any difficult: he really makes me miserable” he chuckled and Zucco looked at him inquiringly. “Till now I wasn’t saying to anyone about him being my guardian because I was ashamed.”

The adult gave a broad wicked grin and nodded.

“And now you’ll let everyone know how uncomfortable, nervous and ashamed this man makes you feel…manifesting it with your behavior at school and the gym - everywhere” he winked.

Dick smiled.

“Wicked!” he exclaimed understanding and Zucco shook his head.

“And then you must take advantage of every chance to show how incompetent he is in taking care of you…how irresponsible. For example, leaving from his side and making him look for you asking help from others: in other words, make his life a Hell and embarrass him in front of everyone. Make others realize how useless he is and that a boy under his guardianship not only is unhappy and depressed but also in physical danger.”

Dick huffed.

“I like that and knowing that I’ll make his life a Hell and him completely miserable and an ass gives me energy… And in the end I’ll be with you” the boy huffed relieved. “Until granny is found and she realizes how wrong was about you and will become a family.”

Zucco smiled benevolently but his eyes sparkled gleefully as he caressed the boy’s hair. He was pitying the boy.

“It’s what uncles do for their favorite nephews, champ: helping and saving them from tight holes. To make them smile again.”

“Thank you, Tony! I’m so lucky you came to my life in this tough moment!”

The adult grinned.

“I can say the same, Dick…”

Selina walked beside Bruce heading to the city’s gym not far from the café. Hero was sitting in his butt on Bruce’s lap like a miniature lion or a king; the kitten was gazing around the multicolored lights that now, as the night fell completely, shone brighter.

“The old Hero was gazing like this the Christmas’ lights…” Selina said casually looking at the city’s decorations.

Bruce nodded and scratched the kitten’s head.

“He managed to see one Christmas…the poor thing…surviving so much and in the end being killed like this” his voice was almost indifferent but Selina knew what lied underneath. “Where did you bury him?” he turned his head to his friend.

Selina rubbed Bruce’s back pressing her lips.
Near Saint Mary’s Park, in a niche with a great view to the rose bushes. I thought that he’d like to sniff them with his pink little nose as he used to do…”

Bruce nodded and looked at the back of Hero’s head because he didn’t want Selina to see his eyes watering.

“I didn’t have the chance to say goodbye to him as I should…” exactly like with my parents, he thought.

Selina bit her lips.

“He knew how much you loved him and that love was enough for him…” she took his hand in her; her gloves was in her short white coat’s pockets. “Your heart was with him…”

Bruce yanked his head backwards to let the chilly night atmosphere clear his eyes and mind. Selina chuckled.

“You know…I’m sure that he is still watching us” she locked eyes with Bruce and showed him two fingers “with two healthy, wicked little eyes and is happy when we are. I think he sent us Hero the second to take care of us because he doesn’t trust us at all…”

Bruce laughed and petted the small animal that purred appreciatively.

“I thought you didn’t believe in these things” he snorted. “You’re a reasonable girl.”

She lifted her eyebrows.

“Not when our Hero is concerned…”

“How convenient!” he teased her and she pulled softly his hair that was cold.

Bruce never believed in afterlife and that one’s loved ones watch from above; he knew that it was nonsense, just wishful thinking…and frankly the idea terrorized him: that his parents might have been watching him all these years being disgustingly, humiliatingly used by so many people. Even now his heart was clenched and his cheeks blushed, thinking of this.

But mostly he was terrorized from the thought that if he fed himself with such fairytales the blow would be devastating when he woke up and realized his illusion. Yet he had seen in that cave his mother holding Hero and wanted so much to be true…as much as he was aware that when he saw them a concussion and Joker’s drug cocktail was affecting him…He gulped.

Selina didn’t like his silence and she was thinking constantly what happened in the café; that Queen guy and his behavior. Bruce realized that and stopped the wheelchair yanking his head to look at her eyes. Selina squatted and cupped his cheeks with both hands.

“Your cheeks are frozen and rosy… Are you cold?”

Bruce smiled.

“No, I’m fine: the chair is very warm and…” he shook his head “you know that I’m used to cold.”

Selina lifted her eyebrows and nodded. Eighteen years Bruce was living in a frozen underground cell without proper clothes, sleeping without even a blanket. Bruce touched her hands.

“What?” he asked.
“Yes, you are” she answered. “And you’re used to other things as well but that doesn’t mean that you should continue tolerate them now.”

Bruce frowned and Selina rolled her eyes huffing.

“Bruce, I know that you tolerated much” she stressed the word without elaborating “from Superman.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side and was ready to retort but Selina touched her fingertips to his lips stopping him.

“Sssss… Your entire life you were forced to tolerate stuff for one reason or another… but now you’re free, Bruce, and there’s no need to stand others’ bad behavior.”

“Selina, I’m not a victim!” he retorted defensively.

She caressed his lips hushing him.

“I know you’re not, sweetie: your personality is stronger than anyone I know; so I can’t see why you tolerated that Queen’s behavior: he was insufferable! The way he talked and demanded things it was insulting… And I sensed that he made you feel uncomfortable and pressed; I was sure that you’d put him in his place but you…”

Bruce smiled.

“Yeah” he nodded “his attitude was preposterous but I tolerated him and I’m not upset I did that. I need to keep this man close, Selina.”

“Why?” she asked puzzled.

“Because I must learn things about the supposed Amazon Princess and only he has inner knowledge. He’ll help me solve the mystery.”

Selina closed her eyes and licked her lips turning her head; she took Hero from the armpits since the kitten was twitching his paw at her.

“Superman” she said exasperated. “You’re doing this for him! Why, Bruce? Screw that asshole!”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Selina, you know that he is sweet and kind and generous but this woman has done something to him and changed all these” Selina wasn’t looking at him, clearly disagreeing. “Well, not entirely: he saved a school bus full with children this very morning…”

Selina snapped her head at him.

“So he is okay to treat you like rubbish?”

Bruce huffed.

“I didn’t say that – I sent him away, didn’t I? But he isn’t entirely responsible for his deeds: if I was mind controlled I might have done worse things than him…”

She frowned and snorted.

“He beat you, Bruce and who knows what else that you don’t admit even to me to save his grace”
Bruce didn’t permit any of his facial muscles twitch because Selina would read him like an open book – not that she hadn’t done it already. “You’d have done worse than this?”

“I saw a nightmare, Sel” she shook his head. “I was mind controlled by Ra’s and hurt badly Tony and…him.”

Selina lolled her head on the side petting Hero.

“Give me a break, sweetie! You’re defending him even in your sleep! You love him so much that… Ugh! I hate him more!”

Bruce brushed her forearm and their eyes were met: he didn’t Selina hate nobody on his sake. That night she shot dead Chill still haunted him.

“I saw again the child, Sel” he said warmly to change the subject and she blinked her eyes filling with sympathy. “I was teaching him things; we were strolling in the desert” Selina laughed and Bruce did the same. “He…he had begun to like me: he held my hand” he didn’t want to speak to her about the gruesome rest of the dream.

“You know, Bruce?” she asked thoughtful.

“Mmm?”

She yanked her head shaking off the thoughts.

“Ugh! Never mind!”

“C’mon, say it…”

She stopped walking and looked at him.

“All these…the guardianship, the possible child…I don’t like them” Bruce narrowed his eyes and she closed her eyes huffing. “I mean, you’re a great guardian and you’ll be a great father but it is too soon…I wish you were given more time to calm, to live with some carelessness – I mean, you’ve got already too many responsibilities that don’t let you take care of yourself and recover smoothly.

Adding children on the mix…I know your self-sacrificing nature and I’m sure that Dick and this kid, if exists, will become your priority but you needed some time to live for yourself…” she caressed his locks and Bruce grinned raising his eyebrows.

“Maybe the only way to live it is through the people I love…” he said kissing her palm “and I can’t imagine it otherwise” he cleared his throat and chose to change the subject. “So, back to Superman: I said before what it is hidden behind this must be disclosed because it could be dangerous for everyone. Why someone wants to make Superman a puppet to a woman’s hands?”

“I think that rather than that it is your love for him the greatest reason…” she retorted not buying it.

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I won’t lie to you…” it was the only thing he told her.

Selina nodded sighing and let Hero on Bruce’s lap since the kitten was looking to him.

“So when all this ends and he comes to his senses, you’d take him back…”

Bruce shook his head and caressed Hero who had sprawled over his chest touching his chin with his paw.
“No” he replied calm but absolute.

“I know” she nodded “you’ll punish and torture him – which I totally approve – but after he knells before you and crawls and begs for your forgiveness, you’ll take him back which I…”

“No, Selina; I don’t want him to kneel and beg me for anything: it’s over” his voice was filled with conviction but Selina knew the pain underneath: the wound was bleeding and her heart ached for Bruce; so she didn’t insist to not scratch more the wound.

“Yeah…you can look around you for a new love…” she blinked innocently to Bruce’s puzzled eyes. “I saw how Thor was staring at you during the dinner…And Tony noticed: he acted indifference but I sniffed the air…”

Bruce shook his head and rubbed his forehead.

“Thor is just…a friend” Selina smirked but for Bruce it was agony. “I don’t want that thing in my life ever again” his friend understood that he meant romantic love, sex. “I don’t want anyone look at me like this…” he bit his bottom lip and moved his hand. “I can’t understand why they looking me like this, are they blind?”

Selina pursed her lips with sympathy.

“You’re beautiful, sweetie; that’s why…and you have that great personality that makes even gods like Thor – he is quite the hot stuff! - fell for you.”

Bruce gasped and his eyes widened.

“Please, don’t say that!” he calmed himself. “Thinking what I have let myself do with…with him fills me disgust and shame” Selina closed her eyes in despair. “Ridiculous…”

“Bruce, there is nothing to be ashamed in what you shared with him” there was nobody near them yet Selina mimicked Bruce in avoiding mentioning names.

Bruce didn’t continue just absorbed in petting Hero.

Selina growled.

“However you tolerate Queen for his sake…”

“Oliver Queen might be the key to that mystery: he is the closest to the supposed Diana.”

Selina frowned.

“But if he knows then he is her partner and then you’ll be in danger…”

“I know how to protect myself, Sel…”

She snorted.

“Yeah, like then with Luthor?” he was ready to reply that this was a plan but she stopped him “okay, okay…”

“And it’s not necessary that he is a partner to this scheme: I just want to find out if he noticed something insignificant to him but crucial to understand what’s going on…”

She stopped walking.
“Bruce” she locked eyes with him “this man wants to devour you” Bruce closed his eyes. “I saw it in his eyes and there’s more in him – I sense it -, not necessary nice. I don’t want you exposed to him!”

Bruce held her hands.

“Don’t be afraid, Sel: I won’t. This man has something…I felt it too. But I can’t lose the chance to riddle this. So his interest in me is useful…”

He froze for a second.

“You were always a whore, child; now you’ll be a useful one…”

“What?” she settled his hair above the ear. “Are you feeling alright?”

“I’d be careful, Sel” he said calmly. “But the curious thing is that despite his mysterious character, I don’t feel threatened by him.”

Selina nodded though she wasn’t persuaded that Queen wasn’t a threat for her friend.

“Sel?” Bruce said as they began walking again, the gym coming closer.

“Mmm…”

“Remember the Arrow guy at the Avengers’ Tower?”

“I remember what you told me about him” she pouted “I didn’t see him myself. Why?”

“I have the feeling that he plays a role in all this. He was the one who shot the video with Superman and Wonder Woman.”

Selina looked at him frowned.

“How do you know that?”

“That night Batman saw them on the rooftop because the Arrow led him there: nobody else could have shot that video.”

“So you believe that he knew the significance of that for Batman and if he really knows then he might be implicated in this. Being in Gotham shows that.”

“He isn’t in Gotham anymore: his last sighting was in Chicago where he stopped some thugs from robbing a man” Bruce’s eyes were lost gazing the night. “It’s like he is playing with me – trying to mislead me.”

“You want me to go to Chicago and search for him?”

“No” he said looking her in the eyes and she frowned.

“Why?”

“Because I don’t want you to run around for my own responsibilities; you did that a lot during Falcone’s era and now you shouldn’t be troubled for me.”

Selina rolled her eyes and crooked her mouth jeering; he was ready to retort something but stopped because Bruce had already entered the city’s gym. She grinned: the kiddo ran away to avoid the discussion: however, Selina wanted to visit Chicago. She had info from her people that a filthy rich guy smuggled a very beautiful and rare ruby so… it was time to mix business with pleasure and stretch her cat muscles.

Bruce scanned the gargantuan gym with his eyes and found what he was looking for: Dick’s trainer. He gave Hero to Selina who just caught with him and steered his wheelchair to the 35 years old African American.

The man was watching a couple of kids doing their exercises.

“Mr. Laurie, I’m Bruce Wayne” he gave him his hand for a handshake and Jeffrey took it puzzled

“Yes, I know; I mean I have seen you in the news. Glad to meet you.”

“Me too. You must be wondering what I’m doing here…”

The man smiled.

“Obviously…”

“I’m Richard Grayson’s guardian now that his grandmother disappeared.”

Jeffrey at first cocked his eyebrows impressed and surprised by that.

“Well, that explains the donation for the gym’s renovation…”

“That was to show our gratitude for the great performance and the happiness you gave to our children in the Haven during the Thanksgiving party.”

Jeffrey smiled satisfied from the man’s praise but then he remembered the old lady and shook his head sad.

“It’s a shame, the disappearance of Ms. Turner: I really liked her and poor Dick has already lost his entire family too… I can’t understand this injustice…”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded.

“We’ll find her…I mean the police will” Jeffrey shook his head in disbelief. “Mr. Laurie, you’re Dick’s trainer and Ms. Turner had told me that Dick trusts and likes you very much” the man grinned. “So as his guardian, I’d like to ask you to keep me inform about anything that worries you…for example, if someone harassing him.”

Selina was watching grim.

Jeffrey’s eyes sobered, understanding to whom Wayne might be referring to.

“Ms. Turner had also talked to you about Tony Zucco…”

Bruce was watching closely Jeffrey’s reactions.

“Exactly. You must know him, Mr. Laurie.”

The man smiled.

“I do…Call me Jeff, Mr. Wayne.”
“Bruce” he smiled.

“Well, Bruce: Everyone in the gymnastics’ local team knows him. And many people outside our city’s limits” his voice was hinting things.

“You don’t like him…And you don’t like him being close to Dick.”

“He is his uncle.”

“I know that but you still don’t like him being around the boy.”

“Look, Bruce, Zucco is…”

“My uncle and my father’s cousin” Dick spat having come sneakily from the cafeteria. “What are you trying to do, Wayne? Throw mud at him?”

Bruce shook his head.

“Of course not, Richard: I just wanted to learn about the people around you…”

Dick cackled and remembered what they discussed with his uncle.

“Being my guardian” he shouted causing people’s puzzled stares “by accident doesn’t give you the right to sneak on me and plotting against people I love” Bruce felt uncomfortable from people staring at them “You should look to yourself and be ashamed because unfortunately for you and mostly for me people know who you are!”

The boy crossed his arms and headed to the exit; Selina put Hero on Bruce’s lap and followed him blocking his way. She felt Bruce’s uneasiness that was caused by the boy’s insults.

“Watch your mouth, kid! You don’t know anything about Bruce; if you knew and if you were smart enough to appreciate him you’d be ashamed of yourself!”

“I am ashamed, lady! Of having him as my guardian!”

“Because you’re not ‘smart enough’: you’re just a little, self-absorbed brat who thinks that he is better than everyone else! I got news for you, dude: you’re just making fool of yourself!”

Now more people were staring at them and Bruce just caught up with them.

“Selina, please…” he said behind Dick but she didn’t look at him having her flared eyes locked with Dick’s.

But Dick bypassed her and rushed outside toppling some kids on his way.

Bruce sighed and Selina patted him. Jeffrey moved her hands to disperse the people that had gathered to watch and looked at Bruce with sympathy.

“Dick is a good kid, Bruce but he is having a rough time and Zucco fuels his bad attitude. But I believe in Dick, Bruce: he’ll realize his mistake eventually: he just needs patience, understanding and guidance.”

Bruce nodded suddenly feeling the responsibility burdening his shoulders.
Chapter 46

Chapter Summary

I'd like to thank all of you from the bottom of my heart for reading, letting kudos and commenting. I really appreciate it!

The younger kids that were training and had approached due to Dick’s yells soon forgot the incident and gathered around Bruce playing with Hero who twitched his paw brushing the little fingers that touched him, clearly enjoying the attention more than his human friend. Bruce looked at Selina who shrugged sighing understanding her friend’s hurry to catch Dick but she was also helpless against all these kids.

Jeffrey gave the solution: he clapped once and a dozen small eyes looked at him.

“Back to yours works, boys and girls!” it was the only thing he needed to say for the noisy rabble to disperse.

The trainer winked to the youths.

“You have to get the hang of it…” he smiled.

“I’m sorry…” Selina said after they exited the building having greeted Dick’s trainer.

Bruce smiled.

“No, you’re not…” he answered playfully staring her in the eyes and Selina huffed exasperated.

“You’re right: I’m not sorry for putting that little brat in his place. But I’m sorry I made people stare at us…”

Bruce shook his head.

“Forget it…Besides they were staring before you berated Dick…I understand: it’s difficult for you to listen someone speak to me like that…”

“Unbearable…” she corrected him nonchalant.

“Anyway…But Selina, please, be more patient with him: he has been through a lot and he is in a difficult age.”

Selina put her feet down and stopped crossing her arms.

“In his age, you’ve been through a lot more than him but you didn’t act like that!”

Bruce gave a crooked smile.

“Maybe because I couldn’t.”

Selina growled.
“Stop defending him, sweetie! And don’t stop me from scolding him because you can’t: he deserves it and kids need some discipline.”

Bruce petted Hero who climbed in his chest.

“In his age, you liked to be disciplined?” he raised an eyebrow and grinned.

“I wasn’t like him” she protested and then shook her head defeated “You’re helpless!”

They resumed their route to the car where Dick was waiting with arms crossed and face turned to the opposite direction.

Selina smirked and cocked her eyebrows.

“Now I get why his people call him Dick…And since he is a small dick, he is more pissed!”

Bruce choked in his own saliva and chuckled.

“Oh! Selina!”

She turned and looked at him slyly.

“I’m wrong?”

Bruce shook his head.

“Give him some time: I’m sure he is a good kid…Will you come with us to the Manor for dinner?” he took her hand.

“Sorry, sweetie…I must find Steve – if he survived Queen…” she chuckled. “Unless you’re afraid to be alone in the car with the Antichrist…”

Bruce lolled his head and stared at her disapproving but she laughed.

“Maybe we’ll come later” she squatted and kissed Bruce in the cheek. “I’m off: no mood to see his face again. See ya!”

She waved her hand and Bruce smiled to her before she distanced in her wiggling movements.

“And now we’re alone, Hero” he told to the kitten holding him from the armpits and continued to his car.

“I’m sure you’re happy about that!” Dick spat as soon as Bruce approached.

Yet Bruce didn’t hasten to answer him and went to the driver’s door where he pressed his thump on the print reader socket unlocking the car.

“I think that the only one happy about what happened is you, Dick” he replied almost indifferent without any hue of accusation. “It’s unlocked” he gestured to him to get in.

Dick huffed, unfolded his arms and got in jumping at the seat. Bruce left Hero on the car’s floor and grabbed the armrests, supported his body on his hands and slipped to the driver’s seat – Hero having moved to Dick’s legs; then he folded the wheelchair and placed it at the back seat.

“I know you hate me, Dick” Bruce began as the car was moving to the city’s exit to Palisades.
The boy brushing the kitten on his lap raised his eyebrows and snorted.

“Wow! That’s the conclusion of the year!” he rolled his eyes.

Bruce cast him a glance and then looked at the road in front of him.

“Yeah…I don’t expect you to change your feelings about me…”

“Good for you!”

“Please, let me finish, Dick: I know you’re a boy with manners.”

Dick snorted.

“Don’t call me Dick: only my people call me by my nickname.”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded.

“As you wish…What I was saying is that I’m only trying to make your living with me as bearable as possible and I think that you should try to do the same. I don’t ask you to stop hating me but at least do not express that so…clearly in front of my friends because they will react as Selina just did and I don’t like our current situation to become worse…” he glanced at the boy. “It’d be only temporarily, Richard: police will find your grandmother and you’ll be together again so you won’t have to see me never again.”

Dick licked his lips.

“Why you came in the gym? To sneak on me?”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I wanted to see the place you spent so many hours.”

“You can say these to some stupid – not me. Because I know that you did it to spy my movements and put my trainer do it too. It’s not enough that you isolated me from my uncle: my only remaining relative!”

“I’m just trying to do what your grandmother wanted.”

“Stop playing the father!”

“I’m not, Richard” Bruce replied calmly.

Dick snapped his head to the window grunting but Hero stood to his back legs and licked the boy’s chin forcing him to laugh. Bruce smiled but didn’t stare to not ruin the moment.

“Hero is the only good thing in you…” Dick mumbled snorting knowing that Bruce had heard his carefree laugh.

Bruce didn’t look at him.

“I’m happy you find something good in me…”

Dick gulped and caressed Hero who was staring at him.

“Wrong expression: I meant in the situation not in you!” he spat.
Bruce pressed his lips but didn’t comment and Dick brushed the screen at the car’s control panel turning on the radio, rock songs the only sound in the car throughout the rest of the road.

Three days later…

Vale’s beautiful but heavy makeuped face shone with a big, false smile. The audience of her show clapped enthusiastically as she marched on her high heels to her throne-like red armchair in the middle of the elliptic, bluish stage.

She waved to them and sat graciously crossing her legs that their flaws were concealed by the dangerously short leather skirt she wore. Vicky pushed her silken, shiny blond curls behind her ear and looked at the camera.

“Today is a beautiful day for our city, my dear friends – though it’s chilly without any snowflake yet!” she sighed. “Anyways, we can hope everything since finally, our Gotham gets the limelight for something else than record criminality rates or…” she chuckled “supposed huge flying rodents – for something great! Vicky Vale, your devoted friend, will bring you the good news first!”

The audience clapped whistling and Vicky smiled supposedly shy and huffed.

“I love it when I have good news! Especially when that specific person is involved…” she nodded. “Oh! I won’t torture you anymore…Well, who else could bring the national and international spotlights on our city? Mmm… I’m sure my clever friends are already suspecting… Huh! Do not forget our special prize for today: join us and be in the daily ballot for $5,000 cash!”

New claps and whistles but also some questions about the great news. Vale gave a dashing smile showing off her pearly white perfect teeth.

“Oh, okay… Well, in a few hours from now the Person of the Year is going to be announced and our show, ‘Vicky’, has inclusive information which of course we carefully crossed before announcing…”

“How many people youuuuu fucked, dear Vicky, to get your exclusive?” he sneered in his most nasal voice.

He was watching that stupid talk show sat in the working bench in the ground floor of his new hideout: he had moved from the first because he sniffed suspicious movements nearby. Someone hinted the police about where he might be hid and Joker was sure that it was the work of his Brucey-Bat who despite being disabled to chase him personally had still his sharp mind focused on him: uuuu! How romantic! Brucey’s mind devoted to littl’ ol’ Joker...

The new warehouse must have been a workshop of shorts because it had many working benches with rusty tools forgotten there. Joker had found their new home in the docks but not the docks that Police new as the haven for every kind of low life and thus had under surveillance. Thankfully, Gotham had many little harbors and docks: and many of these harbors and docks were from decades abandoned and forgotten.

Joker had turned the dusty, webbed ridden building into a warm nest for himself and his boys. And of course since it was Christmas…almost…Joker for the kids’ sake made his own decoration. He created garlands binding together the rusty tools which the children painted purpled and green – and they were handy lethal weapons, too…One day the kids began fighting – you know how littl’ boys are... and some skulls were broken... It was hilarious actually.

Joker had even decorated a Christmas tree: he was in the middle of the room. He because the tomb from where Joker took the skeleton had a male name: John Doe but... hay! Nobody was perfect.

He caught himself often during the day staring proudly at his creation: he was great in everything he set to do. He had set the skeleton erect with his arms stretched and his legs glued; he put the kids to paint each part of the skeleton with bright colors: pink, neon blue, neon green, red, neon yellow. And then Joker hung blades from each rib, razors throughout the arms’ length and one knife in each hand. For light he put two small bulbs in the empty eye sockets and one bigger in the mouth with the remaining teeth keeping it in place; for effect, he placed bulbs in John’s pelvis. Result surpassed even Joker’s expectations: the bulbs blinked creating an outstanding spectacle. Not to mention the star Joker had stack in John’s broken skull.

Joker giggled glancing at his pal: good ol’ John would have been very happy to know how beautiful and cheery he was... Bet he was never so sparkling during his life... Joker threw away an imagined teardrop from his eye: he had a knack on giving people their deepest desire.

His legs dangled. Joker hated Vicky’s show – it was sooooo booring! -yet he watched it because his kids did and as a responsible father he had to know what the children watched.

“And?” some people from the audience asked as if they didn’t have other problems in their life than the Person of the Year.

“I’m proud to announce that the Person of the Year for TIME and Forbes is for the first time after...” she frowned “who can remember really? Is no other than our sweet, sad Prince. Bruce Wayne!”

Joker was so surprised that launched from the bench almost falling face first and his goons laughed, six stupid faces turning to Joker who staggered to find his balance. Well, he would have killed one or two...or everyone to teach them manners but now he was more interested to hear.

So he straightened his posture with dignity, dusted his coat and trotted in front of the TV set that stood on a wooden box.

“Ooouut! Nooooo more TV for to--day!” he barked and his goons’ faces fell.

“But boss...”

Joker’s eyes glimmered and he raised his index finger warning.

“Doooooo I have to say it twiceeeeee?” his voice was a menacing screeching so nobody wanted to force the boss to repeat himself...with a blade or two.

They exchanged glances and in a second they were nowhere to be seen.

“Aaaaand now, Vicky darling, youuuuu may proceed...” he said after he sat cross legged in the purple armchair.

The audience burst out in frantic ovation and Vale smiled satisfied.
Our sources say that it was a well deserved award since our Prince went from being…” she suddenly sobered in a totally un-Vale way but she quickly restored her usual expression “Falcone’s servant – and I would say: from dead – to regaining the Wayne fortune, being voted the President of the Enterprises and then with smart movements saving the company from its lurching position” she twitched her eyebrows. “Not to mention, that he managed to disarm such rivals as John Dagget who was claiming the chair of the company and Lex Luthor; the latter not only failed to acquire Wayne Enterprises which, as everyone knows” she lowered her voice speaking to her audience “was Luthor’s Holy Grail, but also dear Lex ended up in prison and lost the control of LexLabs – his lovechild – thanks to…”

She made a gesture for the audience to complete the sentence for her.

Joker shook his head impatiently.

“Bruuuucey Wayne!” he answered and waved his hand for her to continue.

“Bruce Wayne!” the audience said to Vale’s nod of approval.

“And now our Prince holds the 20% of the entire LexCorp” the audience clapped thrilled. “Of course, we shouldn’t overlook the fact that Mr. Wayne from the moment of his …resurrection is always in the center of our attention with his misfortunes and…” she winked “the rumors concerning his love life.”

On that Joker jerked his hands outraged.

“Whaaaaat rumors, youuuu silly bimbooo! He is a married man and that’s not a rumor: pffff! Looooousy reporter!”

“Our sources say that Tony Stark, Bruce Wayne’s best friend and loyal protector, was a favorite for the title which would have his second consequent award but Bruce Wayne won easily” she shrugged. “Sorry, Tony: Ironman is great and all but returning from the dead doesn’t happen every day” she giggled. “So our show prepared a video dedicated to our sad Prince’s life manifesting the landmarks from Falcone’s reception – we took the material from Gotham Globe’s Alex Knox since I wasn’t invited” she didn’t elaborate on that “…up to today. We sincerely hope that this win will lift Bruce’s spirits that must be very down the last days. And we have you a surprise after the video…”

People clapped and the show’s whole wall screen began showing scenes from the Wayne family’s life leading to flashes from the coverage of their murders and the funeral leading to the reception at a ridiculously luxurious Wayne Manor as Falcone had turned the beautiful building.

Joker watched eagerly like a hungry hyena, totally concentrated to the screen: he didn’t like much TV but when Bruce’s life was on, he couldn’t resist.

However when the video ended he lolled his head on the side shocked and angry – a blade launching casually from his coat to sink into the opposite wall.
“Youuuu stupid bitch! Wheeeeere is our marriage?!” he stretched his arms forwards and upturned his palms as if Vale could see them. “What the Heeeeell! You show that fucking video with Suuuuuperbozo carrying him to the clinic aaaand the super pornnnn buuut not eeeeven a tiny mention of Brucey’s husband?!!” he growled and roared someone upstairs dropping his bottle.

Lucius put his eye in front of the wall where an invisible retina recognizer was placed; instantly the wall hissed and several drawers’ edges became visible. The scientist drew the drawers open and Bruce looked eagerly at the items placed in sockets, taking one of them. These cases on the wall were for top secret things and now hosted the mysterious items that were found at LexLabs.

Bruce brushed the hieroglyphic-like characters carved in the bottom side of the item and Lucius watched him.

“Lucius, you and Tony are scientists, perfectly acquainted with the latest developments” he looked up to his top scientist.

“I certainly hope so, Mr. Wayne” Lucius replied with a big smile.

Bruce grinned.

“Both of you told me that these things have nothing to do with anything you know. Have you considered the possibility of these items being of extraterrestrial origin?”

Lucius put his hands in his pants’ pockets.

“Expand your thought, Mr. Wayne.”

Bruce seemed a bit hesitant.

“Sometimes my mind does some connections…hm…more like jolts…between things that might be completely irrelevant but at the same time they might not be as they seem.”

Lucius smiled and nodded.

“And that’s why you’re a great detective, Mr. Wayne: finding connections where no other can find.”

Bruce blushed but shrugged.

“I don’t know if there’s a base…but I was thinking: you said that the specimens we gathered from the attack against me at the island indicated an unknown life form that might be alien. What if the same goes for these items too?” Lucius pursed his lips thoughtful. “And there’s Luthor’s presence and we know that his Labs were the center of shady, highly dangerous experiments concerning extraterrestrial findings.”

Lucius rubbed is chin deep in thought. He cocked his eyebrows.

“Our naughty friend certainly has a tendency of tampering with such things…and we know his dislike for Superman” the older man commented.

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I was thinking the raids in the LexLabs all over the States: they were snatching things but the raids didn’t stop as if they were looking for something specific – something they didn’t find.”
“Go ahead.”

“And then when Luthor had spent every mean for achieving his release from jail in vain, someone intervenes and he comes out despite the fact he was convicted without any doubt. Someone who nobody can name…exactly, like the one who freed several thugs from Metropolis’ prisons.”

Lucius fixed his solemn stare at Bruce frowning.

“No you believe that the…Intergang, - right-?” Bruce nodded “is related with the items?”

There wasn’t any hint of disbelief in Lucius’ voice yet Bruce shrugged.

“Intergang’s crimes have stopped since the attack at Metropolis’ subway station where their supposed leader was killed…”

Lucius cocked his eyebrows, widening his eyes playfully.

“But…you’re not convinced that he was the real leader” he completed Bruce’s phrase smiling.

Bruce grinned nodding.

“Not at all…”

He was ready to continue but knocks on the door stopped him. Lucius took the item Bruce was holding, putted to the sockets of the drawer and pushed it back to be absorbed by the wall without leaving even a mark hinting that the wall wasn’t solid.

The scientist pressed the small screen on the wall and the door opened.

Ms. Philips, Bruce’s secretary, came in; her poised expression still on as she looked at the two men.

“Mr. Wayne, Mr. Fox, I’m sorry to interrupt but I judged that you should be informed.”

“Well?” Bruce prompted her.

“Our Public Relations Department received a phone call from a reporter asking for any statement; and from then on, the phone hasn’t stopped ringing.”

Bruce frowned, a knot forming in his stomach.

“What happened now…” he said exasperated.

But Ms. Philips was calm and Bruce noticed that her eyes glimmered from something like…pride?

“Nothing serious, sir” she hastened to reassure him. “Just Vicky Vale announced that you won the award of the Person of the Year.”

Bruce’s eyes widened from surprise and…terror; he turned his eyes to Lucius who was grinning amused. Bruce took his Cosmos phone out of his pocket and fast opened the site of GTV, Gotham’s second most popular TV station, and touched the play option on the web TV.

Indeed, Vicky Vale was elaborating on her exclusive and Bruce brushed his bottom lip thoughtful. He remembered Ms. Philips waiting for instructions.

“Ms. Philips, please tell Miss Robinson to not comment till the news is official; when it is officially announced I’ll get in touch with her for sketching our statement.”
Ms. Philips nodded.

“Thank you, Mr. Wayne” she said and left the room closing the door.

Lucius stared at Bruce as the youth watched the video with his life Vale had sewed. The older man placed his hand on Bruce’s shoulder and he looked at the scientist.

“It’s not that bad, Mr. Wayne…”

Bruce sighed.

“I don’t want the attention, Lucius.”

“I know but look at the bright side…”

“There is one?”

Lucius smiled benevolently.

“The shares of Wayne Enterprises will go rocket high.”

Bruce smiled and looked back at his Cosmos that now he had turned into tablet size.

“Our reporter, Julie, is in front of Wayne Tower opting for a statement…” a very young blond reporter came to the screen with the 94 storey building behind her, the white platinum ‘W’ capturing the eyes. “Julie, what goodies do you have for us?”

“Hi, Vicky” she was dressed in a huge jacket, muffled in a thick, brown scarf and a woolen hat because the cold was really fierce today. “We asked from the company’s Spoke Person to comment on Bruce Wayne’s win but she told us that they don’t have any official notification so they can’t comment on rumors. They’ll make a statement when the news is confirmed…” her voice and her overall expression were depressed for having failed Vale.

Vicky’s eyes fell for an instant but she was very experienced so it swiftly changed that.

“That was to be expected…Wayne Enterprises is a rather serious company under Bruce Wayne’s presidency. Julie, stay there in case you manage to take a statement from any official or Mr. Wayne” the young reporter nodded and the wall screen was covered again with Bruce’s face.

“Greeeeeat wallpaper, Vick!” Joker exclaimed thrilled and clapped while he struggled with his obsolete cell phone to make a call “now…let’s cor--rect sooooooome things…”

“Waiting for Julie’s reportage, let’s disclose our other news” Vicky chirped “which concerns Bruce as well… We have information that Bruce Wayne has become the legal guardian – yes, you have heard me fine – the legal guardian of a 13 year old boy” she cocked her eyebrows. “A boy that is no other than Richard Grayson the older son of the Phelps family who all of us remember the tragic way they were murdered by Joker.”

She touched the microphone in her ear.
“We have a call…”

Bruce’s face became grim hearing Vale revealing that he got Dick’s guardianship.

“No…” he said and the color of his face went a few shades paler.

Lucius frowned worried.

“Mr. Wayne…”

“I wanted it to be as secret as possible because Dick has been already once targeted by Joker” he bit his lip and huffed. “Joker already believes that I have a soft spot for the boy and used him in the factory – now if he learns that the boy is my ward, things will be worse…I should have expected that: Dick yelled about my guardianship in the gym and I’m sure that Zucco put his hand on this.”

Lucius pursed his lips.

“I understand your fears, Mr. Wayne, but it was going to be known sooner or later.”

“I guess…But now Joker must be busted as soon as possible.”

Lucius’ kind face became stern and solemn as he squatted in front of Bruce.

“Mr. Wayne, I personally vouched for your behavior when I convinced Mr. Stark to cooperate in forging that armor” Bruce was looking him in the eyes. “Pursuing that man in your current condition will only deteriorate things. Please, Mr. Wayne, you need rest and caution till your surgery…” his discussion with Tony three days ago still haunted him.

Bruce nodded.

“As I told Tony, I wore the armor only to speak to Commissionaire Gordon. Since then I haven’t patrolled the city…I just constantly cross data from different satellites and public cameras, and police reports hoping to find leads to Joker’s hideout. I had some clues indicating that Joker was in area 33 of the Chinese docks and I tipped police – however, their yesterday raid was unsuccessful, finding only Joker cards in one of the warehouses” he pressed his lips. “He sensed the danger and left.”

“So what you’re doing instead of patrolling sounds pretty tiresome to me as well…”

Bruce loll’d his head on the side.

“It’s the least I can do, Lucius: he has already killed two people and left a message hinting that he’ll do more…”

Hellooooo, Vick and gooood afternooooon, Goootham! Your belooooved jester is here…” the crowd fell silent, terror in their faces and the host of the show clutched more the tablet she was holding. “C’mon, Vick: why soooo silent? After all, we have a paaast – hehehehehehe! – no, people, don’t let your mind go to the nasty thing… Don’t tell me you’re scared of lil’ ol’ meeeeeeeee?” he asked innocently and affronted at the same time. “I’m not the type who plaaants bombs around after all…HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAA!” he stopped his laughing fit abruptly. “Hm…What I was saying? Aaaaah…Vicky, de—ar, you forgot to mention that Brucey is married with no other thaaaaaan…ME! I hope this wasn’t on purpose be--cause I dare say that myyyyy wife won that title among other reasons due to…MOI!”

Vicky shook her head in denial.

“I didn’t have any image of your marriage, Mr. Joker…I’m sorry.”

“Ex—cuses…” but he abruptly stopped remembering what she said before the phone call. “Oi! You’re a great reporter, Vick…So Brucey got a child…I’ve got to hang up, my dear-ies…Till neeeeeeext time…Juicy kisses to your cheeks!”

The sudden stopping of Vale’s babbling didn’t settle right with Bruce and when Joker’s voice came from the tablet both Bruce and Lucius looked there.

“No, no, nooooo! Wait! Ah! I for--got to mention that in harmony with the Christmas spirit I decided to decoraaaate my own tree…Mmm…Studio…So in five minutes a few beautifuuuul little bombs will fill Gotham’s sky with fireworks aaaand we will have our own angels…You guys! Vicky’s idioooootic audience…MUHAHAHAHAHAHAH!”

Shrieks filled the studio and one hundred people simultaneously jumped to their feet running towards the two exits; Vale in vain was trying to calm them: Joker’s crazy giggles vibrated all over and filled everyone with panic.

Bruce’s eyes hardened, his body stiffened and he grabbed the chair’s armrests ready to move but Lucius held the younger man’s upper arms determined.

“No, Mr. Wayne” he said with his calm voice but leaving no room for objection “police will handle it.”

“But…” Lucius’ stern eyes were fixed on his till Bruce’s body loosened.

And then Joker’s laughter became crazier and more amused; he was almost choking.

“Dooooon’t tell me you bought that? MUHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA! C’MON, GOTHAMITES! I had you for smarter…” he stopped abruptly considering this “mmm…nah! C’mon, you duuuuummies! Even I can’t be in two places at once ooor plant boooooms with telepathy… HAAAAAHEEEHEEEHAAAAHAAAAH!” he coughed. “Oh! That was sooooo funny: nobody is left in the studiooooo as if they saw Vicky’s face without makeuuup-up-up… OOOOHOOOOOHEEEHEEEEEHEEEE! Oi! I have to admit that Gothamites are the fastest animals on Earth! MUHAHAHAHAHAHAHA! See ya soon, honies!” his voice dropped several octaves menacingly. “With reeeeeeal fireworks…”

Joker’s creepy laughter echoed through the empty studio and Bruce lowered his eyes breathing calmer for this being a prank but not totally relieved due to Joker’s threat. Lucius patted him.

“You must focus on your recovering, Mr. Wayne; I know it is hard but you do helping Gotham even without donning the cowl” he lifted Bruce’s chin with his finger till their eyes locked. “Your surgery is very difficult, Bruce” he said solemnly “you need to gather strength to cope with this new battle…”

“I know, Lucius” Bruce replied calm “but I can’t be indifferent when this man terrorizes our city and threatens to kill more people…I promise that I won’t use your gift light hearted.”

Lucius nodded.
“I trust you will keep that promise and that you’ll spend this Christmas the best way you can.”

Bruce grinned.

“I’m the Person of the Year, how can I not enjoy the Christmas?” he snorted cocking his eyebrows.

Lucius chuckled and stood accompanying Bruce to the lab’s door.

“You know you’re invited to Alfred’s Christmas’ dinner, right?” Bruce asked his top scientist and Lucius laughed.

“I’ll wait my official invitation…you know how typical our British friend is…” he winked and Bruce smiled.

Tony was in his enormous study at his penthouse in Gotham. He stood between two holographic columns with running data: one with the details about the items found in LexLabs and one with the latest developments concerning Bruce’s surgery.

“Jarvis, give me 4 times zoom of the A4 sector of Bruce’s spine and magnify the 2-4 energy cast…” he ordered his AI pointing his wooden pencil to the hologram.

He shook his head pouting disheartened: when he spoke to Lucius he forgot to mention the collapsed lung that was revived, the missing spleen and the pierced stomach. He sighed, licked his lips and swept with the back of his palm the sweat drops from his forehead.

“It will be difficult but you and Bruce will make it” Pepper said entering the room with a cup of espresso in her hand, her stilettos clinging on the dark blue granite.

She offered the cup to Tony and he sipped moaning, closing his eyes from pleasure.

“I’m scared, Pepper” he looked at her serious “for the first time in my life I’m scared…”

“Bruce is a fighter” she kissed him in the lips. “He just beat you…” she cocked her eyebrows to his puzzled eyes. “Jarvis, display TIME magazine website…”

A third hologram just appeared and Tony watched dumbfounded the flashing news.

“And Forbes.com…” she continued amused, Jarvis obeying.

Pepper wanted to lighten Tony’s mood so that he could appraise the situation more collected.

“TIME and Forbes just announced that Bruce is this years winner of the award” she crossed her arms and pouted supposedly pitying him. “You were easily defeated, Mr. Stark…”

Tony shook his head and left it lolled on the side regarding Bruce’s pictures in both sites.

“That’s fair” he mumbled and pointed at the pictures. “With such pictures!”

“You’re not pissed?” she raised her eyebrows playfully knowing that Tony wouldn’t be annoyed for his friend’s win.

“I’d be pissed if that asshole Luthor had defeated me…but for Bruce…I’m happier than when I got the title. The little guy deserved that and much more especially now that that scumbag took the Pulitzer prize…” he fumed remembering Clark. “He cheated, Peps! He didn’t deserve the Prize…”
Ugh! I’d like to say a word with those who decided that!”

Pepper massaged his tense shoulders.

“Tony, forget him…it’d be better to leave that issue at bay…for Bruce’s sake” she smiled. “The first Christmas you’ll spend together after eighteen years! Nothing should shadow that, Tony…You must forget anything else and help Bruce do the same.”

Tony wrapped her in his arms and kissed her lips.

“You’d help me with that, huh?”

She chuckled.

“Of course! I am already: Alfred called and said to meet him for dinner at the Comet Mall: he’ll bring Bruce.”

Tony snorted.

“Bruce at the Mall?” he lifted his eyebrows. “I always believed that our Alfred is a force to be reckoned… You’ll spend Christmas with me?” he massaged her bottom lip with his.

“Certainly…Everything for the Person of the Year!”

“I’m not the Person of this Year.”

“I wasn’t speaking about you…” she snorted and bit teasingly his nose.

Tony snapped his fingers and the holographs vanished: he’d follow Pepper’s advice.

“I demand to see Bruce Wayne!”

“You need an appointment to do that, sir; and I’d like you to lower your voice.”

Bruce could hear the tempered exchange even behind the closed lift doors. The stranger’s cackle made his spine shudder and he was sure that Ms. Philips felt even worse.

“Only the fact that I’m here is a great honor to your employer” the rough voice was filled with arrogance and malice; a lurking threat.

Bruce get out of the lift and before taking the turn to his office, saw from the corner the square-shouldered, huge man leaning above the desk and looking at Ms. Philips who seemed numb, something very unusual for the dynamic woman. Yet Bruce couldn’t blame her.

“Go tell Wayne that Bruno Mannheim is here to see him!” he straightened his sturdy posture.

Ms. Philips was staring at him shaken.

“Mr. Wayne isn’t in his office right now” she almost stuttered.

“Then find him!” Mannheim barked.

Bruce needed no more: seeing people bullying others always made him furious. He willed his wheelchair to his office’s waiting room.

“I don’t like people yelling to my secretary” he said calmly but determined and the man turned to him intrigued but still with contempt coloring his face.

Ms. Philips inhaled relieved and stood looking at her employer like seeing her savior.

“Oh!” Mannheim spat sarcastic cocking his eyebrow. “Mr. Wayne I suppose…” it was the first time Darkseid was seeing Wayne from up close and though he detested him as he did every human, he was also curious.

Bruce met the man’s stare without letting the intensity of that stare bent him.

“I think it is obvious, Mr…?” he replied raising his eyebrows.

The dark man glared at him but Bruce’s stare didn’t flatter; despite the man’s irritation Bruce discerned a hesitation to answer his simple question, as if the man weighted his options.

“Mr. Mannheim wanted to see you but I told him that he should have made an appointment” Ms. Philips answered Bruce’s question since the man didn’t seem willing to do so.

Bruce smiled reassuringly to her and the woman’s face regained its color.

“Thank you, Ms. Philips. That’s right, Mr. Mannheim, I don’t see people without an appointment.”

Mannheim cocked his eyebrows sarcastic at the mention of ‘people’: it was obvious that he didn’t consider himself one of the people. He yanked his head proudly and irritated: he wasn’t used to be denied anything especially from humans.

“I came from Metropolis just to see you…”

“I’m honored” Bruce said so indifferent that it was obvious that he didn’t mean it. “But exactly for that you should have made an appointment so that your journey wouldn’t be wasted.”

Mannheim frowned and his eyes narrowed to two flashing slits: if that insolent little human insist on denying he had other means to get what he wanted.

“You mean that you won’t see me now?” his asked outraged.

Bruce looked him in the eyes.

“Only if you apologize to Ms. Philips for your behavior: she is just doing her job and she doesn’t have to be treated like this.”

Ms. Philips looked at her employer astonished and satisfied while Mannheim was fuming: apologize to a human just to see that worm Wayne? That was a deadly insult. He pressed his lips imagining destroying the entire building just with a blink and frying Wayne with his breath. However at the moment getting his machine was the priority so he put his ire at bay.

“I apologize, Ms…”

“Philips” Bruce informed him though the ID label on her chest read her name; Mannheim cast him a glare.

“I’m sorry, Ms. Philips, for yelling at you” his voice didn’t reflect the meaning of his words.
Bruce’s secretary nodded calm but Bruce could discern that she was still shaken and scared of the man – and that was saying something because Ms. Philips was quite brave.

“Apology accepted, Mr. Mannheim” the woman replied.

Bruce approached.

“You see how easily things are done with politeness?” he was sure that his visitor didn’t see at all and in fact was cursing him inside.

“Can we talk now?” Mannheim asked impatient and Bruce nodded.

“Of course; you did the journey from Metropolis after all…” he gestured to his office and placed his palm to the receptor unlocking the door with a hiss.

He could have sent him away or force him to make an appointment and come again but he was curious about this man and the fact he was coming from Metropolis enhanced his interest.

So he pushed the door open and made an inviting gesture to Mannheim who inclined slightly his head in what supposedly was a thank you gesture and walked insight.

Bruce was ready to follow when Ms. Philips having come out of her desk approached him flushed.

“You don’t have to see this man, Mr. Wayne” she whispered. “He has something…dangerous: let me call the security.”

“Calm down, Ms. Philips: I’m curious to hear what he wants” he smiled relaxed. “And I don’t think that he’ll attack me right here…if he was to do that, he’d have done it when I asked him to apologize” he winked.

Ms. Philips didn’t seem quite convinced but nodded and closed the door when her employer got inside, leaving the two men alone.

“Please, do have a seat” Bruce gestured to Mannheim as willed his chair behind the desk. “May I offer you something?”

Mannheim sat at the leather armchair still stiff as a granite rock. He waved Bruce’s offer off.

“No. I prefer to get right to the point.”

Bruce shook his head.

“As you wish. Well? As far as I know Wayne Enterprises have no affairs with you.”

“That was before you gained the control of LexLabs.”

The wheels in Bruce’s mind went on fire but he kept his face expressionless.

“I gather that you had some trading with Lex Luthor?”

Mannheim’s face was carved by a crooked smile; his eyes sparkled.

“I’m glad I have to do with an intelligent man and I hope that we’ll have a nice cooperation as the one I had with Mr. Luthor.”

Bruce grinned and intertwined his fingers on the desk.
“Mr. Luthor was convicted for many illegal deeds so I don’t think that a comparison with him isn’t exactly what Wayne Enterprises and I personally are opting for.”

Mannheim didn’t like that answer and the human’s expression so pursed his lips. Bruce was surprised by the fact that his visitor didn’t make even an attempt to hide his true feelings – probably, he didn’t care doing so.

“Anyway, Mr. Wayne, I had made an order to Mr. Luthor and I was to get what I paid for till you came to the fore.”

Interesting…Bruce thought. He was expecting that the one who was related to the curious items would eventually claim what was his but not so flagrantly.

“I see…Listen, Mr. Mannheim, your case is not the first we dealt with. LexLabs had and still have many contracts in effect and development which projects Wayne Enterprises first re-evaluated and then decided to accomplish” Mannheim gave a satisfied dry grin. “However” Bruce raised slightly his voice for emphasis “your name wasn’t in any contract or archive in LexLabs’ logs.”

Mannheim snorted.

“My contract was made directly with Mr. Luthor and he reassured me that it was in progress the moment you took the control. It was a gentlemen’s deal and I believe that, if you are a real gentleman, you will fulfill that deal as Mr. Luthor would have done.”

Bruce shook his head; he felt on edge all the time as if a mortal danger was threatening him so e couldn’t enjoy what he was waiting for so long.

“That’s the thing, Mr. Mannheim: Lex Luthor is connected with many felonies so I must be careful because I don’t want in the least to be the kind of gentleman he is. So as much as I want to be helpful” well, that wasn’t much honest “I have to follow the legitimate procedure.”

Mannheim frowned clearly dissatisfied.

“Meaning?” he growled.

“Let me explain: LexLabs had the not so good fame of conducting odd experiments and serving deals with shady groups and people: Lex Luthor’s cooperation with terrorist groups and gangsters like Falcone was proved without any doubt. So when Wayne Enterprises gained the control of his Labs, our first priority was to clear the name of LexLabs. You see, we respected the know-how these labs have yet we wanted to give them the prestige and status they deserved.”

Mannheim’s eyeballs were ready to pop out of their sockets from boredom that he didn’t care to hide.

“All in all, Mr. Mannheim, we check very carefully every contract Luthor has signed, report to the official governmental agency as every other company does and if everything is legitimate and non dangerous, we proceed to complete and deliver the order” Mannheim’s frown became deeper and the clouds over his dark eyes thickened. “You say that your agreement with Mr. Luthor was spoken; in that case, you have to give us elaborated details about your order so we can cross that it really was in development and refer to the State’s agency to get approval and proceed.”

Now Darkseid had had enough: this human wanted to order him to disclose his secrets in order so to relay everything to the government for which he didn’t care much but it was more delay. Moreover, how dare he speak to him like that? He jerked to his feet clenching his fists but restraining himself from revealing his true form. Besides he had other ways to achieve what he wanted.
Bruce narrowed his eyes but watched calmly his odd guest.

“I demand you to deliver to me everything related to my order! Luthor knows what it is needed and he’ll guide you” he launched his brain waves to do what he liked more after dismantling humans: invade their minds and control them into fulfilling his wishes – maybe he’d make the favor to Bagdana and once Wayne was his puppet made the human fell for the stupid demon.

Bruce at first felt satisfied because the man’s anger meant that he hit the right spot and that he was close to the mystery’s solution. But then there was something awkward as if a wave of cold air crashed on his very mind causing a mild migraine. For an instance his thoughts seemed to blur as if there was nothing concrete in there but then his confused eyes caught the arrogant smirk on Mannheim’s lips and the flash in his eyes; Bruce felt the flame of his stubbornness burn in his mind and solidify it and clenched his jaw.

“You can’t demand anything from me, Mr. Mannheim!” he retorted and his eyes locked with his guests so steely that Darkseid was buffed. “Your dubious deal was with Lex Luthor but he isn’t running the labs anymore” he steered his chair outside his desk in front of the towering man.

Yet the fact he was confined in a chair and the man emanated the aura of danger didn’t shaken Bruce at all. The young man could feel the Black Butterfly vibrating in the pouch on his chest. He yanked his head stabbing the man’s narrowed eyes.

“Either you follow the legitimate way or you forget your order, Mr. Mannheim. Things have changed.”

Mannheim’s plump lips shook from wrath not only from the youth’s refusal to satisfy his order but also from his failure to control the human’s mind – he never had failed again with any human. He growled and clenched his fists in the air something that could be taken as a sign for an imminent punch.

However Bruce remained poised, his eyes unmovable looking his guest in the face; even though a punch from a man of Mannheim’s sturdiness could damage him gravely. Yet Mannheim didn’t do it.

“You’ll be sorry for that, Wayne!”

Bruce raised an eyebrow.

“I see you like too much threatening people, Mr. Mannheim; so I’m glad that Mr. Luthor was stopped from delivering your order” Mannheim widened his eyes.

“You shall give me what is mine” he barked leaning to Bruce’s face so much that his hot breath hit him.

“Of course: if you give me the proper explanations I’d have no objection on fulfilling the deal.”

Mannheim growled and marched outside the office slapping the door behind him.

Ms. Philips rushed inside pale and out of breath.

“Mr. Wayne, are you alright?”

Well, Mannheim’s departure certainly made the room feel more warm and lighter.

“I am, Ms. Philips, thank you” he brushed the spot where the Black Butterfly lay.
The woman seemed relieved and fixed her stern posture.

“It is late afternoon, Mr. Wayne…I have to remind you that you should return to the Manor; your day was rather exhausting without that Mr. Mannheim added as the icing of the cake.”

Bruce grinned.

“At times, I feel that your real employer is Alfred and not me, Ms. Philips” the woman blushed.
“Thank you for your interest and you may go to your home and get some rest.”

“Thank you, Mr. Wayne. Have a lovely rest of the day.”

Bruce nodded.

“You too, Ms. Philips.”

She left the room and Bruce pulled out his Cosmos phone calling Lucius.

“I just got the movement I was expecting…I’ll inform you and Tony soon.”

He brushed the option and the phone became a tablet; then he opened his self made search program and typed Mannheim’s name, grinning at the results: as he expected, there wasn’t much. He touched the first result, opening a new window, intending to do the same with the rest.

Yet someone knocked his door and Bruce looked up frowning since he had sent away Ms. Philips.

“Come in.”

He lolled his head exasperated and closed his eyes seeing Alfred marching inside.

“I was ready to leave for the Manor, Alfred.”

Alfred raised his eyebrows in complete disbelief.

“Oh! I’m certain of that, sir” he said nonchalant.

Bruce sighed rubbing his forehead.

“You came to take me home?” he chuckled.

“Hardly, Master Bruce. I drove Master Richard to the gym and I’ll take you to the Mall” he glanced at his Rolex. “Young Master Richard’s training ends in fifteen minutes; we’ll pick him up and do our shopping for the Haven.”

What Bruce felt neared panic.

“No, Alfred, no! I told Ms. Evans and the Haven’s staff that they have a blank check to buy whatever they want…I…This will be exhausting.”

Alfred was staring at him with a no-nonsense expression.

“Then you should stop spending so many hours at the Tower and at the cave, sir. Besides, you need to get a bit outside: get some air, be among people, feel the spirit of the days.”

Bruce huffed.

“Alfred, you know that all these are not for me…”
“I beg your pardon, sir, but I disagree. You gave an epic battle for eighteen years not only to stay alive but also to defeat your enemies and regain your life and now you have made it you should celebrate your first Christmas.”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose closing his eyes and Alfred bit his bottom lip.

“I know that you had imagined your Christmas different, Master Bruce…with the company of someone else you still hold so dear in your heart.”

Bruce looked at him.

“I’ll celebrate, Alfred and I’ll be very happy because all of you will be around me; but I don’t see the reason for going to the stores…I’ll be exhausted, Alfred.”

“Then you might manage to sleep well at last, sir; because this type of fatigue will get your mind away from other things that disturb your sleep.”

Bruce pressed his lips: he didn’t want Alfred to know about his restless sleep: flashbacks that had vanished while he was with Clark had returned worse than before. Nightmares with specks of real events and the bullshit Crane tried to plant to his mind and flashbacks making him relive his past: last night it was Talia’s and Bane’s deeds on his body…He woke up exhausted and feeling disgusted with himself; more ridiculous for letting himself do the things he did with Clark. He had asked from Leslie stronger sleeping pills but they didn’t help much.

The butler nodded.

“You changed your sleeping pills because the previous weren’t effective…”

“Leslie told you?! She is my doctor, there’s confidentiality.”

“No, Leslie didn’t tell me anything but I’m keeping an eye on your medication and the old bottle of sleeping pills didn’t decrease at all while the rest medication did. The flashbacks returned, did they?”

“It’s not that bad, Alfred.”

Alfred didn’t buy that but he didn’t insist to not upset more his young master.

“So off we go? Young Master Jason and his mother will wait us at the Comet Mall and we’ll have dinner at the restaurant there: I’ve made a reservation – I hear great reviews for the food and the wine.”

Bruce shook his head.

“You brought Jason and his mother into the plot?”

“Of course! Ms. Todd works in the Haven so she can help with the picking of the presents; and the two boys will help with the selection of tree and decorations.”

Bruce’s heart fell and then began beating fast.

“Alfred, I…I…I told you that I asked from Ms. Evans to do that…”

Alfred grinned.

“And I told her that you changed your mind and you want to choose the presents yourself” he retorted amused battling to keep his worry hidden.
Bruce gulped.

“Alfred, I don’t believe in Santa Claus…” he said looking at his tablet’s screen as if that explained that he wouldn’t do anything concerning Christmas.

Alfred walked to him and placed his hands on the youth’s shoulders. Their eyes locked.

“But the children in the Haven do believe, sir and I know that you don’t want them to stop believing” he inhaled deeply “as early as you…” an eight year old child in Falcone’s hands certainly stopped believing in Santa. “You’ll make them very happy if you choose their presents personally. And perhaps you’ll get some well deserved joy for yourself…”

Bruce didn’t speak and Alfred clapped his hands once.

“It’s fifteen of December and I won’t tolerate the Manor staying without proper decoration anymore: we should be happy you’re back after all these years…” his voice became soft. “We have two children in the Manor, sir; maybe their joy will cheer you up too.”

“Richard hates me…so he’ll be better without me in the mall and in the decorations…if he is in the mood for that.”

“One reason more to decorate, Master Bruce: I’m sure it will help Master Richard.”

“Selina said that she would help with decoration and stuff but she disappeared five days now and her phone is closed…maybe she’ll spend the holidays with Steve.”

“Then it is our work and I’m sure Master Tony will be happy to help. Come on, Master Bruce.”

“Joker made a threatening call to Vale’s TV show because of me. I feel that wherever I go I endanger people…”

Alfred locked eyes with his boy.

“You can’t make him the favor, sir and get isolated.”

“And reporters will chase us…” he snorted. “I was named the Person of the Year” he slapped his cheek. “As if I didn’t have enough troubles…”

“They won’t think that you’ll be in such a common place like a mall: and even if we come across any of them you’re perfectly able to cope with them” he lifted his eyebrows ”and Master Tony knows everything about paparazzi as for Miss Potts...she is rather experienced in handling them being for years Master Tony's personal assistant."

Bruce widened his eyes amused.

"You brought the entire gang to this?"

Alfred smiled satisfied.

"I did and you won't like to disappoint them, will you?"

Bruce closed his eyes and chuckled.

“You’re an invincible attorney, Alfred…”

“I’m glad to hear that, sir – it comes very handy sometimes…”
Chapter 47

The TV set on the box became again the center of Joker’s goons who babbled all together creating a disturbing fuss.

Yet Joker didn’t care; he sat on his butt with crossed legs at the feet of his macabre Christmas’ tree. His eyes were blank focused on his bare blade that he stabbed with one hand between the spread fingers of the other. He was huffing and puffing deep in thought.

“So Batsy’s biological clock ticked and he decided to become a bat-mom…” he stabbed the blade between index finger and thumb. “Aaaaand with that boyyyyyy…” he stabbed the blade between index and third finger. “Ugh! I knew he had a soft spoot--y for him.”

He yanked his head and looked at the decorated skeleton used as Christmas tree.

“I mean if heeeeee wanted a kid, he has a legal husband” he pointed to himself with the blade and then scratched his head with that. “I feel insulted, John buddyyyyy…”

But then he lolled his head on the side and touched the flat side of the blade on his chin thoughtful.

“Mmm…” he pursed his lips. “It’s my fault…I didn’t show him how con---siderate I can beeee…Pooooor thing! It’s his first Christmas unchained aaaaand he is confined to that chair! Apart from his reeeal seeeelf” he pushed away a supposed tear.

He jolted to his feet flying the blade to stick to the ceiling along with a dozen others from past times; he frowned.

“I must clean up ‘cause I’m gonna run out of toys…” he mumbled.

But then he remembered what he was thinking and his face radiated; his Cheshire smile was broader than ever.

“Jooooker, boy, you muuust remind Brucey that he is always on your mind…Youuu must make his Christmas beautifuuuul…Mmmm…A present? Whyyyyy not?”

Bagdana landed hard on his feet in the center of Darkseid’s throne hall; around him the slow burning fires in the granite elliptic vessels flared angrily to the tall ceiling mirroring their master’s emotions.

Of course, Bagdana understood immediately that his ally was infuriated: a twirl of fire and wind had engulfed him where he was standing and sucked him underground to the New God’s hall of throne.

He stretched his posture: Bagdana was in his regular form of granite body dressed in his black leather leggings and the fitting vest that let his rock, perfect shaped chest almost naked. His yellow cat like eyes fixed on the throne with the live, twisting hurricanes.

Darkseid was grabbing the edges of the armrests, his face taut with his thick blue eyebrows knitted together. His jaw was set; he looked absorbed in his thoughts and gave the impression that he wasn’t aware of his minion’s arrival. Bagdana was ready to speak but Darkseid’s red eyes stabbed him narrowed to menacing slits.

The New God stretched his arm to Bagdana.
“What is in Wayne that you don’t say?!” he demanded and his words barely distinguished from the cracking sound of a thunder that made the enormous, endless pillars shook.

Bagdana’s square face tensed. He didn’t like this sudden interest for Bruce.

“What have you done?” he replied hardly containing his anger.

Darkseid jolted to his pillar-like legs and flexed his impressive, gigantic body to intimidate his minion who however wasn’t impressed.

“I should have done” he answered descending the three wide steps that led to his throne. “I should have burn him alive and leave only his ashes” he hissed and his face was in front of Bagdana’s sniffing his reactions. “I don’t like not getting answers to my questions.”

“You met him?” Bagdana asked admittedly shaken; he couldn’t foresee the consequences of such a meeting. He had hoped that Darkseid would never meet Bruce before everything was over and the human was his.

Darkseid’s nostrils fumed and he grabbed the demon from the neck lifting him off the floor. Bagdana felt the god’s powerful fingers choking him yet his eyes were still, focused on his ally’s face, unfazed by his cruelty.

“Answer me! Why I wasn’t able even to enter his mind?!”

Bagdana cocked an eyebrow.

“According to your own sayings, because he doesn’t have any brain…” he said calm and a bit sarcastic.

Darkseid growled and released him a faint grin on the ancient demon’s face.

“I get you didn’t achieve what you wanted from this meeting…” he commented slyly to Darkseid’s turned back. “But why you did that? You despise humans – you wouldn’t spare a thought to Bruce…”

“I never had a problem penetrating someone’s mind and controlling him – especially, with humans. I attacked his brain to find out where they keep the parts of my machine and make him surrender them to me. But I didn’t manage to see anything; his mind held me out” his shoulders shook from wrath; he wasn’t used to fail or being denied something.

Bagdana crossed his arms and moved in front of him; Darkseid glanced at him with narrowed eyes and clenched jaw. He remembered what the demon had asked but he didn’t want to answer him.

“You freed Luthor because your people were unable to find them in the Labs and Luthor was the only one who knew their locations. But…” he snorted “he didn’t manage to find the parts of your machine where he had secured them so you went to Bruce to make him give what you needed” the demon said shaking his head.

Darkseid didn’t say anything just ground his teeth causing Bagdana’s smirk.

“Why you didn’t consult me?” the demon asked exasperated: Darkseid’s failure and humiliation was amusing yet he didn’t like that his ally had met Bruce neither his question about the human. “It’s my role, right?”

Darkseid pursed his lips because he could sense the demon’s satisfaction: ire boiled inside him and something worse – doubt.

“I don’t see the reason why I have to ask you for my actions!”

Bagdana shook his head.

“Because I know Earth and her inhabitants better than you; better than anyone and I can spare you from wrong moves and failures like the current.”

Bruce’s brilliant plan was clear for the demon: his people found the intriguing items, nobody could decipher their use so the clever human decided to take and secure them in order to force the one who had interest in them to reveal himself and maybe his intentions. He wanted to cackle maniac for Darkseid’s misfortune: his arrogance pushed him to Bruce’s trap.

And even worse, the stupid god believed that he could control Bruce’s mind… Bagdana felt his passion for the human burning his insides: those sparkling, determined eyes stabbing him as the Blade of Justice stabbed his back... It shouldn’t however his stabbing aroused him and made his thirst for Bruce tormenting, demanding.

“It wasn’t a failure! That little bitch doesn’t have a clue about me and my plans” he smirked to his minion: he could see Bagdana’s uneasiness on him having met his human. “And I had the opportunity to met with Wayne.”

Bagdana cocked an eyebrow and Darkseid growled.

“What does this human pest have that blocked my attack?” he demanded again.

The ancient demon smirked: so the Nemesis’ wings were still protecting Bruce; her influence was still strong… He hated Nemesis and he didn’t want her influence on Bruce: her strong power in him, her high priest’s DNA, was an obstacle for Bagdana to get his mate. However in this case he was grateful that something hers blocked Darkseid. Even if that intrigued his ally.

“Maybe there was something in the room that interfered with your brain waves” he told the New God because he wanted to disperse his suspicions about Bruce’s significance.

Darkseid wasn’t convinced.

“I could have melt him with just one thought but instead I left his office without taking what I wanted” Bagdana could discern the god’s self-questioning, his tormenting puzzlement.

“I’m glad you didn’t!” the demon said stabbing him with his eyes. “He is mine!”

Darkseid smirked.

“Are you so stupid to threaten me, little demon?” he lolled his huge, square head and regarded Bagdana amused. “I can squash you as easy as I can squash your human: I don’t need you.”

Bagdana snorted unfazed by the threat.

“What happened with Wayne proves otherwise” Darkseid’s lips flared from wrath but it was true. “You didn’t take what you wanted and revealed your interest to him just because you didn’t ask my advice. So I suggest from now on that you let me handle these matters. For my reward of course.”

Darkseid began ascending the steps to his throne until he settled in; he regarded his minion rubbing his chin thoughtful.
“After I’ll punish him you can take him” he chuckled. “I won’t kill or damage him permanently but his insolence and insult will be avenged.”

Bagdana’s fists clenched and he burst towards the throne.

“Nobody is going to touch Bruce, not even you!” he roared and the flames in the vessels bulged; Darkseid’s eyes shone with curiosity and the demon calmed himself. “What happened wasn’t his fault… he didn’t know with whom he was dealing” he added quietly.

Darkseid laughed.

“Oh! Earth demon, you’re so pathetic! So in love with a miserable, mortal being…”

Bagdana didn’t care about his jeering: the only thing that mattered for him was getting Bruce and being united with him forever. He looked his ally through narrowed eyes.

“Just don’t hurt Bruce.”

The bigger entity cackled.

“If my job is done you’ll have your reward” he said touching his fingertips together in front of his face.

“Master!”

A screeching voice echoed through the hall and Bagdana turned to see Granny Goodness rushing to the feet of Darkseid’s throne; he felt disgusted.

“Let me punish that human rat! He is of no importance and you don’t need to indulge that earth demon!” her voice was filled with malice and her white hair flew around her head but Bagdana just watched her bored. “We can get your machine once Wayne is eradicated – nobody deserves to live after he insulted your Majesty!”

Bagdana crossed his arms and snorted even though Darkseid’s smug stare was fixed on him challenging.

“Would be so easy, my faithful soldier” he said to Granny and her eyes were salivating from anticipation to do her things to the human. “Really…But no…I’ll keep him alive to give Bagdana a motive to want my plan to succeed as much as I. After all, that little human is interesting and if something goes awry” a wide grin ripped his blue face “our demon friend would have to enjoy with me his human being tortured to his death…This will be a great punishment for them both if Bagdana fails me.”

He locked eyes with the demon enjoying his irritation and Bagdana nodded before disappearing.

Granny looked at her king frowning.

“Your Majesty is going to spare this human’s life just because one of your servants wants him for his pleasure?”

Darkseid blinked and smirked.

“Maybe I have also plans for Wayne…What took place in his office wasn’t random and I’ll find out. Perhaps what fought me out of his brain can be useful to my plans.”
Hero was curved on the back seat of Alfred’s Rolls Royce but jolted once the door to the passenger’s seat opened. They decided to send Bruce’s car back to the Manor with the auto-pilot. Also, Alfred had already called Matt to cancel their session with Bruce.

“I brought young Master Hero along” Alfred said as he took the wheelchair to placed it in the trunk; Bruce was already seated and the kitten had run to him and now was perched to his chest. “I didn’t want to let him so many hours alone in the Manor.”

Bruce nodded and petted his friend who purred appreciatively.

Dick came out of the gym just when they arrived and got inside with an expression that yelled “let’s get over with it!” Well, Bruce thought amused, they agreed on that…

“Hello, Master Richard” Alfred chirped unfazed by the boy’s grim mood. “How was your afternoon?”

The boy crossed his arms.

“Great!” he spat. “Till now…”

Alfred chuckled and Bruce looked at him puzzled.

“It is going to get fixed, Master Richard, once we reach the Comet Mall. Have you ever visited?”

Dick turned his head towards the window watching the traffic and the lights of the semi-dark city. It was hardly 17:30 but darkness had already settled over Gotham.

“Yeah…” he said in a quiet voice. “We used to go all together every Christmas or on special occasions: we were ice skating with Brian in the rink with the elves and the silver snowflakes… He was pretty good in skating though so young…”

Bruce closed his eyes, the image of the small boy’s disfigured face piercing his brain: Brian’s only fault was that he was eight year old, had some similarities with him and the two first letters of his name were the same with Bruce’s: “Br”…

He felt Alfred’s worried glances and stared back reassuring but certainly not happy.

“I’m sure your little brother would have wanted you to move on, Master Richard” Alfred said touched. “Our loved ones who are gone want us to be happy: our happiness is theirs too…”

Dick didn’t change his head’s position; just crooked his mouth: words…

The Comet Mall was at the center of the Middletown: a huge round area with the buildings that housed over 1,000 stores, were built to shape an ellipsis surrounding a round square. There were ten floors of stores, cinemas, one ice skating rink, bowling, cafes, restaurants. Every day thousands of people went there to buy, eat or have fun.

The right and left wing ended up in front of the square forming a gigantic arch on top of which a sparkling, moving comet was washing with glitter dust the entrance. At both sides, two Santas danced and played music making the young children gather around gaping.

Alfred drove the car to the underground parking lot. Then he took the wheelchair from the trunk and opened the door for Bruce while Dick got out of the car slapping the door to Alfred’s glare of disapproval for his favorite Rolls’ abuse. The boy ran away from them to find Jason and his mother who waited near the Mall’s entrance.
Bruce shrugged to Alfred and chuckled seeing the butler brushing his car and leaving it behind grudgingly.

“I’m glad I managed to lift your spirits, sir” Alfred said lifting his eyebrows with dignity.

“I’m sorry, Alfred” he replied but he couldn’t get rid of his amusement.

The British smiled and leaned to put on Bruce’s head a woolen cap he had in his coat’s inner pocket.

“No not be sorry, sir” he said wrapping a long fluffy scarf around his master’s neck “your laughter is precious even when caused by my own misfortune…” he lolled his head on the side fixing the cap on Bruce’s head “and that will be of some help with avoiding much attention.”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“Mmm…I don’t think that arriving with the Rolls can be concealed with a scarf and a hat…”

Alfred just cast him a glance but didn’t comment and Bruce chuckled. But then as children’s sweet voices echoed closer singing Christmas songs he felt his heart clench and his eyes watering. He remembered that Christmas songs always brought a sweet melancholy to him but now it was like a heavy punch.

His mother’s kind, young face came in front of him; his father watching smiling as Martha were fixing the oversized blue and white hat with the deer’s horns on his head. She kissed the tip of his nose.

“What do you want Santa bring you, Bruce?” she asked cheerful.

She was squatting so they were on the same height; he must have been around 6 years old. Bruce didn’t remember what he had asked, he only remembered that she had laughed with her melodic laughter and his father came and took him in his arms to leave for the city, touching with his index finger playfully his small nose. He remembered the frozen wind brushing his face as they exited the Manor: the grounds around were all white and sparkled in the twilight as the night was coming. He had goggled at the beauty – always goggled at the snow.

This year hadn’t snowed…

“Master Bruce…” Alfred’s voice brought him back in front of the Mall’s wide entrance.

Hero was staring at him and Bruce grinned because Jason and his mother were there holding gold and silver balloons that several elves were giving to the visitors. He greeted them cordially and Jason gave him his golden balloon.

“Take that, dude: I don’t want it; it’s for kids!”

His mother cast him a glare and Jason shrugged.

“Wha’? Everyone knows that Todd isn’t a kid…” he scratched his head above his hoodie.

Bruce chuckled and took the balloon.

“Thanks, Jason!”

The boy caressed Hero’s head and Bruce looked at Ms. Todd.

“I’m sorry we bother you with this” he cast a sideways glance to Alfred who looked ahead as if not hearing. “It’d be rather tiresome to imagine what every kid wants from Santa.”

The woman that was no older than 30 years old smiled.

“Not mention it, Mr. Wayne.”

“Bruce” he reminded her and she nodded.

“Bruce” she smiled shyly. “Ms. Evans used a system this year: the Haven’s staff gathered the letters the kids wrote to Santa and we put everything in an Excel file: so now we have in a simple catalog all the presents and the number of items.”

Bruce’s eyes shone impressed and he glanced at Alfred who winked.

“Very clever, Ms. Todd.”

She lifted her index finger smiling.

“Kate. And all the credit goes to Ms. Evans: it was her idea…now that she had the necessary amount of money she wanted everything to be perfect.”

“Right! Kate” he mimicked her smile. “I guess Santa Claus must have such a system to manage with millions of children.”

Dick snorted as they began moving towards the huge arch entrance of the Mall.

“There’s no Santa Claus!”

“No kiddin’!” Jason retorted sarcastic and rolled his eyes.

Bruce grinned and looked at Dick.

“But if he did I think that this would have been the best way to work.”

Bruce was happy to see Ms. Todd that healthy. He had seen pictures of her from past years when she was a drug addict and alcoholic: her face was gaunt and her eyes blank and with black bags under. Now her face had regained its natural, rosy color and her eyes shone happy.

The entrance though spacious was a bit crammed since it was late afternoon and most parents were out of work and free to bring their kids. Bruce actually was satisfied because among such crowd it’d be difficult to be distinguished.

The floor was tiled with glittering crème colored tiles and the arch that the two buildings formed was covered with dark green branches of mistletoe where silver snowflakes were perched and shone like diamonds under the Mall’s lights.

Bruce appreciated the fact that there wasn’t a stair and he didn’t need to use a ramp because doing this would force him to leave the coverage of the crowd. He lifted his eyes to see the logo of the Mall: the flying ball with the tail of multicolored stars as he remembered from his childhood.

For a moment he froze. The logo had changed. Now the comet was rapidly moving, ripping the dark sky of a giant screen; but this sky was what Bruce didn’t want to see. It was the polar sky with waves of neon light that changed from green to blue to red to purple…aurora borealis.

Bruce’s heart began beating fast; the frozen, clean air of the arctic brushing again his face as he was flying. Yet he wasn’t cold because the body that was keeping him airborne was hot and filled with warm love like the eyes – blue topaz eyes – and the smile every time Clark looked at him to make sure that he was comfortable.

“I’m going to show you the aurora borealis every night till you get sick of it!”

He blinked to shake off the memory and felt the still visible marks on his body ache: his pelvis was again dead as ever but the part of his body that was healthy was still stiff where Superman had used his strength; however the worst pain was in his chest… Alfred looked at him frowned.

“Master Bruce, if you’re not feeling well, we can return to the Manor” he said quietly but Jason and his mother looked at them.

“I’m alright, Alfred” he said and it was a wonder how they heard him under all the fuss the kids were making and the Christmas songs.

As people walked through the arch they were washed with sparkling snowflakes – a compensation for the lack of snow this year. Bruce couldn’t help but goggle at the square in the middle of the towering building. It was exactly as he remembered it: a giant Christmas tree decorated only with silver-white glimmering glass balls and a big golden star with countless rays; a star that emanated light.

Two rows of angels in human height formed a wide corridor leading to the tree. White, silver and light blue Angels, dressed with long robes held trumpets and harps that emanated sweet melodies. The rows ended before a real size crèche. The Little Drummer Boy’s melody caressed Bruce’s ears and his eyes watered.

Alfred looked at him and he wiped his eyes hastily.

“It’s exactly as I remember it…” the youth told.

The British nodded.

“The owner changed, many renovations have taken place through the years but this stayed the same.”

Bruce pressed his lips and searched for Alfred’s hand to hold.

“I don’t know if I’m happy or sad about that, Alfred…”

The kind man grinned.

“You don’t have to know, Master Bruce…Our memories are most of the times bittersweet” he whispered and Bruce nodded and scratched Hero under the chin.

The boys had already used the rolling stairs to reach the first floor but Ms. Todd waited in front of the wide glass elevator. She just realized that the two men weren’t with them and craned her head to find them among the crowd of bodies and heads before the twenty feet tree and the flashes as people were photographed using the tree as background.

Alfred waved to her and hurried along with Bruce.

They visited almost every toy store of the mall; it was a blessing that the stores there covered every wish of the Haven’s children. Bruce thought that if he was still a child would have felt like being in a dream; he smiled seeing Jason and Dick getting lost between the abundance of toys. At last, Dick was relaxed interacting with Jason and even smiling gaping at the toys and playing with Hero who rubbed at their feet. Probably, he let himself free believing that Bruce wasn’t seeing him absorbed in finding the toys the children asked.

They arranged with the Mall’s direction to deliver the gifts in the Haven the Christmas morning with a man dressed as Santa Claus – some members of the Haven staff would come to put labels on them with every child’s name.

Bruce cheered up knowing that these would give happiness to so many children and content as he was he turned to Dick.

“You need some clothes, Dick, and of course, you can choose the things you want for Christmas” he smiled to Jason “and you too, Jason.”

Dick’s relaxed face tensed and his eyes narrowed to Bruce’s disappointment. Every child-like carelessness and innocence was vanished.

“I don’t want anything bought with your money!” he spat and Bruce pressed his lips.

He took his wallet from the inside pocket of his long coat and showed the boy a handful of bills.

“Nice thing then I withdrew some money from your account” of course he didn’t but Dick didn’t need to know.

“Granny gave you access to my account?” he asked frowning. “This money is my father’s savings.”

Jason huffed and rolled his eyes.

“Man…”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I’m your guardian, Dick. Your father would want you to use this money for some gifts” that account wasn’t from Dick’s father since the man lost it all due to rot investments Zucco suggested him; it was the fund Bruce had created for the boy and his granny. He would never tell that to Dick nor that the money he was holding wasn’t from his bank account.

“Fuck!” he spat. “Com’, Jay…”

Bruce pressed his lips and watched the boys leaving. Hero came to him, climbed on his lap and licked his chin for Bruce to caress him.

Alfred returned with Ms. Todd carrying some packages with LEGO and Playmobil to show to Bruce.

“The boys are going to the gadgets section” Ms. Todd said and Bruce smiled not wanting them to suspect what took place before.

“Master Bruce, we finally found the exact toys we couldn’t find till now: what do you think?”

He grinned and shrugged.

“I don’t know about new toys, Alfred: you, Ms. Todd and our boys can judge better. Mmm… Alfred…”

“Yes, sir?”
“I think we should make sure that as many children as possible get presents for the Christmas.”

Alfred smiled and his eyes filled with pride that made Bruce uncomfortable; so he looked at Hero to avoid that stare. Ms. Todd was also gaping.

“You’re very considerate, Bruce…But…” she blushed “what I’m saying? Of course you are.”

“Thank you, Kate” he said as Ms. Todd ticked her list with the presents to label that these were covered.

As they moved through the different stores, they came upon a pet shop and Bruce couldn’t resist. He bought some new toys for Hero and some snacks.

Dick seemed to have forgotten his bad mood and was twittering with Jason about the new game consoles they bought and Bruce was relieved that his ward finally managed to feel like a kid should.

Alfred smiled to his master and pointed to a cheerful store that sparkled from Christmas decorations.

“A Manor is desperate to be decorated” he said playful but stern at the same time.

Bruce huffed but grinned as Ms. Todd dragged the boys inside. Alfred stood beside Bruce and looked at him.

“Things seem to smoothen, Master Bruce…” he smiled.

“I hope so, Alfred.”

“Shall we?” he made an inviting gesture towards the store’s entrance.

Alfred arranged so as everything they bought would be delivered to the Manor: they couldn’t cram a seven feet tall Christmas tree, decorations, garments and lamps in the Rolls’ trunk… Perhaps, they could but it’d be a nightmare for Alfred. And as they came out, Bruce chuckled upon seeing the spectacle.

“What?!” Tony demanded looking himself affronted.

“Tony, it’s Christmas not Halloween! You decided to dress up as Hero?” Bruce couldn’t stop laughing and Tony hardly managed to keep his pissed expression.

“I don’t have to dress up as hero, I’m already Ironman…”

Bruce took Hero from the armpits and showed him to Tony.

“That Hero!”

The billionaire from Malibu wore a long, white, fur coat with fluffy lapels and a fitting fur hat.

“I hope that at least is not real fur…” Hero hissed following his Master’s frowning.

Tony rolled his eyes and let his head loll on the side as the boys began giggling too.

“Please, little guy, my environmental worries and charities are legendary” he raised his index. “And I don’t get the jeering…You know that furs are also a man’s cloth?”

Pepper hid her laughter behind her hand.
“And damn!” Tony exclaimed defeated. “It’s freezing cold! Christmas in Malibu are celebrated with surfing!”

Jason winked.

“Gotham has sea as well, ya can dive… oh, man, ya’re like those fat rappers!”

Tony snorted and glared at the boy with narrowed eyes.

“I like that little brat…” he winked.

“How did you find us?” Bruce asked. “That place is a labyrinth and with so many people…”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“And now you insult me, little guy” he pointed his thumbs to his chest. “I’m Tony –fucking-Stark: I’d be ashamed if I couldn’t find my best buddy in a Mall” Bruce smiled and Tony scratched his fur – artificial fur – hat “I’m starving, guys, and I’m sure you, too…”

“I’ve made reservations, Master Anthony and we have finished our list so we can go.”

“You won’t buy your presents, Tony?” Bruce asked his friend who was trotting beside him.

“Hehe!” he chuckled. “I’ve done that already, buddy; in high secrecy.”

The restaurant was at the tenth storey and gave a spectacular view of the city from the whole wall windows. Their table was in a corner right before the big, black tiled fireplace and although the place was warmed with airconditioning the flames inside added the sense of home.

The room was packed with families and couples that after their shopping decided to end their outing with a delicious meal. And Alfred was right: everything was great – food, wine and dessert.

“I wish Selina and Leslie were here” Bruce said.

“Leslie sends her kisses but she had shift at the clinic” Alfred replied. “However, we can repeat that another time with the whole gang.”

“Are you not going to take off your fur coat?” Pepper asked exasperated and amused Tony that was sitting opposite her right beside Bruce.

Tony brushed lustful the white fur of his sleeve.

“Are you kiddin’, babe? I had months to enjoy so much attention from people and being with the Person of the Year demands all my resourcefulness to not get obliterated.”

Bruce chuckled but Pepper snorted sipping her red wine.

“I think they are activists wondering whether it’s a real fur to throw you eggs…”

Tony lolled his head on the side and pouted arching his eyebrows smugly.

“I think you’re jealous, Peps: activists can discern immediately when a fur is artificial. Oh! I think babes admire the beast inside the fur…”

Pepper choked with her wine and Alfred offered her a handkerchief before he glanced at Tony.
“Definitely, Master Anthony! You’re right: you must remind people of a polar bear” Tony frowned. “Actually, as we entered the restaurant I noticed a young lady trying to comfort her toddler who was crying believing that a white bear wandered the Mall…”

Tony widened his eyes.

“Ouch!”

“Of course, I reassured the child that the bear was actually a human dressed in a funny looking coat.”

Everyone at the table burst in laughter, even Dick forgot his pissed expression and laughed carefree which Bruce noticed relieved. Hero who was eating from a bowl on the floor turned and looked at Tony and when his eyes met with the human’s they seemed so jeering to Tony that he hastened to take off his coat.

He popped his tongue to the kitten.

“You can be in your fur and be cute and get all the petting, huh?”

The kitten meowed under Bruce’s amused stare and returned to his food. Tony met Bruce’s eyes and lifted an eyebrow shaking his head.

“I think he pities me…”

Bruce pouted.

“He is a very compassionate kitten…”

Tony returned to his food and looked at the wall screen on the bar’s right, on the far opposite wall: they were showing the latest Victoria’s Secret Show and Tony slumped on his elbow resting his chin in his palm.

“I was there” he sighed “but they don’t show me” he lifted his eyes reminiscently and huffed. “I remember two years ago when Gisele’s turn had come and we were so busy…talking” he licked his lips looking at Pepper’s sparkling eyes “that the babe appeared in the Catwalk with my arms on…” he glanced at the boys “her shoulders, kids!” he rolled his eyes mock outraged “for who you’re taking me?”

Pepper cleared her throat and Ms. Todd laughed.

“Anyway” Tony inhaled deeply “that happening was the best and we draw all the cameras…”

“I dare to say, Master Anthony, that if you had worn this coat you’d have drawn all the cameras this year too…” Alfred chirped cocking an eyebrow.

A new round of laughter made Tony slap his cheeks and roll his eyes. Bruce leaned to his friend’s ear and Tony became absolutely solemn.

“We had a development concerning our mysterious items from LexLabs” he whispered.

Tony frowned and sipped from his wine.

“What happened?”

“Someone came to my office demanding his order without wanting to reveal anything about it.”
“Who was he?”

“A Brunno Mannheim.”

“Mmm…” Tony mumbled because he knew the name and readied to relay what he knew.

But then the show on the screen was stopped abruptly and the sign for the breaking news covered the screen along with the overwhelming music. The eyes of everyone in the restaurant fixed on the screen where a shaken newscaster greeted the viewers.

“We’re sorry to interrupt our current program but there’s an emergency in Chicago…After the joy for the returning of the stolen jewel named Ring of Flame, unfortunately this city deals with tragedy.”

Bruce now knew where Selina was… However, he frowned because Chicago was in his thoughts a lot lately because of the Arrow mystery and didn’t like this ‘coincidence’. Tony on the other hand was already half standing: Avengers should have been informed.

On the screen, people saw the shaking image of a building ready to collapse; the crowd in the street was screaming and yelling for help. In the central floor, almost a quarter of the floor was missing: shreds of glass were all over the place as well as metal and debris; smoke filled the sky and didn’t let the rescue teams approach from the helicopter that flew desperate to get access.

The howling of sirens from ambulances and patrol cars was nightmarish. There were trapped people inside and the few fire fighters who had managed to enter the space tried to help them: they had already brought some to the paramedics but another explosion trapped worse the rest and thwarted them from getting closer.

Bruce’s eyes became wild and Tony was ready to activate his armor and take off. But then cheers of relief stopped him and Bruce’s eyes sparkled from the same joy as always.

Superman rushed in the building and using his super speed and strength demolished the debris; fire fighters surged to take those inside and Superman was helping getting people down to the paramedics. Bruce watched without breathing as Superman said something to the fire fighters and they left: obviously the upper building was ready to collapse on the ‘wounded’ floor.

The Man of Steel turned to fly away as the last fire fighter was safe far from the building when something caught his attention and returned to the collapsing site – Bruce’s eyes widened and the restaurant fell silent. Superman returned to the edge of the gaping building with a small kid perched in his chest; people in the street clapped but a terrible howling made everyone gasp.

The building collapsed over Superman who held with one hand the ceiling since with the other hand he was grasping the crying girl who panicked was jolting her legs and hands to escape.

Bruce’s hands clenched into fists and his heart stopped beating; Tony was goggling and the entire hall was silent as Superman seemed unable to hold anymore.

“No…” Bruce whispered.

Suddenly, the collapsing ceiling was steady, in its right position and Superman had the chance to take the little girl down and return to stabilize the building, placing debris to fill the void.

The camera zoomed to the one who had saved Superman: Diana’s face was clenched in determination as she held the ceiling till Superman secured the building. When the rescue teams came back, Superman flew to reach Wonder Woman. They were both dust covered and tired but the hero cupped her cheeks and kissed her passionately – the camera made a very close zoom and the people at the street wolf whistled.

Bruce gulped and he was happy that everyone in the restaurant was occupied staring at the screen and clapping as well because he felt all the blood leaving his face.

Superman turned to the people underneath and gifted them with his dazzling smile; his blue topaz eyes sparkled from happiness.

“She is my Star!” he said loudly for everyone to hear and Diana wrapped her arms around his neck and resumed their kiss.

Bruce’s eyes stayed frozen on the screen, expressionless, dead; his heart beating so slow as if sobbing – it felt like blood drops slithered inside his chest.

“May I call you Star? Your eyes are like star sapphires” a melodic voice said shyly but it echoed from so far that it hardly was heard.

Tony, Alfred and Pepper stared at him; Pepper biting her bottom lip. Everyone knew that Superman used to call Bruce ‘his Star’.

“At least, he was lucky to get away from Wayne!” Dick spat growling and Tony glared at him as people turned and looked at Bruce.

But the boy simply stood and ran out of the restaurant, Jason following him. Bruce turned his chair to go after them and Hero climbed from the chair to his lap; however upon reaching the exit flashes of cameras blinded him on a full onslaught.

“How do you feel being the Person of the Year?”

“A comment, Bruce!”

“You feel triumphant now?”

Bruce clenched his jaw and held Hero protectively because the kitten got wild with so many flashes and yells. He stared at the mass of reporters eager to pass them and find the boys.

“Ladies and gentlemen, please” Pepper’s voice came from behind him calm and confident as Tony took the handles and led the chair back inside. “Mr. Wayne, never denied you of any briefing so I believe that you owe him some privacy. And he, as always will thank you for your discretion and kindness with a detailed press release” she smiled. “For the time being, I appeal to your understanding to let him and the customers of this fine restaurant enjoy their meal.” She cocked her eyebrows. “Thank you” she chuckled as the Mall’s security showed them out.

“Master Bruce, I think you should better stay here” Alfred had come to Bruce and sat at the chair beside him. “Let’s continue our dinner and I’m sure the boys will come back.”

Ms. Todd looked uncomfortable.

“Jay is with him: he will take care of Dick; Jay always took care of me.”

Bruce nodded and smiled to her.

“Jason is a great kid, Kate; you should be proud of him…”

Then he pretended to be interested in his meal but as the time went on and the boys didn’t return he every now and then stared at the entrance ready to rush out.

“Calm down, little guy…”

“Joker knows that Dick is my ward…” he whispered to Tony’s ear and closed his eyes. “I should have followed them right away.”

Tony could feel the agony of his friend; he stood.

“I’ll find them. Brats!” he mumbled furious crossing the door.

“What are ya tryin’ to do, man?” Jason asked exasperated lolling his head on the side.

He had caught up with Dick at the building’s rooftop, the part that was formatted like storage with carton boxes and broken chairs.

“It’s fuckin’ freezin’ up her’!”

Dick had his arms crossed and looked at the city; he turned to his friend.

“So go away!” he cocked his eyebrows challenging. “You’re buddies with him after all!” he spat.

Jason widened his eyes angry.

“I’m yar buddy, ya fool! But Wayne didna do anything wrong!”

“To you!” he gritted his teeth. “But to me has done too much! I lost my family because of him!”

“Man! He didna kill them! Joker did!”

“Because of Wayne! And now my granny disappeared and he keeps my uncle away, stopping him from seeing me.”

Jason closed his eyes and huffed.

“That Zucco guy is bad news, pal…I think you shoulda avoid him.”

Dick growled and turned his back to Jason, facing the city.

“I didn’t expect anything different…Mind your own business, Todd! If you want to be friends with him, do it! But don’t come to me playing the buddy” he snapped his head to him clenching his jaw. “Either you’re with me or him!”

Jason spat on the floor enraged.

“Ya can’t boss me around! I stay with ya because I care, ya dick!”

Dick blinked and shook his head.

“He brought me here to impress me with his money and his” he rolled his eyes “charities and dragged me to a fancy restaurant to play the family; to brag that he became the father of a poor orphan!”

Jason pouted.
“Bullshit, pal! He’s too young to be yar father…yar older brotha maybe; and I don’t think he planned all these…So what are ya tryin’ to do?”

Dick remembered his talk with Tony Zucco: he wasn’t sure he could trust Jay with this: with everything else yes, but not with this, because Jay didn’t like Dick’s uncle and he could tell everything to Wayne.

“Nothing! I just wanted to escape; to breathe some clean air without him polluting everything.”

Jason shook his head not totally convinced.

“Then let’s go inside; they’d be worried.”

Dick cocked his eyebrows.

“I doubt…and since when you care about the others’ worries?”

The younger boy frowned pissed but he didn’t say anything because they both saw Tony Stark marching towards them. His face was tense from anger but Dick looked at him challenging.

“He just wants to drive my buddy suffer from worry and expose him as an irresponsible guardian” Tony said to Jason and then looked at Dick who had crossed his arms “right?” he snarled.

The boy’s eyes were sparkling unfazed and Tony saw a faint smirk on his young face.

“Worry?” Dick snorted. “No way! He knows to fool even you, Stark! He didn’t give a shit about me: he just took my guardianship to advertize how good he are and to torture me!”

Tony was fuming and Jason was shaking his head: he loved Dick but his pal couldn’t honestly believe these, or could he?

“Listen, brat” Tony retorted. “My friend has just come out of an injury that almost took his life but his health is still really sensitive; he has a tough path of recovery ahead and he needs tranquility and rest: physical and emotional. And I won’t let a spoiled brat risk all these with his stupid and unreasonable hatred!”

Dick clenched his jaw.

“Then convince your buddy to quit from my guardianship for me to live with my uncle, my only relative!”

Tony’s mouth curved in honest puzzlement and detest: how could this boy hate so much?

“Bruce never quits even for his own good” he replied. “He promised to your grandmother to be your guardian and protect you and he won’t betray that promise. So you’d better accept the situation and behave yourself till your granny is back” he cocked his eyebrows for emphasis. “Cause if anything happens to Bruce because of you, you’ll have to do with me, comprendo?”

“Tony?”

Jason whistled uncomfortable seeing Bruce approaching and Tony closed his eyes sighing. He turned to his friend.

“You should have stayed there, Bruce; it’s freezing!”

“I’m fine, Tony; I just followed you…” he looked at the boys. “Are you alright, boys?”
Dick rushed to him.

“As you see…Maybe you should put a chain around my neck and drag me around with you” Bruce’s eyes narrowed “or put me in a cage in your basement as Falcone did to you” Bruce’s breath became pressed. “Because you’re like him!” he snapped and ran away.

Tony was clenching his fists but squatted seeing his friend’s eyes lowered and his breath still shallow. He rubbed his upper arms and Bruce looked him in the eyes like when he was a child and Tony was his savior.

“‘He doesn’t mean all these, Bruce…”

His smile was trembling but he nodded. Jason scratching his raven hair approached hesitantly.

“Sorry, dude” he mumbled. “He is unfair…”

“He feels alone, Jason and…being with the one he feels responsible for that it is too hard for him…I wish…” but Bruce didn’t continue under Tony’s worried stare. “Jason, please stay with him: Dick loves and needs you – he must not lose you, too…”

The boy nodded licking his lips and ran behind his friend.

Tony patted him.

“He’ll realize his mistake and the things you did for him and he’ll be sorry…”

Bruce shook his head and took his friend’s hand.

“I don’t want him to realize nor to be sorry – I want him safe and happy, Tony; he has already been through enough.” He rubbed his forehead “I understand how difficult it is for you to hear him talk like that but it’s okay, Tony: I know he is suffering so his words don’t affect me…”

Tony crooked his mouth.

“Yeah, sure…Let’s go to the others…I want to taste that Black Forest cake” he licked his lips. “Tell me: how you escaped Alfred to follow me?”

When Alfred entered the Manor with Dick nobody was at the salon.

They had decided that Alfred would take Jason and his mother to the apartment building they lived – well, two blocks before to not gain unwanted attention –; Dick with them. While Pepper and Tony would bring Bruce and Hero to the Manor.

Alfred’s joy for the evening and Master Bruce’s smiles became a heavy rock in his guts. As soon as they entered the Manor, Dick said goodnight and went to his room; Alfred collapsed in an armchair.

Tony came across Dick at the stairs but didn’t say anything and headed to Alfred who looked at him.

“Is Master Bruce alright?”

Tony smiled and nodded.

“Of course. He was exhausted, went immediately to his bedroom, had a shower and now he is sleeping like a baby.”
“Are you sure, Master Anthony? That he is at the Master’s bedroom?”

Tony lolled his head on the side.

“I was there; I scanned his vitals. He is sleeping like a baby after I supervised him taking his pills. Hero with him.”

Alfred huffed.

“I believed that an outing like this would do him some good but I’ve made things worse…”

Tony frowned and jumped to the sofa right beside the older man. He leaned to him.

“What are you talking about, Al? He might be exhausted but he loved everything: you saw how he was smiling. And that shine in his eyes… I tell you, Al: Bruce had a great time despite the… happenings that would have happened even in the Manor. I think that overall the evening was… okay. Your idea was excellent!” he rubbed the butler’s upper arms.

The British grinned.

“Thank you, Master Anthony. Did he say anything for…Superman?”

Tony growled and yanked his head backwards.

“That asshole alien! Ugh!” he slapped his cheeks but then calmed down. “You know, Bruce: he was speaking about anything else but this…He is tough, our boy.”

Alfred nodded and pressed his lips.

“After those horrible eighteen years, I want Master Bruce’s first Christmas to be special and happy but” he sighed “I dread that people won’t leave him alone.”

Tony licked his lips.

“We won’t let them, Al: I swear. And despite what bad people say for me, when swearing something it’s better than signing a contract.”

Alfred smiled.

“Thank you, Master Anthony; with your help I know that everything will be fine.”

Bruce’s sleep was deep and restful though filled with Superman kissing Vivian, star sapphires, a boy’s hand holding his calling him ‘father’, hundreds of kids opening their gifts with smiles on their faces, icebergs in the polar landscape, aurora borealis and the glazing pyramid of the Fortress piercing the sky. Bitterness and joy were rapidly replacing each other but his body felt relaxed.

As Bruce felt the first light penetrating the heavy curtains of his room he knew that someone was there and opened his eyes eager.

“Selina?!” he exclaimed and hugged the young woman who was sitting on the mattress.

She kissed his cheeks and smirked.

“It was about time, sweetie; I know it’s Saturday but I’m starving and I didn’t want to eat breakfast without you. Mmm…I hope you don’t mind I came through your window? It’s more romantic!”

The Manor had a top security system but this was Selina.

“How?” he asked but then shook his head. “Never mind…I missed you, Sel – I thought you had gone for holidays somewhere with Steve.”

She frowned and tapped his nose.

“And lose my boy’s first free Christmas?”

Bruce smirked.

“And then I heard that the stolen Ring of Flame was returned to Chicago’s police by someone unknown and I figured where you were…”

She pouted.

“Yeah…it was quite obvious, huh?” she said playfully.

“I’m glad to see you in high spirits though last night Chicago had troubles…”

Selina understood: not only troubles…She had seen Superman kissing Wonder Bitch in public and from Bruce’s eyes, her friend had seen them too. And that made her joy for what she did greater.

Selina jolted to her feet and show Bruce two huge bags with which Hero was playing.

“What are these?”

“I promised to help decorate and from what I saw you can’t manage without the Cat. Great! I’m in the mood to create artistic!” she took Hero and held him dancing in the room.

Bruce laughed.

“So Chicago was that good?”

She hugged the kitten and jump to the bed.

“Uhu! Let me begin…”
Chapter 48

Catwoman was standing on a rooftop overlooking Chicago that spread underneath glorious with its thousands different sparkling lights and noisy – vibrant since this was the night's prime time.

Her arms were crossed over the chest and her legs spread as she stood firmly on the cement. She was watching the foreign city and her mind was racing: she was satisfied and angry at the same time – sad and angry so much so that her fists clenched unconsciously and her emerald eyes sparkled.

Stealing the stolen jewel was easier than she had expected...okay, it was challenging – otherwise, Selina would be disappointed – but Gotham always provided with far more entertaining tasks. Her ‘acquaintances’ had informed her about the big deal: a filthy rich guy from those who pose as charitable and dignified in social events; he had the habit to hire people to steal for him legendary jewels he admired in museums and private collections. Something like Falcone.

His latest pray was the Ring of Flame: a gorgeous ring with the rarest ruby in the world. Well, Catwoman could confirm that this ruby was indeed unique...She sighed and her breath formed a small cloud into the chilly sky. The Ring belonged to the National Museum of Delhi and the legend had it that Price Gautama, more known as the Buddha, was wearing it on his pinky...

All in all, the filthy rich guy hired some experts to do the job and paid them handsomely to wear it in his own pinky. She cocked an eyebrow: too bad she was informed about that...And too bad she was with the good guys because she returned the Ring to the police...

The guy had a huge penthouse in the Downtown and his security system was tricky – not to mention, the gorillas that guarded the place: guarded because in his bedroom was placed the treasure dove with his fabulous collection.

She smirked: after her raid he’d be much poorer because she emptied that treasury that was – how authentic! – hidden behind a Picasso painting on the wall opposite the king size bed. Catwoman had watched the penthouse some days using the wondrous glasses Bruce had given her back in the summer to watch Luthor’s suit; and of course the macho guy believing that nobody could see through the special glass of the windows felt free to open the treasury to fondle his gems as if expecting a genie to pop out.

The Police announced that they had the Ring in their hands and other missing treasures as well which they would disclose later.

It was easy for her to pass the thugs once she knew their movements and even easier to empty a ‘high security’ treasury when you watched the owner open it using his thumb’s fingertip.

All in all, she slipped in and out easy like a cat and she would have liked to see the man’s face when hearing on the news that the Ring ‘flew’ along with the other caged birds.

“The guy is really arrogant” she rolled her eyes exasperated. “Who uses thumb’s fingertip to his treasury?” she pouted. “It’s outdated and stupid...especially, when you have a special pounder that once applied to the receptor reforms the fingertip and then you use a special tape…” she looked at Bruce’s intrigued eyes and frowned.

She shook her index finger.

“No more…These are professional secrets that shouldn’t be disclosed to the uninitiated” she said mocking the solemn way of cults’ priests.

Bruce chuckled and put his robe waiting the continuation; Hero left the bags and climbed on the mattress purring.

Selina yanked her head and huffed closing her eyes.

“Ugh! You can’t imagine how tempting was to keep those beautiful, unique jewels…and how difficult was to give them to the cops!” she looked mock insulted at Bruce who was grinning. “Not breaking and entering to the Police Headquarters, please! But place them on the Captain’s office” she closed her eyes and shook her head. “My hand was trembling and didn’t want to obey! Thinking the ungentle hands of the cops holding these masterpieces…Pfff!”

Now Bruce was laughing and Selina sighed.

“But…I finally won myself and left my hard earned treasure…”

Bruce snorted.

“Not so ‘hard earned’ by your sayings…” he cocked an eyebrow and Selina crooked her mouth and rolled her eyes.

“Yeah…” she pouted but then smiled because she had made Bruce laugh.

“Well?” Bruce urged her widening his eyes and Hero did the same making Selina brush his head.

She heard a soft sound and she knew that someone landed behind her; someone she loathed…Catwoman clenched her jaw but didn’t turn: in her mind’s eyes she saw again Bruce’s sad eyes the day she founded him in the greenhouse after the betrayal; his brave effort to make his fake smile seem real to not sadden her and his loved ones.

Soft footsteps like feet that barely touched the cement approached her.

“A person whom I didn’t expect to find in Chicago…” that voice was so unbearable to hear…“Of course, you would come to…” a slight amusement “avenge your friend’s ‘betrayal’…”

She turned swiftly to face him; her eyes more frozen than the weather, her teeth bare.

“Don’t flatter yourself, handsome” she snorted. ‘I didn’t come here for you…” her eyes flashed like thunders.

Superman crossed his arms and walked closer.

“You are telling me that you don’t want to make me suffer for dumping Bruce?”

She smirked and her pearly white teeth flashed.

“Dumping him?” she sniggered. “Bruce dumped you, not the other way around…” she said slyly.

His face darkened; clearly he didn’t like to be reminded of that. However, realizing Selina’s satisfied smirk he smiled.

“So you’re not carrying a Kryptonite dagger like Stark to stab me?”

Catwoman shook her head and then stabbed him with something green that wasn’t Kryptonite but was more acid: her emerald eyes.
“I could…and it’d be a small punishment for you” her eyes were lost for a moment and then she gritted her teeth. “But you don’t worth it…” she said curling her lips in disgust.

Superman frowned; his eidetic memory played before his mind’s eyes that night in Gotham that Selina shot Chill killing him.

“Chill was worthy and I’m not?” he demanded chuckling but he felt insulted being considered lower than that monster.

Catwoman yanked her head rolling her eyes.

“You wonder? Are you that stupid? You’re worse than Chill, Superman!” she saw him being shocked from that. “He was torturing Bruce for all his life but unlike you he didn’t make him open his heart only to butcher that precious heart!” she narrowed her wild eyes. “You’re more cruel than Chill because he never gave Bruce happiness only to push him to the abyss afterwards!”

Superman’s face became pale and his eyebrows knitted together.

“How is he?” he asked in a throaty voice.

Catwoman snorted.

“You ask if the wounds you inflicted him after he trusted you with his body have healed?”

Superman’s eyelids seemed unable to stay still: he remembered that night…the violent way he had fucked Bruce – mercilessly…But he didn’t believe that Bruce would have told to anyone, even to someone like Selina who was more than a sister to him.

She regarded him appalled and pursed her lips.

“No, he didn’t tell me anything – yeah, it’s that easy to figure what you’re thinking; he’s still protecting you…But I know when Bruce is in pain: I can read his eyes, his face, even though he knows how to pretend. You should be ashamed of yourself!” she lolled her head on the side and pointed her hand to him cocking an eyebrow. “Look whom people consider their protector!” she let her arm fall and slapped her thigh “I don’t want to waste even my saliva to spit your face!”

“Superman, how do you allow her to speak to you like this?!” another pair of feet landed and marched to Superman’s side.

Catwoman regarded her with narrowed still eyes like a cat that lurks the mouse; her mouth curved in a smirk that made Wonder Woman fume.

“Who is she?” she demanded searching Superman’s expressionless eyes. “She definitely is a scum: a burglar or…whatever” she turned her malicious eyes to Catwoman “a crazy bitch judging by her outfit!” she spat.

But she had to swallow her poison.

“Aaargh!” the Amazon didn’t manage to muffle her scream of shock and pain causing Selina’s radiant, broad grin.

While Diana was demanding answers from Superman about Catwoman’s identity and he was looking at her, Selina had prepared herself and when Wonder Woman turned to sneer at her, Catwoman’s whip lashed the Amazon’s face.
Selina with a swift movement twitched her whip ripping the air and hooked it at the opposite fire escape, launching herself away from the rooftop. She was no fool: she knew that Superman’s bimbo surpassed her in strength and with the alien’s help, she might had to put much of a fight to escape… and she was bored of those two: she already felt dirty only by being in the same space.

The Amazon clenched her jaw, ground her teeth and let the blood flow from her wounded cheek, Superman shocked held her shoulders.

As she gathered her whip in a circle, Catwoman couldn’t hold back – and why not? She sniggered loudly knowing that both would hear her. So she rooted her legs on the opposite rooftop and gazed at the ridiculous sight of those two.

“Catwoman, you Wonder Bitch! When someone asks you who bitch-whipped, this is the name you’d say!” she shrugged. “After all it suits you, perfectly! So long, suckers! Oh! Make another porn: it’s a nice rooftop!”

She jolted to the air and with somersaults that even Superman’s eyes hardly caught she distanced herself. The Amazon’s growl of frustration the last thing she heard of them.

Bruce placed his hands on her shoulders; his eyes were solemn despite the fact Selina was chuckling recounting the incident. Of course, she didn’t relay every part of the dialogue that had to do with Bruce’s suffering.

“What?” she asked. “Why aren’t you laughing?”

“It was dangerous, Sel” she rolled her eyes – of course, it was but that made it more fun. “I’m almost sure that she is an impostor and we don’t know what she is capable of. And Superman is under her influence so although he remains good” now Selina huffed exasperated “we can’t be sure how he will react” he caressed her cheek. “You shouldn’t have picked up a fight with both of them…”

She smiled.

“You don’t have to worry about your girl, sweetie…The Cat is tougher than both of them together and…it wasn’t my fault” she pouted like a school kid being reprimanded and Bruce chuckled “she started first and you know me: I can’t say no to a challenge, especially from that bitch!”

“At least, we learnt one thing: she isn’t invulnerable and there’s no need something a la Kryptonite to fight her.”

Selina frowned.

“You still want to save him? After what he did last night…after what he said?!?” she shook her head. “I say: let her do whatever she wants with the Super-asshole!”

Bruce lowered his eyes.

“We need to be prepared for everything, Sel: we don’t know what is hiding behind her and the pattern that began forming isn’t good at all…Wait…” he frowned “how do you know…” he grinned and cocked his eyebrows “you spoke with Alfred.”

Selina brushed her nose uncomfortable and scratched Hero’s head.

“I suppose…Well, of course, your bedroom’s security is Catwoman proof – we worked with Tony for that and I wouldn’t leave any holes for cats or ‘mice’…So, yes…” she sucked her lips “I knocked the door and our good Alfred opened and…he told me…I’m sorry, Bruce.”
Bruce curved his mouth to pretend indifference but Selina’s eyes that bore into his left him no doubt that she saw through him.

“Don’t be sad for me, Sel; it’s okay” he smiled. “To tell you the truth, every time I heard him calling me that way…, I mean ‘Star’…” he even now blushed and Selina caressed the pink over his cheeks “I felt that it didn’t fit me” he chuckled. “It was too bright for me, you know?” he patted the back of her palms.

“Nothing is too bright for you, Bruce” she said serious. “You shadow every star” he grinned. “You’re the only one I know that deserves to be called ‘star’.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Then you’re the moon: you know, like the evening star that accompanies the moon? We belong together” he winked. “Don’t tell me Captain America was in Chicago with you?” he decided to change the subject.

Selina rolled her eyes.

“No, he had some work with the US army – I didn’t follow exactly what – and he went to Washington. So I had some days off to manage my affairs. But he’ll return for the holidays.”

Bruce shook his head.

“You won’t tell him that you are the Catwoman?” he asked serious and Selina licked her lips.

“I’m not ready to do that, sweetie…” she leaned to his ear. “I love my secrets!” she whispered.

Hero rubbed his head to her upper arm causing her smile.

“I think that he’ll be impressed learning what you have done: how you helped in Falcone’s downfall – your bravery” Bruce remarked. “How you’re taking the stolen jewels and return them to their rightful owners…He’ll be proud of you as much as I am, Sel…”

She touched her forehead to Bruce’s.

“When I hear your voice, sweetie, I’m so relaxed; the world seems a better place. Even in those dark years, being with you made me feel…safe” she chuckled and jolted from the bed Hero following her.

“During my staying at Chicago I made my investigation on that Arrow guy.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side grinning.

“I was sure…” Selina would have searched what troubled her friend even while he told her there was no need.

Selina clutched her hips with both hands.

“What? You know I like mixing business with pleasure… Well, my friends, the little rats of Chicago…”

Bruce snorted.

“A cat having friendship with rats?” he cocked his eyebrows.

Selina answered lifting her eyebrows as well.
“See Garfield…Anyway, they knew about the incident you read in Police’s reports but nothing more: there’s no Arrow vigilante in Chicago.”

Bruce nodded crooking his mouth in a smirk.

“I knew it! He is playing with me, Sel.”

“With Bruce Wayne or Batman? And why?”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“I think with both…As for the reason…” he inhaled. “I don’t know but I generally don’t believe in coincidences.”

Selina frowned.

“Meaning?”

Bruce pressed his lips and shook his head.

“We’ll see…Now, I need to have a shower and get downstairs for breakfast: you and Hero are starving, right?”

Selina took Hero from the floor.

“And Alfred can’t wait for us to start decorating the Manor!”

Bruce lolled his head on the side sighing.

“Jason is already here – the little rascal came with his bike; and” she said teasingly “we will decorate the garden too…” she shook her index finger to him warningly. “This Manor is happy to have its rightful owner back and we will help her show it!”

She pranced all way to the door, opened and turned again to her friend; her ponytail lashing the air.

“Don’t be late!”

Superman was flying. But he felt it too difficult to stay airborne and it shouldn’t be like this: flying was the easiest thing for him. There was a dread in him, a dread so unfamiliar to the Man of Steel; a dread that he knew it didn’t have to do with falling from the sky. Besides, where was he to fall?

Finally, what was around him registered: darkness, the sky was dark without any cloud or star or the moon or…anything. He frowned because he gradually realized that he wasn’t floating in the sky: there was no air, no smell, no…no…anything. He used his long distance sight to see underneath hoping to see the familiar landscape of human cities or country side but as the lack of any sound already had told him there was nothing…

And this, this darkness that surrounded him wasn’t the sky, wasn’t even the universe…His dread became pure terror when he realized the truth: he was floating into nothingness. And the nothingness was gripping his insides like invisible Kryptonite pinchers…He felt hopeless, desperate, weak, helpless, lost, in agony…His face was drenched in sweat and all over his body the same sweat had frozen not only from the coldness of his surroundings but also from the coldness of his own heart that now beat fast and loud making his breaths pants…
He knew that he wasn’t to die but what the use of being alive? Floating in an endless…nothing? He wondered where his loved ones were: his mother, Diana, Lois, Jimmy… Suddenly, in his mind an old nightmare emerged: he was floating in the universe holding someone in his arms. Someone dead – someone for whom now he didn’t care but months ago was his entire life…and his death was enough to choke him into the nothingness.

Superman for the first time in his life felt panic; he was all alone in the darkness, in nothingness and he could feel that nothingness slowly crawled inside him freezing his insides; freezing his feelings, eliminating them. He was lost; he was the sole existence in non-existence and nothingness was swallowing him like it probably swallowed all his loved ones, the entire world.

He didn’t know what to do; he didn’t know if it was worthy to do anything or just let the coldness conquer him and turn him into nothing. The agony hurt him – the panic, the doubt, the ignorance… Superman closed his face in his palms and screamed but his voice wasn’t heard because around him was nothing and his voice was nothing too. His heart was beating frantically and he could hear it drumming inside his skull; he was slowly put out like a fire… And the worst was that he didn’t feel any mood to fight, like he was already dry, drenched: a speck of nothing in the infinity of nothingness…

“No!!” he cried inside his palms and he couldn’t understand why he did that since no sound was created.

And then suddenly something slipped through his fingers; something…warm in all this cold. He frowned and opened his eyes still keeping his palms over his face as if he was scared…and he was scared. There was light playing with his fingers and his eyes which now began regaining their life.

There was light, warmth…there was still hope! He jerked his hands away and looked around him to find the source. His eyes bulged with awe.

It was a star far away…so far that it seemed small, tiny but its warmth and light reached him even through such a distance. A beautiful star: he knew that because its light was warming his cold face and restoring the life inside him; his heart was beating fast but it was pleasant because it was the heartbeat of joy, of hope.

He felt that this faraway star had pitied him and reached him to show the path; and Superman felt trust, faith to that star, his hope for living again…

His fist clenched and ripped the nothingness without him even realizing as if the star drew his body, his every molecule; he was flying though it was the most difficult thing in his life. The nothingness felt like sprouting branches that wrapped around his legs and arms to thwart him from reaching his beautiful star. But he clenched his jaw and gritted his teeth because now he found it nothing would keep him apart from that star – even nothingness itself.

The light became even brighter as he approached and the warmth numbed his body pleasantly – oh! So pleasantly…- his entire existence; hope was reborn inside him, despair dissolved; a big smile brightened his face.

He was now washed by the light; his body refreshed, recharged. A thought crossed his mind warning him to not approach more because he’d reach the core and perhaps that was dangerous. But he didn’t care: he wanted to dive in that light, in that warmth, in that safety – he was peaceful there, he was safe there…Nothingness, darkness couldn’t reach him – couldn’t get him.

Superman slowed down because he didn’t want to hurt the star and walked carefully, shyly to the core...to the source of the light, to his salvation.

He brought his palm over his eyes because the light was blinding but he didn’t mind even if he felt as if the star didn’t want him to get closer. Superman’s eyes widened.

There was a human form in the core of all this light, of all this warmth, of all this hope and safety; he walked closer without breathing to not startle the human-like star and ran away from him.

It had its back turned to him and its head was slightly bent. Superman’s heart jerked wanting to leave his chest because he knew that back, that hair, that perfume so well...

The star heard his footsteps although it must already have known his presence. It slowly began turning to him and Superman stopped breathing: the light all of a sudden blinded him but he still could see sapphire blue and two sparkling emerald stars in the middle...there were so sad but at the same time there was so much love in there...Two eyes: the most beautiful eyes he ever saw.

"Every Kryptonian had a lucky crystal...Yours was a Kryptonite, the rarest kind: sapphire blue with emerald light in the core..." Jor El’s solemn voice echoed.

"My lucky Kryptonites..." he whispered awed and the star became a human. A bruised human whose lips were swollen and bit hard...And Superman was the one who did that damage and more...But Bruce was there staring at him with dignity and...love...

Superman took off towards him because he couldn’t wait and walking was too slow: he needed to apologize. Now that he had found again the light – his star – he wouldn’t lose it again – he wouldn’t lose him again.

But then Bruce looked him sad and Superman felt shaking and being taken away...

"Kal! Kal!"

He opened his eyes and saw Diana’s worried face over him; her cheek had still the lash Selina did to her last night.

"A nightmare, my dear..." he muttered breathing heavily wanting to chase away the fastest what he saw.

Diana frowned.

"I didn’t know you see nightmares too?" she asked cocking an eyebrow.

He chuckled.

"Sometimes..." he caressed carefully the lash covering half her cheek. "Does it hurt? It doesn’t seem to heal fast."

She snorted, her raven hair brushing his naked chest.

"I don’t mind pain!" she said smugly. "And I might be a goddess but I heal at normal speed..." she dragged her finger to the scar the Blade of Justice had left on his upper arm "but it seems that some times that happens to you too."

"Yeah..." he mumbled.

Bruce had done him that scar. Bruce...He remembered the dream, Bruce being the bright, warm star that saved him from the nothingness. The feelings he experienced when he saw him... He snapped his head to dissolve everything the dream left behind; how sad and full of love those eyes were… And that Bruce was the star that showed him the way…

He growled inside. No, Bruce kicked him out; he stabbed him. Superman didn’t need him: he was happy with Diana, she was his real love.

“Kal, what’s the matter?” she asked touching her rich lips to his chest causing goosebumps to his spine.

No, the incident with Selina was to be blamed. Superman caressed Diana’s naked back and she raised her head looking him with sparkling eyes. He cupped her face with both hands and sucked her lips in a passionate kiss that she followed with all her strength.

“Nothing, Diana…Nonsense of a sleeping mind. Last night’s incident must have affected me.”

“You should have not stopped me following her…” she growled. “But I’ll find her…”

Superman wrapped his arms around her and yanked his head.

“I don’t want to waste even my saliva to spit your face!” Selina’s voice echoed from last night. But as Diana was sucking his neck and her fingers aroused his groin Superman couldn’t find anything that he should be ashamed of.

Bruce was watching with the corner of his eyes the boys placing the strings of tiny white light bulbs to the bushes that were planted symmetrically to the grounds. They were plants that didn’t drop their leaves during the winter and would give a spectacular sight the night.

Selina was perched on the pine tree at the right side of the Manor’s front wrapping light strings to the branches and Bruce was giving her new strings. They had already decorated the bush-sized firs that were fencing both sides of the drive line. Hero was running around excited to be outside and sniffed the bushes.

Tony and Pepper had some urgent meeting but they promised to be back for the inside decoration. Alfred was walking around giving instructions; of course, he had taken care to have the youths dress warmly because it was another cold day. His eyes every now and then travelled to his young master sucking every smile Bruce sent to Selina and Hero.

Bruce glanced at the sky that was the milky white color that preluded snow but no snowflake fell… Bruce shrugged: what’s the difference? He might have engaged in decorations and was smiling yet he only did that for his loved ones; he didn’t feel anything and as a matter of fact he’d prefer to be in the cave searching for Mannheim; he couldn’t stop thinking about the strange man and what his mysterious collaboration with Luthor might mean.

They managed to finish with the decorations around eleven o’clock which was just right since Dick’s training for the Saturday was scheduled for the morning. So Alfred drove the boys to the city; also, he had some groceries to buy.

Bruce and Selina with Tony who in the mean time had returned to the Manor settled in the study where Bruce opened his Cosmos tablet searching information about Mannheim.

Tony stood above him with disapproval all over his face.
“You should be having fun and resting; I’ll tell everything to Alfred when he comes back.”

Selina who was sitting on the shining desk snorted and Bruce looked sideways at Tony.

“You won’t do that, Tony… You always protected me in my mischief…”

Tony smiled tenderly and then ruffled his hair.

“They weren’t that many… Mine were more…”

“I have to do some work before Alfred returns with the boys and Ms. Todd. And I have to solve Mannheim’s mystery…”

Tony sat at the sofa next to him.

“The man is a riddle. I have heard his name some times in business circuits but I saw him only a couple of times and that for a couple of minutes as if he did it just to show that he really exists. Nobody knows much about his activities but he is very rich and he has a grandiose Mansion outside Metropolis.”

Bruce was reading from his screen.

“And now we know that he has deals with Luthor – the shadiest field of LexCorp: LexLabs. Also, he is desperate to take what he ordered to Luthor” he cocked his eyebrows. “Our peculiar items must have something to do with that…”

Tony frowned.

“Then he is also related with the raids at the LexLabs?”

Bruce raised his head and looked at him.

“That remains to be seen…” he frowned regarding Tony’s clothes that were his usual perfect stylistic choices. “Hm… I see you got over your dressing crisis?” he asked teasingly and Selina chuckled to Tony’s glare. “Or it’s the hunting time of the year?”

Tony snapped his head at Bruce.

“You’re jealous I stole the show from the Person of the Year last night” he cocked his eyebrows and Bruce smiled.

“I know you did it to cheer me up, Tony” he patted his friend’s back. “Thank you…” he said touched but then choked from a laughing fit. “But next time choose something that won’t scare toddlers…”

Selina giggled and unable to resist to Hero who was rolling on the floor she kneeled by him and caressed his belly making him twitch his paws and grab her wrist mock biting her.

The ring of the incoming call startled everyone; the number was unknown but in a couple of seconds the tablet’s system discovered the ID: Oliver Queen.

Bruce huffed: he had neglected the matter of their meeting; Tony crooked his mouth.

“Don’t answer it” he could discern Bruce’s upset.

“He is right” Selina agreed; she had experienced how pressing this man was.
Bruce shook his head.

“I must gather the information I want and Queen might be useful” he touched the choice for answering. “Hello, Mr….” but then he remembered the man’s request “Oliver, how are you?”

“You saved it, Bruce…” the man said smugly a slight chuckle in his voice. “And now I hear you, I’m fine.”

The call was in the dialer so Selina hearing that rolled her eyes while Tony pouted.

“And you, my young friend?”

“Fine, thanks. Um…, Oliver, about the dinner, I’m sorry…”

The man’s sadness was in a strange way discernible even through the distance.

“You’re cancelling?”

“No just” he huffed. “My days were too busy and I…I neglected to make reservations…So if you can’t wait I understand.”

Now Queen laughed in his smug way but his relief was clear.

“C’mon, Bruce! That was all? Do not worry about that. I came to love Gotham and my staying here so I can wait; I wouldn’t miss the chance to have a dinner with you and discuss many interesting things…For a moment, I dreaded that you lost your interest in my friendship.”

“Not at all, Oliver. However, maybe it’d be better if we have that dinner at the Manor because I don’t know if I’ll be able to make reservation soon…it’s the season, you see…”

Queen chuckled.

“Do not worry, my young friend. I bet that Mr. Cobblepot wouldn’t want to lose the perfect advertising of having the Person of the Year at his roof garden restaurant.”

Bruce stared at his friends who widened their eyes in unison.

“Okay, Oliver. I’ll try and I’ll get in touch to inform you.”

“I’ll be anxiously waiting, Bruce.”

Tony shook his head after Bruce ended the call.

“Wow! He is something and that comes from me who knows about pressure…” he took in Selina’s amused stare and cleared his throat. “Being pressed of course not pressing…Oh! You don’t know how pressing those super models can get to have by body…”

Selina grabbed a pillow from the armchair and threw it to him. Bruce smiled but deep inside he was wondering what this mysterious man really wanted from him.

Zucco was waiting for his nephew hidden behind the corner that led to the main training hall. When he saw the boy coming out of the showers and heading to the hall, he whistled to catch his attention.

Dick, his backpack on the shoulder, frowned and hesitated to go there but when his uncle showed himself the boy ran to him happy.

“Why are you hiding, Tony?” the boy asked exasperated after he hugged his uncle. “We can go to the cafeteria.”

“Better we do not…”

Dick’s eyes widened.

“Wayne made a fuss? He dared to threaten you?”

Zucco smiled.

“No, champ” he shook his head. “I don’t think he’d dare that; I just don’t want people seeing us talking: Wayne has his spies everywhere. And we don’t want him to suspect our plan, do we?”

Dick nodded.

“You’re right. Wayne and his lady friend were talking to Jeffrey a few days ago.”

Zucco pressed his lips.

“To tell you the truth, I didn’t expect anything better from Jeff” he sighed. “You see, it’d be a shame if our plan was revealed now that things started rolling.”

“Really?” Dick’s eyes widened excited.

Zucco smiled, his eyes glimmering gleefully.

“He took you to the Mall yesterday, huh? And you said some things to him, right?”

Dick nodded.

“How do you know?”

“I wouldn’t let my nephew out of my sight, would I? I couldn’t approach much but I heard some gossip about the incident…that you rushed out of the restaurant and they looked for you.”

“You think it worked?”

“It was a good start, champ: it certainly did an impression. Keep up the good work and we’ll get what we want. Don’t tell me he punished you…” he said frowning holding the boy’s shoulders.

Dick smirked.

“Nah! He wants to play the good, understanding guy…Today we decorated the garden of the Manor and the great salon…can you believe that granny gave him access to the account with my father’s savings?”

Zucco smirked.

“I had a hunch…”

“Anyway…Alfred will come to get me back to decorate the Christmas tree” he rolled his eyes. “I wish I could do this with granny or you!”

Zucco patted his shoulder.
“Patience, Dick: we’ll be together in the end. Rebecca can’t wait to meet you.”

“Rebecca?”

“My wife.”

“You’re married?”

Zucco laughed.

“Of course and when I’ll get your guardianship we’ll be like a family.”

Dick sighed.

“This is the only thought that gives me strength to bear all this…The only good thing about this year’s Christmas is that at 27th of December the national team will be here for a charity gala.”

Zucco frowned; obviously, he didn’t know.

“I haven’t heard anything” he said hiding his puzzlement.

“Jeffrey told me: it’ll be officially announced soon but the preparations have started days ago: isn’t every day that the US national team comes to Gotham! And we would have the chance to perform side by side!”

The older man didn’t seem to share the boy’s enthusiasm.

“Breizic will come too, huh?” he asked darkened and Dick noticed.

“My father’s ex trainer?”

“Yeah…he works now in the National Federation…”

The boy shrugged.

“Then I guess he’ll come too…Oh! That’ll be great! I want to meet people that knew my father…and you two will have so many things to talk about…Remember the good old days!”

Zucco pursed his lips thoughtful.

“Yeah…I suppose…”

Dick looked at his wristwatch and gave a peck to his uncle’s cheek.

“Don’t stop coming to see me, Tony” he pleaded. “Now I have to go: the butler must be here and I don’t want him come inside to look for me. See ya!”

“I can’t wait, champ!” he smiled to the boy but his smile vanished as soon as Dick turned the corner.

He didn’t like that Breizic was returning to Gotham even for a gala. And he didn’t like that sudden gala…Could someone be pulling the strings and if so: who could suspect his plans?

The van of the Mall stopped outside the Manor and the driver with another employee brought the tree and the boxes with the ornaments inside. Alfred gave them a generous tip thanking them and after they left, Jason dragged Dick to unwrap the stuff, Hero at their heels.

“Young Masters, I appreciate your eagerness to help me carry all these things to the salon” Alfred said poised and gestured to the boys to grab the things and go.

Tony was sprawled on the high backed armchair and Bruce was reading from Tony’s StarkStell tablet because he didn’t want Dick to see the Cosmos tablet and realize that it was Bruce’s present the tablet the boy had. Eventually, Dick would find out but Bruce wanted to postpone it.

Selina was eating the fresh cooked cinnamon biscuits and Pepper was pacing the salon speaking through her Bluetooth to some obstinate associate who needed some effort to understand simple things. She was rolling her eyes glancing furious to Tony because the associate was Tony’s job that as always she had to take. Tony winked to her and she showed him her teeth.

Alfred entered the room and clapped once.

“Leave whatever you are doing, ladies and gentlemen: the tree and the ornaments are here so time to start work.”

Bruce glanced at Tony and he patted his back smiling.

“Master Anthony, can you bring the tree?” Alfred asked showing the boys where to place the boxes with the ornaments.

Tony stood and saluted the butler military style.

“Aye, aye, captain!”

Selina left the plate on the small table between the sofa and the armchair and rushed to the boxes where Hero was putting his head to see. She grabbed the kitten from behind and looked him in the eyes.

“Don’t you know that curiosity killed the cat?”

Bruce chewed a biscuit enjoying the taste that was tied with so many sweet memories. His parents and he decorating the huge tree – huge, because he was tiny – and Alfred bringing cinnamon biscuits still warm from the oven and hot chocolate…

“I made some cinnamon biscuits, sir…”

“No, Alfred; I can’t: they’ll smell the cinnamon and will figure out.”

That memory he didn’t want: it was when he was visiting the Manor from the tunnels to see his loyal Alfred… still under Falcone’s and Ra’s’ ruin.

And now he was free to be with all the people he loved, free to enjoy his parents; home. He sensed Alfred’s eyes on him; the Englishman had approached seeing him absent minded and rubbed his back smiling.

“Are you alright, Master Bruce?” he asked politely.

“Yes, Alfred; thank you. The biscuits are delicious.”

“I know” the butler cocked an eyebrow. “I had to prepare twice the usual because everyone seems to love them and the first plate was empty in the first ten minutes. Good thing Ms. Todd helped me because these fine ladies left me on my own: they know only to eat…”
Bruce chuckled and Alfred gestured for him to join the others.

Ms. Todd entered the room with a second plate filled with steaming biscuits.

“I didn’t do much: it was Alfred’s doing” she commented.

Tony entered the room huffing and puffing dragging a tree of six feet.

“Are you sure there wasn’t any bigger tree to buy?” he said with sarcastic.

“In some things, the bigger the better” Pepper commented.

“Oh, babe! You know about that, huh?” Tony winked and Pepper rolled her eyes. “Now, let us make that monster stand…”

It was a big tree not only by its size but also its width. Jason stared at it impressed.

“Fuck!” he exclaimed and his mother cast him a sideways glare.

“Jay…”

Jason leaned to Dick’s ear.

“She used to swear worse but now she berates me…Moms…”

Dick looked at the tree and although he loved it he didn’t want to show: besides he’d prefer it if he was in his parents’ apartment with Brian – and Jason now – and they decorated their moderate sized tree. He remembered last year’s Christmas, his last happy Christmas, when Brian and he were placing the balls to their tree listening to Christmas songs.

He felt a compassionate hand on his back; he turned and saw Wayne. Bruce looked at the boy knowing how he felt.

“I’m sorry, Richard…I wish they were here with you…”

Dick didn’t want to make a fuss but pushed Bruce’s hand off of him and went to Jason to decorate the tree. Bruce lowered his eyes and sighed but Selina squatted in front of him.

“Smile, sweetie…” her eyes sparkled with love and Bruce couldn’t deny her.

He smiled and she took his hand and dragged him closer to the tree where Hero was playing soccer with the beautiful, sparkling balls and the way he was kicking them they rolled to Tony who hang them to the branches.

“Thank you, furry buddy! We are a great team!” he chuckled and petted the kitten’s head.

Pepper was kneeled on the floor and was taking off the ornaments from the boxes.

“You didn’t buy a star for the top of the tree?” she asked still looking inside the last box and raised her head to look at Alfred.

But he wasn’t there and she looked at Bruce instead; he shrugged.

“Alfred was in charge.”

Selina pouted.
“You can’t have a Christmas tree without a top…”

“But we have our top” Alfred exclaimed entering the room holding a box in his hands so reverently that everyone was puzzled.

He approached and everyone gathered around him, Bruce a little away. It was an old box that Bruce knew…

Alfred took off the top of the flat box and revealed what was inside but Bruce already knew.

“You must put the tree’s top” a teenage Tony said chuckling.

Bruce who was at his eight years tilted his head.

“But our tree has already its star…”

Tony smirked wickedly.

“I’m talkin’ about somethin’ unique and fantastic” he stood and gestured with both index fingers to himself “I made for OUR tree!”

Bruce watched anxiously as Tony revealed a box wrapped in red and gold paper and tossed it to him making the smaller boy jump to catch. The older boy quirked cockily his eyebrows.

“Well?” Tony inquired scratching his nape uncomfortable.

“Wow!”

Martha curious approached her son and Thomas watched amused as Bruce held cautiously the object and threw carelessly the box. It was a transparent angel made of material that little Bruce didn’t know and from Tony’s wicked smile probably not even his dad knew.

The angel was very beautiful: five inches tall, with the features of a boy – a beautiful boy - he was naked except from a golden, glimmering strap that began from his shoulder and covered his hip. He held a golden sparkling drum that startled Bruce when all of a sudden began playing the melody of Bruce’s favorite Christmas song: the Little Drummer Boy. The angel was transparent, made of something that resembled crystal but emanated multicolored sparkles and his beautiful, delicate wings were silver.

Lost inside the salon of his past Bruce didn’t sense Alfred looking at him and then everyone.

“I thought that everything was lost” he said staring at Alfred avoiding looking at the angel.

“I managed to save that to safe keep” Alfred replied touched. “I thought that we would need it…”

Bruce gulped and nodded stretching his hand to touch the angel inside the box but hesitated.

“Take it, little guy” Tony said wrapping Pepper’s shoulders with his arm. “Make it fly again…”

Bruce glanced at his friend and took the beautiful angel who sensing his hand began slowly twitching his sparkling wings and the melody of Little Drummer filled the hall.

Everyone jolted startled impressed by the sight, Tony cocking his eyebrows smugly.

“Fuck!” Jason exclaimed awed and his mother cleared her throat disapprovingly.
Even Dick gaped at the flying angel; only Hero began chasing the flying thing jumping to catch it causing everyone’s laughter.

“I had no doubt it’d work even after all these years” Tony bragged. “It was made by Tony-fucking-Stark…everything these hands and this brain built lasts forever.”

Jason cast a smartass sideways glance to his mother.

“He said the F word too…” he remarked snidely.

Bruce was staring at the flying angel under Alfred’s wet eyes and Selina wrapped her arm around his shoulders kissing his cheek.

“I haven’t seen anything more beautiful, sweetie…”

Tony took his arm from Pepper’s shoulders and walked to Bruce.

“You will place it on the top” he glanced at Hero who was still attacking the angel without the boys being able to hold him still “and fast before your kitten swallows it…”

He took Bruce in his arms noticing with a slight frown that his friend had lost some weight and Selina gave him the angel; Bruce stretched his hand and left the angel float on the tree’s top; his eyes sparkled and his body felt numb in Tony’s arms.

When the tree was ready they settled at the sofa and the armchairs staring at it as the tiny lights flickered with different color each time and eating the biscuits and drinking hot chocolate that Selina and Pepper prepared.

“See, Alfred? We made the chocolate: we’re not completely useless in cooking” Selina said smugly.

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“You two made the chocolate? That explains a lot…” he said crooking his mouth.

“Next time you should do it” Pepper told him “without the machine.”

“Yeah, right…”

Dick staring at the flames in the marble fireplace noticed for the first time the small painting on it and walked there. He took it and looked: the Waynes and their kid together and over them bat wings spread – the bat signal without a doubt. He frowned.

“It is a gift” Bruce said softly having approached unnoticed. “Billy from the Haven painted it and gave it to me.”

“What’s this bat is doing here?” he asked forgetting his hatred.

Bruce shrugged and smiled.

“I don’t know” he said looking at the painting. “You’d have to ask Billy.”

“Master Bruce…” Alfred’s voice emanated puzzlement as he entered the room; he had gone to the foyer to take the last bag with the socks for the fireplace yet he had a strange box. “This box is extra and has your name on…”

Bruce steered his chair there but Selina put her hand on his shoulder to stop him and then Tony stepped forward.

‘Wait, Bruce. Jarvis, do you scan anything dangerous inside?’ he said to his wristwatch frowning.

“There are no indications of dangerous items in it, sir.”

Bruce moved forward and took the box from the floor. It wasn’t very big: it was a medium size card box, wrapped hastily with purple shining paper. He ripped the paper and then the duck tape that held together the folds; there was no sound in the salon as everyone’s eyes were on Bruce.

Bruce clenched his jaw as he was able to discern the content, while nobody else couldn’t.

“What is it, Master Bruce?”

“Some garbage” he replied and moved out of the salon to the lift and then his study with the box on his lap.

Tony, Selina and Alfred followed while Pepper stayed with the others to soften the mood.

Entering the study they saw Bruce staring at what stood on the waist table in front of the study’s leather couch. A tree without any leaves on it, only bare branches but something else captured their eyes. From every branch instead of balls or bells a small bat dangled – a real dead bat. And on the trunk of the tree was perched a Joker card.

“I CAN’T stand any other bat flying in Gotham – I knoooow you suffer missing the skies soooooo Joker will take care of his caged bat…”
“My littl’ ol’ heart is dry like that treeee with dead bats hanging...Come to MEEE3EE an’ gimme life...OR I'll come to youuuuu.”

Bruce’s eyes were blank fixed on the macabre tree; his hands clenched into fists. Tony squatted in front of him and held his shoulders till Bruce locked eyes with him.

“Don’t let him get to you, littl’ guy…”

Bruce looked around to Selina and Alfred who watched appalled and nodded.

“There are people close to me exposed to his madness” he said calm but serious.

His mind’s eyes went to the cave, in the niche of the rock where he kept his personal treasures. He had stashed there a vial with the Immortality Water – for emergencies; perhaps, that was the solution: no operation, no waiting, no physiotherapies, no agony. Some gulps and he’d be able – as Batman – to fly around and face his enemies protecting the innocent and his loved ones. Maybe there was no need for Bruce Wayne to walk again…it’d be the perfect cover: a disabled Bruce Wayne would be never connected with Batman.

But then he remembered Ra’s Al Ghul: his arrogance, his madness, his lack of moral values; the abuse of the Immortality Water for himself eroded him… Bruce didn’t want to become like him: he was a human and didn’t want to use the elixir to fool his mortality. He must wait.

“Bruce?” Selina asked cautiously having approached.

He looked at her.

“I’m fine, Sel.”

Tony had stood and was ruffling his hair furious.

“He wants to drag you out to face him in this vulnerable state but the lunatic won’t gonna get it! Let me have a word with those fools in the Mall!” he grabbed his StarkStell. “Jarvis get me the Comet Mall’s direction.”

Yet Bruce raised his palm stopping him.

“No, Tony: this matter shouldn’t be discussed with strangers” Tony frowned and open his mouth to retort. “Do you really want to tell people that Joker sent me a tree with dead bats?”

Tony threw his phone on the sofa and yanked his head huffing.

“Damn, your secrecy!”

Bruce lolled his head on the side and pressed his lips.

“It’s my decision, Tony. We’ll contact the Mall but without disclosing any details or the seriousness of the issue – besides, we know Joker: I doubt the Mall noticed anything.”

“Fine” Tony said clutching his waist swallowing his irritation; he looked at Bruce serious. “Don’t you even think to go out there for this lunatic’s whims! I’m here, Bruce: I’ll take care of your city till you’re in perfect shape again.”
Bruce nodded but his eyes were expressionless: he didn’t feel nice burdening others with his responsibilities. Suddenly, his back began aching, as his disability became more torturing to bear…

Steve opened his eyes puzzled. The bedroom was in complete darkness save for the flickering lights that came in from the grilles of the balcony door: he saw at the clock on his nightstand that it was almost seven in the morning. He had arrived at Gotham hours ago: as soon as his work in Washington ended, he could wait to see Selina again. They had dinner together at her apartment and then they start from the leaving room showing each other how much they missed each other.

Now he was sleeping holding the young woman on his body. She wore her white nightdress – the one with the Ducess, his favorite – and he was naked above the waist. Their night was terrific and Selina was so hot and enthusiastic on his return that he was glad he had super stamina… But now the young woman was writhing in his arms and her face was clenched in fear and despair: it was dark however he could feel liquid falling from her cheeks to his chest - tears.

He frowned and caressed her hair that was falling free on her back. He leaned and kissed her forehead.

“It’s alright, Selina; you’re safe…” he tried to console her.

And as if she had heard him, Selina opened her eyes still confused; Steve took softly her chin and kissed her on the lips while with the other hand he switched on the light to the lower intensity to not hurt her eyes.

“I’m here, sweetheart…”

She blinked a couple of times to chase away what she had experienced in what now knew that it was just a nightmare; however it was so alive that her guts were still painfully clenched. She yawned and stretched her body wanting to reassure Steve who was looking at her worried. She touched her index to his lips.

“Don’t look me, like that, handsome: you need to make breakfast” she winked “I like to be spoiled by super heroes.”

He crooked his mouth and rubbed her back.

“I will after you tell me what you saw…” Selina’s eyes got shadowed; she didn’t want to remember. “You’ll feel better, darling” he said with the voice that Selina couldn’t resist and sucked her earlobe causing her goose bumps.

“It was just a nightmare, Steve; don’t you prefer to do some quality stuff?” she asked sensually caressing his bulging deltoids.

Steve chuckled and looked at her.

“Always but I want you to be okay…you can speak to me about what you saw: you’ll feel better” he placed his palm over her heart. “Your heartbeat is still racing…”

She sighed and sat on the mattress cross legged.

“It’s an old nightmare I had often when I was younger. I thought that I wouldn’t see that again but…” she chuckled. “I was wrong.”
Steve rose and placed his arm around her shoulders; his eyes were full of honest interest and concern so Selina yanked her head sighing.

“When Bruce and I were very young and Falcone held him captive I often saw the same nightmare” she cocked her eyebrows “which was also my deepest fear. I was going to Dolcetto” she rubbed her temple and raised her eyes to him. “I went there every night to see Bruce; they had him working hard and every midnight after the store was closed he was bringing the garbage outside; it was a big garbage bin at the back of the store and we took cover behind it; I was bringing him a sandwich to eat because Falcone gave him just a piece of bread – sometimes moldy…”

Steve pressed his lips.

“Sometimes I had the same nightmare again and again: going there and waiting but Bruce doesn’t come out…This happened many times in real life too: Falcone sometimes was so furious that punished Bruce hard and then locked him in his cell…The night I saw Bruce and realized that the Wayne boy was alive I saw Falcone whipping him hard…” she gulped choking her emotions. “The bastard did that a lot” Steve closed his eyes. “Many nights even in the dim light the far street lamp cast, I could feel the lashes on Bruce’s back and my hands were drenched in blood. In the dream, I go there and wait and he doesn’t come but I know that Falcone is torturing him…but the next night he doesn’t come, nor the next…And then the other night, I go there with terror clenching my entire body; I wait and I see some thugs coming out carrying his skinny body; his eyes are closed and his face calm without any pain – dead pale but filled with bruises and dry blood; his dead arm hanging loose, leaving behind a dark red trail…Sometimes I hear them snigger that he died while Falcone ‘played’ with him and other times they say that he killed himself in his cell ripping his wrist veins by grazing his skin on the rocks…”

She choked a sob because she relived the scene; she rubbed her forehead and looked Steve determined but her eyes were red with hot liquid gathered at the corners: liquid that she fought to stop from springing but failed – Bruce always did that to her...

“Bruce is dead and they toss his body on the trunk to drop him to the sewers…and I can’t do anything: I’m frozen behind the bin watching unable to follow them to hug my friend, speak to him – console him for a last time…” now the ‘faucet’ of her eyes opened flooding her cheeks and Selina hid her face in her palms.

Steve lolled his head on the side his eyes watering too. He hugged Selina and rubbed soothing circles on her back feeling her hot tears on his bare shoulder and her lithe body shaking from silent sobs that some time broke her stubbornness into the silence of the room.

“Calm down, Sel…Everything is alright…” he caressed her hair “Bruce is safe and sound and ready to celebrate Christmas with all his loved ones…You’ll see him soon…Ssssss, babe…Look at me” he cupped her face with both hands and caressed her drenched cheeks.

“I always dreaded that Falcone will eventually overdo it and kill Bruce while…” she couldn’t utter it and swallowed a sob growling frustrated for crying “or that Bruce couldn’t take it anymore and would kill himself to escape from the pain and be again with his parents…”

Steve kissed her cheek.

“But he didn’t: you two are the bravest people I ever met. He endured because he knew that every night you’ll be there for him; that he will see you; will talk with you – and that gave him strength to live another day.”

She shook her head.
“All of you give me more credit than I deserve: I didn’t do so much…Bruce…”

“Your love helped him, Sel…Your bond is something amazing, unique: what you two have is rare even between real brothers. I honestly admire what you two achieved…” he pushed softly a rebellious lock behind Selina’s ear. “And now Bruce is among his loved ones safe and secure, warm and happy.”

Selina berated herself for having cried in front of Steve though she knew that he would never think badly of her. On the other side, she felt some relief saying out loud her worst nightmare.

“I’m still afraid for Bruce…” she said in a throaty voice “that someone would hurt him even now.”

Steve held her shoulders and locked eyes with her.

“We won’t let anyone touch Bruce ever again: You first of all” he shook his head smiling “I wouldn’t want to be in the place of the one who would dare to threaten Bruce… And then Tony has always his eyes open and makes everything to keep him secure. And what about me? You don’t count me?” Selina smiled. “And” Steve licked his lips “Thor…”

Selina forgot her upset and narrowed her eyes.

“Thor what?” she asked in her sly tone.

Steve laughed lighthearted seeing her better.

“He is much interested in Bruce…If you know what I mean…”

Selina lolled her head.

“Is he in love with Bruce?” she asked crossing her arms.

Steve shrugged.

“The Asgardian is an introvert and we don’t see him much anyways but…” he arched his eyebrows.

Selina caressed his chest with her index finger.

“Bruce still loves Superman…I’d want Bruce find happiness with someone else but your blond friend should not have many hopes.”

Steve pressed his lips.

“Thor respects and honors Bruce’s friendship: I think that he is satisfied with that…Not that he’d have an objection for something more…” he winked.

Selina kissed him on the lips.

“What about my breakfast, Captain?”

He chuckled.

“Are you so hungry or it can wait?”

Selina frowned.

“It depends on what you have in mind…”
He wrapped his arms around her and placed her on her back; he nibbled her bottom lip straddling her carefully. He fondled her body under the nightdress.

“Have I told you how much I love this nightdress?”

She cocked an eyebrow.

“More than what is underneath?” she asked slyly.

“You really have a doubt?” he answered and pushed the nightdress softly to reveal her body.

Selina purred like a cat and fondled Steve’s muscle bound back wishing for Bruce to find the same happiness as she…

The white car slithered to the back side of the children’s hospital: not many cars were entering the space from there, mainly the hospital’s staff and the suppliers. Alfred respected his young master’s worries so he went to the Wayne Tower with a cab and there they took one of the company’s cars for their outing; his young master didn’t want to risk Joker following them.

Alfred cast a discreet glance to the passenger seat to see Bruce despite their precautions, still looking around nervously scanning the space: agony still clenched his insides – not for himself but the innocents around. Joker’s note was branded in his mind, haunting his thoughts.

“Sir?”

Bruce scolded himself because he didn’t want to transmit his nervousness to the others. It was his decision to proceed with that, to not concede to Joker’s shadow, and do the things he wanted. Besides, everything was ready: the gifts in the car’s trunk, the hospital’s direction had been informed and the children were waiting. He opened the door and slipped in his wheelchair that Alfred had brought.

Well, facing all those suffering kids was the hardest part for him and also he didn’t want anyone to learn about this – he didn’t want anyone say that he was good or all this stuff… He just wanted to give a little joy to these kids…

He gazed at the hospital’s building and gulped.

“Let’s go, Alfred” he looked at the Englishman and steered his wheelchair to the hospital’s ramp.

Though the car was discreet not revealing its owner, some members of the staff were already there to help them with the presents carrying them inside. And they, men and women, were all smiling, clearly happy that someone had thought the kids.

Alfred opened the trunk and distributed the packs to the men and women that came to help and then walked with his young master inside. Bruce had asked Alfred whether it’d be rude to not be there himself because the idea of people praising him for that made him cringe. However his loyal butler encouraged him to do what he wanted and be with the children without thinking what the others might say.

The director of the hospital caught with them just the moment they were ready to enter the lift. They shook hands with the beaming Dr. Brownfeld.

“I’d like to thank you from up close, Mr. Wayne; your donation and the presents for the children are going to give much happiness…”

“I hope so, Dr. Brownfeld but honestly you don’t have to thank me…I didn’t do anything.”

Alfred smiled.

“You are going to give yourself the presents to the kids?” the doctor asked gesturing to the lift.

Bruce grinned and looked at him.

“No” he took in Alfred’s baffled expression; his butler also didn’t know. “I think that there’s a more suitable person than me…” he turned his head towards the entrance and the doctor laughed.

Santa Claus himself was approaching them with his empty bag over his shoulder waiting to be filled with the toys Alfred and Bruce brought.

“Good morning!” Santa Claus greeted. “I’m ready, Mr. Wayne!”

Bruce stretched his hand for a handshake and smiled.

“Good morning, Santa! I’m glad you’re ready because your little friends are waiting for you. Hm… Dr. Brownfeld, I hope it’s alright?”

The doctor shook his head smiling.

“I guess, the part “I don’t want anyone to know” is very strict, right, Mr. Wayne? There is no problem: it is entirely up to you! We are just grateful!”

However, Alfred wasn’t so condescending and Bruce could see on his face the man’s dwelling disapproval and pride.

Bruce felt uncomfortable to distribute the presents himself but he couldn’t resist the chance to watch from afar the children’s happiness as the actor he hired gave them presents so he and Alfred stood to the corridor leading to the hospital’s events’ hall. This cheerful ruckus was the only way to divert his mind from thinking painful and agonizing things.

Alfred who was standing next to him cleared his throat and Bruce lifted his eyes to him.

“You omitted disclosing that small detail to me, sir: that was your sly plan in order to not have me voicing my disagreement…” his voice was stern but Bruce could see the shine in his eyes.

He shrugged.

“What’s the meaning in giving the present myself, Alfred? The kids are happier having Santa amongst them. Besides it is the result that counts and you were the one who told me to do what I feel without thinking the others’ opinion.”

Alfred shook his head but smiled.

“Master Bruce, you are still the same mischievous little rascal…”

Bruce chuckled.

“Thank you, Alfred” he answered and his gaze wandered to the hall where Nick, the Santa Claus, was in the middle of a child flood; a ‘flood’ that was laughing happily. “Besides, the least I appear the safest with Joker on the loose.”
Alfred knew that his young master had in his mind the image of the tree Joker had sent him: a grotesque caricature of a Christmas tree with dead bats hanging from the branches and a note declaring the madman’s obsession with the youth and his knowledge of his secret identity.

Master Anthony even after their discussion with Master Bruce was still furious with the Mall security and insisted on suing them so Master Bruce had to point out once again that he didn’t want anyone know about the tree and the bats because even if they hid Joker’s note someone could make the connection.

Master Anthony once again gulped his impulsive nature and did the thing that they agreed with Bruce: he made inquiries with the Mall’s direction and asked for the names of the employees who made the delivery. Both driver and worker, as well as the people in the packing service, were working for years for the Mall and had no criminal record or shady activities – Bruce had made his own investigation.

So the most probable scenario was that Joker heard about Bruce’s excursion to the Mall and managed to slip his little box among the others; of course a homemade wrap should have alerted the stuff yet the placement must have happened at some stage that nobody took notice.

Anyway, Master Bruce didn’t want to let the incident be widely known.

Alfred feared that Joker’s movement would make his young master rush out, donning the cape and cowl every night; but thankfully, for the time being Master Bruce restraint himself even though Alfred and his friends could breathe the youth’s despair to do something – Alfred guessed that it was a good will gesture to his loved ones. But Master Bruce at times was drowning believing that he wasn’t doing what he should – Alfred could tell that his impairment at those times hit Bruce the hardest to the point of weak, slow burning anger.

And this anger could harm the youth’s health…Alfred was worried but chose not to burden more his Master with his fears because it’d harm him more.

And anyway the important thing was that Master Bruce didn’t drawback from his intentions for these holidays: the youth was determined to help as many people as possible to have a merry Christmas even though throughout the year he had done already many things to help the less fortunate people of Gotham.

Bruce’s parents would be proud of their boy… Alfred knew that being with people in pain pained Bruce more than his own wounds but when these people smiled Master Bruce’s pains went away. All kinds of pain: physical and emotional…The Englishman sensed that his young Master at times travelled away to the Christmas Mr. Kent promised him.

Jason came out of the room puzzled, pissed and cursing; Dick was waiting for him outside leaning his back on the wall. Normally they should be at school but Dick followed his friend to the hospital.

“I thought you’d stay more?” Dick asked the younger boy.

Jason scratched his messy hair pushing the hood off his head.

“That was the goal but that rat isn’t her’…Sonov…”

Dick frowned.

“You said he broke his leg; how can he not be in his room?” he asked a bit indifferent: he was there not because he had any interest to visit Jay’s friend whom he didn’t know but it suit his purpose.

Jason arched his thick eyebrows.

“He broke his leg but that wouldn’ stop ‘im from walkin’ around and the nurse in the room told me that every kid in the hospital went to Santa for their presents .”

Dick rolled his eyes and Jason shrugged.

“Care to go ther’ an’ have fun with those idiots? We’ll find Boots there: he plays the tough guy but for a toy he’s willin’ to jump to the air…” he sniggered.

Dick pouted: honestly, he had no mood to see all those brats flooding a fake Santa Claus nor he had any interest to find Boots; on the other hand, he didn’t want to return to the school so soon – he wanted his absence to be noticed and make an impression.

“Boots? What kind of a name is that?” he asked as they strolled through the hospital’s corridors.

“Oh, man!” the younger boy rolled his eyes. “It’s not his real name: only ‘is parents call him by ‘is Christian name. It’s ‘is nick but…” he turned frowned to the older boy. “How come an’ ya came with me? Since when ya skive off?”

Dick pursed his lips and arched his eyebrows smugly.

“From now!”

Jason crooked his mouth.

“Ha! Ha!” he mock cackled . “Very funny…but I’m the punk, dude: yar the good boy.”

Dick rolled his eyes.

“Yeah, sure…”

Jason narrowed his eyes.

“Yar doing it to make Wayne’s life difficult…that’s it!”

The older boy stopped at his trunks and turned to his friend.

“So what?” he spat. “Are you going to defend your new buddy?” he asked challenging and Jason clenched his jaw to retort but then he saw from the corner Bruce and Alfred.

“Then ya need to hide ‘cause yar ‘daddy’ is here” he chuckled with Dick’s dumbstruck expression. “It seems that fate wants ya together!” he cackled but the older boy pulled him from the lapels to the wall to not be seen.

“How stands your list, Master Bruce?” Alfred asked amused.

Bruce took his eyes from the kids and looked at his butler.

“My list?”

Alfred grinned.
“Of things to do for making Gotham’s people happy.”

Bruce ruffled his hair.

“I…” he pursed his lips. “Do you thing that Wayne Enterprises can’t afford the amount of money? I am overdoing it?”

Alfred chuckled.

“You know better than me the finances of your company…but it is my impression that you spend money from your personal account.”

Bruce nodded.

“Which is my mother’s money and she would like to be spent like this.”

Alfred grinned.

“As for your other inquiry, that is if you’re overdoing it: that has to do with how you feel, Master Bruce” he smiled. “You are free, Master Bruce, to finally do what you feel, what you want. And if I’m allowed to say it, I’m proud and happy that this” he gestured to the joyful commotion “is what you want and what makes you happy.”

Bruce lowered his eyes and stared at his hands.

“And it would have made my parents happy too…” he mumbled and Alfred pressed his lips.

“And very proud, sir…” he knew that it wasn’t too butler-ish but he patted his master’s back.

While Bruce was smiling to Alfred someone detached from the kids and approached. Both men looked at a girl sat in a wheelchair: she was hardly eleven years old with blond short hair and light blue eyes. She looked at Bruce shyly.

“I’m Lucy” she said and Bruce smiled.

“Hi, Lucy; I’m…”

“Bruce Wayne” she cut him. “I saw you on TV – I spend many hours with TV all these months staying on bed.”

Bruce nodded.

“I know how that is, Lucy…”

The girl smiled and nodded, she was hugging a doll from the gifts that Santa had given them.

“My mother says that some people hurt you so much that you almost died; and that the wounds they made you…confined you to a wheelchair like me” she said shyly, her pale cheeks becoming pink.

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded; the girl stretched her hand to Bruce and he took it.

“What happened to you, Lucy?” he asked quietly.

“I was crossing the street and a car hit me: it didn’t hurt much because everything darkened at once…Mom told me when I woke up that I was sleeping for a month…the driver was drunk and didn’t stop on the red light.”
Bruce closed his eyes.

“You are a very brave girl, Lucy…Your parents must be proud.”

Lucy touched his cheek; her eyes were filled with compassion.

“They tortured you, right? I heard that they were hurting you when you were a kid…for years…and now other bad people hurt you more…you must have suffered so much…”

Alfred’s eyes watered: the girl’s voice had something that made those simple words have a major impact in him; maybe because that voice brought again in his mind’s eyes little Bruce mopping the floor in Dolcetto murmuring his mother’s lullaby…he still felt the boy’s trembling in his hug…the poor boy’s despair and terror and the butler’s weakness to take him away and save him.

Bruce smiled to the girl.

“They did…but thanks to my friends I’m here now – I was saved.”

The girl looked at him conspiratorial.

“You bought the presents, right?”

Bruce looked up at Alfred and then back at the girl pouting.

“Let’s say that I reminded Santa that there’s a children hospital in Gotham; he has so many things to do that sometimes he needs some reminding. A friend told me that when I was almost at your age.”

The girl laughed and Alfred remembered Master Anthony reassuring a very young Master Bruce that Santa Claus was real but he had some associates around the world to help him with his job.

Dick was watching the scene with his mouth agape; the way the little girl was interacting with Wayne, the honest love in the man’s eyes.

“I told ya, man: he isn’t as bad as ya believe…”

The older boy shook his head.

“Is this why you brought me here? To see him in charity action?” he demanded pissed.

Jason yanked his head exasperated and clenched his friend’s lapels.

“Get a grip, pal! Yar getting crazy!” he lowered his voice. “I didna know anythin’ an’ I don’t remember invitin’ ya her’ – it was yar decision!”

Dick shook his head and sighed.

“Okay…but he’s acting, Jay…He doesn’t mean anything; he is doing everything to promote himself so that everyone says what kind man he is.”

Jason leaned on the wall crossing his arms.

“I don’t see any cameras around” he said smugly cocking an eyebrow. “An’ I haven’t heard anythin’ about that in TV…”
Dick gulped and wanted to leave but he couldn’t take his eyes from Wayne and the girl.

“Doctors say that it’d be too difficult to walk again…and” she licked her lips lowering her eyes. “I know that I won’t walk ever again but they just try to encourage me…”

Bruce inhaled carefully to not let the girl know his sadness. But her little eyes that shone like gems as she looked back at him made his heart melt.

“I know that I won’t dance ever again…”

“You dance, Miss Lucy?” Alfred asked warmly.

She smiled to him.

“I was leaving the ballet school to my father’s car on the other side of the road when the car hit me…” she grinned and hugged tighter her new doll. “I know that I won’t dance but I don’t tell mom and dad because I want them to believe that I believe them.”

“You are a very brave girl, Lucy…” Bruce said in a throaty voice.

She smiled and touched his cheek with the spontaneity of the children.

“Sometimes I get sad but then I think everything I heard about you; how much you suffered but you never gave up and…and I feel that everything will be alright even if I don’t walk again ever … because I have my mommy and daddy with me and doctors who love me…and…and I’d never be alone while you…you were just a kid in pain and you were all alone but you never stopped fighting…”

Bruce didn’t know if that was right but he hugged the little girl caressing her soft hair.

Dick’s eyes widened seeing Wayne hugging the little girl causing her smile.

Jason crooked his mouth and shrugged.

“Not everyone agrees with ya, pal…”

The older boy pressed his lips and turned his head away from the scene.

“We’re leaving! he spat to his friend and both marched to the opposite direction.

“You’ll walk again, Lucy: I’ll do everything in my power for you to walk again” Bruce told her keeping his eyes closed. “I’m not supposed to walk ever again too but my friends are working hard to find the way to help me walk again…It’d be hard, Lucy, but I’ll do it because you…your bravery would give me strength and courage and inspiration to walk again so that you would be the next. And I promise you that in your first performance I’ll be there in the theatre to applaud and get your autograph…If you remember me till then in the crowd of your fans” he chuckled.

The girl’s cheeks were drenched in tears when she looked at Bruce but a wide, happy smile brightened her round, sweet face.

“I know you’ll make it, Bruce…” she said and leaned to place a kiss to his cheek.

Hurried footsteps made Alfred detach his eyes from the heartwarming scene: it was a young woman coming from the cafeteria; her face was shadowed by worry but upon seeing the little girl she closed her eyes in relief.

“Here you are, Lucy!” she exclaimed. “And with Mr. Wayne…” disbelief colored her voice.

Lucy turned to her smiling.

“I’m sorry, mom; I didn’t want to make you worry.”

She squatted.

“It’s okay, honey” she said and smiled to Bruce and Alfred. “Time to eat…and don’t tell me again you’re not hungry: you need to be strong in order to walk again soon…She doesn’t eat enough” she said to both men.

Alfred cast a sideways glance to his young master because it was a scene he experienced so many times.

“I do know what you mean, madam!”

The girl wrapped her arms around her mother’s neck.

“Yes, mom: I’m starving!”

The woman widened her eyes from surprise looking at the two men.

“Mr. Wayne, you certainly have a charm…” she said and stood. “Thank you” she mouthed to them as she distanced to the opposite direction with Lucy.

Bruce was looking at them leaving, his lips pressed and Alfred felt that it was time for them to go too.

“Shall we, sir? You need to get some food in your stomach as well” he said softly but slightly scolding and Bruce looked at him.

He nodded but they had done barely two steps when his phone rang. Bruce frowned seeing the caller’s ID and Alfred’s eyes narrowed gradually more as his young Master became paler the more he spoke on the phone.

“Thank you, Ms. Stuart…We’ll do everything to find him” he ended the call and touched the screen in haste to make a new call.

“Master Bruce, what happened?”

“Dick is missing from his school” he brought the phone to his ear. “What you mean ‘you lost him’? He is a boy and Joker is out there!” Alfred squeezed his shoulders to calm him and Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose. “Okay…Just take as many people as possible and find him: the longer he stays out there unguarded the worse…”

He ended the call and looked at Alfred who noticed that his young master wasn’t even breathing normally in his agony to find his ward.
“I’ll call Jim…”

“No, sir: I think you should not do that for a truancy: please, Master Bruce, do calm down. The security will handle it.”

Bruce closed his eyes shaking his head: how could he calm down? Joker had his eyes on him and he knew that Dick was his ward: he already had used the boy once. What if it was Joker that abducted the boy from school? What if Dick was in Joker’s hands right now? His heart began beating fast leading his breaths to become rasps; his eyes blurred and everything around began spinning.

Alfred frowned realizing and squatted; he cupped Bruce’s head with both hands trying to get his attention.

“Sir, sir, please, look at me.”

Bruce could hear Alfred’s panicked voice but he couldn’t make his heart calm or his head stop hurting and spinning.

“It’s…it’s nothing, Alfred; don’t worry…it’s just…” he tried to reassure the older man feeling his wrinkled hands shaking on his cheeks.

Alfred looked frantically around for a doctor or a nurse and he was ready to call for help but then a voice drew his attention.

“Bruce! Alfred! What a…” the man’s voice dropped taking in the scene and ran to them.

Alfred saw Thomas Elliot hurrying to them and kneeling down; he pushed Alfred’s hands to take Bruce’s hand and peruse his irises.

“Don’t worry, Bruce” he said “I’m here now” he said touching his fingers on his jugular to assess his pulse.

Thomas didn’t call anyone supposedly to ensure privacy to Bruce – he was sure that Alfred and Bruce himself would appreciate that – but in reality he wanted to handle it exclusively hoping that this way he’d manage to pass the man’s defenses.

He took them to an examination room nearby and with Alfred’s help placed Bruce on the examination table; then he put an inhalator mask to Bruce’s mouth to normalize his breath and made him an injection bringing his heartbeat to normal level. Under Alfred’s vigilant eyes, Thomas took the blood pressure gadget and raised Bruce’s sleeve.

“How do you feel?” he asked after he ended the procedure.

Bruce pulled off the inhalator and hurried to sit though Alfred had to support him because he still was dizzy and unstable. He didn’t like having Thomas Eliot examine him and his entire body – well, only half his body – was upset and aggravated.

“I’m fine!” he said in haste looking for his wheelchair. “Thank you for everything, Dr. Elliot.”

“Thomas, Bruce” he replied grinning “and I didn’t do anything” he looked at Alfred. “What happened?”

Alfred shook his head.

“Oh, Dr. Elliot! You know how these days are: Master Bruce was tired and then some emotional turbulence came and made things worse. Also, he didn’t eat much in the morning…”

Bruce cast him a sideways glare and Thomas chuckled. Of course, the spoiled brat does everything to have all the attention to him – especially, now.

“We were lucky you were there” Alfred continued. “Are you working in the children’s hospital?”

“I am a volunteer: the hospital’s staff needs every possible help” he looked at Bruce. “You need to be careful, Bruce. Your health is still too fragile: you have to listen to those who love you…” he looked him in the eyes. “We want the best for you.”

Bruce grinned.

“I’m sure, Thomas…Alfred, can you bring the wheelchair? I must return to the Tower” he sat at the chair and wore his coat that Alfred held for him. “If I don’t see you till then, Merry Christmas, Thomas.”

Thomas narrowed his eyes and watched them leaving with a smirk over his face.

“Merry Christmas to you too!” he said hardly holding his snort.

Alfred had gone to take Dick from the gym: it was afternoon and the dark grey of the sky declared the arrival of the night. They suffered some hours of deep worry from the moment Dick’s teacher informed them that the boy had skipped class.

After his almost fainting at the hospital, Bruce wanted to search himself but Alfred didn’t let him so he had to wait in the Manor. Bruce called Jason but the boy didn’t answer and he understood: he had asked from the boy to keep Dick’s trust at any cost – except, of course, if he was in danger. And the fact that Jason didn’t answer made Bruce hope that Dick was with him and they were safe…It wasn’t difficult for Bruce to see what the boy tried to do: Dick wanted to make Bruce’s life difficult letting his anger and stubbornness carry him away and ruin his good record in school.

His security men located the two boys soon but Bruce asked them to not intervene but watch them discreetly.

It was an hour ago that Jeffrey, Dick’s trainer, called to say that the boy was there with him – it was the time of his training and Dick wouldn’t lose his training even to torment Bruce. Knowing that, Bruce asked from Jeffrey to call him when Dick arrived so that Alfred would be there after the training and bring the boy home.

Before leaving to pick the boy from the gym, Alfred asked him how he was going to punish the boy. Bruce paled only hearing the word ‘punish’ and Alfred pressed his lips turning to leave. Bruce lowered his eyes to Hero who was sprawled on the carpet right by his feet. He knew that Alfred berated himself for mentioning punishment to Bruce that had suffered so many unfair, cruel punishments.

“Alfred, please…” the man stopped and turned to his master. “I’m not going to punish the boy: Dick in distress and suffers and I’m not going to make it worse…If his hatred for me helps him cope with everything” he nodded “I’ll take it, Alfred.”

Alfred pressed his lips.

“You care so much for the boy, Master Bruce; I just wish you cared for yourself as much…” he smiled and cleared his throat making his voice strict. “However, he needs discipline or else you’re going to spoil him” he lifted his eyebrows and lolled his head on the side “but…it is Christmas so I guess we can pardon him, huh?”

Bruce smiled and Alfred breathed easier: that incident at the hospital had shaken him and he called Leslie to inform her.

“Thank you, Alfred.”

“You’re welcome, sir” he said nonchalant “but if he does such bullshit again, I’ll take care it myself.”

Alone in his study Bruce opened his Cosmos tablet and began investigating, Hero rolling over on the thick carpet trying to get his attention. Bruce every now and then looked at the kitten tickling his belly; anyways, being over his tablet and investigating was frustrating – he felt useless and this chair felt like a cage. He needed to be out, to search; to spy; to help people; to fly… He remembered the sense of the cool, chilly air of Gotham when he was patrolling during winter…

He closed his eyes trying to bring back the feeling of the air to his body even under the armor: every season had a different feeling…

The door’s bell brought him back to the study and he left the ground floor study to open knowing already who it was; the grounds’ gates opened automatically for few people.

“Leslie!” he exclaimed seeing her smiling once he opened the door.

She squatted to close him in her hug.

“I missed you, Leslie!”

She cupped Bruce’s face and studied him and Bruce knew that she was examining him.

“You see me only as a patient…” he complained playfully. “Alfred told you what happened at the children’s hospital and you decide to visit; you wouldn’t have come if I was healthy…”

Leslie shook her head and bit softly her bottom lip.

“I’m unforgivable if I gave you that impression…but that’s not true: you’re my angel – you’re always on my mind even if I can’t be with you. It’s freezing outside…”

She closed the door and followed Bruce and Hero inside.

“The garden is spectacular! Well done!”

Bruce shrugged.

“The boys did it and Selina: I was just watching.”

Leslie’s eyes widened seeing the grand salon.

“Oh! You have decorated the salon as well!” she said her eyes on the huge Christmas tree sparkling in the rhythm of the tiny lamps and the angel floating at the top. “It was about time!”

Bruce frowned.

“Leslie, why you stopped coming by?”
Leslie grinned and took off her thick long coat. She sat at one of the armchairs near the lit fireplace gazing at the socks that hung there.

“Don’t say it like that, young man, and I missed you too. But you know how these days are: around Christmas work in the hospital culminates” she brushed Bruce’s cheek.

“Don’t tell me you won’t be here for the Christmas dinner?” he asked calm but his complaint was obvious.

“No, I wouldn’t miss that, Bruce” she looked around. “They left you alone?” her voice was disapproving.

Bruce chuckled.

“Hero is here” he pointed to the kitten that rubbed to his legs.

Leslie cocked an eyebrow.

“Anyone two-legged?”

“Alfred went to bring home Dick from the gym and the others have things to do but I guess they’ll come for dinner; besides I’m not a baby needing babysitter…”

“I don’t know… if being alone means that you’d spend time in the humidity and cold of the cave, then yes, we need a babysitter.”

Bruce shook his head.

“I’m not. You see, I follow my doctor’s orders even if she forgets me…”

Leslie smiled and leaned to kiss Bruce’s cheek.

“I didn’t forget you, sweetheart: you were always on my mind and I was calling every day, wasn’t I?”

“It’s not the same…” he smiled. “Mmm…how about I make some hot chocolate? Alfred has cooked cupcakes.”

Leslie stood.

“Leave it to me: the fact I didn’t come for some days didn’t make me a stranger, right?”

“Of course not” Bruce smiled.

When Leslie left the room he took again his Cosmos and parted the screen in two: on the right he perused the archives of GCPD in hopes of finding any lead to Joker’s whereabouts and on the left he opened the Gotham Gazzette site. As he was scanning the police’s reports, the previous feeling of frustration flooded him again: he needed to get outside and then his eyes turned to the arch-shaped big window that gave a spectacular view of the garden. Spectacular exactly as Leslie told him.

The tiny light bulbs flickered slowly in a light blue hue making the bushes and the trees sparkle as if sprayed with stardust; the fact that the sky was filled with stars and there was barely any artificial light made the landscape seem taken from a fairytale.

But Bruce’s eyes travelled…
Clark was leaning on his elbow at his pillow, his eyes watching Bruce with adoration. It was only a month since Clark brought him back from the Fortress and they decided to leave the States for the quiet island of Thassos where Tony had his villa.

Bruce had just woken from his midday nap and looked with narrowed eyes at Clark who was smiling.

“What are you thinking?”

Clark chuckled.

“It’ll sound ridiculous…it’s still too early.”

Bruce raised his torso and kissed him on the lips.

“Don’t be ridiculous!”

Clark twitched his eyebrows.

“Very funny!” he retorted.

Bruce grinned.

“Well?”

“After my father died I believed that I’d never be anxious for Christmas to come…I always loved Christmas but since father died…” he pressed his lips “it was never the same.”

“I know what you mean” Bruce brushed his upper arms.

“But this year I can’t wait for Christmas to come!” Bruce’s expression became grim. “It’d be the most beautiful Christmas in years…because I’ll have you in my arms” he said and cupped Bruce’s face kissing him passionately. “You’re alive and we are together! I don’t know what more I could ask…”

He noticed Bruce’s blank eyes and brushed his cheekbones.

“What?” the Man of Steel asked perplexed.

“I dread Christmas” he said in a throaty voice and Clark gulped. “I don’t want this season to come…throughout the year is difficult but I feel that around Christmas would be horrible…The memories, the Christmas Carols, the images…”

Clark wrapped him in his arms and lifted him to touch the younger man to his bare chest; he hugged him softly because Bruce’s bones were like shreds stuck together with glue. He rubbed his back.

“I’ll be all the time with you, Bruce, I promise…I’ll chase away the pain and I’ll give you again the happiness you deserve. They’ll be the most beautiful Christmas, Bruce: a new beginning in a new happy life. I promise…” he cupped his face and looked him in the eyes. “You believe me, don’t you? In my boy scouts’ honor! And I’ll have my Star lighting my days!”

Bruce nodded smiling.

“Remember when you last called me Star?” he asked Clark who was laid beside him on the Manor’s bed.
“It’s so important?” Clark had replied bored.

And then Superman was kissing Wonder Woman.

“She is my star!”

“Eh! Young man!” Leslie said having squatted beside him; Hero was on his lap without Bruce having sensed him. “What is it?”

Bruce shook his head.

“Nothing, Leslie – I’m just a bit sleepy.”

Cheerful people were heard from the screen as they had gathered in the square in front of the City Hall for the happenings the city had prepared. He took the tablet ready to close it when gun shots towered the music and the ruckus turning the laughter into screams; he frowned and Leslie stood to see.

“Hiiiii, people! I know you miss--ed me” Joker emerged behind Santa Claus sleigh dressed in a brand new suit that Bruce knew that was made by the poor tailor police found dead. “Nooooow… now…ssssss, people or my boys” he gestured to clowns that had surrounded the crowd with firearms ready to open fire “will loooose it and kill someone.”

He shook his head pouting disappointed.

“Dress a stuuuuuupid, fat actor as Santa, make him come oooooout of the sleigh and everyone will laugh and be happy; make Joker come out of the sleigh aaaaand eveee--ryone panics” he tskd but then his eyes found the kids' dumbstruck faces and he fixed his hair sighing. “You didn’t know that this isn’t the real Santa?” he rolled his eyes. “Nooooo wonder Japan’s average IQ is twice ours…”

Bruce’s eyes hardened and his hands clenched around the armrests.

“Well, I might nooooot be the Santa and wear purple buuuuuut I brought all of you gifts! Tadaaaaaa!” two of his goons dragged two sacks which content wasn’t visible. “Gifts to make youuuuuu smile!”

He rubbed his nose.

“It’s freezing, huh?” he asked someone who looked at him petrified. “And NO SNOW! That’s unacceptable!” he looked around as if he had forgotten where he was. “Um, yes! What I meaaaant to say was…” he rolled his eyes “well, the usual: if Baaaaatsy doesn’t come to play I’ll give you my presents”

His goons revealed the sacks’ content: some bottles with smiles painted on them.

“Oh! I give hiiiiim and youuuuu fifteen minutes and then the fun will start without him – ah! Ah! Ah! If someone is soooooo stupid to attack me and ruin the holiday spirit” he took out of his inner pocket a remote “I’ll set ooooff the bombs I have planted around the square…” he cocked his eyebrows pouting. “That’s the drawbacks of planning and announc-ing: someone always ruins every--thing.”

Bruce made to steer the wheelchair but Leslie stood in front of him holding his upper arms.

“No way, Bruce!”
“He is going to kill them if I don’t go! I have the armor – I can do it, Leslie!”

“No, Bruce: I won’t let you sacrifice yourself for anyone. Others will handle that!”

Bruce clenched his jaw frustrated but then a new uproar was heard from the tablet.

A whip wrapped around Joker’s remote and the gadget flew from his hand causing his laughter.

“Whoooooo is our guest? Coooomme out, coooomme out, kinky thing…” he sang. “Find him!” he barked to his goons.

“Her, you stupid sexist!” a sensual voice answered him and instantly his goons’ cries filled the air.

Bruce saw Catwoman kicking and punching Joker’s goons with such ease and grace that made the youth smile proud.

Joker fixed his hair.

“I liiiiiike girls in leather, high-heeled boots and whips! Grrrrrrr! Haaaaave we ever met again, pretty?” he looked at Catwoman’s stiletto heels. “In a caaaaabaret, me on the beeeed ready to do nasty things and you hitting me on the head to…stick your heels on my…”

Catwoman made a twirl and kicked Joker in the face sending him to crash on his laughing bombs.

“You wish, clown!”

“Mmm…” Joker used his hand to straightened his jaw “I thiiiiiiink the night has become gloomy soooo…it’s time to bring some laughter!”

He lifted to his mouth the scarf that revealed to be a mask and hurried to free the gas when a shield ripped the air and hit Joker on the guts carrying him away: the people just jumping far to not have him on them.

The crowd watched awestruck Captain America landing before Joker.

“OoooooooH!” Joker exclaimed rubbing his belly “Caaaan I have an autograph?” he batted his eyelashes cutely “Last time I hanged with your suuuuper pals you were absent…” he made his voice honest “You were sorely missed.”

Captain walked to him, his eyes focused on him but with the corner he followed Catwoman’s fight with the minions.

“Yes, we have some unsettled businesses…”

“Na…na…na” Joker said and pulled out of his jacket another remote. “Juuuuust in case: I always have a second…It’s like coocoondoms, you know?” he said conspiratorially. “You do know about condoms, huh? Good ol’ Tony up-dated you? Well, if you dooooon’t be a good boy, I’ll set off aaaall my bombs. I WANT MY BATSY!” he sighed. “I’m a boy; I can’t hold on much…”

“You have nothing, whacko” Ironman’s robotic voice came to be added and Joker cocked his eyebrows cackling. “Your bombs are useless!”

Steve lolled his head smiling, Catwoman having come to his side.

“Time to go back to Arkham” she was ready to say ‘handsome’ but Steve knew that Selina used that word.
Joker cackled.

“Threeeee against one? No fair play here: laaaady and gentlemen…What has a little jester to do gainst such super powers?” he frowned. “This is Goootham, you know: diiiid you get a license from our big bad bat?”

Bruce frowned. He knew that Joker was up to something.

Something popped and thick smoke covered Joker. Steve felt his eyes blur and monsters appeared suddenly ready to attack him; one of them was covered in black leather, it had a lean body and fangs protruding from its red lips. He thought the innocents around and surged against the black monster.

Selina saw Chill having popped from his grave coming to her smirking: his clothes were worm eaten as his face. He attacked her and she dodge his punch kicking him in the guts.

Bruce narrowed his eyes biting his lips from agony, sweat drops covering his brow: fear gas – Joker of course used Crane’s resources.

Tony knew it was fear toxin but his armor’s air filter made him immune to that so he ran to his friends to administer the antidote to before anyone got hurt.

Joker giggled and mounted a bike that he had beforehand left there for any case.

“Ooops!” Joker said. “Sorry for leaving you…” he stopped and turned to the crowd that watched puzzled at the superheroes.

“Dooooo you happen to know why our Batsy relied ooon these buffoons and didn’t come himself?” he started again the engine.

But his bike hit on something solid and he crashed on the street; he looked up and saw Thor glaring at him with his hammer spiting bluish sparkles.

“OoooooH! The blond gooood…Did you bring soooome ice with you? You dooooo cooome from Norge, huh?”

Thor clenched his jaw.

“Enough! You won’t threaten Bruce ever again!’

Joker raised his index finger.

“Tonight I threatened Batman” he lolled his head puzzled “it was a threaaat? Mmmm…I dooon’t think sooo – more like an invi—tation…” then he thought something. “Ugh! I’m sick of god-like things claiming myyy Bruceyyyy!”

He threw one of his fear gas balls in front of the god’s feet and smoke covered him causing Joker’s laughter. But then with one sharp motion Mjolnir ripped the smoke and absorbed the gas. The imposing blond marching towards Joker gritting his teeth.

Joker smiled.

“Uuuuu…Tough guy…Can we taaaalk this out like civilized meeeeen? Gods? Peeeople?”
Thor rushed to punch him but was met with air, the Joker just vanished. The god closed his eyes growling frustrated: his hammer emanating little thunders.

“Loki!” he mumbled knowing that his brother was responsible for Joker’s escape.

When Tony’s dart with the antidote stabbed Steve’s arm and his vision became clear again, Catwoman was already at the other side of the square, safe from the toxin.

“Wait!” Steve yelled and followed her running in full speed.

She stopped sighing silently but when he was near enough she made some swift somersaults and disappeared in the forest of alleys. Steve stayed agape watching her.

“Sorry for attacking you…” he said.

Tony came to him, his helmet on hand. He smirked seeing his comrade’s stare.

“What a woman, huh?”

“I prefer Selina but I wanted to apologize and thank her…” he took in Tony’s cocked eyebrows.

“Alright, she is impressive…” he frowned. Where was Batman?

Tony lolled his head on the side.

“He doesn’t like team work…I suppose he saw us and chose to go elsewhere…”
Chapter 50

Chapter Notes

If you'd like to read the whole story about Bruce's last Christmas with his parents and the Christmas Eve he spent in Selina's attic, you can go to 'Snowflakes', part 4 of the series.

Merry Christmas!

Superman stood on his favorite rooftop in Metropolis: the one of the Daily Planet building with the giant globe. He didn't expect Lois to come there to find him like the good old days; if she wanted to speak to him she'd have done so during their working hours. But she was still angry with him. Lois acted as if Bruce was her friend from years and not Clark Kent; and that pissed him creating a slow burning feeling of betrayal.

His ears caught screams of terror in Gotham’s City Hall square and his heart skipped some beats like the old times. He cocked an eyebrow: it seemed that his hearing still followed the old habits…As his heart that immediately convulsed in fear for…

He pressed his lips because he didn’t want even to think of his name because he didn’t want the scenes of that dream being replayed – a dream that had shaken him up: Bruce a bright star leading him out of the darkness and despair? So stupid. For once, Bruce always said that Clark was the light in his life and if someone was in darkness this was Bruce not him.

Anyway he should fly to Gotham because obviously people were in danger…and now he caught the reason: Joker. An old rage was ignited inside him and he clenched his fist ready to take off.

“Kal? There you are!”

Strong feet landed on the rooftop and Superman turned to see Diana coming to him.

“I was waiting for you and I got worried so I flew around to find you. What?” she asked brushing his cheek.

“Joker attacked in Gotham – I must go.”

She smiled and her blue eyes sparkled.

“Why? I know he is dangerous and all and I would have rushed there along with you but Gotham has Batman and Ironman is there guarding his little friend. So now that you don’t have a special interest on the city why going there? In a city that has her protectors?”

Superman’s brow creased: indeed, Ironman was there and Thor (he cocked an eyebrow, the old grudge blasting) so people wouldn’t be in danger. Besides Batman demanded that he never come to Gotham again so why bothering?

He caressed Diana’s hair and engaged her lips in a tender kiss that soon became almost wild as they hugged each other. No, there was no reason for him to return to Gotham: as a matter of fact, now he felt normally about that city, that is to say appalled. He preferred to be in places with light and cheer like Metropolis; being with bright people like Diana.

Diana’s eyes sparkled as they locked with his.

“To my apartment?”

Superman smiled.

“Where else, my Star?” Diana smiled satisfied on that but Superman felt something inside him stabbing aggressively on that small word.

“Tony, first of all, our gratitude for the perfect intervention of the Avengers: many innocent lives were saved thanks to you even if Joker escaped”

Bruce had turned on the 50” plasma TV in the sitting room and watched the live connection with the City Hall Square; Leslie stood at his side with her arms crossed her eyes to the screen but on the same time regarding Bruce’s reaction; she knew that being forced to not help as Batman had its toll to him and wanted to prevent any unpleasant consequences to his health. What happened at the children’s hospital rang the alarm about how his emotions could threaten his recovery.

Mayor Garcia had just thanked Tony with a warm handshake; S.H.I.E.L.D.’s director had stayed behind while Steve and Thor made a quick escape from the cameras and the enthusiastic crowd. Now GCTV’s reporter had approached Tony, still in Ironman’s armor minus the face plate.

Tony had his usual smug expression that Bruce found so cute and funny.

“We just did our duty” he squinted to read the reporter’s ID on his lapel “Alex” he waved, kissing his palm and sending kisses at the cheering crowd around that gradually found again his mood as the singers moved on the stage and started the celebration that Joker almost destroyed.

“Yes and we are thankful but…” the reporter’s eyes glimmered wickedly “Gotham has her local protector” Tony scratched his hair and Bruce understood that he felt uncomfortable. “In fact people wonder why Batman didn’t show up to stop Joker…”

Bruce bit his bottom lip and Leslie fumed; even Hero on the carpet was unusually quiet.

Tony laughed and cocked his eyebrows.

“People wonder or Joker? Because Joker said that, my friend.”

The reporter fell silent for a second but immediately continued.

“I think it’s the same, Tony.”

Tony now got serious.

“No, Alex, it’s not. Batman is not obliged to succumb to every crazy whim that clown has…” the reporter was ready to retort but Tony caught him to this. “I’m sure that Batman was ready to intervene but seeing us handling the situation he stayed away watching just in case because having succumbed to Joker’s demands he would have fed the lunatic’s belief that he can attack innocent people to get what he wants.”

The reporter smirked.
“Is this a manifestation of Avengers taking charge of Gotham?”

Now Tony lolled his head on the side, stabbing the reporter with two completely still sparkling eyes.

“I think, my friend, that you only talk and don’t listen! There’s no manifestation: Avengers respect Batman and are proud of being able to assist him in his job…”

Tony turned to leave, his irritation evident to Bruce but then he halted and looked at the camera.

“We are happy that for once we could offer something to that city that Batman saved all alone.
Batman fought for this city when nobody else dared – even Superman didn’t mess with Gotham…
and Batman is still protecting Gotham.”

“Close” Bruce said and the TV obeyed.

It was what he expected: those holograms were useless. His absence from the streets would become clearer and then it was a matter of time before criminality re-organized. Not to mention that rumors would begin to spread about something thwarting Batman from being out there: being dead or seriously injured or disabled…

Bruce clenched his jaw: that was Joker’s plan. To drag him outside making Bruce use the means that the clown suspected that he had enabling him to appear scarce. He doubted that the clown wanted to disclose his identity – or what Joker believed was Batman’s identity – yet he enjoyed making Bruce feel desperate. The man just wanted to get him back in the streets to indulge his crazy desires.

Anyway, Bruce felt terrible: he was of course happy and relieved that Joker was stopped with no casualties and he was grateful to the Avengers yet there was a very bitter taste in his mouth and a clenching in his insides. He wasn’t so selfish to demand that Batman made all the savings in Gotham yet what just happened didn’t feel right. And Bruce could admit that he was disappointed with himself: investigating and planning from the Manor was so lame!

Leslie placed her hand on his shoulder and Bruce looked up at her.

“You put too much weight on those shoulders… Don’t think it too much: it’s over, Bruce: nobody got hurt and people will forget that Batman wasn’t there.”

Bruce shook his head; he didn’t want Leslie to understand his empty feeling and of course neither Tony nor Steve nor Thor; and of course his Selina.

“I’m fine, Leslie.”

Hero was staring at him and climbed on his lap to get Bruce’s petting.

“Forget Joker and his shenanigans” Leslie said sternly not letting her sadness derived from Bruce’s dispirited eyes defeat her “we have to appoint some exams. I don’t like at all what happened at the children’s hospital.”

Bruce made a big nod.

“So…that was the reason you remembered me, huh?” he teased her. “Okay, okay… Tell me, Leslie, apart from Alfred, Elliot did tell you as well, right? Great confidentiality…”

Leslie’s eyes became serious.

“Dr. Elliot did the right thing, Bruce” Bruce crooked his mouth. “I am your doctor and I should know everything that concerns your health.”

Bruce nodded.

“Fine but let Christmas pass…I don’t want my body being scrutinized again as the icing of the cake…”

Leslie squatted and hugged his shoulders.

“You feel awful…” she pressed her lips “about Christmas and all. I understand, Bruce; but we are here: we won’t let you alone. Ever again.”

He smiled and patted her hand, Hero pawing at it playfully.

“I know, Leslie” he inhaled “and it’s not that bad with all of you around” he hurried to reassure her.

Leslie shook her head not persuaded at all but she didn’t manage to say anything because the Manor’s cable phone rang.

“Hellll—looooo, honey.”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose hearing that familiar nasal voice and let Hero on the floor.

“Are you there?” Joker asked worried.

“What do you want, Joker?”

“You are sooooo aggressive, babe. OHOHOHO! I hope youuuuu out this in bed” Bruce closed his eyes. “I was expecting youuuuu in the square under the tree…beside the sleigh…I aaaaasked you…What happened and you stooood me uuup? You hired assistants to do your job?” he made his voice complaining. “It’s nooooot kind at aaaall: weeeee have something special!”

Leslie looked at Bruce frowning but he gestured to her to not speak.

“In the square, you called Batman, not me.”

“What’s the difference? HEHEHEHE...Don’t tell me your disorder turned into...mmm...how the shrink...Identity disorder with amnesia?”

“What are you babbling about?”

Joker’s voice became serious.

“I know the truth, okay, honey? I know who you truly are, babe…” his voice was more nasal than usually. “How doooo you feel having others do the job? I know your heart ripped your rib cage to fly there: why you didn’t, darling? I know you have found a way: this is why people say that are seeing you in action. Gothamites will start wonder if you don’t show up when I ask for you...Aaaand I intent to do that a looooot, honey... My wettest kisses to your...mmm...everything...I can’t wait to complete our marriage” he sighed longingly and ended the call.

“What did he want?” Leslie asked outraged.

“To tell that he knows who I am and laugh at me watching useless…”

Leslie’s eyes sparkled.
“You’re not useless!”

“Not completely…” he answered and took his Cosmos touching the screen and selecting the right program.

Leslie approached intrigued, watching frowned.

“What are you doing?”

“The central processor in the cave has a system of locating calls from to the cable phones of the Manor.”

“The time he stayed on the phone was enough?”

“It doesn’t need much time…If I manage to locate him, then Jim and the police will catch him” he was speaking and giving the specific orders with rapid touches on the screen; he waited for a few seconds and then a window popped up that made Bruce curse. “Something stops the locating… damn!”

Leslie had leaned above the screen so she immediately saw that there was no finding. Bruce huffed and closed his eyes; Leslie patted his back.

“It’s alright, son: just do not be sad: you’ll find him. Some transference must have blocked your system.”

Bruce nodded, his mind on Loki: he was sure that the naughty god was helping his minion to stay out of any locating system. He was thinking that he wasn’t going to find Joker by sitting there, inside the Manor which made him feel his heartbeat unbearable to calm but he didn’t want to worry Leslie. So he nodded.

“I’ll find him.”

Tony sat on the stool in front of the bar made from shining dark brown wood; he was sipping slowly his ginger ale; he was thoughtful but he wouldn’t betray his promise to Pepper, to Bruce, to Alfred, to himself to not slip again to heavy drinking. And most of all, now he had Bruce back and there was every reason for him to be optimist even though many thoughts wanted to spoil that: the coming operation, Joker, Superman’s cruel behavior and Bruce’s well hidden sorrow…

“Tony! Fancy that!”

The billionaire left his thoughts and returned to his surroundings to see Thomas Elliot along with his cute girlfriend whose name Tony couldn’t remember.

“Thomas, Miss…Kelly” he greeted them finally being able to remember her name. “I’d have invited you to join me but I’m sitting at the bar.”

Thomas smiled and waved that off.

“I’ve already made reservations so if you want you can join us.”

Tony shook his head.

“I won’t stay much; I wait for Pepper to finish some works.”
Thomas lolled his head on the side.

“Come on, Tony, it’ll be an honor for us” he arched his eyebrows “having a drink with Ironman…I saw you and Captain America stopping Joker. On TV, of course, but there was a thick crowd around you cheering” Thomas snorted inside with the billionaire’s need for attention. “How do you manage to escape your fans?”

Tony chuckled.

“I like drawing the attention but when I want I can get away…” he hopped from the stool and followed them to their table.

Thomas ordered their aperitif and Tony noticed that he didn’t gave the chance to the young lady to order for herself – of course, she didn’t seem annoyed. Dr. Elliot noticed Tony’s thoughtfulness and asked him if he wanted something to drink but the billionaire shook his head in denial.

“I admire your determination to stay away from alcohol” Thomas said when the maitre left.

Tony lolled his head on the side cocking an eyebrow.

“Booze isn’t stronger than me, Tommy” he smiled.

Thomas nodded.

“And Bruce’s return from the dead must be a strong motive to keep you away though…” he shook his head “now with his paraplegia must be difficult.”

Kelly was looking the doctor like hypnotized. Tony frowned.

“Bruce is always his beautiful self even in this chair…”

“I’m not saying otherwise but still seeing your best friend in this state, especially when his health must be still fragile…” Tony was looking the doctor straight in the eye but he was rimming his glass nervously. “I know because my mother…well…has her own disability.”

Tony was happy for the chance to change the subject.

“What’s your mother doing? Has been ages since I last heard of her…”

Thomas shook his head.

“Her disability became worse and I had to trust her to a fine institution since I couldn’t offer her the treatment she deserved. But Bruce confined in a chair…I can imagine how you and Alfred feel…”

Tony felt irritation fueling inside him.

“Bruce is alive, back to us, we have him with us: his presence is a gift. But how can you claim that you know how we’re feeling?”

Thomas blinked and licked his lips tapping his finger once in the linen white tablecloth.

“I spent a lot of time with people with severe spinal injuries and their families” Tony narrowed his eyes interested which was what Thomas wanted. “I have developed a breakthrough system for the remediation of such impairments – very special cases, complex and severe. We have great – miraculous I dare say results” now Tony’s frown became deeper. “Superman had the kindness to help us: his laser vision is more precise and sensitive than our robots.”
Tony shook his head pursing his lips.

“I wouldn’t trust him…”

Thomas chuckled.

“I should assume that the rumors were true then? I mean about Bruce and him? And now that Superman is with Wonder Woman you don’t want him near Bruce? Their split must have hurt Bruce so much” Thomas would have given one of his doctorates to have witnessed Bruce’s heart breaking.

Tony yanked his head backwards and laughed.

“Not at all, Tommy… Bruce with Superman! For fuck’s sake… I just don’t trust Superman’s good intentions, that’s all.”

Thomas leaned towards him.

“Superman or not, our program have a success rate almost perfect” inside he was cheering because Tony’s eyes sparkled with fervent interest. “I don’t want to brag that my experience with severe and complex spinal injuries surpasses any other doctor on the field…And I know that you will do everything to help Bruce walk again…”

“What do you want to say?”

Thomas leaned back to his chair – he was sure that he could take the airhead billionaire to his side.

“I can help, Tony…I was bad with Bruce during our childhood but I’m not a brat anymore. I can and I want to offer my assistance to your effort. Because we both know that it is a huge effort with many dangers despite your genius – I’m sure” he arched his eyebrows for emphasis “inventions to restore his mobility. You’re creating new wonders to help him – I know you do; but Bruce is still very fragile and the operation will be challenging…” Thomas was cheering inside knowing that he was hitting the right buttons but all the time kept his serious expression.

Tony raised his glass and gulped the liquid: he knew Bruce’s sentiments about the man but he would want every help that he could get.

“Think about it, Tony: I know that Bruce after the Hell he’s been through is very cautious with people like me that once hurt him” he pressed his lips sorry. “But, you, Tony, can see clearer: why not giving Bruce extra chances?”

Tony looked at him.

“I don’t know, Tommy: it’s too early…”

Thomas nodded.

“I understand. Look, give me your email and I’ll send you everything about our project and the success’ rates so you can think about it and decide.”

“I appreciate that, Tommy.”

The waiter came back with their aperitif.

“Are you sure you don’t want some?” Thomas asked.

Tony shook his head and saw Pepper entering the restaurant.
“My date…” he said rising. “Thanks for the company, guys! Have a great night!”

“Thank you, Mr. Stark” Kelly replied and Tony kissed her hand.

Thomas arched his eyebrows.

“Your e-mail, Tony…”

Tony seemed thoughtful for a second but then pulled out of his jacket’s inside pocket one of his cards and gave it to him.

“Good night, Tony” he said eyeing the card. “Give my best regards to Bruce.”

“I will” Tony answered and marched towards Pepper.

I'm sure he'll be very happy to hear… Thomas thought and chuckled. He had been tempted to disclose to that asshole Bruce’s collapse at the hospital just to see the airhead panicked but he wanted to prove to Bruce that he was trustworthy. The best way to hurt someone was by gaining his trust, even if that was as difficult and cringe worthy as with the Wayne brat.

Loki paced in front of Joker’s awful ‘Christmas tree’, keeping his hands behind his back and his head stooped. Every now and then cast a glance to the tree shaking his head.

“And he called me a pervert…”

He was sideways looking at the door to one of the warehouse’s apartments where Joker had isolated himself. Finally, the clown made his appearance, clearly happy, hopping in his way towards Loki. Joker watched him amused, and jumped to the pink armchair next to the box with the TV set, putting his legs over the armrest dangling them.

“I’m going to say my great line now” the jester said pompously. “Why sooooo serious?” he giggled. “Don’t tell me you didn’t got along with John?” he gestured to the skeleton. “Whyyyyy? I know he isn’t a great talker buuuut he’s the perfect listener…Hehe” he stopped laughing and shook his index finger. “I knooooow: it’s about the square… Whyyyyy? It was soooooo fun! Of course, I’d prefer it if Batsy honored us buuuuuut a humble clown can’t have everything, right? Even if he’s meeeeee! HEHE!”

Loki stopped abruptly and glared at Joker, his eyes sparkling. Joker giggled.

“Why you had to do that?” the god asked him.

Joker shook his head nervously and pouted.

“I never ‘have to do anything’…” he opened wide his arms. “I just do it!”

Loki narrowed his eyes.

“Yes, I know your stupid tactic” Joker mouthed ‘stupid’ as if he was hurt. “But now you’re not alone: you’re with me.”

Joker completely unfazed cocked an eyebrow.

“When you say ‘with you’ I hope you don’t mean…” he lowered his voice “sexually. I’m a married man in loooove with his wife…my wife not his…wait…you got the meaning…”
Loki rolled his eyes.

“I’m not that pervert and I have taste” Joker pouted. “We have a goal to achieve.”

Joker brought his legs down and leaned towards Loki.

“We? Goal? Like in soccer?”

“Cut the crap, clown! Do you forget that I freed you? Do you forget who I am?”

Joker stood and rolled his finger.

“If you’re going to throw me again a bucket of water, don’t: I bathed a week ago. Buuuuuut you said that I’m a freelancer soooo I don’t have to ask you for everything.”

“Not when you decide to act so openly and draw the Avengers on you! I thought you wanted the same thing!”

Joker smirked which highlighted his left scar.

“Whi--ch is?”

“Ridiculing the Avengers and establishing our power…”

“Nah…nah…nah. Myyyyy power is aaaaalready established and I have aaaaalready ridiculed every superhero except Bats who can’t be ridiculed. So youuuuu’re talking about youuuuuourself; why should I listen to your rant?”

Loki brought his face in front of Joker’s clenching his jaw.

“Because you want Bruce Wayne and with what you did the Avengers will guard him more closely. Also you exposed me! I had to intervene to save you from Thor and he might be blond but he isn’t stupid!”

Joker lolled his head on the side and giggled.

“Thaaaat joke is sexist aaaaaand outdated – you need to renew your repertoire.”

Loki rolled his eyes.

“I will laugh with Thor but once and for all!”

Joker nodded.

“Establishing youuuuuur power aaaaand giving me Brucey? Because I noticed an increased interest of the blondie for my wife…”

“Exactly! So stop your nonsense if you want to get what you want!”

With a pop the god vanished and Joker’s Cheshire smile curved his face.

“I will get what I want buuuuuut who told yooooo that I’ll work for your stupid plans?” he rampaged his jacket’s inner pocket mumbling “plaaaaans…everyone knows that plans are made to be ruined…” he found his oldfashioned cell phone and dialed a number. “Oh! Dear Lo--Loki, you should have known…Hello, my dear, Scarrrrrescrow! Have you chased away maaaaany crows? HAHAHAHAHAHAAAAA! Oh! C’mon, don’t be soooouuu gloooom…” his voice became sharp.
“Let’s talk about business: I know you dooooon’t like what I don’t like…taking orders…”

Bruce was gazing at Gotham’s sparkling skyline; the view was breathtaking as the lights from Christmas decorations were visible even from that height. The Imperial hotel was one of the tallest buildings in Gotham so the view from the roof garden was one of the best in the city.

He had made reservations for the 23rd of December; not that he couldn’t choose a date sooner – as soon as Copplebot informed about Bruce’s interest he called him himself to reassure him that for him there was always a table in the Imperial roof garden. However Bruce wanted first to finish all his jobs.

As Bruce was waiting for Oliver Quinn in the table near the edge he couldn’t help but feel like flying again in the sky… The roof garden restaurant remained open throughout the year – even during the winter: the whole space was from a dome made with lightweight glass giving it the look of an atrium. The glass of the walls was so fine that gave the impression of not being there so if you sat near the edge it was like you were on the air.

So Bruce’s mind inadvertently went back, few months ago when he was flying with Clark’s borrowed wings and felt as if those wings were his…but they were borrowed and in the end had to be taken from him. He knew it from the start…He was just fooling himself all this time. He never should have relied and loved those wings; he should have kept using his own artificial wings which enabled him soar the sky.

Bruce wanted to sigh as the nostalgia filled his insides; his dead legs an unbearable burden even though he couldn’t feel them at all.

The space was elegantly decorated in Christmas spirit without exertion: only some gold colored bows on the walls and artificial snow on the pyramid like bar at the center that looked like made of crystal in the changing colors of aurora borealis – Bruce smirked on the irony.

The arctic impression was completed by an oval pond with crystal blue water that didn’t have walls and seemed like its water run to the road underneath: in the middle, mounted a Christmas tree from transparent ice with crystal penguins around which was something that Bruce hadn’t seen again.

However for Bruce only Gotham’s skyline was eye catching.

He heard footsteps but didn’t turn to not show that; he looked at his guest only when he was there. Oliver Quinn was dressed in an expensive handmade dark blue suit with silver colored tie and light gray shirt. He smiled to Bruce without being able to outcast his smugness but Bruce could admit that he was a very charming man.

“Oliver, hi” he gave his hand for a handshake “I wish I could stand to welcome you. Have a seat” he showed him the armchair opposite.

However Quinn didn’t sit immediately but regarded Bruce appreciatively.

“You’re gorgeous in every color but black is your color” he said arching his eyebrows admiring the tailored two piece black suit Bruce was wearing with a white silken shirt and black pinstriped tie. “I didn’t have to ask to find you” he smiled seeing Bruce blushing “I just followed the stares of women and men…”

“I think that they admire the view; it is breathtaking” Bruce retorted.
Quinn sat and looked around at the filled with people space.

“I had something more private in mind…” he said smirking, his eyes glimmering amused.

Bruce shrugged.

“I don’t see the reason…After all you told me that you didn’t want us to have dinner in the Manor so I assumed that you didn’t care about privacy.”

Quinn smiled and crossed his legs elegantly.

“Oh, Bruce…You’re so clever but I think that the real reason is that you just don’t trust anyone to be alone with – especially, after what happened with Luthor.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side.

“This is a business dinner, right?”

Quinn nodded.

“For starts…” the older man said mysteriously.

The maitre came and took their order; Bruce waited till they served them wine for Quinn and just mineral water for him before speaking.

“In New York we had started a conversation about Princess Diana.”

Quinn sipped from his wine and smiled wickedly behind his glass; his fervent eyes fixed on Bruce’s face.

“Right to the point, eh, Bruce? I hope you’re not in a haste to dispose of me?”

Bruce blushed and drank from his mineral water.

“Of course not! How is your staying in Gotham?”

“Splendid! This city has tremendous interest and I admire its unique beauty. Only a few people can see that beauty, right Bruce?”

Bruce nodded.

“Have you visited many places?”

“Only a few…I’m a man with peculiar tastes. But I know you’re anxious to hear about the Princess and if I remember correctly you had some suspicions that she is not real?”

“I never said that…” he didn’t want to reveal his suspicions to him. “Is there something that make you think that about her?”

Quinn smiled and Bruce understood that the man figured his attempt to get his answer.

“Not at all: she is real, Bruce, without any doubt. Believe me.”

“I’d have understood if you had doubts though: during your stay with the Amazons you were seriously injured and the fever, the pain could have distorted your judgement” his guest was shaking his head.
“No, Bruce; I stayed there some time after my complete healing and I was able to see things clear: everything we know from legends was before my eyes: the amazons, the locations, the temples, Quinn Hippolyta, Princess Diana.”

“It must have been difficult to communicate…” Bruce chose to investigate discreetly the details in hope to find the truth there.

Quinn smiled.

“Indeed; at first, all seemed Greek to me” he laughed “literally Greek…However, the Princess has the gift of picking up languages so it took her only a couple of days before being able to communicate with me in English.”

Bruce nodded.

“I’ve read that the Amazon’s island had no communication with the rest of the world: is that true or there were also other people?”

Quinn shook his head in denial.

“No: while I was there I didn’t see anyone apart from Amazons.”

“Would you be able to return in Themyscyrra?” Quinn’s eyes widened. “I mean would you be able to find again the location?”

The man laughed.

“You want to go there for vacations? Oh, Bruce…That would be difficult even for a professional sailor…and I don’t find the reason to go back. Okay, it's a beautiful place, a paradise on earth and the Amazon are gorgeous but what I want is in our world” he leaned towards Bruce startling the younger man.

Quinn smiled.

“Bruce, you’re still a child…the way you react to someone’s interest” he got serious. “Listen, I know why you’re so interested in the island: you hope to prove that the Princess is an impostor and get Superman back.”

Bruce frowned.

“I told you: I had nothing with him.”

“Indeed. Otherwise he wouldn’t be with Diana right now: I can’t believe that someone blessed with your love would choose to be with someone else. So forget everything about Themyscirrha and look ahead.”

Thankfully, their order came so eating could stop Quinn’s flirt.

Suddenly, a man around Quinn’s age approached their table.

“Is that Oliver Quinn? Fancy that! I couldn’t imagine that I’d find you in Gotham.”

Oliver eyed the man almost hostile which didn’t escape Bruce’s attention but then he stood and shook hands with the man.

“It’s been ages, Martin” he said. “How are you doing?”
“Fine, Oliver. I was sad when I heard about your shipwreck but something was telling me that you’d manage to make it.”

The man turned to Bruce and gave his hand for a handshake.

“Martin Hatch, delighted for meeting you, Mr. Wayne.”

“Me too, Mr. Hatch.”

“This man” Martin said gesturing to Oliver “Mr. Wayne, was definite going to survive: during our years in Yale he was great in every sport: the University’s champion.”

Quinn laughed.

“You exaggerate, Martin.”

“Not at all. Only in archery he was helpless…once he almost planted his arrow to the trainer’s arm” he laughed but Oliver’s face was serious.

“Yeah, archery wasn’t my thing – not a big deal…”

“Of course: one can be perfect in everything…Oh! I’m so happy I saw you, Ollie: we can arrange to meet some day – here’s my card: call me” Quinn took the card smiling cordially but Bruce was sure that he wouldn’t call his old classmate. “Have a great evening and I’m sorry for the interruption.”

“Not at all” Bruce answered smiling but Quinn just made a goodbye gesture to Martin and sat back.

“University acquaintances” he said grinning.

“He looked happy to see you again.”

“Who can tell?” he shrugged. “Now, Bruce, I think that collaboration between our companies will be very prosperous.”

Bruce was happy that discussion moved to less personal things.

“What do you have in mind?”

“First of all, Wayne Enterprises has a great fleet with deals in every important harbor in the world; my company needs a trusted distributor. Then I have heard that your company prepares some breakthrough things in the health field and, if you want, I’d like to invest on that: Quinn Corporation has developed some health projects and with your alliance we can make miracles.”

Bruce nodded.

“We can discuss details with the directors of each department and Mr. Fox; for starts, I agree that our companies’ collaboration will be for the best. We can arrange a meeting after Christmas and after my return from Metropolis.”

Quinn’s eyes darkened on the mention of Metropolis.

“Metropolis?” he shook his head. “The city of Superman? Bruce” he grinned “I know it’s none of my business but following Superman like a puppy doesn’t suit you. I admit that I had felt something for Princess Diana when she saved me but soon I realized that this was just gratitude and attachment – nothing more. Besides those superheroes, those god-like creatures are not for us.”
Bruce watched him keeping his patience and smirking inside on his remark about the so-called Amazon: who could stay in love with her anyways? Except for Superman of course…That bit hard his insides.

When Quinn ended his ‘speech’ Bruce shook his head.

“First, you’re right: is none of yours business. Second, Metropolis is not just Superman’s city; it is also the headquarters of LexCorp of which I’m a shareholder AND I must attend the annually meeting.”

The older man shook his head laughing and waved his hand.

“I’m hopeless in hiding my true feelings, huh?”

Bruce looked at him serious: he doubted that this man couldn’t hide his feelings or anything he wanted. As a matter of fact Bruce was sure that this man let to be shown only what he wanted.

“Mr. Quinn, I think that you should stop this game with me.”

The older man narrowed his eyes almost hurt.

“Bruce, I…”

“Mr.Quinn…”

“Come on, Bruce, do not do this: call me Oliver.”

Bruce’s stare was sharp.

“There’s no reason to call you Oliver: it seems that doing this makes you think that you have the right to press me and do inappropriate remarks about my life.”

The older man widened his eyes.

“For pity’s sake, Bruce, I didn’t mean to become annoying; my sympathy for you – I admit it – made me a bit more uninhibited with my remarks but this isn’t a reason for you to be mad.”

“Then stop doing it.”

Quinn pursed his lips and nodded.

“I apologize: I admit that I was insensitive…not thinking about your sensitivities…” he locked eyes with Bruce and put his hand on the table ready to touch Bruce’s hand; he stopped the last moment. “I’m sorry but you’re too important for me.”

Bruce shook his head exasperated.

“You don’t even know me!”

Quinn smirked.

“Some people don’t have to know each other much: it’s like being together for an eternity. I know the darkness you live in and nobody else could understand…”

Bruce inhaled deeply: suddenly, he felt exhausted; his eyes were blinking unstoppable and he couldn’t stop them from snapping closed as much as he tried. He was aware that he shouldn’t sleep there but he was falling rapidly: he managed to catch the worried stare of Quinn and Bruce would have believed that he drugged him but he would have sensed it if something was in his food or drink.

Quinn stood and leaned over him.

“Bruce?”

“I…” he didn’t manage to say anything more because his eyes closed and his head would fall on the table if Quinn didn’t hold him.

The older man made a gesture with his head and the maitre rushed to their table. The poised man became panicked seeing their prominent client unconscious but Quinn looked him reassuringly.

“Mr. Wayne just fell asleep: he is under heavy medication and he just exhausted these days…and he wouldn’t want people to be upset nor the journalists around the hotel make headlines about this” he put a bill into the man’s chest pocket and the man nodded. “I’d appreciate if you take us to a suite.”

When Bruce woke, sleep was still heavy on his eyelids and head; yet he had learnt from Ra’s to master his body needs. So before opening his eyes he knew that he was in a room he didn’t know and that someone was with him: so close that he could sense the hot air of his breath – someone was staring at him, inhaling deeply as if sniffing him.

He remembered what happened at the restaurant.

And now he was laid on a bed, muffled in warm, soft blankets and dressed in his clothes minus the tie and the shoes. At least, he hadn’t been stripped: Bruce shuddered because even now waking up in a strange bed made him froze in a panic that any kind of training was unable to eliminate.

Oliver Quinn was sitting in the velvet stool at the side of the bed and was watching him with adoration.

Bruce snapped his eyes open and put his hands on the mattress jolting on the mattress in sitting position. He acted the panicked although he could master his dread; he looked frenzied around and when two tender hands held his shoulders reassuringly Bruce convulsed worse.

“No, let me go!”

Oliver switched on the nightstand’s lamp and hushed Bruce.

“It’s alright, Bruce; you’re safe.”

Bruce registered his surroundings: he was in a vast bedroom, luxuriously decorated with modern furniture and rich velvet carpet. The transparent silver curtains were drawn to keep away most of the external lights.

“What have you done?” Bruce demanded. “How dare you bringing me here after everything we talked about?” he pretended the outraged, terrorized which suited the traumatized Bruce Wayne but in fact he mostly was angry.

“I didn’t touch you, Bruce” he answered calmly. “You fell asleep and I brought you in one of the hotel’s suites.”

“You drugged me” he said with a slight tremor in his voice to indicate terror though he knew that the man hadn’t done that – though the fact that he dropped asleep like that troubled him and he didn’t want even to imagine Leslie’s reaction upon hearing it.

“Bruce, I swear I didn’t.”

“Okay, let’s say that you didn’t; why did you bring me here? My people will be worried…”

“Please, calm down, Bruce: I already informed Alfred.”

“No, you didn’t; if you had he’d have come and take me to the Manor.”

Quinn shook his head.

“I would have taken you there myself, Bruce but the hotel was full with reporters for the Hollywood star who lives here and I thought that you wouldn’t want them to chase you or make a fuss about your supposed collapse. Alfred thought the same and agreed to come and get you after the reporters leave the building.”

Bruce lowered his eyes somewhat calmer.

“How do you feel?” Quinn asked concerned. “You must be exhausted to fell asleep like that in a place with music and noise.”

But Bruce shook his head and rubbed his forehead.

“Why you were staring at me like that?” he asked calmer.

Quinn stretched back smiling.

“I think that is obvious” he licked his lips “because you’re the most beautiful person I have ever seen” Bruce closed his eyes exasperated. “And that beauty becomes irresistible when you’re in sleep’s embrace…Your body’s perfume drew me and I couldn’t nor I wanted to resist.”

Bruce widened his eyes and looked around furious for his wheelchair.

“Where’s my chair?”

“Are you so hasty to leave?”

Bruce yanked his head backwards and then locked eyes with the older man.

“You must forget all about this, Oliver! Nothing can happen between you and me: I’m not made for these things.”

Quinn smiled with his smug way.

“On the contrary you are made only for these things: to be loved and worshiped by someone who can appreciate what you are.”

Bruce moved his body to the edge of the king size bed determined to crawl if he must to his wheelchair. But Quinn stopped him.

“I’ll bring it” and when the wheelchair was there and Bruce sat “I’d never hurt you, Bruce: I just did what I thought you’d want. If I upset you, I honestly apologize.”

He gave him his Cosmos phone and stood.
“Here: Alfred waits a call: it’s better to not drive yourself” he walked to the other end of the room to the armchair where Bruce’s jacket and coat were neatly placed.

“I’ll be just fine” Bruce snapped at him and put on the jacket Quinn held for him; he put the phone into his jacket’s inner pocket and made to move towards the salon.

But Quinn stopped him showing his feet that were without shoes. The older man took Bruce’s black leather shoes, knelt and almost reverently took each foot and put it inside. Bruce felt goose bumps and that infuriated him so he wheeled his chair towards the exit.

Quinn stood, taking Bruce’s long coat and followed him with confident strides.

“Reporters have left the building” he said and approached the younger man holding his long coat.

He helped Bruce wear it and their eyes met - Quinn’s eyes for the first time were almost begging.

“Do not be angry with me, Bruce: I cherish your friendship if I can’t have anything more…”

Bruce huffed.

“You must understand…”

Quinn shook his head and grinned.

“I do…Can I hope to your friendship?”

Bruce lowered his eyes thoughtful, then looked again at the older man and nodded before moving to the door that Quinn opened for him.

The older man escorted him till the underground parking just in case but they stayed silent parting with a simple ‘Goodnight’.

Quinn watched the black, sleek wonder of a car taking Bruce away with an enigmatic smile on his lips and infinite adoration in his eyes.

“You can’t imagine, Bruce how difficult it was to be so close to you; seeing you sleeping, being so beautiful; and resisting the urge to claim your velvet lips…”

Bruce had found the chance to isolate himself in front of the big arch shaped window of the grand salon as Alfred, Leslie, Pepper and Ms. Todd were preparing the dinner and Tony was talking with Steve and Selina. The boys were watching some animated movie since Alfred punished Dick for his truancy by confiscating his tablet, smartphone and video games for the Christmas holidays. Hero was sprawled half asleep in front of the fully burning fireplace.

It was Christmas Eve and darkness had fallen all over making the grounds seem taken out of a fairytale under the light blue hue the tiny lights emanated hidden between the branches and the leaves.

Bruce wanted to stop his mind from thinking. What happened with Quinn; the fact that the man had an odd aura on him; the fact that he had been watching him while sleeping…

When he returned to the Manor that night it was past midnight; Alfred was waiting and once he heard the car rushed to help him.
“You should have called me, sir, to drive you home.”

“No need, Alfred” he waved that off but looked at him. “Why you let me in Quinn’s suite?”

“I thought that you wouldn’t like all these reporters making a fuss about the butler taking you back home unconscious… I didn’t want to let you to someone else’s attention but Mr. Quinn isn’t a criminal and Master Anthony was watching the suite all the time – just in case. Are you alright, sir?”

He nodded not wanting to drag more on the matter.

The knot in Bruce’s stomach and throat had grown more…despite the fact he had completed his checklist calling Cassandra and Ms. Kent It was Christmas’ Eve. He didn’t want to think of the one who was away; who had promised him that he’d be here with him – how things would have been if Clark was there.

He pressed his lips: he shouldn’t even think about Clark because his loved ones didn’t deserve to see him miserable while they were doing everything to cheer him up. He just hoped that Clark would have a Merry Christmas wherever he was; that he would be with his mother because Bruce doubted that Vivian would care to celebrate Christmas and even if she did it wouldn’t be the same. With his mother Clark would be closer to his human side and would give happiness to Martha. Did Kansas have snow?

And then his mind travelled back to a rooftop of an abandoned building filled with snow; a small, warm attic decorated simply but beautiful by a little girl. A little girl that provided him turkey and dessert; and a kitten who played at his feet; and then two orphan children playing snow fighting and making snow angels on the snow; the blackout that made all the stars in the sky visible… His Christmas miracle.

A gentle hand on his shoulder brought him back. He turned smiling to see Selina who squatted by his side.

“I know you have imagined this Christmas different…with him here…” she said softly.

Bruce shook his head.

“No, Sel: I’m happy I’m among all of you – here, in my parents’ home” he took her hand and intertwined their fingers kissing the back of her palm. “But there’s no snow…” he mumbled.

Selina shrugged.

“Who knows? It might start snowing…it’s freezing outside and the sky has that milky color. Maybe it does us the favor” she winked “but even if it doesn’t snow we still have a great time, right?”

Bruce’s smile was wide and reached his eyes giving them shine.

“Absolutely! Though…hm…” Selina narrowed her eyes smiling “you know what I’d want, Sel? To visit our rooftop, remember?” he locked eyes with her and she pressed her lips.

“How could I forget, sweetie?”

“You gave me the greatest gift, Selina, that night: a miracle…”

She lolled her head to the side.
“The blackout did help a lot…”

Bruce gazed at the grounds and the sweet melody of Tony’s angel on the tree’s top melt his heart.

“So we can go there, Sel?” he chuckled “I’d like to make snow angels even if they would have only hands…it seems that the snow angels of that rooftop are meant to be disabled…”

Selina chuckled.

“They demolished that building, sweetie, a couple of years ago…I’m sorry.”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“We must look only ahead, huh? Everything we love is deep in our hearts…alive…”

Selina’s eyes watered though Bruce had spoken completely calm.

“What?” he asked and caressed the liquid on her cheeks.

“Nothing…just that we are together in a warm place, with people we love, safe…without worrying about the time or if anyone is watching.”

“Who could imagine, huh?”

The bell of the front door rang and Tony went to open, Bruce leaning to see their visitor though he already knew that it must be Lucius.

“What smells so deliciously?” the scientist asked. “That’s embarrassing: my mouth already salivates…I feel like Pavlov’s dogs!”

Tony lolled his head on the side.

“Hm…You do bare some resemblance, Lucius…and I was always wonder what do you remind me of?”

Lucius chuckled.

“While Tony is like a polar bear” Bruce commented having moved towards them to welcome his loyal scientist. “Some days ago he caused panic in the Mall with his white fur…”

Bruce shook hands with a beaming Lucius while Selina chuckled and Tony lolled his head on the side scratching his hair.

“Few people can appreciate art…” he huffed.

“What art has to do with pure kitsch?” Selina teased him.

“As you see, Lucius, I’m between friendly fire…What can a genius do?”

Lucius cocked an eyebrow.

“Relax and enjoy it?” he winked.

Tony nodded.

“As always you’re right, my friend!”
They led Lucius to salon where Alfred came to serve some of his homemade liquor with orange flavor.

Clark approached the farm house hesitantly: the last time he was here he exchanged bitter words with his Ma and they hadn’t spoken since then. But it was Christmas Eve and Clark just couldn’t bear the thought of his Ma being completely alone to a house full of happy memories…And maybe he couldn’t bear to spend that night far from her.

Beside Diana wasn’t giving much credit to Christmas and she was invited to a reception at Washington. Superman was invited too but he said that there was something too important that he couldn’t leave.

The blinking tiny lights of the old Christmas tree that he was seeing as he was approaching became even clearer; from the small window of the living room. How many times he slept there hoping that he’d catch Santa Claus? But Jonathan always found a way to slip the presents without the Kryptonian with the super senses being able to catch him on act.

He remembered the evenings after the school closed for the holidays that he and his friends ran around in the decorated town and the winter countryside…Clark inhaled deeply the glorious scent of grass, icy air and burnt pine wood along with the smells from the delicacies his mother was cooking with Jonathan’s help.

The same smells hit his nose again: he had come flying yet he was in Clark Kent clothes. Still he hesitated to ascend the wooden steps because Ma would certainly hear him and he didn’t know if he deserved to be with her – even though he felt good about his choices.

Suddenly, the door opened and Martha came out. She halted for a moment looked at him and rush to hug him: *he is your son…you must never stop being there for him…*Bruce’s words echoed in her ears. The young man had called her to give her his wishes and urged her to spend the holidays with Clark: Martha could discern Bruce’s concern, Bruce’s agony to not spend Clark the Christmas alone.

She cupped her son’s face and kissed his cheeks.

“I knew you’d come, baby…” she said in a throaty voice.

“I couldn’t be away from you that day, Ma…”

“The dinner will be served in a few minutes” Alfred announced “so the young Masters and the very young Masters” he looked sternly at Dick and Jason “should get ready.”

However Bruce noticed the same blur in the air that told him that someone was out there so he took advantage of the fact that everyone rushed to the dining room and got out. Upon descending the ramp he felt like being somewhere else: quiet, relaxing, beautiful as the artificial little lights and the nature hugged him.

“You shouldn’t have come out without a coat” the blur took the form of Thor.

Bruce shook his head.

“I’m fine – besides we’ll go inside. Come!”
Thor smiled with Bruce’s kindness; his baby blues sparkling.

“No, I just dropped by to ask your pardon.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“Pardon?”

“I failed you” the god said touching his fist to his heart. “I had Joker and let him get away: it was Loki – I know – who took him. I was searching for Loki all these days but he knows how to hide himself and his palace.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Thor, you didn’t fail me in any way. Joker knows how to escape and with Loki’s help is even easier for him. Yet I think it’s better you didn’t find your brother because this way we’ll be able to find out if he has any connection to…” he halted thinking.

“To what, Bruce?”

“To the bigger scheme I sense…” Bruce said dead serious meeting the god’s stare.

“Master Bruce, come inside immediately” it was Alfred on the door already rushing there with a coat stretched that immediately put on his young master. “Oh, master Thor…” he pressed his lips uncertain “I’m not sure how a butler must address a god…”

Bruce couldn’t halt himself and started laughing. Thor laughed too.

“You can call me whatever you want, Alfred.”

“You certainly will join us” Alfred said in a voice that couldn’t take no for an answer.

Bruce smiled and shrugged.

“Now you can’t refuse…” he said playfully and the god smiled which smile became broader and Bruce’s eyes bulged in a kid’s way when one snowflake sat softly on Thor’s chest. “It’s snowing!”

More snowflakes began falling increasingly thicker and Alfred patted his young master’s shoulder.

“Master Thor brought snow with him…” Bruce looked at the blond who blushed. “Now please do come inside because the turkey is going to get cold and you, Master Bruce, as well.”

The dinner consisted of every delicacy that was a tradition for Alfred – especially, the famous Pennyworth cake made everyone get two pieces. And the view of the snow falling heavily from the wall length unframed window made everything more beautiful.

When the dinner ended, Dick took Jason to a corner.

“I can’t be with them anymore…” he mumbled.

Leslie stood and looked at Alfred.

“I can’t wait till tomorrow, Alfred!”

Alfred shook his head like saying I know and waved to her to go ahead.
She went to the tree and took a small present wrapped in silver paper with a light blue ribbon and gave it to Bruce.

“This is why I was absent all this time: to prepare this…” he kissed his cheek and Bruce untied the ribbon opening the present.

It was a leather case for a DVD. He looked puzzled at both Alfred and Leslie but everyone was doing the same.

“Well?” Leslie asked anxious.

Bruce put it inside the DVD player and it started.

Martha Wayne stood by the Christmas tree: she was like Bruce remembered her with the difference that she had a baby bump really huge. It must have been difficult for her to move around with that burden but she was laughing, her face radiating as she made gestures to Thomas who was holding the camera.

“Next year it won’t be so easy for you, Tommy” she said playfully. “We’ll have a tiny rascal messing with everything…”

“Maybe he’ll be a quiet kid.”

“Nah…he is kicking me all the time: he is active and strong and he is in a hurry to see the world…” she caressed her belly. “Easy, Bruce: are you so hasty to part with mommy?”

Thomas giggled.

“You are already calling him by name?”

“Why? You agreed to that name…”

The camera was left on the table and Thomas’ legs appeared as he rushed to his wife who laughed.

“Not in front of Bruce…” she teased him.

Then the font changed to a screen in black and white with a fetus almost fully grown sucking his thumb inside his mother’s womb – the sound of his heart beating the only sound in the silent room.

“You see him?” Leslie several years younger asked happily.

“Yes…” Martha and Thomas who held the same camera answered in unison.

“He is healthy and strong” Leslie said as the image changed slightly with her soft ministrations on Martha’s belly.

“He is…My little angel is strong…he is perched in his mommy’s belly and won’t let go…” her voice was choked in tears both happy and sad.

Thomas hugged her shoulders.

“This time everything will go alright, honey…”

Martha dressed in a red, fluffy night robe was sat in a high backed armchair in front of the fireplace, the fire the only light in the dark salon; she wasn’t aware of Thomas with the camera because she was singing with her sweet voice a lullaby – Bruce’s favorite lullaby. The camera zoomed and showed what she was holding.

A really small baby, hardly one month old was nestled in her chest watching her fascinated mirroring her stare. She tapped his tiny nose.

“He is so cute…” Pepper said sighing.

“She says that to me all the time” Tony bragged thought his eyes were a bit watered.

“Sleep, my little star…Mommy is here and won’t let anyone ruin your dreams…Mommy won’t let anyone hurt you…”

A baby around a year old was scrawling on the thick carpet of the grand salon so fast as if he was competing in a race.

“Alfred, are you sure that we got every dangerous thing out of his reach?” Martha asked worried.

“Certainly, Ms. Wayne.”

“No…, no…Bruce, don’t grab the lights of the tree…”

Thomas chuckled.

“And you worried about the pregnancy pounds, darling…Our son is putting you under the best training program…”

“Stop laughing and come help…I don’t know if the tree will hold.”

Thomas laughed again.

“It’s a huge tree, Martha: a toddler can’t topple it…”

“I don’t wanna find out” she finally reached Bruce and nestled him in her chest. “Not so fast, Mr. Wayne…”

“Oh my God…” Bruce mumbled unable to stop his eyes from dripping.

“Ya wanna go an’ see?” Jason asked Dick who glanced there.

“No, I have no interest about their nonsense!”

A boy no more than five was hanging glittering balls to the tree staring with widened fascinated eyes.

“He is like a kitten!” Selina chuckled unable to hide her emotions and Steve kissed her cheek.

Tony snorted.

“When we met for the first time I told him that same thing and got a kick on the shin…And he had a strong kick for his age.”

“You want to put the star on the top?” Martha asked.

“I do it every year!” he said and looked at the camera asking from his father help.

“Alfred, please take the camera” Thomas said and soon he was in front of the camera taking Bruce from the armpits and placing him on his shoulders.
Bruce took the star from Martha’s hands and placed it on the top. When Thomas placed him down he made some steps backwards and lolled his head on the side regarding his work.

“Well?” Martha asked serious. “Do you approve?”

“It’s the most beautiful tree!” he exclaimed “but I can do better…”

“And what do you want from Santa?” Thomas’ voice was heard behind the camera.

“To bring gifts to every child in Gotham…” he said dead serious but in the end he pouted.

“I’m sure he’ll do his best, Bruce…”

The little boy looked smartly at his dad.

“You mean you will wear again the Santa Claus’ suit like you did for me last Christmas and go to every house in Gotham?”

Martha giggled and caressed Bruce’s shiny locks.

“Well, Mr. Thomas Wayne?” Martha asked towards the camera challenging.

“Mmm…Bruce, it was the real Santa…I’m too thin to be him, right?”

Martha turned to the little boy.

“He is indeed too thin to be Santa, sweetie; but lately he sports a little beer belly” she shook her head affirming but the boy was smiling wickedly.

“No, I’m not!” Thomas protested.

The next scenes were from Bruce’s last Christmas with his parents and it was exactly as he remembered it: the Cinderella fairytale, Tony’s explanation about Santa Claus, the angel Tony manufactured for their tree.

Pepper laughed.

“Tony, you were a very funny teen…”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“The girl of my class would beg to differ…” he said smugly.

Without anyone noticing Dick with Jason had approached and watched silently: Dick’s curiosity won his detest. Jason at some point elbowed him and gestured towards the screen.

“He looks very much like yar little brother” he whispered and Dick clenched his jaw.

The older boy didn’t answer and left before anyone from the adults noticed him.

Bruce registering for the first time Hero that have climbed on his lap, looked at Leslie and Alfred not bothering to wipe his eyes or his drenched cheeks.

“Thank you – both of you…This…this was great: I couldn’t imagine that…” his voice was choked and Leslie rushed to him and hid him to her chest.

“I’m sure they are smiling happy right now seeing how great their son is…”
Bruce knew that everyone was looking at him and didn’t want to ruin that so he chuckled.

“One thing is sure: my father had an unfulfilled wish to be a director…”

Everyone laughed and Bruce’s mind eyes travelled to two lonely gravestones under the heavy snow falling; in the chill and the loneliness of the night they looked like being cuddled.

The other morning the snow had covered everything and Bruce couldn’t help but stare outside all the time till the Haven. He wanted to be with the orphan children that morning. Those children had shown how much they loved him and he had promised them a party for the Christmas.

So they had organized the party for the Christmas morning where the star would be Santa Claus giving presents to the children.

When the Santa arrived carrying the red sack with the presents Bruce had bought the children gathered around their favorite grandpa cheering and Bruce from the other end of the room with Alfred on his side, once again those days felt recharging from their happiness… He stared at the Santa who was tall and round as he should with a big fluffy white beard and hair.

However all of a sudden, as Santa was giving a boy his present he lolled his head to the side and stared at Bruce who immediately recognized those eyes – the broad smile in Santa’s face revealing the edge of a mark that went under the fake beard.

Bruce’s spine froze and he clenched the armrests ready to order his legs to support his body. He didn’t want to panic Alfred or the children and the staff; but he was terrorized because Joker was there, disguised as Santa and he certainly had prepared something.

Joker was still staring at him smirking and Bruce widened his eyes as a frightened Bruce Wayne would have done. He watched with the corner of his eyes for the moment the Santa would make a movement to draw a blade and hurt the children – some sweat drops popped up on his forehead.

But as the Joker-Santa gave the last present and stood to leave taking advantage of the kids being engaged with their presents no weapon appeared. He just turned his head towards Bruce and winked.

“HOHOHO! Merry Christmas, kids!” Bruce watched relieved and puzzled as the jester slipped out of the building.
Chapter 51

Chapter Notes

Happy New Year!

Bruce was relieved that after the incident with the dead bats’ tree that Joker had slipped into the Manor, they had scanned carefully the packages with the presents for the Haven’s children before giving them to the Santa. Unfortunately, they didn’t manage to scan also Joker who found a way to get inside… Damn! His guts formed a knot as he thought Paul, the actor who was to play the Santa.

Alfred felt his young master’s upset and leaned to him worried.

“What is it, Master Bruce?”

Bruce was ready to rush out of the hall and search for Paul and make sure that Joker hadn’t planted any bombs in the building when Ironman entered the hall from the main entrance flying: a red and gold angel that made the children goggle and cheer excited. Yet Bruce couldn’t share their excitement because his priority was getting his friend’s help.

He tapped his watch to speak with Ironman.

“Tony, can you discreetly scan the building?” he asked calmly to not draw any attention from the members of the staff that was scattered in the room.

“For what?” Tony chuckled. “Sleigh’s bells and reindeers?”

“Bombs and toxins…” Bruce answered dryly and heard a sharp inhale of breath from Tony and Alfred.

“What happened?” Tony asked doing impressive twirls to entertain the kids.

“Master Bruce…”

“Our clown was here” Bruce said quietly avoiding using Joker’s name just in case someone was overhearing.

“Damn!” Tony spat floating over the children’s heads watching at the same time the indicators inside his helmet that displayed the buildings’ blueprint. “No, Bruce, there’s no bomb…neither toxin” relief was clear in his voice.

Bruce clenched his temple; he was relieved but the previous worry was still heavy on him. His mild movement made Alfred rush to the long table to bring some water to his master.

“But there’s a tied up man inside the Mall’s truck” Tony mumbled.

Alfred gave Bruce the glass of water and he sipped looking at his butler with gratitude.

“Is he alright?” he asked Tony calmly.

“Yes, just unconscious.”
Bruce closed his eyes in relief.

“Thank you, Tony!”

“Jarvis tells me that there’s no trace of the clown in the area so we can say that it is safe. Also, the security staff is informed about Paul and they rush there.”

“Yes, safe…” Bruce whispered and Alfred patted his shoulder.

When the children left the building to play with the snow followed by their teachers Tony found the chance to come to Bruce; the billionaire from Malibu had dissolved Ironman’s suit and stayed with his casual, jeans, blouse and jacket attire. He looked at Alfred’s pale face: only this color betrayed the man’s worry since otherwise the butler was completely poised.

“Are you alright?” he asked Bruce.

Bruce nodded.

“He came with no intention to harm anyone including me” it was the answer to Tony.

Tony widened his eyes in disbelief.

“Anyone noticed him?”

“No. Joker was dressed and disguised as Santa” Tony pursed his lips baffled. “He gave the presents to the kids; he winked to me and just left. I recognized him before he left but I didn’t say anything because I didn’t want to panic anyone; besides if cornered, joker would definitely have reacted in a way that would endanger the children and the staff; I just watched him dreading that at any moment he’d pull out some blade or…” he shook his head “anything. It’s not that I could do much, couldn’t I?”

Tony rubbed soothing cycles to his friend’s back.

“I know it is difficult, little guy, but you must think your recuperation” he searched with his eyes Bruce’s face and it wasn’t difficult to discern his friend’s emotional exhaustion from this continuous state: Tony’s hatred for the Joker was boiling more because his stupid game upset Bruce and tempted him to do something detrimental for his health. “You did the right thing, buddy, for you and the others” he said warmly wanting to encourage his friend since he understood how difficult this constant fight was.

Tony looked at Alfred and understood that he was thinking the same things.

“What did he want?” he asked mostly to bring Bruce out of his thoughts.

“To play with me…” the younger man shook his head. “Show me that it’s easy for him to get near breeching my security and that he could make horrible things if he wanted…But he didn’t. For him it’s just a game so he does whatever comes to his head.”

Tony squatted in front of him and held his shoulders.

“Also, that this is just a truce and after that he’ll be near…” Bruce said gritting his teeth, without looking at Tony’s eyes.

But the billionaire from Malibu took gently Bruce’s chin and made him meet his caring gaze.

“We’re here to stop him; we’ll catch him, Bruce and he won’t hurt anyone.”
Bruce nodded and Alfred pressed his lips: this was the last thing his young master needed; that crazy man haunting him even with Master Anthony’s and the Avengers’ protection.

Bruce smiled and patted his friend’s shoulder.

“When I have you on my side I’m not afraid of anything, Tony.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows but shook his head in disbelief.

“You’re fearless either I’m here or not…Otherwise you wouldn’t insist on going alone to Metropolis. Bruce, I don’t think that you should go alone there.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Oh, Tony, I can’t drag you wherever I’m going…I’m a big boy now, you know!”

“You don’t drag me everywhere, buddy…But we’re talking about Metropolis…”

Bruce laughed.

“You forget that you’re talking with someone born and raised in Gotham? I think that even with a decreased criminality rate Gotham is still more dangerous than Metropolis” Tony closed his eyes and Bruce got serious. “What is worrying you about Metropolis? Luthor or Superman?”

Tony looked Bruce in the eyes.

“Both, the later one more” Bruce crooked his mouth. “If he is under the influence of that woman as you believe then he can be manipulated into hurting you. You can’t be alone, Bruce.”

“I can manage, Tony; I don’t think that he will try anything but even if he does I can protect myself…” his mind’s eyes saw again the Blade of Justice grazing Superman’s upper arm spilling blood.

“I know you are perfect able, Bruce but still I don’t want you to be forced to defend yourself; to exert yourself and maybe get hurt…”

“I won’t, Tony…” he said calm but confident causing Tony’s sigh.

The US national gymnastics team was staying at the Hilton hotel in Gotham’s Midtown. Athletes and trainers had come few days ago to make some training in the city’s sports’ arena – Gotham’s jewel since it was one of the few public buildings that were built during Falcone’s era (of course, the corruption committee found that the mayor had defalcated a large part of the money for the project).

It wasn’t much time since Trevor Breizic returned from the team’s last training before the gala and he had just changed clothes when the receptionist called informing him that Bruce Wayne was waiting for him at the hotel’s conference hall.

The man was puzzled, intrigued: of course everyone knew Bruce Wayne’s story and Breizic’s place in the national federation permitted him to know that this charity gala was proposed and organized by the Wayne Foundation.

But still if there was some matter concerning the gala’s preparation the old trainer doubted that Mr. Wayne would discuss it himself and with someone like him; he was a Scouter and a trainer so he had very little to do with organizing such events.
Upon pushing the door, Breizic saw the young man waiting for him sat in his wheelchair, deep in thought but as soon as the door opened and closed, Bruce steered his chair to meet the trainer. It was obvious to Bruce that Breizic was puzzled about Bruce’s visit yet shook politely the hand that he was offered.

“Mr. Breizic, I’m honored to meet you – I’m Bruce Wayne.”

The man smiled.

“I know who you are, Mr. Wayne: it is a pleasure meeting you’’ his Slavic accent was distinct despite his decades of living in US.

Breizic sat at one of the dark red velvet conference chairs and looked at Bruce.

“I know you’re wondering about the reason I wanted to meet you” Bruce said.

“As a matter of fact…yes. I thought that someone with your status would meet with the president of the federation or someone related with the management. I’m just a trainer.”

Bruce decided to get immediately to the point.

“Do you know Richard Grayson?”

Breizic pursed his lips and crossed his arms.

“John Grayson’s son…” he nodded. “Yes, I have seen him at the gym those days but we didn’t meet.”

“I see…Mr. Breizic, I’m Richard’s legal guardian.”

The older man nodded with understanding.

“So that’s the reason this charity gala is going to happen…” he said. “Till now nobody in Gotham seemed to care or dare to propose something like this… not that the Federation would have agreed with Gotham’s reputation… But now that someone as great as you proposed it things changed” he lolled slightly his head on the side. “And of course you got the idea because your ward is a gymnast: this is your Christmas present to the boy.”

Bruce’s eyes were too serious and Breizic was puzzled.

“Richard doesn’t know anything about my involvement and I’d like to remain like this. I admit that I did it for Richard but it is another good opportunity for Gotham to reclaim her position between the other US cities.”

The older man nodded pressing his lips.

“I know that this was one of the reasons that also urged the Federation to accept the invitation” he cocked his eyebrows “to encourage the youth of Gotham to consider sports more than delinquency.”

Suddenly, a thought crossed his mind and the old trainer frowned slightly.

“I know that Richard lost his family last year but he had a grandmother…”

Bruce nodded.

“She disappeared some days ago; however Ms. Turner had trust me with Richard’s guardianship.”
“I see… Losing his grandmother must have been another blow to the poor kid – nevertheless, it is a good thing he has a guardian as considerate as you.”

“The reason I wanted to talk to you, Mr. Breizic is that Ms. Turner was worried about Tony Zucco’s sudden appearance in Richard’s life” Bruce noticed Breizic’s nervousness hearing Zucco’s name; the man had a cold demeanor but the mentioning of Zucco caused the slightest of twitch which for someone like him was much.

“So…he came back…” he mumbled.

“You don’t like this man either…” Bruce searched the man’s icy gray eyes.

A bitter smile curved the man’s face.

“Like?” he shook his head. “The man is a scum. I hoped that he’d stay away from that family once he made so much money from John.”

“But he didn’t. Mr. Breizic; Ms. Turner told me that John Grayson was ready to fire him from his training team; that Tony Zucco had made him lose all his money and probably was responsible for John’s doping scandal.”

Breizic yanked his head and huffed.

“That’s true. John loved and trusted him but Zucco made him lose all his money and then the doping scandal was the final blow: John was sure that Zucco had slipped forbidden drugs in his water and asked me to become again his head trainer.”

“And you accepted though John had pushed you away because of Zucco.”

Breizic folded his arms and smiled shaking his head.

“John was my favorite athlete… I was very disappointed when he chose Zucco over me because I could see through that man and I was sure that he would destroy John…I admit I was bit pissed that he crossed me out like this” he met Bruce’s eyes “John’s move wasn’t good for my career…” he yanked his head thinking “but when he came back to me having realized the truth and his mistake, I couldn’t refuse his call.”

“And then the accident claimed his life…”

Breizic rubbed his temple.

“Accident…” he said in a mysterious tone.

“You don’t believe it was an accident?”

He shook his head.

“Nothing was proved…not that there was any chance for that… It was Falcone’s era and the police didn’t give a damn about the death of an athlete: they tagged the case as an accident and closed the file.”

It was true that there wasn’t much in the case’s file as Bruce had found out searching GCPD’s archive.

“This is the reason you never came back in Gotham?”
Breizic closed his eyes and inhaled deeply.

“John was excited about the coming of his baby…and he died without having the chance to meet his son…he died prematurely and in a way…”

Bruce found the man’s eyes.

“It wasn’t an accident, right?”

“I can’t say that, Mr. Wayne…But John had confided in me that he was going to sue his cousin for fraud for the money he lost – you see, Zucco made real profit from the same investment that John lost his money.”

“You suspect that Zucco staged the accident?”

“He was the one who suggested the company that renovated the organs of the gym: he always managed to have good relationships and influence with the directors…The…accident happened one day after the new equipment arrived. I found screw cork from the bar: John was rehearsing his performance on the Horizontal bar” Bruce nodded “he was doing the most difficult of the time, giant swing and it seemed that he failed to grasp the bar again and fell badly on the ground…”

“Breaking his neck…” Bruce added and the older man nodded.

“It was tragic: everyone in the team was devastated” he snorted “Zucco of course overacted as always… People believed that it was a usual miscalculation that led to this but I was sure that John performed it perfectly as always: I knew every movement’s ankle, degree, second and these dimensions of John’s performance didn’t justify the missing of the bar…otherwise I would have run to catch him. And then I found the screw and it was filed so that with every bump the bar was moved the slightest bit…and in such difficult performances even the milimetres count…in the end, the bar had moved so that John’s fingers didn’t reach…” he stood. “Of course, after all these years who can prove anything?”

“Mr. Breizic, why didn’t you take the screw to the police?”

He smiled bitterly.

“I did but they laughed at me…”

“You have this screw?”

Breizic frowned.

“Are you hoping of reopening the case and proving…what?”

Bruce pressed his lips determined.

“I won’t let Zucco harm Dick as he did with John.”

“Zucco has woven his net around the boy?”

Bruce nodded and locked eyes with him.

“Mr. Breizic, what would you say if I ask you to become an advisor to Richard’s training? Of course, you’ll remain to your post in the Federation and you’ll be paid for your services.”

Breizic raised his palm smiling and Bruce was afraid that he had said something wrong.
“I don’t want any money, Mr. Wayne: let’s say that I owe it to John…yet I don’t know if I’ll manage to minimize the influence Zucco has to the boy.”

Bruce smiled relieved.

“It’d be much reassuring for me if you’re close to Richard: he’ll be so happy meeting his father’s trainer: he is thirsty to know things about his father…everything.”

Breizic smiled and his icy eyes became much warmer seeing the concern in the younger man’s eyes.

“You care too much for the boy…Richard is lucky…I’ll consider your proposition, Mr. Wayne.”

He turned to leave but Bruce halted him.

“Mr. Breizic” the old trainer turned “please, don’t say anything to Richard about my involvement.”

The older man grinned and nodded.

“You can rest assured, Mr. Wayne.”

On the night of 27th of December, Gotham’s Sports’ Arena was filled to capacity from enthusiastic people who cheered and applauded for their idols. It was the first time ever that the US national gymnastics’ team performed in the city and the fact the event was for charity reinforced people’s interest. The interior was decorated plainly to the holidays’ spirit.

The stadium was vibrating from the music that dressed the athletes’ performances and from the exclamations of agony and admiration every time a breathtaking exercise was taking place.

However, for Bruce watching Dick performing on the Horizontal Bar was the most agonizing. For each athlete of the national team, a local talent followed, and now it was Dick’s turn.

“It is difficult every time…” Alfred said smirking. “Maybe now you’d be more sympathetic to my worries?”

Bruce lolled his head on the side.

“It’s not the same, Alfred.”

They were a bit easier to talk because Jason and his mother had sat at the bleachers along with Selina and Steve while he and Alfred stood in a corner near the performance space.

“Yes, with all due respect, sir, with you it is worse!”

Bruce rolled his eyes and Alfred chuckled.

As Dick’s performance reached the end with the boy landing strongly on his feet, Bruce steered his chair towards the isle the athletes crossed after their performance to the shower rooms; he had noticed Breizic on the other corner of the terrain watching Dick rubbing his chin thoughtful – maybe the man had taken his decision.

The audience burst out in a deafening applause Bruce looked at Dick’s beaming, radiant face as he waved to the spectators; his heart beat faster.

“That’s pride, Master Bruce” Alfred winked.
Dick descended from the terrain to the isle with Jeffrey’s arm around his shoulders: the boy’s eyes were sparkling from joy and Bruce standing there to congratulate him felt happy too.

Dick upon seeing him, detached from Jeffrey and ran passing Bruce with an almost hostile glance to nestle into Zucco’s hug who was waiting. Bruce knew the man was there watching but he chose not make a scene and kick him out first because it was a public place and then because Dick was going to find out and things would get worse.

However watching the boy’s love and joy in his uncle’s hug made Bruce’s chest clench because he knew that the boy was up for a big disappointment once the truth was revealed.

Alfred leaned to Bruce’s ear.

“I’m sorry, Master Bruce” he said hiding his irritation because that boy was constantly causing pain to his master.

“It’s okay, Alfred…”

Zucco was staring at Bruce with a gleeful shine when suddenly his face contorted in surprise. Breizic with Jeffrey marched towards Dick.

Bruce looked at Alfred and then at the scene. Breizic under Zucco’s frown congratulated Dick and patted his back.

“I’m Trevor Breizic, Richard, your father’s trainer.”

Dick’s eyes were widened.

“I know, sir…I mean…you’re a legend!”

Zucco’s mouth was crooked in disgust.

“Like your father” the old man said. “And believe me when I say: he would be very proud of his son – your talent, Richard, parallels that of John’s.”

“Of course…” Zucco tried to gain Dick’s attention back but the boy had eyes only for the old man who didn’t waste even a glance to Zucco.

“I talked to Jeffrey, Richard, and if you want, I’ll gladly participate to your training from a advisory position.”

Dick’s eyes bulged and his mouth stayed agape.

“Wow! I mean…of course…I mean…it is an honor, sir. Thank you…I…I’ll do my best!”

Breizic smiled and patted the boy’s back.

“I know you will. Now go change before you get a cold.”

The boy galloped to the showers soon joined by Jason who caught him: the older boy hugged the younger and twirled him. He had forgotten in his excitement to greet Zucco who glared at Breizic and Jeffrey but didn’t say anything. He marched to the other direction and passed by Bruce who was watching calm. Zucco glared at him panting from his rage and was ready to say something but Alfred looked at him cocking an eyebrow.

“Is everything alright, sir? Do you need something?”
Zucco spat on the floor and rushed outside.

“Some people need to learn some manners” Alfred commented to Bruce who nodded.

Breizic cast a meaningful glance at Bruce but didn’t approach respecting Bruce’s wish for discretion. Alfred caught that glance and turned to his master raising his eyebrows.

“Things came as you wanted them, sir…” Bruce smiled. “Can your humble butler ask you something?”

The youth looked him puzzled.

“Alfred, do you need to ask?”

Alfred bowed slightly his head.

“Let me come with you to Metropolis, sir…” Bruce lolled his head on the side pressing his lips. “After your collapse at the hospital and your rapid sleeping I don’t feel alright leaving you alone.”

Bruce took Alfred’s hand in his.

“I’ll be fine, Alfred; besides, I don’t want Dick staying alone.”

Alfred wasn’t satisfied but he didn’t want to insist; Bruce felt bad for his butler’s worry but he really wanted to go by himself in Metropolis. He patted the back of Alfred’s palm.

“You will call me every fifteen minutes, after all… I know you will” he smiled “and I’ll stay only two days.”

Alfred raised his index finger sternly.

“I hope you don’t have anything naughty in that stubborn mind of yours…”

Bruce chuckled.

“Alfred…How can you say this? You know me…”

His butler shook his head and sighed.

“Exactly, sir…”

The LexCorp building stood impressive in the middle of Metropolis’ center; it was made entirely with glistening titanium glass so it sparkled like a gem under the Metropolis sun.

Metropolis didn’t have any snow and despite the heavy cold the sun was still shining.

Bruce gazed at the building from his car’s inside before turning towards the entrance of the underground parking. He had travelled to the city with his car; it was the safest way to bring along his peculiar luggage: nobody could open the doors or the trunk of this car.

The white-red bar descended blocking his path and the security guy raised his palm in a stop gesture; however when Bruce lowered the dark window to show his ID the man cleared immediately the way for him.
Bruce was prepared for the option of someone posing objections on letting him.

He parked the car having already seen Mercy Graves with her arms folded waiting for him in front of the steel colored wide lift. Bruce opened, placed his chair on the floor and sat; before he made a move towards the lift, Graves marched to him almost aggressively.

“Good morning, Mr. Wayne” she said coldly but politely; completely unfazed by the fact that she was part of his kidnapping by Luthor. “I’m here to guide you to the conference room: Mr. Luthor didn’t want you to be lost inside the building.”

Bruce smiled confidently, mirroring her mask.

“Thank you but there wasn’t any need for that…I can find my way.”

Mercy cocked her eyebrows.

“Oh! I’m sure…Shall we?” she made an inviting gesture and Bruce grinned moving ahead to the lift.

He hadn’t the chance to see the other floors but the Christmas decorations were scarce in the top floor where Luthor’s office and the conference room were. It seemed that Luthor wasn’t in celebrating mood…

The conference room was really gargantuan with nothing more than a long rectangular table made of glass and steel and the chairs for the members. The whole wall windows gave a spectacular view of the Metropolis’ skyline.

The table wasn’t full yet as the shareholders kept coming but Luthor was there sitting at the chair in the table’s head with all his arrogance radiating. His time in jail may have had an impact in his pride but he hid it too well.

Mercy made an inviting gesture with lot of irony in her face to Bruce and he keeping his poised face slithered calmly inside. He noticed with the corner of his eye Luthor jumping to his feet hasty to meet him; Bruce smirked inside: of course, Luthor was going to try to harass him. Well, he really looked forward to it: facing an opponent always raised Bruce’s mood.

Luthor stood in front of him grinning smugly.

“Mr. Wayne! How nice of you to come! I was sure that you wouldn’t grace us with your presence now that your local protector ‘protects’ someone else” he raised an eyebrow. “Or IronStark is floating over my building?”

Bruce smiled calmly.

“Is that so?” he answered sarcastic. “I don’t see something that I must be afraid of or you think otherwise? As for protectors, I don’t understand what do you mean but I’m certain you know better about protectors…especially, those who move the strings so that convicts are released.”

Some of the present shareholders were looking at them listening with interest.

“No handshake?” Bruce asked mock perplexed. “I know that in front of people you use to act politely…Even if that changes inside your suite.”

Luthor narrowed his eyes and offered his hand which Bruce shook.

“I see the L has vanished from your cheek…” he hissed. “Too bad… it suit you…Plastic surgery?”
Bruce chuckled.

“There was no need for that… It fainted too fast: you see, Mr. Luthor, you’re not as strong as you brag. May I?” he asked gesturing to the conference table.

Luthor fumed but made space for him.

“We’re not finished, Wayne…” he said from his clenched teeth.

Bruce smiled confidently.

“Of course not! I’m the owner of the 20% of LexCorp.”

Bruce steered his chair to the table and one shareholder that Bruce knew was Mr. Scales took the metallic chair away to make space for Bruce’s chair. The youth smiled and thanked him.

“Good morning, ladies and gentlemen” Bruce addressed the shareholders who were present. “I’m honored to meet you.”

They weren’t very warm but typically kind so they greeted Bruce accordingly much to Luthor’s wrath. And maybe that was the reason the shareholders spoke nice to Bruce: their distaste for Luthor was more than evident.

Which came out immediately after the board table were full and the doors closed.

“LexCorp is in the worst place in its history!” a young shareholder shouted at Luthor.

“We have lost loads of money and our shares are now junks!”

Luthor’s eyes were completely still, piercing the wall opposite him, his breath held.

“Because of him” he hissed showing with his head at Bruce.

However the younger man shook his head completely calm.

“Hardly. It was the company’s president’s actions that led to the rapid fall of the shares; on the contrary, LexLabs of which I have the control show healthy numbers and lately they began increasing their shares’ value in the markets.”

An elder shareholder who was watching carefully Bruce speaking shook his head.

“Yes, Mr. Wayne, but LaxLabs can’t be considered LexCorp anymore…”

Bruce smirked inside seeing with the corner of his eye Luthor’s brow crease: LexLabs was his baby and the lost had cost him more so when people rubbed it in his face.

“I just want to point out, Mr. Peabody” that was the name of the elder shareholder who seemed impressed by Bruce’s knowledge “that attributing LexCorp’s crisis to me is ridiculous.”

Peabody smiled.

“Of course, Mr. Wayne: the fate of a company is and mirrors its president’s responsibility.”

Luthor locked eyes with Bruce.

“Don’t you dare change the name of LexLabs!”
A whisper crossed the seats of the meeting table: everyone remembered the video showing Luthor abusing Bruce and now their president manifested again his aggressiveness like a common thug. However Bruce was completely calm.

“Oh! I assure you, Lex, that I don’t have such intention: you see, I want people to remember LexLabs’ past and compare it with the present and the future” he knitted his brows. “However I think that a change of name would be a blessing for you because that way you wouldn’t be reminded all the time about the way your powerful allies led you to losing your jewel.”

Luthor clenched his fist.

“Soon LexLabs will be mine again!”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“If you rely on another powerful ally for that I’d suggest you remember what happened just a few months ago…” he lolled his head “besides why you’d want to take the labs back? To return them to shady business?”

Many of the shareholders murmured their agreement infuriating Luthor.

“LexCorp will regain its previous grandiose – it’s a matter of time and then any parasite will be banished once and for all!” Luthor slapped his hand on the table.

Bruce locked eyes with him completely serious.

“Arrogance never helped anyone, Mr. Luthor: you should have learnt your lesson by now…”

When the meeting ended with Luthor reaffirming his presidency Bruce returned to his hotel. Bruce didn’t expect that Luthor would lose his rule in the company but he was satisfied because he had seen the building from inside making sure that there were no changes to the blueprints he had hacked.

He moved his chair through the vast foyer of the hotel: the temptation was pushing him towards the reception hall in the ground floor though he wasn’t sure if it was the right thing to do. It was his fault he faced that dilemma because when he asked Alfred to make reservations there he knew the ceremony would take place there.

It seems that he wanted to be there even from afar to witness Clark’s awarding… His heart was pounding as he was approaching and the battle inside him was roaring; something ordered him to turn his back and not even cast a glimpse. But he desired to see him…

The event was like a party and the joyful fuss flooded the entire roof. Bruce reached the open door and looked with his breath having stopped.

The always bad dressed Clark Kent had tried to look more elegant without reaching the point of being recognized; his jacket was still a bit oversized to look as if it was borrowed by a friend and his square huge glasses a bit askew to hide his beautiful blue topaz eyes. Bruce felt his chest clenched painfully watching Clark clutching the frame with his prize making the photographers frenzied to take his pictures.

Bruce noticed that despite the fact he was in full Clark Kent mode the blushing over his cheeks wasn’t real like in the past – he could discern what was real and fake in Clark and he was sure that Lois who leaned on a corner watching with crossed arms noticed too.

In the hall all of Clark’s colleagues from Planet were present and of course Perry who was radiating from pride since this was the second Pulitzer for the Planet. The only one absent was Diana… Vivian… Bruce shook his head: of course, Clark wouldn’t have told her the truth about his daily profession afraid of losing her respect since he knew her opinions about humans. Bruce felt bad for Clark because he couldn’t share his victory with his loved one…

But above all Bruce felt so proud seeing everyone applauding for Clark; he was so happy himself that his face muscles formed a radiant smile without even noticing.

The other winners took their prizes before Clark and now the ceremony became a party with people storming to the buffets and forming companies. Clark was welcomed to every company and was never left alone.

At least, he still didn’t lose his connection with humans… Bruce thought and turned his chair to leave unnoticed as he had come.

He was almost at the lift when he heard footsteps behind him… footsteps he knew so well. Bruce closed his eyes and his heart dropped: he saw Superman floating again before his bedroom’s window with red angry eyes.

“Bruce” he didn’t turn and continued his course to the lift.

But Clark easily caught up and stood before him. Their eyes met.

“I didn’t expect to see you here…”

Bruce lolled his head.

“It is a hotel and I had to stay somewhere to attend the LexCorp’s annual board meeting.”

Clark nodded: as a journalist he knew all about that.

“I saw you watching when I received the prize…”

Bruce wanted to bite his lips: Clark of course could identify his vitals but he wasn’t sure that he still would be interested in doing so.

“I heard the fuss and approached…”

Clark smiled and Bruce’s heartbeat elevated before he ordered it to calm in order for Clark not noticing.

“So… you want to tell me that it was random?” he asked smugly.

“Of course not” Bruce wasn’t going to lie.

And Clark realizing became serious.

“Mmm… yes… I… I took your email congratulating me… By the way congratulations on the Person of the Year award.”

“Thank you.”

“I’m sure you celebrated with all your friends as I’m going to do with Diana…” he smirked.
“Well, I must be going” Bruce said but Clark thwarted him.

“I saw your smile before…You need to smile more, Bruce…”

“Mind your own business” he spat.

But Clark clutched his upper arm. Bruce cast him a glare and Clark remembering the bruises he had made to the human released him.

“Why are you here, Bruce?” he asked suspiciously. “If you wanted you could have remained unnoticed even by my senses but you didn’t. You came on purpose to create a breach between me and Diana.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes that flashed like thunders.

“No, I just came to applause for you because you deserved that prize. But I don’t want you back: I was the one that kicked you out, remember? Happy New Year, Clark!” he maneuvered his chair bypassing him to the lift.

Clark was ready to follow but the lift’s doors opened and people came out so it’d be awkward if Clark Kent chased Bruce Wayne. What for after all? His mind travelled to Diana and his body shivered from anticipation: he turned his back and returned to the party.

Batman had easily breeched the security system of the LexCorp building; he had entered the space at the building where the secret archives were safely stashed: he hoped to find something explaining the usage of the odd items they had found at the labs and anything concerning the creation of embryos from DNA. The idea of his children somewhere in the world was always in the back of his mind. Of course, he had the option of interrogating Luthor, however that would reveal that someone was suspecting them and Batman didn’t want that.

LexCorp building was the second place he visited that night. First, he broke and entered the building of Mannheim’s enterprises.

Now he was gazing at the sparkling city of Metropolis from the rooftop of LexCorp’s building. His work there was finished and he breathed the clean, cool air of the winter sky – some distance away at Metropolis’ central square sounds of music, songs and laughter filled the air.

It was the annual party for bidding farewell to the year: Metropolis’ tradition was to hold two parties – one at December 29th for the year that was leaving and one in 31st to welcome the New Year. Batman had not the luxury of sharing people’s joy not that Bruce Wayne had…

He missed the thick snow of Gotham yet here away from his friends he was free to don the cowl and settle some businesses without having people worried. Of course, he knew that Alfred was suspicious yet his loyal butler couldn’t insist on coming along.

He heard the movement of the air and Batman didn’t need more to understand; he made to leave but a force gentle but unyielding carried him him to the wall.

Batman’s lenses locked with Superman’s blue eyes.

“You banned Superman from Gotham but you act in Metropolis – my city. Double standards?”

Batman yanked his head.
“It’s Gotham’s business” he growled.

Bruce felt the urge to push to escape remembering that night that Superman used him in the most brutal way… however this time Superman’s body glued to him without any aggressiveness and frankly Bruce would prefer it if there was aggressiveness in this body because then his own body would focus on that last night and not on the moments of pleasure this body gave him.

“You know that you shouldn’t wonder like this…” Superman whispered to his artificial ears “it is too dangerous – you may get injured again.”

“Mind your own business” Batman retorted through gritted teeth.

Superman however leaned closer to his face and his lips almost touched Batman’s exposed skin inhaling deeply.

“I hate that this armor doesn’t let your body’s perfume off…” his lips came even closer and Batman almost closed his eyes because his body shivered remembering the times Superman had kissed him. “I missed you…and I know you missed me too…otherwise you wouldn’t have come to the ceremony…”

Superman almost captured Batman’s lips which craved to be kissed yet Bruce won himself and the Man of Steel twitched a bit looking perplexed into the emotionless lenses and then at his left ribs. He smiled: the Blade of Justice was touching his skin ready to cut. He looked again at Batman’s clenched jaw.

“I still have the mark on my upper arm…” he smirked but then turned to Bruce’s face. “We still can be together…Diana won’t object.”

“But I will! Back off!” Batman growled determined and Superman feeling the peak of the dagger pricking his rib relented a bit. “Look elsewhere for a mistress!”

He slipped away from him but Superman flew in front of him. Batman showed him the dagger warningly causing his smirk.

“I can find you, Batman: you can’t hide from me…”

Batman didn’t show anything just walked to the edge of the rooftop and jumped stretching his arms turning his cape into wings. Superman’s eyes shone gleefully and he took off with a smirk brushing his face.

“If you want to play hide and seek…You can’t hide from Superman…”

But suddenly he realized that he couldn’t locate the man even by using his 100 different kinds of vision and his super senses. He sighed.

“Oh you can?” he shook his head: Bruce’s ninja training didn’t lose anything due to his disability.

He cocked an eyebrow and looked at the festivities in the square above him; a slight melancholy and nostalgia filled him with a dim thought floating to his mind: celebrating with Bruce and his friends– Diana wasn’t in the mood for Christmas celebrations: they were too…mortal-ish…However with her he still could celebrate his prize…She knew how to make him forget everything else.

He changed his course towards her apartment where he knew she was waiting always for him to show him her love.
Batman landed on the rooftop behind Green Arrow who still held his bow stretched, the cord trembling from the arrow that had just launched. Arrow turned and smirked noticing in Batman’s clenched hand the arrow he had used; the one with the glowing green head.

“I see you caught my arrow…” the man told Batman who walked towards him. “Impressive! Nobody can’t do that.”

Batman yanked his head scowling.

“Wrong assumption” he growled and Arrow smirked.

Bruce was intrigued by the man’s eyes; they were under the hood’s shadow but they sparkled like fires. However what counted for him was the Kryptonite arrow: he grabbed it with both hands and broke it in two, stashing the Kryptonite head into his belt while threw the rest to Arrow’s feet. The Robin Hood look alike shook his head.

“Don’t be pissed…I saw Supes following you and I thought you needed help. You know, being alone in a strange city.”

“Wrong assumption again – I didn’t need your help” Arrow smiled broader. “Metropolis is the newest addition to your collection of cities?”

Arrow locked his fervent eyes with Batman’s lenses and made a deep bow.

“Deeply honored that Batman investigated me.”

“I investigate anyone that acts in Gotham.”

Arrow cocked his eyebrows though they weren’t visible.

“I didn’t act in Gotham: I was just visiting and happened to be in the right place the right moment.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“It happened…” he snorted. “I don’t believe in coincidences, Arrow; not that you are a…nomad vigilante.”

Arrow loll’d his head.

“Am I officially in your list of suspects for…” he pursed his lips perplexed “whatever? Oh! The thrill to be under Batman’s close inspection!”

Batman regarded him.

“This was what you wanted from the beginning, right?”

Arrow snorted.

“If you consider me a bad guy then you must know that bad guys don’t want Batman at their trails so why would I want to draw your attention?”

“I never said that you’re necessary a bad guy but your role is still misty…”

“I’m challenging to you then? How flattering!”
Suddenly, multicolored sparkles filled the sky in different shapes as the party at the square was at its heat. Arrow turned to see the spectacle.

“Do bats like fireworks?” he asked and turned his head to take his answer but Batman wasn’t there.

Arrow shook his head laughing amused.

“I should have known…”

Harleen Quinzel unlocked her apartment’s door. Though December 31st’s night – New Year’s Eve – she didn’t have any mood to be part of the celebrations for the New Year’s coming. She had spent the Christmas with her parents away from Gotham but for the New Year’s Eve she stayed in the city. Actually, her shift at the Asylum had just ended and she cared only for a good bath and a couple hours of nice sleep.

But upon walking the corridor to her living room, the pink shade of her lamps’ light told her that someone was inside. She frowned and hanged her coat and purse to the shelf. She wasn’t afraid of burglars; she took the pistol from her coat’s inner pocket and walked inside.

“Fiinnallly, the working girl is baaaaaaack!”

Joker was sprawled on her pink sofa with crossed legs. Harleen placed her gun on the dark brown small trunk.

“Youuuuu have a guuuun!” Joker’s eyes bulged. “Wow! Buuuut knives aare better, sugar” he took in Harleen’s frown and got serious. “You’re a lonely person like me, huh?” he asked gesturing to the room. “I was gooooooing to spend the Eve aloooone but then I remembered my kiiiiind doc…”he looked at her “I was sure that you’d be alone toooooo…” he gestured to her to come closer. “C’mon, make yourself at home…Hehe…”

She marched with confident strides closer.

“It is my home” she said cocking an eyebrow and Joker scratched his hair.

“Wееееell, that’s true…buuuuut loooook what I brought youuuuu!”

He left his sprawled position and leaned to the waist table showing with both hands a bottle of expensive champagne wrapped in golden paper.

Harleen raised her eyebrows.

“What for?” she asked and sat at the pink armchair next to the sofa.

Joker pouted and shrugged.

“To humor the New Year aaaaand thank a woman who reeeeaaaally cares for me…”

Harleen was satisfied by this yet she kept her defenses up.

“Aafter what happened at the square you didn’t threaten people again…”

“Yeah…” he shook his head licking his lips.

“This is very good Jack; I’m certain that you can reform completely and amaze everyone!”
Joker smiled making his scars more prominent.

“With youuuuuur help…Remember what we said about Bru--cey?”

She nodded.

“Are you still iiiiiin?”

“Of course.”

“That’s myyyyy girl! Go, go fetch some flutes: we have things to celebrate…”

She did as he said but while she was in the kitchen she heard music and the balcony door opening. Her apartment had a really big balcony overlooking half the city and especially those nights of the year the view was majestic.

She filled the flutes and went to the balcony where Joker was leaning his waist against the railing staring at her. Harleen offered him the flute and he hit it softly to hers before drinking.

“Toooooo us” he proposed and Harleen couldn’t stop the smile that trembled on her lips. “I’m sure we’ll make a spec--taclar duo!”

The melodies of Harleen’s favorite waltz filled the chilly air and Joker locked eyes with her completely serious.

“You’re a really gorgeous woman, aren’t you?” he said in a suave voice completely unrecognizable and offered her his hand.

She took it and he hugged her beginning to move her to the melody; Harleen felt goose bumps: Jack was a really talented dancer she realized and his green acid eyes on hers were so serious, almost sad that made Harleen forget everything she knew about his crimes.

“Oh…Baaaatsy-Bruuucey, how I miiiiiiss our daaaaances…Well, this waltz thing is niuice buuuut our dance has better moves…It’s all about authenticity aaaaand choreography…” he thought smiling at his former doctor.

And then tires were heard from the street above. Joker looked down and Harleen did the same: patrol cars swarmed the street around the building and officers jumped out with guns.

“Oooops! They are foooor me…”

Harleen was frustrated and annoyed.

“Some neighbor must have seen you…”

“In oooother case I’d have killed all youuuuur neighbors – I haaate neighbors who stick theeeeer nose everywhere - but…for your sake I wooooon’t” he bowed, took her hand gently and kissed its back burning her skin. “I’ve got to go now…”

He jumped from the balcony and Harleen rushed there with bulged from terror eyes; only to see the jester been lifted to the air by a strange thing attached to his jacket – it was like a helicopter with a big Cheshire smile painted on the bar.

Joker waved to her as the officers stormed her apartment.

“Haaaappyp New Year, Harlequin!” he exclaimed and vanished to an alley just before the officers reached the balcony.

It was almost midnight but at the Wayne Manor the garden was filled with life; food and beverages had been placed on the rectangular marble table while the champagne waited to be opened at the changing of the year. The night wasn’t very cold and the snow had started to fall again softly.

At first, Alfred and Leslie were afraid to let Bruce be outside but then didn’t want to ruin the mood and agreed. They didn’t regret it: everyone was happier in the garden, livelier; the night atmosphere and the decoration carrying away every concern.

Dick and Jason were playing snow fight and Bruce was breathing easier seeing his charge being careless; hearing that Breizic would be watching him had excited him. Hero wearing a small Santa Claus’ beanie was trying to catch every snowball running from one boy to another.

Selina with Steve were behind a large bush.

“Have you told Bruce that his present engage you 24/7?” Steve asked her playfully.

Selina frowned.

“I admit that this professional painting set was taken from my dreams…but 24/7? I’m still sleeping with you.”

Steve shook his head.

“Only because your bed is big enough to fit me and not the set…”

Selina tapped his bottom lip.

“You’re not that petit, Captain…”

Tony and Pepper were vanished too and Bruce was sure that his friend was taking advantage of the darkness.

Leslie and Alfred stood at the table and Bruce was sure that they were plotting against him… Ms. Todd was talking with Matt and Lily. Lucius would have been there too but he was spending the New Year’s Eve with his nephew’s family.

Bruce looked at everyone with love: nobody said anything about Metropolis. Bruce caressed his lips: he still felt Superman’s breath there…the sense of his hot flesh approaching to claim his lips.

“She is my star!” Bruce showed Superman again kissing her floating over Chicago.

He wished Clark was there too…Or at least be happy where he was.

An hour ago the surveillance system he had installed in Quinzel’s apartment sent a signal about a presence there and Bruce knew it was Joker. So Batman alarmed Jim.

However from the police’s frequency he heard that the jester got away…Everything pointed out that only Batman could do the job…

“Ladies and gentlemen” Tony trotted at the center of the garden where the table was trying to rub off the marks from Pepper’s lipstick. “She framed me up!” he said to the eyes that focused on the marks. Pepper passed him patting him in the buttock and he cleared his throat.

“Well” the billionaire said after everyone gathered “I have inside information that the New Year arrives sooooo…”

He waved his hand like a magician and above their heads appeared a hologram showing a cloud with sparkling stars.

“And… ten…”

A star detached from the cloud and crossed the sky falling over the distant forest.

“I’m not gonna do all the work alone…” Tony cocked his eyebrows and everyone joined him.

“Nine…” for every number a star crossed the sky and vanished “…four, three, two, one…”

A loud bang was heard and then other bangs and the sky over the Manor was filled with multicolored sparkles that formed angels, waterfalls, mountains, famous sights and…Ironman.

“I hope we don’t have to call the fire brigade…” Alfred mumbled snidely to Tony’s ear offering him a flute with champagne.

“Please, Alfred…You insult me now…”

Selina was kissing Bruce’s cheeks and Hero had run to his lap. Tony kissed Pepper and moved there too.

“My turn now, missy…Go to your Captain…”

“Happy New Year, Master Bruce” Alfred said after his friends detached a bit to exchange wishes with the others.

“Happy New Year, Alfred” he replied and gazed at his people exchanging wishes and kisses; he felt so warm, so content…and so weak. “Alfred…I’m tired…” he whispered.

“Of course you are, sir” Alfred said scolding but also fearful.

Bruce didn’t understand how but Leslie came to him immediately.

“Are you feeling alright?”

“Of course, I’m just drowsy.”

Tony squatted in front of him.

“Your vitals are normal but…”

“Of course they are, Tony…I just…Please continue the party.”

“I’ll take you to your bedroom” Tony said determined and stood his Ironman boots forming around his legs.

When Bruce closed his eyes in the warmth of his bed sleep came immediately.

“I can understand the darkness inside you, Bruce, that separates you from the others. Only a man like me, with the same experiences can understand you…” he heard again Oliver Queen whispering.
The night was perfectly silent as if everything went completely still or there was nobody on the planet: only the cold was piercing through the bone and Batman despite the fact his armor didn’t let the cold reach him, could tell because his breath left a small cloud every time he chose to breathe that way. Such silence wasn’t normal, he thought; it was Metropolis, one of the largest cities in US and fuss was always present.

The deafening silence made it even easier to hear it: and before hearing, sensing… He descended gracefully on the rooftop; Batman could have left swiftly yet his body didn’t want to obey…neither his heart. He had missed him despite the fact he would never admit to anyone…he missed him and he hated himself for that.

Suddenly, a powerful wave hit him and Superman carried him along to pin him to the wall—carefully, not like the last time he had used him with all the crude the Man of Steel could conjure. He felt goose bumps as Superman glued his body on his; Bruce still remembered the feeling on his lips from all the times the alien had kissed him with all the love that resided to his heart.

“I missed you and I know you missed me too…” Superman whispered.

Superman’s lips wanted to claim his; they were very close and their breaths collided to hug and become one; Bruce had to fight with himself.

Batman’s lenses locked with those extraordinarily blue topaz eyes and the first time he laid eyes on the Man of Steel came back to him: there, in Dolcetto’s filthy kitchen with Signora Bruna’s menace lurking. His angel… Bruce had loved the man since then and though he had buried his thirst deep inside, he was counting the days to their destined meeting: not that he believed that a being like Superman would ever be interested in him yet…he knew that they’d meet some day. And that day, despite Bruce was aware that he didn’t deserve that man’s love, had been such a fool to raise his eyes to look at him.

Like a memory from another lifetime he saw himself in the same rooftop, in the same situation threatening Superman with the Knife of Justice pushing him off of him.

But that was in another lifetime because in this lifetime Batman yanked his head forward and captured Superman’s lips with all the lust and despair of his need. He kissed him giving everything he got; careless of his air supplies ending; of the burning in his healing lug. The only thing that mattered was that he had again the same sensation of those hot lips brushing his own thirsty lips; the salty and sweet flavor that made his mind go numb and his body melt…

And then he was again placed on the floor upon the old blanket wrapped in Superman’s red cape; the interior of the greenhouse seemed so warm under the light of the oil lamp and the heater Clark had just lit. But his eyes were locked with the man’s he loved all his life: scared and curious, eager and hesitant.

Superman took his hand and brought it to the clutches of his blue outfit on his shoulders allowing to strip him…Bruce touched the perfect, unmarred skin and it was like he had imagined it: the electric current running his spine; the fire in his groin, the trembling all over his feet, the sweet impatience. The dread for his own body’s reactions; the terror of losing control; of letting go; of being sneered; of all the demons who lurked…

“And then I’ll worship your body…” the angel with the blue topaz eyes whispered and began kissing
But his kind face suddenly changed: his features were distorted in rage and Bruce was lying on his bed staring at him without fear but sadness…

“I didn’t see Loki but even if that it is true then I see” he smirked and Bruce’s chest clenched painfully for what was coming “that Bane and Talia taught you the pleasures of threesome so what better than two gods fucking you?” Bruce’s eyes bulged and his heart stopped beating. “Maybe if I told you that Diana and I would both fuck you, there wouldn’t be a problem…But since I didn’t, you took the first opportunity you found: Thor and Loki: Who got your ass and who your mouth? Or they changed positions? You’re doing the same with Rogers and Selina in the Tower? I imagine you prefer to fuck your friend than…”

Bruce couldn’t stand it anymore; nausea was burning his stomach and every word from Clark’s mouth was acid. He raised his hand and brought it with all his speed and force at Clark’s face…

But an unbeatable force stopped his hand midair and the Man of Steel pinned his arm on the mattress above his head clenching Bruce’s wrist. Immediately a violent slap made Bruce’s head roll on the side and the familiar taste of iron choked him as blood sprung from his nostril and lip slithering slowly to his cheek. A deafening thunder worsened the buzz in Bruce’s ear but he looked through his narrowed eyes at Clark who was smirking smugly.

“I owed you that, Bruce, remember?”

And then the horrible, familiar sound of foreign flesh punishing his insides burning, grazing, hurting…He was clenching his jaw and biting his lip to not moan. And it was so difficult hearing Clark’s roars and sneers…

Bruce stirred at his bed under the soft blankets and opened his eyes. At first, he was panting but quickly forced himself to calm: a dream…his two encounters with Clark in Metropolis had woken up everything he chose not think. He pressed his lips; bitterness filled his insides like a corrosive acid…

It was all his fault: he should have never succumbed to Clark’s love…to his own feelings. He knew who he was; he knew that there should be no place for such things in his life…that he didn’t deserve to be loved; much more by someone like Clark.

He was a fool for allowing that…The result was that his love wasn’t enough to save Clark from Vivian’s trap.

Bruce closed his eyes and his heart began pounding from agony for Clark: he had let him go; he had let him at her mercy. His face filled with sweat drops and willed his breath to become slow: there was no other option…

He pushed his hair on his head with both hands: keeping him would have led to worse things: Clark might have done something that when he got back his senses would regret for ever. Bruce’s pelvis screamed aching exactly like that night; a gasp escaped from his mouth; he rubbed his eyes. No, what happened that night wasn’t one of the things Clark needed to regret…Bruce closed his eyes and bit his lip: he was used to that…

He glanced at the clock on the bedside table: it was a quarter to 4. Too early. The heavy curtains were drawn but Bruce clapped his hands and they withdrew revealing a spectacular view of the snow covered grounds that sparkling under the sparkling light blue light of the tiny lamps mesmerized Bruce’s eyes; during his stay at the Fortress Clark was taking him out almost every night - always very attentive and careful to Bruce’s temperature. His eyes travelled miles and miles of sparking snow under the different colors of aurora borealis.

They discussed many times about how they would cherish the snow in Gotham…

Bruce covered his face in his palms: he shouldn’t think about these; there were more crucial things. Joker, Mannheim, Vivian and who might be hiding behind her… And then Zucco, Dick, Ms. Turner… Queen and then Arrow… Thomas Elliot. Thor’s baby blues sweet and compassionate… He huffed: he had messed things up! He had to take action immediately… to save Dick from this man; to save Superman from Vivian and whatever was hiding behind her. To find a meaning to all these…

And then?

He looked outside. If Superman got his senses back he might want to approach him again… To come back. Bruce’s heart clenched: this option almost panicked him because it’d be a temptation, a new struggle to do the right thing. And the right thing was never allowing to repeat the same mistake: Clark should make his life with someone appropriate… Not him.

But he almost made the same mistake at Metropolis: he let his feelings carry him away and went to his awarding ceremony to see him again… And then on the rooftop he almost bent…

No… no… never again.

He felt exhaustion flooding his body and rubbed his temple. There were slight pinches of pain throughout his back… He remembered the energy casts holding together his patched body: Superman didn’t take them from him; he didn’t doom him to being stuck in a bed. Even under this influence Superman kept his kindness…

His eyelids grew heavier: he really wanted to sleep; to have a small escape from the real world.

Alfred looked at the four white lilies’ bouquets on the marble dresser at the Manor’s foyer: a delivery boy had brought them first thing in the morning. Master Bruce had ordered them and before half an hour there were two bouquets more, with white roses. Now were gone which meant only one thing. The Englishman raised his eyes to the place where Martha and Thomas Wayne had their last residence. And sighed.

Bruce had followed the path Tony had made for him to the top of the hill that was covered with fresh, unspoiled snow. Before he left the Manor Bruce saw Richard and Jason making a snowman with Hero running from one to another; so he decided to come out from the back door to not be seen.

He placed tenderly the bouquets at the base of the tombstones; they were covered with snow but the white cheerfulness didn’t do anything to loosen the knot in his guts… He brushed the tombstones and lowered his eyes.

“I feel that I don’t do what I must… That I should have done more but I’m not good enough…” his sparkling eyes fixed on the grey marble “I wish you were here to guide me, mom, dad…” he bit his bottom lip. “Not only to guide me… just be here” he inhaled deeply “spend the days with you…” Bruce chuckled bitterly. “I… although I knew that it was impossible… however I had deep under my conscious mind the feeling that things would be like then…” he nodded “for Christmas… that somehow things would change: I’d woke up from a nightmare and you would be there…”

He rubbed his eyes and then huffed desperately.
“I miss you so much…” his eyes went blank, fixed on their names; on feelings and scenes of his past.

Suddenly, a purring startled him and pushed him out of his comfortable but phony world; a purring he knew so well. He looked to his chair base and Hero was there staring at him.

“Hero, what are you doing here? Come, buddy!” he took him to his lap and began rubbing his frozen paws to warm them.

With the corner of his eye he saw Dick and Jason halting abruptly, the call for Hero still in their mouths. They were chasing the kitten and seeing Bruce were both dumbfounded.

Bruce hadn’t wanted Dick to see him there more so with his eyes watered and some tear drops glistening frozen on his cheeks; he didn’t want the boy think that he tried to…to anything. Their eyes met: the boy’s eyes were narrowed; he had followed Hero.

“In the Manor’s foyer, fours bouquets wait” Bruce said quiet. “They are for you…I ordered them along with…” he showed with the head the bouquets on the snow “mine. I thought that you might want to visit your family and take them something…”

Dick lowered his eyes; yes, all these days, his family’s absence weighted more but he didn’t want to show weakness. Yet Wayne had seen into him. He pressed his lips and nodded; he was ready to say something but Wayne caught him.

“I know you don’t want me near them so I gave instructions to Alfred and he will take you there…” he turned towards his parents’ graves and placed his hand on the tombstone. “I never had the chance to bid them a proper farewell…” his voice was steady. “Only once I placed a flower to the place they were murdered…but it was a withered white rose from the garbage…They deserved better…”

Dick frowned: he felt the hidden pain in Wayne though the man hid it probably because he didn’t want him to think that he tried to gain his sympathy. But that was nonsense: he couldn’t feel sympathy for that man – Wayne was the reason his family was murdered. He hated the man.

Jason brushed his nose with the back of his palm, feeling uncomfortable and exchanged fleeting glances with Dick.

The older boy just nodded and Bruce let Hero down.

“Go to your friend, buddy!” he urged the kitten and Jason took the animal to his hands following Dick in descending the hill.

Bruce lowered his head: he wished no child would ever feel what he did…And Dick’s pain just made his own even worse. He waited there till the unidentifiable car left the grounds.

When he guided the chair towards the Manor’s entrance another car halted; Leslie came out of her car rubbing her hands.

“Good morning, Bruce; I came to take you” she said determined.

Bruce smiled.

“You sound like the Angel of Death” he chuckled and Leslie pressed her lips.

“Sorry but I came to take you to the clinic” she cocked her eyebrows “remember, right?”
Bruce lolled his head to the side and huffed.

“Your exams” Leslie went on “I waited too much, young man. And I don’t like at all your last collapses.”

Bruce shook his head exasperated.

“Collapses! You exaggerate, Leslie: I just fell asleep…” Leslie crooked her mouth in complete disbelief. “And I have too many things to do!”

Leslie crossed her arms.

“You’ve already have done too much” Bruce closed his eyes pushing his hair back. “In ten days you have done so many things that not even a man in full health wouldn’t have done! And don’t let me start about Metropolis…” she said twitching her eyebrows meaningfully. “I might not know what happened there but I know you, young man.”

Bruce yanked his head and Leslie approached more and placed her hand on his shoulder.

“I just want to make sure that everything is alright and change your medication accordingly: please, Bruce, think all of us who are in agony…”

Bruce inhaled deeply lowering his eyes and Leslie pressed her lips: she really wished that there was no need for these unpleasant for Bruce examinations.

“It’d be only your doctors, those you trust and we won’t make any scanning; I think that Tony has this part covered.”

Bruce closed his eyes and waved his hand in defeat.

“Fine…Leslie: you’re so stubborn.”

She smiled.

“Look who’s talking!” she snorted and then sobered. “How else do you think I’d have survived in the Narrows?”

Alfred had driven the boys to the city, to the cemetery where Dick’s family rest. Jason had come along because his friend asked him if he wanted to. The Englishman stayed outside with the nondistinguishable car, giving some privacy to them.

Dick holding the three of the four bouquets in his arms while Jason carried the fourth strode among the rows of graves silent with his feet sinking to the fresh snow. He knew the place by heart: they were coming often with his granny – every Sunday. Dick grinned bitterly inside: he didn’t want his family to feel neglected – that he had forgotten them.

Jason was following some footsteps behind, nervous of being in such a place. It was awkward for him and difficult to handle. He stopped when Dick stopped and saw the gravestones pressing his lips.

Dick squatted and placed the flowers gently to the base of every tombstone; he stayed like this staring at the cold rock as if waiting to be greeted and Jason watched pouting, his blue eyes sad and ready to water; for that he swept them with the back of his palm: he was a tough man after all…
“I miss them, Jay…so much…Sometimes I pretend that Brian is still with me in the room and we’re talking about comics or playing…”

Jason nodded.

“I’m sorry, man…”

Dick shook his head.

“I know you are, Jay…”

“Do ya want me to leave ya alone?”

The older boy shook his head.

“No, stay” he turned to him and smiled weakly. “I think you’d have become good friends with Brian: he could be a real rascal sometimes but even then he was so cute…he loved me so much.”

Jason pursed his lips.

“I’m not cute…”

Dick chuckled and touched his fingertips to Brian’s name.

“He didn’t deserve to die like this…He didn’t deserve to die so soon: he had so many things to live – we had so many things to do: we had scheduled things...” his voice broke and Jason patted his back. “None of them deserved to die like this: mom was so kind, so sweet and understanding… and Peter was the best step father anyone could have…I was very lucky…Until…” he growled and jolted to his feet fisting his hands. “I hated, Jay! Why they had to die because that bastard Wayne returned from the dead?”

Jason hugged his friend and rubbed his back.

“I’m sorry, pal…” he was ready to mention once again that it wasn’t Wayne’s fault yet he didn’t want to make his friend more distraught.

Dick looked at him.

“Come…we’ll go to dad now…my entire life lies in this graveyard…”

Thankfully, the fourth bouquet had survived their hug, Jason thought and followed the older boy to another tomb which looked older and had curved the name John Grayson. Jason gave the flowers to Dick and the boy placed them on the soil.

“Dad, I know we never had the chance to meet but I feel like knowing you…I mean it’s not the same as if we played together, watched football and rugby and gymnastics, of course but…I met people that knew you and they speak to me about you and it is as if…I mean…I imagine you…it is like you’re alive again! First, your cousin, Tony: he loves me very much, dad and cares…”

Jason rolled his eyes and crooked his mouth.

“And now Mr. Breizic, your trainer, dad…He is going to be an advisor to my training! And maybe someday he’ll train me, like you…” he got serious. “He says that you’d be proud of me…Are you?” he shook his head. “I never forget you, dad, even though I never met you…it’s like you were always there…” he chuckled. “Like an angel….”
The boy stayed silent for a couple of minutes and Jason although he didn’t want to intrude felt that it was time for them to leave. He placed his hand to his friend’s shoulder and Dick turned his head.

“Yeah, I know, Jay. Time to go, dad, but I’ll come again…”

Alfred sat to the driver’s seat saw the boys coming and came out of the car; Hero was lying on the back seat. He opened the back door for them and Dick rolled his eyes: the butler was supposedly his servant and acted like this but on the same time he was punishing him… Ugh! Well, despite Alfred was firm with him, Dick kind of liked the man… but still he wished that soon he’d be with Tony away from Wayne.

“May I suggest a stop at the bowling center, young masters?” Alfred asked glancing at the mirror over the steer wheel; he thought that they needed something to lift their spirits.

The boys looked at each other.

“I don’t have any mood” Dick said morose “but since Jason is here…”

Jason rolled his head.

“Yeah… he is doing me a favor…”

Alfred grinned and turned the wheel towards the boys’ favorite bowling place. Hero who climbed on Dick’s lap and the boy petted him.

“That means that he wants to come along” Jason commented smartly.

And indeed Hero had a great time at the bowling following the ball on the isle making Jason and Dick exchange amused glances before bursting into laughter. Thankfully, the kitten was smart enough to not approach the pins and ran back to his friends hearing the bang of the hit. However his fear last till the next effort of one of the boys.

When the boys sat at a table to drink some refreshment Dick bought a hot dog and fed the kitten who really appreciated it. Jason was looking at the animal chuckling.

“We played - he is exhausted… chasing the ball like this…”

“Sure he is.”

“Have ya ever thought how yar similar to Wayne?” Jason said twisting his straw in his soda.

Dick snorted and scratched Hero behind the ears.

“Wrong! I have nothing in common with that brat!”

Jason cocked an eyebrow.

“Really? Let me remind ya that we found him in front of his parents’ graves placin’ flowers an’ some hours later ya’re doin’ the same thing with the flowers he bought for ya?” Dick frowned and crossed his arms. “Also, his family was murdered like yars; the difference is that he was taken by his parents’ murderers an’ was tortured for years…”

Dick’s eyes flashed stabbing Jason’s.

“I’m a prisoner of my parents’ murderer too!”
Jason lolled his head to the side.

“Ya’re a real asshole, ya know that? He didn’t murder yar parents an’ ya’re not his prisoner: yar granny made him yar guardian ‘cause she knew he is a nice guy an’ he’d do everything for your good…”

“Nope! He’s trying to play the nice guy as he did in the hospital: if he was good he’d resign from my guardianship since it’s obvious that I don’t want to live with him. But he didn’t! Cause he’s selfish and he likes to see me suffer!”

Jason shook his head pursing his lips.

“Ya’re stupid, man, and blind! I hope ya woke up soon…”

Dick rolled his eyes.

“You’re too young to know…”

“An’ ya too pig headed… The man is not as bad as ya think…” suddenly he remembered something “an’ he has a great body” he said frowning. “Like an Olympic athlete.”

Dick cocked his eyebrows and sniggered.

“What this has to do with anything?” he snapped and Jason shrugged “Todd you began to show signs of being gay? As if we don’t have enough men drooling at him…”

“Cut it!” the younger boy retorted. “I don’t know why but it came to me - He does have a great body – I saw him the day I swam with him in the pool.”

Dick shrugged.

“Falcone wanted him like this…he wanted to…” he remembered how young his friend was and stopped but Jason cocked his eyebrows snorting.

“I know what Falcone was doing to him but I was thinking…and that Selina, his friend…”

But Dick thought something else.

“You know I think that Superman really dumped him – well done for him! But now new boyfriends filled the Manor” he spat disgusted.

Hero licked Dick’s chin and the boy laughed forgetting his poison.

“Hero…” Jason frowned “ya think is a Chinese word?” Jason asked.

“No, it’s not” a female sensual voice answered and both boys looked at Selina who had approached them unnoticed.

She sat at the free chair between them and crossed her legs. She caressed Hero’s head.

“Hero means hero: it’s not Chinese.”

“What are you doing here?” Dick asked frowned and Selina loll’d her head to the side rolling her eyes.

“Not watching you, pal: get a grip…I just happen to like bowling too: we were playing with Steve but he had something to do and I found new company in you. I hope I’m not bothering…” she said in a way that revealed that she didn’t care at all about that.

Jason smiled smugly.

“’Course not, babe!”

Selina chuckled.

“Ya sneaky, naughty brat! Is Stark tutoring you?” she said playfully but then she got serious. “You want to know about Hero’s name?”

“Yes!” Jason caught up with Dick before he managed to refuse.

Selina lowered a bit her eyes.

“Hero’s name is taken from another kitten…A kitten that I had found when I was approximately at your age: he was very small, a white fur ball with a horizontal black V at his back, hardly one month old: I found him in a garbage bin. The little kitten was battered, dirty and his one eye was a dead mass while the other was badly contaminated. I took the kitten to Bruce: we met every night behind a large garbage bin in the alley at the backside of Falcone’s cabaret. He fell in love with the kitten immediately: Hero needed to be operated and Bruce gathered the money stealing money from Falcone’s thugs.”

Jason’s eyes widened impressed on the mention of stealing from the thugs and Selina nodded.

“Yes, if they caught him he was in for much trouble – I had told him so – but he answered that either way he was always in trouble.”

Dick shook his head in disbelief.

“How could he steal from the thugs? That’s impossible!” he snorted.

Selina stabbed him with her glare.

“Believe it or not Bruce gathered the money and the kitten survived the surgery but his damaged eye was removed: the kitten had only one eye half-blind but Hero was a very happy and brave kitten, for that we gave him that name. He loved us very much” the new Hero jumped to her lap and rubbed to her. “I took Hero every night with me and he played with Bruce who shared the sandwich I was bringing to him with the kitten: they were so bonded…”

She licked her lips and inhaled: even now after all these years still it was difficult to remember.

“One night we were carried away playing and Bruce stayed a bit too long outside – Chill, Falcone’s right hand, came out barking, calling for him. Bruce hurried to him in order to keep him away from me and Hero but the kitten sensed Bruce’s terror and followed him…” Jason’s eyes were bulged and she cleared her throat. “Chill grabbed the poor thing from the neck and sneered Bruce reminding him that it was forbidden to have a pet – Bruce was the pet. Bruce begged him crying but the bastard threw poor Hero to the opposite wall killing him…”

“No, man…” Jason said half angry and half sorrowful; even Dick’s eyes looked sad.

Selina caressed Hero’s little head and pressed her lips.

“Bruce convulsed in Chill’s grasp crying, screaming to let him go to the kitten but the Vulture dragged him inside…They definitely punished Bruce: they always did that without him giving any reason not now…But the worst was that Bruce heart broke once again when he had began having some pecks of happiness…He still blames himself for Hero’s death…” she shook her head and cleared her throat to steady her voice. “Anyway, a friend who knew the story and saw the sketch of Hero I made found a dumped kitten which was exactly like the old one and brought it to Bruce…”

She took Hero from the armpits, lifted him and kissed his pink nose.

Dick seemed thoughtful and Jason stared at him; however Selina didn’t want to say more: maybe it was wrong she told so much. She stood taking Hero.

“Bye, boys – I’m going down to say hi to Alfred and meet Steve.”

Dick didn’t speak even after Selina was gone and Jason brought his chair next to his friend.

“Ya see now that ya’re not the only one who suffered in this life?”

Dr. Evangeline Martinez took the stethoscope headphones from her ears and let the stethoscope hanging loose to her chest. She had heard Bruce’s heartbeat and lungs after she had measured his temperature: Bruce was obviously edgy lying half naked on the examination table and the young doctor smiled.

“We’re almost finished, Bruce” she said taking in his uneasiness – besides, she now got to know Bruce quite well.

That was the reason she was chosen by Leslie who was watching from the chair next to the table: she knew Bruce’s distaste for doctors – Leslie honestly couldn’t blame him – so she brought him to Evangeline one of the doctors who had established a relationship of trust with him. Leslie was examining Bruce almost second day often but on regular times she wanted a second, unbiased opinion, from a colleague who might find something that slipped from her attention.

“I’ll see your glucose levels now and your blood pressure and you’re free. You can rise.”

Bruce rose into a sitting position looking forward to be outside the clinic and back to work. Dr. Martinez measured his blood pressure and then Bruce watched the doctor readying the gadget and then piercing his fingertip to draw a drop of blood to the gadget.

“Your glucose levels are below normal” Dr. Martinez said looking at Leslie who was staring at the gadget’s small screen “and your blood pressure is low. And your temperature is slightly lower than the normal. Either you don’t eat well or you are exhausted or we have some mild virus. Well, I’ll take a blood sample for further exams.”

She ripped the syringe’s case and extracted the blood sample she needed; after the sample was transferred to a tiny phial, she patted Bruce’s upper arm.

“Thank you for your patience, Bruce.”

Bruce grinned.

“I should tell that to you, Dr. Martinez” Bruce remembered their first unpleasant meeting – not the doctor’s fault – but he still glared at the gynecologist’s chair being hidden in a corner.

When Dr. Martinez left the room Leslie helped Bruce wear his shirt and sit at his wheelchair. Then she looked him in the eyes.

“Low blood pressure, low glucose levels, low temperature, loss of several pounds…”

Bruce shook his head.

“That last one is impossible: I’m sat in this chair all day except from the hours of the sessions with Matt.”

Leslie coughed and glanced smartly to him.

“Do not sell these to me, boy…You exhausted yourself, Bruce: that’s why you collapsed like this; it’s a miracle you’re not bed sick. You can’t continue like this, Bruce.”

Bruce shook his head and looked again to her caring eyes.

“Life can’t wait for me to walk again, Leslie. There are things that have to be done and I don’t have the luxury of neglecting them – I have already neglected things too much…”

Leslie held his upper arms and locked eyes with him; then left his one arm and pushed back the locks that had fallen to his brow.

“If your health deteriorates things would be worse, Bruce; you wouldn’t be able to help anyone and your friends will be devastated because you considered them incompetent to cover for you: they will hold themselves responsible if you get sick.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, it’s not like this, Leslie: some things are my responsibility not Tony’s, not Selina’s.”

“You’d say the same thing if Tony or Selina were in your place?”

Bruce bit his bottom lip.

“They will never be in my place! They will be always perfectly fine!”

Leslie seeing him distressed caressed his cheeks.

“Okay, okay, calm down…Can you promise me that you won’t exert yourself again?”

Bruce’s eyes flashed in hers.

“I won’t lie to you, Leslie.”

She nodded closing her eyes.

“I know you’d never lie, I just hoped that you would mean it.”

Bruce took her hand and kissed the back of her palm.

“I promise that I’ll be extra careful, Leslie…”

“As you were the night you went to save the children from Joker?” she asked with her always steady voice cracked. “And you were almost killed?”

“You know that there’s no other way for me, Leslie…as there was no other way for you than staying at Narrows and giving your fight every day even though Falcone could kill you every moment.”
Leslie shook her head and laughed.

“Oh! You’re such a clever brat…”

“I’ll be alright, Leslie: all of you are watching me and really I’m not doing anything dangerous… Please, understand me, Leslie…”

“And you understand us, Bruce?”

“I do” he shook his head. “You don’t know how I feel sensing your agony and…being unable to ease it…”

Leslie wrapped him in her arms rubbing his back.

“You’re so precious, Bruce…never forget that…”

When they left the examination room and headed towards the exit they came upon none other than Thomas Elliot. Bruce immediately felt his healthy body stiffen because he couldn’t accept that this was a coincidence and Leslie by his side was also puzzled.

“Tommy, it’s not your shift, right?”

“I dropped by to see Kelly but…” he eyed Bruce. “Bruce, are you alright?” he gasped “What happened? Another incident?”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I’m fine” he answered politely but coldly.

“A routine checkup” Leslie added and Thomas sighed in relief which after his gasp seemed too dramatic to both Bruce and Leslie.

“Thank God! I was thinking of you constantly after that incident at the children’s hospital…”

“Everything is fine, Tommy” Leslie gave a forced smile sensing Bruce’s irritation and dreading that this would affect his pulse.

“As you see I’m returning to my work now. Thanks for the interest, Thomas; good day.”

“I’ll see you later, Tommy” Leslie told him following Bruce towards the exit.

Thomas turned his head to look at the two departing figures and smirked.

“Leslie fears for your health, little angel…Nice…And there must be your blood sample somewhere around… Good thing Kelly is here…”

Lucius and Tony were perusing the newest analyses on the peculiar objects that were shown from different angles in a holographic presentation in Lucius’ lab.

“Those figures engraved on the plates are definitely of no known language…” Lucius mumbled pointing his presentation pen light to the symbols.

“And though we can’t figure out their use it’s certain that they are menacing…I can assure you that nobody has anything like this” Tony added.
Lucius rubbed his chin.

“I thought of attempting to assemble them but this could be very dangerous since we ignore crucial aspects and we can’t rely on Luthor’s help…”

Tony sniggered.

“Especially, after what happened to the LexCorp’s board meeting…That Lois Lane is truly wicked! How she managed to get inside information…” he sneered. “I wish I was there to see Lex’s shitface when Bruce told them the positive numbers of LexLabs: ugh! It must hurt like Hell that ol’ Lex was outshined by littl’ guy in his own fortress!”

Lucius chuckled.

“Yes, Mr. Luthor apart from his release doesn’t have many good things to celebrate this Christmas. Now, back to our subject” he huffed.

The door to his lab opened with a hiss and Bruce slithered inside.

“We simply let them assemble the thing…” he said calmly but definite and both men looked at him flabbergasted.

Tony walked to him.

“Bruce, you realize that this can be dangerous? A machine or a massive killing gun or anything?” Tony asked. “I cannot believe that you’re willing to hand these things back to them.”

Bruce smiled and nodded meeting Lucius’ stare that all of a sudden filled with understanding.

“We want to know what this is to manage to thwart their plans…so we’ll give them back the pieces…” now Tony got the point and smiled. “Having our trackers inside to intervene the right moment.”

Tony rubbed his goatee thoughtful.

“Yeah, but they might find out the trackers…”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Remember the trackers that take the synthesis of the material you put it in?”

“Of course I do!” Tony spread his arms. “I manufactured those babies.”

Lucius lolled his head to the side.

“We use them.”

“However they will suspect if you give them the items just like this…” Tony remarked.

Bruce nodded. He was constantly thinking of the possible pattern that might connect things: he didn’t believe in coincidences and these bizarre items in LexLabs, Luthor’s forced release, the attack on him with the supposed Amazon’s life-saving intervention that led to Superman’s taming didn’t seem to him random.

“I’ll remind Mannheim of the fact he isn’t getting what he so desperately wants…” Tony frowned and cut him midsentence.
“That’s extremely dangerous, littl’ guy! I don’t approve…”

Bruce nodded.

“You told me that with you on my side I have nothing to fear – not that I’m afraid…” he grinned. “You see, some “leak” will reveal to them where the items are hidden for them to steal… and then you, Tony, will be able to track their movements and with Lucius you will understand what Mannheim and Luthor are creating.”

Lucius smirked.

“And we will be able to control things from a distance so that whatever it is that won’t be used for damage.”

Thomas Elliot stood leaned on the wall of the wide corridor in the professors’ offices’ storey. This time of the year few people wandered the university yet Thomas knew that the person he was interested in was there.

A grin cracked his face eyeing a lonely figure approaching the newly opened office and walked toward the man who was carrying a black leather briefcase. He knew the new professor; Thomas had met him in some conferences.

“Good afternoon, Dr. Strange. Welcome to Gotham.”

The man with the lamp-like eyes regarded him curious and a bit smugly.

“Ah…Dr. Thomas Elliot…To what do I owe your welcome?” he asked straightforward and Thomas smiled.

“I’m flattered: I didn’t expect that you’d remember me.”

“Is that so?” the doctor answered with a knowing expression as if saying to Thomas that he was so arrogant that surely believed that everyone remembered him.

“Would you like a cup of coffee in my office?”

The older man shrugged.

“Why not?” he answered indifferent but as a matter of fact he was intrigued.

Thomas made him an inviting gesture and led him to his office at the other end of the storey. Strange regarded discreetly but sneering at the luxury of the office.

“Why did you leave your teaching position at St. George’s College to come in Gotham?” Thomas asked him directly handing him a cup of coffee from his espresso machine.

Strange frowned.

“I don’t have to give explanations to you, Dr. Elliot…”

Thomas smiled.

“I think that it’s more than a mere wish to return home…”
Strange smirked and sipped indifferently from his cup. He didn’t have to answer and honestly he liked to let smug people like Elliot to speak revealing their secrets.

“I think you return now because Gotham gained new interest…”

The older man shook his head cocking his eyebrows.

“For a scientist of human behavior Gotham always has interest.”

“But now even more.”

Strange snorted.

“And why is that?”

Elliot got serious and leaned towards him.

“Bruce Wayne, the boy who lived.”

Dr. Strange began cackling.

“I thought that was Harry Potter’s trademark?”

Thomas swallowed the sneering.

“Don’t tell me you’re not intrigued by his case?”

Strange sobered and his eyes darkened.

“I wouldn’t be a top psychiatrist if I wasn’t. And you?”

“I care about Bruce and I fear that it isn’t prudent for him to be left without proper treatment; you know better that after the traumatic experiences he had he is a time bomb for himself and the others.”

Dr. Strange tapped his overlarge nose amused.

“But he manages rather impressively: he was just named the Person of the Year – his cope ability is extraordinary.”

“And that is that intrigues you so much that you left your enviable position in one of world’s finest educational institutes to accept the teaching position to Gotham’s University…like me. Leslie Thompkins, Bruce’s personal doctor, travelled to London a couple of months ago and I’m sure she visited you for advice but of course” he waved his hands elegantly “she didn’t permit you to get near him. But you wanted to be close to him looking for the chance to explore him so...” he showed the university. “Here you are in Gotham.”

Strange cocked an eyebrow.

“Like you?”

Thomas grinned and nodded.

“You want to observe and if you manage, to study him professionally” Elliot continued.

“And you, Dr. Elliot?”

“I believe that Bruce would be better in a controlled professional environment like Arkham Asylum; handled with scientific knowledge and care.”

Strange widened his eyes impressed by the man’s honesty and malice.

“I don’t agree with that: Mr. Wayne is better adjusted to our world than many people without a past like his. By the way” he narrowed his eyes “you aren’t afraid that I might reveal him your intentions? It would be a nice way to gain his trust…”

Thomas leaned back to his desk chair and laughed.

“Not at all. Because as much as you don’t agree with the Asylum solution still this option would allow you to study him in scrutiny: imagine, Dr. Strange, having him in a solitary room in the Asylum unable to avoid your studies. We can cooperate, Dr. Strange, each for his own purpose.”

The newcomer snorted but didn’t answer. He took his briefcase from the floor and stood.

“Thank you for the coffee, Dr. Elliot, I missed Gotham’s dark, bitter coffee; so long…”

He turned to leave and Elliot frowned: would the odd doctor speak to Wayne?

Strange upon reaching the heavy oaken door halted and turned his head to him grinning.

“Don’t worry, Dr. Elliot: I’m a psychiatrist and under the confidentiality code so I won’t betray your pathological, obsessive jealousy for Mr. Wayne” he nodded and left the office.

Thomas narrowed his eyes staring at the door.
Chapter 53

“You tripped me on purpose to fall!”

Bruce rolled his eyes and caressed the wet hair in Clark’s chest causing goose bumps to his spine more so when the Man of Steel focused on the feeling of Bruce’s pelvis on his groin.

“Of course” he answered nonchalant “I think you forget that I’m Batman.”

Clark stretched his neck and sighed.

“I’m under a human so this human can only be Batman but…”

“No more buts” he retorted sharply and Clark felt with dread the thing he was most afraid of: Bruce’s body slithering on his driving each of his cells crazy; his bodily perfume enhanced by the fresh aroma of shampoo and cream mesmerizing his brain into ordering full surrender.

And what was that? Bruce’s fingertips touching feathery and moving on his ribs slowly finding his abdomens and brushing skillfully each layer which pushed his hips to move upwards; motion that became a violent writhing when Bruce’s hot, velvet lips touched his navel and then nibbled and sucked his rippled flesh. He gasped and raised his torso though his head was heavy with flooding stimulation.

“Wh…what you doing?!” Clark gasped almost panicked as much as his lungs.

It was obvious that Bruce was happy to see his agitation because he knew that unsettling the ‘opponent’ was the first step for the victory. He detached his eyes from Superman’s abdomens and locked eyes with him completely calm and determined.

Clark shuddered from arousal under this stare and his face became all hot which became even worse upon realization. And Bruce’s tranquility was so irritating.

“You’re afraid that you will shatter my paralyzed lower body…however my upper body functions perfectly…” the human said slyly and Clark was reminded of Selina: those two could easily have been real siblings, he thought fleetingly.

“I doubt it!” Clark snapped. “Especially your brain!”

Bruce narrowed his eyes and – damn! - that look was a turn on…

“You’ve been suppressing your needs too long…and mine…” for the first time Bruce’s sharp cheekbones were colored pink.

“You don’t have to do this…” he almost pleaded. “I know how horrid this was…”

Bruce’s eyes flashed angrily as he realized what Clark wanted to say: his past.

“Exactly: I don’t have to do it – I want to do it. So: shut up…” he pressed his palms on Clark’s oversensitive breasts and pushed him down brushing his nipples that traitorously had erected; the most powerful being on Earth unable to stay up. “Let control to me!”

You always had it, Star… he thought and sighed. But immediately his eyes protruded feeling feathery fingers trailing slowly and gently his pelvis’ V downwards to open slightly his thighs. Bruce’s fingers caressed the soft flesh at Clark’s inner thighs ascending to his hipbones sending electric currents to his spine.

A surprised moan burst out of Clark’s mouth before he could think about it and then his torso arched: his own body rebelled against him... He grunted and his heart gave a thud... Oh, my God! The softest sensation he ever had: lips made of velvet, hot lips were planting small kisses following the V of his pelvis making his groin twitch in hungry anticipation as the tender kisses approached his length only to continue with his pelvis’ other side.

“B...Bruce...” Clark really didn’t know what he wanted to say and those lips that now kissed sucking tenderly his flesh cast his mind in a fog of pleasure and his length in derangement throbbing more madly every time Bruce let a puff of hot air from his lungs caress Clark’s hot flesh, denying the contact.

His loud whine wasn’t flattering for the Man of Steel but Bruce’s magic fingers – as if his lips working his pelvis weren’t enough – brushed not very softly, not very hard his testicles and then nibbles causing Clark’s eyes roll inwards and his fists clench. He was already huffing and puffing without Bruce having touched his impatient length; his slightly open legs trembled uncontrollably – causing vibrations to the tub - and he was afraid of hitting the younger man.

“Oh...Bruce...Please...” his voice was too husky, too weak and he meant to ask Bruce to stop so to not get hurt by his unchecked boiling body. But those rosy, soft lips began trailing with pecks his throbbing length and new waves of hot sweat ran his face, body and especially the inner of his thighs. “Ppplease, Star, MORE!”

Clark huffed and puffed supported in his forearms, his torso semi raised: how much more Bruce was going to torture his hurting member by just making small sucks and strolls throughout his throbbing length; he felt the big vein there ready to explode when Bruce’s slightly rough tongue licked the entire length.

“Star...you’re killing me...” he whimpered; the fact that Bruce’s breaths were calm as they burned his hot flesh pissed him.

Clark felt a smile on the soft flesh that tortured him and then his already hard member was welcomed in Bruce’s hot mouth and the Man of Steel just slumped on the hot porcelain, surrendering to his tormentor. His head lolled backwards and his eyes were closed, he sighed satisfied.

But then he jerked upwards, his back making an arch as Bruce’s lips were massaging in a steady rhythm strongly and then softly his sensitive member, the beating vein there bombed as his heart and lungs. Bruce’s tongue took action only rarely just to enhance the effect of his lips’ massaging moves; slowly upwards causing new streaks of sweat in every pore of Clark’s body – his face was stressed and his neck arched with its veins bulged giving loud rasps and sobs that became cries when Bruce’s nails brushed a bit rough his swollen testicles. Fire was breaking his bones...

Bruce’s heart was beating heavily – Clark could discern its beating coloring the beating of his own heart; he sensed that listening to Clark’s moans and cries was the only satisfaction Bruce needed because he knew that he was making that man happy. He was hard trained to do this even without looking so he glimpsed at Superman’s sweaty, red face that gave the impression of letting out steam; his mouth was agape unable to close due to the waves of moans, sobs and saliva breaking his defenses; his eyes were closed but Bruce could see them moving under the eyelids; soaked locks had stuck on his face making him look even more beautiful. Clark’s fisted hands had relaxed in abandonment as his member became rock hard in his mouth.

Bruce continued pumping with his lips the flaming flesh that boosted from the powerful hips thrust faster and more frantically almost desperate. Clark understood that Bruce’s experience told him that soon his lover would reach his climax and felt the younger man bracing himself for what was to come into his mouth. But then Clark’s gentle hands caressed his locks and cupped his face drawing him upwards to nestle in his safe chest just before Clark’s torso arched more and the Man of Steel cried his explosion.

Clark smiled satisfied and opened his eyes groaning with pleasure to see a dark haired head over his pelvis; the black-blue long hair was flooding naked, velvet shoulders made of porcelain – wide shoulders but not male as also the smoother edges told him. Two soft lips and a greedy mouth were swallowing his liquid from his throbbing length with moans of pleasure.

Clark caressed Diana’s locks and she raised her head with her dark blue eyes shining; some drops of his semen on her lips, her tongue taking them in gently.

“You’re so precious that not even a drop should go wasted” she said almost sternly and smiled which always made Clark’s heart beat faster. “You were thinking of him, Kal El?” her voice was filled with resentment and her eyebrow was cocked, the previous pleasure giving its place to suspicion.

Clark didn’t like lies but in Diana’s presence they felt alright.

“No.”

The Princess smiled and raised a bit her entirely naked body which made Clark’s breath stop: those round, rich, erect breasts; the perfect shaped muscles leading to her abdominals and then the steep descend to her vagina… that rubbed to his spent penis sending new thunders to his spine.

Diana swallowed his lips massaging brutally.

“Did he give you what I do?” she asked with her eyes stabbing his and her hands massaging his ribs.

Clark wrapped his arm around her back and smiled.

“He was…trying hard…”

She snorted and nestled her body to his torso.

“Trying?” she sneered. “He was a whore his entire life with a demanding master; he should be a perfect professional.”

Clark frowned.

“How do you know?”

She caressed his curly chest hair.

“Everyone knows that, Kal…Everyone who read Wayne’s story or watched the news…” she raised her eyes to meet his. “I wouldn’t have bothered to do that but…I did it because he had captured your interest.”

That seemed right to Clark: it was true that everyone knew what Bruce’s use was all these years…A whore…He felt nausea but there was something else nudging his insides that he just ignored.

Diana gave a crooked grin and kissed Clark’s lips.

“You deserve the best, Kal El, not just mortal efforts…” she mumbled staring at his eyes.
He nodded and held her in a one arm hug rising to a sitting position.

“I found the best in you, Diana…”

She cocked an eyebrow.

“No more…trial and error?” she asked sternly and playfully at the same time.

Clark feeling his annoying lock falling to his brow smiled and shook his head.

“No more!” he sighed. “With him every time was almost as if conducting some kind of abuse…” he chuckled and Diana looked at him amused. “Dreading that one wrong move and I’d hurt him, physically or emotionally. Feeling guilty as if I became one of his abusers – it was disturbing…”

Diana nodded.

“I see…He wasn’t good enough for you; he was inadequate for a great god like you…” but Clark’s eyes were cast inside which didn’t evade her. “But you’re still thinking of him!” she clenched her fist.

Clark took her fist gently and kissed the knuckles.

“I was just thinking how idiot I was…But thankfully now I have you…”

He captured her lips cupping the back of her head: her body’s natural perfume of every flower in the world mixed perfectly with the perfume of the flowers in the room’s small pots that were spread in every small table and dresser.

His hands travelled to her taut but soft breasts and fondled with want making Diana open her legs to engulf his pelvis. Yet Clark didn’t have the time: it was half past seven and he was going to be late for work. So he reluctantly let go of her wet nipples and vagina to lay her on the mattress.

She was expecting him to cuddle her but when he stood and walked towards the bathroom that was attached to the bedroom, she frowned and raised herself supporting on her elbows.

“Where are you going, Kal?” she demanded.

The heavy dark green curtains were drown but it was obvious that the day was still young as the light remained dim.

He stood still sighing and turned to look at her after a few seconds.

“You know I have matters to attend to…”

She narrowed her eyes.

“You’re a god: the protector of these people; I have this obligation too but…” her face changed into contempt “you’re acting like a miserable human being that has to maintain a 9-5 job.”

Clark smiled: well, more than 9-5 actually depending on emergencies. But he couldn’t admit that to Diana: she wouldn’t understand and he didn’t want to lose anything of her admiration and respect. He knew how she felt about anything mortal-related and a job wasn’t excluded. Superman working as a journalist? Ridiculous!

“Of course not!” he said hiding the defensive tone because Superman didn’t have to defend himself to anyone…except for Diana…obviously but she didn’t have to know. “Superman has more obligations than just saving the day: humans need my guidance and consultation and I can’t deny them.”

Diana nodded and stood graciously strutting to him completely at ease with her nakedness so much unlike Bruce. She was a miracle of beauty and he had to fight with himself to not stay there devoring the pleasures she had to offer.

The Amazon cupped his face and looked him in the eyes.

“You’re doing many sacrifices for them…But we must be like this since humans are so inferior…” Superman replied with an uncomfortable smile.

She didn’t kiss him though Clark’s lips moved to meet hers; she walked graciously to her robe and put it on. Clark sighed watching the tantalizing way her naked, protruding buttocks swayed and got inside the bathroom wondering if it’d be better to drop his job and that Clark Kent persona.

“Our focus should have been on your surgery” Tony said to Bruce under Lucius’ gaze; the scientist didn’t reveal his opinion “and not diverting to every single other matter. I want to work only in this and let the rest be: we have to set some priorities, Bruce!”

They had left Lucius’ lab to Bruce’s office and now Tony was spilling out what was eating him all this time. Bruce was watching his friend pacing the corridor gazing at the space with blank eyes, thoughtful: Tony loved him so much that his disability was torturing him as much as it tortured Bruce – sometimes Bruce could see in his puppy, black eyes a dim terror when looking at him but then his childhood friend managed to hide it.

Tony was afraid for him and Bruce understood that the prospect of the surgery almost panicked him despite the fact he was a genius and he had Lucius in the team – another genius – and Bruce knew that those two chose the best people for the project.

He looked at Tony who had stopped walking and leaned his back on the wall right next to the lift they intended to take to the upper floor.

“Tony, there are priorities indeed” he said calmly and Tony shook his head. “There are things that come before me. You know that. You’re already doing too much for me and I feel that it is unfair to you: you’re S.H.I.E.L.D.’s director and the president of a great company and I’m keeping you away from them and busy with my problems while there are so many things that want your attention.”

Lucius had crossed his arms and looked at Tony who was ruffling his locks before meeting his friend’s eyes.

“You’re not keeping me away from any of that, Bruce…I’m handling perfectly everything and I’d still manage perfectly even if I was in a lab working exclusively for your operation. Because for me your health, your recovery is the most important thing and not chasing those…items which we can just destroy and get over with the matter.”

Bruce licked his lips.

“And never realizing what they are scheming? What kind of a menace lurks in the shadows? I know you, Tony, thus I’m certain that you don’t want to leave that uncovered.”

Tony huffed and shook his head.
“I never said that we should let that matter uncovered but we can buy some time till you have the operation and be healthy enough…”

“But we have an entire team working for that surgery and you with Lucius exert yourselves for the same goal. But we can manage other things at the same time.”

Tony leaned to him.

“But we can’t do these at the same time: YOU can’t do all things at the same time” Bruce frowned and Tony held his shoulders meeting his eyes. “You’re weakening yourself, little guy…” he huffed. “You’re acting as if you don’t realize how important this operation is – and difficult -, it demands your full focus but you run everywhere to manage things: you must set other things at bay, Bruce…”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“This is what is eating you, Tony?”

The older man sighed.

“Yes.”

Bruce pressed his lips and took Tony’s hand in his.

“I’ll be alright, Tony. I’ll manage” he smiled. “I’ll have you, Lucius, Leslie and the best doctors around: I’m not afraid of anything when I have all of you by my side.”

He patted Tony’s upper arms.

“We won’t perform the operation before everything is perfect” Lucius said arching his eyebrows to Tony. “And that includes Mr. Wayne’s physical and overall condition” he looked at his employer. “Which means that Mr. Wayne is responsible for the speed of his own recovery.”

Tony smirked to Lucius thanking him for reminding Bruce of that and Bruce just nodded.

The indicator on the brown glass screen in the lift’s door showed that they had reached the floor to Bruce’s office. When the lift’s doors opened and the three men began walking Bruce found himself before a surprise. Oliver Queen was strolling with his smug expression in all its might having just left Ms. Philips’ desk.

Queen saw him too and immediately approached. Tony watched with cocked eyebrows the man’s beaming face.

“Bruce!” Queen exclaimed and stretched his hand to the younger man for a handshake.

“Mr. Queen…” Bruce answered coldly and saw Queen’s face losing its color on that welcome.

“Tony, how are you?” he mumbled to the billionaire from Malibu. “And this must be Mr. Fox; delighted to meet you!”

Lucius shook his stretched hand.

“I knew your late father, Mr. Queen.”

Queen sighed.

“Yes, he had mentioned you several times…”
Tony sensed Bruce’s uneasiness from Queen’s presence.

“Oliver, I see you have become almost a Gothamite…” Tony smiled. “To what do we owe the honor of your visit?”

The man chuckled.

“Honor? You’re flattering me, Tony, but I don’t think that Bruce agree with that. Right?” the younger man didn’t answer just eyed him with his sparkling eyes. “Well, I wanted to see Bruce in his Fortress…”

Bruce met his eyes. He still remembered the feeling of waking up in Queen’s bedroom, having the man’s hot breath brushing his face and realize that this man was staring at him while he was sleeping. Although there was nothing in his food or drink Bruce didn’t like the way he suddenly fell asleep in a place full of people. And then the way Queen had kneeled to put the shoes on Bruce’s feet…Bruce had the feeling that the man was struggling to not kiss his feet… He shivered on the memory.

“It’s not my Fortress: it is my father’s company.”

Queen smiled smugly as if he read Bruce’s thoughts.

“That you took back from the man who killed your parents and stole your fortune keeping you as his slave. Also, you managed to make that company thriving and respectful once again.”

Bruce’s eyes were completely still locked with Queen’s sensing how much the man was thrilled from that.

“I wouldn’t have managed anything weren’t for Tony and Lucius…”

Queen inclined slightly his head.

“Of course…” he turned to Lucius. “We have talked with Bruce about potential cooperation between our corporations.”

Lucius nodded.

“Yes, Mr. Wayne has informed me and we agree that there are good potentials in that.”

“I’m glad to hear because your entrepreneur genius is highly respected; I wonder if I could have some tour to Wayne Tower?” his eyes were focused on Bruce suggesting that he was expecting Bruce to guide him.

“Of course…Mr. Fox will be delighted to guide you to our facilities” Bruce said and Lucius smiled amused with his eyes sparkling. “He knows better than anyone Wayne Enterprises.”

“I’m sure but I was hoping to have the President’s attention?” Queen replied both displeased and amused from Bruce’s dodge.

The younger man smiled.

“I apologize but my physiotherapist is waiting for my session and I can’t miss any…I’m sure you understand…”

Tony hardly swallowed his chuckle for Queen’s blank expression: the man’s disappointment was clear. But Queen eventually nodded.
“Of course…”

“Thank you for your understanding” Bruce’s smile became broader. “Have a good time in your tour…Mr. Queen, Lucius…”

He turned to leave, Tony with him but Queen stopped him.

“Bruce, can I have a word…”

Bruce turned his head.

“I’m afraid you can’t, Mr. Queen: it is rude to let people waiting. It is a pity you didn’t make an appointment before coming…”

Tony cocked his eyebrows to Queen pouting and left with Bruce. The billionaire from Malibu had to fly to New York to attend to Avengers’ businesses in the Tower. Happy was waiting with the jet’s engines on.

Queen looked at Lucius.

“Your employee is really something, huh?”

Lucius chuckled.

“You bet…Shall we?” he made an inviting gesture though he knew that the man had lost completely his appetite now that Bruce was gone.

“I’d like to speak to Mr. Mannheim, please. Bruce Wayne.”

It was easy to find the telephone numbers of Mannheim’s headquarters unlike finding any information about the type of his business and deals. Batman managed to enter to the company’s building – it was relatively easy – as if the man didn’t have any intention to hide something or being afraid of espionage. Which was actually the case because there was nothing for the intruder to find except for mundane things custom to a company. And this was the reason that Bruce decided to nudge Mannheim and let him take the objects.

It was the only way to find the truth about the objects’ use and their owner. More so since Batman’s investigation in LexCorp’s building wasn’t of much help. Bruce had hoped that Luthor would have some information hidden in his personal archive built under the building’s basement since there was nothing in the LexLabs’ logs. He had hoped that he would find information not only about Mannheim but also for the cloning program and what Luthor did for Ra’s Al Ghul; maybe there were some answers.

But no: even in Luthor’s personal archives there wasn’t anything of help. So Bruce had to rely on Ubu’s efforts for the potential child and to his own plan for finding the truth.

He had taken advantage of Alfred’s absence to pick up Dick from the gym to get in the cave and do some more demanding investigation through the cave’s stronger processor: not that his Cosmos wasn’t efficient but being in the cave offered him…inspiration; it reminded him of who he was and glancing at the armor inside the transparent case fortified that; like reasserting that he was indeed Batman and he hadn’t lost that.

At the moment the processor was searching information about the company “Build & Fit” that Mr.
Breizic told him that had been assigned with the renovation of Gotham’s gym when John Grayson died. The remarkable thing was that in the gym’s archive there wasn’t much about a company that was assigned with such a large project.

He caught with the corner of his eye Hero climbing to the Tumbler sneakily with his narrowed eyes watching the bats which still hadn’t left the cave. The kitten stayed completely still for several seconds and then made an impressive jolt to catch the bat that hung lower than the others…Only for the rodent to fly away the last second leaving the kitten slithering on the Tumbler to land on its paws meowing frustrated.

Bruce smiled: this animosity wouldn’t be easily settled.

“Mr. Wayne, I’m sorry for the waiting” Mannheim’s secretary came back to the line. “He’ll speak to you now – I’m connecting you.”

It was late afternoon yet Bruce had the certainty that Mannheim would be there.

“Thank you, Miss.”

“How did you find this number?” Mannheim growled immediately.

He was angry, Bruce thought, nice.

“It is a business number not a personal so I found it quite easily.’’

“What do you want, Wayne?” the man asked rudely. “Maybe you realized that you owe to give me my order?”

“Actually, I called to give you a last notice.”

Mannheim snorted.

“Last notice?” he spat.

Bruce pursed his lips.

“In accordance to the obligation LexLabs’ previous owner took concerning you, I felt that I should inform you that every unidentified item found in LexLabs will be reported to the officials and then destroyed” he heard the wrath in Mannheim’s sharp intake of air. “So if you want your order, you have a last chance to bring in the appropriate information so you take what you ordered..”

A slap of a heavy hand on a desk went through the telephone line and Bruce smirked.

“You’re playing with me, you stupid man?!”

“Not at all” Bruce replied nonchalant. “Actually, I was expecting that you would appreciate this notice since my intension is to ease your case. However you must hurry because you have only a few days before every unauthorized item will be destroyed. I’ll be waiting your news.”

“You’ll get news very soon, Wayne – be sure of this…”

The threat was vibrating the man’s rough voice but Bruce grinned and ended the call.

He had just set things in motion: he had to find out what this man and Luthor was scheming and if he had any connection with the fake Diana and Superman’s beguiling. Because Bruce was seeing a clear pattern with the peaks of the scheme interconnected but he needed proof.
And then the Intergang mystery was reborn from the moment Mannheim came to his office: Bruce never was sold for the option of Edge, the veteran gangster being the Intergang’s leader: his death during the Metropolis’ subway attack and his thugs’ disturbed mental state were very convenient. Exactly as the burglars busted for the raids at the LexLabs.

Mannheim was active in Metropolis and he was interested in these things so why not being the one who ordered the raids all over the states to find them? With that in mind, the fact that the agents on these two apparently unrelated cases had exactly the same qualities pointed to the option of being orchestrated by the same mastermind: and if the attack in the subway was the job of the Intergang then the raids were also so if Mannheim was behind the raids then he was also Intergang’s ghost leader. Which fact was also supported by his cooperation with Luthor and the latter’s release was achieved in the same way with the releases of the scum that according to Clark belong to the Intergang.

Mannheim was clever: staged the attack killing a known gangster and framing him up as the leader of the Intergang – then leading the gang underground to persuade everyone that it was over. While they were moving in the shadows which was more efficient. Also Mannheim was powerful to manage moving the wheels to release Luthor…Considering that his company except for its prosperity and annual balance sheets was much obscure concerning activities and deals the odds of Mannheim being the person of interest were very high.

Bruce wished he had Clark in this to investigate his city…But he doubted that he cared about investigating now that he was with Vivian…and that again was another clue that everything connected: have Superman under the effect of this woman in order to forget the case…not his duties as a protector but being indifferent to the Intergang’s mystery especially since everything indicated that the gang was over.

Suddenly, the processor beeped that it has ended the search and Hero frustrated from his failed efforts ran to Bruce and rubbed to his dead feet calling for a consoling petting that Bruce happily gave as his eyes set on the screen.

The company – “Build & Fit” - had no current or closed site and Bruce doubted if they had any archive or construction. His investigation had focused on the archives public services had on the company: a local company with too few projects in the three years of its life. The registration of the company was on the name Sandrey Felix and Bruce instantly pressed the key to start search for him only to crook his mouth seeing that too conveniently the man had died in a robbery a year after John’s death and the company’s closure.

Crossing the details of that company with others of its category Bruce knitted his eyebrows: “Build & Fit” was the same company with “Agiltex”, a company that Bruce knew very well because it was the company where Dick’s father had invested his money only to lose them.

Among the other data the processor gave was the report on the company’s performance at the local exchange market: the company appeared a morning and the next day its shares got rocket high: there were many articles advertising the shares. The company’s rally lasted some months gathering a large amount of money and then suddenly the company bankrupted leading its shareholders to disaster. Some voices in the local market and media talked about fraud yet it was Falcone’s era so everything was allowed.

So Felix created a new company a while later for what? To commit a new fraud? Bruce doubted that. He had a hunch: typed some orders to find the man’s accounts. Felix had some bank accounts but also he had an off shore company at Barbados which wasn’t difficult to hack into getting access.

“What?!” Bruce exclaimed and Hero turned surprised to look at him.
The offshore didn’t belong to Felix but to none other than Tony Zucco: of course, at the moment the accounts were almost empty which could explain the man’s sudden return in Gotham and his interest in Dick…

“Hm… I knew I’d find you here, sweetie…” a playful, loved voice broke the monotone of the waterfall and Bruce raised his eyes to her only to be faced with her scolding expression.

Selina wore a raincoat.

“This waterfall is a real security measure with this freezing cold” she said coming closer. “And you shouldn’t be here, Bruce… When the cat is gone…”

Bruce showed Hero with his eyes.

“As you see the cat is here… Why you didn’t knock at the Manor?”

She pushed off her head the hood and cocked an eyebrow.

“And lose the chance to catch you in the act?”

“It’s your shift to guard me?” he chuckled.

She sat on the bench.

“You blame us?” she moved her head to show the cave. “Really now, Bruce: you shouldn’t be here… But this isn’t the only reason I came: Steve left with Tony for Avengers’ stuff in New York so we can speak in private…”

Her eyes sparkled with her most witty way and Bruce narrowed his eyes eyeing the flood of data on his screen.

“Don’t pose the indifferent to me, kiddo…” she said smiling.

“I think we always are free to say whatever we want.”

“Mmm… I never got insight about Metropolis…” she said in a singsong voice and focused her eyes on Bruce’s profile.

Bruce’s hands stayed still over the keyboard, he sighed and then locked eyes with Selina.

“What do you want to learn, my dear interrogator?”

Selina pouted cutely.

“Interrogator? You’d have let your Selina in total darkness?”

Bruce chuckled and shook his head.

“Go ahead.”

Selina got serious which was a bit tricky with Hero who had climbed to her lap licking her chin.

“You saw him?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Yes, twice… The first was my mistake” he huffed. “I booked to the hotel where the ceremony for the Pulitzer Awards was to be held” he decided that saying it all at once was better and hoped to sound indifferent but Selina’s eyes felt with sympathy and Bruce shook his head. “And I went there to see and clap for him” now Selina sighed. “He noticed me and we spoke…”

“I hope he didn’t insult you?”

Bruce grinned.

“No.”

Selina wasn’t convinced yet let it be.

“You said twice: the second time?”

Bruce didn’t want to hide from her the fact that Batman acted in Metropolis. Besides he was sure that she had figured.

“On a rooftop…Superman met Batman.”

“And?”

“He tried to kiss me and asked me to be with him even now that he is with her…”

Selina ground her teeth and yanked her head.

“That asshole! He has too much nerve! How dare he? Who does he think you are?!”

Bruce smirked and cocked an eyebrow.

“A whore…” he said dryly and Selina’s eyes flashed.

Bruce heard again the bang of thunder that colored Clark’s crude voice:

“You slander her – a noble, brave warrior – of being a whore while you are the whore!”

Selina left Hero down and slithered her arms around Bruce’s neck.

“You’re not a whore, sweetie…” she pecked his cheek.

Bruce smiled.

“My record says otherwise” he chuckled and Selina shook her head infuriated.

“I think I’ll change my policy and stuck a large piece of Kryptonite to his ass!”

Her friend smiled to her and lolled his head on the side.

“No need…I pushed him away and left.”

“You still love him, don’t you?”

Bruce grinned.

“This ended once and for all, Sel; I do care for him but…what we had…it was a mistake.”

“No…Sweetie…It was very beautiful but you rooted for the wrong person; however that doesn’t mean that there’s no other person who would cherish your feelings and give you what you deserve.”
He smiled.

“No more of that, Sel…You know better than anyone that I had had enough of this…”

Selina brushed his upper arm sad and Hero jumped to Bruce’s lap to give him a consoling rub. Bruce petted the kitten’s head and Selina cleared her throat and took her stern expression.

“Now, kiddo: upstairs! Enough humidity you have absorbed.”

“I have things to do, Sel and it won’t be long…and this cave is inspirational…”

“Inspirational?”

“I just found that the company John Grayson invested and lose his money was the same with the one that caused his death” Selina’s eyes widened “with a different name. And behind both companies is none other than Zucco himself.”

Selina spread her arms.

“Great! Tell the brat the truth!”

Bruce shook his head.

“Not yet. He won’t believe me: his grandmother said some things to him and the boy didn’t believe her. I need more and I need more and solid proof that it was the company’s fault that caused Grayson’s death which would lead to Zucco’s arrest.”

Selina stood.

“Great! Now we can go upstairs to the warmth and continue your investigation, Monsieur Poirot.”

Bruce chuckled but then his Cosmos rang with his number on the screen.

“Hello, Alfred!” Bruce greeted him putting the call on the speaker. “How many new pills Leslie gave you for me this time?”

“I have your pills, Master Bruce but there’s something more urgent.”

A knot formed in Bruce’s guts.

“Are you coming to the Manor?”

A slight pause but then Alfred spoke again with his poised voice.

“Master Bruce, Master Richard isn’t in the gym.”

“Damn that brat!” Selina gritted her teeth.

“Okay, Alfred” Bruce said calmly pinching the bridge of his nose. “Have you spoken to the bodyguards?”

He was listening to Alfred recounting his actions and at the same time typing orders to locate the boy from the signal his Cosmos emitted as he had done the last time the boy ran away. Yet the signal was coming from the gym.

“Alfred, he has left his Cosmos at the gym: he must have suspected that I can locate him through “Master Bruce, we’ll find him: do not worry and please do not make a hasty movement.”

Selina knew what Alfred meant since Bruce’s eyes was focused on his armor that stood like a formidable guard ready to spring to life.

“We’ll be in touch, Alfred” he said ending the call.

“Bruce, no” Selina said as he moved towards the case. “Don’t do this.”

“I must: it’s night, Selina and we have no idea where Dick is; meanwhile Joker lurks in the city and knows that I have Dick’s guardianship.”

“I can find him!” she said exasperated but Bruce was absolute; his eyes still in hers.

“No…It's my responsibility. Sel, do not thwart me: you know me better than anyone and you know that I have to do it.”

Selina gulped: it was true, she knew Bruce and his need. Also, Bruce was full aware that she couldn’t deny him anything.

“I’ll come with you…”

Dick was sitting at a central café filled with people drinking from a can beer he had bought from a store: the café’s owner asked him to stop drinking since he was underage but the boy made a scene yelling that he could do anything he wanted since he was Wayne’s ward.

That way everyone in the café would know who he was even if he/she hadn’t already heard so he loved and enjoyed the appalled stares he caused. His delight was greater when some phones were drawn to shoot pictures of him. This would suit their purposes perfect.

But then he noticed an officer entering the café, probably called by the café’s owner and he hurried to leave from the back door. He had called Jason to find him here using his old, simple cellphone since he had left his tablet in the gym. He was sure that Wayne had ordered his people to create a signal so that he could be located.

Jason was waiting there seated at his bike’s seat; he had his arms crossed and smoked gazing at the garbage bin.

“Turn it on and step on it” Dick said jumping on the bike behind him.

“Joker is chasing ya?” the boy asked bored.

“No, there’s a cop and he will take me to Wayne.”

“The best he has to do! Are ya fuckin’ crazy?! That nutcase is loose an’ he has targeted ya once already!”

Dick smirked.

“Are ya afraid?” he mimicked his friend’s accent and Jason fumed.

“Of course not, ya dork!” he turned the bike on and sped up. “To where?”
“Narrows.”

They ended up to their favorite rooftop on the abandoned building; both boys sat at the edge dangling their feet to the void overlooking the area that now seemed less scary. Jason was smoking and drinking beer while Dick held the second can of beer for the night.

“What are ya up to, man?” Jason asked drinking his beer.

“I want my freedom and I don’t want to be Wayne’s pet.”

“Ya’re not a pet, man: ya might not like him but I think he cares…” the boy said sucking his cigarette.

Dick rolled his eyes and pretended to throw up.

“Care, my ass! He just plays the caring…”

“An’ what you gonna to do? I mean tonight…”

“I’ll stay away from the Manor…”

“Ya’ll go to Zucco?”

“No, because Wayne might give him a Hell..I’ll stay out.”

Jason spat the mouthful of beer he had sipped.

“yar fuckin’ crazy, man! Ya’re gonna be ice cream! Ya know, I think that if Zucco cared about ya wouldn’a want ya to freeze to death…” however Dick’s annoyed stare told him that his words were in vain and that pissed the younger boy but he couldn’t let his friend out with that cold. “Come home to us.”

“Wayne will look there and your mom is gonna inform him right away” he drank from his bottle.

“I’ll find a shelter…”

“In Gotham? Are ya nuts!! Oh, man! That Zucco is driving ya to death!”

Dick drank again and shook his head.

“No, he cares for me…”

“I’ll stay with ya, pal: I’m not leaving ya on yar own with Joker free.”

Dick grinned.

“You’re gonna protect me now that Batman is dead, huh?”

Jason lolled his head and drank.

“He isn’t.”

Dick chuckled and cocked his eyebrows.

“You didn’t see what happened in the city hall square? He never came to save the day: Catwoman and the Avengers did it. And they did because Batman is dead.”

Jason shook his head in denial and Dick sighed.
“I saw him trapped to death…” he mumbled swallowing a knot. “He couldn’t have escape from all that debris before the building collapsed; he died but there’s a plot to hide it from people.”

But Jason was staring down with narrowed eyes and pointed to two figures that were chasing a thin person to an alley. Their building was the least tall from the surrounding allowing them a clear view to the street.

“Who said that Narrows stopped bein’ thug driven?”

“This is still Narrows” Dick shrugged “and criminals gradually realize that Batman is gone once and for all” he threw his bottle down smashing it. “Let’s go!”

“Ya’re wasted, man – too much beer…” Jason chuckled. “How we gonna face those guys? With burps?!”

“I’m not gonna stand when a woman gets raped…” he said standing. “Are ya scared, littl’ Jay?” he said and began running to the other side of the rooftop to the threadbare door leading inside.

Jason smashed his bottle down.

“Of course not!” he spat and followed.

Batman was in the Narrows. When he left the Manor turned the systems in the Tumbler to analyzing every frequency in the city for any reference of Dick. He didn’t try to contact Jason because the boy should remain loyal to Dick and only to him.

When the AI informed him that a gossip show on TV mentioned Dick he opened and watched the footage some onlookers had shot; he crossed the images with all the cafes in Gotham to find the place but a fraction of a second before the result came out his systems caught the signal from a patrol car relaying that a boy probably drunk created trouble in Forester’s cafe.

Which was the place that his system identified as the one from the phone pictures. He rushed there at the same time getting access to the public and the store’s security cameras: he saw the boys leaving with Jason’s bike. From then it wasn’t difficult to follow their course hacking the cameras that covered the direction the bike took and following their signal through Tumbler’s tracker. All this time, Selina was following the boys from another direction so that everything was covered.

The boys had stopped to the Narrows and Catwoman who was watching them now on foot informed him that they ended up on the rooftop of an abandoned building at the west side of the Narrows.

“Stay with them but watch them discreetly’” he said to his friend and heard her annoyed huff: if it was to Selina she would spank both of the boys but Batman didn’t want to scare them into running away nor suspect that Batman and she were both looking for them.

Dick drunk! Bruce couldn’t believe it: he was a good boy and in his attempt to make Bruce’s life difficult he was damaging himself. Once again Bruce thought that maybe he was wrong in his acts…

And then he saw it: a woman running scared chased by two men with hoods. It was obvious what they wanted and Batman’s jaw clenched. He could inform Catwoman to intervene but he was tired of putting the weight on other people’s shoulders. So he opened the door and stepped out feeling like his old neighborhood was welcoming him.

He marched towards the alley knowing that the thugs carried guns and knives. He could hear their threats and curses and the woman’s weak desperate cry.

“The boys have left the rooftop” Selina said.

“Stay with them.”

He could just call the Police but that wasn’t him; wasn’t Batman. And till police reached the place the crime would have happened.

So he proceeded to what he knew better: he became one with the shadows ready to attack the men when:

“Stop, you morons!”

Batman was happy for the lenses because his eyes bulged: two small figures surged the alley with bike helmets covering their heads. However Bruce knew they were Dick and Jason because he recognized the helmets, the boys’ forms and Dick’s clothes. His heart began pounding. Dick performed some breathtaking somersaults attacking the man with the gun kicking his hand; Jason launched a brick against the second thug and jumped on his back punching him with all his might.

“Foolish boys!” Batman mumbled; at least they thought of wearing their bike helmets.

The thugs soon overcame their surprise and took control over the situation grabbing the boys while the woman found the chance to run away. Batman heard Catwoman’s heels approaching and with a sharp gesture sent her away.

The thug who had lost his gun due to Dick’s kick took it again holding Dick from the lapels while the other man held Jason’s arms behind his back. The gun shone under the dim light of the street lamp as the thug put it on Dick’s neck: obviously he didn’t care about the boy’s identity.

“Ya thought that ya coulda mess with us?” Dick thrashed and gave him a kick in the groin that was too little to yield the guy. “Ya’ll die now, brats!”

Jason giving trouble to his captor jolting in his arms turned to.

“Well done, ya jerk!”

“It was yar idea, kiddo?” the one that held Dick sneered. “Who do ya think ya’re? Batman’s mini substitute?” both thugs began cackling and then he sobered. “It was yar idea so ya’ll die first” the boy thrushed and Jason tried to kick his captor to no avail. “No, Batman, seed: so who’s gonna save ya now?”

He tightened his finger to the trigger.

Batman launched the cables from his gloves grabbing the man’s wrists and twisting them so hard that not only the gun flew away and Dick was freed but a sickening crack was heard from his wrists. Dick kicked the man and the second thug shocked let Jason looking around and pulling out his own gun searching the alley with his eyes but Jason encouraged kicked him to the ass; the man turned to him growling. But another cable wrapped his legs throwing to the ground and the boys looked around.

Only then Batman stepped out of the shadows thick smoke hiding his half body.

“Fuck!” Jason exclaimed goggling at the imposing dark figure as his friend.
“Go!” he barked to the boys and they obeyed.

When the thugs lied unconscious he walked to the kids who had removed their helmets and gaped at him.

“Oh, man!” Jason exclaimed. “I knew ya’re alive!” Batman cast him a glare and the boy closed his mouth scratching his hair. “Okay…”

“You are alive!” Dick said and for once Bruce saw something different than hatred to his eyes.

“Foolish boys!” he growled. “Never do that again! This isn’t a game: they were ready to kill you! You think that’s funny?!” the vibration of that voice was more terrorizing than the thugs’ guns “you won’t do that again!” the boys nodded shyly and Batman changed his tone but not his stern attitude. “I’ll take you home…” he spat.

“No need, man, I had my vehicle…” Jason made to brag but Batman’s glare was enough to silence him.

“I’ll be right behind: don’t you dare to detour.”

Jason raised his hands in surrender.

“Okay, man: ya’re the boss! But ya know ya’re not the only who knows the Nar…”

“Cut it, kid!”

Jason rolled his eyes and looked sideways at Dick who shrugged.

“Get inside!” Batman ordered Dick; the kids hadn’t realized till then the car’s silent approach after Batman pressed the option on his gauntlet.

Both boys gaped yet again when the Tumbler’s passenger door opened upwards.

“Wow!” Jason goggled. “The Batmobile! Man, can I ride too?”

Batman scowled.

“You have your vehicle, remember?”

“Shit! No fair, dude!” Jason spat frustrated but stopped under the man’s glare.

After Batman made sure that Jason was in his house he turned the wheel towards Leslie’s clinic.

“Where are we going?” Dick asked tranquil.

“To Dr. Thompkins’ free clinic: she’ll know where to take you” he wasn’t going to betray that he knew where Dick lived now but he had no problem to let him know that he was informed of his grandmother’s disappearance.

“You know where I live and you don’t take me there because you know that my grandmother isn’t there…”

Batman nodded his gaze on the street ahead.

“I’m updated on the people I know…” he looked at him coldly. “You drank alcohol: that’s forbidden! What were you thinking?”
The boy crossed his arms.

“Mind your own business!”

"You're hurting yourself that way more than anyone else. Do you think that your loved ones would want this?"

Dick closed his eyes.

“I thought you died that night. And I'm happy you didn't...” the boy looked at his turned to the road face and Batman looked at him. "Honestly..."

Leslie’s eyes were two daggers when she saw Batman and she had to bite her tongue to not yell at the man; yet she just took the boy inside casting a glare to Batman.

“Thanks” she spat and Bruce knew that he was in for serious trouble.

He had left the Tumbler in an alley next to Leslie’s clinic just in case someone saw the vehicle and connected them: Falcone’s reign was over but he was still wanted.

Batman was ready to get inside the Tumbler when he heard someone approaching silently from the air. He knew that it wasn’t Superman. He turned calmly and saw the supposed Amazon staring at him with a smug expression, her hand on the hilt of her sword; yet he didn’t worry.

“The infamous Bat” she said snidely and Bruce’s eyes narrowed. “What are you? A demon as they believe or a stupid human trying to pose as something greater than he is?” she lolled her head on the side snorting. “The second obviously” she spat.

Batman’s lower face remained expressionless and after a second he turned his back and walked towards the Tumbler.

“Don’t you turn your back on me, you rat!” she yelled but Batman continued unfazed. “Or you are such a coward to confront me?”

On that Batman stopped and turned his head to her.

“I don’t see any bravery or any meaning in confronting someone like you…Actually, you’re wasting my time.’

She clenched her jaw.

“You’re saying that you shrug me off?” she grounded her teeth.

“You said it…I suggest you go back to your business and leave Gotham.”

“I’ll go wherever I want.”

“Then do it.”

“No!” she smirked. “What kind of a coward hides his face from his enemies?”

Now Batman turned his body towards her.

“Ancient Greeks warriors wore helmets covering almost their entire face: you should know better…” he said dryly and then yanked his head satisfied from her affronted look. “What do you want?”
“To meet you to see what you truly are…although I was sure that you’re nothing more than a useless vigilante: if you were better you’d have protected Gothamites and Superman wouldn’t have fell on Wayne’s trap.”

Batman scowled at her.

“I never believed that an Amazon would think only with her lower instincts: Amazons are independent… but it seems that your mind works differently now you left your island.”

On that she seemed upset and paler; she gritted her teeth and took off.

“We’re not finished, rodent!” she spat turning her flushed face to him.

“Definitely not…” he answered nonchalant and got inside the Tumbler.

During the way back to the Manor one thought prevailed in his mind: he had to do what was always in the back of his mind, itching him – the only solution: find the true Princess Diana.
As soon as the Tumbler jumped through the waterfall at the cave’s entrance Selina who had arrived earlier rushed to the flat rock where the monster car landed holding Hero to her chest; Selina had followed Bruce’s instructions and when Batman neutralized the thugs and took the boys to return them home she changed clothes at her place and came back to the cave.

She thought of bringing Bruce’s wheelchair along yet she was sure that Bruce wouldn’t want Batman sat in a wheelchair…Inside Selina a knot was formed: it must be a minute by minute constant fight for Bruce to be bound to that chair and yet smiling to everyone.

The door to the Tumbler’s driver seat opened and Selina had to hold tight Hero to not jump at Batman’s lap: it was clear that Hero’s instinct was stronger than the lack of scent the armor achieved so the kitten understood that his master and friend was under the armor. After all, Hero was a frequent inhabitant of the cave and had seen the armor in its case waiting its owner.

Batman came out and Bruce pulled off the cowl which was enough for Hero to escape Selina and jump to him. He caught the kitten but his expression was still filled with Batman’s strictness and determination before gradually loosening up.

“You took the brat to Alfred?” she asked as they crossed the glass-titanium narrow bridge to the working bench.

“No, I didn’t want Dick to start wondering how I knew where Alfred was. I took him to Leslie’s clinic instead.”

“I hope she gives him a good scolding before Alfred takes over…” she said snidely.

Bruce placed the cowl on the bench and let Hero on the rocky ground. Selina leaned to him with her arms crossed.

“You know of course that you’re on for a good scolding too…Not to mention some punishment…”

Bruce turned his gaze at her and then ruffled his sweaty, wet hair with both hands.

“I understand the worries of all of you but I did what I had to…"

Selina pressed her lips and cocked her eyebrows.

“You’re in trouble too” Bruce said pointing at her with his index “for letting me go.”

“Her sins are forgiven; she has loved much…” she sighed and Bruce smiled.

“So I took advantage of you?”

She shrugged and smirked.

“Even girls like me have their soft spot, sweetie” she caressed the locks that had stuck to his cheeks bringing them behind his ears. “Now, upstairs and shower! You should speak to that brat as soon as they return…”

Bruce lolled his head on the side, pressing his lips: it was the worst part of the night.

When he came out of his bedroom’s bathroom, Selina had laid out for him a fresh pair of clothes.
Bruce flabbergasted stared at her; she was sprawled on the thick carpet and played with Hero and Bruce smiled at the scene’s innocence.

“You know that you didn’t have to do this” he gestured to the clothes. “I can manage myself.”

Selina looked up at him and Hero found the chance to grab her hand between his paws and mock bite it.

“Of course, I don’t have to, sweetie, but I want to dress you according to my taste…you know, being my personal doll or model?” her eyes glimmered slyly. “Every girl would envy me for dressing someone so gorgeous!”

Bruce shook his head amused.

“I will be looking at Hero, so don’t be shy” she hastened to add.

“It’s okay, Sel: I’m not shy with you…” *you have seen me in a lot worse situations…*something bit his chest.

“Thanks, sweetie, but still I won’t. How are you? Do you feel pain anywhere?”

“No, I’m fine.”

“And… what happened when I left you?” she asked tickling Hero’s belly as the kitten rolled on the carpet.

“I had an encounter” he said putting on hastily his clothes in order to not force Selina to keep her head down; his friend almost forgot her own words and made to raise her head.

“With whom?” she remembered at the last moment and looked again at Hero.

Bruce snorted.

“None other than her majesty, Princess Diana.”

“That bitch! What did she want?” and then she huffed narrowing her eyes. “Wait…Do you reckon that that stupid alien told her about Batman’s ID?”

Bruce shook his head lowering his long sleeved T-shirt.

“I doubt that: if she knew who Batman is she wouldn’t have missed the chance to scowl and sneer at me: not to mention that she might have told everything to the police. You can look.”

She jumped to her feet and clutched her hips appreciating her chosen clothes on Bruce.

“Perfetto!” she exclaimed and Bruce chuckled as his friend sat at the mattress. “Well, what did she want?”

“To express her contempt for Batman and blame him for not doing his job which forced Superman to save Wayne and fell into ‘his trap’…” he couldn’t help but laugh with that and Selina did the same.

“I hope you told her off…”

“You tell me…” he recounted his exchange with the supposed Amazon and Selina raised her palm.

“Gimme five, kiddo!”
Bruce slapped her hand grinning mischievously but Selina’s eyes were sparkling satisfied as she pursed her lips and tapped them with her finger thoughtful.

“You’re a beautiful sweet boy but white suits you uniquely: mmm! white V neck long sleeved T-shirt with lapels and black pants – classic and perfect” Bruce was smiling with her enthusiasm yet she frowned. “But you love only black – the color of sadness…the color of mourning…”

Bruce narrowed his eyes and brushed her upper arms.

“Ei, c’mon, what’s this? We were talking about Vivian” Selina smiled and nodded. “She didn’t have the mark you did her.”

“It healed so fast?”

“No, I was able to see it with the night vision: she had covered it with makeup.”

Selina raised an eyebrow.

“She must know the tricks…But I don’t think that it is an Amazon’s trademark spending her time in front of a mirror to apply makeup.”

Bruce scratched his hair.

“Exactly; no Amazon would do that – she would carry a mark as a token of bravery.”

“Except she is no brave at all…” Selina shook her head.

“Selina, I must find the real Princess Diana.”

His friend widened her eyes and pursed her lips.

“You mean the legendary leader of the Amazons, a tribe that exists in myths and we don’t know if they are still around? And if they do exist their island is uncharted and impossible to find?”

Bruce nodded.

“Exactly.”

Selina shook her head amused.

“You’re really something, Bruce, and believe me: that makes me crazy about you but…” she sighed. “Now it’s not the time for this: you need to rest; to gather up your strength and stamina; you must focus on your health and your recuperation.”

He closed his eyes and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I know, Sel…but still…”

Selina jumped to her feet and touched her fingertips to his lips.

“Everything will be fine, sweetie: you’ll manage once again but you need to be patient and careful” Bruce met her honest eyes and got the hand Selina offered him to intertwine their fingers. “I’ll be always by your side, Bruce… Now, let’s dry your hair though the wet look makes you really yummy…” she rolled her eyes huffing “but we don’t want you to catch a cold.”

Bruce chuckled though memories flooded his mind of the times Clark showed to him how much he agreed with what Selina said about his wet look; it was like blades piercing his insides.

“You didn’t tell me” Selina said as she dried his hair combing them simultaneously; the drier was almost soundless so it was easy to speak. “How it was Batman’s first time with brat-Dick?”

“Actually, it wasn’t the first time…”

“Right; but it was after that incident in the factory and many things have happened since then.”

Bruce nodded thoughtful.

“For the first time when he looked at me I didn’t see in his eyes distaste and hatred…He was really happy that I am alive and he really was listening to me.”

Selina smiled.

“That’s great! Maybe that way you get to approach him.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No: I don’t want him or Jason suspect the truth and meeting again with him as Batman would mean troubles for the boy and Dick has had enough. The boys attacked two dangerous thugs: the more they interact with Batman the more they could be influenced to continue…”

Selina pressed her lips.

“I wish the little shit would realize how much you care about him…”

“What matters is Dick’s happiness; he has been through so much…”

“You more than him!”

The sound of two cars approaching reached the bedroom and Selina bit her bottom lip chuckling.

“Ouch! Leslie came with them…Brace yourself, sweetie!”

Bruce cast a sideways glance at her.

“You were my accomplice, you know” he said chuckling.

Selina placed the drier on the vanity and combed Bruce’s hair once again softly before taking Hero from the floor.

“And Hero was the mastermind” she laughed.

Bruce and Selina were downstairs when the main entrance’s thick door opened; they rushed there and stopped the way to Dick who obviously outraged was ready to storm at the stairs to his room.

Alfred and Leslie were gloomy and Bruce knew that it wasn’t only due to Dick’s deeds.

Dick made to pass Bruce but Selina blocked his way and Bruce locked eyes with the boy; Dick yanked his head.

“I want to go to my room!”

“Not yet, Richard” Bruce said calmly. “First, we have a discussion to make.”
Dick crossed his arms over the chest and rolled his eyes.

“Is the moment you play the father?” he snorted.

Bruce kept his tranquility though he felt nervous about what he was going to do.

“No. I won’t play anything, Richard; I just try to stay true to what I promised to your grandmother: protect you.”

Now Dick’s eyes widened and cackled.

“YOU? Protect ME? Oh! Wayne, that’s ridiculous! You’re not able to protect even yourself! Look at yourself and leave me alone.”

Bruce was aware of the stares from the others and he had to recruit his entire training to continue that discussion: he felt that he didn’t have the right yet it was something that must be done for the boy’s own good.

“I may not be able to protect myself but I’ll do whatever I can to protect you – even from yourself. Richard, people saw you drinking alcohol and published your photos; you created a quarrel with the café’s director; a police officer came and you ran away…”

Dick rolled his eyes while shaking his head all the time.

“And that blemishes your image, huh?” he snorted.

“Master Richard, it is rude to interrupt your guardian” Alfred intervened and the boy crooked his lips in irony.

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I don’t care about my image, Richard; but I do care about yours and a good boy like you shouldn’t be stained with such things.”

“I don’t care about my image! I don’t want to be part of your perfect little world! You made me part of it without my will so I’m doing whatever I want now!”

Bruce let his hands fall on his lap.

“And what about your life, Richard? It is extremely dangerous to be alone in Gotham’s streets during night – anyone could have attacked you to rob you or kill you…and drinking alcohol? You’re an athlete, Richard, with great talent and potential: you’re ruining these that way.”

Dick was fuming.

“You’re not my father, neither my relative so mind your own business!”

“This is my business. Your grandmother trusted me with your care and I am obliged to give you back to her as I took you…Have you thought of her? Of your parents? Of your father? Would he want his son wandering to the mean streets of Gotham intoxicated?”

Dick grounded his teeth and stabbed his flashing madly eyes to Bruce’s face: if eyes could kill Bruce knew that he’d be lying dead by now.

“I’m not intoxicated! And don’t you dare speak again about my father! You’re not worthy to even mention him!”
Alfred’s face took an affronted expression and Leslie tapped her foot nervously on the granite floor yet Selina couldn’t stand anymore and made a step towards Dick clenching her jaw.

“Shut it, kid! You don’t know anything about Bruce and you have no right speaking to him like that!”

Bruce touched her upper arm.

“Selina, please…”

“I can’t stand it anymore, Bruce” Selina shook her head. “He is unworthy of your efforts!”

Dick frowned on that and Bruce locked eyes with Selina to make her stop.

Leslie moved forward too.

“She is right, young man” she addressed Dick “you might not like Bruce, you might hate that you have to live with him but this isn’t an excuse for your behavior or doesn’t make Bruce a lesser human being.”

Dick chuckled.

“Nice…Four grownups against a kid…You surely learnt your message from Falcone, right, Wayne?”

A blade pierced Bruce’s head but he didn’t show anything though Alfred’s still eyes on him told Bruce that the butler sensed his pain.

“I promise you, Richard, that the moment your grandmother returns and you go with her you won’t see me ever again.”

“My grandmother won’t ever come back!” the boy yelled almost desperate. “She is dead like the rest of my family and I’m stuck with you!”

“You’re wrong, Richard: do not lose your hopes; she will come back.”

Dick snapped his head disgusted.

“Let me go to my room!”

Bruce nodded.

“Of course but first we have to discuss your punishment.”

Dick’s eyes bulged from anger while Alfred bowed slightly his head in agreement.

“What?!” the boy snapped.

“I must protect you from your own self” Bruce continued. “Therefore: you won’t attend the gym for a week” Dick’s eyes now narrowed to glimmering slits but Bruce stayed unfazed. “You see your training as a chance for doing dangerous things that could eventually harm you; also, your use of alcohol manifests that you put your love for gymnastics under other things” he inhaled “so staying away for some days would remind you what’s more important.”

Leslie and Alfred looked each other impressed from Bruce’s handling and Selina smiled. Dick on the other hand, had his fists clenched and his face was red; Bruce could smell the stench of beer in his pants of wrath.

“You think that not having your fucking cars drive me to the city would thwart me from attending my training?”

“No, and you’re not a prisoner but there’s no meaning on going to the gym on your own because Jeffrey is also very sad from what you did – you see, you took special care – on purpose, I’m sure – to show off among people. So he totally agreed and he won’t train you for a week.”

Dick was huffing and puffing.

“You plot against me! I wish you rot in that chair!”

He cast a thunderous glare to him and stormed at the stairs.

“Master Richard!” Alfred called after him shocked as everyone with what the boy had just said.

“Apologize at once!”

Dick halted and turned to him scowling.

“Why? He is gonna spank me next?! Let him show his ugly real face!” he barked with his voice distorted from hatred.

Bruce inhaled deeply.

“It’s okay, Richard; you don’t have to apologize to me, only to yourself. You can go to your room now…”

Selina squatted by his side and hugged Bruce.

“Don’t listen to him, sweetie…You’ll walk again and he is going to realize how wrong he is and regret.”

Bruce smiled to her and brushed her forearm.

“I’m not sad, Sel: it’s okay…”

Leslie came closer.

“That boy has lost his path…”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“And I make things worse…”

“No, Bruce; if you weren’t here for him, Dick would have been in much trouble…which reminds me…” she looked pointedly at Alfred and Bruce understood.

“It’s my turn now?”

Alfred chuckled and gestured to the corridor leading to the backside’s study.

“I think the backside’s study is more suited for our discussion” he said.

“Your idea for the ‘timeout’ punishment was very clever, sir” the Englishman pointed upon entering the small but cozy study that looked to the back garden. “You’ll be a great parent.”
Bruce remembered the child that probably Ra’s created without his will and a shudder crossed the healthy part of his spine.

“I wish no child has to have me as parent…” he mumbled moving to the large rectangular window; Selina knowing about the child bite her bottom lip.

Leslie left on the marble coffee table a small paper bag with Bruce’s new medication and the youth’s eyes fixed on it.

“More drugs?”

 Leslie shook her head.

“Just different, adjusted to your needs” Bruce nodded. “Which brings us to your case, Bruce” he huffed.

“Taken your chosen punishment for Master Richard, which punishment would be appropriate for you, Master Bruce?” Alfred asked softly walking to his master.

Bruce yanked his head.

“I’m an adult, Alfred, and I had to do what I did: the boy was in danger.”

“The police could have handled it, Bruce” Leslie crossed her arms.

“No, they couldn’t, Leslie! Dick had run away from an officer and there are many other things the police has to attend to.”

“So you considered it right to do something dangerous yourself while you could ask someone else to help” Leslie shook her head.

“Tony is out of town and I can’t have Selina all the time doing what it is my responsibility. I can do some things and it isn’t as if I’m strolling around picking fights! I’m fully responsible for my acts and as an adult I can take my own decisions.”

 Leslie frowned at him.

“You’re not much different from Richard…”

Selina couldn’t let her friend without help even if she agreed in some of the points made; however she could sense Bruce’s distress from this discussion and his suffering was unbearable for her.

“He is kinder and sweeter than this horrible brat!”

Alfred turned to her grinning and Selina spread her arms.

“What? He does have the right to an attorney, you know” Bruce despite his bad mood smiled at that. Alfred took his stern expression though he hardly hid his amusement.

“Actually, you are an accomplice, Miss Kyle.”

She crossed her arms over the chest.

“Unfair! I was all the time there watching over him: it would be better if I had stopped him and he sneaked out being all alone on the streets? And it’s not easy for me to say ‘no’ to Bruce.”
Leslie pressed her lips: that was difficult for all of them but they had to turn their hearts into stone to protect him.

“Then maybe we should separate you two for a couple of days” Selina’s eyes bulged and Bruce’s narrowed to slits.

“We were seeing each other almost every day even when I was in Falcone’s hands” Bruce said and Alfred locked eyes with Leslie who shook her head sad.

The doctor sat on the armchair near Bruce and touched his hand.

“Why you are doing that to us, Bruce? You must realize that this is extremely dangerous and we are in a daze on what to do.”

Alfred approached too.

“Have you thought Master Anthony’s reaction, Master Bruce?”

“He’ll understand…If you don’t say anything to him he’ll learn it later from rumors and it won’t be the same. I have neutralized his trackers on my armor and the Tumbler.”

Selina couldn’t hide her smile and neither the others.

“However that way he is going to suspect that you are going to do things you shouldn’t.”

Bruce rubbed his temple; a headache was slowly evolving to a migraine.

“You can’t put me in trial and confine me – I spent my entire life only with Selina taking my own decisions and we’ve managed quite well.”

Alfred gulped and Leslie took Bruce’s hand from his temple.

“A headache?” he didn’t answer and Leslie huffed. “Bruce…C’mon, a few days away from the cave would benefit you. You shouldn’t stay in cold and humidity…Alfred, can you prepare something to eat? Bruce needs to take his medicine.”

Bruce looked at the carpet where Hero sat having followed them from the great salon. He moved his chair away from Leslie who closed her eyes and stood following him. She leaned over him and cupped his face.

“You’re our angel, Bruce…We love you so much that you’re driving us mad when you endanger your life even for noble causes. You promised me to be careful.”

“I am! And I’m not abusing the armor but Dick was in danger…” he didn’t say anything more letting his eyes gaze the grounds from the large window.

The ring of the phone fell like a thunder alerting bad feelings in Bruce his eyes on Alfred who answered the phone.

“Master Bruce, Ms. Jhonas from the Social Service wants to talk to you.”

It was exactly what Bruce expected and the hits of the migraine became.

“Hello, Ms. Jhonas: Bruce Wayne.”

The others watched as he shook slightly his head listening to the woman. He pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I know, Ms. Jhonas; I also feel terrible for that…”

“It is a case of neglect, Mr. Wayne.”

“I’m not trying to make excuses, Ms. Jhonas, but we never let Richard out of our sight: my most trusted butler was there to drive him back home. Yet the boy is facing a tough period and he tries to let out some steam that way – I promise you it won’t happen again.”

He nodded listening to the social worker.

“Yes…Good night to you to, Ms. Jhonas.”

When he ended the call and returned the phone to Alfred his face was pale and his migraine became really torturing; Leslie opened one of the pill bottles she had brought and took a pill.

“Take that, honey” she said forgetting her previous anger.

“Thank you, Leslie” Bruce took the pill but the thought of the social service berating him was stronger than any pill Leslie could conjure.

“It is rumored that last night Batman had neutralized and captured two thugs who attacked a woman at the Narrows area…”

Joker was pacing the ground floor of his newest hideout casting sideways glances to his newest boys who watched the news. In Gotham was too easy to find dorks to work for you: they were everywhere like cockroaches.

The truth was that the clever ones had gone underground since things got tight yet the stupid ones were out there and frankly Joker didn’t care about brains: he had brain for everyone. He just wanted hands. Not to mention that his busted old thugs were sent to Arkham from where it wasn’t difficult to snatch out given that dear Harleen had put them in low security wards. So they were somewhere in the building ready to serve their daddy.

The news took a few seconds to register because he was thinking other things: blades and laugh gas…and his cooperation with Scarescrow. But when the word of interest flashed in his head – Batman -, he narrowed his eyes and jumped.

“Up – uuuuup the vooooolume!” he barked and his thug obliged.

Joker hunched and listened eager sniffing like a hungry hyena.

“Police has arrested two men last night, finding them unconscious in an alley in Narrows: bystanders said that they saw the men chasing a woman. Police didn’t confirm anything about Batman’s involvement but insight says that some Batarangs were found on the scene.”

Joker made a sharp gesture.

“Oooooout! All of youuuuu: beat it!” he exclaimed frustrated and moved his hands gesturing to the thugs to leave which they did scared of their bosses’ explosions.

Joker jumped and landed on the cement floor hitting hard his buttocks.
“Ouch! Daaaaamn, that hurt!” he crossed his legs and lolled his head on the side focusing on the screen. “Now I’m getting seeeeeee--riously pissed! Is this a way to treat your lawfully wedded husband, huh? He’s sniffing aaaaat me an’ instead goes for two losers! That’s uuuuuun--acceptable! That’s an insult…” he scratched his head. “But I like it! I looooooooove tough chicks!”

Suddenly, the screen was filled with two pictures: one with Bruce Wayne’s face – which made Joker lick his red lips - and some boy’s whom Joker recognized as the Grayson brat. Then they took the pictures causing a hurt pout from Joker that became a Cheshire grin seeing the blurry video where the boy was drinking beer in a crowded café eyeing provokingly the customers while quarreling with a dude that probably was the café’s owner.

“The new year came with troubles for the Person of the Year. Mr. Wayne’s ward, Richard Grayson, was seen in one of Gotham’s most popular cafes drinking beer and swearing at the other customers; more so he created an episode when the owner asked him to stop drinking alcohol since he was underage. The episode escalated according to witnesses and the owner called the police but upon the arrival of a police officer the youth ran out from the back door…”

“HEHEHEHEHAHAHAHUHUUUUUU!” Joker was shaking his head licking his lips. “Kids are a pain in the aaaaass, baby-batsy! You should have asked meeeeee what I have tooooo endure with my booooyys…” he pursed his lips thoughtful and focused again on the screen where Bruce’s picture was again displayed. “Mmmm…my wife is THE HOT STUFF, huh? Wait…I wasn’t thinking this” he scratched his head. “I get it now, babe… Youuuuuuur brat ran away alone in the dark forest when the big baaaaaad…Joker is here” he gestured to himself “an’ you wore your beeeeeeest attire to go fetch the little bastard…You write me off but you rush for that shit and nooooot only this but you beat two common muggers while youuuur Joker is thiiiirsty for a little attention!” he lowered his voice in a mock whine “a tiny glance… Oh! Baby, why you are so difficult???” he screamed hysterically and licked his lips. “Obviously, to turn me on…” he answered himself.

He jumped to his feet.

“However I muuuuuust remind Brucey-bats to whom he belongs and who should have his fuuuuuull attention! Boooooooyyyssss!!”

His thugs gathered surprised from every corner of the warehouse and some of them leaned from the railing of the upper level to listen.

“Hoooooooidays are oooooover, kiddos! Daddy will take you for a stroll in the town…” he rolled his eyes on the baffled expressions. “And I’ll buy you some ice cream!”

The thugs cheered and Joker shook his head.

“Thoooooose kids! It’s touching how easily they are bribed…HEHE!”

“There are three cars that exhibit odd driving behavior, sir. Two black SUVs proceeded by a purple with violet dots – they don’t have number plates. ”

Bruce frowned at the AI’s voice and touched the screen getting image from what was happening behind him on the road. He was returning to the Manor with his car enjoying the ride even if he couldn’t drive as he used to.

“Back cameras and microphones” he ordered the AI seeing in the screen with the road diagram three dots maneuvering crazily between the cars of the afternoon traffic jam.
Horns and curses from the infuriated drivers filled the inside of the car and...a hysterical laugh that managed to tower all the other sounds. Bruce pressed his lips: he knew that laughter...

“So the truce has ended...” he mumbled and sped up.

Bruce had only one thing in mind: pulling Joker and his thugs away from the city before the madman killed some innocent; he could see from the cameras that where embedded on the back of the car that Joker held a machine gun and shot randomly at cars and buildings.

“Honeeeeyyyyy!!! I’m coming!!!” the jester yelled shooting at the tires of Bruce’s car.

Only this car was Tony Stark’s creation and impenetrable from any aspect so even the tires where bullet and rocket proof. There wasn’t any worry and the car continued without problem yet Bruce was glancing at the screen and the mirrors because Joker was shooting at other cars too and some of them were toppled rolling on the road and hitting other cars.

“I’m demolishing castles to get to youuuuuu! Uhuhu! C’mon, baaaabe! Don’t be shyyyyy!”

Bruce clenched his jaw.

“Can you say if someone is badly injured or dead?”

“No, sir; there is no dead in the upturned cars – only injured. Police and ambulances are approaching fast.”

“Right” he said and accelerated to the maximum turning swiftly the wheel to the less crowded sideways roads leading outside the city; his eyes were sparkling with determination completely still on the electronic map the AI provided on the control panel’s second screen: not that Bruce needed that – as Batman he knew that city like the back of his palm but he wanted to be certain about his movements.

Joker keeping his half body outside the window with the machine gun pointing to the air and shooting followed him and the other two cars with his goons in Rabbid’s masks did the same shooting around causing terrorized screams from people ducking behind garbage bins to save their lives.

Another smooth maneuver of the wheel took the car momentarily out of Joker’s eyes: Bruce wanted to keep him baited.

“Foooollow him! UUUUUUUU! I love good chasings! Baaaaaabe, hold oooon, Jokey is coming! Uuhuhuhuhu!”

Joker’s enthusiasm was such that he pressed the trigger raining the air with bullets causing a shower of debris from the buildings fall on his head. He pouted irritated.

“Stupid buildings!”

Bruce saw the Chelsea Bridge in front of him: the traffic was thick because people were leaving from their jobs yet the lane to Palisades wasn’t packed because few people had their residences to the outskirts of the city. Yet Joker’s thugs were careless in their driving making slaloms between the cars of the opposite traffic lane, accidents being averted only because drivers were extra careful. However some cars stuck on the side of the bridge and Bruce got some sweat drops dreading that next a car might end up in the river.

He stepped on the emergency accelerator that gave extra speed to the car intending to get away from the bridge immediately taking the danger with him. When in the Palisades he could carry Joker to the woods where no innocent would be in danger.

“Wayne’s car is under attack!”

The pen fell from Lois’ hand and she along with her colleagues from the other desks at the Planet’s reporter floor gathered around Pete’s desk.

Clark’s heartbeat elevated instantly hearing that name but he put it again under reasoning: Bruce wasn’t his responsibility any longer even though his vitals still maintained some sensitivity to stimuli relevant to the human. Yet his feet dragged him to the same desk where on the flat PC screen images from public cameras showed Bruce’s unique car being chased by three SUVs.

“Put the Gazette’s site - their news helicopter must be on them” Lois urged her colleague.

Indeed, high definition footage showed the majestic in her gloomy city from above before zooming to a black sleek thunder heading to a bridge: behind three SUVs were running frenzied hitting on civilian cars. The screeching sound of tires was accompanied with enraged horns and curses but what stood out was a hysterical laughter that still nauseated and infuriated Clark: from the passenger’s window in the first vehicle that was purple with velvet dots (!!!) Joker had popped his half body out holding a machine gun which vomited fire constantly.

Bruce’s car was running so fast that hardly was visible.

“Let them try to catch THAT beast!” Frank exclaimed impressed but Lois was worried.

“He is dragging them out of the city” she whispered to herself but Clark heard her.

He agreed: this fit Bruce – he could imagine the man’s agony to draw Joker away from the innocent. Suddenly, he felt Lois’ eyes on him after what? One month? His heart filled with joy and hurried to meet her gaze. Out, she mouthed to him unnoticed by their colleagues who were mesmerized by the black wonder of Bruce’s car.

Lois and Clark left the space as Perry rushed to the desk his reporters were gathered.

“You won’t go to him?” she demanded once they were at the corridor opposite the lift.

“You’re talking to me again?” Clark grinned.

“Shut up, you dork! Bruce needs you!”

Clark shook his head.

“He doesn’t: the Avengers are guarding him and Thor…” he smirked. “I bet Thor tracks his vitals all the time.”

“Like you did?” she remarked snidely. “You can’t be sure, Clark: how can you gamble his life?”

“Superman is not welcomed in Gotham: the city and Bruce have their protectors. It’s over!” he murmured and smirked. “You want me to go there in hopes of reconciling with him but that won’t happen, Lois. You have to accept it!”

Lois’ eyes flashed and her lips stretched in wrath.
“NO, I don’t want you there for reconciliation because you’re not worthy of Bruce! Asshole!” she spat and returned furious inside.

Clark shook his head, rolled his eyes and rushed inside to watch the developments: he didn’t feel like going there besides it was sure that Bruce would get away. Besides if Superman was seen there Diana would hear; she’d be heartbroken and Clark wanted her happy.

Tony was working at his private lab at Wayne Tower with Lucius. He had returned this morning from New York and devoted all his attention to installing trackers to the items that had so much fascinated Bruce: alas! Lucius had already begun working when Tony went to the Tower adding another brilliant mind putting aside the surgery project for lesser things.

Despite the fact reports and some discussions he had with several S.H.I.E.L.D. agents from around the world had informed him about a general sense of strange movements he wasn’t persuaded that what he was doing now was worthy of his time and brilliance. Besides, there was nothing specific.

“Sir, pardon me for the interruption” Jarvis’ voice broke the silence of the lab.

Tony had put the AI in constant connection because he expected updates from Pepper about StarkExpo’s preparations.

“Speak, Jarvis.”

“Master Bruce’s car is under attack.”

The tools Tony was holding almost fell and Lucius looked at him: the billionaire’s eyes had widened and met Lucius’ worried ones.

“Who? Can you tell me who?”

“Police’s frequency is filled with…”

“Just the fuckin’ name, Jarvis!” he pulled the working whole face mask off and threw it on the floor.

“It is the Joker, sir.”

“Fuck!” Tony’s fist crashed on the working bench and Lucius grabbed some tools before falling.

Ironman’s armor began wrapping Tony’s body; the billionaire’s eyes were still, sparkling, and his breath was pressed. He was worried and angry.

“Lucius, I’m sorry…”

“Not at all, Mr. Stark. Please, hurry…”

“Where?” Tony asked his AI; the wall of his lab opening in the centre to allow him to take off.

“Downtown, sir; now close to the Chelsea Bridge.”

“Oooohh! Baaaaabyyyyyy! You turn me ooooon! I loooove your foreplaying!”

Bruce was hearing him clearly and growled: once in the Palisades he would be able to escape Joker:
the car had some attacking weapons yet Bruce didn’t want Joker be more certain about him being Batman.

Finally! Bruce thought as the car left the bridge and rushed on the almost empty Palisades road, the three cars of Joker at his heels.

“What’s your briefs’ cooooolor, baaaabe?” Joker yelled and Bruce couldn’t fight the blush on his face. “Black are myyyyyy favorite: AOUUUUUUUUUUU!” he howled like a wolf. “But black is your favorite, tooooooo, huh? HEHEHEHEHAHAHAHA!!! We’re a match maaaaaade in Heaawaennnnn – or even better: in Heeeell!!!!”

Bruce turned sharply the wheel leading the car out of the main road and to the soil path that crossed a small valley separating two forests right and left; a little snow covered the hard soil. Bruce heard the tires hissing as the three cars halted momentarily unable to take the turn instantly to start again turning to the woods.

He watched through the back cameras Joker’s SUV’s headlights smashing in shreds and then smoke emanating from the engine. The car halted so abruptly that Joker smacked the back of his head on the window before the second car hit the back of his car and then the third hit the second.

Thick arrows protruded from the headlights and the car’s metal and Bruce frowned but continued his way hearing Joker barking to his thugs to turn the engines on.

But then an arrow pierced Joker’s arm that held the machine gun and the weapon fell. The jester’s face distorted in a scream more of frustration than pain.

Bruce had lowered the speed watching through the cameras to see what he already knew: Arrow landed smoothly in front of Joker’s car, ready to launch another of his arrows.

“Kill him!” Joker barked but his driver had petrified staring at the arrow and the goons on the other vehicles couldn’t even see the archer.

Cursing Joker slipped his uninjured hand inside his belt grabbing his pistol to do the work himself only to get an arrow scratching his face.

Yet the jester wasn’t terrorized by that: he licked his lips and turned the gun on the archer who smirking launched another arrow to the driver who panicked started instantly the engine making his boss smack his head on the window frame and lose another gun.

“Wait, you moooooorron!”’ Joker screamed but the SUV was already rushing to the opposite direction, the other two cars following their boss whose hysteric cracked the peace of the woods. “What kind of a stupor- hero works in daylight! Where our world is heading?!?”

Bruce turned back his car and the Arrow walked confidently towards the still moving car. A clear confident smile was on his face while his eyes clearly visible under the hood’s shadow flashed like dancing flames as his focus was on the black car’s driver.

Bruce stopped the car and opened setting his chair outside to slither in. He moved the chair towards Arrow who was watching him a bit hunched with his arms crossed over his chest.

“Thank you” Bruce said.

Arrow shook his head.

“It is my pleasure taking you out of hard situations…” the flames in his eyes seemed to increase their Bruce looked towards the dust that betrayed Joker’s convoy and moved his chair some feet away trying to see better.

“They’re getting away or they might do a U turn and come back.”

Arrow grinned having followed.

“Neither…My arrows pierced their tires – they don’t have the tires your car has – so in a bit they’ll be stuck and the police are coming.”

Bruce ruffled his hair and Arrow leaned over him.

“Are you alright?” the stranger asked Bruce worried.

Bruce nodded.

“Fine; Tony built that car” he smiled “believe me it is like a fortress.”

“I’m glad.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“I didn’t know you were a Gothamite…I thought you were from New York” Bruce knew that the man wasn’t either from New York or Gotham but the Arrow should not suspect that Bruce Wayne had met him elsewhere.

However the man’s smirk was amused.

“I can’t stay in one place for long…”

“I see…” Bruce nodded. “Mmm…I must get back to the Manor now before my people hear the news and panic.”

“Are you sure? Maybe you should go to a hospital first?”

“I’m just fine, thank you. Do you want to come with me to have lunch?”

Arrow narrowed his eyes.

“That’s a tempting proposition but another time.”

“Okay” Bruce gave him his hand and Arrow took it in a warm handshake.

“So long, Mr. Wayne” he said and with an impressive jump he was on a tree branch and in an instant he changed from branch to branch like a monkey.

If Bruce’s sight wasn’t trained he wouldn’t be able to follow him; he cocked an eyebrow impressed.

“A real Robin Hood, huh?” he mumbled and turned the chair to get inside his car that was some feet away.

Bruce smiled hearing the familiar no-sound of Ironman approaching.

“You’re late, veteran…You missed the fun” he chuckled.
“Can you connect me with the car or Bruce’s laptop?” Tony asked Jarvis as he was floating over the Chelsea Bridge where ambulances were taking the injured that the firefighters were taking out of the crashed and upturned cars. He was relieved that there were no casualties but his insides were clenched for Bruce.

“I’m afraid not, sir: too many noise…but Master Bruce’s car is in the woods and the cars that chased him are stopped. Away from him… police cars are heading there.”

Tony’s heartbeat returned to its normal levels: he was still over Chelsea Bridge to the end that led to Palisades.

“Sir, someone is approaching Master Bruce’s car…”

Tony frowned.

“Nobody can do anything to him inside the car” he pointed to the AI but he wanted to reassure himself.

Bruce smiled looking up to the red and gold figure approaching fast but immediately the smile vanished and a frown creased his brow; the figure had halted midair and raised his fisted palms revealing the beam launchers in his wrists. Bruce managed to push his chair away just a second before the bullets rained his previous position.

“Master Bruce is out of the car, sir, and the one who approached him shot at him.”

“No!” Tony exclaimed, his eyes almost popping out of their sockets; he accelerated to the top of his speed. “Can you give me view through satellite, Google Earth…anything?!! Who’s attacking, damn?”

“Sir, it is Ironman.

Bruce knew that it couldn’t be Tony but now what mattered was to avoid the bullets since the fake was once again upturning his palms. He realized that as much as the chair permitted him to move it also made things harder: he maneuvered the chair again to escape the bullets and towards the car – if he managed to get inside nothing could get to him.

But ‘Ironman’ hit with fire the path he was following towards the car. There was a little snow on the ground but the humidity couldn’t subdue that much fire power so pillars of fire filled the space between Bruce and the car forcing him to turn the chair to the right. He growled frustrated because it was so embarrassing trying to defend himself moving the chair. Thankfully, this chair wasn’t any chair so he activated the protecting field making a new attempt to surge through the fire to his car.

A blast right to the chair threw the chair far away from the car and though Bruce wasn’t hit by the blast due to the field the chair fell to the ground; a ‘coat’ of nanofibers activated at once sensing his fall and ‘hugged’ him protecting him from the hard ground.

Bruce smiled though the situation wasn’t for smiles.
“It’d be like Ironman protecting you” he heard Tony’s voice.

“It’d be like Ironman protecting you” he heard Tony’s voice. “Even from ‘yourself’…” Bruce mumbled inside his cocoon-shield when a white energy beam left the fake Ironman’s eyes to hit the chair and the field.

It felt like earthquake and Bruce realized that the field although held it wouldn’t last much. Thankfully, he had provided to install a bit of offense to his defense so he brushed a button on the armrest that was in front of his face after the fall and a laser beam hit the fake Ironman who drew back surprised.

But before Bruce could take a breath another light beam shook him hard cracking his shield and forcing him to gather himself behind the still strong part folding to the chest his dead legs with his arms.

‘Ironman’ landed in front of him and stretched his right hand fingers to him ready to launch energy daggers as Bruce knew from Tony’s sayings. Bruce brushed again the small round panel on the armrest to send a nanowave to his assailant’s chest making him stagger backwards: this should be able to deactivate the armor but the fake’s armor remained intact.

As ‘Ironman’ was recovering from the shock Bruce crawled towards the woods dragging along the chair and the field around: his attack failed and his opponent would strike again so he pushed himself towards the forest where he could take better cover.

But his assailant took off and launched a rain of attacks of every kind of weapons he had to break the shield. Bruce’s body felt the hits and the vibrations: the shield wouldn’t last much more that kind of onslaught so despite the rain of fire he continued crawling when a loud bang told him that the field was breached.

He turned his eyes to his attacker who landed and approached smugly; Bruce could imagine a smirk though he couldn’t imagine a face. Ironman upturned his palm manifesting the launchers in his wrist that loaded with a horrible sound.

Bruce looked at him with cold eyes totally fearless and put his hands on the ground launching his body some feet away avoiding the fire: to the right of the forest’s opening stood a big rock: not that the stone would hold that much firepower yet it was something.

‘Ironman’ growled in frustration and readied his launchers to fire again. But then a nightmarish bang blew ‘Ironman’ in the air among a cloud of smoke and fire to crash again on the ground.

Bruce saw Mjolnir spiting fires in Thor’s hand mirroring the wrath in its Master’s eyes. Thor’s face was distorted, anything but the kind, sweet face and Bruce could discern the flash of thunders – thunders that cracked the sky around him. It was the first time Bruce was seeing the kind god in all his magnificence and might and unavoidably his mind ran to Superman. Thor was a god fighting for his mate…

‘Ironman’ came over his initial shock and turned again to Bruce to be toppled by Thor’s body who growled causing a sound like a hundred thunders together; the two of them launched on the air, the fake Ironman distancing himself from the enraged god and launching missiles against him that Thor stopped waving his hammer.

Bruce’s insights formed a tight knot: he didn’t want Thor being so bonded with him. Not again…

But then as the god shook his hammer sending a wave of electricity and fire to blast on the fake Ironman’s armor Bruce heard hurried footsteps of many people approaching from every corner of the frozen valley.

He took his gaze from the battle in the sky and saw with widened eyes at least twenty men coming towards him with squinted eyes and gloomy faces: they held firearms and Bruce began crawling backwards towards the rock: his dead legs a major obstacle. He could use his mind’s will but he didn’t want anyone witness his true abilities.

When the bang of several firearms echoed through the forest Thor’s eyes bulged and he looked down sweat covering his brow, panting from agony: he had left Bruce unprotected! He had turned his body already descended to him when the ‘Ironman’ attacked him bodily stopping his movement. Thor ground his teeth roaring in frustration, his panicked eyes searching for his mortal.

His heart returned to its place seeing a stranger in dark green attire and a bow in his back grabbing Bruce’s body and covering him with his: an ally. Thor had heard from Bruce about that man.

The fake Ironman fired his missiles against him but Thor managed to shake his hammer diverting the missiles.

Bruce stared at the eyes of the man who had grabbed him in his arms and brought him behind the rock where he intended to take cover.

“I’m here now, Bruce” the Arrow said calmly but so touched that Bruce frowned. “They would have to tread over my dead body to hurt you…” he whispered in Bruce’s cheek. “Are you alright?”

“Yes…” Bruce answered not as steady as he felt but with a slight tremor to manifest fear; he held Arrow’s upper arms and drag himself from under him to get some distance.

The men were approaching the rock raining the stone with bullets. Bruce recognized them as former thugs of Falcone who had gone in hiding after their boss’s downfall.

Arrow squatted and with swift movements began throwing arrows at them which were founding their target injuring the men who were falling on the ground screaming.

Bruce pretended to pant and looked on the sky were missiles and thunders collided filling the sky with multi-colored lethal fireworks.

“I guess you had a quarrel yesterday?” Arrow asked snidely pointing with his gaze at ‘Ironman’.

“This isn’t Tony” Bruce replied.

Thor’s thunder hit the man’s arc reactor.

“Thor seems to agree with you…” Arrow said launching three arrows at once causing screams of pain from three different men.

“If this was Tony such hit in his arc reactor would have neutralized him…” Bruce thought.

Mjolnir was hardly visible as Thor blocked the rainfall of laser and missiles.

“Loki” the god roared addressing the fake Ironman “this isn’t fun!”

Yet the fake Ironman didn’t answer which convinced Thor that it wasn’t Loki after all. Loki or not the Asgardian clenched his jaw, charged Mjolnir with his ire and launched a horizontal twister of thunders against ‘Ironman’ who was thrown off the sky and several feet away on the ground. Thor launched at him though this forced him to distance from Bruce.
Arrow saw surprised the men he had hit rising and surging at the rock.

“This is what you get when you don’t kill them at once” he said grudging at Bruce and placed three new Arrows to his bow’s cord.

“You could have knocked them out…” Bruce retorted and Arrow lolled his head on the side crooking his lips and freeing his arrows against their attackers.

“These men aren’t subdued by pain…” he said thoughtful and Bruce nodded thinking about the thugs in Metropolis’ attack. “And we are cornered…and in serious trouble if Thor doesn’t finish soon with ‘Ironman’…” he pointed with his eyes to new thugs coming behind the first twenty. “They are like zombies!”

Thor approached the fallen ‘Ironman’ and raised his hammer ready to give the final hit and return to Bruce who was in some considerable distance. But the fake ‘Ironman’ just evaporated.

Two of the thugs surged against Bruce and Arrow tackled them knowing that the others taking advantage of the lack of arrows surged the rock everywhere. While he was fighting them another came pointing his firearm’s barrel to Bruce who grabbed a stone and threw it to his head sending him away to topple another thug behind him.

Arrow turned his head to Bruce smiling blocking at the same time the punch of one of his opponents and kicking the second in the groin.

“You’re a brave young man, Bruce…”

His eyes bulged when another thug stormed at Bruce but the new attacker’s eyes widened and he fell on the ground.

Bangs filled the small valley and new screams of pain but for Bruce one sound mattered: the velvet humming of the true Ironman…and his friend’s curses as he was hitting the attackers.

Bruce careful because the still standing thugs were shooting looked from behind the rock. Steve was launching his shield to hit the thugs who were carried away from the force and crashed on the ground; upon sending his shield away, Captain fell on another cluster of thugs beating them to a pulp while Ironman was flying around launching beams and stunning bullets.

“Sonovabitches! This is my Bruce! You motherfuckers!” Tony’s voice was distorted, hardly recognizable from wrath and agony.

Thor out of breath arrived to the scene but his agony was eased seeing his comrades neutralizing the enemies. He hit Mjolnir on the ground and a giant crack began running to the battle field knocking out every thug it met.

Arrow having knocked out his own opponents and relieved from the Avengers’ intervention sat down next to Bruce and brought his face close to the youth’s trying to figure out if he was injured. There were some scratches on Bruce’s cheek that bled and he had some bruises to his cheekbones.

“I’m fine” Bruce answered his unuttered question and Arrow smiled.

The archer took his bow and stood; he fixed his bow across his torso and leaned to wrap his arms around Bruce’s torso to lift him in standing position supporting him. The archer’s palm was over Bruce’s belly supposedly to hold him more securely but the young man felt that hand trembling feathery touching him. He stared at that hand and saw that the green leather of his glove was torn and blood was visible from a scar.
Steve was engaged in a fight with three thugs and Tony was stunning those that lay on the ground still moving when several police cars swarmed the place from the country road; officers with pointing their guns came out; Jim Gordon first of all.

Thor ran to Bruce and his breath was ragged from agony and relief; Bruce’s eyes locked with the god’s eyes that had returned to their kind, sweet expression causing Arrow’s frowning.

“Thank you, Thor” Bruce said politely and Thor just nodded his golden locks framing his face.

Bruce saw Thor’s arms twitching ready to take him.

“No” Bruce said calm but determined and Thor’s arms fell at his sides.

Steve ran to them and Tony landed deactivating his face plate: the moments of agony he suffered evident in his stormy face; the billionaire was still panting. Their eyes met and Tony stormed to Bruce squeezing him in a bear hug; the Arrow stepping aside.

“Mr. Wayne, are you alright?” Jim Gordon arrived with his glasses askew from the running; he put his gun back in its holder.

Tony let Bruce breathe but not out of his arms and the younger man looked at Jim.

“I’m fine, Commissionaire, thank you…”

“We were chasing Joker and his thugs in the woods” Jim said.

Bruce smiled.

“I know: did you catch them?”

“His thugs, they were the same who were arrested in the attack at City Hall’s square: they escaped from Arkham. We chased Joker too but we didn’t find him.”

“Of course” Tony uttered exasperated rolling his eyes.

Arrow was retreating to the forest.

“Ei, archer!” Tony addressed him and the Arrow turned his head to him.

“I prefer ‘Arrow’…” he retorted smiling.

“Thank you! Bruce is…” he inhaled as his voice cracked from emotion. “Saving him is greater than if you had saved me…”

“You are welcomed to the Avengers” Steve said walking to him and Bruce looked at Captain America: he still didn’t trust completely the archer.

Arrow shook his head.

“That’s an honor, Captain, but I’m not a hero.”

“Then ask me whatever you want” Tony said completely serious.

Arrow’s eyes found Bruce.

“Look after Mr. Wayne: it is odd how evil is drawn to purity…” he stared at the youth for some seconds and then withdrew to the forest.

Tony held tighter Bruce and turned to his comrades and Jim.

“I’m taking this, young man out of here…”

Bruce shook his head.

“The car… and the phone is ringing” his smartphone was in his black jacket’s inner pocket.

“Alfred probably: it’d be better to see you in flesh as for the car we’ll take it later” he said sharply not wanting to disclose that the car had auto pilot.

What was obvious to Bruce as Ironman took off was that Tony was shaking from ultimate terror and wanted to take him to safety as soon as possible. His friend’s face was still pale.
“Are you hurt?” Tony asked tightening his embrace around Bruce’s waist. “Do you feel any pain?” his voice was pressed, hasty.

Bruce shook his head.

“No, Tony, I…” he was ready to say that there was no reason for hastiness and that he could at least answer his Smartphone that was ringing, but his friend had already activated his face plate and left the valley which looked like a battle field.

Under them people lay unconscious on the frozen soil, some of them moving weakly and moaning. Police officers were handcuffing those conscious and the paramedics who had just come with ambulances gathered those injured or unconscious. The heavy smell of used firepower hovered over the narrow strip of land as the big rock and even the soil had the marks of bullets; smoke still swirled all over.

Jim was taking Steve’s and Thor’s testimonies clenching his waist troubled from this unexpected attack – not the one from Joker: anything was expected from the jester. But the second one was a mystery.

After everything that just happened Bruce felt a cold wave running his spine; Ironman although fake had just tried to kill him and now he was taken away by the same entity – of course, it was his best friend under the plate and he knew he was safe yet he’d like to be able to see Tony’s eyes and not that soulless alloy.

He could guess that Tony was checking his body for any serious injury: Tony must have been through a Hell knowing that Bruce was under attack by…Ironman. He had seen the dead paleness over his face, the blankness in his eyes, his disheveled hair, his ragged breath…

Bruce felt awful…and his friend’s suffering just added a load more. He tried to not think of what just took place, of how he had acted, but his mind replayed all. And Bruce felt horrible because once again he had crawled to save his life, waiting to be saved… Of course, he had done a lot of this during his years with Falcone: crawling waiting to take the blows just begging to be spared…during the last years was part of the plan, an act but before he just waited to be saved.

He had waited years to be saved, craving for someone to help him and nobody came…and now after the battle he gave to save himself, he was disgusted seeing himself being a ‘damsel in distress’: he was used to save people not being saved…

But he had to bury those feelings in the back side of the deeper depths of his mind to focus once again to more important aspects: the fake Ironman, the Arrow, Thor’s expression when he was fighting ‘Ironman’. He pressed his lips and the pain throughout his jaw line made him aware of the hits he got while rolling on the ground…like a warm.

“Hiding behind a tree trunk waiting better people to save you…” Diana sneered at him.

He swallowed the acid in his mouth and looked into Ironman’s cold lenses.

“Tony?”

“Almost there, litt’ guy…”
But still the face plate covered his friend’s features. Bruce turned his head towards the Manor that was coming closer fast. He could see Alfred already standing before the open main door: worry and relief playing on his wrinkled face. Next to him stood Matt; of course…it was almost the time for their session.

Ironman landed smoothly but then Tony’s movements were anything but smooth; he rushed inside supporting Bruce settling him gently on the sofa.

Alfred’s fast moving eyes were appraising his young master’s condition appalled from the tears on Bruce’s expensive fine clothes that were wrinkled, dirty and drenched: appalled not for the clothes’ damage, of course, but for the conditions that led there. But it was the sight of the youth’s face that clenched his chest because he hoped that he wouldn’t have to see again bruises and scratches on that beloved face. And blood: Bruce’s left eyebrow had a wound enough deep to bleed. He ran to the sofa to help Bruce take off his soaked jacket.

“Leslie is on her way here” Alfred said and Tony who had just deactivated his face plate nodded, his eyes determined.

“Is there a serious injury?” Matt asked Tony; the physiotherapist of the Avengers was certain that Tony had already scanned his friend.

Bruce used his hands to come into sitting position.

“I’m here, you know; and I’m alright, Tony, you didn’t have to call Leslie.”

Tony having disassembled his armor clenched his waist with both hands and looked at his friend in a way that made Bruce feel oddly.

“I didn’t call her” Tony realized the odd expression in his eyes and changed to something more Stark-ish. “I just saw her car approaching: she must have figured that I’d bring you to the Manor and rushed here; she will be probably stalled a bit from the police blocks” he licked his lips uncomfortable and looked at Matt. “There’s no major injury according to my scans and the energy casts are in their place, just contusions but I want to be sure.”

“I told you that I’m fine” Bruce said.

“No, you’re not: I’m not fine so you can’t be fine either” Tony spat.

Bruce was watching frowned Tony speaking for him without giving him any attention; in the meantime, Hero climbed on the sofa and on his lap licking the scratches over his face.

Alfred took softly the kitten and placed him down holding a piece of cotton drenched with alcohol. He began cleaning gently his young master’s scratches once again impressed by the youth’s handling of pain. Of course, Master Bruce was used to much worse pain than the sting of alcohol on open scratches.

“Master Bruce, pardon me for the pain” he had forced his voice to not shake from his previous terror upon hearing that Master Bruce was under attack.

Yet Bruce could sense how shaken his good friend was; he brushed his upper arms smiling.

“It’s nothing, Alfred…and I’m fine” he chuckled. “A bit shaken; scared” Matt was there after all “but I’ll live.”

Alfred knew that it was inappropriate for a butler but his fingertips moved a bit out of the cotton and touched his young master’s cold cheek. He grinned.

Tony turned his head to them, his expression still tense as if ready to explode.

“His temperature is below normal: he is on the verge of hypothermia.”

“I’ll prepare a hot bath” Alfred suggested.

“No, Alfred, thank you but I want Matt to make a first examination” Tony retorted looking at Matt who nodded. “Leslie should be here any moment now so she’ll make her own assessment.”

He strode to Bruce who stared at him with narrowed eyes but Tony didn’t have the luxury to acknowledge that stare; Alfred stood and the billionaire from Malibu placed his hands around Bruce’s waist and under his knees lifting him up in bridal style. Two friends’ eyes collided.

“Tony…” Bruce could see in Tony’s eyes still the fear and the distress along with a dry determination; he needed to speak with his friend.

“Not now, Bruce” Tony cut him sharply “your health is the priority.”

Bruce pressed his lips and was ready to retort but Tony’s eyes became softer.

“Can you do me this favor, littl’ guy?”

Bruce closed his eyes and Tony activating Ironman’s boots took Bruce to the gym where a fully equipped examination room was attached. Matt followed but Alfred stayed in the salon shaking his head troubled having sensed the odd atmosphere between the two friends. He saw Hero storming to the way his master was taken and the butler grinned.

“Your young master needs your warmth…”

Tony laid Bruce softly on the examination table and put his hands on both his shoulders looking his friend straight in the eyes.

“Listen to Matt, will you? Leslie will be here soon.”

Bruce shook his head and huffed.

“Tony, I’m fine!”

Tony grinned.

“I know you are, buddy, but it is better to be sure, huh?” he winked and walked towards the exit. “When you’re finished” he said to Matt “notify me to come and get Bruce.”

“Okay, Tony” Matt nodded and closed the door behind Tony.

He came to Bruce who had raised himself in a sitting position.

“I’d like you to take off your clothes and wear your sweat shorts to examine you” he took the screen and adjusted it around the examination table knowing how shy his patient was. “And we’ll make some massage afterwards to ease the tension and possible cramps from the exertion.”

“Fine” Bruce said licking his lips, swallowing his distaste.

Upon returning to the salon Tony found Leslie as he had guessed. Her face was like made of granite and her eyes sparkled with a mix of worry and anger while her tight bun of working hours was disheveled.

“How is he?” she demanded as soon as she saw Tony.

Alfred cocked his eyebrows.

“I told dear Leslie that Master Bruce is fine but she wasn’t satisfied with my diagnosis” he remarked in his snide way.

“My scans showed nothing worrisome but Matt is examining him right now at the gym.”

“You scanned him for brain injuries? Internal bleeding?” she asked already starting to move towards the gym. “We can transfer him to the clinic.”

“I’d have taken him there immediately if I had found anything yet you know better.”

But Leslie had already moved out of the room just nodding.

“I’ll make some tea” Alfred said “since bath is called off for now a hot brewage will warm Master Bruce up.”

Tony nodded and watched Alfred leaving. He however needed something more than a tea…

When Alfred returned to the salon his eyes slightly widened.

“Master Anthony, I do not think that…”

Tony raised his index finger stopping him and swallowed in a gulp the rest of his glass’ whiskey. He filled it again from the bottle he had on the fireplace. Alfred approached: he could see from the remaining booze in the bottle that Master Anthony had drunk at least two more glasses; also, he could see that Ironman was shaken; scared maybe...

The Englishman took softly the bottle and the glass from the younger man’s hand.

“Alcohol isn’t any kind of solution, sir.”

Tony yanked his head backwards huffing and ran his fingers through his messy hair.

“Thankfully, I have a spare wheelchair – I must bring it because the other is completely wrecked” he said bypassing the subject.

Alfred pressed his lips: so that was the reason for Master Anthony’s weird behavior. The attack was really lethal if Master Bruce’s wheelchair was destroyed. Tony as if reading the butler’s understanding stretched his hand to take the glass back raising his eyebrows.

“I’m afraid I can’t comply with your wishes, Master Anthony” Alfred said with his voice of conviction holding the bottle away from his hand and Tony let his head hang on his chest disappointed. “Drinking won’t correct things neither will change what has happened.”

Tony yanked his head backwards growling and made a small twist to turn his back to the Englishman hiding his face in his palms only to raise his head a second later turning again to Alfred.

“Alfred” he said confiding, leaning towards him “the chair’s protecting field was destroyed! If Thor had come a second later Bruce would have been dead!” he pointed out widening his eyes. “In the hands of a bastard impersonating me!” he stabbed his index finger to his own chest. “Dead! It was sooooo close…” he showed the tip of his fingertip. “We almost lost him again, Alfred, after everything! And this time it’d be definite…”

Alfred left the bottle and glass on the fireplace’s white marble mantelpiece and approached his young master: he felt for him, he shared his agony and dread. He was still distraught himself.

“Master Anthony, it is alright now. Master Bruce is here, safe and sound.”

Tony shook his head.

“Till when, Alfred?” he closed his eyes “Can’t take it anymore…Won’t let it anymore…I won’t lose him again…” he turned his back to the butler. “I love that little guy and I can’t just watch each time a bastard attacks him at will endangering his life…I was late today, Alfred…and my delay could have cost Bruce’s life…”

Alfred touched his hands to the younger man’s hunched shoulders.

“It wasn’t your fault, sir” Tony was shaking his head in disbelief.

“It is, Alfred, because I let it happen…”

Alfred frowned.

“Sir, you must be careful; do not be hasty to make something that you might regret later” Tony turned to him, his eyes glimmering. “It is better to calm down.”

“No, Alfred: if I calm down as you say, I will continue this failed Mondus Vivendi and next time Bruce might…He is so selfish in his self sacrificing nature…” he sighed.

“Master Anthony…” Tony closed his eyes and ruffled his locks discerning Alfred's disagreement. “Miss Potts called: she tried to reach you through your personal phone number and Jarvis but she couldn’t. She is very distressed: if I may, I think you should speak with her.”

Tony smiled and nodded.

“I will; thank you, Alfred” he pouted “I’m going upstairs to talk to her; if Matt and Leslie finish before I return you know where the spare chair is.”

Alfred gave a court nod.

“I certainly do, sir.”

Tony saluted Alfred in military style and ascended slowly the main staircase to the bedrooms. Alfred pressed his lips.

The Smartphone rang and in the complete silence of Harleen’s office at Arkham echoed like a thunder. The young psychiatrist was writing at her laptop and was startled; she cast a glare at the gadget: it was her second Smartphone, the personal one… she crooked her mouth annoyed and picked it up.

“Dr. Quinzel speaking.”

“Do yaaaa make aaaaah… house calls? Heheheheha…”
A shiver ran Harleen’s spine hearing that nasal voice.

“It depends…” she slurred.

“Touuuuugh piece…” Joker mumbled and chuckled. “Mmm…even when youuur patient bleeeds to see ya?”

Harleen took off her glasses.

“Where are you?”

“There’s an abandoned kiosk at the right alleyway besiiide our favorite Asylum…”

She bit her bottom lip.

“You’re…”

“Let me guess…crazyyyyy?! Wowww! You reaaaallly needed those Phds to make that diagnose, huh? Hehe!”

Harleen crooked her mouth and snorted.

“I’m coming.”

Joker heard the end of the dial and smirked.

“Of course you are, Harlequin…”

He squeezed the spot on his upper arm where the thick arrow had pierced the skin; Joker had already removed the arrow himself. He could have treated his injury yet he thought that this was a great chance to have Harlequin more invested in him: women loved to take care of wounded people.

And truly it took Harleen only ten minutes to arrive. She had stashed in her briefcase the contents of a first aid kit and entered her car. In order to not raise suspicions to the guards she drove away from the Asylum and when she was out of vision range took a sideways road to approach the abandoned kiosk from the road behind the kiosk.

Joker heard the car and his eyes stayed focused on the door till the young psychiatrist entered; the jester noticed that her glasses were slightly askew despite the calmness all over her face. Harleen regarded the covered in spider webs and dust small space with disgust but as soon as she laid eyes on him her eyes bulged: his left side was drenched in blood and some drops had stained the dust covered cement.

Harleen rushed to him and fell on her knees touching the spot where the blood spurted. Joker giggled.

“Oh! Dooooc, sooooo much interest for good ooool’ me?”

“Take your jacket off!” she ordered him pressing her lips.

Joker cocked his eyes.

“Soootttoo much haaasty!! I sympathize with your thirst for this goooooorgeous boooody but” he blinked cute “be gentle, baaabe… I’m a virgin! HUHUUUUUHUUHUUU…”

“Shut up!” Harleen cut his shit and helped him remove the jacket and then his shirt.
She looked at his wound hiding her loathe under her poignant professional expression and opened the first aid kit.

“Who did that?” she demanded as she began cleaning the wound.

Joker giggled.

“Youuuuu don’t even waaaaatch the news?! Nerd! If people don’t watch the news how am I going to become faaaaamous?”

Harleen placed her palm over his brow to see if he ran a fever.

“Noooooo, doc, I’m my charming usual self…Uuuuuuu! I’m always hot headed aaand hoot all over!” he twitched his eyebrows glancing at his groin pointedly. “Ouch-y!” he uttered as Harleen cleaned the wound with antiseptic. “HAHAHAHAHAHAAAA! Youuuuu like making me pain, huh? Nauuughty girl!”

“You attacked Wayne again?” she asked dissaprovingly, her disbelief evident.

Joker looked at her with cocked eyebrows enjoying her reaction.

“Everyon’ has his soft spots!”

“He is going to be the death of you, Mr. J.”

Joker closed his eyes in delight.

“Aaaaand what sweet deaaaath that’d be…Uah! I’m so rom--antic!”

Harleen rolled her eyes.

“It looks like a wound made from an arrow…”

Joker nodded giggling and stretched his other arm to take from the floor a thick arrow whose head was drenched in blood and flesh.

“Yeah! This one…HEHEHEHEHEEEEEE!! I was hit by freakin’ Robin Hood himself” he scratched his head thoughtful. “I guess this makes me the Sheeeeeriff of Gotham and Brucey Lady Maaaaarion?” he burst out in a fit of maniacal laughter.

The young psychiatrist didn’t comment and occupied herself in preparing the needle for sewing the wound.

“You pulled out the arrow yourself?”

“Yeeeeees, Ma’am! Since maaany of my boys were busted! Oh! It was such a spreeeeeee; I couldn’t stop laughing!”

Harleen stabbed a bit hard the needle and Joker jerked.

“Then you won’t have a problem with that…” she snorted.

Joker yanked his head backwards completely unfazed.

“Doooooo your magic, doc…”
"I think you’re a masochist, Mr. J” she said sewing the flesh.

“For loving Bruuuuucey?"

She cocked an eyebrow.

“That too; but mainly because you laughed pulling the arrow of yourself.”

Joker pouted surprised.

“Aaaand what should I have done? Crying? Pain is soooooo much fun…”

Harleen lolled her head on the side.

“Then you are a masochist!”

Joker sobered and leaned towards her; his eyes engaging hers with a sick shine framed by his untamed green curls.

“Doooooo I look like a masochist?” he hissed and then cackled. “HEHEHEHEEEEEE! The American Psychiatry Association would have to make a new DSM only for meeeeee…and still they’d have failed to scratch even the surface…” he whispered sensually to the young doctor who was almost done with the sewing.

She knew that; Joker was a unique sample: different from everything known; out of any category. Suddenly she realized that his lips were too close to hers and slightly open; this time her eyes dove into his. They were both serious as if estimating the pros and cos of this proximity.

And then Joker captured her lips making funny noises like in cartoons and detached abruptly.

“Mmmmuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuu! Thanks, doc…Ooooooh! You doooo look good in my lipstick…” he scratched the top of his head “good think I didn’t wear the other: the baaaaaad lipctick with the spicy mix” he pointed his index finger at her lips where Joker’s lips’ outline had stayed in a grotesque red.

Harleen wiped her lips with the back of her palm and Joker giggled because the result was worse. The young psychiatrist annoyed took out from the first aid kit the adhesive gauze and stuck it to Joker’s upper arm.

“Mmmm…Teeeeell me, Harlequin, aren’t you happy that I told you to get a new phone for the two of us?” she rolled her eyes. “Otherwise now our little kioooooosk would have been flooded by cops an’ I’d have to use you as a shield against the bullet rain, Hehe…Youuuuu know that the big bad bat certainly is watching your phone an’ not only that…”

Harleen began gathering her things in the kit indifferent.

“And how do you know that he isn’t watching right now and won’t surge at any moment?”

Joker jumped to his feet wearing his jacket without wearing the shirt.

“Shirts are ooooooverprized…” he smirked slyly taking in Harleen’s stare at his torso “you agree to that, huh?” he cocked his eyebrows smugly “my shaggy chest are legendary after all…” he looked at his hairless chest and shoo his head “almost shaggy…Weeell, I know that Batsy won’t come ‘cause…” he narrowed his eyes pouting “hm…bats are nocturnal” he exclaimed in the end in a scientific manner “an’ during the day they are disabled! HEHEHEHEEEEE!” he giggled with his hint that only he could understand.
He stooped to take the arrow and hopped to the exit happy with himself for the allegory he had just made. Grabbing the knob turned to Harleen who had stood.

“Dr. Harle–quin, my booooy will be delivered to you…You know what to do, huh?” he winked.

“I don’t know, Mr. J” she said “it has become too risky: they will suspect.”

Joker shrugged pouted.

“Whoooo cares ’bout them? I’ll find new ones: idiots are easy to find – it’s like they sprout up everywhere…like weeeeed…See ya lator, alli–gator!” he jumped out and after a few moments Harleen heard enraged horns as the jester crossed the road without seeing around.

She huffed and shook her head. Her fingers touched intrigued her lips where she still tasted Joker’s lipstick.

The ceiling was light blue like the walls and had some stern, simple geometrical shapes at the corners…

Dick was sprawled on his mattress from the moment he reached the Manor and ran to his room. He had no mood to make his homework: if Wayne wanted war he’d get it!

He had his hands under the back of his neck and sketched mentally shapes on the ceiling like the good old days with Brian. He was pissed from yesterday but finally something came to somewhat lift his spirits: at some point he heard some weird fuss downstairs and left his room to find out. Of course he didn’t eavesdrop – he wouldn’t fall so low – but still it was easy to discern how distressed Alfred and Wayne’s physiotherapist were. It was almost the time for Wayne’s session yet he wasn’t there and the upset of the two men said much.

He returned to his room and opened his tablet to watch the news on the net and…bingo! Gotham’s news’ outlets were transmitting updates about some attack on Wayne. Now Dick could relax on his soft mattress… Some justice at last!

His tablet rang and Dick jumped startled: it was Jay’s melody.

“Hi, Jay…Sorry we didn’t meet but Wayne put me in detention.”

Jason cackled and Dick pouted.

“What’s so funny, brat?”

“He finally decided to give ya what ya deserve?”

“What?!!!! You’re a traitor! I deserve to be forbidden to go to my training?”

“’Course, man: ya ran away” the boy chuckled. “An’ I was punished ‘cause of ya! Not that this can stop littl’ ol’ Jay… Anyway…Ya bought some voodoo doll with Wayne’s face?”

“What do you mean?”

“The attack: don’t tell me ya didn’t hear? Mom called Alfred to learn what happened: yar voodoo isn’t strong enough after all – Wayne is still alive.”

“Yeah…” Dick mumbled.
“Oh, man! Ya remind me of that coyote that chases road runner an’ always loses…C’mon, man: ya can’t honestly want him dead…”

“Why not? He was the reason my family was murdered and I’m imprisoned now…Hold on, I have another call” he read the name on the screen. “Jay, will talk later.”

“Fine, chaya!”

Dick answered the call with his heartbeat rising.

“Hi, Mr. Breizic.”

“How are you, Richard?”

“Please call me Dick.”

“Okay.”

“Mr. Breizic, my guardian forbade me to attend my training for one week” he said haughtily expecting to find an ally.

There was some seconds of silence.

“I can see his point, Dick…I saw in the news the reason of this decision. You ran away, drank alcohol and created an episode with an adult. Dick, drinking alcohol in your age is very bad and you’re aspiring to be a professional gymnast which makes your deed even worse.”

Dick pinched the bridge of his nose and closed his eyes licking his lips nervously.

“Mr. Breizic…I…”

“You want to follow your father’s career, don’t you?”

“Of course I do! It is my dream; what keeps me moving on…”

Breizic sigh reached the other end of the line.

“Then why are you…how you Americans say it? Shooting yourself in the foot? Listen, Dick, your father detested alcohol and any drug and that was the reason I never believed that he had used illegal drugs. So if someone” Dick could sense in the coach’s voice that he had already someone in mind “urges you to that kind of behavior, he is your enemy. Imagine how your father would have felt…”

Dick lowered his head.

“If my father was alive I would never have drunk” he said blatantly. “My father would have understood why I did that…”

“He would have been very hurt, Dick…but I cannot say more for him, I think that deep inside you know better than me. I can speak for myself, Dick.”

Dick’s eyes widened and his breathe was pressed because the man’s disappointment was evident in his tone.

“Mr. Breizic…”
“Dick, many athletes – with admirable responsibility and devotion to their craft - want me in their coaching team so I’m very selective and strict in my criteria. Therefore…”

Dick felt the room spinning: he was sure that his father’s old coach would dismiss him.

“I won’t hide from you that at first thought of leaving your coaching…”

“No! I mean…it was…”

“For a young athlete was very bad and unprofessional” Dick let his head fall to his chest his breath turning into pants; he felt his eyes watering: not this too... “But considering all the things that have happened to you I’ll give you a second chance.”

Dick managed to breathe again; the room turning solid again. He couldn’t believe that Breizic wouldn’t leave him: the man had indeed the fame of being very adamant in his demands – besides, that was the reason his athletes were the best.

“Thank you, Mr. Breizic! Thank you very much! I won’t disappoint you! I swear!”

“What matters, Dick, is to not disappoint yourself not me…I want you to know that I agree with your guardian’s decision: Mr. Wayne is very wise for his age and lax” he chuckled. “I’d have made your detention longer…I think you should thank him for being so lenient with you.”

Dick’s face tightened again; thanking Wayne for anything? No way!

“Use those days to think properly, Dick. I want you to know that I’m here for everything you want to discuss.”

“Thank you, sir…I…I’ll do that.”

Bagdana emerged in the center of Darkseid’s throne hall and the oval shaped vessels framing the wide aisle to the god’s throne launched their flames to the high ceiling as he marched towards his ally. With the corner of his eyes he registered beside Darkseid’s throne ‘Ironman’ standing like a bodyguard yet the ancient demon had eyes only for his ‘master’. The demon’s eyes were red spitting fires that accompanied the fumes from his nose-less nostrils.

Darkseid looked sideways at ‘Ironman’ and smirked to his minion’s enraged marching. He turned his head to Bagdana and the demon felt something colliding with him – something like an invisible barrier that stopped him in front of the four granite steps leading to the alien god’s throne.

Bagdana’s eyes narrowed to fire slits stabbing his ally’s gleeful confident eyes: the demon’s short horns sparkled like silver thunders making the smirk on Darkseid’s face more intense.

“What have you done?!”

Darkseid snorted and cocked his hairless eyebrows.

“Judging from your expression you don’t need me to answer that…you already know…”

‘Ironman’ at his side chuckled and Bagdana clenched his fists.

“You almost killed him!”

Darskeid clenched the edges of the armrests with pleasure and yanked his head.
“If I wanted him dead now his friends would have only his ashes!” he growled and the twirls of thunders on his thrones sides moved. “Besides” he calmed his tone “I prefer doing that myself…” he smirked to the demon’s ire.

‘Ironman’ sniggered and Bagdana stabbed him with his eyes; Darkseid glanced at the impostor and ‘Ironman’ dissolved to give his place to Granny Goodness who laughed maniac like a chalk grazing a blackboard making her bush of hair move around.

“It was so funny seeing the pest crawling to save his pathetic life!” she cackled and two rays of fire surged at her to be grabbed by Darkseid who casually threw them to the wall causing several stones to shatter.

The alien god looked at Bagdana whose eyes were ready to launch more fire against Granny.

“We agreed that you wouldn’t harm him!” Bagdana barked. “He is mine!”

Granny made a move forwards at the edge of the platoon of her master’s throne.

“Everything belongs to Master Darkseid! You have too much nerve speaking about something being yours” Darkseid grinned satisfied. “He decides if you will take anything from the spoils!” she hissed enjoying the demon’s face that was distorted in wrath.

“Exactly” Darskeid added. “The human pest provoked me and I punished him…too magnanimously: he demanded an answer from me about my things he has stolen and I gave him my answer.”

Bagdana shook his head.

“He doesn’t know who you are neither that you are behind this attack…not that it’d make much difference.”

“It is useful to be reminded of his mortality…”

Bagdana yanked his head exasperated.

“If you believe that this will scare him, you’re wrong! He isn’t a pest as you think!”

Granny sniggered, her ugly eyes glimmering spiteful.

“He looked like one when I almost squashed him under my foot!”

Bagdana roared with his eyes bulging like fire balls ready to hit her but Darkseid stood.

“Enough!”

“The fact you crave for his beautiful ass doesn’t make him any better from the rest of this worthless lot!” Granny hissed and Bagdana ground his teeth making the walls of the hall tremble.

Darkseid sat again at his throne and Bagdana shook his head.

“You’re carried away from your self confidence and your minions” Bagdana cast a glare at Granny “and you are damaging your cause. If you had discussed this with me…”

“You would have discouraged him in favor of your pest” Granny barked.

“In favor of your cause, Lord Darkseid” Bagdana said and bowed. “Your cause is mine too and my duty is to advice you about this planet and its inhabitants. Now with that attack you have alerted them about something powerful that threatens them from the shadows and that can be quite the obstacle to your plans."

Darkseid raised his eyebrows smirking.

“And here is where you come…your use: cover my traces, though I’d gladly confront the Avengers and every other useless hero this garbage planet has” he said casually spreading his hands.

“That moment will come but you want to be ready by then…You told me that you want your machine ready and if they suspect that Mannheim is behind that attack – the power that was launched during that attack – will make them destroy your precious items.”

Darkseid smiled.

“Prove your usefulness then: you are an ancient demon after all. Make them suspect someone else.”

Bagdana snorted.

“Why should I do that? You put my prize to lethal danger and I’m not persuaded that you wouldn’t have killed him if the Avengers hadn’t intervened” he turned his back ready to storm out of the hall.

Darkseid tapped his armrests watching through narrowed eyes.

“If you break our alliance, if you leave now, there’s nothing that stops me from burning your precious pet to ashes.”

Bagdana turned his head to him.

“Do not threat me…”

“Why not? I can…Well?” he lolled slightly his head to the side.

Bagdana seemed to think hard under Granny’s gleeful expression. In the end he turned towards the throne and nodded.

“Fine but no more surprises: no more attempts against Bruce. Do not let him distract your attention.”

“As he does to you?” the enormous god laughed. “How intriguing that littl’ human is…” he mumbled behind his intertwined fingers and seeing the demon’s uneasiness: “That will depend on your effectiveness…So…who is behind the attack on Mr. Wayne?”

Bagdana smirked.

“Luthor.”

“I just released him from prison; I won’t like to waste more energy for him.”

“You won’t need to…We talk about suspicions not proof.”

When Bagdana evaporated from the room Granny looked at her master.

“It was too pleasant to torment that human, your Majesty! If you give me the permission I could make him a good sport for your entertainment…” she smirked. “He showed an odd disregard to the imminent death…he fought back.”

Darskeid pouted interested gazing at the dancing perpetual flames of the vessels.
“Bravery…I’m interested to uncover more from the secrets of the human that Bagdana wants to hide from me…”

When Tony returned to the great salon Steve and Thor were there talking with Alfred. Both men turned to look at S.H.I.E.L.D.’s director and their teammate and from their astonished expressions Tony realized that his look was too grim but…frankly he didn’t give a damn!

He walked casually to them and grabbed one of the oval shaped glasses from the buffet and filled it with whiskey.

“I see Alfred has taken care of you” he said looking at the neglected tea set on the coffee table; his voice was just an imitation of his usual cheer.

Alfred walked to him and looked him in the eyes.

“Master Anthony, if I’m permitted to make a suggestion, I believe that some tea would be better than alcohol” the Englishman felt for his young master but he wanted to refrain him from worsening things.

“Alfred, please: let me know better about alcohol’s healing qualities…”

Alfred pressed his lips.

“Master Anthony, if I’m permitted to make a suggestion, I believe that some tea would be better than alcohol” the Englishman felt for his young master but he wanted to refrain him from worsening things.

“I think that Alfred is right, Tony” Steve intervened having approached.

Tony rolled his eyes and emptied his glass with one gulp twitching his eyebrows challenging.

“Party pooper!” he spat to his Captain and placed the glass back to the bar.

Thor came closer too.

“Alfred told us that there’s nothing worrisome in Bruce’s condition: has anything changed?” the god’s voice was steady and determined but Tony could see the angst in his warm eyes so different from the wild eyes he saw upon arriving at attack’s site.

Tony pinched the bridge of his nose and shook his head, grinning: that was what they needed right now – a lovesick god! He sighed and marched to the Asgardian, stood before him and grabbed both his upper arms in a gesture of appreciation.

“Thank you, Thor: if you hadn’t arrived, that impostor would have killed Bruce” he bowed slightly his head and then turned to Steve. “Thank you too, Steve…”

Steve approached them.

“Don’t mention it, Tony.”

Thor held his comrade’s upper arms too.

“There’s no need to thank me, Tony; I’m just glad I arrived on time.”

Tony cleared his throat and looked pointedly at the god.

“About that…hm…although it was very useful this time, ehm…we have to talk. Later” Thor blushed a bit and Tony turned to Alfred who was watching the scene in his cool demeanor. “Alfred, is “Everything alright with Bruce?” he looked at his wristwatch. “It takes too long…”

“There is nothing to worry about, sir; Master Bruce is having a nice, hot shower and Mr. Leench will massage him. Now, if you excuse me I shall go to the kitchen and prepare lunch; will the kind masters honor us with their esteemed presence?”

“The honor and pleasure will be ours, Alfred” Steve replied and Thor nodded. “Do you have any idea who attacked Bruce?” he asked Tony after Alfred was gone.

“A coward!” Thor spat; his wrath for the attacker returning. “To attack someone in a wheelchair.”

Tony shook his head.

“That too…and a powerful one…”

Steve frowned.

“But he was an imitator.”

Tony snorted.

“That doesn’t thwart him from being strong…” he ruffled his hair. “He destroyed the protective shield field of Bruce’s wheelchair” he licked his lips and huffed. “I’ve made that shield to last my full firepower…”

Both his comrades looked at him shaken and Tony nodded.

“Exactly! Fuck this!”

“I can’t imagine who might have that kind of power” Steve mumbled frowned.

“As I was fighting with him I thought Loki: he usually takes forms at will but it wasn’t him.”

“How do you know?” Steve asked.

“He wouldn’t lose the opportunity to laugh at my face and I can sense his presence.”

“Then we have to do with an unknown enemy” Steve said.

Tony shook his head.

“I have my suspicions but no proof…”

“Well?” Thor asked approaching him. “I’d like to meet him again and have a word.”

Tony locked eyes with him but the doorbell interrupted them and he yanked his head to see who it was. Though that wasn’t necessary since Selina stormed there as soon as Alfred opened the door, her eyes frenzied and her face distorted from fear.

“Where’s Bruce?” she demanded from the three men.

Steve came to her and held her upper arms.

“I told you on the phone, dear, that he is fine…”

She nodded looking at him with arched eyebrows but her clenched jaw revealed that this wasn’t enough.
“I prefer my own eyes, handsome!”

“Then look here” Bruce said grinning to her.

Selina turned to the right entrance from the corridor that led to the gym. Bruce’s smile was broad and he was calm between Leslie and Matt yet Selina noticed the adhesive gauzes on her friend’s face and the butterfly stitch on his left eyebrow.

“Sweetie!” she exclaimed and rushed to him, kneeling and hugging him, Hero along since the kitten was on Bruce’s lap.

She cupped his face with both hands and kissed his cheeks under Steve’s touched and slightly amused stare that was asking: should I be jealous? No... Thor’s eyes were fixed on Bruce and his friend admiring their relationship and wishing he could have some of this. Tony’s stare however was grim.

“I’m fine, Sel; calm down…” Bruce said to her rubbing her back.

“I should be trying to calm you down after what happened…” she answered searching with her eyes and hands Bruce for injuries as she was doing every night while he was Falcone’s captive. “I won’t ever leave you alone again: so if someone thinks to do that again…”

“It won’t happen again!” Tony said determined and Bruce looked at him facing again that strange unfamiliar expression on his friend’s features.

“What do you mean?” Selina asked. “Have you thought another something to stop them?”

Tony walked to them.

“The best” he said with conviction. “Bruce will come to my house at Malibu. I’ll tell Alfred to pack your things.”

Bruce frowned and met Selina’s puzzled eyes for an instance before staring at Tony.

“Are you taking me away from Gotham?”

“Actually I’m taking you away from your death” Tony cocked his eyebrows.

Bruce licked his lips.

“Without asking me first…Tony, I can’t leave my city.”

Tony blinked: that stubborn boy! He crossed his arms over the chest.

“You can and you will, Bruce! I had had enough of this!”

His tone made those present frown despite the fact they knew how much Tony cared about Bruce.

“Richard has his friends, his school here, his training; I can’t disrupt his program.”

Tony lolled his head on the side looking at Bruce with an expression crying: ‘seriously? We both know what it is your true concern.’

“Pepper is already making arrangements for him” he retorted in a smartass way. “There’s no reason for you to not come.”
Bruce shook his head and Selina stood clenching her waist staring at Tony.

“I doubt that Pepper is doing that” Bruce said calmly “she can’t agree with something so unreasonable.”

Now Tony’s eyes flashed; he grabbed the armrests of Bruce’s chair and leaned to him so their faces were one breath away.

“Unreasonable? Unreasonable is your obsession with this city! That drives you to stay here even if that leads to your death!”

“Tony…” Leslie tried to intervene because Matt and Steve who didn’t know Bruce’s secret were staring puzzled.

But Tony wasn’t listening to her absorbed in his friend’s mesmerizing eyes.

“It is unreasonable that I want to keep you alive!?”

Hero on Bruce’s lap hissed and Tony rolled his eyes.

“No, it is unreasonable that you try to force me into things that I…”

Tony nodded.

“You don’t want!” he completed for him. “You were telling me that you feel bad for holding me away from my own affairs, here; well, that’s your chance to prove that you were saying the truth. Come to Malibu so I’m free to see into my business. Prove that you’re not selfish!”

Bruce inhaled sharply.

“Tony, your breath smells of whiskey…maybe it is better to talk some other…”

Tony lolled his head on the side chuckling.

“No! We’ll talk everything now! Don’t try to run away from this!”

“Don’t talk to him like that!” Selina spat to him, her eyes flashing like a wild cat’s.

Steve touched his comrade’s upper arm.

“Tony, Selina is right: calm down.”

Thor approached too, his eyes a bit angry.

“I’ll take Bruce away from you. You better sober up” he remarked calm but a bit disapproving.

But Tony stood and looked at his teammates’ determined faces. He chuckled and locked eyes with Bruce.

“Oh, Bruce! I wish you used your charm on people for your own good” Bruce lowered his head sighing. “Steve, Thor!” he spread his arms in a dramatic gesture “I’m the real Ironman therefore Bruce doesn’t need your protection.”

Thor stretched his impressive body.

“Then stop acting like the fake Ironman! Bruce doesn’t deserve that kind of treatment.”
“Poor blondie!” Tony exclaimed understanding the god’s soft spot for Bruce.

Thor frowned but Bruce yanked his head.

“Please…We’re having a discussion with Tony – no need for such tension. Alfred, can you treat our guests some aperitif till the lunch? Tony and I will be at the study.”

Tony crossed his arms and stared at his friend with cocked eyebrows almost amused.

“Of course, Master Bruce” the Englishman was completely undeterred from the tension.

Steve understanding Bruce’s need of calming the spirits retreated to one of the armchairs, Thor however was still adamant in his place looking puzzled at Tony who pouted.

“What?” he snapped to the Asgardian. “You heard him!”

Thor shook his head and followed his captain casting a last glance at Bruce who blinked and looked at Tony.

“Shall we?” he asked his friend with an inviting gesture and let Hero on the floor.

Tony nodded.

“I’ll come with you” Selina said still pissed glaring at Tony.

“Me too” Leslie said.

Tony looked at his comrades.

“As you see, we’ll have our peace forces…” he chuckled.

However Thor remained standing even after they left while Steve and Matt settled down.

“Come sit, Thor” Steve said to his comrade.

Thor shook his head.

“Maybe we should go along?”

Steve smiled.

“Tony adores Bruce: his life is for Tony more valuable than his own.”

“I agree” Matt added nodding.

Thor looked to the corridor leading to the lift.

“Yes, but Tony has drunk a lot and he is sick from the terror he experienced…”

“You know, huh?” Steve said to him teasingly. “You experienced the same terror?” Thor met his gaze annoyed and Steve nodded. “Selina and Leslie are with them.”

“I’m sorry, Tony” Bruce said to his friend the moment they were in the first floor’s study.

Tony grinned and shook his head.
“So, we tell Alfred to start packing?”

Bruce huffed and lolled his head on the side.

“Not for that; I didn’t want to create a problem with your teammates”

Tony waved that off.

“What matters now is your answer: will you come to Malibu?”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Tony, you know I can’t.”

“It’s not a matter if you can or not: it has to do with your will. You don’t want. You’re thinking only yourself, Bruce; only what you want. You don’t think of the others.”

Bruce gulped.

“You don’t believe that, Tony; I just have some things that can’t be delayed.”

Tony shook his head.

“One of these things almost led to your death” Bruce inhaled. “You had to provoke Mannheim, don’t you?”

“Tony, we were in this together!”

“Then why you didn’t let me do the call?”

“Because LexLabs are under my control, Tony: I have the responsibility of this company and he came to me.”

“Yes, but I could take that kind of attacks while you can’t. Do you realize that you were almost killed? The protecting field of the chair was broken by his attack and I had made it to hold back all of my firepower. He was more powerful than me…Weren’t for Thor and the Arrow you would be dead! Do you realize?!”

Bruce huffed.

“Tony, calm down…I’m alive; I’m safe.”

Tony stormed at him and Selina’s eyes bulged but then she relaxed seeing him just leaning above Bruce.

“Until the next time…You continue picking fights with them while you’re in no position to handle it! I can’t take it any longer, Bruce! I won’t tolerate it anymore! Fighting criminals in your state.”

“We can’t let them terrorize us, Tony! Would you prefer to have had cringed before him?! Because of my impairment? You prefer me in my room scared to come out in case someone attacks me? You saw today that wearing the armor is less dangerous than being Bruce Wayne” the study’s walls were full soundproof so Bruce could speak freely.

Tony grabbed the armrests and brought his face in front of Bruce’s.

“I won’t gamble your life! I won’t take no for an answer! StarkExpo is starting next week: it is the perfect excuse to come to Malibu and STAY: I’ll handle the rest till you have your surgery and walk again.”

He let the armrests.

“I’m saying Alfred to pack…”

Bruce yanked his head.

“No, Tony. Let me explain…”

But Tony snorted, yanked his head backwards and opened the door.

“Call me for a ‘yes’…” he spat and stormed outside.

Selina hugged Bruce.

“He’ll rethink it, Bruce. He was a bit dizzy…”

Leslie marched there and sat on the sofa near Bruce’s chair.

“He’ll come over…”

Bruce shook his head.

“I made him drink” he mumbled looking at the floor.

“Don’t say that, Bruce” Leslie retorted.

Selina cupped her friend’s face and locked eyes with him. “The only one to blame is Joker and the other lunatic who attacked you. Tony isn’t mad at you…” she gritted her teeth but only mentally: I dare him to be angry with you!

Bruce bit his lip.

“I wish he was just angry with me…” he inhaled deeply and looked at the two women.

Leslie rubbed his back.

“He’ll be downstairs waiting for you; you know how much he loves you.”

However Tony took his car and drove to the city as soon as he left the study and didn’t return for lunch. Thor also had to leave to due to an urgent call from Asgard.

It wasn’t the first time Tony wasn’t at the table yet today wasn’t the same: his absence wasn’t due to obligations but anger and that made Bruce’s stomach a painful knot. Memories of Tony’s anger the last Christmas they spent together at the Manor were coming to him. Then by mistake he had thrown his favorite toolbox to the cliff – today was even worse because Tony believed that Bruce on purpose was throwing himself from the same cliff.

He was feeling the other people staring at him every now and then so Bruce pushed some food down his throat to not aggravate their worries but the corner of his eyes constantly slipped to his friend’s empty chair…Of course Richard’s chair was also empty since the boy was furious for his punishment in addition to his overall loathing.

Bruce closed his eyes, the need to get some fresh air was demanding: all this worry for his well being that surrounded him was heartwarming but also made him uncomfortable; he pushed a bit his chair backwards but Leslie cleared her throat. She as everyone else was unusually silent.

“You need to eat to get your medicine, young man” understanding was clear in her voice yet her eyes were strict.

“I can’t eat more, Leslie but what I had till now is enough for my medication” he answered and moved his chair to the sink bench where Alfred had left his pills ready for him to take.

“Excuse me” he said after swallowing them and moved out of the room patting Selina’s shoulder acknowledging his friend’s sad stare.

He had just left the room when she caught up with him.

“I won’t leave you alone.”

“They won’t attack me in the Manor…Continue your meal, Sel…”

She sighed because she didn’t want to leave Bruce but sensed his need to stay alone. She nodded and watched her friend moving to the back salon before defeated returned to the kitchen.

Staying inside was unbearable for Bruce, so upon arriving to the back salon slipped out to the back garden. He closed his eyes and performed some diaphragmatic breaths sucking the clean air of the Palisades.

He pulled out of his jacket the Cosmos Smartphone hoping to find some message from Tony. But nothing: Tony needed some time alone and that prevented Bruce from following his whim and calling him; the shock must have been severe for Tony…He huffed and turned the Smartphone into tablet to peruse the news sites. Bruce was sure that Mannheim was behind the attack: the methodology was the same. The thugs who were arrested during the interrogation manifested the same signs of confusion: Bruce was reading their ‘testimonies’ in GCPD’s data base. As for Joker he was injured but the police had lost his traces…

Bruce was sure that the jester had run to his psychiatrist for help though his surveillance didn’t have any indications of that.

Gotham Gazzette’s site had full coverage of the valley where the attack took place and Bruce relived those moments that the fake Ironman launched lethal firepower after lethal firepower to kill him.

“You’re in no position to handle this!” Tony’s exasperated voice echoed again in his ears.

Bruce looked at his non-responsive legs and rubbed his thighs so strong that it should have ached. But nothing…He focused there, his stare intense and he was ready to apply his mind’s will to them forcing his legs to move; his left hand touched the Black Butterfly pouch that hanged on his chest. Walking again would ease Tony’s dread and panic and all of his loved ones’ sadness… And he wouldn’t have to crawl like a worm before assailants.

His legs were almost ready to respond to his orders and Bruce felt the thrill yet at the last second he turned his head away breaking his focus… He shouldn’t do that nor take the Immortality Water…He wouldn’t become Ra’s Al Ghul.

He turned his eyes to the grey sky; he recalled the moments when Thor was fighting with Ironman and then when Arrow fought the thugs. He felt again the heartbeat, the sub conscious expectation… The expectation for the red-blue figure to arrive to the scene and hammer the bad guys…
It wasn’t flattering for him; Bruce didn’t want to be saved by others yet seeing Superman flying to his aid never made him feel bad for himself…It was almost pleasant even if that was buried deep inside him and the thought now made him flushed. It was a remnant of his years in Falcone’s clutches, he realized: when he waited for the raven haired angel to come and save him, even though he knew then, as he knew now, that Superman wouldn’t come…

On his screen, a folder smiled to him: the folder with the video Leslie and Alfred made for him. His Christmas present. He tapped on it.
Chapter 56

“…Joker and his thugs ran away and Gotham’s police managed to apprehend many of them minus their leader; but another attack took place against Mister Wayne. Our information say that a full blown battle took place here in this narrow patch of soil – as you can see from what is left behind. Intelligence says that an impostor impersonating Ironman attacked Bruce Wayne and it was Thor’s intervention that prevented the worst for the young billionaire. However, it is reported that a small army of thugs from Gotham’s underground resumed the attack and the situation escalated to a full range battle with the Avengers coming to the rescue along with another mysterious hero. Police is conducting investigation for the mastermind behind the attack.”

The camera zoomed to the cordoned narrow strip of terrain – officers were still there not allowing entrance to anyone. However the cameras managed to capture some pieces of elegant wood and metal scattered around and Clark immediately understood what they were.

He still remembered the day Stark presented to Bruce the wheelchair he manufactured…Bruce was impressed by the chair but decided to stick with the one Superman had made for him. That day Clark felt proud and triumphant both because Bruce chose his chair over Stark’s and because the airhead billionaire was disappointed. Not that Stark had seemed much disappointed that day: Clark could see in his expression that he wished that Bruce didn’t need any chair and actually it pained him to manufacture that illusion of mobility for his friend.

It was obvious from the pieces that had remained in the field – Stark must have taken the rest for conducting his analyses - that the attack was really fierce. And if they managed to destroy the chair to pieces then Bruce’s life had been really at stake there…The fake Ironman was definitely far too powerful if he managed to overcome Stark’s protective measures…

They almost succeeded in killing Bruce…a shudder ran his spine: the young man had stayed alone and unprotected after Joker’s retreat and someone took advantage, someone powerful enough to engage the Avengers in full confrontation.

Superman rubbed unconsciously his chest because an unpleasant feeling settled there: he could imagine the scene. The fake Ironman launching fire against Bruce who had to rely on the wheelchair’s shield for his life; and then the chair must have fallen dragging Bruce along; the fall could have injured him. The reports Planet got said that Bruce was fine yet how could they be sure? He felt tempted to seek the young man’s vitals…But held himself: Bruce had kicked him off; he had stabbed him…

However he couldn’t stop himself from imagining Bruce’s feelings as he realized that the shield was breached…no, Bruce definitely wasn’t scared…instead, he must have been filled with determination and outrage that he had to endure without being able to fight: Bruce could fight but doing that would mean using his brain’s power and that could deteriorate his condition. And there was the issue of maintaining his secret…Nobody, especially his enemies, should know Bruce Wayne’s true abilities; that he was Batman.

Superman shook his head: if Bruce was in the wheelchair he had made with the Fortress’ alien tech, nobody would have been able to breach the shield. He would be safe…But the stubborn human sent the chair back. He lolled his head backwards: what else was he to do after everything that happened? The proud, dignified human…

He remembered Lois’ urge to fly to Bruce…She was right: if he had been there Bruce wouldn’t have been in such danger and Thor wouldn’t have been the savior, the hero. He snorted…Thor… images of the blond god pinning Bruce under the Battery park’s bridge and thrusting in him, Bruce moaning in pleasure made Superman’s stomach twist, though he knew that it was only products of his imagination. What happened today proved that the Asgardian wasn’t losing his time.

A snort came out…Maybe Bruce wanted to be saved by the blond god; after all, he had refused Superman’s advances when they met on that rooftop at Metropolis. Maybe now he was celebrating his rescue with Thor… His jaw clenched as scenes of passionate sex breached his mind’s barriers. The too familiar naked body of Bruce under the divine body of the Asgardian…Bruce’s hands hugging the broad back clenching the perfect flesh every time he was rocked by the god’s passion; panting as Thor thrust wild in him, kissing hungrily the mortal’s neck that was lolling backwards to permit him freer access; Bruce’s sapphire stars of eyes sparkled from pleasure as the god’s mouth sucked his erected nipples. Their combined moans and grunts moisturized the half darkness of Bruce’s bedroom.

His groin twitched from Bruce’s sensual body covered with the sheen of sweat…Bruce was moving sensually in his unique hips’ slow dance that had brought Superman to Heaven every time…for Thor’s pleasure… Superman knew so well that irresistible aspect of Bruce. The mortal’s intoxicating, cinnamon perfume conquered his nostrils making him realize how much he had missed this perfume.

Superman pressed the button of the remote closing the TV set hearing Diana’s light footsteps coming from the bedroom. He shook his head and sucked her powerful perfume clearing his head: that woman was for him; and at the moment the important was Diana not suspect his momentary arousal (?).

Diana was there so he smiled and crossed every other thought: everything with Bruce was over – the human could use his body as he wished… However just the thought of Bruce giving his body to somebody else made Superman angry.

“Good thing you turned that thing off” she said meaning the TV. “They are showing constantly things about Wayne…that attack…You know…I was almost sure that I’d see you there…”

He jerked.

“What?”

She shrugged.

“I don’t know…maybe his charm is still too strong on you…”

“That’s not true!”

She nodded.

“I figured” she wrapped her snake-like arms around his neck feeling the semi god shivering from pleasure. “I’m glad you didn’t run behind him – it shows how strong willed you are. And that your love for me is real…”

Her eyes on him were paralyzing his body and mind.

“Did you have any doubts?” he asked almost insulted.

She captured his lips with hers.

“I did, Kal El…because Wayne knows all the tricks to light the flames of desire in someone while I am a warrior: my dignity doesn’t allow me compete someone like him in such things. I don’t know the whore tricks he practiced all these years.”

Superman smiled.

“And you don’t have to, darling…You are everything I ever wanted.”

The melody from his Smartphone fell like a thunder in the room and Superman felt a cold current running his spine seeing Diana’s frown. He had forgotten to leave his Smartphone to his apartment before coming here.

However he smiled carefree to her.

“I need a Smartphone so various officials and organizations can find me when they need me” he said indifferent and stood hurrying to the bedroom.

He didn’t want Diana hear him talking with his mother because it was the melody for his mother.

“Hi, Ma! How are you?”

“Disappointed, pissed…sad.”

Clark frowned and ruffled his locks; he could easily figure the reason for these emotions. The bedroom’s door was closed and thankfully the apartment was sound proof.

“Ma, don’t be unfair to me. Let me…”

“You weren’t there, Clark” her voice was more sad than angry and that hurt him. “They attacked Bruce, they almost killed him; the Avengers were there but not you…”

“There was no reason for me to be there, Ma: we are finished with Bruce.”

“This wasn’t a matter of being in a relationship with him; his life was in danger: he is a human being, you know…And you didn’t go there; you knew he was in danger and you ignored his need, Clark…How could you?”

Clark huffed and yanked his head backwards.

“Clark, you have taken a wrong path…and I’m afraid that this is…”

“You’re overreacting” he didn’t want to use much ‘Ma’ in case his voice passed the walls. “I haven’t taken any wrong path; I’m still Superman. I just knew that Bruce would be rescued by Stark and his teammates.”

“How on Earth you could be sure? They could be busy with some other urgency or reach Bruce too late while Superman could arrive immediately; however you stayed with your arms crossed watching. Imagine if Bruce was killed! What excuse you’d have used then? How would you look at yourself in the Mirror if Bruce had died because you weren’t there?”

Clark closed his eyes and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“There was no such option!”

“How do you know?! It is what that woman told you?”

“Don’t bring Diana into this…”
“I will! Because when you were with Bruce you never denied your help to anyone even to your enemies. And now under this woman’s influence you stayed indifferent in Bruce’s need!”

“I…”

“Do you remember the story of Hercules I used to narrate you when you were a boy?”

Clark huffed: he had an eidetic memory, of course he remembered.

“Ma, I don’t understand…”

“He was standing in a road and before him two roads opened; he was indecisive about the road he should follow. Two women appeared to him: the one was breathtakingly beautiful, luxuriously dressed and stood in the one road. The other woman was aged and dressed in rags; she stood in the other road. The beautiful young woman was called Vice; she flattered Hercules for his semi-god nature and strength and promised him glory, wealth and all kind of pleasures if he chose her road. The old, ragged woman was called Virtue: she didn’t promise Hercules any of these, instead she warned him that her road was filled with hardships and hurdles but in the end of the road he will win purity and eternal morality. Hercules chose the path Virtue offered him. Those days you were telling me that you choose the same as Hercules but now I realize that you left that path…”

“Of course not…I’m still Superman; I haven’t changed.”

“This is what you say but your deeds prove otherwise; I hope you wake up soon, sweetheart. Think, Clark and be careful.”

Superman stayed staring at the Smartphone’s screen with the indication of the ended call. The knock on the door startled him.

“Come in.”

“Bad news?”

“No…” he hugged Diana; it was the only way to escape that grim feeling inside him. His Ma had misjudged; only Diana wasn’t unfair to him.

They ended up on the bed making love to her emptied his mind from everything.

But afterwards as he was lying beside Diana’s naked body her beauty wasn’t drawing his eyes; his eyes were seeing again the Chickey’s factory in Gotham ready to collapse and kill someone who was trapped inside, barely alive; his heartbeat weak but still calling his name.

And then he saw himself in the endless darkness of the Universe holding Bruce’s dead body; floating in eternity, his life having lost its meaning: not breathing; the dark void having swallowed every life inside him…He remembered his father: his death was still haunting him…he was watching his mother withering year by year and dreaded the inevitable day that he would lose her too…the pain worse than being hit with Kryptonite. Although he was immortal Superman realized that he was ensnared in human mortality… His only escape route lying beside him.

His nostrils sucked Diana’s cheerful perfume and caressed her naked back. He needed at least one person in his life that would be always there with him; a person like himself blessed with immortality. Diana was the pillar in his life; he wouldn’t lose her in the wind’s slightest blow…
The baby was hardly one month old: his cheeks were rosy and fluffy and his lips so small and red. He was smiling and blinking; his long eyelashes making the sparkling of his big eyes playful. His small head was covered with raven hair that seemed so soft...

The baby seemed so happy in the nest of his mother’s chest and he was looking awed and mesmerized her beautiful face as she sang his favorite lullaby. At times his eyelids covered his eyes as he was ready to fall asleep but suddenly the baby was opening his eyes to watch his mom singing. And she would kiss his dot of a nose making the boy giggle happy.

Bruce’s eyes were absorbed in the images played on his screen, heavy; he knew that his father was there too, behind the camera, watching Martha and him, touched and happy.

“Everything will be fine this time, Martha”

Bruce remembered his father’s reassurance to her about her pregnancy. She had many miscarriages prior to him and Bruce couldn’t stop himself from thinking that maybe it would have been better for everyone if he hadn’t managed to stay perched to his mother’s womb. Then she and his father would be still alive with an adopted child blessed with their love: maybe Selina…

The baby was watching his mom mesmerized, with so much love that blended with the love in Martha’s eyes…and then softly his eyelids covered his eyes and Martha gathered him tighter to her chest; she kissed feathery his brow and then the top of his tiny head.

“Good night, Bruce…Daddy and mommy are here: we won’t let anyone hurt you…”

And they didn’t, Bruce thought: they sacrificed their lives to safe him…His eyes lowered to the marble terrain but was seeing the blood stained filthy cement of an alley feeling again the same painful, frantic heartbeat, the iron, burning knot in his throat and the acid fluid running from his eyes as he stared at his dead parents. Fleetingly because his dad had asked him to run away and he was running…to nowhere…although he wanted to stay there with them, to go with them wherever they were going.

“What a beautiful little angel!”

Bruce was startled to hear that touched voice; he was so absorbed in the video that hadn’t heard him coming. He knew who he was.

Oliver Queen was standing by his side staring at the paused image of the sleeping baby. Bruce fixed his eyes on him.

“Our father would give his entire fortune to keep that beautiful smile on this angel’s face.”

Bruce turned his head on the other side.

“He did.”

But Queen’s expression was grim.

“He failed.”

Bruce gritted his teeth and snapped his head towards him.

“Thomas Wayne didn’t fail in anything!”

“Except for the thing that counted more to him: protecting and saving his only son.”
Bruce averted his gaze.

“It wasn’t his fault…”

“She was very beautiful and she seems so content, so perfectly happy holding her little angel…”

Bruce looked at his tablet and abruptly touched the screen closing the video. Queen grinned bitterly and his fingertips almost touched the tears on Bruce’s cheeks that the young man had forgotten that were there. Bruce hastened to wipe them with the back of his hand.

“Please…” Queen said with his velvet voice omitting entirely his usual smugness. “Your tears are the most precious gems on earth…like diamonds…only purer.”

Bruce clenched his jaw disgusted by Queen’s shameless flattery.

“There’s nothing pure in me!” he spat.

Queen crouched beside him; his eyes locked with Bruce’s; they were filled with warmth but also a vein of hot anger.

“Nothing of what those people did to you, left a stain to you, Bruce!” his voice slightly trembled. “They were more stained than you!”

Bruce chuckled.

“I assure you that they didn’t have any stain… unlike me.”

“Do not do that to yourself…”

“You don’t know anything.”

Oliver looked at the Manor and then back at Bruce smiling.

“It is they who don’t understand…am I right?”

Bruce knew what he meant but he didn’t want to discuss it.

“How come and you’re here?” he chose to divert the subject.

“I heard what happened and I was worried so I came here; your butler was so kind to let me pass the gates – the back gates because the front gates are besieged by reporters.”

Bruce shook his head.

“As you can see I’m fine: you could just call.”

Queen smiled and pointed to the stitches on Bruce’s face almost touching the skin.

“Not completely fine but physical injuries are not the worst thing, right?”

Bruce frowned.

“I don’t understand…”

Queen brought his face closer to Bruce placing his hand on the armrest.

“I think you do…You’re outside away from them, alone, secluded…” he grinned “because you know that they can’t understand you.”

“They love me.”

“And that makes things worse, more painful. You know they love you; you know they want to understand and you wish they could…and then you wish they never understand you…because what they can’t understand is for their own good…Right, Bruce? You long for someone from your loved ones to understand but at the same time you dread the moment they will see what you have inside…the darkness, the loneliness, your need to be free…”

Bruce looked at him puzzled.

“You don’t know anything about me!”

Queen smiled benevolently.

“I think you know that I understand you more than anyone other…because I feel the same” his cheek almost touched Bruce’s and he felt Queen shivering. “Feeling happy for being again with them only to realize that you’re a stranger; you don’t, you can’t be part of their world…and then the moments you feel that maybe you should have stayed trapped in the other world you know better…saving your loved ones from the distress of being unable to feel and help you…”

Bruce turned his head to the other side and Queen closed his eyes sucking the younger man’s perfume; he could have stayed years breathing that perfume rather than oxygen but he didn’t want to freak out Bruce so he focused on the tablet’s screen.

“Sometimes you wish you could be with them” he gestured to Bruce’s mother and Bruce hurried to turn off the screen. “You seek understanding to them; feeling that you belong more to their world.”

Bruce locked eyes with him: how he could know so much?

“I feel the same, Bruce: a stranger, an outcast despite people’s good intentions. My dead father sometimes seems better company than the living…”

Bruce’s heartbeat was heavy but he couldn’t afford to be carried by that man’s words – he remembered what happened during their meeting. He searched for an outing and his eyes focused on Queen’s white leather gloves.

“You wear gloves?” Bruce’s mind recalled another gloved hand in green leather this time; Arrow’s green leather glove had a rip from where he had seen a bleeding scar.

Queen smiled.

“Of course: it is freezing – you should be dressed warmer too.”

Bruce noticed that while Queen acted indifference he instantly stood, pushing his hands out of Bruce’s sight.

“…it is odd how evil is drawn to purity…” Arrow had said.

“…like diamonds…only purer…” Queen said.

Bruce frowned inside: it could be?

Queen’s eyes were filled with sadness taking Bruce’s silence as displeasure; for the first time Bruce couldn’t discern any speck of smugness and he hated that. Bruce preferred his smugness rather than that sympathy.

“Do not take that for pity, Bruce” Queen said as if he had read his mind. “It is only understanding.”

“Mr. Queen, there you are!” Alfred came out. “I was waiting for you from the main entrance. Please do come in and you too, Master Bruce: the tea is ready.”

Tony sat on the stool in front of the bar, the flashing blue neon with the word ‘Bar’ was illuminating his grim features. He had chosen a low profile bar in the Downtown to have his privacy.

Behind the bartender the shelves with the bottles was settled over a mirror and it was the first time Tony didn’t like to look at his reflection.

The young bartender with the long raven ponytail brushing his sturdy back gave Tony his glass of bourbon and gestured with his gaze at the flat screen TV that was built in the central rectangular pillar of the bar.

“Good job there, Mr. Stark; Gotham can count on the Avengers now that Batman slacks off…I never believed the bullshit for a flying rodent after all…”

Tony stared at the screen where footage from the location of the attack was played. The bartender left to attend to another customer and Tony swallowed hard thinking what he just had heard:

“…Batman got idle…I never believed the bullshit…”

He pushed the glass away pressing his lips.

“Alex, it seems, that the Avengers have taken over Gotham…” the female reporter told to her colleague.

He closed his eyes and mumbled a curse. Bruce almost died for these people; he had been rendered paraplegic for Gothamites’ sake and…

He sighed. He cursed Bruce’s obsession with secrecy: his friend should have come out and announced that he was the Batman thus nobody could say anything and Bruce would have the acknowledgement and respect he deserved. Yet for Bruce the praise and the appreciation didn’t matter: what was important for him was to fight injustice and evil…

He ran his hand through his locks: and that was killing his young friend. Why Bruce couldn’t see that this city was eating him alive?

“Tony…” a voice behind him stopped his thoughts.

The billionaire jerked on his stool startled and turned to see a sturdy, imposing fellow in jeans, leather jacket and a jockey; a blond ponytail was falling to his back.

“I’m too young and handsome to die from heart attack” he said grim but in the end chuckled on the sight of the other man. “Nice outfit!” he raised his index finger “I admit it flatters you and hides your identity…Thor” the rock music was loud enough to muffle his words.

The blond sat at the stool beside Tony and nodded to the glass of bourbon.

“You shouldn’t be here, Tony” the billionaire shook his head crooking his mouth. ‘You should be with Bruce. Drinking won’t help in anything.”
“Thanks, Alfred…” Tony replied snidely. “I won’t return if Bruce doesn’t call and say that he will come in Malibu.”

Thor closed his eyes.

“Blackmail?”

“There’s no other way…I’m trying to save the stubborn brat for his own self!”

Thor shook his head.

“He is so stubborn! So obstinate! So defiant!” Tony huffed. “So…”

“That man has a strong, passionate fire in him…”

Tony looked with narrowed eyes the hue of admiration and something else in the god’s eyes. He cocked his eyebrows.

“And this fire is gonna consume him…”

“So you want to put out that fire?”

“No; put a stop before this fire kills him… and can you stop being so in love with him?”

Thor yanked his head.

“I just care for him and you, Tony. Have you thought that if you force him to quench that fire, Bruce will be unhappy? He won’t be himself.”

“But he’ll be alive. His life will be saved!”

“Exactly, Tony. It is his life: you can’t blackmail him to change his life according to what you believe is right for him. Do you really want him to decide things scared that he’ll lose you?”

“At first…Later he’ll realize that it was for the best.”

“Would you like it if he had done the same thing to you? A few hours ago Bruce was almost killed; you almost lost him forever and now you try to lose him with your choices. Tony, Bruce is right now in the Manor without his best friend; do you really want to do this favor to the people that attacked him? Give them the satisfaction to rip you apart? Scaring you so much to dictate your deeds?”

Tony chuckled shaking his head and raised the glass gulping at once the content.

“It is easy for you to speak like that. Your family; your loved ones; you are immortal. You don’t know anything about death and mortality. I buried my parents! I lived 18 years mourning my best friend, my little guy. Blaming myself because I didn’t save him. Few hours ago he almost died because I failed to be there for him, to protect him: every measure I took for his safety proved inadequate. And to make matters worse: I was late! I won’t spend the rest of my life having lost again Bruce and knowing that I didn’t do what I could to save his life. I prefer hate myself because I blackmailed him than hate myself for letting him being killed.”

Thor inhaled.

“You’re right: I’m immortal, my family is immortal but many of my friends are mortals; I can feel your agony, believe me. But bringing Bruce before this difficult choice doesn’t help things. What if he doesn’t come with you? Do you honestly believe that this means that he doesn’t love you enough? And then what? You’ll leave and let him continue his dangerous life without his best friend? Superman has already broken his heart: you’re willing to add another blow? You realize that if you leave the friend you love so much you won’t be there when he’ll need you? I don’t know anything about death but I’m sure that if anything happens to Bruce while you stubbornly are away then you’ll feel much worse.”

Tony huffed and Thor raised an eyebrow.

“Think about it. You’re the genius after all” he stood, patted his friend’s back and walked away, hunching his proud body to not be recognized.

Steve caressed Selina’s locks and kissed her neck that bent on the side for him. He could tell that the young woman was still shaken.

They had stayed to the Manor for the night: Selina didn’t want even to consider leaving Bruce alone. When Bruce went to his bedroom, they ended up to their usual bedroom and now they had settled on the bed without having stripped.

“You were afraid that your nightmare might come true…”

Selina looked at him.

“I always dread that…I can’t understand why people try so much to hurt Bruce.”

Steve huffed.

“Arrow said that purity draws evil… I guess he is right: like the evil tries to extinct everything pure on this planet or just capture and maim it…” Selina closed her eyes recounting the tortures Bruce suffered all these years and Steve rubbed her back. “You said that you’ll be all the time with him and if someone tries again he’ll have to face you first…I admire that devotion…”

Selina however could see in his eyes that he was curious about how she could have defended Bruce. Steve didn’t know who she really was and her fighting skills nontheless he didn’t doubt her ability to protect her friend.

She smiled.

“I might not have your strength or training; and certainly I’m not a god with a hammer or a billionaire in a can but I’d use everything I got to defend Bruce” she cocked an eyebrow. “Sometimes even when you are an untrained amateur you manage to fight…”

Steve kissed her lips.

“I’m sure that your spirit alone would make them run for their lives but I don’t think that Bruce would like you in danger for his sake.” He pressed his lips. “I do understand how you feel” he raised his eyebrows “I had many friends, brothers in arms…” his eyes were lost in his past. “They weren’t as lucky as me to be turned into invincible super soldiers…”

Selina caressed his jaw staring at him with sympathy.

“I still remember them…especially Bucky” he chuckled. “With all the chemicals they instilled in me, all my strength and speed I didn’t manage to protect my friends…Not that they would be still alive now…after decades.”
Selina kissed his lips.

“Aren’t you happy you live in this era and having the chance to meet me?” she asked playfully to raise his spirits.

He laughed.

“You seriously have to ask that?”

“Sometimes girls face some insecurity…” she pouted sensually.

“I just wonder: if you defend Bruce then what would be our usefulness if you take our job? Huh?”

Selina grabbed the hem of his T-shirt and took it off, Steve helping her. Her lean, dexterous fingers caressed his stony abdominals loving the arousal of his flesh.

“Hm…I don’t know ‘bout the other lot but I could certainly think of some things where you’d be always useful…” she said slyly and pushed him flat on his back straddling him.

Steve chuckled and raised his torso to meet her lips.

“We will never let Bruce unprotected, darling…You can be sure of this.”

She cocked an eyebrow.

“I know that a soldier would never lie to a lady…” she said unzipping his pants and Steve grabbed her waist and glued her to his body capturing her lips to a passionate kiss.

However Selina’s heart was heavy because Bruce and Tony had quarreled and that certainly had a toll to her friend. And when Bruce was unhappy how could she enjoy anything in full? Even if that involved her Captain?

Tony thought of staying at his penthouse at Gotham’s midtown: he wished he was angry with Bruce for his stubborn, stupid refusal to come to Malibu. The little guy didn’t call: Pep’s did and as usual she reprimanded him… He rolled his eyes: that injustice should have made him more pissed with his best buddy.

But he wasn’t angry: shit! He understood how Bruce felt but there was no way to continue this kind of life without risking being killed and that for Tony was atrocious! Yet he wasn’t angry. He was in agony; he was sad for having yelled at Bruce and storming away: it was as if his anger of the last Christmas they spent together re-happened; then he had told the eight year boy off because he had accidentally tossed his tools over a cliff. What a moron 14 year old Tony had been!

And how moron the thirty… well, something - year old Tony was now! His stupid, childish wrath taking the better of him. And Bruce had spoken to him and he still rushed away without a second word, giving another blow to his friend’s already wounded heart.

However if that was necessary for making Bruce change his mind…well, Tony was willing to spend his rest life hating himself. Yet he couldn’t stay away from his friend while they had quarreled… Actually, he quarreled, Bruce just listened to him and keeping his tranquility refused: damn, that ninja training! He envied Bruce’s ability to be so calm when he had to do with Tony – fucking Stark.
Tony didn’t ring the doorbell because he didn’t want to wake anyone: it was well past midnight. He walked inner in complete darkness pumping on the narrow marble dresser.

“Fuck! I should have used the night vision goggles.”

“Tony…”

Tony’s heart gave a joyful jolt forgetting what had happened before. There was no reason for secrecy anymore so he clapped once and light flooded the corridor revealing Bruce dressed in his pajamas and night robe, Hero on his lap. His eyes were full with love and Tony inhaled deeply lolling his head on the side.

“You sneaked out from Alfred, huh? Naughty littl’ guy! You should be sleeping, you know.”

Bruce grinned discerning that his friend was in better mood.

“I couldn’t sleep while we’re not in speaking terms…”

Tony ruffled his hair.

“C’mon! It’s not that serious! It happens to the best families, you know…Ask Peps how many times we ripped one another… And don’t start crying like that day…this time I’ll start crying too!”

Bruce laughed.

“And we don’t want that, huh?”

Tony pouted.

“No! It would hurt my image irrevocably” he kneeled by Bruce. “How are you?”

“Perfect! Tony…”

“Hm…”

“I’ll come to Malibu.”

Tony huffed.

“You don’t have to, buddy! I was wrong… I was…”

“Panicked… Scared for my life…” he mumbled and Tony nodded. “I know how much you love me, Tony…and I want you to know how much I appreciate that and…I love you too.”

“Shsssss…” he hugged him. “You don’t have to say anything…I know…” he kissed the top of Bruce’s head and Hero between them hissed to the billionaire. “I guess I deserve that, huh?” he petted Hero’s head.

“I’ll come for a few days and then I’ll return; after all, it will be better for everyone and will persuade them that I’m scared; and that will give them open space to steal the items.”

Tony shook his head amused.

“So it is work and pleasure, huh? Only I don’t know if I am work or pleasure…” he frowned.

“Always pleasure…”
“Thank God for that!”
Bruce chuckled.

“Also, I think that our ‘friend’, the Arrow knows who I am and follows me around.”

Thor hovered over the Wayne Estate, just in case. He knew that Tony had returned and that the place had the best security but still it was better to be sure. Also, he wished the assailant would try something so he could finish what was left half with the coward’s runaway.

His gaze was drawn to the gravestones over the small hill. The graves of Bruce’s parents. He flew there and landed softly bowing his head slightly in respect. The place was filled with melancholy and Thor could only imagine how Bruce was feeling every time he came here. On the soil, were placed bouquets with white roses.

The god pressed his lips. Death…Losing the people you love…knowing that this was irrevocable and you won’t see them ever again…

“You don’t know anything about death; about mortality…” Tony snorted to his ear again.

He could admit that this kind of fear was unbeatable: the terror of losing someone you love so much; someone who is the meaning of your life. It must be the worst torture…Being weak before the absolute absence of your loved one; the potential of losing your loved one, a noble, brave warrior sacrificing himself for the others…So perfect but so…mortal…

“This place has something that helps meditation…” a serious voice said behind him and the Asgardian startled turned to see Bruce grinning to him.

The human was fully dressed, wrapped in his black long coat. The god blushed as if being caught in mischief.

“How?” the god asked baffled. “I didn’t hear you coming…”

“Ninja training” Bruce mumbled “very handy when you want to startle a mighty god.”

“I hope you don’t mind I’m here… I keep an eye on the Manor”

“Two eyes…No, I don’t mind you being here…” he steered his chair closer to the graves and touched the stone with his fingertips; his eyes stayed for a few seconds fixed on the stones and then turned to Thor. “Before I didn’t thank you as I should.”

Thor waved that off.

“You don’t have to.”

“I was cold, abrupt and maybe rude.”

“Not at all… I understand: a noble, brave, mighty warrior like you being forced to watch as others fight…” he smiled shyly “ not to mention that you would have prefered to see Superman fighting with the impostor.”

Bruce shook his head.

“You’re a great person, Thor, and I always am happy to see you. And that’s the reason I don’t want
“You to…” he locked eyes with Thor’s baby blues and bit his bottom lip. “I can’t love you the way you wish and you deserve.”

“I know…”

“Then fight it off, my friend: you deserve someone to make you happy. You must realize that what you feel for me is…” he inhaled. “You have to understand that there are things in me that could influence someone…My half DNA is Lilith’s” Thor frowned; he had heard of her – Bruce nodded “she was an irresistible enchantress and unfortunately this comes out of me affecting people…great people like you.”

“You were saying these things to Superman too?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I was…but he didn’t want to understand and…it was my fault. I didn’t stop it and look where that brought us.”

“Nothing of what happened is your fault, Bruce” Thor came closer.

“Do not torment yourself with me, Thor. I’m not made for love like this…Your feelings are too much for me... And I don’t want you to be hurt.”

“You care so much for people…even if they are gods…You want to protect everyone.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Which is ridiculous, I know. I can’t protect myself, huh?”

“No, no! I know you felt awfully being forced to not do what you best know. You’re a great warrior who saved so many people and it must have been torturous to wait from others to stop evil people. But you have to be patient, Bruce, until you get fully healed. Nothing of these should make you feel bad: you still protect and save people with your acts and self sacrifice: you’re so unique and special that it is not only your fighting skills that win the battles.”

“Thank you” Bruce nodded his head in appreciation.

“And I’m proud to be in the circle of your trusted people; it’s an honor to have your love…whatever kind of love. Let me continue being around you” however the blond god couldn’t guarantee that he’d stop feeling for Bruce the way he did.

The human could sense that yet he didn’t want to insist.

“You don’t have to ask that, Thor.”

“Everything alright with Tony?”

Bruce grinned and nodded.

“He loves me so much that he wouldn’t have stayed angry whatever I had done…” he gazed at the sky.

Thor followed his gaze.

“This is mutual…”
Bruce turned to him, the freezing breeze ruffling his locks as much as Thor’s.

“I love Tony so much that sometimes I wish he had never met me” Thor narrowed his eyes. “Tony is life in flesh and blood and I drain that life out of him.”

Thor kneeled before him.

“Do not say that, Bruce” he locked eyes with the human his blond locks touching Bruce’s face. “It is a blessing you two were met…a blessing for everyone. When I saw that coward scoundrel attacking you…threatening your life…”

Bruce raised his fingertips stopping him.

“I saw you there, Thor…please, do not do that to yourself: it is a mistake…”

Thor seemed to be lost for a minute and Bruce averted a bit his gaze; he had to change the subject.

“Tell me, Thor: have you ever heard of Themyscirra?”

“The island of the Amazons?”

“Exactly.’’

Thor stood.

“You’re thinking of going there?” he chose to not utter his thought: Bruce still had Superman's best interest in mind.

“I know that many answers to our questions lie there…” Bruce looking in the god's eyes realized what Thor was thinking and appreciated his discretion to not address this; he loathed himself because this kind person felt bad yet maybe he was helping him to accept it and go on.

Thor pouted.

“I’m sorry, Bruce; but the Asgardians have no affairs with the Amazons. But I’ll try to find anything that will contribute to your quest.”

Bruce smiled, the flapping of Thor’s red cape reminding him of another cape.

“Thank you.”

Thor smiled and gestured to the quiet Manor.

“Now I think you should go to sleep because I’ll have to face both Alfred and Tony for keeping you awake.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Hm…Believe me they are quiet formidable those two, even for a god.”

“Don’t tell me you had any doubt that I’d come for you?”

In the twinkling blue topaz of those beautiful eyes Bruce saw his reflection: the face of a teen; a skinny face, dirty with bruises but with the shine of joy. The raven haired angel in red and blue had surged Falcone’s camparet and taken him in his strong arms. Saving him, carrying him to the sky; in complete freedom, in complete happiness.

His angel had come... Bruce wrapped his skinny left hand around the man’s neck – his right arm was dead but now it didn’t hurt. The angel looked at him with so much love and smiled his blinding smile.

Bruce let his head nestle to the young man’s broad chest...so warm...so safe...

That was a lie...

Bruce even in the depths of his exhausted sleep was finally aware that this wasn’t true; it never happened. He wanted to open his eyes but he was so tired that he couldn’t. However the raven haired angel had left as he had done in reality...

When Alfred knocked the door to Bruce’s bedroom, the youth was already dressed and Hero was purring at his feet urging him to go downstairs and have breakfast.

“Come in. Good morning, Alfred.”

“Good morning, sir.”

“I overslept.”

“Hardly, sir: it is just 35 minutes after nine. Also, you very much needed some extra hours of sleep. Would you like me to bring your breakfast here?”

“No, I’ll come downstairs.”

“Mr. Collins called while you were asleep; I asked him if he wanted to wake you up but he said that he would call later.”

“Thank you, Alfred. I’ll call him.”

Alfred was tidying up the room without missing his young master’s reactions to what Mr. Collins was saying to him. Well, not much reaction since Bruce had learnt to hide his feelings. However the paleness that settled over the youth’s face was enough.

“Is anything the matter, Master Bruce?”

Bruce just looked at him.

“Alright. Thank you, Mr. Collins; I’m coming to the Tower to discuss it from up close.”

“What happened, Master Bruce?” the Englishman approached.

“Zucco had petitioned against my guardianship” Bruce replied dryly.
“A hearing will be held by the court examining Mr. Zucco’s petition and the state of your guardianship.”

Bruce watched calm Mr. Collins seated behind his office’s desk detailing the procedure.

“But Ms. Turner made me the legal guardian of Richard.”

Mr. Collins nodded.

“Indeed but in some cases the state can countermand that if judges that it is for the child’s best interest.”

Bruce licked his lips.

“Is it possible to judge that?”

Mr. Collins inhaled; he took the letter from his desk.

“Mr. Zucco claims that you are inadequate for Richard’s guardianship and he mentions the recent incident when Mr. Grayson was seen drinking alcohol and quarrelling with adults; he ran away when an officer came. Furthermore, he references another older incident where the teen was seen by several witnesses running away from you” Bruce shook his head and Mr. Collins pressed his lips. “Also, he claims that the boy is in constant danger since you are often the subject of violent attacks that could affect the boy’s life.”

Bruce nodded and raised his eyebrows.

“Like yesterday…”

Mr. Collins intertwined his fingers on the desk.

“I’m sorry, Mr. Wayne.”

“The hearing procedure what will include?”

Mr. Collins waved his hands.

“Testimonies from both sides.”

“And Richard? I don’t want him dragged into this.”

Collins raised his eyebrows.

“I’m afraid that this doesn’t depend on what we want, Mr. Wayne. Zucco asks for the boy’s presence.”

Bruce snorted.

“Of course. For him Richard is not the priority and he knows that the boy hates me: he took care to fuel this.”

Collins stood and came out of his desk to approach Bruce.
“We’ll try to prove exactly what you said, that Richard isn’t the priority for Zucco. However the youth evidently favors him and Zucco is married” he inhaled. “And there is something else.”

Bruce frowned.

“What?”

“He makes insinuation about your mental and emotional health…”

Bruce yanked his head.

“I have been evaluated by psychiatrists when I testified against Falcone.”

Collins nodded.

“I know but it’s up to the court to decide and ask a new evaluation.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Whatever…The important thing is Zucco doesn’t get the boy. So Richard will have to be present?”

“That is not necessary but the court will eventually decide if his testimony is needed.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I wouldn’t like him in all this; he has had enough to be dragged in court rooms; a court isn’t the best place for a young boy.”

Mr. Collins approached Bruce and patted him on the back.

“We’ll do everything in our power for you to retain the guardianship of the boy.”

Bruce nodded and smiled.

“I know, Mr. Collins. Thank you.”

Upon coming out of the lift to his office’s floor, Bruce met Tony who was also heading to Bruce’s office.

“What happened, Bruce?”

“Come inside.”

Once in the office, Tony looked at his friend.

“I called to the Manor looking for you and Alfred told me that you are in the Tower and then Synthia tells me that you immediately went to the legal department. What’s going on?”

“Zucco petitioned against my guardianship and the thing will go to the court.”

Tony shook his head infuriated and cursed.

“That sonovabitch!” he pinched the bridge of his nose thoughtful – another test for his friend: why they couldn’t let him alone to heal?

But then he felt that he should encourage his friend and crouched in front of him holding his upper arms. Their eyes locked.
“Everything will be fine, littl’ guy…You’re the best surrogate father there is!”

Bruce laughed.

“Thank you, Tony! I hope the court has the same opinion with you because Zucco is really dangerous” his face became grim. “I gathered evidence that he was the one that caused John Grayson’s death and prior to that he made fraud resulting in John losing his savings.”

Tony’s eyes flashed with determination.

“Great! Show this evidence and send him in jail.”

Bruce huffed.

“Tony, it is just evidence not proof: I need to prove his guilt without any doubt because otherwise there is the risk of him being exonerated and then his influence to Dick would be even greater and so the danger for the boy. So we must win this to the court and buy some time.”

Tony pursed his lips.

“Yes, but starting a case against him for John Grayson’s death will erase any possibility of him getting Dick’s guardianship.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Or not. They could claim that I used my connections to issue this case just to degrade and blackmail him into retreating from Dick’s guardianship. Everything is a matter of right timing.”

Tony raised his eyebrows.

“As you proved perfectly with Falcone and the League of Shadows, huh?”

“I hope everything goes as smoothly…”

Tony cupped his friend’s face.

“Me too; with the League of Shadows you were tortured by them before we managed to exterminate them. You’re stressed?” he frowned because usually his friend was tranquil.

“It is Richard’s life…Enough damage has been done to this boy.”

Tony brushed his cheek.

“And that just proves that you’re the best guardian for this ungrateful brat.”

Bruce just crooked his lips.

Tony stood and ruffled his hair.

“Let me guess: that cancels your visit in Malibu, right?” he asked almost laughing hiding his disappointment.

But Bruce smiled reassuring.

“No, I’ll come but for a couple of days. You honored me with the central stand in StarkExpo; I’d be ungrateful to not come.”
Tony leaned to him and held his shoulders.

“You don’t have to, Bruce” he said seriously. “I want you to forget everything I told you yesterday: I wasn’t my usual, sweet self” Bruce chuckled and Tony did the same.

“I want to come, Tony: the last time I was in Malibu it was great. Also my absence from Gotham will fit our plans.’’

Tony nodded.

“Problems for Bruce Wayne don’t seem to stop, Alex. According to reliable sources there is a petition against the billionaire’s guardianship of Richard Grayson – and after the videos showing the boy drinking alcohol wandering Gotham at night time the petition would certainly be solid for the court. Not to mention that the constant attacks against Bruce Wayne’s life – not only by Joker but also by this new attacker - can be a real concern about the well being of the orphan.”

“Do you know who made the petition, Tom?’’Alex Knox from the studio asked his colleague.

“Our sources say that it is the boy’s only remaining blood relative that petitioned. It’s Richard Grayson’s uncle, Tony Zucco, cousin of the boy’s late father John Grayson the world famous gymnastics’ Olympic Champion.”

“When the hearing is going to take place?’’

“In a few days.”

Knox raised his eyebrows.

“Let’s hope that the court will decide the best for the boy. Thank you, Tom.”

The image of his colleague vanished from the screen on the wall and Alex Knox turned to face the camera.

“And as if this wasn’t enough for our Prince, there is a leak from Wayne Enterprises stating where the company keeps priced items taken from LexCorps. Lucius Fox, the Wayne Enterprises’ chief of the Research and Development sector denied that the information was true.”

Footage from the packed with people coming and going Wayne Enterprises’ foyer was played where a brightly smiling Lucius Fox waved the question off.

“I assure you there’s no truth in that leaked information: someone tried to gain money and attention leaking false information.”

Mannheim cocked an eyebrow watching the news playing in thin air between him and Bagdana that sat at an armchair in his business office at Metropolis.

“As soon as you informed me about the leaked information, I sent Granny Goodness and her minions to watch every movement at the Wayne Tower” the square shaped gangster said to his minion who watched frowned from his seat. “This Afro-American might have said that it was a lie but” Mannheim smirked and his eyes took the fire essence of his real self “the fact is that trunks are moving from the Tower to some location outside Gotham where Wayne has storage units.”

Bagdana cleared his throat thoughtful.
“They are trying to denounce the information but they are panicked and attempt to get my property to a new unknown – as they believe – location.”

“Hm…” the ancient demon rubbed his square jaw.

Mannheim stood and the footage from the news evaporated.

“What?” he asked approaching his minion.

“Movements of panic are not Bruce’s characteristic.”

Mannheim rolled his eyes.

“The fact you failed to make him your slave and mistress makes you overestimate him” Bagdana cocked an eyebrow. “He is panicked, Bagdana: two days ago he was almost killed and now someone figured that inside the Tower he had stashed the items from Luthor’s labs and leaked that information. The pest didn’t expect that and in his fear of me stealing them he takes them away” he lolled his head on the side. “As he did with himself…” he sneered “he ran to the safety of Stark’s house. He doesn’t suspect that I’m already watching and I’m going to take what’s mine.”

Bagdana intertwined his fingers in front of his face.

“He didn’t expect?” he asked mostly himself deep in thought.

Mannheim narrowed his eyes to slits.

“You mean that all this is a scheme to frame me up?” he snorted. “Is this man so wicked? No way… If you believe that then why you rushed to report the leaked information?”

“Because it is my job, right?” Bagdana raised his eyebrows. “You’re the boss and you make the decisions after all.”

Mannheim crossed his arms.

“If Wayne thinks that he can fool me by sending my things away or that he can frame me up, then you’re heading to a new shock” he shook his head self satisfied “I’d like to see his face when he finds out that the items are gone. For a demon you are much too scared, Bagdana” he sniggered and the demon crooked his mouth. “It is time to get back what is mine. I waited enough: things must start moving.”

Bagdana stood.

“You’re planning to attack the storage units and steal the items?”

Mannheim lolled his head on the side and smirked.

“Granny has already been ordered to acquire the items for me…”

Bagdana nodded and bowed slightly his head.

“As you wish.”

Mannheim grinned satisfied for the demon’s submission.

“What have you done about your other duty?” he asked abruptly.
“Your traces are covered.”

“Then you are dismissed” he waved him off and Bagdana bowed once again and vanished.

Mannheim smirked and his eyes shone gleefully.

“Now you realized that nothing stops me from killing your pet you are in line, you worthless demon!” he smirked. “But you are going to be punished for your prior behavior” he chuckled “and I know what to use to chastise you so you never dare to doubt me again.”

Pepper gave Bruce a warm hug that made Tony cock an eyebrow. The red haired kissed the youth in both cheeks.

“I’m here, you know!” Tony exclaimed raising his voice though the buzz from the jet’s engines was very mild. “And I’m not blind! Also I’m a bit selfish so when my girlfriend shows so much enthusiasm for someone else than me…”

Pepper turned to him – of course both she and Bruce knew that Tony was joking.

“Your girlfriend? I see you remember that once in a while…”

“He never forgets that” Bruce hurried to defend his friend and Tony nodded pouting.

“Thanks, buddy! I need a lawyer…”

Pepper stood and smirked at him before turning again to Bruce.

“How was your flight? Are you feeling tired?”

Bruce chuckled.

“Don’t tell me! You were speaking with Alfred, right?”

The red haired laughed.

“As a matter of fact I did…He is worried and I’m too after that last attack.”

“I’m fine, Peps.”

She cleared her throat and cast a sideways glance at Tony who frowned.

“You know, Bruce, he is a good kid deep inside but sometimes he acts like a brat – especially, when he is scared. And when they attacked you, he pissed himself.”

Tony opened his mouth enraged and slapped his thighs increasing Pepper’s amusement.

“Wha’…Of course not!” he looked around.

Thankfully, they were inside the hangar at his house’s grounds; Tony’s jet could easily land vertically in the moderate space of a hangar. Of course, as with everything owned by Tony Stark this wasn’t a usual hangar: its dome roof opened to admit the owner’s jet. All in all, one of the blessings of a private ‘airport’ was that the only one that could have heard was Happy but he was still inside the jet and he was used to hear Pepper reprimanding him for worse.
Pepper crooked her mouth to Tony and turned again to Bruce.

“What I wanted to say, Bruce, is that what your stupid friend said to you that day was due to his terror and panic, he didn’t mean it; so, please, do forget everything. He loves you more than anything.”

Bruce smiled.

“I know, Peps…I already forgot everything.”

Pepper nodded and Tony surged to her from the back and hugged her kissing her cheek.

“My sweet Peps! Always takes care of me and worries about my well being…I’m so lucky!”

Pepper rolled her eyes and then locked eyes with Bruce who chuckled at his friends’ happiness.

As they slowly left the hangar the cheerful sun of California greeted them and Bruce looked around the carefully manicured lawn, the Olympic dimensions’ pool with the isle in the middle where a beautiful polygonal marble kiosk stood under the shadow of two enormous palm trees. The nearby sound of the sea waves under the hill on top of which Tony’s house was built completed the whole sense of relaxation and particularly the seagulls’ cries made Bruce feel numb.

“I missed that place…” he said as they crossed the grounds to enter the house.

Tony cocked his eyebrows having his arm wrapped around Pepper’s shoulder causing her rolling of eyes.

“Definitely you need some sun, buddy and you can stay as long as you like whenever you like” he commented as the main door opened automatically.

“Welcome back, Master Tony, Master Bruce; I’m very happy to see you again, Miss Potts: you are lovely as ever.”

“Hello, Jarvis” Bruce said.

But Pepper turned to Tony.

“You need to program your AI to stop his Stark-ish attempts at flattering.”

Tony pouted.

“Yeah…he lacks my charm so it sounds stupid.”

Pepper shook her head and smirked.

“Even with your…charm still sounds stupid!”

Bruce chuckled and Tony grimaced.

“That hurt my pride…” he said pouting like a baby.

Pepper winked.

“I know; that’s why I said it!” she smiled and escaped Tony’s hug heading to the kitchen. “I’ll bring some coffee, boys.”
“Use the espresso gadget this time!” he remarked and turned to Bruce conspiratorially. “You don’t want to drink Pepper made coffee…” his eyes bulged in terror.

However he stayed still watching her. He shook his head.

“In any case, she is crazy for me!”

Bruce smiled.

“You are lucky, Tony: you need to take care of her” Bruce commented as they headed to the vast minimally decorated leaving room.

“I’m doing my best, littl’ guy…” he said diving into his elliptic armchair. “Just before we landed I received a report from Fury – by the way, he is furious about the attack against you.”

Bruce smirked.

“He fears that he’ll lose his potential Avenger…He never accepted that I’m not Batman.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows and pouted.

“I’m not a fan of good ol’ Nick but he is a very clever man…”

“What about that report?”

“Right…SHIELD’s agents sent urgent intelligence about appearances of a flying robot which is similar to Ironman” Bruce nodded smirking.

“Did they manage to locate it? Or identify the culprit?”

“No but our men speak about high levels of activity in newly created labs near Metropolis which our agents found that belong to none other than our friend Luthor. Intelligence speak about a flying android” Bruce pursed his lips in disbelief and Tony frowned. “You don’t believe that, don’t you?”

Bruce inhaled.

“I do believe your agents and that these are real.”

“Then?”

“I just don’t believe that Luthor was behind the attack.”

Tony narrowed his eyes.

“What?” he exclaimed surprised. “But that android is a copy of Ironman and we know that Luthor was working with Obadiah who had manufactured a replica of my masterpiece. So Luthor could easily take his information and improve what old Obadiah did.”

Bruce rubbed his palms together together.

“It could be but I don’t believe it, Tony. First of all, it is the timing this info came: too convenient, don’t you think? Plant some clues so to turn our attention to Luthor: who could be a better candidate for an attack against me? He hates me and what happened during the meeting in LexCorp is a very persuasive motive. Yet even if we accept that Luthor made that attack, what about the thugs that attacked at the same time?”
Tony lolled his head on the side.

“He could buy them – he has done that again when he planned to use that weapon to breach the Wayne Tower.”

“Yes, but the thugs manifest the same symptoms with the thugs that made the attack at the Metropolis’ subway and those who broke in LexLabs.”

“Still Luthor could be implicated with Intergang.”

“Yes, but when all these happened Luthor was in jail and if he had ordered the attacks at the Labs he would know exactly where to look for what he wanted so Mannheim wouldn’t be so pissed for his unfinished order.”

“Then we’re still with Mannheim…”

Bruce nodded.

“I’m positive that it is him. After I told him that the items would be destroyed, I expected him to wait the right moment to steal them; I didn’t expect that he would make an attempt against me because it would be too obvious. However he acted impetuously and exactly like a man with great power who isn’t afraid of the consequences” Tony pressed his lips “his wrath urged him to give me a lesson. But now probably someone of his allies advised him to cover his tracks by spreading information that will turn the suspicions elsewhere – very much like we did leaking the items’ location and sending them away to show that we are panicked by the breach in secrecy.”

“So that makes him the ghost leader of Intergang.”

“I don’t have proof but there are too many connections to be ignored. The secrecy around him and his business’ activity; Luthor’s release with the use of high connections exactly like the way several gangsters of Metropolis were released from prison; the LexLabs’ burglaries and then his demand to deliver him the items.”

Tony clapped: he liked action not waiting.

“So get him!”

Bruce on the other hand was a man of patience; he shook his head calmly.

“If we act now, our case will be easily dismissed and if not easily he still will be released in no time: we should be patient.”

Tony clenched the armrests.

“Things took their way then.”

Bruce nodded.

“Lucius called and told me that the items’ shipping started in tight secrecy but I’m sure that Mannheim knows and has his people to it.”

“The items have been wired in a way that they wouldn’t be able to detect no matter the means they got. Also will have the control to whatever they’ll manufacture with these thingies.”

Bruce nodded thoughtful.
“I made sure that there won’t be any casualties – I spoke with Lucius and we agreed to place only mechanical security system without people.”

Tony slapped his thighs.

“So the ball is in their field, huh? Great! I hate waiting: I just want to kick his ass really hard after what he did.”

“Alea jacta est…” Bruce said solemnly.

Tony met his gaze: this was a phrase Bruce used often.

“Ra’s Al Ghul had you study Latin, huh? The bastard knew the gem he had in his hands and tried to exploit you in every possible way!” he pinched the bridge of his nose thinking of Ra’s Al Ghul using the weak teen for his twisted desires and plans.

Bruce could understand what his friend was thinking and wished to bring him out of those thoughts.

“He was obsessed with the ancient great generals.”

Tony smiled and lolled his head on the side.

“No wonder you’re a great general yourself…” Bruce fixed his eyes on his friend and Tony cocked his eyebrows. “C’mon! Don’t be so modest! You are!”

The clicking of Pepper’s heels echoed on the light golden granite floor as she came carrying a tray with cups of hot steaming coffee.

“What he tells you, Bruce?”

Tony shook his head and sighed.

“I’m sooooo misunderstood!”

Bruce chuckled and took his cup of coffee thanking Pepper.

“He didn’t say anything bad, Pepper: I swear.”

Tony nodded widening his eyes for emphasis.

“You see how prejudiced you are against me?”

Pepper crossed her arms and cocked an eyebrow.

“Yeah…sure. I heard about the hearing on Richard’s guardianship, Bruce.”

He shook his head.

“As if the boy didn’t have enough…”

Pepper pressed her lips.

“I’m sure everything is going to be fine: Mr. Collins is one of the best lawyers.”

Bruce grinned.

“He is and I trust him” however he was wary about the whole ordeal of the hearing and uncertain about the outcome. However for now he had other things to settle too. “Tony, you had found Princess Diana’s apartment.”

Tony frowned over his cup of coffee.

“Of course” he cocked an eyebrow “nobody can hide from the sun and Tony Stark” Pepper cast him an amused and exasperated glance.

“Great!”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“You are still tormenting yourself with that sonovabitch?” he shook his head. “I mean Superman!” Bruce closed his eyes. “Bruce, stop thinking about him: he has done enough damage!”

“I think that she plays a role in this scheme, Tony: I don’t believe in coincidences and the way she entered our lives and acted doesn’t seem random at all.”

Tony huffed grimacing.

“Then Oliver Queen could be implicated too.”

Bruce looked at his friends.

“That remains to be seen…Of what I’m sure though is that Arrow knows who I am” he took in Pepper’s questioning look. “I mean Batman.”

Tony narrowed his eyes.

“We were talking about Queen” he said suspiciously. “What Arrow has to do with this?”

Bruce smiled.

“Nothing. I just jumped from one subject to another: Arrow is another mystery.”

Bruce was almost sure that Queen was the Arrow but he didn't want to share yet the man's secret with anyone. He thought about the clues he had: Queen wore gloves and that might not be so odd except that he wore them only that day after the attack when Arrow was wounded on the back of his hand and naturally Queen knew that Bruce would notice and make the connection. And the hurried way he removed his hand as soon as Bruce mentioned the gloves… The two men had the same body and though Arrow’s face was always shadowed Bruce could discern that it had the same structure as Queen’s. Also, the Arrow first appeared in the Avengers’ Tower where Queen was; and then Arrow led him to the rooftop where Superman and the Amazon was having sex because he knew what this meant to Batman and because he was interested in Bruce.

Of course Arrow appeared once in Chicago while Queen was in Gotham but for a billionaire with a private jet the distance wasn’t a problem. He just wanted to confuse Bruce. And then again in Metropolis when Batman met Superman, the Arrow was conveniently there watching ready to even kill Superman with a Kryptonite arrow.

“He was great in every sport except than archery”

Queen’s friend from university had said and the man seemed annoyed for the mention of archery. He was helpless in archery: that troubled Bruce: of course Queen could have trained in the years that followed however archery – Ra’s had been telling him - wasn’t something someone could easily improve from being lousy into becoming a modern Robin Hood…

“We certainly have to solve Queen’s riddle and find his role in the pattern” he said thoughtful deciding that he had to close some deals with the man in order to watch him closely.

Zucco was waiting at the yard of Dick’s school covered behind the small shed with the janitor’s equipment; he had texted the boy and it took no more than a few minutes for the boy to appear.

Dick looked around searching for his uncle and Zucco stretched his hand to draw his attention and then popped his head for a second just for Dick to see him. Zucco knew that the boy had bodyguards watching his movements.

Dick walked casually behind the shed and as soon as he saw his uncle rushed to his arms. Zucco chuckled for the boy’s enthusiasm.

“So I assume that you heard the news?” he asked pressed in the boy’s hug.

“It was about time!” Dick exclaimed. “I thought you wouldn’t do it! I couldn’t take it anymore: Wayne playing my daddy and punishing me!”

“Calm down, champ!” he laughed. “Soon it’ll be over and we’ll be together.”

“Are you sure we’ll win? Wayne is filthy rich…”

Zucco ruffled the boy’s raven hair and pinched playfully his blushed cheeks.

“Don’t worry, Dick. The days of your suffering will be soon over – a bad memory. He might be rich but justice cares more about your well being so they won’t give you to a mental case like him.”

Dick grinned broadly.

“And I have showed many times how unhappy I am with him. Thank Goodness he went to Malibu and I don’t have to endure his presence.”

Zucco nodded.

“I feel for you…And you really made a fantastic job, champ, showing to the world who is Wayne!”

Dick locked eyes with him.

“I’ll speak in the court too?” he asked eagerly.

Zucco raised his eyebrows.

“I don’t know if you should get mingled in this…” he said thoughtful wanting to show concern hiding the fact that he indeed asked for the boy’s presence at the court. “I wouldn’t want you in a court being examined by lawyers” he chuckled “I hate the lot.”

Dick shook his head unconcerned.

“I don’t mind testifying if that helps…”

Zucco grinned.
“I’m sure Wayne will do everything in his power to stop that” he frowned slightly his eyebrows. “How are things between you and Breizic?”

Dick shrugged surprised that his uncle brought that up.

“We haven’t been able to interact much but I see already that people are right about him: he is great! He has given me some very useful advice that thanks to Wayne” his voice was filled with poison “I didn’t have the chance to practice in the gym but I’m sure they will help my technique.”

Zucco pressed his lips thoughtful: he didn’t like the sudden reappearance of Breizic in Gotham and his interest in Grayson’s boy. That could ruin things for him.

“Listen, Dick, I know that ol’ Breizic is a legend and he enjoys the appreciation of the federation yet…there are things” Dick frowned. “Your father had many quarrels with him and in the end he fired him.”

“And you became his trainer – I know – but later they reconciled and Breizic returned to his team. What do you want to say?”

“That he is skilled, smart; top in his job but he isn’t trustworthy.”

Dick’s frown became deeper – frankly, he was tired of being advised all the time against people he liked. First, his granny warned him against Tony and now Tony against Breizic.

Zucco read the boy’s expression and ruffled the boy’s locks.

“He is trustworthy in everything that has to do with gymnastics but not to everything else…” he huffed. “Your dad didn’t trust him in other matters because Breizic…” he licked his lips feigning uneasiness “of course, he was doing it for John’s best interest but many times he tried to close deals for John with sponsors that John didn’t like.”

“You mean…”

“Breizic likes money” he opened his arms “that’s his biggest sin that sometimes ruins his relationships with people. And as a matter of fact his sudden returning to Gotham after you became Wayne’s ward…”

Dick’s eyes widened and Zucco stopped because the boy understood without him having to say anything.

“You mean that he came to Gotham and approached me because Wayne asked him to?” the boy was baffled and almost angry.

Zucco licked his lips uncomfortable and shrugged one shoulder.

“All these years he was absent and then when you became the ward of a billionaire he returns and becomes your advisor…”

Dick’s mouth stayed agape; he remembered the discussion he had with Breizic after Wayne’s punishment.

“He told me that he agrees with Wayne’s punishment…”

Zucco smirked and huffed exasperated.

“Of course he would!”
However Dick was troubled. His granny used to say about Tony the same things Tony was saying for Breizic now. What was true? He turned his eyes away and Zucco brushed his upper arm.

“Are you alright?”

The boy nodded.

“I have to return…” he gestured with the head to the building.

“Okay, champ; remember: everything is going to be fine – soon you’ll be free and things will get better.”

Dick looked at him and smiled but his eyes were clouded.

“See you, Tony!”

Zucco watched him running towards the school and smiled.

“Indeed some people are so much drawn by the money…” he sneered and headed to the back exit of the yard.

The StarkExpo was traditionally held in the center of Malibu in a gargantuan area owned by Stark Industries.

Tony had guided Bruce again to the facilities when he had come immediately after Falcone’s fall. Yet now, during Stark Expo which was the event of the year for Stark Industries, the whole area was more impressive than ever.

The rectangular endless space had two floors with such high ceilings that gave the impression of being even more enormous. The walls, floor and ceiling was painted in flashing red and gold and rolling stairs or glass lifts scattered around brought the visitors to the upper level where someone could find cafeterias, restaurants, bowling and shop. The StarkExpo facility was one of the favorite event centers throughout the year where live concerts were held.

Bruce couldn’t stop himself from staring around awed like a small child causing Tony’s amused and satisfied grins.

The place was flooded with people that goggled on the Star Industries’ new products that were displayed in spectacular stands; the most impressive was that the products however massive or heavy didn’t need any base to support them and floated in their stands washed in light.

Despite the vast number of visitors since it was evening, the peak hour, the facilities were so spacious that it was very easy to move even if you were in a wheelchair.

“Congratulations, Tony!” Bruce said to his friend smiling broadly.

Tony was waving to people beaming for the visitors’ cameras that once in a while didn’t shoot the products but the Ironman himself. He turned to Bruce.

“You like it?”

Bruce laughed.

“Like it?! I’m awestruck! This is a wonder, Tony: not only your creations but also the facilities, the organization, the planning…”

“Sorry for not blushing before such praise but I’m a genius, babe!” Tony took his smuggest expression though he was blushed and his eyes shone cheerful.

A dry cough caught their attention and Pepper joined them.

“The points for the planning and organization belong to someone else, Mr. Stark. Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar’s…”

She was wearing an elegant dress suit with black midi jacket, black knee length skirt and a shiny white silk shirt that its lapels fell on the jacket’s lapels. Of course, the assorted black stiletto heels made her shapely legs even more breathtaking.

“Pepper, you are dazzling!” Bruce said.

She beamed at Bruce.

“Thank you, Bruce: it is the grand opening after all” the Expo had started two days ago but the official opening was today. “I’m glad someone noticed me…” she said snidely to Tony who was eyeing her from feet to head goggling.

“Oh, boy! We must get isolated soon…” Tony mumbled cocking his eyebrows.

Pepper rolled her eyes but Bruce could see the satisfied shine in her eyes.

“Mr. Stark, be—have…” she said in heavy British accent and Tony chuckled.

“Ugh! That attire and that stern look make my creativity flow…and I don’t mean inventions…” he twisted his eyebrows upwards.

“Now, Tony” Pepper said “we are among people…”

He looked around shocked.

“Really?! Suddenly, I felt like only three people were here…”

Pepper smirked.

“You need to check this with your doctor” she snapped and stretched her body walking ahead.

As they explored the exhibition and Tony explained to him each product – better than the person in each stand, Bruce was sure – Bruce felt dazzled.

“The more I see the more inadequate our products look…I don’t know if Wayne Enterprises deserve the central stand in StarkExpo, Tony.”

The older man rolled his eyes.

“Lucius would be very disappointed hearing that! Littl’ guy, you need to take some lessons of self esteem from the best…that is: moi.”

Bruce chuckled and Pepper smiled to him.

“You know which stand had gathered the most visitors?” she asked. “The central stand featuring Wayne Enterprises’ Cosmos polymorphic tablet.”
“Really?”

Tony nodded.

“Pepper never tells lies, buddy: I’ve got bitter experience…”

They moved ahead towards the central stand that was situated in a huge round shaped space; in the middle, there was a light blue column where the Cosmos tablet stood in midair changing in its various sizes while the female employees demonstrated how the tablet turned into a Smartphone and then to a professional camera.

As Pepper had said, this place was the most packed with people asking questions and watching avidly the demonstration.

“We have already people asking if they can preorder” Pepper remarked. “Not to mention their interest on the applications Wayne Enterprises features.”

“And as you see” Tony gestured to the next light green column “our joined project about the bionic body parts is as fascinating for people. I can’t imagine their reaction when they see you walking again.”

Tony crouched and held Bruce’s upper arms.

“And that will happen soon – I promise you, littl’ guy.”

“I know, Tony; you will make another miracle.”

“Together…We’ll make wonders together, buddy…”

Pepper smiled touched but cleared her throat because some journalists turned to them and began taking pictures.

Tony stood and Pepper leaned to his ear.

“It’s show time, Mr. Stark – time to announce the official opening.”

Tony dusted his impeccable shining, light gray two piece suit and fixed his tie of the same color. He sighed.

“They wait everything from me, littl’ guy…I feel being exploited.”

Bruce chuckled and followed them to the glistening stage where Tony was to announce the official opening giving the signal for the party to start – the stage was still cast in darkness waiting for the billionaire to give the signal for the party. Tony had brought the most popular pop stars to sing for StarkExpo’s grand event.

Pepper ascended the few steps and announced Tony to the crowd that cheered.

Tony fixed his hair and looked at Bruce’s loving stare.

“Dazzling as ever?” he asked Bruce who nodded. “A heartbreaker?” the younger man chuckled nodding. “Great ass?” he asked glancing at his buttocks.

“Perfect.”

“Then fire at will, babe!” he winked. “Right back to you, littl’ guy!”
“Are you enjoying yourself, Bruce?” Pepper asked.

The party was in full vibe and the three friends watched the people dancing from the upper level: the central cafeteria had tables on the balcony that was made of reinforced glass so it gave the impression of floating. The lights were lowered and the music loud even louder from the special effects that accompanied the live performances; Tony in his chair was moving to the rhythm.

“It’s great, Peps, thank you for everything. I wish I could stay longer.”

Tony shook his head getting serious.

“I wish that too…Being away from that city would have benefited you.”

Bruce didn’t answer: however great his time in Malibu he missed his grim, grouchy city.

“Mr. Wayne, you prefer Malibu’s safety over Gotham?”

Tony jerked like a snake startled by the journalist who had approached them unnoticed; Bruce had sensed him but didn’t want to show.

“You’re intruding, buddy! We already made statements!” Tony said annoyed.

“After that attack nobody blames you for wanting to get away from Gotham” a second reporter joined.

Bruce remained calm.

“I came in Malibu because my friend Tony honored me by giving Wayne Enterprises a very special place in the greatest Expo in the world. The timing is completely random. I feel equally safe in Gotham and in Malibu.”

More reporters rushed there noticing the famous company. One of the lot snorted.

“That’s not very flattering for Malibu…” he remarked.

“Actually, is flattering for both cities” Bruce smiled but Tony was still pissed and Pepper wasn’t better.

“Do you know anything about the attacker?”

Bruce shrugged.

“Gotham’s police is doing investigation right now…but I don’t have any knowledge – I’ll wait like all of you.”

“Luthor was clearly pissed in the last meeting at LexCorp… Can he be the mastermind?”

“Do you worry about the guardianship of Richard Grayson?”

Bruce smiled calmly.

“I trust that Gotham’s system will decide the best for my ward.”

Now Tony had had enough. He stood.
“Luthor isn’t the only one pissed!”

Pepper however stood and put her body between him and the paparazzi.

“As soon as some development occurs you’ll be the first to know, ladies and gentlemen. Now, I’m sure you’ll have more interesting and thrilling things to cover downstairs.”

At the same time, security guards came and politely but decisively removed the gang.

“Sorry about that Bruce” Tony said grim resuming his seat.

“It’s okay, Tony: I’m used to it. And I’m sure this was nothing compared to what waits me once I return to Gotham.”

Tony stretched his hand and squeezed Bruce’s hand on the round glass table.

“You have all your friends on your side, Bruce…” he said locking eyes with him and Bruce grinned.

Thomas Elliot sat at the couch in his apartment’s living room the only light coming from his tablet. He wore his maroon silk night robe above his pajamas and he was sipping his fine, rare molt whiskey; his tablet’s screen showed footage from GCTV’s news. He smirked listening to the newscaster speaking about the case against Bruce’s guardianship.

“So, Brucey, you have many fronts to fight…Someone wants to take from you the ward you care so much about…”

He turned his head towards the bedroom; from the open door he could see Kelly sleeping on his bed with the dark purple silken sheet covering the down half of her naked body.

He closed his eyes and snorted shaking his head. Thomas was really annoyed with all this secrecy about Bruce’s medical file. Kelly didn’t manage to find the report from his latest exams…Not that he expected much from her but still the dump girl would have made everything to give him what he wanted. However Leslie and her colleagues were doing everything to hide the details about Bruce’s condition. Why? Such secrecy certainly hid fascinating things…

“Damn!” he growled from the frustration of being denied something so alluring.

He stared again at his tablet’s screen where the GCTV’s news showed now footage from Gotham’s courthouse where the procedure would be held.

“I have some surprises for you, Brucie…Your love for this stray brat will bite you hard…”

Clark stared at the small delicacy in his hand, stupidly indecisive.

Ms. Rose looked at him surprised when he placed his order; he had stopped ordering that for long.

He was tempted for days…he missed that. He had resisted the temptation but today he was defeated. He brought the delicacy to his mouth and took a large bite.

“The Prince’s Donuts, Mr. Kent? I thought you didn’t like them anymore…”

Clark closed his eyes letting the delicious taste fill his mind and erase the fuss of the Planet’s reporter area. However soon his satisfaction gave its place to disappointment: it wasn’t the same.

He knew what the problem was: what was missing…It wasn’t the same taste as when he ate the donut’s crumbs from Bruce’s smeary lips. The younger man laughed like a small child realizing that he had crumbs and cream all over his mouth; and blushed because it wasn’t appropriate for an adult…

Clark smiled: donut was delicious only because it was mingled with Bruce’s taste…

He suddenly realized what he was thinking and slapped his face to come over. It was stupid: he loved Diana; he had made his choice and Bruce kicked him out. There was nothing more beautiful than Diana and with her he was happier than ever.

He licked his lips and tapped his pen on the desk staring at his PC screen’s customized wallpaper. He realized that it was the recent attack against Bruce that stirred all these to him and of course his Ma’s reprimand. The idea that Bruce could have died there while he just watched…

“Don’t you think that the attack’s method reminds the way Intergang acted?” Clark heard Lois’ voice.

“You mean that Intergang never ceased to exist and now reemerged?” Martin replied.

Clark felt annoyed. He stood and walked to Lois’ desk. Martin looked at him while Lois ignored him as always.

“Martin, can you leave us for a moment?”

The man shrugged.

“Sure, Clark.”

“What do you think you’re doing?” he whispered to Lois who began typing looking at her screen avoiding him. “Lois! We were in Intergang’s case together! It is my case not Martin’s.”

Lois jerked her head at him.

“Lately you don’t have time for your old interests and I don’t want to interrupt you from what really matters to you now.”

“Lois, stop that! You know how much I love my job. As a reporter.”

Lois cocked an eyebrow.

“Only as a reporter?” she asked snidely.

Clark lolled his head on the side and huffed.

“Everything!” he retorted.

She snorted.

“Funny…Because I noticed that you’re not interested in your old job anymore.”

“You mean the attack against…” he ran his fingers in his hair. “Lois, let me explain…”

“Don’t bother…” she turned her head away from him. “If you want to investigate Intergang, do it yourself. I already have a partner. And stop eavesdropping: it’s rude and unethical.”

“Lois…”

But she didn’t even glance at him.

“I’m working!”

Clark returned to his desk disappointed and stared at the donuts. He didn’t like his sudden attraction to those delicacies which were tied with Bruce. He wiped them off the desk tossing them to the bin under his desk.

He sat heavily in his chair and clenched his jaw. He wouldn’t let Bruce ruin his happiness with Diana…Clark had a suspicion about what was wrong with him: he loved Diana, he desired her like a man dying of thirst desire water but lately his insides twitched for things connected with Bruce.

There was only one explanation.
Chapter 58

Superman hovered outside Wayne Tower, in front of the glistening window of Bruce Wayne’s office. The glass was reinforced after the incident with Joker and of course didn’t permit anyone to see inside even him. He smirked: lead lined – how authentic! Stark and Bruce took every precaution against him…The feeling of betrayal fuelled the anger that already burned inside him.

He was angry yet he was hesitant to surge inside and the fact that certainly the glass was Superman proof was the least reason. He wasn’t a criminal.

His hesitance came to a stop by the soundless opening of the central panel which dove inside the wall and revealed Bruce sat in his chair staring at him determined. Despite the fact he was now a paraplegic he still wasn’t afraid of heights.

“Do you want to come inside?” the younger man asked with an inviting gesture.

Superman smiled and floated inside, the panel rapidly returning to its place isolating them from the outside world.

The Man of Steel landed on the light brown carpeted floor and looked at Bruce.

“You aren’t going to reprimand me for coming to Gotham and specifically to your office?” he asked smirking because he knew that Bruce wanted him to come.

The human locked eyes with him.

“What do you want, Superman?”

“You don’t know?” Superman retorted and crossed his arms on the chest; when Bruce didn’t answer he shook his head sniggering. “Oh! That’s good! You’re a great actor after all! Feigning ignorance is too easy compared with your other roles.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“If you came to insult me get out!” his eyes flashed.

Superman felt irritated by the man’s nerve to try to fool him. Bruce was trying to play with him again; and dared to kick him out once again.

In a flicker of a second he surged on him and grabbed his wrists wanting to stop him before conjuring some of his weapons. He dragged him along and pinned him to his desk, having toppled the wheelchair in his rush.

Bruce gritted his teeth but his wrists were pinned over his head with such force that no human could overcome. However Superman was using only one hand to keep Bruce’s wrists pinioned, his other arm wrapping Bruce’s waist in order to protect him from injury.

The human’s breath was calm – Bruce had nerves of steel after all – but Superman could feel the defiance, the trapped body vibrating from resistance. Bruce’s mesmerizing eyes sparkled like the rarest gems: midnight blue sapphires with emerald stars; locked with Superman’s in a stare contest that the Man of Steel felt that Bruce was sure he would win. And that perfume was intoxicating Superman casting his mind in fog and his body in trembling arousal.
“You don’t carry your dagger with you here, huh?” Superman sniggered and cocked an eyebrow. “It’d be inappropriate for a businessman, right?”

The perfume of rare cinnamon was like a magnet and Bruce’s rosy lips waiting and frankly there was no reason for Superman to oppress his desire. He lowered his lips to capture Bruce’s but the human averted his face leaving Superman kissing the void.

“What do you want, Superman?” Bruce spat. “Let go off me.”

Superman chuckled. Bruce thought that he could still boss him around: after all, the wicked human had secured his power over him. He felt enraged: Bruce knew about strategy and he was sneaky enough to destroy two empires at once – Falcone’s and Ra’s Al Ghul’s – so the naïve Superman wasn’t a difficult opponent, right?

It took only a fragment of a second for him to torn with one movement Bruce’s jacket and expensive shirt stripping his torso, enjoying the human’s shiver at the violence of the deed. Superman admired the the younger man’s body that despite its scars remained the most beautiful body he ever saw.

Bruce stabbed him with his eyes since Superman captured again his wrists immobilizing him on the desk, his groin rubbing on Bruce’s dead one. Superman knew that he couldn’t feel that but could see and hear the sound.

“Stop that” Bruce told him completely unfazed by the fact that the most powerful being on the galaxy had him half naked at his mercy.

But Superman smirked.

“Why? Thor is jealous?”

Bruce clenched his jaw.

“Why are you here? What do you want?”

Superman felt enraged by the human’s insist on playing the innocent. He tightened his grip on the man’s wrists failing to get a pain expression out of the stubborn human whose stare became more defiant.

“Stop pretending that you don’t know! You planned it that way!” he ground his teeth over Bruce’s face.

The human narrowed his eyes and shook his head.

“I don’t know what you are talking about.”

“Really?” Superman snorted. “You kicked me out of the Manor; you forbade me from coming to Gotham knowing that in the end I would be forced to return and...beg you.”

Bruce frowned.

“What’s wrong with you, Clark?”

The Man of Steel wrapped his powerful arms around Bruce’s back and lifted him slightly off the desk; their faces came close, their breaths blended, their eyes collided hard.

“Well?” Bruce asked unfazed but Superman felt that he was jeering him.
His breath became heavier and his eyes roamed the human’s naked torso.

“Your body is made to give pleasure to gods…” he mumbled and tightening his hold choked Bruce’s attempt to shake him off.

“Let me go!” he growled and his eyes flashed like thunders; like the thunders Thor used to attack him.

Thor whom now Bruce could have in his bed without any obstacle and at the same time torment him; just to have fun with Superman’s torment, maybe sharing the information with Thor and laugh together.

Bruce was looking at him as if he was reading him but there was no fear. And that enraged more the Man of Steel.

In a blur he pinned the human face first on the wall, taking off of him the remnants of his jacket and shirt and then pinioning his arms on the wall above his head handcuffing with his grips Bruce’s wrists separately. Bruce couldn’t resist him; actually Superman’s body was the only thing holding him upright. He was breathing a bit harsh but otherwise he was calm though Superman was sure that Bruce’s past experiences were ringing crazy alarms in his head.

“You don’t want to do this, Clark” he said calm but determined.

However Superman couldn’t stop now: he was enraged with the human and being so close to his body erased any self control Superman had; he clenched Bruce’s wrists with one hand and with the other unzipped Bruce’s pants pushing the fabric down along with his black boxer. Bruce certainly heard the sound of Superman’s fervent movements and then the fabric falling to his ankles. The Man of Steel grabbed again Bruce’s wrists separately satisfied from the younger man’s surprised intake of air.

“Don’t you dare tell me what I want!” Superman’s whisper in Bruce’s ear was something between threat and moan; his body suffered from desire; he was shaking. “Besides it is what YOU want; you denied my advances at Metropolis because you wanted to break me and force me to beg.”

Bruce made to yank his head but Superman didn’t let him squeezing him to the wall with his body and pressed his head to the human’s. The perfume and the softness of his hair made Superman’s mind go crazy and his length harden – Bruce would have panicked if he could sense that iron erection pressing his buttocks but Superman knew that he could feel only the penetration.

“I really don’t understand, Clark: what are you talking about?”

Why he had to pretend? Why he had to be so sneaky?! Bruce did it on purpose to gain him back from Diana and hurt her. He bit Bruce’s ear lobe and felt the man twitch. If Bruce wanted him then he’d have him but he wouldn’t have the pleasure to wreck Diana’s heart.

He pushed with his knee Bruce’s unfeeling legs apart; the trapped man hearing the motion and understanding his intentions writhed but Superman pressed him more against the wall and his clench on Bruce’s wrists became vicious so much that he felt the fragile human blood vessels tearing.

“I don’t want to hurt you, Bruce…” he hissed to his ear; his throbbing erection making his voice rough “though you keep hunting me trying to ruin my life. Don’t try to resist” he cocked his eyebrows “though I know you like it violent but I’m not that kind… I’ll give you what you want and then you’ll leave me and Diana alone” he changed his clench to Bruce’s wrists holding them one upon another with one hand because he needed one hand to get rid of his annoying suit and his length rushed to find its target.

Bruce cast him a sideways glance since Superman’s head pressed to his didn’t permit him any motion.

“I’m not trying to ruin your life…” but he didn’t manage to finish his phrase because a sharp intake of air accompanied with a grunt left his lungs as Superman thrust his entire length at once inside him.

Superman felt the fragile body tremble from the strength of the motion and the sudden pain which was worse coming from an area that didn’t give any stimuli for long. Bruce was biting his bottom lip to not scream and Superman used his free hand to caress his lair, his mouth sucking the man’s cheek.

“This is what you wanted from me…” he breathed burning the soft human skin. “Take it…”

Keeping his body glued to Bruce’s began moving inside-out of him progressively increasing the speed and power of his thrusts, enjoying the human’s convulsions on his body. Bruce insisted on muffling his moans and cries even as the alien’s thrusts became much more than any human could endure – exactly the pace he used to give extreme pleasure to Diana: if Bruce envied her, then Superman would oblige and give him the same.

Bruce’s body was covered from the sheen of sweat and that made his cinnamon perfume stronger, so intoxicating that Superman’s senses went foggy and on fire making his need for satisfaction torturing and demanding; his heart beat frantically. His rapid pants hit the back of Bruce’s neck before Superman realized and bit hard the taut, delicious flesh causing a desperate jerk: a feeble attempt to get away which Superman squashed increasing with an angry roar the power of his thrusts and the clenching in Bruce’s wrists.

“You like this, don’t you?” he whispered licking silken flesh on Bruce’s back. “Like the last time I fucked you… You wanted that again, huh? And you knew that I’d be dragged back to give it…” he sucked Bruce’s neckline devouring Bruce’s elevated heartbeat and his helpless trembling from the force and the pain he was put through. “What’s the matter? Your golden haired god doesn’t fuck as perfect as me?” he sneered and pushed even harder getting at last a grunt from the stubborn human who might have had his eyes fixed on the wall but hadn’t allowed himself a single moan till now.

“I didn’t do anything to you, Clark” he said gulping his screams and Superman admired how steady this voice came despite the fact he was in dire pain – Superman could read the brain waves of severe pain flooding Bruce’s skull.

“Liar!” he roared and pushed so hard that Bruce grunted and fisted his trapped hands desperately.

Superman felt the human body tremble underneath him and Bruce trying to draw away his hips which was stupid really, definitely a childish reaction remnant of his years with Falcone. He continued moving in and out with his super speed making the human moan and pant as if he was ready to pass out. Bruce’s hair was soaked in sweat and Superman fisted them yanking his head to touch his; he could feel the human’s exhaustion: it was almost an hour pinned to that wall subject to Superman’s power.

He released abruptly his head but before it touched the wall, Superman captured the half opened lips kissing so wildly that looked more like biting and chewing the soft flesh. He could have prolonged that savage kiss forever establishing more his superiority but he sensed Bruce’s air supplies finishing. He released his lips yet he fisted viciously the soaked locks; his grip was mighty like the rush that surged to his erection. He roared his orgasm in Bruce’s ear and his fluids attacked the younger man’s insides with such force and hotness that the wounds from the frantic friction hurt like Hell and made Bruce’s bare naked body writhe helplessly.
Yet Superman didn’t yield; he kept the human pressed on his body, completely immobile – not that the spent human could have resist. He mouthed the human’s hot, drenched in sweat cheek, chewing as if trying to jail inside him that perfume so that he’d never have to come back to get relief. Bruce was on the verge of fainting but he wasn’t going to permit it.

“Now that you got what you wanted, Bruce, call Fox.”

“Superman!” a voice that wasn’t Bruce’s called.

Bruce had spoken with Lucius and now he waited for him in his office at Wayne Tower working at his tablet while in the cave, his monster processor was connected with Tony’s system that was tracking the items that had been stolen from the Wayne Enterprises’ storage units.

His Cosmos’ screen was split in two: in the right half Bruce was perusing the data from the analysis of the screw cork that Mr. Breizic had found in the gym after John Grayson’s death.

In the left half, he was watching a video from one of Oliver Queen’s public appearances before the shipwreck; it was the tenth he had seen: he wanted to observe better the man in occasions that he wasn’t aware of Bruce’s eyes on him. Of course, a life threatening experience like a shipwreck could change someone yet Bruce focused on other aspects of him rather than his psychology.

For instance, Bruce had noticed that the Arrow was left handed while Oliver Queen during their meeting for dinner manifested his preference for his right hand. Bruce couldn’t cross out the possibility of the man doing that to confuse him – actually, he was sure that Queen did it exactly for that. However there was also the possibility that the man was amphidextrous, that is, he used equally right and left hand.

That was the reason he wanted to watch videos from Queen in public, to know more about the man, since Queen knew so much about him. Yet after his return from the dead the man had made barely any appearance so Bruce had to rely on the videos prior to the shipwreck. He wanted to observe everything: his facial expressions, his voice, the way he moved around – his preferred hand. Which was the right hand, fact that proved that Queen was playing with Bruce using his left hand when being Arrow in order to shake off any suspicion.

Bruce frowned…Yes, that was quite clear but Queen’s friend had said that Queen was lousy in archery so being so skilled now at his 35 with his left hand was impossible.

He glanced at his right hand that never fully recovered from the bullets and the lack of proper healing: after Ra’s’ masterful relocation of the bones and years of training he had managed to restore the rough movements while the fine movements were still problematic. Could something like that had happened to Queen as well? He stared at the man on the screen. No, because if he had injured his right hand so badly to be forced to develop his left hand’s skills then he wouldn’t be able to handle the knife and fork as being right handed.

At the same time, his research about Vivian’s apartment showed what he expected: it was bought by Oliver Queen some days after he made his return to the world at his company’s annual meeting.

He huffed and stopped thinking for a second as his mind travelled elsewhere. The temptation was great and he had to know. He brushed the screen to push the video he was currently watching to have live footage from the evacuation process in Texas.

A blast had occurred in a sea oil platform and now the large premises were on fire ready to collapse trapping the people working there and causing major pollution to the ocean due to the breach in the undersea pipeline.

“Superman! The evacuation is over: the people are safe in the coast!”

Superman blinked and registered the massive weight he was holding: the burning platform that he kept from collapsing and trapping the people working there. A figure dressed in flashy red skin tight uniform with a yellow thunder across his chest looked at him puzzled.

“Okay, Flash; where’s Diana?” Superman said casually.

“Covering you, of course” he heard the melody of her voice from the other edge of the platform.

She was holding the gargantuan platform’s other edge to ease Superman’s effort and thwart any accident as Flash with his speed took the people to the safety of the shore.

“Are you alright?” concern was evident in her voice but the frown over her brow showed that she was suspecting something from his absent mindness during his reverie.

Superman smiled.

“Of course! On the count of three, we let the platform fall to the water, okay?”

Over their heads the news helicopter buzzed like a giant mosquito and Flash waved them to go before he sped away too.

Superman and Diana released the enormous mass to the ocean flying away just a second before the mass caused a huge wave.

The Man of Steel floating over the site watched the fire slowly being quenched by the water and dove to the sea using debris to seal the breach from where oil was purring to the sea.

Upon emerging from the water, the helicopter was again over them capturing the proceedings. Diana flew fast to hug him searching his body to find any potential injury.

He kissed her lips gently but in his mind twirled what he had seen during his daydream. Subduing Bruce like that night…Tasting his body and flesh again…That must stop right away: Diana was the only one for him and he loved only her.

What was happening, this obsession had one simple explanation and he knew where to go to solve this.

Bruce rubbed his chin seeing the three heroes clearing the mess: Superman had formed a small team around him. He was happy that Clark was still thinking of humankind and gathered allies – apart from the Princess who was serving other purposes mimicking Superman’s concern for the world. Nevertheless, the Man of Steel’s effort showed that Vivian’s influence hadn’t corrupted him…And that made him so proud of Clark.

However as Bruce looked at Superman’s face through the zoom of the news’ helicopter’s camera, he could see that the hero was deep in thought, absent minded as if he was somewhere else and only his body was there.
Thankfully, Flash woke him up before some accident occurred and Superman took the lead. His heart clenched in agony when Superman went underwater despite the fact he knew that Superman could survive without oxygen; however the previous expression on the hero’s face could be indication of Kryptonite’s presence or of something connected with the influence cast on him. Bruce gulped: if anything happened to Clark, he would never forgive himself for letting him go and sink to Vivian’s toxicity.

Fortunately, the Man of Steel immerged safe and sound and Bruce felt his eyes flashing from relief and joy but then Superman hugged Diana and Bruce knew that he shouldn’t but a sense of depression clenched his insides.

He touched his lips; he still remembered how sweet Clark’s kisses were; how velvety soft and careful and gradually strong and passionate and fervent his lips became each time…Exactly as he had imagined them all these years before meeting the clumsy reporter at the balcony during Falcone’s party…

His pelvis still experienced the shadow of the last night Superman spent in his bedroom…When he had claimed him like a stranger; an enemy…So unlike every other time. Bruce bit his bottom lip: only to remind him cruelly of the times Clark had made love to him; so tender; so dreamy…

He ruffled his hair with both hands: that was over. Actually, it shouldn’t have even started. He knew that it was a mistake…and now it hurt so much…No! He ground his teeth and closed his eyes: his emotions had to be buried as he always had done because there were more important things than his…stupid body, a body that now reacted again with repulsion on the thought of being again…touched.

Bruce pressed his hands on his face: nice! This would stop him from making the same mistake again and let him focus on all the mysteries around him.

Dick had run to him stopping his tactic of avoiding him.

Bruce had still Hero on his lap caressing him a bit more before leaving for the Tower. Alfred had opened the door for him. He intended to first go to the Tower and then to the court: it was the first day of the hearing. It was too early in the morning so the boy hadn’t come downstairs yet for his breakfast before school – not that Bruce expected from Dick wanting to see him.

Bruce looked at the boy surprised; Dick’s expression was determined.

“I want to come to the court!” he snapped at him.

Bruce inhaled deeply feeling Alfred’s concerned eyes on him.

“That won’t be necessary, Richard” he answered calmly. “And you have your school.”

Dick crossed his arms on the chest and snorted.

“You’re going to jail me as you did to keep me from training?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I didn’t jail you then and I’m not now: it was the mere consequence of your deeds” he blinked. “Believe me, court rooms are not the best place for anyone.”

Dick sniggered and Alfred glared at him making the boy stop.
“Of course you’d say that! You don’t want me there because you know what I want and you don’t want the judge to know.”

Bruce pressed his lips and shook his head.

“I just want the best for you, Dick.”

“Really now?” the boy spat. “Then how about quit my guardianship and let me live with my uncle?”

Bruce closed his eyes and Hero sensing his distress licked his hand.

“Your grandmother didn’t want that, Richard. She didn’t think Zucco a good man. I’m just doing what she wanted for you.”

“She was wrong about Tony and wrong about you!”

Bruce met the boy’s eyes.

“I must stay true to what I promised to her, Richard. She didn’t want Zucco to have you so I won’t quit your guardianship to his favor. When your grandmother returns” the boy shook his head in disbelief “you can discuss all these matters with her but till then…”

“She won’t return and you know it!” Dick snarled and leaned towards Bruce causing Alfred’s twitch as if he feared that the teen would attack his master.

Yet Bruce remained completely calm.

“You’re my evil demon!” the boy spat and Bruce felt a stab in his chest. “I lost my family because of you and when my granny began speaking with you she disappeared as well! What do you want from me? Why are you chasing me?!”

“Master Richard, I must insist that you mind your language.”

But the boy didn’t even look at him absorbed in the staring contest with Bruce who remained calm as ever.

“I’m sorry, Richard… I’d never wanted to cause any damage to anyone and I wish I could reverse things somehow so that you wouldn’t have to suffer so much and endure my presence. I only want you to become happy again.”

“That’s impossible!” Dick snarled. “And whatever tricks you might use stick it right in your head that you’ll lose! And whatever you might do to stop me I will testify in that court so that everyone learns the truth.”

Bruce looked at him.

“What truth?”

“That you are a lousy guardian that made my life a Hell and only Tony can give me back some of my happiness.”

He turned his back and ran to the stairs and back to his room. Bruce pressed his lips and inhaled making Hero perch to his chest and touch his pink nose to Bruce’s chin. Alfred walked to him slowly and placed his hand on his shoulder.

Bruce raised his eyes to his butler’s always comforting face.
“Maybe you should tell him the truth about his so-called uncle?”

Bruce shook his head.

“No; at the moment it will only make things worse... When the proof it’s gathered and everything comes to the fore he’ll understand” he licked his lips. “Believe me, Alfred I don’t care if he hates me...as long as the boy finds a piece of his lost peace.”

Alfred smiled.

“I wish he could overcome his pain and his stubbornness and see how much you care about him, sir...and how many things you have done for him.”

Bruce looked him in the eyes and frowned.

“Never! Promise me, Alfred, that you won’t tell him anything.”

“Of course, sir” Alfred said solemnly yet Bruce could discern his disagreement. “I would never even think of betraying your trust.”

Bruce let Hero down slowly and moved his chair to pass the open door.

“I’ll come to the Tower later to drive you to the court house” Alfred said.

“Thank you, Alfred, but I’ll drive myself: you know how much I love to drive” he smiled trying to make his butler forget what just happened.

“I do, sir” the Englishman mirrored his smile. “Well, since I won’t see you again till then, allow me to wish you good luck, Master Bruce.”

Knocks on the door brought him back to his office.

“Come in.”

Lucius’ beaming face was sunshine to Gotham’s cloudy morning.

“Good morning, Mr. Wayne! How are you today?”

“Fine, thanks, Lucius, and you? Please have a seat.”

Lucius sat at the armchair in front of Bruce’s office and intertwined his fingers on his crossed leg.

“Lucius, have you found some time to look at Queen’s proposals for cooperation?”

Lucius smiled.

“Of course, Mr. Wayne.”

“And?”

Lucius grinned and Bruce saw in his eyes the smart shine of understanding.

“I think that collaboration with Queen Industries would be highly creative and profitable for both corporations. Especially, in the field of transportation and trading I believe that Wayne Enterprises will make a nice profit by shipping Queen Industries’ products. Not to mention that we’ll secure another important alliance in the field: Mr. Queen expressed his fervent interest in our medical projects and he is willing to invest a large amount of funds. I’ve already added our counterproposals for your consideration.”

Bruce nodded.

“So we can speed up the sign of the deals?” Lucius cocked his eyebrows smiling.

“I see…” he mumbled with deeper knowledge “I bet there are other reasons as well behind your interest and hastiness?”

Bruce lolled his head on the side and regarded his loyal scientist amused.

“You know me so well, Lucius…”

Lucius waved his hand.

“You flatter me, Mr. Wayne. Well? The fact that Mr. Queen has a connection with Princess Diana is relevant, right?”

Bruce shook his head.

“Absolutely. I want to observe this man, Lucius, because he might hold the key to finding out the truth about her.”

Lucius sobered.

“And free Superman from her potentially dangerous… hm…proximity? Given that something is off.”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded.

“If what I suspect is true then not only Superman could be faced with a grave danger but also the entire planet.”

Lucius frowned and gave up his relaxed stance to lean forward.

“You believe that her presence might be connected with something larger that affects the world? That the image of the heroin she presents is a façade and she is in fact a villain?”

Bruce looked elsewhere for a second and then back to Lucius.

“For the time being I have only the connections I traced and…my instinct” Lucius nodded “so I want to get proof in case I’m wrong.”

Lucius pursed his lips and narrowed his eyes.

“Do you think there might be some underlying connection between her and the artifacts we so meticulously made them steal?”

Bruce tapped his fingers on the desk. That was still a thought in the background: he couldn’t accept nor deny the possibility of being true…Everything was possible till he found more evidence.

“That remains to be seen, Lucius…You handled the whole think brilliantly.”

The scientist cocked his eyebrows.
“I just followed your instructions: leaking again some inside information about a huge robbery in Wayne Enterprises’ storage units; denouncing them and in the meantime, conducting a shadow of an investigation to persuade our thieves that they achieved a major blow against us…Genius playing, Mr. Wayne.”

“Thank you, Lucius; but the end will show…For the time being, the surveillance system didn’t give us anything useful about the culprits” Bruce blushed and the older man smiled.

“Mr. Stark’s tracing system works perfectly so they didn’t suspect anything nor were able to find it; we are watching them constantly. In the meantime, I’ll contact the legal department about the deal with Queen Industries and then discuss the terms with Mr. Queen but I’m sure he’ll ask for your presence in the proceedings, given” he cleared his throat “his great interest in you.”

Bruce crooked his mouth.

“Whatever it takes, Lucius. Ehm… Lucius, the research on the Immortality Water: how is it going?

“We have made huge steps, sir, for developing medicine” Lucius locked eyes with his young employer. “Excuse me for my indiscretion…”

“Please speak freely.”

Lucius blinked and pursed his lips.

“You’re thinking to use the Water to heal your wounds and walk again faster than with the orthodox method?” he leaned forward and his eyes shone with concern.

Bruce inhaled deeply and intertwined his fingers on the desk.

“I won’t refuse that the temptation is too great, Lucius…especially, now that imminent threat might be near and I must…” he met Lucius’ eyes that were concerned and gulped. “But I won’t make use of that rare gift: using the pure, mighty form of the Water has terrible impact in people’s morality and sanity – Ra’s Al Ghul was using it all the time and in the end he became worse than the criminals he wanted to stop.”

Lucius was lost in his thoughts for a few seconds: he didn’t know a lot about Al Ghul but from what he had heard and more from what he understood he wasn’t sure that the Water corrupted the man: more it increased the man’s exist immorality. Yet he definitely wouldn’t have like his young employ using that powerful elixir that the side effects of its miraculous strength weren’t known so he was relieved and proud for Mr. Wayne’s maturity to not exploit what it was in his disposition. Now he could relax again in his seat.

“I won’t become like him…” Bruce remarked looking him in the eyes as if having guessed his thoughts.

The scientist breathed a bit easier, smiled and crossed his legs casually: Thomas Wayne would have been proud of his little ghost.

“Not many people would have the golden morals to not exploit such a great power for their self and instead use it for curing other people’s suffering” the scientist said solemn.

Bruce pressed his lips and rubbed his temple.

“Maybe I don’t want such power but I have to thwart others from getting it and I’m lucky to have people like you helping me” he shook his head. “You and Tony gave me the armor that gives me enough independency to settle some things” he preferred to change the subject.

“Mr. Wayne, I trust that you won’t attempt something that exceeds the limits of the armor…and yours” he raised his eyebrows for emphasis.

“I’ll try not to, Lucius. That I can promise you.”

“The project for your operation is almost perfected. Mr. Stark and I believe that it won’t take long before we are ready for our most important and ambitious project.”

Bruce nodded, clenching his jaw.

“About that…” he said thoughtful and Lucius frowned.

“You’re getting second thoughts?”

Bruce met Lucius’ gaze.

“Of course not. Yet the whole surgery thing drives Tony extremely stressed and I worry about him…”

Lucius licked his lips.

“He knows how difficult this procedure will be and his love for you makes him wanting to test and re-test everything, every tiny detail to make sure that everything will be perfect” he saw that the young man was concerned. “Do you want to undergo this surgery?” he asked carefully; he didn’t want to question this man’s bravery, it’d be ridiculous; yet maybe Bruce was seeing things differently.

The younger man ran his hands through his hair.

“It is my dream, Lucius. Walking again and for that I’d do everything however dangerous.”

Lucius knew that already; he had told so to Tony.

“I can’t wait for that surgery…” he continued “however I don’t know if I have the luxury to dedicate so much time to that, given the circumstances.”

Lucius narrowed his eyes.

“Don’t think that way, Mr. Wayne. Your recovery must be your first priority and when you walk again you’d be able to settle all the matters.”

Bruce smiled.

“You are right, Lucius, but from a brief discussion I had with Leslie I will have to stay in a hospital for at least one month after the surgery. And I don’t know if I can afford that…for now. I will definitely do the surgery – nothing will change that – but the time concerns me and the urgent things that demand my attention…”

Lucius understood.

“Like the hearing about your ward’s guardianship that begins today.”

Bruce nodded and shook his hand.
“Exactly” he looked at his wristwatch. “As a matter of fact, it’s about time I left for the court” he said pressing the option in his Cosmos turning it into a smartphone which he slipped into his jacket’s inner pocket.

Lucius smiled and stood.

“Our Cosmos made quite the impression in StarExpo” Bruce nodded “and Wayne Enterprises’ shares show a nice rising. So to take advantage of that momentum, I’ll prepare everything for our deal with Mr. Queen.”

Bruce wheeled his chair outside his desk.

“Thank you, Lucius.”

“You welcome, Mr. Wayne” they moved along to the office door and Lucius opened. “Good luck with the hearing.”

“Thank you, Lucius” Bruce had the feeling that he’d need as much luck as possible for this case.

Superman was flying over the endless, white, sparkling landscape of the North Pole. It seemed to him like ages from the last time he came here to bring the wheelchair Bruce sent him back; and even longer since the night he had carried Bruce; dead; to his Fortress. All the times he had returned here during his relationship with the human he wasn’t noticing the things that stood out today.

He wanted to close his senses to all these but it was impossible. Impossible to not discern the deep marks on the icebergs he had caused with his scream of despair when Bruce left his last breath in his arms whispering that he was happy because now Superman wouldn’t be in danger from the Kryptonites of his eyes.

That memory bit hard on his heart even now… When Bruce’s condition had stabilized that night Superman returned there and froze with his breath the icebergs to their previous form stopping their melting; if Bruce had died he wouldn’t have cared if the entire world had flooded…But despite his repairing work the marks were still there for him to see and remember.

He pressed his eyes shut, clenched his fist and rushed to the glowing crystal pyramid of the Fortress of Solitude. The roof of the cone opened like the petals of a blossom at his approach and he immediately floated to the hall of the holograms where Jor El always waited for him.

The silver haired image of his late Kryptonian father regarded him solemnly.

“Kal El, to what do I owe the honor of your returning?”

Superman yanked his head: he wanted to discern irony in his voice yet there was none; only a slight melancholy.

“I need the antidote” Superman crossed his arms.

Jor El frowned.

“Antidote to what? Are you experiencing any symptoms, Kal El?”

Superman huffed.

“Just make the antidote” and seeing the hologram’s puzzlement. “The antidote to Bruce’s body effect
Jor El widened his eyes slightly on realization.

“What do you experience?”

Superman blinked and shook his head.

“What I experience is my business. I know what’s happening to me: the inoculation Bruce gave me was of limited duration: he did that to have me under control so that when the inoculation wore off I’d return to him. Well, the inoculation is wearing off and… I re-experience the same symptoms.”

Jor El didn’t seem persuaded.

“Are your powers lessened? Are your senses disturbed? You feel the need to be around Bruce?”

Superman was shaking nervously his head in denial in every question. In the end he pinched the bridge of his nose.

“No! But I know it’s happening and I want you to create again the antidote and the inoculation.”

“You really believe that Bruce had given you deliberately an inoculation that would wear off and sink you to agony?”

Superman clenched his waist with both hands and lolled his head on the side thoughtful. Bruce deliberately had set the bases of rendering him again under the same effect that the human made everything in his power to stop? It seemed unlikely yet Bruce had attacked him with a dagger that could kill him: they had become enemies; he couldn’t trust him anymore. He yanked his head.

“There’s no other explanation: my mind constantly replays incidents from our life together; my senses seek stimuli from his body” he admitted. “It is like what I have with Diana only with her is real whereas that is the product of the effect Ra’s Al Ghul created using Bruce’s body: it is confirmed that this effect was true.”

Jor El cocked an eyebrow regarding his son skeptical.

“If you remember when you first experienced those symptoms with her you believed that you were ill.”

Superman felt irritation rising.

“But I wasn’t!”

“We never had the chance to find out. I told you that I would need to examine you more but you never accepted to be examined again.”

Superman looked at the hologram challenging.

“And I was right! If I was ill one time would have sufficed to find out. But now we have the prior experience and we know that it is indeed the effect of the essence that is inside Bruce’s body. I need the inoculation.”

Jor El was expressionless.

“Why didn’t you ask it from him? I don’t believe he would have denied giving you the inoculation.”

Superman rolled his eyes and snorted.
“Yeah, sure. He gave me that inoculation knowing that eventually would wear off and tie me with him; when I realized that Diana was my true love and left him, he kicked me out because he knew that sooner or later the return of the effect would bring me back to him.”

Jor El pouted and cocked his eyebrows.

“So Bruce is that evil, huh?”

Superman huffed.

“No…no…it’s not exactly malice…I mean he is sneaky but also he must believe that he saves me from…something. Bruce is selfish and will use any means to achieve what he believes is right.”

Jor El’s look was still questioning and Superman shook his head.

“And I won’t give him the satisfaction of crawling to his feet; besides being close to him will only make the effect stronger, remember? Also, I don’t have any business with him: he attacked me.”

He rolled his sleeve and showed to his father the scar from the Knife of Justice on his upper arm. Jor El seemed impressed.

“So there is an earth weapon that can hurt you, after all.”

Superman growled frustrated.

“Bruce is relentless when he wants something as you can see.”

“Or he just defended himself after what you did to him that night…”

Superman lolled his head on the side and ran his hand in his hair: despite the fact he didn’t believe that he had done anything wrong that night, still he didn’t want to remember.

“I explained to you that Bruce liked it…Maybe he enjoyed that night more than all the other times with me…”

“Really?”

Superman yanked his head upwards.

“Would you make that inoculation or I must give the orders myself?! Kal El could re-create the inoculation from the data the Fortress had stored analyzing his blood after Bruce injected him yet he preferred his father’s expertise.

Jor El nodded solemnly.

“I will make it myself but I had to examine you first, Kal El.”

The Man of Steel frowned.

“Why?”

“It is simple. Months have passed since you took that inoculation so I need to estimate your body’s condition and readjust the synthesis to your current needs exactly as the human scientist…”

“Lucius Fox.”
Jor El nodded.

“Did.”

Superman huffed and pursed his lips thoughtful causing Jor El’s frown.

“You don’t trust your own father? You know that I and the Fortress are here to serve you.”

“Right.”

He won his last hesitance and stepped in the central crystal column, the examination cylindrical column that with a hissing opened at his approach; he locked his eyes with Jor El.

Superman was suspicious and expected to feel something odd that would attempt to change him. But nothing happened apart from the custom procedure he underwent every now and then when Jor El wanted to be sure about his son’s condition and study how the earth environment affected the Kryptonian nature. So when he stepped out he was feeling the same passionate love about Diana – his major fear was that Jor El would do something to alter that – a strong guilt flooded his insides about doubting Jor El’s loyalty.

“Well?” he asked his father’s hologram. “You see that I was right? Bruce did try to trap me with Ra’s Al Ghul’s effect.”

Jor El stared at him.

“I agree: it is Bruce’s fault” Superman smiled but anger boiled inside him for the sneaky human. “There’s no sign of that effect, Kal El: your organism is clean from any trace of the effect we encountered months ago.”

He frowned.

“You said that it is Bruce’s fault.”

“A figure of speech. It is inevitable to remember and seek him, Kal El: he is your true love.”

Superman’s eyes began to redden but Jor El gazed unfazed his irritation till his son calmed down.

“Give me the inoculation!”

Jor El looked down at him with his wisdom’s authority.

“Certainly” a crystal syringe-like object popped out of the examination column and Superman grabbed it and stabbed the sharp point to his thigh. “But do not expect to stop experiencing these symptoms…”

The Man of Steel turned his back, his red cape ripping the air and the Fortress’ spike opened for his departure. Jor El watched his son disappearing as the spike of the crystal pyramid closed back.

He had gotten his answers at last.

Two green acid eyes watched the entrance of Gotham’s court house; in front of the building the same fussy lot of reporters had been gathered closing the street and creating sound pollution. He wanted to laugh hysterically but he was in a cafeteria, in a corner booth and for once he didn’t want to draw attention. He was eager to see his batsy-Brucie…and that scarf he had wrapped around his face was itching him!

He chuckled seeing his own reflection on the glass of the window: he looked like an old lady.

After his failed attack, his wife had fled to Malibu.

“Hehe!”

Ooops, here we go! He couldn’t stop himself; Thankfully, the place was empty and the owner had gone to the bathroom probably while the young waitress had found the chance to go to her boyfriend outside.

Oh, that Brucie! He was playing everyone in his fingers! Well, he knew someone else that wanted to be played in these beautiful, lean fingers…Jockey twitched from anticipation.

“Shsssss! Baaaad boyyyy!”

He had come there because he missed his darling. TV – that fabulous and damned gadget – had offered him a glimpse of Brucie at Malibu – well, not exactly a glimpse… since the paparazzi there were quite persistent. The youth had gone to the StarkExpo and Joker’s jaw once again went slack:
Brucie was dressed in an impeccable black suit and a white silk shirt with a black stripped tie.
Yummy! Black was really Brucie’s favorite color – not that Joker had a doubt…

But now he waited in that corner cafeteria opposite the court to have a live image.

He huffed.

“I aaaaam jealoouuuus…” he mumbled.

“What?” the waitress was passing by and turned to him. “May I help you?”

“No, dear. I’m just speaking to myself” he said in a carefree voice.

The girl laughed.

“Please continue…” she said and walked away.

Joker rolled his eyes.

“I coooome to Gotham an’ suddenly eeeeeveryone sprouts a sense of humor…”

Well, he was jealous…Brucie cared so much for this brat that he was willing to put himself to the testing process of a court hearing. And a few months ago he almost died to save the same brat. That was…mmm…disgusting!

Suddenly, the bunch of reporters surged forwards ascending the stairs to enter the gothic building but police officers held them back. Joker hadn’t seen a glimpse of Brucie and that meant that the babe had entered from the back entrance of the building to avoid the annoying lot. Joker snorted: he should have known and now he had lost his chance…

“Shit!”

But all his envy for the brat for the care and attention he had from Brucie could work in his favor.
Hm…

He pulled away the scarf from his face and hopped to the exit turning his head to the young waitress who was petrified upon seeing his best Cheshire smile.

“Thaaaaank you, my dear” he said kindly throwing to her a generous tip and getting out to vanish in the nearby alley.

Mr. Collins was waiting in the second’s floor corridor where the hall of the hearing was situated. As soon as the lift’s door opened and Bruce steered his wheelchair out the veteran lawyer walked there holding his leather briefcase.

“Good morning, Mr. Colins. How are you?”

“Fine, Mr. Wayne, thank you. Are you ready?”

Bruce smiled.

“Of course” he replied though he understood that the experienced lawyer knew his agony.

Collins made an inviting gesture towards the small hall’s door. Bruce knew the room because he had studied every detail beforehand wanting to ready himself as best as possible: his experience from Falcone’s trial still distressed him.

Yet despite his preparation still seeing it now made him nervous as if he was going to write school exams, which was ridiculous given his life experiences.

“Everything is going to be fine, Mr. Wayne” Collins said reassuringly walking by his side sensing the young man’s nervousness. “Also, whatever they might say you shouldn’t get affected: erase it immediately from your mind: they’ll try to unsettle you.”

Bruce grinned and nodded.

As they were ready to enter the hall that thankfully wouldn’t have any audience, a man of average height and weight met them. He was brown haired and around thirty; a bright smile appeared on his face seeing them and his gray eyes sparkled.

“Mr. Wayne, I’m so happy to see you.”

“May I know the reason?” he asked smiling and the fine dressed man blushed uncomfortable.

He offered his hand for a handshake.

“You are right; I didn’t even introduce myself. Griffon Magnie” Bruce shook his hand taking in Mr. Collins’ grin. “I’m Mr. Zucco’s attorney.”

Bruce knew the name but he hadn’t found a picture so his surprise wasn’t entirely pretended.

“Nice to meet you. Mmm…Griffon?” he asked because it was a strange name.

Magnie smiled.

“Mom was French. I understand that meeting me isn’t so nice to you… I’m the enemy” he grinned. “But we’re all here for the boy’s best interest” Bruce nodded. “So I just wanted you to know that whatever happens during the hearing isn’t personal. Actually, my respect for you is great and I wouldn’t want you to form a wrong impression for me based on whatever happens in this court room.”
Bruce lolled his head on the side.

“I guess that will depend on the nature of that ‘whatever’…”

Mr. Collins grinned approvingly and they moved inside. Bruce couldn’t shake off of him the feeling of being the accused… Zucco was already seated at the chair next to his attorney; he looked at Bruce gleefully but the youth didn’t pay any attention to him.

Judge Moot was going to handle the case and Bruce’s research had ensured him that at least the man was an honest servant of the law. Not that this made his uneasiness less…

“We are here to discuss the petition of Mr. Zucco against Mr. Wayne’s guardianship of Richard Grayson” the judge said in a strict, authoritative voice.

“Your honor I would like to ask the presence of Richard Grayson as the boy is old enough to have an opinion about his guardianship” Magnie said.

“Objection, your honor. At the present, there is nothing to demand Richard Grayson’s presence in this court room. We all know that court hearings may have a negative impact to children.”

Judge looked them over his round glasses.

“Sustained” he said. “If during the process I consider it useful I shall call the boy to testify but till then I think it is for Richard’s best interest to not be involved to the proceedings.”

Bruce breathed easier and felt the judge’s eyes on him. Zucco was also glaring at him and Magnie cleared his throat to make him stop staring at Bruce and look at him instead.

Judge Moot took in his hand the paperwork with which Ms. Turner gave her grandson’s custody to Bruce Wayne.

“Ms. Turner, the boy’s grandmother and closest alive relative gave Richard Grayson’s guardianship to Mr. Wayne in case anything happened to her” he said.

Magnie stood.

“We believe, Your Honor, that Ms. Turner did that influenced by her sympathy for the man. However, my client made that petition because he worries about the suitability of Mr. Wayne for the role of the foster father. You see, Your Honor, there is extensive bibliography that proves that the victims of abuse are very keen to manifest abusive behavior to their children or wards.”

Bruce twitched hearing that but Collins touched his upper arm calming him.

“Mr. Wayne has suffered abuse that surpasses anything charted in the history of US justice so there are much more chances he turns abusive towards a child under his care.”

Mr. Collins stood when Magnie finished.

“The bibliography, Mr. Magnie, mentions doesn’t prove anything” he came out of the desk and gave to the judge a thick packet of documents. “There are indeed some cases where abusive behavior is manifested from parents who had suffered abuse in their childhood yet there are even more cases where victims of severe abuse became perfect parents” he smiled confidently. “Following Mr. Magnie’s reasoning would have to forbid every person who suffered abuse from becoming parent thus punishing those people and stigmatizing them more. Therefore that argument is both non-solid, non-scientifically based and an insult to everyone who had the misfortune to be subject to abuse.”
Suddenly Bruce felt a slight vibration to his Cosmos that was in silent mode. He looked on his lap where he had his wristwatch hand. He pressed a small button and the wristwatch showed the message his Cosmos had received: it wouldn’t be proper to bring out his Smartphone during the process. He read:

“There is indeed an effect on our common friend”

The message had reached his Cosmos through the cave computer and there where an indication showing the latitude and longitude from where the message was sent. The North Pole. And it wasn't from Santa Claus...
"The data from scientific research on abuse victims may be ambiguous yet there is no objection to the fact that Mr. Wayne – unfortunately – remains the target of many manifestations of violence, the latest occurring just a few days ago" Magnie continued unfazed. "These constant threats not only can affect a teenager’s emotional stability but also his very safety."

Judge Moot was staring calm and without any trace of what he was thinking. Mr. Colins stood up.

"Mr. Wayne has taken every possible security measure to ensure that Richard won’t be in any danger. Following your reasoning, Mr. Magnie, no celebrity or politician should have a child due to the threats they face. Also, their children are equally normal emotionally and mentally with every other child whose parents aren’t facing attacks or threats."

Zucco stood up.

"He doesn’t care about Dick’s safety" Magnie tried to calm him down but Zucco didn’t relent "he uses his gorillas to keep the boy away from me!"

Judge Moot yanked calmly his head and looked sternly at both Zucco and his attorney while Collins smiled to Bruce who didn’t follow Zucco in yelling. Bruce knew better than biting such baits.

"Mr. Magnie, I suggest you advice your client not react like this because I will refer him for contempt of the court."

Zucco sat and Magnie looked at the judge.

"It won’t happen again, Your Honor; my client was carried away from his concern for his nephew."

"Whom, according to Ms. Turner, he did never visit once since his birth" Mr. Collins pointed calmly.

The judge looked at Zucco whose face became red.

"There were reasons” he retorted.

Mr. Collins grinned and nodded.

"Of that I’m certain, Mr. Zucco; as I’m sure that there are reasons for your sudden interest about your…nephew."

"Objection, Your Honor!” Magnie jolted upright. "These are unfounded insinuations."

"No, Mr. Magnie. These are facts” Mr. Collins replied with conviction “based on the frequency or better the absence of Mr. Zucco from his nephew’s life until very recently.”

Bruce would have liked to present everything he had found about Zucco and his shady activities yet he knew that it was not the time yet. Speaking now, it would only serve into making him look like trying to slander the man and thus proving that he is unsuitable for Dick’s guardianship. Despite the fact he’d like to end as soon as possible with this man first and foremost to save the boy from him once and for all and second to be able to focus on what the message had just revealed, Bruce knew that he needed to be patient once again.

"Councilors, I would like both of you to stay on the subject. Mr. Wayne, is it true that you thwart Richard from seeing his uncle?”
Bruce looked at him in perfect tranquility.

“Not at all. I don’t see why Mr. Zucco feels that way, especially since he often meets with Richard. During the Christmas Gymnastics Gala nobody stopped Mr. Zucco to watch Richard’s performance from up close or posed any obstacle when he congratulated Richard.”

Zucco nodded nervously.

“Yeah, sure…Because people were all around and you didn’t want them to know.”

Magnie glared at his client. Bruce didn’t follow the man’s lead into personal quarrels which the youth could tell that the Judge appreciated by the slightest of sparkle into his rather poised eyes.

Luthor stood before the huge column of light where the strange items he was so familiar with hovered. He had his hands clenching his waist and a grin was spread on his face as he was full aware of Mannheim’s narrowed eyes on him.

This time the gangster had brought with him his right hand: that ugly woman with the bushy bleached out blond hair. She wore skin tight blue trousers that displayed her plumb legs and buttocks; an equally tight blue leather jacket completed her attire reaching the beginning of her hips. Luthor cocked an eyebrow at the bad taste of this woman yet she looked at him with more smugness than her boss and the tycoon felt chills even if he wanted to suppress that.

He met Mercy’s suspicious eyes which were estimating the situation for possible threats to her boss.

“My dear lady, how lovely to see you again!” the tycoon addressed Granny Goodness on purpose omitting her surname though he knew it; she showed him her teeth and Luthor turned to Mannheim “I see you’re quite efficient” Lex said grinning broadly to his partner.

Mannheim walked closer.

“You had any doubts?” he growled and Luthor lost every trace of humor.

“Of course not.”

Mannheim gave a poor mimic of a grin.

“Nice.”

Luthor shook his head trying to shake off that foggy sensation from his head.

“It must be a heavy blow for Wayne’s ego” he said trying to entertain his own insecurity. “Losing the items he so avidly was using to piss us: I’d have given my half fortune to see his face when he found out about the theft…”

Mannheim cocked both his eyebrows.

“No theft: re-acquiring what it is mine.”

Luthor smiled.

“You’re right! He chose the wrong man to challenge, huh?” he said and patted Mannheim’s back only to get a glare from the gangster that made his blood ran cold and his hand stay in midair over Mannheim’s back.
Mannheim stretched his imposing figure and Luthor thought that the man towered him even more than ever. It felt as if clouds had gathered all over the premises casting the place in darkness.

“Now it is your turn to show that you are useful and not a waste of space as your lot” Mannheim’s voice sounded like thunders in Luthor’s head and even Mercy was shaken though the woman was always dead calm however difficult the situation. “Finish the job you were hired for!” the gangster clenched his fist in the air. “I had had enough with your inadequacy.”

Goodness sniggered satisfied but Luthor nodded slavishly without feeling any twinge of anger.

“I will but I’m getting daily nuisances from government agents insinuating that I was the mastermind behind the attack on Wayne.”

Mannheim cocked an eyebrow and crooked his mouth.

“You did?” Luthor shook his head in denial “If they had any proof you’d have been already in jail again. So focus on your job.”

Mannheim turned to live, his lieutenant following, when Luthor cleared his throat.

“Did you check the items for any tracking devices?”

The gangster stopped on his heels and just tilted his head to Luthor smirking.

“You too are afraid of this man’s cunning…” he remarked jeering.

“I have bad experience…”

Mannheim laughed.

“Though I don’t share your fears, the items are clear – so just do your job. Fast!”

Both he and Goodness began again walking towards the exit and the woman’s snigger echoed through the vast premises making Luthor and Mercy shiver.

“There are traces of a foreign influence on Kal El” Jor El’s deep, solemn voice told Bruce from the screen of the processor in the cave.

As soon as the hearing ended for today Bruce returned to the Manor and descended to the cave despite Alfred’s efforts to persuade him to eat something first; Jor El was already waiting on the screen. Bruce knew that the Kryptonian could gain access to his processor since he had come to the cave many times with the wheelchair Superman created for him: the wheelchair gathered information about the environment and his computer. However he didn’t take measures to thwart to block Jor El’s access because he wanted to be informed in case something happened to Clark.

From the moment he watched the evacuation operation in Texas Bruce was almost expecting – no, hoping – that he’d take a notice. He was hoping because if he was right and something was off with Superman, then Jor El was the only safe option for the hero to run to for help.

Bruce rubbed his chin with his hand.

“Organic symptoms? Body malfunction? Weakening? Illness?” he asked but Jor El shook his head in refusal. “His brain is affected?”
“No. There is nothing life threatening.”

The relief in Bruce’s eyes was evident to the Kryptonian yet Bruce realized and instantly made his gaze neutral.

“Then how you came to that conclusion?”

“It is more abstract; something in his aura as you humans name it.”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“Magic?”

Jor El gave a slight wave with his hand.

“It is more complicated than that and I’m afraid that at the moment I’m not able to isolate the factors that constitute it. There was an odd perfume around him – a strong perfume that was affecting everything but I am certain that there was more.’’

Bruce looked at him lopsided, mentally noting the perfume factor.

“What kind of perfume?”

“Of flowers of every kind – not artificial.”

The human nodded remembering Vivian’s room in his nightmare and Tony’s description of the Amazon’s apartment: the abundance of pots with flowers and plants. Yet something else troubled him right now.

“If he didn’t have any bodily symptom and the effect is located in his aura” he waved his hand “influencing abstractly his behavior, then how did you persuade him to get examined?”

“He thought that he might be ill.”

Bruce nodded.

“Yes; I saw him during the evacuation mission in Texas; he seemed a bit troubled but I’m glad he is fine and” he nodded “his love for humankind is stronger than this effect.”

Bruce’s voice was steady and indifferent just stating the facts yet Jor El immediately felt that the young man had accepted that Superman’s love for him wasn’t strong enough since the effect had defeated it.

“It is not the only love that it is stronger than this effect.”

Bruce nodded.

“Thankfully, he never stopped loving his human mother.”

“His love for you is also strong, Bruce” the young man shook his head cocking his eyebrows. “He came to the Fortress because he indeed experiences some symptoms: he thinks about you; his nostalgia urges him back to you. So he thought that the inoculation you gave him to stop Ra’s Al Ghul’s effect wore off resulting in the old effect resurfacing.’’

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose.
“He considers me so devious that I’d have given him imperfect inoculation?” he shook his head.
“What I’m saying? Of course he does.”

Jor El looked at him with sympathy which was something new for the hologram.

“You know that these ill thoughts about you are the result of that strange influence. The fact remains that his resisting love for you made him believe that he is ill giving me the chance to find an excuse to examine him.”

Bruce nodded though he wasn’t convinced about the love part. However he didn’t want to discuss it.

“Yes, what matters is that you confirmed our suspicions” he raised his eyes to Jor El’s. “Can you make an antidote?”

Jor El closed his eyes and then looked at him.

“I’m afraid that I can’t: there is nothing organic to base the antidote.”

Bruce bit his bottom lip.

“What about the perfume? Can’t you make an antidote analyzing the synthesis of it?”

Jor El shook his head.

“It is not a common perfume: it cannot be analyzed.”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“And? Was he persuaded that his symptoms weren’t due to the inoculation wearing off?”

“I am afraid that he didn’t… so I gave him the inoculation again.”

“Good” Bruce said determined ignoring the growing disappointment for Clark’s persistence to believe the worst for him; besides it was expected… “I wouldn’t want him stop trusting you. Jor El, I wonder… As you tested his body did you find any information on Diana? You said that this perfume can’t be analyzed but maybe something else?”

Jor El grinned.

“Whether she is indeed divine?”

Bruce looked at him.

“That too.”

“You know already that she isn’t the semi-goddess my son believes.”

The human nodded.

“I have met her before many years. She was one of the whores in Falcone’s cabaret; she had a slightly different appearance then but she definitely was the same person. A person of trust confirmed that this woman existed and she wasn’t one of my nightmares’ illusions. However I couldn’t find her in the files of Gotham’s police or the public archives.”

“A mystery then.”
Bruce tapped some buttons on his keyboard and in the smaller screen on the right of the one with Jor El, the Amazon’s sword and her golden lasso appeared accompanied by a thick raw of data in the right part of the screen. He showed there with his index finger.

“Batman encountered her once and the Tumbler analyzed the weapons she carried…Her weapons aren’t of human creation” he raised his eyebrows “and the material doesn’t match anything known: maybe you can recognize the materials’ origin?”

“You mean if her weapons are coming from another planet” Bruce nodded but Jor El after a thorough examination of the data shook his head in refusal. “I am afraid the material doesn’t match anything in my knowledge. That however doesn’t change the possibility of someone providing them to her.”

“That actually fits my theory of her acting as part of a broader scheme” Jor El knitted his thick silver eyebrows. “And she is also able to fly, has incredible strength, fighting skills of an Amazon…” he shook his head.

“I’m sure you’ll find the answers, Bruce. I trust your intelligence, my friend. Your intellect is brilliant…for a human” Bruce chuckled. “I have missed our chess games.”

“Me too, Jor El” well, not only the chess games… his mind travelled back to the happy times in the Fortress before he stopped it.

Jor El’s expression was filled with understanding.

“Bruce, he still loves you.”

The young man shook his head.

“Jor El, you know better than anyone that I’m not the proper one for Kal El. So it is for his best interest that he doesn’t love me.”

Jor El’s face became grim.

“I don’t know a more appropriate person than you for my son.”

Bruce smiled.

“But you know very few people, Jor El…”

Jor El smiled.

“How is your kitten? I’m glad my son didn’t bend so low to take the animal from you.”

Bruce grinned.

“Hero is fine: he has grown a lot – Clark will be proud of him when he comes round. Maybe despite the effect he knew deep inside that Hero would be better staying here.”

Jor El inclined his head solemnly.

“My son treated you awfully, Bruce yet I detect how deep is your love for him” Bruce shook his head in denial and the Kryptonian grinned with sympathy. “I must leave you now: as a scientist, I’m not much religious yet may Rao help you in your efforts. Please, do bear in mind that I’ll be at your services for whatever you may need.”
Dick came out of the showers carrying his backpack on the shoulder; he headed to the main hall of the public gym only to find Jeffrey waiting for him. The Afro-American patted the boy on the back and Dick answered only with a lukewarm grin.

“Dick, you were great today” his trainer sighed “I hope we now focus on our work here and don’t have any incident again.”

Dick rolled his eyes and huffed.

“If only you could understand, Jeff…”

The trainer crooked his mouth.

“I do understand, Dick” he shook his head “and I see that from the moment Zucco entered your life he pushes you to wrong choices.”

Dick crossed his arms on the chest and pressed his lips.

“You’re not fan of his, huh?” he spat.

Jeffrey licked his lips and locked eyes with the teen.

“No; and I know that he started a court dispute to get your guardianship from Mr. Wayne…and I’m worried.”

Dick shook his head.

“You’re wrong, Jeff…Tony is a good man and cares for me” Jeffrey crooked his mouth and Dick widened his eyes for emphasis. “You’ll see that as soon as I’m with him and free from Wayne nothing would distract me again from my training. Because, Jeff, what happened that night was Wayne’s fault. You know me: I wouldn’t have done something like this if his presence wasn’t imposed to me. This man makes me sick.”

Jeffrey huffed.

“I think you’re wrong about Zucco, Dick” the boy yanked his head frustrated and his trainer held his upper arms and met his gaze. “He isn’t a good man.”

But it was obvious that the teen didn’t believe him.

“Ya’re losing yar breath, pal” a young voice that tried too hard to sound older came behind him and Dick detached from Jeffrey to pat his younger friend. “Are ya a free bird again?” Jason chuckled.

Dick crooked his mouth.

“Yeah… my…” he cocked his eyebrows ironically “ban from the gym has ended…”

Jeffrey cleared his throat.

“You deserved that, Dick – wandering Gotham at night was very dangerous and consuming beer can easily push you to stronger booze which can destroy not only your future in gymnastics but also your life as a whole.”

“Yeah, sure…”
Jason cocked his eyebrows to the trainer lolling his head on the side helpless.

“Jay, care to join me for a juice?” Dick asked pointing out the ‘juice’.

“Only if juice isn’t for me!”

Jeffrey patted Dick and pulled of his hoody’s pocket a USB stick.

“Mr. Breizic sent me an entire set of new movements to practice. Study them and tomorrow we’ll discuss and put them into practise, okay?”

Dick’s face brightened hearing that the veteran trainer had sent him new material but then he remembered Zucco’s warnings about Breizic and hesitated to take the stick. Jeffrey frowned.

“Is anything wrong, Dick?”

The boy shook his head in denial and took the stick putting it into the front pocket of his backpack.

“Thanks, Jeff!” he said and began to walk with Jason towards the cafeteria.

The boys chose a corner table.

“I saw yar face when Jeff gave ya that stick; I thought ya liked Breizic” Jason mumbled chewing the straw of his milk shake. “Ya were as if ya’re given shit…”

Dick sipped from his juice.

“You exaggerate as always.”

Jason frowned.

“Cut the crap, pal! Ya’re talking to me now!”

Dick rolled his eyes and sighed.

“Okay, okay…I just realized that he came into my life rather suddenly and…it might not be in random.”

Jason slapped himself.

“Wow! Don’t tell me there’s another plot against you?!” Dick rolled his eyes and sniffed. “An’ who mighta alert ya to that? Mmmm…” he pouted and tapped his finger on his temple as if thinking hard. “Oh! Zucco!”

Dick crossed his arms on the chest and shook his head exasperated.

“Wayne will do everything to keep me away from my uncle so he put Breizic to slander Tony taking advantage of my enthusiasm to have him as my trainer.”

Jason took a big gulp from his milk shake.

“So everyone is evil except Zucco? Oh, man! I thoughta ya’re smart but ya’re dump as a brick…Ya’re granny was lyin’ to ya too?! Get a grip, dude! Why not Zucco lyin’ about everyone? What do ya know ‘bout that guy except from what he says an’ what yar dump mind makes?”

Dick ran both his hands in his still wet hair.
“Ya put Zucco above yar granny, man?! Why? What has he done for ya all these years?”

“He knew my father...he...he cares for me and even if his fears about Breizic are too much he does it only for me...”

Jason widened his eyes, cocking his eyebrows jeering.

“Yeah, sure...”

Dick licked his lips and twirled his straw in the orange juice.

“Tony will take my guardianship from Wayne and I'll be again calm and happy.”

Jason formed his hand like a gun and pretended he shot his own head. Then leaned towards his friend.

“I don't trust him, man...he sucks...” but then his eyes fell on the built-in TV screen at the wall far behind Dick’s back and laughed. “Speakin’ of this...it seems ya’re a celebrity, man!”

Dick frowned and twisted in his chair to look at what Jayson was talking about. Vicky Vale’s talk show played on the screen and Dick saw on the wall screen his face pixelated – since he was underage - along with Wayne’s and his uncle’s.

“Media and audience are not allowed inside the court room yet we have information that Mr. Zucco’s side bases their case about Mr. Wayne’s inability to be a guardian to the fact that the young heir has a really lumbered up past that definitely has left some mental disorders on him. Thus, making him a potential danger for a child.”

Vicky Vale watched with attention her guest and her audience did the same. She had formed a panel to discuss the currently hottest issue in Gotham’s social life. She turned to a man around 50 on her right.

“Dr. Spellman, what’s your opinion about the matter?”

The man pursed his lips in a hard thinking grimace and shook his head.

“People get marked for all their life by lesser things than what Mr. Wayne has suffered.”

“But could these wounds really make Mr. Wayne a danger for a child’s well being?” she asked.

The doctor cocked his eyebrows.

“This isn’t something that can be answered easily, Vicky. There are cases with victims of abuse that became great parents and others that the victims became the perpetrators repeating their awful experiences to their children...”

Vicky touched her earphone and nodded.

“We have Gil with Mr. Zucco” in the wall screen behind her a young female reporter held a microphone in front of Tony Zucco.

“Good evening, Mr. Zucco. I’m Vicky Vale.”

“Hello, Miss. Vale.”
“Do you really believe that Mr. Wayne is potentially dangerous for your nephew?”

Zucco pressed his lips.

“Miss. Vale, what matters is not what I believe but what is happening to Richard. You all saw the boy drinking alcohol and quarrelling with adults, running away when a police officer came in” he shook his head sad. “This isn’t my nephew; this is all Bruce Wayne’s bad influence. And that was the reason I was forced to petition: to save my boy who suffers under Wayne’s custody.”

Vale cocked an eyebrow.

“But from all we know you came back in Gotham only a few months ago so you don’t know that much about Richard.”

A shine of irritation crossed Zucco’s eyes but he grinned.

“It is true that I didn’t have the chance to be very close to my nephew but that doesn’t mean that we don’t have a really wonderful relationship that Bruce Wayne tried many times to thwart by putting his security people guarding Richard.”

Vale lolled her head on the side.

“Richard is the ward of a billionaire and Joker is unleashed so I think it’s reasonable to have tight security around the boy.”

“And only for the dangers that threaten Richard because of him it would be better for the boy to be with me rather than Wayne; my attorney, Mr. Magnie, has pointed out that to the judge. Everything that surrounds Wayne is inappropriate for a boy. You certainly have heard the rumors about him and Superman…”

Many people from the audience chuckled but Vale chose to not answer and played her golden pen between her fingers.

“Mr. Zucco, do you believe that the court’s decision will justify you?’’

“Definitely!” his smile was almost Cheshire.

“Thank you, for our discussion, Mr. Zucco. Good luck to you and of course we all wish the best for Richard.”

“Man” Jason shook his head “I don’t trust this buffoon…”

Dick rolled his eyes.

“Yeah, talks Jay, the Wayne fanboy…”

Jason’s eyes widened and he jerked exasperated.

“Bollocks! Ya’re an asshole! I’m yar granny’s fanboy an’ ya shoulda be too!” Jason huffed and puffed a bit before calming. “If Zucco begins sayin’ bad things ‘bout me, ya’ll believe him?”

Dick looked at the younger boy’s eyes and for the first time he saw the eleven year old boy without any acted coolness or macho facade. Only the little boy who had seen his mother in jail and almost dying from alcohol. He touched Jason’s forearm and smiled.
“Tony has never said anything bad about you.”

“An’ if he does?”

Dick pressed his lips.

“I’ll say to him that he is wrong; Jay, you’re my best friend: nothing is gonna change that.”

The younger boy nodded and resumed his macho expression causing Dick’s smile.

“Mmm…Ya’re a lucky sonovagun, ya know?”

Dick snorted.

“Why, Jay?”

“I mean, ya know, not for…ya know, what happened to yar family…Lucky ‘cause Batguy took ya in his car…I’m thinkn’ that all the time! How was it?”

“Awesome!” the older boy exclaimed overenthusiastic on purpose to tease his friend.

Jason slapped the table.

“Fuck! I want a ride too!”

Dick chuckled.

“It’s not the roller coaster, you know!” he cocked an eyebrow amused from the childish pout in Jason’s face; but then Dick became serious. “I want to see him again…now that I know he is alive…”

“I told ya so…”

“He saved my life…”

Jason nodded.

“It’s what Batguy does…”

Dick lolled his head on the side and snorted.

“No kiddin’! I didn’t know, thanks for telling me!” he sneered. “Maybe if I run away again…”

Jason blinked.

“Forget it, dude! The Bat sure has better things to do than babysittin’ a brat an’ this time Breizic will ditch ya an’ Wayne will ban ya for a month.”

Dick snorted.

“Wayne won’t have me for long…” he said relieved. “And then I’ll be free!” Jason crooked his mouth.

“Speakin’ of which…Wayne is comin’…” he whispered to his friend seeing Bruce leading his wheelchair towards them. “Yar trainer didna say that Alfred would come?”

Dick snorted.
“Wayne wants to show off how good guardian he is…”

Jason raised his eyebrows at his friend’s grudge and his gaze caught again the huge TV screen.

“Fuck!” he exclaimed and Dick seeing his friend’s goggling eyes turned curious to see as Bruce reached their table.

“Hi, boys. Nice to see you again, Jason” Bruce greeted them but immediately frowned seeing both of them absorbed in the TV screen and turned his gaze there.

Vicky Vale after the discussion with Zucco ended turned again to her guests, vaguely aware that the wall screen was resuming the initial theme with the faces of the three protagonists in the court dispute. However soon she registered that her audience was looking at the wall screen with bulged eyes. That was odd because they hadn’t scheduled to present anything so fascinating that would caught the audience’s attention; curious she turned to see what was going on.

Vale frowned and paled.

Bruce’s face lost every color: he knew the place that the TV played: the quality wasn’t high but it was good enough to show every detail.

“Strip!”

This brute roar was so familiar and so close as if he was experiencing one of his nightmares, here in a public place. The healthy part of his spine froze as if the order was made to him.

Falcone was standing in front of his big desk at his office in Dolcetto and his fist had a little blood. His face was – as always – contorted in a grimace of rage. And the object of his wrath was lying in the floor, right in the base of the wall: a cringing ragged mass of a small boy who trembled.

“Stay there!” Bruce almost yelled to the boy.

But the boy stood up stumbling on his shaking weak legs – Bruce knew he would and bit his bottom lip making the flesh bleed. Exactly as the mouth and nostrils of the bruised boy…

The gaunt boy could use only his left arm since his right hung by his side like a dead log but that didn’t stop him from taking off hastily his tattered clothes. He was crying and his chest heaved violently but he didn’t stop because he knew there would be more beating if he did. He stopped only when his bony body stayed completely naked in front of Falcone’s gleeful eyes.

The Grey Wolf surged at the boy and fisted his hair and dragged him to his desk. The crime lord used his other arm to push the objects off the desk and dropped the boy on letting his miserable trembling legs dangling off the floor.

Bruce saw appalled his buttocks displayed in common view but he couldn’t avert his eyes, which were glued there freezing his existence and erasing everything else around.

“Open yar fuckin’ legs, ya bastard!”

The boy forced his legs that shook uncontrollably to open as much as possible yet Falcone barked unsatisfied.
“More!” he growled “And stick yar asshole out for me! Ya slut!”

The boy immediately obeyed, trying to swallow his sobs but failing; his buttocks convulsed because he was crying and because he knew what was coming next... Falcone laughing came and stood between his legs slapping cruelly the naked buttocks causing more sobs.

Vale’s eyes bulged as everyone else’s in the studio: what was that? Who was doing that?

She saw Falcone, his backside to the camera, dropping his pants and briefs; his erection was visible and it was rock hard.

She had had enough: she stood and ran incredibly fast for someone in stiletto heels to the control panel where the staff there watched equally shocked.

“Sam, cut it!” she screamed outraged.

The man with the raven ponytail in front of the control panel turned to her and shrugged helpless.

“I can’t! It comes from somewhere else and I can’t overcome it! Somebody hacked our signal!”

“Then cut our signal entirely! We can’t let that play!”

Steve widened his eyes.

“You’re crazy! The Boss will kill me!”

“Absolutely!” a rough voice came behind her and she knew that Solomon Wizze, the President and owner of the station had just arrived.

She turned with a nasty frown on her face and glared at him. Unlike her he was completely calm in his fine tailored suit, smoking his cigar.

“Solomon, you surely don’t want this abomination broadcasting from GTV.”

But the sturdy man chewed his cigar and cocked his eyebrows.

“Show must go on, Vick! This might be gruesome but we won’t hide the truth – people have the right to know everything.”

Vicky narrowed her eyes to slits that flashed; she gestured to the screen where a half naked Falcone had thrust to the bent boy.

“Wayne here is barely eleven! What truth?! This is child pornography! This is a federal crime, Solomon!”

“They have hacked our signal” he cut her “we’re not responsible for that and...our numbers are exploding!”

Vicky could see the $s flashing to Wizze’s eyes; she was disgusted.

“And unethical...” she ended her phrase hissing between her gritted teeth.

Leslie was returning to her office at the clinic having finished her visits to the patients’ rooms; she was holding the tablet with the latest data on her patients’ condition. She stopped to the nurses’ station to sign a patient’s discharge when unusual fuss from the waiting area drew her attention.

“What’s this?” she asked Michael who was making his shift at the nurses’ station.

“Probably something they see in Vale’s show: it is very popular with these people.”

Leslie stretched her posture and her face took its strictest expression.

“This is a hospital though!” she marched there and she was ready to scowl at them when she saw what they were seeing.

Leslie during these months since Falcone’s downfall had watched everything about the crime lord trying to gain some knowledge about Bruce’s experiences to help the youth; so she recognized immediately the office and of course the skinny, battered boy.

She stayed like a thunder had just struck her: Falcone was abusing Bruce and everyone was audience to that. She felt the breath caught in her lungs and bile filling her mouth forcing her to gulp constantly; her eyes watered seeing the little boy taking off his clothes obeying Falcone’s orders shaking from his terror.

And then the sturdy adult grabbed the poor thing and bent him on the desk barking to him to spread his legs…

“Enough!” she screamed and pressed the button to the remote control closing the TV.

People still shocked from what they had just seen looked at her dumbstruck trying to register her presence.

“Leave! There’s nothing to see!” she clapped her hands glaring at the nurses who had been watching along with the visitors.

When everyone had dispersed she closed her eyes and inhaled deeply. She heard footsteps approaching and saw Kelly.

“Dr. Thompkins, are you alright? Do you need something?”

“No, Kelly, thank you” she turned and hurried to her office; she couldn’t leave the hospital right now but her heart was bleeding for Bruce.

She dialled Alfred’s cell number to warn him – Leslie didn’t call the Manor’s number because usually at this hour Alfred was in the city to bring Dick back home from his training. And she didn’t want to make Bruce suspect that something had happened.

“Good evening, Leslie” her friend’s poised voice greeted her.

“Alfred, where are you?”

“At the Manor; Leslie, I detect you are upset…” his face’s frown was reflected in his observation.

“Open your TV at GTV” she ordered and Alfred obliged.

The cell phone almost fell from his hand seeing the footage.

“Good Lord!” he exclaimed. “Bloody Hell! That is impossible!”

“Alfred, if you’re in the Manor, where is Bruce now?”
“He went to the city to bring Master Richard back to the Manor” the man felt the room spinning as the images from Falcone’s brutal abuse played before his eyes as if they had sprung from one of his nightmares. “Oh, my Goodness! Do you gather that he is seeing this?”

“I don’t know, Alfred…If he is…Damn!”

“I’ll try to reach him, Leslie and understand his condition. We must keep our calm, my dear: he might not have seen.”

“Alright. Call me right away as soon as you hear from him…Damn! I can’t leave the clinic right now but if Bruce needs me, call me ASAP, okay?”

“I will, Leslie.”

Kelly ran to the little closet with the nurses uniforms to call Thomas; she was sure that he would want to know about Leslie’s sudden distress.

“Hi, Tommy: something odd just happened: people were watching TV and Dr. Thompkins furious closed the TV and yelled at everyone. She was shocked and her eyes almost terrorized.”

Thomas Elliot smirked. He was sprawled on his sofa, still dressed in his tailored blue stripped suit minus the jacket and held between his fingers a crystal flute filled with champagne.

“I know, babe, I know. Thank you…I can’t wait to see you tonight after your shift!”

The nurse giggled and ended the call sending him kisses.

Thomas rolled his eyes at her stupidity and shook his head exasperated; he hurried to focus again on what he was watching the moment Kelly called: GTV’s show – Falcone fucking the underage Bruce Wayne.

He sipped from his flute and raised the glass.

“Cheers, Brucie!”

Bruce, his eyes still fixed on the screen, realized that people were goggling at the screen and at him slowly realizing his presence there. Operating in auto pilot he brushed one of his wrist watch’s buttons and the screen became black as Falcone began cruelly thrusting in his younger self.

Only then he managed to take his eyes from the screen while everyone else in the room was still staring at the screen. The boys too.

“Boys” he said calm as ever and both Dick and Jason looked at him with widened eyes. “We have to go.”

Even Dick didn’t protest and hastily took his backpack and stood. Bruce left a bill on the table and followed the boys while still people numb were trying to understand what had happened.

As Bruce crossed the gym’s central hall his mind was racing: he had closed that TV set but everywhere else in Gotham people continued watching…He bit his lips that now bled more and brushed the panel on the armrest to speed up the wheelchair to catch the boys who were rushing to the exit.

Vicky’s face was distorted from rage watching her boss’ mock sad face and his glistening eyes that manifested his triumph for the attention the station would get and of course the money from the advertisements.

“They hacked us, alright, but this doesn’t mean we can’t stop the broadcasting!” she felt her perfectly groomed hair becoming a bush.

Wizze frowned, not understanding like the crowd that had gathered in the meantime. The frown became a full grimace of rage when Vicky rushed to the control panel, grabbed the foam cup with Sam’s steaming coffee and splashed the content on the bench with the audio visual aids.

Her eyes shone enthusiastic when sparkles began dancing from the bench making Sam and the others who sat there jumped away scared. Thankfully, the foam cup was almost full.

“You crazy bitch!” Wizze growled.

The sparkles became more and smoke began emitting before a loud bang that made everyone bent for cover. Vicky stood unfazed watching satisfied the blank screen: the signal and the image were down.

The technicians and Wizze knew very well that it would take much time for the damage to be restored and of course the hacking signal would be lost.

The boys had jumped in the car’s back seat and Bruce calm as if nothing had happened slipped from his armchair to the driver’s seat.

He felt numb, like being in a surreal world; empty from everything; he wasn’t thinking and his eyes weren’t seeing although somewhat aware of the world around.

However, he knew his condition and felt grateful to Tony for having installed auto pilot to every car
Bruce had to ease him with his disability. Bruce didn’t make use of the auto pilot in his black car neither in this custom one but now that system was very useful. Despite the fact his eyes were fixed on the street, were seeing only blurred lights and masses; his hands were holding casually the steer wheel but he didn’t trust his current ability to drive safely. Sweat was purring all over his body although his heartbeat and his breath were below the normal levels.

“Jason, we’ll first drive you home” he said so casually and indifferent that Jason goggled.

“Dude…” the younger of the boys mumbled “I’m sorry, man…”

Dick elbowed him scowling him with the eyes and mouthing that he should shut up but it was too too late.

But Bruce turned his eyes to them and smiled though his face muscles felt cramped.

“Thank you, Jason but I am the one who should apologize to you…for what you saw there” he replied.
When the sparks from the blast stopped and people recovered from the shock Wizze stormed at Vicky who looked at him unfazed smirking satisfied. The old man was fuming and almost eating his cigar.

“You’re fired!” he screamed and his cigar along with a lot of spit dropped from his mouth.

Vicky laughed at his spectacle.

“Nah! I’m quitting, you cock sucking, greedy bastard!”

She ground her teeth gathering her entire strength and stabbed her stiletto heel to his foot; Wizze bent in two and growled like a wounded beast.

“And I’ll testify in the sue Wayne will do against you” she spat at his face smirking and stretched her posture, fixed her hair and left elegantly the control room in front of the eyes of every member of the staff and her show’s audience. Several people applauded and wolf whistled.

“Here we are” Bruce stopped the car and turned in his seat to look the boys.

They had arrived at the apartment building where Ms. Todd and Jason lived. Jason eyed first Bruce and then Dick.

“Ya’ll be okay?” he said without being sure to whom he was making the question.

Dick nodded and Bruce grinned.

“Your mother…” he showed with a head gesture at Ms. Todd who had just come out of the building.

The woman leaned to the window of the driver’s seat and Bruce lowered the glass. Her face was pale and Bruce felt a cold current running through his back realizing that she had seen…

“Bruce…” she said panting trying to read if he knew. “The GTV’s signal is down…” she chose to give that ambiguous information.

Bruce didn’t expect to hear that: he definitely could have brought down the signal but from the cave. Maybe Tony? But Tony was in New York and perhaps he didn’t even know about…

“Thank you, Kate” he replied with a smile that flickered uncertain. “I brought Jason.”

“Thank you…” the woman’s bottom lip was trembling obviously from shock and sadness for what she just saw.

Jason sensing that her mother’s presence at the moment was worsening things jumped out of the car and grabbed her upper arm.

“We leavin’ now, mom…” he found Bruce’s eyes “goodnight” he mumbled and Bruce grinned.

“Goodnight to both of you.”

The two men slipped through the shadows of Metropolis’ dusk leaving the warehouse they were in for hours. They stepped out from the shady alleys to the crowded, buzzy, innocent streets mixing with the pedestrians to end up to the corner bar.

A third shadow followed them from a distance and after waiting a couple of minutes to not raise suspicions entered the same bar choosing a secluded table on the less lighted part of the place.

The two men had chosen to sit at the bar’s stools – the third shadow grinned: of course they wanted to act the innocent, law abiding citizens.

Suddenly someone sat at the chair next to him.

“What are you doing here?” a whispered demand came in a pissed female voice.

“The same as you” he answered.

“It’s not your business, farmboy” Lois spat.

“It is! We were in this together from the start and it’s my case as much as yours!”

Lois gritted her teeth and cocked her eyebrows.

“Your passion for her died so fast that you stopped running back to her as soon as the school bell rings?” she sniggered.

Clark lolled his head on the side.

“Why you’re bringing her into this? I’m doing my job.”

She smirked.

“Which she obviously doesn’t know because you’re afraid to tell her because she snubs everything human related.”

“Lois…Stop spitting poison at her” the woman rolled her eyes. “I’m looking forward to go back to her as soon as my job is done.”

“Then go! I don’t need you…And I’m right: you’re scared of her reaction if she learns that you work as a” her face turned a feigned expression of disgust “common human.”

Clark pressed his lips.

“Can we just continue our job here? It seems that something stirs in the city’s underbelly.”

Lois nodded.

“And those two indicate that Intergang is in fact alive and kicking.”

Clark remembered Bruce’s doubts when everyone believed that the Intergang died at the Metropolis’ Subway attack.

“However we can’t be positive yet” he said not wanting to accept something that Bruce had said: the man had tried to trap him giving him a faulty inoculation.

“I’m not talking to you!” Lois spat and turned her head at the bar where a flat screen played the news.
Clark took in the rising of her heartbeat and looked too. He had heard the newscaster warning the viewers for the disturbing content but he assumed that it was another one of those ISIS videos.

“Holly shit!” Lois exclaimed.

Clark didn’t speak but his heartbeat spiked too: the late Falcone from several years ago in his office at Dolcetto was barking to a boy of barely eleven to strip. From that moment on the image was mostly pixelized but it was obvious that the sturdy man was penetrating the sobbing boy.

The car had hardly stopped in front of the Wayne Manor when Alfred ran to the driver’s door opening for his young master. Dick opened his door and jumped out but didn’t rush inside the Manor and to his room as usual; instead he stood staring at the two men like paralyzed.

“Master Bruce…” Alfred was almost shaking but found the calmness to take the folded wheelchair and press the small control panel on the armrest to unfold it for Bruce who thanked him sitting. The butler had eyes only for his young master, agony and worry radiating though he didn’t want that.

Bruce felt exhausted: driving to the Manor seemed like the most difficult thing in the world. However inside him there was nothing; he was numb as if he didn’t exist.

“So…you saw…” he said expressionless to his butler registering with a pang Alfred’s paleness. Bruce’s heart that till now beat very slowly gave a hard kick with a thud that pained his chest.

Alfred’s wet eyes searched his young master’s face and Bruce smiled to him raising his eyebrows.

“I’m fine, Alfred. Nothing happened. Can we go inside now?”

His eyes met for a second Dick’s and the boy walked first; Bruce lowered his head only for a second hasty to play indifference as Alfred still shaken looked at him.

“I was calling you, sir…” Alfred tried to hide his worry walking by his young master’s side.

Bruce frowned realizing that he hadn’t heard anything…and remembered the puzzled expressions of the boys. However he couldn’t admit that to Alfred.

“Oh! I must have forgotten the Cosmos in silent mode. I’m sorry, Alfred, I didn’t want to worry you.”

Alfred grinned to him as he ascended the stairs and Bruce the ramp.

“Master Anthony called…he was calling you too.”

Bruce closed his eyes as his heart gave another violent kick.

“He saw too?” he asked in a low voice. “I was hoping this hadn’t reached New York…” he pressed his lips and inhaled. “Anyway, I’ll call him now.”

However as soon as they reached the great salon the telephone Bruce and Tony had set for their private communication rang. Bruce steered his chair there determined, being aware of Dick’s eyes on him. Hero who was curled in front of the fireplace ran to his master and climbed to his lap stealing a smile and a caress from Bruce.

“Littl’ guy?” agony was evident in Tony’s voice and made the tombstone on Bruce’s chest heavier.
“Yes, Tony: everything is fine, I’m fine – end of story. I’m sorry for the upset I caused you.”

“What are you saying now, littl’ guy?! You don’t have to apologize for anything” a small pause. “I’m coming there.”

Bruce yanked his head and huffed pressing his hand to his hair.

“You don’t have to, Tony: continue your work. It didn’t kill me then, it certainly won’t kill me now.”

Alfred pressed his lips: Dick stared at the Englishman’s face and could say that he wasn’t so sure about the harmlessness of that video.

Bruce returned the receiver to its place feeling exhausted and Hero rubbed his small head to the human’s jaw purring.

“Sir, would you like to have some tea? The cinnamon biscuits are just out of the oven” he added with hope.

Bruce shook his head.

“No, Alfred, thank you. I have work.”

“Of course, sir” the butler said burying his disappointment.

Bruce had isolated himself in the cave, alone with Hero who as usual didn’t let the bats alone till the flying rodents left for hunting.

His odd heartbeat had stopped from the moment his wheelchair touched the rough surface of the cave. As if this place was a haven: a place where he could escape the outside world and be safe; free and lacking any memory…

It seemed that the humid, cold air of the cave swept away what had happened… and he delved into what he should be doing – what he loved doing: investigating.

The central processor was connected with Tony’s surveillance system receiving image from the stolen items and Bruce focused on the footage they had received: Luthor had gone there with Mercy and he was talking with two other people which Bruce couldn’t see. He frowned – that was odd: if the tracking system had a visual failure then Luthor and Mercy wouldn’t be visible as well.

Something else hid these people from the nanocameras…

Bruce huffed and tapped the keyboard frantically trying everything in hopes of overcoming whatever made the other two bystanders ‘invisible’.

He slapped the working bench frustrated and felt Hero’s surprised eyes on him. He shook his head and breathed slowly to calm himself.

Luthor was too clever to say any names: even if his partner reassured him that he didn’t find any tracing system he still didn’t name them. The voice of Luthor’s ally as Bruce expected was definitely that of the man’s that had come to Bruce’s office to demand the same objects: Brunno Mannheim.

However they would need more than a voice identifier to convict him… Of course the man had said ‘re-acquiring what’s mine’ yet it wouldn’t suffice for a judge. Not to mention that arresting him for the theft wouldn’t solve the mystery. He tapped his fingers on the bench and watched closer for any
He narrowed his eyes and leaned closer. Was Luthor...scared? And the ‘invisible’ man had said “as your lot”...What did he mean? What ‘lot’? The businessmen? The billionaires?

Sure thing Luthor didn’t retort as he always did in such circumstances and both he and Mercy looked shaken...What could have made Luthor indifferent to such attitude; so slavish and so...scared? Even with the League of Shadows Luthor wasn’t scared but he made his counter-schemes in order to backstab them...

The Manor’s phone rang and Bruce pressed the key on his keyboard to answer from the cave since obviously Alfred was too busy to answer.

“Bruce Wayne speaking.”

“Well, hello, Bruce...”

Speaking of the devil... Bruce thought rolling his eyes. It was Luthor and in contrast with his demeanor in the video he sounded jubilant.

“What do you want, Mr. Luthor?”

“To congratulate you, my young friend” Bruce’s mind went immediately to the incident during Vale’s show.

“If you refer to that video everyone already knew what Facone did to me” he said indifferent.

“Yeah...but the continuation of the video was very interesting...fascinating I’d say” he sniggered and Bruce could imagine the smug expression on his face and the flute of champagne in his fingers. “I didn’t expect your tiny asshole to have such capacity” he sneered. “And you managed to impress millions of others: congratulations, Brucie – after the Person of the Year you managed to break Youtube’s record!”

Luthor’s laughter was the last impression before the dial ended.

Bruce leaned on the keyboard and opened the Youtube site where what he wanted was on the top of the list with an insane number of hits.

His heart began beating faster, cold sweat washing his body seeing the duration of the video: it wasn’t the ten minutes footage that the GTV’s signal’s breakdown stopped abruptly - it was the whole thing.
Jim Gordon was pacing inside his office at the MCU’s building hardly containing his eagerness to rush outside. He had to be calm and collected before his colleagues even if his insides were upturned; what happened earlier at GTV was sick; inhumane…After the DA’s order, Jim had initiated police activity but he decided to not act himself though he wanted it so much: he had a soft spot for the Little Prince after all.

Yet he was the Police Commissionaire and he shouldn’t show partiality to any citizen especially to someone as rich as Mr. Wayne. So he was waiting in his office for his officers to return; also, Robert Hatchet the temporary DA was on his way there. The man had issued a warrant for GTV’s president.

After Harvey’s resignation, Jim had continued the good co-operation with the DA’s office through Harvey’s replacement. And he was very happy about that.

“Come in” he said when knocks on the door interrupted his thoughts.

Robert Hatchet entered the room with his leather briefcase in his hand. He offered his hand to Jim for a handshake and the police commissionaire shook it appreciatively.

“Did they bring Wizze yet?”

“They are on their way here trying to avoid reporters” Jim replied raising his eyebrows.

Robert shook his head.

“You have already a horde of them on your doorstep” Jim nodded with an expression of helplessness. “Can I have a cup of coffee?” he asked gazing at the machine on the small cabinet.

Montoya had given it to Gordon.

Jim looked there.

“Of course…Sorry I forgot to offer you.”

Robert filled a small foam cup and lolled his head towards Jim.

“Don’t mention it…We are all a bit shaken, huh? Anyway I’d like to put behind bars that bastard Wizzie.”

Jim fixed his glasses.

“You know better than me that we can’t hold him much…The GTV’s signal was hacked…although he could have stopped it as Vale did.”

Robert sipped from his coffee.

“Yeah, who would have thought that she would do that: she earned my respect. Did you locate the hacking spot?”

Jim paced a bit more.

“The officers at Cyber Crime are close.”
Robert grinned.

“I can’t wait to press charges on the sonovabitch who did that!” Jim ran his hand through his hair and nodded.

“What kind of person does that? I mean, Wayne has suffered so much…what kind of a sick mind puts salt to his wounds like that?”

Robert shook his head.

“Harvey called; he was very upset.”

Jim shook his head.

“Harvey still watches Gotham’s developments, huh?”

“He loves his city.”

Suddenly, Montoya burst into the office.

“Commissionaire, there’s a leak on the internet!” Robert frowned. “It is the entire video that was stopped after the signal’s breakdown.”

Robert immediately dialled the DA’s office in his Smartphone.

“Order Youtube and the other file hosting sites to take down the video!” he barked to his subordinates in the office. “Contact FBI for instant results.”

Jim clenched his waist with both hands and shook his head: he dreaded what the entire video could be showing.

A young officer ran to the open door.

“Commissionaire! We have located the hacker!”

Jim grabbed his jacket and Robert shoved his Smartphone in his jacket’s inner pocket.

“Montoya, Bullock, take some officers and follow me!”

The long, rectangular window opened at Superman’s arrival and the Man of Steel landed on the dark green carpet of Diana’s apartment; the sweet, mesmerizing smell welcoming him. He was still shaken but as soon as he entered the room his head cleared and he felt careless, peaceful; free from every sadness and wonder.

Diana was standing with her arms crossed and watched the flat screen fascinated – a smirk on her face.

“Welcome, Kal El” she greeted him without taking her eyes off the screen watching greedily.

“Good evening, Diana” he answered and suddenly he felt so exhilarated that flew to her wrapping his arms around her waist and kissing her neck.

Until his eyes fell on the screen…
“How can you watch this?” he asked sick.

She gestured indifferent to the screen.

“You mean Wayne being fucked?” she snorted. “This is the entire video: I connected the TV with Internet. As you can see it’s more than a simple fuck.

Superman’s face was distorted in disgust: it was never a ‘simple fuck’…

“Sometimes I find it difficult to understand you, Diana.”

Diana turned her head to him narrowing her eyes.

“For watching this?” she snorted. “I am a warrior, Kal El: I have seen much worse than this in the battlefield” her voice was contemptuous. “How can this upset me?”

Superman shook his head: he didn’t feel anymore the heavy tombstone over his chest that fell there since he saw the news but still Diana’s indifference bothered him.

“Yes but still…It’s a little child…being brutally abused.”

Diana kissed his lips and looked him deep in the eyes making his misery evaporate.

“Aren’t you happy you’re not connected to this man anymore?” she whispered in his ear sending goose bumps to his spine. “Imagine if you were in the middle of all this; all this filth passing to you… Kal El” she sucked his ear lobe and Superman closed his eyes. “He never deserved you: he is filth and you’re pure light…Every time you touched him this dirt was transferred to you…”

Bruce was saying exactly the same things to him. Bruce…He was hearing the little boy screaming and crying and one part of him wanted to save him or flew to Gotham and hug Bruce and another part was happy that this wasn’t his problem anymore.

He blew at the remote just enough air to turn off the TV set. He tightened his embrace on Diana’s body.

“I don’t want to waste our time together with that” he said determined and Diana nodded gifting him her brightest smile.

“I agree.”

The man turned on his car’s engine and sped away from the dark alley satisfied for the merchandise he just bought that lay inside a small innocent paper bag. At the same time however he was a bit shaken and stepped on the accelerator: his provider was clearly a wacko coming to their meeting wearing that sack mask…What was wrong with Gothamites and masks?

He shook his head rolling his eyes. At least, the stuff was of great quality.

Crane followed the car with his eyes till it was out of sight: the pack of bills was pleasantly warm in his jacket’s pocket. He knew that this kind of activities was below a great genius like him but he needed the money for survival and for his experiments.

He turned towards the rusty door of the abandoned building; he wouldn’t come out of the alley in case someone stalked there; instead he’d cross the building and come out of the back exit to another alley.
“Waaaaait, waaaait, waiiiit!”

Crane under the mask crooked his lips and rolled his eyes before turning displeased to face his uninvited guest.

“HEHEHEHEHEHEEEEE!” the purple dressed clown bent in two giggling hard.

“How you sprang out here? How did you find me?” he hissed.

“I’m a clown sooooooooo I spring out of booooxes” he blinked “and not only… Aaaand I juuust follow the smeeeel of the weed: youuu’re the hoooooot dealer in the town.
UHUHUHUHUUUUUU! Nice mask, croooooow! Thooooooough…” he slowly straightened his body sweeping imaginary tears from laughter “hehe…though” he ran to him and brought his face close to the sack mask “you’re like a potato in a sack! HAHAHAHAHAAAAA!”

Scarescrow crossed his arms on the chest and stared at him blankly. Joker took his most solemn expression and watched him puzzled before patting his back.

“Youuuuu need to do something wiith the styliiiing, huh?”

“What do you want, clown?!” Scarescrow hissed coldly.

But Joker just giggled.

“Oooooops! It seems I stepped on a callus or something? Sooooorry, mate” he said with a totally un-honest expression “buuuuuut you have to love your friend with his faults” he blinked innocently.

“You’re not my friend!”

Joker pouted and cocked his eyebrows. He leaned closer.

“Why? Do youuuu have someone elseeeeee? HEHEHEHEHEHEHEEEEE!!” he burst out in giggles.

Scarescrow gritted his teeth.

“What do you want?!” he spat.

Joker raised his palms in a motion of appease.

“Oooookay, oooookay…Let’s talk like civilized gangsters…I can see you rolling your eyes…Why? I’m not civiliiiiiiiized?”

“Get over with it!”

Joker patted him on the chest and nodded.

“I just waaaaant what I ordered. It’s your job after all – selling drugs an’ stuff…You made what I asked or it was too difficult?”

Crane grabbed his mask and revealed his face that was distorted with disgust and smugness.

“There’s no substance that Dr. Crane can’t make.”

Joker leaked his lips nodding like a hungry dog.
“Weeeeell?”

Crane lolled his head on the side smirking.

“You don’t expect me to have it on me…I’ll contact you when the time comes.”

Joker’s face hardened and he locked eyes with the doctor.

“The tiiiiime has already come: I want myyyyy order.”

Crane nodded gulping.

“You’ll have it.”

“In twoooooo days, I’ll meet you here” he hissed threateningly but immediately he scratched his head.

“Unless I change my mind…I’m a bit…mercurial, ya know…”

He made a spin in his position and began walking towards the alley’s exit under Crane’s knowing smirk.

“Wait!” the scientist yelled.

Joker made another spin and looked at him blinking.

“I knewwwww you’ll want mooooooore ooof your paaaaal…” he poured.

Crane cackled.

“As a pal” he said snidely “I owe to inform you about your legally wedded wife…”

Joker frowned.

“My…Brucie?”

“Not only yours” he cocked his eyebrows and pouted. “Are you sure you’ve made the right choice?” he held his Smartphone up with a video already playing. “The whole Gotham and States goggles at this!”

Joker narrowed his eyes and surged to him grabbing the phone and bringing it to his face that was completely still except than a nerve that ticked next to his right eye as he watched Falcone thrusting in little Bruce’s body.

Crane watched him wildly satisfied; he was sure that if Joker’s face wasn’t covered with paint he would be ashen or red from wrath.

“Who did that?” the clown hissed low with no nasal hue in his voice which had more effect than his usual hysterics.

However Crane held his composure.

“Falcone!” he answered nonchalant but Joker tossed away the phone and grabbed him from the lapels dangling him.

“You destroyed my phone, you fool!”

Joker’s teeth shone in the half darkness close to Crane’s face.
“You want to have the same?!?” his teeth shone in the dim light of the street lamps outside the alley.

Crane felt something cold touching his cheek before seeing the sparkle of a blade.

“Someone hacked GTV’s signal and broadcasted this…the signal broke down soon but the whole video leaked to Youtube…” he said in one breath.

Joker detached the hand that held Crane’s lapels and the doctor hardly stayed erect fixing his clothes with dignity. He saw intrigued Joker’s eyes going completely blank.

“I should have tortured more that motherfucker!” the jester almost whispered to himself erasing Crane’s presence. “Anyway…someone is going to suffer tonight…”

He turned towards the alley’s exit and ran, Crane breathing relieved that Joker’s wrath was for someone else. He walked to the place where his phone ended among cans and used condoms: he took it grimacing disgusted. The screen was badly scratched but the video was still playing showing what Falcone did after the rape.

“I have to buy a new phone now, you imbecile!”

Bruce stayed numb in the confinement of his chair; his eyes fixed on the small square of the video that aggregated a record number of views; duration: 1 hour and something.

His palm touched his mouth without even knowing…Thankfully, Selina was away from Gotham with Steve and if he was lucky she hadn’t seen the video or heard anything.

“That video is down from every site in the net” Bruce was startled and turned to the entrance of the cave where one second ago Ironman floated; because now the red and gold android stood only a few feet away from him. “Pepper and Lucius took care of that.”

Bruce nodded calmly noticing Tony’s hesitance to get closer; his friend didn’t deactivate the face plate probably because he didn’t want Bruce to see his face. However Bruce could imagine his friend’s turmoil.

He ran his hand through his hair.

“Tony, I told you I was fine; you didn’t have to let your work in New York and come here.”

Ironman now walked closer.

“No way I would stay there while…” he stopped abruptly unwilling to utter what he had in mind or not knowing how to express it to not hurt more his friend.

Bruce felt his stomach becoming a knot but simply turned his head towards the screen changing Youtube’s site with the footage from the warehouse where the stolen items ended up.

Tony rolled his eyes behind the cold face plate. He huffed shaking his head and finally deactivated the face plate: although he would like to hide his feelings from Bruce he just couldn’t continue looking at his friend through the face plate.

“You should have alerted Lucius about the video and asked him to act stopping it from spreading to every site” Tony berated. “It was a happy coincidence he heard what happened and acted on his own accord.”
However Bruce was staring at the screen where the footage with Luthor was playing. Tony glanced at Hero who sat on the bench and watched puzzled his human friend.

“Bruce, I’m talking to you.”

The younger man turned nonchalant to him.

“I’m listening, Tony but since you’re here we should examine this. Do you have any program to overcome whatever hides the other people present in the warehouse? It’s very odd.”

Tony closed his eyes exasperated and leaned to his friend.

“You should be tracing the hacking location right now, Bruce! To find the bastard who uploaded this” Bruce frowned and Tony sensing that something odd was taking place inside his friend calmed himself. “Jarvis has almost located the hacker and…”

But Bruce shook his head.

“Why don’t you leave it to the police? This is more important! We have to understand what’s going on: Luthor’s behavior is bizarre – he looks scared and…confused.”

Tony yanked his head backwards and huffed.

“Fuck Luthor! Fuck everything!” he shouted. “Nothing is more important than finding the sonovabitch that did that!” he stood abruptly but realizing that he had raised his voice again ruffled his hair and looked tenderly at Bruce.

He could understand that his friend was still in a state of shock.

“Listen, littl’ guy” he licked his lips “go upstairs: it’s dinner time.”

“I’m not hungry, Tony.”

Tony closed his eyes and jerked his arms to the air.

“Of course you’re not!” he exclaimed exasperated. “But you must, Bruce! You need to take your medication…” this reminded him that his friend was still recovering and some bastard chose to give him that devious blow – that thought alone made him want to tear him into pieces but Bruce’s narrowed eyes were fixed on him and was reading him.

Suddenly, Jarvis sent him the data he anxiously awaited and Tony forgot everything.

“Tony, let police handle it…” Bruce repeated realizing but Tony was adamant.

“No way!”

Bruce watched Ironman taking off and flying out of the cave; he pressed his lips, inhaled deeply and turned to the computer screen when the Manor’s cable phone rang again. He closed his eyes because answering seemed exhausting but thankfully it stopped ringing; probably Alfred had answered.

Bruce felt relief only for a few seconds because the line was passed there.

“Yes, Alfred” he said pinching the bridge of his nose.

“Pardon me for the interruption, sir, but Mr. Collins would like to talk with you.”
Bruce looked at the cave’s ceiling as if trying to gather strength from the rocks.

“I’ll speak to him, Alfred” Hero came to him and rubbed his head to his hand that had stayed forgotten on the working bench; Bruce smiled to him.

“Mr. Wayne, I’m terribly sorry for what happened” the veteran lawyer told him in his admirably calm voice. “The DA’s office has already posted a warrant against GTV’s president but we can sue him as well.”

However that wasn’t what bothered Bruce right now.

“Mr. Collins, what happened…I mean that video can affect our case negatively?’’

Mr. Collins certainly didn’t expect that to be his employer’s main concern right now although he had called for that case as well.

“To be honest, Mr. Wayne, in a case of guardianship everything can have an effect” Bruce nodded. “As a matter of fact, I called you to suggest that we ask for an adjournment; I’m sure that Judge Moot won’t deny that.”

“Adjournment?”

“A break of the hearing for a few days until…” he couldn’t utter ‘you’re better’ though he was sure that that video had a major impact on his young employer – the truth was that he was prepared to hear from Alfred that Mr. Wayne couldn’t talk to him; Collins expected that Bruce would have taken some sedatives to handle this. But the youth was talking to him calm as ever. “Until the ruckus calms down” he said exploiting his skill on finding quickly the best words to say something.

Bruce bit his bottom lip staring at the display case with Batman’s armor.

“It won’t be necessary, Mr. Collins” he could almost hear the man’s surprise. “I’m alright and it is exactly what would serve Zucco best: manifesting weakness and being unable to meet Richard’s needs. I won’t let this undermine what’s important, that is Richard’s life.”

Collins stayed silent for a few seconds.

“That’s…” brave he wanted to say but he felt that Bruce wouldn’t want to hear that. “As you wish, Mr. Wayne…however if you change your mind do not hesitate to call me.”

“Thank you, Mr. Collins. I’ll see you tomorrow.”

“Goodnight, Mr. Wayne.”

“Goodnight, Mr. Collins” he replied but his eyes were fixed on the armor inside the transparent case.

Selina was staring fascinated at the painting at the wall before her, glad that the mass of visitors was somewhere else. She tapped her index finger to her lips thoughtful. El Greco was one of her favorite painters.

Being in that enormous exhibit hall in New York’s Metropolitan Museum inadvertently reminded her of that night, almost a year ago in another museum when she snatched the black diamond that helped her friend being free. Of course a Museum’s hall was completely different with people around and broad artificial lighting.
Steve had gone to the Avengers’ Tower for the team’s meeting and she decided to fill those empty hours by visiting one of the world’s biggest museums.

Behind the fake spectacles she wore her eyes narrowed hearing familiar footsteps on the glistening floor approaching her. She turned smiling to greet Steve who dressed in jeans, leather jacket and hockey cap passed unnoticed.

He kissed her on the cheek.

“I left you here but I didn’t expect to find you still here…”

Selina lolled her head on the side and raised her eyebrows.

“I’m a diletante, handsome.”

“Really? I didn’t consider you for that type…”

Selina slipped her arm under his upper arm and cuddled to him.

“I wore glasses” she said pointing to her spectacles “and…it’s clear I am an art lover: I spend hours staring at your abs…” she winked but she noticed that Steve’s smile was a bit forced. “School ended so soon?”

Steve gulped and looked her in the eyes.

“You didn’t hear anything…” it was evident. “There wasn’t any meeting” Selina detached from him and frowned worried. “Tony flew to Gotham…”

“Bruce…”

Steve took out of the jacket’s pocket his StarkStel; he didn’t know how to use every application but Selina did.

“There is a site…Youtube I think…there’s a video.”

She didn’t need more; with fast movements opened the said site and show what Steve was talking about. She bit her lips; Steve could see her eyes flashing like flames sad and angry at the same time.

The young woman stormed through the hall to the exit and he followed her.

Steve was there as she mounted her bike. Their eyes locked as she turned on the engine.

“I’m sorry…but I can’t stay…”

“Do not apologize. I understand: Bruce needs you.”

She took her helmet.

“You don’t have to come along” she said and put on the helmet.

“There’s no other place for me to be; I’ll lead you through shorter routes” he replied and jumped on his own bike that he had parked next to Selina’s having foreseen her reaction.

Ironman flew over Gotham seeing nothing else than Bruce’s indifferent eyes; Tony didn’t brag about his ability to read people yet he knew that under this indifference lay an emotional numbness, a great shock that when subsided his friend would be in terrible pain.

His fists clenched without realizing: Bruce shouldn’t be in pain anymore, damnit! His systems displayed in front of his eyes the exact location from where the hacking occurred: no surprise there, a small house, near the outskirts of the city.

Though he wasn’t registering the landscape underneath him he could hear the police sirens heading to the same place he was. He crooked his mouth: so Gotham’s police had made progress in technology – Bruce’s donations certainly had been used for the best. But officers wouldn’t ruin his plans. Not to mention that if the culprit heard the sirens would run away.

He sped up to the maximum and scanned the house that was situated in a neighborhood near the exit of the city towards the airport. A man sat before a computer that seemed custom but Tony could see that had increased capabilities. “Kirk Isaac, student of the Engineering Department; Gotham University” Jarvis sent him what he had dug for the owner.

Tony gritted his teeth: a nerd bastard who probably bragged over his feat and found ways to spread the video despite the ban from the hosting sites.

Ironman surged through the exterior wall to the small living room filling the space with debris and smoke. The man, no older than 20, sprang up, shocked – obviously, he didn’t believe that they would manage to overcome his firewalls and trace him: the arrogant motherfucker believed that even Stark would fail. Well, his shock became complete terror seeing the red and gold android glaring at him through the cloud of dust the debris had raised.

The screen of the PC was still filled with data related with his current effort to spread the video.

"Ironman! Wow! Look, man…” his voice trembled as the emotionless android walked slowly to him glaring through the cold lenses.

Tony couldn’t stand this bastard looking and speaking to him: the cruel monster had wrenched Bruce’s heart; he dreaded to consider what lay under his friend’s tranquility. He never thought of putting a growling system in his face plate but his own roar was more effective than any artificial one.

He surged against the man and his growl was gradually becoming louder as he grabbed him from the throat and lifted him in the air with his legs dangling. Tony was happy seeing the man’s eyes goggled in terror as Ironman was closing his air supply.

“Look, man, I didn’t know what the video was about…” he squealed but Tony clenched more causing a sob.

“Motherfucker!”

“I” he gargled “I hacked the signal and…uploaded the video to the net before…”

Isaac’s eyes bulged more.

“Okay, okay, you’re right…but I swear I didn’t know…” he panted. “I found the DVD in my mail with a letter saying that it’ll rock Gotham…I thought it’d be fun…” he yelled as the iron fingers squeezed his throat. “Help!”

Fun…That word fell like thunder and lightning in Tony’s head. Fun?! He tossed the man to the opposite intact wall and before the long haired man slumped on the floor he grabbed him again from the throat and pressed him to the wall.

“Having fun now?” he spat.

The man closed his eyes and began sobbing.

“Please…”

“You humiliated a brave man who did nothing wrong! You realize how much he suffers from what you did?! Do you imagine his emotional state?!!”

The man tried to nod though Ironman’s hold on his neck was unrelenting.

“I’m sorry…” Isaac sobbed.

But Ironman shook his head in denial.

“Not good enough!”

The man began crying and his eyes widened as Ironman’s clench became fierce busting blood vessels.

“Mr. Stark, don’t do that!”

Tony closed his eyes behind the face plate, recognizing the voice. In his manic haze didn’t realize that the police had arrived. Neither the door being demolished, as they burst in. It was Jim Gordon who had spoken the first of a team of officers with guns in their hands.

“Mr. Stark” a second voice was added and Tony recognized the new DA. “Give him to us and he’ll face justice.”

Tony snorted and would have rolled his eyes if he was less enraged.

“You won’t make Bruce feel better with that” Jim insisted his eyes fixed on the hero.

But Tony didn’t want to acknowledge the man.

“Jim, keep yourself and your cops off this” he said coldly without looking at them.

Jim pressed his lips because he felt for the man.

“Tony, you know that I can’t do this. You’ll only make things worse.”

Isaac whose face was almost blue from lack of air darted his panicked eyes to the Commissionaire; he was drenched in sweat and his eyes watered.

Tony clenched his jaw and tightened his grasp on the man.

“No fuckin’ way!” his boots emitted flames and Ironman took off taking the hacker with him.

Jim cursed.

“Follow him!” he said and ran through his officers.

“He is Ironman, Commissionaire” a rookie officer said awed but Jim glared at him and the youth gulped and ran behind his captain.
But Ironman was already far from the wrecked house carrying Isaac along: the man who was looking terrorized down and sobbed inside the hero’s suffocating hold. He breathed easier when Ironman landed on a rooftop but immediately moaned as Ironman brought his metal face to his.

“Please, Mr. Stark…I’m sorry…Please, don’t hurt me…”

“But you hurt my friend: a man who has offered everything to the people of this city.”

The man gasped and nodded.

“I know, I know…as soon as I realized what the video showed I tried to…”

“Cut the crap! You did nothing! You just enjoyed your…feat!” he raised his iron fist in the air ready to catapult the man’s face.

But a dry cough made him halt and frown.

“Oh, oh, oh! Youuuuuu were always my favorite hero, Iron--y – hehehehehe!” a pout “after Batsy, ‘course. Hehe! I want you tooooo know that I approve from the bottomest boooootom of my heart what you’re gonna do, Tony ol’ pal!”

Tony sniffed behind his face plate; he didn’t cast even a sideways glance but he knew who was. Joker was hopping to the rooftop with his hands inside his pockets.

The clown lolled his head on the side and pursed his lips.

“Al--though I’d loooooove to see you doing somethin’ useful for once…Mmm…I suggest you give ‘im to me” he patted himself on the chest. “The past showed that I’m better in these things” he blinked emphatically. “You remember goooood ol’ Falconi? I think you doooooo! An’ since Brucie is myyyyyy wife” Ironman snapped his head at him growling and Joker cocked his eyebrows.

“Sensitive subject, I know, my friend, yet” he raised his index finger “I have equal rights to revenge aaaaaaaand I’m the crazy villain here soooooooo this fella will certainly take what heeee deserves.”

Isaac began shaking uncontrollably Ironman’s grasp the memory of Falcone’s fate making him indecisive as to which option was the lesser of two evils.

“Shut the fuck up, Joker!” Ironman roared and Joker giggled.

The jester shook his head.

“Uhhhhh! I definitely like youuuuuuur style, Starky boy!Buuuuuut” he pursed his lips and put his palm beside his mout as if he was to share a secret “you loooooook like copying Batsyyyy… UHUHUHUUUUUUHAAHAHAAAAA!”

“After him is your turn, bastard!”

Joker stopped abruptly lolling his head to the side.

“I’m shaking from fear now…” he said nasally.

Tony clenched more his fist and lowered it to the cowering hacker who had closed his eyes and waited for his fate.

Tony was ready for the blood this blow would splash yet as his fist was a breath from his target something stopped it; something that he couldn’t overcome. Ironman growled frustrated and turned his face.
Batman stood there; his steady hand grabbing Ironman’s wrist keeping it still even if the hero tried to free it. Batman’s lenses locked with Ironman’s.

“Enough!” he spat.

Joker jumped several times in the air and clapped enthusiastic like a fanboy.

“Oh, boy! Oh, boy! My two favowite hewoes together!” he mimicked a child’s voice. “Wow! I’m gonna wet my pants!”

Tony clenched his jaw: Bruce…He risked his health for a sonovabitch! To stop him! He was pissed beyond words. He jerked his arm but Batman managed to keep his hold.

“Beat it!” Ironman barked. “It’s not your business!”

The hacker still trapped in Tony’s grasp breathed a bit relieved. Joker on the other hand was watching fascinated rubbing his chin thoughtful.

“This is Gotham!” Batman said calm but adamant. “It is my business!”

“Go save some old lady then! Do somethin’ useful than protecting someone who spreads child pornography.”

“I’m saving you from a mistake” Batman growled.

“Fuck you!”

Joker clapped and whistled.

“Wooooow! Greeeeeeeat performance, guys! Sooooooo persuasive…”

Yet Batman had eyes only for Ironman.

“Someone else gave him the video. He couldn’t have it in his possession: he is too young and without any connection to Falcone. Someone else did it and just used him. Killing him you’ll let the real culprit get away and do more damage.”

Isaac nodded trembling and Joker snorted.

“Party poooooooper!” the jester cried seeing Ironman dropping the hacker who caressed his bruised neck and coughed. “Byyyy the way, Batsyyyy, nice to see you again! Youuuuu wanna pleyyyy oooor you’re incapacitated?”

Batman glared at him but then hurried footsteps were heard coming to the rooftop and Joker began running.

“Oooooops! I have to leave now, kids!”

“No, you won’t!” Tony having recovered a bit from his trance surged behind him: he had unfinished business with him.

Batman followed and dove taking him along to the ground just a second before Joker’s small bomb made impact with his arc reactor.

The jester cackled as police officers flooded the rooftop shooting at him.
“We’ll see each ooooother again, Mr. hacker!” Joker said cheerfully and grabbed the fire escape ladder that unfolded taking him to the alley.

Batman fell to the void spreading his wings to chase him and Ironman followed as Jim handcuffed the hacker who laughing still shocked but very happy for his arrest.

Ten minutes later Ironman stood in the middle of an alley unable to locate either Joker or Batman. He was following both of them when they just vanished from his systems.

“Fuck!” he shouted iron teeth biting his insides from worry; Bruce had come out and was facing Joker alone.

“You’re going back to Arkham.”

Joker looked the wall that had stopped his course; he was trapped like a mouse in an alley. He lolled his head on the side and his acid green eyes sparkled focusing on Batman who walked slowly to him.

“Ooooh! It’s a highly misunderstooood facility – not bad at all. Aaaand greaaaat company tooooo! Fiiive stars from me” he made a spin and faced his pursuer. “Walking slower for the impression effect oooooor because you can’t faster?” he rubbed thoughtful his chin.

“No more nonsense, Joker” he moved to grab him but calls for help made him stop.

The yells were coming from the street and the victim was desperate. There was no option for him but he couldn’t let Joker free; he was ready to punch him to knock him out when something pull him up – a cable.

“I’m learning from you, Batsyyyyyy! Huhuhuhurray!”

Two of his goons were pulling Joker up and the yells for help became faint. Batman knew he hadn’t any time but he wasn’t going to leave Joker like this.

“Huuumuurrly up, Batsyyyyy baby, because my men out there will killllllll…Youuuu muuust acknowledge my wits: having my men attack innocents was ingen…Ugh…”

One of Batman’s sedative Batarangs found him in the butt and Joker passed out immediately and fell to the ground exactly as his men who had been hit by the same Batarangs. That way he’d get Joker as soon as he finished with the others.

Yet as he exited the alley to confront the thugs who had attacked a couple he saw with the corner of his eyes Joker disappearing. He growled realizing that Loki had interfered but he had to harry up.

Tony deactivated his armor as soon as Alfred opened the door for him. The butler frowned seeing the rushing movement of his young master who didn’t stop a second as his armor vanished.

Alfred followed him inside keeping his composure in complete contradiction to the man’s anger and upset.

“Where is he?” Tony demanded. “You know what he did?! He wore that damned suit and went out!” he knew that his voice wouldn’t reach the soundproof rooms upstairs but to be honest he didn’t give a fuck.

Alfred was watching him calm as ever and all over his face was apparent that he already knew. Tony was expecting that Alfred would share his anger learning what Bruce had done but there wasn’t any anger in the older man’s face.

“You did know?” he raised his eyebrows.

“I’m afraid I did, sir.”

Tony ruffled his wet hair.

“And you’re not mad at him? You didn’t try to stop him?!” his puzzlement was greater than his wrath.

Alfred pressed his lips.

“I’m afraid I did not, sir. I didn’t try to dissuade him because he needed to act like that. The consequences if he had stayed inside would have been worse than now he got out. You see, Master Anthony, there are times that Master Bruce is in dire need of an outlet and being bereft of that could hurt him more… Moreover I reckon that his intervention was beneficial for you too.”

“You were watching?”

“Through the cave’s system, I did, sir. I wouldn’t let Master Wayne out of my sight just in case.”

However Tony’s wrath didn’t subside.

“Where is he?! We have to talk!” and taking in Alfred’s reluctance “Never mind, flying here I saw that he was in his bedroom.”

He surged to the stairs and Alfred followed him catching up with him at the corridor.

“If I may, sir, since you scanned the Manor and found him, you must have realized that he is sleeping: he was exhausted.”

Tony yanked his head.

“Of course he was! The stubborn, strong headed dork! But I don’t care: he can lose some sleep since he could come out and…”

Alfred hushed him sensing that he was going to say something that it should not be heard so close to Dick’s bedroom.

“Pardon me, sir, but I think it is prudent to keep your voice low.”

“If he can do what he did, he can afford to wake up and speak with me.”

He turned and stormed at the master’s bedroom, Alfred follow him afraid that Master Anthony would wake up Master Bruce and quarrel with him.

But as soon as Tony reached the bed and the flames from the fireplace illuminated his friend’s calm, sleeping face the billionaire from Malibu stopped abruptly and closed his eyes touched.

Hero who was sleeping on Bruce’s belly opened his eyes and stared at him. Tony hushed him with his index finger and caressed his friend’s hair lowering to his cheek. The sight of Bruce sleeping calmed his own boiling insides. He looked Alfred and then left carefully the room; Alfred followed closing the door silently.

Tony stood.

“I can’t stay angry with him” he said ruffling his hair uncomfortable.

Alfred smiled.

“Nobody can, sir; especially in times like this.”

Tony nodded.

“I’m still seeing the same kitten boy I met at his father’s office…”

“I know, sir…I can certainly see your point.”

Tony shook his head regretful for his previous anger.

“Do you want me to prepare your bedroom, sir? I dare say that you are tired too.”

“Thank you, Al. But still I’m gonna tell that brat off first thing in the morning!”

Alfred grinned.

“Of course you will, sir.”

---

Bruce was seeing the large restrooms while the loud music and the laughter from the main hall of the building hurt his ears. People were so cheerful…He couldn’t understand that; okay, he could understand but it seemed so strange…

The door to the restrooms seemed so distant…so high above him…

Wait. Bruce realized that he was small and his insides clenched: he knew he was dreaming; he knew where he was and the danger that lurked but he couldn’t run away. He couldn’t stop what was happening…he couldn’t halt and not go inside the restrooms: he was supposed to clean up whenever a customer left.

He pushed the door with his shoulder but as soon as he was in someone grabbed him from the waist and lifted his body to sit him on the granite countertop of the sinks’ row. His breath was pressed in his lungs and his eyes widened: a man he didn’t know stood in front of him pressing his body on him.

The man was approximately at Falcone’s age but thin with a prominent chin and small, sneaky eyes that smirked gleefully.

“I didn’t know that Falcone had such a treasure in his store…Oh! A little angel…” he began fondling the boy’s torso undeterred by the filth on his clothes.

Bruce’s heartbeat got frantic; he knew what this meant.

“Please, sir” he mumbled “I don’t do this job…”

The man cackled.
“Don’t be afraid, sonny…You’ll like it…” his hands slipped inside his pants and groped his buttocks causing the boy’s gasp.

“Please, no…I can’t…Please…”

“Hush, angel…you’ll like it” he whispered and suddenly pushed his index finger inside Bruce who jerked upright with a sob. “Oooh, my cutie…” the man smiled knowing. “I see you’re not new to that…” he moved his finger deeper twitching it to make the boy convulse. “So you have already a master?”

Bruce’s eyes were wet as the man touched his lips hungrily to his cheek.

“Please…He’ll be angry…Let me go…”

But the man’s finger played more inside him and it hurt grazing the existent scratches and burnings from past frictions.

“He is possessive, huh?” he mumbled licking the boy’s cheek and thrusting another finger to the narrow channel making the boy squirm and sob. “I think with the proper cash, he’ll stop being that…I can be better than him, boy…I’ll make you moan from pleasure…I’ll give you candies…”

“Please, sir…Don’t” the man with one hand lowered the boy’s pants. “You must ask Mr. Falcone…”

The man cocked an eyebrow.

“So good ol’ Carmine is the lucky guy?” he chuckled. “He’s my friend, boy…” he withdrew his fingers and brought them to his nose sucking the smell with closed eyes. “Your scent is awesome, kid! I’ll fix everything with Carmine and then will do more…”

The man grabbed Bruce from the armpits and brought him down. He unlocked the door, winked to him and left.

He was mopping the floor near Falcone’s office after the songs and the music died and the cabaret was left quiet and dark; his butt still hurt from the stranger’s fingers but he had had worse than that and at least the man stopped there: Falcone definitely wouldn’t accept to give him to that man…

“C’mone, Carmine, I’m gonna pay you handsomely for the boy…One time I ask – you know how much I like small boys…and he’s like an angel.”

Falcone cackled.

“You’re a scum pedophile, Roth – I know you ‘collect’ fucks with boys but this isn’t for rent.”

Bruce’s heart was clenched: he was begging inside that his master wouldn’t be persuaded and give him to that man.

“You have him filthy and in rags…and he works in the toilets: I don’t think that he is so important that you won’t rent him to me for once. I’ll give you much.”

“Roth, we’re pals but forget this! The boy is not for rent!”

Bruce heard the man sighing.

“You’re so selfish, Carm. At least, gimme a compensation” he sniggered. “You know how much I like watching videos…be a littl’ generous and share somethin’ with your friend…”
Falcone’s laughter was amused but made Bruce’s spine froze.

“Roth, you ol’ scum! You’re such a perv!”

Bruce saw the man leaving Falcone’s office whistling a melody and his guts clenched.

“Ya’re fishin’ clients, slut?!”

The blow to his face was devastating and sent him crash to the opposite wall. He gasped but he didn’t dare to sob, just stayed there waiting; his Master never stopped with one punch…

“No, sir, I swear I didn’t…” he mumbled wiping with the back of his palm the blood from his lips.

“Fuckin’ liar! Ya shook yar ass to ‘im, huh?”

Falcone’s mass stood over him casting him in his shadow; the mobster was regarding his property and then suddenly he grabbed him from the ragged T-shirt and lifted him, grinding his teeth to Bruce’s face; Bruce wanted to be brave; he had promised that he would be brave and not cry but his heart was kicking in his bony chest and it hurt so much that he couldn’t breathe properly.

A second punch harder this time crashed on his right eye and sent him to the niche of the two walls; he cringed there gathering his legs to his chest to a quivering ball.

“Please, Master…I…I swear I did nothing…He just grabbed me” he hiccupped choked in his sobs.

A kick to his ribs was the only answer and he yelped like a wounded puppy causing a chuckle from Chill who stood some feet away watching amused.

“C’mere, ya faggot!” he grabbed him from the hair and Bruce closed his eyes feeling his legs dangling.

“Pleas…” a slap tossed him again to the floor.

Falcone paced for a few seconds and then stopped facing the boy’s cowering mass. Bruce’s guts twisted in nausea as the copper taste filled his mouth and the blood flawed from his throbbing nose. Another kick found his belly and he convulsed grunting.

The Gray Wolf clenched his waist with both hands.

“Strip!”

This order always came as a stronger punch than the physical ones. He didn’t want to but he knew that he couldn’t do anything else. He used his one working arm to support his trembling body; it was difficult to persuade his tired and scared members to support him but hearing Falcone’s impatient snort he closed his eyes, gritted his teeth and finally managed to stand staggering.

“Strip!” the mobster barked again.

Bruce swallowed hard and hurried to take off his clothes baring himself completely. His breath had become rasps that were disrupted by choked sobs; he was trembling harder than before because he knew his fate.

Falcone fisted his hair and dragged him to his desk: Bruce’s heart was shivering more than his weak body. The Gray Wolf pushed away the objects from the desk and tossed Bruce face first to the desk, his legs dangling over the floor.
“Open your legs!”

Bruce obeyed; the air was trapped in his lungs hurting him; tears ran from his eyes blending with the blood dripping to the desk. His legs wanted to close not open for the mobster but he clenched his jaw and kept them open wide.

“Spread them more an’ stick out yar asshole!” Falcone barked and Chill sniggered.

He did that though it was difficult as if his legs had their own will. Closed his eyes and bit his lips knowing that the time had come. He heard the familiar sounds of Falcone unfastening his belt, unzipping his fly and lowering his clothes. He felt the air being ripped by the man’s mass coming near, too near.

Bruce felt the man’s hard length already touching his buttocks; he clenched the only hand he could and let his cheek touch the desk though his wounded face hurt. The pain was excruciating as always as Falcone thrust his entire length at once.

Bruce yelled, his body jerking like a dying fish but Falcone’s heavy hand pushed his waist down and began thrusting in him harder and deeper causing his sobs and cries.

The pain became worse with every thrust and Bruce was panting, trying to tell his heart to not pound like this…but it was futile…Falcone’s length was hardly contained in his narrow channel and every motion ripped his insides burning him; nausea flooded him as the sound of Falcone’s flesh slapping his became louder – the man’s testicles blew his stretched buttocks worsening his torture.

Falcone slapped his buttocks and chuckled hearing his moan; “I love yar squirmin’…” he sniggered and continued hitting him laughing with his body’s desperate jerks to escape. “Ya like that, huh?”

Suddenly, Falcone’s hands clenched cruelly Bruce’s buttocks stretching them more to the point of tearing and thrust deeper than before roaring as hot liquid made Bruce’s wounded insides burn.

The boy’s body convulsed desperately but Falcone pressed his head on the desk pulling his member out.

Bruce was still breathing in rasps and his heart trembled; but at least it was over. He heard relieved his master wearing his clothes and closed his eyes swallowing the pain, waiting to be left alone.

But then he heard footsteps approaching him and knew it was Chill. He felt the thug’s hand fisting his hair and lifting him from the desk dragging him away. He was tossed on the bare, rectangular table on the other side of the room; face first; to his panic Chill grabbed his ankle and tied it with rope that fastened to the table’s leg.

One thought made his heart begin kicking again inside his ribs. That thought became certainty when Chill grabbed his other ankle and repeated what he did with the other binding his leg to the opposite table’s leg spreading him.

Falcone approached smirking and Bruce lifted his head to look at him through the water curtains covering his eyes; the blood from nostrils, eyebrow and lips was still slithering hot on his face. Chill was binding his crippled right arm and with every cruel move Bruce moaned.

“My sir…” he pressed his lips choking a cry from Chill’s cruel handling of his arm. “Please, not tonight…Please let me…only for tonight…”
But the mobster fisted his hair and yanked his head upwards; his gleeful eyes shone angrily and jeeringly to Bruce’s.

“The only reason ya exist is my entertainment” he jerked his head harder “ya know that?!”

Bruce wanted to nod but his master’s hand was unrelenting so he gathered the few air in his lungs, swallowed sobs and grunts and looked at him.

“Y…Yes, sir…”

Falcone let his head so abruptly that it fell hard on the wood but Bruce didn’t care. Chill was fastening his other arm spreading him so much that he felt his body ready to tear in half…and he knew that this was nothing.

Gotham’s Emperor returned smirking and showed him what he was holding; it was bigger and broader than every other they had used on him…it had the width of a Coca Cola’s glass bottle. Bruce’s heart stopped. He shook his head desperate.

“It’s too big, sir…please…I can’t…”

Falcone raised the thick, metal dildo and slapped him in his already bleeding nose sending his head crashing to the table.

“Ya became an expert now?!” he leaned above Bruce’s ear “I know ya like them big and thick, stretching yar asshole…”

Bruce’s body was shaking drenched in cold sweat; sobs were heaving his trapped chest burning his constricted throat.

“I beg you…please…”

“Open yar mouth!”

He did though his mouth trembled. The mobster pushed the dildo inside violently, stretching his cavity. The metal was thrust deeper choking him; his eyes bulged as he was choked.

Falcone drew out the dildo and punched him in the jaw. Bruce gargled on the wood, coughing and salivating.

“If it fits in yar mouth, it fits to yar hole too… Don’t ya dare clenchin’ yar asshole! I’m gonna skin ya alive, ya bastard!”

The metal was cold to his hot abused skin; his opening was stretched to its limits and waiting agape still beating and hurting from Falcone’s penetration.

Bruce felt Chill’s hand pressing his buttocks and then something enormous and cold hit his opening trying to invade. Bruce wished it got inside so that Falcone wouldn’t get mad at him but even after Falcone’s hard treatment his opening was too small for that object… Chill pressed harder his buttock to the table and pushed more the object cursing.

“It’s too small…” he said to his boss.

“Nah…The bastard clenches his asshole…If it doesn’t get in I’m gonna skin ya alive, sonovabitch!”

Bruce clenched his hand and closed his eyes as the metal wounded his flesh trying to expand the opening to fit; he bit his lip but then a hard movement that stretched his burnt from friction flesh made him scream and his extended body began trembling trying to escape the bounds and the pain.

A blow to his buttocks made him scream.

“Please…” he howled as the dildo managed to stretch the opening so much that the peak managed to fit – he wanted to beg again but his howlings swallowed his voice.

His body was drenched in sweat that was getting cold instantly; he felt his anal channel tearing as the metal slowly, torturously invaded. He was crying like a baby; moaning and begging; his outstretched body twitching in its bounds in vain just worsening the pain.

“Push it deeper!” Falcone cheered. “The littl’ slut likes that!” he said goggling at the boy’s bleeding opening.

Bruce heard Chill’s teeth rattling and then the metal impaled him with a swift, rapid motion aggravating his existent wounds and making new. His eyes shut…

Cold liquid washed his head and every pain returned worse than before. He was seeing everything under fog but he could feel Falcone’s enraged breath on his hot, sweaty face. The mobster grabbed his hair and brought his face to his mouth.

“Passin’ out is forbidden” he growled. “Ya know that but ya did it to ruin my fun!”

“No, sir…I didn’t do it on purpose…Please…”

“Ya’ll be punished!”

“No, I beg you…I didn’t want to…forgive me…Please forgive me!”

“There’s no forgiveness for a brat like ya! Ya understand only with punishment!”

He dropped his head on the table and ordered Chill to continue. He was thrusting the big object in and out of him deeper, stronger and faster…It was so big that his channel was unbearably stretched and every motion hurt like his entire spine was cracking and breaking. Bruce closed his eyes and clenched his fist crying and yelling, his throat burning; his body squirmed desperately causing the men’s laughter. He was exhausted and feigning seemed his only escape but he struggled to not pass out because his punishment would be worse.

Alfred was in the kitchen wearing his dark maroon night robe; he couldn’t sleep and decided to prepare a tea since he wasn’t going to lie down again. He wanted to be alert, in case his young master needed something: he knew that this day was devastating for the youth even if he hid it so perfectly.

The Englishman was scared for what was going on inside his young Master but it was relieved that at least Master Anthony had managed to calm down a bit.

Well, it seemed that he was wrong because he heard the familiar footsteps of Master Anthony entering the kitchen. Alfred turned. The billionaire from Malibu was dressed in his turquoise pajamas with Garfield winking face all over his torso.

“I am preparing tea, would you like some, Master Anthony?”

Tony raffled his messy hair with a grimace crossing his face.
“I prefer a cup of good ol’ espresso” he yawned and walked to the black granite countertop where a brand new espresso machine awaited. “It is a good thing that at least Bruce is sleeping.”

Alfred nodded but frowned hearing running footsteps heading to the kitchen.

Both men saw puzzled Dick in his pajamas surging into the kitchen. The boy was clearly shaken.

“Wayne is crying…” the boy said and Tony shook his head.

Alfred leaned to the boy.

“Master Bruce has as many reasons as you to cry, Master Richard…in his sleep, because during the day, in front of us he smiles to not make us sad.”

Dick closed his eyes and shook his head.

“But he is crying right now and…and begs and groans…as if he is in great pain” the boy’s eyes were almost wet and Tony frowned at that sudden change. “He writhes in his bed…I was walking to the corridor…to come downstairs and drink something when I heard and I opened the door” he explained in one breath. “He suffers…”

Alfred and Tony simultaneous hurried towards the stairs to reach Bruce’s bedroom but the Englishman halted the younger man.

“Master Anthony, could you do me the favor and contact Leslie to come here.”

Tony understood that the butler wanted to handle this himself at least at first. He nodded because Alfred had more experience with Bruce’s nightmares and Leslie should be informed.

Falcone approached him holding his thick, tight leather crop. They left the dildo stabbed in him keeping his opening spread to its limits.

Bruce looked at his master sobbing; his eyes were wet as his entire face.

“I beg you, sir…please, no…no, no…forgive me...”

“Boys like ya learn only with the crop.”

Bruce heard his footsteps going back and his heart beat so fast and hard that he thought it was going to jump out of his chest. The man stopped along with Bruce’s breath.

Falcone grabbed the edge of the dildo and pushed it inside causing Bruce’s cry. But the small body had hardly returned to the table when the sound of leather ripping the air made Bruce’s heart stop…and then the sound of leather lacerating tender flesh, the pain…the pain…that pain stabbing his cranium like a blade and piercing it throughout squashing the bones.

He howled with all the power that his exhausted lungs didn’t have. It was crazy but he squirmed in his bindings to get away only to cause the two men’s sniggers; finally he slumped down to the table sobbing and moaning whispering futile pleading.

The crop hissed angrily and crushed again to his buttocks stronger than before and Bruce cried.

“Please, stop, please, please, I beg you, I’ll do anything…” his body squirmed again only irritating his pains and the stretching of his anus. “Anything…please forgive me”
The same whistle, the same crushing sound, the same pain tearing apart his bones and burning every muscle.

“Please, I do anything…Please…”

“How many strokes did ya get?” Falcone asked strictly. “Let me see how watchful pupil ya’re.”

Bruce didn’t know and his heart began convulsing; it was hurting so much that he didn’t count. The blood in his mouth choked him.

“If ya give a wrong answer we’ll start all over.”

“No, please…”

“Don’t try to evade the answer! I said how many?!”

He gulped hard; they seemed so many…

“TTen…” he mumbled and Chill gave a loud laughter.

“Wrong!” Falcone cheered. “Ya’re not payin’ attention to yar lesson: we start again – ya’ll count aloud this time. Ya see how good I am?”

The crop howled again and landed splashing flesh and blood from his back this time.

“One…” Bruce moaned.

“Louder, ya bastard, or I’ll double the strokes!” the crop slashed again his flesh.

“Two!” Bruce cried before his voice was choked in moans.

“That was one, ya dork! Again!”

Every time the leather string stabbed his flesh Bruce counted gathering every drop of quivering stamina he was left…his body didn’t convulse anymore, resigned to its fate.

He was a quivering, cringing mass before Falcone’s feet; his punishment was over but his body was throbbed from pain. With the corners of his swollen eyes he saw Chill carrying a small disk that he put on his boss’ desk.

“Up!” the mobster demanded and Bruce hurried to use his healthy arm to obey but his legs couldn’t move although they had removed the dildo.

Falcone cupped his jaw and spat to his face. Then he turned to Chill who was staring at the still naked boy.

“Take him down and then take the disk to Roth.”

Chill stopped abruptly a few feet before Bruce’s cage; he forced him to his knees; Bruce couldn’t lift his head so the thug grabbed his hair and yanked cruelly his head.

“I didna carry ya her’ free of charge…Time for my reward.”

Bruce gulped a sob and the torturing loud thud of his heart began again; his anal channel was throbbing and each throb sent waves of excruciating pain to his entire body.
“But yar ass is a mess so…open yar mouth, faggot!”

Bruce obeyed though his lips were bruised and swollen and his jaw hurt like Hell.

Alfred opened hesitantly the door to the Master’s bedroom and clapped for the lights. The bed was empty and the wheelchair was in its place. Hero ran to him; the Englishman could see that the kitten was distraught and he caressed his head.

“It’s alright, Master Hero…I’m here now…”

He heard the shower. Master Bruce was in the bathroom. He won his hesitance and fear hurrying his steps; opened the door and walked inside the enormous space. He saw remnants of vomit in the toilet and flushed.

Master Bruce’s pajamas were discarded on the floor.

“Master Bruce?” he asked carefully not wanting to burst inside the hydromassage cabin.

However when the water kept running and Bruce didn’t answer Alfred forgot his discretion and opened the door determined to be composed and not disturbed whatever he’d see.

But his determination evaporated at once with what he saw…
Chapter 61

Desperate screams echoed to the entirety of the endless circular cave that opened to many new caves forming a dark labyrinth; yells filled with agony and pain that seemed to be coming from inside the rock formations. The enormous mineral columns that nature had made from stalagmites and stalactites seemed to emanate these eerie shrieks.

The circular cave was cast in dim yellow-red light that looked as if being radiated from the stone walls and the big lake at the center the water of which boiled emitting sulfur.

“Interesting…” Darkseid’s jeering voice towered the cries of pain as he marched through the cave to the lake.

Bagdana in his granite like body, dressed in leather was bent over the dark boiling waters and his eyes – two black stains – were completely immobile. He sensed his ally’s coming but he didn’t care. He was in pain and while physical pain wasn’t something new to a demon, this kind of pain was.

Pain which situated everywhere inside him; pain that was unbearable; pain that made him want to rip his own body to get the pain out. A demon wasn’t supposed to be in that kind of pain; a demon wasn’t made to suffer this kind of pain. But Bagdana was in the worst kind of this type of pain. And this wasn’t the first time in his endless life…

The first time was when he held in his arms Lilith’s dead body…The second when he sensed that Bruce had breathed his last breath. And the third, now having access to his human’s suffering: double suffering – the pain of a small child whose body was tortured mercilessly along with his pure soul and the pain of a youth who re-experienced all these through his nightmares… He had his fists clenched but this wasn’t something that could be intimidated by his wrath: it was irony…pain wasn’t afraid of anything.

Before his eyes replayed the night he first saw the ragged, skinny boy who was to rock his eternal life. A small boy wandering to the caves, at night time; a boy who wasn’t scared of the bats that swarmed the caves; the boy loved the flying rodents that everyone else hated.

It wasn’t difficult to see into the boy’s troubled mind – tortured souls were always easy to penetrate yet there was another reason for being instantly drawn to that boy; a reason that he figured long after, a reason that Ra’s Al Ghul already knew: Lilith’s blood.

He took the form of the boy’s father to play with his suffering and have fun with the momentary hopeful shine in his unique eyes. But most fun the demon had when the smart boy realized the fraud and his hopes, his happiness shred with the pieces stabbing his insides. Bagdana had laughed then: he enjoyed, he feasted on that boy’s pain: the bigger the pain the bigger the demon’s entertainment – the stupid demon didn’t suspect that this horrible pain was to become his as well…

Bagdana felt Darkseid’s presence next to him but insisted on ignoring him in hopes that he’d get the Hell out of his domain. But the alien god was arrogant and selfish; always wanting to get what he wanted.

“Your lair’s decoration is interesting” Darkseid cocked his eyebrows “plain but atmospheric – the sounds as well.”

Bagdana didn’t reply; his eyes were still fixed on the boiling water that slowly turned the golden color of the lava.
“I summoned you” Darkseid said frowned irritated from the demon’s indifference. “Why you ignored my call?”

Bagdana’s nostrils were fuming.

“What do you want?”

Darkseid stilled his red eyes on the demon’s face despite his unwillingness to look at him.

“My servants owe to answer my calls immediately!”

Bagdana didn’t reply but the silver peaks on his head filled with red dancing flames.

“You didn’t need my services” he retorted hissing “you just wanted to laugh at me.”

Darkseid snorted and a smirk carved his blue, square face.

“You do know me, demon…I see that you are…” he sniffed “heartbroken?” he asked snidely. “I couldn’t imagine that a demon would have a heart neither that he would be bent by the revelation of his pet’s true, filthy nature. That video was highly entertaining…”

Bagdana clenched his jaw.

“Leave…” he growled.

Darkseid’s teeth rattled and sparkles were emitted around.

“You’re too cheap to order Darkseid!” he yelled and for an instant his voice covered the miserable cries of pain. “Your demeanor is another proof that you’re the most pathetic, ridiculous demon!”

Bagdana turned his head to lock eyes with him: he’d like to show that arrogant fool who Bagdana truly was but it wasn’t the time. He needed the alien idiot. However his state at the moment prevented him from controlling entirely himself.

“Then I work for the proper god…” he spat calm cocking an eyebrow.

Darkseid raised his gigantic fist to hit him and the demon just stared at him undeterred, a faint smirk shadowing his features. The new god growled several times but eventually lowered his fist containing his wrath.

“It is the first and last time I spare your miserable existence.”

Bagdana made a deep bow but his eyes were red.

“Thank you for your generosity, my Lord” he replied humbly but Darkseid had the feeling he was jeered.

“I understand your carnal interest in Wayne but I do not see the reason you esteemed so much that Batman…He isn’t anywhere; he doesn’t do anything” he chuckled. “He is the worst of all these pathetic heroes in this waste of a planet.”

“He doesn’t act to be seen…he acts mostly in the shadows and he is deadly effective.”

Darkseid wasn’t persuaded.

“Follow me.”
“I beg your generosity to give me some hours…”

Darkeid stopped and turned his head to look at him.

“What?”

Bagdana gazed at the quivering stony arches of the cave.

“I have some souls to torture…” he hissed and the shrieks and sobs became more desperate.

Darkseid smirked.

“Inferno and Paradise in action?”

Bagdana’s eyes became two enflamed slits.

“What chose me during life is attributable to me.”

Darkseid snorted.

“All these for a pathetic pest…”

Bagdana saw with the corners of his eyes his ally vanishing knowing that despite Darkseid’s snubbing expressions the alien god was intrigued by Bruce and the ancient demon hated that.

Superman hovered over Gotham with his fists touching his hips; the naughty raven lock fell on his brow playfully. The strong wind waved his red cape.

His acute sight could see through buildings and his hearing could overcome every wall. Everyone knew that this city was the capital of crime and corruption so Superman was more useful here than anywhere else. Yet till now he hesitated to come here: he was a Kryptonian but at the same time he was a journalist that knew very well how the world worked so he was aware that Superman’s action wasn’t enough to clean that hellhole.

Till now he had chosen to act in places where his actions would manage something even if he felt bad for leaving the citizens of that city in their fate. On the other hand he had heard countless times that Gothamites weren’t much better than the crime lords who ruled the city.

He didn’t have any faith in Gotham’s people or the city’s salvation… and that made him disappointed because this city was not only his failure but also the proof of his cowardice… So it was easy to turn his gaze elsewhere and forget this city.

Till now… Something inside was stinging him to fly there; a clenching in his guts; agony like someone was in dire need of him. Someone was dying or too close to that.

He turned his head to every directions hearing carefully… Despite the usual ruckus of the big city, one sound topped everything else; a sound that seemed coming from inside him rather than outside. A heartbeat: a weak, tired, scared heartbeat – a heartbeat of a teen…

His super sight turned there as if drawn by a powerful magnet: one of the Gotham Emperor’s buildings, his first and most beloved cabaret – Dolcetto. The heartbeat was coming from the kitchen; he focused there and he saw him.

A boy no older than 14 years but he definitely looked younger. He was dressed in rags, rags stained with filth and…Superman’s heart clenched as much as the boy’s…blood, dried and fresh. The boy was skinny and his right arm was immobile and in pain; he was on his knees mopping the floor but Superman could see him carefully and shyly lifting his beautiful eyes to glance at the table over him.

There was a TV set open. The footage showed Superman rescuing a woman from a burning building. The boy forgot his fear and stared at the small screen, his eyes full with hope and despair at the same time.

“Help me…” the boy whispered and a sob sadder than anything other Superman had heard left his lungs.

And suddenly the same boy was tied spread eagled to a table, completely naked, his face touching the hard surface in hopelessness; completely resigned to his fate, to the merciless abuse of the adults who held him captive.

Superman was hearing the boy’s desperate howls of pain, his sobs, his pleading for mercy. A fire inside the hero urged him to smash the wall and take the boy away, to the safety of his arms…but something held him in his place.

The boy lifted his bruised face, his tired, blood shot eyes and it was as if those unique, mesmerizing eyes pierced him to the core. His lucky Kryptonites…

“Save me…” the boy whispered in a weak voice that emanated his awareness that he wouldn’t be saved.

Superman pressed his lips and stormed…

Two tender yet strong arms hugged his torso and a flexible, naked body cuddled to him. He felt two breasts slithering up his chest, dominating, and he opened his eyes only to meet with two glazing dark blue eyes in the darkness of the bedroom.

“You’re dreaming about him?” she asked concerned but demand was evident as the flashes from the after midnight traffic slipped through the drapes.

Clark wrapped his arms around her naked back and caressed the hot flesh.

“That video…”

She shook her head and smiled.

“You’re too strong yet too soft hearted…Or Wayne’s spells on you still hold…”

Superman frowned and his mind went to the effect that Bruce’s body had on him. Diana couldn’t know about that; she must have used that word as a figure of speech.

“Or you just pity him…after all he is a pitiful being” her lips curled in disgust. “I’m glad your glory isn’t connected with his miserable existence.”

Her lips touched Superman’s lips and electric current surged through his body making him forget all the misery of the world; all the misery that thinking about Bruce brought to him. Her groin rubbed sensually to his aroused length and Superman just wanted to be happy; to enjoy his life, to not be bothered by other people’s misery and suffering. He just wanted to delve into his lover’s body without remorse or fear that he might cause more pain.

Diana’s magic fingers cupped his face and her sparkling eyes pierced his.
“You know that I love you, Kal El. From the first time I lay eyes on you I knew that you were my one and only mate; the one I want to make happy and give him what he deserves. When I learnt about you and Wayne, my heart clenched because I was sure that this man would cause you only pain and you, after all the good you made for these people, deserve only the best.”

She captured his lips in a passionate kiss that numbed Superman to the core and Clark knew that this was true love, true pathos and not mercy.

It was still dark and the cold was bone crashing; his entire body was howling in pain but he gathered his quivering strength and walked, just walked, hoping against hope that nobody was going to see him. After all, it was too early and everyone was still asleep. He needed to go there.

He stood in front of the ready to collapse small wooden cabinet that served as his shower. He had discarded his ragged, filthy clothes around and stepped inside hoping that Signora Bruna would stay asleep till he finished. He hoped that he’d have the time to mop the blood drops he had left on his way here.

His fingers shook as he twisted the tap for the water to start washing his quivering from the cold body. He was ready for the shock of the icy water since they didn’t allow him warm water. However his major fear was that they will hear the water running and bust him…

The water crashed on him like bricks making his muscles cramp and his teeth rattle yet he didn’t care; he only wanted to get cleaned.

“Nothing of what those people did to you left a stain on you, Bruce! They were more stained than you!”

However Bruce could see the stains all over his body; big stains with all kinds of shapes and others that were drops from splashing liquid. Red-brown stains that were dried blood blended with flesh specks that stuck there, and sick yellow stamps that were the remnants of…He felt again the rush of hot liquid inside his anus…It had dripped everywhere…marking him as Falcone’s toy, a useless vessel for his body liquids.

He shivered because the water was so cold and because it irritated his injuries; yet it was the persistent stains that mattered to him so he rubbed with all his despair and disgust wishing that his right arm was operative to help.

He twisted more the tap increasing the quantity of the water in hopes that the increased pressure would help to rub off the dirt. But the water was of no help…So he rubbed; he rubbed desperately to remove the stains and chase away the stink, the stench.

He stank of Falcone…of the copper smell of blood…of his own sour sweat…of his own gross body…of dried semen… And that stench twisted his stomach so much that he felt the need to throw up again even if he had done so before…

In his frenzy to scrub his skin clean, his legs lost their balance and he landed to the filthy cement…His heart was convulsing with hopelessness: the stains didn’t vanish…

He saw again people goggling, their eyes wide watching Falcone using him; watching his outstretched opening being invaded…and then turning their eyes and goggle at him…smelling the stench of semen on him; the stench of the people who violated him; his own stench.

For an instance he brought his forearm to cover his eyes to stop seeing the disgusted Gothamites goggling at him but then he remembered what he had come to do and began scratching his skin with more persistence, gritting his teeth to the point of sobbing.

He couldn’t stand neither he wanted to stand…some soap would have helped…a bath foam even more but he had years to use bath foam. The bath foam his mom used to wash him with: the perfume of hibiscus and orange hit for a second his nostrils and he saw again his mom’s smile reassuring, soothing. But then the foul smells from his body attacked him again and he surrendered…resigned…stopped rubbing accepting that he couldn’t get rid of the stench.

He used his arm to gather his non responsive legs to his chest and called his mom to console him singing that beautiful lullaby…

Jim Gordon and Robert Hatchet were still at the Commissionaire’s office; the first standing thoughtful with his hands clenching his waist and the later pacing nervously. They had just finished Isaac’s interrogation.

“He swears that he doesn’t know who sent the parcel with the video…”

Jim shook his head.

“If he knew he’d have betrayed him to save himself; he is too scared after Stark’s attack.”

Robert took the transparent case containing the disk.

“Only his fingertips” and then took the other case with the parcel that contained the disk they had found in Isaac’s apartment. “Of course no sender’s address and Isaac’s address is typed. Our man is very clever.”

Jim shook his head and lifted his eyebrows.

“So we end up in this: who could have access to that video?”

Robert nodded.

“Someone working for Falcone or someone associate. Harvey told me that he spoke to his father and he knows some mobsters for which nobody except Falcone and Chill knew the exact nature of their businesses.”

“You took the names?”

“Yes.”

Jim pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Still, why would some former associate of Falcone want to publish that video risking being arrested?”

“Maybe someone who hates Wayne learnt about that video and managed to acquire it.”

Jim nodded.

“And he must hate him too much to do something like this” Jim tapped nervously his fingers on the desk. “We must watch the video” he told the DA who was startled.
“What?”

“Maybe we can notice some detail that will help.”

Robert rubbed his face; it was evident that his abhorrence in the prospect of watching that content was as strong as Jim’s.

“What do you think you can find in that shit?” he said grimly.

Jim yanked his head pissed; his eyes widened.

“Anything!” he yelled jerking his hands. “Anything that could spare Wayne from the process of answering our questions!”

Robert pressed his lips and sighed.

“You know that we can’t spare him from the ordeal: it is the standard procedure. Wayne must answer some questions.”

Jim cursed.

“Yes, I know but if we find something, the procedure will be fast and it won’t have to be too persistent. Don’t you prefer to endure this appalling video than torment Wayne?”

Jim knew that having to answer questions about something like this was like living it again in front of strangers and Wayne had already experienced that with every stranger in the world goggling at the spectacle. His conscience revolted in the thought.

Robert bit his lip and nodded determined.

“I do. And it is my job, after all” he spat and sat in the chair.

Jim walked to the door and popped his head outside.

“Montoya, Bullock!” eight eyes were better than four.

The water was running but the system’s quality was such that the sound was soft, so soft that a low murmured melody managed to be heard.

Alfred’s eyes widened and froze on the curled body in the niche the two walls of the cabin made. Master Bruce in his confusion used his mind’s power to make his legs move till the cabin but then the same confusion made him lose control falling on the cabin’s floor.

The Englishman’s eyes were glued on the youth’s convulsing body: his young master had his legs gathered to his chest and was rocking slowly back and forth; his blank, sparkling eyes were turned to the floor not seeing anything…or better seeing somewhere else.

The young man was murmuring; singing in a low voice that was cracked every now and then by sobs; he sang the melody that made butler’s heart break: Bruce was singing his favorite lullaby, the one his mother used to sing to her only child. It was the same song Alfred found him mumbling that day he went secretly to Dolcetto. It was easy for the Englishman to figure that the poor boy all these years sang this song to console himself whenever his suffering was unbearable – maybe bringing back his mother’s voice to blend with his own.
In spite his paralyzing sorrow, Alfred registered the deep fresh scratches running Bruce’s naked back and by the blood on Master Bruce’s left hand fingernails, Bruce had done them just now. And then another awful realization came like thunder to shake his numb with sorrow and fear mind: his young Master’s back was too red as his entire body…irritated but not just from the scratches.

Suddenly, he dawned to him that the cabin was filled with steam, too hot steam…His eyes bulged more seeing the temperature of the water.

“Dear Lord!”

The temperature was much higher than what a human body could tolerate and Alfred bet that Bruce’s body had burnings where the butler couldn’t see. His hand flew instinctively to the control screen turning off the water yet Master Bruce didn’t seem to realize and his sad song continued having greater impact on Alfred’s soul now that it wasn’t disrupt by the water’s falling.

He rushed outside, grabbed the bath robe from the stand and squatted next to his young Master wrapping carefully the wounded and superficially burned skin. The feeling of something touching his oversensitive skin drew Bruce out of his secluded world; he turned his eyes confused and Alfred relieved saw recognition.

“Alfred?”

The voice was so low, so cracked, so filled with complain that Alfred’s eyes watered.

“Yes, Master Bruce, I’m here now…” he said trying to hide his distress and be soothing.

“I need the water…”

Alfred gulped.

“It was too hot, Master Bruce and was hurting you.”

Bruce’s eyes were sparkling stabbing Alfred’s.

“I’m not Master…” he whispered “I’m just Bruce…” his voice was too hoarse. “And I need the water…”

Alfred made a pathetic attempt at smiling.

“You made those scratches, Master Bruce?”

Bruce closed his eyes tired.

“Signora Bruna brings me here for shower…and the water is always cold…it was too cold and I need to scrub off the filth… too cold…but it’s nothing…after all the lashes hurt more…”

The youth’s body was quivering and though it wasn’t the only reason certainly his young Master was cold because his teeth rattled. Also, Alfred noticed Bruce’s right arm placed over his belly, completely immobile.

The Englishman felt his heart beating fast as the boy’s he had wrapped in his hug; he felt sobs besieging his filled with thorns throat but he knew he should be strong so he pressed his lips.

“You’re clean now, Master Bruce and it’s time for us to leave…”

But the youth shook his head.
“No, I need to… more…the stains are too deep…they don’t leave…” he moved his left hand and began rubbing his skin grounding his teeth.

Alfred took gently his hand to stop him from injuring more his skin.

“No, Master Bruce…it’s alright…let us wear the bath robe now…” he guided the arm to the sleeve and Bruce shyly slid it to the end.

It was more difficult with the other arm and Alfred felt helpless: Bruce’s right arm was like a log and as soon as he touched it Bruce cried in pain.

“Forgive me, Master Bruce.”

The youth gulped.

“It’s my fault, Alfred…” he mumbled and with his left arm helped his immobile arm wear the other sleeve despite the fact his grimaces showed how much that hurt.

Bruce’s eyes fell on the drenched floor.

“I’m sorry” he said and when Alfred looked at him questioning what he couldn’t utter “for the blood…” there wasn’t any blood on the floor (the blood from the scratches had stayed on the skin) but Alfred swallowed his panic and didn’t mention it. “I…I’ll mop it right away before Signora Bruna sees!”

“There’s no need for that, Master Bruce” he reassured him with a faint smile “I’ll take care of everything…Now, can you do me the favor and lean on me? Please, Master Bruce, do not try to support your body on your legs; can you do that for me? Just… lean on me, sir, please.”

Bruce gave a shy nod and wrapped his arm around Alfred’s neck and the Englishman put his arm around the youth’s torso rising carefully. Bruce did as he was told and leaned on Alfred for support; the kind man fixed Bruce’s bath robe to give him the decency he deserved and moved out of the hydromassage cabin.

“I’m sorry for everything, Alfred” Bruce said with the steadiness of the determined youth of the previous day and Alfred grinned to him.

“You did nothing to apologize for, sir” he answered reassuringly.

Bruce’s arm around his neck was put exactly the way a little child would have done with an adult he’d consider safe and Alfred felt his young Master’s head resting exhausted in his chest. His face was cold and Alfred felt Bruce’s entire body shivering. Hypothermia and pain: Alfred prayed that Leslie would come soon. But what worried him more was his young Master’s quick breathing.

“Alfred…” his voice had lost the momentary steadiness.

“Yes, Master Bruce?” he didn’t haste his movements because he didn’t want to upset more the young man.

Bruce’s face was hidden in Alfred’s chest and the butler wanted to caress his dripping hair but he needed both hands to support him right.

“Promise me that this time you won’t leave me here…Promise me that you’ll get me with you…” there was complain and a small sob in his voice. “I can’t take it anymore…please…”
Alfred’s heart bled remembering that time he had gone to Dolcetto and found the little boy mopping the floor on his knees bleeding from his anus. Those child eyes when he was forced to leave and let the boy in Falcone’s clutches still haunted Alfred’s nightmares. Eyes filled with pleading and despair; eyes that became resigned realizing that the only adult who could help abandoned him.

Bruce had lifted his head and was looking at him with the same eyes as 15 years before; Alfred couldn’t stop the flow of liquid from his eyes so he stopped walking.

“I swear, Master Bruce: this time I’ll take you with me…”

Bruce wrapped his arm tighter to the man’s neck and let his head nestle with trust in his chest. Alfred closed his eyes swallowing a sob for Bruce’s pain.

“I’m sorry for causing you pain, Alfred” Bruce said in his steady voice subduing his panting breaths for a moment.

Alfred was ready to reassure him that he was alright but the youth jerked forward and the butler hardly restrained him from falling.

“I have to…”

Alfred understood and helped his young master knee before the toilet to throw up. Bruce’s body jerked violently and Alfred hugged him from behind to smoothen the effect; but still the motion was too strong and Bruce bent over the toilet throwing up the contents of his stomach and after a couple of wrenches just transparent fluids. Alfred knew that the pain in Bruce’s diaphragm was horrible and with clenched jaw was caressing the youth’s hair throughout the ordeal.

When the jerks stopped Bruce’s exhausted body made to collapse on the cold floor but Alfred held him gentle but determined. The Englishman used his sleeve to wipe the youth’s mouth and caressed his cold cheeks.

But then his Master began panting, breathing too fast and too swallow that Alfred felt his own breath choking him. He cupped Bruce’s face with both hands and made their eyes lock.

“Master Bruce, please, I want you to breath slow and deep; do you understand what I’m saying?” the young man nodded and tried to slow down his breaths failing.

“I can’t” he whispered through his panting.

“Look at me. Master Bruce: you know how to breathe right; follow me, sir” he inhaled deeply, held the air and then exhaled slowly.

Yet Bruce couldn’t master something in which he was expert.

“You’ll make it, Master Bruce: do not give up the effort.”

And then a cute meow caught Alfred’s and Bruce’s attention. The butler turned behind him and saw the black and white fur ball running on the glistening floor, a paw slipping every now and then. But Hero reached them and rubbed his head to the human’s hand urging him to pet him. Alfred smiled.

“Hero…” he mumbled grateful seeing his young Master petting the animal causing the kitten’s purring that made Bruce somehow relaxing in Alfred’s arms. “Now, Master Bruce, breathe in the rhythm of Master Hero’s purring.”

Bruce did as he was said and after some efforts, his breath reached almost normality. Alfred caressed the young man’s wet hair.

“It is over now, Master Bruce. Do you want us to stand?”

Bruce nodded: wet stray locks had fallen to his eyes and made his sight even more difficult but he could see his kitten’s bright eyes looking at him with love. Hero was there and Alfred was there and wouldn’t abandon him.

The Englishman clenched his jaw to lift himself and his exhausted master however hurried steps entered the bathroom stopping him.

“Leslie was already on her way here: she suspected that something like this would happen and…” Alfred heard the gasp and after the initial shock Tony ran to them. “Let him to me…” he whispered in a hoarse, cracked voice.

Alfred was hesitant because he was afraid that Bruce would panic if he felt other hands on him.

Indeed, Bruce is his hypervigilant state sensed the new presence in the space and jerked in Alfred’s arms ready to flee. But the Englishman caressed his locks calming.

“Master Bruce, please, calm down…I’m Alfred, remember? I won’t let anyone hurt you” he bit his bottom lip because that was a blatant lie: he had let many people hurt the defenseless child. “It is Master Anthony he came to help us…”

Bruce nodded closing his eyes and Tony’s insides clenched painfully seeing his friend in such suffering, some scratches visible on his friend’s shivering torso.

“Is it alright if he touches you?” Alfred asked carefully and Bruce nodded.

The butler raised his eyes to Tony who was watching avidly and when Alfred gave him a nod he leaned and carefully put one hand around Bruce’s back and one under his knees. Tony wasn’t the most empathetic man on the world but now seeing Bruce on his knees, quivering with his head bowed having just thrown his guts out; he knew that his movements should be very gentle and extra careful. So he brought his face to Bruce’s eye field; the younger man was staring at Hero who enjoyed his rather mechanic petting.

“Little guy…it’s me, Tony…”

Bruce hearing that voice felt new courage filling him. He raised his eyes and Tony smiled reassuringly though his eyes watered because Bruce’s eyes were now exactly as he remembered them from their childhood.

“I’m going to lift you up now, okay?”

Bruce nodded and Tony having already activated Ironman’s boots lifted him in bridal style and Alfred who stood up took Bruce’s right arm that hung dead and placed it carefully over the youth’s belly.

“Carefully, Master Anthony: his skin is injured and he has some minor burnings…” Tony licked his lips and inhaled deeply.

Bruce knew that he was safe now and exhaustion invaded every cell of his body breaking every resistance his body sustained till now. He wrapped his left arm around Tony’s neck and let his head nestle to his shoulder closing his eyes.
Tony did the same, his insides screaming for his friend’s suffering. However at the same time he realized how cold his friend was.

“He is frozen…” he whispered to Alfred.

The butler had stormed to the granite cabinet on the wall and rummaged the first aids’ stuff.

“We’ll fix that, sir…”

Tony began walking to the bedroom minding his steps to not upset the trembling man in his arms.

“I knew you’d come, Tony…” Bruce mumbled to his neck and Tony pressed his lips because that wasn’t true and stabbed him cruelly.

“I’m late, littl’ guy…” he answered in a raspy voice. “Too late…” his touched eyes met with Bruce’s puzzled ones.

“No” he protested “you did come: the bats were telling me you will…” the younger man closed his eyes and Tony was happy that the comment about the bats was told while still inside the bathroom because Dick stood at the bedroom’s doorstep watching expressionless.

Dick’s eyes were narrowed but not from anger…he was numb, speechless in front of so much suffering.

“Master Anthony, place him on the chair to sweep the water” Alfred said coming out of the bathroom with a big, fluffy towel under his armpit and some medical stuff in his hands.

As Tony put Bruce gently on the wheelchair the bathrobe’s sleeve slithered and Dick saw the man’s torso. He frowned: Jason was right – Wayne’s body was staggering. The body of an athlete. And there were scars the nastier one that throughout his stomach; a scar definitely made with knife.

Alfred was sweeping Bruce’s wet hair with the towel and then he continued with his young master’s body. Bruce was silent watching him; Hero who had followed them from the bathroom stood at his human’s feet and stared at him. Bruce suddenly registered again the kitten’s presence and smiled to him shyly petting him with his trembling hand.

“Hero…”

Alfred’s ministrations were extra careful due to the scratches and the superficial burnings all over Bruce’s body but still he sensed the young body cringing in every touch. Tony who had squatted and watched his friend noticed too.

“Master Bruce, where does it hurt?”

Bruce rubbed his eye with his left hand.

“I know it’s not real…” he retorted in a steady, undeterred voice. “I’m sorry I upset all of you…” he shook his head. “I know it’s not real but it hurts… everywhere…” he inhaled grimacing.

Tony met Alfred’s eyes sharing their agony.

“Leslie is coming, Master Bruce; she’ll take care of everything… Master Anthony, can you take Master Bruce to the bed?”

“Of course…”
But Bruce shook his head.

“I don’t wanna sleep” he said stubbornly.

“There’s no need to sleep, sir” Alfred said softly and Tony lifted him carefully to lay him even gentler to the mattress.

Alfred chose to not dress yet his young Master because he wanted to tend to his injuries first.

Alfred hurried to his side to take care of his injuries; at the same moment, Hero climbed to the bed and curled at Bruce’s side leaking his immobile hand.

But then the doorbell fell like a thunder in the silence of the room and Alfred raised his head toward the bedroom’s door. He registered Dick’s presence there and the boy felt uncomfortable like he’d been intruding something that he had no right.

“I…I’ll open…” the boy mumbled hastily and ran downstairs.

Leslie reached the bedroom faster than Dick and she rushed to the bed placing her tool case on the nightstand. She sat at Bruce’s side and cupped his cheek.

“How are you, dear?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I’m sorry for all the trouble…I…I…it was just a dream…a nightmare…and I shouldn’t…”

“Hush now, Bruce” Leslie said smiling tenderly, as she was already checking his heartbeat registering at the same time that his temperature was too low.

She took of her briefcase the stethoscope and examined his chest. Her stare was estimating the burnings and the scratches on his skin.

“What happened?” she asked Alfred and Tony.

“I found Master Bruce in the hydromassage cabin; the water was too hot.”

“It felt so cold” Bruce said gulping realizing that he must have been in a hallucination.

"Jarvis checked his body for any injury to his bones” Tony added. "We were lucky" his voice was deep.

Leslie didn’t need to ask about the scratches: she was sure that Bruce rubbed his skin trying to clean himself. She washed the scratches using the water Alfred brought and disinfected them bandaging the deepest. Then she cleaned the burnings and applied ointment that was instantly absorbed by the skin.

“You’re frozen” she said “but we’ll take care of that.”

In the meantime Alfred took from the drawer new underwear and pajamas and began helping Bruce to put them on. Leslie frowned seeing that the youth wasn’t using at all his right arm. She felt Tony’s persistent stare on her and met his eyes.

“It’ll pass” she answered calm his unsaid question and prepared a syringe.

She cleaned with alcohol Bruce’s forearm but as she brought the syringe near the skin, Bruce looked at her frowned if not scared.

“It’s for your hypothermia, Bruce” she said reassuringly and when he nodded she made the injection.

When the doorbell rang again everyone was startled. They didn’t expect anyone else but there were a handful of people that could enter the grounds without the need of someone ordering the gates to open.

Dick went again returning with Selina and Steve. Selina ran to Bruce’s side immediately and Bruce turned his head to her their eyes locking.

“Sweetie…” her voice cracked stopping her from saying anything else and she cupped Bruce’s face kissing his cold.

Bruce pressed his lips as Selina caressed his face taking in with agony his death paleness.

“You shouldn’t have returned, Sel…It’s nothing…I just…I had a nightmare and…it wasn’t something serious…” he sighed “I messed things up…I panicked everyone.”

Selina hushed him caressing his hair.

“You’re ashen, sweetie and Leslie is here so I doubt it was nothing… and you didn’t mess anything up: you didn’t do anything wrong” Hero rubbed his head to her hand and she petted him.

Steve approached Tony who stood at some distance from the bed, grim with his arms crossed.

“We left New York as soon as I told Selina about the video – I couldn’t hide it from her.”

Tony pressed his lips and nodded.

“How is Bruce?” Captain America asked in a whisper.

Tony huffed and didn’t answer; Steve shook his head with sympathy.

Leslie and Alfred were relieved that Selina was there; her presence seemed to bring Bruce out of his hallucination and establish a solid connection with the real world. Alfred went to the bathroom and returned with mouthwash and a porcelain vessel.

“Master Bruce, would you like to wash your mouth?”

Bruce looked shyly at his butler.

“I can go to the bathroom, Alfred; there’s no need to…” he gestured to the things he held.

The Englishman smiled although the fact Bruce still didn’t move his right arm troubled him and Leslie.

“No worry, Master Bruce; I have everything you need here.”

Bruce washed his mouth spitting to the vessel though he felt bad doing this.

“What happened, Bruce?” Leslie asked carefully.

“I had a nightmare…a flashback with…you know…what happened…and I woke up but it looked like I wasn’t in the Manor but back there…I…I’m sorry…I should have known and…I caused you so much turmoil” his eyes hugged his loved ones and stopped on Dick who stood at the door step.
Their eyes stayed locked only for a second before Dick turned his head away.

“Don’t think about that, Bruce” Leslie told caressing his hair, bringing the stray locks back. “Are you in pain? The truth” she arched her eyebrows mock strictly.

Bruce blinked.

“No.”

Alfred cleared his throat and Leslie raised her eyebrow more.

“I know it’s not real…”

“But…” Selina prompted.

“I feel pain…everywhere…”

Leslie opened a small vial and dripped a few drops of liquid in the glass of water Alfred had brought. She moved it to Bruce’s lips but he looked at her suspicious.

“Some sedative: it will stop the pain and help you sleep, dear.”

Bruce met Selina’s eyes and she nodded but her friend shook his head with conviction.

“No…I don’t wanna sleep!” his eyes shone determined and his voice was steady but it was clear to everyone that he was afraid of re-experiencing the same.

Bruce realized and pressed his lips.

“I’ll do some work…”

Tony hearing that moved forward.

“You’re in no position to do anything other than rest” his voice was altered, raspier from the night’s strong emotions. “Do not stretch yourself more, littl’ guy…And I’ll call Collins to ask for the hearing to be postponed.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, the hearing will take place normally” Tony frowned and Dick did the same: Wayne’s face was death pale and his arm still placed on his bale like a log, surely he wouldn’t want to face the hearing like this.

The boy just couldn’t understand the man’s stubbornness.

Tony wanted to retort, to force Bruce to see his own good but Alfred looked at him in a way that told him to forget it.

“Okay, little guy, but this makes some hours of good, restful sleep even more necessary.”

“Exactly” Leslie agreed.

But Bruce looked at his hands and shook his head.

“No…I don’t need any sleep” his voice lost its steadiness.

Selina noticed the change of his voice and her insides twisted.
“But I do, Bruce” she said quietly and widened her eyes when he looked at her. “I’m tired so if you want it, can I sleep here with you?”

Leslie smiled realizing her intention: Selina hoped that her presence would help Bruce relax and sleep. But Bruce realized too.

“Sel, you don’t have to…I’m fine now.”

Selina crooked her mouth.

“But I’m not, sweetie. I need to sleep here to have some of your strength and bravery infused to me” she pushed the shoes off her feet, discarded her jacket carelessly to the floor and lied on his side, Hero settling between them. “You won’t deny your friend the favor?” she looked at Steve and he smiled nodding.

Bruce closed his eyes and shook his head.

“I’ll drink that sedative” he told Leslie knowing that this would calm at last his loved ones after what he made them suffer; he sipped the water with the sedative.

Leslie put on Bruce's index finger a small device that would keep her informed about the young man's vitals and then stood tucking both of them with the blankets smiling touched.

“I think it is time we went to sleep, as well” Alfred said giving the signal for them to leave the room.

Dick left first running to his room not wanting his presence to be noticed again and to avoid any exchange with Wayne’s friends.

As Steve was ready to leave the room cast a tender look to Selina and Bruce that reclined face to face with the kitten curled between them purring happy.

“Don’t tell me you’re jealous?” Tony asked him having come to his side turning his head to see what his comrade did.

Steve shook his head.

“Not at all… I was just thinking…How wrong people that call us superheroes are.”

Tony patted his back and stepped to the corridor casting a last tender glance at the bed.

“Do you have any hint about who did that to Bruce?” Steve asked in a low voice to not be heard by Bruce.

Tony snorted.

“I was ready to kill the fucking hacker who published that video…Batman stopped me” he shook his head remembering his stupid previous anger at Bruce. “Of course that stupid nerd just worked for another who had access to the video and hated Bruce.”

Steve smirked shaking his head.

“I think you have already someone in mind…”

Tony smirked and his eyes flashed.

“I do, my friend.”
Steve lifted a shoulder.

“Then what are we waiting for? Let’s get the bastard!”

The last to leave the room were Alfred and Leslie.

“I’ll be sleeping in the guestroom” Leslie said to the youths “just call me for whatever you need” Selina nodded and Hero meowed causing Bruce’s weak smile.

“Sleep well, Miss Kyle, Master Bruce” Alfred said before clapping once to turn off the lights leaving only the gentle light of the flames in the fireplace. He wanted to stay there wake at the bedside yet he knew that this would only make Master Bruce nervous.

“You’re too good for me, Sel” Bruce whispered when the door closed. “I constantly ruin your life…”

“Nonsense! You never did that.”

“You could have a home, a family and you tossed away all these to stay with me.”

Selina licked her lips.

“You’re the only family I ever wanted.”

Bruce lowered his head.

“Because of me you witnessed so many horrors…” they both understood that he meant the times Selina saw Chill rape him.

She caressed his hair.

“Don’t think about that, sweetie: you gave me more than I ever hoped.”

Bruce sighed.

“Everybody saw, Sel…everybody knows what should have stayed inside me…”

“Bruce…” she whispered. “Everyone now appreciates more the brave man you are.”

He shook his head and Hero licked his cheek.

“I feel so much shame…” he narrowed his eyes.

Selina shook her head.

“No, no, Bruce! There’s nothing you should be ashamed of! You survived through all these Hell; you defeated them! You should be proud of yourself as all of us!”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Clark was right to leave…”

Selina inhaled.

“You said that this was due to some control over him…He wouldn’t have done it otherwise and he’d be very sorry when the control is over…”
“But still it was the best for him to be detached from me…from all the filth, the disgust, the humiliation...” his eyes went blank for a few moments “I don’t want to look at anyone ever again unless the cowl is on my face and the lenses are my eyes… I should have killed off Bruce Wayne...” his friend bit her lip. “It would have been better if Batman only existed.”

Selina clenched her lip.

“No! Bruce Wayne inspires people…Bruce Wayne has made so many people happy: Mr. Petrou and Harvey; Billy and the other kids in the Haven; Falcone’s working girls; Jason’s mother without you would have been still struggling with addictions, selling drugs and ending up in jail leaving Jason completely exposed to the underworld.”

“Batman, Tony and Lucius could have taken care of these better than me.”

Selina now was crying.

“You want to kill my only friend?”

Bruce rubbed her back soothingly.

“Batman is your friend and he is strong and brave and nobody will ever look at him with pity.”

She shook her head.

“My Bruce is the strongest and bravest man in the whole fucking planet!” she growled and Hero caressed her with his paw.

“No, Sel: he is not” he pressed his lips. “I thought many times to kill myself back then...when the pain, the shame and the hunger were too much...It wasn’t difficult: I planned it every time. Stealing a knife from the kitchen drawers: no problem there...every day I was cleaning there...and then when alone in my cage, cutting my wrists, lying on the ground waiting...”

Selina’s cheeks were wet and sobs heaved her chest.

“Everything would end there: no more pain, no more humiliation, no more curses...I’d see my parents again – I’d be peaceful or at least I would not exist...I’d be nothing...” he gulped and met his friend’s eyes. “But then...every time...when I was ready to open the drawer and steal the knife...your image flashed before my eyes...” Bruce’s eyes sparkled wet in the semidarkness. “Every night behind the bin...the happiness in your eyes when you looked at me; our chat...I was thinking you waiting for me in the dirty light of the alley, behind our bin...waiting in vain...and then after some days realizing that I was not going to come again...that I was dead. I felt your pain...and my chest was clenched more...I knew I was the only person you had; your only loved one and I didn’t want to let you alone...sad...crying...for my shake...I don’t worth so much.”

Selina wrapped her arms around her friend minding his wounds and cuddled him tightly in her chest; her head nestling to his shoulder wetting his pajama shirt with her tears as he wetted her blouse with his.

“Thank you, Bruce; thank you for not making my nightmares reality...thank you for not leaving me...” she kissed his cheeks and swept his tears. “I’d be lost without you...”

Bruce smiled.

“No...you would have made it without me. You’re a great girl, Sel” he petted Hero that placed his one front leg on Bruce’s shoulder and the other on Selina’s.
Bruce felt his eyelids flickering and knew that the sedative was working; it took only a few moments before his eyes were defeated by exhaustion and the sedative and his head rested on Selina’s chest. She cupped it gently with both hands and placed it carefully to the pillow; then she cuddled him close to her chest, Hero settling on the blanket over their bodies.

“No nightmare will dare mess with me, sweetie!”
Dick had returned to his room an hour ago but still he couldn’t decide to recline. He was pacing the room without any other light than that coming from the garden’s lighting; his arms were crossed on his chest. There was no trace of sleepiness though he did feel tired.

Thoughts twirled in his mind. Thoughts about what he had witnessed tonight; about himself: doubts about his own stance. The image of Wayne in Stark’s arms kept coming to his mind: the man was exhausted, weak, suffering and though Dick hated him and even a few hours ago would say that he wanted him to suffer for the death of his family he caused, now his stomach was clenched.

For the first time, Dick was thinking that maybe he was unfair with Wayne…No, no. It wasn’t easy for him to accept that only because Wayne had a nightmare. But then…

The boy sighed because he had nightmares as well…not as horrific as Wayne’s but still he could understand a bit. It could be his conscience that bit him? Or just the incident? The upset he was experiencing?

He sat on the mattress and shook his head sighing. His eyes searched the room not knowing what he was looking for. Suddenly, he eyed his forgotten tablet on the nightstand. The need to open his heart to someone became urging: he needed to bring it out of his system.

He took the tablet and browsed his contacts stopping to Jason’s number. Dick was ready to call his best friend but the hour was late and though Jay used to sleep afterhours still he could be in his home and calling him would disturb his mother. He could speak with him tomorrow.

Tony’s number: yes, Tony would want him to call since it would help him feel better. He brushed the number and after two times the call was answered.

“Champ, what’s wrong?” Tony’s voice was filled with worry. “You should be sleeping.”

“I know, Tony but…I couldn’t sleep and I thought to call you to speak a bit…I hope I’m not bothering you or your wife.”

Zucco was heard sighing.

“Not at all, Dick, I told you to call me whenever you felt needing it. What happened? You sound troubled…”

“Wayne…”

Zucco huffed and then groaned.

“Don’t tell me he punished you again?”

“No, no” Dick interrupted him.

“Tell me he didn’t take out that video matter on you? Because if he did…”

Dick sighed: hearing Tony blaming Wayne for these things made him feel worse because Dick himself had fuelled those accusations – unfounded accusations.

“No, Tony, he didn’t do anything…”
“Then?”

Dick hesitated for a moment feeling that it was Wayne’s secret he had just come across uninvited but then it was Tony whom he trusted so the boy felt that he could share with him.

“I was crossing the corridor to go to the kitchen and I heard sounds from his room so I opened the door…”

“And?” eagerness was evident in his uncle’s voice and Dick’s embarrassment worsened realizing that his uncle imagined the worst things.

“He was wrestling in his sleep, sobbing and begging…and then I told Alfred and Stark…and Alfred found him in the bathroom but I didn’t see what happened there because I came later; but when Stark brought him in the bedroom Wayne looked disoriented like he was in a hallucination or something… He must have had a fit or something…and he had burnings from hot water.”

“And you were disturbed, my poor boy… Try to calm down, champ; and get some sleep: you have school tomorrow. Wayne’s problems is not yours, Dick; try to remember that. You have your own life to care about – Wayne is not your family and soon we’ll have the official decision for that.”

Dick pursed his lips thoughtful.

“Dick? Are you there?”

The boy mumbled something.

“I understand that you’re distressed from what you saw but think that in a few days we’ll be together and all these we’ll be forgotten. Don’t forget who Wayne is: the man who because of him your family was murdered and the one who forbids you from living with your uncle.”

Dick nodded; that was quite true but he still felt something that slightly resembled sympathy. The image of Wayne in the children’s hospital hugging the paraplegic girl flashed in his mind intensifying his feelings. Maybe he was wrong about the man and his granny and Jay was right? Maybe Wayne was a tormented man with that much kindness? Maybe he was so upset because Wayne indeed resembled Brian and seeing Wayne in suffering was like seeing his little brother?

“Dick, I understand that you feel sorry for this man. You pity him for the things he suffered and that because you are a great, generous, kind boy. Yet don’t let him take advantage of your kind feelings into ruining our common purpose. Champ? You remember our common purpose, right?”

Dick rubbed his palm on his eye.

“Of course I do, Tony. What happened today doesn’t change anything. I dream the day that you’ll be my guardian and I will come to live with you.”

Tony’s relieved smile was almost audible.

“You’re great, Dick! And I promise you that it is a matter of days before your troubles are over. You’ll be free, my boy.”

Dick inhaled deeply.

“Thank you, Tony.”

“Oh! It’s nothing, Dick…Now, promise me that you’ll get immediately to bed and sleep.”
“I will, Tony. Goodnight.”

“Goodnight. We’ll see each other soon.”

Dick held his promise to his uncle and lay down immediately after they ended their dial. He hated that things got so perplexed all of a sudden: he preferred it when he just loathed Wayne. He didn’t want to see him as anything different than someone who entered his life causing him pain. He raised his eyes on the dark ceiling and sighed: why did his granny make him live with Wayne?

Thankfully, he was enough tired to sleep almost at once sparing himself from these tormenting and self-doubting thoughts…and feelings.

Luthor enjoyed a carefree half-drunk sleep in his king size bed, sprawled half naked among his maroon silken sheets. His face had a satisfied smirk left over of the day’s great entertainment. It was the same smile he had the entire hour he was watching the video of Falcone giving Wayne what he deserved.

He ordered Mercy to keep an eye on the case so that he’d send some flowers to the one that published that video. Oh! How he would like to see the face of Wayne or Stark’s…the arrogant bastard being ridiculed through his spoiled brat and Wayne remembering who he really was and waking from his illusion that people didn’t see beyond his façade of dignity: naked, spanked, screwed…sobbing, yelling, begging for mercy…

Also, his work with Mannheim’s machine was in good progress and Luthor was happy because the moment he wouldn’t have to bear the man’s presence was near. Of course, this was his mood while the mobster was away because when in his presence Luthor felt obliged to this man; grateful for serving him…serving…she serving someone?

However Luthor could oversee everything else for the top satisfaction of his enemies’ humiliation…Someone else took revenge for him till he was in position to make his own move.

Suddenly, even in his deep intoxicated sleep something felt off and Luthor stirred. Something was on him. He opened his eyes.

“Lights” he ordered and the huge, luxurious bedroom was flooded with light.

Luthor frowned seeing his smiling uninvited guest.

Natasha Romanov dressed in black skin tight leather had straddled him, sitting on his grown her juicy thighs pressing the mattress while her arms positioned on both sides of his torso trapped him. She slithered her torso over his bringing her face over his.

“Mercy!” he barked for his loyal bodyguard.

“It is still early to beg for that, Lex” she spat indifferent. However if you ask for your lap dog, be a good employer and let her sleep” she cocked an eyebrow “Don’t tell me you’re afraid of me?”

Luthor rolled his eyes.

“You’re a master assassin, of course I’m afraid.”

She chuckled.
“I’m with the good guys now so people who are innocent have nothing to fear…” she lolled slightly her head. “And you are innocent, right?”

Luthor blinked annoyed.

“What do you want, Romanov?”

“Actually, is Romanova” she cocked an eyebrow.

She cast a sideways glance to the nightstand where an empty bottle of champagne sat.

“I see you were celebrating, huh?”

“It’s none of your business!”

“I think it is!”

The Black Window clenched her jaw and grabbed the waistband of Luthor’s pyjama pants since he wasn’t wearing the shirt. She jumped off the bed dragging him with her and with fast movements brought him to the vast balcony pinning him to the wall. The night’s cold pierced Luthor’s naked torso causing him goose bumps for which the cold wasn’t the only responsible.

“I think I know what you celebrated, Luthor” she hissed in her heavy Russian accent “a hideous video; you enjoyed the pain of a tortured child.”

Luthor laughed.

“So what? What now, Romanov? You became Stark’s lackey?”

She hit him to the wall grounding her teeth.

“I hate pedophiles and those who distribute that sick material.”

“And what I have to do with that?”

“You had business with Falcone and you already allied with the League of Shadows to surrender Wayne to them…few days ago someone attacked him. You hate Bruce Wayne and Stark so you had the perfect motive and chance to succeed your purpose.”

“Exactly!”

A third voice was added and Luthor saw with a deep frown Ironman landing on his balcony and after him Captain America.

“What is that!?” he barked outraged. “You two are committing trespassing, and you, Romanov, broke into my penthouse! You can’t do this!”

Ironman marched at him fuming inside his face plate and Luthor grimaced enraged though admittedly Ironman approaching was a terrifying sight. Natasha sidestepped to leave the field empty for her comrade and Ironman clenched with one hand Luthor’s neck; the tycoon from Metropolis gritted his teeth hiding his terror with his equal hatred.

“Your filth this time surpassed any limit!” he hissed. “You’ll pay for all the pain you inflicted on Bruce…”

Luthor pursed his lips.
“This is a classic case of harassment and attack: you’re the criminal here, Stark!”

But Ironman clenched more.

“You’re a filthy motherfucker: who do you think will give a fuck about your allegations?!”

Luthor licked his bottom lip.

“Okay, I very much enjoyed the video for the humiliation it was for you and your brat” Luthor admitted cynically and Ironman growled. “Yet I wasn’t the one who published it. I didn’t know that Falcone was holding Wayne as a prisoner neither that he fucked him; moreover that he used to tape those sessions.”

“Do you expect him to believe you?” Steve spat. “Everyone knows that you’re capable of the worst immorality” he snorted haughtily. “Look at you! You laughed with Bruce’s suffering but look at you now: you stuttering excuses to save your hide.”

Luthor glared at Captain America.

“I’m not stuttering, you obsolete doughboy! I’m not afraid of your pathetic mob!”

“We know that you were behind the attack against Bruce few days ago” Natasha added.

Well, that wasn’t the truth, Tony thought. Bruce was sure that Mannheim was the mastermind yet it was handy for making Luthor completely lose it.

However the tycoon knew how to keep his cool.

“You’re not great detectives, aren’t you?” he asked sniggering but Ironman’s grip shut his laughter. “Alright! How could I have attacked Wayne since he has my Labs and the storages in his control?”

“You can have more labs in secret locations” Natasha offered having her arms crossed and her head slightly lolled to the side.

Luthor rolled his eyes.

“Then you would have found them by now and I’ll be in prison again. But you don’t! I had nothing to do with that attack though I wish I did. I enjoyed it as I enjoyed the leak of that video – but you can’t arrest me for that, can you? You don’t have any proof” he narrowed his eyes challenging.

Tony knew that he couldn’t arrest the sonovabitch: he indeed had no proof…yet. He opened his fingers and Luthor slumped on the floor caressing his bruised neck and glaring at Ironman who had taken off.

“Now, get out of my property” he barked hoarsely from the pressure his throat had endured though the Avengers had already left his rectangular balcony.

Ironman turned his head to him and his lenses flashed.

“Pray I don’t find you were behind this…because I’ll make you wish you were never born!”

Steve on his shield followed Ironman till they stopped on a rooftop; Natasha landing a few seconds later.

“I’m sorry, Tony, but you know we couldn’t arrest him.”
Ironman nodded.

“He is a motherfucker but…I believe him though I wish I didn’t.”

“What are you going to do now with Bruce?” Black Window asked him looking him in the eyes with her icy eyes shining with a shade of concern.

“Find a way to help him.”

The small, old grandfather clock on the oaken dresser showed 4 in the morning. In the semi-darkness of his bedroom Alfred cast a sideways glance to the beautiful carved clock; yet his focus was on the old paper he held above his elegant small, round shaped table at the center of his bedroom.

The classic table lamp on the nightstand was the only light in the room but the external lighting of the garden slithered also in the grim room so Alfred had no problem to read the paper he had in front of him caressing with his other hand the stuffed old toy that lay on the desk.

He sighed; his mind’s eyes travelled back, far back in his past.

Martha Wayne held his forearm and smiled to him looking him in the eyes. Thomas sat behind his desk in his study and read aloud the contents of the paper causing a shiver to his butler’s spine. Alfred wasn’t a coward but the prospect of what the paper described left him shaken.

“I know that we can trust you, Alfred…” Martha said smiling to him to ease his tension.

Alfred gulped and rimmed the rectangular glass with whiskey he had on the table. His eyes focused on the signatures on the perfectly preserved formal paper: the doctor-ish untidy signature of Thomas Wayne, the neat, calligraphic signature of Martha Wayne and his own.

Thomas stood and came out of his desk having tucked the paper in the desk’s first drawer that always kept locked. He placed his hand on the butler’s shoulder and gave a tight lips smile under his wife’s touched eyes.

“Bruce will be happy with you, Alfred. And we know that you will always protect him.”

“I am quite honoured by your trust, madam, Master Wayne…but I am praying that young Master Wayne will always be with you.”

Alfred massaged his brow and after a little thought he grabbed determined the glass and gulped the whiskey.

If only he had managed to protect the little boy as his parents had believed and hoped…But he disappointed them; he failed both his madam and his Master but most of all he failed young Master Bruce.

“Promise me that this time you’ll take me with you…” his young Master’s weak, tired voice whispered again to his neck and a shaking arm held tighter to him scared that the butler would leave him.

Alfred’s guts hurt from thousands unseen stabs and he took reverently the Tao-Tao stuffed toy, his eyes gazing at it tenderly; his eyes registered the neat sewing that kept the toy’s leg connected to its body: a tiny Master Bruce had begged him to help his toy refusing to dump the old, ripped toy to the garbage.
Alfred saw again Bruce’s eyes when he was walking out of Dolcetto leaving him to Falcone’s abusing hands… the butler’s eyes focusing on the small boy’s crippled arm… he had dumped the child who wouldn’t dump even an inanimate toy!

“Bloody Hell, Pennyworth!” he gritted his teeth.

He had to help Master Bruce even now after all the times he didn’t.

He dragged the tablet that was neglected on the other end of the table till it was in front of him. He didn’t like technology yet he knew how to use its products: he inhaled deeply to strengthen himself and brushed the screen until he found what he wanted.

Miss Peppers and Lucius had taken meticulous care to take down the file from the known sites yet unfortunately other, less known sites continued to host the file. He intended to send the link to Lucius but after he finished his job.

His head dropped to his chest: what he had decided to do weighed so much on his shoulders; it made his entire body shake from dread. He brought his palm to his mouth. He ought to be courageous as young Master Bruce always was… for the boy’s sake…

He gulped again, closed his eyes once again and brushed the arrow for playing…

The sound of the door opening suddenly fell like a thunder but Alfred didn’t move from his seat.

“Alfred, what are you doing?”

Alfred closed his eyes and brushed again the icon to stop the video.

“Leslie, I would most appreciate it if you left me alone.”

Yet his old friend wasn’t someone to fool; she walked to the table and looked at the tablet. Alfred didn’t bother trying to hide it; he was numb. Even when Leslie’s narrowed eyes stabbed him.

“You intended to watch the video?” her voice wasn’t accusing; it was astonished.

Alfred nodded collected.

“If Master Bruce endured it when he was 11 years old and again now then I can, as well…” he bit his bottom lip as these words brought back to him Martha the night Falcone sent them the tape with the bastards chopping the child’s toe; Master Thomas then had tried to turn the TV set off to spare his distraught wife.

“If Bruce suffered this, I will too!”

Leslie saw her friend’s eyes watering and brushed his upped arms.

“Why, Alfred? You don’t have to suffer that twisted product of Falcone’s cruelty.”

Alfred yanked his head proudly.

“I have to understand, Leslie; I have to see in order to understand what is going on inside Master Bruce. Maybe I can help him better this way because he won’t ever speak about this.”

Leslie closed her eyes; she could see Alfred’s point…

“Do you believe that witnessing the tortures Bruce suffered will make you able to help him more than you do now?”

“That is exactly what I believe.”

“But then the way you look at him will change, Alfred. Every time your eyes will meet with Bruce’s you will see the tied, violated boy and Bruce will realize that you’re not seeing him the way you looked him before his parents’ murders. And you will lower your eyes every time…The way you look at Bruce now is a way for him to feel again innocent – he finds his lost innocence in your eyes, Alfred. If you see that video that innocence will die and that will be another heavy brow to Bruce.”

The Englishman showed her the stuffed toy.

“It is Master Bruce’s…It was rather old even when Master Bruce was just six and Tommy Elliot had ripped the toy’s leg… Master Bruce came to me crying with the little bear in his hands and asked me to help…I suggested that he should throw the toy because it was too old” he shook his head. “I was so insensitive…but Master Bruce wouldn’t dump his toy to be alone in the garbage…”

Leslie closed her eyes understanding how this memory increased her friend’s guilt.

“I never gave the toy back to him…”

Alfred’s head lowered and Leslie caressed his hair.

“You’re perfect as you are, Alfred; your presence is a great support for Bruce. He knows how much you love him and even if you don’t believe it he takes strength from you.”

“I failed his parents, Leslie…I failed the poor boy: I have abandoned him so many times…”

“You couldn’t have done anything else, Alfred; Bruce knows that and you know it deep inside: if you had tried to take Bruce from Falcone.”

“You didn’t see his eyes every time Falcone detached him away from me brutally and I stood there worthless, unable to help, to save him…”

Leslie pressed her lips.

“When you told me that Bruce was alive I was mad at you” she chuckled. “For letting me all these years to live with the pain of believing our boy dead” Alfred licked his lips. “But then thinking how it was for you to live all these years knowing that the child was held by Falcone, suffering the man’s cruelty; I imagined you enduring the dragging of the days aware of how much Bruce was suffering: every day, every hour, every minute, every second…” she gulped and shook her head. “I admire you, Alfred; I would have lost my sanity bearing that cross…”

Alfred’s eyes were still a bit blank and Leslie held his hand.

“You accuse yourself for letting his little hand slip of yours the moments he needed you but now, Alfred, it is your hand he holds…to be connected with his lost innocence, his parents. You do save him, Alfred, every day, every moment” she cast a furious glance at the video. “Don’t ruin that!”

Alfred pressed his lips and nodded. He brushed the option and the screen turned off.

Thor patted the hammer in his belt as his heavy footsteps echoed throughout the glistening, golden hall of Odin’s throne. The light blue crystal throne greeted him in its emptiness at the other end of the
His eyes regarded the golden-black round shaped endless columns that supported the enormous dome that depicted the starry sky. He smiled because this dazzling sight even now that he wasn’t the naughty toddler caught his eyes. However what always fascinated Thor more since his childhood lay on the right side of the throne hall: outside the arches that were the only thing that framed the hall from what was there: infinite, silent darkness and countless different sized spheres.

Spheres that twirled lazily around themselves floating in the endless darkness of the universe. They were so different that the young Thor goggled at them for hours: some plain brown, some red, some gray, some with multicolored rings around them; but one stood out with its uniqueness and beauty. A blue and green sphere… Thor’s legs had dragged him without realizing to the edge.

“I think that one planet holds your intellect captive” Odin’s deep, respectful voice echoed throughout the hall and Thor turned to regard the respectful figure of his father.

Odin crossed the central corridor leading to his throne only to divert and come to his son who was looking at him with pride. Thor always look up to his father: his gray, long hair, his neat gray beard, his clear blue eye, the black leather patch over his missing eye, a relic of the war with the icy giants.

They held each other’s forearms as a greeting and their eyes locked.

“Earth captures your eyes and your mind, son.”

Thor lolled slightly his head towards the universe that was lying idly and graciously a grasp away.

“The fate of this planet and of its inhabitants is deep in my heart but that doesn’t stop me from caring about Asgard’s affairs, as well.”

Odin grinned.

“Of course. You just returned from handling a serious issue after all.”

Thor frowned because his father’s voice had something different.

“And I imagine you are in a haste to return to Earth” Odin added.

“I’m not in a hurry. I always enjoy being with you, father. But eventually I need to go there: my comrades had a meeting which I missed so at some point I should be informed.”

Odin stretched his impressive body and bound his hands behind his back staring at the blue and green sphere.

“If the meeting is your concern, you don’t have to worry: the meeting was cancelled.”

Thor frowned; that wasn’t good news: only something important could cancel a meeting of the Avengers.

“I must contact Tony.”

Odin cocked an eyebrow.

“I don’t think that this is the proper moment to do that. Your human comrade has other problems.”

“Father, what happened? Your words make me worry more not only for the cancelling of the meeting but also for the plain fact that you turned your attention to Earth. I know that you always believed that this planet would benefit me yet till now your stance was more distant.”

Odin pressed his lips.

“I do care for the mortals – not as much as you of course.”

“Father, what made the Avengers cancel their meeting?”

“Tony Stark had to return to Gotham.”

Thor’s eyes widened: Gotham and Tony’s haste meant one thing. Bruce was in trouble. Odin read his son’s face and nodded.

“A…” he searched for the human term “video was broadcasted showing a very young Bruce Wayne being abused.”

Now Thor’s eyes widened in horror and he moved forward but Odin held firmly his forearm. The younger god looked his father puzzled.

“Then, indeed, a human has captured my son’s intellect and heart.”

Thor frowned.

“What?”

“I mean the young man named Bruce Wayne; the Batman.”

“Father…”

“Your interest for him is too great, son.”

Thor locked eyes with his father.

“He saved me from the demon. And yes I’m honored by his friendship and alliance” he noticed the shadow over his father’s features. “I thought you respected him as much as I.”

Odin let his eyelids cover slightly his eye.

“My appreciation for him is unique for a mortal yet I ought to protect my son.”

Thor narrowed his eyes.

“Father, there is no need to protect me from anything; more so from Bruce.”

“I understand that this mortal’s charm is irresistible yet you must realize that a god can’t pursuit very intimate relationships with a mortal.”

The younger god shook his head exasperated from the turn their discussion had taken and from his father’s words.

“Intimate relationships? I have already befriended many mortals.”

Odin’s stare became firm.

“You know what I mean, Thor. You are infatuated with this mortal…and I’m afraid that you are in love with him.”
Thor inhaled deeply as realization dawned on him.

“You spoke with Loki?” he asked his father.

“I don’t understand what does this have to do with our discussion.”

“Loki spends a lot of time on Earth and he cooperates with a known mortal criminal. He harassed a couple of times Bruce because he detected my interest in him so he now attempts to bring you in his plans for upheaval.”

“Thor, Loki is your brother and cares for you and that’s the only reason he informed me.”

Thor shook his head and fumed frustrated.

“He wants to upset you planting ideas to you! He tried to do the same with me. Do you happen to know where his palace is right now?” Odin frowned. “He hides his palace and himself and that can only mean that he is up to something.”

“My son, Loki’s pranks don’t interest me. Your feelings about this mortal are that worry me. You must understand, Thor, that whenever a god was lured by a mortal’s charm the results were disastrous…”

Thor chuckled and took away his eyes.

“Nothing can be disastrous for me: I’m immortal.”

“But he is not” Odin placed his hand on his son’s shoulder. “And the pain of mortality is even worse for a god. Losing your love to the eternity of death is too much even for a god.”

“I’m bound with Bruce in mutual respect, alliance and friendship. You don’t need to worry: Bruce is from the special beings that love only once in their life. And I wasn’t the one who won his heart.”

Odin nodded.

“Superman…”

Thor crossed his arms.

“I see that Loki briefed you thoroughly.”

Odin placed both his hands on Thor’s shoulders.

“You owe to realize, son, that his destiny is pain and death.”

“There is no destiny for Bruce, father: he creates his destiny himself – he defeated his enemies, he neutralized Bagdana while I and Superman were rendered useless. So if there is some destiny for Bruce that is grandeur.”

The older god shook his head.

“No doubt the mortal is a great man but this doesn’t change the pain that resides in him: you wouldn’t want your life bound to so much pain. Superman did not and took his decision to part his life from the mortal’s.”

Thor yanked his head backwards.
“Superman’s decision was stupid and he eventually will be sorry… But Bruce is capable to give heavenly happiness to people – he isn’t just pain.”

“Yes, but he is still mortal, Thor! Now he is extraordinarily beautiful but this won’t last” Thor shook his head exasperated. “In a few decades his beauty will be weathered” he saw his son ready to retort and caught him “his body will start to collapse until death claims him forever “Odin noticed his son’s pressed breath. “And that if he is lucky enough and doesn’t die an unnatural, premature death in the prime of his physical beauty. Imagine the pain when you will hold his dead body in your arms… when his mortal loved ones put him to rot in a grave…when you'll realize that he is lost forever and he won’t ever come back for you to see him again…There is no physical pain that can compare with this, son” his voice became lower.

Thor closed his eyes.

“You speak as if you know…” he said bitterly and Odin gazed with blank eyes at Earth.

“Mortal love always lures Gods like an irresistible magnet…”

The younger god huffed.

“Why are you telling me all these? You don’t have to utter such things to keep me from doing something: Bruce is only my friend.”

Odin’s eyes sparkled.

“But you wish there was something more. Alright: the mortal is your friend but I want to protect you from escalating it to something more” his agonized eyes locked with his son’s “because I sense the flames in you…”

Thor clenched his jaw and nodded.

“Do not, fret, father: Bruce won’t let anything happen. He is adamant about reminding me the exact things you just did.”

“Then he is wise for his very young age.”

Thor nodded.

“He is. But he has suffered so much in his life without anyone of our powerful kind ever helping him so I want to offer my support even now. Is that wrong for you?”

Odin pressed his lips.

“No, it is noble and kind: what I always wanted for my son.”

Thor made a move forward.

“Then, excuse me but I have to leave immediately.”

Odin nodded but a second before his son vanished he opened his mouth.

“Be careful, son…”

“Up!” Falcone’s cruel voice roared to the trembling mass of the boy at his feet.
The boy's only working arm moved shaking trying to find support to the floor in order to lift his trembling from pain body. Sobs and moans of pain made his weak body convulse so his skinny arm bent sending him to collapse again.

The video stopped abruptly there…The first sick rays of dawn slipped into the silent vastness of Tony’s penthouse yet the billionaire ignored them and the world around him. His eyes stayed glued to the hologram screen in front of his minimal elliptic desk of titanium and glass.

Beside his fisted hand stood the half empty bottle of bourbon, his loyal companion during the last hour. He didn’t need to turn his eyes to the bottle and it was handy because his eyes weren’t obeying stuck in their tear fog: his hand moved on its own and grabbed the bottle bringing it rapidly to his mouth to gulp a sufficient quantity. His hand was shaking as much as his entire body.

He smacked the bottle to the table: he was aware that his face had changed a lot of colors during the last hour. Every shade of the sick yellow to the color of the ash to end up to the light green his skin had right now…

Tony jerked up feeling the bile that till now besieged his mouth pushing to get out. He tried to keep it inside but all the images he had seen the last hour kept coming out from every corner of his mind stirring the contents of his stomach and making the pressure stronger.

So he stormed to his glistening bathroom which was quite far from the living room…damn! He had to choose such an enormous penthouse? He hardly made it to the toilet before wrenching the contents of his stomach having the image of the stretched, tied boy squirming from the pain, crying desperately as the enormous dildo was pressed in and out of his ripping body... as the crop was sinking in his tender flesh…the blood that was splashed everywhere…the specks of flesh…the desperate crying as the small, stretched body twitched hopelessly to escape the horrible pain…the cruel sniggers…

“It is odd how evil is drawn to purity…” he heard again Arrow’s voice and felt again Bruce’s shaking body in his arms as he was taking him to the bedroom; the way his arm around his neck wrapped with despair and trust…

When his stomach was emptied from the bourbon he had consumed, he flashed and stood carefully rubbing his diaphragm. He wasn’t used to throw up: despite his heavy consumption of alcohol his experience with booze had limited very much the hangover symptoms. Tony was used to watch
Bruce being convulsing upon a toilet not himself.

He moved slowly to the sink and splashed his face not only to wake himself up but also to push away the cold tears that had stuck on his cheeks; he enjoyed the cool water. He didn’t cast a glance to his reflection on the built-in frameless rectangular mirror. He was a mess, he was aware of that and he didn’t need a confirmation, thank you very much.

Tony wiped his face with a towel and dragged his feet back to the desk. His eyes fell tenderly to the boy on the hologram that had stayed on the floor. He pressed his lips and caressed him – actually, the air - with his fingertips: his insides were clenched by invisible pinchers at once and his hand reached the bottle that had still some liquid.

But then a gentle but firm hand touched his and Tony turned to see Peppers. He frowned because he hadn’t heard her coming.

“You were in the bathroom when I left the lift…” she answered reading hi puzzlement.

He rubbed his eyes.
“When you arrived?”

“Just; the helipad on the roof is very handy” she cast a strict glance at the hologram. “You watched that sick shit?! I though Lucius and I had done a good job vanishing it from everywhere.”

Tony shook his head cocking his eyebrow.

“When Einstein said that there are two things that are limitless: the universe and human stupidity. Well, I must correct him” he said wisely “there are two more. Human cruelty” his voice slightly bent but he hid it with a fake cough “…and the net. And when you’re Tony Stark and can easily access the dark internet then you can find even vanished things or things you’d wish they didn’t exist.”

Pepper closed her eyes.

“You are drunk, Tony.”

He laughed and lifted his index finger.

“No, actually, I’m wasted…I needed to…” he gestured to the hologram and Pepper waved her hand making the hologram disappear.

“Tony, why on Earth you had to do that? Why do you have to see that video?” she pressed her lips.

Tony took away his eyes and made to grab again the bottle but Pepper stopped him again.

“What?!” he snapped. “I need to wash my mouth after throwing up.”

Pepper stabbed him with her strict eyes.

“This isn’t a mouthwash; and if you insist on something to change the taste of vomit from your mouth” she pulled off her pants pocket a chocolate, unwrapped it and broke a piece which she shoved into Tony’s mouth. “It will help to get sober.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“Mmm…You’re planning to go juicy?”

But Pepper was looking at him sternly.

“Do you want Bruce knowing that you got drunk after watching this video?”

Tony jerked nervously and rubbed his eyes with both hands: if Bruce learnt that he had done that then his friend would blame himself…

“There’s no reason for him to know – he has so much to fight…”

“If you care about Bruce not finding out you shouldn’t do that again” Tony just nodded and Pepper growled pissed “Why, Tony?” she insisted and Tony ran his fingers through his messy raven locks.

He inhaled deeply.

“Because I wanted to share with Bruce; to understand; to know…so I can be more…more helpful…”

Pepper licked her lips and caressed his locks.
“I know that nobody can understand what Bruce has been through enduring this cruelty but…I hoped…I hoped that sharing even through that cold video would make me more able to support him…”

Pepper sighed.

“Oh, Tony… I’m sure that Bruce is happy having you on his side whether you knew or not…Your presence is always a great support for him. Watching what Falcone did to him wasn’t necessary for helping him…as a matter of fact I think that Bruce wouldn’t want anyone to know what these people did to him – I mean apart from his testimony at Falcone’s trial.”

Tony nodded.

“But I needed to…”

“I believe you just wanted to punish yourself watching what Bruce suffered while everyone considered him dead. Because you blame yourself for biting that like everyone else.”

Tony closed his eyes.

“I tried masochism once with a blond mistress…” he made an attempt to cheer things up but it was lame – especially, when he just witnessed his friend being subjected to merciless sadism. “Yes!” he snapped at Peppers. “I wanted to see what these people did to Bruce so that I realize the size of my stupidity – my…my indifference. My corruption.”

He held Peppers’ upper arms and locked their eyes.

“It was my fault, Pep!” he licked his lips. “I was partying, drinking, fucking while my best friend, my baby friend was brutally tortured. I could have searched for him; I could have found and saved him…Oh, Pepper! Alfred found him in the bathroom, curled in the hydromassage cabin murmuring his favorite lullaby; he had the water turned on to the maximum pressure trying to rub their filth off his body” Pepper lowered her wet eyes. “He thought that he was still in that filthy bordel: the monsters whenever allowed him to shower was with cold water…so Bruce felt cold and had the water’s temperature too high” Pepper brought her palm to her mouth. “Thankfully, Alfred turned it off while no great damage was done. When I took him in my arms he whispered that he was sure I’d come and save him; he believed that he was still in that fucking building and I arrived saving him. You get it, Peps?! He waited and pleaded every day for me to come and save him; he hoped every second and every second he was disappointed and desperate…making excuses for my not coming…”

His eyes faucets opened and he didn’t want to persuade them to stop.

“Don’t blame yourself, Tony…” Peppers’ sympathy was evident “if you had suspected that Bruce was alive you’d have given your life to save him.”

Tony shook his head and looked at Peppers’ face; her cheeks were wet like his.

“Don’t make excuses for me, Peps.”

“I don’t…I’m just stating the facts. Bruce knows that. Watching him suffer that much makes you feel weak and you need to take it out somehow…so you punch yourself…”

“How should I help him, Peps?” he cupped her face with both hands.

“There is only one way; the best way, Tony; what Bruce wants the most: be yourself, the Tony he loves.”

She kissed him on the forehead. Tony wrapped his arms around her and she held him tight till he felt a bit calm and let his head sink to her shoulder. Pepper caressed his locks feeling his exhaustion.

Bullock stormed outside Jim’s office and he barely made it to the restrooms at the end of the corridor. He threw up the coffees he had drunk watching the video.

In Jim’s office the other three remained at their seats watching the end. They might have not followed the rough lieutenant in the bathroom but their faces had the same paleness and shaken expression.

When the video ended Jim stood and turned it off immediately but nobody spoke.

Jim inhaled understanding his team’s emotional state but he had to break that shocked silence. He looked at them.

“Well, that video didn’t enlighten us about who might have acquired that video from Falcone.”

Robert shook his head still numb from his emotions.

“That bastard was too engrossed in what he was doing to mention anything useful” his voice was hoarse.

Montoya fist her hands.

“How someone – even a crime lord – can do such things to a small child?”

The door opened and Bullock came in with his face still a bit wet.

“Wayne was so skinny and fragile…” he said having heard the end of Montoya’s phrase. “It’s a miracle the boy survived…”

Jim arched his eyebrows.

“Falcone had a doctor to mend the boy’s injuries…he didn’t want to lose his trophy.”

Robert stood from his chair.

“The thing that matters now is that we must put Wayne through the affliction of answering our questions.”

Bullock shook his head and turned his sturdy figure towards the window; through its blinds the dawn was casting the first pale shades of light blue. Jim watched his toughest officer being bent from watching the child’s suffering.

“Fuck!” Bullock yelled. “Surely we can spare the man from this? I mean…it seems like cowardice to me…us being unable to make it on our own and forcing him to do the hard job for us…”

“It is not like that, Lieutenant” Robert answered walking to him. “I wish there was another way but it is standard procedure and it might help save other children if the man who had the video is in some child pornography net. Harvey’s father gave us some information but it’s not sufficient.”

Montoya stood as well.
“At least, let the man some hours of sleep before we interrogate him.”

“It is not interrogation, Detective” Robert retorted feeling like defending himself from something he felt awful to do.

“But that’s how it will seem to him! Damn those motherfuckers!” Bullock snapped turning abruptly to him.

“I wish I could do otherwise!” Robert answered offended.

Jim stood between them and raised his arms calming.

“Nobody wants to torment Mr. Wayne and we’ll do everything to make this as smooth as possible. Mr. Wayne is a very brave youth and will understand” he looked at Montoya whose face was gloom and she was watching grimly. “We will postpone our visit for some hours.”

Clark walked in the reporters’ floor at Daily Planet building, being welcomed by the familiar ruckus of typing and chat. His mood was in excellent state: the weather in Metropolis was sunny, quite warm for the season; also, it helped that he woke up with Diana curled to his body. Her flowery perfume was cleaning his system from any speck of disgust or ill feeling.

And of course…a broad grin formed over his face… she showed him once again her love giving him some great unblemished with guilt sex.

His pleasant feeling made even the approaching Lois seem something positive despite the fact she was frowned. He cocked an eyebrow: at least, she acknowledged his presence: that was a great improvement.

“What are you doing here? I thought you wouldn’t come today.”

Now it was his turn to frown puzzled.

“Why? I’m not ill…” he thought a bit and lowered his voice “not that this is a probability.”

Lois shook her head disappointed and clenched her waist with both hands before turning on her heels ready to leave him but Clark touched her upper arm.

“What is it, Lois?”

“I believed that you would have the sensitivity to be in Gotham right now, to comfort Bruce” she spat in a whisper.

Clark yanked his head exasperated.

“Why would I do that, Lois?! Are you serious? There’s nothing between him and me anymore: I am with Diana now!”

“That has nothing to do with whom you’re currently fucking” she said coldly arching her eyebrows. “I thought that you still cared about him as a friend and as a friend your place is with him.”

Clark huffed: Bruce his friend? The man had kicked him out; he had stabbed him with a knife; he tricked him into giving him insufficient vaccination.

“Lois, you’re attempting once again to set me up with him. There’s no way I’ll return to him. Diana is the woman I love and I won’t risk my happiness with her for anything.”

Lois yanked her head and snorted.

“Clark Kent, you’re an asshole! You can stay with your stupid bimbo as long as you want: I was plainly speaking about being human…” she shook her head chuckling snidely “I forgot that this seems to bother you lately… be it… let’s change that: being considerate. After that video, Bruce will need every kind word he can’t get. Not only the blow was tremendous but also the ramifications will enhance the pain. They will definitely try to use this to take Richard Grayson from him.”

“Maybe that’s the best: the boy hates him…” Clark stated calmly.

Lois’s face contorted in rage.

“You’re deplorable!”

“No, I’m just saying the truth, Lois” but his friend crossed her arms on the chest and made to leave but he held her.

Clark felt his pleasant mood washing off and that pissed him. He closed his eyes because he didn’t want to quarrel with Lois again.

“If I had gone to him he’d have understood that I did it from… from feeling sorry and he would feel worse: he doesn’t like to be pitied.”

Lois nodded.

“Of course he is dignified! But a friend doesn’t support a friend from pity…” she shook her head “it is better you stay away if pity is the only thing you can feel about Bruce… That woman damaged everything inside you.”

Clark’s eyes flashed angry.

“Lois, that’s not true! Stop talking about her like that!” Lois’s lips pursed in disgust and no fear at all though she knew that in front of her was the most powerful being on Earth.

She shook her head and cocked an eyebrow.

“Have it your way then!” she sidestepped him directing to the exit.

Clark caught up with her fearing that she had some intelligence on Intergang’s movements and was going there.

“Where are you going? Remember that Intergang is my case too.”

Lois frowned; then registering what she had just heard rolled her eyes and snorted.

“Hardly! However, don’t be afraid. I’m going to Gotham: my priorities lie there right now: Bruce needs support from people who don’t pity him” she yanked her head proudly and left furious.

His eyelids didn’t want to uncover his eyes because this sleep was so sweet, so peaceful… he was blinded by the light. He felt as if he had the sun right in front of his eyes.

But then slowly he was able to see clearly: it was a person leaning above him smiling though his beautiful blue topaz eyes were concerned.

“How do you feel?” the sun asked and his voice was sweeter than he had imagined.

As his vision focused more he identified who the stranger was and his heart gave several jolts that for once were from joy after all these years. His eyes bulged: it was the angel from TV; the one Sel told him that people called Superman. He was even more beautiful than on TV! So beautiful that Bruce was speechless…

However he registered the worried frown of the young man who definitely took the lack of answer as indication of illness.

“I…I’m fine, thank you…” and the truth was that most of his pain was gone though he still felt dull throbs from the places Falcone had wiped him and from his…anus. Only the thought of that part of his body made him blush.

The angel smiled and his smile made every pain run away.

“Then we’re good” the angel said.

“Where am I?” Bruce asked not that he had any problem with the place: it was warm, illuminated in light blue and despite the fact the crystal columns were an odd decoration he found it beautiful.

Superman narrowed his eyes.

“You don’t remember?”

Bruce looked at his hands though it was difficult to part with the sight of the beautiful angel. He noticed that his cripple arm was wrapped in a strange kind of cast that was almost transparent and vibrating. And for the first time after six years it didn’t pain.

Slowly the images from last night came back to him: what Falcone did to him… the crucifying pain from his master’s crop…and then the external wall crashing and the raven haired angel floating there clenching his waist, his red cape flapping. His beautiful eyes sparkled angrily. He regarded the scene for a second and then blew a wave of icy air and sent both Falcone and Chill to smash to the opposite wall.

Bruce remembered that he wanted to gaze at the young man but he was exhausted and in so much pain that his head didn’t last and dropped to the table.

The angel didn’t walk on the floor but still Bruce could hear him approaching and sighing with sympathy. And then his wrists and ankles stopped being painfully squeezed; Bruce knew from his father than when an area has been without blood much time when the blood flow starts again the pain was considerable – besides that was what happened every other time…

But not tonight because the angel knew that and blew frozen air to his members to not feel the pain. And then his body was lifted gently and something extremely soft and warm wrapped him meticulously.

Bruce had opened his eyes slightly seeing the red cape muffling his naked body; the angel took him in his arms carefully and flew away from Dolcetto and then from Gotham.

He was so tired and the cape was so warm and soft – not to mention, the angel’s arms – that Bruce fell asleep during the flight. However every now and then his eyelids flapped open for a second and he could see endless white, sparkling landscape underneath him and multicolored fluorescent waves of light surrounding him. Then he thought that it was just a dream but now…

“The north pole!” Bruce yelled waking up from his recollection and the angel smiled.

“You’re a clever boy. Yes, we are in the North Pole. You’re safe here.”

Bruce nodded but immediately he fell silent and his eyes turned again to his hands. The angel worried took gently his chin and made him lock eyes with him.

“What troubles you?”

“Back in Gotham…Selina stayed there and she doesn’t have anyone else…and there’s Alfred too…Falcone will harm him if I escape…”

The angel’s face became touched but in the end he grinned.

“No need to worry: your friend Tony Stark and I are cleaning Gotham: Falcone and Chill are already in jail but it is better for you to stay here till we finish the job” and seeing that the boy wasn’t completely satisfied, he smiled “it will be only for a few days and you’ll have good company till then…”

He leaned to the floor and when erected his body he was holding something that made Bruce laugh.

“Hero!”

The angel let the one-eyed kitten on Bruce’s lap and the animal rushed to him licking his cheeks.

“Thank you!” he met the angel’s satisfied stare.

“Your eyes are like star sapphires” the angel said. “May I call you ‘Star’?”

Bruce opened his eyes that were heavy from the sedative and the first thing he saw was Selina’s beautiful face calm under sleep’s vale. He caressed carefully her hair and seeing Hero opening a lazy eye hushed him.

He looked at the clock on the nightstand: it was half past eight but the morning light was meticulously kept outside the room since Alfred had taken care to close the heavy curtains.

It was time for him to start the day; he looked around for his chair that had been forgotten at the middle of the room. Bruce was happy that Tony’s chair like Clark’s could take his mental orders. And move silently.

When the chair was to his bed he placed a soft kiss to Selina’s cheek and caressed Hero before slipping to the chair and wearing his robe.

Coming out to the corridor he heard the bell of the main entrance and hurried to the lift.

Leslie opened the door since Alfred had left to drive Richard to school. She frowned seeing Jim Gordon, Lieutenant Bullock and Detective Montoya along with the DA. Of course she understood immediately.

“Good morning, Dr. Thompkins” Jim greeted her. “I wonder if we can speak with Mr. Wayne.”

Leslie clenched her jaw.

“No, you can’t! He had a very rough night and the least he needs is you asking him questions twisting the knife in his wounds. For fuck’s sake, Gordon!”

Jim licked his lips nervously.

“Dr. Thompkins, I assure you that I understand and I wish I could do otherwise but we must have a discussion with him.”

“Discussion?” she asked challengingly cocking an eyebrow.

Robert moved forward.

“Dr. Thompkins, we need Mr. Wayne’s testimony to found the culprit and bring him to justice.”

She smirked and shook her head.

“I’m afraid you can’t see him right now – give him some time, Jim!” she used his name, their old, underground partnership during Falcone’s reign resurfacing.

Gordon gulped and nodded respecting the strong woman’s wish.

“Alright, Leslie; we’ll come another time.”

“No need for that, Commissionaire” Bruce said strolling his wheelchair through the corridor and everyone looked at him.

Bruce had thought that from now on when people would look at him, he’d see in their eyes pity and disgust. But now this wasn’t the case; although he was aware that his appearance wasn’t impeccable his visitors looked at him with respect and even admiration…

“Since you did the distance here I can answer your questions…Unless…am I arrested for…? I don’t know…something?”

Jim smiled.

“Of course not, Mr. Wayne, just some questions about” his whim was to lower his gaze but this youth wouldn’t have liked that “that video.”

Bruce nodded and made an inviting gesture towards the grand salon.

Bullock elbowed Montoya.

“Have you seen a bravest man?”

Montoya smirked to her rough partner.

“No, but he is extremely pale and looks rugged. His night was definitely very difficult…”

Leslie rushed to Bruce.

“You haven’t eaten anything, Bruce…I’m sure this can wait.”

Bruce grinned and looked at Jim and Robert.

“No, it can’t.”

Robert licked his lips.
“It won’t take long.”

“Thank you” Bruce said “Would you like some coffee or tea?” he asked since Leslie didn’t have any intention on being a nice hostess.

“No, Mr. Wayne, thank you.”

“As you wish…Please, have a seat.”

“Mr. Wayne, it was the first time Falcone videotaped while abusing you?” Jim decided to get it over as soon as possible.

“I didn’t know that he was doing it even that time; so I don’t have the slightest idea whether he did it more times…”

Robert met Bruce’s eyes.

“Do you know of anyone having access to that video?”

Bruce lowered his head thinking.

“I admit that I had no recollection of what the video showed…you see” he inhaled “such things happened many times and were blend…but last night I had a flashback and I remember a night before what Falcone did to me…I was mopping near Falcone’s office and overheard him speaking with a friend of his…”

Gordon frowned.

“What they were saying?”

“This man was asking from Falcone to…to rent me for one time…” he hesitated “you understand for what…but Falcone refused and then the man told him to give him a refund…a video…”

“So this video was made for that man?” Robert asked hiding his disgust.

Bruce nodded.

“I think so…You see, when Falcone ordered Chill to take me back to my cage he asked him to give a DVD disk to someone.”

Montoya leaned forward making eye contact with Bruce.

“Did you happen to hear some name?”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I think Falcone called him Roth…”

Robert frowned.

“Roth Pielser?” he asked but Bruce shrugged.

The DA turned to Jim who looked thoughtful too.

“I know that name” the Commissionaire said.

Robert nodded.
“It was a federal case. I remember that FBI was investigating trying to find evidence to bust him. He is one of the worst pedophiles and he led the widest network of child pornography” Bruce’s breath became harder and Robert hurried to change the subject. “The office eventually had managed to arrest and convict him: he is now at the Federal Prison in Washington. Mr. Wayne, if we showed you a picture of him would be able to recognize him?”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“I don’t know…I…I think so…”

“Brave boy…” Bullock didn’t manage to stop his comment and Montoya elbowed him.

“Tons of material was confiscated but not that video” Robert diverted the attention from Bullock but the tough lieutenant pressed his lips and spoke.

“Either he had hidden it somewhere safe or given it to someone else.”

Bruce clenched the edges of his armrests: though he knew that the one who published that video had personal conflicts with him, still the prospect of more people having seen that content sickened him. Which was stupid now that millions of people had already seen it.

The main entrance opened suddenly and closed with a bang making everyone to look there. Bruce saw Tony storming enraged at Jim.

“How could you, Jim?! I expected better from you than tormenting Bruce!”
Despite the fact he had an enraged Tony Stark in front of him, the always composed Commissionaire was seeing behind him to their young host. Bruce Wayne was still in his robe, confined in a modern first seen wheelchair, pale and with bloodshot eyes which were a sign of how hard the previous night was for him. However, Bruce Wayne’s stare was determined, strong only with a flicker of upset now that his friend stormed at Jim.

“Tony, please” Bruce said moving his wheelchair towards him.

But Tony raised his palm to silence him.

“Bruce, stay out of this. Gordon, okay, with everyone else doing this but you? I thought you’d have the minimum of empathy and sympathy to leave Bruce alone and not pestering him right now.”

Jim stood up and looked calm at the billionaire.

“Mr. Stark, I assure you that if I had an option I wouldn’t be here right now. I’m terribly sorry for disturbing Mr. Wayne and you but the matter is urgent and our effort is to get the most information we can so that the culprit behind this deed is brought to justice.”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“You could do that without forcing Bruce to re-experience all these. He had a horrible night because of that motherfucker and now you’re twitching the knife in his wounds! If you want to catch the bastard, investigate or squeeze that bastard into telling you who sent him the video!” he yanked his head pointing his chin.

Gordon didn’t lower his eyes which didn’t follow Tony in his angry attitude.

“We do investigate, Mr. Stark, yet, I’m afraid that the investigation can’t be effective without Mr. Wayne’s contribution.”

Bruce moved forward.

“Exactly, Tony. They are only doing their jobs; nothing of what we spoke about till now made feel bad.”

Tony lolled his head to him crossing his arms.

“Stop being so stupidly selfless! You haven’t even dressed yet and I bet you didn’t have the time to eat something.”

“We are sorry for that” Robert made a move towards them. “But we must act rapidly.”

Tony smirked and stabbed a jeering stare to the DA who frowned.

“I’m tired of ‘buts’, Mr. DA.”

Bruce understood that he had to intervene.

“Tony, it was I that insisted on them staying and doing the questioning.”

Tony locked eyes with his friend fuming.
“I think that we are finished, Mr. Wayne” Gordon said looking at Robert who nodded. “Your help is much appreciated” he gave his hand for a handshake and Bruce took it.

Robert did the same.

“I’m terribly sorry for upsetting you; I wish there was another way” the DA said casting a pointed glance at Tony who groaned.

“Not at all” Bruce asked. “If that helps you find and arrest someone dangerous then I’m satisfied. And of course if you need to, I’ll be at your disposal for anything you want to ask.”

Robert smiled.

“Thank you, Mr. Wayne: we’ll find the culprit and bring him to justice.”

“I’m sure” Bruce replied causing Tony’s snort.

“Mr. Stark” Jim nodded courtly to the billionaire in his trademark tranquil demeanor and followed Leslie who came to lead them to the door.

As he was the last of the company to leave the salon Bullock cast a glance to Bruce and then at Tony with sympathy flickering in his hardened eyes: even though till now he didn’t have the best of opinions about him, he couldn’t blame Stark for being so protective of his friend. Montoya stopped, looking at her partner and cleared her throat which made Bullock hasten to catch them.

Tony remained in his position with his hands clenching his waist and listened as the police car left the grounds. Only then he moved to his friend.

“Tony, that was really unnecessary” Bruce said. “You know that they are just doing their jobs and no harm was done by their questions.”

Tony opened his mouth ready to say something still pissed for his friend’s intervention when he was speaking with Gordon. However the images from that video flooded in a second his mind and he closed his mouth running his hand to his hair.

“Sometimes I wish you were not so selflessly brave, littl’ guy” he replied calm. “But you had an awful night and the least they could do was leaving the matter for one or two days. Reporters are lurking outside like hungry wolves and interrogation could have been avoided right now.”

Bruce huffed.

“Tony, I’m not so fragile. I know that last night I scared you and I’m sorry…I shouldn’t have lost control” Tony shook his head. “But now it’s another day.”

Tony kneeled before him and cupped his friend’s face under Bruce’s puzzled eyes.

“I hate it that people keep hurting you and you…” he sighed. “Sacrificing yourself for the others hiding your suffering…” he touched his forehead to Bruce’s and the younger man pressed his lips sensing Tony’s torment. “And, listen to me, don’t be sorry for anything, okay?”

Bruce frowned.

“Tony, have you been drinking?” he asked calmly and Tony let out a surrendered chuckle closing his eyes.

“No, littl’ guy” he lied because he didn’t want Bruce feel guilty about his own stupidity.
However Bruce wasn’t completely convinced.

“I can confirm that too” a nonchalant voice came from the corridor that led there from the main entrance and Bruce saw Pepper walking in with Leslie.

Tony hearing his girlfriend’s voice stood up and Pepper found the opportunity to hug Bruce.

“How are you, Bruce?” she asked him with a peck to the cheek.

He smiled.

“Though my appearance says otherwise, I’m fine.”

“Despite the fact he does everything to torture himself” Tony grouched.

“Is that so? A girl cannot sleep without bad things happening?”

Selina was descending the grand stair with Hero perched to her chest.

“Why are you up so early, Bruce?” she demanded frowned as soon as reached her friend. “You sneaked of me, bad boy…And why you’re still in your pajamas?”

Bruce chuckled.

“Now that’s what I call a third degree interrogation” he winked to Tony.

“Police were here” Leslie said gloom. “Now, ladies and gentlemen, to the kitchen for breakfast.”

“You cooked?” Tony asked under a deep, suspicious frown and Leslie chuckled.

“Of course not! I want to preserve my patients’ health…Alfred took care of everything before taking Richard to school.”

Hero jumped from Selina’s chest and ran first towards the kitchen causing Bruce’s light hearted laugh. Tony looked at his friend sad and Pepper elbowed him casting him a reprimanding glare when he met her eyes.

“Why do you have to give them all these information?” Tony asked Bruce exasperated sitting on the stool next to him at the kitchen island. You should have told to me about that pervert and I’d have persuaded the bastard to sing.”

Bruce took a bite from his cupcake and stared at him calm.

“Exactly. It is better if police handles that, Tony.”

Tony jerked in his stool.

“What?!”

Bruce sipped from his milk.

“You don’t trust me?” Tony insisted and Pepper looked at him disapprovingly.

“Of course I do, Tony. But it is too personal and I don’t want you to test your limits…in a revenge quest” he met his friend’s pissed eyes. “Besides there are more important things to focus our efforts.”

Selina frowned.
“More important? There is nothing more important than you, Bruce” Tony looked at her with arched eyebrows and nodded his approval.

“And I want to catch this motherfucker ASAP” Tony said determined “to show him the amount of pain he caused!”

Bruce licked his lips and met Leslie’s eyes; the doctor sat opposite him with her arms crossed on her chest watching him as if evaluating his health which probably was what she really did.

“Tony, let the police find and give him what he deserves” he replied adamant. “Last night I had that…fit but everything is alright. He didn’t manage what he wanted and this will be the worst punishment for him. Now, let’s leave this aside and return to our job.”

Tony couldn’t stop his eyes from rolling.

“Which is?”

“Zucco, Joker…He managed to escape last night.”

Tony shook his head.

“You know that you shouldn’t have been there at all? Now you mention it, I’m still pissed with you.”

Leslie looked at Bruce frowned.

“You were out last night?”

Bruce huffed.

“I had to…”

Leslie pressed her lips.

“What were you thinking, young man?” she scolded Bruce.

“Leslie, I’m well protected with the armor and I’m very careful.”

Leslie growled and Tony smiled satisfied.

“Maybe we must chain you?” she spat.

“He will escape…” Tony cocked an eyebrow. “Ra’s Al Ghul taught him many tricks.”

“Speaking of Zucco” Pepper intervened to change the subject “he could have mailed the video to that hacker wanting to damage your image now that the hearing is in progress.”

Bruce shook his head.

“He could have done anything to achieve his purpose yet he was away from Gotham for years and I don’t think he had access to that video.”

“What about Joker?” Selina asked. “He tortured Falcone so maybe the bastard revealed to him the existence of that video and its location. Knowing how much Joker likes to play why not broadcasting that video to bring a reaction out of you?”
Tony scratched his head.

“Joker was there when I got that scum who hacked GCN’s signal” he didn’t mention all the details. “He was very angry and wanted to punish himself the guy.”

Selina shrugged and twisted her lips.

“Joker’s games…”

“I don’t think that he did this; it’s not Joker’s style: he likes to show off; he’d have presented the video himself making some statement” Bruce commented.

But Selina shook her head chewing her covered with jam slice of bread.

“We’re talking about Joker: he likes to break patterns even if those patterns were made by him.”

“You have a point” Bruce replied. “Yet even if Falcone had told him about the video, he couldn’t know where the video was at the time since he had given it to Pielser.”

Tony gulped.

“He shot that video to sell it?” his face was distorted with disgust.

Bruce’s face on the other hand was completely emotionless.

“Actually, it was a gift. Pielser is a pedophile and he was one of Falcone’s partners. He saw me once in Dolcetto and asked from Falcone to rent me for one time” Bruce realized that everyone was staring at him distraught and hurried to conclude. “Falcone refused and then Pielser asked him at least a video of…” his voice was almost indifferent as if all these referred to someone else “what he wouldn’t have the chance to do himself.”

“You re-experienced all these to last night’s flashback?” Selina asked in a low but steady voice.

Bruce nodded and to break the touched atmosphere continued keeping his composure.

“Therefore Joker couldn’t have access to that video because if he had taken it from the pedophile it would have become news: Pielser is in a federal jail.”

Tony pursed his lips and Bruce cleared his throat.

“So we leave that case to the Police; we have Mannheim, Luthor and what are they up to with those strange artifacts.”

Tony snorted twisting his lips. He didn’t give a damn about Mannheim and those fucking items.

“I knew it…Sure thing, our friend Luthor yesterday had only one thing in his mind and that wasn’t Mannheim or the stupid objects…”

Bruce nodded and his eyes fell on Hero who was kicking between his paws a chunk of food he threw out of his bawl.

“I know…he called me.”

Tony clenched his fist and hit the granite island.

“That sonov…If I knew that, I’d have broken his stupid nose last night!”
“You went to Luthor last night?”

Tony licked his lips.

“Yeah with Steve…Natasha was already there…We wanted him to confess that he gave the video but it seems that he isn’t the culprit.”

Bruce rubbed his forehead.

“Tony, that was…” he huffed. “He can sue you – I mean all of you – for assault” he shook his head.

“He won’t dare.”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Thank you – all of you but…”

“We are here to serve justice, Bruce; the fact you were the victim this time doesn’t change our role.”

Pepper bit her lip and the other two women looked at Tony with narrowed eyes. However Bruce didn’t comment on that.

“I hope you changed your mind about that court and call Collins to as for an adjournment” Tony continued.

“Not at all” Bruce replied a bit down hearted about Tony calling him ‘a victim’. “The hearing will take place as scheduled; there’s no reason to cancel it. On the contrary…”

He stopped abruptly his phrase as Alfred came in from the kitchen’s door.

“Bloody Hell!” he said unaware that his young Master was speaking. “Those reporters are swarming the Palisades! I had to come from the back road.”

Tony lolled his head towards Alfred locking eyes with Bruce pointedly.

“You see? They are going to eat you alive!” Tony said. “I think you should stay away from them.”

Bruce frowned: Tony was always overprotective but now…He recollected what happened last night, the way his friend carried him in his arms deluded and scared. He felt sweat spurting all over his body from shame.

“On the contrary, Tony, facing the reporters will definitely ruin it for the culprit: he’ll realize that he failed to break me. Also, better me than Dick.”

Selina took Hero from the floor and petted him.

“What about you, Bruce?” Selina asked. “You are exhausted after the last night: facing that lot isn’t the better thing…”

Bruce nodded.
“I’m alright now, Sel: believe me, facing reporters isn’t that bad.”

Leslie stood.

“Before anything else, young man, I want to examine you. Do you feel any pain? You forced yourself to walk last night and fell, not to mention the burnings.”

Tony stared at Bruce with raised eyebrows, his face was filled with worry and demand; the younger man didn’t want any more distress to his friends. He nodded.

“Though I don’t feel any pain, you can examine me.”

Mr. Collins was waiting in front of the hearing hall and he hurried to shake Bruce’s hand as soon as he saw him coming this time not from the lift of the back side of the corridor but the opposite one that was coming from the front of the building.

The veteran attorney examined his employer’s presence. The young man was impeccably dressed as always, clean shaven, perfectly groomed and his face although a bit pale was calm and determined.

Bruce smiled to him.

“Good morning, Mr. Collins.”

“Good morning, Mr. Wayne, though I’m sure that the hungry pack of reporters outside the court house gave you a hard time. Maybe it would have been better if you had chosen the back entrance as the previous times?”

The younger man shook his head.

“Not today but there’s no problem, Mr. Collins, I’m used to the reporters” Bruce had thought of it and decided that it was better to tell everything to his lawyer so he didn’t hesitate at all. “Mr. Collins, last night I had a nightmare – actually, a flashback – and I woke up believing that I was still in Falcone’s cabaret, still his prisoner…I’ he inhaled “I had lost my connection to reality.”

“I’m terribly sorry for that, Mr. Wayne: you could have called me to ask to postpone the hearing but even now we can ask Judge Moot…” Bruce was shaking his head in denial.

“No need for that: I’m perfectly fine now but last night my loved ones were upset and distraught because I was a bit delusional. And Dick witnessed all that…”

Mr. Collins nodded.

“I wanted you to know…Can this harm our case?”

“In a hearing of guardianship everything can affect things” Bruce nodded appreciating Mr. Collins’ honesty. “The other side doesn’t know about this but even if they found out the fact that you decided to attend the hearing even after that incident will show how much you care about the boy.”

The experienced lawyer patted the younger man’s shoulder and smiled to him.

“Do not feel bad, Mr. Wayne.”

Bruce nodded and they moved inside where Zucco and his lawyer were already seated to their table. However Bruce instantly noticed a woman sitting at the spectators’ seats behind Zucco: it was a woman approximately at the same age with Zucco with short brown hair and big hazel eyes.

And Bruce knew her. He was pressing his memory to remember as he approached their table and made a mental note to ask the constable that was in the room: for being allowed to the hall she must have some relation to the case. The moment he was passing by their opponents’ table Magnie greeted him in his cordial way that was at the same time creepy coming from the opponent’s attorney.

Bruce shook the hand Magnie offered once again to him.

“I’m honestly sorry about what happened yesterday, Mr. Wayne” Bruce frowned internally with this reference that could mean both the video and his fit but didn’t show anything in case this was just bait. “The broadcasting of that video was disgusting and I hope the police arrests the culprit soon.”

Bruce sighed inside relieved that Magnie meant the video.

“Thank you, Mr. Magnie; I really appreciate that.”

Magnie smiled and Bruce guided his wheelchair to take his position. Judge Moot entered the courtroom two minutes later.

“Your Honor, I think that everyone knows about the broadcasting of a hideous video that took place yesterday; I would like this video to be projected” Magnie raised his hand that held a DVD disc towards the court’s clerk.

Bruce inhaled sharply and his sparkling eyes turned rapidly to Mr. Collins who had already jerked up.

“Objection, Your Honor! This is really deplorable!”

Judge Moot hit his hammer on the shining wood of his bench; his face was distorted in anger.

“Mr. Magnie, I cannot understand how did you thought to bring this piece of junk to my court! There is no chance this court use this video for any purpose!”

Bruce had pressed his lips without looking at anyone however with the corner of his eyes he was eying Magnie and his client. Zucco hardly hid his displeasure for the Judge’s reprimand while Bruce could detect in Magnie’s immobile eyes that he wasn’t in any way affected by that stern scolding.

“I do sincerely apologize, Your Honor but the mere existence and publication of this video is very important to this sensitive guardianship case. I also ask from Mr. Wayne to forgive me for the distress I’m causing to him” Bruce rolled his eyes inside “yet we are here to decide what the best for a child is.”

Judge Moot hadn’t completely forgotten his wrath yet looked at Magnie and waved his hand.

“Continue but without any reference to the content of this video. And, Mr. Magnie, be extra careful otherwise I will charge you for contempt.”

“I will, Your Honor” he said grinning. “What I wanted to stress out is that unfortunate incidents like that can have a tremendous effect to an adolescent who is at the most sensitive stages of his personality formation. Such incidents can be very stressful for a child at Mr. Grayson’s age: socialization is very important at this age and we know how cruel sometimes children and young teens can become when such revelations take place for one of their peer’s parent or guardian.”
“Objection, Your Honor” Collins said calmly. “Mr. Wayne hasn’t done anything for which a child should be ashamed.”

“Mr. Wayne certainly hasn’t done” Magnie replied “and he is admirable yet we know how cruel our society is and especially the teens who still don’t understand many things.”

Collins cast a sideways glance to his colleague.

“According to your reasoning, Mr. Magnie, every individual who has suffered a sexual assault should lose the guardianship of their children because of some people’s lack of understanding. In your logic, the state should furthermore punish the people who were subjected to violence because some members of our society are insensitive.”

“Mr. Collins has a great point, Mr. Magnie” the Judge remarked.

Magnie licked his lips.

“Howevers you cannot deny that young Richard would be subjected to stress due to Mr. Wayne’s past and presence. I’m sure that you have noticed how reporters swarm the courthouse: today even more than the previous days. The most unfortunate thing is that this publicity isn’t due to some great achievement of Mr. Wayne but due to the mere fact that he was abused” Collins made to retort but Magnie made an appeasing gesture. “However what that video made obvious is that Mr. Wayne’s psychological state can’t be trusted for…”

“Objection!” Mr. Collins stood up. “Mr. Magnie’s assumptions are unfounded and insulting: my client was psychologically evaluated recently and the experts found him absolutely capable of…”

“Testifying in a court case against a crime lord which is completely different from raising a child” Magnie completed the phrase cocking an eyebrow.

Judge Moot eyed Magnie above his small round glasses.

“Mr. Magnie, let me remind you that Mr. Wayne isn’t the accused here so I suggest you be more careful of your insinuations. The court already has Mr. Wayne’s evaluation.”

“That evaluation is almost one year old, Your Honor. Since then unfortunately Mr. Wayne became the subject of many tragic incidents specifically a crazy criminal’s attacks and captivity from a hideous terroristic group during which he was the subject of experimentation with psychotropic drugs and such horrific tortures that rendered him paraplegic.”

Mr. Collins looked at Bruce concerned.

“Are you alright?”

Bruce grinned.

“Don’t worry about me, Mr. Collins.”

“I think that an updated evaluation is needed so that the court gets a proper idea” Magnie added.

“There is nothing in my client’s behavior that points to that need as you name it.”

Bruce felt a knot in his stomach and sensed Zucco’s jeering glare.

“I think there is, Mr. Collins” Magnie said almost triumphant and Judge Moot frowned. “Last night Mr. Wayne experienced a horrific flashback which made him delirious to the point of being unable to distinguish reality from nightmare; his mental stability was so badly affected that his senses were distorted resulting in causing burnings to himself with hot water. Richard witnessed all these…”

Zucco jerked to his feet.

“And my nephew was very upset and distraught! He couldn’t calm down and sleep; he called me at 4 o’clock in the morning trembling. This isn’t the proper environment for a child!”

Hammers began hitting Bruce’s head: Dick said everything to Zucco – he thought of that yet he didn’t want to believe it.

“Every family has such incidents” Mr. Collins replied tranquil thanks to his long experience. “Almost in every household children grow up with an adult who has a health condition; some of these conditions are chronic with daily incidents but children learn from that and become more responsible adults. Richard wasn’t in danger during this incident which after all was something very rare for Mr. Wayne – even a person without Mr. Wayne’s past could have a reaction like this to a highly stressful event as the broadcasting of that video.”

Magnie looked at his older colleague.

“Perhaps it would be useful if Richard testified everything he saw” he cocked an eyebrow “in case there is a doubt about that incident really happening.”

Mr. Collins was ready to reply but Bruce caught him to that.

“No, Mr. Magnie: nobody will doubt that incident: Richard told the truth. I had a flashback and I was disoriented for some minutes.”

Bruce waited for Mr. Collins to a secluded corner of the court house: he had asked from his lawyer to find who the woman spectator was – he didn’t want to show his personal interest.

After the two hours the hearing lasted he was a bit dizzy and his breath had become faster. Bruce had hidden it from everyone but now that he was alone, hidden from the hasty bystanders that crossed the court house’s corridors, he didn’t need to keep doing that. Besides now it was worse: his head was throbbing from the hammers of a bad migraine and images from last night’s flashback returned giving him punches from everywhere.

He wished he could wear Batman’s cowl right now chasing away Bruce’s traumas; Bruce’s weakness; he recalled the sense of the icy air of midnight Gotham; the sense of danger; the sense of freedom those nights he escaped from Falcone’s jail to sabotage him…

“I order you to cum for me, ya useless sonovabitch!” the crime lord roared to him.

Bruce could see himself lying on his back at the king size bed in the Falcone’s Manor master’s bedroom. The mobster had his wrists bound on the headboard and was thrusting in him with all his strength and rage.

“I want ya prick fly, ya bastard!” he barked pumping crudely his unresponsive length.

It was pain as his wrists were crushed in the leather, his body was impaled and his length was brutally abused. Yet the worse was the shame, besides he had learnt to endure the pain of the body.

But the really unbearable was that this came hours after his latest escapee as Batman; he had beaten to a pulp a pack of Falcone’s henchmen and it had felt so great as if he was free and wouldn’t have to go back. As if he wasn’t himself but someone else… Yet as soon as he took off the armor he was the same slave; he did come back because it was the only way and now he was enduring Falcone’s violent penetration; the humiliation…

Batman was roaring in his head demanding from him to stop taking that; the bat was staring at him with contempt, with pity…

The ring of his Cosmos brought him out of his reverie. It was Ms. Kent.

“How are you, dear? I heard what happened. I’m terribly sorry, sweetheart – they are monsters! If I had them here I’d smash his head.”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose and chuckled.

“I’m fine, Martha.”

“You are such a brave young man…Did Clark call you?”

Bruce licked his lips.

“No but it is better that way, Martha” he heard the woman’s angry intake of air “Please, do not say anything to him about not calling.”

“But…”

“Promise me, Martha.”

“As you wish, dear…Do you want me to come there?”

Bruce smiled.

“Thank you, Martha, you are wonderful. But you don’t have to make the trip here. I had much worse…”

“Certainly you did, dear” she sighed. “Remember that if you need anything you can call me.”

“I will, Martha…”

He bit his lip and his mind went to Clark…he never blamed him for choosing Diana – even if she was a fake – but now even more than before he was seeing that Clark was right to leave him. It was his mistake that their relationship even began; he knew that it wouldn’t go anywhere…

Of course there was the control that the fake Diana put on him that accelerated things…Maybe it was for the best; weren’t for the effect Clark would have realized that this relationship was wrong but would have postponed the end afraid of hurting him. Because Clark was so good and kind; he would slowly wither inside their relationship but would bit his lips and stay with him even if that made Clark miserable…

Even though he was absorbed in his thoughts he heard someone coming towards him but he didn’t show anything till the footsteps were near him.

“Mr. Wayne!”

Bruce smiled.
“Miss Lane, what a nice surprise.”
She gave him her hand for a handshake.
“Please call me Lois.”
“Only if you call me Bruce.”
“Fair enough!”
“I guess you are here to cover the latest events?” he asked nonchalant.
“No, I’m not here as reporter but as a friend…” she locked eyes with him. “I’m so sorry for what happened…”
“Thank you. It means so much for me.”
Lois cleared her throat.
“Clark is also very sorry” she added and Bruce cocked an eyebrow. “He sends his greetings.”
Bruce smiled.
“Lois, you don’t have to…” he shook his hand because he didn’t want to tell her that she was lying. “I know that Clark is a wonderful man and still cares …but…” he lolled his head.
Lois pursed her lips.
“I don’t know what is wrong with him.”
“He is still the great man we know; please, Lois, remember that.”
“It’s very hard to do that, Bruce: he seems the same but there are those changes...subtle but important” Bruce’s eyes flashed – Lois knew Clark better than he did and so she was able to notice the differences; Lois huffed “And you, my precious boy? How are you? You look pale…”
Bruce smiled.
“Nothing serious; I just didn’t sleep well last night.”
Lois pressed her lips.
“Flashbacks?” she asked sad and smiled to Bruce’s puzzled look “I read some psychology… I bet the hearing wasn’t the best medicine for that, huh?” Bruce shook his head. “I won’t ask for details” she chuckled “though the occupational curiosity itches me…It was very brave coming here today and facing all those reporters out there…ugh! Gotham’s reporters drive me mad!”

Another pair echoed coming slowly to their spot; Bruce was able to see Vicky Vale but Lois had to turn around.
“Hello, Mr. Wayne. Hello, Lois” she greeted them.
“How are you, Miss Vale?” Bruce asked.
“I am the one who should ask that” she said. “Mr. Wayne, I want you to know how sorry I am that this video was broadcasted through my show.”
“But thanks to you the broadcasting stopped” Lois pointed out and Vicky looked at her perplexed because till then Lois never hid her detest for the Gothamite.

“That is true and I’d like to thank you” Bruce added “you were fired for my sake.”

Vicky smirked.

“Actually I resigned. To tell you the truth I was bored and tired by this show. I always wanted something else; something better. And that pig Wizzie always made me sick. Well, I do realize that I was no better…” she twitched her eyebrows “I was too rude to you.”

“Don’t mention that.”

Lois drummed her index finger to her lips.

“If you want a job I can speak to Perry. Daily Planet needs dignified reporters.”

“Thank you for the dignified; I know you didn’t think much of me and I don’t blame you. Your proposition honors me but Gotham is my city and I’ll try to find something here.”

“I think that you will manage: you acted very bravely” Bruce said “and many editors will want to their staff the reporter who will take Bruce Wayne’s first interview.”

Vale’s eyes widened.

“Are you sure?”

“I know that you were one of the few reporters that weren’t in Falcone’s payroll and that says a lot for me; also, very few people have the guts to do what you did causing a small explosion to save a stranger’s dignity: this proves your high morals, Miss Vale.”

“I wanted this interview for myself” Lois said smiling “yet I think that you’ve made the right choice, Bruce.”

Superman flew over Metropolis enjoying the cool air of the night. He was keeping his ears and eyes open not only for anyone in need of help but also for signs of Intergang. Lois had dropped everything and ran to Gotham at Bruce’s side.

He licked his lips. She had reprimanded him for not doing the same but Lois couldn’t understand. Superman could have gone there yet it would have been fake: that old effect dragging his body there.

However that effect wasn’t there anymore: Bruce’s trick had failed and Superman had managed to fight off the initial urge to run to his side. The inoculation Jor El administered him was effective so his strength of will.

And now he felt free to dive into what he had with Diana…

Mr. Collins had informed Bruce that the woman in the court room was Zucco’s wife, Rebecca Irwin. However Bruce knew that she was more than that; he was sure that he had seen her again somewhere and now at his study was perusing his archives for the Zucco case on his Cosmos. He was glancing at Hero who was curled on the thick carpet and played with one of his fluffy toys; that was enough to make him smile and return to his work.
He nodded: exactly. Looking at the newspapers of the time John Grayson died he soon fell upon the picture of the same woman: she was the head of the ‘Build & Fit’ technicians that carried through the city gym’s renovation. She was brought in GCPD for questioning but naturally no charges were made against her and she was free.

However just the fact that the same woman appeared again as Zucco’s wife was enough to indicate that there was a connection between John Grayson’s death and Zucco especially since the company belonged to Zucco and Mr. Breizic had given him the tampered bolt. So this could be a good start for reopening the case: he had the paperwork that proved that Zucco was the owner of that company.

“Master Richard, please do wait…”

The door burst open and Bruce having heard Alfred’s voice managed to hide his Cosmos tablet under a pile of papers. Hero surprised, stood and stretched his agile body.

Dick stormed in the room and stood before his desk; the boy was upset and panting. His eyes were flashing. Bruce frowned.

“Richard, are you alright?”

Alfred came to the room, some panting coloring his breath.

“I am deeply sorry, Master Bruce.”

Bruce smiled.

“It’s okay, Alfred, thank you. Can you leave us alone?”

Alfred gave a courteous nod.

“As you wish, sir.”

As soon as the door closed the flushed boy unleashed the storm he had inside him.

“No, I’m not! Is that what you wanted?!”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I don’t understand.”

Dick clenched his waist with both hands.

“Till now my classmates respected and admired me for my father but now…” he huffed exasperated. “They sneer at me! I became a laughing stock!”

The boy’s voice was filled with rage but Bruce could discern his bitterness and sadness so he steered his wheelchair out of the desk and approached him.

“What happened, Richard?”

Dick snorted and slapped his own face.

“You pretend that you don’t understand?! Okay, I’ll make it clear! People were laughing behind my back and jeered me because of that video…’cause my guardian was fucked right to the ass!”

Bruce’s eyes narrowed.
“Do not use such vulgar language” he commented calmly.

“Why?” Dick snapped. “You don’t like to hear the truth?! That’s the truth! You were Falcone’s whore! A pussy!”

Bruce’s face lost its color but still he met the boy’s eyes calm.

“Is that your words or what you heard from your peers?”

Dick stayed speechless for a second; he waved his hands and frowned.

“That’s your problem? That’s bullshit! What counts is that it’s the truth: you’re what they say and everyone saw and knows every detail and they jeer and laugh…Why did you take me in your custody when you are what people are saying? To punish me for hating you?”

Bruce rubbed his forehead.

“I never wanted to punish you, Richard and…”

Dick leaned to him.

“Stop playing the victim, okay? Stop trying to make me pity you!”

Bruce’s eyes became blank: it was the second time that day that the word victim was addressed to him, this time coupled with pity and it hurt.

“Or since you are a victim stop pretending my father! My father was pride and nobody pitied him! And I feel proud for him! Till now I was an orphan; I didn’t have anything but I had my pride – my father’s name; I never felt ashamed. From the moment you forced me to live with you ruined my life but I had still my dignity – now you made me lost that as well! I feel ashamed because of you and I don’t want to go back to that school! Are you happy that you mucked me up with your shame?”

Bruce felt hammers drumming in his skull yet he didn’t show it to the boy.

“I never wanted anything like that, Dick…I’m sorry for what you suffered because of me but it is your school and it is your life so you must not let some people make you run away. Your father would never want you to be upset by these people…”

Dick grabbed the armrests and brought his face in front of Bruce’s.

“Quit from my guardianship! If you care for me as you brag prove it! quit and let me go!”

Bruce locked eyes with him.

“Is that why you told your uncle what happened yesterday?” he asked without any trace of accusation.

Dick’s eyes trembled puzzled and suddenly his rage evaporated.

“What?” he asked letting go of the armrests. “How do you know? Someone eavesdropped on me?”

Bruce shook his head.

“Of course not. Your uncle brought that up in the court as a proof of my inappropriateness.”

Dick widened his eyes and shook his head: no, that was…His uncle couldn’t have done that; Dick didn’t want him to.

“I… I didn’t tell him what happened to use it in the court… I just… I was… I just wanted to speak with someone.”

Bruce inhaled deeply.

“And he judged that the end justifies the means…”

“No! I didn’t want anyone to learn about last night; I knew it was your secret and that it’d be a devious blow!”

Bruce nodded appreciatively.

“I know you’re a good boy, Richard.”

But the boy shook his head.

“He shouldn’t say that! I didn’t want him to.”

“You told him so?”

“No, but Tony… Tony understands me and I’m sure he’d never do anything I wouldn’t want.”

“Maybe you shouldn’t be so sure” the boy lifted his eyes to Bruce’s pale face. “Maybe your wants don’t coincide with his.”

Dick closed his eyes and then looked at Bruce.

“What… what happened?”

Bruce grinned.

“The court ordered that I be assessed. If I want to sustain your guardianship.”

Dick gulped: he could imagine the impact when the reporters found out about Wayne’s psychiatric assessment.

“And what would you do?”

“Visit the psychiatrist the court will suggest.”

Dick couldn’t understand; he licked his lips.

“Why? Why are you enduring all these? You know that I hate you. From the moment I came here I’m giving you Hell; I’m constantly telling you off. Why accepting to be subjected to this while you easily can quit? I’m not your problem.”

Bruce lolled his head.

“Your grandmother trusted me with your well being and I won’t betray her trust whatever I have to go through. She believed that I would protect you and I’ll do that. And even if you hate me… I care about you and understand what you’ve been through – even your hatred” he inhaled “and I don’t trust that man to take you under his authority. Believe me, Richard, it is not stubbornness: the moment your grandmother is back you will never have to see me again but till then I won’t let this man hurt you.”
Dick looked at Bruce determined.

“I’ll come to the court and say that I lied.”

Bruce shook his head and grinned.

“You won’t do that: I admitted that I had that fit. You’re not a liar, Richard and I won’t let anyone call you that.”

Dick pressed his lips; he made to say something but after two attempts he turned and left running.

Bruce hid his face in his palms and then ran his fingers through his hair huffing.

Alfred entered hesitant the study and Bruce looked at him.

“Master Bruce…”

The younger man shook his head.

“Maybe I was wrong, Alfred…”

“No, Master Bruce.”

But Bruce steered his wheelchair towards the door and Alfred made to follow him.

“No, Alfred, stay here” Bruce smiled with pressed lips to him and patted his wrinkled hand.

“As you wish, sir…” Alfred mumbled sad watching his young master leaving.

Bruce ended up to the back salon and then to the garden that was cast under the early night’s light dark colors. The cold air was refreshing but it couldn’t cool his mind where thousands thoughts boiled deteriorating the drumming of a full migraine. The beauty and peace of the night; the tranquility of the perfectly groomed garden made the last 48 hours’ exhaustion sink deeply in his bones and flesh.

His body throbbed and made the burnings hurt more; his back ached reminding him that he was still healing; weak and fragile.

_Falcone’s whore! A pussy! Everyone laughed…_

Hero had followed him and meowed drawing his attention. The kitten was sitting on the marble floor, at the side of his wheelchair and was staring at him with sparkling eyes.

Bruce gave him a faint smile and took him on his lap only for the kitten to stand on his back legs and perch to his chest. The human caressed his head.

“Hero” he sighed.

He was ready to speak but he heard something and looked at the star flooded horizon. Thor landed softly before him.

“Am I intruding?”

“Of course not” Bruce answered. “Welcome back.”
They grabbed each other’s forearms; the warriors’ greeting.

“I heard about the video” the blond said not wanting to lie and Bruce nodded.

“I appreciate your honesty, Thor.”

Thor kneeled before him and Hero looked at the god puzzled.

“I’m sorry, Bruce…that was monstrous! Preposterous! Horrible! What kind of a sick mind could do such a think? Have you any idea of the scum’s identity?”

Bruce tranquility petted Hero.

“I just know who didn’t do it…but I leave that to police…”

Thor lolled his head to the side and pressed his lips; his eyes were sparkling ready to water.

“You’re so tired…exhausted…and you suffer not only physically” he touched Bruce’s right forearm; he had noticed how the human was holding awkwardly that limb and Bruce twitched with the gentle touch. “I’m sorry; I didn’t want to hurt you.”

“Don’t…it’s not real pain…my mind sometimes…”

“I was…I was in Gotham all day” he mumbled “I wanted to talk to you, to say…” he shrugged and smiled uncomfortable “what I’m saying now. But you were busy…I mean, you should have been resting but you…” he shook his head “so strong, so brave; never stopping fighting; never hiding…”

Bruce looked at Hero and tapped his pink nose.

“It’s not bravery or strength…” he shrugged. “I’m not ill…so, no reason to stay at home.”

Thor nodded.

“Not brave? With all these reporters attacking you with questions…I wanted to appear and chase them away but I knew you didn’t want that. The truth is I didn’t find the…” he chuckled “the courage to speak to you…during all these hours: I didn’t know what to say to someone great as you…Sad? Angry? I was afraid that whatever I might have told you would be unworthy of you…”

Bruce closed his eyes feeling exhaustion eroding the healthy part of his spine. He didn’t know what to answer to this; he didn’t want to hurt the god: he had hurt enough people.

“I felt that someone was watching” he said instead.

“I feel like a prowler…”

“You’re not…”

“You must be disappointed now you learnt that the one who had his eyes on you wasn’t… Superman.”

Bruce smiled.

“I knew it wasn’t Superman” Thor frowned and Bruce blinked. “I can feel his presence.”

Thor nodded.
“Of course…” he smiled “did he…”

Bruce shook his head.

“No and he shouldn’t. He did the right thing not calling” he said determined.

Thor shook his head and huffed exasperated.

“I feel disgusted that someone of our kind treated you like this” Bruce narrowed his eyes. “Bruce, I wish you stopped making excuses for Superman.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I’m a realist, Thor; I see things clear. There is darkness inside me; darkness that absorbs every light cast on it. Beings like Superman or you are made for the light; you’re bright as suns” he smiled. “But my darkness can’t be lighted by anything; it’s like a black hole: swallows every light. Do you know why? Because your light is not compatible with a creature of darkness like me. Bats can’t live under the sun’s light. Eventually I’d have put off Superman’s pure light. So, yes, I’m happy he saved himself from me and he is indifferent to anything that happens to me” his breath was a bit fast and Hero rubbed to his neck purring.

Thor couldn’t fight the urge and cupped the human’s face with both hands locking their eyes but Bruce yanked his head and Thor detached his hands blushing. The god stood up realizing he had made something he shouldn’t have.

“I’m sorry…it was nothing more than a friendly gesture: I swear.”

Bruce nodded and settled Hero to his lap.

“Do not feel bad, Thor…I know you are kind and noble but you have to understand Superman…don’t blame him and try to see the truth about me…If you had seen that video you’d have realized that my past will haunt me forever: I don’t let that past determine my life but I won’t make again the mistake to bring another person in my darkness” Thor gulped. “I love my darkness; this darkness kept me alive all these years; I’m used to living in that darkness but I won’t impose my darkness to anyone else even if that person believes mistakenly that wants to share it.”

He stabbed Thor with his eyes and the blond felt thunders running his spine.

“Your darkness is brighter than any other light I ever lay eyes upon…” the god said with conviction.
“Mr. Wayne!”

“Mr. Wayne!”

The ruckus from the reporter group that swarmed the street outside Gotham’s courthouse was really confusing however Bruce Wayne was eyeing them completely calm though his wheelchair was trapped among people pointing their microphones like guns to him. Not to mention the cascade of flashes from the cameras all over.

“You saw the video?”

Bruce smiled.

“I know about the broadcasting but there was no need for me to see the content…”

He made to brush the control screen on the chair’s armrest to move ahead but seeing that the mob didn’t have any intention to withdraw he let his hand fall on his lap.

“How do you feel, Mr. Wayne?”

Bruce looked at the man who had asked and raised his eyebrows.

“I think there can’t be much originality in that.”

“He made to brush the control screen on the chair’s armrest to move ahead but seeing that the mob didn’t have any intention to withdraw he let his hand fall on his lap.

“How do you feel, Mr. Wayne?”

Bruce looked at the man who had asked and raised his eyebrows.

“I think there can’t be much originality in that.”

“Police located and arrested the man that hacked GCN’s signal.”

Bruce nodded.

“Yes, I’m aware of that.”

“Police says that the hacker was just a pawn and the culprit was someone else.”

“Do you suspect someone?” a young reporter asked.

“I’m not a detective” Bruce smiled though his smile was faint and looked at the one who asked him “do you?”

The man’s colleagues laughed as constables from the building’s security rushed there pushing away the reporters and forming a corridor for Bruce to approach the ramp leading inside the building.

“Are you afraid that this video would lose you the court?”

The young billionaire continued his path.

“Have you anything to say to the one who publicized that video?”

Bruce stopped, looked at the woman who asked and yanked slightly his head.

“That distributing child pornography material is a federal offence.”

He drove his wheelchair fast through the ramp ignoring the rest of the buzzing questions that were launched at him.
The screen split in two, one part showing Bruce moving into the court house and the other showing the newscaster from the studio.

“Despite Mr. Wayne’s collected demeanor this morning it became known that the said video caused him a serious fit last night which was mentioned in the court and created major questions about Mr. Wayne’s stability and thus suitability for the role of guardian – Judge Moot ordered for the young billionaire to be evaluated by a mental health professional. Meanwhile, Gotham is shocked from the revelation of eye witnesses that Mr. Wizze, the president of GTV, didn’t have in fact no intention to stop the broadcasting of the video which was eventually stopped when Vicky Vale caused a serious blackout to the station…”

“Wayne has a crazy, pathological need to attract attention” Diana’s haughty voice startled Superman whose focus was on the TV screen in Diana’s living room; that was the reason he didn’t hear her coming.

When he arrived, half an hour ago, the Amazon Princess wasn’t there so Superman didn’t have anything to keep him from watching the evening news and specifically the footage from Bruce’s arrival at the courthouse this morning.

He closed the TV and smiled at her. The long rectangular window was slowly closing after Diana’s entrance. Superman really gaped on her proud, imposing figure: beauty and strength bound together in harmony and her minimal attire made his body scream from longing: her dynamic presence as she stared with contempt at the closed now TV screen, her naked muscle bound arms adorned only with the wide golden bracelets were folded over her rich breasts that seemed ready to pop out of the corset.

He stood and hugged her capturing her hot, ruby red lips thirsty for her perfume; for her velvet flesh. “It’s pathetic!” she exclaimed and Superman scratched his head uncomfortable.

“My kiss?” he chuckled and she caressed his cheek.

“Of course not, Kal El. I just came from rescuing a sinking ship’s crew” Superman frowned because he hadn’t heard any SOS signal. “Those humans are so weak that makes me sick” she smiled “yet we have to take care of them, huh? We want to save them.”

Superman smiled and nodded.

“It is the meaning of our existence.”

She smirked and caressed his hair sending goose bumps to his body.

“However some of them are really pathetic to look…” her eyes looked at the closed now TV. “Wayne…he uses his disgrace to gain people’s attention…and yours.”

Superman’s smile vanished.

“Bruce doesn’t like attention on him.”

She chuckled and shook her head.

“I just saw that…” she remarked snidely “he could have used the back entrance of that building. That creature is so devious: he certainly knows that you were touched by his new adventure and showed off to draw your attention to him.”
Superman shook his head.

“I don’t think that’s the case, Diana; he doesn’t have any reason to believe that I care about his… misfortune” his eyes dropped because suddenly the fact that he didn’t even called him nudged him bad. “On the contrary, what he did was a message to the person that orchestrated the broadcasting: Bruce is spitting at his face his bravery manifesting that the culprit didn’t manage to break or make him hide.”

The pride in his voice didn’t escape his attention and neither Diana’s who arched an eyebrow.

“You’re really proud of him?!” puzzlement, exasperation and irony blended in her voice. “I don’t think that it is either brave or honorable to show yourself after the revelation of your total disgrace. He should have hidden himself and his disgrace and not parading proud of that!”

Superman frowned and crossed his arms over the chest.

“Why do you hate him so much?” he asked with true wonder. “I didn’t consider you able of such hatred.”

Diana yanked her head proud but her face was turned into stone from offense.

“It is not hatred; it is plain contempt and scorn for a man who took advantage of your generosity and kindness to drag you into his disgrace” she cocked her eyebrows. “He knew that he wasn’t the proper one for you but still trapped you: and why not? Years and years he was witnessing whores doing exactly the same and when he had the chance to trap the greatest being of this planet he used everything he was taught. He shouldn’t have dragged you into a situation that was certain that would be detrimental for your status.”

Superman grinned and his eyes became blank.

“Actually, Bruce tried hard to keep me at a distance; he insisted that I shouldn’t engage to a relationship with him. It was his concern for my best interest that kept our relationship secret.”

Diana shook her head annoyed from him defending Bruce yet she smiled snidely.

“Not for your interest, Kal El…” she said slyly. “He just was scared that he might get targeted by your enemies” she chuckled “and the attack in Thassos made that worse: it’s not accidental that he became so bad to you after those creatures attacked him…I bet he was scared shitless…”

Superman felt a surge of anger that he was aware that it was irrational.

“It wasn’t fear that made Bruce want our relationship secret and he didn’t become bad to me: I was bad to him!”

The Amazon frowned.

“Are you defending him?!” she demanded exasperated. “You forgot Thor? I bet your human angel considered him safer than you so played with him while being with you: it is better to have two gods guarding you instead of one, right?”

Superman shook his head. The thought of Thor with Bruce still made his insights clench.

“I was the one with the parallel affair if you remember: Bruce didn’t have anything with anyone.”

Diana yanked her head backwards and sniggered with half closed eyes.
“I love your naivety! He really learned all the tricks, didn’t he? I bet Thor last night was comforting the human – keeping him busy in his bed… I don’t believe we are quarrelling for his sake! It makes me feel inferior: I’m an Amazon, Kal El: it is beyond me to argue for my mate’s ex. So if you feel the carnal longing for him you’re free to go and relief yourself.”

Superman remembered that night on a Metropolis rooftop: Bruce would never accept that role. And Diana was upset by this discussion. Diana was giving him so much; she made him happy; he couldn’t imagine his life without her and wouldn’t let the leftovers of a dirty effect ruin that. So he smiled.

“I didn’t go to him: I’m here with you and I won’t change that for anything.”

Diana smiled and wrapped her arms around his neck slithering her rich lips through his neck line causing Superman close his eyes and glue her body on his. Their eyes locked.

“You are the only one for me, Diana…” he said and his hands pushed down her corset to free her erect breasts. “The sunshine in my life…”

His voice sounded much too exhilarated which made Dick angrier.

“Dick! How great you called!”

Dick gritted his teeth.

“I don’t think so, Tony!” he snarled.

“Dick, what’s wrong, champ? Did Wayne make your life difficult again?” he asked with a deep frown in his voice.

Dick rolled his eyes which shone slyly.

“Why? Something happened that would make him angry with me?”

A long pause as the adult was thinking hard the proper answer.

“He doesn’t need something specific to be mean to you. And now with the court…”

Dick chuckled loud enough for his uncle to hear.

“Actually, I’m mean to him all the time… So you say that the court is going badly for him?”

“From the start, buddy; he has no chance.”

Now Dick couldn’t hold his anger anymore: Tony not only used something he had confided in him but also didn’t have the decency to say it openly.

“Tony, you had no right to do that!”

“What do you mean, Dick? And why are you so upset? I know that the video with Wayne might have caused problems to your school life but…”

“Tony, cut the crap! And why you don’t say the truth?”

“Wait, wait… Are you calling me a liar?” his voice was hurt but Dick could discern some anger well
“Not only liar, Tony… And since you won’t admit what you did I’ll help you. You had no right to use in the court what I confided in you last night!” he almost growled. “Wayne was down and as much as I dislike the guy I don’t kick someone already down!

Zucco cleared his throat.

“Look, champ…”

“No, Tony, that was…”

“It was for your own good, Dick: you’re too young to understand how this world works…”

Wayne’s words came back to Dick:

And he judged that the end justifies the means…

“I don’t believe that the end justifies the means, Tony!”

Zucco sighed from the other side of the line.

“He whined to you? How predictable!”

“Stop doing that! Wayne didn’t whine! We are talking about you now, Tony! I trusted you and you betrayed my trust in the worst way!”

“Calm down, Dick; I didn’t betray your trust” he retorted sighing. “You didn’t say anything about keeping it a secret, remember?”

Dick growled frustrated and yanked his head backwards.

“Is this really your excuse?! Oh, Tony! You could have asked me! You made me look like a monster!”

“Dick, you’re giving much value to Wayne…You forgot what he has done to you?”

Dick licked his lips and gulped recalling the past months he knew Wayne.

Your family was murdered because of him, remember? He accepted to become your guardian while he knew your feelings but he didn’t care, did he? He knows that you want to be with me but still pursuit this court to keep you against your will. I’m sorry, champ but I thought that you saw through the big chance before us: we have many odds to win this now that judge knows how unstable Wayne is.”

“He isn’t unstable…But this shit video was too much for someone who suffered such shit. You were ready to bring me to court to testify what I saw without giving a shit about what I wanted or what people would think about me…I offered Wayne to come and say that I lied.”

“What?!” Zucco’s rage distorted his voice before he realized and calmed down. “Who’s the one betraying the other now? Are you nuts, Dick?!”

Dick frowned hearing that voice.

“No but I wanted to do the right thing!”
“You’re gonna ruin everything, Dick! You don’t understand that Wayne plays you for a fool? He knows that you’re a good boy and takes advantage of you playing the victim. Dick, you can’t do that!”

Dick closed his eyes and shook his head.

“He didn’t play the victim…the opposite.”

Zucco growled frustrated.

“So you betray our common goal? C’m on, Dick; you can’t testify that you lied.”

Dick shook his head.

“I won’t testify.”

A big sigh of relief from the other end of the line.

“I’m glad you got your senses…”

“I won’t testify because Wayne doesn’t want people think that I’m a liar: he prefers everyone to believe him unstable than have me go through trial and being scowled for lying…He…”it was difficult to say it out loud “he wants to protect even though I…”

Zucco couldn’t tolerate the boy’s remorse and the consequences this might have.

“Dick, don’t fall for that! This is his game: you know that the one who really cares for you is me.”

“Goodnight, Tony.”

“Dick, I’m sorry, alright?” he lowered his tone and changed his voice to sound regretful. “I was carried away from my concern about your well being and my agony to help you get free. Did you change your mind about being with me?”

Dick yanked his head backwards and closed his eyes.

“No, I didn’t. Bye…”

He brushed the scene to end the dial and collapsed to his mattress sighing dropping his Smart Phone. He ran his hands through his hair; his mind was in a storm of thoughts battling against each other.

The knocks on his door startled him.

“Come” he was expecting Alfred so it was a surprise seeing Jason marching inside. “I was gonna call you…”

Jason jumped to the bed, sprawled and bound his hands under the back of his neck.

“Big minds think alike, huh? I thought ya wanna yar buddy after everythin’ today – I know what scum us kids are …”

“Did you find a way to break into the Manor?” he thought that his friend had sneaked to him.

Jason pursed his lips.

“Yup! The best! I pressed the bell button – ya know, that ancient lookin’ one? - an’ Alfie opened – he’ll brin’ us biscuits an’ hot chocolate. So what’s up, man? They gave ya a hard time, huh? I can come to yar school an’ teach one or two things…”

Dick sighed and lied down beside him.

“I don’t care ‘bout these motherfuckers anymore…”

Jason goggled at him mock awed.

“Wow! ‘Motherfuckers’! Ya’re really takin’ the bad road, huh?”

Dick rolled his eyes.

“You’re right…’bout the bad road but not for the ‘motherfuckers’. You saw Wayne?”

“Nope, why the sudden interest?”

Dick inhaled.

“Last night Wayne had a nasty nightmare ‘bout what that video showed…and then he had a fit or something and I saw everything…and then I was so shaken that I called Tony and told him…”

Jason nodded; he could imagine that this wasn’t the best choice.

“So?”

“I told him what happened and he used it in the court…”

Jason pouted.

“So? You hate Wayne…” he shrugged.

Dick grabbed the pillow and hit Jason with that.

“I might hate him but I didn’t want his suffering to be used against him!”

Jason cocked his eyebrows and pouted.

“Nor the news make a party ‘bout that, huh?” Dick widened his eyes and Jason nodded mutter-of-fact “yup! They rave! Ya told everythin’ to Zucco…what did ya expect?”

Dick shook his head.

“I never expected him to do that…I thought he would think like me…that he wouldn’t…I’m pissed, Jay! He made me seem like a heartless asshole!”

“Maybe Zucco doesn’t care about yar image, pal…”

“I’m so confused, Jay…I feel awful for what was done to Wayne ‘cause of me…and when I returned from practice I told him off ‘bout kids jeering me…I didn’t know…but…later when I heard what Tony did I offered to go to the court and say that I lied…but Wayne didn’t accept.”

Jason widened his eyes.

“Why?”

Dick pressed his lips and lowered his head.
“He didn’t want to expose me…he didn’t want people to speak ill of me…that I’m a liar…”

Jason pouted and scratched his head.

“I told ya that the man wasn’t as bad as ya thought him…” Dick didn’t answer in any way. “An’ now?”

“He is going to be assessed by a shrink to see if he’s stable enough to be my guardian…”

“Fuck!”

“I prefer to be with Tony any time yet after this…I’m so confused…I mean, I still…hate Wayne but” he sighed “I also feel bad for him.”

Jason rolled his eyes.

“Maybe ya need to go to that shrink as well?” Dic hit him again with the pillow. “I told ya I don’t like Zucco an’ ya saw: he made ya seem like a brat while Wayne preferred being called loony than have ya called liar: he coulda claim that ya lied in the first place but he didna.”

Dick huffed.

“I feel shit…like I ashamed my loved ones…”

“It’s not yar fault, man…ya didna do anythin’. Ya offered to correct yar mistake.”

“Still…it’s not enough, Jay…” he growled frustrated and punched the mattress.

Bruce was lying to his bed feeling relieved for that: those two days seemed endless and though he wouldn’t admit to anyone he felt exhausted.

His bedroom was cast in deep dark except for the warm light of the lazily dancing flames inside the fireplace.

This time he had taken Leslie’s sedative without anyone pressing him because he needed the deep, dreamless sleep it could provide. And sleep came really fast with Hero’s relaxing purring on his side – he had reassured Selina that he would take the sedative so she didn’t have to worry for him. Bruce didn’t want her to lose precious moments with Steve for his sake.

Even though his sleep was deep and undisturbed thoughts swirled like ghosts in his mind: Dick’s rage when he learnt his uncle’s deed, Vicky Vale losing her job to protect him, Lois’ rush to come see him, Martha’s concern and love, Clark’s indifference – Thor’s baby eyes looking at him with so much sympathy. He wished it was only sympathy…

He didn’t want anything else for the kind god… Bruce twisted a bit under the blankets. No more of that… Thor like Clark was different than him…they had nothing to do with him. They were light and he was darkness…He was pain.

He heard a slow, content breath near his face; Bruce knew that it was Oliver Queen who watched him sleeping on the bed of that hotel’s suite. And then he saw the man putting the shoes to Bruce’s feet.

The ablaze green of Queen’s eyes was on him:
“I think you know that I understand you more than anyone other...because I feel the same” his cheek had almost touched Bruce’s and he felt Queen shivering. “Some people don’t have to know each other much: it’s like being together for an eternity. I know the darkness you live in and nobody else could understand...”

Wizze was inside the lift that took him to his luxurious penthouse. He was living alone three years now after his divorce – his wife had demanded a fortune to give it to him.

He was infuriated and was huffing through the ascending. He had stayed 24 hours in jail before that idiot lawyer managed to bail him out. At the same time, GTV was still black due to the damage that bimbo Vale caused and that led to losses of millions! Not to mention the sue from Wayne Enterprises since Vale took care of informing everyone that he had no intention of stopping the signal.

He kicked the lift’s doors before they opened and walked to his door cursing. He got inside and headed to the vast living room without turning any light on.

Suddenly, all lights opened and clowns jumped from everywhere with firearms; they withdraw and the Prince of Clowns walked forward with a hand camera on his shoulder his eye on the lens.

“Heeeeeello, Mister Wiiiizzzzzzzze! Smiiiiile! You’re on Can--did Camera!”

Wizze gulped and cold sweat covered his body and face: he had forgotten Joker and his ridiculous love for Wayne.

“I… I didn’t do anything, Mr. Joker” Joker lolled his head to the side along with the camera. “They hacked my signal; I couldn’t stop it!”

Joker touched his finger to his lip thoughtful and suddenly threw the camera to one of his goons and conjured a blade which the next second was touching Wizze’s lips.

“Mmm... I seeee you’re a clever boyyyyy... right to the point!” he narrowed his eyes “Yar lips are a bit pale for the screen... need some color, my friend... Reeeeeed...” the blade flashed and blood splattered allover Wizze’s mouth.

The GTV president yelled and moved his hands to touch his injured lips only for Joker to kick him in the groin sending him on his knees. The man began crying.

“It wasn’t my fault! Please!”

Joker leaned over him and brought his mouth close to his ear.

“You humiliated my Brucie... You hurt him... Nobody had the right to see him like this... Cops might have released you but Joker is the ultimate Judge here” hearing Joker speaking without dragging the words was terrorizing.

A second blade appeared to his other hand and both blades flashed in the air and became hot as they attacked the kneeled man’s clothes scratching flesh. Wizze’s scared cries were melody for Joker.

When the jester stopped with a manic but determined glint in his eyes Wizze was completely naked and his body was covered with superficial but painful scratches. The man had literary pissed himself and was sobbing.

“Do you like being naked, Wiiiizzeee boy?”

“He writes on camera, Boss!” the goon with the camera exclaimed thrilled. Joker lollled his head to him and shook his head.

“I’m the GOooooAT director, baaaby – know a talent when I see it…” Wizzie’s sobs had subsided a bit from Joker’s change in attention but then without even seeing it a hand slapped him twice sending him to the thick carpet. “You like slaps? You enjoyed seeing Brucie being slapped?” He circled him cleaning his nails with the blade and then suddenly kicked him in his plumb belly causing a new round of sobs.

“Since you liked so much that video I say we make a reeeeeemake with you as the star – HEHEHE! I bet many channels will want that blockbuster. The cam is already rooooling!”

“Nooo, no, please!” Joker fisted Wizzie’s head and yanked it to lock eyes with him.

“Why? Since you think that having a stiiiick drilling your ass makes millions let’s do it…I’m sure your fat ass will make money; tooooooo bad you won’t take any…HEHEHEHEHEHEHE! Poetic irony – my favorite joke ever! Bring the proooooops!”

Two of his goons brought in a table and a third one dragged a machine with a dildo attached: it was the biggest dildo Wizze ever saw and he began sobbing.

“Help! Help please!” he shrieked desperately panicked because he knew that the damned penthouse was soundproof.

Joker lolled his head to the side and eyed him curious.

“You enjoyed seeing petit Bruce being ripped by a monstrous stick; time you seeeeee how funny it really is” he clenched his jaw and kicked the man’s exposed length making the man slump. “Tie him spread eagled!”

“No, no, please, no!” he yelled as goons grabbed him. “Please!”

Joker brought his face to the man’s.

“Brucie was crying and begging and you made it a show…”

“Not me…not me, Mr. Joker…that fucking hacker!” Joker breathed like an angry beast.

“He’ll have his 15 minutes fame too but someone gave him that video…Why not you?”

“Pleaaaaaseeee!”

“Boys, boys, boys, I think you’re a bit hasty…” Everyone turned to rectangular frame leading there from the bedroom; Catwoman stood there holding her whip.

Joker licked his fingers and groomed his hair walking towards her.

“Whataaaaat’s new, pussycat?” he began singing the famous song and Catwoman snorted. “Wooooo, woooo…” he cleared his throat and got serious “How may I help you?”

“That bug of shit is mine!”

Joker giggled and then hiccuped.

“Youuuuu’re too popular, Wizzeee! I have unsettled business with him – he played with my wife’s honor” he winked to her “aaaaand, c’mon, Kitty: I know that women get desperate sometimes buuuuuuut you caaaan fiiiiind better than him” he twitched his eyebrows suggestively and fixed his jacket’s lapels “gorgeous, family men clowns active in every field?”

She cocked an eyebrow and snorted.

“Keep dreaming, handsome!”

Joker cast a sideways glance to his goons.

“Handsome... She fancies me, booooyyyyyy!” but suddenly his face became dead serious “Are you connected with Brucie as well?” he asked wickedly.

Catwoman shook her head smiling.

“No, I’m pissed he fired Vale: her show was my favorite…”

“HUHUHUHUHUUUUUU! Wanna play him in cards?” he pulled out of his pocket a deck but as he shuffled them every card had his face on. “Oooooops! It’s marked! Ts…ts…ts…Well, youuuu liiiike strip poker?” he twitched his eyebrows pointedly.

Catwoman rolled her eyes.

“Sorry, handsome, not my game…”

She slashed her whip to the air smashing the lamps casting the entire room into darkness. Exclamations of puzzlement filled the space as Catwoman enabled her night vision. She stormed at the confused goons who held Wizze and with a kick sent both flying to the opposite wall.

“Stop her!” Joker cried figuring out her plan.

However Catwoman had already grabbed her pray and crashed on the whole wall window landing on the balcony of the next floor; Selina had studied the building and knew where her dive would lead but Wizze howled scared.

She jerked her whip and hooked it around the fire escape of the opposite alley. Then she jumped keeping him on her with one arm– something that disgusted her but she ignored the nausea for her goal’s sake.

As soon as she landed on the filthy cement dropped the scared man. He collapsed like a sack of potatoes; he was naked and the cold pierced him so he was trembling but Selina knew that terror was the main reason.

“You’re not feeling so strong now, huh?” she jeered him.
Wizze relieved that he was safe from Joker raised his head.

“Th…thank you for saving me…I’ll give you whatever you… you want…”

She rolled her eyes and snorted.

“Maybe a show for cats?!” she spat his face “I didn’t save you, asshole! I just wanted you for myself!”

Wizze’s eyes widened shocked; shock that became terror seeing Catwoman stretching her fingers and sharp 3 inches nails popping up from the tips: the razor like nails flashed to the dim light coming from the distant public lamps. Selina was grateful to Tony for adding that small detail to her costume:

“What’s a cat without sharp nails?” he had said playfully winking.

“Wait, wait! Why are you doing this? I’m sorry if I did something…”

She shook her head and smiled devilishly.

“Cats like to play with dirty rats!”

Her nails flashed to the half darkness and Wizze cried as his face was grazed savagely; Selina’s eyes were still, flashing like lightnings seeing again Bruce sleeping in her hug still shaking a bit in his sleep despite the sedative Leslie had given him: his beautiful face was so pale and drained… Tony had told her how they had found him in the bathroom and every phrase Tony had said pushed her fingers to the man’s flesh.

She was ready to rip his throat.

“Stop!” a voice she knew came from the alley’s entrance and she closed her eyes frustrated.

“It’s none of your business!” she changed her voice realizing why Bruce always did that while in armor.

Confident strides approached her and a respiration so familiar.

“You’re ready to kill a defenseless man: it is my business.”

She was sniffing from rage.

“Gotham is not your city and you can’t understand its rules: clear off!”

The footsteps stopped right next to her and her body reacted the way it was used to.

“I won’t: first of all, because Bruce is my friend and will be distraught knowing that someone died because of him and second because Catwoman isn’t a murderer.”

She snorted.

“This has nothing to do with your friend – I have my own issues with the man” if she told him that she was there to take revenge for Bruce he would understand who she was.

Steve walked in front of her meeting her eyes.

“He is going to be tried and punished according to the law for everything he has done: you don’t have to dirt your hands with him.”
She lolled her head and crooked her lips.

“Cut the fairytale with me! And believe me if I don’t do it Joker will…”

“Police will guard him.”

She arched her eyebrows.

“Great use of citizens’ taxes!”

“We are not here to judge.”

“What do you know, you obsolete soldier?!” she made to attack Wizze again but Steve held her wrists and their faces came close. Her enraged pants blended with his calm ones. “You don’t have a girlfriend, big guy?” she asked slyly “’cause you seem a bit horny…”

Steve flashed.

“I do; a very special girl whom I love.”

“Then go to her and let me finish my job!” she growled and jerked her hands to free them but he insisted.

“I won’t let you kill someone even him!”

Catwoman jerked her knee and hit his groin; his surprise and pain was perfect for her to use the whip to launch herself to the rooftop.

“Asshole!” she shouted before vanishing leaving Steve shaking his head and trying to catch his pained breath.

Tony watched the railing of the lift as it brought him down to the cave. He hardly contained his frustration huffing every now and then. As the lift slowed to stop Tony saw Bruce in front of his working bench watching the flow of data in the five screens. A few feet away Hero was curled on the Tumbler’s hood and stared at the hanging bats waiting patiently to make his attack.

Tony smiled and walked towards his friend who turned his head.

“Good morning, Tony.”

“Morning. The fur ball is not going to make peace with your flying mates…” Bruce chuckled. “He reminds me of Tom with Jerry…He grew up, huh?”

Bruce smiled fondly.

“He did; he is a husky kitten.”

Tony looked at the screens.

“Zucco, reports on possible Joker and Crane sightings, Intergang…” he counted cocking an eyebrow. “You should be resting, you know…after everything that happened and definitely not being in that cold and humid place.”

Bruce pressed his lips: it was obvious that Tony had no intention to give up his over protectiveness.
“I’m fine, Tony: Leslie examined me and two days have passed already. I’m made of rough material, you know.”

Tony crossed his arms over his chest and shook his head.

“I heard that Zucco’s lawyer said everything about that incident in the court. That brat spilled everything, huh?” he huffed. “I wonder why you put up with this…and you accepted to get evaluated by psychiatrist?”

Bruce nodded though he could read his friend’s distaste and anger.

“For his sake?! Mercy, Bruce! He witnessed your suffering and used it to humiliate you even more! The boy doesn’t have the minimum of decency to respect someone’s pain! And you agreed to see a psychiatrist? What were you thinking?”

“I was evaluated for Falcone’s trial as well” he answered calmly.

“Yes but it wasn’t like this! And this brat doesn’t worth it!”

Bruce would like to be able to stand but instead he fixed his eyes on Tony’s.

“Let me decide that, Tony. I’ve spoken with Dick and he did speak to his uncle but he didn’t want that incident to be revealed.”

Tony huffed and shook his head.

“Yeah…sure. And you believed him?”

“He had no reason to lie: if he had done it with that purpose he’d have bragged about…he hates me after all. And I saw in his eyes that he was honest.”

“As Superman was?” Bruce’s eyes fell before regaining their indifference. “You were saying the same for him, remember? Defending him all the time…and what he did? Betrayed you with that bimbo Amazon and now doesn’t give a shit about you…”

“Are you watching the stolen objects?” Bruce preferred to change the subject and Tony yanked his head ruffling his hair with both hands.

“I’m sorry…” he said regretting his outburst.

Bruce shook his head.

“You didn’t do anything…so is there anything new on Luthor?”

“He is definitely assembling a machine with the items – a really bizarre machine following a code or something that doesn’t match anything we know. Luthor seems to be in a hurry.”

“I think that this machine is crucial for what they are planning.”

“Mannheim…”

“And his allies.”

Tony snorted.

“We can take anyone” he said and Bruce pressed his lips. “What? Is this your pessimism, or you use
“This doubt as an excuse to work your ass off?”

“I don’t need an excuse, Tony: if I needed rest I’d be resting.”

Tony held his shoulder and locked eyes with him.

“I’m worried, Bruce; that night I realized how fragile you are…”

Bruce closed his eyes and huffed exasperated.

““Tony, that night I had a moment of weakness – every human being has such moments…I’m not the weak, broken kid, Tony. Remember that I was Batman even when I was still under Falcone’s captivity?” Tony nodded. “They can’t break me, Tony! Not anymore.”

Tony lowered his eyes; he could still hear the cries and the sobs of that tortured boy; his beautiful wet eyes were stamped in his mind. He smiled.

“Of course…they can’t.”

Bruce grinned.

“Tony, I want a favor.”

“Go ahead.”

“I want you to give Jim the evidence I gathered for Zucco: I think they are enough for reopening the case and eventually convict Zucco.”

“Why isn’t Batman doing that? I mean you use the armor to more dangerous activities so I don’t think that you wouldn’t use it for paying your ally a visit” he crooked his mouth slyly.

“You’re right. I don’t want Batman do this, because if Batman shows he is interested in that case then Jim would make the connection between Bruce Wayne’s interest and Batman’s. It’d be strange if Batman and Bruce Wayne are so interested in Zucco more so in the same time.”

Tony smiled.

“However if Tony Stark” he said pointing at himself “appears with evidence for an old case concerning the man who wants to get his friend’s ward it won’t be suspicious because obviously his friend’s worries made him investigate the man’s past.”

“Exactly! It would be more natural if Iron Man learnt from Bruce Wayne about the tampered bolt Mr. Breizic gave him and Ms. Turner’s suspicions. Iron Man is Bruce Wayne’s friend so he can have access to Bruce Wayne’s information but Batman can’t and would be too suspicious if he came out with this information.”

Tony forgot all his dark thoughts and laughed light hearted.

“Very clever, littl’ guy!”

“Practical” Bruce said modest.

Jim watched Robert Hatchet pacing the interrogation room: the temporary DA was always calm yet in this case his upset was evident. And was evident throughout their flight from Gotham to Washington: Robert had asked permission to interrogate Roth Pielser and through his associations in the bureau and the importance of the case his request was approved very fast.

“You need to calm, Robert” Jim told him.

Robert stopped abruptly and nodded.

“You are right but this case…”

Jim pinched the bridge of his nose massaging the tension.

“I know but we’ll catch the culprit.”

Two guards entered bringing inside Pielser dressed in the orange suit of the convicts. He had an annoying smirk all over his thin face that tried Jim’s infamous tranquility.

It was obvious that the guards detested the man and they dropped him in the seat rather unceremoniously.

“Thank you” Robert said to the guards. “Leave us.”

“Let me guess” the man said as soon as the guards left “you’re coming from Gotham so this must have to do with the video of the gorgeous Prince of Gotham” he smiled reminiscently. “I see that the cutie still remembers me…” he shook his head “I wish Falcone wasn’t so selfish and had shared his little treasure…”

Jim saw Robert clenching his jaw but cast him a warning glance though he felt himself a fire bulging inside him.

“I’m glad we all aware of the issue” Robert said calm but stern “we know that the video was in your hands.”

Pielser nodded.

“Bruce told you; nobody else could have known that. I made an impression to the little angel after all.”

Jim struggled with himself to keep his calm.

“It’s Mr. Wayne” he said dryly.

Pielser smiled.

“I spent too many hot nights watching his delicious small body in such intriguing poses and manifestations that I feel too connected – till now I didn’t have a name but now I do…well, you can’t expect me to use that cold ‘Mr. Wayne’ for that squirming hot child.”

Jim jerked up from his seat and slapped his hands on the metallic table between him and Pielser.

“Stop that! For your own good, Pielser! Mind your words about Mr. Wayne!”

Pielser pursed his lips and drummed his fingers on the table.

“Okay, okay… Cool down, man! When I saw that dirty, beautiful boy in Falcone’s cabaret I couldn’t imagine he was the lost Prince of Gotham.”
“Every child is a little Prince or Princess” Robert said “and you damaged hundreds of innocent souls: I wish they had fried you!”

Pielser lolled his head towards Jim.

“Not the best way to contact an interrogation.”

“Is the best for a scum like you” Jim answered nonchalant. “We know you didn’t send anything to the hacker from here: so either you sent it through someone else or the video had passed to another person and that person did it.”

Robert leaned above him.

“To whom you gave the video?”

Pielser rolled his eyes.

“Why should I help you? What is there for me to gain?”

Robert gritted his teeth.

“Let’s say that if you don’t help us we will take care for you to be transferred to the high security section” he widened his eyes seeing Pielser’s wary expression. “You know, with the dangerous criminals who hate pedophiles?”

Some sweat drops appeared to Pielser’s face.

“Or” Jim added “we can arrange things for you to be chemically castrated. Huh?” he cocked his eyebrows.

“Police confiscated all the material in my home and my facilities.”

“The video was never found” Robert replied.

“Some police officer took it for his own entertainment.”

Jim walked to him.

“You know that this is not true…so how you sent the video to the hacker?”

“I didn’t! How would I know that hacker? I learnt about that boy’s true identity when I was already in jail: If I knew sooner I’d have made a fortune selling the porn video where Bruce Wayne stars: many people would pay millions to see that babe losing his virginity” he cackled.

It was enough! Jim stormed to him and grabbed him from the lapels lifting him up.

“Shut the fuck up! Open your mouth only to answer our questions or else the high security sector will have a party tonight!”

Robert approached.

“I think that you did exactly that” he whispered to Pielser’s ear. “You sold that video after you learnt that Bruce Wayne was the boy that Falcone had in his cabaret – to the highest bidder.”

Pielser sweating and panting in Jim’s hands gulped.
“I don’t know his identity, I swear…the transaction was made through my lawyer but he also didn’t know who bought it. These things are arranged anonymously.”

“We’ll see what he’ll tell us” Jim spat letting him slump on the plastic seat.

Pielser breathed easier but shook his head.

“My lawyer died in a car accident one month ago…”

“How convenient!” Jim said yanking his head and turned to the door.

“Wish that we’ll find that sonovabitch or else you’ll be considered the culprit and then the high security sector will look like heaven in comparison!”

It was afternoon. The quiet slithering was the only thing that accompanied him. The silence was creepy and although he had been through a lot worse situations still this had an impact on him as if the air had something bizarre on its own. The lighting was normal yet he felt as if being watched.

The building had been renovated in a modern state and it was odd that it still retained his gothic character and atmosphere even though every relic of its legendary owners had been transferred to the ward that was turned into a museum.

The nurse at the information desk in the entrance of the building had given him directions.

Bruce couldn’t understand why his assessment should take place there. Arkham Asylum was a closed institution with many dangerous inmates. Normally, cases of evaluation shouldn’t be examined there. Moreover since the psychiatrist appointed by the court was only an associate to the asylum.

And as he was slithering his way inner he felt like Clarice in the Silence of the Lambs going to meet Dr. Lecter; he smiled amused. Tony and his choices of movies!

“Mr. Wayne!”

He had heard the light footsteps coming behind him in the narrow corridor yet he feigned that the addressing took him by surprise. He stopped the wheelchair and turned to see Dr. Quinzel coming to him; Bruce knew that she had a soft spot for Joker but his surveillance hadn’t reveal anything bad enough except than that incident during New Year’s Eve when Joker broke into her apartment.

She offered her hand and Bruce took it for a handshake.

“To what do we owe the honor of your presence here? I haven’t been informed.”

“Really? I’m here to visit Dr. Hugo Strange.”

She frowned but she didn’t express her puzzlement though Bruce understood that she was thinking the same with him.

“Someone should have come with you” she said.

“An orderly offered to but I didn’t think that it would be so difficult…” his eyes became wary. “Do you think that I could be in danger?” he looked around cautious.

Harleen smiled and remembered Joker; well, if he was here then Mr. Waynesh would have to be afraid.

“Not at all, Mr. Wayne: the doctors’ offices are in a section where the patients have no access unless for their sessions” of course Bruce knew that already since he had studied the ancient building’s blueprints. “Allow me to escort you to Dr. Strange’s office.”

Bruce smiled.

“Gladly, Dr. Quinzel.”

She made an inviting gesture but Bruce let her pass first.

“I heard about that video” she said casually. “It is a happy coincidence I don’t like TV. I’m terribly sorry, Mr. Wayne; it was really hideous what happened. How are you coping?”

Bruce shrugged.

“It’s not the best thing when a horrible experience of your life becomes a show for everyone” Quinzel pressed her lips. “The worst of this is the ramifications on my loved ones” he inhaled. “I have passed it; it still hurts more when it is shoved like this to my face but it isn’t new to me while for my loved ones is and hurts them more.”

Quinzel smiled with sympathy.

“I believe that your loved ones are as strong as you and get inspiration from your courageous stance.”

Bruce didn’t answer and Harleen gestured to a heavy old fashioned dark brown door at the end of the corridor.

“Here we are! Now would you excuse me? I have a session; it was a pleasure seeing you again.”

“For me too, Dr. Quinzel.”

He steered his wheelchair to the door waiting for Quinzel’s footsteps to faint. He saw the yellow gold label reading ‘DR. HUGO STRANGE’ and knocked.

Two minutes later the door opened revealing a man around 50 with average height and weight. He was bald and his eyes were big and round like lamps, gray with a shine of cleverness and sympathy that for Bruce was evident that was pretentious.

“Mr. Wayne! Why they didn’t inform me that you came; I would have escorted you myself.”

Bruce waved that off.

“Dr. Quinzel was kind enough to show me the way.”

Dr. Strange arched his eyebrows.

“Very kind of her indeed; I shall thank her. Please, do come in” he said cordially opening more the door and gesturing invitingly.

“Thank you.”

The room was dimly lit: the chandelier was lit but so low that the main light in the room came from the desk’s lamp. The decoration was classic with nothing personal: a whole wall book library behind the big, old desk; a leather armchair in front of the desk that had been moved a bit because Strange certainly considered his client’s wheelchair.

The psychiatrist walked behind his desk and sat. He glanced around.

“It is the custom office of the Asylum: as an associate I have no interest to change something. Do you like the lights like this or do you want me to make it stronger?”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, it’s alright.”

Strange smiled.

“So we can start. We are here to assess your suitability to be the surrogate father of young mister Grayson.”

Bruce nodded and Dr. Strange knitted his fingers on the desk.

“Mr. Wayne, first of all I would like you to relax. You seem a bit nervous.”

Bruce grinned.

“I’m quite relaxed as for the nervousness I think that most people would be nervous being in the notorious Arkham Asylum even for an evaluation.”

“There is a point in that and I apologize for bringing you here but my private office is not yet ready and my office in the University isn’t ideal for keeping the necessary confidentiality.”

Bruce nodded.

“I see…Well, can we begin?”

Dr. Strange raised an eyebrow.

“Determination…Certainly, a prominent quality of yours that allowed you not only to survive all these years but also to come out victorious over your captor.”

Bruce looked at him calmly.

“I was rescued, Dr. Strange; it wasn’t my victory at all.”

“I see…So how do you feel about your liberation from captivity not being your achievement?”

“Dr. Strange, I’m here for assessment and not analysis.”

Dr. Strange smiled friendly.

“I do remember that, Mr. Wayne. Is there something that troubles you?”

“I don’t see any test…Last year I was assessed for Falcone’s trial and I was administered many tests.”

Dr. Strange smiled confidently.

“I understand. However, Mr. Wayne” he cocked his eyebrows “there is an unwritten law in assessments: the less competent a professional the more tests he/she uses; to cover his/her insecurities.”

Bruce shook his head.

“He hadn’t seemed incompetent to me.”

“Every professional chooses his own method and mine is quite independent of cold and mechanical tests. I prefer a more direct and personal approach.”

Bruce lolled his head.

“I’d prefer the tests…”

Dr. Strange smiled friendly.

“What is it that makes you feel threatened?”

“I don’t feel threatened, Dr. Strange; I just don’t like this approach.”

“At first; as soon as you loosen up you’ll feel better. Mr. Wayne. I do understand that after the brutal broadcasting of the video of your abuse you have raised all your shields. However, in this office you are quite safe: everything you say it is protected by confidentiality.”

“I see” Bruce said pretending uneasiness.

“I would like you to talk to me about the video that was broadcasted two days ago: you did have a really intense flashback, let us start with your feelings.”

Bruce felt an invisible wall of granite built around him at once; he would have leave that office at once yet he had to stay there and go through that in order to keep Richard’s guardianship.

“I was numb at first and then it was as if ice had covered everything inside me…”

Dr. Strange felt the cold barriers the young man built around him but it was content that he was speaking.

“And the flashback?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“It occurred while I was asleep and then, as you already know, I woke up thinking that I was still in the cabaret. I felt scared and dirty…and I used my wheelchair to get to the shower” of course there was no chance he’d tell Strange that he used his legs.

But the psychiatrist looked at him interested.

“You were in a hallucination but still you used the wheelchair?”

Bruce shrugged.

“It seems that some learnt things overcome the hallucination…”

“Indeed. Please, continue.”

“There’s not much to add: Alfred and Tony found me and took me back to my bed.”

Dr. Strange nodded.
“Alfred is your parents’ butler and as I understand you have a very warm relationship.”

“That’s true.”

“Something like a second father…”

“Alfred is very special to me…”

“Talk to me about the night of your parents’ murder.”

Bruce made his eyes widen.

“What has this to do with my assessment?” he said making his voice tremble a bit.

Dr. Strange raised slightly his eyebrows.

“Everything has to do with that, Mr. Wayne.”

“Falcone lured them there” he inhaled deeply “supposedly to exchange me with the papers that gave him my father’s fortune but eventually they killed them.”

“Please, go back to that night and describe your feelings.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Can we talk about something else?”

Dr. Strange pressed his lips; his eyes were filled with understanding.

“Believe me, Mr. Wayne, it isn’t my intention to torment you. I understand that you care for that child’s welfare and you want to be a real suitable guardian for him. Your recent flashback manifests that you face symptoms of untreated PTSD so if you want the best for your ward you must help me evaluate accurately your condition.”

“I haven’t experienced a flashback for many months.”

Dr. Strange nodded.

“I’m glad to hear that yet we must touch your past, Mr. Wayne in order to stop it from upsetting your present life” Bruce didn’t answer and Dr. Strange opened the first drawer of his desk.

Bruce frowned inside but made his eyes widen seeing the psychiatrist placing on his desk a small vial and a syringe. He acted as if being panicked by the sight but keeping a brave face. Dr. Strange was eyeing him like X-raying.

“This is amitali, a substance that is totally safe and scientifically approved for use with people suffering from extreme anxiety disorders like the Post Traumatic Syndrome Disorder. It helps the individual to relax and speak about his/her experiences releasing the tension that intervenes in their life; this substance loosens the boundaries that don’t allow you get rid of all the things that erode you from inside.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No; I won’t accept being injected with that.”

Dr. Strange looked at him with empathy.
“I see that your experience with Dr. Crane’s experimentation has let its marks on you. Dr. Thompkins informed me about the nature of his treatment asking for my professional opinion: your personal doctor and friend trusted me, maybe you should do the same? The substances Dr. Crane used might have distorted your conscious memories: amitali will help us evaluate not only your emotional state but also the damage he had caused.”

Bruce could understand the reason Leslie and Tony had sought his advice few months ago but still didn’t like it. At least, Tony had informed him so Strange’s mentions didn’t find him unprepared.

“I am not Dr. Crane, Mr. Wayne. I understand that your experience with him still influences the way you act in your present life.”

“I think that this goes for everyone not only me: everyone’s experiences influence the way he/she acts.”

Dr. Strange placed his palms on the desk.

“That is true but in some cases it can become a serious obstacle. Mr. Wayne, you understand that if I’m not able to contact the assessment in the proper way I’d have to testify that to the court. And it won’t create the best impressions.”

Bruce frowned.

“This sounded like blackmail: you can’t force me do something I don’t want: what you are talking about is not assessment but treatment and the court appointed you to assess me. I’m sure that a brilliant psychiatrist like you can find another way.”

Dr. Strange smiled.

“Well, how about ending our meeting for today so that you can calm and think about it till tomorrow when we will have our next session.”

Bruce eyed the psychiatrist: he could have denied yet Dick’s well being was more important. He wouldn’t accept being subjected to a psychotropic drug again even if it was scientifically approved. He couldn’t risk losing control and Crane’s previous treatment could complicate the amitali’s effects: in which case Batman’s secret would be compromised and that Bruce couldn’t allow. Yet a blatant refusal would lead to Strange’s negative report in the court. So he should buy some time.

“Thank you, Dr. Strange” he steered his wheelchair towards the door and Strange stood and followed him.

He opened politely and let Bruce come out.

“Please, allow me to come with you till the exit.”

“As you wish.”

“Mr. Wayne, I must remind you once again that our meetings are bound by the patient-doctor confidentiality. You can read my file and you will see that I never had any issue with the morality code of my science. You can trust me, Mr. Wayne. I wish to offer you my services into helping you have a better life. You have suffered enough to have the rest of your life marred by those horrors. You had achieved tremendous things that – I’ll be entirely honest with you – have me impressed. I totally respect and admire you which urge me to assist you in your course through life.”

Bruce raised his eyes to him.
“Thank you, Doctor.”

The older man smiled benevolently and nodded. They had reached the information desk at the building’s foyer.

“George” the psychiatrist addressed an orderly that stood guard in the door leading to the interior “can you please escort Mr. Wayne to his car?”

Bruce shook his head.

“That won’t be needed, thank you.”

“Fine then” Dr. Strange smiled with his benevolent but still odd smile and gave his hand to Bruce who shook it. “Have a nice, uneventful evening, Mr. Wayne.”

“Good evening, Doctor” Bruce answered and moved his wheelchair outside the building and down the ramp that had been added parallel to the old marble stair in the front of the ancient majestic gothic building. Even when he had his back turned moving towards his parked car, Bruce could sense the psychiatrist’s eyes on him.

“Aren’t you afraid of your dear brother?” Joker asked exaggerating his nasal voice.

Loki stood at the rooftop’s ledge on the other side with his back on Joker gazing at the night Gotham. He lolled his head casting a sideways glance at the jester and smiled. Then he turned and walked to him.

“Thor can’t see through the magic I cast on this rooftop exactly as with your safehouse…he might be the god of thunders but I’m better than him in every aspect” he cocked his eyebrows and gestured to himself “isn’t that obvious from my looks?”

Joker lolled his head inspecting him carefully and then began laughing with hysterics pointing his finger at his ally. Loki pissed narrowed his eyes and slowly raised his hand ready to snap his fingers.

That movement was enough for Joker to stop laughing because he definitely wouldn’t want to be subject to Loki’s humor – not that Joker wouldn’t laugh but he didn’t like this petty god’s arrogance. He was panting and weeping imaginary tears.

“I don’t wanna…uuuu… cooooompliment you, Loki but beeeeetter not mention looks, hehe! The bloooond is a hunk.”

Loki twisted his mouth.

“Then you won’t be pissed knowing that he screws your Brucie…” he retorted snidely enjoying the way Joker’s eyebrows frowned. “Looks aren’t in your favor either…”

Joker bound his hands behind the back and made circles around Loki who cocked his eyebrows.

“Bruuuuuucie isn’t like this.”

Loki clapped.

“That’s a spouse faith! Concerning that Brucie was fucking around with Supes…By the way, I’d expect you to at least have killed those who humiliated your…wife but it seems that you’ve lost your touch.”
Joer leaned his head over Loki’s shoulder.

“Doooooon’t worry…Joker has everything under control” he scratched his head “wait! I haaaaate control…”

It was Loki’s turn to laugh.

“You have the control? As with Batman? Weren’t for me you’d be in prison now…”

“Prison isn’t sooooo bad…” suddenly he began giggling and Loki rolled his eyes. “A sedative batarang to my buttcheek – HEHEHEHEHEHAHAAHAHAA! – oh! I aaaaalways knew Bats has humor – HEHEHEHEHEHUHUHUHU!”

Loki shook his head exasperated and all of a sudden Joker’s scars became a zipped fly much to the jester’s amusement.

“That’s what I call useful magic!” Loki exclaimed. “Now you would listen for a change: enough waiting, I want to make my movement soon – I’m bored; I want some fun” he drummed his fingers on Joker’s chest. “Understood?”

Joker began moving his hands mimicking the movements of sign language and Loki blinked bored removing the fly.

“HEHEHEHEHEHEEEEEEE! Wow! Youuuuuu definitely impressed me with that, Lok – I also know some spells for silence buuuuut with blades…UHUHUHUUUU!”

“Understood?” Loki demanded.

Joker lolled his head to the side.

“You doooooo remember that we don’t have a cont----ract?”

“Yes but we have common interests…”

Joker licked his lips.

“Now you’re talking, Lok.”

The melody from ‘Muppet Show’ echoed suddenly and Loki stared at Joker who pulled off his inner pocket his old-fashioned cell that it had his face painted on the back side; the god rolled his eyes.

“Heeeelloooooo, Dr. Harlequin!” the jester exclaimed ignoring Loki’s reaction. “Ooooooooh…” his voice became heavily nasal “that’s veery interesting…”

Loki frowned.

“So0000o Brucie visits our beloo00oved establishment, huh? He could have done that while his husband was there!” he snapped pissed. “We would have our honey moooooon in that idyyyyllic environment… Anyway, thaaaaanks, Harlequin!”

He shoved his cell back to his pocket and lolled his head to the side grinning with his Cheshire smile.

“Thinking what I’m thinking?” he asked Loki.

The god rolled his eyes and snorted.
“I wouldn’t call ‘thinking’ what takes place in that thing you call head…” he commented since monitoring Joker’s mind was really like being swimming in a stormy sea.

“HEHEHE!” he patted Loki’s back. “Gooooooood point…”
Steve opened hesitantly the door of Selina’s apartment; since last night he was feeling that something had changed between them in the wrong way.

After his confrontation with Catwoman he secured Wizze in MCU and returned to Selina’s apartment. Steve knew that she would be there tonight since Bruce had reassured her that he would be alright so she chose to sleep at her apartment.

He had come eager to speak with her; eat and...well, what other things do a couple in love? But the apartment was dark and when he reached her bedroom he found her deep asleep. She was tired both physically and emotionally from everything that happened after that video’s broadcasting so Steve didn’t want to disturb her sleep. He undressed, wore his pajamas, kissed her cheek and lay beside her.

The morning when he woke up she was gone...as if she was avoiding him. So Steve came tonight to her apartment after much thought expecting everything even a changed lock but fortunately his key worked.

Getting inside he was met with darkness...again but as he turned towards the bedroom a cough stopped him. He frowned and instead moved towards the living room that was one with the kitchen. He clenched his fists and set his senses in vigilance to face everything.

“Easy, handsome...” the same sensual voice from last night welcomed him and at the same time the room got lighted.

Steve narrowed his eyes on the sight before him: Catwoman sat on the kitchen island one long shapely leg on the other.

“What are you doing here?” he asked and walked closer.

She stood up, stretched her body and minced to meet him.

“I live here” she said casually in her true voice and Steve’s eyes bulged.

“Selina?”

“You see, darling?” she lolled her head to the side. “You finally saw the light.”

Steve clenched his waist and licked his lips shocked.

“The jewelry thief?”

“Among other things...A girl has needs and in Falcone’s Gotham stealing from his rich friends was an act of resistance and defiance.”

Steve nodded: during Falcone’s reign Gotham’s aristocracy included merely rich guys who collaborated with him. Suddenly, he remembered something else.

“The stolen jewels that were return to the police these last months was your doing?”

She smiled.

“Not much of a challenge but someone had to do it.”
“Bruce knows?”

“I wouldn’t keep it secret from my sweetie…”

It was so many the things Steve had heard about Catwoman that they popped up one after another.

“And you helped Batman bring down Falcone.”

“I wanted to liberate Bruce and my purpose matched the Bats’ so I gave him my allegiance” she said casually cocking her eyebrows.

Steve nodded.

“You didn’t tell me before…”

“I didn’t know then if I could trust you with that…and I like my secrets.”

“And now?” he came closer to her locking eyes with her. “You don’t like your secrets anymore?”

Selina wrapped her arms around his neck bringing her lips close to his.

“I like you more…” she said in a deep sensual voice and captured his lips hungrily; he followed rubbing her leather clad back with logging. “Do you like cats in leather, handsome?”

Steve grabbed her, glued her body to his and Selina wrapped her legs around his hips.

“Let me show you how much…” he twirled her around and sat her at the island’s edge never letting her lips.

His hands fumbled with her suit as Selina grabbed his shirt’s lapels and opened the cloth with an abrupt movement that ripped every button; she pushed the fabric to his arms revealing his perfectly toned torso and moaned appreciatively when Steve pulled down the zip in the middle of her chest freeing her sweaty breasts.

Their bodies were rubbing on each other as Steve trailed sucking her bent backwards neck and she rubbed her groin on his aroused length demanding more, her hands hastily unzipping his jeans.

“I like old-fashioned boys” she said eyeing his blue briefs that revealed his hungry erection and pushed the underwear down to follow his jeans.

“I’m so relieved” he replied rolling her suit off her arms and then down her hips till her hot body was completely naked but for her Catwoman mask.

He slipped his erection into her and she moaned clenching her legs more around his hips.

“I think that this mask will become my fetish…” Steve whispered in her ear beginning to thrust in her.

“Careful, handsome: you don’t want me suspect that you fancy Catwoman more than Selina…”

Steve chuckled but Selina pushed his hips to urge him to continue.

“If you like my mask perhaps you like my whip too?” she slurred. “Now, don’t slack off, soldier!”
Oliver Queen stood before the breathtaking view of Gotham’s skyline through the whole wall window of the Wayne Tower’s board room at the top floor. The fact that it was morning didn’t take anything from the city’s mystery.

Behind him, over the large elliptic glass table the legal departments’ heads of Wayne Enterprises and Queen Consolidate were discussing the latest details of the deals and the contracts that lay before them ready to be signed; all these under Lucius Fox’s vigilant eye. On the contrary, the billion from Star city didn’t seem to care in the least about the deal and that was the truth; his face was thoughtful and his hands behind his back.

“You must like our city very much, Mr. Queen” Lucius interrupted Queen’s reverie having approached quietly. “If I may make a judgement from your prolonged stay in Gotham – this is most flattering for a city with Gotham’s less than stellar fame.”

Queen’s eyes turned to the grinning man and nodded.

“I like Gotham and if my staying contributes in changing that fame I’m satisfied. Mr. Fox, did Mr. Wayne reaffirm his presence at the meeting? I mean, after what happened two days ago with that dreadful video…”

Lucius shook his head.

“Of course he did; otherwise I would have informed you. Both he and I know how important Mr. Wayne’s presence was for the signing of this deal.”

Queen’s face was serious when he nodded yet Lucius didn’t see the satisfaction that certainly the man should have felt.

“I’d expect that Bruce would have chosen this floor to set his office” Queen chose to change the subject “Taking into account his love for the city only the view from the top floor would be enough for him. So it is odd that he chosen the 46th floor for his office.”

Lucius gazed at the city.

“The 46th floor has a nice view as well. Mr. Wayne chose to have the same office his father had” Queen watched intrigued. “Both Thomas and Bruce had in mind something more important than the view: they wanted to be at the heart of their Tower; among their employees and not on top of them.”

Queen cocked his eyebrows impressed and pursed his lips.

“Interesting…”

The discreet sound of the wheelchair was enough for Queen to turn at the open door. Bruce greeted Mr. Collins and his colleague, Tommy Merlin and moved towards Lucius and Oliver who walked to meet him.

Oliver hastened to give his hand to Bruce for a shake.

“I’m glad to see you again, Bruce” he said stilling his gaze in Bruce’s eyes.

“The same, Mr. Queen” Bruce replied politely but detached shaking his hand and Queen pressed his lips.

“We could have postponed the sign of the deal” the older man continued. “After the recent events I’d understand.”
Bruce smiled.

“I can’t see the reason…As I think you already know I continue my activities normally after the recent events so why postponing this one?”

“Unlike the rest of your obligations, after all, I’d like you to not consider me another obligation; I could have waited…” Bruce felt ‘for an eternity’ hovering.

Bruce answered with a serious expression.

“I’m fine” he looked up at his loyal scientist “Lucius, how are you?”

Lucius twitched his eyebrows and grinned.

“Fine, Mr. Wayne” he gestured to the table “we can start.”

Bruce was listening carefully to both lawyers explaining the details of the deal but his attention was on Queen as discreetly as possible.

In the end, Mr. Collins laid the contract in front of Queen while Mr. Merlin did the same with the second copy of the contract for Bruce who perused one last time the document under Queen’s amused smile.

“So careful! I assure you, Bruce: I would never even think to fool you. And as a proof I sign without further reading…”

Bruce smiled and in Queen’s eyes he discerned a sparkle of pleasure.

“It is not a matter of mistrust…I just have to justify my role as Wayne Enterprises’ President…”

Oliver chuckled shaking his head and pulled off of the inner pocket of his jacket an ancient and priceless looking golden pen. He cast a pointed glance at Bruce cocking an eyebrow and moved to sign. Using his left hand: Bruce’s eyes fixed on the ease with which Queen used his left hand to write. Activity which prior to the shipwreck Queen did only with his right hand.

Suddenly, Queen coughed and lifted his eyes to meet Bruce’s glance. He smiled uncomfortably and moved the pen to his right hand.

“Sometimes after the shipwreck I switch hands unconsciously…I had injured my right hand in the island and for some time I was using mainly the left yet still my right hand is my good hand.”

Bruce grinned and nodded.

“As someone who spent six years with his good hand destroyed I certainly understand you; my right hand never recovered fully so my left hand does most of the complex work.”

Queen seemed relieved but Bruce noticed his lawyer’s odd look and kept watching the man while signing the same papers Queen just did.

After the signing, the details and the prospects of the cooperation were put in discussion at which point Mr. Collins found the opportunity to take Bruce from the table.

“How was your first session with Dr. Strange?”

Bruce shrugged.
“I can’t answer that with certainty but I’ll meet him again today.”

“Was there anything that made you feel uncomfortable?” the experienced lawyer said eyeing carefully his employer. “If that’s the case I want you to remember that we can always ask for a different psychiatrist. You have that right, Mr. Wayne.”

Bruce grinned and nodded.

“Thank you, Mr. Collins; I’ll remember that.”

A small reception was prepared to celebrate the collaboration of the two companies in the reception hall of the Tower and Lucius suggested that it was time to go there which was gladly accepted since everything concerning the deal was settled.

Yet Bruce remained in the room bringing his wheelchair in front of the whole wall window mesmerized from the breathtaking view it offered. He enjoyed the loneliness yet soon his peace was disrupted when he heard footsteps which he knew that belonged to Oliver Queen or…The Arrow. Bruce didn’t intend to show to him that he was aware of his secret identity because there were more about the man that needed to be deciphered. Besides, the Arrow knew Bruce’s secret identity too and he wanted to learn how.

He felt his insides clench when the man stood beside him.

“Beautiful view” Queen said.

“For me it is…”

Queen looked straight in Bruce’s eyes.

“I’m honestly sorry about what they did to you…”

Bruce frowned.

“Meaning?”

“The broadcasting of that video; and what Falcone did to you.”

Bruce raised his eyebrows.

“You realize now that my darkness has nothing to do with yours?” he smiled. “You still insist that you understand me? Because it is quite obvious that we don’t share anything.”

Queen’s face became dead serious and his green eyes gave the impression of slowly burning fires.

“On the contrary, I feel closer to you now…Those smugglers in that island almost killed me and if Princess Diana hadn’t intervened I would be dead” Bruce shook his head hearing about the supposed Amazon. “However, you’re right; my experiences weren’t anything like yours yet your pain is mine, too. The hours that passed since that video was shown I was in turmoil: I wanted to run to you; to express my feelings; to offer everything I could offer…yet” he pressed his lips “I knew that you’d feel me like an intruder; that my presence would be pressing and disturbing for you. And that you’d feel better only with your loved ones…”

Bruce was watching him with interest.

“I wish I was one of these fortunate people…” Queen added in a husky voice.
Bruce turned his head away to the view.

“They are not fortunate” he retorted with conviction.

Queen squatted in front of him and held his shoulders.

“Bruce” the younger man turned his head and looked at him with a deep frowning. “If only you were willing to give me a chance to become one of your friends…” his eyes were filled with warmth, with pure pleading and Bruce felt uncomfortable as goose bumps ran his spine.

“Are you not coming?”

Lucius’ cheerful voice broke the tension; the Afro-American stood at the door and Bruce looked at him grateful for his intervention. The scientist frowned the tiniest bit but didn’t express his disapproval for Queen’s intimacy in favor of diplomacy and smiled.

“Shall we? Our attorneys are waiting” Bruce said.

Queen stood, letting Bruce’s shoulders too reluctantly and walked towards the exit nodding to Lucius.

“Mr. Queen is very fortunate to have such a loyal associate as you” Bruce said to Mr. Merlin steering his wheelchair to the corner where the man stood detached from the guests in the reception hall.

Lucius, Collins and Queen were avidly talking thus Bruce found the opportunity to ‘interrogate’ the man.

“I’m with Queen family many years. I owe them much.”

“You were one of the few who didn’t cooperate to the illegal acquiring of the Consolidate, much as Lucius did for me.”

The man smiled.

“I couldn’t betray them: I worked decades for Richard and I know Oliver since he was born.”

Bruce hoped to that.

“I imagine your delight when he appeared in that event…seeing again someone you considered dead.”

Tommy shook his head thoughtful.

“Yes, certainly…yet…”

“Yet?”

The man cast a glance at his employer.

“What happened those months changed Oliver” he said.

Bruce nodded.

“Such experiences do have a great impact on people.”
Merlin took a sip from his red wine looking at Queen.

“Oliver was… Oliver was always an open character, a playful youth, a playboy; very sociable… now he is cold and detached even when he discusses with me or his other associates. I can’t explain it: it’s in his eyes, in his demeanor.”

“The use of his left hand…”

“Oliver is right handed: even after he returned he uses his right hand all the time – today was the first time I saw him using his left hand.”

“Once we meet one of his old classmates and he said that Mr. Queen was a great athlete in every sport.”

Merlin smiled.

“Except than archery and that was” he chuckled “a blow because in childhood Robin Hood was his favorite hero.”

Bruce smiled too.

“Does he ever speak about his experiences in the island?”

Tommy shook his head.

“Mr. Wayne, if Oliver was to speak to someone about that this would be you. Since he came back Oliver spends most of his time with you or around you… In Gotham… Oliver he always said that he would never set foot in Gotham no matter what.”

Bruce saw Queen approaching with a glass in his head and his usual smugness back; he patted his lawyer’s back.

“What are you two talking about? Tommy, you shouldn’t monopolize Bruce.”

The lawyer shook his head.

“We were discussing about the new prospects that our cooperation opens” Bruce said to save the lawyer from the uneasiness and Queen smirked.

“So the culprit can be anyone” Bullock gritted his teeth.

Jim was pacing at his office in MCU building; he had arrived back in Gotham only a couple of hours ago and was briefing his trustees about Pielser’s interrogation.

He cocked his eyebrows.

“I’m afraid so… The bastard advertised in the proper sites that he had in his hands the video with young Wayne being molested and a bid competition began” he huffed eyeing his partners’ disgusted looks. “The higher bidder took the video and of course the whole transaction evolved anonymously through Pielser’s lawyer who was killed in a car accident a month ago” he shook his head.

Montoya waved her hand.

“If the bidder had kept the video for himself it could be anyone yet the bidder publicized the video clearly wanting to humiliate and break Mr. Wayne.”

Bullock shook his head chuckling.

“I’d give anythin’ to see his shit face now that Wayne showed that he wasn’t broken by this and he failed! So we’re lookin’ for someone who hates Wayne.” He pursed his lips. “Luthor is one candidate: he had cooperated with the League to capture Wayne for which he ended up in the joint an’ then Wayne managed to buy his Labs and a nice percentage of his company. Recently they had a face off in LexCorp annual meeting.”

Montoya nodded but Gordon shook his head.

“Luthor was in jail the time the auction for the video took place; also, his accounts were frozen all this time so although I’m sure he enjoyed what happened he wasn’t the culprit.”

“Then we have Dagget: he had expressed his hatred for Wayne in several occasions and he was Luthor’s ally to bring down Wayne” Montoya pointed.

“But he is also in the joint” Bullock said standing from the chair he was slumped and looked out of the small window.

“Earl is also in jail” Montoya continued counting Bruce’s enemies.

Jim rubbed his chin with his hand.

“Could be some member of the League of Shadows who escaped arrest – maybe that Talia Al Ghul herself: we never had something concrete about her death. The League knew much about Falcone, so they could know about that video as well and when Pielser came out to find a buyer they rushed for the chance.”

Both his trustees looked at him with flashing eyes. Bullock nodded.

“That actually makes sense, chief.”

Montoya detached from the desk she was leaning.

“Looking for hair in a stuck…that group was hard to find when in power not now that they are injured and hide…”

Jim pursed his lips and raised his eyebrows.

“That’s true…unfortunately” he admitted.

Bullock clenched his waist.

“The hackin’ of the signal brings in mind Joker” he lolled his head. “Why not him?”

“It’s not his style: he’d have made a show and he wanted to kill the hacker” Jim answered.

Montoya shook her head.

“He could have done that to fool us…”

“He doesn’t give a damn about us” Jim remarked. “No, it must be someone else…”

Suddenly, a ruckus came from outside and the Commissioner frowned. Without a second thought he stormed outside, his lieutenants following suit.

Jim closed his eyes exasperated and relieved from the sight.

Tony Stark impeccably dressed in a tailored expensive gray suit beamed to the police officers – mostly female – that had gathered around him. Jim ran his hands to his hair seeing Ironman signing autographs to his officers.

Tony realized Jim’s presence and yanked his head.

“Hi, Jim! You’re the man I was looking for.”

Jim shook his head and cast a glare to the clustered officers who reluctantly dispersed; Tony marched towards Jim and his lieutenants smiling and Jim noticed that he was caring a red and gold briefcase.

“How come an’ ya haven’t printed Ironman on it?” Bullock asked jeeringly cocking an eyebrow.

Tony smirked and patted him on the shoulder causing a glare from the rough lieutenant who hadn’t forgotten the incident in Wayne Manor.

“Brilliant idea, lieutenant!”

Jim met the billionaire’s eyes with seriousness.

“I’m glad to see you found your mood, Mr. Stark.”

Tony lolled his head on the side.

“C’mon, Jim: I told you to call me ‘Tony’; as for the incident in the Manor, I was distraught – no hard feelings, huh?” he winked grinning friendly.

He offered his hand and Jim took it.

“I didn’t know that I had so many fans in Gotham MCU!” Tony said smugly casting playful glances to the female officers who were staring at them.

“Our local attraction prefers rooftops and doesn’t give live performances…” Bullock growled snidely and Montoya chuckled.

Tony grinned.

“I like cops with sense of humor…”

“Who’s joking?” Montoya asked shrugging.

“Jim, can we speak in private?” Tony asked passing abruptly from lightness to seriousness.

Jim nodded.

“Of course, Tony” he gestured invitingly “please come in” he closed the door behind Tony dismissing his trustees with a glance. “Have a seat.”

Tony sat at the cheap armchair elegantly and crossed his legs.

“I want to talk to you about something important.”

Jim sat behind his desk and nodded.
“Of course. I’m listening.”

Tony touched his thumb on an invisible receptor in the corner of the briefcase which opened with a hissing sound. He put the briefcase on the desk pushing it slowly towards Jim.

The police commissioner began immediately examining the documents inside: old police reports, listings of accounts, reports about companies; printed pieces of old newspapers. He frowned and looked up at Tony’s sparkling black eyes which were estimating Gordon’s reaction.

“John Grayson’s case…” Jim said shaking his head.

“Exactly” Tony answered.

“The case had been closed rather fast attributing the death to accident – there were suspicions about sabotage but they were never proved” Jim coughed. “Police those days was deep in corruption, carelessness and laziness.”

Tony leaned to the desk and took from the bottom of the briefcase a forensic case containing a bolt.

“I think we have strong evidence here.”

Jim took it and studied it.

“Built & Fit” he read the small inscription on the metal.

“The company that was appointed with the gym’s renovation.”

“There are signs of tampering” Jim murmured examining the bolt. “Where did you find that bolt, Tony?”

Tony leaned back to the armchair.

“I didn’t. Bruce did” and seeing Jim’s frowning he smiled. “You know that Bruce is Dick Grayson’s guardian” Jim nodded. “Well, one of Dick’s trainers is Trevor. Breizic who was also John Grayson’s trainer the time he was killed. Breizic had found that bolt then but police didn’t even examine it; however the man kept it all this time and gave it to Bruce.”

“And he to you.”

Tony grinned.

“That’s right. Bruce confided in me Breizic’s concerns about his former athlete’s death not being an accident and showed me the bolt which I examined. Also, Ms. Turner before disappearing had also expressed the same concerns. So I decided to make some digging.”

Jim held two different papers with reports about companies.

“Agillex …I remember that company: many years ago a major scandal had shaken the Falcone reigned Gotham when that company bankrupted and people lost their savings. The company was a meteor; appeared suddenly, its shares went rocket high making people invest frantically and then equally suddenly its shares went to the bottom leading the company to bankruptcy and investors to despair.”

Tony nodded: Bruce had tutored him perfectly.

“John Grayson had invested too in that company and lost all his savings: according to Ms. Turner and Breizic he did that following his trainer’s suggestions: then his trainer was his cousin, Tony Zucco. However if you look at Tony Zucco’s accounts he didn’t lose any money.”

Jim looked at Tony over his glasses.

“Mr. Zucco isn’t the one who claims Richard Grayson’s guardianship from Mr. Wayne?”

Tony smiled and nodded.

“You’re well informed, Jim.”

“This is my job” he looked at the second paper. “This is about Build & Fit the company that made the renovation a couple of days before Grayson’s accident” Tony nodded. “Here it is clear that Agiltex and Build & Fit are the same company; even the off shore account where their revenue ended up is the same.” he took another paper and his eyebrows knitted. “The off shore account belongs to…” He met Tony’s eyes “Tony Zucco?”

“That’s right. He made the fraud with Agiltex and after a few years he created a new company – hiding in the shadows again. First, he convinced John Grayson to invest all his money to Agiltex – his company - and then committed fraud to get his money. John didn’t know that Zucco not only didn’t lose his money but also orchestrated all this to get his money, so their close relationship continued. However, when Grayson’s sport’s career declined there was tension and then the doping scandal made things worse between them: Grayson took back Breizic as his trainer and pushed away Zucco. Then all of a sudden a new company appears which was appointed the renovation of the gym without any competition. Just a day after that John Grayson died falling from the parallel bars.”

He tapped the case with the tampered bolt.

“The organ was sabotaged. Build & Fit was made in one night with one purpose: John Grayson’s death. After that the company disappeared as sudden as it appeared.”

“You say that Zucco orchestrated Grayson’s death?”

“Mr. Breizic and Ms. Turner had the same suspicions but they didn’t have enough evidence. And…” he searched through the paperwork and found the picture of a woman “Rebecca Irwin; she was the head technician of the renovation.”

Jim nodded.

“Yes, she was questioned about the accident.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“Now she is Zucco’s wife.”

Jim met his eyes interested.

“Quite the coincidence, don’t you think?” Tony asked winking. “Not to mention that Sandrey Felix, the supposed president of Agiltex was killed in a car accident two years after the big fraud.”

Jim nodded.

“This case certainly needs to be reopened…”

Tony wanted to smile broadly yet looked at Jim serious.
“I’d like to ask you to handle the matter discreetly: I wouldn’t want this to create the impression that was a scheme for influencing the judge’s decision about Richard’s guardianship.”

“You can rest assured, Tony; nothing will be announced before we make our investigation in collaboration with DA’s office.”

“Thank you, Jim. From the moment I told Bruce about my findings he is worried about his ward: he is afraid that Zucco might want Dick’s guardianship to harm the boy, you see…” Tony pressed his lips “between you and me Bruce bought an apartment in the boy’s name and has established a fund with a very tempting amount of money so his fear is that the money brought Zucco back in Gotham and he wants the boy only to get the money.”

Jim rubbed his chin thoughtful.

“We won’t let anything bad happen to the boy: we’ll reopen the case, review the facts, make inquiries and press charges to those responsible. Secretly and as fast as possible. He can be responsible for Ms. Turner’s disappearance too: he is the only relative so he believed that when the grandmother would be gone he would take the boy: he didn’t expect that Ms. Turner had given the guardianship to Mr. Wayne.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“I can’t say that…everything is possible.”

Jim pursed his lips and eyed Tony.

“The DA and I went to Washington’s federal prison: we spoke with Pielser. He sold the video a couple of months ago: he organized an auction...”

Tony’s eyebrows knitted: Bruce’s torture had become an auction item!

“To whom?” he asked grimly.

“The transaction took place in complete secrecy.”

“Damn!” Tony slapped his hand to the desk.

“We’ll find him, Tony and maybe with your impressive detective skills you’ll help us.”

“I’m afraid that from now on I’d be devoted to preparing Bruce’s surgery and between that and the S.H.I.E.L.D. my time will be very limited. Yet I’ll do my best and I’ll be happy to offer you any assistance.”

“Mission accomplished!” Tony said as soon as he entered the study at the Manor’s first floor.

Bruce behind the classic desk was working in his Cosmos and Selina was also there leaning over Bruce’s shoulder obviously interested about what her friend was searching.

“By the way, I’m sexier than Tom Cruise, don’t you think?” Tony chirped. “And way younger…”

Bruce raised his eyes from the tablet and smiled while Selina rolled her eyes.

“Certainly; I think he must be very jealous of you…” the young woman said slyly.
“Poor thing!” he made a spectacular dive to the armchair before the desk and jerked startled as Hero climbed rapidly on his lap having left his perch before the fireplace. “And here’s the biggest proof” he glanced at the kitten. “By the way, fur buddy: why all this sudden show of affection?”

“What did Jim say?” Bruce asked.

“That the evidence is sufficient to reopen the case and possibly press charges – I also made clear that nothing should be made known during the trial.”

Bruce nodded and made to return to his work.

“I love to be praised…” Tony said.

“No, kidding…” Selina snidely remarked and Tony winked playfully.

“…yet I don’t like getting credit for your work, Bruce.”

“Zucco in jail will be the best credit for me” he answered and began scrolling the contents in his screen.

“Jim said that Pielser had organized an auction for that video and sold it to the highest bidder.”

Bruce didn’t react but his eyes went blank for a second.

“However Pielser didn’t know the buyer’s identity and his lawyer was killed in a car accident a month ago. Don’t you think that we could use your brilliant detective skills in that too?”

The younger man lifted his head.

“There are things more urgent than that” and before Tony retorting something “yesterday when I was in Arkham I met Quinzel: I’m sure that she will inform Joker. And given that today I will go again to Strange Joker will make his move.”

Tony sat straight in the armchair.

“You won’t go: let me and the police handle that.”

Selina sat with an elegant move on Bruce’s desk.

“Count also Catwoman…” she met Bruce’s eyes.

Tony lolled his head and pursed his lips thoughtful.

“I don’t know…wouldn’t this make Steve suspicious that his darling is Catwoman with Catwoman being constantly involved in things concerning Bruce? He is old-fashioned, you know, but he isn’t stupid.”

Selina took a pen and tapped her lips.

“As I told Bruce earlier…I revealed everything to Steve…”

Tony widened his eyes awed.

“And?”

Selina smirked slyly.
“A lady doesn’t speak about things happening in her bedroom…or living room…or kitchen” Tony’s eyes bulged and Bruce chuckled. “It seems that Captain America has a soft spot for cats dressed in leather…”

Tony shook his head and pouted.

“I don’t blame him…”

“Sorry for spoiling your chat” Bruce said “but I must go to Arkham Asylum.”

Tony nodded frustrated.

“Yadda, Yadda, Yadda…because Batman has to make his appearance, huh? Or else it’d be suspicious.”

“Right.”

Tony huffed.

“Forget it, pal! There’s no chance you’d wear that armor and face that madman!”

Bruce smiled cunningly and Tony frowned.

“I won’t wear the armor – you will.”

Tony jerked up and Hero jumped from his lap.

“But I still have to go there: first because Joker might not appear if he doesn’t see me there.”

“He has already many of his goons inside Arkham and given that Quinzel is his ally they will be ready to take action” Selina commented “whether you go there or not”.

Bruce nodded.

“They are inside but Joker isn’t so if I don’t appear Joker won’t show up or order them to attack. And second, it is crucial that Batman and Bruce Wayne are both there – I mean, separately – so that Joker gets convinced that we’re not the same person.”

“Arresting him is not enough, huh?” Tony asked glum.

Bruce shook his head.

“No; I want him to stop believing that Wayne and Batman is the same person.”

Selina lolled her head on the side.

“Joker might be a nutcase but he is clever: he’ll notice the difference – he did when…” she halted abruptly hesitant to utter Superman’s name but Bruce prompted her to continue with his eyes “Superman pretended to be Batman.”

“Tony will remain in the shadows.”

“What about the patients and the doctors?” Selina asked. “Won’t be in danger?”

“The Asylum’s newest security addition locks up the patients’ and doctors’ areas as soon as a breach is detected.”
Tony stood up: above all, Bruce’s safety was what bothered him.

“It’s very dangerous, littl’ guy: having to act through the shadows avoiding much impact with Joker. My hands will be tied and he might find the chance to hurt you.”

Bruce smiled.

“You will stun him in the first chance, Tony.”

However Tony shook his head not persuaded at all.

“That man is completely unpredictable – I don’t want you there, Bruce” the billionaire from Malibu said exasperated.

“Tony…”

“Don’t ‘Tony’ me, Bruce! Enough with you getting yourself in danger” Bruce closed his eyes.

“Lucius and I have everything ready for your operation but you seem to care for everything else than your operation.”

“That’s not true, Tony!”

Tony slapped his hands on the desk and leaned to look in Bruce’s eyes.

“You should be resting, gathering your strength, relaxing but instead you work harder than ever – not relaxing at all, barely sleeping...Do you realize that we talk about one of the most perplexed operations ever? You will be in that table more than ten hours and your body is already spent…” he stopped to catch his breath.

“The fact I work as I used to, doesn’t mean that I’m not prepared for the operation: I follow the instructions Leslie and Matt give me” Tony rolled his eyes in a ‘yeah, sure…” expression “I never cancelled my physiotherapy sessions; I take my medication…I’m meditating…” Bruce locked eyes with his friend “I won’t die on that table, Tony…” he said with conviction.

But Tony froze: the mention of ‘table’ brought like a flash in his mind the image of that skinny boy convulsing from pain on Falcone’s table with a huge dildo ripping his insides; the blood dripping from the crying boy’s body.

Bruce noticed his friend’s sudden change and Selina as well.

“Tony, are you alr…” the deep worry in Bruce’s voice shook up Tony who smiled.

“Of course you won’t die…” he said. “Mmm…what you two were looking at that tablet? By the way, you know that the Cosmos gadget has broken Starcell’s record in pre-orders?”

Bruce nodded.

“Lucius told me.”

“Don’t worry though: I’m gonna retaliate…Now since that is settled: what were you looking there?” Tony pointed with his eyes at the tablet hasty.

Bruce turned the tablet for Tony to see the screen. The screen was covered with squares showing old newspaper articles.

“Old fraud cases…” Tony said. “What are you looking for?”
You had told me that the fake Diana’s apartment was filled with pots with plants and flowers; also, that there was a beautiful, heavy perfume in the air. Vivian in her room at Dolcetto was also swarmed with plants and there was a heavy intoxicating perfume. So taking into account that Vivian isn’t in any public record I thought to look for any mention of peculiar plants and perfumes – maybe the plants and the perfume lead us to the real person since they seem to be very important to her.”

“And?”
Bruce lifted his eyebrows.

“There are too many results about plants and perfumes that are irrelevant so I programmed the processor to cross these results with police reports but it will take time.”

“Why is so important to find who she really is?” Selina asked. “We know she isn’t the Amazon Princess – that should be enough.”

“I want to know with whom I’m dealing.”
Tony crossed his arms over the chest.

“And having proofs of who she really is you’ll persuade easier Superman.”
Bruce’s face became grim.

“I don’t think that he will believe me even if I present him with proofs.”
Selina could discern a deep sadness in Bruce though his voice was cool and indifferent.

“How did it go with Queen?” Tony changed the subject.

“We signed the deal…”

“You seem troubled” Tony remarked.

“The man is complicated; there are things that…”
The polite knock on the door interrupted him.

“Master Bruce, Mr. Leench is here; he is waiting for you at the gym.”

“Thank you, Alfred” he turned to his friends. “I have to go, make my physiotherapy and then I have to get ready for my session with Strange.”

Tony was ready to start an argument but he swallowed it as Bruce moved his chair out of his desk.

“I’ll see you later” he grinned before closing the door.

Tony sighed and sank into the leather armchair running his hands to his hair.

“I’m not convinced you’re going to let him go to Arkham…” Selina said standing from the desk and walking to him.

“I won’t.”

Selina chuckled.

“You know how stubborn our friend is…”
“There’s no way I let him expose himself like this to Joker: I won’t risk him getting injured or worse. And I’m more stubborn than him.”

Selina frowned.

“What are you going to do?”

Tony slapped his face with both palms.

“Why you didn’t kill Joker that night with Wizze?”

Her face became grim.

“Steve told you…” Tony nodded. “My mind was on getting Wizze: he was my primary target – it was a mistake I should have killed them both!” Tony saw the murderous shine of her eyes – she shook her head. “It’s never too late for that…”

“Bruce knows about Joker, Wizze etc, etc?” he waved his hand.

“NO, you know how he feels about killings…” she cocked her eyebrows. “Especially when one of us does that…Steve had taken that bastard Wizze at MCU but at some point he left: he probably got the Hell out of Gotham – he is more scared of me and Joker than the police.”

“We must end with Joker today: I’m sick of this nutcase threatening Bruce.”

Selina nodded.

“I’ll be there too. If he makes a move we’ll get him.”

Dick had just worn his training uniform and was walking to meet Jeffrey at the main hall to start practice when Jason bumped on him at the corridor.

“What’s yar step, man!” the younger boy exclaimed before seeing that he had collided with his friend. “Oh! Dick, I was looking for ya.”

Dick lolled his head; his mood was still bad.

“What do you want, Jay?” he snapped.

“Why ya had yar cell closed all day?”

Dick closed his eyes.

“Jay, say what ya want: I don’t have time - Jeff is waiting.”

Jason rolled his eyes.

“Okay” he glanced suspiciously at an athlete who passed them and dragged Dick to a corner. “Last night I was out…”

“What you snatched?” Dick asked bored.

Jason shook his head.

“Scratch that…I was strollin’ the Narrows an’ I heard somethin’ really interestin’…”
“Some new curseword?” Dick snorted and Jason growled impatient.

“I heard two guys speakin’: they were talkin’ ‘bout their boss an’ his fixation with Wayne” he met Dick’s eyes widening his with emphasis.

Dick nodded.

“You think they were Joker’s goons?”

Jayson blinked frustrated.

“The way they’re talkin’ showed they weren’t the cleverest blocks in town; an’ at some point they even threw up Joker’s name.”

“Why didn’t you call the police?”

Jason sighed exasperated.

“Do ya know me to like cops? Not to mention that I’d be in deep shit myself.”

“Well?”

“They said that Joker will attack Arkham today when Wayne will go there to his shrink.”

Dick’s eyes bulged.

“That’s in afternoon: yesterday Wayne went there at this time. Why didn’t you inform Wayne?”

Jason shook his head impatient snorting.

“That’s the reason I was lookin’ for ya all time, ya dork! I thought that if ya informed him ‘bout that ya’ll redeem yarself an’ feel better.”

“And how on earth I’ll explain that I know that?”

“Ya’ll say that ya heard them.”

Jason frowned seeing his friend’s eyes blank.

“Well, open yar fuckin’ phone an’ call ‘im!”

But Dick stormed back in the locker room and began taking off hastily his gym uniform to wear his normal clothes. Jason followed him jerking his hands exasperated.

“What are ya doin’?”

“I have a better idea…”

Jason shook his head.

“I’m not gonna like what I’ll hear…”

Dick met his friend’s eyes standing up.

“I’m gonna kill the asshole today!”

Jason widened his eyes.
“Are ya nuts? We’re talkin’ ‘bout Joker!” he exclaimed lowering his voice as he mentioned the name.

“If you’re afraid stay here!”

“Jason Todd isn’t afraid of anyone – much more a fuckin’ clown!”

Dick smiled and cocked an eyebrow.

“Let’s go then! We’ll be there when Joker makes his move.”

Alfred caught up with Bruce as the young man was discussing with Tony in the salon. Bruce was already dressed for his session with Dr. Strange and Tony was trying to talk him out of this even now having Hero rubbing at his feet.

“Do you think your fur buddy is in heat and takes me for a cat?” Tony reinforced his persuasion efforts recruiting his humor to add some charm.

Bruce chuckled.

“He is still too young for that and you don’t look like a cat…”

“More like a mutt…” he changed the playful tone for seriousness “listen, Bruce…”

“Master Bruce, Mr. Laurie called: Master Richard isn’t at the gym…”

“What?” Bruce clenched the armrests.

Tony yanked his head backwards.

“Not again! We have so many things going on and the brat staged another show to undermine your guardianship! This time I’m gonna spank the little bastard!”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose feeling the throb of a starting migraine and took his Cosmos out of the pocket of his jacket.

“I’m calling Jim – we must find Richard” he looked at Tony calm.

Tony shook his head with his friend’s patience but then compassion won and he placed his hand on Bruce’s shoulder.

“Are you alright, littl’ guy?”

Bruce nodded and brushed the screen calling Jim but then he noticed Tony’s forearm glowing. His friend had activated the forearm part of his Ironman armor to be constantly updated by Jarvis that had gained access to Arkham’s surveillance cameras. Bruce ended the call before been made and watched Tony speaking to his AI.

“Master Anthony, Joker is already inside Arkham Asylum.”

The AI projected a hologram in the salon transmitting footage from the Asylum’s interior showing the jester hopping at the corridor his scars forming a wide Cheshire smile.

Tony smiled to Bruce.
“Now you don’t have to go there to lure Joker” Bruce opened his mouth to retort but Tony raised his palm cutting him “I’m not hearing anything: I’m going downstairs to dress up.”

Bruce’s phone rang with Selina’s melody. Bruce frowned and Tony gulped: this wasn’t good.

“Sel, what you got?”

“An’ how are ya gonna kill Joker, big guy?” Jason jeered his friend as he stopped his bike to an alley behind the imposing gothic building. “With telepathy?”

Dick frowned but shook his head.

“I’ll think something…”

Jason rolled his eyes and snorted. He leaned and opened a leather case at his bike’s side.

“What’s this?!” Dick asked gaping and Jason sniggered.

“A fuckin’ lollipop! Isn’t obvious, hit man?” he brushed the G43 handgun.

“You have a gun?”

“’Course, man – I’m strollin’ Gotham’s mean streets, I need some reassurance.”

Dick snatched the gun and dismounted.

“Let’s go!”

“How are we gonna pass the guards?” Jason asked hooking their helmets to the bike’s handles.

“We’ll climb the fence from the back and we’ll see…”

Jason rolled his eyes.

“Great plan, man…” he stared at the imposing building that under the dim lights of the twilight looked like taken from a horror movie; a shiver ran his spine. “This place is spooky, man…it’s like those haunted houses in the movies.”

Dick rolled his eyes exasperated trying to control the same fear that had spurt in him seeing the legendary building: every Gothamite kid had been raised with stories for ghosts strolling at the Manor’s corridors.

“Stop that!”

“What if the fence is wired?” Jason asked following his friend bent. “At least, is darkening and they won’t see us…”

Jason’s fears evaporated when the two boys reached the fence; the back entrance to the yard was open with no guards. Dick turned to him smiling.

“You see? You don’t need to worry: we’re lucky!”

Jason shook his head.

“Bullshit! We’re not lucky: Joker is already inside, man!”
Dick’s eyes flashed determined and the boy pressed his lips.

“Let’s go!”

“Bruce, Dick and Jason are here!” Selina’s voice was calm but a flickering of worry blended with rage was audible.

Tony saw panicked Bruce’s face paling; Alfred came closer to his master worried.

“Master Bruce?”

Bruce rubbed his temple.

“Jarvis, give me image from inside. Every available camera!”

Tony wished he had told Jarvis to not obey any order Bruce gave him but it was too late.

Image from different spots of the building began appearing one after another.

“Stop!” Bruce ordered.

Two small figures walked in the brightly lit corridor that Bruce recognized as the corridor leading from the back entrance to the lounge room. Suddenly, Jason registered the camera and elbowed his friend pointing there with his eyes. The two boys hurried to move to a sideways corridor out of the camera’s range but Bruce spotted what Dick held: a small handgun.

“Fuck!” Bruce shouted so much unlike himself and Tony narrowed his eyes seeing sweat drops on his friend’s face. “He is going after Joker!”

“Stupid brats!” Tony exploded because now Bruce wasn’t going to stay behind.

And to confirm his fears Bruce steered his chair towards the lift but Tony stood determined before him blocking his way. Bruce frowned.

“Tony, get out of my way! I’m going there!”

“Not this time, buddy!” Tony’s eyes flashed colliding with his friends’ in a staring battle. “You’re in no condition for that!”

Alfred was watching holding his breath, even Hero stood there confused.

And then Bruce grabbed the armrests and stood on his feet towering his friend.

“I’m perfectly able, Tony.”

“Bruce, stop that nonsense: you know that you shouldn’t force your legs to do that! And this time you’ll stay here!”

Bruce’s eyes were completely still and his breath a growl. The determined flash in his irises frightened Alfred as much as seeing his young master exerting himself standing.

“The boys are in danger; I’m going there and you can’t stop me!”

Alfred sensed that something really bad was going to happen – Master Anthony’s eyes were icy.
“Master Bruce, Master Anthony…” he tried to intervene but nobody listened to him.

Tony knew that it was now or never: he wasn’t going to let anyone ever again tie his friend and abuse him. He yanked his head.

“I can, Bruce…”

Bruce barely managed to narrow his eyes in realization of what his friend had done before collapsing in Tony’s waiting arms –. Tony hugged his friend carefully.

Alfred rushed to him upset for what Tony had done.

“Master Anthony!” he began feeling Bruce.

“He is fine, Alfred, just sleeping. I used Ironman’s stunning beam” he showed him the forearm part of Ironman’s armor that was returning to its previous state after shooting the stunning beam.

However, Alfred’s eyes remained widened and Tony inhaled determined and lifted his friend’s unconscious body in bridal style.

“He saved my life, Alfred and he is my best friend: I’d rather face his wrath than his death, Alfred” he activated his Ironman boots and flew to the upper floor.

He wouldn’t waste time explaining his decision to Alfred; the butler would have done the same if he could.

Tony opened the door to the Master’s bedroom and placed his friend tenderly on the mattress. He stared at his sleeping face and caressed his cheek.

“It’s for your own good, littl’ guy…” he placed a soft kiss on his forehead as Alfred and Hero rushed inside.

Alfred reached the bed and Hero climbed the bed and cuddled on Bruce’s chest as Tony turned to leave.

“I’m gonna end this Joker business once and for all” he said placing his hand on the butler’s shoulder.

Alfred met his gaze and Tony’s stubbornness was shaken but the billionaire choked any doubt.

“He’ll be safe here, Alfred.”

Dick was leading the way through the empty corridors of Arkham; both boys were walking hunched in order to not be caught by the cameras.

“Don’t ya think that somethin’ very bizarre takes place her’?”

Dick turned his head to him.

“We’re in Arkham Asylum: what did you expect?”

“I mean, it’s like there’s no life in her’, man…No guards, no doctors, no loonies, not even goons… It’s creepy, man…”
Dick chuckled to hide his own fear.

“Maybe we’ll see a ghost in the next corner…” he snorted.

Suddenly, both boys stopped on their heels.

“Voices…” Dick whispered and gestured to Jason to go closer.

It was the lounge room: a huge space consisted of the cafeteria and the recreation room where the built-in TV was open broadcasting cartoons. The boys squatted under the big window on the side wall and looked carefully inside; Jason chuckled seeing the cartoons but Dick hushed him.

Joker stood there among his goons some of them wore the orange uniforms of the asylum’s inmates while others wore custom clothes and clown masks. Dick gritted his teeth and clenched the gun ready to burst inside but Jason held his upper arm determined.

“They’ll catch ya if ya go now…it’s better to wait for the party to begin; in the fuss ya’ll go unnoticed.”

Dick nodded and relaxed turning to look inside.

Suddenly, another person appeared in the room in front of Joker causing the goons’ panic and their leader’s wicked smirk.

Dick and Jason exchanged surprised looks.

“Thor!” Dick whispered and Jason lolled his head.

“It seems ya won’t get yar chance after all, mate…”

“Thoooooor, hoooooo niieee you decided to hooooonor us with your presence.”

The blond god’s face was tense; his jaw clenched so much unlike his usual mild demeanor. He fist his hammer which was emitting sparkles reflecting its master’s mood.

“Cut the crap! I know who you really are…What are you up to, Loki?”

The goons looked at their leader and despite the fact they had the masks on it was easy to tell that they were goggling. Joker burst into laughter that was like a cackle and not Joker’s usual giggle.

“Boss?” one of the goons asked confused.

And then Joker snapped his fingers and the goons collapsed to the floor.

Dick and Jayson goggled as Joker became someone else: a man with long black straight hair that fell around his thin face; he had slightly pointy ears and nose and he was staring intensely at Thor with a sarcastic glint. He was dressed in dark green leather stockings and a dark green long vest.

“What the fuck?!” Jason exclaimed before Dick hushed him hastily. “Elves go for Gotham now?!” he continued in a exasperated whisper.

“Shssssssss!”

Thor narrowed his eyes and shook his head.

“Finally I got you!” the blond god said.
“Sel, I see the Asylum – in less than a minute I’m in” Tony in Ironman’s armor informed Selina. “And police is on the way.”

He had decided that he needed the speed of his own armor if he wanted to get Joker. Enough with Bruce’s obsession with secrecy games.

Selina frowned.

“What about Bruce?”

“He is safe…” he said cold as he began descending to the Asylum’s eerily quiet yard.

“I’m coming” Selina said, feeling that something serious had happened but now wasn’t the time to discuss it.

“You, brother? Got me?” the raven haired god chuckled shaking his head. “You were always so arrogant, Thor!” he said strutting around him with his hands behind his back.

“What are you up to taking Joker’s form? Where is he?”

Loki touched his ear the way newscasters did when hearing something from the control room.

“Control room just informs me…Oh! How touching! Ironman is here!” he smirked fixing his wickedly glimmering eyes on Thor whose face tensed in suspicion.

“You brought your people here? What have you done this time, Loki?”

Loki stretched his arms horizontally and yanked his head upwards.

“You and your genius” he uttered sarcastically the ‘genius’ ‘friend are so predictable” he sniggered. “Even a lunatic like Joker knows your every movement.”

Dick and Jason were gaping at the scene holding their breaths.

Thor was fuming and his hand grabbed his hammer; Loki chuckled amused.

“You know, brother: strength is soooooo weak before wits…” he lollled his head on the side. “Where can Joker be when his darling, Bruce is not here?”

Thor’s eyes bulged.

“Joker is going to attack the Manor!” he exclaimed as Ironman entered the room having opened the window breaching its codes.

Dick and Jason exchanged horrified looks.

Tony was astonished by Loki’s presence there yet as soon as he heard Thor saying those few words everything became a fog around him: Bruce was unconscious in the Manor and Joker had again Loki’s help – those two had attacked the Avengers’ Tower, they could do the same with the Manor.

“Jarvis, call Alfred!” he barked already turning towards the window to take off back to the Manor.
“I’m sorry, sir; I can’t connect with the Manor.”

AI’s reply came exactly at the moment Tony saw that the window had closed.

“Find Steve!” he shouted fuming as Loki laughed with his agonizing efforts.

Thor however didn’t stand to watch; he turned towards the window ready to fly to the Manor only to collide hard on an invisible and unyielding wall.

“Watch where your step, bro!” Loki cackled and Thor stormed at him catching only thin air as the mischievous god vanished reappearing sat on the cafeteria buffet.

“I’m afraid, sir, that I can’t find Mr. Rogers – something blocks my calls.”

Loki whistled to the air playing the innocent.

“I block the calls; you can’t defeat my magic, Stark – neither do you, bro” his smirk and his gaze leaked triumph and irony.

Dick turned to Jason.

“They can’t get out of the room – we must warn Wayne!”

Jason nodded and they began running towards the back exit from where they had come in. Suddenly as they turned the curve to the door they bumped on something and Dick panicked remembered the gun he was still holding. He pointed at their obstacle only to be kicked in the hand losing the gun.

“You shouldn’t play with such toys, boy…” a sly sensual voice told him.

Dick and Jason goggled at the gorgeous leather clad body of Catwoman who was frowning at them.

“This isn’t a place for puppies! Beat it before I spank you!”

Jason slapped his face to wake his numb mind.

“Joker isn’t her!” he pointed with his hand at the lounge room. “Joker’s gonna attack the Manor!”

Catwoman’s eyes widened and she felt sweat showering her body.

“What?!”

Dick rubbed unconsciously his hand realizing that the kick wasn’t as strong as Catwoman could hit.

“Some Loki guy is there with Thor and Stark and has the room locked with magic or something… He told them that Joker…” Dick said with one breath.

But Catwoman didn’t need to hear more.

“Let’s go!” she said and ran to the exit as police sirens get closer.

Thor lifted his Mjolnir threateningly; his teeth were gritted as he glared at his brother.

“Loki, this isn’t funny…” he hissed.

Loki placed his hands on his open knees and looked his brother in the eyes.
“For once I agree with you, bro…This isn’t funny – real fun is on the way!”

Tony’s heart was drumming in his head and he just couldn’t stand that fucking god throwing up bullshit while Bruce was exposed to Joker. He clenched his jaw and stormed at him using the momentum from his boots.

Loki pouted and feigned the scared but at the last second before Ironman grabbed his neck he vanished with a puff leaving only his snigger echoing in the empty space.

“See ya, suckers!” he exclaimed and a hand giving the finger appeared in the air.

“Fuck you, sonovabitch!” Tony roared. “Jarvis, can you overcome whatever the motherfucker did? I want to get out, damn it!”

“I’m trying, sir; I also try to contact the Manor or Mr. Rogers.”

Thor was throwing himself to the wall trying to break it, growling.

“Move over!” Ironman spat and as soon as the god obeyed he launched every weapon he had on the wall. To no avail. “Fuck! Fuck! Fuck!” he shouted with increased volume as his despair mounted.

Thor grabbed his comrade’s stretched hand.

“Tony, stop! It’s no use…we have to wait. Tony jerked his hand.

“I can’t wait!” Ironman spat.

“Do not panic: Bruce can defend himself and the Manor is his castle.”

Tony deactivated his face plate to take some air feeling choking; he ran his fingers in his wet hair.

“He is unconscious, Thor” the god’s eyes widened and Tony licked his lips. “I stunned him to stop him from coming here thinking that I was protecting him!”

Thor stared at the floor in loss for words…what had Tony done? He still couldn’t believe it yet he couldn’t let his friend blaming only himself.

“Tony, do not blame yourself: it’s my fault Loki did this – if haven’t shown interest in Bruce Loki wouldn’t…”

“Stop the consoling, okay!”

Alfred was in the kitchen preparing some soup for the dinner. Master Bruce would certainly need some after the effect of Master Anthony’s stunning beam was over. However he doubted that the young man would have any mood for food after that.

He sighed and turned his eyes to the ceiling: he didn’t want to imagine the ramifications of what Master Anthony did to their friendship. He just hoped that everything would go as planned and then the two youths would find a way to overcome this.

The phone in the salon rang and Alfred wiped his hands in a towel and pressed the button in the square shaped panel on the wall next to the built in black fridge to answer.

“Wayne Manor, may I help you?”
"Alfred…"

The butler recognized Master Richard’s voice: the boy sounded upset, in agony, out of breath; also, he could hear what seemed like the roaring of a running motorcycle.

"Master Richard, where are you? Master Bruce is worried."

"Alfred, Joker is coming…We called the police…” he had seen Catwoman trying to call someone else but he hadn’t made out whom and from her frustration Dic could tell that she didn’t find him/her.

Suddenly, a deafening bang shook the building and Alfred’s eyes widened as his legs already headed out of the kitchen forgetting to end the dial.

"Master Bruce…"

"Sir, I think that now the wall will subside."

Tony pointed the inside of his palm to the wall and Thor did the same with the Mjolnir; the blow was deafening but the wall finally collapsed. The two Avengers took off flying desperately towards the Palisades as police officers stormed inside the building – Tony knew already that doctors and patients were safely locked in their sections.

"Master Anthony” Jarvis’ voice was a bit upset and that was bad news “Avengers’ Tower is under attack…”

“Again?!” Tony growled and Thor stopped in midair looking at him perplexed.

“Actually, the entire New York city downtown is under attack. Mr. Fury has already called the Avengers: Dr. Banner is on his way; Captain America and Ms. Romanov too.”

Tony felt his blood drumming throughout his body.

“Go!” He said to Thor. “I’ll go to Bruce.”

“No! If Loki’s magic helps Joker you’ll need me.”

"Master Anthony, Wayne Manor is breached."
Chapter 66

Chapter Summary

No animal was abused during the writing of this chapter...

A huge hole stood where the big rectangular window of the master’s bedroom used to be; dust and particles of debris hovered thick in the air around.

Hero stood from his perch on Bruce’s chest and arched his back in defensive-aggressive stance; his hairs were stretched and his tail erect.

“Iiiiiit’s great to haaaave the right pals!”

Among the dust cloud a form was distinct baring an arrogant stance but then his foot found a piece of debris and he slipped a bit.

“Stuuuuupid brick!” he snapped and regained his posture fixing his hair and slipping his hand inside his chest in an imitation of Napoleon. “I came, I saw, I conquered!” he said gruffly but then pulled his Napoleon hand out and scratched his hair. “Thaaaaat was Julius Caesar” he shook his head. “Never mind…” he waved that off.

He walked away from the pile of dusty debris shaking his head in frustration and stretching his arms.

“Wheeeere’s my weeeeelcome committee? Such a dramatic entrance and nooooo applause?” he lolled his head and rolled his eyes.

But then his eyes fell on the bed and widened seeing Bruce sleeping peacefully; he rushed there his purple jacket waving behind him.

“Noooooow…this is the beeeeeeest welcome!” he licked his lips like a hungry wolf travelling Bruce’s body with his eyes.

Hero’s eyes flashed seeing the man goggling at his human and he hissed angrier than ever in his life.

Joker lolled his head and looked at the kitten intrigued.

“Brucie’s kitten? Brucie’s husband – niiiiice to meet you” he stretched his hand for a handshake but the kitten hissed again and jumped on him digging its nails to his cheek.

Joker grabbed the kitten and after much struggle and several scratches held him in front of him smiling.

“New scaaaaaars? Thank youuuuu, pal! But now I must reunite with my wife…”

He let the animal on the floor but Hero instantly climbed the bed and hissed at Joker who had just sat on the chair beside the bed. The jester rolled his eyes and shook his head which was the only thing he managed to do before the kitten attacked his neck stabbing his claws.

“Take that beast ooooooff me!” he shouted angrily and his goons who just entered through the hole in the wall rushed to him.

Hero wasn’t willing to let the jester and the goons struggled to take him from their boss; once they managed to detach him the animal attacked them with his claws ripping their clown masks.

Joker giggled touching the deep bleeding wounds on his neck.

“Heheheheheeeeee! The littl’ one is touuuugh!” his eyes fell on Bruce “how fitting…”

“Boss, ya want me to kill it?” Bags Bunny asked Joker pointing his gun at the kitten that hissed and struggled in the hands of a third goon.

Joker smirked.

“Only if youuuuu want to die next… I never kill animals…” he lollled his head on the side thoughtful “except than those bats buuuuuut they were defiling Gotham’s sky”. Then he became dead serious “and this fella is Brucie’s kitten… Put him in the bathroom and close the door before he eats you alive – HEHEHEHEHEEEEE!” the goon moved towards the bathroom fighting to avoid Hero’s sharp claws and teeth. “Now sooooome prriiiiiivacy, boys… Clooooose your eyes” he stared at them shaking his index finger warningly “nooooooo cheatin’ – I can seeeeeee under the mask…” he couldn’t but his lads were so stupid that would believe that.

He sat again and gazed at Bruce’s calm, peaceful face admiring the way the air left so feathery his lips.

“My Sleeping Beauty… an’ I’m your Priiiiiiince Charming…” he giggled. “I was wrong ‘bout goooooood ooool’ Tony: he wanted us together all along… Heheheheeeeee!”

He leaned above Bruce’s face and brought his lips a breath away from Bruce’s.

“Mmm… Cinnamon… Ugh!” he jerked his head nervously. “I missed that smell sooooo much! Grrrrrrrr!”

He surged at Bruce’s lips and captured them greedily.

“Get away from him!”

Joker half closed his eyes frustrated and turned towards the door from where the voice was heard. He licked his lips and lollled his head on the side eyeing Bruce’s butler who was holding a silver handgun that shone in the twilight; he was pointing at him with his finger tight around the trigger.

“You’re mmm… inter—rupting – I forgot to put the ‘doooon’t disturuurb’ sign on the door, huh?” Joker said calm but suddenly lollled his head on the side “what do ya use to pooolish your guuun – my blaaades need some of thatttt…” he yanked his head “youuuu see we’re in a tender moment here: where’s your English manners?”

Alfred gritted his teeth.

“Kept for gentlemen! Your hands off of Master Bruce!”

Joker pouted and cocked an eyebrow sighing.

“That’s a baaaaad father in law! Ugh! The dangers of marriage life…” he cast a glare at Alfred “you want me to believe that you will risk Brucie’s life by shooting me?”

The goons were watching agitated.
Alfred’s blue eyes were completely still in icy determination. He pressed smoothly the trigger and Joker jerked feeling a burning at his shoulder, the bullet sinking on the wall only an inch away from him. The jester whistled awed.

“Ohhhhhhh!” he exclaimed pursing his lips. “I think that myyyyy daddy has some skeletons in his closet…” his face stretched in a Cheshire smile among Hero’s bleeding scratches. “Eeeenough is enough though…”

Alfred barely saw the flash that was coming at him realizing that it was a blade only when it was too late to avoid it. It was obvious that the blade didn’t aim at his heart but he was ready for the pain. However he pressed the trigger again hoping that at least would hit the jester.

His surprise was overwhelming for two reasons simultaneously: his bullet bounced off Joker as if meeting an invisible barrier and the blade that was an inch from his upper arm was deflected with a clang. The butler followed the blade to the floor and saw an arrow having pierced the metal.

When he raised his eyes in front of the dusty pile of debris stood a man dressed like Robin Hood; his bow’s cord was still trembling from the arrows that after the one who hit the blade launched to hit the goons who had fallen on the floor screaming. Alfred felt encouraged.

“Away from him!” the green clad man said sharply to Joker.

But the jester giggled not afraid at all.

“Oh! Robin! How niiiiice you joined us! I knew it wasn’t going to be booooorrring” he shook his head “I expected Brucie-action but anyway…You think that you can scaaaaare me ooooff with your littl’ arrows?” he cackled. “By the way I kept your last one: great piece for my collection.”

Arrow’s goatteed jaw clenched in disgust and without any hesitation he let the arrow in his bow leave with a gracious motion aiming at the jester’s heart.

Alfred hated violence but in this case he was willing to forgive it since only a minute ago he had fired as well. His eyes bulged.

Arrow narrowed his eyes: there was no way this could happen…His arrow had bounced and landed on Joker’s feet who began hopping and gesturing as if he had scored in the pitch.

“I loooooooove it, babe! Nothin’ like a god proteeeectin’ you!” he stopped his bubbling abruptly taking a serious expression “Now, I love your company, guys, but I got to gooooo…” he leaned above Bruce and put his arms under his body.

“Don’t touch him!” the Arrow roared and a flood of arrows flew at Joker ending up on the carpet.

“No!” Alfred yelled understanding the jester’s intention.

Joker turned his head to them as the Arrow ground his teeth and surged at him – Alfred doing the same.

“Sorry, guys, I’d like to plaaaaay more but I have a honeymoon to atteeeend!”

The Arrow clashed with the invisible shield that protected Joker and felt the barrier yielding; he was ready to snap the clown’s neck but suddenly the jester vanished taking with him Bruce.

Tony and Thor landed in the room through the gaping hole; the billionaire had eyes for nothing except the bed where he laid his sedated friend. Thor despite his compassion for Tony and his own sadness noticed Arrow’s presence. Although the man’s face was cast under the shadow of his hood his eyes flashed like lightning in rage and his jaw was clenched. It wasn’t difficult for Thor to understand that the man couldn’t accept the fact that he was defeated and what made his frustration greater was that Bruce was taken because of his failure.

Without looking at anyone Arrow rushed at the broken wall and outside to vanish into the twilight.

Tony aware of Alfred’s sad, blank eyes rushed to the empty bed; the face plate deactivated as he touched the still warm mattress.

“No…” he mumbled. “No!” he shouted furious with himself.

Fury was leaned above the central control panel of the Tower which covered the entire wall of the management room. His face was collected but his only eye shone with determination as he was watching the agents trying to regain control of the Tower’s complicated operational systems. Maria Hill was one of the agents who struggled to overcome the unknown factor that blocked their access.

His gaze went to the huge screen that was built-in to the wall at the right; footage from New York’s downtown was projected: people screaming and running trying to take cover in buildings and alleys; abandoned cars that had crashed on fireplugs creating columns of rushing water; other cars screamed trying to speed up to escape from the area.

It was odd that the person that took control of the Tower left the screen working; he smirked. Not that odd…The bastard wanted them to watch as green clad human-like creatures chased and attacked people in the city where the Avengers had their headquarters.

Fury was consoled from the fact that he at least managed to communicate with the Avengers before the unknown factor blocked any in and outcoming calls; even though he couldn’t have any feedback from them he was sure that they were on their way there.

Maria turned her head to Fury.

“Stark could help here; is his baby after all…”

“I’m afraid he is preoccupied with other things right now…” a sly voice that didn’t belong to anyone of Fury’s agents answered.

Fury turned rapidly with his black firearm pointing at the intruder and the agents that were fumbling with the control panel followed their superior’s move. S.H.I.E.L.D.’s vice director frowned: the man was dressed in dark green leggings and tunic; a long leather vest embroidered with gold waved at his sides. He wore some kind of helmet made from gold with long curved horns beginning from the back and ending at front. His forearms and upper arms were covered with golden plates.

Silence fell on the hall but for the low humming of the machines. Fury knew that his agents despite brave and courageous were shocked from their guest who stared at them smirking, his sneaky eyes sparkled gleeful making his narrow framed by his black hair face look like an old sketch of playful, mischief demons.

“Who are you?” Fury spat in his cold, rough voice completely undeterred.

Their uninvited guest rolled his eyes and began strolling at the hall as if it was his home.

“You’re not the smartest block in town, huh?” he said turning his head to Fury. “Hello?!“ he stretched his arms horizontally and showed his clothes with his eyes. “What my attire say to you about my identity? And the fact I popped up in the most secure” he chuckled “not so secure” he jeered “building in the world?”

Fury cocked an eyebrow smirking.

“That you’re a nut job conjurer with bad taste in clothes…” he snapped and the stranger laughed.

“Nice, Fury, charming…Finally, I see how you made my brother join your petty team.”

“Your brother?” Fury narrowed his eye.

Loki yanked his head backwards sighing and touched his horns for emphasis.

“Made in Asgard – all rights reserved” he cackled and then pouted. “You’re not laughing? Mortals don’t have humor…”

“Thor’s brother…” agent Hill said and their guest bowed.

“Clever girl! Now, you’ll get bonus points if you say my name” but as nobody in the room said anything, he shook his head exasperated and raised his hands. “Okay, I’m not a star right now but I’m making my dynamic breakthrough appearance. Well, ladies and gentlemen, I’m Loki Laufeyjarson – for the enemies, just Loki.”

He looked around.

“It’s nice to see the place again…”

Fury frowned.

“Joker’s attack. You helped him overcome the building’s defenses. What do you want? World domination?”

Loki crooked his mouth in dislike.

“It sounds too mundane for someone like me…” Fury frowned and Loki smiled. “And now, ladies and gentlemen, I’m sorry to part with your delightful company but I need to watch the show from a better place” he tapped his index to his bottom lip “Stark’s apartment on the top floor: I don’t think he’ll bother…I suggest you stop trying overcome my magic which” he cocked his eyebrows smugly “is impossible and watch the show” he gestured to the screen. “See ya!”

“Back to your work!” Fury barked as soon as Loki vanished. “We must take back the Tower!”

“The control hall is locked” Maria said. “We can’t get the bastard!”

Fury looked at his agents calm and determined.

“We’ll overcome his conjures and then we’ll teach him a lesson!”

“What happened, Alfred?” Thor asked since he was seeing that Tony wasn’t in a state to ask.

Alfred didn’t react for a few seconds but then he regained his collected demeanor and looked at the blond god.
“I received a phone call from Master Richard that Joker was going to attack the Manor and then I heard a loud bang and the whole building shook. I ran immediately to Master bedroom” he cast a glance at the gun he was still holding “no, pardon me, sir, first I went to my bedroom to collect my gun. When I entered the Master bedroom Joker was…” he inhaled deeply “touching his lips to Master Bruce’s lips…”

Thor bit his bottom lip hearing that and Tony listening through a long tunnel closed his eyes imagining that scene with his mind’s eyes: it was his fault.

“I shot him” Alfred continued “and the first time it scrapped him but the second bullet bound off of him; even Mr. Arrow’s…well, arrow bounced, as if he had an invisible shield around him. And then when we both realized that our weapons wouldn’t manage anything we surged at him but he…he put his hands around Master Bruce’s body and just disappeared” he gulped as elegantly as possible. “I don’t understand how on earth he managed to breach the Manor’s security and then why our weapons couldn’t touch him…and the disappearing…”

Thor gulped.

“Loki, one of the Asgardian gods, helps him…He is my…let’s say brother. I’m sorry, Alfred” he placed his hand on the butler’s shoulder who shook his head.

“Is not your fault, Master Thor…” and then he suddenly remembered and narrowed his eyes. “Master Hero was with Master Bruce…Good Lord! He can’t be dead…”

Thor however registered some strange sounds from the bathroom and rushed there. He opened the door and the angry kitten stormed outside his claws already armed from scratching the door; Hero ran to his Master’s bed and climbed. Upon not seeing his human he began sniffing desperate and both Alfred and Thor looked at the animal sad.

“He is taken, buddy…” Tony mumbled and petted the kitten’s head. “But I swear I’ll bring him back.”

Tony in his numbness heard the pained groans of Joker’s goons that were left behind. His face distorted in rage, he turned on his heels and stormed at them grabbing the first slumped form. He lifted him and gritted his teeth to his scared face since his clown mask had fallen.

“Where did Joker take Bruce?!” he shouted. “Speak or I’ll rip your filthy guts, motherfucker!”

The goon began shaking: he was already in pain from the arrow that was stabbed to his upper arm and the blood loss made things worse. He shook his head.

“I…I swear…I don’t know…he didn’t tell anythin’.”

Tony had no patience to repeat his question; he punched the man with his iron glove and left him with broken nose on the floor. He grabbed another trembling goon and lifted him to the air with one hand clenching his throat.

“Where has Joker gone?!” he tightened his grip and the man’s eyes bulged as the loss of air made him cough. He opened his mouth to say something but Tony brought his other hand in front of his face with his nano missiles launcher opening with a low humming. “In your place I’d think twice what I’ll say: if I don’t like the answer my missiles will melt your ugly pan!” the lack of his face plate wasn’t diminishing the threatening impression.

The man tried to gulp but Tony clenched more his throat gritting his teeth.
“Speak, you sonovabitch!”

“Master Anthony” Alfred tried to reason with him as the launcher rattled ready to fire.

The goon looked at the Englishman silently begging yet Tony didn’t relent neither gave any indication that he had heard Alfred’s appeal.

“Speak! I’m counting to three: 1, 2…”

Thor grabbed his armed hand and lowered it; Tony glared at him without letting the goon.

“Stay out of this, Asgardian!”

Tony’s blazing black eyes collided with Thor’s calm baby blues.

“I’m doing what Bruce would want me to do: stop you before you do something you’ll regret.”

“I won’t regret!”

He jerked his hand to free it but Thor was unyielding.

“Think Bruce, Tony…” Tony blinked nervously. “Joker would never have told anything to his goons – let them to the police.”

A new pair of feet rushed inside from the open door; a panting respiration broke the tension.

“Where’s Bruce?!?” Catwoman’s slightly alienated voice demanded. “Every security measure is down! Why are you all here?!?”

Her manic eyes scanned the room: the whole in the exterior wall, the writhing goons, the blood on the carpet, Hero rubbing his head desperately to the mattress.

“Why are you in the Master’s bedroom?” and then it dawned to her: Bruce’s absence from Arkham Asylum, Tony’s tone when he told her that Bruce wasn’t coming.

She marched to Tony, her eyes sending daggers. Ironman let the goon fall from his hand literally paralyzed from the sight of the angry cat.

“What have you done to him?” she hissed.

Alfred made to hold her upper arms soothingly but Catwoman jerked them away.

“He wanted to meet Strange at the Asylum and I sedated him; I brought him here before I left; Joker found him unconscious” Ironman admitted.

Catwoman’s eyes widened, icy cold; she raised her hand and struck him in the face. Tony let his head loll to the side: he deserved that.

Two pair of feet invaded the room and the two panting respirations stopped abruptly taking in the condition of the room. Both Dick and Jason looked stunned at Catwoman and Ironman not understanding. Dick turned his gaze to Alfred’s pale face and then at the bed where Hero was purring sniffing his gone human’s perfume: the boy rushed there and hugged the distraught animal, Jason following giving some kicks to the goons on the floor.

“Master Anthony, the situation in New York has escalated”
The AI projected a hologram showing the chaos in the roads around Avengers’ Tower: people screaming and running panicked as human-like soldiers with odd machine guns shot at will at buildings and people the rattling of the shooting creating more panic.

“Dr. Banner, Captain America and Black Widow are almost there and calling you.”

Tony’s eyes were still locked with Catwoman’s, apologizing and urging her to punish him more but Thor broke their silent confrontation.

“Tony, they need us…”

“Bruce needs me too!”

“Get the Hell out of here!” Catwoman spat. “Gotham is my city and you’re useless!” she stormed at the window and jumped outside.

Police sirens filled the grounds and tires were heard stopping abruptly.

Thor looked again at his comrade and Tony lowered his head a second before the face plate covered it. Both Avengers flew outside.

Loki stood before the whole wall window in Tony Stark’s leaving room at the top floor of Avengers’ Tower. He had his hands behind his back and enjoyed the view: not the city’s breathtaking skyline that sparkled in the twilight but what was taking place down on the street and the surrounding area. The fact that he was a god helped a lot to that because a human couldn’t be able to have such range.

The roads that crossed before the Tower where among the most bustling so that time of the day they were washed by all kinds of multicolored lights: billboards, shops’ headlights, internal lighting of the surrounding skyscrapers, public lightings. And all this light illustrated more the action; the chaos underneath.

His army of humanoids marched icy cold through the streets and fired with their unseen before firearms causing refreshed shrieks of panic and running – some people were falling as they collided with others. Cars’ horns added to the whole chaotic impression accompanied with the eerie sound of screeching tires, crashing and broken glass. Police officers ran around trying to guide citizens away from the fire or shooting at the attacking horde.

“And that’s all about Avengers…Tomorrow the world will be laughing at you. Where are you, Thor? Still pulled by your dick?”

Suddenly, something caught his eye: in one corner, two of his soldiers were launched in the air and where they stood till then a shapely woman in dark blue skin tight attire looked around her with determined eyes.

“Get her…” Loki mumbled indifferently knowing that his order echoed in the heads of his soldiers.

Humanoids from every corner ran to her closing in; Natasha eyed them amused. They swarmed at her but then a flash ripped the air and half the humanoids were swept away; Natasha continued kicking their opponents and Captain America grabbed his shield that returned to him and sure that his comrade could handle them ran to the other side where a cluster of them were shooting the front windows of a café to attack the customers and the people who had found refuge there.

Captain America launched himself and fell on them with his legs united, crushing them to the sidewalk; he immediately stood to his feet and began punching them swiftly.

Loki nodded satisfied.

“The team is gathering…Nice. Let’s make the show more captivating” he snapped his fingers smirking wickedly.

Natasha and Steve had just knocked out their last opponents running to face others when loud thuds lie from heavy footsteps drew their attention. Both looked north.

A herd of some kind of animals was running frantically at them; at first they weren’t clearly visible but when under the lights, the two Avengers saw beasts they haven’t seen before.

They looked like rhinos only they were light brown with iron covering their backs, chests and heads; from the top of their nose protruded a long, curved gold horn while lower a smaller straight silver horn stack out. Their eyes were human shaped except they were yellow, flashing like lamps; their nostrils and mouths emitted fume that in the cold air formed crystals.

People from their covering in stores and behind bins saw and began screaming, some of them blinded by their panic ran for it causing the animals chasing.

“Someone is a Lord of the Rings fan” Fury commented dryly casting a glance at the screen while hitting the hall’s door with his shoulder along with two other agents.

Captain America looked at Natasha, new humanoids attacking them from everywhere while the beasts targeted the scared people.

Loki lolled his head on the side.

“What? Have you lost your color?”

Steve tossed his shield to the legs of a beast that was ready to stab his horns to a woman pushing it a few feet away. He made to run closer but several humanoids fell on him. Natasha was also fighting with a bunch of them hitting with everything she had.

“Tough job, huh?” Loki mumbled through his smirk.

Steve jerked upwards roaring pushing off of him the humanoids that held him; he began running towards the attacking beasts throwing again his shield to one and jumping on the back of another punching it trying to knocked it out or kill it but its armor was very strong.

It took him several punches to finally yield the beast but he saw with horror that the beasts had hit some people.

“Damn!”

He dismounted from the slumped beast as some policemen tried to lead the people to safety; Steve threw his shield against two beasts at once but a flock of them was already heading frantically at him; he grabbed his shield that returned to him. He could jump off their way but they would hit the policemen that led citizens away. He tossed his shield at the feet of the beasts at the front but their stampede was such that the following beasts jumped over them ready to tread on Steve.

Natasha saw her comrade’s tough situation and made to run to him but humanoids surrounded her.

“Now we’re talking!” Loki’s smiled became even broader.
A roar shook New York’s downtown as the sound of gigantic feet made everything tremble more than the running beasts. Steve and Natasha both looked up waiting a new calamity. But Loki turned his narrowed eyes there too.

A green giant half naked with torn pants covering half of his things showed his teeth and stormed at the herd of rhinos that were a breath from squashing Steve who cleverly jumped away attacking with his landing a group of Loki’s soldiers.

Hulk’s enormous fists began hammering the beasts sending them to hit at walls smashing glass and cement.

“So the green giant is here…” Loki said and snapped his fingers.

More humanoids flooded the street chasing police officers and citizens firing at will right and left. Some of them shot with flamethrowers burning cars and bins but thanks to the police and the National guard no human.

Steve and Natasha moved to meet each other knocking out every enemy that stood before them. Hulk was growling at the odd beasts grabbing one by the leg and using it as a bat to knock the others clearing the field.

A nightmarish sound as if thousand wolves howled at once cracked the battle field and the two Avengers looked at the sky: a giant black cloud covered the area; a cloud that different colored waves crossed it as if something was stirring inside. And indeed the cloud parted and jet like objects with shark-like fronts flooded the evening sky.

“You’re kidding!” Natasha exclaimed exasperated before surging at a group of humanoids. “What’s this?” she asked Steve who was also fighting with several men. “Who’s doing it and why?”

Ironman and Thor were yards from New York’s Downtown; Tony was both watching the battle field in front of the Tower and trying to find a way to regain control over the building’s systems.

“Loki’s ability in magic is great” Thor said his face tight listening to the echo of the battle.

“And I’m a genius!” Ironman spat but instantly he remembered what had just happened in Gotham and his guts clenched. “And I hate magic!”

They both knew that Loki’s magic took down every security measure in Wayne Manor permitting Joker to enter and escape; otherwise Arrow and Alfred would have stopped him.

“What is this?” Thor asked frowned hearing the mixed sound of jets and roaring.

“Planes with jaws” Tony said nonchalant “and Hulk is having a party with some rhinos. Captain and Natasha are fist fighting as usual. Let’s save the day!”

Ironman’s heels emitted fires as he surged forward and Thor followed clenching Mjolnir and his jaw.

“I want Loki alive!” Ironman shouted and launched a purple beam that sent the first black jet-shark he saw to crash in the ocean the same time as Thor waved his hammer launching thunders at a group of humanoids that had surrounded citizens ready to shoot them.

Loki smiled devilishly seeing the new arrivals.
“Time to smash them all…” he nodded and the black cloud filled with dark green waves breaking the cloud to release Loki’s army: hundreds of men and women dressed as their leader – but without the glimmering gold - holding machine guns and axes began descending with parachutes.

The few remaining reporters in the press room of the Daily Planet’s building had gathered around one desk and watched awed the events that were taking place right now at New York.

“It’s a handy coincidence Mary is at New York these days” Perry said. “Who is attacking? What he wants?”

“He must be really powerful to manage to breach Avengers’ Tower and unleash all these creatures.”

Clark who was watching leaning above his colleagues remembered that night in the same building when Joker attacked; it was obvious that the madman then was assisted by the same who was launching the attack now. Bruce had saved the day then…he lowered his eyes thoughtful on the memory of the brave human.

The ring of his smart phone startled not only him but also his colleagues. Clark smiled uncomfortable and back stepped out of the reporters’ space to the corridor because this ringtone was Lois’.

“What are you doing?” his friend almost screamed to him outraged.

Clark pushed his glasses with his finger.

“I’m at Planet, right now.”

“Exactly! What’s wrong with you, farm boy? You forget who are you? You should be in New York right now helping people!”

“The Avengers are handling the situation.”

Lois growled.

“What do you have in your head?! Kryptonite?! People are in danger: some are already injured or dead and you say that Avengers are handling it?!” Clark shook his head. “Don’t shake your head and get your Kryptonian butt there! UFO!”

“Okay, Lois; you’re right” he inhaled. “Are you heading to New York?”

“No, we have a situation in Gotham. Some attack at Arkham – I’m there right now and from what I hear something else has happened. I’m gonna find out. Are you still standing there?! Move!”

She closed abruptly and Clark rushed to the elevator pressing the rooftop button; he jumped out and ripped his clothes revealing Superman’s attire. He took off heading to New York but he had barely reached Metropolis’ limits when he stopped abruptly.

Diana hovered before him with her arms crossed over the chest. Her face was stern.

“Where are you going, Kal El?”

“New York, come with me, they need us.”

She cocked her eyebrows.
“I don’t think so…” she said with conviction and Superman frowned.

“What do you mean?” he asked gloom. “People are in danger.”

“If they did want you there they would have asked for your help. Their selfishness doesn’t let them ask for your help so their arrogance must be squashed once and for all. And if you appear there uninvited they will accuse you for trying to intervene in their affairs intending to undermine them: all these petty things are beyond your greatness, Kal El.”

Superman met her gaze: she was right, he had experienced Stark’s arrogance and egoism and his hatred certainly would find an excuse to insult Superman for interfering with their business.

“But people are in danger.”

Diana smiled.

“Let them handle it: it is their responsibility if they don’t ask for your assistance. They should have thought the people there but they didn’t for the sake of their arrogance. We’ll wait and if they ask our help we’ll gladly give it to them. But if they don’t, the fault for what happens will be only theirs and it will show humans who is their real, their true hero and protector.”

Superman pressed his lips indecisive: the cries from New York clenched his guts but Diana had a point.

She stood before him and looked deep in his eyes and Superman felt numb, every other concern obliterated.

“You know I’m right…” she kissed him.

Thor landed with such force that he pushed away Natasha’s opponents sending with Mjolnir twirling thunders to neutralize a group of attackers that was firing at the national guards who had taken cover behind a pile of crushed cars shooting the invaders.

Ironman was attacking simultaneously two different craft-sharks blasting them to pieces over the battle field. As he was flying to meet more of these bizarre aircrafts he was helping his comrades sending laser and bullets to Loki’s soldiers with Jarvis constant updates about the battle.

Hulk was still struggling with the frantic beasts; some of them had run away from him smashing a store’s front window, rushing inside and threatening people that had found refuge there. The green giant with fast and wide strides reached the store and made a spectacular jolt and dive to fall on the back of a beast knocking it out with a punch on the forehead; instantly he used the massive body as a catapult to hit the rest of the animals one by one propelling them out of the store. The people inside who had covered behind the counter looked awed at the giant who was taming the beasts.

Ironman was blasting Loki’s soldiers during their descent but they were so many and he had the crafts to worry too, so hundreds of them managed to land.

“How on Hell did Loki gather all these shit?!” Tony snapped.

“Master Anthony, Mr. Fury and his agents managed to break out of the control room.”

“How?”
“I don’t know, sir, but it seems that your warm found a way to breach the wall that was blocking access to the building’s systems.”

“Can you locate Loki?”

“He is in your apartment, sir.”

“The motherfucker! Defiles my space!”

He wanted nothing more than to storm there and rip this guy in pieces but he couldn’t abandon his comrades who were fighting what looked like endless opponents.

Suddenly, dozens of soldiers were tossed to the air forming a line towards Steve who among his opponents squinted to make out what was that red flash approaching him; his enemies fell on him but he pushed them off of him and the red flash finished the job with punches that were so rapid that escaped the human eye.

Steve stood eyeing the newcomer: a lean man dressed in red skin tight uniform with a yellow thunder on his chest; he knew him from the operation against the League of Shadows.

The Flash saluted him in military style and smiled.

“I thought that you could use some help with the hordes of…” he chuckled “Mordor!”

Steve smiled.

“Every help is highly appreciated” he said and tossed his shield like a frisbee haying five enemies at once while Flash disappeared from sight, his traces the humanoids that fell down.

Hulk had finished with the beasts and now his entire attention focused on the human-like enemies; with wide strides he reached a cluster and sent all of them flying around with two punches.

Natasha jumped over a pile of crashed cars to stop three of Loki’s men from attacking some police officers.

Thor seeing a horde of green-clad soldiers leaving the area to swarm and threat other parts of the city hit his hammer on the street creating a fast running crack that upon reaching his enemies turned into a thunder tornado that tossed them all over the place.

Ironman flew around launching everything he got against the bizarre crafts and helping his comrades whenever someone was cornered. He frowned seeing that Loki’s army finding resistance in Downtown was moving to other places. He readied his stunning weapons feeling a bitter bit because that reminded him what he had done to Bruce. However he overcame his hesitation and hit them neutralizing them.

His pissed face lightened a bit seeing Hulk with spectacular jumps reaching others and squashing them using his arms like a scythe. Tony got the impression of a giant green monkey the way Hulk jumped from bin to crashed car and falling to their enemies like a tornado.

Loki had his arms crossed watching the battle field feeling that the tide was changed against his army but what made him frown was the sound of approaching running feet.

Suddenly, it dawned to him what in the heat of the battle had evaded his attention: his spells were weakened...no, broken. That was impossible; nobody could break his spells. He gritted his teeth and tried to get inside to the one that had done that; in vain, a very dark cloud was hiding him.

The door to Stark’s apartment that till now was blocked opened to reveal Fury leading a group of agents surging inside.

Loki pursed his lips: time to fight!

Suddenly, Ironman saw Loki landing in the middle of the field carrying a golden spear and sending beams against Thor who dodged them and turned to confront him waving his spiting fires hammer.

Ironman saw the sneaky god and forgot anything else. He surged against him unaware that one of the crafts had opened its canons ready to shoot him.

“Sir, watch out!” Jarvis shouted.

Tony turned around seeing the fire ready to leave the canon but suddenly the craft changed course and along its firepower. He frowned trying to make out his savior: Hulk had jumped and hugged the craft’s tail turning it around causing the fire to hit the other crafts.

Thor and Loki were dueling with sparkles and thunders diffused around; Tony launched one of his missiles to hit Loki but the god dodged it cackling. A pile of cars was blasted and Tony was relieved to find that no people had taken cover there.

Loki’s smirk froze on his face as a beam swept Loki’s army neutralizing them; the Avengers and Flash looked at the Tower from where the beam had come. Tony’s lips formed a faint smile: Fury had managed to gain full control now that Loki left the building; the ingenious inventor recognized his weapon in action. Now he could deal with the devious god.

However the god looked his knocked out army and smirked.

“Time to say goodbye, guys! See ya!”

Ironman was already on him but once again Loki vanished and Ironman left with empty hands cursing aloud.

The Avengers gathered with their faces smoked and scratched; tired and thoughtful. Natasha and Steve looked at the meshed up Downtown as Hulk approached with heavy strides and Flash in a quarter of the second.

People came out of their corners fearful but upon realizing that the danger was over cheered. Thor moved to Ironman with his eyes filled with sadness. Only the two of them knew what had happened in Gotham.

“It seems that we’ve made it” Natasha said.

Steve shook Flash’s hand.

“Thank you; we wouldn’t have made it without your help.”

“Don’t mention it, dude: you’d have done the same for me...” yet Flash’s wide smile was somewhat restrained as his eyes looked around perplexed about Superman’s absence.
“Tony…” Thor said to Ironman.

Ironman didn’t answer and Thor shook his head.

“I promise you that I’ll find Loki – I won’t fail you this time.”

Ironman remained silent, the cold face plate in place: the only thing that haunted his mind was that Bruce would wake up with the realization that his best friend betrayed him and even worse he’d have to face Joker. Thor’s reassurance didn’t say anything to him; there was no solace for him. He took off away from them.

“What? No drinks this time?” Natasha asked slyly cocking an eyebrow but seeing Thor’s grim face walked to him with Steve and Flash. “What’s wrong with Stark?”

“With Loki’s help Joker got Bruce” Thor answered and Steve huffed.

Thor took in the gazes of his comrades and Flash’s but he was deep in thought: he had promised Bruce that he would watch Loki’s movements but he lost his sneaky brother. Loki wasn’t only a god but he knew much about magic and all this time that he and his palace was nowhere to be found obviously he strengthened his magical power and gathered his army: Bruce kept in his bedroom his cape and Eir’s elixir – they should have blocked Loki’s attack; not to mention that Thor suspected that Bruce had in his possession some powerful charm as well.

So it was clear that if he wanted to find Loki and therefore Joker and Bruce he would need help.

He tried to control his uneasiness, his terror but still his skinny body shivered in the thick darkness; the blindfold felt too heavy on his face and he struggled to not run away. The fact that he couldn’t see panicked him though this time knew that he was safe.

Two hands cupped his face gently but his instinctive reaction was to jerk to escape; however the hands were stubborn in their gentleness until his resistance was quenched.

“Falcone used blindfold while using you?” the suave voice of the lion like man caressed his ears.

Bruce gulped an embarrassing knot and nodded.

“Sometimes…”

Two hot demanding lips touched his cold cheek sucking needy.

“You know that you have nothing to fear when I’m here…I don’t want to upset you but you must learn to rely on your other senses: eliminating the sight strengthens the rest…Sight shouldn’t shackle you, child…”

Fingers were touching curiously his abdominals and then played with his nipples…Clark as usually took advantage of his independence of sleep to watch him sleeping and touching him…

His torso felt the cold of the room so his lover must have took off his pajama shirt at some point – well, for his pants couldn’t say because below waist he couldn’t feel anything…Anyway, what was more important than his paraplegia was that Clark was there, beside him. He smiled: Clark loved him so much…

But then realization dawned to him colder than the room: Clark was away…He didn’t love him anymore; he didn’t want to touch him…Hence, someone else undressed him – he wasn’t on a mattress; he was positioned vertically – his senses were on fire – his surroundings were unfamiliar – someone was there – a flash crossed his mind: Tony had hit him with his stunning beam! Someone was there, close to him, touching him…A rough touch: leather in his abdominals, cold metal in his nipple…He jerked trying to escape.

“Gooooood mooorning, sunshiiiiine! Your Prince Charming has broken the speeeeeeeel!”

Thor walked decisively inside the old temple that seemed devoid of human presence: he would have stared at the strange place intrigued if he wasn’t totally engrossed in his musing…if his agony wasn’t so demanding…if he could think anything else.

He walked to the interior till he met a round shaped area. Thor looked around indecisive of the direction he should follow.

Suddenly, in the places half darkness he heard light footsteps approaching and the Asgardian turned to see a man dressed in dark blue attire with a burgundy cape falling from his shoulders; a golden round pendant fell on his chest. He had dark brown hair grayed in the temples and sported a well trimmed goatee. His sharp blue eyes stabbed the blond god with intense curiosity that seemed natural to him.

“Thor…in our humble residence…” he said in a deep baritone voice.

The god inhaled deeply and looked at him determined.

“I need your help” he said sharply.
“Surreal scenes took place – just a few minutes ago – at New York’s hot Downtown...” Mary Thorn, Daily Planet’s reporter was saying in a still shaken voice in front of the aftermath’s scenery.

The camera stopped showing her to zoom at the nightmarish situation behind her. The darkness was thick but the abundance of New York’s lights made everything visible: the picture of a disaster.

Crashed cars piled in every corner of the road; rescuers were now searching among the crumpled metal for any trapped citizen; shattered store windows the shreds sparkling under the lights of the bent traffic signals; billboards smashed on the cement marked from the battle; buildings carrying thousands of bullet holes and burnings; strange rhino-like beasts sprawled in the cement sedated or dead; police and authorities were wondering what to do with them because unlike with his army Loki didn’t take care to take the animals with him.

Ambulances formed a perimeter around the place and their sirens along with those of police cars gave the sad soundtrack for the scene; their multicolored lights dazzled the eyes. Police officers, National Guard members and paramedics gathered the injured or the dead which were both taken to the ambulances on stretchers.

“Till now the toll is 4 dead and 30 injured, ten of them in serious condition” the blond reporter said as images from the battle were shown. “The footage you’re watching right now is from video taken by witnesses... Police estimates that the number of injured will increase yet without the intervention of both the Avengers and Flash the toll would have been devastating given the busy hour that the attack took place. At the moment there’s no official announcement about the culprit of the attack neither of his demands but eye witnesses speak about a man with strange attire that wore a golden helmet with horns; at some point he engaged in battle with Thor. However what makes the greatest impression and monopolizes the discussion everywhere is why Superman didn’t rush to help: it is definitely something that doesn’t fit him and we know that he wasn’t busy in another corner of the planet. So the main question is: has the Man of Steel any misunderstanding with Avengers and if that so, is it so important to ignore the dire need of innocents?”

Superman watched with gloomy expression seated in front of the TV set in Diana’s living room. That last phrase made his insides clench: Superman wasn’t that selfish to ignore people in danger for the sake of any grudge – especially when there was no grudge...

Diana clapped her hands and the TV closed. She was watching too standing behind the sofa over Superman. She had a smirk curving her beautiful face.

“I told you before that humans are selfish and ungrateful” she said indifferent cocking an eyebrow. “I sense that you are sad about what they are saying...” she walked proudly, stood in front of him and cupped his face with one hand, locking their eyes. “But you shouldn’t: you did nothing wrong.”

Superman crooked his mouth.

“Yeah... As a matter of fact, I didn’t do anything at all...” he pressed his lips. “People died, got injured and I didn’t do anything to help.”

Diana’s gaze was strong and adamant.

“It wasn’t your fault, Kal El: Avengers could have asked your help but they didn’t do it – so it’s their fault that people died. Their arrogance made them believe that they could handle this without your help and look what happened. All these people talking about your absence don’t know that it was the Avengers’ fault; that they blocked your coming.”

Superman shook his head.

“I should have gone there without their invitation as Flash did…”

Diana cocked her eyebrows.

“Flash acted foolishly – he is too young to understand.”

“Understand what?”

Diana shook her head and smiled.

“Kal El, you are so generous and kind; your greatness can’t even suspect their devious intentions.”

Superman lowered his head, Diana’s words not having the appeasing effect she intended to.

“What matters, Diana, is that people died and they might have not if I had come to their aid” he fixed his eyes on hers. “To people’s aid not Avengers’!” he ran his fingers through his messy hair.

She shook her head exasperated.

“You are an honorable warrior and that makes you ignore what is at stake” Superman looked her frowned and Diana’s eyes became soft but determined. “If you had gone there and helped them won that battle then the Avengers would have established their world rule…” she smirked “as world’s saviors of course…But we both know that they couldn’t be trusted with that role: we both know that they very easily could use that respect and position to something more totalitarian. Do not forget that their director and unofficial leader is Stark, that arrogant, thirsty for power dork: he is easily the smartest of them all and he can guide them into dominating the world for his account. And what about Black Widow? A former cold blooded assassin all of a sudden becoming protector of innocents?” she sniggered. “Consider that green powerful thing…mindless, prone to his teammates’ manipulation.”

Diana smiled seeing Superman’s eyes narrowed, deep in thought. Clark remembered how the League of Shadows had spread its web around the world using the S.H.I.E.L.D. Superman had no more trust to Stark. He raised his eyes to Diana’s face and she caressed his forehead.

“If you have helped them to triumph then you’d have contributed to their rapid increase of power; however, now that the battle ended with heavy toll, the world would never trust their fates to that team of losers” her smile was wide. “And people will continue to accept Superman as their true protector: a king with morals of granite who’d never seek dominance for his egoistic reasons.”

Clark felt charmed as if a powerful, wonderful spell had fell on him making him a better being. Diana was right as always. She made him understand that his absence from New York wasn’t a mistake; was in fact the right thing to do because he pointed to people how wrong it was to trust the Avengers.

He stood and cupped the back of her head, losing himself in the softness of her silken her and her perfume of every flower in the world. He stormed at her lips but she did the same meeting him half way: their collision was mighty and arousing as their hot lips battled violently for sucking each other’s taste.

A ring tone cracked the hot air and Superman closed his eyes realizing that he had forgotten his smart phone open. Definitely Lois wanting to tell him off...Ugh! That Lois! Always believing that she knows everything!

Diana raised her eyebrows.

“You won’t answer that?” she asked determined. “Maybe it is something important” she smiled. “Go! I won’t go anywhere…”

Superman nodded disgruntled: it was certain that Lois would make him feel worse. However he walked to the bedroom and inhaled deeply.

“Yes, Lois…” he rolled his eyes before she even started.

“Are you crazy? Why you didn’t go to New York? People died, farm boy! People who if you had helped would have been with their families now!”

Clark crooked his mouth and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“You don’t understand, Lois; after all, you always respect only your own view of things.”

“What?” the woman was enraged. “MY VIEW OF THINGS?! And what should I have understood other than you turning your fuckin’ ass to innocents screaming for help?!”

“Avengers didn’t ask for my help, Lois! If they wanted me there; if they did care about people they would have called me; but they believed arrogantly that they could make it by themselves – so I’m alright with my decision: that will teach them some humility. You really can see the devious politics of them?”

Lois huffed and rattled her teeth.

“Are you nuts?! Or are you high? You really expected an official invitation?” she laughed but her wrath was such that the laughter was cut sharply. “I bet Flash didn’t wait to be invited...This wasn’t a reception, farm boy: this was an emergency!” she fumed. “Remember when Stark, the arrogant, air head tycoon came to your aid at Metropolis’ attack? You had invited him?”

“That was something else, Lois...Stark did it just to boost himself and his team and only because Bruce would have scolded him.”

“You know, Clark...I think that all these are petty, ridiculous excuses and probably they aren’t even your own words. You’re not yourself, Clark: the man I knew would never have ignored calls for help even to his own death...You’re ruining yourself, farm boy…”

Superman licked his lips and inhaled erasing Lois’ burning words immediately. She was saying all these just to make him feel bad – she never had forgiven him for choosing Diana over Bruce...He frowned remembering suddenly what his colleague had said to him during their last call.

“Did you find out if really something happened in Gotham?”

“Do you care?” she sneered and after a small pause. “Never mind...There’s nothing official but it seems that there was another attack simultaneously with Arkham – Now, fuck off!”

Superman pressed his lips shaking his head: typical Lois! Whenever she doesn’t get what she wants relies on calling names. He shrugged: she’d have to accept him if she wanted to remain Superman’s friend.
He was eager to return to Diana’s waiting body but his damn phone rang again and this time he didn’t think even for a second to ignore it.

“Ma? Is everything alright?” with his stupid remorse about New York’s incident he forgot to monitor his mother’s vitals.

“I think it’s not, Clark” her voice was calm but deeply sad though Superman was hearing that everything was fine with her vitals. “What happened to you, son? It is the second time you didn’t run to someone’s help while you knew the danger…Clark…”

His eyes became blank; hearing his Ma saying that had a greater impact.

“Ma, it would be a mistake if I had gone there; they would have used that to achieve their devious plans.”

“Bollocks!” the old lady shouted and Clark was stunned because he had never heard her like this before. “Your father’s and my greatest fear was that your unique powers would eventually ruin our sweet, good-hearted boy: during his last moments, Jonathan asked me to always protect you from the wrong choices; from being corrupted. And I failed!”

Clark’s heart broke hearing his mother’s trembling, angry voice telling that; her sorrow deep inside, her tears stubbornly kept locked.

“No, Ma, you didn’t fail; your son did the right thing: it might not be clear now but in the long run…”

“Stop the excuses, Clark! You never relied on excuses before…There is only one truth: you first ignored Bruce being in danger and now hundreds of people. People died there, Clark, waiting till their last breath for Superman to save them…” her loud voice broke reaching the end of that phrase.

Clark felt his eyes getting wet: it wasn’t only the gist of that phrase but also the hue of his Ma’s voice. He had promised that he would always make his parents proud of him; he had promised that he’d never let anyone make them cry…and now he…the baby they took in and raised as their own did the very thing he sworn to prevent.

“Ma, please…”

“While you were with Bruce you were helping everyone; you shone like a true sun…now…now you hide the light in you: the light that you permit being little by little put out…I wish I was stronger and better to have managed to protect you…to not lose my only son.”

“Ma, you’re the best in this world. You haven’t lost me; you’d never ever lose me, I’ll be always your son…”

“Then prove it, Clark.”

“How?”

“By stopping using her words as guidance…It is easy for your Ma to distinguish her poison in your words. My Clark would have never stayed away. She poisoned you against helping – she is ruining you, Clark.”

“Ma, no…You’re wrong. Diana wants the best for me…”

He heard a sigh and the dial was cut leaving him empty; cold: he remembered that dream. The dark void he was hovering in; the despair he was feeling and then the bright star, the only light in the darkness that surrounded him…He pressed stubbornly his lips to stop that image of the star being Bruce…

Joker was there. His mind went immediately in frantic function: obviously, Joker and his ally, Loki, set the trap; suspected that Tony wouldn’t let him go to Arkham and when he left Joker attacked the Manor. Loki’s power defeated their defenses exactly like during the Avengers’ Tower attack.

He knew he had to act the scared, the panicked but he was angry. Sick of the times he found himself prisoner of someone and had to pretend the weak; the damsel in distress… but he knew he had to…

He was aware that he was naked above the waist and who knows about the bottom part of his body.
His arms were in pain and discomfort, stretched above his head and tied, one wrist on the other; yet there was no rope or chain; Bruce frowned. He knew that behind his back was stone: all these years in Falcone’s cage Bruce had been tied so many times to that stalactite that could easily figure. But there was no metal or fabric restraining his hands…a realization made him shiver: his wrists were covered with heavy stone – he wasn’t tied, his wrists were buried in the stone! He had to exert his self control to not panic from that notion.

And he was blindfolded; the fabric covering his nose.

Leather fingers were touching his abs and Bruce wanted to huff in exasperation yet he just trembled from fear. Shaking that became greater when he realized that the cold thing in his nipple was sharp metal which suddenly stabbed gently the flesh drawing some blood. He inhaled scared.

“Uuuuuuu! I could doooo this forever! Cooooounting an’ cooounting those abs” the jester giggled thrilled. “Greeeeat abs! And thooooose cute, pink nipples….Mmmm!”

Bruce felt a wet, warm mouth gulping his erect from the cold nipple, licking the hot drops of blood;
he jerked backwards resulting in pain that would have been much worse if he didn’t know the way to protect his body.

“What is it, hoooooney? Didn’t Super-Goofy lick the lollipops?”

Bruce shook a bit his head.

“Wwhat? Where am I? Who are you?”

“Heheheheheheee!” his giggles stopped abruptly and Bruce heard Joker’s head lolling on the side.
“Youuuuu don’t recognize my vooooice? Ooooooh, babe” a leather palm was heard slapping Joker’s heart in a dramatic gesture “you’re shhhhhhredding my pooor heart in pieces!” the jester lamented but then a shoulder shrugged “it must be the shock or the sedation aftermath” he commented calm.
“Oooooh! Sorry, I forgot…”

Bruce felt Joker’s fingers approaching his face and then the fabric that covered exactly his eyes was removed, leaving the rest of the blindfold. Being aware of Joker’s suspicions about Batman it wasn’t difficult for Bruce to figure out the jester was trying to do.

However, he played the innocent and just looked around scared and curious: he was on his knees, judging from the way everything around him looked. It was a dudgeon from shining, dark green stone no bigger than his cage in Dolcetto; it was cast in darkness that was cracked by torches in two niches at the corners of the walls. There wasn’t any kind of door just stone and Bruce though not claustrophobic felt a bit distressed.
He could feel Joker’s staring eyes on his face.

“That’s muuuuch better!” the jester exclaimed. “You shouldn’t use those lenses: these eyes must be visible – aaaand I bet your intimidating glare is mooooore effective than the lenses.”

“Joker?” he turned his eyes to jester’s exhilarated face.

“How niiiiice you finally noticed me!” he stood and bowed, only to fell again on his knees.

“Why are you doing this?” he asked passing the lenses mention pretending that he took it for Joker’s usual nonsense. “What do you want?”

Joker lolled his head on the side pouting thoughtful.

“Let’s see…What I want?! Soooooome quality tiime with my beautiful wife?”

The man with the burgundy cape that at times gave Thor the impression that had its own life showed him to a chair before a small round table made from glistening light brown wood.

Thor sat and the man did the same.

“Dr. Strange, I need your help…immediately.”

The man’s features took the hue of amusement and an eyebrow arched.

“It’s very flattering when an Asgardian knows the name of a mere mortal” he said in his deep, bass voice.

Thor’s eyes fell on the man’s hand over the table and Strange smiled.

“Yeah…it’s still a bit shaky at times” he focused his eyes on the hand that went immediately completely still.

Thor felt the urge of the situation pressing him.

“My father Odin knew the Ancient One and through their mutual respect he maintained some knowledge about your…”

Strange smiled, focusing his eyes on the god.

“Cult? This is how one of my former colleagues had called it.”

The blond shook his head.

“I know it’s not a cult but an Order protecting the world.”

“Then we are colleagues” Strange commented looking at him a bit ironically.

Thor felt Strange’s stance like a cold shower: if this was for himself he would have left yet it was for Bruce and it was urgent, every moment passing could be detrimental to him.

“Look, I don’t know your impression of the Avengers and me personally but I do need your help.”

Strange pressed his lips and looked him serious.
“Don’t misjudge my attitude for dislike: is a leftover of my past” he stretched slightly his arms horizontally. “I’m a new person now” he raised his eyebrows “thankfully…I’ll gladly help you if is in my powers.”

Thor nodded.

“I’m sure it is. Have you heard of Loki?”

Strange grinned.

“Some things have reached my ears…He made quite the show in New York, huh?”

Thor fumed.

“I want your help to stop him” Dr. Strange cocked an eyebrow puzzled. “Loki is not a real Asgardian: he might be a god but he also has magical powers” Thor answered the question in Strange’s eyes: the man certainly was wondering why he had come to him. “I was always able to face and defeat him…till now. For months I was trying to locate him in vain…He and his palace are beyond my reach. I’m certain that all these months he increased his powers; and with his new powers assembled the army you saw and I’m afraid more than that…Loki is a threat as all of us just realized.”

Strange nodded.

“You know what Loki wants?”

“Nobody knows” Thor leaned closer “and I don’t really care right now. What burns me is to find him ASAP!”

The man’s gray eyes shone.

“After his defeat he will stay low for some time.”

“We can’t be sure with him and…” he gulped “there is something really urgent.”

Strange frowned.

“Which is?”

Thor pressed his lips and inhaled.

“He holds someone.”

Stephen Strange knitted his fingers.

“A hostage…Whom?”

“Tony Stark’s best friend.”

“Bruce Wayne” he said. “He intends to blackmail Stark, huh?”

“I don’t know his intentions but he works with a human criminal; it was actually this criminal who took Bruce with Loki’s help.”

Dr. Strange lolled slightly his head.
“Who is that criminal?”

“Joker. He has a sick fascination for Bruce and I don’t even want to think what he might be doing to him as we speak. I know that Joker holds Bruce where Loki is located – out of our sight. Probably somewhere between different dimensions” he clenched his fist “and that’s where your assistance is crucial. His palace can’t be found neither by a mere a god nor by a mere mortal: and you are a man with special powers and abilities.”

Strange’s expression was thoughtful and Thor narrowed his eyes.

“Loki’s powers are great. Bruce was in his Manor when Joker attacked: the Manor has the tightest security there is but that doesn’t say anything for Loki’s powers; but what makes me sure about his enhanced powers is that there were other things protecting Bruce.”

Strange raised an eyebrow interested and Thor lowered a bit his eyes.

“I gave him one of my capes and Bruce was keeping it in his room; my garments could protect from Loki’s attacks – till now at least” the man’s clever eyes shone interested. “And Bruce had also Eir’s elixir which is a powerful protecting charm.”

The wizard nodded and waved his hand.

“Which obviously you gave to him…”

Thor closed his eyes for a second.

“Yes, because Bruce is constantly in danger; it’s like all the evil in the world has him in target.”

Strange leaned closer.

“I see that Bruce Wayne is really important to you. What is he to you?” he asked in an almost demanding, playful manner.

Thor locked eyes with him and Strange coughed.

“Sorry…I know I have no right to ask that.”

“He is a great, brave man and I’m honored with his friendship.”

Strange smiled.

“I have heard the man’s story.”

“Then you do understand that we must find him as soon as possible. He is still recovering from multiple injuries” Strange’s eyes became blank for a moment. “He is a paraplegic and he is on complex medication; necessary for sustaining his organism” he sighed “I don’t know how long he can last without proper treatment and under Joker’s madness…”

Strange drummed his fingers on the table and lowered his gaze. Thor eyed him eager, his gaze intense and impatient; he felt that he was losing precious time. He stood.

“You’ll help?”

Dr. Strange raised his eyes and met the god’s determined gaze.

“We will find him.”
Bruce closed his eyes in hopelessness.

“How?” he asked making it clear that he was trying too hard to keep his composure; Joker was looking at him smiling amused. “How you managed…”

Joker cocked his eyebrows mockingly.

“What? Getting you?” he laughed and yanked his head backwards. “Oh! I could have demolisssssshed castles to get to you!” he shook his head. “And actually that I did” he snapped.

Of course…Bruce thought but Joker shouldn’t see that; Bruce should be surprised that Joker managed to overcome Tony’s security measures. It was supposed that he didn’t know about Joker’s partnership with Loki; Joker had to admit that.

“But…there was security all over the place…nobody gets inside…”

Joker lolled his head on the side and watched him with the same amusement.

“Oh…” he dusted his jacket cocking an eyebrow “I don’t want to brag but I have over--come ol’ Tony’s booby traps again in the past so it wasn’t really a problem…”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“You’re a tech expert then?”

Joker began hopping in the dudgeon giggling. In the end squatted again in front of Bruce and grabbed his chin between his fingers.

“No, daaar-ling…I could be a tech freak buuuuuut I’m just a freak; as for expert…mmmmm…I’d say that I’m an aaaally expert…By the way, I love your kitten and he loves me too…” he gestured to the scratches all over his face. “And the fur ball immediately understood that I love scars.”

Now Bruce was really scared; he tried to move but his torso was stretched to its limits and his wrists deep in stone.

“You didn’t…You didn’t kill him?!”

Joker tapped Bruce’s lips with the fingers that were holding his chin.

“Oh, hon--ey! You’re pale…HEHEHEHEEEE…You loooooove that littl’ fur ball, huh?”

“Did you?” he insisted with trembling voice: Bruce wouldn’t stand losing Hero again.

Joker rolled his eyes and left Bruce’s chin to jerk his arms upwards.

“For what kind of monster you have me?”

“The one you are…” Bruce mumbled giving much tremor to his voice but Joker burst out in laughter so much so that he lost his balance and fell on the stony floor.

He rolled in the floor for a bit under Bruce’s exasperated gaze and then stood up taking a serious expression.

“Diiiiignity, Joker!” he said in a gruff voice to himself and shook his index finger to Bruce. “You’ve gooooooot soooooo much spirit in you…and humor…aaaand cinnamon…uuuuuuuh! I’m a lucky man I married you.”

“You didn’t kill the kitten then?” he asked with hope.

“Noooooope! I looooove animals after all…Bats for instance…”

Bruce let his head loll on the shoulder tired but relieved that Hero was alive.

“You sent me a tree full with killed bats for Christmas.”

Joker pouted.

“I sent a card” he said dignified “they were mmm…impostors -defilers…I want only one bat in my sky” he twitched his eyebrows indicatively.

Bruce inhaled deeply.

“And why you sent that to me?”

Joker giggled and tapped his finger on Bruce’s chest.

“You don’t know, huh?” he dragged more his nasal voice.

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Am I supposed to know?”

Joker lollled his head on the side and looked at him curious.

“Batsy, let’s talk with open cards” he conjured a joker card from his sleeve; he had sketched a heart with red paint; inside it read ‘J loves B’…

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“What?”

Joker yanked his head backwards exasperated and leaned to Bruce’s ear.

“I know who you are…an’ I ap---prove. Actually, I’m thrilled I’m married with nooooone other thaaaaaan…” he put his palm as if he was going to share a secret “Baaaaatman!”

Bruce yanked his head and Joker managed at the last moment to hold it before hitting the stone.

“I’m not!” Bruce said with widened eyes. “How is it possible?” he writhed on the cold stone. “I’m not!”

Joker held him firmer to quench his resistance and licked his lips.

“Eaaaaasy, babe…” he caressed the fabric that covered Bruce’s half face. “I had much time to observe you with half your face covered and noooooow with your eyes uncovered: it matches.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No…faces can resemble each other.”

Joker smiled stretching his scars to a full Cheshire smile.
“Aaaaand then I stripped you…” Bruce panicked tried to look at his body’s lower half since he couldn’t feel its state; Joker giggled. “I admit that it was a greeeeeat temptation to unwrap my presents yet I wanted you to be fully conscious foooor that. Anyway, I took off your beautiful shirt and I had the pleasure to goggle and droooool at your goooodgeous torso…Ooooh, boy!
That Falcone was a very lucky bastard! Soooooo taut and sooooooft…Sooooo perfectly toooooned, exactly as my Batsy should be.”

“No, you’re wrong…”

Joker stabbed his finger to the big scar that crossed Bruce’s stomach and looked pointedly at his prisoner.

“I remember this veeeery well – I did that to you.”

Bruce breathed heavily and closed his eyes.

“Falcone did that…”

“No!” Joker roared angry. “The first time I saw your naked torso when I was still Napier you didn’t have that scar; then I stabbed Batman and the next time I had you half naked…voila! The scar!”

“You must remember wrong…I have this scar years…”

Joker was enraged; raised his hand and slapped violently Bruce whose head ended up on his shoulder. Bruce began breathing fast and heavily, panicked; his body shook.

“Myyyyy memory is notorious as another member of my deielicious body…lower.”

“Please…” he whispered and Joker cupped violently his face with both hands and made him look him in the eyes.

“Stop pretending that you’re scared of me! I know you’re not! You’re boiling with anger Grrrrrr! C’m’mon! Cut the act! Giive a bit of grrrrrr to me…”

Bruce was trying to shake his head in the negative.

“Stop, please…”

But Joker tightened his grip and kissed crudely Bruce’s lips licking the blood his slap had left on the corner.

“Beeeeeee yourself with me, Batsy…I won’t kiss and tell…” he said completely serious keeping his eyes fixed on Bruce’s. “I’m craaazaazy for the beaten kitten that hides a tiger!”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Please, let me go…I’ll give you whatever you want…just…” he stopped talking as if his courage had run out.

Joker released his face and stood staring at Bruce who let his head fall to his chest breathing fast.

“I’ve got one uni--que bat in the cage: I’d be an idiot if I let the bat go…”

“How could I be Batman?” Bruce mumbled without raising his head. “I can’t even walk…”

Joker smiled.
“Exactly, babe…” he said exerting his nasal voice. “That night at the factory…”

Bruce lifted his head and narrowed his eyes.

“What factory?”

Joker lolled his head on the side.

“I should believe that you don’t remember or that you weren’t there?” Bruce closed his eyes.

“I don’t know what you are talking about…”

“I had asked for you and Batsy to come meet me there oooor I’d kill those brats…Hehehehe” he chuckled amused on the memory. “Of course, oooooone of you would have been enough, right? And Batsy did come.”

“I was in the clinic, injured.”

Joker giggled.

“You found a way to overcome that and cooooome” Bruce sighed exasperated. “Heheheeeee! The puuuuuurfect cover – you play these things in your long, lean fingers – but you can’t fooooooool Joker: your husband. You came an’ saved the brats but you didn’t estimate that I’d have a secret ace: that brat Grayson. You fought me to save him and that doooooork Lou shot starting a fire: you took me out of danger – oh! Daaaaaarling, you do love me, huh?” he blinked cutely. “Theeeeeeen you saved that brat but you didn’t manage to leave the building on time; the roof collapsed on you” Bruce’s eyes were widened and Joker’s voice became serious. “You’d have died there but Super-Goofty saved you – huh? I’m saying it right? But your spine was shattered rendering you paraplegic” his voice was strangely serious.

Bruce shook his head.

“I?” he asked puzzled.

Joker surged on him and grabbed his face.

“You!”

“But…”

Joker nodded nervously.

“I knooooow… I knooooow…Batsy is active even after that night…Buuuuut” his Cheshire smile cracked his face “your friend is Tony-fucking-Stark: he definitely found a way for you to be able to appeaaaar so that nobody puts one and one together, huh?”

“You are crazy…” Bruce mumbled.

Joker shook his head and casually bit the tip of his glove and removed it, repeating the same with his other hand.

“Nooooooo, I’m not” he lolled his head “Well, I am; but you can’t fool me, babe…By the way, that Lou…I should have killed him loooooong ago” he scratched his head “I must keep some sticky notes… youuuuu know all over the fridge – I must find little magnets with Batsy on them…”

All of a sudden, he took his blade that had remained on the floor and touched it to Bruce’s cheek;
Bruce took a sharp inhale and his eyes widened.

“Please…”

Joker touched the blade on Bruce’s lips.

“Shssssss…” he licked his lips and took the black fabric off of Bruce’s face. “Who would think that that cowl hides such a pretty, cute face…Hehe! Definitely, not Falc--one, huh?” he bit his lips. “Mmm…time for soooooome fuuuuuun at laaaaaast!”

Black smoke swirled under Darkseid’s unimpressed eyes and Bagdana emerged in front of his ally’s enormous granite throne; the tornadoes engraved in the stone began twisting.

“You called me” the demon said indifferent eyeing the new god.

“You saw what happened at New York?” Darkseid asked slyly.

“I saw.”

“The Avengers stopped that army.”

“I'm aware of that.”

Darkseid smirked.

“But they had very difficult time stopping that clown-god. Their Tower was breached and controlled by their enemy’s power…and they couldn’t break his spells.”

It wasn’t difficult for Bagdana to discern the irony in his ally voice neither the hints. And he really didn’t have the patience for the arrogant god’s bullshit.

“What do you want, Darkseid?”

Darkseid’s eyes became angry.

“Someone broke the spells and gave them the chance to regain their Tower’s control.”

“So?”

“I know you did it.”

Bagdana knew that there was no use to deny it and he had no reason to do so.

“So?” he repeated cocking an eyebrow; his naked torso shone with heat through the voids his black leather vest; the ancient demon was enraged.

Darkseid clenched the armrests.

“How do you expect me to trust someone who helps my enemies?” he ground his teeth.

Bagdana laughed.

“Helped?” he shook his head. “I thought you smarter than that” actually, Bagdana thought the new god no smart at all.
Darkseid smirked.

“So you want to tell me that there is a deeper reason you did that than helping the humans who were in danger?”

Bagdana rolled his eyes disgusted.

“Only hearing that disgusts me…”

Darkseid raised his eyebrows and pursed his plump lips.

“It seems that loving that mortal pest made you more sensitive to humans.”

Bagdana knitted his eyebrows and fume was emitted from his nostrils; his silver spikes radiating sparks all over his head.

“I only care for Bruce: I don’t give a damn about humans! They have given me only…” pain? A demon couldn’t feel pain, could he?

Darkseid snorted and stood.

“Then explain to me this treachery!”

“What treachery! Can’t you see what happened? A petty god was ready to squash the Avengers and dominate the world: if nobody had stopped him your glory would have been dimmed. A petty god taking what is rightfully yours? He ought to be defeated just for his arrogance to claim what is yours. Besides his deeds might have ruined the effectiveness of your machine’s operation. I didn’t betray you: on the contrary, I protected your best interest.”

Darkseid smirked; his sneaky eyes shouting his doubt.

“You’re a cunning demon, Bagdana; after all, this was the reason I saved you from your prison…I’m not sure you’re saying the truth – your mind is well shut as your human’s” his expression became grimmer when he remembered Bruce. “Do not think that you can fool me…” his eyes turned to the fire inside the vessel in front of his throne.

Scenes from New York’s battle revived between the flames.

“Thanks to that foolish Asgardian I got the chance to watch my enemies…Superman was absent: that says a lot for his power and will: his superiority is collapsing and I shall squash him between my fingers!” he clenched his square fingers under Bagdana’s I-don’t-give-a-shit gaze. “I just hope for your own good that when the time comes you will have proved yourself worthy and escape my judgement…otherwise the fate of yourself and your pet’s will be horrific!”

Bagdana stretched his body unfazed.

“If you finished I have some matters to attend.”

Darkseid cocked an eyebrow.

“Betraying me again?”

Bagdana looked at him dead serious and then grinned.

“I have always your best interest as my priority. My Lord…”
Darkseid snorted but Bagdana made a deep bow and vanished.

With one hand Joker pressed the blade to Bruce’s cheek and with the other fondled his prisoner’s naked chest; his painted lips captured violently Bruce’s sucking and licking, moaning as his hands appreciated Bruce’s taut flesh.

Bruce felt his breath being cut not only from the force of the motion but also from disgust; he tried weakly to take his face but the blade dinged his skin threateningly. Joker touched his cheek to Bruce’s and their eyes collided.

“You gaaaaave that abundantly to Supes but not to your husband?” he hissed in a low voice and licked Bruce’s cheek.

Some sweat drops spurt all over Bruce’s face.

“I didn’t have anything with Super…” his phrase was cut abruptly by a sharp, scared intake of air as Joker’s blade cut slightly his flesh.

Joker sucked the blood on Bruce’s skin.

“Maybe I should give you aaaaara permanent smiiiiile…then you’ll be forced to stop lying about who you are…” the blade left abruptly Bruce’s face but he couldn’t breathe easier having Joker’s face on his cheek and his leathered hand squeezing his nipple sadistically; his breath became faster as Joker’s blade caressed his torso going slowly, sensually lower.

He stopped feeling the metal when it reached his waist but he heard the sound of fabric being ripped; his trousers and his underwear. The blood drummed inside his head.

“Don’t…” he whispered meeting his captor’s eye.

Joker answered sucking his cheek and pinching viciously his nipple.

“I waited toooooooooo much for our first night, Brucie-Bats…Doooon’t be afraid, hon: I won’t do to you something you haven’t experienced yet…although…not that I want to brag…buuuuuut I’m a sex bomb…”

Bruce jerked backwards meeting the stone and Joker let his nipple to fist his hair; he mouthed Bruce’s lips pushing his wet tongue deep inside. Bruce could hear the sound of Joker’s other hand and he knew that the jester was fondling his paralyzed length; nausea boiled in his stomach and he had to recruit his training to calm himself into stop the room from spinning.

“I’m jeaaaaalously, Brucie-Batsy…” he mumbled keeping Bruce’s lips trapped. “You see my hair?” he lowered a bit his head for Bruce to see. “I don’t have to dye them anymore: they are green from jealousy…”

Bruce pretended that was unsuccessfully trying to control his quick breath.

“I told you…I don’t have anything with S…”

Joker took out of his pocket a black velvet pouch and Bruce’s eyes widened: it was the Black Butterfly! He looked down to his chest and was gone.

“It’s his present?” Joker demanded.
“No” Bruce answered “please, give it back…”

The jester opened the pouch and took out the sparkling dark gem under Bruce’s gaze that he managed to turn into scared hiding the anger.

“Uuuuuu! Seems tooooo priceyyyyy…”

“If it’s for money I’ll give you whatever you want but don’t get it from me…”

Joker lolled his head curious.

“Whyyyyyy? Why is it so preeeeeeecocious to you? A suvenir from another lover?”

Bruce inhaled deeply and looked him in the eyes though with a flickering of fear.

“It was my mother’s…” he mumbled. “Please…”

Joker scratched his head, crooked his mouth and in the end put the pendant around Bruce’s neck patting the pouch over his prisoner’s chest.

“It fits you puuuuuurfectly, Bbbbatsy…Black, hard, shining an’ prooooud…Heheheheeee…Mommy had a hunch about her baby, huh?”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I told you: you’re wrong…”

Joker’s mouth engulfed Bruce’s and the disgusting tongue invaded again furiously choking him, licking the warm cavities of his mouth while the wet sounds of Joker’s both hands now reached Bruce from his non-feeling pelvis.

Bruce saw Joker’s eyes closing in pleasure and the healthy part of his spine shivered feeling the man’s erection on his belly.

“Oooooh! It feels fan---tastic even with the fingers…sooooo warm and soft…like velvet ooooor chocolate…melt chocolate…inviting…I can’t wait shoving Jokey there” he cast a fleeting glance to his bulging groin “hehehehe…neither does he…” he pouted “c’mon, babe; don’t be soooooo shyyyyy! Ooooooh! You’re driving me crazy: brutal and shy on the same packet…UuuuuuH! Meeeeecery!”

“Please, don’t do that…”

Joker bit hard Bruce’s bottom lip and his prisoner sobbed because all of a sudden he felt pain in his anus as Joker shoved three fingers deep inside. The jester smiled satisfied.

“Soooooo it’s true what they say…Paraplegics do feel when are fucked…Now it’s more fan-----tastic! Uhuuuuuuu!” and then he became dead serious bringing the hand that was rubbing Bruce’s length to his prisoner’s face. “Do you like your own smell?”

Bruce tried to averse his face but Joker withdrew the hand from his prisoner’s inside and fist his hair forcing him to breathe his smell from Joker’s wet hand. The younger man closed his eyes defeated while Batman inside him growled.

Joker watched him curious and a bit sympathetic; in the end, he smelled his fingers and groaned with pleasure; he petted his prisoner’s sweaty cheek.
“I don’t want to torment you like the others did…” he whispered.

“But you do…” Bruce commented in a voice that was just heard between his ragged breaths.

“You’re a tremendous actor, you know…Buuuuuut I get the feeling that you doooooo suffer…Look at me!” he growled and Bruce’s wet eyes opened. “I’m very angry you took that brat in your house!” he shouted.

Bruce narrowed his eyes confused.

“Leave Richard out of this…He has nothing to do with this” he mumbled trembling.

“You almost died for him an’ now you have him live with you…I haaaaate it! Whyyyyyyy he an’ nooooot me?!! Huh?!!”

Bruce lifted his head and Joker caressed the sweat drenched locks that had fallen to his forehead.

“He has done nothing to you; he has suffered enough…” Bruce said.

Joker stood his erection bulging.

“I under--stand that at some point the need to have a child becomes pppppressing” he said in a mocking scientific attitude. “Yet if you wanted a child you should have come to me” he moved his eyebrows suggestively with his eyes showing his erection. “I’m fertility in flesh and blood!” he stretched his arms in the air.

Bruce rolled his eyes inside. Joker pouted and kneeled again before Bruce taking his blade from the floor.

“Of course, there’s a tiiiiiny problem: you lack sooooome…mmm…necessary equipment” he touched his blade to Bruce’s taut belly and giggled. “Otherwise by now this world would have been filled with beauuuuuuutiful babies – if they didn’t have Falcone’s ugly pan” his face distorted in aversion “Eeeeek!”

Bruce’s mind went to his dreams of the possible lost child but shook himself because Joker was already watching him curious behind his green curls.

“You’re a bit melan--cholic, huh? Time to lighten uuup your spirits!”

“No…” Bruce said realizing Joker’s intention.

But Joker grabbed both his thighs and spread them grinning broadly to Bruce’s blank gaze; he lowered his own pants and underwear ready to thrust in his prisoner.

“A smaaaaaaaall motion for Joooookey a laaaaarge screw for Joker…”

But all of a sudden a voice called his name and Joker yanked his head backwards, rolling his eyes and huffed.

“You’re…joooooking nooow!”

Loki’s voice echoed again like in the long tunnel calling him and stood up looking amused at his hungry erection.

“Down, boy, dooooomown…You’ll eat later” he brushed his erection on Bruce’s chest and soon his fluids splashed the wall making Bruce’s nausea torturing as he recalled the times Falcone had used his body to jerk off. “Ooooops! Pre----mature ejaculaaation?” he frowned. “Don’t get disappointed, babe: it’s just performance anxiety.”

Bruce would have said some nice things to him that had learnt hearing Falcone’s thugs but stayed silent shaming from fear and cold.

Joker zipped his pants and moved to the wall opposite Bruce and a part of the stone shaped like a door vanished waiting Joker to walk out. The jester lolled his head backwards.

“Stayyyyy liiiike this, babe: with open legs, mmm…” he licked his lips like a cow. “Doooooon’t try to untie yourself…I bet the big baaaaaad bat knows many tricks to escape. Buuuuuut these shackles are magic: the more you try to mooove your hands the stone will preeeeess them moooore” he winked and walked out the door that just appeared giving its place to concrete stone.

Pepper walked slowly in the dark vastness of Tony’s penthouse in Gotham. Everyone was looking for her boss: Nick Fury, Steven, Alfred and Leslie who despite their worry for Bruce were equally scared for Tony. Jarvis was unavailable even for her.

She was fuming: not only because of Tony’s hide and seek game at this crucial point but also because he shut her off. At the same time she was worried for that stupid air head: she didn’t know what had happened but she was certain that it had to do with Bruce’s kidnap.

She had a hunch that he would be there but the penthouse was creepily silent and dark as if haunted.

“Jarvis!” she called but as she expected no answer. “Tony!”

Nothing…She huffed exasperated. If Tony was here there was only one room where he would be at his difficult hour. She took the lift and felt relief that at least the descent wasn’t blocked too.

When the doors opened she was greeted by the bluish hue of Tony’s several working holograms; some of them was flooded with constantly renewed data and others giving different points of view of what Pepper recognized as Bruce’s damaged spine; the bionic parts hovering around the spine constantly taking their places as if in a puzzle and then getting removed to be adjusted in perfect detail.

At the far end stood gloomy the three different Ironman armors that Tony had in Gotham. She walked there bypassing the holograms that covered the whole view; but Pepper already knew what else was there.

Tony stood before the classic version of the armor, at the far right staring at the empty sell with eyes bloodshot and emptier than the alloy. A bottle of whiskey almost empty was clenched in his hand and Pepper took in more empty bottles around his feet.

“They weren’t full…” Tony said gruff reading her mind. “Can you leave now?”

Pepper walked closer and crossed her arms.

“No!” she retorted determined her eyes fixed on Tony’s; the billionaire chuckled, lifted the bottle and drunk a large quantity at once under his assistant’s pissed gaze. “Are you content now you drank that thing?” she asked snidely.

He didn’t answer just looked at his armor.
“Peps, leave now…”

“You wish, buster!” she grabbed the bottle off of his hand and shattered it on the second armor causing a slight flickering in Tony’s eyes; she crooked her mouth. “What? Don’t tell me your alloy is so weak?”

Tony thought that she was going to add “like you” but she didn’t. He strode calm at the mini bar he had in his workshop and took another bottle. But Pepper followed him so when he turned found her in front of him.

“What do you think you’re doing?”

He cocked his eyebrow and shrugged without his old playful mood.

“Boozing…”

“You don’t help Bruce that way…” she touched the invisible elephant in the room and Tony shivered.

He ruffled his messy locks and went to his working bench, his back on Peppers.

“I never helped him in any way…” he said hoarsely. “I didn’t help him eighteen years in Falcone’s captivity; I didn’t help him when that fucking factory fell on him almost killing him…and now…I bestowed him to Joker…”

Pepper came closer and placed her hands on his shoulders.

“I felt that something was off when I spoke with Alfred but the man was just worried about you and didn’t mention anything.”

Tony smirked and shook his head.

“Worried about me?” he huffed. “Oh, Al…”

“Listen, Tony, if you had another petty argument with Bruce, you know that these things…”

Tony turned swiftly to her, his eyes shining angrily not for her but himself.

“I used Ironman’s stunning beam on him, Peps!” she should know. “I stunned and left him unconscious in his bedroom!”

Pepper continued looking at him as if waiting for him to say more.

“We knew that Joker was to attack Arkham and we were going to bust him – from the start I tried to persuade him to not go there but when Joker finally made his move, Bruce insisted on wearing the armor and going; I block his way saying that I wouldn’t let him but he retorted that I couldn’t stop him and he stood…” he inhaled deeply. “I believed that I had no other choice and shot him with my stunning beam; I thought he’d be safe in the Manor” he closed his eyes and shook his head. “I was selfish; I wanted him to do what I thought was the best and I doomed him…I was afraid that if he went there he would be captured and once again abused – I thought I was right! But that bastard clown knew how I was going to act and with Loki set the trap… I managed exactly what I wanted to stop…His sobs and the pleadings were constantly on my mind: I wanted to stop this from happening again…And now this fuckin’ monster has him at his mercy…and Joker has no mercy…”

“Do you expect from me to comfort you?”
Tony licked his lips.

“No, I don’t deserve that; I condemned Bruce; I gave him to Joker.”

“You didn’t. You just make a mistake but sitting here getting wasted doesn’t change anything! Selina is out there looking for Bruce; your comrades as well; we have lost Thor’s traces but I’m sure he searches too. And you sit here and weep! This is preposterous, Tony!”

Tony shook his head.

“Maybe it’s better if I don’t do anything: whatever I do concerning Bruce causes him more troubles.”

Pepper raised her hand and slapped him; Tony looked at her startled.

“From the moment Bruce came back you whine that he was tortured while you were drinking and partying and fucking without searching for him! And now that he needs you again, what are you doing? You sit here drinking and whining like a brat and again don’t do anything to help him!”

Tony was staring at her.

“When Bruce comes back – because we know Bruce and he will make it again! – what will you do then? Pitying yourself for being inert throughout the whole ordeal? Alfred and Leslie have their agony for Bruce and you make them worry even more with your whims! Don’t look at me with that stupid, totally un-Starkish way! You were discussing everything with Bruce: if you put your air-filled mind to work you’ll remember things and find leads!”

She clenched her waist with both hands, yanked her head and groaned.

“First, you find Bruce and bring him back safe and then you’ll have plenty of time to kneel before him and beg him for forgiveness for the rest of your life. Tony Stark, I’m going to slap you again if you don’t move your sorry iron ass to look for Bruce!” she raised again her hand.

Tony smiled tired but with a sparkle that encouraged Pepper and himself. He took her raised hand and kissed the knuckles.

“You’d be right to slap me again, Peps: Bruce needs me and there are things Bruce told me that I can use” he cocked his eyebrow and pursed his lips. “This time slap my other cheek because you girls slap always the same cheek – Selina slapped me too and you two have really strong hands.”

Joker crossed the shining marble isle that led to Loki’s throne hall; as he entered the hall he cast a glance at the round fountain where piranhas swam calmly and sent them kisses. He hopped to meet his ally looking appreciatively the naked statues that formed the columns around the room.

“Brucie’s body is better, assholes!”

Loki was pacing with his arms crossed over his upper arms; he was still wearing his golden horned helmet and Joker chuckled.

“Niiiiice touch!” he said pointing at the horns “but the coooolor…” he crooked his lips “gold is a bit kitsch” he lolled his head on the side and studied the god. “Mmm…things didn’t go as you wanted?” he patted him in the back under Loki’s pissed eyes. “Shiiiiit happens to anyone…” he pouted “except than me of course.”
Loki squinted.
“Your humor sucks, you know that?”

Joker’s smile was huge.

Loki rolled his eyes.

“Of course: we’re not finished. I’ll be back!”

“Huhuhuuuuu! Like Terminator? Someone’s a cinephile…”

Loki lowered a bit his head deep in thought.

“They had help – someone broke my spells… otherwise they wouldn’t have a chance.”

Joker nodded.

“Who am I to contra---dict youuuuu?”

“How’s our guest?”

“Great! Brucie woke up and we had a heartwarming reunion.”

Loki rolled his eyes.

“Woke up? You sedated him to bring him here?”

“No, actually, I found him ready for shipping…our Tony not only locked myyyy sleeping beauty but also he put him to sleep so to keep him safe in the Manor.”

Loki smirked; his sneaky eyes blazing.

“Exactly, as we predicted! Stupid Stark! Now, I feel that I’m the true victor!”

Joker cocked his eyebrows.

“Or Victoria…” he shrugged.

“What?”

“This is a…film quiz, right?”

Loki fumed and rolled his eyes pissed.

“Anyway…As long as I have his best friend in my grasp then I hold Stark and my dear brother from the balls. And of course what happened in New York won’t be the last…”

Joker narrowed his eyes annoyed.

“Brucie is mine” he hissed in a low, evil voice.

But Loki leaned to him and met his eyes with equal determination.
“You have Bruce down there thanks to me: weren’t for me you wouldn’t even have gotten near him. So don’t forget who I am and the magnitude of my power.”

An enormous Cheshire smile stretched Joker’s lips. The jester patted his jacket over the place of his inside pocket and noise from the things there was heard causing Loki’s interest.

“I don’t forget that, Loki” Joker said amused but with eyes icy still patting the place of his inside pocket confidently. “Noooooow, if you’ll excuse me – frankly, I dooooon’t give a shit if you excuse me… I must feed my caged little bird!”

He began prancing out of the hall.

“IIIIII…I got you, baaaaabe…” his nasal voice echoed through the halls.

Loki shook his head: he didn’t trust much that jester but he didn’t have anything to fear from that idiot: he was a god and when penetrating Joker’s mind he found only mayhem and disorder. Joker wasn’t a threat to him; just a pawn to his board.
Chapter 68

“How long can he last without his medication?”

Alfred’s composed voice cracked the death silence of the kitchen; for an outsider this voice would have seemed emotionless yet for Leslie who was standing supporting her back on the built-in stainless steel closet fridge it was anything but that.

The butler stood in front of the big window over the sink and gazed at the dark grounds but only seemingly. On his right, lay on the black granite counter the crystal bowl with the pile of pills Bruce was taking at this time of the day.

Leslie could discern in her friend’s low voice the almost inaudible crack and the hidden agony. She detached from the fridge and walked to him placing her hand on his shoulder and Alfred looked at her, his eyes calm as ever trying to hide his internal suffering.

“Bruce has been inoculated so he isn’t in danger from most viruses. Also, a satisfying amount of recovering time has passed from the accident so his organism’s resilience is enhanced. Missing some of his medication dosages won’t be detrimental…”

“However this cannot be extended much, right?”

Leslie couldn’t lie; she pressed her lips.

“No, it can’t be much” she inhaled “but our Bruce is strong and his friends are out there looking for him.”

Alfred shook his head and his hand hovered over the pills with almost tenderness.

“It is so unfair, Leslie…Not even a year has passed since the boy gained his freedom and people don’t seem to give him a tiny break to enjoy what he hard earned and heal his wounds properly…It is like the life constantly snarls at him that…” he didn’t have the heart to articulate his thought.

But Leslie understood: life seemed to snarl at their boy that he wasn’t meant to be happy or even live...The fearless doctor locked eyes with her friend.

“It is unfair…” she agreed “our boy is special, unique and we know that scum is drawn to anything that shines…”

Alfred yanked his head and his eyes were lost in the vastness of the Palisades.

“Sometimes I wish that Master Bruce wasn’t so special just for being happy… I’m afraid, Leslie” he turned his eyes to her “I dread to imagine what this horrible man can do to him… I wish that Joker had taken me along so that I could tend to Master Bruce.”

Leslie caressed her friend’s cheeks.

“Bruce wouldn’t want that, Alfred; maybe if what you wish had happened things would have been worse for him… We’ll take him back.”

He pressed his lips and nodded.

“I’m worried about Master Anthony too; he has disappeared and I’m sure he feels guilty about what happened.”
Leslie cocked her eyebrows; Alfred had told her about how Tony stunned Bruce.

“I wouldn’t want to be in his shoes right now…He had the best intentions but he did something wrong and to make matters worse the outcome was the opposite of what he hoped. I hope he realizes that he isn’t responsible for Joker’s deeds…” she shook her head.

Alfred nodded.

“I should go upstairs to see if the crew Lucius sent to fix the wall needs anything” he said nonchalant but as he moved towards the arc leading to the corridor Dick ran to him with Hero in his hands still restless after Bruce’s kidnap; Jason following.

Alfred looked at the boys with sympathy: he didn’t get the chance to ask what exactly happened and they came immediately after Selina. Dick released Hero who rubbed to Alfred’s legs as if he wanted to comfort him.

“Alfred, it’s all my fault” Dick said in one breath raising his eyes to meet the butler’s. “I’m sorry…”

Alfred shook his head and Leslie came closer interested.

“Nonsense, Master Richard” Alfred said kindly to the boy who closed his eyes exasperated.

“Jason had heard Joker’s goons discussing that Joker would attack Arkham and told me” Jason nodded affirming. “But I” Dick bit his bottom lip “I chose to go to Arkham…”

“May I ask the reason, sir?”

The boy averted his gaze and huffed.

“To kill Joker!” he said through gritted teeth.

Alfred placed his hands on the boy’s shoulders and looked him in the eyes.

“If I may, Master Richard, that was foolish: first, you positioned yourself and Master Jason to a grave danger going there – we are very fortunate that you two are unharmed; second, by killing someone you never gain anything, on the contrary the complications just make matters worse” the boy watched Alfred carefully and the butler smiled kindly. “Nevertheless it isn’t your fault that Master Bruce was taken: Joker attacked the Manor not the Arkham Asylum.”

Jason crossed his arms.

“That’s true, man…” he pointed to his friend.

Suddenly, it dawned to Dick.

“That funny guy that pretended Joker in Arkham said that it was easy to guess Stark’s plan to keep Bruce away from there – how did Stark knew that Joker will be in the Asylum?”

Alfred saw the curiosity and suspicion glimmering in both boys’ eyes and shared a sideways glance with Leslie.

“Master Bruce was meeting with Dr. Strange so it was certain that someone would see him and the word would reach Joker so Master Anthony had people watching the Asylum just in case” Alfred managed to explain. “Now, I believe that it is time for both of you to have a light supper; Master Jason, would you do us the favor and stay for the night?”
Jason cocked his eyebrows smugly.

“Master Jason…” he mimicked Alfred’s thick English accent and Leslie chuckled. “Wow! Call me Jay, Alfie. Mmm…I’ll call mom.”

Dick noticed something on the shining surface of the long black kitchen island. He moved there with knitted eyebrows and both Leslie and Alfred watched him touching Bruce’s Cosmos tablet that Alfred had brought there to not be seen by the police that had done forensic work in the bedroom some hours ago.

“Is anything the matter, Master Richard?” Alfred asked.

“This is Wayne’s smart phone?”

“But of course, sir, why?”

Dick gave a tight smile.

“Nothing…” he walked to Jason who met his eyes with a knowing expression. “Will be at my room till the supper is ready…” he grabbed his friend and ran out of kitchen under the two adults’ frown, Hero at their heels.

“You saw that tablet?” he asked Jayson as soon as they entered his bedroom and he closed the door after letting Hero hop inside.

The younger boy nodded.

Dick rushed to his neglected backpack and opened it to take out his tablet. He turned to Jason.

“It’s like mine…”

Jason cocked an eyebrow, crooked his mouth and came closer.

“Maybe he saw yars, got jealous an’ bought one?” he asked sarcastic and Dick lolled his head on the side exasperated.

“Very funny!”

“I told ya from the start that this thingy wasn’t on the market when yar granny gave it to ya…An’ still it’s not in stores though…I’ve seen some posters an’ ads in the net…It’s brand new…from Wayne Enterprises…” he pouted.

Dick shook his head and eyed his tablet.

“Maybe I’m wrong – maybe it’s not the same…”

Jason came closer.

“Or maybe the guy wanted ya to have the newest model an’ gave it to yar granny tellin’ her not say anythin’ ‘bout him…” he twitched his eyebrows for emphasis and Dick averted his eyes to look at Hero who was pacing nervously probably having remembered his missing human.

Many conflicting things twirled in his mind: his granny’s words, Tony’s warm presence that all of a sudden started to emanate things that made Dick numb with cold, Wayne’s stoic stance…so many things had happened that doubted everything he knew and believed till then. It was so overwhelming that he needed to stop thinking and just let things unfold.
Jim took off his glasses and rubbed the bridge of his nose; he was still at his office in MCU reading reports from officers all over Gotham looking for Joker. There was nothing; he raised his eyebrows…of course.

Alfred Pennyworth had explained to him the unbelievable way the criminal had vanished from the Manor with Bruce Wayne. In other case, Jim wouldn’t have believed him but what happened at Arkham reaffirmed the man’s sayings; not to mention that overcoming Stark’s security measures certainly would demand something, well, beyond common.

Jim had distrust for magic or god-like beings: not that he didn’t like Superman, Thor or the rest of extraordinary beings that had entered human ordinary life – yet the existence of these benevolent heroes meant that major threats of the same powers could be out there too. And frankly, humankind had already suffered enough from human criminals: thinking of a god helping Joker was at least disconcerting.

He shook his head: how could Gotham’s police help Bruce and his loved ones against this? Certainly they were doing the best they could yet Jim had to admit that they had to rely on Tony Stark’s super powered friends – though after the attack in New York they certainly had their hands full.

The Commissionaire felt guilt about the Wayne heir: not only he had been unable to protect him but also Gotham’s police had failed to make any progress in finding the grandmother of Wayne’s charge. He had read a report a few hours ago with no development in that case: it was as if the earth had swallowed the old lady. On the other hand, if she was dead they would have found a body by now…

At least, Tony Zucco’s case was in the DA’s hands and from what they discussed there were enough evidence to build a strong case.

“I just want to see the Commissionaire!”

Jim frowned and stood from his chair; he walked to the door listening to his officer dispute with a woman. He opened the door.

“Pete, let her come” and when the woman was close enough “how can I help you, Miss Lane? We just had a briefing about the attack at Arkham.”

Lois nodded and looked Gordon in the eyes with a shine that Jim didn’t like.

“I know, Commissionaire but something else happened in Gotham, right?”

“Miss Lane…” he said calm.

Lois arched an eyebrow.

“Police is guarding the Wayne Estate…something happened to Bruce Wayne, right?” she asked almost demanding but also with a hue of worry in her voice. “I have heard some rumors” she whispered but Jim’s expression remained neutral denying her a clue.

“We would have made an announcement if something had happened” he made to turn to his office; they had decided to not announce anything yet on Wayne’s kidnap.

“Commissionaire” Lois said calm but determined “I understand that you want to keep it secret…I’m not here as a reporter but as Bruce’s friend.”
Jim looked at her.

“I give you my word that everything you tell me will stay between us and I won’t harass Bruce’s loved ones… but I’m worried” the young woman continued serious.

Jim was looking her in the eyes estimating her honesty.

“While Mr. Stark was at Arkham Joker breached the Manor and took Mr. Wayne” he confirmed her suspicions.

“Damn!” Lois exclaimed through gritted teeth.

Jim nodded.

“Excuse me, Miss Lane” he mumbled and walked opposite her to the waiting room’s exit where Lieutenant Bullock was waiting for him.

Lois noticed the way the two men exchanged some words seemingly indifferent and then left; she was sure that those nonchalant words were for something important and felt bad for Jim Gordon that had so many emergencies to face at once…but the man was used to this and absolutely the best for this work.

Her first instinctive urge was to take out her smart phone and call Clark to inform him about Bruce. But she closed her eyes and sighed disappointed.

It was futile: she knew that Superman wouldn’t come and though she was tireless in giving him Hell…she was very tired of being constantly disappointed by her friend and her hero being so indifferent…

Bruce looked around free from Joker’s presence: definitely, a dudgeon and judging from the magic around, some building belonging to Loki – maybe his palace; Thor had told him that he couldn’t locate the mischievous god. Naturally, since Loki was preparing something along with Joker. And Bruce had a suspicion that the attack at Arkham and the Manor wasn’t the only.

His eyes fell on the stone ground: Joker had let there his stuff, the blade with Bruce’s blood still on it and the black blindfold. He pressed his lips – Joker’s belief that he was Batman was so solid that rational arguments wouldn’t do anything. After all, the jester didn’t care about logic.

Looking at the items, with the corner of his eyes caught a glimpse of his own body, bare naked and violated. He closed his eyes and turned his head elsewhere: from the day Clark was out of his life, Bruce returned to his aversion for his own body; since then he avoided any eye contact with his body, especially without clothes. Gross…

He licked his dry lips and looked at the wall opposite him.

The only way Joker was going to be persuaded was if he saw both Bruce and Batman…the real Batman not one of his friends dressed as Batman: Joker might be impulsive and even careless about most things but he was very observational about what he wanted and he definitely knew every detail of Batman.

Thinking about other things different than his own naked body was safer and more useful…

There was a way for this simultaneous presence to be achieved but being here made it impossible for Batman to appear because Bruce was sure that they were far away from Gotham.

He made to move his wrists to test his restraint and to ease them, only to feel the stone pressing bone-crushingly as Joker had warned. So Bruce stopped immediately not only because the pain was horrific but also because having two crushed wrists wouldn’t help.

He bit his lip; he was used to cold and pain and could ignore them yet he couldn’t deny their presence; and given his body’s condition it wasn’t good that his back ached – this could be bad news for the healthy part of his spine. He shook his head: no, he could say that this pain albeit annoying wasn’t meaning any danger – there were the energy casts protecting him…

A faint smile appeared on his face because the alien casts brought the memory of the good moments with Clark – how much he cared; how gently he was taking care of him; how much he loved him… He shook his head clenching his jaw determined: that was over. Clark wouldn’t come back.

He forced his mind to focus elsewhere…somewhere with meaning. To things that were urging. Bruce gathered the information the current developments gave him.

Loki wasn’t working with someone else; he wasn’t part of a greater scheme – the god worked for himself, for his own goals. He might have appeared in Thasos the time of the attack against him but that was a coincidence; Bruce was sure that Loki wasn’t working with Vivian which would have been the conclusion if the mischievous god had orchestrated the attack to bring Diana into their lives. Also, Loki didn’t have any involvement in the raids to LexLabs which would have indicated that he had recruited Mannheim.

Not to mention that Mannheim didn’t seem the man to be recruited even by a god…Joker wasn’t either but the jester did it for his own interest while Mannheim was taking care of his interests by himself: he looked like one to recruit others not to be recruited…Of course, Loki could take forms so he could have presented himself as Mannheim however Bruce didn’t believe that for the extra reason that Loki wouldn’t hesitate to reveal it to laugh at him.

Bruce was sure that they were faced with two different schemes at the same time; each independent of the other. The healthy half of his body filled with agitation and impatience to go to his cave and dive in the results of the search about anything on Vivian: he was sure that if he found the truth about her he would be able to figure everything. She couldn’t be working alone: she definitely had the ability to manipulate and even control people yet there were more things related to her that she couldn’t manage – at least, from what Bruce knew about her. The powers mimicking the real Amazon Princess weren’t her doing and the way she had been appearing wherever Superman was…

He closed his eyes and almost smell the humid, cold scent of his cave; the metal smell of the Tumbler; of the waterfall; of the bats. His heart beat fast from the need to be there despite the fact Tony certainly would object…

Tony…Bruce remembered his friends’ determined almost angry – desperate – eyes a second before he felt the beam running through his body. Bruce bit his lip and sighed; he was sure that the damn video had a great impact on Tony driving his overprotectiveness beyond the limits…

That video…The images and the feelings from the night Falcone did all these to him attempted to slip through his mind’s barriers but he stubbornly shut the door to them. He didn’t want to touch at all that, leaving the investigation to the police yet he knew that to find the buyer of the video who was the mastermind they had to start from the hacker and unroll the skein: who knew Isaac’s skills in hacking?

He felt Tony’s anger; his sadness…Oh, Tony…
He heard the inaudible hissing of the wall opposite him that he knew that announced someone’s entrance…

Tony was at Lucius’ workshop in Wayne Tower; Pepper had called Alfred to tell him that Tony was fine but the billionaire couldn’t find the courage to speak to him.

Lucius was casting glances at the younger man who was perusing the flood of data in the hologram before them.

“Jarvis, get access to Bruce’s surveillance system to Harleen Quinzel’s apartment: cable phone, smart phone, phone at Arkham, everything.”

“Harleen Quinzel?” Lucius asked and stood from his stool to approach Tony who seemed unable to sit down.

“She was Joker’s shrink in Arkham and she has a fascination with the man; Bruce was watching her. Actually, we knew that Joker would attack Arkham because she had seen Bruce visiting Strange there – and we were right” Tony elaborated.

Lucius nodded: Bruce had said to him some days ago that he had appointed to his trusted scientist too many responsibilities so obviously the young man didn’t want to put more weight on Lucius’ shoulders.

“So you hope that Joker will eventually get sick of Loki’s ‘custody’ and reappear in Gotham seeking his docile former therapist and she will lead us to him.”

Tony looked at Lucius and pursed his lips.

“You think the chances for that are negligible?” he asked almost discouraged.

But Lucius gave a faint but so confident smile that Tony felt his hopes up. The African American arched his eyebrows.

“On the contrary, I think that it is very possible this will be the course Joker will follow – besides, it is what Mr. Wayne believed as well” he gestured to the flood of data.

Tony watched the new data moving rapidly in the hologram in front of him.

“I hope so…”

“I understand that bringing police in this is for the time being forbidden.”

Tony nodded.

“My urge is to have the bitch arrested and interrogated to spill where that nutcase but I need to think like Bruce to help him – patience is not my expertise but it is Bruce’s: arresting her right now might not get us anywhere as I bet she doesn’t know anything about his current location. So for now we can only watch her and wait for Joker’s move.”

Lucius put on his glasses.

“Informing the police right now about Quinzel’s role will require explain to them how we know her relationship with Joker which won’t help Mr. Wayne’s need for secrecy.”
Tony crooked his mouth.

“That damned secrecy…” but he didn’t continue. “On the other hand, I doubt that police’s monitoring will be better than ours…”

Lucius nodded.

Watching the telephone numbers of Quinzel’s calls that the processor automatically crossed with registered numbers, Tony didn’t find anything suspicious. He remembered that Bruce had pointed out that Joker probably suspected that his associate was watched and found another way to contact her – maybe another phone registered with different name or no registered at all.

“We can’t just rely on the monitoring of her phones and apartment – we need to watch her movements constantly.”

“Definitely” Lucius said and he touched the screen of his phone like gadget bringing up another hologram showing a bleeping spot that was Quinzel in her apartment.

Tony was scanning the data from the processor from the cave; Bruce had also detailed logs with reports about Crane’s supposed whereabouts: there was a interactive map where every location was noted constantly updated whenever a new report arrived in the police’s database; flashing lights had formed a rectangular where his movements where restricted – rectangular that was shrinking or broadening according to the updates.

“So Bruce believes that Crane is also important to find Joker…”

Lucius shook his head.

“We need to keep an eye for him too…”

Suddenly, Lucius noticed something.

“The cave’s processor alerts on an emergency” he pointed with his index to a yellow blinking little light. “A breakout from MCU” he looked at Tony who ruffled his hair.

“I don’t have time for that; let the GCPD handle it…”

“Master Anthony…” Jarvis’ quiet voice fell like thunder in the lab.

Tony closed his eyes and sighed.

“Don’t tell me…”

“We have a situation at Siberia.”

“Loki?”

“There is no indication of his presence…”

Tony shook his head.

“The others can handle it” he said adamant “inform Fury.”

“Sir, there are more reports about emergencies all over the globe.”

Tony ground his teeth and locked eyes with Lucius.
“The bastard wants to keep me busy to not look for Bruce…What he is up to?!”

Lucius pressed his lips.

“I think you should go, Mr. Stark. Bruce would want you to and I’ll be here constantly updating you.”

Tony’s armor rapidly began enclosing his body. His eyes were filled with gratitude when he met Lucius’s eyes.

“Thank you, Lucius.”

“No need, Mr. Stark” he answered with his warm smile “it’s what I’m here for…”

Steve closed the door to the rooftop and walked calm towards the edge. Catwoman was standing on the ledge watching across with her hands fisted in her sides.

“I’m sorry I didn’t answer your call. I left my phone in the apartment when Fury beeped us for the attack in New York. I saw your call when I returned.”

He hugged her shoulders.

“Thor told us that Joker took Bruce…” he rubbed her upper arms. “I’m so sorry, honey… Any luck?”

Catwoman bit her lip.

“This city is empty…That sonovabitch is nowhere!”

“Maybe you should return to the Manor and wait? Loki must have hid Joker somewhere.”

She turned to him with blazing eyes.

“No, I won’t stand and watch! Joker won’t stay for long with Loki – I’m sure at some point he’s going to get rid of him. He isn’t the guy to be someone’s footman” she cocked her eyebrows “it’s too boring for him.”

“Then?”

“When he’ll make his movement I’ll be ready, watching that bitch…” she gestured with her head to the opposing building.

Steve frowned.

“Whom?”

“Harleen Quinzel, she was Joker’s shrink in the nut house. Bruce was positive that they are connected and in constant” she shook her head with conviction. “He’ll get in touch with her soon, summoning his puppet.”

“I’ll be here with you.”

Catwoman shook her head.
“World needs you…”

And as if wanting to confirm her Steve’s beeper sounded demanding; Catwoman smirked as Steve eyed frustrated the small gadget in his belt.

“Go…” she urged him meeting his eyes and placing a small kiss to his lips.

The stone opposite Bruce dissolved forming an oval opening to reveal Joker who hopped inside carrying on his hand a golden tray with food.

Bruce filled his eyes with terror and tensed because he knew that the jester would try to finish what he had started – his nudity returned more strikingly to the center of his awareness.

Joker cast a sideways glance to the wall that was taking again its solid form.

“Uuuuaahhhhh!! I aaaaaalways wanted to do that: pass through walls like a gggggggghost – heheheheheeeeee…”

He turned his head to his prisoner and a wide Cheshire smile cracked his white painted smile. He walked closer, kneeled before Bruce and placed the tray on the ground.

Bruce began breathing fast with fear not even casting a glance to the food and his captor, keeping his eyes down.

Joker murmured annoyed and grabbed Bruce’s chin yanking his head to look at him.

“You must be hungry, littl’ gem…” he said nasally.

Bruce made a deliberately clumsy effort to an angry stare.

“Don’t call me that” he took care that his demand was flickering with terror and Joker smiled.

“I looooooove your acting skills, littl’ geeeeem…”

Bruce closed his eyes defeated.

“Please, don’t call me that…” he deserted any effort to demand it and Joker chuckled impressed.

“’Cause Falconi called you that? C’mon, baaaaabe, you know I don’t like to repeat things but this suits youuuuuuu…” he licked his lips. “Noooow, I saw how skinny you were in that disg—usting video an’ daaaddy Joker won’t let you starve again.”

Bruce shook his head.

“I’m not hungry” he mumbled and raised shyly his eyes to Joker’s face. “My back…hurts…” his voice lost more of its volume saying that and Joker lolled his head backwards.

He cupped his prisoner’s face and caressed his cheeks with his ungloved hands; his fingertips touching Bruce’s flesh fascinated.

“I can’t un—restrain you, can I?”
Bruce breathed fast.

“I…I can’t do anything…I’m disabled and even if I wasn’t…what could I do?”

Joker pouted.

“Poooooor thing…” he sneered at him. “As if I believe you – HEHEHEHE!” he stopped abruptly laughing turning a serious expression. “Nooooooow, mum! Umm…I don’t know what bats eat…HEHEHEHEHEEE! Sooome say that they eat miiiiice and drink blood – HEHEHEHEEE!” he became serious again and waved that off. “Buuuulshit! An’ where I was going to find thooooose, huh? Not that the staff of this establishment isn’t helpful…”

Bruce let his head loll on the shoulder tired but Joker cupped his chin with one hand caressing the stray locks on his forehead with the other.

“Weeeell, look what good daaaddy brought to his puuuppy! Miiiiilk, chicken fillet and apple pie for dessert” he lolled his head to the side and regarded his prisoner’s scared eyes. “Whaaaat?! I didn’t puuuuut any surprise in there, oooon myyyy mmm…blades’ sharpness!”

The jester detached his hand from Bruce’s hair, broke a bite from the fillet with the spoon and brought it to Bruce’s mouth; the younger man averted his face but Joker tightened his one hand grip on his chin forcing him to return to his previous position.

“Aaaaaaaa! Come…For Daaaddyyyyy Jooooooker… OPEN YOUR DAMN MOUTH!” he shouted frustrated.

Bruce closed his eyes and opened slightly his mouth permitting Joker to shove the food inside. The jester caressed tenderly his prisoner’s cheek.

“It wasn’t thaaaaaat difficult, huh?”

Thankfully, Bruce didn’t detect anything suspicious in the chicken’s taste; actually, it was very tasty yet his stomach was a knot. Joker was staring at him fascinated.

“Do you want mooooore, littl’ gem?”

Bruce shook his head.

“But it was sooooooo little: a big, bad bat needs more food to be…weeeell, big an’ scaaary an’…mmm…del--ICIOUS, huh?”

Bruce yanked his head huffing.

“I’m not he…Please, give me my clothes – it’s so cold here.”

Joker pouted and eyed the rugs around Bruce’s thighs that were what was left from his expensive pants. He shrugged.

“You mean these?” he chuckled arching his eyebrows like the child who had broken the vase. “I don’t think that they are mmm…wearable but I can do something for the cold…I can’t let myyyyy little bat shivering, can I?” he said with a wicked shine in his green eyes.

Bruce tensed but Joker was on him in a rapid motion, his arms tightly wrapped around his stretched torso fondling fast and roughly.

“HEHEHEHEEEE, eeeeee? Daddy Joker found the sol—ution: I’ll keep you warm aaaaaaand I’ll give you a niiice massage for your back pains. Hihihiiiiiiii!

Bruce closed his eyes to choke the nausea and the all familiar panic that rapidly filled his mind as Joker took out his jacket with hasty movements touching his torso on Bruce’s; his hands more greedy than before.

“I want real contact, damn it!” the jester said with seriousness and a deep voice completely foreign to him.

“No” Bruce mumbled “don’t do this…no, please, stop…” but Joker silenced him capturing his mouth with his, shoving his wet tongue deep inside exploring demandingly, one hand fondling his prisoner’s back and the other ruffling violently his silken locks.

“Hooooooooly Blades! Thiiiiiis is toooooo gooood…” he moaned without interrupting his kiss.

The jester’s brutal kiss lasted more than a minute and in the end Joker detached reluctantly from Bruce’s lips biting hard the younger man’s bottom lip drawing blood which the jester licked closing his eyes and groaning in delight.

“Youuuuuu taste like a jester’s most beautiful dreams” he mumbled and his hands travelled fast Bruce’s back to his buttocks. “Mmm…Myyyy baaaaaat has a greaaaat butt: what more can a poooooor clown ask?”

Bruce was coughing choked from Joker’s brutal kiss but the jester fisted his hair and yanked his head to the side plunging his mouth on his prisoner’s neck sucking and licking the drumming vein while his hands were groping violently his buttocks.

Bruce couldn’t feel his brutal ministrations but he could hear the wet sounds and the effect was almost the same; he tried to keep his mind busy and away from all these as Ra’s had taught him but once again the result wasn’t good enough.

“Please…” he could resist yet that wouldn’t have a result and wouldn’t fit Bruce’s submissive past.

“As much as…” he dove again to Bruce’s neck; he detached “I looooove your playing the weak” his mouth sucked again flesh; he detached “why not demaaaaand that with your batsy voice, huh?” his mouth travelled lower to the chest “oooooooh! That chest is fantastic! Like statue…the muscles sooooo…mmm…the fleeeesh so taut and velvet…oooooh…”

Joker took off his shirt in a rapid motion.

“Few!” he exclaimed relieved “it’s with press stuuuuuuds” he giggled and rubbed his naked torso that burned from arousal on Bruce’s cold one. “Oooooooh! Littl’ gem, you’re a piece of ice buuuuuut I’m a sex boooomb…soooooo I’ll be your liberaaaator…uuuuuuh…”

The violent friction from Joker’s torso was suddenly combined with the brutal friction of two fingers inside him and Bruce’s heart went frantic; his breath became panting.

“You’re hooorny, baaaaabe? Dooooon’t worry, I won’t leeeet your sweet hooole waiting loooong for the good stuff…”

Bruce sobbed; all the times Falcone used him crushed on his mind like thunders on trees. He clenched his fists as he had learnt but the tightening stone warned him crudely to stop crushing more his wrists.

Joker was licking his abs now and Bruce felt the jester’s panting breath going faster, and hotter which meant that he was about to… Without taking his mouth off Bruce Joker brought his one hand to his fly ready to free his throbbing member.

Bruce in the deep mist his mind was heard the distinctive hissing of the wall opening. He turned his sweaty head to see while Joker didn’t notice absorbed in his arousal both sucking Bruce’s member and thrusting three fingers so fast and deep that it hurt horribly.

“Sorry to interrupt…” an ironic voice said and Joker growled.

Thor stood by Dr. Strange’s side on the marble floor of the temple’s exterior watching the man performing odd, precise movements with his hands which created colorful sparkles.

“I’ll come with you; I might be able to be of some help.”

Strange looked at him with an eyebrow arched.

“You don’t trust me with your friend?”

“Of course I do but I don’t know what Loki might have in store for anyone approaching; maybe when you find him you’ll need my help.”

His beeper’s sound hit the peace of the scenery hard and Thor’s frown was deep; his determination to go with Strange unbreakable.

Steven smiled and patted the god’s upper arm.

“Go… It’s better if I’m alone in that search. If I need your help be sure that I’ll ask…” he smiled seeing Thor’s hesitance to leave. “I’ll find him, Thor.”

“What do you want?!!” Joker shouted still attached to Bruce’s length. “That Asgard place doesn’t teach you manners?”

Bruce looked at their visitor: Loki had his arms crossed over the chest and regarded the scene before him with a mixture of amusement and distaste. Despite the serious of the situation Bruce chuckled inside thinking Joker’s state being every time cut abruptly at the moment of his culmination...

“This place is mine if you forgot” he said pointedly and with a nod of his head Joker was tossed away from Bruce. “And Bruce here is my guest – I didn’t give you permission to do him such things.”

Bruce gulped and lowered his head embarrassed.

Joker was fuming; he jumped on his feet and glared at the god with his green eyes flashing among his disheveled green curls.

“Brucie is only MINE, you stupid freak!” he shouted nasally, his stuttering vanishing completely.

Loki smirked and Joker was tossed to the opposite wall and then to the floor. The mischievous god cocked an eyebrow.

“Take your rags and leave…” he ordered Joker indifferent and watched as the jester clearly enraged gathered his clothes and left the cell.
The space became dead silent minus Bruce’s asthmatic breath that let every now and then an almost inaudible sob with the youth every time pressing his lips silencing himself. Loki after a minute walked closer and Bruce feeling his sneaky eyes on him raised tiredly his head and met his gaze.

“Is that what you wanted?” he asked quietly but accusingly.

Loki moved closer, his privy eyes travelling Bruce’s naked body.

“I should say, yes” he cocked an eyebrow and his grin became broader “this body is magnificent: has my dear brother devoured its beauties yet?”

Bruce gulped but didn’t lower his eyes.

“Thor never touched me; he is honest and honorable; his mind isn’t on these things.”

Loki rolled his eyes.

“How stupid!” he narrowed his eyes wickedly. “Do you gather he is…impotent?” he sniggered.

Bruce lowered his eyes again breathing hard.

“There’s nothing funny…” he mumbled exhausted. “You act like Joker…What do you want from me?”

Loki squatted in front of him and brought his face close to Bruce’s. He raised his hand and his fingers touched hesitantly the youth’s sweaty but cold cheek; he sniffed mesmerized.

“Mmm…I never met such a perfume again: the rarest cinnamon – sweet and spicy with hues of orange and hibiscus’ blossoms” he closed his eyes reminiscent “it makes my groin twitch. Superman was so lucky…” his fingers moved to Bruce’s neck and he looked him scared “and so idiot!”

“Please, don’t touch me…”

“Joker was ready to do worse things to you…” he cocked an eyebrow “and I’m your savior.”

“Because you gave him the chance. Is this really what a god like you wants from his power? To bend as low as a mad criminal who butchers children?”

Loki touched his hand on Bruce’s chest and caressing moved lower to his abs.

“Thor will be enraged…”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Is that why you stopped Joker? To finish this yourself?” he mumbled.

Loki cast him a lopsided glance without taking his hand from Bruce’s body.

“I can’t resist a piece of art…I’m a collector – I should show you my throne hall.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Do you understand that you have become Joker’s accomplice? He has dragged you in his madness…I understand that you feel neglected, wronged by your kind but…” he felt Loki’s eyes on his face “because of you Joker killed a young man during the attack at Avengers’ Tower; you set him loose and many people are in danger because of you…”
Loki grabbed Bruce’s face with both hands and Bruce’s eyes flickered pretending fear.

“’You’re cold” Loki said.

“I’m naked in a dudgeon… but I’m used to that… my entire life I was buried in a dudgeon, in the cold… You said once that we are alike; but you gave me to Joker or you will do to me… what Joker wanted to… just to piss your brother.”

“I don’t want to harm you…”

Bruce smiled.

“I’m sure…” he said in disbelief.

Loki blinked and instantly Bruce felt warmth; beautiful dark red clothes from velvet covering his body. He looked at Loki.

“I’ll hold you till I achieve my goal…” the god said blatantly.

“Which is?”

“Showing to everyone in Asgard that I’m the best among them” he smirked. “A bastard – that is what they called me – better than them.”

“Working with Joker and helping him with his crimes you only prove them right! They might treat you badly; they might bully you but taking the responsibility for Joker’s crimes makes you like him!” he shook his head seeing Loki’s thoughtful but at the same time doubtful eyes. “You can’t trust Joker… He will double cross you!”

Loki licked his lips and patted Bruce head like he was petting a cute puppy. Bruce rolled his eyes frustrated but only inside.

“Don’t fret: I won’t let him near you again. I’ll take you to a beautiful room.”

“You think so!”

Bruce saw Joker emerging from the wall, a bottle in his hand; the jester smashed the bottle on the ground and thick smoke filled the place. Bruce coughed but Loki’s eyes bulged recognizing the gas. Joker came to them as Loki weakened slumped to Bruce’s torso. Bruce without of course showing anything realized what Joker did: that gas was the same Loki had asked from Crane to create; the gas that neutralized any special or godly power – the one they used at the Avengers’ Tower attack.

The jester laughed and grabbed Loki from the collar of his vest tossing him to the floor away from Bruce.

“Do you recognize this?” he hissed blinking his eyes cutely but maliciously.

Loki clenched his jaw in anger but as much as he tried to react his powers were thinning rapidly.

“You used my gas!”

Joker leaned above him with his Cheshire smile reaching his ears.

“No, not ‘youuuuuuuuuurs’: you gave the instructions and the ingredients an’ gooood ol’ Crane manufactured it… HEHEHEHEHEEEEE!” he smacked his lips and hugged Loki’s shoulders like a friend “Listen a tip from an expert in the field” he grabbed the pale god’s chin “doooooon’t you eeeeeeever trust a shrink with knowledge” he rolled his eyes “especially, a loony shrink. HEHEHEHEEEE! With the right amount of money he made it for me…”

Loki was fuming causing Joker’s amused giggle.

“Uuuuuuuuh…I loooooooove weak, boooooling ANGER!!!!”

The jester tightened his grip on Loki’s jaw and the god was surprised to feel pain for the first time; pain that became worse when a needle stabbed his upper arm.

“Oooour goooood crow-doctor maaaaade a compound mixture with loooooonger duration – heheheeeeee! Ooooh, that Crane! Sooooooo seeeerious but with a sour taste of humor…”

Joker turned rapidly into seriousness and Loki’s surprise became utter fear hued with wrath when his former pawn touched a blade to his cheek.

“I told you that Brucie was MINE an’ you had the audacity to stand between us” he shook his head and licked his lips “I could kill you for that bbbbbuuuuut it’d be funnier to let you here weak for your brother to fiiiiiind…”

“You fucking…” Loki said through gritted teeth but his eyes widened in terror when the blade cut his cheek and the god felt warm blood slithering his mortal-like flesh.

Bruce knew that he had to intervene.

“Don’t kill him…”

Joker rolled his eyes and looked at him.

“Youuuuuur soft spot for goooods it’s disconcerting, babe…we need to sort this out. Well, I don’t plan to kill that moron – HEHEHE…I bet you thought you could move me around like a puppet, huh? Now…” he smacked his lips “Call your half naked servants and order them to take my Brucie out of this rock and send us back.”

“I don’t take orders from a ridiculous being like you!”

“Really, now…” a second blade appeared like from thin air and Loki’s throat was in a second between two stinging blades already cutting flesh.

Sweat drops filled Loki’s face and Bruce frowned.

“Okay!” Loki said.

“If I sense a trick I’ll cut your throat, Ass-gardian!”

Loki said something in a strange language and a half naked fairy appeared; her face paled seeing Loki kneeled with two blades at his throat and blood streaking his cheek.

Bruce was watching seemingly shaken yet he was already estimating the new situation: going back to Gotham would be actually good for him.

“Baaaabe, time for sleeeeeep now…”

He didn’t have time to react before Joker put a fabric drenched with liquid in his face; his eyes shut immediately.
The burgundy cape gave a slight wave as Steven’s feet touched with the shining marble floor. He looked around him and the luxury of the place made him raise his eyebrows: at his side there was a round golden pond with a crystal shark fountain – he noticed with curiosity that fish swam inside and leaned to see.

One of the fish jumped at him with bare sharp teeth but the cape dragged him away; Dr. Strange crooked his mouth.

“Piranhas? Goodness…”

He walked hastily away to the seemingly endless space with his eyes captivated by the dome; he gazed at the murals and smirked when he focused on the painting: a very extreme orgy with every detail depicted. He chuckled and coughed forcing his eyes to abandon the fascinating ceiling and continue.

His chuckle became laughter when the pillars that supported the hall became visible in detail: men and women completely naked.

“We’re talking about a sex addict god…not to mention, lacking any good taste…” he eyed the golden throne at the far end; on the seat a golden horned helmet was placed. “At least, it’s the right place…Now where our knave is?”

He felt a force dragging him which he by now had learnt that was his cape.

“Okay, okay…I’m with you” he mumbled in his bass voice finding his balance.

His cocked in sarcasm eyebrows knitted as he crossed the vast corridors following his gut feeling and his cape. At first, he was puzzled by the lack of guards or any resistance but then his puzzlement became a grim premonition eyeing fairy-like beings – gorgeous by the way, and completely naked under the transparent veils they wore; that Loki knew how to get the most out of his eternal life!

“Don’t drag!” he snapped to his cape “I’m not losing my focus but I’m a man, for Goodness’ sake…”

Loki’s maidens were slumped on the edges of the corridor, curled up with shaken faces and just watched him passing them towards what Strange felt was the basement – he was going downstairs.

He felt that the dark place – completely different than the shining golden palace – was full of magic yet these spells were ragged, torn in shreds, the power that had set them, their master was weak.

Steven hurried his steps following the dark and humid corridor that thankfully was sparsely lit by torches stack in the stone walls. The wizard kept looking around with his guard up for any attack though he sensed that there wasn’t anything dangerous there. The more he regarded the place the more he was sure that Thor would have beaten his brother to a pulp if he had seen where he kept Bruce Wayne.

As a doctor and as a patient that had suffered multiple injuries, Steven could say that this place was the worst possible for a paraplegic who was recovering from grave traumas. He just hoped that this bad feeling had nothing to do with Wayne.

He felt the tag from his cape but he had already sensed that the wall before him was his destination: there was magic absorbed in this stone but now it was rapidly dissolving; the stone was meant to permit the entrance only to those the god wanted but Steven knew that he could easily pass the stone.
Yet he felt that he should observe first and then enter.

Behind the stone were two presences, one very weak and the other powerful.

“Where is Bruce? What have you done to him, you hellion?” someone was growling.

Steven cocked an eyebrow.

“Joker took him…” a weak but still cocky voice answered.

“You know where he is… Speak or I’ll end your pathetic days!”

Steven rushed head first to the stone and after a feeling of warm shower he was inside a rectangular space – a cold, humid dudgeon. He saw on the floor rags of what must have been tailored, pricy pants and underwear; he sensed agony, suffering, arousal and anger… His guts clenched: something bad had happened to Wayne.

He detached his eyes from the stone where Wayne had been tied till recently and turned to the presences he felt. They haven’t seen him yet – his reflection invisible.

Loki was on his knees, his long raven hair was disheveled and his thin face pale; he looked weak and how else could he look?

A man was towering him, having a golden arrow’s point touching the god’s forehead, the bow’s string ready to launch it. He was dressed in dark green, a hoodie covering his head casting in shadow his face letting only the sparkle of his green eyes being seen.

The dark green gloved hand tightened around the thick shining black wood of the bow and the one touching the arrow seemed eager to release it to pierce Loki’s head.

“Because of you that bastard got Bruce! You gave Bruce to him! You are guilty for whatever Joker does to him! You will die for the pain you caused to him!” the grinding of his teeth was really spooky to hear.

Steven cocked his eyebrows impressed – another man in agony for Wayne…: that man definitely charmed and infatuated people with a skill that the greatest wizards would be jealous…

Loki to his merit was calm and even challenging; his eyebrow slightly raised.

“I wish I knew where that fuckin’ clown took Bruce…but I don’t. He stabbed me in the back.”

Steven could see the angry smirk of the archer’s lips.

“You won’t have to live much with the hurt of his betrayal…” he hissed sniggering. “You’re useless after all…”

His hand released the arrow and Steven heard the archer’s enraged and surprised growl when his arrow was snapped in two. It was remarkably difficult for Steven’s powers to snap this arrow.

Loki breathed relieved but the archer looked around his eyes flashing more than ever.

“Show yourself!” he barked having sensed the other presence.

Steven yanked his head proudly, fixed his cape and made himself visible with a dignified cough.

“I know you have your right” he said to the archer “but I can’t let you kill him.”
The archer cast him a furious but at the same time contemptuous look that made Steven frown.

“Suit yourself, sorcerer! I’ve got more important things to do!” he said and walked out of the stone that now was so weakened that anyone could cross.

Loki encouraged from the archer’s departure turned to Strange with a cocked eyebrow; his mischievous character having somewhat recover.

“It seems I’m lucky after all…” he said with some distress accompanying his playfulness.

The wizard shook his head and smirked.

“Not when Thor gets you…” he snorted feeling his old sarcasm returning at the fullest but he couldn’t fight a satisfied grin seeing Loki’s grim expression.

The whole wall world map in the center of the Avengers’ Tower’s conference room was lit with several orange colored lights over different global locations: nuclear reactors, oil rings, weapon storages. All of them battle sceneries.

Fury gestured with four fingers to the map and the orange lights became green – the color of safety. He turned to his heroes that were gathered in the room, seated not around the oval, glass titanium table but anywhere else.

Captain America still in full battle attire sat in a leather armchair supporting his elbows to his knees. Thor had managed to tame his agitation and was sitting in one of the conference seats that he had dragged away from the table. Dr. Spanner dressed in his cheap jeans and T-shirt scrolled data in his tablet while Natasha watched from the leather sofa at the far end opposite the big table.

Tony was the only one who didn’t look at the holographic map; he couldn’t contain his emotions and let himself sit down. His body was still in full Ironman armor except for the face plate.

“The madness of the last twelve hours is finally over” Fury said. “Of course our surveillance satellites are in full vigilance exactly as our local departments all over the planet” he cast a glance at Tony who was gazing at the dawn colors of New York’s skyline. “This time Loki chose to attack through his minions to targets that wouldn’t be in the spotlight and in live coverage.”

Thor clenched his fist.

“He just wanted to have us on the run; disoriented; busy.”

Fury nodded and Dr. Spanner raised his eyes to his teammates.

“All the systems in the Tower are fully recovered, in perfect operational mode.”

Steve pressed his lips.

“I know that the newest attacks took place in facilities that are under strict secrecy…but it strikes me Superman’s absence: that is unlike him” he raised his eyebrows. “The New York attack was covered live…I mean, Flash did come.”

Natasha shrugged and cocked an eyebrow.

“Maybe he was busy: he and his girlfriend. What matters is that we managed without him…”
“Yes but this is worrying” Steve insisted. “Maybe something is wrong with him and what will happen if the next threat is something that we can’t fight alone?”

Natasha snorted.

“We’ll fight harder…” Tony spat from his position without turning to them. “The alien is not worthy of our trust; he is useless…”

Steve exchanged looks with his teammates; Thor knew the depth of Tony’s bitterness and distaste about the Man of Steel: not only the symbol of hope for many people hurt his best friend but also he never once helped since then.

“The Asgardian jerk just wanted to play with us…stall me; torment me forcing me to fight for anything else than…” Tony closed his mouth and shook his head. “Now, I have to go: if you need me…” he didn’t have the mood even to finish his phrase.

He made some heavy steps to the exit under his teammates’ gaze, the door already opening for him: Tony planned to go to the far end of the corridor where the wall with the huge golden A on the exterior had already opened for Ironman to take off.

Thor met him half way and Tony stopped.

“Tony, Loki might have done all these to keep us afar but he won’t make it.”

Tony was tired and in grim mood but definitely wasn’t hopeless.

“That goes without saying!” he spat and made to leave but Thor grabbed his upper arm.

“As we speak Loki might have been already spotted and caught.”

Tony frowned and Thor locked eyes with him.

“I asked the help of the right man.”

Now Tony’s eyes flashed.

“I don’t want another stranger around Bruce!” he grabbed the edges of Thor’s cape on his shoulders. “You trusted someone we don’t know to find him!” he gritted his teeth to Thor’s astonished face.

Thor felt for his comrade; Tony had made one major mistake and now was scared for every tiny possibility of things gone awry.

“We can trust him” he said confident. “He is with the good guys and he has powers that make him a valuable asset against Loki.”

“Who is he then?” Tony asked doubtful and gloom.

“Dr. Steven Strange, Mr. Stark” a bass baritone cracked the silence and Tony turned around… Just before storming at the newcomer.
Tony’s eyes was seeing only red, his hands had already taken position to punch or choke to death. But as he was ready to make contact he felt an invisible barrier and he was bounced off. The push from the impact made him regain his connection with the environment.

He registered a golden-transparent round shield covering his target; the newcomer had his hands positioned to form an arch exactly as the shape of the shield. Tony narrowed his eyes and fumed, his gaze sending daggers to Loki who behind the safety of the shield smirked.

However his annoying smirk vanished when something smacked the back of his neck sending him to the floor. Tony turned to see Thor’s hammer emitting sparks.

Dr. Strange arched his eyebrows.

“You can pass my shield? I need to look to it…” he said thoughtful.

Thor moved forward and Tony looked at him.

“Shatter the shield and let Loki to me!” he growled and he saw agreement in Thor’s eyes.

“I can’t shatter his shield” he answered “I can only send some energy through it.”

“Damn!” Tony glared at the wizard who was staring at them both. “Take that shield off!” he spat at him.

Stephen nodded.

“Gladly” he said “but I don’t think that killing him will help you in any way…”

“It’s none of your business what I’m going to do to that sonovabitch!” Tony barked. “What do you care anyway?”

Stephen shrugged one shoulder and lolled slightly his head.

“I guess another leftover of my past…but overall I hate gore…”

Both Tony and Thor moved forwards ready to attack.

“Guys…” Dr. Strange tried to reason with them holding his palms in the air appeasing.

“You don’t know anything about that!” Tony spat. “He didn’t harm your best friend!”

Stephen closed his eyes and cast a sideways look of contempt at Loki who rolled his eyes.

“I knew that you hated me” Thor said to Loki “but attacking Bruce from all people…” he shook his head locking eyes with the mischievous god who for the first time seemed regretful. “He has suffered so much… He didn’t wrong you in any way! And, damn it! He is a paraplegic!”

“It was your fault, bro!” Loki retorted glaring at his brother through his disheveled raven hair; his green eyes sparkled sneakily. “You showed so much interest for him that you turned my focus on him – Bruce was the best way to get to you; to make you understand how crummy you are – that I’m so much superior that I could take from you the object of your affection!”
Thor made to storm at him but stopped thoughtful; it was what Loki wanted: enrage him to have his fun but the important thing was to find Bruce.

“How did you manage to capture him?” he asked Strange. “His powers have increased considerably during the last months…”

Loki rolled his eyes and sighed.

“When I found him he was weak” Strange answered, registering the other Avengers and Fury gathering around him curious. “He has lost his divine powers.”

Tony’s eyes sparkled.

“Glad to hear that!” he said and his laser canon on his shoulder was heard loading.

Thor placed his hand on Tony’s shoulder to restrain him.

“How is that possible?” Captain America asked.

Tony shook his head exasperated, annoyed from Captain’s intervention.

“Oh! It’s obvious! The asshole trusted Joker but Joker knew that Loki had used a gas that neutralizes super powers: remember the attack at the Tower?” everyone watching nodded and Tony licked his lips. “Loki hired Crane to do the job and Joker used the mad doctor to get the same gas and use it against its creator. You deserved that, asshole!”

Loki clapped sarcastic.

“Wow! Stark! You have a brain after all; it’s not filled with boobs…”

Thor had to hold Tony’s both arms to stop him. Stephen rolled his eyes on Loki’s last words remembering what he saw in the god’s palace.

Captain America moved forward.

“Where is Bruce?” he asked the question that was boiling in Tony’s and Thor’s minds but the wrath held back.

Tony put his wrath at bay and Thor released him.

“Yeah, screw Loki!” Natasha spat.

Stephen smirked.

“I’m sure he’ll appreciate that…” he remarked with his old irony coloring his baritone voice and he looked lopsided at the kneeled god “judging from his palace he definitely needs some of that…”

Loki arched his eyebrows.

“Is that your professional opinion?” he asked sarcastic but an invisible punch from Thor brandishing his hammer sent him on the floor.

“You busted the motherfucker” Tony said to Dr. Strange with hope and tried to control his impatience “you took Bruce to the Manor?” he asked the wizard who pressed his lips.

Dr. Strange was a doctor and he was used to not chew his words but this time hesitated.
“I’m afraid not” Tony closed his eyes. “When I found Loki, Bruce Wayne wasn’t there. And of course the same goes for that Joker guy.”

Tony’s eyes fell for an instant before he narrowed them; he stormed at the weak god and grabbed him from the lapels lifting him up, the others just realizing that the shield had vanished.

“I guess it wasn’t safe to withdraw the shield yet…” Stephen mumbled dry. “Stark, show some restrain here…”

But Tony wasn’t hearing anything.

“What did you do to Bruce?!” he roared. “Where did you take him?! You bastard! He needs his medication to not lapse! He is vulnerable and you trusted him to Joker?”

Loki gulped.

“I didn’t…I tried to protect him…”

Tony’s grasp became vicious and he gritted his teeth in front of Loki’s face.

“Trapped?! he made a feeble attempt in sniggering but his ire and agony were such that gave up. “You’re a fuckin’ god! And you helped that bastard catch Bruce!”

Thor approached looming over them and Dr. Strange made a step backwards watching with raised eyebrows: maybe now Loki would cut the crap.

“Are you deaf? Or you lost your connection?” Loki’s snarky remarks were cut abruptly when Tony released his one hand to punch him in the nose. “I stopped Joker before…” he hurried to change his tone but he didn’t finish seeing Tony’s teeth emitting sparkles from the grounding. “But the bastard used the gas and weakened me and then threatened to kill me if I wouldn’t order my servants to send them back to Gotham.”

“Gotham?” Tony asked.

Loki licked his lips and nodded nervously.

“I was concealing his presence all this time…”

Thor loomed over him knitting his eyebrows threateningly.

“You’ll give us the location.”

Loki nodded but Tony clenched his lapels.

“Joker isn’t that fool; he won’t go there.”

“I can find him still” Loki said some sweat drops spurting all over his face.

Natasha leaned over him.

“And you better do that…” her thick Russian accent stressed her threatening tone. “You now Hulk? He so much wants to meet the one who was the reason people died!”

Loki gulped.

“I dressed Bruce with Asgardian garments and those clothes have a special aura.”
But Tony heard only till the ‘dressed’.

“Bruce was…NAKED! You sick bastard!” he treated Loki another punch but Thor took his brother from Tony’s hands only to grab Loki from the neck himself.

The blond god was now fuming: the thought of Loki taking revenge on him by violating Bruce made his blood boil.

“What have you done to him?!”

Loki sniggered satisfied but his smirk vanished as soon as he was choked from Thor’s grip; he began coughing.

“Joker tore his clothes but I stopped him before…”

Thor dropped him disgusted on the floor and Captain America hurried to grab Loki from the upper arm. Everyone looked at Tony’s downcast eyes: the billionaire felt hopeless now he heard that Joker had stripped Bruce; he didn’t have any trust to Loki’s words…and whatever happened to Bruce was his fault. The only comfort he had was that back in Gotham they had Quinzel under surveillance so as soon as she went to Joker, they would catch them. He just hoped that it wouldn’t be too late.

“There was another one in the dudgeon when I found Loki” Stephen said “an archer dressed like Robin Hood.”

Tony looked at him interested.

“The Arrow…” he said and pressed his lips; he hadn’t forgotten that the same man had saved Bruce from a double attack just a few days ago.

Fury and Steve lifted Loki between them.

“The sonovabitch will be tried” Fury said his eye sending daggers to Loki.

Tony had turned ready to leave but hearing them glared at the god.

“The only justice he deserves is from my machine gun! Bruce is disabled, you coward bastard! You used your godly powers to attack someone in a wheelchair!” his lips trembled from disgust.

Steve looked at his comrade with understanding.

“He’ll take what he deserves, Tony. Bruce wouldn’t want you to kill him.”

Thor moved forward.

“He must be judged by the Asgard’s high Assembly” he said determined and Fury crooked his mouth.

“Because of him humans died” Natasha said. “And Bruce Wayne was kidnapped and is still missing.”

Thor nodded.

“I know, I know; and I feel you and share your wrath: but he is a god and when the effect of the gas is over no prison could hold him.”

Dr. Strange nodded.
“I concur to that.”

Tony snorted.

“Believe me” Thor looked at each of his comrades separately: they were all baring the marks of the fierce battles of the last twelve hours “I want him punished as much as all of you and even more but the Asgardian Assembly is the best option we have” he brought his fist on his heart. “I give you my word of honor that I’ll seek the most severe punishment for him.”

Tony shook his head disappointed.

“Whatever…” he spat disgruntled, relenting only because finding Bruce was pressing and didn’t want to lose more time “I’ve got more urgent things right now.”

“I’ll come with you” Thor said but Tony not even looked at him.

“Stay here and make sure that the asshole won’t escape…” he retorted and took off getting out of the open wall.

“Lucius, keep close track on Quinzel” he said immediately as he flew rapidly through New York’s sky. “Joker is back in Gotham with Bruce.”

That sour smell was so familiar; so scary that made his body numb… and that taste of copper in his mouth…There was blood near him; and over him, stall blood. His eyes were still shut but he knew that…he could feel the humid atmosphere…he was in that alley and the smell of blood was from his parents’ bodies! His heart clenched and sobs began burning his throat sending tears to his eyes.

No…his mind was screaming in despair. No…

But then as he began waking, the dizziness fogging his mind but not his thinking, Bruce regained his contact with reality. He wasn’t eight years old, he was a man now, free from Falcone and Chill but – his guts formed a knot – captive of Joker.

That copper taste was from the bites Joker made to his lips and that smell of fresh but stall blood was…

He opened his eyes tired; the space was dark and he was lying on a bed with his wrists tied above his head to the rails of the bed. He waited a couple of minutes for his eyes to adjust in order to make out forms but then something screeched and some light came from outside. A light had been turned on outside and came inside from the small window on the top of the door.

That door was opposite the bed, in pristine condition but clearly old – definitely restored; the light from outside rushed in the room as the door opened: and who else would get inside than Joker? A click and dim light filled the room. Joker closed the door behind him and Bruce without showing got his surroundings: it was a hospital room – old hospital room judging by the old fashioned bed.

“Finally, you’re wake, baaaaabe! I think I put more than I should in the rag…aaaaaaaanyway…Oh! I got a sur--prise for you. Dooon’t you like we’re back in Gotham? Ooooooh! That fresh air of Gotham…” he inhaled deeply closing his eyes in delight but immediately his face show disgust and he coughed. “Not sooooo fresh after all…” he shook his head.

Bruce frowned: Joker’s surprises were never nice. As his eyes and his senses got perfect contact with his environment he realized that the smell of blood came from the floor; he cast a lopsided glance there and he let a yell leave his mouth.

Joker jerked startled.

“Eaaaasy, babe…You dooon’t want to give me a heart attack, riiight?” Bruce rolled his eyes inside. “What? Ooooooooh! So you saw my sur--prise…”

On the floor, lay a body in the middle of a pond of blood. Bruce let his body begin shaking and his breath become panting.

Joker lolled his head on the side looking with vast curiosity at his captive and walked towards the body. He grabbed the body from the collar and lifted it to drag in front of Bruce’s face that became death pale. It was a man with deep, grotesque scars digging his cheeks formed from black dried blood; Bruce could see also the dark red gash that almost severed his head.

“He is the idiot who fired at the chemicals and caused the building’s collapse” he said dead serious. “He lived to long – you’re disabled because of him.”

Bruce was keeping his eyes shut trying to control his breath but he knew that Joker’s acid eyes were fixed on his.

“I…I don’t understand. My legs became paralyzed because of the League…they…they hurt me…they beat me too much…”

Joker shook his head nervously.

“Yeah, yeah, yeah…They might have doooooone that but the fella here caused your par—alysis - noooow, baby-bat: how can a bat be so cuuuuuute, uuuu? Now, open your beau--tiful eyes ‘cause daddy Joker has mooooomore surprises – GIFTIES!!”

Bruce’s insides clenched and opened his eyes.

“No…please no…”

“Ooooh, boys!” he called in a singsong voice and the door opened again. “Dooooon’t be shy, babe – after all, daaaaddy Joker took care of your attire.”

And really Bruce registered that he was dressed in – what a surprise! – black pants and a black shirt unbuttoned till the middle of his chest; thankfully, the pouch with the Black Butterfly lay on his chest. Bruce smirked inside: of course, the cunning jester must have suspected that the clothes Loki gave him would emanate a special aura – Superman had told him so when he made him a scene about keeping Thor’s cape: Bruce’s heart hurt in the memory of that night… but he had to focus in the present.

Two goons with clown masks entered the small room carrying a man each: the two men had their heads covered in hoods and their hands were tied back.

“Please, Joker” Bruce whispered “don’t hurt anyone else…”

Joker licked his lips.

“Hush, baby…Wait first to see – you will chaaaaange your mind.”

He whistled to his goons and they took off the hoods revealing two pale men with wet, bruised eyes and dried blood on their faces. Bruce gulped recognizing them: it was Wizzie the president of GTV and Isaac the hacker – he looked Joker in the eyes and shook his head. He understood immediately: Joker wanted to punish them for the video… Images of what the jester had done to Falcone rushed to his mind.

“Please…it wasn’t their fault: let them go – they will be tried.”

Joker squinted.

“Nooooow you’re kidding me, honey…You can’t be sooo forgiving – belieeeeve me, it’s eeeeeextremely un--healthy…an’ they’ll think you of a sucker…trust, daddy…”

He stood and walked towards the shaking men who become weeping.

Joker with slow movements, so much unlike his habits, pulled out of his jacket two blades bare of handle as always. He wanted the men to see them and panic: a new sequence of screaming and begging began.

“No!” Bruce exclaimed and Joker cast him a lopsided stare through his green curls.

“You’re suuuuuuch a kind puppy – we must change that…” his voice became serious.

The two men’s begging became louder and more desperate.

“Please, Joker, don’t kill them” Bruce pleaded with him. “Someone else had the video – police told me. They didn’t do it!”

Joker smiled and Bruce felt his spine getting frozen.

“I’ll find him too, be suuuure, littl’ gem…till then…” he said calm and in a flash of steel a blood avalanche spurted splattering his face; the necks of the two men gaped slashed only a patch of flesh holding the head.

The goons released them to slump on the ground, their dying bodies still twitching. Joker smirked to their bulged crystallized in ultimate terror eyes.

“Noooobody hurts my Brucie…” he said dead serious and then turned to look at Bruce.

Joker narrowed his eyes seeing that his captive had fainted. He lolled his head and stared at him intrigued.

“Take the corpses out and toss them to the junk!” he barked attaching his calling cards on the sticky blood.

He walked slowly to the bed curious watching closely trying to detect if Bruce was acting; he touched his gloved fingers to his neck and watched his breath.
“You’re not pretending, huh? Weeeeell…” he licked his lips. “I’d neeeever expected Batsy to not bear two tiny slashes…yet we should account that you must be exhausted, huh? And tthat chloroform…”

He rummaged the inside pocket of his jacket and eventually dragged out a small vial, uncorked it, took gently Bruce’s head and put the vial under his nose till his captive began stirring and his eyelids moved.

“I was reaaaadty to give you the kiss of life…”

Bruce closed his eyes again, exhausted, disgusted on the idea.

“Why are you doing this to me?” he whispered.

Joker pouted.

“Whaaaa’? Punishing baaaad guys? We are a couple, honey! I’m doing what you do! These people wanted either to become rich or have fun with your suffering…by humiliating you!” he shook his head. “That’s unforgivable, babe…”

Bruce opened his eyes and looked at his captor.

“Stop killing people on my name…” he mumbled scared.

But it was obvious that the Joker was thinking other things from the way he was looking at Bruce. He giggled.

“HEHEHEHEEEE! You wanted to coaaaaax me into believing that the big bad bat can’t stand seeing a smaaaaall slash of necks? Hooooow long you think you can continue the game, huh?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I’m not playing any game…Please let me go…”

Joker waved that off.

“Unless…You’re a…now hooooow shrinks call it? Hm…identity disorder? Two personalities in the same hot body…W—O—W!” he licked his lips. “Then we’ll need the help of a professional to get the truth out of you.”

Bruce widened his eyes.

“What are you…”

Joker didn’t let him speak: captured his lips and sucked him loudly.

“I got you the best, baaaabyy…Daddy will take care of his hooooot bat baby” he said his eyes devouring the part of the chest that the open shirt let exposed.

He put his hands at each upper arm of Bruce and ascended the arm fondling sensually till the bound with handcuffs wrists. Bruce was watching him with dread and Joker smiled to him.

“I know these re--straints are not as good as the ones Lo-loki provided buuuuuuuut if you release yourself from these then you’ll confirm that you’re my Batsy…Aaaan’ you’re disabled: you can’t do anything without your armor.”
His Cheshire devilish smile cracked his face with a triumphant glow.

“I loooove your scared attitude, Batsy, yet I’d like also some fiiiire on my bed…Anyyyyy chance you give up the act an’ fuck with open…” he giggled feigning shyness and coughed “cards?”

Bruce lowered his eyes and Joker patted his cheek.

“No, huh? I must follow the difficult path then?” he sighed and Bruce frowned. “Buuuuut I’ll dooooo it” Joker touched his heart dramatically “because that’s love, huh?”

Bruce took a breath pretending that he was trying to find the courage to say something.

“Jack?” he asked shyly and Joker looked at him pouting.

“Yeeees, Batsy?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I…I’m not he…”

Joker nodded in spastic movements.

“Yadda, yadda…we’ll seeeeeee ’bout that, sweetheart. That was what you wanted to say?”

“No…I…” he huffed “I’m on medication…I need my medicines.”

Joker smiled reassuringly and touched his lips on Bruce’s cheek shucking the flesh loudly.

“Oooooh, babe! Dooooon’t worry…I’ve got looooooads of that for you…”

Bruce frowned but instantly he felt the sting of a needle and his eyes became heavy. Joker showed him the syringe he used and with the other hand the Batarang Batman used to seduce Joker the night he had chased him.

“I treaaaaasure your present, hon…I looove you chose my butt to stick the bat-thing” he pinched Bruce’s cheek “you nau---ghty boy…”

But Bruce’s eyes had already closed dragging him to a deep sleep.

Ironman was seeing Gotham’s skyline approaching. He had already spoken a second time with Lucius to learn any news on Quinzel’s movements.

“Sir.”

“Jarvis, tell me you have good news for once …” he grunted.

“I cannot give you an answer to that, sir; Mister Fury wants to speak to you.”

“Pass him.”

“Tony” Fury’s always determined voice filled Tony’s helmet “Loki gave us Joker’s hideout, the place he had under his concealing spells.”

“I’d be able to see Joker?”
“He says so. Since he has lost his powers his spells are weak too. But to cover every possibility Thor and Dr. Strange are coming.”

Tony snorted.

“I hate magic…” he mumbled “from wherever it may come.”

Fury chuckled.

“Me too but it helps when you have a wizard on your side…”

“Fair point. Give me the location.”

“Chinese Docks, warehouse 113.”

Upon hearing about the Docks, Ironman changed immediately course towards the sea.

No more than two minutes and the smell of salt passed his helmet giving him some relaxing feeling he so much needed. The sun was up and workers were already there stopping their work to look puzzled at Ironman hovering over the area.

Tony could see the warehouse yet there was no trace of human presence there and he didn’t expect differently: the warehouse was visible all this time Loki was helping Joker – it’d be very strange if an entire warehouse suddenly vanished – yet nobody saw Joker or any odd movement. So Tony for the first time couldn’t be sure about the accuracy of his systems’ findings; he couldn’t be positive that indeed Joker and Bruce weren’t there.

Ironman launched a small powered missile to make a hole to the wall and enter. He didn’t land but continued flying exploring the two storey building trying to see what his systems might have failed to see. He was in agony and anger because that stupid spells might be hiding Joker even under his nose.

“Tony!”

He frowned and turned to see Thor and Dr. Strange. Ironman flew to them.

“The spells are still strong” Tony said “I can’t see anything but you can, right?”

Dr. Strange shook his head.

“You can’t see anything because there’s nothing in this building.”

Thor nodded.

“Joker must have expected that Loki would betray his hideout and he didn’t come here.”

Tony was glad he wore his face plate because he wouldn’t like them to see him on the verge of depression. Yet he clenched his jaw: he would find Bruce!

“How about the Asgardian garments?” he asked coldly.

“Dr Strange and I will float over Gotham to find the signals – we’ll find him, Tony.”

“You shouldn’t be guarding that asshole brother of yours?” Tony asked; he had no mood to be interrupted again in his search by Loki’s shenanigans.

“For the time being he is too weak” Dr. Strange said.
“And with Dr. Strange we created a field prison he can’t escape” Thor placed his hand on Tony’s shoulder and looked in his lenses. “This time nothing will stop us, Tony.”

Dr. Strange looked at Ironman.

“You should take some rest, Mr. Stark. We’ll take it from here; rest and then you resume the search.”

Ironman shook his head.

“I’m alright; Bruce is out there suffering because of me…You two look for the garments and I will search with my humble ways: as soon as you find anything call me.”

He took off immediately without waiting.

Thor looked at Dr. Strange.

“He loves too much his friend” he said “he is scared that he might lose him again.”

The wizard nodded.

When Bruce opened his eyes again he was tied in a chair: he looked around. It was certainly a medical lab of old times: at his right stood a big rectangular machine with all sorts of cables attached; it wasn’t difficult for Bruce to figure what this was. It helped a lot seeing the examination table in the center of the room. Only it wasn’t an examination table: it was strange, with straps all over for the arms and legs and a helmet-like thing. He felt a shiver running his spine – a table for electroshock therapy.

Right next to the rectangular old fashioned generator was an old trolley with medical instruments: obsolete syringes, old fashioned bottles of medicine. Everything clean and pristine as if they were still used. He also registered that the chair he was tied was actually a hospital wheelchair of the past.

And then it dawned to Bruce: where Joker had taken him. He was in Arkham Asylum; at the part of the institution which was turned into a museum…He huffed, of course…Quinzel offered the perfect hideout for her favorite patient hiding him right under the police’s nose. Bruce remembered the events before Tony stunned him – the attack at Arkham. Police certainly would have searched the place after so who would suspect that Joker would choose that exact place to hide …

His mind was working fast: Joker had killed three people and who knows how many more he would kill if not stopped. He had to get out of there and stop Joker yet as the jester said getting out of his restraints which Bruce could do, would be an admission that he is Batman. He had to set his plan in motion…Joker should see both the real Batman and Bruce Wayne at the same time.

He looked around: Arkham Asylum. Crane despite the fact he partnered with Joker didn’t divulge his secrets to him – of course, the former doctor was too clever to reveal to Joker the passages that led to Jeremiah Arkham’s underground chambers and from there to the sewers and freedom.

Bruce was already forming the mental map of Gotham’s cave system he had learnt from years of exploring. Crane knew about Arkham’s basement’s connection with the sewers but he didn’t know that under the sewers was an entire world: Bruce’s heart twitched in the memory of the feeling of freedom he got every time he escaped down there…

His caves would serve him this time too…He closed his eyes because he was aware of how difficult if impossible this was and his mind fled to the Water of Immortality: some drops would give him the strength and the healing needed to perform that task…

He inhaled deeply: no, he had to do this the hard way.

Something screeched in the lock and the door opened; with one click the room was cast into light and Bruce shut his eyes blinded.

“Oooooh! Sorry, littl’ gem…” the familiar nasal voice said and a snort from Joker’s side answered him.

Bruce felt joker on him, his hands cupping his face possessively.

“Look whooooom I brought you!”

Bruce opened his eyes cautiously but seeing Joker’s guest a sharp inhale of breath left his lips; Joker drew back startled.

“Whaaa’? I thought you knew our Crany-crow!”

Bruce met the former psychiatrist’s cold, jeering stare and averted his face only for Joker to cup again his face and make him look at him.

“I asked you somethin’…”

Bruce gulped.

“Don’t give me to him, please…” his eyes got wet and Joker lolled his head curious.

“I know he was with the bad people who tortured you buuuuuut daddy won’t let him huuuurt you again.”

“He was giving me drugs…”

“You toooold me you needed your medication…”

Bruce closed his eyes defeated.

“Drugs to damage my brain.”

Joker pouted thoughtful.

“This isn’t toooooo bad, baaaabe. Ask me.”

Crane walked inside stretching his small posture; he brushed the electroshock machine.

“I see even a clown like you can appreciate the beauty of science’s history…”

Joker gaped and scratched his head.

“Naaaaah…It’s just that nobody comes here…HEHEHEHEEEE!”

Crane rolled his eyes.

“This time I’d prefer another kind of treatment for your…darling” he spat. “And since we’re here…” he smirked. “Electroshock can do miracles and combined with psychopharmacology can open every secret door in his brain – because both of us know that there’s more to him.”
Joker yanked his head.

“Shut it, crow! I would never do that to Brucie…It’s tooooooo painful. Besides you’re not here to treat him” he lolled his head on the side and pouted.

Crane frowned.

“Then why you called me?”

Joker giggled.

“This kind of jobs needs stuff an’ doctors need helpers…”

Crane’s glare became dark and his eyebrows knitted.

“You don’t expect me to become the assistant of someone else?”

Joker gave a big nod.

“Oh, yeeees, I dooooon!” he made a dramatic gesture to the door like a show presenter “gentlemen, I present youuuuu…”

The door opened and Bruce inhaled sharply, his hands fisting the armrests.

“Dr. Haaarlequiiiiinn!!!”

Harleen walked inside dressed in her white rob, wearing her eye glasses and carrying her briefcase. Her face didn’t show any trace of being working with a criminal but it was as if she was visiting her patients in a routine shift.

“I’m not working with this ignorant woman!” Crane snapped and marched to the door passing disgusted the young doctor as she placed her briefcase on the trolley.

Joker turned to Bruce shaking his head.

“Occupational competition, huh, precious?” I didn’t believe you a sexist, Crany… An’, yes, you will work with her!” he said in a singsong voice and turned so swiftly that Bruce managed to see the blade launching from his hand only thanks to his training.

Crane astonished felt the force of the blade that passed half an inch from his nose and stabbed the door in front of him. The petit doctor touched his heart to find his cool and turned slowly to Joker.

“That was a threat?”

Joker twitched his eyebrows and rolled his eyes to Bruce jeering the doctor.

“Oh, doctor, the levels of your intelligence makes my eyes tear…” he wiped his left eye and twitched his finger tossing an imaginary tear. “No, you asshole” his voice was sharper than his blade “that was a token of how easy it is for me to kill you! You want me to bring on my resentment for what you did to Brucie?”

Crane licked his lips and inhaled.

“Alright, I’ll help you.”

“Heeeelp meeess?” Joker arched his eyebrows and then waved that off. “Uuuuuu, whatever…”
Quinzel was watching with eyes filled with sarcasm.

Joker turned to Bruce showing with his thump back at Crane.

“As if he has a choice…HEHEHEHEEEEE! But I like his style…”

“I should be the insulted here” Quinzel spat. “I don’t wanna work with a mental case.”

Joker closed his eyes frustrated.

“Geeef a griiiiip, people!” he groaned. “Before my blades wake up…” he gestured demanding to the trolley with Harleen’s briefcase.

Bruce licked his lips that were bleeding as he had bit them reopening Joker’s bites.

“Don’t do that to me, please…”

“It’s for your own good, littl’ gem” he leaned over Bruce’s ear. “Don’t worry…they woooooon’t be here when you’ll do the big revelations: it will stay between us, like every loving couple does.”

Crane walked reluctantly to Harleen who had just opened her briefcase and took out a small vial. He cocked an eyebrow.

“Amytal?” he asked and Bruce felt his spine getting cold.

“Yes, it will lower his defenses and help him speak freely in order to relieve himself from whatever tortures him subconsciously.”

Crane sniggered.

“So…you’re curing him?”

Harleen yanked her head and looked at him crooking her mouth.

“As a working therapist, of course…MY job” she cocked an eyebrow “is to help patients not experimenting on them.”

Crane narrowed his eyes.

“My experiments aimed to help patients too in the long time” Harleen shook her head in disbelief “and I’m way better doctor than you!”

Joker rolled his eyes and turned to them.

“Children! Children! Focus…”

Crane rolled his eyes and looked at the liquid that Quinzel pumped into the syringe.

“Add three ml more – he has a great resistance to drugs.”

Joker looked at Bruce frowned and then nodded.

“Of course…” he said smirking “Harley, doooo as he says: he has experience with Brucie.”

Bruce gulped and some sweat drops appeared over his brow yet inside he was concentrating gathering his mental power as Ra’s had taught him in order to fight off the drug’s effect. He heard Quinzel’s light steps approaching and bit his lips; when she raised his sleeve and disinfected a part of his upper arm Bruce looked her in the eye.

“Please, Dr. Quinzel, don’t do that…you can’t co-operate with Joker.”

She cast a lopsided glance at Joker and smiled.

“But I’m not, Mr. Wayne…I’m merely a hostage like you – I’m just forced to do what he wants. But we can get useful things out of that: your healing will lead to his healing…Imagine that!”

Her eyes sparkled thrilled and Bruce clenched his teeth a second before the needle stabbed his flesh and the liquid was pumped into his vein.

Joker smirked, locking eyes with Bruce; he then yanked his head and looked at his minion doctors.

“Out!” he ordered. “Give us our privacy!”

Harleen’s eyes widened.

“But, Mr. J, I can help…” she protested almost complaining.

“O-U-T! I’m not going to repeat it, Harlequin.”

Crane didn’t need a second word and hurried to leave the room. Harleen however pressed her lips disappointed and left reluctantly.

Joker loomed over Bruce whose eyes began to become blank.

“Just the two of us now, Batsy.”

Catwoman was watching Arkham Asylum from the rooftop of an abandoned building opposite the gothic Manor. She had followed Quinzel from her apartment there and waited for her to leave to meet Joker because Selina was sure that Joker would call his accomplice.

Her face was tight in determination as she gazed the building, standing on the rooftop. There was no fatigue in her body, only a calm resolution.

“Have you anything on Quinzel?” Tony asked Lucius.

“Nothing suspicious, Mr. Stark; she left from her apartment to the Arkham Asylum and she is still there.”

“Thank you, Lucius; I’m over Narrows scanning the area…but nothing.”

“You’ll make it, Mr. Stark.”

But Tony was not so sure; it was almost noon and he had no news from Thor and Dr. Strange. Maybe Loki fooled them saying that the garments would be detected and show the location – the bastard must have something on them to conceal them.

Suddenly, he saw Thor coming to him; his face was grim and Tony already knew.

“We found the garments, Tony…but no trace of Joker or Bruce….”
Ironman gritted his teeth: Joker suspected that the clothes would be easy to detect so he got rid of them either dressing Bruce with common clothes or… Bruce was naked. That made his hair stand on edge and his pulse elevated; he made a sharp U turn rushing to Gotham’s sky.

Thor huffed shaking his head equally discouraged and took off to continue.

His sleep was too heavy, too abnormal yet he felt relieved because he was aware that he hadn’t said anything he didn’t want; at the same time, the sense of urgency became more pressing: he had to get away and realize his plan.

He knew that after the Amytal injection Quinzel at some point injected him with sedative. Though he was still aslee he could tell that they had brought him back to the metallic bed, into the first room. Also, he could feel acid eyes on him and gloved hands rubbing his tied arms.

“Wake up, sweetheart…” the nasal voice breathed in his ear.

“Mr. Stark” Lucius’ collected voice interrupted Tony’s thoughts.

It was afternoon and there wasn’t any development on finding Bruce. In the meantime, as soon as he parted from Thor, Tony found the calm to contact Jim and inform him that Joker was back in Gotham. Hovering over Gotham Tony had seen the police being in constant action looking for the jester.

“What do you have, Lucius?”

“Police have found three bodies in the junkyard.”

Tony halted in midair along with his breath: no, it couldn’t be…

“It is Isaac and Wizzie and one of Joker’s goons” Lucius added hastily sensing the younger man’s agony and understanding his fear.

“Then Joker is indeed here and in action” he spat. “What the cops say?”

“They had Joker cards on them; their necks were almost severed; time of death 6 in the morning. Forensics are trying to find anything about the site of the murders.”

Tony nodded: he was sure that Joker killed them because they hurt Bruce and…Batman. And judging from the man’s cruelty and madness he might have done it in front of Bruce to prove his… love. He wished that police might find something this way.

“Thank you, Lucius.” Hold on, littl’ guy…

Bruce pretended to be asleep for a couple of minutes more but he knew that he couldn’t stay for long that way: Joker might bring Quinzel or Crane to wake him up with more drugs.

His eyelids twitched tiredly and opened but as soon as he saw Joker’s face over him, a gasp left his mouth: he might be pretending yet Joker’s face definitely wasn’t the best sight to wake to…

The room was abundantly lighted and Bruce was grateful that no corpse waited him this time. He gulped and looked at his captor shyly.

Joker touched feathery the stray locks that had stuck on Bruce’s sweaty forehead.

“I loooove your hair like this” he mumbled. “It’s like your untamed nature, huh, Brucie?”

Bruce didn’t answer just let his head loll on the other side of his pillow but Joker took gently his chin and turned him to regain eye contact.

“You’re my Batsy!” he said thrilled. “Sooono resilient to those craaaaazy-drugs – like Daaaaaddy Joker…Ooooh! We’re so much alike! I could say to Harlequin to in--crease the dose buuuuuut I don’t want to cause any damage to your beautiful brain – it’s so much like mine…”

Bruce didn’t like that ‘compliment’ at all.

“Resilient?” he asked feigning puzzlement and Joker rolled his eyes.

“Doooon’t tell me you don’t remember that you didn’t admit the truth?” he narrowed his eyes in disbelief.

Bruce closed his eyes exhausted.

“What truth?” he asked.

Joker brought his face even closer.

“That you are Batman.”

“But I’m not…” Bruce protested tired.

Joker didn’t seem to listen and just caressed Bruce’s cheekbone.

“You know how hard it is to not act my conjugal rights, right here and right now?” he sighed and licked gently Bruce’s cheek. “Back in Loki’s hat I was ready but here, back in our Gotham, I first want you to admit the truth.”

“There is no…”

But Joker cupped violently his cheeks with both hands and gritted his teeth.

“Do you know what male cats do when they want to mate with a cat with kittens?!” he howled and Bruce felt a shiver.

“What do you mean?”

Joker smirked.

“The cat of my dreams decided to adopt a kitten named Dick-y and I want to mate and I’m jealous.”

Bruce’s guts clenched and Joker lolled his head seemingly calm.

“Sooollllll do you know what male cats dooooo?”

Bruce didn’t want to learn but Joker leaned his face over his.

“They kill the littl’ ones…sooo... that the cat couples with them” he whispered and Bruce took in the message.
“No!” he said. “Let the boy alone – he has suffered enough because of you!”

Joker smiled.

“So I can save him once and for all from his misery – reunited him with his family” he twitched his eyebrows emphatically. “Not to mention that you were injured and crippled to save him…soooo he is his fault you’re disabled.”

“That’s not true! Dick has nothing to do with my disability; let him out of this.”

Joker smirked and licked his lips.

“I’m afraid I can’t; he is between us…I thought it much – bullshit! I neeeever think much… - I’ll bring the brat here to punish him for what he has done to you…aaaaand get rid of his annoying preeeeesence in your hooooome.”

“He has done nothing! Leave him alone!”

Joker cocked his eyebrows.

“Are we getting aaaaaangry? HUUUUUHHH! I LIKEY IT! TIME FOR SOME BAT, HUH?!” he growled and Bruce closed his eyes letting his head sink to the pillow. “What are you willing to give me to spaaaare him?”

“Anything…” he whispered “just don’t hurt him – leave him alone.”

Joker leaned above him and nibbled Bruce’s lower lip.

“Mmm? How about sooooooome confessions?”

Bruce opened his eyes and Joker met his gaze.

“Admit you’re Batman…” the jester hissed dead serious.

Bruce lowered his eyes and gulped.

“Ooooor I’ll come out an’ fetch the littl’ brat myself for some playing…”

Bruce raised his eyes.

“No…Okay, okay: I’m…” he gulped pretending that the word couldn’t come out of his mouth “he.”

Joker attached to Bruce’s bottom lip raised his gaze to meet his prisoner’s eyes.

“Saaaaaaay it: I waaaaant to hear it…”

Bruce gulped.

“I’m Batman” he mumbled and Joker pouted skeptical.

“Growl to me, babe: I missed your sexy husky voice…”

Bruce could detect Joker’s skepticism: he believed that Bruce was Batman and he liked that he forced him admit that yet the way Bruce admitted it wasn’t satisfying and the jester had his doubts.

“Growl?” Bruce asked puzzled.
Joker yanked his head grunting and squinted.

“Are you playing me for a fool?” he detached. “Okay, baaabe…I’m off: you’ll stoooop playing when my blade is grazing the bastard’s neck” he was ready to stand.

“No, please!” Bruce exclaimed yanking his head and his torso as much as the restraints permitted. “I’ll do what you want…” Joker lolled his head on the side watching him suspiciously. “Just promise me that you won’t get near the boy ever again” he gave a feigned growl not exactly like Batman’s.

Joker cocked an eyebrow.

“Hm…It’s not exactly…Maybe I should after all…”

But Bruce didn’t have the mood for more threats; he concentrated and looked Joker deep in the eyes as Ra’s had taught him to mesmerize his opponents – his late mentor was thrilled with his student’s effectiveness…

“Naaaaah…Let’s forget the brat” Joker said “there’s so many better things to do, huh, batsy-babe? Noooooow…”

He straddled Bruce and grabbed the shirt’s lapels pulling off all the buttons; the jester’s eyes glimmered seeing the perfectly toned thorax. He pushed the fabric away from Bruce’s body to reveal the entire torso and then he bit his glove in the finger to pull it off doing the same with the other. He placed his palms over Bruce’s breasts and began rubbing moaning.

“Uuuuh! Lala… I’ll never have enough of this…My Batsyyyy baby undeeer me!”

Joker leaned and began nibbling Bruce’s face, every now and then licking greedily yet Bruce put the disgust at bay because he needed to concentrate. Now they were in Gotham he didn’t have to endure this, especially when for the time being he managed to make Joker forget Dick. However he couldn’t trust the jester so it was time for his plan to be in motion.

The jester was sucking Bruce’s ear.

“Noooow that we understand each other, what about giving me what you were giving to Super-Gooofy?” he whispered and licked Bruce’s neck.

“I had nothing with him” Bruce answered in the same un-Batmanish growl.

His captor laughed and shook his index finger.

“I appreciate it that you satisfy my kind request of using growl…although is not exactly…Mmm…I know you were” he licked his lips “expressing your gratitude to the alien – he saved you after all…” he lolled his head. “Do you reckon I owe him?” he waved that off. “Naaaah!”

Joker’s hands were fondling crudely his abs heading lower but Bruce took advantage of the jester’s eyes looking at his face and concentrated his thoughts targeting his energy on his captor’s mind. Bruce knew that Joker wasn’t an easy target for mesmerizing.

The wet hands had slipped under Bruce’s jeans already caressing his genitals when Joker stopped abruptly with a frown.

“Uuuuuuu…I’ve got to…” he frowned puzzled. “I’ve got to speak to Harleen” he dismounted and turned to leave but stopped and looked at Bruce. “Sorry for the disruption, babe, but daddy has to make sure that bad guys won’t find us.”
“You’re not dragging your words…”

Jester laughed.

“Hehe! You see what true loooooove can do?”

Bruce nodded but inside was smirking. As the door closed behind Joker he was sure that Quinzel would bubble Joker enough.

He had already dislocated his thumps so he immediately slipped his hands out of the handcuffs. But for the next step he hesitated: he remembered the last time with Tony when he stood on his feet and his friend stunned him.

“You know that you should not be doing that, Bruce…” his friend repeated.

But Bruce knew that he had to do this. He pressed his lips determined and moved his legs off the bed and to the floor. He closed his eyes to gain focus and began breathing diaphragmatically; the presence of the Black Butterfly felt so encouraging; after two minutes he felt a current running his legs and supported his hands on the bed pushing his body upwards. He stood and walked to the door stumbling a bit; there was nobody outside – Joker didn’t believe that Bruce would try anything.

He cast a last glance to the bed to ensure that everything was as he wanted.

Bruce smiled cunningly: Bruce was sleeping tied on the bed. He knew from the days of his training with Ra’s that his reflection would be there as long as he wished, fooling everybody who would look from the door’s window.

He opened the door and walked supporting his hands on the wall to not burden much his legs. From the time he was studying the Arkham Manor’s blueprints to find Crane’s whereabouts he knew exactly where to go: the secret passage to the basement and from there to the ancient manhole leading to the caves and then out of the Asylum. Neither Crane nor Joker knew that in Gotham’s gut lay a whole world and that Batman was using that labyrinth to his war.

He slipped inside the secret passage on the end of the west wing’s corridor and walked. Although it wasn’t visible Bruce found easily the rusty grating covering the manhole and from there he descended to the sewers; from there wasn’t much distance to the forgotten manhole that led to the caves.

The same feeling of freedom washed his body; it was the exact feeling as when he was flying. He smiled: like a true bat, loving sky and caves the same.

The path to the next manhole leading to the sewers and then to the surface was short and although he wanted to stay longer to his ‘home’ he knew that in this case it was a blessing he didn’t have to cover a longer distance.

He’d need a diversion for his plan and Bruce knew where to find it. Bruce lifted the grating carefully having first listened for any bystanders: thankfully, he knew the area and knew that the tunnel led to an alley.

Catwoman was still watching as the evening covered eerily the Asylum: Quinzel’s car was parked there all the time and Selina had clear view of every entrance of the building so she was sure that the doctor hadn’t left unnoticed.
Quinzel was still inside but the working hours had passed: Catwoman frowned – either she had some work there or she had a very important job there including Joker.

Selina’s heart jolted: they were holding Bruce there. Her eyes glimmered determined and her fists clenched; she was ready to jump from the rooftop and go inside but she felt that someone was watching her.

A red and gold bird was hovering over Gotham’s dark blue sky. Ironman wasn’t going to stop if Bruce wasn’t found. As the hours passed, despair tried to lurk inside his mind yet it only managed to fuel his determination and anger.

“Any news on Quinzel, Lucius?”

“No, Mr. Stark; she is still in the Asylum.”

Tony frowned.

“She should have left the place, right?”

“I’ll check her shift…yes, her shift ended two hours ago.”

Tony’s eyes flashed as his mind made a rapid connection: she didn’t leave to find Joker because Joker was in the Asylum! They had Bruce in there with Quinzel covering the madman. He sped there but he didn’t inform the police because their intervention might warn Joker.

Bruce smiled seeing Catwoman’s lean silhouette standing on the edge watching the Asylum – he knew she was there, he had sensed her presence; her ponytail moved slightly and then his favorite cat turned her head towards him. Her frown gave its place to widened eyes filled with joy. She rushed to him and hugged him kissing his cheeks.

“I knew you would escape!” she exclaimed and detached a bit to scan him.

Her eyes narrowed seeing his open shirt and the dry blood and bruises on his face.

“He hit you! The bastard! I’m gonna..!”

Bruce held her rubbing her upper arms.

“I’m alright – don’t worry” she watched him not persuaded.

“Leslie will say that…”

Bruce shook his head.

“Is Dick alright? Safe?” he was worried that Joker had taken the boy despite his promise.

Selina frowned.

“He is alright, in the Manor; Stark has reinforced the security.”

Bruce discerned her anger for Tony and pressed his lips.
“Now we’ll take you to the Manor” she said “the others will take care of Joker and his girlfriend.”

She frowned again seeing Bruce’s denial.

“No. Batman must do that.”

“That can’t be…Bruce, you can’t stress that more” she gestured to his legs that support his body.

“I must: Sel, Joker must stop believing that Bruce Wayne is Batman.”

“How? Even if Batman tackles him Bruce won’t be there…” suddenly it dawned to her; once Bruce had told her about his ability to create a reflection of himself.

Bruce nodded.

“I need to contact Lucius to bring me my armor and then you must attack them to create a diversion; Joker would definitely try to take Bruce and leave – Batman will find him then.”

Selina bit her bottom lip.

“It’s dangerous, Bruce.”

“The armor will protect me and help me move without exerting myself” he saw his friend’s hesitation and narrowed his eyes. “Sel, I have done more difficult things than that…and you are here with me – there’s nothing to fear.”

She inhaled deeply.

“You know that I hate you?” she said giving him her smart phone.

Bruce smiled and took it.

“Everything will end by this weekend.”

Zucco was looking at Wayne Manor coming closer.

“Why?” Rebecca asked frowned. “The custody hearing is going pretty well and you could win.”

Zucco smirked.

“Something is off, Beccy…Wayne’s lawyer today asked for a postponement and I don’t trust Wayne…Bringing Breizic in the game wasn’t random: that bastard prepares something and I won’t stay to find out.”

She turned her head towards the Manor.

“Is that why you asked from the judge to spend the weekend with your nephew?”

He smirked.

“I’ll get everything and leave with the kid: Wayne is fond of the brat so he won’t dare to chase me to not harm him.”

He stopped the car and ascended the stair to the main entrance.
Alfred opened the door collected as ever not showing anything from the turmoil he was facing. He already knew who the visitor was since he opened the gates for him.

“Good evening” Zucco said. “I came to take Dick for the weekend – I have judge Moot’s permission” he made to pull it from his pocket.

“That won’t be needed, sir: Mr. Collins has informed us. Master Richard is ready.”

He heard the hurried footsteps and turned to see Dick carrying on his shoulder his backpack with everything he needed for the weekend. Alfred knew the boy’s adoration for his uncle yet Dick’s face wasn’t as joyful as he expected.

The butler moved to him.

“Is everything alright, sir?”

Dick met the butler’s eye.

“I don’t feel right leaving now…” he said almost whispering because he knew the secrecy about Bruce’s kidnapping and didn’t want Tony to hear.

Alfred shook his head.

“There is nothing you can do here, Master Richard, and I’m sure that very soon everything will be back to normal. So enjoy your weekend as much as possible.”

Dick smiled.

“You’ll call me for any news?”

Alfred reflected his smile.

“I will, sir.”

Dick walked to his uncle who hugged him one armed.

“Can we go, champ?”

The boy looked back at the Manor and Alfred. He nodded and followed his uncle.

Alfred stood on the doorstep watching as Zucco opened the back door for Dick to enter. The car sped following the lane leading outside the grounds.
“Life returns slowly back to its usual rhythms here at New York’s Downtown 24 hours after the attack that cost the lives of 10 people.”

The camera was zooming to the yellow police tapes that still cordoned the area were the battle took place. The debris was mostly removed but still there were some forgotten ruins reminding the yesterday’s nightmarish scenery.

“S.H.I.E.L.D. and specifically the director of the organization, Mr. Tony Stark, has given the city’s mayor a fund dedicated to the restoration of the damage. The tycoon’s personal assistant, Miss Victoria Potts, had a meeting in the City Hall today with the Mayor discussing the details.”

The image changed to show prerecorded footage from Victoria Potts walking out of the City Hall accompanied by the Mayor himself.

“I’m here today to bring to Mr. Mayor my employer’s, Mr. Stark’s honest regret about what took place yesterday in New York and reassure him that the city will have his funding and technical support to restore all the damage. Also, Mr. Stark authorized me to express his condolences to the families of the people who died at the same attack; Mr. Stark will take care of the immediate needs of the families both of the dead and the injured: S.H.I.E.L.D. and Stark Industries have already established a special fund for the people who suffered from yesterday’s attack.”

“Miss Potts, who was the mastermind behind the attack?”

“Do you expect another attack of this scale?”

Pepper’s face was dead serious exactly as the Mayor’s.

“These questions are more for the S.H.I.E.L.D. to answer so I recommend you stay with the official announcement the organization made.”

“So, no new attack is expected?”

The Mayor turned to the reporter.

“The announcement says exactly that, John.”

“Miss Potts, does Mr. Stark have any explanation for Superman’s absence during the fight?”

The man who was at the dark corner of the bar felt a shiver.

Pepper’s gaze was calm.

“I’m afraid you have to ask Superman. Now I think that we must focus in healing our wounds so no more questions, please.”

Clark had followed there two men whom he suspected to be members of the Intergang – newly recruited from Metropolis’ underworld; he focused on them because the known members had gone below the radar as if the earth had swallowed them.

It was still evening yet they didn’t have any hesitation to be outside especially since they mixed with innocent people in one of Metropolis’ most quiet bars.
He was sure by now that the Intergang was very much alive and kicking gathering forces for ruling Metropolis’ underworld. Actually, the guys Clark followed were met in the bar with two other shady men and Clark was sure that they were recruiting.

“Boss was right” one of the guys whispered to his partner “Superman has lost his grip; he was too afraid even to confront those guys in New York…”

The other chuckled and Clark clenched his jaw enraged.

“I can’t understand why Superman didn’t come to help us” a New Yorker was saying from the built-in TV over the bar. “I thought he cared about us…”

“I’m disappointed…” a woman said on camera. “And sad…my friend was there: if Superman was helping she might be alive now…”

Clark bit his lip and heard again his mother’s words:

“People died waiting and hoping till their last breath Superman to save them…”

His guts suddenly felt twisted; his chest heavy and his heart cold, scared like he never before had felt it. He frowned: no, he recognized that feeling…

Clark saw again himself floating into the dark void with the same cold feeling of having lost everything…that his loved ones was lost forever; himself was lost forever. The loneliness, the despair, the hopelessness…He had felt like this in a dream. But in the dream something lit his darkness, warmed his coldness. He remembered the star that led his way and the warmth when he reached it: the presence of that star took away the despair giving him back hope.

He saw again the star taking the form of a man…Bruce…He saw him again laid before him his beautiful eyes filled with love and happiness.

All of a sudden Clark’s head filled with a familiar strong heart beating, determined as always but tired; he could hear the calm breath…And that calmness filled his own body as well flooding him with a sense of reassurance; knowledge that he wasn’t absorbed by the darkness… That there was a beacon for him.

Clark’s eyes widened realizing that unconsciously he had found Bruce’s vitals as he was doing for months. He felt as wonderful as back then. Clark was tired…He must be exhausted after being fucked by Thor: they were celebrating the Avengers’ victory in New York and Superman’s humiliation. The sniggering voice inside him continued by reminding him how breathtaking Bruce was under the shine of the love making sweat; his eyes’ dazzling glow during his orgasm…Clark felt an irresistible urge to surge at the Manor, beat to a pulp Thor – because Superman could smash all the Avengers together – and claim Bruce…

But then Diana’s eyes came in his mind; her perfume dizzying his senses. He saw Thor under that bridge in New York’s park pinning Bruce to the pillar and thrusting in his body the human begging for more…

He felt the wrath of that day returning like a river of lava: Bruce had betrayed him maybe not by fucking with Thor, at least then, but certainly with his thoughts. Because Clark had seen how he talked with the god. And then Bruce used his knife to hurt him; Clark still had the scar on his upper arm. No, that stupid dream was a product of the influence’s return since Bruce had inoculated him inappropriately in order to make Superman his slave as Ra’s wanted.
Yet now that he had taken the right inoculation Clark could see the truth.

Diana was the true star of his life; the only one that gave him tranquility, love and happiness. He glanced at the screen where more people was whining about Superman not being in New York ignorant of what was really at stake; they were so eager to blame him after everything he was doing for them all these years.

His heart beat faster than usual in anger: Diana was right. Humans were so ungrateful…even Lois and his own mother…He inhaled deeply…no, not Lois and his Ma: they simply didn’t understand but he was sure that in the end they would see the truth as everyone else.

Or…

He didn’t feel the need for them to understand…He didn’t care: all these were only making him tired. He was Kal El: what did he care about the opinion of others? Especially when they were wrong? Only Diana was accepting him for what he was: he knew his worth, his kindness.

He left a bill on the table and stood forgetting the men he was stalking. He needed, he wanted to be back to Diana: his true star; the source of his happiness in this dark and hostile world.

Lois stopped her car. She chose to do so a block away from her target wanting to remain unnoticed. She decided to go on foot to the Arkham Asylum.

Officially, there was nothing but she was a fighting field reporter and her experience of years didn’t let the silence fool her. Since morning she was wandering the city and noticed the movements of police cars seemingly doing routine work but in a clearly frantic way like they were searching for something.

And to confirm her suspicions police announced that they found two bodies: Isaac and Wizze, both of them connected with the case of that horrible video with Bruce. Now who else could have killed them than Joker? So police was in Joker’s traces.

To make matters even clearer Ironman was reported by some news stations being floating over the city…Ironman patrolling Gotham? No, after the attack in New York the reasonable would be to patrol New York…So he had some intelligence on Joker’s whereabouts and he was looking for him and Bruce.

Now, why Arkham Asylum? She asked herself that. Joker could be at any place in city. However her instinct was telling her that the madman would choose the mental institution, maybe because nobody would suspect.

Lois knew how to be discreet in order to not become a hurdle in police operations – not that she saw any police around. She chose to approach through the alleys of the buildings around.

As soon as she had clear view of the gothic, eerie in the evening’s darkness building Lois took out her Smart Phone and shot some pictures. Suddenly, she lowered her phone because something caught her eye.

Lois hurried to the alley opposite and the person that lingered in the shadows saw her with as much surprise as Lois herself.

“What are you doing here?” Lois asked whispering though there wasn’t an obvious danger of being heard.
Vicky Vale rolled her eyes.

“The same with you, darling…”

Lois crossed her arms on the chest and lolled her head. Vicky huffed.

“There’s a bizarre silence in the city matched with some things that caught my attention: police is in frantic action, Tony Stark makes circles over the city looking for something or someone, three corpses were found all of them connected with Joker and the two of them connected with Bruce Wayne as well...let’s see...I think that Joker took advantage of the turbulence after yesterday’s attack at Arkham and cooks something concerning Bruce. And I have sources that informed me that Ironman heads here so Joker must be here. Or something…”

Lois gave a small crooked smile.

“You would be a nice partner…”

Vicky smiled flattered.

“I thought that you were working with Kent.”

Lois cocked her eyebrows, her disappointment clear in his eyes.

“You know how unreliable boys can be…”

“There is something more to this, huh? I mean the situation with Joker…” Vicky said narrowing her eyes.

Lois thought it a second.

“It’s confidential…”

Vicky pouted.

“I think I proved that I am trustworthy.”

Lois nodded.

“Fair point. Yesterday, when Arkham Asylum was breached Joker attacked Wayne Manor and abducted Bruce.”

Vicky pressed her lips.

“How much more has this man to suffer?” she narrowed her eyes pouting “Hm. By the way, did Bruce have an affair with Superman? You must know” but seeing Lois’ glare Vicky crooked her mouth. “Oh!” She chuckled “job’s habit... Ugh! And this Joker guy…”

Lois remembered the interview Vicky had with Jack Napier aka the Joker and then the hostage situation in Gotham’s Opera.

“You had many experiences with him.”

Her colleague cocked her eyebrows.

“Yeah...I had the...pleasure…” she chuckled and turned towards the building. “What are we doing now?”
Lois leaned her back to the wall letting the darkness of the evening swallow her.

“Wait…”

Batman came out of the small cavity behind the natural arch created from stalactites and stalagmites under the street leading to Arkham; Catwoman stood from the flat rock formation in the right. Lucius was already standing looking calm as ever but thoughtful the imposing stature of Gotham’s vigilante. It was obvious that underneath his composure a huge battle was taking place inside the loyal scientist; a big doubt about what he was helping to happen.

Batman’s hand on his shoulder felt reassuring.

“Everything is going to be fine” Batman said to him with conviction. “You and Tony equipped me with all the safety I need.”

Lucius met Batman’s eyes which weren’t covered yet from the lenses; the so familiar sapphire-emerald eyes seemed so different under the hue of iron determination.

“I sure hope so…” Lucius replied avoiding using his employer’s name.

The caves were the safest place in Gotham yet Lucius still didn’t feel okay using his employer’s name addressing Batman.

“You better leave now” Batman said to him. “Things might get nasty and I’ll feel better if you are in a safe distance. Thank you for everything.”

Lucius nodded. Bruce knew that his loyal scientist had no problem finding his way in the caves since he had come himself there; during his youth Lucius loved spelunking so he knew enough about the cave system and Bruce’s diagrams made it even easier to navigate.

“Good luck” he said and walked towards the exit of the cavity that led to a natural corridor and then to the manhole for the sewers; he stopped and turned to them. “Be careful, you two.”

“We will” Catwoman answered with a small smile and Lucius walked out.

Batman waited for a couple of minutes for Lucius to cover enough distance; the scientist had left his car quite afar from the Asylum and followed the underground route to the meeting point so that even if someone who knew his car or him saw either no suspicions would be raised about Lucius involvement in what was going to happen.

Catwoman looked in her friend’s eyes.

“It’s time?” she asked and Batman replied with a nod.

He rubbed her upper arms.

“Don’t worry…”

Catwoman cocked an eyebrow and crooked her mouth.

“That’s impossible, sweetie…”

Batman gave a small grin and activated his eye lenses.
“How do you know that Joker hasn’t already returned to your cell and touched the reflection realizing the trick?” Selina said as they walked to the opposite direction from the one Lucius had taken.

“Remember that time at the Haven’s reception?”

She rolled her eyes.

“How can I forget such glorious moments?” she remarked snarky and Batman crooked his mouth.

“Remember how I dazzled the goon to not betray us?” she nodded. “I did the same with Joker sending him to Quinzel and knowing her, she will keep him busy enough time for you to attack. But to be sure…”

He pressed a hidden button in his armor’s forearm part and a neon green diagram of the Asylum emerged in the humid darkness of the cave.

“Quinzel said to them where to dwell to avoid the security cameras and the footage from the cameras in the museum section give the same image of the facilities all the time – good thing we can use satellite feeding to cross the dots indicating human presence with image…” he ‘touched’ the museum section part of the diagram and images of the goons guarding the halls appeared in succession.

“Cool…” she said.

“And this” he showed the room at the far right part of the museum “is where they hold Bruce…” he pointed at the spot there and Catwoman shook her head.

“Impressive! It gives a signal as if a presence it’s there…”

“But it is…only it’s not an exact presence. And it is only one so Joker hasn’t returned.”

They inspected the museum section’s zoomed diagram since the jester wouldn’t leave that area because the rest of the Asylum was normally monitored.

“They can be here.”

Catwoman showed a room where two dots where inside and Bruce ‘touched’ that part to get image: Joker was speaking with Quinzel.

“And they are quite far from my cell” Batman said.

“Let’s go” Catwoman gritted her teeth. “I can’t wait to kick some ass!”

Tony had stood on a rooftop some yards from Arkham; he was watching inside his helmet Arkham Asylum’s diagram and sequential footage from the security cameras. He wanted his movements to be precise in order to not give space to Joker to hurt Bruce or use him as a shield to escape.

“Jarvis, I want every image you can get from the Asylum” he was sure that the jester was inside the Asylum with Quinzel’s protection yet there was nothing suspicious coming from the building.

He pressed his lips and cursed.

“You have every available data from the Arkham Asylum, sir.”
“There must be something more, Jarvis… I know Joker and Bruce are there: they can’t be invisible!” suddenly something flashed into his mind. “Jarvis, give me all the data Bruce has on Crane – focus on those regarding the Asylum.”

A flood of data began water falling in front of his eyes and Tony was happy for his ability to read fast. In the data Bruce had about Crane, there was a diagram of the Manor. Tony frowned and noticed how his friend had marked some spots…

“That’s it! That’s how Crane escaped from the Asylum: Arkham had secret passages to the basement and from there he had built paths connected with the sewers. Crane used that passages and since he is cooperating with Joker then that is how he got inside unnoticed. On the other side, from what Bruce told me Crane wasn’t going to trust his secrets to Joker so the madman got inside otherwise… Damn! That doesn’t help… No! Joker doesn’t know about the passages.”

He perused again the footage from the cameras and reaching those from the museum section something was off.

“Jarvis, give me the footage from the security cameras in the museum section from the last 12 hours.”

He focused on the footage. He didn’t want to lose any detail.

“Bingo!” he was right: definitely something was off. “Compare every frame.”

“The frames are exactly the same, sir.”

Tony smirked and nodded.

“The bastards!”

They had fed the cameras with the same footage for the last 12 hours and given the fact that the museum section had no traffic at all, nobody would have come upon some clowns wandering there.

“Joker is in the museum section: give me footage from every available satellite.”

Catwoman slithered in the dark corridors of the Museum section of the Arkham Asylum. She along with Batman entered the building through the secret passage which Bruce used to get out; they didn’t came from another part of the building because they didn’t want cameras to capture them and the cameras in the Museum Area was frozen to the same image.

She knew exactly where each clown-goon was guarding and where to hit for Joker to hear.

Two goons with clown masks stood on the two sides of the corridor holding firearms ready to open fire. She smirked and followed the direction that led behind them; worry was biting her insides about Bruce’s condition and his risky plan yet she would do what they agreed in order to end all of this and her friend return to safety as soon as possible.

She approached more and heard the guys mumbling nonsense sure that nobody would come there. So they were completely astonished when something fell on their backs. Catwoman could have knocked them out at once yet the plan was for them to create fuss so Joker would hear and come.

With the force she fell on their backs the goons collapsed on the floor and in normal conditions Selina would have neutralized them before they could blink an eye yet now she waited for them to stand. Of course, rolling her eyes for their clumsy movements…
Her leg rose to kick the one’s nose making him scream while her hand jerked slapping the second goon in the face sending him to the wall.

“We got an intruder!!” the second yelled as Catwoman elbowed the first one knocking him out.

“Mr. J, I think you should detach from Bruce Wayne: your fixation with him is clear that holds you back from healing.”

Joker rolled his eyes and smirked, hearing about healing: why healing? He was perfect.

“What? You don’t listen to me, right?” the psychiatrist asked frowning. “I want the best for you and this man only damages you. You should trust me: after all I’m risking everything for you…”

Joker scanned the room: a large space with cases and shelves carrying old fashioned bottles, needles, books and other equipment. Harlequin’s rant was actually amusing even though it last for almost half an hour.

“You risked every—thing, daaarling, ‘cause you wanted toooooo. ‘Cause you knoooow that I can giiiiive you experiences that no---body else can. Soooooo don’t bitch ‘bout that…” he lolled his head on the side.

“You shouldn’t have kicked me out when Wayne got the amytal – I could have helped! I could have helped you! But you care only for that stupid brat!”

Calling Bruce ‘stupid’ was unacceptable. Joker raised his hand and slapped her in the face.

“You don’t get to speak like this for him!” he yelled.

Harleen still dressed in her white robe held her cheek shocked but with the same shiver like that time Joker hit her during his escape.

Joker lolled his head interested.

“Don’t tell me you didn’t liiiiiike thaaaaat?”

She made to retort something but something about an intruder was heard and then a shot. Joker rushed to the door.

The goon who yelled pointed his firearm at Catwoman shooting but she jumped and fell on him taking the weapon off his hand and hitting him in the head with the stock.

She heard footsteps running there and grinned: the decoy worked. Five goons were coming at her and she jumped to avoid their bullets; with two back flips she landed behind them rushing immediately on them kicking the butts of the two closer to her and sending them to crush on the others.

“Whooooo fired?! You idiots!”

“Sir, gunshots are coming from the corridor A1 in the Museum Section.”
“I know, Jarvis” Ironman was feet from the building and his systems kept them constantly updated.

He could see that a figure was engaged in battle with the goons; enabling image with the satellites’ help he saw Catwoman beating Joker’s goons.

His eyes shone determined.

“I’m coming, honey…” he said and smashed a window to enter the building.

Selina turned to see what they had hoped: Joker hearing the unwanted fuss left Quinzel and ran to see what was going on. She dodged a second before the blade found her forehead; the corridor was only half lit yet her lenses gave enough visibility.

“Ooooooh! Myyyyy favorite Kitty! What now? Doooooo you have a loony boyfriend an’ you’re afraid for his safety?”

Catwoman smiled.

“No; but Gotham deserves better humor than yours” she winked and stormed at him wanting more than anything to graze his neck to death but having to stick to the plan.

“Soory, love…I’m Gotham’s best enter---tainer…Get her…” he pushed two of the goons who were following him and made frantic gestures to the rest coming to charge at her.

He watched eagerly as his goons attacked Catwoman but she effortlessly avoided them answering with punches and back kicks. A goon that after a kick had landed flat on the floor grabbed his shotgun that lay near him and pointed at her ready to fire. Joker sent a blade finding his palm and the clown looked at his boss.

“No, bullets, you dooork! We dooon’t want police here!” he conjured a blade and launched it at Catwoman’s back who was engaged in punching two thugs at once.

“No, fast, asshole!” the blade was instantly turned into dust as a yellow beam struck it.

Joker smirked; he knew that voice.

“Starky, m’ booooooy!” he stretched his arms in a welcoming gesture. “At last!”

Selina stood regarding Ironman ready to fire at Joker: that would ruin Bruce’s plans but certainly it could be a solution.

Joker looked at the loaded cannon on Ironman’s wrist and lolled his head in the side.

“Noooooow…that’s not toooooo polite, isn’t it?”

“What’s Bruce?” he asked but then snorted. “Never mind I’ll find him myself…”

Joker knew that the cannon was ready to fire yet his Cheshire smile was bigger than ever. Selina wanted to stop Tony but speaking would suspect Joker on Bruce’s plan and she wasn’t sure that didn’t prefer Tony’s solution.

Suddenly, Ironman was shaken by what felt like hundred thunders at once starting from his waist; he slumped on one knee.
“The high electricity voltage caused a disruption on your systems, sir” Jarvis gave the immediate evaluation.

“Thanks, Jarvis…” Tony spat disgruntled and turned his head back.

Quinzel dressed still in her white robe was holding one of the guards’ Taser guns. She was smirking and pressed the button charging the weapon to hit again.

“Thaaaat for my destroyed baby blade!” Joker yelled. “Giv’ him one more, Harlequin!”

“Gladly, Mr. J!” the doctor answered with a gleeful shine in her eyes and stormed at the fallen hero.

Only to be tumbled by Catwoman who kicked the Taser off her hand and dragged her to the floor slapping her face.

Joker giggled.

“Wooo--hoooo! Laaaaadies fight! You should thank me, Starky: I know you looooove these shows… But now I’ve got to gooooooo!”

He began running turning the curve of the corridor; Tony even though his armor hadn’t regained its full operational capacity jumped onto his feet and followed him.

But upon turning the curve the jester was nowhere to be seen and Tony growled but immediately set his scanners to locate him.

“Systems can’t locate him, sir.”

“You’re always so informative, Jarvis” he remarked snidely.

Tony shook his head: it seemed that Crane had informed his ally about the secret passages and those led to parts of the building that were built with such materials that blocked his systems. Thankfully, Tony had Bruce’s map with the passages so it wasn’t difficult to find the one that Joker used to disappear. It was pitch black but Ironman’s lenses permitted him to see around.

He set his systems to track Joker since now he was inside the passages so the materials shouldn’t block the signals. However there was no trace of the jester.

“Damn!” he spat and continued walking.

Joker giggled as he came out from the big, built-in cabinet: Harlequin had said to him that that antique cabinet was made from materials that blocked most systems. He had listened carefully before emerging to be sure that Stark was gone. The jester hopped at the corridor of the Museum Area heading to the old hospital room where he had Bruce.

“Heheheheheee… If thaaaaat Starky believed that he could catch me… he is mooooore stupid than I thought.” He regarded thoughtful the old cabinet “I aaaaalways loved hide an’ seeeeeek! Now let’s give them sooooomething other to play while I make my leave…”

He delved into the inside pocket of his jacket and pulled out a thing like a remote control.

“That thingy is tooooo much fun: let us freeeeeee the loooooonies to plaaaaayyyyy…Toooo bad I won’t be here to play…”

He pressed the key that Quinzel had said that unlocked the high security section with the most dangerous criminals. He raised his index finger and pressed graciously half closing his eyes waiting to hear the sound of yells and riot.

“Commissioner!” Rene Montoya said to Jim Gordon who was talking with one police officer reporting on the developments of their research.

They were in the Narrows ready to move to another part of the city as soon as Gordon got informed by his people. The Commissioner turned to his Detective.

“Gunshots are heard from Arkham!”

“Again?” Jim exclaimed and hurried to his patrol car with Montoya. “All the available units there!” he spat simultaneously to the police officers there and to the cars’ radio.

Joker’s delighted expression became a deep frown as nothing was heard.

“Eeeeek! The saaaaame disgusting silence…” he shook the gadget and tried pressing the buttons again but still nothing.

Joker and Quinzel didn’t know about the extra security measures that automatically locked the high security section and the area with the doctors’ offices in case of an attack. Batman had taken care of activating it the moment he returned in the building.

Joker pressed once again the button and in the end waved that off pissed tossing the gadget over his shoulder.

“Neeeeeever mind…I have my own fun…”

“Not so fast.”

Joker rolled his eyes exasperated.

“Another oneeee?” he giggled. “Ooooooh…it geeets annoyingly fuuuuuny!”

Thor walked towards him with Mjolnir clenched in his hand emanating blue sparkles as much as his eyes.

“Maybe you were too hasty to get rid of divine protection?” the blond spat, his face distorted in rage.

Joker crooked his mouth and lolled his head.

“You meeeeeean your black haired ass-hole brother? He was booooring after a while an’ trying to mesh with me an’ my baby…Me an’ Brucie are sooooo much better after that Lo-locki was off…”

Thor frowned.

“Lead me to Bruce and pray he is alright!”

Joker leaned his head.

“Pray toooooo whom? ‘Cause lately sooooo many gods have joined us that I’m con--fused… Heheheheheheheeeeee!”
Thor clenched his jaw, his teeth gritting; he was in so much agony about Bruce and that man was fooling him.

“Shut up and do what I say!”

Joker rolled his eyes.

“That’s why I don’t like gods…” he mumbled matter-of-factly and crooked his mouth “an’ neither my friend…”

Thor felt a spray on his face coming from back and immediately it dawned to him: the gas depriving of special powers. Suddenly, Mjolnir felt too heavy for his hand and slipped to the floor; Thor’s eyes widened as a lean, short guy with a sack over his head came in front of him joining Joker who giggled.

“I always wanted to study panic reaction to gods” the guy with the sack hissed and Joker giggled worse.

“I loooooooove your fixation, Crowy! An’ I aaaaalways wanted to take that hammer an’ explore its potential…”

“No!” Thor yelled and made a step forwards though his legs felt too heavy; he wouldn’t let that madman take his weapon.

But as Joker reached Mjolnir a current hit him tossing him backwards.

“Hehehehehee! It cooooomes with security system, huh? Maybe if his master is in panic that thingy will change attitude?”

Thor understood as the guy with the sack approached him raising his hand, protruding his wrist where he had a leather bracelet where a spray can was attached.

“I don’t think so, buddy” a bass baritone cracked the silence and Crane was tossed away by a blue wave.

Joker turned there.

“Uuuuuuuuu! C-G-I! I loooooooove it!” he made to grab the hammer but Thor made a dive, caught Joker’s legs and dragged the jester away.

The powerless god punched the jester who giggled.

“You suuuuuurely are path--etic without your god powers, huh?” he kicked Thor off of him and stormed at the hammer only to hit on a green barrier.

“I hate magic!” he spat nasally glaring at Stephen Strange who turned his hands at him ready to hit him.

But then Scarecrow fell on him spraying him with the gas he had on his wrist.

“No!” the doctor screamed feeling the earth moving away and the ground coming at him rapidly. He was again in his Lamborgini as the car fell from the steep cliff; death was coming rapidly at him along with pain. Excruciating pain…

Joker giggled but didn’t try to get the hammer because the shield was still holding.
“Bye, children” he said and ran to the corridor towards Bruce’s room.

He was only some feet away when a figure blocked the corridor. A man dressed in dark green with a hood covering his face and two blazing eyes burning his opponent. His bow was in his hands and the string was stretched ready to send a thick arrow to Joker.

“I should have killed you that day…” Arrow said ice cold.

Joker shook his head and cocked his eyebrows.

“Yeah…but I’m too cuuuuute, huh? By the way” he narrowed his eyes “this place suddenly became tooooo crammed, don’t you think, Robin of Loxley? Huhuhu! We’re the doooope – est costume party in toooown! Yuumuuuuupyyyyyyyy! Sigh! Only Batsy isn’t in the party but he couldn’t join us, huh?”

Suddenly, he threw something at the Arrow and the corridor was cast in thick smoke; the arrow from the bow launched to hit the place where Joker was.

But the jester was already on the door to Bruce’s room; the archer turned to stop Joker but before he even registered the motion he felt a sharp sting in his upper arm and instantly his legs bent and he fell on the floor, his eyes shutting rapidly.

Joker bent his elbow in a gesture of triumph.

“Nooooobody gets between me and Batsy, heheheheee! I’m coooooming, hon!” he stormed at the handle to open, his eyes looking through the door’s window; a smile cracked his white face. “Here’s Batsy, sleepin’ like a real baby – uuuuuuu…” he opened the door ready to burst inside. “Time to leeeeeeaaave” he said in a singsong voice.

Lois’ eyes widened as police sirens filled suddenly the area. Vicky laughed.

“We were right then!”

A convoy of police cars stormed in the Asylum’s yard and officers raid the building.

Lois began taking photos and Vicky dragged her closer.

“Let’s go!” she said to the reporter from Metropolis and both ran to the Asylum taking advantage of the turbulence to slip inside.

Zucco’s house was at the outskirts of Gotham not far from the Narrows. It was a sole house, small with a cared little garden.

“It’s not Wayne Manor” he had said patting Dick’s shoulder when they arrived.

“It’s great” Dick had replied.

But since then the boy sat on the gray sofa of the living room in front of the large TV watching, keeping his tablet all the time on his lap.

Rebecca brought a dish with cupcakes and placed it on the coffee table in front of the boy.
“I hope it’s how you like them” she said with a sweet smile and Dick looked at her almost surprised.

“Thanks…” he said absentminded “they look really yummy…”

The woman met Zucco’s gaze; the man was sitting on an armchair at the right of the couch staring at his nephew and finally stood gesturing to his wife with the eyes to leave him alone.

He sat beside Dick and wrapped his arm around the boy’s shoulders.

“Are you alright, champ?” he asked worried. “If you preferred staying in the Manor I’d understand.”

Dick shook his head regretting his stance.

“No, not at all…I’m glad I’m here. Yet…I” he felt the urge to tell his uncle about Wayne’s kidnapping but stopped “I just wait for something…”

Suddenly, an ad played on TV. It was for the polymorphic tablet made by Wayne Enterprises: the Cosmos. Dick’s eyes were fixed there and then at his own tablet.

Zucco smirked understanding the boy’s realization.

“Wayne tried to buy your sympathy” he said. “To present himself as kind and caring. But you’re not from the naïve children who are bought with fancy toys.”

Dick nodded.

“No, I’m not.”

“That’s my boy!” the adult patted the boy’s back. “Well, we have only two and a half days so what would you say if we spend them in the best possible way and not shut in here?”

Rebecca walked to them.

“I’m not staying inside at Friday night…”

Dick looked indecisive and his uncle smiled.

“You’ll have your tablet all the time with you to see what you’re waiting for…What do you say, champ? Do you want us to have our first outing as a true family?”

Dick smiled forgetting for the first time the grim emotions of the last 24 hours; only Hero’s sad eyes when he was leaving still haunted him. The boy nodded and Zucco stood taking him along.

“I have big plans for the night, champ!”

“Definitely he has…” Rebecca added.

Tony stepped out from the passage in front of him. He had located a room in the far end of the corridor with one lone figure lying on the bed; he knew it was Bruce and hurried his steps.

“Sir, that presence in the room gives odd signs.”

Tony pressed his lips and continued with agony biting his insides.

“I know, Jarvis; who knows what Joker did to him…”
As he took the curve to the corridor to Bruce’s room he noticed that not far from him, three people were just before the room. One unconscious and two others.

“What now?” he spat and activated the boost for more speed.

“Not so fast, Joker…”

The jester’s eyes widened in shock: he knew that growl; it was the perfect growl coming from the other end of the corridor and not from the room where he was seeing Bruce. He lolled his head on the side.

“That it can’t be…” he turned slowly and snapped his fingers around his head to check his hearing. “Nooooooope, my ears are fine…”

Batman walked slowly towards him imposing as ever; his lips in a tight line.

“It can’t beecee… it can’t beecee…” Joker shook his index finger to Batman. “Hallucinations are nooooot part of my CV.”

And then the jester frowned with a shine in his acid eyes.

“I kneeeooowwww… You’re another hologram, huh? Like thoooooose fooling the bad guys.”

Batman didn’t reply just jolted upwards and in a flash fell on the jester punching him in the mouth. Joker pouted thoughtful.

“Naaaah… I guess you’re nooooot, huh? Sooooooo Bruuuuuucie isn’t…?!”

“Doooon’t get maaaad but I thought he was youuuuu… buuuuut he is paralyzed an’ you’re here an’ he is there… an’ I’m ooout of order…” he giggled hysterically.

Batman had had enough; he gave him a flat hit in the neck, in the spot of the instant knock out. Joker felt slipping rapidly into unconsciousness and fixed his eyes on Batman’s cowl.

“I can have myyyyy threesomeeee…” he mumbled and feigned.

“Batman?” Tony’s eyes behind the lenses were bulged not believing the sight in front of him: Batman had knocked out Joker and at the same time Bruce was lying inside that room…

It was obvious to the billionaire that his friend was using some of his unique skills - he wondered how many things he ignored about Bruce - and of course Lucius brought him the armor.

Batman turned and looked at Ironman. He stood and locked artificial stares with his friend.

The Arrow stirred and stood stumbling; Bruce frowning at the speed of his recovery from the sedative Joker obviously used to neutralize him. The archer looked at Batman and the shadow of his hood hid his surprise.

“Batman…” his voice didn’t indicate any astonishment and Bruce who knew that the Arrow was aware of his secret identity smirked for his skill. “Is Bruce Wayne alright?”

“Sleeping…” Batman answered with his own poker face; maybe tonight he had managed to disperse the suspicions of both Joker and Queen. “Ironman can take his friend to his home” he said looking pointedly at Ironman who nodded. “I think you should let him with his friend” he turned to Arrow who nodded.

“My job here is done” the archer answered and turned to the direction leading away.

Sirens were heard from outside and Batman looked at Ironman.

“Inform the police that you’re leaving with Bruce…nobody must see you…” he said.

“I…” Tony mumbled uncomfortable but Batman nodded and left dragging Joker behind him by the collar.

---

The Ancient One was stabbed…She was badly injured…The blood was spurting from her body…they had to hurry...

The nightmarish, horrible, enormous creature was barking threats at him and then pain…More pain that he had ever felt...

Kaecilius was winning; he had to stop him but he was losing; he frantically conjured every source he could to fight him back but he was sniggering...

Catwoman had arrived just on time to help Thor who struggled to stop Crane who attacked him ready to gas him with the fear toxin; Scarecrow laid on the floor unconscious but now the blond god held her down stopping her from trying to tackling Dr. Strange who was erect sending multicolored beams around blowing parts of the walls.

Batman heard the commotion and hurried dragging Joker along; he frowned registering the sight before him: a man in a burgundy cape was launching beams that had been demolishing parts of the walls and the ceiling.

The man was standing but writhing in agony, his face contorted in what Batman knew was terror and pain.

Seeing Scarecrow unconscious Batman understood that the caped man had been sprayed with his fear toxin. His eyes behind the lenses widened seeing Catwoman and Thor slumped on the floor, at the niche of the wall. The god didn’t hold his hammer only tried to stop Catwoman from attacking the man. It was obvious that Crane had applied to Thor his weakening gas.

First, he had to neutralize the panicked man before he hit someone or himself. Nobody had seen him yet so he sent a sedative Batarang at the writhing man knocking him out instantly; then he left the shadows approaching slowly and leaving the unconscious jester on the floor.

Lois and Vicky were running to the corridors of the Asylum not knowing where they were going but following the police officers. At some point, they lost the officers and just followed the sounds of battle.

Suddenly, both women stood awestruck seeing Batman coming out of the shadows proud and strong.

“Is this…?” Lois whispered awed.

“Batman!” Vicky completed for her and set her smart phone into videotaping shooting the legendary hero.

Catwoman’s eyes widened in relief but Thor’s were filled with surprise, awe and worry.

The police officers were coming running with Gordon on the head. The Commissioner gestured to them to lower their guns seeing that Batman had cleared the area and sent them to handcuff Crane and Joker.

Batman approached Catwoman and Thor and without a word he pulled out of a compartment in his utility zone a tiny needle.

“All right?” he said in his husky voice to Thor’s astonished eyes.

Bruce after the attack at the Avengers’ Tower had packed his utility belt with antidotes to the gases the attackers had used. He had always with him the antidote to the gas weakening super powered beings because he was afraid that Superman could be attacked again. It came handy with Thor.

The god offered his bulging upper arm with trust and Batman administered the antidote. He turned to the unconscious unknown man as Thor began to regain his powers. The first thing the god did was to grab Mjolnir and feel its energy vibrating inside him.

Catwoman followed Batman as he kneeled above the man.

“Who is he?” he asked.

“I don’t know but from the fireworks he made probably a wizard…”

“He is Dr. Strange” Thor replied having come to them. “He is with me.”

Jim approached too as his officers handcuffed Joker.

“Crane’s fear toxin” the Commissioner spat.

Batman nodded and pulled another cased mini syringe and stabbed it to the man’s thigh. He stood and turned to Thor.

“When the sedative’s effect is over he’ll wake up without any side effect from the toxin.”

Thor nodded, his eyes looking fascinating at the vigilant.

“I’ll take care of him.”

Batman didn’t answer just turned towards the shadows from where he came and vanished; Catwoman gave an impressive backwards flip that made the officers goggle at her and landed several feet away behind them; she turned her head graciously to them smiling.

“You’ll find a certain Dr. Quinzel unconscious in the corridor to the right: she was helping Joker. Bye, boys and girls!”
She turned her head and crossed the way to the main building walking sensually.

Alfred’s eyes widened in relief and happiness seeing Batman rushing into the cave on the bike he had borrowed from Catwoman. However it was Hero that first ran to his human, climbing on him to leak his exposed chin as soon as the bike stopped next to the Tumbler.

Batman caressed the kitten and walked to his butler who was already coming to him pushing his wheelchair along.

“Master Bruce…”

Batman let Hero perched on his chest and removed his cowl.

“Alfred. How did you know I was coming?” he patted the man’s shoulder smiling.

“Master Anthony called me. Leslie is coming, sir” he told to him looking with dread at the young man’s legs that supported his body.

Bruce pressed his lips understanding the older man’s fear.

“I had to do it, Alfred: there was no other way.”

The butler closed his eyes and shook his head.

“I know, sir; but now please sit…”

Bruce looked at the chair hesitating and in the end though he didn’t want Batman sitting there, he did it placing Hero on his lap and still holding his cowl.

“Dick and Jason were in the Arkham during the attack – Joker didn’t get them but are the boys alright?”

“They are just fine, sir; actually two hours ago Mr. Zucco took Dick for the weekend.”

Bruce jolted to his legs and looked at his butler.

“What?” he grabbed Hero to not fall from his sudden movement.

Alfred’s eyes filled with worry seeing his young master’s distress.

“He had Judge Moot’s approval, sir. Mr. Collins told me that he had the right to spend some time with his nephew…”

Bruce closed his eyes for a fraction of the second and then gave Hero to Alfred taking his cowl.

“Zucco is up to something” he said and turned towards the Tumbler.

Alfred touched Batman’s upper arm and Bruce stopped before wearing again his cowl. His eyes filled with warmth seeing Alfred’s worry.

“Master Bruce, if I may, you shouldn’t go out right now” he licked his lips. “You are exhausted, sir; you are…”

Bruce looked him determined and patted his upper arm.
“Fine” he completed for him “I’m perfectly fine, Alfred.”

He smiled to his butler and wore his cowl. Alfred hugged the kitten close to his chest seeing his young master leaving.

“Be careful, Master Bruce” he whispered.
Dick was slumped on the back seat of Zucco’s gray BMW; he had his tablet on his lap and scrolled endlessly news sites perusing with blank eyes.

Zucco was driving but simultaneously was casting sideways glances at the driver’s mirror to see what his nephew was doing. He was frowned and at some point his eyes met with Rebecca’s who was sitting next to him, exchanging silently impressions; the woman crooked her mouth and Zucco twitched his eyebrows.

The ring of an incoming call made Dick jerk although he was anxiously waiting for that; Zucco glanced pointedly at Rebecca and she rolled her eyes.

“Alfred?”

“Master Richard, I’m happy to inform you that everything is alright. Master Bruce is safely back.”

The boy nodded.

“Thanks, Alfred.”

“I hope that this will help you enjoy your weekend, sir.”

“It will, Alfred. Good night.”

“Have a lovely night, Master Richard.”

Dick ended the call with a relieved expression over his face.

“Goods news, dear?” Rebecca asked.

“Yeah…” he inhaled deeply and turned his gaze outside the window where the peaceful setting of Gotham’s outskirts was stretched under the evening’s colors and the public lights.

Zucco smiled broadly.

“Great, champ! Now we can enjoy our weekend!”

Dick didn’t know that Mall; it wasn’t in Downtown but it was big with a lot of people going inside or leaving carrying bags with brands’ names.

Zucco parked the car at the underground parking of the Mall and they embarked the lift upwards.

Dick was looking around: it was definitely less big and impressive than the Comet Mall they had gone with Wayne but he liked it; especially, since he was with Tony. His sentiments towards Wayne might have changed a bit yet Dick still wanted to be around his uncle – he was his connection with his late father.

“Well, it’s not as glamorous as the places Wayne gets you…” Tony mumbled light hearted as if he had read Dick’s mind.

Dick shook his head affronted.

“No, it’s cool! I’ll call Jay to come too…”
Zucco grinned.

“Mmm…how about spending the night as a family and tomorrow inviting Jay home?”

The boy shrugged.

“Fine.”

Rebecca took them to a vast store with clothes and insisted on buying Dick some expensive jeans despite the boy’s objections.

“Let your aunt do what she wanted so long” Zucco patted him. “She was ranting about meeting you.”

Rebecca smiled to him.

“Unless you don’t like it” she pointed to a model of jeans trousers “so we can buy something else.”

Dick shook his head and his eyes sparkled.

“Not at all! I wanted these trousers the moment I saw them but…it’s too expensive.”

Rebecca kissed him in the cheek.

“Don’t think about it, Dick; it’s my first gift to my nephew after all.”

“Okay…” Dick grinned.

Rebecca seemed very pleased when she gave her card to the cashier.

“Hey, champ” Zucco said as they walked to the corridors among the various shops and the bubbling people. “Are you any good at bowling?” he gestured with his head to a great bowling hall. “Or I’m going to teach you a lesson?”

Dick laughed.

“A lesson? I don’t think so…I’m awesome-ly good.”

“We’ll see about that” Zucco made an inviting gesture towards the hall. “I warn you: I’m a champion.”

Dick cackled.

“Which century?” he cocked an eyebrow and ran inside.

The Tumbler was moving in stealth mode through Gotham’s dark streets; Batman had set it in auto pilot because he was perusing data on the car’s control panel.

He had already made his research on Zucco before Joker kidnapped him so his house’s address was known. However he didn’t head there because the signal from Dick’s tablet wasn’t in that area; instead his current location was in the district’s Mall so for the time being the boy was safe. But that wasn’t reassuring: Zucco was up to something so Bruce knew he had to keep his eyes open.

But it was difficult even if he didn’t want to admit it. His body felt really exhausted and sleep seemed... so tempting. Joker kept him sedated for some hours but that sleep seemed to have tired him instead of giving him some rest.

He clenched his jaw; it wasn’t the first time he had fatigue to face so he just buried that in a deep corner of his mind and forget it as he always did. Dick was in danger and that was the only thing that mattered.

“I won’t ever forget the way you were laughing, Beccy” Zucco shook his index finger mock warningly to his wife and she laughed again.

After a game of bowling that didn’t last long they ended up in the Mall’s McDonald’s. Dick was eating his Mc Burger chuckling.

“You must have been champion many decades ago…” the boy crooked his mouth amused and Rebecca smirked.

Dick had defeated rather easily his uncle.

“It’s just that I haven’t practiced for long…” Zucco commented waving that off. “Next time I won’t spare you…”

The boy took a big sip from his soda and twitched his eyebrows.

“I can teach you some tricks…” he mumbled teasingly.

Rebecca patted the boy’s back.

“Yeah, you do that; it will save him from new humiliation…” she chuckled again.

Zucco leaned towards Dick and locked eyes with him.

“For that we’ll need more time together.”

Dick nodded.

Zucco’s expression changed into dead seriousness.

“Unless, you’ve changed your mind about me becoming your guardian.”

The boy frowned almost offended; he shook his head.

“Of course not, Tony! What are you talking about?”

The man smiled innocently and glanced at his wife.

“Lately I detect that your feelings for Wayne have changed” he pressed his lips. “I feel that you have become fond of him.”

Dick closed his eyes.

“Now that is…” Zucco prompted him with the eyes. “I… I just feel bad for the things that happen to him lately…but I still want to live with you instead of him. You are my uncle, my dad’s best friend: definitely want you for my guardian.”
Zucco smiled satisfied and Rebecca did the same.

“Thank you, champ” he said touched. “This means a lot to me.”

Dick shrugged.

“Is simply how I feel, Tony.”

After they finished their meal they walked back to the parking to return home. Dick was happy both for the jeans he got and the good time he had with his uncle and aunt and because Wayne was safe from Joker.

“Do you want radio?” Zucco asked on their way back to the house and Dick shook his head in the negative.

Suddenly, the car stopped and Dick looked outside.

“We’re going somewhere else?” he asked.

His uncle smiled.

“It’s something I got to do, Dick. Come with me” Rebecca nodded.

The signal from Dick’s tablet stopped and Bruce touched the screen on the Tumbler’s control panel to get a detailed map of the area. He pressed his lips: of course…

A 24h branch of Gotham’s General Bank was located where the signal was. Bruce knew what Zucco wanted.

Dick shrugged and jumped out of the back seat to his waiting uncle. They walked to the opposite sidewalk and Dick read the illuminated sign over the store: it was a bank branch.

Zucco squatted before him and held his shoulders.

“You trust me, champ?” he asked locking eyes with the boy.

Dick smiled.

“You gotta ask?”

Zucco’s eyes flashed.

“Just don’t say anything in there, okay?”

Dick didn’t understand but he nodded. He thought that Tony wanted to withdraw some money for the weekend although he didn’t understand why he wanted him along.

Zucco pressed the special button for the door of the branch to open and walked straight to one of the clerks who shook hands with him and showed them the chairs before his desk to sit.

“How can I help you?” the man asked smiling.

“My name is Tony Zucco and I’m the legal guardian of Richard Grayson.”
Dick was startled from that but didn’t speak; he trusted his uncle.

“There is an account on my ward’s name and I need to withdraw all the money.”

Dick almost choked in his own saliva but he managed to keep his eyes from bulging.

“May I have the number of the account?”

Zucco grinned.

“Certainly” he put his hand in the inside pocket of his black leather jacket and gave a paper to the clerk.

Dick frowned but kept an indifferent face to not create a problem to his uncle. But inside his head a storm was raging: where had his uncle taken all this information? And why he did care so much about his account?

The clerk began typing and then stopped thoughtful; Zucco frowned.

“Is anything wrong?”

“No…it’s just that this is a special account; first of all, the amount is too big.”

Zucco pressed his lips.

“We can’t withdraw them all?”

Dick’s insides clenched more as the time passed: all this fuss about the money and his uncle’s lie didn’t stand right to him.

“You can…However this account has two owners” he gestured to the boy smiling. “Richard Grayson and his guardian.”

Zucco nodded.

“And I am his guardian” he pulled out of the same pocket a formal looking paper and handed it to the clerk.

Dick’s eyes widened a bit catching a glimpse of the signature on the bottom of the paper: it was the same with the signature he had seen on the paper with the permission given to Tony to take him for the weekend – Judge Moot’s signature and next to this a stamp. The boy was sure that both of them weren’t real.

Cold sweat began flooding the boy’s body: Tony had forged the Judge’s signature and the stamp to take the money… He felt dizzy but didn’t speak; Tony’s face was completely calm as if nothing was wrong. As if he had done such things again so it wasn’t a novelty for him.

The clerk after a thorough reading of the paper nodded. He stood and walked to another desk, spoke to a woman and see unlocked the small safe on the file cabinet to her right. The first clerk returned with POS like gadget the woman had given to him.

Dick saw with the corner of his eyes Tony’s slight frown; obviously, he expected something else.

The clerk sat and placed the gadget on the desk.

“This account as I told you is a special type of account; you can make any withdraw you want but
Mr. Grayson's and his guardian's thump print and iris are necessary. Mr. Grayson, if you please…” the man said politely to the boy and Dick leaned there.

He placed his thump on the gadget and then his eye on the special place. Inside he was trembling but he managed to keep his cool. A green light beeped and the word ‘MATCH’ appeared on the small rectangular screen. Zucco smiled.

But when the adult followed the same procedure the light was red and ‘NO MATCH’ flashed on the screen.

“I don’t understand” Zucco said. “I’m Richard’s legal guardian and the handler of his money.”

The man pressed his lips.

“I’m sorry but I told you that this is a special account.”

Zucco’s tranquil mask cracked and he shook his head huffing.

“I presented you all the paperwork.”

The clerk pressed his lips.

“I’m sorry but we are obliged to stick with the terms set for the account.”

Zucco ruffled his hair.

“And whose fingertip and iris are accepted?”

The clerk typed some orders on his keyboard.

“Ms. Melanie F. Turner.”

Zucco’s fist clenched but the clerk didn’t see it. He jerked his hands upwards chuckling exasperated.

“But Ms. Turner has disappeared nearly three months ago and I have now Richard’s guardianship.”

The clerk shook his head.

“I’m sorry but nothing has changed in the terms of the account; without Ms. Turner’s approval no money can be withdrawn.”

Zucco frowned. It was clear to Dick that he was cursing inside.

“What if she is dead?” Dick’s eyes widened hearing that so coldly from his uncle: he didn’t have many hopes about his granny but hearing it so blatantly made him shiver. “Richard won’t be able to have access to his money?”

The man knitted his fingers on the desk.

“There must be an official declaration of her being deceased and then the nature of the account will be changed but till then Richard must rely on his guardian’s money. Of course, till he turns eighteen.”

Zucco nodded.

“I see…” he inhaled deeply and looked at his nephew whose eyes were blank having heard so many times about his granny being dead. “Well, thank you very much” he stood and the clerk did the same.

The two adults shook hands.

“I’m sorry I couldn’t help you” he said but Zucco waved that off although Dick could say that he was pissed beyond words.

“It doesn’t matter; what matters is Dick’s happiness, right, champ?” he patted the boy in the back giving him the signal to stand. “Good night.”

As they returned to the car Zucco had his arm wrapped around Dick’s shoulders. However his expression was grim.

“Why you had to do that?” Dick whispered.

“For you, Dick: we must leave Gotham and this money belongs to you and will secure your future.”

“But…”

Zucco looked around.

“Get in the car, Dick; we’ll discuss it back in the house.”

Dick looked forward to get back to tell Tony his mind about what happened but at the same time hoped against hope that his uncle’s explanations would change that hollow, dreadful feeling in him.

Rebecca looked at Zucco just as he entered and the look he gave her it was enough for her to understand. So the road back was in complete, icy silence.

As soon as the signal began moving Batman followed them. He knew the outcome of Zucco’s visit to the bank. The bank branch had maximum security even soundproof building yet it wasn’t a match for Tumbler’s systems.

Batman had a smirk on his face during Zucco’s exchange with the bank clerk: definitely, Zucco didn’t expect that and Bruce could imagine how pissed he must be, struggling to contain his wrath. Yet that was dangerous for Dick so he had his senses in high alert.

His insides were clenched: as he could imagine Zucco’s wrath, he could also feel the boy’s disappointment; puzzlement; upset…And he felt so sad…

Zucco parked his BMW outside the house’s small yard, in front of the pavement. It was obvious that the man hadn’t any mood to drive further to the houses’ garage.

Dick grabbed his backpack feeling his tablet at the front case; he was tempted to call Alfred to drive him back. He hopped out of the car: no, he wasn’t going to give up on his uncle till he heard his explanation.

As soon as they got in the living room Dick couldn’t hold anymore himself. He couldn’t even sit down so he stood holding absent minded his backpack.

“You forged Judge Moot’s signature and the stamp! This is illegal.”
Zucco clenched his waist with both hands and looked at his nephew; Rebecca slumped in an armchair.

“No, kidding!” he retorted cocking his eyebrows but then realized the hurt expression of his nephew and changed his attitude. “I had to do this, Dick.”

“Why?”

“Because I really want you as my ward. And the money is yours and must be used to make you happy.”

Dick lolled his head.

“But you can win the guardianship in the court – I don’t get it.”

Zucco squatted and held the boy’s upper arm.

“Wayne has bought the judge to win the guardianship.”

Dick shook his head.

“No, I don’t believe that.”

Rebecca snorted and Zucco laughed.

“So I was right” the adult man remarked snidely “he bought you.”

Dick jerked in his hands.

“No, he didn’t! I just know that he wouldn’t have done it. After all, if he had done that the judge wouldn’t have forced him to see a shrink…”

Zucco crooked his mouth.

“But, Tony, you made an offense; they’ll catch you and we’ll never be a family.”

Zucco let him and ruffled his hair.

“No, they won’t; it’s why I wanted the money: to get you and Rebecca away. And still we will leave Gotham.”

Dick pressed his lips; he was in agony because what his uncle just did would result in him in jail and them apart forever.

“You can’t hide: they will find us. And…I don’t wanna leave Gotham – what if granny returns and doesn’t find me?”

Zucco sniggered.

“We both know that she won’t ever return, Dick” he saw the boy’s face falling. “There is nothing to keep you here, champ. I wait one phone call and we are gone!”

Dick pouted: he wanted to be with Tony…well, after what happened he was confused; something cracked inside him yet he still had faith in him. But he wasn’t ready to leave the city: he had Jason…his training…he had his family’s graves… He licked his dry lips. He made to say something but Zucco’s smart phone rang and the man raised his index finger indicating to the boy to hush.
Rebecca stood from the armchair eager to hear.

“Tell me, Stan” Zucco said to the one who called.

He was nodding and gradually the nods gave their place to a nasty frown.

“Okay, thanks, man” he said in the end finishing the call.

Zucco threw his smart phone to the table, slapped his face and drag his hands slowly to ruffle his hair half huffing and half growling. Rebecca walked to him with narrowed eyes.

Dick’s clenched guts began twisting watching the two adults.

“What happened?” Rebecca demanded.

Zucco bit his lips.

“Everything was ready for the apartment to be sold but the purchase was blocked” Rebecca narrowed her eyes and Zucco nodded nervously. “Turner’s signature is necessary here too no matter who’s the guardian.”

Dick till now thought that Tony was selling some apartment of his but hearing his granny’s name and about the guardian he realized that his uncle tried to sell his granny’s apartment. He turned his puzzled eyes on Zucco.

“You were selling granny’s apartment?!”

Zucco ruffled more his hair; his eyes were different than Dick had ever seen them: almost evil, mocking and pissed. The man was clearly bored of having to answer his questions.

Rebecca turned to Dick with a jeering expression.

“That apartment isn’t your granny’s” Zucco spat “it’s in your name like the money. I wanted to sell it to…” he inhaled and rolled his eyes not even trying to make believable what he was to say “make your life better now we were going to leave Gotham” he said dryly as if citing something rehearsed many times.

Rebecca rolled her eyes.

“But obviously Wayne had everything prepared…” she hissed.

“I don’t get what he has to do with all this” Dick said. “The money is my father’s and the apartment…” Zucco snorted chuckling causing Dick’s frown. “And…” he suddenly remembered the day Wayne bought him Christmas’ presents “that thing with the account…that it needs my granny’s fingerprint to open it’s not true. Wayne had taken money from there to buy me things.”

Now Zucco burst out in laughter: cold, dry, evil laughter. Dick gaped at him gulping uncomfortable.

“Tony, why are you laughing like this? I don’t like it” his voice was half annoyed and half hurt.

Rebecca crossed her arms over the chest and cocked an eyebrow. She lolled her head on the side to look at Zucco.

“He doesn’t like it!” she mocked Dick’s voice.

Zucco stopped laughing and walked to Dick; he met the boy’s eyes.
“Are you really that dump, kid?” he asked in a voice so different than what Dick was used to.

“I…”

Zucco yanked his head backwards and exchanged looks with his wife.

“That apartment and the money in that bank account is Wayne’s! You moron!”

Dick’s eyes widened and Zucco sniggered amused.

“Oh, kid! You’re so stupid, like your father!”

Dick gritted his teeth and clenched more the handle of his backpack.

“Don’t speak like that about my father!”

“But it’s true, kiddo! Really you believed that the money was John’s?” he laughed. “He died completely broke…”

Dick’s heart gave a jolt; the room immediately became dark.

“But…”

Zucco leaned to him with a mocking expression.

“Buuuuuuut…” he mocked the boy’s voice. “After your family’s murders Wayne bought that apartment in your name and created a fund of 500,000 dollars for you. Either from pity or real concern, who knows? But he didn’t let Turner tell you…This is the reason your granny gave him your guardianship. Hearing about the apartment and the money I immediately suspected that the rich brat had endowed you – you see, John died penniless – and then I saw the tablet: a never before seen gadget, clearly expensive, and I was sure: Wayne took you under his wings without you suspecting even though you loathed him.”

Dick tried to digest what he was hearing. So what his granny and Jay were telling to him about Zucco was true? His uncle never cared about him and wanted only Wayne’s money?

“You returned for the money?” he asked in a sunk voice.

Zucco stretched his arms to the air.

“What else, kiddo? You were so stupid to believe that I really cared for you? After 13 years of indifference?” he shook his head exasperated.

“So you claimed my guardianship only because you wanted the money?”

Zucco rolled his eyes exasperated.

“Of course! But that sneaky bastard Wayne had settled thing so that I couldn’t take the money – I underestimated that brat!”

Dick suddenly remembered his backpack that stayed in his hands neglected; in his puzzlement he remembered his Cosmos tablet in the front case that was touched to his belly hiding his hand: the gadget had a recording app; he sneaked his hand unnoticed and touched the spot to activate it.

“And you used in the court what I told you about Wayne’s breakdown for that…”
Rebecca rolled her eyes snorting.

“Your nephew is really stupid” she said to Zucco.

And he sniggered.

“He is like his father; of course I used that precious info to defeat that bastard. I didn’t tell you because you, like your father, wouldn’t have done what was necessary. Like you’d have never let me use the Judge’s forged signature: it was easy to forge his signature and stamp from the paper allowing me to get you for the weekend.”

Dick shook his head; the discussion he had with his granny came to his mind – it seemed like ages ago. She had hinted that Zucco had slipped secretly drugs in his father’s water to enhance his performance – his father loathed drugs so Zucco did it without John knowing; but he must have suspected his cousin because he asked from Mr. Breizic to be again his trainer. Till now Dick didn’t even think the possibility of Tony having done something bad to his father but now…it seemed possible.

“Like the drugs in my father’s drinks?” he demanded.

Zucco shook his head smiling almost like deranged. He cast a sideways glance at his wife who was smirking.

“He has some brain after all...” he said. “The idiot was getting old and his performance was becoming lousy” he smiled. “But...he liked to put the blame on me so I slipped something in his isotonic drinks to make him satisfied. I didn’t tell him because he wasn’t going to accept it. In the end, the Federation caught him and...once again it was my fault: he didn’t say it clearly but I could see it in his eyes...and he brought back that other asshole, Breizic. Don’t tell me that that dirty old scumbag didn’t tell you: I’m sure Wayne hired him exactly for that – to turn you against me.”

Dick lowered his head; everything inside him was a bitter, prickling void: the man he trusted so much, for whom he had quarreled with his granny and Jayson; this man he believed that connected him with his late father. Tony was a big lie; he only wanted Wayne’s money...

“Don’t speak for my father like this!” he said again glaring at Zucco. “You’re not worthy to speak his name!” Zucco laughed. “I want to return to the Manor” Dick said determined “enough.”

Zucco leaned over him.

“That’s for me to decide, kid!” he gritted his teeth. “And no, you’re not returning to the Manor” Dick frowned feeling his spine freezing. “After all, you hate that place, remember?” Zucco lollled his head on the side. “And especially Wayne. He is the reason for all your misfortunes, remember?” he cocked an eyebrow. “It’s your own words... Oh! How many times you brought me to the verge of giggles when you spoke about him. But I have to admit that that old cow Turner got me” he shook his head. “I didn’t expect her to have persuade Wayne to take your guardianship.”

Dick remembered his granny; his sweet granny and her fear about the same man he was defending causing her so much sadness. Suddenly, missing his granny became more torturous than before.

“You’re planning to ‘disappear’ me like you did with my granny?” he asked trying to keep his calm though he was really scared. “You have done something bad to her, huh?”

Zucco locked eyes with the boy and shook his head.

“Nah...Unfortunately, someone got me to that too but let’s hope that the one who did it did a good job!"

“You sonovabitch!” Dick forgot his fear of the man who now revealed himself to be a complete stranger and stormed at him letting his backpack drop on the floor: he had enough of him speaking bad about his father not his granny too.

Zucco was startled from the boy’s kick in his shin but managed to grab the boy’s hands and heave him so that their faces were close.

“Enough! I had enough of you, littl’ shit! Behave or I’m gonna break your face!”

Batman had turned on the high range microphones from the moment Zucco, Dick, and Rebecca got inside. He was hearing carefully recruiting all his training in tranquility to keep his agony at bay; his eyes fixed on the house’s diagram on his control panel.

His jaw clenched listening to their exchange and when Zucco and his wife began leering at the boy Batman had to struggle with himself to rush inside and beat Zucco to a pulp: he had used the boy; he had done so much damage to him and now he mocked the boy as well.

It would be so easy to get inside and finish this yet he knew he had to wait; however he got out of the Tumbler and through the shadows he slipped closer.

His eyes widened…

Rebecca smirked.

“He need some of that…he is a spoiled brat!”

“Take yar filthy hands off ‘im, ya asshole!”

The low window behind them smashed and someone jumped in. Both Zucco and Rebecca turned startled to see, but Dick knew already who was.

Zucco rolled his eyes seeing the sight.

“You have to be kidding me! The Todd brat!” he laughed.

But then Jason smirked and brought his hand in front of him pointing the handgun he was holding at Zucco.

“Jay!” Dick’s face was radiant. “How did you find me?”

“Ya forgot ya sent me a SMS to come tomorrow morning here? Ya gave me the address, remember? Well, I didn’t trust that asshole so I came to keep an eye…Let Dick go, NOW! Ya motherfucker!”

Zucco smirked.

“You believe that you are a tough guy, huh, littl’ seed and you like guns, huh?” he lifted Dick more and grabbed his hair yanking his head to the side.

Dick moaned and Jason’s eyes widened, his finger twitching in the trigger but afraid he might hit his friend.
Batman saw Jason breaking the window and entering the house; he knew that the boy was ready to do something foolish because his night vision enabled him to see the handgun Jason was holding.

Now he had to act fast and cautious…

Zucco and Rebecca laughed with the boy’s hesitation.

“What now, big guy?” Rebecca mocked him with cocked eyebrows. “You lost your balls?”

“Exactly, you dumbass!” Zucco said. “If you shoot you’re gonna kill yar buddy! Now, toss your gun to Rebecca or I’m breaking his neck!” he yanked more Dick’s head.

“No, Jay” Dick said but his voice was caught by a shriek as his neck was stretched crudely.

“Okay, okay!” Jason shouted. “Ya asshole!” he obeyed but he tossed the gun in such a way that hit Rebecca in the face.

Zucco gritted his teeth.

“You littl’ punk!”

“Ya said to toss it…” the boy shrugged smirking. “Ya didna say how…”

Rebecca turned to Zucco; her nose was bleeding.

“I’m fine, Tony” she took the gun and pointed it at Jason. “Can I shoot now the littl’ shit?”

Jason crooked his lips.

“Says the big turd!” he spat at her face.

Dick cast a sideways glance at his backpack on the floor hoping that Wayne had the insight to have some surveillance in the tablet to locate them but then he got hopeless: Wayne must be sleeping in his soft bed after everything with Joker and…he wasn’t Batman anyway.

“No, darling” Zucco answered. “It’s better if it is again an accident…”

“Again?” Dick asked frowned, new clouds covering the room and his soul.

Zucco laughed and pulled more on the boy’s hair.

“Yeah… Graysons usually die by accident…” he cackled.

Suddenly, it dawned to Dick and the realization was as if a thunder had hit him.

“You…my father’s death wasn’t an accident?!” he felt his brain being on fire and his breath stopping more than from Zucco’s grip.

Zucco had had enough of all of this and now that he couldn’t take the money he had no reason to insult the boy and lie. After all, he was going to get rid of the brats and he’d enjoy so much the littl’ bastard’s expression.

“You father lost all his savings investing in a company” he said clearly satisfied for the chance to say it to the boy. “A company I suggested to him…but dear John was a lousy loser: he was all the time whining envious that I hadn’t lost anything from the same investment- and how I was to lose?
The company was mine!”

Rebecca chuckled.

“The doping scandal made him even worse to bear and he hired back Breizic undermining me…
Now that wasn’t good…rumors were already spread making speculations about the reason of Grayson’s disgruntlement; and to add to this I discovered that your daddy had gathered others who lost their money and was investigating the case. Well, that was too much…”

Dick was listening without breathing and Jason was frowned.

“And you killed him” Jayson spat what Dick couldn’t.

“The gym’s renovation was the best chance I had. A newly established company” he cocked his eyebrows bragging “well, I have a knack with businesses… my company made the best offer and took the job… from there it was easy for Rebecca, a professional engineer, to set in the Horizontal Bar the tampered bolt. I knew your father’s program perfectly so I damaged the bolt so that with the most difficult exercises the bar would be moved slightly but enough for him to not manage to grab again the bar after the grand jump. You can’t imagine my joy seeing him crashing down – the cushions weren’t the best after the renovation…It was Falcone’s era so police had better things to do than the death of a gymnast even if he was an Olympic Champion – after all, shit does happen. So the case closed as an accident; no charges was pressed against the company – but even if were nobody could connect me with the company. I was free to enjoy my money away from that shithole…yet the money at some point gets fewer and then I heard about the murders of my cousin’s ex wife and her family. Wayne’s name was mentioned along so I sniffed fat money and decided to have a look.”

“You murderer!” Dick shouted and began thrashing in Zucco’s hands who made his grip harder till the boy was forced to stop.

Zucco looked at Rebecca.

“We leave now! Enough with this city” his wife nodded. “And we’ll clean our business with the brats…”

He let Dick stand on his feet but grabbed his upper arm and made a sharp move with his head for Rebecca to walk; she put the hand that held the weapon inside her pocket in case someone curious was looking but kept it pointed to Jason indicating to him to move.

“Move!” Zucco ordered the boys who looked at each other shaken: they knew what was waiting them following Zucco.

The room became dark. Zucco looked around him frantically.

“Tony?” Rebecca asked.

“Damnit!” he cursed and tightened his grip on the boy.

Dick knew what that meant and his heart gave for the first time tonight a happy jolt. So when Rebecca shrieked and Zucco jerked surprised he kicked Zucco’s leg with all his might and anger and ran forward where he remembered that Jason was.

A thud was heard where Rebecca stood and Zucco staggered in the darkness there; he realized that she was unconscious and as his hand was feeling her neck he was cut by a sharp edge: something like a bat… Zucco’s eyes bulged and jerked upwards a second before another Batarang managed to hit him.

The sound was deafening; debris fell all over covering the darkness with dusty mist.

Zucco realizing that Batman was there took the gun his wife had in her pocket and turned it towards the place where the sound had come. But before he pulled the trigger a black ghost fell on him punching the gun away and him in the face.

Dick and Jason crawled to the broken window but a moment before jumping outside Dick stopped.

“We can’t leave him alone” he whispered to his friend.

“It’s pitch black, ya dick! Only the Bat can see…”

Dick pressed a button of his wrist watch and light as if from a strong flash light filled their corner. Jason rolled his eyes.

“Another geek gift from Wayne?”

“Let’s go! Zucco is sneaky…”

Batman’s kick had sent Zucco to the wall; he was slumped down, yet as light broke the darkness he saw his jacket thrown on the back of the armchair. Batman rushed on him stopping his effort and hit him in the neck to knock him down yet the cunning man managed to escape only by millimeters and used the tree-like hat stand to hit Batman in the back.

Zucco was pleasantly surprised hearing the vigilante’s grunt and taking advantage of his momentary weakness he slipped away grabbing his gun from his jacket’s pocket.

Bruce heard the sound of loading and having isolated the pain turned around ready to storm at Zucco.

But then the light came closer and Dick with Jason stormed at Zucco.

“Dick, Jason, No!” Batman yelled as Zucco turned the gun to the boys instead.

Batman clenched his jaw and jumped feeling his back protesting but ignoring that. The only thing he could hear was the bullet leaving the gun and the boys’ halted breaths.

The only thing Dick could think as the bang fell like thunder was that he drove Jason to his death; at least, if someone was to die, let it be himself.

But then a force fell on both of them dragging them to the floor under a considerable weight.

Bruce felt the heavy impact as if a sledgehammer had hit his waist and the pain on his back got worse so much so that his breath stopped for a second as he felt his legs paralyzing. At least, the boys were alright.

In front of Dick’s eyes a moment from months ago passed, when Batman once again tossed him away to not be crashed under the collapsing roof. Batman was trapped under the debris instead.

“Leave…” Batman growled to them and turned to launch a cable from his wrist to Zucco’s wrist sending the gun away.
Jason dragged Dick away.

“Let’s call the cops” the younger boy said out of breath to his friend who was looking with blank eyes at the fallen Batman.

Zucco might have lost the gun but jolted to his legs encouraged by Batman’s fall and ran casting a fleeting glance at Rebecca.

“Sorry, babe…You’ll stall me.”

However he didn’t manage to make a couple of feet when Batman launched a Batarang to stab Zucco’s leg. Bruce couldn’t gather yet the mind power to erase the pain and the paralysis to stand so he used other ways.

Zucco grabbed the chair over him and tossed it to Batman. He grabbed the Batarang and pulled it off his leg. He was happy that at least it wasn’t with sedative and he crawled outside to avoid new attacks.

Once outside he stood.

Tony still in Ironman’s armor was speaking with Jim in the waiting room outside his office at MCU. He had to tell the police that he took Bruce in the Manor and his friend was sleeping as Tony hoped was the truth.

“Finally, Mr. Wayne will get some rest” the Commissioner mumbled and Tony nodded.

Also, Tony wanted to be sure that every security measure was taken so that Joker and his allies were properly detained so he was listening eagerly to Jim giving orders to his officers.

Which was no easy thing since there was too much fuss in the space as the evidence from the operation at Arkham was reported and the phones were constantly ringing from calls wanting details for various news outlets.

Tony saw Bullock running to Gordon.

“Gunshots at Jenner and Bell street; on the South Channel Island.”

Gordon frowned and Tony knew the reason.

“Near Tony Zucco’s house” he said and Commissioner nodded.

“Inform Montoya.”

Tony felt a twitch in his guts and was glad that Bruce and even that brat Grayson were back in the Manor probably not knowing anything.

Batman felt the presence before hearing anything. The almost inaudible sound and the warm and beloved body kneeled next to him. Their eyes locked immediately.

“No!” Catwoman mumbled and touched his jaw.
After the Arkham, she had gone to the Manor to make sure that Bruce was alright. But upon arriving in the cave still in Catwoman’s suit she saw that the Tumbler was gone and realized that Batman was out again. She ran to take the lift to ask Alfred but the butler was already getting there with the lift.

The cave’s security system had alerted him. She learnt from Alfred what happened and she knew that her friend would be at Zucco’s house.

She had just arrived when he heard the gunshot so she climbed on the roof and seeing the hole there slipped her heart beating fast in the sight of Batman on the floor.

Dick heard the woman’s cry and turned his eyes there. The same woman over the same man; the same situation; suddenly everything dawned to him: why that day in the Arkham Catwoman as soon as she heard that Joker was going to attack the Manor and Bruce Wayne stormed there. Why Batman had come to him after his family’s murders, in the balcony of their old apartment. Why Joker had asked for both Batman and Bruce Wayne to come at the factory. Why Joker had threatened to kill him if Batman didn’t take off his mask. Why Bruce was paralyzed exactly after that night the roof trapped Batman; why his body was so perfectly trained; the scars…

On the other hand, Batman was fighting while Bruce was in a wheelchair. Dick grinned: the armor must have a mechanism helping him move somewhat.

“Are ya thinkin’ what I’m thinkin’?” Jason asked him with his eyes narrowed.

Dick didn’t answer; he rushed where Batman and Catwoman were and Jason followed.

“I’m fine…” Batman said to Catwoman and placed his hands on the floor for support.

She wrapped her arm around his waist and helped him stand; the boys who just arrived offered their shoulders to assist her. Catwoman left Batman to the boys and walked to Rebecca.

“She is unconscious” Batman said. “But Zucco got out; we must get him.”

Zucco dragged his injured leg and huffing and puffing reached his car. He made it; he was a moment before leaving that cursed city. Zucco clenched his jaw and grabbed the door’s handle…

But all of a sudden, the neighborhood echoed from police sirens coming from every direction. Tires screeched as the speeding cars halted abruptly.

Rene Montoya burst out of her car pointing her gun at Zucco.

“Tony Zucco you’re under arrest for fraud and John Grayson’s murder!”

Batman felt the boys’ awed and puzzled eyes: both boys’ faces were flashed, sweaty and their hair disheveled; he looked at them, calm now that he heard the police cars blocking Zucco’s escape.

“I’m fine, boys” he made to stand alone but his knees bent and the boys hurried to support him.

Catwoman came to help them.

“You need a doctor” Dick said shyly and Batman met his shaken eyes, only for the boy to lower his gaze.
“No, it’s nothing; are you two hurt?”

Jason shook his head.

“No, man; ya came right on time.”

Dick was looking at his feet.

“Hero will be mad at me if you get hurt again… because of me…” the boy said.

“I don’t understand” Batman said keeping his expression undeterred.

“Yar secret is safe with us, dude” Jason intervened and the two adults looked each other.

Batman looked from the broken window not wanting to answer.

“I taped everything that Zucco said in my tablet” Dick said his voice still a bit shaken. “I’ll give it to the cops…He also forged Judge’s signature and pretended to be my guardian to take the money from my account” he hesitated.

“I know” Batman retorted.

“You were right” Dick said.

Jason cleared his throat.

“I was also right, ya dork!” he gave a small pat to the back of his friend’s neck and Dick lowered his head.

Catwoman rolled her eyes.

“Sorry to interrupt, boys, but we must leave.”

“We can’t leave the boys” Batman answered and Catwoman crooked her mouth.

Dick still not looking Batman in the eyes shook his head.

“Police is here; we are safe…”

“As safe anyone can be with cops…” Jason remarked snidely cocking his eyebrows and Catwoman chuckled.

“I need to tell them everything about Zucco” Dick’s teeth rattled and his eyes flashed. “He…he killed my father…” Batman brushed the boy’s back and Dick lowered more his head. “But you knew that too…”

“I did…” Bruce admitted in his normal voice.

Jason looked outside.

“Cops are comin’…”

“Go!” Dick said. “Alfred will be sick of worry…”

Batman nodded and used his grapple gun to launch a cable that drew him to the roof and Catwoman slapped her whip to hook herself up too.
Batman looked once more at the boys who nodded to him. But he didn’t leave: he stayed hidden in the shadows along with Selina till Rene Montoya came to the boys: police wasn’t corrupt as in Falcone’s era yet Bruce wanted to be sure.

Catwoman supported him in their way to the Tumbler and Batman looked at her.

“I can make it: I don’t want you to carry my weight.”

The woman smiled and let him.

“You could have denied it, you know…”

Batman pressed his lips.

“Your identity” Catwoman clarified.

Batman looked back at the house that was surrounded from police cars with their sirens on; Zucco had been tossed to the back seat of one of them and curious neighbors had began gathering.

“No. The boy has been told too many lies; being fooled so much…so for once he deserved some honesty to regain some of his trust to people.”

Catwoman smiled.

“You love that littl’ dick, don’t you?”
The silver Rolls was strolling calmly the bright, crowded streets and its lazy movement made everything seem peaceful even in a city like Gotham.

“No offense, Alfie” Jason leaned forward “the car is nice an’ ol’ that but I’d prefer a ride with the Bat car – remind the big guy that he owes me one, will ya?”

Alfred chuckled and cast a sideways glance at the boy; Bruce had told him that the boys knew the secret.

“I certainly will do that, Master Jason, although I think that the big guy doesn’t forget his debts.”

Dick tried to let the tranquility feel him by gazing outside through the one-way window of the back seat. But the storm inside him was raging so soon he abandoned any effort and turned to the back of Alfred’s head knowing that the butler would see him through the driver’s mirror.

“How is he?” he asked in the end. “He needs a doctor.”

Alfred gazed at the mirror and smiled to the boy; this change of Dick’s attitude was most welcome for him.

“Do not have a worry, Master Richard. Master Bruce is fine.”

Dick ruffled his hair and huffed. Both boys’ clothes were wrinkled – well, that wasn’t a novelty for Jason – and their faces bore the events of the last hour, being a bit dirty and pale.

“Yes, but Zucco shot him in the back!”

Jason’s good mood evaporated; that was true.

“Dr. Thompkins was already at the Manor when Master Bruce returned. Thankfully, the suit absorbed most of the impact; however, Dr. Thompkins would never let things just like that and she examined him.”

“An’?” Jason asked.

“She didn’t find anything urgent but tomorrow Master Bruce will be at her clinic for further exams: he stayed with Joker too long and we must be sure that everything is alright.”

Dick crossed his arms and nodded gazing back at the street.

“Hey, Alfie” Jason ruffled his hair. “How ‘bout takin’ me to the Manor instead of my home?”

Alfred looked firmly at the boy and shook his head.

“I must absolutely decline that, sir. Your mother is already too worried: you left the house without a notice.”

Jason crooked his mouth but didn’t insist.

“Tomorrow, however, you and your mother are most welcome to come to the Manor: I think it is the best occasion to celebrate Master Bruce’s birthday since the latest developments didn’t allow us to do it on time.”
Jason chuckled.

“Bat shaped cake?”

“Maybe next year” the butler answered grinning.

Alfred stopped the car in front of the apartment building where Jason lived and the boy hopped out using the shadows the trees formed to remain discreet.

“Are ya sure that my bike is safe?” he asked Alfred.

The butler grinned and gestured with his head to the pavement in front of the building’s entrance where Jason’s bike was parked. The boy’s eyes widened.

“He took your bike from Zucco’s house and brought it here before returning home.”

“So my bike had the ride I didn’t? Shit!”

Alfred grinned.

“Good night, Master Jason.”

The boy lolled his head.

“Not that I don’t like the Master thing but it’d better ya don’t say it her’, ‘cause I’ll lose my image… I’ve got a status inda neighborhood to keep.”

Alfred chuckled.

“Oh! I do understand…I’ll remember that.”

“See ya!” the boy said and ran to his bike to make sure that everything was alright.

Alfred remained there till the boy entered the building.

As the car crossed the Chelsea Tunnel to the Palisades Alfred cast fleeting glances at Dick’s grim face.

“If I may, sir; I know that this night was full with painful revelations but at least now your father will find justice.”

Dick nodded.

“I know but…”

“But?”

“Alfred…”

The butler looked to the mirror.

“Yes, Master Richard?”

“I’m sorry…”

“May I ask the reason?”
“For everything I told about Bruce…about my behavior. It must have been terrible for you having to listen to someone speak like that about someone you love so much…someone you almost lost.”

Alfred’s eyes became blank and nodded.

“It was, sir. But I always knew that someday you would realize the truth about Master Bruce and that you’d take back everything.”

Dick shook his head.

“I don’t know if that will be enough, Alfred… Especially, the things I’ve done to Bruce…”

Alfred grinned.

“In this life, Master Grayson, there are few things that are irredeemable and what you did isn’t one of them.”

Dick gulped and gazed outside to the peaceful dark scenery of the Palisades. He wished what Alfred had told him could ease the storm he had inside him.

The high gates to the Wayne grounds opened on the car’s approach and Alfred was happy that for once there were no reporters gathered outside; thankfully, the fact that Bruce was Joker’s hostage remained a secret and the events in Zucco’s house weren’t broadly known yet.

Alfred noticed from the mirror that Dick although till now was eager to get back once the imposing building came nearer looked sadder. So when the Rolls stopped before the Manor the boy seemed hesitated to get outside. Alfred opened the door for him and Dick pressed his lips, grabbed his backpack that was empty of his tablet since police kept it to take the record of Zucco’s confession, and hopped out.

Alfred patted the boy’s back and both climbed the stairs. As soon as Alfred pressed the doorbell, Leslie who had seen them approaching opened for them.

“Are you alright?” she asked the boy and Dick nodded.

“Can I see Bruce?” the boy asked her immediately.

Leslie shook her head.

“He is sleeping: I gave him some painkillers and sedatives. He was exhausted.”

Dick lowered his head.

“I wanted to talk to him.”

Alfred grinned.

“You’ll have plenty of time to do that, Master Richard. Now I suggest you have a shower and rest.”

Dick ruffled his hair and looked at Leslie.

“Is he really fine? I mean…”

Leslie nodded.

“From a first exam he doesn’t have any major trauma but tomorrow we’ll do all the necessary exams
They moved inside and Alfred turned to Dick.

“I shall prepare you some milk and a light supper, Master Richard; it will help you relax and sleep.”

The boy nodded but then he looked again at Leslie.

“Is it possible to see him?”

The doctor huffed.

“He is sleeping, Richard…” but then touched from the boy’s agony, she nodded. “I suppose you can see him.”

Dick raised his eyes that flashed.

“I won’t stay long! I promise!”

Leslie nodded and the boy stormed at the main stairs. She turned to Alfred raising her eyebrows.

“All of a sudden he cares…” she said coldly.

Alfred pressed his lips.

“He is a good kid but he was misguided; and then Zucco took advantage of his vulnerability. We should give him a chance.”

Leslie huffed and shook her head.

Dick’s rush was halted abruptly when the Master bedroom’s door was in front of him. He closed his eyes and took a deep breath before opening slowly the door.

The heavy curtains were drawn to prevent any nuisance from outside so the only light in the dark room came from the lit fireplace. Exactly, as the dominant sound in the room was the screeching of the burning logs joined with another low sound.

Dick walked in the tips of his toes and approached the bed. As he got close to the bed realized that the other sound accompanying those from the fireplace was Hero’s purring. The kitten was curled over Bruce’s chest sleeping along with his human.

Suddenly, a glimmering yellow eye stabbed him and a low growl replaced the soft purring. The animal wasn’t sleeping, Dick realized: Hero was guarding his human still pissed because someone snatched him under his nose.

Dick brought his index finger to his lips and hushed the animal.

“Hero, it’s me” he whispered “I won’t disturb him.”

The kitten watched him a bit more with narrowed eyes and then having decided that he was indeed a friend calmed and curled again on Bruce’s chest but still watching Dick with the corner of his eye.

Dick looked at Bruce’s face: the man was pale and his features bore the hue of fatigue. He was spent and his breath came out shallow.

Dick had seen while in MCU the video with Batman in Arkham; how he helped Thor and the other man. Bruce must have escaped all by himself and captured Joker on his own; then instead of having his rest he followed Zucco to save him.

Despite the gadgets the armor had to allow him to walk, certainly all this must have demanded major effort and energy – not to mention pain…And Bruce used all these, without thinking of himself to save him from his uncle…as he did in that factory.

He gulped realizing what till now lurked at the edges of his mind: Bruce was paralyzed because of him and if Superman hadn’t intervened then, Bruce would have died. That night Bruce was already injured from what the League of Shadows did to him but in spite that he again used all his energy to come for him and save him from Joker…

Dick’s eyes bulged and he bit his lips. And all this time he was constantly making the man’s life a Hell.

His eyes fell on Bruce’s empty wheelchair; his own enraged words came to his mind, like a thunder ripping the sky:

“I hope you rot in that chair!”

He bit again his lip and looked at Bruce’s calm face. All this time he suffered all his insults without ever defending himself, without punishing him; the only time Bruce punished him was to make him realize how dreadful and dangerous for him was wandering in Gotham late having consumed alcohol.

The boy moved shyly his hand and touched Bruce’s hand that was gently laid on the mattress. He remembered the night he was having nightmares due to the storm and Bruce came to his room to comfort him; he had closed the window making the room completely soundproof. And then he remembered the night he heard Bruce begging and crying in his sleep: the night after that horrendous video was broadcast – definitely, someone who hated Bruce did that knowing that it will hurt him the most in the hearing about his guardianship.

Bruce accepted to be psychologically evaluated to not lose his guardianship not for any other reason but for Dick to not end up with Zucco because Bruce knew who Zucco really was.

“I’m sorry for everything” he whispered and his index finger made a slight caressing move on Bruce’s hand.

He didn’t say anything else just retreated tiptoeing.

A man in a burgundy cape was grunting clearly in a state of confusion and panic; he was waving his hands in the air creating multicolored sparks and shapes; in the opposite corner, Thor was slumped on the floor and a woman dressed in skin tight black leather was with him – both of them was trying to take cover from the beams the distressed man conjured.

Suddenly, something flashed cutting the darkness and the man in the cape jerked slightly before collapsing.

And then from the shadows an imposing, proud dark figure came forward tossing the mass he was dragging – an unconscious Joker – to the floor. Batman walked to the corner Thor and Catwoman were and Thor stretched his arm looking him in the face with deep trust.

Something shone in Batman’s hand and a tiny needle was stabbed to Thor’s upper arm…
The video lasted longer but Superman sat on the bed of Diana’s bedroom snapped it shut. Then he closed entirely the Daily Planet’s site from his Smart Phone.

He tossed the phone on his nightstand and listened to the shower. Diana had just returned from a global patrol and she needed a shower before lying by his side to enjoy the night. He waited for her having his back on the headboard, completely naked with the white sheet covering his lower body.

Enjoy the night…

Superman clenched his jaw. Lois definitely made the best use of her visit in Gotham…She found a partner, Vicky Vale: the video and the entire coverage of the Arkham incident was made by those two. And they got a rare video of Batman in action.

“Despite the rumors of the past months, Batman is very much alive and kicking” the reporter from Gotham had commented on the video.

So Bruce insisted on putting on that armor and doing his show, Superman crooked his mouth. Of course, Thor was in danger and Batman rushed to save the god.

“Crane used on Thor the same compound gas that was used some months ago during the attack at the Avengers’ Tower resulting in the weakening of the God of Thunders. Also, the paranoid former head of the Arkham Asylum used his fear toxin on the unknown man with the burgundy cape – the footage is very dark to identify the man but rumor has it that he is a new member of the Avengers or an ally. Back to Crane, the infamous criminal was working with Joker who with the covering of Dr. Harleen Quinzel was hiding in the famous Asylum” Lois had described briefly the situation.

Superman’s fist fell with force on the mattress and in the last second he controlled his power to not smash the bed. The weakness he had traced in Bruce’s vitals wasn’t weakness; it was his agony for his blond lover.

He growled.

“Is anything the matter, Kal?” Diana asked in her proud voice; she was frowned.

Superman raised his eyes to her: she was coming out of the attached bathroom completely naked with the water still slithering sensually over her curves, over her bulged breasts and her pelvis’ V. Her body’s irresistible perfume filled his nostrils and his mind instantly paralyzed pleasantly; the perfume erasing everything that bothered him.

He stood letting the sheet fall from his body and in a fraction of the second he was glued in her hot body; in her safety and happiness. His strong arms wrapped her muscle bounded back and she caressed his hair smiling.

“Which ungrateful worm caused you bitterness?”

Superman smiled.

“I’m with you, Diana…Nobody can hurt me when I’m with you” he captured her lips and she deepened the kiss tangling their tongues.

“Coooooome oooooon, Brucie…” the nasal voice made a crude attempt on compassion. “Dooon’t cry…just tell me what’s wrong.”
Bruce realized that everything he experienced till now was a lie: his escape from Joker, the jester’s arrest, saving Dick from Zucco, his return home. He wasn’t sleeping in his king size bed with Hero on his chest; he was still in the examination room in Arkham’s Museum and his mind was obscured under the Amytal’s effect.

Bruce knew that what he was experiencing was creation of the drug yet he couldn’t fight off the pain, the agony, the despair, the terror. It was dark and cold as it was always in his cell and he was in pain…and shame. He was crying and the tunnel behind the stalactite was so tempting: slithering and staying in the caves forever. Alone.

“Who hurt you, Brucie? You know that I can punish him and save you…”

“Master did it…” he whispered.

The jester cleared his throat.

“I punished him for the pain he caused to you, sweetie…You know you can trust me…I want the best for youuuuuuuu…Tell me, Brucie: what you know about…mmm…Baaaats?”

“I…I’m scared…they are all around me…in my cell and…and…they…they sniff my blood and come close… will drink my blood.”

“Sooooo Bats are baaaaaad…what about Batman?”

“Who?”

He felt wet lips on his ear.

“He diiiiiiiid help you, right?”

Bruce nodded and heard Joker lick his lips.

“It must have been a great fun kicking Falcone’s fat ass…”

“Yes…but I couldn’t…I…He was too strong…and I…I was too weak; I was scared of him…I couldn’t…He’d…punish me…”

“Buuuuuut your poor parents deserved justice; they deserved to have their killer punished.”

Bruce gulped a sob and sighed.

“They…they do…but I’m so weak and scared.”

“But Batman isn’t…He kicked Falcone’s ass and sent him to the joint.”

Bruce nodded and sniffed.

“He…he did. I saw him.”

“Brucie, I know you are Batman…it’s okay…I feel you…I understand you…I punished Falcone…I saved you; c’mon, admit you’re Batman.”

“But I’m not…”

Two wet lips sucked his cheek.
“It’s nothing wrong with being Batman, Brucie…”

Bruce felt so weak, so desperate being in his cell beaten and used; a waste of space; a disgrace for his parents.

“I know…” he sobbed. “I want so much to be him…If I was him nobody would dare to touch me” he was aware that he shouldn’t tell the truth; although he was young and in Falcone’s cell somewhere in his mind he knew that someone was trying to get answers for him – to make him divulge his secrets. “But I’m not…”

Suddenly, the wet disgusting feeling on his cheek was gone as music filled his mind; a melody he knew so well; a melody that always made his heart melt with love and joy.

“Moon river … wider than a mile” a soft voice sang to his ear and goose bumps flooded his back. “I’m crossing you in style…someday…” that beloved voice. “Old dream maker, you heartbreaker…”

He felt hands touching his shoulders and massaging gently with the perfect pressure taking the pain off his tired, throbbing back; making numb the healthy part of his body. A smile caressed Bruce’s face and he moaned in pleasure from all the pleasant senses at once: the voice, the song, the touch, the bodily perfume, the body over him.

“You seem to need a good massage…naughty boy…” the voice breathed in his ear. “And nobody knows your body as I do…And you’re cold…You need more warmth, Star…” the body he knew perfectly touched carefully his transmitting his unearthly warmth, extinguishing every pain, or stiffness…

Bruce felt the urge to open his eyes and devour on this face; but he didn’t do it, afraid that it might be only a dream that will evaporate as soon as he opened his eyes.

Lips touched softly his cheek next to the corner of his lips; a kiss that he knew perfectly.

“I missed you, Star…so much it hurts…”

Bruce pressed his eyelids over his eyes to not indulge the temptation and open his eyes: his heart was beating fast. He was thirsty to hear those words…all these months.

“I miss you too, Clark…” he breathed but his voice was choked “but I know you’re only a dream…” he felt his heart breaking again on the realization.

Suddenly, he was on his wheelchair at the round balcony of the Avangers’ Tower; snowflakes had started to fall… He was gazing at New York’s skyline deep in thought when the melody of the song Clark was singing to him reached his ears.

Unconsciously, he turned his wheelchair towards the ballroom; his jaw clenched. Superman was dancing with Diana, clearly mesmerized, absorbed in her eyes…

And then Diana dressed in her suit stood in midair. The Man of Steel saw her and his face gloated with love; he flew to her and she did the same; their collision almost emitted sparkles and Superman hugged her attaching her body to his, capturing her lips in a deep, breathtaking kiss.

“She is my Star!” Superman said with his voice vibrating with happiness.

Bruce gulped and opened his eyes.
“You were always a dream…” he whispered.

“That’s right, Bruce” a deep, suave voice cracked the sudden silence of the room. “He was never the one for you.”

Bruce supported his torso on his elbows and rose a bit to see the one who already knew that was in the room. Queen walked gently towards the bed; his smugness had left his face letting only what seemed like love. The man’s eyes were two fires as when under the Arrow’s hood. Bruce felt those eyes piercing him to the core.

“He was always a lie…and deep inside you knew it” the man knelt by the bed and brought his face close to Bruce’s. “I am the one for you, Bruce…”

Bruce thrashed on his bed and heard through a tunnel a familiar meow. His mind and body were in a deep mist from the sedatives yet he stubbornly opened his eyes though in him lurked the fear of seeing Queen over him.

Instead, a wrinkled hand he had connected with pure love caressed his face and Bruce saw Alfred.

“Please calm down, Master Bruce; it was just a dream.”

The Englishman swept the sweat from Bruce’s face with a cotton white rug and Bruce saw Leslie coming. Her face was worried and she held a syringe.

“The pain and the tension were too much for the sedatives.”

“I’m not in pain” Bruce mumbled trying to ease their worry though he felt the stiffness and the throbbing returning fast.

Leslie nodded.

“We’ll see that tomorrow. Now, I’ll give you something stronger – you need the rest, Bruce.”

Yes, he needed that…so he didn’t protest but let Leslie inject him and welcomed the instant deep sleep.

Tony had just come out of the bathroom with his hair still wet from the quick shower he had. He was dressed in his Garfield pajamas and paced barefoot in the dark living room of his penthouse contemplating the events of the last hours. Suddenly, he realized that he was in front of the whole wall window, Gotham’s breathtaking nightly skyline regarding him grimly as if blaming him for what he has done to her protector.

He pressed his wet hair to his head and huffed; he stormed at the right wall where the built-in bar was placed. Upon approaching the wall opened and the glass bar slithered towards him presenting its tempting, large variety of booze; on both edges of the glass shelf two columns contained an assortment of crystal glasses for each different beverage. Tony stretched his hand to grab a short, round bottle of expensive scotch yet at the last second he stopped. He closed his eyes: alcohol wasn’t the solution.

He clapped and the glass bar slithered back inside leaving the wall at its former state. He slumped on the leather corner sofa and glanced at his StarkStell tablet on the glass titanium coffee table.

“Jarvis, how’s Dr. Strange?” he opted to ask his AI instead.
“The vitals of Dr. Strange is normal now, sir; the remnants of the toxin has been entirely removed from his organism and his brain waves indicate that he is sleeping in normal sleeping rhythms.”

“Thanks, Jarv” he replied out of mood.

They decided with Thor to keep Dr. Strange here, at his penthouse instead of putting him through the trip back to New York. There Tony would be able to monitor him and the man would have the time to properly recover from Crane’s poison. Of course, Bruce had acted on time to stop the toxin before damaging permanently Strange and repel any consequences.

“Bruce…” he sighed and his heart beat fast from desire to learn about his friend.

His hand hovered over the tablet to call the Manor’s number but he closed his fingers. No, he had no right: because of him Bruce found himself Joker’s captive and was forced to exert himself to escape. Nothing would have happened if he hadn’t hit him with his stunning beam. He couldn’t forget Bruce’s eyes just before fainting; they were filled with surprise and the bitterness of betrayal.

His closed fingers became a fist and he downed it to the table which didn’t shatter only thanks to its special materials.

“Sir, there are news on the gunshots that occurred in Tony Zucco’s house.”

After he heard about that, Tony had left the MCU believing that both Bruce and Dick were safe at the Manor. However he asked Jarvis to keep watching for any development since Bruce would definitely be interested for anything concerning that man.

Tony gathered his members and sat properly; he grabbed his tablet and with a few scrolls got access to MCU’s database. He perused the reports about Zucco and slapped his face.

“Damn!”

Dick had been in Zucco’s house; the scum had asked from the judge to take the boy for the weekend and used Judge Moot’s forged signature and stamp to prove that he was Dick’s guardian to take the money from his account and leave the town. Of course, Bruce was one step in front of the scum and took care that the account would be opened only with Ms. Turner’s credentials.

After that it seems that the bastard realizing that he had nothing to gain from the boy decided to get rid of him. Tony cocked an eyebrow: Batarangs were found in the house and on Zucco’s wife – Bruce upon returning to the Manor learnt that Zucco took the boy and followed them which was life saving for the boy but also exhausting for his already spent friend.

At least, the police was already coming to Zucco’s house to arrest him based on the evidence Bruce had gathered. And the little rascal had the brains to record on his tablet Zucco admitting his father’s murder.

His rush to fly right now to the Manor to check Bruce became torturing but he inhaled deeply and stopped. He couldn’t see Bruce in the eyes after what he had done and his concern would seem hypocritic…

However, he had to learn…His hand moved on its own and touched the tablet’s screen calling the Manor.

“Wayne Manor, how may I help you?”

Oh, how he missed Alfred’s calm voice.
“Alfred, it’s Tony. It’s late even for you…”

“Master Anthony! I was informed by Master Bruce that you are alright but I was expecting you to come at the Manor.”

Tony rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“Alfred, how’s Bruce? I checked with the clinic’s database and he wasn’t admitted there.”

“Leslie deemed it better for him to stay here tonight: she examined him and scanned him with the portable MRI and there was nothing urgent” Tony sighed with relief. “Nonetheless, he sustained some major blows that thankfully were mostly absorbed by the armor so Leslie will take him to the clinic tomorrow for further exams. He is exhausted and runs a slight fever but Leslie administered him painkillers and sedatives; he is sleeping now and Leslie is with him.”

“Thank you, Alfred…I’ll call you tomorrow to tell me about the exams’ results.”

A long pause from the other end.

“Master Anthony, if I may; it couldn’t be better if you came yourself to the Manor?” Alfred’s voice was cautious; he knew how tricky things were after what Tony did.

“No, Alfred” Tony shook his head. “I have no place there and I’m sure Bruce will be better off without me.”

“Forgive my indiscretion, sir, but I reckon that you are too hasty in your assessment of the situation and Master Bruce’s emotions. Tomorrow evening a small gathering for Master Bruce’s birthday will take place in the Manor and my humble opinion is that you should be with us.”

Tony ruffled his hair with both hands.

“This time I fucked things, Alfred…” he pressed his lips: he wanted to go there and be close to his friend as well but he wasn’t that selfish to press his presence to his friend. “Good night, Alfred.”

“Good night, Master Anthony” Alfred’s voice was hued with a discreet melancholy.

Dick had woken up quite some time now – not that his sleep was ideal…More a foggy state between being wake and asleep with thousands thoughts tangled; images replaying what happened just a few hours ago; memories of how Zucco had tricked them fuelling his hatred for Bruce and making him hurt his granny. How he missed his granny!

He gladly left his bed with the first pale light of the morning. He bathed, wore fresh clothes but he stayed in his room pacing nervously till eight because he was sure that Bruce wouldn’t wake up earlier. As a matter of fact, his guardian should sleep till late to have the rest he needed.

He ran to the kitchen, only to stop abruptly seeing only Alfred serving tea to his white-blue porcelain cup and Leslie sitting to the island. He had hoped to see Bruce there as almost every morning but now he was thinking about it, that wasn’t too possible.

“Good morning, Master Richard” Alfred said and Leslie mumbled the same.

“Mmm…Good morning” the boy replied. “Bruce didn’t come down for breakfast? Then he is ill…” Leslie looked up at Alfred and sipped from her coffee.
“I just recommended that he stays in bed today” she said “we’ll make the exams to have a proper image about his condition.”

Dick licked his lips.

“If he must stay in bed all day how is he going to go to your clinic?”

Leslie shrugged a shoulder.

“On a gurney of course; I’ve arranged for an ambulance.”

Dick nodded and ruffled his messy hair. Alfred grinned with sympathy.

“Master Bruce is taking his breakfast in his room accompanied by Miss Kyle. I think that you should have your breakfast too, Master Richard.”

Dick turned his head towards the upper floor.

“I’m not hungry” he replied. “Can I…?” he asked shyly both the adults.

Leslie crooked her mouth.

“Yeah, you can.”

“Thank you!” Dick exclaimed and stormed at the corridor, his running footsteps echoing behind him.

Leslie shook her head and Alfred grinned.

Dick once again stopped abruptly before the door to the Master bedroom and inhaled deeply trying to control his breath and his heartbeat. He raised his hand to knock and then lowered it before he raised it again. He gulped and knocked.

“Come in”

It was Selina’s voice. Catwoman’s, Dick realized. He opened the door and made a hesitant step forwards. Bruce was lying on the bed resting his back on pillows; he was absorbed in reading something on his Cosmos’ screen but he raised his eyes right away to regard Dick. He smiled clearly in a good mood though his face was pale and his eyes bloodshot.

Beside the bed Selina was sitting on a ottoman eating from the breakfast on the silver lay at the bed table over Bruce’s legs. Hero was curled next to Bruce and eating the chunks his human fed him.

“Good morning, Richard” Bruce greeted him causing Selina’s glance.

Dick licked his lips; he still couldn’t look him straight in the eyes.

“Mm…yeah…good morning” he scratched his neck and cursed inside realizing that he was doing one of Jay’s reactions. “Can I speak to you?”

“Of course” Bruce replied and Selina stood.

“I leave you two alone” she said and pecked Bruce on the cheek.

She walked to the door and looked at Dick as she passed by him.

“Don’t let him work on his tablet anymore…” she mumbled and the boy nodded.
Selina closed the door behind her but Dick still hesitated; Bruce raised his eyebrows.

“Have a seat” he prompted the boy gesturing to the ottoman and Dick did as he was said. “You had breakfast?”

Dick still without looking him in the eyes shook his head.

“Alfred told me to but I wasn’t hungry…”

Bruce smiled and showed the tray.

“Help yourself…Alfred always has the tendency to overfeed me…”

Dick looked at those delicious smelling cinnamon biscuits and grabbed one.

“Mm…thanks. Those cinnamon biscuits are my favorite” he said chewing the delicacy.

“Mine too” Bruce commented and Dick looked at him with the rest of his biscuit hovering near his mouth. “Richard, I wanted to tell you that what you’ve learnt about me last night …I mean…it’s not a reason for you to change the way you feel about me.”

Dick closed his eyes and lolled his head on the side.

“I knew you’d say that…” he shook his head. “How are you? I mean, last night, that bullet…”

“The armor absorbed most of the impact; I’m fine.”

“You’re pale thought…”

“That’s my standard” Bruce said.

“About what you said…’bout Batman and my feelings for you…You were all this time like this: tolerating me being an ass and never asking anything. But your kindness can’t change the fact that I was…wrong; I treated you…I was unfair, mean: whether you are…him or not. But the fact you’re Batman makes my behavior even worse.”

Bruce pressed his lips; he hoped that things would get their way without all this.

“Last night you saved my life risking yours and risking your condition…”

Bruce didn’t want to hear more; he wanted the boy to be just happy not to be eaten by guilt.

“Richard…”

The boy looked at him.

“Please, call me Dick. I was saying that last night wasn’t the first time you saved me. That night in the factory with Joker, you again didn’t think the risk for my sake. And you almost died that night… and…and you’re in a wheelchair because of me.”

“Not because of you: nothing of this was your fault. Joker started that.”

Dick looked at the wheelchair.

“I was ungrateful; I made your life a Hell; I made people speak ill of you; and all this time your suffering was for my sake. I blamed you for my family’s murders though it wasn’t your fault.”
Bruce raised his eyebrows.

“I understand you... You were filled with pain, with anger, with despair: it was reasonable some of these feelings to be turned against the one whose name was written to the wall over your loved ones’ bodies.”

“I even cursed you to rot in that chair...” he said and his voice fainted as his phrase reached the end; he lowered his head.

Bruce caressed the boy’s hair.

“I knew that you didn’t mean it...”

“But I did! I’m that bad!”

“No, you didn’t; even if then you believed that you wanted it you are such a good boy that deep inside you didn’t want it.”

Dick raised his eyes to meet Bruce’s and Bruce smiled.

“I’m sorry, Bruce; for everything.”

Bruce nodded.

“I know, Dick...I want you to forget everything that happened and move forward. We all do mistakes but what matters is to learn from them and continue.”

Dick caressed Hero that came to rub at him.

“I believed Zucco; I let him poison me against my granny, against you... All this time you wanted to warn me, to save me from him; you cared about me and I was following blindly Zucco...my father's murderer...I feel awful...How fool I was?”

Bruce shook his head.

“You were desperate, angry and he took advantage of you.”

“Yeah...but still...I was doing everything he was telling me without seeing how wrong it was. I can’t forgive myself...”

Bruce pressed his lips. Since Dick knew the truth about him the boy could learn more.

“When I was 14, still Falcone’s slave, a man popped up a night at the cabaret and cured my cripple arm. He fed me, he washed me, he dressed me, he even made Falcone torture me less; he promised that he’d save me and bring justice for my parents.”

Dick watched frowned.

“When I was 14, still Falcone’s slave, a man popped up a night at the cabaret and cured my cripple arm. He fed me, he washed me, he dressed me, he even made Falcone torture me less; he promised that he’d save me and bring justice for my parents.”

Dick pressed his lips. Since Dick knew the truth about him the boy could learn more.

“For the first time after 6 years of endless pain and despair, I began hoping...” he chuckled. “He trained me to be a killing machine...He took advantage of me, he used me in every possible way and I” he huffed “I believed that I owed him whatever he wished from me – that what he was taking from me was very little in comparison with what he was offering me. I thought he cared for me...that he would free me...I was obeying him...I was ready to do whatever he wanted me...” he raised his eyebrows “I was doing everything he wished...” Bruce felt embarrassed because he was sure that Dick understood what he meant. “And then one day, he revealed chuckling that he wasn’t going to let me go; he’d use me to eradicate Gotham and after would take me with him...his slave: serving Dick noticed Bruce’s blank eyes and figured that he was lost in his past – maybe re-living those things; but he was eager to learn about Batman…about Bruce.

“And?”

Bruce looked at the boy as if waking from a dream.

“I couldn’t do what he wanted; I wasn’t a murderer; I knew then that he was evil… I tried to escape but he caught me; he punished me; he threatened to kill my loved ones if I ever tried to escape again. He…He tortured Tony” Dick’s eyes widened remembering Tony Stark’s story: his abduction by terrorists in Middle East, that he almost died; Bruce nodded. “He was going to kill Tony to break me once and for all but Tony managed to free himself. Yet Tony since then is forced to have that arc reactor to live…” he chuckled bitterly. “Because of me…Because I believed the wrong man…”

Dick caressed the back of Bruce’s hand and he looked the boy puzzled.

“It wasn’t your fault. You were scared and defenseless and that man offered you hope.”

Bruce smiled.

“You see?” he twitched his eyebrows pointedly. “It’s the same thing with you and Zucco…”

Dick pressed his lips not totally convinced but he smiled a bit more relieved.

“I wish granny was here…I have so many things to tell her…To apologize to her…”

“Maybe you’ll have the chance.”

Dick shook his head.

“She is gone…She left sad from my behavior; scared about what would happen to me. And she was right: you care about me more than anyone else. I wish I had the chance to tell her that she was right and I was wrong - stupid.”

“Don’t lose your hope…”

Dick shook his head and decided to change the subject to tell what was burning his mind from last night.

“Till now I respected Batman but now that I know the truth…I admire Bruce Wayne. You’re the strongest, the bravest, the kindest man I even known.”

Bruce chuckled.

“You’re 13 years old: you haven’t met many people yet…”

“I’ll never meet anyone like you – ever…I have the best guardian in the world – a guardian angel.”

Bruce smiled.

“And I don’t deserve you…” the boy added and Bruce’s expression became dead serious.

“Hush…That’s not true and I don’t want you to ever tell that again. You’ve been through a lot of things that even a grown up wouldn’t be able to cope with and you’ve made it: you remained the great boy your family raised – your grandmother is proud of you and I’m honored she trusted me with your guardianship.”

Knocks on the door.

“Come in” Bruce called.

It was Alfred and Leslie.

“Master Bruce, the ambulance is here.”

Bruce nodded. Dick met his eyes.

“Can I come with you?”

Bruce raised his eyebrows.

“It’s a boring procedure.”

Leslie snorted and took the bed table off his legs.

“Next time we’ll redecorate the clinic to resemble a theme park, Mr. Wayne.”

Bruce grinned and turned again to Dick.

“And you have your training – I know you and Jeff are practicing some new exercises Mr. Breizic made for you; and after I think you’ll have a better time with Jason playing bowling.”

Dick pouted downhearted.

“Okay…”

Bruce patted his upper arm.

“Dick, everything is alright now: just let go and have fun for a change. I promise that everything will be fine from now on.”

The boy smiled and nodded.

“If you promise then it will be.”

And definitely Bruce would have preferred to be with Dick and Jason than in the clinic coming out of one examination room to get inside a scanning room. Not to mention all those needles taking blood or tissue samples: after all those experiences with Crane, Quinzel and Joker he felt nausea in the sight of those pointy tools…

Yet in the end he managed to convince Alfred and Leslie to let him go somewhere promising that it wouldn’t be for long and that after he’d stay in bed and rest. Of course Bruce counted on the fact that the two of them wanted some secrecy to prepare his birthday gathering and his short absence would suit them. Supposedly, it was a surprise but Bruce had caught some strange sideway glances between them and he remembered Alfred mentioning his birthday before all Hell broke loose.

Alfred insisted on driving him but Bruce asked him to take care of the boys: Dick’s emotional state troubled him – he wanted the boy to feel relieved and not burdened by all those things.
He drove his car in the underground parking of the building and slipped in his wheelchair to head to the elevator. But then someone’s footsteps approached him from the back. He stopped the wheelchair and grinned.

“Thor…”

The blond god walked to come in front of Bruce. He was dressed in his civilian attire: blue jeans, leather jacket, a hockey cap and a long blond ponytail. He smiled at Bruce.

“I’m always pleased when you recognize me without seeing me.”

“You are my friend, Thor.”

Thor nodded.

“I wanted to meet and thank you but it is almost impossible to sneak out from Alfred and Leslie. I hardly persuaded them to let me come here.”

Thor grinned.

“I feel for them; they must be distraught after last night. I heard that after Arkham Batman had another adventure.”

Bruce lolled his head on the sight.

“I heard the same.”

The blond chuckled and lowered his eyes.

“I followed your car just in case – I hope you don’t mind” but then he remembered what Bruce had said. “Thank me? I’m the one who should thank you: you saved me administering the antidote.”

Bruce waved that off.

“That was nothing.”

Thor lolled his head on the side and arched an eyebrow crossing his arms over the chest.

“Really? I don’t agree: being able to hold again Mjolnir is everything to me” he pressed his lips. “And why you wanted to thank me?”

“For your help in everything that happened the last days: I read about Loki’s attack in New York” his face was a bit shadowed and Thor was sure that the reason was Superman’s absence: Bruce must be very disappointed and sad. “Your help was crucial there and in capturing Loki.”

“How you know that?” Thor frowned: he couldn’t have read that anywhere because S.H.I.E.L.D. kept it close to the chest.

Bruce pursed his lips.

“Joker gave him a compound dose of the weakening substance in front of me and you and Tony were looking for me at Gotham which means that you found Loki and he told you that Joker returned here” Thor smiled.

“Always the detective. You should teach me that: I’d like to be the first god-detective!” he chuckled and Bruce did the same.
“And Dr. Strange?”

“Actually he was the one who found Loki’s palace and captured him.”

Bruce met his clear blue eyes.

“You asked him to help.”

“How do you know?”

Bruce grinned and his eyes sparkled.

“He isn’t a member of the Avengers and he is not Tony’s friend otherwise he would have mentioned him. And when I found you he was conjuring things with his hands, which means that he has special skills not known to many people.”

Thor nodded.

“My failure to locate Loki all this time proved that my brother couldn’t be found either by a god or a mere mortal. So I went to Dr. Strange; he is a member of an order that protects Earth from dark powers and he had the skills needed.”

“So you do deserve my gratitude.”

Thor almost blushed and Bruce grinned.

“And Dr. Strange, of course” the human added.

Thor kneeled before him.

“I’m so relieved you’re alright, Bruce; back to us. Did that man hurt you in any way?” his agony was evident even now.

Bruce met the god’s clear eyes.

“Nothing serious…” he reassured him. “Alfred is preparing a small gathering this evening for my birthday: it’d be my pleasure to join us.”

Thor pressed his lips and his eyes filled with disappointment.

“It would be mine too…but unfortunately I have to transfer Loki to Asgard. Odin is furious and has called that Asgardian Assembly.”

Bruce nodded.

“I understand.”

Thor stood and shook Bruce’s hand.

“Happy birthday, Bruce!”

“Thank you, Thor.”

A single rucksack was dropped somewhere on the floor and a briefcase lay closed, thrown careless on the sofa next to a long coat. The vast room was dimly lit only by the gray natural light of the Tony wasn’t a tidy person and he didn’t care to be so his departure preparations were hasty and messy – especially, since his mood was grimmer than the gray sky of Gotham that stared at him almost mocking from the whole wall window. It was afternoon and he had set the jet for departure in an hour.

He sat on the sofa engrossed in his tablet, reading carefully what he had hacked from Leslie’s clinic. What else? The results from Bruce’s exams. He had already called Alfred for information and the blessed man told him without any objection yet Tony wanted every detail – he wanted to have his own opinion over the doctors.

It was difficult to break the firewalls to get the data he wanted – after all, Bruce had shielded the clinic’s electronic database – yet in the end he managed to break through. His heart was beating almost as fast as when one year ago, in this very room, he was to see Falcone’s toy to ascertain if he was indeed Bruce.

There was some inflammation in Bruce’s back where contusions and lesions were manifested: Tony gulped and covered his mouth with his palm seeing the images from MRI. Bruce definitely was hit in the back with force and the other nastier lesion was from a bullet. Yet the armor as Alfred had said absorbed most of the impact. The energy casts did their job again – bless that alien tech!...but not that UFO scumbag!

Tony closed his eyes considering his own deeds…No, he was a scumbag too but not as bad as the alien.

Bruce’s blood exams indicated the presence of high doses of chloroform and Amytal and Tony cursed. That Quinzel and Crane tried to force Bruce to admit what Joker wanted: something bit his insides hard. Did Joker find out? Damn! He could have asked Bruce, if only…

Bruce had a low fever which was not good but it could be only due to the hardship. A bit dehydrated with some minerals low – easy solved with some supplements. Also, the fact that he missed some dosages of his medication manifested in his vitals – thankfully, not so much to cause damage. Overall nothing that couldn’t be restored.

Tony pressed his hair on his head and sighed in relief: his blunder didn’t have detrimental consequences.

Suddenly, the low, almost inaudible humming of the lift broke his thoughts. Only Pepper had free access to the lift, no other…except than…no, it couldn’t be.

The lift stopped.

“Master Bruce, sir”.

It was preposterous how Jarvis’ indifferent voice shattered Tony’s superficial tranquility and made him jump.

“Why you didn’t notify me, you traitorous, sneaky AI?” he yelled.

“But it is Master Bruce, sir…” the AI replied innocently but Tony rolled his eyes because he sensed a bit of amusement there.

“Nice…AIs made fun of us, ol’ dude” he said to himself and thought to run away but just slumped on the sofa hearing the lift doors opening and then the discreet sound of Bruce’s wheelchair.
Damn! Alfred and Leslie shouldn’t have let him wander around: he needed rest. However he noticed something else: Bruce was using the wheelchair Tony had crafted for him…poor thing! After Superman’s betrayal and his own Bruce had run out of options. He wanted to look at him but Tony knew that didn’t have the right.

Bruce’s lips slightly cracked seeing Tony like this and then his eyes fell on his friend’s baggage scattered around.

“So you’re ready to leave without a word?” he asked and Tony closed his eyes.

Tony shook his head.

“You should be home resting; it doesn’t worth the effort…”

Bruce licked his lips and moved his wheelchair closer causing a shudder in Tony. The younger man huffed

“Let me decide what it is worthy…”

Tony nodded: everything started because he wanted to force his opinion to Bruce.

Bruce arched an eyebrow looking at Tony’s tablet.

“Are they good enough?” he said amused and Tony frowned. “I mean the results.”

Tony made to turn his head towards him but stopped himself.

“You knew?”

“I knew that you’d want to learn every detail and that Alfred’s info wouldn’t be enough so I put the results in the database with such hard firewall that only you could break.”

Tony chuckled and shook his head.

“Why you did that?”

Bruce sighed.

“What kind of a friend…” he said raising his voice and Tony lowered his head inhaling deeply: here we go, he thought.

Bruce had come here to confront him; he nodded and surrendered because whatever Bruce would say was well deserved.

Bruce crooked his mouth taking in his friend’s reaction and imagining his thoughts.

“What kind of a friend leaves and doesn’t attend his friend’s first birthday after nineteen years?”

Tony felt as if a bucket with icy water splashed on him – with the bucket; he didn’t believe in his ears and in his confusion turned to Bruce.

“What?”

Bruce cocked his eyebrows and took advantage of Tony’s turn of the head to lock eyes with him.

“I’m sure that Alfred invited you to my birthday gathering, which by the way, it’s supposed to be secret” Tony couldn’t fight but chuckle to this. “It’s the only reason Alfred and Leslie let me out of the Manor after all… But I see that you are ready to snub my birthday and leave…Is this what someone expects from his best buddy?”

Tony’s lips trembled and he couldn’t restrain himself from rushing to his friend and kneeling before him to give him a bear hug minding his hurt back. He held Bruce’s upper arms and looked him in the eyes.

“You can’t be so forgiving, littl’ guy…” he mumbled. “What I did is unforgivable: I gunned you even if it was a stunning beam because I was stubborn and I wanted to force my choice to you. What kind of a friend does that?”

Bruce lolled his head on the side pouting.

“You!”

Tony erupted in light hearted laugh.

“I know you did it out of despair; because you care that much, Tony. And I know that you regret it…I don’t want to lose you again…” Bruce said dead serious.

Tony lowered his head; he was happy, beyond happy; relieved but all this was overwhelming.

“You can’t be so forgiving” he repeated thought it suit him “you must thing more of yourself, littl’ guy…”

Bruce smirked and his eyes sparkled wickedly.

“But I do…” Tony frowned “because from now on you wouldn’t be able to deny anything to me”
Tony gaped and raised his eyebrows. “It’s handy to have Tony Stark’s genius and Ironman’s firepower at my disposal without objections.”

Now Tony began laughing real hard and his head fell on Bruce’s lap: the agony, sadness and hopelessness of the last hours making him lose his grip and the energy to keep his head erect.

Bruce caressed his friend’s disheveled raven hair as Tony’s head shook from relieved laughter.

“Mm…sorry” a bass baritone invaded the vast living room from the corridor leading to the guest bedroom “am I interrupting something?”

Bruce turned his gaze at the man and despite the fact he was now dressed in one of Tony’s least favorite pajamas, he recognized the man with the cape from Arkham. Dr. Strange. However Bruce didn’t show that he recognized him – Batman had seen him not Bruce Wayne.

Tony raised his head rather reluctantly.

“It’s not what you think” he cocked an eyebrow to his guest with a mock guilty expression as if
cought cheating and Bruce rolled his eyes, happy inside for his friend had found his cheery self. “Dr.
Strange, this is my best buddy, Bruce Wayne” he said standing and the man walked closer. “Bruce,
Dr. Strange: he found and captured Loki helping us find Joker and take you back.”

“Hardly” the doctor said shaking Bruce’s offered hand. “Pleased to meet you, Mr. Wayne.”

“Me too, Dr. Strange.”

“I was saying that I don’t deserve the credit Mr. Stark gives me.”
“Tony” he said. “Mr. Stark makes me look 33 years old, that is, ten years older than I am.”

Bruce raised his eyebrows and chuckled.

“No comments, please…” Tony mumbled.

Dr. Strange smiled.

“I was saying that I found Loki but he was already weak; and in Arkham…” he shuddered only from the memories. “I was useless…Tony told me that Batman saved me – I must thank the guy.”

“Good luck finding him” Tony mumbled “well, boys, excuse me but I have to make myself presentable.”

Stephen cocked an eyebrow.

“Plastic surgery?”

Bruce chuckled and Tony lolled his head to look at the doctor with narrowed eyes.

“I think I’ll like this guy…” he commented.

“Then Dr. Strange can come to the Manor with us” Bruce commented.

The man looked startled.

“Well, why not?”

“Nice then” Tony clearly in exhilarated mood patted the doctor and walked to his bedroom. “Fly me to the moon and let me play among the stars…”

Bruce’s face was radiating from a big smile when Dr. Strange looked at him.

“He is relieved…” the doctor said serious “he was desperate while you were missing.”

Bruce nodded.

“He would have killed Loki if I hadn’t put a shield around him.”

“Thank you, Doctor. I wouldn’t want Tony to kill…”

Stephen sat on the edge of the corner sofa right next to Bruce.

“Well, as a former doctor I detest killings too.”

Bruce frowned.

“Former?”

“I had a car accident that robbed me from my skills…despite all the surgeries I’ve been through” he chuckled “and spending almost all my fortune” he shook his head. “Nothing” he looked at his hands.”

Bruce pressed his lips; he could feel for the doctor. His eyes fell fleetingly on his own dead legs.

“Thor told me that you have skills that enabled you to locate Loki and you mentioned creating a shield that stopped Tony from killing Loki.”
Dr. Strange smiled.

“Yes, in my quest to find a way to overcome my limits I met people that taught me that I have some powers that I didn’t know…yet they can’t replace the skills I need to be again a surgeon.”

Bruce shook his head and noticed how Dr. Strange gazed at his wheelchair.

“You’re an admirable man, Mr. Wayne…Inspiration.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Me?”

“In the hurricane of my personal adversities I came across your story in the news…to tell you the truth I didn’t pay much attention then” he smirked “my pain was the entire world. But then Thor came to ask my help to find you and told me that you are a paraplegic, a multi-injury patient” Bruce didn’t say anything. “As I was searching for Loki I connected everything I heard about you: about the horrific abuse you suffered for eighteen years in the hands of your parents’ murderer and now about your paraplegia; the kidnapping…And I thought that you must be a very special human being since you managed through your tragedies to gain the respect and deep love of unique beings like Thor or Superman.”

“Thor is so kind and this kindness is that makes him so caring. As for Superman, he cares for everybody, right?”

Stephen lolled his head to the side.

“Thor was also ready to rip apart Loki for what he did to you. And before I reached his palace someone else had caught Loki.”

Bruce frowned: that was new information.

“Who?”

“I found Loki in the dungeon he held you but he wasn’t alone. An archer was ready to hit him with a golden arrow; he was mad, his worry for you vibrating from his entire existence.”

Bruce’s heart beat fast.

“An archer?”

“Dressed in dark green like Robin Hood.”

Bruce shook his head and rubbed the bridge of his nose, feeling the dizziness of the last hours worsening. Dr. Strange watched him worried.

“It can’t be…Thor told me that he couldn’t locate Thor and that meant that no mere god or mere mortal could find him.”

“That’s true; even in Loki’s weakened state his palace was concealed by strong magic…”

One thought cracked Bruce’s mind like a flash: Bruce, you’re an idiot… expected but also Master Anthony and another guest.

“I’m sure you missed me, Al” Tony said patting the older man’s back. “By the way this gent who wears my suit is Dr. Strange; he helped us find Bruce etc, etc.”

Alfred nodded kindly.

“I saw it on the news. It’s a real pleasure meeting you, sir.”

“The pleasure is all mine, mister…”

“Alfred; I’m Alfred.”

As soon as they reached the big arch of the grand salon the chorus began:

Happy Birthday to you…

Tony waved his hands like a maestro and Bruce acted the shocked to not ruin the surprise.

In the middle of the room was a big round table with a huge cake on; the candles were already lit.

Around the table stood Leslie, Lucius, Selina with Steve, Pepper, Jason with his mother, Matt and his fiance and Dick.

“Make a wish, Bruce” Selina said after the song ended and kissed him on the cheek.

Leslie had put the cake on a short trolley and brought it to Bruce for him to blow out the candles and when he did everyone clapped to Bruce’s amusement and uneasiness: it seemed like ages since he last celebrated his birthday. Shattered images crossed his mind swiftly as if from a really old movie: giggles of cheerful kids, his peers; happy children songs, pointy party hats in small heads; multicolored balloons and decorations; his parents beaming distributing presents to their little guests.

The huge cake – really huge for a short boy of eight – missing a part in his index finger’s shape because Bruce couldn’t fight the temptation and dove his finger in the cream. He had blown with all his strength because he wanted his wish to come true and his mother hugged and kissed him. He didn’t remember what that wish was…

His eyes became blank without realizing and he sensed Dick’s eyes on him filled with understanding and smiled to his people.

“I see you brought your old dirt bag friend” Pepper said after she leaned to kiss Bruce.

Tony wrapped his arms around her waist.

“I like girls dirt-talking!” he said and kissed her on the lips.

Ms. Todd was handing the plates with the cake.

Bruce accompanied by Dr. Strange guided his chair to Leslie and Lucius.

“Leslie, Lucius, let me introduce you Dr. Strange. Dr. Strange, Dr. Leslie Thompkins and Mr. Lucius Fox, two of my closest friends.”

“But I know Dr. Strange” Leslie said. “We had met briefly in a conference. I don’t know if he remembers me.”
Dr. Strange shook hands with her.

“Yes, I remember you: the fierce doctor from Gotham. And Mr. Fox” he shook hands with him “I had followed eagerly your work in bionic body parts and I have the feeling you’re ready to revolutionize science…”

Lucius smiled.

“I sure hope so, Dr. Strange, with Mr. Stark’s help. Your interest on our work is very flattering.”

The door bell was barely heard over the chats, the laughs and the light music. Alfred left to answer the door and Bruce followed him with his eyes.

When Alfred returned some random glances fell over there to stay.

Suddenly, a surprised, exhilarated voice hued with disbelief towered every other sound in the room.

“Granny!”

Dick rushed there and hugged his grandmother who had leaned and opened her arms; tears were sliding over his cheeks as he was crushed in the woman’s hug. However the boy lifted slightly his head from his grandmother’s chest and cast a sideways glance at Bruce who was looking at them smiling.
First of all I want to apologize” Bruce said looking at Dick who was still in his granny’s hug.

After Ms. Turner’s arrival the small party continued with more cheer since she wasn’t the only one who entered the Manor. Harvey Dent, Rachel and Mr. Petrou had come with her.

It was when Matt with his fiancé and Ms. Todd left, and Pepper drove Dr. Strange to Tony’s private jet in order to fly for New York that Bruce was ready to answer the questions that he knew Dick and his friends had. Jason had asked from his mother to let him stay at the Manor for the rest of the weekend.

They had settled in the salon.

Dick frowned in disbelief hearing Bruce; he was still exhilarated by his granny’s return: he was still uncertain if it was true or a dream.

“Apologize? You?” he asked.

Ms. Turner tilted her head to Bruce.

“Dick is right, son; we owe you so much.”

Bruce shook his head sensing his friends’ curious gazes: they didn’t know anything and they were surprised as well.

“Because of me Dick went through a great distress and agony all these months” he huffed “but I thought that it was the best solution.”

Ms. Turner nodded smiling.

“When Ms. Turner came here and told me about Zucco’s threats and her wish to make me your guardian I just couldn’t let things in that man’s hands waiting. Ms. Turner was sure that he had killed Dick’s father so what would have stopped him from doing that again? So I persuaded Ms. Turner to let me stage her disappearance until we managed to prove the truth about Zucco and send him to prison. Dick would be safe here during that.”

Dick exchanged glances with Jason who gaped and the older boy turned immediately back to Bruce who pressed his lips.

“So I arranged for Ms. Turner to go to Canada and live with Harvey and Rachel till things would be safe for her.”

The old woman smiled to her grandson. Bruce huffed.

“It was very difficult for her to spend Christmas without you, Dick; and it was really hard to calm her down and convince her to stay in Canada and not come back when she learnt that Zucco was challenging in court my guardianship.”

Ms. Turner nodded and caressed Dick’s hair.
“That’s true…I panicked; I was scared that Zucco could manage to take you. I wanted to take the plane to Gotham immediately.”

Rachel shook her head.

“It was impossible to reassure her; till Bruce called her and she was somewhat calmer.”

Harvey chuckled.

“But still we had the door locked just in case…”

Ms. Turner laughed.

“I’m so weak…”

Bruce moved his wheelchair to her and took her hands.

“On the contrary, you’re a very brave lady, Ms. Turner, and I’m glad I helped.”

Harvey looked at Bruce.

“Now you have to explain everything to the police – I’m sure you didn’t tell anything to them.”

Bruce blushed.

“No, because that would risk the plan; I hope Jim will understand.”

Tony smirked.

“If he doesn’t I’ll unleash my Stark charm: we’re buddies with Jim.”

Leslie snorted. She was watching from the armchair right of the fireplace.

“If your last resort is Anthony’s charm, you might end up in jail” she chuckled.

Tony nodded several times.

“Thanks for the vote of confidence!” he cocked his eyebrows and placed his palm over his heart “it means a lot, my lady!”

Dick was staring at Bruce with utter adoration.

“You gave me the greatest gift of all: my granny back.”

Bruce shook his head.

“I was the one who took her in the first place” he commented. “All your troubles with Zucco was because he sniffed my money.”

Dick grinned.

“I’m sure he’d hurt my granny if you hadn’t taken her away on time: he told me so last night… You’re so clever” the boy widened his eyes impressed “the way you blocked Zucco’s any access to the money – a perfect trap” he was ready to say more but he didn’t know if he should: the people who came with his granny might not know about Batman.

Jason made a really bad gesture taking his hand from petting Hero’s back.
“That asshole took what he deserved! I always hated the guts of Zucco…” he elbowed his friend in the ribs. “They couldn’a tell ya anythin’ ‘cause ya’d say everythin’ to him.”

“Ouch!” Dick exclaimed. “Ya coulda tell it without yar elbow” he mimicked Jason’s way.

Ms. Turner caressed Bruce’s blushed face.

“You’re an angel – our good angel.”

Bruce didn’t say anything because he couldn’t believe that: their loved ones were brutally murdered because of him.

“Of course you’re welcome to stay in the Manor as long as you want. And that goes for you too” he turned to Harvey who sat next to Rachel on the sofa. “It will be a pleasure for us.”

Rachel chuckled.

“Oh! I’m sure, you’re Bruce after all…”

Harvey patted Rachel’s back and looked at his father.

“We’re going to settle in Gotham now that Joker is back in custody and my suspension is almost over, I think I can start working here again.”

“And I managed to find a position here as well” Rachel commented and Mr. Petrou laughed.

“And I hope that Mr. Wayne will be so generous to give me a small work because I don’t think that anyone else in Gotham will want a former thug as an employee.”

Selina snorted.

“You’re better than many ‘dignified’ people I know…” she offered and Tony raised his eyebrows.

“I hope you don’t mean me…”

Selina tilted her head to him.

“I said ‘dignified’ and even with quotation marks” she made them in the air with her fingers “you don’t qualify.”

Tony yanked his head backwards.

“Thank goodness!”

Bruce shook his head amused.

“Mr. Petrou, your position waits for you – I’ve already spoken to Ms. Philips.”

“Thank you, Mr. Wayne.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Don’t mention it…”

Alfred was touched and proud of his young master but exchanging a look with Leslie knew that it was time for Bruce to get some rest. He walked towards him.
“As Master Bruce has already perfectly said it, all of you are welcome to stay with us… as for you, Master Bruce” Bruce closed his eyes in helplessness and both boys chuckled “it is high time you got some rest.”

Bruce nodded. It was true that he felt really tired but also he wanted to have some time alone to set his thoughts in a line.

Alfred took the handles of the wheelchair and Bruce looked at him.

“Alfred, you don’t have to come with me; you can stay.”

But Leslie stood from her armchair and walked to them.

“Yes, he has, young man; and I will come later to see you.”

Bruce nodded.

“Good night” he greeted the company and they did the same.

Alfred accompanied his young master to the master bedroom and helped him sit in the reclined seat of the bath tub much to Bruce’s uneasiness.

“Alfred, you really don’t have to do this…Please…”

“Leslie strictly ordered for you to not make any challenging movements. Especially, after the exhausting things you just did and the blows you took.”

Challenging, Bruce thought: supporting your body for a second and sliding it to the seat… He didn’t say anything though.

“Have your shower, sir, and I’ll bring your dinner. You need to take your medication” Bruce nodded. “I must insist that you wait for me and do not get out on your own.”

Bruce sighed.

“I’m not hurt, Alfred; there’s no need for all these.”

“Please, sir.”

The young man pressed his lips and just nodded.

Alfred left the bathroom and Bruce took off his clothes. He didn’t have any intention to take a shower yet he didn’t want to make Alfred and the others suspect that something was troubling him. He didn’t want to discuss anything with anyone yet; only with himself.

And for that he had to wait. Because Alfred returned surprisingly quickly and kept talking to him outside the glass windows of the tub as if the Englishman knew that he wanted to muse on things.

When Bruce finished, put on the bathrobe Alfred gave him and had to accept his butler’s help to sit at his waiting wheelchair.

His light dinner was waiting for him on the bed table; Alfred had the ‘luxury’ to let the bed table on the floor since Hero had stayed with the boys.

Bruce wore the pajamas Alfred had set on the bed and again with his butler’s help settled to the bed; of course Bruce spared Alfred from most of his weight. The Englishman set the special supporting pillows behind to Bruce’s back and the younger man began eating.

After he obediently took the handful of pills Alfred offered him Bruce was eager to plunge himself in work; thankfully, his tablet was on the nightstand tempting.

Alfred lifted the bed table and the corner of his eyes fell on the waiting tablet. He didn’t say anything just transferred the empty dinnerware on the silver tray. The Englishman turned to leave but he stopped and looked at his young master.

“Master Bruce, it would be too bold of me to ask you not to work too much on your tablet?” he asked in his stoic, composed way.

Bruce smiled for being caught.

“No; actually, it’d be ‘too normal’ of you, Alfred” he licked his lips. “It won’t be much: it’s just that if I don’t settle some things in my mind I won’t be able to sleep anyway.”

Alfred nodded hiding his emotions.

“Good night, Master Bruce” he said and left the room.

As soon as the door closed behind Alfred, Bruce grabbed the tablet; this seemed so childish to him – as if he was to watch a R movie that his parents forbade him to; he chuckled.

He touched the option that connected him with the monster processor of the cave. Dr. Strange’s description of the Arrow in Loki’s dudgeon rang some bells: it brought something to his mind. The wizard had said that the palace was concealed by strong magic that no common human or god could pass and then the archer was ready to kill the god with a golden arrow.

Bruce was scrolling frantically the data from the cave’s processor on his tablet screen looking for the image Dr. Strange’s description reminded him…

His finger stopped hovering over the screen; his eyes were shining but remained blank. An old parchment from a secret library specializing on the occult; an ancient painting covered an entire page. Bruce bit his lip: the answer lay inside his database all this time…Mocking him; his heart beat fast.

The left hand archer who killed gods with his golden arrows. Bruce felt dizzy: a gigantic figure with silver spikes for hair and two ivory small horns protruding from both edges of his forehead: an ancient god-demon.

He pressed his lips: the most powerful demon, the one who could kill gods with his golden arrows. Damn! He closed his eyes and pressed his hair on his head with both hands. Bagdana. All this time…

How could he be so blind?

It was so shocking that he actually felt numb for a few seconds: everything came back to him and finally had a perfect explanation.

Oliver Queen’s interest in him…yes, since Bagdana is the Arrow then he is Queen too: that was the reason the people who know him were speaking about him being different. It wasn’t coincidence that he first met Queen in the reception at the Avengers’ Tower when Superman danced with Diana being totally charmed by her. Queen would be the safe boat for the heartbroken Bruce…

Queen had returned from the dead supposedly saved by the Amazonian Princess but Bruce knew that she wasn’t the legendary Princess. That meant that Bagdana was working with her from the beginning…

Bruce remembered the way Queen spoke to him about eternal love that night in Cobblepot’s restaurant. Bruce fell asleep all of a sudden, only for Queen to take him to his suite: he was tired but certainly Bagdana did something to him.

That explains how Arrow knew his double identity so he guided Batman to the rooftop he knew that Superman and Diana was having sex; he wanted to make him break up with Superman knowing that this was going to be the final blow to finish what was accumulating the past months. After Batman left he also videotaped and published the scene not only to make things for Bruce more painful but also because he couldn’t resist his craving to humiliate Superman.

Now that Bagdana was revealed to be the Arrow was easy to understand how he could be found in different cities… Bruce frowned recalling what had happened in Chicago: he had heard about Arrow’s appearance there and his focus was there – he had also asked Selina to make a research. Bagdana knew that Bruce would have wanted to learn more about him so he was sure that his focus would be on Chicago at the right time… At the right time, when the explosion – probably his doing - would happen and Superman would run there to save people…exactly, for Diana to appear and help him ending up to their passionate embrace and kiss.

“She is my star…” Superman had said.

And Bagdana knew that Bruce was watching and that he’d take another blow which the demon hope that would make him forget the hero and find haven to the love of someone who understood… Queen.

He shook his head; the back garden after the attack in the Palisades when Arrow saved him…Queen had come in the Manor.

“She is my star…” Superman had said with his velvet voice omitting entirely his usual smugness. “Your tears are the most precious gems on earth…like diamonds…only purer.”

Of course, the demon of the Earth and gems always loved speaking using gems. He remembered in the dark basement of Ra’s Al Ghul he was childishly amazed in his horror seeing the demon’s gigantic body taking the texture of every gemstone in the world.

“Sapphire and emerald in your eyes…” he heard again the ironic voice of the demon in that basement “Like the rarest star sapphire no human will ever see…”

He failed to make the connection then…

“You know they love you; you know they want to understand and you wish they could…and then you wish they never understand you…because what they can’t understand is for their own good… Right, Bruce? You long for someone from your loved ones to understand but at the same time you dread the moment they will see what you have inside…the darkness, the loneliness, your need to be free…” Queen had said after the attack.

Of course, Bagdana knew everything about darkness and loneliness.

“…it is odd how evil is drawn to purity…” Arrow had said.

Bruce snorted: Bagdana knew everything about evil…

All this time, he believed that the fake Diana was the key but in the end, the key was Oliver Queen…

It wasn’t only one impostor pretending the Amazonian but another one pretending the businessman. That’s why the Arrow was left handed while Queen before the shipwreck was right handed – he probably, didn’t expect Bruce to find out that Arrow and Queen was the same person; that was why the head of his legal department told Bruce that Oliver seemed to him like a different person. That’s why Queen was so displeased when his old friend from college met them at the restaurant. That explained why Queen was lousy in archery while the Arrow was a perfect archer: that must have suited Bagdana perfectly into hiding that Arrow and Queen was the same man.

He rubbed his chin: and he didn’t suspect Bagdana…But how he was to? Months ago he had thought it for an instance and asked Thor to check Bagdana but the Asgardian had gone to Bagdana’s prison and saw him there, chained, weak…Bruce sighed: obviously, the cunning demon knew how to fool the god into believing that he was still there.

So he had to face again Bagdana? Bagdana who once again was powerful…The prospect was unpleasant and Bruce felt a stone crushing his chest. Bruce wasn’t afraid of him, of confronting him again – he knew deep inside that the demon wouldn’t kill him: Bagdana preferred to enslave him and that made Bruce’s spine shudder. But still it wasn’t fear that stirred that feeling of fatigue…

However he would confront him…but he needed to figure out the whole scheme first because someone really powerful freed the demon. Both Ubu and Thor said that Bagdana couldn’t escape the prison if not with the help of someone with great power.

And given what Bruce knew about Diana being Vivian she wasn’t the one who freed him. On the contrary – Bruce cocked an eyebrow – Bagdana was the explanation of how she managed to impersonate the Amazon Princess and have her powers: flying, being extremely strong, using weapons that Jor El’s analysis showed that weren’t made with anything human related.

Bruce huffed and fisted his hands: that’s why Clark was their target because their break up could only be Bagdana’s wish. The one hiding behind the demon would prefer to kill Superman to have him off his way but that wasn’t enough for Bagdana. He wanted Superman beguiled to hurt Bruce; to make him vulnerable to someone else’s love – someone who supposedly was a mere human and understood him since he had similar experiences.

He frowned: what about the real Queen?

Dick followed his granny to the bedroom Alfred guided her. The Englishman after showing her the room discreetly left them alone knowing that they had too many things to discuss.

Ms. Turner opened her small suitcase to take a nightgown. She felt her grandson’s eyes on her and turned to him smiling; she hugged the boy and kissed his hair.

“I missed you so much, honey! It was so hard away from you; every moment I wanted to take the airplane and return. I was so afraid; so devastated that I had to leave you behind after everything you’ve been through.”

Dick raised his eyes to her face.

“I was sure that you had died…” he said and tightened his embrace around his granny’s waist burying his face to her chest. “Oh, granny, I feel so bad for the things I said to you…I hurt you for Zucco’s sake…I’m stupid, stupid.”
Ms. Turner caressed his hair.

“You believed in him…The scum knew how to gain that – he did that to your father too…And now he used your father and your need to find someone to connect you with him to take advantage of you. Believe me, I didn’t care for anything other than your safety. I knew this man was dangerous – I was always suspecting that he killed your father.”

“And I didn’t believe you…I can only imagine how much I made you hurt…”

“Come on, Dick…”

“I’m sorry; I’m so sorry and so happy that you are alive” the boy said in one breath and continued that way. “When Zucco admitted everything and was ready to…to kill me” a sharp inhale escaped Ms. Turner. “I was sure that he had killed you too.”

Ms. Turner focused her eyes on the window opposite her.

“I was sure he was going to do that when I came to Bruce” Dick raised his eyes and looked at her. “I wanted to secure you from Zucco’s clutches because if he killed me he would have been your only relative – he had threatened me that night of Thanksgiving in the gym.”

Dick remembered; he had seen his granny dead pale slumped in a chair that night and Bruce with Selina had helped her.

“I asked from Bruce to be your guardian because I knew he cared about you. He was reluctant because he didn’t want to force you to live with him but in the end he accepted. However when I told him about Zucco’s threats and my suspicions he suggested that we shouldn’t wait for Zucco to do again his move – this time we should have the initiative; he helped me to ‘disappear’ from Gotham and sent me to Harvey Dent and Rachel in Canada. He wanted me to be safe until police found everything about Zucco.”

Dick nodded: police…yeah, sure. Granny obviously, didn’t know the truth about Bruce and better not learn. But Dick who knew the truth was sure that Bruce had researched the case of his father’s death and found the needed evidence to convict Zucco. That explained Mr. Breizic’s return to Gotham. Bruce organized the charity gala with the US national team of gymnastics to bring his father’s trainer in touch with Dick and to learn more about Zucco’s relationship with his father.

The boy blinked: the more he found about Bruce the more he admired him. He wanted to learn everything about Bruce and Batman: about what he’d been through; about how he managed to defeat both Falcone and that other man who Bruce said that trained and had him under his control.

“Bruce did so much for us and I was an ass to him” he admitted “but you must already know that.”

Ms. Turner narrowed her eyes and sat on the mattress patting the mattress next to her for Dick to sit too.

“No.”

“I thought you were in contact with Bruce.”

“I was.”

Dick frowned.

“And he didn’t tell you what I’ve done to him?”
Ms. Turner’s expression became strict.

“No, he didn’t tell me anything but you, young man… You made his life difficult, don’t you?”

Dick gulped.

“You know I hated him and I wanted to be with Zucco. I thought that your disappearance was another proof of how bad he was for my life and being forced to live with him seemed…it was awful; a nightmare. I know I was wrong; I apologized to him…”

Ms. Turner smiled and caressed Dick’s cheeks.

“That’s my boy… I hope from now on you be nicer to him. I’m sure that Bruce is very happy now; he was really sad for the pain you felt – he blamed everything on himself.”

Dick now was sure for that and made his guts twist.

“And I made that worse… But I…I regret it and from now on…I hope…”

“You two will be friends.”

Dick nodded and gulped.

“You’re right to choose him as my guardian; he is the best.”

“I’m glad you see that now, Dick; I want you to find your peace now…”

Dick hugged tighter his granny grateful but also trying to prove to himself that his granny was really there and not a wonderful dream from which he would be abruptly awoken.

Ms. Turner caressed his hair.

“I’m here, sweetheart; I’m here now…”

Bruce didn’t believe that the real Queen was dead or still stranded to an island or prisoner somewhere. There was no doubt that Bagdana found the man and possessed him: Bruce’s many files about the demon said that he was doing that throughout the ages.

And suited the demon to wear the human body since nobody could suspect that he wasn’t the real Queen; even the medical tests he went through after his return showed that he was the same person. Not to mention that that way Bagdana would have access to Queen’s memories and personal information so that the impersonation would be perfect.

He tapped his fingers on the mattress thinking…the Black Butterfly was able to keep the demon away from him… but Queen, Bagdana, had no problem to be near him… How? Unless… He huffed: Bagdana was ‘wearing’ a human’s body so he could avoid the powerful talisman’s defense. Bruce yanked his head backwards closing his eyes.

Bagdana all along… He wouldn’t lose the chance to use his given back powers to control Clark through someone who was set to impress him. The legendary Amazonian Princess was the best candidate: gorgeous, powerful, fighting for justice, a goddess who could supposedly understood Superman.

And they started it in Thasos bringing the fake Diana to intervene during that attack against him; she saved him from his attackers but at the same time blew them into dust so that no traces would be left leading to the mastermind – the one who freed Bagdana.

The odd creatures were sent by him/her because Bruce didn’t believe that these creatures were Bagdana’s minions…

And then the way the fake Diana appeared at the burglar of the LexLab in Metropolis helping Superman…like she knew where the burglars were to hit. She definitely knew because the one who ordered the burglar told her when to intervene; she couldn’t have just heard the alarms because she wasn’t the real Amazon therefore she didn’t have the enhanced hearing of Superman. Bagdana who knew the plan told her to be there.

Bruce was sure that for finding out who was behind all these, who freed and gave Bagdana his powers back, he should follow the only traces he had. And the only one acting openly was Vivian. Her actions must be the key to unravel the mystery.

She cast an irresistible influence on Superman but Bruce wasn’t sure if that was one of her skills for which Bagdana chose her or another work of her partners. Bagdana was known for enchanting mortals into copulating with them and he had given Ra’s the ingredient to create the substance that would make Superman addicted to Bruce. Yet if that was the case Jor El would have recognized the pattern when examined Clark but he spoke about something different.

Well, Bagdana knew that Bruce would have searched the reason behind Superman’s changed attitude and certainly wouldn’t have risked so he chose a female partner who would be able to do that maybe with a little enhancing by the demon. Judging from his flashback with Vivian back in Dolcetto she wouldn’t lose the chance to ‘defeat’ him in Superman’s affection: besides, her diminishing remarks and her gleeful glares showed that clearly.

He noted mentally to start digging all the archived stories about news connected with plants since from his memories and Tony’s description of her apartment she definitely had something with plants. And one of the last times Clark approached him sexually, he complained about his perfume asking for something more flowery, clearly seeking Vivian’s perfume.

He frowned as he remembered the attack at Metropolis’ underground: it was a crucial point for Diana’s influence on Superman. She came there to help Clark and Tony to stop the supposed terrorists. Also, she took care to finish off Morgan Edge that supposedly ordered the attack and was the leader of the Intergang…

Intergang…Bruce bit his lip: can Bagdana and the fake Diana be connected with Intergang? Because he was never persuaded that the Edge was indeed the leader; also, the way the ‘terrorists’ and those who committed the raids to the LexLabs were brainwashed could just be that they were mind controlled. Bruce never believed in coincidence and the fake Diana’s presence each time an Intergang crime occurred wasn’t one.

Vivian worked with Bagdana so the fact she knew the exact time and place the Intergang would hit showed that Bagdana was the one who was informing her; so Bagdana was an insider to the gang but he couldn’t be the leader because Intergang was active before Diana appeared and thus before Bagdana was freed. And why an ancient demon working with a gang of mortals if its leader wasn’t the one who freed him…Wait…

The point where his reasoning brought him was shocking…

Freeing Bagdana was something that demanded too much power and definitely not human power… But if this was the case then…well, Bruce was almost sure that Mannheim was the leader of Intergang so Mannheim freed Bagdana which makes him…

Bruce narrowed his eyes feeling his head splitting in half; he rubbed his forehead.

During his one meeting with Mannheim he felt something odd as if someone was trying to breach his mind. That would suit the pattern of mind control of those committing the crimes for Intergang. And the attack against him by the mind controlled thugs came after he challenged Mannheim about the items he found in LEXLABS.

The items…the strange items that Mannheim wanted desperately enough to raid LexLabs and exact his power to free Luthor from jail. Nobody could tell who moved the wheels to make powerful people forget the laws and order Luthor’s release.

The strange machine that Luthor was building for Mannheim…the way Luthor acted around the businessman/gangster totally matched the brain control pattern.

And he freed Bagdana: Ubu had told him that only a god would be able to free the demon from his prison.

Bruce huffed exhausted and angry, feeling hammers hitting his head and his heart heavy: honestly, he was tired of gods and god-like beings trying to harm humans! Except Thor…

He felt all the fatigue of the last days and months weighing on his bones and muscles; his eyes ached yet his mind was a stormy sea and he was sure that he wouldn’t be able to sleep. For the first time after long he wanted to sleep: he needed some peace; some break from thinking…

Soft knocks on the door; he closed his eyes – probably, someone was going to scold him for being still up.

“Come in” he didn’t want to pretend that he wasn’t working on his tablet but he closed the files he had opened because for now he didn’t want anyone to know.

Both Tony and Selina entered; Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“I’m going to be scolded by both of you?” he asked amused.

Selina moved graciously towards the bed shaking her index finger with a smile on her face.

“I caught this fella ready to knock your door and I don’t trust him alone with you.”

Tony crossing the room rolled his eyes.

“My cheek still hurts from her slap…” he mumbled and Bruce raised his eyebrows impressed.

“You did that?” he asked Selina who sat on the mattress next to him.

“Of course! He hit you and left you unconscious for Joker…”

“She is going to bring that up to me for an eternity…” Tony huffed.

“And a day!” Selina snapped to him.

“Kids!” Bruce said chuckling. “Behave…It’s over now.”

“How are you?” Tony asked dragging a chair to sit next to the bed.
“Good enough” Bruce said.

“Leslie will drop by soon to check on you” Selina said.

“And imagine her reaction seeing you working instead of sleeping…” the billionaire from Malibu mumbled widening his eyes.

Bruce tilted his head towards him and cast him a lopsided glance.

“I finished my work” he said and closed his tablet placing it on the nightstand. “And I want to sleep yet…”

“What?” Selina asked hugging his shoulders.

“I think I’ll need some sedative…” he said looking both of them.

Tony nodded.

“So many things happened… you must have too many tension gathered: we should have asked Matt to stay and give a good massage.”

Bruce shook his head.

“At least, I hope you’re happy that the kid and his granny are back together” Tony added.

Bruce grinned.

“I am…”

Selina smiled too.

“You just couldn’t stay with your arms crossed and watch as Zucco was ready to hurt the granny… so you set things according to your plans, huh?” she pinched playfully his cheek and Tony giggled. “So Batman-ish!”

Tony nodded and stood.

“I’m bringing Leslie.”

“Thanks, Tony” Bruce said and his friend just smiled.

Selina watched Tony closing the door behind him and then turned to Bruce pursing her lips.

“You miss that alien bastard, huh?”

Bruce raised his eyes to her puzzled: leave it to Selina to read him like an open book.

“Huh?” he pretended indifference.

Selina cocked an eyebrow and crooked her mouth.

“Forget who I am? Your poker face doesn’t work with me, buster…” Bruce lowered his eyes and she took gently his chin to lock their eyes.

“I know you’ll reveal the truth about that bitch and then the alien will crawl back to you begging… But I want you then to be so hard to him… make him beg on his knees” her voice was filled with rage and satisfaction on imaging that. “He must pay for the pain he caused you… in your heart and your body. Don’t be lenient to him!”

A faint smile appeared on Bruce’s face.

“It’s over, Sel…whatever might happen won’t change that: it’s over.”

Selina pressed her lips: she wanted Bruce to punish Superman but she knew that Bruce’s happiness and love was to that alien’s hands… Her fingers combed gently Bruce’s messy locks. Selina knew that Bruce’s heart had turned into a stone in regards to love but a stone that was bleeding inside.

Bruce sensed that his friend was absorbed in her thoughts and grinned.

“What?”

Selina shook her head.

“I just wish you had fallen in love with someone else.”

It felt like returning home. Lois smiled as she walked inside the reporter’s space in the Daily Planet’s building. Some of her colleagues waved to her upon seeing her.

“Nice job, Lo” Torry said to her from the desk on Lois’ desk right “I knew that if Kent could catch Batman you could too.”

Lois saw with the corner of her eyes Clark glancing at her and shrugged.

“I was lucky.”

The red haired woman cocked an eyebrow and grinned.

“Yeah…As if Lois Lane relies on luck…”

Lois had hardly settled in her chair and opened her PC when Perry came out of his office and straight to her. He patted her back to Lois’ crooked smile.

“That’s what I call a reporter with instinct: your personal visit to Gotham gave the Planet a hot exclusive. Well done, girl!”

Lois shook her head.

“I’ve got the right timing. Or I’m a jinx…”

Perry grinned.

“So you’ve gained a new partner?”

That made Clark jerk and focus his sensitive hearing there; he might have problems with Lois lately but he didn’t want to lose her neither as a friend nor as a partner. Actually, he missed their friendship when he wasn’t filled with Diana’s presence.

Lois was sure that Clark was overhearing.

“Nah, unfortunately Vicky is an avid Gothamite and wants to stay in her city” she rolled her eyes “of course nobody can understand this but…whatever…” she shrugged. “Anyway, after the exclusive with Batman and something else she prepares, Vale won’t have a problem finding a new better job. Of course, she is willing to co-operate with me and the Planet in the future.”

Clark sighed in relief.

Perry shrugged.

“Okay; I can’t have all the stars in my roster… I’m satisfied with what I already have. Besides collaboration is also nice.”

He made to leave but Lois cleared her throat.

“What about a raise for your ‘girl’?” she asked amused knowing already his reaction.

Perry mimicked her clearing of throat.

“You better than anyone know about the financial crisis, Lois” she cocked her eyebrows smirking.

The Planet’s chief patted once again Lois’ back causing her sideways glance and returned to his office, stopping for a bit to another desk to give some orders.

Clark was sitting on fire: he felt the urge to go and speak to Lois, explain to her why he didn’t go to New York during the attack. But hesitated; he was rubbing the rim of his glasses for several minutes immersed in his indecisiveness. Meanwhile, Lois was absorbed in working at her PC or at least that was the impression.

Clark rolled his eyes irritated from his own hesitation: finally, he stood and walked to his friend’s desk.

“Nice work, Lois” he said and Lois turned to him.

“Thanks, Clark.”

“I want to talk to you.”

Lois huffed.

“No need for that – I’m busy” she said and Clark understood that she was still pissed that he didn’t help with the attack.

“Please, Lois” he said locking his eyes with hers.

Lois felt like the old times; as if the old, pre-Diana Clark was back. She crooked her mouth and sighed.

“Let’s go” she stood and moved forward outside the crowded reporters’ space because she knew that what they’d say shouldn’t be heard by others.

They ended up at the building’s rooftop with the Planet's logo, the enormous globe above them. It was for them both one of their beloved places. Clark gazed the city’s skyline breathing the air and the familiar sounds.

Lois was looking at him impatiently: she wanted to believe that he might find his senses but doubt it. She crossed her arms over the chest.

“Well?” she asked.
“Congratulations on the video! Is there a director’s cut with Batman kissing Thor in the end?” he asked raising an eyebrow.

Lois frowned: her hopes being crashed.

“What nonsense is that?”

Clark crooked his mouth in irony and Lois rolled her eyes.

“Is this why you wanted to speak to me? Because if that so, I have work to do” she turned to leave but Clark touched her shoulder.

She looked at him.

“Look, Lois, I know you’re mad that I didn’t help with the New York attack.”

Lois tilted her head on the side.

“Super intelligence…” she snidely remarked.

He gulped the irony.

“You must understand that going there would only serve the S.H.I.E.L.D.’s and the Avengers’ purposes. Do you really trust those people? Only a couple of months ago S.H.I.E.L.D. was revealed to be working on establishing its status quo in the world.”

“That was the League of Shadows and S.H.I.E.L.D. and the Avengers fought along with you to root out the League. You have an eidetic memory, did you forget about that?”

Clark shook his head.

“They did. But look who’s in charge now…Tony Stark. Do you trust that air head? And look at the Avengers: a god, a former assassin, an uncontrolled beast, a soldier accustomed to obey orders” Lois pursed her lips. “Do you trust them that they won’t go awry?”

Lois shrugged.

“How can I?” she said innocently. “Even Superman went awry…”

Clark jerked his head huffing.

“Lois! I’m still Clark…nothing has changed” Lois shook her head in disbelief. “I can’t be connected with them; it’d be like giving them my blessing to do whatever they want. If people see me with them then everyone will blindly believe and follow them.”

Lois focused her sharp gaze in his eyes.

“Wake up, buddy! This is exactly what is happening now. Superman turned his back on people when they needed him the most; the Avengers and Flash saved them and people are grateful as they were all this time to you. The only one that is losing his path is you, Clark.”

Clark lowered his eyes and inhaled deeply; Lois licked her lips: she loved the alien fool and was sorry to see him like this.

“You truly believed what you just told me or it is just her spells that make you take her words for yours?”
Clark raised his eyes and looked at her frowned.

“She wants the best for me! She is the only one who accepts me as I am without preaching; without turning her back on me just because I don’t do what she considers right; without trying to boss me around.”

Lois was pressing her foot down.

“But she is bossing you around, farmboy! Do you really believe that I – you know me over a decade – and your mother have turned our backs on you just from selfishness? Get a grip! You were whining because Bruce didn’t want to trust your love; you fought to make the man trust you and open his heart and then after he did that enormous leap of faith, because of this woman you snubbed his love in the worst possible way: cheating him!”

Clark closed his eyes and pressed his hair on his head.

“I was wrong with Bruce – I thought I loved him but it wasn’t love…When I met Diana, I realized that and, believe me, I tried to resist to not hurt Bruce but I couldn’t. If I had stayed with Bruce I would be fooling him and he doesn’t deserve that.”

Lois snorted.

“It was he that kicked you out – you told me. You wouldn’t have a problem lying to him and have them both; and that alone tells me that you’ve changed.”

“Lois, why you don’t accept my choice?”

Lois stabbed him with her eyes.

“Because from the moment you met her you’re not yourself, Clark! Especially, since you broke up with Bruce and live with her all the time, things get worse and worse.”

Clark shook his head.

“It’s not like this!”

Lois was beyond pissed; she clenched her jaw.

“Bruce was kidnapped by Joker with Loki’s help!” she spat in his face and Clark frowned. “You didn’t want to join Avengers during the attack in order to…whatever nonsense you said but why you didn’t help Bruce?”

Clark felt as if one of Thor’s thunders spiced with Kryptonite had hit him.

“I didn’t hear anything.”

Lois shook her head.

“Jim Gordon and Bruce’s friends decided to keep it secret – perhaps they reveal it now that things got calm. But this is no excuse for Superman. He might have broken up with Bruce but he still could hear the man’s despair – he was monitoring his vitals for months; he might have broken up with him but the hero I knew wouldn’t ignore it when he’d be in danger.”

Clark remembered the moment that for an instant he caught Bruce’s vitals; his fatigue, his agony… He believed that it was for Thor but actually Bruce was a captive, subject to Joker’s sick intentions. Something clenched inside him.
“What happened?” he asked quietly.

Lois licked her lips.

“Joker was working with Quinzel…”

“The…”

“Yes, the head of the Arkham Asylum so he was holding Bruce there: I can’t– and I don’t want to - imagine what a madman like Joker did to Bruce with the help of two deranged psychiatrists.”

Clark felt a painful pinch in his heart hearing that.

“Thor along with a man in a burgundy cape, Stark, Catwoman and Batman rushed there to free Bruce. Stark took Bruce back to the Manor and Batman caught Joker and helped Thor and the other man to overcome the effect from Crane’s toxins” she cocked her eyebrows with irony. “It seems that Batman who brought the Avengers into the case of the League of Shadows still trusts them.”

“How do you know about Batman and the League?”

Lois shook her head impatient.

“The League was working for years in Gotham and Batman was the one who led FBI to eliminate the League from Gotham; well, only someone with insider knowledge could have had that knowledge not only to manage that but also orchestrate such a precise operation in world scale to eliminate the danger once and for all…”

Clark was astounded not because Lois figured out Batman’s role but for what he learnt that took place in Arkham; of course he knew better than Lois so he knew that Bruce saved himself and caught Joker. He looked at Lois who was regarding him with crooked mouth.

“Is he alright?” he asked her “I mean, he is still recovering and must be under medication so while in Joker’s hands he…”

Lois closed her eyes and ruffled her hair.

“For fuck’s sake, Clark: You can find out yourself” she said.

And for an instance Clark thought about doing it but immediately crossed out the option to go to him.

“I won’t go to him – Diana doesn’t deserve that.”

Lois growled.

“But Bruce deserved to see you and her fucking on a rooftop?!” she jerked her head. “I didn’t mean to go there; but you can monitor his vitals, don’t you?”

“No…”

“Okay! He is fine! More so since that Zucco guy who wanted to take Grayson from him was arrested: police found evidence that he staged the accident that killed Richard’s father.”

Clark shook his head in disbelief: police, yeah, sure…That sounded more like something Bruce did: he investigated the case and revealed the truth.

Lois turned to leave but Clark touched her forearm.
“What?” she snapped.

Clark pressed his lips.

“I want us to be friends, Lois.”

“I never stopped being a friend…of the real Clark. It’s you I care about, you asshole: get a grip before it’s too late!”

She rushed opposite him towards the door to the interior and Clark didn’t try to stop her. He turned to the morning city and took a deep inhale of breath: he felt divided – one part of him feeling guilty and the other, the stronger was saying to him that he did nothing wrong.

He couldn’t always run behind Bruce; besides Bruce himself didn’t want him to. Clark was with Diana and he was happy: Lois and his Ma didn’t believe that and were worried about him. Also, both women were too fond of Bruce to accept that Clark chose someone else.

Lois and his Ma were doing the same mistake with him: confusing love with sympathy. Both women were sympathetic to Bruce and believed that this was love and wanted Clark to continue be with him.

He was sure that if they knew Diana as he did then they would understand him. On the other hand, that was impossible to happen: Diana didn’t know that he was raised by humans neither that he was working 9-5. So maybe she didn’t accept him as he was?

He shook his head in the negative: no, Diana was perfect for him; she accepted him as he was; she loved him.

And Diana didn’t have to endure their assessment. She loved him and Clark loved her and his people would have to accept that.

Darkseid in his real form stood in the middle of the vast throne hall under the Mannheim Mansion; his enormous bluish body towered Granny Goodness in his right and Bagdana at his left.

In front of them the air had transformed in a frameless screen where the battle at the Avengers’ Tower was replayed.

Darkseid laughed.

“If they had a hard time winning this then they are really pathetic! This circus was a playground compared to what I have for them,”

Goodness laughed like a maniac with her eyes shining gleefully.

“I can’t wait for the time this horrible planet and its pathetic forms of life are at my disposal!” she hissed.

Darkseid turned his head to her.

“I’m sure, my dear, that you will make the perfect use for them.”

Bagdana however was watching thoughtful without commenting and Goodness walked to him, her eyes watching him ready to spit poison.
“He obviously has a soft spot for them – Master, you can’t trust him.”

Bagdana sniffed at her with a gaze that didn’t bother even to be hostile; he chuckled and looked at Darkseid.

“Making judgements is not the reason you hired her, right?” he looked at her again sensing Darkseid’s eyes on him. “My dear, in case you forget that: I’m a demon: I torture and kill humans for millions of years; I hate them more than you and your Master can imagine. So, go do your job and don’t waste my time.”

Goodness growled and Bagdana smirked just snorting at her before turning to Darkseid.

“Do what you want with all these losers but don’t harm Batman and Bruce Wayne: remember that they belong to me.”

Darkseid clenched his jaw.

“Nothing belongs to you! Everything is mine and I decide how to reward my servants.”

Bagdana shrugged indifferent.

“Call it as it serves better your ego but do what you promised me.”

Darkseid yanked his head and walked around the ongoing battle.

“That Batman guy doesn’t seem to worth my attention” he said and Bagdana crooked his mouth. “He didn’t bother to join the battle probably too scared for that, and I haven’t seen him doing anything anyway” he turned to his demon. “Maybe he doesn’t even exist?”

Bagdana crossed his arms over his chest that was dressed in black leather vest.

“Believe me: it is better to not meet him…”

Granny Goodness snorted.

“You talk as if he is a god and can stand before the greatness of Darkseid. That’s blasphemy!”

Bagdana shrugged.

“Have it your way…”

Darkseid narrowed his eyes and looked at Bagdana obviously thinking hard.

“You only demand things as if you have any right to them, Bagdana; what’s your contribution? Even a slave like Luthor offers me better services than you.”

Bagdana’s grin was wide.

“Luthor won’t give you Superman; you knew from the start that only I could give you him and that was the reason you freed me.”

Darkseid’s irony vanished from his face and he rushed to the demon, locking their eyes.

“I doubt you can do that. I will face and vanquish the Kryptonian because he is not a match for me” he sniggered. “You can’t give me the Kryptonian because he is stronger than you more so because now he has the Amazon helping him.”
Bagdana cocked his thick eyebrows.

“Really now?” he patted Darkseid’s shoulder and the god glared at him. “Trust me: you’ll soon realize that I indeed worth my reward.”

Chapter End Notes

When I was ready to write the chapter about Bruce getting Dick's guardianship I faced a struggle: I was indecisive between 'killing' Dick's granny or keeping her alive staging her disappearance. In the end, I favored the first option because I just couldn't accept that Bruce would have known about Zucco's threats and just let things happen. I think it suit better Batman's personality to direct things rather than just reacting to them. I hope you liked it.
“Good morning, Martha.”

The woman gasped surprised hearing the familiar voice from her receiver. It was a beautiful but cold Sunday morning and she didn’t expect any phone call; the truth was that Clark used to call her at Sundays but not so early and after what they told in their last communication she doubted it. And definitely she didn’t expect her friends to call this time of the day.

Lately Martha was in a very bad mood, almost depressed. She hadn’t felt so bad since Jonathan’s death. Of course she didn’t stop her social life with her friends in Smallville yet anyone who knew her well enough could tell she wasn’t her usual self.

“Bruce! My dear!” from all the people Martha didn’t expect Bruce to be on the other end of the line but on the other hand, now she thought about it, she should have expected that.

“How are you, Martha?”

The woman chuckled.

“I should have asked that first…”

“I’m fine and you?”

Martha rubbed her forehead.

“What can I say? You called because obviously you know and” she smiled “you’re concerned about me, right, sweetheart? Thank you.”

Bruce shook his head. He was in the Master bedroom still in his pajamas; he should have been still sleeping especially since Leslie gave him a sedative last night but his concern about the kind lady wake him up earlier. Before calling Martha he put the filter that would stop anyone from overhearing their discussion.

“There’s no need to thank me, Martha. I…I saw what happened in New York and my thoughts are with you.”

Martha laughed bitterly.

“My dear, dear boy! You know me really good…yet my condition is nothing compared with those who lost their loved ones there while he wasn’t there to help.”

Bruce sighed.

“You’re so sad – your voice made that clear. Martha, I called to reassure you that he remains the man we know. I understand your worry yet things are not as they look.”

Martha smiled and shook her head.

“You always defend him, dear…But you can’t deny that he has changed; he has lost his path. I’m afraid… My only agony about him was that he might turn evil one day and now I see…”

Bruce just couldn’t bear to hear Ms. Kent’s strong but touched voice; his insides twisted hearing the word ‘evil’ uttered for Clark.
“No, Martha! That’s not true… Do not believe that. He is not evil” he huffed “please, do not give up on him. Don’t despair…”

Ms. Kent sighed.

“I can’t give up on him, can I? He is my baby…but that doesn’t mean that I’m not seeing what’s happening: people needed him and he turned his back on them; he ignored their need.”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Martha, you must believe me: it was just a bad moment – he hasn’t changed. He is not evil in any way.”

“That woman influences him in a bad way but he should be able to distinguish wrong from right” she said sternly. “Jonathan and I should have managed that all these years.”

Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose; it was because of him that Clark got in troubles. Bagdana did this to Clark to take the Man of Steel away from him; the demon wanted to hurt Bruce but in the way he hurt other people too – innocent people like Ms. Kent.

“And you managed that perfectly, Martha: you raised a great person. Please, trust me, Martha, when all this ends you’ll realize that it wasn’t his fault at all” he couldn’t say more to her because he was afraid that her love might urge her to hasty moves and revelations that would trigger Clark’s most hostile reactions.

Martha smiled; in other case she would be happy for that but now what she sensed in Bruce’s voice only made her melancholic.

“You love him so much, son, I wish he had appreciated that as much as he should and given you a fraction of the love you’re giving him.”

Bruce pressed his lips; he didn’t want people speak about that.

“I just know that he remains the man we knew…”

Martha hesitated but in the end decided to go forward.

“But he hurt you: both your heart and your body.”

Bruce jerked and frowned: she couldn’t know that. Clark wouldn’t admit that to his mother.

“No, he didn’t. Martha, he would never hurt me…”

Martha sighed and looked the morning view of the fields from the living room’s small window at her side. She closed her eyes.

“I hope he didn’t, honey; but if he can do the things he does now, I’m afraid that he wouldn’t hesitate to be violent to you.”

Bruce gulped and felt sweat drops on his forehead. He saw again Clark’s enraged eyes over him that night in his bed, before he slapped him in the face.

“I owed that to you, Bruce!” he had sneered.

“He didn’t, Martha…He was always perfect to me till the end” it was a lie and he hated that he was lying to her yet Bruce couldn’t hurt the kind lady anymore – it would break her if she heard the her son reached the point of abuse. Besides, it wasn’t completely a lie: Clark would have never done that without that mind control.

“Thank you, sweetheart” the woman said really grateful. “For trying to offer me comfort.”

“It’s not just that, Martha…” he hesitated indecisive if he should tell her the truth or not. “Martha, just trust me: there’s something else…Things aren’t as they look.”

Martha frowned. She always had the impression that Bruce was much more than everyone saw to him. If he said something then it must be like that.

“Bruce, what’s going on?”

“Just, trust me, Martha. I promised you once that I’ll always take care of him and I promise you that again.”

Martha sighed.

“He told me that you saved his life once…so it goes without saying that I trust that you’ll protect him again…though it should have been the opposite” she chuckled. “But, honey, I must know the truth about him.”

Bruce rubbed his forehead. Of course…

“Believe me, Martha, I feel your agony but it is better if we don’t say anymore right now. You have my word that when the time comes I’ll tell you everything. Just...just, trust me.”

“I do, Bruce. And even if I sound panicked” she chuckled “the fact that you’re there for him it’s a great relief for me. But...you must take care of yourself too, son.”

“Do not worry about me, Martha…”

Martha stayed silent for a few seconds.

“If only he knew how much you love him… then he’d have realized how wrong he was.”

Bruce shook his head.

“That doesn’t matter, Martha. Just have faith in him as…”

“As you do?” she completed for him in a sympathetic voice; and since Bruce didn’t comment. “I have faith in you, son.”

“Thank you, Martha.”

As he ended the call he felt the urge to apologize to her because her son was in danger because of him. But he didn’t do it because he should have to explain everything – about the demon that haunted his life and he didn’t want to trouble that kind lady with this crap.

Thankfully, Alfred didn’t come to help him to shower; maybe because it was still not even 9 and he believed him asleep.

Now that he had calmed her somewhat he guided his wheelchair to the bathroom with the intention to work at his tablet after the shower and before going down for breakfast.

Yet he had hardly put his clothes on after the shower when the ‘omnipresent’ Alfred knocked his door and informed him that the breakfast was ready as if saying “don’t even think about skipping that for working.”

Well, Bruce forgot his frustration for not getting the time to work as soon as he got inside the kitchen. He actually smiled: it was the first time after…nineteen years that the kitchen’s island was filled with people and good people, chatting and laughing, and…happiness in that house. Dick with Jason were talking avidly and fighting like careless children too; Rachel, Harvey, Mr. Petrou, Tony, Selina, Steve, Pepper, Ms. Turner and Leslie were discussing seriously like adults do but in a light mood. His parents would have been so happy…

Everyone greeted him and he did the same – even Hero who was delved into his bawl of cat food turned and looked at him licking his mouth causing Bruce’s smile.

He chose a spot and he felt so happy when Dick and Jason took their stools and sat next to him.

Bruce was really exhilarated by this ‘family life’ scene but there was something that nudge him: he had work waiting for him to the point of feeling agony.

The good thing was that Alfred would drive Ms. Turner to the city, Leslie would return to her clinic, Tony, Pepper, Selina and Steve had some things to do in the city, which was the case for his other guests and the boys had their homework…yeah, well, he hoped that Dick would influence Jason into doing that as well.

All in all, he would have the chance to go down to the cave and work like the old days.

Now that he knew who Oliver Queen really was, Bruce had finally the time to delve into all the results his processor gave on cases concerning plants. He always wanted to know his enemies perfectly.

There were loads of articles since he wanted to cover a broader timeline; Vivian might have been active before her time in Dolcetto.

He began scrolling and scanning the articles and at some point he added the term ‘influence’ and ‘mind control’. As he had expected nothing was found – reasonably so since not only Gotham’s police was under Falcone’s rule then but also who would believe that anything could be caused from ‘mind control’? It certainly would demand much research for someone to find out something like this and at that time Gotham wasn’t in the mood for much.

So he changed his course focusing on articles about research on plants: there were not as many articles because the subject was quite unpopular. What caught his eye was the work of a botanist called Marc LeGrande: the article said that his experiments with plants were called by him breakthrough but nobody knew their exact nature. Which was odd enough because every scientist at some point presents his work in conferences or publishes it in scientific journals. But not this scientist. And that smelled of shady things…

As a matter of fact Bruce didn’t meet his name on the articles again, till some years later an article mentioned that he was killed when his lab exploded and was burnt to the ground. The article said that he was working with another scientist, a botanologist, Dr. Pamela Lilian Isley, but the woman wasn’t found even though the guards of the facilities testified that she was inside at the time. Since during the fire the temperature was too high and the toxins that were emitted were too eroding the experts closed the case saying that the woman was killed and her remains were literally evaporated.

Bruce never trusted cases that were closed like this and furthermore he wanted to learn more about their experiments and since Dr. LeGrande’s work was secretive maybe he could find something from the second scientist.

Dr. Isley was a stellar student in the Department of Botanology and Chemistry at Gotham’s University; however what made Bruce a great impression was her care – almost pathological - about plants and ecology. Her name was in every protest made for pollution and in every activity aiming to preserve the natural environment. She was arrested several times because of her dynamic presence in those activities and some deeds that exceeded the limits of dynamic protest.

She like her partner didn’t have many published works and especially at the timeline Bruce was interested in yet her previous works had to do with the secret qualities of plants. Dr. Isley’s claims that plants can be more powerful than humans caused her colleagues’ sneer and her isolation from the scientific society – some of them even called her ‘insane’ or ‘Dr. Mengele of the plants’.

Bruce believed in his instinct and something was nudging him to search more on this. Dr. Isley’s conviction about the power of plants and her love for anything with chlorophyll definitely was in tune with Vivian’s countless pots and her characteristic, unique perfume. Yet Dr. Isley was a scientist devoted to her science while Vivian was a whore – moreover her photographs from newspapers and the university’s archives showed a bespectacled woman with blond hair tied in a strict bun and blue eyes, definitely not the honey haired, brown eyed, seductive Vivian.

Bruce clenched his fist and perused aimlessly the other articles of the same era. He frowned.

At the time the two scientists worked on their super secret project Gotham faced a wave of robberies – well, not a surprise for Gotham and especially during Falcone’s rule yet some of the robberies were on banks and stores that Bruce knew that belonged to Falcone. And those days nobody dared to touch anything that belonged to the Gray Wolf.

Also, those robberies where happening without any fuss, without any violence or gunshots as if the security hadn’t noticed anything and without any resistance. The guards testified that suddenly they were filled with exhilaration and feelings of carelessness and indifference so much so that in all such cases they were found either with their families or in some bar or club. What was common in their testimonies was that beautiful perfume.

Bruce raised his eyebrows: that kind of robberies stopped abruptly after the accident in Dr. LeGrande and Dr. Isley lab. Now that couldn’t be a coincidence, could be? Who gave the money to the two scientists for their experiments? The facilities they used were particularly expensive and Bruce doubted that any sponsor would want to risk money for two scientists that everyone considered ‘insane’ – not to mention, there was no reference of anyone sponsoring their project and in the facilities’ logs the two scientists were named as the renters.

So they had found the way to self finance their work and those robberies fit perfectly. But then either someone discovered what they were doing and killed them blowing their lab which was a bit impossible because if someone found out what they were doing then he probably would have used whatever they used for his/her own purposes. Or the explosion was an accident because the two of them resisted – yet there weren’t other bodies – or if you crossed out the possibility of a third person’s involvement the two scientists had a quarrel and their conflict caused the accident.

Yes, but where was Isley’s body? Bruce smiled as his eyes scanned the central screen of his processor: among the flood of news articles he noticed that several months after the accident some articles mentioned ‘odd deaths’. Bruce had always a ‘soft spot’ for odd deaths. Well, most of the victims were men but there were also women. They were found half or completely naked in sexual angles but there was no profound reason of death except than traces of urushiol on their lips; this substance was a common one found in Poison Ivi, oak and sumac but in those cases the substance was special because botanologists stated that was a nonexistent combination of Poison ivy, oak, and
However the victims weren’t allergic to that substance and even if that was the case the substance would have only caused a rush that disappears in two or three weeks. Some scientists tried to analyze the substance and discover its special attitudes since in this form it wasn’t met in nature but they didn’t managed much because after a few hours the substance was dissolved. So much so that in some victims was found only faint traces of that substance.

The interesting thing was that the victims were all associated with businesses and projects that was in one way or another considered hostile for the environment.

The other striking thing was the victims had something in common: a small rush on their torso shaped like a poison ivy branch. The press came to call the mysterious killer ‘Poison Ivy’.

Bruce was really intrigued and kept reading.

There was one homeless man who testified that a few hours before one of these murders he saw the victim, the woman CEO of a company legendary for its environmental fallacies, coming out of her limo accompanied by a stunning woman: in the lights of the luxury apartment building where the two women went the man saw that the other woman had long red ruby hair and green eyes.

Of course the woman wasn’t found as if she wasn’t real. The police published her sketch but to no avail. The murders stopped; at least, the eye catching ones because there were some cases with similar crimes involving people that didn’t have any connection with environmental issues and of course they were so ‘ordinary’ that never made it to front page or big articles.

Bruce rubbed his chin: could Poison Ivy, Pamela Isley, Vivian and Diana be the same woman? He shrugged: there was only one way to answer that. The human eye could be fooled yet his face recognition software not – he had done that again with Joker and Jack Napier.

His fingers flew over the keyboard entering photographs of Pamela Isley and Diana and the Poison Ivy’s sketch for comparison. He had no photo of course from Vivian yet he could create one using the program he had for sketching faces. Bruce pressed his memory for every detail he could recall.

But at the same time he wondered if Poison Ivy could really be Vivian. If the two women were actually the same then why she didn’t kill Falcone as well? He pressed his lips: he didn’t like killings but that could have spared him some years of torture…he snorted. Probably not: Chill certainly would have taken over and he would have kept Bruce as his slave.

She could have approached Falcone with no purpose to kill him. She was clever and she had her plants to seduce and make him do what she wanted. Bruce remembered vaguely that the time he was infatuated with Vivian Gotham’s Emperor had signed for projects helping the environment – now that for Falcone was inexplicable…

Bruce remembered what he saw in his flashback: how mean was Vivian to him. She was mad because Falcone seemed to be still infatuated with him and her ego didn’t bear that. And then all of a sudden she was lost from Dolcetto and Gotham: maybe she had obtained her goals and fed up of Falcone left and something else might have caught her attention.

He looked at the result of his description in the screen: yes, it was exactly as he remembered Vivian – stunning round face, honey colored long hair and almond shaped eyes of the same color, heart shaped, rich ruby red lips. Now he had to find out if this Vivian was indeed the Vivian in Dolcetto or what he saw was affected by his feelings for Diana as Clark had said – and for being sure he had to take the opinion of someone else, someone who also knew Vivian.
He looked the progress of the face recognition program; it needed some time. So Bruce guided his chair to the lift taking the print of the sketch of Vivian he just did.

He made sure that nobody was around and came out of the passage. Alfred met him in the corridor with an arched eyebrow of disapproval.

“Hm… I see that you took advantage of our absence to work down there. I suppose it is too much for you to get some rest?”

Bruce who was satisfied from what his investigation had revealed was taken aback.

“Mm…I suppose. Alfred, do you know where Mr. Petrou is?”

Alfred sighed.

“He is at the back garden with Mr. Dent and Rachel. They just return from the city.”

Bruce smiled.

“Thank you, Alfred.”

He turned to leave but Alfred’s breath indicated that he was ready to say something so he stopped.

“Sir, if I may…it is too early to run yourself thin - again.”

“But I don’t feel tired, Alfred.”

He found Mr. Petrou and his family sitting around the big rectangular marble table of the back garden. Upon seeing him Rachel stood and gave him a peck which brought a smile on Bruce’s face because she wasn’t the type for these things.

“Thank you” he said.

“You’re welcome” she answered with a smart smile and walked at his side to the table.

“How are you, Bruce?” Harvey asked.

“Fine, Harvey. Mm, Mr. Petrou I would like you to see a sketch.”

“Of course, Mr. Wayne.”

Bruce tilted his head to the side.

“Please, call me Bruce.”

The man smiled and nodded.

Bruce put the sketch on the table and Harvey with Rachel looked as well.

“So Vivian has been finally located?” Mr. Petrou said. “She hasn’t changed at all.”

Bruce felt his heart beating faster: so he remembered right.

Harvey was looking interested.

“This sketch is familiar” he said and Bruce looked at him intrigued. “It was a murder case and a witness had given a description of a woman almost exactly like the one here” he tapped his index finger on the paper. “We never found her and the case closed. Was she in Gotham? So she is a real person, after all?” he seemed fascinated and then he frowned. “Why are you interested in her, Bruce?”

Bruce licked his lips.

“I had a session with Dr. Hugo Strange and he told me to make sketches with the people who cause me distress during my flashbacks – he claims that it is therapeutic. However I wasn’t sure if that woman was a real person or it was a false memory Crane’s experimentation caused so I had to ask Mr. Petrou.”

Mr. Petrou looked Bruce with sympathy.

“It’s her, Bruce.”

“Thank you, Mr. Petrou; now I feel better for my memory” he grinned “and my sanity.”

“Your memory and sanity are perfect, Bruce. I’m glad I helped.”

He found an excuse to go back inside; his smart phone notified him that the face recognition process had ended. He was eager to see the result and touched the screen to be connected with the central processor: well, the program interchanged the hair and eye color from every different photo and showed that the faces matched.

Now he entered the sketch of Vivian to the program asking not only to find if they match but also to give him Diana’s face with every combination of hair and eyes.

He just couldn’t wait to go to the cave again; the doors’ lift came in front of him without even realizing but…suddenly he was tied lying on that old hospital bed in a dimly lit room – Arkham Asylum: Joker was in the room and he wasn’t alone. Before Joker two men shook from fear…they begged for their lives and suddenly everything filled with hot blood and the bodies fell on the floor still twitching…

Bruce’s breath was caught in his lungs…and his head throbbed; he felt exactly like then, like he was going to faint: the smell of fresh blood made his stomach sick and his vision blurry.

Suddenly, two soft hands cupped his face and the smell vanished.

“Man, ya must be out of yar mind from joy…” Jason said to Dick.

“Don’t try to distract me to win – I’m not buying…”

The two boys were sitting at the living room of the second floor on the small, cozy black sofa playing video-games in the built-in the wall huge flat TV. Dick like his friend was leaned forward with the console clenched in his hands and his eyes fixed on the screen.

Hero bored from the boys’ lack of playfulness was stretching his flexible body licking his pristine white fur, glancing every now and then disapprovingly to his human friends.

“I can squash ya with closed eyes, dude” Jason cackled. “Where’s yar granny?”

“She went to the city with Alfred; she wanted to see in what state the apartment is. She told me that would stay for some hours and take a cab to come back.”
Jason pouted.
“So ya’re gonna leave the Manor?”
Dick pressed fervently the left button of his console and shrugged.
“Eventually…Now that granny is back there’s no need to stay here…”
“Mm…” Jason murmured making a sharp maneuver. “It’s what ya wanted all these months.”
Dick crooked his mouth without answering.
“Yet ya’re not that happy…”
“I’m happy granny is alive and back to me” Dick turned to Jason and then slapped his thigh because he lost. “Fuck!”
Jason sniggered.
“Yet now ya got what ya wanted, betcha ya don’t wanna leave…” he said calm. “It’s like hittin’ a fuckin’ jackpot livin’ with Bat guy.”
Dick pursed his lips.
“I feel like an ass, Jay.”
The boy cocked an eyebrow.
“Then ya feel alright…”
Dick tilted his head on the side.
“Bruce all this time was doing everything for me and I was cursing him and making his life a Hell…” he purged his lips. “I was so blinded…”
“I told ya so…” the younger boy winked but then sad about his friend became serious.
“C’mon, dude…Ya apologized an’ Bruce told ya that’s ok..”
“What else would he tell?” Dick rolled his eyes. “He is so kind and forgiving.”
Jason laughed.
“Who would expect that from freakin’ Batman, huh? An’ who would think that Bruce is…”
Dick hushed him hastily.
“There are people in the Manor who might not know his secret. Jay, he trusted us with his secret and we must not fail him again” the younger boy had sobered and nodded. “I mean myself. He is so humble, self-sacrificing and brave that I’m ashamed for myself…”
Jason patted him in the back.
“Ya couldn’t have known, Dick though I gotta say ya were a total dick…yet ya can make up for that from now on…Sometimes mom cries in the nights an’ when I ask her she says that she was an awful mother an’ then I say to her – hey, mom, ya were never awful yet…there’s always space for improvement; can I eat the rest of the ice cream now? It’d be a nice start!”
Dick erupted in laughter and Jason shook his head.

“She really did some not nice things in the past but she was sick…but now she has changed an’ that’s what counts, man…”

“It was Bruce again that gave a hand to your mother to change her life…”

Dick’s eyes watered and he hugged his younger friend who nodded. Hero seeing that his friends weren’t absorbed in the bizarre thing they were doing till now ran to them and hoped to the sofa rubbing to them.

“I love you, Jay…” Dick said.

Jason looked at him suspicious.

“Cut it! I’m not a gay…” both boys cackled carelessly.

“Bruce, what’s wrong?”

His eyes cleared and he saw Selina and Tony squatted around him, worry carved in their faces.

“You’re ashen, Bruce” Tony said frowned when Selina stood and rushed towards the kitchen. “Do you want me to call Leslie?”

Bruce shook his head and rubbed his forehead.

“I just saw again Joker slaughtering Isaac and Wizze…I hate flashbacks!” he took the glass of water Selina brought to him and drank.

“So he really killed them in front of you…” Tony said.

“And they weren’t the really responsible for the video; the mastermind and the one who caused their death is still free. And I have to find him because these people deserve it.”

Tony nodded and looked his friend in the eyes.

“I’m happy for your change of heart on the matter, but for now you have to rest.”

“I have things to do” he said to both of them and looked at the lift.

“Not so fast, buddy…” Selina’s teasing voice stopped him; it was obvious what he was thinking to do.

“Where do you want to go?” Tony asked and Bruce closed his eyes.

“I have work – important work.”

“It’s always important…” Selina said.

“Bruce, we need to talk” Tony said and Bruce knew that he couldn’t deny them.
So they entered the lift and instead of the cave Bruce ended up in the study.

“I’m all ears” Bruce said casting glances to his smart phone waiting eagerly the results.

Tony sat to the sofa next to Bruce’s wheelchair.

“I was at the Wayne Tower.”

“But it is Sunday, Tony.”

Tony tilted his head on the side.

“I know I work too hard – can you tell that to Peps?” he said leaning to his friend.

Selina walked to him and sat to the sofa.

“To the gist” she looked at the billionaire.

“Yeah…she has a really strong hand so better do what she says” Tony looked Bruce pointedly crooking his mouth and Bruce smiled. “All in all, I spoke with Lucius and…we are ready.”

Bruce frowned.

“Ready?”

“For your operation.”

Now this news should have made Bruce extremely happy; he had imagined the moment so many times. But now…that was…the time was so inappropriate that he felt numb.

Selina felt that something was wrong and leaned to him.

“ Aren’t you happy, sweetie?”

Bruce could see the same question all over Tony’s frowned face.

“I…of course I am but…”

Tony scratched his head and nodded.

“The ‘but’ thing…”

“What troubles you, Bruce?” Selina asked. “Tony, Lucius and Leslie are refining every detail.”

“I know…And I have no doubt or hesitation to do the operation. I’m not afraid.”

Tony pressed his lips: he wished he could share Bruce’s fearlessness but even though he knew that everything was perfect he also dreaded the moment Bruce would enter the operation room especially since that room wouldn’t be the safe environment of Superman’s haven – damn, that alien!

“Then?” Tony asked to escape from his own fears.

“There are things I have to do” Bruce said knowing already his friends’ reactions. “The operation needs time and…and I don’t have that luxury.”

Tony yanked his head and pressed his hair to his scalp with both hands.
“I don’t believe it!”

Selina looked Bruce in the eyes.

“Nothing is more important than your health, Bruce.”

“You don’t want to walk again?” Tony asked.

Bruce licked his lips.

“Of course I want to walk again but the operation would demand much time both prior and after... I don’t have that much time” in his mind another reason twirled that he wouldn’t share with his friends but it was a possibility: what if he never woke up from the surgery? Who would help Clark?

Selina tilted her head.

“What you didn’t understand from the ‘nothing is more important than your health’ part?”

Bruce didn’t say anything just showed them his smart phone turning it with one touch to a tablet so that the screen would contain better what he wanted them to see.

The photos showed Dr. Pamela Isley turned to Poison Ivy then to Vivian and finally to Diana. He watched his friends looking astonished.

“So the Amazon is really an impostor? You finally managed to find her” Tony said. “Who is she?”

Bruce began with the picture of Vivian.

“This woman was named Vivian and she was Falcone’s favorite woman from Dolcetto for a time; then she disappeared all of a sudden.”

“And she appeared again saying that he is a legendary Amazon?” Selina asked rolling her eyes. “She must be a nutcase.”

“Harvey says that she was implicated in some murder case but she was never found.”

Tony widened his eyes impressed.

“She must tell me her secret because she masters anti-aging perfectly – she hasn’t changed much all these years.”

“I think that this has to do with her connection with plants; you see, my memories of her match your description of her apartment – she always were surrounded from plants of every kind and I think that her extreme powers of seduction come from them” and he explained to them briefly what he had found about Dr. Isley. “You see, now why I don’t have time.”

Selina crossed her arms huffing and Tony cocked an eyebrow.

“No, I don’t...”

“I believe she works for Mannheim and they prepare something big since they put Superman under her influence.”

Tony slapped his thighs.

“It is all about him again, huh?” he huffed. “Oh, Bruce...”
Bruce sighed.

“It’s not about him, Tony: think about it. Mannheim builds a mysterious machine, he managed to make Luthor his puppet and put someone to pretend the Amazon only to render Superman useless. He plans something really bad.”

Selina nodded.

“Yes, but why you need so much time?”

“We can bust the bitch right now” Tony agreed.

But Bruce shook his head.

“Do you want a civil war among people’s most trusted heroes? Superman would protect her with everything he has and some will follow him – not to mention that she has considerable powers on her own. We’ll be implicated in a needless conflict serving perfectly their plans and pushing people to doubt and despair.”

Tony rubbed his chin.

“If she is not the legendary Amazon where her powers derive from?”

“Yeah…” Selina agreed.

Bruce didn’t want to reveal just now the truth about Bagdana to his friends.

“From Mannheim: I’m positive he is really that powerful.”

Tony pursed.

“Then we must get prepared; thankfully, we have Luthor and the machine under constant watch.”

“We need Superman fighting with us” Bruce said keeping his composed expression though he truly longed for that.

Selina shook her head.

“Why don’t you show him the proofs?”

Bruce inhaled.

“He won’t believe me – he’d consider it as another scheme to…take him back and he’ll probably get more isolated and hostile towards everyone he till now trusted.”

Tony crooked his mouth with disgust.

“Yeah, it’s a well known fact he is an asshole…”

“Then?” Selina asked.

“I’ll find the real Princess” he said casually.

A laugh left Tony’s mouth and then he choked.

“She isn’t a lost pocket, you know…”
Selina snorted.

“Believe me, Californian boy, you can never find a lost pocket in Gotham…”

“Anyway…What you want to do is finding a mythical island that it might not even exist?” he frowned and scratched his head “inhabited only by half naked women who wait for centuries someone to teach him the art of sex?” he shook his head with conviction. “It’s impossible but count me in!”

Selina gave him a slap in the shoulder while Bruce chuckled.

“And how you can be sure that you’ll find it? It could take years.”

“I hope not.”

Tony leaned to him serious.

“Bruce, you cannot do such madness in your current state: the legends say that they are very aggressive with men” he cocked his eyebrows “which is fine with me by the way – I have a thing for bondage…But you could be hurt much – I think it would be better if you do what you plan after your operation.”

Selina stood.

“Not to mention that this island could not even exist but if it really exist she is not sure that will want to help. And even if everything goes as you want, nothing assures us that Superman would believe that she is the real Diana and not an impostor.”

“Because the alien is obviously that clever…” Tony remarked snidely.

“Not to mention that he with his super senses can’t see what you noticed: the dyed hair, the fake eyes…”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“Tony mentioned that when he confronted Superman in her apartment he noticed some clarity and change to his attitude as soon as Ironman used Kryptonite…”

Tony’s eyes shone wickedly.

“So let’s use Kryptonite on him!”

“Yes, and when we take the Kryptonite away his hostility will be greater…No, Kryptonite might help if things get too nasty yet I think that still if she really exists we need the real Princess not only to bring Superman out of his illusion but also to have her as an ally to what lies ahead.”

Tony pressed his lips.

“I insist that the operation must come first.”

“I don’t have the time, Tony.”

“The machine is still in embryonic phase; if that machine was so precious for Mannheim to make all these burglaries and use his power to release Luthor from jail then he’ll wait till is ready before he acts so we have time…”
Bruce huffed.

The noble knocks on the door broke the silence and Bruce was really glad for the interruption.

“I do apologize for the interruption” Alfred said. “Mister Queen is here, Master Bruce and asks if he can see you.”

“I’ll see him, Alfred; thank you.”

“Don’t think that you slipped so easily, littl’ guy” Tony said as Bruce left the room and then he turned to Selina. “How can you be so cool seeing him risking so much? After what you witnessed?”

Selina understood that he meant the times she watched Bruce being abused. But also she suddenly he had a suspicion that could explain why Tony reached the point of hitting Bruce with a stunning beam to protect him.

“You watched that awful video they broadcasted…”

Tony nodded.

“I wanted to understand what he went through but now… I feel that every time he’ll be again hurt: how you can take that agony, Sel?”

“I saw Bruce being raped, tortured; I watched him crying; in fear; in despair. But also I saw him gritting his teeth and never give up. I saw him becoming the strong man he is; I saw him methodically organizing the defeat of his enemies. So even though I know he is wounded; even though often I see the skinny battered boy in him still I know that he also knows how strong he is and how he knows to fight – he is clever and he always calculate his movements to not find himself again in weakness” she cocked an eyebrow. “And I have always my eyes on him… just in case.”

Bruce was curious to know what brought Queen here – well, that was obvious: the demon wanted to be in constant touch with him; but what excuse he would use this time?

When he opened the door to the drawing room and slithered his wheelchair in closing the door behind him, Queen was upright. The man seemed agitated almost in agony and he held a glass with whiskey. He was turned to the rectangular window overlooking the Wayne grounds but hearing the door opening snapped around.

“It’s kind of early for alcohol” Bruce commented keeping his smirk inside; he knew he had to not show anything about knowing the truth.

Queen smiled and looked at the fine, crystal glass.

“Sometimes it is needed regardless the time of the day” he walked to Bruce, put his glass on the waist table and offered his hand for a handshake.

Bruce took his hand though the realization that was shaking hands with the demon that haunted his life was very intense; however there wasn’t the slightest difference from every other time he shook hands with Queen.

“And this is one of these times?” he asked.

Queen looked at him serious.
“Gotham’s Police announced early in the morning that Joker had kidnapped you and was holding you hostage in the Arkham Asylum.”

Bruce nodded thoughtful but completely calm.

“Well, that’s true.”

Queen shook his head.

“I was in Boston for some business and as soon as I heard it I got in the plane to come back.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“There was no reason for such rush” especially since the demon with the form of Arrow was there when he got Joker – but of course Bagdana wanted to play his game.

Queen slumped in the armchair next to Bruce’s wheelchair and fixed his eyes on Bruce’s.

“Of course there was! I was worried! Why in Hell he has to attack you all the time? Why they didn’t give you a break?”

Bruce smiled: indeed.

“Sometimes I wonder too. But still I think a phone call would be enough.”

Queen closed his eyes.

“Bruce, I told you several times that I care about you” Bruce felt a clench in his guts seeing again the gigantic form of the demon with his mind’s eye; however he sustained his calm face. “The thought of this scum holding you prisoner while you need your medication and you are defenseless…Oh! It’s outrageous! Cowardice!”

Bruce wanted to arch an eyebrow because Queen knew that he was perfectly able to defend himself even now yet the demon played the ignorant. So Bruce did the same.

“I can’t understand why they let that bastard alive!” the older man continued.

Bruce fixed his eyes on him.

“You think that anyone has the right to decide who must die?”

Queen closed his eyes and huffed.

“You’re too lenient, Bruce…” he pressed his lips and it was clear that something was in his mind but he hesitated to utter it. “He touched you?” he asked finally in a whisper.

Bruce jerked.

“That’s too…It’s none of your business!” he snapped with his eyes sparkling and Queen raised his palms calming.

“I’m sorry…I’m sorry…I…it was too indiscreet but this man is infatuated with you: so I fear that he could…It would be awful for you to go through such an experience again.”

Bruce smirked inside: Bagdana new better since he gave him some of these experiences.
“Mr. Queen, I think we told what was there to be told. Thank you for your interest.”

Queen leaned to him.

“Bruce, you try so hard to push me away. I want the best for you; I want to offer you the love you deserve. I’m the only one who loves you truly.”

Bruce crooked his mouth and Queen nodded.

“I understand your disbelief, Bruce, but believe me: I won’t ever betray you; I just want to be here for you whenever you need me; offer you my love…help you heal the wounds.”

Bruce closed his eyes and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“I told you several times, Mr. Queen, that these things are not for me. I can’t be what you want and it is better for you to turn your affection somewhere else.”

Queen took Bruce’s hands in his causing a deep frown to the younger man and a instinctive defensive jolt of his back. Bruce noticed that there was nothing betraying that Queen wasn’t really a human and the real Queen’s body had nothing unnatural.

“If only you could give me a chance to prove to you what I said…”

Bruce took his hands away calmly.

“Mr. Queen, you say that you understand me then you should have understood how I’m feeling: I honor your friendship but I can’t give you more than that.”

Queen lowered his eyes and looked at his hands which he had glued together.

“He isn’t going to come back, Bruce” he said in a dead serious voice sympathetic but with a hue of frustration; his eyes were ablaze. “Ever!”

Bruce jerked and narrowed his eyes confused.

“What?”

Queen looked at him and smiled.

“It’s obvious that you wait for him to realize his mistake and come back to you.”

“Who?”

Queen shook his head and chuckled amused from Bruce’s act.

“Superman.”

Bruce clenched his jaw: of course Bagdana knew that he had a relationship with Clark: he schemed everything to separate them. But now Bruce had to do with Oliver Queen. He jerked his head.

“That’s preposterous…”

But Queen cut him.

“Come on, Bruce: everyone saw him bring you to the hospital; last year he was continually moving around you like a fly to honey until he took what he wanted and when he saw something new left you without a second thought."

“You had nothing with Superman. And actually he saved more times Lois Lane so why don’t you assume the same for her?”

Queen was adamant.

“He is happy with Diana” he grinned continuing. “He doesn’t think of you anymore not only as a lover but also as a human being. He could have sensed your distress, your need – he was doing that all the time last year, didn’t he?” he cocked his eyebrows in sarcasm. “But now nothing…”

It was easy for Bruce to understand that Queen tried to hurt him and make him forget or even hate Superman in order to find comfort in him.

Queen took his silence for sadness; for a small victory.

“He is an idiot for betraying your love; for causing you such pain…He wasn’t worthy of you, Bruce” he licked his lips. “I can ease your pain, just let me…” he leaned towards Bruce’s face, his last words being whispered almost to Bruce’s ear.

Bruce felt a shiver and a trace of the old terror he had experienced in Ra’s’ basement and in Dolcetto.
However he controlled his emotions and looked at the man’s almost pleading eyes.

“Mr. Queen, please” he said quietly and moved slightly his head. “I don’t know why are you so sure that I had something with Superman – not that it is your business – but whatever you think has nothing to do with me. Thank you for your concern and for coming here but…” he shook his head “I just can’t give you what you want and I suggest you stop torment yourself with that. There are people out there who are better than me and ready to love and be loved by a special man like you.”

Queen’s smile was broad but his eyes were shadowed; Bruce was watching his face. The older man stood.

“But” he shook his head “I don’t want you to give me anything; your mere existence is the greater, most precious present life can give me…one of your smiles can be my salvation…” he smiled. “I don’t want you to give anything, Bruce; for once in my life, I just want to give…Give to you everything I have…” he lowered his eyes clearly overwhelmed and Bruce sensed that this wasn’t an act. “I don’t want to make bad use of your precious time.”

Bruce looked at him.

“It’s not that.”

Queen nodded.

“Yes, but I’m sure you need some rest after everything you’ve been through. I want the best for you,
Bruce, and I’m sure that in the end you’ll realize that I mean what I’m saying…”

He offered Bruce his hand and the younger man shook it.

“It was a pleasure seeing you, Bruce.”

Bruce grinned.

“Mr. Queen, it was nice to see you too.”

Queen pressed his lips.
“If only you could call me Oliver…”

Bruce cocked his eyebrows.

“If I knew that you wouldn’t mistake that for something else, I would have made it, Mr. Queen…”

The older man grinned smugly, regaining his usual self confidence.

“I won’t ever stop hoping if that is what you mean. Have a lovely rest of the day, Bruce.”

The room was dark; only the lights coming from the blinds of the window interrupted the darkness and let the shapes inside take form.

But he didn’t need light to see around and for once in his life he didn’t want any of it: he was bored of light. It was a Sunday evening; his favorite time of the week yet today he felt numb. He held a cup of hot coffee and paced aimlessly in the small living room of his apartment. He had chosen to stay in his apartment for a change and think.

Clark recalled his discussion with Lois…He sighed: why for once he couldn’t be left to feel happy?

He slumped to his small worn couch and grabbed his lap top that was tossed on the couch at some point. He opened it to the Planet’s site: the same political fuss he had come to hate but among the latest headlines something caught his eyes.

“Bruce Wayne was Joker’s hostage at Arkham Asylum, Police states.”

In a brief statement GCPD’s spoke woman revealed that the notorious criminal had kidnapped the Wayne heir, 27, the day the attack in New York occurred. Ms. Harper didn’t comment whether the kidnapping was connected with the attack. She only continued to conclude that Mr. Wayne was found in Arkham Asylum where Joker and his associates, Jonathan Crane and Harleen Quinzel, both former heads of the same Institute, were arrested. Mr. Wayne didn’t sustain any serious injury.

Yeah, sure…Clark thought. In Joker’s hands? Of course Bruce could always protect himself but…Only the thought of the criminal laying hands on Bruce made him cringe and be mad.

He shook his head: and he took Bruce’s distress as agony for Thor…

He opened his e-mails without even realizing: among the read messages his eyes focused on one:

Congratulations on your award.

Bruce had sent that after their break up when Clark won the Pulitzer. His eyes travelled to the wall where the prize hang neglected – it certainly didn’t give him the joy it should.

He frowned: maybe he should write something to Bruce? Asking about his health? Like an old friend…

He ruffled his hair indecisive; Bruce wasn’t an old friend…Bruce tried to…He rubbed his upper arm where he still had the scar from Bruce’s dagger. However that didn’t stop Bruce from coming to the party for his awarding and definitely didn’t stop Clark from cornering him in that rooftop and try to kiss him…only to be repelled by the stubborn human. It seems that Bruce wanted to play with him…And he would be very happy to see that he still had power over him, that he could make him think of him over Diana.
Clark closed his eyes and inhaled deeply: Diana’s gracious, gorgeous figure came in front of his eyes; her eyes filled with respect, adoration but also strength and resolution – a proud warrior in love with him – adoring him…and then her perfume of all the flower on the planet.

He was grateful for his eidetic memory because her perfume was always in his nostrils reminding him who was the one who truly loved and supported him in everything. Who made him happy more than any other time in his life.

Clark just couldn’t betray her unconditional love by showing interest even typical for his former lover. Of course Lois and his Ma could not understand this because they hoped to make him ditch her for Bruce.

Suddenly, he heard shootings and screams of terror: his emotional state wasn’t perfect but Superman would prove that he never stopped being people’s protector.

He changed in a flick, opened the window and flew outside focusing on the direction of the screams: Russia, Moscow…As he was heading there it was clear that the shootings came from the Bolsoi Theatre – terrorists. He hurried.

But as he was almost there the screams and the panicked vitals from thousands of people stopped giving their place to relief, exhilaration and joy. Superman could even hear cheering and claps.

He stopped midair and focused his eyes there: on the stage were piled the corpses of hoodied people with their machine guns still clenched in their hands. Among the thousands of spectators there were several wounded but no dead. But what made Superman goggle was the woman floating above the stage like a guardian angel, unscathed, perfect, having stopped the terrorists without a drop of sweat.

The woman he loved. People cheered for Wonder Woman: his Diana. He wasn’t needed there and he was really proud of her and happy that finally the world was seeing the truth he knew: the truth about her.

He turned to leave but soon heard the familiar almost inaudible sound of her approaching; her heartbeat, the seductive sound of the air playing with her shining raven hair, her dazzling perfume. He stopped and turned towards her only to be attacked by her.

Diana wrapped her arms around his back and locked their lips together in a kiss that took his breath away and stopped his brain activity. Her eyes were raging fires reflecting the hotness of her pulsing with passion body.

“Humans are so weak…It’s a relief for me that a being like you resides in Earth” she breathed without stopping the kiss and ruffling viciously his hair.

“Thank God, Wonder Woman was here; Superman doesn’t seem to care anymore…”

Superman’s hearing caught some people saying in Russian; they were using different words but the meaning was always the same.

Diana looked at him with narrowed eyes, concerned.

“Are you alright?”

“They say that Superman doesn’t care for them…” he said with his eyes shadowed.

She smiled and hugged him tighter.
“They are humans! They always whine about something…they judge beings far superior from them according to their petty vices. I wouldn’t pay attention to them” she snorted. “They’re good only to be saved…”

Superman turned his head towards the theater: people were still cheering for Wonder Woman. He didn’t care that they cheered for her; on the contrary that gave him a joy that was flooding his entire body yet there was a small, tiny part of him cringing not because they cheered for Diana but because they were disappointed from him.

Diana tilted her head on the side frowning; she grabbed his hand.

“Forget them! We know what is really important, Kal El” she kissed gently his forehead and Superman felt a pleasant numbness expanding to his entire boy: nothing seemed worthy of his attention anymore – Diana was with him and loved him.

She moved forward taking his hand; she turned her head and locked eyes with him both determined and loving.

“My apartment is our world and my body and heart is your world: the only world worthy of your greatness, Kal El.”

The shine of her eyes and the warmth of her hand were everything he needed. He followed her.
“That is a really unexpected pleasure, Bruce…”

Bruce inclined his head in front of Jor El’s image on his central screen. He knew that although his voice was almost flat the alien really meant what he said.

“Relieved to hear that, Jor El” he answered to the hologram’s deep, respectful voice. “Did you have any news from Kal El?”

Jor El arched a white eyebrow.

“I am afraid that Kal El gets more and more isolated from his loved ones.”

Bruce rubbed his chin thoughtful.

“About that…” Jor El’s serious eyes twitched because he sensed that the human didn’t call him without a reason. “I have done some research and I think that I know the true identity of the woman that influences Kal El.”

Jor El raised his eyebrows.

“Well?”

“Before that” he began keying in “I send you a chemical compound and I’d like you to tell me if you have ever met it…”

“Of course.”

Bruce wanted Jor El to tell him if the substance that was found in Poison Ivy’s victims was in Clark’s body the last time he underwent exams in the Fortress. Yet he didn’t want Jor El to be biased knowing that this compound was connected with the woman who had his son mind controlled. Not that a biased hologram was the most possible thing, yet this hologram was of Kryptonian technology and from Bruce’s experience wasn’t a common reflective hologram.

Bruce wanted Jor El’s confirmation because even if he was almost certain about Diana being Poison Ivy he always wanted to double check. More so since Jor El when contacted the exams found a strange influence on Superman but he didn’t speak about that special kind of urushiol and Bruce knew that the Fortress had a broad, detailed database about Earth’s plants which Superman was collecting for his father’s scientific research.

“I haven’t seen urushiol of such composition in nature yet there were traces of that in Kal El’s system” Jor El said after a few seconds.

Of course, Bruce thought. Traces as in Ivy’s victims only in this case she needed the substance to linger on her victim in order for the influence to linger too.

“However” Jor El continued “there was something else that almost covered the compound and made it seem as something different.”

Bruce shook his head.

“That’s reasonable; they needed something that would make a Kryptonian susceptible to that substance that till now was effective only to humans” he remembered again Bagdana’s role in this and crooked his mouth – the demon knew everything about Superman and already once he had created something that affected Superman vastly.

Yet this time Bagdana certainly didn’t use the same substance Ra’s had applied to Bruce’s body for years turning him to a human Kryptonite and an irresistible magnet for him; besides, Superman’s powers all this time were unscathed and Bagdana knew that Bruce had found everything out: the demon knew that they had isolated the substance so they would recognize it immediately if it affected again Superman. Also, the cunning demon certainly figured out that Superman was by now immunized to that substance – not to mention that that substance was created with Bruce’s blood as basis.

“The woman that presents herself as the Princess of the Amazons is actually a ghost-murderer who used to seduce her victims and under her irresistible attraction lured and killed them with a kiss that pumped urushiol to the victim’s organism” he informed him.

Jor El shook his head.

“But this couldn’t kill Kal El since he is a Kryptonian.”

Bruce nodded.

“If they knew how to adjust her pheromones to affect a Kryptonian into not being able to resist her and how to make the urushiol of her body influence Superman then they could also kill him – but this wasn’t what they wanted.”

“So what do they really want?”

“To humiliate him; to isolate him and then use him” and hurt Bruce into falling to the arms of Oliver Queen.

Jor El arched an eyebrow.

“I think that the most important reason was to separate you two” Bruce jerked inside but retained his cool expression. “The one who conceived that plan probably knows things about you and considered that the best way to defeat Superman was taking him as far away as possible from you. But if she is a human then from where she takes her powers and her weapons? Because her weapons are not of human origin or creation.”

Bruce didn’t want to divulge Bagdana’s role because he wished to test another hypothesis that was nudging his mind. A hypothesis about the third person behind the scheme.

“Jor El, I wonder if you remember the attack on me at Thasos.”

Jor El inclined slightly his head.

“I do…”

“The attackers were beings that definitely were not from Earth; also, the fake Diana arrived on the scene supposedly to save me but eventually she blew them off, obviously in order to cover any traces. Yet I managed to save some evidence which were tested by Lucius Fox who concluded that these creatures were made of matter and elements unknown to us.”

“Extra terrestrial?”

Bruce nodded.
“At first, we had our doubts assuming that the creatures might be result of some illegal experimentation…”

Jor El arched an eyebrow.

“But?” he asked in his wise voice.

Bruce pressed his lips and began pressing keys.

“Can you tell me anything about these?” he sent him pictures of the items that were hidden in LexLabs and Mannheim did everything to take back – he made sure to include shots where the odd symbols were visible.

Though Jor El was a hologram Bruce thought that the always calm reflection of Superman’s biological father became pale.

“Apokolips…” Jor El mumbled and Bruce frowned.

“What is this?”

“A planet. It is ruled by a powerful New God: Darkseid.”

Bruce huffed and rolled his eyes: not another God!

“He musters teleport and telekinesis; he can move as fast as nanoseconds; he can travel through time and send his enemies in dimensions where he traps them; he possesses the ability of mind controlling – in several cases, he mind controlled entire population into getting what he wanted.”

That explained the confusion of the thugs who were arrested either for the raids in LexLabs or the Metropolis’ Station attack. Such a being definitely didn’t have trouble to mind control Luthor into turning him to a servile being and people in high ranks to order Luthor’s release. Also, Bruce remembered when Mannheim came to his office to demand the items: he had sensed something trying to breach his mind, obviously to make him obey to Darkseid’s will. But his efforts failed… Bruce’s hand touched unconsciously the Black Butterfly that rest on his chest – then he had sensed the gem vibrating: perhaps, the gem’s power enhanced his ability to resist.

“But the greatest of his powers are the Omega Beams he launches from his eyes and hands” Jor El continued unaware of Bruce’s thoughts. “He can kill anyone with these Beams but he can also resurrect those who died from them if that is what he wants.”

Bruce tilted his head – the possibilities of having such a being on Earth were more than grim yet he couldn’t help but also snort.

“Don’t tell me…He wants to conquer Earth?” he asked in heavy irony cocking an eyebrow.

Jor El shook his head.

“Darkseid doesn’t simply conquer planets: he destroys them; he turns them to energy dust. He uses the energy from the destroyed planets to force his own order of things – a universe exactly as he wants it. Kryptonians knew about his activities but never took action against him – ignored him and the destruction he was causing reassured from the fact that they were powerful enough for making Darkseid hesitant to attack them” his eyes became reminiscent. “I remember the council of the Elders where I tried to convince them to do something – to no avail: nobody wanted to risk Krypton for the sake of other planets.”
Bruce tapped his index finger on his lower lip.

“Darkseid must know your – the Kryptonians - powers and how Earth’s yellow sun has enhanced those powers in Kal El so he wants to neutralize him first to make the Earth succumb to him.”

Jor El nodded.

“Can you describe your attackers at the island?”

Bruce typed something and the sketch his software had made from the description of the beings which attacked him popped up on the screen. He pressed a key and it was sent to Jor El.

“Parademons; Darkseid’s troops. Why you didn’t show me these earlier?”

“Because I believed that if it was something known to Kryptonians Superman would have recognized the description.”

Jor El nodded.

“Kal El’s Kryptonian education includes so many topics and fields that unfortunately Apokolips isn’t covered yet” he lowered a bit his eyes. “What about the objects: Where were those objects found?”

“In LexLabs: hidden to look like petty things with no value. However someone was eager – to say the least – to get them back.”

Jor El nodded.

“And this is where you join the picture, right? You gained the LexLabs’ ownership and these items as well so if I am assuming right the owner or some of his representatives came to find you” he smiled. “Without knowing that he has to do with someone of the most intelligent people on Earth.”

Bruce didn’t comment on that.

“I think that he came himself” he said casually though Jor El’s expression became something between admiration and terror “he has a human form and an established human identity. What about this machine he builds?”

Jor El smirked.

“The Anti Life Equation. Back in Krypton we had intelligence that Darkseid believed he could suck the energy from all the beings’ emotions and thoughts and make that infinite energy his, using it to build his own reality. Kryptonian scientists never believed that this was even a possibility but it seems that Darkseid has the belief that human beings could ‘help’ his cause… Maybe that’s the reason he follows a rather mild way instead of just destroying the planet.”

“I have to say that the Kryptonian scientists were wrong because Darkseid made everything to take back the items and his human ally, namely Lex Luthor to assemble them.”

Jor El raised his eyebrows.

“Because the machine learns anything from its creator and that is necessary for the machine to be able to absorb the energy from humans: Darkseid chose Lex Luthor to build his Anti Life machine so that the machine would learn the characteristics to absorb from his targets. He must be stopped, Bruce, before he uses the machine: this will make his already immense power greater.”

Bruce shook his head.
“He took the parts but we have everything under surveillance” Jor El’s face loosened a bit as Bruce remembered how Mannheim and the woman with him were not visible during their discussion with Luthor in the lab. “We have the control, Jor El yet I think it’s better to let them continue believing that we don’t know anything – we need to have Superman on our side when the time comes and I’m afraid that if we make hasty movements Superman can be turned against us under Poison Ivy’s control.”

Jor El pressed his lips.

“I can attest to that. What do you want me to do, Bruce?”

“For the time being, nothing. And definitely do not say anything to Superman.”

“Of course. He wouldn’t believe it after all.”

Ending the connection Bruce’s mind was shadowed from the realized now menace. One thing was sure: he didn’t have the time to give to his surgery. It had to wait. After all, what was the meaning of being able to walk again if the whole planet was destroyed?

He thought about Mannheim’s presence at his office; the man’s…well, not exactly a man…his rage; Darkseid certainly could try to fry him with his beams. Of course he sent Gotham’s thugs to scare him but Bruce was sure that if he wanted, the danger he faced would be even worse. And then he remembered the Arrow’s interference. He nodded: Bagdana did want him alive and probably that held Darkseid’s hand. For Bruce it was plain clear that he was Bagdana’s reward…

He looked at the smaller screen on the right: he had programmed his processor to scan world news for any appearance of Wonder Woman or Superman. A good half an hour now the RT was raving about Wonder Woman’s intervention at the Bolsoi Theater where she stopped a sure bloodshed by terrorists – the viewers eye witnesses were describing what had happened and praised Wonder Woman who saved them while once again Superman was absent.

Bruce pursed his lips: he could see their goal. They wanted to degrade Superman in the eyes of people so that in the final hour they wouldn’t hope anything from the hero; also, when they decided to make their movement against Superman nobody would be surprised from his absence or search for him.

On the other hand, they wanted ‘Wonder Woman’ to become a symbol of hope in which people would invest so that when Darkseid made his attack the despair of humans would be devastating seeing their favorite heroine alongside the enemy, determined to exterminate them. Such despair would definitely be precious for Darkseid’s Anti Life Equation.

Bagdana was a precious advisor to the alien: after all, the ancient demon knew perfectly the human nature and Superman. Bruce could sniff Bagdana’s wit behind all these.

He just hoped that he could make it on time and upturn their perfectly set chessboard.

It was already an hour since Tony sat in the stool before the working bench in Lucius Fox’s lab and the older man was perplexed from the man’s quietness. After Joker’s arrest and Bruce’s return to the Manor, Tony was able to resume entirely his work on his friend’s operation; yet this day the billionaire from Malibu was absorbed in reading something in his tablet.

Lucius every now and then looked above his glasses to the younger man but he continued without breaking his concentration. Lucius knew that Tony had many things in his mind and his best friend’s operation was something that troubled him all the time.

“Lucius, I want to show you something.”

Lucius was eagerly waiting for that in order to be able to help if there was a way.

“Of course, Mr. Stark” he said and left his work on the hologram to sit at the stool next to Tony.

“Read these…” Tony showed with his index finger at the screen.

The younger man was watching avidly Lucius as he was perusing the rather broad data.

“Well?” Tony asked after several minutes when Lucius raised his eyes and took off his glasses.

Lucius raised his eyebrows.

“It’s rather impressive” he admitted and Tony smiled making his eyes shine.

“Exactly. The success’ quotient is remarkable!” he showed again the screen. “Lucius, you see that we do have hope?”

Lucius however seemed thoughtful.

“You are referring to Mr. Wayne’s surgery…”

Tony rolled his eyes and crossed his arms.

“Lucius, drop the naïve look: it’s not persuasive at all…Of course I refer to Bruce’s surgery: what else? Someone who has such great record in complex surgeries certainly is the most appropriate for a surgery like Bruce’s. Lucius” he locked eyes with him. “We need the best for Bruce to eliminate as much as possible the possibility of…failure.”

Lucius pressed his lips.

“I understand, Mr. Stark, but we set as a precondition the need of confidentiality for this. You know how Mr. Wayne feels about that.”

Tony nodded.

“His life is more precious. And as you can see part of this work was made with Superman’s contribution thus the presence of alien technology wouldn’t be something new. Not to mention that we can’t be absolutely sure for anyone: even our own team can at some point leak some info.”

Lucius closed his eyes and rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“The benefits are greater than the risks, Lucius.”

Lucius cocked his eyebrows.

“This isn’t a decision you or I will make, Mr. Stark. Dr. Thompkins should know too and most of all Mr. Wayne. You know that the final decision is his.”

Well, Tony knew that but also knew Bruce’s stance over this. However he relied on the support from Lucius and Leslie: the three of them could manage to persuade Bruce in the end.

“I made an appointment with Leslie at the free clinic in 30 minutes to talk about this. But your support on this would be crucial when I show her all these.”

The older man frowned slightly.

“You want to tell me that Dr. Elliot sent his impressive body of work to you but not to Dr.
Thompkins with whom he is working?”

Tony pursed his lips.

“Maybe he was afraid that she would dismiss him because of her favorite patient’s dislike for him – because of Bruce’s bias.”

Lucius cocked his eyebrows and looked at Tony.

“Bias, Mr. Stark?”

Tony realized that it was a bit hard of a word.

“Okay, okay; but we can’t deny that Bruce doesn’t like the man based on their childhood relationships.”

Lucius smiled.

“Your friendship is based on that too…”

Tony closed his eyes.

“You’re right…” he huffed. “But I can’t close my eyes and forget such impressive results when my best friend is faced with such a dangerous surgery” he looked Lucius in the eyes. “Will you come with me at the clinic? And support my case?”

Lucius inhaled deeply.

“Mr. Stark, you know that I want the best for Mr. Wayne…Of course, I’ll come with you” Tony’s eyes shone “yet I can’t promise you that I’ll support Dr. Elliot’s involvement – I will speak only on what we see there: nothing more - nothing less.”

Tony would want more support yet this was fair enough; after all, Lucius was always extra cautious and Tony appreciated that. He patted the older man’s upper arm.

“I would not ask you more…”

Leslie frowned on seeing the material Tony had for her.

“Thomas sent you all these? Why?”

Tony rolled his eyes; he was sitting on a stool right next to Leslie’s chair behind her desk inside her office. He crossed his arms.

“Because he knows Bruce’s dislike and despite that he wants to help so he chose to show these to me instead to give me an idea.”

Something wasn’t right for Leslie and she raised her eyes to meet Lucius’ serious eyes. The scientist was sitting in the chair in front of her desk watching and estimating without interfering.
Leslie leaned on her chair’s back.

“So all in all he knows Bruce’s dislike and mistrust however he also knows about your agony for Bruce’s life and takes advantage of that to gain through you access to Bruce.”

Tony yanked his head and huffed.

“Leslie, Leslie, Leslie! I know he is using my agony but maybe he truly wants to redeem himself for the way he treated Bruce then. And yes I figured out from the beginning that he was using me but these data” he gestured with his palm at the screen “show something incredible and is the best thing we could hope for Bruce’s surgery.”

Leslie shook her head: he couldn’t blame Tony for his agony – heck! She felt the same agony, as well. Nor she could blame him for wanting Elliot to do the surgery seeing his record of successful operations in extremely difficult cases. Yet she could also understand Bruce’s dislike for this man: even if she couldn’t say that she disliked Thomas Elliot, she also wasn’t very fond of him, moreover to trust him with anything concerning Bruce.

“I admit that Thomas is a great surgeon with an impressive record yet this is something not for us to decide” she said.

Lucius nodded.

“This is exactly what I told him.”

Tony pursed his lips and Leslie locked eyes with him.

“Frankly, Anthony, I’m happy I don’t have to take that decision myself because I’m not sure what to believe about Thomas Elliot.”

Tony closed his eyes impatient.

“I don’t give a damn if he’s a total asshole or not: the only thing that matters for me is to do the surgery that will allow Bruce to walk again.”

Leslie tilted her head and looked at him.

“It’s exactly what all of us want.”

Tony stood.

“Then you’re with me.”

Leslie sighed.

“Don’t do that, Anthony…We want the best for Bruce but pressing him to accept something he doesn’t want will only make matters worse: do you really want him to see us as plotting?”

Tony palmed his face: he remembered the Hell he went through after he stunned Bruce to force his opinion on him.

“Of course I don’t want that…” he huffed. “Hell, for me is worse than for you two because I’ve got already a ‘felony’…But you see that Elliot is the best chance we have right now.”

Lucius Fox also stood.
“I think that this can be solved only in one way: we will discuss this with Mr. Wayne and he will decide. The sooner, the better.”

Leslie nodded.

“Exactly.”

Both of them looked at Tony.

“What? Did you think that I’d do something that Bruce wouldn’t agree to?” he cocked his eyebrows and shook his head. “How such thing crossed your mind?” he asked mocking insult because obviously they were right to suspect him. “To the Manor then?”

“Yes, but we can’t leave all together” Leslie said. “It’ll draw too much attention.”

Tony smirked.

“Not to mention it will be a bit ridiculous…”

Lucius laughed.

“Then I go first.”

As Tony crossed the clinic’s foyer Thomas Elliot was returning from his visit to the patients’ rooms; he wore his white robe and he was followed by Kelly.

Seeing Stark there rang a bell in Elliot; he hurried his steps to meet him.

“Tony!” he exclaimed. “Long time no see…” he gave him his hand. “I didn’t expect to see you here” he frowned. “Is anything wrong with Bruce? I was seeing my patients so I don’t know if something happened in the meantime.”

Tony shook Elliot’s hand giving one of his trademark grins.

“Nah! Bruce is fine – I just visited Leslie.”

Elliot smiled in his odd way.

“Of course! I remember how much Leslie loved both of you…” he frowned and sighed. “But poor Bruce! I’d expect Leslie to get some days off to take care of him after everything he suffered lately. That horrible video! And then Joker…” he shook his head disgusted watching all the time Tony’s cool expression. “You say he is fine? Oh! This is a major relief!”

“Really?” Tony asked.

“Yeah, Mr. Stark” Kelly intervened and a shadow of annoyance crossed Thomas’ eyes “all these days Tommy was very worried about Mr. Wayne. Especially, when police announced that Joker was holding him hostage…”

“I wanted to call or visit” Thomas cut her “but I know Bruce’s sentiments about me so…” he chuckled. “I chose not to disturb him anymore.”

Tony shook his head.

“He is resting.”
Thomas licked his lips giving his eyes warmth and solemnity.

“Everything I learn about Bruce makes me admire him even more... He is so brave and strong! I don’t know what I’d have done if I was in his place.”

Tony grinned.

“Die?” he cocked his eyebrows. “That’s probably how I would have ended up.”

Thomas smiled and Kelly reflected that.

“Tony, did you get those data I sent you?”

Tony acted the surprised as if he wasn’t just talking with Lucius and Leslie about that very subject.

“Mmm... Yes, I actually, try to find the time to read them” he arched an eyebrow. “You understand how it is with all this stuff going on...” he didn’t want to divulge everything to him; he might want to have Elliot for the surgery yet that didn’t mean that he trusted him with everything.

“Of course I do, Tony. I hope you find the time to read them and get in touch for any clarification.”

Tony nodded.

“I have to leave now...” he said. “It’s great to be me but lately it has become a bit tiresome...” he winked to Kelly and she chuckled.

Thomas nodded.

“When you see Bruce, give him my best wishes.”

Tony gave a tight lips grin.

“I will” and he will be sooo happy, I’m sure. “I’m sure he’ll appreciate it. See you...”

Elliot crossed his arms and watched him leaving the foyer: he pursed his lips. He was sure that once Stark saw his work then he’d definitely try to get him for the surgery no matter what and then he’d have a twofold success: a breach that would bring him inside Brucie’s inner circle and maybe a conflict between Brucie and Stark.

Jim Gordon raised his eyes to gaze from his office’s rectangular window the city’s skyline under the grim colors of the cloudy afternoon. He inhaled and returned to the papers on his desk. Reports about the latest developments.

But he had to stop again when someone knocked his door.

“Yes.”

It was his secretary-officer.

“Commissioner, someone wants to see you.”

“Who?”

“Bruce Wayne.”
Jim stood abruptly and walked fast to the door. He came out to the waiting room and saw Bruce.

“Good morning, Commissioner. How are you?” the young man greeted him.

“Fine, Mr. Wayne. Please, come in.”

He made an inviting gesture and Bruce smiled and guided his wheelchair inside. Jim closed the door.

“How may I help you, Mr. Wayne?” he said standing in front of his desk.

“I want to talk to you about Ms. Turner’s disappearance” Bruce said determined but a bit shyly.

Jim cleared his throat and his eyes took a stern hue.

“Hm…I was informed that she reappeared suddenly accompanied by Harvey Dent and his family.”

Bruce nodded.

“Yes.”

Jim cocked his eyebrows.

“It doesn’t seem like a true disappearance after all, huh?”

Bruce tilted slightly his head.

“Commissioner, I want you to understand that we couldn’t have done anything else. Zucco had threatened Ms. Turner and she was panicked – she was sure that he would kill her.”

Jim sighed.

“You could have informed the police about his threats.”

Bruce shook his head.

“We couldn’t, Commissioner. First, we didn’t have any proof and second, he would have left Gotham only to return secretly to realize his threats: as you know, the man had no inhibitions.”

“So you decided to stage a disappearance in order to ensure that Ms. Turner will be safe till police found the truth about Zucco.”

Bruce didn’t lower his eyes and Jim found that he couldn’t be angry at the young man; he liked the determination in those eyes.

“He’d have killed Ms. Turner: he also killed Dick’s father.”

Jim shook his head.

“You still played with the police, Mr. Wayne; you caused an unnecessary procedure.”

Bruce nodded.

“I’m the responsible for this and I’m ready to face the consequences.”

Jim yanked his head.

“Why you didn’t tell the truth to the police?”
“Because if things didn’t happen according to the standard police procedure and Zucco wasn’t persuaded then he could have disappeared before you could catch him.”

Jim took off his glasses and rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“I’ll happily face the consequences, Commissioner” Bruce repeated with conviction.

Jim looked him.

“You could have at least informed me.”

“You have so many things who demand your attention…” he hesitated before continuing. “And I was afraid that you wouldn’t have agreed.”

Now Jim closed his eyes and then chuckled. That young man certainly had guts! Not to mention stubbornness...

“Well?” Bruce said. “Please, do not press any charges to Ms. Turner or Harvey.”

Jim leaned to him.

“That Dent…Plotting with you behind my back!” he saw Bruce’s face turn a bit pale and smiled to calm him. “Let’s say, that your” he sighed “I must admit that – your clever plan saved two lives and helped find the truth about an old crime.”

“I didn’t do all that; I just panicked and helped Ms. Turner hide, trusting that you will find the truth.”

Jim nodded with a look that said: yeah, sure… Bruce raised his eyebrows.

“I can go in jail if that’s the law.”

Jim chuckled.

“You? No, definitely not” Bruce took a breath of relief. “Just next time, please, do inform me before implementing your plans” Jim had enough secrecy from his caped ally.

Bruce nodded.

“I will, Commissioner; thank you for your leniency.”

Jim shook his head.

“I should thank you for your concern about Gotham’s people.”

Bruce lowered slightly his eyes.

“I’m just doing what my parents would want me to.”

“They would be very proud of you, Mr. Wayne.”

Jim accompanied Bruce till the lift and as he was watching the young heir getting hidden by the lift doors, a thought crossed his mind: despite the fact he had ‘deceived’ police with Ms. Turner’s disappearance, his sharp mind definitely would be useful to GCPD. If only they could persuade him to leave Wayne Enterprises for the police…He chuckled and his officers looked him curious.
Alfred hid perfectly his surprise when he opened the Manor’s door: surprise not for the people he saw but for the fact they had come all together.

“Good afternoon, Leslie, Lucius, Master Anthony” he said with an inviting gesture.

The company greeted him back and Alfred led them inside.

“Alfred, is Bruce here?” Leslie asked and Alfred raised his eyebrows.

“So your simultaneous coming wasn’t a coincidence…”

Tony chuckled.

“No, it wasn’t, Alfred” Lucius answered. “Can we speak with Mr. Wayne?”

“He went to the city but of course you are welcome to wait for him to return” he gestured to the salon for them to sit.

They didn’t have to wait much before the sound of Bruce’s car announced his arrival.

“Master Anthony, Mr. Fox and Leslie are expecting you, Master Bruce” Alfred informed him helping him take off his long coat just before a storming Hero who was following Alfred climbed on his young friend.

“I’m here” Bruce said coming from the corridor with Hero on his lap. “How nice to see all of you here!”

Alfred turned to their guests.

“It’s the perfect time for a tea” the butler said and retreated to the kitchen.

Bruce guided his wheelchair near his friends and let Hero on the floor.

“Well?” he asked. “It must be something really important for you to come all together.”

Leslie sat on the armchair close to Bruce and leaned to him.

“It’s about your surgery, Bruce.”

Bruce turned his eyes first to Lucius and then to Tony.

“Okay…”

“You know, Mr. Wayne, that we are reviewing doctors to equip the team that will perform your surgery.”

Bruce frowned.

“But we have already brilliant scientists, Lucius.”

Tony made a few steps near his friend.

“We do, Bruce, but your case is a unique one…”

“As every case” Bruce commented and Tony licked his lips.

“I mean, very complicated, very difficult and very risky. Given your current health condition we need really the best people in our team in order to eliminate the risk factor.”

Bruce nodded.

“Which is almost impossible since every surgery, even the most simple, has its risk factors.”

Leslie raised an eyebrow.

“I can’t disagree on that.”

“Well?” Bruce asked Tony.

Tony hesitated but in the end he decided that he had to tell what he had to.

“We think that we have the best candidate for the leader of our surgery team.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Interesting… And who that person might be?”

Tony ruffled his hair.

“First of all, I want you to be your usual calm, cool headed self.”

Bruce looked at Leslie and Lucius, and shrugged.

“Go ahead.”

Tony licked his lips and shared a glance with the other two ‘conspirators’.

“According to his previous work – his impressive previous work in people with complex and difficult spine injuries – the best doctor for your surgery is Dr. Thomas Elliot” he uttered in one breath to get over with it.

As much as he retained his calm exterior, Bruce couldn’t help but feel a stabbing feeling of betrayal.

“Says who?” he asked calm but grim.

Tony took from the sofa his StarkStel where he had ready the data from Elliot’s work. He gave the tablet to Bruce.

“He is a genius in his field, Bruce and he has worked with Superman so he is accustomed to alien technology.”

Bruce was fully aware of that: Clark had told him that night in the greenhouse when he healed his spine’s injury with his precise laser vision. The memory just brought more daggers piercing his guts…

However Tony and the others took his thoughtfulness as a sign of agreement.

“He has an incredible record of near 100% of successful operations” Tony continued fervently encouraged by his friend’s silence; he held Bruce’s upper arms. “Bruce, we don’t have the safe environment of the Fortress to rely on: we need the perfect doctor for this.”

Leslie was watching Bruce’s reactions carefully. Lucius moved closer and sat on the armchair on Bruce’s left.
“He indeed has pretty impressive credentials, Mr. Wayne. I think we should at least consider the possibility.”

Bruce raised his eyes from the screen and looked at his friends.

“Do you want me to trust this man with my surgery…my life…my chance to walk again…my secrets.”

Tony tilted his head on the side and huffed.

“Bruce, even if his well demeanor towards you is only an act, he won’t dare to do something that will endanger your life. First, because his act then will be totally uncovered; second, because he’d want the surgery to be successful for his status and to gain your trust. And third and foremost, because he knows that if something happens to you, I’ll kill him.”

Leslie cleared her throat.

“I do not want to say that I don’t share your mistrust for Thomas, Bruce, but he won’t be alone in that surgery room: I’ll be there too. Also, even if he indeed is two faced and the scum you think, he is a doctor, Bruce. He has given an oath.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Crane and Quinzel were also doctors…” he spat dryly. “He will also understand how my injuries were caused; he’ll find out that we lied and since he’s so cunning to gain the trust of all of you” Tony pinched the bridge of his nose “he’ll put two and two together and figure out that I’m Batman. Do you really want such a secret in the knowledge of Thomas Elliot?”

Tony shook his head.

“First of all, he hasn’t gained our trust; we just see the facts here. Even if he figures out, Bruce, which is not certain, he is bound by confidentiality” he glanced at the other two for support.

But Bruce snorted and rolled his eyes.

“Really, Tony? Confidentiality? After the experiences from Crane and Quinzel?” he shook his head chuckling.

“Mr. Wayne” Lucius said calmly “we are not forcing anything here: we just putting the idea for consideration. It is your decision.”

Leslie inhaled deeply.

“And the exposing issue can apply to anyone involved.”

“But nobody is as wicked as Elliot to think of that possibility!”

Bruce gave the StarkStel back to Tony with his expression filled with conviction. Tony slapped his thighs.

“Littl’ guy, please, give it a thought! I know that you would have wanted your father to operate you and believe me all of us would have been happier if he was here…but Thomas Wayne is dead, buddy…and we have to settle with what is the second best.”

Bruce turned his wheelchair so that he had his back on his friends; his heart was beating fast. Yes, having his father there would have been perfect…His father would have taken care of everything…
Everything would have been safe with him; Bruce wouldn’t be afraid to close his eyes and lose all control for ten and more hours. But his father wasn’t there; he was dead, eighteen years now; dead because of him.

Bruce’s friends were looking at him sure that he was really considering their proposition.

And then Bruce turned slowly his head to look at them.

“I won’t do the surgery” he said calm but adamant making all of them cringe and widen their eyes.

Leslie stood.

“Bruce, that’s just…”

But Bruce cut her.

“I won’t close my eyes knowing that after that Elliot will enter the operation room and have my body at his will.”

Tony didn’t have the strength to stand: this was the last thing he wanted. Bruce had already once suffered because of him and now his reasonable fear about Tony doing again the same thing would stop him from walking again.

“No, littl’ guy, please” he said. “Don’t take that decision: your dream is to walk again – don’t give up on that.”

Bruce locked eyes with him.

“Batman can walk and fight – that’s the only thing I need. Bruce Wayne can stay a paraplegic for the rest of his life.”

“Mr. Wayne” Lucius said appeasing.

But Bruce raised his palm and stopped him.

“There was a little girl in the Children’s Hospital; her name is Lucy Adams and she is paralyzed. Focus your effort on her instead.”

He turned his wheelchair and retreated fast from the salon, Hero catching up with him and climbing on his lap.

Alfred carrying the trailer with the tea came on time to see Bruce entering the lift. He looked at their guests and his heart fell: Leslie was clenching her waist with both hands and pacing nervously; Lucius’ always playful eyes were grim; and Master Anthony had hidden his face in his palms.

“What’s going on?” he asked frowned.

Dick was crossing the corridor when he heard Hero’s distinctive purring. Usually, no sound came from the rooms but the door to the study was slightly ajar. Hero was alone? He decided to take the kitten so that the animal would have company.

Upon opening the door he froze on his heels. Bruce was with Hero; he was facing the window, gazing at the grounds and petting his kitten. He looked so absorbed as if in another world, just his; Dick could tell that he was sad and that he was intruding.
He turned ready to leave the room.

“Is everything alright, Dick?” Bruce turned his face to him and he looked so tired.

The boy looked at him and walked inside.

“No…I just was pacing and I heard Hero and I thought that he was alone. Mmm…I’m sorry for… intruding. I’m leaving now.”

But Bruce shook his head.

“You’re not intruding. Your grandmother told me that she has your home almost ready.”

Dick ruffled his hair uncomfortable.

“Mm…Yeah.”

“You don’t have to be so hasty…you can stay here as long as you want.”

“Thanks.”

“Of course I understand that you’re looking forward to return to your home.”

Dick really didn’t know what to say: if he had heard that a week ago he would have answered ‘yes!’ but now he had mixed feelings.

“No…not really…I mean I’m glad that granny is back but I’m not in a hurry to leave.”

Bruce smiled.

“I’m glad to hear that because this Manor is your home too and will be forever. You and your grandmother and Jason are always welcome here. And I…I’ll be always here for whatever you might need…so do not hesitate. Ever.”

Dick gulped.

“My parents would have been very happy to know that someone like you care about me and granny…And Brian…Brian would have loved you so much” his voice broke a bit. “You do look alike…”

Bruce pressed his lips: probably, that was the reason Joker chose to kill the poor boy. Dick noticed Bruce’s blank eyes and wanted to fix his mood along with Hero who played with Bruce’s fingers.

“Thanks for the visit rights” he chuckled. “You’d have me here all the time! I want to learn more about you and…Oh! Jason wants his ride with the vehicle.”

Bruce smiled.

“I must remember that…” he chuckled but it was obvious that something was off.

“Bruce, are you feeling alright? Do you want me to call Alfred?” Dick asked worried.

“No, Dick…I’m fine.”

“You’re sad: I…I learnt to figure that instantly because…it used to…make me happy” he lowered his eyes. “But now I don’t want you to be sad.”
“Thank you…that alone can make me happy.”

Dick smiled and hesitantly stretched his hand to touch Bruce’s.

“All of us love you, Bruce…well, me lately…I’m a late bloomer…” he snorted. “But you must remember that whatever happens…even if someone of us says something wrong…we…we just…I mean, we don’t understand sometimes but that doesn’t mean we don’t love you.”

“Thanks, Dick” he patted with his other hand Dick’s and on his.

The boy walked out of the room and Bruce took his smart phone from the small table under the window and sent the email he had prepared.

The woman with the skinny jean and black leather jacket had her forest green eyes on the lonely road of the Palisades. She raised her hand hitch-hiking the car she saw approaching.

The red Lancia Y stopped a few meters ahead of her and she rushed graciously there as the door opened and a head popped towards her.

“Hey, Sel. Hitch-hiking can be dangerous, you know.”

Selina smiled and jumped to the passenger’s seat giving a kiss to the driver’s cheek.

“Yeah, for the driver…” she chuckled. “Smart girls know how to choose cars…so can I come along?”

Bruce grinned.

“Sure…” and he started the engine resuming his course.

Selina was watching her friend; his face was absolutely calm yet Selina had been informed by Alfred about what happened.

“Night stroll?” she asked gazing at the first colors of the night falling over Palisades; dark highways under the public lights which were running on both sides always gave her a feeling of freedom.

“Something like that…”

Selina could speak with Bruce more openly than anyone else.

“They upset you again” she said crossing her arms. “Why they don’t understand?” she rolled her eyes.

Bruce pursed his lips.

“Alfred called you, huh? You shouldn’t have left your bike in the middle of the countryside to hitchhike” he widened his eyes for emphasis “Gotham has many thieves, you know.”

“Don’t worry: I left the bike in the safest place” she cocked her eyebrows and looked him in the eyes. “Your cave.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Bruce, Alfred told me everything…He told me that you said that you won’t do the surgery” she said completely serious. “Sweetie, that is... I mean, it is your decision and I will support you through and through but do you want to tell me what made you change your mind?”

Bruce glanced at her.

“They want Thomas Elliot to do the operation.”

Selina huffed and shook her head.

“Are they nuts? They know that you loath the guy, how do they expect you to trust him with your life?”

“They believe that he is the best there is and that only he can eliminate the perils of the operation.”

Selina shook her head and snorted.

“If you don’t trust the one that is going to cut you open then the perils will only increase. They should have asked a woman about her gynecologist...”

Bruce nodded.

“And there is also my secret: I’m sure Elliot approached Tony only to get access to me and find anything he can about me. Imagine his thoughts when he gets inside knowledge about my injuries and my organism’s condition.”

Selina thought about it – it was cringe worthy: she didn’t like Elliot.

“Do you think that Tony and Leslie gave him any info?”

“No; they wanted to have my consent first. Yet I rather stay paralyzed forever than let him handle my body.”

Selina understood Bruce’s feelings.

“But walking again is your dream, Bruce, and you deserve that – you shouldn’t give up on that whatever they say or do” she pursed her lips. “And I know you always have a back up…”

He turned to her grinning confidently and smartly which made Selina’s hopes flare.

“Oh! You know me so well...” he said and his eyes sparkled.

The first rays of sun burst inside the spacious, modern-decorated living room.

Stephen took the cup with his lukewarm coffee without looking at it, not wanting to stop reading the contents on his laptop screen. It was fascinating and brought him the old feeling of excitement, the same fire that led his life before the accident upturned everything.

He was in his gray pajamas and his had placed his pendant beside his laptop. His cape stood afloat, rigid in the middle of the living room because she didn’t like the coat rack.

His Smart phone rang and thankfully he had finished because he would have been rather pissed from the interruption.

“Strange” he said but then his mood changed from bored to interested. “Mr. Wayne? Okay, Bruce.
Yeah, I’ve just finished reading the files you sent me and I must say…”

The doorbell cut him and this time he rolled his eyes.

“Bruce, hold on a second; someone is at the door” he walked towards the door. He didn’t want the risk of anyone overhearing the sensitive information Bruce had sent him.

He kept the phone stuck between ear and shoulder and opened the door ready to send away his annoying visitor. But as he opened the door he gaped.

Before him with his own Smart phone in hand, was Bruce Wayne on his wheelchair.

“Bruce?” he asked perplexed.

Bruce smiled.

“Good morning. I hope I’m not interrupting.”

Stephen laughed.

“Actually, you interrupted your own phone call” he opened his door for him to get inside and ended the dial.

“Your house is very elegant” Bruce said.

Stephen grinned.

“Kudos to the decorator because I had never the time or the interest to do it myself. Would you like some juice?” he said walking to the wooden bar opposite the whole wall window.

“Thank you, Dr. Strange.”

“From your medication I get that you are not drinking any coffee” he filled a glass with juice and returned to Bruce, gave him the glass and sat at the white leather sofa. “I won’t deny that your visit was a big surprise.”

Bruce sipped the juice and grinned.

“Maybe I should have called first…I’m sorry for the inconvenience.”

Dr. Strange shook his head.

“Inconvenience? Not at all” he glanced at his pajamas and laughed. “Although if you had called, I’d have been in a more appropriate attire. Anyway, when you sent me your medical file I thought that you just wanted my opinion through a phone call or mail. If I knew you wanted a more personal discussion, I would have come to Gotham and spared you from the tiresome experience of the flight here.”

“Actually, I drove here” Stephen’s eyes bulged. “Thank you for your concern but I needed some escape.”

Dr. Strange cocked his eyebrows.

“So many hours of driving though…And all night driving. You must be exhausted without the proper sleep.”
Bruce grinned.

“I have a good friend along: she drove some hours for me to sleep in the back seat.”

The older man cocked an eyebrow.

“Good girl!”

Bruce shook his head.

“I owe her my life and my soul; I don’t deserve her…” he cleared his throat to change the subject “Well, what’s your opinion on my case?”

Dr. Strange huffed.

“Oh, Bruce…I had heard some descriptions of what you suffered all these years but those scans and X-rays were really shocking” Bruce’s eyes became a bit blank. “I mean, what these people did to you for eighteen years was there like seeing a movie.”

“A really bad movie” Bruce said dryly but Stephen leaned to him and found his eyes.

“A movie of incredible bravery and strength – a hymn to human will.”

Bruce shook his head.

“And about my spine injury?” he asked wanting to change the subject immediately.

Dr. Strange understood.

“It’s not an injury” he said in his bass a bit know-it-all voice and Bruce frowned inside. “Is a sum of injuries – the worst I ever seen: I wonder, Bruce, what kind of torture can cause such damage” he cocked an eyebrow “even though as a doctor I have seen many grotesque injuries, tortures always appalled me. What they did to you? It seems like you were crushed…”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Let’s say that there weren’t only tortures.”

“Also, your spleen has been removed due to heavy internal bleeding” Bruce nodded “your right lung has signs of collapse and you suffered a great number of fractures in your ribs, arms and shoulder blades; not to mention, your legs and hip. Those energy casts that hold your bones together did a spectacular job: your bones have recovered to an impressive level. And…” he remembered something that made him fascinated “you are a rare case of Chimera: two distinct DNAs in the same body!”

Bruce chuckled.

“I’m glad you remember perfectly the details of my condition.”

“It’s a fascinating case, Bruce” he cleared his throat “I mean, by scientific interest. And it’s a long time since I last worked on something medical related. By the way, it was an honor for me that you asked for my opinion.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side.

“You are one of the greatest neurosurgeons in the world.”
Stephen laughed.

“I was…This is history, Bruce.”

Bruce looked at him and Stephen couldn’t see through that eyes.

“So what is your opinion about a potential surgery.”

Stephen pursed his lips.

“I have read about Mr. Fox’s job on bionic body parts and I’m sure that Stark had perfected that to the level of a miracle in order to enable you to walk again.”

“But?”

“It will certainly be a most demanding operation – I don’t know if ten or twelve hours of surgery will be enough; I’m almost certain that it’d take more” Bruce nodded solemnly. “Your heart is a bit arrhythmic and that’s dangerous; also, your right lung has already recovered from one collapsing and your other lung has also sustained considerable damage which although healed make the lung sensitive.”

Bruce prompted him with the eyes to continue.

“However you had shown a great resiliency and stamina: not only for eighteen years but also more recently when you came out of those lethal injuries even with some alien help…” he said pointedly but Bruce didn’t seem worried. “Even if I’m not still a doctor, I’m loyal to doctor-patient confidentiality” he hurried to reassure his guest. “All in all, Bruce: it’s a surgery with a great risk but I’m positive that your more than capable friends had made everything to decrease the percentage of danger; the decision is only yours, Bruce, but if you choose the most skilled medical team in the world – and I think that every doctor would have ‘killed’ to be your surgeon – the chances of success will be increased.”

Bruce nodded.

“About that…the most skilled doctor in the world” Dr. Strange looked at Bruce “I want you to perform my surgery.”

Stephen choked on his saliva and grabbed his coffee mug to drink some. He was staring at Bruce with bulged eyes but his guest’s eyes were perfectly calm and serious with a power that made a great impression to him.

“You’re not kidding, right?” Bruce shook his head and Stephen brought his palms on his face. “Some time ago I’d be thrilled to hear that, Bruce; my ego would have urged me to accept at once. But now…I’m not a doctor anymore, Bruce: that ended once and for all. If you want I can suggest some brilliant colleagues.”

Yet Bruce’s eyes were still; adamant.

“Your brilliant skills, your talent in neurosurgeon, your genius weren’t lost in that accident” Dr. Strange shook his head.

“Bruce, you’re a great man; a symbol of willpower and survival but we can’t have back some things as much as we want them. Even if I can perform some trivial operations, the surgery you need to undergo will be the most difficult in medical history. You certainly don’t want to trust your life to a doctor that has left all these behind and he isn’t in his prime. I would not want to be the one who will “condemn someone like you…” he cocked his eyebrows. “Not to mention that if anything happens to you, no dimension will be able to save me from Tony-fucking-Stark. I’m sorry, Bruce, but Dr. Strange is an empty title…”

“But you want to be that man again” Bruce commented and Stephen pressed his hair. “You learnt that you have extraordinary skills; skills that enable you to control matter and time. You sound to me like the best man for the job.”

Stephen fixed his eyes on his legs: well, that young man had a point but still it was…Although his guts felt pleasantly upset, almost aroused on the prospect of something so challenging he couldn’t risk a human life to satisfy his ego.

“I admit that my wizard skills can be quite useful in such a surgery…”

Bruce shook his head.

“It can be very handy” Stephen continued.

“No, Dr. Strange; I wasn’t thinking the wizard; I want just the brilliant doctor.”

Stephen goggled at him frowned.

“Yes, but if…” certainly if something went awry a wizard who can turn back the time to correct things would be really a safety line.

Bruce yanked his head.

“If things don’t go as we want them” he said adamant “I don’t want you to use magic to save my life.”

Now Stephen gasped: he couldn’t believe his ears.

“I don’t want to live fooling the laws of the nature…”

Stephen frowned.

“That’s what a friend of mine says” he raised his eyebrows “Now…you really want me to operate you without my wizard skills?”

Bruce smiled.

“I think that your self-knowledge skills and your quality as a doctor will be enough without your magical abilities. After all, if I have chosen another doctor he wouldn’t be a powerful wizard, right?”

Stephen laughed.

“As far as I know…though we can’t bet on that, do we? But I’ll need time to prepare myself and you; also, I’ll need to be informed about everything your friends have developed. And I want to examine you thoroughly.”

Bruce nodded.

“Certainly. If you want we can return together to Gotham.”

“The sooner I start the better.”
“Thank you, Dr. Strange” he gave him his hand for a handshake.

“Call me, Stephen” he narrowed his eyes and smiled. “You have the ability to motivate people to the best…”

Bruce pursed his lips and shrugged one shoulder.

“Nah…I just ask things…”

Tony paced in the Manor’s salon with Alfred watching him in his usual tranquility. Leslie and Lucius had arrived after him.

“Almost 24 hours, Alfred! Why you didn’t tell me sooner? I’d have…” he raised his palm “wait.” He pressed a button at his wrist watch “Jarvis, find Bruce’s car trace.”

Alfred cleared his throat.

“Master Anthony, I must remind you that you cannot locate Master Bruce’s car even though it’s your creation. However, even if you could, Master Bruce took the red Lancia, obviously for more discretion.”

Tony watched Alfred in disbelief. In the end, he grunted.

“When I took the message to come here – as Leslie and Lucius – I thought that he was here…Why you didn’t tell me sooner, Alfred? So many things may have happened…Shit! Fuck! It’s my fault! Ugh! Why I always do wrong with Bruce?” Alfred was watching calm but clearly amused.

“I apologize for interrupting your self-degrading, quite interesting monologue yet I must inform you that Master Bruce was in the most capable hands so there was no reason to cause you such a distress.”

Tony frowned.

“Which hands?”

Alfred cocked an eyebrow.

“Miss Kyle’s of course.”

Tony took a deep inhale of relief but still wasn’t calm.

“I made him to give up! I killed his dream! Now he won’t do the surgery.”

“Master Anthony, I’m sure that Master Bruce will think it better: he was upset when he said that. And I didn’t raise the alarm about his escapee exactly to let him breathe.”

Leslie stood.

“Alfred is right.”

Tony clenched his waist with both hands.

“I don’t know, Alfred…I’m worried…why he left?”
“To find the best doctor for my surgery.”

Everyone turned surprised to see a smiling Bruce who had just entered accompanied by Selina and Dr. Strange. Tony rushed to him and hugged him; he finally released him still holding his upper arms.

“Thank you, litl’ guy…thank you for not giving up. The best doctor?”

Bruce gestured to Stephen on his right.

“Dr. Stephen Strange.”
“What do you think?”

Tony, a glass of pina colada in his hand, sat at the oval sun chair next to the one Dr. Strange was sitting. On the small rectangular table between them Alfred had brought the doctor a glass of orange juice and some sandwiches; Dr. Strange had sat by the inside pool wanting to watch his new patient’s session with his physiotherapist.

He had followed Bruce’s session with Matt from the beginning wishing to assess fully his condition. Dr. Strange was in the gym while Bruce was exercising in weightlifting, sit ups and walking with exoskeletons. All this time he was keeping notes typing them to his notepad.

Now he was looking at the pool where Bruce swam along with Dick and Jason; the two boys competing with him in spread swimming but soon giving up for playing splashing water to each other and to Hero who was running on the edge of the pool following their course. Laughter was echoing throughout the space.

“Boys! Boys!” Matt said from the brim of the pool clapping. “You’re supposed to accompany Bruce to his exercises…not playing” but then he smiled because hearing all these laughs was great, especially since his patient was laughing along: it was the first time after too long that Matt was seeing Bruce a bit careless. “Never mind…Keep up the good work!” he said and Jason treated him with some water.

“He is amazing” Dr. Strange answered. “He swims like an athlete and that’s pretty impressive considering that he had managed this level only in a few months.”

Tony nodded.

“And he makes it seem effortless; as if swimming with your legs paralyzed is easy…”

Dr. Strange turned to look at him.

“He was freed from Falcone only a year ago and he already managed to help hundreds of people in this city; he was struck again losing his mobility in the worst way yet he fights that and at the same time he is the guardian of a boy that is clear that adores him; as that other boy with them.”

Tony crooked his mouth at the adore thing remembering how Dick was towards Bruce only a few days ago.

“Dick and his friend Jason – Bruce loves them both much.”

Stephen grinned.

“I can see why people love him so much: he is so inspiring.”

Tony raised his eyebrows.

“Don’t let him hear you saying that…He doesn’t like to be praised.”

Stephen shook his head.

“His body is perfectly shaped; muscular like an athlete’s.”
Tony lay on the chair.

“Falcone wanted him like that...he made him work out to get a perfect body.”

Stephen pressed his lips.

“Bruce has some scars that are older than the date of the incident that rendered him paraplegic. Scars from knife wounds.”

Tony sipped from his drink.

“Falcone always abused Bruce” he replied dryly.

“It is odd that he gave scars to the one he wanted perfect for his pleasure.”

Tony licked his lips.

“Falcone’s hatred sometimes overcame his longing; he was short tempered and when Bruce wasn’t able to satisfy every sick desire he had, Falcone was losing control...”

Stephen nodded.

“The traces of all these years’ abuse are evident even in his bones. It’s incredible how a man with such experiences is so dynamic and confident.”

Tony shook his head.

“Bruce buries his experiences deep inside and never lets the pain interfere to his life – he never talks about these things even if we ask him to; yet sometimes his nightmares and flashbacks become too disturbing.”

“I can only imagine.”

Tony frowned.

“Do you think that the surgery has odds to be successful?”

Dr. Strange raised his eyebrows.

“Every surgery has risks and this one is an especially difficult. You know that better than me.”

Tony pursed his lips.

“But I’m sure that you with Fox had created something revolutionary to eliminate the risk to the minimum” Strange added.

Tony put his hands behind his neck and looked at the pool.

“You have total access to our project...However, I’m asking your personal, professional opinion about Bruce: his organism is too battered, his internal organs too exhausted and the surgery is very demanding. I dread that he won’t last...”

“There’s no doubt that what you mention is true yet I believe that he can make it. You don’t?”

“I believe in Bruce and I’d never want him to lose the chance to walk again. But for the first time in my life I want another opinion than mine.”
Stephen nodded.

“I understand how much you love him and I promise you that I’ll do everything in my power for this surgery to succeed. For someone like Bruce I’ll do everything.”

Tony shook his head looking at Bruce who was playing with the boys inside the pool.

“You better…”

Bruce fixed hastily the towel over his pelvis; he was on his stomach at the examination table attached to the gym. After Matt’s massage, Stephen asked to examine him and settled the screen around the examination table for Bruce to strip and cover himself before calling him for the procedure.

Dr. Strange was putting on his gloves when he caught with the corner of his eyes Bruce’s rushed movement to cover himself as better as he could; however, he didn’t want to make his patient feel uncomfortable so looked at his examination gloves.

Bruce grinned.

“I’m sorry… even though my recent life is filled with doctors and examinations I still can’t overcome that reaction.”

Stephen nodded.

“I understand; you don’t have to be sorry. Just relax.”

Bruce let his face touch the mattress and Dr. Strange began feeling his back gently, insisting on the spots were the biggest damage had occurred. He was breathing calmly although a foreign touch was always a shock for his body especially when his neurologist tested his pelvis and legs muscles.

The fact that he could only hear and see the outline of Dr. Strange carefully making his legs move lessened the sense of uneasiness: feeling his ministrations even if completely professional would have elevated Bruce’s distress: he knew that it was stupid of him yet as much as he had learnt to control it he just couldn’t stop the sour emotion from emerging.

“Can you turn on your back, Bruce?” Stephen asked and turned around so to give the younger man the discretion to settle himself.

“I’m ready” Bruce said after he meticulously covered his pelvis; he appreciated Dr. Strange’s discretion.

Stephen continued his examination, feeling Bruce’s torso with his fingers and then using stethoscope. When he ended with the stethoscope the worst moment came for Bruce. Being on his back he could clearly see the doctor’s ministrations first on his pelvis to estimate the damage and the neurons’ state: very careful movements since Dr. Strange knew Bruce’s back story.

And then the doctor began gently making moves with Bruce’s legs testing the muscles and the reflexes. It was awkward seeing your members like this, resembling the parts of a plastic doll – of course, it wasn’t the first time in all these months yet after the days of he being active as Batman what he was experiencing right now seemed like a bad reality crushing to him.

And Bruce was seeing what Dr. Strange saw: the distinct marks of piercing and burning in all these spots where the metallic rods had stabbed his legs: the same excruciating pain pierced Bruce’s brain although the neurons of his legs weren’t feeling anything.

Dr. Strange met his patient’s eyes as he was examining one of these marks.

“Torture…” Bruce said casually and Stephen pressed his lips.

When his doctor put his attention to the lower part of his legs Bruce could succumb to the senses that was besieging him; senses of that night. The unbearable pain; the feeling of his heart collapsing among crazy beats; his lung being pierced; his body withdrawing; the lack of oxygen; the awareness of the imminent death; the agony from his loved ones’ memories; his torturing need to see them one last time.

“We’re done; you can dress” Stephen’s bass baritone brought him back to reality just when sweat drops began appearing to his forehead; he met the doctor’s eyes that were watching him.

The doctor settled the screen around the table and stayed out to let Bruce put his clothes.

“You can come, Dr. Strange.”

The doctor gathered the screen in a corner and brought Bruce’s wheelchair for his patient to sit.

“Well?” Bruce asked.

“Like the scans showed your bones are progressing impressively; as Matt told me you haven’t lost much muscle mass – almost not at all – which is perfectly reasonable since you are training constantly.”

Bruce grinned.

“Tony talked to Matt about me from the first moment I woke up from coma and Matt worked very hard and patiently with me since I first regained my ability to do exercises.”

Stephen smiled.

“They definitely helped but I think that you did most of the hard work: in a few months time you gained the skills of a Special Olympics athlete.”

“Not that much.”

Stephen tilted his head.

“You could have easily competed in a few months yet we’ll make the surgery and you’ll walk again.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“If that surgery succeeds then many paraplegics would be able to walk again.”

Stephen nodded and cocked an eyebrow.

“Absolutely. I believe that there cannot be an injury more severe than yours” Bruce looked at him a bit frowned and Stephen smiled. “Superman saved you from certain death and his alien technology supported your valiant struggle to stay alive.”

Bruce knew that he couldn’t deny that yet the real circumstances under which he got injured weren’t that obvious to the doctor. He licked his lips.
“He did save me and his technology helped me not die and recover; weren’t for his energy casts I would have been still in a hospital bed completely immobile and wrapped in casts. Not to mention that I’d be dead from the injuries I suffered.”

Stephen pursed his lips.

“The same environment where Superman treated you then it would make the surgery much safer” Bruce shook his head in denial but Stephen insisted. “I caught the news: I know that Superman is now preoccupied with other…things.”

“I didn’t have anything with him” Bruce cut him and Dr. Strange nodded.

“Okay, fine; what I wanted to say is that if I asked him to I don’t think that he would object in using his premises for such a surgery.”

Bruce locked eyes with his doctor and Stephen was impressed with the conviction and intensity in those eyes.

“Superman will stay away from all these. I want this surgery to take place under conditions that apply to every other patient: no special help. Lucius and Tony have made a tremendous job and their job will be accessible to everyone; so my surgery will take place with what those two brilliant scientists have created and its success will be the certificate for the beginning of more surgeries for every individual who needs it. Doing the surgery in Superman’s extraordinary conditions and succeeding won’t have any importance because even if I succeed and walk again that won’t apply to everyone else since you understand that Superman won’t accept his place to become a hospital.”

Stephen was deep in thought: Bruce was right in his reasoning. But on the other hand that was extraordinarily selfless: risking his life so that every person would have the chance to regain its mobility whereas he could just do the surgery in the safety of Superman’s headquarters.

“This is incredibly admirable, Bruce” he said serious. “Putting other people’s wellbeing over yours.”

Bruce chuckled.

“I still have you and my friends – I’m not on my own.”

Stephen grinned.

“I’ll need time, Bruce. To assemble my team and study thoroughly Lucius’ and Tony’s work. Also, I need to discuss things with Dr. Thompkins.”

Bruce nodded.

“That suits me too. I have things to settle before the surgery. So you have all the time you need.”

His entire world had shrunk into what his eyes were seeing: which was crazy small considering his sight’s range that was literally vast. However the only thing his eyes could see was the gray tombstone in front of him; every other thing obliterated as the letters formed two words: Bruce Wayne.

After everything – and he didn’t know what that ‘everything’ was exactly but he knew that it was something containing much, cruel fight – Bruce had died…so simple. Because for Bruce the simplest thing was shedding his blood, sacrificing his life for others.
He cocked a tired eyebrow: that was what Bruce always did, right? He had almost died some months ago to save some children but Superman made it on time then and saved him...What he failed to do this time.

He stared at his fists and only then realized that around him was dark: the dusk had given its place to night – pitch black with a deep silence that made his spine froze. He was in Clark Kent’s clothes.

Clark didn’t know if Bruce had had the chance to fight at all his injuries to stay alive yet something inside him told Clark that the human wouldn’t have wanted to fight. After all, this world wasn’t worthy of the effort and Bruce was way too tired and disappointed.

From him more than anything…

Suddenly, the darkness of the night became suffocating as if it had swallowed everything, as if there wouldn’t be any light ever again; no warmth, no hope, no laughter...No star in the sky. He looked up and the sky was a stranger without any star without the moon: a void...He remembered the dream he had seen where the star had led him away from the void, from the cold, the hopelessness. But now that star had vanished.

His eyes returned on the name and stayed there fixed until the letters evaporated and two eyes replaced them: two eyes like sapphire seas with emerald stars for irises.

Clark couldn’t stand the way those eyes looked at him, penetrating him to the core; the realization came as an unbearable stone on his insides: he wasn’t going to see those eyes again...his heart screamed as it was pinched by invisible Kryptonite fingers.

“Kal? What’s wrong?”

Superman opened his eyes realizing that the scream wasn’t of his heart but his own and now Diana was leaned upon him with her dazzling eyes filled with puzzlement, concern and a hue of...scorn? Sure thing, he must have looked too weak in her eyes.

“It’s nothing, darling” he smiled appreciating the pleasant feeling of her silken hair touching his naked chest. “Just a nightmare.”

She cocked an eyebrow.

“I wouldn’t believe that someone like you sees nightmares…” she defeated her contempt and smiled kindly. “So what you saw that made you scream like this?”

Superman raised himself in a sitting position and ran his hand through his hair. He had to share with her; she believed in him and he didn’t want to hide things from her.

“I saw that Bruce had died.”

Diana widened her eyes and snorted.

“That’s normal for him, Kal El: unlike us, he is only a human destined to die” she said indifferently caressing sensually the raven hair on his chest.

Superman nodded.

“I know…”

“But you still got distressed…Why? Is he still that important to you that his death would cause you such reaction?” she asked casually with only a slight irony revealing her annoyance.

Superman understood that she didn’t want to show her jealousy for his intense reaction about Bruce. He wrapped her shoulders with his arm and kissed her lips.

“He is not important, Diana: you are the most important being on the planet for me. Yet I don’t want anyone to die and… frankly I can’t understand why the content of that dream caused such reaction” he shook his head and chuckled.

Diana kissed gently his chest rising with soft kisses to his neck to his mouth till she stabbed her eyes to his.

“Maybe you just want to have his body again…” she said casually and seeing his jerk. “I understand your body’s needs, Kal El: if you long for the human I don’t have any problem with you taking him. You deserve to have whatever you want, Kal El.”

Superman laughed and closed her naked torso in his strong hands capturing her lips in a strong kiss.

“I don’t want Bruce; I long only for you…”

“I’m glad for that because you deserve only the best, Kal El and humans especially this one is so inferior that isn’t worthy even to wash your feet.”

Superman smiled though his heart was again pressed hard in the same way as in his dream; he hated that feeling so he did the best thing he knew that could heal him from everything: dive in Diana’s body and let her perfume clean every unpleasant feeling or thought.

Oliver Queen stood before the whole wall window that revealed Gotham City’s morning skyline. His eyes were blank turned inside thinking his last encounter with Bruce: the human’s blatant refusal of his love. He clenched his fist in the air.

“Why?” he whispered. “Why are you so stubborn and refuse to see the truth?”

Footsteps behind him notified him for a new presence; he didn’t need to turn to see because he knew already. The footsteps stopped right next to him.

“Are you thinking about him?” a female voice thick with irony broke the silence.

He looked at her feeling anger about her cocked eyebrow that almost reached her tiara.

“What are you doing here?” he snapped at her.

She lolled her head to the side.

“Princess Diana is Queen’s friend so she can visit him, right?”

“Your place is next to Superman.”

She looked at the view.

“He gets lost every morning to return at the afternoon as if he works in a humble human office” she answered. “So I can take some fresh air. After all, you certainly have your measures around your place so he can’t overhear us.”
Queen raised his eyebrows.

“That’s true.”

The fake Diana crooked her mouth.

“An easy job for a powerful demon like you.”

Queen didn’t answer and she snorted.

“Don’t tell me you have doubts about the success of your ingenious plan? Superman is completely enslaved to me and thus to you: it will only take your word for me to surrender him to you.”

Queen focused his eyes towards the Palisades that wasn’t visible from there.

“It won’t be long…”

Ivy smiled and touched gently his cheek, taking in the melancholy in his eyes.

“You defeated Superman but you didn’t win what you wanted and that is enough to bend someone as powerful as you” she shook her head. “I don’t get what you guys find in Bruce Wayne…I remember Falcone’s infatuation about that skinny, filthy boy…”

Queen’s eyes took the red, flaming color of Bagdana’s cat like eyes. The menace of his wrath washing Diana’s spine with ice.

“Don’t you ever compare me with that bastard!”

She raised her eyebrows.

“Really? He looked to me like the perfect servant for a demon: a mob boss greedy enough to rob, kill, enslave people and most of all capture a small kid, torture and rape him mercilessly maiming his body and soul. I thought you would be satisfied with Falcone’s performance! Oh! He did great things with that boy’s little body and actually that brat’s body’s only use is to be a sex toy.”

Bagdana’s eyes in Oliver Queen’s face became completely still the red emanating thunders. Diana smirked but the demon grabbed her chin clenching.

“You touched him?!” he insisted.

She rolled her eyes annoyed.

“I did! I was pissed with Falcone’s fixation on him that sometimes surpassed my charm! I was curious about what that skinny thing had to cause such passion: it seemed ridiculous and still seems” she snorted. “I have to admit that he had a great body scent – extraordinary - and his lips on my breasts” Queen’s eyes narrowed to thin flames of wrath “felt like velvet but the major thing is that indeed his ass had an impressive capacity – which must have been of help for Brucie with Superman’s enormous dick…”

Bagdana’s eyes widened like the strike of a lightning but he didn’t hit her.

“Did he remember you?” he hissed frowning since the ramifications of that were more important.
She laughed.

“Of course not! I’m a master of changing faces: Pamela Isley, Poison Ivy, Vivian, Diana…The stupid brat couldn’t remember me. Besides if he did he’d have said to Superman and that idiot would have revealed that to me: the Man of Steel tells me everything.”

Bagdana wasn’t totally convinced yet he counted on the fact that Bruce’s memory of events during his captivity wasn’t perfect: he wasn’t remembering anything about the demon for quite a long time. And indeed if he did remember Vivian and had connected her with Diana he’d have done something to prevent Superman from going to her.

She shook her head.

“I’m deeply sad seeing someone as great as you being like this for the little bitch’s sake; because he was always a bitch, a whore and he still is” she sniggered. “It seems that you’re the only one he doesn’t open his legs for…Have you ever taken even a taste?”

Bagdana clenched his jaw and for a moment everything went dark.

“Don’t provoke me! Remember that your strength comes from me: I can deprive you from it whenever I want and squash you like every other plant.”

Ivy narrowed her eyes.

“Not all my powers come from you…” she said slyly. “The powers you gave me wouldn’t be enough to take Superman away from your little human.”

Bagdana yanked his head.

“That’s why I chose you.”

“Exactly: a goddess of seduction… Though the stupid Kryptonian still relapses into his pathetic infatuation…”

Queen frowned.

“What happened?”

“He had a nightmare; he saw that Wayne died and that caused him a great distress.”

He shook his head.

“I’m not surprised…” it wasn’t easy to forget Bruce; something inside him jerked violently thinking what Superman saw. “Bruce won’t die.”

Diana crossed her arms on her chest.

“He is a human: his destiny is to die.”

Bagdana turned his back on her and gazed at the skyline.

“Not when he becomes mine.”

Diana smirked.

“Are you so sure that he’ll become yours? If Superman’s betrayal and Queen’s love weren’t enough to make him fall for another human being – because your melancholy shows that you failed – then how do you expect that he’ll do that for a demon? By the way, I can’t blame that bitch for not forgetting Superman: he is really great in sex – I bet that he gave some super time to him. Maybe when all this ends and you get the brat I can keep Superman: you think your boss would object?”

Queen shrugged.

“Tell him yourself.”

The fake Diana felt the change in the air behind her as a form shaped instantly; she turned to see an enormous bluish figure with square features. She pursed her lips but Darkseid’s surprise was greater seeing the Amazon there.

Bagdana took his real form and moved in front of her just in case the New God attacked her. There was no danger of anyone seeing or hearing them because not only the windows were blocking the view from outside but also his power concealed them from everyone.

“I told you that you didn’t have to worry about the Amazon…” he said coldly to his ally locking eyes with him.

Darkseid cackled.

“She was your ally from the beginning?”

The fake Diana moved from behind Bagdana.

“He didn’t tell you? He is a secretive little demon.”

Darkseid grinned.

“How you managed to persuade the Amazon to join our cause?”

Bagdana jerked his head backwards.

“She is not the Amazon Princess” Darkseid frowned and the woman beamed stretching her arms.

“Poison Ivy.”

“She has powers that we needed and I gave her everything necessary to persuade that she is the real Amazon.”

Darkseid nodded.

“And you did a tremendous job, Bagdana, and you too, Ivy.”

She cocked her eyebrows.

“Since you’re here and you acknowledge how precious my work is, our deal with Bagdana was that after the extinction of human filth from this planet I will get the remains so my plants and I could live and thrive: for millions of years humans were destroying and taking brutal advantage of nature. Now, it’s our turn.”

“You can do whatever you want with this pathetic planet after I finish” Darkseid said indifferent.

“I’ll be the beloved queen of nature” she said and her blue eyes shone; Bagdana couldn’t hide his amusement on that. “And I’d like to ask something about Superman…”
“What?”

She narrowed her eyes and waved that off with disgust.

“Never mind! Screw Superman!”

Bagdana met Darkseid’s eyes.

“Superman is enslaved to her and she can bring him to us whenever we want: nobody will give a damn about his disappearance after his indifference during the recent attacks against humans – their greatest heroine now is Wonder Woman and when the time of your attack comes their despair will be devastating seeing her siding with you.”

Ivy smiled wickedly.

“That would be perfect” Darkseid said thinking about the Anti Life Equation: the amount of terror and despair from almost 7 billion humans would give him a tremendous power.

Bagdana stood before him.

“Well? Have I won my reward?” he cocked one of his thick eyebrows.

Darkseid narrowed his eyes and laughed.

“I underestimated your wits, Bagdana: you are a worthy servant of Darkseid.”

Ivy rolled her eyes hearing that yet Bagdana bowed slightly his head keeping his eyes locked with Darkseid which satisfied the New God. The ancient demon knew how to control his wrath and let others insult him as long as he needed them…His price was more than worthy of listening to that stupid God’s bullshit: actually, Darkseid’s arrogance was really hilarious for someone who had watched countless of powerful beings getting squashed into oblivion: they also believed that they were invincible.

“Though” Darkseid said raising an eyebrow “Superman seems to defy a bit your control…”

Clark Kent was walking on the streets of Metropolis, blended with the crowd; his coat’s lapels were raised supposedly to keep away the cold – spring had come yet winter seemed reluctant to depart - but also because he felt the need for being unnoticed. Not that he wasn’t unnoticed in his humble Clark Kent appearance; but he wanted more.

He had his hands deep in his oversized coat’s pockets thinking. He told Perry that today he wouldn’t stay in the office and head for field work. Clark didn’t tell anything to Lois who was glancing at him cold as always. He couldn’t press his presence on her and actually he wanted to be alone without someone who constantly criticized him about his choices.

It was afternoon and he already missed Diana: her warm, strong body; the dazzling feeling of her touch, of her kiss; her intoxicating perfume that filled him with pure happiness… Ugh! His body cried and wanted to drag him back to her…

Yet there he was, walking aimlessly trying to catch anything dangerous so to prevent any potentially dangerous development for people; or finding anything about Intergang which he had neglected lately. And actually he wanted to keep neglecting that and everything else for Diana’s sake yet he felt…guilty. After the nightmare with Bruce he felt guilty for not doing what he had promised his parents and himself.

Bruce’s ‘death’ reminded him the people who died during the attack in New York while he was watching from afar. Bruce might not be in danger and actually Bruce did have other people to save him if there was the need yet other people did rely on him.

Suddenly, he caught yells, grunts of pain and shootings coming from the other end of the city. The sound of shattered glasses was flooding and the cries of children heartbreaking.

He hurried to a dark, deserted allay and in a second Superman had replaced Clark Kent: he raised his fist in the air and launched to the sky feeling the dark cloud being lifted from his heart with the thought of how proud Diana would be of him…

As he was flying there Superman could see some police cars heading to the same place but the Man of Steel knew that in hostage situations the sooner the calamity ended the better. And it was a hostage situation: his hearing was focused there so he could discern clearly the threatening voices of men and the scared heartbeats of people. There were injured but thankfully no dead.

His sight was fixed to the spot where the incident was taking place so he saw the place before reaching there; a common restaurant opposite a building filled with offices so during this time of the day it was packed with men and women who were dining before returning to their work. However there were also kids as some families had come for lunch as well.

As for the assailants, they definitely weren’t bank robbers: if some robbery had taken place Superman would have heard. Probably some terrorists encouraged by the fact that Superman seemed absent lately decided to spread pain and death.

Well, they’ve made a serious mistake.

As he was almost there, Superman decided to wait before entering. He knew that if he surged inside in their panic or to cause as many casualties as they could the terrorists would fire frantically.

So Superman chose to act differently and turned his eyes into laser vision. It took only a few seconds to melt their weapons with them realizing only when the firearms were useless.

Then he launched himself in shattering the window display and like a twister he tackled the terrorists knocking them out one by one in a matter of seconds.

People were staring with puzzled eyes; everything was happening too fast for them to discern. But suddenly as the last assailant dropped unconscious and the hurricane stopped revealing Superman, a massive cheer erupted along with laughter.

Superman’s smile was huge as he looked at the people whose lives were saved: well, the room was a mess with pieces of cutlery everywhere; upturned tables and chairs; the smell of gunfire was intense and some people were lying down bleeding. Yet the nightmare had ended.

He noticed that some kids were taking video with their Smart Phones as the customers reluctantly at first but thrilled eventually surrounded Superman to thank him.

Police officers surged inside pointing their guns only to lower them seeing every terrorist on the floor and Superman among a cheering crowd.

“It’s safe, lieutenant” the Man of Steel said to the head of the officers I’m here.”
Darkseid stared in the air in front of him and both Bagdana and Ivy saw Superman fighting with ease several thugs inside a restaurant.

Darkseid crossed his arms and looked at Bagdana who immediately remembered what Ivy had told him about Superman’s nightmare with Bruce. His immediate thought was that Bruce’s presence even in his dream had a strong effect on the Kryptonian: even he had underestimated Bruce’s power. He took in Darkseid’s slightly ironic look.

“That would be a start for regaining his popularity…” the New God commented dryly.

“Then we just obliterate him sooner…” Bagdana answered casually and his eyes filled with pure hatred focused on the Man of Steel in the footage Darkseid conjured.

The New God’s grin was broad.

“That was the best thing my advisor ever said…”

“Oh! I love those war councils in the cave! They are so atmospheric!” Tony exclaimed stretching his arms in the air and inhaled deeply only to cough. “Though the air down here is a bit fusty…” he looked at the bats hanging from the ceiling. “No offence…”

But then Hero who was lurking in a stool before the bench made a spectacular jump and landed with a black flying rodent in his mouth; Tony whistled but Bruce who was near took gently his kitten and released the flying rodent that wasn’t injured and flew away from certain death. Selina who was leaning on the working bench laughed.

“An ongoing vicious war!” she said dramatic and exchanged amused glances with Tony.

“Bats are not enemies” Bruce said to Hero who was looking at him displeased. “And this isn’t a war council” he looked at Tony “I just wanted to update you to the data Jor El sent me and the cave processor is the best option.”

Tony made a small circle movement with his head.

“I think it’s high time you focused on your surgery instead as I do…and you’re still keep in touch with the alien’s – how to call it? – surrogate hologram father?”

Bruce let Hero on the floor raising his index finger.

“Behave…or you’ll be banned from the cave” he said warningly but then smiled because he just couldn’t stay angry with his kitten. “Yes, I contact Jor El still because things are serious.”

Tony crooked his mouth, slumping on the stool.

“And your surgery?” Selina asked.

“It can wait” Bruce said bringing his wheelchair to the computer bench. “Dr. Strange needs time to be prepared and if we let things unfold without doing anything the surgery and being able to walk again won’t have any importance.”

Tony frowned.
“Are things so bad?”

Bruce nodded and pressed a key in the keyboard bringing on the central screen the feeding from the building where Luthor was working on the machine that now was three feet high, shaped like an ellipse with the half of its walls ready but still the other half just started; inside a dark blue polygonal rock was pulsing like an inanimate heart. Tony stood and frowned.

“A really mysterious machine…An energy producing module? A new kind of energy.”

Bruce looked at his friend.

“Anti Life Equation.”

Tony pursed his lips.

“The supposed mathematic formula that gives to the one who possess it the power to control every sentient being?” he licked his lips. “Bruce, this is a scientific myth that was never proved.”

Selina shook her head.

“Thankfully…”

Bruce however typed some orders to his keyboard and the strange symbols the items had were shown on the screen.

“You want to tell us that those symbols actually have to do with the Equation?” Tony narrowed his eyes.

“According to Jor El they do. He recognized immediately the symbols as originating from a planet called Apokolips” Tony cocked his eyebrows. “Their leader – dictator – is called Darkseid and he is constantly trying to find that formula to force his order of things to the entire universe.”

“Very original…” Selina slurred rolling her eyes.

Bruce grinned.

“He and his troops have already devastated hundreds of planets seeking for the raw materials for the formula: the materials that will set the puzzles of the Equation to the correct position.”

Tony scratched his head.

“I’d like to hear what ecologists would have to say to that…So this Dark – something has turned his attention to Earth?”

“Jor El believes that this being thinks that humans are the material he was looking for – and that’s the reason he made everything to get back the items from me and to release Luthor from prison: he obviously is years on Earth studying his material. He had brought the items here and trusted them to Luthor so when I got the control of LexLabs he was infuriated.”

Selina who had crossed her arms over the chest raised her palm.

“Wait…So Mannheim works for an alien? Because we know that he was trying to take back those things.”

Bruce met her eyes.
“I believe that Mannheim is just a shirt to cover Darkseid’s true identity — I felt something of his power when he came to my office and it explains the mystery around him and the servitude of Luthor in front of him.”

Tony nodded.

“So they are among us indeed, huh? Alien movies were never my favorite… And if Mannheim is that new UFO on the block then Intergang is run by aliens and the attack on you back in the island was also his doing.”

Selina who was present during the attack nodded.

“Those creatures definitely looked like aliens.”

“Parademons” Bruce added. “Darkseid’s troops.”

Tony nodded.

“That makes perfect sense since you had the items in your possession and he was anxious to get them back.”

“It wasn’t that: he was already launching raids to the LexLabs to get them back – plus, the attack on me wouldn’t have helped his cause the slightest. He attacked me to get to Superman.”

Selina tapped her fingers on the bench.

“Of course” she said “sending the fake Diana to save you so that she starts seducing Superman. He wants Superman under his control when he launches his attack on Earth.”

Bruce nodded.

“He feared and hated Superman more than anything else on the planet.”

Tony snorted.

“I feel so discriminated…” he said with irony.

Selina sniggered.

“We’ll give you an Oscar next year to fix this…”

Tony winked to her playfully and then he hit his palms determined.

“So we know who he is, where he lives and what he plans – let’s get the alien freak” he stood.

But Bruce looked at him calm but definite and Tony pursed his lips.

“Guess not, huh?” he sat again at the stool.

“If we bust him right now, first he will get free easily: one of his powers is to mind control people – he did that with thugs and with highest rank officials to get Luthor released…I felt his manipulative power when he came to my office; he tried to invade my mind to get the items.”

Selina frowned.

“But the asshole failed – he doesn’t know with whom he has to do.”
Bruce rubbed his chin.

“I think that the Black Butterfly worked like a shield.”

“Can we reproduce the gem?” Tony asked. “It could be very useful when facing that monster.”

“I don’t know if reproducing the gem will maintain its unique qualities. Anyway, what I was saying is that he would be free again and knowing that we are aware of his identity and plans he’ll make his attack sooner.”

“You said that he wants his machine ready first.”

“Yes but if he sees that his plans are in danger he can easily conquer Earth first and then finish his machine. The more he remains blind to our knowledge the better for us. We gain more time to organize and recruit our allies.”

Tony nodded with some irony in his eyes.

“Superman.”

Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“I know you don’t like him…”

Selina pouted.

“Tony? Not liking Superman? Oh, Bruce, don’t say that preposterous thing again…” she said snidely and Tony chuckled.

Bruce crooked his mouth.

“If we attack Darkseid now Superman will be manipulated by Ivy to fight alongside them or simply he will be neutralized – it won’t be difficult as he blindly trusts her: both options don’t help our cause. We need Superman with us. Darkseid belongs to a race called New Gods and he is really powerful: Jor El said that he can be incredibly fast; he equals Superman’s power and also have another power nobody else has: Omega Beams which he launches from his eyes to kill his enemies.”

“Great…” Selina commented and cocked an eyebrow. “And till now sounded too dull…”

Tony yanked his head backwards keeping his arms crossed over his chest.

“Still we have so many people with extraordinary skills on our side – Superman is not that necessary.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“You and Lucius took every precaution to make the risk factors of my surgery minimum yet you still wanted the best doctor to perform that surgery in order to eliminate the risk even more” Selina looked at Tony and he rubbed his goatee. “We are talking about the survival of Earth and 7 billion people: would you want to let any risk factors unchecked?”

Tony sighed.

“No, I don’t! The lucky bastard…”

Bruce grinned.
“We need every hour we can get: your mention of reproducing the Black Butterfly is valid but we must find a way to somehow emanate its shielding quality to our allies. And for waking up Superman we’ll need…”

“Kryptonite” Selina completed.

“Perhaps but most of all we’ll need the true Amazon Princess not only to show Superman that his Diana is a fake but also to have a precious ally to our fight.”

Tony licked his lips.

“Supposing that the legendary tribe and their Princess really exists; and if they do exist how are you sure that we can find them?”

Selina met Bruce’s eyes.

“Well, I can’t be sure that I’ll find her but I’ll do my best: I have already gathered references about their locations from ancient authors like Homer, Herodotus, Apollonius Rhodius, Strabo etc. Amazons’ homeland seems to be relocated at times but if we combine the information we have maybe will get close.”

Selina rolled her eyes.

“I hated history in school…”

“History blended with mythology actually…” Tony commented.

“And I’ll ask information from Cassandra and her mother: perhaps they know something more.”

“And when you find the location what would you do?” Tony asked.

Bruce shrugged.

“Batman will talk to her.”

Tony chuckled.

“These women according to the legends are lethal and very hostile to men; you will probably need to fight.”

“I know.”

Tony leaned to him.

“Leave that mission to me, littl’ guy, not only because we can’t risk you get injured again but also because…” he inhaled and twitched his eyebrows suggestively “my charm is notorious…”

Selina sniggered.

“Gossip shows say other things…”

Tony widened his eyes scornful.

“Slandering of the gutter press…”

Bruce shook his head.
“No, Tony: I’ll go myself – you need to stay here and organize our allies. You’re S.H.I.E.L.D.’s director and you can do things without causing panic or drawing attention; also, we need you to perfect our means of neutralizing Darkseid’s machine.”

“Yeah, it is most fortunate that we have the items monitored and our sensors there: I can turn those sensors to means for neutralizing the machine. I’ll also try to find a way to deflect the Black Butterfly’s protection to our allies. But, Bruce, you can’t go there alone: what if she doesn’t believe you and instead imprison or kill you?”

Selina stretched her beautiful body.

“He won’t be alone.”

Tony looked up at her.

“You agree with that?” he glanced at Bruce. “Aren’t you afraid that she may stick there?”

Bruce smiled and Selina snorted.

“Nah… You, boys (except Bruce) might be pretentious, stupid, ungracious, graceless” Tony mouthed ‘thanks’ “but I do prefer a bit of testosterone in my world…”

“What about Oliver Queen? What’s his part in this?” Tony asked frowned.

Bruce pressed his lips; he was fighting with himself whether he should tell his friends the truth or leave it for later.

“Bagdana is working for Darkseid” he said in the end casually though he had caused his friend’s eyes widening.

“But you had defeated him; you sent him to the Tartarus weak” Selina said.

“Yes, but a god could still free him.”

Tony nodded and crooked his mouth.

“Now all the pieces are in place: Darkseid freed the ancient demon to assist him and the cunning bastard orchestrated all this – the Amazon beguiling Superman enslaving him to their will and at the same time breaking your heart.”

Selina looked at Bruce.

“And Oliver Queen? They mind controlled him as well to be their puppet?”

“I’m convinced that Bagdana has possessed Queen’s body to be able to walk among us.”

Tony brought his palms on his face.

“Of course! The fake Amazon came with him; and he is infatuated with you.”

Bruce decided to tell them everything.

“And we can’t rely on the Arrow because Oliver Queen is the Arrow: he had lured Batman to see Ivy with Superman making love that night because he knew that Batman and Bruce Wayne is the same person. That’s why he managed to find Loki’s palace: remember what Thor had said? No mere god or mere mortal could locate it.”
Selina lolled her head.

“And certainly we can’t bust him for the same reason we can’t attack Mannheim.”

“Exactly. We need to move in stealth mode until we’re ready.”

Suddenly the screen on the left turned to live footage from Metropolis and Bruce looked there: he had programmed his processor to scan for any news concerning Superman or Wonder Woman.

The footage showed Superman beaming among exhilarated, clearly relieved people at a pavement outside a restaurant that clearly had been under attack; police cars and ambulances were scattered around and paramedics were transferring injured. The reporter was relaying that Superman’s intervention had saved many people from a terroristic attack.

Bruce frowned.

“You said that they planned to make people lose their faith in Superman but he seems to have ruined their plans” Selina said.

Bruce nodded; his eyes fixed on Superman’s beaming face that made his heart fly.

“That’s bad…” he mumbled in the end.

Selina narrowed her eyes.

“But we want him on our side.”

“They won’t risk their plan’s failure; this will make them act sooner concerning Superman; after all, better taking him away now before he makes more helping people showing that he still cares” he said pressing numbers in his keyboard. “We need to keep Superman away from Ivy till we return with the real Princess – yet if Jor El calls him in the Fortress and tries to keep him there, Superman will suspect and return to her. We need something that will keep him away without raising his suspicions.”

“And what’s that?” Tony asked.

The sound of dialing echoed through the cave and after three times a female voice answered.

“Hello?”

“Hi, Martha” Bruce said.
“Bruce, dear!”

The honest joy in that somewhat tired voice made Tony raise his eyebrows surprised.

“Bruce has a good mother-in-law…” Selina whispered to the billionaire.

“If only her son was the same…” Tony snorted.

Bruce brought his index finger to his lips hushing his friends.

“Martha, how are you?”

“I guess fine, sweetheart; and you?”

“Fine. Mmm, Martha, it’s something I want to ask you” he decided to go straight ahead.

“Anything, Bruce.”

Bruce rubbed his chin.

“It has to do with Superman: the Avengers have some indications that he might be in danger from Diana.”

“What?” the woman sounded astounded. “I mean, I Know she is bad yet that she can harm Clark is incredible…”

Bruce looked at his friends.

“They believe that she is not the Amazon Princess and actually is allied with someone who wants to hurt Superman; it seems that she has put him under some kind of mind control.”

A small sigh both from worry and relief came out of Martha’s mouth.

“I knew that my boy wasn’t himself…” she mumbled and Bruce pressed his lips.

“I know you did, Martha.”

“You knew it too, Bruce…you never stopped believing in him.”

Bruce avoided his friends’ eyes feeling uncomfortable.

“Well, Martha, Tony asked me” Tony pouted showing with his thumbs his chest mouthing ‘me?’ “to tell you to call Superman to stay with you for a time; they believe that this woman and her associates might try to hurt him so it is urgent that we make him go away from her.”

A sharp intake of air from the other end of the line.

“Of course…he blindly trusts her so it would be too easy for her to trap him. Do these people know his true identity? Because if they do then they’ll find him easily here…So maybe he will be safer in the Fortress?”

Bruce shook his head: she was right in her reasoning.
“Clark hasn’t brought her to you, right?” Martha confirmed that. “Then he hasn’t revealed to her his true identity. On the other hand, Clark has showed suspicious behavior towards Jor El so if he calls him to the Fortress and attempt to keep him there, Superman will immediately figure out his intention and return to the fake Diana. Instead you can call him to stay with you without raising suspicions; also, Tony told me that he will contact Jor El so that the Fortress’ technology would conceal Superman’s presence to your house.”

“I’m not afraid for myself, dear” she said calmly.

“I know, Martha; you’re one of the bravest people I know. However we’ll take every necessary precaution.”

“I see you keep the promise you gave me” a small smile hued her voice “you still love my stupid son.”

Bruce pressed his lips feeling his friends’ stares.

“I know that he is safe as long as you are here...What else do your friend want me to do? Speak to Clark about the truth?”

“No, Martha; do not tell him anything – if you attempt to tell him the truth about Diana and her associates he’ll react badly; probably he’ll leave and cease to trust you. Tony wants you to just keep him there with you until the Avengers find proofs to show him that she isn’t the real Princess.”

“Fine, Bruce: I’ll do that. Do you want me to do it right now?”

“The sooner the better, Martha: he just saved some people in Metropolis and Tony is certain that the fake Diana and her allies won’t like that and perhaps they’ll try to neutralize him immediately.”

Martha’s voice was determined without indicating any fear though her heart was beating fast.

“I’ll call him right now: I just hope that her influence isn't so strong to affect his love for his mother.”

“I’m sure that nothing can affect his love for you, Martha.”

“Oh, dear...”

“As soon as the Avengers find what they want they’ll come to reveal everything and help Superman see the truth.”

“Fine. Thank you, Bruce.”

“I’m not doing anything, Martha; I just relay a message.”

“In that case, can you thank Mr. Stark for his concern about Clark?”

Tony’s eyes bulged and he pressed his palm over his mouth so the chuckles wouldn’t be heard.

“I’ll do that, Martha.”

“I hope after all these end we’ll see each other again, sweetheart.”

“I’ll be very happy to do that, Martha.”

When the dial ended Bruce remained thoughtful and Tony walked closer.
“I being so concerned about Superman?” he snorted. “You lied to the poor woman…” he shook his index finger with disapproval grinning wickedly.

Bruce shook his head.

“Bruce can’t be investigating things, right? More so taking action…”

Tony scratched his head.

“I’m teasing you, littl’ guy…”

Bruce smiled.

“I know and believe me I would have liked to tell Martha the truth but it’s better if she doesn’t know.”

Selina crossed her arms over the chest.

“The fewer the better” she agreed.

Tony brushed his goatee.

“I’ll make sure that the Kent farm will be a blind spot for every human means of monitoring.”

Bruce nodded.

“And I’ll contact Jor El to cast additional concealing methods in order to block our extraordinary enemies: Superman must stay away from Ivy until we return.”

“In the meantime, I think it will be prudent to ask Dr. Strange’s help with the mind control think” Tony remarked.

Bruce turned his eyes on Tony.

“Not mention anything about me…”

Tony grinned and nodded.

“Don’t worry…But…I’m thinking about the Amazon’s location” he licked his lips. “In a world where hundreds of satellites scan the planet every second and also radars are used from almost every military and common ship how their homeland remained hidden? I mean, maybe they are just a legend? A part of mythology?”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“Even ancient historians spoke about them and Ra’s taught me that ancient Greek historians are the fathers of the modern history science; also, there’s no mythology without a speck of truth. Now if they still exist remains to be find… However – about the fact nobody has found the Amazons – Greece has many still unexplained electromagnetic fields that intrigue the scientists so maybe Themiscyra, if really exists, exploits such a field to remain hidden: you know better than anyone about blind spots for satellites.”

“Something like the Bermuda Triangle?” Selina said.

“Exactly.”
Tony tapped his fingers on the computer bench.

“You’ll still need a jet to take you to Greece and a yacht since you two will explore the Aegean and that means that there must be someone trustworthy to do the driving. You take my jet and Happy will take you there – he can also drive a yacht: a rental one.”

Bruce nodded.

“Lucius will be our driver – Happy may be trustworthy but I don’t want him putting one and one together. Also, Lucius can give us insight about the electromagnetic fields – he has developed software that can bypass such fields into revealing what they hide” Tony whistled impressed. “And if Dr. Strange needs some detailed info about the project both of you developed you can provide them.”

Tony crooked his mouth.

“I feel left out of the party and you should know that for Tony – party animal – Stark this is dreadful.”

Selina smirked and Bruce closed his eyes.

“I’m sorry, Tony, but you’re precious here.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows and nodded.

“Yadda, yadda, yadda…Just promise that when this Darkasshole eats dust you’ll remember the coordinates of that island” he crossed his palms behind his neck and sighed closing his eyes. “I’ll need some vacations!”

Bruce and Selina exchanged amused glances.

Clark’s eyes were focused at the PC screen on his desk where the Planet’s site had on the top of the page his story about Superman’s intervention at the “Dory’s” Restaurant an hour ago. Perry had patted him in the back – his way of congratulating his employees – and now the chief was inside his office enjoying the number of hits their site was getting.

Yet Clark needed to see the coverage from other, neutral sources so he searched the news outlets: he had to fight a huge grin from his face as journalists’ comments were welcoming Superman back. The readers’ comments were between bitterness due to his latest indifference, relief and joy for his return. Clark silently promised to them that he wouldn’t ever close his eyes to their need; that he would be always there from now on.

He had heard the familiar steps before the familiar figure stood above him; he was happy for that but he didn’t look up till Lois was there for sure.

“Good job…” she said a bit indifferent meaning both Clark and Superman and before he managed to answer she walked away towards the door leading outside the reporters’ space.

Clark followed her and Lois stopped in the niche of the closet with the janitorial equipment.

“Don’t expect us to be like before” she said crooking her mouth having guessed her friend’s intentions and thoughts.
Clark closed his eyes and ruffled his hair.

“The fact I broke up with him doesn’t change who I am, Lois, not our friendship; why are you so hard on me?”

She gritted her teeth.

“Because what you did was cruel and my friend would never do such cruelty.”

Clark huffed.

“Please, Lois; you have also broke up with people – that’s life: at some point just you can’t go on as much as you don’t want to hurt the other. He understood that; and you have to know that he was far from perfect in our relationship.”

Lois frowned and narrowed her eyes.

“Do you really want to blame this on him? The world saw you fucking with that bitch on that rooftop” he whispered in case someone overhead them.

He nodded.

“Okay, okay…just don’t call her that: she is not a bitch!” Lois rolled her eyes and looked away ready to leave which Clark noticed. “Let’s put that behind us already! Maybe my behavior was wrong but nobody is perfect, Lois…why can’t you forgive me for once?”

Lois growled and crossed her arms over her chest. Clark smiled.

“Holding a grudge against me won’t change what happened neither would send me back to him…”

Lois cocked an eyebrow in irony.

“I doubt that he’d have taken you back even if you begged.”

Clark chuckled and shook his head.

“Why I would ever want to do that? And beg for that? But I have everything I want and I’m happy at last” he frowned. “I’d never return to that!”

Lois nodded.

“It is official: You’re an asshole and…”

She didn’t end her phrase when Clark’s phone rang; he frowned recognizing his Ma’s tone.

“It’s Ma…” he said to Lois. “Hi, Ma! How are you?” for the first time after months he felt actually good speaking to his Ma – till now his guts were clenched every time he had to speak with her. “Yeah, I’m fine.”

“Give her my love” Lois said.

“You have Lois’ love – and you too” he said to Lois and frowned; he nodded. “Alright…Yeah, don’t worry, I’ll fix it.”

He ended the dial and looked at Lois’ puzzled look.
“She wants to spend some time with me.”

“Is she ill?” Lois asked deeply concerned.

Clark narrowed his eyes.

“No, if she was, I’d have felt it. She says that she missed me and feels too lonely” he pouted “actually many things have happened lately that created some distance between us.”

His friend smirked.

“That seems to be the case for every person you love…” she raised her eyebrows. “At least, that in the past you said you loved.”

Clark crooked his mouth.

“I never lied about my love, Lois.”

“Tell that to Bruce.”

He didn’t answer; he was tired and fed off by explaining all the time. He sighed because what mattered now was his Ma.

“As a matter of fact I missed Ma too.”

Lois cocked an eyebrow.

“And the Princess? She won’t object? Or you’ll take her to meet her mother-in-law?” she remarked snidely to Clark’s uneasiness.

“He doesn’t know that I have a human mother” he admitted and felt bad even before seeing Lois’ affronted look.

Lois chuckled.

“Of course, the arrogant bitch would have lost her respect for Superman if she knew that he is so much connected with humans! That two common humans saved his life as a baby and raised him like their son – two poor farmers of all people” he shook her head disgusted for the Princess’ contempt and Clark’s compliance with her attitude. “How can you be like that, Clark?”

He didn’t answer.

“You don’t understand, Lois…”

“I understand better than you do!” her inflamed eyes stabbed his. “At least look to make it and visit your mother – you owe her that. After your exclusive with Superman, Perry won’t have an objection.”

Thomas crossed the front door to the clinic’s foyer; it was late afternoon and he had come there immediately after his lecture in the university. To be frank Thomas loathed the place and was bored of his shifts there – especially since they were volunteer job which meant no money. Yet it was something he had to do in order to achieve his goal. And he was certain that he was close to that.

He had no doubt that Stark would press his friends to see how beneficial his hiring would be. And then all the major players would press Bruce into accepting; the brat couldn’t refuse to them even if he didn’t want Thomas to perform the surgery. In the end, Brucie would have to yield in order to not displease his loved ones.

And once every detail about Bruce was at his disposal then his secrets would be an open book to him.

As he entered the always busy foyer he caught with the corner of his eye Leslie heading to her office. He hurried his steps till he caught up with her.

Leslie was absorbed in her thoughts so Thomas’ presence was a surprise for her. The young man beamed to her.

“Hi, Leslie! Wow! It seems like ages since the last time I saw you…”

She regarded him quietly.

“Well, with us doctors this happens often” she answered and continued her way with Thomas at her side.

“Yeah, I guess you must be extra busy with Bruce’s latest adventure with Joker and the new developments.”

Leslie wasn’t a fool and Thomas knew that so he smiled innocently when she looked at him puzzled.

“New developments?”

Thomas shook his head.

“I guess all of you must be in frantic work now that Bruce’s surgery is so near.”

Leslie frowned.

“How did you come up with such an assumption?”

Thomas grinned and shrugged one shoulder.

“Someone like Tony Stark will make everything so that his friend walks again as soon as possible. And Lucius Fox certainly is a great asset. So are we almost there?” he asked with his eyes sparkling like the enthusiasm in his voice.

Dr. Thompkins remained neutral; she could see how interested – obsessed – Thomas was with Bruce’s surgery and frankly she couldn’t blame Bruce for not liking that.

“There is no haste for Bruce’s surgery” she said casually and began walking.

Thomas didn’t believe that but still…

“Have you given up? Is there a bad development in Bruce’s condition that forbids the surgery?” he gave his voice honest concern. “Perhaps Joker did something to him? Oh! That is awful and so unfair! After all this man suffered…” he shook his head.

Leslie set her jaw and locked eyes with him.

“No, Bruce’s condition hasn’t any change. But you know that these things demand time and patience. We won’t risk Bruce’s life in order to hurry things up.”
“Of course! It is my tactic as well. Especially, with my project on complicated spine injuries” he smiled. “I don’t want to brag but with Superman’s precious contribution surgeries that prior wouldn’t even be risked, took place smoothly and 95% percent of the injuries were almost completely restored.”

Don’t want to brag…Leslie thought fighting a smirk. But you do, dear Tommy…

Dr. Elliot decided that he had said enough for the time being.

“Well, I must go to my patients now” he said to her and took his most serious and concerned expression. “I have said it to Tony” he decided that it was better to pick the honesty option “and I’m going to repeat it to you as well: if you need any aid; any assist to Bruce’s surgery…I’ll be more than happy to contribute with my knowledge and experience.”

Leslie smiled.

“I know, Thomas; I’ll remember that, thank you” she continued her way.

Thomas crooked his mouth watching her and then pursed his lips: they really didn’t have another choice so he only had to wait.

“Poems by Emily Dickinson”

It was the first thing that caught Clark’s eyes as soon as he entered his parents’ house still holding his Ma in a one arm hug. It shouldn’t have and frankly Clark felt awkward and uncomfortable because he immediately noticed the book on the antique small round oak coffee table next to her Ma’s favorite light blue armchair.

He had arrived flying, as soon as his working hours ended. Perry – thankfully – didn’t object to his request for a few days’ leave, especially when he heard that it was about his mother: Ms. Kent was often sending homemade delicacies to their editor.

Clark wanted to reach his Ma the soonest: the last couple of months their relationship faced some crisis so he was thrilled when his Ma spoke to him with her old warmth and asked him to come to Smallville and spend some time with her. Perhaps after his latest intervention that saved people’s lives she realized that he was unchanged and maybe he’d manage in these days to make her like Diana.

Clark chose to fly there not only to save time but also to not draw much attention with his arrival: everyone in the town knew him and honestly he didn’t have the mood to speak with anyone.

As soon as he landed inside the yard Martha wearing her wool knitted gray cardigan came out and rushed to him and Superman who on landing changed his clothes into Clark Kent caught her half way and hugged her.

“I missed you, sweetie” Martha told him kissing his cheek and Clark’s heart felt like being put in its right place after long.

“You still have that book?” he asked casually.

Martha followed his eyes to the object that caught her son’s eye.

“It bothers you?” it was Bruce’s gift on their first meeting.
Clark shook his head.

“I thought that after everything that happened…” well, he didn’t know how to finish his phrase; after all, he was at fault for their break up or at least that was what his Ma believed.

Martha pressed her lips.

“It is a gift given with love and I appreciate it. I don’t see a reason to get rid of it because you two are not still together.”

Clark knew that he couldn’t ask that; he was aware of his mother’s affection towards Bruce.

“You’re still in touch with him?”

Martha understood that it was a question that could lead to nasty things if Clark got suspicious about Bruce’s involvement in her request to see him.

“I don’t think that it’s bad to call once in a while to learn about his health: the poor thing is constantly met with misfortunes.”

Clark nodded thoughtful.

“No…I guess it’s not bad…”

Martha smiled relieved and detached from her son’s hug.

“Sit down and I’ll fetch your favorite apple pie: I just took it out of the oven.”

Clark’s smile was broad.

“The smell was torturing as soon as I crossed the state’s borders! I thought you’d never say it! Do you want me to help?”

“No, honey. I’ll bring everything.”

Clark sat on the light blue couch unconsciously choosing a safe distance from the book as if it was contaminated. However it took only a few seconds to realize that the book still carried Bruce’s special, rare perfume.

He closed his eyes pissed: he didn’t want to be haunted by that human! He thought of Diana…he missed her already yet his Ma was really important and she deserved some attention too: after all, with Diana he was sharing every day and even if he didn’t like to think about that: at some point his Ma would be gone while Diana would at his side forever.

He stubbornly ignored the book and looked elsewhere, his gaze wandering to the home of his carefree childhood. So many fond memories; he grinned but it was a sad smile: moments that wouldn’t come back…Despite the bitter taste in his mouth Clark was happy for being there after all these months: he felt that he needed some change in scenery and his parents’ house and the farm was perfect.

Martha returned carrying a tray with two mugs with hot coffee and two plates with tantalizing apple pie that made Clark’s mouth water. She placed the tray on the table and sat next to her son. She caressed his raven hair and he smiled.

“I thought you were pissed with me?” Clark asked.
Martha pressed her lips.

“How can a mother be pissed with her only son?” she replied. “I was worried, Clark.”

He looked her in the eyes.

“I told you that nothing had changed in me.”

She nodded although things had changed in her son but thankfully they were results of external influence so they could be stopped and reversed.

“You can’t blame a Ma for worrying…”

Clark kissed her palm.

“No, I can’t, can I?”

“You’re my good boy – of course you can’t…I thought you were eager to test my pie?”

Clark cocked his eyebrows.

“I do!”

He grabbed the plate and began devouring the delicacy under his Ma’s warm stare.

“I’m glad you’re here, honey…I’m glad I can take care of you like the old times…”

Clark smiled.

“I’m glad I returned, Ma.”

“Master Bruce is not here at the moment, Mr. Queen” the butler’s thick accented voice echoed through the dark, humid cave.

Bagdana stood in front of the round shaped underground lake staring at the contents of his memory reflected on the waters: his last meeting with Bruce.

“Do you happen to know when he is going to be back?” he asked with Queen’s voice speaking to the air sending his voice to the phone back to his penthouse.

“I am afraid that I do not have an answer to that, sir. Master Bruce is out of Gotham for business. Would you like me to ask him to call you when he returns?”

“I’d be grateful, Alfred. Thank you.”

“You are most welcome, sir.”

He ended the call and grunted displeased.

“To what do I owe your new visit so soon after our last one?” Bagdana asked without turning his back to acknowledge the presence in his cave.

Ivy walked towards him and only then the demon wearing his real form turned to her.

“You’re looking for your naughty pet?” she asked with irony clearly having overheard; she cocked an eyebrow. “When all this ends and you have him in chains he won’t be able to wander around even with his stupid chair.”

Bagdana narrowed his eyes.

“Mind your own business” he hissed quietly but the effect was rather chilling. “Which brings us back to what you’re doing here.”

She gave him the piece of paper she was holding.

“What’s this?” he asked frowned.

Ivy smirked.

“Our plans must be delayed…When I returned to my apartment Superman wasn’t there for the first time after he ditched Brucie. Instead I found this on the table.”

Bagdana perused the words scribbled on it and looked at his ally.

“So he has something to do and he will be away for some days?” he cocked an eyebrow and pursed his thick lips.

Ivy narrowed her eyes.

“Do you think it is suspicious?”

The demon rubbed his chin.

“Perhaps he indeed has things to do…. But as you said it is the first time he does that and I don’t like it coming after he saved those humans.”

Ivy cocked her eyebrows.

“He bothered with them only because I wasn’t there to dissuade him…”

Bagdana smiled.

“But he also left for a couple of days clearly defying your charm and his addiction to you…”

She fumed annoyed and yanked her head.

“That’s not true!” she clenched her fist. “He left but that doesn’t mean that he will last much without taking his dose of me” she narrowed her eyes. “Soon he’ll come back desperate for my perfume and my body.”

The demon shook his head and turned to the underground lake before him.

“Hours have passed that he is away…” he said thoughtful.

“There’s just no way he overcame my charm!” she hissed insulted and twitched the golden lasso in the air whipping the rocks.

Bagdana smirked on this reaction and nodded.

“I’m sure, my dear…”

Ivy somewhat calmer walked closer to the natural pool and gazed inside; Bagdana had already obliterated Bruce’s reflection from there so Ivy saw nothing.

“Can you locate him?”

The demon crooked his mouth.

“No” he saw Ivy frowning. “But that’s not saying much: the Kryptonian has ways to conceal his whereabouts even if he doesn’t do this consciously.”

Ivy snorted.

“Darkseid won’t be happy about this development. He reminds me of a mutated giant Smurf that crushed into a truck…”

Bagdana chuckled.

“Why don’t you say that to him?”

She pouted.

“I never insulted people for their appearance…even if I killed them. What will happen if Darkseid finds out about Superman’s departure? He’ll believe that we failed and won’t grant us our rewards.”

Bagdana waved that off.

“We don’t have to spoil his good mood…nothing happened and Superman will come to us now or later.”

Ivy hit her foot on the stony ground.

“I’d prefer to end this sooner than later: I have some millions of oppressed organic souls to liberate.”

Bagdana raised his palm in a waiting gesture.

“Patience is a valuable virtue, my dear: after all, plants survive for ages just with being patient and resilient. If we make a hasty movement Superman could suspect something.”

She chuckled.

“He is an idiot, totally dependent on what I say to him.”

“I won’t risk it: this business is too important for me.”

Ivy cocked an eyebrow.

“Because of Wayne” she snorted.

“Exactly” he replied casually. “We’ll wait and make him come to you.”

Bruce gazed at the sapphire blue waters that covered the horizon in every direction. The light sea breeze caressed his face cooling his skin pleasantly since it was spring but still the weather was a bit cold even in Greece. He had climbed the ramp Lucius had installed to connect the cabins with the deck and now he was standing near the edge.

It was Wednesday. Tony’s jet landed on Athens Monday morning and they immediately headed to Marathon to visit Cassandra and her family.

Cassandra translated Bruce’s request: to learn anything they knew about the location of the Amazons’ legendary island.

Bruce was looking at Cassandra’s mother without hiding his eagerness and the woman smiled faintly before speaking. Cassandra after her mother finished turned to Bruce.

“She says that her knowledge about the island is too limited: she had heard the old ones discussing that this island was almost invisible, hidden by energy.”

“Electromagnetic fields” Bruce remarked and Cassandra nodded.

“Right. Nobody was certain about the exact location but they assumed that it must have been somewhere between Evia and Skyros (the Amazons used to take their horses from that island); there the electromagnetic fields collide. However nobody ever tried to find them because really there was no reason for that.”

Lucius who was watching the discussion intervened.

“I know about the electromagnetic fields of the area but they cover a really large span so if you have anything more specific I’d be grateful.”

Yet Cassandra’s mother looked sad when her daughter translated. Cassandra was shaking her head hearing what her mother was saying.

“I’m sorry but she doesn’t know anything more.”

Bruce pressed his lips and lowered his gaze which didn’t evade Cassandra’s mother who took his hands in hers. Bruce raised his eyes and met the woman’s gaze.

Cassandra’s mother touched the spot where the Black Butterfly was under his blouse and said something.

“She says that you must trust your instinct: you’re the bearer of the goddess’ sacred gem; you’re her chosen so if someone can find their island…that’s you.”

Well, that wasn’t very comforting for him because although he trusted his instinct in every case, in this one he’d prefer something more concrete. At least, they had an area to search.

Cassandra’s mother sensing his distress suggested that he should visit the ancient temple.

“Let the energy of the temple fill you and guide your steps…”

And he did so. He spent a couple of hours in the ruins along with Cassandra. He didn’t plan to stay so long but the place had such tranquility, piece and energy that Bruce realized how much he needed and stayed there literally soaking in them reluctant to leave that state of mind after the storm he had faced all those months.

Lucius and Selina had stayed out of the temple, near the car.

When they returned to the house Cassandra and her mother insisted that they stayed there for the night Cassandra pointing out with a smile that it’d be very handy since they certainly wanted to pass unnoticed from the local media.

They did stay and Lucius used the time to make the arrangements so that the yacht they rented waited for them at the bay of Marathon; to the side that wasn’t visible from the land. They’d use a rental boat to reach it.

The next morning they thanked the two women for their hospitality and Bruce stayed behind as Lucius and Selina went to the car. He thanked once again Cassandra and her mother for everything and the older woman touched his hand and smiled.

“You will make it, son; the goddess’ blessing is with you. I know you’d do everything for the world’s best and that makes me sure that everything will end as you want them” Cassandra translated.

As he watched the sparkling Aegean waters Bruce wished he had the same confidence with Cassandra’s mother. But several hours later onboard and they hadn’t found anything; Lucius was constantly scanning the area they crossed with his software that bypassed the electromagnetic fields. Yet its range wasn’t too broad so they needed to be in the island’s broader area to manage to see it which was like seeking a needle in a haystack. And his instinct wasn’t very talkative: how it could be?

He always had some facts on which his instinct relied. Now there weren’t any facts…

Bruce inhaled deeply the salted air and closed his eyes: so many things depended on their success. Darkseid’s defeat, the world’s survival, Clark’s life…

He opened his eyes and gazed at the clear blue horizon: unwillingly, he remembered the days he was doing the same thing sat in the round balcony of Tony’s villa in Thasos. He was gazing at the sky expecting to see Superman’s figure approaching…He remembered the joy every time he saw the beloved dot getting bigger and bigger…

He averted his eyes: that was over.

He rubbed his forehead feeling a headache developing rapidly. Maybe there were no Amazons after all…Maybe Bagdana just used a charming legend to seduce Superman.

Even if that was the case they would still fight: they had their weapons and the most important they knew what was lurking in the shadows; also, they did have the machine’s control.

However he needed the Princess Amazon to be real and help them because first she would be a valuable ally and second because she would show Superman the truth about Vivian and bring him to their side where he belonged.

To their side, not to him…Bruce pressed his lips: there was no way back to what they had with Clark even though these crystal waters reminded him all these beautiful moments in their island…He shook his head: this had no importance.

He felt two soft hands putting a jacket over his back and he turned to see Selina.

“Alfred told me to look after you” she said and sat down. “It’s beautiful, huh?”

Bruce smiled.

“Yes…It feels like home - oddly.”

Selina hugged her knees.

“They say that the perfect place for vacations is where you feel like your second home – and our stay in Thasos was perfect so the place became like a second home to you. Plus, one of your DNAs comes from here…”

“Right” he said and looked ahead.

Selina pursed her lips.

“You know, I feel for Tony…”

“For missing the Amazons” Bruce chuckled.

“No for feeling bad about you not focusing on resting and exercising. You should have been back home doing your exercises and gathering energy and strength for that fucking operation.”

Bruce met her eyes.

“If Darkseid wins it won’t matter much if I become a paraplegic or a walking slave to Bagdana.”

Selina gulped uncomfortable.

“Don’t say that not even for a joke…” she said fighting the freezing feeling in her spine. “And I know that you would never become a slave.”

Bruce inhaled.

“I won’t…” he said quietly but adamant. “But you understand why what I’m doing now is more important than my surgery.”

Selina shook her head.

“And it’s him in the middle” she said.

Bruce closed his eyes.

“It is important that he is freed from her influence.”

Selina smiled fondly and raised her hand to hold Bruce’s.

“He is important to you.”

Bruce met her dazzling eyes.

“Please don’t go there…It is over – I told you before; but Superman is great and the people need him…” he sighed. “If only we had something about the Amazons’ island…”

“The lady said that you must trust your instinct and the Black Butterfly.”

Bruce crooked his mouth.

“I prefer more concrete things; I trust my instinct but to have a hunch I need something tangible…” he huffed.

Selina pouted.

“I’m sure you’ll find the way…”

Bruce looked at her.
“What did you say to Steve?”

“What we agreed: that you had some business out of Gotham and I would go with you.”

Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“I feel bad for disturbing your life every time…”

Selina frowned and showed with her hand around.

“Being on a 45 ft brand new yacht in the middle of gorgeous scenery and sailing for a fascinating adventure it’s hardly a disturbance; more of the grand gift in a lottery” she rose. “Shall we?” she asked looking at the cabins and Bruce nodded.

In the study, they found Lucius leaned above a detailed map of the area which he had crossed with his own map which showed the electromagnetic fields; the map was a perfect reproduction of an ancient map of the area. The scientist was drawing lines with the compass and the protractor. Next to the map was placed the laptop where image from Lucius’ software was shown; the image was the result of filtering the area from the fields. Till now the image on the screen was the same with what they saw with their bare eyes.

He turned to acknowledge the two youths smiling.

“Did you enjoy the view?”

The yacht was stationed. Lucius knew how to drive it and when he needed to do something else, he was putting the yacht in the auto pilot with a system he had developed; it was easy to attach the system to any yacht since it came like a USB stick.

“We would have enjoyed it more if we had seen a shore filled with anciently dressed women” Selina said casually sinking in the white leather sofa and Bruce nodded.

Lucius laughed.

“Yes but then we’d have to fight them…”

Bruce grinned.

“That’s a possibility but I hope we manage to avoid that.”

“I’m not afraid” Selina said cocking an eyebrow.

“Of course, Miss Kyle…” Lucius replied. “I brought some food from the kitchen; I thought that you’d be hungry and Mr. Wayne needs to take his medication.”

Bruce chuckled.

“Don’t tell me…Alfred cornered you as well?”

Lucius laughed.

“Cornered is an understatement, Mr. Wayne…”

“Thanks, Lucius” Selina said grabbing a bowl with pasta from the shining wooden table.

As Bruce was eating he remembered what Clark had told him about the Black Butterfly’s reaction to the energy field in the Fortress. Indeed, he had read that gems had their own energy flow and the Black Butterfly wasn’t a common gem so it had more energy than the others.

He let his plate on the small table and Selina looked at him worried.

“What is it, Bruce?”

Lucius straightened his body from studying the map and looked at Bruce.

“I know I’m not the best cook yet I hope it didn’t make you ill?”

“I’m fine and the food is great” Bruce said and moved the chair to the big desk where the map was laid. “While being on the deck the Black Butterfly was exposed to the area’s magnetic field that means that the gem was - let’s say – charged. Also, Black Butterfly has its own energetic qualities.
I’m curious to see the results.”

He pulled the pouch from under his blouse and took out the beautiful gem.

“If only…” he whispered and brought the gem over the map closing his eyes and thinking hard their quest.

He touched the gem on the map keeping his eyes closed in deep focus. He emptied his mind from everything except the island and sensed the vibrations of the gem. He wasn’t hearing anything apart from the sea hitting gently the yacht.

And then he heard his friends’ sharp intakes of air.

“I don’t believe it” Selina whispered.

“Of course!” Lucius said. “The gem works like a compass!”

Bruce opened his eyes and saw the point of the triangle shaped diamond pointing to a spot in the map. Lucius hurried to take a pencil and mark it.

Bruce looked at both his friends.

“Let’s try it!”

Lucius drove the yacht towards the location and Bruce with Selina were watching avidly the laptop screen where the software fed the image of the area without the electromagnetic fields’ interference.
Few hours had passed and Bruce was fighting his disappointment setting his jaw determined.

“We’re almost there…” Lucius said returning to the study.

The Afro-American didn’t receive an answer and he saw both youths staring the screen amazed. He ran there: the filtered image showed a land covered with green while the common image showed only water. The scientist smiled: how convenient! It was a spot of the Aegean Sea where boats almost never approached.

Clark was leaning on his father’s old wooden working bench behind the barn where his tools were still waiting for him. His heart beat painfully as his eidetic memory brought back the figure of his father repairing or creating things in this very bench to fix the farm’s premises.

He was just an annoying toddler running around him watching with curiosity what his father was doing and pestering Jonathanto let him help. Jonathan used to smile and promise him that he’d help some other time and that now he really needed a glass of cool water and that was enough for little Clark to run back to the house and bring water. Jonathan knew that his boy was extraordinary strong but he didn’t want to risk him getting injured by one of the tools.

Clark smiled bitterly and looked the horizon at the direction of the town’s cemetery: his long distant vision permitted him to see Jonathan’s plain grave and the wild flowers he brought him this morning when he visited with his Ma.

It was his third day here and he was satisfied. His eyes caressed the sunset colors in the sky that had only a big fluffy pink-velvet cloud; the sun had set and the first dark blue had blended with the pink. He inhaled deeply.

But suddenly he frowned: memories flooded again his mind; memories that he didn’t want but also he didn’t feel like pushing away.

His arms felt lovely; they had a weight that made his heart blow with warmth. He saw again himself months ago carrying Bruce bridal style out of the house. They had just visited his Ma and promised her that they’d return for Christmas.

His Ma brought a blanket to wrap Bruce meticulously so he doesn’t get cold during the flight back to Gotham. The human had thanked his Ma smiling but he didn’t let Superman hold him too close to his chest; Bruce was still angry with him and slowly detaching…

But during the journey back to the Manor Bruce had fallen asleep and he was so beautiful that Superman was watching him speechless…though even in sleep the human still kept his head away from Clark’s chest. For the first time after months Clark felt nostalgia that only Diana could cure because Diana was his real love.

Bagdana materialized suddenly in the middle of Diana’s living room; she was surprised but contained it with a cocked eyebrow. She was watering her plants kissing the leaves.

“Welcome” she said. “You should have called – I might have had someone who shouldn’t have seen you.”

Bagdana shook his head.

“You’d have informed me if he had returned.”

She nodded pouting and caressed elegantly the leaves of a dwarf rose.

Bagdana walked to her.

“Two days have passed. I won’t wait anymore: Superman must get out of the picture.”

Ivy smiled.

“It was ‘bout time! Do you know where he is?”

Bagdana pressed his lips.

“No, he is concealed” he smirked. “But that is no problem: he’s been exposed to you for months so it should take only a flight around the States for you to lure him out of his hole.”
Ivy smirked.

“I like it when you’re so determined!”

Clark felt his body revolting: there was his beloved perfume in the air but it was coming from far away. His heart beat faster: nostalgia and need became torturing – Diana was somewhere: not close but he could feel her; her body called him and he wanted to be with her. Clark could sense her longing for him: he had abandoned her – his one true love and she was looking for him crazy from the same craving that burnt his insides.

He had still the image of that day in his mind’s eye: Bruce sleeping like an angel in his arms but keeping his head away. No, Clark realized now, Bruce wasn’t sad for Clark’s behavior: he just longed for another man – Thor – and Superman’s hold disgusted him.

He span and Clark Kent dressed in his red plaid shirt and weathered denim gave his place to Superman; his legs had left the soil on their own volition.

“Clark, where are you going?”

Martha had seen him from the kitchen’s window and his sudden change made her pale. She rushed outside to stop him before he flew away.

Superman turned to her smiling but his eyes were already elsewhere determined-possessed.

“I must leave, Ma.”

“No, Clark! For your own good, don’t leave!”

Superman bit his lip impatient but kept his smile.

“Don’t worry, Ma: it something I must do and then I’ll be right back to you” he said and sped away not giving his mother the chance to say something.

Martha’s breath became constricted; her heart sank as her son’s figure was fast vanishing in the darkening sky.

“No, honey…” she hoped against hope that it was some emergency that called her son away but cold fingers had grabbed her heart fortelling something really bad for Clark.
Lucius didn’t want but as a reasonable man accepted his young employer’s logic. Bruce asked him to take the chris-craft and return to Athens; the yacht would remain anchored where it stood right now: in a safe distance where the Amazons couldn’t see it; waiting their return.

“If the Princess accepts to come with us I wouldn’t want her to see you and connect Batman with Lucius Fox because it will be obvious then that Batman is also connected with Bruce Wayne” Bruce had explained shortly.

If everything went according to their hopes Batman and Catwoman would accompany the Princess to the yacht where Tony would wait for them – after Bruce’s notification that the Princess accepted to help – and Bruce Wayne with Selina would return to Athens where along with Lucius they would take the jet with Happy as pilot to return to Gotham. Tony had developed a prototype small jet that could land to the sea as smoothly as on the ground.

Lucius shook Selina’s hand and then Bruce’s.

“Good luck and be careful.”

Selina smiled.

“We always are…”

“Of course, Miss Kyle!” Lucius mimicked her grin and turned to Bruce. “For whatever you need contact me immediately.”

“Thank you, Lucius.”

“You’re always welcome, Mr. Wayne” he answered and descended the ladder leading to the small white chris-craft boat that was attached to the yacht.

Lucius set the craft’s course and turned his head to see the two youths on the deck – Selina standing and Bruce on his wheelchair - watching him moving away; he always felt some fear when he departed from Bruce. It was a residual from the nights the young man sneaked out from Falcone to meet him to plan their action; the time was limited and filled with anxiety and every time Bruce left Lucius wasn’t sure that Thomas’ son would stay alive to meet him again…Falcone’s brutality after all was evident on the youth’s face.

“Time to dress up?” Selina turned to Bruce as soon as the only thing they could see was the froth Lucius’ chris-craft was leaving behind.

“I think it’d be better to wait till the night falls” the sun was already setting sprinkling abundance of red and gold to the glimmering waters; Bruce looked up to two seagulls who cried. “To our good luck it is a night with a new moon so darkness will be our ally. Do you like night swimming?” he grinned.

Selina shrugged thoughtful. She didn’t have any seconds thoughts about Bruce’s involvement since her friend’s ability in swimming even as paraplegic was impressive even without the enhancement the armor offered.

“As long as the sea is clear of sharks…”
Bruce cocked an eyebrow and chuckled.

“A cat is afraid of fish?”

Selina snorted.

“Well, a cat doesn’t like the tables turned.”

Bruce smiled.

“Then it is a good thing that Aegean doesn’t have sharks…”

They returned to the study cabin and settled around the laptop that showed many different shots of the island.

“They have guards patrolling” Selina said pointing with her index finger at the red heat dots around the perimeter of the beach.

“They patrol on horses” the bleeping red spots showed two different presences, one on another. “The indications show that their armory is obsolete but I have no doubt that it’s still very lethal.”

Selina raised her eyebrows.

“Have you ever been scratched by a woman? Even a woman’s nails can be lethal – I know from the yells of those I scratched.”

Bruce shook his head.

“We don’t go there to fight.”

Selina looked at the thermal dots.

“Yeah, but that doesn’t mean we won’t have to…We will be stealth but that can’t last much since you want to talk to the Princess.”

Bruce nodded thoughtful clenching his chair’s armrests wishing he was in perfect condition just in case. Selina brushed his upper arm.

“Before we leave you should take your medicine.”

He smiled.

“Of course” he consented.

“Do you see him coming?”

Bagdana’s voice echoed in Ivy’s ears as she floated aimlessly on the American sky. She was far from Metropolis because her favorite place wasn’t in that city and Ivy wanted everything to be done there. And of course the demon didn’t object.

“A demon is an agent of free will…” he had hissed slyly when she told him her intentions.

His voice reached her from his cave.

“Not yet but I’m sure he is on his way. Nature is my ally and I have every bush, weed, flower or grass emanating my perfume so wherever he might have been my calling reached him. And he simply can’t resist my calling.”

“You are the goddess of Nature, my dear!” Bagdana remarked with his slight irony.

Yet Ivy didn’t give him any attention: she was sure that the demon believed that otherwise he wouldn’t have chosen her. Ivy was aware of the demon’s preference for Gotham – besides, his obsession with Wayne was an indication. So now she could explain how Bagdana approached her while she lurked in Gotham’s wings. He studied the city and her residents so he knew the power hidden in Poison Ivy’s body.

Her confidence was justified: she might not have had Superman’s super sight yet she made out a dot in the horizon approaching fast. Well, it didn’t look like an airplane and as the popular quote went:

“It’s a plane!
It’s a bird!
No, it’s Superman!”

She smirked and took off flying equally fast supposedly searching frantically for him; Ivy gave to her features a hue of agony never forgetting her resolute, full of power expression, worthy of an Amazon.

Superman’s heart that was already beating quickly with longing from the moment he smelled Diana’s perfume now beat even faster because all of his senses were put on fire taking in her signals that first were distant but now were approaching rapidly.

Not that he had any doubt that he’d find her: he could sense her breath, her heartbeat, the heat of her needing, powerful body… And now as he was approaching, Superman saw her flying to him. He sped.

They collided in the middle of the morning sky and Superman saw fireworks as Diana grabbed his face with both hands and captured his lips almost violently pumping her taste in his thirsty body. Superman never needed oxygen but in this case he felt the air being drawn out of his lungs.

He followed the rhythm of her lips and the grinding of her lustful, strong body on his; her half naked pelvis and her thighs was so heated that he could feel it under his uniform. Her body was vibrating from longing. But his also.

“I missed you” she said in her strong, adamant voice as if she uttered an order. “You left a note and just vanished and that pissed me off!” she grabbed his testicles so violently that he ached but also felt his entire body paralyzing pleasantly as she immediately caressed his sensitive parts with her unique way. “You can’t treat like this the leader of the Amazons.”

Superman cupped her face with both hands.

“I had to, Diana; but I’m sorry for upsetting you…” he attacked her lips and she bit him. “I missed you too… I want you…”

Truly, his body wanted hers right now, right there; in midair, among the midday sky’s clouds; careless of anything. She clenched his hair and yanked his head sucking brutally his neck.

“I have the perfect place, Kal…” she whispered in his ear wrapping her leg around his hips and rubbing their groins together. “There I’ll show you how much I missed you…” she licked his earlobe fully aware that this melted the Man of Steel.

Superman yanked his head backwards and sighed: returning to Metropolis seemed so time consuming and his body just couldn’t bear the delay. Besides he was thinking to have some time with Diana and then returning to his Ma after explaining to the Amazon that there was some emergency.

“To your apartment?” he almost complained.

Her blue sparkling eyes were filled with irony when met his.

“I doubt you’d last so much, Kal…No” she shook her head. “Somewhere better.”

“Why not right here, right now?” he wrapped his arm around her waist and glued their hips together.

The Amazon’s face became authoritative, strict.

“Because I say it and you know that whatever I’m saying is for your best, Kal, Lord of the Krypton. Unless,” she cocked an eyebrow and her eyes filled with irony “you don’t trust me.”

Superman locked eyes with her.

“I trust you with my own life.”

Diana smiled.

“You’re right to…”

She slipped from his arms and began flying Superman following until he reached her and stayed by her side. They were exchanging glances every now and then filled with love and heating passion.

“Well done, my dear!” Bagdana whispered to Ivy’s ear.

Two eye shaped slits watched through the thick foliage of the forest. The night was extremely dark since not only the moon was at its circle’s start but also there were clouds covering the stars. Another pair of eyes watched too next to the first pair.

Batman had adjusted the light of his lenses to be discreet to not draw attention and Catwoman wore her night vision goggles.

The island’s mainland wasn’t dark at all; the main soil streets leading to the city and the temples situated at hills all over the island were illuminated by 7 feet tall stony pillars that had on top oval shaped vessels with oil that burnt fire since dusk fell. The city was also filled with lights either from the same kind of pillars or from lanterns that hang from every building. Even the beach was abundantly illuminated by torches scattered on the sand.

However for Batman and Catwoman who for all their lives were used to pass unnoticed even in the electric lights of the modern cities it wasn’t difficult to blend in the shadows and take cover in the woods; the already fallen night was a big help.

The patrols around the beach perimeter of the island were constant yet they chose the moments the horsewomen turned their backs on the spot to slip from the sea to the forest. Their equipment permitted them to remain underwater waiting for the right moment. Of course, the horses would neigh if they sensed any presence but both Batman’s and Catwoman’s armor had the means to conceal any traces of human presence.

The clever women had predicted that someone might have managed to lay his feet on the beach and had dag big holes throughout the sand covering them with sea weeds so if someone passed unnoticed from the patrols to end up in the bottom.

Yet they didn’t know Batman’s scanning technology that even while underwater had already showed them in a detailed blueprint the dangerous traps.

The trees after the beach were scarce – cut on purpose to not offer coverage; not as dense as in the mainland yet for them even those were enough: both Batman and Catwoman climbed to the first tree and then jumped from branch to branch like cats till they reached the thickest part of the forest.

As Batman had landed on the wood’s soil right next to Catwoman, he looked at her puzzled: she took off the flat shoes and wore her long, high heeled boots that she carried with her in a small sack where she now put the flat shoes.

“I don’t believe it…” he whispered flabbergasted and Catwoman turned to him shrugging.

“I can’t function without the proper equipment…” she winked.

Batman grinned and gave his hand to Catwoman to help her stand.

“And I was curious about what you were carrying…”

“Curiosity killed the…bat…” she chuckled.

Looking for the legendary Princess they followed the massive lights that indicated the city of the Amazons without ever leaving the coverage of the virgin forest.

It was still early in the night and some Amazons were returning to the city carrying tools of farming: they had seen some fields in their way that were prepared for the seeding. Also, other Amazons on horses were returning to the city having ended their shift in patrolling the beach. The city was surrounded by enormous stone bulwark with turrets where Amazons were situated like in the open gates.

“Their armor isn’t exactly how westerns had imagined it, huh?” Selina whispered.

Batman nodded.

The Amazons who were returning from farming works wore plain creme colored tunics that ended to the knees and left the arms uncovered. It was clear that farming was something that the Amazons were doing also in shifts because the farmers were equally muscle bound as the guardians; under the abundant lighting of the pillars their bulging muscles shone from the thin layer of sweat and dust.

Those who were guarding the gates and the turrets wore white tunics knee length covered with thick layers of brown leather shreds; it was a light armor with a thin, leather thorax protecting their chest and a nest-like metallic fabric dressed their tracheas to the clavicle bone; the wide leather belts wrapping their waists had the head of goddess Hera in the center. Their arms were naked except than long brass bracelets that began from the wrists and went through the entire forearm. Helmets covered their heads leaving their eyes and chins out while a blue with white forelock waved to the night breeze. They wore flat sandals and their calves were protected by metallic solid greaves that reached the knees.

They were holding long spears and from their belts hang long, straight sword in their cases.
“You think we should enter the city?”

Batman looked at the city and then Catwoman.

“No; I don’t want them to feel attacked. We should wait to locate the Princess and speak with her.”

They both narrowed their eyes seeing some armored Amazons leading back to the city a pack of little girls no more than eight years old. Clearly they were out for training.

“They have children without men?” Selina asked. “In vitro fertilization? They are so developed?”

“Ancient writers say that Amazons made wars with neighboring tribes and used the captives for breeding.”

Selina chuckled but stopped abruptly seeing Bruce’s set jaw; she remembered that Talia Al Ghul had treated Bruce like this when she captured him.

“Others say that they had a kind of agreement with a neighboring tribe, the Gargareans and once a year the Amazons went there for… reproduction.”

“Nothing of that can apply nowadays…” she said.

Batman nodded.

“Do you feel excited for discovering their secluded world?” Selina asked. “I mean, it is unbelievable that we are here and seeing these things – I feel as if I have travelled in time.”

He shook his head.

“It is interesting but I’ll feel satisfied only if the Princess agrees to help us.”

They stayed there for another two hours. Switching to long distance vision they could watch the city.

Batman was used to wait patiently for his mark so when a tall, sturdy woman crossed the gates heading outside and the guardians saluted her hitting their fists on the chest and bowing slightly their heads, his senses tensed and he could tell that the same was true for Selina.

The young woman was the same height as her soldiers but unlike them she had her black hair in a tight bun behind her head. She was dressed in a long plain sleeveless tunic that reached her feet which were dressed in flat leather sandals. Between her hair something shone in the dancing lights the flames on the pillars cast and Batman shook his head showing Catwoman the golden tiara. In the middle of the triangle front, a ruby emanated sparkles: it was like a star with sixteen rays.

“It is different than the star the fake had…” Selina whispered.

Batman nodded.

“Exactly. The Latin historians spoke about the star and the modern interpreters thought that it was the common star Western civilizations use but the Princess is a Greek so the star on her tiara would be the Greek Helios or Star which has eight or eighteen thin rays: the four rays in the center longer than the rest.”

“How you know all these?” she asked impressed.

Bruce pressed his lips.
“Ra’s Al Ghul loved ancient civilizations…”

Selina pursed her lips understanding how painful the memories must be for Bruce.

“The guardians don’t call her Diana.”

Batman nodded.

“Diana is the Latin translation of Artemis; the Princess of the Amazons is named Artemis yet the ancient Latin historians quoted the name translated so most people knew her name as Diana.”

“Bagdana didn’t know that?”

“He did but humans didn’t so he followed the popular beliefs.”

“He didn’t imagine that Al Ghul educated you that good or that you’d suspect his trick and made your research.”

Bruce gave a nod and focused on the Princess.

Her dressing was civilian yet her waist was bound with a thin brown leather belt from where a long, straight sword hanged over her right thigh.

Selina pointed to the Princess’ left thigh where a glowing gold rope hanged rolled.

“The real thing…” she whispered and Bruce nodded.

The Princess with slow pacing walked away from the soldiers and the city. Bruce and Selina followed through the forests’ shadows.

As they moved the Princess’ destination became visible: a medium sized temple made of Doric tall pillars. She climbed the twenty wide marble steps that led to the entrance of the temple and moved inside. Bruce remembered another similar temple ‘he’ had walked in…it was in his dream, where he became one with the high priest of Nemesis.

They both could see inside with the long distance vision their armors provided so they saw her crossing the tiled isle leading to the altar at the far end; the temple was illuminated by oval shaped golden vessels where fires were burning. Under the pale light and the shadows an enormous ceiling tall statue made of brass marble stood: it depicted a sturdy man with a perfectly shaped body and the armor of a Greek warrior; he held a large, round shield with the Greek Helios in the center and a sword. His head was in a helmet from where two bright eyes stabbed his guests; he looked around 40 years old.

“A male god in the island of the Amazons?” Selina asked Bruce.

“He is Ares, the Greek god of war: he is considered the father of the Amazons…”

“Right…” Selina chuckled. “Our little excursion became an educational trip…”

Bruce grinned.

The Princess took from the floor a 3 feet, lean golden leathern oil flask and began spilling slowly red ruby wine to the altar under the Ares’ feet, whispering some words in a tone like a hymn.

“We can approach her now” Selina said.
But Bruce shook his head.

“It is a very personal, worshiping moment: I don’t want to intrude.”

Selina sighed.

When the Amazon came out of the temple and began descending the steps Bruce turned to Selina.

“It’s time…” he said.

Selina touched his upper arm.

“Perhaps I should do this?” she said as Bruce locked eyes with her. “You know, girl to girl.”

“If we do that, when later I’ll enter the game she will think that I used you to trick them and she’ll become hostile.”

Selina tilted her head.

“I get it – a man using a woman: feminist crap..! Boring…Anyway, I’ll jump if she dares lay a finger on you.”

Batman grinned.

“Don’t you think I can handle it?”

Selina crooked her mouth.

“Women are tough subject, sweetie…”

Batman nodded and moved slowly, stealthily towards the path the Princess followed back to her city. Selina waited a few moments and followed too.

In a turn of the roads, the trees shaded the path and the light from the pillars’ vessels became dim. Bruce looked at the woman who walked under the tree he was on and graciously slipped down, landing on his feet behind her. He stretched his posture seeing the woman halting and tensing.

She turned slowly to him, a small grin on her beautiful face. Her dark blue eyes flashed determined in the dim light.

“Επιτέλους…” she said.

Thor in his divine garments stayed behind as the rest of the Avengers left the meeting room in the Avengers’ Towers. Nick Fury was the last to walk out. Tony had informed them about a new menace but couldn’t give more details right now; he just asked for vigilance and set the entire global S.H.I.E.L.D. organism in alarm.

The director remained in his seat on the head of the board table absorbed in his tablet’s contents. Thor approached and looked: it was an awkward oval shaped machine covered with strange symbols. He frowned seeing Luthor in a white robe working on it.

“It has to do with that, right?” he inquired quietly. “The menace.”

Tony raised his eyes on him.
“Yes” he answered casually. “An extra terrestrial extra powerful being wants to destroy the Earth and use that machine to absorb dark energy from humans” he crooked his mouth. “I know…I hate movies with aliens too…”

Thor frowned.

“Why you didn’t tell us?”

Tony arched an eyebrow.

“Because Bruce uncovered their scheme and he believes that we must wait.”

Thor was trusting Bruce yet he didn’t want any threat against humans staying active for much.

“We could attack right now and destroy that thing” he showed the machine in the screen.

“Bruce wants every available power the Earth has assembled before we tackle this.”

“Every available power? All the beings with powers are here and we have Superman and Wonder Woman.”

Tony pressed his lips and stood.

“You see, that’s our problem: we don’t have Superman and the Amazon.”

Thor narrowed his eyes.

“She is not the real Amazon” Tony met the god’s eyes “and she holds Superman under her control – she is the enemy’s agent. That’s why Bruce wanted us to wait.”

Thor shook his head. He knew that this woman had something bad.

“Wait for what?”

“For him and Selina to bring the real Amazon and show Superman the truth. He went to find Themiscyra.”

Thor fist his hand: Bruce was a paraplegic and the quest was dangerous: the Amazons were really hostile.

“Why didn’t he wait for me to go along?” Thor asked exasperated. “Maybe they would have listened to me.”

Tony pouted insulted.

“He didn’t take me along! Why would he take you? He didn’t want to make the Amazons feel threatened.”

Thor closed his eyes and sighed.

“They shouldn’t have gone alone…”

Tony arched his eyebrows and patted him in the back.

“That’s Bruce…”

Tony’s StarkStel rang and he eagerly accepted the call, Thor watching.
"It was Lucius Fox. They have found the island” the billionaire said with a smirk.

Superman saw the building and sensed Diana’s joy; she was slowing down heading there. It was a building made from transparent plexiglass filled with pots and plants. He frowned filling an annoying clench in his guts.

Yet Diana turned to him smiling waving to him to follow as she landed graciously. He landed by her side though the view of the building made him uncomfortable.

Diana grabbed his hand and Superman’s hesitation vanished; she smiled again to him and walked inside, Superman with her.

As soon as they were inside, Diana looked around and her eyes filled with joy as if she was seeing beloved friends. Superman gazed around the hundreds of different plants that had flooded the space without any order leaving only a narrow strip at the center: bushes reaching the ceiling, roses spreading right and left intertwining their branches with weeds and other plants; stems everywhere with thick leaves hiding the sun’s light.

He felt a bit dizzy but before he addressed that his mind travelled fast: he found himself inside another greenhouse, abandoned from long ago but still tidier than this. He saw again the working bench with an oil lamp shedding dim light to the dark room.

Bruce had the Wayne Enterprises’ translator software attached to his cowl so he understood that she had said ‘at last’.

“Δεν είμαι εχθρός” he growled quietly the translator having given him the words he should use to express in Greek what he wanted.

“Speak in your language” she retorted in English. “From your accent I can say you’re an American.”

“How do you know?”

She tilted her head on the side.

“From time to time we visit the world of Men; many foreigners come to Greece – it’s not difficult for me to speak your language. As for not being an enemy, I’ll be the one to judge that” she pressed her lips and her eyes flashed. “I felt a presence haunting my steps – a demon like creature…” she registered his appearance and took out her sword pointing it to him. “Maybe when I slit your throat I’ll see what lies under those clothes because I believe you’re nothing else than a man dressed up in a ridiculous costume.”

Bruce expected to be seen like a threat and be sneered but remained calm.

“I’m not here to fight with you.”

She frowned.

“Of course! You’re just a coward crawling in the shadows waiting to hit when your opponent has her back turned.”
With two rapid movements she tore her tunic in both legs’ sides to not be thwarted in her movements from the fabric and with an impressive jump surged against Batman.

Bruce rolled his eyes internally as he avoided her blade with a swift movement to the side: nice! both fake and real Diana shared the same feelings about him.

“If I wanted to attack you I’d have done it immediately, don’t you think?” he asked her retaining his tranquility.

But she without stopping brandished her sword aiming his head and Bruce dodged.

“How did you find our island?” she gritted her teeth.

“It’s a long story but what matters is the reason…”

The woman made a twirl around her axis that a professional dancer would have envied and this time made to hit him with her forearm where her golden bracelets shone; Bruce knew that those were lethal. He jolted his hand and his gloved forearms stopped hers hardly containing her force for a second but feeling great pain; she growled and pushed more Bruce feeling as if facing Superman. He used his legs to push her feet of the ground but she losing her balance made a jump in the air and landed some inches away ready to launch a new attack her head leaned towards him and her jaw set like a lioness before her pray.

Bruce feeling the burning pain her bracelets let to his forearms stabbed his lenses to her. His jaw was set, emanating equal determination.

“Instead of fighting you can listen to me for a moment.”

“Who are you?” she asked with her eyes blazing.

“I’m Batman.”

“That’s ridiculous! You don’t bear such names in the world of men. You hide your identity because you’re a foul man!”

She stormed again at him with her sword descending rapidly to his neck; he trapped it between the edges of his glove but she moved the blade horizontally and released it cutting several of the gloves’ edges.

“I won’t let anyone hurt my sisters” she hissed moving again the sword to his head.

It was inches before hitting him and Bruce didn’t know if the cowl could contain the hit so he used his secret weapon. He clenched his jaw and stopped the blade just a breath before it sliced his head: a loud clang and a lightning like flash cracked the silence as two blades collided. He saw the Princess’ eyes widen in surprise and awe seeing what had stopped her blade.

“Where did you steal that?” she asked watching the shine of the diamond blade.

“The Dagger of Justice came to me, Princess Artemis.”

The Princess gritted her teeth.

“Liar: you can’t be worthy of that Blade! You stole it!”

She detached and stood looking at him; Bruce straightened his body and put the legendary dagger back in its case that instantly returned to its place, back to sink in his right thigh’s armor piece.
“I didn’t steal the Dagger: you know that nobody can yield its will if the Blade doesn’t accept them. We need to talk, Princess. I’m sorry for being so stealthy but there was no other way to speak to you.”

Suddenly, she crashed her bracelets together and a blast hit Batman sending him feet away; thankfully, he took in her intention and prepared himself propelling with the force of the blast and landing smoothly on one knee. He could attack her before landing but he didn’t want to answer to her hostility with attacking.

He raised his eyes slowly stabbing his lenses to her determined but also impressed dark blue eyes.

“I won’t fight with you, Princess.”

He saw the flaming string dancing in the air and immediately his torso was wrapped in a glowing lasso that made his body feel with burning heat.

The Amazon approached him straightening her impressive body proudly; he regarded him strictly.

“But you’ll stop lying. What’s your name?”

Bruce felt something warm flooding his mind yet his thinking wasn’t altered.

“I’m Batman.”

The Princess frowned surprised.

“That can’t be! Nobody can resist the Lasso of Truth; even Zeus himself…” she blinked. “Unless…” her eyes flashed “you’re a warrior of Nemesis – only her followers are immune to the Lasso’s power.”

Bruce remembered Darseid’s failure to penetrate his mind and thanked silently the Black Butterfly safely stashed over his chest, under the armor.

“Now you know that I’m allied with a goddess, can we speak?” he inquired stabbing his lenses to her.

She withdrew the Lasso and put it back in her waist. But she still held her sword as if considering if the new development could establish trust with the newcomer.

Suddenly, the Princess herd a whipping sound and felt something coiling around her sword pulling it away before she could focus on keeping it. She turned around to see her new opponent only to see a lean body in black somersaulting in the air heading on her.

The Princess avoided the legs that aimed at her and her opponent landed smoothly on the terrain. The Amazon squinted on the woman before her.

Batman walked forward standing on the Amazon’s side.

“It’s alright, Cat” he said to his friend who yanked her head proudly and focused her blazing green eyes on the Amazon.

“She hit you with a blast and was ready to slash you with her sword…” Selina gritted her teeth.

“We reached an understanding” Batman said.

The Princess looked at Catwoman’s stiletto heels but didn’t linger there unwilling to express her puzzlement.

“Cat? I see the reason for the name. You work for him?” she asked with disapproval and Selina rolled her eyes.

“Ugh! I hate old fashioned feminism… The fact I’m on a man’s side doesn’t I work for him. He is my friend: we work together.”

Batman raised his palm in appeasement.

“Catwoman is aware of the situation and she joined the mission.”

The Amazon looked at him.

“Speak! What situation are you raving about?”

However Batman had caught the dozens of feet that were approaching their location running; in a couple of seconds they were surrounded by Amazons both in warrior apparel and in tunics. All of them held swords or spears pointing at them but their eyes were more lethal than their shining weapons. The blast from their Princess bracelets had brought them there.

Yes, it was night and the storm was raging outside, the wind howling on the walls of the greenhouse. There was a metallic closet at the far end and an old rectangular stove where flames danced behind its rectangular smoked glass. He had lit the fire because…No, Superman didn’t feel the cold neither was afraid of his soaked suit. Yet someone else was cold and drenched and that someone was vulnerable to illness.

His red cape was missing from his shoulder…He looked; till then he didn’t turned his eyes there because he sensed that someone’s uneasiness.

Superman straggled to keep his eyes from bulging. Bruce wrapped in red, his red cape, was an incredible sight. The red flattered the youth – not that he needed it…- creating a gorgeous contrast with his brunette hair and his pale porcelain flesh which in the scarce spots not covered from the fabric was brushed from the soft light of the lamp and the heater revealing his Star’s aura. And his body’s intoxicating perfume undeterred from the clothes, mingled with the rain’s scent almost fogged Clark’s reasoning.

He wished his cape wasn’t so big that Bruce couldn’t cover almost his entire body except from his feet and neck; also he detected a pouch hanging to Bruce’s chest. But seeing Bruce’s suspicious eyes and the way he clutched the cape more to his body Clark gulped and smiled kindly, running his hand to his wet locks.

“We must dry your hair…” he mumbled shyly. “Do you mind?” he inquired and when Bruce just nodded, he began blowing tenderly warm air till Bruce’s locks dry shone like silk.

“Well, now we need to find you a place to sleep…” he stuttered proud for his work and under Bruce’s testing eyes he opened the metallic cabinet and retrieved two blankets in fairly good condition.

Clark turned to Bruce cocking an eyebrow.

“You and your mom were sleeping here too?”
Bruce looked at the cloudy angry sky from the greenhouse’s transparent roof.

“Sometimes at the noon or when we heard that there would be shooting stars…Here the sky is more clear…not tonight of course…”

Superman spread the blanket and gestured to Bruce who lay down hesitantly minding the cape and hastily tightening the fabric when feeling it slipped from his naked body. Clark bit his lips for this reaction of a person being many times forcibly naked in front of hostile stares; and for the pain he could detect in Bruce’s perfectly unfazed features. He tucked in the younger man with the blanket and Bruce looked him in wonder.

“I can leave if you want… you know… to feel more relaxed and sleep.”

“Never mind…I can’t sleep either way; Alfred gave me sedatives but they didn’t help…”

And then Clark had an idea: he began re-playing with a tender whistle the melody of Bruce’s favorite lullaby as he had memorized it from that night in Stark’s house. Bruce’s eyes widened.

“It’s…”

“Hush, Star… let sleep come.”’ Lean on me and rest…Let me carry the pain…

It was a matter of minutes before Bruce succumbed to exhaustion settling in fetal position; he was still shivering and his temperature hadn’t risen to normal. So Clark hesitantly and carefully spooned him feathery wrapping him in his hot body to transfer his warmth to him.

He sighed and fought the temptation to kiss that velvety cheek that glowed softness, the silken eyelashes brushing smoothly his cheekbone. Clark’s lips were pulled to that flesh but he clenched his jaw and stopped himself, feeling sweat drops in his forehead. He yanked his stare to the gloom sky that was devoid of any star. It didn’t matter: he had the most beautiful star in his arms.

“You need to stay away from me, Clark; at least, till you fight off the addiction” Bruce had said determined.

Clark’s eyes shone.

“There’s no addiction! What I feel for you is true!”

“Let me melt the ice, Star and illuminate your haunted heart…”

He knew he was almost begging but Clark didn’t feel ashamed; he had his eyes closed and sensed his Star trembling as if ready to cry. No, please, don’t cry, Star; let me try… His head leaned over Bruce’s face and his Star’s breath excited his needy lips.

Bruce saw Clark’s lips approaching his but didn’t jerk to avoid them; he felt numb and just didn’t want to fight that safe paralysis.

Clark touched his lips to those velvet soft lips and moaned from being finally allowed to do that without his Star resisting and fighting him. He began massaging gently exploring, feeling Bruce’s open eyes on his which remained closed to suck the dream-like sense.

Bruce panicked and averted slightly his lips but upon realizing that the pleasant paralyzing wave began leaving his body as Clark sighed and began reluctantly taking off his lips, he returned his lips to Clark’s.
Clark’s eyes watered and his heart gave multiple joyful jolts feeling Bruce’s lips finding again his. Shyly, testing, so incredibly soft that Clark’s body felt goose bumps and followed the younger man’s initiative reminding himself to be extra cautious to not panic him again.

But his hands on their own accord cupped the back of Bruce’s head relishing the silken locks caressing greedily while his other hand touched gently the human’s jaw to deepen slowly, carefully the kiss.

Clark’s tongue wanted to explore Bruce’s mouth - not invade like the last time - yet Clark restrained himself in case the human felt threatened; instead he trailed soft – he used his entire skill to be as soft as the breeze – kisses along Bruce’s velvet cheek to his cheekbone opening his eyes exactly when he kissed the chiseled bone. Bruce’s eyes sparkled, the emerald star inside dazzling Clark; the sapphire orbs were puzzled but definitely not frozen in terrible memories and to his excitement the pupils were dilated – his Star was shyly enjoying his ministrations.

His heart beat joyfully yet he noticed that Bruce was still clenching tightly his cape and if he did even a small wrong move he would fly away.

“I can show you how it is to be loved…” Clark whispered purposely looking all the time to Bruce’s eyes giving him the ability to check his honesty. “If you want...If you allow me…”

...The last thing Clark had expected and hoped happened. Bruce hesitantly and slightly trembling touched his lips to Clark’s stunning him. Clark despite his surprise and mind numbing enthusiasm noticed that Bruce had his eyes closed softly controlling his breaths: his Star was struggling with his demons… He felt awed and awfully weak to help as always when concerned Bruce.

Bruce huffed and pulled his lips causing Clark’s heart sink. Clark felt the whim to lock his lips with Bruce’s showing him that it was okay. Yet he knew better than doing that; he closed his eyes, breathing forcibly calmly though his body and heart was in agony and waited.

Bruce took a deep breath, caressed Clark’s cheek, holding more relaxed the cape, and brought again his lips to Clark’s with renewed determination. Clark’s heart returned to its place but he still didn’t make a move, his hands trembling at his side enjoying Bruce’s exploration and soft, extremely sensual touch both of lips and hand.

And then as Bruce’s lips became braver and bolder, Clark began moaning and wrapped gently his hand around the younger man’s shoulders. The Man of Steel opened his eyes which glimmered from happiness and found Bruce’s sparkling ‘Kryptonites’ staring at him inquiringly.

“You make me happy, Star...I love you…”

Bruce’s moans through the kiss it was enough for Clark to take him in his arms and lay him on the blanket. Bruce’s eyes with their irresistible defiance pierced Clark’s eyes and Clark was ready to be kicked away.

“You said you could show me how it is to be loved” Bruce had said determined.

Clark grinned broadly and let his body touch Bruce’s without letting his weight fell on the human. He trailed kisses to Bruce’s jaw line and nibbled his neck that to his delight arched to allow him better access and…oh, God! Bruce moaned when Clark’s mouth sucked his collarbone; yet his hand was still holding the cape and the Man of Steel was rasping, his heart beating frantically eager for what he desired so many months and finally was so near…

Bruce read Clark’s eyes and Clark realized.
“Let me worship your body…” Clark’s voice was cracked from passion and arousal and Bruce just released the fabric which slid a little but didn’t reveal flesh.

Damn that cape! Clark thought and Bruce chuckled giving him the unsaid permission to do what he wanted so much. However, Clark grateful for Bruce’s trust took gently the younger man’s hands and led them to his suit’s unseen spots that allowed the fabric to roll off his body. Bruce’s eyes widened surprised and a bit overwhelmed but Clark brought that palms to his lips and kissed them softly; then he guided them in lowering the upper half of his suit till the hips.

Clark smiled fondly seeing Bruce’s awed stare; it was so cute seeing that child-like expression.

Bruce rose and caressed with shaking hands Clark’s breasts sending shivers in Superman’s spine and causing his blood to boil from that explorative, shy and bold at the same time hot touch. The Man of Steel was watching without breathing Bruce feeling his body which welcomed him and asked for more. When his Star touched his incredibly soft lips to his pectorals, kissing it was too much…

The Man of Steel hugged Bruce’s body and laid him gently on his back ‘trapping’ him between his naked arms; he bent his powerful body like a snake without falling on Bruce and brought his face above Bruce’s.

“Tonight, I’ll worship you…”

He began unwrapping gently, respectfully his cape that stubbornly clung to Bruce’s body - not that he blamed his cape...but he still envied that piece of Fabric that maintained more contact with Bruce than him. It felt like unwrapping his gift from Santa Claus, slowly revealing the younger man’s body.

Clark wanted to taste every bit of Bruce; to have him in his body, in his cells. He watched mesmerized as the human’s glistening torso stretched in a majestic arch, his neck bent throwing his head back his brunette sweaty locks glued in his face. His Star made a sound between moan and sob and hot, sweet liquid filled Clark’s mouth and mind.

Bruce’s head remained slightly suspended; the young man awed from the feelings, the elation and the disbelief that this really happened. Clark cupped the back of Bruce’s head and brought their bodies to glue, savoring the seductive way his Star’s body trembled in the orgasm’s aftermath making the human’s aroma richer and the feeling of his red hot sweaty flesh paralyzing. His lips massaged his Star’s jaw and mouth, meeting his sparkling eyes.

“I told you you weren’t crippled…” Clark let his voice manifest his feeling of triumph.

But Bruce felt Superman’s trapped demanding erection.

“You need to…” he whispered blushing.

Clark shook his head.

“There’s no need… I won’t penetrate you…I can manage…I won’t hurt you.”

“You would never hurt me” he answered stilling his eyes in Clark’s fueling his passion.

He had to prepare his Star if he was to show him that making love is something beautiful, worth of repeating and not cause him to withdraw. Oh! Bruce’s thighs were so tight and so armonical shaped with lean, strong muscles that radiated warmth from the sweat that glistened. He didn’t want to grab those thighs and just hastily spread Bruce so he massaged the taut flesh from the knees to the hips and Bruce grunted only to moan, groan and breathe shallow when Clark began nibbling the inside of his thighs that began trembling uncontrollably.
Only then Clark opened gently his legs revealing his opening. Rao! He wanted to surge inside and claim Bruce forever but the youth’s sharp intake of air, as if he read his thoughts stopped him; he rubbed soothing and arousing circles to Bruce’s underbelly and penis causing him to close his eyes and sigh.

Clark applied much aloe to his ready to explode member, applied with massaging motions aloe to Bruce’s insides and then held gently his buttocks to spread him a bit more. Those buttocks were hell, more than he haddreamt, taut and soft making his hands shudder and his spine jolt violently into thrusting his penis inside Bruce; he hardly stopped his length from pushing too deep and too harsh hearing Bruce’s heartbeat flaring.

Bruce closed his eyes and tried to breathe calmly though Clark’s length filling him was his entire world. As Clark began thrusting incredibly gently but stimulating at the same time, electric currents ran his spine making him convulse; his body was waking, enjoying what for years was meant to cause him shame and excruciating pain. He wrapped his legs around Clark’s firm glutial muscles doing shyly the rubbing dance that excited so much Tony. It was exciting to know that this powerful being was nestled between his legs holding back his own satisfaction to not hurt him and he wanted to show his gratitude for that.

Clark moaned surprised but surely grateful for that gift that made his penis go frantic; he began grunting and established a stable pace careful to not hit the newly fixed part of Bruce’s spine, stopping his body from succumbing to the need of using its full energy.

Bruce clenched his jaw and focused on the reassurance that Clark’s crystal clear blue eyes offered as every thrust brought the hero’s hot body to rub with his.

“You can’t imagine how gorgeous you are, Star…” Superman rasped.

He nibbled Bruce’s jaw line and breasts as the younger man’s head lolled backwards overwhelmed by the hotness in his anus that spurt to his groin to burn his spine with violent jerks that Superman’s body absorbed. And then Clark felt the sweat on Bruce’s body freezing and his breath halting; the sapphire-emerald orbs were drenched in dread. Clark knew that his Star returned to his horrific past to one of these sessions of brutal rapes.

Clark cupped Bruce’s face as their bodies were united and kissed him.

“Look at me, Star; it’s me, only me, I won’t let anyone harm you. You’re safe…” he whispered in the tormented man’s ear and Bruce shook violently on his body till his eyes refocused on Clark’s.

Bruce began breathing again clinging desperately on Clark’s shoulders, his head resting on the crook of his neck like a child, his soft exhales causing goose bumps to the Man of Steel who continued thrusting rubbing Bruce’s pelvis and back to make him relax his muscle that clenched now ached from the friction.

Bruce felt again his crippled penis growing hard and jolting, a hot wave rushing to explode; he tightened his grip on Clark’s shoulders because this still scared him as much as it filled him with elation. And then he heard a scream of outrage from the guts of earth mixed with a deafening thunder and he knew it was his demon. He hid more his head in Clark’s body: Bagdana couldn’t touch him there.

Clark came when Bruce did gaping at the most beautiful view of the world: Bruce’s orgasm. He stayed inside his beloved body savoring Bruce’s writhing after the orgasm and his rasps and groans and then purrs; he kissed his Star’s drenched locks. How could he thank him enough for that present?
They stayed like this for much time till Clark felt Bruce’s breath feathery light and his heartbeat peaceful in sleep. He pulled himself begrudgingly from Bruce’s body holding the younger man. Then he leaned him gently back on the blanket but Bruce half asleep raised his silken eyelids a bit.

He watched hypnotized as sleep brushed his Star’s face softening more his features. And then he began cleaning Bruce’s body with his tongue gently, tenderly, careful to not disturb his much needed rest. Bruce’s magical taste and then his own seed flavored by this unique man’s sweat were incredible. He slithered his tongue in every corner, every inch not leaving one drop trying to soothe his hunger and thirst, to take Bruce inside his body, as the dry soil absorbed the cool rain... He finished the job drying Bruce’s body blowing gently warm air.

“I love you, Star...” he murmured over Bruce’s eyelids and a faint smile brushed his Star’s face.

He was enjoying Bruce’s naked body when the younger man turned on his side, covering with his thigh his genitals and hugging his chest unconsciously – Clark was sure that little Bruce slept that way trying to warm up in his frozen cell.

And then Superman’s eyes widened awed as silver light caressed Bruce’s naked body; he yanked his head to the glass roof to see the moon shining having escaped the clouds. Clark’s fingers ran Bruce’s body line from his shoulder to the hips, to his thighs to the toes, the void of the chopped big toe hurting him...

He wrapped his hands around Bruce’s chest and closed his eyes letting the thrill, the happiness, the relief, the sense of completion fill his body that the more he was close to Bruce the more felt like charging, his powers greater than ever.

“I won’t let anyone harm you again...” he breathed in Bruce’s ear.

Clark shook his head as the night became morning and the dimly lit greenhouse turned into the chaotic greenhouse. Diana was looking at him confused.

He realized that he had no job there; his entire body vibrated from the need to leave and return where he belonged; to the one he belonged to: the one he had hurt. He had to explain to Bruce but first he needed to be again near him. His body felt drained from energy as if his long absence had secretly stripped him from vitality.

Superman turned his senses on finding Bruce’s vitals; he was desperate and his despair culminated as he failed to find those beloved sound...It couldn’t be: Bruce’s vitals were nowhere in the planet! Either he wore his Batman armor – which was impossible since it was daylight – or Bruce was… No! He couldn’t even think about that...

He saw what he had seen in his dream: the warm, bright star leading him out of that terrifying nothingness...Bruce in the middle of the light. And then he saw again the gravestone he had dreamt; Bruce’s name on the gray stone piercing his heart...

Superman turned on his heels storming at the door ready to leave for Gotham.

“Where are you going, Kal?” Diana asked with her strict and caring voice.

“Where I should be, Diana; I’m sorry...”

He turned to see her; he had to explain but then...

He frowned: suddenly, he could see something odd in her shining raven blue hair...there were traces of hair dye. He remembered that Bruce had warned him.
She was really an impostor!

Ivy saw the realization in his eyes and smiled.

“What’s wrong, Kal?” she asked slyly.

“I’m out of here!” he ground his teeth and stormed towards the door.

Only to realize that he couldn’t speed as he used to; he narrowed his eyes his heart beating heavy and fast; his power was fast slipping away from his body…However he pushed his legs to leave from there feeling sweat spurting all over his face enhancing the feeling of illness. He huffed, understanding: Kryptonite.

He pressed his legs to move and he remembered Bruce’s paraplegia: he never till now had realized how titanic Bruce’s effort was…

Suddenly, he felt his legs even heavier, thwarted in their effort. But there was something else holding him. He looked his body: his legs and arms were wrapped from several plant stems that dragged him down, joined by other rope like stems coiling around his torso. He clenched his jaw and fists trying to fight but the strength of the weeds along with his weakness made him fail. He was dragged down, on the weed covered terrain.

Superman saw Diana smirking; she had her arms crossed over her chest looking at him with content and a gleeful shine that made Superman grit his teeth angrily.

But he was crashed to the floor covered from weeds that pinched his body with an invincible strength; the spots where the stems touched him felt like burning and he realized that the plants had Kryptonite: that wasn’t normal.

Diana walked arrogantly towards him and stood right in front of him towering him with her muscle bound body that now made Superman sick.

“You see now what you and every other ignorant human are blind to: nature’s power!” she cocked an eyebrow; her eyes were caressing the green waterfall with an abnormal affection.

“Who are you?” Superman asked trying to struggle but realizing that his struggle made the clenching stronger.

She cackled.

“Oh! I’m just another existence that goes unnoticed like all these beautiful souls…” he saw Superman’s puzzlement and snorted. “Okay, then…All this time, I figured you’re not so bright after all…”

In front of his eyes the Amazon Princess was transformed into a modest woman in white robe; she had her blond hair in a tight bun and glasses hiding her light blue eyes. She cocked an eyebrow.

“I was humble Dr. Pamela Lilian Isley whom everyone jeered because she gave plants the respect they deserved…And then I believed in a man who said that believed the same with me… only to abuse what he told me that he loved: he used me and the plants’ strength for his own stupid ambitions and when I confronted him, his stupidity made the lab to explode. It wasn’t the first time humanity disappointed me…but nature never did. My life was saved by the dying plants that gave me their powers and qualities.”

Superman was sure that those qualities were in fact due to the chemicals that were freed during the explosion.

“When I realized that my friends, the plants, had saved me, I decided to be their champion; their protector against the humanity’s cruelty. I changed many names and forms as the nature does…”

The glasses vanished and her eyes became honey colored as her hair that fell free in curls on her back; she was dressed like a woman of cabarets and Superman gulped remembering Bruce’s flashback: the woman from Dolcetto.

Ivy shook her head.

“I was born and raised in Gotham so I started from there: killing those bastards who tortured and killed my friends – trees, bushes, flowers: innocent victims to people’s greed… It was easy: seducing them with the feromones my friends had endowed me with and killing them with the plants power: natural poison… The press finally recognized me with my real name: my destiny. And then I became Vivian to infatuate Gotham’s king into helping nature: take the Lilian and change the ‘l’ with the ‘v’ from Ivy: my real name” her eyes flashed angrily. “Because, Superman, the woman who defeated you is Poison Ivy!”

The clenching from the hundreds of different stems became harder and Superman goggled seeing the view in front of him.

The prostitute transformed. Her honey colored hair became a flaming red and her long locks like a waterfall covered her naked back. Her entire breathtaking, curvy, porcelain body was almost naked: small leaves assembled covered the lower part of her groin’s V only to expand with lean, thread like stems that hugged her pelvis’s bones to wrap sensually her thin waist; other green stems no thicker than strands began from her belt to end up to her round, rich breasts covering only the nipples with diamond shaped green silver leaves. Her long, shapely legs were bare apart from large leaves that covered her calves.

She stretched to the air her long naked arms that were adorned with thin stems with small leaves that wrapped like snakes around the skin.

“Do you like the real thing, Kal El?” she asked jeering stabbing her forest green eyes to his; her heart shaped green lips revealing her pearl white teeth in a triumphant smile.

“Why you did that?”

She tilted her head on the side and clenched her waist with one hand.

“To give nature what she deserves after ages of oppression…”

Superman shook his head remembering how many times he saved the environment from pollution: he glared at the plants – how ungrateful!

“I know that nature suffers from some humans’ behavior but killing me won’t help you in anything” he was puzzled; okay, she had some strengths connected with plants but how did she manage to imitate the legendary powers of Diana.

She smirked.

“You don’t but he will…”

Superman’s eyes widened seeing the air floating to materialize a new presence: he knew him and now everything was cast into the light of truth.
Bagdana’s enormous body stood in front of him in his granite color, dressed in black leather pants and a black leather vest. His silver spikes instead of hair shone but his eyes gleeful shine was more intense as his smirk that carved his face.

“Bagdana…” Clark whispered. “You did everything to take your revenge on me because Bruce chose me instead of you. But you could have caught me without this circus – it would only take some Kryptonite.”

Bagdana laughed.

“Sure but you would have strong help, right? And you would have escaped and I would be again defeated. To win a war you need cunningness…patience…strategy. And I’m a master of these. You see” he walked slowly towards his fallen enemy “I was the breeze that whispered in Julius Cesar’s ear: divide and conquer…” he whispered with glee leaning above his captured enemy. “I’m a master of deceive so I implemented that: I knew that if I wanted to win definitely I should take you away from your allies.”

Superman understood from his words that he hadn’t told Ivy about Bruce being the Batman.

“And I did that” Bagdana continued “bringing to the fore a breathtaking legendary creature that certainly would infatuate you and make you detach from Bruce and therefore your allies. And leaving me the space to console the broken heart.”

Superman gritted his teeth seeing Oliver Queen replacing the demon.

Superman shook his head: really cunning. But Bruce had suspected that: he couldn’t have succumbed to Queen’s advances and maybe was on their tracks. But the demon seemed completely ignorant of Bruce’s suspicions so it was better if he didn’t reveal anything to them.

“And at the same time you hurt Bruce…” he said and Bagdana cocked an eyebrow.

“Actually, you did that.”

Superman licked his lips, the pain becoming worse as the feeling of sickness. The demon was right: magic and feromones apart he was the one who hurt Bruce.

“You were defeated” Clark said to him. “You were imprisoned in Tartarus, you couldn’t escape…”

Bagdana crooked his mouth and Oliver Queen became again the dark creature.

“There was someone who could free me…” he chuckled “for his own interests of course…”

Superman frowned: this wasn’t good. His entire face was contorted in disbelief watching a third presence materializing. His body screamed from the Kryptonite inflicted pain and both demon and Ivy smirked.

A warrior in full gear detached from the others and raised her sword.

“A man has invaded our island. Kill him!”

The Princess looked surprised as her warriors launched their attack against the newcomers yelling their combat screams. She knitted her eyebrows and just stepped aside leaving space to the clearance they had reached fighting.

“A man. Has invaded” Selina rolled her eyes avoiding a spear thrown at her. “From a society of women you’d expect to not ignore a woman…”

Batman found this amusing yet he hadn’t time to chuckle. He dodged the spears that came at him jolting his body to the air.

The Amazons had swarmed the place and their blades shone as the clouds had dispersed revealing the stars. Batman didn’t want to hit them; he didn’t want to show aggressiveness but as he landed there was no choice but to kick stretching his legs on both directions throwing away the first ones to attack him; their bodies pushing away those behind them.

Catwoman slashed her whip hitting a charging Amazon and sending her to crash on the ground. She didn’t have any problem to hit a woman especially when she was lowering her sword on her head. Selina dodged and kicked the woman in the belly sending her to crash on her comrades.

Batman saw the woman who ordered the attack charging at him with her sword ready; the blade was coming to his neck so quickly that resembled a lightning. The last moment he caught the blade between his palms causing the woman’s infuriated, shocked scream; she tried to overcome his resistance to free her sword. Her strength was great yet Batman managed to hold and the Amazon realizing kicked him in the belly hoping that his surprise would yield his resistance.

However Batman twisted his hands taking advantage of her effort to kick him to throw her sword away. Her hatred was obvious in her eyes when she jerked both hands to punch him only to be stopped by Batman’s consecutive blocks with his forearms.

Several Amazons surrounded him attacking simultaneously as he fought her leader. Batman continued to block his opponent’s hits with his palms using his legs to kick the warriors who attacked from the back. He thanked his friends for the armor that enabled his legs to move because other than that he couldn’t feel anything there even though the Amazons hit him.

He jerked his head backwards to smack the head of one behind him who had attempted to headlock him and clenching his jaw boosted himself to the air twirling using his movement to propel the warriors who were on him.

His movement had thrown the commander of the Amazons away and she landed on her feet; she was ready to attack again but she looked amazed at the creature fighting them: his wings was spread and in the night he looked like a giant Bat or a winged creature of justice.

Yet Amazons weren’t afraid of anything; she clenched her fists and jumped to attack the creature that fought her sisters.

Selina elbowed the woman behind her and punched the one in front of her right in the nose kicking at the same time another one coming from her right. She wanted to run to Bruce and help: he shouldn’t get hurt and these lamias were real bitches.

Batman was descending rapidly back to the ground; he gathered his wings to envelop several Amazons and threw them aside. But as soon as they were out others went on him; he needed to stop this.

He took a smoke bomb from his belt and threw it between his feet obscuring their view and surprising them just for the second the time he needed to jump to another spot.

Batman stood some feet away ready to speak but the woman he had confronted surged again at him brandishing her sword giving a war cry that really made the blood run cold.

“Ἀντιόπη, μη! Σταματήστε την επίθεση!”

Both Selina and Bruce could hear the words translated so they knew that the Princess at last ordered her comrades to stop.

The Amazons obeyed puzzled and looked at their Princess; Selina found the chance to walk casually among them to come to her friend.

“She didn’t want her sisters eat more dust…” she said dryly lolling her head to Batman.

Diana walked in the middle of the battle scenery and addressed her people.

«Αυτός ανήκει στην υπηρεσία της Νέμεσης.»

Selina rolled her eyes meeting Batman’s lenses.

“At Nemesis’ service?” she asked exasperated. “Oh, boy!”

“It’s better than all this fighting” he replied. “There are more important things right now than exchanging punches…”

The Princess touched the shoulders of the woman she had called Antiope.

“They are not enemies…” Bruce and Selina understood what the Princess said locking eyes with her lieutenant. “They didn’t want to attack us.”

Suddenly, the circle of the still suspicious women broke to reveal a woman with black hair streaked with thin gray, dressed in a deep red long tunic with golden streaks at the sides. She wore a plain, unadorned gold tiara and her blue eyes were filled with wisdom as she regarded the scene.

Diana detached from Antiope and met her.

“Queen Hippolyta” she said with respect.
Ms. Turner’s small blue Ford stopped in front of the Wayne Manor and both Dick and Jayson jumped out carrying their school backpacks. While Ms. Turner drove the car to the parking they climbed the stairs and Dick made to ring the bell however Alfred caught with him and opened the door.

“Good afternoon, Master Dick, Master Jayson; how was your school day?”

Jayson crooked his mouth.

“It was a SCHOOL DAY: so there can’t be much originality ther’” he spat. “All in all, twas shit.” Dick chuckled and Alfred took his mock strict expression.

“I must kindly request of you to mind your language, Master Jason.”

Jason tilted his head on the side.

“As if ya never felt like shit in school...” Alfred couldn’t fight a grin and Dick elbowed his friend who looked him surprised. “Wha’? Ya think that he has forgotten ‘cause it’s been ages since?” he asked as they moved inside.

Now Alfred didn’t manage to hold a chuckle.

“No, Master Jayson; although indeed too many years have passed I do remember some bad school days.”

Jayson cocked his eyebrows.

“Some?”

Alfred didn’t reply.

“The lunch is ready, young masters; so if you please, you can wash your hands and come to the kitchen.”

He made to leave for the kitchen but Dick cleared his throat and the butler stopped.

“Is anything the matter, Master Richard?”

“You had any news from Bruce? Days have passed since he left...”

Jayson crooked his mouth.

“He feels guilty an’ fears that his past ill thoughts an’ wishes will have an effect on Bruce...”

Alfred eyed the boy with understanding.

“Is that so, Master Richard? Then I must tell you that nothing of what you said or thought can harm Master Bruce: your heart is pure, Master Jayson, so your thoughts can’t make any harm” he cocked his eyebrows. “Besides you have regretted those now.”

Dick wasn’t relieved.
“Did he call? How is he?” he insisted.

“I didn’t speak with him because he is very busy but I did speak with Mr. Lucius Fox who is with him and he told me that Master Bruce is alright.”

Dick shook his head.

“Is a Batman related mission?” Jason whispered in conspirator mode.

Alfred narrowed his eyes.

“You understand that I can’t answer that” he replied in the same tone and winked.

Dick shook his head: he really missed Bruce – he wanted to talk so many things with him.

“You think it will be long before he returns?”

“I cannot give an answer to that, Master Richard.”

The boy sighed.

“At least, granny accepted to stay here a few days more – I wouldn’t like to leave without seeing and speaking to him…”

Alfred smiled; Harvey and his family had moved to the city and he was glad that Ms. Turner and Master Richard would be staying a bit more: his young master’s absence would have reminded him a lot of those dreadful years of Falcone’s rule when Alfred there was indeed the keeper of a mausoleum.

But what made him happier was that the boy had grown such affection for his young Master. And Master Bruce needed that after everything that happened the last months.

“I assure you, Master Richard, that he will be also happy. However even when you and your grandmother move back to your own apartment you can still come whenever you want to the Manor; and of course you can talk with Master Bruce as much as you want. Which is also true for you, Master Jayson.”

Jayson scratched his head.

“I hope when he returns he will be so happy to remember that littl’ ride…”

Dick laughed but then looked Alfred in the eyes.

“It must be so hard for you to wait for him here…”

Alfred smiled kindly to the boy.

“It definitely is, Master Richard.”

A gigantic blue figure stood before Superman, towering, shedding him under his shadow that made his spine froze in its menacing aura. Superman rarely felt fear and always was about his loved ones’ wellbeing – he was invulnerable after all. Now however was different: the Kryptonite had drained him of his super powers and the weeds and plants were suffocating him keeping him completely immobile, more effective than titanium shackles.
Even in this position his major fear was still about his loved ones, about the people who were in danger by this being. He clenched his jaw and his trapped fists making a desperate and hopeless effort to escape and face the new threat. However he was weak and ill from the Kryptonite and the vicious plants crushed him more, digging their stems and thorns into his vulnerable now flesh.

The big square face of the newcomer was carved by a smirk and Superman glared at him, simultaneously estimating the stranger. He was taller and broader than Bagdana and his sturdy, square bluish body almost reached the ceiling. His legs and arms were like pillars bound in bulging stony muscles. His eyebrows were hairless as his head and his eyes glistened in a flaming red.

“Kal El of Krypton…Superman of Earth” the newcomer rattled between his teeth.

Superman felt relieved because this being didn’t know his human identity – otherwise he’d have bragged about that: Bagdana hadn’t revealed that and that meant that his Ma and friends were safe from this man’s revenge. Suddenly, he froze: but he knew about Bruce…

“You’re really pathetic” the bluish giant said smugly and Ivy chuckled while Bagdana was completely indifferent – even impatient as if he was in a hurry to do something more important.

Superman’s chest was contrived because he knew that Bagdana’s only interest was getting Bruce.

“Trapped from…plants!” the giant laughed. “Falling so easily to the trick… I always knew that Kryptonians were all talking and bragging but deep down they were useless worms. I intended to prove how worthless they were destroying their planet but your sun caught me in that – saving Kryptonians from the shame of their defeat and robbing me from my triumph. But now I have that will change: I will show how inferior are Kryptonians by destroying the people the last Kryptonian bragged that he protects and then I shall destroy him too eradicating that breed from my new world.”

Superman clenched his jaw and shook his head trying to ease his neck from the choking of all those thick and thinner stems that were wrapped around like a green noose.

“Who are you?”

The blue giant cackled and stepped even closer, bringing his enormous foot over Superman’s chest, stepping and pressing him to the weed covered ground almost squashing him. Clark bereft of his extraordinary strength and invulnerability felt his muscles and bones protesting from the pain and inadvertently his mind went to that night an entire roof crashed over Bruce; his Star must have been in crucifying pain. He grunted causing the blue giant’s smirk.

“I am Darkseid, the ruler of Apokolips and the master of the Universe.”

Ivy leaned to Bagdana.

“This was an animation show of ‘80s…I preferred Thundercats though…” she snorted and the demon chuckled.

However Darkseid had his eyes locked with Superman’s. The latter’s face was drenched in sweat from the pain both the Kryptonite and Darkseid’s weight caused.

“I can kill you right now, pathetic Kryptonian; a blink of my eyes is more than enough to turn you into dust…Ending that stinking Kryptonian breed from my world.”

Superman’s defiance shone in his eyes.

“Do it then!” he spat in his enemy’s face.
Darkseid stabbed him with his eyes and the pain in every one of Superman’s billions of cells became unbearable to the point of screaming; a scream that Clark barely managed to turn into growl. The New God clenched his enormous fist next to the hero’s head clenching his square jaw.

“No; it is too easy for you” Superman slightly frowned but at the same time made his stare defiant; Darkseid smirked. “You will first see this planet enslaved, succumbing defeated under my feet…” Darkseid had promised to give this planet to Ivy so he on purpose avoided using ‘destroyed’.

Superman set his jaw with determination.

“You can’t win! You might have caught me but there are many great people out there who will kick your sorry ass!”

He had barely ended his phrase when Darkseid’s heavy foot kicked him in the face and weren’t for his weed bindings he’d have crushed to the opposite wall. His cheek however was sliced and he felt the first known sense of warm blood slithering his skin.

Both Batman and Catwoman regarded casually but estimating the newcomers: behind the circle of the gathered Amazons, new presences cast their shadows over the clearance. They had come along with Queen Hippolyta: they were Amazons on horses, dressed in plain long sleeveless tunics in dark blue color. These women were much older than the rest, their beautiful faces were wrinkled not much but enough to indicate that they were elder. However, their battling abilities weren’t compromised: they held their unadorned wooden bows with the stings stretched ready to launch the metallic pointed arrows to the uninvited guests; under the light the torches some of the Amazons on foot were holding, their blazing, glaring eyes were already shedding daggers to their targets waiting for the order.

Selina leaned slightly to Bruce.

“You can smash their arrows with your Batarangs in a few seconds and I can do the same with my whip…”

Batman kept his eyes on the Princess who was talking with her mother.

“Yes but I want to believe that we won’t have to…” he whispered.

Queen Hippolyta walked graciously towards the two strangers with Diana on her side. The older woman looked at them.

“A really unusual pair of warriors…” she said.

Selina cocked an eyebrow.

“I can’t see the reason we are unusual: a giant Bat and a Cat kicking asses…” she pouted.

“They didn’t attack us” Diana said. “They claim that they just want to talk to me.”

The Queen nodded.

Selina crossed her arms on her chest; Bruce considered it a good sign that the two women spoke English to be understood by their ‘guests’. However he didn’t move forward since this might be interpreted as lack of respect.
“Queen Hippolyta, I’m Batman” he said calmly. “I’m sorry we disturbed your peace but it was necessary.”

The woman named Antiope rushed there with her eyes angry.

“Man, kneel before Queen Hippolyta!”

Bruce rolled his eyes inside because this phrase always caused him more laughter than anger yet Selina’s reaction wasn’t so mild; she frowned and moved furious against the woman, causing the nervous movements of the archer Amazons.

“What’s your mouth, sister!” she purred unfazed by the arrows ready to pierce them. “He won’t kneel before anyone!” Selina knew how many times her friend had been forced to do that and other things connected with that.

“I didn’t demand it from you” Antiope retorted “but he is a man: not kneeling before the Queen shows his lack of respect.”

Selina was ready to answer but Batman looked at her calm communicating with her. Batman focused his lenses on the Queen and the Princess.

“I deeply respect both of you but I won’t kneel because kneeling is an indication of servility not respect” he saw Hippolyta’s eyes flashing but not with hostility. “I never kneel before anyone.”

“He is arrogant” Antiope said detaching from the glaring battle with Selina.

Batman turned slowly to regard the General and then back to the two leaders.

“I’m not arrogant; just dignified. And the people who deserve respect don’t feel the need of seeing people on their feet.”

Diana grinned satisfied while Hippolyta’s face was unreadable. In the few seconds that followed the clearance fell in complete silence which was disturbed by the sounds of the forests’ animals and the wind’s blow between the leaves. Batman and Catwoman felt the stabbing eyes of the Amazons on them.

Hippolyta turned to the archers on the horses and with a stare they lowered their bows and put them back to their shoulders.

“I would never expect to see kneeled him who is the bearer of the Dagger of Justice” her eyes locked with Batman’s lenses.

Then as if she had seen what she wanted the Queen exchanged a meaningful gaze with her daughter and then regarded their guests.

“Our city’s gates will open to admit you.”

“As prisoners?” Selina asked aggressively. “No way!”

“Losers: all of them” Darkseid said with contempt and smiled. “You expect the Avengers to stop me?” he cackled stretching his posture keeping his foot on Superman’s chest. “How pathetic! Relying on others to do your job” he cocked an eyebrow “especially a bunch of amateurs…They were almost beaten by that pathetic so-called god, Loki; his petty army was a joke in front of my troopers and weapons and his powers are only a drop in the ocean that are mine! Who is going to pose a worthy resistance?” he snorted. “The Amazon?” Ivy laughed. “The world will freeze seeing its protector siding with me…Flash? I’m faster than this bug…”

Superman thought of someone who was a threat for every evil being whatever its powers: a creature lurking in the shadows waiting to open its wings and bring justice on them.

Darkseid cocked his eyebrows.

“Oh…So is this your greatest hope? A little Bat? This Batman seems to have everyone’s high respect” he turned to look at Bagdana and Superman realized that Darkseid had seen inside his brain since he immediately spoke about Batman: fortunately, he hadn’t thought about Bruce at the same time. “He is the most pathetic of the lot…absent all the time doing nothing…I doubt that he’d even dare to leave his nest trying to hide from Darkseid’s power when your lousy world falls apart…Because except than my troops I have a second army ready to unleash terror when my attack starts: the lowlife of Metropolis…” his smirk became wider. “Using humans’ own deficits to squash them.”

Superman’s eyes widened; he suddenly remembered the mobsters he was watching all these months: their chats about their powerful leader who wasn’t afraid of Superman; of their cleaning attacks against every rival gang; the mysterious releases of gangsters from jail; the attack at Metropolis’ subway station where the fake Diana appeared suddenly and kissed him…Finally, it made sense!

Darkseid nodded smugly.

“Exactly! Intergang” he read Superman’s mind. “I’m the leader but you were too preoccupied all this time to search for me and putting that lousy gangster to lead the attack at the station persuaded everyone and you that he was the leader. My dear fake Amazon took care to close his mouth forever”.

He turned to look at Ivy and Superman found the chance to think how right Bruce was to doubt that Edge, whom Ivy killed there, was indeed the leader.

“They would have never followed you!”

Darkseid turned to him cocking an eyebrow.

“Why because I am an alien or because of my blue color?” he asked in irony. “I doubt that…Humans are greedy: will make everything for the right price ignoring their fate in the end…Yet I didn’t consider the scum of this planet worthy of seeing Darkseid in all his glory – so I became a human, not that they ever saw me yet I needed to blend with humans to learn about them: suck their dark elements” he took the form of Mannheim.

Superman squinted: he had seen that man in a few photos but nothing more.

“Brunno Mannheim?!”

“Bravo! As humans say…An ordinary business man. There are so many odd humans out there that my mystery didn’t make an impression…and I have my time to make my study and conclude that this lousy species is perfect for the job.”

Superman didn’t like that. He shook his head feeling awkward as the blood from the gash in his cheek slithered to join that from his lips.

“What job? A planet must be perfect to be…’honored’ with your conquest?” he asked in deep irony.
Darkseid lolled his head to the side.

“Conquering planets it is nothing for Darkseid: I could have turned this planet into dust whenever I wanted; yet what interests me is to get the energy that lies inside humans’ subconscious: the dark energy that will make me the master of Anti Life Equation and will enable me to create a new universe. My machine is almost ready” he said sucking Superman’s angst “Luthor is working day and night serving his master.”

“You released Luthor from prison. Of course! Luthor was bound to be in this!”

“He is just a pawn: he is a human – he needn’t to know much; he’ll do his job and then he’ll be exterminated like the rest of his breed. When Luthor finishes my machine then I’ll unleash my power over Earth” Superman felt his sweaty body going frozen just from the power that vibrated that voice; Darkseid clenched his fist in the air. “I want you to watch as your fellow heroes get killed one by one and then as I’ll drain humans from the valuable energy that lies in them leaving them empty carcasses… I want you to watch all these; I want the last son of Krypton watch as another people gets eliminated because he was worthless as his ancestors who couldn’t avert Krypton’s destruction and their own extinction.”

Clark remembered what he have heard months ago in a bar from two of Mannheim’s thugs: their intention to torture Bruce in front of his eyes to make him suffer; he remembered the recent attack against Bruce in the Palisades from thugs; they had manifested signs of brainwashing too. So Darkseid had his eyes on Bruce whether Bagdana wanted the human for himself or not.

“You ordered the attack against Bruce Wayne at Palisades…”

Darkseid nodded.

“Yes. That human is too arrogant: he had the parts of my machine since he got LexLabs and he was refusing to give them back. He needed some punishment but in the end I took what I wanted whether he wanted or not.”

Darkseid turned his back on Clark to look at Bagdana and Clark found the chance to take a deep breath because knowing Bruce and his thoughts about the Intergang, maybe he had suspected something about the parts and had kept some control?

“My valuable demon wants your human too much” Darkseid said. “Waye is a strange human being indeed…”

Bagdana looked him frowned: he never liked Darkseid’s interest in Bruce. And neither Superman liked it.

“Leave Bruce alone!” Superman yelled to both of them. “Bruce won’t become your reward” his eyes found Bagdana’s cold yellow irises. “Bruce will never accept to be your slave!”

Bagdana covered the space that parted them with two strides and his granite colored body became the shining green of Kryptonite that immediately made Superman’s pain more than ever. The hero screamed till his lungs were empty from air.

The demon leaned to him and grasped his neck choking him bringing their eyes to lock.

“Bruce is mine!”

“He doesn’t belong to anyone!” he screamed as the pain became even stronger.
Darkseid laughed and shook his head with contempt for the sight.

“All these for a human – a cripple human, that is…” he uttered with disgust and Superman managed to think how wrong Darkseid was to underestimate Bruce. “You’ll be transferred to my base” Darkseid said keeping his enormous back turned to Superman and Bagdana. “I shall provide you a most convenient stay there until everything is done and you meet the rest of your worthless breed’s fate.”

Superman knew very well how ‘convenient’ that stay would be…

Hippolyta smiled.

“You are not our prisoners but our guests.”

Selina looked at Bruce with her eyes narrowed: it could be a trap and she could tell without seeing her friends’ eyes that he was thinking the same. Yet Batman yanked his head.

“I’ll be honored to be your guest, Queen Hippolyta, Princess Artemis” he turned to Selina waiting her response to the invitation.

Selina crooked her mouth.

“Alright. I just hope you don’t have any ill intention.”

The Princess smiled friendly and made an inviting gesture as the Amazons moved to open the closed circle around them.

Batman and Catwoman began walking since their hosts waited for them to go first; Hippolyta with the Princess followed them and then the rest of the Amazons. The women on horses were the last to follow.

The marching was silent disturbed only from the hissing sound of the air moving the thick foliage of the forest, the screeching sounds of the forests’ animals and the howls of wolves on the mountains that stood guards on the perimeter of the island.

Selina leaned to her friend.

“I feel like the mouse being invited to dinner by the cat…”

Batman grinned.

“It must be an awkward feeling…for a Cat” he replied and Selina felt rather than saw an eyebrow being raised.

She pursed her lips.

“I hope we are not the meal…” she snorted. “For their sake!”

Batman pressed his lips.

The gates opened to welcome them and they followed the central street that led to the palace that was situated in the heart of the city.

The sideways streets were narrow and surrounded by houses that were the same square buildings without any distinction of wealth or social status. Batman located near the center of the city two enormous rectangular buildings with guards in their entrances: his guess was that these were some kind of storages – the one for food and the other for armory.

The waving light from the fires on the stony pillars that were situated densely to the two sides of the street made the oval small stones that covered the ground shine.

Over the city’s citadel a temple towered the city; it was made from white marble that glistened like pearl among the fires that burnt in its perimeter of round shaped pillars.

“The temple of Hera” the Princess told seeing Batman looking there; she had moved so to be at their side.

The palace wasn’t an impressive building to show off the ruler’s status and power; it was slightly bigger than the other residential buildings and its entrance was made of two Doric marble gateposts that surrounded a heavy oaken door.

The two warriors who guarded the entrance holding spears saluted their leaders by hitting their fists on their chests. A motion that always made Selina roll her eyes.

“A bit pretentious, don’t you think?” she whispered to Batman’s pointy ear.

“It’s just their code of demeanor…”

The floor shone under the abundant light of the torches that was positioned all over the two walls that surrounded the wide corridor. It was a marble floor in golden color adorned with scenes of battle. The walls were bare of any depictions.

They followed the main corridor that led to the throne hall but Batman estimated the sideways smaller corridors that led to the other rooms; at the end of the corridor stood a stair with wide steps that led to the upper level. He wanted to have an image of the building just in case they needed to escape which he didn’t want to happen but he knew he had to be prepared for everything.

The throne hall was vast; the walls were covered with weathered weapons that either were relics or loot from great battles. In the far end, opposite the entrance that was guarded by two Amazons, stood the throne made of wood adorned with golden designs; on its right stood another throne that certainly was of the Princess. In front of the two thrones on the shining floor was an enormous mosaic depicting the same star on Diana’s tiara. On the right of the thrones was a long, rectangular table with rectangular stools.

In the perimeter of the hall, in equal distance between them, were place human-sized statues of the twelve ancient Greek Gods and Goddesses. The beauty and reality of the statues were impressive.

The Princess upon entering the hall whispered something to some Amazons who had rushed there as soon as their leaders arrived. The women left immediately and Hippolyta turned to her guests.

“You must be really tired from your journey here: it will be an honor to share our humble food and wine with two warriors like you.”

Batman bowed slightly his head.

“Thank you, Queen Hippolyta, but the reason of our trip comes before food and rest.”

The Queen eyed her daughter and Diana nodded courtly.
“Princess Artemis told me that you are Goddess Nemesis’ warrior which is apparent from your armor” she smiled and gestured with her palm to one statue that was positioned at the far left corner, behind the other gods’ statues, cast in the shadow: it was a winged goddess that brandished her sword ready to punish the wrong doers; her eyes and facial expression was calm but determined.

Bruce remembered the statue he had seen in the temple of his dream.

“Everyone wise enough respects goddess Nemesis and lets her guide from the shadows her demeanor through life” the older woman said regarding the statue. “The coming of someone affiliated to her means that something grave is happening. She guided your steps here.”

She walked graciously and sat to her throne. In the mean time, Antiope still in her armor minus the helmet entered the hall and behind her the elder Amazons take their places surrounding the hall. Under the rich light of the torches the beauty of the women was striking as her well trained, hard bodies.

Bruce could play the card of Nemesis’ representative which would help his cause yet he didn’t want to lie. He realized that both Hippolyta and Diana regarded him.

“Queen Hippolyta, I must admit that I don’t know if the goddess has guided our steps here neither if she wanted us here. I like to take the full responsibility of my actions so it was our decision that brought us here to alert you and specifically Princess Artemis about the developments in our world.”

Diana’s beautiful eyes focused on him.

“Nothing that happens out there can have anything to do with us: for your world we are just a legend; people completely ignore our existence.”

Batman shook his head.

“Not anymore. Not since the Princess of the Amazons appeared to our world.”

A shocked murmur crossed the hall and Diana frowned.

“What?”

Batman bent his forearm and brushed a spot: instantly, images appeared in the air from the micro projector that was adjusted to his armor. Another surprised hiss ran the space.

They saw a woman stopping a train stopping it before crashing in a cliff; they saw her even using her bracelets to repel thugs.

Queen Hippolyta’s eyes widened while Diana’s hands clenched into fists seeing the black-blue long hair of the woman, the blue eyes, the tiara and the lasso curled in her belt.

“Obviously your visits to our world are not so often” Selina said raising an eyebrow.

Diana shook her head absorbed in the images of the fake.

“No; we come to your world once in four years.”

Selina snorted.

“Don’t tell me: for the Olympics?”

“No, for reproduction” the Princess answered and looked at Bruce with her face distorted in disgust.
“That impostor claims that she is me? She is dressed like a whore!” she cast a glare to the swimming suit-like costume the fake Diana wore which led her entire legs naked and hardly dressed half of her big breasts.

Selina sniggered.

“I won’t argue with that…Minus the ‘like’: she IS a whore.”

Batman pressed his lips.

“That’s right, Princess: she pretends to be the Diana of Themiscyra.”

“What about her powers?” Hippolyta asked. “How can she have the powers Artemis has?”

The Princess looked at Batman frowned.

“She is allied with powerful beings that plan to conquer the planet; her allies instructed her into acting like the Amazon Princess and gave her powers along that completed her own.”

“And why using my name?” the Princess gritted her teeth and Batman knew that this was the sentiment of everyone in the hall; the Amazons were affronted that someone impersonated their Princess.

Batman brushed his forearm and the next video played in front of the Amazons’ shocked eyes; this video was painful for him too. On the night skyline of Chicago, among the skyscrapers Diana and Superman hovered embraced with their bodies glued, in a passionate kiss that made the crowd underneath them cheer.

Selina huffed exasperated.

“She copulates with Superman?!” Diana exclaimed.

The word she used made Selina snort.

“More like she fucks Superman!”

Batman cast a sideways glance at his friend who shrugged; he then turned to Diana.

“I see you know Superman.”

Antiope stepped forward.

“We know about Superman but nothing about you” she gritted her teeth while her black eyes sent daggers to him.

Selina crossed her arms over her chest, lolled her head towards the general and rolled her eyes.

“He doesn’t like the limelight…”

“My work has nothing to do with cheering and cameras” he said flatly and Hippolyta nodded.

“I wouldn’t expect anything less than the warrior of Nemesis” she remarked.

Diana however was impatient.

“What Superman has to do with the involvement of my name in this?”
Batman looked at her.

“The conspirators believed that Superman is the main obstacle in conquering Earth so they brought to the fore a legendary Amazon, a gorgeous heroine who fights the evil like Superman intending to enslave him to her will and in the end capturing him so he couldn’t help the Earth when the time comes. One of her own powers is to seduce her victims and enslave them under her will; of course in Superman’s case her own mind controlling strength was amplified by her allies.”

Diana’s lips were pressed in anger.

“Darkseid. This is the alien being that wants to destroy Earth” Batman added. “And when he launches his attack the Princess of the Amazon” he scowled “the impostor, will join him in smashing the planet’s defense, discouraging the humans who will see their heroine, the one they now call Wonder Woman, killing them alongside the so-called New God.”

“She disgraces the name of the Amazons and of our Princess” one of the elder women said.

But Diana was calm.

“How did you figure that she was an impostor?”

Batman shook his head.

“Noticing some things: the star her tiara has is not the Greek star; also, her hair had something that betrays that the color is artificial. Her entire demeanor…”

Diana shared a look with her mother.

“And why did you come here?” Diana asked.

Batman set his jaw.

“To inform you about what happens in your name and hoping to have your alliance and help in the war that it is coming.”

“That is a war that has to do with the world of men, not ours” Antiope replied. “We can defend our island if that so-called New God tries to attack us.”

Batman looked at her.

“He is not a common warlord: he belongs to a race called New Gods and he possesses great powers. When he hits it will be to everyone’s best interest if our strength is united. If what you call ‘the world of men’ falls then the fall of your world will be easier since Darkseid would focus all his strength against you.”

“You are part of this world” Selina spat “the fate of this world will affect your island too.”

“He might not even find Themiscyra” one of the elders commented and Batman’s dark stare was cast on her.

“You don’t understand: Darkseid doesn’t care about conquering the planet and being its ruler – he will eliminate this planet entirely. It is what he does: he destroys worlds.”

Antiope looked at her Princess who was deep in thought.

“Amazons are not afraid to fight” Hippolyta said.
“But are you willing to fight alongside men?” Antiope asked her Princess.

Diana yanked her head.

“One of this men” she looked at Batman “was chosen by Nemesis” she said. “If the goddess can trust a man why I cannot?”

Selina made a step forward.

“What you call the world of men is hardly that: there are also strong, independent women who fight equally to the men” she cocked an eyebrow showing herself with the eyes “obviously.”

Batman stared at the Princess.

“Will you join our cause?”

“This woman challenges me” Diana said glaring at Ivy in the video. “She dared to impersonate me and defame the name of the Amazons.”

Batman slightly yanked his head feeling encouraged but the Princess narrowed her eyes that shone smartly.

“What if I deny helping you?”

He set his jaw.

“I’ll return and fight with all my friends and allies to protect our world and yours.”

New murmurs scattered to the room and Hippolyta yanked her head raising her palm silencing immediately her sisters.

“You’ll have your answer tomorrow” Diana said locking her gaze with Batman’s lenses.

Selina huffed frustrated but Batman nodded.

“Now I think that our guests should eat and rest” Hippolyta said and stood.

During their discussion the table on the left was prepared for dinner: large brass plates with roasted meat along with loafs of bread and vessels with wine were placed there waiting.

Selina looked at her friend.

“You don’t have an appetite, right?”

Batman pressed his lips.

“No…” he whispered “but we will insult our hosts if we skip that.”

Selina shrugged.

“Then try to enjoy the meal” her eyes were warm. “You need to eat.”

“You too.”

At the table the Princess looked again at Selina’s heels.

“I’ve seen many women wear those in bars and other establishments of recreation but fighting with them?”

Selina took a mouthful of fine roasted wild sheep that was hunted on the mountains of Themyscira and shrugged.

“Haven’t you seen dancers or acrobats doing their stuff on heels? Plus, those heels are a really lethal weapon if you know how to handle it” she tilted her head towards an Amazon she had confronted previously and cocked her eyebrows pointedly; the woman’s face had some nasty scars from Selina’s razor sharp heels.

Diana grinned.

“I might consider that…”

Catwoman pouted.

“Just stick to your guns, gal!”

The music from the harps and flutes was beautifully relaxing yet Batman was tense every now and then taking a bite and sipping from his bronze mug. His mind was already working his back up and how he could persuade Clark that the Diana he knew was an impostor.

Hippolyta looked at him.

“Your mind is troubled.”

He looked at her.

“The world is faced with a great danger.”

Hippolyta nodded.

“You are a truly great warrior: your world is fortunate to have you defending it.”

After the dinner, Diana herself guided them to the guest rooms but Selina insisted on staying with Batman.

“You are a couple?” she asked.

Selina rolled her eyes.

“No, we are friends; more than friends: siblings” she spat.

Diana smiled and turned to Batman.

“I wish I could give you the answer you want right now but there are matters I must consider.”

Batman nodded.

“I understand.”

The room was spacious with too few furniture: a plain wooden bed with unadorned posts, a small rectangular table and two chairs; a sofa consisted of leather fabrics and a lit fireplace completed the room’s appliances.
When they were left alone Selina turned anxious to Batman.

“Now we are alone: Are you alright? They were vicious out there. Are you in pain?”

He smiled.

“Half of my body can’t be in body if I wanted to… As for the rest, it’s fine.”

“Yes but still you might be hurt. They hit yours legs: take off the armor plates to have a look.”

Bruce looked at his legs which weren’t feeling anything. His armor indeed bore marks of blades; he might have some bruises but he honestly right now didn’t care.

“No; I don’t want to take off any part of the armor.”

Selina frowned.

“You think they are watching us?”

“No but still I think it’s better to stay like this. But you need some rest.”

She snorted.

“Really? You need that more” she leaned to his ear “sweetie” she whispered.

Batman gave a crooked smile.

“I’m not sleepy; I’m perfect sitting here.”

Selina huffed and slumped beside him on the leather cushions that made the sofa.

“The night will be long…”

“I wish we had the answer right now and we were on our way back: the time works against us.”

She patted his back.

“You worry about him…”

Batman huffed.

“At this point I’m worried for everything.”

Selina leaned to him touching her upper arm to his; she smiled.

“Imagine those cold Amazons making a pass to the bystanders in a bar…I wish I was on a corner hearing their come-on…” she chuckled trying to fix Bruce’s dark mood.

He smiled and patted her hand.

“The Amazons are so beautiful that most men wouldn’t mind anything else.”

Selina shook her head and huffed.

“If I judge from Gotham’s males…”

"
Lois was at the bistro café near the Planet’s building; after the work she used to go there with some of her colleagues. Her phone’s ringing cut something she was saying and looked at her phone rolling her eyes frustrated. But seeing the caller’s ID she frowned and excused herself going out to speak.

“Martha?” she greeted without hiding her puzzlement.

“Hi, dear” the older woman said “how are you?”

“Mmm…fine and you?”

“Fine…” there was some urgency to her voice “Lois, is Clark with you?”

“No, he is supposed to be with you?” Lois’ eyes were frowned: what had that stupid farm boy done this time?

“He was but he left saying that it was an emergency but hours have passed and there’s nothing in the news so I thought that he might have come to you.”

Lois bit her lip angry with her friend.

“No, Martha; he hasn’t come to me…but I have a hunch about his whereabouts and the person he is with” she cocked her eyebrows “I came to know Clark’s emergencies the past months…”

“Wonder Woman.”

“I’m afraid so, Martha…”

“And you’re right to, Lois; if that is true…” the older woman mumbled.

“What?”

“Nothing, dear, nothing” she wasn’t sure if it was prudent to bring Lois to this yet. “Enjoy the rest of the day.”

Lois frowned sensing that there was something more.

Antiope approached her Princess. Diana was standing on the balcony on the back side of the palace, gazing at Hera’s temple. The night was moving towards the dawn.

“You’re really thinking of their proposal?”

Diana nodded and Antiope closed her eyes.

“We don’t have anything to do with their world: we have survived through the centuries with you and Hippolyta as our leaders. We’ll make it this time as well.”

“You saw that woman who impersonates me: they gave her my powers to fool people and defame my name and us. She became Superman’s whore in order to lead him to the death so that her ally destroys the world.”

Antiope stretched her arms.

“What do you care? We know who you are and our people are the only thing that matters.”
Diana looked her in the eyes.

“What do you propose then?” she asked locking their eyes.

“Hold them here. The Cat is definitely one of our own that lost her path. And the Batman…keep him here: he is a great warrior and the fact he bears the Dagger and defies the Lasso manifests that he has special qualities. You can copulate with him and breed invincible new Amazons.”

Diana pressed her lips.

“He is Nemesis’ warrior: even if I try, I doubt I can hold him against his will. And the same goes for the Cat.”

Antiope yanked her head.

“Then let them go and focus on preparing ourselves for the war that’s coming.”

Diana held Antiope’s shoulders and looked deep in her eyes.

“This is not a war we can win alone, Antiope.”

“That is right” Hippolyta walked quietly to them from the interior. “We have our responsibilities in that world, Artemis.”

When the first colors of the dawn entered the guest room Bruce stood from the sofa he had spent the night sleepless.

The singing of the birds outside was really mesmerizing since the nature was blooming as the spring had made her first steps yet Bruce’s mind was too shadowed to fully appreciate that.

Selina who also didn’t sleep stood too stretching her body.

They had decided that they would leave in the morning whatever the Princess’ decision might be.

Coming out of their room they met a patrolling Amazon. Bruce already knew that Hippolyta had let their room unguarded since he didn’t sense the presence of guards outside.

“Can we see Queen Hippolyta?” Bruce asked in Greek.

The Amazon gave a sharp nod.

“The Queen is at the Hall. Follow me.”

They found the Queen gazing her island from the arch shaped window on her throne’s right. She was thoughtful but as soon as she heard footsteps entering the hall, turned.

Bruce and Selina greeted her and she replied accordingly.

“I see you wake up early” she told them leaving the window to come towards them.

“We need to leave immediately” Batman said. “But first I’d like to thank you for your hospitality.”

The woman grinned raising her eyebrows.

“Even though our welcome was hostile? You two are great warriors and I feel privileged for meeting you…whichever Artemis’ choice is.”

There was some melancholy in the woman’s wise and rough brown eyes.

“We really hate it that we might become the reason your daughter leaves” Selina said understanding but Hippolyta waved that off, shaking her head.

“Artemis is a great warrior and a protector of her sisters but now the time might have come to meet her destiny; to become something more…and for a mother that is the most important thing: seeing her daughter becoming what she was born to be.”

Batman set his jaw.

“You always spoke with great wisdom, Queen Hipolyta. The world would definitely benefit from you and Princess Artemis.”

Hippolyta looked him in the eyes.

“I don’t know what my daughter will choose but you have my best wishes for your fight.”

Selina raised her eyebrows.

“And your alliance?” she asked hopeful.

“That is not only for me to decide.”

Bruce heard the determined steps behind him.

“You have my alliance” the Princess’ determined voice echoed through the hall and both Bruce and Selina turned to her.

The Princess regarded them with eyes shining with resolution.

“I’ll come with you.”

She was dressed in her war armor: a red tunic reaching her knees covered with shreds of brown leather; her torso was tightly wrapped in leather and her wide leather belt had in the place of her navel the head of Goddess Athena. Her arms were uncovered apart from her bracelets and her long shapely calves above the flat brown leather sandals were dressed in gold greaves engraved with the head of Medusa. Her sword hanged to her right and her Lasso on the left.

Her hair was free on her back and two braids created a wreath on her forehead in the middle of which stuck out the point of her golden tiara with the red-ruby star shining in the light of the dawn.

Selina pursed her lips and shrugged.

“I approve the attire…it sure does an effect…yet we’ll need something more…casual.”

The three of them were crossing on foot the island’s road leading to the beach. The departure of the Princess had caused the stares of the Amazons in the city and those they met on their way. Yet nobody spoke though Bruce could feel the emotional tension.

The Princess had spent some time with her mother before leaving yet the departure happened with a typical grabbing of the forearms. As soon as Diana accepted to come with them Bruce alerted Tony.
Selina regarded the Amazon between them.

“Nice touch” she said.

“Thank you” Diana replied.

The Gothamite cocked an impressed eyebrow: the Princess wore a skinny jean that highlighted her perfect lines and a white turtleneck, long sleeve sweater with black sneakers completing the image. Her hair was tied in a loose ponytail.

“I told you we are visiting your world so we know how to dress to pass unnoticed.”

Batman looked at her.

“It must be difficult to leave your homeland.”

Indeed, under the sun’s light Themiscyra showed off its entire beauty: trees and fields everywhere covered with the first multicolor flowers leading to steep mountains still white from the snow that glimmered under the clear blue sky.

Heading to the beach, they crossed the forest from a different side from that Bruce and Selina had taken when they came. At some point, they heard the sound of great amount of water falling and the Princess showed them the big waterfall in the middle of the great forest; a waterfall fell from a hill more than 100 feet high into a crystal lake that was created from a sparkling river that came down from the mountain.

Diana gazed around.

“It will be always with me in my heart…but some things are more important.”

Batman nodded.

“You are always deep in thought” the Princess told him.

“He is” Selina agreed.

“There are many things to consider in this battle” Batman answered.

“But first” the Amazon said “our transportation.”

Batman nodded.

“There is a yacht waiting for us at a distance: the Cat and I will swim there; you can fly, right?”

She smirked.

“I can but there’s no reason for you to swim…”

In the beach, a small boat with sail was waiting for them.

“My sisters will take it later.”

“Tony Stark knows everything about the threat and you” Batman said after they sailed and the Princess regarded him a bit displeased. “He is the head of the Avengers, a team of special people protecting the planet. He will wait us there with his hydroplane. It is okay with you if you travel with him to the States?”
Selina rolled her eyes thinking of Stark with this gorgeous woman and almost chuckled.

The Amazon shrugged.

“No problem…And you two?”

“We must settle some things on our way back but we will meet again.”

“I sure hope so” she answered. “People in your world know me as Diana so from now on I must answer to that name” she cocked an eyebrow.

Batman worried that she might ask his real name as a token of mutual trust but thankfully she didn’t.

Approaching the yacht Bruce saw Tony’s hydroplane.

When they ascended the ladder to the deck two men waited them with eagerness etched to their features: Tony and Thor. Bruce frowned surprised seeing the God there.

Thor immediately focused his eyes on Bruce trying to see any indication of injury or weakness but he didn’t show any worry just nodded courteously welcoming them.

He stood before the Princess and hit his fist on the place of his heart.

“Princess Diana, I am Thor from Asgard. Honored to meet you.”

The Amazon answered with the same greeting.

“The fame of the Thunders’ God had reached the Amazons.”

Tony raised an impressed eyebrow regarding the Amazon’s clothing and of course her beauty but a glare from Batman’s lenses made him clear his throat and take his most serious expression – the one he had for appeasing Pepper.

“Tony Stark” he introduced himself “and Ironman” he shook his head “I guess my…fame hasn’t reached Amazons, huh?” Selina chuckled and Tony cleared his throat “very delighted to meet you” he said politely stretching his hand which the Amazon grasped making Tony inhale sharply from the strength.

“The pleasure is mine, Mr. Stark” she replied.

_I hope she means that…_ Tony thought cocking a mental eyebrow.

Tony looked at Batman: the billionaire had already scanned his friend’s body and thankfully there was no indication of a serious injury.

“Cat, Batman” he addressed them coldly mimicking Fury’s way the first days of the Avengers.

Selina smirked and Batman didn’t react and turned to Diana.

“I wish we could be along your journey to the States, Princess.”

But she waved that off.

“I’m sure you two have something very important to do…” her beautiful almond shaped eyes met Batman’s lenses. “I hope we meet again soon.”
“Indeed we do have something important to do” Selina said when the hydroplane with Thor, Tony and Diana took off “put you to sleep.”

They went downstairs and changed their armors, showered and wore clothes; Bruce immediately slipped to his wheelchair which made Selina frown because usually he delayed that. She caressed her friend’s still drenched hair.

“You can speak to me, Bruce.”

He raised his eyes to her and grinned.

“It’s nothing, Sel…I’m just tired…”

Selina however knew that for Bruce to admit that ‘tired’ was just an understatement.

“Very well, sweetie. We’ll eat and then we can sleep for the rest of the journey: Lucius auto pilot will take us back.”

“There’s no need for auto-pilot” a cheery voice came behind them and they turned surprised to see Lucius.

The scientist widened his eyes and pouted.

“You really didn’t expect your loyal employee to leave his boss like this…”

Alfred opened the door for his young master and Selina to enter. He was beyond words delighted and relieved to see them back; the butler was anxious to begin taking care of his exhausted young Master. Because although Bruce was hiding that perfectly Alfred could see the hue of fatigue in his eyes.

“Master Bruce, Miss Kyle, I am so delighted to see you; did you have a nice time?” he wasn’t going to ask in the open about the Amazons.

Bruce grinned and his grin became a huge smile when he saw Hero running the corridor, his right leg slipping on the shining surface, to climb rapidly to his human's lap and chest licking his cheek.

“Very nice” he answered half laughing from Hero’s ministrations.

“He is exhausted” Selina said to Alfred pointedly.

The butler was ready to say something but the phone rang and he went to answer.

“Master Bruce, Ms. Kent would like to speak with you.”

Bruce frowned; the hollow feeling that haunted him through their journey back had rapidly changed into pinchers crushing his insides.

“How are you, dear?”

Bruce could tell that the woman tried to sound casual but there was a hue of deep sadness in her voice.
“Martha, are you alright?” he asked without delay wanting an answer to that torturing premonition.

“He left, Bruce; and he hasn’t returned.”
Chapter 80

“I’m sure they haven’t killed him; we’ll find him…whatever it takes. I promise you, Martha.”

With these words he had reassured Martha before they ended their dial; she sounded somewhat comforted…But he?

Bruce had driven his wheelchair immediately in the cave despite Alfred’s and Selina’s stares of disapproval that they didn’t outer. He had already touched Hero on the floor and thankfully, Selina’s phone rang conveniently before she followed him because at this point Bruce wanted to be alone; and Alfred – well, Alfred always wanted to be discreet and wisely was granting him the space he needed.

He brought his wheelchair in front of the erect, human size case with his second armor; the one he had with him in Themyscirra was still packed. He stared with pressed lips: he had messed things up because he wasn’t himself anymore – he might have been wearing the armor every now and then, patrolling at times but still he wasn’t what he should be.

Bruce inhaled deeply; suddenly, the accumulated fatigue from the last months and the journey to Themyscirra and back crushed painfully on the healthy part of his back. Healthy because Superman took him to his Fortress and saved his life…

He ran his hands through his hair and his eyes fell on his unfeeling legs. He rubbed with both his hands but there was no sense from there; even though he might have done movements and fighting with his legs thanks to the armor or his mind’s control still the feeling was absent even when he was hitting his opponents: after the conflict with the Amazons he noticed some nasty bruises which he hadn’t felt during the fight or afterwards. So even if he moved normally this came every time to remind him that he was still cripple.

And this impairment was the obstacle that all this time didn’t allow him to do what he should. He clenched his hands into fists and punched both his thighs hard in hopes of feeling something. Again growling in frustration and despair. To no avail…He repeated again and again gritting his teeth. Nothing.

He growled a second time and some bats thrashed in their sleep on the ceiling since it was still afternoon. Bruce bit his lip and let his heart beat fast from frustration.

He promised Martha that her son would be back to her…but could Bruce guarantee that? In this condition? He closed his eyes and huffed.

“To serve the greater good you have to make compromises every now and then, Bruce…” a sly, warm, filled with sarcastic fondness voice whispered in his mind.

He felt a frozen snake slithering the length of his healthy spine.

“You know deep inside that I’m right…” a lion like face became visible with a cocked eyebrow highlighting the man’s confidence. “You have great weapons at your disposal, Bruce – weapons that not only will save Superman but also can guarantee the victory over Darkseid; you will save humankind, Bruce. You know of which weapons I speak…” he chuckled. “The Dagger of Justice chose and answers only to you…the Black Butterfly is happy to reside on your chest and” he smirked wickedly “I cannot blame her…As for your strongest weapon…” now Bruce could see Ra’s’ eyes stabbing him like when he was just a weak boy worshipping him; Ra’s shook his head.
“Oh…you know that weapon too but you deny use it…stubbornly…stupidly: hiding behind naïve moral inhibitions to cover your own fear. Because I know you, Bruce; the only thing that you truly fear is of becoming a monster: you know your strength and what heights this strength can reach… and you are scared…terrified that you’d fail to control that power; you’d fail to control yourself…”

His cackle hurt Bruce’s mind. Ra’s’ eyes became dead serious now, bereft of their usual sarcasm.

“This is stupid, Bruce; and my student – my best student – isn’t stupid. You know that you can control the power…you know deep inside that by using the weapon, the knowledge you rendered useless, you will do only good: you’ll make a better world; you’ll eliminate the evil…You’ll save people’s lives; lives that if you continue to be stupid you’ll fail to save…His life…” he hissed and his eyes shone gleefully. “You know that if you selfishly deny using the power that was given to you, he’ll die…Can you stand this? Can you live with this?”

Bruce’s eyes were completely still focused in front of him, in the void but seeing inside him; Ra’s nodded smiling.

“You’ll insist on being so selfish to let your fears kill the one you love? The people you brag that you want to help? Because you know that it’d be your failure if this happens: if Darkseid prevails; if humans die; if Superman dies…No, Bruce” his eyes sank into Bruce’s with that seriousness that always made him shudder. “Use the Water of Immortality, child: heal your wounds, defeat your weakness…become what is your destiny!…Save him…”

Bruce inhaled deeply with determination and yanked his head; he gazed at his dead legs: he didn’t have the luxury to wait for the surgery. His special armor and his mind power weren’t enough anymore.

He guided quickly the wheelchair towards the niche the rock wall made at the right arch before the cavity opposite the computer bench; his arm moved on its own accord to slip inside the small hole that led to a safe-sized cavity where he held his treasures. He grabbed something and took it out. He hugged the object with both hands; he almost felt it vibrating though he knew that it was his imagination: his heart was beating fast blurring everything else in his head.

Bruce looked at the object: a small common vial one of those that were used for eye drops. On purpose, so that if anyone reached it to not realize how special its content was…

His breath quickened. He was scared of this liquid; Ra’s was right: his fear could condemn Clark and the world. He could use it once to regain his functionality and help Clark and in the battle.

Damn! He was sick of this wheelchair! Of being dependent on his armor’s applications.

He could fight the temptations the power of the elixir would raise; he could conquer them as he had done till now…

The Water of Immortality in its purest form lay peaceful in its unadorned vial waiting to be used; such power can’t stay unused.

He opened the vial and breathed calm…it was just a decision, a motion and he would be ready for everything.

But suddenly he saw again Ra’s; his face was his entire world as his master was pinning him to the wall with his fervent, passionate desire to get everything his student’s body had…His cruel laughter.

“You thought that you would be restored to your throne? I’ll keep you forever. Gotham and its people will be destroyed and then I’ll take you with me…”
He saw again the TV set showing Tony tied up in a chair covered in blood with the marks of torture on his face.

“Please, Master; it was my fault: punish me, not him…”

“But I will punish you, child: by killing him. This is the worst punishment for you! You won’t ever dare to try escape because you’d know that another one of your loved ones will follow Stark…”

He saw Ra’s walking towards the cushions where Bruce was putting on his training tunic on his just used body; his master’s smell had sank in his cells; his body still burnt where he had touched: yet Bruce dressed himself indifferent as if he was just waking up to go to school, having buried the pain, the disgust.

“You gave me once again pleasure, child, but this doesn’t prove your obedience; you know that after your sin, I’ll never trust you again.”

“Please, master, forgive me…”

“You know I can’t do that, child” he smiled benevolently but Bruce knew better “Go find Bane.”

“As you wish, master.’’

Al Ghul ruffled Bruce’s sweaty hair.

“I want to reward him for his loyalty to me. You will grant him your body…” Bruce’s eyes widened in horror, his entire body froze “and I’ll watch.”

“But, master, he hates me…”

The older man laughed, his eyes shining satisfied.

“Then, you’ll have to... persuade him” he fist Bruce’s locks fiercely “because your master wants to see you getting fucked by someone else…”

Bruce closed his eyes and shook his head to stop his mind from continuing…to not see Bane fucking him because Al Ghul wanted. Yet his mind excavated something else: he saw the yellow eyes of the demon.

He was tied spread eagled in the basement’s floor; he had been blindfolded but the demon freed his eyes. He remembered the pain of being torn apart, of dying in the demon’s paroxysm… He remembered when he grabbed the sword from the training room’s wall and slashed his jugular because Ra’s had given him to a demon…Ra’s had used then on him the Water again to heal his wound before he bled to death…

He remembered the child in his dreams; his master violated him again stealing from his body to create a child as he wanted it. Ra’s had used the Water many times to become immortal and establish his corrupt idea of justice to the world. His justice that included abusing a weak child, torturing him, threatening him, taking everything from him; sacrificing him to a demon for more power. Because the constant use of the Water made Ra’s believe that he had become a god, that he had every right to impose his way of things; the ‘immortality’ the Water had been granting to him made him arrogant.

Bruce pressed his lips: he remembered the countless times when after his training Ra’s took him to the bath tub and washed him with an awkward concoction saying to him that this would heal his wounds…Without his knowledge or will Bruce had already consumed the Water many times – not in its purest, strongest form but still…if the chronic use of the Water played a role into Ra’s’ corruption then… Bruce corked again the vial putting it back to the cavity. He closed his eyes: he wouldn’t become like Ra’s.

The grinding sound of the lift echoed in the cave and Bruce guided his chair away from his safe.

Selina came out of the lift.

“Sorry for being late but after hanging out with so many women I needed a great dose of Steve…”

A frown formed in her face seeing Bruce’s paleness.

“Are you alright, Bruce?”

Bruce gave her a tight-lips smile and moved his chair to the computer bench. Yet Selina wasn’t persuaded; she followed and sat at the stool beside him.

“No, you’re not… You should be resting surrendered in Alfred’s care: that trip was big, not to mention the adventures it contained.”

Bruce shook his head without looking.

“Enough of this resting thing! I lost too much time with this shit.”

Selina narrowed her eyes and grabbed his upper arms to make him look at her.

“Your health is what matters, Bruce.”

Bruce lolled his head on the side and closed his eyes.

“I’m healthy enough; there’s no need to lose more time. It’s my fault things came to this: I’m too slow and I’ve messed things up! I’ve got to act.”

“Messed up?!” she widened her wyes. “Thanks to you we are aware of the menace; we know what they are planning; his machine is under monitoring and the real Amazon Princess is on our side. Without you we would be in total ignorance and unprepared for Darkseid’s attack.”

“Clark is in their hands or…worse and this is my fault! I shouldn’t have let him leave: I surrendered him to Ivy’s intentions.”

Selina licked her lips.

“I understand your worry about him but this wasn’t your fault: he chose it!” she saw Bruce shaking his head in disbelief. “If you had tried to keep him then you know that he would have done something awful” Bruce lowered his gaze – he knew that and it was the reason he broke up with him: if Clark continued to be in a relationship that he didn’t want then the emotional conflict would have exploded. “He could have killed you” Bruce jerked on that but Selina continued before he could protest “he did injure you.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, he…”

Selina stabbed him with her eyes.

“You might have hidden it from everyone to not spoil Superman’s reputation but I am Selina: I know when you’re injured without seeing the wounds.”
Bruce didn’t argue; he just opted to change the subject.

“We need to move quickly” he pressed some keys on his keyboard and images of fire and explosions filled the screen.

The scenery definitely wasn’t from Earth albeit very dark and already deformed from the war that was taking place. A scene taken out from Hell and nightmares.

“What’s this?”

“Jor El sent me footage from Darkseid’s wars: Jor El was collecting information about Darkseid in Krypton believing that at some point he’d attack Krypton as well but the other lords didn’t want to risk a war against him.”

Selina tapped her bottom lip with her index finger.

“Tough job, huh?”

Bruce nodded but he didn’t say anything because the sound of the lift signaled someone’s coming. Alfred holding a silver tray waited for Tony to come out first and then followed. The billionaire dressed in jeans and an orange sweater strode fast to them.

“Finally, I can speak to you two free!”

He squatted and hugged Bruce.

“How are you, buddy?”

“Fine” he answered smiling.

Tony exchanged a glance with Selina and Alfred.

“You should be resting though…” he said.

“And eating” Alfred intervened placing the tray on the bench. “I brought you some sandwiches but you should eat a proper meal, Master Bruce.”

Bruce shook his head and then rubbed his forehead.

“Let’s forget about all these and focus on the important things.”

Tony who had stood crossed his arms over his chest and crooked his mouth.

“Superman is no longer at his mother’s house” Bruce said for Tony who wasn’t there when Martha called. “He left and didn’t return so probably he is taken” he added coldly.

Tony rolled his eyes.

“He couldn’t control his dick even for so little?”

Selina cocked an eyebrow.

“He reminds you of someone close to you?”

“Nah…” Tony replied ruffling his hair after some seconds of deep thinking.
Bruce was happy that his friends had still the mood for jokes but he didn’t have time.

“The thing is that now they have Superman it is very possible to unleash their attack soon.”

Tony nodded in full serious mode.

“Luthor seems to have made a lot of progress with that machine.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“Exactly. We need to gather our forces and plan our action.”

“It would have helped a lot if we had a token of what we are dealing with. I mean Darkseid’s troops.”

Bruce pressed a key and in the central screen images of Darkseid’s parademons came to the fore.

“They’re called Parademons – thankfully, Jor El has a lot of material for Darkseid. And we have also samples of his soldiers’ DNA” Bruce said. “When they attacked me, Ivy took good care to vanish any trace yet during their assault they had grabbed me so I had some of their DNA on me and also when she blew them up some of their remains were scattered to the clearing. I gathered them and gave them to Lucius.”

A wicked smile carved Tony’s features.

“Then those Parademons would not know what hit them…I can make our weapons able to kill them easily.”

Bruce rubbed his chin and it was clear that an idea had popped in his mind. Tony narrowed his eyes understanding.

“What are you thinking?”

“I’ll tell you but not now; at the time being you must inform the Avengers with every detail.”

Tony shrugged.

“At last…Would be a guest appearance of Batman this time?”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“I don’t want them associate Batman with Tony Stark and connect Bruce Wayne with Batman.”

Alfred stared at the screen.

“Shouldn’t the global governments be informed as well? I think that that kind of threat would need the planet’s united forces.”

The others looked at him and Bruce nodded.

“Certainly but first we must make sure that Darkseid won’t be able to read the minds of leaders because not only he will realize that we are aware and strike at us before we are ready but also he will control their minds into not helping us or even stab our backs in the battle.”

Tony raised an eyebrow.
“And that’s where Dr. Strange and his team enter the stage, huh?”

“Right” Bruce said.

Selina turned to Bruce.

“Do you want the Avengers to learn about the real Princess?”

“Yes but they must not move against Ivy yet” he looked at Tony who rubbed his chin and nodded.

“Where’s the Princess?”

Selina chuckled.

“Don’t tell me you managed to piss her so much that she ran for it?” she said to Tony who rolled his eyes.

Alfred cackled a bit but got a hold of himself fast.

“C’mon! I was my finest gentleman self…”

“Bloody Hell!” Alfred exclaimed and Tony cast him a glare.

“As soon as we landed in New York she asked me to take her to a bank which as a perfect gentleman I did. Can you imagine what she did?”

Selina tilted her head and raised an eyebrow.

“Don’t tell me she robbed the bank?”

Tony laughed and slapped his hand with Selina’s.

“Good one, girl! But no…” he mumbled a bit disappointed. “You remember that big rucksack she had with her?” and when they nodded “she had gold and gems which she sold in the bank in exchange with money” he cocked his eyebrows. “With the crisis they don’t ask a lot when it’s about gold and gems… She took the money and stashed them to the same rucksack.”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“I do imagine the reaction of those who would try to rob her…”

Tony nodded.

“Anyway, she thanked me for my contribution and took a cab and left me like a loser.”

“Like?” Selina chuckled and Tony glared at her. “And? You followed her?” she continued unfazed.

Tony shook his head.

“She managed to disappear.”

“Then it’s a good thing I have the means to contact her” Bruce said. “We made arrangements on our way to the yacht.”

“She gave you her number?” the billionaire asked exasperated.

“Mmm…Something like that: I gave her a beeper gadget and she took it.”
Tony pouted and nodded.

“So an Amazon Princess gave her phone number to the Batman and not Ironman: what’s wrong with girls these days? Maybe I should paint the armor black?”

Selina winked to him.

“Black is classic, honey…”

Tony looked at the orange sweater he wore disgruntled but then raised his head and spread his arms.

“Yeah…But orange is the new black, right?”

Selina shook her head amused.

“What about, Mr. Kent?” Alfred asked reading Bruce’s sad eyes.

Bruce inhaled.

“I’ll take care of that.”

Tony didn’t like that because he didn’t want his friend being anymore exposed to action that might injure him more…or worse. However he chose to not comment for the time being.

“Meanwhile we must be very careful” Bruce said “we must not let the boys or Ms. Turner suspect anything; we don’t want to spread panic.”

“Yeah, I’m…what? Six years younger? When I’ll be eighty and you are exactly as now, I’ll look like your grandfather.”

Clark almost choked before his smile lit his face and he tightened his two arms hold on Bruce’s back, kissing Bruce’s hand that softly touched his shoulder.

“So you’re telling me that you intend on us being together for sixty years?! That’s great! That’s…”

Yet Bruce sobered and his eyes darkened; some sweat drops appeared on his forehead.

“I didn’t mean it that way…” he turned his head on the side to avoid Clark’s elated eyes and his hands dropped from Superman’s shoulders. “It’s too difficult to say something like this…”

Clark narrowed his eyes: of course, it was too difficult for Bruce to make such long plans concerning love and he didn’t want to scare him. So he cupped his face and smoothly brought it to meet his.

“You’re right, so we go one day at a time, huh?”

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded.

“With what I said I didn’t mean that I wouldn’t want that…but…”

Clark nibbled Bruce’s lips.

“Sssss…I know; don’t worry about anything…” he kissed him again. “Now let’s have that shower because I don’t want you catching a cold standing here naked.”
Clark watched the water soaking Bruce’s locks and plastering them to his forehead and cheeks; streams were already running the younger man’s chest and Clark despite the fact he was also under the water felt getting hot. He took gently the bath cream and the sponge from Bruce’s hands, his Star eyeing him inquiringly but also playfully.

“Let me do that…” Clark breathed in a deep voice “please…”

Bruce just nodded and Clark tossed the sponge on the floor; he filled his palms with the cream that every time its smell dazzled him: the same cream Martha Wayne bathed her little Prince.

He applied the cream with gentle, round movements first at Bruce’s breasts, his eyes constantly on the younger man’s eyes sucking the slight changes that indicated his pleasure. He brought his body closer to Bruce’s and lowered his palms slowly, smoothly to spread the cream to Bruce’s abdomens.

Then he kneeled and gingerly spread the cream over Bruce’s pelvis willing himself not get carried away and touch his thirsty lips on the younger man’s groin; however he had to constantly lick his dry lips. He sighed only internally casting a longing last glance before proceeding with Bruce’s hips, thighs, knees, calves and feet always extremely slow for Clark’s standards wishing to drag those moments.

Upon finishing his work, he stood sticking his body to Bruce’s and locking his eyes with his; he could hear the younger man’s heartbeat speeding. He nibbled Bruce’s lower lip, his hands resuming their round rubbing movements on the human’s breasts teasing the pink nipples.

Bruce closed his eyes sighing and then stabbed Clark with his eyes.

“If you continue like this you won’t clean me…”

Clark closed his eyes and grabbed Bruce’s waist sucking desperately his collar bone.

“Maybe I like the taste of salt on your flesh…”

And then with a sudden but careful movement turned Bruce around to his back, swallowing his ear.

“I have to clean you up, huh?” he whispered letting his rasps wet Bruce’s ear.

He poured some more cream to Bruce’s back and smoothly with massaging movements applied it first at his shoulders descending the length of his arms and then his shoulder blades and lower…He could hear Bruce’s slightly uneven breath but when his hands reached the younger man’s glutians he could hear only his own rasps: applying cream to Bruce’s wet buttocks that had regained their enticing shape after the incident was…torture…and Clark was sweaty without the water spraying him being of any help since immediately the water turned into steam.

Bruce chuckled obviously feeling Clark’s torment even though he couldn’t sense his twitching groin over his buttocks; Superman bit softly the crook of his neck causing a moan which made the Man of Steel smile satisfied. Kneeling before Bruce’s back side was demanding and Clark’s running sweat was more than the shower’s water – not to mention how hot was in there… But Clark was responsible and would finish his job whatever the cost.

He had a triumphant smile on his face as he stood and turned Bruce to be again face to face. His Star was blushed too, his long eyelashes half covering his orbs longingly.

The younger man locked his lips with Clark’s claiming the super human soft warmth of his body. But the Man of Steel detached to Bruce’s almost hurt frown and Clark hastened to caress his lips with his thumb.
“Your hair have salt…Is how Alfred busted me.”

Bruce kissed Clark’s thumb and sniffed at Clark.

“It’s an amateur’s error…” he snuffed at Clark.

Clark tightened his grip on Bruce’s waist bringing him closer; his eyes shining fervently locked with Bruce’s.

“I had you naked in front of me…salt was connected with other things than covering my tracks…”

Bruce brushed with both hands Clark’s broad shoulder blades and pressed his lips.

“You’ve got me naked right now…What are you thinking?”

Clark felt that Bruce was trying to seduce him but…Rao! … Bruce didn’t need to seduce HIM. He was struggling every second to restrain himself and Bruce’s desire that he had to deny made this nightmarish. He gulped: Bruce’s health was above anything else.

“To wash your hair!”

Bruce’s eyelids almost covered his sparkling eyes and Clark’s heart clenched. Yet he knew that it was for the best. He poured shampoo on Bruce’s locks and began massaging smoothly staring all the time at his Star’s closed eyes and feeling the younger man shaking a bit.

“We’re ready” he huffed.

Bruce’s eyes opened with a dark shine.

“No, we’re not” he growled and shook his head “your turn…”

Clark raised his hands almost panicked, shaking his head in denial.

“Oh, no, no, no…” he had retreated.

Bruce was looking him with the stare of a hunting wildcat and that stare was…just…irresistible. Clark’s eyes widened seeing Bruce’s hands approaching him.

“Please, Bruce…If…if your hands touch me I won’t be able to hold back…It’d be too much…”

Bruce smirked, his stare always predatory, the wet locks stuck on his temples framing his beautiful eyes.

“And I’ll shatter…”

Clark licked his lips and ran his hand through his soaked hair which was a mistake because Bruce used the handles of the special railing to push himself on Clark’s chest. The surprise and his overall condition were such that Clark lost his balance and terrorized realized that he was falling. Terrorized not for himself – porcelain couldn’t hurt him – but Bruce was falling too. He grabbed the younger man’s upper arms to make sure that he’d have Clark’s body as a cushion.

The landing wasn’t too bad and Clark was happy because the oval shaped tube was spacious enough to contain him and the porcelain hadn’t cracked. He turned to look at Bruce, his body clang to Clark’s chest.

“What do you think you’re doing?!” he cried exasperated. “Are you OK?”
And then he noticed two things: Bruce’s amused, smug look and that the water had stopped. Now Clark was pissed! He did it on purpose!

“You tripped me on purpose to fall!”

Bruce rolled his eyes and caressed the wet hair in Superman’s chest causing goose bumps to Clark’s spine more so when he focused on the feeling of Bruce’s pelvis on his groin.

“Of course” he answered nonchalant “I think you forget that I’m Batman.”

Clark stretched his neck and sighed.

“I’m under a human so this human can only be Batman but…”

“No more buts” he retorted sharply and Clark felt with dread the thing he was most afraid of: Bruce’s body slithering on his, driving each of his cells crazy; his bodily perfume enhanced by the fresh aroma of shampoo and cream mesmerizing Clark’s brain into ordering full surrender.

And what was that? Bruce’s fingertips touching feathery and moving on his ribs slowly finding his abdomens and brushing skillfully each layer which pushed his hips to move upwards; motion that became a violent writhing when Bruce’s hot, velvet lips touched his navel and then nibbled and sucked his rippled flesh. He gasped and raised his torso though his head was heavy with flooding stimulation.

“Wh…what you doing?!” he gasped almost panicked as much as his lungs.

“You’re afraid that you will shatter my paralyzed lower body…however my upper body functions perfectly…” he said slyly and Clark was reminded of Selina: those two could easily have been real siblings, he thought fleetingly.

“I doubt it!” he snapped. “Especially your brain!”

Bruce narrowed his eyes and – damn! - that look was a turn on…

“You’ve been suppressing your needs too long…and mine…” for the first time Bruce’s sharp cheekbones were colored pink.

“You don’t have to do this…” he almost pleaded. “I know how horrid this was…”

Bruce’s eyes flashed angrily as he realized what Clark wanted to say: his past.

“Exactly: I don’t have to do it – I want to do it. So: shut up…” he pressed his palms on Clark’s oversensitive breasts and pushed him down brushing his nipples that traitorously had erected; the most powerful being on Earth unable to stay up. “Let control to me!”

Immediately his eyes protruded feeling feathery fingers trailing slowly and gently his pelvis’ V downwards to open slightly his thighs. Bruce’s fingers caressed the soft flesh at his inner thighs ascending to his hipbones sending electric currents to his spine.

A surprised moan burst out of Clark’s mouth before he could think about it and then his torso arched: his own body rebelled against him… He groaned and his heart gave a thud… Oh, my God! The softest sensation he ever had: lips made of velvet, hot lips were planting small kisses following the V of his pelvis making his groin twitch in hungry anticipation as the tender kisses approached his length only to continue with his pelvis’ other side.
“B…Bruce…” Clark really didn’t know what he wanted to say and those lips that now kissed sucking tenderly his flesh cast his mind in a fog of pleasure and his length in derangement throbbing more madly every time Bruce let a puff of hot air from his lungs caress Clark’s hot flesh, denying the contact.

His loud whine wasn’t flattering for the Man of Steel but Bruce’s magic fingers – as if his lips working his pelvis weren’t enough – brushed not very softly, not very hard his testicles and then nibbling causing Clark’s eyes roll inwards and his fists clench. He was already huffing and puffing without Bruce having touched his impatient length; his slightly open legs trembled uncontrollably – causing vibrations to the tub - and he was afraid of hitting the younger man.

“Oh…Bruce…Please…” his voice was too husky, too weak and he meant to ask Bruce to stop so to not get hurt by his unchecked boiling body. But those rosy, soft lips began trailing with pecks his throbbing length and new waves of hot sweat ran his face, body and especially the inner of his thighs. “Ppplease, Star, MORE!”

Clark huffed and puffed supported in his forearms, his torso semi raised: how much more Bruce was going to torture his hurting member by just making small sucks and strolls through his throbbing length; he felt the big vein there ready to explode when Bruce’s slightly rough tongue licked the entire length.

“Star…you’re killing me…” he whimpered; the fact that Bruce’s breaths were calm as they burned his hot flesh pissed him.

Clark felt a smile on the soft flesh that tortured him and then his already hard member was welcomed in Bruce’s hot mouth and the Man of Steel just slumped on the hot porcelain, surrendering to his tormentor. His head lolled backwards and his eyes were closed, he sighed satisfied.

But then he jerked upwards, his back making an arch as Bruce’s lips were massaging in a steady rhythm strongly and then softly his sensitive member, the beating vein there bombed like his heart and lungs. Bruce’s tongue took action only rarely just to enhance the effect of his lips’ massaging moves; slowly upwards causing new streaks of sweat in every pore of Clark’s body – his face was stressed and his neck arched with its veins bulged giving loud rasps and sobs that became cries when Bruce’s nails brushed a bit rough his swollen testicles. Fire was breaking his bones...

Clark’s hips were jerking upwards, thrusting in his mouth. Clark couldn’t stop his hands from cupping Bruce’s hair but thankfully he managed to restrain them from dragging Bruce’s mouth.

Bruce continued pumping with his lips the flaming flesh that boosted from the powerful hips thrust faster and more frantically almost desperate. His experience told him that soon his lover would reach his climax and braced himself. But then Clark’s gentle hands caressed his locks and cupped his face drawing him upwards to nestle in his safe chest just before Clark’s torso arched more and the Man of Steel cried his explosion.

Clark’s chest was heaving following his frantic respiration and heartbeat and he cuddled the younger man. Bruce clung to him and kissed lightly Superman’s broad chest, letting his cheek touch the bulged breast.

The first thing Clark saw as soon as he managed to persuade his eyes to connect with the world leaving their pleasant mist was Bruce’s soaked messy locks. He kissed the top of his head and tightened his one arm hold but Bruce didn’t lift his eyes. Clark caressed Bruce’s sweaty, cold cheek tenderly and sparkling eyes locked with his.
A faint smile was carved over Clark’s lips, his joy written in his closed eyelids which then began trembling.

“Her hair give out a shine that it’s not normal – looks artificial like in dyed hair” Bruce’s serious voice came to his ears from a tunnel.

And then he saw himself snorting and rolling his eyes. Really, Bruce?

“Because you know everything about female hair, huh? Why on earth a goddess would dye her hair?”

Bruce nodded, licking his lip.

“Exactly! That’s what raised my suspicions! Unless, she isn’t who she says and wants to impersonate the legendary Amazon Princess.”

But he wasn’t convinced.

“If her hair was dyed I’d have detected that, Bruce; and I didn’t.”

“Maybe you can’t…I mean when she is around you’re changed…you admitted that yourself. And those four days she wasn’t around you, you were perfect but as soon as she appeared at the Tower…” he huffed. “You changed.”

“Perfect means glued to you?” Clark spat and even he realized that this was a stab to Bruce’s heart.

The younger man lowered a bit his eyes.

“No…It was you that considered that kind of your behavior abnormal…Also, her eyes are odd…”

“I repeat that if her eyes were not real I’d have found out first: I’m the one with the 100 different kinds of vision.”

Clark cupped Bruce’s face with both hands and placed him gently on his back; he nuzzled his cheek.

“You need some sleep to clear your head from this night’s shit and Stark’s poison because I’m sure that your brilliant logic mind can’t believe such nonsense” Bruce narrowed his eyes angry. “You were a hero tonight, Bruce; don’t tarnish it now.”

“If someone needs to clear his head, this is you, Clark!” Clark had retreated a bit but still kept his arms on both sides of Bruce’s torso as if trying to trap him – a deep frown formed in his brow from the human’s reaction. “This is why I asked you to stay away from her! You too believe that you’re not yourself lately” he huffed slowing down. “Everything started when she appeared.”

“But I’m alright – Lucius confirmed it. It was just a difficult period, nothing more” Bruce was staring him in the eyes. “If you calm down and don’t let others influence you, things will be normal again.”

“You’re the one who gets influenced – that woman has a bad effect on you and you need to stay away from her till we figure out what’s going on. Jor El told you that he needed time and daily tests to be sure. But until then I think it is safer if you stop interacting with her.”

“Safer for whom? Your beaten up sense of security? The fact you’re fixed in that chair has made you insecure” he saw Bruce’s eyes widen more shocked than angry. “If your self-esteem wasn’t so battered you wouldn’t see Diana as a threat.”
The shine of Bruce’s eyes sent shivers to Clark’s back.

“Safer for you…” Bruce didn’t want to retort to what Clark said about him because he felt so dried from his words that it seemed totally unworthy of even replying. “I don’t feel threatened by her” for the first time his eyes moved softened. “I feel that you’re the threatened here…”

“If you want to persuade me to stay away from my friend you must give me a solid reason and not mumbo-jumbo bullshit: you’re just embarrassing yourself, Bruce – you’re a detective and yet you make horrible points out of your grudge for Diana because we danced a couple of songs. What?” Clark asked narrowing his eyes puzzled from Bruce’s blank eyes.

“Nothing…” Bruce pressed his lips .

Clark nodded taking Bruce’s silence as a sign of embarrassment for his attitude.

“You realize that you’re pushing me away?” Bruce said to him with a steady voice.

Bruce was right, Clark thought.

The bangs from the thunders were creepy.

“Your smell was strong under the bridge, lingering there: a smell indicating great sexual satisfaction…” his voice was creepier than the thunders but Bruce was calm.

“I didn’t even see the rainbow bridge you mention…and…Clark, get a grip: you accuse me for something that you say that has happened two days ago but you imagined it today! That’s crazy!”

Superman growled frustrated and cupped Bruce’s face panting angrily into his eyes.

“Crazier than you accusing Diana of being an impostor just because you think her hair is dyed? Crazier than you claiming that she was one of Falcone’s whores based on a nightmare – if that was a nightmare and not another fairytale you made up to frame her!” the wind howled wilder than before and made the downpour whip the window.

Bruce supported himself to his elbows and rose a bit before Clark forced him back down pressing his weight on the human’s torso.

“I didn’t lie! Mr. Petrou…”

But Clark had had enough and didn’t let him continue.

“You slander her – a noble, brave warrior – of being a whore while you are the whore!” the thunder’s bang was scary yet Clark’s words hurt more Bruce’s ears.

Superman screamed as the pain of what he was re-experiencing intensified the excruciating pain from every cell in his body that felt as if burnt one-by-one. He opened his eyes hoping against hope that he’d see Bruce’s sad eyes again and apologize to him – admit that he was right: this woman was an impostor and she had put him under mind control - he loved only him; make his Star shine again with happiness.

But instead of those mesmerizing eyes vibrating red light blinded him and made every inch of his bones feel like shuttering and melting. That bright red light was his entire world inside that rectangular transparent column they had put him in; Superman knew that this light was draining him from his powers as if the Kryptonite chains that bound his wrists and ankles weren’t enough. But this red light was even worse: burning him like a sun exactly like the yellow sun of the Earth was doing but instead of filling him with life, energy and joy, this sun was destroying him slowly and painfully. Every moment he felt millions tiny rods piercing every minuscule part of his body…

His face felt heavy with sweat as his entire body that suffered under his suit that it didn’t defer from a costume made from melt, hot iron. His locks had stuck everywhere and contributed an awful itch.

His breath was pressed with the air being always short – or that was his impression. His chest felt crushed under an invisible huge weight that caused his heart beat faster than ever exhausting him more…

And to add to all this nausea was really torturing making his head hurt as if it was going to blow.

He knew he had to get out of there in order not only to save himself but also the world… and Bruce: he was scared that Darkseid would capture Bruce and torture him to cause pain to Superman.

“I wouldn’t have a problem making Superman’s bitch squeal and beg as I rip his asshole…”

He frowned as his fogged mind brought back this rough voice from a bar in Metropolis; Superman remembered that it was one of Intergang’s members Clark Kent had followed there.

His companion had cackled.

“He is a cripple – won’t feel anything below the waist!”

“But he’ll feel everything above the neck!” Stitches winked wickedly and laughed which his friend mimicked. “Maybe the boss plans to do that in the end, after he…”

“Ssssss!” Alistair hushed him hastily.

“It’d be the perfect punishment for Supes… watching his slut gangbanged to the death by his partying enemies” his sly eyes found again Bruce on the screen and Clark’s heartbeat became so strong that he thought that everyone in the room heard.

Alistair was thoughtful.

“It’s not so easy: that whelp has more protection than S guy himself. Iron man is his best buddy and he drags along the entire Avengers’ circus. And Gotham has Batman guarding her property.”

“Boss seems confident” he shook his head “I bet he doesn’t chicken to attack that bitch and after his scheme unfolds nothing would save this bitch…”

Clark’s heart screamed from agony and beat even faster: it was clear that Darkseid had this in his plans and that just couldn’t happen: Bruce had suffered too much in his life to be tortured like this because Superman loved him…He coughed…Loved him…he pressed his lips: it was love what he did to Bruce? He growled…He knew that he had made Bruce feel pain and now he couldn’t help him; he couldn’t run and inform them for the danger.

He inhaled trying to find the air his lungs needed but it wasn’t enough and his lungs cried; his head hurt as if Thor’s hammer had crushed there. Clark closed his eyes attempting to smooth the nausea that hit his body like a tsunami, to control some of the pain…

Perhaps Bruce knew already about the threat because he had suspected that Diana was an impostor. And Bruce never ignored his hunches…unless he was so disappointed from him that he stopped bothering with the issue. No, no…please, Bruce must have continued searching; he must have found out everything…
Bruce should not be captured by Darkseid and his minions…Clark couldn’t breathe properly; his terror and panic making his weakness worse…

He heard the heavy footsteps only when they were to him: his sensitive hearing wasn’t working and his sight was worse than the human sight – reasonable since he was chained with Kryptonite under that strange red light. Clark was surprised from the sudden footsteps because his column – cell was situated in a wide, empty corridor with no guards near or any other presence.

He tiredly raised just his eyes because he couldn’t move his head at all. The horrible bluish giant was towering him although Superman was suspended inside the column above the floor.

Clark made his weak stare determined, angry about the smug grin plastered in Darskeid’s square face and the contempt in his red eyes.

“Pathetic Kryptonian! Here, crying for your fate and the end that awaits your friends…”

“Is everything alright?” Dick asked shyly popping his head from the door looking at Bruce who was in front of the fireplace in the leaving room of the second floor.

Bruce smiled and Hero jumped from his lap to run to Dick.

“Of course.”

Jason moved inside the room first.

“Course everythin’ ‘s alright, dummy…He is a tough nut!”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“Yeah…I suppose” he chuckled and moved the chair towards the sofa where the boys settled.
“Thank you for staying here a bit more, Dick” he said and looked at Jason “and you, Jason, that didn’t forget us.”

Jason shrugged.

“Ya’re unforgettable, man” he said and lowered his tone “a giant bat isn’t somethin’ common, right?” he winked and Bruce grinned.

“You don’t have to thank me or my granny, Bruce, for anything. I wanted to stay more…I lost so many time being mean to you – I just want to…”

Bruce pressed his lips and shook his head.

“I want you to forget all about this, okay?”

Jason crooked his mouth.

“He was a total dick an’ now he feels guilty; he’d learn to listen to Jay next time…”

“Sure” Dick said. “Any news on your surgery?” he asked Bruce who licked his lips. “I bet you can’t wait to walk again…you deserve to walk again.”

Bruce smiled and petted Hero’s belly the kitten being curled on the blue sofa.
“Actually that will have to wait.”

“Why?” Jason asked.

“Is there some worsening?” Dick asked with his breath halted.

“No, I just have some things to take care first.”

“Batman always is busy” Jason whispered.

Dick pressed his lips.

“You’re always thinking the others more than yourself…you should take care of yourself, Bruce.”

Bruce cast a fleeting glance at the horizon from the rectangular window of the opposite wall.

“I am but some things come first because they are more urgent.”

Jason scratched his head with a mischievous glint in his eyes.

“Mmm…’bout that” he pursed his lips and exchanged a conspiratory glance with Dick “we were thinkin’…”

Bruce frowned suspicious and both boys licked their lips.

“…that we could help…I mean with Batman’s job…not that ya need any help but when ya’re too busy we coulda…”

Bruce huffed and his face became strict.

“No way!”

Dick gulped.

“We won’t be a pain in the ass!”

Bruce shook his head: that was the last thing he needed.

“You’re too young to be in this shit!”

Jason crooked his mouth.

“I know much ‘bout this shit, man…”

But Bruce cast him a glare that was worse than Batman’s lenses and Jason swallowed hard.

“Don’t remind me that!” he snapped widening his eyes. “I know what you’re doing out in the Narrows after midnight!”

“Ooops…” Jason said and Dick elbowed him mouthing ‘I told you so’.

“You can’t do Batman’s job and emptying stores…” Bruce stabbed him with his eyes.

Jason took a matter-of-fact serious expression.

“It’s the financial depression that leads youngsters to the crime” he recited some bullshit he had heard on TV and Dick chuckled. “If Bat guy hires me I’ll give up my previous job.”
Bruce massaged his forehead that throbbed from a mild migraine.

“You will give up that because you deserve better…” Jason smiled believing that he meant being Batman’s assistant “but neither you nor Dick will meddle with these things.”

Dick closed his eyes.

“But we have done it already sometimes…”

“And we saw where that led…” he meant the time when Batman intervened to save them.

Jason raised his eyebrows.

“Even Supes has his bad days…Ouch!” Dick kicked his ankle to stop him.

Bruce froze hearing about Superman.

“You can train us” Dick intervened. “I know that martial arts are better to be taught from a young age.”

Bruce remembered his own training.

“Forget it” he said calmly. “Focus on your school and you, Dick, have gymnastics. You are an aspiring athlete, you have a brilliant career before you” he turned his wheelchair towards the door.

“You, boys, deserve a better life” he looked at them and both boys suddenly remembered that he was fixed on a wheelchair for months; probably, he’d have died that night if Superman hadn’t made it on time.

Bruce as if he had read the boys’ thoughts nodded and left the room, Dick and Jason realizing that Bruce would never bring them in something that could claim their life.

It was true but Superman thought that he wasn’t going to give the freak the satisfaction.

“You won’t achieve anything! You will be defeated!” he spat in his face through the transparent wall before him.

Darkseid cackled and cocked one of his hairless eyebrows.

“You invest much to your lame allies to cover your insufficiency…But you are fooling yourself…”

The sky was a dirty gray without sun or clouds…This was Washington and wasn’t...He could see the White House but its dome was shuttered leaving the pillars supporting half of the dome; flames had engulfed the dirty building.

The skyscrapers everywhere in the big city were in ruins, smoke and dust hovering over them; fires burnt everywhere and explosions every now and then cracked the desperate screams of people; screams indicating excruciating pain as the smell of burning flesh and blood proved.

The streets were flooded…but what ran the streets wasn’t water; was blood, dark red blood mixed with body members or entire corpses…

Army aircrafts were burning on the streets baring the mars of crushing…

Green creatures with arms and wings beginning from their shoulder blades flew over the city everywhere destroying with their guns everything that still was standing; at some spots new screams erupted and between clouds of dust and smoke Clark could see Darkseid’s creatures jumping on humans digging their thousand razor sharp teeth tearing them apart.

A kid no more than 5 was crying as fire had engulfed him and nobody was helping – around him were only bodies…Bodies of civilians and police officers or soldiers who have tried to help: deformed, burnt bodies and faces distorted in absolute pain and horror as their eyes were ripped from their sockets.

Clark clenched his bound fists: where was all the heroes?

He saw Ironman barely hovering over the Hell; his red and gold armor was emitting smoke; it carried marks of burning; sooty; from the way he was hovering it was obvious that he had no strength left from the struggle. Yet suddenly he sped determined.

Clark saw Darkseid sending beams with his eyes to a skyscraper turning it with a horrible explosion into stones and metal; the gloating giant saw Ironman approaching and sniggered deflecting with his arms lazily every missile and laser beam Ironman launched against him. And then as the hero reached him and the canons in her armor were heard loading Darkseid stretched his enormous arm and grabbed him from the neck bringing him to face him.

The New God blew on Ironman’s face and his face plate evaporated leaving Tony Stark’s face exposed; the billionaire was exhausted, his eyes hollow without any trace of his old playfulness; his expression was determined. He spat on Darkseid’s face and the giant clenched more the human’s neck choking him slowly making the human’s eyes pop out.

Clark’s chest was clenched: he never liked Stark but he didn’t want him to die.

“Tony!” Captain America’s voice cracked the white noise of screams and explosions.

Steve was fighting in the midst of at least fifty green creatures; his suit was torn and burnt; his mask ruined revealing the wounds on his face. Yet seeing his friend dying he clenched his teeth and launched his shield against the New God.

But Darkseid laughed; with a creepy crack he snapped Stark’s neck with one hand and caught the shield with the other. He threw Ironman’s lifeless body in a pile of broken human bodies and squeezed Steve’s shield staring at him.

Steve growled and jumped on a pile of crushed cars to launch himself against the New God kicking some flying aliens in his way. But as he was ready to hit the giant Darkseid moved his arm and slapped him away like a fly crushing him to a standing building.

“No!” Thor roared and clenching his jaw launched his hammer to Darkseid’s head but the New God grinned and looked at the thunder the hammer looked like in its momentus.

Thor’s eyes widened seeing his hammer exploding in chunks as white beams met it; he moved his hands and thunders hit Darkseid’s body. The Asgardian charged at him.

But as the blond god was on him Darkseid’s body sucked the energy of the thunders his bulky form increasing in size and radiating blue sparks; with a rapid movement the bluish giant grabbed Thor’s face with one hand and launched beams from his eyes blowing the god’s head.

Clark’s eyes widened and despair crushed his suffering existence; he heard Darkseid’s roaring laughter in his head: the New God could penetrate his mind and show him what he wanted. Darkseid wanted to break his spirit; make him desperate, hopeless.
No way!

All these weren’t true, Superman filled his mind with this thought; it was just Darkseid’s hopes, his wishes…but in vain. Darkseid couldn’t win! The bluish freak was fooling himself believing that he’d manage to defeat so easily all these great heroes. However Clark stopped his brain from thinking that Bruce was probably privy to Darkseid’s plans and preparing his defeat.

Darkseid grunted frustrated because his captive didn’t sink in this hell; Superman hadn’t believed him and resisted.

“You won’t be able to touch them!” Superman sniggered. “You just hope and wish and dream but deep inside you know that you will be defeated! You can’t make me despair – as much as you want – I know humans, I know the heroes; you can’t kill my faith!”

Darkseid pressed his lips and a gleeful grin was plastered over his face.

“Is that so?” he asked sarcastic raising his eyebrows.

All of a sudden, it was all dark with only one form discernible. Clark squinted: it was a chair and his heart began beating fast because he knew… He knew that perfume. The chair came nearer and then the one who sat on turned slowly his head. Bruce was so beautiful even in the darkness…Bruce was a star himself…so beautiful that Clark hurt.

“He is too beautiful” Darkseid’s rough, bass voice said. “Even for the great Darkseid!”

Superman’s eyes stabbed his captor.

“Leave Bruce out of this!”

Darkseid smirked and tilted his head.

“Too late for that…”

_Superman was inside his column-cell, bound spread eagled in his Kryptonite chains, erect, washed from that weakening red light. But his cell wasn’t in a corridor, a building._

_He didn’t have any mood to move his heavy head or open his eyes: the pain was intolerable and even the small intakes of air that sustained his life deteriorated it._

_However, Superman knew that he was somewhere outside near the sea because he could hear the waves hitting the shore. What stroke him was that there wasn’t the characteristic salty smell of sea or the sound of seagulls or the pleasant breeze…Only the stench of sulfur and the hair rising howls of Darkseid’s creatures._

_But he didn’t care to open his eyes and see…_

_Ruckus…Footsteps of many people and loud curses and jeers…and under the noise, a scared human heart. Superman opened his eyes._

_It was a vast area that once must have been an idyllic beach. But now it was cast under a pitch black sky that was disrupted by dark purple shreds and fires suffocating the last oxygen intensifying the hotness of the atmosphere and the smell of sulfur. There was no sun, no stars…The sea was dark red and smelled of stall blood._

_His cell was positioned in the edge of the clearing with his back to a granite, dark green steep cliff_ exactly the same with the opposing cliff that hugged the clearing.

But what mattered was in front of him: a battered human bearing the marks of blows on his face was dragged by thugs Superman knew in front of Darkseid’s dark blue granite throne that suddenly emerged before the line of the blood sea.

“No…” he mumbled.

Screams…screams that made his blood stop flowing.

Bruce was suspended in the air from his wrists that were bound together with something that was…flames… his torso was naked and the bottom half of his body was still dressed in blood stained rugs that must have been expensive trousers. His arms were stretched to their limits like his entire torso that manifested its beauty. His head was bent over his chest and Superman could hear his tired breath being interrupted by sobs and moans of pain.

But then a creepy sound made Bruce jerk his head backwards howling with all his might…his body convulsed as if hit by electricity. Superman’s entire existence bled with this heart wrenching scream; an awful woman who in human years would have been at her 50s hovered behind Bruce. She had curly gray hair that danced around her head and she was dressed in blue attire.

She was cracking up in hysterics as the thing she was holding crushed on Bruce’s back again making the human scream and cry; his torso convulsed more intense from the pain as blood and pecks of flesh flew around from his back. But there was also the smell of burning flesh because the thing that woman used was made of fire and thick metal…

No, it was another creation of Darkseid to break his spirit. Bruce would never…

“What? Haven’t you heard him scream like this?” Darkseid jeered. “Is that why you doubt that this pest screams like this? You haven’t seen the video?”

The video…

Falcone and Chill in a room…Falcone’s office. A skinny boy no more than eleven dressed in rugs was kneeled before the mobster; his lips were swollen and bled…

Falcone grabbed the boy from the upper arm and shoved it to his desk; the boy pleaded with him but the mobster lowered the boy’s pants and underwear. The boy screamed as the older man pushed his erection inside him with a abrupt motion that made the skinny body tremble.

And then the boy was sprawled on the table, tied spread eagled; he was crying because he knew what was going to happen. He screamed; he screamed desperately as Chill penetrated him with a huge dildo defeating the resistance from the narrow opening, tearing the flesh. The boy screamed more and his screams shuttered Clark’s chest because he knew that Chill continued pushing the object inside the boy’s tender insides…

“Did you see the video?” he heard Lois asking him.

“No; I’m happy, Lois and I don’t want anything to ruin that for me.”

Clark bit his lip hard; his eyes watering from the boy’s torture and from shame for his indifference.

“The human is made to be tortured…” Darkseid hissed.

“No…” Superman shook his head though that hurt. “You won’t get him – EVER!”
The New God chuckled.

Bruce was on the black sand, untied but it was obvious that his legs were useless; his back was a huge wound that bled to the floor; patches of ripped flesh hanged revealing the white of bones; deep burnings marred the few patches of flesh that had stayed on the body.

His head was touching the hot sand because he didn’t have the strength to hold it upright; Clark could hear his rugged breath, his heart beating tired, his sobs.

Suddenly, steps echoed through the space and Bruce’s body tensed. His head jerked upwards and Clark saw his beautiful eyes being swollen, watering; his face was pale shining from sweat; his drenched locks were framing his features making him even more gorgeous.

But the sapphire seas of his eyes were desperate, filled with panic as the steps materialized in people that surrounded him like hungry wolves. Superman recognized among the crowd of thugs those he had heard in that bar.

No…

Bruce’s scared eyes found Darkseid who was sitting to his throne watching with a satisfied smirk.

“Please…” Bruce begged as he did in the video and Clark knew that this time it was real not Darkseid’s imagination.

“You won’t harm Bruce” Superman spat at Darseid managing to escape from the images he had planted in his mind. “Bagdana wants Bruce as his reward – you won’t damage you ally’s prize…” you can’t torture him… he almost pleaded in the depths of his existence.

But his captor grinned smugly.

“The demon is just another servant and this human is not his; is mine to handle as I wish” Superman’s chest clenched more painfully than anything the Kryptonite could have done to him. “I’ll grant my servant the human when I consider it proper, that is to say: after I’m satisfied enough with his suffering and your humiliation…”

“No!”

Darkseid from his throne made a small nod and one of the thugs grabbed both of Bruce’s arms stretching them behind his back and raising him up. Superman from his cell could see Bruce’s terror in his eyes.

The thug held Bruce and another came before him smirking.

“Superman’s whore… Let’s see what he found in you…”

He began bitch slapping Bruce to the face till his head stayed on his shoulder; he stepped aside for the next who punched him in the guts till blood spurted from his mouth.

At least twenty thugs beat him and when they were bored they threw him to a rock in the middle of the beach to storm at him tearing his already rugged pants. Bruce although half conscious screamed from the roughness of their ministrations but more from the realization of what was to follow.

Superman saw Bruce’s beautiful buttocks naked.

“I knew his ass must be gorgeous” one jeered.
“Let’s see his asshole now!”

“Please, no; I didn’t know who you were…” Bruce’s eyes focused on Darkseid who was grinning, pleading with him and now Clark couldn’t remind himself that this was a lie.

Darkseid’s eyebrows rose.

“That doesn’t change your behavior, does it?” Bruce gulped and Darkseid smirked. “Feast on him!” he growled to his servants.

“No!” Superman cried from his cell as the thug who had grabbed Bruce first, clenched his thighs and spread him.

He lowered his zip and thrust in Bruce at once causing a scream that was silenced when another thug pushed his length inside Bruce’s mouth.

Superman’s face was distorted in pain and hatred watching weak as the two scum thrush hard and fast simultaneously at Bruce’s anus and mouth making the human convulse like a dying fish.

The minutes of torture seemed like hours before the thugs finished one after the other. More than twenty bastards took their turn on the weak human...

But then they threw Bruce on the sand and made him fall to all four laughing at his bleeding anus and mouth before starting all over. Bruce made to resist but the one behind him clenched his hair and yanked his head backwards giving space for two others to punch him relentlessly to his belly and face.

Bruce was half unconscious when the thug let him fall on the ground; they forced him on his knees and hands again; the thug behind him opened his thighs wide and penetrated him so cruelly that Bruce screamed; another one grabbed his hair and raised his head to push his erection inside his mouth.

Superman wished he had died…Seeing all these thugs two at a time violating Bruce so cruelly, so violently that the bleeding now had begun like downpour. His thighs were filled from streaks of blood that ended to the black sand. And blood was spurting from his mouth since those thrusting in his mouth were vicious.

It was hours of these…and then Bruce’s eyes closed and Clark knew that it was over…Bruce’s heart had stopped.

“You see” Darkseid said “I can give the pest to my servant whenever I want; it doesn’t matter if he dies because for Darkseid death is nothing.”

Darkseid stepped down from his throne and walked arrogantly to the lifeless body of the human. He looked with contempt at Superman and with his foot raised a bit Bruce’s chin; he exhaled to the human’s face and Bruce’s eyelids trembled before opening; but there was no happiness for being alive only dread.

Darkseid’s eyes stabbed the human under his feet.

“You’ll have to beg for this present to be awarded to you, pest…” He turned to the smirking thugs. “The party is not over.”

“No…” Bruce whispered as Darkseid walked out of the way for their servants to grab again his captive. “Please, no!”
Darkseid grinned to Bruce’s increasing panic as he was pushed on the rock spread beyond his limits to take inside him what the cackling thugs were holding.

“You’re used to that, huh, bitch? The bigger the better, right?” it was a pole – like rod pushing Bruce’s bleeding opening tearing it more, gashing his flesh.

But the human’s eyes had locked with Superman’s since the thugs dragging had brought him in front of the hero’s cell.

“If you want that to end” Darkseid hissed to Bruce “your lover must beg me.”

Superman closed his eyes: he didn’t care for humiliating himself if that would save Bruce.

“I beg you” Superman said “spare him from that…Please…Have mercy…”

Darkseid yanked his head backwards and cackled.

“As you wish, Kryptonian…” with a wave of his hands the thugs were thrown to the granite cliffs surrounding the beach.

For some minutes only Bruce’s rugged breath was heard hued by choked sobs; his body had spasms. Darkseid walked to him and grabbed him from the back of his neck raising him to the air so their faces were close.

Superman remembered how Darkseid had blown Thor’s head and his heart stopped; no, he couldn’t kill Bruce…

“But you begged for his suffering to end.”

Darkseid blew and Bruce cried but it wasn’t one final cry before death; Bruce screamed more and Superman could see strange symbols being engraved over Bruce’s forehead with melt, hot gold – the smell of burning flesh was torturing and the sound of the skin churning worsened it; something like a word was carved in the human flesh but Superman didn’t know what it was; he cared for the blood that slithered from the symbols to Bruce’s distorted in pain features.

“Look at me” Darkseid hissed to Bruce’s closed eyes and he obeyed.

Superman was sure that the New God was going to unleash another torment to Bruce.

Suddenly the New God captured Bruce’s lips and sucked passionately as if drinking something he was thirsty for.

“Now you belong to Darkseid…I’ll unravel your mystery…”

“No!” Superman yelled and fainted with his fists clenched desperately in his unbreakable green bindings.

Bruce thrashed on his bed; even in his sleep, in the deep darkness of the master bedroom he knew what that ominous thing that haunted him was. But what made him writhe on his mattress was worse: was pain not physical but deep in his soul; it was agony that constricted his breath and heart. It was the suffering of someone he loved more than his own life.

He jerked upright as the suffering he was feeling reached a peak; his eyes opened with a gasp leaving his mouth. For some seconds his eyes stayed completely still focused inside. He realized he was drenched in sweat.

Hero curled on his lap worried and Bruce caressed his head.

“Hold on, Clark; I’ll come for you.”
"I don’t want to let Bruce pray to all the men who drool on him and if he finds out about us, he’ll break up with me."

His own voice echoed awkward as if it belonged to a stranger in the depths of his mind and that night’s downpour that washed Gotham’s rooftop and him wasn’t the reason.

"Break up with YOU?! C’mon, Kal El…As if you’re a human loser and Wayne has the right to dump you. You know my opinion about Wayne and that he is unworthy of you but since you want to keep him he can’t do otherwise! You deserve whatever you want, Kal El: you’re the Lord of Krypton. And a pleasure slave is a luxury you definitely can demand."

Diana’s voice – or the voice of the woman he knew as Diana – tortured his ears. Her arrogance, malice and poison dripped from every syllable she uttered and Clark wondered how he hadn’t realized then.

The cave was the same as he remembered it yet the feeling was different…Batman was standing before him, cold, distant; it was the first time he was seeing Batman standing after the disaster in that factory – after months. The new armor enabled him to stand and walk.

“You were right for the tests I didn’t do in the Fortress” Superman said to him casually.

Clark knew that there was something treacherous and devious in his mind that made him now, after so long feel embarrassed, ashamed.

Batman raised his head pursing his lips.

“I should have done them – I was stupid. But it’s not too late. We can do them now” Superman continued.

Bruce’s eyebrows arched.

“We?”

Superman nodded smiling.

“Yes…that’s the reason I took a leave. We’ll go together to the Fortress to have my tests done”

Now Bruce frowned.

“Why am I needed for that? You’re a big man” he asked coldly.

“I want you to see with your own eyes that I’m not fooling you again.”

Bruce twisted his eyebrows and shook his head.

“If you say that you’ll do it I don’t need to come and see.”

“I also hoped to have some days just for the two of us” Bruce opened his mouth in realization and nodded “Like the good old days…to escape from all these. Your bedroom there waits you…Remember?” his voice became touched and sensual.

Hearing himself again Clark felt the nausea more torturous than ever.
Now that he re-watched these moments he could see that Bruce remembered the days in the Fortress and these memories were salt in the human’s aching heart yet he isolated this weak member of his body.

A smirk carved half of Bruce’s face.

“And” he pierced Superman with his eyes “you’ll lock me there and threw the key, right?”

Superman pressed his lips and his eyebrows formed an ugly frown: Bruce was so clever. Damn!

Bruce nodded.

“So that’s the plan, Kal El? Imprison your human slave not allowing him to pester you constantly about the supposed Diana?”

Superman regained his calm expression and stared at Bruce innocently but Hero’s constant growling was very talkative.

“You’re not my slave, Bruce; you’re my lover” he said sensually and made to fly to him but Bruce’s cold glare stopped him.

“Not anymore, Superman” his voice was icy and fierce.

……………………………………………………………………………………

“... you stalked me last night! You should have stayed on your bed since” he cocked his eyebrows "I supposedly hurt you but you wore that suit and followed me to watch my every move!”

Bruce grinned and shook his head.

“Don’t be more ridiculous than you already are!” Superman clenched his fists ready to attack but he restrained himself gritting his teeth. “But when you choose the City Hall’s rooftop to get laid then it is like you’re begging for Batman to see you.”

…………………………………………………………………………………………

“After that you realize that you have no place in the Manor or the cave again: as a matter of fact, after you leave, you’d find that both places are from now on inaccessible to you. You made your choice and I respect that, Clark; now it’s my turn.”

He turned to the computer bench, his back a clear sign of dismissal. However, Superman was determined to not retreat so easily: he couldn’t stand the thought of Bruce being obtainable for all these men surrounding him. The images of Thor fucking him under the bridge, although he knew that weren’t true, haunted his mind.

“Don’t you dare blame this to me!” Superman roared and several bats startled flew from their positions yet Hero didn’t even glance at them gritting his teeth and growling at the alien, his eyes sending daggers. “You never believed in this relationship! Though you knew that the devious plan of Al Ghul threw me to your feet, not only you didn’t thwart me from slipping in a relationship with you, but also enjoyed having me burning from desire and not satisfying me!”

Bruce’s eyes were wide, emotionless, still, looking at the days of the past...at the Fortress, at the island...

“You never invested in this! You always expected me to do everything – to offer you my love. And now with the first difficulty you put an end to what we have! You wear this armor to confront me because you’re afraid to do it as Bruce Wayne because Bruce Wayne is a scared brat who in the first ordeal whines and sniffs and runs away!”

“I saved your life, you ungrateful bastard!” Superman roared.

Bruce didn’t turn to see him just yanked his head.

“I know and I’ll be always grateful to you, Superman. But that doesn’t mean that I have to tolerate you telling me lies, accusing me for being so filthy to cheat my loved one and fucking me worse than you’d do with a plastic doll” he finally turned to look him in the face calmly but resolute as granite.

Superman was shocked then at how stony that face was; how determined those eyes were and at the same time bereft of any emotion. And now even more…regret stabbing his chest.

“Stay away from me and Gotham” Batman growled in his raspy, cold voice.

Superman shook his head and smirked.

“You can’t keep me away from Gotham” he chuckled. “I know the true condition of Batman and he isn’t as formidable as he was” he licked his lips. “You think that you can intimidate Superman?” he cackled. “Please, Bruce: your armor might be able to make you stand and walk but your legs are useless! You’re a cripple!”

Bruce’s hand like a flash threw something so fast that Superman saw just a blur and realized that it was a knife only when the blade cut his upper arm ripping his suit, grazing his skin and spurting blood drops. It hurt like Hell.

Clark remembered the ancient dagger: the Knife of Justice…Indeed, it served him justice for his behavior.

Even now the scar on his upper arm burnt stronger than the overall pain over his entire body.

In the same blur, the knife hit on the rock wall behind Superman and scratched again Superman’s upper arm before ending up to its master’s hand. Bruce caressed the blade and placed it in his belt. He stabbed with his eyes Superman who was squeezing the wound to stop the blood: It was so obvious that the Man of Steel was completely unused to these things. And the skin wasn’t healing itself like it should because this wasn’t a usual blade.

“I warned you about the Knife…And you’re right: my legs are useless but my hands are still quite skilled with knives.”

Clark could feel the rage that consumed him that moment, a stupid rage; he had felt insulted because Bruce had figured his intentions and didn’t fall for his scheme; because the human kicked him out. However now as he re-lived all these, there was no trace of anger only sadness, despair for what he had done – what he had lost. But most of all, he was sad because now he could feel what he had denied to feel that day: Bruce’s hurt…

He gritted his teeth determined to overcome the pain and the weakness in order to escape his prison and go back to warn about the danger…to kneel before Bruce and ask for forgiveness.

He clenched his tied wrists yet the pain intensified and his body felt electrocuted by a thousand volt before going completely numb; his head rolled to his chest as he was short of breath…He couldn’t escape…

The padlock made a clack and the lid moved slightly so Clark lifted it. He squatted and began pulling out the items: his clothes that he had taken to the Manor when he was with Bruce: well, that was to be expected.

Under the clothes, folded in its minimum size of a medium cube was the wheelchair he had created for Bruce. He pressed his lips and for some seconds his mind dag and brought to the fore memories from the Fortress; however he crossed them out determined before they formed. Now Clark got why Bruce used the retina recognition system for the box’s security: he couldn’t risk someone opening it and seeing the alien object. Bruce still protected him and his secrets.

He took out the cube and placed it in the floor. Then there was a small, plain square box made of wood.

Clark narrowed his eyes. Bruce sent him Kryptonite? He shook his head snorting: no, not Bruce; besides he’d have felt it immediately since the box was wooden and the content wasn’t Kryptonite.

He took the box and opened the lid; he sighed: it was a metallic frame – round shaped and plain, black platinum from an unknown yet vein in Siberia.

He collapsed to the floor and squeezed the jewel in his palm closing his eyes. He saw again Bruce’s naked chest: broad, soft, toned with a shining charm touching his skin: a big black diamond sparkling inside its black, sleek nest of the platinum frame.

“Damn, Bruce! You should have kept it! It was a gift...” he sighed and then licked his lips and saw inside the box.

The last thing was a folded white, silken handkerchief. Curious he unfolded the fabric and his heart hurt as if a punch was delivered right to the pulsing muscle.

At this moment the punch was even harder…

A pressed flower like those that people collect putting them in books.

Clark recognized that flower: it was the rose Clark had brought to Bruce from Japan that morning after he had spoken badly to him. Clark wanted to make amends with him and reassured Bruce that he still loved him; that nothing had changed because of Diana.

Clark couldn’t send anything back to Bruce because Bruce had given him the most precious thing, the one thing that couldn’t be returned: Bruce had given him his vulnerable heart, his pure love and he had torn both into pieces…

He sighed and moaned: if he could just turn time back to stop himself from acting like this…if only he had fought stronger against Poison Ivy’s control…

Suddenly, Clark knew he wasn’t alone despite the fact he hadn’t looked up or heard anything due to the fact he was absorbed in his thoughts. Yet he had no mood addressing his visitor: for certain, more taunting…

“You don’t have the curiosity to see who visits you?”

Superman pressed his eyelids on the eyes: it was the only thing he could do to let his anger out. He hated that smug voice…But he couldn’t give him the satisfaction that he didn’t dare to look him in the eyes – even in this condition.
He raised his head loading his eyes with pride and contempt.

Bagdana smirked narrowing his eyes.

“I see you stupidly spend your few drops of strength to play the hero…” he shrugged. “Whatever: I know better. You’re scared, Kryptonian; scared beyond words. What? Pain is too hard for someone who till now was invulnerable? I guess it was too easy to play the hero when there was no real danger to you, huh?”

Superman narrowed his eyes.

“I never played the hero, demon: I wouldn’t expect from someone like you to be able to discern that…As for pain and invulnerability, you’re no different: playing with humans’ vulnerability when you know that you can’t be hurt” he knitted his eyebrows “or can you? Maybe there is a Kryptonite for you too?”

The demon laughed although inside Superman’s words had stung – he knew about pain but this wasn’t the Kryptonian’s business.

“Nice…Play with words if that comforts you at the moment but as the time goes by and you digest what is happening, you won’t have any mood for provoking.”

Superman gulped: the demon had one thing right – there was no time for word games.

“It’s you who doesn’t realize what’s happening, Bagdana!”

The demon frowned and Superman inhaled deeply to gather some strength and some air to continue.

“You’re helping a powerful, vicious being to destroy humans.”

Bagdana crossed his arms and smirked.

“So what? Through the ages humans have proved that they are worthless – I admit that they gave me fun at times but that doesn’t mean that they should continue to exist” his face became darker and his eyes flashed. “They should have ceased to litter this planet ages ago…they killed Lilith…” he wouldn’t admit the pain they had caused him. “And it was someone similar to you that seduced her and led her to death…”

Superman saw and heard the pain in the demon’s eyes and voice; a spark of hope lit in his heart.

“And this time you are the one who leads the one you say that you care about to death – worse than death.”

Bagdana clenched his jaw: he knew that he was talking about Bruce.

“Nonsense!”

Superman shook his sweaty head and felt dizziness pushing him to fainting.

“No, please, Bagdana! Listen to me: You can’t trust Darkseid with Bruce! You didn’t reveal to him my human identity which would have endanger my mother and my friends.”

The demon cocked an eyebrow and laughed.

“You’re trying to turn my own weapons against me? Make me turn against my ally? I didn’t reveal to them your human identity because that would have made Darkseid snub at you and lose his interest saving you from his wrath; as for your human loved ones…” he snorted “they will die one way or another. Besides it was very entertaining knowing how much you hurt them with your attitude and that you ditched them for Ivy’s sake!”

Superman closed his eyes desperate.

“He won’t give you Bruce! He is intrigued! He wants to find everything about Bruce; he wants to have him for himself!” he saw with hope Bagdana’s cat-like eyes filling with something like knowledge, suspicion. “Yes, he showed me! He’ll torture Bruce to make me suffer…Please, Bagdana: you can’t let him put his hands on Bruce; you can’t let him torture Bruce: he has suffered too much already!”

Bagdana snorted and lolled his head on the side casting him a sideways glance filled with sarcasm.

“Do you care?”

Now Clark beyond weakness and illness and pain felt rage: did that awful demon doubt his love for Bruce?

“Of course I am…I love him.”

Bagdana yanked his head back and his gigantic body shook from his cackle.

“Love?” he shook his head “people like you use that word all the time without knowing the meaning.”

“And a demon like you knows the meaning?” Superman chuckled and his eyes narrowed to slits.

The demon smirked.

“Oh! I see you have wiped from your memory the things that don’t suit you, huh?”

Clark became even paler: it was true – all these hours, days, months (?) he was there, he always stopped his memory from slipping far down in the darkest depths of his mind, where he knew that his worst recollection lay hidden.

“What are you talking about?” he mumbled.

“But you know even if you deny it…” Bagdana abandoned his ironic, jeering expression and became dead serious – his eyes completely still. “I felt his pain, his despair that night; his bleeding heart; I heard the cracks when his heart broke…Haven’t you?”

Superman’s short breath stopped; his memory made to show him what the demon was talking about but he again blocked the images.

“You made me do it! You and that woman; you used magic and I don’t know what other shit to make me hurt Bruce.”

Bagdana sniggered.

“Cheap excuses! I know all about this…” he cocked his eyebrows and waved that off with contempt “I make humans throw their responsibilities to others all the time. But I see that Kryptonians have the same traits…” he cocked an eyebrow. “If your love was real no magic, no feromone could have broken that.”

Superman tried to breathe normally.
“You were influencing me to behave like this: Ivy had manipulated me to imprison Bruce…You weren’t afraid that if I had imprisoned Bruce you’d have lost him?”

Bagdana smirked.

“Because you are an idiot that doesn’t make me one too…We both know who Bruce really is: his willpower, his intelligence, his defiance, his strength of character. I knew he wouldn’t fall to your stupid trap and to whatever tricks you’d use. Besides Bruce knew already about your fucking session with Ivy on that rooftop.”

Superman frowned: indeed, Batman had seen them but how Bagdana knew that he had seen?

“How you know that?”

Bagdana’s eyes shone gleefully and before his eyes Superman saw Bagdana taking the form of an archer dressed in dark green, with a hood casting in shadow his face. He had heard descriptions of the Arrow.

“You are the Arrow?!” he knew that Bagdana was Oliver Queen but that he was also the Arrow was something new – of course now made sense that the night of Joker’s attack at the Avengers’ Tower the Arrow had come to protect Bruce.

“Obviously… Well, that night the Arrow met by chance Batman and led him to the rooftop to see you in full action with Princess Diana.”

Superman’s dizziness became overwhelming, his head screaming from pain: that was diabolic! That plan was so tightly woven that nobody could have figured it out.

“Then what was the point of making me try luring Bruce in the Fortress and imprison him?”

Arrow pushed back his hood and Superman saw Queen’s blazing forest green eyes rolling.

“Bruce wouldn’t have fallen to your trap but the rupture between you two would become abysmal: indeed. He ousted you from his life once and for all.”

Superman closed his eyes feeling the sweat that was covering his body becoming thicker. He had been caught like a fly in the spider’s web. However what mattered now was Bruce and Bagdana was the only one who could save him from the fate Darkseid planned for him.

“Still you can’t trust Darkseid with Bruce.”

Bagdana returned to his real form and looked Superman deep in the eyes.

“A demon never trusts anyone…Darkseid might be strong but in the millions of years of my existence I have seen countless beings more powerful and more special than him being defeated and exterminated by their own arrogance.”

Hope ignited in Clark’s chest.

“Then you are against him?”

Bagdana’s mouth formed a nasty, gleeful smirk and his eyebrows twitched.

“You wish…You hope that by being afraid for Bruce’s fate I’d turn against Darkseid and permit you to try gain Bruce back…How stupid of you! Bruce’s destiny is tied with mine: he belongs to me and I belong to him. No Superman, no Darkseid can change that…”
The demon turned to leave choosing to walk the long corridor instead of just vanishing.

“Just” Superman shouted and Bagdana stopped “just don’t let them get Bruce…” he breathed with his quivering voice and fainted as Bagdana’s eyes became the flaming red of his wrath.

“Not this time…” he hissed clenching his fists without looking at their prisoner.

Thomas Eliot was at his office in Leslie’s free clinic; he was reading on his computer an article on a scientific journal before his visit to his patients. He was bored beyond words from his presence at the free clinic yet he was patient especially now that he was so close to succeed his plans: he was sure that one of these days Leslie or Stark would announce him that they want him for Brucie’s surgery.

The knock on the door made him raise his eyes a bit annoyed; he called them in. It was Kelly and he immediately got up to go to her. He had to keep her happy while he needed her.

“I’m sorry if I’m bothering you, Tommy…”

He hugged her waist though she definitely was bothering him yet Thomas wasn’t a fool to say that to his minion.

“Don’t be ridiculous, dear…I told you that you don’t have to knock the door…” he nibbled her earlobe and the girl giggled.

“I thought you’d want to know that Dr. Thompkins has a visitor…” she mumbled closing her eyes enjoying Dr. Elliot’s ministrations to her ear and waist.

Thomas frowned.

“Visitor?” if it was someone they knew the nurse would have told the name.

“I think I have seen him somewhere but I don’t remember…”

Thomas cocked an eyebrow: he didn’t expect anything better from that dumb chic…

“It’s okay, babe…” he withdrew his hands from her waist. “I’m afraid we have to stop for now…” he said feigning sadness to Kelly’s miserable expression. “I have to visit patients but I promise to make up to you in the night…” he winked smiling and the girl seemed happy again.

She mimicked his smile, fixed her hair and cleared her throat.

“Right…I must be to the ward…oh! I can’t wait for the night!” she gave him a peck in the lips and left.

Thomas rolled his eyes and waited till the sound of her footsteps vanished and got outside. He was curious to find out who the visitor was but he couldn’t burst inside Leslie’s office because Thompkins wasn’t a fool and would immediately realize that he was watching her.

So he walked towards the corridor of her office and waited hidden behind the turn of the wall. In order to not cause suspicions, he made small walks and returned.

When after a good hour Leslie’s door opened, Thomas halted his breath. Which exploded when he saw the man who came out. His eyes widened and then narrowed: Stephen Strange? Here?

He back stepped so that he could bump into them at another moment ‘entirely on chance’.
Strange and Leslie was deep in conversation but in a whispering mode so that nobody could hear. Thomas having distanced a good deal began walking towards them.

“Fancy that!” he exclaimed when he ‘came across’ them in his stroll; they hadn’t noticed him till then and looked at him a bit surprised. Thomas noticed a slight smug grin on Dr. Strange’s face upon recognizing him: they weren’t the best of colleagues… “Dr. Strange in Gotham of all places!”

Leslie regarded Elliot over her rectangular glasses calm but a bit annoyed.

“I see you know each other” she commented.

Dr. Strange stretched his hand and Thomas shook it smiling.

“Of course” Strange said gazing at Thomas with an eyebrow slightly arched. “I had the honor to meet Dr. Elliot in many conferences and I have to admit we had some intriguing arguments in the past…”

“Which were very fascinating and I missed them so much now that Stephen is not a part of the neurosurgery society anymore” he said feigning sadness although he felt a cruel satisfaction for rubbing that in the face of the arrogant bastard.

Stephen grinned and his still eyes stabbed Elliot’s.

“I’m sure you do, dear Tom…But, please, do not be so sad: it’s bad for your health” he said sardonically.

Thomas narrowed his eyes but kept his ‘sincerely’ sad face.

“I was very sorry to hear about your tragic accident and your impairment that bereft us of your unique talents.”

Dr. Strange raised his eyebrows and cast Leslie a fleeting glance which she met.

“I guess that’s life, huh?” Strange smiled.

Thomas nodded cocking his eyebrows.

“Is someone close to you treated in the clinic and you came to visit? I’ll happy to attend personally to him or her now that you can’t.”

Dr. Strange grinned because he understood Elliot’s intention to taunt him for his inability to be a doctor anymore.

Leslie yanked her head; she had understood Elliot’s intentions too and she was really pissed.

“Dr. Strange is not here as a visitor.”

Thomas looked at her puzzled and smiled uncomfortable under Strange’s mocking stare.

“I don’t understand…”

Leslie gave a tight lips smile and Dr. Strange cocked an eyebrow.

“He is the leading surgeon of Bruce Wayne” Leslie said casually since Bruce had told her that he had no problem for the information to be disclosed.
And the result was definitely worth it, Leslie thought. Elliot was great in hiding his real emotions and feigning others yet this time the information came entirely suddenly and he was outright dumbstruck. It was obvious in his gaping mouth and goggling eyes. Even his face’s usual rosy color had been replaced from paleness.

“I…” he smiled trying to hide his rage for all his plans being upturned.

“Are you alright, Thomas?” Dr. Strange’s usual baritone was deeper than ever. “Do you need my medical assistance?”

But Elliot didn’t answer, totally engrossed in his shock and outrage.

“I don’t understand: Dr. Strange is…I mean after his accident he is incapable of operating, much more performing a highly demanding operation like the one that Bruce needs…” he looked at Leslie. “Bruce’s condition demands a top notch surgeon and Dr. Strange – I’m sorry, Stephen – he has months to operate, not to mention his impairment. Leslie, I can’t believe you made that choice!”

Leslie narrowed her eyes.

“First of all, I wasn’t the one who made that choice and second, are you even suggesting that YOU care for Bruce more than I do?”

Thomas smiled realizing that he was carried away and had gone too far.

“Of course not, Leslie…Everyone knows how much you love Bruce” he calmed himself. “Whose choice was then?”

Leslie looked at Stephen urging him to speak.

“Bruce Wayne” Dr. Strange answered with his bass voice hued with amusement.

Now Elliot felt like boiling with anger: that brat! That stupid brat found a way to humiliate him! He slapped his thighs and shook his head.

“Oh, Leslie…Really? You believe that Bruce could take such a crucial decision?”

Leslie crossed her arms over the chest; her jaw was set.

“You know perfectly well, Thomas that in such difficult cases what matters is the patient’s wishes. And I think that Dr. Strange is indeed a rather brilliant choice.”

Thomas felt his blood reaching his ears filling his head with hotness.

“Certainly! But if it was made a year ago not now. Stephen, how could you accept knowing that you’re not in your top condition? Bruce can die during that surgery…it takes only a tiny slip.”

Leslie pressed her lips annoyed but Dr. Strange was calm and even amused from his colleagues’ displeasure.

“I think you are not in a position to know my condition right now, Thomas” he twitched his eyebrow sarcastic “I never chose you as my doctor, after all. I’m sure that Mr. Wayne really would appreciate your concern but…” he narrowed his eyes. “Are you a relative?”

“No.”

“Then it’s none of your business!” he spat widening his eyes and glancing at Leslie who was furious.
“Shall we go, Leslie?”

She nodded.

“Sorry for leaving your pleasant company, Thomas, but we have somewhere to go with Stephen.”

He grinned.

“Understood…”

Stephen smiled to him.

“We’ll have the chance to meet again now that I’ll frequent in Gotham…Happy to see you again!” he said sarcastic.

“The pleasure was all mine” Thomas replied swallowing his anger and watched them heading to the exit.

Thomas ran both his hands in his hair; his plans were totally screwed! How on Earth that brat came with Strange. His heart beat fast with the realization of how amused Brucie would be from his humiliation.

When Alfred answered the door he knew already that it was Leslie and that made his upset worse although he kept his collected demeanor. However for someone who knew him as perfect as Leslie it was easy to discern that something was off.

“Good afternoon, Dr. Thompkins, Dr. Strange” Alfred didn’t know that Dr. Strange was in the second car that entered the grounds.

“You know me?” Stephen asked perplexed.

Alfred grinned.

“Both Master Anthony and Master Bruce speak very fondly about you, sir; I’m honored to meet you at last.”

Stephen smiled.

“Well, I’m pleased to meet you too, sir…”

“It’s Alfred. Please, do come in” he opened the door wide to let them in and guided them to the great salon their feet echoing on the glistening floor.

Leslie met her friend’s eyes asking discreetly what was wrong.

“Have a seat, please” Alfred said typically. “May I offer you some tea?”

Dr. Strange glanced at Leslie.

“Alfred, we are here to see Bruce; I know we didn’t call first but I supposed that after his trip he’d have stayed at home to get some rest.”

Alfred didn’t answer for a few seconds and Leslie frowned.
“I’m afraid that your assumption was wrong, Dr. Thompkins. Master Bruce had to leave again from Gotham…some urgent matter concerning Wayne Enterprises.”

Stephen raised his eyebrows.

“We should have called after all… Mr. Wayne is a very busy man.”

However Leslie who knew everything about Bruce didn’t take it so lightly and worry began slithering in her mind yet she couldn’t ask in Dr. Strange’s presence. Alfred headed to the kitchen to bring the tea.

“Is everything alright, Leslie?” Dr. Strange asked with a slight frown.

She grinned.

“Nothing, Stephen, nothing.”

The ring of a cell phone broke the silence and Stephen took his phone out of the inside pocket of his blazer.

“Dr. Strange speaking” he narrowed his eyes. “Yes, Tony…yes…hm…I suppose I can be there.”

Alfred placed the big, oval silver tray with the tea on the classic coffee table sharing a glance with Leslie.

Dr. Strange ended the dial and looked at them.

“Thank you for the tea, Alfred: everything looks delicious but unfortunately I have to go. Tony Stark wants me in New York, at the Avengers’ Tower.”

“At least, have a cup of tea before leaving.”

“Next time, Alfred.”

“As you wish, sir.”

He led Stephen to the door and then returned to face Leslie who had stood and was looking at him.

“What happened? Where’s Bruce?”

Alfred pressed his lips.

“The morning I went to wake him up because he hadn’t come for breakfast: I supposed that he was so tired that he slept in. When I entered master bedroom I found Hero sleeping on the bed with that note in his front legs.”

Leslie took the paper Alfred pulled from his vest’s pocket.

“Alfred, I had to leave. Sorry for not saying anything…Do not worry.”

“That boy is crazy!” Leslie gritted her teeth. “What has in mind?”

Alfred looked at her calm though his blue eyes were bad.

“There was some bad news as soon as Miss Kyle and he arrived.”

“What this time?” Leslie huffed exasperated.
“Mr. Kent has disappeared and Master Wayne is very worried. The Tumbler isn’t at the cave along with the armor.”

Leslie rubbed her forehead.

“Then it is obvious what he is up to…” her sigh of frustration came like a growl. “Batman is eating alive our boy, Alfred” Alfred just pursed his lips without speaking. “He should be more concerned about his health!”

“There is a major threat, Leslie. It seems that something really dangerous is coming.”

Leslie snorted and shook her head exasperated.

“When it doesn’t?!” she spat. “So many fucking super heroes out there with stupid super powers why should our injured boy run to do their job?”

Alfred huffed and shook his head.

“Because none of them is Master Bruce” he replied calmly meeting Leslie’s eyes. “Because Master Bruce was the only one who suspected the scheme and the one who discovered everything.”

Leslie yanked her head back and closed her eyes: Alfred had a point though she understood that the Englishman shared the same feelings with her about that.

“Perhaps Selina knows where he is?”

Alfred shook his head.

“I have the belief that this time Miss Kyle isn’t with him.”

“You think we should inform Anthony? Just in case?”

Alfred inhaled.

“That would be against Master Bruce’s wishes and I believe that it wouldn’t be of any help.”

Leslie rolled her eyes.

“Don’t tell me…Of course he didn’t take his medication with him…” she huffed.

Alfred shook his head.

“He did take them with him, Leslie.”

“Then thank God for small miracles! But next I see him I’m gonna chain him to his bed!”

Alfred cocked his eyebrows and pursed his lips.

“I doubt that this would be enough, Leslie…”

The meeting in the top floor of the Avengers’ Tower began late after midnight because they had to wait for every member of the team to arrive - plus Dr. Strange. For the first time, the whole wall windows were covered with the special invisible material that offered additional protection from potential monitoring.

That alone was enough for everyone to feel that things were serious.

The same grim expression was in every face around the table as Tony presented in a hologram the information they had on Darkseid and his plans. He even presented the footage from the Darkseid’s wars in other planets courtesy of Jor El’s archives: Bruce had asked him to show the material. Even the blue gigantic figure alone was enough to cause uneasiness, especially when just the beams from his eyes had such destructive power.

“Where did you find that footage?” Nick Fury asked rubbing his goatee.

“I don’t think that my sources have any importance right now” Tony answered glancing at Peppers.

Natasha stretched on her chair’s back.

“I think they do: you’re talking about an extra terrestrial menace and these images can’t have been taken by a human; so if another alien gave them to you how can we trust them?”

Tony met her shiny eyes.

“Because that alien is Superman’s father.”

Silence fell to the table and glances were exchanged.

“Superman didn’t help us when Loki attacked” Steve commented.

Tony nodded.

“Superman is compromised but not his father.”

“How do you know he is compromised?” Dr. Banner who usually didn’t speak intervened.

Tony wished he could share with everyone Bruce’s contribution to all these.

“The Amazon Princess who became his ally…”

“And not only that…” Natasha commented and Tony crooked his mouth eyeing her.

“…cast him under mind control into isolating from his true allies and luring him to Darkseid’s trap.”

There was disbelief in the people around the table but Thor stood.

“That woman is not the real Amazon Princess.”

The others looked at him now.

“And” Tony continued tapping his fingers on the table “we know that they have already captured Superman.”

Steve got up and looked at Thor.

“How you’re so sure that the Amazon is not real?” he turned his gaze at Tony who crooked his mouth.

“Themyscira and the real Amazons were found; and the real Princess as well” Tony said through pursed lips.
“Found by whom?” Fury inclined a bit his hand looking sideways at Tony.

Tony looked at Fury’s wicked eye reading the man’s suspicions.

“That doesn’t matter” Steve said “since we are positive about that: so we arrest that woman and attack Darkseid to kick him out of the planet and save Superman.”

Thor inhaled deeply. After everything Superman had done to Bruce, he didn’t feel very warm about that…

“We have to wait” Tony said. “Darkseid is not an enemy you fight easily – we need preparation.”

“Maybe we don’t have the time!” Steve said.

“We do” Tony retorted. “His ignorance is our greatest weapon and asset right now: he thinks that nobody knows about his plans and that his attack will find us unprepared so he moves slowly waiting for his machine to be ready.”

The hologram showed Darkseid’s machine and Dr. Banner got up and approached intrigued studying carefully the oval shaped black vibrating construction that now was six feet height.

“All Life Equation machine” Tony remarked. “Darkseid more than conquering Earth cares about sucking from humans the energy he believes they have in their subconscious which would allow him to unlock the Anti Life Equation into establishing his order of things to the universe.”

Natasha whistled.

“It gets better and better!”

“We have time till his machine is finished.”

“You are really saying to wait for his ultimate weapon to be ready to evaporate us?” Steve asked.

“The machine is under my monitoring” Tony replied confident. “If we attempted to destroy the machine now we would be probably defeated” Dr. Strange gave a court nod. “Darkseid has the power to manipulate people by penetrating their minds: our attack would be met not only by his troops but also by friendly shots as the alien would manipulate the world leaders into fighting us with their countries’ army.”

“Then what do you propose?” Steve asked crossing his arms over the chest.

“In the time we have I count on Dr. Strange on applying a protective wall over the minds of leaders so that Darkseid will be unable to read their minds and control them.”

Dr. Strange pursed his lips.

“I’ll do my best but this can’t be easy.”

Tony pursed his lips.

“Then we’re lucky we have you…and your friends.”

Dr. Strange laughed.

Tony turned to the others.
“Also, I’m adjusting our weaponry into being effective against the alien’s troops.”

Dr. Banner stared at him.

“That will need material from those troops.”

“Which I have” Tony answered not wanting to hold back his smugness even though he thanked Bruce for that.

“How?” the scientist asked.

“Some months back Darkseid in order to introduce Diana to Superman he staged an attack against Bruce” Tony noticed the astonished looks of his teammates – it was the first time this fact was revealed. “You know how the boyscout used to run when someone was attacked – the fake Diana was there before me or Superman and she ‘saved’ Bruce blowing up the odd creatures that had attacked him; to cover the traces that would lead to Darkseid. Then I thought that these creatures were the result of some illegal experiment and gathered samples from the area were their remains were scattered; also, Bruce’s clothes had some material too since the creatures had grabbed him.”

Tony for the first time in his life felt embarrassed because he was taking credit for someone else’s work. The confident smirk over Fury’s face made that worse since Tony could hear his thoughts about Bruce being mentioned AGAIN.

“When Jor El analyzed those samples recognized that they were parademons – Darkseid’s troops” he cast Pepper a sideways glance seeking support and she gave him a small grin. “I’m using that material to adjust our weapons against them.”

“I’ll help you” Dr. Banner said and Tony nodded to him appreciatively more because he wasn’t doing questions.

Steve walked to him.

“What about the real Princess? Is she willing to fight with us?”

Tony patted Captain’s shoulders.

“She left her island to come to our world: Diana of Themyscira is really pissed that a villain impersonated and defamed her.”

“So we wait” Steve said pressing his lips.

“As soon as Dr. Strange finds a way to protect the world leaders from external manipulation we’ll alarm them about the danger so that they will secretly ready their armies and set protection measures for civilians. Of course our weapons will be finished by then.”

“What about Superman?” Thor intervened grimly.

Tony who shared the god’s feelings about the being that caused such pain to Bruce raised an eyebrow.

“We can’t rely on his help: we’ll have to save him.”

Thor nodded.

“Asgard’s help will be with Earth.”
"The more the better" Natasha remarked. “Especially, since Superman is out of the game and I have no trust that the Amazon will help us in the end.”

Tony frowned.

“Think positive for once, dear.”

Natasha smiled.

“I wasn’t born with a silver spoon in my mouth…so I’m realist.”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“So we prepare ourselves for war” Steve turned resolute to his comrades. “Darkseid is fooling himself if he thinks that this will be an easy war.”

Fury approached Tony with a suspicious look in his face; he leaned to his ear.

“Very inspiring, Mr. Stark…yet I can detect someone else’s influence in all these…” he winked with his unique eye and left to organize his agents.

Tony crooked his mouth.

“You still underestimate me, Nick?”

Fury chuckled.

“No, Tony: you are an ingenious scientist and inventor; one of the most intelligent people of the planet” he pursed his lips. “But you’re not a detective… And this case has many gaps…” he nodded. “Congratulate him on my behalf next time you’ll see him.”

Tony twitched his eyebrows.

“There is no need for that: I’m present” he pointed at his chest. “Thanks anyway…”

Fury chuckled.

“Nice, Tony” he patted his upper arm and walked outside to organize his agents all over the planet.

An outraged, jealous Superman was the most terrifying thing to face but Matt wouldn’t flinch; he strengthened his body in front of Bruce.

“Superman, stop!”

Bruce on his wheelchair was between him and Superman, not a flinch of fear in his voice facing the most powerful being on the planet that was angry as Hell.

“Matt, you can go” Bruce said to him calmly without breaking eye contact with Superman whose face was still contorted.

“I’ll call…”

“You won’t call anyone” Bruce ordered. “Everything is alright – I’ll see you tomorrow.”
“What do you think you’re doing?” Bruce asked after Matt closed the door and the sound of his steps vanished.

Superman squinted and his face muscles’ spasms made him almost ugly.

“That’s my question!”

In a flash he grabbed Bruce’s upper arms and lifted him from the wheelchair covering the distance to the master bedroom in less than thirty seconds and settled the human in a sitting position on the bed. Bruce’s stare didn’t flinch even though Clark could see that this time he could feel the bruising grasp on his upper arms that Superman didn’t let go.

“Can you calm down and release my arms?” Bruce asked completely unfazed by Superman’s panting breath that burnt his face as his enraged eyes locked with his calm ones.

But Superman didn’t seem to have listened at all.

“Is that why you made all these fuss about me and Diana? Is this why you made me feel ill? To run around doing tests letting you free to fuck with your physiotherapist?!”

Bruce’s eyes widened.

“You still smell Falcone on me; if what you say was true you’d have smelt that as well” he controlled the feel of insult that boiled inside him.

Superman laughed really snidely.

“You’re cunning! You definitely found a way to cover the smell of fucking with him!”

“You’re out of arguments already, babe? Matt, you won’t tell anything to Tony or anyone else” he mimicked Bruce’s voice. “Bruce, there is nothing to be ashamed of in that – you didn’t do anything wrong” he did the same with the physiotherapist’s voice. “I think it’s pretty obvious – I’m not that dumb, you know…He is fucking you months now and he wanted to tell Tony and the others but you didn’t want because Stark would brag and mock me and you didn’t want me to know! You want the blond hunk who is a human like you but you don’t want to lose Superman either” Bruce was staring at him with eyes unreadable like shining walls.

“You consider me a slut, then…” he said so calm that Clark even in his enraged condition was baffled.

Superman shook him.

“I heard you, Bruce! Damn it! I saw you!”

“What you saw?”

“You pants unbuttoned and he fondling your thighs! Fire him right now!”

Bruce yanked his head in defiance.

“He only does his job.”
“Oh, yeah?” Superman snorted. “And what’s his job? Giving you blow jobs, as right before I came in? You might not feel anything but I’m sure he definitely had a helluva party!” he hissed.

It stung because it was unprecedented; the pain wasn’t much but the shock was greater; he didn’t see it coming but Bruce had just slapped him in the face. He looked at the human who ground his teeth, his hand left on the mattress carelessly.

“Scan my groin, you fool! Is there any signs of saliva?”

“Then what he was talking about? Why he was fondling you?” his voice was still raspy.

“He wasn’t fondling me: he was massaging the cramps in my thighs’ muscles. The muscles three days now are contracted…badly.”

The shock of Bruce’s slap was nothing in comparison with that: Clark quickly scanned Bruce’s almost naked thighs and ruffled his sweaty hair. Indeed, the muscles in Bruce’s thighs were like stones from cramps that remained unrelieved for three days …

Thirst was torturous and hunger was piercing his guts…Superman wasn’t dependent on food and water but now under the effect of Kryptonite and the red sun-like light these first known feelings became additional tortures.

His eyes were closed, his head touched his chest as he didn’t have the strength to held it upright. But the worst torture was his eidetic memory: he snorted…it was ironic that the only super skill he was left was his memory only to remind him of his dreadful sins and torment him more…

“Clark…” but Clark continued probably believing that this was a moan. “Clark, I’m not in the mood…”

Now that hurt…But Clark understood Bruce’s hesitation: he just had a nightmare and he was still upset. He lifted his sweaty face, his messy hair framing his fevered eyes and regarded Bruce’s so beautiful, so irresistible face…

…it was ironic that the only super skill he was left was his memory only to remind him of his dreadful sins and torment him more…

“…beautiful beings like Wayne are made only for being used for pleasure and nothing more.” Diana’s voice fell like thunder in his horny mind and Clark in his cell felt embarrassed.

“I’m here for that, babe…” Clark panted because his groin was really impatient, throbbing viciously. “I’ll change that mood…” he cocked his eyebrows “this is a job for Superman…”

His hands grabbed on their own accord Bruce’s waistband and lowered at once both pants and underwear and…oh! His groin relished the contact with that soft pelvis! So much that he inhaled deeply and his mouth was suddenly sucking Bruce’s abdominals panting because his length was already erect and he wanted to get more from that shivering, so pleasantly cold body.

“I need you, Bruce…” he whispered huskily. “I need to be inside you again…Your body is sacred: a temple of Sun – I need that energy you give me…And besides you don’t feel anything below the waist…I’ll do everything…”

“Not tonight, Clark…” Bruce said not too loud because Clark even in this state could hear everything.

Clark heard but his body’s screams were ferocious and his length throbbed hungry and painful…

“That was his best trick! Persuading the others that he is a wild mountain to conquer!” Diana’s solemn, scientific voice told him again.
Clark hated himself for even hearing that woman.

Bruce’s eyes widened when instead of Clark detaching himself, he saw Superman’s head covering his genitals and heard the so familiar sound of powerful fingers clenching his thighs and his anus being spread.

Clark held Bruce’s thighs bringing them to touch his hips: he needed to feel real contact as when his body rubbed with Diana’s hot, strong, delicious, round shaped hips. But Bruce wasn’t able to do it himself so Clark would do it for the weak human: he began rubbing the unresponsive thighs to his stretching the anus he wanted to conquer.

Bruce clenched his teeth and grabbed Clark’s wet locks using them as support to heave his torso.

The smell from Bruce’s entrance was so intoxicating, alluring him to cross that mystic entrance that avoided for four torturous months…His fingers clenched stronger the dead thighs as his frantic heartbeat buzzed in his ears…His length was drawn there like the metal to a magnet, like a fly to the fire…Bruce was pulling his hair; Clark smiled: of course, once again he managed to help Bruce overcome his past and moan for more, even though he wouldn’t feel his ministrations in his rectus.

Clark wanted to cry to Superman to stop that madness because he was hurting Bruce.

But then the pulling became stronger and Clark sensed anger; he raised his glimmering eyes, his hands were holding Bruce’s legs up…Bruce’s grim, flashing, angry eyes sent a stone to his chest.

“Not tonight, Clark!” the voice wasn’t too loud but strength and resolution made it pure steel; and the emerald stars in Bruce’s orbs was like molten gems ready to explode. Not only anger was there but also bitterness.

Among the ruckus of chats, laughter and music of the hotel room Clark’s eye caught something that made him feel excitement. He left his Pulitzer on a table and hurried to catch him as he was guiding his wheelchair to the lift.

“Bruce” but Bruce didn’t turn and continued his course to the lift.

Clark easily caught up and stood before him. Their eyes met.

“I didn’t expect to see you here...”

Bruce lolled his head.

“It is a hotel and I had to stay somewhere to attend the LexCorp’s annual board meeting.”

Clark nodded: as a journalist he knew all about that.

“I saw you watching when I received the prize...”

“I heard the fuss and approached...”

Clark smiled and Bruce’s heartbeat elevated before he ordered it to calm in order for Clark not noticing.

“So...you want to tell me that it was random?” he asked smugly.

“Of course not” Bruce wasn’t going to lie.
“I saw your smile before…You need to smile more, Bruce…”

“Mind your own business” he spat.

But Clark was hearing again Bruce’s voice from better days:

“I’ll stand by you throughout this, unless you decide otherwise…”

Superman saw Batman gazing at the sparkling city of Metropolis from the rooftop of LexCorp’s building. On the street the annual party for bidding farewell to the year was taking place.

He knew that Batman would hear the movement of the air and Batman didn’t need more to understand; the Gothamite made to leave but a force gently but unyielding carried and pinned him to the wall.

Batman’s lenses locked with Superman’s blue eyes.

“You banned Superman from Gotham but you act in Metropolis – my city. Double standards?”

Batman yanked his head.

“It’s Gotham’s business” he growled.

Superman knew that Bruce felt the urge to push to escape remembering that night that Superman used him in the most brutal way…

“You know that you shouldn’t wander like this…” Superman whispered to Batman’s artificial ears “it is too dangerous – you may get injured again.”

“Mind your own business” Batman retorted through gritted teeth.

Superman however leaned closer to his face and his lips almost touched Batman’s exposed skin.

“I hate that this armor doesn’t let your body’s perfume off…” his lips came even closer and Batman almost closed his eyes because his body shivered remembering the times Superman had kissed him. “I missed you…and I know you missed me too…otherwise you wouldn’t have come to the ceremony…”

Superman almost captured Batman’s lips which craved to be kissed yet Bruce defeated himself and the Man of Steel twitched a bit looking perplexed into the emotionless lenses and then at his left rib. He smiled: the Blade of Justice was touching his skin ready to cut. He looked again at Batman’s clenched jaw.

“I still have the mark on my upper arm…” he smirked but then turned to Bruce’s face. “We still can be together…Diana won’t object.”

“But I will! Back off!” Batman growled determined and Superman feeling the peak of the dagger pricking his rib relented a bit. “Look elsewhere for a mistress!”

No, Bruce couldn’t forgive him for all these. He was sure that Bruce had given up on him long ago. There was no hope for Earth…
It was way past midnight and the big city vibrated with sounds, multicolored lights and motion – as every other great city that never slept.

The grandiose building of Central City’s National Bank was peaceful, empty of customers and employees waiting for the morning to regain its liveliness. However in the dim night lights that illuminated the vast main hall five figures dressed in black and wearing ski masks slipped heading to the basement where the vaults were situated.

At the corner in a pile the three security guards lay unconscious bound and gagged.

The five shadows ran the stairs to the basement and began their work on the central vault which was their main target. Their movements manifested skill and knowledge so it was a matter of seconds before the rectangular titanium door opened with a clack causing satisfied and greed grins to the robbers.

The one who seemed to be their leader opened the door and looked inside with a greedy shine in his dark eyes. He turned to the others and waved them to go inside.

They were ready to walk to the interior but a whoosh sound swept through the long corridor and before the thugs could register what was happening the two of them were launched to the walls knocked out.

The leader turned immediately his gun at the red blur which was now hammering the other two thugs. However as the two thugs flew through the air to crash in the walls by the blur’s tornado movements, the leader felt a hard kick on his wrist that pushed the gun away.

Before he even uttered his curse the same red leg that had kicked his wrist kicked also his head and then his torso to finally sent him to the vault door opposite the open one.

The blur stopped moving to see the result of his work: a man of average height, slim but muscle bound was revealed. Dressed in a skin tight red uniform with a yellow big lightning across his chest; his head was covered with a red hoodie leaving only his eyes visible. A satisfied grin carved his face seeing the thugs knocked out but then police sirens came from outside and he sped crossing the building in barely a second and passing the police vehicles that were now halting before the bank.

The red blur stopped inside a dark alley. Without a sign of fatigue he just stretched his body. But instantly he frowned, feeling rather than hearing a second presence; that was impossible since nobody was able to follow or even catch him with his eyes. He could run and avoid the presence in the alley but he was curious: only Superman could catch up with him and he was sure this wasn’t he, so he had to see with who he had to do – besides he could lose him at any time.

He turned slowly and his eyes widened.

The presence made a step out of the shadow that covered him and the man in red pursed his lips impressed and flabbergasted.

“Batman in Central City?”

“Flash” the dark creature greeted him in his raspy voice.

“Well, that’s an honor…” Flash said “yet…catch me if you can!”

He sped up vanishing in a second and Batman shook his head.

A big grin was plastered over Flash’s face when he stopped his running on a rooftop overlooking Central City’s main avenue. He definitely wanted to speak with Batman but first he wanted to test and challenge him. Of course he was sure that the guy from Gotham would be unable to find him yet he was going to locate Batman himself – after all, he could cross the entire city in a minute.

“It’s not the time for games.”

A growl made him literally jump from surprise.

Flash turned on his heels and goggled at Batman.

“How?”

“Rooftops are my element” he answered casually and walked towards the ledge.

Flash shook his head and licked his lips.

“No, I mean…How did you find me? Nobody can catch my speed except Superman.”

Batman wasn’t going to reveal him his secrets neither that he was able to follow him around since his body while running reached a temperature unique not only for humans but also for anything: artificial or not. And once he could trace the Flash’s route it wasn’t that difficult to speed the Tumbler accordingly.

“Things are bad…”

Flash looked at him.

“I suppose…for Batman to leave Gotham and come to find me. Superman does that usually. By the way, Superman told me that it was you that picked me for the operation against the League of Shadows. I was flattered; really…I was following your activity in Gotham and – wow! – not even Superman wanted to mess with that shithole and you managed to clear the city from Falcone and then the world from the League…”

Batman hadn’t time for this.

“It’s about Superman” he cut him abruptly.

Flash understood that he had been bubbling and blinked.

“Yeah…Right…I suppose since he isn’t the one to come. Mmm…he is busy, huh?”

“No, he is captive” his lenses stabbed the young man’s eyes which bulged.

“But how? He is the most powerful being on Earth and he has Diana with him.”

Batman gave a court nod.

“Exactly. She is an impostor; her mission was to seduce Superman into rendering him unable to fight back when taken to her ally.”

Now Flash gaped.

“This is…unbelievable! I fought with them: she…she was saving humans; she…loves Supes.”

Batman straightened his head.
“During the attack at New York neither of them showed up – she dissuaded Superman from coming to aid.”

Flash shook his head: he never liked that.

“Tell me more…Who’s doing this?”

“An alien from the planet Apokolips – he’s called Darkseid and belongs to the race of New Gods. He destroys planets trying to find the necessary energy to activate the Anti Life Equation exterminating life and establishing his order of things. Earth is his newest target and he wanted Superman out of his way to attack.”

Flash frowned.

“Is Superman still alive?”

Batman nodded.

“Yes.”

“How do you know?”

“I know!” he spat confidently and Flash didn’t feel like arguing.

“Let’s take them then!” Flash made to go but Batman seized his upper arm.

“We need to be careful. This requires careful organizing and patience.”

Flash rolled his eyes.

“I’m not that good in waiting…”

“You’ll have to…Be ready and vigilant for the right moment.”

Flash pressed his lips and nodded.

“Diana however…maybe she is not an impostor – I mean, I saw her; her powers are real –how do you know she is an impostor? Perhaps she is the Princess of the Amazons and we are screwed.”

Batman’s lenses seemed to shine more.

“She is an impostor” he repeated. “Poison Ivy it’s how she calls herself.”

Flash licked his lips.

“I don’t want to sound…whatever…but how are you so sure?”

Bruce rolled his eyes underneath the cowl.

“Because I found the real Diana!”

“Yes!” Flash made a gesture taken from sports. “Now we’re talking!”

“Be ready for my signal” Batman said calm.

“Look, I want to thank you for trusting me and…I never believed that freaking Batman will speak to me” he looked at the starry sky upturning his palms “you know, up close and personal: you are a legend after all – something distant and intangible” he lolled his head “so you coming to Central City to find me it is…”

He turned where Batman stood till then only to be met with air as the Gothamite had disappeared…
Flash sighed.

“I said too much…again” he scratched his head. “Wait…What signal?”
Chapter 82

He downed the handful of pills in one swift motion and drank a big gulp of water from the bottle that till now lay on the seat next to his. He reclined to the back of the driver’s seat and let his head rest on the leather.

The cowl was made to not give much weight yet right now he still felt it like a real burden to his aching head. He could have pulled the cowl off since the Tumbler was in complete stealth mode that made it invisible to any tracing gadgets and he had parked it in an abandoned industrial area outside Central City making sure that nobody was around. Yet he didn’t do it; he just couldn’t afford to let Bruce and his pain come to the fore.

He knew that if he succumbed then it would be difficult to continue; he was so tired and his back ached. Thankfully, he had taken his medication when he left the Manor and the painkillers were really a blessing right now.

Batman took a deep breath, let the air fill his exhausted torso and exhaled slowly. Several times till he mastered control over the pain and fatigue.

Then he opened his eyes; he hadn’t time for rest though the idea of his waiting king sized bed back in the Manor was more than tempting. However there were more important things than his pleasure.

He sat properly and touched the Tumbler’s control panel where all the indications was illuminated with a light blue color; in the big rectangular screen in the center he could see the news from the biggest news’ outlets.

His lips crooked a bit reading the headlights about Wonder Woman’s latest spectacular rescue: a big high res picture of the stunning Ivy posing in the suit of the Amazon Princess was in the midst of the article. Her lips were in a tight determined line yet Batman could see the shine of satisfaction in her eyes as the crowed in the ground was cheering the flying goddess…

Of course…she continued to play the savior of the human kind not only to make people forget about Superman and his absence but also to make her fans fell in despair seeing her joining Darkseid’s army. Neither she nor her allies knew that the real Diana was privy to their fraud and was watching.

Batman was very satisfied that the Princess didn’t hasten to confront and expose the impostor. The truth was that Batman from the first hours he spent with her felt that he could trust that the Amazon would do the right thing even without him explaining the situation or having to make his point across. She was clever and she knew the virtue of patience.

On the other hand Batman noticed a tiny news mention about a woman that was saved when a gang attacked her in Metropolis; the victim and the police didn’t know who stopped the assailants since the woman was in shock during the attack and the culprits were still unconscious.

Batman grinned: Diana might have stayed on the background without attracting much attention yet that didn’t mean that she would have let her joints get rusty… The mention was in so small letters that nobody else would notice.

Then he touched some points in the screen and a flood of data came over: it was from Gotham’s MCU and they concerned Isaac, the hacker that had broadcast the video with Falcone’s abusing Bruce Wayne. Batman had promised that he would find who implicated Isaac and Wizze to this because the culprit was responsible for their deaths at Joker’s hands.
He believed that the best way to reach that person was by following the strings from the known people of the case and there were three: Isaac, Wizze and Ewan Ferguson the late attorney of Roth Pielser: the man for whom Falcone had shot that video… Pielser had told that the auction and the sale were done through his lawyer since he was in prison.

What the three of them had in common? They were dead. So there was no chance to interrogate them into getting some insight. However their history and activity was still there and he had to rely on that to find how the mastermind approached them and therefore his identity. He didn’t think that the president of GTV had something that would lead to the mastermind: his channel was just picked to be hacked. The same went for Pielser: it would be stupid of the mastermind to go to the prison to meet the pedophile and impractical.

Take Isaac first. The mastermind must have had some knowledge about Isaac’s skills in hacking which was intriguing and potentially useful since the youth had no prior arrests for his activity. The culprit must have had some kind of interaction with the man which led him to find out his special skills.

The envelope that contained the CD with the video didn’t have any DNA traces according to the police’s report and the address was typed so there was no handwriting for analysis. So the only way to identify the culprit was to search Isaac’s acquaintances or contacts.

Batman touched the screen and a new window opened with photos of students of Gotham’s university who had some relationship with Isaac; superficial, nothing so close that could be classified as friendship or romantic affair. The youth was a loner filling the time between his classes and lab hours – he was a brilliant student according to his marks and his professor’s testimonies – with working on his computer. After the revelation that he was the one who broadcast the video the Cyber crime unit managed to identify his traces in several cases of hacking that till then had remained unsolved.

So the one who had the CD had discovered his skills before the police did. Perhaps some of his hacking victims who possessed the know-how to trace the hacker…He scanned through the long list of the individuals and companies or banks Isaac had hacked and immediately something stood out: LexLabs.

Batman frowned: Luthor hated Bruce Wayne more than enough to do this and he had connection with Falcone so that he could have found about the existence of that video. Also, Luthor had the know-how to locate the hacker and expose him which he didn’t…

It could be Luthor but Batman wasn’t convinced. Luthor was in jail the time the auction took place: he couldn’t know. Not to mention that he had other things more urgent to engage his mind – one of them the pressing and demanding Mannheim. And there was the mind control from Darkseid who certainly wouldn’t let anything distract Luthor from building his machine.

He rubbed his chin and opened the window about Ferguson touching the link on the screen. He died in a car accident one month before the broadcasting. He had many shady clients so his ‘accident’ could have been the work of anyone. The lawyer’s shady partnerships made him an expert with dark net where after Pielser’s request he organized an auction to sell to the highest bidder Falcone’s video.

The announcement was also in police’s file of the case:

“Watch Bruce Wayne lose his virginity…”

A hot iron spear pierced his skull and nausea slapped his stomach; he closed that window and continued with the lawyer’s background.
Ferguson lived alone; he was married once but his wife suffered a severe stroke that left her quadriplegic and her traces were lost from then. They weren’t divorced but there was no mention of the couple being somehow together either.

Batman was sure that there was something that must connect those Isaac and Ferguson; a person who could know both even though the two were so far physically and in matters of interests and lives. If he had the time he would have gone to investigate both Ferguson and Isaac’s residences; the first lived in his own house and the second’s apartment was held by the police so that no new renter would stay.

He pressed his lips…If that storm passed and Darkseid’s threat was neutralized then he would do that but till then he had to limit his research to information stored in archives and logs of any form.

The beep for an incoming call didn’t startle him; he had requested this dial and was waiting for it.

“Jor El” he greeted when the AI’s hologram face appeared on the screen.

“Batman, you requested to talk to me.”

Batman nodded.

“I want to ask you to implement the Fortress’ power in the battle against Darkseid” he said flatly, Bruce’s usual shyness left out. “Also, I wonder if you have a way to create something that would give the impression of Kal El’s DNA.”

Jor El’s calm face was carved from a subtle smile registering the transmission from firm but shy Bruce to the blunter Batman.

“The Fortress’ existence is tied with Superman’s wellbeing and his wellbeing is inseparable from the planet’s survival. So it goes without saying that you can count on the Fortress’ resources to help you to your fight. Also, I can create that hologram you ask.”

Batman set his jaw.

“Thank you, Jor El” he said respectful.

“You don’t need to thank me. You were the one who first suspected Kal El’s condition and thanks to you I had the opportunity to confirm that.”

Batman shook his head pressing his lips.

“In the message I left you I informed you that Kal El was taken so I didn’t manage anything – I failed to protect him.”

Jor El smiled with a confident way that puzzled Bruce.

“But your concern for him was that gave us the knowledge about the scheme that was developing around him and thanks to you we know what happened to him and who is responsible so he has the chance to be saved. Otherwise Kal El would have been doomed as the entire planet.”

Batman couldn’t share Jor El’s feelings.

“My son is blessed he has you protecting him; I’m certain that you will find and save him, Batman” he grinned. “I’m honored to be on your side at the time of battle…I wish I could do this not only from afar but also in presence.”
Batman pressed his lips in a tight line.

“I’ll feel your presence on my side all the time, Jor El.”

The Kryptonian inclined his head and their dial ended.

Batman estimated that it was almost the time if what he was told was true. A red light lit in the control panel indicating a presence approaching from the sky; a presence that obviously didn’t intend to hide from him. Then it was true.

“You have just to think my name and I’ll come.”

His body felt like burning; sweat was running abundantly under his sticky suit. It was like he was inside an oven with the red light barbecuing him slowly… making the nausea a flood that soared his insides from his stomach to his head. His head was so heavy that if he had the power he would have caught it from his neck. He hardly breathed the mimic of air that left him desperately wanting the real thing…

Water…It was the first time he wished so much for that life giving liquid that till now wasn’t too important for him. He understood humans’ need and his now was even more torturing.

He didn’t have the strength to raise his head from his chest or open his eyes…or clench his fists to try to fight the pain. He could only grunt when the constant piercing pain sometimes reached unbelievable peaks making the unbearable even worse…

“I wish some day you feel the same pain you inflicted to that honorable soul!”

Superman frowned hearing that voice coming from the depths of his mind and it didn’t take a second before he saw the face that went with the voice. A sturdy, tall man with golden long hair and blue eyes; his face was distorted in anger. Thor was floating in front of him with Mjolnir still emanating sparkles mirroring the god’s feelings.

A shudder ran Superman’s spine realizing the meaning.

“How could you, Superman?”

“I…” Clark tried to answer to that accusing voice that although came from Thor’s lips seemed like coming from his own consciousness.

But he realized that Thor couldn’t hear his regretting voice; instead he saw a powerful Man of Steel rolling his eyes and smirking.

“An Asgardian god must have better things to engage himself than my sexual life” he cocked an eyebrow. “Unless my sexual life affects you…” he hissed.

“Not only you were giving Hell to Bruce but also you cheated him in that gross way” Thor spat and then chuckled. “It is ridiculous that you made a scene accusing Bruce of having an affair with me when you were the one who was doing that: very evil…” he shook his head in disappointment.

“You’re falling from your moral pedestal, Superman.”

Superman fisted his hand.

“Because I ended my relationship with Bruce? Because I found my true love? Your sucking up to Bruce makes you lose your grip, Thor” he hissed “you better stay at Asgard and…” he narrowed his eyes “why not taking Bruce there to devour him?” he grinned. “I know you want it.”

Thor’s lips trembled in anger and disgust.

“Is this what you were planning to do with Bruce?” Superman’s stare fell and Thor nodded. “You didn’t end your relationship as a true man would do realizing that he had feelings for a third person; instead you treated Bruce cruelly. A man in recovery, vulnerable due to his impairment; you made his life a Hell accusing him of adultery while you were preparing to cheat him…”

“I wasn’t preparing…”

But Thor didn’t let him continue.

“I doubt you’d have told Bruce about your affair with Wonder Woman if he hadn’t seen you…and you’d have continued fooling him. He is a great man; he didn’t deserve to be treated like this, Superman. You broke his heart, a heart that was already wounded – that’s a deed of a lesser man.”

Clark gulped the drops of hot dry saliva that had remained in his paper like mouth: a lesser man, indeed.

The Man of Steel snorted.

“We both know who he really is…and he isn’t exactly the Little Red Riding Hood who needs your protection.”

Thor’s eyes sparkled.

“Exactly because we know who he is and you know better than me what he’s been through, you should have been more careful with the heart he gave you and not rip it in pieces.”

Superman shook his head and rolled his eyes chuckling.

“You should thank me instead of berating me because what happened suits you perfectly…” Thor frowned puzzled. “I know you desire him: you fell for him since that day in Mt. Marcy, when Bagdana stripped him and you saw his body naked– I bet the way the demon handled his naked body fascinated you and fired your interest in the mortal” Thor was staring at him disgusted. “Well” Superman made a wide gesture “I cleared the path for you: poor Bruce would need your powerful shoulder to cry on and when his head leans on you it won’t be difficult to you to get access to other more tantalizing parts of his body.”

“You don’t realize in the least what have you done, don’t you? You shattered Bruce’s heart and now to save the last remnants of his tender heart he built an impenetrable wall not allowing himself to love again.”

His chest was pressed from an insufferable weight and then his heart was stabbed with a Kryptonite knife. He had done that…

The door at the driver’s side rose for Batman to step outside. The armor led his feet to touch the ground as his mind ordered and then he stood to meet Thor who just landed.

Suddenly, his vision became blurred and the dusty ground seemed to come at him; he wasn’t taking any info from his legs but he knew he was falling and there was nothing he could do to prevent that.
The ground returned to its right place and he was upright again; through the buzz of his ears he had heard the rushing movement towards him and now he felt two strong hands clenching his forearms supporting him.

He raised his lenses to meet Thor’s blue eyes that were filled with worry. Batman straightened his body and politely but resolutely took his arms away.

“Thank you” he said.

“Are you alright?” Thor asked keeping his hands close to Batman’s ready to catch him.

“Fine. I tripped.”

Thor realizing Bruce’s uneasiness withdrew his hands. He frowned.

“I don’t think you’re fine. You may not be wounded but you’re exhausted. You should be resting” he said with a warm voice but Batman’s expression was determined. “I can take you back home.”

“I wouldn’t call an Asgardian god for something that the Tumbler can do – I know that you have more important things that demand your attention.”

Thor tried to read the emotionless lenses and the set jaw he could see.

“Nothing is more important than you. I think that you should get back and have your rest.”

Batman crooked his mouth.

“We, humans, are more resilient than gods give us credit.”

Thor pressed his lips.

“Yes, but you have limits…and I don’t want you to break those limits.”

Batman pressed his lips.

“The planet is threatened; I can’t stay afar and watch.”

Thor shook his head.

“You unveiled their plan and notified us for the danger; you gave us inside to their power granting us the chance to build our defense. You found Themyscirra and the real Diana persuading her to be on our side. Now you can protect yourself and let us do the work for a change.”

Batman smirked.

“That’s the diplomatic way to say that you, gods and super powered heroes don’t need me?”

Thor’s face became stony and his eyes perfectly still. He inhaled.

“We need you more than you can imagine…” he said in a dead serious voice that made Bruce cringe with what hinted; Thor licked his dry lips and gulped realizing how his words had upset his friend.

“I must go to Asgard” Batman continued without replying anything to what Thor said.

Thor’s eyes widened; that was something he never expected to hear.

“What? I mean you know that I guarantee that Asgard will help Earth.”
Batman nodded.

“I know and I appreciate that. But I need you to take me there.”

Thor nodded.

“May I ask the reason?”

“You’re entitled to this. I want to speak with Loki.”

Now Thor’s eyes bulged and then narrowed under his knitted eyebrows.

“Loki? Why? This is…”

But Batman didn’t have the luxury and the time to argue that.

“I need him on our side.”

Thor laughed and shook his head.

“You forgot what he did to…Bruce Wayne? Because of him Joker ran loose; he killed several people and then Loki helped him kidnap and torment Bruce. How can you rely on his help?” he sighed. “I always defended him; I always wanted to believe in him but after what he did to…Bruce Wayne” he shook his head. “No more” he huffed. “I…I loathe him.”

Batman set his jaw. He knew that nobody was watching or listening to them so he could speak freely.

“He did the things you say but thanks to his involvement I found out that Bagdana was the Arrow.”

Thor even though he was the god of thunders felt as if he was hit by one.

“Bagdana? No way… I saw him incarcerated in Tartarus…”

Batman crooked his mouth.

“He knew that I’d ask you to look for him and he tricked us. Remember that Loki’s palace couldn’t be found by a mere god or by a mere mortal? When Dr. Strange found his palace the Arrow was always there ready to kill Loki with a golden arrow…”

Thor gaped as he remembered the legends he had heard in Asgard for the archer who killed gods with his golden arrows: the god, the demon called Bagdana.

“The left handed archer” Batman nodded. “This information led me to realize the whole scheme because the Arrow is Oliver Queen the one who was saved by Princess Diana: she supposedly came to our world to accompany and protect Oliver Queen. I was already suspecting that she was a fake yet this revelation made everything clear. How she could manifest the legendary powers; how her feromones along with Bagdana’s enchantments put Superman under control.”

Thor was impressed yet Batman continued.

“Loki tried to take me away from Joker but the jester caught up with him and rendered him weak: Joker almost killed him.”

Thor crossed his arm on the chest and shook his head. He didn’t know all these however:
“That makes you believe he will help? How can you trust that he wouldn’t stab us in the back and join Darkseid? I know you like to give a second chance to people but…”

Batman raised his palm.

“Can you take me to him?” he inquired abruptly.

Thor huffed with the man’s tenacity.

“You need Odin’s approval; the jail is under his control.”

“Fine” Batman replied unfazed and locked eyes with the god. “Take me to him.”

Thor smiled with his friend’s resolution in the prospect of having to face the most powerful god of Asgard. There was no point in trying to dissuade him. He stretched his hand and Batman looked at him.

“I need to hold you in order for you to be transferred along with me.”

Bruce was reminded of the Harry Potter movies he had watched in Tony’s house in Malibu: it was so odd that their reality had blended with what they considered just imagination.

Batman grabbed Thor’s forearm.

“This isn’t you, Clark; you know that I’m not enjoying this…”

Bruce’s voice was pressed: he had managed to maintain his tranquility though his face was pressed to the mattress and…

“No!” Clark yelled and shut his memory before showing him the rest of that night.

However he couldn’t stop a flash cracking his mind: two sapphire – emerald eyes filled with sadness behind the strength and determination.

“May I call you Star? Your eyes are like star sapphires” Superman’s voice said shyly but it echoed from so far that it hardly was heard.

The same eyes that were cast fearful on the frozen, snow covered ground rose slowly to look at Superman shyly; a faint smile caressed Bruce’s bruised face.

“I’ve been called worse…”

Superman’s heart relished relieved on the sparkle of happiness in those melancholic eyes; remembering the relief he had felt that day. The bliss of being at last able to approach the youth who had won his heart.

“She is my Star!”

Clark’s miserable existence cried hearing his own voice this time filled with confidence and stupid happiness addressing the woman he was holding in his arms wanting everyone to know how he felt…

He shook his head mouthing ‘no’ – he couldn’t have been so stupid…so cruel… Because he was sure that Bruce had seen…now, after so many months Superman realized that it was obvious in Bruce’s eyes that day in that Metropolis’ hotel.

“So you’re not carrying a Kryptonite dagger like Stark to stab me?”

Catwoman shook her head and then stabbed him with something green that wasn’t Kryptonite but was more acid: her emerald eyes.

“I could…and it’d be a small punishment for you” her eyes were lost for a moment and then she gritted her teeth. “But you don’t worth it…” she said curling her lips in disgust.

Superman frowned; his eidetic memory played before his mind’s eyes that night in Gotham that Selina shot Chill killing him.

“Chill was worthy and I’m not?” he demanded chuckling but he felt insulted being considered lower than that monster.

Catwoman yanked her head rolling her eyes.

“You wonder? Are you THAT stupid? You’re worse than Chill, Superman! He was torturing Bruce for all his life but unlike you he didn’t make him open his heart only to butcher that precious heart!” she narrowed her wild eyes. “You’re more brutal than Chill because he never gave Bruce happiness only to push him to the abyss afterwards!”

Superman’s face became pale and his eyebrows knitted together.

“How is he?” he asked in a throaty voice.

Catwoman snorted.

“You ask if the wounds you inflicted on him after he trusted you with his body have healed?”

He didn’t believe that Bruce would have told to anyone, even to someone like Selina who was more than a sister to him.

She regarded him appalled and pursed her lips.

“No, he didn’t tell me anything – yeah, it’s that easy to figure what you’re thinking; he’s still protecting you…But I know when Bruce is in pain: I can read his eyes, his face, even though he knows how to pretend. You should be ashamed of yourself!” she lolled her head on the side and pointed her hand to him cocking an eyebrow. “Look whom people consider their protector!” she let her arm fall and slapped her thigh “I don’t want to waste even my saliva to spit your face!”

Selina was so right: he wasn’t worthy even to be spat.

“I wish some day you feel the same pain you inflicted to that honorable soul!”

Thor’s enraged, disgusted voice filled his cell.

“You’re worse than Chill, Superman!”

Selina’s saliva that never came made the red light burn him and the Kryptonite chains melt his flesh…

He was… He was worse than that monster and what Darkseid was doing to him was only a small punishment: he couldn’t tolerate himself.
Odin’s unique eye twiched impressed for a second before taking its usual strictness seeing Batman imposingly crossing the long, wide marble isle to his throne. There were men and women – all of them esteemed Asgardians - situated in the room who gazed at the stranger with animosity and shock that was turned into outrage when they registered Thor coming behind him; it was obvious that the god of thunders had brought him here.

“Leave us!” the elder god order in his rough voice.

His eye passed the mortal to stab his son.

“Why did you bring him here?”

“Great Odin it was an urgent matter” Thor replied bringing his fist to his heart.

“I asked him to” Batman replied. “Earth is in great danger and I needed to see you.”

Odin frowned.

“My son is enough guaranty of my help to your planet.”

Batman understood Odin’s anger but frankly he didn’t have the time to consider that.

“I know and I’m grateful for your generosity and your patience to tolerate my presence here but there is something else.”

Odin snorted.

“Tolerate? I don’t have any tolerance!”

Thor cast a sideways glance at the mortal to see his reaction to Odin’s really intimidating anger yet Batman yanked his head setting his jaw.

“Then you’d want to get rid of me as soon as possible.”

Thor was amused by the man’s unfazed stance but hold his chuckle.

Odin touched his back on his high, engraved throne and regarded the Batman in front of him.

“I can get rid of you by exterminating your insulting existence” he said quietly but more threatening than before.

Batman nodded.

“You can but you didn’t because you know that I wouldn’t ‘insult’ you with my presence if it wasn’t really important. And you want to know what this is.”

Odin stayed silent for a few seconds caressing his white beard.

“What do you want?”

“To speak to Loki.”

Now Odin met his son’s eyes and stood determined.

“No way, mortal. You were permitted to my palace but it stops here: Asgard’s business is not your Yet Batman yanked his face backwards and stabbed Odin with his blazing eyes that suddenly weren’t hidden from the lenses that Batman had just deactivated; Odin frowned from the power and determination that gaze hold.

“I won’t go anywhere! You have my respect and appreciation for your willingness to help Earth and for bearing with me to your palace but I won’t leave till I see Loki.”

“That’s preposterous!” the elder god yelled and Thor felt like the entire place shook.

Yet Batman remained unfazed.

“Your audacity is outrageous, Bat! You’re in no position to speak like this!”

“You can kill me if you want but I’m here for my fellow humans and I won’t stop trying till I manage to save them or I’m not able to fight anymore… But I know that you want Darkseid to be defeated as much as I do and you deep inside understand that it isn’t audacity or disrespect that drive my behavior.”

Thor looked at his father; his expression saying that he was with the human. Odin cast a glimpse at the blue and green planet outside his arch shaped windows and sat at his throne.

“Do you expect from Loki to help your cause, Bruce Wayne” he used on purpose his true name meeting the human’s clear, beautiful eyes that sparkled with willpower. “You forget what he did to you?” he lolled his head on the side. “You really believe that Loki will be of help to your cause? A being so villain and petty that used his powers to attack a disabled human and surrender him to a foul creature who knew that was going to torture him?”

Batman didn’t seem influenced from the use of his real name.

“Loki did this but he also tried to help me when he realized what Joker was doing to me… His deeds were monstrous yet they helped me find the truth about Darkseid; I believe that if you give Loki his powers back this time he will contribute to save Earth.”

Odin’s unique eye became blank in deep thought.

“I’m sure” Batman continued “that you want your son to redeem himself and prove that deep insight never betrayed your trust. Give him the chance to do it.”

Thor made a step forward.

“When I was a misguided, arrogant man you were right to punish me but then you gave me a second chance granting me my powers back, father. Loki deserves a second chance too – especially, if he is going to help us bring down Darkseid.”

Thor’s eyes met Bruce’s and the human gave him a tight-lips smile.

Odin remained skeptical.

“Be it. If you believe that that being can help you, be my guest” he shook his head. “I believed in him; I raised him like my own son and look what he did” he pressed his lips. “He is rotten: he wouldn’t care about your cause – he won’t even accept to help.”

“If he does, Odin, are you willing to give him his powers?” Batman asked. “Loki and his unique skills are crucial to our battle.”

Odin snorted and cocked an eyebrow.

“Crucial?”

Batman nodded.

“Fine then. I you manage to make him align himself with your cause I’ll return him his powers…but my eye will be always on him because he proved that he is a sneaky creature.”

Batman gave him a court nod.

“I’m grateful, Odin” he brought his fist to his heart and turned retreated from the hall.

Thor made to follow him but heard his father descending the steps to his throne and stopped sensing that he wanted to talk to him. The younger god turned to his father.

“I can see why you are so…” he grinned “devoted to this mortal. This man has inside him such fire that can blind even the god of thunders…”

“I deeply respect Bruce, father; I’m delighted you understand.”

Thor felt his cheeks reddening and just nodded, exchanging a last gaze with his father before leaving the room.

“DONUTS?!”

The empty, emotionless eyes he had seen in the Pulitzer party in that hotel of Metropolis were now filled with child-like enthusiasm, carelessness and bliss. Clark couldn’t stop a smile grazing his hot face even though his heart was sank in misery and guilt …

Clark couldn’t expect such enthusiasm for some humble donuts.

“Well, there’s a bakery in Metropolis that makes the freshest and most delicious donuts in the States: I bought them right when Ms. Rose took them out of the oven.”

But Bruce had already grabbed one and began gulping greedily.

“Don’t tell me Ms. Rose sells donuts to Superman?” Bruce mumbled chewing. “Imagine the huge advertisement for her!”

“I didn’t think of that…” Clark answered chuckling. “It would have given me free donuts for life…But only poor Mr. Kent is her customer! There’s milk too.”

Clark just goggled mesmerized.

“You really missed donuts, huh?”

Bruce halted his greed seeing that Clark wasn’t eating.

“You won’t eat?”

Clark smiled.
“I’m getting my fill…” he answered the meaning clear.

Clark brushed Bruce’s hair.

“You trusted me” he said solemnly. “You let me touch you even though I had attacked you. Even now I don’t feel worthy of your trust or your gift… Of your body on mine…”

But Bruce interrupted him claiming passionately his lips, answering that way to Clark’s guilt. And Clark melted letting Bruce do as he wanted with his lips, he just savoring the sensations.

When Bruce freed his mouth Clark sighed.

“If you don’t start eating, there won’t be anything left for you…” Bruce warned taking another donut filled with vanilla cream and covered with white chocolate; he moaned from delight and Clark felt tears from glee.

“Are you happy?” Clark’s eyes flickered between hope and fear.

Bruce lowered his eyes and Clark’s breath was caught in his chest.

“It’s difficult for me to say: what happiness is…” he chuckled. “After so many years I forgot how it is…Yet I think that what I’m feeling now…is happiness… I feel…free, like flying” he locked eyes with Clark who was paralyzed and turned his head to let him breathe.

He took another donut and smiled to the Man of Steel.

“If you don’t start eating, you’re going to starve…”

But Clark grinned elated.

“Oh! I’m not going to be hungry ever again…” I’m filled with gorgeous images - images of you…”

Indeed, even now he licked his dry, torn lips and his mouth filled with the taste of donut mixed with the taste from Bruce’s lips…that was heaven…

Ms. Rose smiled relieved.

“Now, let’s get your order…” she opened the window display and the delicious smell of the store became heavier, really mouth salivating. “Mmm…let’s see: ‘Prince’s donuts’ as usual?”

Ms. Rose had named that flavor ‘the Prince’s donuts’ out of a whim and she was so right! But today there was no need for Prince’s donuts…

“No, Ms. Rose…Just my usual…”

No, please…he begged his memory. No more…

“Don’t stop smiling, Star… You lighten my world…”

Bruce’s eyes flashed.

“How can darkness bring light to the sun’s life?”
Superman closed his eyes and caressed Bruce’s cheekbone.

“You’re the meaning of my life; I love you from the first time I laid eyes on you. I still jolt in my sleep having nightmares that you died that damn night…”

……………………………………………………..

“We’re here for swimming…” he snapped releasing Bruce’s lips and the younger man looked him exasperated.

“But I’m not wearing my swim trunks!”

Clark tilted his head on the side regarding wickedly Bruce’s body, his eyebrow arched.

“Actually… I was counting on that…”

He pushed the cardigan off of Bruce’s shoulders and moved to strip him from the rest of his clothes but Bruce twitched causing Clark’s squinting.

“Not in front of Hero…”

Clark chuckled even in his pitiful state remembering how he bribed the kitten with a container with baked salmon.

“Now” he had inhaled deeply “about that swimming…”

And in a second both Bruce and himself were bare naked: Clark took in Bruce’s impressed stare on Superman’s broad chest with the bulked pectorals that were covered with raven hair: Bruce had seen him naked again but every time was as impressed as the first. Clark blushed and beamed because he was thrilled that Bruce longed for him.

“You like what you see?” he smiled and caressed the pink shade over Bruce’s cheekbones.

Bruce locked eyes with him and smiled shyly.

“You’re perfect…”

Clark cupped his cheeks and claimed Bruce’s lips sucking as if finding water after days in the desert and caressing with his tongue the younger man’s cavity. Without unlocking their lips he lifted gently Bruce in bridal style and brought both of them in the water, he walked, his feet sinking in the soft sand and reached the point where the waters deepened with their light emerald color becoming sapphire blue. He tested first the water’s temperature because even if he had scanned it beforehand he wanted to be sure before putting Bruce in. He knew how sensitive he was.

Bruce held Clark’s upper arms and released them as the Man of Steel lowered him slowly flat in the golden-orange hued waters that his upper body sensed that were pleasantly warm. His hands immediately stretched over his head to swim but Clark was holding gently his back with one hand while the other touched the younger man’s chest.

Bruce looked at him.

“Just relax, Star” he used his hand to stretch Bruce’s legs and held his body flat on the water’s surface.

“Easy for you to say…” Bruce snorted and moved his arms gently in the water to stay afloat but Clark touched his face and slowly lowered it more for the water to rinse his hair and reach his ears.
He then smiled reassuringly to Bruce who kept his stare on his crystal blue eyes.

“You trust me, right? Close your eyes and focus on the sound of the sea…”

Bruce huffed.

“Do I have a choice?”

Clark chuckled.

“You’re Bruce Wayne, Batman: you always have a choice and the means to assert it but…” he kissed softly the place where Bruce’s heart beat so pleasantly strong “I think that you will consent…”

Clark’s lips on his flesh sent shivers in the healthy part of his spine and he closed his eyes though Clark felt still the tension in his body. Bruce breathed the way Clark knew that it was a relaxation technique.

Clark couldn’t stop himself with Bruce teasing him like this; playfully, carefree. He wrapped his hands around his armpits, lifted him and kissed roaming his abdominals as the salty sea water ran down. He had his eyes closed devouring the sensation of the wet taut flesh and the sound of Bruce’s heartbeat and giggles.

“So you can’t handle tickling, huh? Smart ass?” he growled unwilling to part with Bruce’s flesh. He had almost lost the man and that had left a tight feeling inside him that he fought all the time to ease.

…………………………………………..

“So much for your bribe” Bruce snorted “Hero wants to come to us…”

The black and white kitten stood right where the wave splashed the shore and stared at them. Clark smirked.

“But cats hate water!”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“However, this cat fights it…”

Hero ran backwards when the waves hit the shore but instantly as the waters ebbed chased them moving his paw aggressively. Only to retreat hastily when the wave came back at him to charge again as the wave withdrew.

Clark watched Bruce’s eyes fill with love and warmth as he laughed with his kitten’s doings. Bruce realized and stopped abruptly stilling his eyes on Clark’s solemn ones.

“Promise me that you won’t stop laughing like this…” Clark sighed.

Bruce tilted his head on the side and blinked.

“If I laugh like this all the time, I’d be facetious…”

“No, you’ll be happy…” he touched feathery the wet locks that had stuck on Bruce’s eyes framing them; he leaned and captured the younger man’s lips almost aggressively.

The bliss, the happiness, the fulfillment of that moment made his aching body find relief and his heart felt light again.

“You doomed everyone who would truly love Bruce and you took from him the chance to find the happiness life owes to him! How can you be so cruel?”

Clark stopped breathing and frankly that would have been the best for him: fainting or dying not thinking anymore of the damage he did to Bruce. The happiness evaporated like his body was slowly inside that cell…

“You’re preposterous! A scum! You’re a complete asshole! Few months ago you were melting for Bruce’s love and whined about his refusal to open up to you; you were complaining because he thought that your feelings weren’t true and when he accepted your love you betrayed him with the first chance! Do you realize what you have done to him? He isn’t going to open his heart to anyone again! You like that, don’t you? You enjoy the hurt you caused, you miserable scum! You like the idea of Bruce not finding the happiness with anyone else! Selfish bastard!”

Lois’ enraged voice sounded exactly as his conscience.

“Bruce needs you!” she sounded really worried and angry.

Clark shook his head.

“He doesn’t: the Avengers are guarding him and Thor…” he smirked. “I bet Thor tracks his vitals all the time.”

“Like you did?” she remarked snidely. “You can’t be sure, Clark: how can you gamble his life?”

“Superman is not welcomed in Gotham: the city and Bruce have their protectors. It’s over!” he murmured and smirked. “You want me to go there in hopes of reconciling with him but that won’t happen, Lois. You have to accept it!”

Lois’ eyes flashed and her lips stretched in wrath.

“NO, I don’t want you there for reconciliation because you’re not worthy of Bruce! Asshole!” she spat and returned furious inside.

………………………………………………….

“Are you crazy? Why you didn’t go to New York? People died, farm boy! People who would have been with their families now if you had helped

Clark crooked his mouth and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“You don’t understand, Lois; after all, you always respect only your own view of things.”

“What?” the woman was enraged. “MY VIEW OF THINGS?! And what should I have understood other than you turning your fuckin’ ass to innocents screaming for help?!”

“Avengers didn’t ask for my help, Lois! If they wanted me there; if they did care about people they would have called me; but they believed arrogantly that they could make it by themselves – so I’m alright with my decision: that will teach them some humility. You really can see the devious politics of them?”

Lois huffed and rattled her teeth.

“Are you nuts?! Or are you high? You really expected an official invitation?” she laughed but her wrath was such that the laughter was cut sharply. “I bet Flash didn’t wait to be invited…This wasn’t a reception, farm boy: this was an emergency!” she fumed. “Remember when Stark, the arrogant, air head tycoon came to your aid at Metropolis’ attack? You had invited him?””

“You’re not yourself, Clark: the man I knew would never have ignored calls for help even to his own death…You’re ruining yourself, farm boy…”

And then another voice filled his mind bringing sweet warmth and more sadness. The voice that filled his happy childhood- his innocence.

“Bollocks!” the old lady shouted and Clark was stunned because he had never heard her like this before. “Your father’s and my greatest fear was that your unique powers would eventually ruin our sweet, good hearted boy: during his last moments, Jonathan asked me to always protect you from the wrong choices; from being corrupted. And I failed!”

“While you were with Bruce you were helping everyone; you were shining like a true sun…now… now you hide the light in you: the light that you permit being little by little put out…I wish I was stronger and better to have managed to protect you…to not lose my only son.”

His Ma loved so much Bruce and she was right.

“Even Superman went awry…”

“The only one that is losing his path is you, Clark.!

“I want us to be friends, Lois.”

“My friend is lost…”

He heard again New Yorkers speaking about his absence during their need; expressing their sadness.

Superman gathered the few drops of courage he had and yanked his head only to be attacked by an aggressive wave of excruciating pain.

He had betrayed everyone that loved him; he caused his loved ones pain; he let innocent people die…

They were right: Clark had died, Superman had died…Nobody would ever care about his fate and they were right to do so. He was alone because he chose that.

“I’ll stand to your side throughout this, unless you decide otherwise…”

Bruce wore under his armor a jean and a long sleeved T-shirt because he was certain that Odin would let him speak to Loki – there was no other option. He wasn’t going to speak to Loki as Batman.

They couldn’t bring his wheelchair along so the only way was Thor holding him in his arms. Bruce always felt uncomfortable when someone was holding him like that except if it was Tony or…But he could tell that Thor had no problem with that.
“Thank you” he said to him.

“Don’t mention it” Thor answered.

Loki’s cell was in a tall, slim tower without any embellishments; just dark blue steep granite. Thor crossed a dark, narrow corridor drenched in darkness that only Mjolnir’s blue light illuminated. He stopped in front of a black door without window or hinges.

Thor didn’t have to do anything before sounds like huge padlocks being unlocked echoed through the corridor and the door opened; he walked inside.

Loki frowned hearing the invisible padlocks of his cell’s door unlocking and his eyes widened seeing his visitors.

“The honey moon suite is in the next building!” he uttered chuckling. “So you decided to make it formal? It was about time! I was shipping you ages ago!”

Thor stared at Bruce and then turned to his brother.

“Bruce wanted to see you.”

Loki looked at Bruce not changing his position; he was sitting cross legged on the stony floor of his small, empty cell.

“Oh! The sun wanted to enlighten my humble new residence!”

“Can you leave us?” Bruce asked Thor and the blond placed him carefully on the only thing in the cell: a square rock.

“If he attempts anything…”

“He won’t…” Bruce mumbled quietly.

Loki cackled and Thor left.

“Are you paying back my visits to your dungeon?” he asked when they were left alone.

Bruce wanted to be fast.

“I’m here to ask you something, Loki.”

“Asking? From me? Look at me, babe: I’m in a dungeon, without my powers and though I’m not chained” he lowered his voice to a whisper “big, bad Odin has spells in the space not allowing me to do much. Actually, I think that chains would be better… I have a soft spot for bondage…”

Bruce shook his head.

“You can be outside this dungeon and get your powers back.”

Loki tilted his head to the side and looked Bruce slyly behind his raven hair.

“Once I could take any form I wanted…mmm…I wonder…maybe someone is making fun of me taking the form of little Bruce?”

Bruce huffed.
“No. I’m Bruce Wayne and I came here to ask your help. Earth is in great danger, Loki.”

The mischievous god raised his palms in surrender.

“I didn’t do it this time.”

“Yes but this time you can help so this threat is defeated.”

Loki arched an eyebrow and regarded Bruce twitching his mouth in disbelief.

“Tony told me that an alien called Darkseid is ready to launch an attack on Earth. He is really powerful, a New God and has captured Superman; Princess Diana was a fake, an ally of his set to trap Superman. Darkseid will erase Earth and slaughter humans.”

“Wow! And where I come in this?”

“You can help in this fight. You created that gas that weakens super powered beings; you can take any form you want and you can mind control the others.”

Loki pouted.

“And not only these… Stark knows about you being here? Because last time I saw him he almost killed me.”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“No, he doesn’t.”

Loki yanked his head and laughed.

“Then it is your initiative with my dear brother? And why you think I would accept to help; I might not care about humans or Earth: have you thought of that? Not to mention that this Darkshit you say might eat me for breakfast.”

“You are more than Darkseid’s breakfast. You possess great power.”

Loki groomed his hair with his hands.

“Possessed.”

“If you’re willing to help Odin will set you free and give you back your powers” Bruce said determined and Loki frowned.

“Oh, boy! You spoke to big ol’ Odin – wow! You’re more than it meets the eye, huh, kid?”

Bruce gulped.

“No, I’m just scared…”

Loki stared at the human who was pale like that time he had found Joker ready to rape him in the cell of his tower. Well, he had tried to help that human then yet…

“And why do you think I’d care about Earth? I attacked the planet.”

“I think that you are capable of great things, Loki – good things. And I know that deep inside you’re not that evil. When Darkseid’s green creatures attacked me you protected me; when Joker tried to… use me, you stopped him and dressed me ready to move me to a warm, safe place, remember? If you don’t remember I do… You can prove to anyone that you’re more than they think.”

Loki noticed the detail about Darkseid ordering that attack against Bruce in the island.

“So Darkshit has you on his target?”

Bruce didn’t expect to hear that and licked his lips.

“I…I don’t know. But the important thing is that he won’t stop in Earth: he wants to bring the entire universe to its knees and establish his order of things.”

Loki rolled his eyes.

“Like a James Bond villain: no originality” he tsked and narrowed his eyes. “Why doing it to prove anything? I don’t care what the Asgardian losers think about me!”

Bruce locked eyes with the raven haired god.

“Even better!” he said slyly. “Do it for the fun of humiliating an arrogant giant blue God who thinks that he is superior to everyone!”

Loki smirked and his eyes shone.

“Now you’re talking!” and then he frowned “you said…blue?”
Chapter 83

Kelly was sitting with her legs folded on the white L leather couch in Thomas Elliot’s vast living room. The girl was staring confused her boyfriend who was slumped in his leather chair behind his elegant desk. From the moment she arrived he settled at his desk in the right corner of the living room and didn’t move from there.

She didn’t know a lot but she was sure that this had to do with the man that visited Leslie Thompkins two days ago. Since then Thomas was avoiding her; he came to the free clinic for his shifts yet they didn’t talk and even worse he cancelled their dates.

The young nurse decided that she had to find out what was wrong and even help if she could because this sudden change of behavior wasn’t characteristic of Thomas. She felt that something had upset and made him sad and perhaps she could do something.

So she came here even if he didn’t answer her calls because she was worried. He opened, greeted her but nothing more…For the last hour Thomas sat in that chair silent.

His mood was definitely more than gloomy: he didn’t speak to her; he barely glanced at her. He was clearly sad and angry. He had on his priceless, shining, rose wood desk a bottle of whiskey and sipped once in a while from the square crystal glass until it was empty. Then he was refilling it.

He wasn’t drunk but Kelly hadn’t seen him drinking so much till now. He was staring with blank eyes on his desktop computer’s screen and gritted now and then his teeth.

Kelly couldn’t bear seeing him like this; she had come here to offer her help, to do something for her boyfriend and sitting and watching wasn’t an option. She left her place on the couch and slipped to his desk carefully; not that he would have acknowledged her anyway; he was too absorbed in his thoughts.

She approached him and wrapped her arms around his neck tenderly. He didn’t seem startled but didn’t glance at her either. Kelly pressed her lips but didn’t give up: she touched her lips to his ear inhaling his perfume that she adored.

Only then Thomas looked at her; hard at first as if he was ready to attack her – Kelly felt her blood running cold although she knew that he wasn’t capable of such deeds. Thomas understood and smiled caressing her forearm on his neck.

When he heard his door bell and saw that stupid nurse Thomas was really pissed: what that bimbo needed more than the cancellation of their dates to realize that he didn’t want to see her anymore? But no, she was from that kind of women that once with a man stick to him no matter what. And he was Dr. Thomas Elliot: certainly the little slut wouldn’t let such a catch to slip from her net…

She had come to his apartment to play the worrying, the carrying while in reality she just wanted to keep him in her loop…Ugh! Thomas wanted so much to curse her and sent her to the Hell so that he would be alone with his plans and thoughts…yet he knew that it was still too early for that.

Thomas knew to be patient in order to achieve his goals and in this case this dumb broad might be still of use…so he swallowed his irritation and contained himself only to give her the silent treatment and focus on what really mattered.

“I’m sorry, babe” he said sweetly and met her lips with his. “I’m bad to you tonight…” no mood to entertain you…
“Don’t say that, Tommy…It’s just I feel you’re sad for some reason and…you don’t deserve that. And…and I want to help…If I can…”

Her eyes fell on the screen where photos of Bruce Wayne and articles recent and past were all over. Thomas caught her gaze and smiled.

“Yeah…he is the reason I’m in no mood tonight” he chuckled. “And yesterday and the day before yesterday…”

Kelly frowned: as far as she knew Thomas hadn’t met Bruce Wayne those last days: how Bruce Wayne could have affected him so much?

“But you two didn’t meet lately” she uttered what she was thinking and Thomas cackled.

“He doesn’t need to meet me to make me feel bad” he said holding Kelly’s hands that were still around his neck.

Kelly shook her head.

“Tommy, I really don’t understand why he has such influence on you to…to cause you such sadness even without interacting with you. Why is he so important to you anyway?” she was thinking that this reached the verges of obsession but she didn’t say it.

He chuckled and withdrew his hand from hers. It was obvious what she was thinking.

“I’m not a pervert, honey” he said sarcastic with the boredom from her useless presence peaking. “I just wanted to redeem myself for what I had done to him during our childhood” his eyes found the young billionaire on the screen. “Bruce was younger than me but he was a child with above average intelligence so we were in the same class at the school for gifted children; I was a kid from a troubled family faced with an alcoholic father…” he chuckled “not that this is an excuse but witnessing all the love Bruce was getting from his parents and everyone else – listening everyone speak about the Prince of Gotham praising his beauty, his sweetness, his goodness, calling him an angel…you understand?”

Kelly was staring at him with her brown eyes wide.

“People were so stupid, so unfair: they kept adoring and praising a boy that had everything! He was just a spoiled, pampered brat while I was struggling hard for everything I achieved… but still I couldn’t get the attention, the love he had… that made me hate the stupid prince of Gotham; I envied him because he had everything I didn’t. He was happy; he was loved by everyone…”

He arched his eyebrows meeting Kelly’s eyes that now seemed sympathetic.

“I know, it was crazy but I was in great suffering and Bruce…he was so happy pampered in so much love and adoration!” he shook his head “you probably don’t understand and I don’t expect you to…”

Kelly shook her head in denial and caressed his shoulders.

“No, Tommy, don’t say that…I do feel for you…”

Thomas grinned with a shine in his eyes that Kelly didn’t understand that was gleeful. Of course you do, honey…he thought rolling his eyes inside.

“So I had no choice but to…I tormented the poor boy…I was calling him names; I was bullying him; I even torn his favorite toys knowing that this would hurt his dumb heart; I made his life in school and everywhere else a hell…” he laughed. “It was unfair but then seemed so right…I felt so good; like having my revenge over society’s injustice. But then Bruce’s parents were murdered and he disappeared only to be declared dead a few days later… I felt awful…I didn’t realize the reason then but gradually I understood how unfair I was to him; how bad I was…and his horrid end in the hands of those thugs” he inhaled deeply “I was feeling as if I had caused it to the poor boy that in fact did nothing wrong to me.”

He kept watching Kelly’s reactions and thankfully the dumb thing seemed touched by his confession.

“Since then guilt burnt my insides and urged me to become something useful to the society so that even in that way I could redeem myself…but it was never enough…The boy with the wet eyes when I destroyed his favorite staffed toy kept haunting me” giving such pleasure…

Kelly caressed his hair and Thomas gulped his snigger.

“And then one day after eighteen years I learnt that Bruce was alive and Falcone had kept him as his slave all these years; the details of the abuse and tortures my victim faced came like blows to me…I felt like a warm remembering how I was envious of his happiness those days…My envy then could have jinxed him…” he chuckled “I know how crazy that sounds… but since then I made my goal to meet him again and ask him to forgive me and perhaps be his friend now…”

Well…not exactly friend.

“To help him fight the trauma” by getting him inside a good loony bin where he always belonged. “And find that old happiness I marred then with my malignity.”

Kelly pouted and kissed him softly in the forehead.

“You’re so sweet, Tommy…”

“But I hesitated…I didn’t have the courage to move: Bruce would be right to not want me near him. After all the trauma and pain he suffered from Falcone Bruce would rightly want only his most beloved and trusted people around him – a wounded puppy” that I’d happily kick.

Kelly shook her head and Thomas sighed.

“When a new tragedy found Bruce and he was seriously injured and fixed in a chair I clenched my jaw and I decided to come back in Gotham and help him overcome this new calamity: it was the only way for me to breathe easier; to restore some of the bad I did. I tried…I tried to approach him; I offered him my friendship, my services – I have a vast experience with complex spinal injuries: I can give him back his mobility. I spoke to Leslie and Stark…But still…Bruce spat my offer and chose Dr. Strange, someone who is clearly unable to be a surgeon anymore…only to humiliate me because there can’t be another reason for choosing someone incompetent like Dr. Strange.”

Kelly gulped and Thomas nodded.

“Bruce found his chance to take revenge for what I did to him in our childhood” he arched his eyebrows and pressed his lips. “I don’t blame him: now it’s his turn – now I regretted everything and I opened my heart to him he can pay back my childish wrong deeds. After all, Bruce never had the chance to mature emotionally and mentally – a traumatized youth can be so immature and vicious against whoever he deems his enemy.”

“Tommy, I know it is hard for you…but it is his right to choose his surgeon – and I’m not sure he wanted to take some kind of revenge.”
Thomas felt anger boiling in his blood: stupid bimbo! He ruffled his hair.

“I know, I know…perhaps you’re right – sometimes I think too that I’m exaggerating but you haven’t seen his eyes when we are alone: so defensive, so hostile…” he huffed and shook his head. “He had more than enough and I understand his reactions yet it hurts because I really wanted to help; I offered him my emotions and he stepped on them crushing everything. He humiliated me.”

The young nurse pressed her lips.

“I know how you feel, Tommy…but there is nothing you can do about this; you are a great doctor and you have helped so many people. Nobody is going to give a damn about what you did when you were a child – a child in pain that is. So just forget Wayne and the surgery; go on with your life, Tommy.”

He smiled and caressed the back of her hand and then brought it to his lips to kiss the soft skin.

“I never give up, babe…” he said with a gleeful shine in his eyes and Kelly smiled believing that that meant that he actually considered what she just said.

“I intended to come to Gotham to meet you.”

The night had just fallen and although Metropolis was vibrant at night as in daylight this part of the city, near the docks, was quiet and relatively dark: like the forest that hides a monster ready to attack.

“I’m glad you didn’t” a low growl answered from the shadows. “Gotham is watched.”

“So you came to Metropolis to meet me” Diana dressed in plain jeans and a long sleeved white T-shirt walked towards Batman in the depth of the dark alley; her long black hair fell freely to her straight back. “I guess the phone you gave me sends a tracing signal, right?” she smirked.

The alley was littered with garbage and a cat hastily ran away. The light from the public lights reached the space weak, incapable to do more than form more shadows.

Batman stepped out of the shadows and his lenses met her eyes.

“Actually, the phone is untraceable; I couldn’t risk losing your trust by monitoring your moves.”

She cocked an eyebrow.

“Then how did you know that you’ll find me in Metropolis?”

Batman walked closer to her: she was at his height.

“Ivy is in Metropolis and I knew you’d want to watch and know everything about her; also, I read in the news about someone who saved a woman who was attacked: someone so strong and fast that nobody could describe.”

Diana smiled and Batman tilted his head.

“And I do have your number so once I got here I contacted you.”

“I tried to be as stealthy as possible when I saved that woman – I hope that this didn’t ruin your plan for secrecy.”
Batman shook his head.

“No” he said sharply “actually I wanted to thank you for not acting against the impostor right away. I understand how difficult might be for you to watch her posing as yourself and not confront her.”

Diana shrugged.

“I know that patience is the key of the victory. However you didn’t ask me to not act though you wanted to stay inert.”

Batman crooked his mouth.

“I would never patronize you; I was sure that you would understand our need for time before striking. I believe that we share the certainty that your sudden appearance during the fight would be a fatal blow at them.”

Diana nodded.

“Keeping a secret ace in the sleeve…Attacking εξ απίνης…”

“The element of surprise…” Batman said the same thing in English.

The Princess of the Amazons arched her eyebrows.

“You know the ancient writers?”

“My teacher adored them” he answered “and he was right.”

Diana narrowed her eyes.

“Careful estimation and planning… Preparation time is crucial and our enemy shouldn’t get a hint that we know his intentions before the time comes. On the other hand, I have time to get precious information.”

Batman looked at her without commenting and she continued.

“You were the one who managed to free Gotham from the rule of Falcone, a powerful mobster whom nobody else dared to face” she grinned “then you united the super powered beings of the planet in order to vanquish the League of Shadows. I’m impressed: truly, a warrior of Nemesis.”

Batman set his jaw.

“You give me more credit than I deserve.”

She inhaled.

“I doubt that but I admire your modesty” she inclined her head. “You know that Superman has disappeared.”

The Gothamite nodded.

“They got him, right?”

“That was their intention from the beginning.”

Diana crossed her arms over the chest.
“Planting a fake Amazon to impress and eventually seduce him to take him away from Bruce Wayne.”

Bruce frowned under the cowl; he didn’t want Diana give attention to Bruce Wayne.

“There’s no proof that Superman had anything with Wayne. But yes, they sent Ivy to impersonate you and by using feromones and spells they managed to control him. Their goal was to isolate Superman from his allies and humans so that when he was captured nobody would search for him. Darkseid had an old grudge for Kryptonians and he considered him the biggest obstacle to his plans.”

“But we know the truth so we can save him.”

This was so appealing to Bruce: saving Clark from pain. But they had to be careful.

“Not yet” he said nonchalant. “Any movement on our part will alarm Darkseid about being aware of his menace and plans; so he’ll attack us sooner before we are ready.”

Diana nodded and Batman yanked his head.

“I’ll take care of Superman.”

Diana cocked an eyebrow but didn’t comment.

“I was thinking…” she said. “As you said Superman’s love for Wayne wasn’t proved yet it would suit Superman perfectly.”

Batman shrugged.

“Superman’s taste isn’t my concern.”

“I read everything I found about Wayne…A child that watched his parents getting murdered; a child that was held slave by his parents’ murderer faced with constant horrific abuse. A boy growing up alone fighting not only his loss but also the cruelty of the people around him. How this boy survived? The pain, the despair, the tortures, the malnutrition…” she frowned. “Even a fully grown up warrior would have a hard time surviving more so a small boy…Bruce Wayne not only survived but also he became a charismatic man who took over his parents’ enterprises and helps people around him… despite the evil that still threatens him: this Joker who kidnapped him recently; that horrendous video that was broadcasted showing him being abused. This man is really remarkable, a real fighter even though he doesn’t use his fists or weapons…I’d like to meet him.”

Batman set his jaw.

“Once the truth is revealed everyone would want to meet the real Princess, so perhaps you’d have your chance. Yet I’m not here to speak about Wayne.”

“Why not? You did save him” she said stabbing him with her beautiful, shining eyes.

Bruce didn’t have time for that and he was really exhausted: he had taken more painkillers after he returned from Asgard but their effect was ending. The pain all over his back crawled slowly to the surface.

“Gotham is my interest.”

The Amazon cocked an eyebrow.
“You intervened to stop Falcone from escaping with him as hostage.”

“As you said my goal was to stop Falcone and prevent him from harming another person. I don’t care about the identity of people in danger.”

Diana narrowed her eyes.

“Of course. How’s the Cat?”

“Fine” he opened one of his belt’s compartments and gave her a USB stick.

She took it.

“I guess you know how to use a laptop since you’ve efficiently searched for information” the Amazon nodded. “In this stick you’ll find everything known about a gang that acts in Metropolis, Intergang – they meticulously have neutralized every other gang of the city and acquired weaponry and ammunition.”

“This gang is related with Darkseid.”

Batman nodded.

“The gang is his. He was in Earth years watching and organizing; he used his mind control powers to make the authorities release thugs he needed in his gang. He also manipulated others to join Intergang or acting according to his wishes. Eventually the gang dominated Metropolis’ underworld.”

“Superman was mind controlled by Ivy so he didn’t care a lot, huh?”

Batman shook his head.

“Much of this info is from Superman’s initial research but then as Ivy’s influence became stronger he didn’t have the chance to search more.”

Diana nodded.

“You want me to keep an eye on Intergang because our enemy will definitely use the thugs to create casualties and diversion, right?”

Batman tilted his head.

“The Amazon Princess knows so many things about warfare that there is no need for me to want or ask something from her” she grinned acknowledging Batman’s diplomacy in addressing an Amazon leader. “After the government is informed about the threat then police will handle that and we will focus on the Darkseid and his minions. Before that our forces will assembly to organize our battle moves. In the meantime, Tony Stark adjusts their guns to be effective on Darkseid’s parademons; Dr. Strange forms a mind shield so that Darkseid can’t see in the minds of the world’s leaders and control them – this will enable us to set the governments’ security forces in action; Flash is already informed and so are the Avengers and Asgard.”

The Princess nodded and locked her eyes with his lenses.

“Darkseid set his pawns on the chessboard and you are doing the same…” she saw that Batman was ready to retort to that and yanked her head. “I know natural born generals when I see them…and you are one” she inclined her head. “I’m honored to fight along with you.”
Batman brought his fist over his heart.

“The honor is all mine, Princess. We are blessed we have you on our side.”

The unbearable heat had been replaced from bone crashing cold; he could hear his own teeth rattling…

Hopelessness was eating his insides like erosion: he had the distant awareness that it was something the Kryptonite and the red radiation do to him yet he didn’t have the power to fight it off. He was so weak…and in pain. He had done so much evil that was robbing him from every mood to try and overcome this pathetic state: he deserved that torture and more – he deserved to rot there slowly drowning in his own filthy existence. No, no…This was what his enemies wanted: him stuck in depression and self pity not trying to fight his fate…

How could Bruce fight that for eighteen years and then fight and defeat all his enemies?

He let his head roll to his shoulder. Not that he could do anything even if he didn’t feel like that: the Kryptonite chains and the red radiation dispersed all his strength.

Bruce… His past adoration, his past affection – his true feelings - returned like waterfall to warm him from inside. Bruce was so strong; so adamantly moral: a real star that he wasn’t worthy of looking at.

His mother was right: Bruce was a power that bettered him…that galvanized the good inside him.

His Ma…He remembered her wrinkled sad face when he took off after he sensed Diana; her agony when he promised her that it wouldn’t be long before he returned.

His Ma knew about Diana; she never liked her but his Ma’s request for him to come to the farm it could be because she learnt the whole truth…: it wasn’t just mother’s instinct. It could be that Bruce asked her to call him to the farm in order to protect him because Bruce suspected that Ivy was going to surrender him to Darkseid?

It could be that Bruce never stopped caring about him and was in the trail of Darkseid and Bagdana? Bruce knew that Bagdana was behind all this and had his eyes on him? Did Bruce know that Superman’s behavior was caused by Diana’s and the demon’s powers?

No, he couldn’t hope. How could Bruce even suspect such conspiracy and especially after his betrayal? No, it was Superman’s fault that Bruce couldn’t be prepared for the danger.

So he couldn’t just wait to be saved…it was his fault: Superman didn’t have the power or the will to resist to Ivy’s charm; he didn’t have even the prudence to listen to Bruce’s warnings and make the tests.

His hatred for himself was such that his fists clenched without even realizing: he should find a way to get out of his cell and go back to Bruce – to warn him about Bagdana’s plans. To warn everyone.

Clark gritted his teeth and clenched more his fists to force some strength to his trembling, suffering body. But the Kryptonite chains felt like burning his skin more and the red radiation became so stronger that he could see the nightmarish color even with closed lids.

Suddenly, his fever became a fire burning his mind and fueling the torturing thirst.

Water…if only he had some water…
What was that? Something refreshingly cool and soft swept his hot forehead. And then some drops of water fell on his parched lips; his mouth opened on its own accord to suck the life giving liquid.

“Bruce…” he knew that Bruce would find him.

But a cruel snigger sank him in his previous despair: no, it wasn’t Bruce. This laughter couldn’t be Bruce’s; it was a woman’s laughter and it was filled with malice.

He knew who she was and had no mood to see her. He closed his mouth stubbornly even though he craved for more water but he wouldn’t accept anything from her.

But then a new excruciating pain towered every other pain and he groaned: it was from his groin. Iron pinches were crushing his genitals. He opened his eyes to face Ivy’s green eyes and her poisonous smirk. Her hand was over his groin and her fingers squeezed his genitals.

“Bruce…Really, Kal El?” she asked slyly. “You have the nerve to expect that the little brat would ever come to you again? He doesn’t give a damn for you after everything you did to him.”

Clark gulped; it was true. But he couldn’t bear listening to her uttering Bruce’s name: she used devious means to make him hurt Bruce.

“Don’t even utter his name!”

His eyes shone with a red hue that Ivy wasn’t sure if it was a reflection of the red radiation or his ire. However she smirked. She wasn’t in Wonder Woman’s blue and red attire; her gorgeous body was in Poison Ivy’s form. Almost naked with thread like stems wrapping longingly her juicy curves ending to green-silver leaves that covered her most private parts. Although Superman all these time couldn’t resist the body of this woman now seeing the same body scantily dressed resulted to more nausea…

“Why? Is he so pure that I’m gonna defile him?” she laughed. “You really didn’t realize that your little whore wasn’t a virgin when you put your big, hot prick inside him?” she pumped painfully his length and Clark stopped breathing and clenched his teeth to not give her the satisfaction of moaning in pain.

“Don’t touch me!” he growled finding a way to steam his pain.

She cocked an eyebrow and her green eyes sparkled.

“Really now…Don’t tell me you don’t like it…all this time you were burning in my arms and begging for more. The brat was entirely obliterated every time I kissed you.”

Clark found the strength to cackle and arched his eyebrows.

“Only due to Bagdana’s tricks…you really don’t fool yourself believing that I’d ever choose you over Bruce…”

Ivy clenched her teeth and her grip on Superman’s genitals became fiercer but his satisfaction for her irritation was such that he forgot the pain.

She grabbed his chin and brought her lips to his despite his resistance pushing her green tongue inside his mouth like the old times.

“I could kiss you with my fatal kiss…” she said sensually licking her lips “in your miserable state it would suffice to end your pathetic useless existence…But I won’t do you the favor…Bagdana will certainly want to show you what use he has for your bitch – the only use he is worthy of: being a whore. And you will watch before you die knowing that your Bruce will be eternally the demon’s whore!”

Superman knew that this was the plan and he had to do something to influence even barely things.

“Oh! It seems that it’s time for a war council” Ivy said playfully winking at Superman. “Darkseid is calling.”

Ivy touched the sensor on the side of Superman’s coffin-like cell to make the door slither sealing the jail.

“Wait!” he said and she crooked her mouth. “You don’t believe that Darkseid will keep his word and give to you what you want. He destroys planets and he hates humans; he will exterminate every human being. And you, Ivy, are still a human being.”

She rolled her eyes and tilted her head on the side.

“No, you’re wrong, Supes. I was once a human… and it was awful. Humans treated me like rubbish, like they treat my defenseless green friends – like they abuse nature. They made me an outcast because I loved nature and defended her children from humans’ evil; they jeered me, they used me fooling me to assist them in their stupid purposes – one of them almost killed me. But my friends saved me and gave me their power and love. Now I’m not Pam Isley, the pure idealist who believed that she could persuade those fools with reason – now I know better: humans can’t be reasoned; they understand only pure, cruel force like Darkseid’s and mine” she shrugged a shoulder. “They deserve to perish and I will help Darkseid in this…It is time to bring my revenge to its fulfillment: Poison Ivy won’t be anymore the haunted murder but will reveal her true self – the powerful Goddess of Nature.”

Superman shook his head fighting the urge to roll his eyes.

“If you assist Darkseid in this you won’t be the Goddess of Nature: you will be a monster!”

Ivy’s green eyes flashed angrily and her lips crooked in a nasty smirk as she stabbed with her gaze their prisoner.

“You know everything about monsters, huh, Kal? You are the monster and this gets reflected in everyone else…” she saw Superman frowning and she caressed the lock that had stuck in the sweat of his forehead. “I was hard on him, Diana” she said mimicking his voice. “We made love but I was violent.” She cocked an eyebrow. “You raped him, Kal El” she breathed leaning close to his face sucking his guilt. “You forced a disabled, defenseless human…You made him bleed, don’t you, boyscout? Exactly like Falcone was doing to him every day…”

She cackled and Clark really ached from this laughter and the truth of her words.

“Some boyscout really…” she snorted touching the sensor and watching the transparent door closing. “It was nice making him squeal? Convulse like a dying fish under you? Didn’t you hear his heart beating in panic? I did when I played with him back in Dolcetto. Didn’t you sense his despair?” she smirked and nodded. “No, you didn’t care about what you were causing; you didn’t give a shit about his suffering…and after these, you have the nerve to call others monsters? Where is your conscience, big hero? It’s not as super as the rest of your parts, huh?”

She laughed and spat at the floor in front of his casket-like cell. Superman’s eyes followed her as she crossed the corridor away to Darkseid’s war council…but he wasn’t seeing anywhere…inside him the void washed off everything leaving only disgust…for himself.

Gordon gazed at the night sky; the view from the MCU rooftop was always the same patch of the gloomy Gotham sky but still Jim found it pleasant every time; it always helped him to relax even in the midst of difficult times.

Not that now they were facing difficult times: the city’s mob was still hiding in their holes after the last year’s cleansing when the League killed the three crime lords; Joker with Harley Quinzel, his new lackey, was out of the streets again.

Yet Jim couldn’t rest because there was all the time that nudging feeling inside that kept him vigilant; maybe it was this city, his experiences over the years, as his wife was saying ‘the Gotham effect’. For Jim however it wasn’t just an abstract thing – it always took a shape sooner or later; this time it was the case of the Wayne video.

The despicable deed of broadcasting the boy’s torture, clearly to cause pain and distress to the young man now that he finally was free from his abusers. The sadist bastard who broadcast the video wanted to remind Wayne his past and plunge him again into nightmares – perhaps even to destabilize him mentally…

Jim looked at the full moon. The person who did that was hidden behind the dead hacker, happy that they wouldn’t discover him/her. Yet Jim wouldn’t give up until the responsible was brought to justice. Because the one who hated Wayne so much would hit again especially since he didn’t manage to break the young man. They had to make it even if the case was difficult and the research led them to dead end.

He huffed and his breath didn’t form smoke: spring was in her midst and the weather was mild. There was even a discreet spring smell in the air under the heavy smells of the big city.

Jim hadn’t lit the Bat signal though he intended to ask help from Batman in the case of the video: he didn’t want to rely on the vigilante for police work and he knew that the man had many things to do. Yet he learnt to never deny any help that could lead to solutions.

Tonight he didn’t have to light the signal for his ally to come because his ally contacted him and asked to meet at the rooftop. Perhaps Jim’s odd feeling of uneasiness had to do with Batman because Jim had the suspicion that something was off with his ally: Batman might have arrested Joker and helped Thor and Dr. Strange yet Jim wasn’t convinced that everything was fine with the vigilante.

“Nice night…” a low growl broke the silence.

Jim closed his eyes swallowing his startle and turned behind.

“Yeah…spring reaches even Gotham” he shrugged. “Joker, Crane and Dr. Quinzel are back in Arkham: we have enhanced the building’s security. Dr. Hugo Strange is appointed as the new Head” he arched his eyebrows and huffed “let’s hope that he’d have a better luck than his predecessors…”

Batman gave a sharp nod.

“I’m not here for Joker.”

Jim frowned.

“Then?”
“Something big is coming and you need to keep the city guarded.”

Now Jim’s gut feeling was proved right. He licked his lips.

“A new gang?”

“Worse. It isn’t Gotham centered. Someone powerful is going to launch a world scale attack but he might have a special interest in Gotham so we have to be ready for his attack.”

Jim’s eyebrows twitched but other than that he kept his nonchalant, stoic expression.

“I must speak with the mayor and the state governor…”

“You won’t speak to anyone yet.”

Jim frowned.

“Falcone-like situation?”

Batman shook his head.

“No, but the enemy can penetrate the minds of leaders and control them – we don’t want him to know that we are aware of his existence and plans.”

Jim raised his arms.

“We can’t do much without the assistance of the central government. We can’t fight if the world leaders aren’t informed to contribute.”

“They will be informed as soon as our preventive measures are on so that the enemy is blocked from their minds.”

Jim pursed his lips and shook his head.

“You said ‘we’?”

“Every benign power of this world is informed and our actions are already in motion but there are things that must be done in every city because it’s certain that during the fight thugs will try to take advantage; and our enemy will manipulate them to create chaos behind our backs endangering the lives of innocent. We can’t risk that so police must be ready.”

Gordon nodded.

“I’ll increase patrols and officers in the streets gradually till you inform the authorities above me and it is escalated to red alarm; I’ll increase security to the Blackgate and Arkham – they will probably attempt to let loose the maniacs to force the heroes split their powers in order to help the cities. You can count on Gotham’s police.”

Batman pressed his lips.

“If I didn’t I wouldn’t have come to you. We’ll be in contact.”

Gordon hesitated to say what he intended since the situation sounded so crucial that Batman’s attention needed to be there.

“Say it” Batman said understanding.
“It’s about the case of that video…you know, with Wayne.”

Batman nodded.

“We are sure that there was someone else behind Isaac” the Commissionaire continued. “We search Isaac’s connections to reach the one who sent him the CD but we face a dead end.”

Batman knew what Jim wanted to say and there was no need for him to utter the words.

“I’m working on it…” he said sharply and dived to the void.

Gordon shook his head and raised his eyebrows.

“Of course you do.”

He sensed the ancient ritual; the irresistible smell of human greed. It was ages since the last time someone did that…after that last time it seems that they had given up…A smirk carved his face and followed the summoning: he didn’t hope anymore after hundreds of failed attempts but still butchering those who were stupid and arrogant enough to dare play with him was always fun: a small revenge for what humans took from him.

He emerged and solidified in a basement: a cold, empty, dark basement smelling of the ancient perfume of summoning – the ancient brass vessel in the corner emanated the smoke of the burning ingredients.

Only a human presence – his sacrifice: he sensed that this time it was a child – he smirked. Human corruption had reached new highs…Offering a child to a demon. Till now every time was a woman or a man…but a child? They really believed that a child would satisfy Bagdana? This was outrageous! And entertaining.

He cast his eyes on the presence curious to see the child that they chose.

It was a boy tied on the floor; his arms stretched over his head with his wrists tied together, the rope leading to an iron ring from the wall; his legs bent in the knees waiting for him. They had blindfolded him knowing that he shouldn’t see the demon…His skinny body was covered with black silk. The boy was trembling in cold and fear…he was really skinny.

He snorted: Ra’s Al Ghul wanted to make fun of him…it wasn’t enough that his ancestor killed Lilith? Now he mocked him offering him this pathetic lamp. At least, this time the human who would taste his wrath after the failed copulation would be Al Ghul…Oh! He couldn’t wait to rip him to pieces.

He approached the boy and took the fabric off of him revealing his entirely naked body…the poor kid convulsed more from terror clearly sensing what was ahead. His body was immature but nice looking showing signs of blooming beauty: too bad the boy was to die tonight…

Time to get what they offered to him…He grabbed the boy’s thighs opening them more for his enormous length – he cackled thinking of what it’d take for that tiny entrance to accept him…

The boy screamed and sobbed. But he although should snigger at him he felt an odd need…

Bagdana took off the blindfold off the boy’s eyes…and stared: he hadn’t seen more beautiful, more special eyes than these. He was reminded of star sapphires only the star was from clear emerald as the boy’s irises formed a shape like star...

Suddenly, he realized that the boy’s eyes were in his, locked, persistent. The boy was afraid and yet his gaze was unyielding even when regarding the yellow cat-like eyes of a demon.

“Humans shouldn’t look demons in the eyes” the boy took away his gaze but it was too late – the demon was intrigued.

It was the first time after ages that he really cared to be inside the body of a human. And he did that pushing to get deeper; the boy was in pain but it wasn’t the first time that the boy was used...Al Ghul didn’t even offered him a pure child...a virgin child.

Yet although that body was already heavily used it was beautiful being inside it...The boy was suffering...was tearing apart yet he felt beautiful...he felt like being revived...like new power, new life slithered inside him lifting him again to the forbidden sky. He ordered new arms to spring from his body in order to get every sense he could from that body: groping his bony buttocks, fondling his scratched from whips back, touching cruelly his breasts; his head multiplied because he needed to taste everything...his tongues licking the boy’s breasts, his abdomens, his genitals...sucking his unripe length.

He knew that boy, he suddenly realized; he had seen him again...an odd sight that was...a small boy wandering in his rugs, on his trembling, skinny, bleeding legs...in the maze of Gotham’s caves with bats keeping him company. They had met before...

Yet what he was feeling now as he thrashed inside the boy had nothing to do with caves and earth; he was flying again, he was in Lilith’s hot body breathing freedom, tasting happiness, joy, elevation...It was fulfillment again after millions of years. He moved faster and pushed deeper as every time with Lilith; he could hear the moans, the hot breaths of Lilith urging him for more; he could smell her intoxicating perfume...no, this intoxicating perfume was different but still it had Lilith inside...

The boy was grunting, was screaming; sometimes crying and sometimes just sobbing silently suffering as he was used but Bagdana could hear Lilith’s clear giggle: a melody mesmerizing...

He could sense liquid wetting him; human blood as his teeth sank into the boy’s flesh to feed his hunger for more Lilith. But the blood was too much and the boy’s screams and grunts had silenced; his breaths and heart beat weakly but he couldn’t care for anything else than the glory he was experiencing after an eternity...

His insides roared with satisfaction as his fluids rushed inside the beloved body; the body he missed so much...It was true...He saw a small, cute leaf on the place where the boy’s left big toe should have been: the boy had there the mark. The mark of Lilith!

It was true: that skinny, tortured boy was his Lilith reborn...

“Bagdana is daydreaming about the moment his human whore will be writhing between his legs...” Darkseid’s rough, sarcastic voice cracked and dispersed the basement.

Granny sniggered casting him a hostile glance and Ivy snorted. Bagdana looked at the New God who sniffed at him from his tall granite throne.

Darkseid smirked and before them emerged an image: Bruce entirely naked on the stony floor of this same hall; he was on his stomach and Bagdana held his breath seeing his muscle bound back and his gorgeous, round shaped buttocks... But then Bruce raised his head to look at him and his face was sweaty with black locks framing untidy his sharp cheekbones. Two sapphire-blue eyes glimmered in the light the fires in the vessels cast; there was terror and despair in them and it was breathtaking beautiful yet Bagdana begged for the defiance he was used to…

“I was expecting more from a demon” Darkseid sneered and the image was gone. “For starts being concentrated in what I say: I have a powerful demon in my army and I count on him.”

“For what reason?” the demon cocked one of his thick eyebrows. “I thought you were powerful enough to clear this mess on your own…”

“Why doing the worthless chores myself?” the God retorted and Granny nodded. After all you proved that you are a precious minion; your cunningness makes you a great asset.”

“Well, thanks for the praise” Bagdana crossed his arms over the chest.

“The machine is almost ready, Master” Granny said. “We can use it soon.”

“No. I will use the machine only when Earth’s heroes are defeated: I want them to see the spectacle: it would be the pinnacle of my victory. My celebration!”

“Then what’s the plan?” Ivy in the form of Wonder Woman asked.

“My favorite demon is the master of earth” he stabbed Bagdana with his eyes “he’ll cause earthquakes in every corner of this filthy planet – as you did to get dear Ivy save humans in order to gain Superman’s affections. I want the earth to crack and swallow humans; I want volcanoes explode burning with their lava everything!”

Bagdana pursed his square lips.

“Well, that’s easy…”

Granny snorted but Darkseid stretched his arm towards the demon.

“It should be in order for you to get your share from the spoils” he said threatening. “You must keep in your wicked mind that everything belongs to Darkseid and so does Bruce Wayne: I will give him to you but you have to earn him.”

Bagdana snorted angrily and fume emitted from his non-existing nostrils.

“I thought I earned that by rendering Superman useless and bringing him to you.”

Darkseid smiled and leaned to the back of his throne.

“You showed admirable skills and cleverness, Bagdana; yet I wouldn’t like to lose your abilities before the end.”

Granny cast a nasty look at the demon and turned to Darkseid.

“What do you want me to do, Master?”

“Lead Parademons to hit simultaneously nuclear reactions, dims, energy plants, oil rings and every plane that will be in the air… I want terror and despair everywhere.”

The space before Darkseid’s throne was filled with images from nuclear reactors in flames; dims breaking and water flooding cities; airplanes exploding in the air above big cities and crushing on streets…People running everywhere distraught, screaming for help, crying as parademons were launching at them adding to the terror the fire and the cracked streets had already created.

“I want those fools who call themselves heroes running around without knowing what to do… Alistair and Stitches will lead Intergang in Metropolis killing everyone in their path; at the same time Gotham will be overrun by thugs” Bagdana frowned to Darkseid’s satisfaction. “People will be screaming and begging for help and then their newest heroine, Wonder Woman will appear igniting their hopes. Only to sink them in more despair as she will begin killing people instead either herself or…”

“My friends will have the chance after all these years to get their revenge” Ivy said. “I’ll give them the power to throttle people ensnaring them from their pots; slash them with their thorns from their jails in human parks; trees will smash them under their roots!” her eyes flashed gleefully and Darkseid nodded.

“And only then Darkseid will appear destroying the capital first sending the message of this world’s end; showing to the humans how useless their heroes are. When their terror, their despair, their anger against their failed heroes will reach the zenith the machine will suck their dark energy..!”

“Why Gotham?” Bagdana asked the only thing he cared about.

Darkseid closed his eyes annoyed for the interruption.

“You want Wayne: the thugs will bring him to us. You don’t expect me to waste precious warriors for him.”

Bagdana remembered Superman’s warning; he never trusted Darkseid with Bruce.

“Keep your scum away from Bruce!” he growled stabbing the god with his blazing eyes.

Darkseid arched his eyebrows in irony while Granny gritted her teeth.

“He can’t speak to you like that!” she spat and Bagdana turned his head to her sending her with a sharp gaze to hit the wall.

Granny roared outraged and stood immediately ready to surge at the demon. But Darkseid raised his palm and she stopped at her heels.

“Leave Bruce to me” the demon hissed to Darkseid.

“Your place is at the battlefield” he retorted.

“You’ll have me; but keep the scum away from Bruce” Bagdana said with his eyes locked in a staring battle with Darkseid.

Darkseid smiled.

“Very well. But don’t forget: nothing is yours if I don’t grant it to you…”

Oliver Queen regarded Wayne Manor in front of him. The imposing beautiful building was surrounded from mist as the day had hardly dawned but he didn’t have the patience to wait for the hours to pass. Thankfully, the butler let him cross the gates and he didn’t have to sneak inside raising suspicions.

He didn’t trust Darkseid with Bruce…The New God had vicious intentions that he might have already realized. He had to see Bruce. All these days the butler was always telling him that he was out of town but was that the truth? What if Darkseid had already captured him and held him so he had leverage on Darkseid?

Or…He frowned with a thought crossing his mind as he stepped out of his red Lexus. What if Bruce suspected the truth and was acting to prevent their plans? Bruce was more than clever…

Alfred opened.

“Good morning, Mr. Queen. How may I help you?”

Queen rushed inside as soon as the Englishman showed him in. His eyes scanned the vast, pristine premises.

“Good morning, Alfred. I must see Mr. Wayne.”

Alfred’s slight frown didn’t escape his attention and Bagdana felt that his thought might be right.

“Sir, it is quite early and I am afraid that Mr. Wayne is still asleep.”

“You mean that he is here?” he asked in disbelief.

“You mean that he is here?” he asked in disbelief.

“Exactly, sir. But it is too early for visits.”

Bagdana didn’t believe him; Alfred was lying to him: Bruce wasn’t here. Something had happened to him or he was out in some kind of mission to search the truth – there was only one way to find out. He began running reaching the main marble stair and climbing the steps two at a time; the old butler was impossible to caught up with him.

As soon as he reached the door to the master bedroom – Bruce’s bedroom - he halted abruptly. He closed his eyes and breathed: he was going to find out the truth. If Bruce wasn’t inside then either Darkseid had taken him or the human had suspected that something was wrong and was trying to ruin their plans. So either he would have to confront Darkseid or warn the New God to act sooner.

He grabbed the knob ready to burst in.

“That’s utterly inappropriate for a gentleman!” Alfred said to him outraged breathing quite calm for a man of his age.

“Sorry, Alfred, but I’m not a gentleman” Queen spat without looking at him.

He knocked the door once in a feeble mimicry of discretion and without waiting for an answer because he was sure he wasn’t going to get one, opened the door.
Chapter 84

The vast bedroom was in darkness since the heavy, mahogany curtains were down blocking the pale light of the morning; only the dancing low flames of the stone fireplace opposite the bed cast some light – the spring had come yet the nights were still quite cold in Gotham and for someone in recovery more warmth was necessary.

Queen’s breath stopped and the human heart he was carrying gave a loud jolt: his sensitive hearing had caught the sweet sound first before his eyes met with the sight. It was perfect! In the midst of the darkness, the pale light caressed the human form on the bed...

Bagdana wished Alfred wasn’t there so he could sprout more pairs of eyes to devour… As the weak, red-gold light caressed Bruce’s porcelain skin his features’ beauty was revealed in its entirety since Bruce was fast asleep thus unable to try and conceal his beauty.

His head lay gently on the white silk pillow letting his cheek on, framed by some naughty locks that were fondling the cheekbone as the forehead. His eyelids were covering his eyeballs so softly and silken eyelashes touched feathery the skin. Two rosy lips moved slightly in the calm respiration’s rhythm and Bagdana had to order his legs to not move as they were ready to bring him there to capture those lips in an eternal kiss...

In the tranquility, the relaxation and the blessing of oblivion the deep sleep offered there was no shadow of past and present suffering and torture trying to cover the shine of this beauty...

Bruce was meticulously muffled in velvet blankets however Bagdana could discern the lines of his body. It was so hard to be patient waiting the moment that this body would be again naked in his arms that his whole existence trembled.

A wild, hostile hiss drove him out of his reverie and he acknowledged the white and black fur ball that had rose from his nest on Bruce’s chest; the same kitten that hissed him out of the bedroom when he invaded Bruce’s dreams months ago was stabbing him now with his glowing narrowed eyes that sent the newcomer the message of his animosity exactly like the rest of his aggressive posture.

Alfred cleared his throat as low as he could.

“Sir, I think it is time we left the room before we disturb Master Bruce’s rest” he whispered however the demand was clear.

Queen licked his lips uncomfortable and looked at Alfred with regret. He was ready to follow the butler back yet a quiet changing of breath audible in the silence of the room stopped him.

“Alfred?” a low, hesitant voice asked clearly still muffled in sleep’s effect.

Batman landed smoothly on an alley not too far from the MCU building where he had left Commissionaire Gordon only a few minutes ago. He had parked the Tumbler there: he intended to patrol the city; he had missed Gotham. And then he could return to the Manor and get some sleep.

He felt immediately the presence upon entering the alley however he didn’t take a defensive stance.

“You left me behind…”
He raised his lenses eyeing Catwoman that sat on the Tumbler’s roof with crossed legs. Batman tilted slightly his head on the side.

“You can’t come with me everywhere…”

She jumped down with her eyes flashing dead serious.

“Yes, I can! You left me behind twice last year and that was…” she spat her breath coming out pressed but then calmed down. “You can’t be alone at this point; you’re…”

Batman raised his palm and Catwoman stopped realizing that he didn’t want something like this to be uttered in a public area.

“I’m fine.”

Catwoman came closer and her eyes met his lenses.

“I do hope so; I was sick with worry exactly like the others.”

“I left a note.”

Catwoman cocked her eyebrows and shook her head clenching her waist with both hands.

“Yeah…quite the reassurance! What about Tony” she purposely didn’t use his surname “how you were sure that he wouldn’t notice that you’re gone.”

Batman walked to the Tumbler.

“First, he is too occupied right now and second I was in constant contact with him.”

Catwoman pursed her lips.

“I see…calling him first so he wouldn’t call and figure your run away” she shook her head. “Oh! You’re so wicked!”

He grinned.

“Well, time to go back now” his friend added determined.

Bruce wanted to growl yet the pain he was feeling in his back and the exhaustion made him nod.

“I’ll patrol a bit and I’ll go back.”

“No! We’ll go now! Do you realize that you’re away for two days?! Two days that you definitely didn’t get enough food or rest…No delays, buster! We’re leaving now!”

“Yes, Master Bruce. I most apologize for the disturbance” Alfred answered and walked to his master’s bed.

Queen watched as Bruce used his elbow as support and raised a bit his torso to look puzzled at the second presence in his bedroom. The kitten rubbed to his master’s hand and Bruce caressed him with his other hand; the demon felt jealous of the small animal.

“Mr. Queen?” Bruce asked confused bringing hastily the blanket to cover the little of his chest that Bagdana sighed inside: that wasn’t really needed since the black silk pajama shirt he wore let only a scarce patch of his collarbone chest part out. But just that and the human’s neck were enough for the demon to feel fascinated and aroused.

“Bruce, I’m sorry for my inappropriateness…” he mumbled defeating the wish to immerge in Bruce’s beauty and stay forever there.

Alfred leaned over his young master.

“Mr. Queen insisted on seeing you but I think that now he realized that there is nothing wrong with your health he wouldn’t refuse to honor us with his presence later so to allow you to continue your rest.”

Queen nodded.

“Of course!”

But Bruce brought himself in sitting position and ruffled his messy hair; Hero settled in his lap.

“No, it’s okay; I woke up now” he looked at Alfred who pressed his lips disapprovingly. “Just give me a few minutes to dress and I’ll be with you.”

“Thank you, Bruce” Queen replied without leaving from his sight the human.

Yet Alfred walked to him and made an inviting gesture towards the open door.

“Follow me if you please, sir” he said politely though he really wanted to kick him out of the Manor.

Bruce met Queen’s eyes and the older man hastened to take away his gaze and turned to follow Alfred who closed the heavy door.

Bruce looked at Hero inhaling calmly.

“You sensed the truth about him from the beginning, right Hero?” he asked remembering how the kitten had hissed at Queen that evening in the café.

So Bagdana wanted to check on him…this either was from sheer concern over his health or the cunning demon suspected something from his long absence. Alfred had told Bruce that Queen called several times during his absence yet Bruce chose not to call him back because it’d be too suspicious if he spoke to him so soon after their last not so pleasant exchange.

He had to be careful because Bagdana was really clever – he was an ancient demon after all. However the way Queen burst into his bedroom showed that the demon lost a bit his self restrain…

He took Hero from his lap and left him on the mattress in order to slip his body into the wheelchair to get ready acknowledging the various pain spots throughout his back; the pain was milder after the revitalizing sleep yet it was still there.

Queen took the white-blue china that Alfred offered him and sipped the black coffee. The Englishman had led him down to the great salon where the businessman settled to a high backed armchair and waited.
He rubbed his chin uncomfortable.

“I’d like to apologize for my previous behavior, Alfred.”

The Englishman cocked his eyebrows.

“I do not think that it is necessary to apologize to a butler, sir,” he said casting him a cold glance. “Pardon me, I must prepare Master Bruce’s breakfast.”

Queen waved that off.

“I understand.”

The demon actually rejoiced with Alfred’s leaving since he would be free to delve into the memory of seeing Bruce sleeping.

He hid his face with both hands and breathed: he wouldn’t let anyone to ruin that, not Darkseid, nor god or mortal.

The low sound of the elevator made him jump on his feet his eyes towards the long, wide corridor listening to the discreet sound of Bruce’s wheelchair approaching.

He was dressed in jeans and a black long sleeved sweater with a quilt blanket covering his paraplegic legs. The kitten was curled on his lap and Bruce let the animal down as soon as he entered the salon.

Queen hurried to meet him and gave him his hand to shake which Bruce did immediately and then showed him the armchair to sit.

“Well, to what do I owe your visit?”

Queen pursed his lips, his embarrassment radiating.

“First of all, I apologize for the way I burst into your bedroom. I didn’t want to ruin your morning sleep. I’m unforgivable.”

Bruce tilted his head meeting the man’s green eyes.

“Then why you did that?”

He sighed and looked him in the eyes.

“Because I was really worried, Bruce” the younger man frowned. “After Joker’s kidnapping you disappeared: no public appearance and every time I called Alfred was telling me that you were out of town. At first, I thought that you simply didn’t want to speak to me after our last meeting but then I began to worry. I went to the Wayne Tower but I couldn’t find you there either.”

“Is something going on with our deal?”

Queen smiled and waved that off.

“Not at all. I just wanted to make sure that you were alright because I thought that your people were hiding the truth of a possible relapse of your health” well, that’s a good explanation Bagdana thought – and not a lie either.

Bruce nodded: If only this was the only reason…
“I did have some business obligations out of town that I couldn’t postpone; unfortunately, my latest contact with Joker really had its toll to me and once I finished with my obligations Dr. Thompkins recommended to stay in the Manor and rest.”

Queen grinned.

“I see. I hope now you are better.”

Bruce raised his eyebrows.

“I am but my doctor insists that I should stay away from anything potentially tiresome and focus on my health now that my operation is near.”

The older man seemed startled. Bagdana had forgotten about that; he licked his lips. He didn’t like the idea of such a risky procedure inflicted on Bruce.

“I’m not a doctor but it must be a very dangerous operation.”

Bruce shrugged.

“Even the most common surgeries can be dangerous” he replied. “And this surgery will probably enable me to walk again so the risk is more than worthy.”

Bagdana didn’t agree; actually his insides were clenched. They would put Bruce on a table and butcher him trying to make his spine work normally again. But Bruce had been through a lot and Bagdana couldn’t be sure that he could handle this…He couldn’t afford losing Bruce now that he was so close…

“Maybe you shouldn’t risk so much…I mean I know how much you want to walk again but this is your life and your life is so precious to gamble like this.”

Bruce averted his eyes annoyed and Queen pressed his lips. Of course, Bruce thought, Bagdana doesn’t want to lose his reward.

“I know it’s not my business” Queen said leaning to him and Bruce turned a sharp glance at him.

“No, it isn’t” he spat because that was what he wanted and also would reassure Bagdana that nothing had changed in Bruce’s stance towards Queen – so his possible suspicious were unfounded.

“But I’m your friend and I care about you.”

Bruce nodded.

“I remember our last discussion” he said and Queen shook his head. “Alfred informed me about your calls but I didn’t feel like calling back. I mean that if it was something about the companies you’d have discussed it with Lucius…so your calls were…personal and I didn’t want another personal discussion: after my adventure with Joker I did want some tranquility.”

Bagdana understood that; Bruce had suffered too much all these years and lately. He wanted to avoid emotional turmoil especially with people courting him.

“I see…the truth is that I…I know that I become too persistent sometimes but, believe me, it is honest concern, Bruce.”

Bruce looked the one who was responsible for all his suffering of the last months; the one who turned his dream of living with Clark into a nightmare; the one who was willing to cause the demise of the humankind just to have him; the one who right now was holding Clark and probably torturing him.

He wanted to attack and stab him again with the Knife of Justice forcing him to reveal where Clark was yet he had to be patient: attacking him would reveal his knowledge and Darkseid would make his move before they were ready.

“Mr. Queen, I had said it to you countless times: I don’t want you to hope vainly. I just can’t face that kind of feelings…”

But Queen stopped him.

“Bruce, I’m your friend, okay? You made it clear that there can’t be anything else between us and I accept that but… I can be your friend, right?”

Bruce found his eyes: how good Bagdana was in pretending! He grinned and nodded.

Queen smiled and touched with his fingers Bruce’s hand that was on his wheelchair’s arm. Bruce felt the same paralyzing feeling of that night he fell asleep in the restaurant.

“As your friend I want you to be sure that I’ll always do my best for your wellbeing.”

“Bruce, is everything alright?”

Bruce shook his head as if he had just woken up and turned his head at the salon’s arch shaped entrance. Dick was standing there frowned, with narrowed eyes regarding Queen’s hand on Bruce’s. He was dressed for school.

“Just fine, Dick. Mr. Queen here came to find out about my health” Queen smiled to the boy however he didn’t let go of Bruce’s hands which made the boy squint more in hostility.

“Alfred had served breakfast” the boy said and Bruce took his hand from Queen’s grasp.

Dick leaned and took Hero who had run leaving his corner right in front of the fireplace.

“You have to eat too, Bruce – actually, I came to tell you that granny and Alfred are waiting for you.”

Bruce grinned understanding the boy’s intention to give him a reason to get rid of Queen.

Indeed, Queen stood.

“I must leave now” he said.

“I’ll take you to the door” Bruce said and slithered his chair at Queen’s side to the main entrance.

Upon arriving at the heavy front door, Queen stopped and looked at Bruce.

“The boy is very fond of you” the older man commented eyeing behind Bruce’s back the boy who was following them at a distance holding Hero.

Bruce pressed his lips following Queen’s stare there.

“I guess I’m too lucky” he smiled fondly and Bagdana wished his human mate could grant such a smile for him too.
Queen nodded.

"You are" he agreed and passed the opened door. "Can you promise me that we'll meet again soon?"

Bruce smiled but inside he smirked.

"You can count on that…” Bagdana.

Queen reflected his smile satisfied as the demon relished in the certainty that Bruce wasn’t suspecting anything.

"Then I’m the lucky one…”

It was gradually more difficult to remain conscious; his body was collapsing, his strength had already evaporated and the constant pain didn’t let him any chance to struggle. Not that he would be able to do something with the Kryptonite and that damn red radiation that felt like baking him slowly, dehydrating him from any life – a real torture along with the stabbing hunger, the thirst and that nausea.

But nothing was more torturous than the revelation of his own deeds the past months. Revelation… not exactly. He knew what he was doing yet now without Ivy’s influence he could see clearly and judge without that selfish prism which justified everything.

Bruce hadn’t said anything to anybody…nothing about…no, he erased the thought of those deeds before even form. He hadn’t said anything to his Ma otherwise Ms. Kent would have rebuked him or worse…Bruce protected him. But Bruce couldn’t protect Clark from his own blaming self that blew him mercilessly…

So it was really a blessing that most of the time he was unconscious, without his own thoughts pricking him. Although he knew that he deserved that, still that state of almost non-existence was irresistible…some mercy…

"Have you seen anything more beautiful?"

He heard suddenly Lois’ voice and he turned his eyes where she was staring.

His casket-like cell wasn’t there anymore and the low humming of the red radiation was replaced by music played by an orchestra. Clark Kent with Lois at his side was in the enormous salon of Wayne Manor that was filled with people who had stopped their chattering to look at the newcomers who descended the great marble stair.

Falcone was addressing the people but Clark like everyone in the space was gaping at another direction.

A young man was following herded by Chill.

Clark estimated him around 26 years old, but his face looked younger. He was approximately 6’ 1’’ tall with a body so harmonically sculpted, every muscle in such perfect size and form that Clark thought of the ancient Greek statues. However, once his gaze fell upon the boy’s face, he forgot the body – it was a perfect blend of masculinity and softness, the cheekbones’ sharpness underlining the warm almond shaped eyes that were shining like the multicoloured gems of the room, but with such sweetness that magnetized the eyes more than their inanimate antagonists in the room.
The young man was pressing his lips out of uneasiness but he couldn’t hide their cute shape and light pink colour; Clark was certain he wanted to run his hands through his soft dark locks that surrounded perfectly groomed his gorgeous face – it was easy for Clark’s super hearing to catch the boy’s crazy heartbeat.

However, his engagement with the frantic heartbeat brought his eye sight zooming to the broad chest. With a rush of hot blood, he gazed at the soft skin that was dressing the well defined chest and then the fine muscles that adorned his belly. His tailored clothes cried to be ripped off so this magnificent body could be exposed to everyone’s greedy eyes, thought Clark and angry with himself averted – not effortlessly – his gaze before it went lower.

“He doesn’t look like a whore, does he?” he asked Lois hesitantly.

All the blinding lights and the music were gone leaving behind darkness, silence and a bare space with only some boxes on the floor mounting the wall.

A surprised huff left Batman’s lips as Superman snatched his upper arms; he stretched them swiftly upwards pinning him to the wall. Batman thrashed trying frantically to resist, struggled to find an opening to free himself but the alien was unrelenting; the alien’s beautiful strangely blue eyes smiling with glee.

Superman was feeling the powerful body pressed on his own go rigid and writhing like a giant serpent but this time the Man of Steel wouldn’t retreat; he wouldn’t let the annoying man to escape him no matter how bruising his hold needed to be.

“Why you didn’t tell me your plan? You don’t trust me, do you?” he demanded.

“I trust you” Batman was completely calm and unfazed by the fact he was trapped “I didn’t tell you because I knew that you wouldn’t approve, you being so moral and law abiding and that you would want to do it your way which would have been disastrous.”

Superman motioned his head in negation, his eyes dead serious.

“No, you don’t trust me; you don’t trust anyone and you believe that you know the best way for everything; that you are better than all of us, you arrogant bastard!”

The artificial white eyes were focused on his and Clark could feel the true eyes underneath being sad; the beautiful shaped lips half opened in confusion.

Suddenly, a strange urge took the better of Clark and he rushed his lips on those proud lips, devouring, wrestling the defiance, the resistance, his tongue defeating the Bat’s tongue that wanted to shove him out of his mouth. Finally, relishing the incredibly soft lips and the hot mouth; the powerful muscles under his steel grip relaxed, the entire body pliant... trembling from fear? His heart jolted as he felt those rosy lips shyly massaging the invincible mouth that was conquering them.

Clark’s hands of steel searched desperately for an opening in the man’s suit, his need to feel that body was mysteriously unbeatable; he wanted to smell him, to taste him... to see his face. His hands touched the cowl and pulled but there was no give.

He withdrew his lips to let the man breathe, his eyes still closed.

“I need to see your face...” Clark’s heart beat crazily and he opened his eyes to be met with the bricks of the unpainted wall; the Bat had slipped.
He turned afraid that the man had gone but he saw the black caped statue a few feet away from him, his back on Clark; his shoulders hunched.

“You should teach me how you do that...” Clark attempted to relax the tense air between them but he stopped abruptly seeing the gloved hands touching the base of the cowl a green light glowing for an instance – Clark was sure that it was a system of fingerprints’ recognition that allowed only the Bat to remove the cowl. The Bat slowly, hesitantly was pulling the cowl off of his head, revealing a thick sea of short black hair drenched in sweat.

The Bat clutching the cowl turned his face to Superman and the man of steel was goggling, being aware of his own stupid expression. His head moving slowly in utter disbelief.

“No... It can’t be...” his crystal clear strong voice was hoarse and faint.

“You wanted to see my face but you weren’t ready to see the truth?” his voice was sarcastic but had a little sadness in it.

The voice was smooth as always, not gruff and strict. His magnificent eyes looking at him filled with pride and strength, their endless sorrow just a shadow in their sparkling. His Star manifesting his entire shine.

“Who are you?” Clark had to ask because he felt the entire world slipping under his feet: Falcone’s toy, his broken Star standing in front of him dignified, imposing, emanating power and self-confidence, but beautiful and alluring as ever.

“It is easier to say who I was” his voice was solemn and steady but Clark was able to feel the bitterness.

A black sleek car slithered graciously on the illuminated by strong floodlights down town street; it halted in front of the Intercontinental Hotel where people were swarming fast as soon as the car appeared, intrigued to have a better view of the car.

But once the driver’s door opened smoothly and Bruce Wayne graciously stepped out nobody cared anymore for the car; The young man gazed for an instant at the clear night sky as if he’d sensed something and was searching for it and then returned his eyes to the approaching valet who was breathless.

The driver was a perfect match to the impressive car; his immaculate tailored suit highlighting his body’s carefully chiseled muscles. His locks shone to the abundant lighting of the hotel’s entrance.

Superman was watching from a rooftop opposite the hotel, unnoticed as he thought but hurrying to hide behind the wall when Bruce raised his gaze as if he had sensed his presence.

When Bruce emerged all grace and charm from the car, the light blue glow from the interior lighting of the car still caressing his features, he just gaped as the men and women inside and outside the hotel did.

It was as if the floodlights of the entrance had lost their light in the glow that the young man emanated. He manifested confidence and an air of easiness which was only one part of what he was feeling, because Superman could detect his nervousness and how tense he was; truly, Bruce and Batman. His face was brighter than the moon when he smiled warmly to the awed – only from the car Superman hoped – valet, Bruce’s beautiful eyes sparkling.
And those clothes… Perfectly tailored as if the cottons and the silkworms from the start had the intention to dress that body; the smooth fabric shining discreetly but charmingly in every tiny movement he made, stressing the strong and artistic painted muscles and that black blazer had exactly the length to cover and not cover the enticing buttocks under the fitting smooth fabric, just to arouse the watcher for more… Superman sighed and felt his face turning hot.

And then he felt a lava of envy for the tailor who surely measured that body from too close and was so impressed by his Star’s body to create THAT suit that was a cry to assault. If he had the power, he’d forbid Bruce to employ the same tailor again, or, since forbidding Bruce to do something was perhaps impossible, Clark would ask with his Superman charm the tailor to not work for Bruce Wayne again: who was he kidding? Which tailor wouldn’t want to work with a man like him?

As the young man made some steps to the entrance that was already packed with people, some of them journalists who were here for the Mayor candidates, was evident that those clothes were wicked, enchanted; they looked like obsessed lovers never leaving the beloved body but staying glued on him…

The bright scene of the Hotel’s entrance darkened and the people vanished…

Clark dried his hair with a towel and wrapped another around his waist heading to his dingy bedroom for a lonely night flooded with dreams.

He yawned more from boredom than sleepiness but his mouth stayed agape seeing Batman standing before the small balcony door. Impossible; he had heard the Tumbler heading to the Palisades…He rolled his eyes – auto-pilot, of course!

Batman had his lenses deactivated and Clark had the rare gift to see those unique eyes sparkling through the dark cowl.

“How? I didn’t hear you…” Clark asked – foolishly – because that ninja could evade even his super senses.

Batman placed his thumbs on the cowl’s fingertip receptors which answered with a hiss before Bruce took the cowl off, revealing his face and his sweaty, stuck on his head and forehead locks.

“Do you care about ‘how’ or ‘why’?” Bruce cocked an eyebrow and gave a crooked smile.

Clark didn’t need another prompt; he used his super speed to reach his Star – which was ridiculous since the room was really small – and closed him in his naked, humid torso. He cupped the younger man’s face and kissed passionately his lips, Bruce responding avidly while two gloved hands wrapped around Clark. Bruce had come for him!

“You wouldn’t have come, huh?” Bruce asked him piercing Clark with his sparkling eyes. “Is this how much your love lasts?” he asked mocked hurt with a smug expression.

But immediately he chuckled as in a blur Clark had placed him on his small bed starting unclasping his armor’s various parts using his X-Ray vision to find the hidden joints. Clark’s yearning was such that he had just removed a big armor plate from Bruce’s chest and his mouth glued on the younger man’s breast sucking the hot, sweaty flesh while his hands continued their frantic job pulling off that annoying armor and throwing the towel off his own body.

“You could have chosen a latex suit…” Clark sobbed as his hard penis was met with Kevlar instead of soft, sweet flesh.

Bruce snorted.
“You know, bullets can pierce my body…” he huffed as Clark rooting around managed finally to extract the hip part of the armor, his hard penis rubbing Bruce’s dressed with underwear groin. “And I don’t like latex on meeeeee…” a long moan escaped his lolled backwards neck as Clark suddenly lowered his underwear and began kissing his genitals.

“You know…” Clark mumbled between aroused flesh “I hate latex too…on you…” he grunted “because everyone…would picture…what I see…”

Bruce grabbed Clark’s hair and yanked softly his head to lock their eyes; Superman’s crystal blue eyes were feverish, almost crazy in desire.

“I thought you were mad at me” Bruce said seriously.

Clark’s eyes widened.

“Mad? At you?”

“I’m not the easiest person…”

But Clark stopped everything else by capturing his lips and massaging gently and then stronger following the movement of Bruce’s lips, swimming in the sparkling seas of his Star’s eyes, the emerald stars blinding him with their dance.

Bruce moaned on Clark’s full, rich lips enjoying their strength and salty taste, his hands which suddenly were ungloved – courtesy of Clark - ruffling a bit shyly the wet locks of the Man of Steel.

“The only reason…” Clark couldn’t pull his lips from that sweet mouth “I wouldn’t have come… mmmm!…is to let…you” his tongue was brushing Bruce’s mouth and his Star’s tongue played along “rest…”

Bruce tightened his grip on Clark’s strong back and slithered his lips feathery light on his neck causing Clark’s surprised groan that became a sob when Bruce’s mouth brushed his ear letting hot air stimulate the hyper sensitive organ. Bruce could hear the powerful heart kicking in Superman’s made-of-steel ribs as Clark’s hands became once again greedy in their exploration.

Clark didn’t want to penetrate the tired body in his arms although Bruce urged him to.

“Bruce, stop…” he whispered between rasps because his need was so demanding that made him shake uncontrollably and Bruce’s wet mouth on his aching nipple wasn’t helping. “I know you’re doing it…because…” he whimpered as the younger man’s tight thighs wrapped around his and closed with his ankles crossed.

“Because I want it!” Bruce’s fierce eyes shone like lightings in the dark room that was illuminated by the flashing of boards and cars passing outside.

What restraining power Clark had, evaporated when Bruce’s hips touched his slithering up and down and in tantalizing, huge circles that numbed his mind and made the throb of his length agonizingly crazy, his big vein swollen with boiling blood. His penis on his own accord slipped towards the beloved flesh and Clark barely made it – thanks to super speed - to take the lube from the drawer and apply it.

As he was thrusting tenderly in Bruce he was sure that his Star offered that to him to relieve him; Clark despite his drive to quench his yen feared that Bruce didn’t really wanted to be touched but then thankfully felt the younger man’s penis also erected. Having memorized Bruce’s bodily reactions from their first time he knew that his Star was a bit slower in getting aroused; which was perfectly reasonable given the struggle inside him every time…

“You’re the most gorgeous and bravest being in the world…” he mumbled mouthing greedily. Bruce’s stretched neck to end up savoring his lips and tightened his embrace as his thrusts became faster brushing Bruce’s prostate.

Bruce held desperately Clark’s taut shoulder blades as his body convulsed uncontrollably, electric currents flooding his spine and his mind; he was moaning and grunting but Clark was sucking every sound kissing deeply his mouth. And then suddenly Clark’s embrace became one handed, his other hand caressing tenderly Bruce’s throbbing penis till with a violent jolt he came exactly the moment a hot flood filled his insides.

“You know that you healed me?” Clark whispered in his ear still holding him glued on his body. Bruce’s calves caressing his shivering buttocks.

Bruce locked his still dilated eyes on Clark’s.

“Actually, you did that. Remember?”

Clark brushed Bruce’s wet locks that stack in his forehead and cheekbones framing his sweaty face.

“Despite the huge improvement from the medicine, my powers didn’t felt as before but after last night…” he sighed “I feel stronger than ever.”

Bruce chuckled.

“It’s only your psychology.”

……………………………………………………………………

“In the cave, I felt the urge to grab you and take you away from everything…” Clark said honestly and locked his eyes with Bruce.

“Ten or fifteen years ago I’d have wanted you to do that; I’d have pleaded with you for that… But now things are different, Clark.”

Clark nodded. Ten years ago…Ten, fifteen years ago he had begun his action – even before. In fact, he had saved kids from abusive families, from pedophiles…but he didn’t save Bruce…If he did, his Star’s body and soul wouldn’t ache so much from bleeding scars; his Star could be able to sleep without nightmares…

Bruce’s quite respiration on his shoulder brought him out of his thoughts; he was sleeping like a baby inside Superman’s arms breathing softly hot air causing goose bumps on his flesh.

He carefully pulled himself from Bruce’s body and the younger man protested in his sleep. He placed him tenderly on the mattress and cleaned him gently with his tongue as if licking the most delicious ice cream. Then lay beside him, cuddled him to have his soft breath brushing his chest and Bruce unconsciously nestled in his broad torso seeking the human warmth, the human affection. Clark smiled; he wasn’t a human yet Bruce made him forget that. Actually, he felt very small, weak and coward in comparison to that human…

“How can you be so brave and fearless with all the horrors you experienced?”

Bruce hid his face in Clark’s pectoral and unconsciously nuzzled Superman’s chest making him moan.
“Tomorrow night we’ll sleep at the greenhouse…” his Star whispered without opening his eyes and Clark knew that he was talking in his sleep. “It won’t rain tomorrow and Clark will be able to see all stars…”

Superman leaned and kissed softly Bruce’s forehead.

“I need only the star in my arms…But will go there, Star; I promise.”

Clark’s heavy eyes jittered happy and a careless smile carved his sweaty, hot in fever face. Bruce…

But suddenly the cheap hotel bedroom blended with a cave; deep in the mountains until the furniture was gone and only rocks, stalactites and stalagmites were left; humidity and dim light. Clark’s elevated heart sank as he saw a golden bumble with Bruce inside and the granite demon holding him tight.

Bagdana nuzzled Bruce’s face, his burning lips sucking the human’s bent neck.

“But you are: her blood runs in your veins, her flesh, her perfume…”

Bruce yanked his head.

“Don’t touch me!”

Bagdana jerked his hand and struck Bruce’s cheek; Bruce’s head lolled to the side and Bruce wondered how it wasn’t detached from his body, his cheek in pain as if it had burned.

The demon closed his eyes and breathed calmly; he brought his mouth above the burnt human flesh and blew gently restoring the damage. He caressed tenderly the healed cheek and cupped again Bruce’s face bringing the youth’s eyes to lock with his.

“You’re going to remember! And feel!” he roared and his mouth captured Bruce’s mouth his thick, rubber-like tongue thrusting inside, reaching his throat.

Bagdana was confidently grinning. Bruce was hovering held by the demon and suddenly his clothes tore in shreds falling from his body leaving him completely naked. His legs were grabbed and brought around Bagdana’s hips; the demon’s monstrous length was fully erect and dripping, a third pair of hands stretching him for the demon to penetrate him.

“Stop this…”

But Bagdana’s hard as stone length was already pressing to enter.

“Our third union will be in front of them to show them you’re mine! Let’s show Superman to whom you belong!”

“No!” Superman cried with such volume that he couldn’t believe he had strength for.

His heart beat fast. If Darkseid won this time nothing would stop Bagdana from taking Bruce forever. He couldn’t let this happen; he couldn’t just stay there surrendered to his confinement, defeated by Kryptonite and red light watching while they plotted to destroy the planet and enslave Bruce.

He had to overcome the Kryptonite’s effect; he should defeat his weakness, the pain. He clenched his jaw and gritted his teeth forcing his fingers to form fists: he could get out of his prison – he could save Bruce.
He growled to pump energy from his anger to his limbs. He roared clenching his fists and pulling at his chains forgetting the burning of the Kryptonite in his wrists; ignoring the screaming of billions of cells all over his aching body.

He was Earth’s defender, the protector of humans: he couldn’t let Darkseid slaughter them. He was Bruce’s love…he couldn’t let that demon capture him. Bruce’s love would give him the strength he needed…

When Bruce closed the door behind Queen and turned, Alfred was there and Dick had gone to the kitchen.

“I hope you rebuked that rude man, Master Bruce.”

Bruce smiled.

“It wouldn’t be of any use, Alfred; this rude man is actually Bagdana.”

Alfred’s eyes widened.

“Good Lord!”

Bruce chuckled and nodded.

“Exactly” he arched his eyebrows. “He is ‘wearing’ Oliver Queen’s body in order to help Darkseid with his plans and…approach me. I didn’t scold him – I think he regretted his rush act.”

He moved his wheelchair heading to the salon.

“I don’t understand, sir” Alfred said following. “The Black Butterfly is supposed to keep him away from you?”

Bruce stopped the chair and looked at him.

“I think that this is another reason he possessed a human body: the human flesh protects him from the gem’s energy.”

Alfred nodded.

“At least you are privy to their plans” Bruce nodded and Alfred set his jaw. “Enough with Mr. Bagdana-Queen, your breakfast is getting cold.”

“I must see Leslie…”

“Speaking of the devil…” a third voice entered the space.

The fierce doctor walked to them from the kitchen’s direction.

“I think we had enough of the devil for today…” Bruce tilted his head amused.

Alfred grinned.

“I forgot to mention that Leslie was in the kitchen, sir.”

“It’s okay, Alfred.”
Leslie stopped in front of Bruce and leaned to him.

“Nothing is okay, young man. Where were you all these days?”

Bruce pressed his lips and inhaled.

“I think it’s not the right place to discuss this, Leslie” he said showing with his gaze towards the kitchen at the far end of the corridor; it was a considerable distance yet there were Ms. Turner And Dick who might come at any moment. “Let’s have our breakfast and then we’ll continue.”

Leslie grinned.

“Right. You have days to eat properly and then there’s your medication you need to take. We’ll talk later.”

Bruce exchanged a glance with Alfred. Her words certainly had a threatening note…

Once they finished breakfast and Ms. Turner left with Dick in order to drive him to school, Leslie and Bruce went to the study of the upper level alone since Alfred had some chores to do.

“Bruce, you haven’t realized how crucial is the situation” Leslie said. “It is supposed that you want to be operated and walk again but instead of following your doctors’ orders you wander around exhausting yourself and weakening your organism. How are you supposed to cope with that surgery, Bruce?”

Bruce shook his head.

“I think that it is you who don’t realize the criticality of things. A powerful alien is on the verge of attacking earth and there’s little time to prepare our defense. So” he inhaled “I don’t have the luxury of sitting and watching.”

Leslie held the arms of Bruce’s chair, ‘trapping’ his body between her arms and his eyes in her strict gaze.

“You did your duty, young man. You unveiled them, you warned the Avengers and gave them your ideas; you even found the real Diana and brought her here. Now you can leave things to them: they are super powered, Bruce, and most of all, not recovering from multi injures. I understand that you want to offer them as much assistance as possible yet if you collapse, if…” she didn’t want even to utter it. “What will be the gain?”

Bruce clutched his forehead.

“Leslie, the battle that is coming will need every power the Earth has – we can’t hold back anything. I can’t stay behind” he met her eyes. “I just can’t; there are things I must do. If Darkseid wins, what’s the point if I’m safe and healthy hiding somewhere? He’ll find me” he didn’t want to elaborate on that.

Leslie stood sighing.

“If only you were not so stubborn!”

Bruce pressed his lips feeling for her but also having the conviction of his beliefs.

“I need your help, Leslie.”

She shook her head and chuckled.
"You have that without asking but you’re turning your back on my help and instead you’re running around ready to take part in a battle that can kill you" she shuddered once the word left her mouth but Bruce’s face was calm.

"I have to be there, Leslie…But I need you to give me fortifiers: drugs that will sustain my body till the end: I must last till the end."

Leslie pressed her lips and closed her eyes.

"You must be really exhausted to ask that: you would have never asked something like this knowing that I’d figure your extreme fatigue. My precious boy, I…How can I offer you the means to commit suicide?"

Bruce took her hands in his and locked eyes with her.

"I am really tired, Leslie but I have no choice but to continue; it won’t be suicide if you give me the drugs that will fortify my endurance” he smiled “you’ll give me the means to survive. And then, after Darkseid is defeated I’ll be able to rest and enjoy your care.”

Leslie smirked fuming and shook her head.

"I hate it that you have your father’s diplomacy and your mother’s sweetness. I’ll do everything in my power to help you.”

She squatted before him and caressed his locks and Bruce held her hand and kissed the palm.

“Where’s your conscience, boy scout?” a sarcastic female voice hissed to Clark’s ears filling his veins with green poison.

He saw again Bruce stepping out of his car, beautiful, shadowing the lights of the luxurious hotel. He saw him raising his head and focusing his eyes on the spot were Superman was sneakily stalking him. His breath was cut again from the shine, the beauty of those almond shaped eyes: star sapphires indeed.

Red…Red slithered over Bruce…it wasn’t the red radiation of his cell…it was blood that soaked Bruce’s tailored suit, his perfectly groomed hair, his porcelain face…his eyes.

"For the last time, Clark: Thor came here only because Loki pestered me.”

“I didn’t see Loki but even if that it is true then I see” he smirked “that Bane and Talia taught you the pleasures of threesome so what better than two gods fucking you?” Bruce’s eyes bulged and his heart stopped beating. “Maybe if I told you that Diana and I would both fuck you, there wouldn’t be a problem…But since I didn’t, you took the first opportunity you found: Thor and Loki: Who got your ass and who your mouth? Or they changed positions? You’re doing the same with Rogers and Selina in the Tower? I imagine you prefer to fuck your friend than…”

Bruce raised his hand and brought it with all his speed and force at Clark’s face…But this time Superman was ready for that: he grabbed Bruce’s hand stopping and pinning it on the mattress above Bruce’s head clenching bone crashing the wrist. Simultaneously, with all his speed, he raised his hand and bitch slapped the human who dared to raise hand on him.

Bruce’s head rolled on the side and blood sprung from his nostril and torn lip slithering slowly to his cheek. A deafening thunder worsened the buzz in Bruce’s ear but he looked through his narrowed eyes at Clark who was smirking smugly.

Superman tightened his grip on Bruce’s wrist, feeling the familiar arousal from the struggle of the body trapped under him. The human had his jaw clenched though it must hurt much from his slap; he knew to control his power to not permanently damage or kill him but also to pass the message across. His mocking eyes lowered a second to see Bruce’s heaving chest: the human never liked being defeated.

He brought his face over Bruce’s enjoying the smell of his blood, of his defeat…His groin twitching from the defiance underneath him.

“I owed you that, Bruce, remember?” Bruce’s blazing eyes stared him unfazed; certainly he remembered the day he slapped Clark because he accused him of having an affair with Matt. “My memory is eidetic…” he breathed licking Bruce’s blood though the younger man turned on the other side his head to avoid him. “I know your every movement…”

But he frowned instantly, his shock great when something sharp burned his jugular; the flesh protested as a drop of blood dripped slowly. Clark saw with the corner of his eye the Knife of Justice firmly grasped in Bruce’s free fist; its diamond blade flashed in the dim secret light of the headboard – a cracking bolt enhancing the impression of the blade’s sharpness.

Their eyes collided in a battle of determination.

“You know just the 1/100 of my movements, Clark” Bruce said calm and decisive but still with affection. “The Blade has defeated a mighty ancient demon: it can harm you” it was an advice.

Clark snorted and felt the Blade’s menacing presence on his neck.

“Two demons” he corrected cocking his eyebrow. “Two demons who fell for your body…Well, Bruce? What are you going to do with that? Kill me?”

Bruce clenched his jaw; Clark’s grip on his wrist had loosened under the surprise of the Knife in his now vulnerable neck. Bruce’s hurt cheek throbbed.

“I just want to stop you before you do something you’ll be sorry for all your life! Think, Clark!”

Clark’s face was sweaty: the sense of sharp metal grazing his skin was unusual for him.

“Think what?! For once I uttered the truth and you are ready to kill me! All the time I’m giving to you and you don’t give anything and the one time I spoke to you about the satisfaction you deny from me, you show your real face!” he snarled “What about my satisfaction, Bruce?! What did you offer me?!”

“Then take your satisfaction but stop shouting! There’s a distressed boy in the Manor and nothing of these is his fault!” he lowered the Knife keeping his eyes locked with Clark’s.

Now Superman understood: using the Knife against him would manage only to galvanize his beliefs of Bruce’s hostility and hatred but the human believed that if he surrendered his body to him, then maybe he would realize that he was true in his love and prove Vivian wrong.

Bruce placed reverently the Knife on the nightstand and Superman found his chance: he grabbed Bruce’s free hand and pinned now both his hands on the mattress over his head, stretching his body so beautifully that Superman felt his groin demanding satisfaction. Bruce was always looking him in the eyes calm, dignified and affectionate.
“You know that I didn’t give my body to anyone else” he said steady and jerked his head upwards capturing Clark’s lips in a tender kiss, filled with love and agony to help him see the truth.

Clark deepened the kiss, loosening the bruising grip on Bruce’s wrists.

“I can give you everything the others gave you and even better…” he whispered sucking his lips passionately and then nuzzling his stretched neck and the small part of chest that the three open buttons left uncovered. “You’re mine, Bruce…”

Clark was still holding his hands on the mattress in a rather painful way yet Bruce looked him proudly.

“I love you with all my existence but I’m not your possession…”

Superman closed his eyes frustrated and bit the cotton pajama shirt softly at first but then in a burst of accumulated anger he tore with his teeth Bruce’s clothes not minding that he was scratching also the tender skin; his hands clutching the trapped wrists to not permit any other surprise and to keep that body flexed.

Clark rose a bit and watched appreciatively the nude body under him and now after months he realized that Bruce that night for the first time after the greenhouse felt uncomfortable being naked in front of him.

Superman brought Bruce’s arms down without releasing them and turned him on his stomach; Bruce must have felt his healing arms almost ripped from their sockets as Superman twisted them behind his back.

“I can give you everything the others gave you…” he leaned over Bruce’s hair and the force of his breath burnt his neck.

And then in a swift, violent motion Clark settled one wrist upon another and ordered the energy casts that enable Bruce’s body to operate bound hard his wrists.

Superman realized the pain that Bruce had felt.

But that night he didn’t care for the human’s suffering; Superman turned him around and smirked smugly to his face.

“The energy casts are Fortress’ property – that is to say mine; they obey my wishes…You like that, Bruce, don’t you?” he travelled the younger man’s chest with his palm to end at the ripped abdominals. “Losing control, being helpless…”

Bruce controlled his heart that cringed remembering every time he had been tied up.

“Clark, you know what I like…”

Clark shook his hand bringing his fingers lower, to Bruce’s groin.

“I thought I knew, Bruce, but I was wrong; but finally my eyes are opened. I won’t let you give your body to anyone else ever again… I won’t permit you to disgrace yourself and me by getting screwed in parks or participating in threesomes.”

Bruce closed his eyes and yanked his head backwards.

“I never did that! You know it: you’d have caught their smells on me.”
Clark brought his head over Bruce’s groin and began sniffing, the younger man fighting a devastating wave of nausea.

There was no foreign smell.

“You’re sly, Bruce” Superman raised his head to look at him. “You warned them to cover their smell.”

Bruce gritted his teeth and raised his torso to bring his head close to Clark’s.

“Even you don’t believe that! Till the incident at the Tower you didn’t give a damn about who was talking to me or for Joker being free to get me. But then when I asked you to stop seeing that woman she poisoned your mind with the idea of my supposed infidelity and you found the best way to justify your attitude.”

“Enough!”

He grabbed Bruce’s shoulders and threw him on the mattress, settling his body on him; he captured violently Bruce’s mouth with his and began sucking and devouring, his teeth chewing cruelly the lips. He licked the drops of blood and opened his eyes to stare at Bruce’s sparkling ones.

“So beautiful...so rot...a real powerful seductress, indeed” he whispered caressing with both hands Bruce’s face to finally grab both cheeks and resume his cruel kiss, this time thrusting his tongue deep in Bruce’s throat choking him.

His body that was rubbing demandingly felt sticky under the uniform and he raised his body a second keeping Bruce’s body clenched between his knees, permitting the human to take some air. Superman roared satisfied when his body stayed bare without the burden of his clothes.

For the first time, Bruce’s eyes stared coldly at Superman’s naked body; the man’s half erection making his guts clench.

Superman’s body demanded to feel the warm human flesh and he obliged, rubbing his torso to Bruce’s so hard that it pained...like Superman’s unbearably hot mouth that trailed Bruce’s neck kissing, biting and licking the little blood his teeth evoked.

The more he conquered Bruce’s unresponsive body the more the fire in him rose...An insatiable fire. He fist Bruce’s hair and pulled his head down forcing his neck to arch for his mouth to gain better access. He licked and sucked, his other hand groping the younger man’s ribs.

“Moan for me, Bruce…” he growled. “As you did for Thor!”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“Nothing happened with him; Clark…”

“Shut up!” he cut him tightening more his clench on Bruce’s hair and brought his face over Bruce’s devouring the fire of his eyes. “You cheated me, Bruce! But I’ll keep you...” he kissed his cheekbones moaning. “I’ll give to you what you crave for and you’ll drop your bullshit about Diana...”

“She is poisoning you, Clark...You need to take your distance from her and run the tests Jor El told you…”

Superman’s gleeful eyes were Bruce’s entire world as he raised slightly his head.
“You have no right to pose demands! You should be begging me to forgive you and not trying to defame a great woman like Diana!”

Bruce’s eyes widened and for a second he stopped breathing…

“I did nothing wrong to ask your forgiveness and I’m not defaming her I’m just stating the facts! Think, Clark!

But Clark indifferent grabbed his thighs and opened them. Bruce couldn’t feel the pain but saw and heard the violence of Clark’s ministrations even though the wind’s blowing was wilder than ever; the man he loved was rock hard and Bruce wished he could be happy for their coming unification; staring at Clark’s gleeful eyes that looked down at him triumphantly, Bruce wished that making love to him could lead Clark to the truth…

Clark now in his own state of pain could read Bruce’s every emotion; every distress and pain…It was a nightmare…it was Hell…it was himself causing all that…

The Man of Steel thrust his entire, huge length in Bruce with one single swift movement, without any preparation, without any softness or caution just choking by force the resistance Bruce’s unprepared insides posed after five months of inertia.

Bruce gasped…It hurt like Hell and his heartbeat peaked…No, that was impossible: his body didn’t feel below the waist.

Clark cocked a sarcastic eyebrow regarding Bruce’s dumbstruck expression.

“You’re a helluva actor, babe! Pretending surprise…We both know that it is Thor’s thunderous prick we have to thank for reviving your dead asshole…”

Bruce gritted his teeth: he couldn’t continue listening Clark speaking like a creep…like all those who used him.

“Stop talking like that, Clark; this isn’t you…We both know that some neurons survived the injury – it seems that some of them are in my rectum” he tried to reason with him “but we never tried before…”

Superman smirked and settled his hands on Bruce’s hips beginning thrusting in him, establishing immediately a fast and hard way that made Bruce’s sensitive body cry in protest but he pressed his lips and swallowed the pain.

The thrusts became faster rocking Bruce’s body but Superman’s thirst wasn’t satisfied; he leaned over the sweaty but simultaneously cold torso under him and swallowed one nipple, sucking so fiercely that Bruce writhed uncomfortable since this along with the pounding of his anus was overwhelming.

But Superman didn’t care; he knew that Bruce enjoyed that – he needed it like this to be satisfied… and also Superman relished that too – inside him burnt an irresistible fire, a desire to make Bruce pain; make him suffer. He bit the tender nipple and sucked the liquid but more he sucked the violent heartbeat under the human skin; Superman knew that Bruce stubbornly choked his moans and grunts but he was stubborn as well.

He bit the other nipple and at the same time sent a low intensity heat beam to hit the nipple he tortured before and stood erect from his ministrations. Bruce’s torso jerked but Superman cackling moved his hips inwards smashing the momentary resistance with a stampede of thrusts.Oh, how much he enjoyed Bruce’s torture! He finally could understand Falcone’s need to make that beautiful being writhe in pain and agony.

“You like that to your nipples, huh?” he said smugly to Bruce’s narrowed eyes and inhaled the delicious smell of a trapped wild animal underneath him.

Bruce bit his bottom lip that was already torn in many places from Clark’s bites: no, he didn’t like having his nipples tortured – Falcone did that when he was really young…Clark knew it but that didn’t stop him casting heat to his other nipple too. Bruce jerked his torso upwards using Superman’s length inside him as support but the Man of Steel hugged vertically Bruce’s shoulders to glue their bodies together, impaling him mercilessly, faster, deeper…Cracking the soft insides, causing friction burnings, pain...

Superman was pressing the younger man chokingly on him knowing that the human breathed difficult but Bruce clenched his teeth to hide his suffering and that pissed him: his lover denied giving to him what he gave to others. He sank his teeth to Bruce’s shoulder, blood springing along with a sharp intake of air from the human. Superman cupped with both hands his head and stared at those defiant, fervent eyes.

“Don’t hide your pain from me…I know it gives you pleasure and I can give you more pleasure than anyone…” he breathed and captured the maimed lips kissing passionately, his body pushing enthusiastic inside Bruce.

His clenching in Bruce’s shoulder became bone crushing and the Man of Steel roared in his mouth as boiling liquid from the alien’s ejaculation burned Bruce’s wounded insides. He didn’t moan or grunt though a new wave of pain travelled his spine to stab his head but his weak body convulsed like in the past when he was a child and adults used him.

Bruce appreciated the softness of the mattress when Superman lowered him tenderly yet his lover’s length was still inside him, stretching his anus to its limits and throbbing demanding more. He looked at Clark’s face that watched him like a hungry vulture; Superman’s locks were wet from sweat and framed his beautiful features.

He smirked to the human and placed his body over him kissing his breasts and digging streaks with his nails on his back.

Superman’s eyes stopped to the Black Butterfly that dangled on Bruce’s chest: he knew from a long time ago that this rare, precious diamond was like Bruce. He touched his lips on the sparkling stone…and jerked away because it burned his lips.

He saw Bruce staring at him as Superman touched his lips shocked: he felt that the human was mocking him, his gem demonstrating that he could escape him…No…He grabbed again Bruce’s thighs and began thrusting stronger than before making the human writhe and sweat from pain and effort to control his restrained breath – to not moan...

When Superman turned him to his stomach, he had already cum in him three times and his hot liquid was filling his anus and the inside of his thighs; he knew that it slithered lower. He was also aware that except from semen something else streaked Bruce’s body – his own blood…But Clark didn’t give a shit. Bruce deserved that – he liked that.

The sheet was drenched under his pelvis and the stain expanded fast as Clark started for the fourth time his in-out movements; each time faster, deeper and stronger than the last. Bruce bit the pillow to stop a scream: Superman’s stone testicles whipped his stretched anus with every wet sound of flesh invading flesh. His eyes were covered from thin but annoying mist.
Clark now could feel everything Bruce was feeling with an empathy that had left him when Clark needed it the most; he felt wetness in his own eyes.

“I have more endurance than any of your lovers, Bruce” Superman said haughtily setting Bruce’s knees on the mattress for him to get a new, better ankle; clenching his thighs to crush the human body on him so to get deeper. The sound of flesh slapping flesh a mesmerizing melody to his ears.

He released Bruce’s thighs and brushed his trembling back, relishing the fine, strongly bound muscles.

“I should whip you, Bruce” he whispered massaging the covered in cold sweat human flesh. “I know how much you enjoy that...But I couldn’t stand it…”

Bruce shook his head as much as he could.

“You can’t do that, Clark, because you’re not that kind of person and you know that I don’t like it…Falcone used to whip me as a child and it was awful…” his voice almost cracked.

A thunder howled near...

And Clark remembered the sight of Bruce’s brutally spanked buttocks after their first meeting in Falcone’s party.

Clark’s hands massaged his trembling back softly now; even his thrusts became slower and Bruce hoped that finally he had found himself. But suddenly a powerful hand clenched his hair and forced his body upwards, his neck bent so much that Bruce was almost choked, his back brushing Clark’s torso. Superman touched his hot mouth on his stretched neck sucking.

“Beg me like you did with Bane…” he whispered sensually.

Bruce blinked to chase away the mist from his eyes. Clark had no problem thrusting in him for hours but his body felt like broken – no, his body was already broken since the factory incident but now it hurt all over.

“I begged him only once...when the lives of my loved ones depended on showing my obedience to Ra’s – and he had asked me to have Bane use me for him to watch...” he tried to catch his breath but Clark’s grip and his continuous pounding wasn’t helping. “I never again begged him...”

Clark’s fingers tightened more uprooting his locks and arching his neck.

“He says to everyone that you begged him for more at the mountain...” he mouthed Bruce’s earlobe.

Bruce found the strength to snort.

“Of course he does...You believe him?” he sensed Clark’s hesitation. “I won’t beg you, Clark, because at my parents’ grave...some months ago...you told me that I wouldn’t have to plead anyone again in my life...” he closed his eyes exhausted “and I still believe in you...though you don’t believe in me...”

Superman stretched more his neck, biting the soft skin where jawbone met the ear.

“Who’s the best of your lovers?” his wet, hissing breath attacked Bruce’s ear.

He closed his eyes to recruit some air from his stretched neck.
“You’re the only lover I ever had, Clark” he said in such a steady voice that it was a surprise for him too.

That pissed Superman: he threw Bruce’s head to the mattress keeping his clench on his hair and pressed his face down.

“You like powerful beings” he hissed through gritted teeth. “I’m Kal El, the mighty Lord of Krypton, and you’re a cheap human…”

Bruce closed his eyes; his breath laboriously maintained through his pressed nose and mouth yet he managed to take in some air to speak.

“This isn’t you, Clark; you know that I’m not enjoying this…”

But Superman buried more his face to the mattress and clenching his bare teeth increased the already frantic pace of his thrusts, drilling the stubborn human’s insides, enjoying the loud sound of his flesh slapping Bruce’s so similar to the sound of rain whipping the earth.

No… Superman whispered: he couldn’t have done that…he couldn’t have tortured Bruce like this… it was a lie! He gulped the bile that had gathered in his mouth but didn’t want to pop out to give him some relief from nausea. His fingers unclenched from the fists they had formed…

It wasn’t a lie: he did these things…He had raped Bruce.

It was the second meeting of the Avengers in the interim of ten days. Everyone around the table was dead serious looking at Tony in the head of the meeting table: the Black Widow, Captain America, Dr. Banner, Dr. Strange, Nick Fury and Pepper. Only Thor hadn’t arrived yet. Outside the whole wall windows New York was cast in the darkness of the night.

Despite Thor’s absence Tony had began presenting along with Dr. Banner the adjustments to their weapons and outfits for protection against Parademons.

“These adjustments were also made to the army weaponry” Tony said.

Natasha frowned.

“But you said we had to keep it secret.”

Tony nodded.

“Dr. Strange” he showed the man in the burgundy cape at the right of the table “and his team managed to establish a kind of protection against Darkseid’s mind control. So I spoke with the President informing him about the danger; UN and NATO are alarmed too and have informed the global governments; protective measures are already being taken for the protection of civilian population and of the greater energy facilities. In discretion of course.”

Fury rubbed his chin glancing at the door.

“Thor is here.”

But as soon as Thor entered the room the rest of the Avengers stood surprised, their faces filled with confusion and aggressiveness. Tony rushed to the door clenching his jaw and Steve followed him.

“What is he doing here?!” Tony roared and Thor raised his palm in a calming gesture as the rest of the people in the room gathered there.

Loki shook his head smirking.

“I’m so touched from this cordial welcome, Tony old pal!”

Tony surged at him grabbing him from the lapels.

“You said that Asgardians had imprisoned him” he roared to Thor without letting Loki out of his sight. “You can’t trust gods!”

Loki nodded snorting.

“I can concur on that…mmm…Tony, can you not sputter on me?”

“Shut up, you motherfucker!” Tony’s hand moved fast to hammer Loki’s sniggering face but Steve grabbed it in midair.

Tony looked at him more angry than surprised.

“I’m angry as much as you, Tony but Thor was enraged as well so something must have happened to change his attitude.”

Thor sighed inside: exactly…

“The voice of reason” Loki pursed his lips.

Only to get slapped by a female hand; he looked surprised at Pepper.

“Shut it!”

Loki shook his head and cocked his eyebrows to Tony.

“I love bossy women…lucky Stark!”

Tony bit his lip to not hit him.

“Why did you bring him here?” Steve asked Thor. “It’s top secret, remember?”

“Loki has a place in this meeting” Thor replied.

Tony jerked.

“Says who?!”

“I.”
Chapter 85

Batman entered the meeting room with Catwoman and Flash at his sides; his imposing, serious figure in vast contrast with Catwoman’s swaying and Flash’s eased demeanor crossed confidently the shining floor to the spot where the Avengers glared at Loki.

“Wow!” Flash looked around awed. “Nice Tower!”

Tony cast him a sideways glance without letting Loki out of his sight.

“Yeah, last time we didn’t have the time to offer you a tour” Tony said and acknowledging his teammates’ puzzled looks. “Batman knows everything.”

Steve was looking at Catwoman who smiled to him slyly locking her eyes with his.

“No kidding…” Fury mumbled grinning and his eyebrow arched almost at his head.

“We must be united in this” Batman spat in his raspy voice. “And the time is short so…” he showed the table for them to move there.

“Thanks for making us feel at home…” Natasha snidely remarked tilting her head.

“You don’t expect us to fight along with Loki” Captain America said to Batman. “Because of him several people were killed during his attack in New York and he helped Joker kidnap Bruce Wayne…”

Loki stretched his posture to lean to his brother’s ear.

“It would be of help if I said them that Batman used Bruce Wayne to approach me?”

“How can you trust him?” Dr. Banner intervened and Tony crossed his arms over his chest and looked smirking at Batman.

“How?” the billionaire added.

Batman walked to the table as if the Tower was indeed his.

“I need him” he said keeping his back turned to them. “We all need him. He is precious for the battle.”

Loki pouted and nodded arching his eyebrows.

“I am precious…”

Batman turned sharply his head and cast him a deadly glare with his flashing lenses.

“You’ll be also gagged if you say another word without being asked” he growled and Loki pouted.

“You’re the boss…” he said lolling his head. “Too many nerves…” he shook his head.

Catwoman and Flash moved to the table and the Avengers did the same without pausing to cast sinister glances at Loki. The later along with Thor were the last to take their seats around the table.
“What about the Arrow?” Captain America said. “He can be valuable in the battle and he is with the good guys.”

Bruce huffed inside.

“You can’t count on the Arrow.”

Natasha frowned.

“Is he with the enemy?” her eyes flashed.

“I never liked the archer…” Loki said and Thor silenced him with a glare.

“He is affiliated with Darkseid.”

Dr. Strange nodded.

“Nice… And he must have some special qualities if he managed to find Loki’s enchanted palace. Also, he has an interest in Bruce Wayne; we should take that into serious consideration.”

Batman raised his palm.

“Stark will take care of his friend’s safety but what is the important thing right now is that Darkseid’s machine is ready” Batman began.

“Exactly” Tony affirmed “I have the machine under monitoring and Luthor said it to his boss.”

He touched the screen of his wrist watch and a hologram appeared in the air beside him. Luthor was standing beside a sphere like black machine which vibrated emanating golden light that made clear the engraved symbols all over the machine. They could hear three people talking but only Luthor was visible.

“Who are the other two?” Steve asked.

“Darkeid and one of his lieutenants” Tony answered.

“Granny Goodness, according to Jor El’ Batman added and Tony showed them the images from Jor El’s archive.

“Why we can’t see them?” Fury asked.

“Because of their unique structure which intervenes with the monitoring devices and ruins the signal they transmit” Dr. Banner explained.

“And these are his troops” the footage changed to show the green creatures which attacked Bruce.

Winged, bonny creatures 7 feet tall with arms ending up to guns and blades; their heads were long and narrow and their mouth was filled with hundreds of long, thin teeth. Their eyes were white and completely blank. Their entire body was sleek.

“They attacked Bruce months ago” Tony remarked. “They wanted to introduce the fake Amazon Princess by saving Bruce.”

“We adjusted our weapons and armory to their power” Banner said.

Steve who was sitting opposite Catwoman managed to get his eyes off her and gaze at Tony.
“If his troops are here and the machine is ready then his attack is imminent.”

“Actually, we won’t wait for him to make the first move” Tony said dead serious.

Tony arched his eyebrows.

“Someone with one eye who sits at my right” his eye showed Fury “told me that I’m not a detective or a strategist so I ‘hired’ professional help” he gestured to Batman cocking his eyebrows “it’s Earth we’re talking about after all.”

Batman cast him a glare at the ‘hired’ but didn’t comment.

“We can’t afford letting Darkseid act first: his powers might hit simultaneously energy facilities, schools, hospitals and commercial flights globally which will be catastrophic causing chaos and millions of casualties” he added.

Steve looked at him.

“How can we prevent that?”

Batman met his eyes.

“By dictating the time of the attack.”

Fury grinned fascinated.

“You mean provoking the attack” the Colonel remarked.

Batman nodded.

“And how that will protect the targets you mentioned? We can’t stop the entire world’s life…it will be suspicious and Darkseid will sniff something and hit before we manage to protect all the targets.”

Batman gazed at Black Widow who had just spoken.

“The Training Day for the Great electromagnetic storm…” Batman rasped and the people around the table goggled while Tony smiled. “It’s all over the news the last 24 hours.”

Tony took it from there.

“Every time an electromagnetic storm hits the earth every system faces major problems so the governments supposedly have decided to train for the possibility of a major storm imitating the conditions and taking the proper measures: so the fields that face the most problems, e.g. commercial flights will be cancelled and the energy plants will be shut in order to avoid disaster from the storm’s energy but in reality from Darkseid hitting there.”

Batman looked around the table.

“Nuclear reactors, electricity plants if hit will cause damage of nightmarish dimensions. Thousands of people will also die when Darkseid’s Parademons hit the commercial flights.”

“Yes, but there are also countless of hospitals, orphanages, schools etc all around the world; what about them?” Catwoman asked.
Tony looked at her.

“The governments have taken measures; S.H.I.E.L.D.’s personnel will assist. Meanwhile” Tony continued “armed forces will be all over the planet supposedly following the emergency scenario for an electromagnetic storm but truly being ready to fight Darkseid’s troops.”

“Stark has made the arrangements with the leaders who thanks to Dr. Strange are not in danger of being manipulated by our enemy. Darkseid won’t suspect that this Training Day has anything to do with him” Batman said.

“And how we are going to provoke him to make his move?” Natasha asked meeting Batman’s lenses.

“By threatening what he cherishes most: his Anti-Life machine. When everything is secured, Colonel Fury along with Agents Carter and Hill will present Brunno Mannheim with summon to inquiry and a search warrant for his facilities in the desert: where he keeps his machine. At the same time Metropolis Police would launch raids at the hideouts of Intergang. Faced with such threats Darkseid will attempt to manipulate authorities into slip away but then he’ll realize that he can’t do that any longer so he’ll attack: first, because he wouldn’t want to risk losing his machine again and second because his arrogance wouldn’t bear such treatment from humans.”

“Wicked!” Flash said.

Batman cast him a dead serious stare and Flash arched his eyebrows uncomfortable.

Fury rubbed his chin.

“Inquiry and search warrant based on what?”

Batman met his gaze.

“His involvement in the stealing of Wayne Enterprises’ property” and acknowledging the stares of everyone on him. “Some months ago some items were stolen from Wayne Enterprises.”

Tony grinned.

“The items that created that machine. Mannheim had visited Bruce and threatened him to give him the items that were found in LexLabs. Bruce refused and a bit later the items were stolen. Of course, Mannheim’s urgency made me suspect something and set monitoring devices in the items in order to see what was going on.”

“Well done, Stark!” Natasha said but Fury looked pointedly at Batman clearly not believing that this was Tony’s idea.

“Thank you, my dear” the billionaire answered tilting his head.

Yet Batman moved on abruptly.

“Darkseid is really powerful; according to Jor El’s info he is very fast” he looked at Flash “Superman’s speed; he is very strong and he can kill with his eyes even gods.”

Tony projected footage from Darkseid in battles on other planets courtesy of Jor El.

“Oh! It gets funnier…” Loki chuckled. “We’ll have a blue and a green giant in the field.”

Dr. Banner looked thoughtful: Darkseid indeed was at Hulk’s size.
Batman glared at Loki.

“Loki has a gas that weakens super powers” the others shook their heads remembering the incident at this very Tower months ago. “Ironman will launch it to the air yet we can’t be sure that it will have the same effect on the New God. Your powers won’t be affected because you’ll get the antidote/inoculation Tony manufactured.”

“That’s why you said that Loki would be useful in the battle?” Thor asked.

Batman met his gaze with his jaw set.

“Not just that. But the rest is my business.”

Fury grinned.

“We are going to a suicide mission then” he said “me and my agents. Once he realizes the threat and won’t want to hide anymore he will kill the first humans that pester him: me and my agents.”

Batman met his one-eyed gaze.

“You and your agents will be far: you will call his secretary to inform her that her boss is obliged to come for an inquiry or he’ll be forced to come – at the same time, you will be to his premises in the desert. They certainly won’t let you search the place so you will leave with the ‘threat’ to return with reinforcements.”

Fury nodded and Batman turned to the others.

“His intention is to strike hard at Washington believing that if he destroys the US capital the rest will follow; we have indications that he had gathered the parademons in the area.” Tony said.

Dr. Strange pursed.

“That means casualties because he is so powerful that even with all of us battling him and with all the protection we can afford, he still would definitely blow skyscrapers and public buildings.”

Batman nodded.

“That’s why we drag him away by staging an attack in his premises at the desert. The machine is his priority. Knowing that a search is due to take place there he’ll turn his focus there; the heart of the battle will be in the desert instead of the cities.”

“He’ll risk damaging his machine with a battle there?” Natasha asked.

“Of course not. But it still will take place in the desert because our forces will be there heading to his machine.”

“However, Metropolis will still be at his target. Metropolis is Superman’s city and he has Intergang there; after police tries to apprehend his gang, he’ll try to wreck chaos and panic with his thugs so that the supposed Wonder Woman will come to help humans only to assist in killing them increasing the overall despair. Darkseid wants humans’ despair in order to become stronger. Gotham will be his target too; police and national guard is informed” he turned to Tony. “Have you taken Bruce Wayne to a safe place?”

“Bruce Wayne?” Steve and Dr. Strange asked simultaneously and the former looked at Catwoman.

“We gather that they might have a special interest for him” she said.
Tony nodded.

“Bruce is safe.”

Fury grinned and cocked an eyebrow.

“Of course he is.”

Natasha tapped her fingers.

“Police and National Guard will take care of thugs but what about Wonder Woman? She might be an impostor but one with super powers – police officers and soldiers won’t do anything.”

The dome that covered the meeting room cracked in the center and slowly opened to permit entrance to a small tornado. Everyone stared startled there except from Batman and Tony.

The tornado slowly stopped spinning to reveal a stunningly beautiful woman at 1.83. She was dressed in a shining ancient warrior’s armor made from brown leather. At her right thigh hanged a straight sword and at her left a glowing curled lasso. Her long, black hair was free at her back and two plaids created a wreath over her forehead; a golden tiara was stuck in her hair ending to a red, 16 rays star in the triangle of the tiara. Her forearms were covered with golden bracelets and her long calves with golden greaves which had the head of Medusa engraved on the top.

“That’s more like it” Natasha said “she is an Amazon, unlike that overpowered cheerleader!”

Catwoman looked at her and gave her the thumbs up.

“I’ll take care of her” Diana said.

Steve Rogers stood and came to her; he stretched his hand for a shake and she took it.

“It’s our honor, Princess” he said inclining his head.

“The Amazons will be at your side in this battle” she said and Thor got up to approach.

“Asgard’s powers will be with Earth too.”

“Darkshit wouldn’t know what hit him!” Flash said.

Batman turned his lenses at him.

“He has a powerful ancient demon with him” he spat and Flash pursed his lips. “We can be sure that he will use his powers when the time comes.”

“Which are?” Dr. Strange asked.

“Earthquakes, volcanoes, even tsunamis” the people around the table gulped.

“Civilian casualties” Dr. Banner mumbled what everyone was thinking.

Dr. Strange stood.

“My team will do everything to stop that force. We have people in every corner of the planet.”

Batman nodded.

“Good.” Tony said.
“What about Superman?” Fury asked.

Tony didn’t care to answer that but Captain America took the initiative.

“We defeat Darkseid and free Superman.”

Batman got up.

“Superman is my responsibility” and without another word he turned his back and moved to the exit.

Fury watched as the Dark Knight left the room and suddenly was met with Tony’s sarcastic stare.

“You can doubt my detective and strategic skills but not my superiority in human resources…”

The road back to Gotham was smooth: Tumbler ran in auto drive and thanks to Leslie’s fortifiers his feeling of fatigue was almost eliminated which made his work easier.

He had asked from Lucius to wait him in the cave and he knew that the loyal scientist was already there. In the meantime, the road there was a nice chance to look into the video case.

Selina was returning to Gotham on her bike because they didn’t want anyone to think that Batman’s and Catwoman’s relationship was something more than alliance – especially, Steve who already knew that Selina was the Catwoman.

He opened the archives of the late Matthew’s – Pielser’s lawyer - he had set the cave’s processor to accumulate; they were about his financial activities: there were some transactions repeated every month. It was a centre of care for severe disabilities. Bruce looked through the names of the patients and he stopped to the name of the lawyer’s wife.

The archives of the centre showed that the lawyer visited his wife often. But as he perused through the patients’ names what struck Bruce was another name: P. Elliot…Thomas Elliot’s mother. So Thomas Elliot could have some connection with the lawyer. Maybe they met there?

He hacked the lawyer’s accounts and found that the date that probably the video was bought there were some transactions; he crossed those transactions with Elliot’s accounts but of course nothing matched. Then he searched the source of the amount of money; it came from an off shore company…

He hacked the off shore’s logs and archives and everything led to Thomas Elliot. Bruce always suspected him but still he couldn’t blame him before.

Elliot was a professor at Gotham’s University so he could have known about Isaac’s skills and it wasn’t difficult for him to send him the disc.

Batman leaned back to his seat: he’d gather some more details and send everything to Gordon. He couldn’t believe that Elliot would reach that bottom…for a childish rivalry…

Flashes from the video’s content ran before his eyes and suddenly exhaustion washed his bones.

It was few yards before entering the cave; he ordered vocally the Tumbler to stop. He opened one of the compartments of his belts and took the small syringe.

He glanced at it feeling like a junky yet he had to take the fortifiers Leslie gave him if he wanted to make it through the end and be in top condition. Okay, he could drag his legs even without the drugs yet this battle needed his outmost.

He took off the forearm plate of his armor and opened the sterilized covering of the syringe. Without a second thought he stabbed the needle to his vein and closed his eyes: it wasn’t doping just his usual strengthening drugs but in bigger dosage.

Lucius was sitting on a stool before the computer bench and watched focused the central screen. Upon hearing Tumbler he stood and walked towards the vehicle.

Batman got out and nodded his greeting to Lucius.

“Good evening” Lucius said “is everything alright?”

Batman walked towards the bench taking off his cowl and Lucius eyed the paleness of his boss’ face.

“Fine, Lucius; thank you for coming here so late” it was almost midnight.

“Not mention it, Mr. Wayne.”

Bruce sat on a stool and was happy to realize that the feeling of fatigue had subsided.

“Did you search what we talked about?”

Lucius sat at the stool next to him and put on his glasses which were on the chest pocket of his blazer. He pushed some keys on the keyboard and an animated map filled the central screen.

“Your hunch was right, Mr. Wayne; there are indications of Kryptonite in Mannheim’s Mansion” he smiled. “How did you know that he wouldn’t keep Superman with the machine?”

“I didn’t know that’s why I asked you to look there too for Kryptonite but I assumed that someone like Darkseid wouldn’t want to hold his ‘treasures’ in the same place. And to hold Superman they need Kryptonite to weaken him.”

“Exactly and they don’t imagine that we suspect them to cover the mineral’s radiation.”

Bruce nodded satisfied and Lucius showed with his pen the area.

“The Mansion is situated in the center of a really vast estate and the indications of Kryptonite are coming from the building’s interior.”

Bruce nodded.

“I bet it is heavily guarded.”

“Right” he took out of his blazer’s inner pocket a tablet with the characteristics of a chip.

Bruce’s eyes fixed on this and Lucius gave it to him.

“The other thing you asked me and instructions about it’s installation” he gave Bruce a USB stick.

“Thank you, Lucius.”

Lucius arched his eyebrows.

“There is no need for that, Mr. Wayne: I know what you are doing…I’m the one who should thank... you.”

Bruce grinned.

“We have much road to travel till then…” he said. “The data Jor El sent us?”

“I utilized them as you told me” he opened his briefcase that was laid on the rock surface supported on the computer bench.

Bruce looked intrigued at the small vial Lucius placed on the bench.

“You deleted every trace of the data after?”

Lucius smiled reassuringly.

“That goes without saying, Mr. Wayne; I don’t want even to imagine what would happen if they were found in the wrong hands.”

Bruce shook his head.

“Jor El trusted me with these and I wouldn’t want him to feel betrayed.”

Lucius’ eyes became dead serious.

“He won’t.”

Bruce nodded, his appreciation visible in his eyes. Lucius seemed a bit hesitant to say what was on the tip of his tongue but eventually opened his mouth.

“If I’m permitted to say something, Mr. Wayne…”

“I think there is no doubt that you are permitted to say anything” he grinned.

Lucius licked his lips.

“Maybe after everything you have done already you should stay away…”

Bruce pursed his lips and ruffled his sweaty hair; not that he hadn’t expected this.

“Listen, Lucius: I understand and believe me I appreciate your concern; I know that I’m far from being in my best condition yet I can’t just sit and watch. There are things that must be done. And no: I can’t expect from the others to do them; they have other missions as important as mine. After all, if the outcome is negative everyone is doomed so what’s the difference if I’m safely stashed somewhere?”

Lucius lowered a bit his eyes and Bruce patted his upper arms till the scientist met his eyes.

“Everything will go as we want, Lucius.”

The older man smiled.

“It is supposed that elderly people should encourage youths not vice versa.”

Bruce frowned.

“I never thought that you considered yourself ‘elderly people’…”
Lucius laughed.

“Exactly. Lucius is younger than many youths I know!”

A third voice entered the cave after the ripping of the waterfall and the whoosh sound. Ironman landed on the rocky surface and Tony deactivated his face plate as he approached them.

“We need to talk, Bruce” he said without further undo staring solemnly at his friend. “Back in the Tower you said that Superman is your responsibility; I disagree: You did too much; it’s time to let us do what we must. I know that you have located Superman’s holding place: give me the coordinates and we’ll save him.”

“No. This is something I must do: we need him in the battle.”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“I doubt he will be in shape to fight.”

A shadow of sadness and deep worry passed over Bruce’s eyes and Tony despite his dislike for Superman felt bad.

“This is my problem” Bruce snapped. “And it is a crucial part of the plan.”

Tony closed his eyes and huffed glancing at Lucius for help to receive a pressing of the lips as if to say that there was nothing he could do.

“You must think yourself a bit, for fuck’s sake!” Tony shouted and instantly lowered his tone; he inhaled deeply. “I didn’t want to yell at you…”

Bruce shook his head.

“You didn’t.”

Tony dissolved his armor and squatted in front of Bruce to hold his upper arms.

“You already have overexerted yourself, little guy…What end you think this will have?”

Bruce met his friend’s distraught eyes and his tranquility had a calming effect to Tony.

“I’m hearing that all the time” he chuckled. “Leslie gave me medication, Tony and I feel fine. I want this to end in this best possible way, that’s why I want the plan to be executed perfectly: billions of lives are depended on this so I can’t just stay behind.”

Tony huffed and licked his lips.

“What’s the point if the world is saved and I lose you?” he said in a raspy voice from emotion.

Bruce caressed his friend’s hands on his upper arms.

“What’s the point if we lose the battle and I’m alive?” he cocked an eyebrow. “You know what that will mean.”

Tony yanked his head and gritted his teeth. He knew that Bagdana’s reward if Earth fell was Bruce.

“I won’t let that happen.”
Bruce nodded.

“Exactly. I’ll do my job and you yours.” He grinned. “I assure you that the plan doesn’t include my death.”

“I do hope so, sir.” Alfred had just arrived with the lift and as always he brought treats for them on the silver engraved tray. “Pardon me for overhearing.”

Tony stood and Bruce grinned to his butler.

“I know that a gentleman like you would never eavesdrop” he teased him.

Alfred placed the tray on the bench and cocked an eyebrow.

“Indeed…Though having to do with someone as strong-headed as you, sir, I’m afraid that even I would eventually drop so low.”

The butler looked at them.

“Please help yourselves: I’m sure you need it – oh, I am preparing a nice dinner for everyone though a bit late: I do hope you will honor me staying for dinner.”

Lucius smiled.

“You can be sure of this, Alfred; I miss your cooking.”

“Count me in too, Al” Tony said chewing one of the delicious looking ham muffins.

Alfred looked at his young master.

“As for you, sir, I think that you need a nice shower before dinner and then a good night’s sleep. Can I hope to that?”

Bruce nodded.

“I’ll do that, Alfred, but before sleeping there’s something I need to do. Something I owe.”

“I never expected you to be allied to anyone” Steve said holding Selina’s shoulders and nibbling her neck.

He had come to Gotham from New York to spend the night with her and now they were cuddling in Selina’s bed.

She crooked her mouth.

“You mean Batman…Don’t tell me you’re jealous…”

Steve kissed more passionately.

“Am I wrong to be? Mysterious men always attract women.”

She chuckled and sucked his lips.

“The only thing that connects me with Batman is that his actions helped Bruce many times. It’s nice to have the proper connections, right?”
Steve nodded and let Selina to push him on his back on the mattress. She straddled him.

“Don’t you like the pre-battle sex?” she said in her slicest and sexiest voice.

Steve stared appreciatively Selina taking off her black lace bra and grabbing his T-shirt to push it hastily over his head.

“We don’t know if there will be tomorrow, right?” he said and huffed. “Like the old days…before the great battles… If it is to die then better having the greatest memory with you…”

Selina rolled her eyes, cocked an eyebrow and lowered his jeans freeing his aroused groin.

“From my point, I’m sure that there will be tomorrow and so I chose the best doping before the big game, huh?”

Steve laughed.

“I prefer your standpoint, Sel…”

He raised his torso to close her in his arms kissing fervently her lips.

Thomas looked through the railed window door the infamous criminal: he was very different now without his makeup.

Suddenly, two acid green eyes met his but Thomas didn’t jump startled.

“Thought I was in isolation…” Joker tilted his head on the side. “And it isn’t a bit late for visits?”

“I have strong friends” Thomas replied.

“And stroooong nerves; anyone else would have run away by now.”

Thomas snorted and then smirked.

“Yeah, sure…”

Joker frowned and pouted.

“Aaaand what soomone with strong friends wants here?”

Thomas grinned.

“To offer you the chance to be out of here and get Brucie.”

Joker giggled.

“Doooon’t tell me…another fan of Brucie? And what you will get?”

“The satisfaction of seeing Brucie getting what deserves. Well?”

“Youuuu’ll get me out now?” he licked his lips nervously clearly impatient to get out.

Thomas smirked.

“No…when I consider it right.”
Joker pouted.

“Yoooo’re the boss…” he shrugged and Thomas cocked his eyebrows; he wasn’t that stupid to believe that.

The street was empty apart from some stray cat that crossed it every now and then; the stores were closed for hours now and the only light in the area came from the street lamps or a car that hastily ran to its destination.

This neighborhood was in the Narrows and after Wayne’s return from the dead had been under development exactly like the entire Narrows. Yet as it was mainly a small stores neighborhood during the night there was hardly any movement.

Jason and Dick were in the alley opposite the largest of the stores in the area.

“You’re not serious!” Dick exclaimed to his friend.

Jason hushed him hastily.

“There’s some security – careful, man! An’ ya’re not the best to speak ‘bout seriousness…”

“You made me leave my bed to show me the store you plan to stole?”

Jason rolled his eyes.

“I didna ‘make’ ya…Ya wanted to come along…”

Dick licked his lips and shook his head.

“You will seriously do that to Bruce? After everything?” Jason crooked his mouth. “If you do this then there’s no chance he’ll train us.”

“Ya heard him; he won’t train us anyway…”

“So you want revenge?”

Jason tilted his head on the side and regarded his friend exasperated.

“No wonder Zucco fooled ya, man! Ya’re talkin’ bullshit! I love Bru…” he noticed Dick’s arching eyebrows and immediately changed. “I like the dude whether he trains us or not; an’ I won’t rob the store: I’ll took one or two things – ya know for the kicks.”

“There are better things than stealing to get some adrenalin.”

Both boys jumped startled as the raspy voice came right behind them. They turned and goggled at Batman.

“Batman, I…” Dick started.

But Jason frowned and took a nonchalant expression.
“What are ya doin’ here?”

Batman yanked his head.

“I was looking for you to give you what I owe you” he crooked his mouth. “But I’m changing my mind now…”

“Eavesdroppin’ is baaaad, dude” Jason said pouting and Batman cast him a glare and made to turn his back.

He touched an indicator in his forearm and the alley was lit from the headlights of the Tumbler. Jason goggled. Batman had come to give him the ride he had asked.

“No, no! Dude, don’t go! I…I was jokin’!”

Dick rolled his eyes.

“He isn’t stupid, Jay!”

“Okay, okay! Gimme a second chance, man…I didna do the offence; ya can’t punish me just for thinkin’?”

Batman tilted slightly his head and looked the innocent expression over Jason’s eyes: if he wasn’t Batman Bruce would have laughed with the cunning of the boy. Jason was looking at him pouting, his agony increasing with each second.

A hissing sound echoed through the dirty alley and the Tumbler’s doors opened upwards. Batman made a node with his head urging the boys to jump in.

“Thanks, man!” Jason said and rushed there.

Dick looked at Batman.

“I’m sorry for leaving the Manor…it must seem like betraying your trust but it was Jay. Thank you for not being mad at him.”

“How can I?” he replied and gesture towards the car.

Jason was looking and touching everywhere in the car like a little child taking a new toy – actually, Jason was just eleven years old so he wasn’t that far from little child; Bruce was smiling inside. He closed the doors and started the engine seeing how thrilled the two boys were.

“How ya managed to brin’ the car in the alley? We didna hear anythin’. Ya must have slipped right under our noses, beside us an’ we didna notice. It has some shrinkin’ mode that makes the car smaller?”

Batman looked at him.

“No. The alley has a back entrance.”

Dick burst out in laughter and Jason crooked his mouth.

“I knew that…” he said defensively to Dick.

But he forgot all when Bruce pressed the button for acceleration and made the boys jerk backwards – of course he had them tie their seatbelts as soon as they entered the car. The Tumbler crossed the road fast and smooth but Bruce lowered the speed once the car entered the central highway where many cars passed.

“They don’t see us?” Dick asked.

“No. Tumbler is in stealth mode” Bruce replied.

“Mmm. That’d be handy” Jason said and Batman cast him a sideways glance.

“You said that you wanted to fight crime” he remarked.

The younger boy smirked and his eyes shone wickedly.

“Yup! But ya didna hire me…so…”

“There are equally if not more important things than fighting crime with your fists.”

Dick shook his head.

“Sure but sometimes fists are the best option.”

Batman met the boy’s eyes.

“Not for boys with potential like both of you – actually, every kid should stay out of this.”

Both boys huffed frustrated and the Tumbler developed speed again as they crossed the Lincoln Bridge and then the country road in the Palisades. At some point the vehicle jumped over a hill and landed several feet away causing a thrilled shriek from the boys.

“Do it again, dude!” Jason yelled and Bruce just couldn’t deny him.

The Tumbler jumped over a small hill to land in front of the forest. The boys looked at him disappointed.

“No more?” Dick asked.

“I want to talk to you” Bruce said dead serious and the boys nodded. “Soon a major battle is going to start: a powerful alien with his allies is going to strike us.”

The boys initially goggled but then exchange determined glances.

“We’re not afraid” Dick said.

“We can help kick out that UFO motherfucker” Jason added.

Batman grinned on the ‘UFO’ because he remembered Tony using the same word.

“I know that you are brave. So I want you to stay at the Manor and you, Jason, will bring your mother there” the boys nodded. “The Manor is the safest place in Gotham.”

“Yeah, I can bring mom to the Manor but I can do things” Jason protested.

“Me too” Dick added.

Batman met the boys’ stares.

“Your help is precious and that’s why I’m talking to you right now. I trust you that you will protect and support Alfred and the others; they will need your courage.”

The boys looked each other and pressed their lips nodding making their talking with the eyes.

“And you?” Dick asked. “You will be in the battle?”

Batman nodded.

“And that’s why I need you in the Manor.”

Jason was thinking something and liced his lips uncomfortable. Dick noticed.

“What?” he asked his friend.

“Is just that…” he looked at Batman. “Is this why you took me for a ride? Ya’re taking care of yar checklist in case ya…?” the boy’s voice was almost angry because he didn’t want to sound sad.

Dick frowned.

“No” he said. “You can’t be in battle…You could…” he shook his head. “You’re strong and brave and all that but you’re injured and vulnerable.”

Jason nodded.

“Dick can’t afford to lose another parent…” he said “even a foster.”

Dick looked at his friend.

“Neither Jason; he is been through enough shit…”

Batman was touched from the boys’ love yet he set his jaw.

“There is no reason for this discussion; I took you for a ride because I wanted to talk to you confidentially…and I had delayed too much Jason’s ride which is not right: he earned that. And that’s all! I didn’t have you for drama fans.”

The boys stayed silent: Bruce was right; they shouldn’t be talking like that. Jason pursed his lips.

“Ya said I earned it… Even though I was thinking to burst into that store?”

Batman grinned.

“I know you are a good boy, Jason, and down there you know right from wrong. Actually, you two are great friends to each other: the one helping, completing and supporting the other: don’t you ever lose that.”

Jason gulped and pressed his lips.

“Ya’re doing it again, man!” he protested. “Talkin’ as if ya’re gonna…”

“Don’t say that, Jay!” Dick snapped.

“I’m saying what I’m thinking and that has nothing to do with the situation, understood? Do you doubt my abilities?” Batman growled and his frown under the cowl was audible; he wanted to make the boys forget their fears.

“’Course not, dude!” Jason said and Dick shook his head. “Ya’re gonna kick their asses an’ we’ll do the same if anyone tries to hurt Alfie an’ the women!”

Batman nodded.

“That’s what I want to hear. Now we’re getting you, Jason, at home and then return to the Manor.”

The vehicle roared reaching turbo speed in a few seconds and the boys exclaimed thrilled.

He was dying. Clark knew he was… the few drops of stamina had evaporated yet he didn’t care if that was the end; not because the pain, the hunger, the thirst, the torture would end but because he didn’t deserve to live any longer after what he did.

At least he wouldn’t see what was going to happen; the Earth’s destruction; the slaughter of humanity; Bagdana taking Bruce…No, that…that wouldn’t happen: even if he was to die Bagdana wouldn’t enslave Bruce. No, no, no! They would be stopped even if he died forgotten here…

He just wished he wasn’t this weak and unable to escape. He wished he could stop Darkseid and his gang and save Earth and Bruce. And then he wouldn’t care if he died because Bruce would be safe…If only he could ask forgiveness from his Star; the forgiveness he didn’t deserve but at least Bruce would know that he realized his crimes and regretted them and he will be eternally tormented for what he did.

He wouldn’t have the chance to kneel before Bruce and apologize…He was doomed but at least let the world be saved by some miracle.

Suddenly, he felt a slight change; something like being moved. But he didn’t have the strength or the mood to raise his heavy, throbbing head from his chest and open his eyes to see; probably they had come to taunt him again. It was as if his body was feeling better the burning red light subsiding and the Kryptonite effect lessened but he didn’t believe it; tricks his mind played to him to torture him more with hope.

“Moon River wider than a mile
I’m crossing you in style
Some day…”

His eidetic memory was his cruelest torturer and it was right to do so tormenting him with the song he was singing to Bruce every night while he was in coma back in the Fortress. Even the remembrance of that song stabbed him brutally in the chest.

Bruce waking up from the coma.

Moon river, wider than a mile
I'm crossin' you in style some day
Old dream maker, you heartbreaker
Wherever you're goin', I'm goin' your way

“You know you should have been sleeping…”

Clark’s voice was stern but in his eyes it must have been obvious that he was happy Bruce hadn’t slept.
“You spoiled me; I need you to cuddle me to fall asleep – so basically is your fault.”

Superman crouched and lifted him from the chair easily as a baby.

“I’m so happy I finally spoiled you!” he exclaimed heaving him in bridal style and flying again through the open balcony door of his bedroom in Tony’s villa at Thasos.

“Where are you taking me?” Bruce chuckled and Clark leaned his head over his, locking their eyes.

“To spoil you more…”

They floated over the black sea; the full moon was sending silver to sleep over the black slithering silk of the sea. And then in the peaceful thrashing of the small, lazy waves, Bruce heard some very familiar words that made his heart beat faster.

“Moon river, wider than a mile…”

He stared at Clark who blushed and stopped singing.

“I know this song” Bruce said.

“No kidding…”

“I must have heard it in Tony’s house: Sinatra is his favorite singer…but this song feels more important” Clark was looking up, pursing his lips. “What?” he asked grinning.

Clark gulped and looked him in the eyes completely solemn.

“I used to sing to you that song…every night…at Fortress…when you were…” he inhaled deeply “far away from me…when I wanted to persuade you to come back so to see the world together…to not let me see such a vast world alone…”

Bruce felt his eyes watering and Clark smiled.

“It seems they’re right about people hearing us even when…” he caressed Bruce’s cheek “they’re far…Don’t cry, Star…we’ll cross that river together” he captured his lips.

“Sing it again…”

Clark began singing as before mimicking perfectly Sinatra’s voice but Bruce touched his fingers to his lips and he stopped.

“In the Fortress…don’t tell me you sang using Sinatra’s voice?”

Clark blushed.

“No…”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I want to hear it with your real voice…”

Clark coughed embarrassed and began singing with his own voice and it was the loveliest voice Bruce had ever heard; he murmured appreciatively without opening his eyes and felt Clark change his position hugging his waist and holding him upright glued to his body. Moving slowly to the rhythm of the song…Bruce nestled his head to Clark’s heart keeping his eyes closed to suck the verses, Clark’s voice and his heartbeat.

“Old dream maker, you heartbreaker
Wherever you're goin', I'm goin' your way…”
“Two drifters, off to see the world
There’s such a lot of world to see
We’re after the same rainbow’s end, waitin’ ‘round the bend
My huckleberry friend, Moon River, and me”

Something unbelievably soft and cool caressed Clark’s hot forehead: the truth was that he was feeling much better; the fever must have had fallen considerably and although nausea was still there in his empty stomach it was just an echo of the hurricane of the previous…hm…days? Months? Also, the pain was decreased to almost bearable levels yet he was too weak, unable to move.

But he could feel the soft and taut at the same time surface he was leaned on: that was leather definitely. He wasn’t laid flat on his back but more in a sitting position. Also, he could still open his eyes yet he knew that the red radiation and the green glowing of his chains were gone; now around him was tender, warm golden light much like sun’s radiation…

He was feeling better as if the song itself had some healing powers which thought was stupid: songs could heal but a beloved song like this could definitely fill you with courage.

He moaned as the cool fabric brushed his sweaty neck. And then his dry, torn lips felt something touching them; his mouth opened on its own accord and some drops of water dripped inside comforting his thirst but also making the demand for more violent; however Clark knew that at this point he shouldn’t drink much water at once because it would hurt him.

Which the stranger didn’t want as well because he withdrew the water.

Clark was happy that he felt better yet he was afraid that it was Ivy again having fun by torturing him with the temporary stopping of his torture. On the other hand…Ivy didn’t know that song and its significance.

His heart drummed and despite the weakness and the pain that insisted on piercing his every cell he opened his eyes; he wanted to open them at once but they couldn’t do that.

So Clark gradually, in the speed his weak eyes allowed him, managed to see behind a wet veil that he was in a small space; in front of him was a hard surface with bluish indication and a small screen; he could see the source of the golden light above him on the low ceiling: a small generator of light that imitated the sun. Which was necessary because from the window in front of him he could see in the covered with forest horizon that the day hadn’t dawned yet despite the fact the dark blue of the night had cracked to allow lighter color.

But what struck him was the presence of a steering wheel. He was in a car.

But his surroundings were the least he wanted to see; his heart was pounding his tormented insides pressing his panting breath to a stampede. He wanted to see his singing savior because now he was sure that this wasn’t a game of his captors to torture him even more.

The wet veil covering his eyes stubbornly didn’t want to clear as much as he blinked; however he managed to see the outline of a face…and frankly he didn’t need to see more to recognize yet he needed to see because he couldn’t bear anymore not seeing…

“Batman…” he whispered because his remaining power permitted him only that; his lips cracked in a joyful smile even though he didn’t want because he was afraid that Bruce might consider it a mocking gesture. His mind was a twirling celebrating blur but at least he had the wisdom to call him Batman not sure if there was someone else around.

Two gloved hands held tenderly his head.

“Calm down – you’re safe now.”

The veil that till now was covering his eyes rose and he saw Batman’s strict cowled face over him. The lenses were looking at him and Clark was sad he wasn’t seeing Bruce’s beautiful eyes. As if he sensed it Batman held his cowl touching the fingertip receptors and Clark’s heart jolted joyfully hearing the familiar and so exhilarating sound of unlocking.

Of course his heart stopped for a few seconds not because of pain or weakness but because he was gazing at Bruce’s beautiful face again after months revealed fast but for him tormenting slow – arousingly slow. Bruce’s eyes weren’t filled with hostile determination as in their last meeting in the Metropolis’ hotel; sure, they still glowed with the man’s characteristic determination but at the same time Clark could see concern and affection if not…love. Love he didn’t deserve.

Bruce saw Clark trying to raise himself and he hugged his back to settle him back on the seat; he wished he could have transferred him somewhere more comfortable yet this wasn’t an option right now. After all this time he felt his heart convulsing for the man before him; there wasn’t even a trace of the man that insulted, yelled and treated him bad…As if that Superman was just a nightmare; only Bruce knew that he wasn’t a nightmare and just pushed his heart to stop behaving so stupid.

He put his forearm under Clark’s head so that it was more comfortably for him.

Yet Clark tried to rise again; his agony written in his eyes.

“You shouldn’t have come, Bruce…” his breathing became a rasp and Bruce wiped with the cloth the sweat from his forehead. “It’s too dangerous, Bruce…Bagdana…Bagdana is…”

But Bruce locked his eyes with Clark’s and just nodded.

“I know” he said calmly.

But this didn’t comfort Clark who wanted to at least warn him about every detail of the sinister plot that was weaved in the shadows. He shook his head.

“Diana is not the real…” he inhaled. “You were right” he said hastily. “She isn’t the Amazon Princess; she is a fake; she is a murderer called Poison Ivy” Bruce was completely tranquil worried only for Clar’s out of breath rant yet Clark in his despair didn’t notice and continued pushing his weak lugs. “She works for an alien that wants to conquer Earth…Darkseid…that’s his name… he set Bagdana free and Bagdana planned everything…he and Ivy manipulated me into…” his strength evaporated before uttering all the wrong he had done to Bruce all these months.

But Bruce didn’t want to hear either; he was seeing Clark’s agony and that wasn’t helping.

“Hush, Clark…”

Clark frowned and then smiled relieved.

“Of course…you know everything…otherwise you wouldn’t have found me. But still, Bruce” he made to support himself to rise but Bruce didn’t let him. “Bagdana made everything to get you! He might be somewhere close…you have to leave and warn the others.”
Bruce grinned.

“I have done that already...They know about Darkseid.”

Clark let his head rest on Bruce’s forearm and his glimmering from fever eyes regarded the human with awe; which stabbed him in the heart because he instantly remembered the insults he had launched against that rare human being.

“You are injured, Bruce…” he said weakened “and vulnerable; we can’t afford the risk of you getting hit…” he coughed. “Someone else should have come…” no, even that was too much for a scum like him. “Or better you should have let me rot here…” he bit his lips “it would be too soft punishment for what I did.”

Bruce wanted Clark to stop thinking what he did and focus on what he should do now. He used the cloth to wipe the new drops of sweat from his face.

“You’d have preferred to see someone else?” he smiled and cocked an eyebrow with his eyes glimmering mockingly.

Clark closed his eyes and Bruce pressed his lips because he had missed him so much.

“No…but…” he moaned: a delicious smell tantalized his nose.

He knew what that was and for confirmation he felt the familiar sense on his lips. He opened his eyes: Bruce had brought a donut to his mouth – the Prince’s Donut. Clark felt his tired eyes watering.

“Bruce…you…”

Bruce nodded.

“You must eat” he said composed.

“My stomach...Nausea…” but the truth was that being away from the red light and the Kryptonites had made the nausea subside more as the time passed and now smelling the delicious dessert actually he felt a pang of hunger.

“You need the sugar” Bruce replied determined reading the change on Clark’s eyes.

He supported his head and Clark ate a small testing chunk. He moaned from appreciation after the starving of all these days. But his worry didn’t let him enjoy the delicacy: in his mind, Bagdana’s threat was always looming.

“Bruce, they will notice my absence...they’ll know and chase us...You! They can’t catch you...they shouldn’t.”

Bruce regarded him a bit strictly; Clark shouldn’t torture more himself with that.

“Don’t worry about that...just eat” he spat.

And Clark obeyed.

“Don’t tell me that Batman bought them from Ms. Rose’s bakery?” he asked copying the similar question Bruce had asked him the morning after their night in the greenhouse.

“Don’t tell me that Superman is Ms. Rose’s client?”
Bruce felt a punch in his guts hearing that question which remembered so well.

Clark noticed and his guilt became salt in his wounds…the conscience wounds because his body didn’t have any surface wound; the tortures they inflicted to him were internal. Yet his conscience’s torture was worse than everything else and didn’t subside even if Kryptonite and red radiation was away.

“No…Lois helped” Bruce decided to soothe him by answering his question.

Clark’s eyes shone in the reference of that name but then he stopped eating and lowered his eyes remembering how he treated his best friend.

“How is she?” he asked.

Bruce found his eyes.

“She is fine; I told her everything about the mind control you were under” he crooked his mouth

“Tony of course had informed Bruce Wayne because Bruce couldn’t have found this. She is always your friend – now. Eat!”

Lois was pressing the keys on her desk computer huffing and puffing; today the all too familiar roaring of her colleagues’ typing was annoying. Martha Kent had called Perry to tell him that Clark was ill so he’d have to stay in bed for some days. But Lois wasn’t stupid: she remembered the phone call Ma Kent made her and her question about Clark’s whereabouts.

If Clark was with her all this time then why she called her to ask about him? Of course he could have returned to his Ma after the phone call but still…Clark definitely couldn’t be sick so this was just an excuse to cover up his absence from work. And Lois wondered: only from work?

She was writing in auto pilot while thinking hard; Martha’s sudden call to her son to come visit her after Superman saved those people in the restaurant attack. And now this… Lois frowned without even realizing. Maybe what Superman did that day in the restaurant put him in some kind of danger and that was the reason Martha called him to the farm? To protect him? But then Ma Kent called looking for her son…so Clark left the farm; and now Martha calls to say that he is ill…and Superman has disappeared…

The ring of her Smartphone startled her.

“Bruce? What a pleasant surprise! Yeah! Everything you want: do you want me to come to Gotham?”

She smiled.

“You’re here?! Wait…I’m coming.”

Bruce saw her coming no more than five minutes later; he was at the park opposite the Planet’s building, sat in his wheelchair, dressed in jeans, a white crew neck sweater, a black leather jacket and a cap covering his head. His legs were covered with a quilt blanket and he wore a pair of black sunglasses.

He was waiting under a tree near the park’s center where there wasn’t any person who could hear. Bruce saw Lois scanning the park with a frown.

“I forgot to ask him where he’d be…” she said frustrated.
Bruce chose the spot he was waiting exactly because allowed him to watch the park’s entrance. So he saw her looking around to locate him and to help her touched the screen of his Cosmo calling her.

As soon as she heard Bruce’s voice in her phone she spotted him. A young man in a wheelchair… she shook her head: she should have located him instantly – she felt really dump failing to do so till now who saw him with the Cosmos to his ear.

She ran there and Bruce smiled giving her his hand for a handshake.

“I forgot to mention where I was…” he said.

Lois narrowed slightly his eyes noticing how easily the young billionaire could pass unnoticed wearing casual clothes and a pair of sunglasses. She felt Bruce’s gaze behind his glasses and smiled.

“You didn’t have to make the road here, Bruce; you could have called me and I’d have come.”

Bruce took off his sunglasses and looked at her.

“I want a favor so it would have been rude to ask you to make the road; after all, I needed a small trip” well, that wasn’t actually true: Leslie’s medicine may have given him strength and stamina yet he could sense that every new journey had its toll on him.

Lois sat at the wooden bench beside Bruce.

“You can ask whatever you want. It will be my pleasure.”

Bruce smiled.

“You’re too kind, Lois” she waved that off. “Some donuts…”

Lois’ goggled.

“What?”

Bruce shrugged.

“I would like you to buy some donuts for me.”

Lois laughed and then stared at Bruce perplexed.

“Sorry for asking…but all this road for some…donuts?”

“Specific donuts” Bruce arched his eyebrows and now Lois seemed to understand. “I need Clark’s favorite donuts from Ms. Rose’s bakery. And you as his best friend must know what are his favorite.”

Lois shook her head.

“Are you sure you don’t know? I mean you two were together for several months…” he said and immediately bit her lip realizing that it’d pain him to be reminded of that.

Yet Bruce didn’t show anything.

“He always ate the donuts that were my favorite…”
Lois nodded.

“The Prince’s Donuts” she smiled tenderly seeing Bruce blushing.

She got up.

“Wait here and I’ll bring them.”

It didn’t take her more than ten minutes to return with a paper bag filled with the delicacies; she gave the bag to him. Bruce recognized instantly the smell. It wrapped some of his most beautiful memories.

“But they are the Prince’s Donuts.”

Lois grinned smartly.

“Right. This is his favorite taste…”

Bruce’s eyes became blank and Lois was touched and sad for the young man’s pain.

“Do you know where he is?” she asked to change the subject as she sat again at the bench.

“It’s confidential but I know you won’t say anything to anyone.”

“That goes without saying, Bruce.”

“Tony told me that he was under some influence all this time and that Diana was actually an impostor” Lois nodded – she would have bet her salary on that. “She works with a powerful alien who plans to attack the planet. Actually, Tony believes that Superman is their captive right now and they prepare to attack the planet.”

Lois frowned. She used to snort hearing about aliens but after she learnt the truth about Clark she changed her attitude.

“That makes sense – Superman surely is one of the greatest protectors of Earth. They know his human identity?”

“Tony told me that they ignore that.”

Lois huffed and crossed her arms over the chest.

“Will they manage to save him? Save the planet?” she asked determined but with some agony in her voice.

Bruce nodded and then Lois touched her hands on his shoulders. Bruce raised his eyes to meet her gaze.

“And with you two? Is there a hope for you and him?” she asked tenderly.

Bruce met her eyes.

“No.”

Lois closed her eyes sad but nodded understanding.
Thor stood in front of the arched shaped window in the throne hall of Odin’s palace; he was in his full battle attire along with his horned Viking helmet. His blue eyes were focused in front of him on the green and blue planet that twirled slowly placed in the vastness of the universe. His brow was furrowed as thoughts flooded his mind.

He clenched Mjolnir without realizing and twitched feeling a hand on his shoulder.

“You’re so deep in thought that you didn’t hear me crossing the hall.”

Thor turned to see his father dressed for battle as his son; he nodded.

“Are you worried about the battle’s outcome?” Odin asked.

His son shook his head.

“I’m sure we’ll win, father…Bruce’s plan is excellent.”

Odin arched an eyebrow.

“Bruce’s…” he commented arching his eyebrows but without saying more. “Then why are you so worried?”

Thor looked at his father’s rugged face.

“Every battle has its dead…”

Odin crooked his mouth. Of course.

“We know that but it applies only to the mortals.”

Thor smiled.

“Not in this battle, you know that, father: Darkseid can kill gods.”

“Howeover your worries are for your mortal friends…”

The younger god nodded and pressed his lips.

“Yes, Tony.”

Odin let a bitter short laugh.

“And Mr. Wayne.”

Thor stretched his body and yanked his head.

“He insists on being in the battle while he is paraplegic and tired from his activity all this time.”

Odin pursed his lips.

“It is his life even if it’s a mortal life: he decides what he’ll do with the years he has. He is an unyielding, proud being” he chuckled “I’d have been surprised if he chose to stay away.”

Thor looked at Earth.

“He insisted on Loki fighting with us.”
"Your vote was in favor of Loki’s release."

Thor shook his head.

"Yours too!"

"It seems that I was under Batman’s charm, as well…" Odin laughed yet Thor gulped uncomfortable.

"I hoped to have my eye constantly on Loki but Bruce kept secret how he is going to use him."

Odin nodded.

"You must trust your clever friend" Thor shook his head.

"I trust Bruce but I don’t trust Loki… And even without the Loki factor still it is dangerous."

Odin patted his upper arms.

"We have an army of Valkyries and Asgardians ready to confront Darkseid" in front of them Odin projected what he had just seen: in the marble surfaced vast yard of the palace an army on chariots shone under Asgard’s sun.

Female warriors – the Valkyries - with wings and long curved swords and men of Asgard in their glimmering silver armors. Thor felt very proud of his people.

"Your friends will have all the help Asgard can give" Thor nodded and Odin’s one eyed gaze became strict. "But you must not let your heart bond with him more…You should never go beyond the limit of the friendship. For your own good, son."

Thor nodded.

"Bruce will never let me go…” he chuckled “…astray and bloom such feelings;” he crooked his mouth. “But I’m not sure if it is ‘for my own good’…” he snorted and Odin pressed more his son’s upper arms locking their eyes.

"He wants to protect you, Thor."

He smiled.

"Of that I’m sure."

"How’s Ma?" Clark asked and Bruce came out of his thoughts.

"She is alright but very worried… I reassured her that you’d return to her."

Clark was eating slowly from Bruce’s hand realizing that the donuts were more delicious when eaten from Bruce’s lips mingled with his perfume and the taste of his flesh. Yet he knew that he couldn’t ask for that any longer.

“It was you that advised her to call me at the farm, right? To keep me protected…”

Bruce wiped with his fingertip some cream that had stuck in Clark’s lips.
“I did. I knew that after you stopped the attack in the restaurant Ivy and Darkseid would want to neutralize you so that you won’t become popular again…”

Clark pressed his lips.

“But I left…not listening to her despair…indifferent to her feelings” he sighed and closed his eyes. “I’m an ungrateful son…I hurt her…”

Bruce caressed his sweaty hair.

“You’re not” he said and their eyes locked like the old times Clark realized with a pang.

“I owe her an apology…and to you…”

Bruce tensed; he didn’t want to hear anything.

“The things I’ve done…” Clark insisted.

Bruce touched his gloved fingers to his mouth; his eyes flashed.

“Don’t say anything…we have a battle of life or death before us.”

But at this moment Clark cared only for the man he had before him; for the pain and suffering he inflicted on his Star; his Star who despite his behavior never stopped caring and protecting him.

“Right now” he was feeling better yet his strength was still quivering and so was his voice “the only thing that matters is asking your forgiveness.”

Bruce licked his lips.

“There’s nothing to forgive. Now what matters is the battle: we have only a few hours before it starts and we need you, Superman” he said abruptly.

Clark bit the inner of his mouth.

“I want to fight and beat them for what they did…but I’m too weak” he frowned. “I’m still in pain” he huffed “I don’t care about the pain but I have no strength; I can’t even move my arms and legs – my powers are nonexistent. Even with abundance of sun light plus the artificial solar light of the Tumbler I’ll need days to recover and still I won’t be in my top condition…”

He stabbed his eyes to Bruce’s.

“But I’ll fight and I’ll be happy to die to stop them.”

Bruce yanked his head.

“We don’t want you dead” Clark’s heart leapt happy. “Darkseid has his machine in the frozen desert” Clark nodded because he knew the place. “The vast circular basin the mountains form throughout the state’s borders. He has facilities there where he keeps the Anti Life Machine. We will bring the battle there to prevent Darkseid from hitting the cities. We can’t wait him to make the first move.”

“Exactly: he intends to destroy Earth and exterminate humans. How you will make him fight there?”

“Fury will go to his premises in the frozen desert with a search warrant; they will refuse and Fury will leave with the threat that he’ll come with reinforcement to force the search; Darkseid will try to mind control the officials to cancel the order. When he’ll realize that he can’t stop that he will do everything to protect his machine – especially, when he finds out that his Intergang will be under Police’s attack too.”

“You corner the beast…” Clark mumbled awed. “But can you manage all that? Darkseid’s mind powers are tremendous and Ivy has super powers that if used…”

“The real Diana is with us. And we have more allies at our side: Jor El will cast the Fortress protection.”

Clark’s eyes widened impressed.

“And we need your entire strength and your skills as well” Bruce cocked his eyebrows. “Now. The plan will be set in motion in about one hour and thirty minutes.”

Clark was really enthused with the plan yet his weak, aching body was a big letdown that choked his exhilaration.

“How?” he asked perplexed almost in despair.

He began trembling from cold; his fever had dropped but now his temperature declined abruptly due to the days he spent under Kryptonite’s effect. His teeth rattled.

Bruce’s insides clenched seeing him like this and he raised him from the seat to hug him so to give him his warmth – the Tumbler’s heated seats weren’t enough; even though he wore the armor still this was warmer than Clark’s body right now. He felt Clark’s heart beating crazily with the proximity.

Clark closed his eyes: Bruce was holding him. Bruce still loved him so much that he hugged him to warm him. He managed to persuade his arms to touch Bruce’s back though the armor kept away that soft, taut skin he loved. His eyes met with Bruce’s.

Bruce knew that it would come to this; he had come here determined to do it; for that reason he didn’t let anyone else come. He had to give Superman his strength back. And Clark was freezing, the warmth inside the Tumbler insufficient; the thick forest near Mannheim’s Mansion was a perfect cover yet it blocked much of the real sun’s warmth.

It was difficult; his embarrassment was tormenting yet he had to do it; he clenched his jaw and swallowed his shyness. He began taking off the various parts of his armor rather hasty.

Clark hadn’t overcome his dizziness yet he looked in disbelief Bruce taking off his armor revealing part by part his dressed in underwear body. He couldn’t understand what was happening: maybe it was a dream? His desire for forgiveness and his thirst for Bruce was taking the form of a beautiful illusion?

Illusion or not he couldn’t let Bruce do this. He touched carefully his hand and Bruce cast him a perplexed glance; Clark could see some sweat drops on his face.

“I’m not worthy of this, Star…”

This is what Bruce needed: delays in what he had to do especially when that was so difficult.

“Can you simply shut your mouth?” he snapped and Clark grinned.

Bruce let Clark lay on the seat’s back to have his hands free to take off his undershirt. Clark’s misty eyes widened awed seeing Bruce’s naked torso stretched as he pulled off his undershirt; he swallowed the saliva that filled his mouth: he wanted so much to touch, to kiss but he didn’t have the strength and more important: he didn’t have the right after what he had done.

Yet Bruce slithered in the same seat with him and straddled him making Clark’s heart beat strong with excitement; Clark wondered how Bruce managed to feel so light on his weakened body.

But his wonder took an abrupt end when Bruce did the most unexpected thing: he found the spots where Superman’s weathered uniform clasped and pushed the fabric off his torso.

Bruce stopped hastily his eyes from doing what they loved: admiring Clark’s perfect shaped body. He wrapped his arms around Clark’s back and raised him to touch his torso.

“You’re cold…” he whispered to Clark who was too dazzled at the moment to reply.

He was numb feeling Bruce’s velvety, warm flesh on his again after every monstrosity he had done; beyond every odd…This was a dream: the most beautiful dream; his Star holding him glued to him wanting to warm him. He blinked to control his numbness and his quick breath: Bruce was so pleasantly warm like returning to your home after walking hours in the freezing cold and finding the fireplace lit…

“You’re so warm…you’re my sun…” he mumbled letting his head touch Bruce’s shoulder on the crook between neck and shoulder using his weakness as excuse to feel more skin and suck more of Bruce’s bodily perfume.

Bruce felt his insides melt from affection but a cruel bite was always there reminding him that things could never be the same again. He didn’t have any feeling from his legs but he was sure that if his legs were healthy now would have paralyzed by Clark’s breaths on his neck. He caressed Superman’s cold hair. He had set on a system of sun light emission from the Tumbler’s ceiling but the healing effect was too slow and Clark was so much cold and weak.

Their time was limited: he inhaled deeply because now was the time he dreaded.

He took off the armor’s part that covered his pelvis back and front; then with one arm holding Clark tight on him he lowered with the other his boxer and did the same with Clark’s bottom half of the uniform.

Clark was startled feeling something so hot and soft on his icy groin; his eidetic memory that all this time was tormenting him now blessed him with the affirmation that this was indeed Bruce’s groin. He raised his eyes and met Bruce’s; it was obvious from the sweat drops on Bruce’s forehead that he was shy and embarrassed.

Bruce licked his lips.

“You need the warmth” he snapped and moved his hand to touch Clark’s length.

Clark appreciated the sensation; he was grateful but he was ashamed as the memories from what he did surged his mind. He managed to persuade his hands to overcome their weakness and cup Bruce’s face. The younger man locked his eyes with Clark’s without stopping his ministrations on Clark’s length that suddenly began twitching.

“Bruce, no…You don’t have to do this…I’m a scum: I don’t deserve your forgiveness.”

Bruce didn’t reply anything; he captured slowly Clark’s lips and began a passionate kiss that gradually became strong as Clark followed sucking the younger man’s taste as if his life was depended on this.

Clark moaned glued to Bruce’s lips as the human fondled his back with tender movements while his other hand pumped his length; his blood began warming again and when Bruce detached and lowered his head to touch his lips to Clark’s awakened length his body was agitated from pleasant expectance.

Clark didn’t manage to speak before Bruce started…but he didn’t have the strength to stop something so pleasant, so life giving. Bruce’s mouth ministrations on his length coupled with those dexterous hands on his back pushed Clark to a blissful oblivion; he rested his head on the back of the seat because he still didn’t have the power to support it under such flooding sensations. He was grunting and his dead till now body convulsed as his blood began boiling…

Bruce felt Clark’s length hardening and despite his relief that Clark’s body was recovering he felt a cold current running the healthy part of his spine. However he closed his eyes and choked his hesitation.

When Clark’s erection was rock hard Bruce detached his mouth to Clark’s moan of sadness.

The Man of Steel took gently Bruce’s chin and brought their eyes to meet. He was aware that the younger man was now applying lube to Clark’s length.

“Bruce…”

But Bruce determined grabbed his own paralyzed thighs and made them open; then he took Clark’s rock hard length.

“Bruce…I…” Clark mumbled astonished but before saying anything else he felt his length brought to Bruce’s opening.

Clark could feel Bruce’s heart beating fast and he could tell that it wasn’t only from joy as his own; he touched Bruce’s shoulder: he was ready to tell him to stop because he knew that Bruce wasn’t ready – and he wouldn’t be ready for long after what he had done.

Bruce sensed Clark’s hesitation: damn! He had failed to cover his own apprehension. With a determined move he pushed Clark’s length inside him. He was surprised to realize that his anus protested painfully still echoing the experience of their last night.

But he ignored the pain and looked into Clark’s glimmering eyes; Bruce could tell that Clark was enjoying their unification but also in his beautiful eyes sadness and confusion were clear.

“Bruce…why?” he mumbled but even as he uttered the words his hips began convulsing in thrusting movements, pushing his flesh more into Bruce as if attracted by a powerful magnet; like the thirsty runs to the water…

Bruce’s eyes were blank; he felt Clark’s arms hugging his back to settle him on his lap more comfortable.

_The cave was empty from bats as they had gone for hunt; he had returned from the meeting in the Avengers’ Tower almost at midnight. But even that late Lucius didn’t deny him the favor and was waiting there to give him everything he had asked; yet Bruce wanted something more: affirmation once again for his assumption._

_“Lucius, do you happen to remember…”_
The scientist looked at him interested.

“What, Mr. Wayne?”

“When you inoculated Superman from the effect Ra’s Al Ghul had caused him through my body, how his organism responded?”

Lucius frowned thinking for a bit.

“At first the recovery of his powers was slow but then all of a sudden, one morning his powers had reached their previous level of strength; I remember that it was after that big downpour; I remember that night because Mr. Stark was looking for you.”

Bruce nodded. It was the night of their first time in the greenhouse. Clark had mentioned briefly when the next night Bruce had gone to his hotel room.

“You know that you healed me?” Clark whispered in his ear still holding him glued on his body, Bruce’s calves caressing his shivering buttocks.

Bruce locked his still dilated eyes on Clark’s.

“Actually, you did that. Remember?”

Clark brushed Bruce’s wet locks that stack on his forehead and cheekbones framing his sweaty face.

“Despite the huge improvement from the medicine, my powers didn’t feel as before but after last night…” he sighed “I feel stronger than ever.”

Bruce chuckled.

“It’s your psychology.”

Clark tapped Bruce’s nose and then caressed his swollen lips, Bruce kissing his fingertips.

“Lucius’ exams confirmed it…”

Clark was thrusting in him in a stable pace, strong but also gently; Clark’s body was rejoicing their coupling after all these months yet he wasn’t stupid; he knew that Bruce wasn’t perfectly into this but he was doing it for his sake, to heal him. And yes, his body was beginning to feel a lot better as if he was inside the very sun.

His thrusts became faster and Clark hugged Bruce tighter seeing in the human’s eyes the realization. The Man of Steel kissed tenderly Bruce’s sweaty jaw line caressing his cheeks; their eyes locked as Clark’s body thrust one last time feeling Bruce’s insides.

Clark caressed Bruce’s back affectionately kissing his wet hair and Bruce finally let his head rest on Clark’s shoulder. Clark’s body was hot now and his naked muscles vibrated energy and life: Bruce closed his eyes – it worked.

Clark cupped Bruce’s face and brought his eyes to meet his own; he caressed his cheek.

“There is no hope for the world, right?” he asked determined, no fear for the ending that was near.

Mannheim was sat in the big leather armchair of his desk; his office at the top floor of Mannheim Industries’ building was drenched in pure darkness – the big rectangular window behind his back settled as to not let even the pale light of the dawn come in.

His eyes was staring blank at the wall projecting there the plans he worked in his mind. Fire, explosions, dust and debris everywhere in the great human’s city; the White House demolished. Human corpses all over the streets mummified as his machine had sucked everything they had inside them.

“It is almost time…” he dragged his words. “It’ll begin in Washington and the rest of the world will sink in the panic and terror witnessing Darkseid’s enormous power and greatness…”

Bruce smiled and for Clark that smile was hope; the sun he had be bereft of all this time.

“There was never hope for this word but that never stopped us from working to create hope.”

Clark smiled and brushed Bruce’s hair ending up caressing the back of his neck; their eyes were locked like their bodies that breathed and beat in the same pace like few months ago.

“You saved me; you gave me warmth, strength, energy; you gifted me with your body: you gave me life…”

Superman felt his old strength vibrating inside his muscles, energy fuelling his body; his senses reaching their full capacity which enabled him to absorb every detail from Bruce’s body. He nuzzled the human’s cheek’s rejoicing the velvety flesh even with his nose; he could sense that Bruce didn’t loath the touch but neither relaxed into it like in the past.

“I’m sorry, Star…I’m sorry for all the insults, the pain, the suffering I…”

But Bruce touched his fingertips to his lips and Clark kissed them feathery.

“Thank you, Star.”

Tony stood in front of the whole wall control panel in the operation room of the Tower watching avidly all over the global map the orange round lights of medium vigilance slowly turning to red indicating the time of action.

Around him in the room agents on their desks or standing buzzed like bees giving or receiving information.

Fury, Carter and Hill were on their way to the Mannheim facilities in the frozen basin; the call summoning Mannheim to interrogation was also a matter of time to be made and Tony pictured the one eyed veteran readying his old fashioned cell phone; his eye shining in determination and his full lips curled in a smirk.

Tony was agitated and he looked forward for the moment – it wasn’t long – when he would activate Ironman’s armor and fly to the battle. He preferred the battle to end all this waiting. He wished he had Bruce’s patience.

He felt two soft hands on his shoulders and his nostrils caught Pepper’s intoxicating perfume; in the chaos of the ‘war room’ he hadn’t heard her heels. He turned his eyes on her with a big smile over his face.
“That perfume…” he said.

Pepper crooked her mouth.

“Are you alright?”

Tony cocked his eyebrows.

“Yup! But I’d gulp an entire bottle of scotch if it wasn’t battle time” he frowned. “Or maybe I should do that? In the past scotch had enhanced my performance…”

Pepper crossed her arms over the chest.

“Not even think about it!” she spat strictly and Tony grinned.

He set his arm around her waist and led them out of the room. The operation room was dark with artificial light and being out in the corridor that was made of whole wall windows enlightened Tony’s spirit: the dawn was all over New York’s skyline and the first golden rays of the morning sun exhilarated him in new hope.

“They are unaware of that day’s importance…” he said “peacefully ignorant of the battle that it is to begin. They are even happy for the day off they have…”

Pepper looked him in the eyes and caressed his hair.

“You are afraid about the outcome of the battle?” she asked in a whisper so that nobody hears.

Tony shook his head.

“No, I’m sure we will prevail. We have the weapons, we have the knowledge, we have the preparation, we have Batman’s plan. Everyone is in place as Batman wanted: Diana and Selina in Metropolis to help the police with Intergang and the fake Diana – afterwards they will join the battle; Dr. Strange’s team protecting each continent – Stephen is ready to reach the battlefield; Fury, Carter and Hill heading to the basin; Captain America and Hulk ready to begin towards the facilities and I will do the same in a few minutes; Thor is in Asgard standby to lead his army here; Flash will assist National Guard and the army in Washington in case Darkseid orders his troops to attack; Batman believes that Darkseid will concentrate his forces in the desert to not let us approach the machine yet he wants to be sure; battleships are ready to launch fighters to stop Darkseid’s troops if they attack all over the globe.”

“Then?” Pepper asked.

“It will be a difficult battle…” he pressed his lips “I have inoculated our friends and I’m going to launch Loki’s weakening toxin in the battlefield to weaken Darkseid but still he’ll be mighty. People might get killed…”

Pepper nodded.

“Every war has its casualties in both camps. You are worried about Bruce?” she guessed.

Tony inhaled.

“I would prefer it if he was safely settled in Superman’s Fortress; Jor El will unleash the Fortress’ protective energy to prevent them from destroying the planet with earthquakes, hurricanes and volcanoes. Certainly the Fortress would be unassailable whatever the outcome. Bruce is still paralyzed; already exhausted and that battle…”

She blinked.

“He is brave and smart; he knows how to protect himself – and you two will be in the battle together” she shook her index finger warningly. “You better be careful and not your usual playful self; these creatures are not for games.”

Tony closed his eyes and fumed.

“Believe me I have no mood for games with these motherfuckers.”

She leaned and kissed him in the ear lobe something that always made him feel goose bumps.

“My hero…” she chuckled.

“You’re anything than a lady in distress, Peps.”

“Thanks for noticing” she cocked an eyebrow.

“I feel confident with you here overlooking and handling information; coordinating along with Lucius from the Wayne Tower.”

She smirked.

“You have a knack in human resources, right?”

He patted her upper arm and kissed her lips slowly giving a passionate pace.

“When this shit ends…” he started but Pepper rolled her eyes.

“Men’s promises while kissing are like the pre election promises of the politicians” she said and Tony cackled.

But then his wrist watch beeped and he met Pepper’s eyes determined.

“What?!” Mannheim roared to his shaking secretary.

“Agent Fury from the S.H.I.E.L.D. called and demanded that you present at Metropolis’ attorney general for inquisition. If you refuse to attend the hearing – he said – you will be arrested.”

Mannheim knitted his thick eyebrows.

“For what?” he rattled his teeth.

“For the robbery in Wayne Enterprises’ facilities, sir.”

Mannheim clenched his fist and punched his antique grandiose heavy desk.

“That bastard again! Leave!” he roared to the woman and she hastened to do so.

Mannheim rubbed his jaw: there was no way he’d go there obeying to stupid humans! If they tried to arrest him, well, they were due for a nasty surprise. However he didn’t like that they suspected him for the robbery not that it was difficult to connect him: he had threatened Wayne before the robbery.
The sun disk was now clearly visible on the horizon from the Tumbler’s winds-creen. Yet Clark didn’t care about that: the only sun, the only life he needed was right there inside the car; in his arms, settled on his body; Clark was inside the sun itself and it felt so amazing…

Yet Bruce was aware of the time and the importance. He detached from Clark which made the Man of Steel narrow his eyes in weak protest and slipped into the driver’s seat. He began putting on his underclothes and then his armor.

Clark having finally regained much of his lost strength began putting on his uniform too not without regret.

“It’s necessary such haste?” he asked hesitantly because after the gift Bruce gave him it felt ungrateful to ask for more – he didn’t even deserved that.

Bruce holding his cowl ready to put it looked at him and Clark’s insides clenched because soon he wouldn’t be able to see his magnificent eyes.

“We don’t have much time; the operation starts…”

Clark nodded and he was ready to say something when an alarming sound was heard from the Tumbler. Bruce let the cowl aside and touched the screen zooming on the approaching figures – they were ten Parademons. He pressed his lips and put on the cowl. They shouldn’t see that Superman had escaped.

“We can beat them” Clark said seeing the creatures which he recognized from Bruce’s description of his attackers and from the visions Darkseid had planted in his mind.

Batman cast him a sharp glance.

“They must not know that you’ve escaped” the door hissed opening upwards and he was ready to jump off.

But Clark grabbed his forearm.

“You can’t face them alone: we will leave this place, drive you somewhere safe and I’ll fly to the frozen basin to fight with the others. Bruce, you’ve made already far too much and you are injured; you’re tired I felt that.”

But Batman jumped outside shaking off his hand.

“The Tumbler is set on auto pilot to drive you to the location.”

“No!” Clark yelled.

“Don’t try to overcome the system, you can’t” the door closed and Clark searched for something to open it. “You can’t open the door with force, Clark. Just go there and fight like all of us…We’ll meet at the battlefield.”

The Tumbler began moving accelerating fast; Batman watched the vehicle expressionless and that brought his eyes to meet with Clark’s who still looked at him; the impenetrable windows of the Tumbler weren’t an issue for him since his sight had much recovered.

Batman activated his glances and turned his back to meet the Parademons giving Clark the time to Catwoman was covered by the shadows of the alley two warehouses away from the one that housed the central Intergang hideout. She was at Metropolis’ docks and the sun had already risen on the horizon. Catwoman would prefer the operation to happen during the night yet he understood Bruce’s intention: who would suspect an attack in daylight?

True: there weren’t additional security measures around the warehouse –clearly to not raise suspicions that they prepared something big. The thugs had been gathered to several hideouts of the gang clearly being ready for Darkseid’s orders for action. Police would surge simultaneously at each of them in a few minutes. And Catwoman and Diana who would stay hidden till Ivy appeared were ready the first to help the Police and the second to confront Ivy who surely would appear once her boss realized the danger to his plans.

Selina frowned suddenly; behind her was a presence that till now she hadn’t sensed coming. Bruce had warned her about Darkseid’s minions.

“I don’t like stalkers” a squeaking, malign female voice addressed her back.

Catwoman turned cocking an eyebrow to see among the shadows the elderly female creature that was Darkseid’s lieutenant: Granny Goodness. She smirked.

“Hadn’t anyone told you that you shouldn’t mess with cats? They have nails!”

She said and launched her whip hitting her in the face. She wasn’t concerned of betraying the plan because certainly Granny didn’t know her alliances.

Granny growled pissed and stormed at her.

Batman saw in his forearms indicators that the Parademons were close. He pulled his grapple gun and wrapped the cable around a thick branch launching himself up: he needed to buy Superman time.

As soon as the green creatures were underneath he jumped at them.

They were startled and Batman used the element of surprise to knock out instantly two of them upon landing kicking them hard in their vulnerable guts.

Some of the others stormed at him keeping him occupied while the others fired at him with the weapons they had attached to their arms.

He was hitting the Parademons who attacked him dodging the fire that was launched at him which killed some of the Parademons that fought with him. He grabbed the hand of one that was ready to stab him with the blade he had in his other hand and twitched his arm upwards breaking it; at the same time he launched a cable from his wrist wrapping the firing arm of the Parademon that aimed at him turning the weapon to shoot another Parademon who was ready to fire.

Batman clenched his jaw and sent the Parademon whose arm had broken to crush on his comrades. Instantly he turned around jumping at the remaining Parademons who set their weapons against him.

Suddenly he felt a change in the air behind his back.
“Stop!” he heard and the Parademons halted.

Batman turned to see the one he already knew. Bagdana: in his demon 9’ granite form dressed in black leather leggings and a black leather vest that let much of his broad chest visible.

“You?” Batman feigned surprise and the demon smiled.

“You believed me rotting in Tartarus, right? I know you would come for him even after everything he did to you – after all, it’s not difficult to find Kryptonite’s radiation when you want to find where Superman is kept: his disappearance certainly made you suspect that Diana lured him to a trap – you never believed in her” he laughed. “But I caught up with you before saving him. And now you’ll come with me.”

Batman set his jaw.

“I won’t come with you and you won’t come near me” he showed the Black Butterfly to the demon.

Bagdana smirked and without doing a move Bruce saw in the air before him Catwoman fighting with Granny Goodness; his friend was dodging the fire Granny was sending at her and attacked back kicking Darkseid’s minion hard in the face causing an enraged shriek from her.

“She is great but she has no chance against Granny…” Bagdana said cocking an eyebrow.

Bruce frowned inside and saw Granny deflecting Selina’s bullets and sending fire at her; Selina began somersaulting avoiding the lethal fire and took cover behind a trash bin. His friend fired at Granny who laughed maniac when she deflected every bullet.

“It’s a matter of time” Bagdana said slyly watching avidly Batman’s reactions.

“It’s fake” Batman growled clenching his fists.

Bagdana shrugged.

“It could be but you know deep inside that I didn’t create that:” he shook his head amused. “I always keep watching that foul creature called Granny Goodness for backstabbing me and look whom she is ready to kill: you brought your friend with you and left her in Metropolis as a backup for your operation to save Superman;” Bruce’s heart began beating again: at least the demon didn’t suspect the real purpose of Selina being in Metropolis. “She was to help you with taking him away, huh?. Granny hates humans…” he said almost sighing. “She is going to kill her…”

Bruce’s heart was pounding seeing Selina jumping away as Granny blew the trash bin with a beam she sent with her hand. He had sent Selina to her death! And Diana couldn’t help because she was away, instructed to show up in the precise time…

“Give me the diamond and the Knife of Justice and I’ll save your friend.”

Bruce knew what that meant: surrender himself to the demon. Selina jolted her whip and grabbed Granny’s firing hand deflecting the fire and crushing her to the wall. Yet as she was falling Granny dragged the whip crushing Catwoman to the cement of the alley; instantly Darkseid’s lieutenant stood and turned smirking ready to fire at Selina who was down.

“Save her!” Batman demanded throwing at the demon’s feet the diamond and the Knife he had took out of his belt.

Bagdana stretched his index figure to the image and Granny with a puff vanished leaving Selina frowning looking surprised around her; at the same time Bruce felt his legs weakening and realized that the demon had deactivated the his armor’s system that enabled his legs to stand and move. He collapsed to the forest bed like a chopped tree and simultaneously felt his arms paralyzed.

Bagdana looked at him and huffed satisfied.

“I like it when I ruin Granny’s fun…”

Granny found herself in Mannheim’s office; she was fuming realizing that someone messed with her business but seeing her boss she was shocked. However her anger was such that she didn’t notice her boss’ mood.

“Bagdana did it!” she shrieked between her flying gray hair.

“What?” Darkseid spat.

“I was ready to fry a stalker who probably wanted to break in the central hideout and he just took me from there and brought me here! Why are you keeping that lousy creature with you?”

Darkseid met her gaze calm.

“It’s almost time for our attack: humans dared to summon me for inquisition. They threatened to arrest me if I don’t present myself in two days” he cackled. “When they come to arrest me I’ll launch my attack – I want the world being in a normal day – unlike today – so that they watch planes and civil buildings filled with people being exploded. After we finish I’ll get rid of that useful – he gave us Superman in a plate after all - but annoying demon.”

Granny smirked satisfied, her wrath having subsided.

“And his human pet?”

Mannheim raised an eyebrow and pouted.

“I need a pet too…”

Suddenly, his personal phone rang and he frowned seeing the number of Stitches, the thug he had named leader of the Intergang: the filthy rat was instructed to never call him.

“Police surrounded our hideouts…”

“Don’t worry” he said confident “they will leave.”

Granny looked him perplexed and Darkseid smirked smugly.

“It happened before; I’ll manipulate the authorities to call them back.”

He sat in his armchair behind the desk – he was sure of his success yet he frowned realizing that he couldn’t access the minds of the police heads.

“What?” Granny asked in agony.

“Nothing” he said and concentrated harder.

Yet his concentration was ruined. His personal phone rang again; he clenched his jaw seeing the number: the premises in the Frozen Basin.

His eyes widened on listening the leader of his security.

“You didn’t let them inside!”

“They were S.H.I.E.L.D. agents – I repelled them but they had a warrant and they said that they’ll come back to search the facilities with force. They’ll bring the Avengers!”

The Machine! They must not find the Machine.

“They think!” he spat and while his employer was trying to ask instructions he launched his phone to the opposite wall smashing it to pieces.

He’d stop them; their superiors would do it. There wasn’t any difficulty for Darkseid to mind control those stupid men and women whom humans had the idiocy to call leaders. They would stop the S.H.I.E.L.D.

But to his shock he was unable to reach their minds as if a wall was built around. He tried again and again… Some sweat drops appeared over his brow. And something he hadn’t experienced ever again crawled in his insides: agony? Fear? That were for humans not him! But he couldn’t afford losing his Machine again now that it was ready.

“Master what’s wrong?” Granny leaned on him touching the grandiose desk.

His breath came out as a panting smoke.

“Nothing…”

The stable phone on his desk rang since his cell was broken in pieces. Stitches.

“They didn’t draw back! What to do?”

His punch this time broke the table. Someone understood that the minds of the authorities were controlled and found a way to block him. Intergang was under attack and they were ready to search the facilities with his machine: was there any connection or just a coincidence? He had to protect his machine.

“Boss, what we’ll do? They have surrounded us and are in!”

Mannheim changed his form to Darkseid’s gigantic form. The God yanked his head back.

“Fight back! Kill them! I send you backup!” he roared and Granny looked at him eager almost drooling.

Darkseid punched the phone smashing it instead of just ending the call.

“Very well” he smirked. “If they want it that way…they don’t know what beast they try to corner… the pests chose to die earlier.”

“Take him back to the Mansion” Bagdana ordered the Parademons who hurried to get Batman up.

The demon conjured an ancient looking box and threw it to the others.
“Put inside the gem and the dagger.”

Batman knew that the demon didn’t dare touch the artifacts himself; not without his human form that protected him from their power.

Bagdana met Batman’s glare.

“I know you would have easily escaped them so I had to take my measures…immobilizing you.”

The human set his jaw and yanked his head defiantly and the demon grinned satisfied.

“I’ll see you in a while. First, I have to make sure that you didn’t manage to take your pathetic lover out of his cell” he shook his head. “I’m sure I caught up with you before entering the Mansion but…” he smiled “a demon must be sure, huh?”

Batman met his stare keeping his cool and the Parademons that held him manhandled him towards the Mansion that lay magnificent and terrifying underneath the forest covered hill.
Chapter 87

Granny stared mesmerized at her master’s tense in determination and wrath face; Darkseid’s ever frown became even deeper as his nostrils emitted fumes and sparkles.

“Ivy will lead Intergang into massacring Metropolis while the Gotham filth will do the same; the authorities are in deep sleep so it’d be ridiculously easy to flood the streets with blood, panic and chaos – no mercy! I’ll take care of the police those foolish agents are bringing to search my facilities. Parademons will make their first appearance there and then as the world will be in wonder I will strike myself with all force to the US capital showing to everyone that they are doomed…One hundred thousand Parademons are there hungry for human flesh.”

Granny grinned broadly but then rubbed her chin.

“What about the Avengers?”

“They won’t know anything till the squad going to my facilities is slaughtered; they won’t know where to go – they’ll rush to Metropolis and Gotham to save the cities from the criminals and I will be uninterrupted as I’ll smash Washington with Parademons. Imagine their confusion and panic? They won’t know what to do…Eventually, they are going to come to stop me only to meet their humiliating defeat: but before I finish them off I want them to see the three big cities drowned in blood knowing that the entire world will have the same fate after; and then I’ll turn on my machine and the so-called protectors of this planet will watch humans being drained alive, their energy accumulated giving me the ultimate power to extinct the universe.”

She yanked her head thoughtful.

“Thor?”

Darkside shook his head.

“My sources say that he left the planet; until the news of my attack reach Asgard and he comes here there would be nothing for him to do…except to die himself” he said with blank eyes that visualized what he uttered.

Granny nodded.

“What about that scum demon? You won’t call him to fight?”

Darkseid tilted slightly his head; his eyes shone with confidence.

“I don’t need him now; I’ll slaughter the squad myself. He will be called when the attack on Washington will start: not because I need him to win but because I want him to devastate the world with earthquakes and volcanoes” he cocked his eyebrows “not that I can’t do it myself however let him do something…”

His minion bowed her head with respect.

“Everything for your glory, master” her eyes flashed maliciously.

Batman watched nonchalant the Parademons poking at him with their blade-arms cutting his armor.
but unable to reach his skin.

They soon realized that their blades couldn’t harm him so they began just hitting him all over the body; the armor still absorbed most of the force but Bruce felt the blows above the waist and acknowledge those below the waist. The fact that he didn’t even cringe from their blows enraged his captors.

The Parademons had brought him to a big room at the back side of the L shaped Mansion; it was empty, dark and dungeon-like with walls and floor covered with cheap cement.

Even though Bagdana had rendered his legs and arms paralyzed the Parademons chose to tie him erect to a stone rectangular pillar in the middle of the room. His wrists were bound together behind his back with a chain- like thing that glowed red; his ankles were bound side by side with a chain exactly like the one that tied his arms.

Bruce’s mind was focused on other things: Bagdana had gone to Superman’s cell to make sure that he indeed had caught him before freeing the Man of Steel. Things were on a sharp razor’s edge… The plan could so easily get ruined.

But Batman wasn’t showing anything just gazing at the aliens that surrounded him like hungry wolves having fun by punching him unaware that his armor spared him from the biggest of the impact.

The taller and broader from them who seemed and acted like their leader raised his blade arm and slapped him in the face. Batman took the blow without a grunt and immediately raised his head regarding the alien creature with his cold lenses. Weren’t for the cowl his entire cheek would be bleeding but now only his jaw was slashed.

“The end of your useless race has come, human; you and your kindred soon will die” he said in a hissing voice.

“So you are not mindless pawns…you know foreign languages” Batman growled.

The green creature showed his thousands of needle thin, shining teeth.

“It’s nothing to us to learn your primitive stupid language.”

“English is not the most difficult or perplexed language in the world” Batman commented sarcastic “so it wasn’t a big deal…”

The creature tilted his head on the side; his elliptic, plain black eyes puzzled.

“You’re not scared?”

Batman yanked his head scowling.

“Of you? You know the word ‘fear’ but you are a zero to my scale of fear” Batman spat.

The creature rattled his teeth.

“I’ll show you that I’m what you should fear most!”

Batman snorted unimpressed and the creature raised his blade arm and began downing it swiftly to Batman’s neck, the human not even flinching but watching him with the same tranquility.

A breath before the blade grazed Batman’s neck the creature made an awkward, squeaking sound and then it was turned into ashes that formed a small pile in front of Batman’s feet.

The rest of the Parademons jumped backwards startled and shaken and turned their heads to see what Batman was seeing: Bagdana materializing in the middle of the room among green-blue smoke. The demon didn’t need to bother with the automatic door.

Bagdana straightened his gigantic posture and walked arrogantly towards Batman; a grin was plastered to his face and his yellow cat-like irises were fixed on Batman’s lenses.

He stopped in front of the pole where Batman was tied and without breaking eye contact with him made a sharp movement with his head and the Parademons clearly scared from their leader’s fate scattered outside the room.

Bagdana shrank his posture to be slightly taller than Batman and regarded dead serious his captive. He raised his hand and touched with his fingertip the blood trail on Batman’s jaw the Parademon’s hit had left. Batman snapped his head away but the wound had already vanished leaving the skin unscathed.

“I promised that I won’t let anyone to hurt you.”

“To whom?”

“To Lilith – I would never let her last child being hurt: you’ve been already too much hurt” he paused. “And to myself.”

Batman didn’t reply just yanked his head backwards and Bagdana smirked.

“You’re pissed” he said cocking his thick eyebrows. “I ruined your plan” he huffed. “I caught you before freeing the Kryptonian: he is still safely housed to his cell.”

The visible part of Batman’s face remained expressionless and Bagdana nodded.

“You see I knew you were looking for him even though he betrayed you. His disappearance and your suspicions about Diana’s malicious nature made you search for him. Even though you are paraplegic you were leaving Gotham to find him.”

Batman’s frown though covered from the cowl was clear.

“How do you know I was gone from Gotham? How do you know about me suspecting Diana? What are you doing here? How do you manage to escape…” he had to play the ignorant so that the cunning demon wouldn’t suspect that he knew everything.

Bagdana’s gleeful smile was filled with satisfaction for Batman’s confusion.

“So many questions from a great detective like you…You are clueless, aren’t you?” his irony subsided. “Of course…you were injured, disabled, your heart broken by Superman. You were facing far too many things to figure out everything.”

Bruce always liked to play the ignorant.

“What are you talking about?” he spat.

Bagdana grinned and circled slowly the pole where Bruce was tied.

“You asked from Thor to check on me yet I predicted that and I fooled the little Asgardian…you can’t imagine how funny it was…” he chuckled and stopped right in front of Bruce. “It wasn’t difficult: putting a reflection of me in Tartarus baring my characteristics…You suspected that something was off with the Amazon yet you didn’t have any proof so your suspicions were attributed to jealousy, right?” Bruce didn’t reply and Bagdana nodded. “Since Thor assured you that I was safely jailed in Tartarus you couldn’t imagine that Diana was planted by me to seduce Superman and render him useless.”

“That’s impossible” Batman said.

Bagdana snorted.

“I’d prefer ‘ingenious’ or even better ‘diabolic’ – I’m a demon after all” he twitched his eyebrows smugly. “I took a common” he tilted his head on the side and pursed his lips “well, not that common criminal from Gotham” he nodded grinning at Batman’s silence “yes, from your city, Batman; I took her and turned her into the powerful, charming Amazon Princess. Poison Ivy – the villain I…’hired’ – had her own special powers, one of them changing her form, using pheromones to allure and enslave people to her will and I gave her the powers and skills of the legendary Diana of Themyscira.”

Bruce would like to rub in his face that the fact he chose to introduce Ivy with the popular version of the legend instead of the reality was his mistake. However he pressed his lips feigning tranquility that struggles to conceal surprise.

“Escaping from your jail in Tartarus requires great power and you were deprived of your strength; how can you give power to someone when you don’t have for yourself? How you got out?”

Bagdana leaned to him bringing his face close to Batman’s relishing the human’s breath that was slightly faster from frustration for his failure.

“Only a god could free me from Tartarus and a god did it giving me back my strength.”

Batman shook his head.

“Yes, Bruce…A mighty alien god who wants to conquer and destroy the earth; he was clever enough discerning my usefulness for his plans so he freed me sealing our alliance.”

Batman set his jaw.

“You mean servitude” he growled.

Bagdana smiled and his fingers crossed tenderly Bruce’s exposed chin causing his captive’s jerk to avoid the caress.

“Everyone has a different word for the same thing” he pursed his lips. “Alliance, servitude…ally, master, servant: I don’t give a shit how you or Darkseid calls it – Darkseid is the god that freed me.
The only thing that matters is getting what I want.”

“Which is?”

Bagdana’s face became serious.

“You” his eyes were completely still.

Batman snorted.

“I’m your share from the spoils?” he asked sarcastic.
The demon shook his head.

“I do deserve the best thing this planet has” Batman glowered at him. “I gave Darkseid Superman tied in a green Kryptonite weed bow and a heroine - protector of the humans that will slaughter them when the time comes: imagine the despair when humans look at Wonder Woman for salvation and she answers with killing them? Darkseid needs humans’ despair; he is going to make the perfect use of the darkest emotions of humankind: he’ll become even stronger. It’s the first material for his Machine.”

“Machine?” Batman feigned puzzlement.

“The items you found in Luthors’ Labs; those that were stolen…”

Bruce pretended to halt his breath.

“Mannheim works for Darkseid?”

Bagdana laughed.

“So your mind began working… Yes, he came to your office to threat you to give him the items – foolishly, that was a risky thing to do but the idiot god didn’t ask me; and you of course refused” Bagdana frowned remembering how Bruce’s attitude caused Darkseid’s interest. “But, no, Mannheim doesn’t work for Darkseid: Mannheim is Darkseid” he said amused with Batman’s stunned silence. “When I captured you, your friend, the Cat, without knowing was faced with Granny Goodness, one of Darkseid’s lieutenants – so you were right to ask me to save her.”

The demon waved his hand in the air.

“Mannheim was Darkseid’s human form for years while he was here watching and learning about humans. And of course this explains why you located Superman in his Mansion. I bet you thought that Mannheim was a new Luthor.”

Batman cocked an eyebrow inside: right…However he licked his lips pretending that he was trying to overcome his surprise for what he heard.

“How did you know that I was suspecting Diana? And how did you know I was away from Gotham?”

Bagdana rubbed his square chin.

“Oh, yes; we come to this…”

In front of Bruce’s eyes Bagdana was replaced by Oliver Queen in his smuggest expression. Batman slightly gaped.

“Queen?”

“Exactly, Bruce” he answered in Queen’s low baritone. “You suspected Diana but you thought that she just brainwashed poor Oliver Queen and that he just fell to the same trap as everyone else. It was so obvious when you were trying to get from me information for the island and the Princess; trying to make me affirm your suspicions. Of course, since Thor had seen me in Tartarus, you couldn’t suspect that Queen wasn’t Queen” he tilted his head. “Well, almost…” he commented.

“And the real Oliver Queen?” Bruce asked something that really wanted to learn.
“I found him in a deserted island that even the maps don’t have; he was almost dead and then I conceived my plan: how to introduce a charming, stunning legendary Amazon to seduce Superman and a tycoon to watch over you and try to…”

“What?”

Queen shook his head.

“Try to gain your love…As a human to a human: a new start between you and me…” he snorted. “But you are too stubborn to look away from that Kryptonian…I tried; I tried hard: I took you where Superman was fucking Diana expecting that you would loath and forget him once and for all…”

“You took me? But it was…”

Queen gave his place to Arrow, the demon taking his other human disguise.

“The mysterious Arrow…” he said thoughtful. “I like the name you gave me, Bruce” he chuckled. “I even became a hero to approach you…” he shook his head disappointed, sad. “But your heart is an unconquerable fortress…”

“And the real Queen?”

“I saved his life by possessing his body: it was a matter of minutes for his death” Arrow’s flashing green eyes locked with Batman’s lenses. “I could have let him die yet a human body was very useful to me.”

“Why? You could find another way to bring Ivy close to Superman.”

Arrow’s grin was visible among the shadow his hood shed over his face.

“With his body I could be near you: the human flesh would not let the diamond affect me and hold me back. And as a human with common experiences with you I might manage to approach you” he lowered his eyes. “I wanted to live a human romance with you…” he whispered and Batman pressed his lips.

“What would Queen become?”

“I can do whatever I want. He is just a shirt for me: now he is of no use to me.”

“When you leave his body he will die?”

Arrow tilted his head on the side.

“Don’t tell me you came to care for him after all?” his voice was filled with irony yet his eyes were sparkling happily. “It’s my choice whether he lives or dies when I’ll leave his body.”

“Then let him live” he almost ordered.

Arrow laughed amused.

“I managed to enter your heart with his form? I should be grateful to that shirt – but demons can’t feel gratitude” he seemed thoughtful. “However I will let him live; actually it doesn’t matter. In two days Darkseid will unleash his attack and every human will die.”

“You cooperate in this, in something that will exterminate the world only to get me?!” he growled angrily.
Arrow disappeared leaving Bagdana in his place; the demon grabbed his chin and leaned to him.

“Why I should care about this horrible world?”

“You live millions of years here!” Batman gritted his teeth.

The demon cocked his eyebrows.

“So what? This world and humans caused me only suffering; they separated me from my love; they took her away and killed her! I’ll be happy when humans get massacred and you should be as well. All your life they humiliated, tortured, raped you! This world it’s only pain for you, Bruce! And for me… We can make a new start in a new world: a world only for us…” he whispered and brought his lips to touch tenderly Bruce’s lips.

But he averted his face leaving the demon’s lips to kiss the air.

“Never!” he growled clenching his jaw.

Bagdana jerked upwards with his eyes blazing red from ire; he slashed the air with his hand and immediately Batman’s armor peeled off of his body and his underwear vanished leaving him completely naked; the cowl had followed the other pieces of the armor so Bruce was facing the demon without anything between them. Yet his eyes were wilder and fiercer than the lenses.

Bagdana brought his face close to Bruce’s and closed his eyes.

“I claimed your unripe, child body and it was the most beautiful thing in ages…now seeing your mature body makes it impossible to be patient any longer…”

Bruce stabbed him with his sparkling eyes; his jaw was set in determination.

“Forget that, Bagdana!”

Bruce felt his shackles vanishing. His legs bent dragging him down but Bagdana caught him in the air holding him tight. Bruce growled and convulsed in the powerful being’s arms using his body since arms and legs were paralyzed yet Bagdana made his gripping stronger. The demon didn’t want to hurt the struggling human in his arms so he let him drag him a bit.

However this had to stop so he forced Bruce to face the grim wall setting an invisible soft barrier so that the human wouldn’t be crushed on the concrete. Bruce twitched trying to resist yet the demon was like granite exactly like the color and the texture of his body and crushed him on the wall; he was prepared for the pain of the impact with the concrete but instead he felt the soft layer the demon had conjured. On that he snarled and fought more: he hated that pretention of affection and care when the demon had only one purpose.

The demon’s cocooning body became like pinchers stilling his writhing body.

“I should have punished you” Bagdana whispered in Bruce’s ear panting from frustration and his effort to contain the man without hurting him. “You backstabbed me and sent me to the Tartarus to rot!”

Bruce clenched his jaw and jerked his head to avoid the close contact yet the demon was unyielding.

“Then do it!” he spat defiantly. “You definitely won’t be the first one and it won’t be your first time doing it!” his breath came like grunts as he tried again to shake the demon off him.
Bagdana tightened his grip on the human’s upper arms pressing him more to the wall to persuade him to stop fighting. However the close contact with Bruce was a torment and the human’s perfume mesmerized him to the core. He sighed.

“Calm down, Bruce: you’re going to hurt yourself trying to fight me.”

But Bruce growled and jerked again his torso holding his breath to gain more strength.

“I don’t care!” he spat through his teeth.

“But I do!” the demon was panting; however this fighting spirit, this defiance made his body scream in desire.

When he finally managed to confine and immobilize Bruce, Bagdana touched his head on the human’s naked shoulder closing his eyes in pleasure both from the sense of the velvet flesh on his thousand years old skin and the rare perfume. Bruce was trying to catch his breath and calm his heart that didn’t accept defeat.

“Please, Bruce” the demon said gently “remember…Remember our life together…you like fighting as you always did…remember the clangs of iron and copper in the battlefield when we disguised ourselves to mingle with humans in order to participate to their stupid wars?” he caressed Bruce’s arms listening to the human’s quick breath; he felt like trying to hold a wild animal. “Remember when we wear their ancient armors and carried their spears…the sense of the primitive iron swords as we hit and killed people…Remember the screams; the war cries of the warlords; the skin raising shriek of the horns; the smell of blood; the smell of terror; the smell of the death that we were the only ones who wouldn’t taste…Remember the fires…”

Bruce’s eyes were focused on the stone wall, blank seeing the images Bagdana was speaking about: a vast battlefield on a valley with a small river at the right.

The angry and terrified neighs of the horses were painful to the ears; a cloud of dust covered the valley but everything was visible because he was standing in the middle of the valley people with ancient armors and weapons surrounding him. Around them people were dueling; spears were ripping the air hissing to splash into human flesh causing creepy cries of pain. The smell of blood stung in his nostril but he loved the sensation.

He was waving his heavy, straight sword twirling, severing arms, legs and heads in his motion; covering his body with his shield. He could see beside him Bagdana no different than a sturdy, tall man slaughtering those who made the mistake to attack him; he used his sword yet some times he did it with his bare hand. He felt his fleeting gaze on him and the demon turned and smiled and Bruce felt his heart elevated and his body aroused. Someone downed his axe on his helmeted head shattering the iron –oh! It was priceless seeing the human’s shocked expression when realized that his victim was alive and had stabbed his dagger in his guts: the owe of being aware that he had encountered a god glimmered in his terrified eyes till life abandoned him.

Bagdana ran to him laughing; his sword blade as his dagger dripping hot blood. Indifferent to what was happening around, the demon wrapped his arm around his waist and kissed him passionately. And he liked the feeling: for an hour he was fighting enjoying himself but now his body was excited for the demon that had glued his body on him. Bruce elevated himself in the sky taking Bagdana along – the excitement of the battle made his body feel so alive, so lively! He took off the fabric that kept his hair tamed; a flood of raven-blue silken hair fell like wave all over his back.

Bruce’s heartbeat had calmed and he felt the demon’s lips trailing the back of his neck.
“Humans were our favorite game and their wars our perfect foreplay…Remember our coupling after the heat, the arousal of the battle; the passion…Your fire burning the demon of the fire…” he breathed. “I love you, Bruce.”

Hearing that, Bruce overcame his momentary numbness of feeling the sensations of another body. He jerked managing to push a bit the demon taking advantage of his surprise; yet he was immobilized again.

“You don’t know what love is!” Bruce growled in frustration for the forced intimacy he didn’t manage to shake off.

On that Bagdana felt his aroused body fueled from anger: he grabbed both Bruce’s wrists and turned him to touch his back to the wall, stretching his arms on the wall over his head. Bruce’s breath flamed his face hot from frustration because he was unable to escape.

“Is that so? Who can stay loyal to his dead love for ages? Who can continue searching for his love through thousands of years?”

He felt Bruce’s chest heaving from his panting and touching his; their eyes were locked in a staring contest. Bagdana clenched his jaw and pressed Bruce more on the wall rejoicing the contact.

“Certainly not your unworthy Kryptonian! He fell for the first person who hit on him. He cheated and broke your heart!”

Bruce’s torso twitched again even though he knew that he couldn’t escape the demon’s grip – his arms were still paralyzed even though Bagdana clenched his wrists; yet his wrath was such that he didn’t care.

“You just admitted that you and that impostor put him under your spells!” he snarled showing his teeth unfazed by the fact that a powerful demon held him defenseless.

It was Bagdana’s turn to grunt in frustration; he shook Bruce.

“Wake up, Bruce! If his love was real no spell, no power in the world would have made him fell for another person and cheat on you! His love didn’t last because it was fake.”

“Bullshit!”

The demon’s eyes flashed red from anger and his nostrils emitted fume; his body lost its granite texture and become red gold fire kept inside by a transparent skin that reminded glass.

Bruce felt the demon’s grasp on his wrists tightening and his body falling.

Clark had stayed in the driver’s seat from the moment the Tumbler began speeding away from Bruce – not that he could drive; the route was preprogrammed and he couldn’t override it. He tried to open the doors or even break the car’s wall even though he knew that it was in vein; then he tried to steer the wheel or change the course with the control panel failing each time. So he stayed seated surrendered to the notion that he was going to be ‘released’ only when the car reached the destination.

He watched the road from the windshield and absentminded ate the rest of the donuts in the paper bag and absorbed the solar artificial light from the Tumbler’s ceiling along with the natural sun light that the solar panel gathered sending it to him.
His initial thought on realizing that he wouldn’t be able to come out of the car unless he reached destination was that when the door opened he would immediately take off back to the Mansion to make sure that Bruce was alright. Because despite Bruce’s reassurance that they would meet in the battle Clark was afraid: he didn’t trust that cunning demon.

But then he realized that if he did that then he would disappoint Bruce once again. Betray his faith in him. Bruce wanted him to fight for the planet, for humans because the battle against Darkseid would be harsh. If he turned his back again to humans’ need then Bruce’s sacrifice would be wasted; jeered…

Because Clark knew that what had happened in this same car just minutes ago was a sacrifice. Bruce made that not only for ensuring that humans would have all of their protectors in good shape for the battle but also to give Superman the necessary strength to survive and win that battle.

He looked outside the window on his side. Deserted country road surrounded in both edges by nothing else than low weed with their surfaces burnt from the cold. He was approaching the Frozen Basin and he was seeing the proud mountains shedding their frozen shadow to the land.

Bruce had chosen the deserted road for Superman’s journey. Of course the Tumbler didn’t have a problem overcoming the obstacles a deserted country road presented every now and then.

Bruce…His Star. Clark cringed only on the recollection of himself saying that to Bruce now, after everything…Certainly Bruce had felt disgust hearing the same word that Superman had used publicly for Diana. That special word that Superman had chosen to name the youth that stole his heart…

“She is my Star!”

Clark bit his lips. Disgust…Bruce knew how to gulp his disgust, his urge to flee in order to achieve a kind purpose. And now this purpose was saving the Earth. Bruce was a master of disguising his true feelings or body reactions. Yet Clark thanks to his recovering senses had felt the younger man’s inner struggle in his arms.

Each second Bruce was struggling as in the greenhouse during their first time. Struggling with howling demons that still tortured his body, soul and mind… Only this time the demon was he… The same man that had promised Bruce happiness, love…

Clark gulped as the images of what he had done that night before cheating Bruce with Diana came back. He was worse than Falcone; worse than Ra’s Al Ghul or Chill or Bane. He hid his face in his hands: he was Bruce’s worse demon. Bruce trusted him; gave him his body waging a tremendous war with his demons for his sake; he opened him his heart only for Superman to rip that vulnerable tender heart in pieces and walk over…

Clark during their intercourse was sucking the softness, the warmth; yet under that external heat he had sensed what he had caused: the ice. A thick layer of ice that was unbreakable like granite.

The realization made Clark’s chest clenched: he had turned Bruce’s beautiful heart into ice… He wanted to scream from despair as his eyes watered. Bruce once again sacrificed himself to heal him yet Clark would never be able to heal Bruce again: on the contrary, he had killed the man’s heart.

Clark closed his eyes feeling like abandoning everything and just going back to Bruce whenever he found the chance. Yet he clenched his fists and jaw.

“I won’t do that: I’ll do what you want me to do, the right thing. I promise that this time I won’t Lois with Jimmy was watching avidly what was happening. They had taken their cover in the shadows the alley between two warehouses provided. Police had made everything under first seen secrecy and that was the reason no other reporter was around. Yet Lois had a very sensitive nose for these things and Bruce’s visit and their talking about Superman made her turn on her journalistic antennas in full capacity.

She was frowned: the police had breached that warehouse but from there came sounds of real battle: clearly the thugs wouldn’t surrender so easily. Her information had taken her many times near this same warehouse yet everything stopped there: no more hint whether that place was indeed the hideout of a gang.

But now watching all this: the unprecedented police power and the huge resistance it dawned to Lois; this was about Intergang. The warehouse was Intergang’s lair and the police was trying to capture the beast. The building was surrounded by two lines of patrol cars that had their sirens on making the docks anything but their usual buzzing yet peaceful landscape. Behind the patrol cars ambulances were positioned ready to take the injured: some officers were already taken there by their comrades.

What made Lois an impression was that the broader area of the docks was deserted, like a ghost town; clearly police had evacuated the entire area afraid of heavy casualties. So Intergang was much more than just another gang…

“Jimmy, keep shooting” she said to her sidekick who now was using a digital camera shooting video instead of taking photos.

The bangs from the shootings inside the building became a cloud that rapidly covered the entire area and the two reporters watched intrigued as more police and SWAT members rushed inside.

An explosion towered the ruckus of the shooting and they saw the wall of the warehouse collapsing creating a huge whole from where the thugs bursted out taking cover behind the debris and shooting at the police officers and SWAT members who chased them; people both from the mobsters and the law enforcers lay on the terrain hit by the wave of the explosion.

Lois wished that they weren’t dead.

“Keep shooting” she said urgently to Jimmy and pulled of her own phone to shoot pictures as she saw something that surprised her.

A woman dressed in skin tight black leather stormed at the thugs jumping on them from the top of a cargo container; on landing, she spread her legs wide smacking hard two thugs stopping the rainfall of bullets against the law enforcers. She twirled standing in one leg and used her other leg as a hammer, her stiletto heel shone in the morning sun as she slashed her opponents.

Lois could discern the cat ears on her head. She narrowed her eyes.

“Catwoman in Metropolis? Fighting along the police? Then this is larger than a local operation against a gang…”

“Then what is it, Miss Lane?” Jimmy asked intrigued.

Senila grinned satisfied as the thugs grunted taking her heel’s hit on the face or neck; her twist kick sent five of them flying and Selina somersaulted towards the next clog of thugs. The law enforcers finding a clean path since Selina stopped those who fired at them surged the debris as well.

But then more thugs flooded the area shooting with firearms.

“They were hidden in the basement!” a SWAT member shouted.

A second team of SWAT members had gone to the basement but some of the thugs managed to slip them and now attacked from behind.

“Wonder Woman” a police officer said looking upwards.

“Miss Lane, Wonder Woman!” Jimmy said and zoomed his camera to the heroine.

Lois pursed her lips remembering what Bruce told her.

“That can’t be good…” she mumbled.

“She is…strange, Miss Lane” Jimmy said puzzled and Lois took the camera looking at what he was. Wonder Woman’s eyes shone gleefully glaring at the law enforcers below; a nasty smirk grazed her beautiful face as she hit her bracelets together, crossing her forearms; a blast wave erupted targeting the people of the law.

“No…” Lois whispered scared for the people Diana was aiming at.

Darkseid stood on the flat rooftop of the ten acres, shaped like a horizontal Π Mannheim facilities in the Frozen Basin; he had his real gigantic form and he gazed at the horizon with a satisfied smirk over his square face. He was watching the developments at Intergang’s headquarters in Metropolis’ docks and his smirk became broader seeing Ivy arriving there causing the excited stares of the police officers below.

He cocked his eyebrows; he could sniff those stupid humans’ exhilaration seeing their heroine arriving to help them; he could taste their puzzlement seeing her crushing their lethal bracelets together aiming at them. He readied himself to suck their despair and their pain when the blast from the bracelets burnt them alive. And then the rest of humankind was next.

His oversensitive hearing caught the sound of a van; he turned his eyes there and saw the SWAT letters on it entering the east borders of the basin following the country road to his premises.

“Foolish people!” he shouted and turned his vision to the hills surrounding the road.

Parademons were waiting there ready with their eyes watching eagerly; their teeth visible, shining hungry for human flesh and blood. Granny was there standing on a flat gray rock overlooking the road and the black shape of the van. She was waiting for his order to attack, her manic eyes filled with gleeful anticipation and her gray curly hair dancing around her face with the icy breeze.

Darkseid yanked his head backwards. He was going to start from there so to have the pleasure of watching Ivy and Intergangs’ thugs spreading terror in Metropolis.

He wasn’t going to kill the SWAT team heading towards his facilities. He preferred to watch his Parademons feasting on them. He would have his time when he attacked Washington after eliminating them. So he focused his eyes on the van and the vehicle was toppled ending up to the edge of the road.

He gave Granny the mental order to attack and turned his eyes on Metropolis ready to devour the massacre.

Selina raised her head hearing the sound of the bracelets crashing and then the blast; her eyes widened: the wave was going to burn the officers and the SWATs underneath. She couldn’t do anything as she was far from Ivy’s target; yet she dove because the heat could hurt her kicking and – punching on her way two thugs that were shooting indiscriminately.

Ivy began laughing as the blast wave was near the humans. But suddenly she frowned.

Something shining ripped the air and stood in front of the fire wave sucking the entire wave. Ivy let out a frustrated scream and followed the shining thing’s route as it ripped again the air returning to where it had come.

Police officers and SWAT members looked as well, confusion edged on their features; but thugs were as perplexed as their opponents just goggling at the sky.

A dazzled red and blue dressed Diana stared in front of her a woman catching the round gold shield that had absorbed her blast and now returned to its mistress. The big head of the Medusa on the center of the shield glared at Ivy as if it was alive; the gold perimeter of the shield flashed on the morning’s sun blinding the fake Diana.

The humans underneath regarded with awe the newcomer: an imposing 8’ 1’’ woman of stunning beauty glaring at the scantily dressed woman that claimed her name. Her brown leather armor covered her sturdy but curvy torso; the pieces of leather falling down to the middle of her thighs’ length. Her long calves were dressed in gold cleaves. Her raven hair danced in the morning sea breeze.

“Impossible…” Ivy mumbled shaken.

“Impossible!” Darkseid roared clenching his fist in the air.

Diana whipped her golden lasso in the sky and in a motion that no eye could catch she caught Ivy’s wrist and twitched her in the air throwing her down to the rooftop of the warehouse at her right.

“Who is she?” Stitches asked flabbergasted Alistair Bendel who was at his side.

Selina came from behind and smacked their heads together letting them fall down unconscious. She rolled her eyes.

“She is the real Amazon Princess, you morons!”

The law enforcers cheered and stormed at the thugs shooting at will.

“The real Princess?” Jimmy gapped at Lois who had a crooked smile on her face.

“I knew it!” she said.

“And who’s the other?”
“Keep shooting!”

Darkseid began rasping; his wrath choking his breath. The real Amazon Princess? She existed? And how she learnt and came?

His scream of frustration echoed throughout the vast Frozen Basin.

“Be it” he reassured himself “I’ll watch my troops slaughtering those who want to threat the machine and then I shall destroy her too!”

He focused his vision on the road miles away where the van was laying upturned on the edge covered from a cloud of dust.

He smirked as his troops with Granny at the head swarmed the hills like ants ready to finish off the SWAT members. There were two thousand Parademons and there was no doubt about the outcome so Darkseid snorted satisfied forgetting for now Metropolis. He yanked his head upwards to enjoy better the spectacle.

Jim was reading the papers he had on his lap. The patrol car Montoya drove sped through Gotham’s roads. The Police Commissionaire didn’t want to stay away when his officers faced Gotham’s thugs who as expected obeyed to Darkseid’s mental orders.

Though what was unexpected for Darkseid was that police and SWAT were waiting them and the assaults on Arkham and Blackgate was thwarted. Law enforcers at the moment were counterattacking aiming to arrest them which wasn’t easy since thugs were brainwashed to die killing as many as they could.

“We’re almost at Arkham, Commissionaire” she said. “The police in Metropolis fights Intergang.”

Jim nodded tapping his finger on his pressed lips.

“What’s so important, Commissionaire?” Montoya asked glancing at the papers: Jim Gordon always preferred reading on paper than screens. “I thought this was the top priority?”

He raised his head and looked at her.

“This is as important. Batman found the biggest suspect for the Wayne video. And our research confirms his findings.”

Montoya frowned.

“Who is it?”

“Dr. Thomas Elliot.”

Her eyes bulged.

“The famous neurosurgeon? The University’s Professor?”

Gordon shrugged one shoulder unimpressed.

“He seems to hold an old grudge to Mr. Wayne?”
Montoya laughed confused.

“But Wayne was just eight years when he ‘died’.”

Jim tilted his head keeping his stoic expression.

“Elliot is clearly disturbed.”

“Sure thing! When all this ends we bust the bastard, right?”

Jim shook his head.

“I’ve already ordered his arrest: the DA gave us the warrant. We can’t risk: someone with such hatred would want to take advantage of the situation to escalate the damage he already made.”

Montoya pressed her lips outraged.

“Killing Wayne.”

Jim nodded calmly.

“Exactly. I sent Bullock to arrest him.”

The Parademons surrounded the van at an inch’s distance and Granny raised her arm ready to give them the signal of attack.

But her arm had hardly reached the air that when a loud clap startled her.

The wall of the van that was upwards was crumbled like paper and an enormous mass jumped out with a creepy roar.

Darkseid’s eyes popped out from their sockets seeing a green giant with ragged pants falling on his troops smashing them with his enormous hands before even landing. Hulk! What the Hell?

The green giant began plummeting the green creatures throwing them right and left knocked out.

“Shoot him!” Granny shrieked her hair becoming dancing antennas from her rage.

The Parademons obeyed but before shooting something shiny reaped them like wheat plants in the field. Captain America jumped out of the same van storming at the Parademons punching them with fists and elbows and taking his returning shield before falling on the frozen soil.

“What?!” Granny spat.

“You don’t like our company, dear?”

Granny turned around but before seeing who had addressed her, a hard kick on the face made her lose her balance; Natasha Romanov stood before her with spread legs her hands clenching her waist.

“Ironman is here too, alien freaks!” a shining red and gold android came out of the van soaring the sky.

Tony saw his friends destroying Parademons with their bodies; the rest of the aliens fired at them but the Avengers’ attires were reinforced to withstand their firepower.
“Time to do your show, boy!” he said to himself grinning at Pepper’s snort inside his helmet since she was monitoring the operations. “I love you, babe!” he laughed and launched missiles, bullets and beams adjusted to destroy Parademons. “Wooooooo! Let’s kick some Parademon asses!”

“So much for the seriousness…” Pepper remarked hardly containing her amusement.

Indeed, the Parademons who took Tony’s fire power were blown to pieces; of course he hit those at a distance from his comrades to not hit Avengers too. Tony laughed seeing Hulk stretching his enormous body and kitting his chest with a roar that alone pushed two of his enemies back staggering.

Darkseid would have paled if he wasn’t blue; his eyes were bulged and for a moment he stayed dumbstruck, shocked by that development.

“Avengers? Here?! They know about the machine and they’re coming to get it!” he growled. “And they can destroy Parademons: they came prepared! It was a plan from the beginning!”

His teeth rattled and his entire gigantic body shook from wrath. He sensed the planet: no plane in the sky; no energy plant working; no people on oil rings; the Electromagnetic Storm Training Day: a trick so that he had no chance to harm civilians. So that nothing would stop them from attacking his machine.

“No!” he roared. “Still you don’t know who Darkseid is…” he mentally contacted his thousands of Parademons at the outskirts of Washington: he had no trouble changing his plan – Avengers would die first and then the rest of the bastard kin. “Thor is far” he smirked “you don’t have a chance!”

Bruce prepared himself for crushing to the floor yet Bagdana’s arms were wrapped around his torso; the demon’s upset was such that Bruce realized that his arms had regained their mobility free from the demon’s spells.

As the floor came near Bruce felt something soft welcoming his body and with the corner of his eye he saw a black round cloud that resembled a mattress. He clenched his jaw and jerked his arms to escape the demon’s grip: the awareness of what Bagdana had in mind filled his guts with disgust. Not again…

But the demon grabbed his wrists and on landing on the mattress stretched Bruce’s arms above his head, touching his body on the human’s. He took care to weigh enough to trap Bruce but not harm him.

Bruce writhed like a cornered snake and tried to free his hands yet Bagdana put more strength in his grip and met Bruce’s angry, blazing stare. The human was gritting his teeth.

“Stop fighting, Bruce” Bagdana said almost sad. “You’re a brilliant human, an extraordinary warrior but you have no chance against a demon without your weapon” the demon’s eyes showed the box at the far end of the room where Bruce’s diamond and the dagger lay.

Bruce growled and yanked his head upwards smashing it to the demon’s forehead: he wouldn’t let happen the same thing. With all the training of Ra’s Bruce’s eyes darkened and he felt his head crack; a warm liquid slithering his forehead. But he wasn’t going to stop resisting.

Bagdana sprout a new pair of arms and clenched Bruce’s hair at the back of his head firmly but gently lowering his head on the mattress drowning his resistance. He saw the crack on Bruce’s forehead and leaned over the skin blowing gently and healing the wound.
He met Bruce’s defiant stare acknowledging the human’s clenched jaw.

“I love you, Bruce, and I won’t let anyone hurt you, even yourself. The only reason this filthy world survived till now is for me to meet you; I’m your destiny, Bruce; you were born for me…”

“There is no destiny!” Bruce growled and tried to free his head to hit again the demon even if that meant breaking his head.

But Bagdana wasn’t going to allow him that.

“The leaf on your left big toe is the biggest proof of exactly that, Bruce…”

An oval ottoman from black velvet appeared with a tiny toe on it; the skin that seemed taken care to regain its rosy color and perfect shape after all these years bared a cute leaf shaped birth mark.

Bruce felt his blood running cold; his guts twisted in a knot and his head began spinning. The cries and the pleadings of a boy no more than eight years old echoed in his mind’s deepest caves. A cold, gleeful smirk shone in the shadows exactly like the huge cleaver did and then pain…horrendous, unbearable pain that Bruce felt right now again on his empty toe. And then yells and cries and sobs from the little boy who pleaded for his mommy…

Bagdana felt Bruce’s body shivering not from cold but from the memories; he bit his lip and touched feathery Bruce’s cheek.

“I’ll stop that pain, Bruce…” he said affectionately “I’ll erase all your memories…You won’t suffer again from the nightmares of your past.”

Bruce set his jaw determined to not let his tears leave his eyes.

“It’s none of your business! My memories is my problem.”

Bagdana shook his head.

“You will be able to be happy again…” he insisted patiently.

But Bruce jerked his torso upwards.

“My memories are filled with the people I love and who love me! The people you’re now helping to get killed!”

Bagdana’s eyes sparkled.

“I can save everyone you love; I care about you, Bruce; and I’ll do everything for you to be happy.”

Bruce made to shake his head but Bagdana’s grip on his hair didn’t let him. So instead he fixed his blazing eyes on Bagdana’s and the demon felt shivers of excitement.

“Can you save 7 billion humans?” Bruce spat.

Bagdana sighed and closed his eyes.

“Why do you care, Bruce? People always caused you pain; nobody cared about your suffering; nobody helped you; they sniffed at you.”

Bruce tried to move his arms with no avail.
“There are good people; people in need like I was; people who know how to love unlike you! Get off me!”

Bagdana brought his face over Bruce’s.

“You know I love you more than anything else…”

Bruce snorted.

“You don’t love me: you love Lilith’s remnants in me. If you knew that by slashing me in pieces you would take Lilith back you’d have done it without a second thought!” he growled keeping his still stare in the demon’s eyes.

Bagdana became icy cold hearing that…taking his Lilith back by…Bruce watched him knowing the storm inside the demon. Bagdana licked his lips and producing a hand out of nowhere brushed Bruce’s cheek.

“You never feared to look the demon in the eye…”

Whatever power of restraint the demon had evaporated under these eyes’ charm; Bruce was completely naked under him and that injured body emanated vigor, defiance and beauty. His head immersed in Bruce’s neck almost on its own volition; his full lips sucked the vibrating from anger vein throughout the human’s neck.

Bruce closed his eyes frustrated; he knew what the demon wanted; from the start he knew where this would end up. He pressed his tired body to resist even trapped under the mighty demon, who still held his wrists and head immobile. He couldn’t feel below the waist yet he could hear the sound of Bagdana’s erection rubbing on his bare skin and that made his heart drum.

The demon absorbed in the mesmerizing numbness that Bruce’s flesh caused him and intoxicated from his body’s perfume downed his neckline with his lips continuing with Bruce’s pectorals that bulged from his heart’s frantic beat. He ordered his clothes disappear to let his thirsty body to suck every feeling.

Bruce fought to master his mind into calming and ordered his legs to move to kick the demon – anything to stop those lips from kissing his body.

Yet the demon in his excitement sprouted another pair of arms and took gently Bruce’s kicking legs massaging sensually upwards to the thighs. He spread the human’s thighs.

Bruce heard the sound and an electric current of dread went through the healthy part of his spine.

“No!” he shouted and the demon raised reluctantly his fevered eyes to meet the human’s angry eyes that stabbed him.

“I know, Bruce, I caused you horrific pain in the past. You were a child and I forgot that thinking I was with Lilith again…I was hard on you, careless; I made you bleed; I ripped your body in two; I almost killed you…” he gulped. “I’m sorry: you are right to detest our contact but I can be gentle; I won’t hurt you again, you see…”

Bruce’s eyes twitched as he felt a soft liquid applied inside his anus meticulously, carefully relaxing the tight muscle… His face began sweating and his breath became quicker; the demon had brought his head over his abdominals kissing reverently his flesh while Bagdana’s hands fondled his torso. He was trapped; held still by the demon’s numerous pairs of arms but he couldn’t let that happen…
“Stop!” he snarled with such strength that Bagdana stopped and brought his head over Bruce’s.

“You didn’t tell the Kryptonian to stop” he complained locking his eyes with Bruce’s.

Bruce set his jaw.

“He never did anything I didn’t want.”

Bagdana grinned smugly.

“That’s a lie…That night I felt your despair, Bruce; your suffering, your loathing; your pain…The Kryptonian surpassed even my bolder expectations raping you that way.”

Bruce’s hair stood on edge.

“He never…You…you were watching?”

Bagdana’s smugness vanished and his stare became affectionate; compassionate.

“I wasn’t watching but we are connected, Bruce; I sensed everything and it wasn’t difficult to realize what he was doing to you; I wanted to run to your bedroom and burn him alive!” he shouted taking out the wrath of that night. “You never told him to stop because you knew that he wouldn’t and you dreaded that he would become another one of your rapists!” he spat listening to Bruce’s breath becoming faster. “But deep inside you know – your body knows that he is one of your defilers!” Bruce’s entire body writhed trying to escape him. “However here you are…you still searched for him and came to his rescue. Can’t you see that he doesn’t deserve your love? He doesn’t love you, Bruce.”

Bruce controlled his ragged breath allowing his exhausted body to relax; only to tense again feeling the demon’s erection on his belly.

“But you say that you love me” Bagdana’s eyes became interested. “If you really love me then don’t do this…” his eyes nailed the demon’s yellow ones.

Bagdana couldn’t take that powerful stare; his insides were in a fierce battle after Bruce’s last words. He bit his lips and sighed letting his head fall on Bruce’s chest defeated; the human’s heart beat fast, faster feeling the demon’s hot breath caressing his flesh. Bagdana’s body shook from the battle inside him: doing what Bruce asked or doing what he wanted.

Diana stood before Ivy who was rooted on the middle of the rooftop; the golden lasso had wrapped around her torso several times. Ivy gritted her teeth frustrated feeling the heat of the lasso.

The Amazon Princess felt the puzzled human stares. It was the time of the truth.

“Speak the truth!” she ordered. “Who are you?”

Ivy spat on Diana’s feet glaring at her; Darkseid didn’t want the truth about her to be revealed before humans became desperate. She should insist on being the real Diana.

“I am…” yet the lie couldn’t slip from her tongue; her mind felt controlled by the vibrating energy coming from the lasso’s layers. Her mind was filled only with the truth. “I’m Poison Ivy” she said.

Selina who were watching like everyone else arched her eyebrows.

“I told you…” she said slyly to the two knocked out thugs on her feet.
Suddenly hundred of footsteps echoed like thunders and the space quickly filled with more thugs who escaped from the police’s raids to the other Intergang warehouses and came to help.

The law enforcers took cover behind their cars and shot at their assailants. Diana let Ivy restraint by the lasso and stormed at the thugs throwing her sword to stab the jacket of a thug who ran in front of the others. The force of the sword was such that the man crushed on the warehouse’s wall taking with him five others who were following him.

“Nice catch!” Selina yelled at her jerking her whip to take the firearm from the hand of a thug.

“Thanks” Diana nodded and punched a 7 feet thug who had the size of a rugby player.

The shrieking sound made the Amazon look up: the dispensable part of the crane was detached from several bullets hitting its hinges. And now it was falling to crush both lawmen and thugs.

Diana called mentally her lasso and flew to catch it; she whipped it and the lasso wrapped the edge of the heavy part. Diana clenched her teeth and kept the object in the air for a second before she led it above the harbor. With her other hand she pulled her tiara off her hair and threw it like a boomerang to the metal mass blowing it off into pieces.

Both police officers and thugs cheered united for a second.

But then Diana felt something like rope wrapping her waist; she frowned seeing a kind of chain thick green stem squeezing her. It was stronger than iron.

She turned her eyes where sniggers came. A woman with rich red hair flooding her naked back stood midair. Her gorgeous, curvy body was completely naked apart from leaves covering her private parts. Two sparkling green eyes regarded the Amazon who felt dizziness as the plant around her waist emanated some blue smoke.

“Poison Ivy has her own lasso, girl!”

Granny twisted around and sent a fire beam at Natasha who ducked it taking cover behind a rock. But the alien roared and sent consecutive blasts blowing the rock into thousands of pieces and Natasha hardly made it to avoid the stones.

The Russian fisted her hands and stormed at Granny tackling her down yet Darkseid’s lieutenant pushed the human off of her throwing her to crush on the ground.

Natasha was dazzled for a second and Granny found the chance to aim at her; the light blue fire from Granny’s hand was on its way to hit Natasha when a silver shield came and stand before her; the fire bounced off the shield and would have hit Granny if she hadn’t dodged it.

Granny frowned enraged and raised her head to see a man in a burgundy cape landing graciously before her. Her face distorted in anger and she raised her palms ready to launch her lethal fire.

However Dr. Strange made a gentle move with his hand and a crystal red light struck her instantly square in the chest throwing her to the other end of the battlefield.

“Thank you” Natasha said to him having approached. “Let’s find the bitch and kill her” she grounded her teeth.

Yet Dr. Strange’s attention was opposite them where their comrades were fighting the green creatures that after the first startle were fighting hard. With Ironman’s coverage from the sky Steve and Hulk had no problem to neutralize their opponents.

Stephen cocked an eyebrow.

“I think we better turn our attention elsewhere” he said in his deep baritone.

“Mr. Stark.”

“Yes, Lucius” Tony said keeping firing at the aliens in the spots where they weren’t extinguished by Steve and Hulk.

“Flash informed me that Darkseid’s forces have left their hideouts around Washington.”

“So more company then…”

He hardly had finished his phrase when Jarvis collected voice addressed him.

“Sir, you have company.”

His helmet’s indicators showed him what Dr. Strange had sensed already.

Steve threw his shield like a discus to scatter the Parademons that had surrounded him and narrowed his eyes hearing the sound; even Hulk stopped the hammering to sniff the air.

The surrounding area lost its gray color of steppe and became green as what gave the impression of big green ants swarmed the place downing rapidly to choke them. And then the sound of thousands footsteps was towered from the flapping of thousand wings; the light of sun was shadowed as the sky filled with uncountable flying Parademons that fired at them before landing.

Steve took cover under his shield and Hulk slapped the fire coming at him like annoying mosquitoes. Natasha rushed were the Parademons began landing and Dr. Strange like Tony flew to confront those that was still flying.

“You are outnumbered, you fools!” a horrible thunderous voice cracked the sound of thousands of feet and thousands of wings coming against them.

Darkseid landed with a loud sound on the hill overlooking the battlefield. He didn’t want to finish it quickly; he wanted those annoyed pests to suffer; and he knew that the sound of his voice was another way to plant despair.

“This is your end, filths!”

“I’m sorry, Bruce…” Bagdana said after a minute and raised his head to see Bruce’s face. “I love you but I can’t stop” he continued sad. “It’s been 12 years since I last claimed your body… I can’t take it any longer, Bruce…I am a demon: I’m not made to oppress my whims. I wish I could…”

Bruce’s eyes flashed angrily but the demon captured his lips gently as his length slowly slipped inside the human’s opening. Bruce growled in the kiss to cover his despair and bit hard on the demon’s sucking lips hoping to enrage him into hit rather than use him.

His mouth filled with a bitter liquid that burnt like acid and a thunder shuddered Bruce’s body; his eyes darkened and his head began spinning leading him to nothingness.
Bagdana panicked; he stopped kissing and looked at Bruce’s almost closed eyes: the human was fading. He touched his mouth to Bruce’s and sucked what was in the human’s icy cold, black mouth. He sucked and sucked until Bruce’s mouth found its normal temperature and color; Bruce began breathing again.

“My flesh and blood is still poison for you, Bruce” he whispered and nuzzled his neck to prevent this happening again; his greedy hands resumed fondling the body that convulsed under him.

He was inside the body of his beloved after 12 years of hungry waiting…It was again like then…His body was fueled with energy, joy, pleasure beyond expectations. His hips began pushing, thrusting his length to get deeper; gain more warmth, more connection…

Bruce clenched his jaw to push his arms to escape from the demon’s grip; put strength to move his head yet Bagdana’s many arms were unyielding as the demon’s thrusts became quicker and deeper. Bruce felt the nausea that was lurking inside him after the encounter with Clark feeling his entire body making his head spinning; Bagdana’s lips were sucking his abdomen and a second tongue was licking his genitals much like then in Ra’s’ basement. He felt choking and it was almost impossible to stop his breath from becoming asthmatic.

His teeth rattled trying to withstand the feelings.

“Relax, Bruce” the demon mumbled swimming in the ocean of his pleasure. “Let yourself free to enjoy the senses…”

“Bastard!” Bruce growled.

But the demon was too much aroused to answer as his thrusts continued.

It seemed eternity for Bruce: a tormenting, unbearable, dragging eternity drenched in his own icy sweat that mingled with the demon’s sweat and saliva. Suddenly he felt the demon’s body on him tensing and then the hot liquid of the demon’s seed filled his insides that much to Bruce’s disgust sucked it.

At least it ended Bruce thought and tried to jail his feelings of dread to the same dark dungeon of his mind as he was doing all his life. Yet he felt his body being gently turned on his stomach and the demon’s rough tongue licking his cold back; Bruce’s breath stopped when a second mouth sucked his ear as Bagdana’s length still inside him began thrusting again. His hands were held on the mattress as his head; his body was crashed under the demon’s body even though the weight he felt was minimal compared to what he expected.

The exhaustion of all this time corroded his every cell; the demon’s hot breath fast as his thrusts caressed his ear and his wet tongue licked the flesh.

Bruce clenched his jaw and determined engrossed his mind in what was happening outside this room… Forcing only one thought in his mind to shatter everything else: Bagdana was unaware of the raging battle.

“Third time of coupling is a bonding charm, Bruce” the demon said affectionately to his ear, caressing tenderly the human’s wet hair in front of him. He had just ejaculated inside him for the second time and the demon’s body was feeling as if he was born again.
Dr. Strange pursed his lips and turned his head where the voice came. “Hm… I won’t be so sure!” he said cocking his eyebrows smugly.

Darkseid was ready to fry him with his beams when sounds of thousands new presences made him frown. They weren’t his. He turned his head to see where the Avengers cast fleeting glances while they were fighting their enemies.

Valkyries ripped the sky moving their wings furiously to reach the battlefield faster; Asgardians in their shining silver armors were descending on flying chariots. In front of them Thor was already waving his Mjolnir throwing thunders against the Parademons that was firing at Ironman in the air while Odin threw his sword ripping at once ten Parademons that brandished their blades at Natasha who were absorbed in beating three Parademons at once.

Granny Goodness had returned to the battle using her gun to kill Hulk only to be tackled by a Valkyrie.

“Where’s that lousy demon?” she communicated mentally with her master clenching her jaw.

Thor landed between a cluster of Parademons and used his hammer to plummet them hitting without stopping; his eyes, his entire face was tightened in fierce determination.

He didn’t notice a Parademon reaching him from behind – they had realized that their firearms didn’t do anything to the Avengers so they went for the blades instead. The Parademon raised his blade arm to cut the God’s head lowering it fast.

A shriek in his ear startled Thor who turned to see the Parademon with a shocked expression, still with his blade arm millimeters from Thor’s neck; the creature collapsed on the ground with a big, round burning of laser on his chest.

Darkseid’s eyes bulged and his teeth rattled.

“Impossible!” Granny uttered having managed to roll away from the Valkyrie.

Thor looked to the point where the laser must have come and his eyes widened seeing Superman floating with his red cape waving behind him.

“I owe you an apology, Thor” he said landing in front of the god.

“Your apology must be to someone else but now we have a battle” Thor answered and Superman nodded bringing his fist on his heart and bowing his head with respect.

“Where’s that demon?!” Darkseid hissed; he could storm the battlefield and finish the job but he was so startled and flabbergast that his wrath overwhelmed him so that confronting Bagdana became his priority: he would return after to end that farse.

Bruce had calmed his breath and heartbeat, galvanizing himself into ignoring his own body’s cries.

“Only when it is lovemaking” he replied dryly and felt Bagdana’s head frowning immersed in his hair. “You claim that you know about real love” he cocked an eyebrow “I’d expect that you would know the difference between lovemaking and rape.”

Bagdana smiled and nibbled Bruce’s shoulders that were covered with cold sweat.
“You’re pissed, Bruce; I understand... But we’ll have an eternity of love making when you will enjoy it as much as I.”

“That will never happen” Bruce retorted with conviction.

Bagdana sniffed deeply Bruce’s perfume mingled with his sweat.

“It will happen... Darkseid has the knowledge... Life mocked me giving me back my lost love sharing the same body with my worst enemy but not anymore... Darkseid will give me the power: I’ll erase the priest’s DNA from you and then nothing will block you from remember and feel what you should.”

“Then you admit it” Bruce sniggered fixing his eyes on the wall “you don’t love me.”

There was a rush in the air and Bagdana turned surprised to see Darkseid materializing facing the side of the cloud that made their bed.

The New God’s face was distorted in anger and shock; his breath fast and burning even more taking in the scene before him. However the demon noticed the change in Darkseid’s eyes that regarded Bruce’s naked body.
“After a long – for Gotham’s standards – time of peace it seems that the mob decided to show again its teeth. Our sources speak about riots in the Narrows and an outbreak of violence all over the Midtown. But, as you see, from the footage our reporters send GCPD has already taken measures…”

Alfred was sweeping with a cloth the plates from the breakfast he had just washed. His face as his entire demeanor was composed as ever. He didn’t have a TV in the kitchen yet he still could hear from the set the boys had opened in the living room. Ms. Turner and Todd were upstairs. Bruce wanted them here because it was known that they were connected with him so someone who would want to get to him might have gone against them.

His concern won Alfred’s butler manners and threw the cloth on the black granite countertop walking towards the living room.

“Police officers and SWAT forces facing the thugs all over the Narrows and, as you see, there are considerable forces guarding Arkham Asylum, Blackgate Prison, MCU and the City Hall. It seems that police was already informed about the outburst of the city’s mob…”

“‘Course, ya moron!” Jason spat from his spot on the living room’s velvet white sofa. “Batman had warned the lot.”

Suddenly, the newscaster nodded listening to the control panel; simultaneously, to the three different images from Gotham’s riots was added a forth showing docks; the subheading read ‘Metropolis’ Docks – now’. The footage showed a similar image with Gotham depicting law enforcers fighting with thugs who fired at them barricaded behind debris that obviously came from the ravaged warehouse; the difference was that over the riot scene, on the Metropolis’ sky, floated a presence.

“The Daily Planet reports that a big police operation takes place in Metropolis’ Docks with Wonder Woman’s involvement… Wait…” the newscaster’s voice filled with disbelief and surprise “Wonder Woman attacks the people of the law?”

The explosion from Wonder Woman’s bracelets had almost hit the police officers when something barely seen stopped the wave; the camera moved fast where the shield that saved the police officers headed: a woman in ancient warrior attire grabbed the heavy shield with one hand.

“Who’s that woman?!”

“The real Diana, ya dork!” Jason spat from his spot on the sofa and shook his head exasperated. “Where they find those people?”

His words were confirmed when Wonder Woman wrapped in the real Lasso of Truth admitted that she was Poison Ivy.

Jason cackled.

“Like watchin’ movies! Only this is real!”

But Dick wasn’t sharing his thrill; his face was sullen and his brow frowned in thought.

“Where is Batman? There is no news…” he said to Jason worried and the younger boy lost his mood.
“I’m sure he is alright, young masters.”

Both boys jerked startled turning to the opening from the kitchen’s side. Alfred was standing there, his eyes watching the footage on the screen. His face was calm and composed yet the boys knew better. They exchanged a glance and nodded.

“‘Course he is!” Jason said with conviction.

“Definitely!” Dick agreed; both of them wanting to reassure and comfort Alfred.

Alfred smiled seeing through their attempt.

“There’s no news from the Frozen Bazin because Master Bruce and Master Anthony considered it best to close the satellites – using the Electromagnetic Training Day as excuse – because they didn’t want any panic to be spread. Not to mention the reporters who would swarm there: imagine having to protect them and fight at the same time. They took care of everything” he shook his head “not only for the world but also for Gotham: The Haven and the free clinic are heavily guarded.”

Both boys nodded smiling.

“I’m sure everything will go smoothly, young masters” he was trying to comfort himself as well the boys who – Alfred knew – now loved and cared about Bruce.

Dr. Strange shook Elliot’s hand. He was in his office in Arkham when the information desk of the institution notified him about the man’s coming. Training Day or not he had patients to attend to and riots outburst found him in the Asylum.

“That’s a surprise, Dr. Elliot” He said showing him the armchair in front of his desk.

Thomas crossed his legs elegantly and cocked an eyebrow.

“I’ve told you about my interest to study Joker’s case and you – very kindly – agreed to assist my efforts.”

Dr. Strange sat in his high backed antique leather armchair and answered with a grin.

“Of course but the Asylum is right now at an emergency” he frowned “you know about the riots, right? As a matter of fact I don’t understand how they did allow you to get inside.”

Thomas smiled and put his hand in the inner pocket of his expensive, tailored blue blazer. Dr. Hugo Strange watched and his lamp-like eyes widened.

Thomas pulled out a small, square black handgun and pointed it at him.

“I can be very persuasive, dear Hugo, as you see…” he shook his head. “I don’t want to kill you but this…emergency…this fuss all over the city is the best conditions for me to conduct my study.”

“Dr. Elliot…” Hugo Strange said calmly trying to reason with him.

Elliot cocked his eyebrows.

“I’ve already killed an officer: he fell on duty from the bullets of some thug. Now I want the object of my study.”
Dr. Strange intertwined his fingers on the desk.

“‘The security system of Arkham doesn’t allow to anyone to open the cells – especially during an emergency.’”

Elliot leaned back on his armchair laughing.

“It may be so but you are Joker’s therapist so I’m sure you have access…And the same goes for Dr. Quinzel’s cell too: she is also your patient…”

Hugo Strange brought his hands on his face.

“This is about Bruce Wayne, right? You’re ready to do something foolish…”

But Thomas cut him abruptly jerking from his seat and pointing the gun aggressively at his face. He grinned.

“The whole mess in Gotham right now gives me the best opportunity and your patients will be the best assistants.”

Strange shook his head in disapproval.

“Thomas, think it better. You’re an accomplished neurosurgeon; a respectable member of the society; a brilliant and ingenious man: this is beyond you. You understand that you can’t destroy everything you accomplished for an old grudge. Put the gun away and I won’t tell anything to anyone” he met Elliot’s feverish eyes “I give you my word.”

Elliot rolled his eyes frustrated.

“Nice offer, Doc, but I’m not here for psychoanalysis…I asked you to become my ally but you refused so I have to adjust to what I can” he smirked “and I won’t lose anything: a rich bastard was killed during a riot while Joker with his accomplice were lose – everyone knows Joker’s insane interest for Wayne…well, the whacko finally cracked and killed the brat. You see? Everything taken care!”

He stood and gestured with the gun for the psychiatrist to do the same. Hugo Strange got up; his face cold and expressionless. It was obvious that the experienced psychiatrist was completely unruffled; unfazed from the barrel’s sight.

“You can’t trust those two, Thomas.”

Elliot moved towards him and poked him on the back with the gun to walk.

“This is my problem. Now: I’ll have the gun in my pocket – we don’t want to panic the staff, right? It could lead to most unpleasant situations. You’ll accompany me to Joker’s cell and like a good doctor you’ll free him as you will do with Dr. Quinzel.”

Strange nodded with an icy cold stare.

“As you wish…”

They walked through the bright corridors of the Asylum – since Bruce Wayne had donated a large amount of money for the institution’s renovation he asked for the sun light to be abundant inside the building: Bruce had been deprived of the sun light for eighteen years and learnt how precious it was for people. Thus he believed that if the building’s premises used the natural sun light then this would be beneficial for the inmates’ wellbeing and even their recovery.

Hugo Strange had smiled hearing what the young billionaire had asked and his reasoning; when the doctor came for the first time to the Asylum he inquired about the choice of natural light instead of artificial. The staff’s answer about the young Wayne’s wish made the psychiatrist appreciate more the youth.

Both Joker’s and Quinzel’s cell were at the maximum security ward but in different sectors; in isolation at least for the first time after their arrest.

Joker having heard the footsteps jumped from his bed and rushed to the small window of his door intrigued and ready to have his fun with the staff. Seeing Hugo Strange he cackled.

“Whaaaaaat’s up, doc?” he asked mimicking Bugs Bunny’s voice and then he scratched his non-dyed, brown hair. “Isn’t it a bit early for our…mmm…session?”

He cocked his eyebrows and his eyes focused on the wall clock opposite his cell. It wasn’t even afternoon.

“It’s still morning…” he frowned. “Aaaaand I heard a second pair of shoes – not the light footsteps of that sweet, littl’ nurse that tinkles me with thooose needles…Sooooooo, what surprise do you have for me, egg eye?”

Strange didn’t answer and Elliot stepped forward to be seen from the door’s window.

“It’s time to play” he said dryly and Joker’s eyes shone seeing the gun Elliot pulled out of his blazer’s pocket.

The jester shook his head.

“Uuuuuuu! I looove people who keep their promises…” he said hoarsely but then he became serious regarding the gun and the pricy blazer. “You shouldna put the gun inside that cloth – you might damage it.”

Elliot rolled his eyes and nudged Dr. Strange to open for Joker who was licking his lips thrilled.

Hugo Strange gave his personal code to the secret panel under the wall and then he pressed his thumb in the fingerprint recognition socket that emerged. The door opened with a hiss and Joker slithered outside with his knees on the floor like a rock star.

“Soomebody stoooop mee!” he jerked his head upwards.

“Are you finished?” Elliot asked bored.

Joker frowned and pouted tapping his index finger on his bottom lip.

“Chaos in broad daylight?” he asked thoughtful and crooked his mouth.

Elliot gestured to him to stand.

“When someone gives you lemon you make lemonade…” he said. “Gotham’s scum decided to rebel during daylight and police is occupied with them. So we can do our work undisturbed.”

Joker looked at the icy calm Dr. Strange and winked showing with his thumb at Elliot.

“He’s cleeeeeever, huh, doc?”
Strange looked at Elliot, cocking an eyebrow.

“No; actually he is an idiot!”

Thomas ground his teeth and pointed the gun at the doctor; his finger tensing around the trigger.

“I could kill you right now – but I need you to open Quinzel’s cell.”

Joker’s eyes widened thrilled and he clapped.

“Ooooooooh! My Harleeeequin! I missed her…” he rushed at Elliot and gave him a noisy kiss on the cheek but then his excitement ebbed. “Well, nooooot that much…I miss Brucey more…”

Elliot lolled his head at him and glared.

“Can you shut up?!”

Joker saluted him military style.

“Yes, siiiiiiir! Ooooh! I like this guy! Huh, doc?” he wrapped his arm around Strange’s shoulders and pushed him forward.

Hugo Strange was forced to repeat the same procedure to open Quinzel’s cell; she walked outside clearly enraged. Joker regarded her scratching his head.

“Ooooorange isn’t your color, Harlequin!”

“Shut the fuck up!” she said and slapped him in the face. “I’m imprisoned here because of you. And orange isn’t your color too!”

Joker batted his eyelashes cute.

“You were the first thing I asked from this fine gentleman when he freed me, you see…You are aaaaaalways in my miiiiind…” he sang out of tone.

Harleen looked him smoothened.

“Really?”

“Of course not, my dear” Strange said. “He is trying to manipulate you.”

Harleen gritted her teeth and punched the psychiatrist in the nose sending him to the wall and then on the floor.

“Don’t you dare slander, Mista J!”

Joker patted her in the back and took her hand kissing the knuckles.

“Haaaaarley, you’re myyyyyy girl… Can I call you Harley, huh?”

“Enough with this shit!” Elliot barked impatient. “We have things to do!”

“Rrrrrright!” Joker said but winked to Harley. “What are we going to do with the egg eyed here?”

Elliot turned the gun on Strange and simply pressed the trigger; the sound was almost inaudible. The psychiatrist’s body jerked once, bumped on the wall and dropped again on the floor in an odd angle.
“I like laaaaaconic people!” Joker laughed. “It’s shooooow time, babe! But first” he said serious “Harley, is right: oooorange is not my color” he looked disgusted at his inmate’s attire “aaaaand a great show needs the fitting suits. We need to change.”

Elliot gritted his teeth frustrated but Joker nonchalant patted his back.

“You’re new in the business…you’ll understand with time…”

Thomas crooked his mouth disgusted and waved the gun to indicate them to move.

“C’mon, I have many things to do. We’ll take Strange’s car so that we won’t be stopped at the gate.”

The wolf whistle made Lois turn her gaze from the sky and look at Jimmy.

“Nice outfit that Ivy!” he exclaimed thrilled goggling at Ivy’s almost naked body, forgetting his usual shyness.

Lois rolled her eyes and gave him a small smack in the back of his neck.

“Sweep your drooling and keep shooting…”

“Fascist…” the youth mumbled but smiled when Lois smiled at his comment.

Selina frowned seeing Diana’s waist wrapped in a green-silver stem which sprouted from Ivy’s naval; it was thick like a high voltage cable and seemed so tough that even the Amazon couldn’t shake it off her. Actually, Selina could discern that the Princess was dazzled, disoriented so she wasn’t trying to free herself much to Ivy’s snigger.

That encouraged the thugs to resume their attack to the law enforcers either with bullets or fists.
Selina ducked her head to avoid the stray bullets and ran to the edge of the docks under the patch of sky where the two women hovered.

They had discussed with Bruce the possibility of Ivy using her pheromones on her opponents and he had given her the antidote Jor El had manufactured based on the analyses he had done to Superman during Ivy’s influence. They both knew that it might come handy.

She wrapped her whip around the crane’s tower and climbed to the top with the ease of a cat. Then she straightened her posture, gathered her whip in a roll and walked lightly on the horizontal jib section, the corner of her eye seeing the docks from 50m height.

“What is it, dear?” Ivy asked sarcastic seeing Diana’s eyes confused. “You’re too ancient for the new tricks? You shouldn’t have underestimated me, Amazon!” she smirked with a gleeful shine in her green eyes

Ivy pulled the stem that was wrapped around Diana’s waist bringing the Amazon to her; as soon as Diana was close to her, Ivy raised her hand to punch. Ivy’s punch strong enough to injure Diana since Ivy had the powers Bagdana gave her was inches from the Amazon’s face. Diana’s eyes were under mist but still she could see the aggressive movement without however the motivation or the mood to defend herself or blow her opponent: she was lightheaded and his brain acknowledged Ivy as a being it shouldn’t be harmed even if she killed her.
Lois narrowed her eyes.

“C’mon, girl! Wake up! Don’t let that bimbo defeat you!”

Ivy screamed as something slashed and wrapped the wrist of her fisted hand; drops of blood splashed in the air.

“Remember the feeling of my whip, bitch?” Selina asked slyly from the crane’s top, her flashing eyes regarding Ivy.

Ivy fumed as her eyes glared at Selina.

“Oh, yeah! I owe you…” she said and raised her tied wrist pulling the whip.

Her strength enhanced by the demon’s spells was more than enough to throw Catwoman off the crane yet Selina smiled and ruined her effort by simply letting go of the whip causing Ivy to lose her balance and as a result lose her grip on Diana.

“You didn’t really expect to catch so easily an alley cat, huh?” Selina mocked her and jolted heading to land on the dock.

Ivy roared and rushed behind her which was what Selina wanted. Taking advantage of Ivy’s turned back to Diana Catwoman did something Batman-like: she threw a tiny needle aiming to Diana’s neck. Diana jerked feeling the small stab.

As soon as Catwoman put her feet on the cement Ivy stopped right in front of her.

“Time to pull off the cat’s nails!” Ivy sneered glaring.

Selina cocked an eyebrow.

“Really?” she retorted and regarded curiously her opponent’s body “What’s out, sister! You’re going to stumble on your attire…” she remarked snidely and began somersaulting.

Ivy boiling in her wrath caught her up with her speed.

A stem jumped from Ivy’s waist and twisted around Catwoman’s ankle. Her momentum stopped abruptly and she fell flat on her back. Ivy minced to her.

“And now, Kitty…” Selina glared at her registering the gold, big leaf she held that shone in the sun indicating that it was actually a sharp blade.

“Not so fast!” it was the angry roaring of a lioness more than the voice of a woman.

Ivy made to turn to see what it was that rush of air behind her but the wave fell on her and tackled her crushing her on a container slapping the blade-leaf from her hand.

Ivy saw Diana’s face contorted in anger over hers; the real Amazon was holding her from the neck and was stabbing her with her blazing eyes.

“I heard that you were given super powers” the Amazon said and grinned. “So I have no hesitation to do that…”

She grimaced and slapped Poison Ivy with all her might.

“That for impersonating me…”
Ivy jerked her leg kicking Diana hard on the groin but the Amazon not even flinched. Instead she raised her hand again giving her another slap.

“That for disgracing the name of the Amazons…”

Ivy punched the Amazon on the stomach yet Diana gritted her teeth and this time gave her a blow on the mouth.

“That for debunking me with that ridiculous outfit…” she yanked her head. “And that…” she head butted Ivy in the forehead knocking her out “for the damage you made using my name.”

Selina who was watching having approached smiled bitterly. For the pain you caused to Bruce…she thought and walked to Diana who was binding Ivy with her lasso.

She pulled out another tiny needle from the case that was built in her suit at the right thigh. Diana looked at her puzzled.

“Batman gave it to me: it will deprive her of her super powers; it’s a compound dose so it must be enough until Darkseid is defeated.”

Diana nodded and Selina stabbed the needle in Ivy’s upper arm.

“Thank you” the Amazon said “she did something to me and I was confused, numb…”

Catwoman nodded.

“She was doing something like this to Superman…thankfully today, I had the antidote. You helped me too so we’re even” she cocked her eyebrows and lolled her head gesturing towards the battling thugs and law enforcers “we can’t let them have all the fun, huh?”

Diana smiled.

“Definitely not.”

Jim Gordon was giving orders to his officers coordinating them. He was outside the Blackgate Prison where hundreds of thugs tried to breech the building; fortunately, police expected them so their attempt was thwarted and now police and SWAT exchanged fires with them to force them to surrender.

They had the control yet these thugs acted like brainwashed and weren’t willing to negotiate or stop fighting determined even to die as long as they killed officers along.

Jim’s face was contorted; he was watching behind barricade listening to the SWAT head – Montoya at his right. It seemed so absurd to him that this was happening in daylight: mob and thugs always preferred the coverage of the darkness which showed that they were indeed manipulated to act like this exactly as Batman told him.

Suddenly, his cell rang. It was Bullock.

“Search for him everywhere” he ordered Bullock and ended the dial.

“What is it, Commissionaire?” Montoya asked.

“Bullock didn’t find Elliot; they search his apartment and found a disk with the video.
Ironman was soaring above the battlefield wiping with his adjusted laser the hoards of Parademons that seemed endless. After the initial shock, the green creatures began using shields that sprout from their blade arms replacing the weapon with protection. It was a good thing that Ironman’s weaponry could pass the shield though more persistence was necessary.

His fellow Avengers underneath battled the alien army supported by the Asgardians. Tony was grateful to that arrival because till the Valkyries arrived he had to fight alone the flying Parademons. Even now the flying motherfuckers were more than the Earth’s defenders and Tony had to dodge and maneuver to avoid their fires: his armor was adjusted to withstand yet Tony didn’t want to risk.

Simultaneous to fighting, Tony had his systems scanning constantly the battlefield which had spread to almost a mile range so he couldn’t rely just to his vision. He wanted to have the control so to act whenever his comrades needed help.

Hulk was having fun catapulting with his enormous fists Parademons right and left as if they were annoying pests; his hide was too harsh for the alien weapons to harm him.

Captain America and Natasha was fighting with hands and legs but the former every now and then stopped using his shield for protection and launched to neutralize his enemies. Dr. Strange was fighting with elegant hand motions as if he was in his operating room; his gentle gestures conjured either shields to protect himself from the aliens or light beams that blew the creatures. Odin and Thor in the middle of the battle were causing major disaster to the aliens.

However what troubled Tony and made him restless was that Darkseid didn’t make his appearance yet. They had heard him but since then there was no sign of him. He didn’t have any doubt that the battle had just started and the big boss’ absence wasn’t good. The alien was up to something.

“Sir, Superman is here.”

Tony licked his lips: part of his restlessness had to do with Bruce. He didn’t know anything about his friend’s whereabouts or condition and he was afraid. Bruce should have stayed somewhere safe and not running around to save Superman.

He launched his laser and blew up two Parademons that were fighting with a Valkyrie and then made a swirl to head where Superman was.

“Sonovabitch!” he exclaimed because he almost bumped on Superman who hovered in front of him.

The freaking Kryptonian looked very good for someone being imprisoned by Darkseid for so long. And the fact he was flying and…he just used his laser vision to blow up ten Parademons in a row showed that Bruce had made it: he managed – who knows how – to restore Superman to his powers.

Superman stood in front of Ironman: his relationship with Tony Stark was always bad yet Clark now was ashamed even to look the man in the eyes – the lenses.

“Mr. Stark” he said “I owe you…”

Tony just didn’t have time for that.

“Oh, shut up! You owe me and Bruce too many things but now it’s not the time” Superman bit his lips and nodded. “Where’s Batman?” he asked not using Bruce’s name in case someone overheard them.
Superman’s eyes became more shadowed from guilt.

“He locked me in the Tumbler and sent me here…but he stayed there.”

Tony bit his bottom lip and he was happy that Ironman’s helmet hid it from Superman. Yet it wasn’t so difficult for Clark to understand.

“He told me that we’ll meet here.”

Ironman shook his head.

“But obviously he’s not here!” he spat and span around clearing the area from Parademons which found the chance to approach.

Superman followed his lead using his laser vision and his punches.

“They seem like sprouting like weeds…” he mumbled. “We are lucky that Thor brought the Asgardian army.”

Ironman turned slightly his head.

“Batman’s work” he spat and flew away heading where Granny were fighting the Asgardians killing several of them.

Superman gulped but instantly set his jaw determined: his hatred for Bagdana and Darkseid but most for himself won his guilt: there would be time for guilt, now it was time for action. He flew using his entire force to tear apart the flying Parademons in his way while his laser vision was blasting more of them that were far.

He knew that it was better for him to fight the flying creatures to stop them from hitting his comrades from the air yet his agony was that those in the land were outnumbered and would be easily swallowed by the thousands of enemies.

For the first time, his grim face lit from relief: a red blur ran the road towards the battlefield ‘uprooting’ the green river of aliens. Flash. Bruce really took care assembling every force that loved this planet.

Montoya’s walkie talkie buzzed and Gordon frowned. The young lieutenant looked at Jim while listening.

“Dr. Hugo Strange was found in the Arkham Asylum shot in the chest – he is alive – but he opened Joker’s and Quinzel’s cells. Elliot had gone to visit the doctor.”

Jim ran to his patrol car before Montoya finished and she followed him jumping at the driver’s seat.

“Wayne Manor” he said to her.

The demon and the human were both completely naked on a black cloud that was their mattress. Bagdana was lying on his side behind the human massaging with both hands, no, better fondling, the human’s broad muscle bound back; his lips were planting soft kisses on the shoulders’ skin that looked velvety smooth. The demon’s cat-like eyes were filled with affection so abnormal for a demon – Bagdana had even adjusted his body’s size to match the human’s in order to not hurt him.
The human was on his belly with his arms loosely placed over his head; his eyes were blank but determined gazing at the cement wall in front of him.

It was obvious what had taken place. Darkseid wanted his rage to prevail and to avert his eyes disgusted yet he realized that he couldn’t or…he didn’t want to.

His eyes were fixed on the body before him unwilling to let go. From the day he met him in his office, Darkseid had found Wayne rather attractive – even if he didn’t want to admit it. Yet seeing him like this made the impression stronger.

With the expensive clothes on and sat in the wheelchair, Darkseid couldn’t imagine that this body was chiseled in such perfection; with porcelain, glowing skin and strong, artistic sculpted muscles. The way he had his arms over his head made the deltoids bulge pointing every single jointing fiber. Bagdana was nibbling the human’s shoulder blades and Darkseid couldn’t blame him…

Only a small part of Wayne’s front was visible yet it was delicious enough letting him see a portion of a pink nipple and harmonic layers of abdominals. However Darkseid wasn’t sorry he couldn’t see the man’s chest and those juicy pectorals which could see partially because a cute curve from the waist led to enticing, protruding round buttocks that the New God could tell that had just given tremendous pleasure to the demon; they were taut but at the same time seemed soft and velvety urging his hands to touch to feel…

The perfume this mortal body emanated stunned and intoxicated him blended with the smell of sex hued sweat.

Humans shouldn’t be so beautiful…So alluring; so charming…More charming when Wayne’s glimmering beautiful eyes narrowed like a wildcat’s as soon as he saw Darkseid. Raven silken locks wet framed his hot face and made his eye’s effect stronger. So intense, beautiful eyes…

The New God thought that the human didn’t know who had before him but still having a blue giant staring at his naked body after Bagdana having screw him should have been terrorizing; yet the human didn’t look scared.

Bagdana took in the way Darkseid was goggling at Bruce’s body and fast like air he stood on the floor, his clothes reappearing to dress his own gigantic body. The demon placed his body in a way that Darkseid couldn’t see Bruce anymore.

Darkseid smirked: a demon protecting his mate from strange eyes.

“How scurvy you are, demon!”

Bruce’s thought was that Bagdana was a demon so from definition he was scurvy thus the New God wasn’t saying anything new.

“Being here fucking your human whore!” he roared to the demon wanting to show that Wayne’s stunning nudity left him indifferent.

Bagdana smiled.

“Isn’t that bad that I took my share before the battle…” he slurred.

Suddenly, Darkseid with the corner of his eyes saw something that struck him like a thunder: in the middle of the room, on the floor around the central stone pole, black things were scattered; black things with one of them standing out: a cowl with pointy ears.
The New God’s eyes widened for the umpteenth time the last hours: when he met the human in his office, he experienced his defiance, the strength of his character, his immunity to mind control but he couldn’t imagine... His eyes stabbed Bagdana’s body struggling to see the man who lay on the mattress.

“He is the Batman!” he roared. “That’s why you asked from me to not kill both Bruce Wayne and Batman: they are the same person and you couldn’t risk one of them getting killed! That’s why Batman’s appearances were scarce: he is disabled!”

Bruce behind the demon’s mass clenched his fists: he didn’t want Darkseid knowing his secret. He supported himself to his elbow and rose a bit. It wasn’t a disaster.

Bagdana smiled.

“You figured out, I see…” he cocked an eyebrow.

Darkseid’s lips flared and his fists clenched: the demon was mocking him.

“You didn’t tell me the truth about Wayne!”

Bagdana crossed his column like arms over his enormous chest and shrugged a shoulder.

“I’m a demon” he said “you didn’t really expect honesty from a demon?” he asked amused.

On that sarcasm Darkseid let his rage explode: he clenched his jaw making his teeth emanate sparkles. His hands became fists.

“You shall be punished for your cheating! I’ll have the human first subjected to my treatment!” his nostrils spat fire.

Bruce rolled his eyes: it was ridiculous.

“You won’t touch him!” Bagdana hissed calmly and his yellow cat like eyes became flaming red scowling at the bigger god.

Darkseid yanked his head backwards cackling and made a motion forwards to overcome Bagdana’s obstacle but he was pushed back from a hot wave: the demon’s body lost its granite texture and became a mountainous body of fire and lava that reached the ceiling towering Darkseid; the flames coming from the mass danced frantically around and two coal like eyes stabbed the New God.

Bruce felt something soft covering his body and his eyes just before Bagdana’s transformation: he saw Bagdana taking the form of his kingdom’s deepest depths but he didn’t feel the heat that certainly would have burnt him alive. Bagdana took care to cover him with that protective layer.

Darkseid’s eyes were still and his breath echoed like roaring: it wasn’t the time to spend his powers and those of the despicable demon. He needed him to defeat the humans and then he’d teach him a lesson. For the time being however he loosened his stance and looked him in the black-gold coals that were his eyes.

He nodded.

“If you want to keep your pet then use your strength against humans.”

The mountain of lave and fire began freezing giving its place to granite that was chiseled in real time to produce in a second Bagdana’s casual form. The demon’s thick brows were knitted.
“What are you saying? Your attack is going to be launched in two days. You changed the attack’s time without telling me?”

Darkseid now was rasping: his wrath for Bagdana’s treachery to hide the truth about Wayne had made him forget what happened in the Frozen Bazin.

“THEY ATTACKED US, you deplorable serpent!”

Bagdana’s bewilderment was depicted in his yellow cat like eyes.

“That’s…no way…” he said.

Darkseid sniggered but his rage was such that the snigger became a roar.

“The Avengers are at the Frozen Basin; they wanted to search Mannheim’s facilities…to get my machine.”

Bagdana grimaced.

“You stopped them?”

Darkseid snorted and fisted his hands.

“What do you think?! Right now they fight with the Parademons I brought from Washington.”

Bagdana shook his head almost indifferent.

“Fine then…They chose to end their lives sooner.”

Darkseid growled.

“Idiot! They have weapons that can pass the Parademon’s skin and their attires are durable to Parademon’s weaponry! And…” he stabbed the demon with his eyes “Thor and Odin came with an army of Asgardians and Valkyries.”

If Bagdana had human skin and not his granite hide then he would have been pale; his plumb lips that just now were sank in Bruce’s sweetness stayed agape.

Darkseid’s ire subsided a bit for amusement’s shake over the demon’s shock. He wanted to make the demon suffer for what he did.

“Police and SWAT attacked Intergang in Metropolis.”

Bagdana blinked.

“Ivy can easily smash them.”

Darkseid smirked.

“Not when the real Diana of Themyscirra protects them!”

Bagdana opened his mouth unable to utter ‘impossible’. Darkseid crooked his mouth in disgust.

“And Superman is free!” he roared leaning to him and moved his hand in the air.

Bagdana saw in the humid air of the room the battle in Frozen Bazin but no Superman: Darkseid must have been raving.
“It must be a trick…what you say you saw: some hologram or something stupid. Superman is in his cell…I just saw him” he said confident.

“Then how you explain this?!”

The demon’s eyes almost popped out from their sockets: Superman was flying, strong and vivid as if he wasn’t under Kryptonite’s and red sun’s radiation for days. The Man of Steel was using his laser vision and his extraordinary powers without a problem exterminating Parademons. The demon shook his head.

“But I did saw him in his cell weak, half dead; I sensed his DNA.”

Granny Goodness’ face was deformed in a grimace of rage and hatred. Her plump body vibrated from boiling anger as she crossed the battlefield in her way shooting at the Asgardians with the guns she held in both hands. She was determined to kill everyone in her path winning this battle even herself.

She shrieked satisfied as several Asgardians collapsed on the soil; they might have had armors that Parademons couldn’t breech yet her weapons could.

Granny smirked and jumped in the air to arrive faster to the spot where Asgardians were slaughtering Parademons with their long swords. She turned her weapons on them and pushed the triggers simultaneously ready to savor the massacre.

But then something stood between her fire and the Asgardians absorbing the beams. Granny’s eyes bulged and she cried from frustration.

It was Captain America’s shield that after stopping the beams turned downwards to end up in her master’s hands. Steve’s determined eyes crossed with Granny’s as she landed before him.

“You don’t know that it’s cowardice to hit someone in the back?” he asked.

Granny cackled.

“I’m face to face with you, pest!” she let a spooky shriek and rushed against him firing both her guns.

Steve used his shield to protect himself but Granny reached him and threw away the firearms replacing them with long, broad blades that shone in the sun; she downed the blades to Steve’s throat and he dodged bringing his shield to block them.

Granny roared frustrated and pushed more the blades almost bending Steve’s hand. Captain America clenching his teeth jerked his legs kicking his enemy’s calves shoving her away from him. He hardly had straightened his body when Parademons swarmed at him shooting and moving their blades. Steve was moving his shield both to block hits and attack himself.

Suddenly, three of his enemies were launched to the air and then hit by bullets.

Steve narrowed his eyes trying to discern through the dust the one who was helping him. A human body jerked in the air kicking two Parademons and landed in front of him.

“Two are better than one, right?” Natasha said in her thick accent and Steve nodded smiling.
They took positions back to back in order to cover more space but they failed to see Granny turning her firearms at them; her eyes shining maniac.

They heard her shrieking laughter and the sound from her beams; it was too close for avoiding and Steve had thrown his shield to smash attacking Parademons. They both fell on the ground aware that the range of her beams was enough to hit them even down.

But then the beams were deflected by something transparent that made the air wave and Granny had to jump several feet away to escape her own beams.

Steve gave his hand to Natasha and both stood looking in the air: a laughing Superman was there blowing over his index fingers which stood like gun barrels.

“Hard times for heroes, huh?” Superman said.

“Are you alright?”

They turned around to the other familiar voice only to see a second Superman regarding them serious as ever.

“Two Supermen?!” Darkseid grunted goggling at the footage from the battlefield.

Bagdana surprised as his ally narrowed his eyes.

Clark squinted at… himself; but he let his surprise last only two seconds and immediately he readied to attack the impostor: after what happened with Poison Ivy and Darkseid he wasn’t willing to take any risk…especially, when he was in front of none other than himself!

But a second before he surged at the impostor the second Superman changed leaving none other than Loki in his place.

Clark had the same startled expression as Natasha and Steve.

“Ugh!” the mischievous god exclaimed. “Muscles and all are overhyped; I prefer my unique, peculiar beauty…What?” he asked taking in the expressions of the others; he shook his head and crooked his mouth. “Someone of us has to work, huh?” he rushed to the other end of the battle sending waves of energy against the aliens.

Thomas Elliot heard only the sound of his expensive leather shoes on the linoleum floor and the determined beats of his heart. With the corner of his eyes he acknowledged nurses and doctors dressed in white passing right and left greeting him and frowning when they didn’t receive any reciprocation.

As he had expected police and Wayne Enterprises’ security had surrounded the free clinic to prevent any attack from the rioters. However he worked in the clinic and his ID gave him easy pass.

Leslie was in the middle of the foyer room. Dressed in her white robe, agitated, looking at her colleagues with her determined deep stare behind her rectangular glasses she gave instructions. Like every day the foyer was filled with people: elderly, women and children of the Narrows benefited from the free clinic.

He smirked inside and walked to her.

“Tommy, it’s not your shift” she greeted him.

Elliot growled inside: suspicious as always, he thought.

“Well, no classes at the University due to the Training Day and I thought to come here to help” he looked around “aren’t you glad to see me?”

Leslie sensed something odd – odder than usual behind Elliot’s cocked eyebrows – yet she had too many things on her mind to deal with it now. She walked with the intention to head at the emergency rooms, her staff already walking towards the patients’ wards.

“Of course I am, Tommy – it’s a busy day.”

Thomas nodded.

“More than usual…”

“It’s the riots…” Leslie said her eyes on the emergency ward as she walked hastily, Thomas at her heels.

“Police seems to have the control” he remarked slyly.

Leslie pushed the door’s knob to enter the first room.

“Yes, but people in the Narrows have seen a lot so it is natural to be panicked and to want to stay in a safe place. Aren’t you going to wear your robe?”

She asked frowned registering his blank eyes.

“No, Leslie” he answered turning abruptly his suddenly glimmering eyes to her. “We’ll go to visit our Brucie.”

Leslie let the knob and narrowed her eyes.

“What? That’s not the time for this.”

Elliot smirked.

“Oh, yes…I think it is” he pulled out of his pants’ pocket a square handgun.

Leslie pressed her lips and shook her head staying calm: it wasn’t the first time someone threatened her with a gun.

“Thomas, put that away…you don’t want to do this.”

“Oh, yes, I do. And don’t patronize me, you foolish woman! That brat humiliated me and now it’s the time he pays!”

Leslie closed her eyes: all this time, Bruce was right about Elliot; on the other hand she had been too naïve and lenient to him, which gave Thomas the chance to do this.

He was in a hurry; he grabbed Leslie’s upper arm and holding the gun with the other he dragged her to the foyer causing shrieks from the citizens and the nurses who saw the gun.

Leslie gestured to everyone to calm down.

“Thomas, people have nothing to do with your grudge. Why threatening them?”

Elliot clenched her more.

“They’ll help me persuade you to take me to the Manor” he smiled. “I know that the Manor has the toughest security there is and now with the riots even more so the only way to get in is with you.”

Leslie set her jaw.

“There’s no way I’ll get you there to harm Bruce!”

Thomas cursed furious and brandished his gun as if he was ready to hit her, movement that made bystanders, patients and staff, huff scared.

“We’ll see about that!” he said controlling his temper and Leslie frowned. “Come!”

Everyone looked where Elliot’s head was turned. A blond girl with two ponytails on her head, dressed in a tiny skirt and white strapped leggings walked to the foyer swaying her hips accompanied by a nurse who had her back on the people. The girl whom Leslie recognized as Dr. Quinzel held a machine gun.

Suddenly, the nurse turned and Leslie couldn’t hold her laughter because amusement overcame for a second her wariness. The nurse was dressed in the casual white robe; ‘she’ was tall with short, bushy red hair that was a wig; her face was painted white and her lips were painted ruby red highlighting the scars that reached her cheeks.

“Hellooooo, people! Nurse Joky is with youuuuuuu to relieve you from your pain…” he made his voice hoarse. “Permanently!”

He drew out of his skirt a machine gun and aimed it at the people. He pouted.

“Now…I dooooon’t like disobedient patients. Soooooo be good kids and your beautiful nurse will take care of you.”

Leslie stared at him cocking an eyebrow.

“You found your true inclination?” she asked eyeing his skirt “Those leg hair though…” she arched her eyebrows. “Dr. Elliot can suggest a good surgeon to operate you…”

People around gulped afraid that Joker would be mad but the nurse looked at himself and laughed.

“I like her, Tommy” he said looking at him. “He has a sense of humor.”

Quinzel was crossing the room grinning broadly turning her machine gun to people who flinched and yelled causing her laughter.

“You’re right, Mr. J. It is exciting!”

Joker stared at her and shrugged.

“Youuuuu should listen to paaaaaapa Joker, Harlequin!”
Elliot rolled his eyes.

“Enough with your nonsense!” he stabbed Leslie with his eyes. “Either you’ll get me to the Manor or this day will stay in the history as the free clinic massacre!”

Both Joker and Harley grinned pointing their guns at the people who shrieked.

Leslie bit her lip; she hated that.

Kelly heard the fuss returning from the patient rooms and came curious to see what had happened; it wasn’t something unusual for the clinic after all. But upon entering the foyer and seeing Joker with his minion threatening people she paled. But then she took in Tommy holding Dr. Leslie with a gun clenched in his hand and she couldn’t stop herself: Thomas couldn’t do this…

She ran to Elliot.

“Tommy, what are you doing?” she asked searching for his eyes.

Thomas huffed exasperated and looked at her.

“I’m so tired of you” he spat and in front of everyone’s goggling eyes he shot the girl in the chest.

Kelly’s eyes stayed widened in confusion as her lean body fall on the floor with a bleeding hole in the chest.

Leslie jerked in Elliot’s grip to run to her nurse but he held her back.

“Now, Leslie: do you want me to continue?” he roared.

The kids began crying hiding in their parents’ chests; Leslie bit her lip realizing those people’s panic and despair: they had come here, to the doctor who for years protected them, only to be surrendered in a nightmare. Thomas had definitely gone mental: he just shot Kelly, he wouldn’t hesitate to do it again.

She shook her head.

“No, I’ll take you there.”

Elliot smirked.

“Wise choice…Ah! Harley will stay here ready to execute your precious patients in case you try something in the road.”

He pushed her ahead of him and Joker followed.

“We’ll take your car” Elliot said when they entered the underground parking. “I suppose the Ground’s Gates open automatically for you.”

Montoya sped the car crossing fast the bridge to the Palisades casting glances to her chief who regarded the road impatient.

“Soon we’ll be there, Commissionaire; Palisades don’t have any traffic.”

Jim had already sent signal to the patrol cars that were in the city’s exits to the Palisades. They would stop Elliot: he hoped that they would arrest him before getting near the Wayne Estate.

So when his cell phone rang he almost jumped.

Montoya looked at him with the same hope.

“Tell me…” Jim said. “I’m coming!”

“What?” Montoya asked.

“Turn around!”

Montoya obeyed immediately performing a skillful U-turn taking advantage of the almost empty bridge.

“The officers who guard the free clinic reported gun shots from inside” Montoya looked at him. “They allowed Elliot to enter: he worked there and had an ID so they let him.”

“Shit!”

As soon as Bagdana saw the second Superman turning into Loki everything dawned to him. He actually closed his eyes and smiled amused causing Darkseid’s irritated puzzlement.

Bagdana turned to look at Bruce who was watching the two giants with still, determined eyes; the layer the demon had put on him to protect him from the heat covered also his nudity so Bruce felt at ease. But all of a sudden, the demon stormed at him, forcing him on his back; Bagdana straddled him and grabbed his wrists stretching his arms over his head.

“You did that!” he said but his voice vibrated more from admiration than wrath. “I thought that I caught you before managing to free Superman but you not only had already released him but also you had taken care to cover your trails in case something went wrong.”

_The forest covered hill cast its grim shadow over the grotesque gothic building that stood at his foothills. The dawn was almost there yet the sky was still dark with clouds hiding the stars and the moon._

_Two shadows slipped inside the Mansion from the back door of the kitchen. The room was at the back side of the enormous rectangular building._

_“It’s like Dracula’s castle with these sharp turrets…and so dark with its gothic shape glaring at you. You’re sure it’s not haunted as well?”_

_The one shadow immediately headed for the door on the other end of the vast room but the second, leaner silhouette looked around curious._

_“You know your thing, huh, Batman? How did you know that the kitchen would be empty?”_

_True, the room was equipped with the usual kitchen ware yet it was obvious from the spider webs and the dust that it wasn’t ever used._

_Batman turned to his companion._
“The owner of the Mansion has no interest for food” he growled and the other nodded. “On the other hand…” he touched the down part of his wrist and the sketch of the building appeared into the room its lines illuminated in green neon light.

The face of Batman’s companion was cast under the green light and Loki’s sneaky eyes sparkled.

“Wow! James Bond style…”

Bruce rolled his eyes behind the lenses. Loki leaned to him.

“Not that I don’t goggle at the high tech thingies but…you sure don’t want me to transfer us there…” he winked and lolled his head “you know with magic?”

Batman scowled at him giving him the silent treatment and Loki arched his eyebrows.

“You’re the boss…” he shrugged.

The corridor leading from the kitchen to the Mansion’s interior was dark and deserted but Bruce knew that this was just for that part of the building since his blueprint showed where the guards were patrolling.

The fact that Darkseid didn’t even suspect that someone could have figured him and attempt an invasion to his lair was a major asset. Yet Batman never let down his guard. Lucius’ tracking system showed Kryptonite radiation at the left wing of the building where most of the guards were situated.

Loki was staring around as if he was visiting a museum.

“All these grim portraits on the walls don’t seem like old aliens…” he mumbled.

“The Mansion belonged to the true Mannheim family for centuries till Darkseid possessed the body of Brunno Mannheim.”

The only way to pass the patrols unnoticed was through the old study room that the building’s old blueprints showed that it had a secret door leading to the wing where Superman’s cell was. Batman could knock out the Parademon guards but if someone saw them in that state would immediately realize the intrusion.

That door opened exactly at the corridor with the cell; the odd thing was that contrary to the rest of the left wing the corridor with Superman’s cell was unguarded – they didn’t expect intruders and even if some breaking happened it was expected to be stopped before that corridor.

The corridor was narrow, dimly lit and the floor was covered with a material similar to tile.

“Tell me something” Loki mumbled. “Does Stark know that you used Bruce to get in touch with me?”

Batman looked at him.

“Stark doesn’t need to know everything.”

“Right” Loki nodded pursing his lips.

They followed the corridor for several feet when they saw green and red light in front of them. Bruce’s heart began drumming in his ribs but he controlled it. They hurried their steps till they reached their destination.
Bruce’s heart lost some beats seeing Clark in that awful state.

However he regained his recollection before Loki suspected. Then he pressed a button on his forearm blocking the alarm system connected with the cell’s door.

The mischievous god was staring Superman tilting his head.

“Not so super, huh? Poor Supes!” he mumbled.

Batman cast him a glare and the god touched the door which opened with a hiss. Then Loki did the same stopping the red radiation and Batman opened the Kryptonite chains supporting Clark who immediately collapse not having the chains holding him up. Loki hurried to help.

Batman looked at him and his lenses met Loki’s eyes.

“You know what to do.”

It was time for the implementation of the plan: Batman told Loki that he knew his ability to take whatever form he wanted – of course Bruce remembered vividly that time Loki was on his bed in Thasos having Superman’s exact appearance but he couldn’t tell him that because then Loki would connect the dots since that incident was something that Bruce wouldn’t have told to anyone.

In front of his eyes Loki became an exact replica of the Superman he had on his hands: weary, thin, pale, weak with disheveled hair and sweaty face. Superman winked.

“Good enough?”

“Fine” Batman growled and Loki rolled his eyes.

“You won’t harm yourself if you say something more encouraging than ‘fine’!”

Batman let carefully Superman on the floor and pulled out of one of his belt’s compartments a vial. He opened it and threw the content all over Loki who frowned.

“Superman’s DNA” Batman answered. “If anyone comes to check, his DNA and your appearance will do the work.”

Loki stepped inside looking with pouted lips the casket like cell.

“Nice cell…” he said and reactivated the red radiation. “Good think I don’t have claustrophobia!”

Batman closed the shackles to Loki’s ankles and wrists.

“When I should leave this place?” Loki asked.

Batman lifted Clark from the floor.

“You will know…”

Loki smirked and Batman shut the door of the cell; the god winked sending Batman and Superman back to the Tumbler.

Bagdana saw in the battlefield the second Superman becoming Loki.
“You used Loki’s shape shifting skills to outsmart me!”

Bruce arched his eyebrows and shrugged as much as Bagdana’s grip allowed him.

“You’re not the only one who knows the game of deception…”

Darkseid’s eyes flashed impressed overcoming his arousal from seeing the demon handling like this the mortal’s nude body. Bagdana pressed his lips remembering how he had fooled Thor months ago with a reflection of himself.

“You used my trick against me…” he said. “I caught you not on your way to free Superman but you came to win time for Superman to leave; you didn’t want the Parademons reach him because then your plan would have been doomed… you wanted Superman to go to the Frozen Basin” he shook his head and smiled. “You planned everything so that the attack at Mannheim’s facilities would take place in daylight because you wanted the sun light to charge Superman’s powers. And the real Diana…” his eyes were filled with admiration. “You figured out everything…”

Bruce met his stare.

“You chose the popular version for your Princess to persuade people that she was real; yet for someone who was raised by a person obsessed with the ancients this didn’t work…”

Bagdana shook his head.

“Ra’s Al Ghul taught you everything…” he sighed. “So you searched and discovered Themyscira and the real Princess…this was the reason you were absent from Gotham…you weren’t looking for Superman: you were weaving your perfect plan” he laughed. “You knew I was Queen?”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“First I figured that Queen was the Arrow…However Queen couldn’t be a skilled archer: his friend from university had said that he was lousy at archery and the Arrow as well as the Queen I met was left handed even though he tried to show the opposite because the real Queen was right handed. And then the Arrow was the first to find Loki’s palace and threatened to kill him with a golden arrow… No mere human could discover the magic palace of Loki and the golden arrow reminded me an ancient drawing I found during my research about you: Bagdana, the left handed archer who killed gods with his golden arrows.”

Bagdana closed his eyes amused.

“And I thought that I fooled you…”

Darkseid decided to overcome his surprise; till now he was listening silent and in awe for the human being that lay defenseless in two gods’ presence but in fact as strong as them. He fixed his angry eyes on Bruce.

“You made the attack at my premises to drive me away from the cities to stop me from retaliating; the Electromagnetic Storm Training Day was your idea to rob me from targets with many casualties” Bruce’s gaze turned to the New God unflinching. “You knew that I wouldn’t risk my facilities being breeched…You know about the Machine…”

Bruce tilted his head on the side.

“Mannheim’s interest for the strange items found in LexLabs was intriguing…You attacked me to intimidate me into giving you the items” Bruce pressed his lips. “Since you wanted them so much I let you take them – of course persuading you that you stole them from me.”

Darkseid’s eyes gazed at the human impressed.

“You had tracking devices on them…”

Bruce met his gaze.

“Tony Stark is an inventive genius: it was easy for him.”

The New God nodded.

“And you knew where the items were and that Luthor assembled them to build a machine.”

“You got it.”

Bagdana laughed and Darkseid cast him a sideways glare.

“A giant chessboard” the demon said unfazed by his ally’s irritation “where deities thought that they could use Bruce Wayne as a pawn” Bruce turned his sparkling gaze to him and Bagdana smiled.

“But you turned the deities into your pawns!”

Darkseid’s wrath surpassed his admiration; he rushed on Bruce shoving Bagdana off of him and grabbed him from the throat without managing to make the human’s stare bend. Bagdana returned in a flash and clutched Darkseid’s forearm to stop him from choking Bruce.

“Stop!”

Darkseid however was engaged in the staring battle with Bruce.

“You won’t defeat Darkseid, Mr. Wayne: you’re ingenious; a rare specimen and I’ll experiment with you when I finish with your friends.”

He let go of Bruce’s neck and turned to Bagdana.

“We have a battle to finish!”

Bagdana glared at him.

“You won’t harm Bruce!”

Darkseid smirked.

“I would be a fool to harm such a specimen… Now, follow me!” he roared and vanished.

Bruce and Bagdana were again alone in the enormous room their eyes connected.

A loud bang broke the silence and the demon without breaking eye contact smiled. He showed with the corner of his eye the place where the parts of Batman’s armor lay…now it was stamps of smoking ashes.

“You can’t get out of here since the doors work with DNA recognition but a demon must be cautious especially after the way you humiliated me… Your armor is destructed so you are robbed from the device that enables you to stand and move so do not spend your strength in futile attempts.”

Bruce scowled at him without replying anything and the demon took gently his chin despite Bruce’s attempt to jerk away.

“I sensed your exhaustion…you’ve been exerting yourself to prepare this. Too bad all these were in vein…There’s no use or meaning in struggling anymore, Bruce. Rest. You did everything you could but soon it would be over and we’ll be free to revive our love.”

“There’s no love in you” Bruce hissed and the demon caressed the human’s cold cheek with his thumb. “Darkseid will dispose of you as soon as he achieves his goal.”

Bagdana let go of Bruce’s chin and stretched his posture.

“So you realize that despite your valiant and ingenious efforts your friends will be extinguished… Don’t worry though: I won’t let Darkseid lay his hands on you.”

With that the demon vanished and Bruce looked at the wall opposite him from where the Parademons had left. The door was there. With the corner of his eye he registered the ancient box where Bagdana had stashed the Black Butterfly and the Knife of Justice: the demon believed that he couldn’t do anything even with them.
Lois watched the police officers handcuffing the thugs who were scattered all over the warehouse’s perimeter. Most of the Intergang members were knocked out; the rest were either beaten up or wounded so their groaning offered a white sound to the sirens that howled.

Law enforcers were also wounded so the paramedics had their hands fool with treating or carrying injured from both sides. Thankfully, the casualties seemed to be very few.

She glanced at Jimmy who was shooting everything broadcasting to the Planet’s site.

Catwoman was there all the time helping in the fight but Diana had left when it was obvious that the outlaws were defeated. Lois supposed that she flew to help the forces of the law in the other warehouses where Intergang’s smaller lairs where situated.

Lois saw the head of the police officers walking to Catwoman and shaking hands.

But then the reporter turned her eyes to the sky watching the Amazon returning. But she detoured to bring to the police the unconscious Ivy: she unwrapped her glimmering Lasso leaving the law enforcers to handcuff her opponent. She rolled her Lasso and put it in its place at her left thigh as she headed to Catwoman. The lieutenant stretched his hand to the Princess as soon as she approached.

Catwoman chuckled.

“She prefers this” she said slyly bringing her fist to hit the place of her heart. “I know, it hurts but it’s the cultural shock…”

Diana looked at her amused and shook the hand the lieutenant offered her.

“Thank you: we are grateful. Without the help of both of you things would have been very difficult.”

Catwoman who carried some bruises and scratches to the visible part of her face nodded.

“Maybe the paramedics should look this?” the officer asked her concerned.

“No, it’s nothing” she waved that off. “Cats have nine lives, you know.”

Diana smiled.

“The people of the law have finished with the other hideouts” the Princess said.

“Yes” the officer replied “we are in touch with them and they informed us that your contribution was valuable” he bowed his head with respect.

“They were almost done when I arrived” Diana retorted modestly but firmly.

“We have to leave now” Catwoman whispered to Diana’s ear and the Amazon nodded.

“The city is in your hands now, lieutenant” the Princess said. “You won’t have a problem with Ivy; she is unconscious and deprived of her powers” and she followed Catwoman without another word.

Lois watched the two women frowned.

“Where are they going?” Jimmy asked.
“Something is going on…” Lois said and gestured to her sidekick to follow her as she carefully tailed the two women.

“You’re worried” Diana said to Catwoman.

“Yes…” she answered absent minded thinking about what happened to that alley with that odd woman and her sudden disappearance that saved her life – something was off and a nasty gut feeling clenched her insides. “We better go to the field. I’ll take my bike.”

“Flying with me is way faster” Diana remarked serious.

Catwoman lolled her head thoughtful but then she nodded thinking that there wasn’t any time to waste.

“Fine” she let her arms down and grabbed Diana’s upper arm. The Amazon took off.

“We are following them!” Lois said thankful that her car wasn’t far.

But Jimmy running behind her wondered how on Earth someone could follow flying people.

Dr. Strange was blocking Granny’s consequent beams of yellow light with green balls of energy he conjured moving elegantly his hands.

Around them Asgardians were slaughtering Parademons while all over the sky Valkyries did the same with the flying aliens backed by Ironman and Thor who covered flying the battlefield aiding their comrades underneath. A red blur was launching Parademons in the air and Superman finished them off.

Hulk’s roars as the green giant catapulted enemies all over towered the consequent bangs of bullets, rockets and beams, the cries and the shouts; Natasha and Steve at their part of the field were working as a team to neutralize their opponents: Natasha with two guns and Steve with his shield.

“Things are good for us” Tony said “they are countless but we beat them easily.”

Thor moved his hammer sending thunders to a clot of flying Parademons that surrounded two Valkyries.

“But still we have casualties: the plan of the attack here was wise otherwise we’d have hundreds of dead civilians right now” Ironman nodded his lenses launching laser to burn a Parademon in the ground. “Also” Thor grunted hammering with Mjolnir two Parademons at once “Darkseid hasn’t shown up yet and I’m sure he’ll have surprises for us…”

“We are prepared for him…” Tony said and cheered when Dr. Strange managed to hit Granny who screamed outraged taking cover behind a rock to avoid a new blow. “Stephen, look out!” Tony yelled seeing a waterfall of blue flames coming at him.

But before even hearing Tony’s warning, Dr. Strange sensed his cape lifting him and throwing him away from the lethal danger.

Everyone looked to the spot where the flames had come along with a bang as from a thousand thunders. A blue giant stood in the middle of the battlefield smirking at them: standing on two column-like legs, towering at 10 feet, his enormous arms bound with bulging stone muscles were still glowing from the energy he just sent to kill. His eyes were two red slits that glared at his...
Ironman standing in mid air lolled his head towards Thor who clenched his hammer gritting his teeth.

“Well…you got what you wanted – next time, do ask for something more delicious, will you?”

Thor didn’t have time to reply anything because he sensed something extremely hot approaching him; he turned only to see a fireball coming at him. He brought Mjolnir to deflect it but something pushed the fireball away from him.

With the corner of his eye he saw Odin grabbing his axe that was returning to him after pushing away the fireball. They both nodded and saw before them emerging through a burning cloud Bagdana with a fireball ready in his hand.

He was shorter and leaner than Darkseid but still he was a giant of 9 feet; his body was a flaming golden red mixed with black, naked but for metal briefs covering his groin, showing off his perfect long, bulging muscles in arms and legs. His eyes were the usual cat like slits, shining like rubies on fire and from his head protruded two long, straight horns that glimmered gold and emitted waves of flames. In his right hand he was clenching a big, wide sword that his blade was made from dancing flames.

“Tony” Pepper’s dodged voice filled his helmet “something is happening at Mannheim’s facilities.”

But Superman had already heard the bangs and turned his long distance vision to that direction biting his lips.

Bruce stood completely naked right next to the mattress: his legs were a bit shaky despite the mental concentration he focused on them; it was the fatigue and the pain in his pelvis. He had to hold the mattress for support and concentrate for a few moments before walking carefully. He couldn’t afford letting the panic of his body’s exhaustion and the loss of his armor’s artificial mobility stop him. He had made it again though certainly now was more difficult.

He simply disregarded that and his nudity walking staggering a bit to the corner of the room where the box containing his weapons was placed. The box was small, square with silver engravings on its metallic surface. Odd enough its dome shaped lid opened as soon as Bruce touched it. He frowned: it was doubtful that Bagdana would want this to happen.

Bruce wore the pouch with the Black Butterfly around his neck feeling dressed even though he was entirely naked. Then he grabbed his dagger. Suddenly, a thought flashed in his mind: the box opened because it sensed Bagdana’s DNA. Bruce closed his eyes: his body had absorbed the demon’s genetic fluids.

He looked at the door: It worked with DNA recognition…so…

Bruce crooked his mouth and made another step closer. An almost inaudible hiss and a rectangular part of the wall vanished showing him the way outwards.

From there he knew the way out of the Mansion and he was more than capable to pass unnoticed from the Parademons guarding.

He had to hurry so he sped which made his body protest however he couldn’t afford paying attention to that. He crossed the corridors leading to the kitchen and came out to the day light appreciating the sun that warmed his nude body.
His face became pink in the thought of someone seeing him like this…he fastened his steps to the spot where the Tumbler was set to wait for him after taking Superman to the Frozen Basin.

Bruce thanked himself for having the wisdom to program the Tumbler to wait for him at the base of the hill and not on the top – its stealth mode was protecting the vehicle from detection. Ascending the hill was an adversity that would have been detrimental right now.

The driver’s door rose to welcome him in and Bruce slipped in the seat; instantly, the car’s engine turned on and the vehicle sped ahead towards the Basin.

Bruce brushed the control panel initiating a hissing sound in the back of the car. He turned to see a layer that had emerged from the trunk with the panels of his spare armor: Alfred taught him when he was child that spare attire is always useful. He began putting his armor on feeling relief flooding his abused body; the disgust from what had happened in the Mansion was pushed deeper in his mind’s depths though its stinging remained as an abstract nuisance.

Alfred glanced at the people in the ground floor living room. Master Richard and Jason sat cross legged on the thick velvet carper with Hero rolling between them, Ms. Turner and Todd sat on the sofa and watched worried the developments in Gotham as GCN broadcasted footage from the areas with the riots.

He was sure that the two ladies were relieved that their children were in the safety of the Manor but still their hearts were to the people in danger. Of course GCN’s reporter assured that Gotham’s police had the control and his words were proved by the footage of SWAT members handcuffing thugs.

Alfred laid the tray he was carrying on the table and the boys followed Hero’s hasty jump to approach the delicious smelling delicacies.

“I suggest caution, young masters: the biscuits are really hot.”

He had brought also tea for the ladies and hot chocolate for the boys wanting to ease their agony. Since he couldn’t do the same with his own agony…His heart beat fast wondering where his young master was and in what state.

“Alfred, you should have told me to help you” Ms. Turner said.

Ms. Todd looked at him.

“Yes.”

Alfred smiled.

“You are so kind, my ladies yet it is my pleasure to take care of all of you.”

The door’s bell wasn’t a surprise for Alfred because when he was ready to bring the tray in the living room he had seen in the rectangular control panel on the kitchen’s wall that Leslie had just passed the gates. Of course the fact that she came here this time of the day was a surprise itself.

He walked calm to the door with a faint grin for the boys’ efforts to keep Hero away from the cinnamon biscuits. The kitten was restless all day from his human’s absence and he didn’t touch the treats the boys were giving him but now the cinnamon biscuits reminded him of Bruce so surged to them.
Leslie’s face as he opened the door was grim and Alfred frowned but before he asked what happened Thomas Elliot came to the fore pointing his gun at Alfred.

“I’m sorry, Alfred…” Leslie said. “They hold my patients hostage…”

“I do understand, Leslie” Alfred replied calm.

“Move inside, Alfred” Elliot said calm but firm, his finger tensing on the trigger.

Alfred nodded and moved backwards. Bruce was right to be cautious of Dr. Elliot; his young master had given the police evidence that Elliot was the one who gave the video to the hacker but it was obvious that he managed to evade arrest due to the riots. Alfred wasn’t afraid for his life but for the people inside.

Elliot didn’t close the door and Alfred narrowed his eyes exchanging a quick glance with Leslie who bit her lip. He had his answer when a bizarre nurse jumped in.

“Nurse Joker at youuuuuur seeeeervice” the gruesome nurse said with a Cheshire smile.

Now Elliot closed the door and along with Joker moved their weapons to urge them inside.

The people in the living room turned to see the visitor Alfred brought but gaped at the spectacle of the armed men. The boys made to move but Elliot aimed at them.

“Easy, brats!”

Hero hissed with his fur standing on edge and Dick hastened to hug him to stop the kitten before enraging their captors. Joker laughed.

“My faaaaaavorite kitten! Where’s your master, kitty?”

Thomas nodded and stared at Alfred.

“That’s the question of the day, Alfred. Where’s Brucie? It’s time I finish my matters with him.”

Alfred stared at him nonchalant.

“I don’t regret to inform you, sir, that Master Bruce isn’t here” he answered in his strict butler way with a dose of sarcasm added.

Elliot gritted his teeth annoyed from the news and Alfred’s attitude.

“Liar!” he said and touched his gun’s barrel to Alfred’s chest. “You say that to save him! All the time protecting him! But not today! If you don’t tell me where he is I’ll kill you!”

Joker scratched the red hair of the wing.

“Oooooooouuuuu! The new one is gooood!” he said and threw his wing away revealing his still non-dyed hair. “Baaaaaad quality” he looked at the ladies. “Dooooon’t buy thiiiiis: Tooooooo itcyyyy” he mumbled as if sharing a secret.

“Leave him alone, ya dork!” Jason hissed to Elliot with clenched teeth and jerked on his feet; his mother doing the same afraid for her boy.

“Atatatata…” Joker said waving his firearm warningly at them.
“Alfred says the truth” Dick rose too, holding Hero in his arms. “Bruce isn’t here.”

Alfred regarded the frustrated, sweaty Elliot perfectly unruffled.

“Master Anthony took Master Bruce to a rehabilitation clinic in California to have him prepared for the operation.”

Leslie crossed her arms over the chest: she knew already that Bruce was away but Elliot wouldn’t have believed her even if she had told him.

“Thomas, you see that there’s no meaning to all this” she said calmly. “Make it stop before more people get hurt.”

Elliot was fuming; his breaths coming out like rasps. His plan was screwed and that made his hatred more heated.

“No problem then…I might not have the chance to kill the bastard but I’ll send him to where he belongs.”

Joker looked at him intrigued.

“He haaaaas potential…” he said arching his eyebrows.

Elliot smirked.

“I might not have the chance to kill him but I’ll kill all of you.”

Superman saw the half mile long walls of the Mannheim’s facilities’ horizontal Π collapsing creating an enormous cloud of dust and an huge pile of debris. Despite the dust Superman’s vision enabled him to see what was surging out of the building.

His eyes narrowed: more than half a million Parademons, half of them flying and half of them on foot. But the worst was what was coming behind them: at least one hundred gigantic statues made from metal that shone in the sun. They were fast and their hands were actually canons. Their bodies were sculptured in detail with sharp edges protruding from everywhere; their heads were skeleton-like but their jaws were covered from metallic long, curvy horns that Superman could detect that were small canons.

This huge army ran towards the battlefield to swallow Earth’s defenders.

He felt Ironman by his side; he was seeing what Superman did.

“I need take care of Darkseid” Tony said.

Superman nodded.

“I’ll stall them.”

However as soon as he ended his phrase something hot hit him square in the chest throwing him back; Superman clenched his fists to fight the pain and saw Bagdana glaring at him brandishing his sword a second before storming at him.

Ironman stopped in midair to help Superman sending his liquid ultra nitrogen to freeze the flaming demon who roared outraged. The center of Bagdana’s body lost its red-black color becoming an icy “Someone is paling…” Tony sneered and Superman found the chance to regain his breath.

Bagdana narrowed his cat-like eyes at Tony and jerked his body growling; Tony watched with widened eyes the progression of the ice stopping and then rapidly the fire ousting the ice; the demon’s body reinstated in its previous conditions.

“Ow!” Tony said making a fast manoeuvre to evade the fire wave Bagdana sent at him and set his systems to prepare everything Ironman had in nitrogen to hit again.

“Tony, leave!” Superman yelled because Tony had mentioned that he had to do something concerning Darkseid.

The Man of Steel blew with all his might icy air to hit the demon in the back the moment he was ready to slash Ironman with his enormous fire sword.

Bagdana jerked and turned to Superman indifferent to Ironman’s departure. His hatred for Superman made his flaming body glow more from heat. He smirked and two rows of pearly white teeth spit sparkles.

Clark stood before him glaring at him through narrowed eyes; his suit was burned in the chest but he didn’t care: that being made him hurt Bruce! He ruined everything! He blew again, the ice hitting Bagdana’s head, and surged at him, his eyes turning red.

Bagdana shook his head to shake off the ice and cackled roughly bending his head to bring his horns to stab the attacking Superman.

Yet Clark managed to grab the horns grunting from the burnings; if he was a human his hands would have been ashes now but still the pain was considerable. He put the pain aside and shook the horns trying to uproot them from the demon’s head.

Bagdana moved his sword to slash Superman’s belly; Clark took in the movement and raised his leg to kick the sword away still feeling the fire slicing him a second before the blade shattered.

Both opponents stood catching their breath. Superman’s belly ached but at least he broke the demon’s sword. As if Bagdana had read his mind a new sword emerged in his hand; the demon grinned.

“You will die today, Kryptonian. You and every other on this planet! And Bruce will be mine eternally.”

Superman shook his head.

“That won’t happen” he spat.

Bagdana chuckled and Superman saw in front of him Bruce and Bagdana on the black cloud-mattress. The demon held Bruce’s wrists over his head, choking his every attempt to resist with hands sprouting from his body. The demon was savouring Bruce’s writhing body kissing, licking and fondling every bit while thrusting deep in him.

Superman’s eyes widened in terror and pain and Bagdana laughed.

“He surrendered to me to buy you time to flee…but I don’t give a damn about this because what you just saw was our third unification. And the third time is a binding spell: Bruce is eternally bound to “No!” Superman shouted and with his greatest speed he head butted the demon in the chest unbalancing him.

He began hammering him with his fists careless of the burnings on his skin.

Darkseid minced in the battlefield sending beams with his illuminated hands to kill Asgardians, his square face carved from a gleeful smirk.

Tony flew towards the blue giant shooting Parademons in his way; he wanted to reach close enough to have target but also be at a distance so that the alien wouldn’t kill him.

Suddenly, Loki was in front of him.

Darkseid found himself in front of Thor and Odin who blew at him simultaneously with their weapons; however the New God deflected their fire with his forearm and launched white beams from his eyes at them. The Asgardian gods managed to jump out of harm’s way and Darkseid spat furious. He called Bagdana with his mind.

The demon had shoved Superman off of him and downed his blade on his head but the Man of Steel caught it with both his hands putting all his strength to stop it before severing his head.

Bagdana heard Darkseid’s call in his head and growled frustrated kicking Superman in the guts before disappearing to reappear to his ally’s side.

“Devastate the planet with earthquakes and volcanoes” Darkseid said. “Add some tsunamis for the effect.”

Bagdana cocked an eyebrow.

“Gladly.”

“I ordered Parademons to attack the cities: Mr. Wayne might have evacuated major facilities but the cities are filled with apartment buildings.”

Darkseid smirked and shot his beams to Captain America growling frustrating when the human rolled on the ground avoiding the lethal force.

Superman stumbled on the air from Bagdana’s blows but fist his hands and stopped his falling; he controlled his breath: there were giant robots heading there.

He flew fast there and began blowing icy air to the first two robots he met making their legs freeze and break bringing down the enormous things. Yet he noticed that half of the flying aliens stopped and turned around heading away from the Frozen Basin.

“Now” Darkseid said to his demon sending laser with his hands to blow Asgardians “bring earthquakes and lava to humans: let’s give your pet something to remember and regret that he dared to provoke Darkseid’s wrath!”

Bagdana hesitated for some seconds but then determined ordered the elements of earth to bring destruction to the major cities.

“Odd earthquake activity is reported throughout the globe – it’s remarkable that the earth is shaking even in areas with no history of earthquakes; but what is stranger is the simultaneous eruptions of major and minor volcanoes…” the calm voice of CNN’s newscaster said.

Bruce brushed the turbo speed option on the Tumbler’s control panel casting glances at the screen with image from CNN. So Bagdana set in action his powers.

“Scientists, however, reassure that the phenomenon is rather smooth with earthquakes of small size and volcano eruptions that cause no worries. The authorities are talking about minor damages in buildings and a few citizens with superficial injuries”

Jor El’s hologram face appeared on the screen.

“Bagdana unleashed the elements – Fortress smoothed the effect.”

Bruce grinned satisfied.

“Thank you, Jor El.”

Bagdana knitted his eyebrows and Darkseid clenched his jaw.

“What?!” he barked.

“Something blocks my powers…something protects the earth…”

Darkseid roared.

“Your human did something, you useless demon!”

Bagdana pursed his lips and in his frustration launched more flames against the Valkyries crossing the battlefield like a golden stream of air.

“Still I can smash them single handed!” Darkseid roared. “They can’t diminish my strength!”

He clenched his fists.

“My power will eradicate New York even from here – nobody can stop me!”

He turned his eyes to the horizon towards New York.

Loki winked to Ironman.

“Now?”

Ironman armed both canons under his wrists and Loki stretched his arms towards Darkseid.

“Now!” Ironman said launching the gas that eliminated divine powers.

Loki did the same their combined quantities of compound gas hit the New God who grunted feeling that his strength wasn’t enough to hit a distant target.

“No!” he yelled and grounding his teeth turned to eradicate those who caused that to him.

“Time to ruuuuuun…” Loki said cocking an eyebrow and grabbed Ironman’s forearm vanishing both of them a second before Darkseid’s omega beams hit them.
Some bushes were turned into ashes instead and the New God frustrated from his enemies’ escape roared his anger causing landslides to the surrounding mountains.

“You will pay for these! Your petty tricks may have stopped me from wiping out the cities but my powers are enough to kill all of you and then clearing the human filth!”

“I love the arousal of escaping from the monster’s jaws!” Tony said when Loki made them reappear in the other edge of the battlefield.

Loki arched his eyebrows.

“Easy, kinky boy…don’t fuck us!”

Tony laughed and rushed where Superman was fighting the robots.

It was the first time in his life that Superman felt overwhelmed. His eyes were red sending continuously laser to the giant robots: he had figured that they were sensitive in the spot where their necks met the right shoulder and targeted there. Truly, once the laser hit there the giants collapsed and then Superman finished them off with his frozen blow that shattered the strange alloy they were made of.

Yet new robots kept coming from the premises and the flying Parademons shot at him taking advantage of his absorption with extinguishing the robots. The sun was doing a perfect work for him so the fire from Parademons didn’t harm him yet it was painful along with the wounds Bagdana made him.

But more painful was the realization that the legions of Parademons were heading towards his comrades to swallow them. Even some robots managed to pass him and the horrendous sound of their 5 tons’ mass implemented a creepy hue to the scenery.

Suddenly, as he was bombarding a robot with his fists, he heard the sound of metal crushing to the ground. He looked down curious.

Flash met his gaze and gave him the thumbs up grinning broadly. The speedster was so incredibly fast that made thousands spins around the robot’s feet in a second hitting the metal that melt causing the robot to collapse. At the same time Flash knocked out dozens of Parademons.

Superman smiled and launched his lasers against a flying Parademon that surged at Flash who was already feet away uprooting every Parademon in his path. An explosion to his right made Superman turn.

Ironman had brought down a robot. Both his shoulder canons still emitted smoke as he turned them to shoot at another robot.

The good thing was that as the robots fell down they crushed dozens of Parademons stabbing them to death with their spikes.

“Good job!” Superman yelled at Ironman punching two Parademons at once.

“We were prepared for the robots from Jor El’s logs” Tony said. “But they are too many…”

Superman saw the battlefield from above: Stark was right. In the wide battlefield, the powers of Earth were winning yet the aliens kept coming with Granny having taken the head leading them to charge. Also, Darkseid although weakened and unable to hit targets miles away, still was lethal in the battlefield.
“When he returns and finds all his loved ones slaughtered then his already cripple mind will collapse…I made already the beginning with that video: I bet Brucie had a major mental breakdown watching again Falcone giving him what he deserves…” Thomas Elliot laughed seeing the disgusted expressions of Ms. Turner and Todd. “And being haunted by the knowledge that everyone watched too…”

Hero hissed and jumped from Dick’s hands to stab his nails in Elliot’s face; he cursed and writhed to escape from the hissing kitten.

Joker armed his gun warning Alfred and Leslie who were ready to attack Thomas.

Finally, Elliot managed to throw the animal off of him.

“I’ll start with his stupid kitten then” he said and shot while Hero was still on air.

Dick jumped upwards, somersaulted in the air and caught the kitten dragging him away from the bullet.

Elliot’s eyes were now flashing with manic hatred shooting at the ‘flying’ boy but unable to find target. Dick landed outside the room protected from the wall but Elliot had already turned his attention elsewhere; he aimed at Alfred.

“You then…”

He made to press the trigger but a horrific pain in his wrist made him lose any control and the gun dropped down. Everyone saw a blade piercing Elliot’s wrist and the doctor’s eyes bulged more from shock than pain.

“Nooooot soooofast, buddy” Joker said with an ominous frown having thrown his firearm for two of his beloved blades. “That video was yours?” he asked losing his stuttering in his icy cold wrath.

“How are we supposed to follow something we don’t see, Miss Lane?”

Jimmy uttered the question that had been bothering him from the beginning. He was at the passenger seat troubled by the crazy speed Lois was driving her car.

Her eyes were fixed determined forwards.

“They flew towards the west borders of the state but there is no report of an emergency to the cities near the area: so what happens must be at the borders of the state.”

Jimmy crooked his mouth in disbelief and Lois cast him a glare.

“I’m an instinct reporter, kid!” she spat. “And you heard on the radio about the simultaneous earthquakes and volcano eruptions – something major is going on… Shit!”

She saw a black van that was positioned horizontally in the center of the street blocking her way. Three people were in front of the van staring at the approaching car. Lois lowered speed and finally stopped as the people came to them.

They were two men and a woman. Lois knew very well the one with the eye patch.
“Miss Lane” the Afro-American said.

“Agent Fury” S.H.I.E.L.D.’s presence here confirmed her hunch.

“I have to ask you to turn back.”

The reporter tapped her fingers on the steer wheel.

“Something big is happening” Lois said straight out. “The world must know.”

Fury shook his head.

“Now it’s not the time for exclusives and Pulitzers, Miss Lane. It’s better if the world doesn’t find out yet.”

Lois rolled her eyes and locked her gaze with Fury’s one eye.

“What if I promise that I won’t broadcast anything till it’s over?”

Fury laughed and Agent Carter stepped forward.

“You don’t expect us to trust a reporter…”

Lois smirked and stepped on the accelerator.

“I don’t need you too!” she said and steered the wheel to avoid the van’s mass and continued her way.

“Damn!” Fury cursed and ran to the van’s driver seat Maria Hill and Agent Carter following.

“She is Superman’s reporter” Hill said jumping inside “maybe we can trust her.”

Fury started the engine and instantly stepped on it.

“Lately we couldn’t trust even Superman himself…On the other side, even if we trust her, we must protect her.”

General Morrison was watching the frigate’s instruments avidly. The entire fleet was in red alert monitoring the entire planet being ready to act. Every airplane carrier had F-22s, Eurofighters, Rafales and Suckhoi’s with their engines ignited waiting for the order to act.

“General Morrison, targets are heading to New York, Washington, London, Moscow, Beijing and Tokyo” Pepper’s calm voice reached him from the control panel.

“We are ready for them, Miss Potts” he answered and his staff in front of the control panel and around the room began transmitting the news to the forces around the world. “All forces on them” he ordered as soon as the screen of the radar showed hostile dots approaching New York who was near them. “Intercept and destroy before they reach inhabited areas.”

Pepper informed the other military forces and the same order was given simultaneously from the commanders of the alliance’s warships all around the globe.
“Slaughter them all!” Granny shrieked leading the charging Parademons against the Earth’s protectors.

Dr. Strange conjured an enormous green shield blocking Bagdana’s wave of fire from hitting Hulk who was plummeting Parademons roaring and showing his teeth.

Bagdana pressed his lips frustrated and turned his fires on the wizard instead; Stephen moved his hands clock wise and immediately the shield that protected Hulk became blue waves that met the fire and quenched it. Then the wizard raised his hands leading the waves to attack the demon who set his sword’s blade to block the waves that were absorbed.

Dr. Strange didn’t have time to realize what happened when Bagdana jerked up his sword launching the wizard in the air to crush on the rocks. The demon send a fireball to finish the wizard as soon as he would hit the rocks and sure for his success walked away; he didn’t see Stephen’s cape stretching and drawing Dr. Strange far from the rocks. However the fireball was made to find and hit him so he saw the fire inches from his chest…

The Eye of Agamoto twitched and Stephen saw awed the medallion sucking the fireball.

Dr. Strange landed smoothly on his feet catching his breath for a second before using his hands to conjure green waves to blast Parademons.

Captain America sent his shield to shatter five Parademons at once while Natasha was firing at the rest. Suddenly, Steve felt heat and with the corner of his eye saw Darkseid launching his beams at him; Captain America fell on the ground to avoid the lethal beams yet Darkseid laughed as his beams adjusted to Captain’s new position.

Steve clenched his jaw ready to take the lethal blow but then the beams were deflected to hit elsewhere just burning his shoulder. The pain was horrible yet Steve was thankful he was alive; he saw a huge, pole like axe in the place where the beams were stopped.

The axe that seemed ancient changed course midair returning to its owner.

“Fight with someone at your size, Darkseid!” an imposing voice addressed the New God who glared at Odin.

The father of the Asgardians stood proud with his crystal gold armor shining blindingly and the horns of his helmet spitting sparkles like the axe he was holding.

Darkseid laughed.

“Odin! The old Viking God!” he pursed his lips and regarded Odin “You’re not of my size by the way” he laughed. “You must be ashamed for letting that human lure you and your people to your deaths. Did you fuck the human or he is only your son’s whore?” his rough voice was vibrating with scorn.

Odin’s face distorted in a grimace of rage.

“It’ll be my honor to terminate a deplorable being like you!”

Darkseid yanked his head back.

“Have it your way! Today you’ll lose more than your eye!”

The New God stormed against Odin with such speed that only a blur was visible yet the Asgardian was ready for him and as soon as he reached him his axe hammered Darkseid throwing him away.
Odin charged at him downing his weapon at his head yet Darkseid blocked the sparkling blade with his crossed forearms and kicked Odin in the stomach sending him away.

“First I’ll have fun with you and then I’ll finish you!” Darkseid cackled and surged against Odin who brought his axe at the New God’s upper arm. “It tinkles” he cackled though a black liquid slithered on his skin.

Odin punched him with the iron crowbar he pulled from his belt and Darkseid grunted from the pain:
he didn’t like to feel pain. He roared and jerked his forearm to hammer Odin’s head. The Asgardian dodged but Darkseid blew sending him away wrapped in glowing white chains.

“Time to end this farce” he said and focused his eyes on the tied Asgardian launching his omega beams.

“Not my father, you bastard!” something deflected slightly the beams to miss Odin.

Odin turned to the voice and his eyes widened seeing Loki dressed in his green golden attire; his face had lost every humor in fierce determination that was highlighted by the golden horned helmet.

“Only I have the right to play with him, you giant, deformed Smurf” Loki spat and waved the golden spear he held sending silver rays at Darkseid.

The New God looked at him irritated and caught the rays casually with his hand.

“The god-clown! Nice! You’ll die together.”

He turned his deadly eyes to Loki but immediately jerked upwards feeling pain.

“You won’t kill anyone!” Thor roared and his Mjolnir spat blue thunders like his glaring eyes. “Loki, take father away.”

Darkseid smirked and without a word moved his palm upwards sending a red wave at Thor who blocked it with Mjolnir though he felt his hammer heating and vibrating. He grunted from the power he had to sustain but in the end he managed to raise Mjolnir to send the wave Darkseid sent, back to him.

Darkseid laughed and absorbed the wave with his hand.

“You, Asgardians, are so weak…” he cackled. “So weak and worthless that I won’t waste more time playing…” his red eyes became flames and the white omega beams surged at Thor who dodged them firing thunders with Mjolnir.

Darkseid took the s on his forearm and sent them back at Thor who stumbled which gave Darkseid the chance to launch the omega beams again sure this time that the god wouldn’t manage to escape them.

Something flashed gold in the air and the beams were scattered at the same time that a loud bang made the battlefield shake and Darkseid to be shove ten feet away staggering. He frowned seeing a woman dressed in ancient armor pulling her sword out of the holster on her right thigh and charging at him with her eyes flashing.

The force of the bracelets explosion had let Darkseid breathless and now Thor joined Diana coming at him. The New God narrowed his eyes shaken for the first time; he was weakened and their weapons could disable him.
Diana’s sword descended rapidly at Darkseid’s neck as Mjolnir moved to smash his head. Darkseid goggled ready for the pain.

But then their weapons found only air.

Darkseid looked around him puzzled. Bagdana smirked at him letting go of the god’s upper arms.

“Diabolus ex machina” he said sarcastic. “Just to see that I’m useful” he added and raised his sword to stab it in the ground making the entire area to shake with a nightmarish sound.

Elliot grunted.

“Of course, you idiot! It cost me a small fortune to buy it from that pedophile but it deserved every cent: I spent many nights devouring little Bruce’s cries and screams; his sobs; his begging for mercy…and then I realized that this treasure shouldn’t be held secret: everyone should share that qualifying spectacle and of course, dear Brucie who suddenly forgot who he truly was and was posing as a prince. I found out that Isaac was a hacker when he hacked the logs of Metropolis General Hospital exposing the plastic surgery of a celebrity. I sent him the DVD saying that it would shake Gotham’s upper class and I bet he didn’t even watch it before broadcasting the content through the hacked GTV’s signal.”

Joker’s face was rapidly changing listening to Elliot and in the end his green eyes had become so grim that they seemed black. His teeth were visible as his mouth had opened like a famished tiger’s looking at his pray.

“Bastard!” he shouted and sent his one of his blades at Elliot’s already wounded arm; however this time the doctor avoided it. “I’ll reap you in pieces, you sick motherfucker!” he growled throwing away readying his other blade.

But Elliot grabbed Alfred and put him in front of him as a shield and walked backwards towards the main exit.

Police sirens filled the Manor immediately as tires’ screeching grazed everyone’s ears.

“Surrender” Gordon’s calm but firm voice echoed through the megaphone. “The Manor and Grounds are surrounded.”

But Joker didn’t care; he had followed Elliot staring at him with the predator’s glee playing his blades between his hands.

“Do you think that the Jeeves will stop me from butchering you?” he tilted his head on the side. “As if I care whether he dies…”

“Leave Al out of this, ya freaks!”

Elliot and Alfred were startled – Joker so absorbed in his rage that not even registered the voice or the words. Something fell with force on Elliot who staggered losing Alfred from his one hand grip. Jason grabbed the butler and dragged him away from them bringing him down behind the big arch that led to the interior.

Joker jumped on Elliot with blood on his eyes.

The front door broke open and officers with stretched guns swarmed the foyer.
“Freeze!” several voices ordered.

Joker stranded in his own world of hatred focused on Elliot’s perfect tanned face; his sarcastic, arrogant eyes made Joker’s head hot picturing that asshole masturbating watching his Brucie being desecrated. His blades danced in the air scratching countless times the man’s face. His hands were moving even with several hands holding them trying to take him off the doctor.

Finally, a hit on the head knocked him out. Elliot was covered in blood yet his eyes were looking the officers being occupied with handcuffing Joker.

He clenched his jaw and grabbed one of Joker’s blades.

“You won’t catch me” he said and jumped through the door doddering.

Gordon and Montoya were at the landing step with their guns pointing at him but Elliot’s mania was such that he pushed both of them and jumped from the side of the stairs.

“Dr. Elliot, let down the blade and raise your hands” Montoya said.

“You need hospital, son” Gordon said trying to reason with him.

Yet Elliot spat at them with his eyes shining crazily.

“Never, you fools!” he got up and rushed at the police cars that swarmed the place.

Several guns fired at him but he rolled on the ground getting only scratched by them. However Montoya’s bullet found his left leg; Elliot with mania fueling his suffering body while still on the ground surged at the legs of the first officer he saw. He stabbed him several times and got in the car, turning the engine on and accelerating.

“Follow him!” Gordon ordered his men who immediately began chasing the car.

“The authorities report minor damages in buildings from the earthquakes, Mister Wayne” Lucius’ voice echoed through the communication system of the Tumbler. “Darksied’s troops fly towards big cities around the globe yet the military sequences transmit that fighters have engaged in air-battle with them and the situation seems to be under control. However from Mannheim facilities more forces are heading towards the battlefield and from the traces there are not only Parademons but entities much bigger.”

Batman nodded.

“Thank you, Lucius; I’m almost there.”

A long pause from the other side.

“Mr. Wayne, are you sure about this? I mean, you have already done too much…”

Batman pressed his lips.

“Lucius, I understand your concern but I can’t stay away.”

Bruce could picture Lucius pursing his lips in defeat.

“Good luck, Mr. Wayne.”
“Thank you, Lucius.”

Even without the Tumbler’s spotting systems he could see from the windshield the dust and the sparkles of weapons over the location of the battle: flying spots indicated creatures engaged in fist fighting or duelling.

“The finest military aircrafts the globe has to offer are fighting with unidentified flying objects throughout the planet; the Pentagon announced that it is included in the scenario of the Training Day. Japan, China, Russia and EU are making similar announcements.”

Lois smirked at her radio.

“Training scenario, my ass!” she spat casting glances at the mirror to the dust behind her that signalled Fury’s coming.

Jimmy out of breath looked at her.

“What is it, Miss Lois?”

“Something big” she answered “and we are heading to its routes.”

Catwoman landed on her feet in the middle of a cluster of Parademons; as soon as her feet touched the ground she jerked her leg in a round kick unbalancing the aliens; they didn’t manage to realize what had happened and Catwoman raked them with the firearms she held in both hands.

Her wild eyes caught few feet to her right Steve fighting along with Natasha against far too many enemies. Natasha’s face was dirty and slashed as her uniformed yet Steve’s right arm was drenched in blood and he hardly moved it using his shield with the left.

Both of them were tired but kept fighting. Catwoman felt her chest aching and set her jaw speeding there shooting with both hands on her way to them.

As soon as the Parademons were down Catwoman regarded the two Avengers.

“Captain, maybe it’s better if you left the field.”

“No way” he said and sent his shield like a discus to decapitate two Parademons at once.

But then the ground shook so much that they staggered fighting to remain up.

Darkseid watched satisfied as the new forces surged the battlefield; they were fewer than he expected because Superman, Flash and Ironman had intercepted them. Yet they were still too many.

“No robots though” Bagdana said thoughtful. “And though they are more in quantity they will manage to eliminate them.”

Darkseid grinned.

“I don’t think so…” he turned his eyes to his facilities.

Superman was hammering a flying Parademon with his fists when he heard the sound: the facilities were vomiting again…His chest clenched as the area shook from thousands feet, some of them way heavier than the most. Superman closed for a second his eyes discouraged: more robots!

There was a horrific sound of thousand winds scratching the sky as more flying Parademons bigger this time swarmed the sky shadowing the sun.

His eyes met Ironman’s lenses. The latter had heard the same

“It’s far too many…” Stark mumbled.

Elliot knew Palisades like the back of his hand especially the secluded places where he took refuge whenever he wanted to escape his awful parents; he could hear the sirens following him and his heart beat like crazy.

He could escape all these fools. This turn of the road would take him to the rural road: it wasn’t even asphalted covered with branches and bushes and would lead him away from the cops.

Indeed, as he took the turn for a mile nobody followed him. He smirked satisfied and looked at the ocean down of the cliff.

Once they were playing: he, Brucie and other boys – he was no more than 10 and Brucie was 7. He had persuaded Brucie to follow him here – the brat was so naïve and stupid! Young Thomas had planned perfectly: he would have pushed Brucie off the cliff and then would have run back to the adults crying saying that he tried to pull Bruce but he let his hand. He had already scratched his arms and torn his pants to prove that he tried hard. Brucie stood there watching the sharp rocks underneath and the wild waves: the raging wind would make his job easier.

He approached the brat ready to give him just a tiny push: Brucie was short and lean, so fragile…

But then…

“Bruce, where are you, you brat?!”

Brucie turned around grinning excited and ran to the other side.

“Tony, here!”

He gritted his teeth…his breath was labored and his head light. Yet he had to be careful because that road was dangerous and he was dizzy… His stabbed hand gave him hell and he slowly was realizing the wound in his leg...

Suddenly his ears were attacked by sirens! They were again at his tail. The sweat dripped from his forehead to his eyes; no, it wasn’t sweat. His face ached as hell…the steer wheel was slipping from his sweaty hand…He turned to see where the police cars were…They were near…

He stepped on the accelerator and made to maneuver the steer wheel to take the turn…but then he saw his face on the mirror: a horribly disfigured face covered by dozens of slashes that reaped his nose and lips…a monster! The steer wheel slipped from his hand and he tried to move his other hand to catch it…to no avail…

Elliot felt the car leaving the ground…he felt the void…the waves and the rocks coming to him…

Batman had the central screen on the Tumbler’s control panel showing the Mannheim’s facilities. He saw the remaining building collapsing leaving only a central square room made of thick titanium. Robots and Parademons both on the ground and in the air swarmed the area running to slaughter the heroes. Apokolips vomited its filth to wipe Earth from the universe.

Batman set his jaw.

“Not in my day, Darkside!”

He pressed the red button on the top of a tiny stick he held.

“You see what I do?” Ironman mumbled to Superman and fired with his palm laser at a charging Parademon “we’re talking here, dude!” he exclaimed at the alien encouraged from the spectacle.

His systems enabled him to see what Superman was seeing with his long distance sight. A hundred explosions at once blew up the giant robots sending their burning pieces to hit the Parademons both in the air and the ground.

“How?” Superman asked awed.

“Sir” Jarvis’ happy voice said “Batman is here.”

“Batman” Tony said but Superman had already heard the Tumbler and his heart beat faster with new energy.

Bruce…he thought torn between happiness and fear.

“Attack Hulk!” Granny yelled at her troops that swarm the giant hitting him all together from different ankles.

The giant roared annoyed and began bombarding his attackers but Granny taking advantage of his preoccupation turned her firearms at him. Hulk’s hide might have been durable to Parademon’s bullets yet there were many scratches all over his skin and Granny knew that her fire power was stronger than that of her minions.

She was ready to fire when something kicked both her arms shoving away the firearms. Granny grunted angry and saw the Amazon Princess landing before her stabbing her with her blue eyes.

“You have done enough” Diana said.

“You’re not the one to tell that” Granny shrieked firing at her with both firearms raking the Amazon’s entire body.

Diana rolled over the ground using her shield to protect herself and then jumped upwards holding the shield in front of her and with the other hand brandished her sword at Granny.

Darkseid’s lieutenant dodged the sword and pulled her own twisted dagger to stab the Amazon.

Diana stopped the dagger with her sword; but the Granny was strong pushing Diana’s sword to bend the Amazon’s hand. Their faces were close. Diana yanked her head and butted Granny’s forehead shoving her enemy off her.

Granny staggered realizing that she had lost her dagger. Without losing her confidence she grabbed the shoulder of a Parademon who was fighting behind her and detached his blade arm.
She sniggered at Diana who charged at her lowering her sword to meet the blade. Granny managed to block the hit and freed her blade lifting it to slash the Amazon who made a twirl and stopped again the blade with her sword shattering Granny’s weapon.

Darkseid’s right hand growled and jumped on Diana plunging her teeth on her neck making blood spurt. Yet Diana grabbed her from the shoulders and kicked her away; she jumped on her feet but Granny had blended with the Parademons so Diana decided to focus her efforts elsewhere launching her tiara against the aliens who fought with Asgardians.

Darkseid towered everyone in the center of the battlefield slaughtering Asgardians and Valkyries. Bagdana was doing the same to the other side of the field. The New God knew that his army was enough to swallow the heroes and by eliminating the Asgardian army he would let them alone to face his wrath. He had already injured Odin and Captain America and he was aware that the landslide he and Bagdana’s earthquake caused rocks to fall and disable many Asgardians.

The Earth’s powers were running thin…But then something echoed throughout the Basin and Darkseid frowned.

Diana fighting with her sword smiled hearing that sound: the horns of Themyscira. Ten thousand Amazons had just emerged from the container that was stationed in the roots of the mountain and now raided fast to the battle. In their head was Antiope followed first by the Amazon archers who shot their arrows riding their proud horses and after them the Amazon hoplites who began killing Parademons as soon as they reached the battle.

“I always enjoy seeing ladies coming to rescue me but today even more” Tony said.

Darkseid’s grim stare met Bagdana’s in the other end of the battle. But he disregarded his ally to do what he knew best: manipulating people by controlling their minds. He concentrated: if he managed to control them the battle would end. But he was met with a strong block as a few hours ago…That strange wizard and Loki must have shielded the fighters’ minds.

Bagdana sensed his upset.

”What?”

”Nothing! My robot giants are coming; they will smash them” but to his utter shock only Parademons came from his facilities. “Who did that?” he roared turning his inner sight there to see finding only the parts of his robots scattered.

Bagdana frowned; he could hear the sound of a familiar vehicle.

“No…” he whispered. “Bruce, you shouldn’t have come…”

Batman used the front and back canons of the Tumbler that usually threw gas or smoke bombs to shoot with real bullets the aliens.

Thor smiled hearing the roar of the vehicle and downed Mjolnir on the ground causing the soil to crack swallowing every alien it met.

“I told you that there was something big” Lois said to Jimmy as they watched the spectacle squatted behind a bundle of rocks at a safe distance. “Shoot!”

She cocked her eyebrows regarding the view: flying strange creatures fought with what Lois recognized from Mythology books as Valkyries; their wings slicing the air and hiding the sun’s light. On the ground, what must be Asgardians were engaged in fight with the creatures. Hulk was doing his usual devastation and though she couldn’t see them Lois knew that the rest of the Avengers and Diana with Catwoman were there too. Amazons on horses and on foot joined the battle howling their war cries.

She gaped seeing two gigantic forms in the two edges of the battle. Lois had seen a lot yet this spectacle made her chest clench. The one was a blue giant who fired death with his hands and eyes. The other was a smaller horned giant with a body of fire brandishing his blazing sword at the defenders of the Earth: definitely, a demon. Lois grim mood was lightened seeing Ironman attacking the demon backed from a man in a burgundy cape who made shields and rays with his hands.

“Superman!” Jimmy exclaimed and Lois looked there finally feeling proud again for her friend: Bruce was right.

Fury and his comrades looked from the van’s windshield the battle in front of them; he turned at his agents and as if reading each other’s minds they drew simultaneously their firearms from the back of the van and jumped out.

“Time to join the party!” the rough veteran said and ran to the battle.

Darkseid squinted at the black tank like vehicle that crossed the battlefield spreading death to his minions.

“I don’t know how you did it but I’m sure it was you!” he hissed and stormed towards the car.

Bagdana saw his ally and made to follow but a clot of Asgardians fighting Parademons thwarted him; he vanished to avoid them but upon re-materializing a Valkyrie shrieking struck him with her spear-like wide blade. The demon might have not being hurt but he acknowledged the pain; he grunted and grounding his teeth sent fireballs with his hand to burn the Valkyrie who managed to dodge the deadly fire that churned the edges of her raven hair.

The demon didn’t have time and didn’t care to finish off the Valkyrie. He didn’t care for the Parademons that were massacred by Amazons and Asgardians; and he was sure that right now even Darkseid didn’t care.

Darkseid focused his eyes on the moving Tumbler and raised his hands jerking them to send blue waves to hit the vehicle.

Bruce saw in the Tumbler’s panel the fire heading against the car and turned the wheel to avoid.

“You can run but you can’t hide, human!” Darkseid said and his fisted hands flashed with white energy, stronger this time, ready to strike again.

But as he was ready to launch his fire, a force tackled him.

“Enough already” Superman said angry and punched Darkseid in the face hitting him simultaneously with his laser vision.

The New God roared annoyed and jerked his arm pushing the Man of Steel off of him, his heated hand burning Superman’s attire in the back.
It ached yet Superman turned around and blew at Darkseid unbalancing him. He surged at him, his red eyes firing laser that – to Darkseid’s utter disbelief – charred his blue chest; and before Darkseid overcame the shock from the burning Clark began hammering his guts with everything he had.

The New God roared furious and grabbed Superman from the neck, his red eyes meeting the Kryptonians.

“Time to finish this” he hissed and his eyes became fires ready to throw out omega beams.

“You’re mad at me not him!” a growl startled Darkseid who frowned and threw Superman away turning around.

Batman was scowling at him completely unfazed by the God’s gigantic form.

Darkseid’s face shadowed by the nasty surprises of the day was carved by a broad grin.

“You destroyed my robots; you weaved an ingenious trap around me but you won’t win. I won’t kill you right now…you will experience the destiny of your race…because you and your friends might have managed to cause some damage to my army but I haven’t used my ultimate weapon yet” he shook his head. “My Female Furies are heading to earth; they would have been here for my attack in two days but you took me by surprise. Well done, human!” he snorted. “Now you’ll see Darkseid’s real power!”

Batman glared at him unfazed. Darkseid’s had set an invisible wall around them keeping everyone out. The New God jerked his head.

“Feel your failure as my machine will suffocate humans!”

A loud bang as if a bomb of hundred megatons had exploded made everyone in the field freeze awestruck. The heroes looked around ready for the worst: everyone knew that Darkseid’s machine had been activated. The super powered heroes looked scared at their human friends…

But to their relief none of the humans was affected in any way. On the contrary, the Parademons both in the ground and in the air began drying as if something sucked their existence, shrinking till only ashes filled their spots.

Darkseid’s eyes bulged as he looked around him his entire army being simultaneously turned to ashes. He could sense that his machine, his pride, was destroyed and most of all he felt weak.

“What have you done, human?!” he roared.

Batman yanked his head.

“Your Anti Life Machine was programmed to suck the energy of the beings whose DNA was in its system.”

Darkseid’s brow furrowed.

“You made Luthor assemble its parts so that the human DNA would be in the Machine’s memory programming it to absorb human energy and qualities. What if I put in the Machine’s control system the DNA of your people? Of your army?”

Batman slipped inside the Mannheim facilities using the ventilation pipes. Thanks to Tony’s tracking system he knew exactly where the Machine was.

As he crawled through the wide pipes he regarded the premises: he frowned. In the vast space there were at least one hundred giant robots.

Batman slipped out of the pipe and brushed his armor on the wrist giving Tumbler the order to analyze these robots. In his wrist watch he saw the result of the analysis: the robots’ control was in the point where the neck met the right shoulder; also, their legs were sensitive at the knee joint.

He pressed his lips. This was a delay for his schedule: he intended to finish with the Machine and then head to Mannheim’s Mansion to free Superman. But now he couldn’t let this threat like this neither he could destroy them right now because his plan would be revealed.

Thankfully, his belt was always packed with explosives. It took him an hour but he planted the bombs to the robots’ vulnerable spots: now when Darkseid would send them to fight, Batman would have just to press the trigger. He would inform Lucius and give him instructions to blow them up before they reach the battle if Batman wouldn’t be able to do it.

He slipped again into the pipe heading to the compartment where the Machine was. The facilities were heavily guarded outside but inside Darkseid didn’t want his security people getting a glimpse of what he stashed there.

The Machine was in the middle of the space on a short, square pedestal. It was like a huge cube reaching the ceiling. The Machine gave the impression of being alive as it vibrated; its vibrations made the hieroglyphics all over its surface shine gold in contrast with its black color.

Batman stared at it intrigued but then pulled out of his belt’s compartment the tablet Lucius gave him with the Parademons’ genetic code as they had extracted from their remnants after the attack in Thasos. Lucius had explained to him in detail the structure of the Machine so he knew where to slip in the tablet…

Tony’s eyes shone with realization seeing Parademons being exterminated like this after the Machine’s activation. His mind went back to his discussion with Bruce in the cave.

Bruce pressed a key and in the central screen images of Darkseid’s parademons came to the fore.

“They’re called Parademons – thankfully, Jor El has a lot of material for Darkseid. And we have also samples of his soldiers’ DNA” Bruce said. “When they attacked me, Ivy took good care to vanish any trace yet during their assault they had grabbed me so I had some of their DNA on me and also when she blew them up some of their remains were scattered to the clearing. I gathered them and gave them to Lucius.”

A wicked smile carved Tony’s features.

“Then those Parademons would not know what hit them…I can make our weapons able to kill them easily.”

Bruce rubbed his chin and it was clear that an idea had popped in his mind. Tony narrowed his eyes understanding.

“What are you thinking?”

“I’ll tell you but not now…”
Bruce hadn’t told him: it kept his intention as a surprise, a nice one.

Darkseid’s nostrils flared emitting sparkles. Without saying anything he yanked his head and Batman was tossed to the air crashing on the rocks at the other end of the battlefield.

Bruce felt his back crying in pain; his head having bumped to the stone was spinning and his eyes darkened. He made to support himself on his hands but the fatigue and the pain made him abandon the effort.

Bruce saw a blur coming at him and Darkseid appeared in front of him; he glared at Batman.

“I won’t let a human brag that he defeated Darkseid” he hissed and his eyes became fires ready to launch omega beams.

Everyone saw Darkseid hitting Bruce and immediately after relocating them rushed there. Superman, Thor, Odin, Loki, Diana, Ironman and Flash saw the omega beams leaving Darkseid’s eyes targeting Bruce; even if they hit the God the beams were already on their way.

A red waving shield emerged in front of Batman blocking the beams, Dr. Strange’s emerged suddenly; he had his long fingers opened forming the shield.

As if they were connected Superman launched his laser vision, Diana crushed her bracelets together, Thor brandished Mjolnir creating thunders, Odin threw his axe, Loki jerked his hands firing his power and Ironman set in motion every weapon he had gritting his teeth. Flash with his ultimate speed ran around the New God creating energy that unbalanced the fierce being.

Every power they had hit the New God whose face distorted in rage at the ultimate shock of being defeated; he roared fading taking along Granny Goodness.

Dr. Strange’s eyes widened seeing his shield cracking; Darkseid at his final moments put all his remaining power to his omega beams. The doctor’s guts formed a painful knot seeing the beams shattering the shield rushing at Batman.

“No!” Catwoman cried and jerked to run there but Steve hugged her.

Bruce stared at the white, icy cold beams seconds before they hit him.

Something stopped the beams…Hulk rushed at Darkseid’s fading body and punched the God wiping him out at once.

In front of Bruce lay a massive body that had collapsed on the ground. Batman crawled.

A huge burning was all over the being’s chest. Everyone’s eyes were there but Bruce didn’t feel them: he felt as if he was alone – everything had ceased to exist. He slipped his hands under Bagdana’s head and raised it slightly. The demon had taken his granite human-like form; his body’s size wasn’t gigantic anymore.

The demon smiled to him and something dark slithered from his lips.

“It’s ridiculous for a demon to die like this” he laughed. “For love…but I would have done it again… for you…”

Bruce felt the lenses hurting his eyes; he deactivated them and Bagdana’s yellow eyes filled with gratitude.

“These eyes… I want to take with me…”

“You shouldn’t have done this…” Bruce mumbled.

Bagdana shook his head grunting from pain.

“You’re sorry for me?” he narrowed his eyes. “After everything I have done to you? You’re an angel, indeed; and angels should not be crying for demons…” he frowned. “Tears for a demon?” he raised his hand and touched with his fingertips the tears. “In my millions of life I never found purest diamonds than these…” he grinned “so is there something in your heart even for me?”

Bruce bit his lips.

“You are a demon…yet there is good in you and… love…”

Bagdana gulped trying to breathe.

“No…no, my precious human child…you were right…I don’t know what love is…” he snorted “even now… I acted from selfishness” he laughed but then he was choked by his cough and sobered locking eyes with Bruce. “I couldn’t… spend another eternity reliving the death of my love… grieving… feeling my guts jerking from pain… cursing myself for not saving you… again…” he closed his eyes, inhaling with difficulty; his fingertips touched Batman’s exposed jaw grinning happy. “Maybe in another lifetime, I won’t be a demon and I’ll manage to earn your heart. Goodbye, my love…” he moved his head and touched his lips to Batman’s gloved hand.

In front of everyone’s still eyes the demon evaporated from Batman’s arms.

Bruce’s eyes were blank; his arms paralyzed; his entire existence was frozen. He remained like this for a few moments but then he remembered where he was. He gathered his quivering stamina and stood.

His body ached and last month’s effort rotted his every cell. His head was spinning and his eyes were dim. If only he could reach the Tumbler and leave without his friends realizing his state…

He walked passing the rocks, the others still too shocked to approach; the rock was tall enough to hide him from them. But then he heard a second pair of feet behind him.

“You just saved the world, buddy…” Tony said touched and from his voice Bruce knew that he had deactivated the face plate.

“All of you did that…” he growled without turning to look at him and continued his way to the Tumbler numb from what just happened.

But then he heard another pair of feet running there; he had to hurry. Suddenly, his legs stopped moving; neither his armor’s system nor his mind power could force them. Not that Bruce wanted to make his mind work… he felt drained without any energy or will to try. His head drummed violently and his eyes shut abruptly.

And he was falling…

The last thing he heard was Ironman rushing to him.

Catwoman saw Tony grabbing Batman before hitting the ground and immediately taking off.
Chapter 90

Chapter Notes

It was supposed to be one last chapter but when I finished it was too lengthy; so I decided to split it. I hope you'll like it.

“You must take me to Batman. That demon might have shielded him getting the omega beams saving his life but still Batman was subjected to the beams’ radiation range.”

Dr. Stephen Strange walked vividly the corridor of the clinic facilities that they were situated outside Gotham in a very secluded location and naturally he had never seen before: every now and then he glanced around which said to him that this building was brand new – it didn’t have even a sign with its name; yet it was pristine, built and equipped with the latest medical technology. There were nurses passing by but no patient sign that the clinic wasn’t yet opened to the public.

He was still in his Dr. Strange attire, the burgundy cape, floating behind him; his face still bore the dirt and scratches of the battle.

At his side, Tony Stark walked heavily dressed in jeans and a T-shirt that didn’t look his at all. The billionaire didn’t reply continuing his overall silence that was so unlike him. Ironman had come to the Avengers’ Tower two hours after the battle ended and asked him to follow without further explanation. Stark’s face was grim and his usually bright eyes were shadowed.

Stephen huffed: he couldn’t understand Stark’s bad mood – they had won the battle, Darkseid was no longer a threat for earth and both Peppers and Bruce was safe: the former coordinating the operation from the Tower and the latter in a secure place where Stark had taken him before the battle.

“Tony, we have to find Batman…” he insisted “I know the man treasures his secrets but I think he might be infected by Darkseid’s Anti energy.”

The billionaire stopped in front of a door; Stephen realized that the sector they were crossing till now was empty except than this room, situated at the far end. Tony opened the door.

“…and then Dick made some jumps in the air…”

“Somersaults, Jay.”

“Who cares how the hell they’re named. So he made these ‘springsaults’ and grabbed Hero in the air before the bullet hit ‘im. He was fuckin’ awsome!”

“And Jay…Elliot had dragged Alfred as a shield and Joker was ready to attack both of them. But Jay jumped on Elliot and took Alfred from him and away.”

Stephen’s eyes widened. In front of him, a hospital bed; in the right side two boys were leaning eagerly over the bed. In the right, a young woman sat in a chair and watched pale and silent. A kitten was curled on the chest of the man on the bed licking his chin and purring loudly. Alfred stood over his head; it was clear that the butler was tired and spent while his worried eyes searched avidly his young master’s face.
Bruce’s face had a broad smile on that made his eyes shine looking at the babbling boys. Yet Dr. Strange could discern exhaustion and pain well hidden in the depths of those eyes.

“Both of you are so brave” he said. “Thank you for everything.”

He was more than pale, ashen, with black bags under his eyes. A thin tube was connected to his nose to assist his respiration; his hands were placed on the mattress looking like forgotten or paralyzed with the IV stuck in the right arm. The usual gadgets for monitoring his condition were attached to his body transmitting data to what was definitely a monitor device though he hadn’t seen something like this ever again.

“Bruce is the Batman…” Stephen uttered the thought that fell like a thunder in his mind; he looked at Tony who pressed his lips. “I should have figured out…but…how could he?” he shook his head clenching his forehead, trying to connect the image of the defiant, radiating power and confidence Batman facing the blue giant in the frozen basin with the disabled Bruce Wayne. Of course, Bruce was more than strong in his own way, endowed with willpower Stephen never met before. But…

Tony nodded as if reading his thoughts.

“No, you couldn’t have figured. Lucius and I manufactured for him a new armor with advanced exoskeleton technology that allowed him to walk and fight” there was some regret in his bloodshot eyes.

Bruce’s smiling eyes turned to Dr. Strange and Tony.

“Welcome, Dr. Strange” he said and even though he tried to sound casual the doctor sensed again the man’s fatigue; Stephen cocked an eyebrow: how it could be otherwise? A man stuck in a wheelchair doing all these and saving the world…

Tony gestured to him and they approached. Stephen noticed that the young woman with the long ponytail was holding Bruce’s hand and her eyes were focused on his face, worry etched in her features. Bruce smiled to her reassuringly trying valiantly to seem unscathed.

Stephen studied immediately his patient’s vitals on the screen realizing that everything was too low, hardly at normal levels. Of course, the organism was over-exerted. It was a miracle he hadn’t collapsed entirely. And his temperature was too high. He frowned and touched Bruce’s forehead to reaffirm his suspicion: in contrast with what the indicator said, the man was frozen. But in the screen was something else that made him an impression: Bruce was administered morphine. A lot of morphine.

Bruce sensed his doctor’s worry and turned to the boys.

“Dick, Jason, I think that now you should return to Gotham. Your grandmother and your mother must be waiting eagerly for you.”

It was obvious that he didn’t want the boys to hear what was to follow but the boys were reluctant.

“We can wait outside for you to finish” Dick said looking at the strange doctor understanding that they wanted to speak privately. “Right, Jay? We’ll wait and come whenever your doctor permits us.”

The younger boy nodded.

“'Course, man…” he added hopefully.

Bruce smiled to the boys however his overall weakness shadowed slightly his eyes. Alfred seeing that cleared his throat.

“I think that you should return to the city, young masters. It was a very eventful day” he added looking pointedly at the boys.

“I’ll drive the boys back to the Manor.”

Stephen turned and saw Lucius Fox who had been standing in a distance to let space for Bruce’s loved ones.

“Thank you, Lucius” Bruce said.

“Not mention it, Mr. Wayne” the loyal man grinned but his face was grim.

The boys were still hesitant.

“I’ll be here the next time you’ll come” he reassured them amused and caressed the kitten on his chest. “You’re a very brave kitten, you know? But you have to go with Dick and Jason now.”

Dick took the kitten but Hero grabbed Bruce’s robe not wanting to part with his human. Selina got up and took the kitten softly but determined.

“C’mon, Hero, don’t be afraid: I’ll be with him all the time” she said bringing the kitten’s nose to her face locking their eyes. “I’ll look after him for you.”

She kissed the kitten’s nose and gave him to Dick. Stephen noticed how tired her voice was.

The boys followed Lucius but every now and then turned to look back at Bruce who smiled. Upon opening the door, they came face to face with Leslie who was holding her medical board.

“You’re leaving? Good…You need some rest too, young men.”

Jason snorted.

“Not me…”

When the boys were out of the room and the door closed Bruce let his eyelids cover his eyes and took a deep breath.

“I asked them to stay in the Manor to be safe and they were almost killed…” he said feeling a sharp pain in his forehead.

Alfred touched his shoulder.

“It wasn’t your fault, Master Bruce. You informed the police but Thomas Elliot was devious and managed to escape.”

Bruce opened his eyes.

“Was?”

Leslie looked at him behind her rectangular glasses.

“He was injured by the Joker and the officers but he didn’t surrender; he drove his car in a frenzy state and at some point the bleeding must have blurred his sight and made him dizzy; he had followed the dangerous rural road over the cliff to escape the police but eventually he lost control of his car. He fell off the cliff.”

Bruce frowned.

“They didn’t look for him?”

“They pulled out his car but his body wasn’t there. You know how strong the streams are there: his corpse must have been carried away in the ocean.”

She registered frowned her patient’s sad look.

“He asked for it, Bruce.”

“Leslie is right, little guy” Tony said sitting in the chair next to the bed. “Just thinking that I was ready to trust that man with your surgery gets me nausea…” he shook his head exasperated. “I was so naïve and you were so right! Look what the asshole did! He injured Dr. Strange” he raised his eyes to Stephen “not you…. a Gothamite psychiatrist. Killed that cute littl’ nurse: Kelly, I think” Leslie nodded sad. “He killed an officer and stabbed another.”

Bruce licked his dry, busted lips.

“If I was there he might be alive now” he said dryly.

Tony blinked and cupped his face exasperated.

“You just saved seven billion people instead” Dr. Strange said firmly looking at him.

But Bruce met his gaze.

“All of you did that” he said with conviction.

“Stephen is right” Leslie spat strictly “now it’s time you finally think about yourself, young man.”

“Indeed, Master Bruce” Alfred said.

Selina nodded and Tony uncovered his face to stare at his friend. Bruce let his head roll at the side.

“Speaking of which” Stephen said pointing to the vitals’ screen “Bruce’s temperature is high but he actually is cold. As if he is burning inside.”

This made everyone except Bruce stare at the doctor. Leslie shook her head.

“Because he is actually burning” she said casually struggling to bury her despair catching with the corner of her eye Alfred’s distraught eyes.

She walked to Stephen and showed him the board she was holding; Stephen pursed his lips – it was the first time he was seeing something like this but on the other hand, when had someone else been ever before exposed to a New God’s omega beams?

“Are you gonna tell us or what?!?” Selina burst out unable to hold her agony anymore.

Leslie stared at her and nodded. It was admirable that the doctor seemed untouched by her adventure with Elliot.

“The energy casts that hold the parts of Bruce’s bones together are overheated and their temperature is increasing with time. Not to mention that Bruce was also hit directly by Darkseid’s power and crushed to a rock.”

Selina huffed and gulped while Alfred touched his young master’s shoulder.

Tony jerked up from his chair.

“What must be done?” he asked Leslie and Stephen who had crossed his arms over the chest and was studying the indications on the monitoring screen.

“The only solution is to perform the operation ASAP” Leslie said.

Stephen shook his head and gestured to the screen displaying Bruce’s vitals.

“His organism is utterly exhausted; his vitals aren’t sufficient even for the most common surgery moreover for a surgery as complex and demanding as this.”

Leslie fixed her eyes on her younger colleague.

“If we don’t perform the surgery then the casts will eventually…” she suddenly realized the finality of what was going to happen and she was bereft of energy to continue speaking.

Bruce straightened his head on the pillow and looked at them.

“I’m here, you know; and I’m the one to decide about the surgery” his voice was the non-nonsense, authoritative voice of Batman.

Both nodded and Bruce eyed them determined though he was sensing weakness sneakily overcoming his quivering stamina.

“The surgery will be performed” he said. “I’m the only responsible for my condition; it was my choice to act as I did knowing the consequences and I don’t regret it. So whatever’s the outcome of that operation, the fault is mine and nobody is going to be blamed for that.”

He felt his strength abandon him and the pain that till now was controlled to sufferable levels resurfacing confirming what Leslie had said. He met Selina’s worried stare; she was holding his hand and Bruce realized that she definitely knew how he was feeling.

“You’re frozen…” she said.

Alfred jolted upright.

“I’ll bring more blankets.”

Leslie glanced at Stephen in a stare filled with meaning that Bruce didn’t miss. He didn’t want them to panic; he raised his torso supported in his forearms.

“Alfred, it’s nothing” he tried to stop his butler who had already reached the wooden closet on the left “I’m not…”

But all of a sudden his strength evaporated and his elbows couldn’t support his torso; his heart began beating fast and his breath accelerated which unfortunately was revealed by the beeping of the monitor. Once again he lost any mood or power to struggle and collapsed back to the mattress. His head rolled on the pillow to the side and his body began shivering.

Leslie leaned on him and cupped his face.
“Are you in pain?”

He was but he didn’t want to scare them more; Stephen looked at his vitals on the monitor.

“It’s nothing, Leslie…” Bruce looked at Alfred who muffled him in a thick velvet blanket. “I’m tired and…I just want to sleep…”

Leslie nodded.

“Okay, sweetheart; I’ll sedate you so that your sleep is undisturbed.”

She rose and with Stephen decided how many mls of sedation to administer before Leslie touched the screen choosing the substance, the quantity and sending the drug directly to Bruce’s IV.

On other occasions Bruce would have refused to be sedated but now he felt grateful; this exhaustion was tormenting and his eyes ached but most of all, most bothersome of all, was the feeling of void inside him; the bitterness that covered everything else. He needed to escape.

“I’ll stay with you” Selina said.

“Me too, buddy” Tony added grasping Bruce’s hand.

He smiled.

“Both of you need to rest” he said “all of you actually” his eyes travelled from Alfred to Leslie to Stephen “it was a tough day for everyone…” his grin became broader “not to mention that it is creepy being asleep under someone’s stare…”

Saying that something crawled in his heart, something like a thorn that scratched the tender muscle… He remembered feeling two sparkling green eyes watching him avidly with adoration in the darkness while he was sleeping on the bed of a suite. He closed his eyes and let fatigue’s weakness and the sedative lead him to oblivion.

Alfred fixed better the blanket and finishing caressed his master’s hair letting his affectionate eyes linger on the youth’s face; Leslie touched his shoulder gesturing to follow them outside.

“You are giving him morphine” Stephen said to Leslie as soon as all of them entered the conference room at the other end of the corridor.

The room had comfy armchairs but nobody could sit down.

“Exactly. The highest permitted dosage” she said. “Having a burning fire in your bones is a pain that nobody can endure, moreover in the condition Bruce is.”

Dr. Strange rubbed his chin thoughtful.

“I doubt if even this quantity of morphine is enough; I wonder how he manages to not show any sign of pain.”

Selina shook her head and drank water from the bottle Tony gave her.

“Bruce is used to live in pain since he was a little boy. He learnt to bear his pain without protest, hiding most of it.”

Stephen closed his eyes and nodded: of course. And he was the Batman, a man fixed on a wheelchair who still managed to defeat Darkseid and save the planet.
“We must prepare for the surgery” Leslie said determined though she was scared inside. “The casts’ temperature is continuously increasing and in the end will kill him. We must remove the casts and put the implants performing the operation that we intended to do to restore his legs’ mobility.”

Tony ran his fingers through his disheveled hair.

“This surgery will need twelve hours…”

“Fourteen” Stephen corrected dryly “in the best case scenario.”

Tony rolled his eyes.

“Even worse! He is exhausted; he had spent the last drain of his stamina and strength to secure Darkseid’s defeat: how is he going to survive such a testing procedure so soon?”

Stephen licked his lips.

“We are faced with very grim possibilities and I don’t want to be the surgeon who killed Batman…” he snorted “or Bruce Wayne.”

Leslie yanked her head, locking eyes with Dr. Strange.

“You can always quit. I’ll understand… Maybe I would have done the same in your place but I’m not used to quit” she chuckled bitterly and lowered her eyes to finally look up to meet Alfred’s blank in distress eyes “and this is my Bruce so I’ll fight with him till the end.”

Stephen stayed silent.

Selina threw the bottle to the wall and yanked her head. Her bloodshot eyes were burning.

“I know Bruce better than all of you! He could have died any moment in all these years but he didn’t! Because he is stronger than all of us! He never gave up even though everything was against him; even when his odds were less than zero! I can’t hear you talking like this! Bruce will survive this surgery as he survived all the hardship, the despair, the tortures! He will come out of this alive because…” her voice quivered “because he loves us…because he knows how important is to stay with us…with me…”

Alfred walked there and hugged her brushing gently her hair.

Stephen pursed his lips.

“I have never abandoned a patient” he said in his deepest bass voice. “Every time I gave with them the battle till the end” he shook his head and arched his eyebrows. “I’ll do the same once again.”

Tony licked his lips nervously.

“Not to mention that you are a strong wizard now…” he registered Stephen’s mysterious stare and arched his eyebrows “along with being a great neurosurgeon, of course.”

Stephen gave a crooked smile for Tony’s diplomatic addition.

“Darkseid’s contamination must be cleaned from Bruce’s body.”

They turned to the new voice in the room and saw Thor who had just crossed the door having opened the door without anyone noticing in their heated discussion. The god of the Thunders was dressed in his civilian attire and despite the fact he was a god his face still carried the weariness and hardship of the battle.

“I hope it doesn’t matter that I followed you here” he said approaching Tony.

The billionaire shook his head and waved that off.

“Nah…About this contamination thing…”

Leslie nodded.

“These beams Darkseid sent on him carried his dark energy – and even though Bagdana took the hit Bruce was still subjected to their radiation.”

Stephen pressed his lips.

“Exactly.”

“Can you do this?” Selina asked the wizard.

“I haven’t done anything like this yet” he replied softly “but I’ll try.”

Thor looked at him.

“Eir, the goddess of healing, can assist you.”

Tony yanked his head and met Alfred’s tired, pained eyes which were a stab to his twisted guts.

“Everyone who can help is welcome” he said and clenched Thor’s forearm.

“I will do everything for Bruce” the Asgardian replied.

“Then what about performing the operation to Superman’s headquarters?” Stephen asked but everyone’s grim expressions were more than talkative. “He is free of the mind control now…” he added defensively.

Alfred cleared his throat.

“Master Bruce is the one to decide this but I have the belief that he won’t accept that.”

Tony arched his eyebrows.

“I built these premises with the best specifications to ensure that Bruce will have the perfect conditions for the operation.”

Stephen nodded.

“Very well then” he turned to Thor and knitted his eyebrows realizing what he had heard “Wait… you knew as well that Bruce is the Batman?”

Thor nodded.

“He saved my life…”

Dr. Strange shrugged a shoulder and smirked.

“It seems that our club is crowded. It’s remarkable that so many beings with extra ordinary powers owe their lives to a man without any of these powers.”
“Lois Lane, the reporter of the Daily Planet, has managed to record exclusive footage from the battle that took place earlier at the Frozen Basin in the west borders of New York State.”

Images filled the screen showing the Earth’s heroes fighting Darkseid’s forces assisted by the Asgardian army and the Amazons.

“It reminds a sci-fi movie or a battle taken out of Tolkin’s books, don’t you think, Dave?” the female newscaster asked her colleague.

He nodded.

“In a joint press conference, representatives of the UN, EU, US, Russia, Japan and China along with Pepper Potts for S.H.I.E.L.D. confirmed that an alien invasion was thwarted. A being called Darkseid” zoom on the battle’s footage showed the gigantic form of the New God killing with his very eyes launching white beams “has been planning to conquer the planet. In that end, he had captured Superman assisted by the so called Wonder Woman which as was revealed also today, was a murderer from Gotham – the Poison Ivy. She impersonated the legendary Princess of the Amazons working as a spy for the invaders. The real Diana of Themyscirra helped the Metropolis law enforcers to wipe out Intergang – also, a tool in Darkseid’s plans - and arrest Poison Ivy before she joined the battle in the Frozen Basin contributing to the New God’s extermination” now the wall screen broadcasted how Darkseid disappeared hit by the assembled power of every hero the earth had. “The Electromagnetic Storm Training Day was admitted to be a trick to evacuate possible retaliation targets that the aliens planned to attack to cause thousands casualties…”

Martha watched from her favorite armchair. She sighed seeing her son fighting along with the others. Bruce was right and Martha felt relieved that everything was revealed and now Clark was free back to his old, good self.

She got up feeling her heart beating fast; Clark was here! She ran outside and caught up with him in the wooden patio. She stormed at him and closed him in a tight hug kissing his face: Martha still had in her eyes Clark leaving from the farm in the evening’s sky to fall in their trap. But now everything was alright again. She had him back like Bruce had promised.

The smile on Clark’s face was huge brightening his still dusted face and Martha eyed his torn and burnt attire that let parts of his chest and back uncovered. Clark felt his eyes watering realizing the pain he had caused to his Ma.

“Ma, I’m sorry” he said. “I’m sorry I caused you so much pain…I was a scum, a…”

Martha raised her teary eyes to look at his face and caressed his cheek.

“You’re here now, Clark; and you’re alright, free of her spells…” she kissed his cheeks.

“No, Ma, let me apologize; let me beg for your forgiveness… You tried many times to bring me back to my senses and I only sneered and accused you of siding with my enemies; I was a brute; an ungrateful brat.”

Martha shook her head not getting enough from her healed son.

“Forget everything, Clark: you did nothing to me…however” she inhaled “there’s someone who…”

Clark lowered his eyes.
“Bruce…” he said.

Martha pressed her lips.

“He never stopped believing in you; he was supporting me all the time reassuring me that the good Clark wasn’t lost. I’m sure he persuaded Mr. Stark to help you.”

Clark’s eyebrow twisted: Mr. Stark, right… His mother didn’t know about Bruce and he had no right to tell her.

“He suffered too much, Clark.”

“I know…because of me…I’ll ask for his forgiveness too, Ma…but…I caused him so much pain that I don’t deserve his forgiveness” he said sighing.

Martha cupped his face.

“Nevertheless you must apologize to him, sweetheart.”

He nodded.

“I owe him so much…” he said and his eyes were blank.

Martha looked at him with the old pride she had lost lately.

“I’m sure you will do the right thing…” she pecked his cheek. “Will you eat with me?”

Clark smiled.

“You have to ask when you have fresh baked apple pie waiting on the kitchen table? And roast beef?”

Martha hugged with one arm her son’s waist and walked with him inside.

“It was the least I could do: today is a day of celebration. The bitch that was ruining by boy’s life got revealed, the nasty aliens were defeated and my son was in the battle with the good guys” Clark smiled recollecting the way he had ignored the need for help of the people in New York. “Clark, my boy, is back.”

She gestured to him to seat in the chair on the top of the table and moved to the countertop to prepare the meal.

“I was thinking about that Batman…” she said and Clark tensed relieved that his mother had her back turned. “Is he alright? That blue giant alien – Darkseid, right? – hit him very hard.”

“I wonder the same, Ma” he answered absent minded pressing his lips.

He was trying to listen to Bruce’s vitals constantly after the battle to make sure that he was alright or at least that his life wasn’t in danger. But he couldn’t hear anything and this, as always, made him sick with worry but there was one thought that although frustrating still comforted him a bit: Tony Stark had taken his friend somewhere with lead to stop him from coming there.

At times, Clark’s distress made him regret that he didn’t followed Ironman when he took Batman away. The rock where Darkseid sent Batman to crush was enormous and after Bagdana’s death Batman walked behind the rock so the others didn’t see what happened. Yet Clark used his X-ray vision and saw Batman collapsing unconscious; he was ready to rush there to catch him but Ironman was there.

His first urge was to tailor Ironman to see where he was going to take Bruce but then he realized that this was wrong…He had no right to inflict his presence to them after everything he had done. Concern clenched his insides but for once he had to think what Bruce would want.

And even now that not knowing was torturing he was aware that his choice after much time was the correct one.

The sedation affected him instantly. He felt a sweet paralysis flooding the healthy part of his body: well, healthy…not exactly. For a few torturing seconds, exhaustion and throbbing pain became so strong that his body shook and he hardly stopped grunts coming out of his mouth: the effort of the last month hammering his body mercilessly.

But then everything ceased…

He was sleeping but his awareness hadn’t abandoned him. His mind was still processing the events of the last hours. Relief that the plan worked. The things he had done the past days crossed his mind like a tornado: Themyscira, Central City, Metropolis; Diana, Hippolyta, Flash, the Avengers, Bagdana…

It was hardly 24 hours since he drove the Tumbler to Mannheim’s facilities in the middle of the Frozen Basin but it seemed so distant as if years had passed…and then the battle; Darkseid’s enraged face when he saw his army being devastated by the machine he planned to use for exterminating the human race.

The white beams cracked Dr. Strange’s shield heading right at him; and then the gigantic body that was till then killing the Earth’s defenders hid the sun and set him under his shadow; becoming the new shield that stopped death from reaching him.

His mother held his shoulders gently but determined; she was smiling and her smile, her eyes, her perfume, her touch was the perfect medicine.

The Frozen Basin had vanished and the moisture darkness of a ponging alley that made his body shiver again more violently than before.

Because he was scared, he was crying; his foot hurt like Hell reminding him that that awful man had chopped his big toe a few hours ago. He wanted to go home, to sleep in his soft, warm bed listening to his mother singing his favorite lullaby. He knew that the nightmare was over, now that his parents were there with him.

“Kill the brat!” the horrible voice of the man who reminded him of a Gray Wolf cracked the space.

The bang echoed in the alley and made his ears ache and he stopped breathing; he was frozen realizing that the nightmare wasn’t over.

The gentle hand that was caressing his upper hands pushed him away and he could see only his mother’s back; he saw her jerking with a soft grunt… and then his mom fell down like a cut flower.

The demon’s body collapsed in front of him with a round burning mark on his chest…

Chill grabbed Hero and hurled the small animal to crash in the wall…the poor kitten collapsed on the dirty ground.
His mother’s beautiful eyes stayed open, still, crystallized. Beautiful as ever but cold as never before... So familiar and so strange at the same time...

Bagdana’s eyes were so different when they met his eyes one last time before the demon let his eyelashes cover them...

Bruce felt the cold wrapping his body freezing him; the shivers made his teeth rattle. His insides felt like a tight knot. People die because of him.

It was unfair; people dying for his sake. He didn’t want that.

“I’m tranquil, Bruce...”

He turned around and saw Bagdana exactly as he was when he imprisoned him in Mannheim’s Mansion. But now his face was softer emanating what he was saying – the demon was indeed peaceful.

“I thought that making Superman cheat and dump you for another person would satisfy me because I’d have punished you and make you feel the pain I suffered.”

Bruce heard the echo of soft footsteps and watched him coming closer. A faint smile on his lips.

“But then sensing you in so much pain...” he shook his head. “That definitely wasn’t the satisfaction I expected. There were times I regretted... But then... I believed that I could stop the pain having my chance to win your heart as Oliver Queen. It was so beautiful trying to get your affections like a mere human... like starting my life all over again, from scratch... if only your heart wasn’t already given to that Kryptonian...” he looked him in the eyes. “You thwarted me; you were brusque to me trying to discourage my advantages staying loyal to someone that made you bleed... But I still couldn’t get mad at you...”

Bagdana’s eyes were fixed on his.

“And I finally did what I should, Bruce – the best thing in the countless ages I’ve lived. Feeling you alive makes me happy. You were the best gift life offered me and I was so stupid that I hurt you... I abused you; I increased your suffering. I cared only for satisfying my last... my body’s hunger...” he snorted. “I am a demon, what did you expect? I should have taken you from your torturers and raised you like a human child needs to be raised... and then when you would have become the beautiful man you are, maybe you would love me and give me your body with your will... Reviving our past love... Lost opportunities... We would have shared ages together...” he lowered his eyes.

Bruce couldn’t discern anything; they were floating into nothingness; in the oblivion he so much needed right now.

Bagdana looked back at him.

“But now I have finally seen the right thing to do... Saving what is the most precious thing to me... you...”

Bruce made the two steps that separated them; his eyes meet Bagdana’s eyes and Bruce took in the pleasure and relief all over the demon’s face.

“I didn’t want you to die...” he said and raised his hand, his fingertips touching the other’s cheek.

Bagdana closed his eyes.
“I know…but there are many kinds of death and the worst kind was living all these centuries after Lilith’s death…When I found you it was like I was born again; as if the planet had just begun spinning, a new star in the universe. Stopping Darkseid from killing you wasn’t death, even if my life was the forfeit: I was happy that I managed to stop him.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes.

“Do not be sad for me, Bruce…for once let me not being the cause of suffering for you. Feeling you alive will be the biggest happiness for a deplorable demon like me…and maybe someday, in another world we’ll have our chance, to start fresh…”

Bruce closed his eyes sorrow weighing on his body…

“Don’t be sad, Bruce…Life is beautiful, please remember that…” the demon pleaded.

Bruce couldn’t see anything beautiful in this life and this erosion all over his body affirmed that loudly…but then he felt something beautiful wrapping his tired, suffering existence; he opened his eyes.

A new figure he hadn’t seen again approached him: it was a woman; an elderly, short woman dressed in a white, silver long tunic that sent the brightest light around. Her wrinkled face though was brighter than her clothes and her waist length blond hair radiated like pure gold. She smiled affectionately to him and Bruce’s heart was filled with peace…

He opened his eyes reluctantly feeling hands on his body; he was still in a fog but he could say that this wasn’t a hostile touch.

Bruce blinked several times before shaking sleep off of his eyes and managing to make the figure over him recognizable.

It was Dr. Strange dressed in a white medical robe so much unlike his usual burgundy caped- self; however on his chest still hanged his peculiar medallion and Bruce thought fondly of the Black Butterfly on his own chest that his friends didn’t take off.

Dr. Strange was examining him, serious as in the battle. He was absorbed but he turned his eyes to meet Bruce’s stare as soon as he realized that his patient was awake.

“Did you have a nice sleep?”

“I did” Bruce answered “thanks to morphine and sedation” he added bitterly.

“You don’t like drugs, huh?”

Bruce smiled.

“No, but my life spins around them since I got free from Falcone…”

Stephen reflected the smile.

“I know how you’re feeling…for months after my accident I was on heavy medication. But they are necessary for someone with your way of life” Bruce cocked an eyebrow in obvious disagreement and Dr. Strange chuckled with the man’s stubborness. “Your back got badly bruised when Darkseid shoved you to that rock and some ribs cracked; the energy casts saved you from the worst but eventually with the radiation from the omega beams the casts are deteriorating your organism’s condition.”

“I understand.”

“The surgery is the only solution.”

“I am aware of that and you have my consent; if you want I can sign any paperwork necessary” Stephen waved that out.

“We were thinking the possibility of asking from Superman…”

Bruce didn’t let him finish his phrase.

“No” he shook his head for emphasis “Superman has nothing to do with any of this and I don’t want him involved.”

The doctor inhaled.

“But it would increase the odds of success.”

Bruce raised his eyebrows and locked eyes with him.

“No way, Dr. Strange” he said with conviction. “The operation will be performed here or it won’t be performed at all!” he closed his eyes trying to catch his breath.

Dr. Strange moved his hands to appease him.

“Please, Bruce, calm down. Everything will happen as you want.”

“Thank you.”

“Bruce, I was thinking about the ‘no magic thing’… The operation will be very difficult, not to mention Darkseid’s energy’s residual effect – of course, Eir and I tried to purge you of that but still I would prefer it if there was more time for you to regain your strength and have a good rest. Given that we don’t have that luxury, perhaps it would be better if we had magic at our arsenal…”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, Stephen. No magic even if my life depends on this.”

Dr. Strange huffed exasperated.

“Bruce, I understand that you want the operation to be performed under the same conditions as for every other patient but the nature of your injuries is far from normal. I can’t imagine that we will come across another patient with your history and being directly exposed to Darkseid’s dark energy.”

“No magic, Stephen; we won’t violate the laws of nature.”

Stephen smiled.

“But you agreed to that when you asked my people and Jor El to diminish the earthquakes’ magnitude…” he remarked pointedly.

Bruce tilted his head on the side.
“No; Bagdana and Darkseid violated the natural laws when caused that wave of earthquakes; I asked from you to just restore the harmony."

Stephen chuckled admitting his defeat.

“Nobody can’t catch you in anything, right?” he stopped chuckling. “I don’t want to lose you, Bruce…”

Bruce smiled and shook his head.

“I assure you, Stephen that my agenda is full with things I have to do so dying can’t be squeezed there…”

“Batman has always his contingencies, huh?”

“He definitely tries to…”

Selina was holding his hand so strong that it was on the verge of bruising. Tony stood there pale, clearly upset while Alfred was tidying up the room trying to hide his own distress.

The nurses who prepared him for the operation had just left the room and Dr. Strange’s team had already taken their places in the operation room.

They had managed to procrastinate the surgery for two days trying with every possible way to stop the energy casts from heating more so that Bruce’s organism had the time to restore as much strength and stamina as possible. Yet there was nothing that could stop the casts’ overheating. So the second day they decided that the operation couldn’t be delayed anymore otherwise the casts would kill Bruce anyway.

Bruce stroked Selina’s hair and their eyes met.

“It will help if I promise that I will wake up? We passed so many things together: we can’t be scared of this…” he looked up to Tony and Alfred. “I’ll fight this as I did all my life: you don’t believe in me anymore?”

Alfred ran to him and took his other hand.

“Of course, Master Bruce!”

Bruce smiled.

“And you, Tony?”

The billionaire nodded morose and drained.

“I always do, litt’ guy…” he said in a hoarse voice so much unlike his. “But you have to know that a huge collection of booze is waiting for me…Not to blackmail you or anything…”

Bruce laughed and Tony hugged him.

Clark had returned to the Daily Planet the first day after the battle; his Ma told him that she had asked a sick leave from Perry on his account. So he walked in the common space with his colleagues as if nothing had happened.

He was touched being back to his routine; it seemed to him as if years had passed from the last time he was there and from his last dispute with Lois. Lois who constantly tried to reason with him.

He looked at her desk and she looked back like in the past before Ivy ruined his life. Clark had grinned broadly breathing easier, feeling some of the burden on his chest gone.

Of course, they didn’t act as they would like to not raise suspicions; they had their chance to speak for everything after the working hours to the café they used to go.

It was the third day after the battle and he still didn’t have any news from Bruce; any sign. Also, Tony Stark was nowhere to be seen…

He was writing on his desktop computer about the world’s reactions after Darkseid’s defeat; the planet was celebrating and Clark was happy to be back in his humble desk that he thought that he would never see again. Yet his joy wasn’t whole as his worry about Bruce bit him hard and chewed his mind.

All of a sudden and without any warning, his breath stopped and his heart lost several beats; it was as if the sun had turned off robbing him from his energy.

“Use your damn magic!” Tony yelled at Stephen, his panicked voice towering the frantic sound of the devices monitoring Bruce’s vitals. “You’re a magician! Do it! He is dying! We’re losing him!”

The line on the screen was flat; and his heartbeats falling to zero. The equipped with the latest medical technology blurred for Tony’s panicked eyes. He was glaring at Strange but the corner of his eye was fixed on Bruce’s opened back.

Dr. Palmer raised her eyes from their patient and looked at Tony.

“Mr. Stark, you don’t help that way!”

But Tony didn’t let Stephen out of his eyes.

“Use your magic, you useless conjurer!”

Leslie stood in front of him.

“Tony, calm down.”

“No, I won’t calm down, Leslie! I’m losing Bruce and he is refusing to do his mumbo jumbo to bring him back while he can! He’s killing him!”

Stephen looked him in the eyes pushing his surgical glasses up.

“He made me promise that I won’t use any magic…whatever might happen…”

Tony frowned feeling his own surgical mask suffocating him.

“Wha…What?! That’s…No!” he shook his head. “I don’t care! You’re his surgeon: it’s your mistake! You’re obligated to save him!”

Dr. Strange gritted his teeth behind the surgical mask.
“You don’t let me!” he hissed and Tony looked at him dumbfounded.

Leslie showed him the door of the operation room.

“Tony, you’re not helping!” he couldn’t see her eyes behind the surgical glasses but he could sense the sparkles. “Let us do our job…Out!”

Tony’s heart was beating in his ears exactly as the monitor with Bruce’s vitals; he felt as if he was in a numbing dream…nightmare. Like walking in jelly…He left the room hearing the echo of Dr. Strange’s calm instructions to his team and the sound of charging.

As soon as he reached the waiting room he tossed away his glasses and his mask cursing.

The people waiting outside rushed at him.

“What’s going on?” Selina asked.

Pepper looked Tony in the eyes.

“What happened, Tony?”

Alfred’s eyes met Tony’s.

“His heart…” Tony answered and had to inhale to continue “stopped. He is been butchered in that fuckin’ room already ten hours! He couldn’t endure it anymore…” his head dropped. “Littl’ guy…”

Pepper gulped and hugged him bringing his trembling head to her chest hushing him.

Alfred felt his legs not supporting him anymore; Lucius helped him sat in a chair.

“At least, the boys are not here…” he mumbled his face getting paler with each second. His insides were crying with pain but he was so shocked, so devastated that he couldn’t even let his pain out. “It just can be…” he whispered; after everything…losing again Master Bruce…

Lucius gulped.

Selina’s eyes stayed still and her breath stopped. She was ready to collapse but there was no way she would let that happen. The world spun around her.

Steve who was there with him hugged her brushing her back.

“He’ll make it, Sel; Bruce is a winner…”

Selina fixed her wild eyes on him.

“Of course he will! He promised me!” she spat.

Clark got up and hurried outside the room without knowing why he was doing that; maybe because he needed air.

He heard hurried steps; Lois had followed him worried.

“Are you alright?”

“No; something happened; Bruce…”
Lois stared at him confused.

“You located him?”

“No, I can’t hear his vitals.”

“Then how do you know that something happened?”

“Because my insides are frozen…because it feels like the planet has stopped moving…the sun’s light darkened.”

Lois pressed her lips.

“Elliot attacked the Manor but they said that Bruce wasn’t even there so he wasn’t hurt.”

Clark gulped. Lois didn’t know the feats Bruce had done; feats that definitely had their toll.

“They must have tried to operate him” he said seeing again Darkseid throwing Bruce in the air sending him to crush on a huge rock. And then the omega beams Bagdana took instead…

All these had forced them to speed the operation.

“Why they didn’t tell me?” he yelled in despair and anger but Lois gestured to him to hush in case someone was close. “I would have given them the Fortress to perform the operation! He would have been safe there! Damn it! Stark, your hatred is killing him!”

Lois met his distraught, crazy eyes.

“Maybe it was Bruce’s choice…” she said softly and Clark closed his eyes.

She was right. He hid his face in his palms.

“It’s my fault…” he whispered.

Leslie watched Stephen’s desperate efforts to revive Bruce. They had turned him on his back; they were too absorbed in their efforts but her eyes were on her boy’s pale face. Something shone trapped in his eyelashes…Leslie closed her eyes realizing it was a teardrop.

She leaned to his ear.

“C’mon, baby…this is not the time to remember the bad things…I know that life has treated you with painful moments but…there are beautiful moments to remember too…we are waiting for you, Bruce: all your loved ones…and…and life is ahead of you promising happiness…you must live, Bruce; you have so many things to live, to enjoy…Please…”

A girl sat in a wheelchair approached him: she was hardly eleven years old with blond short hair and light blue eyes. She looked at Bruce shyly.

“I’m Lucy” she said and Bruce smiled.

“Hi, Lucy; I’m…”

“Bruce Wayne” she cut him. “I saw you on TV – I spend many hours with TV all these months staying on bed.”
Bruce nodded.

“I know how that is, Lucy…”

The girl smiled and nodded, she was hugging a doll from the gifts that Santa had given them.

“My mother says that some people hurt you so much that you almost died; and that the wounds they made you…fixed you to a wheelchair like me” she said shyly, her pale cheeks becoming pink.

Bruce pressed his lips and nodded; the girl stretched her hand to Bruce and he took it.

“What happened to you, Lucy?” he asked quietly.

“I was crossing the street and a car hit me: it didn’t hurt much because everything darkened…Mom told me when I woke up that I was sleeping for a month….”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“You are a very brave girl, Lucy…Your parents must be proud.”

Lucy touched his cheek; her eyes were filled with compassion.

“They tortured you, right? I heard that they were hurting you when you were a kid…for years…and now other bad people hurt you more…you have suffered so much...”

Bruce smiled to the girl.

“They did…but thanks to my friends I’m here now – I was saved.”

The girl looked at him conspiratorial.

“You bought the presents, right?”

Bruce looked up at Alfred and then back at the girl pouting.

“Let’s say that I reminded Santa that there’s a children hospital in Gotham; he has so many things to do that sometimes he needs some reminding. A friend told me that when I was almost at your age.”

“Doctors say that it’d be too difficult to walk again…and” she licked her lips lowering her eyes. “I know that I won’t walk ever again but they just try to encourage me...”

Bruce inhaled carefully to not let the girl know his sadness. But her little eyes that shone like gems as she looked back at him made his heart melt.

“I know that I won’t dance ever again...”

“You dance, Miss Lucy?” Alfred asked warmly.

She smiled to him.

“I was leaving the ballet school to daddy’s car on the other side of the road when the car hit me...” she grinned and hugged tighter her new doll. “I know that I won’t dance but I don’t tell mom and dad because I want them to believe that I believe them.”

“You are a very brave girl, Lucy…” Bruce said in a throaty voice.
She smiled and touched his cheek with the spontaneity of the children.

“Sometimes I get sad but then I think everything I heard about you; how much you suffered but you never gave up and...and I feel that everything will be alright even if I don’t walk again ever because I have my mommy and daddy with me and doctors who love me...and...and I’d never be alone while you...you were just a kid in pain and you were all alone but you never stopped fighting...”

“You’ll walk again, Lucy: I’ll do everything in my power for you to walk again” Bruce told her keeping his eyes closed. “I’m not supposed to walk ever again too but my friends are working hard to find the way to help me walk again...It’d be hard, Lucy, but I’ll do it because you...your bravery would give me strength and courage and inspiration to walk again so that you would be the next. And I promise you that in your first performance I’ll be there in the theatre to applaud and get your autograph...If you remember me till then among your countless fans” he chuckled.

The girl’s cheeks were drenched in tears when she looked at Bruce but a wide, happy smile brightened her round, sweet face.

“I know you’ll make it, Bruce...” she said and leaned to place a kiss to his cheek.

He had to make it for Lucy’s sake; because Lucy believed in him and she deserved to have her life back. If he survived the surgery and walked again then Lucy would walk again; and dance...

“Can you feel this?” Dr. Strange’s deep baritone asked.

He couldn’t see the needle piercing lightly his foot and his doctor’s inquiring eyes but he could feel that tickling: in his legs!

Everyone was looking at him with agony: Selina, Tony, Alfred, Pepper, the boys, even Hero had stilled his eyes on him.

“I do; a needle stabbing my foot” he said casually as if he hadn’t almost died during the surgery and it didn’t take a week for him to wake up; as if that tiny tickle wasn’t what he was dreaming and craving all this time.

His people’s faces brightened but Leslie remained composed.

“Which leg?” she asked firmly locking eyes with him because he wanted to make sure that her patient wasn’t just trying to satisfy them.

Bruce stared at her and felt everyone’s eyes on him; he inhaled.

“The right.”

“Fuck, yeah!” Jason shouted.

Both he and Dick jumped on him but Hero caught up with them on getting on Bruce who smiled and patted the boys.

“Careful, boys” Leslie said sternly “you’re going to suffocate him.”

The two boys pulled away sharing embarrassed looks. But then it was Selina’s and Tony’s turn to hug their friend.
Leslie rolled her eyes and Bruce looked at the boys.

“You see why you were berated? It was a trick!”

Alfred stared touched and happy at his young master and Bruce feeling that affection met his butler’s eyes grinning.

The Englishman nodded without speaking and Bruce understood that it was the man’s emotion that robbed him from his usual eloquence. Alfred walked to Dr. Strange and shook his hand.

“Congratulations, Dr. Strange. I’m grateful to you.”

The man’s face radiated from relief and satisfaction.

“Thank you, Alfred, but it was Bruce’s strength that drove us to the victory – oh! I sound like speaking about the Frozen Basin battle…”

Alfred chuckled and patted Leslie’s upper arms.

“And congratulations to you too, Leslie.”

She shook her head.

“I didn’t do much…” she answered.

Tony ruffled Bruce’s hair.

“You scared us in there, buddy.”

“Us?” Pepper asked with an eyebrow cocked and a crooked smile on her face.

Tony scratched his head.

“Me” he admitted crooking his mouth.

“He pissed his pants!” Selina said dryly and Tony glared at her.

“You owe someone something, Mr. Stark” Pepper said showing with his eyes Dr. Strange.

Tony pouted remembering how he had yelled at him in the operating room; he didn’t speak to the doctor for several days and even till now they exchanged very few words.

He got up and gave his hand to Stephen.

“I’m sorry for yelling at you like this…I could have yelled at you in another way, I suppose…”

Stephen laughed.

“You don’t need to apologize, Tony; I understand – I’d have done the same thing in your place.”

Tony turned his body to address everyone in the room.

“Well, once Bruce is out of here you’re all invited to the biggest party Tony Stark ever gave! Your entire team too, Dr. Strange.”

Bruce smiled to Tony’s cheerful eyes staring at him yet his insides were clenched: he had feeling from his legs but he couldn’t move them. He had tried without anyone noticing.
He comforted himself thinking that perhaps it was the drugs’ effect that thwarted him.
Chapter 91

Well, this chapter was difficult maybe because it was the last for this story. I don't know if the chapter is good enough, I hope it is.

I'd like to thank all of you for reading, leaving kudos or commenting. Thank you for being with me throughout this long journey. I hope you enjoyed it!

It was the first time Selina left the new rehabilitation clinic Tony had built after Bruce’s surgery; the entire week till he woke up she stayed there, unwilling to leave his side. Fortunately, Tony had provided to include a beautiful, comfy hostel for the patients’ companions. She was afraid to be far from her friend.

Steve was coming often but he had also work in the Tower where they were still in vigilance in case the Female Furies that Darkseid mentioned attack the planet even if their leader was defeated. It seemed though that Darkseid’s humiliating defeat took them back to Apokolips as well.

They used Steve’s bike to return to the city and after the fatigue of all these days they chose to stay in Selina’s apartment and eat the pizza they picked on the way.

However the first thing Selina wanted to do upon entering her apartment was a bath: not that the hostel’s room didn’t have a bathroom yet nothing is like home. Especially, when in the bath tub you have the company of a naked Steve Rogers…

She had the chance to appreciate Steve’s pectorals and abs now that she was happy that Bruce regained his leg’s feeling. And Steve was really happy that she was happy since that led to the first lovemaking after long.

But it was definitely worth the waiting…

Selina had already worn her night gown and helped Steve wear his pajama shirt.

“There’s no need for that” he said kissing her lips.

But Selina instead of buttoning the shirt uncovered his injured shoulder that was wrapped in gauze. She kissed the spot.

“With Bruce’s surgery, I neglected you.”

He laughed.

“I couldn’t feel that! How about kissing a little upper?”

He lowered his face so that his lips met hers in a soft kiss that swiftly became passionate, taking away the breath from both of them.

“It was great fighting with Catwoman at my side…” he said playing with a stray lock from her hair.
Selina cocked her eyebrows and pursed her lips.

“You had Ms. Romanov…”

He cocked an eyebrow.

“Fighting with Natasa is just teamwork between comrades and friends. On the other hand, when you punch and kick enemies near me and I know that this gorgeous, lethal body which gives pain to the others, gives pleasure to me…it’s pure arousal…” his voice had become a sexy whispering and he began nibbling her neck that she bent to enjoy more contact.

“Soldier, I never expected to hear that kind of language from you…” she shook her index finger patronizingly. “A good boy like you can’t talk like this to a lady…”

“Mmm…but this good boy likes to tell always the truth…So do you mind?”

“Of course not! Especially since I felt the same way…” she wrapped her arms around his torso and threw off of him the shirt she just helped him wear. “Oh! I love these pectorals – and now with the bruises and scars…” she placed her lips on his chest sucking the strong flesh.

But then abruptly stopped and tilted her head on the side.

“Ummm…nah…you’re injured: I don’t know if you’d bear it…”

Steve frowned and grabbed her from the waist to hug her torso.

“What do you think?”

She laughed.

“Now without jokes” she said seriously. “How’s your wound?”

“It’s just a scratch: Odin diverted the beams with his axe before they reached me and the wound was completely superficial despite the fact it pained and thwarted me to use my arm. However Dr. Strange cleaned it meticulously from any dark energy. Batman though… He was too close to the beams’ radiation even if the demon took the blow. I hope Dr. Strange finds and helps him.”

Selina nodded.

“Me, too but now for me the important thing is that Bruce’s surgery succeeded and he feels again his legs. And my Captain is alright and all aroused from the battle” she said slyly and frowned “at least I hope so…”

“Do you need me to show you?”

Selina pouted thoughtful.

“But we’re hungry and pizza is waiting…” she said teasingly.

Steve hugged her and brought them both on her bed.

“I’m hungrier for you…besides pizza won’t go anywhere.”

Selina chuckled.

“I love boys with rational thinking!” she said and discarded swiftly her white, short night gown.
“I’m sorry for your people who died at the battle” Bruce said really sad.

He was on his bed in reclined position and Thor sat on the chair next to the bed; he was in his civilian attire.

“They were noble warriors, ready to die for the right cause” he answered reverently. “It is a pity Asgard lost them and they are honored and mourned by all of us but Valkyries have transferred them to Valhala.”

Bruce looked at him.

“We wouldn’t have won without Asgard’s help.”

Thor grinned.

“Believe me, Asgard is proud that participated to Darkseid’s defeat” he met Bruce’s eyes. “But we owe everything to you: without you we’ll have lost being attacked by Darkseid without any preparation – Earth would have been doomed.”

Bruce cocked an eyebrow.

“I just saved myself since I’m part of the human race.”

Thor leaned to him.

“How are you, Bruce? Really? Darkseid’s dark energy can contaminate too close to his beams.”

Bruce smiled.

“Is this why you asked Eir to treat me?”

The blond god knitted his eyebrows.

“How do you know?”

“In my sleep, I saw an elderly but beautiful woman who shone like a star: she was saying words in an odd language…and made me feel a lot better.”

Thor nodded.

“She and Dr. Strange fought to remove from your body Darkseid’s contamination.”

“Thank you.”

“You’re alright now – that’s enough for me.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“You’re too kind, Thor; too good and I feel guilty” the blond narrowed his eyes and Bruce chuckled. “I feel that I’m taking advantage of you; taking everything you generously offer without giving anything…”

The god tilted his head and cupped Bruce’s hand on the bed.

“You give me far too much, Bruce, with your friendship. I’m honored and happy that I’m one of your friends. Besides, you believed in Loki and made him fight for a noble cause. He saved my father’s life from Darkseid: I love Loki and thanks to you I can be proud of him.”

Bruce smiled.

“Loki has good in him but…he is…eccentric. He needed a little push to show what he is really capable of.”

Thor shook his head and his baby blue eyes met Bruce’s.

“I hope that soon you will come again to Asgard for recreational reasons this time.”

Clark Kent stood at the pavement facing the Avengers’ Tower. Two weeks after the battle of Frozen Basin the imposing skyscraper was still surrounded by reporters asking questions to every person they saw entering or leaving the building. Obviously, their aim was to get the chance to catch a big fish, one of the Avengers but they heroes knew how to avoid the press.

However he wasn’t a common reporter; his super senses helped him recognize the vitals of his fellow superheroes even if they were disguised. And today he came to New York looking for one specific Avenger. Not for journalistic purposes but for something more important.

He walked around the area for hours waiting with his heart drumming in agony and impatience. It wasn’t sure that he would find him here even if his reporter sources informed him that he was seen to a rescue in New York.

His body tensed sensing the vitals he waited for hours but he didn’t rush to him. Because his target didn’t know his human identity and Clark didn’t want to reveal it. So he followed him keeping a safe distance since his long distance vision allowed him to see his target from afar and among people.

The Avenger was dressed in jeans and a plain T-shirt which managed to cover a bit his bulky, imposing body – the brown cap on his head and his long blond ponytail definitely didn’t let anyone guess who he was. He was heading to the Batery Park which made Clark’s hair stood on edge as this Park was connected with his biggest crime of all.

It seems that the park was one of the favorite places for the Avenger. Clark felt a familiar pang: of course he met Bruce here…He almost slapped himself to stop these thoughts from poisoning him.

Enough evil he had done manipulated from such stupid thoughts.

The Avenger chose to walk to a really secluded part of the Park where the oak trees were too thick and shed everything under their shadow. That gave Clark the chance to change into Superman to approach him.

“Thor…” he greeted the god who turned frowning.

“Superman; to what do I owe the honor?”

The Asgardian had some idea about what brought Superman to him and as a matter of fact he wasn’t happy about that. Clark wasn’t sure if there was irony in his voice but even if Thor really scorned him, he deserved that.

“I’m sorry if I bother you.”

Thor waved that off. The change in Superman’s manner was evident.
“Not at all…How can I help?”

Superman approached more.

“It’s about Bruce” he saw Thor instantly tensing and raised his palms reassuringly. “I won’t ask you to tell me where he is.”

Though it was a temptation since Clark could see in the god’s eyes that he knew where Bruce was. Actually, that was the reason Clark chose to speak to him: he was sure that Thor was welcome to Bruce’s inner circle – the Asgardian had earned that – and also Thor knew about his past relationship with Bruce so Bruce’s wish to keep it secret wouldn’t be betrayed.

“He doesn’t want me to know so he obviously is somewhere with a lot of lead to stop me from locating him which I perfectly understand after everything I did to him.”

Thor yanked his head.

“Then?”

Clark gulped.

“It’s two weeks since they operated Bruce.”

Thor stayed expressionless without confirming or denying that. He wasn’t sure if he had the right to share that information.

“If you can’t locate him then how can you say that?”

Clark lowered his eyes.

“Because Darkseid hit him badly and then his omega beams emitted radiation that must have contaminated him. Also, the energy casts that held Bruce’s together was of Kryptonian technology, made in my Fortress, so when they removed them I was aware of it. But most important” he locked eyes with the god “at some point, I felt that he…he was dying: his heart bent under the weight of exhaustion, hardship and the operation’s trial” he didn’t want to share every detail of what he experienced.

The Asgardian was impressed by the connection that still existed between Bruce and Superman; even after everything that happened.

“You said that you can’t hear his vitals…”

“I sensed it…It was like the sun lost his light and warmth; like the earth stopped spinning” he shook his head. “Anyway…I know that he finally made it…” he chuckled “Bruce is a mighty fighter.”

Thor gazed the horizon, the harbor cast into the pale pink color of the advanced sunset. He was feeling Superman’s agony and knew that was real; he felt for the man imagining how he would have felt if he was deprived of information about someone he cared about.

“What do you want from me then?” he asked dryly because still he wavered whether he should share his knowledge.

Clark could understand that Thor was skeptical and hesitant to trust him; the Asgardian didn’t want to betray and lose Bruce’s trust: who in his right mind would want that? He didn’t want to press him but without his will his eyes almost pleaded.
“Lack of oxygen can cause damages to humans…is Bruce…?”

Clark didn’t intend to let his agony hue his voice yet it was two weeks since then and all these days his agony was accumulating and now became a wave that broke his barriers.

Thor looked at him with sympathy and nodded.

“Do not worry. He is fine” he didn’t give him details but at least he comforted his agony.

Superman closed his eyes and breathed relieved.

Bruce looked at the steel, horizontal bar in the facilities’ gym; he was there on his wheelchair ready to start walking again…at least, trying. Why that thought even crossed his mind? He should have been thrilled to be there, to finally begin walking again.

Tony, Selina and Dr. Strange with Matt were there too and Bruce could see the eagerness in their eyes.

However, Bruce’s hands were clenched in fists and his breath was laborious even if he hid it. He was afraid of that bar… and that made him even more nervous because this wasn’t logical; this wasn’t like him…

He raised his eyes to see Matt who kneeled to put the exoskeletons to his legs. They would start slowly with the exoskeletons easing his effort and then gradually as walking with the exoskeletons would become natural, they would remove the exoskeletons as well.

Bruce knew what they expected from him and brought his chair close to the bar.

Selina squatted by his chair’s side and cupped his hand on the armrest.

“I know you’d like someone else with you this moment…” she whispered and her eyes were filled with sympathy.

Bruce met his eyes and smiled.

“I have all the people I want…”

“I’d be extremely happy when I’ll smash that awful chair once you’re standing on your feet.”

Even the distant echo of that voice made his body shiver and his mind numb… He saw Clark beaming as he lowered him gently to the astonishingly beautiful wheelchair he had made for him.

A heavy stone crushed his chest and this damned fatigue washed again his body…and his brain. He had no mood to even try to walk though he knew that he should; it felt as if he was completely drained like the remnants of the Parademons the TV stations showed the government agents gathering from the battlefield.

But his friends were waiting worried from his delay.

He grabbed the bar and inhaled deeply to suppress every negative thing he had inside; he shouldn’t let them mess with him especially now.

He clenched his jaw and jerked his body like he was easily doing before the surgery to move his body from the bed to the wheelchair. Only this time he would stay up, on his feet.
Everyone was watching avidly.

Bruce managed to balance his body and stay up with his hands clenching the bar and the exoskeletons helping. Now that he was standing, he had just to move his feet into making a small step; it shouldn’t be so hard: he had done more difficult things with his mind’s power.

“Don’t do what are you thinking, buddy” Tony said warning without revealing the mind power part because Matt didn’t know.

“The movement must be normal, Bruce” Stephen added.

Bruce inhaled and made to move his foot in front of the other – no mental power. It must happen normally…Like a baby’s first step…

But the damn leg didn’t move; he tried to galvanize his will into continuing but he realized that there wasn’t any will to power his determination.

“…the moment you’ll be healed, I swear to Rao that you won’t get out of our greenhouse for two months!”

His legs began trembling and he was falling.

Two strong arms held him from the armpits and supported him. A flash passed his mind: two crystal blue eyes filled with love and a smile filling him with strength and courage… But now there was no strength in him.

His eyes met the carbon eyes of Tony; his friend’s fear written all over.

“I can’t…” Bruce mumbled the only word he never before uttered.

Selina ran to hold him too while Stephen and Matt chose to not intrude.

“I’m sorry” Bruce said to his friends looking at them with guilt “I just…can’t move my legs…”

Tony gulped.

“It’s alright, buddy…don’t…don’t worry.”

Selina nodded and stroked Bruce’s back and Tony brought him to the chair but Bruce shook his head determined.

“I’ll try again…” he couldn’t just give up even though his entire existence was crying to him that he should let go.

Tony looked at Stephen and Matt. They both nodded.

You should make it…Bruce told to himself. You can’t disappoint them…you can’t give up…

He grabbed again the bar but this time his legs slipped immediately after he left his chair. Both Selina and Tony caught him before he was hurt and sat him in the chair.

He was panting; not looking anyone in the eyes. But Selina found his eyes.

“It’s okay, sweetie…It’s only the beginning… don’t be discouraged.”

“It’s far too early” a determined female voice echoed in the enormous gym.
Everyone looked to the entry where Leslie and Alfred had just entered. Alfred hurried his steps to his young master muffling him in the cardigan he held.

“You should give yourself some time, sir” he said softly but Bruce didn’t even look at him.

He didn’t go again to the gym; Bruce didn’t want to fail again so he wasn’t willing to try because he wouldn’t make it. He felt it.

He agreed to go the other part of the gym to do only the exercises that was doing before the operation; at least, he couldn’t fail doing them, could he?

However he bitterly realized that even that it was far more difficult than he remembered and each time left him utterly exhausted to the point of not wanting to go there again.

Matt was grinning encouraging to him all the time but Bruce could see the frown hidden under his physiotherapist’s tranquility. He was realizing too that something was terribly wrong.

At least, in the interior pool a pleasant surprise was waiting for him. Dick and Jayson were already inside playing carefree. Hero ran around the pool following them jerking annoyed whenever the boys sent water to him teasingly; as soon as the kitten sensed Bruce’s arrival rushed to him climbing on his lap. He was wearing his robe so he was spared the potential scratching from Hero’s nails.

Bruce smiled feeling the animal’s paws and caressed him.

“You have grown up, huh, buddy?”

He looked up at Matt and nodded. He let down Hero and slipped from his wheelchair in the water where the boys waited for him eagerly.

It was something very easy; every time swimming was a pleasure and the boys swam away to give him space to swim since they knew how good he was in that. The water felt so wonderful on his legs…he could feel the water’s soft massaging vibrations on his muscles: how he had missed that feeling. His legs overcoming the water’s resist.

But then the same exhaustion, the same emptiness washed his body and he was sinking. He moved his hands but he realized that he couldn’t stay afloat.

“Bruce!” Dick and Jayson yelled together and rushed to hold one arm each supporting him.

Matt dove immediately and held Bruce the way the lifeguards did. He could feel that his patient was surrendered and he could hear his breath fainting. Bruce’s head rolled to his shoulder.

Stephen ran inside; he was passing by and heard the boys and the kitten’s hysterical meows. He helped Matt grasping Bruce from the armpits and pulling him out of the water; the physiotherapist jumped outside and supported Bruce too assisting Stephen to sit Bruce to the chair. The boys got out of the water as well, shock on their faces and Hero licked Bruce’s trembling hands.

Dick squatted next to him.

“Bruce, are you alright?”

“Man, ya’re so pale…” Jason added.

Bruce looked at the boys; his heart was beating frenzied weakening more his body. He wanted to sleep.

“I’m sorry for worrying you. I’m fine – I don’t know what happened” he said trying to control himself to calm the boys.

Matt brushed Bruce’s frozen shoulder and muffled him in his bath robe.

“It was my fault, Bruce; it is too soon, I rushed things.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No, it wasn’t your fault…Swimming was so easy before the operation” he said dryly.

Stephen looked him in the eyes.

“Yes, but the surgery you underwent was a major feat, Bruce” he said with conviction. “Your body is exhausted and needs time to regain its strength and energy.”

Bruce didn’t answer and looked disheartened at the entrance where Tony was coming. His friend frowned seeing them like this and ran.

“What happened? Bruce?”

Bruce inhaled and rubbed his aching forehead.

“Nothing…I just failed to swim…”

Huge crowds of people had gathered outside the White House where the ceremony for the Frozen Basin’s battle was taking place. Thousands civilians had gathered there along with representatives of every country to pay tribute to the Asgardians and the Amazons.

The UN’s General Secretary spoke first and then several Presidents and Prime Ministers. And then Captain America spoke representing the earth’s heroes who were there. Superman was asked to speak too though he felt that he didn’t deserve that. But since he had the chance, he gazed at the people in the crowd feeling everyone’s eyes separately on him.

“Like everyone who spoke before me has already done, I want also to express my gratitude to our allies: the noble, brave warriors of both Asgard and Themyscira. They fought at our side bravely shedding their blood and their lives so that our planet won’t be destroyed by Darkseid. I want to thank Princess Diana and Queen Hippolyta of Themyscira; Odin and Thor of Asgard for chosing to stand at our side during this time of extreme need. The General Secretary and the representatives of the planet stated their peoples pledge to forge eternal ties of friendship and alliance. But I, Superman, am representing only myself so I can express my personal gratitude and loyalty to the proud people of Asgard and Themyscira and promise to be always at their side…”

Bruce watched the ceremony in the built-in the wall 46’’ TV. He felt the same internal jolt seeing Superman standing in the podium: beautiful, unscathed, strong so much unlike when he found him in Mannheim’s Mansion. Humble again with his eyes filled with benevolence as he gazed at the people; At least, this nightmare was over.

Superman looked at the reporters gathered.

“Now I’d like to speak about someone whose contribution wasn’t enough appreciated. I refer to Batman… He was the only one who figured Darkseid’s plan and organized our defence and counterattack so that no civilian lives were jeopardized; he was the one who discovered Darkseid’s weaknesses that led to his defeat; he was the one who brought all the heroes together to fight for the ultimate common cause. He risked his life; he sacrificed more than anyone can imagine” he inhaled deeply. “He saved my life…”

Bruce clapped his hands frustrated shutting the TV set. He was on his bed, in his hospital room, sitting with his back on the inclined headboard. He was cold so he wore his warm nightrobe over the hospital’s gown. Three weeks had passed since his operation and he hadn’t managed to walk or even reach his physical condition before the surgery.

His Cosmos vibrated on the nightstand. He answered the call: it was Lucius who informed him that he had made the necessary procedure so that Ms. Elliot’s clinic would from now on be paid by Bruce exactly as Bruce had asked; also, that a wreath was sent to Kelly Robinson’s funeral again as Bruce instructed. He thanked him and let the Cosmos in its place.

His body felt drained and it drove him crazy. That exhaustion didn’t subside even a bit nor his mood changed. He pressed his lips: he could imagine Darkseid in his planet cackling satisfied because his omega beams might have not killed Batman but definitely contaminated him with Darkseid’s malevolence and all the darkness he wanted to spread to the world.

He shouldn’t let him win Bruce thought and ran his hands through his hair. Yet his legs or his body didn’t seem willing to cooperate. He rubbed his thighs: he could feel perfectly but he couldn’t move.

An idea crossed his mind… He could always use the Immortality Water yet… A sigh left his mouth. No, that solution was crossed out. No way! He would never resort to the means Ra’s Al Ghul used. He had to make it himself or rot in this chair.

The birds’ cheerful song from outside made him realize that the world out of his window was completely strange to him; thankfully, the curtains that covered the big window at the right of his bed were thick and didn’t let him see the landscape.

Polite knocks on the door; certainly, Alfred.

“Come in” he said taking his nonchalant expression.

But Alfred wasn’t persuaded. He immediately noticed the warm night robe and the thick curtains that stopped spring from entering his master’s world.

He left the tray he was carrying on the night stand; he brought Bruce’s lunch. Alfred couldn’t let anyone else take care of his young master, especially now that he sensed the youth so distressed. So he used the facilities kitchen to cook for Bruce.

“I’m not hungry, Alfred.”

Alfred pressed his lips. All these days he was watching his young master trying fruitlessly to walk and getting disappointed, disheartened, loosing his courage. Dr. Strange and Leslie with Master Anthony and Lucius contucted every kind of tests and analyses to discover what went wrong with the implants and the procedure; but everything was as it should. The problem resided inside Master Bruce and had to do with what Darkseid did to him.

After the battle Bruce was always pale and tired so much so that he was forced to sleep even though his intention was to hide his exhaustion. But the worst was the youth’s eyes: when other people were around, Bruce managed to make his eyes seem like before but when he thought that nobody watched him and let his guard down, his beautiful eyes were blank, lifeless, bereft of their familiar light. Alfred's hair stood on edge every time he saw his eyes because they were like the day he had gone to Dolcetto and found little Bruce cruelly abused.

“This is quite obvious, sir: you have lost weight and you know that this is not good for your recovery.”

Bruce discerned his butler's agony and huffed.

“Fine, I'll have some.”

Alfred grinned and placed the bed table over Bruce's legs; he placed the tray. Bruce began eating and Alfred turned to the window to give him some space. He knew that his young Master was eating only to please him. The bitterness and sorrow inside him choking everything.

“It's a wonderful day, sir.”

“I'm sure…” Bruce answered indifferently feeling inside the urge to snap that he didn't give a fucking damn. But it wasn't Alfred's fault he was feeling like this.

Alfred turned to look at him.

“Would you like to explore a bit the grounds after you finish your meal, sir?” he asked avoiding using 'to take a walk' that first came to his tongue.

Bruce's chest ached from Alfred's effort to lighten his mood yet he didn't want to be outside.

“No, Alfred; I prefer to stay here and have a nap” it was true; he was extremely tired all the time. Sleep was the most desirable thing to do.

“As you wish, sir” Alfred bowed slightly his head. “Are you cold?” he inquired swallowing his misery: all these years, Master Bruce encouraged himself but now that the youth’s reserves quivered, he had to do it. “Do you want me to increase the room's temperature?”

Bruce shook his head in denial.

“I'm done” he said looking at his food and Alfred took it off his legs.

“Alfred, don't be sad. I might not be able to walk again but I’m satisfied that Batman would be capable to do his job” he smiled reassuringly. “And the surgery was successful even though I didn’t manage to walk so many people will benefit from that.”

“Sir, if I may, I’m quite sure that you will walk again soon. But you need to rest and relax. In your very young life you never gave up and always found a way to prevail despite the opposite odds. So I’m sure that you will make it this time too… You have learnt better than anyone that patience is necessary for success and you are the one who knows perfectly to use patience to his advantage. I implore with you, sir, do not let disappointment stop you.”

Bruce lowered his gaze thoughtful.

Knocks on the door again. Alfred frowned: it wasn’t the time for the doctor’s visit and they didn’t expect anyone.

“Come in” Bruce said though he would prefer to sleep.

Alfred huffed shocked seeing the visitor; Bruce was also surprised that he came there but not shocked seeing him.

Oliver Queen walked inside.

“I’m sorry if I’m bothering you. I can leave and come some other time if you want.”

“No, not at all” Bruce said. “Please have a seat.”

Queen smiled and sat on the chair by Bruce’s bed.

“I spoke to Mr. Stark first and he was kind enough to give me the permission to come. Of course, he was rather indecisive and I understand that for him as for you I am probably a surprise rather unpleasant.

Bruce shook his head.

“But I wanted to speak to you, Mr. Wayne.”

Alfred cleared his throat.

“If you’ll excuse me, I must take the tray back to the kitchen” he said and took the tray; Bruce nodded.

“I want to thank you, Mr. Wayne” Oliver said as soon as they were alone.

“I don’t understand” Bruce feigned ignorance.

Queen leaned to him.

“You persuaded Bagdana to free me…without killing me.”

Bruce rubbed his forehead.

“Mr. Queen, you make a mistake…”

Oliver shook his head.

“The demon freed my body but some things were left behind. Skills and abilities I didn’t have before…Memories of his discussions with you: your request to him to let me free” Bruce pressed his lips. “Knowledge” he added pointedly meeting Bruce’s eyes “of your secret.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes and pretended surprise.

“My…secret? I don’t understand.”

“That you are the Batman…”

Bruce chuckled.

“This isn’t truth; some things must have been confused in your memories.”

But Queen raised his palms reassuringly.

“Your secret is safe with me, Mr. Wayne. You saved my life and I’m grateful so the least I can do is honor your secret. And although you are younger from me, I’d like to ask your help.”

He arched his eyebrows.
“My help?”

“You know that Bagdana was the Arrow. Well, lately I realized that the demon’s skill in archery remained to my body: I can do things I couldn’t – I’m strong and skilled with the bow” he pursed his lips “and I want to continue the Arrow’s action fighting crime. Your guidance will be valuable for me…if of course you want.”

Bruce turned his focus inside him for a second.

“I don’t know if I can offer you the guidance you ask, Mr. Queen. But it’s admirable that you want to fight crime and I’m willing to assist you in any way I can.”

Queen grinned.

“You are my inspiration…” he said “the memories of you that the demon left me were fascinating.”

Bruce shook his head.

“I’m hardly an inspiration to anyone.”

“You are very modest but the reality is different. I was left with the knowledge of everything you did to achieve Darkseid’s defeat…” he hesitated to continue “also, I was left with the strong memory of a great love.”

Bruce felt his spine freezing and Queen moved his hands appeasingly.

“I didn’t want to upset you…I was hoping to continue the business collaboration you signed with Bagdana and…maybe, we can be friends?”

Bruce nodded thoughtful.

“I guess we could do that…”

Queen smiled.

“Thank you, Mr. Wayne. And I’m sure you will walk again very soon. I know you will!”

Bruce grinned and took the hand Queen offered him for a cordial handshake.

“I’ll be better going now to let you rest” he said getting up. “I promised Mr. Stark that I wouldn’t weary you. I hope we’ll talk again soon.”

“I’ll be happy too” Bruce answered and watched with mixed feelings the familiar silhouette walking towards the door: he was satisfied that the real Oliver Queen was alive and free but on the other hand he felt a bittersweet sadness remembering the demon that chose to live as a mere human to approach him.

“Mr. Wayne” Oliver said opening the door “the day is beautiful: you should see the world you saved in all its beauty” he grinned. “I think that the planet tries to show to you his gratitude.”

It was so easy to sense Alfred’s happiness as he pushed gently the wheelchair to the beautiful, tiled pathway to the flower field that surrounded the facilities.

It was so easy to make Alfred happy… Bruce thought. It took only for him to ask him to accompany him for an...exploration as his butler diplomatically put it to not remind him his failure.

He wore his casual black jacket because as always after the battle his body was cold. But the sight of the blooming nature made at least his heart warm. It was afternoon but the sky was clear and the sun shone so sweet that made the blue color dazzling. The field around the pathway was filled with various flowers which various colors created random shapes. The natural perfumes were intoxicating as they reached his nostrils with the light breeze.

Bees buzzed around and butterflies popped up from the flowers’ petals: despite everything Ivy believed the nature seemed happy that humans were still there.

Bruce raised his eyes to watch some birds crossing the sky above him chirping happily.

“It’s like the world is celebrating…” he said.

Alfred leaned to him.

“Thanks to you, Master Bruce.”

He shook his head.

“Please, Alfred, don’t say that. Too many people fought for this and some of them died” he remembered the Asgardians and the Amazons who fell during the battle.

Alfred pressed his lips nodding.

“But their sacrifice would have been in vein if you hadn’t planned everything so perfectly.”

Suddenly, light running footsteps broke the scenery’s peace and Bruce turned to see Dick and Jason rushing there; but it was Hero the first to reach him. The kitten climbed on his lap and began licking his jaw making Bruce laugh loud for the first time after long.

“At last, man! Ya left that depressin’ room” Jason exclaimed standing out of breath with his hands clenching his waist.

“You need coming out every day, Bruce” Dick said squatting at his side. “I’ll come every day with you if you want me.”

Jason gave him a light smack at the back.

“Don’t leave me out, ya sneaky dork!” Jason said and Alfred chuckled.

“You both have your school” Bruce answered smiling and Jason grimaced.

“Ugh! That school…Ya need to remin’ me of that every time, dude?”

Dick cackled but then looked seriously at Bruce as if a thought had crossed his mind.

“You will walk again, Bruce.”

Bruce saw in the boy’s eyes the distress, the guilt, the regret.

“I hope you rot in that chair!”

He had yelled at him when he believed Bruce was his enemy and now Bruce could see that Dick was haunted by what he had said.
He nodded.

“I will, Dick” he said with conviction to give some comfort to the boy.

The boys played around running, jumping with Hero at their heels and Bruce watched happy. But after a while he raised his eyes to Alfred.

“Alfred, is it possible to be left alone for a bit?”

His butler’s relaxed expression changed a bit but he bowed his head stoically.

“Of course, Master Bruce.”

The Englishman gestured to the boys.

“Would you be so kind to help me with the dinner, young masters? Since we are eating all together it should be something special.”

“All together?” Bruce asked.

“Ms. Turner and Todd, Harvey, Rachel and Mr. Petrou, Lucius and of course the usual suspects: your personal gang.”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I’m sure it will be wonderful as always.”

“Ya betca!” Jason said. “This hospital needs some brighten an’ since we’re the only residents we can do whatever we want!”

Dick made to take Hero off from Bruce’s lap where the kitten had climbed again but he resisted.

“Leave him, Dick” Bruce said caressing the animal.

When their footsteps distanced Bruce inhaled. His love for them dripped from his heart but it pained him; he wanted to make them happy – their happiness was his as well. He had to walk again; he had to overcome that exhaustion, that coldness that numbed his body and his will. He couldn’t let Darkseid win now…

He guided his chair to the waist tall, wooden fence: Tony obviously wanted to give an idyllic tone to the rehabilitation center that his friend revealed that it would have the names of Tony’s parents. He let Hero down to chase a bee.

He inhaled deeply and closed his eyes to concentrate. He grabbed the pole of the fence and pushed his body up.

He was standing.

“No, mind power” he reminded himself “it must be natural.”

He moved his foot in front of the other and grinned taking in Hero leaving the bee alone and fixing his eyes on him. Now, he moved carefully his other foot in front of the other. Slowly…

…two blazing crystal blue eyes were watching him avidly sharing the same senses through reading his brain waves.
For an instance, he was hesitant: he didn’t want to have his hopes crushed by a failure… But life flooded his legs and flared his body. So he pressed his lips determined, clenched his jaw and tightened his grasp to the armrests.

Clark jolted to hold him if he fell but Bruce cast him a sharp glare to stay at a distance.

He could sense Clark holding his breath…

Clark jerked in his place but didn’t intervene as Bruce slowly let go of the armrests… standing… well, not very steady but it was amazing since he wasn’t using an ounce of his mental power to assist his body.

He concentrated on his body and the shaking eventually stopped; Clark was rasping now but Bruce didn’t look at him to not lose his focus. He inhaled deeply and his eyes were sparkling in determination as he ordered his left foot to move forwards. He felt Clark’s eyes stilling at his foot as if transferring some of his insane power to the human limb; Superman was so tense that didn’t smile when the foot settled an inch ahead. Neither did Bruce: he just controlled his breath and ordered his right foot to go ahead the left.

A small step for a human, a huge step for Bruce… He smiled to himself encouraged; his brow sleek with sweat; he staggered a bit and stretched his arms for balance – Clark’s body resembled the body of a lion ready to attack but not really attack but catch.

He had stability now and breathed: time for a second step. First the left then the right. A faint smile carved his face and for the first time he turned his eyes to Clark whose face was still tense with apprehension, a lump evident in his throat.

Bruce moved again his feet to reach him enjoying how the beautiful body was coming closer; he was inches from him and Clark was beaming – was right for Superman to shed tears? Bruce didn’t want to see Clark crying even if it was from joy…

…The floor left from his feet and Bruce after all this time wasn’t able to retain his balance… he was falling and it felt awfully…

But then two unbelievably strong but simultaneously gentle arms caught him from the armpits and suddenly the lack of floor didn’t feel terrifying but thrilling. He was ascending to the sky – he was flying…

“I got you… I’ll always be the faster to catch you…” Clark’s face was touching his and Bruce attacked his lips more aggressively, more enthusiastic than ever. “Yeah, Bruce…” Superman whispered “you made it!”

But suddenly those soft, sweet lips were gone and the beautiful world was upside down and his body was falling…

A whoosh and two strong arms took him gently from the armpits and set him again on his feet.

Bruce didn’t need to see to know; he knew the body’s perfume, the breath, the feeling of those hands, but most of all, his body was shaking, pleasantly paralyzed. He turned swiftly and stabbed his angry eyes at the Man of Steel; Bruce could discern his worry but also his joy for seeing him.

“What are you doing?! Don’t touch me!” he roared.

Clark’s eyes widened realizing what his touch must have reminded Bruce; the same crime that haunted Clark. He grabbed the wheelchair and dragged it there so that Bruce could sit without his help.

“I’m sorry…” he mumbled uncomfortable and pulled his hands. “I just saw you falling and I thought that this would be bad for someone that had recently a surgery so I…” he brushed his mouth. “I guess, I didn’t think it…”

Bruce shook his head and looked at Hero who hissed at Superman.

“It’s alright, Hero.”

Superman nodded.

“He is right to be aggressive; he is afraid for his human… He has grown up; he thrives with you.”

Bruce could hear the guilt in Clark’s voice; a voice that was sweet and sympathetic like before.

“What do you want?” he spat and Clark inhaled.

“I know that I’m unwelcomed.”

Bruce cocked his eyebrows and snorted.

“But you still came.”

“I wanted to see you…Tony Stark made the facilities so that I wouldn’t be able to locate you and he was right…after everything I did to you.”

Bruce stabbed him with his eyes.

“What do you want?” he pointed every word separately.

Superman nodded lowering his eyes.

“To speak to you; to thank you…and as soon as I felt your vitals I…I couldn’t hold myself.
Unfortunately, I couldn’t ever do that to not hurt you…”

Bruce yanked his head.

“There is no need to thank me! Leave now!”

“There is…” he fell on his knees in front of Bruce who narrowed his eyes.

“What are you doing?”

Superman licked his lips.

“I should be on my knees for my entire life to thank you enough for everything you did for my mother…and me…”

Bruce closed his eyes.

“I repeat: I don’t want your thanks. I did nothing.”

Superman chuckled.

“Oh! Bruce, I feel even more like a worm…I caused you so much suffering, I insulted you, I treated you despicably, I cheated you and you never stopped caring for me. Not only working constantly to save me but also supporting my mother the way I didn’t… Forgive me, Bruce.”

Bruce turned his head to the other side away from him.

“I have nothing to forgive.”

Clark arched his eyebrows.

“There are so many awful, hideous things I did to you that, honestly, you shouldn’t ever forgive a scum like me.”

Bruce looked at him.

“Stop that nonsense! You did nothing!”

Superman cocked an eyebrow.

“Under Ivy’s effect really I thought that I didn’t do anything wrong…but when the effect was gone, when my mind cleared I realized what I did. In my cell, they took care to deprive me from my super powers but my eidetic memory was intact…” he pressed his lips. “The worst of my tortures was reliving in every detail what I did to you…”

“Stop it!”

Superman gritted his teeth: he wouldn’t let Bruce’s generosity spare him.

“I hit you, Bruce!” Bruce’s eyes flashed. “I raped you, for Heavens’ sake!” Superman bit his lips. “While I knew what you suffered all these years, I raped you.”

Bruce inhaled, his heart stopped beating. All this time that he fought to save Superman from Poison Ivy’s effect and Darkseid he dreaded this moment…He dreaded that moment because he was afraid that he would bend…

“You didn’t. It happened with my consent – you must remember that I never asked you to stop.”

Clark shook his head.

“Because you knew that I wouldn’t have stopped; because you didn’t want me to become a rapist… but I am one, Bruce. I raped the purest being on the planet… I want to confess everything to the police so that everyone knows the gravity of my crimes to you.”

Bruce yanked his head.

“Are you nuts?” he growled.

“I deserve that, Bruce.”

“You want to force me admitting that I enjoyed it?”

Superman frowned.

“No, no, no…Bruce…”

“If you do such madness I’ll say that.”

Clark lowered his head, his guilt weighing over his shoulders.
“I would never do something that will hurt you…again. But I must be punished and Darkseid’s tortures weren’t enough.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes watching him pulling out of his attire’s hidden pocket a small box. The Man of Steel opened it, clenching his jaw and grunting as the green radiation hit him.

It was Kryptonite.

Clark’s eyes met Bruce’s. Some sweat drops had already appeared all over Clark’s forehead but he pressed his lips placing the green sharp stone on Bruce’s lap.

“Now…Punch me, Bruce” he said. “Beat me to a pulp like I did to you that night…kick me…take the stone and stab me countless times. Make me bleed like I did to you…Bring justice on me!”

Bruce felt his head spinning; he? Causing pain to Clark? His angel? He gulped and rubbed his forehead. Clark was watching him begging with his beautiful eyes; craving to be punished, to be redeemed.

But Bruce couldn’t. He closed the box and immediately saw Clark regaining his healthy color, the sweat drops vanishing. But Superman’s sadness was overwhelming.

“Why?” he pleaded. “I deserve that…you have every right to do that…”

“You were under a powerful effect, spells and pheromons…it wasn’t your fault.”

Bruce gave him the box, snapped his head to the other side and then after a few seconds he looked again at him.

“Is there anything else you wanted?” he said cold as ice. “Alfred and the boys wait for me.”

Clark bit his lips. He could sense the coldness inside Bruce; the ice. He had done that. He who promised Bruce that would heal the wounds…

“Darkseid didn’t die and he could attack again wanting revenge” he fixed his eyes on Bruce: he could imagine whom the New God would want to punish. “And there might be other dangers coming from the planet and outside. So we must be in constant vigilance.”

Bruce crooked his lips and snorted.

“I thought we were.”

“The Avengers are not enough. My failure to keep my senses showed to me that we need to cover each other constantly. All in all, I am forming a team with heroes who fight for justice. The Justice League of America: Diana and Flash have already joined.”

Bruce wasn’t impressed.

“Congratulations!” he spat. “Are you going to play rugby for charity with the Avengers once a month?”

Clark sensed the sarcasm but smiled; Bruce was right to be like this with him – he was making him a favor even allowing him to be in front of him.

“That’s a great idea! But it could work only if Batman is the referee. Are you interested?”

Bruce inhaled deeply: he wanted this to end.
“Say what you have in mind.”

“Right. The Justice League will be incomplete without Batman.”

Bruce snorted: his disability, the failures of the past days made what Superman was saying ridiculous.

“No way! I work alone.”

Clark yanked his head.

“You? But you were the one who united twice every hero the planet has…Bruce, we need you.”

“No. Besides you really don’t need me; all of you the superpowered heroes.”

“We do need you. You’re irreplaceable, Bruce. You were the one who figured out Darkseid’s plot; you were the one who discovered Themiscirra and the real Diana; you were the one who organized the perfect plan.”

Bruce remembered Superman’s speech where in front of the planet he revealed Batman’s role in Darkseid’s defeat.

“You had no right” he said dryly stabbing him with his eyes.

Superman still on his knees shook his head.

“I…” he did a lot of bad things but he didn’t know to what Bruce was referring.

“You had no right to speak in front of everyone about Batman’s role.”

Clark lowered his eyes and then raised them again.

“I have done so many bad things that I felt the need to say for once the truth: let the world know what an extraordinary being you are.”

Bruce gritted his teeth.

“I’m not!”

Clark raised his hand to touch him but managed to hold his hand just to an appeasing gesture.

“Bruce, what I revealed to the world was nothing in comparison to what you actually did. You saved me from Darkseid’s cell and…” he gulped feeling his body being hot with the memories “despite what I had done you gave me your body to heal me.”

Bruce laughed.

“I don’t know what you are talking about! They must have had some hallucinogen along with the radiation in your cell. I did not do anything of the like!”

Clark understood: Bruce didn’t want to admit it.

“There was no other way to regain my powers in time to fight. The artificial and the real sun light weren’t enough for me to recover so fast and we both know it. Only your body has such a healing effect on me and you knew it…”
“The artificial light was reinforced” Bruce said dryly “we didn’t do what you said – you imagined that.”

Superman knew that everything was real, not his imagination but he didn’t insist; he didn’t want to upset Bruce. He could sense that the man was exhausted, drained, stressed, cold…

“Still the world had to know who saved them.”

Bruce growled.

“I didn’t!”

His breath was caught in his lungs and Clark got scared.

“Please, Bruce…calm down. I’m sorry…I’m sorry. I am the reason you don’t want to join Justice League…I understand…but Bruce, you believed in me when nobody else did so…we could still be allies…maybe in time you can give me a second chance.”

Bruce yanked his head.

“You have your second chance” he said and Clark’s eyes sparkled with hope. “You escaped Darkseid; you’re alive; you can make your life; be happy, real happy. The real Princess is more beautiful than Ivy” Clark frowned disappointed. “She is charming.”

Clark rubbed the bridge of his nose.

“I talked with Diana.”

Bruce felt his heart sinking a second before he made the annoying muscle shut up.

“I apologized to her though it was quite awkward trying to apologize to someone for being in a relationship with someone impersonating her… Eventually, we talked about Justice League: she will remain to our world as Themyscirra’s ambassador and protecting justice. And then” he inhaled – oh, it was like the old days when they discussed about things! “We talked about Batman…she thinks very highly of you.”

Bruce understood his attempt to deny the chance.

“And there’s always Lois who loves you. Go make kids; claim the things you deserve…Be happy.”

Clark locked eyes with Bruce.

“I tasted happiness once…Only with you I can be happy but they ruined it for us…I failed to fight for your happiness. I failed to protect you for me…I know that what I did to you is too hard to be healed…But I can’t be happy with anyone else: and I deserve to be miserable for not having the power to fight the effect Ivy and Bagdana set on me.”

Bruce pressed his lips.

“You saw that we can’t be happy together; it was an illusion; a big mistake. And now, you are once again misguided and blinded by your guilt…but soon you will realize that your happiness isn’t with me.”

“You are right to be disgusted; to kick me away… and you’re too kind to me. But no, there’s nobody else for me: we, Kryptonians, have only one mate for our entire life: for me, that mate is you; my lucky Kryptonite. So I’ll wait forever; I’ll be the Earth to your sun; your satellite…Depending on your warmth, your light, your existence to live. I’ll fight all my life to prove that…Oh! Rao! Why I did those things! I’ll fight to prove that I’m worthy of your forgiveness and maybe I’ll manage to heal the wounds I made.”

His eyes were locked with Bruce’s but the human kept his eyes cold.

“I don’t want you to do any of these” Bruce said. “I just want you to leave me alone and never bother me again: can you respect at least that?”

Clark gulped; he nodded.

“I understand; you’re right…I’m sorry. I have no right to be in front of you” he pulled out of his suit something and gave it to Bruce; it was the case from black platinum he had made for the Black Butterfly. “It was made for you – please, take it.”

Bruce shook his head.

“No.”

Clark got up and grinned to Bruce though his eyes were wet.

“You’ll walk again, Bruce” he said. “Please, let your loved ones make you smile more…I broke your heart and I turned it into ice…I will always hate myself for this. I wish I was the one who was killed to save you from Darkseid. But you, Star, you shouldn’t suffer anymore…” he shook his head and huffed remembering how cruel he was calling Ivy ‘Star’; he was sure that Bruce remembered the same thing. “There is only one star for me and even if you don’t want to see me again…your existence in this world will be the sun for me; the star that will guide me…” he smiled. “Thank you for existing, Star.”

He turned to live but stopped and looked again at Bruce.

“If you ever need something from me do not hesitate” he gulped; it was so hard to part again from Bruce but he had to respect his Star’s wish. “Goodbye.”

Bruce watched him taking off with blank, emotionless eyes but when the beloved spot was lost from that patch of sky he lowered his eyes to stare at his clenched fists: the late afternoon suddenly darkened; the approaching night seemed like threat. His eyes stung and burnt; his throat felt filled with thorns but he found out that he couldn’t cry… He shouldn’t cry: he did the right thing.

Hero looked at him sad and meowed.

“I got the impression that you want to punish yourself, not him.”

Bruce raised his eyes to see Selina walking towards him.

“How long are you here?”

“Enough to see him leaving…He’s got quite the nerve to come here…after everything he did.”

Bruce licked his lips.

“He came to thank me and apologize.”

She leaned her waist on the fence.

“As if this is enough…” she stared at her friend’s pale face and sighed “but you still love him and I know that every time you see him leaving your heart bleeds all over again.”

“No, that’s not truth.”

Selina smiled.

“I’m your Selina, remember? You can’t fool me…This bastard is your first and only love.”

Bruce yanked his head backwards.

“That kind of love isn’t for me…there is no place in me for that kind of love.”

Selina squatted and looked him in the eyes.

“But you are pure love, sweetie…”

“I’m not, Sel.”

She snorted.

“You love so much that you don’t hesitate to sacrifice yourself.”

Bruce frowned.

“You gave yourself to the demon to save my life” she said “you thought that I wouldn’t figure out? You did it knowing what the demon would do to you. You shouldn’t, Bruce!”

He took her hands and she noticed how cold they were; he locked his eyes with hers.

“Between losing you and having someone use me once again it was a very easy choice…”

Selina shook her head.

“Don’t say that to me. I know how much you suffered every time…and how dreadful it is for you each time…each time is like the first…You did it once to save me in Dolcetto’s storage. You shouldn’t have done it again.”

“I wouldn’t lose you, Sel…I’ve lost enough people…I couldn’t live without you. What happened with Bagdana passed like the rain over a rock but if I had lost you…” he closed his eyes unable to continue.

Selina hugged him.

“You deserve to be happy, Bruce.”

“I am. I have all of you around me.”

“I mean the ultimate happy you shared with him…you can punish him and then begin all over again.”

Bruce pursed his lips.

“I don’t think that I was ever meant for this kind of happiness and letting myself get into this led to disaster: Clark almost died because I loved him” he shook his head. “I won’t let myself ever again be carried away from this kind of love… Besides there are things I have to do and this…I had enough of this for many lifetimes – I don’t want it anymore.”
Selina caressed her friend’s hair.

“There is always hope, Bruce; you gave hope to all of us…so there is hope for your happiness too” he kissed his cheek.

“The dinner is ready!” Tony’s voice reached them before he reached them huffing and puffing from running.

He crouched and patted Bruce’s back while Selina took Hero in her hands.

“She tries to monopolize you, littl’ guy: I feel neglected, I’m officially jealous - oh! I mentioned that I’m starved? And Alfred had prepared a delicious dinner that we shouldn’t let waiting - those little rascals are going to eat everything!”

They took the path back to the facilities. Bruce turned his head and gazed at the sky where Clark had vanished; in his ears echoed that song he had heard in Thasos about the lover that was left alone...

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!